Parish for William Douglas of Bonjedward. The entry appears to say ‘called old Watt’. He may have been related to Douglas’ wife Beatrix Scott. Walter (d.1717) beadle of Hawick Kirk. He is recorded receiving his salary in the first year of the oldest existing Session records in 1711, but it is unknown how much earlier he had served. His son John succeeded him as beadle at the end of 1717. Walter of Nether Bonchester (1650–1733) eldest son of Thomas of Nether Bonchester. He succeeded his father as 3rd Laird in 1680, with the charter and Jasine for Nether Bonchester being issued by the superior William Kerr of Abbotrule in 1681. He was witness to a Jasine of 1693 for Gilbert Elliott of Stonedge. He also witnessed a Jasine for Hobkirk in 1693. He was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. In 1699 he was entered as a Burgess of Hawick, with the payment being in the form of one of his best ash trees for the Town to use to rebuild the bell-house of the steeple of St. Mary’s. He married Jane Turnbull and their children included: Walter, who succeeded; James, who was a writer in Jedburgh; John, who was transported to America (and may sometimes be confused with John of Ashtrees); and Janet, who married Walter Scott, farmer in Wauchope. The Hobkirk Parish ‘mort-cloth’ is recorded being used for his burial. Walter (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Wauchope in 1681, when he had a bond with Walter Lorraine in Harden, loaning him £3, signed at Hartshaughmill. He is probably the same as one of the contemporary Walters. Walter ‘Beardie’ or ‘Bearded Wat’ (c.1653–1729) 2nd son of Walter, 1st Laird of Raeburn. It is said that his nickname came from a vow not to shave until the Stuarts were restored. He was listed as ‘brother to Raeburn’ in 1695 when he contributed £200 to the Darien Company. He was a guardian to his nephew Walter, 3rd Laird of Raeburn. He married Margaret, daughter of Campbell of Silvercraigs. Their children were: Walter, farmer at Baillieknowe; Robert of Sandyknowe, who was grandfather of Sir Walter of Abbotsford; William, farmer at Easter Muirdean, near Kelso; Mary; Christian; and Margaret. Walter of West Port (b.c.1670) possibly 2nd son of Walter of Goldielands. He is probably the Walter ‘westport’ recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. It is possible he was the ‘Walter Scott Sone to Goldielands’ who rented the farm of Castlehill from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1696. He married Jean, daughter of Walter Scott of Crumhaugh in 1701 (possibly a cousin, or otherwise this may be the only connection with the Crumhaugh and Goldielands Scotts). At the end of that year their son Walter was born, and he was to become the first Scott of Wauchope. It seems reasonable to assume that he was related to the other West Port Scotts, including Hawick’s second known Cornet, but the precise relationship is unclear. He is probably the Walter, son and heir of the deceased Walter of West Port, merchant in Hawick, who is recorded in 1716, with a bond he had in 1709 with Walter Scott (uncle of Walter of Crumhaugh) for the lands of Curriescleugh in Cavers Parish. These generations are quite uncertain: he may be the same as Walter in Crumhaugh and Goldielands’, or perhaps distinct, but partly confounded with him in some accounts. Walter (17th/18th C.) tenant in Nether Southfield along with James in about 1710, as attested in evidence given regarding the state of Hawick’s Common in 1767. Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded as tenant in Alton Croft in about 1710 according to evidence given in 1767 about the pasturing of livestock on Hawick Common. Walter (1670–bef. 1741) described as ‘in Crumhaugh’, and ‘in Goldielands’, he was 2nd son of Walter and Janet Glendinning. He was thus brother to Charles and uncle to Walter of Crumhaugh and Howpasley (with whom he is easily confused). He may be the Walter ‘of Crumheugh’ recorded in a 1710 land valuation of Hawick Parish, when his lands were valued at 400 merks. In 1716 he was described as ‘now in Hawick’ when he had a Jasine for Curriescleugh in Cavers Parish, which he had been promised by Walter Scott of West Port (who was surely a relative, but demonstrating that they were not the same man). In 1728 he was granted a disposition by James Burn for the lands in Hawick called ‘Croftangry’. He may be the ‘Walter Scott, Crumhaugh, a Councillour’ who was mentioned in 1735 as one of the keepers of the keys to the Charter Chest. He firstly married Christian, daughter of Robert Bennet of Chesters, and she died in 1708, aged 34; her memorial stone was examined by her great-grandson Walter Scott of Wauchope in 1851, and uncovered during renovations to St. Mary’s Kirk about 1863. Their children included: Charles (b.1696), who died young; Walter (b.1700), who succeeded and became the 1st Laird of Wauchope (although he appears sometimes to be confused with Walter, son of Walter of West Port); Joan (b.1702); Robert (b.1704), who became tenant in Crumhaugh and died without issue; Margaret (b.1706); and Charles (b.1708), who also died without children. The witnesses to his daughter’s baptism in 1702 were...
Robert of Tandlaw and John ‘called Uncle John’, who were presumably relatives. The baptism in 1706 was in Ancrum Parish, where he is described as son-in-law to the Laird of Chesteris. His second wife was Elizabeth (Bessie) Scott, the marriage being in 1721; she was sister to Walter Scott of Cockeyheugh, and he was described as ‘Uncle to Crumhaugh’. Their children included Walter, a wright, who was deceased by 1743. Elizabeth occupied the mill at Croft Angry as ‘life-rent’, and her step-son Robert eventually inherited it. She could be the ‘Leadey Croumach’ recorded in 1737 when the Town Council paid for sending ‘a sodger and passenger and letter’ to her. Walter of Clarilaw (17th/18th C.) probably son or nephew of Robert of Lies. Some time before 1700 he purchased Ashieburn, which became the seat of this branch of the family. He was succeeded by his son William, Walter of Shielwood (17th/18th C.) eldest lawful son of James of Shaws and Marion Scott of Shielwood. He is recorded in 1705. Walter (1682–1766) 2nd son of William, who settled at Milston. He moved to Girnwood in 1712. He re-leased the lands of Girnwood from the Buccleuch Estates in 1744. In 1723 he married Jane, daughter of Philip Scott of Oakwood, and she died in 1776, aged 74. Their children included: William, who married his cousin Elizabeth; another son, whose name is not known; Walter, who succeeded as tenant with his brother Thomas; Thomas, co-tenant of Girnwood with his brother; and Betty, who married her cousin William. Janet of ‘Greenwood’, who married Robert Elliot, tenant in Hermitage, may have been another daughter. Walter of Wool (d.1744) eldest son of John of Wool and Agnes Scott of Harwood. His brother was Gideon, tenant in Ladhope. He was ‘younger, of Wool’ in 1695 when he contributed £100 to the Darien Company (along with his brother Gideon). He was ‘younger’ of Wool’ in 1696 when he rented the farm of Whithope in the Borthwick valley from the Duchess of Buccleuch. He was ‘younger of Wool’ when on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1698 and in 1701 was ‘younger of Wool’ when he had a bond with Sir William Scott of Harden. In fact his father resigned the lands of Wool to him when he married in 1694. He served as Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for the lands of Ettrick Forest for at least the years 1702–14, taking over from John of Wool (presumably his father). He was ‘younger of Wool, baillie to the duchess of Buccleugh’ in 1704 when he was on the Commission of Supply for Selkirkshire and was also probably the ‘younger of Well’ on the Commission for Roxburghshire in the same year along with his father John. And along with Walter Scott of Harden he gave 1,000 merks to Alexander Orrock in 1705, this forming part of the Orrock Bequest for Hawick Grammar School. He was presumably a heritor of Hawick Parish. He was also a ‘curator’ for Alexander Scott of Syn-.
baptism was witnessed by ‘Mr. Venice preacher’ and Gilbert Elliot in Wimingtontonrig. He may be the Walter in ‘New...’ who witnessed a baptism for Robert in Branxholme in 1728. He could be the Walter from Newbigging who witnessed a baptism for Walter (perhaps his son, married to Agnes Laidlaw) in 1760. Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded being paid in 1725 ‘for making the lifting brod’ (i.e. collection plate) in the Bailies’ Loft of St. Mary’s. And in 1734 he put up the ‘brest in the bilife’s loft’. He was either a joiner, or possibly this was the contemporary beadle of the same name. Walter (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He was a member of the Council when it granted a bond (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. He was a Councillor in 1727 when he was ordered to refrain from using the ‘counsellors’ seat in the bailies’ loft, in respect of his twice breaking prison after being convicted ‘of a riot, and arrested’; he may also have been removed as a Councillor. Probably the same shoemaker married Margaret Scott in Hawick in 1704 and their children include John (b.1705). He also witnessed a baptism for carrier James Boyd in 1705. Walter of Marrylaw (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘Walter Scott of Mirriellaw’ when he rented part of Whithope in 1698. He was surely related to the slightly earlier William and the later Walter. He was an elder of Roberton Kirk according to parish records from 1707. Walter of Bonchester (d.1743) son of Walter of Nether Bonchester. He farmed along with his father until 1724, when they ended their partnership. He then farmed at Wauchope along with his brother-in-law Walter Scott, tenant in Wauchope. He succeeded his father as 4th Laird in 1733. In 1726 at Doorpool he married Helen, only daughter of Adam Turnbull, tenant at Doorpool; she was sister of Rev. William Turnbull, minister of Abbotrule. Their children included: Walter (b.1727), who died young of smallpox; Thomas of Bonchester (b.1729), who succeeded and sold the Bonchester estate; Adam (b.1731), who went to the West Indies and married Mrs. Thorpe; Margaret (1733–38); Rev. William (b.1735), minister at Abbotrule and Southdean; Agnes (b.1735), twin of William, who remained unmarried and lived at Gallahill, near Jedburgh; Janet (b.1737), who married John Rutherford, saddler in Jedburgh; Helen (b.1740), who died young; and Walter (b.1741). He was recorded in a document of 1756 (by which time he was surely deceased), between his 2nd (surviving) son Adam and Rev. William Turnbull of Abbotrule (his brother-in-law). His farm diary from the period 1730–43 is in the National Library of Scotland. Walter of Harden (d.1719) elder son of Gideon of Highchester and Harden. He inherited the Harden and Highchesters estates following the death of his father in 1707 (although some accounts claim he inherited the estates from his cousins). He must have been a minor when he succeeded, since the estates were run by his ‘tutors’ in the period 1710–19, their ‘sederunt books’ being in the National Archives. He continued to be referred to as ‘of Highchester’ until the death of his cousin Robert in 1710, when he succeeded to Mertoun and the rest of the family estates (becoming the 8th of Harden). He appears to have become bankrupt, resulting in the sale in early 1719 of his lands of Harden, Mabonlaw, Highchesters, Todshaw, Borthwickshiels, Roberton, Howcleuch, Easter and Wester Alemoor and others. On his death Harden passed to his brother John. Walter (17th/18th C.) joint tenant of Hawick Shiel around 1710, with Simon Miller. This was attested in evidence given regarding the state of Hawick’s Common in 1767. He is probably the tenant called Scott mentioned in 1717 when he had ‘ploghid. up an march corner hott standing upon the nortt side of said Common, opposite to the tum of Nethr Southedly’. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident in Alemoor in 1717 when he had twins Thomas and Bessie baptised in Roberton Parish. Walter of Crumhaugh and Howpasley (1689–bef. 1743) son of Charles and Rachel Langlands. In 1717 he inherited the lands of Crumhaugh, Howpasley and others, which had been in ‘non-entry’ for 18½ years. This suggests he was a minor when he succeeded his grandfather. He was recorded as a Hawick Parish heritor in 1718. A rent book exists for the period 1717–45, with him as landlord to John Moffat of Garwald, so he must also have owned property elsewhere (unless this was a different Crumhaugh). He is probably the Laird of Crumhaugh who lived at Fenwick in the earlier part of the 18th century (according to information given in 1767). In 1734 he was one of those appointed by the Hawick Council to sort out the rebuilding of the Bailies’ seat in St. Mary’s. He married Beatrix (or Beatrice), eldest daughter of Gideon Scott of Falnash (who was Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for decades), this probably being in 1716 in Cavers Parish. Their children included: an unnamed son (b.1718); Charles (b.1719), who succeeded; Gideon (b.1720) in Priesthope, whose daughter...
Beatrice married Walter Scott of Wauchope; and Mary (b.1721). Beatrice had ‘liferent’ of the lands of Crumhaugh, as well as Harwoodhill and other lands. He is probably the Walter whose second sister Margaret married Rev. Hugh Kennedy of Cavers (and later Rotterdam). Walter ‘Crooked Wat’ (17th/18th C.) Hawick Town Herd in the years around 1710. He was known as an honest and diligent shepherd, and was called ‘Crooked’ because of his crook, not that he was dishonest. He could be the ‘Walter Scott herd’ whose son John was baptised in Hawick in 1704, with witnesses George Scott ‘lister’ and Bailie Patrick Richardson. Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded in Horselee in 1720 when his daughter Betty was baptised in Kirkton Parish. Janet (b.1723), William (b.1730), and Janet (again, b.1732), also baptised in Kirkton Parish, may also be his children. Walter (17th/18th C.) eldest son of Philip, who was Chamberlain to Scott of Harden. In 1720 he was called before Hawick Session for his ‘irregular marriage’ with Sara, daughter of Hawick surgeon Walter. He and his wife became apothecaries (or ‘chirurgeons’) like his father-in-law. Their wedding took place in Edinburgh, and may have been performed by an ex-Episcopalian clergyman, rather than being an eloement; the wedding was witnessed by John Scott of Hawick, who may have been a relative. Walter of Beowie (17th/18th C.) several letters from his sister Helen survive in the period 1725-28. Walter of Whitfield and Harden (1682–1746) third son (and second surviving son) of Walter of Highchest-er and of Harden, Earl of Tarras. He served as factor for the family estates on the death of his brother Gideon in 1707. He was involved with Walter of Woll and William of Thirlestane (his future father-in-law) in a bond of 1715. He was Laird of Whitfield when he purchased the lands of Harden, Highchesters and Mabonlaw from other family members in 1720 (although he did not inherit the titles until later). There are dispositions to him in 1720/1 from Lady Mary Sharp, Lady Agnes Scott, Margaret Scott and Lady Mary Drummond, the female representatives of close branches of the family, relating to debts on Todshaw and Roberton. He sold Whitfield and Mervinslaw to Walter Scott, brother of William of Thirlestane in 1723. He is referred to as ‘of Whitfield’ throughout the 1720s, but also lived at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot. He was one of the ‘tutors’ for his nephew John of Harden, and was involved in a legal battle over consequent claims on part of the Harden estate about 1724–26. The Harden titles eventually fell to him on the death of John in 1734, and he became the 10th Laird (sometimes referred to as 9th). He was listed on a memorial of 1738, claiming the right of the Lordship of Rutherford to John Scott of Belford. He was the Laird at the time of the 1745 Jacobite rebellion, and was apparently a supporter who was at the Battle of Prestonpans. A story is told (recounted by John Anderson, blacksmith at Ettrickbridge) about his narrow escape from the dragoons, who tried to capture him when he returned in disguise to Oakwood, and were also in wait for him at Woll and Harden; although the story seems too detailed to be an invention, it is still hard to believe this of a man in his 60s. He supposedly was caught trying to board a ship in Newcastle, when a simple-minded ten-ant of his recognised him, but he ended up with only a heavy fine, resulting in the loss of Howford, Helmburn, Baillielee and other lands. He married 4 times: firstly to Agnes, daughter of John Nisbet of Nisbetfield in 1709; secondly Agnes, daughter of William Scott of Thirlestane (with whom he had a daughter, Christian) in 1719; thirdly Anne, daughter of John Scott of Gorrenbury (to whom he had his heir, Walter) in 1724; and lastly Christ-ian, daughter of Henry Kerr of Frogden in 1736. He paid for the bell of St. Mary’s to ring in 1723, presumably for his wife Agnes or a child, and paid for renting the Town ‘litter’ for his wife’s funeral in 1730 (presumably Anne). His younger children (with his 3rd wife) included: John (b.1729), who died young; William (b.1730), also died young; Francis of Beechwood (b.1732); Jean; Helen, who married George Brown of Elliston in Edinburgh in 1756; and Ann (or ‘Annie’), recorded in a land sale of 1790. He also provided for the daugh-ters of his predecessor John of Harden in 1731. Walter (1692–1765) second son of William of Thirlestane and great-grandson of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden. He became a wine merchant in Leith. His attorney was Robert Shortreed of Essenside when he had a sasine for Wauchope from the superior James, Lord Cranstoun in 1750; this was a ‘heritable bond’, although it is unclear who else was involved or if he was related to any of the other Scotts associated with Wauchope. He mar-ried Martha, daughter of Cunningham of Balbog-gie and also married a second time. His children included: Thomas, minister of Cavers; Walter (d.1765), a surgeon in the 10th Hussars; and Euphemia. Walter (18th C.) merchant of Hawick. He is listed among the subscribers to the reprinted Buchanan’s ‘History of Scotland’ (1752). He may... be the same as one of the contemporary Walters. Walter of Howcleuch and Wauchope (1701–86) son of Walter and Christian Bennet of Chesters. Some accounts have him as son of Walter of West Port and Jean, who was daughter of Walter Scott of Crumhaugh; it may be that there are two men compounded here. It seems that in 1725 he married his cousin Rachel, youngest sister of the then Laird of Crumhaugh, Walter Scott (however, there could be confusion here). He leased Commonside shortly before his marriage, and lived for most of his lived at Commonside House. He certainly married Rachel, daughter of Francis Elliot of Fenwick, and (as stated on the family gravestone at St. Mary’s) had 2 sons with her: Walter (b.c.1728) of Wauchope; and Charles (b.1728) of Howcleuch. Walter was baptised in Hawick in 1728, with his mother’s name listed as Rachel Scott (and the witnesses being ‘Mr. Millar’ and John Scott), making the identity of the mother confusing. He is probably the Walter ‘at Commonside’ who witnessed 2 baptisms in Hawick Parish in 1738 and another in 1740. He became a prominent man in the district, whose advice was often sought out. Like other men in a similar position, he also acted as a money lender. In 1755 he bought Howcleuch and Borthwick Mains from Rev. Simon Halliburton. He was probably the Walter of Comonside recorded as a Commissioner for Selkirkshire in 1761. He was probably the Walter at Comonside who witnessed a baptism for Adam Hutton in 1762. He was ‘Senior’ of Comonside in 1766 when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Laidlaw of Falnash. He was one of the Commissioners appointed in the court case regarding the division of Hawick Common in 1767. He bought Wauchope in 1767 at public auction (from James Cranston, 6th Lord Cranstoun), thus becoming the 1st Scott Laird of Wauchope. However, he did not live at these estates he had acquired, but gave them to his 2 sons, Walter and Charles. Walter inherited Wauchope, while Howcleuch went to Charles. In 1784 he retired from farming and gave over his property to his 2 sons, presumably dying not many years later. In 1785 he still paid the land tax on Howcleuch. The family are buried in an aisle at St. Mary’s. Walter of Raeburn (17th/18th C.) eldest son of William of Raeburn. In 1703 he married Anne, 3rd daughter of Hugh Scott of Gala. Their children were: William, who succeeded; Isobel; and Anne. It was said that he was killed in 1707 by one of the Pringles of Clifton. Walter (18th C.) resident in Hawickshiels. In 1728 he married Margaret, daughter of ‘Dand’ Gray, tenant in Weensland. Their daughter Margaret was born in 1741. Walter (18th C.) 3rd son of Thomas of Whitlade and brother of John. In 1727–29 he was involved in legal proceedings with Walter Scott of Whifield (later of Harden), probably over debts incurred by his brother John. In 1734 he was described as ‘late of Whitlade’ when he was accused for the 5th time of refusing to undergo penance and was excommunicated by the Synod. He must also have been related to the Dr. Robert, who lived in Hawick, possibly his brother. Walter (18th C.) youngest son of Walter, who was brother of Charles of Crumhaugh near the end of the 17th century. His mother would have been Elizabeth Scott. He may be the Walter, wright in Hawick, who witnessed the notorial instrument of 1734 in which the Town complained about encroachment on the Common by tenants of Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs. In 1743 he was described as a wright when he registered a sasine for a tenement of land ‘and onstead of houses in Hawick’ to his brother Robert, these lands having been ‘disponed’ in 1730. He is perhaps the wright called Walter who witnessed a baptism for Robert Oliver, shoemaker in 1738. He may have been deceased in 1743 when his brother Robert gained the lands of ‘Croftangry’ from him; whether this is the same as the ‘tenement’ mentioned above is unclear. He could be the wright called Walter who paid tax on 18 windows in Hawick in 1748. Walter (d.bef. 1738) described as ‘surgeon in Haick’ in 1738, when his son William became a tailor’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He may be the same Walter (with no occupation given) who was still alive in 1731 when his son Walter became a wright’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He was probably the surgeon in Hawick whose daughter Sara married another Walter (eldest son of Philip, Chamberlain to Scott of Harden) in an ‘irregular marriage’ in 1720. Walter (18th C.) brother of William of Thirlestane. In 1723 he is described as ‘in Sourhope’ when he purchased Whitfield and Mervinslaw from Walter Scott of Whitfield. Walter (b.1700) farmer at Comonside. He leased Unthank and Fiddleton from the Buccleuch Estates, along with Robert Elliot of Fenwick, in 1733 (taking over from the Murray family). His father had married Christine Bennet of Chesters, and he was uncle of Sir Walter Scott the writer. Since there was another Walter who farmed Comonside at about the same time, some of this information may be confused. He also appears to have been confounded.
(e.g. by Tancred) with Walter, 1st Laird of Wauchope. Walter (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He married Elizabeth (‘Bettie’ or ‘Bessie’) Scott in 1721. Their children included: Anne (b.1728); and Elspeth (b.1730). The witnesses to the 1728 baptism were Bailie Walter Purdom and Bailie Scott ‘Senior’ (who may have been related). Walter of Cockerheugh (d.bef. 1743) inherited Cockerheugh (part of Hassendeanbank) from his father John in 1721. He was thus a descendant of the Scotts of Brieryards. The 1720 records for Wilton Parish state that 12s was collected for ‘Walter Scott of cckerheugh for his proclamation’, presumably meaning his marriage. His sister married Walter Scott (‘Uncle to Crumhaugh’) in 1721 (this probably being the next entry in the Wilton register, for ‘Walter Scott in Hawick’). He sold Cockerheugh to the Duke of Roxburgh in 1734. He is described as ‘late of Cockerheugh’ in a record of 1743, involving Adam Scott and Anthony Turnbull of Knowe. Walter (18th C.) listed as ‘Walter Scott Wyndhead’ in 1725 when his daughter Bessie was born. His wife was Anne Scott. He could be the Walter who married Anne, daughter of James Scott, in 1723. There are several other births recorded around the same time that could be this family. He was probably related to the later ‘Wattie o the Wynnheid’. Walter of Merrylaw (18th C.) perhaps son of the William who was tenant in Merrylaw in 1694 or Walter of Merrylaw who is recorded around 1700. He leased Eilrig from Walter Scott of Raeburn in 1730 and leased the lands of Craik and Whinnycleuch from the Buccleuch Estates in 1744. Rev. William was probably his son. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. Walter (b.c.1700) ploughman in Hawick Parish. He worked at Goldielands from 1715, serving several tenants (except for 5 years) through until 1767 when he moved to Langlands. He gave evidence in 1767 regarding the former use of Hawick Common; he was said to be in his 60s and married at that time. Walter (b.c.1710) eldest son of Thomas, last Laird of Todrig. He served in the Horse Guards. In 1732 he married Jane, only daughter and heiress of William Robin son of High Stokoe, Northumberland. They had about a dozen children, those surviving being: Dr. William (b.1733) of Stokoe, who compiled a family tree of that branch, including information on the Scotts of Synton, Whitslade and Todrig; Patrick, a doctor who settled on the Isle of Man; Mary, who married John Best; and Jane, who married Paul Blakey. Walter (18th C.) described in 1743 as ‘late Baillie Depute’. He was probably the Baron’s officer within Hawick. His wife was Agnes Paisley (or ‘Paslaw’) and their children included: Jean (b.1727); Agnes (b.1729); Thomas (b.1731); Walter (b.1733); Agnes (again, b.1738); Agnes (again, b.1739); Elizabeth (b.1742); Jean (again, b.1743); and James (b.1746). The witnesses in 1743 were writer James Weir and mason Andrew Turnbull, senior. Walter (18th C.) gardener in Hawick. In 1722 he married Agnes, daughter of Robert Gardener. Their children included: Helen (b.1723); Thomas (b.1726); Janet (b.1732); Agnes (b.1737); and John (b.1740). The witnesses in 1740 were glover John Scott and merchant James Sanderson. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: William (b.1728); Bessie (b.1729); Adam (b.1732); Anne (b.1734); Isobel (b.1737); Elspeth (b.1740); and James (b.1743). Walter (18th C.) listed ‘in Finesh’ (i.e. Falnash) when the paid the window tax (for 11 windows) in Hawick Parish in 1748. He may be the same as one of the other Walters (e.g. Walter of Wauchope and Howcleuch, who farmed at Commonside and married a Scott of Falnash). In 1743 he was ‘In Falnash’ when he witnessed 2 baptisms in Hawick Parish (for workmen John Rieve and John Armstrong, who may have had a connection to the Teviothead area). Walter (18th C.) farmer at Millholm in Castleton Parish. When there was a large gathering of seceders at Snaberlee in the early 1750s, he tried to claim the collection for the poor of the Parish, but the case was thrown out by Sir Gilbert Eliott in Hawick. Walter of Raeburn (18th C.) son of William, he was the 5th Laird. In 1788 he was listed under ‘Votes of Rutherfurd of Edgerston’ among the voters of Roxburghshire and was also a voter in Selkirkshire. He paid the Horse Tax at Raeburn in the 1780s. In 1788 he was recorded as owner of lands in Lessuden Parish. He was still listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819 (along with his son William, junior of Raeburn). In 1772 he married Jean, 3rd daughter of Robert Scott of Sandyknowe. She was the sister of his sister’s husband. Their children were: William (1773–1855), who succeeded; Robert (1774–1837): Hugh of Draycott, Derby (1777–1852); Walter (d.1802); John (d.1832); and Barbara. Walter of Boghall (18th C.) recorded in 1757 when he witnessed a baptism for Richard (perhaps his son) and Mary Rutherford. He may be the Walter, married to Beatrice, whose children baptised in Wilton Parish included Rachel (b.1722) and Archibald (b.1724).
Walter (18th C.) skinner in Hawick. He is one of the skinners James, John and Walter Scott (probably related), recorded as Bailies in the 1740s. He paid tax on 20 windows in Hawick in 1748. He may be the Bailie Walter recorded in 1755 when the costs of a meeting in his place ‘when getting the new stocks’ were 6 pence. ‘Bailie John’ was also there and possibly this was also a Scott and perhaps related. He may also have been the Bailie Walter paid for work on the ‘book-board in the tolbooth’ in 1755 and given part payment for building the Herd’s House (suggesting that this Walter may have been a builder of some sort).

Walter (d.1810) tailor, nicknamed ‘Wattie o the Wyndheid’. He must have been related to the Walter ‘Wyndhead’ recorded earlier in the 18th century. He was probably the tailor of that name who was recorded as son of the deceased John ‘Wyndhead’ on the 1810 death register. His shop was located near the top of what became known as Walter’s Wynd (after him). The death of his daughter Margaret is recorded in the Parish register for 1805. Walter (18th C.) only son of Francis, wig-maker of Hawick, he was made an Honorary Burgess in 1760. Walter (18th C.) founder of a joiner’s firm on Buccleuch Street, Walter Scott & Son, established in 1750. The firm moved into the former Grammar School building around 1886. It is possible that he could be the Walter son of Hawick surgeon Walter who became a wright’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1732. He is probably the wright who witnessed a baptism for merchant Walter in 1766. It seems likely that he was the same wright Walter who married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) Laidlaw in 1760 and had children: Walter (b.1761); Margaret (b.1762); William (b.1765); Thomas (b.1766); Mary (b.1768); Jane (b.1770); and Robert (b.1776). The witnesses in both 1762 and 1766 were baker John Osborn and weaver George Paterson. Walter (18th C.) resident of Whitfield. In 1761 he married Catherine Turnbull, the marriage being recorded in both Wilton and Hawick Parishes. Their children (baptised in Wilton Parish, with the last one in Hawick), included: Charles (b.1762); Euphan (b.1764); Robert (b.1765); John (b.1770); Helen (b.1772); Walter (b.1775); and John (b.1776). The witnesses in 1772 were John Lillico and Walter Rae and in 1773 was also witness for Walter Rae (at Whitfield). Walter (18th C.) schoolmaster at Kirkton in the late 1780s, where he took over from Thomas Wilson. There he taught a young John Leyden. However, after only a year or two he moved, apparently for a better position elsewhere and was succeeded by Andrew Scott. He was schoolmaster in 1787 when his daughter Peggy was baptised in Kirkton Parish. Walter of Harden (1724–1793) son of Walter, from whom he succeeded in 1746. He is the 11th Laird (sometimes called the 10th) of Harden. He sold part of the Harden estates in 1751 to pay his father’s debts. In 1754 he had a charter to the lands of Bowle in Lilliesleaf. He was M.P. for Roxburghshire 1747–65, then serving as cashier of Excise in Scotland until his death (this excluding him from having a vote in the elections). There are documents of 1756 and 1760 in which he was promoting the idea of a twice weekly mail service between Edinburgh and Border towns. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761 (and is probably the ‘John’ of Harden in the Selkirkshire list). He was on the role of electors in Roxburghshire. In 1779 he sold the liferent of his property in Belses, as well as Mabonlaw and ‘Whinny park’ to Charles, younger of Woll (although with feu-right to John Pringle of Clifton). In 1785 he paid the land tax on lands in Yarrow Parish, as well as Oakwood in Selkirk Parish. In about 1788 he was owner of the lands of Harden in Wilton Parish, as well as part of Bowle in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1788 he is listed as one of the voters in Roxburghshire, being described privately as being a supporter of the interests of the Duke of Buccleuch in the election and having married a sister of the Earl of Marchmont, ‘but has been struck out of the Earl’s settlements on account of a political dispute with him’. He is listed in the 1788 county valuation (and in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811, although deceased by then) as owner of Harden, West Highchesters, ‘Dunsbush’, Mabonlaw and ‘Highchesters Whinny-park’ (valued at £814), as well as part of Bowle (valued at £465 5s) and lands in Maxton (valued at £163 10s) and Smailholm Parishes (valued at £1808 10s). His 1754 marriage to Lady Diana Home Campbell (daughter of Hugh, 3rd Earl of Marchmont and Baron Polwarth) gave the Polwarth title to the Scotts of Harden. Their children were: Walter, who died young; Hugh, who succeeded; Anne (d.1819), who is recorded passing land to her mother and brother in 1797; and Diana. His widow, Lady Diana, lived at Woodside near Kelso. Portraits of him and his wife were painted in 1756. His will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1797. Walter of Wauchope (1728–96) son of Walter in Comnonside. The identity of his mother is unclear, since his baptism states that she was Rachel Scott.
(who is suggested to have been from the Crumhaugh Scotts), but the by the inscription in St. Mary's Kirkyard states she was Rachel Elliot of Fenwick. He was baptised in Hawick in early 1728, although some accounts say he was born in 1726. In 1767 he purchased Wauchope and Longhaugh, the money being supplied by his father (and the arrangement being that he had to yield the properties to his father if he wanted). On the death of his father he became the 2nd Scott Laird of Wauchope. He was a trustee for the creditors of Robert Shortreed of Easter Essenside in 1778. In 1768 he married Elizabeth ('Betty'), daughter of David Rutherford of Capehope. His wife was known for her artistic and poetic abilities, and was the subject of a verse-epistle from Burns. It was said that he did not share many of his wife's interests, and had 'rather a morose temper'. She died in 1789 and he secondly married Beatrice, daughter of Gideon Scott of Priesthaugh, who died in 1807 at Priesthaugh. He farmed at Wauchope from shortly after his father purchased the estate in 1767, and took over ownership more formerly when Walter senior retired in 1784. He was recorded as owner of Wauchope in 1788, the estate being valued at £1433 6s 8d. He was taxed for owning a carriage in the period 1786–89, for having horses in the period 1786–94, for having a male servant (a footman) in 1786 and in 1792–94, and for having a female servant in 1787 and 1788. He was Laird of Wauchope when Burns visited in 1787. Having no children of his own, he was succeeded by his brother Charles. The family are buried in an aisle at St. Mary's. Walter, W.S. (1729–99) eldest son of Robert of Sandyknowe, and descended from the Scotts of Raeburn. He became Writer to the Signet in 1755. He was listed among the voters of Selkirkshire in 1788. In 1758 he married Anne, daughter of Dr. John Rutherford. Their children were: Robert, John, Robert and Walter, who all died young; Robert (b.1767), a Naval Captain, who died unmarried; John (1768–1816); Sir Walter of Abbotsford; Thomas (1774–1823), who died in Canada, and whose son Walter was the only nephew of Sir Walter; Daniel (1775–1806); Anne and Jean, who died in infancy; and Anne. Walter (18th C.) resident at Borthwickshiel when his son David was baptised in Robertson Parish in 1762. Walter (18th C.) resident at Roberton Burnfoot in 1763 when his son Walter was baptised in Robertson Parish. Walter (1735/6–1818) 3rd son of Walter, tenant farmer at Girnwood. Along with his brother Thomas he took over from his father as co-tenant of Girnwood. Both brothers being unmarried, the tenancy later passed to their relative Walter, 2nd son of the 3rd William in Milsington. He was recorded as farmer at Girnwood on the Horse Tax Rolls in the period 1785–97. He also paid tax on 2 non-working dogs at Girnwood in 1797. Walter of Merrylaw (18th/19th C.) listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. He is probably the son of Rev. William born in Southdean in 1767. It is unclear how he acquired Merrylaw, or whether he had a direct connection to the earlier Scotts of Merrylaw. Walter (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He married Betty Ekron in 1765. Their children included: Isabel (b.1766); Andrew (b.1768); Alice (b.1769); and James (b.1771). The witnesses in both 1766 and 1768 were merchants Andrew Scott and James Ekron, who were probably his father (or brother) and father-in-law. Based on the naming convention his parents were probably Andrew and Alice. Walter (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He married Margaret Dryden in 1763. Their children included: James (b.1765); William (b.1766); and Margaret (b.1767). The witnesses in 1766 were wright Walter and baker William Elliot. Walter (18th C.) schoolmaster at Abbotrule. His daughter Jeanie was baptised in Southdean Parish in 1776. He may also be the Walter whose other children baptised in Southdean were Peggy (b.1773) and James (1774). He could be the same as one of the other contemporary local teachers. Capt. Walter 'Wattie' (1741–1809) eldest son of Charles of Crumhaugh and Howpasley and Christian Anderson. He was the last of the Scotts of Crumhaugh. He was born at Midshiels and died without issue. He may be the Capt. Scott of ‘Gaudilands’ whose daughter Charlotte was ‘begotten in fornication’ with Isobel Scott in Longtown in 1766 and christened in Ashkirk. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. He may also be the Walter who is recorded as tenant in Crumhaughhill in 1797, paying tax on 6 farm horses. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Thomson and their children included: James (b.1769); James (again, b.1775); Robert (b.1780); and Robert (again, b.1781). The witnesses in 1781 were Walter Scott and Archibald Scott (who were surely related). Walter (18th C.) resident at Woodfoot in Kirkton Parish in 1790 when his son Walter was baptised. William (b.1792) and John (b.1796), also baptised in Kirkton Parish, were probably also his sons. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident at Hawick Shiel in 1797 when he was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs and 3 farm horses. Walter of Newton (18th/19th C.) probably Laird of Chamberlain Newton. In 1738 he witnessed a baptism, along with Patrick, younger of Alton; this was for Joseph Lothian and Janet Scott, suggesting that Janet may have been related to him. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. In 1767 his daughter Margaret (or perhaps Elizabeth) married John Scott of Whitehaugh. She was his eldest daughter and co-heir. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts of Newton. George ‘brother to the laird of Newtoun’, who signed the 1731 marriage contract of William Elliot of Lodgegill and Jean Elliot of Harwood, may have been his brother. Walter (18th/19th C.) farmer at Wiltonburn. His son Thomas was described as a ‘hosier’ when he died in Hawick in 1808. Walter (18th C.) listed as footman at Waughope in 1792, when he was working for Walter Scott. Walter (18th C.) from Ewes, he served as schoolmaster in Ashkirk in the period 1795–99. Walter (18th/19th C.) married Isabel (or ‘Tibbie’) Ainslie in 1795. She died in Hawick in 1840, when he was recorded at ‘Kirktown Coat’. Walter (18th/19th C.) weaver in Hawick. His daughter Betty died in 1808. Walter (18th/19th C.) farmer at Boonraw, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 5 horses. He is probably the Walter who married Janet, daughter of Robert Ormiston, tenant at Boonraw, and who emigrated to New York state in about 1825. It is possible he was the Walter recorded as owner of part of Roughheugh (valued at £10 18s 6d) in 1788 and according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. Walter (18th/19th C.) from Rulewater, he was a shepherd at Craik in about 1820. In 1822 at Harwoodsikefoot he married Mary, daughter of Thomas Elliot and Magdalene Thomson. They emigrated to America in 1823. Walter (18th/19th C.) owner of 2 horses at Newbigging in 1797, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. He may have been a descendant of the Walter who was at Newbigging earlier in the 18th century. The elderly Catherine (nee Hume) at Newbigging in 1841 may have been his wife, with William and the younger Catherine his children. Walter (18th/19th C.) farmer at Priesthaugh. He subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. He paid the Horse Tax at Priesthaugh in 1785–94. He is also recorded as owner of 2 horses on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having 5 non-working dogs in 1797. He may have been son of Gilbert, tenant of Priesthaugh earlier in the 18th century. His will is recorded in Peebles Commissary Court in 1809. Walter (d.bef. 1809) wright in the Hawick area. The death of his brother, tailor John, is recorded in Hawick in 1809. He could be the same man as the founder of the firm of Walter Scott & Son. Walter ‘Cannie Wattie’, ‘Wat the Sauter’ or ‘Napier’s Wat’ (1753–1849). A tenant of the Duke of Buccleuch, he lived in the Salt House at the West Port. He was also for a time the servant of Lord Napier at Wilton Lodge. He was a carrier of salt etc., with his yard at the entrance to the Workhouse, later becoming a farmer near Orchard. He lived to the age of 96. His name appears to sometimes be given in error as ‘Robert’. Walter (18th/19th C.) recorded in the 1788 county valuation and in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls as owner of ‘Part of Patrick Cunningham’s Lands’, valued at £28 1s. He is probably the same as one of the other Walters, and perhaps related to John, who also held part of the former Patrick Cunningham’s lands. By about 1874 his lands had been divided among Alexander Laing, Alexander Michie, James Mudie, the heirs of John Hargreaves, the Roman Catholic Church, James Kyle, the heirs of William Scott, John Fildes Wilson, Mrs. Agnes Oliver, Walter Grieve, the heirs of Mrs. Charles Scott, John Wilson, the heirs of William Wood, Janet Brown, Mrs. Rodgie and James Oliver; this gives an indication of the extent of the lands. Walter (b.c.1780) local farm worker. He married Ann Purdom and their children included: Mungo (b.1815), baptised in Hawick Parish; Mary (b.1817, Hawick); and John (b.1822, Cavers). In 1841 he was living at Greenbank Haugh in Roberton Parish with his children John and Mary, along with the older Isobel Purdom (probably his mother-in-law) and young Thomas Hogg. Next door was pauper Isobel (perhaps his sister) and his son Mungo. Walter (18th/19th C.) recorded being ‘of Haggishaugh’ in about 1874 when he was owner of part of Burnflat. He is probably the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (1761–1843) born at Parkhill in Roberton Parish, he was son of William and Margaret Hobkirk. A family legend states that they are related to ‘Old Mortality’ (Robert Paiterson) through Margaret Scott at Burnflat (and this could have been Paiterson’s mother). He could be the ‘Walter Scott, Parkhill’, who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He moved into Hawick and worked as a handloom waever, living in Wilton. In 1784 he married Elizabeth (1762–1844), daughter of John Biggar from Wilton. He was living at Dovemount (about 34 Princes Street) along with his wife and probably 2 grandchildren in 1841. Their children were: Margaret (b.1788); William (b.1793), who became a businessman in New York; Catherine (b.1789); John (b.1791); Robert (b.1792), who moved to Ohio; Margaret, ‘Peggy’ (1794–1867), who also moved to Ohio; Charles (b.1797); Walter (b.1799), who married Elizabeth Renwick and lived in Hawick; Sarah (b.1805); and Susan (1807–88), who married Richard Purdie in Hawick. He died at Dovemount. Walter (1764–1837) 2nd son of William in Milsington. He was tenant of Girnwood. In 1792 he married Mary Wilson. Their children included: William (b.1793), also tenant in Girnwood, who married Ann Laidlaw; James of Allanshaws (b.1795), who succeeded his uncle William as tenant at Milsington, and was also a cattle-dealer on the Crescent; Walter of Newton (b.1798), who married an Elliot of Harwood; Thomas (b.1802), who went to America; and Henry, who farmed at Eilrig and died in Hawick. Walter of Whitehaugh (1769–1841) eldest surviving son of John of Whitehaugh. He trained as a surgeon and practised for many years. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819, when still ‘junior of Whitehaugh’. He was probably the Walter of Whitehaugh who subscribed to Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was listed in 1835–41 among heads of households in Wilton Parish. He was also listed among the local gentry on Pigot’s 1837 directory. In the 1841 census he is recorded at Whitehaugh with his younger brother James, together with Christian Chisholme and 2 female servants. He died unmarried and was succeeded by his brother James. He is buried at Whitehaugh Aisle ‘in this spot selected by himself’. Walter (c.1780–bef. 1851) grocer and spirit merchant of 6 Sandbed. He is probably the Walter listed as a grocer at Bucleuch Street on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and a ‘victual dealer’ in 1837. He was still on Bucleuch Street in the 1841 census. He married Isabella Anderson and their children included: Margaret (b.1803), who married grocer John Hume; Charles (b.1805); greengrocer Thomas ‘Sly Tammie’ (b.1810); Charles (b.1814), probably died young; Isabella (b.1816); and Christian (b.1818). He secondly married another Isabella (Hogg), and their children were: Charles, also a spirit merchant; Jessie (b.1825); Agnes (b.1827); Helen (b.1829), probably died young; Walter (b.1831), chemist in Durham; Robert (b.1833); Mary Ann (b.1835); and Andrew (b.1839), Burgh Assessor. His widow Isabella was living at 8 Bucleuch Street in 1851 and 1861, and continued the grocer’s shop. He is probably the Walter Scott, ‘Newroad’ whose son died in 1829. He may be the ‘servant’ of William Oliver (‘Anld Cash’) who witnessed his will in 1808. Sir Walter of Abbostford (1771–1832) world famous writer. He was born in Edinburgh, son of Walter and Anne Rutherford. He was descended from ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden, and sent to the Borders to recuperate from polio. He wrote a great deal of poetry and effectively established the form of the historical novel. ‘The Lay of the Last Minstrel’ is set at Branxholme, and many other books have a local flavour, if romanticised somewhat. His ‘Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border’ (1802, with subsequent volumes and enlarged editions) was instrumental in preserving many Border ballads and establishing them as international literature (although again he is criticised for rewriting some of them himself). He helped popularise the ‘shepherd’s-check’ trousers, which assisted the development of the Borders knitwear industry. He made 7 annual trips into Liddesdale in the 1790s. He was appointed as Principal Clerk of Session in 1806, and was created a Baronet in 1820. In 1808 he was on the subscription list for the first real Scots dictionary, compiled by his friend John Jamieson. Although by all accounts amiable to all classes, he was not locally popular among the ordinary Borderers, partly because he was a Sheriff and also an anti-Chartist. Around Hawick and Selkirk he was also rumoured to have helped intice the Gala men to switch sides at the ‘Carterhaugh Baa’. His carriage was reputedly stoned during the 1831 election in Jedburgh, apparently by a group of about 1,000 Hawick weavers (although some reports dispute this). With financial support from the Duke of Buccleuch, he led efforts to preserve Melrose Abbey. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He wrote the lines ‘Sweet Teviot! on thy silver tide The claring bale-fires blaze no more; No longer steel-clad war lines `Sweet Teviot! on thy silver tide The claring bale-fires blaze no more; No longer steel-clad war lines `Sweet Teviot! on thy silver tide The claring bale-fires blaze no more; No longer steel-clad war lines ‘Dimly he view’d the Moat-hill’s mound, Where Druid shades still fitted round; In Hawick twinkled many a light, Behind him soon they set in night’. In 1797 he married Margaret Charlotte (who he met by chance at Gilsland, and married 4 months later), daughter of Jean Charpentier of Lyons. Their children were: Walter, 2nd Baronet (1801–47), who died without issue; Charles (1805–41), died in Tehran; Charlotte Sophia, who married John Gibson Lockhart; and Anne (d.1833). He was buried at Dryburgh Abbey and his house at Abbotsford became a museum. His court-room on Selkirk square is also a museum. The Gothic-style Scott Monument on Princes Street in Edinburgh was built 1840–44, is 200 feet 6 inches high and contains a marble statue of the writer at the base. There is also a Doric column topped by a statue in Glasgow, as well as the life size statue in Selkirk square. A celebration for his centenary birthday was held at Bruxholme, with a procession, speeches, toasts and songs. He was apparently editing the memoirs of Rev. Dr. John Young of Hawick when he was suffered some sort of stroke in 1830, and the work never appeared. Scott Crescent in Burnfoot was named after him in 1952 – ‘O Scott! with whom, in youth’s serenest prime, I wove with careless hand the fairy rhyme’ \[JL\], ‘Praise to the bard, immortal Scott, Who sleeps in ‘Dryburgh Bowers’, Whose genius hallowed every spot In this dear land of ours’ \[JT\], ‘Like a loved ghost thy fabled flood Fleets through the dusky land; Where Scott, come home to die, has stood, My feet returning stand’ \[ALg\]. Walter (18th/19th C.) proprietor of a public house in Denholm, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Walter (18th/19th C.) proprietor of a public house in Newcastle-on-Tyne according to Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Walter (b.c.1769) joiner in Newcastleton. He was listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories as a wright there. In 1841 he was living at about 41 North Hermitage Street. Walter (18th/19th C.) carrier in Hawick. His father-in-law Robert Anderson died in 1819. He may be the Walter who married Isabella Anderson and whose children include Margaret (b.1803), Charles (b.1805), Thomas (b.1810), Isabella (b.1816) and Christian (b.1818). Walter (1778–1857) 4th Laird of Wauchope, son of Charles, he was descended from the Scotts of Crumhaugh and Goldielands. He succeeded his father in 1808 and farmed at Wauchope. He was a representative on the council of Heritors in Hobkirk Parish even before he succeeded. He raised nearly 100 men during the French invasion scare of 1803, which became the Light Company of the Roxburgh Volunteers. He was captain of this unit during the False Alarm of 1804, and rode to collect men from Liddesdale, arriving at their head in Hawick before daybreak. When the unit disbanded in 1809 he became first Captain of the (1st Regiment) Roxburgh Local Militia. He and his father were listed among the Commissioners for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1805 and 1819. He was one of the original members of the Jedforest Club in 1810. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. In the Land Tax Rolls in 1811 he is recorded as owner of parts of Wauchope, called Common, Hawklaw-tongues (or Wauchope-head), Wauchope-rig and Wigg. There is a story told (in Lang’s ‘Stories of the Border Marches’) of how, on the road to Hawick in 1813, he came upon an old man who had been recently attacked, and with the help of a local ploughman (William Little) tracked down the robber, who was later hung for his crime; the report in the Scots Magazine for 1813 states that the man attacked was 101 years old, and that the attacker was sentenced to transportation for robbery. It is said that he was generally slow to make up his mind, but known for his common sense and an authority on parish business. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1828. He was nephew of Walter Dickson, merchant of Edinburgh, and so was related to the Hassendean and Hawick Dicksons. He was listed among the local gentry in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In the 1841 census he is listed as ‘Independent’, and the house had 3 servants and in 1851 was listed as ‘J.P. Landed Prop.’, employing 2 labourers. Also in 1851 he examined the memorial stones of the Scotts of Goldielands and Crumhaugh in St. Mary’s Kirk, including that of Christian Bennet, who was his great-grandmother. He was said to be a keen supporter of the Hobkirk Baa, riding on his grey horse to encourage the ‘uppies’ side. In 1812 he married Marion, daughter of Thomas Macmillan of Shorthope in Selkirkshire. Their children were: a daughter (b.1813), who probably died in infancy; Charles (1814–17); Thomas (1816–62), who succeeded and changed his surname to Macmillan-Scott; Walter (1817–44), who worked for the East India Company; Charles (1819–95), who farmed at Lintalee, and succeeded his uncle Archibald to Howcleuch; Archibald (1822–62), who died in Malta; and Anne, who also died in infancy. He died at Wauchope and is buried in Hobkirk kirkyard. A portrait of his wife Marion was painted by Sir John Watson Gordon. Walter ‘Wat o the Knowe’ (b.1786/7) claimed to be a descendant of Walter Scott of Goldielands, he farmed at ‘the Knowe’ (now Bowanhill) near Teviothead. His family had previously been farmers at Newbigging on the edge of Hawick Common. His sister Agnes married mason John Armstrong from Wilton Dean and he had another sister who was grandmother... of William Murray, gardener at Borthwickshiels. He was recorded at ‘Hendersons Knowe’ in 1841. In 1851 he was a farmer of 630 acres at Bowanhill, employing 3 labourers, and in 1861 it was 650 acres, employing 2 labourers. He was still there in 1868. His tody ladle is in the Museum, and he is buried in the aisle of St. Mary’s (with special permission of the Duke of Buccleuch). His housekeeper’s headstone at Tieviethead is curtly inscribed ‘Tibbie Bell, Wat’s housekeeper, died 16th December 1863, aged 69’. He died unmarried. Walter (b.1790/1) farmer at Henderson’s Knowe on the 1841 census. Walter (b.1790/1) farmer at Wiltonburn. He is probably son of the earlier Walter from Wiltonburn. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 and 1840. In 1851 he is listed as a farmer of 450 acres. His wife was Elizabeth and children included Margaret R., Walter, Elizabeth, Douglas, Walter D., Williamina J.N. and Ann T. Walter (b.1790) farm steward at Todshawhaugh according to the 1841 census. Walter (1790/1–aft. 1851) born in Cavers Parish, he became a shepherd at Singdean. He had been shepherd at Hyndlee to James Davidson, also called ‘Dandie Dintmont’, and was a keen fox hunter. He married Elspeth ‘Eppy’ Telfer and they had 5 boys and 5 girls, including James, Jean, Andrew, John, Anne Elliot, Christian and Eppy. 2 of his sons were shepherds and another was a gamekeeper. He is probably the Walter at Singdean appointed as a Parish elder in 1832 and listed as male head of family there 1835–41. It is said that he came across a French doctor who had settled in Scotland after the Peninsular War, and from him learned the secret of a herbal plaster that could cure cancer. This cure became quite famous at the time, and people would come from all around to try the cure. One particular story concerns the apparently successful treatment of a huge tumour on the wife of a tradesman from Galashiels. His son Andrew was shepherd at Twislehope, and carried on the secret. Walter (b.1792/3) farmer at Netherraw in Castleton Parish. In 1861 he was farmer of 15 acres there. His son was a teacher at Hermitage and he also had a daughter Esther. He was appointed an elder of Castleton Kirk in 1832. He is listed as male head of family at Netherraw in 1835–41. Walter of Newton (b.1798/9) 3rd son of Walter, tenant in Ginwood. He is said to have married an Elliott of the Harwood branch, possibly Helen in Hawick in 1838; this seems likely to have been Helen (b.c.1794), daughter of Walter in Hermitage. His daughter Margaret Ann married Andrew Scott, who was afterwards of Newton. He is probably the cattle-dealer of that name recorded on the Crescent along with James (who would have been his brother) in 1841. In 1851 he was farmer of 1000 acres at Satchells. In 1861 he was farming 385 acres at Newton and employing 10 people there; his wife was Helen (b.c.1797), from New-castle, and his nephew George Ballantyne was farm overseer. He was still recorded at Newton in an 1868 directory. His wife Helen ‘Elliot or Scott’ was recorded as owner of Newton in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. Walter ‘Watty’, ‘Wattie Scott the Cairrier’ (d.1857) owner of a carriers business in Hawick. His stabling and yard were at the west side of where the Liberal Club was built, 78 High Street; this was referred to as ‘Wood Yard’ in the 1841 census, and he shared the premises with another carrier, James Best. His firm carried general goods to Berwick and elsewhere. He may be the Walter listed in 1837, leaving from the Grapes for Glasgow every other Tuesday, and for Langholm every other Thursday, as well as going to Selkirk every other Tuesday and Thursday. He may be the Walter listed in 1852 as carrier between Denholm, Hawick and Jedburgh once a week. He was also listed in 1852 going to Carlisle, Langholm and Longtown every Monday and Wednesday, Jedburgh and Kelso on Mondays and Fridays, and Selkirk, Melrose and Galashiels on Tuesdays and Fridays. His son, also Walter, was cornet in 1859. Walter ‘Wat the Sweep’ (1799–1869) well known character in 19th century Hawick, with sooty black clothes and a huge bushy beard. He liked to recount astonishing tales of his own strength at harvesting and in the wars. He died in Hawick Poorhouse. Walter (1801–47) son of Sir Walter, he was 2nd Baronet of Abbotsford. In 1815 he played a ceremonial role in the ‘Carterhaugh Baa’, riding out with the Buccleuch banner to signal the start of the match. He died without issue. Walter (b.1812/3–92) son of Thomas and Christian. He was a joiner on Buccleuch Street (probably No. 4), like his father before him. He was listed as a joiner on Buccleuch Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was living with his sister Jean. He later married Christian (or Christina) Lillico and their children included Thomas and William. Walter (b.1814/5) coachman at Whitehaugh Cottage in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Isabella and they had a son, also Walter. Walter (1817–44) 2nd son of Walter of Wauchope and Marion Macmillan. He was a doctor with the East India Company. He died at Allahabad, Bengal. Walter (b.1820) from Roberton Parish, son of Thomas and Agnes Leithhead. He worked as a fuller in Wilton. His sister Janet married James Black. In 1851 he was living at Wilton Place and in 1861 at Upper Hope Park. He married Mary Beattie (from Selkirk) and their children included: Thomas (b.1849); and John Beattie (b.1852). In the 1880s his son Thomas was living at Ellabank with his widow Mary. Walter (19th C.) son of John, his mother being a Deans. He was last of more than a century of tenants of the same family at Hummelknowes Mill. He was recorded there in 1851, as farmer of 26 acres, living with his brother John, who was miller at Hummelknowes. He left the farm in 1855, moving to Ormiston. He was farmer at Ormiston Parkhead in 1861. He married Margaret Nichol and their children included: John (b.1846); William, J.P. (b.1848); Janet (b.1850); and Walter (b.1852). Walter (1822–1892) son of William, tenant farmer at Girnwood. He took over from his father as farmer at Girnwood. He died unmarried and was succeeded in the tenancy by his niece Hannah Davies, who purchased the property. In 1861 he was listed as farmer of 600 acres at Girnwood and he was still there in 1868. Walter (b.1831) son of grocer and spirit merchant Walter, with his mother being Isabella Hogg. He was a chemist and druggist, being in Galashiels in 1859 and was at Ladhope in 1861, with his brother-in-law David Scott Park visiting. He later worked in Durham. In 1859 at Hawick Free Kirk, he married Ellen Cabourn Park, daughter of David Scott Park. Walter (1835/6–1892) son of grocer Thomas and Mary Helm. In 1874 or 1875 he was co-founder of Lyle & Scott’s, along with William Lyle. He was described as ‘a gentleman of long practical experience in the trade, having held important positions with eminent manufacturers here for years’. They built the firm up from modest beginnings into a huge concern, largely through his efforts. He married Margaret Law (who died aged 24), with whom his children were: Walter, died young; Thomas, died aged 23; and Margaret, who married John Elliot of Selkirk. He secondly married Helen Pottous, with additional children: William P., Cornet in 1893; Robert P., killed in France in 1917; James; Isa Watson, who died young; and John P. He is recorded attending the 1891 Common Riding in a carriage along with several of Hawick’s most respected elderly gentlemen. He died at Craigview, Denholm. Walter ‘Hawick Wattie’ (1844/5–1904) born in Hawick, said to be from a good family, he was a stockingmaker by trade. He was employed in Elliot’s shop for many years, but became a homeless wanderer. He roamed around the local countryside for many years. He was said to be a ‘good-natured, humorous man, with a fund of song and anecdote’. Always seen at Border fairs, he was often the worse for drink, and well known to local Magistrates. William Peppers immortalised him in a poem – ‘Now Wattie neither begs nor buys, Nor steals, nor sells, nor does he trock. For daily bread he jist relies On kindliness o’ country folk’ [WP], ‘...They’re Jamie Cant and Pally Wattie, Come, let us run them in’ [WE]. Walter E. (19th/20th C.) farmer at Pilmuir, who was Cornet in 1903 and one of the founder members of the Callants’ Club. Walter P. (19th/20th C.) farmer at Falnash. He was a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. Walter Ross ‘Wattie’ (1926–2006) son of Andrew and Bunty, who had moved to Canada, he was born in Winnipeg, but soon returned to ‘the Nitton’. He was widely stated to be the best Hawick R.F.C. player who was never capped for Scotland. He was Greens captain 1948/9 and 1952/3, won 30 sevens medals and regularly played for the South of Scotland, being renowned for his strong hand-off. He spent his life in farming and was also a keen curler. An enthusiastic Common Riding supporter, he first followed during the War years, was Acting Father in 1970 and served as President of the Mosstroopers and Callants’ Clubs. He married Joey and d children John Ross (Honorary Provost), Terry (also Acting Father) and Jill. Warin (13th C.) listed on a panel in Kent when the goods at Chileham, belonging to the late wife of Alexander Baliol were valued. His name occurs as ‘Warin Scot’, but it is unclear if he could be related to local Scotts. William (12th/13th C.) probably son of Richard and great-grandson of Uchtred Fitz-Scott. He attended the court of Alexander II, and is recorded as witness to a charter of Walter (grandson of Walter, Steward of Scotland) between 1207 and 1214. He may be the same William who witnessed charters by Walter the Steward to Paisley Abbey, a payment of rent for Paisley mill, a gift of a church in Ayrdhire, a gift of lands in Perth and another related to Coldingham Priory, all perhaps in the 1220s; he is there recorded as ‘Wileimo Scoto’. He may also be the William who witnessed a grant of lands in Strathblane around the 1240s. He was succeeded by Sir Richard, generally considered to be his son, who was probably the first Scott to own lands anywhere near to Hawick. It is possible that another son was Walter, who held lands in Peebles and signed the Ragman Rolls along with Richard in 1296. William (13th C.) recorded as William 'le Scot' in 1233 in Stratford (perhaps Stratford). He was tailor of Richard, Earl of Cornwall, and was commanded to be given the house in Bourdeaux that had been taken from him by the Seneschal of Gascony. William (d.c.1243) recorded as ‘William Scot’ and William ‘of Stitchill’. He was recorded as Archdeacon of Worcester in 1218. In 1226 he was presented as Bishop of Durham, but this was objected to by King Henry III, and the election was quashed by the Pope in 1227. He may have been father of Robert Stichill, who was later Bishop of Durham. It is unclear if he was related to any other Scotts. William (13th C.) listed in Lincoln in 1252. Along with his wife ‘Hawisea’, he had a writ ‘ad terminum’. William (13th C.) recorded as ‘le Escot’ in Cumberland in 1254. William (13th C.) recorded in Essex in 1259, when his daughter Matilda gave money for an assize. He was ‘Walter le Scot of Mapilder-stede’. William (13th C.) mentioned in 1261, when his son and heir John ‘le Escot’ was listed in a document relating to Trent in Northumberland. William (13th C.) recorded as being of ‘Parva Jernemue’ (i.e. Little Yarmouth) in 1262. This was in a set of pleas from several counties, given at Canterbury, involving John Baliol in Suffolk, in which he and others were fined. William (13th C.) recorded as ‘Willelmus Scot de Inethal’ and ‘Willemo Scot in Ethal’ in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. His lands were probably in the area near Stanford, where the court was held. William (13th/14th C.) signatory of the Ragman Rolls in 1296. He thus swore fealty to Edward I, along with 9 other people of the same name, although he was the only one from Roxburghshire. It is unclear how he might have been related to the main line of the Scotts of Buccleuch. One possibility is that he was a son of Sir Richard of Mortchokestone (whose father was also William) who also signed the Ragman Rolls. William (13th/14th C.) recorded as ‘William [Les] cot’ when he was on a jury in Lanark in 1302/3. He is presumably different from other Williams. William of Dundonald (d.1305) taken prisoner at the siege of Stirling in 1304. He was beheaded the following year. He may have been from the county of Cunningham. William (13th/14th C.) mentioned along with Robert in 1307/8 when they were paid for being messengers of the English army. They delivered something between Cumnock, Ayr and Lanark. It is possible he was the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. William (14th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in the period 1379–84, when an annuity was paid to him from the East Mill of Haddington. He may have been related to the nearly contemporary John, who was also associated with Haddington. William (14th/15th C.) recorded in 1404 when he gained the lands of ‘Nemphlar’ in Lanarkshire, which were resigned by his mother Janet Lockhart. William (14th/15th C.) brother of the Laird of Balweare. In a charter of the Duke of Albany (probably about 1410), he was granted lands in Fife by his brother. William of Glack (14th/15th C.) younger son of Walter, 1st Laird of Synton. However, information about these generations is very uncertain. William (15th C.) recorded in 1430 when he witnessed a charter for lands in Lanarkshire for Melrose Abbey. He was a Chaplain, probably with the Abbey. Perhaps the same ‘magistri Willelmi Scott’ was Master of the Hospital of St. Leonard’s near Lanark in the period 1428–31 according to the Exchequer Rolls. William (15th C.) witness to a sasine for the lands of Cessford in 1441. His son John was also listed, as well as Adam. It is unclear how they were related to other contemporary Scotts. William (15th C.) witness to the 1447 sasine for the sale of the Cousinlands to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He is described as a presbyter and perpetual vicar of Westerkirk. The other Scotts who witnessed the document were all close relatives of Scott of Buccleuch. William (15th C.) customs officer in Arbroath in 1447 and 1450, according to the Exchequer Rolls. In 1454 he had a sasine for the lands of ‘Manuell Macnab’ near Strathearn. Probably the same William gave the payment in 1435 for the communities of Montrose and Arbroath. He may have been ancestor of the Bailie of Montrose of the same name recorded in 1507. William (15th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of 1456 when he was repaid for an advance to John Dalrymple in Bruges. William ‘Will’ (15th C.) recorded in 1474/6 when he compounded with the King for a remission for the slaughtered ‘Johnne Crossate’. He was said to have a ‘letter of slains’ with the injured party. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William of Foulshielis (15th C.) probably 3rd surviving son of Sir David, mentioned in the 1471/2 marriage contract with... the sister of Archibald, Earl of Angus. Alternatively he could be the 4th son of Sir Walter of Buccleuch (or the 2 men could be compounded). He was witness to his brother Robert of Haining in 1476, and may be the William who (along with John) witnessed a document for David of Buccleuch relating to Kirkurd in 1475/6. He was probably deceased by 1488, since he is not mentioned in the list of heirs in the Crown charter for the Barony of Branxholme in that year. He may have married in 1472 and have died without issue. It is unclear whether he was actually ‘of Foulshiels’, or if this was confusion with the later William of Foulshiels. It is also possible that he was the same as the Rector of Soutthead or the same as the uncle (who was declared a rebel) of the later Robert of Allanhaugh. He was stated to be the son of David in 1478, when he took over from his father as Ranger of Ettrick Ward. According to the Exchequer Rolls he served as Ranger until at least 1484. He held a ‘stead’ at Caerabank for his fee; at the same time John Murray represented Yarrow ward and James Pringle the ward of Tweed. He also leased Tushielaw in 1484 and is probably the William who had the lease of Deephope in 1486. He was recorded as deceased and former Ranger in 1490, with his arrears mentioned. It is possible he is the William of Tushielaw from which Robert Elliot had remission in 1493 for stealing a horse. William (15th C.) recorded as ‘rectore de Sowdone’ (i.e. Southdean) when he witnessed the resignation of the lands of Mangerton at Branxholme in 1482. He is ‘domino Willelmo Scot rectore de Sowdone’ (not as recorded in one place ‘Foudoun’) when he was witness to a charter of 1484/5 for the lands of Whitchesters being given by Sir David of Branxholme to his son Robert (of Allanhaugh). He also witnessed a resignation of the same lands shortly afterwards. In 1488/9 he witnessed an agreement between the Vicar of Hassendean and the Abbot of Melrose. In 1491/2 he was the priest who witnessed the last will of Sir David Scott, and who was to choose the priest who would say mass when he died. It is possible he was the same man as William, described as ‘decansis tevidalie’ named among other priests at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493. He seems likely to have been closely related to the Scotts of Branxholme, perhaps even a brother or cousin of Sir David. William of Goldielands (15th C.) mentioned in 1493 when his son William was allowed to ‘compone’ for rieving crimes. It seems likely that he was related to the Scotts of Buccleuch, but the connection is not known. He is the first known Scott of Goldielands, but whether he was closely related to the later ones is not known. William (15th C.) son of William of Goldielands. At the 1493 Justice-aire held in Jedburgh, he was allowed to compone for stealing 12 goats from Fastenough and for associating with English thieves. His surety was Robert of Whitchester. William (15th C.) recorded in the 1494/5 Justice-aire in Selkirk, along with ‘Wanston’ Walter Dalgleish. William Dickson in Ladhope was convicted for resetting the pair, with his surety being Walter Scott of Howpaisley. He may be the same as one of the other Williams. William (15th C.) recorded in the 1494/5 Justice-aire in Selkirk, when he was fined for non-appearance. He was listed being ‘de rone’, but it is unclear where this was. William (15th C.) recorded in 1497 when he had remission, along with ‘Johnne Scot and Johnne Scott’ for the slaughter of ‘Johnne Fischare’, fleeing to England, and other crimes. It is unknown to which branch of the Scotts he belonged. William ‘Will’ (15th/16th C.) one of the 4 men selected by the Sheriff of Roxburghshire to appraise the goods of Philip Turnbull of Whithope in 1500. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. It is possible he was the same William listed among the bailies of the Sheriff of Roxburgh on the Precept of Chancery (probably in 1532) for William Scott of Hassendean retaining his properties. William (15th/16th C.) son of David of Tushielaw, brother of Adam ‘King of Thieves’. He is recorded in 1502 when Patrick Turnbull in Wauhope had remission for associating with him and 2 Armstrongs (Archibald and Ninian) for their ‘Stoutreifs, Slaughters, Burnings, and other crimes’. He is probably also the William ‘in Thistlestane’ in 1502 who ‘came in the King’s Will’ for violently occupying the lands of Thistlestane, without having a lease from Sir Patrick Crichton of Cranston-Riddell. Walter of Buccleuch served as surety. This case suggests some ongoing dispute over the lands of Thistlestane (foreshadowing what would come later). His brother John would later become Laird of Thistlestane. He may also have been related to John of Thistlestane, who is recorded earlier. William (15th/16th C.) younger son of Sir Alexander of Howpaisley. He is said to have been Abbot of Melrose 1504-06, according to Scott of Rodono (although his name does not appear on lists of the Abbots, so this is unclear). William (15th/16th C.) one of the ‘bailies in that part’ appointed by Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1504 to infest Walter of Buccleuch in his father’s lands in Annandale. The others were his son Robert, along with Walter of Howpasley and Stephen. It is unclear who he was and whether he was closely related to the other appointed bailies. William of Fenwick (15th/16th C.) member of the panel for deciding on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by James Douglas in 1509. In 1502 he is probably the William ‘in fenuik’ who, along with Robert in Synton, was fined by the Court of the Judiciary for failing to enter William Middlemissa. He was also ‘in fenwik’ when he had remission for stealing sheep and cattle from Bowden, with his surety being Robert in Synton. Probably the same William was tenant at Fenwick in 1510, when he was one of the sureties for Thomas, brother of Philip of Headshaw, who was implicated in the murder of John Murray of Falahill. Other sureties were William in Hawick, George in Goldielands, David in Whitehaugh and John of Haining, suggesting he was probably closely related to some of those branches. He was also recorded as ‘de Fennyk’ in 1510 when he was a pledge for Stephen, who leased Deephope and Mount Common. He could be son of Walter of Fenwick, recorded in 1484/5, and probably related to Simon in Fenwick, who is mentioned in 1528 and 1540. William (15th/16th C.) described as ‘in Hawick’ in 1510 when (along with George in Goldielands and David in Whitehaugh) he was surety for Thomas Scott, brother of Philip of Headshaw, who had been involved in the murder of John Murray of Falahill. This may be the same William ‘in Hawick’ who is recorded in the Register of the Privy Seal of 1502 receiving remission for the slaying of Simon Chapman; the same William is recorded in the records of the Justice-aire in Jedburgh being declared a fugitive for this same crime. He is likely to have been related to the Scott branches in Headshaw, Goldielands, Whitehaugh, Fenwick and Haining (since they are all mentioned in the same case). Probably the same William ‘in Hawick’ is among the men listed in the remission of 1526 for the attack on the Earl of Arran led by the Homes; after him are listed John, Thomas, John, Thomas, Philip and Steven, ‘brether to the said Johnne’, some of whom may be close relatives. Bailie William (15th/16th C.) witness to the sasine for the Barony of Hawick being given to James Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1514. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. William of Whithope (d.1523) younger son of Sir Walter, 8th Laird of Branxholme and Buccleuch. In 1515 he had a charter of Whithope from James Douglas of Drumlanrig. He died without male issue and his brother Walter was his heir. William (15th/16th C.) recorded as being ‘in Fawlishope’ (probably ‘Phaup’ in the Ettrick valley) in 1526 on a list of many Borders men who had remission for helping the Homes attack the Earl of Arran. George was also listed as being in the same place, and so probably related. William (16th C.) described as ‘in Hillohus’ in 1528 when he was one of the arbitrators (along with Robert of Howpasley, William of Harden, Walter of Synton, John of Roberton and Simon of Fenwick) to decide on the succession of Borthaugh lands. William of Foulshielis (16th C.) son of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, probably ‘Wicked Wat’; he was probably an illegitimate son, since Sir Walter’s eldest surviving son was Sir William of Kirkurd (with the same name). In 1532 he had a charter for the lands of Foulshielis (in Selkirkshire). The later John of Foulshielis was probably his son or grandson. The earlier William, son of David of Buccleuch, may not be directly related (but this is uncertain). It is possible he was the same as Sir William of Kirkurd. William (15th/16th C.) uncle of William, who was son of Robert of Allanhauch. In 1535 the younger William was given remission for associating with him, since he had been declared a rebel, as well as for wounding George, son of Thomas Turnbull; it is unclear how much earlier these crimes took place. He must have been brother of the earlier Robert of Allanhauch, and hence a son of Sir David of Branxholme. It is also possible that he was the same as William of Foulshielis, or some other contemporary William. William of Hassendean (16th C.) probably a younger son of James of Kirkurd, or alternatively a grandson of James. He was heir to his brother (or uncle) John, succeeding in 1530. He is listed as being ‘in Halsyndene’ (i.e. Hassendean) in 1526 among the Borderers given remission for an earlier attack on the Earl of Arran (note that William, brother of Adam in Clari-law, is listed separately, suggesting there were 2 closely related Williams at that time). In 1527 he is among the Lairds, under Walter of Branxholme, who had remission for their role in the Battle of Skirmish Field; he is there ‘of Hassendene’. He is recorded being pardoned in 1528, along with Robert of Allanhauch, Robert of Howpasley and William Turnbull of Minto. He may be the William who was one of the Baillies appointed in 1528 to infit David, son of Sir Walter of Branxholme in his lands. In 1530 he was one of the Border Lairds who submitted themselves to James V to keep better order. He resigned the lands of Falside (in Yarrow) to William, son of Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1532, as ratified by Queen Margaret in 1539. Probably in 1532 (note that Fraser makes this the 19th year of the reign of James VI, which must be incorrect) he had a Precept of Chancery for keeping his lands, after having forfeited them for supporting Sir Walter at Melrose (presumably in 1526); these lands were Over and Nether Newhall in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton and Easter Hassendean and ‘Deidrig’ in the half Barony of Hassendean. He was part of an inquest panel held in Jedburgh in 1533. In 1534 he purchased the 40-shilling lands of Nether Galalaw from Gavin Elliot, the letter of reversion being sealed at Hassendean Kirk. In 1536 he granted Thomas Turnbull ‘in the Troonyhill’ lands on the east part of Eastern Hassendean. He is recorded about 1537 in a ‘letter of reversion’ by David Scott in Clarilaw for the lands of the Mains of ‘Capitrig’ near Hassendean tower. In 1538 Thomas Turnbull of Rawflat had remission for stealing from him, specifically 2 letters of reversion for the lands of ‘Coppitrig’ which were kept in his box in the house of Nicholas Rutherford in Edinburgh. He was given the lands of Falside (again) in Selkirkshire in 1539. And it is probably the same William ‘in Hassendean’ who had a court dispute in 1540 with Thomas Turnbull, tenant of Rawflat, over ‘wadsets’. They were also in dispute over a 1536 marriage contract between his eldest daughter and heir (although it is unclear how this could have been, since he appears to have had sons) Elizabeth and George, heir to the same Thomas Turnbull. Probably the same William was witness to a sasine in 1551 confirming the Barony of Hassendean to Alexander Cunningham; his son David is also mentioned. David probably succeeded him, while Adam of Burnfoot and Walter may have been other sons. He probably married Elizabeth, the elder daughter of George Chisholme of that Ilk. William of Alton (16th C.) recorded in Scott of Satchells’ doggerel family history. It is stated that ‘John Scot of the Monks-tower’ was ‘brother to old William Scot of Altoun’. It is unclear how he was related to the other Scotts of Alton. William (16th C.) described as ‘in Layk’ in 1535 when he was charged with stealing cattle from Arthur Douglas and Thomas Fresall ‘in Efflesche’ (probably Effledge) and also Marion Davidson in the same place. It is unclear where ‘Layk’ might be. Sir William of Kirkurd, ‘Whitecloak’ (d.1552), 2nd son and eldest surviving son of ‘Wicked Wat’. He became heir after the death of his brother David, but predeceased his father. In 1532 he was granted the lands of Falside in Selkirkshire, resigned by William Scott of Hassendean; this was ratified by Margaret, Queen of Scots in 1539. In 1541 he is recorded as ‘secund sone to the lard of Bukcleuch’ when he claimed tenancy of the Crown lands of ‘Hawtherne’ in Yarrow. He took part in Border expeditions with his father and was present at Pinkie in 1547. In 1549 he entered into a bond of ‘man-rent’ with Mary of Lorraine, the Queen Regent, in which he was to receive the same fees and profits received by the deceased John Melvin of Raith. Later in 1549 she granted him a pension of £100 Scots as a result of the damages he sustained defending ‘contrair auld inimeis of Ingland’. In 1550 he was listed as one of the 2 curators of James Crichton of Cranston Riddell, his step-brother (i.e. son of his mother by her first husband). He married Grizel Betoun, sister to his step-mother (they were both daughters of John Betoun of Creich with different mothers); after his death she remarried Sir Andrew Murray of Blackbarony. His children included: Sir Walter, the 10th Laird; Janet, who married Sir Thomas Kerr of Oxnam and Ferniehirst; Margaret, who married Sir John Johnstone of that Ilk and secondly Sir Alexander Jardine of Applegirth and was buried in 1618; Elizabeth, who married John Carmichael of Meadowflat, having previously had marriage contracts with Thomas, 2nd son of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford, as well as with John, grandson of Sir Andrew Ker of the Hirsel; and another daughter who married Walter Scott of Headshaw. John, recorded in 1632 as ‘brother naturall’ to Sir William Murray of Elibank was probably another son. There is an existing inventory of his estate when he died, which was only a few months before his father was murdered on Edinburgh High Street. William (16th C.) Customar of Irvine according to the Exchequer Rolls for at least the years 1537–42. He is recorded as ‘junior’ (suggesting there was a senior William in Irvine) and gave in his reports with Robert, who was surely related. William ‘the Boltfoot’ of Todrig and Harden (d.c.1561) 2nd son of Robert of Stirches. He was renowned as a fearless horseman and for several daring deeds. His nickname derived from a lameness caused by a wound received in battle. He is probably the ‘Willelmo Scott, fratre germano Walteri Scot de Styrkschaw’ who witnessed a document in 1507/8 relating to the tower in Hawick ‘between the bridges’ for Scott of Whitchesters. Originally of Todrig, near Synton, he acquired Harden in 1512, from his brother Walter of Synton and Stirkshaws, as confirmed in a 1535 charter from the Lord of Home. As well as Harden the lands included Highchesters, Todrig, Wester Essenside, Burnfoot and Shielswood; 1 acre at the east end still belonged to Walter, but that was also transferred according to another confirming charter of 1559 (although it is possibly 1550), in which his son Walter is named. He also had the lands of Hoscote confirmed in 1525; these were subject of a letter of ‘warrantice’ with George, Lord Home in 1535. He received the lands of Nether Harden from Simon Scott of Fenwick in 1540 (finally consigned in 1556). He was listed on the 1526 remission for Borders men for supporting the Homes in an attack on the Earl of Arran; he is listed right after Walter of Synton, and his brother David (possibly ‘Lady’, tenant in Stirches) is right afterwards. 1528 he was one of the Scots who acted as arbitrators to decide on the succession to the lands of Borthaugh. He was listed in the Selkirk Protocol Books in 1532 as one of 2 arbiters for Walter Scott in Headshaw’s dispute with Elizabeth Murray. In 1548/9 he was sent (along with Adam of Burnfoot and Clement Crozier) by the Laird of Buccleuch to visit Alexander MacDougall, probably to extract a horse from him. In 1550 he was one of 10 Scotts who signed a bond with the Queen to keep order and hand over criminals. In 1550 he (and his wife Elizabeth Ker) had a sasine for estates at Todrig. He is probably the William ‘in Harden’ who witnessed a Riddell document of 1551. Also in 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. In 1553 he and his wife were also mentioned in 2 documents of John, 4th Lord Hay of Yester. In 1553/4 he was listed among Scotts and their supporters who a group of Kers promised not to harm. And in 1555/6 he is probably the William in Harden who was summoned by Alexander Lord Home to appear at Melrose Abbey to receive redemption money for Hoscote. He married Mary, daughter of Chisholme of that Ilk; she was mother of his successor, Walter, who may have been ‘Auld Wat o Harden’. However, there is dispute over these generations, some accounts placing an extra Walter (d.c.1563) between him and ‘Auld Wat’. He secondly married Elizabeth Ker of Fairnilee (possibly a widow of Riddell of that Ilk), with whom he had at least 2 sons: Robert of Burnfoot (in Ale Water); and George of Todrig. He probably died at Todrig – ‘The Laird and Lady of Harden Betwixt them procreat was a son Called William Boltfoot of Harden – He did survive to be a man’ [CWS], ‘To tak’ the foord he aye was first, Unless the English loons were near; Plunge vassal then, plunge horse and man, Auld Boltfoot rides into the rear’ [SWS]. William (16th C.) priest mentioned in the 1537 Charter of Douglas of Drumlanrig, along with several other clergymen. Since he is designated ‘Mr.’, he presumably already had his Masters degree and was a fully qualified priest. But his precise status in Hawick, relative to the other clergymen mentioned in the Charter, is unknown. William (16th C.) owner of half a particate of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. William, son of William Scott is also listed as having 11 particates (and could be his son). One of these men is the ‘said William’ who also held 3 particates of land on the north side of Hawick. William (16th C.) recorded being ‘in Hartwoodmyres’ among the witness listed in 1539/40 for the instrument of sasine at ‘Fawsyde’ (probably in the Ettrick valley) for Janet Scott (widow of Robert ‘Elwand’) purchasing lands in Appletreehall from Robert of Howpasley; Simon, James and Roland are also listed and some may have been closely related. It is possible he was the same as one of the contemporary William’s (e.g. William of Tushielaw). William of Allanhaugh (16th C.) son of Robert. He was recorded as heir apparent of Robert in Allanhaugh and was entered into ward in Borthwick Castle in 1530/1 along with John, son of Walter of Synton; sureties were Robert, Lord Maxwell and John Johnstone of that Ilk. In 1535 he had remission for associating with his uncle William (then a rebel) and for wounding George, son of Thomas Turnbull. He appears to have succeeded his father in about 1557. In 1557 there are several renters (from Melrose Abbey) of lands in Ringwoodfield who may have been his sons, assuming he was ‘the guidman of Alanehauch’ at that time. They are: ‘Young Robert’, who rented Brugh; Simon and John, who rented Stobicote; and Adam ‘of Alanehauche’, who rented ‘Rigwodhat’, and was presumably either a son or brother. He was probably succeeded by his son William (or there may have been an additional Robert between). William of Aikwood (16th C.) son of Michael of Aikwood. He had a confirming charter for the lands in 1541. He was succeeded by Robert, who was probably his son. Bailie William (16th C.) witness to a bond of 1546 for Elliot of Redheugh and others entering several Ellits (of Thorlieshope etc.) as prisoners with Kerr of Ferniehirst. He was described as ‘bailie of Hawik’ and may have been the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William (16th C.) recorded as ‘Wyll Skott’ in 1548/9, when he was taken prisoner by the English when they burned the Laird of Buccleuch’s tower in Hawick. He thus may have been a servant of Scott of Buccleuch. William (16th C.) tenant of Whames, listed in 1549 among the men who complained that their farms had been raidied and burned by a group of English and Kers. William ‘Willie’ (16th C.) younger of Branxholme, he supposedly led the raid to avenge ‘Jamie Telfer of the fair Dodhead’ and was killed in the process. Unfortunately, it seems likely that he never existed. William (16th C.) took sasine for the lands of Colifort in 1550. He was described as being son of Wat ‘of Teviotdale’. He was probably related to Hob, who was convicted of rieving crimes in 1564. He is probably the ‘Wyll of Collefarurde’, whose son ‘Reid Wyllie’ witnessed a document for Scott of Branxholme in 1585. William (16th C.) described as being ‘in Hawick’ in 1557. He occupied ‘Soltracroft’, as well as ‘Blakatis ayker’, for which he owed rent to Trinity Collegiate Church in Edinburgh. His son and heir apparent Robert is also mentioned. In 1565/6 he had another lease of lands from Trinity Collegiate Church, specifically for ‘Soltra-croft’, ‘Blacatis-aker’ and ‘Campion-croft’. It is unclear how he was related to other contemporary Scotts. He may be the ‘Wilelum Scott in Hawik’ who was on the ‘retour panel for Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1553/4. He may have been related to the earlier and later Williams who are also ‘in Hawick’. William of Bowden (16th C.) recorded in about 1557 when he rented Northhouse from Melrose Abbey. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Probably the same William ‘of Bolden’ was listed among Scotts and their supporters who a group of Kers promised not to harm. William of Chapelhill (16th C.). His daughter Ann married Walter Chisholme of that Ilk. He was surely related (perhaps father) to Walter of Chapelhill, who was listed by Scott of Satchells as one of the 24 ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch. William ‘of Gluk’ (16th C.) probably ‘of Glack’, he was witness to a 1556 document relating to Nether Harden. His brother John was also a witness. He was surely closely related to the later William of Glack, or perhaps even the same man. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) recorded in ‘Montberner’ in 1578/9 among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned. He acted as surety for 2 Elliots who had previously been entered before the Council. He was also listed in 1581, among a large group of Border Lairds denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. It is likely he was the same as another contemporary William. He could be the same as William of Montbenger, whose son Robert was appointed as tutor to his brother James of Newholme’s grandchildren. William ‘in Hawick’ (16th C.) referred to by Scott of Satchells as ‘William in the Mott’ when listed among the ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch. He was apparently a brother of a Walter Scott of Harden (probably ‘Auld Wat o Harden’) and was son of either Walter of Harden (who died c.1563) or of William, 1st Laird of Harden. He held lands beyond the West-Port in Hawick (presumably named for proximity to the Mote), these being given to him for his service to Buccleuch (according to Satchells). He was living in 1591. Scott of Rodono suggests that the earlier Scotts of Todrig were descended from him. It is possible that the same William ‘in Hawick’ was involved in a precept of ‘clare constat’ and gave the associated instrument of sasine for Martin Douglas inheriting the lands of Crook from his father William in 1592; he was thus either a lawyer or Bailie. He should not be confused with William Graham, ‘William of the Mote’, a prominent Englishman of the same time, who lived at Liddel Mote. William (d.1579) probably a resident of Edinburgh. Along with a man called Turnbull, a schoolmaster in Edinburgh, he was executed for composing ‘rhyming libels’ about the death of John Stewart, 4th Earl of Atholl. These supported the rumours that Atholl had been poisoned at Stirling by the Earl of Morton (James Douglas). They were executed at Stirling. William of Deloraine ‘Cut at the Black’ (16th/17th C.) listed as one of the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch by Scott of Satchells. He had the lands of Nether Deloraine for his service. He was said to be a brother of Scott of Haining, a branch that was descended from Hassendean, and he himself was the progenitor of the Scotts of ‘Scotstarbet and Elie, now called Arddross’. William of Tushielaw (16th C.) probably son of Adam ‘King of Thieves’ (although Satchells suggests there is a Robert in an intervening generation). He could be the William listed as a son of Adam of Tushielaw in the 1526 re- mission for a large number of Borderers who had attacked the Earl of Arran; the sons listed are Robert, John and William (in that order), and so it is also possible that Robert was the eldest son of Adam and that he (William) succeeded his older brother, or could alternatively have been Robert’s son (consistent with Satchells’ version). It seems likely he is the tenant in Tushielaw and Cowanlaw recorded in 1541, who may also have occupied Mount Common (‘alias Deiphope’), as well as Cacrabank (along with his mother, who may therefore have been the widow of Adam). In 1553/4 he was listed among Scotts and their supporters who a group of Kers promised not to harm. He acted as surety for William Cranston of that Ilk in 1563, along with his son and heir apparent, Walter. Also in that year he was accused by the Queen’s Advocate of theft and reset from Robert Elliot of ‘Belleleie’. He was also fined for the non-compliance of Robert Scott of Horsleyhill for similar crimes. He and his son Walter took sheep from the lands of Baileelee, belonging to Dand Elliot; in 1563/4 they were ordered by the Privy Council to replace the stolen sheep. In 1564 he was on an assize that convicted several men (including Scotts) of sheep-stealing and another that dealt with the murder of David of Hassendeane. Also in 1564 he was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. He may have married Grizel, daughter of Robert of Thirlestane (although that could be Walter, his grandson, unless there were 2 similar marriages). In 1573 his son ‘Wat in Hartwodmyris’ was to present William Porteous ‘in Borthuikbra’ for trial in Edinburgh and he himself entered the Littles of Tushielaw Mill and others. In 1574 he witnessed a discharge between the Douglasses of Cavers and the Cranstons of that Ilk. He is probably the William listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Ellists and Armstrongs. He is probably the ‘Sct of Tuschelaw’ listed in Monipennie’s c.1594 (but put together much earlier) compilation of Border lairds. His children included: Walter, who succeeded; William of Midgehope (ancestor of the Scotts of Horsleyhill); James of Hundleshope; and John, who killed the father of John Govane of Cardrorno. William (16th C.) younger son of Sir John of Thirlestane. He was recorded as brother-german of Robert of Thirlestane in 1567 when he witnessed the marriage contract between Elizabeth, sister of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and Thomas, son of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford. William (16th C.) son of Walter of Headshaw. He is recorded as William, son of Walter of ‘Eidsshaw’ when warded in 1571. In 1572/3 he swore allegiance to the Crown and Regent, suggesting that he had been suspected of being a supporter of the fugitive Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst. He is probably the ‘William Scott of Eidschaw’ recorded in 1571/2 when he signed the bond to act against Borders thives. Sir William of Balwearie (16th/17th C.) son of Sir William and Helen Lauder. He served as surety for the Ellists in the register of the Privy Council on two occasions in 1573. He claimed in 1573 that he had not received John Elliot of the Park, and had a bond with Sir Walter Ker of Cessford, Andrew Ker of Falcondon and Walter Riddell of that Ilk. He married Janet Lindsay and was succeeded by his son Sir James. William (16th C.) described as ‘in Harden’ in 1574 when, along with James ‘in Quhitslaid’, he paid back a loan on the mill of Easter Burnfoot to Sir Walter Scott of Birksinde. The same year they also paid back a loan to Sir Walter of Branxholme for lands at Easter Craik and also in Ettrick. He was presumably tenant farmer of lands at Harden, perhaps related to the Scotts of Harden themselves. William (16th C.) listed by Satchells as being ‘in Lies’ (i.e. Lees) among the ‘pensioners’ of the house of Buccleuch. The lands were referred to as ‘alias Milma’ (probably the same as Moormaw), and he was also called ‘of Catslack-Know’ and descended from the Scotts of Dryhope. He is probably the same man as the William ‘in Catslak’ who in 1607 was served heir to his great-grandfather’s brother, John Scott, Vicar of Hawick, in the lands of Easter Moormaw; this connects him to many others Scotts, even if the precise connections are unclear. An earlier ‘William of Leis’ (with no surname given), who witnessed for William, Lord Borthwick in 1461, may have been related. He was surely related to the later Walter in Catslack, who was father of James, minister at Kirkton and Ancrum (Keith Scott suggests he was brother of Rev. James, and hence son of Walter, but there is no evidence for this). William of Allanhaugh (16th C.) probably the son of Robert of Allanhaugh recorded in the Register of the Privy Council for 1581. He was recorded as ‘Willie of Allanhauch’ in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, where he is assigned ‘the Kirkland, his awne rowme’. He may be the ‘William Scott in Alanehaucht, now duel in Hawik’ who was mentioned in 1581 (along with Robert of Allanhaugh) as one of the men forgiven for the murder of Hawick resident George Scott 3 years earlier. He was a signatory of the Scott clan bond in 1589. He was on an Inquest of Service in 1592. He was signatory (along with Roger Langlands of that Ilk and Allan Deans in Hawick) of a bond of 1594/5 drawn up by James Gledstains of Cocklaw and involving local Turnbulls and Elliotis; he is there referred to as ‘callit of Allanhauch’, suggesting that he no longer held the lands there. He may have been father of Walter ‘in Allanmouthe’ and his brother John, who are recorded in the early 1600s. Either he or a brother of his was probably on the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. William of Burnfoot (dbef. 1585) son of Adam. He probably died before his father and was succeeded by his son Robert. Note that this is Burnfoot on Teviot. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) 3rd son of John, younger of Synton. In 1550 he had a ‘tack’ for the lands of Langhope. He was listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliotis and Armstrongs. He may be the William ‘in Huntly’ who signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. He was listed in the roll of landed men of Scotland in about 1590 and was on an inquest in 1592. He was probably ancestor of the Scotts of Huntly, becoming succeeded by Robert, who was at the Carlisle raid in 1596. William of Chamberlain Newton (16th C.) listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliotis and Armstrongs. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts of Chamberlain Newton. William (16th C.) brother to ‘Scott of Hassinden’, as well as brother of Philip. In 1583/4 he was among a number of men from the area who were denounced for failing to appear to give evidence in a case against the Turnbulls of Bedrule. It is unclear who was Laird of Hassenden at that time. William ‘Reid Wullie’ (16th C.) son of Will of Colliford. He is recorded in 1585 when he was one of the witnesses to the bond in which Sir Walter of Branxholme and Robert of Allanhaugh resolved a family feud. He is listed as ‘William Scot, sone to Wyll of Collefurde, callit Reid Wyllie’; it is a little unclear whether the nickname referred to him or his father (who is recorded in 1550). William of Todshawhaugh (16th/17th C.) listed by Scott of Satchells as being ‘of Totchahaugh’ and among the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch. He was said to be descended from Scott of Borthaugh. He was surely related to Adam of Todshawhaugh and his son Walter, recorded in 1594. He may be the William ‘alias callit Wille of Todschawhauch’ who was recorded as a resident of Whames in 1549; at that time Walter was tenant of Todshawhaugh, and so probably related. William (16th/17th C.) probably related to the earlier William of Glack. He was listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliotis and Armstrongs. In 1585 he was ‘of Glack’ when he witnessed a bond (signed at Selkirk and Hawick) settling a feud between the Scotts of Branxholme and the Scotts of Allanhaugh. He may be the Laird of ‘Glak’ listed among several Border Scotts in the ‘Roll of the Clans’ of 1590. He was probably the William ‘in Clack’ stated by Scott of Satchells to have assisted in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1596/7 he was ‘in Glak’ when part of the group of Scotts (under Robert of Thirlestane) who attacked ploughmen from Peebles; they were denounced as rebels for not appearing. He was ‘in Glak’ when among the men listed (along with Walter of Headshaw) whom Sir Robert of Thirlestane was bound not to reset in 1609. This was part of the dispute between the Scotts of Thirlestane and Tushielaw. William (16th/17th C.) servitor of the Laird of Buccleuch. He is listed among the 180 supporters of Sir James Johnstone who had a respite in 1594 for killing Lord Maxwell and others at Dryfe Sands. It is unclear if he is the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. William of Midgehope (16th/17th C.) 2nd son of William of Tushielaw and brother of Sir Walter of Tushielaw. In 1557 he was ‘Vil Scot of Migerhoup’ when he paid rental for Fawhope to the monks of Melrose. However, there is some confusion, since he was presumably the William ‘in Megehop, son of the deceased Wat Scott’ who occupied lands in Ettrick and Rodono in 1556. He may also have been called ‘Will’ of Hartwoodmyres (although there is possible confusion with his son here). He was succeeded by his son William, who was at the rescue of ‘Kinmont Willie’. William ‘Will’ of Hartwoodmyres (16th/17th C.) listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ of about 1590. In about 1593 he and Walter of Stirkshaws were under caution, with Gideon Murray as surety. He was also said to have assisted in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. He was witness to the bond of 1612 for keeping peace on the Border. He may have been son of William of Tushielaw, and therefore the same as William of Midgehope (this is unclear, although a close connection with the Scotts of Tushielaw seems clear). He was probably succeeded by Robert. William of Midgehope (16th/17th C.) son of William of Midgehop and grandson of William of Tushielaw. He was said to have been at the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. He was succeeded by his son Robert, Bailie of Hawick. William of Hundleshope (16th/17th C.) among a group of Scotts who attacked Adam Veitch's lands at ‘Fechane’ in 1602. His brother Thomas was also mentioned, as were Scotts of Thirlestane, Gamscluch, Bonnington and Bowhill. In 1603 he and his brother attacked the same lands again, having been declared rebels. William of Howpasley (16th/17th C.) succeeded Walter, who was probably his father. He is on a list of several Scotts and others who the Baron of Hassendean (James Cunningham, Earl of Glencairn) tried to oust from their lands in 1603. In 1605 Alexander Scott (‘Lang Sandie’) discharged him from his obligation in the annual rent of the lands of Wark. There was a ‘horning’ of 1607 requiring him to remove from ‘Longhauch, Ramseclewis, Diksone’s Reid, Howpaisley and Schawis’ by the superior of the lands, James Douglas of Drumlanrig. This was followed by an action in 1610 against him and James Gledstains for not paying taxes on some of the same lands. He may have been the husband of Lady Howpasley who instigated the slaughter of sheep there in 1615 (in which case he was already deceased). Howpasley is said to have passed to Robert and Walter (cousins of Patrick of Tantlawhill) and then to the Scotts of Thirlestane and later the Scotts of Crumhaugh. William (16th/17th C.) referred to as ‘called of the Know’ in 1608. Along with his brother Robert, Bailie of Hawick, and their surety James Scott, Bailie of Selkirk, they appeared for themselves and for their brothers George and David, with a bond not to harm Thomas Abernethy, minister of Hawick. It is unclear what the nature of the dispute was, but the minister left 2 years later. It is also unclear wherether this ‘Know’ was the one at Teviothead, in Hassendean, perhaps at the Tower Knowe, or elsewhere. There were also several Bailie Roberts around that time, and it is unclear which one this is. William (16th/17th C.) probably son of Thomas and brother of Robert of Haining. He was listed among the members of the rescue party for Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1608 he was part of a gang of Scotts who freed 2 of their kin (John, brother of Walter of Woll, and his half-brother John Turnbull) from imprisonment by the Bailies of Selkirk. It is possible that he was the same as William of Deloraine, supposed to be a brother of Scott of Haining. William (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners’ court in Jedburgh in 1605. He is recorded as ‘Willie Scott, man to Young Wauchope’, meaning he was probable a servant of Thomas Turnbull, younger of Wauchope. William (16th/17th C.) brother of Walter of Huntly. In 1608 he was one of the gang of Scotts who forcibly freed 2 of their kin from imprisonment by the Bailies of Selkirk. William (16th/17th C.) nephew of Walter, tenant in Stonedige. In 1612 he complained to the Privy Council about Andrew Newton in Jedburgh had not payed him following being found guilty of charges 2 years earlier. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William of Whitehaugh (16th/17th C.) elder son of Walter of Whitehaugh and Janet Scott of Headshaw. He succeeded his father, but died unmarried and was succeeded by his younger brother Walter, who sold the family lands. He may be the same William of Whitehaugh recorded in 1612 and 1619, but this is unclear. William (16th/17th C.) son of Robert, and brother of Walter of Bowhill. He was tenant in ‘Scotstaines’ (although it is unclear where this is). Scott of Satchells lists him among those who helped rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. Probably the same William is recorded in 1596/7 as ‘in Brokhill’ when he was part of the group of Scotts (under Robert of Thirlestane) who attacked some ploughmen of Peebles; they were all denounced as rebels for failure to appear. In 1608 when he was part of the gang of Scotts who forcibly took 2 of their kin (John, brother of Walter Scott of Woll, and John Turnbull, his half-brother) from confinement by the Selkirk Bailies; his brother James was also part of the gang. He may be the ‘tutor of Bowhill’ listed among Scotts and others accused in 1612 by the Privy Council of overcharging interest on loans. He may be the William of Bowhill whose son Andrew was infested in the lands of ‘Crocecant’. William ‘Muckle Willie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded as witness to a bond of ‘manrent’, signed in 1595 in Hawick, between the Beatties and Sir Walter of Branxholme. His name (unfortunate by modern standards) is given as ‘William Scot callit Mekill Willy’. Given the status of the other witnesses, it seems likely he was a prominent Scott, and hence probably the same as another William. William ‘Will’ of Northhouse (16th/17th C.) mentioned along with his brother Walter and others in 1608. A complaint was made against them by Jean Scott, widow of Gavin Elliott of Stobs and his female heirs, stating that the Scotts had taken ‘all the evidents and writs’, threatening to burn them if their demands were not met. He failed to appear and was denounced as a rebel. Presumably this was related to a dispute over lands, but the details are not recorded. In 1610 Gilbert Elliott of Horsleyhill (later of Stobs) complained to the Privy Council that he was attacked by him and his brother Hob in Hawick, with drawn swords, and they would have killed him if not for some of the inhabitants of the Town. William (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘in Harden’ in 1612 when he was listed among local men accused by the Privy Council of overcharging interest on loans. However, his name is omitted from the list of those who were charged. It is unclear how he might have been related to the Scotts of Harden at that time, but it seems unlikely he was the same man as William, younger of Harden, who was already well established at that time. William of Robertson (d.1622) son of John, who was probably in the party that rescued Kinmont Willie. In 1610 he was served heir to his father’s lands of Robertson and Howcleuch. He was succeeded by his son James, last of Robertson. William of Burnfoot in Ale (d.c.1622) probably son of Robert and descended from the Scotts of Harden. He was witness to Walter Scott of Stirches as heir to his father in 1592. He was said to have been at the Rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. He had a confirming charter of the lands of Burnfoot and Wester Essenside in Ale Water in 1609. He may be the William ‘called of Burnfute’ who in 1610 was part of a petition, along with several local Langlands and Scotts, to have hornings lifted and penalties reduced; George Langlands of that Ilk had acted as cautioner for him and several other Scotts in this dispute against the Scotts of Todshawaugh and Ormiston. He may be the ‘Walter’ (if the name was given incorrectly) of Burnfoot on Ale who was given a bond in 1604 by Francis Stewart (son of the Earl of Bothwell) for ‘6 or 7 chalders of victual during recipient’s life’ for his faithful service, to be given once Francis regained the King’s favour and returned from exile (which never happened). In 1612 the Privy Council records a complaint by the Earl’s sons Francis, John, Harry and Frederick, against him and his brothers Walter and Robert, stating that ‘ather of the saidis partyis lys at avait 9await’ to tak theair advantage of utheris and should appear before the Council. He was described as ‘in Burnfute in the Water of Aill’ when he (along with several other Scotts) signed the bond of 1612 to keep the peace on the Border. He is also mentioned in the Circuit Court records of 1622 in a bond of security for ‘Geordie Jonsoune of Eschinsyd’. He was succeeded by his eldest son Walter. William of Fingland (d.c.1610) son of Robert of Thirlestane and younger brother of Sir Robert of Thirlestane and Walter of Gamescleuch (who was killed by John, son of Walter of Tushielaw). He may be the William of Thirlestane who is mentioned in an indenture of 1594/5 between the Wardens, his case (whatever it was) being delayed. He probably took part in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. He was included in the list of Scotts and others who the Scotts of Thirlestane and their tenants were bound not to reset in 1609; this was part of the family feud with the Scotts of Tushielaw. His son Simon (possibly illegitimate) is also listed. Other children included Walter and Robert, neither of whom had male issue (but both of whom held the lands of Howpasley). In 1610 he was ordered to pay £10 for the non-appearance of his kin in relation to the assurance against the Scotts of Tushielaw. He must have died soon afterwards, since his son Simon is described as son of the ‘late William Scott, who was brother of Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane’ later in 1610. Either he, or a closely related William, also received the lands of Merrylaw. He had 2 daughters, one of whom, ‘Mariota’ (probably Marion) was served heir to her brother Walter of Howpasley in 1662. William ‘Jock’ (16th/17th C.) described as ‘in Bransholm’ in 1612 when he was on the jury for the case on the death of John Elliot ‘in Redden’ while in custody in Hawick. It is unclear how he was related to other local Scotts. William ‘Willie’ of Satchells (16th/17th C.) possibly son of Jean and Robert of Satchells. He was one of the men accused of involvement in the slaughter of the Laird of Drumlanrig’s sheep at Howpasley in 1615. He is described as both ‘callit in Satchellis’ and ‘callit of Satscheillis’, so it is uncertain whether he was Laird or tenant. It also seems likely that he was related to Capt. Walter of Satchells (possibly his brother) and the Robert described as heir apparent to Satchells in 1622–25. He rode out from Hawick with ‘Marion’s Geordie’, meeting Jock Scott ‘the Suckler’ at the foot of the Eilrig Burn, and there he was ‘muffellit’ (i.e. disguised), before they proceeded to kill or maim 60 sheep. He did not undergo trial in 1616 along with ‘Marion’s Geordie’ Scott and Wattie and Ingram Scott, perhaps simply because he was not captured, but disappeared to ‘the North’. William (16th/17th C.) son and heir of Sir Walter of Tushielaw. He is recorded in 1619 in a ‘letter of inhibition’ brought by Walter, Earl of Buccleuch. This may be an error, since Robert was the son and heir of Sir Walter of Tushielaw. It is possible he is the same as the contemporary William of.
Hartwoodmyres (which had been an earlier possession of Walter of Tushielaw). It is also possible that he was the same as William in Phaup, whose son Andrew in Broadmeadows is recorded in 1627. William of Whitehaugh (16th/17th C.) witnessed to the bond of 1612 for keeping peace on the Border. He was also recorded as ‘fear of Quhitthauch’ when he was witness in Hawick in 1619 to a bond by Adam Turnbull of Abbotrule and John, son of Walter Scott of Chamberlain Newton. He may be the William of Whitehaugh mentioned by Scott of Satchells as being brother of Thomas in Wester Groundistone. However, this is uncertain, since William, son of Walter of Whitehaugh must surely have been dead by this time, with the estate probably by then in the hands of Robert of Headshaw. He may be the William ‘callit of Quhitaslaw’ (possibly mis-transcribed) who signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. William of Howford (d.bef. 1621) signatory of the Scott clan bond of 1589. He was probably son of Robert. He is recorded as being ‘of Howfoord’ in 1607. He was succeeded by his son Walter. William of Burnhead (d.c.1640) eldest son of Robert of Burnhead (or alternatively suggested to be 3rd son of Robert of Burnfoot). He may have been tenant of Burnhead, rather than Laird. His brother Adam married Bessie Langlands, daughter of John, the minister of Wilton. He is said to have served in Holland in the Scotch Brigade, during his father’s lifetime. He married Margaret, daughter of Nicol Cairncross of Hislop or Callhill. He had an only son and heir, Robert. William (16th/17th C.) described as ‘Will Scott in Weyms’ in Rulewater (presumably Weens) when John Young was accused of stealing some of his sheep at the 1622 Circuit Court. He could be the William ‘dweller in Weyms’ in Rulewater (presumably Weens) who witnessed the 1607 sasine for John Scott gaining the lands of Hobsburn and Weens. William (16th/17th C.) son and heir apparent of Walter of Todrig. However, in about 1630 his father sold the lands of Todrig to another branch of the Scotts. He married Isabella Livingston and had a son Walter. William of Dryhope (16th/17th C.) son of Philip of Dryhope. He was recorded in 1612 when Robert Horsburgh complained to the Privy Council that he and another 10 or so men came to his house in Peebles struck him and pursued him. He is also recorded as ‘lawful son’ of Philip of Dryhope in a charter of 1618. He probably succeeded his father Philip, and was succeeded by Robert, possibly his son. He is recorded in a ‘letter of poinding’ in 1628, with Samuel Cockburn of Henderland as his cautioner. He was succeeded by Robert, probably his son, who was in turn succeeded by Walter, who may have also been his son (hence Robert’s younger brother), and then Philip, the last Laird, may have been his son too. William ‘Young Gillie’ (17th C.) one of a list of 16 local men named by the Hawick Bailie in 1627 as suitable for sending to the army in Germany, i.e. presumably considered undesirable to the town. When produced by the Bailie before the Privy Council in Edinburgh he was charged 200 merks caution, in order to appear again if required; presumably this means he was not sent off to the wars. The caution was paid by John Short, skinner and Burgess of Edinburgh (who probably had some connection with Hawick); he is referred to there as ‘son to Robert Scott, late bailie of Hawik’, although there are several possibilities for which Robert this was. It is unclear what his nickname meant. William of Chamberlain Newton (d.c.1638) brother of John of Bryeryards. In 1638 his brother was appointed as tutor to his son Walter, by which time he was already deceased. He was probably father of the William, nephew of John Bryeryards, who is recorded in 1633 and 1637. He is presumably related to other Scotts of Chamberlain Newton, e.g. the William recorded in 1581. William of Chamberlain Newton (d.bef. 1643) son of William and nephew of John of Brieryyards. In 1633 (and again in 1637) he was served heir to his father’s brother in the lands of Brieryyards and ‘Braidleyis’ in the Barony of Hassendean; these were 100-shilling lands of old extent, and included a mill. He may be the Scott, ‘liferenter of Newtown’ who held land worth £156 in Hassendean Parish in 1643; this was probably Galalaw (and he may already have been deceased, explaining why no first name was given). He is probably the William of Chamberlain Newton, brother of Simon, whose daughter ‘Mariota’ was served as heir in 1643; this was probably Galalaw (and he may already have been deceased, explaining why no first name was given). He is probably the William of Chamberlain Newton, brother of Simon, whose daughter ‘Mariota’ was served as heir in 1643 (by which time he was deceased). She may be the Margaret, daughter of William of Chamberlain Newton, who married Thomas Elliot in Borthwickshiel (and of Bewlie), probably in the 1650s. William (16th/17th C.) smith in Hawick, recorded in 1628. He was listed among Scotts of Midshiels and Burnfoot who were charged by the Privy Council to keep the peace with the Turnbulls of Know. His brother Adam was also listed, but otherwise there is no clear connection with any other Scotts. William (d.c.1647) son of Robert of Gilmanscleuch. In 1647 his immediate elder brother Adam was served as his heir, implying that he had no children to succeed him. John of Gilmancleuch was probably also his brother. He may well be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William of Mangerton (d.c.1649) local landowner of the mid-1600s. He was an illegitimate younger son of Walter, the 1st Earl of Buccleuch, and assumed the title of Laird of Mangerton on the death of his brother Francis about 1640. In 1633 he was appointed one of the ‘Tutors Testamentary’ to oversee the Earl of Buccleuch’s will. He was also owed rental for the lands of Tinnis in the inventory of the deceased Earl. In 1643 he was listed as owner of lands in Cavers Parish, which were later acquired by the Buccleuch estates, with a value of £1000; he also held land in Castleton Parish valued at £1800 (including Thorlshield, which was later sold). In 1643, 1644 and 1646 he was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire, in 1648 also for Roxburghshire and again in 1649 for Selkirkshire. In 1643 and 1644 he was described as ‘in Newark’, suggesting that he lived there rather than at Mangerton. He served as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for ‘the Forest’ (i.e. St. Mary’s Parish) in the period 1640–48. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Amandale. He married Elizabeth, a daughter of Sir Archibald Murray, 1st Baronet of Blackbarony. He granted the lands of Mangerton to his eldest son Francis in 1648 (but Francis was probably a minor at this time). His daughter Elizabeth married John, eldest son of Patrick Scott of Langshaw. His widow Elizabeth submitted the accounts for Ettrick Forest for the year 1648–9. She was probably also the ‘Lady Mangerstowne’ recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663 (although perhaps really dating from earlier), paying about £1750 for ‘towrefeld’, ‘towre’ and other lands in Castleton, as well as £260 for lands in Cavers Parish and £2440 in Wilton Parish; these entries were listed under Hawick Parish, and were probably associated with the Scotts of Buccleuch. William of Salenside (d.bef. 1653) also referred to as ‘in Salenside’ in 1632. He must have been related to the earlier Andrew and Robert and was probably son of Thomas of Salenside, who died around 1636. His father granted him possession of Salenside during his lifetime (while his brother held Whitehaughbrae), but the properties were later sold to Sir William of Harden. He is mentioned several times in the period 1636–43. He is recorded in the Ashkirk Parish records as one of the Lairds helping to collect money for plague victims. He married Elizabeth Hay, who was the widow of Walter Scott, 2nd son of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden (who was murdered). His eldest son was James, who raised an action against his step-sisters. Another son was Thomas. William ‘at the Cross’ (17th C.) one of the signatories of the Covenant in 1638. There is some confusion here, since there was also apparently a separate Bailie of the same name. Yet he was re-elected as Bailie in 1638, when he is referred to as ‘at the Croce’. He was also the William who was Bailie in 1640 when the ‘Act of Bailies and Council’ was signed (although a separate William, Councillor at that time, also signed). He presumably lived near the Mercat Cross. He was elected to the Council in late 1648. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. William (17th C.) Councillor who signed the 1640 Act of Bailies and Council. He was distinct from the Bailie at that time, who had the same name. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was married to Margaret Riddell and in 1640 their daughter Helen was born, with George Scott and Andrew Riddell as witnesses. William (17th C.) tenant at Headshaw Mill. In 1640 he was accused by the Kirk Session of Ashkirk of carrying a sack of meal on his horse on Sunday. William of Tushielaw (d.c.1663) succeeded in 1643. He was son of Robert and younger brother of Walter, who he succeeded. He was a Burgess of Selkirk and was appointed to the Committee of War in 1643, 1644, 1646, 1648 and 1649. He was fined in 1662 after the Restoration and was appointed as a Justice of the Peace for Selkirkshire in 1663. He is said to have married Grizel, daughter of Robert Scott of Thirlestane, but this may be confusion with his father Walter or great-grandfather William; she could possibly have been the Grizel recorded paying the land tax for Craighaugh in Dumfriesshire in 1671. His children from his first marriage were: Andrew, who purchased Broadmeadows; and Walter in Cacarban. He secondly married Margaret, daughter of John Govane of Cardrono and they had one son, William of Broadmeadows. William of Clarilaw (17th C.) recorded in 1643 as owner of lands in Hassendean Parish valued at £156. These were probably the lands of Wester Clarilaw, which were owned by William Scott of Burnhead later in the 17th century. He was surely related to that branch of the Scotts; however, Robert Scott of Burnhead is separately recorded in 1643 (as owner of Burnhead, with land having In 1638 he was appointed as a Commissioner for possessed signiﬁcant lands in the Ettrick valley. ‘tack’ for Aikwood, where he may have resided; he Francis Stewart. In 1636 he received a long term King’s decision in an ongoing land dispute with Buccleuch who travelled to London to hear the was one of 2 representatives of the young Earl of appointed to oversee the Earl’s will. In 1634 he was appointed one of the ‘Tutors Testamentary’ sion between Branxholme and Hawick in 1634 and was deceased Earl of Buccleuch in the funeral proces-Principle of Selkirk. He carried the arms of the lands of Harden and Hoscote in 1612, when he was heir apparent of Harden. He also gained the lands of Kirkhope in the same year. He may have been the ‘William of Todrig’ recorded in a contract with Kerr of Oxnam about 1614 and another with Mark, son of Hector Turnbull in Hartshaugh in 1616 (although these could be an error for ‘Walter’). Also in 1616 he witnessed the sale of parts of Hassendean and Horsleyhill by the Earl of Home to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. In 1620, along with his father, he had conﬁrmed charters for the Harden estates. He also had a charter for the lands of Hundleshope in Peeblesshire, with the superior being Walter Gledstains of Cock-law. He was probably the William of Harden who had a charter for Langhope in about 1620. In about 1622 he had a charter from Sir Robert of Thirlestane, Ramseycleuch and Scabcleuch (essentially holding them in collateral for a loan). In 1625 he was appointed Sheriff Principle of Selkirk. He carried the arms of the deceased Earl of Buccleuch in the funeral procession between Branxholme and Hawick in 1634 and was appointed one of the ‘Tutors Testamentary’ appointed to oversee the Earl’s will. In 1634 he was one of 2 representatives of the young Earl of Buccleuch who travelled to London to hear the King’s decision in an ongoing land dispute with Francis Stewart. In 1636 he received a long term ‘tack’ for Aikwood, where he may have resided; he possessed signiﬁcant lands in the Ettrick valley. In 1638 he was appointed as a Commissioner for Selkirkshire to enforce subscription to the ‘Con- fessions of Faith’, and he signed it himself in in Hawick. He was a Commissioner for the Treaty of Ripon in 1641. He received his knighthood in 1641 and was also in that year appointed as a Commissioner to Parliament for Selkirkshire. In 1642 he was made (or reappointed) Sheriff of Selkirkshire. He also represented Selkirkshire in Parliament 1643–44 and 1644–46. In 1642 he was served heir to his father in his lands of Over and Nether Cliffhope, Wheelkirk, Wheellands, Worm- schleuch and Abbotsike as well as the lands of Harden in the Barony of Wilton and others. Also in 1642 he was named to a commission that was charged to apprehend and try a large number of Borders men accused of being ‘notorious crim- nals, theves and ressetters of thift’, and was ap- pointed one of the assessors to the Justice General for these courts. In 1643 he was appointed as a Colonel of the Horses for Roxburgh and Selkirk and also appointed as a ‘commissioner for the es- tablishment of manufactories’. In a 1643 county valuation he was the third largest landowner in Wilton Parish (after Buccleuch and Langlands), valued at £814, and he also held lands in Has- sendean Parish valued at £600 (this being Borthwickshils, which was later in Robertson Parish) and teinds in Lessuden Parish (for Ellieston, val- ued at £420). Also in 1643 he promised the lands of Mabonlaw, Highchesters, Todshaw and Borth- wickshils to his son Gideon and his future wife Margaret Hamilton. He was also in 1643 served heir to his great-grandfather William of Harden’s lands of Hoscote (this clearly establishing him as great-grandson of the ﬁrst William of Harden). In 1644 he and Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers were commended for organising tenants of the Earl of Buccleuch to help repel the Royalist forces of the Earl of Montrose. In 1646 he was on the Commit- tee of War for Selkirkshire, and in 1648 and 1649 also for Roxburghshire. He was Sheriff of Selkirk in 1647. In 1648 he was appointed along with the Earl of Buccleuch, as well as his son (Sir William) and others to suppress lawlessness on the Border. He bought Mertoun House in around 1649, which would become the principal seat of the Scotts of Harden in the next generation; in 1649 he gave a disposition of the lands of Mertoun, Aikwood, Harden and Whitrig to his eldest son Sir William. He commanded the cavalry in the Teviotdale Reg- iment in the early 1640s, and was Lieut.-Col. in a regiment of about 1,200 men raised by Buc- cleuch, which fought at Philiphaugh. He served as one of the ‘tutors testamentars’ for the will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. He was also appointed as one of the ‘tutors’ for the children of Francis, and was one of the trustees for Mary of Buccleuch during her minority. His support of the Royalist side led to him being fined by Cromwell in 1654. In 1611 he married Agnes, daughter of Sir Gideon Murray of Elibank. They had 5 sons and at least 4 daughters: Sir William, who succeeded; Sir Gideon of Highchester, whose descendants eventually succeeded to Harden; Walter, who started the Scotts of Raeburn; James, who was ancestor of the Scotts of Thirlestane; John, who was progenitor of the Scotts of Woll; Elizabeth (or Elspeth), who married Sir Andrew Ker of Greenhead; Margaret, who married Thomas Ker of Mersington; Janet, who married John, son of Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh; and Susannah, who married Gideon Ogilvie of Hartwoodmyres. He secondly (in 1633) married Margaret, daughter of William Ker of Linton, but had no further children – ‘Doon in the depths o’ the auld gray castle, Shut in alane wi’ his thoughts to wrassle, Wull Scott sat on the cauld stane fuir, And kent that his hopes o’ the morn were puir’ [WL]. William of Synton (d.1661) eldest son of Francis, the first of the Harden Syntons. He became a Burgess of Selkirk in 1643 and was on the Committee of War in 1648 for Selkirkshire and Roxburghshire and in 1649 for Selkirkshire. The keystone of the burial enclosure of the Scotts of Synton in Ashkirk kirkyard is inscribed ‘W S 1646’, which are probably his initials. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. He received the lands of Mertoun, Aikwood, Harden and Whitrig from his father Sir William in 1649. He was one of the Commissioners to Parliament for Selkirkshire appointed in 1649. He served as one of the ‘tutors testamentors’ for the will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. He was one of the trustees of the Buccleuch estates during the minority of Mary in the 1650s and then for her sister Anne. He was knighted in 1660, like his father before him. As a supporter of the Covenant, he was fined £18,000 in about 1662. He witnessed the marriage contract of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch in 1663, and was listed there as one of her curators. He is probably the Sir William who paid tax on £500 land tax for Eilrig in 1663 and also the Sir William who paid the land tax on Elliston in St. Boswell’s Parish in 1663 and 1678. About 1666 he was appointed one of the ‘curators’ of Francis of Davington. He received Parliamentary ratification of his lands of Borthwickshiel in 1672. In 1673 he matriculated his arms. He inherited Hartwoodmyres in 1677, but sold the lands to Walter Scott of Burnfoot about 1690. He is recorded in 1673 acting as one of the commissioners to the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch. In 1676 he inherited his father’s lands of Hundleshope in Peebleshire, as well as Hoscote and Hartwoodmyres. In 1677/8 he received the lands of Roberton, Howcleuch and Borthwickshiel Mains for ‘non-entry’. In 1678 he paid tax on land valued at more than £5000 in Selkirkshire (with his son responsible for more lands), as well as almost £2000 of land in Smalholm Parish. He is recorded in deeds of 1682, including in a list of heritors of the Regality of Melrose. He was indicted in 1682 as a Covenantant supporter, with his wife being accused of attending conventicles. Like his nephew, the Earl of Tarras, he was imprisoned in Edinburgh. In 1683 he appeared in court again in Jedburgh, and was carried off to imprisonment in Edinburgh Castle. He was eventually released on bail paid by Sir Patrick Scott of Ancrum. However, he became a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1684 and after the Restoration was knighted by Charles II. He was also further fined that year (along with his son and other Teviotdale Lairds). In 1686 he gave a charter to Walter, Earl of Tarras, his nephew. In 1690 he was one of the local Barons who were appointed to the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire, as well as for Selkirkshire and Berwickshire. In 1641 he married Christian, daughter of Robert, 7th Lord Boyd of Kilmarnock. His wife was served as one of the heirs to her sister Helen Boyd in 1647. His children were: Sir William, who succeeded; Robert of Iliston, who succeeded his brother; Christian, who married William Kerr of Chatto; and Margaret, who married Sir Patrick Scott of Ancrum. Another daughter may have been Sussanah, who married Gideon Ogilvie (but that may have been his sister). His will is recorded at Lauder Commissionariot in 1699. William of Horsleyhill (17th C.) son of Robert who was ‘Baillee and Portioner in Hawick’ according to Scott of Satchells. He was descended from the Scotts of Tushielaw. He was probably the first of his family to be referred to as Laird of Horsleyhill. He was granted Weensland, along with Shaws and Burnflat in 1653, including rights to use Hawick’s Common. He sold the Tolbooth to the town in 1657. He was listed as a member of the Town Council in 1660. In 1662, following the Restoration, he was listed as being ‘of Husleyhill’ when fined £1,200 for being a supporter of the Covenant. He is probably the William recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663 in Hawick and Hassendean Parishes; he paid tax on £304 for his lands of Weensland, ‘Acoth haugh’ (possibly Usuch Haugh) and Shaws, as well as £637 for Horsleyhill. He was also mentioned in a record of 1666 relating to Hassendean Parish. He may also have been the William Scott recorded as a Bailie in 1638, and the William who was on the Town Council in 1668. However, there are at least 2 generations here, and so it may be hard to separate them. He was probably succeeded by his son Robert (with William being the grandson). His daughter Janet married Harry Riddell in 1659. William of Headshaw (d.c.1690) eldest son of John of Headshaw and grandson of George of Synton. He is recorded in the Buccleuch archives in 1646 for the accounts of the deceased John of Headshaw. He was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1648 and may have been the William, ‘younger of Headshaw’ who was on the Committee for Selkirkshire in 1649. He was served heir to his father John in 1653 and had a sasine for his father’s lands of Headshaw, Dryden and others in 1655. In 1659 he witnessed the document declaring the adherence to the marriage agreement of Mary, Countess of Buccleuch with Walter (later Earl of Tarras). He paid tax on £1028 in Ashkirk Parish according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls and £1160 18s 4d in 1678. He resigned the lands of Headshaw and Dryden to his son John in 1686. He witnessed several documents for the Lairds of Todrig, Whitslade and Synton in the period 1688–90. He must have been the ‘Scot of Headshaw, elder’ who was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690, but died shortly afterwards. In 1647 in Dunfermline he married Jean Halket, sister of Sir James Halket. His children were: John, who succeeded; William (b.1648); and Mary (or Marie), who married Patrick Porteous, Burgess of Peebles, and she became heiress on the death of her brother John. Sir William of Clerkington (d.1656) son of Lawrence of Harperig. He was an advocate, becoming Clerk to the Privy Council and one of the Clerks of Session. In 1633 he was appointed one of the ‘Tutors Testamentary’ to oversee the Earl of Buccleuch’s will and serbed the same purpose for Francis, the 2nd Earl. He was served heir to his father in 1638. He was knighted by Charles I in 1641 and appointed a Lord of Session in 1649. He also served as a tutor to the young Mary, Countess of Buccleuch. In 1651 his 2nd lawful son William was one of the witnesses to corrections to the will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. His son Lawrence was served as his heir in 1657. Sir William of Aikwood (17th C.) recorded in a Melrose Regality document of 1669, referring to an agreement over teinds going back to 1650. He could be the same as Sir William of Harden. William (17th C.) ordered by the Council in 1658 to pay 4 merks for ‘both-meal’ (i.e. booth rent) until Whitsunday. He was presumably a merchant of some sort. In the same year perhaps the same William was ordered to pay £6 for the ‘liberty of the burgh’ (i.e. becoming a Burgess), ‘fourtie shilling being deduced for the buttis bigine’. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who was married to Bessie Scott. Their children included John (b.1651). William of Galalaw (17th C.) eldest son of Walter of Nether Bonchester. He is recorded in a list of Hassendean landowners in 1666. He paid tax on £156 according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1663 and 1678 in Hassendean Parish. He married Margaret, daughter of Walter Gledstains of Whitlaw. Following the death of his father Walter in 1653, he gave Nether Bonchester to his uncle Thomas, according to a previous family arrangement. He may have been related to the much earlier David ‘of Gallowlaw’. William of Bonnington (d.bef. 1684) recorded in 1684 when his... son William became a goldsmith’s apprentice in Edinburgh. His lands were Bonnington in Lothian. He was the eldest son of James of Bonnington and married Elizabeth Elliott of Stobs. He appears to have acted as a Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch in Dalkeith in 1661–62, when he is described as ‘fear of Bonnytoun’. He died before his father, and by then only had a single child, Margaret, who married James Cockburn. His daughter ‘Magdalena’ was served heir to his wife Elizabeth Elliott in 1662. William of Tushielaw (17th C.) probably son of Andrew, he is said to have succeeded when still a minor, most likely in the 1660s. In 1651 he was given 400 merks yearly during his lifetime in the will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch; he is described there as ‘eldest son to Andrew Scott of Tushilaw, our servitor’. In 1659 he was ‘younger of Tushillaw’ when he witnessed the document declaring the adherence to the marriage agreement of Mary, Countess of Buccleuch with Walter (later Earl of Tarras). He was succeeded by Walter, who was the last Laird. Although it is suggested (by Keith Scott) that Walter was his son, it seems more likely he was a younger brother. He may be the William of Tushielaw who married Margaret, daughter of Francis Scott of Synton. David and Francis, ‘brothers of the deceased ... Scott of Tushellaw’ were recorded in a court case in the Regality of Melrose in 1676. This suggests he was dead by then, and these were his brothers; however, the succession around that time is complicated, and so it is possible the 2 men were his uncles. William (17th C.) recorded as Bailie in 1678. He may be the same as William of Brieryyards. Probably the same William served as Procurator Fiscal during the 1670s. William of Coldhouse (d.c.1686) mentioned in 1666 in a record relating to Hassendean Parish. He is probably the same as “William of Cowdhouse and Tandlaw” and is probably related to the later Robert of Coldhouse. In 1678 he paid the land tax on £40 in Hassendean Parish (presumably for Coldhouse). It seems likely that his mother was the ‘Marie Scott, liferenter of Coudhous’ listed in 1643. His will is recorded in 1686. William of Hartwoodmyres (17th C.) possibly son of Robert of Hartwoodmyres. In 1663 John Armstrong (possibly a factor or similar) was recorded paying his land tax of more than £600 in Wilton Parish, but he is likely the ‘Hartwoodmire’ who also paid tax on £26. He is recorded in a list of major residents of Hassendean Parish in 1666. He was one of those who wanted the parish suppressed. He was appointed as a Justice of the Peace for Selkirkshire in 1663 and as a Commissioner to Parliament for Selkirkshire in 1666. In 1667 he was a Commissioner of the King’s Bounty. He was also farmer at Borthwickbrae in 1670 and in 1672 was leasing the west end of Branxholme Muir (from the Scotts of Bucleuch). He appears to have been the last of the Scotts of Hartwoodmyres, but may be related to the Coldhouse Scotts. In 1677 the lands of Hartwoodmyres went to Sir William Scott of Harden. He could be the deceased William of Borthwickbrae whose lands in Selkirkshire were valued at £960. In 1682 ‘the aires of [William] Scott of Hartwoodmyres’ are listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. William (17th C.) merchant in Hawick. His brother Robert was a shoemaker. In 1673 he was charged with striking his brother Robert, apparently because Thomas Brown had called him a ‘yallanger’, presumably this being the result of a drunken mix-up. Probably the same merchant William is on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. He may be the same William as the merchant listed ‘eister the wa’ter’ in Hawick in the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694 and the merchant listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. William (17th C.) married Isobel Porteous. In 1676 he is recorded being ‘form: in Ashkirk’ when his son John was baptised. The witnesses were William Laing and Robert Cowan. Their daughter Janet was baptised in Robertson Parish in 1683. William (17th C.) listed in 1682 among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. He is distinct from William of Clarilaw (who is also listed), but may be the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. William (17th C.) tenant in Todshawhill along with Adam (presumably a relative) in the period 1632–72. It is possible that he is the same man as William of Hartwoodmyres who leased part of Branxholme Muir in 1672. William (17th C.) recorded as ‘eister’ on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. He may be the same as one of the other Williams, possibly the later William ‘eist the wa’ter’. William (d.c.1686) glover in Hawick. He is probably the William listed along with Walter as glovers in the trial of men for the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair in 1673. In 1675 he was one of the men named to go to check on the boundary wall being built by Walter Scott of Goldielands, to ensure that the Common was not being encroached upon. He was thus likely to have been a member of the Town Council. His will is recorded in 1686.
Scott William (17th C.) recorded as one of the 2 Hawick Bailies in 1692. It is unclear if he was the same man as William of Brieryards. William (17th C.) smith listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. He was taxed for 2 hearths. He is probably the same as one of the other Williams. William of Clarilaw (17th C.) see William of Burnhead. William (17th C.) resident at Burnhead on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was separate from the Laird of Burnhead (also William at that time), but probably related to the Robert who was also listed as a householder there. William ‘Bellman’ (d.bef. 1696) acted as Burgh Officer for most of his life. He was stated to be ‘officer in the sd. towne, from almost his infancy to his dying day’. His son Alexander was later Burgh Officer, appointed in 1696, by which time he was deceased. William of Broadmeadows (17th C.) son of William of Tushielaw and his 2nd wife, Margaret Goyane. He obtained a charter of Broadmeadows from his half-brother Andrew of Tushielaw. He married Helen, daughter of Sir John Murray of Philiphua. Their children were: Robert, who succeeded; Isabella, who married John Balfour of Kaillyie; and Jean, who married John Murray, son of Sir John Murray of Philiphua and later Lord Bowhill. William of Brieryards (17th C.) Bailie in the 1680s and 1690s; he may have been the Baron Bailie, rather than a Magistrate of the Town. He must have been related to the earlier James and John of Brieryards. In 1689 a man is recorded being fined for insulting and questioning the authority of him and the other Bailie. He was Baron Bailie of the Regality of Hawick (i.e. the agent of the Baron) in 1693, when Walter Ruecastle was fined for assaulting him. He was probably the ‘late baylyea’ listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was probably the Laird referred to in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls as ‘Breariyeards his house’, when he was taxed for 4 hearths. William (1645–1739) 3rd son of Thomas of Todrig. He purchased the lease of Milsington farm in about 1670, starting several centuries of continuous residence there by the same family. He was thus also the progenitor of the Scotts of Girnwood and Singie. He may be the William ‘in Wilsongton’ whose son Thomas was witness to an instrument of sasine for Elliot of Harwood in 1694. He is probably the William who paid the Hearth Tax for 3 hearths at Milsington in 1694. He was a petitioner in support of having the Whitslade lands ‘disjoined’ in 1714. He probably married a daughter of James Elliott of Stobs and Margaret Elliot of Redheugh. His children included: William, tenant in Milsington; possibly Thomas; Walter, who settled at Girnwood; Robert, who settled at Singie; and James, who was a notary in Hawick. He is buried in Ashkirk (and lived to a very old age, unless the date of his death is a mistake). William (17th C.) tenant at Saibeside in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He may have been related to the earlier William of Saibeside. William (17th C.) resident at Easter Essenside on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. He was listed separately from William in Ashkirk. William (17th C.) listed as a resident of Kirkton on the 1694 Hearth Tax roll. He may be the William in Newton whose son Adam was baptised in Kirkton in 1708. William (17th C.) resident of Spittal-on-Rule on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. William (17th C.) resident at Peelbrae in Cavers Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. William (17th C.) listed as cottar at Dean Mill on the Langlands estate in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to Francis, who was tenant there. William (17th C.) listed as tenant at Heap in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) tenant in Nether raw in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. William (17th C.) tenant in Little Park in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. William (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694, when he paid tax on 2 hearths. He was separate from the merchant of the same name who was also listed, but may be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. He may be the William who witnessed a baptism for Baxter James Lands in 1682. William (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘indweller in Walls in Teviotdale’ who was factor to Thomas Turnbull of Knowe in an undated document, probably from the early 1700s. ‘Walls’ may have been ‘Woll’ or ‘Wells’. William of Raeburn (d.1699) eldest son of Walter ‘Wat Wudspurs’, he was the 2nd Laird of Raeburn and grandson of Sir William of Harden. His brother Walter was the great-grandfather of Sir Walter of Abbotsford. In 1685 and 1690 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. He claimed the Harden estates against Walter, Earl of Tarras, in a court action starting in 1691. But the estates were inherited by the Earl’s eldest son Gideon. In 1682 he was listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. He contributed £300 to the Darien Company in 1695. He married Anna, eldest daughter of Sir John...
Scott of Ancrum and was succeeded by his son Walter. Other children were: John, who died unmarried; and Isabella (or Isabel), who married Dr. John Rutherford of Knowesouth. In 1702 his widow married John Scott of Synton. William of Langhope (b.1654) son of John of Langhope, and descended from the Scotts of Synton. He succeeded on his father’s death in 1666, being served heir in 1669. He had a ‘wadset’ with Walter of St. Leonards in 1669, and lost the lands of Langhope to Walter in 1677. Margaret Scott of St. Leonards, with whom he had a disposition, may have been his mother, and it is possible that Walter was his brother. He is probably the same as William ‘in Langhope’ who was involved with decrees for the lands of Langhope with Adam Scott and others. He is mentioned as ‘Wll Scott of Langup’ in Scott of Satchells’ postral, published in 1688. His name appears on inquests in 1686, 1693 and 1699, still using the designation ‘of Langhope’, even although he had sold the lands. William (d.c.1690) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Falside and their children included: Margaret (b.1683), who married Walter Hume; and Anne, who married James, tenant in Stobicote. His wife secondly married Robert Thomson, tenant in Newmill and had at least 3 more children in the period 1694–1701. She could be the Margaret Falside recorded ‘eist the water’ in the 1694 Hearth Tax Roll for Hawick. William (d.c.1697) doctor in Hawick, probably son of Robert of Harwood, and hence brother of Gideon of Falnash. He is recorded as ‘brother-german’ of Walter of Harwood in 1667 when he became an apothecary’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He served as a Bailie in Hawick in the 1670s. Probably the same William was listed as an apothecary when he witnessed a baptism in 1687; this was for Elspeth Scott, with the other witness being Walter of Goldielands, suggesting a close family connection perhaps. He leased the ‘old Glebe land’ in Hawick from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1692. He was ‘Wm. Scott of Harwood, apothecary’ on the list of subscribers for the Hawick Kirk bell in in 1693/4. His wife was Bessie Scott and their children included: William (b.1679); Margaret (b.1681): a unnamed child (b.1683), who presumably died; James (b.1684); Agnes (b.1685); and Francis (b.1687). The baptism of Francis was witnessed by the Town Clerk, Walter Gledstains, and James Gledstains. He could be the William, apothecary in Hawick, whose brother Gideon was served as his heir in 1697; presumably this was because none of his children had reached maturity. William (17th C.) tenant in Merrylaw in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the ‘Walter Scott of Merrylaw’ (if this was an error in the name) who rented part of Whithope in 1698. William (17th C.) resident at Birkhill in Hobkirk Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) cottar at Mackside in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) resident at Bank in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It is unclear exactly where his farm was. William (17th C.) resident of ‘the netherend’ of Hassendean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was ‘wt the kilne’ and paid tax on 2 hearths. William (17th C.) resident at Appletreehall according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably the William in Appletreehall whose wife Janet Shiel’s will is recorded in 1687. William (17th C.) resident on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William of Horsleyhill (17th/18th C.) son of Robert and grandson of the previous William. He succeeded Robert, probably in the late 1680s (even although Keith Scott’s genealogy misses him out). He was one of the heritors accused of inciting the riot at the de-roofing of Hassendean Kirk in 1690. He may be the ‘Laird of Horslihill’ who paid tax for 4 hearths in Hawick in 1694. In 1696 there is a record of Francis Scott ‘brother-german to William Scott of Horsliehill’ becoming a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He could be the Laird of Horsleyhill who was listed on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1704. He appears to have been succeeded by his brother Francis, and so presumably had no male heirs. William (17th/18th C.) boatman of Langlands. He owned the land on which the Grammar School was built, at the Sandbed, from 1693. He sold it to Robert Langlands of Langlands in 1701 (who was presumably a relative of the Laird). In the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls he was listed as being ‘in Boathouse’ on the Langlands estate. William (17th/18th C.) son to the deceased Walter of Crumhaugh when he married Isobel Gledstains in Hawick in 1702. His father was presumably the Walter of Crumhaugh who died in 1700. William of Nether Bonchester (17th/18th C.) recorded as owner of lands valued at £180 in Abbotrule Parish in 1707. ‘William’ may be an error for ‘Walter’, who was Laird at that time. William (17th/18th C.) wright who lived at Kirknowe in Hobkirk Parish, recorded in a bill for repairing Wolfelee House in 1709. William of Burnhead (d.1714) eldest son of Robert, who was tenant there. He may be the William, son of Robert and Bessie Turnbull born in Hawick in 1651. He was also known as William of Burnhead when he was a local landowner in the mid-to-late 1600s. He was William of Clarilaw in 1678 when he paid land tax in Hassendean Parish for £182 for Wester Clarilaw, as well as £156 for ‘the lands of Burnhead’. He is probably the William of Clarilaw recorded in a list of heritors of the Regality of Melrose in 1682. In 1691 he was leasing part of the lands of Branholme Mains from the Scotts of Buccleuch. He purchased Burnhead (the family lands) from his distant cousin Adam Scott of Burnfoot in about 1692. In 1692 he paid the teinds to the Duchess of Buccleuch for his part of the lands of Clarilaw. He was probably the Laird who paid tax on 3 hearths recorded as ‘Burnhead his hous’ in 1694. He was Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch (in name of John Scott of Pitlochie) for the years 1681–4, for Branholme, Wilton and Whitchester. He acted as Chamberlain to the Earl of Lothian for the period 1689–1705. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1696 and was probably the William of Clarilaw who was a Commissioner in 1704. He is recorded in 1705 when his son John became a feltmaker’s apprentice in Edinburgh. Probably the same William of Burnhead is described in a document relating to teinds in Wilton Parish in about 1720. He may have lived at Clarilaw rather than Burnhead. He married Agnes, daughter of Archibald Wedderstain, merchant of Dalkeith. She was one of 2 daughters who were ‘heirs-portioners’ of their father; in 1675 she granted her half of the lands in Dalkeith to John Learmonth. She may be the ‘Lady Burnhead’ for whom the funeral bells of St. Mary’s were rung in 1729. Their children included: Robert, who succeeded; Eupham, who married Thomas Watson, ‘writer’ in Hawick; William; Peter; and other daughters. One of these daughters was probably Margaret, who married Patrick Scott and secondly James Scott, surgeon in Hawick. Another daughter was probably Agnes, who married James Scott in Calfield in 1721. In 1729 the funeral bells in Hawick were also rung for ‘Burnhead’s sister’, who (since this was after his own death) could thus either have been his sister or his daughter. Sir William of Harden (d.1707) succeeded his father Sir William. He had been engaged in the rebellion of the Earl of Argyll, but had a remission in 1685. He became a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1687 when still ‘younger of Harden’. He was appointed as a Commissioner to Parliament for Selkirkshire in 1689, serving until 1693, when his seat was declared vacant because he had not signed ‘the assurance’. In 1678 he was ‘younger of Harden’ when he acted as a Commissioner for Selkirkshire for raising money for the King. In that year he was also ‘younger’ when he paid tax on land valued at more than £2400 in Selkirkshire. And in 1690 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire, as well as for Selkirkshire and Berwickshire, along with his father. He was still ‘younger of Harden’ in 1695 when he contributed the large amount of £2000 to the Darien ill-fated Company. He is listed on a tax document for the Lordship of Melrose in 1700. Also in 1700 he was granted the rights as heir-male of Synton on their resignation by Archibald Scott of Boonraw; it was stated that he was descended from the ancient family of Synton. In 1701 he had a bond with Walter Scott, younger of Woll. In 1704 he was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire and for Selkirkshire. And in 1705, along with Walter Scott of Woll, he gave a bond of 1,000 merks to Alexander Orrock, which formed part of the Orrock Bequest. In 1673 he married Jean, only daughter of Sir John Nisbet of Dirleton (and she later remarried Sir William Scott of Thirlestane). Dying without issue, he was succeeded by his brother Robert. His wife may have been the ‘Dame Jean Scott, lady Harden’ listed among the contributors to the Darien Company in 1695. William (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1705 he witnessed a baptism for John Scott, glover. William (17th/18th C.) resident of the lands of ‘Kirkton’ in Kirkton Parish. His son John was baptised in 1710. William (17th/18th C.) described as ‘elder in Branholmtown’ in 1717 when along with John Scott (elder in Branholme) he was appointed to collect money from Branholme, Branholme Town and Castlehill. Probably the same William (or his son) was tenant at Branholmtown when he witnessed births there in 1705, 1713 and 1715. He was recorded being in arrears for rent on part of Branholme Town in the period 1712–17 (and may be related to the Robert, who was also on the same farm at that time). He was still farming 1/5 of Branholme Town in 1718. William of Thirlestane (b.1663) eldest son of James, who was brother of Sir William of Harden. He was 2nd Laird of Thirlestane (near Yarrow, not the more familiar ones in the Ettrick or near Lauder). In 1684 he married Christian Don. They had 13 children: 4 who died young; Agnes (b.1690), who married Walter Scott of Harden; Alexander (b.1691), who became a doctor and succeeded; Walter (b.1692), a wine merchant in Leith; John (b.1693); Patrick (b.1695); Christian (b.1696); Andrew (b.1697); Gideon (b.1699); and Isabel. William (1679–1744) eldest son of William, he was tenant in Mil-ington, like his father. He is probably the William ‘in Milisington’ who is mentioned in a lease from the Buccleuch Estates in 1744. In 1731 he married Elizabeth, daughter of William Elliot of Harwood (who had married his cousin Jane Scott). His children were: William (b.1733), also tenant in Milisington; Thomas (b.1735); Henry (b.1736); Walter (b.1740); Robert (b.1742), a doctor in Lasswade; Jean; Elizabeth, who married her cousin William, son of Walter Scott in Girnwood; and Janet. William of Stonedge (d.1730s) brother of Adam, who had been tenant of Wauchope in 1718 when he purchased Stonedge and Howa farms. He was son of Walter, tenant of Wauchope. He may have been the William who was an elder of Hobkirk in the early 1700s. He was recorded as being ‘in Hopsburn’ in 1709 in a document relating to repairs to Wolfelee House and also involving the tutors of Stonedge. In 1724 his brother transferred Stonedge and Howa farms to him and 6 years later he purchased most of the rest (the eastern part) of the Stonedge estate from Gilbert Elliott. He served as a Chamberlain to the Duchess of Buccleuch, appointed to cover the Liddesdale estates for the period 1714–24. He married Susanna, daughter of Thomas Elliot, tenant in Borthwick-shiel. Their eldest daughter Margaret married William Elliot, 1st Laird of Wolfelee. His son was probably Thomas, who was recorded as ‘of Stonedge’ in 1732, although he may not have succeeded his father until later. He (or his son Thomas) later sold the estate to Robert Lisle. His widow was probably the ‘Lady Standlidge’ who paid the window tax in Jedburgh in 1748. William (17th/18th C.) tailor in Cavers Parish. In 1699 he married Christian Nichol in Hawick. William (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He is listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He was married to Elspeth Elliot and their daughter Helen was born in 1701. William (17th/18th C.) described as ‘in Skelfhill’ in 1711 when he married Janet Aitchison in Hawick Parish. She was widow of John Scott ‘younger in Falnash’ and the wedding took place at Falnash. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts who farmed at Skelfhill. William (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1724 he appeared before the Session to hear an apology from fellow weaver Thomas Lunn for calling him certain unspecified names. William (d.bef. 1721) listed as ‘sometimes in Deanburn haugh’. In 1721 he was already deceased when his daughter Bessie married workman John Scott. William of Whitehaugh (d.1751) son of Walter of Headshaw and Whitehaugh. He was served heir to his father in 1692. His brother Robert was minister at Robertson. He gave 4 silver communion cups to Wilton Kirk in 1728, including the family motto ‘Vinct Amor Patris’. He paid the window tax in Wilton Parish in 1748. In 1705 he married Ann, daughter of Dr. John Rutherford of Knowesouth. He may also have married Anne, daughter of Rev. John Robertson and Christian Shaw (grand-daughter of of Rev. John Shaw of Selkirk); they lived in George Square in Edinburgh and Sir Walter Scott tells a story about their shaggy dog. He died without any children and was succeeded by his sister Isobel, and then by their 2nd cousin John. Sir William 2nd Baronet of Thirlestane (d.1725) only surviving son of Sir Francis. He became a member of the Faculty of Advocates in 1702. In 1690 and 1704 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire as ‘younger of Thirlestane’, as well as in 1698 for Selkirkshire. In 1700 he was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament. He was involved in a bond with Walter of Whitfield (later of Harden) and Walter of Woll in 1715. Later the 3 were ‘tutors’ to John of Harden, and were involved in legal proceedings over their consequent claims on part of the Harden estate in 1724–26. Known as a man of great learning, he is believed to have written the words for ‘The Blythesome Bridal’ and wrote several verses in English and in Scots dialect, as well as poems in Latin (24 of which appeared in ‘Selecta Poemata’ in 1727). In 1699 he married Elizabeth Brisbane, Mistress of Napier, only surviving child of Margaret, Baroness Napier of Merchiston and John Brisbane. Their son Francis assumed the name Napier and the appellation ‘of Merchiston’; his great-grandson, Lord Francis Napier would live at Wilton Lodge for several years. His first wife died in 1705. In 1710 he secondly married Jean, daughter of Sir John Nisbet of Dirleton, widow of Sir William Scott of Harden. William (d.bef. 1727) recorded as Laird of Wauchope. His daughter Margaret married William Elliot in Edinburgh in 1727. He was probably related to the Scotts who had long been tenants at Wauchope, but unrelated to the Scotts who pur-chased the estate later in the 18th century. William of Raeburn (b.1704) son of Walter and father of the next Walter. He was the 4th Laird of Raeburn and owner of lands in the Borthwick valley, including Eilrig, which he (or his agents) leased to John Chisholme of Stirches in 1719. He paid the window tax in Lessuden Parish in 1748. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. In 1743 he married Jean Elliott. They had 2 children: Walter, who succeeded; and Anne, who married Thomas, 2nd son of Robert Scott of Sandyknowe. William (d.c.1755) younger son of Francis of Davington. It is said that he had tenancy of a farm on good terms from the Scotts of Buccleuch, connected with the once powerful status of his Thirlestane ancestors. He farmed at Holm and then Beattock. He married Marion Veitch in 1721. Their only son was William, who farmed at Beattock and then moved to Moffat, marrying Jean Carruthers, but dying without issue. William (18th C.) servant ‘to the Laird of Cromoch [presumably Crumhaugh] near Hawick’ mentioned in an Edinburgh marriage record of 1750. He married Jean Clow, daughter of bar-er Henry. William of Africa and Ashieburn (d.c.1733) son of Walter of Clarilaw, and probably descended from the Scotts of Burnhead. In 1733 he was succeeded in Ashieburn by Rev. James Scott. In 1788 he (or a descendant) is listed as former owner of ‘Part of Nether Ancrum, called Africa’. William (18th C.) tenant in Hislop. In 1728 in Hawick Parish he married Margaret Scott in ‘Hairgrain’. William (18th C.) wool inspector appointed by the Board of Trustees for Manufactures and stationed in Hawick from about 1729.
There was a legal battle between him and the Magistrates of Hawick over his indelece and high rates, and he was replaced before 1733. William ‘the Pether’ (18th C.) packman from Deanburnhaugh. One of his daughters married shepherd David Scott (whose daughter Christina mar-rried gamekeeper Thomas Rutherford) and an-
Deanburnhaugh). Rev. William (1699/1700– 86) eldest son of Walter of Merrylaw. He was tutor to the family of Sir William Johnston. In 1736 he became minister of Kirkpatrick-Juxta.
He married Grizel, daughter of Rev. Gabriel Gul-lan of Dryfesdale. His children were: Elizabeth (b.1754); Margaret (b.1756); Walter of Merrylaw (b.1767); and Rev. Gabriel, his successor. One of his daughters married a Johnstone of Corehead.
William ‘the Auld Mason’ (18th C.) grandson of Archibald Goodfellow, his mother marrying a Scott, and his brother being shepherd Robert.
His parents were probably Jean Goodfellow and John, shepherd at Lymiecleuch. He was a resident at Falnash Mill. William (18th C.) Town Treasurer recorded in 1763 when money was being raised to pay for the new bell for St. Mary’s Kirk.
He was still Treasurer in 1769 when he was appointed to the commission to discuss the Common with representatives of the Duke of Buccleuch.
He may be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William of Meikledean (1693/4–1772)
3rd son of Robert of Davington and descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane. He also farmed at Rowanburnfoot, near Canonbie. He went into partnership with Benjamin Bell to drove cattle, being very successful for a while, but being ruined by a distemper outbreak. He purchased Meikledean in 1731, but sold it to William Laing in 1750. In 1722 he married Katherine, daughter of James Scott of Calfield. Their children were: Capt. James of Forge in Canonbie; Elizabeth, who married Thomas Bell; Mary, who never married; Susanna, who married Gilbert Richardson; and Catherine, who married John Carruthers. He may also have had a son Francis, who went to the East Indies. William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1724 he mar-rried Bessie Riddell in Wilton, the marriage also being proclaimed in Roberton. Some of these children baptised in Roberton Parish may have been his: Thomas (b.1725); William (b.1727); John (b.1730); Marion (b.1732); William (again, b.1733); Jean (b.1734); Thomas (b.1736); and Marion (again, b.1740). William (b.1709) 2nd son of Gideon and Agnes Elliot, his grandfather being John of Woll. He was tenant farmer in Kirkhope. In 1761 he married Margaret, daughter of Robert Scott of Single. Their children were: Gideon (1762–1841), farmer at Kirkhope and later Laird of Overwells; Robert (b.1769);
and Elizabeth, who married Thomas Suter. Sir William of Ancrum (d.1769) 4th Baronet of Ancrum, son of Sir John. He was a Lieutenant, of Barrel’s Foot Regiment. He paid the window tax for Ancrum House in 1748 and 1753. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He died without issue and was succeeded by his nephew John Scott Nisbet of Craigentinny. William of Hummelknowes (18th C.) recorded in 1748 when he paid the window tax in Cavers Parish. He paid for 14 windows, but it is unclear whether this was for Hummelknowes or somewhere else. It is also if this was an error for John, who was miller there at about this time, or if this is even a different family entirely. Robert, who paid the window tax there in 1753 was probably his son. William (18th C.) probably son of John, younger of Gilmancleuch. He sold the family property to the Duchess of Buccleuch. He could be the ‘poor miller at Ettrick bridge, a man of austere manners and great strength as well his sons’ mentioned by the Ettrick Shepherd as the representative of the family in 1806. William (1727/8-61) schoolmaster in Castleton. His gravestone depicted a man carved in relief (presumably William himself), holding a bible in one hand and a rose in the other, wearing a wig and a long buttoned coat. His wife Mary (1732/3-60) was also buried in the old kirkyard. Dr. William of Stokoe (b.1733) eldest son of Walter and grandson of the last Thomas of Todrig. He settled at Stamfordham in Northumberland. He compiled a pedigree of the Scotts of Stokoe, which included information on their ancestors, the Scotts of Todrig and Whitslade (used by Keith Scott in his 1923 book). In 1759 he married Martha, daughter of Rev. Edward Fenwick, Vicar of Kirkwhelpington and they had 2 surviving sons, Walter and Edward Fenwick. William of Thirlestane (18th C.) recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. However, this could be an error, since there was no Laird of that name at this time. William (1733-97) son of William. He was tenant in Milsington, like his father. He was recorded as owner of a saddle horse in 1785-94. Either he or his son was the William recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 4 horses, and also paid dog tax on 3 non-working horses at Milsington in the same year. In 1760 he married his cousin Betty, daughter of Walter Scott in Ginnwood. Their children were: William, who also farmed Milsington; Walter (b.1764), who succeeded as tenant in Ginnwood; Henry, who had a family and moved to America; Robert, a manufacturer in Hawick; Thomas, who went to America and drowned at sea; Jane (or Jane, b.1762), who married James Richardson (who was 1777 Cornet) in Hawick; and Elizabeth, who married William Miller. He was probably the ‘Mr. Scott in Milsington’ whose twin sons Robert and Thomas were baptised in Robertson Parish in 1773. William (18th C.) recorded at Skelfhill in 1772 when his son Walter was baptised in Robertson Parish. The word ‘baptism’ was included on the register. William (18th C.) resident at Parkhill near Chisholmie. His children, baptised in Robertson Parish, included: Agnes (b.1762); Janet (b.1773); and Margaret (b.1775). He may be the William who married Margaret Hobkirk in Robertson Parish in 1742, and whose other children included: William (b.1743); Mary (b.1756); and Walter (b.1761), who was a weaver in Wilton. William (18th C.) resident at Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1775 when his son Alexander was baptised in Robertson Parish. Dr. William (18th C.) physician in Hawick, who owned Brieryhill. In 1776 and over the next few years he had a few cases written up in the Edinburgh journal ‘Medical Commentaries’. These related, for example, to a mason who had a wounded thigh and a servant girl who passed ‘fatty substances’. He paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1785. He was recorded in the 1786 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick Parish as being ‘of Brieryhole’. In 1787 and 1788 he was a bachelor in Hawick who paid tax for having a female servant. In 1788 he was listed as owner of Brieryhill in Wilton Parish, which was valued at £81 3s 10d. He was listed as a surgeon when he paid the horse tax in Hawick in 1794 and 1797 and the dog tax in 1797. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. William (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1781 and 1784. He could also be the shoemaker William who witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert Olive in 1757. William (18th C.) gardener at Minto in 1785, when he was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. It is possible he was the gardener who witnessed a baptism for tailor William Turner in 1766. William of Woll (d.1785) eldest son of Walter, whom he succeeded in 1744 (note that some accounts of these generations are quite confused). He was trained as an advocate and served as Sheriff of Selkirkshire. He paid the window tax for Woll in 1748 and 1753. He was recorded as a Commissioner for bith Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1761. He was on the role of electors in Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1780. He is recorded as witness to an Ashkirk marriage in 1766; Charles ‘at Woll’ was also mentioned, this being his son. He is recorded as proprietor of Woll on Ansie’s 1773 map. He was taxed for having a male servant (Andrew Leggat) in 1778 and 1779. He married Jean, daughter of Charles Balfour of Broadmeadows and Janet Plummer, who was a daughter of Plummer of Middlestead and Jean Kerr of Sunderland Hall. He inherited the lands of Broadmeadows through his wife, and she died in Hawick in 1797. They had 7 sons and 5 daughters, including: Elizabeth (b.1741); Agnes (b.1742); Walter (b.1743); Charles (b.1744), who succeeded; Isobel (b.1745); Margaret (b.1748); Janet or Jean (b.1750), his eldest surviving daughter, who married James Grieff and Rev. Benjamin Dickison; Elizabeth (b.1751); Andrew; Walter (b.1755); John of Midgehope (b.1757), father of William of Teviotbank; William (b.1759); and James (b.1760). It was said that his 5 daughters were all 6 feet high. A letter of his to Walter Scott of Harden from 1781 is in the National Archives. His wife ‘Mrs. Scott of Wall’ paid tax for having 2 female servants at her house in Hawick in 1786 and 1 in 1788–91. William (18th C.) mason in Castleton Parish. He opened up the vault at Hermitage, discovering the supposed dungeon where Ramsay was starved to death. His son William was also a mason, as well as author of ‘Border Exploits’. William (d.1794) sheepherd at Priesthaughshiel. He died in the ‘Gonial Blast’ of January 1794, which killed several other shepherds in southern Scotland. William (18th C.) recorded at Highchesters in 1763 when his daughter Ann was baptised in Roberton Parish. William of Burnhead (d.1795) only surviving son of Robert. He is listed among the subscribers to the reprinted Buchanan’s ‘History of Scotland’ (1752). He appears to have been involved in a dispute with Henry, Duke of Buccleuch, over the teinds of Clarilaw and Broomlands in the 1760s. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was also one of the Commissioners appointed in the court case regarding the division of Hawick Common in 1767. He later had a share of part of Hassendean Common when it was divided. In 1775 he wrote to Gilbert Elliott of Otterburn, describing the genealogy of the Elliots. He paid tax on a male servant (a footman or groom) in the period 1778–90, and for both a gardener and coachman 1791–94. He also paid tax for having a female servant in 1785 and 1786, 2 in 1787, 1 in 1788 and 2 in 1789 and 1790. He was taxed at Burnhead for owning a carriage in the period 1788–95 and horses in 1785–94. In 1788 his lands included Burnhead, part of Wester Clarilaw, Pinnacle and Lees, as well as Appletreehall Townfoot and Crawhill, all in Wilton Parish, and also Hummelknowes in Cavers Parish. He was also listed as owner of these lands in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (although already deceased by then). When he died unmarried, the estate passed to his sister Margaret and then to his aunt Eupham’s son William Watson. William (1747/8–1820) tenant in Parkhill. He may have been son of the earlier William, who was tenant earlier. He married Marion, daughter of James Clerk, tenant in Whitslade, and she died in 1798, aged 68. He is buried at Borthwick Waas along with several related people. William (18th C.) resident at Nether Tofts. In 1787 his daughter Isabel was baptised in Kirkton Parish and his son William in 1791. William (18th C.) recorded as servant to Mr. Scott of Wauchope in 1790 when his daughter Helen was baptised in Hobkirk Parish. William (18th/19th C.) recorded at Martin’s House on 1797, along with John. He was taxed for 2 farm horses, and so was probably the senior farmer. Willie from Martinshouse was probably a descendant. He could be the William who married Janet Beattie in Ashkirk Parish in 1761 and whose son John was baptised in 1768 (with his designation perhaps reading ‘Martin house’ and the witnesses being the Associate Congregation). William (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Shielswood, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Upper Raw in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls along with James. They owned 3 horses. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Roughleeneuk, recorded on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was owner of 6 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax there in the same year. William (1729/30–1812) tobacconist in Hawick. He is probably the tobacconist of that name who is recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls in Hawick in 1787–90 and 1794. His death is reported at the age of 82. He seems likely to be related to the later tobacconist of the same name. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isabel Kedzie and their children included: George (b.1773), probably the joiner in Deanburnhaugh; Walter (b.1776); John (b.1778); and Jean (b.1779). William (1749–1810) son of William, he was baptised in Hobkirk Parish. He was a shepherd and later a land steward. In 1777 he married Janet Jack in Crailing Parish; she died in 1836, aged 82. Their children included: William (b.1779); Robert (b.1781); Jane (b.1783); Janet (b.1784); Mary (b.1786), who married John Blair, emigrated to Australia after being widowed and died at ‘Haning’, Armidale, aged 93; James (1788–1855), who was a ploughman; Richard (1790–1874), who married Jane Byers; Margaret (b.1793); Catherine (b.1795); and Walter (1796/7–1812). He is variously at Nisbet, Eckford, Town-o-Rule (in 1786) and Hallrule (in 1788 and 1790) when his children were baptised. The family are buried in Hobkirk Cemetery. William ‘Keek i’ the Kirk’ (18th/19th C.) father of the landlord of the King’s Head, mentioned in the 1823 Parish Records. Bailie William (18th/19th C.) recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. He owned 2 work horses. Probably the same William was a Bailie in the 1780s and 90s and early 1800s. He may be the same as one of the other Williams. William (18th/19th C.) contributor (from Jamaica) in about 1799 to the local fund to support the war against France. He must have been from one of the local branches of the Scotts. He could be the same as Dr. William. William (18th/19th C.) resident at Longnorton according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas was also there at that time and so presumably a close relative. Rev. William (1735–1809) 4th son of Walter of Nether Bonchester and Helen Turnbull (sister of Rev. William Turnbull of Abbotrule). He was younger brother of Thomas of Bonchester. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Dalkeith in 1760. He became minister at Ravingstondale in 1762 and was translated to Abbotrule in 1764. He was the last minister of the former Parish, reading the ‘Decree of Suppression’ in 1777 and finally moving to Southdean in 1785. He was then minister at Southdean until his death. It is said that in 1791 a ghostly rider appeared to him and 2 other ministers (or perhaps the elders) at about the same time that Patrick Kerr of Abbotrule died. He is recorded at Southdean on the 1787–97 Horse Tax Rolls and in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls when he owned 2 work horses and 1 saddle horse. He married Sybil, daughter of John Henderson of Lockholm, Westmorland (although her name is also given as Hewitson), and she died in 1822. Their children were: Walter (b.1767), who had 2 sons, William and John, neither of whom had male heirs; John (b.1769), who had at least 8 children, but no grandchildren; Thomas (1773), who died without offspring; Adam (b.1775), insurance broker in London, who assumed the surname ‘Scott-Elliot’ when succeeding to Arkleton through his wife; Anne Nancy (b.1771, possibly also called Dorothy), who married Mr. Reid and later Charles Baxter of Edinburgh; William; and Robert Hewitson (b.1785), who died young. He wrote a description of Southdean Parish for Sinclair’s Statistical Account. A Southdean poet, Thomas Oliver wrote about the suddenness of his death – ‘I saw him from the kirk descend, And in five hours his life did end’. A monument to his memory is in Southdean kirkyard. William (1739–1814) son of Robert and Elizabeth Elliot. He farmed at Singlie, like his father. Among his employees (for a time) was James Hogg, the Ettrick Shepherd. He paid the Horse Tax at Singlie in the period 1785–97. He married Margaret Pott, who died in 1807 (according to the Scots Magazine). Their children included: Robert, tenant in Todshawhaugh; James (b.1775), a doctor in the army; William (b.1776), also an army doctor; George (b.1779), who went to Africa with Mungo Park, and died there; Henry (b.1780), an Edinburgh hatter; Gideon, who succeeded as tenant at Singlie; Thomas (b.1788), Captain in the army and tenant at Shielwood; John (b.1795), youngest son, who was a friend of the Ettrick Shepherd and became a distinguished surgeon in Edinburgh; Jane or Janet (b.1791), who married Elliot of Flat (probably John); Elizabeth (b.1782), who married David (or perhaps Robert) Henderson of Abbotrule; Jessie, who married Rev. David Scott of Newcastleiton; Margaret, who drowned along with her sister and 2 of their companions while bathing in a deep pool in the Ettrick; and Isabella (b.1791), who also drowned in 1800. William ‘Wullie the King’ (18th/19th C.) landlord of the King’s Head. His children were ‘Andrew the King’ and ‘Nelly the King’. His wife was Janet Dickson (possibly a daughter of Nellie Dickson, a former proprietor of the same inn). He probably lived in a pended house on the High Street near the Cross Wynd, known as ‘Wullie the King’s’. He is probably the William recorded on the 1841 census as a publican at around 30 High Street – ‘Wagga Wagga and Jocky Sling, Rumpie Laidlaw and Rob the Laird, Jocky Tencocks and Wullie the King, Henry Mullens and Hope the Gaird’ [HI]. William (d.bef. 1809) from Girnwood. The death of his daughter Lizzie is recorded in Hawick in 1809. He may have been the son of Walter in Girnwood who married his cousin Elizabeth. William (d.1807) elder son of Rev. James Scott and brother of Ebenezer, who was a surgeon in Dalkeith. He succeeded to Ashieburn in 1794, and was succeeded by his son Henry Erskine. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805. William (b.c.1765) joiner in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on the Sandbed. His wife was Christian and their children included Walter and Jane. William (b.c.1767) resident of Newcastleiton, originally from England. He is recorded as ‘Independent’ in 1841, when he was living at about 9 Langholm Street in Newcastleiton. His sons William and Francis were carters, and he also had a daughter, Agnes. William of Friarshaw (18th/19th C.) recorded as owner of Friarshaw in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He was also owner of parts of Midlem. It is unclear how he might have been related to the Scott-Douglases of Friarshaw, and it may be that his name is an error. Dr. William (1773–1834) son of John and Elizabeth Thomson. He served as a surgeon in the sugar plantations of Barbados, being based at Content, St. Thomas on the island of Barbados. He amassed a fortune, some of which he left to his nephew John White, miller of Hawick Mill. He could be the surgeon William listed in Hawick on the subscription list to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He married Eliza Tucker in the West Indies, but retired to Edinburgh, although later moving to Paris. He is buried at Pere la Chaise cemetery in Paris, and a portrait of him exists with one hand missing. William of Raeburn (1773–1855) son of Walter. In 1806 he married Susan, eldest daughter of Alexander Horsburgh. Their children were: Walter (1811–28); Alexander (1813–43); Robert, who succeeded; William Hugh; Violet; Jane; Susan Elizabeth; Barbara; Charlotte; Mary; Sarah; and Anne Rutherford. William Thomas in Milsington (1773–1829) great-grandson of William, the first Scott of Milsington. He was tenant farmer in Milsington. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. In 1822 he complained to the Duke of Buccleuch about interference in his rights of rental of the lands of Crowbyreshaugh in the East Mains of Hawick. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1819 he married Janet, daughter of Mr. Arres, farmer at Farmington (although it is also said she was from Kirkton); she died in 1835. He died without issue, and the lease of Milsington went to his nephew James. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1797 he married Janet Wilson from Hawick. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Kirndean in Castleton Parish. In the ‘Local Historians Table Book’ of 1841 it is described how more than 20 years earlier he had a run in with Robert Elliot, ‘Little Hobbie o the Castleton’, who lived at Byreholm. He was described as ‘an able, stout, brave borderer, who stood 6ft. 3in. high’ and had been spreading stories to harm the reputation of his diminutive neighbour. Elliot took him upstairs in his house, showed him pistols and swords and challenged him to a duel, at which he fled. If he existed at all, then he may be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William of Woll and Sunderland Hall (1778–1820) eldest son of Charles of Woll. He was referred to as ‘younger of Woll’ during his father’s lifetime. He was so listed along with his father among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1805. He was still ‘younger of Wool’ when listed as a Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire Commissioner in 1819. He trained as an Advocate and became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1811. His family had inherited Sunderland Hall through marriage. He went to Canada and there in 1815 married Alicia, daughter of Richard John Uniacke of Mount Uniacke (who was Attorney-General for Cape Breton and Judge of the Supreme Court in Nova Scotia). They had 2 sons: Charles Andrew (1817–38), who inherited Woll and died in Rome; and Richard (1818–27). Sunderland Hall eventually passed to his nephew, son of Charles Balfour Scott. He became Commissioner of Customs. William (18th/19th C.) recorded on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls as ‘William Scott at Flex’. He was owner of part of the ‘particative lands’ of Hawick, which were later owned by Walter Pringle. He presumably lived near the Flex. William (18th/19th C.) physician on the High Street, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. William (c.1780–bef. 1851) farmer at the Greens, south of Newcastle. He is recorded there in 1841, but must have died soon afterwards. In 1851 his wife was farmer of 7 acres at the Greens, and she was ‘Feuar’ in 1861. He married Agnes (or Nancy) Armstrong, from Canonbie. Their children included Elizabeth, Ann, William (an agricultural labourer and carter) and Mary. He is probably the carter at Greens listed among heads of households in 1835–41. William (b.1774/5) joiner in Newcastle, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory and as a wrigh in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 he was on North Hermitage Street and in 1851 at about 5 Whitchester Street. His wife was Elizabeth (‘Betty’) Wemyss and they had a son, Charles. William (d.1842) son of a mason from Lower Burnmouth in Castleton, he was educated at Teviothead. From 1810 he was master at the small school at Burnmouth, and was later a mason in Newcastle. He made a sketch of Hermitage Castle before it was renovated in 1820. In 1806, at the desire of Lord Dalkeith, he performed some excavations at Hermitage, uncovering a paved floor and finding a large key. When the school at Burnmouth was closed during harvest time he travelled the country lettering new tombstones, and deciphering old ones. He collected historical artefacts, and was an expert on local traditions. He published ‘Border Exploits’ in Hawick in 1812 (2nd edition 1832) and also ‘Beauties of the Border’ (1821). He was recorded as schoolmaster at Burnmouth among heads of households 1835–41. He was listed as master of the auxiliary parochial school at Burnmouth in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He married Isabella Veitch from the Bedrule family. He had 3 sons, one of whom, Andrew (b.1800), became a Professor at Aberdeen University, while another, Thomas, was a teacher at Beith and Kirkcaldy in Fife. He is probably the William (aged 77) who is recorded as a schoolmaster at Burnmouth in 1841, living along with his wife Janet (presumably a second wife). He died after accidentally being thrown from a cart and is buried in Castleton. David Anderson wrote a poem after he died—‘No more will be sculpture the stone for the dead. No more show the young the pure path they should tread, No more, lonely Hermitage, will he pourtray Thy clear sparkling waters and battlements grey’ [DA].

William (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit dealer on the High Street, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He may be the publican on the High Street (at about No. 30) on the 1841 census, living there with Christian, Robert, Adam and Margaret, probably all his younger siblings, and all born outside Hawick. William (b.1778/9) mason at Borthaugh Cottage. His wife was Helen, and their children included Isabella, James, John, William, Robert and Thomas.

William of Teviot Bank (1782–1841), W.S., eldest son of John of Glenormiston, who was a younger son of William of Woll and Jean Balfour. He trained as a lawyer, being apprentice to William Riddell. He purchased Teviot Bank in about 1804, and became a heritor of Minto Parish. He was entered as a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1838. He was also a member of the Jedforest Club. He was said to be a writer on the subjects of phrenology and scriptural history. In 1808 he married Jane Jordan of Edinburgh in 1808 and they had one son, John, who succeeded. In 1816 he secondly married Margaret, daughter of Dr. Andrew Duncan, Professor of Medicine of Edinburgh and had 3 further children: Dr. Andrew James (1817–84); William Charles (1820–1871); and Agnes Beatrice, who died unmarried. William (b.1788) 3rd son of Alexander and Christian Scott. His great-grandfather was John Scott of Woll. He succeeded his father as tenant of Ladhope farm in Yarrow. In 1847 he married Jean, daughter of Mr. Currie of Howford. Their children were: Alexander (b.1847) who succeede to the tenancy of Ladhope, married his cousin (once removed) Jane, daughter of Henry Scott of Gilmanscleuch, and moved to Whinfell Park near Penrith; Charles William, who became a tweed manufacturer in Galashiels; and Henrietta, who married Thomas Mitchell from Cumberland. William (1789–1867) born in Wilton, son of handloom weaver Walter and Elizabeth (‘Betty’) Biggar, who both died at Dowmount. He emigrated to the U.S.A. in 1812, and also encouraged his brother Robert and sister Margaret to move to Ohio (while his brother Walter and sister Sarah continued to live in Hawick). He eventually settled in New York, becoming a successful businessman, partner in Scott & Leggat (with his old Hawick friend William Leggat), a dry goods firm. He was a keen member of the St. Andrew’s Society in New York. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Dr. John Philip Burkhart Roos. Their children were: Walter L., and William L., who died young; Mary; Eliza; Sarah Gertrude; Margaret J.; Henrietta; Charlotte; and John Burkhart. He returned to Hawick in 1856. A portrait of him was painted by Seymour Guy in 1860, and his grandfather clock, from Thomas Graham’s in Hawick, is still with the family. William (1792–1828) youngest son of Charles, Laird of Wauchope and Howcleuch and Elizabeth Dickson. He was a Lieutenant in the 21st Madras Native Infantry and then Captain in the 42nd Madras Native Infantry. He died unmarried in India. William (b.1792/3) born in Selkirk, he was a shoemaker on the Howegate, at about No. 14. He is listed on the Howegate in Pigot’s 1825/6 director, as well as on the censuses for 1841 and 1851. His wife was Elizabeth, and children included Walter, Jane, Elizabeth, James and Catherine.

William (b.1792/3) Slater in Hawick and Wilton. In 1835 he was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish, when he was a Slater at Damhead. By 1840 he was living on Melgund Place. He was a journeyman Slater on O’Connell Street on the 1841 census and he was at 13 O’Connell Street (probably what was later No. 2, now demolished) as a Slater. His wife was Agnes and they had a son Robert. William (b.c.1795) born in Kirton Parish, he was a joiner on Bucleuch Street. He was probably at about No. 25 on the 1841 census. His wife was Agnes, and children included Agnes, Janet and Margaret. He may have married Janet Cook, who was a widow and innkeeper at 17 High Street. He may be the William whose heirs were recorded owning part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick in about 1874. William (1795–1859) clerk with Wilson’s, who was known as a local poet and a strong temperance supporter. He was a friend of James Ruickbie, and had 10 of his poems in Ruickbie’s ‘Poems’ (1826). He wrote some lines about the talents of his contemporary, James Hogg (of ‘Teribus’). He was also a close friend of the local poet Elliot Aitchison, as well as Andrew Leyden, brother of the poet and linguist. He was a competitor in the contest for poems of the Auld Brig in 1851, and also contributed to the local press. A poem on the celebration of the Duke of Buccleuch’s birthday apparently earned him a job as a clerk at the Dalketh colliery. He later moved further away and died in Belfast. His daughter Margaret Isabella Sarah was the first wife of Sir James A.H. Murray, while another daughter, Elizabeth Jane married George Easton. William (b.c.1785) butcher of the Howegate, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He is probably the Hawick butcher of that name who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He may be the William listed as a flesher in Hawick (after George, also a flesher) among heads of households in Wilton Kirk in 1840 and 1841. In the 1841 census he was living alone at around 60 High Street. An unnamed child of his died in 1816 and his son James died in 1823, aged 15. William (1800/1–1858) eldest son of Walter, he took over as tenant of Girnwood. He was already listed there in 1841, when he had 2 female servants and also 2 farm labourers also living in his house. He married Ann Laidlaw in Roberton in 1821. Their children were: Walter (b.1822), who succeeded as tenant of Girnwood; and Margaret, who married George Davies, and whose daughter Hannah purchased the property. William (c.1800–48) born in Yarrow Parish, he lived in Ashkirk, at several farms around Synton, working as a farm labourer, gamekeeper and Thatcher. In 1826 he married Mary Scott (c.1806–80), daughter of John and Helen Scott from Selkirk Parish; there are thus a lot of Scotts in this family tree! Their sons were: William (b.1826); John (b.1831); Robert (b.1834); George (b.1836); Alexander (b.1840); and Walter (b.1846). He died in an unfortunate way, having fallen into the mill lade near Roughheugh Mill, and being rescued, he walked home to Synton Mill on a cold October night and next day was found to the north of Groundstone Heights, having frozen to death. Sir Philip Trotter.

the Scotts (θu’-sko’s) n. important family in the Hawick area since at least the 13th century. They gained extensive lands around Branxholme about 1440, and became more powerful as the Scotts of Buccleuch, being involved in rieving, rivalries and politics since then. Uchtred ‘Filius Scot’ seems likely to have been an ancestor, whose family are said to have come from Gallochry. There are some claims that Scotstoun in Peeblesshire may have been an early family possession. But in any case, the original local home of the family was at ‘Rankilburn’ (essentially synonymous with Buccleuch and Bellenden) near the head of the Ale Water, later moving to Branxholme, and then Dalkeith and Bowhill. A letter of remission of 1526 lists no fewer than 60 men of this surname. The 16th century was a time of great power struggles, with feuds fought with both the Kerrs and the Elliot's, as well as alliances with less powerful families, such as the Chisholmes, Dalglishes, Gledstains and Turnbulls. There were separate Scotts in Ewesdale and Eskdale until separate into the local clan by Sir Walter in 1596 (although it is also stated that they descended from the Thirlstane branch). Upper Teviotdale, the Borthwick and Ale valleys were the strongholds of the family for centuries. The Dukedom of Buccleuch became one of the richest in Scotland and the main Scott seat is now at Bowhill. Several minor branches of the Buccleuch family have been important within Hawick, including Scotts of Goldielands and Al-lanhaugh. The Scotts of Harden have an ancient history, and are now represented by the Lords Polwarth. The Scotts of Horsleyhill were prominent Hawick townsman for centuries, as well as Scotts of Alton, and other local branches include the Scotts of Crumhaugh, of Whitehaugh, of Goldielands, of Burnfoot, of Hassendean, of Synton, of Todrig, of Whitlsdale, of Woll, etc. Around the 16th and 17th centuries there were property-owning Scotts, called 'o the Mote', 'o the Toor', etc., who were probably branches from younger sons of local Lairds. Around the 18th century there were also tradesman-class families within and around Hawick, e.g. the Mill Port Scotts, the West Port Scotts (probably related to the Crumhaugh branch), the East Port Scotts, the Scotts at the Cross, the Scotts of the Wyn-dheid, the Ormiston Scotts, the Scotts of Hummelknowe Mill, etc. The family motto is 'Amo' (I love), the arms of the Scotts of Buccleuch are a 6-pomited star and two crescent moons on a blue diagonal band (also described as 'or, on a bend azure a mullet between two crescents of the field') and the crest is 'a stag reppant, proper'. A huge amount of family history is contained in the records of the Scotts of Buccleuch, which are preserved in the National Archives of Scotland, much of which was transcribed by William Fraser in 1878 – 'He was gloved and mailed, he was booted and spurred, For a Scott must ride at the lightest word' [WHO].

