daurni (dawr-ni, -na) contr. daren't, dare not – 'ee daurni gaun oot in this weather', 'We mayna stand, we canna stand, We daurna stand alang wi' thee; The Crosiers haud thee at a feud, And they wad kill baith thee and we' [LHTB], 'As for the place we darena name, 'Twas just a slit down frae the wame' [JR], 'I kenna, I canna, I daurna tell here, But mair there's aboot it that's wondrous queer' [JoHa], '. . . But ever since that fearfu' night He daurna sleep without a light' [RDW], 'He hasna got a copper so he daurna' ring the bell' [WE], 'At yin-and-eleevinpence-hap'ny a bag Ee daurna pit eet higher' [AY], 'They crept to bed to dream o' things They daurna tell – We auld folk smile, for a' these pranks We did oorsel'!' [WFC], 'Yet still, as I think on the seasons I've wathered, I daurna weel gie a froon . . . ' [WL] (also spelled 'daurna', 'daurnae', etc.; cf. dauren).

daursay (dawr-sā) v., arch. literally 'dare say', but often treated as one word – '. . . and addressed the flying apostle by saying, 'aw daursay John yer congregation's better t'ye nor a hantel aw could name . . . '' [WNK], 'Aw daursay no'; if hei wad bring his pirnie hei wad never ken but hei was in his bed' [JTu], '. . . Better, daur-say, Brocht, factory-fresh (sei telly) til eer hame, twae hunder miles, than frae some mercat-krame . . . ' [DH].

daut (daw') v., poet. to pet, fondle, caress – 'The voice o' the cuckoo Makes the heart fain; O, let me daut thee, And ca' you my ain' [TCh].

dautie (daw'-ee) n., poet. dear, favourite – 'My blessing be upon ye, Wattie, On' a yer freens, an' favourite dawtie . . . ' [JoHa], '. . . she is the ae dautie-bairn o' hir that buure hir' [HSR] (also written 'dawtie').

Dauvit see Davit

daver (dā-vur) v., arch. to stun with a blow to the head, confound, stagger about as if stupefied – '. . . when Mungo Armstrong, the Hawick Herd, coming his round with the beasts, came up to him in a passion and davered him with a staff' [C&L1767], n. a blow, stun – '. . . if any person was unfortunate enough to come within the range of its sweep, he got the benefit of a clean daiver' [WNK] (also spelled 'daiver'; cf. dever).

davert (dā-vur') pp., arch. stunned, confounded – '. . . maist deeved an daivert an donnert wui the rummellin dunner o an eend-on bizz' [ECS], 'We spared na the Bewcastle fry, Left maist o' them davert or dead . . . ' [TK] (also written 'daivert').

David (dā-vid) n. name of 2 early Scottish Kings. David I (1084–1153) youngest son of Malcolm III, he succeeded his brother Alexander I and was succeeded by his grandson Malcolm IV. He grew up in Norman England and had earlier been Earl of Cumbria, ruling an area south of the Clyde and Forth. He established the abbeys at Selkirk (later moved to Kelso), Jedburgh and Melrose. He resided for a while at Jedburgh. He gave land grants to many Anglo-Norman families, entirely changing the feudal landscape. This included the Lovels in Hawick and the de Charterises in Wilton, as well as the Riddells and many other local families. He was succeeded by his grandson Malcolm IV – 'Efter a while, David cam up frae the Sooth Wi scarcely yin guid Scots word in his mooth, Accompanied bie Norman-French freends in wee bands, He settled them here an gied them wide lands' [WaE]. David II (1324–71), King from 1329, son of Robert the Bruce. When Edward de Baliol, with English support, was victiorious at Halidon Hill in 1333, he forced the young King to move to France. He returned in 1341, invading England in 1346 in the interests of France. He was imprisoned after Neville's Cross, remaining in England for 11 years, returning in 1357 when a ransom treaty was signed at Berwick. There then followed a period of dispute with some of his noblemen, in which he tried to make a son of Edward III successor to the Scottish throne. In fact he was succeeded by his nephew Robert II. Thomas de Charteris (of the Langlands family) was his High Chancellor 1342–46. He granted the Barony of Hawick to Maurice Murray in the 1330s and later to Thomas Murray, and he knighted Robert Chisholme of that Ilk in 1357.

Davidson (dā-vid-sun) n. Adam (15th C.) received 1 merk in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2. He is listed as 'Ade Dauyson'. Adam (17th C.) property owner in Lilliesleaf Parish. He paid tax on £101 according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1663. He was surely related to Andrew and David, who were also listed. Agnes (b.1798/9) from Minto Parish, she was a temperance hotel-keeper in Lilliesleaf. In 1851 she was living on the south side of the village with daughters Margaret, Jemima and Andrew. In Slater's 1852 directory she was listed as proprietor of a 'temperance coffee hse' in Lilliesleaf. Alan 'Taburner' (15th/16th C.) one of a number of Turnbulls and others who were fined in 1502 for failing to appear to answer for the murder of Robert Oliver. He was described as 'tawbonare', i.e. his nickname was 'player of the taburn' or drum. Several of the others mentioned were from Rulewater, suggesting that he may have been from the Rulewater Davidsons. Alexander (17th/18th C.) resident of Whitriggs. His son James was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1718. Isabel (b.1720) was probably also his child. Alexander (b.c.1780) shoemaker at Netherraw according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish. Rev. Alexander (1828–76) son of John, a forester of Mintlaw, and Ann Ross, he was educated at Edinburgh University and became a teacher at the Royal Caledonian School in London. He was appointed assistant minister at Melrose and at Bedrule, probably in the early 1860s. He was then ordained as minister of Cavers in 1866 and remained there until his death. He died unmarried. Alexander (b.1831/2) from Midlothian, he was a tailor in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 5 Melgund Place with his wife Margaret, children Isabella and Nichol, mother Margaret and sister Jessie. He may be the Alexander who donated a coin to the Museum in 1870. Alison (b.1789/90) owner of a house on Slitrig Crescent. She was already a widow by 1841. Along with her daughter Jessie, she ran a school in their house. In 1851 Jessie is recorded as a teacher of English, Music and French. She was still alive in 1861, when they were at 1 Slitrig Bank. Andrew 'Dand' (16th C.) tenant in Minto Kames. He was listed 1576 among a group of Turnbulls (led by John of Minto) and others who had a bond with another group of Turnbulls and others (in Barnhills and elsewhere), not to harm each other. He is recorded as 'alias Dand' in Kames in 1580/1 when he borrowed 100 merks from Walter Turnbull of Bewlie, giving Turnbull liferent on his 5 pound land in Belses called 'Myre quarter'. Probably the same 'Dand Davidsoun in the Cames' was among a group of Davidsons and Turnbulls who in 1595 harassed the tenants of John Ker of Barnhill, on behalf of 'Dandie', who was 'pretended tenant' of Barnhill; he was one of the main instigators and his sons George, Ralph, James and Henry were also listed. Also in 1595 he was recorded as 'David Daviesoune of the Cambes' among Turnbulls and others for whose behaviour John Turnbull of Minto made a bond of assurance. He was recorded as 'David' (presumably another transcription error) 'of the Kamis' in 1601. His son Henry was maimed in the skirmish between Turnbulls and Kerrs and their supporters at Jedburgh Rood Day; his sons 'George, Raff, James and William' were also involved. Andrew (16th C.) tenant in Raperlaw. He was recorded in Selkirk in 1580/1 as witness to a wadset between 'Dand' of Kames and Walter Turnbull of Bewlie. Andrew 'Dandie' (16th/17th C.) described in 1595 as 'pretended tenant' in Barnhill. John Ker of Barnhill complained that his tenants in Barnhill were being harassed by a gang of Davidsons and Turnbulls, led by Dand in Kames (who was therefore clearly a different man). Andrew (17th C.) described as 'in Raperlaw' when he feued lands of Raperlaw from Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning in 1632. Ralph was also mentioned and so was probably a relative. He is listed in the 1643 county valuation, with his lands in Raperlaw being valued at £65. He is probably related to David who also held lands there at the same time. Andrew (17th C.) recorded in Lilliesleaf on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the Andrew whose son Thomas was born in Lilliesleaf in 1691. He may have been the Andrew who was listed in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. He is probably the Andrew who paid the land tax for part of Raperlaw in 1678; he may have been related to Ralph of Greenhouse who also paid the land tax for another part of Raperlaw. Probably the same Andrew was portioner of Lilliesleaf in 1678 when he served as tutor to John, son of the deceased William Gray in Lilliesleaf. It seems likely that the same Andrew was paid by the Lilliesleaf Session in 1702 for the use of his house as a schoolhouse for the previous half year. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident at Newbigging in 1710. Along with Thomas (probably a close relative) he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for George Glendinning. Andrew (18th C.) resident at Howcleuch in 1752 and Parkhead in 1763 when his children were baptised in Roberton Parish. He married Margaret Murray in Roberton in 1750. His children included Bettie (b.1751), Andrew (b.1752), Robert (b.1754), Isobel (b.1758), Andrew (b.1761) and Jean (b.1763). Andrew (18th C.) owner of part of Greenhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish. He paid the window tax for Greenhouse in 1748. In 1769 he sold the farm of Greenhouse to Walter Turnbull of Firth. He was probably related to Walter who was in Greenhouse in 1694. In 1788 his lands were valued at £256 18s 10d, split itno 4 parts: 'Ralph Davidson's part of Greenhouse', valued at £104; 'A. Davidson's part of Greenhouse', valued at £65; teinds, purchased from the Duke of Roxburghe, valued at £41 5s 6d; and lands that had previously been owned by the feuars of Lilliesleaf, valued at £46 13s 4d. He was further recorded as former owner of 'Part of Davidson of Greenhouses' Lands in Lilliesleaf' in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls when owned by William Riddell of Camieston, with another part owned by Robert Laidlaw in Kingledoors. Andrew (b.1821) son of William and Barbara Laidlaw, who lived at Spittal-on-Rule. He was a ploughman at Burnfoot in Wilton Parish. He married Eliza Irving, who came from Ewes. Their children included Eliza H.B., Jane, Agnes Jessie (b.1857) and William F. Archibald (19th/20th C.) commercial traveller with Innes, Henderson & Co., he held offices at St. George's Kirk in the early 1900s. David see Dand. David (17th C.) listed in the 1643 county valuation, with his lands in Raperlaw being valued at £195; he may be related to Andrew who also held lands there at the same time. He may be the same Davidson 'of Kaymes' recorded owning land at Belses and Raperlaw in the 1626 tax roll of the Abbacy of Jedburgh. It is possible that these are transcription errors for 'Dand'. David of Newlands (17th C.) recorded in 1643 as owner of lands in Hassendean Parish valued at £80, with his designation transcribed 'Newlawes'. These same lands were held by the Marquis of Douglas 'for Newlands' in 1678 and were later transferred to Minto Parish. He was a landowner in Lilliesleaf Parish, where he paid tax on £200 according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. He was probably related to Walter who was tenant at Newlands in 1632. David (19th C.) proprietor of Wells Sawmill from 1863. Douglas (1806/7–75) farmer at Wooplaw in Southdean Parish. He was son of Richard, who farmed at Swinnie. He married Isabella Sinton, who died at Chesters in 1885, aged 64. Edgar (b.c.1780) weaver in Hawick according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Elizabeth (b.1798/9) born in Lilliesleaf Parish. She was the head of the household at West Boonraw farmhouse in 1841 and 1851. George (15th C.) tenant in Raperlaw. In 1493 he was given remission, along with Thomas Brown in Minto, for stealing livestock, as well as for associating with the former Duke of Albany and for stealing sheep along with James Elliot before his earlier remission; his surety was Sir Robert Ker. In 1494/5 he had remission for a set of crimes, including: stealing livestock from Crookston with the 'traitors of Leven'; stealing sheep from Trabroun; resetting Christie Taylor and other Englishmen; burning Standhill; stealing cows and horses from David Murray; and common theft before the date of his previous remission. His sureties were John Rutherford of Edgerston and Ralph Ker. He was surely related to James, who was also recorded at Raperlaw in 1494/5. In 1502 he had 2 horses and 14 sheep stolen from him from Raperlaw by the Olivers in Strange. Additionally he had 20 sheep stolen from Raperlaw by Nixons, with Thomas Rutherford in the Grange having remission for resetting the thieves. George (16th C.) recorded on a list of occupiers of Newton in Bedrule in 1531. George of Birnyrig (16th C.) listed in 1583/4 among some Borderers for failing to appear before the Privy Council. He may be the Davidson of Birnyrig who was ordered in 1567 to present his son James to answer allegations of raiding into England, along with Dame Janet Beaton's (Lady Buccleuch) servant. He was surely related to David in Birnyrig, and David's brother Willie, who were declared fugitives in 1605. George (16th/17th C.) tenant somewhere around Belses. In 1603 George Turnbull of Belses was accused of a long list of crimes, including stealing 5 sheep belonging to his servant. George of Kames (16th/17th C.) one of the men (along with Robert Scott of Thirlestane, Gavin Elliot of Brugh and others) who broke out of Selkirk jail in 1625. It was stated that he did not help with the escape, being 'compelled by fear of his life to swear that he should conceal their flight'. He may be the son of Dand in Kames recorded in 1595 and 1601. George (17th C.) tenant of Harry Riddell (portioner of Bewlie) in 1665, along with Walter and James Wright. George (17th C.) resident of Roberton, or the part corresponding to Hassendean Parish. He married Isobel Bennett and their children included: William (b.1680); Ralph (b.1683); and Walter (b.1687). The witnesses in 1687 were Patrick Dodds and John Hardie. Probably the same George was listed among the poor living at Hassendean on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. George (1721/2–1816) farmer at Hyndlee. He was father of James, the inspiration for 'Dandie Dinmont'. He is probably the George, farmer at Roughleeneuk, recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls for 1790–97. He is recorded as owner of 2 farm horses and 1 saddle horse at Hyndlee on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He also paid the dog tax in 1797. He married Helen Jerdon, who died in 1803, aged 72. Their children included James (1764/5–1820). He died at the age of 94, and is buried in Oxnam. George (b.c.1820) farm steward at Easter Lilliesleaf in 1841. George (b.1822/3) from Old Machar in Aberdeenshire. In 1851 he was a teacher of English and Geography, living on the Round Close. His wife was Jessie, from Stow. It is possible he was son of James, who was a teacher in Newcastleton. George (19th C.) married Isabella Michie in 1853, as recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. George (b.1836) son of George and Catherine Hughs. He was a wool spinner in Hawick. In 1851 he was living in Jedburgh with his mother and brother Somerville. He married Esther Kersel (1837–83) in Hawick in 1855. They had 7 children: Margaret (b.1855), baptised in Wilton; and George, Katherine, Adam, John, William and James Maxwell. He died in Ontario, Canada. His wife secondly married Andrew Hewie in 1872. George (1846–1923) writer of many poems, including 'Auld Hawick where I was Born', which was adapted as a song by Adam L. Ingles in 1950. He was born in Hawick, son of William and Mary Tait. He worked as a plasterer, following his father's trade. Developing an interest in poetry he became Masonic Bard to Lodge 111, where he would often recite his own pieces. He died at 24 Bridge Street and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. George (d.1927) secretary and director at Wilson & Glenny's. He was also a Trustee of Allars Kirk. His daughter Isabella married William Coutts Hunter. Rev. George (1855–1936) from Dundee, son of an engine-driver. He worked as a clerk in a factory in Dundee and attended St. Andrews University 1875–79. He was ordained as minister of Allars Kirk in 1883. He moved to Flinders Street Church, Adelaide in 1897, later becoming Moderator of South Australia and receiving a doctorate. While in Hawick he wrote a poem entitled 'I'll never play golf any more'. His wife led the Sunday School at Allars, and they raised two sons, Dan and Lundie, in Hawick. He visited Hawick again in 1909 when there was a reception for him. He died in Adelaide. Gilbert (1833–96) local banker (with the British Linen Bank) and farmer. He was son of banker and farmer William. He served as Treasurer for the Cottage Hospital. He was a contributor to the Common Riding in the 1880s. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1879. He left a sum of money to the town for an amenity that all townspeople could enjoy. This led to the construction of the ornamental fountain in front of the Museum. 3 stained glass windows were also placed in the Old Parish Church, in his memory, and in memory of his mother and father. Gilbert (19th/20th C.) probably son of banker Gilbert. He was farmer at Burnhead in the 1910s. Perhaps the same Gilbert was at Barnhills in 1906 when he contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirkton Kirk. Harry of Belses (1755–1837), W.S., on of James, merchant in Dysart, he became a Writer to the Signet in 1781. He was Sheriff-Substitute for Midlothian 1791–1820. At some point he purchesed the Belses estate. He was listed there as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805, and along with his son James in 1819. In 1811 his lands of Belses were valued at £600. He owned Old Belses according to a map of 1826, with New Besles and Belses Mill beloging to Sir Alexander Keith. He married Ann Gillespie. Henry (16th/17th C.) son of Dand of 'the Kamis', presumably Minto Kames. He was recorded in 1595 along with his father and brothers George, Ralph and James, along with several Turnbulls, when John Ker of Barnhill complained that his tenants in Barnhill were being harassed by them. In 1601 he was maimed by having his right hand cut off, this being in a fight between Turnbulls of the Minto area and Kers in Jedburgh, part of an ongoing feud between the 2 families. His brothers 'George, Raff, James and William' were also involved. In 1610 he and 'Ralff' were named by the Privy Council when a commission was appointed to apprehend them and 8 Turnbulls, for not finding caution following being found guilty of the murder of Thomas Kerr of Crailinghall and 6 Grahamslaw brothers. Isaac (18th/19th C.) tailor on the High Street, listed in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. James (15th C.) recorded as parish clerk of Wilton when he was witness to a Peeblesshire sasine in 1489. Probably the same James is witness to a sasine in the Parish of Ettleston, Peeblesshire in 1488, where George 'Davidsoun' is also listed. James (15th C.) tenant in Raperlaw. In 1494/5 he was allowed to 'compone' for a series of crimes: stealing 40 sheep from the Knoxes of 'Cordlane'; stealing 40 sheep from Sandystanes; stealing 40 cows and 100 sheep from George Rutherford of Longnewton; bringing in the Fosters and Taylors to steal from David Murray in Standhill; stealing a black ox from Thomas Minto in Minto Common; stealing a young bull from Robert Youn in Minto; bringing in other Englishmen to steal cattle and goods and to burn the home of Patrick Rutherford in Belses Mill; and common theft and reset before the date of his earlier compounding. His sureties were John Rutherford of Edgerston and Ralph Ker. He was surely related to George, who was also recorded at Raperlaw in 1494/5. He is recorded in the Treasurer's accounts for 1494/5 having obtained remission from the King. Perhaps the same James was mentioned in 1510 when his wife, a Ker, was fined for not giving suit for her lands of 'camys' (possible Minto Kames) at the Justice Aire in Jedburgh. James (15th/16th C.) resident of Sprouston, recorded at the Justiceaire held in Jedburgh in 1502. His was a fairly unusual case, since he had remission for the crime of destroying goods belonging to John Cordiner, during the time he was comitting adultery with John's wife. His surety was William Cranton of that Ilk. James (15th/16th C.) tenant in Whitmuirhall. In 1502 he had remission for involvement in the murder of Robert Liddell and for stealing various items from him. Ralph Ker of Primsideloch was his surety. James (16th C.) acted as surety for several men renting the lands of Raperlaw in 1564. James (16th C.) tenant in Birnyrig, near Jedburgh. He was warded in 1571, according to the records of the Privy Council. In 1578/9 there was a reminder at the Privy Council that several men had pledged to present him within 15 days; they were Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. John Rutherford of Hunthill, John Turnbull of Minto and Richard Rutherford, Provost of Jedburgh. He himself pledged (along with some of the same men and others) that his brothers Robert and George would 'behave tham selffis as guid and dewtifull subjectis'. However, they were found in 1578/9 not to have 'compeired' before the Council. George, his 'bastard sone' was listed in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes; John, also 'in Birnerig' and John's brothers George and Hob, were also listed and so probably related. He was listed (along with Turnbulls of Rulewater) in 1590 among men complained about by the English Warden for a raid into England in 1587. The family appear to have continued with their ways, since John 'callit in Birnyrig' was banished from Scotland at the Jedburgh Circuit Court in 1622. James (16th/17th C.) son of Dand in Kames. He was recorded in 1595 when John Ker of Barnhill complained that his tenants in Barnhill were being harassed by him, his father, his brothers George, Ralph and Henry and several Turnbulls. They were declared rebels for non-appearance. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Hislop and their children included: Bessie (b.1648); Janet (b.1651); and William (b.1653). James (17th

C.) tenant in Deanbrae. His will was recorded in 1686. James (17th C.) tenant in Hawick Shiel recorded in at least 1687–1716. He was also resident at Hawick Shiel in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. He married Margaret Nichol and their children included: George (b.1687); James (b.1698); and James (again, b.1716). The baptism in 1698 was witnessed by William Henderson and William Hood and the one in 1706 by Simon Miller and Walter Scott, tenants in Hawick Shiel. Other children who were possibly his included Robert (b.1692), Isobel (b.1695), Agnes (b.1703), Thomas (b.1706) and Bessie (b.1708). It is possible he was also the same man as the farmer at Newbigging. James (17th/18th C.) recorded in the period 1690–98 as tenant of half of the farm of Newbigging, along with his sister Margaret. He was also listed as resident at Newbigging according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He served as an elder of Hawick Kirk. In 1700 he witnessed a baptism for William Bell in Whitchesters and in 1702 another for blacksmith George Scott. In 1711 he was 'in Newbigging' when his daughter Beatrix married James Sanderson. He was also at Newbigging in 1713 and 1714 (along with Walter Scott) when he witnessed baptisms for James Sanderson (also in Newbigging). He was tenant in Newbigging in 1714 when he witnessed baptisms for William Williamson, herd in Whitchesters and for John Hobkirk in Whitchesters. In 1717 he was appointed (along with Walter Nixon) to collect monies from 'Hawickshiels, the two Southfields, Allan Haugh milne, Newbigging, and Raes-knowes'. He was still tenant in Newbigging (along with Walter Scott), when they both witnessed a baptism in 1718 for John Nichol (who lived at Allanhaugh Mill). In 1718 he was described as 'in Newbigging' and quite aged. He also witnessed a baptism in 1720 for Walter Scott, tenant in Newbigging. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for John Armstrong (probably in Raesknowe) in Hawick Parish in 1676, along with Robert Riddell (perhaps also in Newbigging). Given that Beatrix was his daughter, his wife was Lillie Scott and their children (baptised in Hawick Parish) included: Margaret (b.1672); Marion (b.1676); an unnamed son (b.1679); Andrew (b.1681); and Beatrix (b.1686). Robert, recorded a little later in Newbigging, was probably his son. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Cavers itself in 1780. His children included: Thomas (1778); and Margaret (b.1780). It is possible he is also the James, married to Margaret Nichol, whose son Thomas was baptised in Cavers in 1765. James (18th C.) house servant at Stobs in 1785, when he was working for Sir Francis Eliott. James (18th/19th C.) first man to feu the land of Gib's Nose in 1768. The 'Mrs. Davidson' labelled as owner on Wood's 1824 map was presumably his widow or the widow of his son. James (18th/19th C.) recorded at Sea Croft on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was probably related to William, who was at Whitchesters at the same time. He was probably the James recorded in 1771 when he paid the Hawick Council for 1500 divots (presumably from Hawick Common). James (18th/19th C.) tenant at Fodderlee, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. His son Thomas was listed in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire in 1797 and 1799. James (1764/5–1820) son of George, who was tenant farmer at Hyndlee. He himself farmed at Hyndlee and was partly formed the basis of the character Dandie Dinmont in Sir Walter Scott's 'Guy Mannering'. He was a keen fox hunter, said to have the best hounds on the Border. He named 2 of his best terriers 'Mustard' and 'Pepper' after their colours. However, he did not hunt with a pack, with with just a couple of hounds, a couple of terriers and a shepherd or two to help him. He is said to have been very independent of character, as well as superstitious, keeping a fast day on the anniversary of when his house at Roughleeneuk was struck by lightning with no injuries. After Sir Walter Scott's book became popular he received 'Dandie Dinmont' as a nickname. His children were boarders at the Yarrow school where James Scott was master. He hunted last in 1819, mounting 'Dimple' and going out with his old greyhound-foxhound cross 'Nimrod' for a chase on Deadwater Fell. He died the following year and is buried in Oxnam, where his gravestone includes the nickname. James (18th/19th C.) stocking-maker in Hawick. His wife Helen Crombie (or 'Nelly Crummies') died in Hawick in 1816. Their children included John (b.1776) and Agnes (b.1778), both baptised in Lilliesleaf Parish. He may be the 'Jamie' who was a devoted member of the Green Kirk, who is meant to have said 'there's just ae road to Heaven, and that's up the Green Wynd'. James (b.c.1770) tailor on Fore Row in Wilton Dean. He was recorded there in 1841 along with Isabella, probably his wife. James (1782–1854) son of Richard and Janet Turnbull, he was born in Southdean Parish. It is possible he was the James who was shepherd at Jedhead in the 1801 Militia ballot. He became a grain, provision and wine merchant of the Sandbed, and later a draper in Silver Street. He was cousin of James Davidson of Hyndlee, who was the model for Sir Walter Scott's 'Dandie Dinmont'. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He was listed as a woollen draper on the Silver Street in Pigot's 1837 directory and was a retired cloth merchant on Silver Street in 1851. He was one of the founders of the Relief Church in Hawick. He married Agnes Mundell (who came from Newcastleton), and their children included: Margaret (b.1842); Helen (b.1844); Mary (b.1848); Allison (b.1848), who appears not to have survived; and Richard (b.1850). His widow was 'Proprietress of Property' living at 4 Silver Street in 1861. James (b.1783/4) born in Lanton, he was a carter on the Kirk Wynd, and recorded as a groom at the Village in 1851. He married Margaret Pringle. Their children included Ewen and Helen. He was in the Combination Poorhouse in 1861. He could be the 'Jamie' described (by Robert Murray) in 1863 as one of the greatest supporters of the Anti-Burgher Kirk, saying that 'there's just ae road to Heaven, and that's up the Green Wynd'. James (b.1787/8) from Caverton, he was a Schoolmaster in Newcastleton. In 1841 he was living at about 35 South Hermitage Street. In 1851 he was 'Feuar or Small Farmer formerly a Teacher'. His wife was Jane (from Forfar) and their children included George (who assisted in the school), Jane, Mary and James. Elizabeth (probably his mother) was also living with the family in 1841. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. He married Janet Wilson and their children included George (b.1813), John (b.1815) and Helen (b.1817). James (b.c.1800) farmer at Greensidehall. During the election 'riots' of 1837 he had his coat torn and was knocked down. He was one of the men who went down to London to give evidence at the inquiry. He was at Greensidehall in 1841. His wife was Margaret, and their children included Richard, Adam, Janet and John. James (19th C.) farmer at Ormiston Lochend in the 1860s. He was also a registered voter in Cavers Parish. James (19th C.) Hawick resident who married Helen Ekron in 1851. It is unclear who his wife's parents were. James (1831/2–1899) known as a quiet man, he worked as a woolsorter and later as a coal merchant. He was associated with the Evangelical Union Church and the Hawick Home Mission. He married Elizabeth Laurie, who died in 1862. They had 4 daughters: Barbara Scott, who married coal merchant John Turnbull; Jane Gould; Christina, who married John Cairns, Director of the Scottish Co-operative Wholesale Society Ltd.; and Lizzie, who married Robert Oliver. His brother-in-law John R, Laurie wrote some lines in his memory and John C. Goodfellow wrote 2 sonnets about him. He lived at Dalkeith Place and is buried in Wellogate Cemetery – '... And thus through life's alloted span he lived, And died as he had lived, a gentle man' [JCG]. James Norman Grieve 'Norman' (1931–) first person born in the Haig Maternity Home. His middle names were presumably taken from Norman Grieve, who gave money for the establishment of the hospital in Hawick. He attended Hawick High School and Edinburgh University and played rugby for Hawick R.F.C. (where he was part of the multi-winning Sevens team in 1953/4) as well as Edinburgh University (where he was part of a title-winning side in 1953/4). He played cricket for Scotland in 1951 and rugby for Scotland 1952–54. He was also Captain of the Scotland squad for one match. He trained as a doctor and moved to New Zealand, living in Whangārei. In 1995 he received the Queen's Service Medal for public services. Jessie (b.1820/1) teacher at the Crescent in 1852, along with her mother Jessie. She is recorded in 1851 as a teacher of English, Music and French at about 2 Slitrig Crescent and in 1861 as a teacher of music, dancing and French at 1 Slitrig Bank. It seems likely that she and her mother ran a small school for girls. She produced a pen and ink sketch of St. Mary's Kirk in about 1850; it was drawn from near the bottom of the Mill Path and shows the area before there were any houses along Slitrig Bank and Old Manse Lane. She presented a frame containing 32 'original pencil sketches of celebrated characters' to the Archæological Society in 1863. Her poems 'True Happiness' and 'Lines Suggested by a Visit to a Churchyard' were published in 'Living Bards of the Border' in 1859. John (15th C.) member of the panel for James Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick in 1484. He was recorded as 'Johannem Dauidsone'. John (15th C.) tenant in Minto recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493. He was allowed to 'compone' for several crimes: stealing 10 sheep from Archibald Rutherford; common theft committed with James Turnbull; stealing a horse from the same James Turnbull; stealing 100 ells of woollen cloth from Spittal-on-Rule; and reset of thefts 'old and new'. His surety was Robert Scott of Whitchester. John (15th/16th C.) tenant in Bank. His sons William and George were listed along with him (as well as Christopher and James, son of Richard, as well as Douglases from Bonjedward and Swinside) when they had remission for oppressing Sir William Colville of Ochiltree. John (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 being 'in Birnerig' when listed among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. His brothers George and Hob are also listed. It is unclear where Birnierig was located, but his name appears first on a long list, and right before some Scotts of Ewesdale. John (16th/17th C.) recorded as Schoolmaster at Minto in 1616. Rev. John (17th C.) graduating from St. Andrews University in 1628, he became minister of Southdean in 1635. He gave £10 towards building the library at Glasgow University in 1636. He signed the National Covenant in Hawick in 1638. He was confined to his parish (rather than ousted) in 1662 for refusing to conform to Episcopacy, and in 1666 was deprived 'for fornication' (although it is possible this was an excuse to get rid of a Covenanter). He married Agnes Mitchell, who died in 1640, aged 30. John (17th C.) listed at Whithope among 'The poor in Hauick Parioch' on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th/18th C.) tenant in the Flex. He was recorded as tenant in Flex in 1714, 1716, 1718 and 1722. He married Jean Gledstains in Hawick in 1713 and their children included: George (b.1714); Walter (b.1716); Bessie (b.1718); John (b.1720); and George (again, b.1722). The witness in 1714 was smith William Whillans, and the witnesses in 1716 were tailor Walter Gledstains (probably related to his wife) and Beadle Walter Scott, in 1718 were John Gledstains of Whitlaw and his brother William Gledstains, and in 1722 were Archibald Paterson in Flex and merchant James Aitken. Bessie, who married Archibald Paterson in 1714, may have been his sister. John (18th C.) tenant in 'Knowsowth', i.e. Knowesouth. He was on the panel for the inheritance of the lands of Scott of Whitehaugh in 1753. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was recorded at Howcleugh in 1780, although his wife was at Eildrig (an unusual baptismal entry). Perhaps the same John was living at Chapelhill in 1790. He is probably the John who married Margaret Inglis in 1777 and had children: Walter (b.1778); John (b.1780); Betty (b.1783); Thomas (b.1790). His wife is probably the Margaret (b.1755), daughter of John Inglis, who lived at Broadlee and Eilrig. John (18th C.) recorded in Raperlaw in 1784 when he was involved in a case over non-payment of a bill in Selkirk. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1787 he married Betty Rutherford, also from Hawick. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Davidson in 1797. John (b.c.1780) resident of Leecroft in Hawick Parish according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. John (18th/19th C.) plasterer in Hawick. His daughter Christian died in 1808. John (b.1793/4) blacksmith at the Sandbed, recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He was at about 1 Orrock Place in 1841, living with his wife Esther and children Walter, Mary and James. He was also there in 1851 and listed as a blacksmith on Teviot Square in Slater's 1852 directory. John (b.1803/4) from Cavers Parish, he was a joiner in Denholm, probably on Canongate. In 1851 he was living at Spittal-on-Rule. He married Janet Archibald. John (1824–84) plasterer, who originally worked with his father William. He was an early Trustee of Hawick Free (later St. George's) Kirk. He may also have been the same John who was the first Secretary of the Congregational (then Evangelical Union) Kirk, from about 1848. Additionally he could be the John who was the first Secretary of the Angling Club, 1858–60. For the Museum's temporary exhibition of 1866, he 'exhibits a series of models in stucco, of cornices, corbals, and other plaster work, executed and principally designed by himself, and from sketches by Mr J.T. Rochead', as well as casts of the Elgin Marbles. He was living at 11 Allars Crescent in 1861 and later lived at Wellogate Villa. In 1871 he was described as an 'architect and surveyor, modeller and plasterer and cement musher' employing 5 men. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Scott, the Kelso man who published the evangelical newspaper 'The Christian'. His son John became a relgious publisher and he also had a daughter. John (19th C.) married Janet Hume in Bedrule Parish in 1849. John (b.1832) son of banker and farmer William. He was farmer at Adderstoneshiel. In 1861 he was recorded there, farming 1200 acres and employing 9 people and was recorded there in 1868. He married Anne Stavert and their children included Jane A., Margaret, William and Andrew. John (b.1842) born at Burnside, he was son of William and Euphemia Pow. In 1867 in Teviothead he married Betsy, daughter of Gavin Pow. They lived in Hobkirk and Wilton Parishes where they had 4 children: Betsy (b.1868); John (b.1868); Euphemia (b.1869); and Gavin (b.1871). They then emigrated to Ontario and had 4 more children, Walter, Jean Laidlaw, William and Robert James. John (b.c.1868) probably son of John.

He was farmer at Adderstoneshiel in the early 1900s. In 1906 he contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirkton Kirk. His wife Sarah came from England. John (d.c.1933) son of plasterer John. He trained in the offices of 'The Christian' newspaper and became manager of Oliphants, Ltd., another religious publishers. John (1963–2017) born in Hawick, son of Pym and Isabel, he grew up in Newcastleton and attended the High School. He spent a brief period in the R.A.F., attended teacher training college in London and worked for 24 years for the Northumbria Police. In 2005 he emigrated to Canada, settling in Abbotsford, British Columbia. He was killed in the line of duty. Highly regarded by his colleagues and adopted community, his memorial service was attended by thousands. Joseph (18th C.) of Southdean, made an Honorary Burgess in 1777. Joseph of Stewartfield (18th/19th C.) listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. He was probably son of the Scottish antiquary and lawyer, John, who co-founded the Royal Society of Edinburgh. Margaret (17th C.) sister of James. In 1690 she was recorded as joint tenant, along with her brother, of half the farm of Newbigging. In 1692 she was still leasing part of the farm, with her brother 'James being caut[ione]r for his sister for this year', and in 1694 and 1698 they were leasing half of Newbigging 'conjunctly and severally'. She was also listed at Newbigging among 'The poor in Hauick Parioch' on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Margaret 'Peggy' (d.1986) Cornet's Lass to Tom Winning in 1919, in the first Common Riding after the war. She founded the Cornet's Lasses and Acting Mothers' Association in 1954 and was Captain of the 1st Hawick Guides. She was unmarried, and stayed near her brother in Berwickshire. Marion (16th C.) tenant at 'Esslesche', probably Effledge, when in 1535 she had 7 cows and oxen stolen on these lands by William Scott 'in Layk'. Arthur Douglas and Thomas 'Fresall' are also mentioned as being in the same lands. Ralph (15th/16th C.) brother-in-law of William Turnbull of Minto. He was recorded in 1530/1 as cousin of the deceased Adam Grahamslaw, when his widow Agnes Davidson and heir Elizabeth received money from him for a third of 'Chames' within the Lordship of Minto. In 1531 he was granted the non-entry of 'Nukland' (probably Nut Bank) in the Lordship of Minto by William Turnbull and his son William. This land paid 9 shillings yearly. In 1538 he renounced all claims to Grahamslaw and a third of 'Chames'; the witnesses included Simon Shortreed, George Scott in Blindhaugh and Robert Scott in Howford. Ralph (16th/17th C.) son of Dand in Kames. He was recorded in 1595 when John Ker of Barnhill complained that his tenants in Barnhill were being harassed by him, his father, his brothers George, James and Henry and several Turnbulls. He was referred to as 'Raff' when, along with several of his brothers, he was part of the attack by Turnbulls and others on Kers in Jedburgh in 1601. In 1610 he and his brother Henry were named, along with 8 Turnbulls, when the Privy Council appointed a commission to apprehend them, since they were still 'unrelaxed from hornings' following the murder of Kers and Grahamslaws. Ralph of Greenhouse (17th C.) local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, according to James Wilson. He paid the land tax for part of Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1678, this being valued at £104, and being the lands then known as Greenhouse. He was probably related to Andrew, who was recorded as owner of another part of Raperlaw in 1678. He was listed in 1680 among local men convicted for being Covenanters, the accusations including attacking 'the Tower and Castle of Hawick'; however, he did not appear in court, and was presumably in hiding at that point. He may have been the same 'Ralff Daviesone in Raperlaw' recorded in 1632 when he feued part of Raperlaw from Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning. It is possible that he was related to the 'Raff', son of David of Kames, who was part of the attack by Turnbulls and others on Kers in Jedburgh in 1601. Either he or a later Ralph was the former owner of 'Ralph Davidson's part of Greenhouse', recorded among the properties of Andrew Davidson in 1788 and Robert Laidlaw in 1811. Richard (1763/4–1838) tenant farmer at Swinnie. His children were baptised in Southdean Parish. He married Janet Turnbull (1772/3–1860) and their children included: James (b.1782); an unnamed child (b.1786); William (1789/90–1838), who died at Gladstone Terrace, Edinburgh; John (1794–1866), tenant in Arks; Richard (1797–1852), who also farmed at Swinnie; George (b.1796); Agnes (b.1799); Walter (1801–05); Mark (b.1802); Helen (1804–62), who died at Southdean Mill; Walter (again, 1805–47), who died in Australia; Douglas (1807–75) tenant in Wooplaw; and Jane (b.1816). The family are buried in Oxnam. Richard (1797/8–1852) 4th son of Richard and Janet Turnbull. He was farmer at Swinnie, and was related to the 'Dandie Dinmont' family, being a great-nephew of James

Davidson. He hunted with the Jedforest Hunt and had terriers that were derived from those of his great-uncle. His daughter Agnes married William Bell, miller of Southdean Mill. Robert (15th C.) mentioned at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493. Edward Turnbull in Bedrule had remission for stealing a cow from him at Newton. This seems likely to be the Newton in Bedrule Parish. Robert 'Hob' (16th C.) tenant of lands for which the superior was Alexander Lord Home, recorded in 1562/3. He was one of the 'pretended tenants' who refused to leave Midshiels, Appletreehall, Broadlee, 'Cotlaw', Burnside and mill, and 'occupied the lands by violence'. He could be the man of the same name who was among Borderers who swore allegiance to the Crown in 1572/3, with William Ker of Caverton as surety. Robert (17th C.) Covenanter supporter and fugitive. He was hired by 'the Good Lady' Cavers as her gardener, which was cited as part of the evidence of her crimes when she was arrested in 1682. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was living at Newbigging in 1711 when he witnessed a baptism for John Wilson, tailor there. He was surely related to James, who was tenant in Newbigging in the 1790s. Robert (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. In 1744 he married Agnes Bell, who was also fom Minto, the marriage being proclaimed in both Cavers and Minto Parishes. Their children, baptised in Minto, included George (b.1746), Eupham (b.1751) and Helen (b.1755). Capt. Robert of Pinnaclehill (18th C.) brother-in-law of Cornelius Elliot and cousin of Adam Ogilvie. He was in the Bengal Army and made a small fortune in the East Indies. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788. He was Captain in the Kelso Volunteers. Probably the same Robert of Pinnaclehill was listed as a Deputy-Lietenant for Roxburghshire in 1797 and 1798 and a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. In 1780 he married Helen, daughter of William Elliot of Wolfelee. His daughter Margaret maried James Elliot of Wolfelee. Robert (18th C.) farmer at Mervinslaw, recorded on the 1790–92 Horse Tax Rolls. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Woll Rig, recorded as owner of 3 farm horses and 1 saddle horse on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Robert (1778–1855) labourer, born in Lempitlaw, who lived much of his life at Morebattle. He is remembered for his poetry, published in 3 collections during his lifetime, the last being 'Leaves from a Peasant's Cottage Drawer' (1848). Robert 'Robbie' (1789–1836) well known Hawick figure of the early 19th century, regularly pushing his wheelbarrow between Nixon's mill and warehouse. In his 1868 article, W.N. Kennedy describes that he 'belonged to a class whom it would be unjust to stigmatise as idiotic, but who yet are some degrees removed from those who possess common sense'. His father was a stockingmaker and Beadle (presumably at Hawick Kirk, since that is where Robbie attended). Several stories are told about his fixed habits, and slow mental capacity. He was said to have treated everyone on familiar terms, irrespective of their rank and to have been a firm favourite with the townsfolk of the day, with everyone greeting him as he passed with his cart. There is an Adam Brown portrait of him in the Museum, although no known portrait exists of his employer, John Nixon. Robert 'Robbie' (1845–1921) son of Walter, blacksmith at Newmill. He went to Appletreehall as a blacksmith journeyman. In about 1874 he became blacksmith at Stobs Woodfoot. When the miltary bought the estate in 1903 and the old smiddy was demolished, he moved to Whitlaw Haugh. In 1866 he married Jane, daughter of James Grieve, from Newcastleton; she died relatively young. They had 4 boys and 4 girls (mostly baptised in Wilton Parish) including: Elizabeth (b.1867); Walter (b.1869), who emigrated to the U.S.A., sent for his Galashiels sweetheart and farmed at Red River; Mary (b.1871); and Jessie (b.1873), who married shepherd John Burnet. 2 of the daughters emigrated to the United States, but both returned, one marrying Jim Duncan from Aberdeen, who became joiner at Appletreehall. 2 brothers also went to South Africa (including Jim). There is a photograph of him in his working apron, beside his 2nd daughter, taken in about 1897. Samuel George (19th/20th C.) Hawick doctor of Buccleuch Street. Near the end of the first decade of the 1900s he became partner with Dr. David Murray, who died in 1911. Stephen (d.bef. 1563) recorded as deceased in 1563 when his son William witnessed a marriage agreement in Lilliesleaf in 1563. This was for another William 'of Haitharlandis'. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Malie Little and their children included Bessie (b.1678) and Margaret (b.1680). The witnesses in 1680 were Michael and William Turnbull. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Stobicote in 1716 when his son Walter was baptised. Perhaps the same Thomas married Margaret Waugh in Cavers in 1716. Perhaps the same Thomas along with Andrew in Newbigging witnessed a baptism in Hawick for George Glendinning in 1710. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Helen Pott in 1717 and Margaret Pott in 1730 (the marriage being recorded in Cavers Parish). He was in Lymiecleuch in 1730. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was herd in Denholm in 1753. His children included Nelly (b.1753). Perhaps the same Thomas married Janet King, lived at Denholm Dean and had children Thomas (b.1747), Helen (b.1753), Agnes (b.1756), Janet (b.1758) and Thomas (b.1761). If these are all the same man, then the 1753 baptism is recorded twice, 2 months apart. Thomas (18th C.) recorded at Broadlee in 1772 when his son Thomas was baptised in Roberton Parish. He may be the Thomas who married Isobel Miller in 1763 and also had children Walter (b.1770) and John (b.1782). Thomas (18th/19th C.) son of James, farmer at Fodderlee. He is recorded in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire in 1797 and also appears at Fodderlee on the list in 1799. Thomas (b.c.1780) recorded as servant to 'Mr Currie' at Hallrule on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Thomas of Milnholm (18th/19th C.) one of the founder members of the Wisp Club in 1826. Thomas (b.c.1825) shoemaker on the Sandbed in 1841 and living at the Village in 1851. His wife was Helen and their children included James, Ewen, Thomas and John. Thomas 'Tom' (1838–70) born probably in Oxnam Parish, son of shepherd Jonah and Frances. His father used to walk 15 miles evey Sunday to attend the Relief Kirk in Jedburgh. His father moved to near Ancrum when he was 11, and he attended school there, before moving on to Jedburgh and Edinburgh University. He then trained for the United Presbyterian Church and became a 'probationer', but ill-health forced him to stop preaching in 1866. He became known as a poet and writer of songs. A memoir and collection of his poems etc. was published by James Brown. A memorial was erected in Oxnam Churchyard by his friends. Thomas (1846/7–93) merchant in Newcastleton. He married Margaret Oliver, who died in 1937, aged 87. They are buried at Ettleton. W. Douglas (19th/20th C.) Director at Pesco's 1916–66. Walter (17th C.) tenant at Newlands who had a feu-contract with Thomas, Lord Binning in 1632. In 1665 he was later recorded as tenant of Harry Riddell (portioner of Bewlie) along with George and also James Wright, when they made an agreement with neighbouring tenants regarding the boundaries between them. He was probably related to David, tenant of Newlands in 1663. Walter (17th C.) listed at Falnash Mill among 'The poor in Hauick Parioch' on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Perhaps the same Walter, married to Marie Little, had a son Walter baptised in Hawick in 1685, with witnesses James (probably a relative) and William Chisholme. Walter (17th C.) recorded at Greenhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may have been related to the earlier Ralph of Greenhouse. Walter (17th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Walter (17th C.) listed among the 'Cottars in Hassanden' on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably the Walter who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Wilkie in Hassendean in 1683. Walter (b.c.1770) blacksmith at Newmill. He is listed there in 1841 with children Walter, Christian and Betty. He is probably the Walter who married Mary Grieve in Hawick Parish in 1790. Walter (18th/19th C.) farmer at Bitchlaw, in Cavers Parish, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. Walter (b.1807/8) blacksmith at Newmill (on Teviot), son of Walter, who was blacksmith there before him. He is listed there in 1851 and in 1861 he was employing 2 people at Newmill. He married Elizabeth Nichol and their children included: Walter (b.1839); John (b.1741); Mary (b.1843); Robert (b.1845), blacksmith at Stobs Woodfoot; Jane (b.1846); William (b.1849); Helen (b.1853); James Grieve (b.1856); and Alexander (b.1858). Walter (b.1815/6) weaver in Hawick. In 1841 he was living at Weensland Mills, in 1851 on Slitrig Crescent and in 1861 at Lynnwood Cottages. He worked at Lynnwood Mills and set music to the song 'Lean Yeddie Gibson'. He is probably the Walter of Lynnwood Mill who in 1858 donated the snuffbox of 'Jean Caleb' to the Museum and in 1864 donated 'a pair of antlers, petrifactions, &c.', as well as coins in 1865 and 1867. He may be the Walter whose presence was reported as being a great miss at the 1875 Common Riding. He married Agnes Scott and their children included: Margaret, who died young; James (b.1841); James (again, b.1843); Joan (b.1845); Margaret (b.1849); William (b.1853); and Walter (b.1855); as well as adopted children Margaret and Thomas Stavert. Some of their children were baptised at Hawick Free Kirk. Walter (1815/6–61) plasterer. He was living at the West Port in 1841, probably No. 5 Loan. In 1851 he was on the Backrow and at 52 Loan in 1861. He married Isabella Sharp, who died in 1859, aged 46. Their children included Margaret, John (b.1835),

Agnes, Gilbert (b.1839), Janet (b.1841), James, Willian and Helen. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Walter (b.1832/3) born in Wilton Parish, he was farm steward living at Eastcote in i1841. Walter (19th/20th C.) originally from Hawick, he trained as a pharmacist, then moved to Dundee, where he bought a bankrupt chemist's in 1897. He built this into a thriving set of chemist's and veterinary shops across East Central and North East Scotland. Rev. Walter (b.1875) born at Sunnyside in Cavers Parish, son of William and Mary Douglas. He was educated at Kirkton, Oxnam, Smailholm and then Edinburgh University, graduating in 1913. He taught in several schools before being licensed as a minister in 1914 and became minister at the Tron Kirk the following year. In 1906 he married Rosetta Ann, daughter of Lorenzo Padgett and Frances Beaumont. His children included: Lorenzo Douglas; Frances Mary; and William Leslie Beaumont. William (15th C.) described as one of three bailies 'in that part' in a document on 1448 in which Stephen Scott of Castlelaw gained the 'Burrellands' in Eckford. He was son of the deceased Richard, Burgess of Jedburgh. William (16th C.) occupier of land in Denholm in 1535, along with Archibald Turnbull and James Hobkirk. These lands were inherited by Janet Scott, widow of Walter Scott. William (16th C.) resident of somewhere in Teviotdale. He was recorded in an English letter of 1542 as a leader of a raid, along with George Young, and described as 'oon of the Pringles'. They robbed a village in England, but were intercepted on their return and 14 men captured. William (16th C.) recorded being 'of Haitharlandis' in 1563 when Walter Riddell of that Ilk was involved with finding him a wife, since he held lands of Riddell's in ward and relief. In fact he was offered to choose between Janet, eldest daughter of John Middlemas in Lilliesleaf and Margaret, eldest daughter of Thomas Ker in Kippielaw. It was surely unusual to be given such a choice. William (16th C.) recorded in 1563 as son of the deceased Stephen when he witnessed a marriage agreement in Lilliesleaf in 1563. This was for another William 'of Haitharlandis'. William (16th C.) recorded in Philhope in 1579 when he witnessed the transfer of Rough-hope and Philhope from John Turnbull to Martin Elliot. William (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 being 'in Lempitlaw', among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. William (16th/17th C.) resident of Caerlenrig in 1618. Walter Scott of Buccleuch complained that he had cut down 60 alder trees from his lands of Gorrenberry, with other men from upper Teviotdale (including Archibald Grieve in Caerlenrig) also being accused of stealing timber; he was ordered by the Privy Council to pay the Laird of Buccleuch £40. Probably the same William is described as 'in Carlanrig' in 1632 when he and several others feued the lands of Westbarns from Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning. William (17th C.) merchant and Bailie in Jedburgh. In about 1688 he bought the lands of Blackhope (in Liddesdale) from Robert Elliot of Larriston, who had become bankrupt. There may have been a further charter of adjudication for the lands in 1695. William (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Holt. His wife was Janet Aitkin and their son Adam was born in 1702 and the baptism was witnessed by Adam Elliot of Arkleton and his servant John Bell. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Waugh and their children included: Janet (b.1719); William (b.1721); and Robert (b.1723). Perhaps the same William had a daughter Margaret baptised in Hawick in 1731, with witnesses William Tudhope and Robert Boyd. William (1754/5–1807) portioner in Lanton. He married Agnes Turnbull, who died in 1849, aged 92. Their son George was also portioner in Lanton, and married Margaret Main. They are buried in Bedrule kirkyard, with their names inscribed on a stone bearing 17th century initials of Turnbulls. William (18th C.) footman at Stobs in 1786–88, when he was working for Sir Francis Eliott. In 1791 he was listed as a house servant at Stobs and was a footman again in 1797. William (1781/2–1871) portioner in Lanton, son of William. He married Margaret Main, who died in 1850, aged 66. They are buried in Bedrule. William (18th/19th C.) recorded at Whitchesters on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was probably related to James, who was at Sea Croft at the same time. William (18th/19th C.) agricultural labourer who lived at Spittal-on-Rule. In 1815 he married Barbara Laidlaw. In 1841 the family were living in Roxburgh and in 1851 were at Howden Moor. Their children (baptised in Cavers Parish) included: William (b.1817); Jeanie (b.1819); Andrew (b.1821); Agnes (b.1823); John (b.1826); Walter (b.1828); George (b.1831); James Laidlaw (b.1834); Thomas (b.1838); and Barbara

(b.c.1848). He and his wife are buried in Bedrule Cemetery. William (b.1792/3) banker of Hawick, of whom a portrait exists. He was born in Lilliesleaf Parish. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He was an insurance agent for the British Fire Office, recorded on Pigot's 1825/6 directory for Hawick. He is probably the partner of 'Dickson and Davidson' who were listed as Hawick agents of the British Linen Bank in Pigot's 1837 directory and Slater's 1852 directory. He was also a farmer. He was listed as the Duke of Buccleuch's tenant in Ropelawshiel in 1837, and is probably the William who was tenant at Adderstoneshiel in the 1860s. He may also be the William who owned West Boonraw in 1850. He could be William who became a Life Member of the Archæological Society in 1859. In the 1841 census he is a bank agent on the High Street, and in 1851 was at about No. 18. He married Jane Aitkin, from Kirkton Parish. Their children included: John (b.1832), who farmed at Adderstoneshiel; Gilbert (b.1833), also a banker; Jane Amos (b.1836); and William (b.1842). In 1861 he was at 18 High Street. William (b.1803) of the family of plasterers, son of John and Janet Thorburn. He was listed as a plasterer on the Howegate in Pigot's 1825/6 directory and on the Loan in 1837 and 1852. He was living at 41 Loan on the censuses for 1841–61. He is probably the William who in 1861 donated to the Museum an amulet 'found near head of Loan'. He married Mary Ekron in 1823, and they had 4 children together. Mary died in 1830 and he secondly married Mary Tait, having 8 more children. His 12 known children are: John (b.1824), also a plasterer; William (b.1826), who emigrated to Australia; Andrew (b.1827), also went to Australia; Helen (b.1829); Janet (b.1834); Catherine ('Kitty', b.1836); Walter (b.1838); Isabel (b.1839); James (b.1840); Mary (b.1845); George (b.1847), who carried on the business; and Agnes (b.1849). William (1822/3–97) from Kelso, he came to Hawick at the age of eight and worked as a weaver. Around 1875 he and his brother-in-law (Adam Paterson) went into partnership in Haddington as a tweed manufacturer. About 1883 he started his own business in Oliver Crescent. He married Helen Paterson, who died in 1903, aged 83. Their children included William (who became Provost of Haddington), Jeanie (who married Walter, son of barber Frank McKenzie). He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery and Helen (b.1860). William (1863–1938) son of manufacturer William, he was born in Hawick. He worked as a designer with his uncle's firm Adam Paterson & Sons, West Mills, Haddington, and became Provost of that town. He married Margaret Beatrice Brown, who died in 1936, aged 76 (formerly spelled 'Dauidsones', 'Davidsone', 'Davidsonn', 'Davidsson', 'Davidsoun', 'Davidsoune', 'Davison', 'Davisonne', etc.).

Davie Aathings (dā-vee-aw-thingz) n. former nickname for a man in Hawick, probably a shopkeeper – 'Here's Soapy Ballantyne and Wull Slush, Here's Todd Lowrie and Peggy Neill; Davie A'-things and auld Kush-Mush, And Jenny A'-things is here as weel' [HI].

Davie wi the Tod's Tail (dā-vee-wi-thu-tōdz-tāl) n. literally 'David with the Fox's Tail', nickname for David Scott of Howpasley.

Davies (dā-veez) n. Douglas S. 'Doug' (1899–1987) son of Hawick saddler George, he was born in Ashkirk Parish. He played at No. 8 for Hawick R.F.C. and was capped 24 times for Scotland, as well as representing the British & Irish Lions. He died on the Isle of Man. Edmund Frank 'Trotsky' (1900–51) born in India, he entered the Army after WWI and served in Ireland, Mesopotamia, Egypt, India and Palestine. He was evacuated from Dunkirk in 1941 and in 1943 was in Hawick (presumably at Stobs Camp). There he was asked to volunteer to lead a Special Operations Executive mission to the Balkans, parachuting into Albania to help the resistance there. This eventually led to his capture and imprisonment, with him becoming the highest-ranking prisoner at Colditz. He was liberated in 1945 and returned to active duty, with many decorations. He died after a stroke in Wales. George (1817–72) butcher at 6 High Street. He came from Granton and was born in Pathead, Midlothian. He is listed (as 'Davis') in Slater's 1852 directory, with flesher's shops on the High Street and the Howegate. In 1841 he was living in St. Cuthbert's Parish in Edinburgh, in 1851 on the High Street, being a 'Flesher employing 3 servants'. In 1861 he was living at Howlands and was a butcher and farmer with 7 employees. He first married Hannah Telford, but she died in 1846. In 1848 in Roberton he married Margaret Scott, who died in 1876, aged 53. She was daughter of William Scott, tenant of Girnwood, and a descendant of the Scotts of Milsington. Their children included: Annie, who married Provost John Nichol; William, who died in infancy; John, who continued the butcher's business; Hannah (b.1856); Walter (b.1859); and George (b.1859), who was a saddler. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. He can be seen outside his shop in a photograph of 1860. George (1837/8–1933) minister of the Newcastleton Evangelical Union Church 1883–86. He was later a Baptist minister. He secondly married Elizabeth Isabella Cassells in Edinburgh in 1885. George (19th/20th C.) son of butcher George. He was a saddler at 6 High Street, where his father's butcher's shop had been. He later farmed at North Sinton. His shop was taken over by Joseph Stothart. His son George bought North Sinton. His other children were Douglas (a rugby player), Hannah, Mrs. Tom Gray (of Dryhope) and Mrs. Pate (from near Duns). Hannah (19th/20th C.) daughter of George and Margaret Scott. She inherited the tenancy of Girnwood from her uncle Walter. She later purchased the farm and bequeathed it to her nephew Provost William Scott Nichol. Walter (d.1940) son of butcher George. He farmed at Glendearg, Eskdalemuir, then at Bush, Ewes from 1901 and lastly at Harwood. He married Jeanie, daughter of John Wilson, farmer at Greenbanks. Their children included Walter (who also farmed at Harwood), John (who lived near Duns), Elizabeth (who married George Scott Easton of Todrig), Jeanie, Annie (who moved to New Zealand), and Margaret (who became a nurse).

Davington (daw-vin-tin) n. hamlet in Dumfriesshire, on the White Esk, about 6 miles south of Ettrick. The lands were formerly part of the estate of the Scotts of Thirlestane, being retained by the senior branch of the family when they lost the main estate in the mid-17th century. Legal battles among descendants of the Scotts of Davington led to final debts, and the farm was sold to James Beattie in 1784. A meteorological observatory was built nearby in 1904–07 and the Kagyu Samye Ling Tibetan Centre from 1967 – 'Warn Davington, and Rennelburn, with Tandhill bold and free, To meet me in full armour, the morn at Woodhouselee' [WSB] (also written 'Davinton').

Davis (dā-vis) n. Edward (b.c.1815) coach driver from England. He was at Mosspaul on the 1841 census. John (18th C.) footman at Riddell in 1794, when he was working for Lady Riddell. Probably the same man is listed as 'Thomas' at Riddell in 1797. William (19th/20th C.) wrote 'Textbook of Hosiery', published in Hawick in 1908.

Davit (daw-vi') n., arch. Christian name, usually a pet form of David 'Dauvit had dwalt i' the Mid Raw And plied wi' his cairrier cairt Jinglin' raig'lar ilk a week Owre-bye the Copshaw airt' [DH] (there are several spelling variants, e.g. 'Daavid' and 'Dauvit').

daw (daw) v., poet. to dawn – 'There the first streak o' life it upon me did daw' ' [JoHa], 'Quhill the daye daw, an' the skaddaws flie awa . . . ' [HSR], '. . . mair nor thaye that watche for the dawin' o; the daye' [HSR] (also written 'daw' ').

dawalt (da-wawl') pp., arch. tired, wearied – '. . . whan the bruizzin, frizzlin heat turns frush things tewd an rizzert, an leify folk dawallt an waaf' [ECS], 'A was keindih dawallt oot, but A've gaen ti the spriggit and swaibblt masul weel up wui waeter' [ECS] (also written 'dawallt'; the verb is 'daul', from Old English).

Dadmundsteed (dad-mund-steed) n. former lands in Liddesdale, listed in a rental roll of c.1376 in the 'Quarterium de Ludne' (roughly the western side of the Hermitage Water). The name is recorded as 'Dawdemoundstede', but the pronunciation, and precise location, are unknown.

Dawson (daw-sin) n. Archibald (c.1820–54) tailor in Hawick. He is recorded at about 23 High Street in 1851. He married Mary Scott, who died in 1892, aged 70. Their children included Matthew, Mary, Thomas, Janet, Mary (again) and Robert. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. William (18th C.) tenant farmer at Frogden, in Linton Parish. He was sent to England to learn new farming methods, coming back to farm at Frogden in 1753. He soon introduced the successful farming of turnips, as well as new grasses and other methods, which proved successfully, and were adopted by many of his neighbours. He is sometimes called the Father of Scottish Agriculture.

Dawson International (daw-sin-in-ter-naw-shi-nul) n. cashmere firm, established in the 1870s by Bradford mill owner Joseph Dawson. It grew to be a multi-product company, including Scottish manufacturers such as Ballantyne, Pringle and Barrie. It purchased Pringle of Scotland in 1967, initially seeing boom years for Scottish knitwear. However, the movement of senior management out of Hawick was extremely unpopular in the Town, and blamed for the inability of the firm to cope with foreign competition. Pringle's was sold in 2000, although Dawson held on to Barrie's. At one point it employed more than 3,000 people. The original Joseph Dawson business was sold in 2004. By 2012 down-sizing had led to the firm's finances being dominated by pension liabilities and it went into administration.

Dawstane Burn see Dawston Burn

Dawston Burn (daw-stin-burn) n. stream that flows into the Liddel Water at Saughtree. The general area is commonly associated with the 603 Battle of Degastan. A fortified house near here is marked as 'Dastenburn' on Gordon's c.1650 map and 'Dasten burn' on Blaeu's map of c.1654. However, there is no evidence for where exactly this may have been located. In the Liddesdale rental roll of 1541 it is 'Dawistoun' and valued at 20 shillings, with James Crozier as tenant. 'Dastoun burne' is listed among lands once held by Jedburgh Abbey. In 1632 the farm is listed among lands owned by Scott of Buccleuch and also the lands possessed by Hab Henderson. In 1694 Alexander Armstrong was tenant and Robert Armstrong was also residing there. The farm was combined with Cliffhope, on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch. Together they covered 2218 acres and were bounded by Singdean, Hudshouse, Saughtree, Stitchelhill and 'Leys'. There were 19 huts housing railway workers there on the 1861 census (formerly 'Dawstane' etc., it is 'Dastounburne' in 1632 and 'Dastonburne' in 1694; the farm of 'Dastonburne' is on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and 'Dawstane' is marked on Stobie's 1770 map; the name may derive from the Old English æt Dægsan stan', meaning 'at the stone of Dægsa', identifying it as the site of the Battle of Degastan, occurring as 'æt Egesanstane' or æt Dægstane' in Bede about 730 C.E.; it should be stressed that this is little more than a supposition).

Dawstonburn Abbey (daw-stin-burn-aw-bee) n. abbey or chapel suggested by several writers to have existed near the former Dawstonburn railway viaduct. This idea perhaps grew from the discovery of stone crosses near there, one in 1850 and another about 30 years later, these probably being boundary markers. Both were donated to Hawick Museum, and one of them may be the head use for the reconstruction of the Hawick Mercat Cross. There is no physical evidence that there was a reigious building here. However, the property did originally belong to Jedburgh Abbey, which explains the names Abbey Sike, Abbey Knowe and Abbey Park recorded nearby; it is possible that the abbey had a grange here. About a mile above the Dawstonburn Viaduct, on the left bank, are the remains of what is probably a farmstead.

Dawstonburn Brig (daw-stin-burn-brig) n. bridge over the Dawston Burn in upper Liddesdale. It is where the B6357 crosses the stream, north of Saughtree. It is shown on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map.

Dawstonburn Grain (daw-stin-burn-grān) n. name given in 1841 for the cottage at Saughtree Grain.

Dawston Rig (daw-stin-rig) n. area in Liddesdale, about 11 miles south west of Hawick, near the B6357, on the Dawston Burn. It is suggested to have been the site of the Battle of Degastan in 603. It may also be associated with 'Dalstanys', recorded on a rental roll of Liddesdale c.1376 (also written 'Rigg'; the name is possibly a corrupted form of 'Degastan'; a house there is marked 'Dastenrigg' on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Dawstontoon (daw-stin-toon) n. Dawstontown, farm in upper Liddesdale. Alexander and William Armstrong were there in 1699.

dawtie (daw'-ee, daw-tee) n., arch. a little darling.

Dax (dawks) n. Agnes (17th C.) resident at Blackleemouth according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It seems likely that her surname was an error for some more familiar name.

day aboot see sei day aboot wi

Dayholm (dā-hōm) n. place near Kershope, once an important meeting on the Border, and said to be the spot where the Day of Truce was held in 1596, when the English captured Kinmont Willie Armstrong. It is situated in a bend in the Kershope Burn, where Damming Beck joins it from the north (also known as 'the Dyholm of Kershop'; it is probably the 'Darholme' marked on Blaeu's c.1654 map on the English side opposite Ragarth; it is 'Dayholme' in 1551).

Daykins (dā-kinz) n. James (b.1810/1) from Jedburgh, he was a frameworker in Hawick. In 1851 and 1861 he was living at 3 O'Connell Street, and was a widower by 1861. He married Margaret Tait and their children included Elizabeth, William, Anne, Thomas, John Bell, Helen and Matilda. John (b.1811/2) from Jedburgh, he was a stockingmaker in Appletreehall in 1861. His wife was Ann (from Lanark) and their children included John. John (1853/4–1924) father of John Brunton. He was born at Appletreehall and employed by the Ushers as a farm steward at Orchard and Sunnyside. He moved to farm at Howden, near Jedburgh about 1888. He married Bessie Brunton, who died in 1936, aged 82. Their sons were: John Brunton (1883–1933); Samuel S. (1884/5–1940) farmer at Ulston; and James (1885/6–1914). The family are buried at Castlewood Cemetery, Jedburgh. John Brunton, V.C. (1883–1933) born at Dodlands Cottage on the road out to Bonchester, son of John and Bessie.

The family were associated with the Orchard and Sunnyside farms, until moving to Howden near Jedburgh when he was about 5 years old. He enlisted in the Lothian and Border Horse and served in France and Greece during early WWI. He was promoted to Lance-Sergeant, but succumbed to trench fever and was discharged after the Somme in 1916. He then re-enlisted in the Westminster Dragoons and transferred to the Yorkshire and Lancashire Regiment, where he was promoted to Corporal and Acting Sergeant. He was noted for bravery at Solosmes, where he took 25 prisoners and a machine-gun post single-handedly. He was later awarded the Victoria Cross for this action, Hawick's only association with this prestigious medal. He was also awarded the Military Medal in November 1918 and presented with the V.C. in 1919. He became an Honorary Burgess of Jedburgh, where the captured guns were mounted at the Castle until melted down during WWII. He carried on the family farm at Howden, but died in an accident with his own shotgun. He never married. He is buried in Jedburgh and his medals were presented to the Regimental Museum. He was recognised in Hawick in 1982, when Daykins Drive was named after him. A commemorative paving stone was unveiled in Jedburgh in 2018. William (b.1835/6) son of James, he was a frameworker in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 3 Tannage Close. His wife was Janet and their children included Margaret and Wilhelmina. In 1867 he donated to the Museum a 'finely preserved silver coin of Charles I, found at Hawick Moat'.

Daykins Drive (dā-kinz-drīv) n. street built off Weensland Road in front of the Mansfield House Hotel in 1982. It was named after WWI hero John Daykins.

daylicht (dā-licht) n., arch. daylight – '... An' mony a ane at gray daylichte Did to the scule resorte' [WiSp], 'And the auld Moat, ... Waitin for daylicht and her dancin Callants ...' [DH].

Day Sike (dā-sīk) n. stream joining the Hermitage Water between Hermitage Castle and Braidlie. There are the remains of a small building on the east side and remains of a farmstead on the west side. An old boundary dyke crosses from here to Lady's Sike on the east.

dazy (dā-zee) adj., arch. dozy, stupefied – '... and in simulated anger burst out with – 'Ye dazy deevil, whats keepit ye; theyre oot o' a' patience waiting; gie'st here, and gae way for the rest' [WNK], uncomfortably cold or raw – 'Daisie, Daizie, applied to the weather; as 'a daisie day', a cold raw day, without sunshine; Roxb., Dumfr.' [JoJ] (also written 'daisie' and 'daizie'; cf. deazy).

de' see deh

deacon (dee-kin, dee'-n) n. a master, chairman or quarter-master in a guild, sometimes also called a 'deacon of trade'. There were formerly 2 of these selected annually for each of Hawick's 5 (later 7) incorporated trades, and they also sat on the old Town Council – 'Haveing conveined the toune counsell and old and young late baylyeas ... togidder with the deacons and quartermasters of the haill trades' [BR1703]. It appears that in some of Hawick's Trades there may have been a Deacon Convener, serving as effectively the President, together with 2 quarter-masters. Unlike the Magistrates, who were always thereafter called 'Bailie', the title of 'Deacon' lapsed once the person retired from office, according to the old lines 'Bailie aince, Bailie aye, Deacon aince, Deacon die' [T], '... the haill hamermen within the said brough and friedome therof convein and meitt together at ilk tyme they shall be required be the dicones or quartermasters of the sayd craft ...' [BR1686] (note the occasional pronunciation with the second vowel sound swallowed).

deacon (dee-kin, dee'-n) n. a Protestant layman who assits the minister, in Presbyterian churches ranking below the minister and elders.

Deacon Convener (dee-kin-kon-vee-nur) n. title for the senior of the 2 deacons (or quartermasters) of a Trade, or for the President of the Trade, with the other office-bearers called quarter-masters. It may be that different incorporations have different numbers of and titles for their ofice-bearers. In Hawick he served as a member of the Town Council in the 18th century. The annual election was the highlight of the calendar of each Trade, being a grand social occasion.

Deacon Dandy (dee-kin-dawn-dee) n. Hawick character of the mid-19th century, presumably someone named Andrew who was possibly Deacon of one of the local churches – 'Deacon Dandy, man but ee'r handy – Yer wit never seems tae desert ye, For ee soon got relief wi' 'Bet the Gaird's' beef, Deacon Dandy' [T].

Deacon Dryden (dee-kin-drI-din) n. nickname for James Dryden.

Deadhaugh see Deedhaugh

Deaf Shepherd (def-she-purd) n. Edinburgh-based folk group who recorded a version of 'Pawkie Paiterson' on their second album 'Synergy' (1997).

deal (deel) n. a plank or board cut to a standard size – 'Keep as near tae th' Land as ye can, for mind there's naething but a fir deal atween us an' eternity' [JTu] (cf. the older dail).

dean (deen) n. a dale, especially the deep, wooded valley of a small river, glen – 'She lookit hiche to the bodynge hille, And laighe to the darklynge deane . . . ' [JTe], '. . . telld the coorse o bonnie Teviot, wumplin bye paster an pairk an bussy dean' [ECS] (it is 'dene' in English; the word is more common in place names than in modern speech, e.g. Bellendean, Deanbrae, Deanburnhaugh, Denholm Dean, Hassendean, Kirndean, Littledean, Singdean, Timpendean and Wilton Dean).

Dean (deen) n. Robert (13th/14th C.) Parson of Wilton Church, who was one of the signatories of the Ragman Rolls in 1296 (i.e. he was among the list of Scottish nobility and clergy who swore fealty to Edward I at Berwick). His name is recorded as 'Robert de Dene persone del Eglise de Wilton'. It is possibly that the 'Dene' refers to Wilton Dean, but there are many other possibilities. Note that his name has also been transcribed 'Done'. He is the earliest clergyman of Wilton of whom we have any record.

the Dean (thu-deen) n. familiar name for Wulton Dean – 'We'll soon gang by the Dean, my lass, And I'll hold your hand in mine, The flo'ers and trees will be in bloom, As in days o' auld lang syne' [WFC].

Deanbrae (deen-brā) n. farm on the A6088 (Bonchester road) between Cauldmill and Kirkton. It was formerly the site of one of the tollbars for the main road south via the Carter Bar. At the junction with the main road is the war memorial for Cavers and Kirkton Parishes, unveiled by Archibald Palmer Douglas in 1920. It seems likely that this was the home of William Douglas 'of Denbray', who was listed in 1488/9 among those Roxburghshire men given remission for their support of the former King, James III. John 'Long' (probably 'Young') 'in Denbray' is also listed in the same remission. The same William Douglas 'in denebraa' is recorded in 1494/5, as well as John Young, 'scissor' (probably carver) there. James Douglas 'called of Deynebray' is recorded in 1592, and may have been brother of the Laird of Cavers. James Laidlaw and John Aitchison were there in 1716, George Robertson in 1722, Thomas Thomson in 1726, Adam Hart and Walter Nichol in 1733, and John Flemington in 1738. The land was once part of Gladstains estate, which bordered on Cavers, but was sold to the Douglases of Cavers by Archibald Crombie of Gladstaines in 1744. James Davidson was there in 1686. Walter Turnbull and Walter Laidlaw were listed there in 1694. The main house here was the residence of Archibald Douglas of Cavers in the 18th century. John Thomson was farmer there in 1797, while Adam and James Scott were servants in 1799 and William Wilson in 1801. George Turnbull was farmer in 1841 and Henry Ballantyne in the 1860s. Adam Oliver was there in the early 1900s. The 1811 Land Tax Rolls for Cavers Parish state that these lands were included 'in Valuation of Ormiston (in name of Thomas Currer)', but later sold to the Douglases of Cavers and valued at about £95. There was also once a tollbar here (it is 'Deynebray' in 1592 and 'Deanbrea' in 1686; the origin of the name is surely 'dean' plus 'brae', even although it really has neither of these features).

Deanbrae Mill (deen-brā-mil) n. former knitwear factory on Weensland Road.

Deanbrae Toll (deen-brā-tōl) n. toll-house at Deanbrae in the 19th century, part of the main road from Hawick to the Carter Bar. This is problem the 'Deanbraebarr' where joiner Adam Smail and weaver James Scott were recorded in 1801. Jessie Cairns was the toll-keeper in 1861.

the Dean Burn (thu-deen-burn) n. stream that joins the Borthwick from the north-west at Deanburnhaugh. One of the streams in the headwaters appears to have formed part of the Catrail, with the section coming up from Girnwood stopping just near the stream.

Deanburn (deen-burn) n. lands listed as 'Deneburne' as part of the estate of Stobs when purchased by Gilbert Eliott from his half sisters in about 1608. 'Denecraig' was also listed, and it seems likely these lands were associated with Dean Craig near Cogsmill, rather than connected with the Dean Burn near Denholm.

the Dean Burn (thu-deen-burn) n. stream that joins the Teviot at Denholm. It rises on Hawthornside Hill and runs roughly northwards, being joined by Hallrule Burn and Hawk Burn before flowing through Denholm Dean. A footbridge was built across it in 1780.

the Dean Burn (thu-deen-burn) n. name probably most often used for the Cala Burn, which runs through Wilton Dean. There are many other streams with the same name, e.g. one near Hawthornside and the one in Denholm – '. . . He would give the great Pacific for the Dean Burn's waterfall' [GHB].

Deanburn Cottage (deen-burn-ko'-eej) n. cottage in Denholm, to the south of Westgate Hall. It may also have been referred to as 'Deneburn'.

Deanburnhaugh (deen-burn-haf) n. hamlet where the Dean Burn meets the Borthwick Water, once a thriving community, which now consists of only a few houses. It was referred to locally as 'the Haugh'. The road running through the old village was part of the main drove road between the Scottish Midlands and the North of England, passing from Groundistone around the west of Hawick to the upper Borthwick valley and Eskdalemuir. Near the bridge can still be seen parallel dykes from the droving days. The area was part of Wilton Parish until Roberton was formed in 1689/90. A list of residents of Roberton parish and their distances from the nearest church, compiled in 1658, shows 30 people residing at here and Hoscote together. John Scott was recorded there in 1722, John Laidlaw in 1743, John Hislop in 1769–72 and George Turnbull in the 1770s. John Cavers was recorded as owner of a horse there in 1797. Thomas Scott was recorded there in 1800. George Scott was a joiner and merchant there in the early 1800s and James Gledstains was a labourer there in 1812. It had over 100 residents at its peak in the early 19th century and in the 1851 census there are 58 people listed as residents, when there were more than 20 houses. Part of the lands there were owned by Douglas of Cavers and sold off in the period 1875–1924. Part of the old village can be seen in a photograph from the mid-19th century. There was once a pub, grocers, joiners, cobblers and a post office. The joiners shop of Matt Rodger operated well into the 20th century. Part of a quern found here is in the Museum (it is 'Deansburnhaugh' in 1797).

Deanburnhaugh (deen-burn-haf) n. land around the Dean Burn, south of Denholm. It was covered in several feet of sand following a flood in 1846. The land was owned by Douglas of Cavers, and sold off in the late 19th and early 20th centuries.

Deanburn Hoose (deen-burn-ko'-eej) n. house in Denholm, to the south of Westgate Hall, also known as Deanburn Cottage.

Dean Burn Raw see Burn Raw

Dean Craig (deen-criāg) n. rocky ridge overlooking the Cogsmill Burn, just to the left of the B6399 after Cogsmill. There are the remains of a settlement there, containing at least 4 platforms of timber houses. This is probably the land of 'Denecraig' listed as part of the estate of Stobs when purchased by Gilbert Eliott from his half sisters in about 1608.

Dean craw (deen-craw) n., ins. mildly derogatory name for a person from the Dean, particularly a child – 'They're dirty craws that dwall i' the Dean, The coorsest craws that ever war seen' [DH], '. . . now daein' residential qualification to become an adopted 'Dean Craw' ' [IWL] (perhaps referring to the crows there).

Deanfield Court (deen-feeld-kōr') n. sheltered housing complex built on the grounds of Deanfield House in 1973 with an extension in 1987. Princess Margaret visited the facility in 1974.

Deanfield Home (deen-feeld-hōm) n. Residential Home and Day Centre based on the site of Deanfield House in 1987. The building has colourful elevations and a wrought-iron spire. It is formally known as Deanfield Residential Care Home.

Deanfield Hoose (deen-feeld-hoos) n. house on Roadhead, formerly the home of Charles John Wilson of Wilson & Glenny's. Although there were plans for a mansion here from 1850, the house was finally built in about 1879 for Charles Wilson, designed by John Guthrie. The name seems likely to have come from Deanfield in Perthshire, which was where Margaret Watson (2nd wife of George Wilson) lived. The house was demolished in 1973 to make way for an old-folks home. The site was redeveloped in 1987 as a sheltered housing complex and day centre. Additional social housing, comprising 16 new flats were constructed there in 2017.

Deanfield Lodge (deen-feeld-loj) n. lodge house for Deanfield, probably built around the same time as the main mansion. It was also demolished in the 1970s and stood roughly where the small car park is situated.

Deanfit (deen-fi') n. Deanfoot, farm and lands in Minto Parish, directly between the village and the Teviot. Along with Craigend they were sold by John Turnbull of Minto to Gilbert Elliot of Craigend in the mid-17th century. In 1643 they were valued along with Craigend at £600. When inherited by Gilbert Eliott, son of Archibald, in 1683, they were a 50-shilling land of new extent, and came with rights to pasturage on Minto Common. In 1779 the liferent of these lands was disponed by Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto to Robert Trotter of Bush, as part of a plan to add Whig supporters to the Roxburghshire voters' roll. The lands explicitly included 'the haugh called the Common-haugh, mains, and Long-haugh parks, Minto-bank, Yethope park, the six parks or inclosures called the Bankhead parks, and four parks or inclosures called the Old-glebe parks'. The boundary was formed by the Minto-to-Hawick road, Hassendeanbank, Denholm Haugh, the Teviot, the Minto-to-Jedburgh road. In about 1788 the lands were described as 'Lillilaw park', 'Squarehaugh park', 'Lake's-haugh', 'Main's-haugh', 'Longhugh', 11 'Bank-end parks', 'Nutbank', 'Hutcher's river-side' and 'House and yeard', valued together at £433 17s 10d. John Wilson was farmer there in at least 1797–1801, Robert Melrose in 1799, James Brodie in 1851 and James Amos in the 1860s. There was once a mill there (perhaps the same as 'Minto Mill'), with a mill dam just to the north-west of the farm. The road running past the farm is called Deanfoot Bank, from where a track leads to Spittal Ford. Near this track there are signs of rig and furrow cultivation (it is 'Deanfute' in 1683).

Deanfit (deen-fi') n. Deanfoot, former name for a farmstead in Cavers Parish, presumably at the foot of Denholm Dean. William Moffat was living there in 1777.

Deanfit (deen-fi') n. Deanfoot, former name for lands that were probably somewhere in the Borthwick valley. The lands were among those inherited by Gideon Scott of Highchester in 1694.

Deanfit Mill (deen-fi'-mil) n. former mill at the corner of Victoria Road and Roadhead, being part of Howlands Mills, with its distinctive square tower. The mill at the western end of Victoria Road was originally called 'Howlands Mill', but changed to 'Dean Mill' in the 1913. The whole was incorporated into Victoria Mills just before WWII, while the name 'Deanfit' continued to be used for the part at the foot of Roadhead. Despite some efforts to have the tower incorporated into the design of the new hospital, it was all demolished in 2004.

Deanheid (deen-heed) n. former farm on the Cavers estate, between East Middle and Denholm Hill, and near the head of Denholm Dean. Walter Turnbull was there in 1717, James Telfer in 1722, Thomas Turnbull in 1736–37 and Archibald Learmonth in 1737. In a field to the south-west are signs of an old enclosure of some sort.

Deanheids (deen-heeds) n. former name for lands that were part of Whitehaugh estate. In 1580 these lands of 'Deneheids' were among those in the Barony of Wilton set to William Scott of Whitehaugh by Walter Scott of Headshaw. In 1698 William Scott of Whitehaugh had a sasine for 'Deanhead' as well as other lands in Wilton Parish, as heir to his father Walter.

Dean Mill (deen-mil) n. former name for a corn mill on the Cala Burn in the Langlands estate. The precise location is unknown, so it is unclear if it was in the same place as the later spinning mill (but that seems likely). The area is recorded in 1650 when there were 18 'communicants' there, namely Robert Langlands, Margaret 'Per', George Langlands, Adam Langlands, Margaret Langlands, John Mitchell, John Ross, Patrick Hardie, Robert Turnbull, James Pearson, Marion Scott, Bessie Riddell, Isobel Little, Margaret Scott, Janet 'Morling', William Scott, Janet Scott and Margaret Scott; at that time it seems that the name was probably synonymous with Dean village. In the 1694 Hearth Tax records the area is listed as having a tenant, 2 cottars, a shepherd and a resident in the boathouse, as well as the house of Langlands of that Ilk. Adam Wright was recorded there in 1729 (it was 'Deanemilne' in 1650, 'Dean milne' in 1694 and 'Deanmiln' in 1729; it was marked 'Denmill' on Blaeu's 1654 map).

the Dean Mill (thu-deen-mil) n. the Dean Spinning Mill, the only real industry to develop in the area of Wilton Dean. It was situated on the Cala Burn, with proprietor John Scott in the early part of the 19th century. William and Oliver Thomas were listed there in Pigot's 1837 directory, manufacturing both woollens and hosiery. The buildings were demolished by the Laird of Langlands in 1860. In its last few years it was used as a store-house, and also held an illicit whisky still. The mill pond was filled in to provide a drying green and play area for the tenants. The 'Deanfit Mill' was also sometimes known as 'Dean Mill'. In the 17th century there was a 'Deanmilne' on Langlands estate, probably a corn mill situated on the Cala Burn.

Dean Mills (deen-milz) n. later name for Howlands Mill, at the western end of Victoria Road, and also known as the 'Deanfit Mill'. It was built by Greenwood, Watt & Co. in the 1880s, with the design by John Manuel. In 1911 it was sold to Sime, Williamson & Co., and by 1913 the name was changed from 'Howlands Mill' to 'Dean Mills. In the late 1930s it was sold to Innes, Hendesron & Co., and incorporated into their Victoria Mills. Empty through the 1990s, it was demolished in 2004 to make way for the new hospital.

Dean o Guild (deen-ō-gild) n. magistrate in a Scottish Burgh appointed onto the town guilds to resolve trading disputes. By about the mid-19th century the main duty was to supervise the erection of new buildings to ensure they conformed to the law. It was then synonymous with the Master of Works. Hawick's Dean of Guild was originally a public official appointed by the Council. Sometime in the later 19th century it became a position taken by one of the elected councillors, with the responsibility of dealing with building plans. James Turnbull held the position before his death in 1797. The position was done away with before Reorganisation, with the last perhaps being 'Bull' Finlayson.

Dean Road (deen-rōd) n. road that is the continuation of Sunnyhill Road, named after Wilton Dean. It was once part of the main road to the Borthwick.

Deans (deenz) n. Agnete (16th C.) listed in 1552 among the people owed money in the last testament of William Scott, younger of Branxholme. It is unclear whether 'Agnete' was a first name, or whether it referred to a relative on the father's side. Allan (15th/16th C.) appointed as special Sheriff of Roxburghshire in order to administer the sasine for the Barony of Hawick for Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1511/2. His name was recorded as 'Alanus Denis' and sasine was given at the Mote. He is probably the 'Alano Denys sergiando' who witnessed the 1514 sasine of the barony of Hawick for James Douglas of Drumlanrig; he was thus an official of some sort, perhaps even Burgh Officer, but more likely an official of the Sheriff. Allan (16th C.) possibly related to the other early Deans. He was one of 4 Hawick 'indwellers' named in a court case (recorded in the register of the Privy Council) in Leith in 1571/2, and again in 1572/3 and 1574. They had to swear allegiance to the Crown, suggesting that they had been supporters of the Kerrs of Ferniehirst, and perhaps involved in Borders raids. His name is there recorded as 'Allane Denys' and Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig acted as their cautioner in 1572/3. Possibly the same 'Allane Dennes' of Hawick is mentioned in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch Scott of Buccleuch in 1574. Probably the same Allan was witness to a sasine in Hawick in 1579, when Robert Johnstone sold a tenement to David, brother of Walter Scott in Chamberlain Newton. Also in 1579 he was involved in an agreement made in Selkirk with Walter Turnbull of Rawflat, in which Turnbull made arrangements for how to pay him back for the £80 borrowed from him. In 1582 he was recorded as Burgess of Hawick when he was warned by Alexander Weens to appear at Hawick Kirk to receive redemption money for an annual rent on lands in Hawick and also Weens Croft; this agreement was made at his house in Hawick and recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books. He may also be the same 'Allane Deins' who witnessed a bond of 1594/5; this was drawn up by James Gledstains of Cocklaw to prevent fighting between local Turnbulls and Elliots and was signed along with Robert Langlands of that Ilk and William Scott if Allanhaugh, suggesting that he was a man of some importance in the Town. Allan (17th C.) resident of Hawick who in 1621 was acquitted by the Privy Council along with 2 others of regularly carrying a pistol in public and shooting his neighbours' doves and fowl. His name is given as 'Allan Deanes callit the millair in Hawik' (so it is unclear if he was actually a miller or not). The other men were smith Robert Armstrong and 'Geordie's Hobie' Scott. He may have been a descendant of 'Johne Deanis'. He was also on a list of men suggested by the Hawick Bailie as fit to be sent to the war in Germany in 1627. However, when produced by the Bailie before the Privy Council he was charged 300 merks caution for appearing again if required, and dismissed; presumably he was therefore not sent to the wars. His caution money was paid by George Deans, servitor to Robert Burnet, advocate, who seems likely to have been a relative living in Edinburgh. He may be the Alan in Hawick who was accused by the Earl of Buccleuch in 1628 of cutting down trees on his lands at Branxholme or Trinitylands. Probably the same Allan was still a local miller in 1641 when his servant Margaret Ainslie is recorded having confessed to stealing money from him. He may be the Allan who (along with Robert) witnessed a baptism for James Tudhope in 1639. Allan (17th C.) grandson and heir of Robert, who was a Burgess of Hawick. In 1622 he had a sasine for a piece of waste land adjacent to the Slitrig in the middle of Hawick, which had belonged to his grandfather. He could be the same as one of the nearly contemporary Allans. Perhaps the same Allan, Burgess of Hawick, was recorded in a deed with skinner Andrew in 1663. Allan (17th C.) Hawick resident who was married to Janet Scott. Their children included: Walter (b.1636). Allan (17th C.) Hawick resident who was married to Agnes Gledstains. Their son Allan was born in 1648. Allan (17th C.) 'traveller' of Hawick who was accused of not being at the 'riding an meithing of the Common, upon the 24th of May, 1645', but was let off since he was at the Watch

Knowe. However, he was warned not to do the same again in future, otherwise he would have double the punishment. It is unclear if 'traveller' meant a peddlar or something like a commercial traveller. Andrew (17th C.) named on a list of 'idle and masterless men' suggested by the Hawick Bailie to the Privy Council as suitable for sending to the wars in Germany in 1627. When produced before the Privy Council by the Bailie he was one of the men who were found 'not fit for the wars' and dismissed. Andrew (17th C.) skinner, who was recorded in a Hawick Magistrates Court case of 1642, when he was forced to pay debts and expenses to Walter Robson. Probably the same skinner was recorded in a bond with Allan in 1663. Andrew (17th C.) Hawick resident who was married to Margaret Oliver. Their children include: John (b.1641); George (b.1643); Malie (b.1647); Thomas (b.1650); and Robert (b.1650). Andrew (17th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who married Margaret Nichol in Bedrule Parish in 1692. Their children included: Thomas (b.1696); and Robert (b.1701). He could be the Andrew who witnessed a Hassendean baptism for Walter Sanderson in 1683 and another for Francis Scott in 1687. Andrew (20th C.) from Galashiels, where he owned a grocer's shop. He moved to Hawick before WWII, where he was also a grocer. He later purchased the Victoria Hotel, which he ran until the 1960s, later leasing it to Drybrough & Co. Colin (1955–) Hawick-born rugby player in the Hooker position. His debut was in 1973 and he went on to make 316 appearances, including serving as Captain. He first played for Scotland in 1978 and gained 52 caps, being part of the 1984 grand-slam winning side. He also played for the British Lions and was awarded the M.B.E. for services to rugby in 1988. He managed a window firm and published an autobiography, 'So you're a hooker then' (1987). He later moved to Oundle in Northamptonshire. He married Katie and had children Henry and Charlie. D.D. (19th/20th C.) first Secretary of Wilton Bowling Club. Edward (17th C.) witnessed a baptism for Francis Paterson in Hawick in 1687. He was listed as 'student', but it is unclear what that meant. Francis (1769/70–1851) butcher of the High Street, recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories and Slater's 1852 directory. He was at about 5 High Street in 1841. In 1816 he (and baker William Duncan) were found accused of 'falsehood, fraud, and wilful imposition, as also of contriving and executing wicked projects, and deceitful and false machinations, and also of forgery', and found guilty of some of these charges. He firstly married Helen (Nelly) Wilson in 1799, and secondly Margaret Turnbull. His children were: George (d.1800), whose death is recorded in Hawick; Wilson (b.1801); George (b.c.1807), also a butcher and farmer; an unnamed child (d.1809); Robert (b.1815), butcher and farmer with his brother; and Agnes (b.1816), unmarried, who lived with her brothers. His sister-in-law Jean Wilson died in Hawick in 1800. He may also be the Francis whose illegitimate child with Margaret Duncan died in Hawick in 1816. Francis (1831–1900) son of Robert. He succeeded his father as Hawick Postmaster, but only held the position briefly. He was recorded as 'Mr Francis Deans P.O.' when listed as 24th member of the Archæological Society in 1856 and when he donated 2 coins to the Museum. He was postmaster in Paisley from the mid-1860s. He could be the 'Sergt. F. Deans' who is listed as best shot in the Hawick Corps of Rifle Volunteers in 1863. In Gala in 1857 he married Catherine Gowans (1838–1928) from East Linton, Prestonkirk, East Lothian; she was heavily involved in the Primrose League of Scotland. They had at least 11 children, the first 4 of which were born in Hawick: Joanna Frances (1858–1925), who married chemist Gustav K. Hohbach; Robert Rutherford (1860–1922), who married twice; Ellen Rutherford (b.1861), who died unmarried in Edinburgh; Capt. James Gowans (1863–1930), who became a vet and moved to County Durham; George Henry (b.1870); Catherine Gowans (1871–1927), who married Maj. Joseph Robert Crone; Francis William (1875–1955); and Nora (1879–1969). G. (17th C.) recorded as Bailie when the 1640 'Act of Bailies and Council' was signed. This may be an error (in 'Annals of Hawick') for 'R.', since Robert Deans was replaced as Bailie a few months later, when he was convalescing from illness. George (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1617 when he was served heir to his father John, Burgess of Hawick. George (17th C.) recorded in the 1643 valuation of Roxburghshire when his lands in Hawick were valued at £19 10s. As a landowner, he was presumably a prominent citizen in the Town at that time and was surely related to Bailies of this family. George (17th C.) Hawick resident whose daughter Janet was born in 1646. George (17th C.) Hawick resident. In 1685 he defied the Bailies, refusing to take a message for Graham of Claverhouse to Galashiels to act against the Covenanters. He was also charged with using irreverent language to the Bailie, 'menacing him with ane great stone in his hand' and refusing to go to the Tolbooth when instructed. He is probably the George who married Agnes Scott and whose children baptised in Hawick were: Janet (b.1673); Robert (b.1675); George (b.1678); Walter (b.1680); Agnes (b.1682); and Margaret (b.1687). The witnesses in 1673 were James (presumably related) and Mr. Walter Gledstains and in 1680 were 'students' Charles and Walter Scott (perhaps related to his wife). He may be the flesher of that name on the 1673 list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude's Fair. George (17th C.) possibly son of Robert and Susanna Scott. He was married to Agnes Scott and their children include: Janet (b.1673); Robert (b.1675); George (b.1678); Walter (b.1680); Agnes (b.1682); and Margaret (b.1687). George (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. George (17th C.) skinner who is listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Probably the same George is listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. He is likely the same as one of the other Georges. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick recorded in the Town Book of 1703, when he and 2 other men were ordered to 'pay into Baylyea Mertine sex pound per piece, ... for payt. of the officers, pyper, and drumers coats att the Common rydeing in annon 1702'. This is presumably either the burgess money that he owed, or it was a fine of some sort. He may be the same as one of the other Georges. George (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He was Cornet in 1707, being the first Cornet to carry the new Flag. This is the Flag containing the date '1707', which is the oldest existing specimen. In 1712 he married Jean Purdom (also from the Town of Hawick) and she secondly married William Oliver in 1720, so he was presumably deceased by then. He was probably father of Christian (b.1714), who was baptised in Hawick Parish. George (17th/18th C.) married Janet Cuthbertson in Bedrule Parish in 1717. George (1708–85) flesher in Hawick, son of Robert and Janet Cook. He is probably the 'George Deans and Son' whose 3 houses near the Auld Brig were carried off by the flood of 1767; after the bridge was repaired he was given permission 'to rebuild their houses upon the said walls of the said bridge'. He is probably the George who witnessed baptisms for mason Andrew Turnull and Agnes Deans (likely his daughter) in 1765 and 1767. He was 'Senr' when he witnessed a baptism for his son George in 1778. He married Isabel Oliver in 1730, and she died in 1796. Their children included: Robert (b.1731); George (b.1732); Agnes (b.1735); William (b.1737); James (b.1740), who died young; James (b.1742); and Janet (b.1747). The witnesses in 1732 were William Elliot and John Elliot and in 1742 were William Oliver ('junior merchant') and merchant John Ruecastle. George (1731–1816) flesher in Hawick, son of George and Isabel Oliver. His death at the age of 85 is reported in the Scots Magazine. He was said to have been present at the market in Edinburgh during the rebellion of 1745, and was also reputed to be able to walk from Edinburgh to Hawick in 7 hours. His death record in Hawick clearly states that he was son of the deceased flesher George. He was 'Junior Flesher' in 1759 when one of his children was baptised. He is probably the George 'junior' who witnessed a baptism in 1765 for shoemaker Robert Oliver. He was still recorded as 'Junr Flesher' in 1778. He also witnessed a baptism for William Jackson in 1793. In 1758 in Wilton Parish he married Janet Allan (1739–1811), who died in Hawick. Their children included: Janet (b.1759), who married John Goodfellow; Isabel (b.1760); George (b.1764), shoemaker; Margaret (b.1767); Agnes (b.1773); Robert (b.1777); and Agnes again (b.1778). In the 1764 baptismal record he was a farmer. The witnesses in 1759 were the whole congregation, in 1777 were Andrew Turnbull and Robert Aitken and in 1779 were George 'Senr' (his father) and William Purdom. He was witness to a couple of the baptisms of children of his daughter Janet. George (1764–1827) according to a family tree he was master shoemaker in Hawick and son of flesher George. In 1793 he married Janet, daughter of Archibald Douglas and Janet Kedie. Their children included: Janet (b.1792); and Betty (1793) and possibly Robert. He was probably the shoemaker George whose son George died in Hawick in 1795. He may be the George, shoemaker in Hawick, who subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). George (b.1806/7) son of butcher Francis. He took over from his father, moving from about 5 High Street to 8 Allars Crescent. He lived there with his brother Robert and sister Agnes. He also farmed at High Tofts in Kirkton Parish. Late in life, in 1866, he married Marion Nichol, from Tundergarth. Their children were: Francis (b.1866), who died young; Wilhelmina Nichol (b.1868); Margaret Turnbull