It was ‘Scraesburgh’ in about 1147, when part of the original charter for Jedburgh Abbey. At various times it was either synonymous with Hunthill or may have been essentially the same as what would later be called Kerseugh or Ferniehirst. The ‘baronie de Scraibusburgh’ is recorded in 1456. Once a prominent settlement, a document of 1544 records that a company of Englishmen ‘ventured vpoun the gratest towne in all Tievudale called Scraibusbrough a towne of the Lord Hunthyll’s’ where they took rich spils, a great amount of livestock and 38 prisoners. Land there was owned by the Rutherfords in the 17th century and it was purchased by William Elliot of Wells in the early years of the 18th century. In about 1788 John Rutherford of Hunthill sold part of the lands of Wester Scraesburgh to William Riddell. The term ‘Scraesbrough-peat’ was used to refer to peat brought for the moss there, and also used to refer to badly-made shoes (also written ‘Scraisburgh’ and variants; the origin is probably ‘Scraw’s fort’ from the Old English name ‘Scraw’ plus ‘burh’; the name first occurs in the mid-12th century as ‘Scraeousburgh’).

the Secession (thu-se-se-shin) n. event in the Church of Scotland in which a group of dissenting ministers left to form their own independent church. It was caused by 2 acts of the General Assembly in 1732, principally regarding the powers of the congregation to appoint ministers. The dissent was led by Ebenezer and Ralph Erskine, who were from Berwickshire, and related to Harry Erskine, minister at Roberton. The Seceders called themselves the Associate Synod, and gathered strength until they split over whether members of their church could conscientiously take the Burgess Oath, which talked of supporting the ‘true religion at present professed within the realm’. This led to the formation of the Burgher and Anti-Burgher kirk. In about 1738 it was stated that in Hawick Parish the Seceders did not register their baptisms, this amounting to about 3 per year. The customs within the secession movement were generally stricter than in the established church, e.g. it is stated that at local weddings in the 18th century the bridal party danced back to back.
seek (sek) n. a sack – ‘black secks er juist bin bags’, ‘Sic lyke, there is comprised ane seek pertaining to Andrew Lyden, to 20s. . .’ [BR1644], ‘. . . I’d burn him in a brunstone seek, for he has murdered Johnnie’ [WP].

the Secretary (thu-sek-ri-tu-ree) n. member of the Common Riding Committee, whom, in most cases, has carried the bulk of the responsibility for the organisation of the events and ceremonies. When the Ceremonial Committee was established in 1887 the Chairman was the main position, but from 1891 the Chairman became the Provost, with the Honorary Secretary taking over most of the organisational duties. Typically the position is held by the same tireles individual for many years. J.E.D. Murray was Honorary Secretary until 1897 (although it is unclear how this fits in). Secretaries have included: James Edgar (1887–1891); J.Y. Hunter (1891–1900); James Edgar (1900–08); Tom Ker (1908–23); Thomas G. Winning (1923–25); James Glendinning (1925); Guy Armstrong (for 36 years); William Robertson; Alistair Marshall (1955–65, who left town afterwards); Harold Simpson (1966–1975); George Crawford (for only a few months in 1975); Sandy Stevenson (1976–1988, and again for part of 2001); Frank T. Seefew (see-few) n. former shepherd’s cottage in the easternmost part of Castleton Parish. It is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map east of Hudshouse and north of Fairloans, and may correspond roughly to the modern Myredykes. It is possible that this corresponds to the lands of ‘Seefew’ listed among those owned by Sir William Eliott of Stobs in the Barony of Feu-Rule in the late 17th century (there is a place of the same name in Morebattle Parish, the name perhaps jocularly suggesting a desolate location).

Seeley (see-lee) n. Ian William (1942–2013)
born in St. Andrews, he started to learn piano at age 11 and was educated at Madras College. He then went to the Royal Scottish Academy of Music in Glasgow and Trinity College of Music in London, before training as a teacher in Dundee. He held teaching positions in Kirkwall and Lockerbie, then arrived in Hawick in 1970 to be Head of Music at the High School. He was music teacher there for 27 years, until his retirement. He was organist at Trinity Kirk 1970–82, and has been heavily involved in the Amateur Operatic Society. He wrote ‘On With the Show’ (2010), for the centenary of that organisation. He was also conductor of the P.S.A. Choir and on the committee of the Saxhorn Band. He was President of Hawick Rotary Club and received a Paul Harris Fellowship in 2003. His support for and involvement in the Common Riding grew with time. From 1987 he became pianist for the 1514 Club, the Mosstroopers’ Club, the Callants’ Club, the Ex-Cornets and Ex-Acting Fathers Association. From 2002 he became pianist at the Colour Bussing. He was Mosstrooper of the Year in 2008 and was also made an honorary life membership of the Callants’ Club. He is writer of 5 modern Hawick songs: ‘Callant’s Song’; ‘Where Teviot Rins’; ‘The Queen O’ the Auld Scottish Border’; Hawick Reivers’; and ‘Songs of Teviotdale’. He also published ‘Spider’s Wings – A Collection of 50 Poems’, as well as organ and choral church music. He arranged the music for the revival of ‘The Gutterbludes’ in 2000, matching the lyrics to some of Adam Grant’s other music, as well as writing 3 entirely new pieces and an overture. He acted as musical editor for the 2001 edition of ‘The Hawick Songs – A Complete Collection’, providing some accompaniments to new songs and revised accompaniments to a few of the old. He also wrote the definitive guide ‘Songs of Teviotdale: A Companion to the Hawick Songs’ (2013).

Sei Croft (si-kroft) n. Sea Croft, an area of marshy, planted land behind Pilmuir, part of the Newbigging farm at one point, and long owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. It lies on part of the boundary of the old Common. It is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map as a small pond and its position is located on J.P. Alison’s map of the Common in 1777. There was formerly a farmstead cottage there. The farmer recorded in 1797 was James Davidson (the name may be humorously applied because of the water in the area).

sei’d (si’d) contr. see it – ‘can ee sei’d fri up there?’ ‘... ‘How er ee the day?’ they’d quite often git the answer ‘Ee sei’d aa’, meanin ... ’e can sei be lookin at is’ [IWL], ‘...when A suspect no mony o huz here the day’ll be around ti sei’d’ [IWL].

Seigiva (si-gi-vai) n. one of two women worshippers (the other being Rosfritha) from ‘Hawick’ who apparently witnessed a miracle in the chapel of St. Cuthbert on the ‘Slitriith’, according to the contemporary historian Reginald of Durham. They are said to have travelled many miles on a feast day of St. Cuthbert before Reginald wrote his book in about the 1170s, coming to the chapel, which is generally assumed to be at a site near Cosgmill. They were dismayed at the failure of the altar candle, but with their faith in St. Cuthbert, a new candle appeared in the middle of the altar ‘which diffused all around its beaming rays’ (also transcribed ‘Seigiv’ and ‘Sægifa’).

seip (sip) v., arch. to seep, ooze, leak — ‘Losh sakes me! the thochts that come seipin ...’ [ECS] (also ‘sype’).

-self (sel, sul) suffix -self, used to make compound personal pronouns (seen in masel, hersel, etc., as well as in other compound nouns such as glaur sel, muck sel and stoor sel).

Selby (sel-bee) n. Ephraim (b.1801) son of Robert, he was also factor at Minto. He lived for a while at Hassendeanbank. In 1861 he is recorded living at Minto Cleuchhead, farming 375 acres and employing 13 people. He served as a Commissioner for the county of Roxburghshire. He is probably the Mr. Selby who, along with George Pott of Dod, first suggested building a bridge and roads to connect Hassendean station with Denholm. He was listed as a Steward at the Common Riding Races of 1836. His right to be a registered voter was questioned in the House of Commons investigation into ‘Fictitious Voters’ in 1837. He was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District in the 1850s.

Selfcorn (self-körn) n., arch. a blackhead.

the Selgovae (thu-sel-gō-vē) n., pl. ancient Celtic tribe which existed in the Borders during and after Roman occupation. Their territory consisted of the middle and upper Tweed basin and its tributaries (including the Teviot) and extended to the Solway (and was probably the origin of that name). One of their headquarters was at Newstead near Melrose, called Trimontium. The other 3 towns mentioned by Ptolemy were Carbantorigum, Uxellum and Corda, and all are unidentified. The Votadini were the tribe to the east and north, and the Novantae to the west. However, it is unclear whether the Selgovae were part of the Votadini or distinct. They were effectively conquered by the Romans in 79–80 C.E. (the word is thought to mean 'hunters').

Selkirk (sel-kurk) n. town 11 miles north of Hawick, being the Ancient and Royal Burgh of Selkirk, built high above the Ettrick and Yarrow valleys, which was the seat of the county of Selkirkshire. The town has for centuries been on the main road north from Hawick to Edinburgh. It was already an established mediæval town when David I established and abbey here in 1113 (although the monks soon moved to Kelso), with a castle and hunting forest following in the same century. Selkirk became a Royal Burgh perhaps in the 13th century and the Scottish Parliament met here in 1204. James V granted part of the royal forest as a common, and the town may have had the largest common in the country. The town has a mediæval plan, built around the market square, although the top part of the old town was levelled in the 1960s. It was burned by the English in 1418 and the inhabitants robbed in 1502 by Englishman Sir John Musgrave, with the help of Adam Turnbull (tenant at Hornshole and Chamberlain Newton). It was burned by the English again in 1543. A nearby massacre of Montrose’s Royalists took place by Leslie’s Covenanters in 1645. Sir Walter Scott was Sheriff here for 33 years. His statue sits in the square, and there are also memorials to Selkirk natives Mungo Park, Tom Scott and J.B. Selkirk, as well as the ‘Fletcher’ statue by Thomas Clapperton. The Pant Well monument is from 1898, although the well was in use much earlier. The old Court House dates from 1803 and has a 33 m (110 ft) spire. The County Buildings and Court House are linked to the Old Jail under the main road. Originally known for shoemaking, specialist tweed industries and latterly other light industries are now the main employers, with the mills on the low ground of the Ettrick haughs. Selkirk Common Riding is at least 400 years old, involving the Riding of the Marches as well as a commemoration of the return of ‘Fletcher’ from Flodden (another version states that Walter Brydon, the Town Clerk, was the only one surviving from the town’s 80 volunteers). Ceremonies include ‘crying the burley’, bussing the Burgh Flag, fording the River Ettrick, and the ‘casting of the colours’. Part of it was filmed around 1900 by Hawick man David Gaylor. Population (1991) 5,922. J. Walter Elliot has written several books on the history of Selkirk – ‘Then up with the banner to Selkirk men’s honour, That sounded o’er Britain eight ages and more ’’[JH], ‘’...And threaded his way through the oakwood brown To the diamond roofs of Selkirk town’[WHO] (the origin is possibly Old English for ‘hall church’ or ‘church by the shiels’; Teries often talk about going ‘ower ti Selkirk’; it is ‘Selechirche’ in about 1120, ‘Selkryke’ in 1415 and ‘Selerigue’ in 1597 in a letter from Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme).

Selkirk Abbey (sel-kurk-aw-bee) n. former abbey in Selkirk, with no visible trace remaining. It was founded around 1113 by David I, with 13 monks brought from the reformed Benedictine Order in France. It was founded in honour of St. Mary and St. John the Evangelist, and received a large amount of the surrounding lands. The location of the abbey itself was probably the old kirkyard of Lindean by the Batts (i.e. ‘Abbot’s Burn’). It is unlikely to have been a very substantial structure, since by 1128 the abbey was moved

Selkirk banni (sel-kurk-baw-ni) n. Selkirk bannock, a type of round fruit loaf made in Selkirk (also written ‘bannae’; cf. curny banni).

Selkirk Castle (sel-kurk-kaw-sul) n. former castle in Selkirk, probably dating to the early 12th century. It was frequently used by Scottish Kings in the 12th and 13th centuries, mostly as a royal hunting seat, but also holding occasional parliaments there. A new castle was built in 1302, including a drawbridge and portcullis.

In 1304 it appears to have been captured by the Scots, but was back in English hands 2 years later, and in 1310 the English King, Edward II, stayed there for several days. After Bannockburn the office of Constable of Selkirk passed to Turnbull of Philiphaugh. From the Turnbulls it passed to the Murrays and later to families in Selkirk, who were ‘of the Auld Peel’. Its ruins are near the end of Castle Street (formerly the ‘Peel Gait’) on Peel Hill, in the grounds of the Haining, where the motte and some associated earthworks can be made out.

Selkirk Junction (sel-kurk-jung-shin) n. junction of the Waverley Line with the Selkirk Railway, between Melrose and Galashiels. That line ran from 1856 until 1951 for passengers and 1964 for freight, with stations at Abbotsford Ferry and Lindean.

Selkirk Rob (sel-kurk-robi) n. distinguishing nickname for one of the men called Robert Scott in the mid-1800s.

Selkirkshire (sel-kurk-shir, sel-kurk-shir) n. neighbouring county north-west of Roxburghshire, now part of the Scottish Borders. Parts of the Borthwick valley and areas around Ashkirk have shifted back and forth between Selkirkshire and Roxburghshire over the centuries, with some Parishes being split between both counties, or having disjoint parts in one or other county. A 2 volume history of the county was published by T. Craig Brown in 1886.

Sellar (se-lur) n. Margaret wrote ‘Denholm: a history of the village’ in 1889.

selled (seld) pp. sold – ‘...Beat the famous Black Enchanter That sell’d sae dear’ [RH], ‘That shauchlin’ birkie, lang an’ thin, Seld a’ his sowl for jinglin’ tin’ [WP] (this is always ‘sold’ in English, cf. also selt; sometimes written ‘seld’ or ‘sell’d’).

sellie (se-lee) n., arch. diminutive of selfishness – ‘That land where ‘sellie’ reigns supremely chief’ [JoHa], adj., arch. selfish – ‘Bit A daarsay there’s a selly bit about uz aa’ [ECS] (also written ‘selly’).

Seturdi (se’-ur-di) n. Saturday – ‘In the club yin Setturday night . . . ’ [AY], ‘. . . frae the top o the Loan doon taethe Horse on the Setturday mornin’ [CT], ‘I watched the deliberate Last Destruction o Wulton Yin simmer Setturday afternun’ [DH], ‘Robert Burns and Robert Ainslie left Edinburgh on Seturday the 5th o May, 1787 . . . ’ [IWL] (several spelling variants exist, including ‘Seturdi’, ‘Setturday’ and ‘Saturdy’).

the Seturdi (thu-se’-ur-di) n. Common Riding Saturday, beginning with the end of the Ball and greeting the dawn with song-singing at the Mote, and then a last dancing of the Reel in front of the Tower. There is usually a short rest before the Drums and Fifes rouse the town at 8 a.m., walking from the West Port to the Horse. At 9.30 a.m. the mounted procession proceeds to the Park, where the Principals stand in their stirrups and sing ‘Teribus’ at the end of the Avenue, before laying wreaths at the War Memorial. They then ride through the streets and are led from the Horse to the Loan by the Drums and Fifes. They then proceed to the Moor via the Duke’s Wood, the Flex, Wulliestruther, Pilmir Rig and Pilmir Field. The riders once again do a circuit of the race course, and the Flag is displayed as on the previous day. There are more races and events there, but shorter than on the Friday. The Cornet takes the Flag from the roof of the Committee room at 3 p.m., after which he leads his mounted supporters back to the Town Hall via Crumhauhhill, being met at the top of the Loan by the Drums and Fifes. The cavalcade then proceed along the High Street for the Handing Back ceremony at the Town Hall. The Cornet returns the Flag to the Provost ‘unsullied and unstained’, and displays it one last time from the balcony. As the Cornet lowers the Flag the Saxhorn Band play ‘the Invocation’. At the end of the tune the Cornet re-plants the Flag and the Big Four say their last farewells to it and the crowd, the Left-Hand Man and then the Acting Father being last to leave the balcony. After this the men are usually carried shoulder-high to the Tower to dance the Reel again. The ‘Greetin Denner’ has been traditionally held on the Saturday evening and the Principals usually visit the Shows, or in recent years go back to the Moor to see the live bands. It is unclear how far back the Saturday traditions go, with the first clear record being in 1744 when it was written that the Cornet was ‘to go to the moss on Saturday yr. after’. In older times the Saturday proceeded similarly to the Friday, with the Races and Games at the Haugh (with the Dinner between), but with a shorter programme. There was also a more formal Dinner on the Saturday, and the formal end of the Common Riding was the Kirking ceremony, which happened on the Sunday afterwards. The Drums and Fifes first took part in the Saturday procession from 1889. The tradition of riding the boundaries of the newly acquired Wilton Lodge estate was begun in 1890, but in 1892 was replaced with a visit to the Lodge. The Drums and Fifes and Burgh Officer were first involved in the Saturday procession from 1890.

Shairp (sharp) n. (Sharp) Adam (17th C.) cottar at Ruteltonfoot in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was ‘deficient’ in paying the tax, and his entry reads ‘to Ingland’. James (18th/19th C.) stocking-frame maker of the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. It is said that he expressed skepticism that the ‘double-decker’ design of James Hogg (of ‘Teribus’ fame) would be possible to build. James (b.1814/5) from Coldingham, he was a hand-loom weaver, living at about No. 2 Buccleuch Street and then Drumlanrig Square. His wife was Mary Ann, and their children included Robert, William, Walter, James, Isabella, John, Jane, Elizabeth and George. His wife ran a grocer’s shop according to the 1851 census, but it is his name that appears as a Teviot Square shopkeeper in Slater’s 1852 directory. By 1861 he is listed as a grocer and spirit dealer at 1 Fore Row. John (d.1767) tenant farmer at Mackside. His only son was William (b.1749).

John (b.c.1810) from England, he was a joiner in Hawick in the mid-19th century. In 1851 he was recorded on O’Connell Street as a ‘Stocking Frame Smith’ and in 1861 at No. 8 as a ‘Broker’ (possibly meaning a pawn broker, i.e. dealer in second-hand goods). His wife was Isabella and their children included James, Charles, Janet and Mary Ann. He could be the ‘John Sharp, junior, Melgund Place’ who in 1857 donated to the Archaeological Society old spurs found at Rubberslaw. Thomas (16th C.) tenant in Swinside Mill, listed among men complained about by the English Warden for a raid into England in 1587. John Scott ‘the Tinckler’ led a group of what was claimed to be 500 men on a day-long foray. Rev. Thomas (d.1791) licensed by the Presbytery of Linlithgow in 1778, he became minister at Ettrick in 1781 and was translated to Hawick Parish in 1784, before moving again to Corstorphine in 1789. He once fought off thieves who tried to steal the communion cups from his bedroom in the Old Manse. He is believed to have started one of the first Sunday Schools in Scotland at about the same time as Samuel Charters in Wilton (as mentioned in the British Chronicle or Union Gazette for 1786, although no names are given). He is said to have left Hawick on account of being unable to govern the people; however, he appears to have fared little better in Corstophine, where he was ‘accustomed to avow, there, that heloved even a dog if it came from Hawick’. He paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1785. He married Alison Russell of Ashiestiel, and they had 4 children. Vivian ‘Viv’ (1935–2012) born and bred in Hawick, he was named after Cornet Vivian Grieve and lived at 4 different houses on Dickson Street. He was an apprentice at Watson’s, but became a plumber by trade. He served with the K.O.S.B. in Malaysia in the 1950s. He was a player, past President and Life Member of the Linden. He took up public singing only after a Burns Club singing competition in the late 1970s. But he soon became a fixture at the Common Riding, club dinners and wherever there was a sing-song. He re-released a CD ‘Naturally Sharp’ in 2001 and another with Drew Gibb. His regular party piece was ‘I Like Auld Hawick the Best’, which he sang annually at the end of the Thursday morning Hut. He married Betty and had children Lorraine, Michael and Natalie – ‘Than ma freend Viv Shairp, few singers ir greater, Hei works for Grieve’s as a plumber and slater’ [IWL]. Walter (18th/19th C.) gamekeeper at Riddell in 1797, when he was working for Sir John Riddell. William of Hartsgarth (b.1749) only son of John, who was tenant at Mackside. He was also tenant at Mackside. In 1767 he purchased the lands of Weens from David Cleghorn. However, he sold the estate to William Oliver of Dinalbyre in 1773, and at the same time purchased from Oliver the lands of Hartsgarth and Langhaugh. He was ‘William Sharp, Esq; Harts-garth’ on the subscription list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784 and in 1786 he subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author. He is recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls in 1785–89. He was recorded as owner of Hartsgarth and Langhaugh in the 1788 county valuation and the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, the lands being valued at £466 13s 4d. He married Jean, daughter of Robert Elliot, farmer in Hermitage. Their children included: Ann (b.1772); and John (b.1783). William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Dykeraw in Castleton Parish, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. William (19th C.) tobacconist, son of James and Janet Clark. He took over James Rutherford’s business at 60 High Street in 1899 and ran it for 38 years.

Shaw (shaw) n. Maj. George Boyd ‘Tarry’ (1917–2004) born in Glasgow, he attended Hawick High School and then worked in Hawick’s woollen mills. He enlisted in the Scots Grey’s in 1934, and quickly became known as a brilliant horseman. He was promoted to quartermaster, then Sergeant Major. He saw active service in the Middle East, Italy, France, the Netherlands and on into Germany. After the War he was quartermaster sergeant, and helped prepare horses for the winning British team at the 1952 Olympics. He retired in 1967, having served as Regimental Sergeant Major in several overseas postings. He was also the last rough rider in the regiment, being the only man who could tame the wildest horses. He married Nancy Cressey and they had 3 sons and 2 daughters. Jane nee Hunter (19th/20th C.) daughter of commission agent James Hunter, she married printer William Clegg. She kept a china shop up a few steps at 5 Silver Street (which had previously been the Post Office and then Mungo Wilson’s). She later moved to 68 High Street. Joseph (19th C.) Hawick innkeeper listed on the 1837 electoral roll, and listed as a vintner on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He could be the Joseph listed as a weaver at about 30 High Street in 1841. Probably the same Joseph was on the subscribers’ list for Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Lady (17th C.) recorded at Hyndhaughhead in Southdean Parish on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. She paid tax for having 2 hearths. It is unclear who she was. Rev. Robert ‘Robbie’ (1780–1853) youngest son of George, minister of Abbotsford, and brother of the minister of Langholm. He was born at Abbotsford in Fife. He studied at the United College in St. Andrews and was licensed to preach by St. Andrews Presbytery in 1802. In 1804 he was appointed preacher at Teviothead ‘chapel-of-ease’ and was ordained there in 1807. In 1816 he was translated to Erwes Kirk, where he was presented by Charles, Duke of Buccleuch and became assistant and successor to John Laurie (son of the minister of Hawick). He wrote an account of that parish in 1835, including a discussion of Moss-paul. In 1818 he married Mary, daughter of William H. Moncrieff, minister of Annan (and brother of David Moncrieff of Hawick). Their children were: George (b.1819), farmer at Dinlees; Jane (b.1820); Margaret (b.1825); William (b.1827); Ann Janet (b.1831); Marion (b.1837); and Helen Mary (b.1839). T. (17th C.) probably a local heritor or perhaps a factor of the Douglasses of Cavers. He was ‘T. Shaw of Cavers’ in 1641 when he was one of the Roxburghshire men who signed a letter to the Privy Council relating to the raising of levies for sending troops to Ireland. His signature also appears on the existing 1638 Covenant of Minigaff (along with Douglas of Cavers). Thomas, K.C. ‘Tammy’ (1850–1937) son of a Dunfermline baker, he went to Edinburgh University and trained as a lawyer. A gifted orator, he entered politics, becoming M.P. for the Hawick Burghs in 1892, defeating Robert Fraser Watson. He won a by-election in 1894 and held the seat until 1909. He was made was Solicitor General of Scotland and Lord Advocate of Scotland, became Lord Shaw of Dunfermline and ended as Lord Craigmyle. He was also responsible for advising Andrew Carnegie on disposing of £20 million on causes within Scotland, including the Carnegie Trust for the Universities of Scotland. He was a Liberal, with strong views on home-rule, the South African War and law reform. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1904 on the opening of the new Public Library in Hawick. He made the presentation of Tom Scott’s ‘Return from Horns hole’ at the 1898 Colour Bussing. He served in a judicial capacity in the House of Lords and the Privy Council until 1929, although without any obvious distinction. He also served on many commissions and public inquiries. He published two unconventional autobiographies, ‘Letters to Isabel’ (1921) and ‘The Other Bundle’ (1927), as well as legal works, biographies and 2 plays in verse. He was succeeded as 2nd Baron Craigmyle by his son Alexander. Rev. William Berry ‘Willie’ (1775/6–1856) eldest son of George, minister at Abbotshall, he studied at St. Andrews University and was licensed to preach in 1799. His brother ‘Robbie’ was minister at Teviothead and then Ewes. At St. Andrews he shared a room with Thomas Chalmers, who became leader of the Free Kirk Disruption. He acted as assistant to Rev. Thomas Elliot at Cavers in 1801 and later in that year was ordained as assistant minister and successor to Roberton. However, he committed in 1812 when he became the new minister at Langholm. During the intervening period he assisted the previous minister, James Hay, who had retired for his health, but recovered and took up his duties again in 1812. He remained at Langholm until his death. He was an anti-Reformist, in 1817 calling those from Langholm who wrote a Reformist petition ‘idle, profligate miscreants’. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Eliza, youngest daughter of Henry Scott of Deloraine in 1813; she was the ‘Bonnie lass of Deloraine’ in a poem of the Ettrick Shepherd’s, and along with her sister Margaret, they were the prototypes for ‘Minna’ and ‘Brenda’ in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘The Pirate’. Their children were George, William, Henry, Margaret, Jane and Elizabeth. He wrote ‘Five Single Sermons’ (published in Hawick, 1810), ‘Sermons, Doctrinal and Practical’ (1859) and a sermon in Gillan’s ‘Scottish Pulpit’. It is said that when he signed the Confession of Faith he added a flourish which looked like ‘E.E.’ perhaps meaning ‘erribus exceptis’ (‘excepting errors’). William ‘Bill’ (b.c.1805) son of weaver Bill, he was a printer in Hawick. He married Jane Young, daughter of commission agent James Hunter. Their children included: Ella Young (b.1870); and William Clegg (b.1835) son of weaver Bill, he was a printer in Hawick. He married Jane Young, daughter of commission agent James Hunter. Their children included: Ella Young (b.1870); and William Clegg (b.1871).

Shawbrae (straw-brä) n. former name for lands in Ashkirk Parish that were part of Dryden and Clews farms. It is probably associated with the modern Shaw Hill. ‘Longhaugh and Strawbrae’ [sic] is listed in 1780 among the lands whose lifierent had been given to Dr. William Elliot, with ‘the Shawbrae pasture-ground’ recorded as part of the boundary of Elliot’s lands.

Shawburn (shaw-burn) n. farm near the stream of the same name in Lilliesleaf Parish. T. Jeffery was farmer there in 1868 – ‘And whiles we’ve dauntered up the glen Where flowers nod by Shawburn, And where the blossoms grow sae white On many an ancient thorn’[FL].

Shaw Burn (shaw-burn) n. stream in Southdean Parish, running past Lethem to join the Jed Water. Near the head of the stream is a linear earthwork, probably a boundary ditch. The stream passes ‘Wattie’s Spindles’ and Hilly Linn. On the west side of its lower stretches are the remains of a small building on a terrace.

Shaw Craigs (shaw-krägz) n. rocky hill on the boundary between Southdean and Jedburgh Parishes, just north of Lethem. It reaches a height of 300 m and is topped with a triangulation pillar. It also contains the remains of a fort and settlement, now within a clearing of the forest. It may be of early Iron Age date, with later construction phases, since it consists of different walls and ramparts, covering about 90 m by 50 m.
shawn (shawn) pp., poet. shown – ‘...his rich-teousniss he heth opinlie shawn in the sicht o’ the heathin’ [HSR].

Shaws (shawz) n. former name for lands near Hawick. It is listed among the Baron’s lands in Hawick in 1615. It is also listed in the 1627 valuation of the lands in Hawick Parish, between Weensland and ‘Trowhauch’ in the list, and hence probably somewhere in that area. It is described as ‘three lands callit the Schawis’ and ‘paying presentlie 12 bolls; estimat to 8 bolls in stok and 2 bolls in teyd’ annually (it is ‘Schawis’ in 1615).

Shaws (shawz) n. area around Shaws Under Loch, south of Shaw’s Hill, between the Et-trick and Ale valleys, once a farm owned by the Waughes. This may be the Shaws held by Walter Scott (along with Berrybush) in 1513. It may be the ‘Schawis’ tenanted by the Laird of Cranston in 1541, valued at £10 and ‘in rental’ £22. It is possible this was the ‘three merk land of Shaws’ granted to William Scott of Horsleyhill in 1653.
It was owned by John Ker in 1678 and by Charles Scott of Woll in 1785, and valued at £204 3s 4d.
A stone cist and bones were discovered here in about 1870, at the nearby ‘Sleepy Knowe’. There are several other local places called ‘Shaws’ (it is ‘Schawis’ in 1513 and 1670).

Shaws (shawz) n. farm to the east of the B6399 where the Roughley Burn meets the Hermitage Water. It is probably ‘Le Schewis’ which in 1428/9 was granted to Archibald Douglas of Cavers by William, Earl of Angus, and ‘le Schawis’ when granted to William Douglas of Cavers in 1470, with sasine given 2 years later.
It was probably the seat of the Elliots called ‘the Shaws’ in the 16th century. In 1541 the tenants was Robert Elliot and the lands were valued at 5 merks. ‘Hob of the Schawis’ (an Elliot) is recorded in 1569. Gavin Elliot of ‘the Schawis’ was there in 1611. Robert Henderson and William Watson were there in 1694. In the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch it was combined with Newlands, the farms together covering 245 acres, bounded by Roughley, Cleuchhead, Toftholm, Netherraw and Millburnholm, and including some land on the west side of the river; the farmhouse seems to be in much the same place as the modern one, and woods are also shown, including young alders, between the farmhouses. In the latter part of the 19th century the tenant was Mr. Ballantyne and the farm extended all the way to Steele Road. The New Statistical Account reports in 1839 the existence of 2 circular earthworks on the farm (it is ‘lye Schawis’ in 1472, ‘Schawis’ in 1541, 1569 and 1574, ‘the Shaws’ in 1581, ‘ye Schawis’ in 1623 and ‘Shaues’ in 1694; it is marked as ‘Shawis’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map, ‘Shawes’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, ‘Shawes’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and ‘Shaws’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Shaws (shawz) n. former name for lands probably near the head of the Borthwick and Teviot valleys. In 1610 James Douglas of Drumlannrig complained that William Scott of Howpasley and James Gledstains of that Ilk had not paid taxes they owed him on his lands of ‘Ramseclewis, How-paisay and Schawis’. It is unclear precisely where this was.

Shaw’s Brae (shawz-brā) n. slope just to the south-east of where the Roughley Burn meets the Hermitage Water, being essentially a southwestern extension of Arnton Fell.

Shaw’s Bush (shawz-bush) n. name for a strip of plantation on the former Minto estate, south of the old church, and now forming part of the north-eastern boundary of the gold course.

Shaw’s Close (shawz-clōs) n. popular name for a close off the High Street in the mid-19th century, with uncertain position. Presumably someone called Shaw once resided there.

Shawshiel Rig (shaw-sheel-rig) n. ridge in Liddesdale, essentially being the lower south-west part of Arnton Fell, between Newlands and the Steele. There are remains of a turf-walled building and field systems there. It was presumably once the shiel for Shaws farm.

Shaws Plantin (shawz-plawn-tin) n. former name for a plantation to the north of Spittal Tower (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey

Shaws Under Loch (shawz-un-dur-loch) n. small body of water on the Langhope Burn, north of Hellmoor, with the upper loch nearby.

Sheridan (she-rin-din) n. Francis ‘Big Frank’ (1837–1870) probably Hawick’s tallest man. He was a native of County Cavan in Ireland, coming to Hawick as a young man. He grew to a height of 7 feet 8 inches, having a 52 inch chest and weighing 22 stone, but also had health problems. He worked as a labourer and as a stockmaker, and apparently refused to go on a travelling show when asked. In 1861 he is recorded as a frame-worker, living on Mather’s Close with his sister Bridget, their mother Helen and step-father Patrick McCart. He was for a while landlord of the Irish Harp pub in Baker Street. His coffin apparently had to be taken out of the window into Baker Street, because it was too large for the stairs, and his funeral was said to be about the best attended in Hawick up until that time. He is buried in the Wellogate and his walking stick is in the Museum.

sherp (sherp) adj. sharp – ‘he was awa it the sharp end o’ the argiments’, ‘yer tongue’s that sharp, ec’ll cut yersel’, ‘Thy arras ar sherp in the hait o’ the King’s enemies ...’ [HSR], ‘Thy tung deiveses mischeef: like ane sherp razor wurkin’ deceitfulie’ [HSR], ‘That lean yin, strecht an’ sherp’s a knife, Let cauld ambition rule his life ...’ [WP] (cf. shairrp).

sherp-in (sherp-in) v. to sharpen – ‘Gif he turrna, he will sherp his sword ...’ [HSR] (cf. shairpren).

sherp-in-ee, -i’ pp., poet. sharpened – ‘Thaye hae sherpinin their tungs like ane serpint ...’ [HSR].

sherp-ly (sherp-lee) adv. sharply.

Sherwinlaw (sher-win-law) n. hill and place name somewhere near Jedburgh. It is ‘Schorwinglen’ in a charter for Jedburgh Abbey in the time of King David, and ‘Xernwingeslawe’ in a confirming charter of Earl Henry. Later Christina, wife of Gervase Riddell, gave a third of her lands of ‘Hernwingslawe’ to the monks of Jedburgh. ‘Sire Watier de Sherwynclawe’ swore fealty to Edward I in 1296; the same man was ‘de Sherewyndelawe’ when he had his lands restored later in 1296. It is possible that this is the same place as Shirenschleuch near Bellendean, but it is more likely it is an ancient form of Mervinslaw. Sir ‘Joceto de Scherwynlaw’ was witness to a charter relating to Kelso Abbey in about 1328 (recorded as early as the mid-12th century, the origin may be from Old English ‘seorof’, meaning ‘steep slope’, plus ‘wynd’, or from the local dialect ‘shirrow’, meaning ‘field mouse’).

Sherwood (sheer-wood) n. Andrew Godfrey Purvis (1950–) born in Kenya, he studied violin and composition at the Royal College of Music. He became Professor of Violin at Trinity Laban Conservatoire of Music and Dance. He has been principal conductor for the European Youth Summer Music, Director of the Brighton Youth Orchestra, Musical Director of the Musicians of All Saints, Director of Music and Choirs at the University of Brighton and Conductor of Somerset County Youth Orchestra. He married Mary Helen Hepburne-Scott and they live near Lilliesleaf. He wrote a piece called ‘Heart of Hawick’ to celebrate the opening of the new centre in 2008. He has also been involved in reviving pieces by local composers, particularly Francis George Scott and Sir John Blackwood McEwen.

shew (shoo, syoo) v., arch. to sew – ‘Yince in a day the maist o this weith-seem was shewed be hand’ [ECS], ‘...Quoth she, ‘Oh get a pair o’
a sew, stitching (note these older pronunciations; also spelled 'shue' etc.).

shewin (shoo-win) pp., arch. shown, exhibited, displayed as proof – '...ane Act extract be... clerks of our Judiciary, under his subscription manuallie, shewin and producit befor the saidis Lordis...'[SB1500] (also written 'schewin').

shiel (sheel) n., arch. a temporary hut or other rough building used by shepherds – 'Weel Nature accords wi' the sorrow I feel, As I gaze on the site o' my grandfather's shiel' [DA], (also shielin; it survives in the names of many steadings and other place names; Adderstoneshiel, Hawick Shiel, Henslawshiels, Ropelawshiels, Shiel Burn, Shiel Cleuch, Shiel Rig, Shiel Sike, Shielwoods).

Shiel (sheel) n., Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Margaret Goodfellow and their son Thomas was born in Hawick Parish in 1656. William (b.1647) is probably his son. The James born in 1650 to Adam and 'Janet goodfalow' may also be his son. Agnes (17th C.) recorded as tenants in Lustruther in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. Alexander (15th C.) witness to a 1479 sasine for the lands of Wolfelee for the Homes of Wedderburn, where he is 'Schevile'. He is probably related to David. Andrew (15th/16th C.) tenant somewhere in the Rule valley, listed in the 1516 remission for several Turnbulls and others for providing assistance to Alexander, Lord Home in plotting against the King. His brother William and son John are also listed, their surname being recorded as 'Schewill'. David in 'Hop-piston' and David in 'Langraw' are also listed. He could be the same Andrew, 'alias Dand', who was listed in 1502 along with David, being among Turnbulls and others called to answer for the murder of Robert Oliver; George Turnbull of Hallrule was fined for his non-appearance and he was declared a fugitive and his goods forfeited. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Davids from Rulewater. David (15th/16th C.) tenant at 'Hop-piston', recorded in the 1516 remission for many Turnbulls for assisting the traitorous Homes. The lands he farmed were in Rulewater, possibly Hobburn. David (15th/16th C.) tenant at Langraw in 1516, when he was listed among many Turnbulls for any role in assisting Alexander, Lord Home. He was probably related to the other Shiels who were listed there. David (16th C.) tenant in Fodderlee. In 1567 he was listed among men on lands under the superiority of Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst who was ordered to present to crimes against Englishmen. David (16th C.) recorded as 'younger in Langraw' in 1567. He was among men who Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present to answer charges of raiding into England. David in Fodderlee was also listed and probably related. David (18th C.) listed as house servant at Borthwickbrae in 1791, when he was working for John Elliot. David (b.1826/7) grocer and spirit dealer on Mather's Close on the 1861 census. His wife was Jessie and their children included James, Walter, George, Margaret and Agnes E. Edward (16th/17th C.) tenant at Langhaugh in Rulewater, recorded in 1605. George (17th C.) recorded paying tax on £52 for Langraw on the 1663 and 1678 Land Tax Rolls for Hobkirk Parish. Probably the same George in Langraw had his will recorded in 1688. Perhaps he is the ‘George Scheel’ who died in 1691 and was buried in Hobkirk Parish, his gravestone bearing a tailor’s ‘goose’ and pair of shears, indicating that he was a tailor. He is surely related to Lyle, who was at Langraw in 1643. He is probably the George, part of whose lands (along with ‘Boston’s half of Kirk-know’) were listed among the possessions of Elliot of Wolfelee in 1788, and valued at £22 15s. George (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He married Ann Pott (or Potts) and their children included Adam (b.1774), James (b.1776), Janet (b.1778) and Janet (again, b.1780). Gilbert (15th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. He was ‘Gilbertus schevil in bethroul’ and was fined for non-appearance, with his surety being his wife (whose name is not given). He was separately listed when he had remission for several crimes, including: burning Minto; being a supporter of Alexander, Duke of Albany; stealing many sheep from Minto Craigned and from several different people in Bedrule; stealing an ox from Fulton; and stealing 40 silver shillings and a stone of butter. His surety for these entries was the Laird of Bedrule. In 1494/5 he was again listed being ‘in bethroule’ among a group of 8 Olivers who had remission for communing with the English. He may be the same man as ‘Gilbert Schell’ who witnessed a sasine for Wolfelee in 1469. Hector (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1502. Along with the Laird of Bedrule he had remission for stealing 9 sheep from Matthew Dodd out of Dolphinston. His surety was George Turnbull in Hallrule. Hector (17th C.) captured along with George of the Bog and presented for trial by Robert, Lord Maxwell, Warden of the West Marches. They were accused of murdering James Paterson and William Gleghorn in Langlandhill and for raids on Peebles and Tweeddale as well as on the Captain of Edinburgh at Catslack in Ettrick Forest. He was probably executed along with George of the Bog. Hector (17th C.) son of John, tenant of Kirknowe in Hobkirk Parish. In 1621, along with his father, he was pronounced as a rebel for cutting ‘greenwood’ in the woods of William, Lord Cra unstoun. In 1618 he and Jenet Sinclair (who had remarried the minister of Hobkirk, Rev. Thomas Thomson) and her son Andrew Brydon had a ‘wadset’ for the 2 acres of land in the Kirkhaugh beside Hobkirk Kirk. This was with the consent of Bessie Turnbull, who may therefore have been his wife. Hector (17th C.) cottar at Newton in Hassendean Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Hector (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His children included James (b.1701) and Thomas (b.1704). He could be the Hector who married Margaret Young in Robertson Parish in 1687. Hugh ‘Hog’ (15th/16th C.) tenant in Hobsburn, recorded at the 1494/5 Justice-aire held in Jedburgh. The Sheriff of Roxburghshire was fined for his non-appearance, although his crimes were not specified; his name is given as ‘hoigis schevil’. Probably the same man was recorded as ‘lugone schewill alias hoge’ in 1502 at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, among many men said to be guilty of the murder of Robert Oliver. George Turnbull of Hallrule was fined for him failing to appear and he was declared as a fugitive. He was probably related to Andrew and David who are also listed. James (16th C.) tenant in Sir Walter Scott of Bruxholme’s farm at Blackgrain (in the Yarrow valley) according to his last testament of 1574. An inventory of the cattle there is provided in the testament. James (d.c.1694) tenant of Southdean Mill. He was witness to the baptism of a daughter of John Ker of Shaw in Southdean Kirk in 1681. His will is recorded in 1694. James (17th C.) farmer in Hassendean Parish. In 1686, along with his son John, he rented the lands of Knowe from William Scott. He was recorded in Hassendeanburn in 1694 and his son John may be the resident of Midshiels at that time. He could be the James ‘in Knowhead’ whose will is recorded in 1689. James of Langraw (17th C.) witnessed a sasine for Hobsburn in 1693. Also in 1693 he is the James ‘called of Tour, indweller’ at Langraw who witnessed a sasine between Gilbert Elliott of Stonedge and Sir John Pringle of Stichell. James (17th C.) ‘porterion of Langraw’ recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hobkirk Parish. He was probably related to George, recorded in Langraw in 1688. James (17th C.) resident at Boosmill in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he paid tax on 2 hearths. James (18th C.) married to Ann Pott. Their son James was baptised in 1778 in Hawick Parish. James (b.1770/1) born in Eckford Parish, he was farmer at Hassendean. He is recorded there in 1841 and in 1851 was farmer of 1,000 acres, employing 11 labourers. His wife was Helen, and their children included James, Andrew (who continued with the farm) and John

James (1776–1858) weaver of West Port who was one of the founders of the Relief Kirk in Hawick. In 1841 he was living at about No. 3 Loan. He married Agnes Elliot and their children included: George (b.1807); Margaret (b.1809), who probably married Burgh Officer Jamie Smith; Ann (b.1812); Thomas (b.1814); James (b.1821); John; and David. He had twin sons who died in 1819. James (18th/19th C.) horsedealer of Hawick. He is recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He could be the carter whose unnamed child died in Hawick in 1808. James (b.c.1795) farmer at Greembraheads. He is recorded there in 1841, along with his brothers John and Robert, and their mother Janet. He was probably son of Robert, recorded there in 1797. By 1861 he was farmer at Little Whitlaw, unmarried and living with his brother John and sister Janet. He was still recorded at Little Whitlaw in 1868. James (18th/19th C.) son of Thomas. He married Margaret Common, who died at Southdean Schoolhouse in 1868, aged 90. Their children included: Thomas (1808–56), Schoolmaster in Hobkirk; and Mary (b.1816/7), who married Neil Taylor, schoolmaster at Southdean. John (b.c.1810), who was living with Thomas and Mary at Hobkirk Schoolhouse in 1841, was probably also his son. He died at the age of 47 and is buried at Borthwick Waas, along with his wife and parents. James (b.1805/6) innkeeper of the Coach & Horses at the Tower Knowe. He is listed on Silver Street in 1851 and on Teviot Square in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1861 he was a grocer at 30 High Street. His wife was Janet, and she died before 1861. Their children included Janet and Isabella. James (19th C.) listed as Clerk of the Course at the Common Riding Races of 1873. He is probably the same as one of the contemporary Jameses. James (b.1830/1) born in Oxnam Parish, he was farmer at Hassendean. In 1861 he was farming there jointly with his uncles Andrew and John. James (d.1919) born in the West End, he became Registrar, Inspector of the Poor and Clerk of the Burial Ground for Wilton Parish in the latter part of the 19th century. He was the first Registrar of Wilton, following the Registration Act of 1854. His full time job was as foreman in one of the factories at Damside. In 1861 he is listed as Inspector of Poor & Registrar on Albion Place. His later office (and probably house) was at 2 Laing Terrace. He was also later Clerk and Treasurer of Hawick Combination Poorhouse. Probably the same James was a singer at the Colour Bussing and similar events. His wife was Helen and their children included James, Andrew and Janet Helen. James (19th C.) proprietor of the West End Bar in the latter part of the 19th century. A stone bottle labelled with his name is in the Museum. He may be the Mr. Shiel who lived in the new house built at the foot of the Loan (and by the entrance to the Poorhouse) about 1879. John (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance. He was recorded as son of ‘tassy’, although it is unclear if this was a forename or a nickname. He was again cited for non-appearance in 1494/5. John (16th C.) servant of Robert Elliot and brother of Steven. He is recorded as ‘John Shevell his man’ in a list of men accused in 1590 of stealing livestock from Middleton Hall in England in 1589. He was named along with ‘Gib Elliott son to Robin’, John Noble (another servant of Robert Elliot) and other Elliot and Croziers. He was also listed along with Steven, and Elliot of the Steele, the Park, Binks, and others, who were complained about in 1590 for a raid into England. Probably the same ‘Jock Sheile’ is accused along with Steven in another case of stealing from Sir John Forster’s tenants in ‘Cowperhaugh’. Probably the same Jock, along with Steven, Jenkin Nixon and Will Elliot of the Steele, was accused in 1590 of stealing from Roland Walker. Additionally he was probably the John, named along with Steven, among Elliot, Nixons and others who in 1590 were accused by the tenants of Woodhall of stealing from them, and the John, named along with Steven and several Elliot accused of having raided Dotland a couple of years earlier. He was listed explicitly as ‘Jock Sheill Robin Elliott’s man’ in another case of 1590, with his brother Steven, Jenkin Nixon and Will Elliot of the Steele, was accused in 1590 of stealing from Roland Walker. Additionally he was probably the John, named along with Steven, among Elliot, Nixons and others who in 1590 were accused by the tenants of Woodhall of stealing from them, and the John, named along with Steven and several Elliot accused of having raided Dotland a couple of years earlier. He was listed explicitly as ‘Jock Sheill Robin Elliott’s man’ in another case of 1590, with his brother Steven, Jenkin Nixon and Will Elliot of the Steele, was accused in 1590 of stealing from Roland Walker. Additionally he was probably the John, named along with Steven, among Elliot, Nixons and others who in 1590 were accused by the tenants of Woodhall of stealing from them, and the John, named along with Steven and several Elliot accused of having raided Dotland a couple of years earlier. His son was Hector. Either the same John or his father was recorded as ‘John Schewill in Kirknow’ in 1610 in an inquest for the succession to Appotside and Tythecouse. They were surely related to Walter of Kirknew who was recorded in 1643. John (17th C.) tenant in Boosmill. Along with his brother (whose first name is not given) he was declared a fugitive in 1684 for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. John (17th C.) tenant in Gatehousecote listed in 1684 among men proclaimed as rebels for being Covenanters. John (17th C.) resident of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. John (17th C.) resident at Midshiels according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) resident at Swinnie according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to Thomas who was also listed there. John (18th C.) farmer at Kirknew who was a significant Hobkirk parishioner in the early 1700s. The land of Kirknewe was in possession of the Shiels from before the Reformation. The part that he held was formerly called Hobkirk-style or just Kirkstyle. He held it from at least 1718. His only daughter was Janet, who married Richard, son of John Mair. He left his lands to his grandson, John Stephenson, according to a settlement dated 1749 and ratified in 1759. John (18th/19th C.) recorded as miller at Weensland Mill in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. John (b.1805/6) born in Jedburgh, he was farmer at Hassendean, along with his older brother Andrew and nephew James. In 1861 they are jointly recorded as farmers of 250 acres, employing 14 people. John ‘Jocky’ (19th/20th C.) proprietor of a tobacconist and sweet shop at the corner of the Loan and Beaconsfield Terrace. Leon (15th/16th C.) listed as ‘Leonem Schevill’ when he was on the 1517 panel of ‘ retour’ for Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. Lyle (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when he failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493; he appears right after Routledges and Douglasses who were probably local to the Cavers area. He was again recorded in 1494/5, when the Sheriff was once more fined for his non-appearance. Lyle (17th C.) recorded in 1643 as owner of lands in Hobkirk Parish valued at £52. His listed after George Turnbull of Langraw as ‘Lyll Scheill there’. He is surely related to who held the same lands in 1663. Robert (18th C.) farmer at Greenbraeheads in 1797, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. The farmers there in 1841, James, John and Robert, were probably his sons. Rutherford (b.c.1805) farmer at Ulston in Jedburgh Parish. He reported to the inquest in 1837 into election intimidation that there was an attempt to stop him voting in Hawick, and in fact he did not vote. Rutherford (19th/20th C.) bought Midshieles from Turnbull of Penwick in 1896. He is probably the man of the same name who donated an adder killed at Hassendean to the Museum in 1863. Steven (16th C.) recorded in 1590 among Elliots of the Steele, the Park, Binks, and others, when complained about for a raid into England. John was also listed and so presumably a close relative. In another case he and Jock were accused of stealing from Sir John Forster’s tenants in ‘Cowperhaugh’. He was further accused in 1590, along with Jock, Will Elliot of the Steele and Jenkin Nixon of stealing from Roland Walker. Additionally he and John were accused in 1590, along with Elliots, Nixons and others, of stealing from the tenants of Woodhall in England, and the Steven, named along with John and several Elliots accused of having raided Dotland a couple of years earlier. He was listed explicitly as brother of Jock, who was ‘Robin Elliot’s man’ in another case of 1590, along with several Nixons, Croizers and others, accused of stealing from the Wilkinsonsons of ‘Lynbriggs’. Thomas (d.c.1578) recorded as ‘Thomas Schevill’ in 1578/9 when Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and members of his family were asked to appear before the Privy Council to answer for his murder. The others accused of being involved were Sir Thomas’ sons Wat and Thomas, his nephew John and his son-in-law Edward Lorraine. He was presumably a local man, but it is not known where he was from. Thomas (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Thomas Scheill’ in Wauchope in 1605 and ‘Thomas Schewill in Wauchup’ in 1612 when he was witness to a sasine. Rev. Thomas (1630/1–1708) first minister at the newly created Parish of Robertson in 1689. Probably the same ‘Mr. Thomas Shiel’ witnessed a baptism in Hawick Parish (along with Gideon Scott of Outerside) in 1687, suggesting he was already in the area at that time. He was a member of the Assemblies in 1690 and 1692. He was probably the same as the former minister at Kirkbride in Dumfriesshire, who was admitted in 1655, but deprived in 1662. His whereabouts during the time of persecution are unknown, but it seems that he may have settled in the Hawick area and started officiating at Robertson in about 1689. This same minister was restored by Act of Parliament in 1690 and was translated to Sanquhar in 1693, where he remained until his death (as confirmed by a
Shiel

Sanquar Session minute book, starting in 1696 and recording his demise in 1708), and where he is buried. There is a letter dated 1691 from ‘R. Wylie, Wooll, to Tarras’ (i.e. from the minister of Ashkirk to Scott of Harden) saying that he may be kept in the area by offering him Wilton Parish until Roberton is re-erected. There is also an assignation of 1692 in which he requests the stipend from Hassendean to which he claims the right. He was recorded as tenant of the farm of Todshawhaugh, leasing half in 1672 and 1673, all in 1677, until 1693, and being tenant in 1694 along with his son Thomas. It seems likely he was the ‘Mr Thomas Sheill’ who was taxed for having 10 hearths at Lintalee house in 1694 (although why he would have been there at this time is a mystery), as well as being also listed as ‘Mr Tho. Sheill’ when taxed for 3 hearths at Todshawhaugh. The Thomas who married Grizel Dalgleish (daughter of a Westerkirk minister) and had a son Thomas in 1701 was probably his son (since he himself would have been about 70 at the time, and there was no ‘Mr.’ title written). His son William farmed at Todshawhaugh, as clearly stated in a 1696 record. However, there is no documented evidence about his wife and the births of his children. Thomas (17th C.) tenant in Denholm. He is listed in 1684 among men declared as fugitives for religious non-conformity. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Swinnie according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to John who was also listed there. Thomas (17th/18th C.) son of Rev. Thomas, he was tenant at Todshawhill. He was recorded as tenant in 1694, along with his father, the minister. In 1699 he rebuilt the farmhouse there on a more convenient site. He was in arrears for the rent of Todshawhill in 1713–20. In 1728 he was ‘Mr. Shiel in Todja…’ when he witnessed a baptism for Gideon Elliot of Harwood. He is still recorded as the tenant of the farm in 1735. He could be the Thomas of Roberton Parish who married Grizel Dalgleish in Westerkirk Parish in 1701; she was probably daughter of the former minister there, Walter Dalgleish. The couple had a son Thomas who was baptised in Hawick and Robertson Parishes in 1701; one of the witnesses was ‘Mr James Dalgleish’, suggesting his wife’s brother or other near relative was a minister, and it seems likely she was daughter of Walter Dalgleish, outed minister of Westerkirk. Other children born to a Thomas in Roberton Parish were Jean (b.1717, to Thomas in Todshawhill), Grisel (b.1719), Elizabeth (b.1721), Rachel (b.1724) and Robert (b.1726); these seem likely to be the same father, although the gap between children is unusual. His servant Isobel Millar married Walter Scoon in 1720. In 1729 he is described as ‘in Todshawhill’ when his son James became a wright’s apprentice in Edinburgh and when his son Robert became a weaver’s apprentice in 1741. He was no longer tenant by 1745. He was also a joint tenant of Linhope with Walter Grieve in 1729. James Grieve, tenant of Branxholme Park describes (in 1821) how he was son of a Dumfriesshire minister, and had a brother who married the sister of the ‘Bonnie Lass o Braxholme’. However, it is possible there were 2 generations confounded here. Thomas (1723/4–1812) buried in Borthwick Waas, his wife died in 1798. Their children included: James, who died aged 47, and whose son Thomas was Schoolmaster in Hobkirk. He may be the Thomas, son of James and Jean Karr who was born in Bowden Parish in 1723. Thomas (18th C.) paid the cart tax in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1791. Thomas (1808–56) son of James and Margaret Common. He was Schoolmaster at Hobkirk Parish School, perhaps just before Mr. Lightbody. He was already teacher there in 1841, living with his mother, brother John and sister Mary. In 1851 he was living with his mother Margaret in the Hobkirk Schoolhouse. He was listed as Hobkirk schoolmaster in Slater’s 1852 directory. After his death his widow and daughter took over the post office at Bonchester Bridge. However, not long afterwards his sister married the schoolmaster at Chesters. Perhaps the same Thomas was schoolmaster at Cogsmill from 1829. Tibbie (1783–1878) innkeeper in the Yarrow valley. When young she had been a servant with the Ettrick Shepherd’s mother. She married Robert Richardson, a molecatcher from Westmorland. They became tenants of a cottage near Chapelhope, at the upper end of the Loch of the Lowes. In 1823, shortly before her husband died, she moved to the coaching inn at the bridge between St. Mary’s Loch and the Loch of the Lowes. The inn became famous as a meeting place for friends of James Hogg, the Ettrick Shepherd, including Sir Walter Scott and Professor John Wilson. She had all her mental faculties intact until her death, aged 95. She had a child who died in infancy, as well as 3 sons (William, who remained at the family home, the other 2 emigrating to Canada) and 3 daughters (including Mrs. Michell, Crosseleugh). Walter of Kirknowe (17th C.) recorded in 1643 as owner of lands in Hobkirk Parish valued at £78. He was surely related to John in Kirknowe, who was recorded earlier. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Abbotrule listed in 1684 among those men proclaimed as fugitives for being Covenanters. William (15th C.) recorded as ‘Willehmm Schewile’ in 1427 when he was on the ‘inquest of retour’ for William Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick from his father. Presumably the same ‘William Schewill’ was on the ‘retour of inquest’ for Ker of Altonburn. William (15th C.) recorded as ‘Willielmo Schevil’ in the period 1456–60 when he was Clerk of the Court for Ettrick Forest and was assigned the farm of Kershope. William (15th/16th C.) witness in 1514 to the baronial sasine for Hawick. He is listed as ‘Willielmo Schewill’. William (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘William Schievill of Fodderlie’ in 1618 when there was a bond in his name, involving Walter Turnbull of Bedrule and George Rutherford, younger in Abbotrule, ‘for two bolls cherittie meal, of the met and measure of Jedburgh’. He may be the same man as the William in Hartshaugh recorded later. William (17th C.) recorded as ‘William Schievill, indweller in Hartishaid’ (probably ‘Hartshaugh’) when he was witness to a disposition of 1630 between Francis Hamilton and Rev. William Weir. His name is transcribed ‘William Schewill’. William (17th C.) tenant in ‘Mossyd’ according to the Register of the Privy Council in 1676. His wife Agnes and daughter Bessie were among others of the Abbotrule area who were imprisoned in the Tolbooth of Edinburgh for attacking the minister, George Baptie. This presumably means that they objected to having an Episcopalian minister in their parish. He was probably related to the husband of Margaret Lorraine (also listed in 1676), who was also a Shiel (perhaps Andrew). It is possible he was the same as William in Mackside. William (17th C.) cottar at Mackside in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (d.bef. 1719) described as ‘writer in Hawick’ when his son Thomas became a skinner’s apprentice in 1719. William (17th/18th C.) innkeeper in Hawick. He was rebuked by the Session in 1716 after the minister saw him ‘coming home and holden on by a man riding behind him for drunkenness’. His ‘servitrix’ Janet Stothart married William Whillans in Hawick in 1714. William (17th/18th C.) farmer at Todshawhaugh. He was brother of the Thomas who farmed at Todshawhaugh, and son of Rev. Thomas. In 1696 when he rented Todshawhaugh he is clearly described as son of the minister Thomas; he appears to have taken over from his brother Thomas about then (since Thomas is listed as farmer in 1694). He is recorded in 1694 when he witnessed a disposition for the Elliots of Rulewater. He was still renting Todshawhaugh in 1698. He was rebuked by Roberton session in 1701 for allowing a ‘mock’ wedding to take place in his house on the Sabbath, between Archibald Scott of Boonraw and Esther Turnbull. He could be the brother of Thomas, farmer at Todshawhill, who is said to have married a sister of the ‘Bonny Lass o’ Branxholme’ (also formerly spelled ‘Scheil’, ‘Scheill’, ‘Schele’, ‘Schevell’, ‘Schevill’, ‘Shevell’, ‘Shiel’, ‘Sheill’, ‘Sheills’, ‘Shevell’, ‘Shevill’, ‘Shield’, ‘Shiell’ and variants and also sometimes written ‘Shiels’, ‘Sheills’, etc.).

Shiel Burn (sheel-burn) n. stream in Liddesdale, rising near Wilson’s Pile and running roughly north-west to join Boghall Burn. It is now entirely within forest. The 1857 Ordnance Survey map marks a small settlement on its banks, of which there is now no sign.

Shiel Cleugh (sheel-klooch) n. small stream in Southdean Parish, whichroft Plantation, between the sites of Slack’s Tower and Northbank Tower, and runs north to meet the Jed Water. There are lines of rig covering about 10 hectares on both sides of the cleugh, and aerial photography has revealed a possible farmstead, now buried in the forest.

Shielden Sike (sheel-sik) n. stream in Liddesdale, just south of Burnmouth farm, between the Kiln Burn and Howden Cleuch. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows a ruined cottage there. Labourer John Lamb was there in 1835 and there were Elliots there in 1841, but it was abandoned before 1851. The area formerly had a fortified house, known as Stripshiel (it is ‘Shelden’ in 1835 and ‘Sheldon’ in 1841).

Shielie’s (shee-leez) n. sweetie shop at the Sandbed in the early-to-mid 20th century – ‘Across the road auld Shielie did us braw For baw-bees we wad ware owre there . . .’ [WL].

shiealin (shee-lin) n., arch. a remote and often crude shelter built for shepherds, remote pasture lands where animals would be driven in the summer – ‘. . .as the sheilins o’ Kedar, as the coortins o’ Solomon’ [HSR], ‘The mirth o’ the glen and the warmth o’ the shieling Are brought to the wynds o’ the grey toun again’ [WL] (also shiel).

Shiel Knowe (sheel-now) n. hill lying south-west of Riccarton Junction and west of Saughtree, reaching a height of 292 m.

Shiellaw (sheel-law) n. former farmstead, close to the present location of Hassendean Common farm (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Shiellaw Plantin (sheel-law-plawn-tin) n. former plantation near Hassendean Common (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Shiel Rig (sheel-rig) n. ridge in Southdean Parish, situated on the right, opposite the turn-off for Lethem. There are the remains of a group of 4 shielings, 5 pens and a stock enclosure there, just to the west of the forest. There is also a 300 m boundary bank to the south-west, near the Carter Burn.

Shiels see Shiel

Shiel Sike (sheel-sik) n. stream in the Borthwick valley, which rises as the Red Cleuch near Redcleuch Edge and Cowbush hill, and joins the Dirthope Burn before running into the Borthwick. There is an old rectangular enclosure on the eastern side and a building marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map.

Shiel’s Lands (sheelz-lawnd) n. former name for lands in Hobkirk Parish. In 1811 ‘Part of Shiel’s Lands, and Boston’s half of Kirk-know’ were valued at £22 1s, among the lands of Cornelius Elliot of Woollee, while the rest was valued at £68 5s and owned by William Oliver of Langraw.

Shielsteeds Hill (sheelz-steedz-hil) n. Shielsteeds Hill, small hill in southern Castleton Parish, just west of Kershope Bridge. It has been suggested that this might be the site of the shielings of Eadulf, which are noted in a 14th century charter confirming a 12th century grant of neighbouring land at Kershope.

Shielswood (sheelsz-wud, -wood) n. Shielswood, area around Shielswood Loch and Shielswood farm, on the Ashkirk to Roberton road. This is the highest part of Ashkirk parish, containing the hills Cringie Law, Threephead, Smasha Hill, Gandiesknowe, Horn Hill, etc. William Turnbull was recorded at ‘scheliswod medow’ when Thomas Lauder of Todrig was accused of stealing from him in 1494/5. The lands there were owned by a branch of the Scott family from the mid-16th century and more recently became part of the estates of the Elliots of Minto. The lands were valued at £260 in 1643 and owned by Walter Scott of Shielswood. It still had the same value according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls, and also in 1678 when it was owned by James Scott. The main house is listed as having 5 hearths in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694, with 3 other tenants on the estate and one poor person. The lands were gained by the Elliots of Minto in the early 18th century. In 1779 the liferent had been given by Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto to Rev. Simon Haldiburton, and it was still valued at £260. It was also described in 1780 as ‘a four merk ten shilling and eight penny land’. William Scott is recorded as shepherd there and William Miller as farmer, on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls (the house there is marked as ‘Sheelswood’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map, Blaeu’s 1654 map and Adair’s c. 1688 map, and is ‘Shiels Wood’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map; it is ‘scheilswood’ in 1494/5, ‘Scheilsiswode’ in 1609, ‘Schelliswoid’ in 1616, ‘Scheilswode’ in 1648, ‘Sheill-wood’ in 1695, ‘Scheilswood’ in 1690, ‘Scheilswood’ in 1692 and ‘Shilsuood’ in 1694).

shift (shift) n., arch. A stratagem, ploy, plan, evasion – ‘The Treasurer informed that some who owed money by Bill to the Session refused or made shift of payment’ [PR1724], livelihood – ‘...for gameing at ye Cards ... that was a sinfull and dishonest shift to get a liveing’ [PR1724], ‘...and the other of them is not so, his wife being valetudinary, and can make no shift for a livelihood’ [PR1725], v., arch. To evade, dodge – ‘The Treasurer made report that the Delinquents shifts the payment of their penalties of fornication’ [PR1724].

shile (shil) v., poet. To pull faces, screw up the face – ‘How brainless dundrums sneer an’ wink, An’ shan’ an’ shile, and leering blink At povertie’ [JoHa].

shilfa (shil-fa) n., arch. The chaffinch, Fringilla coelebs – ‘The twit of the shilfa, Or song of the thrush ... ’ [JJW], ‘The robin wi’ his rosy vest, The wren in russet livery drest, And shilfa frae his cosie nest On the Bank aboon the Boosie’ [DA], ‘Mute and sad is the mavis, for simmer’s awa; And a lilt frae the shilfa I ne’er get ava’ [TCh] (shilifie is more common locally).

shilifie (shil-fee, shel-fee) n. The chaffinch, Fringilla coelebs – ‘The callant at hereect the shilifie’s nest’ [ECS], ‘The shilifie frae the buskit throrn Sing salutations to the simmer’ [DH], ‘...Where shilifie, blackies, linties poure Their offering o’ sang’ [WL], ‘The hedge sparrow trills and the robin pipes, and ‘shillies’ are flitting nearby’ [WFC] (also spelled ‘shelfie’, ‘shilly’, etc.; cf. the less common shilfa).

shiller-shakers (shi-lur-shañ-kurz) n., pl., arch. quaking grass, Briza media (also shillin-shakers).
shillin (shi-lin) n. a pre-decimalisation coin (i.e. from before 1971), worth twelve old pence or one twentieth of a pound, and still used occasionally to mean five new pence – ‘...To send a bottle out o’ fight, Could he command a shillin’ ...’[JR]. The word is also used to indicate the strength of beer, historically indicating the duty payable per barrel – ‘A’ll hev a pint o yer aeghty shillin’.
Additionally it was sometimes used as a unit of weight, representing \( \frac{1}{20} \) of a pound – ‘Item, Gowldilands, neuer payit ferme; estimat to pay 100 lbs. in stok, parsonage 3 bolls, vicarage 7 lbs. 10 sh.’[PR1627].
the shillin (thu-shillin) n., arch. also called the King’s Shilling, this was a token bounty accepted when signing up for the army – ‘Come laddies come, hear the cannons roar, Tak’ the King’s shilling an’ we’re off tae war’[T].
Shillinlaw (shi-lin-law) n. Andrew (b.c.1810) agricultural labourer living at Milsington in 1841. His wife was Helen and their children included Margaret, Mary, Christian, Robert, John and Jane. George (18th C.) recorded as groom and postillion at Burnhead in 1788, when he was working for William Scott.

shinty (shin-tee) n. a Scottish game similar to hockey, also sometimes applied to the version played on ice – ‘And then what fun beyond compare! What joy abune a’ price! We’d pick oor sides and play the game O’ shinty on the ice’[WLu]. It was played in Hawick in the early 19th century.
Shiplaw (ship-lu, -law) n. area around the former cottage of ‘Shiplaw Cross’, near the cattle-grid on the Earlsdie to Hawthornside road. Cars often stop near here to watch the horses cross the road on the Bonchester Ride-out. There is another Shiplaw north of Peebles near Eddleston and Sharplaws outside Jedburgh and near How-nam.
Shiplaw Bog (ship-lu-bog) n. marshy area to the north of Cogsmill school, presumably related to the old chapel near there.
Shiplaw Corse (ship-lu-kors) n. area on the side road between Hawthornside and Earl-side. Also known as ‘Chaipel Cross’, ‘Sheeplaw Cross’ or ‘Shiplaw Cross’, the cottage here was the highest house in Cavers Parish. William Whillans (who had been blacksmith at the Flex) was there in 1725. It was a shepherd’s cottage from about 1780, when the shepherd was John Rutherford, whose descendants were blacksmiths in Bonchester. The cottage was rebuilt in 1826, with the farmer about that time being John Elliot. Later it was occupied by a roadman, and in the mid-19th century the tenant was a Mr. Blake, when visited by Lady Scott of Spottiswood, who made a sketch of it. The house was destroyed by fire in 1902. It can be seen in a photograph of the mid-19th century, and is a late surviving example of country houses of an earlier era. It was a 1-storey thatched dwelling, built of rough, undressed stones, with the holes filled with mud. The walls were about 7 feet high and 3 feet thick. The name survives in the nearby plantation called ‘Chaiplo o Cross Plantation’ (the connection with a ‘cross’ is unclear, however, it is possible there was a wayside cross associated with the chapel at Cogsmill; it is ‘Shyplawcross’ in 1725).

Shipley (ship-lee) n. Frederick (1889–1917) born in Hawick, son of Robert and Jane Fraser. His paternal grandparents were William (who came from England) and Margaret Stevenson, while his maternal grandparents were George Fraser and Mary Ballantyne. He emigrated to Ontario, Canada in 1906, with his mother following the next year. He married in 1912, but his wife died in childbirth in 1914. He enlisted in 1915 and was killed at Vimy Ridge. He is buried at Nine Elms Military Cemetery in France. He was posthumously awarded the Memorial Cross, which in 2007 was bought on E-Bay by the museum in Welland, his adopted home town.

shippit (shi-pee’, pi’) pp. shipped, took ship – ‘A’ shippit again frae Glasc, and now comes the strangest pair o’ the story’ [JEDM].

Shipshieldean (ship-sheel-deen) n. another name for Stripsieldsen, as recorded in a survey of Buccleuch lands in 1718 and marked on Stobie’s 1770 map. In 1718 it was ‘Shipshelden alias Side’, suggesting it was alternatively called Side.

shire (shir) adj., arch. exact, bare – ‘Shire, Shyre. Used in the sense of strait, or S. scrimp; as ‘shire measure’, that sort of measurement which allows not a hair-breadth beyond what mere justice demands, Teviotdale’ [JoJ].

Shirensacleugh (shi-rinz-klooch) n. former farmstead near Bellendean. It is possible that ‘Sire Wautier de Sherwynclawe’ of Roxburghshire, who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296, was an early owner; although this seems more likely to be Mervinslaw, it could have a similar etymology. The farmhouse was demolished when Almoor Reservoir was built. John Scoon was farmer there in 1787 (also written ‘Shyrings Cleuch’, ‘Shirings Cleuch’, etc.; the name may be related to the word ‘shirins’).

shiriff (shi-rif, she-rif) n. a legal officer who sits as judge in a Sheriff Court. Formerly each county had a principle official called the Shiriff, responsible for criminal and administrative matters, with a Sheriff-Depute appointed to perform legal functions. In Roxburghshire the office became a hereditary one with the Douglases of Cavers, and was synonymous with the title ‘Sheriff of Teviotdale’. After such heritable positions were abolished in 1748 the position was replaced with the Shiriff-Principal, assisted by Shiriff-substitutes, who were usually known as simply ‘Sheriffs’, a title they took officially after 1971.

the Shiriff (thu-shi-rif) n. nickname for Robert Oliver in the 16th century.

Shiriff Clerk (shi-rif-klerk) n. clerk appointed to act as secretary to the Sheriff Court, specifically to record the business of the court.

Shiriff Court (shi-rif-kör’, she-rif-kör’) n. local court dealing with non-serious crimes and civil cases, Hawick’s cases being dealt with at the Sheriff Court in Jedburgh. From about 1895 until sometime in the mid-20th century there were weekly Sheriff Courts held in the Town Hall in Hawick.

Shiriff Depute (shi-rif-de-pewt) n. deputy appointed to assist the Sheriff in running the Sheriff Court. In earlier centuries this was usually someone with formal legal training who would help the Sheriff. After the abolition of heritable sheriffships, the ‘Depute’ actually held the office of Sheriff and the term ‘Sheriff Depute’ was synonymous with ‘Sheriff Principal’, with deputies known as ‘Sheriff Substitutes’.

shiriff officer (she-rif-o-fee-surr) n. official of a Sheriff Court, charged with duties such as delivering summonses or seizing goods to pay off debts. In Hawick, before the Police Act of 1861, he was responsible, along with the two Burgh Officers, for maintaining law and order.

Shiriff o Roxburgh (shi-rif-ō-roks-bu-ru) n. hereditary title, synonymous with the Shirifship of Teviotdale, and held for generations by the Douglases of Cavers. This was formally a royal appointment and the holder was the King’s officer in the county. In the earliest times it may only have been a military leader connected with Roxburgh Castle, but later it became an office with administrative and judicial responsibility for the county. The first known ‘vicecomite’ of Roxburgh was Gospatric, mentioned in the founding charter of Selkirk Abbey. Henry Kerr was Sheriff in the 14th century, George Douglas, Earl of Angus, gained the title along with several lands in 1397 and Sir Archibald Douglas acquired the hereditary title by royal charter in 1412. A decree of 1620 abolishing heritable jurisdictions led to William Douglas of Cavers agreeing to part with the Shiriffdom (and teinds from Cavers Kirk) for the sum of £20,000 Scots. But in 1626, when only £4,000 had been paid, he refused to surrender the office, and Parliament agreed he could do so until the full amount was paid. In fact the family held on to the Shiriffdom until the final abolition of such offices in 1747. A roll of the Shiriff o Teviotdale

Sheriffdom is: Gospatric, c.1125; Gervase Riddell, c.1138; Robert, son of Guy, 1147; John, son of Orm, c.1170; Bernard of Hadden, c.1203 and 1227/8; John Maxwell, c.1214 and 1223/4–26; Adam of Bathgathe, 1237/8; Nicholas de Soulis, 1246; Aymer Maxwell, c.1250; Hugh Abernethy, c.1264; Thomas Cavers, c.1265; Thomas Randolph, 1266; Hugh de Pearsby, at least 1285–6; William de Soulis, 1289/90; Walter Tonke, 1296; Sir Robert Herberts, 1296–1307 (English); Sir Ingram de Umfraville, 1302 (Scottish); Sir Robert of Mauley, at least 1305–07 (Scottish); Aymer Valence, c.1310 (English); Sir Henry Baliol, around 1328; Galfrid Mowbray, 1334 (English); Sir Alexander Ramsay, 1342; Henry Ker, 1349; John Copeland, 1350–55; Sir John Templest, c.1360 (English); Alan Struthers, 1368 (English); Lawrence of Govane, 1373; Sir Malcolm Drummond, c.1389; Sir William Stewart, c.1390; George, Earl of Angus, 1397; Sir David Fleming of Biggar, 1405; Archibald Douglas of Cavers, 1412; hereditary title of the Douglases of Cavers until 1747 (also called ‘Sheriff of Roxburghshire’).

Shiriff o Teviotdale (shi-rif-ō-tee-vi’-dāl) n. office for maintaining law and order in Teviotdale, held by Sir Herbert de Maxwell, Alexander Ramsay, then Sir William Douglas, and for generations by Douglas of Cavers, starting with Sir Archibald Douglas from 1412. In earlier times the title usually went along with that of Keeper of Roxburgh Castle, and hence ‘Sheriff of Teviotdale’ and ‘Sheriff of Roxburghshire’ were synonymous. The Sheriff was responsible for raising and commanding the local militia, local defence, collecting taxes and administering justice. This title ended in 1747 when heritable sheriffships were removed by the Crown. Archibald Douglas of Cavers (the 15th Laird) was the last Sheriff.

the Shirra (thu-shi-ra) n. nickname for Sir Walter Scott in and around Selkirk – ‘And when the Shirra settled syne To set the ballads doun . . . ’[WL].

Shirraship (shi-ra-ship) n. the office of Sheriff – ‘. . . Who could frae Douglas wrest and hold The Shirraship o’ Teviotdale’ [AD] (also ‘Sherraship’, etc.).

the Shit Brig (thu-shi’-brig) n. imp. former popular name for the Lawson Bridge, so-called because it was heavily used by workers from the West-end to get to Sime’s, Henderson’s, Innes’ and Turnbull’s mills, which gave the acronyn. Also known in polite circles as ‘This Bridge’.

Shiva (shiv, shIv) n., arch. a slice, especially of bread – ‘. . . shives of wheat bread and butter with a covering of sugar’ [WNK], ‘A sheive o’ curnie-banna’ [ECS], ‘Gie’s a sheive off-o that laif’ [ECS], ‘. . . the man had taken eleven cups of tea and eight ‘shives’ of bread’ [RMM] (also spelled ‘sheive’ and ‘sheiv’).

Shivors (shi-vorz) n. Fr. Patrick (19th/20th C.) priest at S.S. Mary & David’s 1887–92. He set up a Catholic Young Men’s Society (which did not last long) as well as the Children of Mary. He was responsible for the first ‘Mission’ recorded being preached in Hawick, in 1888. He was transferred to Kirkcaldy. He is probably the Canon of the same name who was priest at Denny and died in 1916, aged 59.

shivery bite (shi-vu-ree-bi’) n. something taken to eat when emerging from swimming – ‘. . . with a shivery bite’ tucked away in our towel on the banking for after’ [BB], ‘. . . Chitterin, oor shivery bite oo ate Didni get back hyim till late’ [IWL] (cf. chitterin-bite).

shockit (sho-kee’, -ki’) adj., pp. shocked – ‘They fund his hoose, and there they knockit. ‘Is auld Jock in?’ His wife looked shockit . . . ’ [TD].
shodden (sho-din) pp., arch. shod (past participle form of shu, with the past tense being shuid or ‘shod’).

shoddie (shoo-dee) n., arch. childish name for a baby shoe (noted by G. Watson).

shoemakers (shoo-mā-kurz) n. once one of the 7 incorporated trades in Hawick, which until 1861 had two representatives on the Town Council. They were incorporated before the existing Burgh Records (which go back to 1638). In 1643 they were directed by the Council to ‘try the market’ for the quality of the shoes and the quartermasters are recorded in 1677 examining the shoes at the market, to make sure they were ‘all of sufficient barked leather’. They were in earlier times referred to as ‘cordiners’, although the ‘cordiners’ made a request to form a separate incorporation in 1722; the cordiners were allowed to be a separate Incorporation from those who make single-silled shoes. However, they are not mentioned as separate bodies in later times, and so presumably merged again soon after. In 1747 they were ordered by the Council to turn over their books. In local parades they would sometimes appear attired in the costume of the Ancient Order of St. Crispin, and were described as particularly splendid in the 1832 Reform Bill celebratory parade.

shog (shog) v., arch. to shake, rock, swing from side to side – ‘...some of which made her pouch wagg and shogg’ [BR], ‘Thouch the waters o’ rair, an’ ar troublit; thouch the mountains shog wi’ the swallin’ o’ thame’ [HSR], ‘...thou hast broken it: men’ the gaaps thero’, for it shogs’ [HSR], ‘Boondin bleithely on wui ma airms shugglein lowce threh ma oxters’ [ECS] (sometimes ‘shug’; from Middle English).

Shoreswood (shorz-wood) n. John (17th/18th C.) son of John, with his mother being a Home. In 1693 he was served heir portioner, along with James Dickson and Alexander Morrison, in the Barony of Home, inherited from Jean, daughter of John Home. This included superiority over lands in Hassendean, and explicitly Appletreehall, as well as the lands of Redfordgreen, Drycleuchlea, Huntly and Hartwoodburn. His father was already deceased in 1693. It is unclear what happened to the Barony afterwards.

Short (shor’, shör’) n. Colin Roderick ‘Doddy’ (1942–2010) son of Pipe Major Robert, he was born and bred in Hawick. He was Head Boy at Trinity, then attended the High School and Henderson Tech. He worked for Pringles for 25 years, then started his own business, Shorts of Hawick, making tartan hose for pipe bands. He played pipes with the Boys’ Brigade and then the Hawick Pipe Band, being 2nd Pipe Major and band secretary for decades. He married Helen Greenhill and had children Karen, Kenny, Julie and Allister. James (1818–88) born in Eckford Parish, he was son of John, who farmed at Hartshaugh Mill. He was coachman at Wolfelee Glen in 1851 and coachman at Wauchope Cottage in 1861. He later moved to Jedburgh. In 1846 he married Helen (1823–1911), daughter of William Sibbald; they had 11 children, born in Hobbirk and Southdean Parishes, including: John (b.1846), who died in infancy; John (b.1848) the eldest surviving son, who became head gardener at Hummers Knott, Dalrington; Margaret (b.1849); Euphemia (b.1852), who worked in the hosiery industry in Hawick; Mary (b.1853); Helen (b.1855), who died in infancy; William (b.1858–69); James (b.1860), who died in infancy; James (1863–1905), also a gardener in Yorkshire, died in Hawick; Peter (1865–1921), a telegraph linesman; and Francis (b.1868). John (16th C.) joint owner of a particrate of land (along with Stephen Scott and Janet Liddersdale) on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. He may have been related to Robert. John ‘Jock’ (16th/17th C.) Hawick resident mentioned in a murder trial of 1612. John Elliot was claimed by Elliot’s wife to have been murdered ‘within the said Jok Schortis...” [CM].
duelling hous', but but in fact appears to have hanged himself with his own belt when imprisoned in St. Mary's steeple. This suggests that he was an innkeeper. John (b.c.1775) farmer at Hartshaugh Mill. He is listed as miller at Hartshaugh in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was at Hartshaugh Mill in 1841, but absent by 1851. He married Margaret Davidson and their children (born in Eckford Parish) included: John (b.1808); Francis Davidson (b.1809); Euphan (b.1812); William (b.1817), who married Mary Dalgleish; James (b.1819), who married Helen Sibbald; George (b.1820), who married Rachel Scott; and Adam (b.1822). He could be the John, son of John and Isobel Thomson, born in Kelso Parish in 1779. John Dalgleish (b.1842) farmer at Hartshaugh Mill and later Borthwickbraefoot. He was son of William, also farmer at Hartshaugh Mill and nephew of the John who married Margaret Davidson. In 1861 he was a ploughman, living with his siblings and widowed mother in Chesters. He married Margaret, daughter of Robert Cavers, also from Rulewater. Their children included Mary Euphemia (b.1881) and John (b.1891). Robert (16th C.) owner of 1 particate of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. A piece of land lying between his land and that of John Scott to the east was reserved for Sir James Douglas according to the 1537 Charter. Robert ‘Bob’, M.B.E. (?– ) originally from Thurso, he was a Pipe Major. He formed the Hawick Boys Pipe Band in 1937, leading to the Hawick Pipe Band of today. His wife was Margaret and their son Doddy continued the family piping tradition. Their other children were Robert and Angus. Robert ‘Bert’ (1935–2014) eldest of 3 piping sons of Bob, he started playing from the age of 7. He took first prizes in the Borders B.B. Championships from the age of 12 for 5 years in a row and gave a recital on B.B.C.’s Children’s Hour when he was 12. He did National Service with the Royal Scots, where he joined the pipe band. Returning home, he took over as Pipe Major for the Hawick Pipe Band, leading them through many competitions. He taught piping at summer schools through the Scottish Amateur Music Association and was on the National Council of the Royal Scottish Pipe Band Association. He married Edith and had children Maureen, Aileen and Graham. William (b.1819) son of John, he was born in Eckford Parish. In 1851 he was a corn and meal dealer at 3 Kirk-style in Hobkirk Parish. In 1861 his wife was a widow, farming 25 acres at Hobkirk Glebe in Chesters. In 1845 he married Mary, daughter of John Dalgleish, from Swanshiel. Their children included: John Dalgleish (b.1842); Jane; Margaret; Thomas; and Euphemia (b.1855) (formerly spelled ‘Schort’, ‘Schorte’ etc.).

shortbread (shor'-bread) n. shortbread, baked item made from flour, sugar and butter – ‘A pek of flur bikin short brid and buttor to it, £1 4s’ [1690/HAST1905].

Shortbutts (shor'-buts) n. former name for lands in the territory of Sorbie (probably meaning near Sorbietrees) in Liddesdale. In the late 12th century Race Fitz Malger granted half of the land there to Jedburgh Abbey. In 1541 it is valued at 20 shillings and said to pertain to the Laird of Shortbutts. Along with Flatt it was owned by Francis Robson in 1632 (it was is ‘Scortebutes’ in the late 1100s, ‘Schortbutts’ in 1541 and ‘Schortbus’ in 1632).

the Shorter Catechism (thu-shor'-ur-kaw'-e-ki-zum) n. short form of the question and answer instruction manual, designed to be memorised in order to test parishioners. The short form was the one mostly used, consisting of 107 questions. It was written in the 1640s by English and Scottish clergy, and also referred to as the Westminster Shorter Catechism. Locally it was called ‘the carritch’. Examination was often carried out in the parishioners own houses by the minister, but often in order round a circle, so it was possible to memorize only a subset of the answers.

Shorthope (shor-tup) n. farm in the Ettrick valley, before reaching Kirkhope and Phawhope. In 1557 ‘Auld Hob Scot of Riskynhoup’ paid rent for the lands to Melrose Abbey. In 1609 it was owned by the Scotts of Thirlestane, with tenant Andrew Scott. Robert Scott of Whitslade was served heir to his father’s lands here in 1643. It was still part of the Lordship of Melrose until at least 1670. It was long part of the Buccleuch estates (it is ‘Schorthope’ in 1564 and ‘Schorthoip’ in 1609; ‘Shortup’ is marked on Blaen’s 1654 map).

short-leet (shor'-leet) n. a short list – ‘A deh ken if A’ve got the job, bit A’m on the short-leet’ (this term survives, although the use of ‘leet’ itself seems to have died out).

Shortreed (shor'-reed) n. Andrew (16th C.) listed in the 1526 remission given to a large number of Borders men for an attack upon the Earl of Arran; his son John is also listed. He was also part of an inquest into the disputed lands of Longnewton held in Jedburgh in 1533. Most of the other men listed were local, and so he was probably from the family based near Ashkirk. Probably the same Andrew ‘Shortreid’ in 1532 among the witnesses to a public declaration made in Selkirk by William Scott in Headshaw. In 1536 he was cited by Walter Scott (brother-german of Kerr of Sunderland Hall) for failing to produce Adam Gledstains at the market cross of Selkirk. Andrew (18th/19th C.) married Janet Laidlaw in Wilton in 1804. Bernard (15th C.) tenant in Essenside. In 1494/5 he had remission for theft of sheep from the Murrays of Sundhope. Adam Scott of ‘auldinnis hop’ served as his surety. James (17th/18th C.) recorded as an elder of Wilton Parish in 1711. He may be the James who married Margaret Shiel in 1692. He could be the James who is recorded as resident at Whitehaugh in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (1726–83) eldest son of Robert and Elizabeth Elliott, he was ‘younger of Essenside’. He acquired part of Herriston from George Johnstone in 1758, the lands being valued at £260. He was owner of Easter Essenside in 1759, and sold the lands to Capt. (later Adm.) John Elliot in 1778, with the consent of his wife Helen Currie and the trustees for his creditors: Cornelius Elliott, W.S.; Robert Laidlaw, tenant in Falnash; and Walter Scott of Wauchope. He was struck off the list of freeholders of Roxburghshire in 1780, having lost his lands in the county. He married Ellen Currie and they had a son, Thomas (b.1786). He is probably the same James ‘late of Essenside’ who was buried in old Wilton Kirkyard, his table stone stating that he died in 1783, aged 75; his wife Bella Currie was buried beside him, and died in 1808, aged 84. His wife may have been the ‘Mrs. Shortreed’ recorded as owner of ‘Nethercroft, acquired from Langlands’ according to the 1788 valuation and the 1811 Land Tax Rolls; the farm was valued at £20 and later owned by John James Scott Chisholme of Stirches. John (15th/16th C.) listed in 1526 in the remission for a large number of Borderers who attacked the Earl of Arran’s forces. He was son of Andrew. Robert (16th/17th C.) local tenant recorded in 1628 when he was on a list of men accused by the Earl of Buccleuch of chopping down his trees at Todshawhaugh or Trinithyls. The farm he was connected with is not transcribed. Robert (17th C.) resident of Drinkstone according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Robert of Essenside (b.1695) born in Wilton Parish, he became a Bailie and lawyer in Ashkirk Parish. He may have been son of James and Margaret Shiel. He is probably the Robert who paid the window tax at ‘woolie’ in Southdean Parish in 1748 (presumably he lived there temporarily). He acted as attorney for Walter Scott of Leith when he gained the lands of Wauchope in 1750. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. In 1725 he married Elizabeth (‘Bessie’), daughter of Thomas Elliot of Oakwood Mill and sister of William Elliot, 1st Laird of Wolflee. His eldest son was James and another son was farmer Thomas. He may have been father of Margaret (b.c.1735) who married William Elliot of Whithaugh. His sister Agnes may have married his brother-in-law Andrew. Robert ‘Bob’ (1762–1829) born in Southdean Parish, eldest son of farmer Thomas and Ann Maria Kerr of the Abbotrule family. He became Sheriff-Substitute for Roxburghshire. He had musical talent and collected local songs and legends. He was a friend of Sir Walter Scott, accompanying him on several trips in the Liddesdale area, gathering ballads etc. He paid the Horse Tax in Jedburgh in the 1790s. He represented Weens on the Hobkirk Parish heritors council in 1803. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was a founder member of the Jedforest Club and was the 2nd Honorary Secretary. He built a house in Jedburgh, which was later British Linen Bank house. His sister Mary married William Aitchison and helped him run the Cross Keys Inn at 11 Sandbed. He was Substitute to Sheriff William Oliver, who wrote some doggerel verse about him – ‘From chattering women all refrain, Let silence universal reign, While thro’ the world I proclaim A friend in need is Bob Shortreed’. He married Margaret, 3rd daughter of Jedburgh lawyer James Fair. He had 2 infant children buried in Jedburgh Abbey churchyard in 1802. His other children included: Thomas, who also helped Sir Walter Scott, and followed his father as Secretary of the Jedforest Club; John Elliot, bank manager in Wexford; Capt. William of the Bengal service of the East India Company; James Elliot, who succeeded his uncle to the Langlee estate and took the additional name of Fair; Col. Pringle of the Bengal Native Infantry; and Robert, tenant of Attonburn. Simon (d.1550) Vicar at Ashkirk, who was succeeded by James Ker. He could be the ‘Simon Shortreid’ listed as a priest who witnessed an announcement by ‘Walter Scot in Edschaw’ in Selkirk in 1532. Thomas (1733–98) farmer at Easter Essenside. He was son of Robert and Elizabeth, who was daughter of Thomas Elliot of Oakwood Mill (ancestor of the Elliots of Borthwickbrae and Wolfelee). He also farmed at

Wolfelee, Hyndlee, Lustruther and Jedhead, being one of the most extensive farmers in the Jedforest. However, he was financially ruined following the American War, and it is said the worry from this shortened his life. He was also said to have been the last man to carry out a Border raid, this after some English thieves had carried off some of his sheep; instead of appealing to the courts he crossed the Border and brought back his livestock, like had happened in earlier centuries. In 1757 he married Ann Maria, daughter of William Kerr of Abbotrule. Their eldest son Robert was a friend of Sir Walter Scott, while their daughter Mary married William Aitchison. Thomas (1786–1842) born in Hawick Parish, son of James and Ellen Currie. He married Isabella Armstrong in 1774. Their children were George, James, John, Robert L., William and Thomas. In 1831 he emigrated with his wife and 6 sons, settling in Guelph, Ontario. Thomas (1796–1826) eldest son of Robert, Sheriff-Substitute of Roxburghshire. His great schoolfriend was Robert Lindsay Armstrong, later Director of the Mint in St. Petersburg. He was greatly interested in local history, publishing a pamphlet on the orchards of Jedburgh. He also collected Border ballads and helped Sir Walter Scott with ‘Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border’. He was Procurator-Fiscal for Roxburghshire. In 1825 he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. He may be the Thomas listed at Falnash in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. He took over from his father as Secretary of the Jedforest Club in 1820, retiring in 1826 because of ill-health. He never married and died at Camberwell (also spelled ‘Schortred’, ‘Schortread’, ‘Shortread’, ‘Shortreede’, etc.).

Sibbald (si-buld) n. James (1745–1803) son of John, farmer at Whitlaw in Bowden Parish. His brother John was farmer at Borthaugh. He attended Selkirk Grammar School and then leased the farms of Newton (on Slitrig) and Whitehillbrae (on the Dod Burn) from Sir Francis Elliot of Stobs. He spent much of his time studying botany and the classics, and failed as a farmer, giving up his lease in 1779. Learning the publishing trade rapidly in London, he moved to Edinburgh, helping his cousin the publisher Charles Elliot in his shop. In 1780 he purchased (from Mrs. Margaret Yair) the circulating library that had belonged to Allan Ramsay, and became a bookseller and publisher on Parliament Square. A young Sir Walter Scott was a frequent visitor to his circulating library and described him as ‘a man of rough manners but of some taste and judgment, [who] cultivated music and poetry’. In 1785 he started to publish the ‘Edinburgh Magazine, or Literary Miscellany’ as a competitor to the ‘Scots Magazine’. He himself wrote many articles on Scottish antiquities, as well as many other topics, such as the first serious review of Robert Burns ‘Kilmarnock’ edition. He went through mixed fortunes, running a paper mill, giving up his publishing business, setting up a short-lived Edinburgh newspaper, handing over the circulating library (but later getting it back), spending some time effectively missing in London (when he wrote a book about the life of Jesus), and seeing the Edinburgh Magazine merge with the Scots Magazine. His best known work is ‘Chronicle of Scottish Poetry from the Thirteenth Century to the Union of the Crowns, to which is added a glossary’ (1802), with the 4th and final volume being effectively a Scots dictionary. This is locally valuable for including words attributed to use in Teviotdale in his time. There is an etchings of him by John Kay, a portrait by an unknown artist (previously attributed to Raeburn) and he appears in W. Borthwick Johnstone’s 1856 painting of Edinburgh literary characters. He died unmarried at his house on Leith Walk. James (b.1832) son of William. He was raised on a farm. In 1855 he married Agnes Hardie of Newcastleton, and the couple emigrated to Canada, settling in Bruce County. They had 5 sons and 3 daughters. He sold up his farm in 1890 and made a last visit back to Rulewater before joining several of his children to live out his days in Duluth, Minnesota. John (1714–83) eldest son of John and Agnes, daughter of Thomas Elliot, tenant in Oakwood Mill. His brother was William of Pinnacle. He was tenant farmer of Whitlaw in Bowden Parish, where he paid the window tax in 1753. He married Margaret Grieve in 1743. Their children were: James (1747–1803) publisher of ‘The Edinburgh Magazine’; William of Gladsworth (d.1817) merchant.
and ship-owner in Leith: John (b.1755), who was tenant in Borthaugh; Agnes (b.1751), who married Henry Scott, tenant in Deloraine; and Jean (d.1815), who married John Lang, Sheriff-Clerk of Selkirkshire and was the lady who sent off her son’s uniform to equip him in Edinburgh after the ‘False Alarm’ of 1804, as described in Sir Walter Scott’s note ‘Alarm of invasion’ in ‘The Antiquary’. John (1746–77) younger of Pinnacle. He was eldest son of William and Charlotte Cleland. He was a merchant in London. He married Anne Franks, and they had 1 son (Lt.-Col. William, who succeeded his grandfather) and 2 daughters (one of whom, Charlotte, married Archibald Scott of Howcleuch). The other may have been Ann, who married James Grieve, farmer in Branxholme Braes. John of Borthaugh (1755–1822) son of John and Margaret Grieve. His ancestors farmed in the Eildon and Bowden areas. He was recorded at Borthaugh on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, where he is listed as owner of 4 work horses and 1 saddle horse. He was a local Conservative supporter of the early 1800s who is said to have put pins in his coat-tails before voting in Hawick, to avoid being ‘winged’. He married Jean Cunningham (from Ettrick) in Wilton Parish in 1804 and they had a large family, including: John (b.1805), who was running the farm in 1841; Jean (1807–65), who married poet William Wilson and emigrated to Pughkeepsie, New York; James (b.1808); Margaret (b.1810); William (b.1811), who was superintendent of the farm in 1851; Walter (b.1813); Agnes (b.1814); George (b.1816); Isabella (b.1817); and Helen (b.1819). It seems he must have been quite old when he had his family. John (1805–47) son of John and Jean Cunningham. He was listed as a Steward at the Common Riding Races of 1836. He was farmer at Borthaugh in 1841, living with his sisters Margaret and Agnes. He appears to have been dead by 1851, when his brother William was running the farm. John (b.1835) son of James and Elizabeth, he was born in Leith. He was assistant gamekeeper on the Cavers estate, living at Effedge. He was said to be a terror for the Hawick poachers. On one occasion a gang came to his house to get him, but he was ill and his wife called David Honeyman, the head keeper, who was badly beaten up instead. Another story told is how he caught 3 poachers who has swam out to the island in Buckstruther Loch to collect gulls eggs; he bundled up their clothes, but instead of giving themselves up to him they ran off naked in the direction of Hawick. He is listed as a ploughman at Effedge in 1861. He married Margaret Best in Ashkirk Parish in 1857. Their children included: John (b.1857); Alexander (1860–1942), who died in Victoria, British Columbia; Thomas (1863–1948), who also died in Victoria; and Agnes (b.1865). Margaret (b.1845) daughter of William and Margaret Laidlaw. She helped her father with his duties as postmaster at Bonchester Bridge, and took over after his death in 1880. She also served as Clerk to the School Board and Clerk to the Heritors, and was one of the best known people in the Rule valley in her day. She was one of the original members of Wolfelee Free Kirk She helped George Tancred with information for his Rulewater book. In 1901 she was living at Newington, Edinburgh. Peter (1835–85) son of William and Margaret Laidlaw, he was born in Hobkirk Parish. He worked as a mason in Hobkirk and then in Hawick. He was visiting Howaill at the time of the 1841 census. In 1858 he married Mary (1827–1912), daughter of James Nichol. Their children were: William (b.1860); Peter (b.1862); Thomas (b.1864); Elizabeth Burnet (b.1865); and Robert Nichol (b.1872), who married Mina Inglis. Robert (b.1828/9) born in Hawick. In 1851 he was listed as a shoemaker at about 16 Howegate, with his wife Janet being a boot-binder. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children baptised there included: William (b.1757), probably the plasterer in Hawick; Samuel (b.1760); Elizabeth (b.1763); Isabel (b.1764); George (b.1766); and Agnes (b.1768). Thomas (1863–1948) born at Effedge, son of John, who was an assistant gamekeeper there, and Margaret Best. He worked at Chatelherault, Kinmount, Croxon Park and Fawley Court, before becoming gamekeeper at Wells estate. He later moved to Victoria, British Columbia, where he died. He married Jessie, daughter of Alexander Anderson, forester on the Kinmount estate in Dumfriesshire. William of Pinnacle (1719–98) 2nd son of John and Agnes Elliot. He was recorded as owner of Pinnacle in 1788, valued at £500. He married Charlotte Cleland from Edinburgh, who died in 1791. They had 12 sons and 1 daughter. His eldest son John predeceased him, and he was succeeded by his grandson William. In fact he outlived all his sons, except for William, an officer in India (who had no children). His 10th son Hugh died while defending a fort at Seringapatam in 1792. Lt.-Col. William of Pinnacle and Whiterig (1771–1835), J.P., only son of John. He succeeded his grandfather William in 1798. He joined the army in about 1794, becoming Captain in the 35th Regiment of Foot, transferring to the 15th Foot as Lieutenant-Colonel in 1807. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1817 and was also a member of the ‘Border Bournen’. In 1807 he married Susan, 6th daughter of Thomas Mein of Eildon Hall. They had 9 sons and 2 daughters, including: John (1809–43), Captain in the 34th Madras Infantry; Thomas, Royal Navy Commander, who lived at Eildon Hall, Ontario; William (b.1814); James (b.1816); Archibald (b.1817); Charles (b.1819) who served as a militia officer during the Canadian rebellion of 1837; Hugh (b.1823), served in Bengal and also moved to Canada; and Francis Clunie, who served with the Royal Navy and was later a doctor in Sutton West, Canada. After his death the family lands were sold off. William (18th/19th C.) plasterer in Hawick, who lived at the Sandbed. He is said to have been a descendant of the Sibbalds of Pinnacle and Whiterig and the earlier portioners of Eildon and Bowden. He was probably son of Thomas, baptised in Cavers Parish in 1757. He is listed as ‘Plasterer’ on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. He married Mary Weir, who died in 1835. Their children (baptised in Wilton Parish) included: Thomas (1784–1808); Ann (b.1786); Elizabeth (‘Betty’, b.1787), who probably married Walter Gillies and was a widow at 56 High Street in 1851 and 1861; Peter (b.1789); Mary (b.1792); Mary (again, b.1793); William (b.1803), who became tenant on the Weens estate. He may have earlier married Katherine Grieve in Hawick in 1778. William (1803–80) son of Hawick plasterer William and Mary Weir, he was born in Wilton Parish and educated at Wilton School. He was a stocking-maker in Hawick and in about 1823 moved to one of the Sclenty Hall cottages in Hobkirk, becoming a tenant farmer on the Weens estate. He then became a land measurer, in about 1840 was appointed Heritors’ Clerk and in 1846 was made Inspector of Poor and Collector for the Parish. He later became Registrar and Clerk of the School Board and ran the Hobkirk Library, being a great lover of books. He was also Precentor at Hobkirk Kirk at one time. He served as a factor for the Weens estate for a while. The 1841 census lists him as a stockingmaker at Sclenty Hall, and at 3 Weens Cottages in 1851. In 1861 he was listed as ‘Registrar of Births &c. In-spr. of Poor’ at Weens Cottages. He was Chairman at the Burns centenary celebration in Rulewater in 1859. Later in life he was postmaster at Bonchester Bridge, probably from the late 1860s, succeeding Miss Renwick. His daughter helped him as he got older, and after his death she became postmistress. In 1823 he married Margaret, 2nd daughter of William Laidlaw of Weensmoor. Their children included: Helen (b.1823), who married James Short; Mary (b.1825), who was unmarried; William (b.1827), who was a frameworker in Hawick and died unmarried; James (b.1832), who emigrated to Canada and died in Minnesota; Peter (1835–85), a mason in Hawick; Thomas (b.1839), a joiner; and Margaret (b.1845), who helped her father and then became post-mistress (also formerly written ‘Sybald’).

side (sīd) adj., arch. hanging low, extending far down – ‘...to see what passed between her and the man in the `side black goun’’ [EM1820].

Side (sīd) n. former tower just south of Newcastle (or Copshaw). The earliest records are in a c.1376 rental roll, for ‘Locus Willelmi del Syde’ (8 shillings) and ‘Locus Ade de Syde’ (16 shillings). It is unclear to which family these belonged. It is possible also the ‘Siders’ recorded as an Elliot residence in 1498. It was home of ‘Jock o the Side’ in the 16th century, probably an Armstrong who was immortalised in the ballad of the same name. ‘Chrystie of the Syde’ is listed among Liddesdale chief’s at the end of the 16th century by Monipennie and may have been Jock’s brother. ‘Sym’ and ‘Lancie’ Armstrong of the ‘Syde’ are recorded in 1601 and John ‘called the Syde’ in 1642. William Thomas was tenant there in 1694, with William Little, Thomas Ovens and George Hewitson also listed. Adam Henderson was tenant in 1706, when 2 of his servants were rebuked for fighting on the Sabbath. William Little was there in 1707 when summoned for having a ‘penny wedding’. In a survey of 1718 it is stated that Shipshieldsen was also known as Side. The site may be the farmstead whose remains are on the east side of Kirk Hill, at the head of Etottie Sike, or perhaps further to the south, as marked on Stobie’s 1770 map. The farmstead has at least 3 buildings, a kiln-barn and several enclosures, although the remains of a tower have not been established. Another site, pointed out in 1839 as having a square fort on top.

Siders (sī-durz) n. nickname for William Elliot about 1500, the designation referring to his residence, which may have been ‘Side’.

sides-away (sīdz-aw-wā) n., arch. former street game, similar to kick-the-can – ‘Sides-away, that was another popular thing’ [DaS].

sideyways (sī-dee-wāz) adv. sideways – ‘sei if it’ll throwe sideyways’, ‘Fred and Flash Broon were awfhl like yin another frae sideyways on’ [IWL] (also spelled ‘sideeways’, ‘sideways’, etc.; sometimes ‘sideyways-on’).

sile (sīl) n., arch. a couple supporting a roof, rafter – ‘A large beam, one end of which is placed on a wall, and the other pinned or nailed to another beam, of the same description, resting on the opposite wall, for the purpose of supporting the roof. These are denominated a pair o’ siles, Ayrs., Roxb.’ [JoJ], ‘Cyle, the foor or lower part of a couple or rafter; synon. Soire, Roxb.’ [GW] (also written ‘cyle’ and ‘syle’).

the Silent Toast (thu-sī-lin’-tōst) n. traditional toast to the memory of James Douglas of Drumlanrig at the Cornet’s Dinner, taken in solemn silence. The origin and antiquity of this tradition is uncertain, but it is recorded at least as early as 1887.

siller (sī-lur) adj., arch. silver, made of silver, having a silvery lustre – ‘Like siller muntybanks

And the siller horn o’ the Hunter’s Mune’ [DH], v., arch. to give money to – ‘A siller’t snirt makes quickest sail, To Hymen’s port’ [JoHa] (also spelled ‘siller’).

Sillerbithaa (si-lur-bi’-haw, -hal) n. older version of Silverbuthall, referring to the area previously called Easter Heap.

Sillerbit Hall (si-lur-bi’-hal, -haw) n. this older name for Silverbuthall was adopted in 1861 for the lands purchased by Thomas Laidlaw (from Walter Wilson), and the mansion house he had built there in the period 1863–1866. The house was located roughly near the top of the present Churchill Road, with the approach from the main entrance at the top of Havelock Street. The architect was J.T. Rochead of Glasgow, and it was in the Scottish baronial style, with French elements. The house was used by Belgian refugees during WWI. It was demolished in 1946 when the council purchased the estate (being quite full of dry rot etc.). A window panel (with the Burgh crest) is preserved in the Museum. The gate lodge for the main house still exists, now numbered as 23 Havelock Street. A ‘wedge-shaped perforated hammer of rough surfaced sandstone’ found near here was donated to the Museum (see also Silverbuthall).

sillerless (si-lur-lis) adj., arch. silverless, impene- cious – ‘. . . Than wed wi’ a sillerless bodie, I’d far rather want till I dece’ [JoHa].

siller Seterdii (si-lur-se’-ur-di) n., arch. the silvery seed tops of certain grasses.

silly man (si-lee-mawn) interj., arch. an expression of kindness and compassion, literally ‘poor fellow’ (noted by J. Jamieson).

Silverbuthall Ludge

Silurian shale (si-loo-ree-in-shal) n. shale formed in the third period of the Palaeozoic Era, about 405–425 million years ago. It is the dominant geology around Hawick, specifically referred to as the Hawick Group.

Silverbuthall (si-lur-bi’-hal, -haw) n. an area at the north end of Hawick, roughly corresponding to the old estate of Easter Heip, and now containing a housing estate. The name occurs as early as 1694, although spelling varies. The lands were part of the estates of Langlands of that Ilk, until sold to James Scott, farmer at Boonraw, who was Laird there in the mid-18th century. Small enclosures were separately sold to James and Walter Knox, and later acquired by Archibald Dunlop and then John Scott Chisholme. Thomas Hall was farmer there in 1797. The house there was lived in by banker William Oliver (‘Auld Cash’), who died in 1808, when it was inherited by his nieces. The lands were valued at £80 in 1788 and 1811 (including the enclosures), when owned by James Scott. The lands were bought in about 1822 by James Scott, retired teacher from Yarrow, who died in the early 1840s. In 1841 there were 8 households living there. Small pieces of the lands were sold to Chisholme of Stiches and Robert Turnbull of Galalaw. A large part of the lands were purchased by Thomas Laidlaw in 1861, who had a new mansion built there (near the present Churchill Road), designed by J.T. Rochead, and including a lodge house (which still exists), with construction by local building firm George Tait. The house can be seen in an aerial photograph of 1933. This estate was acquired by the Council in 1945 for new housing in the north of town, with the ‘prefabs’ being constructed first, and the present day housing from the mid-1960s. It comprises Silverbuthall Road, Branxholme Road and adjoining streets (the word refers to the placement of the butts, i.e. archery targets, of Wilton Parish being sited near there, and the practice of having a silver arrow as shooting prize; it is ‘Silverbothall’ in 1797 and ‘Silverboothall’ in 1808; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map; see also Sillerbit Hall).

Silverbuthaa (si-lur-bi’-haw) n. another name for the mansion house called Sillerbit Haa.

Silverbuthall Ludge (si-lur-bi’-hal-hij) n. former gate lodge for the mansion at Silverbuthall. It was probably designed by J.T. Rochead (who designed the main house, which was built 1863–6), and survives at No. 23 Havelock Street, the corner with Wellfield Road. It is in a striking Scottish Baronial style, with a circular stair tower and conical-capped gatepiers. It is a grade B listed building.

Silverbuthall Road (sil-vur-hal-rod) n. main road through the Silverbuthall housing scheme, with houses built in 1965.

Silver Field (sil-vur-feeld) n. local name for a piece of ground to the north of Etterlon churchyard, said to where coins were sometimes found. It was perhaps the manse of the old kirk.

the Silver Flush (thu-sil-vur-flush) n. former name for a spring at the lower end of the area where Newcastleton was built. It was said to be named after the ‘palfrey’ of a young lady (who was to marry the Laird of Whithaugh) stopped, with its silver bells being heard from some distance (as noted in ‘Beauties of the Border’).

the Silver Spurs (thu-sil-vur-spurz) n. annual race for married men at the Common Riding, since at least the 1840s.

Silver Street (sil-vur-stree’) n. narrow street alongside the west bank of the Slitrig. It is one of the oldest streets in Hawick, although most of the present buildings are Victorian, and the name is not recorded before 1801. Up until the latter part of the 18th century it was part of the main road through Hawick, and houses there were referred to as on ‘the King’s High Street’. It was flooded in the great Slitrig flood of 1767, when several buildings were damaged. It became more of a back street with the erection of Drumlanrig Bridge in 1776, and moreso with the demolition of the Auld Brig in 1851. The banker ‘Auld Cash’ (William Oliver) lived there, and presumably had his banking office there too. A sketch of ‘old court, Silver Street’ exists by T.H. Laidlaw in the late 19th century. J.P. Alison designed alterations at Nos. 2 and 3. (The origin is obscure, with some suggestion that it is a reference to ‘Auld Cash’, similarity between his name ‘Oliver’ and ‘Silver’ perhaps not being a coincidence either; however, if the name is older than that, it may relate to the silver arrow prize at the Hawick ‘butt’s’).

Sim (sim) n., arch. former short form of the Christian name Simon, popular in the 16th and 17th centuries (sometimes spelled ‘Sym’; cf. Simmie and Symne).

Sime (sim) n. James Boyd (1865–1953) son of William of Galashiels and Ellen Boyd, and brother of William Boyd. He was a manufacturer who was on the Town Council in the early years of the 20th century and lived at Dunira. He became a partner in Pringle’s in 1906 and resigned in 1929. He was one of the earliest players of tennis in Hawick and also shared an early interest in cinematography with David Gaylor. He fought in WWI, but when his brother died in 1917 he became Chairman of Sime, Williamson & Co. He was also a Church Warden at St. Cuthbert’s. On the 1891 census he was living at Ivy Bank, Fenwick Park, with his mother and his only sister, Ellen. He married Williamina (‘Mina’) daughter of dyer John Turnbull. Saida (?) gave a gift that helped build the Youth Centre in 1970.

William Boyd (1867–1917) born in Galashiels, eldest son of William, who was partner in Sime, Sanderson & Co., Botany Mills, Galashiels. In 1889 he became partner in Sime, Williamson & Co., Weensland Mills. He lived at the Limes and then had ‘the Coille’ built for him. He married Margaret Elliot (sometimes incorrectly written ‘Syme’).

Sime, Williamson & Co. (sim-wi-leen-sin-in-kö) n. tweed manufacturers, founded in 1889, with their main mill part of Weensland Mills. They were also sometimes known as simply Sime’s. They purchased Howlands Mill (on Victoria Road) in 1911 and changed the name to Dean Mills. When William Boyd Sime died in 1917, his brother James Boyd Sime became Chairman. The firm went out of business in 1937 and Dean Mills became part of Innes, Henderson & Co.

simmer (si-nur) n., arch., poet. summer – ‘...For simmer sairs it little now – it’s no’ what it has been’ [JoHa], ‘...my moustir is turnet into the drouth o’ simmer’ [HSR], ‘...thou hest maeid simmer an’ wintir’ [HSR], ‘Let fortune’s sun o’ simmer shine ...’ [RH], ‘...That brocht the sicht o’ scenes lang tint, An’ simmer days nae mair’ [ECB], ‘...an i simmer, whan the sunnys are woarst an the pluiffin ter froes up atween the causa-stanes’ [ECS], ‘...Sing salutation to the simmer’ [DH], ‘She left me wi’ the simmer’s close Think not that she was untrue ...’ [WE], adj. relating to summer – ‘...She’s as blithe as the simmer day’s lang’ [WAP], ‘...and buttercups, and cranesbill and vetch on the gressy verge o the white simmer road ...’ [DH], ‘...Unfurled ti kiss the simmer sky In Hawick ma Border handmade’ [IWL], v., arch. to summer – ‘I simmered up in the Huron country lads, did a bit of hunting for the Hudsons ...’ [JEDM].

simmer an wunter (si-nur-an-wun-tur) v., arch. to be long-winded, go into a subject at length, haggle – ‘It serrd naething for ti stert simmeree an wuntereen’ [ECS], ‘It’ll serr naething now ti stert simmereen-an-wuntereen' [ECS] (also written ‘simmer-an-wunter’).

Simmie (si-mee) n., arch. former pet form of the name Simon, also used as an informal name for the Devil (cf. Sim and Syme).

Simmie’s Pottie (si-meez-po’-ee) n. popular name for a block of freestone on the east side of Ruberslaw, which has a cavity on the top, its former use being uncertain. Presumably ‘Simmie’ refers to the Devil.

Simmons (si-minz) n. Anne Vernona of Tushielaw (1797–1837) daughter of Philip and Vernona Estwick. She was grand-daughter of Henry Peter Simmons and Ann Kirton and great-grand-daughter of Barbara Anderson of Tushielaw. She inherited the farms of Tushielaw and Hislop on the death of her great-uncle John Kirton Anderson in 1816. She married Benjamin Thomas Gaskin in 1818, and had their only child (a son of the same name) after her husband’s early death. Her son took the additional surname Anderson when he inherited.

Simon (si-min) n. (12th/13th C.) Rector of Lilliesleaf. He is recorded in a document of about 1206, re-establishing the church of Hassendean. There was a Precentor of Glasgow with the same name recorded at about the same time (also written ‘Simeon’).

Simplicity (sim-pli-si-ter) adv., arch. simply, unconditionally – ‘...exonerat quit claims and simpliciter discharges the saidis two bayleyeas ...’ [BR1701] (a legal term).

Simpson (sim-sin) n. Alexander (18th C.) gardener at Langlands House in 1788, when he was working for Thomas Elliot. He was still gardener there in 1791, when he was working for Lord Napier. In 1794 he was gardener at Teviotbank in Minto Parish, working for David Simpson. Andrew (16th C.) recorded as tenant of Overraw, along with William, on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. Andrew (17th C.) merchant listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was also listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He could be the Andrew who married Isobel Scott, and whose daughter Janet was born in Hawick in 1671. Dr. Andrew (20th C.) born in Kirkcaldy, he graduated in Medicine from Edinburgh University in 1923 and about 1924 took over the practice of Dr. Dixon in Hawick. He was Medical Officer for Hawick R.F.C. He was a founder President of Hawick Rotary Club and served as Chairman of the local British Legion. He retired in 1967 after being a Hawick G.P. for over 40 years. Dr. Andrew Rutherford ‘Ford’ (1932–2002) born in Hawick, son of local doctor Andrew. He was in the R.A.M.C. as part of National Service, then trained as a doctor, coming to practise with his father in Bridge Street in 1964. He served as President of the Hawick Rotary Club, team doctor and President of Hawick R.F.C., Callants’ Club President, Chairman of Douglas Haig Court Committee. He was also known as a popular reciter of Border poetry. Archibald (15th C.) listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. His name appears as ‘archibaldsymson’. Archibald (16th C.) Reader of Glasgow Diocese who supplied Lilliesleaf parish in the period 1575–82, the last pre-Reformation preacher to preach there. His name is spelled ‘Symson’ and ‘Simsoun’. In 1575 Thomas Duncanson was Minister (also for Bowden, Laungnewton and Melrose), i.e. he had most of the living of the parishes. In 1582 he is recorded as one of 6 preachers from southern Scotland who were deprived for ‘abusing the sacraments’, then excommunicated in 1588 and threatened with death in 1590 if they did not stop their practices. This may suggest that the men had been Catholic priests before the Reformation. Ashley (1973–) one of two women to publicly attempt to join Ride-outs in 1996. Bailie ?? Bailie of Hawick towards the end of the 19th century. David of Teviotbank (d.1806) son of Rev. James, minister of Wilton. He was ‘of Know’ in 1788 when mentioned as someone about to be added to the list of voters for Roxburghshire and said to be connected with Thomas Ogilvie and probably a supporter of Scott of Buccleuch in the election. He is recorded as ‘David Simpson of Know’ when he was taxed in Minto Parish for having 2 female servants in 1789 and 1 in 1790; in 1791 he was ‘of Teviotbank’ when he was taxed for 2 female servants in Minto Parish. He also had a male servant at Knowe in 1790, 2 at Teviotbank in 1791–93 and 3 in 1794 and 1797. In the period 1792–8 he was taxed for owning a carriage and in 1789–97 for having 2 carriage or saddle horses. In the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls he is also recorded as owner of 5 farm horses. He was still at Know when he subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. He had the house at Teviotbank designated by Robert Burn about 1791. He was listed as owner of the lands of Knowe and Knowe-townhead on the 1788 county valuation (and still on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls). In 1791 he married Margaret, daughter of John Elliot of Borthwickbrae. Their children included Gen. Sir James (1792–1868). His will is recorded in 1808 and his estate was granted to his widow Margaret, along with Rev. William of Edinburgh (his brother). After his death there was an ongoing dispute regarding money he claimed he was owed from the Nabob of Arcot and the Ameer ul Omrah. His will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1808. David B., F.R.C.O. (1886–1941) born in Kilmarnock and raised in Dundee. On 1920 he became the first professional organist at St. George’s Kirk, having previously been at the Parish Church of Leslie in Fife. He was also a private music teacher in Hawick, and was conductor of Hawick Choral Society. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. David M. (b.1861) son of George, farmer at Bedrule. He studied engineering at Edinburgh University then worked in several positions, including as constructing engineer on the Edinburgh Suburban Railway. In 1887 he went to Bueno Aires, then in 1891 to Havana, where he was awarded the Spanish Order of Merit for working during the rebellion. From 1896–1906 he was chief engineer of the Bueno Aires Western Railway. Francis ‘Frank’ (1888–1964) born at 10 Trinity Street, he was son of mill foreman Thomas B. He was church organist at Newcastleton and later at Minto. He also gave music lessons in this home at 4 Earl Street. He wrote the music for ‘Teviotdale’. He is buried in Wilton Cemetery. George ‘Geordie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1590 among Elliots of the Steele, the Park, Binks, and others, when complained about for a raid into England. Probably the same George is listed in 1590 among Armstrongs and Elliots complained about by a large group of Englishmen for a raid on Blackcleugh in Kirkhaugh in 1590, taking many prisoners for ransom. He is also recorded in 1596 when there was a complaint that he and others had raided lands in England at King Water; others riding with him include Will Elliot of the Steele and Anthony Elliot of the Binks, suggesting he was from Liddesdale. He is probably the George who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. He may be the ‘Geordie Symson in the Ravis’, who was listed in 1576 among men who should not have been freed from ward. He may be the ‘Gorth Simson’ listed in 1583 among supporters of Elliot of Red- hugh. George (18th C.) factor to the estates of Scott of Harden in the period 1757–83. George (18th C.) son of Alexander, minister of Monymusk, he was made Honorary Burgess in 1751. George (d.c.1889) born at Oxnam Row. His father was David, while his grand-father George and great-grandfather John farmed at Bloodylaws in Oxnam Parish. He was tenant farmer at Bedrule from 1846, with his trustees continuing from 1889 until it was sold by the Elliots to the Ushers in 1898. The farm was drained significantly during his tenure. This branch of the family often used the ‘Simson’ spelling. He married Emily Roy and their son was David M. Harold (??– ) Council employee who was Common Riding Secretary from about 1966 until Reorganisation. James (17th C.) merchant in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He was listed ‘oust the water’ in Hawick on the Hearty Tax rolls in 1694. James (18th C.) Hawick resident, probably a tradesman of some sort. In 1731 he was paid for ‘lintseed oyle and whit lead got to the wither-kok in 1728’. Rev. James (1708–71) Minister of Wilton Parish 1738–71. He was son of John, minister of Morebattle. He was educated at Edinburgh University, licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1737 and presented to Wilton by Francis, Duke of Buccleuch soon afterwards. He was ordained in 1738 and remained until his death. Wilton Common was divided during his time as minister, with the lands of Priestrig being reserved for the minister. In 1748 he arranged for a piece of his land (near Burnfoot Mill) to be exchanged for a piece of the Duke of Buccleuch’s ‘Trinity lands’, lying on the Wilton side of the Teviot. He is recorded paying the window tax at ‘the mance’ in Wilton Parish in 1748. In about 1763 his rebuke of dissenters during a baptism of a child of James Scott (farmer at Boonraw), convinced Scott to leave the established church, which led to the forming of the Green Kirk in Hawick. The oldest existing Wilton communion token is from 1763, during his incumbency. In 1743 he married Anne Cranstonum, daughter of the minister of Ancrum. Their children were: William, who became minister of the Tron Kirk in Edinburgh; John, who died young; David of Know and Teviotbank; James, perhaps also of Teviotbank; Anne, who died young; Andrew, who also died young; and John. James (18th C.) Bailie who, along with John Nixon, in 1793 presented a bible for use by subsequent Magistrates in St. Mary’s Kirk. It was moved to the Old Parish in 1849 and was there for at least another half-century. He was also Bailie in the very early 1800s. Gen. Sir James (1792–1868) grandson of Rev. James Simpson, son of David Simpson of Teviotbank and Mary Elliott of Borthwickbrae. He was educated at Edinburgh University and commissioned in the Grenadier Guards in 1811. He served in several campaigns, being severely wounded at Quatre Bras, and promoted through the ranks as he served in Mauritius, Bengal and Sind. He went to the Crimea as a Major-General in 1851, becoming acting senior officer and was promoted to General in 1852, along with receiving the G.C.B. He handed over command soon after and retired near Bury St. Edmunds. He was awarded many honours including the Grand Cross of the Legion of Honour and being made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick while staying at the Tower Hotel in 1856 after visiting his cousin A.E. Lockhart at Borthwickbrae. He was said to be the tallest officer in the British Army. In 1839 he married Elizabeth, 2nd daughter of Sir Robert Dundas, but she died in the following year. John (17th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1674 he was fined for not allowing Bailie Purdom to take his horse to ride to Jedburgh on the Town’s business. He could be the John who was married to Isobell Brown and whose son John (b.1669) was born in Hawick. He may be the ‘Jon Symson, skinner’ recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. John (17th C.) tenant in Stobistocote. He was listed in 1684 among many men declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. John (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. In 1728 he married Margaret, daughter of William Little. Their children included: Margaret (b.1729); James (b.1740); and William (b.1743). John (18th C.) recorded in 1751 as ‘lying at the Point of Death in all probability’. This was in the Hawick Session records, where there was a discussion about what to do with ‘the Horse belonging to the Session’. His connection with the Session is unclear. John (18th C.) recorded in 1771 when he was paid by the Town Council ‘for a standard for salt from Jedburgh’. It is unclear what his occupation was. John (18th/19th C.) recorded at Dimpleknowe as owner of a saddle horse on the 1787–97 Horse Tax Rolls, as well as a farm horse in 1797. He also paid the dog tax there in the same year. Robert ‘Smith’ (15th/16th C.) recorded in a list of men from Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. His name is listed as ‘roberti symson vocatis smyt’. He was also among men who pledged good behaviour to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1500; he is listed as ‘Robert Simson, callit Smyth’. Thomas (15th/16th C.) witness to the 1512 charter where Roger Langlands of that Ilk sold his lands of Mervinslaw to William Inglis of Langlandshill. He was probably from in or around the Barony of Wilton. Thomas (1833/4–98) shoemaker in Newcastle on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. William (17th C.) resident of Minto Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records in 1694. William (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton. William (18th C.) witnessed a baptism in Wilton Parish in 1770 for Anthony Haig. William (18th/19th C.) recorded as farmer at Headshaw on the Horse Tax Rolls in the period 1785–1797. In 1797 he owned the grand sum of 13 farm horses and 1 carriage or saddle horse. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. He could be the tenant from about then who was recorded as an attender at Midlem Seccession Kirk. He was recorded at Headshaw on the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He could be the William, married to Euphan Laidlaw, whose children baptised in Ashkirk Parish included John (b.1813) and Jessie (b.1819). William (b.c.1805) from Galashiels, he was a tailor in Hawick. He was recorded on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was at about 29 High Street in 1841. His wife (who died before 1851) was Mary and their children included Walter, Helen, William, Robert and David. William (b.1818/9) from Kelso, he worked for James Kennedy, bookbinder. In about 1870 he started his own bookbinders and printers at 9 Oliver Place. This was continued by his sons Ebenezer and Walter as E.W. & W. Simpson, which can be seen in a photograph of 1889. The firm was later incorporated into Deans and Simpsons. William (1862/3–1929) joiner in Newcastle on, who died at Burgh-by-Sands. He married Margaret Oliver, who died on the Isle of Wight in 1898, aged 29. Rev. William (1863–1946) born at Elves, Elgin, son of Charles and Margaret Edwards. He was educated at Aberdeen and St. Andrews Universities. He was licensed by St. Andrews Presbytery in 1891, and was minister in Australia and New Zealand before returning to Scotland in 1904. He was minister at Downfield and then at Maud, before being traslated to St. Mary’s in Hawick in 1927. He demitted his charge in 1933 and died as the result of an accident 13 years later. He married Sarah Dare (who died in 1940) and their son William Nightingale was a doctor in Stow (formerly also ‘Simson’, as well as ‘Simson’, ‘Symson’, ‘Symson’, etc.).

Simpson’s (sim-sinz) n. D. Simpson Ltd., a tobacconist’s at 60 High Street in the mid-20th century. It was an Edinburgh company, which took over from William Sharp just before WWII and continued into the 1960s. The shop had a striking red and black vitralite frontage and was also known for its blend of pipe tobacco called ‘Teviotdale’.

Simpson’s Hill (sim-sinz-hil) n. small hill between Northhouse and Old Northhouse, just to the east of Inner Hill. It reaches a height of 308 m.

Sim’s Hob (simz-höb) n. nickname for Robert Scott around 1600.

Sincair (sin-sär) adj., arch. sincere.

since (sins) adv. ago – ‘...twae or threi month since’ [CoH] (more common than in English, where ‘long since’ is the only frequent example).

Sinclair (sing-klär) n. Adam (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Adam Singlar’ when he witnessed the 1508 sasine for Adam Hepburn inheriting his father’s Lordship of Liddesdale. John was also a witness, and so perhaps related. Archibald (18th C.) gardener at Minto in 1791–93, when he was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. In 1794 he was listed as groom at Minto and in 1797 was a gardener there. Charles Lord Sinclair (1768–1863) eldest son of Andrew and Elizabeth Rutherford. He succeeded to the family titles in 1776, becoming 13th Lord. He joined the Royal Scots Regiment of Foot at age 16 and in 1790 raised an independent company. He switched to the 15th Regiment of Foot and became Lieutenant-Colonel, quitting the Army in 1802, but becoming Lieutenant-Colonel of the Berwickshire Militia. In 1807 he was elected as a representative peer of Scotland then was involved with the Haddington Militia. He served as a Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire. In 1802 he married Mary Agnes, daughter of James Chisholme of Stonedene. On the death of his father-in-law in 1812 he inherited the Stonedene estate. His wife died 2 years later and Their eldest son James became the 14th lord Sinclair. Their other children were: Matthew, who died aged 21; Charles, who became a Royal Navy Commander and lived at Eyemouth; and Susan. He secondly married Isabella Mary, youngest daughter of Alexander Chatto of Mainhouse in Roxburghshire and had 3 more children: John, who died aged 22; Eleanor; and Jane Elizabeth. He lived to the age of 95. Charles William Lord Sinclair (b.1831) eldest son of James, he was the 15th Lord. He was Colonel in the 57th Regiment, serving in Crimea, being present at Balaclava and Inkerman, in the Bosphorus, the Indian Mutiny and the New Zealand War, receiving several medals. He retired from the Army in 1878 and lived in Berwickshire, where he was a J.P. and Deputy-Lieutenant, as well as being a representative peer. Among his titles was also Laird of Stonedene in Rulewater. He also served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1870 he married Margaret Jane Younger, daughter of James Murray of Bryanston Square, London. Their sons were Archibald James Murray and Charles Henry Murray, both of whom served in the Army, and they also had 3 daughters, Ada Jane, Margaret Helen and Georgina Violet. Charles ‘Charlie’ (19th C.) resident of Lintalee. He could be the same man as Charles, Lord Sinclair. He was instrumental in forming the new pack of Jedforest Hounds in about 1882. He served as Huntsman 1885–92. George became a Director at Pringle’s in 1947. James Lord Sinclair (1803–80) eldest son of Charles and Mary Agnes Chisholme, from whom he inherited the Stonedge estate in Rulewater. He was a heritor of Hobkirk Parish, and in 1836 was referred to as being ‘of Greenriver’. He was the 14th Lord Sinclair. He was Captain of the Grenadier Guards and became a Scottish representative peer. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. In 1830 he married Jane, eldest daughter of Archibald Little of Shabden Park, Surrey, and she died in 1887, aged 75. Their children were: Charles William, who succeeded; Archibald, who became a naval Commander; James Chisholme, in the Madras Civil Service; Lockhart Matthew; Mary Agnes; and Helen.

James H.

Associate Minister at Selkirk, linked with Ashkirk, in the 1980s. Janet (d.1667) married James Brydon and had a son Andrew. She later married Rev. Thomas Thomson, minister of Hobkirk. In 1618, along with her son Andrew and Hector Shiel of Kirknowe she had a ‘wadset’ over lands adjacent to the Kirkhaugh of Hobkirk. This was registered in 1623. She was buried in Greyfriars churchyard in Edinburgh. John (15th C.) recorded as being ‘in Mynto’ in 1493 when, along with 4 others, he ‘came in the King’s Will for treasonably concealing and Stouthreif of ten score pensys pertaining to the King, found in the Kirk of Mynto’. This was probably a cache of English gold coins, hidden by Sinclair, but claimed by the King as treasure trove. Although said to be ‘in Minto’, the Laird of Bedrule was specifically his surety (while William Langlands acted for 2 of the others), perhaps suggesting that he was from Rulewater; the others were John Turnbull, Thomas Bell, George Turnbull and John Aitkin (with William Burn’s name also given, but scored out). Perhaps he was the same John recorded earlier in 1493 when the Sheriff of Roxburgh was fined for his non-appearance at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh; this John was cited again at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Possibly the same ‘John Singlar’ was on the panel that met at Cavers to decide on inheritance of certain Elliot lands in 1497/8. Possibly the same ‘Johanne Sinclair’ was witness to the sasine for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale; there he is ‘Halis signifero’, i.e. standard-bearer for Hepburn of Hailes. Thomas (16th/17th C.) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1618, he was presented as minister to Abbotrule Parish in mid-1618 and ordained there early the following year. However, he resigned before the middle of 1623, the reason being that he had ‘gone to London with the Prior of Coldingham’s children’ (presumably as their tutor). A man of the same name is recorded in a deed of 1608 as schoolmaster at Oakwood; this could be the same man or perhaps a close relative. William (19th C.) hired as a compulsory attendance officer in Hawick about 1873, following the requirements of the Education Scotland Act of 1872. He was thus the town’s first truant officer! His main job was as a stockmaker (written ‘St. Clair’ and ‘Sinclar’ in early times).

Singdean (sing-deen) n. hamlet between the ‘Note o the Gate’ and Saughtree. It is probably the place transcribed as ‘Sougdon’ (with a value of 12 merks) on the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale. On the 1541 roll it is listed as ‘Sangdane’, with the same value, and William Elliot being the tenant. There were originally separate farms of Over and Nether Singdean, which were part of the lands in upper Liddesdale held by Jedburgh Abbey. By at least 1632 the lands were owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. Adam Thomson was tenant there in 1694. The farm was included in those surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718. It covered 1770 acres, bounded by Hudshouse, Dawstonburn and farms belonging to other landowners, and with the farmhouse in the same location as the modern one. Walter Scott was shepherd there in the mid-19th century, known for making a particular plaster that was said to cure cancer. In the late 19th century John Elliot in Flatt carried on the lease after the death of his uncle John Scott-Elliott. Jeffrey reports that in the late 1850s a rudely carved stone cross, nearly 4 feet long, was found at a pass near here and in the possession of Mr. Stavert of Saughtree. In 1793 Sir Walter Scott passed here, and heard a coughing cow, which the judge in an earlier court case had ruled impossible (also written ‘Singden’ and ‘Singdon’; the origin is probably Old English ‘sengan denu’, for ‘valley cleared by burning’; it first occurs as ‘Singlane’ in 1541, is ‘Singdom’ in 1632 and ‘Singden’ in 1694: it is marked ‘Singdenn’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map of Roxburghshire and ‘Singlen’ on the Liddesdale map; it is ‘Singden’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and ‘Singdon’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Singdean Burn (sing-deen-burn) n. stream in the upper headwaters of Liddesdale, rising on Fanna Hill and flowing roughly south-east to become part of the Caddroun Burn near Singdean.

singed sheep’s heid (sinjd-sheeps-heed) n., arch. formerly popular dish, made by taking a sheep’s head, burning the wool off it, and then serving it in various ways – ‘...there was a singled sheep’s-head on the table which had been ‘got up’ for next day’s dinner’ [WNK].

singel (sing-ul) adj. single – ‘there wasni a singel Teri among them’, also used to refer to an item ordered in a fish and chip shop without chips – ‘A’ll hev a fish supper an a singel haggis’ (note the lack of hard g).

singit (sing-ee, -i) adj., arch. stunted in growth, shrivelled – ‘Let them alane, ye singit-like shurf’ [HAST1868], ‘The Hawick meaning of singeet is lean, emaciated, ill-fed’ [ECS], ‘ye singit thing’ [GW].

singit-lookin (sing-ee-loo-kin) adj., arch. having the appearance of being puny or shrivelled – ‘ye singit-lookin’ wasp, shurf’ [GW] (also ‘singit-like’).

Singleton (sing-gul-tin) n. A. telegraph and station agent in Newcastle upon Tyne in the 1860s.

Singley (sinj-lee??) n. former farmstead at Singley Brae near Penchrise. It once formed part of Cavers estate, and is recorded being resigned by Thomas Baliol to William, Earl of Douglas in 1368. It is listed as part of Cavers estate in a charter of 1511. It was owned by the Eliotts of Stobs at the end of the 17th century. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when Sir William Douglas succeeded as Baron in 1687 and also when his brother Archibald succeeded in 1698. It formed part of the estate of Eliott of Stobs in 1678 and was among lands inherited by Sir William Eliott from his father in 1692 (the origin is probably ‘clearing made by burning’ from the Old English ‘sengan’, to scorch, plus ‘leah’, a wood; the name is recorded as ‘Senglee’ in the 14th century, is ‘Singlie’ and ‘Synglie’ in 1511, ‘Singlees’ in 1678 and is transcribed as ‘Finglie’ in 1687).

Singley Brae (sinj-lee-bra??) n. area between Penchrise and the Maidens, on the slopes of the Pike. The Catrail passes down the slope, and there are earthworks and the remains of a farmstead nearby, presumably Singley farm.

Singlie (sinj-lee??) n. farm on the north side of the Ettrick valley, roughly opposite Hyndhope, with Singliehill End a little to the west. It was Crown lands from at least 1456, being assigned to Turnbulls in the 1480s, Homes in the 1490s and the Kers of Caverton and Cessford in 1499. John Reid was tenant there in 1494/5 when accused of rieving crimes. It remained Crown property until at least 1502. In a rental of 1541 the tenancy was claimed by the Laird of Cessford, ‘occupit be the kings guds’ paying £24 yearly. The lands belonged to the Laird of Buccleuch in 1543 when they were raided by a group of English and Scotsmen, taking 1400 sheep and 2 prisoners, with 2 people killed in the process. Sir William Scott was granted the lands by John, Earl of Annandale in about 1605, although they appear to have been purchased by Simon Scott of Bonnington in 1593, confirmed in 1607. Robert Scott, son of William in Milsington gained the lease in about 1712, and his descendants farmed there until about 1879 – ‘There’s daft Jock Gray o’ Gilmanscleugh, And when ye come to Singley, They’ll help ye in a pinch’ [DJG], ‘The sun was low when they crossed the Ale, It was dark when they won to Ettrick vale, And the stars on Singliehill End a little to the west. Sinton see Synton Sinton (sin-in) n. county town of San Patricio county in Texas, named after David Sinton, major shareholder of the local pasture company that gave the land. His name in turn probably comes from the estate near Ashkirk.

Sinton (sin-in) n. Adam (b.1819) born in Jedburgh, son of William and Isabella Scott. He worked as a grocer in Hawick, and later as a labourer. Along with mill-worker John Forsyth, he was found guilty in 1865 of stealing coins from Hawick Museum, and sentenced to 5 years in prison. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Waugh, blacksmith at Chesters. Their children included William, Robert and Elizabeth. His wife is recorded as a widow in 1874. Alexander (12th/13th C.) Sheriff of Selkirk, he was son of Andrew who was granted the lands and title by William the Lion. He witnessed several charters for Melrose Abbey in the early 13th century. There was confirmation of lands in Hownam in 1195–98, a gift of lands in Lessuden in 1199, confirmation of lands in Clifton 1201–09, gift of several churches by King William 1204–07, a gift of Sorrowlessfield 1208–12, a dispute between Melrose Abbey and Earl of Dunbar in 1208, a charter for the lands of Fairnington in about 1214, lands in Lilliesleaf 1214–40, lands in Elliston 1220–43 and a gift of Maxton in 1226. He was succeeded by another Andrew. Alexander (d.1292/3) Sheriff of Selkirk, he was son of Andrew, the 3rd Sheriff. He may be the Alexander who had a charter of the lands of Todrig from Aymer de Maxwell in about 1260. He may be the same Alexander who witnessed a charter for Alexander of Moravia in 1280. He was mentioned as Sheriff of Selkirk in 1293. His wife was Marie, who swore fealty to Edward I in 1296, as holder of the lands. In 1296 she complained that she had been a widow for 3 years, and pleased with the English King for her dower lands of 20 merks. Their children included: Andrew, who succeeded; and Isabella, who married Edward Keith and succeeded her brother. Andrew (12th/13th C.) appointed Sheriff of Selkirk by William the Lion. He is referred to as ‘Andrew de Synton’. On his appointment he gave up the farm associated with Roxburgh Castle; this explains why Synton estate afterwards lay within Selkirkshire, even although it was surrounded by Roxburghshire. 4 generations of his descendants were also Sheriffs (as described at an inquest in 1305). In about 1250 he witnessed a grant by Henry of Ashkirk to Coldingham Priory, where he is recorded as ‘Andrea de Sintun’. He was succeeded by his son Alexander. Andrew (13th C.) son of Alexander. He was the 3rd member of the family to be Sheriff of Selkirk. He was succeeded by his son Alexander. Andrew (d.c.1300) probably son of Alexander and brother of Isabella. He held the title of Sheriff of Selkirk as well as the Synton estates. In 1296 he was captured at Dunbar and sent to Fotheringay Castle as a prisoner, along with several other Scottish noblemen. In 1298 there was a command from Edward I for payment to his jailors. However, he died in prison, and his heir was his sister Isabella (although separately suggested to have been his wife Isabel, so this is either confusion or there were 2 women with the same name). The family’s history is described in an inquisition in 1305. Andrew (b.c.1816) son of William and Isabella Scott. He was born in Jedburgh, although his mother was from the Hawick area. He lived in Ancrum and Cavers Parishes. He worked as a road contractor, probably on the Wynd in Denholm. He married Margaret Dodds. Their children included: William (1845); Walter (b.1847); Isabella; Andrew; James (b.1856); and twins Richard Thomson and Jessy (b.1859). Baillie (18th/19th C.) said to have been the first druggist in Hawick. His premises were at

29 High Street, which became known as ‘Sinton’s Close’. Note, however, that the same property is labelled ‘Linton’ on Wood’s 1824 map. His first name is unknown. George (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Scott. Their children included Thomas (b.1725). Helen (18th C.) cook at Branxholme in 1789 when she was working for Adam Ogilvie. Probably the same ‘Nelly’ was cook at Midshiels in 1791. Isabella (b.c.1285) either sister or wife of the last ‘de Synton’ Sheriff of Selkirk, she was the heiress of Synton. It is possible that 2 separate women are conflated here; in 1296 Isabella, wife of Andrew of Sinton complained about her estates being seized when her husband was imprisoned at Dunbar, and pleaded for 20 merks worth of land. She was married to Edward de Kethe (or Keith), who was Sheriff of Aberdeen and son of Sir William de Keith. Together with her husband she claimed the sheriffdom of Selkirk from Edward I in 1305. Their children were Sir William, John of Inverugie, Catherine and Janet. James (17th C.) married Janet Govenlock in Ashkirk Parish in 1663. James (c.1730s–1802) carrier in Abbotsrule. He lived at Clesslee and at Strangeburnfoot. His wife may have been Margaret. Their children included: Peter; Thomas (b.1755); Margaret; and James (b.1760). Probably he was the same James who also married Janet Oliver (from Unthank) in 1762, and whose children were: Mary; Margaret; Robert, born at Strangeburnfoot; John (b.1769) also at Strangeburnfoot; James, who married Barbara Oliver; and Elizabeth. He died at Clessleepeel. James (b.c.1772) son of James and Janet Oliver. He married Barbara Oliver. Their son was John (b.1806), born at ‘Clessleepeel’ in Southdean Parish. James (b.c.1775) son of Peter and Janet Donaldson, he was born at Southdeanmillhead. He married Margaret Wilkie. Their children included: Peter (b.1805), born in Wilton Parish; and Robert (b.1813), born at Clarilaw Moor. James (b.c.1780) probably related to the other Southdean Sintons. In 1816 he married Isabella Fleming, and she died in 1867. Their children were: Robert (d.1897); and William (d.1851). He died in the 1840s, probably at Bonjedward. James (b.c.1821) born in Southdean Parish, son of Peter and Jane Wight. He married Mary Ann Fleming. Their children included: Robert William (b.1875), who was born at Blakedean, Morebattle; and James (b.1883), born in Bedrule Parish. James (b.1841) son of John, from Jedburgh and Mary Ann Gillies. He was born in Denholm. He served as groom to Daniel Mather of Hallrule. He married Mary, daughter of Peter Bruce. Their son John (b.1867) was born in Hawick. He died in Denholm. James (1841–1938) of Eastfield, Joppa, where his house was called ‘Hassendean’. He was born in Cavers Parish, son of John and Mary Gillies. He worked for Blackwood the publishers in Edinburgh. He contributed several articles to the Transactions, as well as editing some other works and bibliographies. He published Leyden’s ‘Tour in the Highlands and Western Islands’ (1903) and wrote ‘Leydeniana’ (1912). His major local contribution, however, was ‘Bibliography of works relating to, or published in Hawick’ (1908), which he stated to be ‘a work of great labour, and it has occupied my leisure time extending over a very considerable period’. This was a more focused extension to his ‘List of books relating to, or published in the Counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, and Peebles’, which appeared as an appendix to Sir George Douglas’ 1899 ‘History of Roxburgh, Selkirk, and Peebles’. His Hawick books contain information about newspapers, maps and music, as well as a thoroughly researched list of books. James (b.1883) son of James and Mary Ann Fleming. He was born in Bedrule Parish. He married Rhoda Carr and his son was also James. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1494/5 when Adam Turnbull in Hornshole had remission for several crimes, including stealing 24 sheep, 3 cows and a horse from his lands in Synton, with the help of James Elliot. He was also witness to a 1508 sasine for the Erskine’s land of Synton; like the other witnesses, he was probably local. He was probably the Laird in 1502 when the estate was attacked by David Scott. It seems likely that he was descended from the original Sintons of Synton. ‘the Lady’) and some Armstrongs, with many sheep and cattle stolen. John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Cuthbertson. Their children were: John (b.1735); and Thomas (b.1739). John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Learmont. Their children were: Katherine (b.1735); Helen (b.1739), perhaps the Helen who died in Hawick in 1808, widow of John Turnbull; Walter (b.1746); Elizabeth (b.1749); and William (b.1750). John (1780–1856) son of William and Isobel Black. He was born in Southdean Parish. He lived at Letham and in Hobkirk Parish. He married Dorothy Eastham, who died in 1844. Their children were: William (b.1807); Richard (b.1810); James (b.1815); and George (b.1817). John (1806–54) son of James and Barbara Oliver. He was born at ‘Clesleepeel’ in Southdeean Parish. In 1829 he married Alison, daughter of John Hall and Betty Briggs. Their children included: Robert (b.1831); John (b.1833); William (b.1836); and James Oliver (b.1848). They were all born in Jedburgh. He died in Argyll and was buried at Eckford. John (1810–65) son of William and Isabella Scott, who was from Hawick. He lived in Denholm. He firstly married Mary Ann Gilles and their children included: John Gillies (b.1843); and James (b.1841), who contributed local history articles. He secondly married Mary Dickson, and their children included: Thomas (b.1856), skinner in Hawick; and Mary (b.1860), who married Adam Huggan, tobacconist in Hawick. John (b.1810/1) from Jedburgh. In 1851 he was a game watcher at Woodside Cottage. He was a widower, living with his children William, Jane, James, Isabella, John and George. John Gilles (1843–1904) born in Cavers Parish, son of John and Mary Ann Gilles. In 1864 he married Isabella Wight in Maxton. Their children were: John (b.1862); Helen (1869–1948); Mary (b.1871); James (1873–1936); George (b.1878) in Hawick; William Wight (1866–95); and Francis Douglas (1882–1971). Marie (13th C.) signatory of the Ragman Rolls in 1296. She was widow of Alexander, the former Sheriff of Selkirkshire. Her seal, attached to the Ragman Rolls, showed a figure of eight rays and the name ‘S'MARIE DE SINTVN’. Also in 1296 she pleaded to the English King for dower lands worth 20 merks, since she had been left a widow for 3 years. Peter (d.1811) cattle dealer at Bairnkine in Southdeean Parish. He also lived at Southdeean Mill. His father may have been James. There is confusion because he is named Patrick in some records. He married Janet Donaldson. Their children probably included: James (c.1773–1855), born at Southdeeanmillfoot; John (b.c.1774), born at Stranegmentfoot; Thomas (1776–1861); Janet (c.1782–1855); Peter (c.1783–1866); Margaret (c.1790–1869); Isabella (1792–1869), who married Richard Robinson; and Cecilia (c.1795–1877), who married William Thomson. He was buried at Abbotrule. Peter (c.1783–1866) son of Peter and Janet Donaldson, he was born in Southdeean Parish. He married Jane Wight. Their children included: Peter (b.1808), who was born at Ruletownhead; and James (b.c.1821), who was born in Southdeean. Peter (b.1805) son of James and Margaret Wilkie. He was born in Wilton Parish. He married Marion Ker and their children included Alexander (b.1839), who was born in Midlothian. Peter (b.1808) born at Ruletownhead, son of Peter and Jane Wight. He married May Scott, and their son was John (b.1859), who was born in Corseside, Northumberland. Robert (17th C.) resident in Ashkirk listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Robert (b.1813) born at Clarilaw Muir, son of James and Margaret Wilkie. Their children included Robert (b.1852), who was born at Raelies in Selkirkshire. Robert (c.1817–97) born in Southdeean Parish, son of James and Isabella Fleming. He married Helen Scott. Their children included: George (b.c.1845); Robert (b.1847); William (b.1856); and John (b.1866). Robert (b.1818) born in Hobkirk Parish, son of Thomas and Mary Elliot. He married Isabella Oliver, and their children included Thomas (b.1851), who was born at Lanton. Thomas (1776–1861) son of Peter and Janet Donaldson. He was born in Southdeean Parish. He married Mary Elliot. Their children included Robert (b.1818), who was born in Hobkirk Parish. Thomas (b.1856) son of John and Mary Dickson. He was a skinner in Hawick. His sister Mary married tobacconist Adam Huggan. He married Annie Scott and their children included: John (b.1878); and Walter (b.c.1886). William (16th C.) Burgess of Selkirk. His surname is recorded as ‘Synton’ in a charter of 1588 relating to lands in Selkirk in the Melrose chartulary. Given the location it seems likely he is a descendant of the family from Synton. William (17th/18th C.) married Isobel Dryden in Roberton Parish in 1714. William (b.1718) born in Duns, son of John and Janet Scott. He married Isobel Dunlop. His children included: James (b.1760), who was born in Ashkirk; and Thomas (b.c.1763). William (18th C.) resident at Henwoody in 1764 when his daughter Janet was baptised in Roberton Parish. William (b.1766) was probably also his son. William (b.c.1750) probably born in Jedburgh and related to the Southdeean Sintons. He married Isobel Black. Their children included: James (b.c.1776); and John (1780–1856), born in Southdeean. William (b.1778) born in Jedburgh. He is presumably closely related to the Southdeean Sintons, but the connection is unknown. He married Isabella Scott in Hawick in 1804. Their children were: James (1805–61); William (1808–73), who lived in Denholm; John (1810–65), who also lived in Denholm; Thomas (b.1813); Andrew (c.1816–68); and Adam (b.1819). There are many descendants living in New Zealand. William (1808–73) son of William and Isabella Scott, his parents being from Jedburgh and Hawick, respectively. He lived in Denholm, probably on Canongate, where he was a farmer and road contractor. In 1851 he was farming 50 acres and employing 2 men. His wife was Jessie Lamb and their children included: William (b.1847); Betsy (b.c.1851); and George (b.1857) (also written ‘Sintone’, ‘Sintoun’ and variants).

Sinton’s Close (sin’-inz-klōs) n. former name for a close at 29 High Street, demolished in 1875 when the property was rebuilt. It was named after a wealthy Bailie who had been the first druggist in town. Afterwards Armstrong the printer began selling drugs there, then a Mr. Wilson started up the same kind of business there.

the Six Aich Brig (thu-siks-ārch-brig) n. popular name for the Slitrig Viaduct, out beyond Lynnwood. It was built in 1860 as part of the line from Hawick to Carlise, and demolished in 1982 (partly because of the danger of people throwing things from it). An early photograph shows the bridge being constructed. A set of steps was built here around 2009, allowing walkers to connect between the road and the former railway line. Whins have rapidly taken over this area. Because of the prominence of the viaduct when entering Hawick from the south, it became widely known as ‘the town with the six-arch bridge’.

skellf (skellf) n. a splinter (note that splice is more common in Hawick).

Skelfhill (skellf-hill) n. farm to the south-west of Hawick, also the name for the surrounding area, in particular the hill Skelfhill Pen. The lands were probably owned by Gavin Elliot of Horsleyhill in the mid-16th century. Robert Elliot of Skelfhill is recorded in 1607, Robert Scott was tenant in 1694 and William Scott in 1711. Surveyed in 1718, it consisted at that time of 2062 acres (including Langleuchside and Fairnyside), bounded by Brugh, Priesthaugh, Billhope, Gorraberry, Linhope, Phaup, Northhouse and Doecleuch. Walter Turnbull was there in 1722. Robert Scott and his son James were tenant farmers there in the 18th century. There is a record of a house being built on the farm by Buccleuch estates in 1763. William Scott is recorded there in 1772 and James Scott was farmer there at least the period 1785–97. William Grieve was there in the 1860s. Tradition has it that the cauldron used to boil William de Soulis was preserved at the farm. It is also said that John Deans (whose gravestone is at St. Mary’s) was killed near here in 1546 while defending his neighbour’s goods. There was a Common Riding ride-out there in 2006. Aerial photography shows an enclosure about 200 m north-west of the farmhouse – ‘At the Skelf-hill, the cauldron still The men of Liddesdale can show . . .’ [JL], ‘I’d spend my life wi’ her my wife – The bonnie lass o’ fair Skelfhill’ [JoHa], ‘Sae we’ll over by the Skelfhill Pen As sune as the sun gangs doon, An’ we’ll rest neither horses nor men Till we’ve har- ried some English toon’ [TK] (the name is probably from a Scandinavian form of the Old English ‘skelf’ meaning a shelf, referring to the shape of the hill and with the old p-Celtic ‘pen’ like in the nearby Penchrise; the name appears at least as early as 1569 and is ‘Scheffhill’ in 1772; it has its modern form by Blaeu’s 1654 map, although it is ‘Skelfhill’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Skelfhill Burn (skellf-hil-burn) n. stream rising on Langtæ Hill and running roughly to the north for about 3½ miles to become part of the Allan Water near Skelfhill farm.

Skelfhill Craig (skelf-hil-kråg) n. hill region just to the north of Skelfhill farm.

Skelfhillhope (skelf-hil-höp) n. shepherd’s cottage on the upper Skelfhill Burn, probably the same as Skelfhillshiel. William Nichol was shepherd there in the mid-19th century. It is now derelict (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, and with buildings still indicated on the modern map).

Skelfhill Pen (skelf-hil-pen) n. prominent hill, height 532 m (1,749 ft), located south-west of Hawick. It is often just called Skelfhill. Like other peaks in the area, it is largely made of igneous rocks, in this case trachyte, with complex intrusions of other mineral types. It has a triangulation pillar and adjacent cairn. The cairn was re-erected by the local children to celebrate the Jubilee of Queen Victoria in 1887 – ‘On my hills the moonbeams play From Craik-cross to Skelfhill- pen, By every rill, in every glen . . .’ [SWS] (a local remnant of the ancient Brythonic word for hill, ‘pen’).

Skelfhillshiel (skelf-hil-sheel) n. former steading on the upper part of the Skelfhill Burn, later called Skelfhillhope (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

He was a clerk living at about 55 High Street in 1841, and at about 25 Buccleuch Street in 1851, when he was ‘Clerk to Nursery & Seedsman’. By 1861 he is listed as a seedsman at 25 High Street. He is probably the agent for British fire insurance listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory and is listed as a ‘clerk’ on Buccleuch Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Mary, from Wishaw. Their children included Mary Ann, Thomas P., John C., Isabella, George J. and Margaret. He was one of the first deacons of Hawick Free Kirk, also acting for a short time as Treasurer. He was declared bankrupt in 1864. Thomas (18th/19th C.) groom at Midshiels in 1797, when he was working for Archibald Douglas.

skinners (ski-nurz) n. once one of the 7 incorporated trades in Hawick, which until 1861 had two representatives on the Town Council. They were the fourth oldest of the Town’s incorporations, being incorporated in 1694, and sometimes also called the ‘skinners and glovers’ (although it is possible they were separate bodies at one time).

the Skirmish Field (ski-rul-ru-lur) n. meadow by the river Tweed near Melrose, which was the site of a battle of 1526. Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch with about 600 Scots, Elliots and supporters from Liddesdale and Annandale tried to wrest the young King James V (supposedly at the King’s request) from the control of the Earl of Angus and his local allies the Kers and the Homes. Scott failed in this attempt and lost 84 men in the struggle (including John of Ashkirk), while Andrew Ker of Cessford was also killed at ‘Turn Again’ (possibly by an Eliott of Stobs, although this predates their ownership of the estate). This led to a feud between the Scotts and the Kers, which lasted for decades. After the battle James Elliott was hanged for treason. In 1527 a number of local lairds had remission for mustering their supporters at this battle, specifically Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, John Cranston of that Ilk, James Hoppringle, Walter Scott in Syn- ton, Robert Scott of Allanhaugh, Robert Scott in HowPasley, William Scott of Hassindean, John Scott of Borthaugh, Philip Scott in Headshaw, William Turnbull of Minto, Robert Turnbull in Hallrule, John Scott of the Walls, Simon Scott of Fenwick and Master Michael Scott. The battle is also known as the ‘Battle of Darnick’ and the ‘Battle of Melrose’. The Waverley Castle Hotel, the first concrete building in Scotland, was built on the site (also known as ‘Skirmish Hill’). Another nearby hill, known as ‘the Charge Law’ was where Buccleuch gathered his men for the attack, while ‘Turn Again’ is a small eminence where Scott’s men rallied and Andrew Ker was killed. This event is said to have been marked by a standing stone, which still exists.

slack handfi (slawk-hawnd-fi) n. an amount of something, such as sweets, that fits into a loose palm – ‘Gie iz a slack handfi o Hawick Baas’.

Slackhills (slawk-hilz) n. farm recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John Kedzie was farmer there, with 2 horses working on the farm. Given that this occurs in the list between Teindside and Commonside, it is possibly an error for Slaidhills.

Slacks (slawks) n. former farmstead in South-dean Parish, north-east of the hamlet of South-dean. There are still remains of the peel tower can be seen there, as well as signs of several other buildings, enclosures and agricultural development. The farmstead was probably just to the south-east of the tower. To the south and west are extensive rig lines, partly erased by cultivation. A field to the north-west shows an old turf boundary and south of the peel is an old turf-walled enclosure, as well as several apparent phases of boundary and enclosure banks. It was valued at 44 shillings in the Exchequer Rolls of 1538 and 1539. In 1541 Thomas and John were tenants of part valued at 22s, with Charles tenant of the remaining part valued at 11s. John Oliver was a tenant in 1544. William Oliver was recorded there in 1583. George, William and John Oliver are recorded as tenant farmers in ‘Slacks’ in 1669. Margaret Oliver was there in 1684. The 1694 Hearth Tax Return lists 3 hearths at ‘Slacks’. But the settlement seems to have disappeared in the 18th century (also written ‘Slacks’ with no apophthegm; it is ‘Slaikis’ in 1538 and 1539, ‘Slakiss’ in 1541, ‘Slakis’ in 1544, ‘the Slakkis’ in 1571/2, ‘Slakes’ in 1583 and ‘Slaixes’ in 1694; it is marked ‘Slack’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map on the south side of the river, roughly opposite where Southdean Mill lies, but is absent from 18th century maps).

Slack’s Toor (slawks-toor, -tow-ur) n. ruined 16th century tower in Southdean Parish, located near the head of a stream off the Jed Water, to the north-east of the hamlet of Southdean. The peel tower had 3 floors, with a plan 12 m by 7.5 m (a little longer than other local towers). The gables are still standing. There are also signs of 3 buildings immediately to the north and 3 more to the south-east, as well as an earlier tower to the east, all part of an archaeological survey in 1991. The area around the tower shows signs of a complex settlement, with extensive agricultural development. Just south-east of the tower are the remains of a farmstead, with some enclosures, presumably the farm of Slacks.

slaed (slād) n., arch. a sled, formerly used to transport goods – ‘...Where first I pou’d the rasp and slaed, On the Bank aboon the Bosice’ [DA].

slae (slā) n., arch. sloe, blackthorn, wild plum, Prunus spinosa – ‘...Where first I pou’d the rasp and slaed, On the Bank aboon the Bosice’ [DA].

slaid (slād) n., arch. a sled, formerly used to transport goods – ‘They fynding ane slaide made of ash and the other of aicke up standing at the sd George Renwicke’s, the ane tramme tharrof being of ash and the other of aicke ...’[BR1686].

Slaidhill see Slaidhills

Slaidhills (slād-hilz) n. farmstead above Teindside, sometimes called the singular ‘Slaidhill’ and also formerly known as ‘Slatchill’ and ‘Slatehills’. An earlier name for essentially the same area is ‘Almondslands’. The lands were part of the estate of Teindside and Harwood owned by the Abernethy family from the late 14th to late 15th centuries. The lands were held by the Countess of Bothwell in 1580 when there was a raid by Ellliots and Armstrongs, who stole 12 cows and oxen and ‘left ane of hir servandis lyand for deid’. Francis, Earl of Bothwell had the lands confirmed to him in 1585. It is ‘Almonslandis alias Slaidhills’ when listed among the Baron of Hawick’s properties in 1615. It is probably the ‘Steadhills’ listed (along with Teindside, Harwood and Carlinpool) among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1634, 1653, 1661 and 1663. In 1681 Thomas, son of Thomas Crawford, merchant in Edinburgh, was served heir to the lands of ‘exterioribus et interioribus de Slaidhills’ and in 1683 the next Thomas was served heir to his grandfather Thomas in the same lands. William Elliot was tenant in ‘outer slaidhills’ in 1694. William Waugh was tenant there in 1699, with William Oliver, William Waugh and John Waugh recorded in 1701. In the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch Outer Slaidhill and Inner Slaidhill are listed separately: Outer Slaidhill consisted of 366 acres, bounded by Brauxholme Moor, Hott, Inner Slaidhill, Commonside, Woodburn and Chisholme; and Inner Slaidhill lay to the south and was not a Buccleuch property. Christopher Grieve was there in about 1822. Robert Grieve was shepherd there in 1851, and weaver James Lamb also lived there. About 350 yards north-east of the farmhouse are the remains of a hill-fort on a rocky knoll. The inner area is about 205 ft by 105 ft oriented east-west, with an entrance on the north side. There are 2 other forts on Teindside Hill just to the south (the origin of the name is probably Old English ‘slaed hyll’, meaning ‘the hill with the hollow in it’, referring to the shape of the hill to the east of the farm, with the 2 apparent summits probably also explaining the sometimes plural form; the name occurs as ‘Sleidhills’ in 1494, ‘Slaideois’ in 1581, ‘Slaidhill’ in 1585, ‘Slaidhills’ in 1634, ‘Sledhills’, ‘Slaichtilles’ in 1664, ‘Sledhill’s in 1693, ‘Slatehills’ in 1701 and ‘Slatehills’ in the 1851 census; it is ‘Slidhills’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Slatcchills’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Slaidhills Moss (slād-hilz-mos) n. marshy region to the north of Slaidhills farmstead, in the headwaters of Vales Burn. It is printed as ‘Slaightill Moss’ in William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’, when he is describing the course of the Catrain.

slaiger (slā-gur) v., poet. to besmear, handle sloppily – ‘In slow retreat, wi’ sloper’ feet, I placht an’ slaiger hame’[WaD], ‘But noo awat,

it is shallower far, When sae aft it’s slaigered oot o’ a jar’ [WL].

slains (slâns) n., arch. indemnity, particularly in the phrase ‘letters of slains’, being a document issued by the family of a murdered person stating that reparation had been made – ‘In witness quhairoff we haue subscryvitt thir present letarris of slains, as efter followis, at Hawik . . .’ [SB1581] (from the Early Irish ‘slâin’).

slaip-mowd (slâp-mowd) adj., arch. smooth-talking – ‘Fortune, . . . Aul’ slaip-mow’d luck!’ I mean but to address ye’ [JoHa].

slaipy (slâ-pee) adj., arch. deceitful – ‘Thou rows thy fibber i’ thy slaipie cheek’ [JoHa].

Slitridge  (sli-rij) n. former name and spelling for Slitrig, used in the 17th and 18th centuries. ‘The water of Slittridge’ is recorded in a 1687 sasine and it is ‘Slitridge Water’ on Wood’s 1824 map.

the Slitrig  (thu-sli-reeg, -rig, -reek, -rik) n. Slitrig Water, river that rises near Windburgh and joins the Teviot at Hawick, flowing for approximately 11 miles (17.5 km). It formerly divided the town into its east and west halves, and for centuries there was only one bridge across it, the ‘Auld Brig’. It is prone to rise rapidly, and has caused some of the most infamous town floods. The river rises in several headwaters, Flosh Burn and Leap Burn meeting, becoming Lang Burn and being joined by Langside Burn where the Slitrig proper starts. After that it is joined by: Hope Sike; Pennrshire Burn; Gibby’s Sike; Coggsmill Burn; Barnes Burn; Pagton Burn; Horsley Burn; Acreknawe Burn; Flex Burn and the Smaile Burn – ‘...Where Slitrig dances doon the glen’ [JT], ‘...And the Slitrig aye filling wi’ rain’ [FH], ‘Where the Slitrig and Teviot meet, With nature’s charms replete, There are beauties rare Beyond compare Where the Slitrig and Teviot meet’ [TK] (the origin is uncertain, ‘rith’ being Old English for ‘stream’, with the first element perhaps related to ‘slite’, a narrow opening, or ‘slitan’ to split, or even possibly ‘slitter’; it is first mentioned as ‘Slitrith’ in Reginald of Durham’s book on St. Cuthbert, where it is suggested that the name comes from the river abounding with fish, and although the connection with any words relating to an abundance of fish seems obscure, it is possible it is ‘slitte’, meaning animals for slaughter; there are a variety of earlier spellings, e.g. ‘Slytryk’ in 1433, ‘slitrirk’ in 1493 and 1502, ‘Slytryk’ in 1532 and ‘Slitrik’ in 1547/8; it is still ‘Slidderick’ in 1795, ‘Slitrige’ in 1821 and ‘Slitrige’ in 1839; it is ‘Slitrick R.’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Slittrick’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map).

Slitrig Bank  (sli-reeg-bawngk) n. house occupied by shoemaker Peter Wilson in the late 18th century, now being 1 Slitrig Bank. It was probably built a little before 1800. It was the headquarters for the Napoleonic prisoners-of-war, and partitions in the cellar may related to this use. The house is shown in a painting of about 1813; this painting exists in a photograph, but the original is lost. The current house is 2-storeys with an attic, in a rectangular plan, built of whinstone rubble and with sandstone dressings. It is a grade C listed building.

Slitrig Bank  (sli-reeg-bawngk) n. short street between St. Mary’s and the Slitrig. It was named after the house of the same name, which is now 1 Slitrig Bank. The rest of the street was developed in the period 1850–55. A house there (probably the same No. 1) was the headquarters for the French prisoners of war in the period 1812–14, later the residence of George Scott the builder.

Slitrig Brig  (sli-reeg-brig) n. Slitrig Bridge, the name originally given to the main bridge over the Slitrig, built in 1776–77, and later named Drumlumrig Bridge. The name may have been John Haldane of Gala and James Wood of Hawick, both of whom were made Honorary Burgesses in 1776. The name is recorded as an address in Pigot’s 1837 directory, presumably referring to houses around Silver Street or the Tower Knowe. The same name is also sometimes used for the bridge over the Slitrig at the bottom of the Kirk Wynd, more properly called the Slitrig Crescent Bridge. It may be that the ‘Auld Brig’ was also once known by this name – ‘On Slitrig Brig on that summer morn ...’ [DN].

Slitrig Cauld  (sli-reeg-kawld) n. name sometimes used for the weir near Lynnwood House, which supplied the water for the main Slitrig mill

lade, ‘the Back Dam’ (not to be confused with Lynnwood Cauld, which was further upriver).

Slitrig Cottage (sli’-reeg-ko’-ee) n. name sometimes used for No. 1 The Village. The house probably dates from the late 18th century and is 2 storeys plus attic. It is shown on Wood’s 1824 plan of Hawick in a drawing by M. Thirat in 1813, showing no windows to the right of the principal elevation. It is a grade C listed building. Note that the name was also used in the 1871 census for the house later called ‘Slitrig Villa’, where Backdamgate meets Slitrig Crescent.

Slitrig Cottages (sli’-reeg-ko’-ee-jeez) n. former name for the block of houses on the east side of Liddesdale Road south of Stonefield, also called Stonefield Cottages. These houses had the mill lade running in front of them, with a footbridge to reach the houses.

Slitrig Crescent (sli’-reeg-kre-sin’) n. crescent shaped, one-sided street along the south bank of the Slitrig, still occasionally known by its former name ‘the Crescent’. It was developed around 1799–1805 and was one of the first ‘suburbs’ of the town, the land having previously been known as Duntersdales. The original buildings were a row of 2-storey terraces, only a few of which retain their original details. In 1831 the houses here were the first in Hawick to have gas installed. The street was once very dirty on the river side, until retaining walls were built at the end of the 19th century, and the land tidied up as a small park. The street also contains St. Cuthbert’s Church, and for a long time had the Whisky House Mill, sometimes used for No. 1 The Village. The house later called ‘Slitrig Villa’, where Backdamgate meets Slitrig Crescent.

Slitrig Crescent Brig (sli’-reeg-kre-sin’-brig) n. stone bridge over the Slitrig, connecting the Kirk Wynd with Slitrig Crescent. The present structure was built in 1864, replacing a footbridge (shown on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map), which in turn replaced an earlier iron footbridge destroyed in the 1846 flood. It is said to have been built in only 10 days. There was no bridge there in the early 19th century, but the ‘wire bridge’ was nearby, and there was also an adjacent ford. The footbridge is recorded in the 1846 Town Treasurer’s accounts as ‘Wooden Bridge at Kirk Wynd Foot’. The present structure is a sandstone bridge of a single arch, containing the Ordnance Survey 360 foot benchmark.

It seems to have no generally agreed name, being referred to in many other ways, including ‘the Kirkwynd Brig’. It is a grade C listed building.

Slitrig Dam (sli’-reeg-dawm) n. the main mill lade fed by the Slitrig, and the oldest one in Hawick. It probably pre-dated the 1537 Charter, although presumably was lengthened over the years. It was fed by a cauld near Lynnwood House and ran along the east side of Liddesdale Road and Slitrig Crescent, providing water power for Stonefield Mills and Hawick Corn Mill, as well as water for Slitrig Dyeworks. It was filled in in the early 1970s when new housing was constructed in the area.

Slitrig Dyeworks (sli’-reeg-di-wurks) n. dyeing factory on Slitrig Crescent, also known as Turnbull the Dyers.

Slitrig (sli’-rij) n. another alternative spelling for ‘Slitrig’.

Slitrig Place (sli’-reeg-plis) n. former street behind Slitrig Bank House, at an angle between Slitrig Bank and the Kirk Wynd, named in 1878 after the River Slitrig. It was demolished around 1973/4 when a road through to Slitrig Bank was constructed in its place.

the Slitrig Road (thu-sli’-reeg-ro’d) n. name sometimes used to refer to Liddesdale Road and its continuation up the Slitrig valley.
Slitrig Viaduct

Slitrig Viaduct (sli’-reeg-vi-a-dukt) n. railway bridge crossing the Slitrig just south of Hawick, demolished in 1982, and popularly referred to as the Six Arch Bridge. Lynnwood Cauld, essentially under the viaduct, directed water through a mill lade that fed Lynnwood Mill.

Slitrig Villa (sli’-reeg-vi-la) n. former name for a house at the corner of Backdamgate and Slitrig Crescent, also known as ‘Slitrig Cottage’. George Hobkirk and his wife were living there in 1861 and 1871, and the new name was used in 1891 and 1901. The building still exists, although it has been altered, with the original front door has been built up.

the Slitrig Witter (thu-sli’-reeg-wi’-ur) n. full name for Hawick’s second river, the Slitrig.

Slitrith (sli’-rith) n. first spelling of ‘Slitrig’ known, occurring about 1170 in Reginald of Durham’s history of St. Cuthbert. It is stated (in translation) that ‘there was a certain chapel, in a place which had obtained the name Slitirth from a river full of fish’ (this may be a clue to the origin of the river’s name, but it is unclear exactly what was meant).

slitten (sli’-in, sli-tin) pp., arch. slit, undone, said particularly of ripped out sewing – ‘Wull ee steek this slittin oxter afore it geets ony worse?’[ECS] (also written ‘slittin’; past participle form of slite, with the past tense being slait).

Small (smal) n. Adam (16th/17th C.) granted a half husbandland of land in Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. He was described as ‘son of Thomas there’. Adam (18th/19th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He is probably the Adam, son of shoemaker John and Helen Aitkin, born in 1758. His name is recorded as ‘Smeal’ in about 1810 when his wife Jean Phillips died. Their son John was born in 1786. Adam ‘Yeddie’ (b.c.1780) joiner on Bourtree Place, his premises located behind No. 8. This is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. He was listed on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory and was recorded being at ‘Eastend’ on the 1841 census. Probably the same man was listed as a wright on the High Street on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. At one point he owned the entire property from 6 to 16 Bourtree Place and all the way back to the railway line. He could be the Adam born in Jedburgh in 1779. His wife was Eliza. His children included Margaret (who married iron-monger Charles Scott) and Alison (who married roper William Munro). Alexander (16th/17th C.) son of William. He was granted a half husbandland and a cottage-land in Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. His father was also granted land at the same time. They were presumably residents of the village of Lilliesleaf at that time. Alexander (17th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. George (17th C.) resident of Minto Kames who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. George (b.c.1780) toll-keeper at Spittal Toll. His wife was Janet. George (b.1810/1) from Ancrum, he was a blacksmith in Denholm. He is recorded on the 1841 census and by 1861 was at around Leyden Road. His wife was Agnes, and their children included John, Margaret and George. He secondly married Janet, and had step-daughter Janet Brown, as well as children Robert W., James D. and Mary. James (19th C.) purchaser of the farm of Catshawhill in Lilliesleaf Parish. This was sometime before 1837. He was a nurseryman and seedsmen. He was probably succeeded by William. James (19th C.) farm steward at Timpendean in the mid-to-late 1800s, working for Mr. Elliot Boag. He married Margaret, daughter of William Oliver, hind at Langraw. James (1828–1905) from Jedburgh, brother of printer John. He became a banker with the National Bank in Kelso, opening the branch in Earlston. He then moved to the Commercial Bank, working in Earlston, Galashiels, then Kirkcaldy, and eventually becoming Secretary of the head office of the Commercial Bank in Edinburgh. He was strongly connected with Rulewater, meeting his wife Margaret Boa there, and being a keen angler of the Rule and Jed Waters. He wrote verse under the pen-name ‘Matthew Gotterson’ and under this name published the poem ‘The Callant’ in the Scotsman in 1889 (reprinted in ‘Hawick Songs and Recitations’ in 1892): this was used as the anthem for the Callants’ Club, the third verse being put to music by Addie Ingles in the late 1940s, and the words were erroneously attributed to J.E.D. Murray in the 2001 Hawick Songs anthology. A version of the ballad ‘Little Jock Elliot’ was written under this pen-name. He also wrote extensively on angling topics and was a President of the Berwickshire Naturalists' Club. He wrote an extensive article on the Catrail in 1880, having tried to trace it course for several days accompanied by Mr. Craig-Brown and Mr. Elliot of Hollybush, as well as local farmers and shepherds. He was also a keen Volunteer, being an officer of the Border Battalion and Secretary of the Border Rifle Association. Additionally he was involved as treasurer or secretary of the agricultural societies in Selkirkshire as well as the Landward School Board. His wife died later the same year he did. John (17th C.) merchant in Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to Thomas, who was listed right before him. John (17th C.) wright in Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He was probably related to other Smails living there. John (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He married Helen Aitkin and their children included: Jean (b.1758); and Adam (b.1761). The witnesses to the 1758 baptism were James Oliver and Walter Aitkin. John (18th C.) listed as owner of a ‘House and Yard’ in Minto Parish in 1779, valued at £1 16s 7d. It was owned by Lord Minto in 1811. John (b.1785/6) born at Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish, he was a cadger and carrier in St. Boswells. In 1852 he is recorded running a cart between Lilliesleaf, St. Boswells and Kelso. His wife was Esther and their children included: Janet (b.1808); John (b.1810); and Adam (b.1811). The witnesses to the 1808 baptism were John with his father Thomas, and his mother Janet. John (18th C.) listed as one of the tenants of Skelfhill and neighbouring farms in a bond of security signed in Hawick in 1569. His name is listed as ‘Mar- tine Smaill’. Robert (b.1798/9) born in Ancrum, he was a farmer at Hillhead in Lilliesleaf Parish. His brother John also helped run the farm. In 1851 they were farming 41 acres and employing 1 labourer. Another brother, William, also lived on the farm. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in a document of 1561/2, agreeing that Thomas Young, his brother-in-law, should occupy some lands in Lilliesleaf during his mother’s life. His mother was Elizabeth (‘Bessie’) Riddell, presumably related in some way to the Riddells of that Ilk. His sister was Margaret. He may be the Thomas in Lilliesleaf whose son Adam was granted land in the village in 1595/6. Thomas (17th C.) resident in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to merchant John, who was also listed there. Thomas (18th C.) tenant farmer in Borthwickbrae in the Horse Tax Rolls for 1787–88. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Catshawhill in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was probably related to William, who farmed at Raperlaw. Thomas (19th/20th C.) driver of the Wolfelee estate carts (mainly coal from Hawick) under 3 separate Lairds. He married Mary, daughter of Thomas Baptie and a Buck. Hawick) under 3 separate Lairds. He married Margaret. He may be the Thomas in Lilliesleaf whose son Adam was granted land in the village in 1595/6. Thomas (17th C.) resident in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to merchant John, who was also listed there. Thomas (18th C.) tenant farmer in Borthwickbrae in the Horse Tax Rolls for 1787–88. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Catshawhill in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was probably related to William, who farmed at Raperlaw. Thomas (19th/20th C.) driver of the Wolfelee estate carts (mainly coal from Hawick) under 3 separate Lairds. He married Mary, daughter of Thomas Baptie and a Buckham. He retired to Hawick. William (16th/17th C.) granted a half husbandland of land in Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. His son Alexander was also granted land at the same time. William (17th C.) tenant in Harwood in Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Turnbull. Their son William was born in 1687. He could be the William born to Martin and Helen ‘Furgrie’ in Hawick in 1635. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Catshawhill in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1785. In 1786 he was ‘of Catch’ at Raperlaw. His surname was given as ‘Smeal’ in 1788, when he was recorded as owner of Catshawhill. He was still at Raperlaw in 1797. He is probably the William ‘Smail’ recorded as possessor of the land of ‘Kaim’s-muir park’ in 1780. In the Land Tax Rolls of 1811 (although the information came from earlier) he was listed as owner of Catshawhill and part of Raperlaw. He may have been father of James of Catshawhill who recorded later. Probably the same William at Raperlaw subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Probably the same William of Catshawhill served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. His name was recorded as William ‘Sonmail of Catshawill’ in the 1819 list of Commissioners of Roxburghshire (formerly written ‘Smail’, ‘Smaile’ and ‘Smeal’).

Smalcleugh (smal-kloch) n. former house about 3 miles south of Jedburgh in Southdean Parish. It was near the foot of the Smal Cleuch, on the opposite side of the Jed Water from Ferniehirst Mill. The farm was in the 17th century the residence of the famed Ringan Oliver, who was said to have lived in a tower there. There was a blacksmith’s there in the 19th century (also written ‘Smalcleuch’). Smaile see Smail Smaile Burn (smal-burn??) n. stream now running underground from the Nipknoes to Haggishaa, with the original course being over the Vertish, and on to the Slitrig. The name was in use from at least as early as the 15th century. The springs that feed it provided an early town water supply (1797–1865), conveyed in lead pipes to a reservoir at the top of the Loan (the origin is probably from Old English for ‘small’; the name occurs in 1433 as ‘Smaleburne’ and is ‘Smale Burn’ in 1448).

Smailholm (sma-lum) n. village north-west of Kelso, with Smailholm Tower, the 18th century Smailholm House and a church dating back to the 13th century, last rebuilt in the 19th. Robert Ker of Altonburn had a charter of the lands in 1404 and Robert Pringle had a charter probably not many years later. The lands were held by Lord Cranston in 1502. In 1544 it was raided by men of Tynedale and Redesdale, taking 600 cattle, 100 horses and 100 prisoners. Also the name of the surrounding Parish of northern Roxburghshire, bounded by Kelso and Makerstoun, as well as Berwickshire. According to one story, St. Cuthbert was born in the nearby village of Wrangham, which has entirely disappeared. It is said that it was the first parish to divide its common land, starting a trend that would sweep across Border parishes, including Hawick, Wilton, Hassendean, etc. ‘Book of the Bazaar, On Smailholm Men, Smailholm Parish and Smailholm Church’ (1896) was written by William Lamb Sime (the origin is probably Old English ‘smael ham’, meaning ‘the narrow village’; the name first appears in 1160).

Smalholm (sma-lum) n. Henry (d.bef. 1364) admitted as Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1354, with his name written ‘Smailham’. He served until his death.

Smalholm Too (sma-lum-toor, -tow-ur) n. 5-storey 15th century peel tower on an isolated crag near Smalholm village, about 6 miles west of Kelso, renovated in the 1980s and now housing a museum. It may have originally been built by the Kerrs for the eldest son of Ferniehirst. The existing tower was probably built by the Pringles. It was the subject of many raids in the 16th century, and was sold to the Scotts of Harden in 1645. It is sometimes also called ‘Sandyknower’ from the farm and hillock on which it stands. Sir Walter Scott regarded it as very inspirational in his youth – ‘These crags, that mountain tower, which charmed my fancy’s waking hour …’ Methought grim features, seemed with scars, Glared through the window’s rusty bars’ [SWS], ‘At Smalholm’s Tower, Scott’s youthful hours Were nursed in song and story’ [RF].

Smairg (smårg) adj., v. to bedaub, besmear – ‘…for thay smairg inequitie apon me, an’ in wreath thay hate me’ [HSR], ‘…an a smairggin rowk feiles ilka thing’ [ECS], to smear sheep with a tarry mixture to protect the fleece against vermin.

Smairt (smær’) adj., v. smart (also the more common smert).

Small (smaw, smawel) n. James (17th C.) listed along with Andrew Robson in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. Together they paid tax on £390 for the lands of the Laird of Haining (probably John Pringle). William (18th C.) leased the lands of Boghall (presumably in Wilton) from Scott of Harden in 1749 for 11 years.

Small-pox (smaw-, smal-poks) n. contagious viral disease, which was a major source of death across Europe until well into the 19th century. It was not always fatal (Mary, Queen of Scots and Elizabeth I of England both contracted it), but it often left victims scarred or blind. Hawick was hit by a particularly fatal outbreak in 1821. Immunisation was introduced in the early 19th century, but taken up in a patchy way, and largely among the wealthier classes; its historical effectiveness is still a matter of debate, but ultimately it led to eradication of the disease.

Smally (smæ-ly) adj., arch. small, meagre, under-sized – ‘Smaallie (adj.) = delicately framed (applied especially to a child of frail physique)’ [ECS], ‘A smally brain’ [GW] (also written ‘smallie’; diminutive of smaa).

Smarroch (sma-roch) n., poet. a confused collection, crowd – ‘The dirdums o’ the wheezlebugs Chunter the lee-lang day And for a smarroch o’ scowderdowns My greasly hert is wae’ [DH].

Smasha Hill (sma-w-sha-hill) n. hill to the east of Blawearie at the end of the ‘Hill Road to Roberton’, reaching a height of 335 m. It contains a Bronze Age burial cairn, about 500 m yards east-north-east of the summit, measuring about 10 m in diameter and about 0.4 m high. There are also several others in the vicinity. On the north side of the hill there is a ‘droveway sign-wall’, a section of drystone dyke to indicate the direction for droving, or perhaps as a warning to drovers.

Smat (smat) pp., poet. smote – ‘Behold he smat the rok, that the waters rashed owt …’ [HSR], ‘An’ smat a’ the first-born in Egypt …’ [HSR].

Smatter (sma-ur) n., pl., arch. small pieces, smithereens – ‘Hei broke it inti smatters’ [GW], v., arch. to break into small pieces – ‘The pane he smattered wi’ a pelt’ [HSR], ‘Thou didst smatter the heeds o’ leviathan intil flenders …’ [HSR].

Smeaton (smeec-in) n. John (b.1827/8) born in Dunfermline, he was Governor of Hawick Combination Poorhouse during the 1861 census. He presented some items from Borneo to the Museum in 1863. His wife was Matron and Harriet Smeaton (probably his sister) also worked there.

Smeddum (sme-dum) n., poet. spirit, mettle, common sense, resourcefulness, strength – ‘The smeddum o’ your barmie pills, Gars misers loose their poses, But wi’ your carts ye send twa deils, Like to rive aff folks noses, An’ tear away’[JR], ‘…And pits sic smeddum in my step’ [WL] (from Old English).

Smeeg (smeeg) n., arch. a kiss.

Smert (smer’) adj. smart, clever – ‘deh try ti be smart’, ‘Like to rive aff folks noses, An’ tear away’ [JR].

Smellie (sme-lee) n. James (19th C.) teacher at Ashkirk in the 1860s. He also served as Registrar and Inspector of Poor for the Parish.

Smert (smer’) n. (Smart) Alexander (b.1815/6) born in Stow, he was a baker in Hawick. He is listed on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was at about 39 High Street and in 1861 at 2 Allars Crescent. His wife was Agnes and their children included Alexander William, Agnes, Jane and George. Rev. William (1775/6–1837) from Blackfriars Kirk in Jedburgh, he was ‘probationer’ at Castleton Burgher Kirk following the resignation of Fletcher in 1801. He was said to have done much to inspire confidence in the waning congregation and helped to secure a site for the new church in Newcastleton village. However, he remained only a short time, because in 1802 he was called to Paisley. He died suddenly while returning from a meeting of the Presbytery there. A volume of his sermons was published by his son Rev. William of Linlithgow.

smerter (smer-tur) adj. smarter – ‘...Like panoramic views were cast, still better an’ still smerter’ [VW].

smiddle see smiddy

Smiddielands (sni-dee-lawndz) n. former name for lands in Bedrule Parish, adjacent to Newton. They were included in the lands inherited by William Kerr of Newton in 1637.

smiddies (sni-deez) n. blacksmith’s workshops.

These used to be common and crucial parts of everyday life in Hawick and surrounding area. Local ones included Peter Clark’s at the Sandbed, Rob Young’s of the Back Raw, and 3 in the Fore Raw (including James Bowie and Tom Ferguson), as well as others in the Croon Close, Brougham Place (Murray in the basement of No. 7), Melgund Place (No. 5) and Albion Place. In the mid-19th century there must have been around a dozen in Hawick. Those of the surrounding countryside included Ashkirk (Kirkhouses), Broughton Bridge, Borthaugh Wudt, Borthwickbrae Burnfit, Cauldmill, Chisholme, Denholm (two), Flex, Forkins (or Unthank), Hassendean, Heap, Hobkirk (Blacklee), Kirkton, Lilliesleaf, Minto, Newmill, (Bedrule) Newton, Park (Coppshaw), Stiches, Stobs, Teviothead (Bowanhill) and Todshawhaugh. The business in the Crown Close (Telfer’s) survived until the late 1970s, and Hook’s on Union Street even more recently. As well as shoeing horses and dealing with other metalwork jobs, through much of the 18th and 19th centuries they were also responsible for performing tooth extractions as well as bleedings for various ailments. Adam Scott is recorded as smith in Hawick in 1640 and ‘Hew Elliot’ in 1642.

smiddy (sni-dee) n. a smithy, blacksmith’s workshop – ‘He took the horses next to Boa’s smiddy to get their shoes taken off’ [RM], ‘And in winter we wed gather round the bleezin’ smiddy hearth ...’ [JT], a frame-smith’s or mechanical workshop in a mill (also spelled ‘smiddie’).

smiddy-end (sni-dee-end) n., arch. gable wall of a blacksmith’s – ‘A dandert aboot amang the auld byres an smiddy-ends’ [ECS], ‘Oh, the Auld Smiddy end, where in youth’s happy day A merry band o’ bairnies wed gather at their play’ [JT].

smirr (smir) n., poet. drizzle, light rain – ‘A smirr o’ rain was fa’in That buid to spoil the day’ [WL], ‘There cam’ a blast wi’ smirr o’ snaw

smitch (smich) n., poet. Thou art a’ fair, my loe, ther is nae smitch in thee’ [HSR].

Smith (smith) n. Adam (17th C.) listed as a smith on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’. He paid tax on 2 hearths.

Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His son James was baptised in 1696. Agnes (17th C.) resident of Hallrule who was listed among the poor in Hobkirk Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Sir Alan (1917 – ) R.A.F. pilot who fought alongside Douglas Bader and was awarded the D.F.C. He was later an industrialist, being a strong Tory supporter and becoming a friend of Margaret Thatcher. He ran Dawson International from 1970. He was Chief Guest at the 1986 Common Riding. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Appletreehall. He married Margaret Laidlaw in 1766, and their children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included: James (b.1767); Isabel (b.1770); John (b.1772); Susanna and Christy (b.1773); John (again, b.1775); Margaret (b.1778); Peggy (b.1780); David (b.1784); and Alexander (b.1786). The witnesses in 1770 were James Dryden and Thomas Reid and in 1772 were James Dryden and Robert Hume. Alexander (b.1817/8) son of Hawick blacksmith James. He was blacksmith at Appletreehall and later also vet there. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1841. He lived at Appletreehall with his sister Jane. Late in life he married Margaret, from Stranraer. Andrew (17th/18th C.) mason in Bedrule Parish. His children Isobel (d.1690) and William (d.1693) are buried in Bedrule kirkyard. Sir Andrew, M.D. ‘Smithlie fri Soothfield’ (1797–1872) born at Heronhaa near Southfield (also referred to as Winnington Rig), son of a shepherd, he was an Army surgeon who became Director General of the Army Medical Department and is sometimes described as the father of South African zoology. He was baptised in Kirkton Parish, his father being Thomas P., his mother Grizzel Tait, and the location given as Winnington. He was the eldest of 5 children, having 1 brother and 3 sisters. He attended school at Stobs, where he was said to be flogged regularly for playing truant.
In 1809 the family moved to Hassendean and he attended Minto and then Lilliesleaf schools. He had a 3 year apprenticeship with Dr. Walter Graham in Hawick (sometimes given incorrectly as a ‘Mr. Gordon in Roxburghshire’) before training at Edinburgh University and joining the army in 1815, shortly after Waterloo. He trained at various stations around Britain, and later when quartered in Edinburgh, continued his studies at the University, where he received his M.D. in 1819. He went to the Cape in 1820 as a medical assistant to the 72nd Regiment, and was there for 16 years, also being associated with the 49th and 98th Regiments and the Cape Mounted Rifle Corps. He was district surgeon at Albany and in 1822 opened the first free dispensary for native patients in South Africa. He learned much about the indigenous peoples and was sent on several missions to visit tribes beyond the frontier, resulting in a description of the customs of the Xhosa tribes in 1824. Spending much of his leisure time studying natural history, he established a reputation as a zoologist and ethnographer. He reported on the Bushmen and the Amazooloo (specifically the San, Khoi-Khoi and other peoples). In addition his expertise in zoology was sought out by Charles Darwin. He led a 6 month expedition to Port Natal, the report from which ultimately led to the founding of the colony at Natal. He was also the first Superintendent of the South African Museum from 1825. In 1834 he led probably the first scientific expedition into the interior, where he also negotiated treaties, as well as exploring the Oori, Mariqua and Limpopo rivers, returning after 18 months. About 5,000 specimens, 500 drawings and 1800 artefacts were brought back. In 1836 he met a young Charles Darwin when the Beagle stopped at the Cape, showing Darwin rock formations and giving him some rock samples. He returned to Britain in 1837, being promoted to the rank of surgeon and based at Fort Pitt, Chatham. A grant was appropriated to publish his 5 volume ‘Illustrations of the Zoology of South Africa’ (1838–47), which he wrote with no personal remuneration. He identified and named many animals, particularly reptiles and birds. He described more species of South African birds than anyone before or since and Gekko smithii (a gecko), Lepidoplyma smithii (a lizard) and Pangshura smithii (a freshwater turtle) are all named after him. He was also first to formally describe the largest living shark, the white shark, as well as to properly distinguish the genus of the great white shark and to name it ‘Carcharodon’ (so that the species was sometimes called ‘Carcharodon smithii’ as a result). Ill health prevented him publishing the expedition journal, but much of the information appeared elsewhere (and his diaries from 1834–36 were finally published in 1939–40). He continued to be promoted, becoming Principal Medical Officer at Chatham, then Deputy Inspector of Hospitals in London, and by 1853 he was Director General of the Army and Ordnance Medical Department. During the Crimean War he was personally attacked for being responsible for the state of medical care for British troops, with Florence Nightingale calling him the ‘smoke-dried Andrew Smith’. However, his conduct was vindicated after inquiries by several parliamentary committees. He retired in 1858, when he was made a K.C.B. He received numerous other honorary titles and awards, including being Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh, the Zoological Society and of the Royal Society. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1838 on a visit back to Hawick. He also received honorary degrees from Edinburgh and Trinity College, Dublin. He retired from his post in 1858 and was then knighted. In 1844 he married his housekeeper, Ellen Henderson (c.1802–64), and converted to her Roman Catholic faith. After the death of his wife and then his sister, he lost interest in African exploration and scientific writing and went into decline. He died at his home at 16 Alexander Square, London and is buried at Kensal Green Cemetery. There are at least 2 known portraits of him. A plaque (on the right-hand side of the road past Southfield) marks the site of the cottage in which he was born (actually on the opposite side of the road). Annie Henderson nee Cowan (b.1861) daughter of Elliot Cowan and Jeanie Hunter. She was well known locally as a singer, for example, singing ‘Up Wi’ the Banner’ at the 1889 Colour Bussing. She was mother of William, James and Elliot and married to Cornet John, with whom she moved to the Manchester area in the 1890s. She gave a talk to the Archaeological Society in 1935, providing valuable information about 19th century Hawick language and place names. It was said that she insisted on her family speaking Hawick dialect at home in Manchester and their house was a haven for other Teries in Lancashire. Her son Elliot referred to her as ‘a sleet and competent guardian of the vernacular’, and explicitly highlighted her influence in developing his fascination with the dialect of Hawick. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (b.1782) son of
Thomas and Mary Scott ‘The Flooer o Rankleburn’. It is said that as a young man in charge of carts in Berwick, he was press-ganged into joining the crew of a man-of-war. He returned to Rulewater a few years later and married Mary Turnbull (whose sister Ellen has married his brother Peter). One of their sons was found dead at the bottom of a cliff at Edgerston, while a daughter married Robert Taylor. Along with the rest of his family he emigrated to America. Charles (19th C.) grocer on the High Street. He is listed as grocer, spirit dealer and victual dealer on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was Cornet in 1840. He appears to have left the town shortly afterwards. Mysteriously he appears to have fathered an unnamed child who died in 1840. Rev. David (b.1892) educated in Dunfermline and at Edinburgh University. He was licensed to preach by Dunfermline Presbytery and was assistant minister in Dumfries. He was ordained as minister of Saughtree Kirk in 1921. However, he was translated to Inverkeithing the following year, and later went to Ceres. He married Anna Clarke. Elliot Cowan (1891–1917) native of Hawick, whose father, grandfather and great-great-grandfather had been Cornet. His father was John and his mother Annie Cowan. He was a student at Manchester Municipal High School and worked as an accountant. Well read in all forms of literature, he had a particular interest in Scottish writing and the vernacular of Hawick. In 1914 he wrote what is probably the best example of Hawick dialect prose ‘Mang Howes an’ Knowes: a Day’s Dander Throwe Border Waeter-Gates’. This when he was only 23 years old, and after having spent most of his life in the Manchester area, where his family moved. It was published in 1925, with illustrations by his brother, James Dryden. He also contributed the dialect dictionary and discussion ‘Braid Haaick’ to the Transactions, as well as publishing ‘To Dee and Don: recollection and rumination’ (reprinted from the Hawick Express) in 1912. He was also a lover of music, from high opera to old Scottish songs. Never being in robust health, it was said that he was disappointed not to be able to enlist like his 2 brothers. He lived at 61 Carlton Street, Old Trafford, Manchester. He died at the age of only 25 and is buried in the Wellogate. George, A.R.C.O. (19th/20th C.) organist at St. Cuthbert’s in the early 20th century. He gave organ lessons to Adie Ingles. Gilbert (18th C.) house servant at Stirches in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for Gilbert Chisholme. Hamish D. jeweller at Bourtree Place, well known for incorporating local elements into his designs. He was educated at Burnfoot and Hawick High. The ‘Teribus Clock’ has been a feature of his shop since 1996. In 2012 he created a Hawick version of the olympic torch. James (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton. James (17th C.) resident of Spittal-on-Rule on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. James (17th C.) resident in Westerhouses according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hassendean Parish. James (1680/1–1743) blacksmith at Longtown. He had at least 3 children who died young: Archibald (b.1722/3); Mary (b.1725/6); and Agnes (b.1725/6). He was buried in old Wilton Cemetery. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Elspeth (or Elizabeth) Aitken and their children included: Helen (b.1716); Margaret (b.1719); Agnes (b.1723); and James (b.1725). It is possible he was the same as the blacksmith at Longtown. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Armstrong in 1761. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isabel Lees and their children included James (b.1766). James (18th C.) married Jean Davidson in 1775. The marriage was recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Betty Elliot in 1793. James (18th/19th C.) resident at Appletreethall. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He could be the James who married Margaret Oliver in 1800. James (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. An unnamed child of his died in 1809. James (1785–1855) born in Oxnam, son of John. He was blacksmith in Hawick at 5 Melgund Place, and before that at Cauldmill. He may have been a grandson of John, blacksmith at Heap. He is listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory as blacksmith and millwright on Melgund Place along with William (presumably his son). In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed as a blacksmith on Melgund Place. He married Margaret (or ‘Peggy’) Kennedy and she died in 1872, aged 86. Their children included: John (b.1805), born in Wilton Parish; William (b.1807), born in Melrose Parish; James (1809–37); Janet (1811–70); Isabel (1813–29); Robert (b.1815); Helen (b.1817); Margaret, teacher; Charles Kennedy (b.1822); Alexander (b.1824), who was blacksmith at Appletreethall; Joan (1824/5–82), who married shoemaker William Burnet; Thomas Young (b.1827), watchmaker, who emigrated to Australia; Gilbert
her husband established his bakery business on Bridge Street. She taught at Drumlanrig 1964–71, and while there wrote the music for ‘Hurrah! for the Cornet’, to words written by her Primary 5 class. She also wrote a song ‘The Jewel in the Crown’ for the 1970 Burnfoot song competition. In 1971 she remarried, becoming Mrs. Dorward. She died at the Cottage Hospital and was buried in Wilton Cemetery. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His son James was baptised in 1696. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His son James was baptised in 1714. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His wife was ‘Cicil Spinnie’. Their children included James (b.1754). John (18th C.) blacksmith in Stirches. In the records for the division of Wilton Common in the 1760s he is referred to as ‘John Smith, smith in Heip, on the lands of Stirkshaws’. In 1735 he married Margaret Dryden (1712/3–51) in Wilton Parish. Their children included: James (b.1736), who died aged 7; Margaret (b.1739); John (b.1739), who died young; Alexander (b.1741); Isobel (b.1744); and Elspeth (b.1747). John of Spittal (18th C.) made an Honorary Burgess in 1777. John (18th C.) resident at Scaw Mill in Wilton Parish, when he paid the cart tax in 1791. It is possible he was the same as the Stirches blacksmith. John (d.1794) blacksmith at Heap. He must have been son of the previous blacksmith John (or else he was the same man and quite old when he died). He may have been father or grandfather of James, the blacksmith at Cauldmill and at Melgund Place, Hawick. He died at Cavers and is buried in old Wilton Cemetery. Isabel, who died in 1807, aged 27, was buried along with him, and so probably a daughter. John (18th C.) Weaver in Hawick. He married Betty Chain (or ‘Chine’ or ‘Shien’) in Hawick in 1757 and had children: Christian (b.1758); James (b.1760); Walter (b.1762); Robert (b.1764); William (b.1766, probably ‘Wull the Cutler’); and John (b.1768). He was listed as a weaver in the 1764 baptism, when the witnesses were clothiers Gavin and Thomas Turnbull, and also in 1766 when the whole congregation were witnesses. The witnesses in 1768 were fellow weavers Francis Cairns and Robert Chisholme. His son Robert died in 1798. John (18th C.) gamekeeper at Cavers in at least the period 1793–97, when he was working for George Douglas. John (18th/19th C.) innkeeper in Newcastle. He was probably the resident of the village recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1817 his inn was used as the meeting place for creditors of a bankrupt merchant in Newcastle. He was listed as proprietor of a public house in Newcastle on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He was probably the John, innkeeper in Newcastle, who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He may be the carter of that name recorded as male head of household in Newcastle in 1835. John (b.1773/4) from England, he was a shoemaker on the Mid Raw in 1841. Jane and John, who lived with him were probably his children. John (b.1794/5) whip and thong maker on the Howegate. He lived at 8 Howegate, being there in 1841 and 1851, and was at 3 Brougham Place by 1861. He married Elizabeth Dryden (b.c.1801). Their children included: Christian (b.1820/1); James (b.1823/4), who was Cornet in 1846; Helen (b.1826/7); and Walter (b.1835), who was a shoemaker. He could be the John who was born to John in Cavers Parish in 1794, but he was also related to William, ‘Wull the Cutler’. His sister Jenny is said to have gone to Flodden in about 1820 and returned with green twigs to adorn the Cornet’s followers in the procession to the Games. John (19th C.) gamekeeper for the Earl of Minto. A story is told in the 1881 Border Counties’ Magazine of how he kept a pet fox on a chain; it would deliberately scatter barley within reach so that it could catch a hen when it got close enough. John (b.1810/1) born in Edinburgh, he was a baker in Denholm. His shop was probably on Main Street. He married Margaret Eckford and their children included Helen, William, John and Catherine J. John (1827–69) of Darnick (near Melrose). Last major head of the family architects and builders business, John & Thomas Smith. They were responsible for many of the finest Victorian buildings around Melrose, as well as the North Brig in Hawick, the Wallace Statue at Dryden and the Hermitage Water Bridge. He was commissioned to make a survey of the Auld Brig of Hawick before it was demolished in 1851. He was also an early photographer, who took photographs of Queen Victoria’s visit in 1867. He added an east wing to Darnick Tower. His sister Mary married John Elliot of Binks. The Smith Memorial Hall was built in Darnick in his memory. John (19th C.) one of the first professional cricketers in town, playing for the Wilton team in the late 1850s. John (1856–1904) son of Cornet James and sister of Margaret, the matriarch of the Watt family. He was Cornet in 1881, with his own father as Acting Father. He also served as Acting Father in 1886 (2 years after his own father served in this role).
He married Annie Cowan, and their sons were: James Dryden; William, who died at Gallipoli; and Elliot Cowan, who wrote 'Mang Howes an Knowes'. A plumb by trade, he moved with his family to Old Trafford, Manchester in the 1890s. There he became the first Chairman of the Hawick Exiles' Club. Dying at a young age, he was buried in Hawick, being the first Cornet's coffin to be draped with the Burgh Standard. Rev. John (1859–1928) graduating M.A. from Glasgow University in 1888, he was minister at Denholm Free Kirk in 1891. Some of his sermons and a memoriam were collected and published in Hawick in 1891. He was ordained as the 1st minister of Wilton South Kirk in 1886 and B.D. in 1889. He was resident in Kirknewe in Hobkirk Parish. He was recorded as formerly being in possession of an enclosure that was part of Silverbuthall, according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. Rev. Malcolm (1860–91) from the Gillespie area in Glasgow, he graduated M.A. from Glasgow University in 1886 and B.D. in 1889. He was ordained as the 1st minister of Wilton South Kirk in 1890. However, about a year and a half later he drowned while swimming on holiday at Spittal. Some of his sermons and a memoriam were collected and published in Hawick in 1891. Margaret nee Murray (b.1875) daughter of Robert, carpenter at Blacklee, Hobkirk Parish. She married James, eldest son of Thomas Smith, tenant farmer at Tythehouse. They had 3 children, but her husband died as the result of an accident. She later was keeper of the Laidlaw Memorial Hall. Patrick (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny, probably part of the force led by Scott of Buccleuch. He is recorded as ‘Patrick Smyth’. The other men were Scotts, Turnbulls, a Gledstains, a Langlands, a Dalgleish etc., and so he is probably also local. Peter (18th/19th C.) brother of Thomas (tenant of Hartshaugh Mill), he was factor to Elliot of Wolfelee. He was resident in Kirknewe in Hobkirk Parish in 1788 and 1790 when he had children baptised. He was also tenant of Kirknewe in 1797, when he owned 2 horses. In 1807 he bought the lands of Hobkirk Kirkstile (part of Kirknewe) and farmed there. He married and had at least 7 children: Peter (b.1788), who married Helen Scott; Isobel (b.1789); Betty (b.1790); Jane; Margaret (b.1797); Thomas (b.1798); and Walter (possibly b.1802), who emigrated to America. James (b.1793) was probably also his child. Peter (b.1780) eldest son of Thomas and Mary Scott, ‘the Flooer o Rankleburn’. He farmed at Harwood Mill. He was probably the Peter at ‘Harrot’ who subscribed to 6 copies of William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He married Ellen Turnbull, whose sister Mary married his brother Archibald. They had a large family, including: Thomas (b.1801); Walter (b.1803); Peter (b.1804); Archibald (b.1806); Elizabeth (b.1808), who married J. Blake; Mary; Andrew (b.1812); William (b.1814); Mark (b.1815), who died at Lanton; Turnbull (1816–79), farm steward, who died at Hawick; Nelly (b.1818), who married W. Elliot; and Isobel (1821–1898), who died in Hawick. He is said to have been very strict in all things relating to religion. Peter (b.1788) eldest son of Peter, he was factor for James Elliot of Wolfelee in the early 1800s and lived at Kirknewe. In 1823 he married Helen Scott, one of the Scotts of Woodhouse and related to the Turnbulls who farmed at Spittal. Their children were: Isobel or Isabella (1824–49), who married Robert Stewart, farmer at Hawthorndene; Peter (b.1827), who married Isobel Oliver; Betty (b.1830); John (b.1832); and Agnes Scott (b.1835). Peter (1804–86) son of Peter, who was the eldest son of Thomas. He became farmer at Harwood Mill, where he was born. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer at Parkhead in Roberton Parish, in 1851 was at Hunthill and in 1861 he was farm steward at Greeneriver. His cousin Mary married Robert Purdom of Hawick. He himself married Elizabeth ‘Betty’ Ronaldson Dunlop in Coldstream. Their children were: Mary (b.c.1839); Peter (b.1841), who died at Jarrow-on-Tyne; Helen Turnbull (‘Ellen’, b.1843), who married A. Telfer; Williamina (or Mina, b.1847), who married Sandbed baker John Young (and was mother-in-law of J.E.D. Murray); and Elizabeth (or Betsy, b.1852), who emigrated to Queensland. There is a story told of him encountering a ‘spunkie’ (i.e. ‘will-o’-the-wisp’) when riding past Mackside Demmings. He was active until a few years before his death, which occurred at Swanshield. Peter (b.1825/6) toll-bar keeper at Deanbrae in 1851. His wife was Margaret and they had a daughter, Dorothy. Robert (17th C.) Councillor who signed the 1640 ‘Act of Bailies and Council’. Robert (18th C.) farmer in Newton, probably the one in Wilton. He was one of the founders of the secession church, which met in Hawick in 1763. He may be the Robert who is recorded as formerly being in possession of an enclosure that was part of Silverbuthall, according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded as a resident of Whitfield in 1770. He was also farmer in Newton, in Wilton Parish. He was one of the founders of the secession church, which met in Hawick in 1763. He may be the Robert who is recorded as formerly being in possession of an enclosure that was part of Silverbuthall, according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He married Alison Irvine (or ‘Irwin’) and their children included: John (b.1749); Thomas (b.1751); Walter (b.1753); James (b.1755); Janet (b.1758); Nelly (b.1762); Robert (b.1764); and Thomas (again, b.1768). The witnesses in 1770 were James Scott (probably the farmer at Boonraw, who was also an Anti-Burgher) and Walter Irvine (who was surely related to his wife), the baptism carried out by Mr. Arnot, who had previously been connected with the Green Kirk in Hawick. Robert (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. In 1780 it is recorded that he was tenant of ‘House and yard’, with rent of 10s. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at ‘Swin’ in Kirkton Parish, possibly the same place as ‘Swinsteid’. He is recorded there on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1797 as owner of 2 horses. Robert (b.1837/8) drystane dyker in the Hawick area around the 1860s. In the 1861 census he was in Wilton Parish, married to Mary and with daughter Janet.

Ronald ‘Ron’ High Geography teacher who was Assistant Headteacher 1984–2002. He has been heavily involved in Hawick R.F.C., co-editing ‘The Green Machine: 125 years of Hawick rugby’ (1998) and also ‘Glimpses of Green’ (2002). He has been a Scottish Borders Councillor and since 2011 has served as Hawick’s Honorary Provost. Thomas (17th/18th C.) born at Wells in Rulewater. He was described in 1717 as ‘now keeper of ane puppie pleay’ (perhaps a dog entertainment of some kind) when he was fined for assault in Hawick. Thomas (18th C.) footman at Knowe in Minto Parish in 1785, when he was working for Thomas Turnbull. Thomas (1757–1827) brother of Peter, it is unclear where the previous generation came from. He was tenant at Hartshaugh Mill when his children were baptised in 1785 and 1788. He was listed as miller on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he was owner of 2 horses. He is still listed as miller of Hartshaugh Mill recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He married Mary Scott, the ‘Flower of Rankleburn’. Their children were: Peter (b.1780), who married Ellen Turnbull of Harwood Mill; Patrick (b.1781); Robert; Archibald (b.1782), who later emigrated to America; Thomas (b.1784); Andrew (b.1785); Isobel (b.1787); Walter (b.1788), who may have died young; Betty (b.1790); Margaret (b.1791), who married William Crozier; Mary (b.1793), who married Robert Purdom of Hawick in 1817; and Jane (or ‘Jean’, b.1795), who married John Dalgleish. He secondly married Jane (or ‘Jeany’) Oliver in Southdean Parish in 1807. Their children were: Oliver (b.1809), who married Helen Waters and emigrated to America; James (b.1810), who married Elizabeth Henderson; Mina, who married W. Telfer, farmer at Roundabouts; Elizabeth, who died in 1864, and another Oliver, who may have been a twin of William and died young. He is probably the ‘T. Smith’ whose mother is recorded dying in Hobkirk in 1815. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included James (b.1795). Thomas P. (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Heronhaa near Southfield. In 1797 he married ‘Grizzle’ (or Grizel) Tait, the marriage being recorded in both Kirkton and Wilton Parishes. They had 5 children: Sir Andrew (1797–1872), army surgeon and famous zoologist; Joan (b.1800); Barbara (b.1802); James (b.1804); and Agnes Anne (b.1807). All their children were baptised in Kirkton Parish. He may be the Thomas whose son James was baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1810. Rev. Thomas (1828–1901) born at Powfoot in Dumfriesshire, son of John and Marion Murray. He was educated at Edinburgh University and licensed by Annan Presbytery. He was ordained as minister of Ewes Kirk 1853 and remained there until his death. In 1856 he married Margaret, daughter of William Sutherland Fraser, jeweller in Edinburgh. Their children were: Agnes (1857–1913), who married Alexander Simson from Melrose; and Marion (b.1860), who married James Calder, doctor in Jamaica. Thomas (b.1827/8) born in Cavers Parish, son of blacksmith James. He was a watchmaker on the Howegate (near the top of the east side), listed in the 1851 census and in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Isabella. Thomas ‘Tom’ (b.1837) son of James and Elizabeth Henderson, and grandson of miller Thomas. He is recorded as a keen follower of the Jedforest Hunt in the latter part of the 19th century. He was tenant farmer at Tythehouse in Hobkirk.
Smith

Parish. He married a distant cousin, Mary Smith. Their children were: James Turnbull; Elizabeth; Thomas, who emigrated to Canada; and Peter Smith, who farmed at Coldtown. Thomas Aird (b.1854) son of William and Isabell Aird, who was sister of Thomas Aird. He was brought up at Bridgehaugh near Selkirk. He became tenant farmer at Kirkton and Bedrule, remaining at Bedrule 1898–1921. He was a keen hunter and said to be a heavy man, requiring specially bred horses. He had at least 3 children, Isabel and William (who all followed the Jedforest Hunt when young). Thomas ‘Tom’ (19th C.) tenant farmer at Tythehouse. He was a keen supporter of the Jedforest Hunt. His eldest son was James. Thomas (b.c.1870) son of John James, who was born in Malta, and Isabella Morrison. Although born in County Durham, he grew up in Hawick, where his father was a hand-loom weaver and later publican. He also worked as a spirit merchant in Hawick. In 1901 he married Margaret, daughter of James Blaikie. Their son John James was born in Wilton in 1902. About 1907 he emigrated to Rainy River, Ontario, his wife coming later. Thomas ‘Tom’ (19th/20th C.) local bowler, who also laid out at least 30 greens, including the one for Wilton Bowling Club. Turnbull (1816–79) son of Peter and grandson of the first known Thomas of Rulewater. He was a farm steward, who died in Hawick. Walter (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He was on the subscription list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He could be the son of John and Betty ‘Shien’ born in Hawick Parish in 1762. He may also be the Walter who married Helen Gibson in Hawick in 1789. Walter (b.1787/8) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was farmer at Scaw Mill near the Dean. He may have been son of John, who was previously at Scaw Mill. He was recorded as miller there in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835–41. He was farmer there on the 1841 census, married to Janet and with daughter Mary. He was still alive in 1861. Thomas, who was living at Scaw Mill Stable in 1841 may have been his son. Walter (b.1792/3) thong maker of the High Street, according to the 1841 and 1851 censuses. In 1841 he was at Miller’s Close. His wife was Janet and their children included Helen and Isabella. His mother may have been Helen. He was a widower by 1851. Walter (d.1840) weaver in Hawick. William ‘Wull the Cutler’ (1766–c.1833) son of John and Betty ‘Chine’ and was related to the Hawick family that produced 2 Cornets in the 19th century. He was a wright by trade, making the first ‘spinning jennies’ in Hawick. He was known as a very snappy dresser in the late 18th century, and was particularly vain about his hair. He apparently took the first taste of the ‘Auld Brig gin’ (a keg of water) in the joke perpetrated on the exciseman by Wat Inglis. He took up fishing late in life. He is listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory as ‘cutler & basket maker’ on the High Street. He was nephew of Catherine Cheyne, who was long-time domestic servant of the Gledstains of Hilliesland; from her he gained possession of the ‘Gledstane Bible’, which he passed on to merchant Andrew Irvine. There is a portrait of him by Adam Brown – ‘Auld Cash and Tufty blithely trip, Lean Yeddie Gibson’s creel is full, Jamie Tamson and John the Dip Gang hand in hand wi’ Cutler Wull’ [HI]. William (b.c.1785) born in Oxnam Parish, son of John. He was probably brother of James, blacksmith in Hawick. He was a blacksmith in Denholm, listed on Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He is also listed in 1835 as a joint proprietor in Denholm with William Barrie, hosier. He probably lived on Westside. His wife was Elizabeth Anandale, and their children included Catherine and Margaret. He may be the William, at Hayknowe, whose model plough (for which he won a premium at Kelso in 1848) was presented to the Museum in 1857. William (19th C.) perhaps born on the English side of the Border, he married Mary, daughter of William Laidlaw in Hobkirk Parish in 1827. Their children were: James; Joan; William; Helen (b.1829), who married William Stewart in Hawthornside; Thomas (b.1831); Anne (b.1833); and Mary (b.1836). His sister Mary married William Redpath, who worked at Weens. William (19th C.) blacksmith of Hawick, probably son of James. He is listed in the 1835 electoral roll as joint tenant along with James. In Pigot’s 1837 directory ‘Jas. & Wm. Smith’ are listed as blacksmiths in Melgund Place. He does not appear on the censuses of 1841–61, but is listed in Rutherford’s 1866 directory as blacksmith on Melgund Place. William (b.1803/4) from Stow, he was a mason living at Commonside Bankhead in 1841 and ‘Bowanhillbridge’ in 1851. His wife was Isabel and their children included Bridget, William, Alexander, Adam and Helen. William (b.1822/3) from England, he was listed as ‘Railway Gaffer’ in Newcastleton in 1861. He was on South Hermitage Street, lodging with carter Francis Scott. He is probably the Bill Smith who was in charge of bringing the first locomotive engine by road from Carlisle; the engine bogged down in mud and toppled a number of times, falling on him and killing him. William (19th C.) farmer at Learmouth, Cornhill. In the 1860s he was a non-resident voter in Cavers Parish. Rev. William Grierson (d.1870) born in Edinburgh, eldest son of James. He was educated at Glasgow University and ordained minister of Fintry in 1840. He was presented to Ashkirk Parish by Gilbert John, Earl of Minto and became minister there in 1861. He married Hannah Grierson of Bridgeforth, who died in 1891. They had a son Alfred William, who died young. He wrote a description of Fintry Parish. Rev. William (b.1840) born in Oldhamstocks, son of David and Ann Thompson. He graduated M.A. from the University of Edinburgh in 1868. He was licentiate at Saughtree Kirk 1870–77. He was ordained as minister of Dunsyre in 1877. William Walter (1852–1942) born in Hawick, son of gamekeeper Thomas and Ellen Robson. He worked as gardener in various English country houses and emigrated to New Zealand in about 1875. He continued to work as a gardener. He held the view that many native species would be driven extinct by the effects of colonisation and so began to collect native plants, insects, Maori artefacts and other items. He wrote extensive notes, some of which were published, and several species were named after him. In 1903 he was appointed to the commission charged with putting the Scenery Conservation Act into effect. He was later appointed curator of Pukekura Park, New Plymouth. It appears he was not easy to work with, holding down positions typically for only a few years at a time. However, he remained a sought-after authority on native plants, insects, Maori artefacts and other items.

William Walter an Telford’s hosiery factory on Lothian Street. It consists of several parts of different height, built over a period of time in the early 20th century. One section has a mansard roof, a ‘modern movement’ roof, and there are windows on the curved corner where Lothian Street meets Allars Bank. Recently the building was used by Douglas, and then by an antique dealers.

smuggling (smuɡ-lɪn, -gu-lɪn) n. smuggling, the trade in goods without paying duties. This was rampant in the Hawick area in the 17th and 18th centuries and on into the 19th. Before the Union, the difference in duties meant that salt, skins and malt were smuggled into England, and wool smuggled into Scotland. In the 18th and early 19th centuries there was a brisk local business in smuggling whisky south of the Border, because of the large difference in duties. This was particularly after the increase on whisky duty in 1799. The favourite source of goods locally was from Capt. Daniel Fleury, who would land his boat at Boulmer in Northumberland, from where ‘Boomers’ would secretly carry goods over the Border. There was also a vigorous trade in black market salt, again encouraged by increased taxation. Smugglers were pursued by the excise officers. In the 18th century there was a collector, 2 supervisors and 18 officers in Teviotdale, and by the 19th century there were 28 mounted Revenue Officers employed in Roxburghshire. In 1836 the minister of Hobkirk records that ‘smuggling and illicit distilling are not now practised’.

There was formerly a small thatched cottage at Snaberlee Brae, inhabited by a lone woman until the late 19th century. In the early 1750s this was the site of open air sermons as part of the Secession movement in this parish. The farm was acquired by William Manderson from the Laird of Whithaugh and in 1811 valued at £23 8s (the origin of the name is probably from the Old Norse personal name ‘Snabjorn’; it occurs as ‘Snabirly’ on Blaeu’s 1662 map and is ‘Snaberly’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; it is ‘Snaberlie’ in 1665, ‘Snaberlie’ in 1666 and ‘Snaberly’ in 1811).

the Snoot Kirk (thu-snoo’-kirk) n. small for-ermer church in the Borthwick valley, built shortly after the Disruption of 1843 as Roberton Free Church. The dissenting congregation first held meetings in the joiner’s yard at Deanburnhaugh, before being given the ground at Parkhillhaugh by John Chisholme. The church is reached from the main road via a footbridge. The building was renovated in 1908/9, when a vestry was also built.

It continued to be used as a church until 1927, and the congregation formally merged with Roberton Kirk in 1930. The land reverted to the Chisholme estate and was gifted to the Scottish Youth Hostel Association by Mr. Bruce of Chisholme in 1935.

It was then used by the Youth Hostel Association, particularly as a pony trekking centre. The building succumbed to dry rot in the mid-1990s.

the Snuffin (thu-snu-fin) n. ceremony taking place at the Kirkstile, near the site of the western end of the Auld Brig, early on the Friday morning of the Common Riding. Snuff is dispensed to the waiting crowd, harkening back to an old social custom of passing round the snuff box during some convenient halt in any proceedings. There is also a more fanciful story told that when the band returned from Hornshole in 1514 they found an old man partaking of snuff on the Auld Brig (long before tobacco came to the old world!). Formerly the ceremony took place on the Thursday evening on the Auld Brig, and was simply a private habit indulged in by the Burgh Officers and band members. It slowly became an accepted part of the traditions. After the Auld Brig was demolished in 1851 it was discontinued for several years, but subsequently restarted through the efforts of William Norman Kennedy, who provided a horn mull. The Thursday evening ceremony ceased in the 1870s. In 1881 the ceremony is recorded involving ‘many hundreds’. The ceremony was again revived by the Ceremonial Committee in 1887, when the sons of W.N. Kennedy undertook to again be at the Smuffing with their father’s horn mull. George O. Murray also provided a horn mull in 1889, or possibly just the Snuff. Since those days the Snuffling has grown in popularity, was extended to the Friday morning, and now is restricted to the Friday morning only. The original horn null is still in use. Since 1921 the song-singer has been in charge of distributing loose snuff from the horn, in a melee at the Kirkstile, protected by two bodyguards! This happens when the Drums and Fifes reach the site of the Auld Brig, shortly after 6 a.m. After the Song Singer reaches the Tower Knowe he throws small packets of snuff down from a window to the people below; these packets are highly sought after, even although the taking of snuff is now a thing of the past. It is traditional for the crowds to disperse to nearby hostelries for rum and milk refreshments afterwards. There is a short film clip showing the Snuffling of 1905 and others in 1929, 1932, 1933, 1934 and 1937 – ‘It was mebbe a melee ootside bit in the shop itsel was leike the snuffin at the Commin Ridin!’ [HEX1966], ‘At Snuffin’ when ee hear the drum Efter ee’ve hed milk an rum Want Commin Ridin!’ [HEx1966], ‘At Snuffin’ when ee bit in the shop itsel was leike the snuffin at the the Society in Scotland for Propagatin Christian Knowledge (thu-su-sl-i-in-skō-lind-for-pro-pa-gā-in-kris-tyin-no-leej) n. former organisation, established in 1709 to establish schools in remote areas of Scotland. This was mainly in the Highlands and Islands, but they also set up a school at Caerlenrig in 1755, as well as another near Langholm. They removed their support for the Caerlenrig school from about 1767, possibly because it was self-supporting by then.

Society for the Supression o Beggin (su-sl-i-for-thu-su-pre-shin-ō-be-gin) n. common name for the Association for the Purpose of Suppressing Public Begging in the Town of Hawick. It was set up in 1822 to try to solve the problem of itinerant beggars. The association distributed funds and posted notices to discourage Mein. Euphemia nee Eckford (d.1928) daughter of Hawick grocer John Eckford, she married George, who was a cousin of Sir James A.H. Murray. She lived in Denholm and bequeathed money, which was used to purchase property, including buildings around the arch on Sunnyside, where she had lived. It was hoped that rental would maintain the Somerville Trust, which supplied a nurse for Denholm, but eventually the moneys dwindled and the properties were sold. Hugh (17th/18th C.) `agent' who witnessed a baptism for John Ekron in 1721. Mary nee Fairfax (1780–1872) daughter of Sir William Fairfax (one of Nelson's Captains), she was born in the Manse at Jedburgh, home of her mother's sister Martha Charters and Rev. Thomas Somerville. In 1804 she married a naval officer, Samuel Greig (Russian Consul for Britain, whose father had been the man who had brought Hobkirk's Adam Armstrong to Russia), who was a distant cousin; he died 3 years later. She was in Jedburgh on the evening of the False Alarm of 1804. She had a telescope made by James Veitch of Inchbonny, was well acquainted with Sir David Brewster and also got to know Sir Walter Scott. In 1812 she secondly married her cousin William Somerville (1771–1860), eldest son of Dr. Thos., who was physician to Chelsea Hospital. Despite only 1 year of formal education, she educated herself at the family's Burntisland home and became a mathematician and science writer. In fact she has the distinction of being the first person to whom the word ‘scientist’ was applied, in 1834 in a review of her book ‘On the Connexion of the Physical Sciences’. She translated and annotated Laplace’s work, hypothesized a planet perturbing the orbit of Uranus (which led to the discovery of Neptune), and wrote a popular school geography textbook. She was elected to the Royal Astronomical Society and received many other honours. She spent most of the time from 1838 living in Italy. She was a great supporter of women’s education, and Somerville College, Oxford was named after her. She also has an asteroid and lunar crater named in her honour. A history of her life was written by her daughter Martha. She is buried in Naples. Her children were: Woronzow Greig (1805–65), a barrister; William George Greig (1806–14); Margaret Farquhar Somerville (1813–23); Thomas Somerville (1814–15); Martha Charters Somerville (1815–79); and Mary Charlotte Somerville (1817–75). Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded ‘in ye Midle’ in 1623, when Thomas Hood in Ancrum was accused of stealing 2 cows 7 years earlier from him. This was from lands at ‘Plassadge’ in England, the cattle belonging to him and Walter Scott of Todrig. It is unclear if he was tenant in Middle in Cavers Parish or elsewhere. Rev. Thomas S. (d.bef. 1710) minister of Cavers. He was son of James, who was second son of Sir James of Cambusnethan. He studied at St. Salvator’s College and St. Andrews University, where he graduated in 1666. He was presented to Cavers in 1674 and ordained there in the following year. It is recorded that the Presbytery had to swear him in at the ‘kirk-stile’, since the church and churchyard were locked up and no keys were to be had from the house of Sir William Douglas of Cavers. The Presbytery were also met by a number of women in the churchyard bearing stones, which they threatened to throw, and called them ‘soul murderers and the devil’s servants’. Given the Covenanting support in Cavers Parish, it is clear that the new Episcopalian minister was not popular! In 1689 he refused to pray for William and Mary and read the Proclamation of the Estates (i.e. refused to embrace the return to Presbyterianism), but he may have continued as minister until 1693 (precisely what the arrangement was is unclear, since there was great confusion after the Revolution). He then moved to Hawick, where he continued to preach (probably in his own lodgings) to some adherents of Episcopalianism and the exiled James II. This group included members of the Gledstains and Chisholm families. Baptisms are recorded by him in Hawick in 1694 and 1697. He was listed as ‘Mr Tho. Sumervail’, living on the west-side of Hawick, on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He is said to have ministered in Hawick along with Francis Scott, ousted minister of Hassendean, and a meeting house was opened at the Kirkwynd (or Playlaw) after the passing of the Act of Toleration in 1712 (but he must already have been dead by then). He may also have assisted Rev. John Langlands until about 1700. He married Miss Burnside and their son William was minister of Hawick (i.e., trained as a Presbyterian, despite he himself remaining true to his Episcopalian principles), while their daughter Dorothea married William Hadden, one of the masters of Edinburgh High School in 1710, and they had one other daughter. Rev. Dr. Thomas (1741–1830) historian, born in Hawick, son of Rev. William. He was orphaned at about age 17 and educated in Hawick, Jedburgh and at Edinburgh University. One of his close early friends was Samuel Charters, who would become minister at Wilton (and whose cousin he would mary). He was for a while tutor of the young Lord Minto. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Edinburgh in 1764 and presented to Minto Parish in late 1766 by Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto, becoming minister there early the following year. He was presented to Jedburgh in 1773, translated there the following year, and this is where he spent the rest of his life. He was recorded there in the Horse Tax Rolls in the 1780s. He obtained a doctorate from St. Andrews University in 1789 and became one of his Majesty’s Chaplains for Scotland in 1793. He was arrested while visiting the House of Commons about 1798, being mistaken for an accomplice of a notorious swindeler. In 1798 he was offered the Chair of Church History at Edinburgh University, but declined, and had a yearly pension from 1800. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1813. He was also a Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh. He wrote several political and historical books, including ‘Candid Thought on American Independence’ (1780), ‘The History of Political Transactions and of Parties from the Restoration of King Charles II to the Death of King William III’ (1792), ‘Observations on the Constitution and State of Britain’ (1793), ‘The Effects of the French Revolution with respect to the interests of humanity, liberty, religion, and morality’ (1793) and ‘The History of Great Britain, during the Reign of Queen Anne’ (1798), as well as several sermons published in Kelso, Hawick and Edinburgh. He also wrote descriptions of Jedburgh and Ancrum for the Statistical Accounts. His posthumously published book ‘My own life and times 1741–1814’ (1861) contains some valuable anecdotes relating to Hawick in the latter 18th century, and describes some aspects of everyday life in the neighbourhood in those times. He married Martha Charters, daughter of Samuel, Solicitor of Customs for Scotland, who died in 1809 and they had 3 sons: William, Inspector of Military Hospitals, and second husband of his cousin Mary Somerville the mathematician; Samuel, solicitor; and James Burges, who died young. They also had 4 daughters: Christian, who married Walter Riddell of Friar’s Glen, 3rd son of Patrick Riddell of Muselee; Janet (or Jenny), who married Joseph Pringle of Ferney Green, Consul General at Medeira, and secondly Lieut.-Gen. Henry Elliot of Rosebank (son of Capt. Robert, brother of the Laird of Harwood); Margaret (d.1843); and Martha, who married William Rutherford, solicitor of Jedburgh. His wife is said to have been a clever woman, who took great care with the education of her children, who were taught by David Brewster (later Sir David). When he died he was ‘father of the church’, i.e. the oldest serving minister, in his 90th year. He is buried in Jedburgh Abbey. Sir William (12th/13th C.) son of William of Carnwath. It is said that during the reign of William the Lion he slew a fearful monster, which was terrorising the district of Linton; the place was known as Wormington, and the event is commemorated in a carved stone in wall of the parish church. He was ‘Willelmo de Sumerville’ when he witnessed the granting of the Church of Molle to Kelso Abbey in the mid-1100s. In 1174 he had the lands conferred on him by the King. He also became Sheriff of Roxburghshire, as well as the Chief Falconer to the King. Rev. William (1691–1757) son of Thomas, the minister of Cavers, he was minister of Hawick Parish 1731–57, and father of Dr. Thomas. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1707, became a tutor for the family of Alexander, Lord Elibank, and was licensed by the Presbytery of Duns in 1719. He thereafter spent time in the household of James, Lord Somerville (presumably a relative), managing his business affairs. He was called to Hawick Parish in late 1731 and ordained early the following year. In 1735 he was involved with the Duke of Buccleuch in the sale of land within Dalkeith. He wrote an account of the Parish sometime before 1743 (perhaps in 1738), this being one of the earliest descriptions with any detail. There he mentions an examination he made of the Buccleuch vault under St. Mary’s in 1738; his transcription of stones there was eventually published in James Wilson’s ‘Memories of Hawick’. He is listed at the Manse in 1748, when he paid the window tax in Hawick Parish. In 1733 he married Janet, only daughter of John Griersson, minister of South Queensferry (their post-nuptial contract is in the National Archives); she was said to be a great beauty. They had a son, Thomas, who became minister at Jedburgh, as well as daughters Agnes and Janet. His first wife died in 1749 and in 1753 he secondly married again Isobel (or Isabella) Scott of Whitehaugh, described as ‘a maiden-gentlewoman of about 80’, and she died in 1759. It has sometimes been claimed that he was the original of the ‘little round fat oily man of God’ of James Thomson’s ‘Castle of Indolence’, but others insist that the model was instead an English clergyman, Rev. Patrick Murdock. William (1771–1860) son of Dr. Thomas and Martha Charters, he was born at Minto. He trained as a surgeon and entered the army, travelling on expeditions to the Cape of Good Hope. He also travelled on a Mediterranean expedition against Napoleon and to Canada, where he was inspector-general of hospitals from about 1807–11. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1812. In 1812 he became deputy inspector of army hospitals in Scotland and in 1816 had to move to London as a member of the army medical board. In 1806 he married Miss Rutherford of Knowesouth, but she died 2 years later. In 1812 he secondly married his cousin Mary, daughter of Adm. Fairfax, and widow of Samuel Grieg; she is known worldwide as one of the first female mathematicians. It is said that after his marriage he gave up his own ambitions to support his wife’s scientific career. In 1818 he was involved in a legal case over inheritance of Knowesouth, claiming that his first wife’s uncle, a lawyer in Jedburgh, had defrauded him out of liferent on the estate. He became seriously ill in 1838, so that his family wintered abroad and from then on lived mainly on the continent. He died in his 89th year in Florence and is buried in the Protestant cemetery there.

William (c.1800–49) shoemaker who lived at Miller’s Close on the High Street. He married Isabella (1807–89), eldest daughter of James Murray, and hence he was uncle of Sir J.A.H. Their children included John, Christian, Jean and James. He may have been born in Kelso, son of William and Mary Weatherhead (also spelled ‘Somervel’, ‘Somervell’, ‘Sumerval’, ‘Somervel’, ‘Sumervale’, etc. in early records).

the Somerville Buildins (θu-su-mur-vil-bil-dinz) n. modern name for a block of houses on Sunnyside in Denholm, with a pend through the middle (also called ‘Summerville House’).

Sooth Croft Park (sooth-kroft-pawrk) n. Southcroft Park, former name for a piece of land on Minto estate. It was valued at £73 3s 6d in 1779 when included among lands whose liferent had been granted to Rev. Robert Elliot. They are still so listed in 1811.

Soothdean (sooth-deen, soo-, sow-din) n. Southdean, hamlet on the A6088 towards the Carter Bar, on the banks of the Jed, formerly written ‘Souden’ and variants. Formerly part of Jed Forest, the name ‘Soothdean’ is fairly synonymous with Chesters, although perhaps more often applied to the upper part of the district. It is also the name of the associated Parish, which extends to Wolfelee and also contains the former Free Church there. The original church dates back to at least the 13th century and was a meeting place for Scottish leaders before Otterburn. A replacement church was built about 1690 and the current one in 1876. The village itself was burned by Dacre’s men (led by Sir John Radcliff) in late 1513 and again in 1544. Jock Oliver was recorded living there in 1544. In 1669 the farm of that name was tenanted by James Oliver, David Oliver and Thomas Oliver. William Oliver and David Baptie were there in 1694. An old out-house in the area was called Peden’s Barn and connected with Covenanters. The settlement has been on the main route from Hawick to Newcastle since long before the modern road was developed (around the 1820s). There are many nearby archaeological remains, including hill-forts, settlements and ruined peel towers. Several Bronze Age artefacts found nearby are in Jedburgh Museum, including a flat axe, part of a rapier blade, and a socketed axe. Other items from the area include a greenstone axe, a whinstone hammerhead and 3 small whorls of polished green stone. The Statistical Account of 1794 notes that the region contained several ancient cairns, one of which was found to contain bones, and nearly all of which had been robbed for stones. ‘Souden Kirk: a Border shrine’ was published by John R. Spence in 1951 (the origin is probably a corrupted version of ‘Souden’, the original pronunciation, which may be from the Old English ‘suth dun’, meaning simply ‘the southern hill’ or may be related to Old Welsh for a hill-fort; the name first occurs as ‘Soudon’ in 1275 and has various related forms, including ‘Soudon’ in 1404, ‘Sowdon’ in 1455, ‘Sowdune’ in 1484/5, ‘sowdene’ in 1488/9, ‘Sowdoun’ in 1491/2, ‘Sodane’ in 1538, ‘Sodene’ in 1539, transcribed as ‘Fowden’ in 1544, ‘Sowdoun’ in 1559, ‘Suddoun’ in 1575, ‘Suddum’ in 1586, ‘Sudan’ in 1638, ‘Sudden’ in 1689 and ‘Souden’ in 1701; ‘Soudan K.’ is marked on Morden’s 1687 map of Scotland and ‘K. of Soulann’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map.

Soothdean (sooth-deen) n. region in the hills to the east of Colterscleuch, containing Southdean Rigg (which reaches 354 m) and Southdean Burn (which joins Northhouse Burn). There was also formerly a farmstead here. The lands were once part of Ringwoodfield (marked ‘Sudarig’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; it is spelled ‘Suddenrigg’ in 1744).

Soothdean Kirk (sooth-deen-, soo-, sow-din-kirk) n. church in Southdean Parish. The original church was first mentioned as early as the 1260s. Adam, the Parson, signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. It was in the Diocese of Glasgow and Archdeaconry of Teviotdale, but it is not known when it was dedicated. The patronage was held by the Douglases, passing to Scott of Branxholme in 1528, reverting to the Crown in about 1537 and recovered by the Earl of Angus in 1542/3. The church consisted of a west tower and a nave, probably of 13th century, together with a chancel, probably added in the 15th century (replacing an earlier chancel). Excavations also revealed foundations of a perhaps earlier building, a few feet to the north of the nave. The church was the location for a meeting of Lord Douglas and the other Scottish commanders in 1388, in which an English spy is meant to have revealed information that was important for the skirmish at Newcastle and the battle at Otterburn. The ruins of this original ‘Souden Kirk’ stands just below the level of the main A6088 road, about a mile after Chesters. A commemorative plaque was erected there after excavations by the Hawick Archiological Society in 1910. At the same time part of the tower was roofed over to hold some of the unearthed stonework, and the site was dedicated as a memorial to the Battle of Otterburn; repair work was carried out on the tower in 2015. A carved super-altar (of sandstone, about 23 cm by 18 cm), probably from the 15th century, was moved to the new church. This original church was abandoned in 1688 when the roof collapsed (on a Sunday, but fortunately after the congregation had left). A second church was built in 1689/90, whose roofless walls stand in the graveyard of the grounds of the new (1876) church near Chesters. This building had no ceiling and it is said that the pauper’s coffin was stored in the rafters, in plain view of the congregation. The new church contains a memorial window to James Thompson, author of ‘The Seasons’ and ‘Rule Britannia’. The new churchyard is displaced from the church, up on Chesters Brae. The Manse for the Kirk is located to the east of Whiteburn farmstead; it was built in 1795, on the site of the former building; this was ‘The Mans’ on which tax was paid for 4 hearths in 1694 and 20 windows in 1748. The glebe lands extended to 40 acres. The patronage was held by Sir Walter Scott of Brauxholme from 1528, then the Earl of Angus from 1542/3. The benefice of the Rectory was held by Douglas of Bonjedeward from 1566. The church was linked with Edgerston 1660–73, linked with Hobkirk in 1973, united formally with Hobkirk in 1988 and then linked with Cavers and Kirkton 1988–97. It became part of the wider area of Ruberslaw in 2004 (along with Denholm, Minto, Bedrule and Hobkirk). The oldest communion token is heart-shaped and made of lead. A roll of the ministers of the church is: Galfrid, Vicar in 1260; Adam, Parson in 1296; Thomas Forest, Rector in 1404; Robert Penwen, from 1424 until at least 1455; John Inglis, Rector in 1471; William Scott, Rector from at least 1482–1491/2; Hugh Douglas, Rector at least 1558/9–63; Walter Lyle, Exhorter in 1567; John Douglas, Reader 1574–87; Andrew Clayhills, Minister in 1575; John Scott, Reader 1579–82; William Douglas 1585; Andrew Douglas 1599–1605; George Douglas 1607–08; James Logan, presented 1608; William Weir 1610–26; James Fisher 1626–35; John Davidson 1635–66; John Dargavel 1667–70; George Bapte 1670–88; Thomas Rutherford 1689; Samuel Johnstone 1690–99; Thomas Thomson 1700–16; Thomas Leck, presented 1716; John Inglis 1718–43; John Oliver 1736–55; Robert Muirhead 1756–84; William Scott 1785–1809; John Richmond 1810–47; John Mair 1847–1902; George Henry Donald 1902–06; John R. Spence 1907–50; John Roberts 1951–65; George Urquhart 1966–72; Stephen Goodbrand 1973–82; James A. Strachan 1983–88; Adam McC. Bowie 1988–96 (it is marked ‘Souden K.’ on Gordon’s map of Scotland in Blaeu’s 1654 atlas).

Soothdean Law (sooth-deen-, soo-, sow-din-law) n. Southdean Law, hill near Southdean and also formerly the name of a farm there. In 1669 the tenants were Andrew Douglas and Robert Laidlaw. The hill is on the left hand side of the A6088. It reaches a height of 300 m and contains a fort and settlement, as well as having a triangulation pillar, all on the western peak. The fort consists of a pear-shaped enclosure around the summit, about 50 m by 30 m, and is probably from the early Iron Age. There is an annex to the northeast of the main enclosure, and this is probably later. In this area there are also the remains of 11 houses and several enclosures, perhaps dating to the 2nd, 3rd or 4th century. The surrounding slopes contain evidence of a field-system and rig lines, some running right up to the boundaries of the fort, and hence probably of a similar age. There are also the remains of an old building and enclosure to the north-west, in the direction of Slack’s Tower. 2 Bronze Age socketed axes were found near here, but their location is unknown (it is ‘Sudenlaw’ and ‘Souden Law’ in 1669).

Soothdean Mill (sooth-deen-, soo-, sow-din-mil) n. former corn mill in Southdean Parish, situated on a lade off the Jed Water, just to the east of Chesters village. It was valued at £5 in the Exchequer Rolls in 1538, 1539 and 1541. Patrick, Janet and Marion Oliver were joint tenants there in 1541, with William and Marion (probably also Oliver, but surname not given) renting one third of the farm. James Shiel was tenant there in the 1680s and 90s. It is referred to in 1738 by the Duke of Douglas’s factor, shortly after it had burned down. Walter Riddell was tenant there in 1797. George Bell was miller and farmer there in 1866. ‘Southdeanmillhead’ is recorded in the late 18th century. There is still a farm in the same place probably) received the lands of ‘Southinrig’ (along with ‘Vestcotrig’ and ‘Bolburg’) where the King’s shepherd Richard Henderson is recorded in 1540. ‘The gudman of Syntoun and Arche Elliot of Thirlishoup’ (probably Walter Scott of Synton and Archibald Elliot of Thorlishope) rented these lands, along with Cauldcleuch, from Melrose Abbey in 1557; at that time it was valued at £5. Capt. Walter Scott of Satchells said that Robert Scott of Satchells (his father or grandfather probably) received the lands of ‘Southinrig’ for his service to the house of Buccleuch. It was recorded as part of the land of Ringwoodfield in the Lordship of Melrose in 1634, 1653, 1661 and 1663. In 1718 it was surveyed along with other Buccleuch properties, at that point covering 1017 acres and bounded by Northhouse, Phaup, Binks, Bowanhill and Colterscleuch. In 1744 the lands were leased by Thomas Elliot, farmer at Hardwood. James Grieve was tenant there in 1751. An enclosed area on the north-east side contained a building and sheepfold, shown on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map (it is ‘Sowdnirrg’ in 1500, ‘Sowdenrig’ in 1557 and 1564, ‘Sudenrig’in 1621, ‘Sudenrig’ in 1634, ‘Sondenirg’ in 1660, ‘Suddenrig’ in 1661, ‘Suddenrig’ in 1663 and ‘Suddenrigs’ in 1693; it appears on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Sudarig’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey as ‘Sowdenrige’ and on Stobie’s 1770 map as ‘Southdeanridge’; see also Soothinrig).

Soothdean Rig (sooth-deen-, soo-din-rig) n. ridge in Southdean Parish, lying to the south of

Sootheld Gate

Sootheld (sooth-deen-, soo-din-rig-sheet) n. shepherd’s cottage on Southdean Rig. Francis Dickson and his son Francis, were shepherds there through much of the 19th century.

Soothed Schuil (sooth-deen-skil) n. former school in Southdean Parish. It may have been established in the early 17th century. Thomas Turnbull was schoolmaster in 1620 and George Weir in 1622. There were more than 70 pupils in the 1830s. Thomas Armstrong was schoolmaster there from 1825 and his son Richmond Armstrong from 1837. School Board minute books are in the Borders Archive for the period 1873–1919.

Southfield (sooth-feeld) n. Southfield, farm about 4 miles south of Hawick, lying on the boundary of the old Common. It was previously split into ‘Nether Southfield’ and ‘Over Southfield’, and these farms were surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718. The name is also used for the general area around the farm. The marshy area just to the north was once dammed and labelled as ‘Mill Dam’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. James Glendinning was a tenant here in 1684 when he was listed among men declared as a fugitive for attending field conventicles. Gieves farmed here from at least the 1750s until 1888, when the lease was given up by Walter; this is probably the longest tenancy by a single family of any farm of the Buccleuch Estates. There are several forts, carins and ancient settlements in the vicinity. Several flint and chert implements found in the area around the farm are in the Museum, and some others may be in the National Museum of Antiquities. A spearhead found near here is probably still in the Museum’s collection, and has been classified as Middle Bronze Age. (marked as ‘N. Southfield’ and O. Southfield’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, and also marked on Visscher’s 1689 map of Scotland; the name presumably just means ‘the south field’, but it may suggest that it was once part of Hawick Common; there are several places of the same name elsewhere in Scotland).

Southfield Gate (sooth-feeld-ga’) n. Southfield Gate, former farm, long ruined, near the road end just beyond the Caa Knowe, just after the turn-off for Southfield farm and shortly before the road reaches the Gate Burn at the Troutlawford. The name is also used to refer to the road to Southfield, and hence to the far end of the Common and the Caa Knowe – ‘...And syne, with them, by Southfield Gate, I pray I’ll hear the Burgess-Roll and answer to my name’ [JYH] (also written ‘Southfieldgate’; it is marked ‘Southfieldgate ruins of’ on J.P. Alison’s map of the Common in 1777).

South Hermitage Street (sooth-her-mi’-eej-stree’) n. South Hermitage Street, part of the main B6357 through Newcastleton, lying to the south of Douglas Square.

Southinrig (soo-thin-rig) n. former name for lands at Southdean Rig, being more recently part of the estates of the Duke of Buccleuch and part of Colterscleuch farm. They were once held by an ancestor of Capt. Walter Scott of Satchells, and given for his services to the Duke (see also Southdeanrig).

the Sooth Kirk (thu-sooth-kirk) n. name formerly used in Newcastleton for the United Presbyterian Church after it united with the Church of Scotland in 1929. The name was used to distinguish it from the ‘Park Kirk’.

South Liddle Street (sooth-li-dul-stee’) n. street in Newcastleton, being the southern extension of North Liddle Street and Mid Liddle Street.

South Port (sooth-pör) n. South Port, being the gate from town leading south up the Cross Wynd until the mid-18th century. The gate was probably situated a little way up the Wynd, and was once the beginning of the road towards Newcastleton. It was recorded being ‘taken down’ in 1732, and may have been more fully removed in 1762 along with the Mercat Cross. A plaque was placed on the Town Hall near the original location by the Callants’ Club in 1964. Until the 1830s this was the road to Newcastle and other points to the south-east (also sometimes the ‘Cross Wynd Port’ or ‘Cross Port’).

Southron (sooth-rin) n., adj., arch. people from the south, i.e. the English – ‘...for at that period such was the thirst of Southron revenge that things both sacred and civil met with the same treatment’ [WaD], ‘And the fierce rievers swam the currents o’er In hot pursuit of ...’ [GWe], ‘...Where pricking and spurring are rife, And the bluid boils up like a sea; But Southrons gand doon i’ the strife! And wha daur meddle wi’ me?’ [T] adj., arch. southern – ‘Oor forebears an ther Southron neebers coodna sit soft ava i thae days’ [ECS].

Sooth Synton (sooth-sin’-in) n. former name for the main farm of Synton (or Sinton), to distinguish it from ‘North Synton’ on the opposite side of the Ale valley. It was long the property of the Scotts. The house there was rebuilt in the 18th century and demolished in the latter part of the 20th century. James Scott from South Synton Mill was minister at Ashkirk in the late 1500s (marked with this name on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and Blaeu’s 1654 map).

soothwards (sooth-wurdsz) adv. southwards – . . . And, galloping doon the glen, Aye soothwards they disappear; They are riding their raids again For their ain or their neighbour’s gear’ [TK].

the Sootie Kittlin (thin-soo’-ee-kit-lin) n. nickname in use in the 19th century, presumably (somehow) related to a sooty kitten – ‘The Sootie Kittlin’ and Bumma Rae, Jenny Tranlets and auird Cauld Kail, Jamie Sprinkie, Kessy, the Kay, Doctor H’Yiggs and the Wat Wat Sail’ [HI].

Sooty Knowe (soo’ee-now) n. small hill just south-east of Southfield. It once contained a cairn, marked on the 1926 Ordnance Survey map, but subsequently obliterated by cultivation and quarrying.

Sorbie (sor-bee) n. farm on a side road just south of Ewes, a few miles north of Langholm, once the site of a corn mill. It was confirmed to Simon Little in 1426. ‘Dauid Armstrang de Sourby’ witnessed a document for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1456. The lands were occupied by the Armstrongs into the 17th century. It was valued at £250 in 1671. John Armstrong is recorded leasing a quarter of the farm in 1672 and 1673 and there was a 1685 gravestone for John Armstrong of Sorbie in Ewes Kirkyard. Sorbie was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718 it extended to 1492 acres and included the farmsteads of High Mangerton, Catheugh and ‘Demmebeck’. It was bounded by the Kershope Burn, Flatt, Mangerton, lands of the Laird of Whithaugh and Kershope, with the farmhouse clearly shown and a wood of old trees around the Fouty Sike. In 1541 it is listed along with Ra-garth and Sorbie, with value 10 merks, and stated to eprtain to the Laird of Mangerton. It was formerly a stronghold of the Armstrongs. George Mitchelson and Roland Porteous were there in 1694. A shepherd here perished during the ‘Gorial Blast’ of 1794. Archibald Armstrong was farmer there in at least 1794–97. William Armstrong was there in 1841 and 1851; he was killed by the minister of Walton (being mistaken for an intruder), and is buried in Ettleton cemetery. The present farmhouse was built by the Buccleuch Estates and is run as a bed and breakfast. The New Statistical Account reports in 1839 the existence of a circular earthwork on the farm. This is probably the site where ramparts were once removed, revealing paved area on the south side, with some burned material. In 2001 it had the dubious distinction of recording the first Scottish Borders case of foot and mouth disease – ‘A wailing sugh is borne upon the breeze, Athwart the shatter’d pines of Sorbietrees’ [HNo]. ‘To Sorbietrees and Larriston, Wi’ news that Wull was deid, And craws nicht leeve in peace at last Frae Flatt to Tweedeen-heid . . .’ [DH] (the origin of the name

Sorbietrees

Sorbie Hass (sor-bee-hass) n. name used for the road winding between Sorbie and Staplegordon. This was the main route through the lower Eves valley to the Langholm area until Langholm became a separate parish in 1703. There was an old hawthorn tree at the junction of this road with the main Eves road, which grew until sometime in the 19th century. It was said to be used as a meeting spot by the monks of Melrose (also written ‘Haas’, the word comes from Old Norse for a pass; the road is labelled on Crawford’s 1804 map).

Sorbietrees (sor-bee-triz) n. Sorbietrees, farm about 3 miles south of Newcastleton. When surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718 it extended to 1492 acres and included the farmsteads of High Mangerton, Catheugh and ‘Demmebeck’. It was bounded by the Kershope Burn, Flatt, Mangerton, lands of the Laird of Whithaugh and Kershope, with the farmhouse clearly shown and a wood of old trees around the Fouty Sike. In 1541 it is listed along with Ra-garth and Sorbie, with value 10 merks, and stated to eprtain to the Laird of Mangerton. It was formerly a stronghold of the Armstrongs. George Mitchelson and Roland Porteous were there in 1694. A shepherd here perished during the ‘Gorial Blast’ of 1794. Archibald Armstrong was farmer there in at least 1794–97. William Armstrong was there in 1841 and 1851; he was killed by the minister of Walton (being mistaken for an intruder), and is buried in Ettleton cemetery. The present farmhouse was built by the Buccleuch Estates and is run as a bed and breakfast. The New Statistical Account reports in 1839 the existence of a circular earthwork on the farm. This is probably the site where ramparts were once removed, revealing paved area on the south side, with some burned material. In 2001 it had the dubious distinction of recording the first Scottish Borders case of foot and mouth disease – ‘A wailing sugh is borne upon the breeze, Athwart the shatter’d pines of Sorbietrees’ [HNo]. ‘To Sorbietrees and Larriston, Wi’ news that Wull was deid, And craws nicht leeve in peace at last Frae Flatt to Tweedeen-heid . . .’ [DH] (the origin of the name is probably the Old Norse ‘saurr’ and Old English ‘treow’, meaning ‘trees at the muddy farm’; it first appears as ‘Sourby’ in 1456, but could be the ‘Southby’ recorded in the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale; it is ‘Sorbe et Sorbetrees’ in 1541, ‘Sorbitrees’ in 1694 and ‘Sorbytrees’ in 1797, 1839 and 1851; it is ‘Sorbitrees’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

the Southern Uplands (thu-su-thurn-up-lindz) n. range of hills near the Border, generally west of Hawick. It is sandwiched between the Southern Uplands Boundary Fault to the north and the Cheviot hills of England to the south, reaching heights of 800 m and including the Southern Upland Way. The range is dominated by Ordovician and Silurian sedimentary rocks and includes the Carsphairn, Cheviot, Ettrick, Lammermuir, Lowther, Moffat, Moorfoot, Roxburgh and Tweedsmuir Hills – ‘Fold upon fold before me, the uplands stretch afar: A land so rich in romance, and song of love and war’ [WL].

the Southern Upland Way (thu-su-thurn-up-lind-wä) n. long distance walking route, opened in 1984, running from Portpatrick to Cockburnspath. It is 212 miles (340 km) in length, being the longest of Scotland’s long distance footpaths, and comes nearest to Hawick.
the South Fencibles Regiment

around Yair. It is sometimes jokingly referred to as the ‘Southern Upwards Way’.

the South Fencibles Regiment (thu-south-fen-si-bulz-re-jee-min’) n. voluntary force set up Henry, Duke of Buccleuch in 1778, being embodied at Edinburgh. The Duke recruited from throughout the Scottish Borders. He is recorded being in Castleton on hiring day, for example. The regiment was disbanded at Dalkeith in 1783.

Soutra Aisle (soo-tra-I-yul) n. site of the Soutra mediaval hospital, where a section of the Roman road Dere Street is also preserved. It is located off the A68 between Jedburgh and Dalkeith, the Aisle itself being a private burial vault for the Pringles, dated 1686 and built in part of the former Church.

Soutra Hospital (soo-tra-hos-pi-ul) n. a mediaval hospital, located on high ground about 40 miles from Hawick, just off the A68, also known as ‘Soltre’. It was founded by Malcolm IV in 1164 for the accommodation of travellers and pilgrims and the treatment of the sick and poor of the district. It was dedicated to the Holy Trinity. A spring near there was known as the Trinity Well, and visited by many for its supposed healing powers. It was run by the Augustinian monks from the 12th century until around 1650, being annexed in 1462 to Trinity College Church and Hospital, Edinburgh. The superior was referred to as the ‘Magister’ or Master. It fell into ruin after the Reformation, and Trinity College Church and Hospital itself was demolished in 1848 (to make way for the railway). It was said that much of the ruins were used locally for building materials in the early 19th century. Excavations at Soutra have provided a wealth of evidence relating to mediaval medicine, including over 300 identified plant species. The hospital was run with the granting of 300 estates, including a small-holding in Hawick, ‘Soutra Croft’. This is almost certainly the area that became known as the Trinity lands at the eastern end of town. The endowment of this croft may have gone to an altar dedicated to Mary in the church of Soutra (also written ‘Soltre’ and variants).

Soutralands (soo-tra-lawndz) n. another name for Trinitylands, the part of Hawick given to Soutra Hospital. In 1507 they are referred to as ‘vulgariter vocatas ly Soltrelandis’ and in 1578 as ‘Sowtre landis in Hawik’.

sowens (sow-inz) n., arch. flummery, a sweet pudding made of strained boiled oatmeal or flour – ‘A yeternal roon o’ parritch for breakfast, pease bannocks an’ black kail for dinner an’ parritch and sowens for supper’ [V&M].

sowl (sow-ul, sowl) n. a soul, person, particularly one who is pitied or sympathised with – ‘pair wee sowl’, ‘…an A thocht the sowl wad take a dwam’ [ECS], ‘Puir sowl! Spalding (spawl, spee-din) n. Charles ‘Chair- lie Speedy’ (19th C.) manager and elder in Al-lars Kirk in the late 1800s. He could be the son of George and Agnes Stewart (born in Haw- Hick in 1846, and who died in 1903) or the son of Robert and Jean (born in about 1837). George (b.1818/9) plasterer in Hawick. In 1851 and 1861 he was at 8 Cross Wynd. He married Agnes Stewart and their children included: Agnes (b.1841); Charles (b.c.1845); Ellen (b.c.1847); and Jemima (b.c.1850), Thomas (b.c.1853); Robert (b.c.1855); and Isabella (b.c.1860). James (19th C.) professional runner from Hawick. He recorded many wins in the period 1863–78. In one Common Riding Games, he won the 300 yards, 500 yards and half-mile races. He also won races in Middlebrough, Bolton and Burnley. He is probably the son of William and Margaret born in 1845/6. John (1838–1918) son of William and Margaret Scott. He was a framework knitter in Hawick. He married Catherine Michie in 1863; she was daughter of Robert Michie and Christina Gillis. They emigrated to Canada, settling in Galt, where they were friends with fellow Teri Robert Murray. Their children were Christine, Helen, James, Catherine Wiekie and Mary. Robert (18th C.) resident in Harwood Mill. In the baptismal records his surname is recorded as ‘Speedy’ in 1790 and ‘Speedeen’ in other years. This makes it clear that he was ‘Spalding’ and probably an ancestor of the family nicknamed ‘Speedy’ in Hawick in the 19th century. His children included: George (b.1790), Charles (b.1792), Jean (b.1792), Janet (b.1792) and Jean (again, b.1795). Robert (b.1810/1) frameworker in Hawick. In 1841 he was at ‘Head of Silver St’ and in 1851 was on ‘Kirkstyle Place’. By 1861 he was on Dovemount St. in Wilton. He married Jane Robson in Hawick in 1834. Their children included: Charles (b.c.1837); William (b.c.1840); and Isabella (b.c.1842). Robert (1855–1934) younger son of George and Agnes Stewart. He married Agnes Revel in 1876. He could be the ‘Robbie Speedy’ mentioned in ‘Hawick Immortals’. William (b.1812/3) frameworker in Hawick. In 1841 he was on the Back Row, in 1851 he was living on the Kirkwynd and was in Mather’s Close in 1861. His wife was Margaret and their children were: John (b.c.1839); Helen (b.c.1840); Charles (b.c.1841), who married Agnes Stevenson; Mary (b.c.1843); Robert (b.c.1845); James (b.c.1846); and Robert (b.c.1853). He is probably the William who emigrated (with his family) to Guelph, Ontario and worked as a weaver in the factory of McCrae & Armstrong; while John Inglis was working there, he led the men to stop the machines and sing ‘Teribus’ at the factory during the Common Riding of 1876.

Spence (spens) n. Alan (12th/13th C. listed in the period 1214–49 as witness to the sale of lands in West Lilliesleaf by Adam, son of Adam of Durham to Melrose Abbey. His name was given as ‘Alano spens’. It seems likely that he was somehow associated with Lilliesleaf. Barry L. (1950/1–2017) son of William, he ran Spence’s Music Shop for more than half a century, taking over from his father in 1966. Starting at the height of Beatlemania, he was the main person from whom Teries bought hit records through the last decades of the 20th century and into the 21st. A blues fan himself, he stocked all kinds of music. He was a long-standing member of the Teviotdale Harriers. His wife is Margaret and their children Adrienne and Sandi. John of Condie (d.1573) son of James, he became a Lord Advocate in Scotland. He was also Queen’s Advocate to Mary, Queen of Scots, from 1555. He acted as one of the curators for the young Sir Walter Scott, whose father had been killed in 1552. In 1564/5 he signed the bond between the Scotts and the Kers and also signed the further bond of 1568/9. Rev. John (19th C.) minister at Denholm Congregational Kirk 1844–46. In 1844 he married Ann Drew of Portobello. Rev. John Ryrie (b.1880) born in Helensburgh, son of James and Jane Ryrie. the Spetchman’s Haugh (thu-spech-minz-hawch) n. full name for the Spetch, being the flat land in the Park, on the south bank of the Teviot adjacent to the Laurie Bridge. The area was used in the period 1812–14 for morning roll call of the French prisoners of war in Hawick. The name is old, but not officially recorded until recently, hence its origin is obscure. It may have been pronounced as ‘spetchin’ in a transcript from 1764 (although willows are a prominent riverside feature near there, there is no evidence to support suggestions that it comes from an old Scots word for ‘willow’, and it seems more likely to derive from a personal name like ‘Spetch’ which means a leather patch or a cobbler in some dialects).

the Spetchman’s Sang (thu-spech-minz-sawng) n. poem written by David Hill, with the refrain ‘A day frae Hawick’s a day wasted’. Music was written for it by Scocha in 2001.

spinnin (spi-nin) n. the industry of spinning yarn in Hawick grew up in the early 18th century and became fully established in the 1750s. Women would spin on the ‘muckle wheel’ and the yarn was carried on horseback to places such as Kendall, Boroughbridge (Yorkshire) and Stirling. The spinning wheel held a prominent place in households into the early 19th century, a wheel being the main gift for a new bride. The two main types were the ‘little wheel’ and the ‘meikle (or muckle) wheel’, an example of the former from Crumhaughhill being in the Museum. In 1733 a spinning school was opened in Hawick and in 1734 a spinning mistress was hired from England to take charge of the school, with some funding from the Board of Trustess for Manufactures. The first factor for the school was Robert Howison, and the instigation for founding it came from Douglas of Cavers, as well as Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs, John Chisholme of Stiches and some other local gentlemen. Weaving appears to have been added about 1736. The industry really took off when machinery was first introduced around 1798. In about 1850 it was estimated that yarn-spinning supplied about 1300 looms in Hawick.

spinnin jenny (spi-nin-je-ne) n. a spinning machine that allowed multiple spindles to be turned using a single wheel, invented by James Hargreaves in Lancashire in 1764, and named after his daughter. It was in use in Hawick from the late 18th century until the mid-19th. In 1816 there were as many as 100 hand spinning jennies in the town. It was eventually replaced by the ‘spinning mule’, invented by Samuel Crompton; with the invention of an automated version in 1825 it was soon in wide use in Hawick’s spinning mills.

spinnin jenny (spi-nin-je-nee) n., arch. a slender, ‘daddy longlegs’, a toy made with a piece of pipe-stem and a match, which spins by twisting a thread attached to the middle of the match and threaded through the pipe-stem (cf. jenny-spinner).

Spittalflatt (spi’-ul-flaw’) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded as ‘Spittelflatt’ in 1541. It is stated to be valued at 6 merks and at that time vacant, but formerly tenanted along with the lands of Flatt. It is presumably adjacent to Flatt. The connection is to a hospital is unclear, but just to the north is Abbotshaws.

Spittal Haugh (spi’-ul-hawch) n. former farm near Spittal-on-Rule. It was a tenanted farm of the Cavers estate.

Spittal Mill (spi’-ul-mil) n. corn mill of the 17th century in Spittal-on-Rule, and name of the associated farm. The old Teind Barn there was presumably connected with the mill. James Scott was miller there in 1694. In the 18th century the lands of Spittal-on-Rule were separated between the Murrays, Veitches and Bunyans, with the Veitches being tenants of the mill lands. John Veitch is recorded as tenant in 1792–97, James Turnbull in 1852 and James Ingles in the 1860s.

Spittal-on-Rule (spi’-ul-on-rool) n. former village in the easternmost part of Cavers Parish, near the confluence of the Teviot and the Rule, between Denholm and Bedrule, off the A698. Rich in history, it is now little more than a farm. A leper hospital was probably founded there before 1425, with an attached chapel, possibly dedicated to St. Mary. The location of the chapel may have been the same as the later teind barn, or very close. In the chapel in 1425/6 there was a meeting of Turnbulls, Scotts and others to investigate the leprosy of John Turnbull of Minto (since lepers were legally forbidden from holding lands). John Davidson in Minto was recorded in 1493 having stolen 100 ells of woollen cloth from there. George Thomson was recorded there in 1502 (when he had 2 pigs stolen). The patronage of the church there was granted to James Douglas of Cavers in 1508 and the ‘advocation and gift of the kirk of Spittal’ was listed among the rights inherited by the Barons of Cavers in 1509. The small graveyard was still used in the 18th century, and the vestiges of a former orchard were still clear in the early 20th century. At the nearby ‘Dead Haugh’ the Turnbulls are supposed to have begged the King’s forgiveness (with ropes around their necks) in 1494, instead every tenth man being hanged. The town was burned by Hertford’s men in 1545, probably destroying the hospital and chapel. However, the ‘advocation of the church’ was still mentioned in the 1558 Douglas of Cavers charter. In 1554 an acre of land ‘in terris hospitilis de Rowe, super lie Harparhill’ was granted to Archibald Elliot of Gorenberry, along with the advowson of the chapel of St. Mary at Caerlenrig (perhaps suggesting a connection between the chapel at Caerlenrig and the one associated with the leper hospital at Spittal). The Mains of Spittal-on-Rule was sold by William Douglas of Cavers to Gilbert Ker of Primside in 1563. The lands were farmed by Patrick Storie in 1605 and Richard Brown in 1610. Robert and John Wright were tenants there in 1642. John Lindsay was tenant there in 1684 when declared as a fugitive for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. 9 people were listed there on the 1694 Hearth Tax records. There were 3 tenants in the 18th century, the Murrays, Veitches and Bunvans, but the 3 holdings were combined in 1807. In about 1795 it was listed among parts of Cavers Parish that were nearer to Bedrule Kirk than their own kirk. William Johnstone is recorded as tenant in 1797, John Turnbull in 1841 and 1851, James Turnbull in 1861 and William G. Turnbull in 1868. It was purchased by Thomas Greenshields Leadbetter from Mrs. Palmer-Douglas in 1913. Several ruins can still be found here, including the Teind Barn, once the oldest building in the parish, and an ancient stone grave, found in a small knoll near the modern farmhouse. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows the location of the site of the chapel and old graveyard. The Kirkyard (or ‘Leper’) Well was said to possess healing powers, and the last Denholm witch was buried here. The hospital that gave its name to the location was possibly for lepers and maintained by monks from one of the nearby abbeys. A road bridge crosses the Rule Water nearby, with the adjacent arch of an older structure. The village was the location for a toll on the road between Denholm and Jedburgh; the Toll House at the road bend has had its windows bricked up and painted over with ‘false’ windows. Often locally called just ‘Spittal’ (and spelled various ways in the past, such as ‘Spittle’ and ‘Spittalrule’; the origin of the name is ‘hospital by the river Rule’, with ‘spital’ being a Middle Scots word for a hospital, usually connected with a monastery; the name first occurs as ‘spittale de roull’ in 1493, then ‘Spittale’ in 1508, ‘Spitaill’ in 1509, ‘Ecclesia de Spittale’ in 1511, is ‘Rewle Spittel’ in 1545, ‘the Spytell, Roull’ in 1548/9, ‘Spittalroull’ in 1558, ‘Spytall of Roull’ in 1576/7, ‘Rowllspittell’ in 1605, ‘Rowlespittell’ in 1610, ‘Rowllspittell’ in 1619 and ‘Spitle’ in 1694; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Spittell’).

Spittal Planthin (spi’-ul-plawn-tin) n. former name for a plantation near Spittal-on-Rule. It is unclear whether this referred to a wood near Spittal Ford, by the Teviot, or a wood by the Rule. The linen weavers of the Denholm area used to soak their lint near here.

Spittal Tower (spi’-ul-tor) n. former toll-house at Spittal-on Rule, on the corner of the A698, with the road to the north-west formerly leading to the ford. The building is well known for its pretend painted windows. It is also known as ‘The Lucky Hoose’.

Spittaltoon (spi’-ul-toon) n. lost place name in Liddesdale, once part of the lands of Mangerton. It is listed as ‘Spettletoon’ and worth 4 pounds in a rental roll of c.1376.

Spittal Toor (spi’-ul-toor) n. Spittal Tower, modern farmhouse on the site of a former fortified house, west of Bedrule, up the Tower Burn from Spittal-on-Rule. The former farm, often just called ‘Tour’, was owned by Turnbulls in the 16th century. Gavin Turnbull ‘of the Toure’ was recorded in 1551 and James Turnbull ‘of the Toure’ in 1579/80. It was valued at £104 in 1643 and 1663. The ‘Mains of Tour’ (perhaps the same as the Mains of Spittal) was valued at £560 in 1643 and at that time owned by Douglas of Bonjedward. By 1678 the former lands of Turnbull of Toor were then in the hands of the Douglasses of Cavers. The farm was tenanted by the Murays in the 18th century, ancestors of ‘Dictionary’ Murray. In about 1795 it was listed among parts of Cavers Parish that were nearer to Bedrule Kirk than their own kirk. William Johnstone, younger, was recorded as farmer there in 1797. Robert Barrie was farmer there in 1851 and 1861. It was combined into a larger farm with Spittal-on-Rule in the 19th century (it was ‘tours of Roulwode’ in 1622; it appears on Gordon’s c. 1650 map simply as ‘Tour’ and on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Tour’).

spitter (spi’-ur) n., arch. a light shower of rain or snow, small drops, hence drivel – ‘Wha valu’d not your college spither’ [JR], v., arch. to rain lightly (also written ‘spither’).

Spottiswood (spots-wud) n. David of that Ilk (d.1550) son of William and Elizabeth Hoppringle. He was probably the ‘Spottiswood of that ilk’ who was listed in 1549 among the associates of Ker of Cessford who were accused by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme of raiding and burning his farms at Goldielands and on the Borthwick. He was succeeded by his son Ninian. James (15th C.) rector of the church of Rankilburn, listed in 1453 on a roll of bachelors entered at the newly founded University of Glasgow. He is ‘rector ecclesiae de Rankilburn’. John (16th C.) recorded in 1558 as a rector of the church of Hawick, along with John Sandilands. This is probably the same man who was appointed as minister of Calder in 1560, son of William of Spottiswood (who was killed at Flodden). This John (1510–85) graduated from Glasgow University in 1536, went to London, returned to Scotland in 1643, became a Reformer and was appointed Superintendent of Lowland; he married Beatrix, daughter of Patrick Crichton of Lugton and Gilmerton and had children: John, who succeeded as minister of mid-Calder; James, Bishop of Clogher in Ireland; William; Rachel, who married James Tennent of Linthouse; and Judith. John (1565–1639) son of the minister of Calder, he went to Glasgow University at age 12 or 13, graduated in 1581, and became a favourite churchman of James VI. He was appointed as Archbishop of Glasgow in 1603 and translated to St. Andrews in 1615. He must have temporarily held the superiority of local lands, since he granted a charter to Robert Scott for the lands of Headshaw, Crawknowe and Clews in 1606 and another to John Turnbull for the lands of Barnhills in 1607. He was Moderator at the Assembly that abolished the presbytery. He later became Primate of Scotland and Lord Chancellor of Scotland. He crowned Charles I at Holyrood in 1633. He objected to the Covenant, escaped to England, was deposed and died in London, being buried in Westminster Abbey. He married Rachel, daughter of David Lindsay, Bishop of Ross. His children were: Anne; Sir John; and Sir Robert. Rev. Robert (c.1634–1696) graduating from Glasgow University in 1654, he became minister at Temple in 1663 and was translated to Crichton in 1676. He was deprived in 1681 for not taking the Test. However, he was translated to Abbotrule in 1687, but may only have been minister there for a very short time. He seems to have been a Presbyterian minister, who survived through the Episcopalian years past the Revolution. His wife’s name is not recorded, but their children included: Jean; Alexander, who became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1681; and Elizabeth, who was buried in Greyfriars Cemetery in 1696 (spelled ‘Spotwood’ and variants).

Spoutburn Park (spow-burn-pawrk) n. name for a piece of land on Minto estate. It was listed in 1779, 1788 and 1811 along with Coach Park, with a joint value of £43 14s 6d. In 1780 it was recorded being on the western boundary of Lillielaw Park; this suggests that the stream passing through Minto Glen may have been known as Spout Burn.

Spoutgills (spow-gilz) n. farmstead in Castleton Parish marked on Stobie’s 1770 maps, with ‘Spoutgillfoot’ just to the north. It is on a stream to the south of the Tweeden Burn, perhaps corresponding to the modern Jordon Sike, in which case it would be essentially the same as Blinkbonny. John Armstrong died there in 1756 and is buried at Teviothead. Thomas Beat tie lived there with his family in the 1770s and 80s.

spring (spring) n., arch. a lively tune accompanying a dance – ‘A fiddle spring he’d let us hear, I think they ca’d it ‘Nidge-nod-near’ . . .’ [CPM], ‘. . .the child in the cradle whispers very slyly to the tailor, ‘If you winna tell ma mammy, I’ll play ye a spring on the pipes!’ [EM1820].

Springbank (spring-bawngk) n. house at the foot of Dickson Street, built in the early part of the 19th century. It was the home of 2 generations of hosiery manufacturer Alexander Laings. It took its name from a spring coming down from a former pond in Dickson Street.

Springbank Clinic (spring-bawngk-kli-neek) n. former centre for infant health, based at Springbank House, next to the Haig Maternity Home on Princes Street. The house was acquired in 1921 as a child welfare centre and home for the ‘Jubilee’ district nurses, with the clinic built as a 2-storey addition in 1929/30. Over the years it was used for many community health purposes, e.g. family planning, well-woman services and various voluntary groups. Its last such use was as offices for the Borders Health Board. It was empty after 1989 and sold in the mid-1990s as private housing.

Sprot (sprō’) n. Edward William of Drygrange (1846–98) younger surviving son of Mark. He presented a bell to Lilliesleaf Kirk. In 1867 he bought the estate of Drygrange from Sir George Leith and built a new mansion there. He married Marian Gray, daughter of James Boyd and also married a second time. His children were: Edward Mark of Drygrange (b.1872), who served with the King’s Shropshire Light Infantry; James William Lennox (b.1886); Harold Maitland (b.1888); and John Boyd (1889–98). Frances (1808–1902) brother of Mark of Riddell. In 1883 she gave money to build 6 cottages for ‘friendless and deserving widows or daughters of clergymen, and other ladies who had formerly been in better circumstances’. John (18th C.) recorded at Woll on the 1787–92 Horse Tax Rolls. He is recorded at ‘New Woll’ in 1794. It is unclear if he was connected with the later Sprots of Riddell. Col. John (1830–1907) son of Mark. He was educated in England and germany and entered the 83rd Regiment as ensign in 1848. He served in Ireland and then for many years in India, where he was also put in charge of public works, directing the building of a road. He was Lieutenant during the Indian Mutiny of 1858. He returned to Britain in 1860, being in charge of the depot at Chatham and serving again in Ireland and in Gibraltar. He took leave from the army spending 18 months touring Europe, but then resumed duties as Major of the 91st Highlanders. He was then appointed Assistant Adjutant and Quartermaster-General for Scotland. He is said to have been the first person to recognise the potential military uses for the bicycle. He retired with the rank of Lieutenant-General in 1885, having succeeded to the Riddell estate in 1883. He is often referred to as ‘Col.’, but achieved higher rank later. He extended the main farmhouse at Riddell in 1898. He was a Deputy-Lieutenant and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1885. In 1869 he married Georgina Mary, daughter of H.E. Surtees of Redworth Hall and The Grove, county Durham. In 1878 he secondly married Cecilia Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Rev. W.B. Doveton of Corston. In 1886 he thirdly married Charlotte Gertrude, daughter of W.T. Cole of Boscastle, Cornwall (whose mother was Anne Rutherford, daughter of William Scott of Raeburn and Lessuden and cousin of Sir Walter Scott). His children included: Cecilia Mary Dorothea (b.1880), who married Patrick Keith Murray; John Mark Francis (b.1881); and Col. Alexander William Ramsay (b.1883); Cecil George; Edward Walter Hearle (b.1887); Gertrude Gladys Violet (b.1888); Jack Hugh Stewart (b.1894). He wrote ‘History of the family of Sprot and the ancient mansion and estate of Riddell’. He also wrote several military pamphlets. John Mark Francis (b.1881) son of John. He married Meliora Hay. Their eldest son was John. Maj. John ‘Jock’ (1910–2010) of Riddell, born at old Riddell House. His sister was the Viscountess Whitelaw. He was awarded the M.B.E. He lived to his 100th year and was buried at Lilliesleaf. An autobiography was published on his 98th birthday. Mark (1802–83) eldest son of John and Mary, daughter of Benjamin Yule of Wheatfield. His father spent time in India and made his fortune in London. His great uncle Mark, was a financier who was involved with founding the London Stock Exchange. He was born in London in the same house as Benjamin Disraeli. His father died in 1817, and inheriting a fortune, he abandoned plans to enter the army. The Riddell estate was purchased in 1823, while he was still a minor. He was listed as proprietor in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1826 he built an estate office there, which is now the main farmhouse. He had the lands drained and planted and built several farmhouses at that time. In 1848 he was appointed as a Deputy-Lieutenant of Roxburghshire and he also served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for the county. In 1851 he was farmer of 1705 acres, employing 12 men and 26 women. He was listed at Riddell in Slater’s 1852 directory. In about 1874 he was listed in the Land Tax Rolls as owner of the Barony of Riddell, as well as Friarshaw, Newhouse and other lands in Lilliesleaf Parish; he also held some of Midlem, the superiority of lands in Ashkirk and Bowden Parishes, as well as Lilliesleaf. In 1829 he married Elizabeth, daughter of John Shewell of Sutton Park, Surrey. His sons were: John (b.1830), who succeeded: Capt. Mark George (1832–59), who died in Geneva; James Lewis Boyd (1845–57), who died at school in Ealing aged 13; and Edward William (b.1846) of Drygrange. Maj. Mark of Muselee and Riddell (20th C.) gained the rank of Major in the Royal Scots Guards. He was President of the Scottish Agricultural Organisation Society. He served as Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He married Meloria, daughter of Sir John Adam Hay. S.S. Mary an David (sintz-mä-ree-an-dä-vid) n. Roman Catholic Chapel at 15 Buccleuch Street. This was the first Catholic church in Hawick since the Reformation, made necessary largely by the arrival of Irish workers, who had been meeting informally through the 1820s and 1830s. Fr. William Wallace of Traquair worked to build the church and purchased land in 1841. This plot (later designated 15 Buccleuch Street) was bought from William Wilson, between the Subscription Rooms and the meeting house of the Society of Friends. The land formerly held several 2-storey buildings, which were demolished. The foundation stone was laid in June 1843 (amid inclement weather), officiated by Fr. Wallace himself, flanked by the 2 Bailies. It was opened by Bishop Gilles the following year, with several other priests in attendance, as well as Earl and Lady Traquair and the choir of St. Mary’s. It original seated 400, the furnishings, altar and pulpit being given by the Earl of Traquair. When erected it was the only Catholic church between Edinburgh and Carlisle. A house for the priest was built in 1850/1 on the property immediately to the south and the associated school was started in 1854 (later with a separate building behind the Chapel on Buccleuch Terrace). A side aisle on the south was constructed in 1879, increasing the seatings by about a factor of 2. The Statue of the Sacred Heart was unveiled in 1913 and a War Memorial in 1920. The adjoining property (built as the Subscription Rooms) was purchased in the 1920s, and opened by Archbishop McDonald as the new Halls in 1930. The ornamental facade was removed in 1967 when renovations extended the front by a few feet. For much of the 20th century there was an assistant in Hawick, as well as the Priest. The Scottish Catholic Archives have records covering the period 1793–1939 and there are marriage and birth records from 1847 in the National Archives. The roll of the priesthood is: James Monaghan 1846–47; Patrick Taggart 1847–87; Patrick Shivers 1887–92; John Stevenson Lyle 1892–1912; George H. Bennett 1912–18; Thomas Gibson 1918–24; Edward Mellon 1924–30; Dominic Hart 1930–38; Daniel Kelly 1938–42; Gordon Gray 1942–47; James K. Birnie 1947–56; Peter Higgins 1956–86; Michael Sloan 1986–?; Jeremy Bath 2003–2008; Michael John Galbraith 2008–. A roll of the assistants is: Andrew J. Cameron 1936–38; James G. Harold 1938–42; Gordon Gray 1941–42; Eric Gordon 1942–45; Thomas Watt 1945–46; Thomas Engelen 1946–47; Charles Brodie 1947–50; Eric Barber 1950–55; Liam O’Malhoney 1955–56; John F. Byrne 1956–59; John Ramsay 1959–64; Joseph McMan- hon 1964–69; Francis Barrett 1969–70; Gerald Lynch 1970–77; John Agnew 1977–79; Michael Bagan 1979–85; Michael Sloan 1985–86.

staa (sta, staw) n., arch. a stall – ‘Now Liddesdale has lyan lang in, Fala, fala, fala, faliddle.”

Staaatur (staw’-ur) n., arch. stature – ‘... and David Anderson, about 16 years of age, from the Canongate of Edinburgh, of ane little statur, wanting an ey ...’ [BR1700], ‘This, thy staater, is like til ane pawm-trie ...’ [HSR] (there are spelling variants).

St. Abbs (sin’-awbz) n. Borders town on the coast north of Eyemouth with the spectacular St. Abbs Head nearby. It has a picturesque harbour and one of the few stretches of sandy beach in the area (named after St. Ebbe, or Abba, daughter of King Æthelfrith, who founded the nearby Coldingham Priory in 616).

St. Abbs Heid (sin’-awbz-heed) n. promontory, about 310 feet high, near St. Abbs. It is very picturesque, a favourite place for bird watchers (now a nature reserve) and with several nearby prehistoric camps.

Stable (stä-bul) n. Dougal (15th/16th C.) probably name of the ‘Dougal Stible’ recorded as a son to Thomas Rutherford in the Grange when listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran.

Stack (stawk) pp., arch. stuck – ‘However, tae that she stack wi’ this promise ...’ [JEDM], ‘...ma serk was drackett wui weet till it stack ti ma verra back’ [ECS] (also written ‘staak’; this was the past tense of ‘stick’, with the past participle form being stucken).

Stack-yaird (stawk-yārd) n., arch. a yard used for stacking peat or possibly harvested crops – ‘...did freely confess the taking away from Mr Robert Cunningham, minister of Wilton, three burdens of oat straw out of the stacke yaird’ [BR1700], ‘...they would find the fowls ‘under the muckle thorn-bush i’ the stackyard’ [EM1820].

Stafford (staw-furd) n. Joseph ‘Joe’ (19th C.) English stockmaker who came to Hawick in the mid-1800s. He may have married Janet Smith in Galashiels in 1864. He helped introduce cricket to the Town. John (19th C.) left Hawick to be a soldier in India in the 19th century, writing ‘The Hawick ‘Callants’ Farewell’ before leaving. He had been involved in the local Good Templar movement.

Stainton (stān’-in) n. Alexander (1853/4–1926) ‘Elec the Bellman’, son of Samuel. He was Hawick’s last Bellman, effectively acting as Town Crier. He lived on Dickson Street or perhaps 10 Wilton Crescent. He may be the same Alexander who was Precentor at the East Bank Kirk. He was celebrated in a poem by William Peffers – ‘A wee bit earnest, faithfu’ man, Far sma’er than his voice. Ye’d wonder how he can contain Sic devastatin’ noise’ [WP]. He can also be seen in a portrait by ‘Elliot’. He also appears in a film clip at the Vertish Hill Sports in 1909/10, wearing a distinctive ‘yauchting-style’ hat. Private Thomas R. Stainton (1896/7–17) of the Black Watch was probably his son. James (b.1800/1) from England, he was a nail maker in Hawick. In 1851 he was at 8 O’Connell Street and in 1861 was a ‘Nailmaker Master’ at 2 Melgund Place, employing 1 man. His 1st wife died in 1840 and his 2nd wife was Janet, from Kirkton. Their children included Elizabeth. Robert (c.1825–90) born in Hawick, son of music teacher James, he apparently left Scotland in 1850 after an argument with his father. He became a preacher, living for a while in Chester and travelling around the north of England. He married Elizabeth Warburton and later Eliza Hayton Davis, and his sons... were Robert Kirk and James H. Following a famous court case in 1867, in which several Union men were convicted of bombings and other ‘rattening’ crimes, he interceded to try to get one of the men his old job back. He is buried at Huddersfield. Samuel ‘Sam’ (1820/21–1894) a native of Berwick, he went to Nottingham to learn the stocking-making trade, then moved to Hawick, where he was Sunday School Teacher, Organist and Precentor at Wilton Church from 1855. In that same year he led the formation of the Saxhorn Band, for which he was the first bandmaster. His regular job was a woolen frameworker. He was living at 12 O’Connell Street (probably formerly No. 4) in 1851 and on Dickson Street in 1861. He married Sarah Sales and their children included: James; John; Robert; Alexander (‘Elec the Bellman’); Ann (b.1856); Agnes (b.1858); Elizabeth (b.1860); Sarah (b.1862); Sarah Elizabeth (b.1864); George Frederick Handel (b.1867); and Charlotte (b.1869) (written ‘Stenten’ and variants).

stair (stair) n. a stair, staircase, set of steps, often used as a plural – ‘she was already it the top o the stair’, ‘…upon accompt that he built the stone stair that goes up to the steiple’ [BR1714], ‘…the said Andrew came down the Beddell’s stair att the above mentionat silent hours of ye night’ [PR1718], ‘…Doon oor close and up oor stair’ [IWL], ‘Through the close and doon the stair Watch yer back for Burke and Hare’ [Scot].

stairheid (stair-heed) n. top of a set of stairs, especially the landing at the top of a common staircase.

staitheal (stai-thul) n., arch. the lower part of a corn-stack, foundation of a stack – ‘The lower, upright-sided part of a stack’ [GW].

Stalker (staw-kur) n. Rev. James (d.1816) son of John of Edinkillie, he graduated from King’s College, Aberdeen in 1777. His brother Donald was schoolmaster at Rothiemurchus. He was licensed by Chanonry Presbytery in 1784 and in 1785 was ordained as assistant minister at Fort George. Here he was Chaplain to the Royal Forces, leading to some service that earned the gratitude of his Patron, William, Duke of Roxburghe (then Lord Bellenden). He was also made a Burgess of the Burgh of Nairn in 1793. He was presented as minister of Lilliesleaf by the Duke of Roxburghe in 1804 and admitted there the following year. However, this was against the wishes of some of the Lilliesleaf parishioners, who wanted the previous incumbent’s son John Campbell as their minister. This disagreement led to about 70 families seceding to form a Relief congregation, which built the secession church in the village. Despite a rocky start, he stayed at Lilliesleaf until his death, and remained unmarried. A letter to his brother describes in detail the circumstances of his presentation to Lilliesleaf Parish. He subscribed to Andrew Scott’s book of poetry, published in Kelso in 1811. He died at the Manse.

stam (stawn) v., arch. to stamp along, stumble, stagger – ‘Wi’ giddy pates an’ yill-stain’d claes, A’ hamewards they gae stammin’!’ [JH].

stamack (stawn-muk) n., poet. stomach, appetite – ‘The master’s hearte raise to his hass, His stomach vow’d to flynch’ [JTe], ‘Syne, when the stamack’s satisfied, The twae heids cry, ‘Weel met!’’ [DH] (also written ‘stamach’).

Stamper’s (stawn-purz) n. public house at the north corner of North Bridge Street and Croft Road (address 2 North Bridge Street), in part of the former post office building. It is well known as a local music venue.

stample (stawn-pul) v., arch. to stamp, walk heavily – ‘The auld gudeman came stamplin ben, On battle he was bent …’ [JTe].

stamyn (stain-min) n., arch. a woollen cloth used as a fabric for furnishings – ‘Item, to Willie Scott in Selkirk, for certane stamyn and furneising of the teindis leding, fourtie pundis’ [SB1574].

stan (stawn) v. to stand – ‘…behald, he stan’s ahint our wa’’ [HSR], ‘…But mansions stan split doon the middle, now – On Sunny-hill’ [DH], ‘Hei was stan’in at his back door, ca’ in them blots on the landscape …’ [DH], n. a stand – ‘There’s pethers and potters, and gingerread stan’s, Peep-shows, puff-and-darts, and great caravans …’ [DA] (also spelled ‘stauan’).

stance (stans) n. a station, position, site, particularly used for a taxi stand or bay in a bus station, location (of a house etc.) – …and over the middle of the stance of a house in the midst of the town …’ [C&L].

stanchel (stain-chul) n., arch. an iron bar, particularly fitted in a window – ‘Received for 27 lbs. stanchel iron taken out of the thieves’ hole window, …L.0 4 6’ [BR1787].

standard  (stan-durd)  adj. word formerly used to refer to classes beyond the three infant classes, so that e.g. ‘standard one’ was equivalent to ‘primary four’.

the Standard  (thu-stawn-durd)  n. another name for Hawick’s Flag or Colour – ‘The said day the baylyees and town counsell did unanimously agree that ane new colour, standard, or pencell, should be bought …’ [BR1707], ‘…Of slayer slain, of Standard won Down here in days of old’ [JEDM], ‘Our Standard shall wave as it waved of yore by Teviot’s rocky bed, As o’er many a Cornet it has streamed, now numbered with the dead’ [JEDM].

the Standard  (thu-stawn-durd)  n. full title ‘The Standard, Border Times and Hawick Telegraph’, a newspaper published 1887–90 by W. Morrison & Co., coming out on Wednesdays. It had originally been the ‘Border Standard’, published in Langholm, which combined with some of Morrison’s other newspapers.

the Standard  (thu-stawn-durd)  n. name of a stagecoach operating in Hawick in the early 19th century. In 1837 it was listed leaving for Edinburgh every afternoon (except Sundays) at 1 p.m., going through Selkirk and Galashiels, and also leaving for London at 11 p.m., going via Langholm, Longtown, Carlisle, Penrith and Lancaster. The other coach operating at that time was the ‘Royal Mail’.

standart  (stan-dur’, -durt)  n., adj., arch. standard – ‘…by plurality of votes Robert Scott, merchant, called of Falnash, was elected to carry the standart’ [BR1722].

Standhill  (stawn-hil)  n. site for sidings on the Waverley Line, just north of Hassendean, in Ancrum Parish. The farm (or at least its 2 parts) was once owned by the Kers. David Murray was recorded there in 1494/5, when sheep, cattle, horses and and other goods were pillaged from there, as well as the farm being burned. George Turnbull of Standhill is recorded in 1553/4. Hector Turnbull had a charter of ‘feu farm’ of the ‘2½ lands’ of Standhill in 1610 and it was held by the Turnbuls of Knowe, as recorded in 1631 and in 1660 and existing in the National Archives. John Turnbull in ‘Standhill’ had his lands valued at £120 in 1643; he is also recorded as owner in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663 and 1678. It appears to have passed to the Riddells about 1664. However, Turnbull of Standhill is supposed to have been the leader of the Covenant supporter who besieged and broke into Drumlanrig’s Tower in 1679. It later formed part of the estates of the Elliots of Minto; there are deeds among the Minto papers dating from 1610 to 1806. ‘Captain Turnbull’ paid tax for 14 windows there in 1748. In 1779 it is recorded that the lands were owned by ‘Mrs Turnbull and Mrs Stenhouse’ and in 1788 by Capt. Stenhouse. John Amos was farmer there in 1794–97. The Minto estates sold it in 1951 (marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map; it was ‘standhil’ in 1494/5).

stand oot  (stawn-doot)  n., arch. a strike. Hawick’s first one recorded was in 1817 – ‘Hawick had hitherto been free of stikes, or ‘stand oots’, as they were called’ [RM].

stand oot  (stawn-doot)  n., poet. to be in opposition, rebel – ‘…Nae stoutlier stude out for their laird, Nor did the lads o’ Liddesdale’ [CPM].

St. Andrew  (sin’-awn-droo)  n. patron saint of Scotland, who was crucified on a diagonal cross in Patras, some of his bones later finding their way to Scotland. The saltire was adopted as the flag of Scotland, according to legend because it appeared against the blue sky when King Angus prayed to St. Andrew during a battle in 832 C.E. It is reputedly the oldest national flag in Europe. The same saltire has made its way onto the Hawick flag.

St. Andrew’s Kirk  (sin’-awn-drooz-kirv’)  n. name of the former conven and nursing home at Stirches House.

St. Andrew’s Convent  (sin’-awn-drooz-kon-vin’)  n. name of the former convent and nursing home at Stitches House.

St. Andrew’s Kirk  (sin’-awn-drooz-kirk)  n. St. Andrew’s Church, founded as a branch of the Free Church in 1866, to serve the north end of town and also Wilton. Originally called ‘Wilton Free Kirk’, it was founded largely through the efforts of Thomas Laidlaw and George Hobkirk, with the first organisational meeting taking place in Peter Laidlaw’s warehouse in March 1866. The congregation started with 115 members from Hawick Free Kirk, first meeting in the Exchange Hall until the church was built on North Bridge Street in 1868/9, and then named St. Andrew’s. Its gothic-style design was by Glasgow-based architect J.T. Rohead, and it had a spire reaching a height of 103 feet. It was constructed by local building firm George Tait. The church could hold 900 people, and below it was a hall that could accommodate about 200 for Sunday School and other activities. The church manse was built off Weensland Road in 1890. A church organ was added in 1904 and in 1911 there were major alterations (designed by J.P. Alison), with the addition of a church hall. A serious fire in 1922 resulted in major repairs and a closure of 18 months, during which time the congregation joined St. John’s. The church was demolished in 1959/60, with congregation becoming part of Trinity Church. The site was used as a petrol station and later a car wash. A roll of the ministers is: Duncan Stewart 1868–1908; William Farquharson 1908–14; James A. T. Kennedy 1915–21; John Mowat 1922–30; George Sutherland 1930–40; Neil D. Craig 1941–46; John S. Miller 1954–59.
St. Andrew’s Nursin Haim

St. Andrew’s Nursin Haim (sin’-awn-drooz-nur-sin-häm) n. private nursing home in Stirches, located in the old home of John Blenk-} horn. It cares for about 50 elderly patients, is run by Augustinian Sisters and has its own chapel. It is also known as ‘Stirches Hoose’ and ‘The Convent’.

St. Andrew’s Place (sin’-awn-drooz-plis) n. street planned for Stirches, but never built, despite appearing on Burrow’s street map.

stane (stän) n. a stone, stone – ‘A’ ye wha pry deep into nature In yirth, an’ stane, an’ a’ sic matter . . .’[JoHa], ‘My stanes the steps o’ those hae borne, By which they gloried to be worn’[AD], ‘Happy sall he be that tak’s an’ devals thy wee anes agayn the stanes’[HSR], ‘I couldna thole the cauld hearth stane . . .’[JEDM], ‘Oh! Had thae rugged stanes a tongue What sermons they could preach’[JT], ‘Wulton was biggit in comely thae rugged stanes a tongue What sermons they could preach’[JEDM], ‘Oh! Had thae rugged stanes a tongue What sermons they could preach’[JEDM].

Stanegarthside (stän-girth-sd, -garth-) n. former farmstead in Stanegirthside, where the Captain of Bewcastle lived?’[DH].

Staneholm (stän-höm) n. former farmstead in the Upper Teviot valley. It was part of the larger set of lands called Ringwoodfield when leased from Melrose Abbey by the Scotts of Brunxholme in 1500. It is probably the land called ‘Grangia alias Stanyhetoun’ which ‘Sym Scot of Fernili and Arche Elliot of Gorumberry’ rented from Melrose Abbey in about 1557; it was worth £4 at that.
time. Blaeu’s c.1654 map shows it as ‘Stonyhelm’ south of Southdeanrig on the ‘Cairtann’ Burn. The precise location is uncertain, but a connection with Staney Hill, just east of Southdean Rig, seems likely.

the Stane o Destiny (thu-stän-ô-des-ti-nee) n. stone on which Kings of Scotland were historically crowned at Scone, which was removed and taken to Westminster by Edward I in 1296, to be fitted into a chair used to crown subsequent English sovereigns. Although just a rather unremarkable oblong of locally-mined sandstone, the object was held to have mystical properties, with legends claiming it came from ancient Ireland or even the Middle East. In 1950 a group of 4 Scottish students removed the stone from the Abbey and ‘repatried’ it to Scotland. With major Border crossings closed the group smuggled the stone by car up the A7 and there is a rumour that it spent the night in Hawick (perhaps in Bob and Nessie Oliver’s shop on Drumlanrig Square) on its way north. Certainly one of those responsible, Alan Stuart, had a granny who lived in Hawick at the time. There was a huge police operation to find the culprits and the stone, which was deposited at Arbroath Abbey a few months later, quickly being returned to England, but ‘loaned back’ to Scotland in 1996.

stane pirrie (stän-pi-ree) adj. daft, feather-brained – ‘Stane pirrie (for daft) derived, I think from Pirri’s stone ginger in Hawick’ [HAST1958].

Staneshiel Burn (stän-sheel-burn) n. stream in the upper Liddel valley. It rises near Bloodbush Edge and runs roughly north-west to join the Liddel Water between Dinlabyre and Steelearoad-end. There are remains of cottages at the foot of the stream, while higher up it contains a waterfall known as ‘Kiddslinn’ or ‘Kitty Linn’. A farmstead there is recorded in 1544. It could be the ‘Stanehilburnfoot’ where labourer Walter Hislop was living in 1835.

staney (stän-nee) adj. stoney – ‘Whan thair jujudges ar owerthrawn in stanie pieces ...’ [HSR], ‘...an the gray waas o Fatlips keeket oot thre on the treis that skuggeet Barnhill’s staney bed’ [ECS]. ‘A flock mattress wi’ muckle lumps That felt like staney rocks’ [AY] (also written ‘stanie’).

the Staney Brae (thu-stän-nee-brä) n. alleyway from Allars Bank to Allars Crescent, with houses being part of Allars Bank. It was formerly part of Backdamgate, and presumably named for its roughness. An anvil at the bottom marks the site of the old blacksmiths.

Staney Cleuch (stän-nee-kloo-gh) n. small stream that rises to the north of Skelfhill farm and joins the Allan Water. There are signs of cord rig around it.

Staneyford Moss (stän-nee-förd-mos) n. Stonyford Moss, boggy area on the former Synton estate, located to the left of the A7 just before Synton Loch. It was one of 4 boggy areas drained by the Laird of Synton around 1800, and described as covering 40 acres. During the drainage, old oaks and red deer antlers were uncovered. There are traces of rig-and-furrow cultivation to the south. It seems likely (although perhaps on the wrong side of the Ale Water) that this is the ‘Staniford’ listed in about 1170 in a charter describing the perambulation of the pasture lands granted to Orm of Ashkirk.

Staneygill (stän-nee-gil) n. lands in Liddesdale, to the north of Whisgills. In a rental roll of c.1376 ‘Stanygill’ was valued at 5 shillings. In a 1541 roll ‘Stanygill’ was leased to Simon Armstrong (possibly of Tinnisburn), and valued at 5 shillings. In 1632 it is listed among the Liddesdale possessions of the Sheriff of Teviotdale, as well as among the lands of Thomas Kerr of Ancrum. Staneygill Rig lies to the east of Tinnis Hill, with the Staneygill Burn running roughly southwards to meet the Tinnis Burn near Redmoss. Where Black grain and Dow Sike join the Staneygill Burn is a sheepfold built over the remains of a rectangular structure, possibly a tower. Jeffrey suggested this was ‘Puddingburn Ha’, but that seems more likely to be much further north, near Paddington Sike. The remains of the tower here are about 7 m by 5 m, with the east wall missing entirely. Further upstream, on the west bank, is a platform suggestive of the location of an illicit still (it is ‘Stannygill’ and ‘Staneygill’ in 1632; ‘Stainygill’ is marked on Blaeu’s c.1654 map).

Staneyhaugh (stā-nē-hāwrch) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded on a rental roll of c.1376, with a value of 8 shillings. The precise location is unknown, but probably on the west side of the Hermitage Water (it is ‘Stonyholm’, recorded in the 16th century (it is ‘Stony Hill’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, but it could be connected with Stanesfield).

Staney Hill (stā-nē-hil) n. hill to the south-west of Old Northhouse, reaching a height of 335 m. It may be related to the lands of ‘Stanhelm’, recorded in the 16th century (it is ‘Stony Hill’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, but ‘Staney Hill’ today).

Staney Meadi (stā-nē-me-di) n. former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, listed as ‘Stoney Meadow’ in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls.

Staney Stewart (stā-nē-stew-ur’) n. dyke builder in John Ballantyne’s song ‘Pawkie Paiterson’. His first name is unknown, but one possibility is Andrew Stewart, and agricultural labourer living at Crow Byres in 1841, about the time the song was written – ‘And as for Stoney Stewart, He’s often scarce o’ stanes, And for to mend his aulf fail dykes Aw’ll leave him ma auld banes’ [JSB].

stang (stāng) n., arch. a sting, wound, stab or pain made by a sting – ‘Her words nae stang was cairry’ [WL].

Stanger (stān-jur) n. Tony Hawick rugby player in the Wing position. He first played for Scotland in 1989 and gained 52 caps, scoring a total of 106 points, including a record 24 tries, one of which was the famous Grand Slam winner – ‘Come and tell me, Tony Stanger, have your feet returned to earth? Was it for this magic moment that your mother gave you birth? When you lounged halfway to Heaven, did you hear the mighty roar, As fifty thousand voices were all willing you to score’ [TD].

Stanishope (sta-nis-hōp) n. farmstead in Cavers parish, to the north of the Maidens, reached via a track from Shankend. The Catrail passes near here. It is probably the ‘Scaneshuphope’ among lands in the Barony of Cavers resigned in 1368 by Thomas Baliol to his superior William, Earl of Douglas. It is listed as part of the holdings of Douglas of Cavers in a charter of 1511. There are further deeds from 1614, 1624 and 1625 in the Douglas of Cavers papers. It was owned by the Eliotts of Stobs at the end of the 17th century. It was listed among the lands of Eliott of Stobs in 1678. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. It was still listed among the possessions of Sir William Elliott of Stobs in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. William Little was shepherd there in 1861 and R. Elliot was there in 1868. The area is under forestation and an extensive area around the former steading are now sometimes called ‘Stennishope forestry plantation’ (also written ‘Staneshope’, ‘Stenishope’ and ‘Stennishope’ on the Ordnance Survey map; the origin is probably from Old English ‘stan hus hop’, ‘the valley with the stone house’; the name first occurs as ‘Staneishope’ in the mid-14th century, is ‘Stanishope’ in 1511, ‘Staneishope’ in 1678 and is transcribed ‘Stonehouse’ in 1687 and ‘Stainishope’ in 1698).

stank (stāng) n., arch. a pond, swampy pool, ditch ‘Alang by the dead water stank, Jock Fenwick I met on the lea, But his saddle was tooin in a clank, An’ wha daur medle wi’ me?’ [T] (from French).

stannin stane (staw-nin-stān) n. a large stone that appears to have been deliberately placed in its location, often upright, and of great antiquity. Examples near to Hawick include individual stones at Midshields, near Saughtree (the Knocking Stone and the White Stones), at Hermitage (the Buck Stone), on Brown Rig, at Lilliard’s Edge and near Priesthaugh (the Tinlea Stone), as well as the stone circles at Burgh Hill and Nines-tane Rig.

Stan Reid’s (stan-reedz) n. popular venue for dances in the pre-WWII years, located in the Drill Hall, and organised by Stan Reid. For the next few years dances were organised by the Territorial Army, but still referred to as ‘Stan Reid’s’.

Stansfield (stanz-feeld) n. Sir James (d.1687) receiver general for the Scotts of Buccleuch from 1673, taking over the position from Patrick Scott of Langshaw. He was a Colonel in the Parliamentary army. He was murdered near Haddington by his son Philip, apparently because he disherited him. The curious story involves the body apparently bleeding at the son’s touch, this being considered as a divine sign of his guilt, and after the son was hanged his tongue was cut out for cursing his father, his hand cut off for patricide and his severed head put on public display.

stap (stawp) v., arch. to stop up (a hole), block, stuff, choke, fill up – ‘Draue owt alsua the speer, an’ stap the waye arayne thame that speik me …’ [HSR], ‘…thaye ar like the deef eddart that stappit hir lug’ [HSR], ‘Hawick does not use ti stap for to stop except in the expression ti stap up = to choke up or to cram’ [ECS], ‘The brander’s stappet up!’ [ECS], ‘… An’ stap, a dish in ilka haund, Wi’ bread ye scarce could see’ [WFC], ‘So … I’m weel-wesht, then stappit wi’ ingin, And yits and liver, lites and a’ thing …’ [DH], ‘Then he staps his pipe Wi’ bacca rank, And trots till he’s dry Alang the bank’ [DH], ‘I liked to see the big man twirl the poke, And stap it fu’ o’ sugar and brose meal’ [WL], to thrust, push vigorously – ‘Stap eet in throwe the door!’ [ECS], n., arch. a stopper, stave of a wooden vessel, ‘Ti take a stap oot o’ yin’s bicker’ means literally to reduce the size of one’s dish, or figuratively to humble someone – ‘A’ll taik a stap oot o yoor bicker = I’ll reduce your allowance’ [ECS], ‘Ti gang a’ ti staps’ is to fall to pieces, become worthless, deteriorate, degenerate – ‘Ma wesheen-tub is geizent. Its gaen aa ti staps’ [ECS].

stap (stawp) v., poet. to stride, take long steps – ‘A muckle big, bang fallih that stapeet alang the Jethart road’ [ECS], ‘… And the auld laird stappin’ hamewan Is a soured man’ [WL], n., arch. a stop, stride – ‘A’ll taik yow doon a stap’ [ECS] (also written ‘stap’ and ‘staup’).

Staplegordon (stā-pul-gor-din) n. village a few miles north of Langholm and name for the surrounding parish. The settlement was formerly of greater importance and was once a burgh in its own right. The parish was briefly united with Roxburghshire following an Act of Parliament in 1672. It was united with Wauchope in 1702 and its name changed to Langholm Parish (it is ‘Stabilgortoun’ in 1324 and ‘Stablegordon’ on Sandison’s c.1590 map).

stappit (staw-pē’ -pi’) pp., poet. stopped, stopped up – ‘… but the lipps o’ thame that speik lees sall be stappet’ [HSR], ‘…when a muckle lang car stoppit and a man wi horn-rimmed glasses stuck his heid oot’ [DH].

A hill called Starcleuch Edge’ [DH].

Stark (stawrk, sterk) n. Andrew (1827–1900) from Westruther, Berwickshire, son of Robert and Isabel Moir. In 1861 he was a grocer and corn dealer on Dickson Street in Wilton. He was later a farmer in Lilliesleaf Parish and at Broom in Ancrum Parish. In 1858 in Wilton he married Eliza, daughter of James Riddel. Their children included: an unnamed son (b.1858); Mary (b.1860); Jane (b.1862); James (b.1864); Isabella (b.1866); Robert (b.1870); and William (b.1875). David (17th C.) tenant in Harden in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Ian (1954–) born in Gala, he won 4 silver medals at the Olympics for equestrian events, as well as several other major international championships. He was Chief Guest at the Common Riding in 2003 and guest of honour at the 2012 Hawick Olympics celebration. He lives near Selkirk.

starlight special (star-lij-spe-shul) n. night train that sometimes passed through Hawick station.

starnie (stawa-nee) n., poet. a star – ‘When no’ a starnie lent its light To cheer my lonely way’ [JT], ‘... And sweetly the starnies a’ blink through the blue’ [JT], ‘I saw the wee starnies beginning to sparkle, Aboon Christen-berry I saw the moon spiel ...’[DA] (cf. ster and stern).

the Star o Robbie Burns (thu-stawr-o-ro-bee-burnz) n. song written in 1879 by James Thomson, with music by James Booth (an English-born accompanist, based in Glasgow). It seems likely that Thomson met Booth when the latter was musical director for a performer at the Exchange Hall in 1873. The song was first sung at the Hawick Burns Club by Thomas Strathearn on the 120th anniversary of Burns’ birth, in Graham’s Hotel (later the Holland House). It was also popularised by the tenor singer J.M. Hamilton. The song was soon taken up by Burns admirers worldwide. It is typically the only song performed at Burns suppers that was not written by the Bard himself (sometimes also pronounced raw-bee).

start an o’er loup (star-in-or-lowp) n., arch. the limited right of livestock to startle and leap over a boundary into neighbouring lands – ‘... did not disturb the Hawick horses, as they allowed start and oerloup ...’[C&L1767], ‘The tenants of his Grace, whose farms lay contiguous to the town-common, had been in the practice of taking start and o’er loup with their cattle on the burgh muir’ [RW] (see also owerloup).

the Station (thu-sta-shin) n. Hawick Railway Station, built when the Edinburgh line was opened in 1849 and reconstructed in 1862 with the opening of the Carlisle line. The original station was about 80 m west of the newer one, and was then used as a goods depot. An extra platform and subway were constructed for the 1914 Highland Show. The Station area also had extensive goods yards and sidings, and the offices of coal merchants. The last train left on 5th January 1969, with the track lifted 2 years later, and the buildings demolished in 1975. The site eventually saw the opening of the Leisure Centre in 1982. There is little remaining to indicate a station was ever there, although part of the original platform is incorporated into the footpath to Burnfoot. The name is still occasionally used to describe this area, or more commonly to refer to the pub across the street, which is one of the few tangible reminders of Hawick’s railway past.

the Station Brig (thu-sta-shin-brig) n. popular name for the bridge across the Teviot, officially called North Bridge – ‘When ee stood there on the Station Brig Just lookin’ at the waitter There was naething mair excitin’ And naething else wad maitter’ [AY].

Station Buildins (sta-shin-bil-dinz) n. block of houses between Commercial Road and Laing Terrace, previously part of Dovemount Place, but renamed in 1890, and now being ‘Station Buildings, Dovemount Place’. It is 4 storeys high, with shops on the bottom and ornamental dormers. The much more plain lower block on the corner of Commercial Road was added later (this may be the block designed for Alan Watt by J.P. Alison in 1894). In its early days the name ‘Station Buildings’ was displayed prominently at the top. Businesses here include James Byrdon, grocers, and Kearney the chemists.

the Station Hotel (thu-sta-shin-hotel) n. hotel and pub on Dovemount Place, opposite Hawick’s former railway station. Also popularly known as ‘the Station’ or ‘the Station Bar’. The building is grade C listed. The signal box by the station had the ability to ring a bell to warn passengers in the bar that a train was leaving in 5 minutes.

the Station Viaduct (thu-sta-shin-vi-a-dukt) n. main railway bridge crossing the Teviot just south of the Station, having 6 arches. The last train crossed it in April 1971, and it was blown up (twice!) in September 1975. The base of one of the pillars is still visible in the river (also called ‘Teviot Viaduct’ or just ‘the Viaduct’).

statute (sta-ew) v., arch. to decree, enact – ‘...the two present bayleys, and town counsell being conveined, did statut and enact unanimouslie nemine contradicente ...’[BR1694], ‘...the said Bayleyes and town Counsell did statut and ordaine that the said Robert Hardie … should carie the said colour … .’ [BR1706], pp., arch. decreed, enacted – ‘The said day, it is statute and ordained that the cordinners shall try this market for insufficient leather and unbarkit schone … .’ [BR1643], ‘It was statut, enacted, and ordained that noe person … should … transport or cary any other colour, pencell, or standard … .’ [BR1707] (also spelled ‘statut’).

statutory labour (sta-tew-tu-rea-bur) n. a system by which labouring classes were required to undertake public works up to a certain number of days a year. It was particularly used for the upkeep of roads, following Acts of 1617, 1661 and 1669. In later years there was some compensation for the work done. The system was abolished in 1845 and replaced by land assessment to pay for hired labour. But this would be a regular burden on local men in the late 17th, entire 18th and early 19th centuries.

staucher (staw-chur) v., poet. to stagger, stumble about – ‘She chased auld Winter frae the lea Ti staucher hame ti Greenland . . . .’ [WP], ‘Gin wi’ your faith set firm aboon, Ye staucher on alane . . . .’ [WL] (also spelled ‘stacher’).

stau see stan

staur-licht (stawr-licht) n., poet. starlight – ‘. . . The whaups a’ beddit, and ilk lamb and yowe, Snug aneth the staur-licht, the halli nicht afore him’ [DH] (see also ster, stern and stannie).

stave (stäv) v. to sprain, wrench, bummab – ‘A staved ma pinkie when the baa dunted off eet’, ‘Staived thoom = a sprained thumb (a painful strain caused by the end of the thumb coming into violent contact with a hard body)’ [ECS], n. an injury caused by a strain or twist – ‘it’s no broken, it’s just a stave’ (also written ‘staive’).

Staven (stä-vin) n. John (16th C.) listed in the Admiralty Court Book in 1557 as ‘Johnne Staven in Hawick’ when he purchased a tenement in Jedburgh from advocate John Moscrop. The land was on the Canongate, and he paid £20. It is unclear if his surname has been transcribed correctly; it could be ‘Steven’ or ‘Stavert’, for example.

Stavert (stä-ver’ë) n. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Pott and their children included William (b.1635) and John (b.1640). Adam of Hoscote (1750–1827) son of Thomas and Elizabeth Pott. He bought the portion of Hoscote that his brother George had inherited from their uncle, George Pott, and also bought the other portion from his cousin John Grieve. He is probably the Adam recorded at Todrig on the 1785–90 Horse Tax Rolls and 1791–97 at Hoscote. In 1793 he paid the land tax at Philogar in Hownam. He is recorded at Hoscote on both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. He was confirmed in the lands of Hoscote by Hugh Scott of Harden in 1801. He paid the land tax at Hoscote in 1802. He was listed as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1805 and 1819 (although his name was transcribed as ‘Stewart’). He was owner of Cunzierton and Harcarse in Oxnam Parish, as well as Outerside in Roberton Parish, according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. He was the Laird of recorded when he borrowed money from William Elliot of Harwood in 1824 and still Laird in 1825. He married Anne, daughter of John Brownell of Breck, Recorder of the Isle of Man. Their only child was Hannah, who married Archibald Dickson of Hassendeanburn. In 1797 he secondly married Agnes, daughter of John Scott of Whitehaugh; she is recorded as a widow in 1851, living with her brother James Scott at Whitehaugh, and she died in 1855, aged 83. Their children were: Thomas (1798–1847), who succeeded; Margaret (1801–65), who also later succeeded to Hoscote; Elizabeth (b.1805–1862), who married Richard Bryn; and John (1807–59), who succeeded his brother Thomas. When he died his trustees included Walter Scott, George Pott and James Pott. His gravestone in Roberton Cemetery appears to say that he died at the age of 84. Lieut.-Col. Adam William (1843–95) current holder of the ‘Stavert of Hoscote’ title. He was educated at Stowe and Sandhurst. He married Shuna Nancy McNab and has family. Andrew (1809–91) son of Robert, he was a farmer at Dykecrofts in Castleton Parish. He was recorded there in 1841 and in 1851 he was farming 1500 acres and employing 13 labourers. He was there on the 1861 census and still there in 1868. He married Margaret Armstrong in 1836 and their children included: Ann (b.1834); Robert (1838–99), who moved to England; Francis (b.1840); Mary (b.1842); William (1843–91), died in Cheshire; Thomas (b.1845); Margaret (b.1847); Helen (b.1849); Andrew Graham (b.1851); and Jessie Elliot (b.1854). His brother Robert (a discharged soldier) was also living with them. He died at Dykecroft. Archibald (b.1806/7) tenant in Saughtree. In the 1834 electoral roll he is listed as joint tenant along with his brother Robert (residing in Manchester). The lands were assigned to them by their father with the consent of the Duke of Buccleuch. He is listed among heads of households in 1835–41. He was recorded at Saughtree in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale in the 1850s. In 1851 he was farmer of about 3,000 acres of ‘mountain-land’, employing 4 labourers; in 1861 it was 3,200 acres and employing on average 8 labourers. He lived with his sister Janet. He is probably the Mr. Stavert of Saughtree who donated a red deer to the Museum in 1863. He was still recorded at Saughtree in 1868. Archibald of Hoscote (b.1828) eldest surviving son of William and Marion Park. He became Laird of Hoscote in 1857, succeeding his aunt Margaret, his uncles having already died. He also owned lands in Oxnam and Howham parishes, and had a house in Edinburgh at 34 Palmerston Place. He was recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874 (incorrectly as ‘Andrew’) as owner of Cunzierton and Harcarse in Oxnam Parish, as well as (correctly as Archibald) Outerside. In 1857 he married Rosina, daughter of William Hope, and she died in 1897. Their children were: William James (b.1858), Rector of Burnswall, Yorkshire and Chaplain to the Earl of Craven; Thomas Hope (b.1859), Major in the Leinster Regiment; Herbert John (b.1861) accountant in Edinburgh; Archibald Arthur (b.1864) with the Priory of South Queensferry, linlithgow; Francis Edward Vose (b.1870); and a daughter. Miss C. (18th/19th C.) listed at Florida in 1821 when she subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. This was probably the farm of that name in Liddesdale. It is unclear how she was related to other Staverts. Dr. Elliot (1810–85) son of Thomas and Janet Armstrong, he was born at Saughtree in Castleton Parish. He graduated in medicine from Edinburgh University in 1834 and became a doctor in Preston, Lancashire, where he was also a councillor. In 1837 he married Margaret Jenkinson and they had children Elizabeth, Thomas and Margaret. He secondly married Ann Eliza Whitehead. Elliot (19th C.) donator to Hawick Museum of the 2 stone cross pieces which were found near the Abbey Sike in the mid-19th century. The first was about 4 feet long, in the shape of a sword handle, and found about 1850 near the ‘Abbey’. The second was a rounded head with a cross on each side, found by shepherd John Chisholm in the Abbey Sike in 1880. He could be the Elliot born to Thomas in Castleton Parish in 1810, who was a doctor in Preston and died in 1885. George (18th C.) resided at Hawick Parish. He married Betty Neil and their children included: Mary (b.1758); Thomas (b.1760); and Betty (b.1766), who probably married Henry Turnbull. George (18th/19th C.) farmer at Orchard, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Walter is listed alongside him, and so presumably his brother or son. George (1756–1807) son of Thomas and Elizabeth Pott. He inherited part of Hoscote from his uncle George Pott. He was a surgeon in the Royal Navy. He is probably the George who owned Outersiderig in 1788. In 1783 he married Elizabeth Brownell, sister of his brother Adam’s first wife. Their children were: Thomas (b.1787), Deputy-Lieutenant in Selkirkshire; and William (b.1792), who married Marion, daughter of Archibald Park, Windymains. He died in Liverpool. James (d.c.1682) tenant in Earlsdie. His will is recorded in 1682. He must have been related to William, who is recorded at Earlsdie in 1684. John (17th C.) resident of Minto Craigend who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (18th C.) married Margaret Scott in Hawick Parish in 1769. His daughter Elizabeth was baptised at ‘Todshaugh Hillsheil’ in Roberton Parish in 1771. She may have been the Betty who married John Henderson in Cavers in 1791 and probably John Turnbull in Wilton and died in 1831 at West Port. John of Hoscote (1807–59) born in Robertson Parish, son of Adam. He was Laird of Hoscote after Thomas, his older brother. He served as Justice of the Peace. In the 1850s he was living at Burngrove. He married Elizabeth Bridget Watson, who died in 1868, aged 48. In 1851 he was living with his sister Elizabeth Bruce, who was a widow. Margaret (1801–65) elder daughter of Adam Stavert with his wife Agnes Scott. In 1851 she was living with her mother and uncle, James Scott of Whitehaugh. She inherited the estate of Hoscote after the death of her brothers Thomas and John. She married her cousin, Thomas Stavert, and died without children. Hoscote was inherited by her nephew Archibald. Ralph Alan (d.1978) inherited Hoscote in 1932. During WWII he was posted to India, where he worked as an engineer. He married Pearl Gallagher and she died in 1985. The iron gates, removed during the war, were replaced after his death, as a memorial to him. They are buried at Borthwick Waas. Robert (17th/18th C.) early member of this local family. He is listed at Earlsdie along with William on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He is also recorded in 1695 at Earlside (or ‘Earlswood’). His son Robert was born in 1701 and Thomas in 1709. Robert of Earlside (18th C.). First of the local lairds (rather than tenants) of this family, he may have been the son of Robert born in 1701. Robert (18th C.) farmer at Effledge according to the 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton. He was probably son of Thomas, farmer at Saughtree. He married Helen (or ‘Nelly’) Pott. Their children included: Thomas (b.1780), who farmed at Saughtree; Robert (b.1781); and Helen (b.1783). He is probably the Robert recorded at Saughtree on the 1785–92 Horse Tax Rolls. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. His wife was Mary Graham and their children included: Robert (b.1808); Andrew (b.1809), farmer at Dykecrofts; and Ketren Elliot (b.1810). Thomas (b.1697) son of William, he was baptised in Cavers Parish. He may be the Thomas who married Marion Williamson and whose son William was baptised in Galashiels Parish in 1723. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Todshawaugh according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (1709–93) son of Robert. He occupied the farm of Coliforthhill, it is said this was a reward for military service rendered to the Duke of Buccleuch. He paid the Tax at Coliforthhill in 1785–97. Although supposed to have died in 1793, he is probably the Thomas recorded at Coliforthhill in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. In 1744 he married Elizabeth (or Betty, d.1793), daughter of Adam Pott of Hoscote; his wife’s sister Jean married Walter Grieve at the same time in Roberton. They had a large family, including: George (b.1756), who inherited part of Hoscote; Adam, who was later Laird of Hoscote; Betty (b.1752), Jean and Janet, none of whom reached adulthood; and Robert, who married Helen Pott. Thomas (18th C.) resident at Broadlee when his son George was baptised in Robertson Parish in 1762, and when his daughter Janet was baptised in 1763. Other children of his were probably John (b.1747), Isabel (b.1750), Margaret (b.1753), Thomas (b.1756), William (b.1759) and Mary (b.1760). Thomas (d.1798) farmer at Saughtree. He is probably the Thomas listed there on both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. He is recorded in the Edinburgh Magazine as dying ‘in consequence of a fall from his horse in hunting’. His son Robert probably took over as farmer of Saughtree. Thomas (d.bef. 1810) resident of Hawick. His wife Jean Kidd died in 1810. Thomas (18th/19th C.) son of Robert and Helen Pott. He was farmer at Saughtree. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He married Janet Armstrong and their children were: Robert (b.1802); James (b.1803); Archibald (b.1806); Thomas (b.1808); Eliot (b.1810), who was a doctor in Preston; Helen (or Ellen, b.1810), who married John Murray and died at Wolflee farm; Janet (b.1814); Agnes (b.1816); and John Armstrong (b.1824). He may be the Stavert of Saughtree who was on the Committee of the Proprietors of Castleton Library. Thomas, J.P. (b.1787) elder son of George, grandson of Thomas and Elizabeth Pott. He was a Deputy-Lieutenant of Selkirkshire. Thomas (1791–1869) born in Hawick Parish, son of Robert. Both his parents died when he was 8. He moved to Ettrick at the age of 14, where he was one of the men employed to haul building materials for Thomas Boston’s memorial. In 1820 he married Margaret Boa, and they had their first child, Catherine in Scotland. In 1821 the family emigrated to Prince Edward Island (Canada), where he was one of the pioneer settlers. They had several children who went on to be farmers on Prince Edward Island. Thomas of Hoscote (1798–1847) elder son of Adam. He was born at Hosocate, and lived in the house until he died, unmarried. The family were Lairds of Earlside and then Hosocate from about 1695 until 1900. He was listed as a Commissioner of Selkirkshire in 1819, when still younger of Hosocate. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1821. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was involved with financial deals with the Elliots of Harwood in the 1830s. He was listed among the local gentry in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was listed as ‘Proprietor’ at Hosocate in 1841, living with 5 servants. He was succeeded by his brother John. Thomas (18th/19th C.) spinner in Hawick who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He could be the framework knitter, married to Euphemia who lived on the Loan and was born in about 1805. Walter (17th C.) mentioned in 1655 when Robert ruecstle was order by the Hawick Bailies to pay him ‘four merkis, borrowed when he went from Glasgow to Edinburgh, and 7s. Scots for a leg of mutton’. Walter (18th/19th C.) farmer at Orchard, along with George, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He could be the same Walter recorded at Nether Tofts in the 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. William (17th C.) recorded... in 1684, along with his wife Jean, signing a petition to the Laird of Cavers against having to pay a year’s rent towards the fine exacted for the release of the good Lady Cavers. He is the first local man of this family on record, although they may have been retainers of Douglas of Cavers since the time of Otterburn. He may be the William listed at Earlsde along with Robert on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He is surely related to James in Earlside, whose will is recorded in 1682. He may be the William whose son Thomas was baptised in Cavers in 1697. William (18th/19th C.) draper and grocer in Lilliesleaf, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He may be the 70 year old William recorded on Main Street in 1841. William (18th/19th C.) stockmaker in Hawick who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. William (b.1792) younger son of George, grandson of Thomas and Elizabeth Pott. He married Marion, daughter of Archibald Park, Windymains. Their eldest surviving son Archibald became proprietor of Hosocate after the death of their distant cousin Margaret (who was also the wife of his uncle Thomas). William James (19th/20th C.) proprietor of Hosocate. He wrote an introduction to ‘The Annals of a Border Club’ in 1898.

Staward (staw-urd) n. Henry (14th C.) traditionally said to be the ancestor of the Stavert family. He may be the Stavert who carried the pennon of the young Laird of Cavers (Archibald Douglas) at Otterburn. The story is also told of how his helmet was so dented at the Battle that he had to have it fixed by a blacksmith on the way back to Scotland. The Stawards (or Staverts) are traditionally retainers of the hereditary Sheriffs of Roxburgshire.

stawed (stawed) pp., adj., arch. sated, surfeited, full of drink, tired of something, wearied – ‘A’m staw’d o’ kail every day’ [GW], ‘Weel, A ranged the haaf o the toon, or A turnt staaed’ [ECS] (also written ‘staaed’; cf. seek-staaed).

St. Cuthbert’s

St. Cuthbert’s (sin’-kuth-burts) n. popular name for St. Cuthbert’s Kirk.

St. Cuthbert’s Chaipel (sin’-kuth-burts-chá-pul) n. chapel on the Slitrig dedicated to St. Cuthbert, noted in the 12th century by Reginald of Durham and believed to have been at a site near Cogsmill. The chapel is supposed to have been founded in 687 (the year the saint died) and already ruined by the 12th century. Stories were related by Reginald in about the 1170s, as told to him by Dolfinus, Pastor of Cavers. The miracles include: a crowd celebrating his saint’s day being protected from a snowstorm, even although the chapel was roofless; 2 women from Hawick, Sægfa and Rosfritha, whose candle went out, but another one appeared; a woman (Dolfimus’ mother) was cured of swelling, after being an invalid for 17 years; a flock of sheep belonging to a poor widow from Cavers Parish was protected from wolves in the churchyard; a woman from Raperlaw, who was crippled from birth, was cured; and Hugh Flamang from Yorkshire, fled to Teviotdale, spending the night in the chapel, where moss from the stone basin prevented his enemies from recognising him. There is now no sign of the building, although the location has been associated with an apparently levelled shelf at Cogsmill, measuring 49 yards by 31 yards, with the probable graveyard surrounded by an earthen bank and covered with trees. This lies about 400 feet south of Adderstoneshiel farmhouse, and the stand of trees was planted to mark the site in about 1830. The area was once locally referred to as ‘the Chaipel Park’. Excavations in the late 19th century uncovered 2 carved globe-shaped stone finials, which were added as gateposts to the farm garden. It is suggested these date from the 17th century, although there is also a record of some much older stonework being unearthed earlier. The associated graveyard must have been used for centuries, but there were already no existing stones there by the mid-19th century. Note that there have also been suggestions that the site of the chapel may have been near Penchrise (presumably an erroneous interpretation of the name) or near Hummelknowes (because of the adjacent Priestcrown).

St. Cuthbert’s Court (sin’-kuth-burts-kör’) n. housing built on Slitrig Crescent opposite St. Cuthbert’s Church in 1984, previously occupied by James Melrose & Sons engineers. It was essentially rebuilt from a wing of the former brewery.

St. Cuthbert’s Cricket Club (sin’-kuth-burts-kri-ki’-klub) n. cricket club formed in 1862 for the pupils of St. Cuthbert’s School and junior members of the Church choir. They played on the Brewery Haugh and had George Peterson and Ben Tillotson as professionals at various times. Nicknamed ‘the Saints’, it was the last club to survive, other than Hawick & Wilton, folding in 1889.

St. Cuthbert’s Fitbaa Club (sin’-kuth-burts-fi’-baw-klub) n. rugby club associated with St. Cuthbert’s Cricket Club in the late 19th century. It was formed in 1877, with William Laidlaw as Captain for the first 2 seasons. They played against the separate ‘Hawick’ and ‘Hawick and Wilton’ teams, and won the whole Borders championship one year. The club folded in 1892.

St. Cuthbert’s Haugh (sin’-kuth-burts-hawf) n. another name for the Brewery Haugh.

St. Cuthbert’s Kirk (sin’-kuth-burts-kirk) n. St. Cuthbert’s Episcopal Church. The foundation stone was laid in 1857, after the 5th Duke of Buccleuch gifted the land between Slitrig Crescent and the river and paid for the building. The design was by Sir George Gilbert Scott (responsible for the resoration of several English Cathedrals, as well as the Episcopal Cathedral in Edinburgh and the Foreign Office in London), with John Herbertson of Galashiels the main builders and Melrose’s supplying the iron work. The church was opened in 1858, and gave the first permanent home to a congregation that traces its roots back to the Disestablishment of the Church of Scotland in 1689. In Hawick it is sometimes referred to as ‘the English Kirk’. For a long time it started its services half an hour later than the other churches. It was named after the local St. Cuthbert, who is said to have had a chapel nearby. There is a stained-glass window showing him as a bishop holding the head of King Oswald of Northumbria in his hand (apparently representing the fact that the Abbot of Melrose was the King’s Confessor, thus holding his conscience). There is also an 1889 memorial window to the 5th Duke of Buccleuch, showing him presenting a model of the building to the Bishop of Glasgow, and 2 memorial windows for the Scott-Watson family of Burnhead, as well as a War memorial window, unveiled in 1921. The nave had 4 bays and there is a bell-cot over the chancel arch. The reredos by J. Oldrid Scott (son of the main architect) was added in 1905. At that time the niche in the apse became the site for a

She has published poetry, plays and other writings. In 1987 she founded the Rowan Tree Theatre Company in the Borders, and in 2011 was awarded the M.B.E. for services to theatre in the Borders. She championed the renovation of Aikwood Tower (including wood recycled from the pews of Hawick Parish Church), later housing a museum to her idol, James Hogg, ‘the Ettrick Shepherd’. In 2007 her play ‘The Journey of Jeanie Deans’ was the first production to be staged in the new Heart of Hawick auditorium. She has 3 children, Graeme, Catriona Judith and Roray, and an adopted son, Billy. The couple retired to live in Selkirk. Rev. Robert (1826–1920) born in Saltcoats, he attended the Evangelical Union Hall in Kilmarnock. In 1866 he came to Newcastleton to be minister of the Congregational Church there, and remained until 1875. After that he was minister at Dalmellington and Galston in Ayrshire. During the 1851 census he was a lodger in Newcastleton, listed as ‘Independent Minister’, and so he had an association with the village long before 1866.

the Steel (thu-steel) n. hill between the Teviot and Borthwick valleys, north of Swanstead Hill and south of Branxholme Wester Loch, reaching a height of 326 m. It may be associated with the lands of ‘Steyll’ mentioned in the 1420 charter for half of the lands of Branxholme (probably from the old English for steep).

The Steel Bonnets (thu-steel-bo-nits) n. book by George MacDonald Fraser, full title ‘The Steel Bonnets: The Story of the Anglo-Scottish Border Reivers’, it was written in 1971. Fraser was known as a writer of swash-buckling historical fiction. His background makes this book both grippingly written and over-romanticised.

Steele (steel) n. Andrew (1811–82) local poet, born in Coldstream. He spent a few years in the parish school, worked as an agricultural labourer and was then apprenticed as a shoemaker, moving to Galashiels. He published his first poem in the Kelso Chronicle and sometime thereafter published a volume of his poems. He moved to Hawick about 1869 and published a second edition of his book in 1871. In later life he sold tea for a wholesale grocer. He was also a great dog lover, writing a poem to his dog Nailer. His longer verses are derivative of well-known English poets, but his Borders poetry is more valuable. He died at 14 Dickson Street and was buried in Wilton Cemetery. John (19th C.) factor of the Minto estate, recorded in 1885.

the Steele (thu-steel) n. former name of lands in Liddesdale, associated with the modern Steele Road. The specific place marked on maps is the ridge of land just to the north-west of the road junction at Steele Road, between the Hermitage and Liddel Waters. ‘Willaim Niksoun in the Stelle’ is recorded in 1516, ‘Barte Nixson of Stelle’, as well as Archie, Thomas and Alexander in 1544, and Will Elliot of the Steele in 1583 and 1599. In 1584 Harry and Archie Nixon ‘of the Steill’ were among men who signed the bond of assurance with the English Wardens. John Elliot was there in 1590 when complained about for a raid into England. Additionally the lands of ‘Stellis within the Dyk’ are recorded in 1541, when it was tenanted by Nixons; it is unclear if these are the same lands or not. Francis Beattie was there in 1623. Andrew Young was tenant in 1694. It was surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718, when it consisted of Nether and Over Steele, and was combined with Brighouse, ‘Ingrasswall’, ‘Guelbeck’ and Cleuchhead. Together they covered 706 acres and were bounded by Taylorcleuchhead, Dinlabyre, Bygate and Shaw, with the farmhouse being marked near the modern location of Cleuchhead and another farmhouse to the north, perhaps around Shawshiel Rig. The ‘Steele Road’ is the name given to the road that crosses here, linking the Liddel and Hermitage valleys (also written ‘the Steel’; it is ‘Stell’ and ‘Stelle’ in 1544, ‘Steill’ in 1694 and ‘Steeil’ in 1718; the same word occurs in other place names, such as ‘Ashiesteel’, and means the spur of a hill, with the same Old English root giving us the word ‘stile’).

Steele Knowe (steel-now) n. hill in Southdean Parish, on the left side of the A6088 after the hamlet of Southdean. It reaches a height of 273 m. To the north-east is an old stock enclosure with turf walls, as well as 4 small cairns. To the north is another enclosure, with a bank and ditch. On the south-west slopes are the remains of 2 turf huts. On a terrace on the west side are the remains of 3 round-ended buildings, one of which is 26.5 m long and divided into 3 parts. There are also other enclosures and banks in this area between the hill and Jordan Sike, some cut through by a gas pipeline. To the south of the hill there is a roughly 3 km boundary bank, which runs all the way from Jordan Sike to the east, to finish south of Lethem (also written ‘Steel Knowe’).

Steele Road (steel-rööd) n. small station on the Waverley Line, between Riccarton and Newcastleton, now a house. The station was opened in 1862 and closed in 1869 along with the rest of the railway. The name used until 1900 was Netherhope. There was a signal-box south of the station, which has been demolished. The place name ‘Steele’ long precedes the railway, with Nether and Over Steele being farmed by the Elliots and the Croziers from at least the 16th century and surviving into the 20th century. ‘Steele Road’ is the name of the road that crosses ‘the Steele’, and the station took its name from that. Several large enclosures have been identified to the west from aerial photography, as well as 2 areas of rig-and-furrow to the east (sometimes ‘Steel Road’; it is ‘the Steile’ and ‘the Steill’ in the 1580s; it is marked as ‘O. Steell’ and ‘N. Steell’ on Blaeu’s (1654 map).

Steieroad-end (steel-röd-end) n. shepherd’s cottage on the B6357, south of Larriston, marked the end of the road over ‘the Steele’. It is situated where the way to the hamlet (and ex-station) of Steele Road meets the main road. It may also have been called ‘Riccarton roadend’. This could be the ‘Road End’ where William Elliot was recorded in 1868.

stells (stel) n. a stall, enclosure, shelter for sheep or cattle, usually composed of a dry-stane dyke and often circular, with an opening on one side, away from the prevailing wind – ‘‘... and numerous stells have been erected for the shelter of the stock’’ [RJAW], ‘‘They were with great difficulty brought to a steillery’’ (a feeding-place for sheep in winter) . . . ’’ [RB], ‘‘... Thrae yowes i’ the stells in the warm July days’’ [DH], ‘‘... Scarce farm or stall or shearring-stance But echoed with some jibe at France’’ [WHO] (see also stells and sheep-stell; these are given other names elsewhere, with ‘steillery’ being particularly prevalent in the south of Scotland).

stello (stel-lo) n., arch. a still for whisky – ‘‘She wad rather seen the gaugers I’ the stello that day’’ [JoHa].

Stell Brae (stel-brà) n. another name for the Steilloose Brae.

Stell Hoose (stel-hooos) n. house situated at the corner of Havelock Street and Wilton Hill, demolished in 1945, with the site becoming part of the garage there. It was described as 2 buildings when the land passed from George Halliburton to John Miller in 1813. Dyer Robert Scott was there in 1835, and foreman John Middlemas and mason George Oliver in 1840. James Black and John Middlemas lived there in 1841 and it is marked on the 1858 Ordnance Survey map (originally adjacent to the farmlands of Wilton Mains, so presumably there was once a ‘stello’ nearby; also sometimes ‘the Still’).
the Stellhoose Brae

sheep enclosures. These are usually circular and often about 50 yards in circumference and five feet high, although they vary in size. The entrances are on the leeside of the prevailing wind, and are usually built wider at the top than the bottom. The stone came by sled from nearby quarries. There are thousands of them across the Borders and there is a claim that the basic design originated in Hawick.

Stells
lands in Liddesdale, recorded on the 1541 rental roll as ‘Stellis, within the Dyk’. It is valued at 31 shillings and tenanted by Nixons. The lands of ‘Littlestell’ may have been nearby; they were valued in 1541 at 6 shillings and tenanted by Bartholomew Nixon (it is also possible this was related to Steele Road or the Steel).

stend
to leap, spring, bound – ‘The spring that ilk ane lik’d he kend; Auld wives made’ [BR].

Stenhouse (sten-hoo)
John (b.1812/3) born in Holmes, near Melrose, he was a grocer in Hawick. He was listed on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory (when he was also a toy dealer). His shop was at about No. 51. His wife was Catherine and their children included Elizabeth, Helen, Jessie and John. John (b.1812/3) born in Stow, he was a carrier in Bowden. In 1852 he is recorded running a weekly service between Hawick Shiel and Lilliesleaf, Midlem or Bowden, leaving is recorded running a weekly service between Ha-

Stenson (sten-sin)
Alexander (17th C.) tenant in Wattie’s Spindles in Southdean Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. James (1667/8–1743) resident of Priestschaug. He married Jean Thomson, who died in 1719, aged 44. He may be the same as James recorded at Northhouse or James recorded at Hawick Shiel in 1694. James (17th C.) shepherd at Northhouse according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. His name is written ‘Steinsone’. James (17th C.) resident at Hawick Shiel in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Ormiston on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His name is written ‘Stinsone’ (also written ‘Steinson’, ‘Steinsone’ and ‘Stinson’).

a stint, allotted portion, liability for tax, tax imposed by a burgh or trade – ‘…and that after ane stent to be made through the haill town for their maintenance …’ [BR1644], ‘Ane annual and yearliee stent of fytie merks scotts money to be imposed and laid upon the haill inhabitants burgesses of the toune’ [BR1703], ‘…resolved that the excrescence of the town’s yearly stent is to be applied …for paying the debt …in relation to the New Bridge’ [BR1747], ‘By cash for stent collected east the Water of Slitrig, …3 8 8’ [BR1761], ‘…the farm foreman usually divided the field into ‘stents’ or equal divisions’ [GM], ‘Abot a fifty ‘eers syne it was nae uncommon thing for th’ stockin’-makers tae bei putten on th’ stent – that was they were only allowed tae turn oot work tae th’ value o’ ten or twal shillin’s a week – reduced production it wad bei now ca’ed’ [HEX1920], v., arch. to impose a stent, assess for tax, levy – ‘That every person that did voluntarily stent themselves and payd according for founding and casting of the great bell …’ [BR1694], ‘…for which the inhabitants are ordered to be stented according to their abilities, twice in the year, until paid’ [JW1763]. This was an annual fee paid in return for Common rights, often being an assessment on Burgess paid into the town coffers and used for public improvements. In Hawick the practice stopped after the Division (a corruption of ‘extent’; cf. Stintynkowe).

stent-maister
an official appointed to fix the ‘stent’ to be paid – ‘Stent-masters appointed to stent the inhabitants for the schoolmaster’s wage’ [BR1660], ‘Gedeon Scott of Falnash …and the bailies, appoint stent-masters …’ [BR1699].

Stenton’s Pump
(former spring near the corner of Melgund Place and O’Connell Street, also known as the ‘Melgund Pump’. The smith who used to live there charged two pence a month for the use of his well when the public wells went dry (the name probably comes from the Stainton family, who lived near there in the early-to-mid 1800s).

stent-roll
a valuation prepared for the purpose of imposing levies on Burgess – ‘…Ane yeirlie stentroll to be made’ [BR].
Stephen (ste-vin) n. (12th/13th C.) priest of Lilliesleaf Kirk, recorded as a witness to a grant of Glasgow church lands. This was sometime after Idel, possibly in the 1220s.

Steven (stev-win) n. Alexander (16th/17th C.) recorded in a deed of 1623 as schoolmaster at Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish. William, who was recorded as schoolmaster in Jedburgh in 1630, may have been related to him. Alexander (19th/20th C.) proprietor of the ‘Berwick News’ and ‘Berwick Journal’. He married Mary, daughter of David McBurnie Watson. He gave 3 bur- saries to the Edinburgh Border Counties Association, in memory of ‘Ada Carr Steven’, ‘Mary Watson Steven’ and ‘Esther Watson Steven’. Robert (16th/17th C.) notary for a bond between Robert Turnbull, tenant in Bedrule, and Joseph Tennant, minister of Bedrule in 1614. And he was notary in 1618 for a bond between Walter Turnbull of Bedrule and George Rutherford, younger in Abbotrule.

Stevens (stevin’z) n. Mrs. ?? (18th C.) housekeeper at Cavers in 1789 when she was working for George Douglas. She was presumably wife of Thomas. Thomas (18th C.) valet at Cavers in 1786, when he was working for George Douglas. He is probably the Thomas from Cavers whose will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1797.