(b.1870); Marion Jean Nichol (b.1875); and Francis (d.1850), who emigrated to the U.S.A., and died at Arminto, Wyoming. George (1833/4–98) son of printer Robert. He trained as a clerk and in 1861 was working as a cashier in a woollen factory. He was a clerk in 1860 when he donated a coin of Charles II to the Museum. He is probably the George listed as postmaster in Hawick in 1868. In 1876 he was at 'Post-Office' when he donated to the Museum a 'native tobacco pipe from British Columbia'. However, he later moved to Australia. Gideon (b.1819/20) son of Robert, he was also a joiner in Minto Parish, based at Horsleyhill. In 1861 he was living with his mother Margaret, sisters Janet and Agnes, nephew Robert Graham and niece Margaret. In 1867 he donated to the Hawick Museum an 'ancient pair of scallopers, the frame of the baptismal font used in the East-end Meeting House [suggesting he was a member of that church], and two stone whirls for hand spindles'. He is probably the 'Ged Deans, clerk' who donated 2 old coins to the Museum in 1860. He may be the Gideon who married Jane Dryden in Wilton Parish in 1861. Helen (17th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1641. Isobel Morlaw was ordered to pay money that she owed as her fee for a period in the previous year, 'but assoilzied fra her hois and schone' (i.e. stockings and shoes).i Presumably she was a servant of Morlaw's. Isabel (18th C.) chambermaid at Branxholme in 1785 and 1786, when she was working for Adam Ogilvie James (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish who married Isobel Henderson. Their son Thomas was born in 1679. He witnessed a baptism for James Sanderson in 1681. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish who was married to Margaret Rule (or 'Rowll'). Their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1694, with witnesses Robert and Andrew Mark (who lived at Burnfoot on Ale). James (17th C.) shepherd at Wester Groundistone according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. James (17th C.) tenant in Burnfoot according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. James (d.1705) joiner in Wilton Parish. He was buried in Wilton Old Churchyard. His gravestone was partly illegible, but the opposite side described the burial of Walter Deans, late tenant of Howahill (and his family), who were therefore surely related. Bailie James (17th/18th C.) recorded as a Bailie in 1678 and 1685, 'late Baylyea' in 1685 and Bailie again in 1692 and 1694. He was 'late baylyea' in 1688 when he assisted Bailie William Scott in appointing 2 men to mark the boundaries between lands at the east end of Hawick. He is probably the James who witnessed a baptism for Walter Gledstains of Hilliesland (Town Clerk of Hawick) along with wright Walter Gledstains in 1677. He was Bailie in 1678 when he witnessed another baptism for Walter Gledstains of Hilliesland. Probably the same 'Deanes' also witnessed a baptism for Walter Gledstains of Hilliesland (along with 3 other former or present Bailies) in 1681. He witnessed baptisms for James Brydon in 1683, for William Elliot in 1685, for James Lethem in 1689, another for the Gledstains in 1694, for wright Robert Scott and for flesher Thomas Wilson in 1700, for Robert Wright and for Bailie Robert Wright in 1702, for Robert Scott 'Pope' in 1704, for carrier Walter Gledstains in 1706, for gardener Walter Paterson in 1707, for Robert Lamb in 1708, for James Beattie in 1710, for workman William Gledstains in 1712 and 1714 and for Andrew Waugh in 1714. In 1713 he was one of the men selected to identify the boundaries around the Common Haugh after a complaint by the Laird of Langlands. He was still alive in 1715. He is probably the James who served as Procurator Fiscal in Hawick in the 1670s. He was 'present baylyea' on the list of subscribers for the Kirk bell (although it is unclear if this was 1693 or 1694). He was probably the 'Bailyea Deans' listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. In 1697 he was one of 4 men who protested against the continuing of Robert Ruecastle as Bailie, through there being a vacancy and on account of an agreement made with the Commissioners of the Duchess of Buccleuch, until a new election for Bailie was held. He appears to have still been Bailie during the 1710s. He was probably son or brother of Robert, since he was involved in a dispute in 1715 over the right to sit in the pew allocated to Robert in 1683, and for which he gave Robert half a boll of barley. Probably the same Bailie James witnessed baptism for William Henderson in Newbigging in 1717, for Andrew Waugh, tenant in Hawick, in 1719, and for merchant James Simpson in 1721. He may have been the James born to Robert and Margaret Watt in Hawick in 1644. He may be the James, married to Margaret Routledge, whose children baptised in Hawick Parish includes: Margaret (b.1670); an unnamed child (b.1674); and Gilbert (b.1675). He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for George (perhaps his brother) in 1673, and the James in 1676 who (along with John, who was surely related) witnessed a baptism for Walter Oliver and another for Walter Gledstains (the Town Clerk), as well as the James who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Scott in 1678. He was also 'balyie' when he witnessed a baptism for tailor Walter Gledstains in 1688. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who married Jean Scott in 1705. Their children included James (b.1707). James (18th C.) resident recorded at Chisholme when his children were baptised in Roberton Parish. He married Margaret Goodfellow in 1738 and their children included: Janet (b.1743); and Margaret (b.1747). James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who married Margaret Cowan in 1758. Their children included: Jean (b.1763); and Robert (b.1766). James (1768–1855) born in Roberton, 3rd son of Walter and Janet Douglas (of the Trows family). Like his father he was a cattle dealer. He lived in one of the cottages at Hobkirk Kirkstyle. He moved to Opens in Hobkirk Parish later in life (being recorded there in 1851) and lived into his 80s. In 1821 (at the age of 53) he married Margaret 'Boe' (or Bowie), who was born in Minto Parish in 1777. His only child (born when his wife was 46) was Walter, historian of the Rulewater district. He died at Kirkstyle and his wife died there 2 years later. He was said to always be seen wearing a high hat, swallow-tail coat with brass buttons, breeches and leggings. James (19th C.) married Christian Lang in Cavers Parish in 1827. James (b.1805/6) born in Roberton, he was a farm worker. In 1841 he was living at Highchesters Mill, in 1851 was at Wiltonburn Cottages and in 1861 was a shepherd (of 633 acres) at Whitfield in Wilton Parish. In 1861 he presented to the Museum 'a hawk slain in mortal combat by two hooded crows'. He may be the 'J.' who donated '4 old Scottish copper coins' to the Museum. He married Margaret Elliot and their children included: Peter (b.1830); Robert Elliot (b.1832); Margaret (b.1835); Isabella (b.1838); Janet (b.1841); and Charles Kinnear Greenhill (b.1845). Capt. James Gowans (1863–1930) son of Hawick postmaster Francis and Catherine Gowans. He trained as a vet and served with the R.A.V.C. in WWI. He was also Scottish Amateur Boxing Champion. He moved to County Durham. He married Ethel Helenora Crone, cousin of his veterinary ex-partner Maj. Joseph Robert Crone (who married his sister Catherine Gowans Deans). He had a daughter, Mary Gowans, and a son, James Robert Crone, who died young. Janet (b.1790/1) from Minto Parish, she was a dressmaker and teacher of sewing and similar subjects in Lilliesleaf. Her daughter Margaret Turnbull was also a teacher. John or 'Johne Deanis' (d.1546). His tombstone is in St. Mary's churchyard, stating 'Heir lyis ane honest man, Johne Deanis, qvha vas tenant kyndlie of Havik Miln and slan in debait of his nichtbouris geir, the zeir of God, MDXLVI' i.e. he was killed defending his neighbours goods (perhaps cattle) from raiders in 1546. Tradition suggests that he was slain near Skelfhill. The tablestone is particularly elaborate, suggesting that the townspeople paid for its erection as a tribute to his sacrifice. He may have been the same John Deans mentioned in the 1537 charter and hence great-grandfather of Robert from the early 17th century. He was surely related to other near contemporary people of the same surname within Hawick, e.g. the 'John Denys' who was a witness to the 1512 sasine where Harden was transferred from Walter Scott of Synton to his brother William. The tombstone was replaced with a replica in 1930/1, with the original in the Museum. John (16th/17th C.) holder of 2 particates of land on the north side of the public street according to the Burgh Charter of 1537. He was great-grandfather of Robert, who was served as heir to his 2 tenements (or particates) in Hawick in 1613 (and had a further charter in 1635). He owned one of these 2 tenements himself. It seems likely he was the same man as the John (d.1546) with the elaborate memorial stone in St. Mary's Kirkyard. It seems likely that he is closely related to Allan and Allan's late grandfather Robert who are recorded in 1622. John (d.c.1617) Burgess of Hawick. His son George was served as his heir in 1617. He was surely related to the other nearly contemporary Deanses. John (17th C.) Hawick resident married to Margaret Aitchison. Their children included Margaret (b.1670); George (b.1672); Isobell (b.1675); and Bessie (b.1678). He may be the John who (along with James, who was surely related) witnessed a baptism for Walter Oliver in 1676. He may be the John recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude's Fair. John (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Young in Bedrule Parish in 1706. Their children included: Janet (b.1707); George (b.1710). John (18th/19th C.) stocking-maker in Denholm. His occupation is recorded in a baptismal entry of 1796, one of the earliest mentions of that job title in Denholm. He married Mary Turnbull and their children included William (b.1796), James (b.1801), Isabel (b.1804) and Margaret (b.1808). John (19th C.) resident of Whitfield. In 1863 he donated to the Museum a 'stone celt, found in British hillfort on Borthaugh Hill'. John (b.1824/5) from Berwick, he was Head Gardener at Teviot Lodge. He was recorded living in Jedburgh in 1851 and was at 'Teviot Lodge Gardener's House' in 1861. Probably the same John was living at Mayfield Lodge in 1876 when he donated to the Museum the 'Guide to Carnoustie'. He married Christian Fairgrieve. Their children were: George A.; Robert; Christian; Isabella (b.1857); Jane (b.1860); and William (b.1864). John (b.1828/9) born in Minto Parish. He was a joiner at Riddell Cottage in Lilliesleaf Parish. His wife was Agnes and their children included Robert and Walter. John (19th C.) Director of the Hawick Working Men's Building Society and also President of the Hawick Co-op for a while. Peter (16th C.) listed among people who were owed money by William Scott, younger of Branxholme, when he died in 1552. He is recorded as 'Petro Denis'. Peter (b.1820) farm worker in Roberton Parish, he was son of Peter and Isabella Elliot. He was not baptised until 1827. In 1841 he was living at Hardenburnfoot and in 1851 was 'Game Guard' at Todshawhill. He married Agnes Elliot in 1842 and their children included: Janet Elliot (b.1843); Peter (b.1845); Henry (b.1847); Walter Elliot (b.1850); James (b.1855); and Isabella (b.1857). The last 2 children were baptised in Teviothead. Peter Young (19th C.) listed in Pigot's 1837 directory as a druggist on the High Street. Robert (16th C.) described as 'Robert Denis, surgeone' when witness to a 1558 sasine relating to a land transfer in Hawick. He may well have been related to the other men of the same surname who lived at a similar time. He may have been the grandfather of Allan, recorded in a sasine of 1622; he had a 'clare constat' from William Douglas of Drumlanrig for a piece of waste ground in the centre of Hawick, between the 'King's Highway' and the Slitrig. Given the forename, he could have been son of John (owner of 2 particates in Hawick) whose great-grandson Robert was served as his heir in 1613. Robert (16th/17th C.) inhabitant of Hawick. He was served heir to his great-grandfather John in 2 tenements (or particates) of land in Hawick in 1613. This John seems likely to have been the man named in the 1537 Burgh Charter, and potentially the same man with the elaborate memorial stone (from 1546) in St. Mary's Kirkyard. Presumably the same Robert had a confirming charter for 2 tenements in Hawick in 1635, granted by the Earl of Queensberry, one of which had been owned by his great-grandfather John. It is possible that he was the same man as Bailie Robert. Bailie Robert (17th C.) described as at the East Port in the 1638 'leet' for the election of the Bailies. He may have been Bailie along with William Scott of the Cross at the time of the 1640 'Act of Bailies and Council' (although apparently signed by 'G. Deanis, Bailie' and with Robert listed on the Council). In April he was replaced as Bailie by Robert Scott 'callit of Goldielands', while he 'convaleces of his sickness'. In late 1640 he is described as 'late bailie' when he was fined for injuring Robert Scott of Groundistone, specifically 'bluiding of the said Robert Scott upon the cheek and hand'. He may be the Robert who inherited 2 tenements that had belonged to his great-grandfather John, as recorded in 1613 and 1635. He may be the Robert who witnessed baptisms for William Hardie in 1641 and 1654. He may also be the Bailie who was called the Burgh Officers to come to deal with Samuel Newbie, who was disrupting the game of 'kyles' that he and his friends were playing in 1660. He may be the Bailie recorded in a hereditary bond in 1663, and also the Robert 'in Hawick, elder' recorded in another bond in 1663. He may be the Robert who (along with Allan) witnessed a baptism for James Tudhope in 1639. Robert (17th C.) married Susanna Scott in Hawick in 1634. Their children were: Margaret (b.1636); Robert (b.1639); Bessie (b.1640); Anna (b.1643); George (b.1644); John (b.1645); Isobell (b.1647); Allan (b.1648); and Mary (b.1649). He could be the same man as the Bailie recorded in the 1630s and 1640s; he was on the 'leet' for choosing the Bailie in 1638, in one of the first entries in the Town Book, and was described as being at the East Port. Robert (17th C.) Hawick resident who was married to Margaret Watt. Their children include: Isobell (b.1640); Margaret (b.1642); James (b.1644); John (b.1646); Janet (b.1647); Isobell (b.1649); and Robert (1653). He could be the Robert who was Councillor in 1668. Robert (17th C.) described as 'lister' (i.e. dyer) in 1648 when he was elected on the Hawick Town Council. He is probably the same as one of the other Roberts. He served as Bailie during the 1650s. Robert (17th C.) Hawick resident, married to Agnes Scott. Their daughter Helen was born in 1651, with witnesses Thomas and Robert Scott (who were probably related to his wife). He may be the Robert who witnessed baptisms for William Ruecastle and Marion Scott in 1648 and for Robert Scott in 1652. Perhaps the same Robert is recorded in 1656 (along with David Scott) as witness for a baptism of William Scott and Margaret

Preacher. Robert (17th C.) advocate who served as procurator for Walter Lorraine for a bond with Walter Scott in Wauchope in 1681. The bond was signed at Hartshaughmill, which suggests he was a local man. Robert (17th C.) recorded as 'particat man of ye lands of Hawick' when allocated a pew in St. Mary's Kirk in 1683. James (presumably either his son or brother) gave him 'ane half boll of beer for ye building of said pew' and was involved in a dispute over it in 1715. Possibly the same Robert is recorded in 1725 when his servant Helen Bell was rebuked by the Session. He may have been the Robert born to Robert and Margaret Watt in Hawick in 1653 or the son of Robert and Susanna Scott born in 1639. Given that he was a 'particat man', he was probably a direct descendant of John, who owned 2 particates in the 1537 Burgh Charter, and whose great-grandson Robert was served as heir in 1613. Robert (17th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Burnfoot in 1697. He married Janet Laidlaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694. Their children included: Jean (b.1695); and Isabella (b.1697), baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1697 were 2 William Scotts. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Isabel Lamb in Cavers Parish in 1701. Robert (17th/18th C.) son of George and Agnes Scott according to a family tree (and hence born in 1675). He was a skinner in Hawick. He married Janet Cook in Hawick in 1705 and their children included: Janet (b.1705); George (b.1708), flesher in Hawick; Robert (b.1710); James (b.1713); Margaret (b.1715); and Agnes (b.1718). The witnesses in 1710 were Bailie James Deans (perhaps related) and merchant Walter Oliver and in 1718 were Bailie James Burn and Robert Glendinning. Robert (17th/18th C.) flesher in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1712 for Walter Bryson, in 1714 for weaver George Wight, in 1715 for carrier Walter (who was probably related), in 1722 for John Glendinning in Whitchesters and in 1723 for workman Andrew Leithead. It is possible he is the same man as the skinner. Robert (17th/18th C.) miller in Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Lamb in Cavers Parish in 1701 and their first child Arthur (b.1703) was baptised in Hawick Parish. The witnesses in 1703 were Walter Elliot, Bailie to the Regality of Hawick and fellow miller James Paterson. The couples' other children were born in Bowden, including: Maddie (b.1709); Gilbert (b.1711); and Robert (b.1715). He may be the Robert, 'servant to the said Wm Thomson' (at Newmill), who in 1742 witnessed baptisms for William Anderson in Raesknowe and for William Thomason at Newmill. Robert (18th C.) married Janet Turnbull in Cavers Parish in 1731. Robert (18th C.) married Margaret Nevison in Roberton Parish in 1733. Robert (18th C.) married Isobell Gray in Ashkirk Parish in 1739. Robert (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He had a legal case with a Selkirk merchant recorded in 1746. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who married Barbara Ormiston in 1776. Robert (18th C.) married Betty Clerk in Roberton Parish in 1790. Robert (b.1782–1850s) joiner at Horsleyhill. He was recorded as 'Junr. Wright' on the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Minto Parish; this suggests that his father may also have been Robert. His wife was Margaret and their children included: Gideon (b.1819/20), who carried on the joinery business; Archibald; Margaret; Janet (b.1825/6), who was deaf and dumb; John; Agnes (b.1830/1); and William. Robert (1797–1879) born in Glasgow, although a family tree has him as the son of Hawick shoemaker George and Janet Douglas. He was a printer and one of Hawick's early postal workers, being sorter and deliverer for Robert Armstrong. His printer's business was at 8 Buccleuch Street, although in 1841 he is listed as residing on Silver Street. He was involved with the Relief Kirk and a portrait of him exists. He married Helen Rutherford (1800–76). Their children were: Alison (b.1822); Janet (1823–96), who married manufacturer James Wilson; Agnes (b.1825); Francis (b.1831), who was also postmaster in Hawick; George (c.1834–98), who moved to Australia; and Robert Rutherford (1840–1910), who was a banker and died unmarried. Robert (b.1815) son of Francis and younger brother of George. He was a butcher with his brother on Allars Crescent. They also farmed at Tofts. Robert Rutherford (1840–1910) younger son of postmaster and printer Robert. He worked as a banker, with Allahabad Bank. He died unmarried. Robert Rutherford (1860–1922) son of postmaster Francis, and nephew of the earlier Robert Rutherford. He was born in Hawick, and the family lived at 44 Loan. However, they soon moved to Paisley, where he grew up. He worked as a stevedores manager in Lancashire, married twice and died in Southport. With his first wife, Lucy Jane Roberts, he had children Robert Rutherford and Marjorie Milsom. Robert W. (19th/20th C.) one of the survivors of the Gallipoli Campaign, who visited the region in a group of Hawick veterans in 1965. Thomas (17th C.) mentioned in a Magistrates Court case of 1640 in which he is absolved of paying the costs claimed against him by Adam Scott, smith. It seems that he was a servant, who had a dispute with Scott, the record saying 'that he offered his service to him, quha wauld not receive him, except he wauld gif him of his ...'. Thomas (17th C.) Hawick resident, married to Margaret Gledstains. Their children included: Margaret (b.1679); and Bessie (b.1680). Thomas (17th C.) Hawick resident whose daughter Margaret was born in 1692 and son Thomas in 1696. Thomas (17th/18th C.) married Janet Renwick in Bedrule Parish in 1702. Thomas (17th/18th C.) married Agnes Rutherford in Bedrule Parish in 1705. Their children included: Henrietta (b.1706); George (b.1707); and John (b.1709). Thomas (17th/18th C.) tenant of Wester Burnfoot Mill in Wilton Parish. He married Janet Gray in 1703 and their children included Jean (b.1717). Although the mother's name is not given, his children were: David (b.1704); James (b.1708); Isobell (b.1712); and Walter (b.1713), farmer at Howahill. Thomas (1764–1817) son of Walter. He was farmer at Howahill, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 4 horses. He also paid the dog tax at Howahill in 1797. His death is recorded in Hobkirk Parish and he is buried in Wilton Old Churchyard. Walter (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He was so described in 1713 and 1714. He married Isobell Scott in 1712. They were both described as being 'in the town of Hawick'. Their children included: George (b.1713); Agnes (b.1715); and Agnes (again, b.1720). The witnesses in 1713 were baxter William Hodge and Henry Orrock and in 1715 were flesher Robert Deans (possibly his brother) and flesher and Bailie James Burn. He may be the Walter born in 1680 to George and Agnes Scott. He is probably the carrier recorded in 1707 when he was fined by the Council for calling Adam Thorbrand to the Court in Jedburgh when the case was already being considered by the Court in Hawick. Walter (1713–90) son of Thomas, he was born in Wilton Parish. He became a cattle dealer in Hawick and was also tenant at Howahill and Highend. In 1762, 1764, 1767, 1771 and 1774 he was recorded at Howcleuch. He appears to have married late in life. In 1761 he was stated to be from Roberton Parish when he married Janet (although her name is recorded as 'Isabel' in Hawick Parish), daughter of Robert Douglas, from the Trows family; she died in 1799. Their children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included: Janet (b.1762); Thomas (b.1764); Robert (1767); James (b.1768), father of local historian Walter; Agnes (b.1771); and Walter (b.1774). The family are buried in Wilton Old Churchyard; their names are recorded on the back of the headstone of joiner James Deans, who must have been related. Walter 'Watty' (1823–1904) son of James and Margaret Boa, he was born in Rulewater, but descended from the Hawick family. He was said to be an odd, quiet child, and was taken under the wing of the governess at Weens. However, he received little formal schooling, and was soon helping his uncle Thomas, who was mason at Bonchester Bridge. He worked with his uncle as a mason, and grew to have an appreciation of ruined buildings in the district. He also later worked as a grocer, living at Kirkstyle, Hobkirk. He became known as an antiquarian, particularly an authority on everything to do with the history, families and folklore of Rulewater. He was encouraged in these pursuits by James Smail of Jedburgh, who married his cousin Margaret Boa. He wrote 'The Old Kirk and Kirkyard of Hopekirk' in 1874, 'On Bonchester, Rule Water' for the Berwickshire Naturalists' Club in 1887 and 'Memorials and Reminiscences of the Parish of Hobkirk' in 1895. He helped with the description of the Slitrig valley when the Berwickshire Club met at Hawick in 1890. In 1892 he described a supposed track connecting the upper Rule valley with the Slitrig near Berryfell, speculating (unfortunately with no real evidence) that it could be connected with the Catrail. He also provided information for Tancred's 'Rulewater' book. For a long time he was in charge of the Hobkirk kirkyard, which was adjacent to his house, and he could describe every stone and the family who were buried there. He also collected curios from the district. In 1860 he donated to the Museum a 'Stone Sling Ball'. In 1859 he married Margaret Armstrong (from Hartsgarth) in Newcastleton; she had previously been housekeeper for Daniel Mather at Hallrule. Their children were: James (b.1860); Christina (b.1862); Margaret Boa (b.1868); and William (b.1872). There is a photograph of him with George Tancred in 'Rulewater and its people'. William (15th/16th C.) witness to the 1511/2 sasine for the Barony of Hawick. His name is recorded as 'Willelmo Denis'. He was probably a prominent man in Hawick at the time, and may have been related to Allan, who acted as attorney for the sasine. William (18th/19th C.) Denholm man who had a poem included in James Ruickbie's 1826 'Poems'. Another poem (addressed to Elliot Aitchison) was included at the end of James Murray's 1863 article on Denholm, dated 1819. There was an article about him in the Transactions for 1960 (formerly the name was spelled 'Deane', 'Deanes', 'Deanis', 'Deannes', 'Deens', 'Deine', 'Deins', 'Denis', 'Denys', etc.).

Deans an Simpson's (deenz-an-sim-sinz) n. stationers at 9 Oliver Place. There was also a printing press there in the mid-20th century. The business was originally started by William Simpson around 1870 as a bookbinder, paper-ruler and ledger-maker, being carried on by his sons as E.W. & W. Simpson. The business was bought in 1959 by Billy Deans Ellis of printers R. Deans & Co., and renamed 'Deans and Simpson'. In 1976 the shop was purchased by Peter Horne and Alan Graham and became Hawick's premier stationers. Graham retired in 2002 and Horne in 2020.

Dean's Brae (deenz-brā) n. place said to have been named for being the location of the killing of John Deans, who was 'slan in debait of his nichtbouris geir' in 1546. The location is unknown, but it was near Skelfhill, as described by W.N. Kennedy in 1858.

Dean's Cleuch (deenz-clooch) n. small stream in upper Liddesdale, running west to join the Roughley Burn to the west of Stitchelhill.

Deanshill (deenz-hil) n. area near Kershope, recorded in 1583 as the residence of 'Joke Armestronge called the Lordes Joke.

Deans o Teviotdale (deenz-ō-teev-yi'-dāl) n. pre-Reformation head of the church in Teviotdale. The list of Deans includes: John, c.1195–1205; Richard, c.1210–28; Walter, c.1230; Geoffrey, c.1240–51; and William, c.1260.

Deans Weekly (deenz-week-lee) n. free advertising sheet published by R. Deans & Co. in Hawick in the erly 1930s. It ran for 49 issues, but was stopped after complaints by the Scottish Newsagents' Foundation and was effectively replaced in 1932 by the Hawick Week-end Advertiser.

Deansyde (deen-sīd) n. red brick house by the A698 (Denholm road) immediately after Honeyburn. It may have been designed by J.P. Alison. Andrew Haddon lived there in the early 20th century and it was the residence of the minister of Cavers Parish after WWII.

Dearden (deer-din) n. Edward (1802/3–76) from England, he was a weaver in Hawick. He came to Hawick in about 1836, following John Wilson going to the Rochdale area to learn about weaving flannel. He was listed as a weaver at Weensland among heads of households for Wilton Kirk in 1840 and 1841. In 1841 (recorded as 'Edmund Derden') he was living at Weensland Mill Cottage. He was later a watchman of the Kirkwynd, and was fatally injured at the Loan during the Thursday night Chase of 1876 by the Acting Father's horse – 'Auld Edward Dearden met demise, Nae chance against the horse's size' [MB]. He married Helen Goodfellow and their children included Thomas (b.1840), Sara (b.1844) and John (b.1847).

dearie (dee-ree) n. a dear, sweatheart, darling – '... And ilk ane bring his dearie' [JT], '... With bliss life's moments seemed complete That night by Liddle wi' my dearie' [TCh].

Dearlyburn (deer-lee-burn) n. area just north of Horsleyhill, around the Dearly Burn, which flows into the Hassendean Burn. There is a contract of 1763 to the heritors of the Commonty of Hassendean relating for building a bridge across this stream. In 1861 George C. Hardie was living there with his family (also written 'Deerly').

Dearly Burn (deer-lee-burn) n. stream that rises near Groundistone and flows roughly eastwards to join the Hassendean Burn.

dear year (deer-yeer) n., arch. a year of famine, when the price of meal was high, particularly at the very end of the 18th century – 'In the winter of one of the dear years at the close of last century, and at a time when oatmeal was 7s 6d a-stone ...' [WNK], 'The best proof of the serious nature of the emergency is to be found in the fact that even yet old people in referring to the last two years of last century speak of them as the 'dear years' [WNK].

the Dear Year (thu-deer-yeer) n. popular term for the year 1800, when there was famine and war, and food riots in Hawick, as well as elsewhere around Britain. 1799 was a year of heavy rain (186 days locally), and there was a great drought the next summer. There was a shortage of food, a general increase in prices and distilleries were stopped by Act of Parliament. James Ruickbie commemorated this with a poem on the death of whisky, and the reopening of the distilleries with another, the 'Resurrection of Whisky' – 'Our fathers never saw, nor we, their hapless sons, till now, a time so big with woe' [JR].

Deaton (dee'-in) n. Sir Angus (1945–) born in Edinburgh and brought up in Bowden, he attended Hawick High School in the period 1957–9. He took the Waverley Line to school every day and also worked at Pringle's as a summer job. He also attended Fettes College and then Cambridge University. He worked at Bristol University and then moved to Princeton University in 1983, where he became Dwight D. Eisenhower Professor of International Affairs. He was awarded the 2015 Nobel Prize in Economics for analysis of consumption, poverty and welfare. He was knighted in 2016 for services to research in economics and international affairs. As a further Hawick connection, his mother was the sister of Danny Nuttal's wife. He returned to visit Hawick High School (along with fellow Nobel Laureate Richard Henderson) in 2022.

deave (deev) adj., arch. to deafen – 'If she could get hersel' but carl'd, In time o' need, She wi' her din ne'er deav'd the warld, But now she's dead' [JR], 'Let preachers rare an' ranters root Till deaved wi' their ain clatter' [VW], 'If there's a greater bore, it is The monologuish woman; She'll deave yer vera soul wi' din Till baith yer lugs are bummin'' [FL], ''An' whaur the deevil's Bengal?' was the next query, to which came the ready rejoinder, 'Ou it's owre ayont Liddesdale'' [WNK], '... maist deeved an daivert an donnert wui the rummellin dunner o an eend-on bizz' [ECS], 'I stood in the mids' o' the merket square, Deeved by the thrang o' the Gooseberry Fair, And I sichted a couple o' colliers there, As merry as weel may be' [WL] (also spelled 'deeve'; cf. the more common deifen).

the Debateable Land (thu-dee-bā'-u-bul-lawnd) n. former name for part of the western Border country, especially a strip of land between the Rivers Esk and Sark, which was claimed by both kingdoms before 1603. It comprised much of the Parish of Canonbie, about half of Morton and all of Kirkandrews. An earthen rampart, Scots Dyke, was built to divide the Debateable Land. It was explicitly 'debated' between 1450 and 1552, but the name stuck. It was known as the most lawless area in the land, and occupied by the Elliots, Armstrongs, Rutherfords, Croziers, Turnbulls and other families (also spelled 'Debatable' and sometimes plural 'Lands', it is 'the Debaittabill Land' in 1618 and still 'debaitable landis' in 1661).

debauch (dee-bawch) n., arch. a debacle – 'That a man or wumin should bei sae misguided as tae yase the occasion for a debauch shouldna bei laid at the door o' the festival' [BW1939].

Dechan (dee-kin) n. Bailie Martin, J.P. (1852–1915) chemistry teacher and public analyst, who was a Bailie, as well as Acting Father in 1903. He was born in the High Street, where the Royal Bank was later built, son of a farmer who left Ireland during the famine. He grew up in Gotterson's Innery and then at Langburnshiels (where he had a daily 7-mile walk to and from school). After working as a hind at Hummelknowes and Burnhead (where his reading was encouraged), he became a tweed finisher with Walter Wilson, later taking science and art classes at Teviot Grove and qualifying as a teacher of chemistry. After teaching classes in various locations in Selkirk and Galashiels, he took over the practical chemistry lecture room and laboratory of the Buccleuch Memorial, and gave up his factory job to become a full time chemistry teacher in 1884. He also continued to study himself, publishing several papers, becoming a fellow of the Institute of Chemistry and being elected a fellow of the Chemical Society of London in 1885. He served on the School Board for 9 years, pressing for educational opportunities for all classes. He then became a Town Councillor (the first Roman Catholic in any local town), soon becoming a Bailie. He was partly responsible for establishing technical schools in Hawick and Galashiels. He became public analyst for Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire and the Burghs of Melrose and Kelso, as well as District Analyst for Selkirkshire under the Board of Agriculture. Along with W.P. Kennedy, he took over science classes in the reorganised Buccleuch School around 1900, and prizes for scholarship in science were set up in their memory by former pupils. As well as this, he was an enthusiastic Common-Riding supporter, and can be seen riding near the head of the Procession in the 1899 Gaylor film. He was one of the main instigators for founding the Callants' Club, and would have been the first President had he not insisted that the first should not be a Roman Catholic, in case that caused controversy. So instead he was the first Vice-President and the second Club President. He married Catherine Murphy and their children included: Patrick (b.1875); and George (b.1886).

de Charteris see Chairters

the de Charterises (thu-du-chawr'-ur-is-eez, -chār'-urz) n. family name of the Earls of Wemyss and March, deriving from Chartres in France, with multiple possible spellings. William de Chartre accompanied William the Conqueror to England, his son or grandson following David I to Scotland, and being granted lands in Dumfriesshire. The family received the half-barony of Wilton in the late 13th century, holding it for a few decades. There is a complicated relationship with the Longuevilles and the Langlands family, with the likelihood that they are all one and the same. Sir Robert Charteris fought a duel with Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1530. Later the family dropped the 'de' (spelled many ways, including 'Chartres' and the modern 'Charters'; family members are included under Chairters).

the Deed Bell (thu-deed-bel) n. hand-bell once belonging to the Magistrates, which was used when someone died. The Burgh Officer (or perhaps the Kirk Beadle) would walk the streets, lifting his hat, ringing the bell and announcing 'I hereby take ye to wit, that ... our brother/sister, departed this life at ... of the clock, according to the pleasure of our Lord'. The bell would then be placed on the deceased's bed until they were interred. The bell bore the date 1601, and was made in Holland, inscribed 'R.S.I.D. HAWICK' around the neck (probably the initials of the magistrates of the time, likely Robert or Richard Scott and James or John Deans or Douglas) and 'JAN, BVRGUS.HVIS.HEFT.MY.GEGOTE.ANNO.1601' around the rim (i.e. 'Made by John Burgushouse in 1601'); the same man made the Earlston Kirk bell in 1609. It is said that it was paid for with a bag of 'doits' amassed from years of Kirk collections. When the main Kirk bell was recast at great expense in 1693 it was enacted that 'neither the great Bell nor hand deid bell' should be used for anyone other than those on the list of subscribers or their successors; hence it was kept in the Treasurer's house. It is recorded being mended in 1722, with an iron handle added to make it easier to use with one hand. It was used until about 1780, apparently twice escaped being melted down, and was donated to the Museum by the Town Council in 1858. It is said that a servant in the house where it was kept gave it mistakenly to a dealer in old iron and the master of the house scoured the iron stores in Edinburgh to fetch it back. The tradition of using the bell was said to have been a relic of pre-Reformation times, suggesting that there would have been an earlier bell. Note that in 1694 the Council approved the use of a 'litle hand Bell for the use of the toun concerning the goeing through the toun'; if this was the same bell, then it had already been in use for almost a century, and the Council was just clarifying the payment for its use. Since the last bellman, Alexander Stainton, died in 1926, there certainly a later bell in use in Hawick through the 19th century, but for announcements other than deaths. There was also a similar bell in use in Denholm until at least the 1830s.

deed-chap (deed-chawp) n., arch. clicking sound made by the death-watch beetle, supposed to be a portent of death (also deed-rap, deed-ruckle and deed-watch).

Deedhaugh (deed-hawch) n. former name for an area between Croft Angry and Usuchhaugh, named in the 1537 charter, and corresponding today roughly to the area around Slitrig Crescent and perhaps including Wellogate Cemetery. This was once where the town's archery targets were, and it was also used for other games and sports. It may have once been where some of the Common-Riding festivities once took place, hence its continued use as the site of the Song-singing ceremony. The origin of the name is obscure, but may refer to an area associated with some unrecorded battle or burial (perhaps similar to the Deed Haugh near Spittal-on-Rule, which was the scene of the execution of a number of Turnbulls in 1510, although 'deid' could also just mean 'flat').

Deed Haugh (deed-hawch) n. area near Rulemouth, similar to the 'Rulehaugh' where many Turnbulls were said to have met their end in 1510. The story is that about 200 of them met there to ask for pardon from the King (James IV), dressed only in linen sheets and with nooses around their necks. But instead, one in ten of them were hanged. Bishop Lesley reported that the King rode from Edinburgh to Rulewater, where 'he tuik divers broken men, and brocht them to Jeduart; of quhom sum wes justifiet: [executed] And the principallis of the trubillis cum in lyning claythis, with nakitt sordis in thair handis, and wyddyis about thair neckis', and they were sent to various castles of their neighbours 'in ward'; it is therefore unclear whether any men were actually hanged at this spot. The field was also called 'Deadman's Haugh' – 'There'll be Turnbulls on Ancrum Moor Frae Barnhills ti Normandy, Ti avenge the Deidmans Haugh N' the Auld Enemy' [IHS].

the Deedhaugh Well (thu-deed-hawch-wel) n. a former public water supply on Slitrig Crescent. The spring was believed to be somewhere in the rising ground that is now the Wellogate Cemetery. The well was in the plantation strip along the Slitrig Bank, and the water was regarded as having medicinal properties. At some point the well was piped to the other side of the road, and it was said that the water was never the same. This supply was much used to ward off cholera during the 19th century and existed into the early 20th century.

deed-hoose (deed-hoos) n., arch. a mortuary (noted by E.C. Smith).

deed kist (deed-kist) n., arch. a coffin – '...the body was stretched at length until the 'dead kist' or coffin was ready' [V&M].

Deedlie Field (deed-lee-feeld) n. Deadlie Field, flat area on the east side of the Rule Water near Fulton. 'Deadlie Dean' lies just to the south.

Deedlie Stumps (deed-lee-stumps) n. nickname, probably from the 19th century – 'Here's Andra o' the King's Head clad In ancient garb, wi' cheery smile; Blind Wull gangs by wi' carefu' tread And Deedlie Stumps in gallant style' [HI].

deedlie-weg (deed-lee-weg) n. a wastrel, ne'er-do-well, frisky person – 'Deh git in a strooshie ower thaim, they're jist a bunch o deedliewegs' (perhaps from 'diddle', to jig about; this appears to be a particularly Hawick word; G. Watson notes it as 'Deedlie-wag').

deedly (deed-lee) adj. deadly – '...I the said Walter sall do siclike suffrage as vse and custume is of deidly feid ...' [SB1527], 'The deidliest knuckler was share tae take hame ...', 'Dear alike in childhood's prattle, And the deidly din of battle' [RK], 'He didna coont on the layman's sword That sprang frae its scabbard free, An wi' ane swift an' deidly stroke Made his heid frae his body flee' [FL], n., arch. deadly persons, especially in the phrase 'against all deedly' – '... and leiffull actionis aganis all deidlie, the Kingis graces auctoritie allanerlie exceptit ...' [SB1585].

Deedrig (deed-rig) n. former name for lands in the eastern part of Hassendean, whose precise location is uncertain. They were recorded in a charter of 1510/1 when confirmed to David Scott of Hassendean and referred to as the '20 shilling land called le Dedrig'. In 1532 they were described as the '20 shilling lands of Deidrig in the half barony of Hassendean' when confirmed to William of Hassendean, along with Easter Hassendean and Over and Nether Newhall. The lands were transferred from Robert Scott of Hassendean to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1604. They were still owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1661 and 1663, when they were still described as a 20 shilling land, lying within the Barony of Hassendean (it is 'Deidrig' in 1532 and 1661 and 'Dedrig' in 1663).

deed-ruckle (deed-ru-kul) n., arch. death-rattle – 'Whan naigs an troopers – the deed-ruckle glutherin i ther weizants – war cowpeet inti ilka seike' [ECS] (also deed-chap and deed-rap).

deed-thraw (deed-thraw) n., arch. death throe, agony of death – 'Sprawling in thair deid-thraws upon the ground' [JW1619], 'Yin comprehensive tairm Covers them a' – Birth-pangs, rheumatics And deid-thraw!' [DH].

deed-watch (deed-wawch) n., arch. ticking sound made by the death-watch beetle, said to portend death (also deed-chap and deed-ruckle).

Deedwitter (deed-wi'-ur, ded-waw'-ur) n. Deadwater, general name for the area near the Border, to the east of Saughtree. The stream there is one of the sources of the North Tyne, and the name comes from the fact that it is flat for some distance, hence the water flows only slowly through this boggy area, sometimes called Deadwater Well. There is the farm of Deadwater on the road between Saughtree and Kielder, with Deadwater Fell and Deadwater Moor above being the heights on the Border between Liddesdale and Tynedale. A sulphurous spring in the area (in the upper part of Thorlieshope farm) was used for the cure of skin conditions in the 18th century and early 19th centuries, and visited annually by people from Hawick. The 'spa' there was kept by William Jardine in 1841 but the baths were later dismantled – '... the balefu influence o the Stanes can be felt as fer doon as Deidwaitter' [DH].

deef (deef) adj. deaf – 'er ee deef?', 'speakin ower much makes ee deef', '... To a' that's guid they're deef an' blind, They only like to stab an' teer' [FL], 'But I as ane deef man heærdna, an' I was as an dum man that opinetna his mooth' [HSR], '... thaye ar like the deef eddart that stapps hir lug' [HSR], 'Hauf-daized, like deef auld men, listenin' ...' sharp bend in the river close to the Jubilee footbridge.

Deep Gill (deep-gil) n. stream in the headwaters of Twislehope Burn in the upper Hermitage valley, south of Twislehope Hope. It rises near Mid Hill, being formed from Muckle Sike and East Grain (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Deephope (dee-pup) n. farm on the Tima Water, just south of Ettrick village. It was formerly part of Rankilburn Parish. It was a Crown steading, said to be part of Mount Common. In 1486 it was leased to William Scott, and then to was Stephen Scott by 1492. In 1499 it was released to Stephen Scott, with an obligation for him to pay the arrears. Stephen Scott was still recorded there in 1502. In 1510 it was again assigned to Stephen Scott. In 1541 it was 'Montcolmone, alias Deiphope', when occupied by William Scott. Adam Scott from there was recorded in 1573 and Archibald Scott of Deephope in 1581. Walter Scott of Deephope was said to have been one of the men in the raiding party that freed Kinmont Willie in 1596 (it is 'Deiphop' in 1486, 1492, 1499, 1512 and 1581, and 'Deiphoip' in 1573; 'Deepup' is marked on Gordon's c.1650 manuscript map and Blaeu's 1654 map).

Deep Pool Brae (deep-pool-brā) n. former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls.

Deep Slack (deep-slawk) n. hill in the upper Borthwick Water, about 3 km north of Craik village, reaching a height of 362 m.

deficient (dee-fi-shin') adj., arch. a defaulter – 'Spent by bailies at ordering officers to poind the deficients for the clock, ... 0 1 4' [BR1761].

deforce (dee-fōrs) v., arch. to prevent an officer of the law from performing his duty, impede by force – 'Item, whatsomever person that sal deforce the officer in execution of his office, efter tryal sall pay £10 money, and wardit during the bailies' will' [BR1640], 'Mr Cunningham is fined for deforcing the officers with ane collraicke' [BR1676], '. . . in masterfullie deforcing and taking the hors from him when he was poynding him . . . ' [BR1688].

deforcement (dee-fōrs-min') n., arch. the act of deforcing, i.e. using force to prevent an official from performing their duties – '. . . onlawed in ane deforcement of yr. officer when he come to poynd for his fyne . . . ' [BR1693].

defunct (dee-fungt) n., arch. a deceased person – 'Item, A trumpet cled in the defunct's Liuerey, ryding one horsse back, sounding' [SB1634](usually with 'the').

Degastan (de-ga-stan) n. battle of 603 between Æthelfrith and a combined army of Dalriadan Scots and Strathclyde Britons under King Aedan. Victory by the Angles probably determined that English rather than Gaelic became the language of the eastern Borders. The site is believed to be at Dawston in Liddesdale, about 11 miles from Hawick. Although few details are recorded the two bands are surmised to have met in the valley of the Dawston Burn, close to the road to Kielder Water before it enters England. Another location suggested (by Jeffrey) for the battlefield is 'Dawstones or Daegstons', located on the farm of Florida, close to Castleton. And a third suggestion is Dalston near Carlisle.

de Gray (du-grā) n. Barons of Wilton in Hereford in the 13th to 16th centuries, not to be confused with the Barons of the local Wilton.

deh (de) v. don't – 'deh come eet wi mei', 'deh tell is', 'A deh ken', 'deh worry yersel', 'deh git yer knickers in a twist', 'if ee deh like eet, ee deh hev ti hev eet', 'ee deh ken where that's been', 'And if A deh feel juist the ticket . . . ' [IWL], '. . . deh forget oo've played for yin Cornet twice' [CT], 'Deh gaun there. Ee cah mak a pairty happen on yer lane' [JuH] (also written 'de' '; effectively a shortened form of dinni; cf. divven, which is used interrogatively).

de Hawick (du-hIk) n. Adam (12th C.) recorded as 'Adam de Awic' towards the end of the 12th century. This was in a charter of the Priory of Durham relating to the lands of Leam. Adam (13th C.) described as 'Senescallo de Hawhic' (i.e. steward) when he witnessed a charter of John, son of Ylif (or Eilif) of Ellliston (near St. Boswells) in the reign of Alexander II (sometime between about 1220 and 1243). His relationship to other 'de Hawicks' is unknown. The title of 'steward' suggests he was an official of the Abbot of Melrose in particular lands (acting like a Bailie of Regality). Alexander (12th/13th C.) witness to a charter of Robert of Pollock to Melrose Abbey around 1200. Andrew (b.c.1375–1425) apparently of noble birth (according to one papal record), although his lineage is unknown. He was also said to be from the Diocese of St. Andrews, and hence not directly connected with Hawick. He was probably related to John, the pair having adjacent petitions accepted by the Pope in 1401, when they were both in the household of the Duke of Rothesay. He was made promised a canonry of Dunkeld in 1394 (which he took up in 1400/1), and was also incumbent of Ruffil parish before he was 20, probably to support his studies abroad. He was perhaps at Avignon as Scholar of Decreets, but only became Bachelor of Decreets in about 1421. In 1394 he was in the service of Sir John de Remorgny, Ambassador to the Scottish King. He was promised canonries in Aberdeen and in Moray in 1394, although may not actually have taken them up, for he is again petitioning for a canonry in Aberdeen in 1403 and 1406. In 1395 it was recorded that he was to give the oath of fealty to the Abbot of Dunfermline on being made a notary. In 1399 he was given the Hospital of Ruthven, with annexed church. From 1406 he acted as secretary to the Duke of Albany, Regent of Scotland, which must have been a position of great responsibility. He was one of the witnesses to the charter to William Douglas of Drumlanrig for the Barony of Hawick in 1406 or 1407. In 1409 he was made Rector of Liston (i.e. Kirkliston) and resigned Ruffil in Dunkeld (which was of lesser value), although he had dispensation to also hold a second benefice in the following years; this was confirmed in 1408 and extended several times until being set for life in 1425. In 1409 he was 'first secretary and keeper of the seal of the duke of Albany, governor of Scotland' when he requested permission to hold Liston Church along with another benefice. Also in 1409 he witnessed the charter granting lands at Hassendeanbank to John Turnbull at Ayr. In 1412 he had dispensation to hold Liston for another 2 years. In 1413 he had permission to hold another benefice, in addition to Liston and in 1418 he was given a pension of 200 gold crowns from the Priory of St. Andrews. He witnessed a charter for Margaret Anernethy (daughter of William Borthwick) in 1413. In 1415 he had a passage of safe-conduct to travel to England to negotiate for the release of the Duke of Albany's son. Through to 1417 his name appears frequently in the Register of the Great Seal as a witness to charters issued by Albany; for example, in 1409 he was witness to a charter involving lands in Hassendean, in 1410 witnessed the resignation of the lands of Borthwick by Robert Scott and the grant to Sir William of Borthwick, and in 1413 to a charter for succession of the lands of the Cunninghams of Kilmaurs (including the Barony of Hassendean). His name also appears many times in the Exchequer Rolls in connection with the Duke of Albany, in the period 1404–17. In 1418 he had bestowed upon him the generous pension of 200 gold 'scudi' deriving from the Priory of St. Andrews. He also acted as Auditor of the Exchequer for 8 years, but did not attend in 1418 and had been replaced by 1420. He travelled to France in 1418 (along with John Lethe) as an envoy of the Duke of Albany and continued on to the (wrong) Papal court in Spain, but hearing of the declaration of Scotland's obedience to Pope Martin, he returned to Scotland. In 1419 he was accused of adhering to 'the child of iniquity Peter de Luna' (i.e. the Antipope) and deprived of Liston, but eventually reinstated and paid the old incumbent Edward Lauder in 1419/20. In 1419 he was again Albany's envoy, this time to Pope Martin V in Italy, and when Albany died in 1420, he remained in Italy, probably never returning to Scotland again. In 1420 he 'exhorted the faithful' to help build a bridge between Linlithgow and Edinburgh, near Liston Church. Also in 1420 he was assigned the Canonry and Prebend of Kincardine, although he already possessed Canonries of Glasgow, Dunkeld and Murray, together with several Prebends and was Rector of Liston. In 1422 he was in litigation over Kincardine Church in, was denied the Provostship of the Church of Edinburgh, stated that he wanted to 'restore any injuries' and also requested that the Pope let him make a will to disperse his goods and wealth. In 1423 he was 'General Rector of the doctors and scholars of the University of Siena' when pursuing studies in Canon Law; he was then given the prebend called 'Glasgow Primo' and in 1424 he asked the Pope for confirmation of this prebend. In 1424 he also accepted a vicarage prebend in Moray. He was promised the Archdeaconry of Teviotdale in 1424 (being proposed after the apparently mistaken removal of John Croyser), but never took up the position, suggesting that he died around then; however, there was litigation among several men at this time, and it is unclear if he ever formally took possession of the Archdeaconry. Also in 1425 John Gray was appointed Rector of Liston, made vacant by his death. He was recorded in 1425 recently dying in Rome after having been in the Court there for a long time and described as 'papal chaplain'. He gifted an altar-cloth to Glasgow Cathedral. Geoffrey (13th C.) mentioned in a dispute of 1279–80 involving the Earl of Cornwall and rights on the rivers Ure and Ouse. Among those appointed to serve on the Yorkshire jury were 'Willelmus Lovel et Galfridus de Hawyk'. It is therefore possible that he was a Lovel. Henry (15th C.) recorded as one of the members of the inquest relating to Culross in 1448/9. His name is there written 'Henry Hawyke'. Hugh (12th/13th C.) mentioned in an entry in the Roll of Expenses of King John of England in 1209. This is one of the earliest dated examples of the appellation 'de Hawic' (spelled this way here). He may be the same as the person appearing as a witness to a charter of Robert de Lundris of Ruthven Church in the 'Registrum de Aberbrothec' sometime in the period 1180–1214. Hugh (13th C.) recorded as 'Hugonem de Hawyk' in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. He was probably associated with the Northumberland Hawick. John (12th C.) mentioned in a charter granted by Anselm de Molla (i.e., Mow) to Melrose Abbey in the reign of William I, where one of the witnesses was Roger, son of 'John de Hawic'. This was in the period 1170 to 1190. He is probably also the John of Hawick who witnessed the charter of Henry Lovel of 2 oxgangs of lands in Branxholme to the Priory of St. Andrews in the period 1163 to 1183. It is possible he was from the Lovels of Hawick. John (14th C.) received a letter of presentation to the Church of Hawick from Edward III of England (as holder of the lands belonging to the heir of Richard Lovel) in 1355/6. He is the only known example of someone clearly within Hawick itself having the appellation 'de Hawick'. He may also have been mentioned in other documents of the time, e.g. in a letter of safe conduct for him and 4 mounted companions to visit various holy places in England in 1365/6. Nothing more is known about him, although he may be the same person as John Fleming who is recorded as holding the Church of Hawick until 1363. John (c.1366–1431/2) priest probably from St. Andrews Diocese, and hence presumably not directly connected with Hawick. Note there is at least one other contemporary John with whom he can be easily confused. He was probably related to Andrew, the pair having adjacent petitions accepted by the Pope in 1401, when they were both in the household of the Duke of Rothesay. He was among Scotsmen granted a letter of protection by Richard II in 1379/80, along with several other Scottish clergymen, in order to pursue studies for a year at Oxford; he was described as 'John de Hawewyk, Clerk'. He also studied at Paris and was Bachelor of Decreets by 1390/1; he was sometimes later known as 'Master', but that was probably just a courtesy title. He served as chaplain and household servant for Cardinal Walter Wardlaw in the 1380s. He was given permission to hold 2 benefices in 1390/1, extended in 1404 and 1408. He is mentioned many times in Glasgow Diocese records from 1384 until 1410. He petitioned the Pope for a benefice in Paisley in 1384 and again in 1387 when he was already Vicar of Dunlop (after resigning Lintrathen in Angus), this being vacated by Henry Wardlaw, later Bishop of St. Andrews; in 1391 he asked the Pope for confirmation of the benefice. It was then stated that he had studied Canon Law for 5 years in Oxford and Paris and to have been a chaplain of Cardinal Walter Wardlaw. In 1387 he asked for a canonry of Aberdeen, but seems instead to have obtained a living in Glasgow. In 1390 he was also recommended to the Prebend of 'Casteltarris' (Carstairs). In 1391 his surname is transcribed 'de Harunk, familiar of cardinal Walter' when another priest was given his former cure of 'Lintrecyyn' Parish Church. He was back in Scotland in 1394 and in the service of Bishop Glendinning of Glasgow by 1396. In 1394 he was a Canon of Glasgow when his surname is transcribed 'Haubic'. He was a Canon of Glasgow who is recorded witnessing a deed relating to the Hospital of Polmadie in 1395. He held the office of Precentor (or Chanter) 1398–1429, probably succeeding Henry Wardlaw in about 1403, when Wardlaw was promoted to Archdeacon. However, he appears to have been dispossessed around 1403–6 by William de Lauder. In about 1402 he resigned the prebend of Carstairs in exchange for Renfrew. He was in litigation with William Lauder over the Precentorship of Glasgow in 1403 and in 1404 he was petitioning the Pope to reinstate him. He resigned Dunlop sometime before 1404 and in 1405 exchanged benefices with William Glendinning, gaining the Prebend of 'Pectyn and Brachlyn' (Petty and Brackly) in Moray and resigning the Prebend of Renfrew. His canonry of Glasgow was confirmed in 1406. In 1408 he had been forced to resign Dunottar on account of not having Papal permission. He was Precentor of Glasgow in a charter of 1408, where he is described as 'Sir John of Hawik, presbyter and notary public'. He was living as a cathedral dignitary in Glasgow in 1408. In 1409 he received the further Canonry of 'Moy' in Moray, giving up his other benefice in Moray. In 1410 he was again made Precentor of Glasgow and also held Dunlop, but gave up Carstairs. He held Dunnottar in Kirkcudbright before 1408 and was Vicar of Mearns after 1409/10. In 1418 he was still Precentor of Glasgow and Vicar of Mearns, although he resigned Mearns in 1422 to give it to the student Nicholas 'de Oturburne'. In 1422/3 he was a witness in Glasgow for a deed associated with the University of St. Andrews; another witness was John, 'Provost's Chaplain' acting as notary, and hence presumably distinct. He witnessed a charter for John Maxwell in 1423 and witnessed further documents for Glasgow cathedral until 1429/30. In 1431 he was described as Canon of Glasgow when he resigned some of his other benefices. In 1436 'David Cadw' was presented to the Precentorship of Glasgow, vacated after his death. He presented a chalice and a cope to Glasgow Cathedral. John (c.1370–1431) from St. Andrews Diocese, he may have been connected to Andrew, and was distinct from a contemporary John. He was stated to be of noble birth. He was appointed as Papal chaplain in 1393, when given the title 'Master', but this may have been a courtesy title. He was a Scholar of Decreets at Avignon in 1394, as well as scholar in law. He was Vicar of St. Mary's, Edrom, in Berwickshire and Kinkel in Aberdeen, and is recorded as sending no less than 4 petitions to the Pope in 1394, when his surname is recorded as 'de Awik', 'Hawyk', etc He asked for a canonry in Moray, a canonry in Aberdeen, a canonry in St. Andrews and a benefice in the gift of the Bishop of St. Andrews. He is referred to as priest of noble birth, honorary papal chaplain and scholar of Decreets and Law at Avignon in 1394. He was promised a Deanery in Brechin in 1394/5, but never received this position. In 1396 he complained to the Pope that Bishop Walter Trail was keeping the fruits of 'Edyrhame' (i.e. Edrom) for himself, after falsely claiming that he owed money to the Bishop. In 1399 he became Rector of Kinkell when he was also given the Canonry and Prebend of 'Duple' (i.e. Dipple) in Moray Diocese. He also had the support of Prince David (Duke of Rothesay, eldest son of King Robert III) in petitioning for a canonry of Dunkeld in 1399 and 1401. He resigned Edrom about 1401, since in 1419 John Brown is said to have unlawfully held the vicarage of Edrom for 18 years after it was vacant following his resignation. He was Rector of Kilmany by 1402, but was in litigation with 4 other priests over the fruits from that parish. He still held