Stevenson (stev-in’sin) n. Agnes ‘Nancy’ (18th/19th C.) daughter of John of Kirkstile in Hobkirk Parish, and sister of Nel and Maizie, whom she lived with. She kept an unlicensed drining establishment at her cottage, apparently buying a whisky jug from Douglas Laidlaw in Hawick, to give her whisky an appearance of quality. She was visited by the exciseman one day and thereafter fined, although let off lightly because James Elliot of Wolfelee was on the bench. However, when caught again and fined more severely, she gave up her illicit business. She was the last surviving member of her family and lived her last days at the old blacksmith’s house at Forkins. Alexander (d.1724) shepherd at ‘Wadiespinnells’, presumably near Lethem in Southdean Parish. His will is in the Douglas of Cavers papers. Andrew (1795–1871) younger son of George. Like his father he was blacksmith at Bonchester Bridge, taking over after the death of his brother John in 1823. He sold the cottage and blacksmith’s shop at Hobkirk Kirkstile to James Elliot of Wolfelee. It was said that he could neither read nor write, his education at the parish school having been hampered by a speech impediment. In 1861 he was listed as blacksmith at Bonchester Bridge, along with his grand-nephew Thomas Rutherford. Rutherford took over as smith at Bonchester after his death. Andrew (19th C.) Hawick carrier. He may have been the Andrew born in 1832, son of James and Marion Douglas. His cousin Elizabeth Stevenson married Thomas Huggan. Andrew (b.1905/6) Hawick man who worked for Turnbull the Dyers, where his father was Foreman. He moved to Langholm in the 1930s to work for Arthur Bell and started his own dyeing business in 1946, called the Langholm Dyeing Company. His sons David and Neil joined the family firm, which evolved into Edinburgh Woollen Mill. Ann (18th C.) servant at Wells in 1791, when she worked for Gilbert Elliott. Archibald (18th C.) merchant of Peebles, who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1736. Archibald Forrester (1811–47) son of Rev. David of Wilton. In Pigot’s 1837 directory he was recorded as a surgeon in Lilliesleaf. He was recorded as a surgeon at the Sandbed (possibly Bridge House) in 1841. In 1835 he married Mary Moodie in Lilliesleaf Parish. They had children: Jessie (b.1839); Jessie (again, b.1843); Alexander (b.1845); and James (b.1845), twin of Alexander. He died the year of a cholera outbreak in Hawick. Rev. Charles Findlater (1831–1905) son of Rev. David of Wilton. He was born in Wilton Parish. He was educated at Edinburgh University and licensed to preach by Jedburgh Presbytery. He was ordained at Stobhill in 1860 and was Minister of Barry from 1866. He died unmarried. It seems likely that he was named after Rev. Charles Findlater, minister of Linton and Newlands, who died in 1828. Rev. David (1784–1851) born in Glasgow, son of David and Jean Renton, he was educated at Glasgow University. He became schoolmaster at West Linton in 1810 and was licensed by Peebles in 1817. He was presented to Wilton by Walter Francis, Duke of Buccleuch in late 1825, taking up his new position in 1826, where he remained until his death. In 1834 he wrote a description of the Parish for the New Statistical Account. He married Christian Taylor, daughter of a Lasswade farmer and they had many children, including: William (1810–57), who became a merchant and died in the U.S.A.; Archibald Forrester (1811–47), a surgeon in Hawick; Jane (1813–43), who married James Farish of Montreal; Alexander (1815–41), also a surgeon; Thomas (1817–78), who worked with H.M. Customs; James (1819–44), a merchant; Catherine, who died in infancy; Anne (1821–91); Christian Buchanan (1823–87); Robert Dundas (1827–58), another surgeon; Catherine Forrester (1829–37); Charles Findlater (1831–1905), who became minister of Barry; and Ellen (1833–52). He published ‘Two Sermons preached on the death of Rev. James Strachan’ (1840) and ‘Sermons on important subjects, Doctrinal and Practical’ (1841) and also wrote a description of Wilton Parish for the New Statistical Account of 1845. David, C.B.E. (1941– ) son of Andrew, he was born in the Haig Maternity Home, even although his family lived in Langholm by then. His grandfather had been foreman-dyer at Turnbulls of Hawick. He attended school in Langholm, then Dumfries Academy and Edinburgh University, before qualifying as a chartered accountant. He was a champion pole-vaulter, breaking Borders and Scottish records on 10 occasions; his first open competition in the pole vault was at the Hawick Common Riding Games. He represented Scotland in the Commonwealth Games in 1962, 1966 and 1970, and Britain in the 1964 Olympics. He joined the family dyeing business in 1967. In order to promote the 1970 Commonwealth Games tartan he (and his brother Neil) started Edinburgh Woollen Mill. This grew into a retail company, expanding outlets, and using Heather Mills in Selkirk for producing cloth. He sold the company in 1996 and later concentrated on his firm Ashleybank Investments. He also became a racehorse owner, having several winners. Additionally he sponsored Borders show-jumper Ian Stark. He was made C.B.E. in 1988 for business achievements. He was Deputy Lord Lieutenant of Dumfriesshire for 20 years and was made Honorary Freeman of Dumfries and Galloway in 2012. He has been involved in several charities, such as the Robertson Trust and Scottish Sports Aid, championed the redevelopment of Langholm’s Buccleuch Centre and was founder chairman of the Langholm Initiative. He was the Hawick Common Riding Chief Guest in 2017. His wife Alix is a former international long-jumper and hockey player. They have 2 daughters, Karen and Lynne. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (18th C.) cook at Branxholme in 1791, when she worked for Adam Ogilvie. George (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howeslay in the lands of Outersiderig in 1509. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. He was surely related to Peter, who was also listed. George (d bef. 1759) son of John. He was blacksmith at ‘Hobkirk style’, recorded in 1735. He married a daughter of John Shiel of Hobkirk Kirkstile. Their children included: Charles (b.1732); John (b.1735); Betty (b.1738), who married gardener Adam Kersel in 1759; Jean (b.1743), who married Robert Riddell in 1767; Ann, who married William Henry in 1771; and Janet (b.1755). George (b.1760) son of John of Hobkirk Kirkstile, and probably grandson of the earlier George. He worked in the blacksmith’s shop with his father. He may be the George who was lived at Bonchester Bridgend according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He married Jane (or ‘Jeany’) Laidlaw. Their children (baptised in Southdean Parish) included: Jane (or Jenny, b.1787), who married Robert Amos; Betty (b.1789); John (1791–1823); Andrew (b.1795); Agnes, who married Alex Bap- tiste; and Janet (b.1787). He appears to have changed the spelling of the family surname from ‘Stephenson’ to ‘Stevenson’. George Drummond ‘Stevie’ (1933–2012) played for Hawick P.S.A., Linden and the Greens in the period 1951–67. He was capped 24 times for Scotland, scoring a try against England in his debut match in 1956. He was also referred to as ‘Back-door Stevie’ because of the number of times he was called into the Scotland squad at the last minute. A career highlight was a solo try scored for the Scottish District when they defeated South Africa at Mansfield Park in the 1960s. He played at centre and wing, and at 6 feet 2 inches was tall for a back. Serving an engineering apprenticeship in Hawick, he then did National Service, worked for Bibby’s the farm suppliers and became a sales representative for Ballantine’s Whisky (although ironically he was a teetotaller), settling in Currie. His married Jessie and had children Fiona and Mark. Helen (16th C.) resident of Whithope recorded in 1549, among a list of the tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme who complained about the Kers ravaging their farms. Her name is given after James Scott, with Adam Scott being the tenant, and hence she may have been related to one or both of them. Helen ‘Nel’ (b.1771) daughter of John, Laird of Hobkirk Kirkstile and sister of Nancy and Maizie, with whom she lived. She married a Murray, but they separated and she apparently hated to be called ‘Mrs. Murray’. She made a living by spinning yarn. James (18th C.) married Jane (or Jean) Scott in Cavers Parish in 1754. His wife died in 1814, aged 87. Their children included: Jane (1754–97), who married Thomas Grieve and died at Muselee; John (1759/60–87), who died at Alderybar; and James (1760/1–85), who also died at Alderybar. James (18th C.) married Ann Dryden in Hobkirk Parish in 1766. James (1805–89) educated in Jedburgh, he entered the office of Roxburghshire Procurator-Fiscal Shortreed, and was appointed to that position himself in 1827 when he became of age. He served for the astonishing period of 60 years, latterly assisted by his son. He was also Clerk of Supply for Roxburghshire. He was a clerk in Jedburgh when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was honorary secretary and later full member of the Jedforest Club. He was an ardent Tory, but took no part in local politics. He married Charlotte, daughter of William Graham, doctor in Jedburgh and secondly married a daughter of Rev. William Aston Shute. His eldest son James Charles took over most of his county duties. John (16th C.) priest at the Kirk of the Lowes. He was listed as ‘vicar pensioner of the Forrest kirk’ in 1574 when he was still owed for previous years in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. John (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. Although the entry is hard to read, it appears he was married to Jean Scott and they had a son James in Hawick in 1726. John (17th/18th C.) early member of the Stevensons of Rulewater, first recorded in 1729 when he made use of the Hobkirk ‘mort cloath’ for a family burial. They lived at Singdean at that time. His mother died in 1733. His son was George, who was blacksmith at Hobkirkstyle. John (18th C.) son of George, he was Laird of Hobkirk Kirkstile, which he inherited from his grandfather John Shiel. He was also portioner of Kirknowe. He lived in a cottage at Singdean. He sold Hobkirkstile in 1779. He had 3 daughters, Nel, Nancy and Maizie, whose lives are described in Tancred’s history of Rulewater. He may have been the John who married Agnes Douglas in 1758. George (b.1760) was probably also his son. Betty may have been another daughter, whose daughter Betty Beattie married blacksmith Tom Rutherford. John (d.1823) elder son of George and brother of Andrew. He took over from his father as blacksmith at Bonchester Bridge. After his death he was succeeded in the business by his brother Andrew. Rev. John (1846–1929) born in Eccles, Berwickshire, son of John, the schoolmaster there. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1865, was licensed by Duns Presbytery in 1869 and was ordained as assistant and successor to Rev. Archibald Craig of Bedrule in 1875. He was Clerk of the Presbytery in 1891. He married Christina Laing of Denholmhill, and she died in 1891. He secondly married Christina Gowanlock Turnbull (daughter of John Turnbull, farmer at Priestrig), and she died in 1961 at the age of 94. His children were: Margaret Scott, who married Thomas William Brockie; Mary Farmer (d.1918), who married John B. Forsyth; and John, who was a Captain in the R.A.M.C. He demitted his charge in 1923, died at Bonchester Bridge and is buried at Bedrule, where there is a memorial plaque inside the church. John Briggs (1849–1931) son of Thomas P., he was born in Hawick. He went to Brownsea Island, Poole and then to Bournemouth in 1887, where he became Parks Superintendent, retiring in 1919. His children included Thomas, John, Charles, Harry and Hugh. He is probably the John Briggs recorded as proprietor of Comonside in about 1900. Margaret (19th C.) resident of the West Port area. In 1832 she is one of the Hawick people who contracted cholera, but recovered. Mary ‘Maizie’ (18th/19th C.) youngest daughter of John who lived at Hobkirk Kirkstile with her sisters Nel and Nancy. She had a natural son called Robert Wilson, who worked on the plantations at Wolfelee. In later life she was the cleaner at Hobkirk Church. But she used the cushions from the ‘Lairds’ Lofts’ as a bed for lodgers during the week, and was dismissed when this was discovered. Michael (d.1789) first landlord of the Tower Inn, from about 1771. In that year it is recorded that Bailie Hardie was reimbursed by the Council ‘for a bottle of wine (Stevenson’s), at attending His Grace the Duke of Buccleuch’, suggesting that he was already running the inn by then. He was brought from Yorkshire specifically to be inn-keeper and was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick in 1773. In 1773 the Council recorded that they met ‘in Michael Stevenson’s’ to petition an agent of the Duke of Buccleuch regarding repairs to the Auld Brig. He is recorded as inn-keeper there in 1778 and 1780. He was taxed for having 2 4-wheel carriages in the years 1785–1789 and for having a female servant in 1787 and 1788. In 1785 he was taxed for employing James ‘Stevanson’ (who was presumably therefore unrelated) as a waiter, as well as an unnamed waiter in 1787. ‘Mrs. Stevenson’ was taxed for carriages in the year 1789/90 and for having a female servant in 1789, suggesting that he was deceased by then. In 1798 a death is recorded in Hawick of ‘Mrs. Stevenson spouse to deceased William Stevenson – tower Inn’; this could be his daughter-in-law (or possibly his wife if there was an error with his first name). He is described by W.N. Kennedy as ‘of Falstaffian proportions, and a fine burly specimen of the Boniface brotherhood, and is reputed to have weighed upwards of thirty stone’. It was said that he needed a pulley yo get to his feet in the morning and that after he died the coffin had to be hoisted in and out of the window of his bedroom. Peter ‘Pate’ (16th C.) tenant in Outersiderig, for whom Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley stood as cautioner in 1569. He was listed as ‘Pait Stevinsone’ right after George. Peter (18th C.) surgeon in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. It is possible he was later the Peter, surgeon in Hexham, who died there in 1828. Robert (17th/18th C.) tenant in Hawick Shiel. His wife was Mary Plendergest and their children included: Margaret (b.1684); and Christian (b.1702). Robert (19th C.) stock-in-maker in Hawick. His infant child’s death is recorded in 1840, with his wife Christian Scott dying 2 days later. Sandy (??–2002) local solicitor, born in Kelso. He came to Hawick in 1963, was Acting Father in 1973 and Secretary of the Common Riding Committee 1977–87 and again for part of 2001 Thomas (17th/18th C.) said to have come from Hummelknowes and become tenant at Little Whitlaw, where he kept more than a hundred sheep on the Town’s Common. However, the ‘Town Herd of Hawick hounded, scattered, and destroyed said Thomas Stevenson’s sheep, till he was obliged to make sale of what was left, and gave up his farm’; this is according to evidence given by John Douglas in 1767. Thomas (18th/19th C.) winder of 'pirns' for stocking-makers. He lived near the West Port. He had a son, also Thomas, whose wife Margaret was one of the people who contracted cholera in early 1832, but managed to recover. He may be the deceased Thomas whose wife Isobel Turnbull died in 1840 (on the same day as 9 others, and hence possibly in a cholera outbreak). Thomas (b.1800/1) son of Thomas. He married Margaret Laidlaw in Wilton in 1829. They lived at the West Port, where his wife contracted cholera from a neighbour in 1832, but recovered. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835, when he was at Roadhead. He and his wife were at Roadhead in 1841, 1851 and 1861. Their children included Jane, Isobella (who was Mrs. Peden), Thomas, Andrew, Agnes (who married Charles Spalding) and Jane. Thomas Pasley (1818/19-72) married Mary, daughter of William Laidlaw, and she died in 1890, aged 71. Their children included: Thomas P. and Jemima (b.1860), who both died young; Agnes, who married mason James Turnbull; William Laidlaw, woollen merchant; John Briggs, who moved to England; Thomas, postman and proprietor of the Douglas Hotel; and Beatrix (b.1857). He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Thomas (19th C.) from Langholm. Around the 1860s he came to Newcastleton once a week to operate a branch of the British Linen Company Bank. Thomas Pasley (b.1862) son of Thomas P. He worked as a postman and was later in the Douglas Hotel. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Janet Oliver. Their children included: William (b.1768); Walter (b.1768); Gilbert (b.1770); and Katharine (b.1779). The witnesses to William's baptism in 1768 were Gilbert Oliver (probably his father-in-law) and Francis Aitkin. Walter Laidlaw (19th C.) partner with Alexander Innes in the woollen merchants firm Innes, Stevenson & Co. He retired in 1892, after which the firm continued with F.E.H. as a new partner. William (18th C.) listed as owner of a 'House and Yard' in Minto Parish in 1779. It was owned by Lord Minto in 1811 and valued at £3 13s 2d. William (1729/30-1807) tenant farmer at Langbushiel. He is recorded as owner of 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1797. He also paid tax on 5 non-working dogs in 1797. He contributed to the subscription for the defence of the country (against the French) in 1803. It was said that his 'sound knowledge, singular abilities, and successful improvements, as a store-farmer, have been seldom equalled'. William (b.c.1785) tanner in Hawick. In 1841 he was living at about 23 High Street. His wife was Jane and their children included Agnes, Isabel, Jane, Thomas, Margaret and Williamina. His widow appears to be living at Kirkstyle in 1851. William Laidlaw (1845/6–93) worked for Laing & Irving, eventually becoming a partner in Irving, Groerson & Stevenson. He left this partnership to go into business with A.K. Innes as Innes, Stevenson & Co, retiring only about a year before his death. He built the villa Dunira. He married Susan Yule, who died in 1872, aged 26. Their only child was Bella, who married Maj. James Rodger (formerly spelled ‘Stevinsone’ etc., and interchangeable with ‘Stephenson’ before the mid-18th century).

Stewart (stew-ur’) n. Alexander Earl of Mar and Garioch (d.1435) illegitimate son of Alexander, Earl of Buchan, and grandson of King Robert II. He was a supporter of his uncle, the Regent Albany. He married Isobel, Countess of Mar, daughter of William Douglas, Earl of Mar. Through her he inherited titles, including part of the Barony of Cavers and the Forest of Jedburgh, as recorded in a document of 1405. He was appointed Admiral of the Realm of Scotland about 1420. He had only one (illegitimate) son, Sir Thomas, who pre-deceased him. Alexander (c.1454–85) 1st Duke of Albany, 2nd son of King James II. He was Warden of the Western Marches from 1475. He also held the positions of Lord High Admiral, Governor of Berwick, and Lieutenant of the Kingdom. He was imprisoned after being suspected of plotting against his brother James III, but escaped and made pacts with Edward IV of England. He also offered to give Ewesdale and other parts of the Borders to England. After being sentenced to death in Scotland he fled to France, where he died in a tournament accident. His titles were inherited by John, son of his 2nd wife. Several men from the Borders were much later (in 1493) given remission at Jedburgh for having been among his supporters, including Ralph Ainslie, Thomas Brown in Minto, Robert Dalgleish in Howden, George Davidson in Raperlaw, John Grahamlaw of Newton, Adam Kirkton in Crailing Mill, Patrick Mow, Thomas Riddell brother of Riddell of that Ilk, Gilbert Shiel in Bedrule, George Turnbull of Bedrule, John Turnbull in Bedrule, Thomas Turnbull in Sir Alexander of Dalswinton and Garlies (d.c.1500) son of Sir William of Minto. In 1458/9 he and his wife Elizabeth had a charter for the lands of Sunlaws and Morebattle. His family held lands locally, including Howpasley, which he resigned about 1468, when he was still ‘younger’; these may have previously belonged to an elder brother, Andrew, who must have died first. Another brother was Sir Thomas of Minto to whom he gave consent in 1476 to his father’s grant of the lands of Minto. In the same year he also resigned to his brother the lands of Sunlaws and Morebattle, also with the consent of his wife, Elizabeth, reserving for themselves a 20 merk land there. In 1477 he had a charter for the lands of Dalswinton, with the permission of his son, witnessed by his brother Thomas of Minto. He served as Scottish Ambassador to England in 1485 and fought at Sauchieburn in 1488. He is probably the Alexander mentioned in 1501 when it is stated that sasine had been given to him for half of the market rights in Minto, which had been in the King’s hands for 3 years. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Archibald Douglas of Cavers. He was succeeded by his son Alexander, who was killed at Flodden. His other children included: Agnes, who married John, 3rd Lord Maxwell; John; Archibald, Parson of Kirkmaho; and Janet, who married Sir John Dunbar of Mochrum. Sir Alexander of Garlies (d.1513) son of Sir Alexander and Elizabeth Douglas, daughter of the Laird of Cavers. He married Elizabeth Kennedy, probably a daughter of Kennedy of Blairquhan. He was succeeded by his son Sir Alexander, and was said to have also had 16 daughters, each of whom married a laird of distinction. He was killed at Flodden. Sir Alexander of Garlies (c.1508–c.93) son of Alexander who was killed at Flodden. He was the 4th of Garlies, and was a minor under his uncle Archibald, parson of Kirkmaho. He was captured at Solway Moss in 1542 and his son was held as hostage in his place. Also in 1542 he erected his lands into the Barony of Dalswinton and Garlies. The Dalswinton Barony included the family’s half merkland in Minto, and patronage of the Rectory there. He was a Commissioner for Wigtownshire in the 1550s and sat in Parliament in 1560 and 1565. He acted as ambassador to Henry VIII in 1572. He was still alive in 1593, but died soon afterwards. He firstly married Katherine, daughter of Sir James Crichton of Cranston Riddell. He secondly married Margaret Dunbar and thirdly married Catherine, daughter of his cousin Walter Stewart of Barcyle. His children were: Sir Alexander, who died before him, with his son Sir Alexander succeeding; John; Margaret; Anthony; Robert; William; and Helen. Sir Alexander of Garlies (d.1597) 5th of Garlies, grandson of Sir Alexander, the previous Laird, his father (also Sir Alexander) dying before his grandfather. His mother was Katherine, 2nd daughter and co-heir of William, Lord Herries of Terregles. He inherited many lands, including the small piece of land and rights within Minto. He was knighted in 1590 and sat in Parliament in 1594 and 1596. He married Christian, daughter of Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig and secondly married Elizabeth Douglas, daughter of David, Earl of Angus, who was widow of Lord Maxwell. His children were Alexander (who succeeded), Thomas, William, Helen, Janet, Nicholas and John. Alexander of Garlies (d.1649) son of Sir Alexander and Christian Douglas of Drumlanrig. He inherited his father’s rights in Minto in 1603; this included a half merkland in Minto, with the advowson of the Kirk there. He became Lord Garlies in 1607 and sat in Parliament several times. In 1623 he was raised to be Earl of Galloway. A firm supporter of Charles I he was appointed as a Privy Councillor. He married Grizel, daughter of Sir John Gordon of Lochinvar and their children included: Alexander (d.1638); Sir James, who succeeded; and Anne. Alexander (16th/17th C.) son of James of Tinnis. In 1609 he was listed along with Walter Scott of Headshaw and other Scotts as men that Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane and his tenants were fined for resetting. This was part of the feud between the Scotts of Thirlestane and Tushielaw. His brother John was mentioned later. Allan (19th C.) from Barra in Invernesshire, he was a quarryman in Hawick. He married Agnes Ekron in 1857 and their children included: Angus (b.c.1857); Anne E. (b.1862); and Elizabeth (b.1871). His wife may have been daughter of Andrew Ekron, with her mother’s name being Elizabeth. Andrew (d.c.1460) eldest son of Sir William of Dalswinton, brother of Alexander and Thomas of Minto. In 1458/9 he had a crown charter of the lands of Minto, Howpasley, Longnewton, as well as lands in Dumfriesshire, Kirkcudbright and Wigton. However, he probably died soon after, since his brother Alexander resigned the lands in about 1468 and later succeeded to Dalswinton and Garlies. Andrew (16th C.) recorded as servant to the Laird of Riddell in 1596. He was accused of crimes by Englishman Nicholas Forster in the previous year.
Andrew of Ochiltree (c.1560–1628/9) son of Andrew, Master of Ochiltree, he was the 3rd Lord. He served as Lieutenant and Warden of the West Marches in the 1580s. He was later First Gentleman to the Bedchamber of King James VI. He was also General of Edinburgh Castle. He settled in Northern Ireland at Castle Stuart. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Kennedy of Blairquhan and was succeeded by his son Sir Andrew. Andrew, J.P. (19th C.) owner of the farm of Cotfield in Lilliesleaf Parish in the 1870s. In about 1874 he is recorded owning the share of Lilliesleaf Common (and its teinds) that formerly pertained to the lands of Bewlie Hill, as well as Hermiston. Archibald (16th/17th C.) illegitimate son of James of Tinnis. In 1608 he was among the relatives and tenants of Sir Robert of Thistlethane who were bound over not to harm Archibald of 'Dephoip' or his sons. Archibald (19th/20th C.) gardener at Wells estate. He had a brother who worked on the Maxpoffle estate and sisters who lived in Melrose. In 1882 at Bedrule Schoolhouse, he married Frances, daughter of schoolmaster William MacNeill. After Wells estate was sold off he moved to West Linton. The couple's only child was William MacNeill. Bell (18th/19th C.) spinner from Glasgow. It is said that when the first spinning jenny arrived in Hawick, for operation at the Tower Knowe Mill, one of the strongest workers was given the task of operating it, but gave up, claiming that no one could stand to run it. The employers, Walddie & Pringle, then called for an experienced operator from Glasgow, to show the workers how it could be done easily. This was probably around the early 1820s. Charles (b.1618) son of Francis and grandson of the last Earl of Bothwell. He was born at Tranent. There are papers relating to his lands of Wilton, Liddesdale and others in 1647 and 1648. He fought at the Battle of Worcester. He died unmarried, bringing an end to the local connection of the Hepburns and Stewarts. Charles 6th Duke of Lennox and 3rd Duke of Richmond (1639–72) son of George, 9th Seigneur d’Aubigny and grandson of Esme, 3rd Duke of Lennox. On the death of his cousin Esme he inherited the Lennox and Richmond titles. This included the Baronies of Auncrum, Ashkirk and Lilliesleaf. As Duke of Lennox he paid a small amount in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls in Ashkirk. However, it is unclear if he played any role in local affairs. He served as hereditary Great Chamberlain of Scotland. He drowned at Elsinore on a trip as ambassador to persuade Denmark to join a war on the Dutch. Although he married 3 times (the third time to Frances Teresa Stewart, mistress of his cousin Charles II), he died without issue. Charles (d.1744) 4th Earl of Traquair. He succeeded to his brother William, his other brother George having died before him. He was the last of his family to be Laird of Wells in Rulwater. Burdened with his grandfather’s debts, he sold the estate to Thomas Rutherford in 1687. He married Mary, daughter of Robert Maxwell, 4th Earl of Nithsdale and was succeeded by his sons Charles and then John. Charles Edward ‘Bonnie Prince Chalrlie’ or ‘the Young Pretender’ (1720–88) son of James Francis and grandson of King James VII. In 1745 he attempted to capture the throne for his father, from George, landing in Scotland, gaining the support of an army of Highlanders and marching into England, where they met defeat. After being on the run for several months in Scotland he was able to flee to France and died an old man in Rome. Although there seems to have little local support for him at the time, part of his army passed near Hawick in 1745, and many tales grew up around events said to have happened at that time. Charles (19th/20th C.) local writer, who used the pseudonym ‘Karl Brown’. He who wrote a poem about the Sclaterford skirmish and may be the ‘Carl Brown’ who wrote ‘A Hawick Common-Riding Toast’. He is also the author of the novel ‘Andrew Macpherson: a tale of the Borders’ (1905), which was serialised in the Hawick Express. This tells the story of the minister of the fictitious Rosedale (a thinly disguised Lilliesleaf) and his love affairs, with some of the action taking place in South Africa. David (18th C.) merchant of Hawick who married Ann Fordyce of Aberdeen in Edinburgh in 1776. David member of the Archaeological Society and font of knowledge on Hawick and the nearby rural areas. He was recorded in dialect in 2004 as part of the BBC ‘Voices’ project. His daughter is Norma. Rev. Duncan (d.1908) from Dunblane, he was first minister of St. Andrew’s Free Church, being called there in 1867, inducted in 1868 and remaining for about 40 years. He was said to have ‘the appearance of a jolly farmer of some twelve stones’ and to possess a powerful voice. He was involved with the temperance movement and the National Bible Society and locally with the Cottage Hospital and with Stobs. He also researched into Teviotdale connections with the Covenanters, for example publicising the besieging of Drumlanrig’s Tower. He wrote ‘The Covenants of Teviotdale and neighbouring districts’ (1908). Esmé 5th Duke of Lennox (1649–1660) son of James, 1st Duke of Richmond. His father died in 1655 and he was served heir to the family properties and titles. This included the Barons of Ancrum, Ashkirk and Lilliesleaf. He went into exile to France with his mother and died of smallpox. His titles passed to his cousin Charles. Francis 5th Earl of Bothwell (1563–1611) nephew of James Hepburn, the 4th Earl. His father was John, Comemmendor of Coldingham, being an illegitimate son of James V (hence he was first cousin of James VI) and his mother was Lady Janet Hepburn, daughter of Patrick, the 3rd Earl. He was a powerful force in late 16th century Scotland. He was lay Commendor of Kelso Abbey, and held many baronies and estates, including Wilton, granted in a charter of 1568. Patronage of St. Mary’s Kirk in Hawick was confirmed to him in 1581 and 1585 by James VI. In 1586 he re-leased several lands in Liddesdale to Elliots. A charter of 1587 confers on him the forfeited titles of his uncle, the 4th Earl, including Keeper of Liddesdale and Hermitage. In November 1587 (according to an English letter) he rode to Braxholm and Hawick, there meeting with leaders from Liddesdale; although he publicly reminded them of the justice on the Border, his stepson Scott of Buccleuch carried out a raid around Bawcastle using his trumpet and standard. In 1591 he escaped from prison in Edinburgh and there was a ‘hand’ between the main noblemen of the Borders to lay aside their quarrels in order to capture him. He led several attempts to capture King James VI, including the ‘Falkland Raid’ of 1592, which involved about 300 horsemen from the Borders. This led to him losing all his titles, including Keeper of Hermitage, as well as his estates, to Sir Walter Scott, 1st Lord of Buccleuch (his stepson). A ‘summons of treason’ of 1592 lists him and his wife, along with many men (including some from the Borders) who were his supporters. Eventually forced to flee abroad, he died in Italy. There is a bond of 1604 in which he promises ‘6 or 7 chalders of victual during recipient’s life’ to his servant Walter Scott of Burnfoot (on Ale Water) when he was restored to the King’s favour and his former privileges; this never happened, with the Privy Council recording a complaint between his sons Francis, John, Harry and Frederick against William Scott of Burnfoot and his brothers Walter and Robert, and furthermore his son and heir Francis was still trying to recover the lands in the 1620s. He married Lady Margaret Douglas, widow of Sir Walter Scott of Braxholm and Buccleuch; she was also denounced as a rebel following the Falkland Raid. His daughter Elizabeth married James, Master of Cranstoun (and their daughter married Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs). Another daughter Jean married Robert Elliot of Redheugh. A son John was Commendor of Coldingham, and another, Harry, held lands in Teviotdale. His seal showed a ‘bend’ in the 1st and 4th quarters, and a rose and 2 lions in the 2nd and 3rd, together with a sourtout, a lion rampant, an anchor and a shield bearing ‘F.S.’ He is mentioned by Scott of Satchells, who mixes up father and son – ‘King James the Fifth his bastard Son Was of as much regard, He married Buckeleugh’s Relict He being but a Laird’ [CWS]. Francis (1584–1639) eldest son of Francis, Earl of Bothwell. He was rehabilitated in 1614, a few years after his father’s death. But he did not get back the bulk of the lands that had gone to the Earl of Home and the Lords of Roxburgh and Buccleuch. King Charles interceded to try to resolve differences between him and the Earls of Buccleuch and Roxburgh. In 1632 the patronage he had held of many churches around the Borders (including both Hawick and Wilton) went to Walter Scott, Earl of Buccleuch. His rehabilitation was ratified by Parliament in 1633. In 1634 2 of the ‘tutors’ of the young Earl of Buccleuch went to London to hear the King’s determination of the ongoing dispute he had over Buccleuch lands. He received lands in Lothian and made a financial arrangement over rights to the lands in the Borders in 1634. He married Isobel, daughter of Robert Seton, 1st Earl of Winton. Their children were Charles, Robert, Margaret and Elizabeth. Francis (17th C.) Hawick resident, married to Helen Muir. His son William was born in 1637. Francis (b.c.1785) stocking-maker who lived at Appletree-hall. He was also an army pensioner. His wife was Rachel and their children included George, Euphemia, Agnes, Francis, John and Janet. George (16th C.) farmer at Rulewood. His barn and yard are mentioned as part of the land dispute between Barons of Feu-Rule in 1562. George (c.1715–93) Professor of Humanity (i.e. Latin) at Edinburgh University for more than 30 years from 1741. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Selkirkshire in 1761. He bought the estate of Midlem Mill in 1773, but must have already held Selkirkshire property before that. He was granted liferent of Shielsswood by Elliot of Minto (probably as part of the common practice of adding supporters to the county voter’s roll); he renounced this right.
in 1779, when it was given to Rev. Simon Haliburton. His son Gilbert was a historian and reviewer. George (b.c.1795) tenant of the quarry at Bedrule Mill in the 1841 census. His wife was Isabella and they have a son William. Helen ‘Nelly’ (18th C.) cook at Orchard in 1791, when she worked for William Elliot Lockhart. Helen (18th/19th C.) daughter of Rev. Walter. Along with her sisters Mary and Isabel, she succeeded her brother Matthew in the lands of Barnhills in 1796. The lands were sold soon afterwards to Sir Gilbert Murray Kynynmound Elliot, with whom she had a heritable bond in 1798. She succeeded her 2 sisters in 1803. Henry ‘Harry’ (16th/17th C.) younger son of Francis, 5th Earl of Bothwell. He is recorded in the period 1640–42 in legal papers of Francis Scott, Earl of Buccleuch over the teninds of the lands of ‘Kalrig, Commounsye and Mynesingtoun’: the first place could conceivably be Caerlenrig. Hercules of Whitlaw (d.1595) son of John Stewart, Lord Darnley and brother of Francis, Earl of Bothwell. Said to have owned Whitlaw near Hawick, but more likely to have been one of the numerous areas of a similar name elsewhere (near Bowden, Morebattle and in Lothian). A ‘summons of treason’ listed him in 1592 and in 1593/4 he was denounced a rebel, along with others who had helped the Earl of Bothwell. He married Mary, daughter of Patrick Whitelaw of that Ilk, and their children included Margaret and John. Isabel (d.c.1348) probably daughter of Sir Alexander of Bonkill. She married Donald, Earl of Mar. They had 2 children: Thomas, who succeeded as Earl of Mar, and also inherited Cavers, but died childless; and Margaret, who became Countess of Mar in her own right, and was the ancestor of the Earls of Douglas. Donald was Regent of Scotland for a few months, but was killed at the Battle of Duppin Moor in 1332, 3 years after his uncle, Robert the Bruce. She secondly married Geoffrey Murray, but divorced him soon afterwards. She thirdly married William Carswell, who was Sheriff of Roxburghshire. She claimed the sheriffship of Roxburghshire and the custody of Selkirk Forest as a hereditary right; this was looked into by Edward III in 1334 and led to the appointment of her husband by the English (then in control of the Borders) in 1347. She appears to have been deceased in 1348 when her husband William Carsewell was granted her rights and lands in Scotland until her son Thomas (Earl of Mar) came of age. She may have also married Alexander Balliol, Laird of Cavers. Note that a later Isabella, Countess of Mar, was her grand-daughter. Isabel (17th C.) recorded in 1676 when she was fined along with Janet Halliwell for fighting over the placement of their market stalls. She could be the Isabel born in Hawick in 1650 to Francis and Helen Muir. James name of 6 Kings of Scotland, see under James. James (d.1513) 1st of Traquair, 2nd (and illegitimate) son of James Earl of Buchan, his mother being Margaret Murray. In 1507/8 he was the first witness to the document relating to the tower in Hawick ‘between the bridges’ for the Scots of Whitchesters. Sometime before 1505 he married Katherine, grand-daughter of James Rutherford of that Ilk and Wells. He is said to have taken her away from her family and compelled her to marry him. She is said to have failed to inherit any of the Rutherford lands because of this marriage being to a kinsman. However, their son would later become Laird of Wells, after the death of her sister Helen. They had a son William (who succeeded and married Christina, daughter of John, 2nd Lord Hay of Yester), and another son James, as well as a daughter Mary and another daughter who may have married Archibald, 6th Earl of Douglas. His widow complained about her treatment at his hands and the fact that she had lost her share of the inheritance to her sister; the result was that Rutherford and Wells went to her grandson Sir John of Traquair. He was killed at Flodden. James (16th C.) resident of Whithope recorded in 1549, among a list of the tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Braxholme who complained about the Kers ravaging their farms. He may have been related to the tenant there, Philip, or to Helen who was listed after him. James (c.1531–70) an illegitimate son of James V, his mother being Margaret Erskine. He was also known as ‘the Regent Moray’ and sometimes ‘the Earl of Mar’. He became chief advisor to his half-sister Mary Queen of Scots on her return to Scotland in 1561, and was one of the leaders of the Scottish Reformation. In 1561 (or 1562) he commanded an expedition against freebooting Borderers. This included surrounding Hawick on market day to surprise people reselling stolen goods. 53 men were captured and 18 of them drowned in the Slitrig, ‘for lack of trees and halters’, while another 6 were hanged later in Edinburgh. In 1567 he repeated the exercise on Hallowe’en, attended by Lords Morton, Howe and Lindsay and their followers. In preparation for their visit, Hawick was among towns who were charged to ‘have in reddines bakin breid, brown aill, hors meit, mannis meit and uther neidfull ludging and provisoun’. They then captured 34 thieves, including 22 Elliotts and 6 Croziers, having 11 of them immediately hanged and 7 drowned in Hawick. It is said (by Robert Wilson) that the hangings happened on 2 beams laid across the Auld Brig. 10 of these men were held in Edinburgh Tolbooth and we have a record of their names (5 were called Robert Elliot!). He may also have revisited Hawick in 1569, and certainly in that year led an assault on Liddesdale, blowing up the tower of Mangerton, burning Whithaugh, etc. There was an order from the Privy Council for a large number of men (from all over southern Scotland) to muster in Hawick to meet him on 8th October (moved by 2 days to coincide with the full Moon), ‘weill bodon in feir of weir, with xx daysi victuallis and provisoun’, in order to subdue the ‘rebellious subjects’ of the Middle and West Marches. He was Regent from 1567, but fell from favour after failing in a bid to seize the crown from Mary. He was assassinated in Linlithgow by his old rivals the Hamiltons. He was succeeded by his daughter Elizabeth, who married her kinsman James Stewart. James (d.1557) illegitimate son of James V. His half-siblings included Mary (Queen of Scots), James (Earl of Moray, later Regent), Robert (Prior of Whithorn), Robert (Earl of Orkney), Adam (Prior of Charter House) and John (Lord Darnley, Commendator of Coldingham). He was the Commendator of Melrose and Kelso, 1534/5–57, one of the last before the Reformation, and probably lived in the Commendator’s House. He gave the ‘Monk’s Tower’ at Hassendean to Walter Scott of Branholme in 1546/7 and gave a charter of Cockerheugh to Hassendean to Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1556. James of Bothwellhaugh (16th C.) in 1581 he received the Earl-dom of Arran from James Hamilton, who was considered insane, but these titles were restored to Hamilton in 1586. In 1584 he was appointed Lord Warden General of all the Marches, but this only lasted 1 or 2 years. James of Shillinglaw (d.1607) 6th of the Barony of Traquair and also Laird of Wells in Rulewater. He succeeded his father William in 1605, his 3 elder brothers all having died without issue. As well as inheriting several lands, he had the right of patronage of Bedrule Kirk. However, he only enjoyed his position for a couple of years before dying and being succeeded by his grandson, Sir John, the 1st Earl. He married Catherine Kerr and their children were John (whose son succeeded), Robert of Shillinglaw, William, Margaret, Janet (who married John Veitch of Dawyck), Gelis, Walter, Isobel and Mary. James of Nether Horsburgh (16th/17th C.) son of Robert of Shillinglaw. In 1634 he was served heir to his father’s lands of ‘Helme et Middill’, with grain mill and fuller’s mill called ‘Dowishauch’, comprising a 3 merk land in the Barony of Cavers. He was separately served heir to his father in the lands of ‘Roulwood’, ‘Majorwellis et Westlies’, extending to a 6-pound land of old extent, lying in the Barony of ‘Hareis’ by annexation. James (17th C.) described as a cordner when he was a witness at a trial of Hawick Magistrates Court in 1642. He was deceased in 1666 when his son Walter gave evidence for a case involving a fight in St. Mary’s Kirk. He could be the John, married to Manie Scott, whose children baptised in Hawick included John (b.1643), Walter (b.1646) and an unnamed son (b.1648). James 4th Duke of Lennox, 1st Duke of Richmond (1612–55) eldest son of Esmé and Katherine Clifton. He was a key Royalist supporter in the Civil War and is buried in Westminster Abbey. Among his many titles and properties were the Baronies of Ancrum, Ashkirk and Lilliesleaf, being granted these by Charles I in 1641. In 1643 he is listed as holder of feu-duties for Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish, valued at £18 5s. He still held superiority over Barnhills in 1653. He was succeeded by his young son Esmé. James Francis Edward ‘the Old Pretender’ (1688–1766) son of King James VII (or II), he was forced to move to France when he was an infant and his father was ousted from the throne for being a Catholic. He this became the de facto leader of the ‘Jacobite’ movement. He led the Jacobite Rebellion of 1715, and escaped back to France when the attempt to take over from George I failed. In October of 1715 about 200 horsemen past through Hawick and proclaimed ‘the Chevalier’. About 2 weeks later the Highlander army camped at Hawick Moor. There are many stories told relating to what happened during those few weeks. His son Charles, ‘Bonnie Prince Chairlie’, also led an unsuccessful revolt 30 years later. James (17th C.) resident of Chesters according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Sir James of Coltness (1713–80) also referred to as 2nd Bart of Goodtrees. He was eldest son of Sir James and Anne Dalrymple. He married Frances, daughter of James, Earl of Wemyss and was succeeded by his son, also Sir James. This branch of the family often spelled their name ‘Steuart’. He owned the Chisholme estate in the mid-18th century, being involved in a dispute with John Elliot of Borthwickbrae over Branholme Muir in the period 1743–60 and with Henry, Duke of Buccleuch in 1763–67. James (18th/19th C.) listed as owner of a horse in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. James (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Stonedale according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. James (18th/19th C.) earthenware dealer of the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He could be the ‘Mr. Stewart’ marked on Wood’s 1824 map at about 24 High Street or the other one at about No. 55. He could be the merchant of that name whose child died in 1805. James (b.1815) son of Robert, farmer at Hawthornside. He excelled at wrestling and jumping and took part in the Hobkirk Baa along with his brothers. At the 1840 Common Riding Games he won prizes for wrestling, the standing and running hop-step-and-leap and the hitch-and-kick. He married Margaret (1827–1901), daughter of William of Netherwells (who had the distinction of being born after her father’s death in a riding accident). Their children were Robert (who was born at Town-o’-Rule and married Elizabeth Forster), William Glass, Alexander, Penelope and Mary. James (19th C.) from Wilton Dean. His children included Mary Ann (who married George Richardson), Margaret (who married James Hood) and James (who worked for the Manchester Guardian and was proprietor of ‘Gas World’). Rev. James (1821–86) born in Stirling, 2nd son of David and Janet Galloway. He was educated in Stirling and at Glasgow University. He was licensed by Stirling Presbytery, became assistant at Largs and was first ordained as minister at St. Mary’s, Dumfries in 1849. He was translated to Wilton Parish Church in 1851 and remained until his death. During his ministry the present Wilton Church was built, Mansfield Glebe and Old Manse were acquired by the town, and Wilton Hill and Stewartfield were feued for building purposes. East and West Stewart Place are named after him. A large cross in his memory stands near the main entrance to Wilton Church. He married Isabella, daughter of James Reid of Wellfield. Their children were Elizabeth Whiteman, Isabella Reid, David Charles, James Reid, Catherine, John and Eleanor. He published ‘Wilton Sabbath School Hymnal’ (Hawick, 1877) and ‘Last Sermon preached in Wilton Church, 12th Sept. 1886’ (Hawick, 1886). His funeral sermon was given by Dr. John Mair and published in 1886. James (b.1828/9) from Langholm, he was schoolmaster at Clarilaw in Wilton Parish in 1861. Jean (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Paid but not listed in Hauick Toun’. She was probably from the west side. She could have been related to the dyker John, who was also listed. Sir John (d.1419) son of Sir William of Jedworth and Minto. He was referred to as being ‘of Teviotdale or Jedworth’ and also became the 1st of Garlies. In 1406–09 he had an annuity from the customs of Edinburgh. In 1396 he married Marion, the only daughter (and heiress) of Sir Walter of Dalswinton. He was succeeded by his son Sir William of Minto. His wife resigned the Barony of Dalswinton in 1420 (when he was presumably deceased) to be granted to Sir Herbert Maxwell. His widow married Sir John Forrester of Corstorphine in 1422. Sir John of Minto (d.bef. 1512) son of Sir Thomas, who had given up the lands in Minto, even although the family kept the designation. In 1477 he was the eldest son of Sir Thomas when he witnessed a charter for his father and mother. He also served as Provost of Glasgow. He is mentioned as being ‘now Marshall’ and son of Thomas in the 1501 Exchequer Rolls, in relation to superiority of Minto. In 1502/3 he and his wife had a charter for the lands and Barony of Minto, as well as other lands. He witnessed a couple of charters in Edinburgh in 1508. He married Janet Fleming and was succeeded by Robert (who married Janet, daughter of John, ‘the Outlaw Murray’). He is sometimes said to have died at Flodden. John (c.1484–1536) son of Alexander, Duke of Albany and nephew of King James III. He inherited the titles of Duke of Albany and Earl of March from his father. He acted as Regent during the minority of his cousin’s son, James V. In 1516 he granted a new infeftment of the Barony of Branxholme to Sir Walter Scott. Ousted from power in 1524, he spent most of the rest of his life in France. John of Traquair (16th C.) recorded as Parson of Bedrule in 1562. He probably succeeded from William Kerr, but was himself succeeded by Sir John Douglas (however, this may simply have been because of disputes over the patronage). He could have been the same as Sir John, 4th Laird of Traquair. Sir John of Minto (d.1583) son of Robert. He came from the family that had previously been Barons of Minto, and continued to use the designation. He still held part of the superiority of the Barony of Minto, which was inherited by his grandson Walter in 1614. Like his father he was Provost of Glasgow. His name is recorded as witness to many documents, e.g. he was among the prominent men of the nation who declared James as King in place of Mary in 1567. He served as surety for Borderers in 1573. He married Joanna Hepburn and was succeeded by his son Matthew, who was also Provost of Glasgow. His seal bore a horizontal band surmounted by a ‘bend engrailed’ and a cinquefoil on the left. He may be the ‘Lard of Mynto, Collectour to the Comptrollar’ recorded in relation to a case in Glasgow in 1566/7. Sir John (d.1591) 2nd son of William, he was the 4th Laird of Traquair. In 1549 he was served heir to his brother Robert, who died in 1548. In 1559 he settled the family disputes over succession, signing confirmation with his cousin Richard Rutherford of the lands of Edgerston, while he kept Wells (in Rulewater), as well as superiority of Edgerston. In 1564 he was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1564/5 he was a witness to the bond to end the feud between the Scotts and the Kerrs. He was knighted in 1565. In 1574 he was on the retours for Walter Scott of Branxholme as heir to his great-uncle David Scott, as well as his great-grandfather Sir Walter Scott. In 1581 it was confirmed that he had the ‘half merk land of Kirklandis of Bedrowll’, including the patronage etc., which had belonged to Kerr of Ferniehirst. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. He died without issue and was succeeded by his brother Sir William. Sir John of Traquair (c.1600–59) son of John. He succeeded to the Baron of Traquair from his grandfather James, 6th of Traquair, being served heir in 1606. He was also Laird of Wells in Rulewater, and probably the Earl who purchased adjoining lands from John, Lord Balermino. In 1619 he complained that a group of Turnbulls had cut down a large quantity of timber from his lands at Huntliehill. He was apparently a favourite in the court of Charles I and was made an Earl in 1633. However, he supported the wrong side in the Civil War, being taken prisoner at Preston, and living in poverty after he was released. In 1634 he resigned the superiority of Edgerston to John Rutherford of Edgerston. In 1643 he was recorded as owner of lands valued at £210 10s in Cavers Parish, £409 10s in Hobkirk Parish (these both being for the Wells estate) and £108 for lands in Ruecastle in Bedrule Parish, as well as the teinds of Bedrule, duties in Roxburgh and a large fraction of lands in Maxton Parish. His lands included Fastcastle, where 2 residents were cited in 1644 for not subscribing to the Covenant, saying that ‘they would ken no session nor minister, but follow the command of their master, my Lord Traquair’ (suggesting that he himself was a dissenter). He married Catherine, daughter of David Carnegie, Earl of Southesk. Their children were John (2nd Earl), Margaret (who married James Douglas, 2nd Earl of Queensberry), Elizabeth Stewart (who married Patrick Murray, 2nd Lord of Elibank), Catherine and Magdalene.

John (1622–66) 2nd Earl of Traquair and also Laird of Wells, eldest son of the 1st Earl. He served with the Marquess of Montrose and then the Duke of Hamilton. He paid the land tax on property in Cavers, Hobkirk and Bedrule Parishes in 1663. He married Henrietta Gordon, daughter of George, 2nd Marquess of Huntly and second Anne, daughter of George Seton, 3rd Earl of Winton. Their children included William (3rd Earl), George, Charles (4th Earl), John, Elizabeth, Isabel and Lucy. John (17th C.) listed as being ‘in Cavers’ in the 1684 list of those who were declared fugitives for religious non-conformity. John (17th C.) recorded at Greenhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (d.c.1696) Burgh Officer for many years in the latter part of the 17th century. Following his death, Alex Scott was appointed in his place. He was probably the ‘John Stuart’ who witnessed baptisms in 1687 and the man of that name listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He may have been related to the John Stewart who was a Burgh Officer in about 1740. John (17th C.) recorded as ‘callario’ when he witnessed a Hawick sasine in 1687. The meaning of the description is unclear, but might suggest that he was a shoemaker perhaps (or he could be the same man as the Burgh Officer). John (17th C.) dyker listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. It is unclear whether he lived in the town or outside. He is probably the John ‘dyker to Irland’ listed among the ‘Deficients in Hauick Parich’ in 1694; he may have worked as a dyker for Thomas Ireland. John (17th C.) resident of Woll in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. John (17th C.) listed as a merchant on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He could be the John, son of James and Janet Scott, who was born in Hawick in 1652. He could also be the John who was married to Grizel Thomson, and whose son John was born in 1680. John (17th C.) dyker recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun’. He was probably from the west side. Rev. John (d.bef. 1706) minister of Wilton. He studied at St. Leonard’s College and graduated from St. Andrews University.
in 1670. He became minister of Wilton in 1683, the first Episcopalian since before the Reformation. There is an existing letter referring to him in 1683, following a complaint from the Archbishop of Glasgow that John Langlands had not preached for several Sundays; the precise nature of his appointment is unclear. He was also presented to Borthwick in 1688 (the delay suggesting there was argument over the extra duties and stipend). However, he was deprived in 1689 for not reading the Proclamation of the Estates and not praying for William and Mary (i.e. refusing to give up Episcopalianism). In 1706 his widow Margaret Forbes, is recorded receiving money from the Session of Arngask Parish, on the recommendation of Jedburgh Presbytery. John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Todshaw. His son Thomas was born in 1720. John (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘officer’ in Hawick in 1723. Probably the same John was recorded in the Town Treasurer’s book receiving payments in 1731 and 1732. He was probably a Burgh Officer, and is likely to be the same John recorded as Burgh Officer around 1743 along with Francis Turnbull: after the Town Herd, Mungo Armstrong, complained the to the Magistrates about neighbouring tenants keeping their livestock on the Common, the pair were ordered to bring in these animals, and managed to bring several black cattle to the West Port. He was probably related to the Burgh officer of the same name who died about 1698. John (18th C.) gamekeeper at Cavers in 1779, when he was working for James Douglas. Sir John of Allanbank (1714–96) from the Berwickshire family, he was Sheriff of that county. He became an Advocate in 1737 and was appointed Solicitor of the Stamp Duties in 1767. He is listed as being life-tenant of lands in Minto Parish in 1779 (and recorded as former liferenter in 1811). His lands were those that had been earlier known as Craigend and Minto Mill farms, including Minto Craigs, Millbank, Craigend Haugh, Millhaugh and a haugh by the Spittal road. He was one of 6 men who had been given liferent of parts of Minto by Sir Gilbert Elliot as a tactic to increase his support among the voters of Roxburghshire. There is no evidence that he had any other local connection. He married Margaret Agnes Smith and was succeeded by his son, Sir John. Rev. William Brown was chaplain to his family before becoming minister of Bedrule. John (18th C.) watchmaker in Hawick. He was on the subscription list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). John Govan of Hermiston (d.c.1861) lived at Cotfield in Lilliesleaf Parish in the mid-19th century. He became a member of the Peeblesshire Society in 1827. In 1835 he was involved in a dispute over closing off an old drove road on his property at Hermiston. In 1851 he was listed as a landed proprietor at Cotfield, farming 97 acres. He was listed at Cotfield in Slater’s 1852 directory and was still at Cotfield on the 1861 census, living with his nephew Peter and 3 servants. By 1874 he was owner of the lands of Bewlie Moor. His wife was Anna and her ‘Lady’s Companion’ was Maria Mackintosh from Kensington, who appears to have been listed at Cotfield in a directory of 1868. He is buried in his family enclosure in Lilliesleaf Kirkyard. John (b.c.1820) son of Robert, farmer at Hawthornside. He took part in the Hobkirk Baa along with his brothers and was described as ‘a very tall and powerful man and whom no one dared tackle’. He married Margaret Grieve from Buccleuch. John Thomson (1830/1–71) stockingmaker of 1 Loan. He later worked as a carrier. He married Jane Paterson in 1852. Their children included James, John, Agnes and another John (who all died in infancy) and Jane (who died aged 18). John (b.1830/1) farmer at Hermiston in 1861. He was probably son of the previous John. He married Agnes Marshall. Rev. John (1865–1930) born in Fife-Keith, son of John Macpherson and Elizabeth Wright. He was educated in Aberdeen, graduated M.A. in 1887 and B.D. in 1890, and was licensed by the Presbytery there the same year. He became assistant at St. Clement’s Parish (Aberdeen) and then at Selkirk before becoming minister of Kirkton in 1892, where he remained until his death. He acted as Chaplain for Stobs Military Camp 1903–12. He was also Chaplain to Stobs Military Camp 1903–12 (usually written ‘Stuart’). John Livingstone (1894–1971) born in Hawick, he was educated at Edinburgh Academy and at the Royal Dick Vetinary College. In WWI he served in the Scottish Horse and the Argyll & Southern Highlanders. He played flanker for Scotland Rugby team in 1921. He served in the Colonial Veterinary Service 1923–9 and became a Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh. Maj. John Ross (1918–2015) from Loganswell in Renfrewshire, he moved to the Borders with his mother, who was a teacher at Yetholm and then Denholm. He worked as a tailor, but joined the Army Reserves in 1939. He was a survivor of Dunkirk and was them commissioned with the K.O.S.B., serving in India and Burma, and retiring with the rank of Major. He then became a tailor in North...

Berwick and ran a guest house there. He joined the Hawick Archeological Society in 1981, serving on the Committee and as Syllabus Secretary. He wrote ‘Borderers in Battle’, which describes the Burma campaign of the K.O.S.B. Rev. John T., ex-army chaplain who was minister of Denholm, Minto and Bedrule 1978–84. Katherine (15th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493. She was a resident of Minto when Adam Turnbull in Hornshole was able to ‘compone’ for stealing from her, specifically 6 ‘chattels’. In 1494/5 the same Adam Turnbull had remission for several crimes, including stealing 6 cows and oxen and 2 bullocks from her in Minto. Kathleen W. wrote ‘An Historical Record of Borthwick Wa’s Burial Ground’ (1987), ‘Borthwick Water: two centuries of life in the parish of Roberton’ (1991), ‘Redfordgreen School, 1885–1955’ (1995) and ‘History of the Scotts of Milsington’ (3 volumes, 1993, 1996, 1998). She was a founder member of the Borders Family History Society. Ludovic (1574–1624) 2nd Duke of Lennox and 1st Duke of Richmond, son of Esmé the 1st Duke of Lennox. He was the next in line to the throne of Scotland after James VI. He was made Lord High Admiral in 1591 and in 1592 was appointed Warden of the Middle March. In that year he and the Laird of Cessford were directed by the Warden of the Middle March, Sir Matthew. He was among those appointed as commissioners to keep the peace in Lanarkshire in 1610. He firstly married Janet Stewart and their children were Sir Walter of Minto (who succeeded) and Janet. He secondly married Jean Colquhoun and had a son, Robert. He was succeeded by his brother Esmé.

Mary see Mary Queen o Scots Matthew (1516–71) 4th Earl of Lennox, son of John, 3rd Earl. He was assigned the rentals of the Lordship of Ettrick Forest. After his death in 1575/6 there were complaints to the Privy Council on behalf of 2 Burgesses of Edinburgh and a large number of Borderers regarding payment of the ‘mails’. He married Margaret, daughter of Archibald Douglas, 6th Earl of Angus. Sir Matthew of Minto (d.1610) son of John. His family still held part of the superiority of the Barony of Minto, although it is unclear if they played any direct role in the district. Like his father he was Provost of Glasgow. He was among those appointed as commissioners to keep the peace in Lanarkshire in 1610. He firstly married Janet Stewart and their children were Sir Walter of Minto (who succeeded) and Janet. He secondly married Jean Colquhoun and had a son, Robert. He was among those appointed as commissioners to keep the peace in Lanarkshire in 1610. who married James, 7th Earl of Douglas; a daughter who married an Abernethy of Salton; John, Chamberlain of Scotland, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Archibald Earl of Douglas; Andrew: Robert; and (a second) Elizabeth, who married Malcolm Fleming of Biggar. Robert of Traquair (d.1548) eldest son of William. In 1547/8 he is listed among the supporters of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in a bond of loyalty to the Crown, along with the Kerrs. He was succeeded by his brother John. Sir Robert of Minto (d.1553) son of Sir John. He married Janet, daughter of John, ‘the Outlaw Murray’. In 1529 King James V granted him and his wife the Barony and lands of Minto. However, it is unclear if he had any role locally. He was Provost of Glasgow 1526–36. His children included John of Minto (also Provost of Glasgow), Agnes (who married John Wallace, 1st of Auchams and Dondonald) and Elizabeth (who married John Maxwell of Calderwood). Sir Robert of Shillinglaw (16th/17th C.) 2nd son of James of Traquair. His lands of Shillinglaw lay close to Traquair in Peeblesshire. However, he also had charters in 1614 and 1617 for the Barony of Horsburgh and lands elsewhere, probably including lands in Cavers Parish. He served as tutor to his nephew John, who became the 1st Earl of Traquair. He was a member of the Commission for the Middle Shires around 1618. In 1634 his son James of Nether Horsburgh was served as his heir. Robert (17th C.) resident at Easter Groundistone according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Perhaps the same Robert, married to Jean Mackie had a son William baptised in Wilton Parish in 1694; the witnesses were John Scott and John Glendinning, and this is the earliest existing entry in the Wilton Parish records. Robert and Jean Mackie also had a son George baptised in 1698. Robert (18th C.) servant of Francis Coltart in Woodburn (in the Borthwick valley). He is recorded in 1729 in the Robertson session books, having an altercation with William Bell, farmer at Broadlee. Robert (18th C.) schoolmaster at Caerlenrig from 1763. It is possible that the same man was ‘Mr Robert Stuart, schoolmaster, Wilton’ on the subscription list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Collier and their children included: Andrew (b.1773); Janet (b.1777); Robert (b.1779); James (b.1781); and Charters (b.1786). Robert (18th C.) resident of Damside in Wilton. He married Janet Cunningham and their children included: Janet (b.1772); Mary (b.1775); Mary (again, b.1777); and Anne (b.1784). The witnesses in 1775 were James Knox and John Loraine. Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded at ‘Back of the Woods’ in Hawick Parish on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was probably farmer at this house near Crawbyres. Robert (b.c.1790) son of Alexander and Mary Colquhoun. The origins of the family probably lies in the north, perhaps related to the Stewarts of Appin who lost their lands after supporting the 1715 and 1745 rebellions. He was tenant of Hawthornside farm 1834–47. He then rented a farmhouse for another couple of years, but then left the district. He had a sister, Mary, and a brother, Alexander, who died young. He married Margaret Burnet and their children were: Alexander (b.c.1815), who died unmarried; Margaret (b.c.1825), who married William Blood of Cranagher, and whose son was Sir Bindon Blood; Robert (b.c.1820), who married Isabella Smith, daughter of the factor of Wolfelee and secondly married Esther Hudson; John (b.c.1820), who married Margaret Grieve from Buncleuch; Annie, who married John Wallace; Thomas (b.1816/7), who married Annie Donkin of Newcastle; Mary (b.1825), who married Daniel McPherson; and William Colquhoun (b.1828/9), who married Helen Smith. His sons James, Robert and John were prominent for the ‘uppies’ in Hobkirk Baa; however, the youngest son, William, was considered the best runner in the Borders in his day. Sir Thomas of Minto (d.1500) son of Sir William of Garlies. His brother Alexander married Elizabeth Douglas of Cavers and at one point held the lands of Howpasley. The family clearly had a local connection, including land in Minto Parish. His great-grandfather was Sir William of Jedworth, whose mother was a sister of Sir John Turnbull of Minto. He became Provost of Glasgow. In 1476 he had a charter of a third of the lands in the Barony of Minto, as well as superiority over the whole of the Barony, which had been resigned by his father, Sir William (and with the consent of his older brother Alexander). He had a further charter for the lands of Sunlaws and Morebattle in 1476, resigned by his brother and attached to the Barony of Minto. In 1477 he and his wife had a charter for lands in Renfrew. He witnessed a charter in Edinburgh in 1486. In 1488 he was granted a fee by the Crown, for his service as Marshal. He also had a lease of the lands of ‘Dunrod and Fintelauch’ for his fee, and continued in this position until at least 1492. In 1490 he granted the lands of Nether Crailing called ‘Stewartlandis’, which had been annexed to Minto, to Bartholomew Rutherford. In 1491/2 he resigned the lands of Sunlaws, which were granted to Robert Ramsay and his wife Agnes Haitlie. He married Isabel, daughter of Walter Stewart of Arthurlie. Their children were Sir John of Minto (also Provost of Glasgow), William (who became Bishop of Aberdeen and High Treasurer of Scotland), Archibald, Agnes, Marion (married Adam Maxwell of Southbar), Margaret, James, Nicolas, Robert and John. The family kept the ‘of Minto’ designation for several generations (including 5 Provosts of Glasgow), although they appear to have had no continuing local presence. Thomas (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. Thomas (b.c.1800) publican on the Loan. He is recorded as vintner at the Nag’s Head in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was living with his wife Elizabeth at about the first house on the Loan. Walter (12th C.) see Walter Fitz Alan. Sir Walter (1293–1327) son of James, who he succeeded as 6th High Steward of Scotland. He was knighted after Bannockburn. In about 1320 he was ‘Walteri Senescal Scotie’ when he was granted lands in Roxburghshire that had been forfeited by Sir John de Soulis and others. This included Eckford, Nisbet, Langnewton, Maxton and Caverton. He was Governor of Berwick, commanding there when there was a siege by the English in 1319. He was a signatory of the Declaration of Arbroath in 1320. He married Marjory, daughter of Robert the Bruce; she died possibly after a fall from a horse, with their son John (who became King Robert II) said by some to have been born by Caesarian section. He had earlier married Alice, daughter of Sir John Erskine of that Ilk, and later married Isabel, sister of Sir John Graham of Abercorn. He had a son, Sir John, who died without issue. He also had a daughter who married Sir William Graham of Kincardine, and another daughter, Egidia, who married Sir James Lindsay of Crawford, secondly married Sir Hew Eglintoun and thirdly married Sir James Douglas of Dalkeith. Walter (16th C.) recorded as Rector of Minto in 1542 and 1544. He was presumably a member of the Stewarts of Minto family. Sir Walter of Minto (d.1640s) son of Sir Matthew. In 1606 he was involved in some kind of fight with a group supporting Sir George Elphinstone in Glasgow, being held in Dumbarton Castle for a while. In 1614 he was served heir to his grandfather Sir John in 2/3 of the superiority of the Barony of Minto (as well as lands in Morebattle). Apart from the title, he had no direct local connection and lived in Glasgow, being Bailie to the Regality there (but not Provost, like several of his ancestors). He was also keeper of Dumbarton Castle. He married Christian Crawford in 1598/9. Their daughter Mrs. Lilias Stewart was buried in Greyfriars Cemetery in 1663. The family fortunes dwindled at this time and he probably sold off the ancient family rights in the Barony of Minto, but it is unclear exactly when or to whom. He also had to mortgage his property in Easter and Wester Craigs in Glasgow, which was sold off by his son, Sir Ludovic. Sir Ludovic was succeeded by Sir John, who was even more impoverished (it is said he was a pauper who was sent barefoot to Edinburgh to beg a favour from one of his rich Stewart relatives) and died on a voyage out to the colony at Darien. Walter (17th C.) mentioned in one of the first existing entries in the Town book of 1638 as an officer of the Town (along with James Kinnaird). They were presumably the 2 Burgh Officers of the time, corresponding to the Halberdiers of today. Walter (17th C.) son of cordner James. In 1666 he was a witness to the fight in St. Mary’s Kirk between William Turnbull and James Chisholme. He could be the Walter baptised in Hawick in 1646, son of James and Manie Scott. Rev. Walter (d.1762) son of Bailie Matthew Stewart in Newton of Mearns. He studied at the Universities of Edinburgh and Leiden and was presented to Ashkirk Parish in 1730 by Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto, one of the Lords of Session at the time. He paid the window tax at ‘the mance’ in Ashkirk Parish in 1748 and again in 1753. He also bought (from John Mackenzie of Devlin) the land at Barnhills in 1749 and hence is sometimes described as ‘of Barnhill’ (or ‘Barnhills’). He was thus designated among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. In 1750 in Edinburgh he married Mrs. Mary Dun-canson (who died in 1793) of Garshake. Their children included: Mary; Matthew (d.1782) of Barnhills; Helen (d.1815); Margaret, who died in infancy; James, died young; and Isabel (or Isabell). Matthew inherited the lands of Barnhills and after his death they passed to Mary, Helen and Isabel. Sir William of Jedworth (d.1402) 2nd son of Sir Alexander of Darnley and Crookston or perhaps son of Sir John of Jedworth, his mother being a sister of Sir John Turnbull of Minto. He was probably grandson (or other descendant) of ‘John Senescal de Jedwith’ who signed the Ragman Rolls. He was also known as ‘of Teviotdale’. He may have been an ally of the English until 1384 when Teviotdale was recaptured for Scotland, then fighting on the Scottish side and being rewarded by Robert II with lands in Roxburghshire. He received money from the French to support the war against England in 1385 and was present at Otterburn in 1388. He was knighted around this time and in the 1390s served as auditor of the exchequer, as well as commissioner at march days. He was additionally appointed as Sheriff of Roxburghshire, although the extent of the appointment is not known. In the period 1390–1402 he acted as Clerk of Audit according to the Exchequer Rolls. In 1390 he was granted lands within Minto by John Turnbull ("Out with the sword"), who was his uncle. This was confirmed by Robert II in 1390/1, and included the patronage of the church, which had been resigned by George Abernethy. He was thus probably the first of the Stewarts to own lands in Minto. He was probably the Sir William who witnessed a Lindsay charter for Stouslie and Groundestone about 1390. An undated charter of Robert III (probably around 1400) grants him 1/2 of the lands of Minto. In the late 1390s he accompanied Archibald Douglas (later 4th Earl of Douglas) in an attack on the English-held Roxburgh Castle. He led an unsuccessful raid into Northumberland in 1400 and was at the battle of Homildon Hill in 1402. There he was captured, tried and executed at the instigation of Sir Henry Percy, his body being quartered and displayed on the gates of York. He married Isabel, who was widow of Sir Richard Oliver, although her maiden name is unknown. He was succeeded by his son Sir John, 1st of Garlies, and had at least one other son. His widow Elizabeth remarried to Walter of Bickerton and received some of the customs duties of Edinburgh and Linlithgow in the period 1407–20. Sir William of Dalswinton (15th C.) son of Sir John, 1st of Garlies. In 1429 he succeeded to the Barony of Minto, but this was disputed by Walter Turnbull. As a result it seems that the barony was split, so that his family held the half barony. He was knighted by James III in about 1443 and sat in Parliament in 1467. He married more than once, with his last wife being Euphame Graham. His children included: Andrew, his heir, who predeceased him; Sir Alexander of Garlies, who fought at Sauchieburn and married Elizabeth, daughter of Archibald Douglas of Cavers; Sir Thomas, who succeeded to Minto; and Walter of Tondrigie. William of Traquair (16th C.) son of James. In 1526 he was listed in the remission for a large number of Borderers who attacked the Earl of Arran’s forces. His brother James was also listed. He became heir to the lands of Rutherford and Wells through his aunt Helen Rutherford. In 1538 he had a regranting of his lands of Traquair. In 1541 he is recorded as occupier of Garlawcleuch, Blackhouse and Douglascraig in Yarrow; he may also be the William who was occupier of Berrybush and half of Phaup in Ettrick. He married married Christina, 2nd daughter of John, 2nd Lord Hay of Yester. Their children were: Robert, who succeeded; John, who succeeded Robert; William, who succeeded John; James, who succeeded William; Margaret, who married James Murray of Fulahill and George Douglas, younger of Bonjedward; and a daughter who married William Sinclair of Blans. William (16th C.) holder of a particate of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Sir William (d.1605) 5th Laird of Traquair. He succeeded to his brother Sir John, also inheriting the lands of Wells in Ruelwater. In 1567 he was listed as brother-german of Sir John of Traquair when he witnessed the wedding contract for Elizabeth, sister of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He was a ‘gentleman of the bed-chamber’ of James VI and was made Governor of Dumbarton Castle in 1582. He witnessed a document for the Earl of Lennox in 1594. He died unmarried and was succeeded by his brother James of Shillinglaw. William (16th/17th C.) servant of James Douglas of Cavers. In 1612 he, along with William Douglas of Whitriggs and his brother Robert, was accused by Gavin Elliot of Brugh of attacking his family on their way home from Cavers Kirk. However, the group were acquitted after swearing that the claim was untrue. William (b.1657) 3rd Earl of Traquair, son of John, 2nd Earl, whom he succeeded in 1666. He was also Laird of Wells in Rulewater. He died unmarried and was succeeded by his brother Charles. William (17th C.) listed as resident at Harden in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) tailor listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is also listed in 1694 on the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the William born in Hawick in 1637, son of Francis and Helen Muir. He could also be the William who married Margaret Scott and whose children baptised in Hawick included: Margaret (b.1669); Charles (b.1673); and Francis (b.1677). William (1695/6–1760) tenant farmer in Gillfoot. He is buried in Ettleton Cemetery. William (18th C.) resident of Stouslie. He married Margaret Ormiston in Wilton in 1764. Their children included: Helen (b.1765); Mary (b.1767); Isabel (b.1770); and George (b.1771). The witnesses in 1770 were James Dryden and Thomas Reid. William Colquhoun (b.1828/9) youngest son of Robert, farmer at Hawthornside. He took part in Hobkirk Baa along with his brothers. He was known as one of the best runners in the Borders and was unbeaten over about 30 races. On one occasion he was dancing and playing the fiddle at Billerwell until 2 a.m., set out an hour later to meet his brother in Newcastle, arriving at 4 p.m., and then won a sprint race that his brother had put him up to. He ran against Willie Scott from Martinshouse, in a specially arranged match over half a mile near Stobs, and won. He married Helen, daughter of William Smith in 1853 and moved to Newcastle (also spelled ‘Stuart’, ‘Stuert’ etc. and in earlier times interchangeable with ‘Stuart’).

St. George’s Kirk (sin’-jor-jeek-kirk) n. church in St. George’s Lane, built in 1843–44 after the Disruption as the Free or Protesting Church. The land was purchased by the new congregation from James Anderson of Wilton Lodge. The original building was designed by Andrew Thomson of Glasgow and John Smith of Darnick. Several articles were placed in the foundation stone (and could not be found when the church was rebuilt). A manse was built on Wilton Path in 1846, designed by Smith of Darnick. The church was known as ‘Hawick Free Kirk’ for more than 50 years. It changed its name to ‘St. George’s United Free Church’ in 1900 (after the union of the Free and United Presbyterian Churches); the reasons for the choice of the new name are uncertain. After purchase of the house and grounds of ‘Ellabank’ next door the church was rebuilt in 1913–16 using Doddington stone, but with parts of the original walls and a lintel inserted from the old building. The austere Gothic design is by architect J.P. Alison. It is a grade C listed building. An adjoining hall was built a few years later. It was re-named simply ‘St. George’s Church’ in 1929 (after the union of the United Free Church and the Church of Scotland). It contains an east-end window, commemorating the 1929 reunion (possibly the only such window in Scotland), by Lilian J. Pocock of London. The organ was added in 1920 in memory of Bessie Scott (a gift of Peter Scott & Co.). A separate West End ‘Free’ congregation had been established in 1855, and after that church closed in 1956, St. George’s was renamed ‘St. George’s West’. Since 1988 it has been known as Teviot Parish Church, with links to Robertton Parish. Kirk Session records for 1842–82 and 1900–14 are in the National Archives. A roll of the ministers is: John Aikman Wallace 1843–70; William H. Gaulter, assistant 1859–64; John MacGregor 1865–73; M.P. Johnstone

Stintieknowe (sten-tie-now) n. small farm stead ing out beyond Stirches, near Dykenen Loch, and also known variously as Stinty-Knowes, Stinty Knowe etc. Walter Scott was farmer there in the early 19th century. In 1841 there were 2 households there, one the Curries and the other housing a variety of people. In 1851 Thomas Smith and family were in one house and the Campbell brothers in the other. In 1861 labourer William Thomson and family were at the cottage with James Gledstains and family at ‘Stintyknowes Far House’. The hill there was originally the ‘stenting knowe’, where Wilton Common was stented, prior to its division in 1764. In other words this site was the Wilton equivalent of the Caa Knowe – ‘Stinty Knowe then the Cala Burn There isna a walk mair pleasant Nor oor on the Whitehaugh Road And in front o’ ee a pleasanter’ [AY] (also written ‘Stintie Knowe’, Stintyknowes’, ‘Stinty Knowes’, etc.).

Stirches (stir-cheez) n. area to the north of Silverbuthall, reached via Dickson Street. The name is now mainly identified with the council housing scheme, was developed after the property was purchased in 1971, with building commencing in 1973. The housing comprising a series of streets bounded by Stirches Road and Guthrie Drive, and contains a primary school, but no businesses. The name goes back at least to the 16th century, and was formerly ‘Stirkshaw’ or ‘Stirkshaws’. There were sons of the Scotts of Syn ton (or Whitslade) there in the 16th and 17th centuries, who sold it to the Chisholmes around 1660. About that time Thomas Scott of Whitslade paid tax on £214 for the land there. William Chisholme was owner in 1678 and it was still recorded with the same value in 1788 and 1811. The lands were part of Hassendean Parish until 1690 when that parish was suppressed and that part allocated to Wilton. In 1694 tax was paid on 4 hearths for ‘Stirkshaus’ his house’, and Janet Lamb was listed among the poor. The main road to Selkirk and the north once went through here. The estate was bought by James Farrar Blenkhorn in 1898, who was already renting the house. The house was redesigned and eventually passed to the Sisters of St. Augustine, and used as a private nursing home. The estate was sold off in parts, following Minnie Blenkhorn’s death in 1922. The lower area was developed as the Stirches housing estate in the mid-1970s – ‘Coming in by Stirches hill, I saw awd Hawick a dreaming still’ [IJ], ‘Wi’ haltin’ step by Stirches brae To roam the Heap Hills ower ... ’ [WFC], ‘A gentle walk up the Stirches road Then, when ee look around A’e think wi’ aew this is hame And it feels like hallowed ground’ [AY] (the name occurs regularly from 1481 until the early 18th century as ‘Stirkschaw’, ‘Stirkschaws’, ‘Styrkschaw’, ‘Styrkschaw’ and similar spellings; the modern ‘Stirches’ is first recorded in 1713, but it is still ‘Stirkshaw’ in Hawick Burgh records of 1728; it is ‘Styrkschaw’ in 1500, ‘Stirkschaw’ in 1501/2, ‘Stirkschawis’ in 1502, ‘Styrkschaw’ in 1504/5, ‘Stirkschaw’ in 1505, ‘Stokschawis’ in 1512 and ‘Stirkschawis’ in 1590, ‘Stirkschawis’ in 1694 and ‘Stirkschawes’ in 1678; the origin is clearly from Old English ‘styrc’ plus ‘scægga’ or Scots ‘shaw’, meaning a wooded area with young bullocks).

Stirches Brick Works (stir-cheez-brik-wurks) n. works set up by Capt. Chisholme of Stirches, which produced bricks, tiles and pottery between about 1850 and 1870, mainly used in local building projects. The original idea had been to establish a pottery works, until it was found that the local clay was unsuitable. The works were abandoned when the price of transportation and coal became too expensive. The buildings were used by the shepherd when the estate was purchased by Blenkhorn in 1890. Some ruined remains can be seen on the right of the road leading from the Convent to Stouslie.

Stirches Burn (stir-cheez-burn) n. stream that rises near Priestrig and flows through Stirches and then partially underground to become the Howden Burn.

Stirches Hoose (stir-cheez-hoos) n. Stirches House, an extensive mansion above Stirches housing scheme. A previously existing house was the residence of the Chisholm family about 200 years, being built on top of a mediaval tower in the mid-17th century by Walter Chisholm. The original tower was square (perhaps similar to Goldielands) and had a protecting courtyard wall. It was built by Scott of Whitslade, after he became Laird in the late 15th century. Above the doorway was a Latin inscription ‘Christus Rex Regum qui non dormitat in aeternum protegit hanc adeo necnon sine crimini plebem 1503’ (‘Christ the King of Kings, who never sleeps in heaven, protect this house and the people guiltless of crime’); a copy is still above the door of the present house (an extra ‘b’ on the end of ‘crimini’ suggests it is an imperfect copy). The lower floor had a vaulted ceiling, with the upper floors reached via a staircase in the roughly 6 foot thick walls. The second level held a public room about 30 feet by 18 feet, with a fireplace at each end, and there were sleeping rooms above. The upper stories were demolished in about 1666, with new accommodations built on either side and the south front added to the house. The initials ‘W.C. M.B. 1666’ were carved above one of the windows (Walter Chisholme and his wife Margaret Balderstone), this panel now in the north-east gable. Tax was paid on 19 windows there in 1748. The main house was added to and altered over the years, becoming a whitewashed cluster of buildings. The main building was in turn largely demolished in 1899/1900 for John Blenkhorn, and rebuilt to the designs of J.P. Alison. This included a fabricated Blenkhorn coat-of-arms in stained glass on the staircase and a stable for 12 horses. The only mediaval parts surviving are sections of the south gable and west wall. After it was finally completed in 1904, James Blenkhorn lived there for only another 5 years before his death. There are photographs of how the house looked during his time there. After Minnie Blenkhorn’s death in 1922 the house went on the market and since 1926 has been run by the Augustinian Sisters as St. Andrew’s Nursing Home, better known as ‘the Convent’. An intricately carved slab from the old house, bearing the Chisholm crest, is in the Museum.

Stirches Mains (stir-cheez-mäanz) n. farm in the Stirches area, to the left of the road just after the Convent. The farmer there recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls was Mrs. Scott. In the early 19th century was James Bunyan and in 1841 was Walter Knox – ‘Owre the lang frae Stouslie; Frae the mains o’ Stirches doun; How micht I come at the day’s end To the bonny Border toum?’[WL] (presumably once the home farm for Stirches).

Stirches Quarry (stir-cheez-kwa-ree) n. former quarry on the opposite side of the road from Stirches Mains.

Stirches Road (stir-cheez-röd) n. the main road from Dickson Street to Stirches House, and also once the main road to Selkirk and points north. It now provides access to much of the Stirches housing estate.

Stirches Schühil (stir-cheez-skil) n. primary school in the Stirches housing sheme, built in 1976 on Roxburghe Drive.

stirk (stirk) n., arch. a young bovine animal after weaning, generally those kept for slaughter rather than breeding, usually referring to bullocks or steers, but also sometimes heifers – ‘…also from James Wardlaw, in Riccarton, was bought for 23s ‘an ox stirk of the guidwife’s at the mill’ [JaT] ‘…I know not if the stirks grew tired before the stars were set’ [WHO], ‘…And whiles I feel like tethered stirk Stuck here amang it a’’ [WL] (also sometimes ‘stark’; from Old English; the word occurs in several local placenames, e.g. ‘Stirches’).

stirkie (stir-kee) n., arch. diminutive form for a young bovine animal – ‘Each ’eer, as Januar’ – end returns, Ilk yowe and stirkie waefu’ murns …’ [DH].

Stirk-rigg (stirk-rig) n. small hill about 1 km north of Bedrule farm, reaching only about 160 m in height. Just to the west of the summit are the remains of a circular earthwork, about 45 m in diameter, probably a settlement. It was said (in the New Statistical Account) to have been removed by cultivation in the 18th century, but is still visible in aerial photographs. This was the former site of a farm, which was incorporated into the farm of Newton, with all signs of the farmhouse disappearing. ‘Stirkrig’ and ‘Stirkrig-hill’ were listed as part of Newton according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811 (also ‘Stirkigg’).

Stirkshaws (stirk-shawz) n. early name for Stirches, after the stirs which grazed there. It changed to ‘Stirches’ in the early 18th century. The Chisholms were Lairds of Stirkshaws for about 250 years (also ‘Stirschaw’, ‘Stirchesaw’, ‘Stirshaw’, etc.; incorrectly written ‘Stirkshaws’ by Keith Scott).

Stirkshielphope (stirk-sheel-hop) n. former farm in Liddesdale, listed as ‘Styrkshielphope’ in a c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale. It was valued at 8 merks and listed under ‘Foresta’ (which seems to have been the northern part, including the Hermitage valley). It is recorded as ‘Streichelhope’ on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale, and still valued at 8 merks; the tenants were Robert Elliot in Ramsiegill, John of the Hill, Adam Elliot of Lees, ‘Old’ Robert Elliot of Ramsiegill, John Elliot and John’s son James called ‘Nelis Jok’. It could be related to ‘Stitchel Hill’ near Riccarton.

Stirk Sike (stirk-sik) n. small stream that joins the west side of Dawston Burn to the north of Saughtree. It is between Watch Sike and March Sike and is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map.

Stirling (stir-ling) n. Benjamin (b.1805/6) resident of Lilliesleaf. In 1851 he is recorded as ‘Pauper (formerly Tinsmith); Deaf & Dumb’. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Peter (b.1812/3) from Newtown, he was a tailor in Lilliesleaf, listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was living on the north side of Main Street in 1851. His wife was Agnes. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf, who paid the 1785 cart tax there and is also recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is surely related to James, who is also listed in 1797.

He was an innkeeper in Lilliesleaf, who subscribed to Andrew Scott’s book of poetry, published in Kelso in 1811.

stishie (sti-shee) n., poet. bustle, uproar – ‘When the stishie has smooed oot my rest …’ [WL] (cf. strooshie).

Stitchel Hill (sti-chul-hil) n. hill just to the north-east of Riccarton junction, rising to 318 m. There was formerly a fortified house near here (it is ‘Stitchelhill’ in 1694 and 1736; it is marked as ‘Stitcher-hils’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Stitchelhill (sti-chul-hil) n. farmstead in northern Castleton Parish, near the hill of the same name. It could be related to the lands of ‘Styrkschelhope’ listed in northern Liddesdale in a rental roll c.1376 and ‘Streichelhope’ recorded in a rental roll of 1541. ‘Willie’s Airchie’ Elliot ‘of Stychill hill’ is recorded in 1590. In 1632 it was owned by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs and listed as ‘Struichehill alias Stitchelhill’ (and listed among rentals of Kelso Abbey). It was surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718, when it was combined with Laidlawhope and Whitrope, and extended to 1990 acres, bounded by Laws, Dawsonburn, Millburnholm and Roughley. The lands were rented by John Laing from the Duke of Buccleuch in 1736. John Oliver was farmer there in the 1830s. William Roxburgh was shepherd in 1835. There was a lime works there according to the 1841 census, with 7 quarrymen working there (it is ‘Stichelhill’ in 1694 and 1736; it is marked as ‘Stichyhill’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Stiven (stiv-in) n. Rev. David Sime (d.1986) son of David Russell and Jeannie Sime, he was born near Dundee, where he was school Dux. He served with the Royal Scots, was awarded the Military Cross and returned to Britain wounded (with a missing leg, and an obituary having been written about him after being reported killed in action). He graduated from St. Andrews in 1919 and received his B.D. there in 1922, having a special interest in Hebrew and Biblical Criticism. He spent some time in Jerusalem, then became assistant at St. Cuthbert’s in Edinburgh before being appointed as minister of Teviothead Kirk in 1925. He was translated to Gilcomiston, Aberdeen in 1929 and Inverskeith in 1937. He was minister of Iona Parish 1958–66 and received a Doctorate of Divinity. He married Margaret (‘Peggy’) McIntosh in 1923 and they had several children (his surname is sometimes given as 'Steven').

stiver (stI-vur) n., arch. a small coin, something of little value – ‘Nixt race when it came oot an’ won, Hed no a stiver tae pit on’ [MB] (from an old Dutch coin).

St. James’ Fair (sin’-jäm-zeez-fair) n. traditional fair held near Kelso, formerly on 5th August, and now in September. Its origins go back to the days when Roxburgh was a town, and the traditional location at Friar’s Holm, where the Teviot meets the Tweed, is near the site of the old castle. It was probably for a long time the biggest fair in Roxburghshire.

St. James’ Flid (sin’-jäm-zeez-flid) n. name sometimes given to the flood of 9th August 1806, so called because it happened just a few days after St.James’ Fair. It was particularly devastating in Rulewater, with much property at Bonchester Bridge being swept away. Sir Walter Scott described how the lower floor of Minto House was filled with water and trees and livestock sailed past his own house. It also took away the bridge over the Dean Burn at Denholm.

St. James’ Hall (sin’-jäm-zeez-hal) n. the Masonic Hall on Union Street, formerly used as a dance venue.

St. John’s Kirk (sin’-jönz-kirk) n. the former St. John’s Church on Oliver Crescent. It was built as an additional Hawick church in 1878–80, largely by donations from Rev. John Thomson and his wife (who had inherited a large sum). The builder was Alexander Ferguson. It had the town’s tallest steeple at 32 m or over 100 feet, and an adjacent church hall was also constructed in 1885. It also had magnificent stained glass windows by Wailes & Strang of Newcastle. It received its official status as a ‘quoad sacra’ parish by Decree of the Court of Teinds in mid-1881. The church survived for about 80 years, but in 1958 the congregation merged with those of St. Andrew’s and Eastbank to form the new Trinity Kirk. The church itself was sold and partially demolished in 1960, but re-opened as Arthur Armstrong’s department store in 1962, later becoming Armstrong’s. The steeple was removed and some of the stained glass (by Wailes & Strang of Newcastle) was rescued by R.E. Scott and the Brothers of Charity, a monastic order from Gattonside, where they were installed. The buildings are now listed on the Buildings at Risk Register for Scotland and although approval was given for conversion into accommodation units, no work has been done. A roll of the ministry is: John Thomson 1881–89; Alexander Thomson 1889–94; William Brown 1894–1902; Robert Dickson 1902–05; William Lindsay 1906–13; Arthur Dunnett 1913–20; Walter Carter 1920–29; ??; William Wood 1958–59.

St. Jude’s Fair (sin’-joodz-fair) n. name used for a fair held at Hawick in the 17th century, specifically mentioned in 1673. In that year the Baron (the Earl of Queensberry) complained to the Privy Council that the Bailies and others in Hawick stopped his officers from ‘riding the fair’ (i.e. collecting duties); this was probably part of a feud between the 2 parties over the use of the Common. It was also known as the ‘St. Simon and St. Jude Fair’. St. Jude’s feast day was 28th October, which was only a week or so before the date of Hawick’s Winter Fair in the 18th century. Hence it seems likely that this was an alternative name for the Winter Fair, perhaps with the date being moved at some point and hence the association with St. Jude being dropped.

St. Leenard’s see St. Leonards

St. Leonard (sin’-le-nurd) n. Christian saint, believed to have been a 6th century hermit, although his historical existence is not certain. He became one of the most popular saints in Western Europe in the late middle ages. He is Patron of pregnant women, captives and prisoners of war, based on a version of his life from the 11th century, and an event involving the release of a Prince of Antioch from a Muslim prison in the 12th century. He is supposed to have created an Abbey at Noblac (now St.-Léonard) in France, where he is buried. His cult spread through Europe, with at least 177 British churches dedicated to him, including the hospitals of that name in Peebles and Edinburgh. Shriners dedicated to him were associated with the curing of leprosy, as well as the freeing of captives and the safe delivery of children. It is unclear when and for what reason his name became attached to parts of Hawick Common. He is now regarded as patron saint of the Hut.

St. Leonards (sin’-le-nurdz, sin’-lee-nurdz) n. general name for the farm and neighbouring area lying on the Common at the top of the Vertish. The tenant of the farm plays host to the Cornet and his supporters during the Chases before the Common Riding, and officially serves the curds and cream breakfast on the Friday. It is traditional that the Flag is displayed outside the farmhouse during the Thursday and Friday morning Huts. The Hut is effectively a barn at the farm, which replaced a temporary marquee in 1924. The singing of ‘Teribus’ outside the farmhouse after the Friday morning ‘Hut’ was started in 1890. The tenant was Thomas Reid in the late 19th century. A stone axe found near there is in the Museum. It is unclear when the name was attached to the farm; it is labelled ‘Hawick Townhead’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map – ‘And lang may St. Leonard’s retain the power To feast the sterc

St. Margaret’s an Wulton Sooth

the St. Leonard’s Stakes (thu-sin’-le-nurdz-stäks) n. race formerly run on the Saturday of the Common Riding, from at least 1887. It was at one time a ‘selling stakes’, with the winner to be sold for 50 sovereigns. The 1888 race was declared void after the leading horse slowed before the post to allow the second horse to win, while another horse had jockeys of different weight switched.

St. Leonard’s Well (sin’-le-nurdz-wel) n. spring just to the south of St. Leonard’s Moss, between Pilmuir farm and Pilmuir Rig farmstead. It seems possible that this was the first local place to be associated with the saint, with the farm name following later. It may be the same as ‘Lurgie’s Well’ (if that was not nearer to St. Leonards farm).

St. Malachy (sin’-maw-la-chee) n. (1094–1148) Archbishop of Armagh, baptised ‘Maelmhaedhoc O’ Morgair’, who was the first Irishman to be canonised, and is known for his vision of the identity of the last 112 Popes. In 1139 he journeyed to Rome via Scotland, England and France. The chaplainry of ‘Malachi and meadow lying within steads of Stobycot and Staneholm’ was mentioned in 1500 as part of the lands of Ringwoodfield excepted from the lease to Walter Scott of Branh

St. Margaret (sin’-mawr-gri)’ n. (d.1093) born in Hungary, her family fled William the Conqueror, were shipwrecked off Scotland, and then befriended by King Malcolm, who married her in 1070. She was brother of Edgar Ætheling, and daughter of the exiled English Prince Edward. Probably because of her family’s influence, the Scottish King made many incursions into Northumbria. She had 6 sons and 2 daughters. She died a few days after her husband and son were killed at Alnwick Castle. She was canonised in 1251 and her feast day was 10th June (recently moved to 16th November).

St. Margaret’s an Wulton Sooth (sin’-mawr-gritz-an-wul’-in-sooth) n. former church near the top of Commercial Road (No. 34), built in 1894 to plans drawn up jointly by J.P. Alison and J. Chalmers of Glasgow. This replaced a temporary iron structure, and used red sandstone from Langtown Quarries. Originally called Wilton South Church, it was built for a new congregation established by the United Presbyterian Church in 1888. Wilton South merged with
St. Margaret’s Convent

St. Margaret’s Church in 1940 and was linked to the charge of St. George’s West and Roberton churches in 1984. The building fell into disrepair towards the end of the 20th century, and the last service was in 1987. The congregation merged with that of St. George’s and the building was demolished in 2001.

St. Margaret’s Convent (sin’-maur-gritz-kou-vin’) n. convent in the West End, built 1910–12, for sisters belonging to the ‘Third Order’ of St. Dominic (being free to engage in pastoral work outside the convent), the first of its kind in Scotland. They originally came from Stone in Staffordshire. The first 4 sisters arrived in Hawick in 1909 (to a rather mixed welcome), setting up temporarily at 14 Buccleuch Street, opposite the Catholic Church. They included Sister Mary Antoninus, Sister Margaret Mary and Sister Theresa Margaret. A resident chaplin followed in 1912. They took immediate charge of the Guilds associated with S.S. Mary & David’s, as well as teaching at the school. They also formed a Women’s section of the Sacred Heart Confraternity. They moved to Myreslawgreen in 1912, the foundation stone having been laid there the previous year. A hall there was used as the Church Hall for S.S. Mary & David’s until the new halls were opened on Buccleuch Street in 1930. The building is believed to be the last in Hawick built using the red sandstone from Denholm Quarries, with architect Reginald Fairlie from Edinburgh. From 1934 the sisters ran the St. Margaret’s Home hospice, which was built on the grounds of the Convent. The Hall was demolished in 1970, with Myreslawcourt built on part of the site. The last nuns left the town in 1987, with the Convent building being taken over as part of the old-age Home. Chaplains at the Convent included: Michael A. Payne 1936–43; William Grant 1948–60; and Thomas Kelly 1961–63.

St. Margaret’s Drive (sin’-maur-gritz-driv) n. dead-end road off Bright Street, formerly being on the grounds of St. Margaret’s Convent. It was named in 1990.

St. Margaret’s Home (sin’-maur-gritz-hoom) n. residential facility for the sick and aged, off Myreslaw Green. It was developed on the grounds of St. Margaret’s Convent from 1934, with considerable extensions being made since. It was opened by Archbishop McDonald and was founded as a ‘Home for Incurables’, with accommodation for 45 patients. In 1987 the nuns left the town, and the Home was taken over by a voluntary committee. Since 1999 it has been run privately.

St. Margaret’s Kirk (sin’-maur-gritz-kirk) n. church on Wellington Road in Wilton, originally called Wellington Church. It was built in 1886 to house a congregation that had followed Rev. J.A. Birrell out of Hawick Parish Church following some internal disagreements. It was erected as a separate parish by a Decreet of the Court of Teinds in 1896. In 1940 the congregation merged with Wilton South to become St. Margaret’s and Wilton South, with the abandoned building being used for commercial purposes until demolished in 1975. New housing was built on the site in 1977. A roll of the ministry is: William Miller 1886–98; Charles Brownlie 1898–1904; William McCullough 1905–35; . . .

St. Margaret’s Schuil (sin’-maur-gritz-skil) n. Roman Catholic primary school, originally established in 1854 by Fr. Taggart in 1854, with the financial assistance of Fr. Wallace of Traquair. Within a couple of years it had 50 pupils enrolled. A new building was constructed on the present site on Buccleuch Terrace in 1878, and later extended. The staffing problems were largely solved when the Dominican Sisters arrived in Hawick and supplied 2 teachers. A more modern building was erected in 1965 to accommodate 140 pupils, and was opened by Cardinal Gray. School Inspectors’ Reports for 1867–1951 are in the National Archives.

St. Mary see sin’-ma-ree n. title sometimes used for the Virgin Mary, the mother of Jesus of Nazareth and wife of Joseph. The church in Hawick was dedicated to her in 1214 (and this may have been a rededication). A spring in Castle Cary (the main seat of the Lovels) was also dedicated to her, there possibly being a connection here. The celebration of her Assumption (i.e. the apparent taking up of her body) on 15th August was of local importance, being mentioned in the 1511 Charter as the date on which the token payment was to be made to the Baron, as well as in the earlier charter of 1407 when the Baron was granted to Douglas of Drumlanrig, and in the 1420 charter of half of Brauxholme to the Scotts of Buccleuch. There were several other feast days associated with Mary, e.g. 1st January, 2nd July (Visitation), 8th September (Nativity) and 8th December (Immaculate Conception), which may also have been important in Hawick at one time. The entire month of May was also specially dedicated to Mary. James Wilson suggests that the date towards the end of May, mentioned in 1214, when the townspeople paid tribute to their church’s saint, may have led to there were calls for an extension to accommodate the congregation, with the Minister expressing his disappointment in 1724 at failing to convince the Session to act. In 1733 there was an appeal to the Duke of Buccleuch’s commissioners to repair and extend the church. It was demolished in 1763, apparently being too solid to bring down easily. The church was finally rebuilt in 1763/4, in a much more plain style and a new bell was obtained at that time (at a cost of £50 and weighing 560 pounds). The cost was £497 (exclusive of the bell), the money coming from the heritors, the Trustees of Alexander Orrock, the weavers incorporation, the rural tenantry (who carted the materials) and the Burgh (who supplied the bell). Some of the original stone was used, but all previous ornamentation was hidden. The T-shaped plan used the long wall for gathering the congregation around both the communion table and pulpit, which was the common design after the Reformation. The steeple was also rebuilt at that time, John Purves, wright in Kelso, being the main contractor. The upper gallery of the kirk was then reserved for members of the incorporation of Weavers, with the front row kept for the Magistrates. Most of the other seats were reserved for heritors, farmers and members of the session, with very few for the ordinary townspeople (who had to stand). The bell-house was rebuilt again in ‘aslar work’ in 1773. In 1826 it is recorded that some people were paying 6 shillings (presumably annually) for the use of a seat, and there was an appeal to the Duke of Buccleuch for a larger church (which could seat 700 for a population of around 5000). Internal renovations were carried out around 1863 by mason’s Marshall & Ballantyne and joiner’s Scott & Wright. This work revealed the memorial stones of Walter Scott of Goldielands and some later family members (concealed under wood on the west-side of the aisle, where a furnace was installed), as well as some carved stonework from the earlier church. Severely damaged in a fire of 1880, it was substantially renovated in 1882/3 by the Edinburgh firm Wardrop & Reid, essentially as a replica of the one that burned down. The main changes were the addition of 2 circular windows in the gables as well as dormer windows, a move of the entrance from the south to the north side, and the building of 2 internal staircases instead of 3. The 18th century tower survived the fire, and is built in rubble of 5 stages, being topped with an ogival slated roof and a wrought-iron weather vane. It had its exterior refurbished in 1973, when floodlights were also installed to illuminate it on special occasions. It is currently a Category B listed building. The church contains the Buccleuch Vault, resting place of many of the earliest Scots of Buccleuch, which has been sealed since the 1763 re-building. The church yard has been in use since at least the 13th century, and was in earlier times used for many civic functions, e.g. for the election of bailies. The permission to erect ‘through-stones’ appears only to have been given in 1712, following an Act of 1708. Although a proposal for enclosing the kirkyard was made in 1723, the surrounding wall was only built in 1811, and repaired in 1857. The churchyard was closed to burials in 1864. The iron gates were added in 1937 to mark the 400th anniversary of the granting of the 1537 Charter, and in 1973 the churchyard was extensively landscaped and tidied up. The 700th anniversary of its consecration in 1914 attracted an estimated crowd of 4,000. It was used for a while as a Red Cross Military Hospital in WWI. Before the Reformation (i.e. the late 16th century) St. Mary’s was, of course, Catholic, like other churches in Scotland. It was part of the Archdiocese of Glasgow, and in 1447/8 was made a canony and prebend of the Collegiate Church of Bothwell. Patronage of the church was vested in the Baron of Hawick for most of history, but given to the Earls of Bothwell in the late 15th and early 16th centuries. The church became insufficient for Hawick’s population in the later part of the 18th century, when other churches began to be set up. It was the Parish Church until 1844 (when the Old Parish Church was built), becoming a ‘quoad sacra’ church in 1860, and reverting to the main parish church again in 1987. Also in 1987 the interior was refurbished. After it was separated from ‘Old Parish’ the new Manse was off the Braid Road. From 1997 it was linked to the churches of Cavers and Kirkton. Kirk Session records exist from 1700. The oldest recorded communion token bear the mark ‘M.A.K.’ for ‘Master Alexander Kyneir’. Other existing tokens date from 1843 and 1860. A ‘gaufre’, or utensil for baking sacramental wafers, exists, and may be Pre-Reformation. A roll of the meenisters while it was the Parish Kirk is given elsewhere. The subsequent roll of the ministry is: John Thomson 1800-79; Stewart Burns 1880-1925; Eric Raff 1926-27; William Simpson 1927-33; Walter Calderwood 1933-53; J.P. Wilson 1959-66; ... Duncan Clark 1976-83??; David Burt 1996-98; William Taylor 1998-??; Marina D. Brown 2010- – ‘While, as up yonder Sacred Mount I looke; On which the temple that’s situat on high, Stands much admired by strangers passing by’ [RRC], ‘Hark! the bell of old St. Mary Finds us armed alert and wary’ [RSC]. ‘I sei the Slitrig whirlin’ doon, and I hear St. Mary’s clock’ [JEDM], ‘Where stands St. Mary’s pointing to the sky, Encircled round its walls in peaceful rest And with the dust of ages intrepressed The ashes of the dead forgotten lie (The while the living pass unheeding by)’ [TK], ‘... And the jowe o’ St. Mary’s bell’ [WL] (usually referred to as just ‘St. Mary’s’ or in earlier times as ‘the Kirk’ or ‘Hawick Kirk’ or ‘the Pairish Kirk’ to distinguish it from the other churches).

St. Mary’s Knot (sin-’mā-reez-no’) n., arch. a knot tied triply, so that it is hard to undo – ‘He has tied them a’ wi’ St. Mary Knot, A’ these horse but barely three. Fala, &c.’ [CPM] (the note in Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ suggests that the line refers to ham-stringing a horse, but this is inconsistent with the following verses).

St. Mary’s Loch (sin-’mā-reez-loch) n. loch lying in the central southern uplands, about half-way between Hawick and Moffat. It is the largest body of water in the Borders, about 4 miles long, 7 1/2 miles in circumference and 30 fathoms deep in places. It has the smaller Loch o the Lowes at its head. There was a dispute over right to the Loch between Lord Napier and Scott of Rodono in the mid-19th century. It is famous for its picturesque views and as the haunt of the Ettrick Shepherd – ‘Long, long ago, ere the Yarrow wound Or the rainclouds filled St. Mary’s, Long, long ago, when on Ettrick ground The only folk were the fairies ...’ [WHO].

St. Mary’s Place (sin-’mā-reez-plis) n. name adopted by the Council in 1946 for what was formerly Old Churchyard or Auld Kirkyaird. The house at the corner with the Kirk Wynd, No. 1 St. Mary’s Place and 31 Drumlanrig Square was designed in 1891 by J.P. Alison and built for Miss Lamb; it is a grade C listed building. Most of the other houses in the street are quite old.

St. Mary’s Schuil (sin-’mā-reez-skil) n. St. Mary’s Infant School, gifted by the 5th Duke of Buccleuch in the latter part of the 19th century. The buildings were at the top of Brougham Place, behind Trinity Church. It was set up through the efforts of Rev. John Thomson as the Parish School for St. Mary’s, and hence was also called ‘St. Mary’s Quoad Sacra School’. The first master was William Murray, who had been running a private school at 8 Kirkgate (i.e. St. Mary’s Place) since 1850. When the new school opened Murray marched all his students there in a body. The school became connected with the government so it could have student teachers, and after the passing of the Education Act it became the responsibility of the new School Board. A wooden building was built to house the infant department. Eventually the school became specialised as an infant department, with the older primary pupils attending Trinity. It closed in 1967, the pupils being split among the neighbouring schools. The main building was later used by a knitwear firm before being converted into 2 houses, with the outbuildings demolished. School Inspectors’ Reports for 1852–1951 are in the National Archives. The Borders Archive holds registers for 1898–1967 and log books for 1874–1967.

St. Mary’s Shiel (sin’-mä-reex-sheel) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in 1541 as ‘Sant-Marie Scheillis’, and there being no tenant at that time. The location is unknown, but the name suggests it could have been associated with Hermitage Chapel.

St. Mary’s Steps (sin’-mä-reex-stepz) n. common name for the main staircase leading to St. Mary’s Kirk from the Kirkstile. There are 33 steps in all.

St. Mary’s Well (sin’-mä-reex-wel) n. spring on the north-north-west side of Ruberslaw. It was probably a ‘holy well’, i.e. at one point having some religious significance. A former spring near Hawthornside was known by the same name, or perhaps just Mary’s Well.

St. Michael (sin’-më-kul) n. David (12th C.) witness to a charter for Richard Lovel to the Priory of St. Andrews about the 1190s. His name is given as ‘Daudi de sco michaele’. John was also a witness and they were both presumably part of the family that held lands at Whitchesters and elsewhere nearby. Elmeras (13th C.) son of Robert. In about 1240 he resigned his lands of ‘Ylistoun’ (Elliston near St. Boswells) to be granted to Dryburgh Abbey. John (12th C.) first witness listed in about the 1190s when Richard Lovel granted lands near Branxholme to the Priory of St. Andrews. David is also listed and so probably his son or brother. It seems likely he is descended from Walter, who is mentioned in a generation earlier. John (13th C.) witness in 1249 to a charter granted by Agnes ‘de Illifistun’ (i.e. Elliston) to Dryburgh Abbey. He may well have been related to this Agnes. He is probably the same Sir John who witnessed a grant by Henry of Ashkirk about 1250: he is there ‘Johanne de Sancto Micaele’. Sir John (13th/14th C.) listed on the Ragman Rolls of 1296 as ‘Sire Johan de Seint Michel del Contue de Rokesburgh’. Presumably the same man is listed separately as ‘Dominus Johannes de Seint Michel, miles’. His seal consists of an oval showing St. Michael slaying the dragon and a man with a hawk on his wrist, together with the name ‘S.JOHANIS DE SCO MICHAELAE’. He probably held lands at Whitchesters and elsewhere in the county. Another ‘Johan’ is also listed, presumably his son, along with ‘Renaud de Seint Michel, clerk’ (i.e. Reginald), possibly another son. In 1311 he is listed among Scotsmen whose lands had been taken by Edward II, but were now returned (specifically his lands of ‘Heveside’) because they ‘came to his peace’. This is said to be an old Cumberland family and may be the same family who are recorded holding lands at Reban, Kildare in Ireland around 1300. John (13th C.) son of John of St. Michael. In 1278/9 he was accused of slaying Richard Bullock at ‘Cambok’, in a group along with 3 others. He was stated to be already dead, and so not declared an outlaw. Hence he cannot have been the later John, son of Sir John. John (13th/14th C.) probably son of Sir John. He was ‘Johane de Seint Michel’ when he swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. John (d.1451/2) holder of the lands of Whitchesters in the Barony of Hawick. He was on a ‘re-tour of inquest’ made in Hawick in 1424 for lands of Hownum and was ‘Johannem de Samichell’ in 1426 when on the inquest for the inheritance of Eilrig by Walter Scott of Rankikburn. He was probably the John of St. Michael who was witness to the 1435 charter where lands of Branxholme and others in the Barony of Hawick were transferred from John Inglis to his son Thomas. He also witnessed a document for Swinton of that ilk in 1432. He was succeeded by his son John. John ‘of St. Michael’ (15th C.), son of John. He was probably the last of his family to hold local lands. He is probably the ‘Johanne de Sancto Michaeli juniore’ who witnessed a charter between Margaret Cusing (wife of Hawick Burgess Simon Routledge) and Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1447. A ‘re-tour’ of 1452 confirms to him the lands of ‘Qwitchester’, on annual payment to the Baron, the Earl of Douglas, of a white or red rose at the feast of St. John the Baptist. In 1455 John of Langlands attested in a notorised document (made at St. Mary’s Kirkyard) that he had inherited his father’s lands of Whitchesters. In 1455 King James II granted Whitchesters to David Scott, heir to Buccleuch for services to the King, the lands having been forfeited by ‘John of St.
St. Mungo’s Day

Michael, traitor’ (probably his father). In 1456 there was a further notarial instrument attesting that he had inherited Whitchesters from his father; by this time his is described as ‘quondam Johanni de Sancti Michaele, filio quondam Johannis de Sancto Michaela’, suggesting that he was also deceased. The family, originally Norman, but settling in Ireland, had apparently held Whitchesters since before 1183, but forfeited them before 1455.

Robert (12th/13th C.) probably related to the local family. In about 1180 he witnessed a confirmation of the grant of lands in Eskdale to Melrose Abbey by the Avenels. He witnessed a marriage contract for Philip de Valognes in about 1200; he was recorded as ‘Roberto de Sancto Michaele’, and other witnesses included John of Wilton and Simon of Hawick. His son ‘Elmeras’ is recorded in about 1240. Walter (12th C.) referred to in a charter sometime in the period 1163 to 1183. Henry Lovel granted the Priory of St. Andrews 2 oxgangs of land in Bramsholme, which was half of the lands formerly held by him (also written ‘de St. Michael’; it is possible there is a connection with the Carmichaels).

St. Mungo’s Day (sin’-mung-göz-dá) n. Saint’s feast day celebrated on 13th January, the anniversary of the death of St. Mungo in the year 613. He was Bishop of Glasgow and sometimes credited as founding the city. His day was celebrated before the Reformation and still referred to in the 1622 records of the local Commissioners’ Court. Also sometimes known as St. Kentigern, his image is included on the Founder’s Window of St. Cuthbert’s Kirk.

St. Ninian’s Road (sin’-ni-nec-inz-röd) n. street in the Terraces, named in 1931. The name was suggested by J.P. Alison, after St. Ninian (who died in 432), since he was one of the people to whom Trinity Church in Edinburgh was dedicated, this being connected to the Trinity lands in Hawick, near which the street was built.

St. Ninian’s Well (sin’-ni-nec-inz-wel) n. former name for a spring on the Woll estate at Ashkirk. It is about 220 m to the west-south-west of the Parish Kirk, on a steep slope. This is one of a large number of sites throughout Scotland connected in name with this early Scottish Christian missionary. Ashkirk Kirk, which lies to the north-east of the spring, was originally dedicated to this saint. It has been suggested that the spring could have been so-named because it was used for baptisms.

stob (stob) n., arch. a stake, fence post – ‘...Of drystone dykes or fence stobs And far the eye can see’[WL], ‘Compared wi’ a nibbie, a walkin’-stick’s nea better than a palin’-stob’[DH], a coarse nail (the first meaning is probably the origin for ‘Stobs’ and ‘Stob Hill’, while the second may apply to ‘Stobicote’).

Stob Cleuch (stōb-klooč) n. small stream that rises on Stob-cleuch Edge and runs eastwards to join the Gorrenberry Burn.

Stobedge Wud (stōb-ej-wud) n. plantation to the north of Minto Crags. In 1780 it is recorded that ‘Stobedge planting dyke’ formed part of the western boundary of Crigend and Minto Mill farms. An unrelated farmstead called ‘Stobedge’ was in Ancrum Parish and once part of the Chesters estate.

Stob Fell (stōb-feł) n. hill in the upper Hermitage valley, north of Billhope. It reaches a height of 518 m.

Stobicote (stō-bee-ko’) n. farm between Southfield and Old Northhouse. The lands were leased to Walter Scott of Bramsholme by the Abbot of Melrose in 1500 along with other lands in the ‘Lordship of Ryngwodfeild’. In 1540 the King’s shepherd William Henderson is recorded being paid for oats there. The first owner may have been David Scott, son of ‘Wicked Wat’. In about 1557 it was rented from Melrose Abbey by Simon and John Scott, sons of the Laird of Allanhaugh; it was valued at £6 at that time. It was listed as ‘Stobbit, Coitbrugh’ in 1634, ‘Stobbit, Coitbrugh’ in 1653, similarly in 1661 and ‘Stobicoat-burgh’ in 1663 (i.e. merged with Brugh in the transcription), when still part of the lands of Ringwoodfield in the Lordship of Melrose held by the Scotts of Bucleuch. It was valued at £260 in 1643. In 1684 tenants James Glendinning and John Simpson were declared as fugitives for being Covenanters. 7 people were recorded there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James Scott was there in 1700. When surveyed in 1718 it consisted of the combined farms of Over and Nether Stobicote, covering 694 acres, bounded by Allan Water, Brugh, Doechluch, Northhouse and Braidhaugh. It was also the birthplace in 1765 of Gideon Scott, millwright. James Anderson was farmer there between at least 1763 and 1797. In 1788 the lands were valued at £260, and by then owned by the Duke of Bucleuch. George Hobkirk and family lived there in 1841. The route for the Mosspaul ride-out passes near here (also known as ‘Stobicotescot’, ‘Stobicote’ etc., and is ‘Stobitcote’ on the Ordnance Survey map; it is ‘Stobycot’ in 1500, transcribed ‘Stobbe-Tait’ in 1540, ‘Stobecoit’ in 1557 and 1564, ‘Stobitcote’ in 1643, ‘Stobbitcote’ in 1660, transcribed ‘Stobat-cate’ in 1684, ‘Stobit-coatt’ in 1694, ‘Stobbitcoat’ in 1712, ‘Stobitcott’ in 1717 and ‘Stobitcoats’ in 1718; it appeared as ‘Stobbycott’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and on de Wit’s c. 1680 map of Scotland, while Stobie’s 1770 map has ‘Stobbitcot’; the name probably means ‘cottage made with nails’.

Stobie Cote see Stobicote

Stobie Cleuch (stō-bee-kloogh) n. small stream joining the Hermitage Water from the west near Leaugh Cottage, just north of Redheugh. On the lower banks of the stream there are the remains of 4 circular turf stells.

Stobie Rig (stō-bee-rig) n. small ridge of land between the Liddel Water and Foulshiels farmhouse, just south of Stobie Cleuch.

Stobie’s map (stō-beez-map) n. map of Roxburghshire prepared by Matthew Stobie and published in 1770. Although this map is useful, it was prepared for the gentry and hence began the insidious process of anglicising our local place names.

Stobi Hill (stō-bee-hil) n. hill in the Ale valley, between Whitslade farm and Todrig farm, with Whitslaid Hill being the southern spur. There is a linear earthwork, an old field-bank, running from the hollow between this hill and Whitslade Hill north towards Todrig (it is marked ‘Stobiehill’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Stobi Meadi (stō-bee-me-di) n. former lands in Lilliesleaf granted by Walter of Riddell to Melrose Abbey in the early 13th century and recorded as ‘Stobimedue’.

Stobitcote see Stobicote

Stobo (stō-bō) n. (17th C.) traveller from Kelso. In 1659 the Hawick Council decreed that the would not ‘trouble nor molest our market, in buying either butter or cheese before the bell ring for that effect’ [BR1659].

Stobs (stōbz) n. estate and former hamlet about 4 miles south of Hawick, along the Slitrig. In the 19th century it had about half a dozen homes, as well as a post office, blacksmith’s shop and joiners (mostly in a long row of cottages), although there is now little trace of these buildings. It was also a station on the Waverley Line, converted into a house after the 1969 closure of the railway, with extensive sidings linking it with the military camp. The estate is heavily wooded, with sitka spruce and other conifers dominating. The name is recorded in the early 14th century, and gave rise to a surname. Thomas Cranston was granted the barony of Stobs by David II, sometime previous to 1370. A grant sometime before 1375 has Thomas, Earl of Mar and Lord of Cavers, granting parts of Cavers to Thomas Cranston, with his lands of Stobs being excepted. In 1458/9 the lands were among those held by Thomas Cranston of that Ilk. In 1509/10 it was listed as part of the holdings of Douglas of Cavers since the time of King David. In 1544 the lands were owned by Clement Crozier, and then passed to the Gledstains family. The lands of Stobs were held by the Cranstons as part of the Lordship of Denholm according to a discharge of 1574. They were owned by the Elliots from about 1580, when it was purchased by Gavin from a Gladstains. On his death it was inherited briefly by his surviving daughters and a grand-daughter, but sold in 1607 to ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters’, who took full possession of it in 1614 (with the superior at that time being Sir John Cranston of that Ilk). In 1608 it was attacked by William Scott of Northhouse and a party armed with ‘swords, gauntlets and plate-sleeves’ threatening to burn ‘all the evidents and writs of the said lands’ unless they got what they wanted; 2 years later the same William and his brother Robert Scott attacked Gilbert Eliott of Stobs on the streets of Hawick. Beginning with this Gilbert, ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Gartins’, the estate became the seat of the Eliott family for many generations. The superiors of the lands were the Lords Cranston in the 17th century. In 1678 it (along with Langside, Penchrise, Stanishhope, Harwood Burn and William’s Rig) was valued at £1633 6s 8d, and owned by the Elliots of Stobs. In 1694 ‘The place & office houses’ of Stobs was taxed for 13 hearths, while ‘Stobs his cooks wife’ was taxed for a hearth in Hawick. Sir Gilbert Eliott paid tax for 14 windows there in 1748 and 15 in 1753. In 1788 (and in the Land Tax Roll of 1811) it was valued at £1633 6s 8d, with the teinds having been purchased from Douglas of Cavers and valued at £400. The estate was sold to the War Office in 1902, apparently partly because the terrain resembled the South African veldt. Over the next 5 decades it was used extensively as an army training camp and also prisoner of war camp. It was broken up and sold after WWII. A memorial stone cross was erected after WWI. A plan of the estate from 1779 is in the National Archives (also spelled ‘Stobbs’, ‘Stob’, ‘Stobbis’, ‘Stobbes’, etc.; the name is recorded in 1309 as ‘Stobbis’ and in 1370 as ‘stokkis’, perhaps in error, with ‘the Stobbis’ appearing in 1458/9, ‘Stobis’ in 1509/10, ‘Stobbis’ in 1511 and ‘Stobbs’ in 1643; the modern spelling dates to at least Gordon’s c. 1650 map, but is ‘Stobbs’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; it may be from the Gaelic, Old Norse or Old English for ‘stakes’ or ‘stumps’, perhaps meaning that it was a place marked by tree stumps).

Stobs (stōbz) n. David (16th C.) recorded as tenant in Mervinslaw in a rental roll of 1541. His steadying was valued at 12s 6d. His surname is recorded as ‘Stobbs’.

Stobs Camp (stōbz-kawmp) n. army camp, about 4 miles south of Hawick, established in 1903 as a summer training ground, with the officers stationed in Stobs Castle. The camp was based at the former estate of Stobs, including adjoining farms, covering about 10,000 acres. A small gauge railway track went from the Waverley Line right up to the camp, this tramway being dismantled when the camp expanded during WWII. Used initially by volunteer units as a summer training ground, it saw increased use around the time of the two World Wars and grew to be so large that it was referred to as ‘the Scottish Aldershot’. At its peak in 1915 there may have been as many as 15,000 men stationed there. It was also used as a prisoner of war camp, with about 6,000 German troops interred there in WWI, and a small number in WWII. After the war it was used for the repatriation of Polish troops, and then reverted to use as a summer training camp until it closed in 1956 and was sold in 1959. Horst Rossberg wrote his recollections as a prisoner of war in the 1991 Transactions. A couple of wooden buildings survive, along with concrete foundations, steps and terracing, showing the location of many more. The training ground stretched all the way to Penchrise Pen. A small cemetery, just inside the camp, was used to bury the 36 prisoners of war and 6 internees who died in the camp, the bodies being reinterred in 1962.

Stobs Castle (stōbz-kaw-sul) n. family seat of the Elliatos, destroyed in a fire in 1712, resulting in the loss of many of the family’s early documents. A tradition is that people from Hawick were blamed for setting the fire. The original tower stood in a plantation about 400 yards south-east of the present structure, but there are no remains to be seen (it is marked as the site on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map). A new mansion was built on the same site in 1719, but in 1764 it also burned down. It was said to be ‘a twae storey heigh thack-house’ [WaD]. It is said that many of the foundation stones were removed from the old castle in 1797. The house was rebuilt by Sir William Elliot from around 1793, as a gothic-style residence. After that it was always referred to as ‘Stobs Castle’ rather than ‘Stobs Hoose’. The builder was John Laing of Hawick, and the architect was Robert Adam, this being his last castle. It narrowly escaped burning down again in 1824, being saved by the actions of the servants. There were also later Victorian alterations, around 1865, probably by James Anderson Hamilton. A carved family coat of arms hangs over the north entrance. 50 High Street has a freestone cornice salvaged from the Castle at the beginning of the 19th century. When the estate was sold to the War Office in 1902 the house was used as officers quarters. The gothic single-arched bridge approach also survives, along with the Grecian-style gateway to the approach road. And along the track south of the house is the stable block.

the Stobs Castle Stakes (θth-stōbz-kaw-sul-stēks) n. race run over 2 miles on the Saturday of the Common Riding in the late 19th century.

Stobs Cemetery (stōbz-sei-mi’-ree) n. small cemetery situated just inside Stobs Camp, south of the former station. This was where 36 prisoners of war and 6 civilian internees were buried. A memorial was built from stones carried up from the Slitrig by Mr. Oliver, farmer at Winningtonrig. The names of those buried there were recorded along with an inscription: ‘To our comrades who died far away from their country’. The site was maintained by locals until 1962, when the bodies were reinterred at Cannock Chase German Military Cemetery in Staffordshire. A few remains of the memorial can still be seen today.

Stobs Cottage (stōbz-ko’-cej) n. former name for a cottage on the Stobs estate. The estate manager lived there in the 1860s.

Stobs Crater (stōbz-krā’-ur) n. crater on Mars, named after the area of Stobs in 1976. It is roughly 12 km in size, and situated at about 5° S, 321.6° E.

Stobside Hill (stob-shaw-hil) n. hill just to the west of Headshaw. It reaches a height of 298 m and may correspond to the ‘Stobbsidehull’ recorded in a description of boundaries in Headshaw in 1780.

Stobs Hoose (stōbz-hoois) n. name sometimes used for Stobs Castle, particularly before the baronial style mansion was built in the late 18th century. The estate was owned from the late 16th century by the Elliotts of Stobs, who built a fortified house there, which was destroyed in 1712. The new house was built in 1719, but was largely replaced by 1800. There were also additions around 1865.
Stobsiade (stob-see-ad) n. newspaper produced by German prisoners of war at Stobs during WWI, with 26 issues being produced in the period 1915–19. At first it was produced by civilian internees, but by late 1916 (when the civilians were moved to the Isle of Man) it was continued by the military prisoners. It contained advertisements, news, poetry, puzzles and short stories. About 4,000 copies of each issue were printed (by Scott & Paterson in Hawick). The name means ‘news from Stobs’ in German, but is a play on the popular 18th-century epic poem ‘Jobsiade’. Despite censorship and other restrictions, the publication contains remarkable creativity and humour.

Stobs Sideins (stobz-si-dinz) n. railway sidings built for Stobs Military Camp. This made a connection to the Stobs Camp internal tramway via a transfer platform. The tramway connected various parts of the camp at different times, e.g. it once ran to the rifle range on Penchrise Pen, and also to the ‘Meldrum Destructor’ (i.e. incinerator).

Stobs Station (stobz-stashin) n. former railway station at Stobs, once much used by the military. It was originally called Barnes, but renamed almost right away to Stobs. It had an ‘up’ platform (to London) and a ‘down’ platform (to Edinburgh) as well as a bay platform on the west side. The station building was built in a baronial style. Just south of the station was the cemetery for prisoners of war and internees.

Stobs Wudfit (stobz-wud-fi) n. former set of cottages near Stobs, also called just Wudfit.

stock (stok) n., arch. the stalk of a plant, particularly of the cabbage family – ‘...admitted that she ‘went to the Roan Garden on the Sabbath day, and did there cut three or four stocks of green kale’’ [JaT].
with ane paper with the theft written upon their forehead at the mercat-crosse, upon the mercat day’ [BR1640], ‘...the balyeye a fyne and onlawes him in fyfte pound Scotts, and ordaines him to go to the stockis immediately, and yrin to continue during the sd. regall balyeye his will and pleasure’ [BR1693] (see also the juggs).

Stockwell (stok-wel) n. Henry (18th/19th C.) servant of Hawick butcher Andrew Wilson. In 1815 he was found not guilty of assaulting Janet Ogilvie (or Orrock). It is stated that both were married people. He appears to have been married to Elizabeth Rae and had a daughter Isabella in Kelso in 1812. He was probably son of Thomas and Margaret Fairbairn, born in Kelso in 1789.

Stockwell Orphanage (stok-wel-or-f-neg) n. orphanage in London, established in 1867 for boys and in 1879 for girls. In the 1880s Hawick had a circulating library, based at 2 Dovecote Street, to raise money for the orphanage.

stockyard (stok-yard) n. a stockyard, area where livestock is kept on a farm, typically close to a slaughterhouse — ‘...and convey the chest containin the plate ti Caverton Mill where it was buried in the stockyard where it lay until the danger was passed’ [IWL].

Stoddart (sto-dur) n. Archibald ‘Aircie’ (16th/17th C.) listed along with John and Gilbert, servants to the ‘Laird’s Jock’ (probably Armstrong) in 1595, when accused of stealing cattle from England. Archibald (17th C.) resident at Barnes in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. David (14th C.) owner of lands in ‘Er mildon’ (i.e. somewhere around Aunton Fell) in Liddesdale according to a c.1376 rental roll. ‘Locus Danid Stodhirde’ is listed there with a value of 23 shillings and 4 pence. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) recorded in 1643 as ‘gudewife of Great law’ in Lilliesleaf Parish. Her lands there were valued at £104. She was presumably widow of the former owner of Greatlaws and may have been connected with the Riddell family. Gilbert ‘Gib’ (16th/17th C.) listed along with Archibald and John, servants to the ‘Laird’s Jock’ (probably Armstrong) in 1595, when accused of stealing cattle from England. James (17th C.) listed at Flex among ‘The poor in Hauick Paroch’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the John who married Grizzell Elliot and whose daughter Malie (b.1674) was baptised in Hawick Parish. James (19th C.) mason of Deanburnhaugh. He was one of the earliest Trustees of the Congregational (then Evangelical Union) Kirk. John (15th C.) recorded as ‘Joanne Stodhird’ in the 1447 sasine for the Cousinlands, purchased by Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. The witnesses are Scotts, except for the last 2, who are this man and Patrick Turnbull; it is possible that they were the Hawick Bailies at that time. John (16th C.) described as ‘Johnne Stoddart, cobilman to the lard of Langlands’ in 1576. This was in a pledge made for him (and George Elliot) to the Privy Council by Walter Scott of Goldielands, James Gledstains of Cocklaw and James Langlands of that Ilk. He was listed in 1578/9 among Borderers deemed to have continued in thieving and hence declared as fugitives. He was stated to have been ‘enterit’ and ‘deliverit in the sheref of Roxburch his handis’. Perhaps the same man (or else his son) was ‘Johnne Stoddart, cobileman at Ha wick’ when listed among those declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners’ court in Jedburgh in 1605. What happened to him is not recorded, but it seems likely he would have been hanged or fled the area. His existence shows that there was a man employed to ferry people across the Coble Pool from at least the latter part of the 16th century. John (16th/17th C.) listed along with Archibald and Gilbert, servants to the ‘Laird’s Jock’ (probably Armstrong) in 1595, when accused of stealing cattle from England. John (18th C.) recorded in ‘Borthwickburnfoot’ in 1764 and 1772 when 2 of his children were baptised in Roberton Parish. Probably the same John was father of Isabel (b.1764), Betty (b.1766), Mary (b.1768), Jean (b.1770) and Margaret (b.1772). Kenneth (1664— ) born in Hawick, he qualified as a music teacher then became a hairdresser and moved to Australia. He was awarded the title of ‘Australian Hairdresser of the Year’ in 2005 and has styled hair for stars such as Kylie Minogue, Jerry Hall and Nicole Kidman. Thomas (1828—1905) born in Roxburgh, he attended school in Hawick, being apprenticed as a joiner at 16. He joined the army at 20 and left for Australia in 1853. In the Ballarat area (near Melbourne) he worked as a miner, becoming a speculator and director of many mining companies. By 1880 he was a wealthy man, purchasing statues, and inspiring a local zeal that has led to Ballarat being called the ‘City of Statues’. His bust sits in the local Town Hall. He is recorded subscribing to Hawick Common Riding in the 1880s Walter (17th/18th C.) married Janet Redford in Ashkirk Parish in 1689. William (17th/18th C.) ‘casaer’ (i.e. road-layer) in Hawick. In 1719 he married Marion, daughter of Walter Gledstains. Their children included:

John (b.1723); Bessie (b.1725); Janet (b.1727); and Jean (b.1730). Robert (b.1720), with the mother’s name given as Agnes Gledstains, was probably also his son. William (19th C.) wool-sorter who was Cornet in 1873. He acted as Right-Hand man again in 1875, since the previous year’s Cornet was unable to attend. William ‘Willie’ (20th C.) mill worker in Hawick. He spent some time working in Canada as a teenager and served in WWI. In 1937 he became Hawick’s only Communist Town Councillor, but within a few months joined the Labour Party. He was involved in setting up the Hawick Workers’ Mill, which supplied woollen goods to anti-Fascist forces in Spain, as well as helping provide jobs for unemployed mill-workers in Hawick (formerly spelled ‘Stoddert’, ‘Stogether’ and other variants; also Stothart).

stog (stög) v., arch. to stab, pierce, jab — ‘I have stogd myself in the leg’ [HAST1922].

stoggit (stö-gee’,-gi’) pp., poet. stabbed, thrust — ‘Thou hest stoggeit sair t me, that I micht fa’…’[HSR].

Stoghill (stög-hil) n. former name for lands near Commonside in upper Teviodale. In 1591 these lands, along with Commonside, Northcroft and Hillend were already occupied by Gilbert Elliot when leased to him by Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. It is unclear if the name is a variant of something more familiar.

stoit (stoi’, stoit) n., poet. a clumsy person — ‘Auld stoit’, said Mrs. Blearie, sharp, Then quickly she calmed doon …’[WFC], arch. a bounce by a ball.

stoiter (stoi-tur) v., arch. to stagger, stumble — ‘The step may stoiter, the eyne be dim …’[WL], ‘...But byways for the likes o’ me Although the step may stoiter’[WL] (cf. the more common stotter).

Stonedge (sten-leej, stö-nej) n. farm west of Wolfelee above Hawahill, once part of one of the main estates of Hobkirk Parish, also formerly known as ‘Stanledge’. It was also once a barony in its own right. It is probably the seat of John ‘de Stonesleigh’ who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296 and is ‘de Stonesleigh’ in 1303/4 on an inquest for inheritance of the half barony of Wilton. The lands were bestowed on David Home of Wedderburn by Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus in 1464. It could be the ‘Stanleche’ in Ettrick Forest, whose ‘grassum’ was mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls of 1477 (although this could be confusion with Crown lands of the same name in Stirlingshire). James Turnbull was recorded there in 1590. Walter Scott was tenant there in about 1600. The size and ownership of parts of lands referred to as ‘Stonedge’ are complicated. The Earl of Angus sold off his superiority of these and other Rulewater lands to Sir William Cranston in 1605. The estate is recorded belonging to Hector Turnbull in at least 1603–09, part sold to Gibbie Elliott of Stobs in 1609 and part still owned by Andrew Turnbull in 1610. Andrew and Cuthbert ‘McDowall’ were there in 1616. It was sold by William, Earl of Lothian to Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers in 1647, but given back the following year. Then in 1651 it was sold by William, Lord Cranstoun to William Elliott of Stobs (tradition says that Cranston did this to secure them against being forfeited before his joined attempts to rescue Charles I). In 1671 the lands of Over and Nether Wolfelee, Stonedge, Uthank, Howa, Stewp, Hobburn and Little Gledstains were separated off from those of Stobs to become the new estate of Stonedge; this was disposed to Thomas, the eldest son of Sir Gilbert Elliot of Stobs with his 2nd wife Magdaline Nicolson, and when Thomas died it went to his brother Gilbert. In 1694 the residents were John Mair, elder, Agnes Scott, John Mair, younger and Robert Oliver. In 1718 the western part was sold to Adam Scott (tenant farmer at Wauchope), and passed to his brother William, who later purchased the eastern part and became the new Laird of Stonedge. Along with Howa, Scott’s part was valued at £565 12s, with Elliot of Stonedge holding lands at the same time that were valued at £676 14s 8d. In 1766 the eastern part was valued at £412 19s 6d, with the superiority liferented by Elliot of Borthwickbrae, while the western part was valued at £842 6s. Adam Scott’s son Thomas sold his lands to Robert Lisle. Part (including Unthank) was also sold to Elliot of Wolfelee. In about 1788 it was listed as being disjoined from the Stobs estate and valued at £1300 in total, Elliot of Wolfelee holding lands in Stonedge valued at £112 5s 7d, while Robert Lisle’s part was valued at £1187 14s 5d, and Cornelius Elliot of Wolfelee also owned small parts valued (along with Unthank) at £110 17s 2d. Lisle sold his lands in 1793 to James Chisholme before the previous purchase had really been completed. In 1811 it was listed as being owned by Robert Lisle and valued at about £1200. It passed through marriage to the Sincairs, being owned by Lord Sinclair by about 1874. Robert Grieve (who died in 1785) was tenant farmer there. James Stewart was shepherd there in 1797. Lands formerly in Stonedge (including Unthank) were listed among the properties of Cornelius Elliot of Woollee in 1811, valued at £112 5s 7d. The farm was tenanted by Thorburns through much of the 19th century and by the Barrie family into the 20th century. The original house was a strong tower situated on a rocky ledge, said to be surrounded by a very thick wall. All sign of this was already gone by the 19th century, although it is said that Mr. Bar-tie (who lived at Harden) picked up the old key to the peel and passed it on to the Marquis of Lothian. It was stated in the 19th century that there is a stone circle near here, in the direction towards Shankend, although if it existed it is now lost (many spelling variants exist in earlier documents, including ‘Steinleath’; it is ‘Stainletic’ in 1562, ‘Stenyleche’ in 1567, ‘Stonylyche’ and ‘Stoonylyche’ in 1590, ‘Stainliche’ and ‘Staine-loche’ in 1603, ‘Stanyledge’ in 1604, ‘Stanyledderg’ and ‘Stanyleddirig’ in 1606, ‘Stennylyche’ and ‘Staneledge’ in 1607, ‘Stainliche’ and ‘Stenletch’ in 1609, ‘Staneilge’ in 1611, ‘Stanyledderg’ in 1612 and 1615, ‘Stainledge’ in 1616, ‘Stanyledderg’ in 1647, ‘Stainledge’ in 1648, ‘Stenyledderg’ in 1677, ‘Stennilodge’ in 1682, ‘Stenniledge’ in 1692, ‘Stennilge’ in 1694, ‘Staneildedge’ in 1704 and ‘Standildidge’ in 1748; it is marked as ‘Stennaleuch’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; note that the l has persisted in the local pronunciation despite the official spelling, and that the pronunciation is never stän- ; the meaning is probably ‘stane leche’, meaning ‘stony stream’).

Stonedge (sten-lej, støj-nej) n. John (13th/14th C.) recorded as being ‘de Stonesleghe’ when he signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296.
Although his name has also been transcribed
as ‘Scoumeseleghe’, the more modern transcription makes the connection with the lands in Hobirk Parish clear. His seal bore a ‘cabossed’ stag’s head with a cross between the antlers and the name ‘S’ . OHIS DE STYKSY’?; William of Yetholm had a similar seal. He is ‘de Stomesleghe’ in 1303/4 on an inquest for inheritance of the half barony of Wilton.

Stonedge Hill (støj-nej-hil) n. hill lying to the south-west of Stonedge farm, reaching a height of 369 m. On its western side is a linear earthwork, some 330 m in length, probably an agricultural boundary, now obscured by the forestry plantation. Near the top of the hill there was previously a cairn, probably quite ancient, but now obliterated by forestry ploughing.

stooden (sto-din) pp. stood – ‘A got stooden on be a muckle cairt horse’ (cf. the older stuiden;
this is the past participle of stan or ‘stand’, with the past tense being stuid or ‘stood’).

stook (stook) n. a shock of cut sheaves, often placed upright to dry, a haystack – ‘18 Ma. they sher out the coufald and ther was 21 thref and a stuk and 5 chifs’[1690/HAST1905], ‘. . . some of

lichtens the stooks an’ the stan’in corn . . . ’[FGS],
v. to set up sheaves – ‘. . . Or prank among the stook-ed corn, Till day was on the turn’[WFC].

stokie (sto-kee) n. stucco, plaster of Paris,
also used in analogy with a plaster statue to mean someone who feels foolish and out of place – ‘oo felt like a right couple o stookies’, ‘Muckle stookies’ with red cheeks and a pronounced ‘country loup’[BB].

the Store (thu-stor) n. Hawick Cooperative Store, which opened in 1839 as ‘the Chartist Store’ with a small shop in Silver Street. It grew into a set of around half a dozen general stores, 5 butchers, a baker’s shop (from 1851), shoe shop (1859), coal branch (1865), drapery (1873), carting (1874), van service to the country (1884) and penny savings bank (1887). The firm also ran its own stocking-makers at the old Tabernacle building in the years 1874–81. The stableywards and dairy were built on Orchard Terrace in 1891 (designed by J.P. Allison). The main shop, usually the one referred to as ‘the Store’, stretched from Tannage Close to Baker Street and from the High Street to Teviot Crescent. It contained many departments, including clothing, electrical, shoes, furniture, toys, ladies hairdressing and a tea room. This main building was constructed in 1885 at 65, 67, 69 and 71 High Street, with the surviving upper level frontage at 65–67 designed by local architect Michael Brodie in a French Renaissance style; this is a category B listed building. This was Hawick’s biggest department store, with smaller shops elsewhere in town. Shoppers collected stamps that could be redeemed for goods, and departments within the ‘Store’ communicated via characteristic pneumatic tubes. The main shop closed in 1987, with the property sold off to several developers. The Co-op at Burnfoot remains, however. A historye was published in 1889 – ‘There er peis, peis, Thit come up ti yer kneis, In the Store, in the Store, There are peis, peis, Thit come up ti yer kneis, In the Hawick Co-operative Store!’ [T], ‘. . . waitin

the Store Dairy (thu-stor-dah-ree) n. building and yard on Orchard Terrace and Elm Grove, constructed for use by Hawick Cooperative Society. It was built in 1891, designed by ??, and used to run the Store’s dairy operations through most of the 20th century. The buildings were converted into Elm Court housing.

the Store Field (thu-stor-field) n. field once grazed by the Hawick Co-op cows, situated behind Wester Braids Road, near the Miller’s Knowes. The Co-op employees used to organise an annual sports day and picnic there, as a sort of forerunner to the Vertish Hill Sports – ‘The picnic up at the Store Field The whole o’ Hawick was there’ [AY].

the Store van (thu-stör-vawn) n. van that used to sell grocery items around the town. The vans started as a country delivery service in 1884 and continued into the latter part of the 20th century – ‘. . . wi’ a biscuit in my hand Fresh frae the lang mysterious spicy drawer O’ the Store van’ [DH].

Other people who were not entered by the Sheriff were fairly local (but she is one of the only women). James (16th C.) holder of a particate of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. He may have been related to William. James (16th C.) servant of Gavin Elliott of Stobs and Jean Scott. In 1573 he was placed on their recently purchased 6 merk land of Chamberlain Newton. However, he was attacked by Walter and John Scott (sons of Margaret Turnbull, who was widow of David Elliot in Chamberlain Newton), who possessed the other half of the farm. They ‘crewellie sett upoun him, hurt and voundit him in sindrie partis of his body, and left him for deid; of the quhilkis hurt as yit he is in danger of his lyfe’. It is unknown whether or not he survived.

James (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton. He may be the James ‘in Spittle’ whose will was recorded in 1681 (if he made a testament long before he died), or else they were father and son. Either he or a near relative was probably the ‘Laird Storie’ whose lands in Ruecastle in Bedrule Parish were valued at £18 in 1643, 1663 and 1678. James (d.bef. 1741) from Ancrum Parish. In 1718 he married Jean Bennet, who was from Bedrule Parish. In 1741 his widow gave money to the poor in Ancrum Parish, owing from her husband. James (19th C.) local man known for his poetry. He competed in the ‘Auld Brig’ competition and published ‘Poems on several subjects’ (1837). He was said to be a repository of local stories relating to the Covenanters. He could be the labourer, born at Southdean in about 1780, who was recorded at about 71 High Street in 1841 and on Brougham Place in 1851. John (15th C.) received a boll of victuals in the will of Sir David Scott of Brauxholme in 1491/2. He is listed as ‘Johanni Storis’.

John (16th C.) recorded as ‘John Story’ on a list of tenants of Newton in Bedrule in 1531. John (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Roughlee in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. He is listed along with Robert, to whom he was surely related. John (17th C.) tenantin ‘Roods’ (or ‘Rodes’) in Southdean Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. John (17th C.) resident at ‘Harden anna’ when his daughter Helen was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1762. He may also be the John, married to Marion Borthwick, whose son John was born in 1757. John (18th/19th C.) gardener in Hawick. He was already deceased in 1815 when his wife Isabel Watson died. John (19th C.) married Margaret Hobkirk in Hawick Parish in 1849. Patrick (16th/17th C.) tenant in ‘Rowll Spittell’ (i.e. Spittal-on-Rule). In 1605 Robert Scott of Thirlestane was caution for Walter Scott of Dykes in a bond not to harm him. Robert (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Roughlee in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. John was also tenant there and so presumably related. Robert (17th C.) resident of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Robert (b.c.1805) joiner at Brauxholme.

Stouslie (stooz-lee) n. farm and cottages out beyond Stirches, reached by the left hand road at the ‘Power Road Ends’. The Lindsays held these lands as Barons of Chamberlain Newton from the time of David II (late 14th century). There were

Turnbells here in the late 1400s, when the lands were a Lairdship. Thomas ‘Trumbul’ of Stouslie was witness to a sasine in 1488. George Turnbull was recorded there in 1493 and Walter Turnbull in 1494/5. In 1494/5 Thomas and Adam Grahamswal from Newton ‘came in the King’s will’ for stealing 60 sheep from here; these belonged to Walter Scott of Howpasley and Walter Turnbull of Stouslie, but were also said to pertain to the King. There were Scotts living here in the 1500s. In the 16th century it was still part of the Barony of Chamberlain Newton, with superior being the Earls of Bothwell and then the Lords of Home. Scott of Satchells lists ‘John Scott in Stowsley’ as one of the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch. In 1643 it was valued at £67 3s 4d, along with Boonraw (‘but disjoined’) and recorded as ‘Stowlie [probably a transcription error for ‘Stouzie’], or Stouslie, formerly in Hassendean Parish’. It was part of the estates of the Duchess of Buccleuch by the end of the 17th century. Mary Gledstains was liferenter of this farm and another (probably Boonraw) in 1643; she was probably widow of George Scott of Boonraw. Archibald Scott was liferenter there in about 1663, when he paid tax on £91 for the land. In 1678 George Scott paid land tax on £291 for these lands, along with Boonraw. It was leased by George Scott of Boonraw and continued by his heirs in 1692. In 1690 the lands became part of Wilton Parish when Hassendean was suppressed. David Gray was recorded there in 1694. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, when it consisted of 101 acres, bounded by Boonraw, Heap, Wilton Common and Coldhouse. William Stewart was recorded there in 1770. By 1788 it had been disjoined from Boonraw and was valued at £67 3s 4d. William Stewart was recorded there in 1770. The Cala Burn was the western boundary of the farm, with the farmhouse on the burns eastern side. One of the cottages was formerly a school administered by Wilton Parish. Stow

Stow (stow) n. town on the Gala Water, near the Moorfoot Hills, in the old county of Midlothian, and now in the Scottish Borders region. It is roughly half-way between Hawick and Edinburgh, and was a station on the Waverley Line. The road to Edinburgh via Stow (later the A7) was only opened in 1818, after which it has become well-known to all Teries. The settlement was once known as ‘Stow of Wedale’. Formerly one of Scotland’s original seats of sanctuary, it was also the Bishop of St. Andrews summer residence. The ruined Old Kirk (late 15th century, having been repaired in the 17th century) replaced an older church of 1242 and an even older one allegedly built by King Arthur, and holding a piece of the ‘true cross’. An ancient brooch, Bow Castle and the 1654-55 Pack-horse Bridge are nearby. The town probably achieved burgh status in 1699. Population (1991) 528 { `Syne, up on the doun, wi’ a thankfu’ sigh, That its wark was gey winna come’ [LHTB], `She stole my heart, she stayed there until his death. He was described as having `integrity of principle, uprightness of mind, straightforwardness of purpose . . . and an uncompromising detestation of everything mean and dishonourable’ and his sermons were said to be particularly well-conceived, strong and elegant. He was a shopkeeper on the Crescent, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was a handloom weaver, living at about 13 Slitrig Crescent with his wife Jane. In 1851 he was on the Kirkgate with his niece Elizabeth and a lodger. Rev. James (1783–1840) son of William, minister of Coulter, was educated at Edinburgh University and licensed by the Presbytery of Biggar in 1805. He was assistant to Thomas Elliot of Cavers at some point and was himself presented as minister by George Douglas of Cavers in early 1809. He stayed there until his death. He was described as having `integrity of principle, uprightness of mind, straightforwardness of purpose . . . and an uncompromising detestation of everything mean and dishonourable’ and his sermons were said to be particularly well-conceived, strong and elegant. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Jane Brown, daughter of the minister of Crailing. Their children were: William (1820-97), in H.M. Stationary Office; Janet Dawson (1821–1837); David (b.1823); a daughter who died young; James (b.1831), an army officer; Elizabeth Howison (b.1833); and Robert (b.1835). He wrote a description of the Parish of Cavers in 1839 (finished off by Henry Scott Riddell) for the New Statistical Account. 2 sermons preached on his death by David Stevenson, minister of Wilton, were published in 1840. Rev. James A. minister of Southleith (linked with Hobkirk) 1983-88 (also written ‘Strachon’).

very difficult in the early days of industry in Hawick. The first 1-day strike was in 1817, with workers coming out against John Scott. This and was followed by the ‘Lang Stand Oot’ later in that year, lasting several months. The unions were successful on that occasion and again in 1822, when employers were fined for reducing wages.
The Hawick Framework Knitters Association was the first legal labour group, formed in 1840. The practice of charging employees rental for frames was stopped in 1871, and there was a gruelling 12 week strike over conditions in 1872/73. Strike action continued through the 20th century, as the hosiery, tweed and knitwear industries went through ups and downs. The most bitter strike

Struthers (stru-thurz) n. Alan (14th C.) from the Northumberland family, he became Lord of Lyham through marriage. He was Sheriff of Roxburgh in 1368. The lands he held included the Hawick in Northumberland. In about 1370 he was ‘Alano de le Strother’ when he witnessed a grant by John Neville of lands in Lessuden to Melrose Abbey. His children included Alan (contemporary of Chaucer at Cambridge), Henry, William (married a daughter of the Mayor of Newcastle) and Joan. Sir Thomas (d.1395) probably son of Henry, who was Sheriff of Northumberland. He was likely to be the Sir Thomas ‘of Strother’ whose charters are included in the collection of David Laing (although that does not match with a death in 1395). He was appointed custodian of Jedburgh Castle in 1394. He was reputedly an English champion, who was marauding around the Scottish Borders, bragging that he would take on any Scotsman. The challenge was met by Sir William Inglis (then of Branxholme) at Rulehaugh, witnessed by Archibald, Earl of Douglas and Henry Percy, Earl of Northumberland. Struthers was killed in single combat it is said.

Other accounts describe how Inglis’ force had attempted to breach the Castle walls and after being repelled when the English soldiers returned from the town, he challenged Inglis to single combat for breaking the truce (also written ‘Strother’ etc.).

Strynds (strin-dz) n. former lands in the Rule valley, near Westerhouses, later known as ‘Strange’. This was home of a prominent branch of the Oliver family in the late 15th and early 16th centuries. Robert Oliver from there, along with 7 other Oliviers and a Shiel, had remission in 1494/5 for the crime of communing with the English. Several members of the same family had remission for thefts and other crimes in 1502 in a number of cases. Later in 1502 4 Oliviers from here where all found guilty of rieving crimes and probably hanged. This branch was said to never have been heard of again, although it was said to be related to the later Oliviers of Lustruther. The lands were valued along with Westerhouses at £6 5s, according to the Exchequer Rolls in 1538 (and the comptroller was allowed the ‘fermes’ from there for that year), as well as 1539. Edward Oliver was there in 1541 and there were still Oliviers there in the late 17th century (also ‘the Strynds’; it is written ‘le stryndis’ in 1494/5, ‘Strydis’ and ‘Stryndes’ in 1502, ‘Sryndis’ and ‘Srydis’ in 1538 and ‘Stridis’ in 1539; the origin is probably the Old Scots word for rivulets; see also Strange).

St. Stephen’s Chaipel (sin’-stee-vinz-chiipul) n. Roman Catholic Chapel built in 1962 on Burnfoot Road (at the corner with Fairhurst Drive) to serve the Burnfoot area. The building has a novel triangular design with a high slender spire. In 1986 it was closed as a chapel, declared surplus to requirements and in 1988 sold by the Archdiocese to the Abundant Life Church.

the Subscription Academy (thu-sub-skrip-shin-aw-ka-du-mee) n. another name for Hawick Academy. There was a school run out of the Subscription Rooms from about 1830, sometimes referred to as the Subscription School. It was renamed ‘the Subscription Academy’ in 1857 when J.A.H. Murray was invited to be headmaster (at age 17l). Not long after the school moved along Buccleuch Street to the former Quaker meeting house, and was then called ‘Hawick Academy’. It ran until 1865, after Murray had left for London. The ‘Subscription School’ meanwhile carried on with James C. Mudie as headmaster. Sometimes called ‘Hawick High School’, this ran until about 1874, when Mudie left town. Meanwhile Mudie’s assistant, James Brand, had left to start his own school in Union Street, which eventually became the senior part of the High School (the confusion and inter-connection between the several Buccleuch Street schools makes some accounts very muddled!).
the Subscription Schuil

the Subscription Rooms (thu-sub-skip-shin-roomz) n. building erected on Buccleuch Street in 1821 from public subscriptions, and used as an institute for the arts, as a library and as a public meeting place. The location is shown on Wood’s 1824 map. The foundation stone was laid with full Masonic honours, with a speech by Robert ‘Lurgie’ Wilson and a special verse by James Ruickbie. For the next few decades it was a popular venue for lectures, ‘magic lantern’ shows, concerts and related social gatherings. It was also used as the location for a private Academy, taught by Mr. Fleming 1837–40. Later it was rented to the Commercial Inn, although the main hall continued to be used for concerts etc. About 1864 it was sold to Mr. Mudie, who used it to run his private school, called ‘Hawick High School’, which was later taught by Mr. Brand, who moved to Union Street. It was also used for a while as the premises for the ‘West-end Academy’, taught by Mr. Brodie. In the 1890s it was purchased by James Bonsor’s hosiery mill who used it until the 1920s. It was then purchased by Mr. Brodie. In the 1890s it was purchased by James Bonsor’s hosiery mill who used it until the 1920s. It was then purchased by the Catholic church and converted (largely through voluntary work) to become the Halls for S.S. Mary & David’s Chapel next door. Until only a few years ago it had a frontage ornamented with a portico supported by 4 Grecian pillars. It was renovated in the early years of the 21st century and saw temporary use again as a school in 2006, housing pupils following the fire in Denholm – ‘This house a public building is design’d To gratify the curious mind: Subservient to the parson and the player, By turns a theatre, and a house of prayer’ [JR].

Sundhope (sun-dup) n. former farmstead on the Sundhope Burn, above Whitropefoot. It was valued at 8 merks according to a rental roll of c.1376 and still 8 merks on the 1541 roll, when ‘Leoni Elwald’ and his brothers were tenants. The farm was owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch from at least 1613. Robert ‘Houiton’ and Adam ‘Houitone’ are listed there in 1694, as well as George Nichol. It was surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718, when it extended to 1654 acres, bounded by Stitchelhill, Millburnholm and lands held by the Laird of Gorrenberry and others. At that time the farmhouse is shown in the same position as the modern one. It was tenanted by the Grieves of Branholme Park for several generations. Robert Elliot was tenant in 1748 and Robert Hutton also lived there. John Anderson was farmer there in 1785. James Jackson was shepherd there in 1797, James Elliot in the early 1800s, Walter Anderson in 1835 and Andrew Rodger in 1851. It was held by James Raymond Johnstone of Alva in 1802, when valued at about £500 (including Hollandrig and ‘Sandbed of Sundhope’. There are waterfalls on the burn there. 5 flints found nearby are in Hawick Museum. North of the farmstead, towards Sundhope Rig, there is a linear earthwork, about 130 m long — ‘Whut’rope and Sundhope They ken the soond weel; It’s nae news to thaim That he troks wi the deil!’ [DH] (it first appears as ‘Sondayhopp’ in c.1376, is ‘Sondhope’ in 1510, ‘Sandhop’ in 1516, ‘Soundhop’ in 1541 and ‘Soundhope’ in 1613; the stream is marked ‘Soundhoupp’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, and the farm is ‘Sandhope’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).
about 1456, with the lease to the Laird of Almoor being given up in 1488, when it was let to ‘Robert domino Lile’ in 1488. Then it was let half to William Murray and half to Roger Murray from at least 1490 until 1499. In 1493 Alexander, brother of Robert Scott of Whames, was accused of stealing livestock from there, and John Waugh also stole a large number of sheep from the Murrays. In 1494/5 Robert Turnbull in Castlehill (near Branxholme) was charged with stealing 15 score sheep from the Murrays there. It remained Crown property until at least 1502. In 1512 it was feued to Gavin Murray. In 1541 William Scott was tenant there, paying £14, while William and James Murray also appear to have occupied it, paying £24. There were Andersons and Laidlaws there in the 19th century. It was said to be the site of the slaying of Scott of Harden’s younger son, Scott of Gilmanskleck – ‘But, low, low down, on Sundhop broom. My brother Harden spyd; And, with a stern and furious look, He up to him did ride’ [ES]; ‘Ere all is done, our blood may soak Our Scottish houms, and leave a stain – A stain like that on Sundup’s cloak, Which never will wash out again’ [ES] (it is ‘Sundhop’ in 1456 and 1468, ‘Sondhoip’ in 1490, ‘Sundhop’ in 1496, ‘Sondhop’ and ‘Sondhoip’ in 1499 and ‘Soundhope’ in 1541).

Sundhope Burn (sun-dup-burn) n. stream in Castleton Parish. It rises on Sundhope Rig and Greatmoor and flows roughly southwards to join the Whitrope Burn near Whitropefoot.

Sundhope Faas (sun-dup-fawz) n. waterfall on the Sundhope Burn, near where it meets the Whitrope Burn on the Newcastleton road, about 12 miles south of Hawick. It has been a favourite picnic spot. It is also known as the Laird’s Linn.

Sundi (sun-di) n. Sunday. Formerly there were strict rules about what behaviour was deemed suitable for the Sabbath. Work of any sort was banned, and there are fines frequently recorded in the parish records for transactions such as pulling vegetables. Certainly non-attendance at church was considered disreputable until fairly recent times, and regular non-attendance was a serious matter in the 18th century. Up until the mid-19th century even walking on Sundays was considered an offence (also spelled ‘Sundih’ etc.).

Sundials (sun-dl-ulz) n., pl. devices that use the shadow of a gnomon, cast by the Sun, to tell the time of day. These were common ornamentation on buildings or in gardens around the 17th and 18th centuries. The Museum has 3 local specimens, which have been saved from demolitions, labelled: ‘17 WK 48’; ‘1823’, from Dickson Street; and ‘BC BT 1756’. There was also one from Francis Gledstains of Whitlaw, dated 1693. In addition there are (or were) sundials at Harden, Liliesleaf Kirk, Synton Parkhead, Weens, Wells and Yarrow Kirk.

Sundi-mense (sun-di-mens) n., arch. ‘ti gie yin’s claes Sundi-mense’ is to attend church in one’s new clothes on the first Sunday after one gets them (also kirk-mense).

Sundi Schuil (sun-di-skil) n. Sunday School, i.e. religious instruction for school children taking place on Sundays. Hawick already had 2 such institutions in 1786 and was among the first to establish them in Scotland. The first was probably introduced by Rev. Charters of Wilton, followed shortly afterwards by Rev. Sharp of Hawick (however, it is sometimes also stated that William Crawford of Wilton introduced the first Sunday School in the 1730s). Around 1817 the town became well-known in the Borders for very popular Sunday Schools, which had been set up by Rev. James Henderson of the East-End Burgher congregation. David Russell of the Relief Kirk also set one up at about the same time. These early examples often lasted for many hours, but were about the only chance to learn reading, which many local children benefited from. Henderson’s Sunday School is sometimes said to have been the first in Scotland, and although this is clearly not correct, it may have been an early example of an ambitious educational programme on Sundays (rather than a shorter event aimed at children). Sunday Schools have continued in most of the town’s churches down to the present time – ‘Sunday Schule picnics then Horse and cairt ti Harden Glen ...’ [IWL].

sune see sin

sung (sung) adj., pp., arch. singed – ‘...Brunt broun in the sun and near sung’ [WL].

Sun Hope (sun-höp) n. small stream that rises on Sunhope Hass, Bye Hill and Little Tudhope Hill on the Roxburghshire border with Dumfriesshire and forms some of the headwaters of the Frostlie Burn.

Sunlaws (sun-lawz) n. settlement on the Teviot south of Kelso, containing the Jacobean-style mansion called Sunlaws House Hotel (or Roxburghie Hotel), with adjacent golf course, an abandoned Mill and nearby caves. As part of the English invasion of 1544 there was ‘a town called Synlawes, whereat divers bastel houses were destroyed, eight Scots taken, and 60 oxen brought away’, with at least 6 men killed in attempting to pursue the raiders. The estate of Sunlaws was home of the Kerrs of Chatto and Sunlaws. The house burned down in 1720 (the origin is probably ‘the look-out hill’; it is ‘Sullaes’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map).

sunlicht (sun-light) n., arch. sunlight – ‘Sunlicht at last, and the dancin’ day, and a quick eyed lass to see’ [JYH], ‘Oh, laddie! when sunlicht Is over your young way, Fu’ bright wi’ sweet promise O’ manhood’s fair day’ [MNR], ‘...Wi’ rowth o’ callants in her train And sunlicht in her hair’ [WL].

Sunnybank (su-nee-bawngk) n. cottage in Wilton Parish, just north of Tandlaw. Walter Blake, thatcher, lived there in 1841, as well as farm worker Richard Turnbull and his family. Henry Paterson was there in 1851 and William Scott in 1861.

Sunnyhill (su-nee-hil) n. area between Wilton and the Dean, consisting of Sunnyhill Road and surrounding region, containing mainly larger houses. The name was earlier also applied to the Rosacle Brae area. It was named apparently for its aspect with respect to the Sun. The area was feued in the latter part of the 19th century under the supervision of John Guthrie. Langlands was the first house about 1878, followed quickly by Deanfield, Kilmeny and Westwood – ‘Here the tree-clad slopes rise upward From the water’s sparkling rill, Where clematis and laburnum Deck the homes on Sunnyhill’ [WL], ‘...in the days afore the nouveau riche manufacturers became upwardly mobile in mair ways than yin and built their mansions on Sunnyhill’ [IWL].

Surrey (su-ree) n. name often used for Thomas Howard, Earl of Surrey (1473–1554) English nobleman who fought at Flodden and was later made Duke of Norfolk. After his victory, and knowing that the Borders forces had been devastated, he split up his troops to carry out raids, with Lord Dacre plundering and killing across Teviotdale. In a bizarre coincidence, at Queen Victoria’s Diamond Jubilee in London, the Hawick Volunteers were met by the Surrey Rifles, whose headquarters was in Flodden Road! – ‘After Flodden was decided, Surrey half his troops divided’ [JH], ‘When the spirit, bruised and bleeding From the shock of Surrey’s blow ... ’[TK] (note that the force that devastated Teviotdale in 1570 is sometimes erroneously connected with ‘Surrey’, while in fact it was led by ‘Sussex’).

surron-din (su-roon-din) adj. surrounding – ‘The Great War of 1914 ti 1918 claimed the lives o gettin on for a thousand men frae Hawick and the immediately surroundin district’ [IWL], ‘The lingering Teviot is silent and sad and it’s communicted its grief ti the surroundin Borderland’ [IWL].

Sutter (su’-ur) n. William (17th/18th C.) ‘packman traveller’ recorded in Hawick in 1707. He was rebuked for being in the house of Richard Lethem at the time of Sunday serice, ‘with one pair of leather breaches and some harness under his oukster’.

Suttie (su-tee, su’-ee) n. Dr. Alastair (1938–2001) born in Enniskillen, he grew up in Moray, where his father was a vet. He qualified in Medicine at Aberdeen University in 1961. He came to Hawick after holding various posts in the north of Scotland. He joined Bill Cameron as a general practitioner in 1964, and remained in practice in Hawick until he retired in 1998. During that time he ran a training practice, and helped to develop the Health Centre. He wrote the ‘History of Haig Maternity Hospital’ (1999) and made a photographic study of bridges over the Teviot. Married to Gillian, their daughter Alison worked for the Liberal Democratic Party.

Alison Mary (1968–) daughter of Dr. Alastair, she attended Hawick High School, and then read French and Russian at Heriot-Watt University. After graduation she worked in Russia and then for the European Parliament. In the period 2006–10 she was Head of the Liberal Democrat Leader’s Office and was the party’s Campaign Manager in 2010, as well as being coordinator of their negotiating team after the 2010 election results produced a hung parliament. She then became a Special Adviser to Deputy Prime Minister Nick Clegg. In 2013 she created a life peer as Baroness Suttie of Hawick. Euphemia see Eppy Sootie.

Swamp Field (swawnp-feeld) n. name for the field on the Common just to the south of the racecourse.

Swan (swawn) n. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) listed as merchant among those contributing to the new Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. She was also on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. She seems likely to have been a shopkeeper (or similar) on the High Street. She could be the daughter of George and Margaret Bridges born in Hawick in 1642 or the daughter of Mungo and Helen Bridges born in 1672. George (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Margaret Bridges. Their son John was born in 1643. George (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Rebecca Scott. Their children included: Jean (b.1735); John (b.1737); and Rebecca (b.1741), who was the 2nd wife of Bailie John Hardie. The witnesses in 1737 were merchant James Sanderson and writer Thomas Watson. In 1764 he witnessed a baptism for John Hardie and his daughter Rebecca. Isabel (b.c.1760) listed as a shopkeeper in Pigot’s 1837 directory. By 1841 she was a pauper, living around Eastgate. James (19th C.) grocer and spirit merchant at 29 (later 27) High Street. He emigrated with his family to Detroit, where his son Andrew was involved with the Detroit Gas Company and his son James was a successful lawyer. John (16th C.) listed in 1534 when he was a witness at Hassendean Kirk for the sealing of a letter of reversion when Gavin Elliot sold the lands of Nether Galalaw to William Scott. It is unclear if he was from Hawick, Hassendean or Selkirk (in whose Protocol Books the record appeared). John (17th C.) married to Margaret Scott. Their children born in Hawick Parish included: Jane (b.1676); Mungo (b.1682); and Helen (b.1685). In 1676 he was listed being ‘in Cavers’ (suggesting he lived in the Teviothead area perhaps), with witnesses William and Mungo (who were surely close relatives). John (17th C.) listed as ‘Elder’ in 1694 among those ‘eust the water’ in Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls. The younger John was also listed, suggesting that they were father and son. The pair were also weavers ‘younger’ and ‘elder’ recorded among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. John ‘Nuckle’ (18th C.) Hawick weaver on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He must have been separate from the elder and younger weavers who were also listed. It is unclear what his nickname meant. John (17th/18th C.) quartermaster of the Hawick weavers. In 1697 there was a case before the Magistrates dealing with Robert Tinlin, a young weaver, who had insulted him publicly, and refused to pay a fine imposed by the incorporation of weavers. He was still quartermaster in 1716 (along with the same Robert Tinlin) when he and other complained about people who were not part of the incorporated trades taking their seats in St. Mary’s Kirk. He may be the ‘John Suan younger’ listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax and the ‘younger’ weaver listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was probably the weaver who witnessed baptisms for workman Archibald Elliot and shoemaker William Halliwell in 1704, and another for shoemaker Adam Kersel in 1725. He was one of the ‘two John Swans’ (possibly ‘Black John’ and ‘White John’ or father and son) who was a Hawick elder recorded as one of the men asked in 1711 to ‘perlustrate’ the town to look for people still drinking after 8 ‘clock at night. In 1718 he (or the other John) was among those charged by the Session with trying to resolve the dispute between Bailies Ruecastle and Graham. There was a John Swan whose son John was born in Hawick in 1693 and another in 1696. John ‘Black John’ (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, with a nickname to distinguish him from ‘White John’. One of them was probably the quartermaster of the weavers. His children included: Mary (b.1700); George (b.1702); Mary (b.1703); Jean (b.1704); Anna (b.1706); and Elspeth (b.1707). In 1704 he was entered in the baptismal register as ‘distinctionis causa called black John’; the witnesses were James Scott ‘Doctor’ and John Scott ‘Laird’. John ‘White John’ (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. His children included: Mungo (b.1701); and Mary (b.1703). This suggests that he may have been son of Mungo. Mungo (17th C.) Hawick resident who married Helen Briggs. In 1665 (although this date may be an error, e.g. for 1685) his son-in-law, Thomas Turnbull, was accused of throwing his wife (Helen) down some stairs when she attempted to...

visit her sick daughter. The families are probably inter-related through George and Margaret ‘Bridges’ who are recorded having children in the 1640s. His children included: Helen (b.1657); and Bessie (b.1672). He was probably the Mungo who witnessed a baptism for John (who could have been his brother) in 1676. He is probably the weaver who witnessed a baptism for weaver John Lunn in 1701. Richard (15th C.) witness to a ten `Swain’ and he could be the William, son of William, born in Hawick in 1683. He is probably the weaver who witnessed a baptism for weaver John Lunn in 1701. Richard (15th C.) witness to a ten `Swain’ and he could be the William, son of William, born in Hawick in 1683. He may be the William whose son William was born in Hawick in 1703. He is probably the weaver of the same name. William (17th C.) weaver in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He must be different from the William whose widow is also recorded on the same list, and cannot be the William born in 1683. He may be the William whose son William was born in Hawick in 1703. He is probably the weaver of that name who was a member of the Council when it granted a bond (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. William (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He is recorded in the records of the Presbytery of Melrose in 1726 when Christian Bunzie confessed that she had ‘seen him playing at the kails in her father’s garden’. He was ‘a single, unmarried man, landlord of the house wherein Henry Gibson’s relict lives’. His name is written ‘Swain’ and he could be the William, son of William, born in Hawick in 1683. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton. His wife was Janet Swan and their children included Jean (b.1806) and Samuel (b.1808), baptised at Liddelbank (written ‘Suan’, ‘Suane’ and variants).

the Swan (thu-swawn) n. former hostelry on Main Street in Denholm. It is recorded in 1852, when Thomas Field was proprietor. A meeting of 100 Total Abstinence supporters took place there the same year ‘in Mr. Field’s large room’.

My father said swankies was a modern word and not a good one’ [JEM].

Swanscourt Hill (swanz-kor-hil) n. small hill to the north of the farm of Knowetownhead. It reaches a height of 139 m (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map.

Swansdale (swanz-dal) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded as ‘Swansdale’ in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. It was valued at 12 shillings and tenanted by Jeffrey Crozier. The location is uncertain, but perhaps around Larriston.

Swanshiel (swan-sheel) n. farm just to the west of Hobkirk, situated on the north side of the Blackhall Burn. The farmhouse now called Nether Swanshiel. The lands were formerly split into Easter and Wester Swanshies, which were recorded as once owned by the monks of Jedburgh Abbey. At the Reformation the lands were valued at £1 6s. 8d. The Abbey’s tenants were Turnbulls, who later became owners of the lands. Robert Turnbull is recorded as tenant in 1567 and James Turnbull in 1580. In 1643 Adam Turnbull ‘in Swansheil’ owned land valued at £66 13s 4d, and another (or the same) Adam Turnbull ‘of Swanshiel’ had lands valued at £32 10s. In 1678 the Easter and Wester parts were valued at £66 13s 4d and £33 6s 8d, respectively. The lands (or perhaps just superiority) were among those inherited by William Kerr of Abbotrule in 1680. Wester Swanshiel was owned (along with Hartshaugh earlier) by the same branch of the Swanshiel Cleuch

Turnbull family for about 300 years until 1778. John Donaldson was tenant in 1797. Earthworks from some ancient settlement were still visible a century ago. There was also once a joiner’s shop there (it was ‘Swanscheill’ in 1567, appears as ‘Sironscheill’ in 1581, was ‘Swoonshield’ in 1604, ‘Swansheil’ in 1643, ‘Swan-sheil’ in 1684 and ‘Swanhill’ on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls; it is marked ‘Suamesheells’ on B hope’s 1654 map, but has the modern spelling by Stobie’s 1770 map; Walter Deans says that it was formerly ‘Suin Shiel.’ and ‘Soneshiells’ and suggests it meant the land facing the Sun, however ‘swain schein’, meaning ‘herdsman’s hut’ is more likely).

Swanshiel Cleuch (swan-sheel-klooch) n. name for the steep lower section of the Blackhall Burn, to the south-west of Hobkirk Manse.

Swanson (swan-sin) n. James (18th C.) said to be from Wilton Dean, he was a waiter at the Tower Hotel. He was on the subscription list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Musum’ in 1784. He is recorded there in 1785, working for Michael Stevenson, and named again in 1788. In 1790 he was working as a ‘drawer’ for vintner Robert Armstrong and was recorded as a waiter for Robert Armstrong in 1797. He was apparently very familiar with the customers of the hotel, of all ranks. One of his favourite phrases was ‘Stick by cauld whisky, but never drink toddy, when ye’re gaun a journey’. It is said that he was at some point dismissed by Armstrong, but reappointed after the Duke of Buccleuch interceded on his behalf. He had several children including: James, who became a ship’s surgeon; and a daughter, who married weaver Tom Lunn. His wife Jane died in 1795. James (1779/80–1803) son of James, who was a waiter at the Tower Hotel. He was apprenticed to Dr. Walter Graham in Hawick. In 1797 he was experimenting with concoctions and left a bowl on the window-sill, which was drunk by his niece, who unfortunately died. He left Hawick in 1798 to be a surgeon on a slave ship, sailing on 3 voyages. In 1802 or 1803 he was given command of ‘the Prudence’, which sailed to the Upper Guinea coast, returning to Liverpool with half his crew, a number of slaves, and also Tom Jenkins, who he brought to Hawick after a few weeks. It is said that attempts by the young African to say his (Swanson’s) name sounded to the sailors like ‘Tom Jenkins’, which was then what they called him. He died in the Tower Hotel a few days after returning to Hawick, perhaps either from a lingering disease or from delirium tremens. He died at the age of 23 (coincidentally the day before Sir Walter Scott and the Wordsworths stayed in the Tower Hotel). He left behind an illegitimate son, who is probably the James, born to James and Betty Cairns in Hawick in 1797 (she may have been the Betty born in Wilton to Thomas Cairns in 1779). Note that a version of his life is told as part of the novel ‘Alexander Hope: A Hawick Story’; this fictionalised accounts bears only passing resemblance to reality, but perhaps the part about him being found wandering round and round in a field and then collapsing may be true. James (1797–1856) son of James and Betty Cairns. His father trained as a surgeon and became Captain of a slaving ship, returning to Hawick with Tom Jenkins, but promptly dying. He and Tom were raised by his father’s sister and her husband Tom Lunn, who lived at Shuttlehaa in Teviotdale. He must therefore have been the closest thing that Jenkins had to a brother. He worked as a shepherd for James Scott of Allanshawes and then moved to Salisbury Craig in Edinburgh. He is recorded as a shepherd at Queen’s Park in 1841 and on St. Leonard’s St., Edinburgh in 1851. In May 1820 he married Sophia Glendinning (c.1802–70), the marriage being recorded in both Cavers and Ettrick Parishes; it is tempting to imagine that Tom Jenkins attended this wedding on his last trip back to Scotland before he left Britain for good. Their children included: Janet (b.c.1821); Elizabeth (b.c.1825); John (b.c.1827); Sophia (b.c.1829), who married Andrew Gunn in Edinburgh in 1851; Mary (b.c.1830), who probably had a child Sophia in 1862; Christina (b.1832), who probably died young; Walter (b.1833), who married Barbara Kay; Isabella (b.1835), who married James Reekie; and Adam (b.1837), who married Isabella Barrie. Their last 4 children were baptised in Cannongate Parish. He died in Carnegie Street Edinburgh. William (18th C.) from Southdean Parish. He was ordered to be transported to America in 1679 for being a Covenanter (probably after being captured at Bothwell Bridge), and escaped the shipwreck in the Orkneys which killed about 200 men. Most of the survivors were recaptured and sold as slaves in Jamaica and New Jersey. William (b.c.1780) recorded as miller of Doveshagh Mill in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In the 1841 census he was miller at Bedrule Mill. William (19th C.) recorded as labourer at Dovemount in 1835 (also formerly written ‘Swanston’, ‘Swanstone’, etc.).

Swinnie (swi-nee) n. hamlet and farm off the A68 on the B6357 towards Hallrule. Thomas Oliver ‘de Swyne’, who witnessed a sasine in Ruleburn in 1436 may have been from here. It was listed alongside with Clarilee in 1538 among lands in Jedforest that had passed to the Crown, but the lands were ‘claimed by the laird thereof’; at that time they were valued at £4 6s 8d. In 1557 Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst complained to the Queen that a force led by the Laird of Bedrule had terrorised the tenant, Adam Kirkton; this was presumably part of land dispute. It was owned by the Marquis of Douglas in 1643 and 1678, when valued at £400 (along with Old Jedburgh and ‘Standalane’); the Earl of Lothian owned the teinds. There were 10 separate households listed there on the Hearth Tax Rolls of 1694. Archibald Douglas of Douglas was recorded as owner in 1788. John Goodfellow was there in 1797. Richard Davidson was farmer there in the mid-19th century. There was formerly a toll-road there. In about 1833 a horn was found here, and in 1857, ‘Swynsteide Ovir et Nethir’ in 1670 and ‘Swynsteid’ in 1610, ‘Over and Nether Swynsteid’ in 1506. There could be the ‘Swintries’ held by the young Robert Elliot of Redheugh and managed for him (along with Skelfhill, Peelbrae and Priethshaugh) by his step-father Gavin Elliot of Stobs in about the 1560s. ‘Gawin Ellot of Swinsteidis’ is listed in 1583/4 among Border Lairds who were summoned to appear before the Privy Council. It is probably the ‘Swenesteidis’ where the fugitive Martin Burn was tenant in 1606. In 1610 it was listed as part of the Lordship of Winnington, possessed by 3 sisters called Hamilton, heirs of their great-grandfather Patrick Hepburn. In 1622 Gilbert of Stobs purchased the 15 merk land of Over and Nether ‘Swynesteid’ from Robert Elliot of Redheugh along with the rest of the lands of Winnington; it was described as ‘now commonly called the lands of Hillend Barnes and Newton’. It then formed part of the estate of the Eliotts of Stobs in the 17th century. It may be the same as the farm of ‘Swin’ in Kirkton Parish where Robert Smith is recorded as farmer in 1797 (it is probably ‘Swinesteys’ in 1574, ‘Swinteis’ in 1576, ‘Swynsteid’ in 1610, ‘Over and Nether Swynsteid’ in 1657, ‘Swynsteide Ovir et Nethir’ in 1670 and ‘Over and Nether Swynstead’ in 1681).

Swinstead *(swi-nee-mo of Old Jedburgh in the early 17th century. Simon Elliot of Swinside owned the lands in 1678, when they were valued at £1675. The Hearth Tax records list 13 householders on the estate in 1694. Alexander Lindsay paid tax on 31 windows there in 1748, while William Elliot paid tax for 10 windows. The farms there were run by Douglases in the mid-19th century (also written ‘Swinside’, ‘Swinesyde’, ‘Swynsyde’ and ‘Swinbydside’; the origin is probably Old English ‘swin set’, meaning ‘place where pigs are kept’; the name may be first recorded as ‘Swneshede’ in 1345, then is ‘Swynyschede’ in 1390 and ‘Swynyndsyde’ in about 1390).

Swinston (swi-nin, swin-tin) n. village in Berwickshire on the Leet Water, set out around the green with its 18th century cross. It is the original home of the Swinston family, who claim the oldest charters of any family in Scotland. Swinston House was built around 1800 to replace an earlier house destroyed by fire and also has a swiz (swiz) n. a swindle, rip off, scam – ‘they greyhoonds it the shows er a right swiz’ v.? to swindle (from Old English).

Or some auld aunt’s loquacious swither O’ wit an’ glee’ [JR], v., arch. to exert oneself in competition – ‘To wark they fell, what they could swither. The lint flew fast frae ane anither’ [JoHo].

Sword (sörd) n. Andrew (17th C.) Hawick’s first schoolmaster on record, according to deeds of about 1592 and also in 1616. Perhaps the same Andrew was also Hawick’s second recorded Town Clerk, from about 1620 until some time in the 1630s. He was also recorded as a notary public in Hawick in 1627 (for the Hawick Parish valuation). James (1786/7–bef. 1861) born in Stichill Parish, he was a master carpenter at Brieryshaw in the Ewes valley. He was listed there in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Helen and they had children Jessie, James and Helen. His wife was a widow and ‘Funds Holder’ in 1861. John (17th C.) witness to the Hawick Parish valuation of 1627. It seems likely he was closely related to Andrew, who was notary for the document. John (b.c.1779) shepherd from Selkirkshire. He was living at Ettrick House in tower-shaped dovecote, still occupied by pigeons. The surrounding Parish absorbed the parish of Simprin in 1761, where Thomas Boston was minister. The Wheatsheaf Hotel has won awards for its restaurant.

1841 and 1851. In 1801 at Gamescleuch he married Janet, daughter of Walter Lunn and Betty Turnbull, who lived at Colterscleuch. His children were born at Eilrig, Nether Dalgliesh and Ettrick House. In 1861 his widow was living with their daughter Margaret Anderson at Easter Alemoor, where she died a year later. Their children included: Elizabeth (Betty, 1802–82), who married Adam Beattie, and died in Annan, Ontario; John (1807–79), who married Jean Colthard and died at Easter Alemoor; Margaret (b.1804), who married James Anderson, farmer at Easter Alemoor; Walter (b.1810), who married Bella Hislop; James (b.1812), who married Helen Rieve; Janet (1813–19); William (b.1814), who married Isabella Hardie; and Robert (1821–84), who married Margaret Nichol and died in Annan, Ontario. Thomas (18th C.) local man who was paid one shilling for guiding a troop of dragoons from Hawick to Langholm in 1740. He is also recorded in the Kirk Session records being paid 'for summoning the Parish' about the same time. He was probably a Burgh Officer. Probably the same Thomas is recorded in 1756 when the Council paid 1 shilling for his 'sentence money'. He is probably the Thomas, married to Margaret Brown, whose children included: John (b.1737); and Thomas (b.1739). Thomas (b.1813/4) born in Southdean Parish, he was shepherd at Tythenhouse in 1861. His wife was Janet and their children included John and David B.D. (also spelled 'Sowrd' and 'Sworde').

born in Greenbank, near Edinburgh, son of William and Mary Thomson Pitcairn. He received his M.A. from Edinburgh University in 1881 and his B.D. in 1884. He was licensed by Edinburgh Presbytery that same year and became assistant minister at St. George’s Parish in Edinburgh. He was ordained at Lilliesleaf in 1888. In the period 1895–99 he was examiner for degrees at Edinburgh University. He was Secretary of the Ministers’ Pension Fund Committee in 1907 and Clerk of the Presbytery in 1916. In 1900 he married Caroline Georgina, daughter of William Simson of the Bank of Scotland, and she died in 1938. He was awarded a doctorate by Edinburgh University in 1924. He demitted his charge at Lilliesleaf in 1928. He was also Convenor of the Committee on Admissions of Ministers of other Churches 1921–46 and Convenor of Committee on Proposed Scheme for Superannuation of Ministers 1933–37.
He wrote the book ‘The Parish of Lilliesleaf’ in 1913. His religious writings included ‘Sermon

Symington (si-min-tin) n. John (15th C.) one of the local Lairds who write ‘attestations’ to the transfer of the lands of Heap from James Lang-lands of that Ilk to Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1431. He is recorded as ‘Richart off Symon-toun’. Thomas (15th C.) witness to a charter for Thomas Cranston of Cramling in 1443. He is recorded as being of ‘Symondtoun’. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. His name appears to be written ‘flimmingtoun’.