Kilmany in 1429, but there was then legal action to remove him as a result of being excommunicated for assaulting the Vicar of Kilmany at mass; however, he seems to have retained Kilmany until his death. His death 'outwith the Roman Court' was recorded in March 1429 (perhaps in error) and again in 1431/2, with Kilmeny being left empty by his death. However, in 1430 he is described as 'a certain son of iniquity' who attacked the Vicar of Kilmany in the church during High Mass and was sentenced to excommunication, but continued to take part in masses and hence was to be removed from the Rectory of Kilmany; in 1431 he was replaced in Kilmeny. He is 'John Hawik' in a law suit debating who has the living of 'Kylmany' Church in the Diocese of St. Andrews in 1432. Shortly after his death there was a further arrangement to exchange Kilmany for Kirkmahoe Prebend in Glasgow Diocese. John (14th/15th C.) notary public who is recorded in legal documents connected with the Diocese of Glasgow in the years 1408–50. He was specifically recorded in 1413 (relating to Andrew Kinglass), 1429, 1440, 1446/7 (relating to a mill in Glasgow) and 1450. He held the Church of Carluke in Lanarkshire in 1431. He was clearly distinct from the Johns born around 1366 and 1370. John (14th/15th C.) Vicar of Saltoun in East Lothian, mentioned in 1414 as receiving money on behalf of Patrick of Abernethy, nephew of the Regent Albany. He is noted as 'domini Johannis Hawike' and appears to be distinct from the other Johns. John (14th/15th C.) mentioned in a petition of 1416 by William de Coluny. On 1417 he apparently had a prebend in the Collegiate Church of Abernethy and Vicarage of 'Celessy' when he was appointed to the Archdeaconry of Sodar instead. John (15th C.) precentor of Glasgow who appears in the records of the College of Glasgow in 1435. Perhaps this is confusion with the Precentor of the same name who died about 1432. John (15th C.) recorded in 1448 as 'Johanne de Havic' when he was witness to the sasine for Birkwood and Burnflat. The other witnesses were all Scotts, and so it seems likely he was a local man. John (15th C.) Vicar of Dunlop in Ayrshire in the period 1431–55. He held property in Glasgow in 1431 and 1442. He was recorded as Bachelor of Decreets by 1434 and may have been an early member of Glasgow University in 1451. His name appears in a deed of the vicarage of Glencairn in 1454, 'Magistro Johanne Hawyc, baculario in decretis, vicario de Dunlop'. He resigned the Vicarage by 1477, when the new holder of the benefice promised to give an annual pension to his servant Richard Hutchison. He surely cannot be the same John who was Vicar of Dunlop much earlier, but they may have been connected. John (15th C.) seaman who is recorded (along with John Christison) in the Exchequer Rolls of 1459 in connection with 2 voyages to transport wheat and barley from Findhorn to Leith. John (15th/16th C.) notary and presbyter who is also referred to in some documents as a chaplain (assuming these are the same person) in Glasgow Diocese records of 1507–13. Malcolm (d.bef. 1459) recorded as Rector of Yetholm Church in 1435 in Glasgow Dioces records, where he is described as 'Dominus Malcolmus de Hawyk'. He is recorded in 1459 as being the deceased 'Malcolm de Haluik (recte Hawik)' when Qunitin Weir had a petition for the rectory of 'Zethem' and other benefices. Margaret (14th C.) nun of the priory of Nesham in County Durham. In 1350 she was referred to as 'Dame Margaret Hawyck' when listed among the nuns charged with electing an abbess. She is probably from the Little Eden family. Margaret (d.1334) recorded in a register of wills. She was married to 'John de Apeton' and her will of 1334 (perhaps one of the dates is an error), drawn up in London, says that her mansion should be sold for the upkeep of the Church of St. Dionisius, with Isabella Godchap as the preferred purchaser. Margaret (14th/15th C.) daughter of Walter of Little Eden. She is said to have married William Brus (1372–1427). Her daughter Maud married William Marshall. Patrick (14th/15th C.) friar ('fratris Patricii de Hawic') recorded being paid the pension due to the Master of the Hospital of St. Laurence of haddington in 1413. Robert (13th C.) listed as being 'of Hawic' in 1230 in relation to an assize held at Newcastle-upon-Tyne. It seems likely that he was associated with the Hawick in Northumberland. Robert (13th C.) recorded as 'Roberto de Hawick' in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. He was somehow associated with prisoners in Newcastle Castle, but is unclear if he was Scottish or English. He could be the same man as the Robert who swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. Alternatively he could be a descendant of the Robert recorded half a century earlier. Robert (13th C.) signatory of the Ragman Rolls of 1296, appearing as 'Robert de Hawyk' in Roxburghshire (also transcribed as 'Hanwyk', which is clearly an error). His seal bears a lion coiled within 2 squares and the name 'S'ROB'TI DE HAVWIC'. Robert (14th/15th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh. His name appears frequently as witness to deeds in connection with St. Giles Church. He was deputy of the Collector of Customs and deputy Chamberlain to John Stewart, son of the Regent Albany in 1406 and deputy of Sir John Forrester in the period 1410–21, his name appearing several times in the Exchequer Rolls. In 1410 he was in charge of the masons who demolished Jedburgh Castle and also in renovations to Edinburgh Castle. Thus he appears to have been acting as Master of Works. From 1422–25 he was Collector of Customs for Edinburgh and 'deputy of clerk of coquet and of tronar'. In 1428 he was on a jury for an inquisition in Edinburgh. Robert (15th C.) recorded as 'Robertus Hawyk' on a list of 'determinants' at St. Andrews University 1443/44, among the 'licentiates' in 1445 and in a further document in 1446. Roger (12th/13th C.) mentioned as witness to a charter of Anselm de Molla to Melrose Abbey during the reign of William I (around the 1170s), where he is referred to as son of 'John de Hawic'. He is probably the same Roger, son of John of Hawick, who witnessed a charter about the same time wherein Henry Lovel granted lands in Branxholme to St. Andrews Priory. Roger (16th/17th C.) described as 'Capitane of the Airmetage' (i.e. Keeper of Hermitage Castle) when he failed to appear at the 1612 court case dealing with the death of Jock Elliot of Liddesdale in Hawick. Simon (12th/13th C.) witness to a charter granting a dowry of Torpenhow in Cumberland to the daughter and son-in-law of Philip de Valognes. This was perhaps made at a session of Roxburgh sheriff court (because of the list of witnesses). It is undated, but given sometime in the period 1195 to 1205. His name appears as 'Simone de Hauuic', and it is possible he was a Lovel. Thomas (15th C.) recorded as being a member of the Monastery of Dundrennan in the Exchequer Rolls around 1460 in connection with a gift from the King for service to a sick member of the King's retinue. Walter (13th C.) mentioned in a charter of Coldingham Priory, around the 1240s, relating to a land exchange between Chisholmes. He is referred to as 'Waldef de Hawic'. Walter (14th C.) recorded in the 13th reign of Edward I (i.e. about 1285) in the 'Calndar of Inquisitions Post Mortem' for Northumberland, the will of Margery de Gosbeck. He was 'Walter de Hawik' and gave 4 shillings service for the manor of 'Hawik'. Walter (14th C.) mentioned as witness in a charter of 1340 involving the Prior and Convent of Durham. He may be the same person mentioned 2 years later being admitted to the 'first tonsure' by the Bishop of Bisaccia, on the authority of the Bishop of Durham. Walter (14th C.) recorded in 1360 as being of 'Hauwyk' when he directed his attorneys Nicholas Bagot and William of Rypon to deliver sasine of the manor of 'Hauwyk' to Alan of Strother. This was done at Durham, so the place was presumably Hawick in Northumberland. Possibly the same Walter is mentioned in a bond of 1373 to Sir William de Claxton (in the Diocese of Durham), along with John de Sadbergh and William de Blacden. Walter of Little Eden (d.c.1430) held lands near Horden in County Durham, which had been in his family for some time. About 1417 the manor was conveyed to him in trust. His son Walter and brother William are also mentioned. His wife appears to have been Joan, and his heiress was also Joan, who married Robert Rhodes of Newcastle. In 1426 he settled the estate on his trustees and went to fight for Henry VI in France. English fortune in France changed, Joan of Arc was burnt at the stake, and he never returned to England. Probably the same 'Walteri Hawyk' was listed in a Durham Priory inventory in 1430, associated with the lands of Hawthorn. He is recorded in 1437 in an inquisition relating to the inheritance of the late Thomas de Haddam in Durham. Little Eden passed from his daughter to Robert Rhodes and then to John Trollope of Thornley. William (13th/14th C.) Chaplain of Berwick Castle recorded in 1311/2. There is an English record of his salary and candle allowance in that year. Probably the same Chaplain is recorded in 1306 being paid for travelling from Dumfries to meet the English Chamberlain to inform him of the death of John Comyn. William (14th C.) recorded (along with Walter) on a list of 56 people admitted to 'first tonsure' in Durham Priory records in 1340. William (14th C.) mentioned in letters of safe conduct to England of 1362 (along with 2 companions and 3 horses), 1367 (with one lad and 2 horses) and 1369, where he is stated to be a merchant. This may have been the same 'William de Hawyk' who was magistrate of Edinburgh and seems to have acted as treasurer for the city in the period 1367–69, when there were monies collected to pay the Edinburgh portion of the King's debt. William (d.c.1441) clerk in the Diocese of St. Andrews. He was recorded as a 'Determinant' at St. Andrews in 1421. He was first Rector of the Church of Guthrie, dedicated to St. Mary, which was a prebend of the Cathedral of Brechin. This also gave him the Canonry of Guthrie; however, he petitioned in 1423 for this to be confirmed because of a dispute arising over him inadvertently not being a 'tonsured clerk' when the gift was first given. In 1425 Patrick Lethe requested the Canonry and Prebend of Guthrie on account of his marriage contract with Janet, daughter of John 'de Grymisby, cursor of the Pope'. He was recorded as Canon of Brechin in 1430 when he was given the vicarage of 'Inchstur' as well as Inverkeilor. In 1431 he also asked to be given the vicarage of Markinch, as well as Glencairn. Also in 1431 he was 'present in the Roman Court' when acting as a cautioner for a debt of the Bishop of Brechin. His name is recorded in deeds for 1434. Probably the same 'William de Hawyk' is recorded in a dispute over the Canonry of Brechin in 1444, more than 3 years after he died (also spelled 'Hawyk', etc.; some of these people may also have had surnames that are simply not recorded; see also Hawick and the Hawicks).

delate (dee-łā') v., arch. to accuse, denounce before a court or kirk session – '... to resett Gipsies, Vagabonds, Randie beggars, and idle persons who have no stated residence of living and to delate and report information of all such, &c' [PR1711], 'The Minister delated John Scott, beddell, as Guiltie of Drunkenness ...' [PR1724], 'Elders were ordered by the minister to search the town and 'to delate the absentees'' [JJV], 'He would cause delate him to the circuit ensuing, if he walked not more submissively and obtempering to the laws both of God and man' [JW] (Scots law term).

del'd (deld) interj., arch. dash it, damn it – 'He sometimes would say 'Dod deld!'. Sometimes 'Deverr desht'. And if he was very upset, he descended to 'Dod deld devert desht!'' [JeC] (euphemism, probably a variant of the English dialect 'dall').

delicht (dee-licht) v., n., arch. delight – 'I satt doun anunder his skaddaw wi' grit delicht . . . ' [HSR], 'Delicht thysel alsua in the Lord; an' he sall gie thee the wushes o' thine hairt' [HSR], 'Hosts with patriotism warming, Hearts and hames delichted charming' [RK].

the Dell's Pool (thu-delz-pool) n. pool in the Borthwick Water, said to be a place of evil spirits (see also the Deil's Pool).

Deloraine (de-lo-ran, -rān) n. area around where the Deloraine Burn meets the Ettrick Water, where the farms of Easter and Wester Deloraine are. It was a Crown land from at least 1456, assigned to George Lauder in 1488, Sir David Scott of Buccleuch in 1490, Patrick Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell in 1491 and Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1499. John Scott of Deloraine is recorded in 1493 and he and Robert of Deloraine in 1494/5. It remained Crown property until at least 1504 when it was let to the son and widow of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. Walter Scott of Buccleuch held it in 1512. In 1541 these lands and 'Wardishope' were occupied by Thomas Anderson, John Dickson, William Laidlaw and others, paying £72 yearly. George Anderson was there in 1581. It was possessed by the Scotts from at least 1543, becoming an Earldom in 1706, with the title held by the younger sons of Scott of Buccleuch, and dying out with the 4th Earl in 1807. 'Wester and Easter Dalorrens' are listed among houses in Selkirkshire in c.1680. West and East Deloraine are shown in the survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1718, when the farms covered 2700 acres and 1002 acres, respectively. Scott of Satchells states that William Scott, 'Cut-at-the-black', was among the 24 'pensioners' of Buccleuch and was given the lands of Nether Deloraine for his service. The lands inspired Sir Walter Scott's fictional character William of Deloraine, of whom there was a stained-glass representation at Silverbuthall House, now in Drumlanrig's Tower. West Deloraine was tenanted by Walter Laidlaw (d.1712). The farm of Over Deloraine, later called 'West Deloraine', was farmed by descendants of the Scotts of Singlie in the 19th century. East Deloraine was tenanted by John Grieve (of Killburn) from 1800. In 1802 Nether Deloraine was valued at £854 and Wester Deloraine at £1049 (perhaps derived from St. Orran, with the initial element possibly being the Cumbric 'dal' meaning 'haugh', however, it has also been suggested that the name comes from an association with the family 'de Lorraine'; it is 'Dalloryane' in 1456, 'Dalloriane' in 1468 and 1471, 'Dallorian' in 1488, 'Dauloriane' in 1490, 'dalloryane' in 1493, 'Dalorian' in 1494, 'Delloraine' in 1494/5, 'Dauloriane' in 1499, 1501, 1502 and 1512, 'Dellorien' in 1594, 'Dalloriane' in 1494/5, 'Dallorane' in 1581, 'Dolorian' in 1634, 'Doloriane' in 1653, 'Dolleriane' in 1661 and 'Dalorin' in 1784; it is marked 'O. Dallorean' and 'N. Dallorean' on Blaeu's 1654 map, while only 'N. Dallorean' is marked on one of Gordon's c.1650 maps and 'Dalorrens' on 2 others; it gave its name to a town in Manitoba, Canada).

Deloraine Court (de-lo-rān-kōr') n. part of Stirches, off Guthrie Drive, built in 1977, named after an area in Selkirkshire, which was an Earldom in the 18th century and inspired the character in Walter Scott's 'Lay of the Last Minstrel' – 'Then William of Deloraine, good at need, Against a foe ne'er spurr'd a steed' [SWS].

Deloraineshiel (de-lo-rān-sheel) n. former name for a cottage near Deloraine. James Sinton was shepherd there in at least 1729–37. Michael Johnston was there in 1753. The cottage was rebuilt in about 1853, at a site about a mile north-east of the original location. It is now run as a holiday home (also called 'Deloraineshiels').

Delorne (de-lōrn) n. local variant of Deloraine – 'Ah! would I might read by yonder star That wheels on the crest of dim Delorne The gleam of the blades on Carter Bar Bringing me homeward my eldest born' [WHO].

deludit (dee-loo-dee', -di') pp. deluded – 'Ah, puir deludit Maggie Broon! Ahe thocht the High Street Belnaged the Toon' [DH].

dem (dem) v., arch. to dam, stem – 'Trying to dem the stream' [JAHM].

Demainholm (dee-mān-hōm) n. farm in Castleton Parish, a couple of miles south of Newcastleton. It is probably either the 'Dominium inferius' or 'Dominium superius' on the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale, in the section attached to the Mangerton estate. It was 'Dalman' when, along with Bluntwood and 'the Crouke' it was owned by David Purdom and then in 1476 granted by Archibald, Earl of Angus to Robert Elliot of Redheugh. It was part of the lands of the Elliots of Redheugh and Larriston until passed to James Eliott, who married the heiress in 1637. It seems to have been the main dwelling place of Robert Elliot of Redheugh in about 1624. In 1677 it was sold by Robert Elliot of Larriston to John Elliot, who continued to own it into the early 18th century. It was valued at £200 in 1678. It is probably the 'Manholme' listed in 1694 when tax was paid for 4 hearths there. The lands belonged to

John Elliot in the 1740s, when valued at £200. They later became part of the Buccleuch estates and have been partly planted as woodland. A Mr. Paterson was recorded as owner in 1788. Andrew Kyle was there in 1792 and Adam Armstrong in 1797. Thomas Hall was a servant there in 1797 and Robert Turnbull in 1801. Robert Pott and Matthew Little were owners in 1811, when it was valued at £200. It was farmed by Joseph Armstrong in the 1830s and 40s and Thomas Scott in the 1850s and 60s. By about 1874 it was owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. John Holliday was tenant in the early 20th century (also written 'D'mainholm'; it is 'Damainhoõ' on Blaeu's c.1654 map and marked on Stobie's 1770 map; it is recorded as 'Dalman' in 1476, 'dawmane' in 1489, 'Dalemane' in 1526, 'Demayne Holme' in 1583, 'dowmane' in 1613, 'Dowmanie' in about 1624, 'Demaynehelme' in 1624, 'Dowmaynholme' in 1637, 'Manholm' in 1718 and 'De Mountholm' in 1797).

demit (dee-mit, -mi') v., arch. to resign, give up an office, hand over.

demn (dem) interj. damn, used to express mild irritation, contempt or disappointment – 'demn, A didni wun again', 'Wi' a gledge at the sky As the cutty reeks, A demm at a thistle And on wi' his breeks' [DH], adj. damned – 'wull ee git they demn things oot the road', 'ee're a demn nuisance yow', '. . . was heard ti say 'A loved ma wife that much that A yince demn near tellt her!' ' [IWL] (cf. dern and desh).

demned (demd) adj., pp. damned – ' 'Fair fa' ma honest, sonsie face!' – Look at your ain – a dem'd disgrace!' [DH] (also written 'dem'd').

dempster (demp-stur) n., arch. an officer of a court who announces the sentences – ' 'Hawick forever and independent', a formula . . . handed down from one dempster to another . . . ' [RM] (Scots law term).

Dempster (demp-stur) n. James (b.1821/2) from Clackmannan, he was a weaver in Hawick, living at 1 Brougham Place in 1851. In 1861 he was a 'Woolen Warper' at 2 Melgund Place in 1861. In 1858 he donated an 'old fringe-loom' to the Museum. His wife was Agnes and their children included Charlotte, Andrew, Agnes, Walter P., Christina and James. John (16th C.) witness to a 1622 sasine in Hawick for Allan Deans. He is recorded as 'mollitore', i.e. 'miller'.

demuired (de-mewrd) adj., arch. sad, downcast – '. . . whan A turn dowie an hum-jum or take a demuirrd dwam, fair leike ti faa off the spake wui the wuddles an the vexes o woark' [ECS].

den (den) v., poet. to den, hide, escape into a den – 'You mind when Robin and his gang, To rob you denn'd the trees amang' [JoHa], 'The day it seem'd short, and the night seem'd nae lang, As joy, peace an' plenty I denn'd them amang' [JoHa], 'We've den'd 'aneath the blooming slaes, And row'd amang the ferns' [JT].

Dena (dee-na) n. poetic name for the Dean valley around Denholm – 'Dena! when sinks at noon the summer breeze, And moveless falls the shadework of the trees, Bright in the sun thy glossy beeches shine, And only Ancram's groves can vie with thine' [JL].

Dene see Dean

Dene Road (deen-rōd) n. road leading out of Denholm to the south, also known as Dean Road. The beginning of the road is the location for the village's war memorial, as well as public toilets, and has no pavement. There are also footpaths leading into Denholm Dean.

Denesyde (deen-sīd) n. former farm in the Rule valley, also known as Nether Hawthornside, lying on the left-hand side going up Hawthornside Brae. It was part of the old barony of Feu-Rule and its exact boundaries are not known. In 1562 'Johnne Turnbullis peill thair' is described, when assigned to Agnes Herries as superior. Thomas Turnbull was recorded there in 1586/7. Robert Turnbull was recorded there in 1611. It was 'Deansyde' among the properties of Sir William Eliott of Stobs in the Barony of Feu-Rule in the late 17th century. There were Turnbull Lairds there until about 1715, when Adam Turnbull fled, due to a combination of debts and having been a Stuart supporter (written 'Deansyd' in 1562 and 'Deynesyde' in 1586/7).

Denholm see Denum

Denholm (den-hōm) n. municipality in Quebec, Canada, about 40 km north of Gatineau. The area is popular with summer cottage vacationers. It was named in 1869, after the village near Hawick. Several mines once operated nearby. The population is a few hundred.

Denholm Drive (de-num-drIv) n. name of a street in Wishaw.

Denholm Hill (de-num-hil) n. hill just before Cogsmill, on the left-side of the B6399, reaching a height of 863 ft. The name is confusing, since there is no obvious link with Denholm. The hill contains the remains of 2 hill-forts, the later one being a roughly 310 ft by 120 ft enclosure, with extensive ramparts and ditches and signs of a rectangular building inside. To the south-west is the earlier fortified structure, largely obliterated by the other one. A stone axe was found here and is in the Museum (cf. Denumhill).

deniet (dee-nI-ee', -i') pp., poet. denied – 'But he deniet afore them a', sayin', I kenna what thou sayest' [HSR].

denner (de-nur) n. dinner, often meaning the main meal of the day, traditionally served at mid-day – '... Behald, I hae prepairet my denner; my ousen an my fatlins ar killet, an' a' things ar readie' [HSR], 'Madam', quo he, 'ye'll steal nae mair, – Nae denner o' mine ye'll steal' ' [WiSp], 'The Priest o' the parish, the spruce young Dissenter, Were daily attendants at denner and tea' [JT], 'Cry on iz whan the denner's ready' [ECS], 'A faand the guid o that denner as suin as A'd gaen wui'd' [ECS], 'Heavy wi' denners And heat, the scholars dreamed o' the Dunk' [DH], '... hei's played at coontless dances, ceilidhs, concerts, denners, Burns Suppers an weddins' [IWL], 'A ayeways look forrit ti this speech being delivered it the Callants Club dennur ... ' [IHS] (also written 'dennur').

the Denner (thu-de-nur, thu-de-ner) n. Common-Riding Dinner on the Friday, after the Marches have been ridden, and the Flag returned for the night. The Provost presides, and the Cornet is presented with his official medal. There follows many toasts and songs, including a special silent toast to the 'Memory of Drumlanrig'. The dinner is mentioned in the Burgh Records at least as early as 1809, and presumably was then already an old tradition. A 'toddy ladle used at the Common-Riding dinner for 130 years back' was donated to the Museum in 1863. Before the Under Haugh was sold off (in 1854) the Cornet and his guests used to march there after the Dinner, wearing their oak chaplets, to dance the Reel. This 'Denner' was a lunchtime affair (or early afternoon, since things usually ran late!), immediately after the Song Singing, and another dinner also took place on the Saturday. In the mid-19th century the event was for the Cornet and his unmarried supporters only, there being a separate dinner for the Cornet's Father and his supporters, along with the Magistrates, this often being in the Tower Hotel. In 1855 the Cornet's Dinner was in the Ewe and Lamb (where the Cornet's family were proprietors). In 1886 the oak leaf tradition was revived as part of the Friday Dinner proceedings, and the timing eventually moved to later in the day. After the Dinner a procession, headed by the Fifes and Drums and some fiddlers, would proceed to the Games at the Haugh, displaying their oak emblems, where the Reel was danced. In the late 19th century there was also a Dinner on the Saturday, between the morning Races and the afternoon Games. Nowadays the Dinner is followed soon after by the Ball. Until 1902, and in a few other years in the early 20th century, it was held in the Town Hall, but since then has been in a variety of hotels etc. The dinner of 1946 was recorded by the B.B.C. Formally a very popular event, tickets were resticted to 250 in 1955, but since then numbers steadily dropped. To counter this in 2004 the event became a mixed one and the formal name is now 'the Common-Riding Dinner'. In 2007 it was held along with Ball in the Town Hall. A separate event, 'the Greetin Denner' or 'Cornet's Dinner' is held on the Saturday night after the Common Riding has come to a close.

dent (den') n., arch. a layer of tough clay – 'There is also throughout the district, and covering the sandstone, so as greatly to interfere with its being quarried, a deposit of reddish clay, known by the local name of dent' [RDA], 'It is exactly what the soft schistose rock becomes, which we call 'dent', when crushed and ground down by cart-wheels' [PJE].

Denton (den-ton) n. John (18th C.) 'postillion' at Riddell in 1794, when he was working for Lady Riddell. He was probably brought from elsewhere.

denty (den-tee) adj., poet. dainty – 'Hech, sirs! The denty fowk! Primpin by, pair by pair, Kirkgaun ... ' [DH].

Denum (de-num) n. Denholm, village surrounding a spacious green, about 5 miles east of Hawick, famous as the home of both John Leyden and James Murray. The village is mentioned as early as 1296 when Guy of Denum signed the Ragman Rolls. Originally built around the confluence of the Teviot with the Dean Burn, the early village was burned during English raids in the 16th century. The lands were granted to Thomas of Cranston by Thomas Earl of Mar and Lord of Cavers, sometime before 1375. Cranston was to pay a silver penny in the town of Denholm at Whitsunday in blench farm' if asked. This shows that Denholm was already considered a town by the late 14th century. It then continued as the seat of the Cranstons until purchased by Sir Archibald Douglas in 1658, reuniting the area with the Cavers estate. Henry Turnbull, William Clerk, Adam Nichol, John Hobkirk, Patrick

Thomson and James Nichol were recorded as residents there in 1493 and 1494/5. The lands were included in the Barony of Cavers in documents of 1509/10 and 1511, and regranted to Sir William Cranston in 1512; it was then referred to as 'the ten pound lands of the granter's dominical lands of Dennome'. It may have been burned by Dacre's men in 1535 and was plundered by the English in 1541, with all the cattle taken, 3 houses burned and 2 men killed. Like much of the area, it was burned by the Earl of Hertford's men in 1545. It was probably also burned by Dacre's men in the previous decade. The town was still included in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687, including the 10-pound land of the demesne lands of Denholm. There were 17 people listed there on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. In 1696 the Scottish Parliament enacted 2 annual fairs in the village, on 16th June and 5th November, each lasting for 8 days; in 1698 Parliament enacted a weekly market on Wednesdays. The present village layout dates to the 17th century after Sir Archibald Douglas feued 8 ¾ acres for houses and gardens around the Green in 1764–66. It is a rare unspoiled example in Scotland of a village planned around a green. The village had a small but thriving hosiery industry from the late 18th century until the early 20th (with Andrew Scott and Dickson & Beattie being prominent manufacturers); in 1844 it is reported that there were 87 stocking frames in the village. There is an existing plan of the village from 1835, when the feuars gave up their rights to turfs at Denholm Mill in exchange for gardens and lands. Until the early 19th century it was known as 'Dirty Denholm', with the Green being filled with middens, storage heaps and animal pens. The village was designated a Conservation Area in 1971, listed as a 'planned village'. A suspension footbridge erected at Denholm in 1826–27 was the only way of crossing the Teviot between Ancrum and Hornshole; it was removed in 1875 (although the pylons remain) following the construction of Denholm's own Teviot Bridge in 1864/5, using stone from Denholmhill. The town has long had its own primary school. A stone cross was erected as a memorial after WWI. Several artefacts from the area are in Hawick Museum, including flints, whetstones, stone axes, hammerstones and spindle whorls. The village probably gave rise to most instances of the surname 'Denholm' or 'Denholme' (although there is also a parish of Denholm in Dumfriesshire). A plan of the village was drawn up by G. Scott in 1835. A book 'Denholm: a history of the village' was written by Margaret Sellar in 1989. Population (1991) 591 – 'A pickle blewe reek threh the hoose-lums o Denum draigglet in a swutherin clud' [ECS], 'But Denholm noo is growing up, And hooses stand up fast, Around the bield whaur Leyden dwelt, She's found her place at last' [WFC] (the origin has been suggested as Anglo-Saxon or Old English 'dene holm', for 'river meadow by the narrow wooded valley', but is more likely to be simply from 'aet thaem denum', meaning 'at the valleys', where the dative plural ending of 'dene' has been retained; the name is first recorded in 1296 as 'Denum', although the 'vill of Dennum' in Northumberland is recorded in 1287, with a possibility that the origin is the same, or even that the name was transplanted from there; the spelling is a variant on 'Denum' until the mid-17th century, with the extra 'h' appearing first in 1633 and presumably being an error or affectation; it is 'Denome' around 1370, 'Denum' in 1436, 'Dennowme' in 1483, 'Denhame' in 1490, 'Dennum' in 1493, 1494/5 and 1509/10, 'Dennum' 'Dennom' and 'Dennome' in 1512, 'Dennvme' in 1545, 'Denhame' in 1548/9, 'Dennovme' in 1574 and 'Denholm' in 1636; it is marked 'Dennhoome' on Pont's c.1590 manuscript map, 'Denhoome' and 'Denhoome' on Gordon's c.1650 maps and 'Dennhoome' on Blaeu's 1654 map; there are places of the same name elsewhere, e.g. near Bradford).

Denum (de-num) n. Alan (14th C.) recorded in 1326/7 in a charter of the Barony of Skravelyn in which he gained 'Robertstoun' from William of Govan. His wife Agnes is also mentioned. Perhaps the same Alan was recorded as a carter in 1301, who was paid for 'bringing the King's engines from Jedburgh', probably for the siege of Bothwell Castle; he is there 'Alan de Denham'. He may also be the Alan 'de Denvme' who purchased the lands of 'Le Hyllis' and a piece of ground on the River Medwyn in Lanarkshire in 1299. Edmond (14th C.) son of William. He is recorded in 1357, when it was said that after his father's death the lands of Cornhill in Norham they had gained from William Prendergast had passed to Sir William Heron. At about the same time he also had permission to go to Lochmaban Castle as the Earl of Northampton's general attorney. Guy (13th C.) signatory of the Ragman Rolls of 1296, where he is 'Gwy de Denum'. This suggests that he came from a family that owned the lands at Denholm, but nothing else is known about him. In 1303/4 he is 'Guy de Denhom' on the inquest for inheritance of the Barony of Wilton involving the de Charters family. He was also on a jury in 1304 at Dumfries (made up of men from Dumfriesshire and Roxburghshire) to decide on the privileges claimed by Robert Bruce, Earl of Carrick (and later King); he is there 'Gy de Denhom'. Henry (16th/17th C.) recorded in the Potterrow in Edinburgh in 1617. James (17th C.) recorded as 'fermorarius in Blaickfoord' who inherited 'Marsemilne' from his brother John in 1680. He was thus a farmer. John (13th/14th C.) recorded as an esquire at Berwick and Bothwell in 1311/2 and then at Edinburgh, in English records. He was owner of Melmorby Tower in Cumberland and asked for aid in defending it from Scottish attacks; in 1335/6 he was granted money by the Governor of Berwick. He was recorded along with William in the rolls of Edward III in the period 1333–57. It is unclear if they were brothers or father and son, but they were surely both descended from Guy. Denholm may already have been a possession of the Earl of Douglas by this time, but the place may have derived its name from this family. Certainly there is no evidence that the family played any local role after this time. His name is sometimes written 'Denoum'. John (13th/14th C.) recorded in 1324 when he gave lands of 'Winestone' to the Priory of Durham. John (15th C.) Chaplain of Lesmahagow, recorded in 1459 on a 'retour' for lands of Broughton. Simon 'of Denum of Robertoun' (probably the one near Peebles) was also a witness. He was additionally recorded as witness in 1461/2. John (15th C.) recorded as 'Johanni Denom', along with Thomas, associated with the lands of Cotes in an inventory of Durham Priory in 1464. Perhaps the same John was also associated with 'Cottes Super Moram', along with 'Relicta Denome'. John (17th C.) recorded as 'fermorarii in Marsemilne' when his brother James in ' Blaickfoord' was his heir in 1680. John (17th C.) waulker, who leased a waulk mill, house and piece of adjoining land at Highchesters from Walter Scott, Earl of Tarras in 1682 for 15 years. John (17th C.) appointed as Commissary for the Army in 1650. Margaret (16th C.) recorded as 'Margret Dennym' when she gave her consent for the rental of 'Neder Mosplat' in the Barony of Carstairs in 1533. She may have been related to Simon who was retoured in lands in Carnwath in 1506. Randolph (13th C.) possible member of this family. He was listed as 'Randulf de Derum' from Roxburghshire, when he paid homage to Edward I in 1296. Since 'Guy de Denum' was also on the list, then it is possible that this is an error for 'Denum'. Richard (13th C.) recorded as 'Ricardum filium Alani de Denum' in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. It seems likely that his lands were in England, and any connection with the local family is uncertain. Robert (13th C.) listed as 'Robertus de Denum' son of Ermgard in the 1269 assize roll for Northumberland. He may be the same as 'Roberti de Denhum' listed in 1256. It is unclear whether these were lands of the same name in England, and if so whether there was any connection between the Roxburghshire and Northumberland. Robert (15th C.) recorded in 1430 in a list of revenues from Durham Priory, associated with East Meryngton. Robert (16th C.) recorded in 1539 in a rental list from Durham Priory, associated with Acley. Robert (16th/17th C.) butcher who was servitor to Walter Moffat in Edinburgh in 1619. Roland 'Rowe' (15th C.) witness in Lanark in 1488. Simon (15th C.) recorded as witness to a sasine of Ladyurd (Peeblesshire) in 1434. He is described as 'of Scottystoun'. Simon (15th C.) recorded as 'of Robertoun' when he was a witness in 1459. In 1489/90 he resigned the lands of Roberton (near Peebles) to Sir William Cockburn. He resigned his lands of Roberton in 1489/90. In 1497/8 he is described as 'Simon Denum, laird of Roberton' in another document relating to the land of Roberton, and in 1500 he is 'Simon Denum' when he resigned the lands of Newham near Peebles. Simon (15th/16th) retoured in his lands in the Barony of Carnwath in 1506. He is probably related to the earlier Simon, as well as to Margaret, who was associated with nearby lands in 1533. William (d.1350) recorded in 1317/8 when he was one of the men charged with reporting those in Northumberland who had rebelled against Edward II. In 1318/9 he served as a justice in Newcastle for an inquisition, in 1324/5 is recorded along with William 'Rydel' as an envoy of the King to Berwick, in 1327/8 he was on a panel appointed by Edward III to discuss complaints on the Border and was on another panel of inquisition in 1328/9. He is 'William de Denum' in 1330 when he received a pension for service in the service of Edward III against Scotland. In 1332 he was one of 3 English justices ordered to search for the men who had imprisoned a Scotsman in Northumberland. Also in 1332 he was one of 2 Englishmen appointed by Edward III to meet with 2 representatives from Scotland and then to negotiate with the Guardian and nobles of Scotland. In 1346 he was part of an inquisition in Northumberland. He is presumably the same William mentioned in the rolls of Edward III in the period 1333–57, sometimes along with John. They are likely to both be descendants of Guy. An English case in 1357 describes how he and his son Edmund had been granted the former lands of William Prendergast in Norham (Northumberland), before passing them to Sir William Heron. His designation is written 'Denom' and variants, as well as 'Denum'. There is a 'William Gray of Denum' recorded in 1319 among Englishmen given casks of wine by the King for their losses suffered at the hands of Scotsmen; whether this might be the same man is unclear. William (17th C.) recorded as portioner of 'Ersilton' in 1662 (also written 'Denholme', 'Dennum', 'Denum', etc.; the surname probably came from the vilale near Hawick).

Denum Acres (de-num-ā-kurz) n. former farm near Denholm, part of the Cavers estate.

Denum Baa (de-num-baw) n. handball game that takes place annually in Denholm on the Monday after Shrove Tuesday – 'First comes Candlemas, then the new moon, the following Tuesday is Fastens E'en, the following Monday is Denholm Ba' Day' [T]. Formerly the single men were the 'uppies' and the married men the 'doonies', while today the 'doonies' are those living in the village while the 'upies' are outsiders. The 'baas' are sponsored, often by newly weds or by pubs. The game is centred on the Green, with the 'hails' being the bridge at Honeyburn and the 'Gang' on the Jedburgh road. The spikes on the railings opposite the Cross Keys were the scene of many accidents, including a man called Best who was killed there one year. At one point there was a game at 9 a.m. for the apprentices and another at 1 p.m. for the men, with a separate boys game on the Friday. The single game now takes place in the afternoon.

Denum Band (de-num-bawnd) n. former band from Denholm. It is mentioned in a report from 1835, when it lead the reform supporters from the district as they paraded into Hawick for the voting.

Denum Brig (de-num-brig) n. bridge over the Teviot at the northern exit from the village, on the B6405. It was built in 1864/5 by Marshall and Ballantyne of Hawick, funded by local subscription, to connect with Hassendean Station 1½ miles away, and replacing the 1827 pedestrian chain suspension bridge. This was opened to connect the village with the nearby train station, and at the time was the only substantial bridge across the Teviot between Hornshole and Ancrum. Douglas of Cavers chaired the bridge opening ceremony of July 1865. There is a crude fish carved into the wall along the middle of it. The bridge over the Dean Burn on the way into Denholm is also called by the same name; this was swept away in 1806 and rebuilt a little lower down the stream.

Denum Cauld (de-num-kawld) n. weir in the Teviot at Denholm. J.P. Alison may have been involved in the design of renovations in the 1890s.

Denum Common (de-num-ko-min) n. former common lands for use by residents of Denholm. This was situated on the slopes of Ruberslaw, 'above the plantationat the Hill-head'. The feuars had rights to one day's 'darg' of turf from there, this later being replaced by a right to cut as much turf as they wanted from a particular part of the common. The parts were separated by boundary stones, some of which are still there.

Denum Congregational Kirk (de-num-kong-gree-gā-shu-nul-kirk) n. church of the Congregational Union, also known as 'Denum Independent Kirk'. It was established in 1826, following the efforts of James Douglas of Cavers, who hired Francis Dick as an itinerant preacher. There were 7 initial members, 2 from Denholm, 2 from Cavers, 2 from Hawick and 1 from Jedburgh. The first full time minister, Robert Wilson, was appointed following the death of the Cameronian preacher James Duncan; when Wilson started there were only 18 members, but that number grew. From the early 1830s the congregation used the former Cameronian Chapel in Denholm, but by the late 1870s had run out of steam. An approximate roll of the ministry is: Francis Dick (summers) 1824–34; Robert Wilson 1835–42; John Spence 1844–46; John McRobert (1846–76).

Denum Court (de-num-kōr') n. Denholm Court, street planned for Stirches, but never built, despite appearing on Burrow's street map.

Denum Cross (de-num-kros) n. former market cross in Denholm, also known as the 'Corse'. It was a low, circular stone, surmounted by a small cross, located at the centre of the Green. By the early 19th century all that remained was the base of the cross, with a hole where the shaft once fitted. It was then converted into a drinking trough for the village cows.

Denum Dean (de-num-deen) n. sheltered woody glen, about 1 mile long, being the last part of the Dean Burn before it joins the Teviot near Denholm. The gorge is quite deep and shaded in places, and represents a long section of the stream with no road bridge across. The lands were granted to Thomas Cranston sometime before 1375, perhaps around 1358. It was listed in an English description of Cavers Parish in about 1380. It is listed in 1511 as part of the lands of the Barony of Cavers, and held 'in tenantry' by the Baron in the 1558 charter. In 1574 it was among the lands listed in a discharge between John Cranston of that Ilk and William Douglas of Cavers, included in the non-entry fees for lands in the Lordship of Denholm. The location was said to have been used for secret Covenanters' sermons in the 17th century. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. Thomas Turnbull lived there in 1741 and William Fulton in 1779–83. It was for a long time the property of the Laird of Cavers, who made it into a pleasure garden that became popular with locals in Victorian times. The cottage there was originally built around 1730 as a hunting lodge, becoming a tea pavilion in the 19th century, then being the home of the local woodcutter until 1948, after which it became ruined; the remains can still be seen. An earthwork on the western side measures about 235 ft by 155 ft, and is probably the remains of a settlement, with an entrance on the south side. A spearhead found near here in 1937 was donated to Hawick Museum. The lower part of the Dean was owned by botanist Michael Braithwaite, who gifted it to Denholm Feuars' and Householders' Council in 2019. The area inspired parts of Leyden's 'Scenes of Infancy' – '... Where tangled hazels twined a screen Of shadowy boughs in Denholm's mazy Dean' [JL], '... Weaving my wab o' rustic rhyme Unheard unseen; Or listening to the vocal chime In Denholm's Dean' [WiD], 'Fair Denholm Dean, thy praises have been sung By many a bard whose harp is now unstrung' [TCh], 'For Denholm sits serene and calm, Yet she's mair sprightly noo, E'en though the bonnie sheltered Dean Lies ravaged in the dew' [WFC] (it is 'Denomedene' around 1358, 'Denumdeen' in c.1380, 'Dennumisdene' in 1551, 'Dennumisden' in 1558 and 'Dennovme Dein' in 1574, 'Denholmesdean' in 1687).

Denum Fair (de-num-fār) n. 2 fairs were established by the Laird of Cavers in 1696, the summer fair taking place in early June (later moving to May) and the 'mart' fair in November (the day before Jedburgh's fair). They were the highlights of the village year for the next couple of centuries, taking place on the Green. They would be opened by the Laird of Cavers riding up to the Cross ('riding the fair') and making a proclamation; he also had the right to collect dues on all transactions. Both fairs were used for local hiring purposes, and the 'mart' fair was when families would get in the winter's provisions of salted provisions. The November fair would also end with a bonfire, the 'bough-a-bale'. Both fairs died out around the end of the 18th century, the winter one lasting a bit longer. An unsuccessful attempt was made to continue the fair through the introduction of games in the early 19th century. The tradition of lighting a bonfire on the eve of Jethart Fair continued until the Green was enclosed.

Denum Ferm (de-num-ferm) n. former name for a farm near Denholm. It was recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when Robert Scott was the tenant, and owned 4 horses (distinct from 'Denholm Hill' and 'Denholm Mill'). It is probably the same as 'Denum Haa' and was so recorded with Robert Bulman as farmer in 1868.

Denum Feuars (de-num-few-urz) n. Denholm's first feuars followed the 1658 decision by Sir Archibald Douglas to feu 8¾ acres of land for houses and gardens around the Green. There were originally 47 feuars of these 'auld yairds'. At about that time they had a guaranteed right to a 'darg' (i.e. day's casting) of peats from an area on the lower slopes of Ruberslaw, as well as a load of divots for building or roofing from the Loaning. The feu duty was originally 1 merk Scots. Later each feuar was assigned a specific piece of the Common. In 1707 the lands of the Feuars were valued at £30. More land was feued in the 18th century along the Canongate. In 1835 James Douglas extended the gardens (by about 6 acres) in exchange for the feuars cleaning up the Green. At that time they also lost their right to peats from Ruberslaw, this being exchanged for other privileges, particularly grazing on the common pasture and river haughs. They also cultivated strips of land on the village 'loaning', and were known for breeding geese, this giving rise to the phrase 'Denum for lean geese'. By the mid-19th century there were 60 feuars of the 'new yairds'. The committee set up to administer the Green, including collecting rental for grazing, and for spending on community improvements was called the Feuars. In 1920 all but one of the feuars of land around the Green bought their feus from the Laird, and in 1946 they formally became owners of the common land. At that time the Feuars Committee was replaced by the Feuars and Householders Council. They represented the general interests of the village until the Community Councils were set up in 1972, but today still serve the function of looking after the common land and rights of way, as well as promoting the conservation of the physical, cultural and historical heritage of Denholm. The chairman of the committee was formerly known as the 'Chief Feuar'.

Denum Flid (de-num-flid) n. name sometimes used to describe a flood which particularly hit Denholm on 9th August 1806. Like the 'Great Flid' in Hawick 4 decades earlier, this was a surprise flood on a summer's day. There was a terrific lightning storm from about 2 p.m., and the Dean Burn swelled to a great size, carrying trees down, including the 'King of the Dean', and sweeping away Denholm Bridge. The flood had entirely abated by 9 p.m.

Denum Flooer Show (de-num-floo-ur-shō) n. annual flower and vegetable show in Denholm, starting in 1849.

Denum Ford (de-num-fōrd) n. former ford across the Teviot at Denholm. It was situated a little downriver from the later bridge, at the end of the road leading directly north out of the village, where the river is fairly shallow (still marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Denum Free Kirk see Denum Kirk

Denum granny (de-num-graw-nee) n. jocular term applied to a player in a game (particularly dominoes) who comes back to win from a position of nearly overwhelming defeat – 'hei was twae nil doon, bit then 'ei din a Denum granny an bate is threi twae'.

Denum Green (de-num-green) n. centre of Village life in Denholm. The houses were laid out around the Green in the 17th century. However, the Green became quite unkempt and filthy, having around its extremities pig-houses, dung and ash heaps and mounds of sticks and peat for fuel. There was also once a ditch across it at the lower end. In 1826 it was written that on the green 'flocks of geese are constantly feeding'. In 1835 the Laird of Cavers, wishing to 'improve and beautify' the Green, encouraged the village feuars to clean it up in exchange for extra garden ground behind their homes. This meant that the Green itself could be used to raise money for the Denholm Common Good, through grazing rental or cash crops. And so the Green was enclosed in 1836. From 1802–58 the 'Auld Schuil' stood in the middle of the Green. Leyden's monument was erected there in 1861, near where the old 'mercat cross' used to be. In the 19th and early 20th centuries the Green was let for grazing, and used occasionally for fairs and army recruitment camps. A large bonfire, the 'Bow o Bale' was also annually held there. And it was long the place where locals would meet friends on New Year's Day. There were formerly 6 large elm trees on the Green that were used for pinning notices to: 2 opposite the Cross Keys; 2 opposite the Fox and Hounds; 1 at Elm Cottage; and 1 opposite the Kirk. In 1959 a proposal to build a road diagonally across the Green was fortunately abandoned. The high wall round the Green was removed in the 1950s. The gates and railings were removed during WWII, but new gates were added in 2000, when the surrounding wall was also repaired – 'How many dear illusions rise, And scenes long faded from my eyes, Since our bounding steps were seen Active and light on Denholm's level green!' [JL].

Denum Haa (de-num-haw) n. Denholm Hall, a farm at the north-west end of Canongate in Denholm. The farmhouse was built about 1837, replacing the farmhouse of Denholm Townfoot, next to the Mill Wynd. It was farmed by the Bulman family almost continuously until the last family member died in 2003. In the late 19th century it had a horse-driven flour mill and there was also once an adjacent bleaching green. The property is now being developed for housing.

Denum Haugh (de-num-hawf) n. former name for a piece of land on the north side of the Teviot near Denholm. In 1780 'Denholm-haugh' is recorded as part of the boundary of the lands of Deanfoot in Minto Parish. 'Deanburn Haugh' is probably another name for the same place.

Denumhaugh Cottage (de-num-hawf-ko'-eej) n. house in Denholm, located south of the junction of the A698 with Westgate.

Denumhill (de-num-hil) n. Denholmhill, farm on the western slopes of Ruberslaw, with the disused Denholm Quarry nearby. It has been a farm since the late 18th century when it was part of the Cavers estate. James Scott was farmer there in at least 1797–9, George Scott was also there in 1797 and John Scott was tenant in 1801. Walter Laing was tenant of the farm and quarry, with his son Walter taking over in the mid-19th century. The quarry here was used from some time in the 18th century until around 1900. A slab of white sandstone with roughly incised figures was turned up by the plough here in 1905. A small Roman brooch (with a swastika emblem) was found there and purchased by the National Museum of Antiquities in Scotland in 1930. A small axe-head or chisel was found there in about 2006. Between the farm buildings and the quarry are the remains of the earthwork known as Whitecastle Fort.

Denumhill Quarry (de-num-hil-kwa-ree) n. another name for Denum Quarry.

Denumhill Wud (de-num-hil-wud) n. Denholmhill Wood, strip of woodland north of the quarry at Denholmhill, south-east of Denholm village.

Denum Hoose (de-num-hoos) n. former name for a large house in Denholm, probably Westgate Haa (listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax records).

Denum Hoose (de-num-hoos) n. victorian villa in Denholm, roughly at the corner of Sunnyside and the Minto Road. Kenneth Oliver lived there for a while.

Denum Horticultural Society (de-num-hor-tee-kul-tew-rul-su-sI-i'-ee) n. horticultural society established in Denholm in 1849.

Denum Independent Kirk (de-num-in-dee-pen-din'-kirk) n. congregation founded in Denholm in 1826 following James Douglas of Cavers hiring Francis Dick as an itinerant preacher in the summers from 1823 or 1824 (see Denum Congregational Kirk).

Denumite (de-num-ī', -īt) n. a denizen of Denholm – 'It's obviously a thing wi the Denumites thin, because they din the same wi me' [MA].

Denum Kirk (de-num-kirk) n. main church in Denholm. The original parish church was at Cavers, with the Cameronian chapel built in the village around 1740. Denholm Parish Church itself was built as a Free Church in 1844/5, with the land being granted by James Douglas of Cavers, and some of the stones being collected from the river. The congregation had broken away from the Parish church in the Disruption of 1843, and included people from Minto and Bedrule. The adjacent Pitt Memorial Hall was built in 1892. The church was always known locally as 'the Kirk', and officially became the United Free Church in 1900. There were improvement made to the church and manse in 1901 and 1927. The congregation rejoined the Church of Scotland in 1929 and hence at that time Denholm (including part of Cavers to the east of the village) was recognised ecclesiastically as a separate parish from Cavers. The Kirk formed a link with Bedrule Church in 1963, with Minto in 1975 and since 2003 has been linked with a larger area called Ruberslaw, which also includes Hobkirk and Southdean. The cemetery was in use from only the second half of the 19th century, with burials being at Cavers before that. A partial roll of the ministry is: A.H. Cowan 1844–46; James McClymont 1847–86; Thomas C. Pitt 1881–92; John Smith 1892–1928; John W. Ross 1929–53; Robert Waugh 1954–74; James F. Falconer 1975–77; John T. Stuart 1978–84; Moira Herkes 1985–88; Thomas Preston 1989–92; William McG. Longmuir 1992–2003; Anthony Jones 2003– .

Denum Library (de-num-lI-bru-ree) n. subscription library set up in Denholm in 1805 by Schoolmaster Andrew Scott, along with William Barrie, George Beattie, George Robson and Walter Turnbull. The committee was soon extended to 7, and would meet annually. The entry fee was intially set at 5 shillings, with a subscription of 1 shilling per quarter. In 1839 it contained 880 books. William Barrie became librarian and his family continued to run it until it closed in 1906. It was situated in Barrie's cottage at the corner of the Wynd.

Denum Lodge (de-num-loj) n. large house on the southern edge of Denholm vollage, along the Dene Road. It was built for Walter Scott (of Lyle & Scott) and originally called 'Craigview'. In about 1917 it was purchased by J.B. Scott, son of manufacturer Peter Scott (no direct relation) and in 1922 there were major renovations undertaken by J.P. Alison. Recently the house was split into 2 separate units.

Denum Mains (de-num-mānz) n. former estate in Denholm. It was listed in an English description of Cavers Parish in about 1380. In 1458/9 there is a discharge between Douglas of Cavers and Cranston of that Ilk for the rentals of the 'twa partis' of it. It was transferred from Thomas Cranston of that Ilk to his son William in 1465/6. Part was still owned by the Cranstons in 1574. Half of it was owned by Douglas of Cavers by 1483 and it was still part of that families holdings in 1509/10 and 1511. It was referred to in 1636 being resigned by John, Lord Cranstoun to William Douglas, Sheriff of Teviotdale. It is unclear exactly where these lands were. They were still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698 (it is 'the demeinz of the Denum' in c.1380, 'Mains of Dennum' in 1458/9, 'Dennum Maynes' in 1509/10, 'Dennumains' and 'Dennummanis' in 1511, 'Dennovme Mains' in 1574 and 'Denholme maines' in 1687).

Denum Manse (de-num-mans) n. manse for the church in Denholm, located on the left side of the road up into the village from Hawick. There used to be a thick wood opposite that made the approach to the village very dark. The house became in serious need of repair and was sold off in the 1960s. The new Manse is on the Hawick side of Leyden's Cottage.

Denum Mert (de-num-mer') n. former auction mart in Denholm, on part of the Little Green. Sales were held here on alternate Wednesdays throughout much of the 19th century and there was also a big sale at Christmas.

Denum Mill (de-num-mil) n. former corn and flour mill in Denholm, near where the Dean Burn enters the Teviot. It operated from at least the 18th century, and had a mill lade. The earlier mill was further to the east, near where the modern bridge crosses the Teviot. William Mitchel was there in 1785. John Scott was tenant of the mill in at least 1789–97 and James Fairbairn was a servant there in 1799. In 1801 James Fairbairn was miller and Alexander Lockie a servant. Thomas Tait was tenant in the 1860s. It became a farm in the mid-19th century, gaining lands from Denholm common, but its water-powered mill operated until the early 20th century. The Laings were tenants and then the Olivers for some time. The buildings were converted into a small housing development in the late 20th century, reached by a road off to the left before entering the village from Hawick. A 'retouched flint' found there is in Hawick Museum, as well as a spindle whorl (note, this should not be confused with Westside Mil, a former textile mill just off the Green; it is 'Denholm Miln' in 1797).

Denum Quarry (de-num-kwaw-ree) n. former stone quarry, near Denholmhill farm, on the western slopes of Ruberslaw, producing a characteristic fine red sandstone. Much stone had been used privately in the 18th century, being started by Mr. Ferguson and continued by Mr. Little. The stone was used to build houses around Denholm, as well as for the renovations at Cavers House. The quarry ran as a business from 1810, with expansion happening around 1818 when the proprietor was Walter Laing, the farmer at Denhomhill. The first quarry opened was the one beside the old hind's house, with the commercial eastern (white) and western (red) quarries both started by Walter Laing. It rose to fame after the stone was used for building Bowhill House, being in great demand for the next half century, with the red sandstone being used for many buildings in and around Hawick. At its height the quarry employed about 200 men, and 60 carts left daily to transport the stone to Hassendean Station. However, it is said that many of the workers suffered from lung disease because of the stone dust. It closed sometime shortly before 1900, with St. Margaret's Convent, opened in 1912, believed to be the last major structure in Hawick built using this stone.

Denum Rob (de-num-rob) n. distinguishing nickname for one of the Hawick men called Robert Scott in the mid-1800s.

Denum Schuil (de-num-skil) n. school in Denholm, first situated on the the Green from about 1803 when it took over from the school at Little Cavers (which itself replaced the former school at Cavers Townhead). This was later called 'the Auld Schuil', and can be seen in an early painting. The clock from this school was moved to the church (where it still runs). The new school was built on Sunnyside in 1852 and until the early 20th century was a single-roomed building, partioned into 3 separate classrooms. After WWII the school became a Junior Secondary, but the secondary department closed in 1972, with the children going to either Jedburgh or Hawick. The present building was opened in 1965, with the old one on Sunnyside becoming the canteen and later the village hall. The new school suffered a serious fire in 2006 and was rebuilt, opening again in 2008. 3 generations of Olivers were masters at Cavers School before it moved to Denholm. George Scott was master there in the 1820s to 50s. Thomas Culbertson was Schoolmaster there about 1882–6 and Andrew Moss in the early 1900s.

Denum Toonfit (de-num-toon-fi') n. former name used for the lower part of Denholm, closer to the Teviot.

Denum Toonheid (de-num-toon-heed) n. former name used to describe the near side of Denholm around where the main road reaches the Green, i.e. around where Westgate and Westside meet the A698.

Dere Street (deer-stree') n. ancient Roman road that runs from York via Corbridge (Northumberland) through the Borders to Crammond (on the Forth). It crosses the Teviot about 12 miles east of Hawick on its way to the large fort at Newstead. It was built in the late 1st century to link York with the northern outpost at Inchtuthil near Perth and the eastern part of the Antonine Wall. The road was used as the main north-south route long after the Romans had left Britain, part being called the 'Via Regia' in the Middle Ages, when it was used to connect Edinburgh with the Border abbeys, and the Soutra Hospital was constructed along it. Some sections now under the modern highway. However, other sections are still fairly well preserved, e.g. near Soutra, and approaching Jedfoot from the south-east (part of St. Cuthbert's Way). It is also traced by part of the A1 and A68 near Corbridge. The camps at Pennymuir and Chew Green were associated with it (the name derives from the post-Roman kingdom of Deira).

Deuchar (dew-chur) n. farm in the Yarrow valley, between Tinnis and Whitefield. It was Crown land in the 15th century, being leased to the Borthwicks in the 1480s and 90s and feued to the Homes in the early 16th century. James Moffat was said in 1494/5 to have had cows and goods stolen from there by Adam Scott in Annelshope. Adam Dalgleish held the land in feu according to a rental roll of 1541. There was once a tower there, perhaps built for the Murrays of Deuchar in the early 17th century. Later there was a corn mill. There was also a connection with the Scotts of Harden around that time, and later Lairds were the Dewars of Deuchar. There may once have been a chapel near here. It was the site of the first bridge across the Yarrow, used by people from the south side of the valley, and the Ettrick Water, to get to the north side; it was built before about 1680 and rebuilt after a flood in 1734. Dalgleishes farmed there in the late 16th century. The farm was attacked by a gang of Armstrongs and others in 1582, and Thomas Dalgleish taken hostage. The original bridge was said to have been built for the Earl of Buccleuch probably around 1653, and had the arms of the family on it. A flood of 1734 broke the south arch, which was repaired about 1748, but the mismatched new arch only lasted about a century before collapsing again. Parts of the old bridge can still be seen (there are many spelling variants, such as 'Douchir', 'Ducher', 'Duchir', 'Duchore' and 'Duquhir'; it is 'Duchoir' and 'Dewchar' on Gordon's c.1650 maps and 'Duchoir' on Blaeu's c.1654 map, which also show a church slightly upriver).

Deuchar (dew-chur) n. John (d.c.1691) tenant in Whitropefoot. His will is recorded in 1691.

deuchy (dew-chee) adj., arch. doughy.

the Devil's Beeftub (thu-de-vulz-beef-tub) n. deep valley north of Moffat, where tradition says that rievers gathered their cattle in former times.

the Devil's Cauldron (thu-de-vulz-kawl-drin) n. deep pool in a stream on the farm of Stonedge. This is where the Devil is supposed to have flung his mother's body after dragging it around the area to make the Catrail.

Devlin (dev-lin) n. Denis resident of Gala, he wrote 'A History of Scotland's Oldest Cycling Club, Hawick Cycling Club, 1881–2010', published in 2020.

devoor (de-voor) v., arch. to devour – 'Margaret Oliver was fined 50/s for calling Isabell Scott, witchesgait and saying that she devoored her awine child . . . ' [BR1658], '. . . the Lord sall swallie thame up in his wræth, an' the fire sall devoor thame' [HSR], '. . . an' hir the wild beæst o' the desart deth devoor' [HSR].

Dewar (joo-ur) n. Donald Campbell (1937–2000) born in Glasgow, his parents were unwell in his early years and he spent most of youth at preparatory schools, including spending time at Berverley, based at Wolfelee House. His accent for the rest of his life reflected time spent in the Borders, although from age 9 he was schooled in Glasgow. He trained as a lawyer and entered politics, eventually becoming First Minister of Scotland. James (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1839 he married Margaret Carnegie, who was from Jedburgh.

the Dewars (thu-joo-urz) n. local annual golf outing, originally involving sales reps from Dewars distillers.

Dewyhaugh (Joo-ee-hawch) n. former farmstead near Teviothead, located on the flat land just south of where the Frostlie Burn joins the Teviot, i.e. close to the modern church. David Scott was recorded there in 1791 and 1797. Thomas Hume was a labourer there in 1799, Robert Scott a mason in at least 1799–1801, David Scott junior also a labourer there in 1799–1801, Chsitopher Scott a mason in 1801 and Thomas Hume a labourer in 1801 (it is marked on Stobie's 1770 map; it is 'Dewryhaugh' in 1791 and 'Dewiehaigh' in 1797, 'Deweyhaugh', corrected from Davyhaugh, in 1799 and 'Dewshaugh' in 1801).

de Wilton (dee-wil-tun) n. Alan (12th C.) recorded as witness to a couple of charters related to the Priory of Durham. Joanna (13th C.) recorded in a charter of sometime in the period 1260–85, in which she is described as 'Lady Johanna de Wiltoun'. Her son and heir Walter 'Pershay' granted the lands of Tarvit (in Fife) and others to Thomas, son of Adam 'Walens' (i.e. Wallace). The granter's brother William was a witness. In a later confirmation of 1312 (relating to the same earlier date) she is described as daughter and heir of Sir John de Wilton. Since Walter was said to be son of Robert de 'Percehay' and Joan de Vesey, it is possible that she was this same woman, and that her marriage to Percehay was her second. It is also not inconceivable that she is also the Lady Jane Vesey who was later recorded as holder of the half Barony of Wilton. John (12th/13th C.) recorded in several charters in the reign of William the Lion. For example, in the period 1195–1205 he witnessed a marriage dowry for the daughter of Philip de Valognes. Although this involved land in Cumberland, the other witnesses were mostly from Roxburghshire, including Simon of Hawick and Alan of Rule; he is recorded as 'Johanne de Wiltune'. Several of the charters were given by Earl David, brother of King William, in the early years of the 13th century. In 1201/2 he witnessed a document for William Comyn. In 1204 he witnessed an agreement between the Bishop of St. Andrews, Durham Cathedral and Coldingham. In 1197 he witnessed a gift of lands in Tayside to Lindores Abbey. He was probably father of the 'John junior, Lord of Wilton' who is recorded about 25 years later. John 'younger' (12th/13th C.) recorded in a charter of some time between 1214 and 1227. It seems likely that he was son of the earlier John. The charter established to the Bishop of Glasgow 5 marks annually in the name of the procuration of the church of Wilton, following an arbtrated dispute he had had with the Bishop. This seems to establish definitively that this John was associated with the local Wilton (rather than some other place). It seems likely he is the same man as recorded as 'Johannes de Wiltoun' recorded in a charter made sometime in the period 1220–38 in which he granted his sister Matilda lands in Tarvit (probably in Fife), but to remain with him if she died childless. He is recorded as deceased in a charter of 1260 in which William Avenel and his wife Matilda granted 'Tarveht In dan' to Thomas Wallace, to be held of his heirs. Presumably the same Sir John had a daughter and heir Joanna (mother of Sir Walter de Pershay or Percehay) who is recorded in a confirming charter of around 1284, referring to this earlier charter of 1260 involving the lands of Tarvit. Robert (12th/13th C.) mentioned during the reign of William the Lion. In the period 1170–90 he was witness to the gift of Anselm of Mow to Melrose Abbey (also witnessed by Roger, son of John of Hawick). In the period 1178–88 he witnessed a grant to Cambuskenneth Abbey (also witnessed by Gervase Avenel, Lord of Eskdale, and Walter Berkeley, Chamberlain). He was surely related to Sir Roger, who was his contemporary (probably the son, unless the names are confused). Robert (12th/13th C.) probably separate from the Robert of about 1180. In the period 1211–33 he was witness to a charter for William Comyn, Earl of Buchan; he is there 'Roberto de Wiltona'. And in about 1221 he witnessed another grant for William Comyn. He may be the same as the Robert listed in a couple of court cases from Cumberland in 1211/2, with his son 'Hogge' also mentioned (although this could be an entirely different English Wilton). Probably that same Robert is listed in a document of 1211/2, relating to the King of Scotland's lands in Tynedale. Robert (13th C.) referred to as 'Robertus de Wyltona' in a charter of about 1290/1 in which he granted lands around Tarvit (in Fife) to John, son and heir of Thomas Wallace (son of Adam). He was probably son of Walter who had granted adjacent lands to that family before him. Robert (14th/15th C.) cleric associated with Glasgow and St. Andrews Dioceses. He may have been the Robert who, along with the Rector of Corrie, witnessed a will made by Sir James Douglas of Dalkeith in 1392. In 1394 there was a request for a benefice for him from Dunfermline Abbey. Also in 1394 Matthew Glendinning, Bishop of Glasgow, requested for 'his kinsman' a benefice from Holyrood Abbey and there was a further expectation of a benefice from Kelso Abbey in 1396. However, he seems to have received none of these. In 1403 he requested a benefice in St. Andrews Diocese, although he already held the Church of Corriie in Glasgow Diocese. Also in 1403 he was described as Papal Chaplain and Bachelor of Decreets (associated with having been a student at Avignon) when he had the promise of a canonry in Aberdeen and another benefice of St, Andrews. His name is written 'Wiltoune' and 'Wylion', which surely derives from Wilton, although there is no evidence of a direct conenction with the area; he was presumably son of an earlier 'de Wilton'. Sir Roger (12th/13th C.) witness to more than 20 documents during the reigns of Malcolm IV and William the Lion. In the period 1153–62 he witnessed an agreement involving the Canons of St. Andrews and in 1160–2 he witnessed 2 other documents for the Bishop of St. Andrews. Other documents involve the Bishop of Aberdeen, Arbroath Abbey, Cambuskenneth Abbey, Glasgow Cathedral and Kinloss Abbey. He is sometimes the only non-cleric on the list of witnesses, suggesting he had a special relationship with the church. In the period 1175–95 he witnessed a charter from Anselm of Whitton to Melrose Abbey, and in the period 1189–95 he witnessed a grant of land in Sprouston to Kelso Abbey. He was 'Ro de Wiltune' and 'Rogero milite de Wiltona' when he witnessed documents for St. Andrews Priory, also involving the Bishop of Aberdeen. These were some time in the period 1172–83. He is also recorded as 'Rogerio de Wyltona' and variants. The last documents are from 1203–14 or 1211–33, and hence it is possible that there are 2 generations represented here. Apart from the 2 documents involving Roxburghshire, there is no evidence to connect him with the local Wilton. Nevertheless, he sems likely to have been ancestor of John, who was certainly associated with the local Wilton and recorded several times around 1200. Roger (13th/14th C.) recorded as 'de Welleton' when he was Archdeacon of Teviotdale in the period 1307–10. He may have been 'of Wilton', although this is not certain. Samuel (13th/14th C.) recorded as 'de Wyltona' when he was on an inquest in 1322 regarding the lands of Jedburgh Abbey and Restenneth Priory. He was presumably connected with the lands near Hawick, but nothing else is known about him. Thomas (15th C.) recorded as 'de Willtoun' in a document of 1428/9 giving the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas, 2nd of Drumlanrig, following the death of his father. The other witnesses had surnames, but there are no obvious clues to his. Walter (b.c.1233) recorded as 'Walter de Pertchay' when he received half the Barony of Wilton (most likely the western part of the Parish) from Edward I in the late 13th century, along with William de Charteris. Both were vassals of Edward I of England. He lost the lands after Bannockburn, with a confirming charter of about 1321 granting Wilton to Henry de Wardlaw. His surname is sometimes written 'Percehay', and seems to have been different from 'Percy' of Northumberland. A charter in about 1283–85 records him as son and heir of Lady Johanna de Wiltoun, ratifying a charter of William Avenel granting the lands of Tarvit to Thomas Wallace. His son was probably Robert. Walter (13th/14th C.) clerk recorded in 1307 in a document relating to payment in the English army. He and Nicholas de Lughteburgh were paid for 'going from Berwick to Lanark and Glasgow to receive the service due to the king in his war on both sides of the Forth'. It is unclear if there was a local connection. William (13th C.) recorded as 'William de Wilton' in 1292 when he was on a jury in Carlisle to decide on whether Gilbert was heir of 'Patrick de Suthaik' near Tiwald in Scotland. It is unclear whether he had a connection with the local Wilton. He could be the same man as 'Willelmum de Wylton', listed in the 1279 assize roll of Northumbeland.

dey see dei

dez (dez) v. does – '...when hei dez get time ti umsel' [IWL] (used for emphasis, cf. dis; also spelled 'des').

Dhu-Craig (doo-krāg) n. name sometimes used for part of Minto Crags – 'At Du-crag, Minto Rocks, it is abundant among the debris of the trap ...' [JAHM] (also written 'Dhu Crag' and 'Du-crag', referred to by Sir James A.H. Murray in 1863).

the Diamonds (thu-dI-mindz) n. Hawick irock and roll band formed in 1960, and lasting for a few years. The line-up included Addie Robson (singer), Bob Fish (lead guitar, later of Johnny & the Roccos), Jim Sheppard (bass guitar), Roy 'Sid' Cairns (rhythm guitar) and Ecky Farmer (drums). Tam Mitchell took over vocals from Addie Robson and was himself replaced by Loudon Temple in 1963. They first played at the Trinity Church Youth Club, then eventually all over the Borders, and further afield. In 1964 they represented the Borders at the Daily-Record-sponsored Macbeat competition at the Kelvin Hall in Glasgow. They supported acts such as Gerry and the Pacemakers and Dusty Springfield.

Dick (dik) n. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children included James (b.1783) and Robert (b.1786). David (18th/19th C.) Hawick stockingmaker who worked for John Nixon. He was one of the founder members of the Independent Kirk formed in Hawick in about 1798. He wrote 'An Explanation of the Revelation of St. John the Divine with some Observations on the Prophecies and Visions, &c.', published in 1799 in Edinburgh; a copy was donated to the Museum in 1871. In this book he claims to have solved the mysteries of this part of the Bible, and his ideas were locally popular for a short time (as recounted in an article by Alexander Michie in 1872). He was known for 'his quiet unobtrusive manner and unblemished moral and religious character'. It was said that his former employers provided him with a weekly pension, to which fellow stockingmakers contributed a halfpenny each. He could be the David whose daughter Jean died in Hawick in 1814 and whose son John died in Hawick in 1829. David (b.1822/3) from Gargunnock in Stirlingshire, he was a mason in Denholm. In 1861 he was recorded as 'Mason – Hewer' and living around the Canongate. His wife was Agnes and their children included David and Mary. Francis (1771–1847) Scottish itinerant evangelical minister of the early 1800s. A native of Monifieth and originally a fisherman in Broughty Ferry, he became an elder in Newbigging Secession Kirk in 1796, but resigned from that church in 1800 and joined the Independents in Dundee. He went to Quebec in 1805, working as a bookseller, preaching on Sundays, where he made money, returning after 7 years and buying property in Edinburgh. He first toured the south of Scotland in the summer of 1823. at the invitation of James Douglas of Cavers. For the next 19 summers he regularly preached at the Cameronian Kirk in Denholm, at Cavers old Kirk, and in Hawick at the Haugh, in the Town Hall and in the Subscription Rooms. He first lodged in Hawick, but later stayed at Deanburn Cottage in Denholm. This led to the formation of Congregational and Evangelical Churches in Denholm and later Jedburgh, Kelso, Melrose, Galashiels and Hawick. His preaching at the Subscription Rooms specifically led to the establishment of a new Congregational Church in Hawick, by 15 members in 1836 (following the earlier demise of the Independent Kirk). He was described (by W.M. Kennedy) as an 'undersized stout gentleman, strongly pitted with small-pox, carrying an equally corpulent and weather-beaten green cotton umbrella, and hurrying along the street on a Sunday evening, with short and rapid step'. Francis (b.1822/3) from Dumfriesshire, he was ' wool slubber' in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 20 High Street, with his family, as well as his brother-in-law (from Dumfriesshire) Thomas Clapperton. His wife was Mary and their children included Margaret, Jane, Joan and James. He is probably the Francis who married Agnes Niven in Hawick in 1848. George (b.1834/5) from Jedburgh, he was a wool spinner in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 3 Tannage Close. His wife was Elizabeth (from Hawick) and their children included Jane. James (18th C.) married Mary Jardine in Bedrule in 1732. John (18th C.) junior, of Camptown, who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1751. John (18th/19th C.) stockingmaker in Hawick. In 1799 he married Barbary (or 'Baby') Miller, and she died in 1822, aged 63. He may be the John whose son David died in Hawick in 1819. John (b.c.1795) gardener at Cavers, originally from Elgin. He was living at 'Cavers Garden' in 1841 and 1851, along with a housekeeper. Rev. John (19th/20th C.) from Dundee, he was Baptist minister at Leven and then at Maxwelltown. He served as minister at Hawick Baptist Kirk 1908–10. During his time the debt for the building of the new church was cleared. He organised free teas for the unemployed during those tough economic times. He was at Harper Memorial (Paisley Road) 1910–17 and Wishaw Baptist Church 1917–21. Richard (18th C.) married Isabel Oliver in Hawick in 1759. It is interesting that he would have been 'Dick Dick'. Robert (18th C.) married Jeanie Lindsay in Southdean in 1768. William (18th/19th C.) baker in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). His wife Jane Leech died in 1798. He could be the William whose daughter Jane was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1768. He could also be the William whose children who died in Hawick were Mary in 1786, Christian in 1792 and Jean in 1798.

Dickie (di-kee) n. Mary (18th C.) housemaid at Minto in 1785 and 1786, when she was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot.

Dickie Lyon (di-kee-lI-in) n. nickname for a Hawick character of the mid-1800s, presumably with surname 'Lyon' – 'Scottie Dottle and Reuben Watt, Dickie Lyon and Jethart Jim, Sam'l Lawrence and Wat the Cat, And Heather Jock baith gray and grim' [HI].

Dickie o the Den (di-kee-ō-thu-den) n. riever from Liddesdale who is mentioned in a footnote in Scott's 'Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border', apparently quoting from Bishop Lesley's history of Scotland. It is unclear where the 'Den' was, or what the original source of the story is. Apparently Dickie, 'a man of great strength and bravery who flourished in the 16th century' was on poor terms with Tweedie of Drummelzier and stole some sheep from his lands, but they unfortunately belonged not to Tweedie but to Vietch of Dawyck (whose family were in the midst of a great feud with the Tweedies). Veitch followed him to Liddesdale with bloodhounds, which eventually stopped at a haystack. On investigation, this turned out to be hollow and to contain Dickie, his men and the stolen animals. Apparently he said 'he would never have touched a cloot (hoof) of them, had he not taken them for Drummelzier's property', which, given the enmity between the 2 famileis, saved him from Veitch's men.

Dickieson see Dickison

Dickison (di-kee-sin) n. Alexander (1798–1835) farm steward of Bowknowe, who was a Trustee and elder of the Relief Kirk in Hawick. Rev. Benjamin (1754/5–1833) licensed by the Presbytery of Kelso in 1779, he was presented to Kirkton Parish in late 1786 and became minister there in 1787. He paid the Horse Tax at Kirkton in 1789–97. In 1800 he was translated to Hobkirk, where he remained until his death. He is recorded contributing to a local subscription for the defence of the country in 1803. He was described (by Tancred) as 'the last of the old school of Hobkirk ministers, who said and did many eccentric things' and was said to sometimes drink to excess, 'particularly after the exertion of dispensing the Sacrament'. He married Jean (or Jane), daughter of William Scott of Woll in 1792, the proclamation being made in Hawick Parish; she was one of the 5 (or 6) daughters of Scott of Woll who were all said to be more than 6 feet tall, and she died in 1824. He wrote a description of the Parish of Kirkton for 'Sinclair's Statistical Account'. He was described as the last of the eccentric old style ministers, often getting drunk during the administering of the sacrement. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included: Ann (b.1813); Robert (b.1820); Nancy (b.1821); and John (b.1822). He may be the John who married Isobel Ferguson in 1818 (perhaps a 2nd marriage). George (b.1813/4) from England, he was a labourer living at Ruecastle Herd's House in Bedrule Parish in 1851. He married Margaret Scott (from Bowden) and their children included Isabella, William, Thomas, Francis and Margaret. Robert (b.1820) son of John, he was an agricultural labourer in Bedrule Parish. In 1851 he was living at Bedrule Schoolhouse with his wife and 2 children. He married Margaret Millar in 1846 and their children included: Jane (b.1847); Isabella (b.1848); and John (b.1851) (also spelled 'Dickeson', 'Dickisoun', etc., and possibly the same as 'Dickinson' or Dickson).

Dickman (dik-mun) n. David William (1875–1959) born in Minto, he was a saddler in Denholm. He bought the business of James Scott in 1905 and moved it to Main Street. He served as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He married Agnes Wylie Mills in 1902 and she died in 1956, aged 81. James Mills (b.1905) was probably their son. David William 'Davie' (b.1901) son of Peter. He was a saddler and bicycle dealer in Denholm, with his business on Main Street. In 1959, late in life, he married Elizabeth Mary Neil and they had a son David William (b.1964). Peter Purves (1863–1936) from Edgerston, son of David and Christina Purves. He may have been a saddler in Denholm, along with his brother David. He married Mary Scott and their children included: Annie (1896); Christina Purves (b.1899), who married William Oliver Smith in 1828; and David William (1901). William (d.c.1688) tenant in Hawick. His will was recorded in 1688.

Dick Newall (dik-new-ul) n. character in Hawick in the mid-19th century. There was a family of that surname in the Village in 1851 and Factory Close in 1861, with Robert Newall being a grocer and spirit dealer on the Howegate in 1841 – 'Poodge and Peedlum gang doon the toon, Sly Tammy and Kittlin' Soup gang up; There's Paddy Barratt and Jamie Broon, And there's Dick Newall and Johnny Whup' [HI].

Dick o the Cow (dik-ō-thu-cow) n. Border ballad that first saw print in Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784), published in Hawick, perhaps communicated by John Elliot of Redheugh. It tells the story of a simpleton after whom the song is entitled, whose 3 cows are stolen by Johnie Armstrong. Dick goes to Liddesdale to try to recover his cows, steals 2 horses and is pursued by Armstrong, after which there is a struggle and Dick ends up with 3 horses. He returns to Cumbria, and pleads to his superior (Lord Scrope) that he only stole from those who had stolen from him, thereby being rewarded. However, fearing reprisals from the Armstrongs, he moves further away, to Brough under Stainmore. Caw adds that 'The Armstrongs at length got Dick o' the Cow in their clutches; and, out of revenge, they tore his flesh from his bones with red-hot pincers'; this part was said to always be added (with some relish) when the ballad was recited in Liddesdale. It is said to be based on events from the latter part of the 16th century.

Dickshaa (diks-haw) n. Dickshall, former area in Kirkton Parish. Walter Watson was recorded there in 1788 when he had a child baptised. It is unclear where this was located.

Dickson (dik-sin) n. Abraham (b.1807/8) from Moudewald, he was shepherd at Haggishaa. In 1861 he was recorded at 2 Burnflat with his granddaughter Margaret Henderson. Adam (16th C.) 'ipothecar' who was one of the men who witnessed the final will of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574. This was witnessed in Hawick, so he may have been a local man. Adam (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. Probably the same Adam had a son William baptised in Bedrule in 1693. Adam (17th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Alison Mather and their children included: Euphan (b.1802); Ann (b.1803); William (b.1806); and John (b.1808). Alexander (18th/19th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He married Bella Turnbull and their children included Anne (b.1792) and John (b.1796). Catherine (b.1794) and John (b.1796), with no mother's name given, are probably also his children. Alexander (b.1800) younger son of Archibald of Housebyres, his baptism is recorded in Hawick. Probably the same Alexander is listed as 'Seedsman' (with no location given) in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick'. Andrew (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5. He was recorded as currently in Buccleuch, but formerly in Thirlestane. He was allowed to 'compone' for the crimes of: resetting George Cockburn and his offspring; bringing in Dickson cousons, 'traitors of Leven' to plunder James Crawford and John Hall in Bourhope; and for reset before the date of his compounding. His surety was Walter Scott of Howpasley. Perhaps the same Andrew was one of the 4 men asked by the Sheriff of Roxburghshire to appraise the goods of Philip Turnbull of Whithope in 1500; his name is recorded there as 'Andro Dikson'. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Malie 'Inglish' and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1677. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Agnes Beattie and their children included: John (b.1770); and Mary (b.1772). Andrew (1773–1837) younger son of James of Alton. He is probably the Andrew 'Esq. of Alton' who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825 (although when exactly he was 'of Alton' is unclear). His death is recorded in 1838, when his executors agreed to close his business of Messrs. Dicksons and Company, Nursery Seedsmen and Florists, Waterloo Place Edinburgh; his trustees were Archibald of Chatto, James of Housebyres, James of Alton (his heir), Archibald Scott of Howcleuch, Charles Scott of Bush and William Richardson of Edinburgh. Andrew of Alton (19th C.) inherited Alton in 1846, it is said after the death of his nephew James (son of his brother Archibald), but this may be confusion with the Andrew who died in 1837. He died unmarried and left Alton to his sister Isabella's son William Richardson. He may be the Andrew of Tofts who is recorded as a heritor of Kirkton Parish in 1838. Andrew (b.1787) eldest son of Archibald Dickson of Housebyres and Marion Fisher. He was baptised in Minto Parish. He was elected Cornet in 1817, from a short-list of 5. In fact in this year the Council had decided not to elect a Cornet, 'taking into their consideration that the Common-Riding has been very hurtfull to the morals of the young people in the Town', and he was one of the leaders of the petition to get the decision reversed, ensuring that regulations would be in place. In 1816 he was on the assize for a trial in Jedburgh, but his name was entered as 'Henry Dickson, younger of Housebyres', this clerical mistake leading to the acquittal of the prisoner. In 1819 he was listed (along with his father) as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire, when he was 'junior of House Byre'. However, he never succeeded and died in Australia. Andrew (19th/20th C.) Stationmaster at Hassendean from perhaps about 1906 until 1929. Before that he lived at Shankend. Archibald (1718–91) son of nursey-owner Robert, he was born in Cavers Parish. He was the main proprietor of the Hassendeanburn nurseries from when his father died in 1744. He was responsible for establishing the nurseries and seedsman's business in Hawick in the 1760s. His residence in Hawick was where the main Cooperative Store's premises would later be built. He purchased from James Lawrie the lands previously known as 'Lawrie's Denn', which would be used as the start of the Dickson's nursey-grounds in Hawick. He was recorded at Hassendean Burn on the 1785–90 Horse Tax Rolls (along with his son, Archibald junior in the last 2 years). He is probably the Archibald listed in 1788 as owner of part of Weensland, valued at £38 5s 6d (probably purchased from the Scotts of Horsleyhill), as well as the south part of Horsleyhill (valued at £255). In 1811 his heirs were recorded as owners of the north half of Horsleyhill, as well as Huntlaw. In Minto in 1740 he married Christian, daughter of James Thomson, Midshiels, and she died in 1799. Their children, basptised in Minto, were: Robert (b.1742), who succeeded to the family business; Agnes (b.1743), who married Walter Dunlop of Whitmuir Hall; James of Alton (b.1746); Janet, who married Alexander Clerk of Flatfield; an unnamed child (b.1748); Margaret, who married Mr. Turnbull of Greenhouse, and whose son Archibald carried on the nursery business in Perthshire; William of Bellwood (b.1753), nurseryman in Perthshire; Archibald of Housebyres (b.1755); Elizabeth ('Betty', b.1757), who married Charles Scott, 3rd Laird of Wauchope; Walter of Chatto; and Christian, who married Rev. James Henderson in Kelso. There is an account book between him and Walter Scott of Harden covering 1749–51 in the National Archives. His wife may be the Mrs. Dickson recorded as owner of Wester Housebyres in Melrose Parish in 1788. Archibald (18th/19th C.) ironmonger on the High Street, recorded on Pigot's 1825/6 directory. Archibald of Housebyres (1755–1834), later of Huntlaw and Hassendeanburn. Born in Hawick, he was the 4th son of Archibald, seedsman of Hassendeanburn. He himself became a prosperous seedsman and bank agent, with nurseries originally near Hassendean and later also in Hawick. He was one of the founders of Dicksons & Laings. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788. He subscribed to John Learmont's book of poetry in 1791. He was recorded as 'Archibald junior' at Hassendeanburn along with his father on the 1789–90 Horse Tax Rolls, and then appeared on his own 1791–97. He was probably the Archibald 'Esq.' who was listed having 3 work horses and 1 saddle horse in Hawick on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, as well as paying the dog tax. He was British Linen Bank agent (along with James) from 1806. He apparently refused to be a Magistrate of Hawick, being fined £10. He was an important heritor in the Parish, and was also one of the Orrock Trustees. He was also a heritor of Minto Parish. Around 1800 he contributed (£5 5s) to support the war with France. He was also one of the first members of the Hawick Curling Club. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805, and was listed along with his son Andrew in 1819. He was listed on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls as owner of part of Weensland, this passing to Thomas Macmillan-Scott of Wauchope later in the 19th century. On Wood's 1824 map he is shown as owner of Lawrie's Denn, as well as the area around where Teviot Crescent and Oliver Crescent were built. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. In 1783 he married Marion (or Mary), daughter of Andrew Fisher of Housebyres, and succeeded to his father-in-law's properties. His sons were: Andrew (b.1787), who was Cornet and died in Australia; Archibald (b.1788) of Chatto; Robert (1789–1811), who was a surgeon; Walter (b.1796), who was a lawyer; James (b.1798) of Chatto and Housebyres, partner in the mill and also bank agent in Hawick; William (b.1800), without issue, who was also partner with James; and Alexander (b.1800), who also died without issue. The baptisms in 1796, 1798 and 1800 were recorded (together) in Hawick Parish, with witnesses Robert and James (probably his brothers). He also had daughters: Isabella (b.1784), who married William Whitehead Winterbottom in Hawick; Christian (d.1827, although this may be an error), who was unmarried and died in Hawick; and Marion Margaret, who married Thomas Grieve of Skelfhill. An unnamed child of his died in 1794. He died at Hassendeanburn. His portrait and that of his wife were painted by William Irving. Archibald (c.1770–1819) elder son of James of Alton. He was elected Cornet in 1794, from a short-list of 5 names; this was in the year that the Council had resolved not to continue the Common Riding, but reversed their decision following a petition from the inhabitants. In 1799 he was listed as 'Junr. Merchant' on the Lieutenancy Book. He was a banker and merchant, like other family members. In 1811 he married his cousin, Christian, daughter of Charles Scott of Wauchope, and she died in 1861. He died during his father's lifetime, near Fushiebridge, when travelling to Edinburgh with his wife and her maid. He had 2 sons: James of Alton and Pinnaclehill; and Charles (b.1818), who died unmarried. His death is recorded in the Edinburgh Magazine as 'Mr Archibald Dickson, junior, seedsman, Hawick'. Maj. Archibald of Chatto (1788–1846) 2nd son of Archibald and Marion Fisher, he was baptised in Minto Parish. He served with the 60th Bengal native infantry, retired in 1836 and died at Pembroke Square, Kensington. He had a son, Archibald William, as well as a daughter. They were involved in a court case of 1852 relating to the inheritance of Chatto. Archibald of Hassendeanburn (c.1770s–1846) elder son of Robert and Beatrix Pott. He is probably the Archibald recorded as 'yeoman' at Hassendeanburn on the list for the Militia in Minto Parish in 1799. On the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Minto Parish he was 'Mr Archbald Dickson (RYC.)', meaning that he was in the Royal Yeomanry Cavalry (volunteers) and hence not eligible for selection. He was a Lieutenant in the 1st Regiment of Roxburghshire Militia from about 1810. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1813. He is probably the 'A. Dickson, Esq. of Huntlaw' who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He was listed among the local gentry in Pigot's 1837 directory, being 'of Huntlaw' and living at Hassndeanburn (although this may have been an outdated entry for his deceased father). In 1812 he married Hannah, daughter of Adam Stavert of Hoscote. He died without children. Archibald (18th/19th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included: Helen (b.1814); James (b.1816); Agnes (b.1818); Elizabeth (b.1820); John (b.1821); Isabel (b.1822); Robert (b.1825); and Margaret (b.1827). Archibald William (19th C.) only son of Maj. Archibald of Chatto. He served with the 17th (Leicestershire) Regiment, becoming Lieutenant in 1846 and Captain in 1854. He was disinherited following a court case, but eventually his son Archibald became Laird of Hassendeanburn. He also had a daughter. He was declared bankrupt in 1902 and died at Allanbank near Galashiels. Col. Archibald of Chatto, Buhtrig and Housebyres, J.P. (1829–95) eldest son of James and Christian Scott of Todshawhaugh. He was trained as a lawyer, becoming an advocate in 1852, but never practising. He inherited his father's estates when he died in 1876; this included Hassendeanburn, which he had rebuilt shortly afterwards. He was Captain of the Haddington artillery, later becoming Major and retiring as Lieut.-Col. He was also Deputy Lieutenant for Roxburghshire, as well as a Tax Commissioner for the county. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1854. In 1880 he married Alice Florence, daughter of J.W. Seaburne-May and sister of a naval Captain. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1876. He died without children and is buried in Minto churchyard. He left everything to his wife except for the estate of Hassendeanburn, which went to Archibald, grandson of Maj. Archibald of Chatto. Archibald of Hassendeanburn (19th/20th C.) son of Archibald William, grandson of Maj. Archibald of Chatto and great-grandson of Archibald of Housebyres. In 1895 he inherited the estate of Hassendeanburn from his distant relative Col. Archibald. Blanche Margaret (19th C.) elder daughter of William Richardson Dickson of Alton and Chisholme. She inherited her father's estates when he died in 1881. She married Capt. Herbert Barron of the 72nd Highlanders, and secondly married George Dove, farmer at Boswells Bank. Christian (b.c.1790) resident at Teviot Lodge, according to the 1841 census. She is probably the 'Miss Dickson' listed there on Wood's 1824 map and in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories, and who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. She is likely to be the Christian (b.1775) who was daughter of James of Alton and Hassendeanburn. She was also probably related to William, who lived at Teviot Lodge later. She was still alive in 1848, and appears to have died unmarried. She was probably one of the 'Misses Dickson' of Hassendeanbun listed among the gentry of Hawick in 1852. She may be the Christian recorded as a 76 year old 'Landed Proprietrix' at Hassendeanburn in 1861, who was a daughter of Archibald of Housebyres and brother of James of Chatto and still listed as 'Miss Dickson' at Hassendeanburn in 1868. There could be 2 separate people confalted here, confused by the the preponderance of names Archibald and James. Sir David James Hamilton (1780–1850) youngest and last surviving son of the minister of Bedrule, where he was born. He was licensed by the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh in 1798, became a surgeon in the Navy and served in Holland and Egypt. In 1806 he was acting physician in the Leeward Islands and in 1813 became superintending physician of the Russian Fleet in the Medway (for which he was nominated as a knight of the order of St. Waldimir), then serving in the Mediterranean and at Halifax. He became a Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh in 1816 and of London in 1822. In 1824 he was appointed physician to the Royal Naval Hospital at Plymouth and in 1840 became Inspector of Hospitals. He was knighted in 1834 and was also a Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh and the Linnæan Society. He published many many medical works and was instrumental in setting up a library at the Naval Hospital in Plymouth. He married a Miss Tracey and died in Plymouth. Edward (16th C.) Reader at Minto 1576–78. He probably replaced William McGowan, or else one held the Parsonage at the same time as the other was Reader. Probably the same 'Eduard Dikson' was recorded as Reader of Longnewton in 1575. Elizabeth see Elizabeth Scott. Elizabeth 'Bessie' (17th/18th C.) wife of John 'Sheine' (i.e. Sheen). In 1699 his wife she accused Janet Rae, wife of John Douglas, with enticing her daughter 'Isobel Sheine' (about 12 years old) to steal 'meal, bear, and flesh' from her father's house, witnesses saying that some of the items were so heavy that they 'made her pouch wagg and shogg'. Francis (1778/9–1820) born in Ewesdale, he moved to Teviothead in about 1810. He became shepherd at Soothdean Rig Shiel. He married Margaret Elliot (1782–1823). They had a son, also Francis (b.1806). Francis James (1796–1821) second son of George of Cavers. He was born and baptised in Edinburgh, but this was still recorded in Cavers Parish. He was a Lieutenant in the Coldstream Guards and died in London. Francis (1806–81) son of Francis and Margaret Elliot. Like his father, he was shepherd at Soothdean Rig Shiel. He married Jane Elliot (1807–82). Their children were: Margaret (b.1833); Francis (b.1833); Thomas (b.1836); Sarah (b.1838); James (b.1840); Henry (b.1842); Christopher (b.1844); and Janet (or 'Jessie', b.1845). G. (19th/20th C.) native of Ewesdale. He wrote about the history of Ewes in the Border Magazine in 1907. George 'the Wran' (17th C.) named among 15 other 'idle and masterless men' by the Hawick Bailie in 1627, and suggested as being fit to be sent to the war in Germany. When produced before the Privy Council by the Bailie he was one of the men who were found 'not fit for the wars' and dismissed. His nickname suggests that he was small. He may be the George who witnessed a baptism in 1654 for Walter Nichol. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was recorded at Craik in 1720 when his unnamed child was baptised and in 1722 when his son James was baptised. Perhaps the same George was married to Margaret Renwick and recorded as 'herd in Rashiegrain' in 1725, with witnesses John 'Riffy' and Walter Laidlaw. George (18th C.) owner of part of the lands of Ruletownhead. In the 1788 his trustees are listed as owner of lands there, valued at £96 11s. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls he was still listed as former owner. Perhaps the same George was also owner of lands in Lanton (previously belonging to Alexander Ferguson) valued at £61 12s, with his trustees recorded as owners in 1788. It is possible he is the George who married Anne Buckham in Bedrule in 1762. Rev. George (d.1787) son of George and Catherine Hamilton of Whitehill, Earlston. He was called to Bedrule Parish in 1747 and ordained there the following year. He paid the window tax at the manse there in 1753. There was a dispute with the heritors over his right to cut wood on the glebe land in 1754. He purchased the lands of Lanton in 1770. He was a strenuous opponent of the suppression of Abbotrule Parish in 1777, and of the closing of the school there. He was apparently nicknamed 'Cool-the-kail', because of the length of his sermons; it is said that those from Bedrule who travelled to church in Jedburgh were often back in Bedrule while he was still going. He paid the Horse Tax in Bedrule Parish in 1785. In 1755 he married Agnes, daughter of Robert Howison of Orchard, and she died in 1760. In 1762 he secondly married Anne (or Ann) Buckham, who died in 1784. His children, baptised in Bedrule Parish, were: William (b.1756), who inherited Orchard from his grandfather Bailie Howison; Robert (b.1757), who died young; Margaret (b.1758), who married Lieut. William Miller; Katherine (b.1760), who married Horatio Thomas McGeorge; Agnes (1763–95); John (b.1764), who died young; Anne; George (b.1766); Mary (b.1767); John ('Jock', b.1771), a simpleton who travelled round the local country; Anne (b.1775); and Sir David James Hamilton (1780–1850), Inspector of Hospitals. He is buried in Bedrule cemetery. His servant James Robson died in Hawick in 1781. George (18th/19th C.) recorded as 'Esq. Hassendeanburn' in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick'. It is unclear how he was related to the other Dicksons of Hassendeanburn. George (b.1817/8) stockingmaker in Hawick. In 1851 he was living on the Mid Row and in 1861 on Drumlanrig Place. His wife was Miriam. Sometime before 1865 he donated an old Scottish coin to the Museum. George (19th C.) originally from Melrose, he was coachman at Abbotrule through the 1860s, 70s and 80s. He is listed as groom in 1861. His wife was Jane and their children included William and Agnes. George (b.1831/2) from Newcastleton, he was a Hawick baker. In 1861 he donated 2 stuffed penguins to the Museum. In 1854 in Hawick he married Annie (b.1833), daughter of David Affleck. Their children included: William (b.1854/5); Margaret (or 'Maggie', b.1858), who married Walter Nisbet, picture framer at Myreslawgreen; and David (b.1860/1). In 1861 he was living with his mother-in-law Margaret and brother-in-law Charles Affleck at 7 Sandbed. Helen nee Miller, 'Nellie' (d.1815) married James Dickson, who was proprietor of the King's Head in Hawick. She continued to run the public house after her husband's death. She was apparently short and deformed. She may be related to 'Wullie the King' Scott, who was a later proprietor, whose wife was a Dickson, and whose daughter was 'Nellie the King'. She was the proprietor of the lodging house there when John Howard visited in 1786. Henry (19th C.) married Isabella Sinton in Southdean Parish in 1851. Henry (1842–1913) son of Francis and Jane Elliot. He was shepherd for John Moffat at Billhope. He firstly married Margaret Cranston and secondly married Janet Armstrong. His children were: Francis (b.1867); Thomas (b.1869); James (b.1871); Isabella (b.1873); Helen (b.1880); John (b.1882); Robert (b.1886); Christina (b.1888); William (b.1890); Henry (b.1893); and Isabella (again, b.1897). James (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 when he had a cow stolen by Walter Rutherford in Phaup. He may have lived near Minto, where another cow was recorded being stolen. James (17th/18th C.) son of John of Westerhall and Mary Home. In 1693 he was served heir portioner, along with John Shoreswood and Alexander Morrison, in the Barony of Home, inherited from Jean, daughter of John Home. This included superiority over lands in Hassendean, and explicitly Appletreehall, as well as the lands of Redfordgreen, Drycleuchlea, Huntly and Hartwoodburn. His father was already deceased in 1693. It is unclear what happened to the Barony afterwards. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, recorded as 'servitor to Walter Purdom' in 1713, 'tenent in Hawick' in 1714 and 'workman' in 1719 and 1723. He could be the James who witnessed baptisms for carrier Robert Aitken in 1723, for Robert Ballantyne in Overhall in Wilton Parish in 1724, and for George Scott in Silverbuthall in 1728. He married Margaret Huntly in Hawick in 1713 and their children included: John (b.1714); Janet (b.1716); Helen (b.1719); and Margaret (b.1723). The witnesses in 1714 were merchants Thomas Hardie and Robert Scott, in 1719 were weavers David and William Miller, and in 1723 were merchant Thomas Hardie and shoemaker James Gardner. James (18th C.) merchant in Hawick, probably the son of merchant William baptised in Hawick in 1704. In 1734 he was one of the witnesses to the notorial instrument in which the Town complained about encroachment on the Common by tenants of Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs. He is probably the tailor who witnessed a baptism for Gideon Scott in 1765 in Hawick Parish. He is probably the James, son of William, who purchased Northcroft from George Langlands of that Ilk, with his father holding the liferent. His lands in Wilton were valued at £20 in the 1740s. This James 'of North Croft' was one of the landowners involved in the court case over the division of Wilton Common in 1765; at that time the land was valued at £20. In 1769 he was appointed to the commission to discuss the Common with representatives of the Duke of Buccleuch. He may be the James who was Bailie in the 1770s and 80s. It seems likely he was the James who, along with Bailie Oliver, was one of the first men in Hawick to travel with pack-horses to sell their woven products in Kendal, Boroughbridge, Newcastle, Stirling and elsewhere. He could be the James, son of William, born in Hawick in 1704. He could be the James, married to Anne Scott, whose children baptised in Hawick included James (b.1738) and Beatrix (b.1741). James (18th C.) resident of Hawick, he became proprietor of the King's Head. He married Helen (or 'Nelly') Miller and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1767. His wife continued to run the public house after his death and her own death is recorded in Hawick in 1815. James (1738–1822) born in Peeblesshire, son of Robert and Margaret Dunn, his father coming from Eckford. He must have been related to the local Dicksons and may have spent some of his youth at Hassendeanburn. Following his family trade, he established a nursery at Perth, before moving to London, where he eventually set up as a seedsman at Covent Garden in 1772. His first wife died young and he remarried a sister of Mungo Park. He became an expert on British cryptogamic plants, and gained a botanical reputation by publishing 'Fasciculari Plantarum Cryptogamicarum Britanniae' in 4 volumes (1785–1801). He also published several other descriptive volumes. In 1788 he became one of the original members of the Linnaean Society. He toured the Highlands in search of plants, the expedition of 1789 being with Mungo Park. The tree fern family 'Dicksonia' was named after him. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Linhope in 1786. His children included: Nelly (b.1786). He could be the James who married Nelly Lilly in Yetholm in 1784. James of Alton and Hassendeanburn (1746–1820) 2nd son of Archibald of Hassendeanburn. He was a nurseryman and merchant, as well as bank agent for the British Linen Co. in Hawick from 1806 (along with Archibald). He subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). He is probably the merchant James who (along with Walter Ruecastle) witnessed a baptism for Archibald Paterson in 1777. He may be the James who was paid by the Wilton Session in 1778 'for whisky, pipes and obacco' for a funeral. In 1788 he is recorded as owner of land in Weensland, valued at £19 13s 7d. In 1789 he witnessed a baptism for exciseman Hugh Grieve. In 1791 he subscribed to John Learmont's book of poetry. He paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in the period 1785–97. In 1788 he (along with manufacturer Thomas Turnbull) witnessed a baptism for merchant George Turnbull. He was listed as a merchant when he paid the Dog Tax in Hawick in 1797. He may be the 'Mr Dickson' who paid the Council £3 in 1794 for 'one year's street dung'. He is probably the James who contributed (£5 5s) locally around 1800 to help the war against France. A letter from him to a Selkirk lawyer in 1799 is preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. He was also a heritor of Hawick Parish and an Orrock Trustee. He is probably the James who was a Bailie in the early 1800s, both before and after 1810. His house in Hawick was the easternmost house on the north side of the High Street, adjoining the nursery-ground there. He presumably bought the lands of Alton from the Horsburghs of that Ilk, after they were sold by Francis Scott of Alton in 1742. In 1811 he was still listed as owner of part of Weensland, as well as 'Part of Particot Lands of Hawick' valued at £18 16s 6d. He married Christian (or Jean) Turnbull, probably in Hawick in 1768; she died in Hawick in 1812. Their children were: Archibald (b.1770), who married Christian Scott of Wauchope, but died before him; Isabella (1771–1807), who married William Richardson; Andrew (b.1773), who succeeded to Alton after his brother; Christian (b.1775), who may be the Christian residing at Teviot Lodge; Robert (b.1776); Agnes (b.1777); and Jane (b.1777). He may be the 'Baillia Dickson Mercht.' whose son James' death was recorded in Hawick in 1804. Margaret, who died in Hawick in 1806 was probably also his daughter. The witnesses in 1776 were 'Mr' Robert (who was probably his brother) and 'Mr' William Scott, and in 1777 were 'Mr' John Laurie and Archibald Dickson, as well as Walter Ruecastle and Archibald Paterson. He is buried in St. Mary's. James (b.c.1780) recorded as 'Junior Merchant' in Hawick on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. It is unclear how he was related to other Dicksons; however, it seems likely he is the James, son of Bailie Dickson, who died in Hawick in 1804. Bailie James (18th/19th C.) served as Magistrate in the early 19th century. In 1862 W.N. Kennedy described an interaction between him and the drunk Burgh Officer Caleb Rutherford at his shop door. He told Rutherford that he wanted the other Officer, Rib Tinlin, and when Tinlin appeared he told him to jail the drunken Rutherford. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses, perhaps James of Alton and Hassendeanburn. James (18th/19th C.) from the Hawick area, he married Agnes Bell in Bedrule in 1805. Their son John (who married Allison Macgregor) was born in about 1810. In about 1815 he emigrated with his family to the 'Scotch Settlement' in St. Lawrence County, New York. James of Chatto and Housebyres (1798–1876) 5th son of Archibald and Marion Fisher, he was christened in Hawick. He was a partner in the Dicksons and Laings manufacturing firm in Hawick, and was also a bank agent in Hawick. In 1834 he was listed in the electoral roll as joint proprietor of the spinning mill, along with his brother William, left them in their father's will. Also in 1834 he was nominated as a trustee of the Orrock Bequest. He inherited Chatto from his uncle Walter. He also acquired the estates of Bughtrig and Castelaw. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1837. He was listed as a trustee of Andrew of Alton (who died in 1837). He is listed in 1839 among the major landowners of Hawick Parish. He was living at 67 High Street in 1841. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. In about 1874 he was listed as owner of both halves of Horsleyhill. In 1827 at Todshawhaugh he married Christian, daughter of Robert Scott. His children were: Archibald, who succeeded to his lands; Robert, who must have died young; William, who succeeded to his share of Dicksons and Laings; Marion Fisher, who was unmarried and died at Morelands; and Jane, who also died unmarried. In 1845 he made out a bond to help support James, 'a lunatic, grandson'. James of Alton and Pinnaclehill (c.1815–1846) younger son of Archibald and grandson of James of Alton. He was listed as heir of Andrew of Alton (who died in 1837) in the legal wrap-up of his nursery business in Edinburgh. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1837 and was listed in 1839 among the major landowners in Hawick Parish (along with his distant cousin, James of Housebyres). He married Charlotte, daughter of Capt. Vigors, who was widow of Mr. Lodor; they had no children. He is said to have gone insane and been admitted to the Royal Edinburgh Asylum. He died at Morningside Cottage. Alton went to his uncle, Andrew, while Pinnaclehill went to Scott of Wauchope, the family of his mother. James 'Jamie Besoms' (18th/19th C.) described as a 'gangrel body', his portrait was donated to the Museum in 1866 by Thomas Latimer of Cockermouth. James of Huntlaw (19th C.) probably a descendant of Robert of Huntlaw. In about 1874 it is recorded that he owned part of Childknow, as well as parts of Greenhouse, both in Lilliesleaf Parish. Janet (18th C.) resident of Westcote. In 1784 she was on the Poor Roll of Cavers Parish, with the inventory of her belongings being 2 beds, 1 press, 1 chest, 3 stools, 1 chair, 4 pairs of blankets, 1 pot and 1 pan. John (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as one of the tenants of the lands of Deloraine and 'Wardishope' in Ettrick. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His son William was baptised in 1705. John (17th/18th C.) workman at Branxholme in 1718. He married Margaret Elliot and their children included Mary (b.1718). The witnesses in 1718 were James Grieve in Todshawhaugh and 'barn man' William Nichol. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Milsington in 1720 when his daughter Janet was baptised. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His daughter Bessie was baptised in 1727. John (18th C.) recorded as a servant at Minto House in 1788, when he was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. He was listed as a footman at Minto in 1791. The same John could be the resident of Minto who is listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. John 'Jock' (b.1771) son of Rev. George, minister of Bedrule. He was said to be a simpleton, who would wander round all the local manses. He had a new suit made every year, this being a long blue coat, which was very wide, with long tails and a double row of brass buttons down the front and back. He also wore knee-breeches and shoes with buckles. Children would sometimes follow him shouting 'Daft John Dickson! Buckles and pouches! buckles and pouches!' It is also stated (by Rev. James Dickson) that he had a good appetite, but rarely said much. John (1781/2–1846) cow herd in Newcastleton. He was recorded as head of his household in 1835–41 and was living at about 5 Doncaster Street in 1841. He married Margaret Elliot, who died at 'Teenside' in 1857, aged 75. Their children included: William (1805/6–35); Robert (1810/1–15); James (1813/4–31); and Isabella (1829/30–32). They are buried at Ettleton. John (19th C.) tailor on Buccleuch Street, listed in Slater's 1852 directory. John (b.1834/5) from Kelso, he was corn miller at Haughhead in 1861. His wife Agnes was from Hawick, and their children included Betsy, James and Margaret. Margaret (17th C.) cottar at Mackside in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Marion (15th C.) bequeathed a sheep in the 1491/2 will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme. She is listed as 'Mariote Dicsoun'. Possibly the same 'mariota dikisone' was recorded as widow of the deceased William in Selkirk in 1494/5 when Lawrence Rutherford in Oakwood had remission for stealing goods from her, out of 'balzeree' (which may be Bailielee). Michael (b.c.1770s) slater in Newcastleton according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. He could be the Michael who married Janet Jardine and had children Janet (b.1799), Gilbert (b.1802) and Isabel (b.1802). Nellie see Helen Dickson. Nichol (19th C.) teacher in Lilliesleaf in 1852. It is unclear where his school was. Peter (18th/19th C.) tenant of Dimpleknowe farm, along with Robert. The pair are recorded there in documents of the period 1814–17 in disputes with their landlord, John Corse Scott of Sinton. Robert 'Hob' (16th C.) cordiner mentioned in the will of Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574. He is recorded as 'Hobbe Diksoun' and was probably from Hawick, since he was listed along with other mainly Hawick merchants (and is not recorded as a Burgess of Edinburgh). He was owed 'for buittis and schone, sevintene pundis'. Robert (16th C.) recorded in 'Hassinden-manis' in 1591 when David Edmonson of Wowmet acted as surety for him according to a Privy Council document. He is 'of Hassington Mains' when his son John was recorded in 1593. This may be Hassendean Mains, but is more likely to be Hassington in Berwickshire (with the connection with Dicksons being a coincidence). Robert (d.bef. 1610) mentioned in a sasine of 1610 as the deceased former owner of a garden somewhere between the Village and the Kirk Wynd. Robert (17th C.) shoemaker in Hawick mentioned in a court case of 1673. William Scott was accused of striking his brother Robert Scott, apparently because he (Robert) had provoked Thomas Brown into insulting William; the situation was clearly confused! He could be the Robert married to Margaret Aitkin whose children, baptised in Hawick, included Helen (b.1669) and 2 unnamed sons (b.1671 and 1674). The witnesses in 1674 were James Scott and James Burn (probably the Bailies). He could be the Robert who witnessed baptisms for Patrick Scoon and William Ruecastle in 1673 and witnessed the marriage of John Scott (in Cavers) and Margaret Scott in Hawick Parish in 1680. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was a gardener at Burnfoot in 1709. His children included: William (b.1704); Isobel (b.1707); and Bessie (b.1709). It is possible he is the same man as the nursery founder. Robert (d.1744) founder of the nursery at Hassendeanburn in 1728 or 1729. It is unclear where he was born, or who his parents were, but historically the Dicksons were based in Berwickshire. He was the first of his family to become involved in horticulture and forestry. He was tenant at Hassendeanburn, and also owned part of Weensland, and other land in Hawick. The nurseries at Hassendean later spread to Hawick and became the largest supplier of seeds and plants in Scotland. He also acted as a money-lender in Hawick, before any banks were established. There is a record of him selling 500 young firs to Capt. Elliot of Wells in 1729. His wife died in 1758, aged 78. His family included: James (b.1712); Archibald (b.1718), who succeeded him in the family business; and probably Walter. For several generations there were descendants of his running nurseries all over Britain. Robert of Huntlaw (b.1742) eldest son of Archibald, whom he succeeded on his death in 1791, although he was already involved in the family nursery and seed business long before then. He is probably the Robert recorded as owner of the north part of Horsleyhill in 1788 (valued at £382), as well as Huntlaw (valued at £66 13s 4d) and part of the former lands of Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf Parish (also referred to as 'part of the muir of Childknow', valued at £33 9s 2d). He is probably also the Robert recorded at Horsleyhill in 1791 when he subscribed to John Learmont's book of poetry. He is probably the Robert recorded being