Symonton (si-min-in) n. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Tandlaw in Wilton according to the

syne (sīn) v. to rinse, wash superficially, swill, n.
a quick rinse, superficial wash – ‘gie that gless a wee syne oot afore ee pour yer drink’ (cf. synde).

Synton (sīn-tin, sīn-in) n. area just before Ashkirk, including several farms, formerly a large estate and separate barony, forming a disjoint part of Selkirkshire. The land was owned by the ‘de Sinton’ family for at east 4 generations. In the reign of William the Lion, Andrew de Sinton was appointed Sheriff of Selkirk, and gave up some lands in Roxburghshire, hence explaining why the estate became part of Selkirkshire. In the early 13th century the lands were described as marching with those of Lilliesleaf. In 1296 Marie de Sinton (probably widow of Alexander) signed the Ragman Rolls. In 1305 the lands were inherited by the ‘de Keith’ family through marriage to Isabella de Sinton. By the late 1400s the Barony was held by the Erskines, with some lands possessed by the Scotts in the 15th century, and with the Scotts being more or less permanent tenants from at least 1500. In 1494 the lands were valued at 40 merks, but in times of peace were worth £20; they were held for payment of a pair of gilt spurs at Whitsunday, if asked. The Barony may at one point have included the lands of Whitslade and Dalgliesh, while part owned by the Veitches, was annexed to the Barony of Dawkyn. In 1502 the estate was attacked by David Scott ‘in Stirkschawis’ (i.e. Stirches) and some Armstrongs, as well as Adam Turnbull of Hornshole, when many sheep and cattle were stolen. In 1510 the Baron, Lord Robert Erskine, and his son John Erskine, had an indenture with Ralph Ker of Primside Loch and Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst. Details are complicated, but basically for 400 ‘merks’ the Kerrs were sold for a 20 merk land in Synton Mains (adjacent to the 5 merk land of Walter Scott), and another piece of land of equivalent value within Synton, together with the option to take over the Scott lands after a few years. The lands were also raided in 1562, according to a decree made for Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst. The Barony was granted to Walter, Earl of Buccleuch in 1621. George Scott, said to be 14th Laird of Synton sold the lands to Sir William Scott of Harden in about 1627. The Lairdship was revived by Sir William’s younger brother Francis. At some early time the lands were split into South and North Synton (on opposite sides of the Ale Water), as well as Synton Mill, Synton Parkhead and Syntonshiel farms. The main estate was South Synton, with North Synton owned by the Veitches from at least 1407 until 1641, when it was sold to Francis Scott of South Synton. The estate passed from Sir John Edmondston of that Ilk to John, Earl of Mar in 1593, and was bought outright by the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1619. The Barony and lands were listed among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653, 1661, 1663, including ‘the toure, fortalice, manor-place, housis, biginis, yairdis, mylnes, mylnelandis, multoris, and sequellis thairof’. The estate was valued at £946 in about 1663. In 1785 and 1803 the lands of Synton and Synton Mill were valued at £1600. The arms of the original Scotts of Synton has 2 stars and a crescent and their motto ‘Reparabit Cornua Phoebe’. The Harden-derived Scotts of Synton (and later the Corse Scotts) were important local lairds for many generations. Their arms are a ‘bend azure’ with a star and 2 crescents and their motto ‘Crescendo prosim’. Since the estate was the site for the hereditary sheriffdom of Selkirk, there must have once been at least a fortified house there, but its precise location is unknown. It seems likely to have been near to where the 18th century house was built, this having stones built into it dating from 1570. This house was demolished in the latter half of the 20th century (also spelled ‘Sinton’, ‘Sintone’, ‘Sintonne’, ‘Sintoun’, ‘Sintoune’, ‘Sintoun’, ‘Syntoune’, ‘Syntone’, ‘Sytontoun’, etc.; it is mentioned from at least the early 13th century; Blaeu’s 1654 map shows ‘South Syntontoun’ and ‘North Sintoun’, while Adair’s c. 1688 map shows ‘Sintoun’; an early connection with ‘Swinton’ is not impossible).

Syntoncorses (sin’-in-kör-seez) n. farmstead between Synton and Synton Mains. About 140 m to the east are the remains of a ‘burnt mound’, at least 3 m in diameter. Robert Scott was shepherd there in 1851.

Synton Cottage (sin’-in-kö’eej) n. cottage that is to the west of Synton farm. About 160 m to the north are the remains of a farmstead, with a building, 2 enclosures and traces of rig-and-furrow cultivation. About 190 m to the north-east are the remains of a plantation bank.

Syton Hoose (sin’-in-hoos) n. house on the estate at Synton. It was rebuilt in about 1775 by Alexander Scott of Synton, probably on the site of the earlier house. It was located where modern maps mark ‘Synton’, although it was demolished after WWII and there is now little sign of where it was. The stables are inscribed with the date 1777, and it seems likely the main house was rebuilt at this time. Reset within the walls were 2 stones from the older house, which together read ‘GEORGE SCOT IN SYNTOWN AND MARG/RET EDMESTOVN HIS SP(OVS IN THE) / ZER OF GOD 1570 THE HEAR T(O WALTER SCOT) . . . ‘.
Synton Loch (sin’in-loch) n. small lake to the left of the A7 before coming to the main Synton area. It covers about 6 acres and is stocked for fishing. It is what is left of the much larger area of Synton Moss, which was largely drained in the 18th and 19th centuries. To the southwest some bones of an aurochs was discovered there in 1979. On a ridge about 300 m to the south lie the remains of a settlement, trapezoidal in shape, about 75 m by 65 m, with entrance near the east corner. It contains 2 sets of banks and inside are what might be 4 hut platforms. An Iron Age sword, as well as shards of pottery, found there are in the Royal Museum of Scotland. These suggest earlier occupation of the site.

Synton Mains (sin’in-manz) n. farm just off the A7 opposite Ashkirk, with holiday cottages and a private loch. In 1510 the Barons of Synton, the Erskines, had an indenture with Ralph Ker of Primside Loch and Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst over a 20 ‘merk’ land within this farm, adjacent to the lands held by Walter Scott, and another 20 merk land where they please. In 1609 Walter Veitch was served as heir to his grandfather in the lands of North Synton, including ‘lie Maynes’ there (presumably once the home farm for Synton; it is ‘the Manys of Syntoun’ in 1510 and is marked ‘Mains’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Synton Mill (sin’in-mil) n. farm and former corn mill on the south side of the Ale Water north of Synton. Isobel Scott was there in 1635, according to a court case at Ashkirk Session, with Thomas Nichol and Andrew Nichol also mentioned as tenants. Tax was paid for 6 hearths there in 1694. John Rutherford was tenant there in 1797, when there were 4 work horses on the farm (also written ‘Syntonmills’, it is ‘sintoune milne’ in 1694; it is marked as ‘Sintonium Mill’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Sintown Mill’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Synton Moss (sin’in-mos) n. land near Synton farm on the high ground just before Ashkirk. It was formerly a fairly extensive lake, but drained in the late 18th and early 19th centuries to obtain marl and peat. The remaining part is now called Synton Loch. Bones of several large extinct mammals were found there in the 19th century, including the skull of ‘bos primigenius’, donated by Henry Ewen in 1857.

Synton Mossend (sin’in-mos-end) n. farmstead at the northern end of the Synton Moss area, to the left of the A7 before Ashkirk. It may have been alternatively known as Syntonshiel or Ash Kirkshiel. The name is also applied to Synton Loch. There are remains of a settlement in the woods to the south. A stone found on the farm had cup and ring markings and was moved to Whinfield Sawmills Yard in Selkirk before 1967. A cutting by the A7 near gives a good opportunity to view folding of the Silurian strata – ‘Past Ashkirk the exile feels that hame is nearly in sight Synton Mossend is left behind and it’s a climb tae the heights’ [GM] (see also Ashirkshiel).

Synton Parkheid (sin’in-pawrk-heel) n. Synton Parkhead, farm on the road to Synton, off to the right of the A7. A bronze sundial there, on a modern pedestal, is inscribed ‘SEIZE THE PRESENT MOMENT THE EVENING HOUR IS NIGH’, and ‘1705 / THOMAS GRICE’. A Bronze Age sprearhead found there is in the Hunterian Museum, Glasgow.

Syntonshiel (sin’in-sheel) n. former farmstead in the south part of Synton estate. It is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map between the main road and Synton Loch, corresponding roughly to the position of Synton Mossend.

sicur, arch. an open drain, ditch, gutter.

’t (t) contr. enclitic, common after many specific words, e.g. ‘in’t’, ‘is’t’, ‘was’t’, etc., also used in a redundant sense with an extra ‘eet’ – ‘A thocht A wad send Tam’t eet’ [ECS] (see also ’d).

the Tabernacle (thu-taw-bur-naw-kul) n. building on the Kirk Wynd built in 1805 for the Independent Church, and used by its congregation until about 1813. It was a plain building of 3 storeys, plus an attic. It saw additional use by the new Relief Church for a few months in 1810/11. The building was also used for dances, theatrical performances, etc. It later had many uses, being a carrier’s warehouse, hosiery mill (by the Co-operative Society 1874–81 and Peter Scott’s 1881–93), wool store and corn merchants. It became a billiard saloon in the early 20th century and was finally demolished in 1976 when the area was remodelled.

Taggart (taw-gur’) n. Fr. Patrick (1809–95) born in County Tyrone, Ireland, he was ordained about 1846. He served in Dumfries and Edinburgh before becoming priest in Hawick in 1847, remaining for almost 50 years. Originally he ministered to Catholics in St. Boswells, Jedburgh, Kelso and Galashiels, as well as in Hawick. He was finally relieved of the responsibilities of Galashiels in 1853. He opened a Catholic school in Hawick in 1854. He also ran an evening school, since many of his pupils worked during the day. He had a house built for him in 1851, after living in the vestry for 2 years! He was known for regularly going walks with Rev. Dr. MacRae, and in general for being on good terms with the local protestant ministers. His services were used several times to try to quell riots that broke out during the building of the railway line, at St. Boswells and Shankend. It is also said that he helped get hosiery orders from the Admiralty directed towards Hawick firms in a time of very slack business. He later had a small cottage built behind the chapel to serve as his retirement home. In 1890 he was made a Domestic Prelate, with the title of Monsignor. He was buried in a vault at S.S. Mary & David’s and a stained glass window was erected in his memory.

Tait (tā’) n. Adam (15th C.) on the panel for James Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick in 1484. Adam (17th C.) resident of Shielswood in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Alexander (d.aft. 1595) recorded as ‘Vicar-pensioner and Reader’ at Traquair 1567–80. He was then deprived, living afterwards at St. Bride’s Kirk, Traquair. He became minister of Bedrule in 1585, but was ordered to demit this in 1591. He is mentioned as still living in 1595. Alexander (1782–1851) youngest son of miller George and Agnes Scott. In 1841 he was recorded as such an agricultural labourer at Burnfoot Mill and his widow was living there in 1851. He died at Burnfoot in the 44th year of his service there. He married Margaret Younger, who died in 1858, aged 77. Their children included William and Margaret. They are buried in Wilton. Andrew (1778–1861) originally from Lauder, son of Andrew and Ann, he was a stockmaker of the Green Wynd. He was one of the founders of the Relief Kirk. There is a record of him being granted money by the Board of Trustees for Manufactures in 1817 for a broad frame, after he had demonstrated that he had discovered how to make down tippets and muffs on the frame. He managed to make white feathered muffes, but when taste changed to coloured muffes, he was unable to get the feathers to dye properly. He was living on the Back Row in 1832, adjacent to where there were choleru victims. He is recorded as a widower living with the Kyle family on the Green Wynd in 1841 and 1851. Archibald (b.1705) farmer near Borthaugh. He was father of George, tenant of Borthaugh Mill. He is said to have lived into his late 90s, have married twice and had 19 children. He may be the tenant in Whitehillbrae whose wife Margaret Turnbull died in 1760, with her funeral recorded in Hobkirk Parish. His children probably included Archibald (b.1741) and George (b.1743), both baptised in Hobkirk Parish. Archibald (d.1824) agricultural labourer in the Hawick area. He is probably the Archibald, son of Archibald and Margaret Turnbull, who was baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1741. He married Isabella Geddes, who died in 1822, aged 84. In her death record he is listed as ‘Egglar’, meaning a peddler who collected eggs from outlying farms to sell at markets. Their children included: Janet (b.1773); Margaret (b.1777), who married carrier James Paterson; and William (b.1782), who was a carrier. His children were baptised in Hawick and Wilton Parishes; he was at Fenwick in 1777 and Borthaugh in 1782. The 1782 baptism was witnessed by George Tait (probably his brother) and Margaret Cowan; in an adjacent baptismal entry he was witness for George. He was probably son of the earlier Archibald and brother of George, tenant at Borthaugh Mill. He may be the Archibald who was charged with theft in Hawick in 1776. Archibald (1820–79) son of William and Elizabeth Forsyth. He was proprietor of the Ewe and Lamb Hotel in Melrose. He married Elizabeth Naylor. He died in Hawick. David (19th C.) shepherd near Addestoneshiel. In 1863 he presented to the Museum an otter that had been shot on Addestoneshiel Moss. He is probably the ‘D. Tait’ recorded at Adderstonelee in 1868. Ernest E., O.B.E., J.P. (?–??) accountant in Pringle’s, he was President of the Callants’ Club in 1966. He became Secretary at Pringle’s in 1939, taking over from James Watherston. In 1947 he was made a Director of Pringle’s. George of Pirn (15th C.) on the panel to decide on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex in 1464/5. He is recorded as being ‘of the Pren’, his lands being in Tweeddale (near Stow). The David ‘de pryn’ recorded in the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1494/5 is probably his son (and his son George is recorded in 1498). It is said that the Taits of Pirn died out in the male line and were continued by a daughter who married Horsburgh of that Ilk; they may be the oldest known Taits. George (d.c.1693) tenant in ‘Newtoun’ in 1689 when his will was recorded. It is unclear which Newton this may have been (in the counties of Peebles, Roxburgh and Selkirk). George (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1693 when he was listed on the Hearth
Tait

Tax roll there. George (1743–1812) son of Archibald, he was baptised in Hobkirk Parish. He was tenant at Borthaugh Mill, being the last miller there. He married Agnes Scott, who died in 1812, aged 70. Their children included: John; Isabel (b.1773); Archibald (b.1776); George (b.1778), builder in Hawick; William (b.1780); and Alexander (1782–1851). The 1782 baptism was witnessed by Archibald Tait (probably his brother), while he witnessed the baptism of William, son of Archibald Tait. He was buried in Wilton Old Kirkyard. George (1778–1853) son of George, who was tenant at Borthaugh Mill, he was born in Wilton Parish. He was a builder in Hawick, whose son (also a mason) had the same name. He served on the 'Eternal Council' as a representative of the hammermen; he was certainly there as early as 1827. He lived on the Punch Bowl Close at 27 High Street, owning the property there; his son George later rebuilt the front, while another son James ran a druggist in one of the 2 front shops and had a school in the back.

He is probably the George listed as a builder on the Fore Row on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and on the High Street in 1837. ‘Geo. Tait & Sons’ is listed on Punch Bowl Close in Slater’s 1852 directory. On the 1841 and 1851 censuses he is at Punch Bowl Close with his son James (druggist), with his other son George next door. He married Margaret Scott, who died in 1818, aged 38. Their children included: Margaret (b.1804); John (b.1808), also a builder; George (b.1812), who continued with his builder’s business; and James (b.1815). A portrait of him exists. The family (including 3 children who died in infancy) are buried in St. Mary’s. George (1812–97) son of builder George. He was also a mason and the 3rd George in a row in this family (his grandfather being miller at Borthaugh). Like his father before him, he was a member of the ‘Eternal Council’, representing the hammermen for several years from 1846. The Tait builders (including his father and brother John) between them erected many of the Town’s buildings, including much of North Bridge Street and a large number of local mansions, including Silverbuthall, Mayfield, East Bank Meeting House, St. Andrew’s Church and Orrock Place Church. In 1841 he is recorded on Punch Bowl Close, listed at 76 High Street in 1851 and 1861, and still there in 1875. He rebuilt the front of the property that had been owned by his father; however, the building was later demolished (along with the one next door) to make way for the Pavillion Theatre. He was a nearly life-long member (and later an Elder) of Orrock Kirk. He donated some fossils to the Museum in 1863. He was described as having ‘a fine portly form’ and was latterly very deaf. In 1836 he married Beatrice Wilson, who died in 1862, aged 51. Their children included: Margaret (b.1838/9), who married James Turnbull of Galalaw; Beatrice (b.1839), who died in infancy; Beatrice (again, b.1845), who died young; George (b.1847), also died young; and Elizabeth (b.1851/2), who married Alexander Welsh from Coldstream. George (b.1829/30) son of grocer John. He was listed as a shoemaker at Wilton Place in Slater’s 1852 directory. In the 1851 census he was living with his parents on Wilton Kirkstyle and listed as ‘Deaf & Dumb’. Gilbert (b.1803/4) gamekeeper at Whitehaugh in Castleton Parish. His wife was Jane and their children included Christian and William. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Eiligrig, recorded on the 1787–97 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1797 he was owner of 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax there in the same year. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1797 he married Helen Leithead from Hawick Parish. James (b.1805/6) coal agent in Denholm. His wife was Helen. James (1815–63) son of builder George, he was a chemist at 27 High Street in the mid-19th century. He also had a school in the back premises. He was said to be a ‘cripple and walked very lame’. He married Catherine Anderson, from Jedburgh. James (19th C.) editor of the Kelso Chronicle. He wrote the 2 volume study ‘Two Centuries of Border Church Life: with Biographies of Leading Men and Sketches of the Social Conditions of the People’ (1889, 1891). It principally contains details of churches associated with Kelso Presbytery, encompassing several areas around Hawick, including Lilliesleaf and Liddesdale. He also edited Walter Riddell Carre’s work ‘Border Memories, or, Sketches of Prominent men and women of the Border’ (1876) and ‘Wilson’s Tales of the Borders’ (1881, 1884). James (19th C.) local artist. His painting ‘Hawick Common Riding Procession at Tower Knowe 1890’ is in the Museum collection. He is probably also the James who painted a portrait of Provost George Wilson and possibly a picture of Minto Pond. John (17th C.) piper, named by the Hawick Bailie in 1627, among 15 other ‘idle and masterless men’ as fit to be sent to the wars in Germany. While in Edinburgh Tolbooth he was among 7 of them who complained that they were not in fact the sorts of men who should be pressed into military service, but nevertheless were transported to the wars in Germany. John (d.bef. 1721) gardener listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. Probably the same John was resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. In 1715 he was fined for ‘breaking the marches between the Common and the property of the Duchess of B. at the Wolliegate’. He was described as the deceased ‘some times gardner’ in 1721 when his daughter Isobel married flesher Robert Hardie in Hawick. John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Adderstoneshiel. In 1720 his ‘servitor’ John Scott had a child baptised in Kirkton Parish. John (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1724 he married Margaret Turnbull in Wilton Parish. John (18th C.) footman at Knowe in Minto Parish in 1778, when he was working for Thomas Turnbull. In 1779 he was listed as a house and riding servant. John (18th C.) tenant farmer in Fenwick in about the 1750s, when Robert Hobkirk was Town Herd. He was said to have ‘came and drank with Bailie Ker’ in order to solve a dispute with the Town Herd over the use of the Common. John (18th C.) recorded at Winnington Rig on the 1787 Horse Tax Rolls. John (1768/9–1812) road contractor who died at Abbotrule Lodge. His wife Elizabeth Bell died in Edinburgh in 1851, aged 82. Their youngest son Adam (born in Southdean Parish) died in Edinburgh, aged 30. The family were recorded on a tombstone in Abbotsford Churchyard. John (1771–1851) son of George, he was born at Borthaugh Mill. In 1794 he married Agnes, daughter of Gilbert Amos, and she died in 1815. The marriage was against the wishes of her family, and so was carried off from Adderstonelee at midnight! He then moved to Cavers, where he acted as a forester on Cavers estate. Their children included: Gilbert, George (b.1796), John, James and Margaret. In 1819 he emigrated to New York state with 5 children. John (18th/19th C.) spinner in Hawick. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. John (b.1791/2) stone-cutter in Denholm, where he was a registered voter in the 1860s. In 1861 he lived at around the Canongate. He married Margaret Biggar and they had a son Thomas. John (19th C.) tenant farmer at Wolfehopelee and Braithaugh in the mid-1800s. His daughter married farmer Thomas Grierson. John (b.1801/2) from Watten in Caithness, he was a grocer in Wilton. In 1851 he was living at Wilton Kirkstyle and he was listed as a shopkeeper at Wilton Place in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1861 he was at Melburn Cottage in Wilton. His wife was Christina, and their children included George (shoemaker), Jessie, Magnus Sandison, Christina, John, Robert, William, Elizabeth and Georgina. John (b.1808) son of builder George, he was a mason on the Cross Wynd. Like his father and brother George, he sat on the ‘Eternal Cooncil’, representing the hammermen from 1848. He and his brother built a good fraction of North Bridge Street, as well as several large mansions in the Hawick area. In 1851 he is listed as a builder, with 2 partners, employing 12 people, and residing at about 13 Cross Wynd. His wife was Agnes Reid from Langholm, and their children included Margaret, Isabella, Agnes, John, Helen, George and James. John (b.1829) son of carrier William, who died when he was young. He probably served in the army during the Crimean War. In 1863 in Wilton Parish he married Helen, daughter of mason Walter Cranston; she died in 1913. He was at that time described as a frameworker and Chelsea Pensioner and the witnesses were Archibald Brown and Agnes Cranston. Their children included: William Walter (b.1865); and Walter (b.1866). He also appears to have had an illegitimate son George with Mary Smith (nee Middlemass) in 1860. John G. (b.1830/1) head gardener at Cavers. In 1861 he was living at ‘Cavers Garden’, which was presumably the gardener’s house on the estate. Rev. ?? (17th/18th C.) chaplain at Thorsliehope. He was one of the local clergymen who gave sermons in Hawick in 1721 when Rev. Cunningham was ill. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Honeyburn. In 1684 he was among men declared as a fugitive for attending field conventicles. He is listed separately from Robert in Hagburn. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Hagburn (in Rulewater). He is listed in 1684 among men declared fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. Thomas (b.1801/2) born in Channell Kirk Parish, he was a gardener at Wells and then farmer at Denholm Mill. He is still recorded as farmer at Denholm Mill in 1868. He married Isabella Gray, who was from Crailing. Their children included: James (b.1828); John Gray (b.1830); David (b.1832); Margaret (b.1834); William (b.1835); William (again, b.1837), who was a shepherd; Peter (b.1839); Robert (b.1840); Charles Anderson Gray (b.1846); and Thomas (b.1843). Their children were born in Jedburgh and Southdean Parishes. Thomas (1833/4–1923) son of stone-cutter John. He married Christina Black, who died in 1908, aged 70. Their

resident of Hawick. He married Jean Gordon and their daughter Ann was baptised in 1758, with Thomas Bunanoy as his witness. His occupation may read ‘tinclar’, i.e. a metal worker. William (1782–1832) son of Archibald and Isabel Geddes, he was baptised at Borthaugh in Wilton Parish.
He was a carrier, operating between Hawick and Dumfries and Annan, according to Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He was listed as a carrier in the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He is probably the carrier William who married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’), daughter of William Forsyth, in Wilton Parish in 1813 and whose children included: Margaret (b.1812), who married James Daykins; Isabella (b.1814), who married John Lawrie; Elizabeth (b.1816), who married Peter Blair, miller at Dundale and emigrated to Australia; Matilda (b.1818), who may have died in Dumfries in 1889; Archibald (b.1820), who married Elizabeth Naylor and was proprietor of the Ewe & Lamb in Melrose; Catherine (b.1823–64), who married farm steward Andrew Walker of Linton Parish; Williamina (1826– 31); John (b.1829), who married Helen Cranston; and William (b.c.1831), confectioner. His wife died 2 days after him, leaving 8 children as orphans. In 1833 his former premises in the east end of Hawick were advertised for sale, including ‘dwelling-house, offices, garden, and pertinents’, with the house being built within the previous 20 years. William (b.c.1784) born in Hownam, son of David and Janet (or Jessie) Armstrong.
He moved to Hyndlee as a shepherd and spent most of his working life at Wauchope Walls (also known as ‘Lanhaughwalls’ or ‘the Waas’). He was recorded there in 1861 and 1868. He also acted as carrier between Hawick and Jedburgh and the Wauchope area. Along with his wife Rachel and daughter Rachel, he was a member of the original congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk.
He married Rachel Riddell in 1805. Their children were David (who married Mary Paterson), Betsy (who emigrated to America), Janet (who married T, Waugh), Mary (who married A. Elliot), Margaret (who married labourer Christopher Shackleton), Agnes Douglas (who emigrated to America), Rachel, Isabel (who married Will Bell), Helen (born at Hislop), Jane and James. William (b.1802/3) from Bowden, he was a baker on the Cross Wynd. On Pigot’s 1837 directory he was listed as a baker on the High Street. He was at about 4 Cross Wynd in 1841. He later lived on Bacdkdangate and Kirkwynd. He married Elizabeth Kerr, who was from Langholm. Their children included: Jessie, who married John Davidson; Elizabeth; Margaret; and Robert. William (c.1831–1913) youngest son of carrier William, who died shortly after he was born. In 1861 he was a frame-worker, living at 11 Teviot
Crescent. He was later a confectioner in Hawick.
In 1853 he married Elizabeth (or ‘Betsy’) Bell.
Their children included William (greengrocer), Jane and Margaret. He died at 1 Glebe View.

Tancred

Tancred (tawng-kred) n. George (1831–1914) eldest son of George Cleghorn of Weens. He was born and raised at Weens, then educated in Edinburgh and at Leamington. When rowing on the Thames as a boy, he mangled his hand and lost part of a thumb. He joined the East India Company at age 19 and became an ensign in the 43rd Bengal Native Infantry, caught an almost fatal illness and was sent to Simla to recover. He then moved to Kashmir, when he became ill again with dysentery and returned to England in 1853. There he joined the West York Militia, purchased a commission with the 17th
Tandlaw tanker

Lancers, and was transferred to the Scots Greys, where he became Captain, spending time in various parts of England and also Ireland. He retired from the army in 1866. He was a keen shooter, bragging that over a year he (and some friends) killed about 1000 patridges, 400 pheasants and 60 grouse. He succeeded his father in 1855, and was known as ‘Cleghorn of Weens’ for 30 years. However, he assumed the name and arms of Tancred in 1885 following the death of Charles Tancred of Arden Hall, Yorkshire, according to the conditions of succession to his estate. He substantially improved the house at Weens in the early years of the 20th century. He took possession of the ‘key of Gibraltar’ which had been taken from ‘the Rock’ by Lord Heathfield, who was born at Wells.

He was a member of the Roxburghshire County Council, Chairman of Hobkirk Parish Council, Deputy-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire, as well as the North Riding of Yorkshire. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1862. He was also a Vice-President of Rulewater Miniature Rifle Club from 1905. He wrote ‘Historical Record of Medals and Honorary Distinctions’ (1891), ‘The Annals of a Border Club, the Jedforest’ (1899) and ‘Rulewater and its People: an Account of the Valley of the Rule and its Inhabitants’ (1907, reprinted in facsimile 1992). This last book is an extremely valuable account of the histories of families the Rule valley (and neighbouring areas), particularly in the 18th and 19th centuries, and including ordinary people as well as the landed gentry. And the Jedforest Club book is actually an excuse for him to present the histories of a large fraction of the local landowning families. He was said to be working on another book when he died, ‘Old Border Lairds and their Tenants’; it is not clear how far he had progressed and no manuscript survives. In 1862 he married Mary Anne Hay (who died in 1914), 3rd daughter of Col. Thomas Lumsden, from Aberdeenshire. They had 11 children: George Harry Lumsden (1863–1935), who served in South Africa, married Sarah Ann Gillespie and died in New Zealand; James Charles (b.1864), who was a Royal Navy Commander and married Cecile Margaret, only daughter of Walter Macmillan-Scott of Wauchope; Thomas Angus (b.1867), Major in the Royal Artillery; Richard Fairfax (b.1875), who married Alexander Ormiston Curle, W.S.; Frances Madeline (b.1871), also born at Weens; and Edith Dalton (1873–90). A plaque in his memory was erected on the wall of Weens House in 1981 (also known as ‘George Cleghorn’ and ‘Captain Cleghorn’).

Tandlaw (tawnd-law) n. farm just out past the ‘Fower Road Ends’, with a small loch nearby, Tandlaw Moss. It appears to have been part of the estate of Robert Scott of Alton in 1643. Robert Scott of Tandlaw paid the land tax on £40 in Hassendean Parish in 1678. It was contained within Hassendean Parish until 1690 when it fell within the new Wilton Parish boundaries. Robert Scott was recorded there in 1702 and Adam Armstrong in 1791. Rev. Robert Scott of Innerleigh is recorded as owner in 1788 (continued in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls), when it was valued at £40 and recorded as ‘Tanlaw, or Tandlaw’. In 1851 it consisted of 200 acres. Robert Symon then was farmer there in 1797 and Adam Nichol in 1841 and 1851 (also sometimes ‘Tanlaw’; it is ‘Taandlaw’ in 1682, ‘Tanda’ in 1702 and ‘Tanlaw or Tandlaw’ in 1813; not to be confused with ‘Tanlaw Naze’ near Teviothead or ‘Tanlawhill’ etc. near Eskdalemuir).

Tandlaw Moss (tawnd-law-mos) n. marshy area and small loch to the west of Tandlaw farm. It is the source of the Boonraw Burn (also sometimes ‘Tanlaw Moss’).

Tanlaw Naze (tan-law-näz) n. hill between Falnash and Caerlenuig, reaching a height of 310 m, called ‘Tanlawnese’ in earlier documents. Along with the lands of Falnash and ‘Cawsya’ it was confirmed by James IV in a 1511 charter to Simon Dalgleish, with the consent of his son Kentigern Dalgleish. Along with Falnash and ‘Cawsya’ it was inherited by Archibald Elliot of Falnash from his great-great-grandfather Archibald in 1647. It was inherited by Walter Scott of Langshaw from his father Francis in 1690 (the name probably derives from Scots ‘tandle’, meaning a bonfire, and Middle English ‘nese’ for a projecting nose of land; it is ‘Tandilnes’ in 1511 and 1647, ‘Tandlaneis’ in 1675 and transcribed ‘Tabdanerse’ in 1690).

Tannage Close (taw-neej-klós) n. passageway off the middle of the west side of the High Street, between Nos. 61 and 63. It was named after the tanning pits at the bottom of the close, with the upper part labelled Moncrieff’s Close. The Moncrieff family used to live on the east side of the close. The name ‘Guthrie’s Close’ has also been used (cf. Moncrieff’s Close). The Moncrieff business carried out by John & Walter Wilson between Nos. 61 and 63. It was named after the tanners and dressing of sheepskins was formerly an important trade in Hawick. Tanners would usually have open tanning vessels, producing a strong smell in the vicinity. Mactaggarts skinworks was a related modern business that successfully operated through much of the 20th century. The name ‘Tannage Close’ is one of the few remnants of this occupation.

the Targets (thu-tawr-gits, -tār-gits) n. hilly area above the Braid Road, named after the former Boozieburn Rifle Range on the northern slope. It is also known as ‘Target Hill’ or ‘Target Hills’, and was formerly ‘Moss Hill’. The area includes Target Pond and the disused Black Quarries, and was recently the site of a greyhound racing track – ‘The summer sun shines as I sit in the silence Looking doon on ma hame frae the Target Hill’s crest, Weel-kent are the streets and familiar the places Of this old mill town that I’ll aye like the best’ [IWL].

Tarras (taw-ris) n. lands lying between the Liddesdale and Eskdale. The farm was listed in the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale, in the section labelled ‘Forresta’. ‘The Laird’s Rowie’ (i.e. Roland) Armstrong was recorded dwelling at ‘Tarrassydle’ in 1583. The lands there passed to William Scott (son of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden) in 1606 and later his descendant became the first and only Earl of Tarras. The lands and Barony of Tarras were listed among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch according to the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch; the bounds of the lands at that time are described therein. It was valued at £1100 in 1671 – ‘Was ne’er ane droon’d in Tarras, Nor yet in doot, For ere the heid can win doon, The harns are oot’T’. ‘From mountains wrapt in purple shroudsm The Tarras pours her murky floods’ [WSB], ‘And sae, as the crying gongs up i’ the Border Bi Tarras and Hermitage, Ettrick and Yill …’ [DH] (it is ‘Tarras’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Tarras Moss (taw-ris-mos) n. high area near the Border in a side valley between the Liddel and the Esk, notorious in riving days. The lands were recorded as early as the late 14th century. The area was also known as ‘Black Tarras’ – ‘We stabled them sure on the Tarras muir We stabled them sure’, quoth he: ‘Before we could cross that quaking moss, They all were lost but me’’ [JL], ‘A stark moss-trooping Scott was he, As e’er couch’d Border lance by knee: Through Solway sands, through Tarras moss, Blindfold, he knew the paths to cross’ [SWS], ‘And sae, as the cryin’ gangs up i’ the Border Bi Tarras and Hermitage, Ettrick and Yill …’ [DH].

Taylor (tā-hur) n. Andrew (16th/17th C.) listed after Simon Armstrong of Calfield and his servant in a 1601 list of Armstrongs and others who were said by the English to be outlaws under the Laird of Buccleuch. He thus presumably lived in Liddesdale and was an associate of the Armstrongs. He could be the ‘Andro Taillour’ listed ‘in Schort-burtholme’ among Liddesdale and Eskdale men declared as fugitives for not appearing in a court in Hawick in 1605. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (17th C.) recorded in 1632 as possessor of the lands of ‘Zairdhous’ in Liddesdale. Since this is listed by other farms near Newcastleton, it could be that Yethouse is meant. Charles (19th C.) teacher, and David Miller. David (18th C.) tenant in Todshawhill. His son William was born in 1756 and Walter in 1762. Other children may include John (b.1754) and Isobel (b.1759). David (19th/20th C.) joiner at Damfoot, Newmill. He was responsible for the original wooden Lawson Bridge, as well as the ‘Joogly Brig’. Douglas (1823–87) son of John. He was an apprentice joiner with James Rutherford at Bonchester, and his first job was to remove the thatch from the 3 ‘Sclenty houses’ in 1839. He was then a joiner on the Weens estate at Bonchester Bridge. He was the first in the area to erect wire fences, and developed a business supplying these. Henry Anderson worked for him in the late 1870s. In 1882 his joiner’s business was taken over by Walter Turnbull. In 1846 he married Elizabeth (‘Betsy’), daughter of John Thorburn, farmer at Stonedge. They had several children, including Walter. He died at Wilton Hill in Hawick and was buried at Hobkirk. James (15th C.) had a sasine for a merk land in ‘Betheruill’ (i.e. Bedrule) in 1473.

It is unclear how long he held lands in Rulewater. James (18th C.) Hawick resident. He married Betty Turnbull and their children included: Margaret (b.1761); Margaret (again, b.1763); and Peter (b.1766). The 1766 witnesses were weaver Robert Turnbull and John ‘Kerswell’. James (b.1821/2) from Jedburgh, he was a spinner in Hawick. In 1842 he married Elizabeth Best, who was from Bedrule. Their children included: Margaret (b.1842); John (b.1845/6); Catherine (b.1848/9); Agnes A.J. (b.1854/5); and Elizabeth Jane Boston (b.1856). They were living at about 62 High Street in 1851. In 1861 his widow had remarried to grocer William Brown and the family were living on the Mid Raw. Janet (b.1780/1) born in Hawick Parish, she was recorded as ‘Independent’ at Highend in Hobkirk Parish in 1841. She was listed there as farmer’s widow in 1851 and 1861 and was still recorded there in 1868. She had a daughter Margaret. John (16th C.) tenant in Alemoor. He is recorded in 1573 when he was to be entered at Edinburgh Tolbooth by David ‘of Ailmure’. John (17th C.) recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls at Borthaugh. John (17th C.) cottar at Newton in Hassendean Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1704 he witnessed a baptism for John, who was probably his son or brother. John (18th C.) farmer at Langraw in Rulewater. In 1771 he married Betty Amos and had a son, also John, later that year. John (b.1770s) tenant farmer at Unthank, brother of Walter. He may be the John who was recorded as tenant at Blackclegmonth in 1797. He married Elizabeth Renwick of Forkins. In 1800 they had a daughter called Betty (who married Douglas Lillico), followed by a son, John. They then moved to Swanshiel, where they had sons Robert (farm steward at Wauchope, before emigrating to America) and Walter (who married Margaret Gow). In later life he moved to Blacklee farm with his eldest son John (where they were in 1841). A few years after his death the farmhouse at Blacklee was allowed to fall to ruin. Joshua Joseph Henry (1831–1910) composer of music for ‘The Banner Blue’. Born in the Huddersfield area, he came to Hawick in 1884 to work as a worsted designer with the tweed manufacturers Blenkhour & Richardson’s, and later became their mill manager. Musically talented, before coming to Hawick he wrote wrote several short choral anthems, including ‘Blow Ye the Trumpets in Zion’, ‘Come, Ye Children’ and ‘Rend Your Hearts’, as well as a full Church of England Service. While in Hawick he wrote a new ‘Te Deum’, performed in Wilton Church in 1891, as well as his last anthem ‘If, With All Your Hearts’. He was honorary organist at Wilton for about a year, after it installed a pipe organ in 1886. He was said to be ‘a modest, retiring man’. He died at 2 Wilton Hill and was buried in Wilton Cemetery. Neil (b.1812/3) from Dunoon in Argyll, he was schoolmaster at Chesters, Southdean Parish around the 1840s to 1860s. He is listed as master of Southdean Parish School in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Mary Shiel, who was sister of Thomas, schoolmaster at Hobkirk, and they had a son Malcom T.S. He is recorded in 1866 as Registrar, Session Clerk and Inspector of Poor and still Inspector of Poor for the Parish in 1868. He also acted as postmaster for Chesters. He was a Fellow of the Educational Institute of Scotland. Patrick (15th C.) recorded among many men from Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Peter (b.1766) son of James and Betty Turnbull. He was a mason in Hawick. He lived at 19 Howegate in 1841 and 1851. He was probably the Peter who was one of the founders of the Independent Kirk in about 1798. R.M. (20th C.) published ‘Teviot Reaches’ in 1951, containing sketches and etchings around the Teviot. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as being once in Longnewton, then in Sanystanes. His surety was Archibald Heriot, Captain of Ancrum. Robert (18th C.) recorded in 1676 among a group of Hawick people found guilty of using faulty measures; along with John Scott of Wyndheid, he was specifically found to have a half-peck that was ‘ane half-fourpitt short’. He was presumably a merchant or shopkeeper of some sort. Robert (18th C.) writer in Hawick. He was involved in a court case in 1748, in which he had taken £29 from his aunt Jean Taylor, getting Robert Tudhope to pretend to have borrowed it, but in fact he used it to pay a bill to merchant Thomas Turnbull. He was stated to be a tobacconist in the related court case brought by Turnbull against Tudhope, and so his profession is unclear. He may be the Robert, son of John, born in 1703 in Hawick. He could also be the Robert who married Margaret Douglas (registered in Cavers and Wilton Parishes) in 1730, and whose children included: Thomas (b.1739); Robert (b.1742); and Margaret (b.1745). Robert (b.1847) emigrated from Hawick to Pennsylvania at age 18. He sheered sheep for a living in California, then moved to Wyoming and ended up with a 75,000 acre farm near Grand Island, Nebraska.
was listed as ‘Win Tylzer’ on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. It is possible he is the William, son of James and Bessie Scott, born in Hawick in 1644. He could be the William, married to Isobel Scott, whose children baptised in Hawick were Bessie (b.1674), Elspeth (b.1677), Helen (b.1680), Marion (b.1682), Janet (b.1685) and Isobel (b.1687); the 1682 baptism was witnessed by Walter Purdon and Andrew Hart. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Betty Laidlaw and their children included Janet (b.1788) and Betty (b.1792). Taylorcleuchheid (tā-hur-kloo-ch heed) n. Taylorcleuchhead, former farm in Liddesdale, situated around the stream marked Taylor’s Cleuch on modern maps. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch. It consisted of 217 acres, bounded by Riccarton, Cleuchhead, lands held by the Laird of Dinlabyre and Roughley. The farmhouse was shown on the west side of a stream, possibly Todshaw Sike, and this could be the place where post-medieval remains were discovered in 1977 (see also Taylor’s Cleuch).

Taylor’s Cleuch (tā-hurz-kloo-ch) n. stream that runs roughly eastward to join the Liddel Water south of Larriston. There are remains of an enclosure between here and the old railway line. It was partly excavated in 1977 before being surrounded by forest. It appears to be prehistoric with later occupation. There are also some medieval and post-medieval remains a little to the east by Todshaw Sike. It may have been called ‘Tailorcleuchside’ or Taylorcleuchheid.

Tayot (te-yot) n. occasional spelling meant to denote the former pronunciation of ‘Teviot’.

At least no until it was time ti gaun hame for yer tei’[We], ‘I’ll tak’ my aith, ye’ve hed nae tei, So’s ye could fill your wames wi’ mei …’[DH]. Tea did not start being drunk locally until about the 1760s, and was quite expensive for some time. In 1768 someone in Hawick was convicted for selling thorn leaves in place of tea leaves and was ‘pinioned’ as punishment (sometimes spelled ‘tey’).

teind (tīnd) n., arch. Scottish equivalent of the English tithe, a tenth part of one’s income or produce from land, or a tenth of the value of the livestock born on a farm. This originally went to support the Church, but after the Reformation typically went to the local landowner. Such payments were split into ‘vicarage teinds’, which were minor tithes, often paid in kind – ‘The Earle Bukcleugh is patrone, who payis to ye minister 800 merks yeirlie, and leidis ye teynd’ [PR1627] (and originally to the vicar rather than parson) and ‘parsonage teinds’ which were the more major tithes.

teind barn (tünd-bawrn) n., arch. a barn used for storing the grain that was collected as a ‘teind’, called a ‘tithe-barn’ in England. The ruins of the old example in Spittal-on-Rule can still be seen.

the Teind Barn (thu-tünd-bawrn) n. ruined building in Spittal-on-Rule. It was still thatched until the early 1900s, and was said by Tancred to be the oldest building in the parish.

the Teind Court (thu-tünd-kör) n. court set up after the Reformation, to deal with the value and sale of teinds, and the adequate provision for local ministers. It was a court within the Court of Session, set up to decide on matters of valuation of teinds, stipends for ministers, etc. After 1707 its powers passed to the Court of Session.

teinder an thirder (tündur-an-thirdur) n., arch. a person who occupies arable land at a rent equal to 2/3/6th of the produce (1 tenth and another 3 tenths) – ‘... the damage done to the corn at Whitlaw was comprised, and that Patrick Scott and John Gladstains paid the damage to the teinder and the thirder out of their own pocket ...’ [C&L].

Teindside (tünd-, teend-süd) n. farm on the A7 south of Newmill, as well as the name for the general area, also referred to as ‘Teinside’. The lands were owned by a branch of the Abernethy family from at least the late 14th century, passing from Sir William to his older brother James in 1393; they were at that time described as lying in the Barony of Hawick, with Archibald, Earl of Douglas as superior. The Abernethys sold the lands to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1494. In 1446/7 Oswald Abernethy appeared before William, Earl of Douglas at Newark and publicly asserted that his only superior of these lands was the Baron of Hawick. The lands were recorded belonging to Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1502. In 1511 the lands were listed among those held ‘in tenantry’ by the Baron of Hawick. However, in 1572 they were included among those held ‘in property’ by the Baron, Douglas of Drumlanrig. The Scotts of Buccleuch held lands there since at least the early 1500s, although Francis, Earl of Bothwell had the lands confirmed to him in 1585. It is listed among the property of the Baron of Hawick (Douglas of Drumlanrig) in 1594 and 1615. In 1627 they were listed as a ‘25 merk land’ producing ‘500 merks in stok, and to 100 merks in teynd’. The lands were listed in 1634, 1653 and 1663 among those owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. In 1724 Gideon Elliot purchased the lands from his brother Robert. Thomas Watson owned the lands in the early 18th century and sold them to Henry, Duke of Buccleuch in about 1750. There were Murrys living there in the mid-1700s to early 1800s. Thomas Barrie was there in 1788. By 1788 it was valued at £426 13s 4d and still the same in 1811, as part of the properties of the Duke of Buccleuch. Robert Elliot was farmer in 1841 and Robert Govenlock in the 1860s. There is a hill-fort on the Slaidhill, which lies above, near the source of the Teindside Burn, and 2 more on Teindside Hill. Ancient burial cists were found there in 1869, with an excavation carried out by Dr. Brydon and Lord Rosehall. And there are signs of ‘cord rig’ cultivation there also (also spelled ‘Tynside’, ‘Teinside’, etc., and possibly formerly pronounced tünd-; the origin is possibly Old Welsh ‘din’ and Old English ‘side’, meaning ‘the slope by the hill with the fort’; it first occurs as ‘Theynsyde’ in 1393, is ‘Tenside’ in 1446/7, ‘Teynside’ in 1494, ‘tynsyde’ in 1502, ‘Teneside’ in 1511, ‘Tenside’ in 1528/9, ‘Tynesyde’ and ‘Teneside’ in 1572, ‘Teyndsye’ in 1595, ‘Teynsyde’ in 1627, ‘Tynsyde’ in 1634, ‘Tynesyd’ in 1653 and 1663, ‘Teynysyd’ in 1661 and ‘Tein-side’ in 1839; it is ‘Teensydhall’ on both Blaeu’s 1654 map and Gordon’s c. 1650 map).

Teindside Brig (teend-süd-brig) n. bridge across the Teviot just after Teindside. It was built as part of the development of the toll road, which became the A7, perhaps around 1762. At the same time as it was built the road was improved from the bridge to Teindside farm, past the Horse Pool. A new bridge was built around the 1930s. A farm adjacent to the bridge was formerly known by the same name and also called ‘Teindsidebrae’. Alexander Miller was tenant there in 1797, when it is ‘Tiendside Bridge’. Hugh Johnstone and John Cairns and families lived there in 1841 and 1851.

Teindside Burn (tünd-süd-burn) n. stream that joins the Teviot (from roughly the north-west) near Teindside. It forms part of the probable boundary line of the Catrail. The lands there are listed along with Teinside among the lands inherited by the Baron of Hawick in 1615. The Teindside Hill

Lands there were purchased by the Scotts of Buccleuch about 1660. As it runs down from Slaidhills there is a waterfall in a ravine. A little further down there was once a cottage, marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. Walter Hogg was farmer there in 1797 (it is ‘Tynessydburne’ in 1615, ‘Teysdideburne’ in the mid-17th century, ‘Teinsideburn’ about 1755 and ‘Teindsideburn’ in 1797; ‘Teindburnfoot’ is marked on Stobo’s map of 1770).

Teindside Hill (tiindsidhili)n. hill lying on the north side of the upper Teviot valley, north of Teindside Lodge. Its contains the remains of 2 hill-forts, almost obliterated by cultivation. The one near the summit probably measured about 120 m by 65 m, while the one to the south sits on a rocky knoll, measuring about 60 m by 20 m, with a deep ditch on the north side. There were local excavations there by Mr. Govenlock in 1873, finding a ‘hut eight feet square’. There is a further fort just to the north-west near Slaidhill. Additionally, there is a modern cairn, called ‘Bert’s Cairn’, with an inscribed stone.

Teindside Ludge (tiindsildluj, -loj)n. house in Teviot Head, also known as Commonside Cottage, situated on the side road to Commonside. It was once a farmhouse on the Buccleuch estate. Recently and part of the house has been let out for holiday accommodation. Just inside the entrance gate is a turf-covered cairn about 15 m in diameter.

Teindsideslope (tiindsisdlop)n. former farmstead near Teindside. In the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls John Irvine is recorded as farmer there, with 3 working horses. David Cairns and Robert Walker lived there in 1841 and Constable Michael Oliver in 1851 (also written as ‘Teindside Slope’; it is ‘Tieandyslop’ in 1797).

teind yaird (tiindyard)n., arch. a yard used to store the produce collected as tithes – ‘Item, to James Scott, servant, for keiping of the teynd yaird of Hawik, bigging the dykes therof, and heiding the stakes of the samyn the said year, eightine pundes’ [SB1633].

Teinside (teenisid)n. alternative version of Teindside.

Tei’ot (teei’, ti’i)n., arch. Teviot – ‘...an thegither oo turnt ti the richt for the Teiot an the coonyt toon’ [ECS], ‘...And troots that i’ the Tei’ot tipple’ [DH], ‘As by his haugh the Tei’ot rummle’[DH] (a contracted spelling to denote the older pronunciation; also written ‘Teiot’ and ‘Tei’ot’).

teir see teer

Teisday (tiizdi)n. Tuesday – ‘I got to Berwick on Monday afternoon, and was unco weel on Teisday morning ....’ [RW], ‘My friends, be thankufl that Sabbath is upon the day that its on, for had it been a Tysday ye wad hae been at Jeddart, or if a Thursdy ye wad hae been at Hawick’ [JW] (also written ‘Tysday’; cf. the more modern Tuesdi).

teitim (ti-tim)n. teatime – ‘A’ll sei ee the back o teitim’ (note the usual pronunciation of the second syllable; also tei-time).

Tei-time (ti-tim)n. teatime – ‘A was verrih mensefi at tei-time: A duist tuik yeh cup’ [ECS].

Telfer (tei-fur, tal-fur)n. Andrew (1734–1804) from Southdean Parish. In 1761 he married Christian Lillico (1736–1815) in Hobkirk Parish. His children, baptised in Southdean Parish, included: George (b.1762); James (b.1765); Marion (b.1767); William (b.1769); Elizabeth (b.1771); Isabel (b.1773); and John (b.1781), father of James ‘the poetic schoolmaster’ of Saughtree. Andrew (b.1784/5) from Crailing Parish, he was farmer at Roundabouts in Chesters in 1851. His wife was Euphemia and their children included Jessie and William (who took over running the farm). His widow was recorded at Roundabouts in 1861. Andrew (b.1808/9) from Hownam he was a shepherd at Jedhead in Southdean Parish. His wife was Mina and their children included John, Helen and Anne. Rev. Charles (1693–1731) minister of Hawick Parish 1723–31. He was the son of an Edinburgh Magistrate, also Charles, who was Captain of the Trained Band. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1712, was licenced by Edinburgh Presbytery in 1719 (after reluctantly signing the Confession of Faith) and came to Hawick in 1721 as an assistant to Robert Cunningham. He helped lead sermons in Hawick while the minister was in ill-health. He was presented as the new Minister by Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch at the end of 1722 and ordained early the following year (after the Hawick elders petitioned the Presbytery ‘for putting a quick end of Mr Talefer’s tryals’). He is said to have borrowed heavily from Shaftsbury’s ‘Characteristics’ and other essayists for his sermons, and to have had an ascetic temper and a high opinion of himself. In 1724 he complained about drunkeness at the Common Riding and in 1725 he proposed... that 2 members of the Kirk Session should inspect ‘the families on this town who give ale or brandie, either at the outgoing or incoming of the horsemen and footmen’. But, surprisingly, he reported afterwards that ‘he was well pleased with the deportment and behaviour of those who were at the riding of the Common’. He is recorded preaching before the Lord High Commissioner in 1730 and was called before the Committee on Overtures the next day ‘for certain comparisons which he had used’, but the objections were dropped without censure. He married Katherine Elliot of Arkelton (widow of David Laing of Westerkirk) in 1727 in Hawick, and she lived until at least 1746. Christian Lillico (1835–1909) daughter of James, Schoolmaster at Saughtree. She ran a small school near Sandholm, at the junction of the Liddel and Hermitage Waters, also known as the ‘Brig End Schuil’. She was teacher there in at least the 1860s. Confusingly, she was known as ‘Catherine’, as well as ‘Christina’. She died in Newcastleton. Christina (b.1796/7) toll-house keeper at the Townhead Toll in Newcastleton. She was a widow in 1861, with daughter Elspeth and grand-daughter Christina. David (b.1824/5) son of John, he was farmer at Braidaugh in Hobkirk Parish in the 1860s. In 1861 he was farmer of 500 acres there, employing 4 labourers. David (1945/6–2010) from Hawick, he joined Aberdeen Journals in 1973, becoming motoring correspondent, business correspondent, industrial correspondent and business editor. He was then editor of North of Scotland Publications, before returning to the position of business reporter. He married Moira and had children Ross, Robbie, Colin and Lesley. Elizabeth ‘Betsy’ (b.1828/9) born in Hawick Parish, she was daughter of Jane, who was teacher at the girls’ school set up in Cavers in the mid-19th century. By 1861 she was the main teacher at Cavers Cottages, with Margaret Grierson as assistant teacher. George (17th C.) tenant near Adderstoneshiel listed in 1684 among those declared as fugitives for being a Covenanter. He could be the George ‘Telfoord’ listed as shepherd at Addeerstoneshiel among the ‘deficient’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. George (18th C.) merchant in Hawick who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. George (18th/19th C.) master of the English School in Hawick until 1822. James (18th C.) recorded being in Southdean Parish in 1747 when his marriage to Anne Maxwell was announced in Melrose Parish, with John Young as cautioner. James (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Dinlabyre. He was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. James (18th/19th C.) baker on the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. James (b.1797/8) from Langholm, he was an inn-keeper in Newcastleton. In the 1850s he was proprietor of the Buccleuch Arms on North Hermitage Street. His wife was Janet and they had a daughter Mary. In 1852 his name was given as ‘Telford’. James (1800–62) son of shepherd John and Isabella Taylor, with his step-mother being Anne Davidson. He was born in Soutdean Parish, although the census records of 1851 and 1861 state he was born in Oxnam Parish. He had 2 aunts who lived in a cottage near Battlingburn in Southdean Parish, and a story is told of one of them seeing a ‘spunkie’ (i.e. ‘will-o’-the-wisp’) the night the other one died. He was a great admirer of the ‘Ettrick Shepherd’, who he got to know in his youth. He was self-taught, becoming schoolmaster in Castleton in 1827 and was at Saughtree from 1834 until he died. He was listed at Saughtree among heads of households in 1835–41. He was recorded as master of the auxiliary parochial school at Saughtree in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was inspired to write through the encouragement of James Hogg, the Ettrick Shepherd. He was referred to as the poetic schoolmaster of Saughtree in Liddesdale, since he wrote several ballads, including the long ‘The Gloomyne Bucht’ about an encounter between a shepherdess and a fairy. A version of the ballad ‘The Death of Parcy Reed’ was transcribed by him from an old woman called Kitty Hall (who lived at Fairloans near the head of the Kale). He published poems in the Newcastle Magazine, among other places. His first book was ‘Border Ballads and other Miscellaneous Poems’ (1824, republished in 1852), which was dedicated to the Ettrick Shepherd; although it contains language that is rather pastoral (i.e. flowery), nevertheless it contains many dialect words that were probably common at the time and would otherwise be unrecorded. ‘The Gloomyne Bucht’ was published on its own in 1843 and was additionally contained within Vol. II of ‘Local Historian’s Tablebook’ in 1844. He also wrote a novel ‘Barbara Gray, or the Widow’s Daughter: A Narrative of Humble Life’ (1835). It is said that he never earned more than £20 per year, and so must have struggled to raise a family. His house was a simple ‘but and ben’, with the ‘but’ being where his family stayed, and the ‘ben’ being the schoolroom. It was described how he would sometimes tell his class ‘in a quiet, conversational way, and in the pure Border doric, of what he had been reading', including treating them to 'a captivating lecture on the tales and traditions of our Borderland'. He married Janet Beattie (1802–89); she is recorded living at Saughtree in 1841 along with their children Margaret, Christian and Janet (he himself being absent). In 1851 the family were at Saughtree Schoolhouse (with Margaret having moved away by then). In 1861 his daughter Christian was living with them and described as a teacher; she ran a small school near Sandholm, at the junction of the Liddel and Hermitage Waters. They also had a train driver lodging with them in 1861. His children included: Margaret (b.1833); Catherine Lillico (1835–1909); and Janet Armstrong Stavert (1839–1911), who died in Liverpool. One of his daughters had a son, Telfer John Telfer, who died in 1889, aged 25. His wife Janet died at Bankend. The family are buried in Old Castleton Cemetery. James (b.1821/2) shepherd at Wormsleuch in Castleton Parish. His wife was Christian and their children included Andrew, Margaret, John, James, Mary and Thomas. James ‘Jim’ (1941– ) born between Gala and Melrose, he played rugby for Melrose and gained 25 caps for Scotland. He became Scottish Coach, leading the team to the 1984 Grand Slam. He trained as a teacher, eventually becoming Rector of the High School 1984–93. During some of this time the school was nicknamed ‘the Rugby Academy’. He left to become the Scottish Rugby Union’s Director of Rugby. Jane nee Bunyan (b.1805) daughter of Thomas, she was born in Cavers Parish, where she married James in 1827. By 1841 she was a widow, working as a dressmaker at West Middle. By 1851 she was teacher at a school for girls in Cavers. Her daughter Elizabeth (‘Betsy’) and Jemima assisted at the school, with another relative Catherine Rutherford also being an assistant teacher. She was presumably dead by 1861, when Elizabeth was the main teacher at the school. John (17th C.) resident of Peilbrae listed among the ‘deficient’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) recorded as a householder at Branxholme Park on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Perhaps the same John ‘Coater’ at Branxholme witnessed a baptism for Walter Cook (gardener at Branxholme) in 1740. John (18th C.) beadle at Hawick Kirk in the 1740s. He is recorded as ‘Kirk Officer’ when he witnessed baptisms in 1737 and 1745. He may also be the John who witnessed another baptism in 1738. John (18th C.) shepherd at Braedlie on Hermitage Water in about 1750. John (18th C.) listed along with Thomas as owner of lands in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1788, valued at £10. These were among the lands formerly held by the feuars of Lilliesleaf. They were still recorded as owners in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Whitehaugh in Castleton Parish, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. John (1781–60) shepherd from Southdean Parish, son of Andrew and Christian Lillico. He was shepherd at Carewoodrig in 1851, living there with his wife Ann, daughters Isabella and Mary, son-in-law John Scott and 2 grandchildren. He married Isabella Taylor and secondly married Anne Davidson (1784–1862). With his first wife he had James (1800–62), the ‘poetic schoolmaster’ of Saughtree. Later children (born in Hownam Parish) were: Andrew (1808–86); William (1810–82); Margaret (1812–71), who died at Flatt; Christian (b.1814); Thomas (1817–84); Isobel (b.1819); and John (1822–38), who died at Todlaw. He died at Dykeraw and the family are buried in Chesters Kirkyard. John (b.1789/90) from Westerkirk Parish, he was farmer at Braithwaugh in Hob Kirk Parish. In 1851 he was farmer there of 150 arable acres and 400 acres of pasture, employing 5 people. He was deceased by 1861, with his sons David and Walter taking over the farm. His wife was Isabella and their children included David, Walter, Betsy, Mina and Agnes. John (b.1834) son of William and Catherine Hume, he was born in Southdean Parish. In 1861 he was shepherd at Carewoodrig. He was living there with his wife Jane, daughter Janet, a domestic servant and 2 assistant shepherds. He was surely related to the earlier John who was at Carewoodrig. Mark (b.1826/7) from Nichol Forest in Cumberland, he was a carrier in Newcastleton. In 1861 he was on Whitchester Street. His wife was Ann and he had a niece Betsy. Patrick (18th C.) tenant in Hassendean listed in 1684 among those declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. Richard (19th C.) farmer at Gillbraehead in 1868. Robert (18th C.) blacksmith in Hawick. In 1760 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker John Oliver. In 1766 he witnessed a baptism for wright Gideon Easton. He may be the Robert who was paid by the Council in 1755 for the use of his horse ‘to Kelso, pressed by Bailie Turnbull, with a shouldier [soldier] and his wife’. Robert (b.1803/4) clogger living on North Hemitage Street in Newcastleton in 1851 and 1861. He was listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Elizabeth and they had a son, John. Thomas (18th C.) listed along with John as owner of lands in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1788, valued at £10. These were among the lands formerly held by the feuars of Lilliesleaf. They were still recorded as owners in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. Walter (17th C.) shepherd in Ormiston listed among the ‘deficient’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His name is written ‘Telfoord’, but he was surely related to other Telfers living nearby. Walter (1800–57) born in Hawick, 2nd son of William. He trained as a silk merchant in Edinburgh and spent 2 years in Jamaica settling an uncle’s estate before training as a doctor in Edinburgh. In 1824 he emigrated to Stamford (Niagara Falls), Upper Canada. He established a medical practice at Niagara and moved to Toronto in 1835 and sat on several medical bodies. He became Superintendent of the Provisional Lunatic Asylum in 1845, but was dismissed in 1848 over charges that he vigorously denied. He then returned to private practice. He married Euphemia Denham and they had 1 daughter. Walter (b.1827/8) son of John, he was farmer at Braidaugh near Bonchester in 1868. He was brother of David, who was farmer at Braidaugh before him. William (17th C) tenant in Howpasley. Along with Thomas Pott (also in Howpasley) and several other men from the upper Borthwick, he was charged in 1685 with being a Covenanter. However, all the men took the ‘Test’ and promised not to frequent conventicles. William (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Westshiels in Southdean Parish in 1797 according to the Dog Tax Rolls. William (18th/19th C.) hosiery manufacturer of the early 19th century, recorded on the High Street on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He could be the Telfer with property on the south side of the east end of the High Street on Wood’s 1824 map. He was listed on Melgund Place in 1837 and 1841. He married Fanny Elliot, and their children were: Fanny (1823); Robert (b.1825); Thomas (b.1827); Mary (b.1829); Isabella; and William. William (18th/19th C.) wright and wood dealer on the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. The death of his unnamed child is recorded in 1810. William (18th/19th C.) recorded in 1837 as a carrier operating between Denholm, Hawick and Jedburgh. He left from the Black Bull in Hawick bound for Jedburgh and Kelso every Wednesday according to Pigot’s 1837 directory. William (b.1811) son of James and Betty Hutton. He was a grocer in Newcastle, and later worked as a gardener. In 1861 he was on North Hermitage Street. He married Elizabeth, daughter of William Hardie and Violet Douglas. They had a daughter Violet (1851–1924), who married James B. Murray and lived in Edinburgh. William (b.1809/10) born in Hownam Parish, he was a shepherd in Southdean Parish. In 1851 and 1861 he was at Letham, also known as ‘Burns’. He married Catherine Hume and their children included: John (b.1834), who was shepherd at Carewoodrig; James (b.1836); George (b.1838); Jane (b.1840); Anne (b.1842); Andrew Hunter Cowan (b.1845); Margaret (b.1847); William (b.1849); and Thomas (b.1853). William (b.1813/4) from Cummertrees in Dumfriesshire. In 1851 he was shepherd at Dykeheads in Hobkirk Parish and in 1861 was living at Hallrule Cottages. He firstly married Helen Burnet and secondly married Isabella Scott. His children included Eliza (b.1846), Agnes Mitchell (b.1854), William (b.1855), Robert and Ann (b.1861). Rev. William (19th C.) said to be from Hawick. He was an arts and divinity student at Edinburgh University from 1819 to 1830 and was then at St. Mary’s College, St. Andrews for a year. He was minister at Eday in 1845 and South Yell from 1845. Rev. William (1818–86) born in Hawick, he became an evangelical preacher. He was assistant at Ryton in Durham, then at Queen Street Leeds 1857–60, Glossop, Derbyshire from 1860, Whittlesey (Independent Chapel), Cambridgeshire 1864–77 and Carlisle Chapel, Kennington from 1877. William (b.1824/5) son of Andrew. He is recorded as farmer at Roundabouts in Chesters in 1861, farming 93 acres and employing 2 people. William (19th C.) shepherd at Pietsnest on Hyndlee farm. He was known as one of the best players at Hobkirk Baa. However, after shaking off his opponents in the river and carrying off the ball, he is said to have remained too long in his wet clothes and died in a shivering fit. He left a widow and children. William (19th C.) grocer at 1 Buccleuch Street from 1859 (spelled ‘Tailfer’, ‘Tailfour’, ‘Talefer’, ‘Talefert’, ‘Taylfor’, ‘Telfair’, ‘Telfoord’, ‘Telfour’, etc. in early records).
Telio’s Temperance Hotels

(1914/15–91) born in Wilton Crescent, he worked at Lockie’s, then joined the L.N.E.R., where he was a porter, guard and ticket collector at Hawick Station. He served with the Border Regiment in WWII, transferring to the Manchester Regiment and then the R.O.A.C., where he became sergeant. He then served as High School Janitor 1950–80, being a familiar figure for 3 decades of pupils. Richard (1837–92) born in Canonbie Parish (as ‘Telfer’), son of John and Jane Bell. He became a policeman with the Borders Police, and was later Governor of the Hawick Poor House, starting some time after 1881. He married Margaret Jane Mathison, who acted as matron at the Poor House. He died of a heart attack while working there. Thomas (16th C.) resident of Whithope recorded in 1549, among a list of the tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme who complained about the Kers ravaging their farms. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Lymiecleuch, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Reidmoss in Castleton Parish on the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. Thomas (1757–1834) engineer born at Glendinning on the Meggat Water, in Westerkirk Parish, not far from Langholm. He was famous for road, canal and bridge construction, including the Menai Suspension Bridge in Wales. He worked on the Langholm Bridge over the Esk as an apprentice stonemason, and gave a bequest to keep the Westerkirk Library going in Bentpath and another to establish a library in Langholm. He was one of the first to suggest a Borders railway line, specifically a horse-drawn railway running from Berwick to Glasgow. He also published a poem ‘Eskdale’, which was printed in Hawick in the ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. Locally he was sometimes known as ‘Laughing Tom’. He was buried in Westminster Abbey. William (b.1810/1) from Langholm, he was recorded as steward at Todshawhill in Robertson Parish in 1861. His wife was Janet and they had a daughter, Mina. William (19th C.) recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory as teacher at Castleton. It is unclear who he was or where exactly the school was located. It is possible this was an error for James Telfer. William Pattison (1836–1922) son of William Pattison and Elizabeth Murray. He was born in Newcastle and educated in Dumfriesshire and then in Ontario, Canada. He worked as a stone-cutter and a teacher, later becoming a banker. He was elected a member of the Canadian House of Commons for Grey North in 1904, but was defeated in 1908. His son, William Pattison, Junior, was also a Canadian Member of Parliament (formerly spelled ‘Tailford’, ‘Tailfourd’, ‘Talliefir’, ‘Tyflood’, etc., and once probably the same as ‘Telfer’).

Telio’s (tee-lee-øj) n. cafe, chip shop, and ice-cream shop run by Telio Gonella (apparently he was named after the village the family came from) in the mid-20th century on Dickson Street. There was another shop for a while on Green Terrace, and Telio also ran the hut near the top of the Loan as a fish and chip shop.

teld (teld) pp. told – ‘A was teld that if A was for a richt denner A wad need ti trodge on ti Jethart’ [ECS], ‘...A Wasna boass, { if the truith be teld, A was riftin-fowe!’ [ECS], (also written ‘teld’; this is a less common variant of telt).

tell (tel) v., poet. to count out money – ’...Aye, and tell me the monie on my cloak lap; For there’s no ae fardin i’ll trust thee. Fula, &c.’ [CPM].

tellin (te-lin) n. a warning or scolding, usually in the phrase ‘to take a tellin’, meaning to heed an instruction – ‘wull ee no take a tellin laddie?’.

tell ower (tel-ow-ur) v., arch. to recount, narrate, tell again – ‘Jethart Castle! A body was tellt us a’...’[JRE], ‘...an’ aw dinna believe aw ever tellt the story to aboon half-a-dozen folk in ma life’ [BCM1880], ‘I telt ye sae’, is aye his tellt ee?, ‘waht telt ye?’[JRE], ‘...an’ aw dinna believe aw ever tellt the story to aboon half-a-dozen folk in ma life’ [BCM1880], ‘I telt ye sae’, is aye his sang Wi’ doleful satisfaction’ [WP], ‘...But brash and brazen she raised her voice And telt her grim and deevilish choice’ [WL] (sometimes written ‘teltt’ or ‘tell’t’; cf. the less common telt; it is always ‘told’ in standard English).

telt (tel, telt) pp. told – ‘A’ve telt ee yince’, ‘whae telt ee?’; ‘daes ee’r telt’, ‘ee telt me’, ‘it’s better felt than telt’, ‘a wee birdie telt is’, ‘We shook his hand and o’ sic lore, Was telt, and he wad tell us a’...’[JRE], ‘...an’ aw dinna believe aw ever tellt the story to aboon half-a-dozen folk in ma life’ [BCM1880], ‘I telt ye sae’, is aye his sang Wi’ doleful satisfaction’ [WP], ‘...But brash and brazen she raised her voice And telt her grim and deevilish choice’ [WL] (sometimes written ‘teltt’ or ‘tell’t’; cf. the less common telt; it is always ‘told’ in standard English).

Temperance Hall (tem-pu-rins-hal, tem-prins-haw) n. former meeting hall at 6 Croft Road, the site now occupied by the Salvation Army Citadel. It was constructed in 1879 and initially run by Miss Thomson, a daughter of the local minister. In about 1900 it was converted into a picture house, ‘The Theatre’.

Temperance Hotels (tem-pu-rins-hō-tel) n. alcohol-free hotels, which were popular in the latter 19th century, some lasting until WWII. In Hawick the Douglas Temperance Hotel was situated on the Tower Knowe, where the Office Bar is now, the Temperance Movement

Gibson’s was on Bridge Street, Inglis’s on Teviotside Terrace, Pringle’s on Union Street, and the Washington Hotel at the ‘Coffin End’. The Buccleuch and Victoria Hotels were also temperance for a time, and there were others, such as Blaikie’s Temperance Hotel.

the Temperance Movement (thu-tem-purins-naov-min’) n. a social trend to recognise the evils of alcohol, which flourished towards the end of the 19th century, and died out between the Wars. The British Association for the Promotion of Temperance was formed in 1835 and, supported by some of the churches, it led to organised signing of teetotal declarations and the setting up of rigorously teetotal establishments. Locally the first such organisation was started in 1832, but still allowed the drinking of beers. The Hawick Total Abstinence Society was founded in 1838, with members pledging to avoid all intoxicating beverages. They lasted into the early 20th century, and had a popular annual soiree. There were also the Temperance Hotels (some lasting until WWII), the Temperance Burns Club, and even Temperance tents up the Muir. In 1920 a referendum to have alcohol banned in Hawick was opposed by a majority – ‘Ye’ve been the cause o’ muckle wae, O’ meikle scaith and scorn; I’ll sign the pledge this very day! Fareweel, John Barleycorn!’ [JT].

Tempest (tem-pist) n. Sir John of Hertford (d.bef. 1379) son of Sir John of Bracelaw, and younger brother of the next Sir John of Bracelaw. His brother Peter married Mary Douglas of Liddesdale. He was English Sheriff of Roxburgh and Berwick, as well as Governor of the Castles of Berwick, Roxburgh and Scarborough in the period 1351–75. He married 3 times. Sir Thomas (c.1476–1543/4) son of Robert of Holmside, he served in many positions in the north of England. He was in joint charge, along with Sir William Bulmer, of the force that burned Jedburgh in 1523. This raid led to his knighthood. His brother Peter married Mary Douglas of Liddesdale. His children included: Alison, Betsy, William, Andrew, Thomas and James.

Temple (tem-pul) n. James (18th C.) listed as owner of a ‘House and Yard’ in Minto Parish in 1779, valued at £1 16s 7d. It was owned by Lord Minto in 1811. James (d.bef. 1841) joiner of the High Street, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In the 1841 census his wife Helen Oliver and 5 children were living at about 33 High Street, with his sons carrying on the cabinet-maker’s business. His children included: Helen (b.1805); James (b.1807); Robert (b.1810); Janet (b.1811); Alexander (b.1813); Marion (b.1815); and John. James (b.1807/8) son of James. He was listed as a High Street joiner in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was a master joiner and cabinet-maker, employing 7 men, at about 55 High Street. His wife was Jane and their children included Margaret and Robert. R. (17th/18th C.) recorded being paid in 1722 for a ‘jist to the steeple’. He was thus probably a wright or joiner in Hawick. Robert (1771/2–1827) surgeon in Newcastle. He subscribed to (to 2 copies of William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was also listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) Elliot (1777/8–c.1858). She is recorded in 1841 as ‘Ind’ at about 2 South Hermitage Street; in 1851 she was listed as a grocer, maiden name Elliot, living with her widowed daughter Kitty Scott (nee Temple) and grand-daughter Helen Scott. His daughter Catherine (or ‘Kitty’) married Matthew Scott in 1836 and secondly married James Crosby in 1851. He was recorded as a surgeon at Nether Stone in Newcastleton Parish at the end of the 18th century, when he had children baptised there. His children included: Helen (b.1797), who married and moved to Canada; and Janet (b.1799), also known as ‘Jessie’, who married (probably a Robson) in Newcastle. He was buried at Etterton. Thomas (b.1805/6) born in Minto Parish, he was toll-keeper at Spittal. He was recorded at Spittal Bar in 1851 and in 1861 was a Miller living at 10 Allars Crescent. His wife was Jane and their children included Alison, Betsy, William, Andrew, Thomas and James.

Temple Croft (tem-pul-kroft) n. former name for a piece of land on Minto estate. It was among lands whose liferent was held by Rev. Robert Elliot from 1779. It was listed in 1779 and 1811, along with ‘Notman-shot’, with a joint value of £76 16s 8d (it was ‘Templecrotts’ in 1780).

Templehaa (tem-pul-haw, -hal) n. Templehall, farm east of Harwood, near Wauchope. David Crozier ‘at the Tempilhall’ is recorded among men of Liddesdale in 1494/5 and 1500, although whether this was the same place is uncertain. It was for a long time part of the Harwood estate. In 1538 and 1539 the lands were valued along with Wauchopebank at 40 shillings, and occupied by Patrick Turnbull. There is a 1567 charter of the lands, together with Brewlands, granted by James Sandilands (Lord Torphichen) to Andrew Turnbull (son of David of Wauchope). In 1605 there was an action by Jean and Beatrix, daughters of the deceased Walter Turnbull of Wauchope, to remove their mother Marion Lorraine and several Turnbulls from their lands of Templehall and Brewlands. They later passed to George Turnbull of Wauchope, then to Sir James Douglas of Mordington in 1627 and later to the Earl of Lothian. The Earl of Lothian paid tax on £300 for his lands there in about 1663. It is marked `Tempil halt' on Blaeu's map. It was listed as a 4-pound land in 1678, when inherited by William Kerr of Abbotrule. At about that time it must have been valued at £229 15s 4d (based on Kerr of Abbotrules other lands). Adam Murray was tenant there in 1694. The farm then passed from William Kerr of Abbotrule to William Elliot of Wolfelee in 1751 and then immediately to Henry Elliot of Harwood. In 1794 and 1797 the tenants were John and Thomas Clerk. In 1788 the farm was listed among those owned by William Elliot of Harwood and valued at £229 15s 4d. In about 1811 it was still part of the Harwood estate and valued at £262 10s. John Elliot was there in the early part of the 19th century and James Smith was farmer there in the 1860s. It is also the name of a hill to the south-west, between the Lurgies Burn and the Wauchope Burn. Just north-west of the farm are the remains of a settlement, with the most visible feature being a 75-m long crescent-shaped ridge. On the slope to the south are the remains of an ancient cairn. There is also a place of the same name near Lilliesleaf that is suggested to have had connections with the Knight's Templar, with a 'Temple' near St. Boswells perhaps having a similar origin (it is 'Templilhall' in 1538, 1539 and 1604 and 'Timpilh' in 1663; it is marked 'Tempil hilt' on Blaen's 1654 map and has its modern spelling by Stobie's 1770 map).

n. Templehall Common, the commony associated with the neighbouring lands, with uncertain history. Its division was discussed at least as early as 1719, and in 1734 it was arranged by James, Lord Cranston, and William Kerr of Abbotrule. At that point it was possessed by the tenants of Wauchope and Templehall. It could be the same place marked 'Wauchope Common' on the modern Ordnance Survey map, to the east of Templehall Hill.

Templehaa Hill (tem-pul-haw-hil)

n. Templehall Hill, hill in the southern part of Hobkirk Parish, south-west of Templehall and to the east of Lurgiescleuch. It reaches a height of 342m. Near the summit is an old cairn about 10 m across and on the southern ridge there is another almost twice as big, now quite denuded and within the forest.

Templehaashiel (tem-pul-haw-sheel)

n. Templehallshiel, former farmstead in Hobkirk Parish, on the western banks of the Wauchope Burn, near Templehall. William Elliot was shepherd there in the mid-to-late 18th century, Alexander Lillico shortly before 1788 and John Elliot lived there in the 1810s (it is marked on Stobie's 1770 map).

Templelands (tem-pul-lawndz)

n. former lands in Liddesdale, listed as 'Tempyllandys' in the c.1376 rental roll. They were part of the lands owned by the church, but their precise location is uncertain (there is a place of the same name in Oxnam Parish).

the Temple o the Muses (thu-tem-pul-o-thu-mew-zeez)

n. monument in the form of a classical Greek pavillion, erected in 1817 by David Erskine as a memorial to the poet James Thomson (of 'The Seasons' and 'Rule Britannia' fame). It is situated on Bass Hill beside the Tweed, and near to Erskine's house at Dryburgh. It contains a bust of Thomson, and the original statue of Apollo having long since disappeared a new statue by Siobhan O’Hehir replaced it.

n., arch. a tenant – ‘...and to becum tennand to me and thaim of the samyn' [SB1470].

tenandry (te-naundree)

tenement (te-ne-min’)

n., arch. a piece of land in a town held under some form of tenure and often built upon – ‘...upon ane tenement of land of his in Hawick, lyand betwixt the land of James Brown on the north part ...’ [JW1558].

n. Rev. Joseph (c.1575–c.1633) from Listonshiel, he was son of John of Cairns, Mid-Calder. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1595, was licensed in 1598 and ordained at Traquair in 1599. He was translated to Bedrule in 1601/2. He added responsibility for Abbotrule in 1605, when he is recorded being present to the parsonage and vicarage on the death of Alexander Crichton. He appears to have been translated back to Bedrule again in 1608/9 and the reality appears to be that he held both benefices simultaneously for about 15 years. In 1616 he had a bond with Robert Turnbull in Bedrule. He witnessed a bond for Walter Turnbull of Bedrule in 1623 (also said by Tarcre to have been witnessed by Thomas Tennant in Ruescastle, but this may be an error for Thomas Tennant). He appears to have been deprived in about 1621, when Abbotrule was again disjoined from Bedrule. He is still recorded as a resident in Bedrule in mid-1632 (leasing ‘Roullis land’). He died before the end of 1633 (probably unmarried), when his brother John of Cairnies became heir to a tenement in Edinburgh and land at ‘Listounschellis’. Katharine see Katharine Elliot (also spelled ‘Tennent’).

Tennant’s Map (te-nints-map) n. map of Roxburghshire published in 1840 and surveyed by N. Tennant. It was the most detailed map of the county before the Ordnance Survey. This can also refer to Walter Tennant’s ‘Plan of the Town of Hawick and Environs’, which was published in 1850, and again is the best record of the layout of Hawick streets and buildings before the large-scale Ordnance Survey maps.

tennis (te-nis) n. raquet ball game traditionally played by people in white outfits near Langlands Bridge. The game was played informally in the mid-19th century, with later tournaments on the cricket field. Early enthusiasts included J.R. Carmichael, J.B. Sime, G.C. Glenny, C.J. Glenny, James Barrie, George Murray Wilson, Elliot Oliver, George Grier, James Locke, and T. Lindsay Watson. A club was formed in the 1880s, and cinder courts laid down at the site below the cottage hospital. The club wound up in 1893, and the courts were abandoned. George Heron Wilson gifted the courts beside the cricket field to the High School in the 1920s, and the courts in Wilton Lodge Park were built much more recently.

tent (ten’, tent) n., arch. heed, attention, care – ‘Tak tent o’ time, ere time be tient’ (inscription at 25 High Street), ‘I said, I wull tak tent til my wavies . . . ’ [HSR], ‘Hear the richt, O Lord; tent weel my crye’ [HSR], ‘A planteeet masel i the machine, takin tent no ti crack ma cantel as A claaam in’ [ECS], ‘. . . only take tent! aw was as sober as aw am enow’ [BCM1880], v. to tend, attend, watch over – ‘Where tenting ewes is a the trade, The brawest dress the tartan plaid’ [DA] (from Middle English).

tenter (ten-tur) n., arch. a frame for stretching cloth, specifically rails with hooks set up outside to dry and evenly stretch cloth after fulling. Large tracts of land around the centre of Hawick were once used for this purpose, e.g. the Commercial Road, Laing Terrace and Rosalee areas, as shown on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map – ‘. . . with its tenter-field for the drying of blankets scoured at the Under Damside . . . ’ [WAPJ] (this gave rise to the phrase ‘on tenterhooks’).

Tentifutie see Tentyfit

tenty (ten’-ee, ten-tee) adj., arch. heedful, attentive, careful – ‘I mankind’s ways hae marked weil Wi’ tentie, watchfu’ e’e’ [JoHa], ‘Come awa’, my little lambie, Toddle tenty, come to me; Weel ye like to get a hobble On yer auld grandfather’s knee’ [TCh], ‘Oh, cruel death! how could ye slay The tentic herd, sae auld and grey . . . ’ [TCh] (also written ‘tentie’).

Tentyfit (ten-tee-fi’) n. Tentyfoot, the local name for an old tower at Branxholme. It is the only remaining part of the former courtyard of walls and buildings around the Castle, the fragment now standing being about 15 feet high. It is a grade A listed building (also spelled ‘Tentifutie’ and variants).

ter (ter) n. tar – ‘ee’ve got ter aa ower yer new breeks’, ‘. . . and in summer, when the snuists are woarast an the pluiffin ter froes up atween the causa-stanes’ [ECS], note that the English phrase ‘tarred with the same brush’ more often involved a stick in Scotland – ‘. . . the sister. who was ‘tarred with the same stick’ . . . soon severed the troublesome foot from her leg’ [EM1820].

terce (ters) n., arch. the right of a widow to one third of the rents of her husband’s property, this right being by default until 1681. A document of 1553/4 shows a dispute over the right of ‘terce’ between Janet Ker, 2nd (and divorced) wife of the late Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Bucleuch and his grandson, the new Sir Walter.

Teri (tee-ree) n. someone from Hawick – ‘Then rally, Teries, yin and a’, Let this year be the best o’ a’ [RH], ‘Hark again the stirring strains! Rouse ye Teries from your slumber’ [RH], ‘... They’ll wish that they had ne’er been born Or else been born a Teri’ [JT], ‘... For Teries the wide world over Are Teries ever-more’ [TK], ‘There’s a welcome and a greeting from the Teri in the street, And a gladness in the knowledge that old Hawick’s hard to beat’ [WFC] (also occasionally written ‘Teerie’; deriving from an abbreviation of the ancient Hawick slogan; the plural is Teries).

Teribus (tee-ree-bus) interj. Short form of the Hawick slogan and battle-cry, ‘Teribus ye Teri-Odin’ – ‘O Teribus! thy magic spell, Thy sons shall own where’er they dwell [RH], ‘... And while the strains of Teribus float on the air Within each breast the life-blood proudly runs’ [JCG], ‘... For it still sticks close to us In the town of Teri-bus. Rally round, rally round, rally round’ [AW], ‘Cry aloud, ‘Teribus’, conquering terror’ [WIS] (various spellings exist).

Teribus (tee-ree-bus) n. The main Common Riding song, written by James Hogg in 1819, to a tune that is surely much older and effectively replacing the slightly earlier words of Arthur Balbirnie. It was originally called ‘The Colour’, and is distinguished from Hogg’s other main song ‘Flodden Field’, which has the same chorus (and is about the events of 1513, rather than 1514). The words were reprinted in 1824, 1829 and 1836, with several changes. The melody bears some similarity with tunes derived from Border (or Northumbrian) pipe music (e.g. ‘Bobby Shaftoe’ and the essentially identical tune called ‘Brave Wully Forster’ that exists in a 1694 manuscript, as well as the beginning of a piece of music attributed to Praetorius, but believed to have been originally by Caroubel around 1600). However, it is unclear whether this gives any hint as to its age or origin. The version played by the Drums and Fifes also has several variations compared with the tune that is sung. An older version of the tune survives (on a manuscript page in the Museum), and said to be the one played by Walter Ballantyne, town piper in 1777; it is a variant of the better known tune, seeming more like a pipe tune, and perhaps fitting the words to Balbirnie’s song better. Hogg’s words were first published in Kelso (partly because of the two satirical verses): it is sometimes also referred to as ‘The New Common Riding Song’, to distinguish it from Balbirnie’s song (the ‘Auld Sang’) of perhaps a generation earlier, which had the same tune. Hogg’s words were clearly influenced by Balbirnie’s (although perhaps they were both using phrases from even older lyrics). A version preceding Balbirnie’s c.1800 verses had as the chorus ‘T for Teri, O for Odin, H for Hawick and C for Common’, but none of the rest survives. It may be that the song was also once called ‘Drumlanrig’s March’. Hogg’s words are not entirely historically accurate, but that has not dampened their popularity. There were at one time suggestions for ‘improving’ the words to make them more factually correct, but this never caught on (it is unclear who wrote these improved words in the latter part of the 19th century, but they are now lost). Hogg’s full version contains 24 verses, although only a subset of 14 of them are commonly sung, and 2 of the more controversial verses were not printed along with the rest until significantly later. There are also 2 additional verses attributed to Hogg that are never included: one referring to Henry Scott ‘the Hero of Quebec’; and the other commemorating the tricentenary of 1814. A shorter 5 verse version of the song is sung at each Ride-out by the ‘Big 4’, after they have mounted for the ride back to Hawick, as well as on other occasions, such as at the Overseas Night on the Wednesday and in the Avenue on the Saturday; these verses begin ‘Scotia felt ...’, ‘After Flodden ...’, ‘Down they threw ...’, ‘Magistrates ...’ and ‘Peace by thy portion ...’. It is sung at St. Leonard’s after the Thursday night Chase, and in the same place after the Thursday and Friday morning Chases of Common Riding Week. Its singing also marks the end of the Colour Bussing on the Thursday. At the ‘Sang Singin’ on the Friday (after the return from the Mair) the Sang Singer sings the complete version. The verse beginning ‘Annual since our flag’s been carried ...’ is used for toasts to the Cornet, ‘High the trump of fame did raise them’ for the Right- and Left-Hand Men (only relatively recently) and ‘Magistrates be faithful trustees ...’ for the Acting Father. The Drums and Fifes also play the tune numerous times, such as when the Cornet is presented the letter on Pickin Night, on the site of the Auld Brig on the night of the Orderin o the Curds an Cream, at the Kirk Wynd at the start of proceedings on the Friday, as the official party march from the top of the Mill Path to the Song Singing, and on the Saturday when the mounted procession passes them at Drumlanrig Place, and at the Handing-Back ceremony – ‘Teerie buss and teerie heather, Aye the ewe lap o’er the heather!’ [JR], ‘... Sings ‘Teribus’ wi’ right goodwill On pyramid or steeple’ [MG], ‘A’ man, if ye was to play any other tune now but ‘Teribus’, the toun o’ Hawick wad rise.’ [RM]

Teribus (te-ri-boos) n. pipe march (in 2/4 time and D Major), which is similar, although quite distinct from the traditional Hawick song. The tune is very similar to ‘Bobby Shaftoe’ (otherwise known as ‘In and out the dusty bluebells’), much more so than the familiar Hawick song. Although it is a standard of many pipe tune compilations, it is not generally known to be associated with Hawick, although the name surely means there is some connection. It is unclear when it was first published, and hence it is possible that both it and the ‘Auld Sang’ derive from the same basic tune sometime pre-1800. However, the first definite appearance is in the ‘Scots Guards’ collection of 1954, and so it is also possible that this was merely a personal version from an unknown piper of the early 20th century, or simply an error in the naming of the tune. Note that some web-sites and published discussions erroneously assume this is exactly the same as the Common Riding tune. To further confuse matters there is an earlier version of the tune for the song ‘Teribus’ known, this being in 4/4 time and being a variant of the modern melody, but again with only a passing similarity to this pipe tune.

Teribus (te-ri-boos) n. Sir John (14th C.) listed as ‘Johne de Teribus’ when he witnessed a charter confirming the church of Cavers to Melrose Abbey in 1384. He also witnessed a document relating to the lands of Penangushope and Cauldcleuch in about 1360. It is presumably a coincidence that his name is similar to Hawick’s slogan.

the Teribus Arms (thu-tee-ree-bus-armz) n. public house in the Fore Raw in the mid-19th century, opening around 1840. The early proprietor was Michael Wintrup. A glass gin bottle labelled ‘Teribus Arms’ is in the Museum.

the Teribus Clock (thu-tee-ree-bus-klok) n. unique ornamental clock outside Hamish Smith’s jeweller’s shop at the Horse since 1996. It was designed and constructed locally, and features 3 horses with riders in Common Riding regalia, which appear every quarter hour, while the chimes play ‘Teribus’.

teribus.com (tee-ree-bus-do’-kom) n. web-site dedicated to all things Hawick, set up by Cameron Reith in 2001.

the Teribus Spitfire (thu-tee-ree-bus-spi’-fir) n. presentation Spitfire fighter aircraft, funded from £5,325 raised by townspeople during ‘Spitfire Week’ in August 1940. It was probably a Mark I Spitfire, identity number R7128, and possibly shot down on 8th July 1941.

Teribus ye Teri-Odin (tee-ree-bu-see-tee-ree-ô-din) interj. the Hawick slogan, whose origin is lost in the mists of time. A popular theory is that it derives from the Anglian ‘Tyr haeb us, ye Tyr ye Odin’ meaning ‘Thor keep us, both Thor and Odin’. However, there is no evidence that Norse gods were ever worshipped in the Borders, and moreover, the period in which the area around Hawick was under the dominance of the Anglans of Northumbria (and hence speaking a version of Anglo-Saxon) but before it was Christianised (and hence not worshipping Anglo-Saxon gods) was quite short. This theory appears to have first been suggested by Jamieson around 1825, and was accepted by Sir James Murray. However, it is not supported by normal phonological development either (where one would have started with the Old English forms ‘Tiw’ and ‘Wôdan’ and these could not have conceivably developed into the Old Norse forms for the gods).

Another idea is that the slogan derives from the Celtic ‘Tir a buidh’s, tir a dion’ meaning ‘Land of Victory, Land of Defence’. This is perhaps more likely, since Hawick people spoke a version of ancient Northumbrian (related to other ‘Brythonic’ languages, like modern Welsh) until perhaps the 8th century. A third, and least romantic theory is that the phrase is essentially a set of nonsense syllables used to sing along to the song (analogous perhaps to ‘Hey tutti tatie’, the former name for the tune used by Burns for ‘Scots Wha Hae’, said to have been the march used by Robert the Bruce’s men at Bannockburn). However, it should be stressed that all of these ideas are based on guesswork, and the truth could be something else entirely. In any case it appears that Hawick’s slogan is quite ancient, perhaps over 1,000 years old, and it is intriguing that it has survived through the Reformation and other political and social changes. Its survival is even more curious when one realises that, although familiar to everyone from Hawick, no one knows its meaning! – ‘Teribus ye Teriodin! By our sires who fell at Flodden, Muster swift and rouse the river! Strike for Hawick, and Hawick for ever’ [RSC], ‘Hawick heart’s shall e’er be proud. ‘Teribus y Teriodin!’ Sing the slogan long and loud’ [IWS] (the spelling is entirely subjective).

Teridom (tee-ree-dum) n. the state of being a Teri, the area around Hawick – ‘He burns to clasp the callant’s hand That’s come from some far distant land, Aince mair in Teridom to stand The nicht afore the morn’ [JMS].

Teries (tee-reez) n., pl. plural of Teri – Hail! Hail to the Teries, True, dauntless and cheerie – Laings, Watsons, and Wilsons, Scotts, Elliots, Laidlaws [T].

Terie-ess (tee-ree-es) n. word sometimes used to refer to female Teries (e.g. by George Luff when referring to his waitresses at the 1899 Common Riding dinner.

the Teri-hub (thu-tee-ree-hub) n. Hawick-based email news-group, set up by Graham Peacock in 1999, providing information and entertainment for Teries at home and abroad. It grew out of the old Hawick News web-site list, which was one of the first Hawick-based web-sites. It later moved to being a Yahoo group (also written ‘Teri Hub’).

Teriland (tee-ree-land) n., poet. the area around Hawick – ‘There was a priest in Teriland, An’ had he leved lang syne He’d been a brave Crusader, An’ gaen to Palestine’ [FL].

Teri Oden (tee-re-ø-din) n. another variant of part of the Hawick slogan – ‘Unfold the Teri Oden flag. To kiss the breeze o’ Summer …’ [JT].

Teriodin (tee-re-ø-din) n. the second half of the Hawick town slogan – ‘…Join in the old refrain Shout Teriodin again and again’ [JT], ‘They ha’e nae Teri- Odin flag …’ [JT], ‘Teri Odin’s strain entrancing Through the air triumphant soared …’ [TK], ‘Though names be forgotten, as time passes by, Teri-Odin for ever – united the cry’ [WFC].

the Teri-Optimists (thu-tee-ree-op-ti-mists) n. theatrical group who performed songs, dances and sketches in the Town Hall in the 1930s.

term-days (term-, te-rum-daż) n., pl. the four days on which rents and other payments were traditionally due in Scotland, also known as quarter days. These days were once very prominent in the yearly calendar, particularly those in May and November; servants were hired by the year or half-year and leases by the year or longer, almost always on those days. The names, as well as the dates, were different in Scotland than in England. Called Candlemas, Whitson, Lammas and Martinmas, they were originally on 2nd February, 26th May, 1st August and 11th November, respectively. However, Whitson moved to 15th May when the Gregorian Calendar was formally adopted in 1752. But in 1886 the term days for hiring and renewing domestic and agricultural workers was changed in Scotland to 28th February, 28th May, 28th August and 28th November, and this was confirmed by an Act of 1990. Until well into the 20th century it was common to see the families of shepherds and other farm labourers moving from one farm to another on 28th May.

termigant (ter-mi-git) n., arch. a violent, quarrelsome person – ‘Termigants have been rife in this same month …’ [RM].

Term Thursdi (term-thurz-di) n. popular name for the first Thursday after Martinmas term, in November. It was formerly an important day in Hawick, which was treated as a fair day by the country residents. It was a day for settling accounts in Town, and for preparing for the Winter. The ‘mairt’ (usually a fattened sheep) would be bought for the Winter’s meat supply and there would be a general ly festive atmosphere. The practice stopped towards the end of the 19th century.

the Terraces (thu-te-ri-seez) n. popular name for streets in the Wellogate, largely built through the Hawick Working Men’s Building & Investment Company starting in 1866 and continuing to roughly the end of the 19th century. The land was petitioned for from the Duke of Buccleuch, partly as a result of the 1849 cholera epidemic. The grid-like layout gives little concession to the contours of the land.

terrier (te-re-ar) n. nickname for a Territorial Army soldier. The T.A. headquarters is on Union Street.

terrin (te-rin) n. the act of applying tar, particularly to sheep. This was formerly a common practice locally, used to prevent infection in cuts and for identifying the sheep from a distance. However, the benefits were never entirely clear and it became less common by the mid-19th century as the preference for white woollens grew.

the Territorial Kirk (thu-te-ri-tö-ree-ul-kirk) n. name used in the early days of West Port Kirk.

Terrona (te-rö-mi) n. farm in Ewesdale, off the left-hand side of the A7 a couple of miles before Langholm. There are multiple spellings in older records. It was a 5-merk land when the superiority was inherited by Robert, Lord Maxwell, in 1550, by John, Lord Maxwell in 1604, by Robert Maxwell in 1619 and still held by John, Earl of Nithsdale in 1670 and William, Earl of Nithsdale in 1696. The farm was surveyed in 1718.

along with other properties of the Duchess of Buccleuch, when it covered 457 acres and was bounded by Cooms, Whitsheils, Arkin, Nether Wrae and Flask. James Little was there in 1797. James Paterson was farmer there in 1841 until at least the 1860s. There are remains of an ancient walled settlement to the southeast of the farmhouse (there are many spelling variants; it is ‘Torronna’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, ‘Touron’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map and ‘Tareona’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

tertan (ter’-in) n. tartan, a distinctive pattern of coloured lines and bands for cloth, traditionally worn in the Highlands, with specific designs attached to clans, often spuriously. Hawick District Corporate tartan was launched in 1996, with a dress version in addition. There is no indication that locals historically wore tartan clothing – ‘Theres the spot where we were lyin’ Rowed within your tartan plaid!’ [JT].

the Test (thu-test) n. one of a number of oaths of allegiance introduced, particularly in the 17th century, to differentiate between Protestants and Catholics in England or adherence to Presbyterianism versus Episcopalism in Scotland. The most important ‘test’ was probably that of the Test Act of 1681, which enforced episcopacy and attempted to suppress the Covenanters. In Hawick in that year it seems that the Bailies and Council suscribed to a specific text, stating that no one should ‘enter into covenants or leagues, or to convocate, convene or assemble in any councils, conventions, or assemblies, to treat, consult, or determine in any matter of state, civil or ecclesiastical, without His Majesty’s special command’. The tailors and weavers took the Test in 1684.

testamentar (tes-ta-men-tar) adj., arch. pertaining to a testament, nominated in a will, especially in the phrase ‘testament testamentar’, meaning a testament in which the details are specified by the person whose testament it is – ‘The testament testamentar, and inventor of the gudis, geir, soumes of money, and dettis pertening to vmquhile Walter Scot of Branxholme …’ [SB1574].

testificate (tes-ti-fee-ki’) n., arch. a testimonial, solemn declaration, evidence, specifically a document issued by a Kirk Session for someone moving to a new parish, describing whether they were married or unmarried and whether or not they were free of scandal; the requirement to produce such a document was prescribed in an Act of Assembly of 1648 – ‘…by reason of our being vagrant and vagabond persons wanting testificatts …’ [BR], ‘To a man that had a testificate’ [PR], ‘…and the beadle was further ordered to make inquiry anent the rest of the testificates’ [PR1713].

testit (tes-ti’, -ta’) adj., arch. testate, mentioned as part of a will – ‘…nor pursue …but before the Bailleys of this Bruch in ther awin Court, except for testat geir, under the pane of £5, toties quoties’ [BR1640], ‘Freemen prohibited from instituting prosecution for debts in any other than the Baille Court, except testat goods’ [JW1701] (also spelled ‘testat’).

tethert (te-thur’) pp., adj. tethered – ‘…and that nane keippe any in the day fra the 15th of April till harvest, except they be tetherit, under the lyik pane’ [BR1640], ‘…The cranes stand out at the Port o’ Leith Whaur the boats lie trigly tethert’ [WL].

tethery-methery (te-thu-ree-me-thu-ree) n., arch. an untidy mess, confused state (noted as ‘tetherie-metherie’ by E.C. Smith; related to the children’s counting rhyme, see endy-teendy).

teach (tewch) adj., arch. tough – ‘They’re teach sauchs growin’ i’ the Reuch Hauch’ [JAHM], ‘…thin Than a robin’s leg And twice as teach’ [DH], ‘Glooms and glints, sudden flashes of gold across the fields – teach and smooth on grass …’ [DH] (the pronunciation formerly had a long diphthong merging ü and oo).

teuchter (chooch-tur) n., ins. mildly derogatory lowland name for a Highlander.

Teueot (tee-ee-i’) n. another early spelling of ‘Teviot’ (e.g. on Mercator’s 1595 map of Scotland).

Teviout (tee-ee-i’) n. early form of ‘Teviot’, recorded in 1160 (the pronunciation of the time is of course unknown, but it seems that the v sound may have come later).

Tevidale (te-vee-dal) n. former name for Teviotdale, used around the 15th and 16th centuries.

Tevidalenses (te-vee-da-len-seez) n. former name for the people of Teviotdale. At the Battle of the Standard in 1130 the second division of King David’s army consisted of them along with the Cumbrenses.

the Teviot (thu-tee-ee-i’, -teev-yi’) n. major river running through Hawick, having its source at Teviot Stone and joining the Tweed 37 miles later. Its main tributaries are the Borthwick, Siltrig, Rule, Ale, Jed and Kale Waters. Other minor watercourses joining it include: Lang Grain; Rashie Grain; Rams Cleuch Burn; Mare Sike; Giddens Cleuch Burn; Commonbrae Sike; Hare Sike; Black Cleuch Burn; Frostlie Burn; Falnash Burn; Dryden Burn; Nest Burn; Weens Sike; Teindsie Burn; Northhouse Burn; Howden Cleuch; Harwood Sike; Vales Burn; the Allan Water; Fenwick Burn; Wilton Burn; Dean Burn; Howden Burn; Bonraw Burn; Kirkton Burn; Hassendean Burn; Honey Burn; Dean Burn; Gridding Burn; Ale Water; Oxnam Water and Kale Water. The river has always played a significant role in the life of Hawick. In the town it used to be crossed by a ford at the foot of Walter's Wynd, or by boat at the Coble, until the Teviot Bridge was built in 1741. The river was harnessed (and much polluted) by manufacturers in the 19th century. The river is prone to flooding, some historical floods being very dramatic. It also has the potential to dry up almost entirely in hot summers, and also sometimes in the winter (as in January 1748, March 1785, January 1787, winter of 1803/4 and November 1838), presumably due to blockage by ice. Some stone artefacts found around the river in Hawick are in the Museum — . And Teviot’s banks, where flowers of fairy blow, — Couldst thou with cold unruptur’d eye survey. Nor wake to bardish notes the bosom-thrilling lay? [JL], ‘Ah! when shall I by Teviot’s stream The haunts of youth again explore? And muse in melancholy dream On days that shall return no more?’ [JL], ‘O swiftly gae speed the berry-brown steed That drinks o’ the Teviot clear’ [WL], ‘There’s a toon, by hills surrounded, stands by bonnie Teviot’s side, That’s famed in days o’ yore’ [JT], ‘There’s a toon, by hills surrounded, stands by bonnie Teviot’s side’ [TC], ‘River of dreams, you mur through valley and mead’ [WL], ‘The Teviot babbles on its way: The clash of steel has passed away’ [IWS] (origin uncertain, although the name is very old, possibly Celtic, and perhaps even older, with a suggestion that it is derived from the Sanskrit root ‘tavass’, perhaps meaning ‘surging’, which curiously may also be the same root as for the Tweed; it seems that the pre-Celtic hydronym gained the Cumbrian suffix ‘ed’, probably later than the 8th century; it is ‘Teuiet’ in charters around 1200, ‘aque de Teuyoth’ in 1279, ‘aqua de Teveot’ in 1420 and ‘Theviot’ in 1547/8, with other spellings including ‘Teviott’, ‘Teiot’, etc.; it is ‘Tiot fl.’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map, and ‘Teatt fl.’ on Gordon’s map of Scotland in Blaeu’s 1654 atlas).

Teviot (tev-yi’) n. Ninian (16th C.) listed in 1579 among men accused by the Bailie of Hexham of stealing 2 horses from near there. He was ‘of the Hillhouse’, and his lands were probably the Hillhouse near Newcastleon. The other men named were Mungo Armstrong ‘Flie the Gaist’, Alexander Bell ‘Crat Bell’ and Ninian Armstrong ‘Gawdie’.

Teviotbank (tee-vie-i’-bawnk) n. merchant ship, built in 1938 by J. Readhead & Sons Ltd. for the Bank Line (Andrew Weir Shipping & Trading Co. Ltd.) and sold off to a company registered in Panama in 1955. It may have been used to lay mines during WWII.

Teviot Bank (tee-vie-i’-bawnk) n. villa overlooking the north banks of the Teviot, about a mile before Denholm. A house was built there about 1791 for David Simpson, designed by Robert Burn. It was rebuilt in 1833 with designs by William Burn (son of the previous architect). There was also a stable building to the west and a walled garden with gardener’s cottage to the east. It was the residence of William Scott, grandson of William Scott of Woll, then J.S. Heron-Maxwell, followed by Edward Heron-Maxwell. To the north are cropmarks, indicating a possible ancient enclosure (sometimes written ‘Teviotbank’; possibly also known earlier as ‘The Knowes’).

Teviotbank Gairdens (tee-vie-i’-bawnk-gär-dinz) n. street in Denholm off the north end of Canongate.

Teviot Brig (tee-vie-i’-brig) n. bridge across the Teviot, connecting the Sandbed with Wilton, built 1738–1741 with stone from Spittal quarry. This was the first bridge over the Teviot at Hawick, and it meant that traffic from the north no longer had to ford the river at Walter’s Wynd, or travel all the way down-river to Ancrum. There had been some debate about whether to put it at the Sandbed or the foot of Walter’s Wynd, the question being resolved by a group of local landowners. There was also a great deal of trouble raising the money (£450 total cost) and paying off the original bond (£250 from the Duke of Buccleuch’s commissioners), this being probably the largest municipal project undertaken by the town. The bridge was completed when ‘the ki-stone was perfected and close’ on 29th July 1741, but the debt took about 20 years to clear; this is despite other towns being asked to contribute (e.g. Glasgow contributed £5). During construction the animals used to transport materials were pastured on the Common Haugh and Myreslaw-green (with no other animals allowed there during that time). The original bridge was too narrow for carts to pass in the middle (sometimes causing arguments), and was very steep on each side. The piers were strengthened around 1751 (along with drains being added) and after many other repairs it was removed in 1865 and replaced with a less steep and contracted bridge. The architect was Andrew Wilson and the builder was John Marshall. During excavations for the new bridge the trunk of an oak tree was found embedded in the gravel, presumably left there in some long ago flood. The original bridge can be seen in paintings of 1800, 1808 and 1812. The new bridge has 3 arches and was designed by A. Wilson. The bridge was also popularly known as ‘the Haugh Brig’ and has subsequently become known as the Albert Bridge, possibly because of an error in the Ordnance Survey map of 1898. The name ‘Teviot Brig’ is also used for other bridges across the river, including the one built at Denholm in 1864.

Teviot Brig Road (tee-vee-i’-brig-rōd) n. name sometimes used for Albert Road, or the street between the Sandbed and the Teviot Bridge (i.e. Orrock Place).

Teviot Court (tee-vee-i’-kōr’) n. sheltered housing development built by Eildon Housing Association in 1989–91 on the Tannage Close property previously belonging to the Co-operative Store.

Teviot Crescent (tee-vee-i’-kre-sin’) n. street between the High Street and the river, originally part of the Common, with lands feu'd after the Division of 1777, and the Wee Haugh being the sole remaining piece of public land. The area was used as nurseries by Dickson's. The houses were built around 1832 as skilled, middle-class workers’ residences, and are now listed for preservation. They are 2 storeys, but most have attic extensions with dormer windows. The street was obviously named after the river. William Laidlaw & Sons had their Teviot Crescent Mills here. A mill lade used to run from Laidlaw's Cauld along the side of Teviot Crescent and through the Mills. It was filled in in 1914. The Drums and Fifes walk along this street as part of their march around the old tolls on ‘the Nicht Afore the Morn’.

Teviot Crescent Mills (tee-vee-i’-kre-sin’-mīlz) n. hosiery and tweed factory built by William Laidlaw in 1834 on Teviot Crescent and later extended. The suitability of the site (owing to the drop in the Teviot) was first suggested by millwright Gideon Scott. The factory was once very large, extending along the Teviot from the Little Haugh until almost the foot of Dovecote Street. The footpath along the riverside was popularly known as ‘the Back o the Mill’. The factory was also referred to as ‘Laidlaw’s’. It was eventually demolished.

Teviotdale (tee-vee-i’-dāl) n. the valley of the Teviot, in which Hawick is nestled. The word is sometimes synonymous with Roxburghshire, i.e. extending beyond the boundaries of the river valley itself. It was also the name used for the local arch-deaconry in early church organisation. This area was part of the Diocese of Durham in the 11th century, but was transferred to the See of Glasgow by the end of the 12th century. The region was occupied by the English in the 14th century, being recovered in 1383/4 – ‘My native stream, my native vale, And you green meads and hills of Teviotdale ...’ [JL], ‘When morn’s first rays fall quivering on the strand, Then is the time to stretch the daring hand, And snatch it from the bending poplar pale, The magic harp of ancient Teviotdale’ [JL], ‘And for the world I wadna' leave My Bonnie Teviotdale’ [JHa], ‘Young Mary was the loveliest lass In all green Teviotdale; Her cheek outvied the budding rose, Her breath the rosy gale’ [JTe], ‘Oh, Teviotdale! loved land of song, What memories to thee belong’ [JCG], ‘...Where nature's voices join to speak In praise of glorious Teviotdale’ [RHL], ‘O sing me songs of Teviotdale That tell an old familiar tale’ [IWS] (called ‘Teuidalia’ by the Romans; it was ‘Teugetedale’ in about 1117, ‘Theiudall’ around 1147, ‘Theviotedalia’ about 1165, ‘Teviotedale’ in about 1170, ‘Teuitesdale’ in the early 13th century, ‘Tevidalail’ in Bagmond’s Roll of 1275, ‘Thevdat’ in a Scottish record of 1297, ‘Tevydale’ in an English document of 1391 and ‘Tevidalia’ in the 1407 charter for the Barony of Hawick; the early spelling varies wildly, e.g. ‘Theuydalia’ in about 1360, ‘Teuidalie’ in 1415, ‘Thewidalie’ in 1427, ‘Teuidyalle’ in 1431, ‘Teuidalie’ in 1433/4, ‘Tevidale’ in 1448, ‘Tevidalia’ in 1453, ‘Theuidalie’ in about 1452, ‘tevidale’ in 1498, ‘Tevidail’ in 1501, ‘Tavidedal’ in 1516, ‘Tevidale’ in 1479, 1500 and 1525, ‘Tyvidalie’ in 1525, ‘Tvaidal’ in 1530, ‘Tevaidale’ about 1540, ‘Tewydail’ in 1546, ‘Theviotaill’ in 1547/8, ‘Tevydat’ in 1566, ‘Tevaidale’ in 1567, ‘Teviotdaill’ in 1583/4 and ‘Teniotdaill’ in 1591).

music had been written. It was first sung publicly at the Glasgow Hawick Association’s Common Riding Night, the singer being Mrs. Margaret Turnbull (a niece of Francis George Scott). The original key of D major was later lowered to B flat major. It has no chorus, and is probably a little too complex to be sung regularly.

Teviotdale (tee-vee-i’-däl) n. blend of pipe tobacco sold by D. Simpson Ltd., from about the War years until the 1960s.

Teviotdale (tee-vee-i’-däl) n. blended whisky, formerly labelled and sold by John Turnbull of Hawick.

Teviotdale (tee-vee-i’-däl) n. Thomas (16th C.) Englishman, who was tenant in Ingram and had a local surname. He was recorded in 1590 as ‘Thomas Tevidaile’ when it is claimed that he was wounded by a group of Scottish raiders, specifically Burns, Youngs and others.

Teviotdale Bakery (tee-vee-i’-däl-bā-ku-ree) n. former bakery at 2 Princes Street. It was run by Martin P. Baillie, father of singer Isobel.

the Teviotdale Club (thu-tee-vee-i’-däl-klub) n. former social club near the foot of Beaconsfield Terrace, also known as ‘Hawick Billiard Club’. The building was constructed in 1877, and has had many subsequent uses, including as a milliners, the office for Bonsor’s factory and the Jehovah’s Witnesses Kingdom Hall.

Teviotdale Court (tee-vee-i’-däl-kör’) n. part of the Meadows, built in 1964 and refurbished as luxury flats in 1986.

Teviotdale Dairy (tee-vee-i’-däl-dā-ree) n. former dairy at 49 North Bridge Street, next to the Buccleuch Memorial. The buildings were designed in about 1899 by J.P. Alison as a symmetrical, 2-storied, 3-bay block in red sandstone, with Dutch influence in the detailing. The company was set up in the late 19th century and continued in the 1930s as ‘Honeyburn and Teviotdale Dairy Company’ by Andrew Haddon and his son Andrew. Other partners were Jimmy Taddei and Mr. Collier the grocer. The company delivered certified (i.e. Brucellosis and T.B. free) milk to the local region. It was later owned by the Buttercup Dairy Company. It finally folded in 1982, with the building surviving (with monogrammed gable still visible) as a shop, although the bottling plant at the back was demolished.

Teviotdale Fermers’ Club (tee-vee-i’-däl-fer-murz-klub) n. organisation formed in 1859 to be a forum for discussion and to represent the interests of local farmers. The first President was William Aitchison from 1859–73, with James Oliver being secretary from 1859–1905. It used to meet in a room in the Tower Hotel, where portraits of several ex-Presidents hung through much of the 19th century. It grew out of the Agricultural society for the west of Teviotdale, formed by James Douglas of Cavers in 1835 (although both existed together for several decades). The Oliver family were Honorary Secretaries for the Club 1859–1994. The regular meeting time has been Thursday nights during the winter months. The club is still going strong.

Teviotdaleheid (tee-vee-i’-däl-heed) n. name formerly used for the upper Teviot valley, particularly to refer to the Buccleuch estates there in the 17th and 18th centuries. It was once included in the lands formerly known as Ringwoodfield. It is referred to in 1551 as part of the bounds described when Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme was appointed Justiciar of Liddesdale (it is already ‘Teviotdaleheid’ in 1551 and ‘Teviotdaillheid’ in 1633).

Teviotdale Herriers (tee-vee-i’-däl-hee-reurz) n. Teviotdale Harriers, the local amateur running club. It was formed in 1889 as a cross-country club by several local merchants and professionals, including George Heron Wilson. It is said to be the third oldest in Scotland in continual existence. The inclusion of track competitions came a few years after the club started. The club’s Challenge Cup was first presented in 1894. Rob Barton was an early success for the club, representing Britain at 800 m in the 1908 Olympics. A Junior Section was formed in 1907 and a Ladies’ Section in 1930. Clubrooms were built on Bath Street in 1956, and moved to the former Citizens Advice Bureau at 1 Towerdykeside in 2006. A history, ‘The First Hundred’ was written by John L. Colman in 1989.

Teviotdale Hockey Club (tee-vee-i’-däl-ho-kee-klub) n. mixed hockey team existing before WWI, based in Hawick. The 4 Laing brothers all played for the team.

Teviotdale Leisure Centre (tee-vee-i’-däl-lei-shur-seen’-ur) n. official name for the Leisure Centre, also known as ‘T.L.C.’.

in 1934 as a shooting lodge for the Duke of Buccleuch. It has been for many years run as a hotel, Teviotdale Lodge Country House. It has also been the site of Common Riding Ride-outs.

Teviotdale Ludge (tee-vee-i’-däl-luj) n. Hawick branch of the Royal Antediluvian Order of Buffaloes, Lodge 10417. Sometimes known as ‘the Buffs’, this was one of two local branches of a fraternal and benevolent organisation founded in the 19th century. It folded in 1990.

Teviotdale Mills (tee-vee-i’-däl-nilz) n. former factory at the corner of Commercial Road and Albert Road, being the main premises of Scoon & Hood, previously Scoon & Barrie. It was built in 1877 (or perhaps earlier) by Greenwood, Watt & Co., and sold to Scoon & Barrie in 1888. J.P. Alison designed a new yarn store there. It was later Scoon & Hood’s until about 1930. It may also have been owned by Innes & Henderson. The building more recently became a garage, with Croall Bryson.

the Teviotdale Regiment (thu-tee-vee-i’-däl-re-ji’-min’) n. foot regiment formed by Sir William Kerr, 3rd Earl of Lothian, in 1639, after the signing of the National Covenant. It was one of the armies raised to protect Scotland against Charles I, and also referred to as ‘Lothian’s Regiment’ (Buccleuch commanded a Tweeddale regiment, Hume a regiment from the Merse, etc.). The Regiment probably consisted of about 500 men, many of whom must have been local. They were part of the Covenanters’ force that crossed the Tweed with Montrose in 1640, capturing Newcastle. The Regiment was disbanded in 1641, but reformed in 1642 and sent to Ireland. About 1642 Lords Lothian, Buccleuch and Cranston were made Colonels of foot of a combined force, with Sir William Scott of Harden commanding the horse. They returned from Ireland in 1644, but mutinied for lack of pay in 1645 and then suffered huge losses at the Battle of Auldearn. The Regiment continued to exist for about the next 40 years.

Teviotex (tee-vee-ō-teks) n. textile company based at 15 Commercial Road, weaving country tweeds and luxury cloths at Lovat Mill.

Teviot Grove Academy (tee-vee-i’-gröv-aaw-ka-du-mee) n. seminary run towards the end of the 19th century at 10 Union Street by James Brand, also known as ‘Brand’s Schuil’. It was taken over in 1895 by the School Board and run as the town’s Secondary School. Pupils were transferred to the new school from Buccleuch Street along with the teacher A.S. Williams. The Science and Art classes were held in the Buccleuch Memorial, and James Brand was the Rector. The secondary school transferred back to Buccleuch Street in the early 20th century. School Inspectors’ Reports from 1896–1904 are in the National Archives.

Teviothead (tee-vee-i’-heed, tee-vi-yi’-heid) n. Teviothead, village about 9 miles south of Hawick, which is spread out along the A7, and was formerly called Caerlenrig. Prior to the opening of the Scots Dyke to Haremoss Turnpike, there was an alternative route from Langholm to Selkirk (skirting past Hawick) which diverged at Teviothead and crossed to the Borthwick valley. The area was for many years the home of Henry Scott Riddell, with a plaque on his cottage there, his memorial cairn overlooking the area, and his burial place in the churchyard. The Chapel of St. Mary’s of Caerlenrig existed there from early times. There was a ‘chapel of ease’ there, for the outlying members of Hawick Parish from the early 18th century. The parish itself was formed in 1850 out of parts of Hawick and Cavers, and extends to the Dumfriesshire boundary. Prior to this time the area was generally known as Caerlenrig. The area was famous for the 1530 capture and hanging of Johnnie Armstrong and his men. His grave and commemorative plaque are there. The village long had its own primary school, but it was closed in 2004. It also had its own library from at least the 1830s. A stone war memorial (designed by J.P. Alson) was erected after WW1 – ‘There is no men of all the men in this grey troop of mine But blind might ride the Borderside from Teviothead to Tyne’ [WHO]. ‘At Teviothead there stand three stones. If ever you’re that way, Take time to seek them out And read the words they have to say. One man was called to fight a fight And one to win a race And one to write a special song To mark his time and place’ [IWL] (the place name appears as ‘Teviotheid’ in 1623 and is used regularly from the 1660s.

Teviotheid Cottage (tee-vee-i’-heed-ko’-eaj)

n. home of Henry Scott Riddell at Teviothead, built for him about 1840 by the Duke of Buccleuch, and also known as Dryden Cottage, Caerlenrig Manse and Dryden Burnfoot. It still exists and has a commemorative plaque. About 100 yards to the east there were 2 ancient cairns that were excavated in 1869, an iron spearhead being found, which is now in Hawick Museum. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows an additional ruined building that is now gone.

Teviotheid Haa (tee-vee-i’-heed-haw)

Teviothead Hall, village hall in Teviothead, used for various community events.

Teviotheid Kirk (tee-vee-i’-heed-kirk)

n. church in Teviothead Parish. The site of the ancient Chapel of St. Mary’s of Caerlenrig lies within the old churchyard, and contains an ancient stone, as well as the burial site of Johnnie Armstrong, with the memorial stone of 1897. There was a ‘chapel of ease’ near there around 1715, as part of Hawick and Cavers Parishes, built on the Thornyhaugh by Fahnash, with regular services commencing in about 1721. A collection was made in Hawick Parish to raise money to repair the masonry of the meeting house in 1722. A petition of 1725, signed by about 100 locals, requested the Duchess of Buccleuch to supply an allowance for a preacher. In the 1752 Hawick Parish records the church is referred to as ‘Meeting House at Thorny Hall’. A new building constructed on the other side of the stream in 1799 (later converted into the village school). The Parish was created in 1850 from the more distant parts of Hawick and Cavers, repaired in about 1821 when a new preacher was installed. The church was built in 1855/6, and designed by Mr. Cowan, the Duke of Buccleuch’s Clerk of Works. It is a plain rectangular building of whinstone, with freestone edges and buttresses. Some alterations were designed by J.P. Alison around 1900. The church was linked with Hawick Old Parish 1972–89 and with Wilton from 1989. It celebrated its 150th anniversary in 2005, with the present Duke of Buccleuch in attendance. A communion token exists from 1854, oval in shape. A roll of the ministry is: David Graham, from 1714; John Chisholme, from 1720; John Laurie 1738–c.45; Andrew Walker 1745–50; Robert Rutherford 1750–56; Patrick Kerr, from 1757; James Erskine 1763–64; John Riccarton 1764–65; Charles Paton, from 1780; James Sanson 1785–c.88; Thomas Dyce 1792–c.1804; Robert Shaw 1804–16; Joseph Thomson 1817–19; Gavin Turnbull 1821–c.31; John Dobbie, about 1831; Henry Scott Riddell, 1832–42; William Lamb 1843–44; Daniel MacNee, from 1847; James Duncan 1850–53; Robert Young 1854–84; Robert F. Colvin 1884–87; Archibald H. Dinwoodie 1887–1919; Arthur H. Dunnett 1920–24; David S. Steven 1925–29; James Livingston 1929–40; James Hill 1940–63; Robert McConnell 1966–72; David L. Wright 1972–86; George Watson 1989–91; Brian Hendrie 1992–97; John Shedden 1998–

n. former library in Teviothead Parish, also called the Caerlenrig Chapel Library. It was probably established in the early 1800s and mentioned in the New Statistical Account in 1839.

Teviotheid Pairish (tee-vee-i’-heed-pa-reesh)

n. Teviothead Parish, formed in 1850 from the outlying parts of Hawick and Cavers Parishes, centred on the village of the same name. It is bounded on the south by Dumfriesshire, and on the other sides by the parishes of Roberton, Hawick, Cavers and Castleton. There was a chapel at Caerlenrig from early times and a ‘Chapel of Ease’ here from long before the Parish was created. Parish records exist from 1824.

Teviotheid Schuil (tee-vee-i’-heed-skil)

n. primary school in Teviothead, which taught pupils up to the end of Primary 5. There was informal teaching there earlier, but the teacher’s salary was not established until 1803. Mr. Armstrong ‘the Tailor’ (brother of Hawick schoolmaster Christopher) was master there in the early 1800s. When the Presbytery refused to allow Tom Jenkins to take over as teacher, the smiddy was converted for his use (about 1815–18), with him having as many as 45 pupils and the official school just 4. The parish-appointed schoolmaster at that time was a Mr. Elliot. When Jenkins left, the new schoolmaster for the district was Simon Little, who was there until at least 1861. It was referred to as a ‘side-parochial school’ in 1839 and was run by Hawick and Cavers Parishes together. There were more than 30 pupils in the 1830s. The school closed in 2004, with the pupils being transferred to Drumlanrig.

Teviot Kirk (tee-vee-i’-kirk)

n. Teviot Parish Church, being a new name for St. George’s, adopted in 1988, and having links with Roberton.

Teviot Lodge (tee-vee-i’-loj, -luj)

n. house that stood on the eastern part of the site of the present High School until shortly after WWII. It was built for the Dickson family, Miss Dickson being owner in 1824 and William Dickson living there in the mid-19th century. It was later the home of Col. William Scott Elliot. It was the first house in Hawick with electric lighting, installed by William Elliot (with the assistance of William Melrose), using 2 copper wires in porcelain insulators, running all the way from his factory at Tower Mill (across the roofs of houses, etc.). An ingenious mechanism allowed Elliot to operate a sluice at the mill so that the lights went off when he was ready for bed. And it was also arranged for signals to be sent by morse code between the house to the mill. A billiard room was added to designs by J.P. Alison in 1890. The daughters of Col. Elliot gifted the house and grounds to the school in 1933. It was used for a while as a nursery, and as the headquarters of the Women’s Voluntary Services Organisation during WWII, while the gardens became part of the ‘dig for victory campaign’ and the riverside lawn was used for games. The house was demolished in the 1950s to make way for the High School science buildings and gymnasium, built around 1960. Wood’s 1824 map shows its location and the lay-out of the grounds.

Teviot Mill (tee-vee-i’-mil) n. hosiery factory in Weensland, built by Walter Wilson in the 1850s, on a piece of ground that had formerly belonged to John Oliver & Sons. The premises of Walter Wilson & Sons there made hosiery and tweeds. It was later associated with Sime, Williamson & Co. and Kenway & Co. Part of the mill was used for a while as barracks during WWI (also sometimes plural ‘Mills’).

Teviot Pairish (tee-vee-i’-pæ-reesh) n. Teviot Parish Church, being the name used for what was St. George’s Church, with a connection to Roberton.

Teviot Place (tee-vee-i’-plis) n. street name used in the mid-19th century, presumably the same as one of the other similarly named streets.

Teviot Raw (tee-vee-i’-raw) n. Teviot Row, street alongside the river in the Weensland area, previously named simply ‘Weensland’, renamed when houses were constructed in 1872 and demolished when considered unsafe in 1968.

Teviot Road (tee-vee-i’-röød) n. road along the Teviot, parallel to the High Street, leading from Teviot Crescent to the foot of the Mill Port. The houses were developed from 1824, and on Wood’s map of that year it is labelled ‘New Projected Street’. Previous to that it was a roughly 3 foot wide cobbledstone path, close to the water level, which was dangerous in high water, and connected the foot of Walter’s Wynd with the Round Close. In the 1830s there was a proposal to build a High Street bypass along the riverside here, together with a bridge to the Sandbed, linking with the New Road, but this never transpired. During the construction of Pringle’s Rodono Mills in the 1950s and 1960s there was extensive demolition of old buildings and closes around the bottom of the Round Close, with replacement by the path and steps. After Rodono was demolished the ground was cleared in 1980, part being grassed over and part being used as a car park. The Health Centre was built there in 1989.

Teviotside (tee-vee-i’-síd) n. poetic name for the banks of the Teviot – ‘As I came in by Teviot-side, And by the Braes of Branxholm, There I spied a bonny lass; She was both neat and handsome’ [CPM], ‘By Teviotside they took this Colour, A dear memorial of their valour’ [AB], ‘No place could be so dear to me As Bonnie Teviot-side’ [RHL], ‘No pen or brush can e’er describe The beauty of the Teviotside’ [JCa], ‘A love ti walk be Teviotside And sei its ripplin witters glide’ [IWL].

Teviotside Foundry (tee-vee-i’-foon-dree) n. former premises of James Melrose & Sons on the east side of Commercial Road, adjacent to the Victoria Laundry.

Teviotside House (tee-vee-i’-síd-hoos) n. former private school at 1 Teviotside Terrace (then a corner house on North Bridge Street), run by Mrs. Dumbreck from 1865 until the 1870s. It was a school for girls, but also took in small boys, one of them being Sir Thomas Henderson. It was continued by her daughters, Euphemia and Katherine, and perhaps also by the Misses Mitchell into the 1880s.

Teviotside Road (tee-vee-i’-síd-röød) n. name used for the south side of Commercial Road before it was officially named in 1884.

Teviotside Terrace (tee-vee-i’-síd-te-ris) n. short one-sided street off North Bridge Street, being the back of some houses on Dovecote Street, built around 1875. The Dumbrecks had a school for girls here on the corner from about 1865, called ‘Teviotside House’, which was presumably the origin of the name.

Teviot Square (tee-vee-i’-skwär) n. former name for the Sandbed, or the western or central parts, in use between about 1847–57 (e.g. in Slater’s 1852 directory). The name had been officially changed by the Council, but was never very popular – ‘...An’ divots an’ rough-heads gotten where the modern’s now ca’ Teviot Square’ [WNK].

Teviot Stane (tee-vee-i’-stān) n. source of the Teviot, reached by walking about 2½ miles over the moorland from where the road ends at Merrylead farm. It was once the extremity of Cavers Parish, before being transferred to Teviothead in 1850. An inscribed boulder was erected there by the Callants’ Club in 1931 – ‘...And urged, in dreams, the forest race, From Teviot-stone to Eskdale moor’ [SWS], ‘Does your memory, Teviot, wake, To your birth by Teviot Stone’ [RSC], ‘Near to the stream that with pellucid wave, From Teviot stone flows to the Tweed’s fair breast ...’ [JCG], ‘And Tei’ot Stane pinpointed wi a dab o’ jeely ...’[DH], ‘The waters o’ the Teviot Are drumlil at Trowmill But ootbye Rashiegrain Fresh sprung free Teviot Stane They’re clear as crystal rill’ [WL] (also sometimes ‘Teviotstane’; it is marked ‘Tiot-stane’ on Gordon’s map c. 1650 and ‘Tiot stain’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Teviotstane see Teviot Stane

Teviot Tweed (tee-vee-i’-tweed) n. tweed merchants located at 17 High Street (or equivalently the Round Close) around 1906 (the name seems like an oxymoron).

Teviot Viaduct (tee-vee-i’-vI-a-dukt) n. another name for the Station Viaduct.

tew (tew) v., arch. to toughen leather, to toughen or shrivel in cooking, to tire, wear out – ‘Nor was A tewd or mauchless, bit limber an lither’ [ECS], tewd (tewd) pp., adj., arch. shrivelled, toughened, worn out – ‘...when the bruizzin, frizzlin heat turns flush things tewd and rizzert’ [ECS], ‘Nor was A tewd or mauchless, bit limber an lither’ [ECS].

the Text House (thu-teks-t-hoos) n. building at 3 Main Street, Denholm, bearing the inscriptions ‘All was others all will be others’ and ‘Tack tent in time ere time be tint’, just like houses on Hawick High Street. The house was apparently originally built in the 18th century by Thomas Turnbull, as one of 5 houses constructed for his 5 sons. It was demolished in 1910 and rebuilt by Dr. John Haddon, with the texts inspired by the ones in Hawick.

textiles (tek-stilz) n., pl. the industry that has been the mainstay in Hawick for more than 300 years. It began with hand knitting, while frame knitting was introduced around 1680, carpet weaving from the early 1750s and hosiery became commercialised by John Hardie in 1771. In 1728 the Board of Manufactures set up a person in Hawick (as well as 9 other towns), to sort, staple and wash coarse, tarred wool. In 1777 there were stated to be about 65 looms in the Town, manufacturing a range of linen and woollen products, and by 1820 Hawick had about half of Scotland’s frames. Cloth manufacturing began in about 1787. By the early 19th century there was also manufacturing of blankets and gloves. The first cloth to be made in Hawick was a coarse blue variety, which was sent to Leeds for finishing. Tweed grew to prominence from the 1830s, becoming the main sort of locally produced cloth. The focus shifted from stockings to woollen underweare in the latter half of the 19th century and to women’s knitwear and sportswear in the 20th century.

thieves (theefz) n., pl. thieves (an example of the use of a different plural form in Hawick).

the Thief’s Hole (thu-theefz-hōl) n. name used to describe Hawick jail, which was a room in the old tollbooth, partly below ground level (also known as the Rogues’ Hole; see Hawick Jail).

Thief’s Hole Sike (theefz-hōl-sık) n. stream that rises to the west of Loch Lagg and joins the Gate Burn just before it crosses the road at the Troutlaw Ford (the origin of the name is unclear; it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

the Thief’s Road (thu-theefz-rōd) n. popular name for an ancient hill track, part of which leads from Dod farm over to Hermitage Castle and was used by Mary Queen of Scots when she visited Boswell. It was also the name for the road leading across Woll Rig, perhaps a continuation of the same trail. Note that ‘the Maiden’s Way’ may have been essentially the same route from the Dod Burn to Liddesdale, and this was also used as a drove road – ‘The Thieves Road, and a route owre the hags o’ The Roan Scarrit in wi’ a pencil’ [DH] (also called the ‘Thief Road’; it may have been essentially the same route from the Dod Burn to Liddesdale, and this was also used as a drove road). ‘The Thieves Road, and a route owre the hags o’ The Roan Scarrit in wi’ a pencil’ [DH]

Thief’s Sike (theefz-sık) n. stream that rises on Thiefsike Head, to the south of Hermitage Castle, and flows near Hartsarth to join the Hermitage Water. On the west bank there is a turf building with a knuckling-stone. On the eastern side there are the remains of a township, containing about 10 buildings, along with field systems and rig lines. This is probably the settlement of ‘Brocol’ shown on Blaeu’s c.1654 atlas, which was abandoned by the early 17th century. A little higher up are the remains of sheltering huts, as well as cairns and cultivation terraces (also written ‘Thief Sike’).

thiefously (theef-tis-lee) adv., arch. thievously, clandestinely, by stealth – ‘...and the thiefouslie stealing and away taking out of her house ...’ [BR], ‘Item, that na persone nor personnis schein medowis, balkis, or haynut gers thifteouslie ...’ [BR1640] (also theftously).

thief (thief) n., arch. theft – ‘...or that committs greitere thift, sal be banyshit the town, and lose thir freedom for ever’ [BR1640]. ‘...that the said Bailie Ruecastle was guiltie of Sacrilidge. Thift, and with most opprobrious speeches and names ...’ [PR1718].

Thilestane (thi-lstān) n. former lands listed in the charter to James Scott, Earl of Dalkeith in 1693. It is listed among the lands in upper Teviotdale that were once part of the Lordship of Ringwoodfield, hence presumably this is not ‘Thistlestane’.

thim (thim) pron., arch. them (noted by E.C. Smith; thaim and thum are more common).

thing (thing) n., arch. amount, quantity, extent – I understand little thing can be brought against you o’ this day’s mischief’ [RW], sort, kind (almost used as a suffix) – ‘I’ve some mair paper, but it’s no sic guid thing as that’ [JAHM], ‘Wad ye like some black ink, or some blue thing?’ [JAHM], ‘Mask iz a pickl new thing’ [ECS], ‘The broon thing’s mair use as the yallih’ [ECS], pl. matters, duties, etc. – ‘Ee’ll finnd ee’ve other thing adae’ [ECS] (these senses not common in English; also hing).

thingumed (thing-u-beed) n. a thingum-ubob, someone or something temporarily forgotten (thinguberry and thingummy are also used, as well as the English ‘thingummy’).

thinguberry (thing-u-beed) n. something whose name is not known or forgotten, a thingummy, thingumajig, whatsis – ‘A hink what’s ‘ei’s name din cet, thingubby, frae up the Loan’, ‘Thing-a-bee, thing-a-beet, thing-a-meet, etc., is a substitute for the name of a person or thing unknown or temporarily forgotten. Cf. Gen. Scottish thingumbob, thingiment, etc.; English thingummy’ [ECS], ‘As ee get older ee yaise that a lot mair, thingubby, thingubbby, thingubby!’ [ME] adj. whatchamacallit, descriptive word which temporarily cannot be recalled – ‘it was aa thingubby, ee ken?’ (also written ‘thing-a-bee’; perhaps used more frequently than ‘thingummy’ when referring to a person rather than a thing).

Thinside Hill

(Thi-niǔd-hil) n. hilly region in Liddesdale, just to the north of Hartsgarth. There are many enclosures and some harts marked there.

thir (thir) pron., arch. these – ‘...before yir witnesses, John Scot Bailzie, Robert Denis, surgeon, George Scot, James Morlaw, and Robert Nillag’ [JW1558], ‘When ‘thir’ is used absolutely without a noun following, it generally becomes ‘thirs’; ‘Thirs is meyne’ [JAHM], ‘Boonjeddart, Hundle, and Hunthill, Thir three they laid weil on at last’ [CPM], ‘Thirs is mine, thae’s yours, but whae’s aucht thon yins?’ [GW], common in the legal phrase ‘thir presents’, meaning ‘the present document’ – ‘Be it kend til al men be thir present lettris, me David Scot of the Bukluch ...’[SB1470], ‘...before thir witness, Thomas Glendynwyn, Alexander Scot ...’[SB1510/1], ‘...befoer thir witnessis,...Walter Scot of Gorde-landis, Walter Scot of Tuschelaw, and Johne Wat-son, with therver disnerse’[SB1574], ‘All thir 51 lands adjacent to ye toune are estimat to pay nyne scoir bolls in stok ...’[PR1627], ‘I Thomas Henderson, smyth in Flex, grants me be thir presents ...’[BR1701], ‘We by thir presents binds and obeilissee us and our successors in the office of bayleiere and toune counsell of the said brughe of Hawicke ...’[HAST1902], adj., arch. these – ‘Quo’ Johnie, I’d rather in England die, Ere thir sax sheep gae t’ Liddesdale wi’ me’ [CPM], ‘...thir braes hed seen unco sichts’ [ECS], ‘The wund and the rain’s been roarin’ Thir twae nichts and mair ...’ [DH], used specifically for foods – ‘...to which a collective significance is attached by the prefixing of a plural demonstrative or other adjective, as thir kail (= these kale)’ [ECS] (sometimes plural; there is more common).

Thirr see teinder an thirder

thirr (thi-rul) v., arch. to bind in servitude, to be bound or under obligation – ‘they were thirled ti the mill, meeanin they hed ti get their corn ground there’, ‘Langsyne, when mills were few, The district roon Was thirled to ane, an’ a’ within The legal boond ...’ [FL].

thirr (thirr) n., arch. the state of being thirled, usually applied by rule of the landowner to his tenants. It was part of the feudal structure which tied a farmer to a particular mill – ‘...whereby these Baillies created a sort of thirlage that drew all the drinking to their own houses’[C&L1780].

Thirrlestone (thi-rul-stän) n. ruined tower and surrounding area in the Ettrick valley, a mile or so north-east of the village of Ettrick. It was once the seat of the Scotts of Thirrlestone, who became the Lords Napier of Merchiston and Ettrick, which included the Lord Napier who once resided at Wilton Lodge. They gained the lands in the early 1500s from the Laird of Cranston-Riddell, although there is a John Scott of Thirrlestone mentioned in 1483 (when he became Baron of the half barony of Wilton). There is a record in 1493 of cattle and horses being stolen from Thirrlestan Mains. The lands were formerly held by Melrose Abbey; in 1524, when Sir Walter Scott of Brax-holme was regranted the office of Bailie of the lands of Melrose Abbey, he was given this farm and that of Northhouse for his fee. This continued in the inheritance of the lands and titles of his grandfather by Walter Scott in 1553/4 (and at that time the lands were jointly valued with Northhouse at £20 Scots), as well as his grandson Sir Walter in 1564 and the next Sir Walter in 1574. These lands were raided by a group of 160 Armstrongs in 1543. The precedence of the Thirrlestan branch of the Scotts and ownership of the lands has a complex (and debated) history through the 17th century; the designation ‘of Thirrlestone’ was used by 3 separate families (one probably for the lands of the same name west of Yetholm). Sir Robert Scott of Thirrlestone had a charter for these lands from the Commendator of Melrose in about 1620 and granted them to William Scott of Harden in about 1622. It was still listed as part of the Lordship of Melrose in 1634, 1653 and 1661, when held (perhaps just the superiority) by the Scots of Buccleuch. The Laird of Thirlestane’s lands in Selkirkshire were valued at more than £3000 in 1678. The L-plan tower stood on the left-bank of the Thirlestane Burn, north-west of the later farmhouse. The tower was burned by the English in 1544, although rebuilt. It contains a lintel stone with the initials ‘R. S. M. C.’ for Robert Scott and Margaret Cranston. The nearby house was built by the Napiers, partly using stones from the tower; however, it was demolished in the 1960s to avoid death duties. The estate passed to George Walker in the late 18th century and then to Richard Brack. It should not be confused with the castle near Lauders of the same name, or the area near Yetholm – ‘Proud she looked round, applause to claim – Then lightened Thirlestane’s eye of flame; His bugle Watt of Harden blew, Pensils and pennons wide were flung, To Heavn the Border slogan rung, ‘Saint Mary for the young Buccleuch!’ [SWS], ‘Wher Ettrick wandirs down a plain, With lofty hills belay’t, The staitly towirs of Thirlestane With wundir hee surveyt’ [ES] (also written ‘Thirlistane’; ‘Thyrlestan maiori’ stream and ‘Thyrlestagant’ are recorded in a charter around 1236; it is ‘Thirlstane’ in 1524, ‘Thyrlistane’ in 1533, ‘Thirlistane’ in 1550 and 1553/4, ‘Thrilistane’ in 1557, ‘Thirlistane’ in 1564, ‘Thyrlistane’ in 1599, ‘Thirlistaine’ in 1661, ‘Thirlstoun’ and ‘Thirlistoune’ in 1670, ‘Thirlistaine’ in 1690 and ‘Thirstoune’ in 1695; it is marked ‘Thyrlistaine’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and is ‘Thirlistaine’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; the origin is presumably a reference to the ‘mill-stone’ to which tenants were ‘thirled’, the lade there was still visible in the late 19th century).

Thirlestane (thi-ruil-stān) n. Thirlestane Castle, a turretted edifice of red sandstone, near Lauder, overlooking the Leader Water. The central section was built about 1590, then rebuilt in the 17th century and enhanced around 1840. It was the seat of the Maitland family, Earls of Lauderdale, and is now owned by a charitable trust and open to the public (the only connection with ‘Thirlestane’ in the Ettrick valley was the origin of the name).

Thirlwall (thi-ruil-wal) n. John ‘the elder’ (14th C.) recorded as owner of the lands of Roughley and ‘Grenhowe’ (possibly Greenholm) in Liddesdale in 1365, when Edward III bestowed protection on his tenants there. The suggestion is that he had acquired lands that had once been part of the Comyn holdings in southern Scotland. His seat was at Thirlwall Castle in Northumbria, near the eastern end of Hadrian’s Wall.

day (this-dāi) pron., arch. phrases such as ‘this day ten days’ mean ‘10 days from today’ – ‘The minister told us that God willing he intended to administer the Sacrament of ye Supper of our Lord this day twentie dayes, being the thirs Sabbath of October . . . ’ [PR1720].

this this afternin (this-tur-nin) n., adv. this afternoon – ‘where er oo gaun this efternin?’ (treated as though it is ‘the afternin’ in analogy with ‘the night’, ‘the day’, ‘the morn’, etc.; sometimes shortened to the sef).

This is no my ain Hoose (this-iz-nō-mil-ān-hoose) n. tune that is in the repertoire of the Drums and Fifes, and sometimes played on picking night. The tune is also known as ‘Colonel David Stewart of Garth’s Reel’ and is played as a strathspey reel throughout Scotland. It is recorded from at least the early 18th century and Bonnie Prince Charlie is supposed to have danced to it before the Battle of Prestonpans (also called ‘Oh! This is no my ain Hoose!’).

thistles (thi-sel) pron., pl. themselves – ‘Keep thum be thirsel’ [ECS] (used as a collective plural; cf. theirs).

called after the silky down or pappus inside the head of a thistle – ‘...An’ oor cashmeres an’ angoras An’ oor thistlesoon lambswool’ [WL], ‘...Her step as licht as the thistle-doon, Wi’ easy grace she gaed dancin’ room’ [WL].

Thistlesike (thi-sul-sik) n. farm in Liddesdale, just south of Mangerton, on the opposite bank of the Liddel. It is on the Trysting Sike, and with the forest there known as Thistlesike Plantation. It is probably associated with the place known as ‘Sisselscheillis’ on the 1541 rental roll, valued at 13 shillings and 4 pence and tenanted by Alexander Armstrong.

thit (thi’, thiit) pron. that – ‘it was eafter that thet an moved ti Hawick’, ‘...thit there’s nae where else on earth it that moment, they wud rither be’ [IHS] (only pronounced this way in certain contexts; see also that).

thits (thitz’) contr. that’s – ‘...it’s that spirit thit’s instilled in oor bairns, the next generation o’ Teries, a love for song n’ poetry thit nae other toon can boast’ [IHS].

tho (tho, tho) prep. though – ‘A was right tho’, ‘she’s a right affront tho’, ‘Hei cam tui, an ral-led, tho, an away ei birlt ...’ [ECS]. ‘Note, too, that theh (or thoh) is used for althought, though, notwithstanding, however, for which we use also for aa’ [ECS] (also written ‘thoh’; commonly used in conversation at the ends of sentences; note the short o and the common th instead of the standard English th).

thocht (thocht) n., arch. thought – ‘...That he heard Samuel Rutherford say, that he thocht nane had his purs bot he ’...’ [BR1642], ‘Sic a thocht! Na’ never fear ye ...’ [RH], ‘The thocht o’ what’ll Hawick folk say Aye strengthened heart and hand’ [RH], ‘Oh! mony a fond whisper and soul cheering thocht ...’ [JJ], ‘...Their thocths wull often backward stray Ti Hawick their Borer hame’ [IWL].

thochtless (thocht-liest) adj., arch. thoughtless – ‘The thochtless heart, the careless fit, An’ hurts the chaps that has nae wit ...’ [FL].

thockit (tho-kee’, -ki’) pp., poet. panted, breathed heavily with exertion – ‘His tooth-less gans they fell abreide, He thockyt and he blew’ [JTe].

Thoftcotys (thoft-kots) n. former place name in the Borthwick valley, occurring in a document of 1410, when the Regent Albany conferred lands there and at ‘Borthwic’ on Sir William of Borthwick, on their resignation by Robert Scott. The lands are suggested to be at Hosocote, perhaps being an earlier version of the name, or just part of those lands (the name may be a rare local example of the Middle English root ‘toft’, meaning a homestead, unless it is the same as the earlier Yrostilcotes; it seems likely that this was a variant of Hosocote, with the transcription of the ‘s’ for ‘f’.

thole (thol) v., arch. to endure, tolerate, suffer, undergo, bear – ‘And O, for blessings, never thershe, If ye wadna the brydle thole ...’ [JTe].

tholit (thol-mi-dee) n., poet. suffering, patient, pensive – ‘...That he sall nevir thole the richteous til he sall never thole the richeous til be muvet’ [HSR], ‘...while I thole thy terrers I am distraucht’ [HSR], ‘...Thinks little o’ the friendless form Maun thole the Winter’s cauld’ [JT], ‘...And set it in the sun to dry – The waiting o’ he scarce could thole’ [WFC], ‘He’d better hae tholed wi’ a half toom wame ...’ [WL], ‘Nor can I thole their snack-bar wit, Their bowlers and their brilliantine ...’ [DH], ‘...and that she’ll juist hev to thole, and hope it wadna be smittal’ [DH], to allow, suffer – ‘Jesus answirin’ said until him, Thole it til be sae now’ [HSR] (from Old English).

tholit (thō-lee’, -li’) pp., arch. endured – ‘Because for thy sak I hae th ole reproch: shae me hether kiveret my fece’ [HSR], ‘He thole nae man til do thame wrang ...’ [HSR].

Thom (tōm, tomm) n. James (d.1874) Superintendent of police in Hawick 1854–61. He was a founder member of the Hawick Archaeological Society, was also involved in the Hawick Volunteer Corps and helped found the Lodge St. James. He was appointed as Curator of the Society’s Museum collection in June 1957. Also in 1857 he

Thomas the Rhymer (to-mis-thu-ri-mur) n. (c.1210–c.1290) Thomas Learmouth, Laird of Erclidoune (an old name for Earlston). Although he certainly existed, little detail is known of his life, which has been heavily romanticised. He may have been born in Earlston, where a fragment of his tower remains. He possibly retired to the priory of Fain in Ayrshire, and his lands were transferred to the house of Soutra in 1294. He made many prophecies, often in rhyme, supposedly predicting the accidental death of Alexander III in 1285. He is also meant to have gone off with the Queen of the fairies for 7 years (but actually seems to have been in Aberdeenshire!). His son Thomas is recorded resigning lands to Soutra Hospital in 1294. After his death his reputation as a prophet became legendary, with predictions of the defeat at Flodden, the Union of the Crowns, Bannockburn and the Jacobite risings all being attributed to him – ‘True Thomas lay on Huntlie bank, a ferlie he spied wi’ his ee; And there he saw a ladye bright come riding down by the Eildon Tree’ [SWS], ‘...Where Rymour, long of yore, the nymph embrac’d, The first of men unearthly lips to taste’ [JL].

Thomline (tom-lin) n. Alexander (1781–1827) born in Wilton Parish, son of William and Jean Smith. He was a slater and glazier on the Cross Wynd, listed there in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He married Janet Crawford and their children included: William (d.1808); Robert (b.1806); Elizabeth (b.1808); William (again, b.1811); and Alexander (b.1812). His wife could be the Janet who married William Wilton in 1797. In 1764 they loaned money to Francis Scott, with 9 High Street as collateral, in a sasine that transferred to the house of Soutra in 1794. After his death his reputation as a prophet became legendary, with predictions of the defeat at Flodden, the Union of the Crowns, Bannockburn and the Jacobite risings all being attributed to him – ‘True Thomas lay on Huntlie bank, a ferlie he spied wi’ his ee; And there he saw a ladye bright come riding down by the Eildon Tree’ [SWS], ‘...Where Rymour, long of yore, the nymph embrac’d, The first of men unearthly lips to taste’ [JL].

Alexander (19th C.) first Treasurer of the Hawick Home Mission when it was founded in 1873. Andrew (b.1792/3) stocking-maker in Wilton. On the 1841 census he was living on Underdamside with ‘Tibby’, who was probably his mother. James (19th C.) inspector of the poor in Hawick in the late 1800s. He also served as a student teacher in St. Mary’s School. He was also Registrar in Hawick in the early years of the 20th century. John (18th C.) woollen manufacturer of Hawick, in partnership with William. Since his name is given first he was presumably the older brother. They are described in David Loch’s 1778 book on Scottish trade as ‘dyers and clothiers’ who ‘have considerable business at present, and they have a brother in Glasgow instructing as to the making of cloths fit for that market, and how to use woad in dying of blues & c.’. There are records of help given to them in 1779 by the Board of Trade for Manufactures, instructing them how to use a woad vat. The company operated as dyers and finishers in the old Rough Heugh waulk mill until they sold it to the Inkle Company in 1797. In 1764 they loaned money to Francis Scott, with 9 High Street as collateral, in a sasine that still exists. In 1788 he was recorded as owner of ‘Waulkmill of Rough-heugh’ in Wilton Parish, valued at £22 6s, and another piece of Rough-heugh valued at £9. He and William were still recorded as owners of the ‘Waulkmill of Rough-heugh’, acquired from Langlands’ on the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. The family had been known as ‘Thomline of that Ilk’ and had long resided in Wilton, with their main residence near ‘the Nitron’. However, all trace of the family and its original home had disappeared by the 20th century. He is probably the John who married Mary Ekron in Wilton in 1772 and whose children included: Isabel (b.1773); Andrew (b.1775); James (b.1776); Jean (b.1778); John (b.1784); Andrew (again, b.1786); and William (b.1788). His wife was probably daughter of James Ekron and Isobel Betty Richardson. John (d.1849) Hawick stockmaker who was presumably related to the old Wilton family. He is probably the John recorded on the 1841 census at the Cross Wynd, with wife Helen and children John and George. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for James Murray (whose son was born at Damside) in 1810. Thomas (b.c.1815) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1841 he was at Kirkyard, on Silver Street in 1851 and by 1861 was at 48 Loan. His wife was Isabel and children included Jean (or Janet), James, Alexander, Robert, John, Ralph, Christian and James (again). Walter (b.c.1770) dyer in Wilton. He married Elizabeth (‘Betty’) Hinshelwood (or ‘Hanselwood’). In 1841 he was living at Underdamside with his wife Betty. Their children included: Jane (b.1793); and Nancy (b.1807). He is probably the ‘Walter Tomlin’ whose child died in Hawick in 1798. In 1851 his widow Betty and son William were living on Underdamside with the family of John Peacock, his son-in-law. William (18th C.) partner with John in an early wool dying business at the Waulk Mill in Wilton. He was probably younger brother of John. He and John were recorded as owners of the ‘Waulkmill of Roughheugh, acquired from Langlands' according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. He married Margaret Scott in Wilton in 1766. Their children included: Agnes (b.1767); Jean (b.1769); Andrew (b.1770); and Walter (b.1771). He was recorded at Roughheugh in 1770, with the witnesses being Gavin Turnbull and Thomas Turnbull (perhaps their employees in the mill). He may also be the William who married Jean Smith in 1778. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1778 he married Jean Smith and their children included: Alison (b.1779); Alexander (b.1781); Robert (b.1786); William (b.1789); and Jane (b.1794). William (b.c.1800) born in Innerleithen, he was a stocking-maker in Wilton. He was probably son of Walter and Elizabeth. In 1841 he was living in the same residence as the Lockie family on Damside. In 1851 he was living with his brother-in-law, John Peacock, as well as his mother Betty (also formerly spelled 'Thomlin', 'Thomlins', 'Tomlin', 'Tomlins', etc.).

Thomson (tom-sin) n. John Riddle (19th C.) married Jessie T., daughter of Walter Wilson and Isabella Richardson. He had sons Robert Riddle (b.1860) and Walter Wilson (b.1862). Mark Hawick-born power lifter. He won the British Weightlifting Association Bench Press Championship in the 110kg division in 2005. Robert Riddle (19th C.) son of John Riddle and Jessie Wilson. He was a baker and later insurance inspector in Hawick. He firstly married Margaret, daughter of baker Robert Young, and they had children Aggie Lamb Dryden, Jessie W., Walter W., Robert Young, Elizabeth Margaret and Thomas Dryden (who died in 1917 and is commemorated on the Mikra Memorial). He secondly married Annie, daughter of Joseph Smith, gas manager. Richard (18th/19th C.) from Hawick Parish. He is referred to as being at Woodfoot in 1808 when his sister Janet died. Thomas 'Tommy', 'Tufty' Cornet of 1955. He rode on the Friday in his jubilee year. William Lindsay (19th/20th C.) from Allan Glen's School in Glasgow, he became High School Rector in 1908, and remained in the position until 1919 (see also Thomson).

Thomson (tom-sin) n. Adam (15th C.) recorded as a resident of 'est grange' at the 1494/5 Justice-naire in Jedburgh. Thomas Clommell in Minto was charged with stealing a pig from him. He probably lived at Grange in Ancrum Parish. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Singdean in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Rev. Adam (1813–74) born in Coldstream, he was son of Dr. Adam, minister there, who was instrumental in abolishing the monopoly on publication of the bible in Scotland. In 1833 he became assistant and successor of Rev. Henderson at the East Bank Church in Hawick, having also been called to Dunoon. He was recorded living at the East Port in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He suffered from ill-health, spending 6 month periods in Europe in both 1852 and 1856. However, he remained as minister for 28 years, resigning in 1860 and leaving for Sydney, Australia the following year. There he became the first Moderator of the General Assembly of New South Wales. Before his departure there was a special soiree was held, attended by almost all the local ministers. He was there presented with an illuminated address bearing the Burgh Seal, signed by the Magistrates and about 800 others, as well as other gifts, including a copy of the Encyclopedia Britannica from J.A.H. Murray on behalf of the citizens of Hawick. For the last 2 years of his life he was Principal of St. Andrew’s College in Sydney. He published several sermons while minister in Hawick, including ‘A pastoral memorial; discourses …’ (1860). His sister Elizabeth married John Wilson, manufacturer of Ladylaw, while another sister, Isabella, married Army Paymaster James M. Green and has a memorial obelisk in Wellogate Cemetery. He married Helen Ritchie Wilson (1819–53), daughter of hosiery manufacturer Peter. Their children were Adam, Mary (who married James Hogg) and Helen (who married James Fell). He later remarried. A memoir ‘Life and Ministry of Rev. Adam Thomson, D.D.’ was written by his son-in-law Rev. P. Landreth. A portrait of him exists. Alexander (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. Alexander (17th/18th C.) farmer at Whithester. He is listed there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls and is also recorded there in the early 1700s. He was attested to be tenant in about 1710 in the evidence given regarding the state of Hawick’s Common in 1767. William Wilson was his servitor in 1712 when rebuilt by the Hawick Parish Session. He is probably the Alexander, married to Marion Armstrong, whose children born in Hawick included an unnamed son (b.1683) and John (b.1685). Rev. Alexander McInroy (d.1897) licensed by Edinburgh Presbytery in 1888, he was assistant at St. Clement’s in Dundee and then ordained as minister of St. John’s in Hawick in 1889. He resigned his position in 1894. Allan (16th/17th C.)

described as ‘in Clarelaw’ in a 1612 document, where a number of people were accused of over-charging interest on loans. Andrew (b.1716/7) workman of Hawick, chosen as one of the 6 representative Burgesses in 1767 to define the boundaries of the Common. He may be the Andrew, son of John, born in Wilton Parish in 1715. Andrew (18th C.) recorded at Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish on the 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. Andrew (18th/19th C.) farmer at Bewlie, recorded on the 1787–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He also had 6 farm horses in 1797 and paid the dog tax at Bewlie in the same year. He was probably the Andrew recorded being in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1787 when his marriage to Christian Usher was announced in Melrose Parish, with Andrew ‘Heiton’ as cautioner. Either he or a son Andrew was at Bewlie on the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. Andrew (b.1763/4) farmer at Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was there in 1841, along with children John, Jessie and Betsy. In 1851 he was a retired farmer at Bewlie Mains, where his son John was farmer. Andrew (b.c.1780) recorded as ‘Independent’ in 1841 when he was living in Lilliesleaf, probably on the north side of Main Street. He was there with his children Helen, George, Esther and Andrew. He married Jean Harley and their children included: Helen (b.1810); George (b.1817); and Andrew (b.1826), who farmed at Billerwell. Andrew (1788/9–bef. 1861) born in Ashkirk Parish, he was a road surveyor in Ewesdale. He was living at Brieryshaw in 1841 and 1851. He was unmarried and lived with his sister Mary Riddell; she was a widow in 1851, and listed as ‘Fund Holder’ in 1861. Andrew (19th C.) architect who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. Probably the same Andrew was involved with the building of St. George’s Church at the Disruption of 1843, serving at Wick until his retirement. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. In 1825 in Hawick he married Janet, daughter of merchant Francis Ballantyne, and had 11 children. He visited Hawick in 1837, during the contested election, and gave evidence at the later investigation. He was mentioned in a poem by David Waters, suggesting he was locally an unpopular anti-Reform minister, and also claiming that involvement in vote rigging was the reason he failed to get support from the local aristocracy for a living – ‘...Or, maybe for a daintie kirk, As did his Reverend Frien’ o’ Shiels. – (Thae Tory priests are very diels For mischief, rogery and cunnin’ ...)’ [RDW]. It was also said that by marrying the daughter of Ballantyne, he took some of the spoils that had been fraudulently extracted from Ballantyne’s former partner, ‘Auld Cash’ – ‘A black robed son of light – yclep’d a priest, Removed a load of guilt from off his breast, He wed his daughter and then shared the spoil Which half-way went to save Francisco’s soul’ [RDW]. David L. son of Rev. Lyndsay, he was educated at Hawick High School. He then attended Aberdeen and Glasgow Universities. He is an evolutionary and environmental biologist and is Associate Professor at the University of Hong Kong. Elizabeth (15th C.) mentioned in 1494/5 when she was allowed to ‘compound’ for resetting ‘Joiffe Glenquhin’ (possible Geoffrey Glenholm), who had been involved in the murder of the Laird of Alemoor. She is referred to as ‘in Corrisheuch’, which may be Corrie Sike in upper Teviotdale. However, it is unclear where she came from or how she may have been related to other Thomsons. She is recorded as ‘Besse Thomson’ in the Treasurer’s accounts for 1494/5 having obtained remission from the King.

Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (17th/18th C.) Hawick parishioner who died in the early 1700s. She left a ‘mortification’ to help the poor. The Session decided to enter her name in gilt letters on a big black board in the church, as a way of encouraging other donations; unfortunately this project used up all the money she had left! Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (19th C.) baker in Newcastleton according to Pigot’s 1837 directory. She could be the Betty Thomson (or Little) who was a widow at about 17 North Hermitage Street in 1841 and 1851. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (b.c.1800) baker on the Fore Raw, recorded on the 1841 census. George (15th/16th C.) resident of Spittal. In 1502 it is recorded that he had 2 pigs stolen from him there, by Adam Grahamslaw, son of the Laird of Little Newton. George (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton. George of Fodderlee (18th C.) husband of Margaret Kerr, from whom he probably inherited the half lands of Fodderlee. In 1788 (and continued in 1811) he is recorded as owner of the lands of Easter Fodderlee, valued at £80. His son was Robert. George (18th C.) house servant at Weens in 1791, when he was working for William Oliver of Dinlabyre. Perhaps the same George was also listed as groom at Borthwickbrae in the same year. He was still a servants at Weens in 1792. In 1794 he was a house servant at Larriston, still working for William Oliver. George (18th/19th C.) farmer at Chapel in the 1787–1789 Horse Tax Rolls for Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1797 he owned 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. George (b.1788/9) born in Cavers Parish. He was farmer at Cavers Knowe in 1841. In 1851 he was a gardener in Wilton, living at Wilton Kirk Style. He was a member of Allars Kirk in about the 1830s. His wife was Isabella (from Robertson) and their children included Helen, George, Walter, Margaret, Isabella and Elizabeth. Dr. George William (b.1818) son of Thomas and Anna Drummond from Midlothian. He was brother of Wyville Smith Thomson, who was minister at Cardross, Dunbartonshire. He became a doctor in Hawick with practice on the High Street. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed as a druggist on ‘Market pl’ and as part of the partnership of ‘Graham & Thomspson’, physicians on Buccleuch Street. However, in 1861 he is recorded living at 10 Buccleuch Street. In 1841 he married Margaret Lang from Dumfriesshire. His children included: George William; Margaret Cadenhead, who married William Scott Elliot; Walter Gowdie; John Lang; Thomas Drummond; Anna Drummond, who married John Turnbull Laing; Emma M.; and Wyville Smyth. He lived at 10 Buccleuch Street and at Northville, Bridge Street. George (b.1820/1) from Lilliesleaf, he was farmer at Newhouses in Wilton Parish. He is recorded there in 1851 with his brother Andrew and sister Helen. George (19th C.) left Hawick in about 1869 and later became Provost in Johnstone in Renfrewshire. He was Provost there 1893–99. In 1897 he gifted to the Town an ornamental fountain, which was sited in Drumlanrig Square, to be replaced about 1910 with the more elaborate Brown Fountain. He attended the 1899 Common Riding, but was reported being in ill health later that year. Helen ‘Nelly’ (18th C.) laundry maid at Minto in 1789 when she was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. J. (18th/19th C.) resident of Westburnflat. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. James (17th C.) resident at Easter Highchesters according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. James (17th C.) resident of ‘the netherend’ of Hassendean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) resident at Hassendean Townhead according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th/18th C.) tenant at Midshiels. His daughter Christian married nursery-man Archibald Dickson. James (1700–48) poet born at Ednam. He grew up at Southdean, 3rd son of Thomas, who was Minister there (and who apparently died during an exorcism at Wolfelee). He should not be confused with his more famous Hawick namesake! He attended Jedburgh Grammar School and had a Presbytery Bursary in Arts and Divinity at Edinburgh University 1715–24; he was ‘Lowland Bursar’ for Hawick Parish for the last 4 of these years. He was patronised by Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto, among other men, and spent some vacations at Minto. He also held lands at Wideopen, near Morebattle, inherited via his mother. He moved to London in about 1725. He wrote the words for ‘Rule Britannia’ and the epic poem ‘The Seasons’ (used by Handel as text for his oratorio), as well as the highly successful play ‘Tancred and Sigismunda’ amongst other things. Scenes from ‘the Seasons’ are inspired by areas around Jedburgh and Southdean, with the description of a storm collecting over mountain cliffs said to have been based on Ruberslaw. A cave near Ancrum, popularly known as ‘Thomson’s Cave’ was supposed to have been a popular spot for him to visit, and to have his name carved on its roof. He retired to Richmond, Surrey, where he is buried. The armchair in which he composed the ‘Castle of Indolence’ (being high-backed and made of beechwood, with a burn on one arm where it is said a candle fell while he was absorbed in his writing) was acquired by Gilbert Elliott of Otterburn, factor at Wells; Elliott insisted that Burns sit in the chair during his brief visit to Wells House in 1787. A large hawthorn bush in a garden in Southdean was long regarded as being associated with the poet. There is a memorial obelisk to him overlooking Ednam, another memorial (‘Temple of the Muses’) on the Bass Hill of Dryburgh, erected by David Stuart Erskine, and a memorial window at Southdean Kirk. Erskine organised a memorial celebration to which Burns was invited but sent lines of apology – ‘So long, sweet poet of the year, Shall bloom that wreath thou well hast sown While Scotia, with exulting tear Proclaims that Thom-}

Thomson from Sandholm who was on the Committee of the Proprietors of Castleton Library. James (18th/19th C.) listed at ‘Pingle’ on the subscription list for William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was listed as a ‘Woodforester’ at Sandholm in 1835–41. He married Margaret Common. Their children included: Janet (b.c.1816), who married Andrew Elliot; Richard (b.1817); Andrew (b.1819); Jane (b.c.1822) and Mary (b.c.1825). Either he or his father was recorded as forester for the Buccleuch estates in Liddesdale in at least the period 1798–1807. He was probably the Thomson from Sandholm who was on the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘His-

an apprenticeship as a wood-turner and cabinet-maker in Selkirk. He worked there for a while, before moving to Hawick, where he spent more than 30 years. His first compositions appeared in the Dumfries Herald. He was writer of ‘Up wi’ the banner’, ‘The Border Queen’, ‘Hawick Volunteers’ and ‘The Star o’ Robbie Burns’, as well as poems such as ‘The Auld Mid Raw’, ‘The Mither Tongue’, ‘The Wee Croodlin’ Doo’ and ‘Hairst’, many contained in his book ‘Doric Lays & Lyrics’ (1870). ‘Our Robin’ was one of his first poems, being published in the late 1850s, with his ‘Hogmanay’ sung at the New Year of 1860 at the Ewan’s Mill gathering. A great admirer of Burns, he helped found the Burns Club in Hawick; it is said that Burns’ ‘Kilmarnock Edition’ was his constant companion while he was a herdsman. He was Masonic Provincial Grand Bard for Peebles and Selkirk, as well as Bard for Lodge 424. He was said to have lived in the auld Mid Raw and later at 54 High Street, where a commemorative plaque was erected in 1995. In the 1861 census he is listed on Wilton Terrace, living with a housekeeper Mary Riddell, and her children Mary and Catherine, as well as their children together, John and Helen. In poor health in later life, he moved back to Bowden in 1886, but returned to Hawick a few months later and was supported by his Masonic brethren. In 1887 he presented ‘Up wi’ the Banner’ to the Cornet, this being only about a year and a half before his death. He died in the Cottage Hospital and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery, where Lodge 424 erected a memorial obelisk. A wooden cup he made from material salvaged from the Mid Raw is in the Museum. The Hawick Burns Club unveiled his portrait at their clubrooms in 1924. In 2005 the new bridge across the Teviot was named after him, and an adjacent statue (by Bill Landles) unveiled in 2006.

James (d.1939) son of John, farmer at Synton Mains. He became a saddler of 6 High Street, taking over the butcher’s premises of George Davies. His brothers William and John were both farmers. He was secretary of the Border Oddfellows for 30 years and was for many years Session Clerk for East Bank Church. Janet (b.c.1790) confectioner at the Sandbed. In Pigot’s 1837 directory she is listed as a baker and confectioner on the High Street. She was recorded at about No. 12 Sandbed on the 1841 census. John (15th/16th C.) witness to a sasine for the Erskines in their lands of Synton in 1508, where he is ‘John Thomsoun’. Judging by the other witnesses, he may have been local. John (16th C.) servant to Walter Scott of Headshaw. In 1583/4 he was among a number of men from the area who were denounced for failing to appear to give evidence in a case against the Turnbulla of Bedrule. John (17th C.) tenant in ‘Mabinslaw’ on a 1684 list of Roxburghshire men declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. He probably farmed at Mabonlaw. John (d.c.1687) tenant in Flatt when his will was recorded in 1687. It is unclear if this was the Flatt in Castleton Parish. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Isobel Whillans and their children included James (b.1674), Isobel (b.1684) and Bessie (b.1687). The baptism of Bessie was witnessed by Stephen Greenshields and Michael Turnbull. John (17th C.) tenant in Lethem in Southerdean Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick, living near the East Port. In 1706 he was one of the people who were disturbed at night by a group who were involved in drunken revelry, and later charged. He was apparently forced to ‘ryse naked out of his bed’ and threatened with being taken away by the pretend officers. John (d.bef. 1776) grocer in Hawick, mentioned in an Edinburgh marriage record of 1776, when his daughter Christian married David Brown. John (18th C.) farmer at Wester Essenside. He was recorded there on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1789–94. He is probably the John who married Mary Gray and whose children included: Andrew (b.1759); Margaret (b.1760); Agnes (b.1761); Robert (b.1763), who probably took over the farm of Wester Essenside; Jane (b.1765); James (b.1768); Thomas (b.1774); and Mary (b.1776). John (18th/19th C.) Hawick carrier who owned 2 horses according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Deanbrae, recorded as owner of 4 horses on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (18th/19th C.) gardener at Teviotbank in 1797, when he was working for David Simpson. John (18th/19th C.) possibly son of James, who owned Fodderlee and farmed at Nether Ancrum. He was granted a disposition for East Fodderlee in 1784 and in 1802 sold the lands to Thomas Gregson, farmer at Whitechasters. John (18th/19th C.) tenant of Billerwell farm, in the Rule valley. After the Teviot flood swept away much of Hassendean churchyard (where his ancestors were buried) he moved the tombstone to Billerwell. John (18th/19th C.) farmer in the Hawick area. He married Agnes Lambert and their children included John (b.1834/5), who was a mason. John (b.1789) son of Andrew, who farmed...

at Bewlie. He himself is recorded in 1851 at Bewlie Mains, farming 1035 acres and employing 35 labourers. He was unmarried at that time and living with his retired father and sister Betsy. Rev. John (1823–1889) born in Over-Roxburgh, son of farmer William and Margaret Shiel. He was educated at Ancrum School and Edinburgh University. He was licensed by Kelso Presbytery in 1854 and became assistant minister at Selkirk.

He was ordained as minister of St. Mary's after it had become a ‘quoad sacra’ church in 1860. He lived at 9 Buccleuch Street and later built Rosalee when his wife inherited a small fortune. He also owned Allanshaws in Kelso. Together they founded St. John’s Church in 1880, and he formally became its first minister in 1881 (having resigned his position at St. Mary’s in 1879). He was Chaplain to the Cornet several times in the 1880s and supported the Common Riding at a time when many of the other local ministers railed against it. His acceptance of an invitation to the Cornet’s Breakfast in 1887 was the start of that event becoming a formal part of the proceedings, and his reciprocation to invite the supporters to his church the following Sunday was the beginning of the ‘Kirkin’. The lands that he purchased included some parts of what had previously been Roughlehnh (and owned by Walter Scott). He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1877. He also served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire.

His wife was Mary Ann, daughter of James Scott of Allanshaws and Mary Brown. Mrs. Thomson also paid for the new iron pump at the Verter Well (she later married William Ludovic Mair, Sheriff-Substitute of Lanarkshire, and died in 1891). Their children were Margaret Shiel (who married Robert Grierson Laidlaw of Hazelwood, Hawick), and 5 others who died young. He wrote several books including ‘Address to Ploughmen’ (also called ‘Address on the Evils of the Bondage System’, published in Hawick, 1866), ‘The art of weaving spiritualised’ (Hawick, 1869 and 1874), ‘Voices from the Plough’ (Hawick, 1869), ‘History of Peter Plough’ (Hawick, 1872), ‘Life and times of William Thomson’ (1875 and 1879), ‘Alexander Hope: a Hawick story’ (1878, perhaps with a 2nd part in 1879), ‘The Life of James Scott of Allanshaws’ (1879), ‘The Art of Ploughing Spiritualised’, plus at least one other sermon and ‘Speeches delivered on Different Occasions’ (Hawick, 1882). Although ‘Alexander Hope’ was a work of fiction (with a strong moralistic message, particularly against the evils of drink), it contains several local anecdotes that are still of interest. John (19th/20th C.) farmer at Greensidehall and later Sinton Mains. He was brother of saddler James and farmer William. His son John was Secretary of the Oddfellows.