'of Huntlaw' on the 1785–91 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. He was listed at Hassendeanburn in the 1792–94 Horse Tax Rolls. He is recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 8 horses and also paid the dog tax at Hassendeanburn in that year. In 1777 he married Beatrix, daughter of George Pott of Todrig. Their children were: Archibald of Hassendeanburn; George, who married a Miss Campbell in Edinburgh, but died childless; Elizabeth, who died unmarried; and Christian, also unmarried. In 1792 he secondly married Catherine, daughter of Charles Scott of Woll. There is a 1775 letter from him to Scott of Harden in the National Archives. He is probably the Robert of Huntlaw who was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in both 1805 and 1819, along with Archibald, junior of Huntlaw. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls he is listed as owner of part of Childknow, purchased from Dr. Hunter of Linthill. He was also owner of 'South-end of Horsley-hill' in 1811. Robert (1747/8–1830) teacher, probably in Castleton Parish. He married Betty, daughter of James Renwick, tenant in Mangerton; she died at Castleton in 1829, aged 86. They are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Their daughter Margaret was born in 1783. Robert (18th/19th C.) tenant of Dimpleknowe farm, along with Peter. In 1814 they were involved in a legal case over houses and fences on the farm. In about 1817 there were actions and counter-actions between them and their landlord, John Corse Scott of Sinton, relating to their rent, and whether the acreage of land was fraudulently stated to be larger than it really was. Robert (1789–1811) 3rd son of Archibald of Housebyres and Hassendeanburn, one of the founders of Dicksons & Laings, with his mother being Marion Fisher. He was baptised in Minto Parish. He became a surgeon and died en route to Batavia on the 'Anne'. Robert (b.1815/6) from Applegarth, he was farmer at Dinley on Hermitage Water. In 1861 he was recorded as farmer of 1400 acres and employer of 4 people. His wife was Jane. Robert (b.1816/7) from Newcastleton, he was a shepherd at Branxholme Park Cottages. His wife was Margaret and their children included Helen, Margaret, Mary and John. Robert (19th C.) farmer at Weensmoor in the 1860s. Robert H. (1858/9–1921) joiner to trade, he served for 30 years as compulsory officer with the Hawick School Board. He also served on the local Military Tribunal in WWI. His sons were David (insurance agent) and Walter (hosiery traveller, who married Eillen M. Angwin). Rev. Robert Marcus (19th/20th C.) ordained as minister of St. John's Kirk in Hawick in 1902. He was translated to Lanark in 1905. Thomas of Ormiston (15th C.) witness to the 1446 charter between Inglis of Manor and Scott of Buccleuch. In 1479 he leased the middle steading of the Crown lands of Glenpyet in the Yarrow valley, and in 1485 leased half of Glenpyet. In 1491 either this Thomas or a descendant had a 'procuratory of resignation' to resign the lands of Ruecastle into the hands of the Abbot of Jedburgh, then granted to John Rutherford of Hundalee. Walter (15th C.) received 10 shillings in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2. Walter 'Wat' (16th/17th C.) subtenant of John in Newark in the lands of Foulshiels in Liddesdale. These lands had been acquired by the Scotts of Buccleuch, to the displeasure of the Elliots. In 1618 John in Newark complained to the Privy Council that a gang of about 100 Elliots and others removed all the hay from part of the farm and beat up his servitor (whose name is not given). Walter (18th C.) son of Robert, he established a plant nursery at Leith Walk in Edinburgh, considered the most extensive in Scotland for a time. His company became Dicksons and Shankley, with a partner being James Dickson, who was (quite confusingly) not a direct relation. He is probably the Walter, florist of Edinburgh who subscribed to John Learmont's book of poetry in 1791. Walter of Chatto (1759–1836) 5th son of Archibald and Christian Thomson. He was uncle of Andrew, Archibald, George and James Dickson, as well as Walter Scott of Wauchope. He died at Redbraes near Edinburgh and left his estates to his nephew James. He is also referred to as 'Major Dickson'. He may be the 'Mr Walter Dickson, Hassendeanburn' who subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). He left Chatto to his nephew Archibald, with his will stating that it was then to go to his other nephews George, Andrew and Capt. Archibald. Walter (b.1770s) slater at Damside. He is recorded in 1797 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia and in 1799 was listed at Roughheugh among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area. Walter, W.S. (1796–1843) 4th son of Archibald and Marion Fisher. He trained as a lawyer, being apprenticed to William Renny. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He could be the Walter recorded in a letter to the Selkirk Town Clerk in 1826. He died unmarried. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Grieve and their children included Margaret (b.1644) and Robert (b.1650).

Margaret (b.1643), with the mother's name given as 'Isobell' Grieve, was probably also his child. He witnessed a baptism for James Laidlaw in 1651. William (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Margaret Young and their son John was baptised in 1685. William (17th C.) resident of Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among 'ye poor'. William (17th C.) resident at Clarilaw according to a baptismal record of 1682. He was also listed there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He married Marion Wilson and their daughter Marion was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1682, with witnesses Robert and William Scott. William (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Goodfellow in Cavers Parish in 1698. William (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick and elder of Hawick Kirk. He was recorded as a merchant in 1704 when one of his children was baptised. He witnessed baptisms for candlemaker John Scott in 1709, for flesher Robert Leadhouse in 1710, for William Goodfellow (probably related to his wife) in 1719, and for candlemaker John Scott in 1722. In 1717 (along with Thomas Hardie) he was appointed to collect monies from 'Hilhousland, Weensland, and Weensland milne', suggesting he may have lived in this general direction. In 1722 he was to assist in collecting monies from between the 'Meekle bridge' to his house, with the next area being from his house to the East Port, including the Cross Wynd; this suggests his house was in the middle of the High Street. In 1724 he appears to have been standing in for the Session Treasurer. He married Margaret Goodfellow in Cavers in 1698. Their children included: James (b.1704); Janet (b.1707); Anna (b.1709); William (b.1711); Margaret (b.1713); John (b.1715); Margaret (again, b.1718); Margaret (agan, b.1720); and John (b.1726). The witnesses in 1704 were Bailies George Martin and Patrick Richardson, in 1709 were Bailies George Martin and Robert Ruecastle, in 1718 were Walter Elliot 'bailie deput of ye Regality of Hawick', glover John Scott and Francis Ruecastle, and in 1720 were glover John Scott and candlemaker John Scott. He could be the William who purchased Northcroft in Wilton Parish from George Langlands of that Ilk in 1725, with his son James holding the land in fee (and him retaining the liferent) and being involved in the process for the division of Wilton Common in 1765. William (18th C.) resident at Craikhope when his son William was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1762. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His daughter Margaret was baptised in 1786. William of Bellwood (1753–1835) 3rd son of Archibald of Hassendeanburn. He held lands in Perthshire and carried on the nursery business in the Highlands. He left his business and lands to Archibald Turnbull, son of his sister Margaret. William of Orchard (1756–88) son of Rev. George. He was grandson of Bailie Robert Howison, from whom he inherited Orchard in about 1780. He is recorded on the subscription list for Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). He was listed as a bachelor at Orchard in 1785–87 when he was taxed for having 1 female servant and 1 male servant. He was also taxed for having 2 saddle horses at Orchard in 1785–87. In 1788 he was listed as owner of part of Weensland, valued at £47 8s 4d, which had formerly belonged to William Irvine and another part, valued at £41, which had formerly belonged to Adam Ormiston. He died in Kelso and Orchard was inherited by his uncle, Robert Scott. Lieut. Col. William (18th/19th C.) of Kilbucho, Peeblesshire. Severely wounded at Alexandria in Egypt, his regiment, the 42nd Royal Highlanders (i.e. the Black Watch), were ordered home after the Treaty of Amiens. When they passed through Hawick on their way to Edinburgh Castle in 1802 he was made an Honorary Burgess along with 2 fellow officers. William (b.1800) youngest son of Archibald and Mary Fisher, he was a manufacturer and seedsman in Hawick. He is probably the William 'residing in Hawick' who is recorded as a joint proprietor along with bank agent James in the 1834 electoral roll, owners of a spinning mill provided for them in their father's will. He lived with his wife at 67 High Street in the mid-1800s. They are recorded there in 1841, when he was employer of 905 men as a woollen amnufacturer and 54 men as a seedsman. The house at No. 67 can be seen in an 1864 photo, before the site was rebuilt as the Store drapery department. In 1857 he donated geological specimens to the Museum and in 1858 'autograph letters of Memorands, of Mr [Mungo] Parks' and became a Life Member of the Archæological Society. He was still at 67 High Street in 1861 (and listed as a woollen manufacturer), but later moved to Teviot Lodge. His wife was Agnes; she may be the Agnes, daughter of Robert Scott who married William Dickson in 1839. William Richardson of Alton (1806–52) son of William Richardson and Isabella Dickson. He succeeded his uncle Archibald of Hassendeanburn and Horsleyhill, after the death of his uncle Andrew Dickson, perhaps in 1846; originally Richardson, he assumed the additional name of Dickson when he inherited. He is probably the grocer and spirit dealer listed on the High Street in Pigot's 1837 directory. In 1838 he was listed as a trustee of his uncle Andrew of Alton, and was then 'Nurseryman, Edinburgh'. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He also purchased Philhope in the Borthwick valley. According to the Land Tax Rolls he was owner of Alton, part of Wester Clarilaw and Appletreehall Townhead in the mid-1800s. In 1840 he married Mary Smith Mitchell, daughter of Edinburgh merchant Robert Mitchell. He was succeeded by his only son, also William Richardson. He also had 2 daughters, Jessie and Isabella. His widow secondly married Rev. William Henry Gray. William Richardson of Alton and Chisholme (1846–81) son of William Richardson and Mary Mitchell. The estate of Chisholme was purchased by his trustees while he was still a minor. He paid the land tax for Tofts (in Kirkton Parish) in about 1874 and was also then recorded as owner of Chisholme, Woodburn, Chisholme Mill, Easter Parkhill, Wester Parkhill and Broadlee in Roberton Parish. In 1873 he married Jessie, daughter of Glasgow merchant David Colville. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1869. He left 2 daughters: Blanche Margaret of Alton and Chisholme, who married Capt. Herbert Barron; and Jessie Mary (or Isabella), who married lawyer George Greig of Eccles, and secondly George Dove, farmer at Boswells Bank. He died at Chisholme. William of Wellfield (b.1835/6) younger son of James of Chatto and Housebyres, and brother of Archibald of Chatto. He inherited his father's share of the Dicksons and Laings manufacturer's business when he died in 1876. In 1861 he was living at 14 Buccleuch Street and listed as a woollen manufacturer. He must have had Wellfield House built for him shortly after that. He was an ensign in the Upper Teviotdale Rifle Corps (Volunteers). He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1868. In 1877 he donated a large collection of artefacts to the Museum, including: 'Etruscan vase, bought at Naples, said to have been found near the ancient city of Cumae'; 'Another vase also bought at Naples and said to have been found at Cumae'; a 'Roman filter' also bought at Naples; 'A three-wicked terr-cotta lamp, said to have been found at Baise'; another old lamp bought at Naples; 'Two bronze fibulae'; 'Two terra-cotta vases, bought from a peasant at Pestum'; 'A rude figure of a ram' also from Pestum'; 'A horse-fish (dried) from the Lake of Avernus'; 'Three female heads in terra-cotta, also bought at Pestum'; 'Three copper coins bought of peasant at Cumae'; and a coin found at Pestum. He never married. A few years before his death he sold his share of the business, purchased Morelands in Grange Loan, Edinburgh and died there. He left everything to his sister Marion, who left it all to his older brother Archibald (formerly spelled 'Dicksone', 'Dicksonne', 'Dicksoun', 'Dikkesoun', 'Diksoun', 'Dixson', etc.; it is rarely 'Dixon' in Scotland).

Dickson an Beattie's (dik-sin-an-bee'-eez) n. hosiery manufacturing firm set up in Denholm in 1793. The partnership was started by Archibald Dickson and George Beattie. Their scoruring house was the cottage where Leyden was born. The Dickson family also started manufacturing in Hawick and moved out of Denholm in about 1803. By 1815 the Denholm factory had been incorporated into Dicksons, Beattie & Laings, which became Dicksons and Laings on Beattie's retirement.

Dickson an Laing's (dik-sin-an-lā̲ng̲z) n. Dickons & Laings, hosiery and tweed manufacturers, founded in 1793 in Denholm by Archibald Dickson of Housebyres, Archibald Dickson of Huntlaw and Hassendeanburn and George Beattie. After 18 years in Denholm, they moved their base to Hawick, building Wilton Mills in 1811. David and Alexander Laing joined the firm in 1815 (having been hosiery manufacturers in Hawick since 1802), the name changed and the Laings managed the firm for 3 generations. They introduced the first 4 power-looms to Hawick in 1830, supplied by Sharp & Roberts of Manchester; the first powerloom weavers in Hawick were there employees Jane Leyden, Jane Parker, Agnes Ferguson and Tippie Walters. Walter Laing became a partner in 1840. The company was also represented at the Great Exhibition of 1851. In Slater's 1852 directory they were listed at Wilton Mills, and also at Glassford Street, Glasgow. They were mainly responsible for constructing the Mansfield extension to Wilton Dam, and were involved in at least a couple of law suits with other companies, protecting their rights to the dam. The last of the Dickson family retired from the firm in 1875, when it was carried on by Walter Laing and his son John T. Laing. They were one of the leading mills in the 19th century, but were defunct by 1908. The company's bankruptcy was partially due to the imposition of higher tarrifs imposed on imports in the U.S. The factory on Commercial Road (Wilton Mills), distinctive for the huge clock tower, was sold off in 1913. These buildings lay empty for many years, and were used by the Council. In its later years the clock was stuck at either 20 to 6, quarter to 6 or 10 to 6 (depending which face you were looking at). After a long period of neglect, and little genuine effort to save it, the clock tower was demolished in 2015, removing one of the Wilton's most characteristic landmarks. The Museum has ledgers and other documents covering the period 1813–1907 (actually 'Dicksons & Laings', but 'Dickson' is not popularly pluralised).

Dickson an Turnbull's (dik-sin-an-turn-bulz) n. nurserymen with office and seed shop at 18 High Street in the mid-19th century. The firm was the continuation of Dickson's nurseries at Hassendeanburn, which had expanded to Hawick in the 1760s and moved its centre of operations there by the early 1800s. The firm was still 'Archibald Dickson & Sons' in Slater's 1852 directory, listed as 'Nurserymen, Seedsmen and Florists'. The new company was a partnership between the Dicksons and ex-Cornet George Turnbull. Their nursery ground was behind a 5 foot wall between what became North Bridge Street and Teviot Crescent. Some of the workers lived in houses at the east end of the North side of the High Street. They also used 'Wester Nurseries' which were off the New Road.

Dickson Court (dik-sin-kōr') n. street consisting of a block of flats built off the north side of Dickson Street in 1984.

Dickson's (dik-sinz) n. general name for the nursery business established in Hassendean by Robert Dickson in 1728 (some say 1729), more formally called Dickson & Co., Nursery & Seedsman. The business was extended to Hawick in 1766 and ran for over 100 years, in the later part as Dickson and Turnbull's. They dealt with a wide variety of seeds, trees and plants, including exotic species. They also trained many of the gardeners for the grounds of the local noblemen. In the late 18th and early 19th centuries their nurseries, in the eastern part of Hawick, covered what is now Oliver Place, Oliver Crescent, Croft Road, North Bridge Street, Union Street and the north side of Bourtree Place. In the early 1800s they also took over lands around what became Trinity Street and the top of Weensland Road, as well as near Dickson Street and both sides of the New Road. At about this time they employed roughly 100 people, and by 1830 Dicksons & Turnbull was cultivating about 100 acres. Wood's 1824 map shows them having nursery grounds around Wellfield, and Mr. Dickson owning the land around Oliver Crescent as well as Lawrie's Denn. In Pigot's 1825/6 directory the company is listed on the High Street as 'nursery & seedsmen, as well as florists. In 1837 it was 'Archibald Dickson & Sons', even although Archibald was deceased by then. Day books from the firm exist for the period 1739–74.

Dickson's Brae (dik-sinz-brā) n. former lands probably in Minto or Hassendean parish. In 1653 William Bennet inherited from his father 'the lands of Barnhills and Dickeson's Brae'. It could be the same as Dickson's Rood.

Dickson's Close (dik-sinz-klōs) n. name in use in the mid-19th century for a close off the High Street, possibly near No. 67.

Dickson's Nurseries (dik-sinz-nur-se-reez) n. originally established at Hassendean, there were also plant nurseries on the east side of Hawick in the middle-to-late 19th century.

Dickson's Rood (dik-sinz-rood) n. former name for lands in Hassendean Parish. In 1610 this was included in a list of lands from which Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig tried to remove William Scott of Howpasley. And it is also listed in 1618 among lands inherited by William Scott of Howpasley (it is 'Diksone's Reid' in 1610 and 'Diksounesrude' in 1618; the name presumably means a small area related to someone named Dickson; see also Dickson's Brae).

Dickson Street (dik-sin-stree') n. street built in 1850–55 and named after the Dicksons of Dicksons & Laings. It originally had tenement housing up both sides, and was filled with the families of workers in the nearby factories. On V.E. day in 1945 the street had a particularly splendid display of flags and bunting. In the mid-1900s there were grocer's shops at No. 2 (Walter Tait's), No. 9 (Frank Whittaker) and R. Burns at No. 16. The houses were demolished in 1971/72, with the Wilton Bar or 'Genties' at the foot of the street being the last to go. The street was then entirely redesigned, having new houses only on the south side, including a small shop and 1 other business, and with a garden and car park on the other side. The top stone of a rotary quern from this street is in the Museum.

Dickson's Well (dik-sinz-wel) n. former public water source mid-way up Dickson Street, also known as the 'Dickson Street Well'. The water came from a spring at Lockieshedge. It was heavily used by residents of Wilton long before Dickson Street was built, and gave its name to the Wellfield area.

Dick's Trei (dik-trī) n. Dick's Tree, a location near Canonbie which was the site of the blacksmith's where the Bold Buccleuch had the irons of Kinmont Willie removed.

Diener (dee-nur) n. Lieut. Fredrick (18th/19th C.) French prisoner of war, held in Hawick during the Napoleonic Wars. He was father of Fredrick William, with Hawick woman Willhelmina Paisley as mother, but returned to France in 1814. His wife secondly married William Lawrie. Fredrick William (1814–86) son of Fredrick and Wilhellmina Paisley, he was a joiner and cabinet-maker of Bourtree Place. He was listed as a joiner on the High Street in Slater's 1852 directory. In the 1850s he was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District. He loaned a bust of Sir Walter Scott for the Museum's exhibition of 1866. He spoke at the 1884 franchise rally held at Loch Park. He married Agnes Grey and their children were Mina Diener and William Fredrick. William Fredrick (1852–1906) local manufacturer, son of Fredrick William, he was a partner in Armstrong & Diener & Co. He married Lottie Matilda-Cropley.

Dimmer Anderson (di-mur-an-dur-sin) n. nickname of James Anderson.

Dimpleknowe (dim-pul-now) n. farm in Ashkirk Parish, on the south side of the Ale Water, north of Satchells and east of Synton Mill. It is also spelled 'Dimpleknow'. James Jackson was cottar there in 1698. Thomas Hunter was tenant there in 1709. John Simson was farmer there in at least the period 1787–97, with 4 work horses. Thomas Gray was a servant there in 1799 and Gilbert Hall in at least 1799–1801. Robert and Peter Dickson were tenants there in 1818. James King and W. Douglas were farmers in the 1860s (also written 'Dimpleknow', 'Dimple know' and 'Dimple knowe').

the Dimples (thu-dim-pulz) n. name for an area to the east of Burnflat, on the boundary of the Common, above Lynnwood Scar. It is marked on J.P. Alison's map of the Common, lying in a clearing between the plantation at the top of the golf course and the Whitlaw Wood. In about 1784 a suicide, John Webster, was buried there, where 3 lairds' lands meet, in this case the lands of Burnflat, the Burgh of Hawick, the Duke of Buccleuch (the name occurs in a description of the Common in 1767; it is unclear if it relates to the Scots for 'dibble', i.e. a tool for making holes for planting seeds or to the English word 'dimple' or something else entirely).

din (din) pp. done – 'er ee no din in there yit?', 'A'm ower an din wi'd', '... An' syne to think we might hae dune some better' [JoHa], '... dinger (ding-ur) n. a vigorous course of action, to 'go one's dinger' or 'go a dinger' is to do something enthusiastically, boisterously or vigorously, to go the whole hog or to lose one's temper – 'ee went a bonnie dinger', 'Oo must hev been gaun a dinger Baith at the Haugh and the Muir' [RM], 'When oo picked oot oor sides Oo wad gang a real dinger' [??], 'Dice men an rogues o' every descripshion hed went a dinger an hed reapeet a bountifeh hervest' [BW1974].

Dingleton (ding-ul'-in, ding-gul'-in) n. psychiatric hospital on Bowden Moor just outside Melrose, built as an insane asylum in 1870–72. The land was north of the original boundary of the Abbotsford estate, and previously undeveloped. It was originally constructed to house about 150 patients from the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk and Berwick. For a long time it was the local mental health facility, closing in 2000 when its services were dispersed through several Border towns. In its early days it was referred to as 'Bowden Moor' or even just 'Bowden'. Always spoken of locally in slightly hushed tones, the hospital was internationally known for some of its innovations, including the Therapeutic Community (i.e.

the open-doors policy and involvement of the surrounding community). The name applied to a former estate there, which was burned by Hertford's army in 1545 (formerly spelled 'Danyelton' etc.; the name first appears as 'Danielstoun' in the late 13th century, and may derive from Daniel who was recorded as a prior of Melrose in 1139).

ding-on (din-ōn) n., poet. a torrent, downpour – 'Last nicht a guid ding-on o' rain, Wi' deid leaves sotterin' under fit . . . ' [WFC].

dink (dingk) v., arch. to dress smartly, deck out – '. . . Ruberslaw's michty noal, wui plewed rigs an planteens – reed-land an greenery – dinkin its merly-merkeet braes' [ECS].

dinkit (dingk-ki', -kee') adj., pp., poet. dressed up, adorned, spruced – 'My humour's coarse; I ken its naething dinkit' [JoHa], 'The dinkit touns dandies around me cam' bizzin . . . ' [JT].

dinkly (dingk-lee) adj., arch. sprucely, smartly – 'Dinkly dress't up for the Common Ridin' ' [GW].

Dinlabyre (din-lee-bīr) n. farm in the Liddel valley, north of Castleton, once a seat of the Elliots. William Nixon was there in 1544. Edward Nixon was Laird there in 1579/80 and in 1584, when he signed a bond of assurance for the behaviour of all of his branch of Nixons. Another Edward Nixon was there in 1638. 'William Ellwald of Duneleabyre' was among Scotsmen delivered to the English Deputy Warden in 1597. There were Elliots of Dinlabyre in the 17th century, with William Elliot recorded in the 1643 valuation when it was valued at £400 and also in the 1678 Land Tax Rolls. William of Dinlabyre, who died in 1693, probably rebuilt the main house and then extended it, these being marked by the lintels there with the dates 1668 and 1682, along with the initials of William Elliot. The Hearth Tax was paid for 3 hearths at 'Dinlibrs house' in 1694. It was purchased by John Oliver in about 1698. The present farmhouse was modernised in the late 19th century, but probably incorporating parts of the former structure. It is also said that there was an ancient chapel on the site. John Oliver paid tax on 23 windows for the house there in 1748. The nearby Dinlabyre Aisle, built in 1749, is a Georgian burial enclosure for the Olivers of Dinlabyre and Liddelbank. Gilbert Jardine was there in 1786, James Telfer was shepherd in 1797 and Thomas and James Common were there in 1801. The farm was valued at £400 in 1788 and 1811. James Moor was shepherd there in 1841. Andrew Kyle farmed there in 1851. Robert Douglas was farmer there in the mid-19th century, and was the oldest member of the Associate Kirk in Newcastleton in 1879. William Jackson was also there in 1868 (the name first appears as 'Donlebyer' in 1544, is 'Dunleybire' in 1584/5, 'Dunlybyir' in 1579/80, 'Duneleabyre' in 1597, 'Dunliebyre' and 'Dinlybire' in 1599, 'Dunlabyre' in 1612, 'Dunlibyre' in 1623, 'Dinleybyre' in 1676, 'Dunlabyre' in 1691, 'Dunliebire' in 1761 and has its modern spelling in 1797; it is on de Wit's c.1680 map of Scotland as 'Dunleyoyre', is 'Denlybyre' on a Buccleuch survey of 1718 and is on Stobie's 1770 map; its origin is probably Old English 'dun leah byre', meaning 'cowshed at the clearing by the hill').

Dinlabyre Aisle (din-lee-bīr-I-ul) n. mausoleum on the Dinlabyre farm in Liddesdale, built in 1749 for the Olivers of Dinlabyre and Liddelbank. It is shown clearly on the 1857 Ordnance Survey map.

Dinlabyre Burn (din-lee-bīr-burn) n. stream in Liddesdale, which rises on Hurklewinter Knowe and flows roughly westwards to join the Liddel near the farm of Dinlabyre. Side streams include Hog Sike and Boghall Burn. It contains some waterfalls.

Dinlabyre Chaipel (din-lee-bīr-chā-pul) n. reputed chapel near Dinlabyre farm in Liddesdale. J.A.H. Murray states that he passed by the site in 1861. A turf-covered structure, about 35 ft by 20 ft was described in the 1958 Transactions as being consistent with a chapel, but the evidence was far from conclusive. It is also said that gravestones were visible in the adjoining churchyard into the 19th century. The area is located near the Chapel Well, which is also circumstantial evidence. However, it is now buried in an area of forestation. It is also sometimes called 'Killoley Chapel', after a farm of that name mentioned in the 13th to 16th centuries; however, that name is probably associated with Kelly Cleuch about 1 km to the north.

Dinlabyre Mill (din-lee-bīr-mil) n. former corn mill on the farm of Dinlabyre. It was labelled on Stobie's 1770 map, a little up the Boghall Burn from the main farm.

Dinlayback Yetts (din-lā-bawk-yets) n. former name for an area on the road to Orchard farm. It is unknown precisely where this was located (mentioned in 1863 by Sir James Murray).

Dinlees (dn-leez) n. older form of 'Dinley', a farm on the Hermitage Water, just to the west of the Castle, with Dinley Burn, Fell and Moss nearby. It is probably the 'Dunle. . . ' which appears on the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale. On the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale it is valued at 5 merks and the tenant was Archibald Elliot. Adam Elliot, son of Davie 'of Dunlies' is recorded in 1590. George Scott possessed the lands in 1632, but it may also be the 'Dynla' listed among the possessions of Thomas Kerr of Ancrum in the same document. Archibald Henderson was tenant there in 1694. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties, when it was combined with Ginglenwalls, consisting of 1067 acres and bounded by Greystonehaugh, the Lord of Hoscote's lands, Twislehope, Rispylaw and Gorrenberry. The house in 1718 was in the same place as today's farmhouse. It was once split into the separate 'Over Dinley' and 'Nether Dinley'. William Elliot was farmer there in 1785–97 and William Thomson was servant there in 1801. Robert Dickson was farmer in 1861 – 'But he's tane aff his gude steel cap, And thrice he's wav'd it in the air – The Dinlay snaw was ne'er mair white, Nor the lyart locks of Harden's hair' [SWS] (also referred to as 'the Dinlees'; the name probably derives from the Old English 'dun leah', meaning 'clearing by the hill'; it first appears in 1508 as 'Dunley', is 'Dunle' in 1510, 'Denly' in 1516, 'Dunlie' in 1541, 'Dunlie' in 1656, 'Dinlay' in 1632, 'Dunly' in 1694, 'Dinlaw' in 1786 and 'Dinly' in 1797; the house is marked as 'Dunlyhil' on Gordon's c.1650 map, both 'N. Dunlay' and 'Dunlyhill' appear on Blaeu's 1654 map, it is 'Denley' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey, 'Dunlay' on Moll's 1745 map and 'Dunlee' on Stobie's 1770 map).

Dinley (din-lee) n. modern form of Dinlees on Hermitage Water.

Dinley Burn (din-lee-burn) n. stream in the Hermitage valley, which rises around Hartsgarth Fell and flows roughly north-east to join the Hermitage Water near the farm of Dinlees. There are waterfalls in its headwaters, called Dinley Linns and its smaller tributaries include Hare Grain, Scarry Cleuch and Long Grain. Note that Dinley Sike is a smaller separate stream to the east, while a little further down the Hermitage Water is Dinley Cleuch – 'And a merk, heich abune Hermitage, For the Dinlay Spoot' [DH].

Dinley Cleuch (din-lee-klooch) n. stream on the southern side of the Hermitage valley, just to the east of Dinlees. There is an old sheepfold shown on the Ordnance Survey maps.

Dinley Fell (din-lee-fel) n. high ground to the south of Dinlees farm, reaching a height of 399 m. It is essentially a shoulder on the higher hills to the south-westi, including Hartsgarth Fell and Roan Fell.

Dinleyhaughfit (din-lee-hawf-fi') n. Dinleyhaughfoot, former name for an area on the Hermitage Water to the east of Dinlees farm, once having a farmstead of the same name. There is a footbridge over the river there. Labourer John Scott was there in 1835, farm labourer James Bell and family in 1841 and farm worker Walter Elliot and his family in 1851 (it is 'Dinleahaugh' in 1851).

Dinley Moss (din-lee-mos) n. high, marshy ground to the south of Dinley Fell, in the headwaters of Hartsgarth Burn in Liddesdale.

Dinley Sike (din-lee-sīk) n. small stream south of the farm of Dinlees, which flows into the Hermitage Water. Note that it is separate from Dinley Burn to the west and Dinley Cleuch to the east.

dinmont (din-mon') n., arch. a castrated male sheep after its first shearing – '... wedderis, gymmir et Dynmont octingenta' [SB1492]', 'Item, tuentie scoir tua dynmonthis and tupes, price of the scoir ourheid, xiiij £' [SB1574], '... mylk yhawis with their lambs, 21d.; dynmonthis and tupes, 14d.' [JW], 'A lamb is smeared at the end of Harvest when it is denominated a hog; hence the phrase harvest-hog. After being smeared the second time, a ewe-hog is denominated a gimmer, and a wedder-hog a dymond' [JL] (also 'dymond' and variants).

Dinmontlair Knowe (din-mon'-lār-now) n. hill in southern Castleton, between Old Castleton and the Border, to the south-west of Wilson's Pike. It reaches a height of 395 m and the region immediately to the north-east is called Dinmont Lair.

Dinwuddie (din-wu-dee) n. Dinwoodie, farm in southern Castleton Parish, on the left-hand side of the B6357 between Under Burnmouth and Lawston. John Hotson was shepherd there in 1801. John Armstrong was blacksmith there in 1841 (it is 'Dinwoody' in 1841).

Dinwuddie (din-wu-dee) n. (Dinwoodie) Rev. Archibald Hutton (1855–1919) born in Woodhead, Penpont, son of farmer John and Agnes Gordon. He was educated at Morton School, Bathgate and Edinburgh University. He was licensed by Edinburgh Presbytery in 1881 and became assistant at Dalziel and then at Hawick. In 1887 he was ordained as minister of Teviothead Parish. He married Sophie Antoinette, daughter of Frederick Henry Thorold of Priestfield near Hawick. Their children were: Sophie Agnes; John Frederick, killed in Flanders in 1915; Janet Crow; Archibald Hutton, killed in action in 1917; Dorothy Mary; Henry Thorold; and Frances Margaret. James (b.1839/40) from Dumfriesshire, he was a doctor in Hawick. He was probably the 'Dr Dinwiddie' who in 1860 donated a coin to the Museum. In 1861 he was 'Asistant Surgeon' with Dr. McLeod at 7 Buccleuch Street. William (19th/20th C.) Treasurer for Hawick Home Mission for 38 years (also written 'Dinwiddie').

the Dippin o the Flag (thu-di-pin-ō-thu-flawg) n. ceremony on the Friday afternoon of the Common Riding, following the races at the Moor. After the mounted procession has ridden by Crumhaughhill Road, via Cheviot Road and Bright Street to Myreslawgreen, the Principals proceed to the Coble Pool, via Beaconsfield Terrace, St. George's Lane and the path along behind the High School. There they mark the old Burgh boundary with Wilton according to an ancient custom. The main 3 riders enter the water, while the Acting Father watches from the bank as the Cornet plunges the staff of the Flag into the Teviot 3 times. The Lasses and other townsfolk gather on the opposite bank to watch. After the Dipping, the Principals return up Beaconsfield Terrace to rejoin the cavalcade. The earliest descriptions suggest that the boundary at the Coble was once marked by throwing stones and divots into the river there. The ceremony was first filmed in 1927, with other clips in 1931, 1932, 1933, 1934 and 1937 – 'Then ride the mairches; cut the sod, An' dip the flag in Teviot water' [IJ].

James Pursell, the Deponent's uncle, disponed a house in Hawick to James Richardson, the Deponent's son ...' [C&L1767] (Scottish legal term).

the Disputit Common Ridin (thu-dis-pew'-ee'-ko-min-rī-din) n. the Common Riding of 1809, in which there was a serious dispute over the Council's attempts to regulate the invitation of Common-Riding supporters to the official events. An alternative Cornet, John Tully, was set up by the 'Wesla Lads', in opposition to the Council's choice of James Kyle. Two brothers called Gillies were brought in from Selkirk to be drummer and fifer. The 'rebel' flag is preserved in the Museum.

disregaird (dis-ree-gārd) n., v. disregard – 'For doon i the dungeons Gleg Reid-cap still lurks, In plain disregaird For the Office o Works!' [DH].

the Disruption (thu-dis-rup-shin) n. historic event of 1843 in Scottish church history in which 474 ministers signed the Deed of Demission, forming the Protesting Church of Scotland, which became the Free Church. The dispute centred on a number of factors, including the appointment of ministers without consultation with the congregation. This split was partially healed when the United Presbyterian Churches united with the Free Churches in 1900, with the Highland Free churches remaining separate. These churches in turn re-joined the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland in 1929. In Hawick Rev. J.A. Wallace along with 6 elders (George Blaikie, John Johnstone, James Smith, William Nisbet, John Routledge and William Butler) and about 600 of the congregation left St. Mary's in June 1843 to meet in the East End Meeting House until the Free Church (St. George's) was built in 1844. West Port Free Church, St. Andrew's Free Church and Wilton South followed later.

division (di-vi-shin) n., arch. formal partition of land, allocation of seating in a church – 'Mr John Purdom presented ane register, in which, at the division of the church, anno 1683, the brethren of the presbytery mett and did allocate to the heritors their seats in the body of the church below the lofts ...' [PR1714].

the Division (thu-di-vi-shin, -di-vee-shin) n. controversial arrangement to divide and enclose the Common in 1777. Originally the dispute arose between the people of Hawick and the neighbouring landowners, particularly the Duke of Buccleuch, over the precise rights and ownership of the Common; this may go back to a proposal from about a century earlier to split the Common evenly between the Town and the Baron (then Douglas of Queensberry), with a Commission struck by the Town to bring the case to the Court of Session. In the 18th century court proceedings lasted about a decade and resulted in Hawick losing 30% of the Common to Buccleuch and others, including the site of the Caa Knowe. In 1765 the Town wanted to know if it could lease or enclose parts of the Common and sought the legal of advocate James Montgomery, who suggested that the Common was effectively owned by the successors of the particate owners named in the 1537 Charter. As a result in 1766 the Town let 9 small pieces of the Common, adjacent to the lands of the neighbouring tenants, in an attempt to prevent encroachment onto the Moor. This led to clashes with the tenants of the Duke of Buccleuch, and a second legal opinion in 1766 suggested that the Duke's tenants may in fact have pasturage rights on the Common and that the matter needed to go to court to settle once and for all. In 1767 the agents of the Duke of Buccleuch (then a minor) raised an 'action of declarator and division of the Commonty' at the Court of Session. There followed depositions by many witnesses, regarding the former use of the Common. The Town's lawyer, Robert MacQueen, gave an opinion in 1768 that the situation was unclear. In 1769 the Town appointed 9 men to act as commissioners to negotiate on their behalf with the Duke of Buccleuch's managers. In 1774 Robert MacQueen offered his revised opinion that the neighbouring landowners had a claim to part of the Common, and suggested that the Town might concede ⅓ of the land. It then went to arbitration, with the final decision made in 1776 and the Division happening physically in 1777. In reading the dispositions of witnesses given in 1767, and considering the established nature of the Town's rights to the Common, it is hard to escape the conclusion that there was a travesty of justice in 1777. On the positive side, after that time the Town was allowed to enclose the land with dykes and fences, ending the practical need for riding the Marches. It also enabled the Town Council to raise rents, enabling it to make several improvements, including erecting a Town House, paving roads and building wells. However, many saw this as a treacherous move against the traditional rights of the townspeople. There was a commission into the state of municipal burghs in Scotland in about 1834, to which the inhabitants of Hawick pleaded for an investigation into the Division, 'having deemed themselves aggrieved' buy the decision of 1776; however, it was decided to be outside the remit of the commission and 'possession for upwards of fifty years, bars all discussion as to the title of the proprietors'. To mark the bicentenary in 1977 the 'Big Fower' rode to the Caa Knowe after the cutting of the sod and there briefly met the Provost and Bailies – 'Our marches rode, our landmarks planted, But ah! not those that Douglas granted' [AB], 'Magistrates! be faithful trustees, Equal poise the scales of justice, See our Common rightly guidit, Quirky lairds nae mair divide it' [JH].

divni (div-ni, -na) contr. don't, do not – 'mibbe ee div, bit A divni' (used for emphasis, cf. the more common dinni).

Dobbie (do-bee) n. Alexander (19th C.) lived at Eskbank. In about 1874 he was listed as owner of Catshawhill in Lilliesleaf Parish. Alexander 'Alec' Hawick Halberdier 1929–58. Rev. Andrew (19th C.) owner of part of the lands of Hungry-hills and others listed in the Land Tax Rolls for Lilliesleaf Parish in about 1874, having previously belonged to Andrew Gray. He was also listed at Hillhead in 1874. Rev. John (d.c.1832) minister at Teviothead until about 1832. It was after his death that Henry Scott Riddell was appointed minister there. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1716 he was servant to the Laird of Whitslade. He married Jean Grieve and their children included Marion (b.1716) and Helen (b.1723).

Dobie (dō-bee) n. former name for a well near Town-o-Rule (possibly 'Dubbie').

Dob's Linn (dōbz-lin) n. quarry off the A708 south of St. Mary's Loch, famous for graptolite fossils. The nearby Birkhill Cottage has a plaque commemorating the geological work of Charles Lapworth here in the 1870s – 'For Hab Dob and Davie Din, Dang the deil owre Dob's Linn' [T] (also called 'Dob Linn' and 'Dobb's Linn').

Dobson (dob-sin) n. John (16th C.) recorded in Langnewton in 1581 when he witnessed a transaction involving land in Melrose. Also in 1581 his son Patrick purchased a husbandland in Langnewton from John Young. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1693 when he was listed among the 'Cottars' on the Hearth Tax roll there. John Easton (1843–1903) born in Glasgow, son of William Dobson and Euphemia Easton. He became a Congregational minister at Blairgowrie in 1867. He moved to Lerwick in 1869, then Gainsborough in 1874 and in 1877 he became a member of the U.P. Church. In 1878 he became minister at Nelson Street, Aberdeen. He resigned in 1886 and became minister at Guardbridge in 1892. He married Susan Graham Hardie in 1872. His connection to Hawick is unclear, but in 1875 he donated 14 copper coins to the Museum. Patrick (16th C.) son of John. In 1581 he purchased a husbandland in Langnewton from John, son of Andrew Young in Langnewton. The cost was £27 Scots, and he held the lands of the Laird of Lochleven. William (18th C.) married Isabel Easton in Wilton Parish in 1768. William (19th C.) married Euphemia Easton in Wilton Parish in 1841. William (b.c.1810) spinner in Hawick, living besdide Nixon's Mill (i.e. at Lynnwood) in 1841. His wife was Mary, and their children included Adam, Thomas and Agnes. He became an elder in Allars Kirk in 1837. He later left Hawick and became a minister in the Congregational Union of Scotland. He returned in 1843 to preach at Allars Kirk while the minister was out of town, but was prevented by one of the elders withholding the key. He was minister of the 2nd Congregational Church in Hawick for a year or two about this time, then became the first Congregational minister at Innerleithen. Mr. ?? (19th C.) inn-keper at the Station Hotel. He had drink tents at the Moor and Haugh at the Common Riding of 1881 (at least).

dock-up (dok-up) n., arch. a push up by the buttocks, a help (also the more common dook-up or dooks).

docken (do-kin) n. dock plant, Rumex, especially its leaves – 'dis eet really help a nettle sting if ee rub docken leaves on eet?', '... Or find a midge 'mang dockens tyned, An' darkness fa'in'' [JoHa], 'As soople as a docken' [GW], anything of little value, especially in phrases like 'no gie a docken' – 'A dinna care a docken' [GW], 'The clubs and pubs pursued their way, and never cared a docken; At last the scandal settled down, and then no more was spoken' [JCG].

the Doctor (thu-dok-tur) n. nickname for James Scott in the early 18th century. Later it was a popular name for Dr. W.T. Barrie. Additionally in the early part of the 19th century the name was used for the Rector's assistant at the Grammar School.

Doctor H'Yiggs (dok-tur-hyigz) n. nickname in use in Hawick in the 19th century – 'The Sootie Kittlin' and Bumma Rae, Jenny Tranklets and auld Cauld Kail, Jamie Sprinkie, Kessy, the Kay, Doctor H'Yiggs and the Wat Wat Sail' [HI] (the origin is obscure).

the Doctor's Pend (thu-dok-turz-pend) n. former name for a pend in Denholm.

dod (dōd) n., arch. a hill, generally with a rounded top. The word survives in the name of several local hills, e.g. Black Dod, Little Dod and Muckle Dod, as well as possibly Dod Burn.

Dod (dōd) n. Christian name, usually a pet form of George.