Rev. John Archibald Glover (b.1883) son of John Cornwellis, minister in Edinburgh and Anne Dundas Glover. His brother was James C. He was born in Sanquharr, Dumfriesshire and educated at George Watson’s College, Glasgow Academy and Glasgow University. He was licensed to preach by Glasgow Presbytery in 1906, became an assistant at St. Andrew’s in Edinburgh, and in 1910 was ordained at Wallace-town, Ayr. He moved to the Tron Kirk, Edinburgh, in 1916 and served with the R.A. Chaplains’ Department 1917–18. He became minister of Hawick Parish in 1925. He also stepped in as ‘interim-moderator’ for St. George’s Kirk when it was without a minister in 1936/7. He wrote ‘Roll of the Parish Ministry of Hawick, A.D. 1183–1929’ (1936), which he had made into a fine manuscript volume, preserved in the church. He married Ethel Maud Richardson and they had a son Aiden (b.1911). Rev. Joseph (1791/2–65) son of John, the Town Clerk of Jedburgh. He was licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1814 and appointed preacher at Caerlenrig (Teviothead) ‘chapel-of-ease’ in 1817. However, 2 years later he was ordained as minister at Ednam, then translated to Morebattle in 1844. He married Margaret (who died in 1844, aged 43), daughter of Thomas S. Hardie, minister of Ashkirk. He later married Elizabeth F. Robson. He wrote an account of Ednam Parish. Rev. Lindsay (1938–2014) born in Edinburgh and brought up in Stow, he studied at Edinburgh University and served as Assistant Minister at Palmerston Church in Edinburgh from 1962. He was ordained as Minister of Balnornock North in Glasgow in 1964 and then moved to Hawick in 1972 as Minister of Trinity Kirk. He became a well-known and active member of the local community, growing to love its traditions and institutions. He acted as Callants’ Club Chaplain and was also involved with the Probus Club. He was Common Riding Chief Guest in 2008 and retired that year after 36 years of service. Despite being advised to move away from his charge in order to enjoy a peaceful retirement, he insisted on staying on in Hawick. He married Brenda Shanks and their children are Stuart, David and Helen. Patrick (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice-in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance. He was recorded being ‘i dënu’, which is probably an abbreviation for ‘in dennum’, i.e. he lived in Denholm. Richard (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1778 he married Euphan Cairns and their children included: James (b.1779); Janet (b.1781); John (b.1783); and Archibald (b.1785). Richard (18th/19th C.) recorded at Woodfoot in Hawick Parish on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was probably farmer at Borthaugh Woodfoot. He is probably the Richard whose daughter Isabel died in Hawick in 1815. Robert (16th C.) farmer at Hawthornside ‘Newtown’. His barn and yard are recorded in 1562 in the document dealing with the Baronial land dispute in Feu-Rule. Robert (d.c.1606) minister of Ratho who was presented as minister of Castleton Parish at the end of 1604. He may have held both at the same time, but not for long, since he was dead within less than 2 years. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Janet Dickson. Their son George was born in 1687, with Gideon Scott of Outerside and Rev. Thomas Shiel as witnesses (suggesting he was from the countryside to the south of Hawick). His children included: Helen (b.1675); Gideon (b.1684); Isobel (b.1685), who married Robert Nichol in Hawick in 1720; and George (b.1687). He may be the Robert, tenant in Hawick Shiel mentioned in 1679 when Robert Wright was fined for destroying a load of peat that he had cut, and he himself was fined for ‘ane ryott committ upon the said Robert Wright’. He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for John Dryden in 1675. Robert (1668/9–1740) tenant in Greens in Castleton Parish. He married Betty Scott, who died in 1739, aged 73 years. He may have had a son William (also tenant in Greens), whose wife Isabella Armstrong died in 1748, aged 40. They are buried in Etterton. Robert (17th/18th C.) tenant at Castlehill (near Newmill) in 1690. He is listed as ‘Rot. Thomson officer’, but it is unclear what ‘officer’ meant. He is probably the same Robert listed as tenant at Newmill on Teviot on the 1694 Heath Tar rolls, where he was ‘wt tuo kilns’ and paid tax for 4 hearths. He was ‘in Newmiln’ in 1704 when he witnessed a baptism and ‘of Newmilne’ when he witnessed 2 births (one at Branxholm-town) in 1705. He may have been ancestor of the later Robert at Newmill on Slitrig (although maybe that is just a coincidence). He could be the Robert, married to Margaret Falside, whose son Robert was born in Hawick Parish in 1701, with other children being William (b.1694) and Walter (b.1698). He is probably the Robert ‘in New milne’ whose step-daughters included: Margaret Scott, who married Walter Hume in 1707; and Anne Scott, who married James Scott (tenant in Stobicote) in 1712. It seems likely that his wife Margaret Falside was widow of William Scott, and that he took her children into his family. Robert (18th C.) ex-Bailie in 1738 when he was involved with the construction of the Teviot Bridge. Perhaps the same Robert was recorded as an elder of Hawick Parish in 1711. Robert (18th C.) tenant of Billerwell farm in the Rule valley. His family came originally from the Hase sendean area. He is recorded as tenant there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 4 horses. He also paid the dog tax in 1797. When he died (in the late 1700s) he left around £1200 to a distant relative called Boog, who spent it all within about a year. Robert (18th C.) only son of George and Margaret Kerr. In 1757 he had a sasine for the half lands of Fodderlee. He married Mary Dick. She and her son George had a sasine for the ‘liferent’ of Fodderlee in 1764. However, he had another sasine for these lands in 1766, along with Isobel Kerr. She was presumably either a second wife, or a relative of his mother. In 1778 the lands went to James, who may have been another son. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Wester Essenside, perhaps son of John. He is probably the Robert recorded at Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish on the 1791 Horse Tax Rolls. He is recorded at Wester Essenside as owner of 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was probably also the farmer at Essenside taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded as farmer at New Mill on Slitrig, on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1797. He is probably related to the Robert recorded there in 1712. He was at ‘Newmihn’ in 1789 when his daughter Magdaline was baptised in Kirktoun Parish. Robert (1806–70s) born in Ashkirk, son of surveyor James and Rachel Wilkie. He was listed as a grocer on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 and 1851 he was living with his parents and siblings at 27 Loan. His grocer’s and spirit merchant’s shop was at 9 High Street, on the ground floor of the house owned by joiner Walter Wilson. He later became factor for the Cavers estate. In 1861 he was listed as a... land factor, still living with his mother and sister at 27 Loan. He also served as Chairman of the Cavers Parochial Board. Robert (b.1810/1) son of a shepherd at Bellsrigg in Deadwater. He was a shepherd in Rulewater, living at Blackburn Cottage in Southdean Parish. In the 1841 census he is recorded as ‘Skyehead’ and at Southdean Rig in 1851. He was one of the main early supporters of the Free Kirk at Wolfelee, being the first elder, one of the first two elders appointed in 1850 and one of the trustees. He married Margaret Armstrong, from Inverness-shire. Their children included: Andrew (b.1834/5), shepherd at Wigg; Helen (b.1836); Janet (b.1838); Esther (b.1840); Jane (b.1843), born at the Rig, who married carter James Moore; Thomas Armstrong (b.1845); John; and Euphemia. Robert ‘Bob’ (19th C.) son of Adam and Janet Cairns from around Newtown St. Boswells. When young he worked on a farm, but an accident injured his arm. He was appointed as postman in the Rulewater district, succeeding George Nichol about 1873. Starting on foot, he later got a horse and trap. In 1900 he was transferred to Newtown St. Boswells, and received a long-service medal from the King. He lived at Weens Cottages, was a keen gardener, librarian for Hobkirk, active member of the Total Abstinence Society and deacon of Wolfelee Kirk. In 1873 he married Mary, daughter of shepherd Robert Hume. His children were: Adam, assistant gardener at Wolfelee, who married Martha Dalgleish; Robert, gardener at Hunthill, who married Margaret Eunson; James, blacksmith at Wark-on-Tweed, who married Euphemia Hope; George, footman at Kippilaw House; John, grocer; William, tailor; Charles, gardener; Helen; and Janet. Thomas (15th C.) recorded ‘in quithalch braa’ in 1494/5. He contributed ‘1 nag’ to the itinerant court held in Selkirk. His lands could be Whitehaugh Brae near Hawick. Thomas (15th/16th C.) witness to the sasine for Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee in 1522, for the Homes of Wedderburn. Rev. Thomas (c.1577–1626) graduating from St. Andrews University in 1597, he became minister of Soutra in 1605 and was translated to Hobkirk in 1609. He died sometime in the first half of 1626, with William Weir becoming Hobkirk’s next minister. He married Janet Sinclair (who was buried in Greyfriars Churchyard in Edinburgh in 1667), widow of James Brydon. Their son John became a tailor’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1629, while another son was probably the Thomas who was minister to the garrison of the Earl of Callendar in 1645, then to a congregation in Hartlepool and finally to Slamannan. Rev. Thomas (c.1666–1716) minister at Southdean. He was son of Thomas, gardener to Andrew Edmonston of Ednam and descended from the family of Rousland, near Kinmeil. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1686, was licensed by Kelso Presbytery in 1691 and became minister at Ednam in 1692. He was translated to Southdean in 1700 and remained there until his death. He is said to have died after being struck by lightning while exorcising a ghost from a building at Wolfelee (there seems to be some truth in this story, with a tradition that the main house there was haunted by a brownie, and evidence that he was buried quickly after his death, but few details are certain). He was a quiet man, little known beyond his congregation, but respected for his piety and pastoral duty. In about 1693 he married Beatrice Trotter of Wideopen (on Kale), daughter of Alexander Trotter of Fogo and Margaret Home of Bassendale, and she died in Edinburgh in 1725. Their children were: Andrew (b.1695); Alexander (b.1697); Isobel (b.1699); James (1700–48), well known as a poet, author of ‘The Seasons’; Margaret; Mary (d.1790) who married William Craig in Edinburgh and whose son James planned Edinburgh’s New Town; Elizabeth (d.c.1746), who married Robert Bell, minister at Strathaven, in Edinburgh in 1740; Jean (d.1781), who married Robert Thomson, Master of Lanark Grammar School; and John (d.1735), who acted as dictator for his brother James. A brass plaque was added to his gravestone at Chesters in 1867. Thomas (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He married Agnes Turnbull, daughter of the Laird of Knowe in Minto Parish in 1721. He was rebuked by the Hawick Session for this ‘irregular marriage’, which took place in England. Thomas (18th C.) farmer in Minto Parish. In 1780 he was listed as holding part of Minto Hills farm ‘in tack’, the other part being held by Andrew Nichol. Thomas (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident recorded as owner of a horse in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He may be the Thomas who was already deceased when his daughter Marion died in Hawick in 1815. He is probably the carrier of that name who witnessed a baptism for John Hardie in Hawick in 1768. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer recorded at Mervinslaw Mains on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident at Roan. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. William (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Raw Text End 2824
Thomson’s Cave

Tax records in 1694. William (17th C.) tenant in Side in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. William (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘est the water’ in 1694. Perhaps the same William witnessed a baptism for smith John Dryden in 1705. Dryden’s wife was Isobel, who may have been his daughter. William (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘officer’ in the Hawick Session records of 1722, when he was asked to summon a person to the Court of the Baron Depute. He was probably a Burgh Officer of the time, but may instead have been a Kirk officer. William (18th C.) recorded ‘at New miln’ in Hawick Parish in 1740. He was probably son (or grandson) of Robert, tenant in Newmill. He married Isobel Scott and their children included: Janet (b.1738); and Helen (b.1740). Janet (b.1736), with no mother’s name given, may also have been his daughter, as well as Margaret (b.1733), baptised in Robertson. The witnesses in 1740 were blacksmiths James Dryden, elder and younger. William (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He is listed in 1780 as possessor (probably tenant) of the lands of Horse Park, with rent of £9 9s. William (18th C.) footman at Cavers in 1785, when he was working for Capt. John Douglas. In 1791–73 he was still footman at Cavers for George Douglas and in 1794 and 1797 was a house servant at Cavers. His son could be the ‘William Thomson, Jun. Cavers’ who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Netherraw according to the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 7 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. William (18th/19th C.) listed at Gatehousecote on the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. William (18th/19th C.) grocer on the Howegate, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. William (b.1799/1800) from Selkirk, he was a tailor on Allars Crescent. He was listed there in the 1851 census (when he employed 3 men) and in Slater’s 1852 directory. By 1861 he was at 1 Manse Lane. His wife was Isabella and their children included Agnes, Margaret, William, Andrew, Ann and Jemima. William (b.1810) manufacturer of hosiery on the Loan, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was a son of surveyor James, and was living at about 27 Loan with his parents and siblings in 1841. William (b.1790/1) stone dyker living at Loughnaugh on Hermitage Water in 1851. His wife was Helen and their children included Thomas, Jane (whose married name was Scott), Margaret and Janet. William (b.c.1820) stone dyker, born in Minto Parish. In 1851 he was living at Stouslie Schoolhouse with his wife Elizabeth and children Mary, William L. and James. William (19th C.) mason in Denholm in the 1860s. He was a registered voter at that time. William (19th/20th C.) farmer at Hummelknowes and later Coliforthill. William Lyndsay (19th/20th C.) High School Rector 1908–19. William ‘Bill’ or ‘Jimpy’ (1936–) worked in various mills in Hawick, and long involved with the British Legion, he was Common Riding Secretary 2001–05 (formerly spelled ‘Thomason’, ‘Thomesoun’, ‘Thomsone’, ‘Thomsone’, ‘Thomesoun’, ‘Thomsoune’, etc.; also pronounced as in ‘Tamson’ or ‘Thamson’).

Thomson’s Cave (tom-sinz-käv) n. name given to a particular cave on the bank of the Teviot near Ancrum. This is said to have been a popular haunt of for the poet James Thomson (of ‘The Seasons’), who wrote his name on the roof.

the Thomson Well (thu-tom-sin-wel) n. small ornamental iron drinking fountain on the site of the Mid Raw before the Brown Fountain was built. It was provided by Provost Thomson of Johnstone, Renfrewshire and handed over to the town in late 1897. It can be seen in a photograph of Drumlanrig Square taken in about 1898. It apparently bore the inscription ‘Presented by Provost Thomson of Johnstone, to his native town in commemoration of Queen Victoria’s record reign, 1897…It’s yer ain; protect it’. However, it was only in place for a few years and its whereabouts are unknown.

thon (thon, ðhon) adj., adv., pron. that, those, you, yonder – ‘This is mine, that’s yours, but where’s aught thon?’ [JAHM], ‘Yiddie’s a bleith fallih, bit A dinna leike thon Jock yin!’ [ECS], ’What’s the name o thon close it the Croon Hourt?’ [DH].

thonder (ðhon-dur) adj., adv., pron. yonder, over there – ‘if ee’r lookin for yer fither he’s ower thonder’, ‘Thonder was the monument A jaloozed ti be the Lilliard’s Edge Memorial’ [ECS], ‘Guid-nicht to my freend owre thonder’ [DH], ‘Away up thonder abune the Wusp …at Westminster …’ [DH].

thon (ðhon) adj., adv., pron. that, those – ‘A fair likeet Nardini’s ice cream. Was thone no the best?’ [We] (also thon).
thoom (thoom) n. a thumb – ‘hei’s aa fingers an’ thoons’, ‘A ken na thoom’s beelin’, ‘cause it’s putt, puttna (throb, throbbing)’ [ECS], ‘. . . Wi’ tea, an’ crackers no’ the size O’ even ane’s thoom nail’ [WFC] (also spelled ‘thoomb’ or ‘thoum’).

thoomb see thoom

thoomand (thoo-zind) n. a thousand – ‘. . . but A’d a thoosand rather be sair hakin’ treis than hing about like this daein’ nocht’ [JEDM], ‘. . . for gettin’ a thoosand folk throwe their test’ [IWL], ‘Ten thoosands hands were raised on high, Wavin’ an’ raxin’ towards the sky’ [WP], ‘A thoosand buttercups waited to confirm Yin’s likin’ for butter . . . ’ [DH], ‘What sacrifice To gie a pound Gin I’ve a thoosand ma’ir!’ [WL], ‘Weary an’ dowie, aye mysel A thoosand times I’ve tried ti tell . . . ’ [WP] (cf. thoosant).

Thor (thór) n. Norse god of thunder, rain and farming. Son of Odin, he is traditionally thought of as one of the gods in the Hawick battle cry ‘Teribus ye Teri-Odin’. It is unclear how old the tradition is of associating Thor with the Hawick slogan, but there appears to be little evidence that it precedes Victorian attempts to explain its origin. There is certainly no mention in Hogg’s song of 1819 (which does mention Odin), or in anything published earlier than that – ‘The spirit still lies on the Border side – The spirit of Thor and Odin’ [JB], ‘. . . With spirit rapt, and, full of kith and kin, Pray Thor of Holy Church exalt her horn’ [JBSS].

Thorbrand (thór-brawn’d) n. Adam (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1707 when Walter Deans was fined by the Council for summoning him to the Court in Jedburgh when the case was already being considered by the Court in Hawick. He is probably the Adam whose daughter Jean was baptised in Hawick in 1703. George (17th C.) son of wright James. He was witness to the document describing his father’s work on the ‘steiple-loft’ in St. Mary’s Kirk in 1684; he is referred to as ‘my sone wryter thereof’. He was probably son of the James who married Jane Veitch. James (16th C.) recorded as ‘Jacobum Thronbrand in Wiltoun’ in 1553/4 when he was on the panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather’s lands of Branxholme and Buccleuch. It is not known where in Wilton he was tenant or whether he was related to later local Thorbrands. Bailie James (17th C.) recorded in 1660 when Bailie Walter Chisholme promised that he would not disobey the Burgh’s rules regarding ‘the question of neighbourhood for their Keep’ between them. He could be the James who was one of Hawick’s Commissioners in Kelso who were insulted in 1657 by Robert Hardie (who was fined by the Magistrates). He was listed as Councillor in 1668 and Bailie in 1673. In 1669 a woman was fined for saying that ‘the jogges was mair fitting for him nor hir’; he was probably Bailie at that time. He was described as a ‘late bailie’ when he was part of the Commission to discuss the division of the Common with agents of the Lord of Queensberry in 1672. He may be the wright on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. In 1683 wright Francis Gledstains was fined for attacking him and for stealing the 4 ducks that he had caught. Also in 1683 he was the wright who was late ‘baylea in Havicke’ when charged with the task of constructing the first gallery in St. Mary’s Kirk. This was the ‘Steeple (or Middle) Loft’ in St. Mary’s in 1684. He was married to ‘Jeane Wetch’ (presumably Veitch). His sons included: Thomas (b.1652); and George (b.1654), who married Margaret Scott. Jane, who married William Laing, may have been his daughter. Given the confusion between the names he may well be the ‘Baillea Thorburne’ listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. In 1675 he witnessed a baptism for William Welch (or ‘Wetch’), who may have been related to his wife. James (19th C.) farmer at Stonedge in the 1860s. John (17th/18th C.) wright in the early 1700s. He is recorded in the Parish Records as ‘wright in Hawick, and this, with what Bailife Routledge was in Cruik’, while he described as being ‘there’, presumably meaning he was a resident of Crook, but not a tenant (formerly ‘Thronbrand’; note that in early records it may be the same as Thorburn).

Thorburn (thór-burn) n. Adam (18th/19th C.) carrier in Hawick according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. His property may be the ‘Thorburn’ marked on Buccleuch Street on Wood’s 1824 map. He had an unnamed child who died in 1798. Adam (1764–1837) born in Hawick, he emigrated to America, settling in Bovina, New York. He married Janet Patterson and their children were Adam, William, Catherine, Janet, George, Nancy and James. Andrew (19th C.) son of George, farmer at Stonedge. He is said to have gone out to the New Zealand gold rush with local builder John Eckford, and to have died in New York at the age of 99. Both his sister Janet and brother George are also said to have died at an advanced age. George (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, recorded in 1694 when he was listed among the 'Cottars' on the Hearth Tax roll there. He could be the George who married Helen Tailor in Ashkirk in 1707. George (18th C.) smith in Ashkirk. He was said to have married Jean, daughter of James Anderson and Helen Lithgow; their daughter Jean married John Anderson, tenant at Newton, Wilton Parish, and whose daughter Jean married John Eckford, who later claimed the remains of the fortune of his ancestor Hector Lithgow. Another daughter, Betty, married John Russell in Ashkirk in 1760. Assuming that the genealogy is essentially correct, then he would have been born around 1725 and could have been son or grandson of the earlier George from Ashkirk. George (b.c.1755) farmer at Stonedge. He was listed there in 1841, along with his son John and his family. His children included: John (b.c.1790), who farmed Stonedge after him; Thomas (b.c.1800), born in Ashkirk Parish, who helped his brother John on the farm; Janet, who married farmer William Little and lived to be 99; Andrew, who went to New Zealand and died in New York, aged 99; and George, shepherd at Harwood and Ormiston, who died at over age 80. He is easy to confuse with a contemporary man from Ashkirk; the forenames used are similar enough that the 2 families are surely related (or are being confounded here). George (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jeanie Henderson in Wilton Parish in 1786. Their children included: Jeanie (b.1788); John (b.1789); Anne (b.1791); George (b.1793), who was a carrier in Newcastle; Thomas (b.1795); and James (b.1797). George (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included John (b.1828). He may be the same man as George from Castleton Parish. George (1793–1884) born in Ashkirk Parish, son of farmer George. He was a carrier in Newcastle; operating a weekly service to Hawick according to Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1841 and 1851 he was listed at about 4 Stopford Street. He could be the George of Castleton who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He married Janet Geddes, who died at Stonedige in 1832, aged 33. He secondly married Mary Inglis, who died in 1889, aged 88. His children included: George (b.1818), who died in infancy; Andrew (b.1819); Jean (b.1821); Jane (b.1822); and Lieut. James (1824–58), who died at Aldershot Camp; John (b.c.1828); William (b.c.1840); Margaret; Isabella; and George (again). George (19th C.) said (by J.H. Haining) to have been son of George, farmer at Stonedge. He was shepherd at Harwood and Ormiston and claimed to have died at over the age of 80, like his sister Janet and brother Andrew. 2 of his daughters were: Kate, farmer at Harwood; and Jane, widow of wool agent William Dalgelish. However, there is no record of him on the local census records of the mid-1800s. George (b.c.1820) son of John. Like his father, he farmed at Stonedge. He was one of the 18 founders of the Relief Kirk in Hawick. He was tenant there in the 1860s. George Cumming (1950/1– ) son of Park gardener Jack and brother of Hawick R.F.C. Secretary John. He worked at Forbes Nursery as a schoolboy, and was educated at Edinburgh University, where he received a Ph.D. in horticulture. He was founder and Managing Director of Global Horticulture Limited. He was Chief Guest of the 2009 Common Riding. James (18th C.) footman at Cavers in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for James Douglas of Cavers. James (19th C.) local schoolmaster of whom a portrait exists. James (b.1824) born in Hobkirk Parish, son of John. In 1861 he was listed as ‘Probationer M.A. of U P Church’ when visiting the house of John Governlock in Ewesdale. He may be related to Rev. John, who was also from Hobkirk. Janet (18th/19th C.) daughter of George, farmer at Stonedge. She married William Little, farmer at Salenside. She is said (by J.H. Haining) to have ‘lived to be 99, got second sight and a third set of teeth, although they decayed very quickly’. She has a brother Andrew who also lived to 99, and another brother George, who lived beyond 80. Jean (18th C.) cook and chambermaid at Knowe in Minto Parish in 1785, when she was working for Thomas Turnbull. Probably the same person was a female servant at Bothwickbrae in 1791. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was married to Janet Gillis and their children included John (b.1703). John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Margaret Inglis in 1754. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Helen Bullock in 1756. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Minto Kames. He may have been son of Thomas, who was farmer there before him. He was recorded at Kames in the 1789–1797 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1797 he was owner of 12 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax at Kames in 1797. He is probably the John who married Betty Hor- burgh in Minto Parish in 1785 and whose children included Isabella (b.1786), Nelly (b.1789), Margaret (b.1790), Betty (b.1792), Jane (b.1797) and Robert (b.1798). John (18th/19th C.) proprietor of a public house and grocer on the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He could be the same man as the carter and farmer. John (b.1784/5) farmer at Stonedge, son of George. His wife was Elizabeth and children included: George (b.c.1821); Eliza; Isabella (b.c.1835) and Jane (b.c.1837). He was at Stonedge in 1841 along with his elderly father. He was still living at Stonedge in 1851, along with his brother Thomas; he was then employing 4 men and farming 50 acres of arable land and 1250 acres of pasture. By 1861 his wife was a widow, and his son George had taken over Stonedge. John (b.1790/1) farmer up the Loan and also a carter. In 1841 he is listed at Green Wynd as a farmer, and in 1851 is a carter on the Loan and farmer of 10 acres. In 1861 he was a ‘House Proprieter’ at 32 Loan. He married Agnes (or Nancy) Beck, and their children included: Margaret Wilson (b.1819); Isabella (b.1821); John (or ‘Jack’, b.1827), also a carter; William (b.1829); and Agnes (b.1835), who married Galashiels mason Adam Thomson in 1859. He is probably the John born to Robert and Isabell Hall in Hawick in 1791. John (19th C.) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was associated with Allars Kirk in Hawick. He became 3rd mi- nister of St. Paul’s Relief Kirk (in Aberdeen) in 1841. The church had financial difficulties, closed in 1842, to reopen in a new building, and in 1845 he resigned amid controversy. However, within a few months he was minister of the Relief Kirk at Dunning. He became minister at Gatehouse of Fleet in 1851, leaving in 1859 and dying in Glasgow. He married Jessie Walker and their children included John, Susanna, George and Eliz- abeth. John (b.1827) son of carter John. Like his father he worked as a carrier in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 32 Loan along with his el- derly father. His wife was Margaret (from Eng- land) and their children included Agnes, Susan, John and William J. John (19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His wife was Elizabeth and they had a son Douglas in 1846. John (b.1829/30) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was a ploughman. In 1861 he was living at Easter Essenseide Cot- tage. His wife was Helen and their children in- cluded Margaret, Andrew and Jessie. Mungo (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He was at Friarshaw in the 1780s and 90s according to the Horse Tax Rolls. He married Isabel Redford and their children included: Robert (b.1791); Andrew (b.1793); Mungo (b.1795); William (b.1797); James (b.1799); and John (b.1803). Mungo (b.1794/5) born in Lilliesleaf Parish, he was farmer at Nether Bowerhouse in Berwickshire in 1861. Probably the same Mungo was at Head- shaw in 1868. His wife was Margaret and their children included Robert and Andrew. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer in Hawick recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Where he farmed is un- clear. Thomas (18th C.) farmer at Kames in Minto Parish according to the Horse Tax Rolls of 1787–88. He was surely related to John, who farmed there immediately afterwards. Thomas (b.1798/9) son of George, farmer at Stonedge, he was born in Ashkirk Parish. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer living at ‘Stonedge Stable’. In 1851 he was at Stonedge helping his brother John with the farm and in 1861 was a ‘Barna- man’, helping his sister-in-law Elizabeth. He died un- married. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Wooplaw in Southdean Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He was probably related to John, who farmed at the neighbouring Lethem. Wal- ter (18th C.) tailor of Hawick Parish. He mar- ried Christian Ballantyne and their children in- cluded: Robert (b.1763); Adam (b.1766); and an unnamed child (b.1773). The witnesses in 1763 were John Thorburn and Walter Ballantyne and in 1766 were Robert and Adam Thorburn, who were surely related. He may be the Walter who paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1791. Wal- ter (18th/19th C.) farmer at Langton in Ashkirk Parish. In 1797 he paid tax on 4 work horses and 1 saddle horse there. Walter (19th C.) hosiery manufacturer of 21 Buccleuch Street. His family’s land there is marked ‘Thorburn’ on Wood’s 1824 map. He was nephew of William of William Lockie & Co. He married Betsy Stevenson Hug- gan, daughter of hosiery worker Thomas. Their children were William Lockie (Cornet in 1911), Bessie and Mary Hall (who married Robert Laid- law). Walter Lockie (20th C.) Cornet in 1937, who was Right-Hand Man for a second time af- ter WWII in 1946. He was usually referred to as ‘W. Lockie’. William (d.1836) tailor on the Howe gate. He was one of the founders of the In- dependent Kirk in Hawick in the late 1790s. He was possibly the son of Walter and Christine Bal- lantine who was born in Hawick in 1768. He is Thorlieshope recorded as tailor and ‘furnishing’ on the Howegate in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Like some of the Independents, he later became a confirmed Baptist, and was effectively leader of that group in Hawick until his death. He may have married Margaret Renwick in 1792 and/or Margaret Lunn in 1800. William Lockie (19th/20th C.) son of Walter. He worked as a hosier manager and was Cornet in 1911. He married Agnes, daughter of coal merchant Andrew Robson. Their son W. Lockie was Cornet in 1937 and farmed at Kidshielaugh, near Duns (also written ‘Thorburne’; note that in early records it may be the same as Thorbrand).

Thorlieshope (thör-leez-hōp) n. farm in the Liddel valley near Saughtree, once a seat of the Elliots. The house is situated in a glen, with similarities with the location of Harden. It is ‘Thorleshop’ in the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale. ‘Robert Elwald’ was Laird in 1488 and ‘John Elwald’ in Thorlieshope’ is recorded in 1498, along with other Elliot Lairds through the 16th century. It is probably the ‘Thornyshope’ recorded in the 1541 rental roll, with a value of 4 merks and with Robert Elliot as tenant. The house of ‘Thirleshope’ belonging to ‘Arche Elwode’ was burned by the English in 1541. Probably the same ‘Arche Ellot of Thirlishoup’ rented Southdeanburn from Melrose Abbey in 1557. Robert Elliot, called ‘Hob of Thorlieshope’ was among the 34 thieves who were captured in Hawick in 1567 by the Regent Moray. John of Thorlieshope is listed among the Elliots of the Braidlie branch in 1583, while John ‘of Thorlosope’ signed a bond of assurance in 1584, on behalf of the Elliots of Thorlieshope. Adam ‘Rakkis’ was recorded there in 1611. The lands were already owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch by 1613. John Elliot ‘callit Dods’ was tenant in 1623, as well as Robert Routledge. The lands appear to have part of the estate of Scott of Mangerton in 1643 and were valued at £520 in 1678, when John Elliot owned them. John Graham of Claverhouse (‘Bludy Clavers’) wrote a letter from there to the Marquess of Queensberry on 3rd July 1685. Tax was paid on 5 hearths at ‘Thorlishopes hous’ in 1694. Thomas Hall was Laird in 1761 and William Walker by 1788 and still in 1811, when it was valued at £520. William Nichol was steward there in 1841. John Wilson lived there in the 1860s. It was farmed by the Jardines in the 19th century. It is said that the tower stood where the current garden is. A former house (perhaps the tower) was once described as being a ruined 2-storey building, with lintel dated 1682 and monograms ‘DME’ and ‘WEAC’ (surely related to William Elliot of Thorlieshope and Christian Ainslie, since this is the year of their marriage). This lintel and some other stonework was built into the new farmhouse, erected in the 19th century. A mineral spring on the farm, up in Deadwater, was once regarded as having healing properties. There is also a disused lime kiln and quarry near the house, while further to the east, the Thorlieshope Lime Works and Fairloans Quarries operated until at least the end of the 19th century. Thorlieshope Pike is a nearby hill reaching 1,180 feet. A ‘decorated stone disc, smoked on one side, whole surface polished’ from here is in Hawick Museum. Sir Walter Scott used the name as the basis for ‘Charlieshope’ in ‘Guy Mannering’ (the name probably means ‘valley with the thorny clearing’; it is ‘Thorleshop’ in 1488, ‘thornlawishop’ in 1494/5, ‘Thorleshope’ in 1498, ‘Thorleshop’ in 1500 and 1516, ‘Thirleshope’, ‘Thorlieshope’ and ‘Thorlishopp’ in 1541, ‘Thorlyshop’ and ‘Thorlyshope’ in 1546, transcribed as ‘Thorlishowp’ in 1547, ‘Thorlishoip’ and ‘Thorlishop’ in 1569, ‘Thornesope’ in 1583, Thorlishop’ in 1594, ‘Thorlesop’ in 1595, ‘Thirleshope’ in 1613, ‘Thorleighop’ in 1623, ‘Charlesoip’ in 1646, ‘Thorleishope’ in 1648, ‘thorlishop’ in 1678, ‘Thorlishope’ in 1690, ‘Thorleshop’ in 1692, ‘Thorlishop’ in 1704 and ‘Thorlishope’ in 1811; it is ‘Thorlosope’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and ‘Thorlishope’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Thorlieshope Burnfoot (thör-leez-hōp-burn-fō) n. former steading in Castleton Parish, near where Thorlieshope Burn meets the Liddel. Labourer David Jackson and his family were there in 1851 and 1861.

Thorlieshope Heights (thör-leez-hōp-hīts) n. general name for hilly area to the east of Thorlieshope farm, south of Thorlieshope Pike. A triangulation pillar with a height of 396 m lies to the south, between here and Foulmire Heights.

Thorlieshope Pike (thör-leez-hōp-pik) n. hill on the eastern border of Castleton Parish, reaching a height of 360 m. The farm of Thorlieshope is located to the west, and Thorlieshope Heights to the south. George Watson writes in 1921 of a small stone cross lying in a quarry near there, possibly part of a boundary marker; there is no sign of it today.

Thornebogg

Thornebogg (thôr-nee-bôg) n. former lands in the Slitrig valley, listed in 1547/8 in an English communication about farms they had burned. They were the property of Martin Crozier, however, the exact location and pronunciation are unknown.

Thornhill (thôrn-hîl) n. town in Dumfriesshire, the nearest major settlement to Drumlanrig Castle. This is where the Baron’s Head Courts were held, which the landowners in Hawick were accustomed to attend twice a year. In 1670 they were explicitly excused from attending the Michaelmas Court on account of the poor state of their crops.

Thorniewhats (thôr-nee-whats) n. farm just to the east of Hollows (Gilnockie) between Langholm and Canonbie, once a seat of the Armstrongs. The Scotts of Buccleuch possessed the lands there according to the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch and lived in by the Bonsors.

Thornyleugh (thôr-nee-klooch) n. former farmstead to the west of Bellendale and south of Redfordgreen, in the far corner of what was once Roberton Parish. William Little ‘in thornylech’ is recorded in 1494/5 when his son-in-law John Scott was fined. It is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map, to the north of Crooke Loch on the Bellendale Burn. The stream called ‘Thornicleugh Burn’ is curiously on the other side of the B711, flowing into Clearburn Loch.

Thornyhaugh (thôr-nee-hawch -haw) n. flat land by the stream near Falnash. The ‘Chapel of Ease’ for the outlying parts of Cavers and Hawick Parishes was built here some time around 1715. Robert Scott was tenant there in 1738. It was repaired in 1722 and used until 1789, when a new church was built on the other side of the stream. There are now no signs of this building. The area had a teacher appointed in the 18th century. The farm there was occupied by John Hume in 1797 (it is ‘Thornihauh’ in 1738; also written ‘Thornyhaugh’ in 1788, and ‘Thorniehauh’, perhaps erroneously).

Thorterdykes Roadhouse (thôr-tur-diks) n. old name for the land between roughly the Mote and the south side of Rosebank Road. It largely overlapped with what was also called Moat Croft, and probably also included the areas of Easterdykeback and Westerdykeback. It may also have been pronounced ‘Whirter Dykes’ in the 19th century. In the early 1760s there were sometimes open air services here for the newly established secession congregation, before the Green Kirk was built. The name is now in use for ‘Thorterdykes Roadhouse’, the pub there (it appears in 1666 as ‘the thorter dikes’; its origin is uncertain, but probably Old English for ‘land lying athwart the Mote or a ditch’).

Thorterdykes Roadhouse (thôr-tur-diks-roôd-hoos) n. public house at Thorterdykes. It is based in the house that was constructed as a villa on Rosebank Road in 1882 for manufacturer Thomas Scott and lived in by the Bonsors.
thorter-ill  (thor-tur-ill) n., arch. a disease paralysing the necks of sheep.

Thorter Rig  (thör-'ur-rig) n. ridge just south of Crooked Loch in the headwaters of the Ale.

Thorter Villa  (thör-'vi-la) n. name used in the early days for the house at Thorterdynes, e.g. in the 1897 valuation rolls.

Thorterwud  (thör-'ur-wud) n. Thorterwood, former farm on the western side of the Jed valley, just south of Bairnkine and west of Woodhouse. John Laidlaw was there in 1694 (marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map and Stobie’s 1770 map).

threap see threap

Threapridge see Threepridge

threap (threap) v., arch., poet. to aver, argue, assert, maintain obstinately, chide – ‘... hearing the auld folk speak o’ her ghost that haunted the pule. Mair than yin o’ them threepit to hevin’ seen’ [BM1905], ‘... bit for na ei threepet, ei gaed yins-yirrint an fand oot the richt teime for iz’ [ECS], ‘... an hame he comes in the awfis’t temper threeping tae dae some evil deed (as heis ca’st) ... ’ [JEDM], ‘He crooced an’ streekit as wi’ bile, An’ threepit wi’ himsel’ the while’ [WFC], ‘O’ Juden Murray, ye craw and threep Like a struttin’ cock on the midden heap’ [WL], n., arch. an argument, dispute, belief or superstition – ‘It’s an auld threap, that!’ [GW] (from Anglo-Saxon; once pronounced with a breathed hr; also spelled ‘threip’ and ‘threap’; the word survives in place names, such as Threapridge, Threepridge and Threep Head).

Threephead (threep-head) n. Threephead, former farmstead near Stinty Knowes, also known as ‘Clatterin’ Brows’ – ‘... a very notable swingling at a place called Threephead or Clatterin’ Brows, near Stinty Knowes, when one of the party, being sent to Hawick to fetch a fiddler ... ’ [JAHM] (it is possibly the same as ‘Threep Heid’ further to the north).

Threep Heid (threep-head) n. Threep Head, one of the hills on the ‘Hill Road to Roberton’, between Cringie Law and Esdale Law. It reaches a height of 347 m and has Threephead Moss to the east. A farmstead there was where James ‘Locie’, James Watson and Alexander Nichol were recorded in the 1770s (the first element derives from the Old English ‘threapian’, meaning ‘disputed’).
Threepwood (threep-lind) n. former name for the Debateable Land.

Threeple (three-pul) adj., arch. triple – ‘There, at the yeh hand, tooried the threeple Eeldons …’ [ECS].

Threepridge (three-rij) n. former name for an area in or near Hawick Common Moor, the precise location of which is not now known. It was mentioned in 1766 in the description of 9 small pieces of land that were let in order to try to prevent encroachment on the Common by neighbouring tenants (recorded as ‘Threepridge’; the name probably derives from the Old English for the disputed ridge’).

Threepwud (three-wud) n. Threepwood, location roughly between Galashiels and Lauder. It was combined with Newhouse in the 1678 county valuation (the origin of the name is the Old English ‘threepian wudu’, meaning ‘disputed wood’, and is recorded in the Dryburgh Charter Book as ‘erat in litegio’).

Thursdai (thu-thurz-di) n. Thursday. This was formerly market day in Hawick (also spelled ‘Thursdii’; cf. the older Thursday).

the Thursdi (thu-thurz-di) n. common name for the Thursday before Common Riding weekend. It begins with a Chase up the Nip Knowes, with the Cornet carrying the (unbussed) flag for the first time. After the ‘Hut’ there is a ceremonial singing of ‘Teribus’ in front of the farmhouse at St. Leonard’s and a ride around the racecourse at the Moor. Then the Principals visit local schools, requesting that the pupils be given the rest of the day and the next off school. In the evening is the Drum and Fife procession round the tolls, the Colour Bussing, the Burgh Officer’s Proclamation, the tying of the ribbons at the Horse monument and the Cornet’s Walk. The evening is the first time that the ‘Bg Threi’ wear their traditional Cornet’s uniforms of green jackets and tile hats. In early times the Halberdiers and musicians would visit the house of the Minister, Senior Bailie, Cornet and also various inns where the participants would dine on the Friday. At each location they would be greeted with refreshments, and they would also stop on the Auld Brig for snuff, with the bussing of the Flag itself being quite an informal affair. Until the 1880s the Flag used to fly from the Chief Magistrate’s house after the morning Chase until it was bussed in the evening. Until 1886 the Cornet and his followers used to call at the houses of his supporters for refreshments after returning from the Thursday morning Chase. In the late 19th century there used to be a canter round the racecourse after ‘the Hut’ and then proceeded round by Wilton. In the years 1900–04 and in 1921 the Riding of the Marches and the Cutting of the Sod were tried out on the Thursday morning after the Chase. The striking up of the Drums and Fifes at 6 p.m. on the Kirk Wynd is considered by many people to be the start of the Common Riding proper.

the Thursdi Mornin Chase (thu-thurz-di-mör-neen-chäš) n. phrase used to distinguish the Chase of the Thursdai morning of Common Riding week from the other Chases. It is in a sense a rehearsal for the events of the following day. It begins with the usual muster in the Backdamgate, but at 6.00 a.m. the Cornet now has the (unbussed) Flag for the first time. As usual the married men go first, led by the Acting Father, followed by the Cornet and his unmarried supporters. There is usually a large crowd at the Vertish, to see the Flag again. The Acting Father takes the Flag at the top of the Nipnowes and carries it to St. Leonards, where it is displayed outside the farmhouse while the Cornet and supporters attend the Hut. Afterwards the Song Singer sings Teribus outside the farmhouse and the riders remount. They proceed via Pilnair field to the Moor, where they ride round the racecourse, the Cornet leading with the Flag. The return is via Crumhaughhill and the Loan, passing the children arriving at Drumlanrig School. The route then takes the cavalcade along the High Street, over the North Bridge, along Dovemount and turning onto Princes Street, down Wilton Path, through the Sandbed and so back to the Town Hall. There the Principals dismount and the Flag is displayed from the balcony awaiting the Colour Bussing in the evening.

the Thursdi Night Chase (thu-thurz-di-ni-chäš) n. name often used for the Chase at the Nipnowes on the Thursday evening before Common Riding week, officially called Orderin the Curds an Cream.

Tibbie the Brotch (ti-bee-thu-bröch) n. nickname of a woman from the West-end in the early part of the 19th century. She was presumably thin, and her nickname distinguished her from other Isabellas or Elizabeths, such as ‘Tibbie o the Green’. She led a group of women who organised themselves to taunt the members of the ‘royalist’ party at the 1809 Common Riding, including pelting Capt. Campbell with dung.

Tibbie the Fiddler’s Cottage (ti-bee-thu-fid-hurz-ko-ej) n. former low thatched cottage on the Mill Path, near the railway bridge, which stood on the boundary of the Burgh property, and on the roof of which the Song Singing ceremony took place until 1859. The house was demolished in 1860 to make room for the railway, with the Song Singing taken place amid the ruins of the house in 1860 and thereafter on a platform constructed nearby (and shifted to the opposite side of the road in the 1960s) – ‘Song Singin’ akin tae stance on cliff. Took place on Tibbie the Fiddler’s rif, This was the last time for sic doin’s Next year was held mid Tibbie’s ruins’ [MB] (also sometimes spelled ‘Tibby’: who this individual was seems now unknown, and slightly mysterious, given that Tibbie is a woman’s name and female fiddlers could not have been common then).

‘Tellile’, along with ‘Caldchuch’, in the Douglas of Cavers papers. There was a ‘retour d'inquest’ held at Cavers to rule on the inheritance of these lands by Robert ‘Elwalde’, grandson of the former Robert. It may also have been written ‘Tilloly’, and the name was mostly lost in the 17th century, although it may be related to the Tinle Street. It was still recorded in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. The lands had a boundary with Dod, passing along the Dod Burn and then the Rowan Tree dyke to the boundary with Priesthaugh, the line being part marked with stones (it is ‘Tillelie’ in 1511, ‘Tillielie’ in 1687 and transcribed ‘Tlibie’ in 1698).

timbersidemill (tim-bur-sid-nil) n. former name for Sawmill, a cottage in the north of the old part of Wilton Dean. It was once a corn mill, distinct from Deam Mill. The 1694 Hearth Tax rolls records ‘Thomas Miller and John Bue wt an kline betuixt thm’ there; Andrew ‘Andisone’ was also recorded there, among the poor of Wilton Parish. John Scott was recorded as farmer there in 1797 (it was ‘Timbersydemilh’ and ‘timbersidmilh’ in 1694 and ‘Timbersidemill’ in 1797; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

time (tim, tim) n. time, a specific time such as for eating or feeding livestock – ‘It’s horse-time, cow-time’ [GW] (note the pronunciation with the soft i in phrases such as ‘tei time’ or ‘yon time’; also sometimes spelled ‘teime’ to emphasize the pronunciation).

time aboot (tim-u-boo) adv. alternately, by turns, turn and turn about – ‘...Sure, time about is but fair play, His Highness syne maun now obey’ [RDW], ‘As oo canna geet away threh the shoap thegither, oo’ve duist aye ti taik oor hoal-...’ [ECS] (cf. the more common turn aboot).

timously (ti-mis-lee) adv., arch. punctually, early – ‘...to attend their respective posts on ye day following, without and within ye church, and to be timeously thereat’ [PR1717], ‘And finding that they have lost considerably through their not lifting the annual rents timeously ...’ [PR1724] (there are spelling variants).

Timpendean (tim-pen-deen) n. ruined 16th century tower near Lanton, stronghold of the Douglases. It was burned by Hertford’s men in 1545. The tower is high above the south side of the road, opposite the farm of Timpendean, which is on the other side of the A698. The area was referred to by Jedburgh residents as ‘Timp’. It can be reached via a farm track, and is surrounded by older earthworks. The land here was long owned by the Douglases, originally being part of the lands of Bonjedward, but granted to a 2nd son, Andrew Douglas, in 1479. In 1643 the widow of John Douglas held the lands in liferent, and the total value was £418. William Douglas paid the land tax there in 1663 and they still had the same value in 1678. The lands (or perhaps just their superiority) were among those inherited by William Kerr of Abbotrule in 1680. By 1707 the estate was valued at £567, with Douglas of Timpendean having acquired additional land in Lanton. ‘Lady Ferninton’ (probably a Rutherford) paid tax for 23 windows there in 1748. In 1788 the estate consisted of ‘six husband-lands of Timpeandean’ (valued at £158), addition lands that had been liferented in 1643 to the widow of John Douglas (valued at £260), part of Lanton acquired between 1678 and 1707 (valued at £149) and another part of Lanton purchased from Capt. Scott (valued at £299). There is a plan of the farm drawn up in 1791. The lands were sold off by George Douglas, 12th of Timpendean to the Marquess of Lothian in 1843. It was tenanted by Scotts in the latter part of the 19th century. There are several circular structures and ramparts on a hill just to the south, presumably older than the tower. The tower is about 29 ft by 24 ft, with an addition made in the 17th century, in the direction of the earthwork. A polished stone axe found at the tower is in Hawick Museum and a bronze axe is in the National Museum of Antiquities – ‘Hear the melody begin At the door of Cleikimm, East a mile or so of Timpendean. Drown the echo of your grief In the joy of Lilliesleaf, Or the merriment of Redfordgreen’ [WL] (the origin of the name is probably Old Welsh ‘din pen’ and Old English ‘denu’, together meaning ‘the valley by the hill with the fort’; it first occurs as ‘Tymynden’ in 1499/1500, is ‘Tymyndaeane’ and ‘Tympaniedene’ in 1504, ‘Tympenden’ in 1540, ‘Tympinton’ in 1545, ‘Timpindene’ in 1551, ‘Tympyndane’ in 1557, ‘Tympenden’ in 1584/5, ‘Tympenden’ in 1590 and 1610, ‘Tempindene’ in 1600, ‘Tempandeane’ in 1655, ‘Timpendein’ in 1680, ‘Timpingdean’ in 1714, and ‘Timpintine’ in 1739; it is ‘Timpendein’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; it is written ‘Timpentown’ in 1858).

Tindall (tin-dal) n. Robert (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. His surname is recorded as ‘Tyndale’.

tine (tin) v., arch., poet. to lose, suffer loss, mislay, forget – ‘Farewell, he cry’d, I maun gae o’er the hill, But I will see ye soon, or tine my skill’ [CPM], ‘Come on, come on’, cried Lucky Skrae, And dinna tine the waye’ [JTe], ‘Their love for thee they never tine Thou bonnie Border toon’ [RH], ‘The mither tongue, what Scottish heart Its memory wad tine?’ The lightsome days o’ happy years, The blinks o’ langsyne’ [JT].

tink (tink) n., ins. short for ‘tinker’, a somewhat derogatory name for a Traveller, someone who moves from place to place doing casual work and buying and selling things – ‘the right gypsies were fine, it was they tinks that aye left a mess ahitn them’, more generally a mischievous child (see also gyypsy).

Tinkers’ Knowe (ting-kurz-now) n. hill on the north side of the upper Teviot valley, between the Teindside and Back Burns and east of Commonside Moor. It reaches a height of 301 m. tinkler (tingk-lur) n., arch. a tinker, metalworker, itinerant peddler – ‘And on 4th July of the same year a tinker is fined for giving ‘insolent and irreverent language to the two present bayleys . . . ‘’ [DMW].

the Tinkler (thu-tink-lur) n., arch. nickname for John Scott, tenant in Harwood.

the Tinlee Stane (thu-tin-lee-stän) n. the Tinlee Stone, near Peelbraehope. It is an upright stone over 4 feet high, about 3 feet broad at the base, and tapering towards the top. It has been used as a boundary marker, but its original purpose is uncertain. It may be significant that it is situated close to a section of the Catrall. An archaeological report of 1981 describes ‘a stone with a badly weathered inscription’ found nearby.

Tinlin (tin-lin) n. supposed name of the first Cornet, who carried the flag back from Hornshole. This is possibly a confusion with the tales of Watt Tinlin, as further romanticised by Sir Walter Scott.

Tinlin (tin-lin) n. John (17th C.) weaver in Hawick, mentioned from 1669. In 1693/4 he donated money towards a town bell. Also in 1694 he was ‘John Tinling weaver’ among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. In 1697 he was fined for publicly lying to John Swan, the quartermaster of the weavers, and then refusing to go to prison. He married Agnes Broun and their children were Robert, Thomas, George, Agnes and probably Walter, father of ‘Rob the Naig’, as well as 2 daughters who died in infancy. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for Isabel (most likely his sister) and John Grierson. Their children were: Ann (b.1761), who married John Kersel; William (b.1763), called ‘Wull the Naig’; Walter (b.1766), who died in infancy; another Walter (b.1767), who served as his assistant; and John (b.1775). He is probably the weaver Robert who witnessed a baptism in 1766 along with Swan, as recorded in 1716 (when they complained about other people using their assigned seats in St. Mary’s). He married Christine Purdom, and their children included: Thomas (b.1702), who married Janet Riddell; James (b.1704); Christian (b.1707); and possibly Robert who moved to Kirkwhelpington. Robert ‘Rob the Naig’ (1737–1815) son of Walter and Anne Tinlin. He was known as an outspoken and independent individual, said (just a few decades later) to belong ‘to a class now extinct’. He was Burgh Officer, hence acting as half the town’s police force. He was also beadle at Hawick Kirk, and in that capacity would sit directly in front of the pulpit; he would shake his head when he thought that a visiting preacher had gone on too long, and if the sermon continued he would eventually proclaim ‘hae dune’. Claimed to be a descendant of Watt, his more immediate forebears were said to be from Old Crumhaugh. He used to openly give his views on matters such as the election of Bailies, and always ended his proclamations with ‘Hawick for ever and independent’ (James Wilson suggesting that this custom may have been handed down from earlier Halberdiers). He was also said to be extremely loyal to the Crown and Government, perhaps on account of being the same age as the King; he would refer to anyone who did not support the Government as a ‘blackneb’. He is probably one of the two men (likely Burgh Officers) ‘Tinlin & Hardie’ paid during the 1767 flood for watching the Auld Brig. In 1771 he was paid by the Council for mending his halberd (confirming definitively that he was a Halberdier). In 1773 he was paid for ‘watching the town after fire’. He was the last Burgh Officer who collected the ‘yule fees’. He married Margaret Turnbull in 1760 and she died in 1816. Their children were: Ann (b.1761), who married John Kersel; William (b.1763), called ‘Wull the Naig’; Walter (b.1766), who died in infancy; another Walter (b.1767), who served as his assistant; and John (b.1775). He is probably the weaver Robert who witnessed a baptism in 1766 for Isabel (most likely her sister) and John Grierson. A story is told of an encounter between him and Wull Craw – ‘Sic a sight I never saw. A Naig sent up to herd a Craw’ [WiS].

(19th/20th C.) farm worker, who moved to Rulewater about 1879, working at Cleuchhead and then becoming hedger at Wolfelee estate. He married Jessie, daughter of Robert Minto, gamekeeper at Wolfelee. Thomas (b.1677) son of John and Agnes Brown and brother of Robert. He was also a weaver. He married Bessie Dryden in 1701 and their children were: Jean (b.1702); Nicholas (b.1704); Euphan (b.1705); Anna (b.1707); Margaret (b.1710); and Robert (b.1713). A witness in 1702 was his brother Robert. Witnesses in 1705 were Robert again and also Adam Brown ‘head-hus elder’. Walter ‘Watt’ (c.16th C.) said to be a retainer of the Scotts of Buccleuch, holding a small tower in Liddesdale. He was a shoemaker by trade, but became famous as an expert archer, and supposedly shot the Captain of Bewcastle through the thigh. He was the inspiration for the fictional ‘Watt Tinlïm’ in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’, and hence fact and fiction are hard to separate — ‘If I cannot sew’, retorted Tinlïm, discharging a shaft, which nailed the captain’s thigh to the saddle, ‘if I cannot sew I can yerk’ [SWS]. Walter (d.1761) probably son of John and Agnes Brown, although possibly a grandson. He was a weaver in Hawick from at least 1715. In 1723 he married Anne, daughter of John Tinlïn of Kirklands, Ancrum. Their children were: Christian (b.1725), who married a Langlands; John (b.1727); Ann (b.1729), who may have married Robert Farquharson; Robert (b.1737), ‘Rob the Naig’; and Agnes (b.1744), who may have been the mother of Robert ‘Lurgie’ Wilson. Isabel, who married John Grierson, may have been another daughter. Witnesses to the 1737 baptism of his son Robert were merchant William Tudhope and surgeon James Scott. Walter ‘Wat’ (b.1767) son of ‘Rob the Naig’ and brother of ‘Wull the Naig’. He was assistant to his father and a shoemaker by trade. He was known for his strength of character and quick temper, which ran in his family; it was said that his ‘angry word, like his father’s, was quickly followed by a blow’. He liked to claim the it was his ‘forfadder yat fetched the laugh off Flowden Field’. William ‘Wull the Naig’ (c.1763–1836) another member of the family of Burgh and church officers. He was probably a son of ‘Rob the Naig’, and was a cousin of Robert ‘Lurgie’ Wilson. He may have been beadle at St. Mary’s for a while. However, he was known as a half-wit, who was tormented by youngsters with shouts of ‘Naig, Naig’ or ‘splonsters’. He became a beggar, but had the same blunt, outspoken nature as his ancestors, and was often involved in street skirmishes. He was a common figure around the town in the early 1800s, living near the bottom of the Fore Row. He is listed as ‘Will the Nag’ in the death register (also ‘Tinlin’, ‘Tiniel’, ‘Tinlïne’, ‘Tinling’, ‘Tinlinn’, ‘Tynlin’, ‘Tynline’ and other variants).

Tinnis (ti-nis) n. lands in the Yarrow valley, between Hangingshaw and Yarrow. Modern maps show ‘Old Tinnis’ and ‘Tinnis Farm’. There were Crown lands here from around 1456, held by Sir James Liddell for his fee as Ranger of Yarrow, then John Murray from 1488, with Alexander, Lord Home thereafter. In 1494/5 Thomas, George and Robert Mark and David Pringle were recorded there. It contained some of the King’s flocks in 1502. James Pringle held the lands in feu according to a rental roll of 1541, with rental of £50. A branch of the Pringles held these lands in the late 15th and early 16th centuries. The Scotts of Buccleuch possessed the lands there in 1653 and according to the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. There were Ballantynes there in the 19th century (also written ‘Tinnis’, ‘Timnes’, ‘tynis’, ‘Tynnes’ and variants, as well as ‘Tunnies’, ‘Tynmes’, etc.; the origin may be the Cumbric ‘din’ for ‘fort’ or ‘refuge’).

Tinnisburn (ti-nis-burn) n. former lands in Liddesdale. ‘Over and Norther Tynesburne’ are listed among the lands possessed by Thomas Kerr of Ancrum in 1632 (it is ‘Tennisburn’ on a map of Liddesdale drawn up by Sir William Cecil, c.1561., is ‘Tynesburne’ in 1580, ‘Tynesburne’ in 1599 and ‘Tynnesburne’ in 1605).

Tod

Tod (tod) n. Thomas of Drygrange (1726–1800), W.S., son of Archibald, writer in Edinburgh. His family were from Melrose. He was an advocate, who was one of the trustees for Dr. Robert Langlands when he sold off his estate to satisfy creditors in about 1780. He was on the roll of electors in Roxburghshire in 1780. In 1788 he was recorded as liferenter of the lands of Langnewton Mill, as well as lands in Newstead. He was also recorded in 1811 as owner of the feu-duties from Charles Kerr of Abbotrule. By 1875 these duties were among the possessions of Sir Walter Elliot of Wolfelee. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Langhope in Ashkirk Parish. He finished editing the 1837 description of that parish for the New Statistical Account, since the minister, Rev. Hamilton, died before publication. He also wrote ‘The obligation of civil rulers to establish the means of religious knowledge and instruction: deduced from the universal moral government of God’ (1836) and an essay describing a device for compressing peat into fuel, published in the Transactions of the Highland and Agricultural Society in 1832 (see also Todd).

Todd (tod) n. Francis (1857/8–1910) came to Hawick in 1889 as choirmaster at St. Andrew’s Church, remaining for 15 years. He conducted the Hawick Select Choir and others throughout the Borders and was also a music teacher. Gladys Ruth (1901–2002) born in Hawick, she became a school teacher, returning to town in 1925. She spent 30 years at Drumlanrig School and then 4 years at Wilton, retiring in 1959. Always known as ‘Miss Todd’, she was fondly remembered by ex-pupils. A supporter of the Border Music Festival and lover of the Hawick songs, she lived to celebrate her 100th birthday. James (19th C.) stationmaster at Stobs in the 1860s. William (15th C.) witness to the 1469 sasine for Wolfelee. It seems likely that he was local to Rulewater.

His surname is recorded as ‘Tode’. Sir William (d.bef. 1564) associated with Bedrule Kirk from 1541. He was recorded as Parson and Vicar of Bedrule in November 1557. It is feasible that this is a transcription error for ‘Ker’, who was a clergyman there soon afterwards; however, it seems that he resigned in 1557 and was replaced by William Ker. His ‘tack’ of 1557 was used by Kerr of Ferniehirst to support their 1564 claim against the parishioners of Bedrule that they had rights to the parish tinds (formerly spelled ‘Tod’ and ‘Tode’).

toddie scone (to-dee-skön) n., arch. a small, round scone – ‘...an old lady called Porter stayed in the bottom flat and sold pies and toddie scones’ [JRa] (perhaps tatti-scone is meant; see also scone).

toddle (to-dul) v. to walk with unsteady steps, walk jauntily – ‘Some playfu’ toddlin’ sweet wee bairn’; Some lovely youth, or maiden dear ... ’ [AD], ‘Come awa’, my little lambie, Toddle tentie, come to me ... ’ [TCh], ‘Lang about Ettrick may ye toddle’ [JR].

Todds (todz) n. William (18th C.). In 1693 his children Thomas, Robert, Archibald and Oliver had a decree against Adam Scott of Bowhill and William Scott in Langhope. He was probably a tenant on Langhope (near Ashkirk).

Todgiehill (to-jee-hil) n. former name for Todshawhill.

Todholes (tod-hólz) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded as ‘Todholys’ in c.1376, with rental valued at 4 shillings. It is probably the ‘Toddelis’ recorded in the 1541 rental roll, valued at 5 shillings and with Christopher Armstrong as tenant; given the position on the roll, its location is somewhere near Mangerton (the origin could be ‘fox hollows’).

Todholes (tod-hólz) n. former lands in the Barony of Cavers, listed in the 1511 charter of the Douglases of Cavers, as ‘Denummains, called Todholis’ (or ‘Todeholis’). It was listed as the principle ‘messuage’ of the demesne lands of Denholm in 1687 when part of the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas and when inherited by his brother Archibald in 1698. The lands were described as also having a mill. It is unclear where these lands were, although possibly the same as ‘Todlaw’ on the Dean Burn (it is transcribed ‘Todhold’ in 1687 and 1698).

Todholeside (tod-hól-sid) n. former lands in Lilliesleaf. Along with ‘Standesteranig’ these lands were sold by Adam, son of Adam of Durham.
Todhunter Grain

to the monks of Melrose in the early 1200s, sometime between 1214 and 1249. The precise location is unknown, but it lay between Clerklands and the part of Lilliesleaf held by William, son of Alexander of Lilliesleaf (spelled ‘Thodholesid’).

Todhunter Grain (tod-hun’-ur-grän) n. stream in Castleton Parish which rises on Windy Edge and flows into the Tinmis Burn near Whisgills. There are old sheepfolds along its banks. The former farmstead of Grainfoot may have been at the foot of this stream – ‘Sad thoughts of the past often steal through my brain, As I fancy I see him on the ‘Todhunter-grain’’ [DA].

Todlaw (tod-law) n. farmstead in Cavers Parish, on the Dean Burn, lying between East Middle and Denholmhill. The farmer there in 1797 was Michael Anderson and in 1851 it was Robert Scott. The 1863 Ordnance Survey ‘Name Book’ describes it as ‘a one storey house with garden attached’. This could be the “Todha” near the head of Denholm Dean mentioned in a story related in 1830 (and printed in the Border Counties Magazine of 1881).

Todlaw Wells (tod-law-welz) n. plantation in Bedrule Parish, to the south-east of the Dunion, lying on the route of the Borders Abbey Way. There is an enclosure, rig and furrow lines and a possible settlement in the area.

Todrick (tod-rik) n. older variant of Todrig.

Todrig (tod-rig, tød-rig, -rij) n. farm near the confluence of the Todrig Burn with the Langhope Burn (which flows into the Ale). Some time in the period 1248–58 Henry of Ashkirk gifted the lands to Coldstream Priory. In about 1260 there is a charter from Aymer de Maxwell granting the lands to Alexander de Synton. ‘Hector Laudir’ brother of the Laird is recorded in 1494/5. Cuthbert Laudor from there was convicted of reset, commuting with rebels and other crimes in 1508. There is a charter of 1511/12 confirming the lands (or perhaps the superiority) to John Lord Hay of Yester, which had previously belonged to his father. The Hays continued to hold the lands (or perhaps part of them) at least up until inherited by John, Lord Hay of Yester in 1610. The lands were held by the Scotts of Harden, with George of Todrig being the 3rd son of the first William of Harden. The family arms of this old branch of Scott of Todrig were cut into their seat in the old Ashkirk church in 1622. However, sometime around 1622 George’s son Walter sold the property to Thomas, younger brother of Sir Walter Scott, 2nd Laird of Whitslade. For more than a century it belonged to this new branch of Scotts of Todrig or ‘Toderick’. The motto of this branch was ‘Pro aris et focus’. Tax was paid for 13 hearths on the estate in 1694. Thomas Scott’s lands in Roxburghshire were valued at £552 in 1678 (this being for Wester Essenside, Leaphill and their associated teinds). The estate was sold off by Thomas Scott in 1746. George Pott was the proprietor on Ainslie’s 1773 map. The estate was valued at £576 in 1789 and 1802. The main house dates from at least the 17th century on the eastern side, with alterations from 1862 converting it to a more modern farmhouse. The original entrance can still be made out on the south wall. Adjacent farm buildings contain 2 stone panels, one with the date ‘1698’, the other having the initials ‘G P’ (probably for George Pott), together with a lozenge and inscription ‘REBUILT 1833’. A mill is marked nearby, on the opposite side of the Todrig Burn, on Ainslie’s 1773 map. A bronze tripod pot found there in 1956 is in the Royal Museum of Scotland. There is a farm of the same name south of Greenlaw, and another east of Eccles. One of these places (or more than one perhaps) gave rise to the surname ‘Todrick’. The arms of Scott of Todrig bore a star and 2 crescents and the family motto was ‘Pro aris et focus’ – ‘First came Todrig, Then came Woll, Last came Whitslaid, The Chief of the Water Ail’ [CWS] (the name occurs as ‘Todholerig’ in a charter of the late 12th century; the house is marked as ‘Todrigg’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and Blaen’s 1564 map, ‘Todrig’ on Adair’s c. 1688 map and ‘Todrigg’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map; also formerly spelled ‘Todrick’, ‘Todrik’, ‘Toderick’, etc., it was ‘Tod-derig’ in about 1250, ‘Todrye’ in 1638, ‘Toddrighe’ in 1644, ‘Todrigge’ in 1678 and 1682, ‘Todridge’ in 1720, ‘Todrige’ in 1761 and ‘Todridge’ in 1785; whether the origin is ‘fox ridge’, or something else, is unknown).

Todrig (tod-rig) n. Alexander (15th C.) priest who witnessed an Edinburgh document in 1488. His name was spelled ‘Todrick’, and he may have had a connection to the local estate. Archibald (15th C.) described as ‘of Todrick’ when he was witness to a document made at St. Giles in Edinburgh in 1477. Probably the same ‘Archibaldus Todryk’ who was a Bailie of Edinburgh according to a charter of 1482. He may be the earliest recorded person of this surname. Probably the same Archibald was ‘Archibaldus Thodrkh’, Burgess of Edinburgh in a charter of the Collegiate Church of Dalkeith in 1504, where his son and heir William is also mentioned. George (16th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh recorded as ‘Todrik’ in 1552. John Tod Rig (15th/16th C.) witness to an Edinburgh document of 1501/2, where his name is spelled ‘Tod-drik’. Thomas (15th C.) listed as resident of lands in Linlithgow in a charter of 1496. Thomas (16th C.) described as ‘Thomas Todrik, serjeand’ in an Edinburgh document of 1548. William (15th C.) recorded as ‘Wil. Tothrik’ in a charter of 1428 when he held lands in Edinburgh. He may be the earliest recorded person of this surname. William (15th/16th C.) referred to as ‘of Todrig’ in 1505 when he was a Burgess of Edinburgh and gained houses on Edinburgh High Street. He is also mentioned (as ‘Willelmi Todryk’) in a charter of Trinity Collegiate Church in 1511. It is unclear whether he had a local connection. Probably the same William was described as a Bailie of Edinburgh (and spelled ‘Todrick’ and ‘Tothrik’) in the period 1501–07 and witnessed another charter in Edinburgh in 1502. He married the King’s cousin Margaret Crichton and was given an exemption from customs for life.

Tod Rig (tod-rig) n. ridge to the north-west of Todrig farm and to the north-east of Langhope farm.

Todrig Burn (tod-rig-burn) n. stream that flows to the east out of Shaws Loch and past Todrig, before joining the Ale Water (it is ‘Todriggsburn’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Todrig Mill (tod-rig-mill) n. former mill near Todrig farm. Walter Nichol was there in 1763 when it was ‘Todrig Mill’ (it is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Todscleuch (todz-klooch) n. former fortified house in the Liddel valley, near the present Steeleroad-end. It is probably related to Todshaw Sike, which is marked near there on modern maps. The farm is recorded as ‘Todcleuche alias Todcleucheside’ in 1632, among the lands possessed by Hub Henderson. Ninian Wigham was tenant there in 1694, with Andrew Pott, weaver, also a resident. Michael Dang was recorded as farmer at ‘Todscueghside’ in 1797 (marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map, with ‘Todscueghside’ appearing on Stobie’s 1770 map; ‘Todscleuchyside’ is recorded in 1659 and is ‘Todscleughside’ in 1694; the name is presumably related to the fox; note that there is an unrelated ‘Todcleuch’ near Canobic).

Todshaw (tod-shaw) n. former farm in the Borthwick valley. It is unclear how far back the name goes, because of confusion with Todshawhaugh. However, it may be that this general name came first and the ‘haugh’ was added to the nearby farm later. In any case ‘Todshaw’ is listed among those lands granted to Sir William Wardlaw of Wilton in about 1400. The farm was part of the Harden estates in the 17th century. There were 18 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650. It was included within Hawick Parish (according to a valuation of 1678) and along with Todshawhaugh, Todshawhill, Whithope and Whithoppe Mill was valued at £1658 when disjoined to the new Robertson Parish. It was included among lands inherited by Gideon Scott of Highchester from his father Walter, Earl of Tararas in 1694. Mungo Scott, John Mowat and John Rule were listed as residents there in 1694. It was sold by William Scott of Thirlestane about 1750 and was owned by John Murray of Philiphaugh in 1757 when its head lands were divided from those of Mabonlaw. Until 1689 when Roberton was formed, it was part of Wilton Parish, while the separate farm of Todshawhaugh was in Hawick Parish. William Purdie was there in 1763. In 1788 the owner is recorded as John Johnstone of Alva, when it was valued at £113 15s 3d and it was £130 in 1811 with the same owner. In about 1874 the owner was Capt. George William Hutton Riddell. It lay between Mabonlaw and Mervinslaw, as marked on Stobie’s 1770 map (while Blaeu’s 1654 map shows it between Mabonlaw and Harden, but this map is not always accurate). The geography is somewhat confused by the existence of several places of similar name stretching over about 2 miles. Todshaw Hill (268 m) lies behind Highchesters Hill, on the north side of the Borthwick valley, with Todshaw Sike and Todshaw Dean being in the upper reaches of the Wilton Burn. Todshawhaugh farm is on the south side of the Borthwick valley, near where Todshaw Cleugh joins the river, and below Todshawhaugh Hill. And a higher Todshaw Hill (288 m) and the farm of Todshawhill lie about another mile to the south, near Chapelhill farm (recorded as ‘Todschaw’ in a 1588 contract and again in 1643; the name is presumably related to the fox).

Todshaw Cleugh (tod-shaw-klooch) n. stream that rises near Todshaw Hill and runs in a north-easterly direction to join the Borthwick Water to the east of Todshawhaugh farm.

Todshaw Dean (tod-shaw-deen) n. area along a stream in the headwaters of the Wilton Burn.

Todshawhaugh (tod-shaw-, to-jee-hawf) n. farm a mile or so along the Borthwick, opposite Highchesters. It was along a tenanted farm of the Scotts of Buccleuch. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Buccleuch properties, when it consisted of 167 acres, bounded by the...
Todshaw Haugh

Borthwick Water, Branxholme Park, Branxholme Mains, Todshawhill and Whames. It was also stated to have some stands of ash and birch trees. There was a William Turnbull there in 1426. It was among lands exchanged by Thomas Inglis of Manor with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1446. It is probably the lands of ‘Todschaw’ held by Robert Scott in 1463/4, and Robert Scott was there in 1484/5. John Scott ‘of Todschawhauch’ is recorded in 1492 and Robert Scott ‘in todshawchalch’ in 1493. The tenant in 1549 was Walter Scott, who was one of the men who complained that their farms had been raided and burned the year before by a group of English and Kers. William Scott, who resided at Whames was also listed in 1549 as ‘alias callit Wille of Todschawhauch’. Through the 16th century it was held by a branch of the Scotts. In 1627 it is described as paying ‘6 bolls in stok, 1 boll half boll in tenyd, 3 lb. in vicarage’. Walter Scott from Todshawhaugh was recorded in 1628 when he was accused of cutting down some of Scott of Buccleuch’s trees on his park there. There were 11 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650. In 1650 John Renwick and ‘Pail’ Murray were tenants. It was part of Hawick Parish until Roberton was formed in 1689/90. Rev. Thomas Shiel and John Cuthbertson were tenants in 1672 and 1673, Thomas Shiel himself in 1675 and Thomas Shiel and Walter Scott in 1677. The minister was also recorded as tenant of the farm in 1690–93 and with his son Thomas also there in 1692. Robert Langlands appears to also have been tenant there in 1686. The householders recorded there in 1694 were Thomas Shiel, Thomas Turnbull, Robert Murray and Thomas Stavert, with Agnes Murray also listed there among ‘the poor’. William Shiel (also son of the minister) was tenant in 1696 and 1698. It was also the site of a blacksmiths on the northern side of the Borthwick valley, between the Teviot and Borthwick valleys. It reaches a height of 288 m and has a fort on its summit and settlement a little to the north, as well as some small ponds. The former farm of Todshawhill stood here. To confuse things, another hill of the same name, reaching 268 m, stands on the northern side of the Borthwick valley, near Mabonlaw farm. This (southern) one has a fort on its summit, and the farm of Todshawhill is adjacent. Between these 2 hills is the lower Todshawhaugh Hill. The fort is on a ridge near the summit, about 90 m by 70 m in size, surrounded by 3 ramparts, with an entrance on the west. A crescent-shaped depression inside is probably a hut floor. The other archaeological site on this hill lies on the northern spur, covering an area of about 55 m by 40 m, surrounded by a single rampart, but much denuded by ploughing. There may be an entrance to the north-east and a scooped area inside could be a hut site. Note that there are several forts and settlements on the neighbouring Whitcastle Hill. There is yet another hill of the same name north of Alemmoor Loch, which is 352 m high.

Todshaw Hill (tod-shaw-hil) n. hill on the northern side of the Borthwick valley, between Todshaw Sike and Todshaw Dean, just to the east of Mabonlaw farm. It reaches a height of 268 m, and can be easily confused with another hill of the same name near Chapelhill farm, on the southern side of the valley.

Todshawhill (tod-shaw-, to-ja-, -jee-hil) n. former farm near Chapelhill, about 2 1/2 miles west of Hawick. Its early history is closely related with that of Todshawhaugh, with which it can sometimes be confused. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Buccleuch properties, when it consisted of 251 acres, bounded by the Todshawhaugh, Branzholm Mains, Branzholm Muir, Whithope and Whames. It was among the lands that passed from the Inglis family to the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1446. From at least the mid-16th century it was another home of a local branch of the Scotts. The farm was among those belonging to Scott of Buccleuch that were burned by a band of Englishmen and Kers in late 1548. Philip Scott is recorded as tenant in 1549. Andrew Scott of ‘Totchahill, from the family of Robertoun’ is listed by Scott of Satchells as one of the 24 ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch. It is described in a 1627 valuation as paying ‘21 bolls stock and teyd; estimat to pay in stock 12 bolls, parsonage 3 bolls, 3 lbs. vicarage’. The Land Tax Rolls of 1643 lists the value of the farm at £133 6s 8d, owned by John Scott of Todshawhill. There were 12 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650. Adam and William Scott were tenants from 1632 until about 1671. James Nichol was listed as a tenant in 1671 and Ninian Elliot in 1672 and 1673. James Carruthers was also recorded as tenant in 1673. Walter Scott of Harwood was leasing the farm in 1677. It was part of Hawick Parish until becoming part of the new Parish of Robertin in 1689/90. In 1691 it was leased to William Ogilvie and in 1693 to James Moffat, William Nichol and Robert Anderson. In 1694 the householders listed there were William Ogilvie, William Young (ploughman), Robert Blaik (shepherd) and James Scott, with Robert Scott listed there among ‘the poor’. William Ogilvie was tenant again in 1696 and Capt. Francis Scott in 1697. Thomas Shiel was tenant there from at least 1699, when he had the farmhouse rebuilt on a more convenient site at about that time. 2 houses were built, each 42 feet long, one having 2 stone chimneys and 8 windows; it is unclear if anything survives from this time. Thomas Shiel was still recorded as tenant in 1735. It was tenanted by several generations of the Scoon family, starting with John in about 1748, with Robert being the last Scoon tenant, who emigrated to the U.S.A. in about 1842 after defaulting on the lease. The farm was then amalgamated with Chapelhill. David Taylor was living there in 1762. Robert Scoon is recorded as farmer there in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1841 the residents of the cottages there were the Hoggs and the Grahams – ‘The three Scotts o’ Commonside, The Tamsons o’ the Mill, There’s Ogilvy o’ Branzholm, And Scoon o’ Todgiehill’ [DJG] (also sometimes incorrectly ‘Todshawmill’); it appears as ‘Todschawhillis’ in 1435, ‘Todschawhill’ in 1446, ‘Todschawhill’ in 1549, ‘Todschahill’ in 1627, ‘Todshaw-hill’ in 1678, ‘Toddyhill alias Todschawhill’ in 1660, ‘Toitchahill’ in 1694, ‘Todghail’ in 1791 and ‘Todgiehill’ in 1856; it is ‘Todshahill’ on a 1650 parish map, marked ‘Todshahill’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map: the name is presumably related to the fox; note there is a farm of the same name in Eskdalemuir Parish).

Todshawhillshiel (tod-shaw-hil-sheel) n. former shepherd’s cottage on the farm of Todshawhill. John Stavert was there in the 1770s. William Scoon and Robert Riddell were there in the 1780s and George Michie was shepherd there in 1799 (it is ‘Todshaugh Hillshee’ in 1771).

Todshaw Sike (tod-shaw-sik) n. small stream behind Highchesters Hill. It rises near Muckle Knowe, runs around Todshaw Hill and joins Wilton Burn.

Todshaw Sike (tod-shaw-sik) n. small stream that joins Taylor’s Cleuch and flows into the Liddel Water just south of Larriston. There is a complex of mediaeval and post-mediaeval buildings nearby. This may be the settlement once called ‘Todscleuchside’).

Todsteed (tod-steed) n. Todstead, former farm in Liddesdale, recorded as ‘Todistede’ and with a value of 4 shillings in a rental roll of c.1376. It is unclear where this was located.

toft (toft) n., arch. a homestead, farmstead and attached land (the word survives in the names of several farms, e.g. Tofts, Toftfield, Toftholm and Kirkton Tofts).

Toftfield (toft-feeld) n. former name of an estate near Melrose, adjacent to Abbotsford. It was purchased by John Usher in 1753, then held by his son James and grandson John. In 1819 it was bought from the Ushers by Sir Walter Scott, who changed the name to Huntlyburn and improved the simple two storey house there. It seems that it was formerly called ‘Tylehouse’, perhaps related to tile manufacturing for Melrose Abbey (the 1574 will of Gibbie Hatley of Gattonside refers to a ‘Faften field’ which may be the same place).

Toftholm (toft-holm) n. farm in the Hermitage valley, opposite Shaws. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. At this time it was combined with Tofts, covering 329 acres, bounded by Shaws, Overraw, the lands of the Laird of Hoscoat, Graystonehaugh and the Hermitage Water. Andrew Crozier was there in 1623. James Crozier was tenant in 1694 and William Crozier was also listed there. Thomas Pott was recorded as farmer there in 1797. Adam Scott was shepherd there in the late 19th and early 20th centuries. A sandstone axe-hammer found near here is in Hawick Museum. On the edge of a terrace just to the south-west there is an ancient enclosure and further south-west, on a small terrace, are the remains of a farmstead, named ‘Upper Row’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. There is also a field system and rig lines there (marked as ‘Toftsholme’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Toftholme’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; it has its modern name on Stobie’s 1770 map; also called ‘Toftsholm’, it is ‘Taftsholme’ in 1694; this is probably from ‘howm’, meaning low-lying land beside a river; see also Toftholm Sike).

Tofts (tofts) n. farm in Kirkton Parish, in modern times split into Nether Tofts and Upper Tofts. The place name is quite old, with ‘William of Tofts’ being recorded as Parson of Cavers in 1333, and possibly the Ingram, Robert and William ‘de Tofts’ recorded on the Ragman Rolls of 1296 also being connected with this location. Hence it may have given rise to a surname. There are deeds from 1550, 1554 and 1639 in the Douglas of Cavers papers. John Turnbull ‘in tofts’ is recorded in 1493. It was owned by the Turnbulls ‘of Tofts’ in the 16th and 17th centuries. Martin Douglas of Tofts inherited lands from his uncle Archibald (presumably the lands of Tofts) in 1608. Martin Douglas ‘of Tofts’ is also recorded in 1615 and John Douglas, ‘called of Tofts’ in 1619. It was valued at £300 in 1643 (when owned by ‘Laird of Tofts’, who also held £ of land in Abbotrule Parish) and in 1678 (when owned by an unnamed Turnbull). William Turnbull of Tofts inherited the 2 farms from his father Thomas in 1695. William Turnbull paid tax for 11 windows there in 1748. Anthony Turnbull was there in 1788 and still in about 1813, when still valued at £300. William Richardson Dickson of Alton were there in the 1870s. George and Robert Deans were farmers there in the 1860s (the origin is probably just ‘the homestead’ in Middle English, deriving from the Old Norse ‘toft’; it has its modern spelling at least by Gordon’s c. 1650 map, while Blaeu’s 1654 map already shows ‘N. Tofts’ and ‘O. Tofts’).

Tofts (tofts) n. possible former name for Kirkton Tofts (it is unclear whether this is the same place or not).

Tofts (tofts) n. Adam of Norwich (13th C.) listed in 1291 among men who had letters of protection from Edward I. He was serving the English King at Roxburgh Castle. It is unclear whether he was related to the Roxburghshire Tofts family. Ingram (13th C.) signatory of the Ragman Rolls in 1296 along with William and Robert ‘de Toftes’. His name was listed first, so he may have been the senior member of the family. His seal consisted of a large fleur-de-lis and the name ‘S’INGRAMI D’TOFTIS’. Robert (13th C.) listed as ‘de Toftes’ when he signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. His seal shows an 8-rayed figure and the name ‘S’ROBERTI D’TOFTIS’. William (13th C.) swore fealty to Edward I in 1296, along with Ingram and William. William (14th C.) recorded as ‘W miesią Toftys’ in 1363 when he was Rector of ‘magna Cavers’. He was most likely associated with the lands of Tofts in Kirkton Parish, and parson of the neighbouring parish of Cavers. He was probably a descendant of the earlier ‘of Tofts’ family.

the Tofts (thu-tofts) n. former farm in the Hermitage valley, just to the north of Toftholm. It is probably the ‘Toftys’ recorded as being in the ‘Quarterium de Ludne’ in a rental roll of Liddesdale c.1376, with a value of 5 merks. It is shown on Blaeu’s 1654 map on the southern side of the valley, roughly opposite the present village of Hermitage. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. At this time it was combined with Toftholm into a farm covering 329 acres, bounded by Shaws, Overraw, the lands of the Laird of Hoscoat, Graystonehaugh and the Hermitage Water. It probably included the area marked as Tofts Knowes on the modern Ordnance Survey map.

Tofts Hill (tofts-hil) n. hill in Kirkton Parish, just south of Upper Tofts farm. It reaches a height of about 250 m. There is a small pond on the north side and a quarry on the south side. Aerial

Toftsholm Sike (tofts-hōm-sik) n. small stream that rises at Thiefsike Head and runs roughly parallel to the Hermitage Water, to join that river at Toftsholm. There is the ruin of a cottage on its north side, and the remains of 2 shieling-huts in its headwaters, as well as old remains of sheepfolds and dykes (see also Toftsholm).

Tofts Knowes (tofts-nowz) n. area of terrace on the southern side of the Hermitage Water, opposite Hermitage Castle. There are the remains of an old settlement there, with a farmstead, an extensive field system, rig lines and quarry pits.

togedder (to-gedur) adv., arch. together – ‘...were outlawed for being found togedder by the church censors, after the tenn hour bell was rung’ [BR1702], ‘...the present Baylyecas, Robert Hardie and Robert Brown, having conveyed and called togieder the towne Counsell ...’ [BR1706] (also written ‘togidder’; cf. the more modern the-gither).

toilets (toi-litz) n., pl. there have been many public toilets over the years in Hawick. Present conveniences include those in the Haugh, Howe-gate, the Cross Wynd and Museum. The Burns Club was built on an 1843 ‘necessary’ and the one at the end of Bourtree Place was demolished along with the railway bridge in the 1970s. Other toilets were at Towerdykeside, at the south end of the Little Haugh and by the McDonald Shelter (top of Mansfield Road). The first facilities were installed at the Moor in 1889. Two 1 penny locks were added to the closet doors in 1913 and a new urinal was built in 1925. The first Ladies toilets were built at the Paddock in 1963.

Tojo (tō-jo) n. nickname for High School teacher J. Anderson in the years after WWII.

Tokeley (tōk-lee) n. Albert Victor ‘Vic’ (1928/9–2003) born and raised in Yetholm, he lived most of his life in Hawick, working as an accountant and becoming Managing Director of Croall, Bryson. He was an all-round sportsman in his youth. He became President of the Rotary Club, was President and long-time committee member of the Archaeological Society, and was a Tweed Commissioner for 34 years. He was well known as an expert on the Yetholm gypsies and on angling, writing ‘The Kirk Yetholm Gypsies’ (2002). A memorial stone was erected on Yetholm Green.

the Tolbooth (thu-tōl-booth) n. Tolbooths were generally the place where traders paid their fees on market days and where goods were weighed, as well as acting as the town jail. Hawick’s former Tolbooth was on the site of the previous Town Hall, before being demolished in 1781 (with the timber being sold for £1 6s.). It was said to be a ‘humble and primitive erection’ with a thatched roof of heather and a rough barn-like interior. It would have served many municipal functions in its day, including as the local court and town prison. The building was sold to the town by William Scott of Horsleyhill in 1657, although there was probably a building with a similar function before that, somewhere else on the High Street. In fact there is a mention in 1612 of the Town being in debt for a number of reasons, including ‘bigging of their tolbooth’. The building was said to be in a ruinous condition in 1693 and was rebuilt around 1694. Its use by the Council for meetings is recorded in the Town Book in 1638 and 1660. There was some dispute in the 17th century over the rights of the agents of the Baron to use it for particular purposes. In 1704 it is recorded that it needed to be thatched. In 1724 the Council resolved to demolish the old building and rebuild it, ‘set out to the south corner of Horsliehills House’ (probably on the other side of the High Street), at a cost of 600 merks. In 1727 the Council decreed that the weigh-house ‘or under tolbooth’ should be leased. A stair-case was erected there in 1732. In 1737 the stair was mended and the building re-limed. 2 panes of glass were purchased for it in 1755. A man paid the Council for keeping ‘wild beasts’ in it in 1768. The lock of the old jail door is in the Museum. The word ‘Tolbooth’ was also later applied to the building at the Loan Toll, where the tolls were collected, as well as sometimes being used for other houses at toll-bars on the roads around Hawick – ‘The Court of the bruche of Hawick, halden within the Tolbuith thereof ...’ [BR1638], ‘Item, whatsomever person that sall be committed in waird, and brekis the Tolbuith, or cumes furth thereof without license of the bailies, or ane of them, sal pay £10 money, and wardit during the bailies’ will’ [BR1640], ‘Walter Scott ... bailie of the regality of Hawick, under William Lord Drumlanrig, craves of the bailies of Hawick the key of the tolbuith ...’[BR] (also spelled ‘Tollbooth’ and ‘Tolbuth’).

tolerat (to-le-ri’) pp., arch. tolerated – ‘...was ordered to bring a testimonie from Mr. Douglas, Minister of Kirkton, failing which he would not be tolerate to stay in ye toun’ [PR1717].

the Toleration (thu-to-le-rä-shin) n. name sometimes used to refer to the 1689 Act of Toleration. This permitted freedom of worship for Protestant dissenters, but not for Catholics.

toll (töl) n. a system of charging for the use of a road, introduced in the 18th century to fund major road improvements, but enormously unpopular with the general public.

toll-bar (töl-bawr) n. a beam placed across a road at a toll house, to prevent carriages from passing without paying the toll, also used to refer to the adjacent house itself. It was also sometimes also called a ‘turnpike bar’. There were toll bars every few miles along the main roads, following the Turnpike Acts of the mid-18th century. These toll houses were usually licensed for the sale of alcohol, and used as resting points by travellers. Hawick also had toll bars at the main entrances to town, specifically the Wester Toll, Loan Toll (or ‘Auld Wester Toll’), Easter Toll, Dovemount Toll (or ‘North Toll’) and those at Crumhaugh and at the Common Haugh (also written ‘toll bar’).

toll-hoose (töl-hooos) n., arch. a toll-house, building in which a toll-keeper lived. These were built every few miles along the main turnpike roads in the 18th and early 19th centuries, as well as at the main entrances to towns. Many are still in use as dwellings today and are easily distinguished because they have a window which seems perilously close to traffic. Existing examples include those at the Wester Toll, Greenbank (Roberton), Colterscleuch, Fiddleton, Langholm and Heriot. The former toll-house near the end of what became Commercial Road can be seen in the 1846 painting of the Common Riding Races.

the Toll Hoose (thu-tööl-hooos) n. name used for any of the local buildings where tolls were collected. The name was particularly used in the 19th century for one near the corner of what became Albert Road and Commercial Road.

tolls (tölz) n., pl. one of several toll-bars at the entrances to Hawick or on the neighbouring roads. In the 17th century even the main roads were in appalling condition. There was a Highway Act of 1669, and another of 1691, which led to little genuine improvement. General Wade’s roads, built in the Highlands in the 1720s and 30s, led to further calls for general improvement and the Turnpike Act of 1750. This made construction of improved roads compulsory, paid for by collection at toll-bars, typically located every 6-8 miles. Hawick was on the Scotch Dyke to Hare Moss toll road, which is now part of the A7. This was established by a special Act of 1764, published in 1770. There were also acts to regulate maintenance of local roads under the statutory Labour system. The highway toll acts were repealed in 1807, but already astonishing progress had been made locally. As well as toll-bars across the main roads, there were also tolls at the entrances to towns, Hawick having 4 of these at one point. They were: the Wester Toll (on the New Road, outside the present High School); the Loan Toll (in the middle of the Loan, for the old road South); the Easter Toll (on Bourtree Place near the old Con Club); and Dovemount Toll (at Dovemount on the road to Edinburgh). Plaques mark their positions. There were additional tolls at other times, e.g. across the Teviot Bridge by the Common Haugh, and another at Crumhaugh.

tomati (to-ma-’i) n. a tomato – ‘You say ‘tomato’ and I say ‘tomati’, You say ‘potato’ and I say ‘potati’’.

tombstone (toom-stän) n. a tombstone – ‘...but also named on the family tombstone in Dums Kirkyaird’ [IW].

tome (töm) v., arch. to draw out into a thin line – ‘ti toam taffie’ [ECS] (also written ‘toam’; cf. taw).

Tomes (tömz) n. Alan ‘Toomba’ (??– ) rugby player, born in Hawick, but grew up in the Newcastle area, he worked for banks and the gas board. At about 6 ft 5 inches, he playing as a lock, and was known for his large stature. He played for Hawick R.F.C. from 1973, winning 48 caps in 1976–87, a record for a middle row player, and he also played for the British Lions in 1980.

Tomscotsteed (töm-sko\textsuperscript{-}steed) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the 1541 rental roll as ‘Thomsotsteid’, and listed along with the other lands of ‘Cleirlandis, Robsteid, Cranswat, Gusbank, Hurklebuss’, with tenants William Elliot, David Elliot, Bartholomew Nixon and Ninian Elliot, valued at 5 merks. They were presumably a set of adjacent small steadings, but their location is uncertain.

the Tongue (thu-tung) n. narrow strip of land on the former boundary between Tofts and Hall-rule. It was said to have been given by Turnbull of High Tofts to Douglas of Cavers as a way of protecting him from any attempts by Elliott of Stobs to force him off his land (as he had done to Turnbull of Denesyde). The field still survives, just east of the Dean Burn, to the left of the A6088 a little before Hawthornside.

the Tongue (thu-tung) n. spur of land in Castleton Parish, between the Green Burn and an unnamed tributary, situated north-west of Kirk Hill. There are the remains of a farmstead, a cottage and a sheepfold there. The farmstead may be 18th century; the cottage was known as Greenburn, and probably the farmstead also. At the southern end of the spur are further enclosures and ‘lazy-beds’.

the Tongue Burn (thu-tung-burn) n. small stream that joins the Braidlie Burn a little to the north-east of Gorenberry, on the north side of the Hermitage valley.

tongue-ruits (tung-ritz) n., pl., arch. roots of the tongue, especially in the phrase ‘at one’s tongue-ruits’, meaning ‘on the tip of one’s tongue’ or about to be said – ‘It was at ma tung-roots ti cry on the hoantasy affair’ [ECS].

Tomke (tongk) n. Walter (13th C.) recorded as Sheriff of Roxburgh Castle in 1296. He was probably a clerk of the English King’s household.

the Too’er see the Toor

toom (toon) adj., arch., poet. empty, unoccupied, vacant – ‘…Mr. Spunk’ll be lyin’ lookin’ up at St. Mary’s Kirk wi’ a green blanket over his toom ribs …’ [JEDM]; ‘He was tired and wet and the big creel was toom’ [UB]; ‘We view them now baith toom and bare Wi’ empty pouches’ [RF], ‘…Leaving the toom shafts o’ the trap To mock his fuddled ee’ [WL], not running, idle – ‘A stane-nappin injin gaed-on leike a tuim mill’ [ECS], v. to empty, particularly a drinking glass – ‘An’ aye we ca’d the ither cog, An’ toom’d the reamin’ horn!’ [JT] (also spelled ‘toum’, ‘tume’; see also tuim, etc.).

toon (toon) n. a town – ‘There’s a toon, o’ toons the pride That stands on bonnie Teviot side’ [JLH], ‘…Frae the silent slopes on my native toon’ [TC], ‘…On earth, Hawick is the only toon The nicht afore the morn’ [JMS], formerly any settlement situated at a major farm – ‘John Glendinen and Andrew were ordered to gather in the touns following, in ye landward part of ye parish, viz., Crumhaugh, Goldielands, Fenwick, Alton Crofts, and Whitchesters, together with Closses’ [PR1717], adj. relating to the town – ‘…that no other toune or landward heritor of tenements and houses within the said burgh …’ [BR1699], ‘But the toon-clock cheery chimes owre a’’ [WL] (also spelled ‘toun’).

the Toon Book (thu-toon-book) n. the official record book kept by the Town Clerk, essentially synonymous with the Burgh Records. The first such book that still exists was begun by Gilbert Watt on 1st October 1638 and was continued by 4 successive Town Clerks until 8th October 1681. Many other books followed, listing the official business of the Town, including details of cases before the Magistrates’ Court, etc. They are crucial pieces of early historical information about events and people in Hawick, as well as the language – ‘…quhilkis premises the said Adam Gowanlock desirit to be insert in the common toon-buik of Hawick’ [BR1641].

toon clerk (toon-clerk) n. town clerk, an official appointed as secretary to a town council, keeping records and performing administrative duties – ‘Item, whatsoever persones gevis unrevrent language to the bailies, minister or towne-clark, sal pay £10 efter tryal …’ [BR1640], ‘…for calling Gilbert Watt, Toon-Clerk, ane suckler, and for other injurious words’ [BR1650].

the Toon Clerk (thu-toon-clerk) n. the Town Clerk of Hawick. Originally he was appointed by the citizens to keep the town records and to perform other legal duties. He was chosen by the Burgesses every 2 years, the only official to be elected rather than appointed by the Council. The first recorded one was ‘Hew Counston’ or ‘Cowstoun’ in a single Privy Council document of 1612, and then Andrew Sword is recorded in 1630. The earliest existing ‘Town Book’, recorded by the Town Clerk, has its first entries in 1638. The Gladstains and Purdom families gave many decades of service to this office. The Town Clerk used to lead the march around the Burgh boundaries when the riders returned from Riding the Common. It was said in 1711 that he was ‘now and then in custom to get ane burgess complimented over to him’ (i.e. had his income supplemented by the occasional burgess fee). In 1720 he was awarded 10 shillings yearly for pen, paper and ink. The first full time appointment was not until 1937, and the position was dissolved along with Reorganisation in 1975. An approximate list follows (although some dates are far from certain): Hugh Cowston 1610s; Andrew Sword c.1620–1630s; John Richardson 1630s–1638; Gilbert Watt 1638–1650s; James Liddell 1658–1659; Andrew Tunno 1659–70; Andrew Rutherford 1670–c.73; Walter Gladstains 1673–96; William Rutherford 1696; Walter Gladstains c.1696–1710; Walter Gladstains and Walter Gladstains (second) 1710–18; Walter Gladstains (second) 1718–39; James Weir c.1732–61; John Gladstains c.1763–70; James Winthrop 1760s (jointly with John Gladstains); James Weir (second) 1770; John Gladstains 1770–83; James Winthrop c.1783 (possibly); James Inglis 1790–1810; John Oliver 1810–41; James Wilson 1841–62; Thomas Purdom 1862–86; Robert Purdom 1886–1924; John Purdom 1924–1936; Robert F. Pollock 1937–38; Robert Barbour 1938–68; and William Hogg 1968–75. Bill Hogg was the last Hawick Town Clerk, moving to Roxburgh District in 1975.

the Toon Council (thu-toon-koon-sul) n. Hawick’s Town Council. The earliest recorded composition of the Council was 12, plus 2 Bailies, the Clerk and the Treasurer. In 1701 the number was increased by 6 to 18. The Deacon Convenor from each of the Trades also sat on the Council. In 1759 it was decreed that all Councillors had to go on the Common Riding or else forfeit their place on the Council. By 1780 the Council consisted of 31 members, being the 2 Magistrates elected annually, 15 councillors (for life) elected by the sitting members, and 2 representatives (quartermasters) from each of the 7 incorporated trades. This was fixed by a ruling of the Court of Session in 1781, following an action raised by William Freeman and others. During the 19th century the Council met twice a month. The make-up of the body led to it being called ‘the Eternal Council’. The newer ‘Town Council was constituted after the Police Act of 1861, with wider representation by all men paying a rent of £10 or over. The Council saw many changes over the years, particularly with the setting up of the County Council in 1889, and its extension in 1929, and the associated transfer of responsibility. It was disbanded in May 1975, following local government Reorganisation, when power was removed from the burghs and centralised. A minority of people claim things improved.

the Toonfit Kirk (thu-toon-fi’-kirk) n. the Townfoot Church in Newcastleton, the first to be built in the village. It was erected in 1803/4 for the Burgher congregation, which would become the United Presbyterian Kirk.

the Toon Hall (thu-toon-hall) n. the original Town Hall, sometimes called the ‘Town House’ was built in 1781 and demolished in 1884. It itself replaced the Tolbooth, which dated from about 1694, and earlier buildings before that. The current building was erected on the same site, 36 High Street, in 1884–86 at a cost of £16,000, with architect James Campbell Walker of Edinburgh, selected in an 1883 competition. The design is said to be Scottish Baronial with French elements, and is reminiscent of the work of David Bryce (with whom Walker had worked). The memorial stone was laid by the Duchess of Buccleuch, and the builders were John & William Marshall. It contains the Council offices, as well as the old Council Chambers, the Magistrate’s Courtroom, the main Hall and the Lesser Town Hall. It is used for many municipal purposes, including council administration, concerts and shows, the Colour Bussing, dances, etc. It currently stretches over 34–44 High Street and is a grade A listed building – ‘In the Town Hall all things are ready, Knives and forks we’ll ply them steady’ [AB], ‘There’s the Town Hall tower wi’ its clock tickin’ ower’ [IWS].

the Toonheid (thu-toon-heed) n. Townhead, former name for the top of the town, i.e. an area around the West Port. It was used as a location in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory (e.g. for slater Robert Elliot). The Ordnance Survey map of 1863 marks St. Leonard’s farm as ‘Hawick Townhead’.

Toonheid

Toonheid (toon-heed) n. Townhead, name used for lands in Hassendean Parish, probably the same as the modern Knowetownhead. It was also known alternatively as ‘East Mains’. In 1692 Thomas Gray paid the vicarage teinds for the lands there. Thomas Gray, James Thomson and John Hood were there in 1694 (it is ‘Tounheid’ in 1601 and ‘Tounhead’ in 1692 and 1694; it is ‘Toome head’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Toonheid (toon-heed) n. former farmstead in Southdean Parish near Chesters. George Oliver was the tenant there in 1669.

the Toonheid Port (thu-toon-heed-pör’) n. the Townhead Port, name given at one time to the West Port.

the Toonheid Toll (thu-toon-heed-töl) n. the Townhead Toll Bar in Newcastleton. It was located on North Hermitage Street. Christina Telfer was toll-keeper there in 1861. The house still exists, on the right-hand side of the road coming out of the village.

the Toon Herd (thu-toon-herd) n. former Burgh employee, with responsibility for collecting the town’s cattle in the morning, taking them to the Common to graze and returning them by nightfall. In the early 19th century he also had the privilege of setting up a drinks tent on the Moor at the Common Riding. He may have lived at St. Leonard’s farm during some periods and in the cottage at Hawickmoor at others. In 1733 it is recorded that a herd was selected for horses pasturing on the Common, which was presumably a different person than the main Herd. In 1755 the building of a ‘herd’s house’ is recorded, this presumably being somewhere on the Common. In the following year 1 shilling was ‘given the herd when his child was almost burnt to death’, and so there was perhaps a fire in the house. It is unclear when the first Herd was appointed. Those filling the appointment included: Walter Scott ‘Crooked Wat’ (early 18th C.); Mungo Armstrong (c.1723–c.44); James Armstrong (recorded in 1740); Robert Hobkirk (c.1752–c.57); James Wilson (late 18th C.); William Elliot (early 19th century); Andrew Ormiston (until 1853); and James Cairns (from about 1853) – ‘About the year seventeen hundred and ten, Walter Scott was Town Herd of Hawick’ [C&L] (also ‘Toon Hird’).

the Toon Hoose (thu-toon-hoos) n. name sometimes used for Hawick’s previous Town Hall, also sometimes called the ‘Council House’. It was built around 1781 on the site of the old Tolbooth, and was an unpretentious building with a tall steeple and an outside staircase. It had a thatched roof and was ‘of a homely description, the rafters, visible from beneath, giving it the appearance of a common barn’. It incorporated a bell (at a cost of £24, 14s., to complement the one at St. Mary’s in order to call the curfew. Part of it was rented out for dancing lessons, singing lessons and lectures in the late part of the 18th century. One of the 6 wells fed from the Sellder Springs stood beside it from 1797. In one of the last vestiges of feudalism the weight house on the ground floor was owned by a tenant of the Duke of Buccleuch (‘tacksman of his Grace’s customs); the Duke contributed £100 to the cost of the building, plus half the cost of paving the streets at the time. There were considerable additions to the steeple in 1806 and a clock was inserted in 1809. The top of the steeple also held a weather cock. The door in the steeple at the first floor level, with its projecting ledge, was known as the ‘Oyes door’ and was used for the reading of proclamations. The ground floor on the Cross Wynd side had open arches, which were closed at night with iron gates. This was the location for meal and butter markets. The Council Chambers were upstairs. There is a single surviving photograph from about 1880. The building was demolished in 1884 to make way for the new Town Hall.

the Toon Litter (thu-toon-li’ur) n. carrier for bodies, hired out by the town, acting effectively as a hearse. It is referred to in 1722, when the charge was half a crown for those outside the Burgh or those not paying ‘stent nor lott’. It is also mentioned in the Treasurer’s Book in 1732. It is unclear when this stopped being used, or what form this took, but it was probably little more than a large wheel-barrow.

Toon-o-Rule (toon-ō-rool) n. Town-o-Rule, a farm north of Bonchester Bridge, formerly a significant settlement in the area, once one of the major estates of Hobkirk Parish, and later being a large part of the barony of Feu-Rule. There were houses along the left side of the syke there (according to Tancred), but there are is now no sign of where exactly they were. It has also been suggested (by Jeffreys) that the original parish church of Hobkirk was situated here. In 1535 there is a record of ‘Thome Turnbull et Andree alias Dauid Turnbull’ who were tenants there. This could be the ‘towne in Tevedall caulyd Rowlle’ burned by John Musgrave’s men in 1542. The ‘town’ was burned again during the English invasion of 1545. The lands are described in 1562
Toon-o-Rule Burn

Town-o'-Rule Burn (toon-ô-uetooth) n. Town-o'-Rule Burn, stream, running to the northeast of Weensmuir and Heathfield farms, and joining the Hallrule Burn.

Toon Piper (toon-pi-pur) n. official player of the pipes, probably the bagpipes. However, in earlier documents it is unclear precisely what kind of musical instrument is meant, with perhaps the Border pipes being used at some times and it is also possible the word ‘piper’ was synonymous with ‘fifer’ in earlier times. Pipers are mentioned in connection with Hawick in the early 17th century, e.g. John Tait and John Laing were both ‘pyper’ in 1627. Adam Moffat was rebuked by Ashkirk Parish in 1638 for ‘pyping at bridals’ and was probably associated with Hawick or one of the other neighbouring towns. William Turnbull was appointed as Hawick’s piper in 1674. Thomas Beattie is recorded as piper in 1693/4. In 1700 the town’s piper was fined for playing the great pipe, which is unambiguously the Highland-style bagpipes. In 1703 the town’s ‘officers, pyper, and drummers’ were to be paid for ‘coatts att the Common rydeing in anno 1702’ and were also allowed ‘to have coatts att Common-Ryding this year, 1703, as formerly; this makes it clear that the piper and drummer (or drummers) were separate from the Burgh Officers at that time. James Oliver, ‘Jafra the Piper’, is mentioned several times in the Parish records of the 1710s (in connection with misbehaviour!). A man called ‘Foulle’ was paid to be piper in 1721; he was Robert Fowler, piper in about 1721–32. John ‘Meader’ (probably the same as Mather) was perhaps piper 1732–41. William Brown is recorded as Town Piper in 1745 and Walter Ballantine in the 1770s, the last man whose name we know. Hawick had a town piper (along with a drummer and bellman, although they may well have shared duties) for probably a couple of centuries until the late 1700s, when he was replaced by a fifer (first mentioned in 1797). In 1803 the Council resolved ‘that the piper shall not be any longer continued’, and that was the last official mention. One of the last pipers may have been John Douglas, who is recorded as ‘late piper Hawick’ when his daughter died in 1810. However, there is a reference to him playing the riders back into town in Balbirnie’s version of ‘Teribus’. The Common Riding Procession of 1804 is reported to have been led by the brass band, the drums and fifes ‘and the pipers’. ‘Hawick Pipe Band’ traces its roots to 1937 – ‘...the piper is only allowed four pounds Scots to buy him ane coatt’ [BR], ‘The town’s piper, for his nicht revelling, on going on the fair nicht playing with the great pipe thro the haill toon, is fined £100 Scots’ [BR1700], ‘Now Teri Odin blaws the chanter As rank and file the town we enter’ [AB].

Toonrig (toon-ri-g) n. former fortified house on the Hermitage Water, on the north bank of the valley just east of Gorrenberry (marked on Gordon’s c. 1650 map as ‘Toonrig’ and on Blaeu’s 1654 map and Visscher’s 1689 map as ‘Toonrig’).

Toon’s officer (toonz-o-off-sur) n., arch. an officer of a burgh – ‘...and James Ollier, toos officer, playing before him’ [PR1718], ‘Rob Tinlin as lying between the Mains of Hallrule and Plewlandhill on the east and those of Hawthornside and Hoilhouse on the west. ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters’ obtained a charter of the lands in 1632. William Elliot was tenant in the mid-18th century. Thomas Rule was there in 1788. In 1805 it was sold off by Sir William Eliott to John Wilson of Hallrule, and at that time was also referred to as being the east part of ‘Over or Outer Hallrule’. William Mabon was farmer in the 1860s. There was also once a small threshing mill there, powered by water from a pond. The cottage on the north side of the farm was known as ‘North Town-o’-Rule’, referred to by locals as ‘Drythropple’, and renamed ‘Heathfield’ for a while. An old well there (built in circular form) was called ‘Dobie’ or ‘Dubbie’, and probably corresponds to the well marked to the north of the farm buildings on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. The residents there used to use the Sun’s reflection off ‘Cloon Craig’ on Ruberslaw to tell the approximate time of day. An ancient oval-shaped earthwork once stood close to the farmhouse, but was largely obliterated by agricultural improvements before the mid-19th century. A prehistoric stone axe-head was found in one of the outfields in the 19th century (formerly spelled ‘Toun o’ Roull’ and on variants; the name appears in the records of Jedburgh Abbey; it is ‘villa de Rowle’ in 1535 and ‘Toon of Roull’ in 1694; it appears as ‘Tou of Roull’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

the Toon’s Purse

the Toon’s Purse (thr-toonz-purs) n. former prize race at the Common Riding. It was the opening event of the 1834–36 Friday Races.

the Toon Steel-yard (thr-toon-steel-yãrd) n. former steel-yard in Hawick, located on the High Street. It is recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory, when James Kennedy was ‘collector’.

the Toon Subscription Purse (thr-toon-sub-skrip-shin-purs) n. race run at the Common Riding in at least the 1840s to 1860s. It took place on the Friday on the Moor in many years, but in some years there was a race with this title on both days. Presumably the prize money was raised by subscription in Hawick.

the Toon Treasurer (thr-toon-tre-shoo-rur) n. former position on the Council, charged with gathering the money from Burgesses and others. The first record of the election of a person to this office in in 1655. The position was later named Burgh Chamberlain. The Treasurer kept records of the financial transactions of the Burgh, which provide valuable information about what went on in Hawick in the 17th and 18th centuries. In 1739 the amounts started to be written in sterling rather than in Scots money. The Treasurer was elected annually on the same day as the Bailles, i.e. the 2nd Friday in October. Extracts from the Town Treasurer’s books in the period 1721–1805 are given in James Wilson’s ‘Hawick and its Old Memories’ (1858). People who have held the office include: John Scott, around 1734; William Scott, at least 1763–69; William Wilson, early 1800s; Walter Wilson, early 1800s; James Scott, early 1800s; James Oliver, 1820s; James D. Kenney, mid-1800s; John Murray, 1880s; A.S. Lawson, late 1800s; Adam Laing, early 1900s; George Gass, early 1900s.

the Toor Close (thr-toor-klos) n. former name for a passageway next to Drumlanrig’s Tower, giving access to the area behind. In 1767 it is said that ‘trees, packs of wool, couples, joists, and household furniture’ were all deposited there by the flood. The close is wide enough to allow the cavalcade to emerge at the Common Riding, and the wall contains the Cornets’ Board.

Toordykeside see Toor Dykeside

Toor Dykeside (toor-dik-sid, tow-ur-dik-sid) n. Tower Dykeside, short street linking Slitrig Crescent with the Tower Knowe. The name derives from the wall which once encircled the Tower on the south side. It is a relatively new street, since the Tower is believed to have sloped down to the Slitrig perhaps as recently as the 18th century. Nos. 1, 2, 3 and 4 are all parts of the former Tower Hotel, which is grade B listed – ‘And though the matin bells have not yet rung Their usual peal unto the world wide, Alert with joyous life both old and young Their steps are wending to the Tower Dykeside’ [JCG] (sometimes ‘the’ Tower Dykeside, occasionally one word, and also formerly ‘Toor-gate-side’; it is ‘Tower Dyke side’ on Wood’s 1824 map).

Toogateside (toor-gait-sid) n. former name for Tower Dykeside. Before the wall was built the ground at the foot of the Tower sloped into the Slitrig (also written ‘Toor-gate-side’ or ‘Towergateside’).

the Toor Hotel (thr-toor-hoo-tel) n. Drumlanrig’s Tower, during the days it was used as a hotel, also known as ‘the Tower Inn’. This phase of the building’s history started in 1773, and continued until 1981. The landlords used to farm fields at the Wellogate, with an onestead in Bourtree Place (which became the Con Club site). The ballroom inside was used for dances, theatrical performances and other social functions in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. toorick (too-rik) n., arch. a small tower.

the Toor Inn (thu-toor-in) n. usual name for the Toor Hotel in the 18th and early 19th centuries. The first landlord was Michael Stevenson, from 1773, followed by Robert Armstrong for about a decade. William Brown (‘Billy’, d.1839) was landlord in the early part of the 19th century, then John Fenwick (with William Crozier as long time hostler) and later Frank Fenwick. The landlord farmed some land up the Wellogate and had some space for stabling where the Con Club was later built. A coachhouse for the inn stood where the Exchange Buildings were built in the 1860s. Wordsworth stayed here in 1803 and the first Burns supper in Hawick was held here in 1815. In the 1830s, being the Town’s polling station, it was the focus of troubles during several elections.

the Toor Knowe (thu-toor-now) n. area in front of Drumlanrig’s Tower, so-called because it was a few feet above street level into the 19th century. It would have seemed higher relative to the surroundings before all the houses were built, and it must have once had the mill lade crossing its northern side, isolating it from the rest of the Town. It has been used as a street address since the late 19th century. It was formerly a small green hill, is said to have once had the ‘deuil tree’ upon it, and still had a few trees in the late 18th century. In the 18th century there were 2 small clay-built houses to the west of the river bank, the proprietors of which owned the Knowe itself. There was also formerly a row of single-storey houses extending for about 50 yards at the eastern end, which split the High Street in half at this point (running from roughly opposite 2 Tower Knowe to a point in line with 18 High Street). For a century from about 1760 it held the daily spectacle of arrivals and departures of the stage-coaches passing through the town. It was also where the Town Herd used to collect the cattle. It was formerly used as a marketplace and for annual hiring fairs, as well as being where bonfires would be lit to mark special occasions. No. 7 was formerly known as ‘Kedie’s Buildin’, but rebuilt by James Harkness, with a cantilevered section sticking out over the Slitrig. Essentially the entire street is composed of grade C listed buildings – ‘I wish the guidness ee wad get alang the road tae the Too’r Knowe and no bother mi wi’ eer blethers’ [JEDM].

Toor Mill (toor-mil) n. Tower Mill, built over the Slitrig approximately where the ‘Auld Brig’ once stood. It was constructed on the site of an earlier mill by William Elliot & Sons in 1852. The building is 3½ stories in whinstone with sandstone dressings, built over a flat-arched bridge, and is currently listed Category A. The magnificent arch over the river makes its design quite unique. It was water-powered originally, and provided the first electric lighting in the town (conveyed all the way to the house of Col. William Scott Elliot at Teviot Lodge). The water wheel still exists in the basement, and is the largest of its kind in Scotland. When the water was low it was supplemented by a steam engine, installed in 1882. At its height the workforce of the factory was 660. In the late 19th and early 20th centuries it operated as a carding and spinning mill, run by Col. Walter Elliot and then his son, Col. William Scott Elliot. Between the wars it was switched to hosiery production. During WWII the building was used as a grain and sugar store and then for several decades as a warehouse for Murray Brothers mail-order knitwear firm. The building fell into disrepair and ownership was transferred to the Scottish Historic Buildings Trust in 1995. It was refurbished to accommodate visitor facilities and commercial space, as part of the Heart of Hawick initiative. The architects for the conversion were Gray, Marshall & Associates. The ‘Bean Scene’ opened in 2007, with a glassed section overlooking the Slitrig, and the old water wheel visible underneath. The rest of the building includes a small cinema and creative workspace (also sometimes called ‘Toor Knowe Mill’ or ‘Elliot’s Mill’).

The weavers and cordiners existed from before the earliest Burgh records, with the hammermen incorporated in 1686 and the skinners in 1694. About the beginning of the 18th century it is recorded that the Burgessesses of Hawick included 26 merchants, 18 carriers, 20 weavers, 10 tailors, 8 cordiners and shoemakers, 10 wrights, 5 gardeners, 2 bakers and 2 candle-makers, as well as glovers, fishermen, thatchers, dykers, cooper, cassayers, brewers, pipers and pedeers.

the Trades President Jimmy Murray, other founding members being Tom Wright and Andrew Middlemass, and with Jock Inrie and Tom Reid being long-time club stalwarts. Minute books and accounts exist from 1946. The club grew out of efforts in the War years to keep rugby going, with teams from the B.B.’s, local mills, High School and the ‘Combined Trades’. After the War this latter team joined the South District League and Border Junior League as ‘Hawick Trades’. The team used to change in the old Baths, and later established clubrooms behind the Waverley Bar. They joined the Linden in 1963 in renting the facilities at the Volunteer Park. The team has had an annual tradition of playing Welsh club Glymneath since 1956. They were also the first local junior team to tour abroad, at Pesaro in Italy. They play in sky blue tops with white shorts and navy socks. A history, ‘The First Fifty’, was published in 1995.

the Transactions (θu-trān-zawk-shinz) n. Transactions of the Hawick Archological Society, regularly published since 1863, with an inaugural document published in 1856. The years 1886, 1887 and 1891–97 were not published. Indices were published in 1906 and 1930. Originally the monthly reports of meetings were printed in the Hawick Advertiser and reprinted and distributed to members. It has since then been printed by several different local printers. Now the Transactions is published annually in the Spring, bearing the previous year’s date.

transumpt (trawn-zumt) n., arch. a transcript, copy, exemplification of a record, particularly in the Scots legal phrase ‘decree of transumpt’, where a document is asked to be produced in court so that it can be copied.

Tranter (tran-tur) n. Nigel (1909–2000) writer, born in Glasgow and educated in Edinburgh. He wrote over 90 Scottish historical novels, and also the 5 volume study ‘The Fortified House in Scotland’. His ‘Cheviot Chase’ (1953), set in the 1930s and 40s, is about a modern enmity between the towns of Hawick and Hexham caused by the Hornshole events, ‘Balefire’ (1958) is set in the Borders right after Flodden, while ‘Portrait of the Border Country’ is a useful work of non-fiction. He was an honorary member of the Hawick Archaeological Society and Common Riding Chief Guest in 1957.

Trantille (trawn-’fee?) n. former name for lands in Ewesdale, recorded in a 1525 ‘letter of reversion’ between Simon Armstrong and George, Lord Home. The name occurs in a list between Unthank and Fiddleton, although the precise location is unknown (the origin may be related to that of ‘Tranty-ﬁt’ etc.).

trantie (trawn-tee) n., arch. a person who is intelligent above his or her station (once a common term, cf. the Tranties, Tranty-ﬁt, and possibly Tibbie Tantry: origin uncertain, but perhaps related to Middle English ‘trant’, a trick, or the provincial ‘tranter’, a peddler; the word seems to be peculiarly local, but was already obsolete by the 1850s).

the Tranties (θu-trawn-tees) n., pl., arch. popular name for two sisters from Hawick who died about 1814 (according to James Wilson), Marjory and Isobel Hume. For about 30 years they kept a lodging house for beggars, near to the Auld Brig. They were said to be ‘rather more intelligent than their neighbours in a similar humble condition of life’. They are also mentioned in Agnes Douglas’s prize poem about the ‘Auld Brig’ – ‘Even in the Tranties, wi’ their beggars, The spoilers had found fearfu’ fleggers’ [AD].

Tranty-ﬁt (trawn-tee-ﬁ) n. Tranty-foot, supposedly a witch, sister of ‘Speed-o’-foot’ who lived at Goldielands. It may also have been a name for one of the two towers of Goldielands – ‘. . . The wonder-working witches ‘Tranty-foot and Speed-o’-foot, the occupants of Goldilands Peel’ [RW] (probably related to trantie, applied to someone who was so clever as to be suspected of witchcraft).

trappin (traw-pin) n., poet. material used to trim a garment, such as lace, tape or ribbon – ‘He gethers his trappin’ and maks for the door, And he whustles awa oot o’ sicht’ [WL].

Traquair (tru-kwär) n. house south of Innerleithen, in a secluded valley of the Quair Water. It is reputed to be the oldest home in Scotland, being lived in continuously since 1107. It is associated with several Scottish Kings of the 12th and 13th centuries, as well as with the Stuarts.
and the Jacobite cause. Prince Charlie was entertained there by the 7th Earl in 1745. The ‘Bear Gates’ (or ‘steekit yetts’) were reputedly closed at that time, never to be reopened until a Stuart sits again on the throne (although there are other stories). Mary Queen of Scots also stayed here in 1566. The present structure is probably a 15th century core with alterations through to the 18th century. It is owned by the Maxwell-Stuarts, and now open to the public. The brewery in one of the wings of the house was built around 1700, although brewing on the site is even older. Brewing ended there in the late 19th century, but was restarted in 1965 (the first record of the name is ‘Treverquyrd’ about 1124; it is ‘Tracquhair’ in 1507/8, ‘Tracquar’ in 1527, ‘Trocquair’ in 1564/5 and ‘Trakwair’ in 1574; the first element may be the old p-Celtic ‘tref’ for ‘farm on the Quair’).

trasht (trasht) pp., arch., arch. worn out, exhausted, over-worked, maltreated – ‘It wasna leike as A was mutteet oot or onyways trasht’ [ECS], ‘Trash’t wi’ a sair day’s wark’ [GW].

Treaty of York (tret-yaw-york) n. treaty of 1237 between Scotland and England, signed by Alexander II and Henry III, possibly at Cavers. It was also signed by Hugh de Baliol (among others), who may have been Laird of Cavers at the time. It formally set the boundary between the two countries, corresponding closely with todays Borderline (apart from England taking back Berwick in 1482).

treck (treck) n. a track – ‘... he competed as a professional gress treck cyclist’ [IWL] (not very common).

tred (tred) n., arch. trade, a to-do, fuss, carry-on – ‘Some folk heh sic a tred wui thersels, primpin’! [ECS], ‘Hir man’s a sklater ti tredd’ [ECS], ‘Ye maunna mak a tred o’ ganig there’ [JAHM], ‘I’m shure sic tred as folk has To please Mrs Grundy, She must be obeyed Baith week-day and Sunday’ [FL], continued practice – ‘Ye maunna mak a tred o’ ganig there’ [JAHM] (also written ‘tredd’).

tredsmann (tredz-munn) n., arch. a tradesman, craftsman – ‘...O’ auld mason tredsmen Langsyne deid, that built, And built weel wi this thrown stane Sae like their-sels ...’ [DH], ‘A can mind when tredsmen wore Flammen serks wi a navy blue stripe’ [DH].

Tregus (trey-gus) n. catering company at Unit 13, Weensland Mill, where the Weensland Function Suite can also be booked for parties and receptions. The company started in the 1990s.

trei (tri) n. a tree – ‘she was aye feard for treis’, ‘A hink ee’re berkin up the wrang trei’, ‘hev ee traced eer family trei?’, ‘there were they trei fellers fri Ireland’, ‘A cood wale oot Rule Waeber’s coarse feine, – merket wui raws on raws o treis’ [ECS], ‘... but A’d a thosand rather be sair hackin’ treis than hing about like this daein’ nocht’ [JEDM], ‘... tred (tred) n., v. tread.

the Treincersgait (thu-trin-kurz-gait) n. former gate, probably in Lilliesleaf, described in a court action of 1589 between William Riddell and William Middlemas. It was decreed to be ‘ane commoun gait for horsmen and fitmen to carie laidis and pakis throw and for pepill to cum to the kirk for tymer and watlis coft in the mercatis to be brocht throw it on horsebakis and for slesid that sall happen to be coft in the mercatis to be brocht hame thairthrow, and nocht to be ane commoun gait for wanis cairtis sledis or ellding’.

tremmle (tremmle) v. to tremble – ‘The tear comes tremlin’ ti my e’e ilk time that I remember thee ...’ [WP] (also spelled ‘tremle’; cf. trimmle).

tresaurer (tress-a-rur) n., arch. a treasurer – ‘...to give thair band to John Scott, taylor, and towne tresawrer, which accordingly was done’ [BR1707] (see also thesaurer).

trespass (tres-paws) n., arch. crime, transgression, offence – ‘...whereupon ye Session thought fitt honor he should satisfie publicly for his trespass, for the terror of others’ [PR1718] (formerly applied more broadly than to wrongful entry onto land).

tret her like a queen’ [WL] (this can be the past tense or past participle; cf. treatit).

Trevelyan (tre-vel-yin) n. Sir George Otto (1838–1928) historian and Liberal M.P. for the Hawick (or Border) Burghs 1868–86. He was the first such M.P. in 1868, winning subsequent elections in 1869, 1874, 1880, 1882, 1885 and 1886 (three of which were by-elections on account of his appointment to senior government posts). Later in 1886 he lost to A.L. Brown by only 30 votes, the election campaign being focussed on the issue of Home Rule. By this time he was a Unionist, rather than a Liberal. He held appointments as Secretary to the Admiralty, Chief Secretary for Ireland and also Scottish Secretary. He is perhaps best known as biographer of his uncle Lord Thomas Macaulay, and for his more famous sons George and Charles. Trevelyan Terrace is named after him.

Trevelyan Terrace (tre-vil-yin-te-ris) n. street in the West-end, originally built in 1879, but demolished and rebuilt in 1974–76. It was named after Sir George Trevelyan. The first houses were built there by joiners Riddle & Graham and Eckford the builder.

trial (tri-ul) n., arch. inquiry, investigation – ‘...whilk Samuel desirit the said bailies to the tryell anent the said purs ...’ [BR1642], ‘...the weights of the persons respectively under writen, being by the baylyeas put to ane exact trial ...’ [BR1676] (there are spelling variants).

the Trial Stakes (thu-tri-ul-stäks) n. race run on the Friday of the Common Riding, beginning in the 1880s. In 1894 it became for horses which have followed one of the local hunts. It is run over about 2 miles (also called ‘the Trial Selling Stakes’).

trig (trig) adj., arch. neat, tidy, smart, quick, active, nimble, brisk – ‘...Sae weel’s ye’re harness’d, and sae trig, In troth ye sit like ony bride. With my fa ding, &c.’ [CPM], ‘...And lasses trig and braw’ [JT], ‘And still there may be seen our bairnies trig and clean, Rinning for the water that their granny hauds sae dear’ [VV], ‘...an, whan the motor dreiver, trig in eis ticht leggums, beguind o kinneen an caain eis injin ...’ [ECS], ‘Look down the strath on harvest rig, See lads and lassies neat and trig ...’ [TCh], v., arch. to smarten, set in order – ‘She gleded at her cousin, and trigged up her cap’ [HSR] (from Old Norse).

trimme (tri-mul) v., arch. to tremble – ‘Thou hest mae the yirth til trimmel; thou hest brokin it ...’ [HSR], ‘FEerfuniss an’ trimmlin’ ar cum apon me, an’ horror heth ower-layde me’ [HSR], (also written ‘trimmel’; cf. tremmel and trimmelt).

Trimmontium (tri-mon-tee-um) n. Roman name for the Eildons, where there was a substantial fort, occupied from the late 1st through 2nd centuries. It was one of the most important sites on the northern frontier of the Roman Empire in those times, and guarded an important crossing of the Tweed. It was probably built around the year 80 and abandoned around the year 200 and not rediscovered until the building of the railway line in 1860. The fort itself covered about 15 acres, with an area of as much as 200 acres occupied. At one time it probably held about 1500 men from the 20th Legion ‘Valeria Victrix’ (Valiant and Victorious), with perhaps 1500 civilians living outside the fort. Many of the items recovered in the excavations are in the National Museums of Scotland, but some are in the Trimmontium Museum at Newstead. The Trimmontium Stone, a granite monument, was erected by the Edinburgh Border Counties Association in 1928.

Trinity (tri-ni’-ee) n. name for the area between the Bourtree and Weensland, being called ‘the Trinity Lands’ from early times. These lands were part of the endowment of the Hospital Church of Soutra in the 14th and 15th centuries. Soutra was dedicated to the Holy Trinity and also known as ‘Trinity Hospital’, with a well there, also dedicated to the Holy Trinity, being known as the ‘Tarnity Well’. This hospital was annexed in 1462 to Trinity College Church and Hospital, Edinburgh, which had been founded by Mary of Gueldres (widow of James II); the church lay at the foot of Calton Hill, and was demolished in 1848.
because of railway development. The Hawick lands appear to have been among those owned by the Scotts of Crumhaugh in the 17th century. They gave their name to Trinity Street and Trinity School, as well as later (indirectly) to St. Ninian’s Road. The naming of the new Trinity Church (not in the old Trinity area) has somewhat confused the geography.

Trinity Gardens (′tri-ni′-ee-gahrndnz′) n. Trinity Gardens, public gardens below Trinity Church, near the Horse. It is a popular hang-out spot for youngsters. The gardens were renovated and a new band-stand built in 1999. The land was once known as the Wheathole, and was later the site of the East Bank Kirk – ‘Doon at the Horse, on a sunny day Sittin’ on a Trinity sate Or lookin’ up at Wulton Kirk Man it’s hard tae bate’ [AY].

Trinity Haugh (′tri-ni′-ee-hawf′, -hawf′) n. former name used for flat area by the river associated with the ‘Trinity lands’. This land was owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch and was drained and feued in 1875.

Trinity Kirk (′tri-ni′-ee-kirk′) n. Trinity Church, off Brougham Place. It was built in 1843 to replace the old East Bank United Free Church meeting house, which stood lower down. In 1958 the three congregations of St. John’s, St. Andrew’s and Eastbank joined together to become Trinity, when Eastbank was renamed and the other two closed. The congregation was linked with Cavers and Kirkton in 2004. The building is set within its own grounds and has a session house and vestry at the south-west corner. The design is relatively plain and the architect is unknown (sometimes wrongly attributed to William Burn). It was extended to form a T-plan in 1872 and re-decorated by William Jardine in 1892, with halls added in 1896. A pulpit and organ case, designed by Alexander Inglis, was added in the early years of the 20th century. The church, session house, vestry and halls are grade C listed building (the name comes from the 3 churches, and is unrelated to the Trinitylands to the east).

Trinitylands (′tri-ni′-ee-lawndz′) n. older name for the Trinity area of Hawick, dating back probably to the 14th century, and a connection with Soutra, also known as the ‘Trinity Hospital’. The same lands were also known as the ‘Soutralands’, since they were originally part of the endowment of Soutra, although the reason for this is not known. The boundaries and full extent of the lands are also unclear. In 1472 there was a court action brought by Sir Edward Bonkle, Provost of Trinity Collegiate Church, against Thomas Blair, for rent on the lands. They were confirmed to Trinity Collegiate Church by Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1507. They are described (as ‘Soltracoft’) in a 1557 charter, as lying between ‘Ladyland’ to the east, the lands of the town of Hawick to the west, the highway to the south and the lands of West Mains to the north. In 1565/6 they were again leased to William Scott ‘in Hawik’ and his son and heir Robert; they are there described as lying between Ladyland, lands pertaining to the town of Hawick, and the West Mains. At least some of the lands were gained by Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig, since the inventory drawn up after his death in 1578 states that he ‘conqueist the Sowtre landis in Hawik’. In 1627 it was a ‘three merk land called Trinity land’ estimated as ‘paying presentlie 20 bolls’ and possessed by the Lord of Buccleuch and Walter Gledstains of Dod. In 1628 Walter Scott, Earl of Buccleuch complained that several Hawick men had cut down trees on ‘his lands and barony of Branxholme and Trinitie lands of Hawik’. In 1692 the lands were leased by the Duchess of Buccleuch to Robert Scott of Horsleyhill. In 1696, it is included in a list of lands owned by the Scotts of Crumhaugh; this could refer to part of the lands, perhaps the same as ‘Ladyland’, which was owned by the Scotts of Goldielands and Crumhaugh in 1627. In 1748 a small part lying on the Wilton side of the Teviot was exchanged with the minister of Wilton for a part of his lands which the Duke wanted for carrying water to Burnfoot Mill. The name was still used as late as 1907 in plans for the location of new houses in the area (written ‘Trinity Land’, ‘Trinity Lands’, etc.).

Trinity Mills (′tri-ni′-ee-milz′) n. main factory of Hawick Hosiery Company on Earl and Duke Streets (and not ‘Trinity Street, as the name might suggest), now the home of Hawick Cashmere Company, or ‘Hawico’. It was built in at least 1888, when it was occupied by Renwick & Raeburn, then the Raeburn brothers 1889-97. It was occupied by Messrs. F. Knox Cowie & Co. 1906, but that collapsed after about a year. Hawick Hosiery Company moved in in 1911 and was rebranded as Hawick Cashmere in 1990.
Trinity Schuil

Trinity Schuil (tri-ni’-ee-skil) n. Trinity Primary School, previously situated near the top of the steps on the south side of Weensland Road, to the east of the entrance to the Miller’s Knowes. It was built in 1876, and apparently originally called ‘St. Mary’s’, but changed its name when the new St. Mary’s School was built at the top of Brougham Place. It took the older pupils from St. Mary’s Parish School and another school which formerly existed in Weens. The school moved to its present location in 1935/36, the architects being Reid & Forbes of Edinburgh. The old building was demolished and council houses built on the site in 1955. School Inspectors’ Reports for 1915-53 are in the National Archive and log books for 1873–1906 in the Borders Archive. William Murray was first Headmaster, from 1876 and Bill Scrimgeour from 1950.

Trinity Steps (tri-ni’-ee-steps) n. Trinity Steps, unofficial name for steps leading from Weensland Road down to the bottom of Trinity Street. There are 56 steps.

Trinity Street (tri-ni’-ee-stree) n. street running off Weensland Road, named after the Trinitylands, the former name for the area, relating to lands once owned by the church at Soutra. The main houses were built in 1885. It has long had a hotel at the top, and the primary school is at the bottom.

Trinity Thistle (tri-ni’-ee-thi-sul) n. Trinity Thistle Football Club, a rugby club from the Trinity area, existing before WWI. It may also have been referred to as ‘Trinity Union’.

trinkle (tring-kul) v., arch. to trinkle – ‘Yill Waeter ... trinklin ti its treist wui Teiot’ [ECS].

trinne (tri-nul) v. to trundle, roll, spin, waddler, trinkle – ‘...trinnlin alowg owre its staney chennel’ [ECS], ‘Yill Waeter, trinnlin alowg owre its staney chennel’ [ECS], ‘The ba’ trimlin’ inti the cundy’ [GW], ‘...Crying ‘Shairly it must be time, now, To trimle my dydie egg!’’ [DH], ‘So sklim’ high heaven, trimlel throw hell ...’ [DH], ‘At Easter A’ve trimled dydie eggs ...’ [IWL], n. a gentle stream, the noise made by trickling water – ‘The trimle o’ pule and stream ... the lost lease-haud o’ youth ...’ [DH] (cf. trumple).

trimmly (trin-lee) adj., arch. suitable for rolling, small and roundish – ‘Trimmly bits o’ coal’ [GW].

tripe (trip) n. cow innards, traditionally served when there’s an ‘R’ in the month (because it went off in summer). It can be boiled with onion and other ingredients, fried, or served in a white sauce.

Troneyhill

There were formerly several well known purveyors of tripe in town, including Jen McVitie, Mag Burns and Teenie Balmer.

Trip ti Hawick Jig (trip-ti-hlk-jig) n. composition by Scottish accordion maestro Jimmy Shand, in 6/8 time.

trock (trok) v., arch., poet. to barter, peddle, deal with – ‘Trocked, whiles wi’ smuggled brandy – Unless I dae him wrang’ [DH], ‘Now Wattie neither begs nor buys, Nor steals, nor sells, nor does he trock ...’ [WP], ‘Whut’ rope and Sundhope They ken the soond weel; It’s nae news to thaim That he troks wi the deil’ [DH], n., poet. a bargain, trade, deal – ‘...And the feck o’ the trock they took away, Ye wadna haec cairried hame’ [WL] (also written ‘trok’; see also truck).

trode (troj) v., arch. to trudge – ‘...But happy gae lucky, we’ll trode on our way’ [HSR], ‘A was telld that if A was for a richt denner A wad need ti trode on ti Jethart’ [ECS].

troke (trak) v., arch. to trade, barter – ‘...Trocked whiles wi’ smuggled brandy’[??], n. truck, trade, dealings – ‘It hides ilk secret wee bit troke An’ sma transgression’ [JR] (cf. truck).

ton (tron) n., arch. a system of weights, officially abolished in 1618, but in use into the early 19th century, with the ton pound varying between 21 and 28 ounces avoirdupois – ‘Item, that ilk mercant that buys cuntrie geir with truck ...’ [BR1640], a standard of weight – ‘...and from thence bring home to the toune ane Holland brassen trone, to be ane true and just standard for the trial of their weights amongst themselves’ [BR1687].

Trone (tron) n. probable name for lands within Crook in the Parish of Cavers. It appears to be recorded in a document of 1581 as ‘horreum vulgo nuncupat trone et troneland’, i.e. a barn commonly called Trone and Troneland. It was in the north part of Crook (note it is possible that this is a scribal error for ‘Trows’).

Troyhill (troy-nee-hil) n. small hill between Belses and Barnhills, with a farmstead on it. Thomas Turnbull was farmer there in 1536. It may be the ‘Tromnyhill’ listed among the farms burned by the Earl of Hertford’s men in 1545, but if so is incorrectly listed under Rule Water. Watt and Dand Turnbull from there are recorded in

troo (troo; trot) n. trout – ‘...And troots that i’ the Tei’ot tipple’ [DH], ‘Mebbe they’ve a’ gien up at last And taen to catchin troots ...’ [DH], ‘Now a man that would net baith the fish and the troots Of his honesty, trotwe, we may well have oor doots!’ [UB], ‘My bonnie troots ye come ti kill; Ca’ murder sport, an’ nurse yer thrill’ [WP].

Trotter (tro’-ur) n. George (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit merchant on the High Street according to Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He married Sarah, daughter of William Beck. Their children were: Margaret (b.1806); Thomas (b.1809); William (b.1816); George (b.1818); Ann (b.1820); and Agnes Fulton (b.1822). James (18th C.) wright in Minto. He is listed among the subscribers to the reprinted Buchanhan’s ‘History of Scotland’ (1752). James (18th C.) farmer at Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish, recorded on the 1787–92 Horse Tax Rolls. Robert of Bush (18th C.) listed in 1779 as liferenter of a set of lands in Minto Parish, valued together at £433 17s 10s. The lands probably corresponded with what was previously called Deanfoot. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls he is listed as having formerly been liferenter of these lands. The liferent of parts of Minto was perhaps just to get friends of Lord Minto onto the voters list in Roxburghshire. He was Postmaster General for Scotland. His wife’s portrait was painted by George Romney. William (1816–1904) stockmaker who was long Secretary of the Hawick Stockingmakers’ Association (or Hawick Framework-Knitters’ Society). He was son of George and Sarah Beck. He was a second cousin of Provost Edward Wilson and manufacturer Charles John Wilson as well as a grand-son of William Beck. He married Elizabeth Revell in 1837. They were on the High Street in 1841 and at Howdenburn in 1851. Their children included Elizabeth, Sarah, William, Margaret and George.

Trow (trow) v., arch., poet. to trust, believe, feel sure – ‘Sae did I trow, because I wiss’d it se; Wi’ hopes, alake! we aft oursels betray’ [CPM], ‘He tends me weel I trow’ [??], ‘...And who, if here at this same hour, I trow would little praise

Trow (trow) see Troulawford

Trough Inn (tnu-trof-in) n. former inn on the right side of Weensland Road, by the old stone watering trough that remains there. A stockmaker called Grey is recorded there when he died in 1840.

Trough Sike (trowf-sik) n. stream in Liddesdale, rising on the eastern slopes of Roan Fell and flowing into the Hartsgarth Burn. Near the head of the burn, on the south side is a circular sheepfold, with a carved stone inscribed ‘James Elliot, Shepherd Sept 30’, and a second stone inscribed ‘William Elliot Builder 1820’. Peden’s stone is just south of here.

Troulawford (trowf-law-ford) n. point that formed the western boundary of the Common in the 1537 charter, remaining so until the Division of the Common in 1777. According to the 1767 description of the old boundaries of the Common, and the map drawn up by J.P. Alison, the Common came to a point here, between the road and the Gate Burn. Given the strange shape of the Common here, and the possibility that the farm of Hawickshiel may have once been within the boundaries of a larger Common, it seems likely that the ford had some special significance, so that it remained within the boundaries. The site is now where the Gate Burn crosses under the road, presumably being a ford in earlier times, and is marked by a plaque. There is an illustration ‘The Troulawford: Hawick Burgesses on the Trail of Reivers, 1546’ by Tom Scott ‘...the Common Haugh and Common Muir of Hawick, lying betwixt the Burnfoord upon the east, Troulawford upon the west, the dykes of Goldielands and Fenwick upon the north, and the syke of Winding-Toun Moss upon the South’ [BR1734] (marked ‘Trouling Ford’ on some earlier maps, it is also sometimes ‘the Troulawford’; it is ‘Trowtlawford’ in 1767).

Trouling Ford see Troulawford

trow (trow) v., arch., poet. to trust, believe, feel sure – ‘Sae did I trow, because I wiss’d it se; Wi’ hopes, alake! we aft oursels betray’ [CPM], ‘He tends me weel I trow’ [??], ‘...And who, if here at this same hour, I trow would little praise the poor’ [AD], ‘But I'll gi'e him his gilded ha’, – I trow he’s little skill . . .’ [JT], ‘They’re some beauty-spots, aw trow, Where the Slitrig wimples throw’ [TK], ‘Bairn auld and young are mixed I trow – Rob Lurgie lingers wi’ the lave, Caleb and Clinty seem crones now Wi’ Hornie Robbie and Cannie Dave’ [HI].

trow (trow) v., arch. to troll, to fish by dragging a line through the water – ‘Reels up, [he] trowed in the dam outright’ [HSR], to waddle – ‘Lang may you row, trow, guzzle, swatter’ [JoHa], ‘It rows aboot, it trows aboot, Baith near and far awa’; Whiles it is on the Maiden’s Paps, And whiles on Ruberslaw’ [TCh].

Trow Brig (trow-brig) n. name sometimes used for the bridge over the Teviot at Hornshole.

Trow Burn (trow-burn) n. stream that joins the Teviot from the south near Hornshole, essentially a name for the lower part of the Kirkton Burn – ‘Twas then the plunderers found a grave where Trow goes purling down; And hence this trophy cherished still, of those Callants who saved the town’ [JEDM], ‘. . .it was nae teime owregane or oo war birlin owre the Trow Burn leike five ell o wund’ [ECS].

Trowhaugh (trow-hawch) n. lands listed among those held by the Baron of Hawick in 1615. They are also described in the 1627 valuation of Hawick Parish. They were presumably the same as the Trows, or situated nearby. The description is of ‘ane land’ (presumably meaning a husband-land) ‘estimat to 4 bolls in stok, i boll teynd’ (it is transcribed ‘Troinhauch’ in 1615).

Trowmill see Trow Mill

Trow Mill (trow-mil) n. small woollen mill at ‘the Trows’, on the Teviot, about 2 miles down from Hawick. The factory was built in 1885, and was latterly run by Wrights of Trowmill Ltd. The area formerly held one of the corn mills of the Cavers estate, active up until the late 18th century. William Aitkin and William Borthwick were there in 1684. Archibald Aitkin was there in 1694 when tax was paid on 7 hearths for ‘himself undermillers & kilns’. James Curle was tenant there in 1797 and the millers in 1841 were William Cranston and James Black. Alexander Goodfellow was miller there in the 1850s and Hugh Goodfellow was farmer in the 1860s. Known in the latter part of the 20th century for its mill shop and factory tours, it closed, with the site being cleared and redeveloped as housing – ‘The waters o’ the Teviot Are drumlie at Trowmill. . . .’ [WL] (also written ‘Trowmill’, it is ‘Trow-miln’ in 1684, ‘Troumilne’ in 1694 and ‘Trowmiln’ in 1797; it is marked ‘Trowsmiln’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

trows (trowz) n., arch. a former small boat used for fishing in local rivers – ‘The ‘trows’ were shaped something like this, A. The man stood with a foot on each leg of the ‘trows’, and steered and propelled it with the leister. When the ‘trows’ were not in the water there was a movable wheel attached to its point, and it was pushed along the road like a wheelbarrow’ [JTu] (presumably related to both trow and trews).

Trows (trowz) n. hamlet on the south bank of the Tweed, between Roxburghe Newtown and Roxburgh Barns. It is also known as Makerstoun Trows. There is another place of the same name, and also a stream just south of Windy Gyle in Northumberland (the name perhaps derives from the narrow ‘troughs’ on the bed of the Tweed here, although another possibility is the old Celtic ‘tros’, suggesting a river crossing; it may have the same origin as for the more local area the Trows; it occurs on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Trows’).

the Trows (thu-trowz) n., pl. popular name for the area surrounding the Teviot near Trow Mill, and for the farm also called Trow Knowes. Simon Routledge is recorded there in 1494. George Douglas was recorded there in 1502. ‘Trows’ was one of the farms of the Cavers estate, listed as such in 1511. The name is also used in the earliest account of the 1514 incident (Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’) to describe the general location, rather than the word ‘Hornshole’, this being more correct if the skirmish took place on the south side of the Teviot. George Douglas of Trows is recorded in 1517. It was still part of the Cavers lands in 1558. The area was said to have been used for secret Covenanters' sermons in the 17th century. It was inherited by Sir William Douglas of Cavers in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698, with the mill. James Douglas was there in 1694. The precise site of the former house is unknown, although it is marked between the Crook and Westcote on Stobie's 1770 map, and with Trowsmill down by the Teviot at the same time – ‘Little Cot, Muckle Cot, Crook and the Trows, Worchart, Wormston and Cavers Knowes’ [T], ‘The lazy Griersons o’ the Crook, An’ Douglas o’ the Trows, An’ Caddon wi’ his bluddie shears, Fra’ clippin’ o’ his yowes’ [T], ‘Hawick better lo’ed sic needfu’ rows As cowed the English band at Trowes’ [AD] (often written ‘Trowes’, it is ‘le Trowis’ in 1502 and ‘trowis’ in 1502, ‘Trowis’ in 1511 and 1517 and ‘Troues’ in 1694; it appears as ‘Trows’ on Pont’s c.1590 map, is still ‘Trows’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map, and ‘Trowes’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; the origin of the name is unclear, but one suggestion is the Old Welsh ‘tros’, which means ‘across’ something, and occurs in other place names associated with river crossings, while another suggestion is ‘trowch’ for a channel in a river bed, or a mill trough).

trowth (trowth) n., arch., poet. truth, troth – ‘Tweel ye hae walth to wale on if it’s sae; Sae sigh nae mair, for trowth ye mak me wae’ [CPM], `But I trustet in thee, O Lord: I said, Thou art my God’ [HSR], ‘Trouth sall spring owt o’ the yirth …’ [HSR], (also written ‘truth’; cf. troth).

track (truk) n., arch. goods, barter, especially used to refer to the goods formerly received for part payment of wages in the hosiery trade (see also trock and troke).

The True State … (th-troo-stā’) n. possibly the first book published in Hawick, full title ‘The True State of the unhappy controversy about the Burgess Oath, being a discourse delivered before the Associate Presbytery of Earlston, at Kelso, the 8th day of October 1782, etc.’, published in 1783, written by John Young and printed by George Caw.

truth (trith, truth) n. truth – ‘…A Wasna boass, – if the truth be telled, A was riftingfowe!’ [ECS], ‘The truth is that in many hymns – as aw kenn’d fu’ weel – there was nae pretension tae observe the speerit o’ the festival’ [BW1939], ‘There’s nae truth in the rumour that the length o his sermons …’ [JWL], ‘…Nae music, truth tae tell’ [WL], ‘…But, tell the truth, the legs irna the same Nowadays. Weel, sin’ auld-age wunna hide’ [DH], ‘…For here’s a truth to shame the deil – A day frae Hawick’s a day wasted’ [DH], ‘…A hed ti tell the truth’ [CoH].

Trummel (tru-mul) n. variant of Turnbull, reflecting the formerly common local pronunciation – ‘But there’s nae reek i Jock Trummle’s house This nicht – an’ nane i mine …’ [DH], ‘An there’s other families in Hawick caed ‘Turnbull’, an when oo speak aboot them oo caa them ‘Trum-mel’’ [DaS] (also written ‘Trummle’).

trump (trum) n. a trump, the suit chosen in a card game to outrank other suits – ‘that’s a stipeet game if ee hev aa the trumphs’, v. to play a trump or take a trick with a trump.

trunlle (tru-nul) v. to trundle, move along by rolling or spinning – ‘it Easter oo trunlleed eggs it the Miller’s’, ‘…As the warip mills trunlle roond’ [WL] (cf. trundle).

Truslye (trus-lee) n. former name for lands near Groundistone, just to the North of Hawick, once part of the Barony of Chamberlain Newton. It was listed in 1535, along with ‘Groundeston’ as when the King revoked a former charter, and so its superiority passed from Patrick, Earl of Bothwell to George, Lord Home. It is unclear precisely where these lands were.

trustit (trus-tee’, -i’) pp., arch. trusted – ‘Was unco clever, dealt sae fair, An’ illa day was trustit mair’ [RDW], ‘But I trustet in thee, O Lord: I said, Thou art my God’ [HSR].

try (trI) v., arch. to test, examine, scrutinize – ‘…the cordiners shall try this market for insuffi- cient leather and unbarkit schone, and what fines they receive, the ane half thereof shall pertain to the town’s use, and the other half to the craft …’ [BR1643]. ‘The quartermaster of the shoemaker trade tried the market, to find if the shoes were all of sufficient barked leather …’ [JW1677].

tryit (trI-ee’, -i’) pp., arch. tried – ‘Item, what-somever person that committs ryottis …, being tryit, sal pay 50 shillings …’ [BR1640].

trykle (trI, tri-kul) n., arch. treacle – ‘Note that taffie generally signifies the sticky variety, made of trykyl (treacle) or sayrup (syrup), in sticks or slabs ...'[ECS], ‘...a shive o’ wheat bread, wi’ the maskins o’ peppermint leaves sweetened wi’ trycle, an fegs we thocht oorsels gey braw’ [V&M], ‘Wi trycle on eer chowks. Better, daur-say, Brocht, factory-fresh (sei telly) til eer braw!’ [V&M], `Wi trycle on eer chowks. Better, sweetened wi’ trycle, an fegs we thocht oorsels gey bread, wi’ the maskins o’ peppermint leaves sticks or slabs (taffie) ...'[ECS] (also ‘trykle-taffie’, etc.).

trykle taffie (tr-klee-taw-fee) n., arch. treacle toffee – ‘Taffie-join = a social evening, the principal feature of which was the making of a panful of treacle-toffee (trykyl-taffie, tryklee-taffie) ...’[ECS] (also ‘tryklee-taffie’, etc.).

tryk e yall (tri-kul-yil) n., arch. treacle beer, a drink made with treacle or molasses, together with sugar, water and yeast, once brewed by housewives. It was a cheap and refreshing drink, popular up to the end of the 19th century. It was sometimes used in porridge instead of milk – ‘...and he remembered that his old grandfather always had his jug of treacle yill beside his porridge plate’[JeC].

tryst (trist) n., arch. an appointment, rendezvous, meeting, meeting place, country get-together, market, particularly for the sale of livestock (but distinguished from a true fair or market in that it was not generally established by charter). In in the 18th and 19th centuries there was a tryst in Hawick held on the third Tuesday in October, established in 1785 on the land at Thoretterykes, also sometimes called the Cattle Tryst. Black cattle were stopped at Hawick on the way from northern markets, such as Falkirk, to southern markets at Carlisle or Newcastle – ‘And fair or tryst aye proves the best To him wi’ a bit brawal in’t’[MG], ‘When the tryst has been set in some lane leafy dell, That echoes the sound o’ the eicht o’clock bell’[JJ], ‘And can ye be the bonny lass That set the trysts wi’ me! And sat beside me on the grass ‘Aneath the hawthorn tree’[JT], v., arch. to meet, engage to meet, fix an appointment – ‘They nivir trysted with and could not evite’[PR1714], ‘Turn backward Carle Time wi’ me Through twice ten years o’ gloom, And tak’ me to the trystin’ tree’[JeC], to arrange for someone to perform at a specific time or place – ‘Yeddie Kyle o’ Hayknowe, wha can han’le the bow, Was trysted to play on the fiddle’[JoHa], to befall, afflict – ‘...as justly he deserved the severest punishment to be trysted with’[PR1717], to arrange at the same time, be coincident – ‘The Treasurer could not attend this day the Session in the Manse by reason of some emergencie he was trysted with and could not evite’[PR1724].

the Tryst Grund (thu-trist-grund) n. part of the Common used for the annual horse fair in the Autumn, being in the Thoretterykes, with an area of 1 acre and 31 poles, and also being referred to as ‘Hawick Loanin’ or ‘the Green Gress’. The fair was established by the Magistrates in October in 1785. There was also a cattle fair established in the same year (in November), to encourage drovers to stop off in Hawick.

trystin (tris-tin) adj., pres. part., arch. meeting, getting together, bargaining, agreeing – ‘And voice calls to voice by the spirit mound Where the Burgess-Dead keep trysting-ground’[JYH].

Trystin Sike (tris-tin-sik) n. Trysting Sike, stream that rises on Kirk Hill and runs roughly south-east to join the Liddel Water near Thistle-sike, south of Mangerton.

tuck (tuk) n., arch. a beat, bang, tap, especially on a drum (from Old French; see also tuck o the drum).

tuck o the drum (tuk-o-thu-drum) n. a proclamation made by public crier using his drum – ‘The officers are ordered to banish Elizabeth Miller ...and ordained to discharge, by toucke of drum, all persons from harboring and resetting her’[BR1695], ‘...to be brunt on the chiek with the lette H, and thereafter to be banished the town by toucke of the drum ...’[BR1697] ‘...and ane proclamation to go through the towne at night, by tuck of drume ...’[BR], ‘...and ordain the same to be intimated this day through the town by tuck of drum accordingly’[BR1736], ‘...A Cornet there’s been wi’ tuck o’ the drum’[JEDM] (a familiar phrase in the 18th and 19th centuries).

the Tud (thu-tud) n. nickname for someone in the late 18th or early 19th centuries.

Tudhope see Tudhope Hill

Tudhope (tu-du) n. farm just to the west of Jedburgh, presumably the origin of the surname. There is a holy well on the farm. ‘Jhone off Toldow’ is recorded in the Burgh Court Book of Selkirk in 1523 and ‘William Tudhoip’ in the following decade.

Tudhope (tu-du) n. Adam (17th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married ‘Gellan’ Dryden, probably about 1675. He may be the Adam who is listed as a resident at Ormiston in Cavers Parish in 1694. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Janet Clerk there in 1699. He may have been brother of Thomas as well as Janet, who married John Douglas in Cavers in 1707. Adam (17th/18th C.) married Isabell Stewart in Bedrule Parish in 1716. Helen who married John Rutherford in Bedrule Parish in 1721, and Bessie who married William Mill in 1725 may have been his sisters. Adam (17th/18th C.) married Marion Oliver in Hawick in 1722. They had a daughter Isabel (b.1723). Adam (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Agnes Scott in 1798. Their son James was born in 1799. Bailie Charles (18th C.) merchant of Hawick, he was Magistrate in the 1750s. He witnessed baptisms in 1743, 1745 and 1757 and is listed among the subscribers to the reprinted Buchanan’s ‘History of Scotland’ (1752). Francis (18th/19th C.) paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785–91. He was listed as a carrier on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. He is probably the Francis who married Betty Miller in 1676, and whose children were: John (b.1770); Walter (b.1772); Isabella (b.1774), who may have married Joseph Henderson in 1794; Beatrix (b.1779); and Janet (b.1781). He is probably the Francis who paid for the use of the Parish ‘mortcloth’ in 1773. Francis (1805–70) born in Hawick, son of John and Isabella Dryden. He married Margaret Nutter from London. In 1840 he was selected as a teacher at Grahamstown in the Cape Colony, and went out to South Africa as one of 3 men named for the oats of Gilbert Watt (the Town Clerk) that their livestock ate in 1642. He may be the same James who was recorded in 1644 when his horse was valued at 40 merks when provided for the Covenanting army ‘in case the horses come nocht back again or be lost’. He may be the James, married to Margaret Scott, whose children baptised in Hawick included: Margaret (b.1642); William (b.1643); Alexander (b.1645); Walter (b.1647); Christian (b.1650); and William (again, b.1652). Alternatively he could be the James, married to Helen Clapperton, whose son Robert was baptised in 1635, or the James, married to Janet Falla, whose daughter Janet was baptised in 1639. James (17th/18th C.) brother of Robert. He was called before the Hawick Session in 1717, but excused because he was ‘att Newcastle upon his brother’s service and business’. He could be the James listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. James (18th C.) married Margaret ‘Badie’ in Hawick Parish in 1726. James (18th C.) Hawick resident married to Agnes Turnbull. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1729), who may have married Robert Balmour in 1762. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Marion (or May) Littlejohn and their children included: Charles (b.1737); and Agnes (b.1740). James (18th C.) Hawick resident who married Janet Palmer in 1758. Their daughter Helen was born in 1760. It is possible he was the same James who married Margaret Henderson a year later. He may be the deceased James whose daughter Helen died in Hawick in 1798. James (18th C.) Hawick resident, married to Margaret Henderson in 1761. Their children included: William (b.1762); Adam (b.1765), mother’s Christian name given as Isabel; John (b.1767); Adam (b.1769); Charles (b.1773); and Elspeth (b.1774). He may be the James ‘Tuleup’ whose use of the Parish ‘mortcloth’ is recorded twice in 1773. James (18th C.) married Janet Mason in Wilton Parish in 1835. James (17th C.) named on a list of men suggested by the Hawick Bailie as fit to be sent to the war in Germany in 1627, specifically they were said to be ‘fitter to be employed in his Majesties service nor to be suffered loyttering at hame’. While in Edinburgh Tolbooth he was among 7 of them who complained that they were not in fact the sorts of men who should be pressed into military service, but nevertheless were transported to the wars in Germany. James (17th C.) recorded as one of 3 men fined for the oats of Gilbert Watt (the Town Clerk) that their livestock ate in 1642. He may be the same James who was recorded in 1644 when his horse was valued at 40 merks when provided for the Covenanting army ‘in case the horses come nocht back again or be lost’. He may be the James, married to Margaret Scott, whose those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4 and was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He could be the John who married Isobell Huntly and whose children born in Hawick included Walter (b.1670), Margaret (b.1672), Marion (b.1677) and Jane (1679). John (17th C.) flesher on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He was also listed as a fleser among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He could be the John whose children born in Hawick Parish included Robert (b.1693), John (b.1696) and Alexander (b.1702). John (18th C.) Hawick resident married to Isabel Ker. Their children included: Robert (b.1735); Andrew (b.1739); Francis (b.1742); and Walter (b.1744). He could be the John, from Hawick, who is on the list of subscribers for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. It is possible he was the John who (along with Walter) witnessed a baptism for Joseph Henderson and Janet Tudhope in 1798. John (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident married to Isabel Dryden. His wife may have been the Isabel (b.1781), daughter of Gavin Dryden, born in Hobkirk Parish. Their children included: Francis (b.1805), teacher in South Africa; and Gavin (b.1807), who married Janet Watson. Robert (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident whose son Robert was born in 1707 (with no mother’s name given). Robert (18th C.) brother of James, mentioned in 1717. Possibly the same Robert was married to Helen Scott and had children: Helen (b.1727); Robert (b.1733); and Betty (b.1735). Robert (18th C.) Hawick resident married to Helen Hardie. Their children included: John (b.1731) and Janet (b.1737), who may have married Robert. Renwick in 1766; and Anne (b.1741). He could be the flesher who witnessed baptisms for skinner John Currer in 1743 and 1745. This same flesher was involved in a pair of court cases in 1748, involving the payment of a debt by Robert Taylor to Thomas Turnbull, in which he was an intermediary. Robert (18th C.) married Margaret Davidson in Hawick in 1760. Robert (18th C.) married Jean Ekron in Hawick in 1767. His wife was daughter of John Ekron and Jean ‘Dinlap’ (i.e. Dunlop) and died in 1775. Robert (18th C.) married Marion Pott in Hawick in 1777. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He may have been brother of Adam and Janet. His children included: Marion (b.1699), who probably married Thomas Thomson in 1728; and Thomas (b.1706). Thomas ‘Tammy’ (18th/19th C.) trader in toys and other items at local fairs. He was long remembered in Denholm by a phrase repeated by children, ‘Tammy Tudhope the toy-man!’ and the cry ‘The fair’s begun, yonder’s Tammie Tudhope’. It is unclear where he came from. Thomas (b.1791/2) tobacconist at the Sandbed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was probably part of the business marked ‘Tudhope & Scott’ on Wood’s 1824 map. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. In 1841 he was listed on the Sandbed and at Teviot Square (probably about 10 Sandbed) in 1851, when he was listed as a master tobacco manufacturer, employing 1 man and 1 boy. He married Isabel Murray in 1816 and their children included: Mary (b.1817), who may have married George Porteous in 1848; Elizabeth (b.1819), who probably married Robert Biggar in 1846; Agnes (b.1821), who may have married Joseph Park in 1845; James (b.1823); John (b.1825); Thomas (b.1831); Janet (b.1835); and William (b.1837). Perhaps the same Thomas was one of the original deacons of Hawick Free Kirk from 1844. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick, married to Marion ‘Thor’. Their son John was born in 1634. Walter (18th C.) Hawick resident, married to Janet Graham. Their children included: Walter (b.1727); William (b.1729); Jean (b.1732); and John (b.1737). Widow (17th C.) listed among the subscribers for the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. It is unclear who her husband was. William (16th C.) farmer at Hallrule. ‘William Tudopis duelling hous and yaird’ are recorded in the 1562 Baro-nial dispute over the lands of Feu-Rule. William (18th C.) elected Bailie in 1737, although Bailie Burn complained that many of the voters were his servants or were minors. He was Bailie in 1738 when plans started for the building of the Teviot Bridge. He is also recorded buying a bag of ‘Irish happenies’ from the Kirk Session about 1711 and becoming an elder in 1723. He paid tax for 19 windows in Hawick in 1748. He could be the merchant William who married Elizabeth (or Elspeth) Scott, and whose children were: Anne (b.1725); May (b.1728); May (again, b.1730); and William (b.1732). He witnessed a baptism for weaver David Miller. He is probably the merchant William who witnessed the baptisms of children of Walter Tinlin and William Oliver in 1737. The baptism in 1725 was witnessed by teacher James Anderson and ‘Tacksman’ Robert Elliot. The 1728 baptism was also witnessed by ‘Mr. Anderson’, as well as Robert ‘Pote’. He is probably the William who was former owner of lands (in Wilton Parish) that George Hailburton owned.

in 1788, having been purchased from Langlands of that Ilk. William (18th C.) married to Isobel Riddell. Their daughter Anne was born in 1739. William (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident recorded as owner of a horse in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He could be the ‘Hair Merchant’ who died in Hawick in 1808 (also spelled ‘Toudhop’, ‘Tudhope’, ‘Towdop’, ‘Tudup’, ‘Tutop’, etc.).

Tudhope Hill (tu-dup-hil) n. hill east of Moss-paul, between the Allan and Hermitage Waters, on the border between Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire. It reaches a height of 599 m (1,961 ft). A smaller peak, to the west, is called Little Tudhope Hill, and reaches 483 m (also sometimes just ‘Tudhope’ or ‘the Tudhope’ and occasionally ‘Tudhope Fell’; there were several former spellings, e.g. it is ‘Tutop’ in 1839).

Tuesdi (tez-, chewz-di) n. Tuesday. This is early closing day in Hawick, and traditionally the day for the mid-week Ride-outs (also spelled ‘Tuesdih’; cf. the older Teisday).

the Tusedi (thu-tezw-, -chewz-di) n. sometimes referring to the Tuesday of Common Riding week. There is a Chase in the morning. This is also usually the day when the Principals, preceded by singers and members of the Drums and Fifes, visit the local hospitals and old-folks homes.

Tufty (tuf-tee) n. nickname for John Wilson, Burgh officer from roughly the 1810s to 40s — ‘...And the folk o’ Hawick were made aware By tuck o’ Tufty’s drum’ [JCG]. Also a nickname for some members of the Thomson family, e.g. Tommy, Cornet in 1955.

tuik (took, tük) pp., arch. took — ‘...Thomas Turnbull deponed ...that he saw him have ane purse at the buird, and tuik three forty penny peses in it ... ’ [BR] (possibly suggesting early uses included ‘put’), ‘...so I tuik three baths afore breakfast time’ [RW], ‘Hei tuik his muckle pleugh-staff then ... ’ [JSB]. ‘Weicleike, A jnist tuik a toot – a sirple ti seind oot ma mooth’ [ECS], ‘...an’ tuik the road over the muir for Ettrick in gran’ spearerits’ [BCM1880] (one of the traditional Scots spellings, reflecting the older pronunciation; taen is an alternative past tense form).

tuiner (ti-nur) n. a tuner, particularly someone who services machinery in the knitwear industry (the 1882 and 1883 Cornets were power loom ‘tuniers’).

tuiny (ti-nee, -nū) adj., arch. moody, changeable in temper (noted by E.C. Smith).

tuip (tip, tūp) n., arch. a male sheep, ram — ‘I wull affer untill thee brunt-sacrifices o’ fatlins, wi’ the insence o’ tips ... ’ [HSR]. ‘The mountains skiffet like tips, an’ the wee hills like lams’ [HSR], ‘Kye an tuips an keilies an yowes’ [MB], arch. mood, temperament, specifically in the phrase ‘a bad tuin’ — ‘What’s putten ee i sic a bad tuin, avs?: Aw’m shair ee’ve been ill-naiter’s sel aa nicht’ [ECS], ‘...was gey sair putten-tilt to get to his work in time, so he was in a bad tuin a’ foremuin’ [DH] (occasionally spelled ‘tin’).

Tuihi (tii-hii, too-hoo) n., arch. someone of little intelligence, an empty-headed person — ‘Yih muckle tui-hii!’ [ECS] (perhaps related to ‘tattil-heid’).

Tui (til) n., arch. a tool — ‘The tuill box, ma faither’s pride ... ’ [IJ] (also spelled ‘tuill’).

Tuill-box (til-boks) n., arch. a tool-box — ‘Tuill-box’ was in the poem there — ma faither’s ‘tuillbox’ [ME].

Tulloch (tu-loch) n. John (19th C.) fishmonger at 30 High Street in the late 19th century. He was noted as a bass singer and was precentor of Allars Kirk. He moved to Campbeltown in 1899.

Tully (tu-lee) n. David (b.1787/8) local farmer, who gave his name to the phrase ‘Tully’s Mill’ when he was dragged into the Slitrig at the Mill Port and had the upper half of his clothing torn off by the mob for being a Tory voter. This was during the election of 1837; 5 men were tried for mobbing and rioting and assault, against 7 victims. He may have been one of the Hawick men who went down to London to be witnesses in the investigation. The family lived at the Millpath, in a house that was removed to make way for the railway. His wife was Janet, and their children included James and Janet. In 1861 he was living at 25 High street with grandchildren Agnes Murray, David Murray, James Tully and Jessie Tully; he was then described as a farmer of 75 acres. James (b.1816/7) son of David. In 1861 he was living at 17 Howegate and listed as a farmer of 30 acres. His wife was Margaret and their children included James and David. John (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident who owned a horse according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (18th/19th C.) mason who was chosen as ‘rebel’ Cornet in the ‘Disputed Common Riding’ of 1809 in opposition to the Council’s choice of John Kyle. The dispute was over new regulations regarding invitations to supporters. He was the second choice of the ‘Wesla Water’ group, after Henry Halliburton had declined. He rode the Common on the Friday, behind the ‘royalist’ Cornet, although he had more supporters. He also entered the Haugh, although with some obstruction – ‘If you love your ancient freedom. Their new Cornet never heed him: From among you choose a Cornet. Hand it down to sons unborn yet’ [JH], ‘The Westla’ Lads waurn Rebels ca’d, John Tully led them on a yaud’ [MB]. Margaret (17th C.) recorded in Ashkirk Parish in 1635. Isobel Scott in Synton Mill complained that she had called her a witch and a thief; she denied the first, but claimed she could prove that Scott had stolen money from Andrew Nichol. However, after several witnesses were called there was no proof of theft, and so she had to sit in the place of repentance ‘in her linen shietts, and to sit all the tyme of preaching’, then ask the congregation for forgiveness. William (18th C.) local wigmaker immortalised in a rhyme – ‘Robert Miles the barber, and Michael up the stair, Willie Tully makes the wigs, and Jenny buys the hair’ [T] (also spelled ‘Tullie’ interchangeably in early times, as well as ‘Tulley’).

Tully’s Mill (tu-leez-nil) n., arch. term meaning rough treatment at the hands of a mob, or more specifically being thrown into the Slitrig at the Mill Port. The term came from David Tully, known as a Tory supporter, who received such treatment during the election of 1837. Similar treatment was common during the elections of the 1830s. David Waters wrote a facetious poem called ‘Holy Tammie’s Prayer, and Thanksgiving for his marvellous escape from Tully’s Mill’ at the late election’, published in 1838 – ‘…he got ‘Tully’s Mill’ in the Slitrig under the Tower Knowe bridge’ [JTu] (also written ‘Tuillie’s Mill’).

tummle (tu-nul) v. to tumble – ‘…Losh he wammelt and tummeld ower on to the floor’ [UB], ‘When a’ the world looks cauld an’ grey, An’ a’ things tum’lin under …’ [WP], ‘…Here they come at the spring-cleain’, Tummelin’ oot o’ the derk again …’ [DH], ‘Syne aff frae his shouther’ll tummle his pack …’ [WL], ‘…And crystal rivers tummle doon’ [IWL], n. a tumble – ‘hei took a right tummle doon they stair’.

tummle-car (tu-nul-kawr) n., arch. a kind of primitive box cart with wheels that revolved with the axle, and hence moved with a jolting motion – ‘…Roostit horse shoon, an’ queer wheel rings O’ tum’le cars’ [JoHa].

tundle (tu-nul) n., arch. tinder, especially in the phrase ‘as dry as tundle’ (also written ‘tundl’; noted by E.C. Smith).

Tungrig (tung-rig) n. farm probably in upper Liddesdale, recorded in 1613 and 1622, relating to branches of the Scotts.

the Tunnel (thu-tu-nul) n. name used in the 19th century for a long, dark close leading to Backdamgate from around 12 or 14 High Street. It contained several badly illuminated houses and was demolished around 1857 when the Royal Bank was built.

the Tunnel (thu-tu-nul) n. epithet for the road between Hawick and Langholm, referring to the steep pass between upper Teviotdale and upper Ewesdale.
Tunno

Tunno (tu-nô) n. Andrew (16th/17th C.) notary in Melrose. In 1612 he is recorded as schoolmaster in Melrose. He is recorded in making an extract of the 1615 sasine of Robert Scott of Alton from Gilbert Watt’s Protocol Book, with the precise date is unknown. He is listed as procurator for some cases in the records of the Regality of Melrose in 1638–51. In 1642 his son Andrew is mentioned as a witness in Melrose and by the late 1640s was ‘younger’ and already a writer. His son was probably Town Clerk of Hawick (unless this was in fact him, rather than his son). Andrew (17th C.) Town Clerk of Hawick. It seems reasonable to presume that this man was son of the Melrose notary, who was described as a student in Melrose in 1642, and already a writer in 1643. In 1659 he is described as ‘notary in Melrose, now at Hawick’, in a bond referred to in a complaint against his tenant. He served as Town Clerk of Hawick 1659–70. In 1670 a case was raised against him by Walter Scott of Goldielands in the Melrose court of Regality (in which he is described as ‘portioner of Melrose’), complaining that he held the ‘protocol book’ of Gilbert Watt, notary, which contained 2 instruments of sasine relating to succession of the lands of Goldielands. He agreed to make copies, although they do not appear to have survived. Christian (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Men and women are listed, and so it is unclear if this was a male or female name. William (17th C.) servitor of Walter Scott, Earl of Buccleuch. He witnessed the Earl’s last will and testament in 1633.

Tunny (tu-nee) n. James Good (d.1887) proprietor of the photography business J.G. Tunny & Co., which continued long after his death. The company had several studios in Edinburgh and also opened one at 47 High Street Hawick in the period 1903–06.

tup (tup) n. a ram, male sheep – ‘A large and powerful tup turned on Jock and attacked him’ [RM], ‘I’m no acquaint wi’ mealy pows; I was brought up wi’ tups and ewes … ’ [JR], ‘Your credit with us rises up each time you turn a stubborn tup … ’ [TD] (this was formerly tuip).

tup-eild (tup-eel’d) adj., arch. barren – ‘A tuip-eild yow’ [GW].

the Tup Fair (thu-tup-fair) n. name sometimes used for Hawick’s main ‘tup’ market, held on September 20th and 21st during parts of the 18th and 19th centuries. It was also for a while a major lamb fair.

Tup Knowes (tup-nowz) n. former name for lands near Hawick. They are mentioned among lost placenames by James Wilson in 1850, and may be part of the old Common.

tur (tur) v., arch. to turf, cover with turf – ‘… that every inhabitant within the brughe shall have liberty to tur and theik, and sett ane ladder in his neighbour’s close’ [BR1660].

turbleent (tur-bleen’) n., arch. a sudden gust of wind, turbulence – ‘Yeh gowsty nicht (wui a wund fit ti blaw doors oot at wundihs) a turbuleent woare as the ordnar dang doon the firrst Peinleuch Moniment’ [ECS] (also ‘turbleen’ and ‘turlini’; from the Mediaeval English and Old French).

the Turf Hotel (thu-turf-hô-tel) n. former hotel at Langburnshiel’s, offering food, drink and accommodation to travellers. It was opened by Mr. MacDonald in early 1860. Later that year the guests and proprietor were attacked by a gang of navvies and there was an even worse riot on St. Patrick’s Day 1862. It is unclear how long the hotel operated.

Turfy Sike (tur-fee-sik) n. small stream in upper Liddesdale, running roughly to the north to join the Thorlieshope Burn.

Turie (too-ree) n. name for former lands on the Stobs estate. It is listed in 1657, between Horselee and Acreknowe, although the location is unknown.

Turk’s Close (turkz-klöss) n. popular name in the 19th century for a passageway between 58 and 60 High Street, home of the ‘Turks’. This was a nickname of long standing for John Scott and his family.

the Turk’s Halfpenny (thu-turkz-häp-nee) n. name for a temporary trade union in Hawick, instigated as the result of John Scott (‘the Turk’) reducing the price of men’s hose by 6 pence per dozen (or a halfpenny each) in 1817. The stockmak ers of the Town levied 6 pence on each man and used the funds to try to fight the imposition of wage reductions. James Hogg (of ‘Teribus’) and James Scott were arrested and spent several days in Jedburgh Jail before the employer yielded. The resulting celebration inspired James Hogg to recite the following verse – ‘See my dear comrades, turned to ashes, The cursed page that once did fash us, And bear in mind, we once did wish Our persecutors just like this; But innocence should aye get clear – Our bonds are dead and we are here’ [JH].

Turlenbrae

Turlenbrae (tur-lin-brä) n. former farmstead in Wilton Parish, probably near Coldhouse and Whitfield, according to its entry on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John Henderson was tenant at that time (it is possible this is an error for some other place).

turn (turn) v. to become, grow – ‘Him and mei turned fast freends and Aw hev him in New York now . . . ’ [JEDM], ‘Ee’re denner’s turnin cauld’ [ECS], (more common than in standard English, and often with the participle coming after the noun; see also turnt).

turn (turn) n. the middle of something, particularly a night – ‘. . . the turn o the nicht’ [ECS], the act or process of changing – ‘. . . a turn for the better; . . . the turn o the eer’ [ECS], a bout of illness, especially in the phrase ‘a bad turn’, a favour – ‘. . . ee’ve duine iz a guid turn wui that’ [ECS], a walk, stroll – ‘A’m duist oot for a bit turn afore A gaan ti bed’ [ECS] (these senses all more common than in standard English).

Turn (turn) n. former name of a farm near Stobs, roughly between Woodfoot Cottage and Railway Cottages. It could be the ‘turni’ where James Crozier was located in 1494/5. It is probably the ‘Torin’ listed along with ‘Wenerton’ and ‘Fowler-awe’ as farms on the Slitrig belonging to the Laird of Gledstains, which were burned by the English in 1547/8. It was among the lands of Winnington purchased by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs from Robert Elliot of Redheugh in 1622. It was still listed as part of the Barony of Winnington at the end of the 17th century. It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. William Turnbull was there in 1708 and James Nichol in 1720. George Fletcher was tenant there in the 1750s. When a valuation of the separate lands in the Stobs estate was made in 1779 an entry read ‘Part of Te-ourn or Turn, possessed by William Elliot and Robert Potts in 1779’, valued at £178 6s 5d, with the other part being Smithfield-haugh and valued at £15 10s. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, Sir William Elliott of Stobs owned part of ‘Te-ourn, or Turn’, a small part of which was called Smithfield-haugh; together they were still valued at about £194. It was also referred to as ‘Acreknowe Turn’ and housed 2 separate families until about the early 1900s (also written ‘Turne’; it is marked as ‘Turns’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and still there on Stobie’s 1770 map; it is clearly marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, but there is no sign of it today).

the Turn Again Stane (thu-turn-a-gan-stân) n. standing stone on the farm of Kae-side, overlooking Tweedbank, traditionally said to have been erected to commemorate the place where Elliot turned and speared Ker of Cessford to death at the battle of Skirmish Feild in 1526. In fact the stone lies beside an ancient pathway, and probably predates the 16th century.