Dod (dōd) interj. exclamation of surprise or affirmation – ' 'Dod, man, that's it! Banner – banner. Up wi' the Banner!' ' [BM1898], 'Dod, will Ah, puir fella, for ee're no like yin o' thae imposters that come sae muckle aboot ma lodgin' hoose' [JEDM], 'Dod, the snirtin body!' [ECS], 'He sometimes would say 'Dod deld!'. Sometimes 'Deverr desht'. And if he was very upset, he descended to 'Dod deld devert desht!' ' [JeC] (euphemism for 'God').

Dod (dōd) n. farm on the Dod Burn, reached by the track beside the Dodburn Filter Works. There is also a 6 m diameter round-house nearby, as well as signs of cultivation rigs. The recently excavated foundations of a peel tower (possibly Peelbrae or Dodrig) is beside the grassy track beyond the farm. On the south-eastern spur of White Hill, overlooking the farm, are the remains of a hill-fort, measuring about 205 ft by 150 ft, with a double rampart; it is covered by a later homestead (or perhaps this is 2 phases of single settlement), with at least one hut circle. The lands here were once owned by a branch of the Gledstains family, under Gledstains of Cocklaw, since at least 1509/10 (in a document for Douglas of Cavers, referring to much earlier charters). In 1643 the lands were valued (along with Hunthill) at £180. When the last Gledstains of Dod died, the lands went to a distant female of that name who married Capt. Vetch (brother of Lord Bowhill). He sold it to James Pott, who became the first Pott of Dod. By 1707 the lands had been disjoined from Hunthill and valued at £130. Gideon Pott was listed as owner of 'Dod or Dodrig' in 1788 (and still recorded in 1811), when it was valued £130 (sometimes written 'Dodd'; it was 'Doed' in 1509/10).

the Dod (thu-dōd) n. hill just north of Akermoor Loch, in the headwaters of the Ale, reaching a height of 364 m. A former farmstead near here may have been the home of 'Jamie Telfer of the Fair Dodhead' (there is a house marked 'Dodhead' in roughly this location on Gordon's c.1650 map).

Dodbank (dōd-bawngk) n. name for a former farm at 'Dodhead' above the Ettrick valley. This may have been the location for the ballad 'Jamie Telfer of the Fair Dodheid' (although there is no evidence there was ever a Telfer there, or indeed that the ballad is anything other than fiction). It was possessed by a branch of the Scotts, Walter, son of Robert having the lease in 1510. Walter Scott in Synton was tenant in 1541, paying £18 yearly. James, 4th son of John, younger of Synton had a lease on it in the late 16th century. Robert of Satchells, son of James, had a charter for the lands in 1609. The lands may were known as the west steading of 'Glidhouse' or 'Gildhouse' in the 15th century (it is marked on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Dod Burn (dōd-burn) n. stream flowing into the Allan Water from the south, joining near Dodburn farm. It was mentioned as early as the 1160s, when 'Brunemore super Dod' was part of the description of the boundaries of Ringwood when granted to Melrose Abbey. The area is rich in prehistoric remains and part of the stream may have formed a section of the boundary line of the Catrail. A flint arrow-head was found up the burn in the 1970s. In a clearing near the head of the stream there is the remains of a settlement, including foundations of longhouses, enclosures and signs of rig-and-furrow cultivation.

Dodburn (dōd-burn) n. farm near where the Dod Burn joins the Allan Water. 'Sym Ellot of Dodburne' is recorded in 1569 and 1573. Will Elliot and his brothers Archie and Sim were tenants there in 1586. 'Johnne Niksoun in Dodburne' is recorded in 1586/7 and 'Rynion Ellott of Dodborne' in 1589. It was once split into the lands of Over and Nether Dodburn. In 1621 these were granted by Robert Elliot of Redheugh to Gavin Elliot of Brugh. In 1631 Gavin's widow sold the lands to William Eliott, younger of Stobs. However, Gilbert of Stobs had purchsed 5 merks of land there in 1622 (without prejudice to Gavin of Brugh's infeftment) from Robert Elliot of Redheugh along with the rest of the lands of Winnington. 'Over and Nether Dodburns' were listed among the lands held by Eliott of Stobs in 1657 and was part of the Lordship of Winnington in the late 17th century. It was listed as 'Dodburne in Kirkton Parioch' on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls (although probably in Cavers Parish at that time); Robert Moscrop, James Goodfellow and John Pott were there. Robert Nixon was there in 1705. John Leyden was there in 1709 and Samuel Leyden in 1730. Robert Hall was there in 1771, Thomas Turnbull in 1789 and William Reid was farmer there in 1797. Upper and Nether Dodburn were valued at £132 14s 7d in 1788, as part of the estate of Eliott of Stobs. They had the same value in the Land Tax Rolls of 1813. A perforated stone disc from there is in the Museum (note that this is about a mile north of the farm called Dod; it is marked on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Dodburne' and is 'Dodburne Ovir et Nethir' in 1670).

Dodburn (dōd-burn) n. name used for the water supply system at Dodburn Filters, generating part of Hawick's drinking water since 1882.

Dodburn (dōd-burn) n. humorous name for local tap water, so-called because of the supply coming from Dod Burn – 'Can A hev a whusky an Dodburn?'.

Dodburn Filters (dōd-burn-fil'-urz) n. Hawick water supply system on the Dod Burn, with facilities originally gifted by the 5th Duke of Buccleuch, and opened in 1882. This consisted of a reservoir that was constructed to hold the water. Two hill burns (Priesthaugh and Skelfhill) supply the water, which is gravel-filtered before being fed to the town. At the opening ceremony the Town was decorated with banners, flags and floral displays. A huge procession met the Duke of Buccleuch, including the Cornet with the Flag, Freemasons with their aprons and sashes and many other representatives of organisations within Hawick. This was followed by dinner for about 500 people in the Exchange Buildings, followed by a ball. The Duke of Buccleuch was presented with an engraved jug. The house at the filters is called Dodburn Filter Cottage, and is on the east side of the road roughly opposite a complex of ancient earthworks. About 30 m northeast of the filters themselves are the remains of a round-house, 6 m in diameter, with associated signs of cultivation.

Dodburn Hill (dōd-burn-hil) n. small hill to the east of Dodburn. It reaches a height of 292 m (963 ft). There are a group of archæological remains on its summit, similar to those to the east on White Knowe, but more complex. It consists of a roughly oval enclosure, composed of double ramparts and ditches (now ill-defined). There is also a hut circle inside the eastern side of the earthwork, about 11 m in diameter, contained within a roughly triangular enclosure. There used to be a military firing range (for Stobs Camp) on its eastern side.

Dodd (dōd) n. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Turnbull and their children included: Janet (b.1671); Robert (b.1675); Bessie (b.1677); Thomas (b.1682); and Isobel (b.1687). Witnesses in 1671 were Robert Jolly and William Swan. Andrew (1682/3–1717) precentor of Jedburgh Kirk and assistant Schoolmaster at Jedburgh Grammar School, who is buried in Bedrule (although the reason for this is not known). His gravestone contains 28 lines of Latin, including 'A Theology candidate, and not unskilled in the art of Medicine. He excelled in Hebrew, Greek and Latin, as well as in the vernacular. He was a strenuous upholder of the Reformed religion and the discipline of the suffering church oh his native land'. George (18th/19th C.) labourer at Turnpikeside in Southdean Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. John 'Jack' (19th C.) maternal grandfather of J.E.D. Murray. He fought at the Battle of Waterloo. For many years in the early 1800s was the chief drummer in the Drums and Fifes, 1848 being his last Common Riding. His drum and stick were later possessed by Andrew Ballantyne. John Thomas (19th/20th C.) farmer at Riccarton. He served as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. William (18th/19th C.) flesher in Newcastleton, listed in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. William of Greenholm (b.1792/3) mason in Newcastleton. In 1851 he was living at about 1 Douglas Square. In 1852 he was listed as 'Dodds' among Newcastleton masons. By 1861 he was 'Land Proprietor' at the same address. His wife Elizabeth was from England, and may be the hat-maker listed in Newcastleton in 1852. Their children included Elizabeth, John, Jane and Margaret. His name is 'Dodds' in a directory of 1852 (formerly also spelled 'Dod'; cf. Dodds).

doddie (do-dee) n., arch. a hornless bull, cow or sometimes sheep – '. . . doddies an stirks an queys an stots an gimmers an hoggies an grumphies an guissies' [ECS].

Dodds (dōdz) n. Adam 'Ade' (16th C.) recorded in 1573 when Robert Scott of Thirlestane was charged to enter him at the Tolbooth in Edinburgh. He was listed as 'Ade Doddis, callit Pais Polk in Ramseclewis'. He probably lived at Ramseycleuch in the Ettrick valley, but it is unclear what his nickname meant. Andrew (17th C.) blacksmith at Minto according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Andrew (d.c.1682) tenant in Bedrule whose will is recorded in 1682. He could be the same man as the Andrew recorded in 1694, or pehaps his father. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He may be related to John who is listed in the same Parish. He is probably the Andrew whose children baptised in Bedrule Parish included: Walter (b.1691); John (b.1695); and Margaret (b.1698). He is surely related to John and Thomas, who are recorded in Bedrule at about the same time. Probably the same Andrew was an Elder in Bedrule in at least 1722–24. Andrew (17th C.) blacksmith at Hartshaugh in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he was taxed for 2 hearths. It seems likely that he was related to the blacksmith in Minto. Andrew (17th C.) weaver in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers' list for the new Kirk bell. He was a resident of the westside of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He could be the Andrew who married Isobel Turnbull, and whose children baptised in Hawick included: Janet (b.1671); Robert (b.1675); Bessie (b.1677); Thomas (b.1682); Isobel (b.1687); and Janet (again, b.1689). He was a weaver on the 1689 baptismal record, with witnesses wright John Purcell and cooper John Turnbull. He is probably the Andrew who witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott of Glack in Hawick in 1680. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Denholm. His children included: Andrew (b.1728); Margaret (b.1730); William (b.1732); and William (again, b.1735). Andrew (18th C.) married Helen Hardie in Kirkton Parish in 1755. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Hassendean. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. Rev. Andrew (1809–76) from Lilliesleaf, son of Andrew and Margaret Thomson. He was ordained as minister of Avonbridge Burgher Kirk in 1846. He owned the farm of Hillhead. He married Christian Anderson. Anthony (1818–87) Schoolmaster of the Grammar School and then Buccleuch School in the late 19th century, and probably one of the most highly respected townsmen of his day. The youngest son of a shepherd, Robert, and Isabella Hume, he was born in Linton and educated at Eckford. He went to Edinburgh University, became a private tutor and then was appointed Mathematics teacher and assistant to James Murray in Hawick in 1840. He originally lived in the schoolhouse with the Murrays and taught the junior boys. He took over as Headmaster of the Grammar School in 1853, and retired in 1880. James A.H. Murray joined him as an assistant teacher in 1854 when only 17. He referred to himself as 'Rector', and lived in the house adjoining the school. A presentation tea service, clock, etc. were given to him by former pupils in 1878, at a dinner arranged in his honour. He was also Parish Session Clerk from about 1851 until his death, and served as Hawick's first Registrar 1854–87, helping to locally implement the 1854 Registration Act. He married Helen Scott of Hawick in 1850 and later Elizabeth Armstrong (daughter of the Sandbed baker). His children were Isabella, Robert, John and Annetta, and they lived at 15 Allars Crescent, and in later years at 11 Slitrig Crescent. His 2 sons moved to America, while Isabella became an infant teacher in Hawick. Although he retired as Rector, he remained as Registrar for many more years, carefully recording locally marriages, births and deaths. He is buried in the Wellogate Ceemetery and a portrait of him exists. Elizabeth (19th C.) milliner in Newcastleton, recorded in 1852. She may be the wife of mason William, listed on Douglas Square in the 1851 census. George W. (19th/20th C.) helped James H. Haining with transcriptions of the monumental inscriptions in St. Mary's Kirkyard. Probably the same George was involved with the Borders Music Festival. Helen (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In about 1640, along with Jean Hislop, she was accused by the Session of 'knocking of bear on the Lord's-day' (i.e. beating barley to remove the husks). Isobel (17th C.) resident in Bewlie. In about 1684 she was on a list of Covenanter fugitives. James (17th C.) resident in Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to John and William, who were also listed there. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Clarilaw in 1744 and 1751. He witnessed a baptism in 1744 for Robert Easton and Jean Dodds (probably a close relative) in Clarilaw. In 1744 his son Andrew ('in fornication') with Marion Borth[...] was baptised in Wilton, with witnesses John Anderson and William Gibson. He married Margaret Dryden in 1749 and their son James was baptised in 1751, with witnesses James Scott and Thomas Cathrae. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was recorded at Whitchesters in 1758. He married Jane (or 'Jean') Glendinning in 1756 and their children included: Walter (b.1758); twins John and Robert (b.1766); and Helen (b.1771). The witnesses in 1758 were Andrew Turnbull and James Glendinning (probably a relative). Thomas Miller and Alexander Bunyon witnessed the baptism in 1766. James (18th/19th C.) servant at Templehall in Hobkirk Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Carlisle who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He probably had a local connection. John (15th C.) mentioned in the 1479 resignation of the lands of Broadlee in the Barony of Hawick. It was signed at Broadlee, and so he was probably a local man. His name is recorded as 'Johannem Doddis'. John (17th C.) tenant of John Riddell of Muselee. In 1665 he made an agreement with the tenants of Harry Riddell (portioner of Bewlie) over boundaries between them. John (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. His name is written 'Doods'. He could be the John whose children baptised in Bedrule Parish included: Jean (b.1693); Thomas (b.1694); Andrew (b.1697); and Isobel (b.1697). He is probably related to other Dodds' in Bedrule. John (17th C.) resident of Castleside in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. John (17th C.) resident in Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to James and William, who were also listed there. He may be the same as the John recorded in 1665. He could be the John who witnessed baptisms in the Hassendean part of Roberton Parish in 1687 and 1688. He could be the John who (along with Patrick) witnessed a baptism for John Turnbull and Margaret Dodds (surely a relative) in 1688. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1787 he married Betty Bryson, who was also from Hawick. John (18th/19th C.) grocer and merchant in Newcastleton. He is listed among heads of households in 1835–38. John (b.c.1790) from England, he was recorded as an Army Pensioner on Teviot Crescent in 1841. His wife was Isabel, and they had a daughter Helen. By 1851 his wife was keeping a lodging house on O'Connell Street, and he was presumably deceased. John 'Jock' (1886–1959) joined Innes-Henderson in 1918 (before they re-merged) and remained with them through the Braemar years, ending as managed of the printing office until he retired in 1958. He also edited the Braemar Bulletin during WWII. He was known as a concert entertainer and also wrote the 'Betty Whutson' column for a while. Les 'Doddsy' (1945/6–2021) born in Newcastle, he spent most of his life in the Hawick area. He worked for horse trainer Harry Bell and rode for Ken Oliver. Later he worked for the council as a roads officer. He was a stalwart of the local flapping scene and a founder member of the Hawick Horse Riding Association. His horses won 5 Buccleuch Handicaps and 3 Trandesmen's Handicaps. He also had some winners under Jockey Club rules.

His sons Kevin and Eric died young. He married Cathy and they had a daughter Michelle. Patrick (17th C.) resident of 'the netherend' of Hassendean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He witnessed baptisms in Roberton Parish for Thomas Scott in Hassendean in 1683, for William Scott in 1686 and for George Davidson and Walter Young in 1687. Additionally in 1686 and 1688 he witnessed baptisms for John Turnbull and Margaret Dodds (who may have been his sister or other close relative). Robert (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Scott in 1771 and their children included Barbara (b.1772), Jane (b.1774) and Agnes (b.1777). Robert (18th/19th C.) blacksmith at Belses, recorded on the ballots for the Militia in 1797. He was 'Rob Dods' at Barnhills on the list in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799 and also listed on the 1801 ballot. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Nelly Turnbull and their children included John (b.1795) and William (b.1799). Robert (b.c.1780) servant at Wester Essenside according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. He was a farm labourer living at Burnfoot on Ale in 1841 and 1851 with his wife Helen (from Wilton); his widow was living at Headshaw in 1861 with the family of her son-in-law Robert Hewitson. Probably the same Robert married Helen (or 'Nelly') Lamb and had children, baptised in Ashkirk, including: George (b.1808); John (b.1810); James (b.1812); and Isabel (b.1815). Robert (19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His wife's name was Christian and theor son Robert was baptised in 1830. Thomas (15th C.) resident of the Bedrule area mentioned in 1494/5. George Shiel in Bedrule had remission for stealing 40 silver shillings from him, as well as a stone of butter and other goods and 'flammeis sue uxoris' (which may mean that he burned his wife). Thomas (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married 'Heilling Wauche' in 1648. Note that Robert 'Veatche' married 'Heilling Dods' in Ashkirk in 1644, with either or both perhaps being related to this couple. Thomas (17th C.) tenant 'in Newtoune' (probably in Bedrule Parish). The will of his wife, Margaret Henderson, was recorded in 1685. He may be Thomas whose children baptised in Bedrule Parish included: Andrew (b.1694); Walter (b.1696); and Thomas (b.1699). He was surely related to Andrew and John, who lived in Bedrule at the same time. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Helen Veitch and their children included: Agnes (b.1717); and Andrew (b.1720). He witnessed baptisms in 1724 for John Lamb in Clarilaw, in 1728 for Adam Armstrong in Burnhead and in 1736 for Archibald Scott in Burnhead and Robert Gibson in Clarilaw. His wife could be the Helen Veitch who died at Clarilaw in 1752. Thomas (18th/19th C.) from Ashkirk Parish, in 1793 he married Jane Scott of Cavers Parish. Their son Peter was born in Selkirk in 1794. Thomas (18th/19th C.) 'Barnman' at Bedrule according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. Thomas (18th/19th C.) smith at Newton in Bedrule Parish according to the ballots for the Militia in 1799 and 1801. He may be the Thomas whose children Charles (b.1797) and Robert (b.1799) were baptised in Bedrule Parish. Thomas (18th/19th C.) married Elizabeth Stevenson in Hobkirk in 1810. Thomas (b.c.1780s) labourer at 'Mains Park' in Roberton Parish, according to the ballot for the Militia. Probably the same Thomas married Elizabeth Stevenson and had a son John baptised in Roberton in 1811. Walter (18th/19th C.) from Kirkton Parish, in 1792 he married Margaret Anderson from Cavers Parish. William (17th C.) resident in Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to James and John, who were also listed there. William (18th C.) resident at Earlside in 1726. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: John (b.1723); William (b.1724); and John (again, b.1726). William (18th C.) married Agnes Lamb in Wilton Parish in 1778 (also written 'Dods'; cf. Dodd).

Dodds' Schuil (dōdz-skil) n. popular name for the Grammar School in the mid-19th century or Buccleuch School in the later 19th century. This was when Anthony Dodds was Schoolmaster, and the name still in use slightly later – 'Sic thochts bring back my boyhood's days: The schule in Orrock Place, Auld Dodds, his Buirdly form I mind, And Webster's smiling face' [WLu].

Dodds's whulps (dōd-zeez-whulps) n., arch nickname for the pupils at the Grammar School, used insultingly by the pupils from the Academy in the Subscription Rooms ('Mudie's Monkeys') in the mid-19th century.

Dod Fell (dōd-fel) n. hill to the east of the 'Note o the Gate' road, just south of Singdean. It reaches a height of 433 m. This is probably the 'Dod' listed among the highest hills in Castleton Parish in 1839 – '... No tae speak o' Meg's Shank or Catcleuch Shin, Phenzhopehaugh, Tushielae, Faw Side An for a richt dowie dollop o glaur For gettin yer gruntles intae ... Muckle Dod Fell' [LSF] (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Dod Filter Cottage (dōd-fil'-ur-ko'-eej) n. cottage at the Dodburn Filter Works, just north of Dod farm, also referred to as 'Dodburn Filter Cottage'.

Dodgson (doj-sin) n. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He married Mary Wilson and their children included: Thomas (b.1795); Robert (b.1797); Anne (b.1799); and Margaret (b.1809).

Dodheid (dōd-heed) n. Dodhead, possibly a farm near the head of the Dodburn. This has been claimed by some as the location for the ballad 'Jamie Telfer o' the Fair Dodheid'. However, there is no evidence there was ever a farm of that name in this location, and if there is any historical truth to the ballad, it is much more likely to have been set at the place of that name in the Ettrick valley.

Dodheid (dōd-heed) n. Dodhead, farm above the Ettrick valley, which seems the most probable location for the ballad 'Jamie Telfer o' the Fair Dodheid'. It is south of Singlie and Hyndhope and due north of Redfordgreen. It is recorded in 1455 as one of the 'four stedes of Redefurd'. It (or perhaps a neighbouring farm) was also known as 'Dodbank' and belonged to a branch of the Scotts, being tenanted by them in the late 16th century, and in 1609 Robert Scott of Satchells had a crown charter for the lands. By 1628 it belonged to Scott of Harden. William Hogg lived there in 1720 when he got married in Hawick. John Nichol was recorded at 'Dodheadsheals' in 1726 and John Shiel in 1728. James Mercer of Scotsbank was owner in the 1802 Land Tax Rolls. There is no evidence there was ever a tenant there called Telfer, although there was a Simpspon farming there in 1510 (it is marked on Gordon's c.1650 map and on Blaeu's c.1654 map).

Dod Hill (dōd-hil) n. hill on the north side of the Hermitage valley, north-west of Gorrenberry farmhouse. It reaches a height of 432 m.

Dodimead (do-dee-meed) n. Henry (b.1812/3) from England, he was a carrier in Hawick. In 1861 he was at 10 Allars Crescent. His wife was Agnes. He is probably the Henry, married to Agnes Fox, whose daughter Agnes was born in Bristol in 1841.

Dodlands Cottage (dōd-lindz-ko'-eej) n. cottage on the road to Bonchester, between Beechhurst and Woodburn. It was birthplace of John Daykins, who was awarded the Victoria Cross. It is probably the place referred to in the 19th century as 'the Dodlins'.

the Dodlins (thu-dōd-liz) n. former name for an area off the Bonchester road, near where Beechhurst was built and where Dodlands Cottage is now.

Dodrig (dōd-rig) n. former home of a branch of the Elliots, somewhere on the Dod Burn. It probably lay not as far south as the hill called Dod Rig, which is above the Priesthaugh Burn, to the west of the headwaters of the Dod Burn. This is probably the 'dodrik' where Alexander Turnbull had sheep stolen in 1502. Robert Elliot held the lands in 1583, and his father Archibald before him, going back to about 1547. In 1574 Robert Elliot of Redheugh served as surety for the residents there. In 1583 there was a complaint that the men of Robert Elliot of Redheugh came to the farm repeatedly and 'thair cruellie strak and dang his servandis and put thame fra occupying and labouring thairof, invading thame for thair slauchter'. The lands of 'Dodrig or Dod' were owned by Gideon Pott in 1788, when valued at £130. The pele house from that time may be the one whose remains are on the south-eastern side of Gray Coat, beside the grassy track leading south from Dod farm (marked 'Doddrigg' on Blaeu's 1654 map, but appears to be located in the upper valley of the Langside Burn).

Dod Rig (dōd-rig) n. ridge lying between the Priestahugh and Dod Burns, to the east of Priesthaugh-hill steading. It reaches a height of 410 m, with a second peak to the south reaching 416 m.

Dod Witter Scheme (dōd-wi'-ur-skeem) n. name sometimes used for the public water supply from the Dod Burn, opened in 1882 (see also Dodburn Filters).

Doecleuch (dō-klooch) n. former steading between Old Northhouse and Priesthaugh, east of Doecleuch Hill. Archie Elliot was there in 1588/9. It is described in 1660 as a 'pendicle' of Stobicote. In 1694 David Minto was there, as well as shepherd Andrew Irvine and also Margaret Scott 'in Brugh'. It was probably farmed by Robert Scott, 'Auld Hobbie o Skelfhill' in the late 17th century. It was surveyed along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1718, when it consisted of 328 acres and was bounded by Brugh, Skelfhill, Northhouse and Stobicote. John Scott was there in at least 1726–29 and William Thomson in 1749. In 1788 (and still recorded in 1811) the lands were listed among those in Cavers Parish belonging to Scott of Buccleuch, but which had been acquired since 1643 and were then valued at £140. The hill to the east contains a stone circle and several settlements, and the Catrail passes close by. One of these earthworks was sometimes referred to as 'Dogcleugh Castle', although it is not clear which one. The small stream there is the 'Doe Cleuch' and forms part of the probable boundary line of the Catrail (also written 'Doecleugh', 'Dogcleugh', 'Dogscleugh', 'Dockcleuch', etc.; it is 'Dogcleoch' in 1588/9, 'Dokcleuch' in 1590, appears to be 'Dobcleuch' in 1599, is 'Docleugh' in 1694, 'Doccleugh' in 1729 and 'Dockcleugh' in 1811; it is marked 'Dockcleuch' on Blaeu's 1654 map and 'Dockecleugh' on Stobie's 1770 map; the origin of the name may be the obvious 'doe' for female deer, but that seems to be rarely used in placenames).

Doecleuch Hill (dō-klooch-hil) n. hill to the west of the road between Priesthaugh and Old Northhouse, rising to 316 m. The Catrail crosses its northern slopes, while to the south-east aerial photography shows a possible settlement.

Doecleuchshiel (dō-klooch-sheel) n. former farmstead just to the south of Old Northhouse (marked on Stobie's 1770 map as 'Dockecleughshiel').

Doesgate (dōz-gā') n. former name of a geographic feature on Essenside farm, near Leap Hill.

Dogbank Hill (ōg-bawngk-hil) n. hill just to the west of the Note o the Gate, being the southern shoulder of Dog Knowe.

the dog dish (thu-dōg-dish) n. water dish for dogs to drink out of, fixed to the pavement outside 4 Tower Knowe. It was there through much of the 20th century.

dog-hip (dōg-hip) n. rose-hip, the fruit of the dog rose, Rosa canina.

the Dog Hoose (thu-dōg-hoos) n. popular name for a former house on the left of the present entrance to Rosalee. It was possibly named for being the place where dogs of the Langlands estate were once kept. The house itself was used as a women's school and for several other purposes, and existed well into the 20th century.

the Dog Knowe (thu-dōg-now) n. hill just to the west of the Note o the Gate, reaching a height of 459 m.

Dog Knowe (dōg-now) n. hill of 365 m to the west of Twislehope farm, in the upper reaches of the Hermitage valley (it is marked 'Dog Know' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

dog-luggit (dōg-lu-gee', -gi') adj. dog-eared – '... dog-luggit ... tide-merked Wi mony a drowe and drookin' ' [DH].

Dog Pintle (dōg-pin'-ul) n. nickname for Archibald Elliot.

dog's-bran (dōgz-brawn) n., arch. bran that is only fit for dogs – 'Also they built a Miln on that same burn, To grind Dogs-bran though there there grew no Corn' [CWS].

Dogscleugh see Doecleuch

dogs rabbit it (dōgz-raw-bi'-ee') interj., arch. indeed, really, mild oath, confound it! – 'Dogsrabbit it, what's keepit ye, ye lazy molehead?' [WNK], "Aw've laid in a penny worth o' peats and a cap fu' o' coals – an' dogs, rabbit-it, let it blaw' [WNK] (there are spelling variants; this euphemistic phrase is essentially the same as the 'dagnabbit' that is familiar from Bugs Bunny cartoons, with the connection to a rabbit not being a coincidence).

doit (doi', doit) n., arch. a small Dutch copper coin, worth about half a farthing or one penny Scots, used in the 18th century to describe small, foreign or worthless coins in general – 'The session desire the bailies to take the doyts put up in a bag and sell them to the best advantage, and return the price thereof to the poor box again' [PR1711], 'Besides also much money now in his hands that he has made up of Doyts and other bad money' [PR], '4s 0d Recd. for Doits' [Hob1760] (also written 'doyt'; cf. dite and doitit).

doiter (doi'-ur, doi-tur) v., arch. to walk unsteadily, totter, dodder, potter about – 'We totter through the birkie bank, an' doiter owre the brae ... ' [JoHa], 'A met a doiterin, duddy, auld hallan-shaker as A lampeet doon that lang brae' [ECS].

doitard (doi-turd) n., poet. a dotard – ' 'What ails the orpit doyterd stycke', The kerlyn loudly said' [JTe].

doitit (doi'-ee', doi-tee') adj., arch. stupid, bewildered, muddled – '... Her line o' males shall pass away Wi' the halbert, brand and spear, Ane doitit race the distaff ply, an' petticoats shall wear' ' [T].

dolefi (dōl-fi, -fe, -fu) adj., poet. doleful, sorrowful – 'With a yirlish skraik, with a squelch and a groan, And wi' cries that were dulefu' and awfu' ' [JTe].

Doles (dōlz) n. James (15th C.) proposed as Archdeacon of Glasgow in 1478, on the death of Patrick Hume. Nicholas Forman also appears to have been proposed, but neither were confirmed.

Dolfinus (dōl-fin-is) n. parson of Cavers recorded in about the 1170s. Reginald of Durham mentions him in a couple of his stories about the life of St. Cuthbert. He was responsible for the chapel devoted to St. Cuthbert, which has been identified with a site at Cogsmill, and said to be associated with several miracles. He probably told these stories to Reginald, including how travellers were protected from a storm in the roofless chapel, how Rosfritha and Seigiva (from Hawick) had a candle appear when their own candles had gone out, and the tale of a poor widow, unable to hire a shepherd, but her flock was protected from the wolves near the chapel. His mother (or perhaps his clerk's mother) had a disease that made her swollen for 17 years, but was apparently cured by appealing to St. Cuthbert, whereupon a vision of him appeared, piercing her belly with the point of his staff and releasing the poison; she was a domestic servant in the household of Osbert, Abbot of Jedburgh (also written 'Dolfinius').

dollar (do-lur) n., arch. former silver coin in use in the 16th and 17th centuries, with value around 60 Scots shillings – 'The said parties are also ordainit to lodge with the Session-Clerk one dollar each, which is to be keepit for 3 4ths of ane year' [Ash1641] (also 'rex dollar', 'legged dollar', etc.).

dolly dumper (do-lee-dum-pur) n. a machine used in the knitwear industry to strengthen and soften a garment through pounding between wooden blocks in a vat of soapy water (cf. waulk mill for tweeds).

Dolly Rig (do-lee-rig) n. ridge to the north-west of Hoscote on the north side of the Borthwick valley. This must be the land of 'Dualyrig' stated to be to the west of Milsington in a charter of 1451. There is a linear earthwork on the lower slopes, running from near Girnwood to the woods above Hoscote. It has been suggested that this is part of the Catrail, but it seems more likely to be a more recent agricultural boundary.

Dolphinsonsteed (dol-fin-sin-steed) n. former lands in the northern part of Liddesdale, listed under the 'Ermyldoune' section in a rental roll of c.1376. The precise location is uncertain. It is recorded as 'Dolfynesonstede', with a value of 10 shillings.

Dolphinston (dol-fin-stin) n. farm and moor south-east of Mossburnford in Jedburgh Parish. In early times it was associated with the Ainslie and Ker families. There is a triangulation pillar there, at a height of 234 m (the origin is probably the Old Norse name 'Dolgfinnr' or 'Dolphin', which was commin in Northern England; the name first appears as 'Dolfineston' in 1296; it is 'Dolphington' in 1454, 'Dolphinstoune' in 1502 and 'Dolphinstoune' and 'Dolphingstoune' in 1525; it is on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Dolphinstoun', while Stobie's 1770 map also marks the mill by the Jed).

domeenion (dom-enn-yin) n., arch. dominion – 'An' oo've seen little cause for tae change oor opeenion, There's naething e'er thrives under whisky's domeenion' [BM1900].

domiciles (do-mi-seels) n., pl., arch. household effects – 'Item, in vtencilis and domicilis by the airschip, estimat to the somme of ane hundreth pundis' [SB1574].

the Dominican Convent (thu-do-mi-nee-kin-kon-vin') n. original name for the Convent established by the Dominican nuns, firstly at 14 Buccleuch Street and then at Myreslawgreen.

dominie (do-mi-nee) n., arch. schoolmaster – 'hei often got the tawse frae his dominie', 'After the witches had accomplished their diabolical purposes with the poor dominie, they joined the party of fairies on the highest pinnacle of the Abbey . . . ' [EM1820], 'Wi' dominie Davie, wha's fash'd wi' the spavie, His helper, sae funny an' friskie' [JoHa], 'She had twined the dominie o' the ket On whilk he had thrie times dyned' [WiSp], 'The grassy green where Leyden passed Still welcomes with a smile, For here the Dominie of yore Would sit and rest awhile' [WFC], '. . . As the dominie glowered oot owre his specs – I wot they'd be better weans!' [WL].

Domingo (do-ming-go) n. Robert (1828/9–98) born in Selkirk, he was a woollen spinner in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 5 Tannage Close. He married Isabella Ripley in 1854, the marriage recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. Their children included Robert (b.1855), Williamina Leithead (b.1858), Isabella Thorburn (b.1861) and Elizabeth (b.1864). Robert (b.1855) son of Robert. He was an apprentice journalist with the Hawick Advertiser, later becoming editor and manager. He also became local correspondent for The Scotsman and The Evening Dispatch, making him one of the best known reporters in the area. He retired in 1935 after 42 years in journalism. He married Mary Knox of Martin's House in 1900 and their only child was Robert Knox (b.1903).

Don (don) n. Sir Alexander (1751–1815) eldest son of Sir Alexander, he was the 7th Baronet. He had a strathspey named after him, which is said to have been a forerunner of 'Auld Lang Syne'. He played a prominent part in the formation of the Border Union Agricultural Society and was one of the first Vice-Presidents. He was listed as a voter in Roxburghshire in 1780 and both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1788. He may have planned the house and estate at Newton. He was still listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819 (although already desceased), along with his son Alexander. He married Henrietta (or Harriet) Cunningham, sister of a patron of Burns and eventual heiress of the 13th Earl of Glencairn. He subscribed to 4 copies of Burns 'Edinburgh Edition' in 1787, with his wife subscribing for another 4. Their children were: Alexander, who succeeded; Mary; and Elizabeth. Both daughters drowned in the Eden in 1795, when the miller inadvertently opened the sluice gate when they were crossing some stepping stones. Sir Alexander of Newton-Don (b.1779–1826) son of Sir Alexander and Henrietta Cunningham. He was the 6th Baronet. His 2 sisters both drowned while trying to save a companion in crossing the swollen River Eden. He was in Paris when Napoleon issued an edict against foreigners leaving France, and so was stuck there until 1810. He was present at the meeting led by his father in 1812 at which the 'Border Society' (to become the 'Bordern Union Agricultural Society'. He succeeded to the estates when his father died in 1815 and had a new house built at Newton Don in 1817–19. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. He was defeated by Gilbert Elliot (later Earl of Minto) in the Roxburghshire election of 1812, the margin being 6 votes (although some accounts differ). However, he was M.P. for Roxburghshire 1814–26. He was said to be 'the model of a cavalier in all courteous and elegant accomplishments', but had expensive habits (particularly horse-racing), and had to sell off his estate at Ochiltree. He was also a member of the Jedforest Club. He married Lucretia, daughter of G. Montgomerie from Norfolk and secondly married Grace, eldest daughter of John Stein, M.P. His children were: Sir William Henry; and Alexina Harriet, who married Frederick Accolm Milbank. Peter (15th C.) listed among the Roxburghshire men who had remission in 1488/9 from James IV for their support of the previous King, especially on the battlefield at Stirling. Most of the men appear to have been closely associated with Douglas of Cavers. Sir William Henry (1825–62) son of Sir Alexander, he was 7th Baronet. His father died in his 1st year, and parts of the estate and furnishings of Newton Don were sold off to pay debts. When he reached age 21 he sold off the remains of the family estate to Charles Balfour. He joined the 5th Dragoon Guards and was aide-de-camp to the Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland, was soon promoted, but then left the army in great debt. He took to acting, appearing on Broadway and living in America for a few years, where he married. He then toured Britain in the mid-1850s. He lived at Borthwickbrae for a while in this period. He used to organise cricket teams to play against the men of Hawick in the Haugh, before there were formal competitions. He was said to have 'some pretensions to theatrical talent', which he took on a tour of the goldfields of Australia, where a successful racehorse was named after him. He died in Hobart, Tasmania, ending the family line. An 1856 portrait of him exists.

Donald (do-nuld) n. name of 3 Kings of Scotland. Donald I (c.812–863) and Donald II (d.900) ruled over a kingdom which did not extend as far south as Hawick. Donald III (c.1033–99) King of Scotland 1093–4 and 1094–7, also known as Donald Bane. He was son of Duncan I and brother of Malcolm III. After Malcolm Malcolm died he took the crown, expelling the English from the court. He was deposed by his nephew Duncan II in 1094, but resumed power after Duncan's death, with another nephew Edmund being his heir and ruling the southern part of the kingdom. It is not known how he died, although there are seveal conflicting stories. He appears to have had no sons, but had at least one daughter, Bethoc. It is possible she was the person of that name who once owned the lands of Bedrule. He was succeeded as King by Edgar, eldest son of his brother Malcolm.

Donald (do-nuld) n. Alexander (18th C.) gardener in Hawick Parish. He married Betty Johnston in Roberton Parish in 1740, with his name recorded as 'Donaldson'. Their son Thomas was baptised in 1742, with witnesses merchant Francis Gledstains and tailor Thomas Wilkie. He may be the same Alexander who later married Agnes Hardie. Alexander (18th C.) gardener in Hawick. It is possible he is the same man who earlier married Betty Johnson. He married Agnes Hardie and their children included: Isobel (1744–1822), who firstly married William Aitkin and had a son William, and secondly married Robert Hotson from Langholm, and had 10 children; Elizabeth (1746–1818), who married shoemaker William Purdom; Margaret, who married Walter 'the Buck' Wilson in 1772; Marjory, who married William Roger in 1776; Agnes (b.1757), who married John Laing and had 9 children; and Jane (b.1760). The 1757 baptism was witnessed by weaver John Hardie and carrier James Oliver. In 1764 he witnessed the baptism of his grandson William Aitkin. In 1772 he is probably the 'Alxr. Donaldson' who was the witness for the bride at the wedding of his daughter Margaret in Selkirk. Andrew (17th C.) resident at 'milnmaue' on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hassendean Parish; this may have been the farm of Moormaw. He may be the tailor Andrew who witnessed a baptism in Roberton (the Hassendean part) in 1681 and another for James Dryden in 1684. Perhaps the same Andrew married Jean Coltart and had children (baptised in Roberton) including Marion (b.1680), Jean (b.1682) and Margaret (b.1684). The witnesses in 1682 were John Armstrong and James Johnstone. Andrew (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. In 1694 he was recorded as owing his Burgess fee, suggesting he had just become a Burgess. He could be the Andrew whose son Andrew was born in HAWICK IN 1703. Rev. George Henry (19th/20th C.) became minister at Southdean in 1902 and was translated to First Charge, Haddington in 1906. He received a doctorate from Edinburgh University on 1948. Isabel (16th C.) married Andrew Shortreed and had children James and Margaret. She secondly married Robert Scott of Palace. She was a widow in 1579 when her inventory was recorded in Selkirk. Her executors, 'oversearis to her bairnes' were Walter Scott of Headshaw and George Shortreed of Essenside. Her daughter Marion 'alias Mane' Scott was left with George of Synton. James (16th C.) recorded at 'Syntoun Place' in 1580 when he was listed as a debtor to John Hall, webster in Selkirk. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Manie Jackson and their daughter Agnes was baptised in 1652, with witnesses William Cochran and James 'Coutherd'. John (15th/16th C.) recorded being in Minto in 1502. He was indicted and failed to appear at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, with his surety William Turnbull of Minto being fined. John (18th/19th C.) weaver in Newcastleton. He was listed among male heads of households in 1835. John (18th/19th C.) tailor in Lilliesleaf, recorded in Pigot's 1837 directory. Probably the same John married Helen Rutherford in Lilliesleaf in 1838. Patrick (15th/16th C.) listed last on the panel of 'retour' for Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1517. He must have been a prominent man in Roxburghshire, like the others. His name is recorded as 'Patricium Douald'. Rev. Thomas Wilson (b.1923) born in Glasgow, son of Matthew and Eliza Wilson. He was educated in Glasgow, at Hillhead High School, at the Institute of Chartered Accountants of Scotland and at Glasgow University (where he graduated L.Th. in 1977). He served in the Royal Navy 1942–46 and was a chartered accountant 1948–74. He was licensed to preach by Glasgow Presbytery in 1977 and in the same year was inducted as minister of Lilliesleaf Kirk, linked with Bowden and Ashkirk, continuing as minister of Bowden and Lilliesleaf in 1983. He remained until 1987 when he retired. In 1949 he married Margaret Ethel (b.1924), daughter of James Millar Allan Mitchell and their children were Katherine Rae (b.1951), Matthew James (b.1954), Thomas Hugh (b.1958) and Rachel Margaret (b.1959). William (16th C.) recorded in 1542/3 as 'Villiam Downland schirjeand to Valter Scot of Edschaw'. He was some kind of officer serving Walter Scott of Headshaw when he had 2 of his master's horses appraised in Selkirk. William 'Nimble' (16th/17th C.) Hawick resident mentioned in a trial of 1612 for a claimed murder of 1610 (stated by the Hawick officials to have been a sucide). He may have been a Burgh Officer. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He witnessed a baptism in 1652 for William Boa. His son James was baptised in 1643. He could be the William 'Donaldsoun' who in 1656 witnessed a baptism for John Stewart. William (17th C.) tenant at Kirkhouses in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk in 1689 for William Allan. He is probably the William, married to Malie Johnstone, whose children baptised in Ashkirk Parish included Thomas (b.1690) and William (b.1692). The witnesses in 1690 were John Riddell and James Kennedy. William (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He married Jean Ronaldson (or Rennaldson) in 1704, with his surname recorded sometimes as 'Donaldson' in Hawick Parish (but 'Donald' in Wilton Parish). Their children included: Andrew (b.1707); James (b.1709); William (b.1713); and George (b.1715). The witnesses in 1707 were Bailies Robert Ruecastle and Robert Brown. He could be the same man as the Burgh Officer 'Donaldson' recorded in the early 1700s. William (19th/20th C.) resident of Sunnyside. In 1906 he contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirkton Kirk (also formerly written 'Donnald', 'Downald', etc.; in some early documents it is confounded with Donaldson).

Donaldson (do-nuld-sin) n. A.J. (19th C.) resident of Bridge Street. In 1874 he donated to the Museuman 'ancient cannon, formerly in the collection of Sir John Pringle of Stitchell'. Rev. Alexander (1887–1954) born in Alva, son of Robert and Mary Smith. He was educated in Alva and attended McGill University in Montreal and Queen's University, Kingston, Ontario. He served as a Presbyterian misionary in lumber camps in Canada and was with the Canadian Expeditionary Force in France 1914–19. He was licensed to preach in Kingston and ordained at Cobden, Ontario in 1921. He moved to Elora, Ontario in 1924, then Rockwood, Ontario in 1926. He became minister of St. John's Church in Hawick in 1930. In 1921 he married Ruth Pollock Bailie (b.1887) and had a son Robert Livingstone (b.1922). Charles Edward McArthur (d.1964) Conservative M.P. for Roxburghshre & Selkirkshire 1951–55 and for Roxburgh, Selkirk & Peebles 1955–64. He originally defeated A.J.F. MacDonald by only 829 votes. Elizabeth 'Betty' (17th C.) daughter of a weaver in of Lilliesleaf. In about 1684 she was on a list of Covenanter fugitives. Gilbert (13th/14th C.) recorded in a charter from Robert the Bruce, probably in about 1320, which survives in old indices. He was 'Gilberti filii Donaldi' and 'Gilbert Donnallson', when granted the lands of 'Pesseles' or 'Passolet' in the Barony of either Hawick or 'Hale' in Roxburghshire. It seems likely this is a transcription error for some other place. Perhaps the same Gilbert, son of Donald, is recorded as a juror in Fife in 1304 and in a valuation of horses killed in the service of King Robert in 1307. James (16th/17th C.) tenant in Cavers. He was recorded in 1628 among Hawick men who were accused by the Earl of Buccleuch of cutting down trees on his lands at Branxholme or Trinitylands. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Brown and their children included: George (b.1707); Hector (b.1709). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Borthwickbrae in 1720 and 1723 and Mossbrae in 1725 and 1728. His children included: Janet (b.1720); and Helen (b.1723). Grisel (b.1725); Jidn ames (b.1728). James (19th C.) married Janet Beattie in Hawick in 1850. He may be the James of the Fore Row who donated 'stone amulet, heart shape' to the Museum in 1874. John (16th C.) listed as 'Dounaldsone' in 1534 as a witness at Hassendean Kirk for the sealing of a letter of reversion when Gavin Elliot sold the lands of Nether Galalaw to William Scott. It is unclear if he was from Hawick, Hassendean or Selkirk (in whose Protocol Books the record appeared). It is possible he is the John recorded as heir to Ninian, inheriting a tenement in Selkirk in 1530; he sold a rig of land to Thomas Minto in 1532 and other lands in 1533, 1534 and 1536. John 'Maltman' (16th C.) recorded in an agreement of 1580 for him to become tenant of 6 acres of land in Lilliesleaf that belonged to William Middlemas of Lilliesleaf. He was to pay £24 per year, with William Riddell warranting these lands called 'Portus Croft Heid' during his (John's) lifetime. John (1741/2–1811) son of John, who was tenant farmer somewhere in Rulewater. Both were recorded on an old tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard. He was tenant at Swanshiel on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, where he is listed as owner of 2 horses. His servant George was recorded at Swanshiel on the ballot for the Militia in 1801. He died at Highend. He is probably the Donaldson tenant of Wester Swanshiel whose wife was Peggy Duncan, said to have 'shure a hairst' (i.e. reaped during the harvest) at the age of 77. John (19th C.) married Elizabeth Smith in Hobkirk Parish in 1822. Margaret (17th C.) recorded as liferenter of 'an Merk of land of Heap' in the valuation for Wilton Parish in 1643. Her name appears there as just 'M. Donaldson', but it seems clear this was the Margaret listed in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663. Then Robert Langlands of that Ilk paid tax on £89 for lands in Wilton 'sometime pertaining' to her. It is possible that she was his wife or mother. William (17th/18th C.) Burgh Officer of some sort. In 1726 the Council allowed him a pair of shoes, at the same time that the oficers and drummer got ribbons for the Common Riding. He is probably the William 'Donald' given money in 1727 to fetch the cup for the Races. He is also recorded as an 'officer' when he witnessed a sasine in 1728. He could be the William who married Jean Rennaldson in Hawick in 1704 and whose children baptised in Hawick included Andrew (b.1707), James (b.1709), William (b.1713) and George (b.1715), with his surname given as 'Donald'. William (19th C.) married Agnes Hobkirk in Castleton Parish in 1863. William (19th C.) appointed as Librarian of the Archæological Society in 1875. (also formerly 'Donaldsoun' and 'Donalson'; see also Donald).

Doncaster Street (dong-kas-tur-stree') n. street in Newcastleton, off the east side of North Hermitage Street, opposite Langholm Street.

Doniere Portussis (do-nee-er-pōr-tu-sis) n. term used in Hawick's first existing sasine with a detailed description (from 1558). It is the designation used for the area to the east of the 'tenement' of land sold by Alexander Scott to James Scott, which from its description, with the Common Vennel to the west, sounds similar to what was later called 'Wylie's Dub' or 'Bridgehaugh'

(the identification of this phrase is very unclear, but perhaps it relates to the minor port near the foot of the Howegate).

donnart see donnert

donner (do-nur) v., arch. to daze, stun, stupefy.

donnert (do-nur') adj., pp. stupid, stupefied – 'is hei deif or juist donnart?', 'But dear me, Alice ... are ye donart? ye have forgot to gie Babie her letter' [JTe], 'Gudeness, here's the Jumpin Jecks tae, Ah think Ah'm getting donnert' [JEDM], '... o' muckle snaw-drifts, twal fit deep, o' heidstrang dugs, and donnert sheep' [TD], 'So this man gets nearer. the Doo (thu-doo) n. nickname for Quentin Nixon.

doobious (doo-bee-is) adj., arch. dubious (note the pronunciation with d not j; also spelled as in English).

dooble (doo-bul) adv. double – 'it's dooble or nihin', adj. double – 'Deil rid the earth o' hypocritic villains, Base roots o' mischief, self, an' dooble-dealings!' [JoHa], 'Big brass knobs at heid and fit, A great big dooble bed ... ' [AY], n. a double – 'When they meet their dooble they canna bear To hear frae another mooth ... ' [FL], arch. a double amount – '... gyf he ever do the lyk he shall pay the double of the penalty, conform to the act, and double the punishment' [BR1644], v. to double – 'For mony days I wandered on, Oft dooblin' back my tracks upon ... ' [WP] (cf. dowble).

doocot (doo-ki', doo-ku') n., arch. a dovecote, pigeon loft. Local examples can still be seen at Bucklands and Knowesouth, with many others throughout the Borders. A record of 1750 mentions a dovecote at Whitehaugh. In 1795 it is written that Bedrule Parish had 1, with 3 others nearby. Placenames suggest they also once existed at Dovecote Street (in Hawick), Langlands (near Kilmeny), Spittal-on-Rule, Stobs and Teviothead – '... initiated in the mysteries of making rush doo-cots for ddos we never caught' [JAHM], 'Says aw, 'aw'm some blind, sir, but shurely aw see A thing like a high dookit standin' aglee' ' [BM1900], 'But the dow aye seeks the doocot And it's here your hert belangs' [WL], 'Praying for a miraculous pullulation in doocots, Chewing the rangy sinews of cast hens ... ' [DH] (also spelled 'doocat', 'doo-cot' and even 'dookit').

the Doocot Haugh (thu-doo-ki'-hawch) n. former name for a piece of land near the water at Spittal-on-Rule. There was once a strongly-built dovecote there, with attached privileges (written 'Doucket Haugh' in Tancred's book).