Turnbull (turn-bul, tru-nual) n. Adam of Whithope (14th/15th C.) recorded in 1390 as a witness to the charter by John Turnbull of Minto, granting Minto to Sir William Stewart of Jedburgh. in a charter of 1409 as ‘ade turnebule de quithope’ (i.e. Whithope) when his son John was granted lands at Hassendeankbank. Adam of Fulton (14th C.) listed among the witnesses to the 1390 charter where John Turnbull of Minto granted Minto to William Stewart of Jedburgh. Adam (15th C.) listed as one of the witnesses to the sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sherrifdom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas in 1432. It is unclear how he was related to other contemporary Turnbulls, but John of Bedrule and William of Hassendeankbank are also listed. He may be the Adam who witnessed a charter for lands in Sprouston in 1433/4, Adam of Wauchope (15th C.) described as ‘Adam de Walechhop’ (and listed after several Turnbulls) when part of an inquest into lands in Jedburgh in 1440. He may be the same Adam who was on a ‘retour’ panel for Ker of Altonburn in 1446/7. Adam (15th C.) granted the lands of Greenwood in 1439 by charter of James II. These lands had previously been held by Walter Dalgleish of Green-wood and are probably the same as Girnwood on the Borthwick Water. He was probably father or grandfather of Thomas of Greenwood, recorded in 1488, and also related to the Turnbulls of Minto. Adam (15th C.) recorded as ‘Ade’ in 1471 when he and George Cranston had remission for 2 ‘schelis’ in Ettrick Forest. Adam of Philiphaugh (15th C.) recorded in 1484 when James Turnbull claimed compensation from him for disturbing him in his lands of Westfield and spoliation of his cow at his lands of Kirkhope. In 1504 he was among a number of men who had remission for any involvement in the slaughter of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey. He is listed right after Mark, who may have been related, and before his son and heir William, followed by James in Kirkhope and James in Gargunnock. He is also listed in the 1506 remis-Helen Rutherford, heiress to Rutherford of that Ilk. Probably the same Adam of Philiphaugh was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting Alemoor in 1509. Janet, who was granted a charter for Philiphaugh in 1509 was surely related to him. Adam (d.bef. 1509) resident of Hornshole recorded at the 1493 Justice-aire held in Jedburgh. He was allowed to ‘compone’ for several crimes, specifically: stealing 2 bolls of barley, a horse, linens and sheets and diverse tools from John and Thomas Young of Minto; stealing ‘chattels’ from Katherine Stewart from Minto; common theft and pilage; stealing 36 ewes from the Murrays in Sundhope; stealing 56 ells of cloth and 2 horses from Lauder; stealing 40 sheep from Philiphaugh; and stealing 12 sheep from Thomas Williamson from the Kirkland of Wilton. Additionally he and Walter, also in Hornshole, were allowed to compone for a series of other crimes: stealing livestock from 3 separate men in Minto; bringing in Englishmen from Tynedale to plunder Minto; and for common theft. Their surety was Robert Scott of Howpsley. In 1494/5 he had remission for several related crimes: stealing sheep, cows and a horse from John Sinton in Synton, in the company of James Elliot; stealing further horses from Torwoodlee, Fairnilee and Lauder; stealing sheep from Glenrath; stealing an ox from Heartside and ‘chattels’ from Hugh Douglas; stealing cattle from Katherine Stewart in Minto; bringing in men from Tynedale to plunder Thomas Wilkinson; and for common theft and delivery of stolen goods. His surety was Walter Scott of Howpsley. He was also described as ‘in Hornshole’ (i.e. tenant there) in 1502 when he was indicted for stealing 200 oxen and 80 horses from James Newton, tenant of Synton. David Scott (called ‘the Lady’) tenant of Stirches was involved in the same or a similar incident at Synton. Later in 1502 he was ‘in Hornshole, now in Chalmerlane-Newtoune’ when he had remission for a series of crimes. This included stealing 80 sheep from Broadmeadows (probably also involving David ‘the Lady’ Scott in Stirches), bringing in Englishman Sir John Musgrave, stealing 160 sheep from ‘Hundalishop’, stealing 100 sheep from William Turnbull at Oakwood, stealing 60 sheep from ‘Caldschelis’, for helping Archibald and Ninian Armstrong to raid Synton, and stealing 17 cows, 2 horses, 100 sheep and goods from St. Leonard near Peebles. James Newton in Synton and Walter Scott of Howpsley were sureties for him and Walter (son of Walter Scott of Headscliff) appears to have been involved in 2 of the same incidents. Musgrave’s men burned Selkirk and stole 1000 merks worth of goods from the inhabitants; he also had remission for his role in this. George of Hallrule and Bartholomew in Rawflat acted as sureties for him. In 1509 Andrew Crozier was hanged for several crimes, including his murder, along with the murder of another Adam, called ‘Gabirlenzie’. There are no details given for the incident leading to his death. He may be an ancestor of later Turnbulls who were tenants of Hornshole. He may be the ‘Ade Trumbull’ listed in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501, along with David and Robert, when they were fined, with George Douglas, Master of Angus responsible for their pledges. Adam (15th C.) member of the panel for the inheritance of the lands of Brauxholme and Buccleuch in 1492. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Adams. Adam ‘Gaberlunzie’ (d.bef. 1509) killed along with Adam in Chamberlain Newton (so they may have been related). Andrew Crozier was hanged in 1509 for this and other crimes. No information is given about this incident and no clues as to the reason for his nickname, which is recorded as ‘Gabirlenzie’. He was surely related to Walter, ‘gabirlenzie’. Adam (15th/16th C.) son of William. He was listed in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501 among mostly local men who had been fined. The other 15 men listed were mostly from the area immediately around Hawick. Note that there was also a separate Adam listed, but neither had another designation, and so it is impossible to know if they were the same as any of the other contemporary Adams. Adam (15th/16th C.) witness to the notorial instrument of 1501/2 for the Kerrs of Ferniehirst, relating to their lands of Feu-Rule in the Barony of Cavers. It is unclear if he was the same as one of the other contemporary Adams. Adam (15th/16th C.) son of Walter in Stouslie. In 1502 William in Crumhaugh was surety for him at the Justice-aire, and was fined for his non-appearance. Adam (15th/16th C.) recorded among the men who were put to the horn in 1502 for involvement in the murder of Robert Oliver. The person called to enter him was Mark Ker of Dolphinton, George of Hallrule, while John in Wells was also listed and so surely related. Adam (15th/16th C.) described as ‘of Billerwell’ in 1502. In 1502 he was ‘de bullirwell’ when he was fined for failing to produce Ninian in court among a group of men charged with the murder of Robert Oliver. Also in 1502 he served as surety for Peter Turnbull in Boucherer. In 1506 he had remission for ‘resetting, supplying and intercommuning’ with William Turnbull of Minto, as well as with his accomplices, the rebels Mark, Edward and Walter Turnbull. In 1508 he was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale; he was there recorded as being ‘in Bullerwell’. George Turnbull was Laird of Billerwell in 1589, so presumably a descendant. Adam (15th/16th C.) listed as tenant of Fulton in 1516, along with George and Andrew (hence possibly his brothers). They were among Turnbulls to receive remission for their part in assisting Alexander, Lord Home. Adam (15th/16th C.) tenant in Wolfelee who was listed among the many Turnbulls given remission in 1516 for assisting the traitorous Homes; James was also listed there as tenants of ‘Wolfeley’, and so may have been related. Adam (d.bef. 1532) killed along with Thomas Dalgleish, when a group led by Clem Crozier, Martin Crozier, Hob Elliot of Ramsiegill, Sym Forester and Johnnie Forester from Liddesdale raided ‘within the boundis of Teviotdale’. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Adam (16th C.) listed along with Gavin in 1534 when they were entered into ward in Blackness Castle, with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme being discharged of the bond he had made to the King for their good behaviour. It seems likely they were either father and son or brothers (with his name given first), but it is not clear where they were from exactly (the names match the Turnbulls of Billerwell, for example). Adam (16th C.) recorded in 1552/3 as ‘Adam Trumbull of Woulie’ when he had a bond with John Ker of Ferniehirst and others to remain within Jedforest. He is probably the Adam who was tenant in Wolfelee (along with Walter) when listed among many Borders men in the remission of 1526 for riding against the Earl of Arran. Probably the same Adam signed a bond in 1557 (along with others) with John Kerr of Ferniehirst to bring in William Nixon; he is there recorded as ‘Adam Trumbill in Wolvlie’. Adam of Billerwell (16th C.) signed a bond in 1557 with Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst, to bring in the thief William Nixon. Probably the same Adam of ‘Bullerwell’ is recorded in 1571 when he had to appear before the Privy Council and was warded. In 1576 he was recorded among a group of Turnbulls and others (from Barnhills, Howden, Hallrule, Billerwell and Chesters) who had a bond with another group of Turnbulls (from Minto, Bewlie, Kames and Troneyhill), not to harm each other. Also in 1576 there was a pledge made between the feuding Turnbull branches; his son Hector was also mentioned, with the pair appearing personally. His sons were all declared fugitives in 1578/9. Hector is recorded in 1580 having a brother-in-law called Patrick Richardson, and so presumably this was the husband of one of his daughters. Adam (16th C.) described as a ‘clerk’ at Hallrule in 1562, when his house and yard were part of the Baronial land dispute in Feu-Rule. The Adam of half a century later must be a descendant. Adam of ‘Yaton Scott’ (16th C.) listed in 1581 among 10 men accused of the murder of Walter, son of Wat Turnbull of Bewlie. Andrew was also listed as being at the same location, and although it is unclear where this was, most of the others were Turnbulls of Rulewater. Adam ‘Reid Adie’ (16th C.) tenant in Over Hassendean. He is recorded in 1576 when Sir Thomas of Bedrule was surety for him, promising that he would refrain from theft; the pledge was stated to have been broken in 1578/9. He was also recorded in 1583/4 among men of that area cited for failing to appear to give evidence relating to charges against sons granted by the King to Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and his friends and servants in 1581. He must have been related to the Adam recorded a couple of decades later. Adam (16th C.) tenant in Westwood. He is recorded in 1567 among men who Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst had to present to answer accusations of raiding into England. He could be related to the later Lairds of Westwood. Adam (16th C.) son of Sandy. He was recorded in 1567, along with Hector ‘in Turnbull’ (which seems likely to be a transcription error), brother to George, as well as ‘Isobel’s Robin’, ‘Part Pursell’ and 2 Olivers. David Home of Wedderburn was instructed to enter them to answer charges of raiding into England. Adam (d.bef. 1578) recorded as ‘in Belsis’ when he witnessed a charter in 1549, hence he was presumably tenant of Belses. The charter was for Robert Scott of Howpasley granting Appletreehall to Hector, brother of David Turnbull of Wauchope. In 1576 he was recorded among a group of Turnbulls and others (from Barnhills, Howden, Hallrule, Billerwell and Chesters) who had a bond with another group of Turnbulls (from Minto, Bewlie, Kames and Troneyhill), not to harm each other. Also in 1576 there was a pledge made before the Privy Council, that his sons ‘Hekie’, David, George and John would refrain from thieving. In 1576/7 his servant Patrick Bennet was attacked by Walter in Firth, servant of John of Minto (despite the bond that had been signed between the feuding Turnbull branches); his son Hector was also mentioned, with the pair appearing personally. His sons were all declared fugitives in 1578/9. Hector is recorded in 1580 having a brother-in-law called Patrick Richardson, and so presumably this was the husband of one of his daughters. Adam (16th C.) described as a ‘clerk’ at Hallrule in 1562, when his house and yard were part of the Baronial land dispute in Feu-Rule. The Adam of half a century later must be a descendant. Adam of ‘Yaton Scott’ (16th C.) listed in 1581 among 10 men accused of the murder of Walter, son of Wat Turnbull of Bewlie. Andrew was also listed as being at the same location, and although it is unclear where this was, most of the others were Turnbulls of Rulewater. Adam ‘Reid Adie’ (16th C.) tenant in Over Hassendean. He is recorded in 1576 when Sir Thomas of Bedrule was surety for him, promising that he would refrain from theft; the pledge was stated to have been broken in 1578/9. He was also recorded in 1583/4 among men of that area cited for failing to appear to give evidence relating to charges against sons.
Turnbull Turnbull

of Sir Thomas of Bedrule. Adam (16th/17th C.) son of Stephen, from whom he inherited the right of rental of the lands of ‘Wowlie and Wowahoplie’ (i.e. ‘Wolfelee’ and ‘Wolfehopelee’) in 1590. He resigned the rental in favour of Sir William Cranston in 1607. In 1616 he was witness to a bond between William Scott of Todrig and Mark, son of Hector Turnbull in Hartshaugh, where he is referred to as Adam ‘called of the Wowy’. He was surely related to the Adam in Woollee of the 1550s. Adam (16th/17th C.) referred to as ‘sumtyme servand to the said Walter Trumbill of Rawflat’ in the 1603 trial of George Turnbull of Belses. George was accused of killing a son of Walter of Rawflat, and shooting another son, and also of capturing him ‘binding him with fetteris, and hinging him be the feit and schouderis, ouer ane balk [beam], for the space of xij [12] dayis, quhairthrow his feit rottit fra him’. What became of him is unrecorded. It is possible he was the brother of David in Belses (with other brothers George and John) recorded in 1581 and 1583, when they were accused of attacking the farm of Rawflat. Adam (16th/17th C.) tenant of Wauchope in Rulewater, recorded in a court case of 1605. He may have been related to the George who was also a tenant there, and perhaps more distantly related to the Turnbuls of Wauchope themselves. Adam of Billerwell (16th/17th C.) one of the members of an inquest of 1610 to judge the proper succession to James Hamilton’s lands of Appotside and Tythecouse. In 1619 he had a bond, along with his son George, with John Haliburton of Mertoun, and this was witnessed by ‘my brother’ Andrew Turnbull. His son George was witness to a sasine of 1612. Probably the same Adam ‘in Bullerwall’ was one of the men accused in 1606 of raiding and burning Appotside and Harwood in 1598–1605, when his brother Andrew was also listed; both were ‘past fra’, i.e. the case was not pursued. He then served as surety for the other Turnbuls. Adam of Abbotrule (16th/17th C.) involved in a dispute in 1610, where Andrew Turnbull accused him and others of grazing their animals on his lands at Stonedge and Harwoodtown. He is probably the Adam, called ‘of Touheid of Abbotreull’, who had a bond with Walter of Bedrule in 1617/8. He had a bond with John, son of Walter Scott of Chamberlain Newton, signed in Hawick in 1619 and registered in 1624. Adam (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘in Bonecheuster tounhead’ (i.e. Bonchester Townhead) in 1618 when he witnessed a bond between Walter of Bedrule and Adam of Abbotrule Townhead. In 1619 he had a bond with ‘his good friend, Walter Lorane inGattascot’. Perhaps the same Adam is recorded being in ‘…head’, among Bonchester landowners, in the 1643 valuation for Abbotrule Parish; his lands were valued at £25. Adam ‘Adie’ (16th/17th C.) son of Thomas of Hartshaugh, the Kirklands and Swanshiel. However, there may have been other Adams in the same family (uncles and cousins) at the same time, so it is uncertain this is all the same man. In 1623 he was served heir to his grandfather Hector of Hartshaugh in the lands of ‘Viccarislandis’ (i.e. Kirklands) in Hobkirk, as well as Wester Swanshiel and ‘Clerksbankis’. He is recorded as ‘in Hartshaugh’ in the Circuit Court of 1622 when (along with another Adam Turnbull) he was caution for James Turnbull of Braidhaugh, who was found guilty of stealing 24 sheep from ‘Hairrlesyd’. In 1623 he was recorded as the miller ‘in Hartshauchmylne’ when Lyle Turnbull gave security for him and when he was acquitted of stealing cattle from Gilbert Eliott’s land at ‘Leisburne’. It is unclear when he succeeded his father in the lands that had been in the family for many generations. However, it appears that he neglected to ‘enter’ with his superior and so in 1630 he lost Hartshaugh and the Kirklands of Hobkirk (to Gilbert Eliott of Stobs), although he held on to Wester Swanshiel. He is still recorded as owner of Wester Swanshiel in 1643, when it was valued at £32 10s; he may also have been the Adam ‘in Swanshiel’ who was tenant in the other part of Swanshiel, valued at £66 13s 4d. It is likely he is the same Adam recorded in Easter Swanshiel and Wester Swanshiel on the 1663 Land Tax Rolls (even although he may have been deceased by then). Adam (17th C.) recorded in 1643 along with David as owner of land in Abbotrule valued at £30. This was probably part of Bonchester Townhead, where a separate Adam, as well as William, also lived. Adam ‘Clerk’ (17th C.) tenant in Bonchester according to the 1643 county valuation. His lands were valued at £25. He was distinct from the 2 Adams recorded at Bonchester Townhead, but could be the same as the Adam recorded in Hobkirk Parish in 1663. He could be related to Thomas ‘called Clack’ who is recorded as a landowner in Abbotrule in 1663. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Ruletownhead along with Walter in 1643. The lands were valued at £140. Adam of Ruletownfoot (17th C.) recorded in 1643 in the valuation of Abbotrule Parish. His lands were valued at £10. Adam (17th C.) listed in the 1643 county valuation, with his lands in Raperlaw being valued at £104. He may have been related to Walter and William who also held Raperlaw lands at the same time. Adam (17th C.) recorded on the Land Tax Rolls for Hobkirk Parish in about 1663. Although difficult to transcribe it appears that he also paid for his part of Hallrule in 1663. Perhaps the same Adam ‘in Roull’ was listed on the 1663 Land Tax Rolls for Abbotrule Parish when he paid tax on £70. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick in 1673 when a woman was fined for telling him to hang himself and calling him ‘ane land loppon lowne’. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Nether Tofts. His will and that of his wife, Margaret Douglas, are recorded in 1682. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Hawthornside. In 1678 he paid tax on £40 at Hawthornside. In 1684 his son (whose name is not legible) was listed among people declared as fugitives for attending field conventicles. The will of his wife Isobel Shiel is recorded in 1688. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Elthaugh in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Adam (17th C.) tailor listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is probably the resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He could be the Adam married to Jane Turnbull, whose children baptised in Hawick included: Janet (b.1670); Thomas (b.1673); Robert (b.1681); Michael (b.1683); and Agnes (b.1687). Adam (17th/18th C.) tailor listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is probably the resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He could be the Adam married to Jane Turnbull, whose children baptised in Hawick included: Janet (b.1670); Thomas (b.1673); Robert (b.1681); Michael (b.1683); and Agnes (b.1687). Adam (17th/18th C.) tenant in Hassendeanbank. He may have been son of William of Cockerheugh. He was succeeded in the tenancy by his son James and then his grandson, who was also Adam. Adam (17th/18th C.) miller at Mangerton Mill. His children included: Christian (1718/9–35); and John (1723/4–45). Andrew, who was also miller at Mangerton Mill, was probably also his son. They are buried at Etleton. Adam of Denesyde (17th/18th C.) last Turnbull Laird of Denesyde (also called ‘Nether Hawthornside’). He is said to have been a Jacobite supporter in the rebellion of 1715, probably accompanying William Kerr (‘Bitterbeard’) in fighting with the Old Pretender. As a consequence he was encouraged to leave (or possibly run out of) the area by Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs, who bought up all the ‘wadsets’ which the estate was under and advised him to leave the country. Elliott agreed to keep ‘St. Mary’s Well’ as a roadside watering place, and also gave him some money for his journey. He went south with his family, first to Tarsetfoot in Tyneside. His son Thomas was a weaver there, but some of his grandchildren returned to the local area. He may be the same Adam of Hawthornside whose son (first name not given) was among those listed as fugitives in 1684 for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. Adam (1653/4–1732) son of William of Bonchester. He was tenant farmer at Doorpool. He married Margaret Turnbull, who died in 1731, aged 75. His only daughter Helen married Walter Scott, 4th Laird of Nether Bonchester. Along with his father and wife, he was buried in Abbotrule Kirkyard. Adam (18th C.) married Finlay Stewart in Edinburgh. Adam (1766–1810) tenant of Hassendeanbank. His father was James, who also farmed there, with his grandfather being Adam and great-grandfather probably William, tenant of Cockerheugh. He is probably the Adam recorded at Hassendean on the 1787–94 Horse Tax Rolls and also in 1797, where he is listed as owner of 8 farm horses. He also paid the dog tax at Hassendean in the same year. He married Betty, daughter of James Scott of Skelfhill. They had at least 12 children, including: Jean (1790–1874); James (1791–1854); Robert (1792–1822); William (b.1794), who farmed at Falnash and Merrylaw; Adam Ogilvie (1796–1835), who became an architect; Gideon Pott (1797–1841), who died in Berbice (Guyana); Agnes (1799–1829), who married Pater Brodie; Gavin (b.1800–54); Thomas (1802–81); Helen (1803–79); Betsy (1805–63); and John Robson (1807–66), Master of Works at Windsor Castle. Adam (1760/1–1851) eldest son of Thomas and grandson of Adam of Denesyde. He was a shepherd in Tyneside, but joined his younger brother Thomas on the farm at Grange, on the Abbotrule estate. He leased Midburn (also called ‘Africa’) in about 1823, and renewed the lease along with his eldest son Thomas in 1848. He is listed at ‘Africa’ in 1851, but must have died soon after the census was taken. At that time the farm consisted of 50 acres of arable land, 100 acres of pasture and employed 3 people. He married in Tyneside and had a daughter Margaret (who was brought up by her aunt at East Foderlee and married James Stewart) and another daughter who died young. He secondly married Mary, daughter of John Turnbull, farm worker at Stonedge, and she died in 1852, aged 74. His children with his 2nd wife included Thomas (who farmed at Midburn), John (who married Jane Nichol and moved to Selkirk) and Michael (who married Beatrice Nichol, sister of his brother’s wife). Adam (18th/19th C.) tailor in Newcastle, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He could be the Adam from Castleton who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Adam Ogilvie (1796–1835) son of Adam and Betsy Scott. Like his brother John Robson, he attended Minto School and trained to be an architect. He was a builder in Edinburgh and died there. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. His son James Somerville became a doctor and emigrated to New Zealand.
Turnbull

Adam (b.1817/8) grocer and spirit deal on the Mid Row. He was at about No. 4 in 1851 and was listed as a grocer on the Back Row in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Helen and their children included William, Robert, James and Alexander. Bailie Adam (1867–1946) son of Robert and Margaret Wilson. He was a teacher in Hawick. He was also well known on both the rugby and cricket fields. He played full back for Hawick R.F.C. in the 1880s. He was on both the South of Scotland teams in Rugby Union and Cricket. He took over from George Wilson as the second Secretary of Hawick R.F.C. He also refereed at least 7 international rugby matches. He also acted as Session Clerk to Hawick Parish. He was a member of the committee of the Roxburgh and Selkirkshire Unionist Association. He married Helen Paterson (1867–1942), and they had 4 children, including Rev. Robert Wilson (b.1893) and Helen (b.1895). He became blind 11 years before his death. Adam (19th/20th C.) stood in as Left-Hand Man in 1897, perhaps the only time this honour was given to someone who had not already been Cornet. It is said that he was meant to be Cornet in 1898, but either fell out with the organisers, or turned it down because his sister died about then. In any case he refused to act as Left-Hand Man again in 1898. Agnes (16th C.) daughter and heiress of Walter in Dalkeith. She married Thomas Home, also from Dalkeith, and in about 1567 she inherited the lands of Templehall and Brewnlands in Rulewater. She passed them to Andrew, son of David Turnbull of Wauchope, who may have been a relative. Agnes ‘White Ersed Nannie’ (d.1805) her death is recorded in the Hawick parish records (along with her nickname!). There are several possible births of Agneses that could be her. Agnes (b.c.1790) keeper of a lodging-house at 36 High Street. She was married to William, also known as ‘Wull the Bellman’. Their children included Mary, William and Isabella. In 1861 she was a widow, still running the lodging house. Agnes (b.1814) daughter of Wilton Schoolmaster James and Margaret Dalgleish. She was teacher at the ‘Image Garden’ school in the 1840s, probably assisted by her mother, her father having died in 1834. She may have married David Host. The school building can be seen in the 1846 painting of the Common Riding Races, but probably did not last more than a few years. In Slater’s 1852 directory, she is listed as teacher at Wilton Cottage.

Alexander (15th C.) notary public in the Fife area in 1488/9. It is unclear how he might have been related to local Turnbulls. He may be the same ‘Alexandro Turnbull’ among the witnesses to the charter granting Harden to John Turnbull in 1482, made at Kirkcaldy by Henry Wardlaw of Wilton. He was notary public for the diocese of St. Andrews in 1506, when there was a document relating to the lands of Allanshaws (in Lauderdale) held by Melrose Abbey. Alexander (15th C.) recorded in 1493 being in Wowlee, i.e. resident of Wolfelee. He was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. The next entry was for Robert, also in Wolfelee. Alexander (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance. He was recorded being in Unthank, which is presumably the farm in Rulewater. He was cited again at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He was probably related to Henry, who was also recorded in Unthank in 1494/5. Alexander (15th C.) son of Andrew of Dryden. In 1494/5 he had remission for resetting Adam ‘howatson’ and Robert Jackson, who had stolen sheep from James Ker in Fastheugh and helped the ‘Thieves and Traitors of Levy’ in killing the wife and 2 sons of Thomas Middlemas of Ploro, as well as stealing a long (and very detailed) list of his goods. He could perhaps be the same man as Alexander in Commons脒e, who served as surety for Adam Howison in Commons脒e, also in 1494/5. He is recorded in the Treasurer’s accounts for 1494/5 having obtained remission from the King. Alexander (15th C.) recorded in ‘bellentyne’ at the 1494/5 Justice-aire in Jedburgh. He probably lived at Bellendean. He was allowed to ‘compone’ for communing with ‘the traitors of Leven’. His brother ‘Blinnd John’ was also recorded as ‘sande turnbulis brother of bellentyn’ in 1494/5, when he contributed 2 cows for the expenses of the Justice-aire. Alexander (15th
C.) son of Robert. He was recorded in 1494/5 when Thomas Lauder of Todrig had remission for several crimes, including resetting him. He had apparently stolen cattle from Thomas Yair in 'laudoma'. Alexander (15th/16th C.) tenant at Braedlie in 1508 when Cuthbert Lauder of Todrig was convicted of stealing 2 horses from him. It is unclear whether his farm was the one on the Borthwick, the Hermitage or near Ashkirk. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (16th C.) recorded in 1567 when his son Adam was among men who David Home of Wedderburn had to present to answer charges brought by Englishmen. Alexander of Howa (16th C.). In 1587 he was accused of being involved with taking sheep from Sir William Sinclair of Herdmandstoun, or at least of resetting the sheep stolen by his son Gavin. Sir Thomas of Bedrule appeared in his name, but he was found guilty and order to be confined until Sinclair received recompense. Alexander (d.c.1600) farmer at Crosscleuch, near Fulton in Bedrule Parish. He is listed as deceased in a letter of 1602 which states that ‘the ferme hes beine waist sen the pest tyme’, suggesting that he had died of the Plague. His wife was Margaret Cockburn. Alexander (1691/2–1761) married to Helen Murray, who died in 1780, aged 66. His son Thomas was a merchant in Denholm and is buried in Bedrule kirkyard. Alexander (18th C.) tenant in Langraw. His son was baptised in 1738. Alexander (d.1810) recorded as ‘Brother to the Laird of Tofts’ when he died in Hawick. It is unclear who his brother might have been, but perhaps Anthony. Alexander (18th/19th C.) baker and keeper of a public house in Denholm, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In the 1834 electoral roll he was also joint proprietor of houses with joiner John Turnbull. Alexander ‘Auld Sandy’ (1791–1859) 5th son of James and Betty Adamson and brother of the schoolmasters of Wilton and Hobkirk. He was a carrier, based at Nursery House, Bönchester Bridge, initially helping his grandfather George Adamson. In 1851 he is listed as ‘Carrier & Grocer’ at ‘1 Woodside’ in Bönchester. In later life he moved to Kirkton, where he died. In 1817 he married Elspeth (‘Betty’), daughter of George Alexander, farmer at Bönchester farm. Their children were: James (b.1817); Helen (b.1819); and George (b.1822), who emigrated to New Zealand and died in Dunedin; Agnes (b.1824); Isobel (b.1826); Elizabeth (b.1829); Ebenezer Alexander (1831–93), who died in Leith; and Margaret (b.1834). Alexander Rutherford (1835–97)

when the pair of them did not appear. Andrew of Dryden (15th C.) recorded as being ‘of Drydane’ in 1494/5 when his son Alexander had a remission for raids on Ker at Fastheugh and Middemas at Ploro. He was also recorded in that same year when his son John was named among men who John Scott of Deloraine was accused of associating with. This is probably the Dryden in upper Teviotdale. He was surely related of associating with. This is probably the Drymemas at Ploro. He was also recorded in that year when his son John was named among Turnbulls and others who may have assisted the Homes. Andrew (15th/16th C.) tenant at Rule, listed in the 1516 remission for several Turnbulls for providing assistance to Alexander, Lord Home in plotting against the King. Ninian was also a tenant there, so possibly related. Andrew (d.bef. 1535) recorded in 1535 as ‘Andree alias Dauid Turnbull’ in the trial of Robert Scott of Alanhaugh. Along with Thomas, he was tenant in Town-of-Rule and said to have been cruelly killed by Scott and the men he brought in from Lidestdale. Andrew (16th C.) recorded as being ‘in Hornishill’ (presumably Hornshole) in 1562/3 when Alexander Lord Home tried to have several men removed as ‘pretended tenants’ from the local lands for which he was superior. He may be related to other Turnbulls who were connected with this place. Andrew (16th C.) tenant of Gavin of Elliot of Falnash in 1569. Elliot acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. His name is recorded as ‘Andro’, and he is listed after George, to whom he was surely related. Andrew ‘Dand’ (16th C.) son of Eckie (i.e. Hector) of Belses. In 1580 he, his father, and his father’s brother-in-law Patrick Richard-son were accused by Jean Hepburn, Lady Wedderburn, of murdering her husband John Hamilton and were denounced as rebels. In a separate record of 1580, he was convicted, along with John Young ‘in the Cames’ of murdering and stealing from John Hamilton of ‘Benestoun’. Young was hanged, but being still a minor he was delivered to Andrew Lindsay to be kept in ward. His name is given as ‘Andro Trumbill’ and also as ‘Dand Turnbull, sone naturall’ to Hector. Andrew (16th C.) son of David of Wauchope. He is recorded in a charter of 1567 when the lands of Templehall and Brewlands were feued to him by the superior James Sandilands (Lord Torphichen) on resignation by Agnes Turnbull and her husband Thomas Home. The feu was extended to his nieces Jean and Beatrix Turnbull in 1604, daughter of his brother Walter of Templehall. Andrew ‘Spangand Andro’ (16th C.) listed as one of the 10 men accused in 1581 of the murder of Walter, son of Wat Turnbull of Bewlie. His nickname may refer to ‘springing’ an arrow. There is no information about which branch of the Turnbulls he belonged to. Andrew (16th C.) tenant in ‘Yaton Scott’, listed in 1581 (along with Adam of the same place) among 10 men accused of the murder of Walter, son of Wat Turnbull of Bewlie. It is unclear where this location was, but presumably in Ruelwater. Sir Andrew of Bedrule, ‘Auld Bedrule’ (16th C.) mentioned in the ‘Raid of the Redeswire’, so presumably Laird in the late 1500s. However, his relationship with other near contemporary Lairds of Bedrule is unclear, and it is possible that he never existed – ‘But little harness had we there; But auld Badrule had on a jack, And did right weel, I you declare, With all his Trumbills at his back’ [T]. He was supposed to be such a notorious thief that Home and Kerr refused to sign a bond of alliance with the Turnbulls and Rutherfords, claiming that he was the legal system was stacked in favour of the Turnbulls and associates attacked specific Kerrs on Jedburgh Fair Day, perhaps in retaliation for the earlier murder of Henry Oliver. He lost ‘the lytill fingar of his left hand’ in the fight. The court case was long and complicated, and it seems that the legal system was stacked in favour of the Kerrs. Andrew (16th/17th C.) brother of Adam of Billerwell. In 1606 he was one of the Turnbulls accused of raiding and burning Appotside and Harwood in the period 1598–1605. However, the case against him and some of the others was dropped, with the main Turnbulls of Wauchope being pursued instead. Andrew (16th/17th C.) heir to Hector of Stonedge. In 1610 he is recorded in a legal dispute with Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehurst, Adam Turnbull of Abbotrule and others for having their animals graze his lands at Stonedge and Harwoodtown. In 1611 he was ‘Andro Turnbull of Stanielege’ when John Riddell, younger of that Ilk was cautioner for him in Jedburgh Court. Andrew (16th/17th C.) tenant in Bonchester. In 1612 he and his sons Thomas and John, along with John ‘in Elscheuch’ complained to the Privy Council that John, Lord Ker of Jedburgh, had unfairly imprisoned them, and they were ordered to be released. He may be the same as one of the other Andrews. Andrew (16th/17th C.) son of Walter of Bedrule, he was also known as David. He was a butcher and Burgess of Jedburgh. In 1616 he had a bond with James ‘called of Bedrule’ (probably his uncle) and Mark in Hartshaugh. In 1619 he witnessed a bond for Walter of Bedrule and George Ker of Cavers Carre. Andrew (d.1622) recorded as ‘Andro in Belsches’ when he was tried for perjury and bribing witnesses Robert Ker, David Turnbull and James Young. They had apparently all lied in a case of theft brought by him against William and Walter Middlemas. He was sentenced to execution in Edinburgh. Andrew of Bewlie (17th C.) married Marion, daughter of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe, according to a marriage contract of 1627. In 1628 there was caution paid for him by Thomas of Knowe to ensure that he did not molest Adam Scott of Burnfoot, Walter Scott of Midshiels, or their tenants and servants. In 1640 he paid off a debt to his step-father and wife (probably part of the marriage contract). He was recorded as owner of Bewlie, valued at ‘56 bolls victual, half bear meal, bear £6, meal £8 [actually £7] the boll’, corresponding to £364. Either he or his descendant was recorded as Andrew of Bewlie in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls when he paid tax on £367. Andrew (17th C.) owner of lands in Ruelcastle in Bedrule Parish. In 1643 his lands were valued at £54. He could be the same as one of the other Andrews. Andrew (17th C.) miller at Appotside Mill. He witnessed a Rulewater sasine of 1654, and may have been related to the Turnbull tenants of Harwood and Templehall who were also witnesses. It is also likely he was related to the man of the same name who was miller at Woollie Mill in the 1680s and 90s. Andrew (17th C.) mason in Hawick. In 1676 Samuel Newbie was found guilty of assaulting him and another mason, Andrew Wilson. Andrew (d.1691) tenant at ‘Woollie-mill’ (i.e. Wolfelee Mill) in 1684 when his servant John Hall was listed among those declared as fugitives for religious non-conformity. His was one of the oldest gravestones in Hob Kirk Kirkyard, the inscription being ‘Here lies Andrew Turnbull, miller in Wollie Mill’. His wife Elizabeth Lillie died in 1719. He could have been father of Robert, who was tenant at Wolfelee Mill later. His descendants were tenants of Hallrule Mill for 3 generations. Andrew (17th C.) resident at Hartshaugh in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Andrew (17th C.) cooper in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He was living on the west-side of Hawick, according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He could be the Andrew, married to Margaret Chisholme, whose children baptised in Hawick included: Robert (b.1670); an unnamed son (b.1676); John (b.1679); Andrew (b.1681); and Walter (b.1686). Andrew (d.1688) tenant in Belses whose will was recorded in 1688. Andrew (1667–1747) son of Thomas, he is sometimes described as the last Laird of Bedrule, although he did not actually possess any of the ancestral lands. He farmed at Minto Cleuchhead. He married Jean Scott, who died in 1712, aged 32. He secondly married Agnes Turnbull, and she died in 1732, aged 39. His is the first name included on a memorial tablet to the Turnbulls of Bedrule in Bedrule Kirk. His children with his 1st wife were: Agnes; Thomas, of the Hawick carpet factory; and William tenant of Ancrum Woodhead. And with his second wife: Jean, who died unmarried; Margaret, died aged 16; Helen (Nellie); Stephen; and John. His brother William was probably tenant at Bedrule Mill. Andrew (17th/18th C.) Hawick mason. He was listed as a mason among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was one of the tradesmen chosen in 1713 by the minister and heritors to report to the Presbytery on the state of the Manse in Hawick. He was also charged with valuing Andrew Rodger’s house for the Kirk Session, perhaps for the same purpose. Around the same time it was presumably the same Andrew who was paid by the Session for erecting a large sign with the name of Betty Thomson, who bequeathed money to the poor of the Parish. He witnessed an irregular marriage between merchant John Scott and Anna Laing in 1724. Along with John (also a mason), he witnessed a baptism for smith William Young in 1725. Also in 1725 he was a candidate for Session Treasurer. He witnessed a baptism for former Bailie Depute Walter Scott in 1743, when he was described as ‘Senior’. The mason called Andrew who is recorded in the 1740s and 50s seems likely to have been his son. Andrew (17th/18th C.) tenant in Drydenburn. His wife was Helen Beattie and their daughter Helen was born in 1725. Also in 1725 (on the same day) he witnessed a baptism for John Graham in Allanhaugh Mill. Andrew (17th/18th C.) servant of Rev. Robert Cunningham. In 1714 he witnessed a baptism for John Ekron. Andrew (18th C.) recorded as ‘Town Post’ in 1738 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick. It is unclear what this meant, but one possibility is that he was a Burgh Officer (since the Town courier seems unlikely). Andrew (18th C.) probably son (or other close relative) of the earlier Andrew. He was also a mason in Hawick. He was listed as Andrew ‘senior’, mason, when he witnessed a baptism in 1745. Probably the same Andrew, described as ‘elder’, was paid for fixing part of the steeple of St. Mary’s in 1755. Probably the same Andrew was among the men paid in 1755 ‘for the herd’s house building’. In 1757 he witnessed a baptism for glazier William Turnbull and his wife Isobel Turnbull (one of whom was probably his relative). In 1759 he was ‘mason, senior’ when he witnessed a baptism for William Scoon. He may be the mason of that name who witnessed a baptism for William Burnet in 1766. Probably the later masons of the same name were his descendants. Andrew (18th C.) miller at Mangerton Mill. His wife Agnes Armstrong died in 1757, aged 39 years, and is buried at Ettleton. He was probably son of Adam, who was earlier miller of Margerton Mill. Andrew (18th C.) Hawick resident. He married Agnes Deans in 1763. Their children included: Andrew (b.1764); Margaret (b.1765); Andrew (again, b.1767); and Nichol (b.1769). The witnesses in 1764 were Andrew (perhaps his father) and Robert Thorburn. He may be the Andrew who witnessed a baptism for George Deans in 1777. Andrew (18th C.) farmer near Hawick. He is recorded in 1789 buying 600 hawthorn plants for a hedge. Andrew ‘Little Andrew’ (18th/19th C.) probably a descendant of the earlier masons of the same name. However, it is possible he is the same man recorded as mason in the 1740s and 1750s. His son Andrew was a mason who died in Hawick in 1810. He may be the Andrew who witnessed a baptism for mason William Philip in 1777. Andrew (d.1810) mason.
in Hawick, who was son of Andrew. His father had the nickname ‘Little Andrew’ on the death register. He could have been the mason Andrew recorded earlier in the 18th century, but there is likely to have been another generation there. Andrew (18th/19th C.) hosiery manufacturer based on the High Street, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He may be the stockmaker called Andrew whose young daughter died in Hawick in 1823. Andrew (1795/6–1827) from Jedburgh, he was Procurator Fiscal for Roxburghshire. He married Isabella Mein, who died in 1833, aged 35. Andrew (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit dealer on the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Anna (17th C.) served heir to her brother James of Wauchope in 1674. Anne (b.1812/3) sewing teacher in Minto Parish. In 1841 and 1851 she was living in Minto village with her mother Jane and brothers John and William, who were agricultural labourers. In 1861 she was ‘Amnie’, living with her brother John. Anthony of Knowe (18th C.) probably son of Thomas. He became a Burgess of Selkirk in 1712 when he was ‘younger of Knowe’. In 1737 he was the ruling elder of Jedburgh Presbytery at the 1737 General Assembly. He is recorded in a discharge of 1741 for rents paid to Thomas Thomson and in a bill dispute in 1743 with Walter Scott, late of Cockereugh. In 1741 he witnessed the baptism of Walter Scott, last of Crumhaugh. He paid the window tax in Minto Parish in 1748. Letters of 1748 exists that he wrote to William Elliot of Wolfelee (lawyer in Edinburgh) concerning rents at Huntlaw and in Selkirk. He was probably succeeded by Thomas, who was probably his son, making Thomas’s sister Isabella his daughter. Anthony of Tofts (18th/19th C.) recorded as owner of Tofts in 1788. These lands in Kirkton Parish were valued at £300, and still listed being owned by him in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1813. He is listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. It is unclear how he was related to earlier Turnbulls of Tofts. He could be the ‘Laird of Tofts’ whose brother Alexander died in Hawick in 1810. Archibald (15th C.) part of the ‘retour of inquest’ for Ker of Altonburn in 1438. It is unclear which branch of the Turnbulls he belonged to, but he is listed right before Lawrence, and John of Fulton is also mentioned. Archibald (15th/16th C.) son of the deceased John, he is recorded in 1499 along with William of Minto having remission from the Privy Council for the murder of ‘Johne of Rutherfurd’ and for fleeing to England. Archibald (15th/16th C.) brother of Mark, who was tenant in Overchester. They were listed among several Turnbulls who had remission in 1516 for assisting the Homes against the King. Archibald (15th/16th C.) witness to the sasine for Wolfelee in 1522. Hector is listed before him and possibly related. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th C.) son and heir of Wat of ‘Howatt’. This seems likely to be Howa in Hobkirk Parish. In 1553/4 he pledge for his father, as part of an assurance given by the Rutherfords and Turnbulls. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th C.) son of Thomas in Hartshaugh. In 1567 Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present him to answer changes of raiding into England. Archibald (16th C.) recorded in 1586 as proprietor of Unthank, in Hobkirk Parish. He was on a list of defaulters who refused to appear before the judiciary court. He may well have been related to the earlier Leo, and the later Robert and David. Archibald ‘Airchie’ of Langraw (16th C.) listed in 1567 among men who Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present to answer changes of raiding into England. He is also recorded in 1579 among a group of Turnbulls who were accused of stealing cattle from the Laird of ‘Pansoun’ in England. He was also recorded in 1579/80 in a list of men accused of taking part in raids into England. His caution was the Laird of Bedrule. He was one of those charged to repay ‘Johnne Selby of Twysill tuicheing the guidis taikin furth of Monylawis’. He could be the ‘Archi Trumble’ listed along with ‘Gib Lorreyne’ among men of Teviotdale in complaints of a raid into England in 1597. Archibald Oliver (1825–69) eldest son of Thomas Turnbull with his 2nd wife Mary Beattie. He was born at East middle and educated at Denholm and then from the age of 12 at Minto under Mr. Grant. He was said to be Minto School’s second best scholar, after ‘General Knowledge’ Moodie. He became a legal apprentice to George Potts of Hawick at the age of 16. 4 years later he went to Edinburgh University, where he trained as a lawyer. In 1850 he became a junior partner with Elliot’s in Jedburgh then set up on his own in 1859. He researched and wrote about the Turnbull clan, and also gave recollections of Denholm, which are related in Tancred’s ‘Rule-water’ book. He is buried in the place of internment of his ancestors at Bedrule. Bartholomew (15th/16th C.) tenant at Rawflat in 1502 when he (along with George of Hallrule) was surety for Adam, in Hornshole and Chamberlain Newton. Possibly the same ‘Bertholomeum Trumbull’ was on the 1508 panel for Adam Helpburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale. Beatrice (1908–86) wife of Sir Richard, born in Armadale and died in Jedburgh. She is buried in Bedrule churchyard. Beatrice (16th/17th C.) daughter of Walter of Templehall (also called ‘Wat o Wauchope’). Along with her sister Jean she inherited the lands of Templehall and Brewwlands (in Rulewater) from her uncle Andrew (son of David of Wauchope). In 1605 she was represented by her ‘tutor’ George Turnbull, suggesting she was still a minor at this point. In 1632 she claimed the other half of the lands that had belonged to her by then deceased sister. Charles (b.1736) son of Robert and Euphan Douglas, born in Cavers Parish. He lived in both Wilton and Hawick, working as a gardener. He married Elizabeth Scott and their children included: Euphan (b.1761); Robert and an unnamed child (b.1764); Elizabeth (b.1766); Janet (b.1768); and Helen (b.1770). The witnesses in 1768 were Robert Scott (probably a relative of his wife) and Alex Bunyan. His wife may be the ‘Lizzy’, spouse of Charles ‘now in America’, who died in Hawick in 1809. Charles (b.1805/10) from Denholm, he was a joiner in Hawick. He lived at about 20 Kirk Wynd in 1841 and 1851, moving later to Drumlanrig Place. His wife was Isabella and their children included Thomas, Euphemia, Jane, Charles, Mary, Jessie and Isabella. Charles ‘Charlie’ Pipe Major of the Scout Pipe Band for about 25 years. He served with the Royal Marines. Christian (17th C.) resident of Ashybank who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Christian (b.1805) daughter of Thomas and Mary Oliver. She is recorded along with Eleanor in Pigot’s 1837 directory as milliners at Minto. Philip in Whithope (15th C.) son of David of Wauchope. David (15th C.) son of the Laird of Whithope, probably the one in the Borthwick valley (where Philip, son of William was recorded 40 years earlier). In 1494/5 he was recorded as being ‘in Ernheuch’ (probably adjacent to Singlie in the Ettrick valley) when he had remission for stealing 14 ewes from Ninian Murray at Kershope and for stealing a white horse from Thomas Forest at Innerleithen; his surety was Walter Scott of Tushielaw. Philip in Whithope was recorded in 1502, and may have been his son or brother. He was probably related to the John of Ern Cleuch recorded in 1464/5. David (15th C.) recorded being ‘In hoscot[is]’ (i.e. Hoscote) in the 1494/5 Justice-aire. In the accounts for the court held in Selkirk he contributed 1 horse. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Davids. David (15th/16th C.) listed in the 1501 Exchequer Rolls, along with Robert, 2 Johns, Ninian and George. Their £40 fine was granted to Thomas, son and heir of George of Bedrule. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Davids. David of Bonchester (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when David Scott (called ‘Lady’) in Stirkshaws had a remission for several crimes, including being part of a raid with him on the farms at Minto Craigend. Other participants of the raid were Archibald Armstrong, Ninian Armstrong and ‘other Traitors of Levin and Liddalisdale’. They burned the farms, including 7 horses (presumably in a barn), as well as stealing 16 oxen.
Turnbull

and cows, 4 horses and sundry other goods. Perhaps the same David ‘in bonechester’ was mentioned in 1493 when George Turnbull (there and in Stouslie) was fined for his non-appearance. He was surely related to the John in Nether Boynchester, who is recorded in 1494/5. Probably the same David ‘in bonechestir’ was recorded in 1502 among many Turnbulls and others who were declared as fugitives for their part in the murder of Robert Oliver. The people who were supposed to enter him into the court were George of Hallrule and Robert Elliot in Redheugh, who were fined for his non-appearance. William in Bonchester was also recorded in the same 1502 case, as well as William’s son Lawrence, and were presumably related. David (15th/16th C.) listed as ‘in Toftis’ in 1502 when he was allowed to pay a fine for his crimes of assisting rebel Robert Turnbull, called ‘Murialle’ in the burning of Riddell and stealing of 240 sheep, 2 cows and goods. John Turnbull of Tofts served as surety, so was presumably his close relative. He may be the ‘Roberti Trumbull’ listed in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501, along with Adam and David, when they were fined, with George Douglas, Master of Angus, responsible for their pledges. David (15th/16th C.) tenant in Carlinpoo in 1502 when he and Philip Turnbull in Whithope had remission for bringing in the ‘Traitors of Levin’ to raid Fastheugh and Hanguishaw. David (15th/16th C.) listed as witness to a charter signed in Edinburgh in 1506. He may be the same as one of the other Davids. David of Wauchope (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when the Laird of Cranston was fined for failing to arrest him. He is also listed in 1504 among men who were given remission for involvement in the murder of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey; David, listed after him, may have been his son. He is also recorded in 1508 as ‘Dauid Trumbull de Wauchhop’ when he was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale. He may be the same Laird of Wauchope who was injured by an arrow at the skirmish at Sclaterford in 1513. He probably had a son of the same name, since David of Wauchope is recorded in 1530 and 1567. David (15th/16th C.) tenant of Hassendeanbank recorded on the 1516 list of Turnbulls and others who had remission for any part in assisting Alexander, Lord Home. His brother Andrew is also listed. David (15th/16th C.) tenant in Overchester, listed among many Turnbulls who had remission in 1516 for assisting the Homes against the King. Several other Turnbulls are also listed there, and so probably related, with Mark apparently the main tenant, and William and John his sons. David (15th/16th C.) tenant at Gatehousecote, listed in the 1516 pardon that many Turnbulls had for involvement with the traitorous Homes. Other tenants there were Andrew and his brother William, as well as Thomas and Patrick. David of Wauchope (16th C.) denounced as a rebel in 1530, along with Walter Turnbull of ‘Howay’, Philip Nesbit of that Ilk, Robert Haig of Bemersyde and others. He is recorded in 1549 when his brother Hector was granted 2 husband lands in Appletreecall by Robert Scott of Howpasley. In 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. In 1553/4 he was listed among the Rutherfords and others in an assurance not to harm the Kers. Thomas (possibly his brother or other close relative) was pledge for him in 1553/4. Also in 1553/4 he was on the panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather’s lands of Branxholme and Bucleuch. Around the late 1550s he was one of the men on the panel to resolve the conflict over the lands of Newbigging (in Hassendean) between the children of Gavin Elliot of Horsleyhill. He is probably the David of Wauchope among those who appeared before the Queen in 1561, promising to provide lists of thieves and then required by the Queen to appear later in Jedburgh to answer for their failure to apprehend fugitives; his brother Thomas also appeared. In 1564 he is probably the ‘Lard of Wauchop’ listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. He is probably the same David who was recorded in 1567 when his son Andrew was granted the lands of Templehall and Brewlands in Rulewater; another son, Robert, was a witness to the charter. He is probably the David of Wauchope whose brother Walter of Hobsburn is listed among men ordered to appear in 1567 to answer accusations of raiding into England; he was also ordered to appear himself and to present his ‘man and servand’ Adam Lyle, while another brother of his, Thomas of Harwoodtown, was also instructed to present a servant. He signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573 along with his son and heir Hector, both ‘with our handis at the pen’. His son and heir Hector is recorded in 1572/3, when he swore allegiance to the Crown. David (16th C.) tenant in the farm of Rouchope according to a rental roll of 1541. Perhaps the same David was also tenant in the neighbouring farms of Wauchopehead and Wauchopebank. It is possible he is the same as one of the other contemporary Davids, perhaps even David of Wauchope. David (d.1576/7) presented to the Parish of Hobkirk in 1550, replacing James Bennet as priest there. He was referred to as ‘Sir’ David of Minto in 1569, when he was among a number of Borders clerics who were called before the Regent and Privy Council for adhering to pre-Reformation sacraments. He was recorded as the deceased Sir David in about 1577 when John Douglas replaced him as Vicar of Hobkirk. His designation ‘in Minto’ when he was called before the Privy Council suggests that he was from the family of Turnbuls of Minto (rather than being minister at Minto). David (16th C.) recorded being ‘called David of Crawden’ in 1583/4 when he was listed among some Borderers denounced for failing to appear before the Privy Council. David (16th C.) tenant in Belses. He was listed along with his brother George among a group of Turnbuls accused of performing a raid into England in 1579. He was also leader of a group of Turnbuls who attacked the farm of Rawflat in 1581, killing Walter of Rawflat there. The others in the group were his brothers George, John and Adam, as well as Thomas of Billerwell; the complaint was made again by the widow of Walter of Rawflat in 1583. George was in 1603 found guilty of several related crimes. This was all presumably part of some family feud. David (16th C.) listed among the Turnbuls who were accused of harassing the widow and children of the murdered Walter Turnbull of Rawflat in 1581. He is transcribed as being ‘of the Cronyhill’, which was probably Troneyhill (and hence he may have been son of Thomas of Troneyhill). Failing to appear before the Privy Council, he was denounced as a rebel in 1583 (mis-transcribed as ‘Andro Turnebill in Cronyhill’ in part of the citation). His son Thomas was listed in 1610 amongst Turnbuls who were to be apprehended for not finding caution following being found guilty of the murder of Thomas Ker of Crailinghall and 6 Grahamslaw brothers. David of Wauchope (d.1598) son and heir of Hector of Wauchope. He married Margaret, daughter of James Gledstains of Cocklaw in 1593 (not 1567 as recorded in Tancred’s ‘Rulewater’). He may be the unnamed Turnbull of Wauchope who was on the 1584/5 list of Borderers summoned to appear before the Privy Council in order to keep peace on the Border. He and his bride were infested in the lands of Langhaugh in Rulewater. He appears to have owned the lands of Wauchope still in 1604 when his son Andrew’s nieces inherited Templehall and Brewlands to the west of Wauchope. He was probably the same David of Wauchope who was slaughtered near his house in 1598, with his neighbour James Lorraine of Appotside being one of those implicated, along with Gilbert and Hector, uncles of Hector Lorraine of Harwood. David (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘in Fowlton’ in a letter of 1602 listing the tenants of the lands of Fulton in Bedrule Parish. Other tenants of Fulton farm were Pate Clerk, Walter Turnbull, David Turnbull (son of Adam), Willie Turnbull (the ‘Guidman’) and Thomas Turnbull. David (16th/17th C.) tenant in Mackside. In 1611 his son ‘Hob’ was convicted and executed in Jedburgh. David (16th/17th C.) brother of Robert, who was tenant in Denesyle. In 1611 his brother acted as cautioner for his appearance in court in Jedburgh. David (16th/17th C.) tenant in Lustruther. In 1622 he was found guilty of perjury, apparently having been bribed by Andrew in Belses to lie in the case of theft he brought against William and Walter Middlemas. He was sentenced to have his ‘toung pearcet with ane hett boitkyen; and thaireftir Banischet this realeme’. David (17th C.) tenant of Unthank in Hobkirk Parish, along with Robert, recorded in 1643. They were probably related to the earlier Archibald. David (17th C.) recorded in 1643 along with Adam as owner of land in Abbotrule valued at £30. This was probably part of Bonchester Townhead, where a separate Adam, as well as William, also lived. David ‘Millionaire Turnbull’ (18th/19th C.) younger son of Thomas of Fenwick and Brieryards. He left for India in 1799 as part of the medical service, became an indigo planter there and also speculated in cotton. In 1818 he was a civil assistant surgeon at Mirzapore, but retired some time after that. His nickname came from the large fortune he made in India as an indigo planter and cotton speculator. His son was William, who became Deputy Lieutenant for Selkirkshire and inherited Fenwick from his cousin. He died in India, during his father’s lifetime (probably 1820s). David of Fenwick and Brieryards (b.1837) son of William. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1875. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1878. He was involved with the Upper Teviotdale Fisheries Association in the 1880s. He succeeded to all of the family lands in 1891 (except Palace, which had been sold). He had the house at Brieryards renovated. However, he later sold all his property and left the country. In 1875 he married Christian, daughter of Hawick lawyer George Oliver. They had 1 daughter and 6 sons: William, who worked in the nitrate business in Chile and married Marie Salmon; David Oliver, a vet in Zomba, Nyasaland, who married Muriel MacKinnon; Margaret Lindsay, who married Hal Worke and had a son who went to British Columbia; George Archibald, who worked for the Cape Civil Service and was killed in the Boer War; Harry, who married Flossie Salmon; John MacLeod MacKinnon, who worked for the South African Forestry Service and wrote for Cornhill magazine; and James, who married Violet MacKinnon and died in East South Africa in WWI.

Ebenezer (19th C.) recorded in 1837 as apprentice to James Wilson, writer in Hawick. He could be the Ebenezer whose infant daughter’s death was recorded in Hawick in 1822. Edward (15th C.) resident of Bedrule. In 1493 he had remission for stealing a cow from Robert Davidson in Newton, with the Laird of Bedrule acting as surety. Eleanor (1785–1853) daughter of William of Burnfoot. She lived at 5 Slitrig Bank with her younger sister Jane. In 1851 she was described as an ‘Annuitant’, showing that she had been set up with an allowance from her father. Elizabeth (15th/16th C.) received sasine of the lands of Lanton in Roxburghshire in 1506. This was along with Margaret, who was probably her sister. Elizabeth (15th/16th C.) had a sasine for Gargunnock and other lands in Stirlingshier, along with Janet (perhaps her sister). Elizabeth nee Elliot (16th/17th C.) daughter of Gilbert Elliott of Stobs, she married John Turnbull of Minto. Her husband died in 1641 while on army service in Newcastle, and her son John succeeded while still a minor. She and her brother-in-law Rev. William of Makerstoun appear to have acted as guardians for the young Laird of Minto; in 1643 she was listed along with her son and Rev. William as owner of the Minto estate. Other children of hers included William and Robert, who became merchants’ apprentices in Edinburgh in 1650 and 1651, respectively, and possibly Alison, who married William Douglas of Timpendean in 1655. Elizabeth (d.1698) resident of Minto Parish, possibly related to the Turnbells of Minto or of Knowe, who are buried there. Her small headstone marked ‘Besey Turnbull’ is still in the old graveyard, but her husband’s name is illegible. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) cattor at Horsleyhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (b.c.1770) listed as a flesher in Denholm on Pigot’s 1837 directory. She was living on Main Street in 1841, with surname Leyden, with Robert Laidlaw (probably her grandson) being a flesher. Elizabeth nee Wilson (1753–1828) eldest daughter of Walter Wilson, ‘Haunless Wat’.

She married draper George Turnbull and worked in the draper’s shop at 14 High Street. She is said to have had 15 children, 10 of whom survived infancy. Several of her children died of consumption, and it is said that ‘when the last one was reported to her as being about to die, she would not even go to visit the sick one, so much had her motherly instincts been blunted by the constant visit of death to her children’. She was known in later life as ‘Auld Betty Turnbull’. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (19th C.) daughter of inn-keeper John. She took over as Bonchester post-mistress from her brother John and also ran the public house at Bridgend after her father died in 1838. However she soon afterwards moved to another public house in Moffat. Elliot (b.1794/5–1857) labourer living at Whisgills Edge in Castleton Parish in 1841. By 1851 he was living near Canonbie and farming 3 acres. He may be the man of that name listed at ‘Sorbies’ in 1821 among the subscribers to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’), who died in 1873, aged 62. Their children included: Betty; Janet; Elspeth; Robert; Agnes (1847/8–1900), who died at Newcastle; and Mary (1851/2–97), who died at Southfield. He died at Gillfoot and his wife in Newcastle. The family are buried at Ettleton. Elspeth (17th C.) servant to Bailie Scott of Ormiston. In 1683 she was struck by stones thrown across the Teviot by a group of men, wounding her, when she and Isabel Hardie (daughter to cooper Robert Hardie) were watching linen clothing that was being bleached there. Elspeth (17th C.) tenant in Flatt in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Elspeth (19th C.) listed as a straw hat maker in Newcastle in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 she was living in the house of Rev. John Black.

Esther (b.1809) daughter of Thomas and Mary Oliver. She is recorded along with Christian in Pigot’s 1837 directory as milliners and dressmakers on the High Street. She and her sister Christian were living with their mother Mary on Buccleuch Street in 1841. In 1851 she was a ‘Woollen Seamstress & Annuitant’ living on Allars Crescent, in a separate household to her older sister.

Fergus (15th/16th C.) tenant of Hillhouse, listed after James, also there, in the 1516 pardon for Turnbells who might have assisted the Homes in actions against the King. This is not a common local name. Francis (b.1700/1) Burgh Officer of Hawick. He gave evidence during proceedings for the Division of the Common in 1767, when he was described as being married. He was also a Burgess, on which account his evidence was objected to by the Duke of Buccleuch’s lawyers. He became a Burgh Officer in 1733, and remained until at least 1767. He described how he and fellow Officer John Stewart once managed to drive cattle belonging to neighbouring tenants (which were being pastured on the Common, against the orders of the Magistrates) to the West Port; this was probably around 1743. In 1753 he was one of the 2 Burgh Officers who were granted a yearly salary of 10 shillings ‘on account of their age and infirmity’. He may be the Francis, son of William, born in Hawick in 1703. He could be the Francis married to Elizabeth Gibson, whose children baptised in Hawick included: Isobel (b.1732); Isobel (again, b.1739); James (b.1740); and Gideon (b.1743). Francis (18th/19th C.) mason at Yethouse. He was among the subscribers to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. At Yethouse in 1841 were Janet Brydon (aged about 70) and mason Francis (aged about 40), who were probably his widow and son. Francis (b.1797/8) stone mason at Yethouse. His mother was probably Elizabeth Brydon, who was there in 1841. It seems likely that his father was Francis, the mason at Yethouse recorded in 1821. He was still at Yethouse in 1851, but by 1861 his name appears as Francis Armstrong. Francis ‘Frank’ (19th C.) shepherd at a farm near Saughtree. He was a collector of local antiquities, including coins, flints, an iron sword, which were examined by the Berwickshire Naturalists’ Club when they visited in 1889. Gavin (16th C.) listed along with Adam in 1534 when they were entered into ward in Blackness Castle, with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme being discharged of the bond he had made to the King for their good behaviour. It seems likely they were either father and son or brothers, but it is not clear where they were from exactly. Gavin (16th C.) recorded as ‘Gawen Trumble of the Wowley’ among men complained about by the English Warden for a raid into England in 1587. The other men named included James of Stonedge as well as Oliver of Westerhouses. He presumably lived at Wolfelee in Rulewater. Gavin (16th C.) recorded as ‘called of Bulwerwell’ when he witnessed a marriage contract between Gledstains of Cocklaw and Turnbull of Wauchope in 1593. The designation suggests that he no longer resided at Billerwell. He must have been related to the slightly earlier and late Adams. He may be the same ‘Gawin Trumbill in Bullerwull’ listed in a court case of 1605. Gavin in Howa (16th/17th C.) brother of Robert in Hallrule and Hector in Stanedge, as well as uncle of Hector of Barnhills. He is recorded in 1604, along with his nephews Hector and George, as well as Hector of Stanedge, being tried for the murder of 6 sons of John Grahamslaw of Little Newton. In 1606 he is recorded as ‘Gavin Turnbull in Howe’, brother of Hector in Stanedge and the deceased Robert in Hallrule, when there was a summons for them to prosecute the sons of Harry Grahamslaw who had been accused of the murder of Robert in Hallrule. There was clearly an ongoing feud between the 2 families. He is probably the ‘Gawen’, brother of William of Barnhills, who is listed among the Borderers summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1584/5. Gavin (16th/17th C.) son of the Laird of Bedrule. He is listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners’ court in Jedburgh in 1605. Gavin (17th C.) recorded in 1643 as owner of lands in ‘...side’ in Abbotrule Parish. This was probably Mackside, with his land being valued at £24. He may have been related to the Laird of Tofts, who held the bulk of the property in 1643 as well as £102 worth of land in Minto. Gavin of Clarilaw (17th C.) recorded in a record of 1666 relating to Hassendean Parish. He was also listed in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls for Hassendean Parish, paying tax on £273. He was presumably related to the earlier Hector of Clarilaw. He could be the same Gavin who had a charter for ‘Kerswell’ in Hassendean from the Commendator of Melrose in about 1621. Gavin (18th C.) clothier in Hawick. He was listed along with Thomas as witness to a baptism for weaver John Smith in 1764. It seems likely he was either father or brother of Thomas (who was a clothier and dyer, and father of poet Gavin). He may be the Gavin who witnessed a baptism for John Cavers in Wilton in 1769. He and Thomas were witnesses to a baptism for William Thomline (who may have been their employer at Roughheugh Mill) in 1770. It is possible that he was the Gavin, son of William, born in Kirkton Parish in 1731 (but this would be too late if he was indeed the father of Thomas). Gavin (d.c.1800) school friend of John Leyden’s. He was the first of his cohort to go off abroad, travelling to India, but dying soon after he arrived. He is mentioned in John Leyden’s poem ‘To Mr. James Purvis’ – ‘The first that tried the eastern sea was Gavin, gentle youth, was he! His yellow locks fam’d by the breeze, Gleam’d golden on the orient seas; But never shall his steps be seen Bounding again on Denholm’s pleasant green’ [JL]. It is possible that he is the Dr. Gavin who was listed at Wiltonhall (in Wilton Parish) in the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Gavin (1764–1816) born in Hawick, son of ‘Tammy Trumble’ and Beatrice Ruecastle. He moved from Hawick when he was about 10, with his father seeking work in factories elsewhere, including Galashiels and being a dyer in a factory in Kilmarnock. Although his parents were once fairly well-off, their circumstances changed and he was forced to abandon his education and become an apprentice in a carpet factory (Gregory & Thomson) in Kilmarnock; he writes of himself that he was ‘deprived early in life, by unforeseen misfortunes, of the means of pursuing that liberal plan of education he once had a prospect of’. He was said to be small in stature and of a dark complexion. It is also said that he spent more time thinking about poetry than weaving and as a result lived in poverty in a small garret, where ‘the poverty of Burns, of which there has been much talk in the world, was opulence compared to it’! In Kilmarnock he became a friend of Robert Burns (whose poetry style he imitated, and they both had many of the same influences). It has been suggested that he may have told Burns the story of the giant pin of the haggis served at Haggishaa, which inspired the lines in ‘Address to a Haggis’. He moved with his family to Glasgow, where he worked as a labourer, and it was there that his first volume of verse was published. He later became an actor with George Sutherland’s Company in Dumfries and wrote at least one short play, ‘The Recruit’. In Dumfries he became reacquainted with Burns. However, the acting company in Dumfries broke up (at least in part because of it’s revolutionary politics, which made it unpopular with the authorities). He married an actress (who appeared with him in ‘The Recruit’ in 1794) and in 1795 emigrated to America, settling in Charleston, South Carolina. There he joined a theatre company and contributed poems to the local newspapers. He lived in modest addresses in downtown Charleston and taught part time. In 1813 he became an American citizen. He had a brother, Thomas, who also emigrated to America, and has surviving relatives. His publications are ‘Poetical Essays’ (1788) and ‘Poems, by Gavin Turnbull, Comedian’ (1794). Many of his verses are elegies and pastorals, in the tradition of the late 18th century, with one known as ‘Silvanus, or The Genius of Tiviot’ and another ode to the Tweed (as well as several to Irvine Water); however, the most interesting are in Scots dialect and in a similar style to Burns’ best-known poetry. Note that the suggested years of his birth are given in some works as being as early as 1758 and as late as 1770, while the year of his death is sometimes suggested to have been much earlier than it was; in fact his death is recorded in a Charleston newspaper in 1816, where he is described as ‘late Comedian, whose talents as a performer on the stage, will long be remembered by many of the inhabitants of this city’. Shortly afterwards a notice appeared in a South Carolina newspaper asking for subscriptions to a volume of poems to support his widow (however, no such volume ever appeared). The project ‘The Collected Poems of Gavin Turnbull Online’ was completed in 2015. He is buried in the cemetery of the First Presbyterian Scots Church in Charleston. Gavin (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His wife was Mary Blake and their son Gavin was born in 1800. Gavin (1800–54) son of Adam, tenant of Hassendeanbank, brother of Adam Ogilvie and John Robinson. He was partly educated at Minto Parish school under William Grant. He became a surgeon with the East India Company. He may married Isabella Jane Fenwick in 1826 and they had 5 children. He secondly married Mary MacDougall Stuart in 1841. He died on Jersey. Rev. Gavin (1800–32) born at Brieryhill, he became minister of Teviothead ‘chapel-of-ease’ from 1821, and probably remained there until his death. He was certainly still preacher there in 1831. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He published ‘A Sermon on Meekness’ in Hawick in 1832. He was probably son of John, who was tenant farmer at Brieryhill in Wilton Parish. George of Bedrule (15th C.) witnessed a charter for Stephen Scott of Castlelaw in 1448. He may have been son of John of Bedrule, who was recorded in 1432. In 1461 he was witness to a Sasine for lands near Branxholme, where he is recorded as ‘of Bethroul’; William of Minto was also a witness, so he may have been a close relative. He may be the George who (along with Hector, John and William of Minto) was on the 1464/5 panel to rule on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers. He was also witness to a Sasine of Denholm Mains involving the Cranstons in 1465/6. Probably the same George ‘of Bethoroull’ witnessed a Sasine of 1484/5 for Walter Scott of Branxholme for lands in Mangerton. He may be the George who witnessed a Sasine for Wolfelee in 1479. He may be the George ‘de Bethroul’ who had remission in 1493 (along with David Waugh, also from Bedrule, and weaver William White), their crimes being stealing cattle from Pringle in Pilmuir, associating with John of Gatehousecote, communing with the ‘traitors of Leven’ and accompanying the former Duke of Albany; his surety was Walter Ker of Cessford, while he himself served as surety for the other 2 men. He may be the Laird of Bedrule who was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1494/5. ‘Thomas turnbule Junior dominus de bethroul’ served as surety for several Turnbulls in 1494/5; this suggests that he was still alive, but perhaps old and infirm, so that his son Thomas was effectively acting as chief of the Turnbulls at that time. He was probably succeeded by his son Thomas, mentioned as his heir apparent in 1501 and already mentioned several times in the previous decade. Thomas had a brother William, who was thus also his son. George (15th C.) infefted by Walter Turnbull (probably Baron of Hassendeane) in the lands of Hassendeanebank in 1493. He may have been a relative of Walter. George (15th C.) recorded being in Bonchester and also ‘in stowisle’ (i.e. Stouslie) at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh. He served as surety for David in Bonchester, and was also surety for himself, being fined for non-appearance of the pair. George (15th C.) recorded at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh as son of Walter in Bonchester. The entry is after that for George in Bonchester and Stouslie, and hence this is a different man. He failed to appear and his surety, Andrew Turnbull (in the same place) was accordingly fined. He was surely related to Walter of Stouslie, who is recorded in 1494/5. George (15th C.) recorded in the Justice-aire of 1493 along with 4 others. Their crime was concealing a trove of coins that had been found in Minto Kirk, but by rights were Crown property. The Laird of Bedrule served as surety for him and for John Sinclair. Perhaps the same George in Minto had remission in 1493 (in the very next case) for crimes before the date of his previous remission. George of Hallrule (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘of Haw of Roul’ when he was witness to a charter of 1484/5, along with George of Bedrule and others. He was appointed as Captain of Hermitage by Patrick Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell, probably around 1492. In 1493 he was ‘de aula de roule’ when he was surety for Archibald Plenderleith in Bedrule, as well as Simon in Clarilaw. Also in 1493 he had remission for a series of crimes: stealing sheep from Nettleflat on Gala Water; separately stealing a horse and tools from Nettleflat; plundering from Thomas Rutherford at Bonjedward; and involvement in the slaughter of Archibald Rutherford. His surety was Sir Robert Ker. In 1494/5 he and Patrick Earl of Bothwell (Lord of Liddesdale) were fined £10 Scots for the non-appearance of William Elliot and each of 85 other Borderers; he was there recorded as Captain of Hermitage. Also in 1494/5 he was also surety for Thomas Turnbull in Gatehousecote. He is probably the George ‘in the Hermitage’ who pledged good behaviour to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1498, along with a large number of men from Liddesdale and elsewhere. Probably the same George of ‘Hawroull’ was listed in 1502 among about 20 Turnbulls and others who were fined for failing to appear to answer for the murder of Robert Oliver; he was supposed to enter into the court John, Andrew and William in Gatehousecote, William in Bonchester and his son Lawrence, David in Bonchester, and David, Andrew and Hugh Shiel. Also in 1502 he was surety (along with Bartholomew in Rawflat) for Adam, tenant in Hornshole and Chamberlain Newton, who had brought Englishman Sir John Musgrave to burn and rob Selkirk. That year he was also surety (along with Robert Scott in Stirches) for Walter Turnbull in Branc-holme, as well as for Hector Shiel. In 1508 he was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale. All of these records together show that he was a prominent man in Rulewater at the time. George (15th/16th C.) listed among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He was listed as ‘georgii turnbule de hawik’ and explicitly listed with along with David, who was probably a close relative. He presumably lived or came from Hawick. George (15th/16th C.) listed in the 1501 Exchequer Rolls, along with Robert, 2 Johns, Ninian and David. Their £40 fine was granted to Thomas, son and heir of George of Bedrule. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Georges. George (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as ‘in Wyndis’ (probably Weens in Rulewater) when along with about 20 Turnbulls and others he failed to appear to answer for the murder of Robert Oliver. Walter Scott in Newhall Burnhead and Thomas Brown in Cavers were called to enter him, with his surety being the Sheriff of Roxburgh. Failing to appear, he was put to the horn and forfeited his goods. George (15th/16th C.) tenant in Bedrule, recorded in the 1516 remissiopn for Turnbulls and others who may have given assistance to Alexander, Lord Home. It is possible that he was the Laird of Bedrule, but he is clearly listed as being ‘in Bethroule’. He may be the same George ‘in Bedrule’ mentioned in 1523.

George of Bedrule (d.bef. 1528) possibly son of Thomas of Bedrule, who is recorded in 1502. He is not mentioned on the 1516 remission for a large number of Turnbulls, suggesting perhaps that he was a minor, or elsewhere at the time (William of Minto is named first and is clearly the head of the family at that time). He was on an inquest in Jedburgh in 1523, along with George ‘in Bedrule’ (therefore possibly related). He may have been the Laird who was present at the signing of the bond among Border Lairds to help the Warden (Earl of Angus) in 1524/5. It is also possible that he was the George, son of Thomas, who was wounded by William Scott, son of Robert Scott in Allanhaugh. It is unclear exactly when this happened, but Scott had remission in 1535. He married Janet, daughter of Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1519 and was succeeded by his son Thomas. In 1528 Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme had a gift from King James V of the ‘ward, relief and non-entry’ of his lands, as well as the marriage of his heir, Thomas (then still a minor). He must have had other children, since Sir Walter Scott also had rights to the marriage of ‘ony vther aire or airis male, or female, of the said vmquhile George’. In 1578/9 there is a record of John, ‘broder sone to the said Sir Thomas’, who must have been his grandson (although the son’s name is unknown). Sir Walter Scott married his widow in 1530/1. George (15th/16th C.) recorded as being at Minto and listed right after William of Minto among a large number of Turnbulls pardoned in 1516 for assisting Alexander, Lord Home. He may be the same as one of the other Turnbulls. George (15th/16th C.) listed as tenant of Fulton in 1516, along with Adam and Andrew (hence possibly his brothers). They were among Turnbulls to receive remission for their part in assisting Alexander, Lord Home. He may be same as George ‘in Foultoum’ who was part of an inquest into the ownership of the lands of Longnewton held in Jedburgh in 1533. George (16th C.) son and heir of Thomas ‘in Rawflat’. He is described in 1540 in a court case involving a dispute between his father Thomas and William Scott, tenant of Hassendean. Part of the dispute is over a 1536 marriage contract he had with William Scott’s eldest daughter and heir, Elizabeth. George (16th C.) listed as ‘in Bullorwell’ (i.e. Billerwell) when part of a panel deciding on disputed lands, held in Jedburgh in 1533. In 1541 he is recorded as tenant of half the lands of Hyndlee in Jedforest. George of Standhill (16th C.) listed as pledge for the Laird of Minto in 1553/4. This was in the assurance given to keep peace with the Rutherfords and others. He and George ‘of the Tour’ were to remain in ward in Edinburgh, as pledges for Sir Thomas of Bedrule, Hector, Tutor of Minto and David of Wauchope. George (16th C.) farmer at Town-o-Rule. His yard there is listed among the lands disputed by the Barons of Feu-Rule in 1562. He may be related to the earlier Andrew and Thomas who are recorded as tenants there. George of Barnhills (16th C.) recorded in 1562 when he was ordered to be warded in Dunbar Castle. George Douglas, younger of Bonjedward was his surety. He was also listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls of Barnhills. George of Chamberlain Newton and Woollee (16th C.) Burgess of Jedburgh, He was recorded as Laird of Chamberlain Newton in 1563 when he witnessed a notorial instrument between Robert Michelson and David Home of Wedderburn regarding the lands of Blackhaugh (near Clovenfords). There were Turnbulls at Chamberlain Newton earlier, but it is seems that this George no longer lived in the Hawick area, and hence it is unclear how he was related to other local Turnbulls. He may be the George who witnessed a charter in 1549, when Robert Scott of Howpasey granted Appletreehall to Hector, brother of David Turnbull of Wauchope. In 1567 he was ‘of Wowlie’ when he tried to eject David Elliot as tenant in his 6 merk land of Chamberlain Newton. In 1572 he sold half of Chamberlain Newton to Gavin Elliott of Bailielee (and later Stobs) and his wife Jean Scott; they complained to the Privy Council that David Elliott's widow Margaret Turnbull (who is not stated to be a relative, but that is unclear), who possessed the other half of Chamberlain Newton, encouraged her sons Walter and John Scott to attack Gavin Elliott’s servant there. George (16th C.) tenant in Catlee. In 1567 Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present him to answer changes of raiding into England. George ‘Geordie’ (16th C.) tenant of Gavin of Elliot of Falmash in 1569. Elliot acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. He was probably related to Andrew, who was listed right after him. George of Hassendeanbank (16th C.) listed among among men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm, although they were acquitted because Kerr had reset the fugitive Kerr of Ferniehirst. He was listed as ‘of Hassinbank’. George (16th C.) recorded as Reader at Bedrule in 1579 and 1580. There could be some confusion with John, who was Reader just before this. George (16th C.) recorded as ‘in Hallewull’ in 1557 when there was a complaint to the Regent about ‘molestations’ by him and Thomas of Bedrule. This related to the lands of Kirklands, Hallrule and Whinnie owned by Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst, suggesting that there was an ongoing land dispute. He was ‘of Hallroule’ in 1561 when listed among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. He was probably ‘The Guidman of Hallrule’ listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1571 he appeared before the Privy Council and was instructed ‘to abide in Leith’. In 1576 he was recorded among a group of Turnbulls and others (from Barnhills, Billerwell, Belses and Chesters) who had a bond with another group of Turnbulls (from Minto, Beuwlie, Kames and Troneyhill) and others, not to harm each other. Probably the same man was ‘in Halroule’ in 1581 when he and others were denounced as rebels for refusing to obey the charge to restore Sir Thomas Ferniehirst to the living of Bedrule parish. Also in 1581 he was listed among 10 men implicated in the murder of Walter, son of Wat Turnbull of Beuwlie. In 1581/2 there was a charge to remove him and others from their lands for not complying. And in 1583/4 Sir Thomas Kerr had an ‘escheat’ to take his goods, along with those of John and Walter, farmers at ‘Roull’ and Hobbsburn, respectively, who may have been close relations. He may be the George of Hallrule named in 1587 as one of the 13 main Lairds of the Middle March who were charged to keep thieves in check. He may be the ‘Turnble of Hallroule’ listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ of about 1590, and is the George ‘of Halleuell’ listed among Border Lairds by Monipennie in 1597. The George of later decades may still have been him, but is more likely his son. George (16th C.) brother of James ‘of the Toure’. Along with his brother he was listed in 1579/80 among men accused of raiding into England. He is probably the ‘George Trumbill in Tour’ who signed the 1560 bond (‘at the pen led by the notar’) to settle the feud between the Rutherfords and the Kers. He may be the George ‘of the Toure’ who signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’ in 1551 and who was one of the pledges for the Laird of Bedrule in 1553/4; he and George of Standhill were to remain in ward in Edinburgh. He is probably the George ‘of the Tour’ listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. George (16th C.) Laird of Billerwell in 1589, presumably a descendant of the earlier George and Adam. He was among men complained about by the English Warden in 1590 for a raid into England 3 years earlier; it was claimed that 200 men raided Doortrees and Stobs, taking 80 cows, 240 sheep, 10 horses, goods and 6 prisoners. The later Adam of Billerwell (whose son and heir was also George) may have been his son. If so he also had a son Andrew. He is probably also the ‘Turnble of Bullerwall’ listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ of about 1590. He is probably the Laird in 1598 who was among some Scottish prisoners taken from a large group who went into England to go hunting; he was released soon afterwards. He may be the ‘goodman of Bullerwell’ who complained in 1601 about Englishmen stealing his cattle, sheep and horses. George of the Tofts (16th C.) listed among landed men of the Borders in the ‘Roll of the Clans’ of about 1590. He is probably the George ‘of the Tofts’ who was ordered to appear personally in 1567 to answer accusations about raiding into England. George ‘the Creelman’ (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘callit the creelman in Crocecleucht’ (i.e. ‘Crossecleuch’) in a letter of 1602 listing the tenants of the lands of Fulton. George (16th/17th C.) farmer at Crosscleuch, recorded in 1602 (and separate from George ‘the Creelman’). He was son of the deceased John. George (d.1601) described as ‘in Phillophauch’ in 1601, when his son John was served heir to his 5-merk land in Philiphaugh, called ‘Bairborisland’. He may have been son of John, who inherited these lands from his mother in 1558. George of Belses (d.1603) brother of David in Belses, with other brothers being John and Adam. He was listed among a group of Turnbulls (led by sons of the Laird of Bedrule) who were accused in 1579 of raiding the lands of ‘Pansoun’ in England, stealing cattle and taking the Laird there prisoner; his brother David was also listed. The brothers were also recorded in 1581 when accused of attacking the farm at Rawflat and killing Walter of Rawflat. He was denounced in 1583/4 for failing to appear before the Privy Council; he was listed along with Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and others. He was tried in 1603 for a long string of crimes, including: murdering John Hamilton of Cumnock; murdering William, son of Walter Turnbull of Rawflat; capturing and torturing Walter Turnbull’s servant Adam Turnbull (it is said that he had him hung by the feet and shoulders for 13 days, causing his feet to rot off; illegally carrying guns; shooting Walter Turnbull, younger of Rawflat; stealing 4 cows from John Donaldson in Melrose; stealing 6 cows, 20 sheep, 2 horses and goods from David Riddell in St. Boswells; stealing 16 cows from the Laird of Bemersyde; stealing 20 sheep from the Lady of Newton; stealing 5 sheep from George Davidson in Belses; stealing a horse from George Wilson in Langnewton; and being ‘a común briggane and notorious cowmone thief’. He claimed to have killed William Turnbull in self defence (suggesting some intra-family feud). He also appears to have killed the elder Walter of Rawflat, after he was pronounced a rebel for refusing to leave the lands of Rawflat and part of Belses in 1581. He was acquitted of most of the offences, but nevertheless convicted of illegally carrying fire-arms and had his right hand cut off at the Market Cross of Edinburgh. Later the same year he appeared on charges of ‘the filthie cryme of Incest and Adulterie’ with his brother Jock’s wife Marion. At the same time he was accused of stealing a horse from Walter Turnbull of Rawflat in 1577, stealing 20 cows from Rawflat in 1579, stealing 4 horses from 4 millers in Jedburgh about 1600 and stealing a horse from the younger Walter of Rawflat. This time he was convicted of all charges, and hanged in Edinburgh, with all his lands and goods confiscated. He is probably the ‘Turnble of Belses’ listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ of about 1500. He is surely related to the slightly later George of Belses, possibly his son, as well as the Hector of Belses recorded in 1604. George of Hallrule (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1597 when his daughter Isobel had a marriage contract with John, eldest son of Hector Turnbull of Barnhills. In 1603, as part of the marriage contract, he rented the half lands of Hallrule to the Turnbulls of Barnhills. George (16th/17th C.) tenant of the lands of Fulton, recorded in a 1602 letter, which lists 2 other George Turnbulls! He is distinguished with the appellation ‘callit of Crawden’. He was probably related to ‘David of Crawden’ recorded in 1583/4. George (16th/17th C.) brother of Hector of Barnhills. In 1604 he was denounced as a rebel (along with his brother Hector, uncle Gavin and also Hector of Stanedge) for failing to appear on the charge of murdering 6 sons of John Grahamslaw of Little Newton. He could be the George ‘called of Howden’ who was named by the Privy Council when a commission was appointed to apprehend him and 7 other Turnbulls (plus 2 Davidsions), for not finding caution following being found guilty of the murder of Thomas Ker of Crailinghall and 6 Grahamslaw brothers. George (16th/17th C.) described as being ‘in Howa’ in 1606 when he was one of the Turnbull clan accused of laying waste to Appotside and Harwood in 1598–1605. The action against him was not pursued, although the Turnbulls of Wauchope were tried and Thomas Turnbull convicted. He was probably the George in ‘Howay’, brother of Hector of Barnhill, who resigned a tenement of land off the Kirkwyn of Hawick in 1610. George (16th/17th C.) son of Adam of Billerwell. He witnessed a sasine in 1612 and was part of a bond with his father in 1619, with John Haliburton of Mertoun. George (d.c.1637) 2nd son of Hector of Wauchope. In 1605 he was ‘tutor’ to his relatives Jean and Beatrīx Turnbull, daughters of Walter of Wauchope. He is also mentioned as 2nd son of Hector in a court case of 1605, where a separate George is also listed in Wauchope. In 1606 he was one of the men charged with stealing from and burning Appotside and Harwood, killing 3 men and cutting down Appotside woods in the period 1598–1605. Although he was tried (and probably involved), he was acquitted, with his older brother Thomas being the only one convicted. He is recorded in a ‘contract of wadset’ with Sir Andrew Kerr of Oxnam in 1612. He held the lands of Templehall (in the Rule valley) in exchange for advancing money to Sir Andrew. He must have gained a portion of the lands, since in 1627 he granted them to Sir James Douglas of Mordington. In 1632 Templehall and Brewlands are described as ‘possessed by George Turnbull of Wauchope and his tenants’, but the feu of the lands were held by Jean Turnbull, niece and heir of Andrew, son of David of Wauchope (hence presumably a distant cousin). However, his son James renounced all rights to the lands to William Earl of Lothian in 1655. He may have been the George describe as ‘there’ in relation to Templehall in a sasine of 1604. In 1637 he was described as ‘called of Wauchope’ when the guardianship of his son James was given to Hector in Clarlaw, as his closest male relative; it seems likely that this Hector was his cousin (since the record would have stated if they were brothers). George (16th/17th C.) tenant at Wauchope, recorded in a court case of 1605 in which John Elliot of Copshaw and others were accused of stealing livestock from Wauchope. He is separate from the 2nd son of Hector of Wauchope, who is also listed there, but could be related to the Adam, also tenant of Wauchope. George (16th/17th C.) son of James of West Lees. He was listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners’ court in Jedburgh in 1605. George (16th/17th C.) son of Walter of Bedrule. In 1618 he was witness to a bond between his father and George Rutherford, younger in Abbotrule. George (16th/17th C.) acted as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for ‘the Forest’ in the period 1617–21. George of Belses (16th/17th C.) possibly son of the earlier George of Belses, who was hanged in 1603. Andrew Ker of Roxburgh had a bond for him in 1622. He is later described in the Commissioners’ Court as ‘Geordie in Belsches’, when he is accused of having stolen 11 sheep from the lands of ‘Raffalt’ (e.e. Rawflat) belonging to the Davidsons, in about 1612. He was sentenced to be hanged. Robert owned Templehall in 1647 and may have been his son. George (17th C.) proprietor of Todshaw in a list of communicants of the Borthwick valley in 1650. George (17th C.) recorded as ‘near Edderstonesheils’ (i.e. Adderstoneshieil) in 1684 when he was listed among people declared as fugitives for being a Covenanter.

George (d.c.1685) tenant in Birkhill when his will was recorded in 1685. It is possible this was the place of that name in Hobkirk Parish, where Walter and Robert were in 1694. George (17th C.) tenant in Doveshaugh. In 1686 he was fined in Hawick ‘for having seedie and insufficient meal in the market, being about ane gouping of seed sived out of half ane pecke of his full sacke’. George (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. There are 2 men of this name listed, and given how common the surname was locally, there is probably no way of determining who they were. George (17th C.) resident at Blackleemouth according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. George (1661/2–1728) tenant in Upper Bonchester, probably son of William of Upper Bonchester. He is buried in Abbotrule Kirkyard, as recorded on an old headstone there. He was probably related to William Turnbull, miller of Harestane, whose daughter Susan is recorded on the same stone. He appears to have bee the last Turnbull of Bonchester. His daughter Margaret married William Turnbull, tenant of Hartshaugh Mill. He is probably the George listed as ‘his sone’ after William ‘in ye midle of ye toun’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls; both of them are listed after William ‘in Boonchaster’. George (17th/18th C.) candlemaker in Hawick. In 1716 he gave in a bond of £60 Scots granted to Margaret Waugh (widow of Thomas), which she had bequeathed for the poor of the town. Presumably this was some loan between him and Waugh, which Waugh’s widow decided to donate to charity. In 1712 he married Janet Cavers, who was also from Hawick. George (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Isabel Henderson in 1754 and their son Adam was born in 1757. The witnesses were tailor John Turnbull (who was probably related) and shoemaker Robert Oliver. He witnessed a baptism for John Hardie in Hawick in 1768. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He is recorded at Appleteashall in 1772. He married Jean King in 1767 and their children included: Margaret (b.1768); George (b.1769); William (b.1772); John (b.1776); Betty (b.1778); John (b.1781); and Helen (b.1786). In 1769 the witnesses were Andrew Turner and Thomas Reid and in 1772 Andrew Turner and John Mathieson. George (18th C.) resident at Deanburnhaugh in 1773 when his son William was baptised in Roberton Parish. He was also listed there in 1775 when his daughter Isobel was baptised. Probably the same George was father of Robert (b.1776), John (b.1779), Margaret (b.1781) and James (b.1783). George (18th C.) Hawick resident. He is probably the George ‘Sener.’ recorded on the 1785–92 Horse Tax Rolls, and hence father of George junior. He is recorded as ‘senior’ when he (along with Walter Wilson) witnessed baptisms for George ‘Junior’ in 1776 and 1777. He may also be the same man as ‘George Turnbull Senr. Vintner’ in Hawick, who is recorded in the Carriage Tax Rolls for 1794/5. George (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Hardie and their children included: John (b.1774); John (again, b.1777); and William (b.1791). The witnesses in 1777 were Bailie John Hardie (perhaps his wife’s father) and ex-Bailie William Elliot. George (18th/19th C.) draper in Hawick, with his shop at 14 High Street. He was sometimes referred to as ‘Junior Merchant’, and was hence son of another George, who had been a merchant before him. Note that the somewhat later drapers, William and James (at 11 High Street), were not closely related. He is recorded as George ‘Junior’ on the Horse Tax Rolls in Hawick in 1785–87 and 1791–97. He is probably the merchant George who witnessed a baptism for Archibald Paterson and Isabel Turnbull (perhaps a relative) in 1780 and the merchant who witnessed a baptism for Walter Wilson in 1798. He is probably the ‘George Turnbull, jun. Hawick’ on the subscribers list for ‘Caw’s Poetical Museum’ in 1784. He is probably the George who paid the...

Turnbull

Shop Tax in Hawick in 1785. He is probably the junior merchant of that name who was among the creditors of Walter Lunn in the court case for bankruptcy against Lunn in the years 1799-1803. In 1774 he married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’) Wilson, eldest eldest daughter of ‘Haunless Wat’; she died in 1829. Their children included: George (1776-1809); Katherine (b.1777), who married William Oliver; Janet (b.1778), who died unmarried; Betty (b.1779); Walter (1780-1809); Betty or Elizabeth (again, b.1781), who married tobacconist James Scott; William (b.1783); Jane (b.1784); Agnes (or Nancy, 1785-1827), who was unmarried; William (again, 1786-1806); Margaret (b.1787); Thomas (b.1788), who married Jane Veitch; and Isabel (b.1791), who died young. The witnesses in 1776 and 1777 were George Turnbull senior and Walter Wilson (presumably his father and father-in-law). In 1809 he was already deceased when his daughter Elizabeth married Hawick tobacconist James Scott. George (1776-1809) eldest son of draper George. He may be the ‘Jnr. Mercht.’ listed in Hawick on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. It seems likely he was the George, son of George ‘Junior’, who was on the short-list for Cornet in 1794 (along with John, son of George ‘Senior’) and who was listed as a merchant when he was elected Cornet in 1795. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Larriston. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. George (18th/19th C.) recorded as proprietor of the Cross Keys in Hawick on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He had 3 work horses at that time. It is unclear whether this was the Cross Keys on the High Street or at the Sandbed. He was surely related to the John of the Cross Keys whose son Walter died in 1808. He could be the George ‘Senior’, whose son John was among those on the short-list for Cornet in 1794 (along with George, son of George ‘Junior’), and who was probably the John of the Cross Keys who was Cornet in 1796. George (1783-1861) eldest son of James and Betty Adamson. He was born at Hillshaugh and became a carrier in the Rulewater district, like his grandfather, George Adamson. It is said he frequently acted as the disseminator of news. In later life he moved to Newcastle-on-Tyne and was a grocer and meal-dealer at about 41 North Hermitage Street. He was listed there on Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Margaret Scott (from Wilton Parish), who died in 1860, aged 89. Their children were: James, born at Kirknew; Thomas, born at Unthank; Betty; and an unnamed child. He and his wife were buried at Ettleton. George (b.c.1810) resident ofDeanburnhaugh. In 1841 he was recorded as a male servant. He married Rachel Clyde and their children included: George (b.1832); David (b.1834), labourer; James (b.1837), miller; Christian (or Christina, b.1841); and Margaret (b.1845). His wife was still recorded in Deanburnhaugh in 1851 and 1861 (but he was absent, and so presumably deceased). George (b.1809/10) joiner at Apple-treehall. He was listed as wright there among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835-41. He was living there in 1841 with his siblings Betsy and William. His wife was Agnes and their children included Agnes, William, John, James, George and Isabella. George (19th C.) son of the gardener at Borthwickbrae and grandson of George, carrier in Rulewater. He was coachman to Hawick’s Provost Wilson. George (b.1819) son of weaver William and brother of John S. He was an accountant, for a long time cashier for Nixon & MacKie, then in business for himself, later moving to Edinburgh. In 1861 he was a Commercial Accountant, living at 57 High Street. He married Jessie Allan Mark in 1843; her brother founded the wool merchant’s firm W.D. Mark & Sons of Newcastle. Their children included: William (b.1844); John Mark (b.1846); George (b.1849); Christina Dobson (b.1850), who probably died young; Alexander Dobson (b.1853), cashier at Innes, Chambers & Co.; Margaret Ogilvie (b.1856); and Christina Dobson (again, b.1859). George (1821-72) seed merchant, who was Cornet in 1841. He came from the Turnbulls of Allars House, and was son of John. In 1851 he was a seedsmen and merchant at 4 Bourtree Place. He set up a partnership with the Dicksons, with office at 18 High Street, and nursery grounds where Teviot Crescent and North Bridge Street were later built. He donated coins to the Museum in the 1860s. He married Agnes, daughter of Peter Amos, farmer at Earlside. Their children included: Margaret, who married John Brown; Violet, who married Frank Wilson; Helen (d.1910), who married Thomas Telfer Charlton; Euphemia, who married her cousin Peter Amos (b.1860); Jane, who married Gilbert Davidson; John, unmarried; Agnes, also unmarried; Peter, also unmarried; Jessie, who married Rev. Peter Brice Gunn; Alice, who married Thomas Brice Gunn; and George, who married Nancy Brown. He was said to resemble ‘John Bull’ in later years. George (1826-66) 2nd son of John and Wilhelmina (‘Mina’) Scott. His uncles were schoolmasters at Wilton and at Hobkirk. George
Turnbull

Turnbull (b.1861) son of James, tenant farmer at Billerwell. He had a twin sister Mary. He emigrated to Canada, where he raised cattle. An earlier man of the same name (b.1821) was his uncle. Gilbert (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 along with Patrick. They were both stated to be ‘at the horn’ when John in Dryden was allowed to ‘compone’ for associating with them. Gilbert (b.1742) son of Thomas, who was one of the instigators of Hawick’s carpet trade. He was born in Minto Parish. In 1758 he became a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He joined the Honourable East India Company. It is said that he had extravagant habits and would send his bills Grisel (d.c.1685) described as ‘in Roull’ when her will was recorded in 1685. It is unclear where in Rulewater she may have lived. Hector (15th C.) member of the inquest panel for Archibald Douglas inheriting the Barony of Cavers in 1464/5. Other men listed included George, John and William of Barnhills. Hector (15th/16th C.) probably son of the previous Hector. In 1551 he was on the panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather’s lands of Branxholme and Buccleuch. He had a sasine for William, Lord Herries of Terregles, Baron of Feu-Rule for Hector Lorraine of Harwood. Hector (16th C.) brother of David of Wauchope. In 1549 he was granted the 2 husband lands in Appletreehall belonging to Robert Scott of Howpasley. Along with his brother David and Patrick Gordon, he was already tenant of these lands at the time. In 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. Hector of Barnhills (16th C.) probably son of the previous Hector. In 1553/4 he was on the panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather’s lands of Branxholme and Buccleuch. He had a sasine for the lands of Barnhills in 1554. He may have been succeeded by William (recorded in 1584/5) and then the Hector recorded in about 1590. Hector (16th C.) recorded as ‘tutour of Mynto’ in 1551 when he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. In 1553/4 he was listed among the Rutherfords and others in an assurance not to harm the Kers; his pledge was George of Standhill. Also in 1553/4 he was a member of the panel of ‘retour’ for Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch, where he is recorded as ‘tutorem de Mynto’. Hector of Barnhills was also listed, proving he was a different man, although it is unclear to which branch of the TURNBULLS he did belong (but presumably associated with the Turnbulls of Minto). He was simple ‘of Mynto’ in 1561, when listed among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. He was ‘The Tutour of Mynto’ listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. He was ‘Tutor of Mynto’ when he signed the 1569 bond to suppress Border thieves, also signed by several other men of Roxburghshire and neighbouring areas. Hector (16th C.) listed among men who Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present in 1567 to answer charges of raiding into England. He was recorded being of ‘Vowley’, which is probably Woollee. Hector (16th C.) listed in 1567 when he was among men to be entered by David Home of Wedderburn. He is recorded being ‘in Turnbull’ (although it seems likely this is a transcription error, perhaps for Town-o-Rule) and brother to George. ‘Isobellis Robene’, as well as Adam, son to Sandie Turnbull, ‘Part Pursell’ and 2 Olivers were also to be entered from there. Hector ‘Heckie’ of Belsis (16th C.) son of Adam in Belses. He was recorded in 1579 when his son Thomas was listed among men accused of raiding cattle from the Laird of ‘Pansoun’ in England. He was ‘Hekie’, son of Adam in Belses, for whom there was a pledge to stop thieving in 1576, along with his brothers David, George and John. Since his name was given first, he may have been the eldest son. The joint cautioners were Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and William Turnbull of Barnhills. He was also ‘Ekkie Trumbill of Belsis’ in 1580 when his son Andrew (then a minor) was convicted of murder. This was probably the murder of John Hamilton of Cumnock who was slain ‘vnder silence of nycht in his bed within ane laych chalmer in the place of Polwart’. In 1580 there was a further complaint by Jean Hepburn, Lady Wedderburn, that he, his son Dand, and brother-in-law Patrick Richardson, killed her husband (John Hamilton of ‘Benestoun’, presumably the same man) at his home in Polwarth; they were all denounced as rebels. Sir George Home of Wedderburn received the ‘escheeat’ of his (Hector’s) estate, as well as that of the other convicted man, John Young in ‘Camys’. He was probably either deceased or exiled by 1581 when his brothers David, George, John and Adam were recorded. Hector of Wauchope (d.bef. 1612) son of David. In 1571/2 he joined several Borders lairds in signing a bond to act against thieves. In 1572/3 he was recorded as son and heir apparent of David of Wauchope, when he swore allegiance to the Crown, with William Ker of Caverton as surety. In 1573 he and his father signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’. In 1580 he and Walter of Hobsburn were cautioned to appear before the Privy Council, with Henry, heir of John Stewart of Craighall as surety. Also in 1580 he was in a group of Turnbulls of Minto, Wauchope, Bewlie and Hobsburn, who had a band to keep the peace with the Turnbulls of Bedrule and others. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. About 1590 he was listed among the landed men of the Borders. In 1591 he was among local chiefs who signed a bond to support the King against the Earl of Bothwell and Alexander, Lord Home. It is unclear how he was related to Thomas, who was declared a rebel in the 1590s. He was a signatory for the assurance of good behaviour of the Turnbulls descended from the house of Wauchope (separate from those derived from Minto) in 1595; he signed by ‘touching the pen of the notary’. He is probably ‘the old Laird of Vaughop’ recorded in 1601 when and Englishman complained that he had stolen cattle from him. His 2nd son George was recorded in 1604 in a sasine for lands of Templehall. In 1605 he accused John Elliot of Copshaw of leading a group of about 100 riders who stole 80 cows, 100 sheep and 1 horses from Wauchope in 1602. His eldest son Thomas, 2nd son George and several other neighbouring tenants are also recorded; Elliot was found not guilty, however. His surety in this case was Robert Home, younger of ‘the Heuch’. In 1606 he was the most senior of the men accused of raiding and burning Appotside and Harwood in the period 1598–1605; his sons George and John are also listed. They were accused of stealing a huge number of livestock, cutting down virtually the whole wood at Appotside and killing the young Laird of Harwood and his younger brother, as well as a servant of their mother, Lady Appotside. It is unclear exactly what Margaret (herself a daughter of the Laird of Bedrule) had done to invoke the ire of her neighbours and distant kin. Although he and the others were eventually acquitted, his son Thomas was separately found guilty of the same crimes. Probably the same Hector is recorded in 1612, when his son George was involved in a contract with Sir Andrew Kerr of Oxnam relating to Templehall (in the Rule valley). His son and heir David married Margaret, daughter of James Gledstains of Cocklaw in 1593, but was killed before 1599; those involved in his death included Gilbert and Hector (uncles of Hector Lorraine of Harwood), as well as James Lorraine of Appotside; this was presumably part of the same family feud. Thomas was heir afterwards, with George being the next son. Hector of Clarilaw (16th/17th C.) listed in a bond of March 1594/5, along with Richard Turnbull, subscribed by James Gledstains of Cocklaw, that they would not harm Gavin Elliott of Stobs or William Elliot of Horsleyhill. In 1606 he was one of the Turnbulls accused of raiding and burning Appotside and Harwood in the period 1598–1605. As well as other crimes, he was singled out for his involvement with stealing livestock from and burning Appotside in 1598. However, he was cleared of all charges. He was surely related to the slightly later Hector of Clarilaw. Either he or his son was the Hector of Clarilaw who was on the 1616 jury that convicted Jock Scott ‘the Suckler’ of sheep stealing. He may be related to the Hector who had a charter for Pinnacle and Broomlands in 1550. Hector (d.aft. 1610) probably son of Thomas of Hartshaugh (although some accounts suggest he was the youngest son of Sir Thomas of Bedrule). In 1580 he was a ‘kindlie tenant’ in possession of the lands of Kirklands of Hobkirk. His ancestors had probably been ‘kindly tenants’ of Jedburgh Abbey for several generations. In 1581 he was listed (along with his son Thomas) as ‘in Hartshauch’ among the 10 men accused of being involved with the murder of Walter, son of Wat Turnbull of Bewlie. He had a charter to lands of Hartshaugh and Swanshieil in 1604, specifically the lands and mill of ‘Hartshaugh’, the lands of ‘Wester Swoonshield’, including the wood called ‘Clerksbank’, and the ‘kirk lands called Vicar’s Lands of the kirk of Hobkirk’, except for the manse and glebe. These lands were in the Barony of Abbotrule. He is stated as having been tenant in Hartshaugh beyond the memory of man’. In 1610 he is recorded as ‘in Hartshauch’ when he was part of an inquest for succession to lands in Rulewater. His son Mark had a bond in 1616 (when he was presumably still alive) with William Scott of Todrig. He married twice, and his children (to his 2nd wife) were James, Mark and William. ‘Leonall’ (possibly Lyle) may have been another child. His grandson Adam was served heir to his lands of ‘Viccarislandis’ in Hobkirk, as well as Wester Swanshieil and ‘Clerksbankinis’. It is unclear whether he is the same as any of the other contemporarit Hectors. Hector of Barnhills (16th/17th C.) surely directly related to the earlier Hector of Barnhills, and possibly son or brother of William of Barnhills. He had a charter of confirmation issued by James VI for the lands of Barnhills. He is also listed among landed men in the Borders in about 1590. He is recorded in a marriage contract of 1597 and a following grant of lands of Hallrule and others in 1603. In 1602 he was recorded along with Thomas, younger of Minto and Mark of Bewlie, when they were accused of robbing a hunting party sent out by the Laird of Gretna, with permission to hunt for venison in Tynedale; they were found guilty of robbery and fined for the value of 3 horses. His eldest son John married Isobel, daughter of George of Hallrule. He is probably the Hector of Barnhills who was tried in 1604 for the murder of 6 sons of John Grahamslaw of Little Newton; also tried were his brother George, their uncle Gavin and Hector of Stanedge. They were denounced as rebels for not appearing; however, they were probably rehabilitated, since his he and his son and heir John were taken to court in 1609 by David, son of the late John Scott ‘called of the Tour in Hawick’ for not paying what they had borrowed. In 1607 he and Thomas of Wauchope brought a complaint against James, son of Edward Lorraine, ‘for presenting bended pistolets to their breasts for their slaughter’. In 1610 his brother George ‘in Howay’ is recorded resigning a tenement of land in Hawick. Hector of Bewlie (d.1604) recorded in 1601 in a document to capture him and William Middlemas for the slaughter of Thomas Ker of Crailling. This was the outcome of a serious fight between Kers and Turnbulls at Jedburgh Fair that year, which included Mark of Bewlie and his brother Robert (who was killed there); these 2 may well have also been his brothers. He was declared a rebel and there is a Commission of 1603 for the Provost of Jedburgh to gather men to apprehend him. He was killed at Lilliesleaf around Martinmas 1604 by Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam. Ker had remission for this and other crimes in 1615. This was all part of an ongoing feud between the Turnbulls and the Kers, but the exact circumstances surrounding the events of these times are impossible to guess.

Hector of Lilliesleaf (16th/17th C.) declared a rebel in 1604 for failing to appear to answer the charge of murdering Thomas Ker of Crailling and his servant George Glaidner. Hector of Belses acted as cautioner. It is possible he is the same man as Hector of Bewlie. Hector of Stanedge (d.1611) recorded in 1596 as ‘Hector Trumble of Stoney letch’ when he was accused of crimes by Englishman Thomas Selbie and fined ‘for lack of answer’. He is recorded as ‘in Stanileche’ in a bond of 1603 when he gave all his goods to Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst for being unable to pay his debts and also apparently because Sir Andrew had saved his life. In 1604 he was one of the Turnbulls involved with slaughter and burning at Appotside and Harwood. Also in 1604 he was tried, along with 3 Turnbulls of Barhills, with the murder of 6 sons of John Grahamslaw of Little Newton; they were denounced as rebels for non-entry, with their cautioners being Robert Home of Carolside, Hector Turnbull of Belses and James Douglas of Cavers. In 1606 he is recorded as ‘Hector Turnbull in Steneledrig’, brother of Gavin in Howa and the deceased Robert in Hallrule, when there was a summons for them to prosecute the sons of Harry Grahamslaw who had been accused of the murder of Robert in Hallrule; there was clearly a feud between the 2 families. In 1606 he was one of the Turnbulls accused of raiding and burning Appotside and Harwood in the period 1598–1605; however, the case against him was not pursued. In 1607 he sold the lands of ‘Carlinghall, Laisell, Brounishall, Brumescelewis and Roberthill’ to Gilbert Elliot of Stobs. Also in 1607 he brought a court case against Robert Scott in Northhouse. Additionally in 1607 he was cautioner for John Maxwell, Lord Herries. He is also recorded as ‘of Steinieloce’ in a set of documents in 1609 relating to the lands of ‘Hardwodtoun’, ‘Fairneleyis’ and ‘Stainelche’. Andrew held these lands in 1610, and so was probably his son. This also suggests that he had been declared a rebel by then. In 1610 he was named by the Privy Council when a commission was made to apprehend him, along with 7 other Turnbulls and 2 Davidsons, since they were ‘unrelaxed from hornings’ following the murder of Thomas Ker of Craillinghall and 6 Grahamslaw brothers. He was killed by Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam, but whether this was an ‘official’ act or part of a feud is unclear. Hector of Firth (16th/17th C.) took part on the affair at Jedburgh Rood Fair in 1601, when a large group of Turnbulls drew Thomas Ker (brother of the Jedburgh Provost) out of his house and killed him along with his servants. This was part of some ongoing feud between Turnbulls and Kerrs. He was one of 4 Turnbulls who were found guilty of the crime of murder and illegally carrying pistols. In 1610 he was named by the Privy Council when a commission was made to apprehend him, along with 7 other Turnbulls and 2 Davidsons, since they were ‘unrelaxed from hornings’ following the murder of Thomas Ker of Craillinghall and 6 Grahamslaw brothers. Hector of Belses (16th/17th C.) acted as cautioner in 1604 for a group of Turnbulls from Stanedge and Barnhills (including 2 other Hectors!) accused of killing 6 sons of Grahamlaw of Newton. Also in 1604 he was cautioned for Hector of Lilliesleaf, charged with the murder of Thomas Ker of Crailing. He must have been related to the George of Belses who was executed in 1603. Hector (16th/17th C.) had a charter of ‘feu farm’ for the lands of Standhill in 1610. He was probably ancestor of the later Turnbuls of Standhill. Hector of Clarilaw (17th C.) possibly son of the earlier Hector. In 1637 he was appointed (as closest relative on his father’s side) as tutor to James, son of George ‘called of Wauchope’. In 1643 he was recorded as owner of lands in Hassendean Parish valued at £273. In 1643 his daughter Elizabeth married Robert Scott of Burnhead. He probably had no sons, since Clarilaw appears to have gone to the Scotts of Burnhead after that. Hector of Firth (17th C.) feued Firth from Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning in 1632. He was probably the son of the earlier Hector of Firth. John and Walter leased Firth later in the later 1600s, and must have been his descendants. He is recorded in a marriage contract of 1637 of his daughter with George Clerk. In 1643 his lands in Lilliesleaf Parish were valued at £195. Hector (17th C.) recorded in ‘Rule’ in the 1643 valuation of Abbotrule Parish. His lands were valued at £10. Hector (d.c.1683) tenant in Grundstone whose will was recorded in 1683. Hector of Wester Swanshiel (18th C.) son of William. He was succeeded by his son James. Helen of Fodderlee (17th C.) recorded as owner of £80 of land in Abbotrule Parish in 1643. She was probably related to James, who was also recorded at Fodderlee in 1643. Helen (17th/18th C.) owner of West Fodderlee and part of Ruletownhead, which she presumably inherited from her father. She married W. Chisholme and the lands were inherited by their son Mark. She could be the same woman as Helen Chisholme who paid the window tax at Newton in 1748. Henry of Craik (15th C.) one of the witnesses to the 1431 ‘letter of transumpt’ of the earlier charter granting half of the barony of Branxholme to the Scotts of Buccleuch. He is recorded as ‘Henrico Turnbull de Crak’. Henry (15th C.) leased a quarter of the lands of Appletreehall according to a document of 1470, with Alexander Scott of Howpasley having the other parts. He was probably related to Walter, who is recorded holding the lands of East Mains (of Hassendean) in 1493/4. Henry (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice-aine in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance. He was recorded being ‘in denni’, which is probably an abbreviation for ‘dennum’, i.e. he lived in Denholm. He was cited again in 1494/5 for failure to appear. Henry (15th C.) tenant in Uinhank, listed at the 1494/5 Justice-aine in Jedburgh. He was indicted and did not appear, with his surety, Matthew Hobkirk being fined. He was probably related to Alexander, recorded in Uinhank in 1493. Henry ‘Harry’ (16th/17th C.) tenant in Wauchope in Rulewater, recorded in a court case of 1605. He is listed as ‘Harie Trumbill’. Henry ‘Harie’ (17th C.) holder of part of the lands of Westwood near Bonchester in 1643. His lands were valued at £12 Scots, while those of Thomas (presumably his father or brother) were worth £40 Scots. Henry (18th/19th C.) farmer at Whitriggs in Kirkton Parish, recorded on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was owner of a total of 7 farm horses and 1 saddle horse in 1797. He married Betty Stavert in Kirkton in 1789; she was born in Hawick in 1766, daughter of George. Their children included: Henrietta (b.1791); Elizabeth (b.1793); and John (b.1795). Herbert (15th/16th C.) recorded in connection with lands in Bedrule in the early 1500s. Helen Rutherford of that ilk had the ‘half merk land of Bethiroull’ confirmed to her by the King, this being near the Parish Church and ‘held in tack by Herbut Turnbull’. It is possible that his name is an error for the much more common ‘Hector’. Herman (15th C.) witness to a sasine in 1479 for the lands of Wolfelee for the Homes of Wedderburn. It could be that this is a transcription error for ‘Hector’. Isobel (16th/17th C.) daughter of Walter of Rawflat, sister of William and Walter. In 1603 she was one of the ‘persewaris’ of the case against George Turnbull of Belses, for a list of crimes, including killing her brother William and shooting her brother Walter. Another of the persuers was George Rutherford ‘as kinsman’, so he was either her husband or married to one of her relatives. In 1632 probably the same ‘Issobella’ was ‘heir portioner’, along with her sister Margaret, to their brother in the lands of the Mains of Feurule. Isobel (17th C.) resident of ‘Crawknow’ in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Isobel (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Isobel (17th C.) recorded as resident of Kirknowe in Hobkirk Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Isobel (17th C.) listed among the poor living at Hassendean on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Isobel (18th C.) cook at Stirches in 1791, when she was working for Gilbert Chisholme. Sir James (1320–55) son of William, the first Turnbull. He married Mary Haliburton and died at Nisbet Moor. James (15th C.) listed among the squires who witnessed an agreement in 1432 between the Rules of Primside and the Kers of Altonburn. James of Hornshole (15th C.) witness in 1456 to an instrument relating to the lands of Whitchesters, made at Branxholme. He is recorded as ‘Jacobo Turnbule de Hornshole’. He may have been an ancestor of the later Turnbulls who were at Hornshole. James (15th C.) recorded at the Justice-aiire held in Jedburgh in 1493. He was described as a ‘common thief’, who had stolen things with John Davidson, resident of Minto. Davidson was allowed to ‘compone’ for his crimes, including stealing a horse from him. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as the brother of the Laird of Whithope (probably the one near Harden in the Borthwick valley). He had remission for stealing 18 ewes from Bowhill, with the help of Walter Dalgleish. His crimes also included stealing iron windows, doors and ‘crukis’ from the tower of Howpasey. His brother the Laird of Whithope was surety for him. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1484 when he claimed compensation from Adam of Philiphaugh for the ‘wrangwis vexacioum and disturbliance’ of him in his lands of Westfield and ‘wrangwis spoliacioum of a kow’ at his lands of Kirkhope. Probably the same James ‘in Kirkhop’ is listed among the many men given remission in 1504 for any part in the slaughter of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey. James (15th/16th C.) recorded as brother of Mark in Bonchester in 1494/5. He failed to appear and so his brother, serving as his surety, was fined. He was also recorded as brother of Mark in 1501 among 10 men whose fines were remitted; as well as his brother, there were Turnbulls of Fulton, Bonchester and elsewhere also listed. James (15th/16th C.) tenant in Hornshole listed in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501, among mostly local men who had been fined. He was probably related to Adam, who was tenant at Hornshole in 1502 and John in 1516. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Jameses. James (15th/16th C.) tenant in Gargunnock. In 1504 he was among a number of men who had remission for any involvement in the slaughter of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey. He may be related to the contemporary Walter of Gargunnock and Hassendean. James (15th/16th C.) witness to a charter for John Stirling for lands in Dumbarton, signed in Edinburgh in 1508. James (15th/16th C.) recorded as tenant of Wolfelee in 1516 on a list of many Turnbulls pardoned for any role in assisting Alexander, Lord Home. James (15th/16th C.) tenant in the lands of Hillhouse, listed among the men who had remission in 1516 for any assistance given to the Homes. Fergus is also noted as being there, and so presumably related. It is unclear if these were the lands in Liddesdale or other lands in Rulewater. James (16th C.) recorded as ‘Jacobe Trumbill, young Paits’ brother’ on a list of Scotsmen reset in England in 1540. He was probably son of Peter (or perhaps Patrick) of Catlee. James of Abbotrule (16th C.) recorded as ‘Jame’ in 1565 when there was a bond with Walter Turnbull, tenant of Howa (in Rulewater) to present him to Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst. He may be one of the unidentified James Turnbulls who are on the list of Borderers summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1584/5. James (16th C.) listed as tenant in ‘Siornscheill’ (probably Swanshiel) in 1581 among 10 men (mostly Turnbulls of Rulewater) accused of the murder of Walter, son of Wat Turnbull of Bewlie. James of the Toor (16th C.) recorded as ‘of the Toure’, along with his brother George, in a 1579/80 case of men accused of raiding into England. They were asked to pay recompense to the Laird of ‘Panstoum’, from whom they had presumably been accused of stealing. He is also listed among the men who were asked to appear before the Privy Council in 1584/5 to explain how they had been helping to quiet the Border. He was also listed as one of the landed men of the Borders in about 1590. He was probably related to William ‘of the Tour of Rouliwode’ recorded in 1622. His lands were presumably at Spittal Tower. James (16th C.) tenant in ‘Stenleche’ (i.e. Stonedge) in 1567 when Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present him to answer changes of raiding into England. He was recorded being ‘of Stonylete’ and ‘of Stonyleaech’ among men complained about by the English Warden in 1590 for 2 separate raids into England in 1587. In one raid he is listed first and there were more than 40 other men involved, including his servant ‘Jockey Weitte’. In the other raid there are several Turnbulls listed, among a group of about 200. James ‘Baneist James’ (16th/17th C.) one of a group of Turnbulls involved in a melee at Jedburgh Rood Fair in 1601. This resulted in the death of Thomas Ker and his servant, and the wounding of many men. As a consequence several

Turnbulls were later convicted and hanged. Although he was one of those found guilty of murder and illegally carrying pistols, it is unclear whether or not he was executed. In 1610 he was named (as ‘called Baneisht James’) by the Privy Council when a commission was appointed to apprehend him and 7 other Turnbulls (plus 2 Davisons), for not finding caution following being found guilty of the murder of Thomas Ker of Crailinghall and 6 Grahamslaw brothers. It is not stated to which Turnbull branch he belonged, but probably somewhere around Minto. His nickname is presumably Scots for ‘banished’. James (16th/17th C.) younger son of Sir Thomas of Bedrule. In 1616 he is described as ‘called of Bedrule’ when along with David (or Andrew, probably his nephew), butcher and Burgess of Jedburgh, he had a bond with Mark in Hartshaugh. And in 1618 he is ‘brother german to Walter of Bedderreull’ when he had a bond with James Jamieson of Lessu-den. James (d.bef. 1619) eldest son of Hector of Hartshaugh. In 1608 he had a charter of the lands of Wester Swanshiel, granted by his father to be held in feu for rental. He was also the successor to the lands of Hartshaugh and the Kirklands. However, he could only have been Laird for a very short time after his father’s death, before his own son Thomas succeed in 1619. He must also have been related to the contemporary Adam and Lyle (probably either brothers or sons). James ‘Jamie’ of West Lees (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1605 when his son George was listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners’ court in Jedburgh. He was also recorded in 1617 in a bond with James Haswell, surgeon of Jedburgh; his son and heir William was also mentioned. James (16th/17th C.) son of ‘Willie of Braidhauche’, he is recorded in the 1622 Circuit Court, where he was found guilty of stealing 24 sheep from ‘Hairrlesyd’, this being possessed by the ‘fear of Cavers (William Douglas) and his tennentis’ (hence probably Earlsid). He was ‘clengit’, i.e. found not guilty. His cautioners were Adam in Hartshaugh and another Adam, who were perhaps related. In 1628 there was a complaint by Robert Kerr of Cavers against him and his father, for opposing his apprehension after he was declared ‘an idle and masterless man’ (i.e. fit for military service). Also in 1628 he is named when his father William paid caution to the Privy Council, promising to atone for the disturbance they had caused at Abbotrule Kirk. James (d.bef. 1632) described as ‘in Hassiden bank’ and already deceased in 1632 when his son Walter feued part of Raperlaw. Probably the same James ‘of Hassindanebank’ was complained about in 1607 by George Scott in Castleside, with his surety being Thomas Ker of Cavers. James (17th C.) recorded as owner of £180 of land at Fodderlee in Abbotrule Parish in 1643. He was probably related to Helen ‘of Fodderlie’, who was also recorded in 1643. They are presumably distinct from the people with the same names who were at Bowshot Hill at the same time. James (17th C.) recorded at ‘Bossithill’ (i.e. Bowshot Hill) in Abbotrule Parish in a valuation roll of 1643. He was there with Helen, who was presumably his wife. Their land was valued at £33 6s 8d. James of Wauchope (d.c.1674) only son of George of Wauchope. In 1653 he inherited the 20-pound land of Wauchope in Jedforest from his uncle Thomas of Wauchope. In 1655 he pronounced all claims to the lands of Templehall (in the Rule valley) to William Earl of Lothian. His sister Anna was served as his heir in 1674. James of West Lees (17th C.) probably a descendant of the earlier James. In about 1663 he was recorded paying £66 13s 4d on the Land Tax Rolls. James (17th C.) tenant in Fenwick. He married Isobell Margaret Stoddart and their children included Robert (b.1682), James (b.1685) and an unnamed son (b.1688). The 1682 baptism was witnessed by John Law and Robert Turnbull (who was presumably closely related). James (17th C.) tenant in Kirkton. In 1684 he was among a group of tenants of the Cavers estate who complained about the burden placed upon them by the huge fines imposed on Lady Cavers. They would have been forced into ruin had not the young Laird of Cavers, William Douglas, returned from the Continent to take charge of matters. James (d.1686) tenant farmer who also served as ‘pyper’ for the Parish of Abbotreule. His will is recorded in 1687 when he was ‘piper, in Abotroull’. He left a reasonably sum of money to his only daughter. James (17th C.) tenant in Hartshaugh. The will of his wife Agnes Turnbull was recorded in 1688. James (d.c.1688) tenant in ‘Caverspark’ when his will was recorded in 1688. It is unclear if this was associated with Cavers Parish or Cavers Carre or elsewhere. James (17th C.) referred to as ‘James Trumble’ in 1688 when he was fined for assaulting the Bailie and Town Officers. They were trying to take him to the tollbooth ‘for certain riots and bluids’ and threatened ‘to take yr lives wt ane drawn penknife in his hand’. James (17th C.) recorded as ‘servitor of said Dame Magdalene’ in 1690 when he witnessed a bond. He was thus some sort of employee of the widow of Stobs. James (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Jameses. James (17th C.) resident of Acreknowe on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) tenant in Hobusburn according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. James (17th C.) tenant at Doorpool in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to Adam, who was tenant there at about the same time. James (17th C.) cottar at Rulletownfoot according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) resident at Roan in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. James (17th C.) tenant in Hudshouse in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. James (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun’. He was probably from the west side. James (17th/18th C.) tenant in Tofts in Kirkton Parish. It is unclear if he was related to the Turnbulls of Tofts. His children included: James (b.1716) and Margaret (b.1718). He was recorded at Nether Tofts in 1718. James (d.c.1724) son of Adam and grandson of Thomas. His father had lost the lands of Hartshaugh and the Kirklands of Kirkton through ‘non-entry’. In 1682 he was entered with his superior in the lands of Wester Swanshieal as successor to his grandfather. He was at that time already married to Elizabeth Scott. He may be the same James ‘portioner of Swan-sheil’ who was among those declared as fugitives in 1684 for not conforming to Episcopalianism. He was probably the James recorded as resident at Easter Swanshiel in 1694. His son and successor Walter was born about 1700. He was succeeded by Walter (called William in Walter Deans’ history). James (17th/18th C.) candlemaker in Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Henry, who is recorded in 1721 as a teacher of poor children. Probably the same candlemaker James is listed on the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. James (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He is listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He married Margaret Forrest in 1703. Their children included: James (b.1705); and Isobel (b.1709). He witnessed a baptism for fellow tailor Alexander Hislop in 1705. He is probably the tailor recorded in the Kirk Session records paying 18s ‘for 3 sticks lost from the quire’. James (b.1709) son of William, he was born at Bedrule Mill, and the family claimed descent from the Turnbulls of Bedrule. He became tenant farmer at the Dykes. He married Helen Spindie in Cavers Parish in 1739 and their eldest son Thomas was born a year later. Their other children included James, Agnes and William. James (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He married Margaret Currie in 1758 and their children included Robert (b.1758), Janet (b.1760) and Thomas (b.1762). James (b.1736) tenant farmer at Hassendean Bank, son of Adam, who was also tenant there. He could be the James who in July 1774 was paid 2s 5d for ‘sharpening Pucks’ as part of a boundary dyke at Hassendean and who in 1782 was tenant of the ‘East end farm of Hassendean’. He was recorded at Hassendean Bank in the Horse Tax Rolls 1785–94. He was still tenant of Hassendean in 1793, when part of the farm was enclosed. He married Agnes, daughter of Thomas Turnbull (of Burnfoot and the Hawick carpet factory). Their children included Adam, who married Betty, daughter of James Scott of Skelfhill. He was the ancestor of the Turnbulls of Merrylaw. James (d.1787) wright in Bedrule. He married Euphan Peden, who died in 1792, aged 62. Their children included: Mary, who died aged 9; James, died at 16; and William, who lived at Lanton East Park. James (18th C.) resident of Scawmill. He married Margaret Turnbull in Wilton Parish in 1764 and their children included: John (b.1766); George (b.1767); William (b.1769); Elizabeth (b.1770); Margaret (b.1772); and Ann (b.1774). The witnesses in 1770 were Thomas Reid and Robert Ormiston. James (18th C.) resident of Courthill. He married Jean Douglas and their children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included: Janet (b.1760); Margaret (b.1762); Esther (b.1764); Isabel (b.1766); James (b.1768); William (b.1770); Jean (b.1771); Helen (b.1774); and Rebecca (b.1776). The witnesses in 1770 were John Mathieson and Andrew Turner. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for James Black at Packhouses in 1774. James (18th C.) farmer at East Middle in Cavers Parish according to the Horse Tax Rolls of 1785. James (1752–1844) younger son of Walter, portioner of Ancrum. In 1787 in Cavers Parish he married Helen (also called Agnes) Rutherford (1761–1821), daughter of the farmer at Knowesouth Orchard. He farmed at Broomhall near Ancrum and later at Newcastle (probably not Bewcastle, as reported by some sources). He may be the James, grandfather of William G. about whom a story is told regarding a smuggler dropping 2 kegs from his horse as he rode past the farm, which he managed to conceal while pointing the excisemen in the direction the smuggler had gone. His children included: John, farmer at Spittal-on-Rule; James (b.1789); Elizabeth Rutherford (b.1791); Betty (b.1793); Helen (b.1795); Isabella (b.1797); and Agnes (b.1799). He was recorded as ‘Independent’ at ‘Honey town’ (i.e. Honeyburn farm) in 1841, and he died there. James (b.1754/5–1825) ancestor of the Turnbulls of Bonchester Bridge and the Hawick grocers. It is unclear precisely where he was born and who his parents were. He lived at Hoddleswoodie and other places near Bonchester. He married Betty, daughter of George and Catherine Adamson (possibly the Betty born to George Adamson in Hobkirk in 1760); she died in 1828, aged 77. Their son James (b.1786) was schoolmaster at Denholm and Wilton. Their other children included: George (1783–1861), carrier in Ruelaw; William (b.1787), schoolmaster at Hobkirk; Adam, who died in Edinburgh; Alexander, carrier; Thomas, carrier in Newcastleton; and John, grocer in Newcastleton. He and some of his family are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. James (18th/19th C.) carrier recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. James (18th/19th C.) tenant at Hobkirk Manse lands, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at ‘Hightofts’ (i.e. Upper Tofts), recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid tax on 2 non-working dogs in 1797. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Greenhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish. He is listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Lilliesleaf as owner of 7 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax at Greenhouse at 1797. James (18th/19th C.) recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as farmer at Highchesters, when he owned 3 horses. He also paid tax for having 2 non-working dogs at Highchesters in the same year. Probably the same James at ‘Haychesters’ was on the 1821 subscription list for William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’. James (b.1774) son of John of Wester Swanshiel. He was born in Hobkirk Parish and became tenant farmer at Galalaw outside Hawick, the lands being purchased by his elder brother Robert. He married Mary Stavert, and their earlier children were born in Roberton. They included: John (b.1799); Mary (b.1809); James (b.1812); Helen (b.1815); and William (b.1821). He is recorded in the 1841 census at Galalaw Braefoot. James (18th/19th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He married Margaret Ainslie. Their children included: Walter (b.1801); an unnamed child who died in 1816; and Janet, who married coal carrier William Graham. James (1773–1858) son of Walter of Chesterhall near Ancrum. He became farmer at Billerwell in the Rule valley, along with his sons. He married Margaret, daughter of Mark Turnbull, tenant of Ancrum Mill, and she died in 1862, aged 78. His wife’s brother was also Mark Turnbull, tenant of Lanton Mill, whose grandson was Provost of Melrose. Their children were: Walter (1805–64, who was the last of Chesterhall); Thomas (b.1809); James (b.1815); John (b.1817); Robert (b.1819); George Purvis (b.1821); Margaret (1824/5–63), who died unmarried; and Mary (1812/3–60), who married John Laydwell in Jedburgh. His daughter Elizabeth married Robert, son of John Grieve in 1853. William may have been another son. James (b.1782/3) stocking-maker in Wilton. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton in 1835, when he was at Damside, and in 1840 and 1841, when he was at Roadhead. His wife was Mary and their children included William, James and Mary. He may be the stockingmaker James whose infant child’s death is recorded in 1822. James (18th/19th C.) listed at Wilton among subscribers to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. James (b.c.1780) thatcher living at Firth in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was there in 1851 with family members Janet and Andrew. James (1786–1834) son of James and Betty Adamson (not Anderson, as stated in one source). He was born in Hobkirk Parish, being baptised at Hoddleswoodie, and came from the Nursery House Turnbulls. He was schoolmaster at Denholm and then became the successor to James Elliot at Wilton School in the 1810s. His brother William was schoolmaster at Hobkirk. He was said to have a reputation for being an excellent teacher. He married Margaret Dalgleish (cousin of William Dalgleish, who established the ‘Coutard Fund’) in Cavers Parish in 1808 and they had 12 children, including: James, Clerk of Session in Edinburgh; John, who died in London; Agnes (who was also a teacher); Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’), who married James Dalgleish; Jane or Janet; Charters, who married Elliot Armstrong; Elspeth; George; Jane; Mary Scott; and William, auctioneer in Edinburgh. His wife and eldest daughter ran the ‘Image Garden’ school around the 1840s, and she survived him by about 50 years. James (18th/19th C.) son of Mark and an Elliot. He was descended from the Chesterhall, Ancrum branch of the Turnbulls. He was a shepherd at Minto Kames, then at Barnes and later at Old Fodderlee. His children include Robert (also a shepherd), Mark (a joiner in Peebles), James (a shepherd in Kingleedooks) and a daughter (who kept house for him at Old Fodderlee). James ‘Wiggum’ (18th/19th C.) Denholm tailor who was described as ‘half-witted’. He also acted as the village crier, ringing the Dead Bell, announcing the name, and time and place of the burial and usually adding ‘and ye’re a’ invited to the funeral’. James (b.1799/1800) originally from Bowden, he was a blacksmith, grocer and spirit dealer at Appletreehall. He was listed as blacksmith at Appletreehall among heads of households in Wilton Parish 1835–41. In 1851 he was farming at Fenwick, having 140 acres and employing 2 servants. His wife was Margaret and their children included Jane, Jessie, Agnes, James and Thomas. He is recorded at Appletreehall in 1861 as a grocer and widower, with children Agnes and Thomas. James ‘Jimmie Springkie’ (b.c.1800) Hawick shoemaker who lived to an old age. His nickname derived from that of his father, ‘Auld Springkell’. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed as a shoemaker on the Cross Wynd. He is probably the James recorded at 4 Cross Wynd in the 1851 and 1861 censuses, employing a handful of men in his shoemaker’s business. He lived with his sister Margaret. He could be the son of Robert and Mary Laidlaw, born in Hawick in 1798, with sister Margaret born in 1793. He probably married Martha Blythe, who died in 1826, aged just 21. James (19th C.) son of Hawick stocking-maker William. He was one of 5 men charged for mobbing Tory supporters during the 1837 election. He was found guilty and imprisoned for 12 months. James (b.1800/1) born in Southdean Parish, he was farmer at Harelaw in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1851 he was farmer of 11 acres. His wife was Allison and their children included William, James, Isobella, Eliza, Jane and Christina. James (1801/2–77) born in Minto Parish, he was forester at Cavers estate for almost 50 years. In 1828 he married Jane Weir, who appears to have already been deceased by 1841. He was living at ‘Cavers Cottage’ in 1851 and at ‘Cavers Wood’ in 1861. The family belonged to the Associate congregation in Jedburgh. He had a family of 2 daughters and 3 sons: John (b.c.1829), the eldest; Margaret (b.c.1830); Robert (b.1832), clothier in Denholm; James (b.c.1837); and Jean (b.c.1840). James (19th C.) recorded being ‘in Gillbraehead’ in 1832 when accused of fathering a child with Janet Scott from Gillfoot. However, he denied it. He was surely related to the blacksmiths of Gillbraehead. James (1814–74) son of Robert and Ann Mathison. He was a Hawick draper, conducting the town’s highest class drapery business of the time at 11 High Street. This is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 he was living with his parents on the Cross Wynd. In 1851 he was listed as a Master Draper, employing 4 apprentices, 5 women and 4 girls. In 1861 he was employing 2 men, 2 boys and 5 women. He was on the ‘Eternal Cooncil’ and was twice Senior Bailie. He was probably the Turnbull who was Junior Bailie in 1859, when he was croupier for the centenary Burns night. He was also Treasurer of East Bank Kirk, succeeding his father, was appointed Session Clerk in 1851 and was presented with a plate service by the congregation in 1865. He married Wilhelmina, daughter of Walter John Grieve, farmer in Southfield; she died in 1878, aged 58. Their children included: Robert (1850–53); Ann (c.1855–61); and Christina Mary, who married John Wield. He died at Wilton Grove (his son-in-law’s house) and is buried in Welloagate Cemetery. James (1815–88) son of James, farmer at Billerwell. He was joint tenant of Billerwell with his brothers, and also of Prieston. He also farmed for a while at Ashkirk Mill. He is probably the James recorded as farmer at Wester Fodderlee in the 1860s. He married Mary, daughter of William Scott. Their children were: James Robert, who emigrated to Edmonton; William Scott, farmer at Tythehouse; Annie; George Purvis, who emigrated to Canada; Mary, twin to George Purvis; Walter, farmer at Hartshaugh Mill; Mark, twin of Walter; Elizabeth, ‘Betsy’, married Samuel White from Stow; Janet; Thomas, farmer at Greenholm, near Newcastleton; and Andrew, also farmer at Greenholm. He died at Midburn in Hobkirk Parish. James (b.1819) eldest son of James, Wilton Schoolmaster, and Margaret Dalgleish, he was born in Wilton. He became Clerk of Session in Edinburgh. It is said that he knew the law so well that he was often consulted by the professional lawyers. He married Jessie, sister of banker Archibald Douglas. Their children were Catherine (who married Henry Bunge) and James (a clerk in Register House). James (b.1822/3) born in Ancrum Parish, he was a blacksmith and shepherd at Spittal-on-Rule. He was recorded there in 1851 and 1861. His wife was Jane Scott, daughter of a Hawick joiner, with his mother-in-law being Agnes Scott. Their children included George B. and Adam. James (b.1823) eldest son of John. He took over the tenancy of Spittal farm. He was miller at Spittal Mill on the 1852 directory. He is recorded there in 1861, as farmer of 500 acres, employing 17 labourers. He was living there with his step-mother Anne E. James (1825–78) eldest son of John, grocer of Newcastle-on-Tyne, and descended from a Hobkirk branch of the Turnbulls. His uncle James was schoolmaster at Wilton. In 1855 he acquired the old-established grocery and wine merchants at 51 High Street, and it lasted for more than a century. He also ran a cart out to Whitrope when the tunnel was being built there. Accounts for the period 1889–1964 are listed in the National Register of Archives. In 1854 he married Anne, eldest daughter of James Robson, a Jedburgh shoemaker; she died in 1890, aged 65. Their children were: Isabell Young, who married Charles Firth of Fell Grove, Yorkshire; Mina, who married William Cunningham of Brisbane, Australia; James Robson, who died unmarried; John; William, who emigrated to Toowoomba, Queensland; Mary, who married Frederick William Sykes from Leeds; Margaret; and Robert, who moved to Brisbane, Australia. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. James (19th C.) recorded in 1852 as saddler and ironmonger in Lilliesleaf. If this was not an error for ‘Thomas’, then they must as least have been closely related. It is also possible he was the same James who ran the Subscription Library in Lilliesleaf in 1852. James (b.1824/5) shepherd at Blawearie in Cavers Parish in 1861. His wife was Jane Scott and their children included George B. and Adam. James Douglas (b.1833) son of Thomas and Mary Beattie. He emigrated to Australia, where he farmed at Mount Prospect, Leichhardt and Kotupna in Victoria, and in 1885 settled at Guy Fawkes (now called ‘Ebor’) in New South Wales. Robyn Crosslé wrote a book ‘Turnbull: lives and letters’ (c.1994) about him, containing extracts of many family letters, especially from his brother Gen. Peter Stephenson. He married Esther Rathie, daughter of his cousin Barbara Andison and James Rathie. Their children were Thomas Scott, Barbara, James Douglas, Mary, Archibald, Esther, John, William, Adam Robert and Barbara Esther Mabel. James (b.1836) son of Robert, he was farmer at Galalaw. He married Margaret, daughter of builder George Tait. Their children were: Robert, who was an engineer in Toronto; James, who later farmed at Galalaw and married his cousin Amy, daughter of draper and tobacconist J.A. Turnbull; John, a science teacher in Kilwinning; and George, town missionary in Kirkintilloch. James (19th C.) schoolmaster at St. Cuthbert’s School during part of 1893, between Mr. Jay and Mr. Inglis. James (19th C.) resident at East Bank House. He was one of the executors for the firm of Dickson & Turnbull when it folded in about 1876. He may have been a brother of George, the main Turnbull partner. James (1846–1923) engineer born in Hawick, who was long involved with Allars Kirk. His father died during the cholera outbreak of 1849. He wrote a memoir, which was published (at the insistence of John R. Purdom) as ‘Hawick in Bygone Days’ (1927), which contains an invaluable record of Hawick shops, businesses, people and customs of the mid-1800s. James Robert (b.1852) eldest son of James, tenant at Billerwell. He emigrated to Canada and worked as an auctioneer in Edmonton. James (19th/20th C.) son of James, he was farmer at Galalaw like his father. He married his cousin Amy, daughter of draper and tobacconist J.A. Turnbull. Jane (b.c.1775) originally from England, she was listed as grocer and spirit dealer at Bonchester Bridge in 1841. She was probably proprietor of the Horse and Hounds Inn. She lived there with Thomas and John, who were probably her sons. Jane nee Scott (b.1777/8) postmistress in Denholm in the mid-19th century. She is probably the vintner of that name recorded in Denholm in 1837 and 1852. She married Alexander. In 1841 she was ‘Jeany Turnbul Senr.’ living at the Cross Keys Inn with her joiner son John, daughter Jeany and nephew John Scott. She was listed as postmistress in 1851, with her daughter Jane as assistant. Jane (1792–1866) daughter of William of Burnfoot. She lived at 5 Sllitrig Crescent with her older sister Eleanor. They were referred to as ‘the Misses Turnbull’ among the gentry of Hawick in Slater’s 1852 directory. By 1861 she was living at the same address with her niece, also Eleanor Turnbull. Janet (15th/16th C.) daughter and co-heiress of Walter Turnbull of Gargunnock. In 1501, along with her sister Margaret, she was infested in the lands of Hassendeankbank. In 1509 she and Elizabeth (perhaps another sister) had sasines for Gargunnock and other lands in Stirlingshire. She probably married Thomas Elphinstone, who had a charter for half the lands of Hassendeankbank (along with her) from Cuthbert Cunningham, Earl of Glencain in 1512. And she may later have been the Mrs. Janet Seton (nee Turnbull) who infefted Archibald Douglas of Timpender in Hassendeankbank. She may be the Janet who had a sasine for Lanton in 1502 (with Elizabeth and Margaret having the sasine in 1506). Janet (15th/16th C.) granted a charter for Philiphaugh in 1509. She may have been daughter or wife of Adam of Philiphaugh. She seems unlikely to be the same Janet recorded possessing Philiphaugh in 1555. Janet (16th C.) recorded in 1555 when her son John was served heir to her lands of Philiphaugh. She could have been wife of Robert of Philiphaugh, who is recorded in the 1530s. Jean (d.bef. 1632) daughter of Walter of Templehall. Along with her sister Beatrix she inherited the lands of Templehall and Breulans from her uncle Andrew (son of David of Wauchope) in 1604. She must have been a minor then, since in 1605 her ‘tutor’ George Turnbull (2nd son of Hector) acted on their behalf to removed several people from their lands. In 1632, by which time she was deceased, her sister claimed the other half of their inherited lands. Jean (b.1819) daughter of Alexander and Jane Scott. Her mother was postmistress in Denholm, and her brother John was a joiner. They lived at the Cross Keys Inn, where she was also a spirit dealer. John (14th C.) had a charter for the lands of ‘Hundallwalschop’, i.e. Huddleshope in Peeblesshire. This was given by King David II in 1357, as documented in a transumpt of 1534, with his surname recorded as ‘Trumbull’. His daughter and heiress Margaret married William Gledstaines of that Ilk. Margaret later resigned her lands of Robertson to her son John; this suggests that this John of Huddleshope was from the Borthwick Water Turnburls. John (14th C.) granted lands in Dumfriesshire by Dougal McDougal in the reign of David II. The lands were ‘Litlegrewy’, ‘Glen-garg’ and ‘Glencraig’. John (14th C.) Sheriff of Selkirkshire according to the Exchequer Rolls of 1360. He was also recorded as Deputy to the Sheriff in 1364. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnburls in Selkirkshire. John (14th/15th C.) granted the lands of Wauchopehead in a charter of Robert III in 1404. The lands had been forfeited by ‘John Bour’. John (14th/15th C.) son of Adam ‘of Whythohe’, i.e. Whithope in the Borthwick valley. He was granted lands at Hassendeanbank in 1409 by the Baron, William Cunningham of Kilmours. Several generations of Johns subsequently held these lands. Sir John of Falshope (14th/15th C.) said to have had a daughter who married George Scott, 2nd Laird of Synton. His lands were either Phawhope near the head of the Ettrick or Fauldshope opposite Oakwood. He may have been ancestor of Sir Thomas who held the same lands in the late 15th century. John of Minto (d.1423), nicknamed ‘out with the sword’ for his fiery temperament. In 1390 he granted part of the Barony of Minto to Sir William Stewart of Jedworth, probably his nephew. He was captured by the English in 1399 (along with Sir Richard Rutherford) and imprisoned in the Tower of London until 1413. Thereafter he took part in the Battle of Cravant (part of the Hundred Years War), supporting the French, at which perhaps as many as 3,000 Scots fell. He appears to have died there, although it is also alleged that he died later of leprosy, causing dispute over the title to his lands. He was succeeded by his son Walter. There was an inquiry in 1424 into whether the grant to Sir William Stewart was legal, because of his supposed leprosy. His sister may have married Sir Alexander Stewart of Darnley. John of Fulton (15th C.) part of the investigation into the leprosy of John of Minto in 1425/6. About the same time he also witnessed a retour of Walter Scott in the lands of Eilrig, and is there recorded as ‘Johannem Turnbull de Foul-toune’, along with David Turnbull. He may be the John who was on the 1429/30 ‘retour’ panel for the lands of Caverton. In 1432 he was recorded as ‘of the Fulton, Bailie of the regality of Sprouston’, when he witnessed the resignation of the lands of Primside from Andrew Rule to his son George. In 1438 he was Bailie of the Regality of Sprouston at the ‘retour of inquest’ for Ker of Altonburn. He is probably one of the 3 men named ‘Johannem Turnbul’ on a retour for Douglas of Bonjedward in 1439. He is described as ‘of Foultoone’ when part of an inquest into lands of Newlands, held at Jedburgh in 1440. Philip and James Turnbull are also named, and so may be related. He may also be the John who was on a ‘retour’ panel for Ker of Altonburn in 1446/7. John of Bedrule (15th C.) recorded as ‘Johne turnbull dominio de Foul-toune’ in 1425 when he was one of the witnesses to the sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas. It is not impossible that he is the same man as John of Fulton. His relationship to other Turnburls is unknown, although he was probably closely related to William, founder of Glasgow University. He was probably succeeded by George of Bedrule, recorded from 1448. He may be the ‘Johne Turnbule’ who was on the 1456 panel that acquitted Andrew Ker of Altonburn of the charge of helping the English burn lands around Jedburgh. John of Lanton (15th C.) recorded as being of ’Langtoune’ and constable of ‘le Newerw’ when he witnessed a charter in 1439. The document was a grant by Archibald, Earl of Douglas, to Andrew Ker of Altonburn, for lands in Primside, and was made at Newark Castle. John (15th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls for 1451, when the custom of his goods was paid to Lord Crichton. In 1453 the rentals from the west side of Dunmure (it is not clear where this was) were in his lands. John of Hassendeanbank (15th C.) recorded in 1464 resigning the lands of Hassendeanbank to ‘William de Edmondston’. This may simply have been resigning them to his superior before they were granted again, since the family appear to still hold the lands about a century later. In 1470/1 he was one of the witnesses to the decision to acquit Andrew Ker of Cessford of the charges of assisting the King’s enemies. He is surely related to the William of Hassendeanbank who is recorded in 1432. John (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the local men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. He is surely related to other Turnbulls who were named (Andrew, Stephen and Richard), but it is unclear how. He is recorded as ‘Johannes Turnebule’. It is possible he is the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John of Ern Cleuch (15th C.) member of the panel that met in Jedburgh to rule on the dispute over the lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex in 1464/5. Probably the same John ‘Turnebull’ was on the inquest panel to decide on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers in 1464/5 (along with Hector, George and William of Minto). He is probably related to the David of Ern Cleuch who is recorded 30 years later. John (15th C.) granted the lands of ‘Stowislee’ (i.e. Stouslie) in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton, resigned by William Lindsay of Garmilton. He is described as dwelling in Borthwick (presumably the Borthwick Water). In a document of 1468 he binds himself on payment of 100 merks Scots on 40 days notice to resign the lands in favour of John Lord Lindsay of the Byres. John (15th C.) recorded in 1468 when he was one of 2 men appointed to represent Selkirkshire on a Parliamentary inquisition to assess the tax on barons. It is unclear whether the is the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John of Harden (15th C.) probably the last Turnbull of Harden, son of Walter (who is recorded in 1468). He had a charter for the lands of Harden in 1482, granted by the Baron of Wilton, Henry Wardlaw. A letter under the seal of James IV in 1491 requires John Scott, Baron of Wilton to receive Alexander, Lord Home as tenant in the lands of Harden, which had fallen into the King’s hands because he had ‘died a bastard without lawful heirs’. He could be the same John who held the lands of Stouslie. He may be the John who acted as one of the Earl of Angus’ Bailies for infesting David Scott of Branxholme in the lands of Mangerton in 1482. John (15th C.) listed in 1476 as being ‘of Phirth’, which could possibly be Firth in Lilliesleaf Parish. He is among a number of Border Lairds involved in an action over lands in Linton Parish, registered with Parliament. He is probably the John ‘duellands in the Fithe’ who in 1479 was ordered (along with James Alemoor of that Ilk) to pay rentals of lands in Cavers Parish to Robert of ‘Murheid’. John (15th C.) son of Thomas of Phaup. He leased Phaup at least in the period 1483–7. He was listed as son and heir of Thomas ‘of Fawlishop’ in 1486 when he leased the lands of Huntlie. John (15th C.) witness to the document of 1488 in which Greenwood (i.e. Girnwood) and the Lyne were leased by Sir Thomas of Greenwood to Robert Scott of Allanhaugh. It was signed at St. Mary’s Church in Ettrick Forest and his name appears as ‘Johanne Turnbull’. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (15th C.) recorded in 1490 when he was assigned the lands of ‘Corscleuch’ (i.e. Crosscleuch) by James IV. He may thus have been the first of the Turnbulls of Crosscleuch. John (15th C.) son of Robert in Wolfelee. He was fined for non-appearance at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh in 1493. John (15th C.) tenant in Ruecastle, recorded in 1493. He had remission for stealing 6 oxen, 2 horses and 12 cows from tenants ‘de slittrik’ (i.e. on Sltirig Water). His surety was the Laird of Bedrule. Probably the same tenant in Ruecastle was fined in 1502 for non-appearance at the Justice- aire, when he was surety for himself. Additionally he was one of the 20 or so Turnbulls and others who failed to appear in 1502 to answer for the murder of Robert Oliver; Thomas of Bedrule was fined for not entering him in the court. John of Gatehousecote (15th C.) recorded in the Justice- aire at Jedburgh in 1493. George of Bedrule had remission for several crimes, including assisting him in his ‘theft and treason’. Separately, George Waugh in Hawick was allowed to compone for resetting him when he was ‘at the horn’ for the murder of Archibald Rutherford. He was surely related to Thomas, who was also recorded in Gatehousecote at the same time. Perhaps the same John ‘in gaihous coit’ was recorded in 1502 among the men who were put to the horn for involvement in the murder of Robert Oliver; the person called to enter him was George of Hallrule, while Andrew and William in Gatehousecote were also mentioned and so surely related. John (15th C.) recorded being ‘in Hawick’ at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Along with Robert Scott in Todshawhaugh, he was allowed to ‘compone’ for the crime of bringing in Englishmen and he was also charged with common theft. His surety was the Laird of Howpasley. John ‘de Newhalburn’ (15th C.) listed in the pardon granted by the King to Sir Thomas of Phau in 1494. He may have been a son of Sir Thomas (perhaps the same son recorded in the 1480s); he and Robert of ‘Mudlaw’ are listed, with one of them being ‘sorum filiorum’ (his son), but it is unclear which one. His residence (transcribed as ‘Newhalby’ in Pitcairn’s book) may have been the Newhall Burn to the south-west of Traquair. John (15th C.) listed in the will of Sir David Scott of Branholme being bequeathed 40 sheep. He is probably the same as one of the contemporary Johns. John ‘Case’ (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance; his nickname there is given as ‘easy’. He is also recorded as ‘Johne Turnbule, callit Case, in Nethir Bonechestir’ in the accounts for the Jedburgh Justice Aire of 1494/5; he contributed 4 cows. He was probably related to the David of Bonchester recorded in 1502. John (15th C.) recorded as being in Minto in 1493 when, along with 4 others, he ‘came in the King’s Will for treasonably concealing and Stouthreif of ten score pas-pennys pertaining to the King, found in the Kirk of Mynto’. His surety was the Laird of Bedrule. It is possible he is the same as John of Minto, who is recorded in the early 16th century. Perhaps the same man was recorded in 1498 as ‘Suer[?] Johannis Turnbule’; with William of Minto, Ralph Ker and others, he was part of a bond to act upon men who were already declared as fugitives. He may also be the John who was recorded as father-in-law to Robert Young in Minto, for who William of Minto served as surety in 1502. John (15th C.) resident of Bedrule, recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493. He had remission for committing theft before the time of his previous remission and also for involvement with the Duke of Albany during the earlier revolt. John ‘Blindd John’ (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as ‘Sande Turnbulis brothir of Ballentyn, callit blind Johne’ in the accounts of the Justice-aire of Jedburgh, when he contributed 2 cows (for the expenses of the court, presumably in lieu of a fine). This is probably Bellendean near Roberton, but other places may be possible. His brother was clearly Alexander. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as resident of Dryden. He was allowed to compone for the crimes of communing with rebels who were at the horn, specifically Patrick and Gilbert. Probably the same John, son of Andrew of Dryden was recorded in 1494/5 among men who John Scott of Deloraine was allowed to compound for associating with; they were said to have stolen 60 sheep belonging to William Murray from Sundhope. In the Register of the Privy Seal in 1498 he is listed being ‘in Dridane’, presumably meaning he farmed at Dryden, near Teviothead. Along with John Scott from Northhouse, he received a pardon for his crimes of assisting the English. John (15th C.) son of Matthew in Hassendean. In 1494/5 he and his brother Nicholas had remission for the murder of Robert Redford, with John Gledstains as surety. They are recorded in the Treasurer’s accounts for 1494/5 having obtained remission from the King. John (15th/16th C.) name of 2 men listed in the 1501 Exchequer Rolls, along with Robert, Ninian, George and David. Their £40 fine was granted to Thomas, son and heir of George of Bedrule. John (15th/16th C.) son of Philip, probably the Laird of Whithope. He is mentioned in 1494/5 when the Laird of Bedrule acted as his surety and was fined for his non-appearance at the Justice-aire. He was also recorded in 1501 among 10 men whose fines were remitted, including Turnbulls of Fulton and Bonchester; his name is recorded as ‘Johannis Turnbull Philipson’. John ‘Blue John’ (15th/16th C.) one of the Turnbulls and others who were failing to appear in court in Jedburgh in 1502 to answer for the murder of Robert Oliver. Many of the others were from Rulewater, suggesting he was also. His nickname was recorded as ‘blew Johne’, and he was distinct from John in Ruecastle, John in Jedburgh and John in Wells, who were also listed. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in Jedburgh in 1502 when he was among a large group of men who failed to appear to the charge of murder of Robert Oliver and were declared as fugitives. Mark Ker of Dolphinston was fined for his non-appearance. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as tenant in Wells in 1502. Along with about 20 Turnbulls and others he failed to appear to answer for the murder of Robert Oliver. Mark Ker in Dolphinston was called to enter him, and subsequently fined, while he was put to the horn and forfeited his goods; the Sheriff of Roxburgh served as his surety (unlike for most of the other men).

He was probably related to Adam in Wells, who was also listed. John of Tofts (15th/16th C.) served as surety in 1502 for David, described as ‘in Tofts’, who was surely a close relative. David, along with Robert, called ‘Muriale’ had been involved in a raiding party that burned and stole livestock from Riddell. Probably the same John ‘in tofts’ is mentioned in 1493 when his son Cock had remission for theft of an ox from Minto. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in Belses in 1502. James Davidson ‘in camys’ (perhaps Camieston) was surety for him, and he was also surety for himself, and fined for non-appearance at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh. John (15th/16th C.) recorded being ‘de france’ in 1502 at the Justice- aire held in Jedburgh. The Master of Angus (George Douglas) was fined for failing to arrest him. It is unclear where ‘France’ was located. John of Minto (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as an associate of Peter in Banchester. Along with his accomplices, they had burned grain belonging to George Rutherford at ‘Sandystanis’. He may be the same as one of the 2 men called John ‘in Myuto’ who were listed on the 1516 pardon for Turnbulls who assisted Alexander, Lord Home; one of these men is stated to be a cousin of William of Minto. John (15th/16th C.) Abbot of Newbattle 1503-20. It is unclear how he might be related to other Turnbulls. John (15th/16th C.) recorded along with Robert as witness to a document relating to the lands of Allanshaws (in Lauderdale) and Melrose Abbey. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as tenant of Hornshole in 1516, on a long list of Turnbulls given remission for any role in helping the treasonous Homes. He was probably related to James and Adam, recorded as tenants at Hornshole in 1501 and 1502, respectively John ‘Black Sow’ (d.1531) hanged for ‘Common Theft, outputting and inputting thereof’. There is no information about his relationship to other Turnbulls. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘Bailie in that part’ along with Hector of Barnhills in a sasine in the Barony of Feu-Rule in 1531. John (16th C.) listed in 1531 as ‘tutor of the lord of Philiphaucht’ and grandson of Robert ‘Trummill’ when an acknowledgement was made in Selkirk for a tack being given to Mark Ker (Burgess of Selkirk) for 5 years for lands in Philiphaugh. John of Hassendeanbank (d.bef. 1540) recorded in a court case of 1540 involving a dispute between Thomas Turnbull, tenant of Rawfalt, with William Scott of Hassendean, over a ‘wadset’ of his (as well as other issues) for the lands of ‘Nether Copit Rig’ and ‘Easter Mains, called Copit Rig’. His family appear to have held the lands of Hassendeanbank since 1409. John (16th C.) early example of a Turnbull not directly associated with the Borders. He was Deacon of the Guild of Wrights in Cupar, Fife. In 1554 he and others were imprisoned for leading the Craftsmen of Cupar in a revolt against their Provost and Bailies. John (16th C.) recorded in 1559 as Clerk of Minto Parish. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls. It is possible that he is the same as ‘Johanne Trummill’, who acted as a witness for the inventory after the death of William Scott of Kirkurd in 1552. John of Philiphaugh (16th C.) recorded in 1558 when he was served heir to his mother Janet, in her 5-acre lands of Philiphaugh. He was also recorded as witness to the 1560 bond between the Rutherfords and the Kers. He is probably the ‘Lard of Phillophauch’ listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. He could have been son of Robert, who is recorded in the 1530s. John (16th C.) tenant farmer at Hall- rule. His house and yard are referred to in the 1562 Baronial dispute over the lands of Feu-Rule. This could have been the same as John ‘in Roull’ recorded in 1583/4 along with George in Hall- rule and Walter in Hobburn, when Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst had an ‘escheat’ to seize their goods for not vacating their lands. John of Hassendeanburn (16th C.) recorded in 1564 when he accused David Elliot (son of Gavin Elliot of Horsleyhill) of stealing 80 sheep from his lands of Hassendeanbank. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls of Hassendeanbank. John of Gatehousecote (16th C.) recorded in 1567 among the list of men accused of treason for assisting James Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell. Probably the same ‘Jok Turnbull in Gaithous Cott’ was listed in 1575 he was among men asked to decide whether Robert Fraser was responsible for stealing some English horses. John (16th C.) tenant in Abbot- rule. In 1569 he was warded within the Sheriffdom of Perth, with his sureties being Andrew Home, Commendator of Jedburgh, Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, Sir Nicholas Rutherford of Hundalee and Robert Kerr of Woodhead. He could be the same as one of the other Johns. John of Deneside (16th C.) described as holding a peel house. He was probably a direct ancestor of Adam, who left Deneside in 1715. He may have been descended from Robert and David who were recorded in 1611. John of Howden (16th C.) recorded in 1576 among a group of Turnbulls and others (from Barnhills, Hallrule, Billerwell, Belses and Chesters) who had a bond with another group... of Turnbulls (from Minto, Bewlie, Kames and Troneyhill) and others, not to harm each other. He is surely related to the later John of Howden. John (16th C.) recorded as Reader of Bedrule 1576–78. George was Reader right after this, so it is possible that one of the names is an error. He also appears to have served as Reader at Abbotrule and Lessuden. It is possible that he was an ex-monk of Dryburgh Abbey. John (16th C.) nephew of Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule, with his father perhaps being Robert. He was listed in 1578/9 as ‘broder sone to the said Sir Thomas’ when members of the family were asked to appear before the Privy Council to answer for the murder of Thomas Shiel. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) tenant of Nether Bonchester. In 1581 he was listed among the 10 men accused of the murder of Walter, son of Wat Turnbull of Bewlie. He could be the brother of David in Belses (with other brothers being Adam and George) accused of harassing the widow of Walter of Rawflat in 1583. John of Minto (16th/17th C.) possibly son of John. He may have been a minor when he succeeded, since Hector Turnbull ‘tutor of Minto’ is recorded in 1553/4 and in 1569. In 1571 he was one of the sureties for the leaders of the Olivers, along with Sir Thomas and 2 Rutherfords. In 1571/2 he signed a bond to act against Borders thieves and signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573. In 1573 he was among men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm, although they were acquitted because Kerr had reset the fugitive Kerr of Ferniehirst. In 1575 he was one of the arbitrators for the Elliots in their feud with the Pringles. He also served as surety in 1576. In 1576 he was listed among a group of Turnbulls and others (from Bewsie, Kames and Troneyhill), who had a bond not to harm another group of Turnbulls (from Barnhills, Billerwell, Belses and Chesters); however, there was a complaint a few months later that his ‘servand and dependar’ Walter in Firth attacked Patrick Bennet, servant to Adam of Belses. In about 1578 he signed a bond with other Rutherfords and Turnbulls and another bond between the Kers and the Rutherfords. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned. In 1580 he was ordered, along with Sir Thomas of Bedrule and Wat of Bewlie, to enter pledges into ward in Edinburgh Castle (which apparently he did) or be declared a rebel. He and Wat of Bewlie had a caution for £2000 that they would appear before the Privy Council, with William Redpath of Greenlaw as surety. Also in 1580 he was head of a group of Turnbulls of Minto, Wauchope, Bewlie and Hobsburn who had a bond to keep the peace with the Turnbulls of Bedrule and others. In 1581 he and Martin Elliot of Braithlie were caution for the re-entry of Hob Elliot of Braithlie, as pledge for the Elliots of Gorrenberry. In the same year he was among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rievings crimes and additionally among Border Lairds who denounced their bonds with Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. Also in 1581 he was accused of being head of a group of Turnbulls who came to the farm of Rawflat and there harassed the widow and children of the murdered Walter Turnbull, then stole the cattle and goods from the farm. In 1583 the Kerrs of Ancrum paid surety for him not to harm Agnes, widow of Walter of Rawflat and her tenants and servants; the document was signed for him, because he could not write. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. And he is recorded in 1584/5 as the first name on a list of Turnbulls, Douglases and others who were to appear before the Privy Council ‘concerning their obedience to his Majestie and quieting of the countrie’. He is also listed about 1590 among landed men of the Borders and in 1591 when he was among the Barons who pledged their support for the King against the Earl of Bothwell. He is also recorded in 1595 when he was one of the main signatories of a letter of assurance for the behaviour of the Turnbulls descended from the house of Minto; this included the Turnbulls of Hallrule, Barnhills, Gatehousecote and ‘David Daviesounie of the Cambes’. In 1599 he served as cautioner for entering the Lorraines who were accused of the murder of David Turnbull, heir of Wauchope. His name is recorded in 1603 on a long list of local landowners whom the Baron of Hassendean (James Cunningham, Earl of Glancairn) was trying to remove. In 1603 his son Thomas was served heir to his lands in Minto (suggesting he was deceased by then). John ‘Jock’ (16th/17th C.) nephew of George of Belses. In 1603 he was recorded as ‘Jok Trumbill in Belsis’ when his uncle George was convicted of ‘the filthie cryme of Incest and Adulterie’ with his wife Marion. John (16th/17th C.) from Braithlaugh. He is recorded in 1601 among a group of Turnbulls and Lorraines accused by Englishman Gray of Morpeth of stealing from him. William ‘of Brodehyagh’ is listed after him and so presumably his brother or son. John (16th/17th C.) tenant in Mackside. He is recorded in 1601 when he was accused by Mr. Gray of Morpeth of being part of a group of Scotsmen of stealing from him. The others were Lorraines of Appotside and Turnbuls of Braidhaugh. He is also recorded as ‘in Maksyd’ in 1605 when he was pledged to appear at court in Edinburgh. John (16th/17th C.) described as ‘in Tempilhall’ in 1604 when he was ‘Bailie in that part’ for James Sandilands, Baron of Feurlie. In 1605 he was one of the people asked to remove themselves from the lands of Templehall and Brewlands. Another John, also tenant at Templehall or Brewlands, is also mentioned in the same action. John of Barnhills (d.c.1628) eldest son of Hector of Barnhills. He had a marriage contract of 1597 with Isobel, daughter of George Turnbull of Hallrule. This was followed by a grant of the half lands of Hallrule in 1603, when he was still a minor. He had a charter for the lands of Barnhills in 1607, and a charter of confirmation in 1618. In 1609 he and his father Hector were part of an action brought by David, son of John Scott ‘of the Tour in Hawick’, for not paying what they had borrowed from him. In 1613 he sold ‘10 acres of Easter Barnhills’ to Ragwell Bennet. In 1617 there was a ‘renunciation’ to him from James and George Scott (which branch of the Scotts is unclear). He had a ‘wadset’ with Gilbert Elliott (both elder and younger) of Stobs in 1617, and some kind of financial arrangement with Ragwell Bennet in 1618. His brother William in Langraw succeeded to the lands of Barnhills in 1628. John (16th/17th C.) one of the Turnbuls who were accused in 1606 of raiding and burning Appotside and Harwood in the period 1598–1605. He is recorded as ‘Johnne Trumbill, sone to Hecourt of Wauchope’. His brothers included George (also accused in this trial), Thomas (who succeeded to Wauchope) and probably David (who was originally the heir). He was acquitted, although his brother Thomas was found guilty. John (16th/17th C.) son of Robert and grandson of Sir Thomas of Bedrule. He married Judith Forster, probably in the 1590s. John (17th C.) son of George in Philiphaugh. In 1601 he was served heir to his father’s 5-merk land there, called ‘Bairborisland’. He could be the same man as John of Philiphaugh, who was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. He was in turn succeeded by his son William in 1606. John of Howden (17th C.) member of the ‘assyse’ in Dumfries in 1622 and 1623. He could be the Turnbull of Howden who held half the lands of Philiphau in the early 1600s, succeeding his father George in the 5-merk land there, called ‘Bairborisland’. He could be the same man as John of Philiphaugh, who was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. In 1627 he concedes some lands in Philiphaugh to William, portioner of Philiphaugh. In 1630 he was served heir to his father Mark of Howden in the lands of Philhope in the Barony of Hawick. He is surely related to the John who succeeded his father George of Howden in 1601 and the John of Howden recorded in 1576. John (16th/17th C.) half-brother of Walter Scott of Woll, described as ‘apparent of Harden’ in 1608 (even although there had not been any Turnbull Lairds of Harden for a century). Along with John Scott (brother of Walter of Woll) he attacked some of the citizens of Selkirk, and when apprehended by the Selkirk Bailies the pair were forcibly taken from imprisonment by a gang of Scotts and Turnbuls. They were then ordered to appear in Edinburgh or be declared rebels. John (16th/17th C.) part of a group of Scotts and their followers who forcibly released 2 of their kin from the Bailies of Selkirk in 1608. He is listed as ‘apparent of Hundley’ (presumably Huntly). His brothers Robert and Andrew were also involved. John (16th/17th C.) tenant in ‘Elscheuch’ recorded in 1612, this probably being Elfaugh. Along with Andrew in Bonchester, and Andrew’s sons Thomas and John, he complained to the Privy Council that John, Lord Ker of Jedburgh, had unfairly imprisoned them, and they were ordered to be released. John (16th/17th C.) tenant in Crosscleuch in Bedrule Parish in 1619 when he was denounced as a rebel for failing to appear in court along with several other Turnbuls. Their crime was taking wood from the Laird of Traquair’s land at Huntliehill. William was also tenant there, and so presumably a relative. John (16th/17th C.) described as ‘in Newton’ (possibly the one in Bedrule Parish) when he acted as caution (along Gilbert, son to Gavin Elliot of Brugh and 3 men from Headshaw) in 1623 for Mungo Scott from Castleside. Perhaps the same John was ‘in Bedrule’ in 1643 when his lands were valued at £34. John of Minto (d.1641) possibly son of Thomas. He signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. His sons William and Robert became merchants’ apprentices in Edinburgh in 1650 and 1651, respectively. His son John succeeded while still a minor. He died while on army service in Newcastle, this fact convincing his superior to allow his son to marry before he was of age. He is probably the John of Minto whose daughter Alison married William Douglas of Timpendean in 1655. John of Minto (b.1620s) son of John and Elizabeth Eliott. He was brother of William and Robert. He married Rachel Inglis in 1641, even although he was technically too young; this was because his father had died while in military service (and also through the help of his uncle William Turnbull, minister of Makerstown). In the 1643 Land Tax Rolls he was owner of the main part of Minto, along with ‘Mr. William Turnbull’ (his uncle) and Elizabeth Elliot (his mother), valued at £2006 13s 4d. He was also listed as holding the ‘Minister of Makerston’s Lands, being Hornshole’, valued at £100. He is probably the John who was in 1655 served heir to his father John of Minto in 1/3 of the lands and Barony of Minto, including a half merk of land in Minto, with advowson of the church. ‘2 parts of the said landis undisponed’. At the same time he also inherited 1 merkland of Hornshole. It is unclear what his relationship was with John of Knowe, but it seems easy to mix them up; in 1655 he received from John of Knowe his third of the rent of Hyndlee and Rouchhope and in 1656 rented Minto Craig to him (definitively proving they were not one and the same man). In 1657 he was the heritable proprietor of the lands of Hornshole when he had a ‘wadset’ for them with John Scott of Brieryyards, with the consent of William Turnbull, minister of Makerstoun. He appears to have owned part of Standhill in 1660 and could be the John in Standhill recorded in the 1643, 1663 and 1678 Land Tax Rolls. Payments to Lord Lyon in 1662 suggest this is when the family matriculated their arms. He was renewed as a Roxburghshire J.P. in 1663. He was probably the Laird of Minto recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1663 paying £2006 13s 4d. His wife may be the ‘Lady Minto’ who paid tax on £200 for lands in Southdean Parish in 1663. He had one child, also John, and father and son are also easy to confuse. It was probably his son John who sold off the Minto estate. John (17th C.) described as ‘indweller in Machsyde’ when he was witness to a saisine in Rulewater in 1653. John of Minto (d.bef. 1684) son of John. He was involved in a bond with John Turnbull of Knowe, partly paid off in 1668. He was probably the John, recorded along with William in James Wilson’s list of local landowners of the mid-to-late 17th century. He was probably also the same John of Minto who was later married to Rachel, daughter of Cornelius Ingles of ‘Eastbarnes’ (she is recorded as his wife in 1681). In 1672 he had a charter of the Barony of Minto, which was ratified in 1681. In 1673 they were involved in a land deal with Walter Scott of Harwood, selling off the Minto estate, and ending its connection with his family, which had lasted many generations. He also sold about a third of the lands of Minto to Gilbert Elliott of Craigend (who was probably his maternal uncle, and not the same man as Sir Gilbert Elliot, who would unite them into the Barony of Minto in 1706). It seems likely that he was forced to sell off his lands to clear debts (but it may be that the arrangements in the 1670s were only wadsets, and he lost the lands for good in the 1690s). In 1674 he became a Burgess of Edinburgh in right of his wife Rachel (so her father must have been a Burgess too). His wife is recorded recovering the ‘wadset’ with the Earl of Tarras over lands in the Barony of Minto in the period 1682–94. This must be the same John of Minto described as deceased in 1684 when his son John was entered as a Burgess of Edinburgh in his right. He had unnamed children buried in Greyfriars Cemetery in 1670 and 1674. John of Langshaw (17th C.) appointed one of the Commissioners for Roxburghshire (along with Harry McDougall of Makerstoun) in 1665. John of Knowe (d.1675/6) probably eldest son and successor as Laird to Thomas. In 1652 his brother William was appointed as tutor to the children of their relative Thomas in ‘Chesterhouse’ (probably Chesterhall near Ancrum). He appears to have rented Hyndlee and Rouchhope (along with other farmers) from John of Minto in 1655, and he rented Minto Craig from John of Minto in 1656. In 1655 he is recorded in a ‘tack’ with Thomas Turnbull, farmer at Hassendeankbank, and in 1657 in an ‘inhibition’ against Robert Turnbull, son of a Jedburgh merchant. In a discharge of 1658 he is listed along with other Turnbuls, suggesting that he was son of Thomas and brother of William. He is recorded in a bond with James Scott in 1658. He was fined £2,000 in 1662, after the Restoration. He was recorded on the Land Tax Rolls of 1663, paying £227. He was on a list of landowners of Hassendeank Parish in 1666, and he complained against the planned division of that parish in the same year. In 1668 he is mentioned as cautioner for John of Minto (making it clear that they were not the same person, although their relationship is unclear). It was established in 1670 that he owned the burial place within the bellhouse of Hassendeane Kirk. His wife
Agnes Liddell died in 1648. He was probably succeeded by another John, who may have been the John (son of John) who became an apprentice surgeon with Walter Turnbull in Edinburgh in 1675. His daughter Helen married Thomas Turnbull of Tofts in 1669. In 1678 Grizel (sister of Thomas of Knowe), who married Adam Scott of Burnhead, was probably his daughter. His children John, Alexander and Isobel are recorded in 1679 receiving money from his estate. Two wills (one dated 1661, while he was still alive, and another in 1676, possibly after he died) are among the papers of the Horsburgh family in the National Archives. His death is recorded on a table tomb in the old Minto graveyard, along with Thomas of Knowe (d.1646). John of Firth (17th C.) recorded receiving land from Walter Riddell in 1645. He paid tax on £200 according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1664. In 1675 he led a ‘poinding’ against Bessie Murray, widow of James ‘Bucholme’. In 1678 he paid the land tax in Lilliesleaf Parish for his lands of Firth. John (17th C.) recorded in 1676 among a number of local people fined for using weights that were lighter than the standards. Specifically his ‘quarter wanted ane drop’. It is unclear if he was from Hawick or elsewhere, but he must have been a trader at the market in Hawick. He may be the merchant John recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. John (17th C.) tenant in Cavers. He is recorded in 1684 when his former servant James Johnston was among those declared as fugitives for being a Covenantor. John (17th C.) candlemaker in Hawick. In 1684 he was listed among many people declared fugitives for refusing to take ‘the Test’. John (17th C.) candlemaker in Hawick. He was fined in 1689 for his ‘exhorbitant’ marriage with Christian Scott. He may be the same man as the John declared a fugitive in 1684. He was ‘John Trumble, candlemaker’ on the list of subscribers for the Kirk bell drawn up in 1693. He was also listed as a candlemaker on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694, when he paid tax on 2 hearths. John (17th C.) servitor of Gilbert Elliott of Stanedge who is recorded as witness to a bond of 1691 and again in 1693. Possibly the same John is described in 1694 as servitor of ‘Mr Harie Maudl of Kellie’ in another document relating to a bond of 1691 with Gilbert Elliott of Stanedge and Gavin Elliott, his uncle. John (17th C.) resident of Minto Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton, and ‘The malt kilne’ is listed after him, suggesting he may have been maltman at Newton. John (17th C.) resident of Cavers who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) carrier at Tofts according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) tenant in West Middle on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) tenant in Mackside in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) resident at Easter Highchesters according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (17th C.) resident of Raperlaw according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He is listed among the ‘deficients’ of the Parish. John (17th C.) resident at Apple-treehall according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) shepherd at Clarlaw according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) resident at Horsleyhill on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) listed ‘in Hawick’ when his wife’s will was recorded in 1690. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John of Knowe (17th/18th C.) probably succeeded John. He may have been the John who became a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1675. He is recorded in 1689 bringing an action against Rev. Francis Scott, after he had been removed by the Privy Council. John of Minto (17th/18th C.) son of John and Elisabeth Elliott of Stobs. He sold the Minto estate in 1703 to his cousin, Sir Gilbert Elliott of Headshaw, ancestor of the Earls of Minto; it is also stated that he sold it to Walter Scott of Harwood in 1673, but perhaps this was a wadset only. His connection with the other Turnbulls (of Minto and/or Knowe) seems unclear, but he was probably the John (described as a merchant) who became a Burgess and Guild brother of Edinburgh in right of his father in 1684. It may have been his son Patrick who became a Burgess and Guild brother of Edinburgh in 1704, in right of his deceased father (in which case he died about 1703). John (17th/18th C.) cooper of Hawick, listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was also listed as cooper on the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He was an elder of the Kirk, and in 1717 charged with collecting money ‘from ye foot of ye play la to the west end of ye toun’, suggesting he lived in this area perhaps. He was still an elder in 1718. It seems likely he was father of the cooper John who was on the short-list for Cornet in 1710; if so his wife may have been Agnes Moffat and other children were James...
Turnbull

(b.1684) and Elspeth (b.1688). John (18th C.) carter in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He was separate from the contemporary cooper of the same name. John (17th/18th C.) listed as ‘oye to Mr James Ker Sometimes Minister att Abbotroule’ in 1704 when his son Thomas was baptised in Hawick. The witnesses were Bailie George Martin and Patrick McLellan. He was presumably either nephew or grandson of James Ker, but the precise relationship is unclear. John (17th/18th C.) mason of Hawick. In 1717, along with John the cooper, he was ordered to collect monies from the west end of the Town, suggesting he may have lived there. It is possible he was related to the other John. He was still an elder in 1722. In 1725, along with Andrew (also a mason), he witnessed a baptism for smith William Young. Probably the same mason John had a child called Nichol in Hawick in 1709, the mother being Jean Dunlap (‘fornicat.’). John (17th/18th C.) cooper in Hawick. In 1710 he was on the short-list of candidates for Cornet. He was probably son of the earlier cooper of the same name, and may be the John born to John and Agnes Moffat in Hawick in 1686. John (17th/18th C.) described as ‘servitor to Walter Elliott, bailie-deput of the regality of Hawick’ in 1718 when he was rebuked for having a horse race with Thomas Porteous on the Common Haugh on a Sunday. John (17th/18th C.) mason in Whitriggs in Kirkton Parish. His son James was baptised in 1721. James (b.1724), Margaret (b.1728) and Anne (b.1732), also baptised in Kirkton, may also have been his children. John (17th/18th C.) Hawick man who was paid in 1721 for gilding the hands of the Kirk clock. He may thus have been a clockmaker or other tradesman. John (1712/3–87) tenant in Macksie. His family were recorded on an old tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard (although he appears to also be referred to there as Thomas). His wife Isabel died in 1756, aged 41. Their children included Betty, James and Thomas (who probably carried on as tenant of Macksie), as well as William, Mary, Elspeth and Margaret, who died in infancy. John (18th C.) resident of Parkhill in 1743 when his son Robert was was baptised in Roberton Parish. He may have been brother of Walter who also had a child baptised at Parkhill in the same year. John (18th C.) tanner in Hawick. He paid the tax for 15 windows in Hawick in 1748. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbults. John (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. In 1757 he witnessed a baptism for tailor George, who was probably related to him. John (1723–81) son of William, he was born at Whitrig in Kirkton Parish. Around 1744 he was schoolmaster at Kirkton School, also serving as Session Clerk. That year he married Isabel Scott in Wilton. By 1750 he was at Ewes, where he was also Session Clerk. He married Bridget Monet in Hawick in 1759. His children (with his 1st wife) were: William; Betty; and John. With his 2nd wife he had at least one child: Janet. He died in Hawick. John of Wester Swanshiel (b.1729–1820/1) son of Walter, whom he succeeded in 1750 (note there is some confusion here, since Walter Deans says he was son of James). In 1778 he sold Wester Swanshiel to Cornelius Elliot of Woollee, in order to lease a bigger farm (although he is recorded as still being the owner in 1788, so perhaps the sale had not gone through yet). This ended an association of those lands with his family for perhaps 300 years. In 1780 he occupied the farm of Berryfell and also rented Howashiel. He was a major heritor of Hobkirk Parish along with Henry Elliot of Harwood and Thomas Scott of Stonedge. He is recorded as farmer at Berryfell on the 1787–97 Horse Tax Rolls and on the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. He later farmed at Whitehill Brae, where he died. He married Esther Douglas, a relative of Douglas of Trows. Their children were: Janet; Walter, who used to write songs and sonnets, entered the army, moved to England and had a single daughter; Esther; John, who was tenant at Brieryhill and later Minto Kames; Robert, who purchased Galalaw; Betty; and James, tenant farmer at Galalaw. The combined age of he and his wife on their Hobkirk tombstone is 184 (he being 91 and his wife 93). His descendants included Mr. Turnbull of 2 Tower Knowe in the early 1900s. John (d.1772) mason in Minto. He is buried in Bedrule kirkyard. John (18th C.) cooper in Hawick, probably related to the earlier cooper of the same name. He married Christian Veitch and their children included Agnes (b.1756) and Elizabeth (b.1760). John ‘Garleek Jock’ (18th C.) gardener in Hawick. He was Cornet in 1762. Later that year he married Margaret Storie (who died in 1806), the couple being rebuked for their ‘irregular marriage’. Their children included: William (b.1763); Robert (b.1763); Elizabeth (b.1766); and Margaret (1770–1808), who died in Hawick. The 1766 witnesses were Robert Turnbull and Thomas Pringle. He is recorded as ‘garlic jock’ when his wife died. John (18th C.) listed as owner of a ‘House and Yard’ in Minto Parish in 1779, valued at £1 16s 7d. It was owned by Lord Minto in 1811. He could be the same as one of the other Johns. John (1743/4–1816) probably son of Thomas. He was tenant farmer at Mackside. He is recorded there on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax at Mackside in the same year. He married Ann Common, and she died in 1803, aged 41. They had a daughter who died in infancy. The family are recorded on an old tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard (although some of the names and generations may be confused). John (b.c.1745) farm worker at Stonedge. By his first wife he had sons William (a forester in Jedforest) and James (farm worker at Unthank, who died at Midburn). He secondly married Christian Grieve, and their children were: Robert, shepherd at Philiphaugh and elsewhere; Kate, who married and moved to London; Margaret, who married George Henderson, weaver at Kilnowe and was great-grandmother of Euphemia Henderson who lived at Weens Lodge; Mary, second wife of Adam Turnbull, farmer at Midburn; and Jane, who married Andrew Turnbull, gardener at Weens. John (18th C.) groom at Branxholme in 1785–88, when he was working for Adam Ogilvie, Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch. He was listed as house servant at Branxholme in 1791. In 1794 possibly the same John was gamekeeper at Stobs for Sir William Elliott. However, in 1797 he was a house servant at Branxholme again. John (1762/3–1841) weaver in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on the Howegate with his brother James, who was also a weaver. He is buried in St. Mary’s along with his siblings Robert, James and Janet. John (b.bef. 1770) served as an officer in Stuart’s Regiment of the Scots Brigade in Holland before turning to medicine. He was apprenticed to Benjamin Bell in Edinburgh and studied at Edinburgh University, receiving the Diploma of the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh in 1793. He practised at Belford, Northumberland and then in Hawick. He received his M.A. and M.D. from St. Andrews University in 1796. John (18th C.) listed as servant at Cavers in 1793 and 1794, when he was working for George Douglas. It may just be a coincidence that there was a servant with the same name earlier at Branxholme and at the same time at Stobs. John (d.bef. 1816) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Mary Scott in 1773 and she died in Hawick in 1816. Their children included: John (b.1774); Margaret (b.1776); Christy (b.1778); William (b.1785); Margaret (again, b.1787); and Robert (b.1788). He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott and Catherine Turnbull in Wilton in 1770. John ‘Jock’ (18th/19th C.) said to be son of Robert, who was farmer at Hallrule Mill. A story is recounted by Walter Deans in 1887, who said that he was ‘imbued with the ancient spirit and daring of the Turnbulls’, and that he would regularly settle disputes with his enemies by picking fights at local fairs; on one occasion after he had dispatched a large group of enemies at Jedburgh, his mother, Tibbie Donaldson, said ‘ma heart was wae to see them a’ gushin’ an’ bluidin’, and oor Jock knockin’ them doon’. John (18th/19th C.) resident at Hudshouse. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. John (d.1827) Hawick clockmaker. His property immediately to the east of the old Town House was bought by the Council in 1827 and later used to build part of the new Town Hall. His niece, Anna Maria Brown, wife of C. Brown, traveller of London, was served as his heir in 1827. He may have been related to the John who was paid for gilding the hands of the Kirk clock in 1721. John (1761/2–1803) probably son of Thomas, he was tenant in Mackside, like at least 3 generations before him. The family are recorded on an old tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard. John (18th/19th C.) son of George of the Cross Keys. He was recorded as son of George ‘Senior’ on the 1794 short-list for Cornet. He was elected Cornet in 1796, when he was stated to be of the Cross Keys. He was also recorded at the Cross Keys in 1808 when his son Walter died. This is probably the Cross Keys on the High Street (rather than the Sandbed), although this is unclear. John (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Colterscleuch, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. John (18th/19th C.) recorded at Denholm on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. No information such as occupation is given about him. John (18th/19th C.) wright in Denholm, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is separate from the other John who is also listed there. John (18th/19th C.) recorded at Grange in Castleton Parish on the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. John (1762–c.1850) 2nd son of John, who was the last Turnbull Laird of Wester Swanshiel. His brother Walter moved to England, and so he became the local representative of the Turnbulls of Hartshaugh and Swanshiel. He was tenant at Brieryhill and later at Minto Kames. He is probably the John who was listed as owner of Wester Swanshiel in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He married and his children included John, Thomas, Walter and Margaret. He lived to an old age, being still at Minto Kames at the 1841 census. He could be father of Gavin, who was minister at Teviothead. John (18th/19th C.) in charge of wood management at Branxholme in at least the years 1814/5, when he is recorded supervising and paying labourers for ‘upholding the plantation dikes’. He may be the same John recorded conveying a letter for Adam Ogilvie at Branxholme in 1790. He may also be the John who was a farm worker, about 75 years old, at Branxholme in 1841. John (b.c.1765) merchant on the south side of Main Street in Lilliesleaf in 1841. He is probably the draper or grocer recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. John (b.c.1780) mason in Lilliesleaf, as recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He probably lived on Main Street in 1841. His wife’s name was Elizabeth. John (18th/19th C.) tailor in Lilliesleaf, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. John (b.c.1780) joiner on the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In the 1836 electoral roll he was listed as joint proprietor with John junior. He is probably the ‘John & Son’ listed as joiner on the Round Close in 1837. His wife was Margaret. He is probably the John recorded along with his wife Margaret as a joiner on the 1841 census, around 10 High Street. John (b.1780/1) born in Wilton Parish, he was a servant at Stirches. He was listed as servant at Stirches among heads of households in Wilton Parish 1835–41. He was footman at Stirches House on the 1851 census. His wife was Isabella and they had a daughter, Ann. John (b.1780/1) stocking-maker in Wilton Parish. He was listed as stocking-maker at Crawhill Park among heads of households in Wilton Parish 1835–41. He was also an elder in Wilton Kirk. His wife was Janet and their children included Isabella and George. In 1851 his family were living on Wilton Place. John (b.c.1784/5) agricultural labourer, both in Southdean Parish. He was living at Todshawhaugh Cottages in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Beatrix and their children included Robert, Janet and John. John (b.1786/7) shepherd at Burngrove in Wilton Parish. He is recorded there in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Mary and they had a daughter Isabella. John (1787–1857) 2nd son of James, who farmed at Rueycastle. In 1811 he became tenant farmer at Spittal-on-Rule. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He was recorded at Spittal in 1841 and 1851. He is probably the ‘Mr. Turnbull in Spittal-on-Rule’ who was said to take a keen interest in the Sclenty Schuil. In 1827 in Wilton Parish he married Isabella Lockie. Their children included: Janet (b.1820); Helen Rutherford (b.1822); James (b.1823), who took over the tenancy of Spittal; Mary (b.1825) and Isabella A.G. (b.1830). He secondly married Ann Euphemia Burnett (from Edinburgh) and further children included: John Rutherford (b.1838); Margaret Catherine (b.1840); Elizabeth Rutherford (b.1842); William George (b.1844); Alexander Jamieson (b.1846); Agnes R. (b.1847); Walter Douglas (b.1849); Anne Euphemia (b.1851); and Jessie Catherine (b.1856). Ann is recorded as ‘Late Farmer’s Widow’ in the 1861 census. John (b.c.1787/8) eldest son of John, farmer at Brieryhill and Minto Kames. He carried on the tenancy of Minto Kames when his father retired. He married Esther Turnbull. His children included John, Isabel, Thomas, James, Agnes, Robert (who became a solicitor) and Walter (a stone mason). In 1851 he is listed as retired and living at Newton in Wilton Parish with his wife Esther and children Margaret, Robert, Walter, Esther and Mary, plus his brother Thomas. In 1861 he was at Wilton Dean. He retired from farming and lived to the age of 88. John (1788–1849) son of Thomas (‘Bailie Tammy’) and Margaret Darling. He may also have been a Bailie. He was a dyer on the Crescent, carrying on some of his father’s business and founding the company John Turnbull & Son, Slitrig Dyeworks in 1819. He is recorded as dyer in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and as a dyer and carpet manufacturer in the 1837 directory. He maintained the Baptists within Hawick after the death of their local leader William Thorburn; he helped the congregation acquire a room for worship on the ground floor of 8 Allars Crescent. He married Isabella Rutherford in Jedburgh in 1831. His children were: Thomas (b.1833); Alexander (b.1835); John D. (b.1838); Catherine (b.1840); and Margaret Darling (b.1842/3), who married Thomas Bell, and whose daughter Isabella R. was the first person baptised in the new Baptist Kirk on Bourtree Place. In 1841 he was living on the Crescent with his wife Isabell and 4 children, but by 1851 his wife was a widow there. He is probably the John, dyer on the Crescent listed in Slater’s 1852 directory, even although he was deceased by then (since the firm continued). A portrait of him exists. John (b.1795) born in Minto Parish, he was a seedsman and spirit dealer on Allars Bank. In 1851 he was living at Allars Bank and listed as a farmer of 130 acres (employing 5 labourers) and a nursery and seedsman (employing 42 people). In 1861 he was at the corner of Bourtree Place and North Bridge Street and listed as ‘Nursery & Seedsman’. His wife was Violet H. Thorburn, and their children included: George (b.1820); Euphemia; Jessica; William; John; Isabella (b.1830); and James (b.c.1838), who worked in the nursery business. In 1851 he was listed as a farmer. By 1861 he had moved to the east side of Bridge Street. John (1796–1875) youngest son of William of Burnfoot and Eleanor Stephenson. He succeeded his father as farmer at Burnfoot and West Buccleuch. He also carried on his father’s reputation as a breeder of short-horn cattle at Burnfoot. In his younger days he was a keen follower of the Buccleuch Hunt. He was probably the John listed at Burnfoot among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He is listed as farmer at Burnfoot in 1835–41, among heads of households in Wilton Parish. He is recorded in 1851 and 1861 as farmer of 200 acres, employing 9 labourers and was still farmer at Burnfoot in 1868. He married Mary Kilner Anderson, who was from Huddersfield. Their children included: William (b.1833); Betsy Anderson (b.1836); Eleanor Stephenson (b.1833); Thomas Anderson (b.1839); and Mary (b.1841). His last 20 years were spent in failing health, and he was seldom seen in public. He died at Burnfoot. John (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Helen Goodfellow and their children included Robert (b.1826) and George (b.1830). John (b.1803) youngest of 7 sons of James and Betty Adamson, he was born at Hobbirk Kirkstile. He had brothers who were schoolmasters of Wilton and Hobbirk. He became a grocer in Newcastle. He was listed as a grocer and spirit dealer in Newcastle, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He may be the carter in Newcastle listed as male head of his family in 1835. In 1824 he married Wilhelmina (or ‘Mina’), daughter of George Scott, shepherd at Lodgegill. They had a family of 10: James (1825–78), grocer in Hawick; George (1826–86), who died in Edinburgh and had a daughter Elizabeth Lawrie who was also a teacher; Elizabeth (b.1828), who married Jedburgh baker W. Hollands; Thomas (1830–60), who died at Morebattle, and had a son Dr. Adam Robert, who was medical superintendent at the Fife and Kinross Lunatic Asylum; Robert (1832–64), who died unmarried at Saratoga Springs, U.S.A.; William (b.1834), who died in infancy; William again, who also died (d.1836); William Elliot (1838–68), clerk at Register House; Walter Hall (b.1841) provision merchant in Edinburgh; and Margaret (b.1842), married Linlithgow paper merchant John Lovell. He is buried with his wife at Rosebank cemetery in Edinburgh. John (1807–c.49) son of John and Margaret Murray, he was born in Hawick Parish. In 1833 he married Helen (1808–98), daughter of William Laidlaw and Helen Douglas. In 1841 he was a joiner living on the Round Close, but emigrated soon afterwards, settling in Galt, Ontario. His children (the first 3 born in Hawick) were: John (b.1835); William (b.1836); Helen (b.1841); and Thomas (b.1850). John Robson (1807–66) youngest son of Adam, farmer at Hassendeanbank, and Betty Scott, from Skelfhill. He attended Minto School and Edinburgh University and became an architect. He was Master of Works at Windsor Castle in the period 1845–66. He married Ann Oliver from Middlesex and they had 5 children. He is buried at Windsor Castle. John (b.1808) son of Alexander and Jean Scott. He was a joiner and innkeeper in Denholm. He is probably the joiner recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was proprietor of the Cross Keys on Main Street. In 1851 he was living with his mother Jane, who was postmistress, his sister Jane and his nephew John. In 1861 he was with his sister Jean and cousin Agnes Scott. John (19th C.) educated in Selkirk, he became schoolmaster at Millburn (otherwise known as Hermitage) in Castleton Parish in 1838. It seems unlikely that he was there for long. John (b.c.1810) joiner in Hawick, listed at the Round Close in 1841. He is probably son of John, who was also a joiner, and was part of the ‘John & Son’ listed as joiners on the Round Close in Pigot’s 1837 directory. His wife was Helen, and their children included John, William and Helen. John (19th C.) farmer at East Middle, probably son of Thomas. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1863. John (19th C.) son of Robert. He was a grocer to trade, with his shop at Bonchester Bridgend. In 1835 he became the first postmaster of the Rule valley, however he died not long afterwards and was succeeded by his sister Betty. John (19th C.) resident of Appletreehall. In 1863 he donated a Roman bronze fibula to the Museum. It is possible this was the ‘fibula, made apparently either of jet or cannel coal and bearing a fine polish’ found on the borders of Hawick Parish and described in 1839. John (b.1803/4) shepherd and agricultural labourer in Florida in Liddesdale. He was listed there among heads of households in Castleton in 1836–41. The 80 year-old James who lived with him in 1841 was probably his father. By 1851 and 1861 he was a shepherd and he is recorded as farmer at Florida in 1868. His wife was Jane, and their children included James, Janet, Walter, Elizabeth, John, William and Andrew. John (c.1818–c.1905) 2nd son of Adam and great-grandson of Adam of De-nesyde, he was born at Old Fodderlee. He married Jane, daughter of William Nichol, farmer at Newlands, Minto, and she died in 1896. He later lived in the Back Row, Selkirk. He had 2 sons and 3 daughters. John (19th C.) coachman at Weens estate. He married Helen, daughter of Walter Amos. Their son Walter Amos was carpenter at Bonchester Bridge and married his cousin Janet Kerr Amos in 1881. John (1825/6–75) eldest son of Alexander, who was forester at Cavers. He married Helen, daughter of James Stoddart, shepherd at Falahill. Their family consisted of 6 sons (including Alexander, servant at Wolfelee) and 5 daughters. He died at Westerhouses. John (19th C.) mason in Denholm. In 1863 he donated an old coin to the Museum. John (19th C.) son of Thomas, who was shepherd on Templehall. He married Agnes, daughter of shepherd Robert Telfer. Among their children was John, who was shepherd at several farms in Rulewater. John (19th C.) eldest son of John, farmer at Minto Kames. Along with his brother Thomas he went out to Australia when gold was discovered near Melbourne in the 1850s. He returned to Hawick and married Mary, sister of builder Adam Scott in 1866. He farmed at Priestrig. His children were John, Thomas, Christina (who married Rev. John Stevenson of Bedrule) and Esther (who kept house for her 2 brothers at Bonchester). John (19th C.) Race Judge at the Common Riding in the 1840s. John (b.1826/7) shepherd in Rulewater, son of John and grandson of Thomas who was shepherd on Templehall farm. He was born in Hawick Parish and was related to the Turnbuls of Hartshaugh and Swan-shiel. He was probably son of the founder of the gro-cery and wine store. John A. (19th C.) draper on the Howegate. He was later a tobacconist. His daughter Amy married her cousin James Turnbull, farmer at Galalaw. John (1836–1915) from the family of Bedrule, he was born in Jedburgh, where he worked at the Procurator Fiscal’s Office before becoming the first accountant of the Hawick Branch of the Royal Bank of Scotland. After holding this position for 15 years he moved to the Gala branch where he was appointed Agent in 1902 and retired in 1909. He was also ac-tuary for the Gala branch of the Trustee Savings Bank for almost 40 years. He married Isabella Ewen Turnbull (1834–1917) and their children were James Brydon, John William, Gilbert Kilpatrick, Helen, Robert John (killed on a train in the U.S.A.), Douglas (of the Imperial Yeomanry, died at Pretoria), George Hector (died in Nashville, Tennessee) and E.J. (of Dayton, Ohio). John (1838–1910) son of John and grandson of ‘Bailie Tammy’. He worked in the family dyers business. He lived at Kirkton House, which in 1901 had 9 rooms and 2 servants. He married Sarah Hall, who was from England. Their children included: Sarah Thompson (1862–78); John D. (b.1865); and Williamina Thompson (b.1869), who married James Boyd Sime. John (b.1859) son of grocer James and Annie Robson. In 1889 he married Mary Stewart at Ilkley. Their children were James Stewart; Charles Stewart; Isabell Young Firth; Donald MacLeod Victor; Frederick William Barrie; and Douglas Elliot Scott. John Turnbull (b.1868) son of John, farmer at Priestrig and Mary Scott. He was born in Wilton Parish. He became joint tenant at Bonchester with his brother Thomas. John Weir (b.1870) clothier in Denholm, son of clothier and tailor James. He was educated in Denholm until the age of 16, acting as pupil-teacher there. He was an apprentice with his father until 1890 then worked in Glasgow for 2 years, returning to Denholm to join his father in ‘R. Turnbull & Son’, later becoming the sole partner. He acted as local Registrar in Denholm and lived at Rosebank. In 1895 he married his cousin Isabella Macdonald; she was daughter of Jessie Scott, daughter of Robert Scott, farmer at Todlaw. John (19th/20th C.) cashier with Wilson & Armstrong at Weensland Mills. He later became a partner in Turnbull & Hodgson, coal merchants, then had his own coal business and finally was involved with Teviot Tweed Co. He married Barbara Scott Davidson, daughter of James. John (19th/20th C.) became Managing Director of Pringle’s in 1929, following J. Boyd Sime’s resignation. He himself resigned in 1933, to be replaced by Arthur Oddy and Willie Mactaggart. John Fisher ‘Guttie’ or ‘Gutty’ (1932–82) local grocery merchant and Town Councillor, husband of Myra. He served an apprenticeship with Wilson & Glenny before taking over the family business in 1954, based at 51 High Street. He revived the Turnbull clan in 1977, after effectively being dormant. His business also sold a blended whisky called ‘Teviotdale’. He was a Town Councillor for 11 years, starting in 1969. His children were Barrie, Deborah and Hamish The Turnbull Clan named their lifetime achievement award after him. Joseph (19th C.) postman in the Denholm area in the 1860s. Lawrence (15th C.) part of the ‘retour of inquest’ for Ker of Altonburn in 1438. It is unclear which branch of the Turnbulls he belonged to, but he is listed right after Archibald, and John of Fulton is also mentioned. Lawrence (15th/16th C.) son of William in Bonchester. In 1502 he was listed among many Turnbulls and others who were declared as fugitives for their part in the murder of Robert Oliver. The person who was supposed to enter him into the court was George of Hallrule, who was fined for his non-appearance. His father William was also recorded in the same 1502 case, as well as David in Bonchester, who was probably related. Lawrence ‘Laurie in Maxsyde’ (16th/17th C.) found guilty at the 1622 Commissioners’ Court of stealing 2 cows from William Douglas of Cavers’ land at Langside about 1614 and 2 sheep from elsewhere in 1619, and sentenced to be hung. He is also referred to as ‘Lancie’. Lawrence ‘Lawrie’ of Hartshaugh (17th C.) recorded on the valuation for Abbotrule Parish in 1643. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Turnbulls who lived at Hartshaugh. Leo (15th/16th C.) tenant in Unthank listed among Turnbulls given remission in 1516 for any role they played in assisting the Homes. Presumably these are the lands of Unthank in Rulewater. Lyle (16th/17th C.) described as ‘Lyell Turnbull in Hartishauke’ (presumably Hartshaugh) in 1618 (registered in 1623) for a ‘wadset’ of lands in Hobkirk Parish. He was also recorded in the 1623 Commissioners’ Court when he was surety for Adam Turnbull in Hartshaugh Mill. He was surely related to Adam. He may be the ‘Leonall’ who was possibly a younger son of Hector of Hartshaugh, who witnessed a bond between Walter of Bedrule and George Rutherford (younger in Abbotrule) in 1618. Margaret (14th C.) forfeited lands in Eyemouth (in Coldingham) which were granted to ‘Ade Corfour’. This was during the reign of David II. It is unclear how she was related to other Turnbulls. Margaret (14th/15th C.) daughter and heiress of John, who was granted Hundleshope in Peeblesshire by David II in 1357. She also held lands in Roberton and in the town of Selkirk, suggesting that her father was from the Borthwick Water and Selkirkshire Turnbulls. She married William Gledstains of that Ilk. They had a son John, to whom she resigned the lands of Hundleshope in her lifetime, probably around 1400. During the reign of Robert III she also resigned to her son John the lands in Roberton and in Selkirk. It may be that the lands the Gledstains family soon possessed near Hawick (Ormiton, Orchard, Hummelknowes, etc.) also came from her and the Turnbulls. Margaret (15th/16th C.) daughter and co-heiress of Walter of Gargunnock. Along with her sister Janet she was infested in the lands of Hassendeanbank in 1501 (her brother William probably dying before then). Margaret (15th/16th C.) received sasine of the lands of Lanton in Roxburghshire in 1506. This was along with Elizabeth, who was probably her sister. Margaret see Lady Margaret Lorraine. Margaret (16th C.) wife of David Elliot, who was tenant in Chamberlain Newton. It is unclear which branch of the Turnbulls she came from. There was a court case to get her husband removed from the other half of the farm (owned at that time by George Turnbull, Burgess of Jedburgh) in 1567. There appears to have been an ongoing dispute over this half of the lands, since in 1573 Gavin Eliott of Bailelee and Stobs (who purchased the half from George Turnbull) complained that she had ordered her sons, Walter and John Scott, to attack his servant there. By this time she was widow of David Elliot (who was also from the Horsleyhill branch, like Gavin Elliott of Stobs), and must have married a Scott. She claimed that although she had no title for the lands, she had possession ‘be virtew of tak and assedationi’, although her accusers claimed these ‘ar of lang tyme bigane outrunin’. She was represented before the Privy Council by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme (perhaps therefore a relative of her husband) and was ‘visiit with seiknes’ and did not attend herself. Her son John Scott did not appear and was declared a fugitive, while she and her son Walter were declared fugitives later in 1573, but then bound to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and John Tweedy, tutor of Drumelzier, not to molest Gavin Elliott, his wife Jean Scott, their children or servants. It seems likely that Walter and John were sons from her first marriage, perhaps to a Scott of Newton (but it this unclear). Walter and John also had a brother David, recorded in 1588, who was presumably also her son. Margaret (d.1593) daughter and heiress of William (younger of Bedrule) and Margaret Home. On the death of William, her lands and gift of marriage then came into the hands of the Crown, who appointed her uncle Sir James Home of Cowdenknowes and her grandfather Sir Thomas of Bedrule as tutors. However, Sir Thomas was declared a fugitive, leading to a lack of clarity over her future. In 1584 she was recorded as ‘oy’ (i.e. granddaughter) of Sir Thomas of Bedrule and also niece of Alexander Home of Huttonhall when there was a claim by Sir James Home of Cowdenknowes (her ‘moder broder’, i.e. another uncle) over ‘the exhibition of the said Margaret’, but the Privy Council decreed that control over her should remain with her ‘keeper’ Alexander Home. It was then ruled that she should stay in the house of Alexander Clerk of Balbirnny, Provost of Edinburgh, until a decision about her future was made. She later married Robert French, Laird of Thornydikes and Abbotrule, but had no children. Margaret (17th C.) sister of Walter of Rawflat. In 1632 she and her sister Isobella were ‘heirs portioner’ to their brother in the lands of the Mains of Feu-Rule. Margaret (17th C.) along with Mary Chisholme she was accused of witchcraft in Lilliesleaf in 1650. It was reported that they went to Selkirk for trial by the ministers and elders ‘quhairupon markis of Satan was found upon them both’. Their fate is not recorded. Margaret (17th C.) widow who was jointly responsible, along with James Scott of Whittslade, for lands in Hassendean Parish in 1663 according to the Land Tax Rolls. She was ‘relict of Alton’, this probably being Robert of Alton, who died in about 1650. Margaret (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. Margaret nee Dalgleish (b.1789) son of John Dalgleish, she was born in Hobkirk Parish. She married Schoolmaster James in 1808, probably when he was teacher at Denholm. They later moved to Hawick, where he was Schoolmaster at Wilton. Her husband died in 1834 and later she ran her own school, along with her daughter Agnes, this being known as the ‘Image Garden’. The 1841 census records her living at ‘Wilton Cottage’ with children Agnes, Elspeth, Jane, Mary and William. In 1851 she was still there, with Agnes, Mary and Margaret and in 1861 just with Mary. Margaret (b.1819/20) born in Minto Parish, daughter of Janet Deans. She was listed as a teacher in Lilliesleaf in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 she was a teacher of ‘Female School teacher (of Sewing &c)’ in Lilliesleaf, along with her mother. They lived on the north side of Main Street. Marie (17th C.) recorded in 1643 when she owned £40 in Hobkirk Parish. She is listed being in the same place as Mary Ruthford ‘of Rydvell’; however, it is unclear where this was. Marion nee Lorraine (16th/17th C.) wife of Walter, called ‘of Wauchope’, whose daughters Jean and Beatrix inherited Templehall and Brewlands from him in about 1604. In 1605 their ‘tutor’ George Turnbull (2nd son of Hector of Wauchope) had her and several others removed from the lands there. This must have been part of some family feud. She was perhaps daughter of Hector of Harwood (although there is no proof for this). Marion (17th C.) listed as a a widow living at Effedgle on the 1694 Hearth Tax roll. Her name appears just after William, to whom she was probably related. Mark (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aine in Jedburgh in 1502. Walter Aitkin in Minto was convicted of associating with him and William, while they were ‘at the horn’. His location is not given. Mark (15th/16th C.) tenant in Bonchester, recorded at the Justice-aine held in Jedburgh in 1494/5, when he served as surety for his brother James. He was also surety for himself, and was fined for the non-apperance of both of them. He is also recorded in 1501 among 10 men whose fines were remitted, with his name recorded there as ‘Marci Trumbull’; his brother James is also listed, as well as Turnbulls of Fulton, Bonchester and elsewhere. Mark (15th/16th C.) listed among the many men connected with the Archbishop of Glasgow who had remission in 1504 for any involvement in the slaughter of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey. He is listed before Adam of Philpahaugh, who may have been related. In a separate list his name is right before David of Wauchope. Mark (15th/16th C.) tenant of Over Chester when he was listed in the 1516 remission for several Turnbulls for assisting Alexander, Lord Home. His brother Archibald is also listed, along with ‘Marc younger’, presumably his son, as well as ‘Richard Turnbull with Marc Turnbull in Overchester, David Turnbull with the same Marc, William Turnbull, John Turnbull his sons’. Presumably they were all related. Mark (16th C.) Burgess of Jedburgh. He was Provost in 1551 and in 1565 (when his name is given as ‘Marcus’), during a dispute with Sir Nicholas Rutherford of Hundalee. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls. Mark of Bewlie (16th/17th C.) brother of Robert and probably son of Walter. He was probably among the Turnbulls who were accused of harassing the widow and children of the murdered Walter Turnbull of Rawflat in 1581. He was one of a group of about 30 Turnbulls who entered Jedburgh on Rood Fair Day in 1601, as part of a feud with the Kers. At the end of the fight Thomas Ker (brother of the Provost) and his servant were dead, along with 2 Turnbulls, one of whom was his brother Robert. There were also several serious injuries, and he himself lost ‘the thowme of his left hand’ in the fight. Another brother, Andrew, was also involved in the raid and lost his little finger. In 1602 he was recorded along with Thomas, younger of Minto and Hector of Barnhills, when they were accused of robbing a hunting party sent out by the Laird of Gretna, with permission to hunt for venison in Tynedale; they were found guilty of robbery and fined for the value of 3 horses. He must also have been related to Hector of Bewlie, who was killed by the Kers in 1604 for his part in these events. He was convicted in late 1601, but it is unclear whether or not he was executed. He was also one of the ‘pursuers’ of the case against the Kers for the murder and maiming of several men in his party. He is probably the Mark listed in 1606 in letters of apology by the men responsible for the death of William Kerr of Ancrum. He is probably the Mark, brother of William ‘called of Bewlie’ who was named by the Privy Council when a commission was appointed to apprehend them and 6 other Turnbulls (plus 2 Davidsons), for not finding caution following being found guilty of the murder of Thomas Ker of Crailinghall and 6 Grahamslaw brothers. Mark (16th/17th C.) tenant in Nether Bonchester. He was recorded as being ‘in Nethir Bunecheuste’ in 1605 when he was pledged to appear in court in Edinburgh, along with 2 other Turnbulls. In 1606 he was the occupier of the lands of Weens and Hobsburn when they were sold by Thomas Turnbull to John Scott. He could be the Mark listed along with Turnbulls of Braidhaugh and Mackside and Lorraines of Appotside, accused of stealing from an Englishman in 1601. Mark of Howden (d.bef. 1631) recorded in 1612 among local men accused by the Privy Council of charging more than the allowed amount of interest. He was surely related to other Turnbulls of Howden. He failed to appear to answer the charge and was denounced as a rebel. In 1631 his son John of Howden was served heir to his lands of Philhope in the Barony of Hawick. Mark (16th/17th C.) son of Sir Thomas of Bedrule. He is probably the Mark in Bedrule who witnessed the bond between Robert in Bedrule and Joseph Tennant, minister of Bedrule in 1614. Mark (16th/17th C.) son of Hector in Hartshaugh (who appears to have lived to an old age) and younger brother of James. In 1616 he had a bond with William Scott of Todrig, and another with James (called of Bedrule) and David (or Andrew), butcher of Jedburgh. He is recorded as ‘in Hairtishaugh’ in 1619 when he was cautioner for Thomas Turnbull ‘in Rowllspittle’. Mark (d.c.1690) recorded in 1678 when he paid the land tax at Fodderlee for land valued at £100. In one transcript of the valuation the name is given as ‘Margaret’, but that is probably an error. He was ‘portioner in Fetherlie’ in 1690, when the wills of both he and his wife Bessie Ker were recorded. He was surely related to John, who was at Fodderlee in 1694. Mark (18th/19th C.) related to the Turnbulls of Chesterhall, Ancrum. He married an Elliot. His children included James (shepherd at Minto Kames) and William (who emigrated to New Zealand). Mark (b.1806/7) from Ancrum, he was land steward at Menslaws farm. He was recorded there in 1851, with his wife Betsy (from Wilton) and their children Janet, William, Margaret, Mark, Helen and Betsy. Mark (19th C.) one of the local Tory supporters who was stripped almost naked and beaten up by the Radical mob.

Turnbull

at the 1837 election. 5 men were tried for rioting, with 7 victims named. He lived at Spittal Mill. He could have been the same Mark who married Margaret Govenlock, daughter of Robert Govenlock (‘Gloomy Wunter’) and Margaret Ruickbie. Mark (b.1862) son of James, farmer at Billerwell. His twin brother was Walter, farmer at Hartshaugh. He farmed at Midburn, where his mother Mary Scott lived with him. Mary (d.1816) recorded dying in Hawick, when she was listed as ‘sister to Andrew Turnbull from Jamaica’. It is unclear who this Andrew might have been or how she was related to other Turnbulls. Matthew (15th C.) tenant in Hassendean. In 1494/5 his sons Nicholas and John had remiss for the murder of Robert Redford, with John Gledstains acting as surety. Maurice made a Director of Pringle’s in 1947. There is a seat to his memory at the 15th tee on the Vertish. Michael (15th/16th C.) tenant in Abbotrule in 1502. At the Justice-ai-re held in Jedburgh his surety was Patrick in Mackside, and he also served as surety for himself; however, the pair were fined for non-appearance. Michael (17th C.) described as ‘victore’ when he witnessed a Hawick sasine in 1687. The description is probably an occupation of some sort (perhaps ‘vintner’ or ‘vitualer’ is meant). Probably the same Michael witnessed baptisms for James Davidson and John Thomson in 1687. Michael (17th/18th C.) cooper in Hawick, who had brothers John and Robert. In 1678 all 3 were involved in a case before the Bailies involving a fight with Robert Brown, whose wife they called ‘witches-gate’, with him responding that ‘their sister was one of that sort’. He was referred to as a wright on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. He may be the Michael ‘Trumble’ recorded in 1683 when flesher John Briggs was found guilty of insulting him and William Paisley, ‘calling of them two drunken elders’. Probably the same cooper Michael in Hawick was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the Michael listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. He was senior Deacon of the hammermen in Hawick. In 1715 there was a dispute between the hammermen and the weavers over seating precedence in the gallery in St. Mary’s Kirk. The Session determined that ‘for his lifetime, [he] should have ye head of ye fore seat of ye loft, conform to ye desire of ye other two hammermen concerned’. To take this prized seat he had to be waiting at the Loft door when it was opened, and was not allowed to pass anyone else on the way to his seat. This right was not to carry on to his descendants. He may be the same Michael who, in 1714, was ‘creat burgess upon the account that he built the stone stair that goes up to the steiple’ (of St. Mary’s). He could be the Michael, son of Robert and Janet Scott, born in Haick in 1645. It seems likely he was the Michael married to Bessie Bridges, whose children baptised in Hawick included an unnamed son (b.1672), John (b.1676) and Helen (b.1679). Michael (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1704 he had a son John baptised in Hawick Parish, with witnesses Patrick Angus and Bailie George Michael (18th/19th C.) hosier at Appletreehall. He was declared bankrupt in 1821. Michael (1787–1849) son of William of Burnfoot. He inherited the Great Seal of the Turnbulls after his elder brother was effectively disinherited. He married Mary (possibly sister of Dr. Walter Graham of Hawick, who died in 1832), and after her death emigrated to Canada with his 5 children in 1842. Their children (baptised in Hawick) were: Margaret Scott (1818–1908); Walter (1821–49); William (b.1822), who died young; Peter Stephenson (1826–89); Mary (1829–80); and William (1828–1901). He died at Woodside in Brantford, Ontario. Michael (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit dealer of the High Street, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He could be the Turnbull marked at No. 31 or around No. 66 on Wood’s map. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He could be the same as Michael, son of William of Burnfoot. Michael (d.1894) 3rd son of Adam and great-grandson of Adam of Denesyde. He helped his brother Thomas farm at Midburn (or ‘Africa’). He married Beatrice Nichol (known as a great beauty), sister of his brother John’s wife. He died at the old schoolhouse, Wolfelee. Myra S., J.P. (1932– ) ‘the best wuman Provost Hawick has ever hed’, born and bred in the West End, she worked in Wilson & Glenny’s office and married local merchant John F. She was elected to the District Council in 1984 and Provost 1988–1992. She also served as Chairman of Roxburgh District Council. Nichol (15th C.) recorded in 1488/9 as witness to an agreement between the Vicar of Hassendean and the Abbot of Melrose. Most of the other witnesses were local clergymen, and so the same was probably true for him. Nichol (17th/18th C.) recorded as a witness at Hawick Parish Session in 1718, inquired about whether he saw Andrew Jordan coming out of the Beadle’s house at a very

Nicholas (15th C.) son of Matthew in Hassendean. In 1494/5 he and his brother John had remission for the murder of Robert Redford, with John Gledstains as surety. They are recorded in the Treasurer's accounts for 1494/5 having obtained remission from the King (where his name is ‘Nichol’). Ninian (15th C.) son of William. He is recorded at the 1494/5 Justice- aire held in Jedburgh when he failed to appear and the Thomas, Laird of Bedrule was fined. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Turnbulls. Ninian (15th/16th C.) listed in the 1501 Exchequer Rolls, along with Robert, 2 Johns, George and David. Their £40 fine was granted to Thomas, son and heir of George of Bedrule. Perhaps the same Ninian was also listed in 1501 among 10 men, mostly Turnbulls, whose fines were remitted. In 1502 he was among more than 20 Turnbulls and others who failed to appear at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh for the charge of murdering Robert Oliver; Adam of Billerwell was fined for his non-appearance. He may be the same Ninian, son of William, recorded in 1494/5. Ninian (15th/16th C.) tenant at Overchester, listed in the 1516 pardon that many Turnbulls had for involvement with the traitorous Homes. Other tenants there were Mark, Mark’s brother Archibald, Mark younger, Richard, David, Andrew, and Andrew’s son Thomas. He was probably related to some of these men. Ninian (15th/16th C.) tenant at Rule, listed in the 1516 remission for several Turnbulls for providing assistance to Alexander, Lord Home in plotting against the King. His lands were referred to as ‘Royle’, which could be the same as Town-o-rule perhaps. Andrew was also listed as a tenant there. Norman (1942–2014) born in Edinburgh, he grew up on a farm and served in the R.A.F. He then ran a garage, before becoming a shepherd in the Hawick area. After retirement he became record-keeper for the Turnbull Clan Association. In 2012 he married Terri Booth. The Clan awarded him their lifetime achievement award in 2014. Norman High School history teacher. He was Acting Father in 1997. He was President of the 1514 Club in 1982, the Mosstroopers’ Club in 1990 and the Callants’ Club in 2007, becoming the first person to have held the chain of office of all 3 clubs. Patrick (15th C.) recorded as ‘Patrick Turnbull’ in 1447 when he witnessed the sasine for Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch’s puchase of the Cousinsins. This was signed in Hawick, so he must have been a local man. His name appears at the end along with John Stoddart, so they may have been the Bailie’s of the time. Patrick (15th/16th C.) recorded at Wauchope Tower at the Justice- aire held in Jedburgh 1494/5. He was allowed to ‘compone’ for associating with them. Patrick (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 among the men who were put to the horn in for involvement in the murder of Robert Oliver. The person called to enter him was Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst, who was fined for his non-appearance. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Patricks. Patrick (15th/16th C.) tenant at Gatehousecote, listed in the 1516 pardon that many Turnbulls had for involvement with the traitorous Homes. Other tenants there were Andrew and his brother William, as well as Thomas and David. Patrick (16th C.) witness to a Lorraine sasine for the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside in 1531. He is listed beside Robert, so they may have been related, as well as possibly related to the Lorraine family. Patrick (16th C.) recorded in the 1538 Exchequer Rolls as occupier of the lands of Wauchopebank and Templehall, which were at that time owned by the Crown. He is probably related to earlier and later Patricks of associated with these same places. Patrick ‘Pate’ (16th/17th C.) tenant at Wauchope in Rulewater. He is recorded as ‘Pait Trumbill’ in a 1605 court case. He may be a descendant of the earlier Patrick in Wauchope. Patrick (16th/17th C.) tenant at Templehall and Brewlands, along with Walter Scott, recorded in a contract of ‘wadset’ for the lands in 1612. In 1614 (registered in 1616) he is ‘of Templehall’ of marriage between his daughter Margaret and William, son of John Ainslie, Burgess of Edinburgh. His son Thomas was cautioner, while witnesses were William ‘fiar of Bedrule’ (probably his brother), Robert (possibly his uncle), and George also ‘there’ (in Bedrule or Templehall). (and probably another relative). Along with Walter Scott, he is also recorded as sometimes occupier of Templehall in 1627. He is probably the Patrick who was son of Sir Thomas of Bedrule. His children included Thomas and Margaret (who married William Ainslie in 1614). Patrick (16th/17th C.) recorded in Mackside in 1618 when he was witness to a bond between Walter of Bedrule and Adam in Abbotrule Townhead. Paul (16th C.) tenant of one of the farms of Midsheils, Appletreehall, Broadlee, Cottlaw or ‘Burnside’ in 1562/3 when Lord Alexander Home tried to remove his ‘pretended tenants’. Andrew Turnbull in Hornshole is also listed among others. Percy (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘of the Stonylethe’ (i.e. Stonedie) in 1601, when 2 Englishmen accused him of stealing their livestock. He was fined ‘for lack of answer’. ‘Percy’ is not a common Scottish name, and so it is possible that this was an error and he is the same as one of the other Turnbulls associated with Stonedie. Peter (15th C.) son of the Laird of Bedrule. In 1493 he served as surety for John Waugh, who had remission for stealing sheep from the Murrays in Sundhope and for associating with the Duke of Albany. Peter (15th/16th C.) tenant in Bonchester who had remission for his involvement in a long list of crimes in 1502. This included the murder of James Rutherford at the Kirk of Hawick, burning and stealing goods from George Rutherford of Longnewton at Barnhill, stealing livestock from John Grahamslaw at ‘Camys’ (probably Minto Kames) with Turnbulls who were ‘at the horn’, bringing a party of English to raid from the lands of Robert Lauder at ‘Merch-cluche’ and capturing him for ransom, stealing sheep from George Tait and his tenants at ‘Fichop’, stealing sheep from John and William Cleghorn at ‘Lethanhope’, burning grain and stealing sheep from George Rutherford at ‘Saudystanis’, with the help of John of Minto and others, and for associating with the rebels Mark and John. Adam of Bilerwell served as surety. Peter (15th/16th C.) tenant in Mackside in 1502. At the Justiceaire held in Jedburgh he was surety for Michael in Abbotrule and was fined for his non-appearance. Peter (15th/16th C.) feuded the lands of the east steadings of Gildhouse, also called Baillelee in 1510. Peter ‘Pait’ (16th C.) recorded in 1540 as ‘Pait Trumbill called Cattle’ on a list of ‘Scotssmen rebels resete within England’. His son ‘Pait’ called ‘Cattle younger’ and another son ‘Jame’ are also listed. They presumably came from Catlee near Wauchope. Peter ‘the Monk’ (d.1561) listed in 1540 among Scottish rebels who were hiding out in England. He is recorded as ‘Peter Trumbill called the Monk’, and he is listed among Turnbulls from Catlee and Cragwood (several of whom were also called Peter). He was hanged for theft and reset, along with William Elliot ‘callit Woddir-nek’ and Henry Black in Softlaw. It is unclear where he came from. Peter Stephenson (1836–1921) 14th son of Thomas Scott of East Middle farm, and direct descendant of the Turnbulls of Bedrule. He was said to have been born at ‘Deneburn’ near Denholm, but his baptism was registered in Kirkton. He studied at Glasgow University, graduating M.D. in 1859, then studying briefly at Edinburgh Medical School before entering the army. He received a medal for serving during the Abyssinian campaign in 1867–68. In 1893 he became Surgeon Major General of the Indian Medical Service in Bombay. He was a fellow of the University of Bombay and Surgeon General with the Government of Bombay. In 1896 he returned to Britain, receiving a good-service pension, and was appointed honorary surgeon to the King. In 1870 he married Mary Oliver, daughter of George Oliver the Hawick solicitor, and she died in 1902. Their children were: Thomas (1871–72); Margaret Lindsay ‘Meta’ (b.1873) who married Maj. W.G. Cooper of the 34th Poona Horse; Mary (b.1874); Evelyn Jane (1875–76); George Oliver (b.1877), who served with the Indian Army; Nora Christian (1879–1974), married Rev. John Robert Paterson Sclater of New North Church, Edinburgh; Bruce (b.1880), Lieut. in the 23rd Sikh Pioneers; Hugh Stephenson (b.1882), who became a 2nd-Lieut. in the 57th Rifles; Percy Douglas (b.1886); and Dorothy Lillian (b.1887). He is named on the memorial tablet to the Turnbulls of Bedrule in Bedrule Kirk, which his 4 surviving children had put up in 1955. He is buried in Grange Cemetery in Edinburgh. Many of his letters are incorporated into the book ‘Turnbull: lives and letters’ (c.1994). Philip (15th C.) son and heir of Richard of Harden. He inherited the lands in 1448 through a charter by Henry Wardlaw, Baron of Wilton. He was probably succeeded by Walter, who resigned the lands to the Lady of the Barony in 1468. Philip (15th C.) son and heir of William of Whitheope. He witnessed a charter for ‘Irelandis landsis’ in the Barony of Wilton in 1454. Probably the same Philip witnessed a document in 1455 attesting that John of St. Michael inherited the lands of Whitcheesters from his father. A charter of 1456 from William Douglas of Drumlanrig grants him the lands of Whithope in the Barony of Hawick. He may have been related to the neighbouring contemporary Philip (at Harden). Philip of Whithope (15th/16th C.) member of the panel for James Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick in 1484. In 1488 he was one of the bailies appointed by Sir Thomas Turnbull for the precept leasing Greenwood and Lyne to Robert Scott. In 1494/5 Thomas, Junior, Laird of Bedrule, served as surety for his son John (unless there was another contemporary Philip). He also served as surety for his brother, Stephen, who had raided the lands of John and Ninian Murray at Kershope. He was probably the Laird of Whithope ‘in Ernheuch’ who was surety for David Craik in 1494/5, who had remission for pillaging from Harthern. In 1500 he had 4 oxen taken from him, appraised and then given to Walter Scott of Branxholme, assignee for the Murrays; since no other goods could be found, he also lost his lands of Whithope to Scott of Branxholme. In 1500 he was witness to the instrument of sasine for Walter Scott of Branxholme inheriting lands from his grandfather. Probably the same Philip is described as ‘in Quhithop’ in 1502 when he and David in Carlinpool had remission for bringing in the ‘Traitors of Levin’ to raid the farms of Fastheugh and Hangingshaw. He was surely related to David, son of the Laird of Whithope recorded in 1494/5, may have been his son. It also seems likely he was related to the earlier Philip of Harden. Philip (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 among the men who were put to the horn in for involvement in the murder of Robert Oliver. The person called to enter him was Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst, who was fined for his non-appearance. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Turnbulls. Richard of Harden (15th C.) recorded in 1431 when he was among a number of witnesses who attested to being at the transfer of the lands of Heap between James Langlands of that Ilk and Walter Scott of Buccleuch; John and David are also listed beside him (although with no designation) and so may be related. He was possibly dead by 1448 when his son Philip inherited the lands of Harden in the Barony of Wilton. This family is probably related to the Turnbulls of Whithope. He may be the same Richard who was on a ‘revoir of inquest’ made in Hawick in 1424 for lands in Hownam. Richard (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the local men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. He is surely related to other Turnbulls who were named (Andrew, Stephen and John) and may be the same as Richard of Harden. He is recorded as ‘Ricardus Turnebule’. Richard (15th/16th C.) tenant in Overchester, listed among several Turnbulls who had remission in 1516 for assisting the Homes against the King. Several other men are also listed there, and so probably related. Richard (16th C.) listed along with Hector of Clarilaw (so presumably his son or brother), in a pledge made by James Gledstains of that Ilk in 1594/5, that they would not harm Gavin Elliott of Stobs or William Elliot of Horsleyhill. Richard (17th C.) resident at Hasendeanbank according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to William, who was also listed there. Richard (18th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1722 when he was paid for a joist for the steeple in St. Mary’s Kirk. He was probably a joiner or builder. He could be the Richard who married Janet Porteous in Hawick in 1714 and whose children included: William (b.1716); Mary (b.1717); Janet (b.1719); Mary (again, b.1721); John (b.1723); Janet (again, b.1726); and Robert (b.1729). Sir Richard of Ferniehirst (1908–98), G.C.M.G. Career diplomat, he was Governor of Tanganyika during its hand-over and later Governor of Aden. His wife Beatrice is buried in Bedrule churchyard. His twin children are Alison and Julian. He is supposed to have remarked to Denis Healey, then Defense Secretary, that the British Empire would be remembered for only 2 things: ‘the popularization of Association Football and the term ‘f... off’’. Robert (15th C.) Presbyter of the Diocese of Glasgow. In 1431 he was the notary for the ‘letter of transumpt’ for the 1420 charter of half the lands of Branxholme being granted to Robert Scott of Rankilburn. This letter was made in the church of Cavers. Hence he was probably a local church official. Robert (15th C.) Rector of Lilliesleaf from about 1460. In 1440 the Pope revoked the gift to the Bishop of Glasgow and attached the advowson to the Holy See. It was later given to him, and he resigned it back to the Pope in 1480. Robert (15th C.) Abbot of Jedburgh 1476–78. In 1478 he is recorded as witness to a charter granting David Scott rights in Selkirk. Also in 1478 he was involved in a case registered with Parliament involving ‘mails’ on Stewartfield, belonging to the Stewarts. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls. Robert of Hoscode (15th C.) resigned the lands of Hoscote into the hands of their superior, William Lord Borthwick. They were then conferred upon Alexander, Master of Home. He is referred to as being of ‘Thoscot’. It is unclear how long these lands in the Borthwick valley belonged to his family. Robert of Broadlee (15th C.) resigned his lands of ‘Bradelee’ in the Barony of Hawick into the hands of the superior, William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1479. Presumably this was to have these lands regranted. Either the same Robert, or perhaps his son is recorded in 1498 as being ‘of Bradle’ when he had remission, along with Alexander and John, son of Robert, for comming with Englishmen. Robert (15th C.) listed in 1482/3 among some Borderers who were captured by Patrick Dickson, Bailie of Peebles. The others were several Elliots and Robert Dalgleish. He may be the same as one of the Roberts who was later declared to be a rebel. Robert (15th C.) recorded in 1493 being ‘in Wowlee’, i.e. resident of Wolfelee. He was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. The previous entry was for Alexander, also in Wolfelee and a later entry was for his son John. Robert (15th C.) recorded being ‘in laris’ at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh in 1493. His lands may have been Lairhope above Fahnash. He was allowed to ‘compone’ for the crimes of: stealing livestock from Blackhope in Edleston Parish; stealing 2 cows from Shieldgreen; stealing 4 cows from Matthew Gotterson in the Forest of Lauder; and common theft. His surety was George, Master of Angus. In 1494/5 he had remission for stealing a horse, a dagger and other items from John Smith, with surety being John Murray ‘in the Forest’; he was again described as being ‘in laris’. Robert (15th C.) resident of Wells. He is listed at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance. He was again cited for non-appearance in 1494/5. Robert of Mudlaw (15th C.) possibly son of Sir Thomas of Phaup. He is mentioned in the royal pardon for Sir Thomas in 1494/5, whose crimes involved receiving stolen sheep from him and other men, namely John ‘de Newhalburn’, Thomas Newton and Alex Gray; either he or John appear to have been son of Sir Thomas (but the Latin in ambiguous). He is also recorded in the Justice-aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5 when he was fined for failure to appear (with Thomas of Phaup listed just after him). His lands were probably near where Moodlaw Loch is, on the boundary between Selkirkshire and Dumfriesshire. He is probably also the Robert listed along with Alexander in 1494/5 when Edward Dunn in Phaup had remission for stealing more than 100 sheep from them, from the Waters of Yarrow and Tweed; Thomas in Phaup was surety for Dunn. Robert (15th C.) recorded as brother to the Laird of Bedrule in 1494/5. Thomas Turnbull, ‘Junior’ Laird of Bedrule served as his surety; it is unclear if this means he was brother of Thomas or uncle of Thomas (i.e. brother of George, the elder Laird). Robert (15th C.) recorded at the Justice- aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. He was tenant ‘in le castel lil de branxame’, i.e. Castlehill near Branxholme. He ‘came in the King’s will’ for stealing 15 score sheep from the Murrays in Sundhope, with his surety being Lord Home. Robert (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 when Walter Rutherford was allowed to ‘compone’ for several crimes, including stealing from him. The theft was of 14 sheep from ‘sowdane braa’ (presumably Souden Brae). Robert (15th/16th C.) listed in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501, along with Adam and David, when they were fined, with George Douglas, Master of Angus, responsible for their pledges. He is probably the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert (15th/16th C.) listed in the 1501 Exchequer Rolls, along with 2 Johns, Ninian, George and David. Their £40 fine was granted to Thomas, son and heir of George of Bedrule. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded being ‘de bonchester’ at the 1494/5 Justice-aire held in Jedburgh. He was surety for himself and fined for not appearing. Probably the same Robert was also recorded as tenant in Bonchester in 1501 among 10 men, mostly Turnbulls, whose fines were remitted. In 1502 he was surety for himself at the Justice-aire; he was fined for non-appearance, denounced as a fugitive and had his goods escheated. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Turnbulls from Bonchester. Robert ‘Muriale’ (15th/16th C.) described as one of the King’s rebels and already ‘at the horn’ in 1502 when David Turnbull in Tofts was allowed to pay a fine for associating with him. They had burned Rid dell, as well as stealing 240 sheep, 2 cows and sundry goods. On the same raid they killed a black mare belonging to Robert Scott. Robert (15th/16th C.) witness to a charter for Alexander, Lord Home, signed in Edinburgh in 1506. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (15th/16th C.) listed in the Exchequer Rolls for Ettrick Ward in 1507, when he had an obligation for a payment. He may be the same Robert who was aid for a silver cup in 1513 in association with Yarrow. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded along with John as witness to a document relating to the lands of Allanshaws (in Lauderdale) and Melrose Abbey. Robert (15th/16th C.) is listed in 1484 along with his lands of ‘Bradelee’ in the Barony of Hawick.

Robert (15th/16th C.) feued the east steading of ‘Warmwood’, also called Langcleuchhead in Ettrick in 1510. Either the same Robert or a descendant was tenant in 1541 of the Crown lands of ‘Est Syde of Warmwod, alias Huitralburn’ in Ettrick. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant in Hassendeanbank, listed on the 1516 pardon for Turnbulls and others who may have assisted Alexander, Lord Home. David is also listed as tenant at Hassendeanbank. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant in Hallrule who was listed among the many Turnbulls given remission in 1516 for assisting the traitorous Homes; William and Thomas were also listed there as tenants of Hallrule, and so may have been related. Probably the same man was also listed among the Borderers who were pardoned in 1526 for their role in marching against the Earl of Arran. Also on the list are his ‘brethir sonnis’ (i.e. nephews) David and George. He was also among the local lairds who had remission in 1527 for their part in the Battle of Skirmish Field and at Linlithgow. He was thus presumably a supporter of Scott of Branxholme. Robert (16th C.) listed in 1530 as ‘Tutour of Philiphauche’ when he was one of the Border Lairds who submitted themselves to James V to keep the rievers under better control. In 1531 he is probably the Robert who formally acknowledged to his grandson John, ‘tutor of the lord of Philippaucht’, that a tack had been given to Mark Ker (Burgess of Selkirk) for 5 years for lands in Philiphau. He could have been married to Janet and father of John, who was served heir to his mother’s lands of Philiphaugh in 1558. Robert (16th C.) witness in 1531 to a Lorraine sasine for Harwood and Hawthornsise. Other witnesses were Patrick (possibly a relative) and 2 Lorraines. He could be the same as Robert in Hallrule. Robert (16th C.) recorded as ‘incola’ (i.e. resident) in 1563 when he was witness to the transfer of Spittal-on-Rule from Douglas of Cavers to Ker of Primside. Robert ‘Feeble Hob’ (16th C.) denounced as a rebel in 1537 for stealing from Sir Walter Ogilvie of ‘Dunlugus’ at ‘Colbrandisperethe’. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls. His nickname is listed as ‘Febill Hob’. Robert (16th C.) probably farmer at Hobsburn. ‘Robert Turnbullis hous callit the auld hous and yard thatairof’ are listed among the disputed lands in the 1562 Baronial dispute in Feu-Rule. His rig lay at the ‘schadow’, i.e. west side of the lands, adjacent to Hawthornsise Wood, and were assigned to Agnes Herries as superior. He may have been father of Walter, who is recorded as Laird there in 1568 and 1574. Robert (16th C.) tenant in ‘Siron Shiell’, i.e. Swanshiel, recorded in 1567 among men charged to appear before the Regent Moray. He was also listed in 1567 among men who Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present him to answer charges of raiding into England. Robert ‘Isobel’s Robin’ (16th C.) recorded in 1567, along with Hector ‘in Turnbull’ (which seems likely to be a transcription error), brother to George, as well as Adam, son to Sandie Turnbull, ‘Part Pursell’ and 2 Oliviers. David Home of Wedderburn was instructed to enter them to answer charges of raiding into England. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) listed in 1579 among a group of Turnbulls accused of stealing cattle from the Laird of ‘Pansoun’. Robert (16th C.) listed as ‘Robert Trumbill, sometime tutor of Barnhills’ among a large number of men in a summons of treason of 1592. The list was started with Dame Margaret Douglas, Countess of Bothwell, and Francis Stewart, sometime Earl of Bothwell (and presumably the rest were their supporters). He is probably the Robert, brother of William of Barnhills (as well as Gavin and Hector) who was listed in 1584/5 among Borderers summoned to appear before the Privy Council. Probably the same Robert ‘of the Barnhill’ was among men complained about in 1590 by the English Warden for a raid into England. He is probably the ‘Robert Trumble of Barnehill’ recorded in 1601, along with James Douglas of Cavers and William Douglas of Whitriggs, when Henry Woodrington accused them of stealing his cattle. Robert (16th/17th C.) Sheriff Clerk of Roxburghshire. He took over after the death of George Douglas, as recorded in the Ker-Turnbull feud case of 1601. Probably the same Robert was Sheriff Depute in 1600 for the ‘retour’ for the Kers of Cessford. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert of Bewlie (d.1601) probably son of Walter, and among the Turnbuls who were accused of harassing the widow and children of the murdered Walter Turnbull of Rawflat in 1581. He had brothers William, Mark and Andrew. He was murdered in Jedburgh at the same time as John Middlemas (from Lilliesleaf), as well as ‘Henry Davidsoun of Combles’ and others were mutilated. There was a remission for Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst (Provost of Jedburgh), Sir James Kerr of Crailing and George Moscrop, for these and other crimes, with many other Kerrs, Ainslies, Robsons and Rutherfords implicated. This was the result of some ongoing feud between the Turnbulls of the Minto area and the Kerrs of Jedburgh; a gang of about 30 Turnbulls entered Jedburgh on Fair Day seeking Thomas Ker, brother of the Provost. They eventually killed him and his servant, with John Middlemas also being killed, and many other men being wounded. Several Turnbulls were later convicted and hanged for their involvement, including his brother Andrew. His brother William was appointed tutor for his son Andrew in 1603 and Andrew was served as his heir in 1607. Robert (d.c.1605) tenant in Hallrule. He was brother of William in Barnhills, Gavin in Howa and Hector in Stanedge. In 1606 the Bailies of Hawick apprehended William and George Grahamslaw for his murder. They were sons of Adam Grahamslaw of Little Newton, and were transferred to the Edinburgh Tolbooth. His widow, children and brothers were accused of trying to ruin the 2 accused, rather than prosecute them. The summons mentions his widow Grizel, as well as his brothers Gavin and Hector, and his eldest son Robert. Robert (16th/17th C.) probably brother of Sir Thomas of Bedrule. He is probably the Robert ‘son of the Laird of Beddroule’ who was among Turnbulls and others charged to appear before the Privy Council in 1584/5. Robert (17th C.) tenant farmer at Templehall in Rulewater, recorded in a contract of ‘wadset’ of 1647 and another of 1642, and witness to a sasine of 1654. He was also named in a disposition of 1652. His brother was Thomas, tenant at Harwood. And he must have been related to George and to James. He could be the Robert in ‘Rouletoun’ recorded in 1643, with his lands being valued at £104, and Thomas also listed there. Robert (17th C.) tenant of Unthank in Hobkirk Parish, along with David, recorded in 1643. Their lands were valued at £66 13s 4d. Robert (d.c.1662) tenant in Swanshiel. His daughter ‘Mariota’ (probably Marion) was served as his heir in 1662. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included Andrew (b.1643), Michael (b.1645) and Robert (b.1648). He could be the father of weaver Michael (recorded from the 1670s until the 1710s), who also had brothers Robert and William, as well as a sister. Robert (d.c.1682) listed in Hawthornside when his will was recorded in 1682. He was surely related to William, whose will was also recorded on the same day, as well as Adam who was recorded there in 1688. Robert (d.c.1682) tenant in ‘Horslie’ when his will was recorded in 1682. These are probably the lands in the Siltrig valley. Robert (17th C.) recorded being ‘in Repertslaw’ in a 1684 list of Roxburghshire men declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism; this was probably Raperlaw. His name is given in another version of the record as ‘Thomas’. Robert (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Robert (17th C.) resident of Orchard on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th C.) resident of Birkhill in Hobkirk Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may have been related to Walter, who was tenant there.
Turnbull

Robert (17th C.) tenant in Bonchester according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th C.) resident at Chapelhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th C.) resident at Cockerheugh on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hassendean Parish. He may have been son of Thomas, who was at Cockerheugh about a generation earlier. Robert (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He may be the same Robert listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. In 1712 he appears to have been the first person to be allowed to plan for the erection of a ‘through-stone’ over his grave in St. Mary’s Kirkyard. This followed the reading of an Act of 1708. He was allowed permission, but asked to contribute to the poor box. He may be the same weaver who was recorded in a sasine of 1687 disposing a West End tenement to his wife Helen Paisley, and whose daughter Isobel was born in 1688. Robert (17th/18th C.) tenant in Whitalaw. He married Janet Donaldson in 1710. Their children included: John (b.1713); Robert (b.1719); James (b.1722); and Janet (b.1725). The 1725 baptism was witnessed by Archibald Paterson and James Johnstone. Robert (18th C.) Hawick resident, married to Isobel Kedie. Their children included: John (b.1737); Janet (b.1738); Isobel (b.1740); and Thomas (b.1741). Robert (17th/18th C.) tenant in ‘Woollee Miln’, i.e. Wolfelee Mill. His children included: Isabel (b.1718); Janet (b.1719); Thomas; and William. Probably the same ‘Miller in Woollee Miln’ had a son Robert baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1737. Robert (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Janet Kersel and their children included: Adam (b.1760); John (b.1762); Isabel (b.1765); and James (b.1768). The baptism in 1768 was witnessed by the ‘whole congregation’. Probably the same weaver Robert witnessed a baptism in 1761 and another in 1766 for James Taylor. He was already deceased in 1803 when his wife died. Robert of Standhill (18th C.) recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He may be the ‘Captain Turnbull Standhill’ listed in the Window Tax Rolls for Ancrum Parish in 1748. In 1737 his daughter Ann became the 2nd wife of Andrew Bennet of Chesters. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls of Standhill. Robert (18th C.) recorded at Whitecleughside in 1761 when his son Archibald was baptised in Roberton Parish and at Mabonlaw in 1763 when his son William was baptised. Other children baptised at a similar time to a Robert include Walter (b.1759), John (b.1766), and Robert and Janet (b.1768). Robert (d.1766) miller at Hallrule Mill. He married Helen and their sons were Thomas and Walter (who were millers at Southdean Mill, along with another Robert). In 1774, by which time he was deceased, his widow rented the farm of Doorpool. He was buried in Hobkirk kirkyard. Robert (1738/9-99) blacksmith at Gillbraehead. He married Margaret Little, who died in 1797. aged 55. They are buried in Ettleton Cemetery along with 5 of their children and Elspeth (1760/1-1833). Thomas (1770/1-1854), also blacksmith at Gillbraehead, was probably his son, as well as William (1777/8-1851), who married Isabella Young. Robert (18th C.) miller at Southdean Mill. In 1773 his co-tenants William and Robert were cautioners for the rental of Doorpool by Helen Turnbull, their mother, who was widow of Robert, miller at Hallrule Mill. It seems likely that the 2 Roberts were related to each other. He may be the same Robert who was recorded as tenant of Hallrule Mill on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Robert (18th C.) tenant of Hallrule Mill. He was married to Tibbie Donaldson, and their son John was said to have been prone to fighting at local fairs. Robert (18th C.) farm labourer in the late 1700s. He is recorded planting trees at Whitchesters in 1790-91, cutting the foundation for a dyke in upper Teviotdale in 1792 and quarrying stones for a dyke in Liddesdale about 1793. Robert (18th C.) gardener at Synton in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for Alexander Scott. Robert (d.bef. 1809) mason on the Cross Wynd. His daughter Margaret died in 1809. Robert (b.1765) 3rd son of John of Wester Swanshiel. He purchased Galalaw, just outside Hawick, probably from Robert Pott around 1815. In 1821 he was a witness to the birth of William Turnbull to James (his brother) and Mary Stavert. He is listed as ‘Turnbull, R. Esq. Gallawlaw’ in 1821 on the subscription list for William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. Wood’s 1824 map shows him as owner of a piece of land at Dovemount. He may be the Laird of Galalaw who acquired a part of the lands of Silverbuthall from James Scott. Elizabeth, a widow (aged 83) recorded at Galalaw in 1851 may have been his wife and Robert who farmed at Galalaw in the early-to-mid 19th century was probably his son. Robert (18th/19th C.) tenant farmer in Roughley on the Hermitage Water. He is recorded there on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He loaned money to Alexander Anderson (who purchased Hobkirk Kirkstile in 1807).
He was listed as one of the original members of Wolfelee Free Kirk in 1849. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Bewliehill in Lilliesleaf Parish, listed in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. Probably the same Robert paid the cart tax in Lilliesleaf in 1787–91. Robert (1755/6–1832) weaver in Hawick. He is buried in St. Mary’s, along with his siblings John (1762/3–1841), James (d.1846) and Janet (who died aged 84). Robert (1756/7–1847) shoemaker on the Loan. He could be the Robert, son of Robert and Margaret Riddell, born in Wilton in 1757. He is probably the man known as ‘Auld Springkell’. He could be the ‘R. Turnbull’ whose property is shown in the middle of the west side of the Howegate in Wood’s 1824 map. In 1841 he was living at about 21 Loan with his wife Mary, together with Margaret and Robert, probably their children. In 1789 he married Mary Laidlaw, and she died in 1848, aged 86. Their children included: Janet (1789–1821); Margaret (b.1793); James (b.1798), ‘Jimmie Springkie’; Mary (1805–1817); and Robert (1805/6–47). The family are buried in Wilton Old Churchyard, including his grandson Robert Sibbald (d.1840) and Martha Blythe (d.1826), wife of shoemaker James Turnbull. Robert (18th/19th C.) saddler in Lilliesleaf, as recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Robert (b.c.1775) tailor in Lilliesleaf, as recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was on the south side of Main Street with Jean, probably his wife. He may be the same as the saddler recorded in Lilliesleaf in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Robert (18th/19th C.) draper in Hawick. Robert & Son is listed on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Robert ‘Robbie’ (d.1838) innkeeper at Bridgend, in Hobkirk Parish in the early 1800s. He was also a joiner in the late 1700s, the house there being rebuilt as a joiner’s shop, but turned into a pub. He married Jane Chisholme, whose sister Bella married Walter Amos. His son John was a grocer in the same building. He also had a daughter Betty, who took over as postmaster from her brother, and also kept the public house after his death. Robert (18th/19th C.) mason in Castleton. He was among the subscribers to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Robert (18th/19th C.) butcher of the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He could be the same Robert who was a flesher on the Howegate on the 1841 census, married to Isabel and with children Elizabeth, John and William. Robert (b.1800/1) farmer at Galalaw, probably son of Robert. He was listed among the heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1840 and 1841. In 1851 he was farming 150 acres and employing 4 labourers and in 1861 was listed as proprietor and farmer of 200 acres, employing 4 people. He was still recorded at Galalaw in 1868 and listed as owner on the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He married Agnes Anderson in Wilton Parish in 1832. Their children included: Margaret (b.1832) and Robert (b.1834), who probably died young; James (b.1836), who was probably the later farmer at Galalaw; John (b.1838): John (again, b.1839); Margaret Scott (b.1841); Robert (b.1842); Thomas (b.1846); and Andrew Anderson (b.1848). Ballie Robert (b.c.1785) Magistrate of the mid-19th century, who was known as a tenor singer. He may have been the same Robert described as ‘Officer’ for the Excise Office in Hawick in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He was also Treasurer of East Bank Kirk. He is listed in the 1841 census as a farmer on the Cross Wynd. He married Ann Matthison, and their children included: Ann Scott (b.1808); Elizabeth (b.1812); and James (b.1814), who was a draper. He is buried in Wilton Old Cemetery. Robert (b.c.1815) blacksmith at Stirches Croft in 1841. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included John, Christian and Andrew. He may have been related to Walter, who was joiner there at the same time. Robert (1832–97) son of James, forester in Cavers. He was a tailor and clothier in Denholm. In 1859 he married Margaret (1833–96), daughter of Robert Scott, farmer and Elizabeth Wilson. Their children were: Robert Scott (b.1860); James (b.1862); David Wilson (b.1866); John Weir (b.1870); Elizabeth Wilson (b.1874), who died young; Thomas Mungo (b.1876), also died young; Thomas Mungo (again, b.1878); and Elizabeth Jane (b.1880), died young. The forst 2 children were born at Todlaw. He and his wife are buried in Denholm Cemetery. Robert Laidlaw (1830–74) son of William and Margaret Scott; he was from the Merrylaw family, and presumably named after the proprietor of Falnash. He attended St. Andrews University 1847–9. He was recorded as farmer at Falnash in 1868. He was owner of Merrylaw according to the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. In 1867 he married Apalina Christina Hogarth, daughter of Alexander Pott in Teviothead Parish in 1867. Their children included: Apalina Margaret Scott (b.1869); William Laidlaw (b.1870); Jean Elliot (b.1871); and Alexander Pott (b.1872). He died aged 44.
Robert (19th/20th C.) son of James, he was descended from the Charterhall, Ancrum branch of the Turnbulls. He was a shepherd and then a farmer. In 1886 he married Isabella Gutterton, whose father had been a servant of Athol Hay. They had a son James, and 3 daughters.

Robert (19th/20th C.) Bailie of Hawick. He was on the Council 1890–1900. Robert (1864–1932) gamekeeper at Arden Hall in Yorkshire, he was tenant farmer at Weensmoor around 1910. He married Isabel Gutterton and their children were Jim, Cecilia and Tib.

Rev. Robert Wilson (b.1893) born in Hawick, son of schoolmaster Adam and Helen Paterson. He was educated at Hawick High School and Edinburgh University. He served as a Lieutenant in the Black Watch and the Royal Fusiliers. He was licensed to preach in 1915, was then assistant at the Tron Church in Edinburgh and also in Hawick from 1919. He was ordained as minister of Dunsyre in 1921. He married Catherine Russell, daughter of Joseph Strang. Their children were: Helen Blair Paterson (b.1920); Katherine Margaret Strang (b.1922); Dorothy Annie Wilson (b.1925); Evelyn Josephine Cathels (b.1929); and Adam Strang (b.1922); Dorothy Annie Wilson (b.1925); Evelyn Josephine Cathels (b.1929); and Adam Michael Gordon (b.1935). Roland (15th C.) resident of Edinburgh. In 1476 he and his wife Peronell summoned Henry Liberton to appear before the Lords Auditors over a claim for rental on a tenement in Edinburgh. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls. Roland (15th C.) tenant in Fulton. He was recorded in 1493 when he and Thomas had remission for the theft of sheep from ‘pryndadotis in Weddale’; their surety was the Laird of Bedrule.

Simon (15th C.) tenant in Clarilaw. In 1493 he had remission for associating with the ‘rebels of Leven’ (i.e. Englishmen). His surety was George of Hallrule. Simon (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Simone Turnbule’ in 1507. Several Dalgleishes of Braidhaugh (probably in Rulewater) received remission for receiving and commuting with him and others. Robert Turnbull was also mentioned, and so presumably a relative. They must have been declared rebels for some rieving activity. He and Robert were also recorded in 1508 when Cuthbert Lauder of Todrig was hanged for associating with them. And in 1510 John Dalgleish was convicted of several crimes including ‘Inter-communing with Symon Turnbull and his accomplices, Englishmen’.

Simon (16th C.) holder of the lands of Chamberlain Newton according to a ‘discharge’ of 1528/9 relating to ‘non-entries’ and other fees of the local Scots. He is there described as the ‘grantor’s servant’ (i.e. servant to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell). Stephen (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the local men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. He is surely related to other Turnbulls who were named (Andrew, John and Richard), but it is unclear how. He is recorded as ‘Stephanus Turnbule’. Stephen (15th/16th C.) brother of Philip of Whithope. He was recorded in 1494/5 as ‘Stephanus turnbule frater domini quhilthop’ when he had remission for bringing in ‘traitors of Leven’ for the plundering and burning of Kershope, stealing 80 cows and slaughtering John Murray; his brother the Laird of Whithope served as his surety. In 1500 Philip was assessed for payment due to Murray, with 4 oxen being taken, appraised and given to Walter Scott of Branxholme. Where he himself lived is not recorded. Stephen (16th C.) son of Watt in Howa. In 1567 Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present him to answer changes of raiding into England. Stephen (d.c.1590) recorded as ‘of Wowlie and Wowahoplie’ (i.e. ‘Wolfelee’ and ‘Wolfehopelee’) in 1590 when he was succeeded by his son Adam. The family possessed the right of rental of the lands, which were still owned by the Homes of Wedderburn. He may have been son of the previous Adam. Stephen (17th C.) recorded as ‘in Appothsyd’ when he witnessed a saisine for Appotside in 1632. Stephen (17th C.) became an elder of Bedrule Parish in 1691 and was probably connected directly with the Turnbulls of Bedrule through his grandfather, who was also Stephen. He may be the ‘Stiphan’ who was listed on the Hearth Tax records for Bedrule Parish in 1694.

Stephen (17th C.) resident of Brauxholme. He was recorded in 1703 when the Parish Session collected money for his numerous family of motherless children’. He was called to the Session as a witness, but could not attend because ‘the water was not passable’. Thomas (14th C.) witnessed in 1390 to the charter by John Turnbull of Minto, granting Minto to Sir William Stewart of Jedburgh. His designation is not given, but other Turnbulls listed were Adam of Whithope and Adam of Fulton. Thomas of Penchrise (15th C.) recorded in 1464/5 as witness to the saisine granting the lands of Kirkton Mains and Flex to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. Thomas (15th C.) recorded in 1471 as being ‘of Faulnash’, which could be ‘Fawlishope’ (as recorded the following year). He was ordered to pay 3 year’s worth of taxes for the lands of Chamberlain Newton pertaining to Lord Lindsay, but failed to appear. He is probably related to the John who was connected with Stouslie (in the same Barony) in 1468. Sir Thomas of Greenwood and the Lyne (15th C.) had a sasine for the lands of Greenwood in 1461. He leased the lands of Greenwood and the Lyne, in the Barony of Minto, to Robert, son of David Scott of Buccleuch in 1488. This corresponds to the modern Girnwood. He kept 1 acre of the lands of Greenwood and 1 acre of the lands of Lyne, both in the north part, presumably for himself. He is probably son or grandson of the Adam who was granted Greenwood (or Girnwood) in 1439. In 1488 he also had a charter from James III for the lands of ‘Traringzeane’ in Ayrshire; this was for his service to the King at Blackness. He is also mentioned as resigning the same lands to Alexander, Lord Home in a charter of 1492/3. He may have been part of the family of the Turnbulls of Minto, who sold the lands about half a century later. He is probably the Sir Thomas who witnessed a confirming charter for the Barony of Wilton in 1494/5. He may be the Thomas of ‘Grynwald’ who in 1462 witnessed the copying of a discharge made a few years earlier between Cranston of that Ilk and Douglas of Cavers. He may be the Thomas who gave a pledge for James Rutherford in 1471. Thomas of Stouslie (15th C.) witness to the 1488 sasine in which the lands of Greenwood (i.e. Girnwood) and the Lyne were leased by Robert Scott of Al lanhaugh. He is surely related to the Andrew of Stouslie who is recorded in 1490. Andrew Turnbull of Hawick was also a witness to the same sasine, and so probably related. Thomas (15th C.) recorded as ‘in Gaithous cot’ in 1493 when he had remission for being at the Boroughmuir of Edinburgh with the Duke of Albany. In 1494/5 he had remission for stealing sheep and a horse from John Sinclair in Lauderdale, with George in Hall rule acting as his surety. He was surely related to John, who was recorded in Gatehousecote at the same time. Perhaps the same Thomas, tenant at Gatehousecote, was listed in the 1516 pardon that many Turnbulls had for involvement with the traitorous Homes. Other tenants there were Andrew and his brother William, as well as Patrick and David. Sir Thomas (15th C.) recorded in 1490 when the lease of ‘Faulishope’ was granted to him without ‘grassum’, and granted to him again in 1492. He is also recorded in 1494/5 when he had a precept from King James IV for any crimes he might be accused of committing before the King’s coronation seven years earlier. It is unclear whether he was a Turnbull of Bedrule or from another branch; however it is possible that he was the same man as Thomas of Bedrule. He is recorded as being ‘in Faulishope’, which seems likely to be Phau near the head of the Ettrick (although it could be Faulishope further down the Ettrick). The crimes included stealing many sheep, cattle and horses from Patrick Murray at ‘Skaddlamness’ (probably Scadow Ness or Rig) and Lewenshope, and stealing from David and George Tait ‘de Pryn’ (i.e. Pirn, near Stow), John and William Cleghorn at ‘Lechtanchop’ and John Scott at ‘Glensax’, as well as resetting Robert of ‘Mudlaw’ and John of ‘Newhalburn’; one of these Turnbulls was his son (the Latin making it unclear which one is meant). His son and heir John leased the lands of Phau in the period 1483–87 and Huntly in 1486. In 1494/5 he was surety for Edward Dunn in Phau, who had remission for stealing more than 100 sheep from Alexander and Robert Turnbull (who may have been his sons or other near relatives) from the Waters of Yarrow and Tweed. In 1495 he was recorded as a controller of some sort for the Crown lands in Ettrick Forest. In 1499 and 1501 half of the lands of ‘Faulishop’ in Ettrick were let to his wife, Janet Scott. In 1471 probably the same ‘Thomas Turnbull of Faulishope’ was ordered to repay Thomas ‘Folkert’ for 2 sacks of wool. Thomas (15th/16th C.) tenant in Fulton. He was recorded in 1493 when he and Roland had remission for the theft of sheep from ‘pryndadotis in Weddale’; his surety was the Laird of Bedrule. He was also recorded in 1494/5, when he was surety for himself and was fined for non-appearance. He is also listed in the 1501 Exchequer Rolls among a group of Turnbulls and others whose fines were remitted; ‘Thome Turnbull junioris’, listed before him may have been his son. Thomas of Bedrule (15th/16th C.) son and heir of George Turnbull. It is possible he is the same man as the Sir Thomas who was tenant in Phau in Selkirkshire (and fined at the Justice-aiire in Selkirk in 1494/5). In 1493 Peter, ‘filio domini thome milititis’, served as surety at the Justice-aiire in Jedburgh in 1493; this suggests that Sir Thomas was indeed the Turnbull Laird (although ‘Bedrule’ is not explicitly mentioned). He is probably the Laird of Bedrule also recorded in the Justice-aiire in Jedburgh in 1493, when Walter Ker of Cessford served as surety for ensuring that he and his attendants would not harm James Dunn in Jedburgh (suggesting some sort of feud). He is probably also the Laird of Bedrule who served as surety for David Waugh in Bedrule and Hawick in 1494/5. In 1494/5 he was also ‘Junior dominus de bethroul’ when he served as surety for himself and was fined for not appearing at the Justice-aire; the ‘Junior’ appellation suggests that his father was still alive, but that he was serving as the effective chief of the Turnbulls. In 1494/5 he additionally served as surety for: John, son of Philip; Ninian, son of William; and Robert, brother of the Laird of Bedrule (who was therefore presumably either his brother or uncle). He was recorded in 1501 when a fine of £40 imposed on 6 Turnbulls was granted to him. He was also recorded in 1502 as being ‘of Bethroull’ when he was one of about 20 Turnbulls and others who failed to appear to answer for the murder of Robert Oliver; Ralph Ker in Greenhead was fined for failing to enter him in the court, and was fined £100 (considerably more than for the other men, indicative of his standing). His brother William was also listed, as well as Andrew in Bedrule, who may have been related. Additionally he was fined for failing to produce John in Ruecastle to answer for the same crime. He had a sasine for the lands of Bedrule in 1502. He may be the Laird of Bedrule who served as surety (along with William Langlands) for John Sinclair in Minto, John in Ruecastle and the Turnbulls in Fulton in 1493, as well as for Gilbert Shiel in Minto in 1494/5. He may have been son of George of Bedrule, who is recorded about a generation earlier, and must have been related to the George of Bedrule who is recorded in the next decade. He is probably the same Thomas, son and heir of George, who is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501 and perhaps 1528. He is probably the Laird of Bedrule from whol 10 sheep were stolen by the Oliviers in Strange before 1502. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘junior’ in 1501 among 10 men whose fines were remitted. Turnbulls of Fulton and Bonchester were also listed, and so he was probably from this area, and from his name was likely to have been son of another Thomas. Thomas in Fulton is listed directly after him. Thomas (15th/16th C.) tenant in Hallrule who was listed among the many Turnbulls given remission in 1516 for assisting the traitorous Homes; Robert and William were also listed there as tenants of Hallrule, and so may have been related. Thomas (d.bef. 1535) tenant in Town-of-Rule. Along with ‘Andree alias Dauid’ he was recorded in 1535 when Robert Scott of Allanhaugh was accused (but found not guilty) of their cruel murder. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in 1541 when accused of having been on a raid into England. He and George Rutherford, along with 100 other men were said to be responsible for the deaths of John Routledge and Robert Noble. He may be the same as one of the other Thomas's. Sir Thomas of Bedrule (c.1520–c.85) son of George. In 1528 there was a gift of the ‘ward, relief and non-entry’ of his late father’s lands, to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. Included in the gift was the right to arrange his marriage, since he was then still a minor. He may be the ‘Trumble of Bedroule’ who was listed among lairds in Teviotdale who signed a bond to settle feuds in 1545. In 1550/1 he gave a ‘precept of clare constat’ involving Robert Scott, heir of Adam Scott in the lands of Little Drinkston. He signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’ in 1551. In 1553/4 he was listed among the Rutherfords and others in an assurance not to harm the Kers; his pledge was either William of Hassendean Kirk or George of the Toor. Also in 1553/4 he was on the panel for the inheritance of Branxholme etc. by Sir Walter Scott. There was a complaint against ‘the molestations’ committed by him and George in Hallrule, made by Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1557, and he had to appear to answer these charges (the resolution is unrecorded, however). In 1560 he was named on the bond to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords. In 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. In 1561/2 Sir John Stewart of Traquair was surety for him to answer to an accusation of stealing 3 horses from Lord Gray. In 1563, along with the parishioners of Bedrule he brought an action against Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, William Kerr (the Parson) and Sir John Allan, demanding that they produce the proof that they had the rights to the benefices of Bedrule; Kerr won the legal battle in 1564. There is a ‘certificate of relaxation’ for the teinds of Bedrule between him and Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1564/5, and a bond between them in the same year. Also in 1564 he was listed as ‘The Lard of Badrewll’ among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. He signed the ‘Band of Teviotdale’ in 1565. Also in 1565 he was one of the sureties for Robert Kerr of Woodhead. He was recorded as being at Mary Queen of Scots’ wedding to Darnley in 1566. He was among men re-ordered to appear before the Privy Council in 1567 regarding order in the Middle Marches. He had a bond of 1567 with the Warden, Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst to present

‘Rengen Foster called Can’. A few years afterwards he assisted in stopping the Regent Moray from seizing the Crown. He later supported the Regent Morton, along with the Rutherfords, but against the Scotts and Kers. In 1569 he signed the bond to suppress the thieves on the Border. Also in 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting superiority of her father’s lands in Wilton. Along with his sons Walter and Thomas he was put to ‘escheat’ as a perjured rebel at one point. Additionally in 1569 John Rutherford of Hunthill was surety for him, while he was surety for Adie Elliot ‘of the Cowdais’ and John Elliot of Thorlleshope. He was one of the ‘curators’ for the young Robert Scott of Thirlestane around the 1570s. In 1571/2 he was one of the sureties for the leaders of the Ovalers as well as for Andrew Hall of ‘the Sykis’ and some Robsons of Hownam. Also in 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves. In 1572/3 he was cautioner (along with Richard Rutherford of Edgerston) for several men from Southdean. Also in 1572/3 he was surety for William, Burgess of Edinburgh (who was thus probably a close relative). In 1573 he (and his son and heir William, and other son Walter) were among the men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm; however, the group claimed they did it because Kerr had reset the fugitive Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and were acquitted. Also in 1573 he signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’. In 1575 he was among men asked to decide whether Robert Fraser was responsible for stealing some English horses. In 1576 he was involved in a dispute with William Ker, younger of Cessford, over lands in Nether Ancrum; also on his side were his son Walter, William in Barnhills and Mungo Bennet in Chesters. Also in 1576 he was cautioner for the Turnbulls of Howden, Hallrule, Billerwell and Belses in their bond not to harm other Turnbulls. In about 1578 (perhaps earlier) he signed a bond with other Turnbulls and Rutherfords, and another between the Kers and the Rutherfords. In 1577/8 his sons Thomas and Walter were acquitted of the murder of John Forbes. He was also one of the ‘curators’ of the young Robert Scott of Thirlestane. In 1576 he was a cautioner for some Borderers who were accused of riving, and in 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned (in his case as pledge for Adam of Over Hassendean and also Sim Armstrong). He was then declared to be liable for the fines, or the amounts would be made from his ‘movabill guidis and geir, and, failyeing of thair movabill guidis, to appryse thair landis’. However, he appeared personally, and was let off, provided that the Davidsoms for whom he stood as caution appeared before the Justice Court of Roxburgh. Also in 1578/9 John Johnstone of that Ilk was caution for his appearance, as well as his sons Walter and Thomas, his nephew John and his son-in-law Edward Lorraine; this was for the slaughter of ‘Thomas Schevill’. Also in 1578/9 there is mention at the Privy Council of an agreement to stop a feud between him (along with several Rutherfords and Douglas of Bonjedward) and the Kers of Cessford; there was also another agreement between him and George Douglas, younger of Bonjedward. Kinmont Willie Armstrong appeared before the Privy Council in 1579 because of a feud between their families, and also Christie Armstrong of Barnglies, for the same reason. In 1579 his sons Walter and Thomas were on a list of men accused of raiding into England; also listed were ‘Hobbat Hall and Mekie Hall, banished Englishmen, and servants to the Laird of Beddroule’. In 1580 he is listed as head of a group of Turnbulls who were bound over to keep the peace with John Turnbull of Minto and his followers; his group included his son Walter, as well as William of Barnhills and Edward Lorraine, younger of Harwood. Also in 1580 he was ordered along with John of Minto and Wat of Bewlie, to enter wards in Edinburgh Castle or be declared a rebel; later he was said to have disobeyed and was denounced as a rebel. In 1581 he was cautioner for men of the Jedburgh area and was among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. Also in 1581 he was among Border Lairds who denounced their bonds with Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. He was denounced in 1583/4 for not appearing before the Privy Council; he and his sons Walter and Thomas were denounced as rebels for taking ‘the cumpany of utheris thevis and rebellis, intending to continew in thift and oppressioun’. He was also the Laird of Bedrule whose sons are mentioned in a letter by the King in 1584 ‘for ane attemptat committ be thame at Preswen in England’ for which they were found guilty. In about 1584 he lost his position as one of the tutors to his niece Margaret (daughter and heiress of William), since he had been declared a rebel. He was probably the Laird of Bedrule referred to in 1584/5 when his son Robert was one of the Borderers summoned to appear before the Privy Council to explain how they were helping to keep peace on the Border. He is also recorded in 1587 representing Alexander of Howa; either the date is an error or this is his son Thomas. He married Mary Ker and secondly Janet Turnbull, widow of Philip Bennet of Chesters. A marriage contract of 1542 also exists between him and Margaret, daughter of George Home of Spott. He had at least 9 children: William, who probably pre-deceased him; Walter of Fulton, who succeeded to Bedrule; Thomas, probably tenant at Spittal-on-Rule; Robert; Margaret, who married Edward Lorraine, this union apparently being unpopular with the Rulewater Turnbulls; Patrick, probably tenant at Templehall; Mark, tenant at Hartshaugh; James; and Hector, who owned Hartshaugh and Swanshie, although this may be a confusion with the son of Thomas of Hartshaugh. Another daughter Agnes is recorded in an undated marriage contract with Robert, son of deceased Robert Scott of Raeknowe. Although some genealogies have him dying in 1572, it seems this is wrong (or else 2 Thomases are hopelessly confounded). Thomas (16th C.) described as being ‘in Rawflat’ in a court case of 1540 when he disputed a ‘wadset’ with William Scott of Hassendean. Another case heard at the same time involved a marriage contract of 1536 between his son and heir George and Elizabeth, eldest daughter and heir of the same William Scott. Curiously in 1538 he had remission for the crime of stealing letters of reversion for the lands of ‘Coppitrig’ from a box belonging to William Scott of Hassendean in Nicholas Ruthertford’s house in Edinburgh. Thomas (16th C.) described as ‘in the Tronyhill’ in a charter of 1536, where William Scott of Hassendean gave him ‘two husbandlands’ in ‘le Easter Hassendean’ described ambiguously. It is possible he is the same Thomas who farmed at Rawflat 4 years later. He may have been father of David of Troneyhull, who is recorded later in the 1500. Thomas (16th C.) recorded as ‘Thomas Trumble of the Gaithtuscott’ in a document of 1550. Thomas (16th C.) farmer at Hartshaugh or possibly Laird there. He is recorded in 1557 when he signed a bond (along with others) with the Warden John Kerr of Ferniehirst to bring in the thief William Nixon (‘Clement’s Will’). Hector was probably his son. Thomas in Abbotrule was another son. His son Airchie was recorded in 1567. Thomas (16th C.) brother of David of Wauchope. In 1561 he and his brother were among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. He may be the same as one of the contemporay Thomases. He may be the Thomas who was pledge for the Laird of Wauchope in 1553/4. Thomas (16th C.) farmer at Harwood-town, brother of David of Wauchope. ‘Thomas Turnbullis byir and barneyaird’ are listed among the lands in the Barony of Feu-Rule under dispute in 1562. He is listed as brother of David in 1567 when he was instructed to present his servant Ingram Oliver to answer charges relating to raids into England. It was either him or (more likely) his son who was hanged during the period when Sir William Cranston was a Border Commissioner, i.e. shortly after 1605. Thomas (16th C.) recorded being ‘of Hassindenbank’ in 1567 when James Heriot of Trabroun was surety for entering him into ward in Edinburgh. He was recorded as tenant in Hassendeanbank in 1571 when he and his wife, Margaret Scott, had a charter in Melrose for lands in Darnick. Their eldest son William was also mentioned, and the witnesses included Robert Scott of Over Hassendean, who may well have been his father in law. This charter was confirmed in 1616. The Thomas, younger, listed in 1579 was probably a son of his. He could be the same man as one of the contemporary Thomases. Thomas ‘Blue Tom’ (16th C.) recorded in 1567 among men who Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst had to present to answer accusations of raiding into England. His is listed being ‘callit blew Thome’, but it is unclear what this nickname might have meant. Thomas (16th/17th C.) son of Sir Thomas of Bedrule. In 1577/8 he and his brother Walter were acquitted of the murder of John, son of John Forbes of Ardmurdoch. In 1578/9 he was among members of the Turnbull family who were ordered to appear before the Privy Council to answer for slaughter of Thomas ‘Schevill’. In 1579/80 he and Walter were on a list of men accused of raiding into England. He and his brother Walter were accused of stealing 19 cows from Englishman Edward Grays in 1582. In 1583 he and Walter were supposed to be turned over to the English Warden, but William Ker of Cessford (a relative of some sort) sent them back to Scotland and they were acquitted. Ker gave caution for the pair in 1583/4 and John Cranston of that Ilk paid the £2000 penalty. He became tenant at Spittal-on-Rule in 1612. He is recorded as ‘in Rowllspittle’ recorded in a bond of 1619 with Robert Pringle (probably later of Stichill), servitor to Sir Gideon Murray of Elibank, with cautioners being Mark Turnbull
‘in Hairtishaugh’ and Thomas ‘Allensone’ Bailie of Jedburgh. There may also be some confusion between him and Thomas of Minto, who lived about the same time. Thomas (16th/17th C.) son of Thomas of Hartshaugh, he was recorded as tenant in Abbotrule in 1579, when listed among Scotsmen accused of committing raids into England. He was said to have been in a party of about 40 men, led by the sons of the Laird of Bedrule, who stole 40 cows, and took the Laird there prisoner. Thomas (16th/17th C.) son of ‘Hekie of Hartishaugh’. In 1579 he was listed along with several Turnbulls and others of raiding cattle from the Laird of ‘Pansoun’ in England. Thomas ‘the Tutor’ (16th/17th C.) listed in 1579 as ‘Thome Turnbull, younger in Hassindanebank, alias called the Tutor’, when he was among a group of Turnbulls accused of stealing cattle from the Laird of ‘Pansoun’ in England. The group was led by sons of the Laird of Bedrule. He may have been son of the previous Thomas in Hassendeanbank. Thomas of Billerwell (16th C.) listed in 1581 among men accused of murdering Walter of Rawflat. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Turnbulls, but the Belses branch were also named in the accusation. Thomas of Hobbsburn (16th/17th C.) accused in 1590 of raiding Middleton Hall in England in the previous year. His name is recorded as ‘Thomas Trumble of Hoppesburnn the younger’, and others named were Douglasses, Laidlaws and Shiels. He is probably the ‘Thomas Trumble of Hoppesborne’ listed along with Douglasses, Laidlaws, Shiels and others who were accused of stealing livestock and goods from the tenants of Middleton in 1590. He was also listed among Elliot, Armstrongs, Laidlaws and Croziers, accused in 1590 of riving from the Laird of ‘Troghwen’ and Hedley of ‘Garret Sheills’; he was there ‘Thome Trumble of Hoppisburne’. He was also one of the ‘Turnbulls accused in 1606 of raiding and burning Appotside. He was probably related to some of the others who were on trial (from Wauchope, Billerwell, etc.), but the exact relationships are not clear. He is referred to as ‘houshould man to Thomas Trumbill younger of Wauchope’. He was eventually acquitted of the crimes. Either he or his son was ‘younger of Hoppisburn’ in 1606 when he sold Hobbsburn and Weens to John, brother of Walter Scott of Allanmount. Thomas (16th/17th C.) son of David of Troneyhill. In 1610 he was named along with 7 other Turnbulls (and 2 Davidsons) for continuing as rebels following being found guilty of the murder of Thomas Ker of Crailinghall and 6 Grahamswal brothers. Thomas (16th/17th C.) son of Walter, tenant in Fulton. Along with his father and several other Turnbulls, he was accused by the Laird of Traquair of cutting down and removing wood from his lands at Huntliehill in 1619. He was denounced as a rebel for failing to appear. This may be the last record of a Turnbull of Fulton. Thomas (16th/17th C.) servant to James Home, son of the historian David Home of Godscroft (in Berwickshire). He witnessed a bond for Home of Godscroft in 1627. Thomas of Bedrule (b.c.1585) son of William and probably grandson of Sir Thomas (although these generations are uncertain, and he could have been great-grandson of Sir Thomas). He is probably the Thomas ‘son of William Turnbull, f iar of Bedreull’ who was a witness in 1618/9 to a bond by Walter of Bedrule to Adam of Abbotrule Townhead. By the time he succeeded, the castle was long destroyed, and the Kers had taken possession in 1623. It is unclear who he married, but he seems to have been succeeded by William and then another Thomas (last of the Lairds of Bedrule). Thomas of Wauchope (16th/17th C.) eldest son of Hector. In a court case of 1605 (in which they accused John Elliot of Copshaw of stealing livestock from their farms) he was still ‘younger of Wauchope’; his brother George and other neighbouring tenants are also mentioned. He was perhaps the leader of a band of Turnbulls who systematically raided the estates of Appotside and Harwood over the period 1598–1605. Although the rest of his family and associates were acquitted, he was separately brought to justice in 1606, but failed to appear and was declared a rebel. James Gledstains, younger of Cocklaw, acted as his surety. Willie Scott ‘man to Young Wauchop’ may have been his servant, when declared a fugitive in 1605. In 1607 he and Hector of Barnhills brought a complaint against James, son of Edward Lorrain, ‘for presenting bended pistolets to their breasts for their slaughter’. Hector of Wauchope may have been his son, with Thomas his grandson. However, in 1653 his nephew James (son of his brother George) was served heir to his 20-pound land of Wauchope. Thomas of Minto (16th/17th C.) son of John. In 1601 he was ‘Tho. Trumble the younger layrd of Myntaw’ who, along with another Thomas, as well as James Douglas of Cavers, was accused by several Englishmen of stealing their livestock from the Stobs and the Crag. He is probably the Thomas of Minto who was one of a large band of Turnbulls who were involved in a serious fight in Jedburgh on Rood Fair Day in 1601. About 30 Turnbulls entered Jedburgh and tried to get Thomas Ker (brother of the Provost) to come out of his house, whereupon the men of Jedburgh took up arms. The fight left Thomas Ker, his servant and 2 of the Turnbulls dead and many men injured, and as a result several Turnbulls were later convicted and hanged. In 1602 he was recorded as younger of Minto when, along with Hector of Barnhills and Mark of Bewlie, he robbed a hunting party sent out by the Laird of Gretna, with permission to hunt for venison in Tynedale; they were found guilty of robbery and fined for the value of 3 horses. In 1603 he was served heir to his father in the half Barony of Minto, including 5 husbandlands in the town of Minto. In 1604 he acted as cautioner for William Middlemas and his son James, charged with the crimes related to the 1601 skirmish. He is probably the Laird of Minto who was named as a Commissioner for keeping peace in Roxburghshire in 1610. Also in 1610 he acted as cautioner for James Douglas of Cavers and his son William, that they would not harm Alexander Horsburgh of that Ilk or his colleagues. In 1611 he had licence to travel abroad for 5 years. In 1618 he was among 4 prominent local men selected to try 2 murderers in Jedburgh. He is also mentioned in 1622 when his son Walter became a tailor’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He witnessed a report by the Justices of the Peace of Roxburghshire in 1627. In 1627 he paid caution for William of Braidhaugh and his son James. He is also recorded in 1628 when the major landowners of Roxburghshire convened to elect M.Ps. He is there listed as ‘Thomas Trum- bles of Minto’. His 2nd son was Thomas, recorded in a charter for Hornshole in 1619; his 1st son may have been John. Thomas (16th/17th C.) 2nd son of Thomas of Minto. In 1619 he was granted the lands of ‘Horneshoill’ by the Earl of Melrose. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Thomases. Thomas (16th/17th C.) son of James of Hartshaugh, the Kirklands and Swanshiel. He succeeded his father in 1619. He was in turn succeeded by his son Adam. Thomas (16th/17th C.) son of Robert called ‘of Bedroull’ who had a bond in 1620 with Sir Walter Scott of Whitslade. The bond was witnessed by his father Robert, who was probably a son of Sir Thomas, but these generations are difficult to sort out. Thomas ‘in Newcastill’ and his son John (certainly close relatives) were cautioners. Thomas (16th/17th C.) recorded in 2 deeds of 1620 as schoolmaster in Southdean Parish, the first person on record to hold such a position. There is nothing else known about him. Thomas (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1620 when he was a cautioner for a bond between Thomas, son of Robert called ‘of Bedroull’ and Sir Walter Scott of Whitslade. He is probably the Thomas ‘in Rowcastell’ who witnessed a bond for Walter of Bedrule in 1623. He is also described as ‘in Rowcastell’ in 1632 when he feued lands in Ruecastle from Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning. He was possibly a son of Sir Thomas of Bedrule, brother of Walter of Bedrule, making the other Thomas (son of Robert) his nephew. Thomas of Knowe (d.1647) probably the Thomas included in 1603 on a long list of local men that the Baron of Hassendean was trying to remove from their lands; his son Walter (perhaps William) is also listed. He was Laird of Hassendean Knowe. In 1613 Sir George Ramsay paid him the teinds for the lands of Knowe. In 1619 he raised ‘letters of horning an poinding’ against William Turnbull, brother of the deceased Robert. He was also a juror at the 1623 Commissioners’ Court. His relationship with Thomas of Minto is unclear (but the families seemed to use the same names John and Thomas for the next few generations!). There are several bonds and discharges in the archives of the Horsburgh family that mention him in the early 1600s. In 1626 he and Walter Scott of Ancrum had a ‘letter of deliverance’ (probably related to a debt) against Rev. Alexander Forrest of Hassendean. In 1628 he was Thomas ‘in Know’, who, along with Walter, were charged by the Privy Council to keep the peace with Walter Scott of Midshiels and other Scotts. He paid the caution in 1628 for Andrew of Bewlie not to molest the Scotts in Burnfoot and Midshiels. In 1638 he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick. He is further recorded in 1640 in dealings with Walter Gledstains, factor to the Earl of Buccleuch. In 1643 he is recorded as owner of Knowe in Hassendean Parish, valued at £279 10s. The name of his wife does not appear to be recorded, however a carved panel on the house at Knowetownhead has ‘T.T.’ and ‘H.T.’ and the year 1628, suggesting that he married another Turnbull (probably Helen, which was the name of one of his granddaughters). His daughter Marion married Andrew Turnbull of Bewlie about 1640. Another daughter Elizabeth married Walter Scott (subject of a legal dispute against Walter and Janet Scott in 1644); she is the ‘Bessie’ who secondly married Andrew Riddell in 1652, tenant at Over Whittington. He was deceased by 1649 when his daughter Barbara married John Grierson (son of the deceased Andrew), and she appears to have put an ‘inhibition’ on her husband in 1657. One of his sons was William (recorded in 1658), while John (who appears to have succeeded as Laird) was probably his eldest son. His death is recorded on a table tomb in Minto old churchyard, along with that of John of Knowe (d.1676). Thomas of Westwood (17th C.) holder of lands near Bonchester in 1643, along with ‘Harie’, who must have been his brother or son. They appear to have held separate lands, with his valued at £40 Scots. Thomas (17th C.) described as ‘in Templhall’ when he witnessed a Rulewater sasine of 1654. He was brother of Robert, the tenant at Templehall. He could be the Thomas in ‘Rouletoun’ recorded in 1643, with his lands being valued at £40, and Robert also listed there. Thomas (d.c.1655) son of William, from whom he inherited the lands of Cockerheugh (part of Hassendeanbank) in 1622. He is probably the Thomas who was infested in the lands of Hassendeanbank by the Commendator of Melrose in about 1622. He is recorded as possessor of the lands of Hassendean Bank in the tax roll of the Abbacy of Jedburgh in 1626. His son Thomas succeeded to the lands in 1655. Thomas of Upper Bonchester (17th C.) Laird in 1643, and probably father of William (d.1686); this is according to Walter Deans, writing in 1887. He is probably the Thomas of Bonchester whose lands were valued at £30 in 1643. He could be the same as Thomas ‘called Clack’ who is listed in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls among landowners in Abbotsrule Parish; it is unclear what that name meant, or whether he was related to the Scotts who shared a similar appellation, or Adam ‘callit Clerk in Bonchester’ recorded in 1643. There has been progenitor of the Bonchester Turnbulls who were later tenants at Wolfelee Mill, Hartshaugh Mill, Harwood Mill and Hallrule Mill. Thomas of Tower (17th C.) listed by James Wilson among the list of local landowners of the mid-to-late 17th century. He is recorded being of ‘Tour’, which probably meant Spittal Tower. He paid the land tax of £104 in Cavers Parish in 1643. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas of Tofts (d.c.1690) son of William of ‘Weddelliswallis’. In 1647 he was served heir to his father’s 5 husbandlands of Minto. He was recorded in a marriage agreement in 1669 between him and Helen, daughter of John Turnbull of Knowe. This may have been for one of his sons, since he himself married a daughter of Rev. Robert Brownlie of Kirkton. He was listed by James Wilson as one of the main local landed proprietors of the mid-17th century. He was recorded as being ‘of Tofts in Kirktonparoch’ when he paid land tax on £402 in 1663. He may be the unnamed Turnbull who paid the land tax on Tofts, valued at £300 in 1678. He is probably the Thomas ‘in Tofts’ whose testaments were recorded in 1686 and 1689. His son William was served as his heir in 1695, in the lands of ‘Over et Nether Tofts’. Thomas of Bedrule (17th C.) son of William of Bedrule. He is probably the Thomas who is recording owning half of the Mains of Bedrule in 1643 (the other half being owned by William of Bedrule). In 1668 he was served heir to his father in the lands and Barony of Bedrule. He was the last Turnbull Laird of Bedrule, although by the time he inherited the family had already lost most of its lands. There was a final instrument of resignation of the Barony to Ker of Cavers in 1668. He was nevertheless allowed to remain in Bedrule Mill (where he is recorded in 1673) and part of the Mains of Bedrule. His wife’s name is not recorded, but he was succeeded by his son Andrew, and was grandfather of Thomas of the Hawick carpet factory. His other son was William, tenant at Bedrule Mill. There was also a tradition that his eldest son died in India leaving a great fortune that was taken by the government. Thomas (17th C.) brother of William, who was a mason in Newton (probably in Bedrule Parish, but possibly on Slitrig). He was one of those accused by a servant of Douglas of Cavers of stealing his wallet in a Hawick inn in 1642. He gave evidence to the Magistrates at the trial. Thomas (17th C.) brother of John of Knowe. In 1652 he was appointed as the tutor to the children of the deceased Thomas in ‘Chesterhouse’ (probably Charterhall near Ancrum), Thomas, William, Helen, Jean and Margaret. He was the nearest male relative, probably their uncle. Thomas (17th C.) son of Thomas, from whom he inherited the lands of Cockerheugh in 1655. He is recorded as ‘in Hassendeanbank’ in 1655 in a ‘tack’ with John Turnbull of Knowe for ‘Cosier’s Acre’ in Cockersyke, at the east end of Hassendean Knowe meadow (it seems likely that he was distantly related to the Turnbulls of Knowe). He had a ‘wadset’ with John Scott of Brieryyards and his sons in 1656, also involving the ‘merk land of Hassendeanbank’ (i.e. Cockerheugh). In 1658 he had a further bond with John Scott of Brieryyards. His eldest son was probably John (according to an undated document). He could be the Thomas, tenant in Hassendean, who is recorded paying the land tax for £52 in 1663. Robert, who is recorded at Cockerheugh in 1694, seems likely to have been his descendant. Thomas (17th C.) recorded in 1662 as ‘in Roultounfute’. He was ‘Bailie in that part’ for the Earl of Lothian or perhaps to Walter Riddell. He may have been the same as Thomas, tenant of Templehall. Thomas ‘Captain’ (17th C.) tenant of Swanshield. He is named (along with 7 others) in a proclamation fixed to the Mercat Cross in the early 1680s, accused of frequenting Conventicles. He is also on the long list of fugitives proclaimed in 1684. Thomas (17th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1665 (although this would make more sense as 1685) he was accused of throwing his mother-in-law Helen Briggs (wife of Mungo Swan) downstairs, when ‘coming to see his spouse, her daughter Helen in 1681. He may be the Thomas probably Helen (b.1657), with whom he had a daughter Agnes married Thomas Thomson, merchant of Selkirk. He was an elder for Minto Kirk. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1698. He rented Huntlaw from Archibald Forrest of Huntlaw in 1703 and was still renting it in 1715. He bought Hassendean Townhead from William Little the same year. A bill for William Little from Gideon Scott of Highchester was passed on to him by Bailie Robert Hardie of Hawick in 1705. He paid a similar bill for William Little according to a discharge by Gideon Scott of Falnash in 1705. In 1716 he brought a libel case against James Elliot, an Edinburgh waiter. About 1720 he is recorded in a document relating to teinds in Wilton Parish (the part that had been in Hassendean). A letter of 1724 from James Clerk suggests that they were brothers-in-law to each other. His will of 1682 (while he was still alive) is in the National Archives. He married Agnes Mackie, who died in 1716 in her 58th year. He was probably succeeded by his son Anthony and in 1721 his daughter Agnes married Thomas Thomson, merchant in Hawick. He and his wife were buried in Minto Kirkyard. Thomas (17th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for wright Francis Gledstains in 1682. He is probably one of the Thomases recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Cavers who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (17th C.) listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Todshawhaugh according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (1644/5–1729) tenant in Dyke farm, son of Thomas, who was also tenant there. The family are buried in Bedrule kirkyard. He is probably one of the 3 men of that name who are listed in the Hearth Tax records.

for Bedrule Parish in 1694. Thomas of Standhill (d.c.1695) son of Thomas. He is recorded in a discharge of 1658 when Thomas of Knowe’s son William was his ‘tutor’. He was known as a leading local supporter of the Covenanting cause, being converted by John Livingstone, who preached at Ancrum. In 1676 he helped John Blackadder escape after the Sheriff broke up a meeting near Selkirk. He paid the land tax in Ancrum Parish in 1678. He fought at Bothwell Bridge in 1679, and escaped the battlefield along with Walter of Bewlie. He was persecuted, had his possessions removed from him, and was sentenced to execution, but escaped capture and eventually returned to his estate at Standhill. He is probably the Turnbull ‘of Stainhall’ listed among those named as officers of the militia to defend against ‘the papists’ in 1689. He is listed among those appointed to visit schools in the Act of Parliament established in 1690 after the Revolution. In 1698 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire (but may have already been deceased). He had 2 sons: one was a soldier; the other was Deputy-Governor of Dumbarton Castle. One of them must have been the Thomas who was served heir to Thomas of Standhill in 1695. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Wester Swanshiel according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. Thomas (17th C.) listed as being ‘called tounfoot’ in Abbotrule Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he was taxed for having 2 hearths. He was probably associated with the lands of Abbotrule Townfoot. Thomas (17th C.) tenant in Ruletownfoot, listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is listed right after ‘Thomas called tounfoot’, who was probably associated with Abbotrule Townfoot (rather than Ruletownfoot), but may well have been closely related. Thomas (17th C.) cottar at Macksie in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Greatlaws in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (17th C.) gardener at Newhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Hassendean Mains according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He was probably related to Walter, who was also listed there. Thomas (17th C.) smith listed among the ‘Cottars in Hassenden’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He paid tax for 2 hearths. A separate Thomas appears on the same list of cottars. Thomas (17th/18th C.) son of Thomas of Standhill. He was served heir to his father in 1695. It was said that his father had 2 sons, one of whom was a soldier and the other was Deputy-Governor of Dumbarton Castle. Thomas (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick on the short-list of candidates for Cornet in 1711 and 1712. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbuls. He may be the same man as the merchant involved in a court case in 1748, in which writer Robert Taylor paid his bill with money that perhaps did not really belong to him; he also took Taylor to court to recover his money. He may be the Thomas whose mother was given money by the Hawick Session in 1723 for teaching poor children. Thomas (1680/1–1753) son of Thomas, tenant in Dykes farm. His wife Marion Brown died in 1743, and their son Thomas died in 1752, aged 25. The family are buried in Bedrule kirkyard. Thomas (1691/2–1768) married Betty Scott, who died in 1777, aged 72. Their children included: James (b.1725); ‘Beatie’ (b.1726); James (b.1727); Isabel (b.1728); Thomas (b.1731); James (again, b.1737); Walter (b.1738); Betty (b.1739); and Anne (b.1741). He may be the same man as Bailie Thomas. He was buried under a tablestone at St. Mary’s. Bailie Thomas (18th C.) father of Bailie Thomas of Fenwick. It is unclear which branch of the Turnbuls he came from (but presumably not closely related to Bailie ‘Tammy’ and the Minto branch, despite the similarity of names). He may be the Thomas who sold East Mains (of Hawick) to the Duke of Buccleuch, along with John Scott and Rev. Patrick Cunningham in the 1740s. He was probably the Thomas who was a Bailie in the 1730s, 40s and 50s. He was ‘Bailie Thomas Turnbull, elder’ when he served as Magistrate in 1757. In that year there was a dispute over residents of farms near the Common making ‘bakes’ at Blackgrain Moss, which were broken up on the orders of the Council (when he was visiting Newcastle) and the offenders fined, with him settling with them in opposition to the other Bailie, Robert Scott. He is probably the Bailie Thomas who purchased Fenwick in 1762 and other properties in 1771, including Rashiegrain and Commonbrae. In 1763 he was engaged in business in London when his son (also an ex-Bailie by then) was commissioned by the Hawick Town Council to write to him to arrange for an exchange of a new bell for St. Mary’s. Also in 1763 he was ‘Bailie Thomas Turnbull of Fenwick’ when he witnessed a baptism for his son Thomas. In 1767 he was described as ‘Thomas Turnbull, elder of Fenwick, Merchant in Hawick’ when he produced the Hawick Town Charters at the court case for the Division of the Common.
In 1777 he was one of the claimants for a share of Hawick Common, when it was divided, gaining more than 15 acres. He is said to have left 2 sons and 2 daughters (although these generations seem confused by multiple Thomases!). He was succeeded by his son, also Bailie Thomas. In 1758 he witnessed a baptism for glazier William (who was probably related to him) and in 1764 witnessed a baptism for his son Thomas (called ‘Junior’ at that point), as well as for a daughter of schoolmaster William Dyce (when described as ‘late Bailie here’). In 1764 ‘Bailies Turnbull older and younger’ and in 1766 both ‘Bailie Turnbull Senior’ and ‘Junior’ witnessed baptisms for baker John Osburn. Thomas (b.c.1730) son of Adam of Denesye. After the family were forced to leave the Rule valley he became a weaver in Tarset-foot, Tyneside. His sons Adam and William returned to the Rule area, but he could not be convinced to move. He also had a son Michael (who died young), and daughters Isabella (who married William Walker, farmer at East Fodderlee) and Mary (who married Thomas Telfer). He lived to be 99. Thomas ‘Tammy’ of Knowe (d.c.1770) probably succeeded from Anthony, who may have been his father. He is recorded in a discharge of 1758 and in 1763 when he leased Appletreehall, Townhead and part of Clarilaw. He is easily confused with Thomas of Minto, who was probably a distant cousin. He was involved in an action against the Duke of Buccleuch over teinds in the parishes of Minto and Hassendean in the period 1749–65. He is probably the Turnbull of Knowe recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was one of those who raised an action against Henry, Duke of Buccleuch, over the division of Hassendean Common in 1762. In 1769 he had a marriage bond for his son John with Agnes, daughter of Walter Riddell of Muselee. He married Sussana Scott, daughter of Robert Scott of Fahnash in Edinburgh in 1755 (and she made a disposition in 1789). He was succeeded by his son Thomas. His daughter Violet married Alexander Horsburgh of that Ilk in 1778, and the titles and lands probably passed to the Horsburgh family thereafter. Another daughter, Elizabeth, married Dr. James Watson in Kelso, and was also an heiress of his lands. His will from 1764 (when he was still alive) is in the National Archives. Some of his correspondence also survives (in the Horsburgh family collection) including letters from his cousin Patrick Heron, brother-in-law James Holt and sister Isabella. Thomas of Knowe (d.c.1788) son of Thomas. He is recorded as part of the bond for his brother John’s marriage to Agnes, daughter of Walter Riddell of Muselee in 1769. He is recorded in an ‘assignation in trust’ with Robert Scott, cashier in Jedburgh in 1774. He was listed on the roll of elector for Roxburghshire in 1780. He is still recorded in 1786, although it appears that the estates passed to the Horsburgh family through marriage to his sister Violet. He was taxed for having a gardener and a footman in the period 1778–86. He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls in 1785–86, when he had 3 carriage horses, and 2 in 1787. He was taxed for owning a carriage in 1786 and 1787 and for having a female servant in 1785–87. The ‘Mrs Turnbull of Know’ who paid the female servant tax in Hawick in 1790 is probably his widow. There is a disposition by him (among the Scott of Rae-burn papers) in 1787, and another to Alexander Horsburgh (among the Elliot of Minto papers) in 1788 relating to Clarilaw and Hassendean. His trustees were recorded as owners of Alton, parts of Wester Clarilaw and Appletreehall Townhead in the 1788 county valuation (and 1811 Land Tax Rolls). Thomas (1706–74) of Burnfoot, and also described as ‘of Catshill’ (i.e. Catshawhill). He was son of Andrew and Jean Scott. He was factor to the Minto estate in 1738 (and hence sometimes confused with the Turnbulls of Minto) and farmed at Minto Cleuchhead. He also managed the estate of Haining and the farm of North SYnton for Lord Alemoor, where he planted numerous hedges and plantations. He bought the farm of Catshawhill, but sold it after a few years (for a large profit). He was involved in the beginnings of the local carpet trade about 1753. There is a record (from the Board of Trustees for Manufactures) of Thomas Turnbull & Company, Hawick, manufacturing woollen articles (presumably carpets) in 1763. He joined with others in 1769 (or perhaps 1759) to form a partnership in the main carpet factory in Hawick. He obtained the lease for Burnfoot and also West Buccleuch in 1760. He also acted as a local money lender before there were banks; he loaned money to William Kerr of Abbotrule, Thomas Scott of Stonedge, Henry Elliot of Harwood, Gideon Scott of Fahnash, Douglas of Cavers and Lord Minto. He was appointed as an arbiter for the process of deciding on the division of the Common (one of a group of 2 lawyers and 2 country gentlemen), but died before the process was completed. In 1735 he married Nellie (or Nelly) Thomson, who was said to be from Whitelee, Redewater, and she died in 1747, aged 34. In 1753 he secondly married Esther, daughter of James Douglas (farmer at the Trows); she was widow of Alexander Ogilvie and aged 38 when she remarried, but still had 3 children. He was recorded as factor to Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto in 1758, when his son Gilbert became a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh. This son joined the Honourable East India Company, was inclined to be extravagant, and it is said he eventually refused to pay his bills. His children with his first wife were: Andrew (b.1736), who died in infancy; Agnes (b.1737), who married James Turnbull, tenant of Hassendeanbank; Jean (b.1739); Andrew (again, b.1740/1), who also died young; Gilbert (b.1741/2) who was a surgeon in the East India Company and died unmarried; an unnamed son (b.1743); William (1745–1825), who inherited Burnfoot; and Marion (b.1747), who died young. With his second wife he had: Nelly, who married George Thomson, farmer at Bught-Rig; Esther, who married Thomas Scott of Peel; and Thomas, who became a manufacturer in Hawick. He died at Burnfoot. Bailie Thomas (1730/1–1825) of Fenwick, merchant in Hawick. He was eldest son of Bailie Thomas, and is easy to confuse with his father. He may have been the Thomas born in Hawick to Thomas and Betty Scott in 1731. He was Cornet in 1753. He was already a Bailie by 1763, when he is described as ‘younger of Fenwick’. Also in 1763 he was described as ‘junior’ when asked to write to his father in London to arrange for an exchange of the great bell of St. Mary’s for a new one; they are described as ‘Thomas Turnbulls, late Bailiies, Senr. and Jun.’ Both he and his father witnessed baptisms for baker John Osburn in 1764 and 1766. He was one of the Magistrates during the dispute over the Division of the Common, and also a neighbouring landowner, getting 15 acres himself. He may be the Bailie Turnbull whose garden wall formed part of the boundary of the Little Haugh in 1767. He is probably the Thomas of Fenwick who gained 15 Scots acres in the Division of the Common in 1777. He is probably the Thomas who was a Bailie in the 1770s and 80s. In 1788 he is recorded as owner of Fenwick (valued at £100), land in Weensland (valued at £35 18s 7d), as well as owner of two parcels of lands (valued at £31 19s 4d and £31 19s 4d, possibly near Burnflat) that had belonged to Patrick Cunningham. He paid tax in Hawick Parish for having a female servant in 1788–91 and also paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1785. He was ‘of Fenick’ in 1787–97 when he paid the horse tax, being called ‘Merchant’ in 1794 and 1797. In 1797 he was probably the Thomas who was ‘Esq.’ on the Horse Tax Rolls, having 3 work horses and the merchant who paid tax on a saddle horse in Hawick, as well as paying the dog tax. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and in 1819 (along with his son William). In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls he is listed as owner of Fenwick, Brieryyards, Hornshole, part of Weensland, part of ‘Mr. Patrick Cunningham’s Lands in Hawick’ and ‘Part of Particot Lands in Hawick’. He was the largest owner of land within the Burgh of Hawick on Wood’s 1824 map, although he must have been extremely old by this time; he was therefore an important heritor in the Parish. His lands included: the area later named Fenwick Park; a large section of the Terraces; fields on the north side of the Loan; and Wylie’s Dub. In 1806 the farms of Palace and Shortacres were added (and they would later own the Rodono Estate in Yarrow as well). In 1757 he married Martha, daughter of David Ogilvie of Brieryyards, through which his family gained Brieryyards in 1783; she died in 1806. His children included: Thomas (b.1758), who died young; Martha (b.1759); William, who succeeded (b.1760); Thomas, again (b.1763); Elizabeth (b.1764); and David, who died in India before his father. For the 1763 baptism he was described as ‘late Bailie’ and the witnesses were Bailie Thomas of Fenwick (his father) and Bailie John Scott. The witnesses in 1764 were ‘Bailie Turnbull Senior’ (his father) and Andrew Scott. A portrait of him, painted by Scott of Edinburgh, is in the Museum (and donated by Andrew Kennedy). He died at the venerable age of 94. Thomas (1731/2–95) merchant in Denholm, son of Alexander (d.1761) and Helen Murray (d.1780). His wife Agnes Rutherford died in 1783, aged 29. The family are buried in Bedrule kirkyard. Thomas ‘Tammy Trumble’ (18th C.) clothier and dyer in Hawick. It is said that the family were once quite well off, but their fortunes changed and he had to move to find work, including as a dyer in a factory in Kilmarnock. It was also said that he was rather an eccentric in his way, being a frequenter of ale-houses and ‘fond of singing songs, not always of the most delicate character’. He may be the same as Thomas the dyer in Hawick who was paid in 1757 for ‘dyeing and dressing officer’s clothes’. He was listed (as a clothier) along with Gavin as witness to a baptism for weaver John Smith in 1764; he was probably son or younger brother of Gavin. He was also recorded as a dyer in 1764 when he witnessed a baptisms in Hawick for George Scoon.

1770 he was living at Roughheugh and recorded as a parishioner of Wilton, and in 1772 was at Damside. In 1770 he and Gavin were witnesses to a baptism for William Thomline (who may have been their employer at Roughheugh Mill). By 1774 the family were in Galashiels and in 1778 were in Portsburgh, St. Cuthbert’s Parish, Edinburgh. He married Beatrix Ruecastle in Hawick in 1762; she is probably the Beatrix, daughter of Bailie John Ruecastle, who was baptised in Hawick in 1742. Their children were: Jane (b.1763), who probably married Ebenezer McLellan in Hawick in 1794; Gavin (b.1764), baptised in Hawick, poet and actor; Betty (b.1766), baptised in Hawick; John (b.1768), baptised in Hawick; Walter (b.1770), baptised in Wilton; Thomas (b.1772), baptised in Wilton, who later emigrated to America; Euphemia (b.1775), baptised in Galashiels; Henry (b.1778), baptised in Edinburgh; and Walter (again, b.1781), baptised in Kilmarnock, who was a weaver and died in Glasgow. The record in 1781 states that Walter was the 6th son and 9th child, and that this was the first marriage for both parents. The baptismal witnesses recorded are: in 1763, John Ruecastle (probably his father-in-law) and Gavin Turnbull (perhaps his father); in 1764 and 1766, the whole congregation; in 1768, ‘present Magistrates’ Walter Ruecastle (probably his brother-in-law) and William Elliot; in 1770 Robert Scott (perhaps the miller at Roughheugh) and Thomas Scott; in 1772 James Scott and John Mathieson; and in 1778 Edinburgh dyers Henry Duncan and James Fairney. Based on the children, his parents names were probably Gavin and either Jane or Euphemia. He may have been related to the later dyers. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Heap in 1770. He married Margaret Henderson and their children included: John (b.1770); and Robert (b.1772). The witnesses in 1770 were James Dryden and Thomas Scott. Thomas (b.1740) eldest son of James, farmer at Dykes, and Helen Spindie. He was born at Dykes in Cavers Parish. He was locally very well-known in his day as a writer of poetry. He wrote a piece about the old village of Bedrule called ‘the Deserted Village’ and he also put the Shorter Catechism into verse. He was grand-uncle to John Turnbull of Sunlawhill farm. It is said that he made a lock for the old burial ground at Spittal-on-Rule, which was preserved at Weens in the early part of the 20th century. He is probably the Thomas recorded as farmer at Dykes on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 4 horses. Additionally he was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. Thomas (1756–97) son of Thomas and sister of Janet. He was probably grandson of John and brother of John, who farmed at Macks-side. The family were recorded on an old tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard. Thomas (18th C.) recorded at Dodburn in 1789 when his daughter Isabel was baptised in Kirkton Parish. Bailie Thomas ‘Bailie Tammy’ (1758–1823) local business man and Magistrate. He is easy to confuse with the contemporary Thomases of Fenwick. He was the youngest son of Thomas of Minto and his 2nd wife Esther Douglas, and was father of John Turnbull of the Dyeworks. He became a partner in the Hawick Carpet Company in 1779. He later carried on the dyeing department as a separate business, for a while situated where Bridge House was later located. This business ultimately led to ‘Turnbull’s the Dyers’. He was involved in a large number of local business enterprises in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. He was listed as a manufacturer in Hawick on the Horse Tax Rolls in 1794 and 1797 and on the Dog Tax Rolls in 1797, as well as the manufacturer of that name on the subscriber list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. He was also the first agent for the British Linen Bank in Hawick, his appointment lasting until 1806. He was known for being an independent thinker and having a caustic manner, e.g. when he ordered Warren Hastings off his land at Wilton Glebe. He was listed as a bankrupt carpet manufacturer in 1820, and hence it appears that his business did not go so well in the latter part of his life. He appears to have married 3 times: Margaret Darling (d.1829); Isabella Aitkin; and Mary, sister of John Oliver, Town Clerk of Hawick. His children (with his first 2 wives) were: John (b.1788); Isabella (1805–83), who married James Ormiston and David Miller; Christina (b.1815); Ester (b.1817); and Margaret (b.1818). The death of one of his daughters is recorded in 1838 as ‘Miss Turnbull daughter of Bailie Turnbul Carpet Manufacturer’. Thomas (1770/1–1854) blacksmith at Gillbraehead, probably son of Robert, who was previously blacksmith there. He is listed among the subscribers to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He married Isabella Elliot, who died in 1815, aged 44. Their children included: Robert (1799/1800–23); and Isabella, who died age 14. They are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Crosshall in Wilton Parish, according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (18th/19th C.) manufacturer in Hawick, who was on the short-list for Cornet in 1794. It is possible this could be the same man later known as ‘Bailie Tammy’, although that Thomas appears to have been married by 1794. Thomas Scott (1784–1867) eldest son of William of Burnfoot. He was effectively disowned after his mother disapproved of his marriage to Margaret Goodfellow about 1810. He was at East Middle when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He farmed at East Middle from at least 1841. In 1851 he is recorded as farmer of 400 acres and employer of 7 people, while in 1861 he farmed 380 acres, employing 9 men and 3 boys. He is listed on the tablet to the Turnbulls of Bedrule in Bedrule Kirk. He was a registered voter in Cavers Parish. In politics he was firmly a Tory and took a leading part in local events surrounding the Reform Bill and the disruptions at the local elections in the 1830s. In 1837 he was one of those who were besieged in the Tower Hotel (possibly for several days), and he was one of the witnesses who travelled to London for the Parliamentary inquiry. His first wife died in 1823 and about a year later he married Mary Beattie (who died in 1880). His children with his 1st wife were: William (1812–47), whose twin brother died at birth; Thomas (1814–76); Michael (1816–92), died at Southsea; Elizabeth (b.1818); Eleanor (b.1820); and Agnes (b.1822). And with his 2nd wife: Agnes; Archibald Oliver (1825–69), who became a lawyer in Jedburgh; Peter (1826–27), who died young; John (1828–84); Margaret (b.1829); Peter, again (1831–34), also died young; James Douglas (b.1833); Jane (b.1834); Peter Stephenson (1836–1921), who was Surgeon General; Robert Dempster (1838–93); Scott (1839–59); and Adam (1841–80). It was said that he was heir to a fortune that had been left by a son of the last Laird of Bedrule, who died in India; he apparently told the Rev. Craig of Bedrule that if the money could be recovered he could take half himself. Thomas (1788–1883) younger son of Thomas and grandson of Adam of Denesyde. He farmed at Broombalks and then for a while at Tundlaw. About 1810 he married Ellen Chisholm and had 9 children. He emigrated to Huron, Canada in 1860, following his son Andrew. Thomas (1795–1856) 6th son of James and Betty Adamson. He had 6 brothers, including the Schoolmasters of Wilton and Hobkirk. He was born at Hobkirk Kirkstile. He moved to Newcastle and became a carrier there. He was listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory operating to Edinburgh once a fortnight. His cart also left the Nag’s Head in Hawick every Saturday, bound for Newcastleton. In 1851 he was at about 1 Whitchester Street. In 1852 he was listed leaving the Coach & Horses bound for Jedburgh and Kelso every Wednesday, and to Newcastleton on Thursdays from the Bull & Butcher. He married Elspeth Anderson, who died in 1873, aged 76. Their children included: James (b.1817), who died in infancy; Elizabeth (1821/2–55); Henry; John B.; Thomas; and Agnes. In 1852 he is recorded operating a twice-weekly service between Newcastleton and Hawick. He may the Thomas from Castleton who was listed among subscribers to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Thomas (18th/19th C.) from the Turnbulls of Hartschaugh and Swanshiel. He was a shepherd on Templehall farm. His son John was also a shepherd, who married Agnes Telfer. Thomas (18th/19th C.) merchant in Hawick. He was son of draper George and Betty Wilson (daughter of ‘Haunless Wat’). He married Jean, daughter of John Veitch and Jean Elliot in 1813. Their children were: Elizabeth, who died at Lanton; Jean or Jane (b.1815), who also died at Lanton; George (b.1818), who emigrated to Australia and married Margaret Watt; Jane (b.1820), who married; Margaret, unmarried; and Georgina, also unmarried. Jean, who died in Hawick in 1816, recorded as daughter of merchant Thomas, may have been his daughter. Thomas of Fenwick (1799–1874) only son of William of Fenwick. He was said to be ‘of weak intellect’ and his estates were placed in the charge of trustees, under whom they prospered and expanded. This included the purchase of Midshiels in 1852 and the Baron of Rodono and farm of Over Kirkhope. He was probably the Thomas ‘Esq. Younger of Fenwick’ who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. In Pigot’s 1837 directory he is recorded as Thomas ‘esq. (of Palace)’ and residing at Brieryyards along with his father, who died in 1840. In 1841 he was recorded as ‘Independent’ at Brieryyards, with Alison (his mother) and Martha (probably his aunt), plus 3 servants. In 1861 he was living at Briery Yards along with his head trustee David D. Scott; he is described as ‘incapable’. Nevertheless he was still formally a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He was succeeded by his cousin William. Thomas (b.1800/1) frame-worker in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on the Back Row and in 1851 on Teviot Square. His wife was Margaret. It is possible he was the same man as ‘Tam-a-Linkin’. Thomas ‘Tam-a-Linkin’ (1801/2–61)
town crier. Orphaned at an early age, he became a Town officer, using both bell and drum, serving as Halberdier at the Common Riding and crier at public meetings etc. For a while his fellow Officer was Jamie Smith. He was known as a wit and used to refer to the Common Riding as 'the coming struggle'. He died suddenly after becoming ill on the street, and was buried in an unmarked grave in the Wellogate. A cairn was placed there in the 1980s. A portrait of him exists (painted by 'Scott'), and he has been immortalised in a poem by J.C. Goodfellow – ‘Nae mair ‘sheepheads an’ plucks’ he’ll cry, Sae much a head; his drum and bell are bairth laid by – Tam-a-Linkin’s dead’ [JCG] (there are various spellings of his nickname). Thomas (1802–81) younger son of Adam, tenant in Hassendeanbank. He was baptised in Minto Kirk. He is recorded as farmer at Brieryhill in 1835, among heads of households in Wilton Parish. In Perth in 1837 he married Margaret Oliver and they had 6 children. He farmed at Brieryhill but later emigrated to Guelph in Canada and and died in Bosworth, Ontario. He is probably the Thomas recorded as farmer at Brieryhill in 1835, among heads of households in Wilton Parish. Thomas (19th C.) listed in 1852 as carrier between Denholm, Hawick and Jedburgh once a week. He left for Hawick from Abbey Place in Jedburgh, every Wednesday. Thomas (b.1806/7) farmer at Lees in Wilton Parish, recorded in 1861. His wife was Isabella and their children included George, Mary, Thomas and Robert. Thomas (b.1809) son of Walter and Helen Oliver, he was smith at Stobs Woodfoot, like his father before him. In 1856 he presented to the Archaeological Society a walking stick owned by Gen. Elliot, who defended Gibraltar, and a lock from Fast Castle. In 1857 he read a paper at the Society, on ‘Certain phases of the Great Exhibition of 1851’. He is recorded at Stobs Woodfoot in the 1861 census, living with his mother Helen. Thomas ‘Tommy’ (1811/2–77) eldest son of Adam, descended from the Turnbulls of Deneside. He farmed with his father and brother Michael at Midburn (or ‘Africa’). They worked hard to improve the land and ended up fairly well off. He is recorded as farmer there in the 1860s. He died unmarried. Thomas (b.1816/7) shepherd at Newton (‘the Nitton’) in Wilton Parish. He is recorded there in 1861. His wife was Margaret and their children included Thomas, William, Janet and James. Thomas (b.1818/9) from Jedburgh, he was saddler and post-master in Lilliesleaf, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed as the postmaster (and perhaps listed in error as ‘John’ as saddler and ironmonger, as well as librarian). He may have been son of the earlier saddler Robert. In 1841 he was living with Margaret, George and Robert, probably his siblings. In 1851 he was living with his sister Betsy and brother Robert. In 1861 he was living on Main Street, as postmaster and saddler (employing 2 men). His wife was Agnes F. and they had daughters Agnes M. and Margaret P. Thomas (19th C.) teacher at Glendouglas School in the 1860s. Thomas (b.1822/3) born in Wilton Parish, he was farmer at Whiltlaw and then at Newmill on Slitrig. He is recorded there in 1856 and in 1861 was farming 100 acres and employed 2 men and 2 women. He married Jane Knox and their children included Walter, James, Ina Elliot, Robert, David and Euphemia. Thomas (b.1823/4) born in Ancrum Parish he was farm steward at Spittal-on-Rule in 1851 and 1861. His wife was Elizabeth S., and their children included Sarah, Margaret, James and John. Thomas (1824–1907) born in Glasgow, son of solicitor Joshua and Jeanie Marshall. He is said to have been raised by a relative in Denholm after being orphaned. He became an architect in Edinburgh, then emigrated to Australia and later moved to California and then New Zealand. He is responsible for the designs of several churches and other buildings, particularly in Wellington. Thomas (b.1828/9) born in Wilton Parish. He was recorded as ‘fundholder’ on the 1861 census, when he was living at 13 Kirkwynd. He married Mary Hardie in 1858 and their children included John (b.1859); Margaret (b.1861); Jane (b.1864); Mary (b.1866); Esther (b.1868); and James (b.1871). Thomas (d.1890) Hawick solicitor of the late 19th century. His parents lived in Appletreehall. He was in partnership with Walter Haddon from 1880. He was a supporter of the Common Riding. He was also a prominent member of the St. John’s Lodge and was buried with Masonic honours. Thomas Scott (1836/7–77) from Hawick. He was recorded dying of consumption at Stirling East in Australia. Thomas (19th/20th C.) 2nd son of John, farmer at Minto Kames. He went to Australia with his brother John when gold was discovered there (probably in the early 1850s). After returning he farmed at Easter Boonraw, then moved to Greenhouse in Minto Parish. In 1858 he married Mary Hardie, daughter of a Hawick farmer. Their children were John (b.1859, who farmed Boonraw and Stouslie), Margaret (b.1861), Jane (b.1864),
Turnbull

Mary (b.1866), Esther (b.1868, who died young) and James (b.1871, who farmed at Greenhouse). Thomas (19th/20th C.) resident of Bonchester. He was on the Committee of Rulewater Miniature Rifle Club from 1905. Walter of Minto (14th C.) possibly a son of the original William of Rule. He held the lands of Minto, perhaps from 1329, being confirmed by David II before 1370. Perhaps the same ‘Waltero Tornebole’ was the witness to a charter of Adam of Roule, for the lands of Altonburn, in about 1354. Also in 1354 he witnessed a charter of Robert of Alton relating to the chantry at the Church of Roxburgh. About the same time he witnessed a grant of lands in Lessuden for Melrose Abbey; he is recorded there as ‘Waltero Turnbul’. Walter of Minto (15th C.) son of John. He instituted an inquiry in 1424 in order to try to invalidate the grant his father had made to Sir William Stewart of Jedworth in 1390. This was on account of John ‘Turnbull having leprous at the time (making the transaction void under Scots law), together with the rumour at the time that Sir William Stewart had died in France. However, the Stewarts continued to hold the half barony of Minto. It was said that in 1429 he interrupted the sasine ceremony to invest Sir William Stewart in Minto, again claiming his hereditary right. As a result it seems that the barony of Minto was split, so that thereafter there were 2 families who were ‘of Minto’. Walter (15th C.) on a ‘retour of inquest’ made in Hawick in 1424 for lands in Hownam and another for the Barony of Hawick in 1427. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Walters. Walter (15th C.) Bailie of Selkirk recorded in the Exchequer Rolls for 1451. Walter of Minto (15th C.) son of William. In 1458/9 he was granted the lands in the Barony of Minto that had belonged to his father. Walter of Harden (d.bef. 1482) recorded in 1468 when he resigned the lands of Harden to Margaret Wardlaw, Lady of the half Barony of Wilton. His son John had a charter for Harden in 1482, suggesting he either died just before this, or John reached maturity then. It is possible he was the same Walter who witnessed a charter for Thomas Middlemas for lands in Peeblesshire in 1476. Walter (15th C.) mentioned at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh as tenant in Bonchester, when his son George did not appear and Andrew (in the same place) was fined. Walter (15th C.) resident of Hornshole. He is recorded in 1493 along with Adam, also in Hornshole, when they were allowed to ‘compone’ for a series of crimes: stealing livestock from 3 separate men in Minto; bringing in Englishmen from Tynedale to plunder Minto; and for common theft. Their surety was Robert Scott of Howpasley. Walter (15th C.) recorded in a ‘letter of reversion’ for the lands of East Mains of Hassendean, which are probably the same as ‘Knoue’. This letter was transferred from the old baron to the new baron in 1493/4. He may be an ancestor of the later Turnbulls of Knoue. It is also possible that he was related to the Henry who held a quarter of Appletreehall in 1470. Walter (15th C.) member of the household staff of James IV. In 1490 he was given cloth and in 1497 when he was given a horse. He is recorded being in the King’s Chamber in 1492 when he was given his fee for the term. It is not known what branch of the Armstrongs he was from. Walter ‘Gaberlunzie’ (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. In 1494/5 he was again fined for non-appearance, serving as his own surety, with his nickname given as ‘gabirlenzie’. He was surely related to Adam ‘Gabirlenzies’, who was killed in 1509. Walter of Gargunnock (d.c.1527) recorded in 1482 when William Douglas, Sheriff of Teviotdale protested that he had caused him (the Sheriff) to be summoned, but had not himself appeared. In 1482 he was on the panel for Elizabeth Cunningham inheriting the lands of Appletreehall and the eastern part of Hassendean. He also had a 1482 action against Walter Bertram, Burgess of Edinburgh for money owed, and a 1483 action against Elizabeth Somerville and others. In the judicial proceedings of Parliament in 1484 he had to prove that his neighbour stole cattle from his lands of Gargunnock (in Stirlingshire). Also in 1484 he leased the Crown lands of Singlie and Erneleuch. In 1479 and 1486 his son William had a lease for the ‘Weststeid of Hartwod’ in Ettrick Ward. In 1492 he gave a charter infefting Andrew Douglas in the lands of Hassendeanbank. His son William is also mentioned. In 1493 he had a precept of sasine to George Turnbull (probably also a relative) for the lands of Hassendeanbank. And in 1501 there was a sasine to his heirs Margaret and Janet Turnbull for Hassendeanbank. He may be the ‘Waltero Turnbulle’ who witnessed a sasine for Scott of Branxholme in 1500. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Walters, and appears to have been Baron of Hassendean. Walter of Stouslie (15th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. He served as surety for himself and was fined for not appearing. He was listed as ‘Walterus turnbul de stowisle’. He was also listed in 1494/5 as owner
Turnbull Turnbull
(along with Walter Scott of Howpasley) of sheep that were stolen from Stouslie by the Grampians of Newton. He was surely related to George, who was recorded in Stouslie in 1493. In 1502 his son Adam failed to appear at the Justice-aire and his surety, William in Crumhaugh, was fined. Walter (15th/16th C.) name of 2 men recorded in 1501, among 10 men whose fines were remitted. There were several other Turnbulls listed, including from Fulton and Bonchester. Walter (15th/16th C.) tenant of Branxholme. In 1502 he had remission for stealing 168 cows and sundry goods from the Murrays at Carterhaugh, as well as stealing 2 horses from there ‘in company with the Traitors of Levin’. George Turnbull of Hallrule and Robert Scott in Stirches were sureties. Walter (15th/16th C.) recorded as one of the King’s ministrels in 1504. His name is listed as ‘Watte Trumbull’. Walter (16th C.) tenant in ‘Wollee’ (i.e. Wolfelee). In 1526 he was among the Borders men who accompanied the Homes on attacks against the Earl of Arran. Adam ‘there’ is also listed, so probably a son or brother. Walter Wat of Howa (16th C.) denounced as a rebel in 1530 along with David of Wauchope and others, for ‘assistance given and afforded to Thieves and Malefactors in violation of their Bonds’. He was recorded there as being ‘of Howay’. He could be the ‘Watt Trumbill of Howatt’ whose son and heir Archie was pledge in 1553/4, as part of an assurance given by the Rutherfords and Turnbulls. He is probably the Wat recorded ‘in Howa’ in 1565 when he had to ‘enter’ James Turnbull of Abbotrule to Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst. He is probably the Watt ‘in Hova’ whose son was among men who Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst was ordered to present in 1567 to answer charges of raiding into England. It is possible that 2 generations are represented here. He was presumably an ancestor of the later Turnbulls of Howa. Walter (16th C.) owner of 1 particate of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Walters. Walter ‘the Flooer’ (16th C.) recorded in 1567 among men who Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst had to present to answer accusations of raiding into England. His is listed being ‘callit the Flour’, but it is unclear what this nickname might have meant. Walter (d.bef. 1567) described as ‘in Dalkeith’ in 1567 when his eldest daughter Agnes became heir to his lands of ‘Tempillandes and Browlan- des’ at the head of the Rule. Walter (16th C.) recorded as ‘Walter Trumbill in Caveris’ when he witnessed a Melrose Abbey charter relating to the lands of Crook in 1569. There is no way to know where in Cavers he may have been tenant. Walter ‘Watt’ of Bewlie (16th C.) recorded being ‘in Bewly’ in 1576 among a group of Turnbulls and others (from Minto, Kames and Troneyhill), who swore not to harm another group of Turnbulls (from Barnhills, Billerwell, Belses and Chesters). In 1573 he was among men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm, although they were acquitted because Kerr had reset the fugitive Kerr of Ferniehirst. He was listed along with John of Minto, Hector of Wauchope and Wat of Hobsburn in a bond of 1580 to keep the peace with the Turnbulls of Bedrule and others. Also in 1580 he was ordered, along with Sir Thomas of Bedrule and John of Minto, to enter persons into ward in Edinburgh Castle (which he apparently did) or be declared a rebel. William Redpath of Greenlaw was his surety (for 1000 merks) that he would appear before the Privy Council. In 1581 he was accused of being in a group of Turnbulls who came to the farm of Rawflat and there harassed the widow and children of the murdered Walter Turnbull, then stole the cattle and goods from the farm; his sons Robert, William, Mark and Andrew were also listed. This accusation was repeated in 1583, and in that year Robert Kerr of Ancrum and his son William Kerr were caution for him not to harm Agnes, widow of Walter of Rawflat, and her tenants and servants; John Andrew signed for him ‘beacaus I can not wret’. In 1583/4 he was granted half of the meadow of Belses by Andrew Home. He was listed in 1584/5 among Border Lairds who were to appear before the Privy Council to explain how they had been helping to quiet the Borders. His son Walter was killed in 1580. About 1590 he was listed among the landed men of the Borders. Walter ‘Watt’ (16th C.) tenant in Troneyhill. He is recorded in 1576 among a group of Turnbulls and others (from Minto, Bewlie and Kames), who had a bond with another group of Turnbulls (from Barnhills, Billerwell, Belses and Chesters), not to harm each other. Dand from there is also listed and hence surely related. Walter ‘in Rafflatt’ is recorded in 1576/7 in a complaint that the bond of 1576 had been broken; hence he may be the same man as Walter of Rawflat. Walter (d.1580) son of ‘Watt of Bewlye’, recorded in 1581 when Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst made a list of 10 men who were called to account for his murder in the previous year. He may have been the Walter whose son Hector was killed at Lilliesleaf by Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam in 1604. Robert, who was killed in 1601 was presumably either his brother or son, and Robert’s brother Mark must have been similarly related. Walter ‘Wat’ of Templehall (16th C.) witness in 1593 to the marriage contract between a daughter of James Gledstains of Cocklaw and a son of Hector Turnbull of Wauchope. He was deceased by 1604 when his daughters Jean and Beatrix inherited Templehall and Brewlands. He was also called ‘of Vauchope’, suggesting he was probably a son of the Laird of Wauchope. His widow Marion Lorraine (along with several Turnbulls) was forced to leave Templehall and Brewlands, following a court case of 1605. It has been suggested that she might have been a daughter of Hector Lorraine of Harwood. Walter ‘Wat’ of Bedrule (1560–c.1623) son of Sir Thomas and Janet Turnbull. He was listed along with his father and brother William among the group of men accused in 1573 of raiding the farm of Ancrum Woodhead. In 1576 he was listed along with his father, William in Barnhills and Mungo Bennet in Chester in a dispute with William Ker, younger of Cessford, over lands in Nether Ancrum; he was by then listed as son and heir of Sir Thomas. It appears that by the time he succeeded the Turnbulls of Bedrule were no longer very powerful, with the Castle in ruins and much of their Barony lost through defaulted ‘wadsets’. In 1577/8 he and his brother Thomas were acquitted of the murder of John, son of John Forbes of Ardmurdoch. In 1578/9 he was among members of the Turnbull family who were asked to appear before the Privy Council to answer for ‘the slaughter of umquhile Thomas Schevill’. In 1579/80 he and Thomas were on a list of men accused of raiding into England. He was included along with his father and others in a bond of 1580 to keep peace with the Turnbulls of Minto and others. In 1583 he and his brother Thomas were charged with offences against an Englishman (Edward Grays), but the Warden, William Ker of Cessford, ‘in respect of the neirnes of kin with him’, delivered them back to Scotland, instead of to the English Warden. At that time he was referred to as being ‘of Fulton’. In 1583/4 several men of Hassendean were cited for failing to appear to give evidence against him and his brother; it was later confirmed that they were all declared as rebels, although this situation must have been resolved. About 1590 he was listed as ‘in Bedroule’ among landed men of the Borders. In 1591 James Douglas of Cavers was surety for him, probably for failing to keep good order. Also in 1591 he was one of the local Barons who signed a pledge to support the King against the Earl of Bothwell. In 1607 a case was brought against him by William Alanson, Bailie of Jedburgh. In 1618 he had a bond with George Rutherford, younger in Abbotrule, for which the witnesses were his son George, Robert in Bedrule (probably his brother) and Lionel in Hartshaugh. And also in 1618 he had a bond with Adam Turnbull of Abbotrule Townhead; his wife Helen Lillico is also mentioned. He had a bond in 1619 with Robert Ker of Farnington, and another with George Ker, heir of Cavers Carre relating to the good behaviour of his son William. Also in 1619 he was among the Turnbulls who were accused by Sir John Stewart of Traquair of cutting down timber on his lands at Huntechill, and was denounced as a rebel. However, he must have received remission, because in 1623 he had a bond for the good service of his friend George Deans, servitor to Thomas Nicholson, advocate in Edinburgh. In 1623 he served as cautioner to David Turnbull, Burgess of Jedburgh. Also in 1623 he testified that he had seen Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst’s flocks grazing on certain lands for ‘fiftie yeir syne and mair’. In his old age he is said to have been quite a nuisance, along with his sons and grandsons, and they were denounced as rebels for several crimes, including injuries done to Stewart of Traquair, owner of Wells. Lord Cranstoun the Border Commissioner tried to remove him from ‘the waste ground’ he occupied, although this attempt failed. He married twice, his first wife’s name being unrecorded. His second marriage was to Helen Lillico by 1618. He had at least sons, Andrew, Adam, George and William (who succeeded). In 1587 it is stated (by English Warden Lord Hunsdon) that ‘a sunne of Bedrooles’ was slain in the encounter between Borderers and Englishmen under Sir Cuthbert Collingwood. He was probably also father of ‘Gawin Turnbull, son of the Laird of Bedroull’, who was declared a fugitive in 1605. Walter ‘Wat’ of Hobbsburn (16th C.) possibly son of Robert. He is recorded in 1567 being ‘of Hopisburne’ and brother of David of Wauchope; he was among men ordered answer accusations of raiding into England, with his servant David Scott also listed. He is also recorded at Hobbsburn in 1568. In 1574 he had to appear before the Regent and the Lords of Secret Council to answer the charge of building his own mill without permission, but after producing a charter of ‘feu-ferme’ for his lands he was discharged. In 1580 he and Hector of Wauchope were cautioned to appear before the Privy Council, with Henry, heir of John Stewart of Craighall as surety. He is listed along with John of Minto, Hector of Wauchope and Wat of Bewlie in a bond of 1580 to keep the peace with the Turnbulls of Bedrule and others. He is probably the Walter recorded as `in Hoppisburne' in 1582 when he was ordered to restore Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst to his lands in Feu-Rule. Kerr had an `escheat' for his goods in 1583/4, along with George and John (in Hallrule and `Rouill'), who may have been close relatives. There is another charge in 1585 for witnesses to appear to decide the ongoing court dispute. He is `Watt Trumble of Hoppesborne' among men complained about by the English Warden for a raid into England in 1590. Walter (16th/17th C.) recorded as `callit Sir Davids Wattie' in 1601 when he was part of the band of Turnbulls who attacked Kers in Jedburgh. Walter of Rawflat (d.1581) tenant who was declared a rebel and asked in 1581 to remove from the lands of Rawflat and part of Belses. He was later that year killed by a group of Turnbulls, including David of Belses and his brothers George, John and Adam, as well as Thomas of Bilerwell. In 1583 his wife Agnes complained to the Privy Council about this and also how another group of Turnbulls, led John of Minto, harassed her and her children by coming to Rawflat, `bodin in armes, with hagbuttes and pistolettis', stole goods and livestock, and shot at them. The excuse given was that he himself was already declared a rebel, but clearly there was some family feud involved here. In 1583 Robert and William Kerr of Ancrum paid caution for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism.

Walter of Rawflat (16th/17th C.) described as being in Skelfhill in the Commissioners’ Court in 1622 when he was cleared, along with Geordie Morton in ‘Harrett’, of stealing 2 sheep from ‘Laird Swarley’ (an Englishman). Walter of Rawflat (16th/17th C.) sold Rawflat, Ryeknow and Abbotsmeadow to Ragwell Bennet of Chesters in 1623. He is probably the ‘Walter Trumbill, younger of Rafiat’ who was shot in the arm and thigh in 1602 by George Turnbull of Belses, this taking place between Jedburgh and Belses. He also had a horse stolen from him by George of Belses about the same time, this being included in George’s final trial before his execution. In 1632 his sister Margaret was served as ‘heir portioner’ to him in the 10-pound lands of the Mains of Feu-Rule. Walter (16th/17th C.) recorded as being a resident in Know in 1628, when he was charged along with Thomas in Know to keep the peace with Walter Scott of Midshielis, Adam Scott of Burnfoot and others. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Rule-townhead along with Adam in 1643. The lands were valued at £140. Walter (17th C.) son of James ‘in Hassiden bank’. In 1632 he feued part of Raperlaw from Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning. He is probably the Walter listed on the 1643 county valuation ‘for his lands in Raperlaw, 17 bolls half mean half bear, £110, should be £110 10s’. He is probably also the could be the Walter of ‘Rapparlaw’ listed in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls for Lilliesleaf Parish, with the same value. Walter (17th C.) from Nether Ancrum, he is recorded in a valuation of 1643. He was part of the Chesterhall branch and ancestor of the Turnbulls who farmed Spittal-on-Rule through the 19th century. He probably had sons Walter and William. He was probably related to Andrew in Nether Ancrum (son of Andrew), who was served heir to his mother ‘Malie Krinklaw’ in 1636. Walter (d.c.1682) tenant in Strange when his will was recorded in 1682. His farm was presumably the one in Abbotrule Parish. Walter of Bewlie (17th C.) appears to have sold Bewlie to Thomas Elliot, tenant in Borthwickshielis, in 1672. However, this may have been only part of the lands (or else he retained the designation ‘of Bewlie’ after selling the family lands). He was recorded as ‘portioner of bewlie’ in 1678 when he paid the land tax in Lilliesleaf Parish for part of Bewlie, valued at £390. He was declared a fugitive for being present at the Bothwell Brig uprising in 1679. He was Laird in 1684 when the Laird’s brother William was listed among the men declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism.
However, it is unclear what happened to him, and he may have been rehabilitated at the Revolution of 1689. He was recorded in the 1690 Act of Parliament for the visitation of schools. Walter (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Janet Knox in 1686. They had daughters Bessie (b.1687) and Margaret (b.1689). Walter (17th C.) married Janet Martin in Roberton parish in 1687. Walter (17th C.) listed as a resident of Whitriggs on the 1694 Hearth Tax roll. Walter (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. There are 2 men of this name listed, and given how common the surname was locally, there is probably no way of determining who they were. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Birkhill on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to Robert, who was also there at that time, as well as possibly George, recorded in 1685. Walter (17th C.) resident of Deanbrae according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Walter (17th C.) recorded as tenant at ‘mylnholme’ in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It is unclear whether this was the ‘Millholm’ (or Millburn) near Hermitage village or the much further south Millholm. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Foulshiels in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Walter (17th C.) resident of the east-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He could be the ‘Walter Trumble, at the East Port’ listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Walter (17th C.) tailor on the east-side of Hawick, according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. Walter (17th C.) resident at Hassendean Mains according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He was probably related to Thomas, who was also listed there. Walter (17th C.) resident of ‘the netherend’ of Hassendean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Walter (17th C.) resident at Clarilaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Walter (17th C.) resident at Swinnie according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Walter (d.c.1743) portioner of Ancrum, part of the Chesterhall branch. In 1707 he had a son Walter and in 1710 a daughter Ann. His son Walter was still ‘younger’ in 1742, but not in 1743, suggesting the year of his death. Walter of Wester Swanshiel (c.1700–c.50) son of James and Elizabeth Scott. He succeeded his father in the lands of Wester Swanshiel in 1724. His children included Helen (b.1726), Magdalene (b.1727), John (b.1729, who succeeded), William (b.1729, probably a twin of John, who did not long survive), James (b.1731) and William (again, b.1733). He may also have been father of George (b.1739) and Walter (b.1741) who were baptised at Lilliesleaf. Walter (18th C.) Schoolmaster at Minto in the early 1700s. He may have been the same as Walter Turnbull, was his daughter. Walter (1702–73) farmer at Firth in Lilliesleaf Parish. His connection to other local Turnbulls is unclear. He paid the window tax for Firth in 1748. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. His first wife may have been Isobel, sister of Walter Elliot of Ormiston, the marriage being in Roberton Parish in 1738. He married as his second wife Dorothea, daughter of Mark Chisholme and Barbara Benett. He had 3 daughters: Barbara (1752/3–1821), who married George Pott of Todrig; an unnamed daughter; and Isabella (1757–1835), who married John Grieve of Hoscote and Craik. He also had a son, whose name is unknown, but whose children included Christian and John, who moved to Ontario. The payment for ‘ye bells to Lady Firth’s borile’ (i.e. announcement of the burial with St. Mary’s bell) recorded in Hawick in 1731 probably refers to his mother. Possibly the same Walter of Firth purchased the farm of Greenhouse (in Minto Parish) from Andrew Davidson in 1769. The ‘Mrs Turnbull of Firth’ who paid the female servant tax in Hawick in 1789 and 1790 is probably his widow. He is buried in Lilliesleaf Cemetery along with his 2 wives and daughter Barbara; he may have died in 1777, aged 74, his 2nd wife dying in 1804. Walter (1707–97) son of Walter, he was a portioner of Ancrum. He married Betty Dun (1718–88). Their children included: Isabel (1742–98); Walter (1743–1822); Janet (1745–48); John (1747–80); James (1751–1844, ancestor of the Turnbulls of Spittal-on-Rule); and Agnes (b.1754). Walter (18th C.) resident of Parkhill in 1743 when his daughter Bessie was baptised in Robertson Parish. Other children born at around the same time to a Walter include Walter (b.1733), Jean (b.1734), Ann (b.1735), Robert (b.1736), John (b.1739), Thomas (b.1741) and Thomas (again, b.1745). He may have been brother of John who was also at Parkhill. Walter (18th C.) resident of ‘Mainse’ (presumably Borthwick Mains) when his daughter Ann was baptised in Robertson Parish. Margaret (b.1761) was probably also his daughter. He is probably the Walter who married Betty Hume in Roberton in 1760. Walter (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1764 he married Katherine Dye, as registered in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. Their children included: Thomas (b.1764); William (b.1766); William (again, b.1767); James (b.1772); and Robert (b.1774). Walter (18th C.) rented Easter Swanshiel from Charles Kerr of Abbotrule in 1767. Walter (18th C.) of Rashiegrain, Hawick Parish heritor around the 1770s. He was probably connected with the Turnbulls of Fenwick, who owned Rashiegrain a little later. He may be the ‘Turnbull, Esq; of Rashiegrain’ (with no first name given) listed in the 1788 county valuation as owner of Rashiegrain and Commonbrae, valued at £260 19s 4d. The lack of name may mean he was deceased at about that time and succession was unclear. It is also possible he is confused with William of Rashiegrain. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He witnessed a baptism for James Black at Puckhouses in 1776. Walter (18th C.) tradesman in Hawick, being a carpenter, wheelwright and agricultural instrument maker. Gideon Scott was apprentice to him around the 1780s. Walter (1743–1822) son of Walter, he was portioner of Ancrum, like several generations of Walters before him. By 1781 he was ‘of Chesterhall’ rather than ‘younger, portioner of Ancrum’. He was listed as owner of part of Nether Ancrum in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. He married Elizabeth Borthwick, and she died in 1827, aged 70. Their children included: Margaret (b.1771); Walter (b.1774); Mary (1781–1811. He married Elizabeth Borthwick, and she died in 1827, aged 70. Their children included: Margaret (b.1771); Walter (b.1774); Mary (1781–1811) and James (b.1781, who farmed at Billerwell). Walter (18th C.) carrier of Belses, mentioned in an Edinburgh marriage record of 1794, when his daughter Catharine married James Allan. She could have been the ‘Kathrine’ born to Walter in Ancrum in 1768. Walter (b.c.1765) wright in Denholm, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He was probably living on Canongate in 1841. Walter (18th/19th C.) tenant at Harwood Mill, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 horses. He is probably the tenant who was said (by Walter Deans, writing in 1887) ‘to have been a man of great strength and agility, and a famed player at the Hobkirk Ba’’. Walter (b.1776) son of Thomas, he was blacksmith at Stobs Woodfoot in Kirkton Parish. In 1841 he was at ‘Birkwood Foot’. He is probably the Walter listed at Woodfoot among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. His married Helen or ‘Nelly’ Oliver in 1806. Their children included: Mary (b.1807); Thomas (b.1809), was also a blacksmith; Francis (b.1811); Walter (b.1813); William (b.1815); Eliza (b.1818); and Helen (b.1819). Walter (18th/19th C.) doctor in Hawick from 1800, also acting as a ‘man-midwife’. Walter (b.1787/8) joiner at Stirches Croft. His wife was Margaret, and their children included Walter, James, Mather, Ann and George. Walter (b.1794/5) born in Robertson Parish, he was a farmer. In 1851 he lived at No. 4 Burn Row in Wilton Dean, and was a ‘Proprietor of Houses formerly Farmer’. By 1861 he was farming 380 acres and employing 6 people at Acreknowe. His wife was Margaret and their children included Williamina, John and Ann. Walter (18th/19th C.) listed as vintner on the Howegate in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Walter (1805–64) eldest son of James of Chesterhall, who later farmed at Billerwell. He was the last of the Walters of Chesterhall. Bailie Walter (19th/20th C.) corn merchant who was in Hawick Mill for a while. His mother was Janet Knox, daughter of the tenant...

at Little Whitlaw. He was probably the Coun- cillor of that name who was one of those who turned out for the Common Riding in the late 1800s, adding to its popularity among respectable men of the Town. Walter (b.1861) son of James, tenant farmer at Billerwell. In 1896 he married Georgina Louisa, on ly child of Rev. A.C. McPhail of Hobkirk. He farmed Hartshaugh Mill, which included Kirknow, Swanshiel, the eastern part of Langraw, plus Hartshaugh and Unthank. Walter A. (19th/20th C.) joiner at Bonchester Bridge. He took over the business of Douglas Taylor in 1882. He firstly married a daughter of his cousin Robert Amos, and they had a daughter Maggie. He secondly married Janet, daughter of Bonchester tailor James Grieve. William ‘de Rule’ (c.1289–1333) the first Turnbull, suppos- edly named for turning a bull from King Robert. He is recorded in a charter of 1313 for a piece of land at Philiphaugh. He may have married Margaret, daughter of the Earl of Douglas, and is probably the direct ancestor of many local Turn- bulls. His name is sometimes written ‘Turnbull’. It is possible that he is the same man as William of Rule, recorded several times around 1300. He is said to have met a grisly death at the Battle of Halidon Hill, challenging the English to hand-to-hand combat before the battle commenced, but being killed along with his dog by Sir Robert Benhale, with Benhale carrying his head back to England as a trophy – ‘With withering force his neck retorted round, And roll’d the panting monster on the ground, Crush’d with enormous strength his bony skull; And courtiers hail’d the man who turn’d the bull. William of Todshawaugh (15th C.) recorded in 1426 as being ‘de Todgishalch’ when he witnessed a document relating to Eildrig. William (15th C.) recorded as William ‘Turn- bul’ when he witnessed the document giving the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas, 2nd of Drumlanrig, in 1428/9. He may be the same as the William who became Bishop of Glasgow. He may also be the William who was on a ‘retour of inquest’ in Hawick in 1424 for lands in Hownam and the ‘Willelmum Turnbull de Philiphalch’ on the 1426 inquest for the lands of Eildrig. Another William (in addition to the Rector of Hawick of that name) witnessed the 1431 document for the lands of Heap. Possibly the same William was on the assise for lands in Bemersyde in 1425 and the ‘retour’ panel for the lands of Caverton in 1429/30. William (c.1400–54) reported to have been a younger son of the Laird of Bedrule and noble on both sides (his mother perhaps being a Stewart of Minto). It is unclear who his fa- ther was, although he was surely closely related to John of Bedrule who is recorded in 1432. He was probably born in Bedrule Parish and baptised in the old church. He graduated from St. An- drews in 1420 and spent the early 1430s as a canon law student at Louvain in Belgium. He was also for a while Parson in or near Hawick, being described as ‘Rector of Hawick’ in 1430 when appointed as Dean of the Arts Faculty at St. Andrews. He was witness to a local charter (swapping Heap between the Langlands’ and the Scotts) in 1431, where he is ‘Magistro Willemmo Turnbule rectore de Havic’. He also wrote a letter testifying to being a witness to this, where he is ‘persone off Hawyc’ (i.e. Parson). Sometime before 1434 he was presented by James I to the benefices of the deceased Walter Stewart, Dean of Moray, although he already held ‘the parish church of Haroyk (rectius Hawyk) in the diocese of Glasgow’; he is described as being ‘a chamber- lain of the pope, a bachelor of canon law, and the said king’s proctor in the Roman court, and who is related to divers barons in the third and fourth degrees of kindred’. He was in Florence after- wards and in 1439 graduated as Doctor of Canon Law at the University of Pavia. He had privileges bestowed upon him by Pope Eugenius IV, includ- ing Archdeacon of Lothian and appointment to the See of Dunkeld in 1447. He was Vicar of Edin- burgh around 1446 and became Bishop of Glas- gow in late 1447 or early 1448. He was also im- portant in the Scottish court, becoming Keeper of the Privy Seal, and as such witnessing many documents for James II (e.g. in 1444 and 1446 for the Earl of Athole and in the Exchequer Rolls through the 1440s and 50s). He obtained a Papal Bull that led to the founding of Glasgow Uni- versity in 1451. However, his plans for develop- ing the new University were derailed following his death only a few years later. In 1450 he was wit- ness the a charter of Sir Walter Scott of Kirkurd and Branxholme. In about 1452 he witnessed a document for the Archdeaconry of Teviotdale. It was stated by a later chronicler that he played a part in the downfall of William, Earl of Dou- glas (superior of the Barony of Hawick), who was killed by James II in 1452. He certainly loaned the King money, and earned special treatment for himself, his see and his newly adopted town (which became a regality). A tradition states that he founded Jedburgh Grammar School (al- though there is no evidence to support this). He probably died in Glasgow. There is a memorial to him in Bedrule Church, unveiled in 1954. A school in Bishopbriggs is named after him, as well as the Catholic Chaplaincy at Glasgow University. William of Hassendeanbank (15th C.) recorded as a witness in 1432 to the sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffsdom of Roxburghshire to Archibald Douglas. He is probably related to the later William of Hassendeanbank. William of Whithope (d.bef. 1456) witness in 1431 to the transfer of the lands of Heap from Langlands to Scott. In his letter of ‘attestation’ he is ‘Wylliam Turnbule off Qwythope’. He was recorded as witness to the 1447 charter by Margaret Cusing to Walter Scott of Buccleuch for the ‘Cusingland’. His son Philip received a charter of the lands of Whithope in the Barony of Hawick in 1456. William (15th C.) Chamberlain of the Bishop of Glasgow. He was recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in 1453, 1454 and 1455, and appears to be different from William, Bishop of Glasgow. William of Minto (15th C.) recorded in 1456 as ‘Willelmus Turnbule de Mynto’ in a document regarding the lands of Whitchester; it is possible that this refers to his being witness to the retour for John of St. Michael a few years earlier. In 1458/9 his son Walter had a confirming charter for his lands in the Barony of Minto. He was witness to a sasine of lands near Branxholme in 1461, given by Sir Walter Scott to Katherine Inglis. He is recorded there as ‘Wyl Turnbull of Myntow’, while George of Bedrule was also a witness. In 1464/5 he was ‘William Turnebull of Mynto’ when he was on the panel to rule on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers. Given that there was a suggestion that Bishop William Turnbull’s mother was a Stewart of Minto, there may be a close family connection. William (15th C.) recorded as Rector of Annan when he witnessed a charter for the Church of Carlaverock in 1492/3. He may be the Master William recorded in 1490 when he was given lambs on the Crown lands of ‘Gildhouse’, because of the wars. William (15th C.) recorded as resident in ‘langhop’ in proceedings of the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. Hector Lauder, brother of the Laird of Todrig, had remission for several crimes, including stealing from him: 3 cows and an ox; a cow and an ox on another occasion; a grey horse; one other horse; and 60 sheep at different times. It is unclear where ‘langhop’ was, presumably Langhope, possibly the one near Todrig, but perhaps one elsewhere (or a transcription error). He may be the same William who had something stolen from him at Shielwood Meadow by Thomas Lauder of Todrig. William of Hassendean (15th/16th C.) son of Walter. He is listed as son and heir of Walter in 1479 when he leased the western part of Hartwood (which probably corresponds to Hartwoodburn). He was also son of Walter of Gargunnock in 1486, when he leased ‘Weststeid of Hartwood’ in Ettrick Ward. In 1492 he was listed as son of Walter of Gargunnock when he infefted Andrew Douglas in the lands of Hassendeanbank. In 1493 he is the ‘umquhile Wilzam Trumbull of Cargunnok’ when the ward for his daughters and heirs was given to Alexander Lord Home and Duncan Forrester (although whether he was already deceased then is unclear). He could be the William ‘White’ Turnbull recorded in 1494/5 when sheep were stolen from him in Harwood. He is recorded as ‘William Turnebill of Hassindene’ in a peculiar marriage contract of 1498. His 3 daughters and heirs, along with the 3 sisters and heirs of Alexander Hepburne of ‘Gargunnok’, were contracted, to John, Lord Drummond, Sir Duncan Forrester of ‘Skypymche’ and John Elphinstone of ‘Erth’; each of the 3 men to have rights over 2 of the heiresses and 1/3 of their lands. He appears to have been dead by 1501, when his father’s heirs are listed as being his sisters Margaret and Janet. Possibly the same William was on the panel for Elizabeth Cunningham inheriting the lands of Appletreehall and the eastern part of Hassendean in 1482. William (15th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5. John Hope in Phaup was allowed to ‘compone’ for stealing 13 sheep from him at Huntly. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William (15th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1494/5. He and James Hall had remission for the premeditated crimes perpetrated upon Jack Brydon, with William Ker of Yair as surety. William of Minto (15th/16th C.) mentioned in the last will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2, when Robert Scott of Allanhaugh and Walter (heir to Branxholme) were appointed as his ‘tutors’. This suggests he was still a minor at this point, and that his superior was Scott of Branxholme. He is probably the William of Minto who is recorded at the Justice-aire in 1498, apparently entering into a bond with Kers and others, that they would pursue men who were already declared as fugitives. He is listed among several men who were entered to the King at Stirling as caution for their crimes in 1499. This included the murder of John of Rutherford, for which he had remission, as well as the crime of ‘tressonable passing and remaying in Ingland’. He is recorded as ‘Wilzame Trumbull