Dooglas (doog-lis) n. variant of the name Douglas – '... whan the Dooglas an the Scott wrait off a wheen auld scores an saw day-aboot wui the auld enemy' [ECS], '... in oor Charter o' 1537 Doogless o' Drumlanrig gei'd Tam Broon threi particates o' land' [BW1979].

dook (dook) v. to duck, dip, bathe, swim, get wet – 'The sun began to douk i' the main, The merle drappit singing ... ' [JTe], 'As 'Robbie' and I strolled towards the town by the banks of the Teviot, we envied the boys who were dookin' in its clear waters' [BM1900], '... we would spend a happy afternoon 'dooking' there, making valiant attempts to learn to swim ... ' [BM1905], '... Tae see Delaney in the Haugh, Or dook in Cobble Pool' [WLu], '... Or hear the mavis lift her sang, Or dook in Teviot's cool' [WL], '... Dookin in the Spetch was braw Divin in off the Dunk wa' ' [IWL], n. a duck, dip, bathe – 'let's gaun for a dook it the Spetch', '... a 'dook' at the Pate's Plum or the Coble Pool' [WRW], '... dook (dook) n. a wooden peg driven into a wall to hold a nail, v. to fix up a shelf by means of dooks.

dook (dook) n., arch. the buttocks, fundament, v. to push or help up, particularly in climbing a wall by stooping and placing the head or shoulders under the climber's buttocks and gently rising ?' (see also dooks; from Mediæval English; cf. the less local dock).

dooker (doo-kur) n. swimming trunks – 'A hope ee brout yer dookers', 'Ma dooker and ma sandshoes And no a speck o' dirt' [AY] (sometimes plural 'dookers').

dookin chisel (doo-kin-chi-sul) n. a tool for making holes in a wall for dooks, also called a 'dooking ern'.

dookin ern (doo-kin-ern) n. a kind of cold chisel used for cutting holes for holding 'dooks' – '... in it was that hei'd hed ti get a dookin ern to get i'ti the sausages, no hei's fork' [IA] (also called a 'dookin chisel').

dookin for aiples (doo-kin-for-ā-pulz) v. ducking for apples with the teeth, usual a children's party game, particularly at Hallowe'en – '... O' dookin blind-fauld in a basin For aipples, reid cheekit or green' [WL], 'Dookin for aipples at Halloween Coats for goalposts in oor back green ...' [IWL].

dookit (doo-kee', -ki') pp., arch. ducked, bathed – '... to the valley of the Ale – (where I doukit and played langsyne)' [BM1898].

dooks (dooks) n. a lift, boost, particularly to help climb a wall – 'gie's a dooks up ti this windi', 'A ca' git up masel, A'll need a dooks' (from 'dock' or 'dook' meaning the buttocks, but perhaps also related to douk, a wooden peg fitted into a hole used to fix up shelves etc.).

dook-up (dook-up) v., arch. to push or hoist up, n. assistance in climbing a wall etc. (also 'dooks-up', cf. the shorter form dooks and the less common dock-up, which is the form elsewhere in Scotland).

Doorpool (dōr-pool, -pil) n. farmstead and former boggy region on the Abbotrule estate, about a mile south of Abbotrule House, and shortly before coming to Chesters on the A6088. There were Turnbulls there in the late 17th and through much of the 18th century. James Turnbull is recorded as tenant there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, with Walter Scott as another householder. Andrew Oliver is recorded there in 1794 and George Elliot in 1797. Walter Lawson was a servant there in 1797. William Elliot was tenant in at least 1799–1801, Andrew Scott was servant there in 1799 and George White was servant in 1801. It was listed (along with Midquarter) among the possessions of Charles Kerr of Abbotrule in 1811, with a value of about £210. William Inglis was owner in the early 20th century, when it was valued at about £210. When the area was drained around the 1870s the skull and horns of an elk and several stag's skulls were discovered. Some bronze implements were found near here in the 19th century and preserved in Jedburgh Museum. There was also once probably a small threshing mill there, powered by water from a pond (it is 'Douerpooll' in 1694; it is marked on Stobie's 1770 map).

Doorpool Hill (dōr-pool-hil) n. hill just to the north of Chesters, reaching a height of 270 m. On the south-east side are the remains of a hill-fort, circular and about 200 ft in dimeter. It has been much denuded by cultivation, but is still visible as a cicular depression, with traces of 3 ramparts. A stone cist was turned up by the plough in 1952, near the summit of the hill.

the doors (thu-dōrz) n., pl. equivalent of 'the street' for a row of country cottages, the residents talking about 'up the doors', 'down the doors', 'alang the doors', etc. – 'There on the road, before the doors Wi' grand professional attitude . . . ' [WP].

doot (doo') n. a doubt – 'nae doot yer right', 'I doot the sight nae pleasure can thee gi'e: My raggit breeks, bedaub'd wi' dirt an' soil' [JoHa], '. . . For Tibbie's hidden pose, I doot, Is growing toom' [JoHa], 'Deed, Sir, aw canna say, but if there's nane aw doot it'll no be for want o' ministers' [WNK], '. . . Of his honesty, trowth, we may well have oor doots' [UB], '. . . Mebbe they're even workin – But I hae my doots!' [DH], '. . . Where ye're gled nae doobt to be' [WL], '. . . Withoot a doobt it said Safe Oot, Safe In and Safeway' [IWL], 'Here in Hawick oor hame, oo've lots ti shout aboot, Oo're the Queen o aa the Border, of that there is nae doot' [IWL], v. to doubt – 'If it a' be true that I've heard ye say, The country, I'm dooting's, in a very bad way' [JCG], 'This gruesome sicht gars me declare, I doot gif I'm an Oliver' [WNK], 'Aw doot, Doctor, the Almighty'll no ken what we wad be at praying yon way again the Pope at the vera time we're fechting to set him up again' [WNK], 'It was kindeh wat, nae doot . . . ' [RM], 'He preened an' straik'd his ae black suit, An' thinkin' hard, began to doot' [WFC], to be inclined, incline, believe something – 'A doot it'll be rain this efternin' (note the two meanings are essentially opposites!; also written 'doobt').

dootfi (doot-fi, doo'-fi) adj. doubtful – 'His kindly heart was a' his wealth, Thegither wi' a doobtfu' health' [WP] (also spelled 'doobtfu'' etc.).

doothfi (dooth-fi) adj., arch. gloomy – 'But ilk ane's rinning raving, doothfu' – Guid weather's dead' [JoHa] (also written 'doothfu'; cf. dowth).

doric (dō-reek) n., poet. Scots, language of Scotland, adj. broad and rural (applied to Scots dialects from outside the central cities, particularly used for the dialect of the north-east, but also other parts of Scotland; origin probably in analogy with Edinburgh being 'the Athens of the North').

Dorothy Sike (do-ri-thee-īk) n. stream in Castleton Parish, to the west of the B6357, between Singdean and Saughtree. It is joined by Alison Sike and then runs into Cliffhope Burn, which becomes part of the the Dawston Burn. (it is marked 'Dorroty Grain' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; it is unclear who Alison and Dorothy were).

dort (dort, dor') n., poet. the pet, the sulks – 'Nae wonder that I'm in the dort, And wae to see them' [RF].

dorty (dor-tee) adj., poet. sulky, haughty – 'For dorty Madge o' Miryfaulds I dinna care a preen' [JTe].

[WL] (also written 'doughter'; cf. dochter and the more common dowter).

douchtily (dowch-ti-lee) n., poet. doughtily, valiantly – 'Throwe God we wull do douchtielie: for he it is that sall ramp doun our enimies' [HSR].

Dougal (doo-gul) n. one of the guards (the other well-known one being Hope) on the Royal Mail coach in the early part of the 19th century, having a livery of scarlet and gold, and armed with blunderbuss and pistols.

Dougal (doo-gul) n. George (19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, who had been in Calcutta. He married Marion Scott Elliot (1823–1908) and their daughter Charlotte Guise was baptised in Roberton in 1854. Other children included Marion Anne and Amy. After his death, his widow secondly married Rev. George Colville, minister of Canonbie.

dough-banni (dō-baw-ni) n., arch. a bannock made with prepared dough (also 'banna').

dough-boy (dō-boi) n. a dough-ball, dumpling, particularly when cooked with mince (the commonly used term for this varies regionally throughout Britain).

dought (dowcht) v., poet. was doubtful, dreaded, feared – 'But Dickie's heart it grew sae great, Fala, &c. That ne'er a bit o't he dought to eat . . . ' [CPM].

Douglas (du-, doo-glis) n. Adam (15th C.) witness in 1492/3 for the confirmation of Rutherford and Wells to James Rutherford. His name is listed right after Walter, Vicar of Hassendean and many of the other witnesses were also local. Perhaps the same Adam was recorded in 1494/5 when George Shiel in Bedrule had remission for stealing 15 of his ewes from Bedrule. Adam (15th/16th C.) brother of William of Cavers. In 1502 he was called on to enter into the Justice-aire Thomas

Rufy, who was partly responsible for the slaughter of John and James Jackson. Adam (15th/16th C.) brother of George in Swinside. In 1502, along with his other brothers Robert, Henry and Simon, he had remission for several crimes. This included kidnapping William Colville of Ravenscraig, Robert Boyd and John Kennedy and holding them for ransom in 'Leven', as well as destroying 3 horses from the same men, stealing a sword, a shield and a purse from them and planning to murder William Colville of Ochiltree. Ralph Ker of Primsideloch was their surety. Probably the same Adam, brother of James in Swinside was listed along with 2 other brothers called John in 1502 when they were convicted and had remission for oppressing Sir William Colville of Ochiltree; Douglases of Bonjedward and Davidsons were also listed. Adam (17th/18th C.) recorded at West Cote in 1718 when his daughter Jane was baptised. Other children, baptised in Cavers, who are probably also his included William (b.1721), Hugh (b.1724) and Elspeth (b.1732). Adam (18th C.) workman in Hawick. In 1757 he witnessed a baptism for miller Alexander Heatley. Agnes (17th C.) sister of the Sheriff of Roxburghshire. She was probably daughter of Sir William of Cavers and sister of Sir Archibald. In 1663 she paid tax on £180 of land in Cavers Parish. Agnes (1783–1858) often referred to as 'Miss Douglas', she was eldest daughter of Robert, surgeon at Damside, and Margaret Aitchison. She was sister of Dr. John and Robert (also a surgeon in Hawick), as well as Mary. She was known for her paintings as well as her literary abilities. She wrote 'Auld Brig o' Slittrick's Last Address to the Magistrates, Town-Council and Inhabitants of Hawick', which was the silver medal winning prize poem in the Auld Brig poetry competition of 1851. Her poem 'Address to the Teviot' was also published in 'Living Bards of the Border' in 1859. Her portrait of Rev. Samuel Charters of Wilton is in the Museum. In 1832 she had relatively mild symptoms of cholera while attending her sister Mary, who had a violent bout of the disease, but recovered. She is probably the 'Miss Douglas' who donated to the Archæological Society the family seal of Langlands of that Ilk in 1856. She is probably the 'Miss Douglas' whose painting of Dryburgh Abbey was loaned (by James Turnbull, Bridge Street) for the Museum exhibition of 1866. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Trows in 1791, East Mains in 1795 and Trows again in 1796 and 1800. He married Janet Douglas and their children probably included: Janet (b.1791); William (b.1793); Isabel (b.1794); Esther (b.1795); Betty (b.1796); Walter (b.1798); Peggy (b.1800); and James (b.1803). It is possible there are 2 different Alexanders here. Alexander (d.bef. 1841) farm worker in the Hawick area. He was a member of the Relief Kirk. He married Isabella Scott (b.1796/7, from Cavers Parish) and their children (born in Hawick and Cavers Parishes) included: William Douglas (b.1815); James (b.1817); Elizabeth (b.c.1819); Thomas (b.c.1821); Robert (b.c.1830); Henry (b.c.1832); and Agnes (b.c.1835). In 1841 and 1851 his widow and several children were living at 'Wester Branxholm Loch'. Andrew of Hermiston (d.c.1277) son of Sir Archibald and brother of William. He appears to have may have succeeded to his father's lands of Hermiston and Livingston (both in Lothian) and was known as as Andrew 'of Herdmianston'. He is probably the 'Andrea de Duglas' who witnessed an indenture in 1259 between Sir William and Sir Hugh of Abernethy. His son was William of Midlothian, who was grandfather of Sir William of Liddesdale, 'the Flower of Chivalry'. Frisken, ancestor of the Douglases of Pumpherston, may also have been his son. Andrew of Timpendean (15th/16th C.) first Laird of Timpendean, which he inherited in 1479 from his father George of Bonjedward. He was probably 3rd son of George, 4th Laird of Bonjedward. He is recorded in 1492 when he had a charter of the lands of Hassendeanbank from Walter Turnbull of Gargunnock. He is probably the Andrew who was on the panel of 1492 for Walter Scott inheriting Branxholme and Buccleuch. He is also listed in a sasine of 1499/1500, along with Andrew McDougall of Makerstoun, George Ormiston and Archibald Heriot. He was probably the Andrew who was among a long list of men who had remission in 1504 for any involvement in the murder of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey; he is listed right after George of Bonjedward and before John, Robert, William and Master Steven, some of whom may have been closely related to him. In a separate list Robert is recorded as his brother. He is also listed on the 1506 remission for the same crime (perhaps suggesting he was directly implicated in these events), with his brother Robert listed after him. In 1504 he appears to have been acting as an official for the sasine of Maxton Craig granted to William Turnbull. He may have died about 1527, when Archibald of Timpendean (his son) was infefted in these same lands. He may also have had a son called Steven. Andrew (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as

'andro dowglas'. This was on a list of associates of James of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. His name appears first on the list, perhaps suggesting some importance. Andrew of Timpendean (16th C.) son of Archibald. In 1551 he signed the 'Auld Band of Roxburgh'. He is probably the Andrew who acted as bailie in 1555 in a sasine for the Haliburtons of Muirhouse, preserved in the Melrose Chartulary; the associated instrument of sasine was in 1557. He was also recorded as bailie for a sasine of Colmslie in 1557. He married Katharine, daughter and coheiress of William Gledstains of Lanton. He was succeeded by his son Andrew. Patrick or 'Patie' may also have been his son (mentioned as Andrew's brother in 1584/5). Andrew 'Dand' of Timpendean (16th/17th C.) son of Andrew, he was the 4th Laird. He is mentioned in the Register of the Great Seal in 1574 and 1575 and in the Privy Council Register in 1576, 1584/5, 1591 and 1592. In 1584/5 he was one of the Border Lairds asked to appear before the Privy Council to explain how they had helped in 'quieting of the countrie'; his brother 'Patie' is also listed. In 1591/2 William of Bonjedward is recorded acting as surety for him and in 1592 William Stewart of Traquair was surety for both him and George of Bonjedward. In 1600 he was on the 'retour' for the Kers of Cessford. He was recorded in 1610 when he was part of an inquest for lands in Rulewater. He may have been Laird in the 'Roll of the Clans' in 1590. He married Margaret, daughter of Gavin Turnbull of Ancrum Mill in 1562. He was succeeded by his son Stephen who married Jean, daughter of Andrew Haliburton of Muirhouselaw. Andrew of Friarshaw (d.bef. 1607) probably son of William, and hence 2nd Laird of Friarshaw, in Lilliesleaf Parish. However, the succession between him and his brothers John and George is unclear. He may be the Andrew of 'Freirschawe' recorded in 1563 as heritable owner of lands in Cavers; William Gourlay (presumably his legal appointee) ordered George and Ralph Douglas to remove themselves from a husbandland lying in Cavers. In 1581 he received money (probably a loan) from Thomas Ker of Kippielaw, and assigned to Ker some crops sown at Friarshaw, as well as livestock there and money owed to him by Andrew Ker in Midlem. In 1592 he is recorded as joint occupier, along with his brother John, of 'Freirschaw', when he and his son George had a regranting of the charter of the lands from Melrose Abbey. He was thus probably Laird between William and George (but these first generations of Douglases of Friarshaw are unclear). He may be the 'Archibald' of Friarshaw (if the transcription is in error) recorded being granted the lands in 1595/6. In 1606 there was a charter of Friarshaw to John Haliburton of Muirhouselaw; the lands had fallen back to the Commendator of Melrose because he and his son George had alienated the lands without the granter's consent. In 1607 James in Friarshaw (presumably his son, or possibly brother) was in a court case with Haliburton over an obligation of a debt to James Douglas of Cavers. He married Marion Douglas (from an unknown branch of the family) and was probably succeeded by his son George. William and Robert were recorded as brothers of George of Friarshaw in 1617 (and Robert as son of William was his nephew), and hence William and Robert may have been other sons, but alternatively could have been his brothers (if this was a different George). Rev. Andrew (d.1607) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1595, he became minister of Southdean in 1595 and was translated to Hownam in 1605. Perhaps the same 'Doctor' Andrew was recorded as a Schoolmaster in Selkirk in 1603 and 1612. Andrew of Friarshaw (d.bef. 1645) son of George, he was the said to be the 4th Laird. He and his father made a petition to the Privy Council in 1618, complaining about attacks by their neighbours the Riddells. He was probably the 'Andro Douglas, appearand of Frierschaw' who was on the assize at the Justice Court in Jedburgh in 1623. He was probably the 'Andro of Friarshaw and Priestoun' who was at the Assizes of Edinburgh in 1624. Either he or his son was listed as 'A. Douglas of Friarshaw' in the 1643 valuation for Lilliesleaf Parish, with his lands being valued at £285 13s 4d. He conveyed the lands of Friarshaw to his son Andrew when he got married in 1640. He was succeeded by his son Andrew, while other children may have included: William, who married Janet Scott before 1649 and had 3 sons; and Janet, who in 1623 married Robert, son and heir apparent of Andrew Davidson of Samieston. Andrew (17th C.) listed at 'Roule' in 1632. He was one of the witnesses to the sasine for Appotside and Tythehouse, sold by Rev. William Weir to Edward Lorraine. Andrew of Timpendean (d.bef. 1656) possibly son of Stephen. He is recorded in 1656 when his son John became a cordiner's apprentice in Edinburgh. It is unclear whether he himself was Laird of Timpendean, or whether he was just the Laird's brother. Andrew (17th C.) listed as tenant in Southdean Law in the 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. He could be the same Andrew listed in Southdean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Andrew (d.c.1685) tenant in East Middle. His will is recorded in 1685. He was surely related to William, who was recorded at the same farm in 1687. Andrew of Friarshaw (d.1698) son of Andrew, he was said to be 5th Laird. He was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1648. In 1640 he married Jean Home, who came from the Polwarth family, and at that time his father conveyed Friarshaw to him. His children include: Thomas, who was a doctor in London (d.1686); Henry, who succeeded; and possibly George. Andrew of Friarshaw (18th C.) son of George. In 1747 he became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh in right of his father. Andrew (18th C.) son of Thomas, who was 5th son of Sir William of Cavers, with his mother being Jean Pringle of the Haining. He was described as a merchant of Suffolk Street in London. A letter (probably) of his from Suffolk Street in 1761 is in the archives of the Hotham family of Scorborough and South Dalton. He appears to have married Mary Mercer in Wimbledon in 1752. His 2 sons were: George, who succeeded to Cavers; and Archibald, who succeeded to Adderstone and Midshiels. His wife died in London in 1813. Andrew (18th C.) paid the cart tax in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1791. Dr. Andrew (1772–1826) youngest surviving son of Archibald of Timpendean. He was Physician in the Royal Navy and died in London. He is easily confused with another Dr. Andrew who lived at Ancrum Mill and died in 1852. Andrew (b.c.1775) tenant at Ancrum Mill. He married Jane Buckham, who died in 1850, aged 70. His children included: Margaret (d.1822), who died aged 15; Janet (or Jessie) (b.1816), who married George Cranston in Jedburgh; William (1821–75), who married Annie Binnie, died at Cleikim Inn and had a son Andrew who died at Bonjedward, and another, George Binnie; and 3 children who died in infancy. The family are buried in Jedburgh Abbey graveyard. He seems likely to be connected with the Timpendean and Bonjedward Douglases. Andrew (b.1813/4) from Berwick, he was a toy dealer and hardware dealer on the High Street, listed in Slater's 1852 directory. In 1851 he was at about 12–14 High Street and listed as a hardware merchant. His wife was Sarah and their children included Thomas, Andrew and John. Andrew (19th C.) drummer in the Drums and Fifes around the 1880s. His nephew James was also a drummer in the band. Andrew of Saughtree (1865–1948), son of George and Isabella Turnbull, he was born in Oxnam Parish. He farmed Riccalton, Doorpool, Philogar and Saughtree (where he was living in the 1930s). He served as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He firstly married Sybil Dodd, who died in 1912, aged 44. He secondly married Jessie D. MacKay, who died in 1938, aged 67. His eldest son George Lawson died infancy at Roccalton in 1903. They are buried at Oxnam Cemetery. Ann also 'Anna' (b.c.1702) daughter of Archibald, 13th Laird of Cavers. All of her 4 brothers died without male issue, and the succession went to George, the son of her cousin Andrew. cousin Thomas. She married William Campbell in Fife about 1721. Anna Elizabeth (d.1898) only child of Archibald of Adderstone and Margaret Violet Pringle, who inherited Clifton and Haining. She married John Pattison in Melrose. She was recorded as 'Mrs. Anne Elizabeth Pringle or Pattison' who paid the land tax on Adderstone and North Synton in about 1874. In her 1875 will she nominated her husband to succeeded to the lands and baronies of Fairnilee and Haining, failing which Andrew Seth, son of Smith K. Seth and Margaret Little, from Edinburgh. Sir Archibald (d.c.1240) one of the earliest known Douglases, son of William. He is the first recorded Archibald in the family. He held the lands of Douglas and others in Lanark and Lothian. He signed charters in 1190 and 1232, and other undated ones. He also witnessed a charter for the Earl of Menteith in 1213 (recorded when it was inspected in 1261), along with William. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Crawford of Crawfordjohn, and his sons probably included: Sir William, who succeeded; and Sir Andrew of Hermiston, ancestor of the Earls of Morton. Sir Archibald 'the Tineman' (c.1294–1333) son of Sir William Lord Douglas 'le Hardi' and youngest brother of 'the Good Sir James'. He is referred to as 'of Liddesdale, Cavers, etc.' as well as 'of Douglas'. In the 1320s he received estates at Morebattle and Kirkandrews. In 1324 he received further lands in Buchan, and already held Cavers, Drumlanrig, Terregles and West Calder. He was tutor to Sir James's son after his death in 1330. He is said to have almost captured King Edward Baliol at Jedburgh and engineered Baliol's defeat at Annan in 1332. He became Regent of Scotland after the capture of Sir Andrew Murray in early 1333. He then (probably illegally) occupied Liddesdale and other Border lands. He led a force that devastated northern England and then travelled to relieve the siege at Berwick. He was killed at the ensuing Battle of Halidon Hill. He was sometimes afterwards referred to as 'Tyneman' or 'Tineman' (i.e. 'loser', like a later Archibald), on account of apparently never succeeding in battle. He married Beatrice, daughter of Sir Alexander Lindsay of Crawford and their children included: John (d.1342), who died in France; William, who became Lord of Douglas; and Eleanor, who married firstly Alexander, Earl of Carrick, secondly Sir James Sandilands, thirdly Sir William Tours of Dalry, fourthly Sir Duncan Wallace of Sundrum and perhaps fifthly Sir Patrick Hepburn of Hailes. He married Beatrix, daughter of Alexander Lindsay of Crawford (and after his death she secondly married Sir Robert Erskine of Erskine). Their children included: William, who became 1st Earl of Douglas; James who was killed by the English in 1333; possibly John, a knight recorded in the retinue of David II; Eleanor, who apparently married 5 times, to Alexander Bruce, Earl of Carrick, Sir James Sandilands of West Calder, Sir William Tours of Dalry, Sir Duncan Wallace of Sundrum and Sir Patrick Hepburn of Hailes; and Elizabeth (although this could be confusion with a later generation), who married Alexander Stewart of Garlieston. Sir Archibald 'the Grim' or 'Black Douglas' (c.1328–c.1400) Lord of Galloway and 3rd Earl of Douglas. He was the illegitimate son of James 'The Good', with the identity of his mother being unknown. He was full cousin to Sir William, Knight of Liddesdale, whose son James (who died at Otterburn) had no legitimate heirs. His nickname came from what Englishmen called him. He witnessed a Douglas charter in 1351. He was taken prisoner at Poitiers in 1356, but escaped. He may be the Lord Archibald who witnessed a confirmation of the lands of Ringwood to Melrose Abbey in the 1360s by William, Earl of Douglas. He was appointed Warden of the Western Marches in 1364 and held the position from 1368 until his death. He held lands in Liddesdale and was also later appointed Warden of the East March. He became Sheriff and Constable of Edinburgh from about 1361–64 and later Lord of Galloway and Bothwell, as well as Earl of Wigtown and superior of Kirkcudbright (his appointment of a steward there being the reason it was thereafter referred to as a 'stewartry'). He regularly attended Parliament and represented Scotland in negotiations with France. Sometime in the period 1384–88 he witnessed the granting of Drumlanrig to William, illegitimate son of James, Earl of Douglas. He succeeded to the Earldom of Douglas and other estates on the death of James (son of Sir William, his cousin) in 1388; this was despite being illegitimate and there being a counter-claim by Sir Malcolm Drummond, husband of Sir James' sister Isabel. This made him essentially the most powerful nobleman in Scotland. The lands that were confirmed to him in 1389 included Bedrule, Cavers and Selkirk Forest. He witnessed charters during the reigns of Robert II and Robert III; he was also a close friend of Robert Stewart, Earl of Fife, who was Guardian of Scotland for a while (and was his step-father-in-law). He was involved in several campaigns, including the affair with Musgrave at Melrose in 1378, the expulsion of the English from Annandale in 1384, the invasion of England in 1385, part of the force that were in Cumbria when the Battle of Otterburn took place in 1388, and helping include Scotland in the 1391 peace negotiations between England and France. He was recorded in an inventory of Coldingham Priory in 1391. In 1393 he was already Baron of Hawick, according to a charter of the lands of Teindside and Harwood. As Warden, he also prepared a special code of law for the governing of the Marches. In about 1395 he was a witness to the combat at Rulehaugh, between Thomas Struthers and William Inglis. In 1399 he schemed to have his daughter Marjorie marry David Stewart, Duke of Rothesay, who was heir to the Crown; however, he died only 3 years later in prison, after gaining the enmity of Marjorie's brother Archibald, apparently for being unfaithful. He was still alive when the army of Henry IV invaded Scotland in 1400, but died shortly afterwards, possibly during a siege. In 1362 he married Joan Murray (or Joanna Moray), who was probably grand-daughter of Maurice, Earl of Strathearn, and daughter of Sir Thomas Murray, Lord of Bothwell. Note that some accounts say he married Sir Thomas' widow, but this seems likely to be a confounding of mother and daughters of the same name; however, it is possible that he was contracted to marry the mother, who then died in the plague and instead he married the daughter. In any case, his wife was heiress of the Bothwell titles, which included the Barony of Hawick. Their children were: Archibald, who succeeded as 4th Earl of Douglas and also held the Barony of Hawick for a few years; James of Balveny, who succeeded his great-nephew as 7th Earl; Marjory, who married David Stewart, Duke of Rothesay, son of Robert III, and secondly married Walter Halyburton of Dirleton; Eleanor, who married Sir Alexander Fraser of Philorth; and an illegitimate son, Sir William of Nithsdale, who married Lady Egidia Stewart, daughter of Robert II. Archibald 'The Tyneman' (c.1372–1424) 4th Earl of Douglas, eldest son of Sir Archibald, the 3rd Earl and Johanna Moray. He was also Duke of Torraine. He witnessed charters during the regency of the Duke of Albany. In 1400 he was made Lord General of the Marches, was also made Keeper of Edinburgh Castle, and defeated the force of the Earl of March and Henry 'Hotspur' Percy at Preston. In 1400/1 he succeeded his father as Earl of Douglas, as well as the Regalities of the Forest of Ettrick, Lauderdale and Romanno and estates in Galloway, Stirlingshire, etc. In 1401 he granted a charter to Sir John of Swinton. In 1402 he (along with the Duke of Albany) arrested his brother-in-law, the Duke of Rothesay, who was serving as Governor of Scotland; the Duke died in their custody (this is fictionalised in Sir Walter Scott's 'Fair Maid of Perth'). In 1402, after the Battle of Nesbit Moor, he raised an army of 10,000 men and invaded England, laying waste to Northumberland. However, he met with a force led by the Percys (with the Earl of March) at Homildon Hill, where there was a rout of the Scots; he was injured, losing an eye, and being imprisoned. However, he was released in a dispute between Henry 'Hotspur' and King Henry, and fought alongside Hotspur at Shrewsbury in 1403. In a 1403 sasine for Sprouston his bailie in that part was James Gledstains (probably of that Ilk and Cocklaw) and John Cranston (son of sir William of that Ilk) was described as his squire. He stayed in captivity in England, but was parolled several times to attend to his own affairs; finally, in 1409, he failed to return to England, breaking his oath with King Henry. He was reconciled with the Earl of March while in captivity and some of the March family lands were returned; however, he gained the lands of Annandale and appointed Sir Herbert Maxwell as his steward there. Sometime around 1406 or 1407 (while a prisoner in England) he granted Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig the lands and Barony of Hawick, 'for his service'. In 1412 he went to France with a Scottish army. It was possibly he who took possession of the lands around Hawick from the Lovels in a charter of 1412, with the support of James I, and may have began building the first part of the Tower in Hawick (this is complicated by the lands having been given to the Murrays by an earlier Scottish King, and passing to the Drumlanrig branch of the Douglases at a similar time). In 1413 there is a 'letter of precept' recording how James Gledstains of that Ilk was serving as his Bailie of the Barony of Cavers. He was recorded in inventories of Coldingham Priory in 1414 and 1424. In 1416 he travelled to London twice to try to negotiate the release of King James I. In the same year the Duke of Albany set out to retake Berwick and he was sent to retake Roxburgh Castle. However, they retreated on learning of a huge English army, and the following devastation wrought by the English was referred to as the 'Foul Raid'; this included burning of farms in Teviotdale and Liddesdale, as well as Hawick, Jedburgh and Selkirk. His son James may also have been taken captive in these raids. In 1421 he negotiated a temporary release of King James, with 21 hostages required in return (including his own son James), plus an oath of allegiance with the English King (absolved on the death of Henry V shortly afterwards). In 1424 Charles VII, the new King of France, made him Duc de Touraine and lieutenant-general of the French forces. He went from Tours to aid the besieged Castle of Ivry, but fell back to Verneuil, which he liberated from the English through a clever ruse. Due to disputes with French commanders, there was an all-out assault on the English under the Duke of Bedford. He was killed there, along with his son James and son-in-law, the Earl of Buchan. Sometime before 1390 he married Margaret Stewart, daughter of King Robert III; after his death she was allowed to hold the Lordship of Galloway and she died in the early 1450s. They had 3 known children: Archibald, who succeeded as 5th Earl of Douglas; James, who also died at Verneuil; and Elizabeth, who firstly married John Stewart, Earl of Buchan (Papal dispendation given in 1411 because of their relatedness), secondly married Thomas Stewart, Lord Badenoch, and thirdly married William Sinclair, Earl of Orkney. Dogged by apparent bad luck in battle, he earned his nickname the 'Tyneman', i.e. 'loser' (although there may be confusion over his ancestor, who had the same nickname). He was buried at Tours. Archibald (1373–c.1435) 1st Laird of Cavers, illegitimate son of James Earl of Mar, he is said to have borne the Douglas banner at the Battle of Otterburn where his father fell (but must have been quite young at the time). He was granted the Lordship of Cavers and the heritable Sheriffship of Roxburghshire by his aunt Isabella, Countess of Mar, but this was not confirmed at the time by King Robert III, and hence followed many years of confusion over the Barony of Cavers. He finally took up his inheritance after the death of his aunt, the confirmation of her original charter being granted by James I in 1412. He had Cavers House was built for him. He was a hostage in England for the Earl of Douglas in 1405. Note that some sources suggest he did not die until 1456, but this must surely have been a later Archibald. He was Sheriff in 1415 when he witnessed the swap of lands between Robert Scott of Rankleburn and Melrose Abbey. He was Sheriff in 1424 when a 'retour of inquest' for lands of Hownam was made in Hawick. And he was probably the Archibald who was Sheriff in 1424 in a document for lands of 'Swynset'. He was Sheriff of Teviotdale when he witnessed a charter of for Patrick Lindsay in 1425. In 1428/9 he was given sasine of the lands of 'Mal Patrikhope', 'Bradele' and 'Le Schewis' in Liddesdale by William, Earl of Angus. He was Sheriff in 1429/30 at a 'retour of inquest' for the lands of Caverton. In 1430 he is designated 'Lord of Cavers' when he witnessed a charter between Andrew Rule of Primside and Andrew Ker of Altonburn. In 1431 he witnessed the 'letter of transumpt' of the earlier charter where the Inglis's granted half of Branxholme to the Scotts and the same year was 'Archibaldo de Douglas vicecomite de Roxburgh' when he witnessed the document transferring Heap from the Langlands to the Scotts. In his attestation to the same transfer he was 'Archbald Dowglas, lord of Cauerys and Scherraffe off Teuidaylle'. In an existing sasine of 1432 his son William was given the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire, but with a 'frank tenement of the lands and exercise of the office of sheriff ... for all the days of his life'. It therefore seems reasonable to assume that he was becoming aged or infirm at that time, and it is said that he died during the reign of James I (i.e. before 1437). He witnessed charters for Archibald, Earl of Douglas in 1430 and 1433/4. A feu charter of 1433 (regarding the lands of Birkwood and Burnflat) was witnessed by him. His wife was Margaret (from an unknown family) and he was succeeded by his son William; although some genealogies suggest he was succeeded by Archibald, this was more likely his grandson. He may also have had a daughter, Eleanor. Sir Archibald (c.1390–1439) grandson of Archibald 'the Grim' and son of Archibald 'the Tyneman'. He was known as the Earl of Wigtown and was given the titles of 2nd Duke of Touraine as well as 1st Count of Longueville for his military service in France. In 1405 he (and his brother James) accompanied Sir William of Douglas and others to 'tilt' in England. He was a hostage in England for his father, the 4th Earl of Douglas, in 1405 and for several years afterwards. In 1407 he witnessed the confirming charter from his father to William of Drumlanrig for the Barony of Hawick. A charter he granted in 1423 contains the first mention of Newark Castle. He succeeded as 5th Earl of Douglas in 1424, also inheriting many lands in Scotland. He was also knighted on the return of James I to Scotland in 1424. In 1425 there was a confirming charter from him to Sir John of Swinton. In 1427, as superior, he granted the Barony of Hawick to William, son of Sir William of Drumlanrig. For an unknown reason he was imprisoned in Lochleven Castle in 1431. In 1435 he granted the lands of 'Brankishelme, Goldilandis, Quitlaw, Quitrig, Todschawhillis, Harwood and Kirkton Tofts. He was Lord of the Regality of Jedwood Forest, and in that capacity in 1436 he bestowed the lands of 'Wolle and Wolhopelee' (i.e. Wolfelee) to his esquire David Hume. He also held the superiority of Ettrick Forest, but gave up part of his rights there to James I. After James I was assassinated and the young James II was crowned, he was made Lieutenant General of Scotland. However, he died suddenly in 1439 (although his tomb incorrectly says 1438); he was buried in St. Bride's Church in Douglas. He may also have founded the Collegiate Church of Bothwell, to which Hawick was attached as a canonry and prebend in 1447 (although this could have been his son). He married Matilda, daughter of David Lindsay, 1st Earl Crawford. In 1424 or 1425 he secondly married Euphemia, daughter of Sir Patrick Graham, Earl of Strathearn, after getting papal dispensation because of relatedness on both sides; she married James, Lord Hamilton after his death, and continued to receive income from the farms of Winterburgh, Altrieve, Berrybush and Craig Douglas. His children (all by his 2nd marriage) were: William (d.1440), who succeeded; David (d.1440); and Margaret, the 'Fair Maid of Galloway', who married both the 8th and 9th Earls of Douglas. He is also said to have had 2 children who died young. Sir Archibald (1410–c.58) probably 3rd Laird of Cavers, and likely the son of William. However, there is some confusion over these generations, no general agreement among published genealogies, and the years of his birth and death are unconfirmed. He is easily confused with the earlier Archibald (1st of Cavers). He was one of the Conservators of the truce with England in 1438 and again in 1451. In 1445 he was witness for a lease for the lands of Harden

Wood in Borthwickshiels. He witnessed a charter for Stephen Scott of Castlelaw in 1448. In 1450 he witnessed the 'retour' of William Douglas for the Barony of Hawick and in 1451 witnessed the charter for exchanging Milsington with Heap. In 1452 he and his son William were appointed as Bailies of Liddesdale and Keepers of Hermitage Castle by George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus and Lord of Liddesdale; this came with income from lands in Liddesdale. In 1454/5 his seal was attached to a document for Walter Ker of Altonburn, since Ker did not have one of his own. He was Sheriff in 1455 when he gave in the accounts for Roxburghshire. In 1456 he was 'Archbaldo de Douglas, milite, domino de Cauers ac vicecomite de Roxburgh' when he witnessed a document relating to Whitchesters for the Scotts of Buccleuch; his son Archibald was also mentioned. In 1457 he was Sheriff of Roxburgh when he was appointed as one of the conservators of the truce with England. In 1458/9 he had a discharge with Thomas Cranston of that Ilk over rents for Denholm Mains and other lands. In 1464/5 he appears to be still Sheriff of Roxburghshire in the sasine granting Kirkton Mains and Flex to William Douglas of Drumlanrig, but perhaps this is probably the next Sir Archibald (his grandson). He was succeeded by his son William. Archibald (1426–55) son of James, 7th Earl of Douglas. He was the slightly younger twin brother of James, who became the 9th Earl after their older brother William. He became Earl of Moray by marrying iElizabeth, daughter and co-heiress of James Dunbar, Earl of Moray. He appears to have led a quiet life in the north, until the murder of William the 8th Earl by King James and his supporters. Shortly afterwards his men fought with those of the Earl of Huntly near Elgin. He was the most senior of the 5 Black Douglas brothers who challenged the authority of the King. He died fighting the King's forces at the Battle of Arkinholm, where his brother Hugh, Earl of Ormond was captured, to be executed later. For their help in this battle the Scotts of Buccleuch gained many of the Douglas' lands in Roxburghshire. His widow quickly remarried to the eldest son of the Earl of Huntly, but when this match failed she thirdly married Sir John Colquhoun of that Ilk. He had 2 children, James (d.bef. 1493) and Janet, about whom nothing much is known. Archibald (15th C.) son of Sir Archibald of Cavers. In 1456 he and his father witnessed a notorial instrument for the Scotts of Buccleuch, relating to Whitchesters. The next Laird appears to have been William, who was presumably his elder brother (but this is far from certain). Archibald (15th C.) on the panel to decide on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex in 1464/5. His name appears as simply 'Archbald of Douglas', but it is unclear where he came from. Sir Archibald (d.1486) 3rd of Cavers (although sometimes referred to as the 4th, with all subsequent numberings also ambiguous), son of William. He was said to have been a Commissioner for settling a truce with England in 1457 and a Warden of the Marches in 1459. In 1461 he was witness to a sasine for lands near Branxholme given by Sir Walter Scott to Katherine Inglis; at this time he was son and heir apparent of William of Cavers. He was granted the Barony of Cavers in February 1464/5, according to a surviving sassine (and a 'retour of service' in the previous month). Also in 1464/5 he was Sheriff of Roxburghshire in the sasine granting Kirkton Mains and Flex to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1469/70 the Governorship of Hermitage Castle was granted to Sir David Scott of Buccleuch (and his son Walter), taking over from him and previously his father William. He may be the Archibald of Douglas mentioned in a document relating to the lands of Broadlee in the Barony of Hawick in 1479 and the man of the same name who acted as a bailie for Archibald, Earl of Angus to give sasine for Wolfelee in the same year. Also in 1479 a feud was mentioned in Parliament between his part of Teviotdale and his uncle and the Laird of Cranston. He was succeeded by his son Sir William and also had a son Adam, who is mentioned in 1502. His daughter Elizabeth married Sir Alexander Stewart of Garlies. It is possible there are 2 generations being confounded here; in 1470 William Douglas of Cavers was granted certain lands on Hermitage Water (with the sasine being given in 1472), and these were to go to his 'brother-german' Archibald if William had no male heirs. Archibald 'The Great Earl', 'Bell the Cat' (c.1449–1514) 5th Earl of Angus, he was son of George, the 4th Earl. He inherited many titles and estates from his father, including the Lordship of Liddesdale and Ewesdale; he succeeded in 1463, but was probably only about 14 at that time. He had a sasine for Liddesdale and Jedforest in 1464. Also in 1464 he (or someone in his name) bestowed the lands of Stonedge on David Home of Wedderburn. In 1469 he was in Parliament when his father-in-law, Lord Boyd was condemned and had his lands forfeited. In 1469/70 he assigned David

Scott of Buccleuch and his son Walter as Keepers of Hermitage Castle. In 1470 he gave a charter of certain lands on Hermitage Water to 'his kinsman', William of Cavers, with David Scott mentioned as his kinsman. Also in 1470 his tutor and guardian, William Douglas of Cluny, resigned Douglas and Tantallon to him. And in 1471/2, after Walter had died, he arranged for David Scott's 2nd son David to marry his sister Jean, renewing the arrangement of the Scotts as Bailies of Liddesdale, Ewesdale and Eskdale. In 1474 it is recorded that one of the King's couriers was paid to send him and David Scott a message about a day of truce on the Border. In 1476 he granted lands to Robert Elliot of Redheugh 'for his guid and faithful servis', with further Liddesdale grants in 1479 and 1484. In 1478 he granted a 'tack' of lands in Selkirk to David Scott, heir of David of Branxholme. In 1474 and 1479 he was superior of the lands of Wolfelee when they passed from George to David Home. He was appointed Warden of the East Marches in 1481. In 1482 he was Lord of Douglas, Jedworth forest and Liddesdale when Thomas Armstrong resigned Mangerton to him and he granted the lands to David Scott of Branxholme. He also served as Justiciar for Lothian about this time. In 1482 the English, along with Alexander, Duke of Albany, took Berwick and marched into Scotland against the supporters of King James III, who were gathered in Lauder, but in dispute among themselves. He led the mutiny of nobles against commoner Thomas (or Robert) Cochrane, who had been effectively governing for the King. When the fable of the mice tying a bell round the cat's neck was related to the nobles he apparently said 'I will bell the cat!' (hence his nickname); Cochrane and others were condemned by the nobles and hung from Lauder Bridge. In 1483 he was leased parts of Hartwood and Berrybush from the Crown and also given the lease on other nearby lands as Keeper of Newark Castle. He was also involved in other intrigues with England around this time. Along with the Duke of Albany, a pact was made with Edward IV in 1483 (the Westminster Convention); this included a provision for him to keep Liddesdale and Annandale, rather than surrendering them to England. There was then a revolt against him and Albany and he was deprived of the office of Justiciar South of the Forth and others. However, in 1483 he was appointed Keeper of Newark Castle for 5 years, and given the lands of Hartwood and Berybuss. He was recorded as Wardeno of the Marchs in 1486 when he was a negotitor for peace with England. It is unclear exactly what role he played in what was effectively a civil war in Scotland between factions loyal to James III or supporting his son, who would be James IV; James III was killed in 1488. During the minority of James IV, he acted as a guardian. He quickly became Sheriff of Roxburgh, as well as 3 other counties, and in 1488/9 resigned the Lordships of Liddesdale, Ewesdale and Eskdale to his son and heir George. In 1489 he lost the office of the Warden of the Marches to the Earl of Bothwell and Alexander Home. In 1489 (although some suggest 1491) he made some deal with the English King over conditions under which Hermitage would be surrendered, and word of this reaching the Scottish King caused him and his son to surrender their Liddesdale estates and Hermitage Castle. Thus he exchanged Liddesdale and Hermitage with Patrick Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell, for the lands and castle of Bothwell and there was a charter from King James IV in 1491 for the exchange of Liddesdale with Kilmarnock. He was also warded in his castle at Tantallon in 1491. In 1492 he was back in the King's favour and was made Chancellor of Scotland. In 1493 he was retoured as heir to his father George, in the Lordship of Eskdale. In 1496 he gained the lands of Crawford in Lanarkshire. In 1497 he ceased to be Chancellor and became Warden of the Middle Marches and Justiciar of Eskdale and Ewesdale. In 1501 he was again warded and was forced to resign the Lordship of Eskdale to the Crown in 1502. He granted Bothwell to his 2nd son William in 1504 and Abernethy to his eldest son George in 1511, having already resigned the Douglas and Angus estates to him. In 1512 he was chancellor of the jury in the trial of Sir William of Drumlanrig for the murder of Robert Crichton of Kirkpatrick. Too old to fight at Flodden in 1513, he died the following year, but 2 of his sons (George and William) and perhaps 200 other Douglases fell at Flodden. It is said that he did accompany the expedition into England, but argued with the King about accepting Surrey's challenge and stood out the battle; however, this seems unlikely for a man who was about 64. He was present at the coronation of James V, was an advisor to the Queen-mother (who acted as Regent) and was appointed Provost of Edinburgh. There was a marriage contract in 1461 between him (or any of his brothers) and a daughter if Alexander, Earl of Huntly; however, the marriage never happened. In 1468 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Boyd, Lord of Kilmarnock, who was Chamberlain and Justiciary of Scotland. In 1498 he had a marriage contract with Janet (or Joan), daughter of John, Lord Kennedy; she became a mistress of James IV and it is unclear if they were ever married. In 1500 he married Katherine, daughter of Sir William Stirling of Keir, but divorced her; she later married Lord Home, Great Chamberlain of Scotland. His children were: George, Master of Angus, who died at Flodden; Sir William of Glenbervie, who also died at Flodden and whose son Archibald was father of the 9th Earl of Angus; Gavin, Bishop of Dunkeld; Sir Archibald of Kilspindie, who became High Treasurer of Scotland and Provost of Edinburgh; Marion, who married Cuthbert, Lord Kilmaurs; Elizabeth, who married Robert, son of Lord Lyle; Janet, who married Andrew, son of Herbert, 1st Lord Herries; and perhaps Isabel, who married Robert Crawford of Auchenames (who died at Flodden). He died in late 1513, was buried at Whithorn and was succeeded by his grandson Sir Archibald. A stirrup said to belong to him was donated to Hawick Museum in 1864. His sword was later possessed by the Earl of Morton. Archibald (15th C.) brother of William. He failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493; given that he was 'fratrem Willelmi', who was mentioned in the next case, it seems likely that they were both related to the Douglases of Cavers, but the exact connection is not known. He was also called in 1494/5, when stated to be brother of William, and the Sheriff was fined for his non-appearance (as well as that of his brother). Archibald (15th/16th C.) recorded in Effledge in 1502. He had remission for his part in the murder of John Laidlaw in Liliesleaf, with George in the Trows as his surety. He and his brother William also had remission in the same year for stealing sheep from James Grahamslaw in 'Camys' (probably Minto Kames). Archibald (15th/16th C.) recorded in Caveling in 1502. He had remission for stealing cattle and horses from John Alemoor of that Ilk, as well as capturing and ransoming him, accompanied by William Forrester and Alan Forrester, traitors of Leven. George in the Trows acted as his surety. Archibald (1489–1557) 6th Earl of Angus, son of George, Master of Angus, who was killed at Flodden, and grandson of the 5th Earl. His sister Alison married Robert Blackadder (killed at Flodden) and later David Home of Wedderburn, who was 4th Laird of Wolfelee. In 1509 he married Margaret, daughter of Patrick Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell; she was said to have died in 1513, with no offspring. He was retoured in his father's lands in 1513 (after Flodden), comprising most of the Douglas lands, including the Barony of Jedforest, as well as Tantallon and Bothwell. He became an advisor to Margaret Tudor, widow of James IV, who was mother and guardian of James V; in 1514 he married her. She recommended his uncle, Gavin to the Archbishopric of St. Andrews, leading to disputes, which became a civil war. John, Duke of Albany returned to Scotland from France in 1515 and was proclaimed as Protector of Scotland (until James V came of age), so that Margaret lost her position as effective Regent. Later in 1515 he and his wife fled to England. He returned in 1516 and had his estates restored (although his ally, the Earl of Home ended up being executed). His wife Margaret returned to Scotland in 1517, but sought a divorce (since apparently he had a mistress, perhaps daughter of the Laird of Traquair). With further intrigues among noblemen, he lost the Wardenship of the East Marches to the Earl of Arran in 1517. In 1520, along with a small force, he fought the Earl of Arran's men on Edinburgh High Street, with reinforcements under William Douglas (his brother), Abbot of Holyrood, winning the day; this event was known as 'Cleanse the Causeway'. Albany returned to Scotland again in 1521, when again the power shifted, he was accused of treason and then went to France in 1522 (although he spoke no French). However, he returned to Scotland with the support of Henry VIII, after Albany had returned to France in 1524. He had to affirm his loyalty to the young King James V and rode to Edinburgh with 400 horsemen, along with Scott of Buccleuch, the Earl of Lennox and the Master of Glencairn; they forced the gate and made the proclamation at the Mercat Cross, however, this did not help to reconcile him with his estanged wife Margaret. In 1524/5 he was sworn in as Warden and Lieutenant of the Borders, with the Kerrs, Scotts, Rutherfords and others promising to help him keep order. In 1525, as Warden of Middle and East Marches, he suppressed trouble in the Borders. He also led raids that captured many men, destroying their houses and goods, including at Borthwickshiels in 1526, aided by Lord Fleming and others. In 1526 he led a surprise raid on Liddesdale that carried off 600 oxen, 3,000 sheep, 500 goats and a large number of horses. In 1525/6 he ratified at Berwick, on behalf of Scotland, a peace treaty with England. He became Chancellor of Scotland in 1526. Also in 1526 he went from Edinburgh with the King to try Armstrongs and others; there was a court held in Jedburgh and they then set off back to Edinburgh. At Skirmish Field, near Melrose a party led by Scott of Buccleuch and others tried to wrest control of the young King James V from him, but he was aided by Homes and Kers. Then he and the Earl of Arran fought to keep control over the King against a force of the Queen's suporters, with the Earl of Lennox being killed. He was listed in 1526/7 among prominent men charged by James V not to attack the lands of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, John Cranston of that Ilk and Walter Scott of Synton while those men were in 'respite' for the charge of treason. In 1527 he led further punitive expeditions into the Border country, with 18 Armstrongs slain openly in one raid, along with 14 being hanged on the spot and 12 more hanged in Edinburgh. However, when James V gained control over his own destiny in 1528, the young King then turned against him, he was stripped of his offices and people were forbidden from communicating with him. He was forced to flee south of the Border, and assisted the English in attacks on his countrymen. A summons for him in 1528 also contained a list of his supporters, including John Langlands and John Gourlay (both probably local Lairds). Additionally his wife Margaret finally obtained a divorce from him in 1528. In 1529 Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme was granted his Lordship of Jedforest, while his other lands were given to different lairds. He is said to have buried the family papers in a large pot and then went into exile in England. He made an agreement in 1532 to support the English King and he was involved in raids back into Scotland. His ex-wife Margaret died in 1541. In 1542 he was with the English in a raid when his men suffered a defeat at Haddon Rig. Following the death of James V, he returned to Scotland in 1542/3 and had much of his former estate restored to him. He continued to push for English interests, and in 1543 led the Scots who attempted to gain the hand of the infant Mary Stuart for Henry's son Edward. He himself married a third Margaret, daughter of Robert, Lord Maxwell, also in 1542. After Lord Hertford's rampage through southern Scotland he turned against his former English supporters, was appointed Lieutenant of the South of Scotland in 1544 and the following year fought at the Battle of Ancrum Moor. However, it is still unclear whether he was fully on the Scottish side, since he and his brother George persuaded the Earl of Arran to disband the Scots army, allowing the Earl of Hertford to destroy the Border abbeys. He was also involved in the disastrous the Battle of Pinkie in 1547, and narrowly escaped capture by the English in 1548. He thereafter seems to have retreated from politcs and battle. He resigned his Earldom in 1547 to his nephew David, son of George of Pittendreich. His only suviving legitimate child, Margaret became Countess of Lennox and was the mother of Lord Darnley. His legitimate son James, Master of Angus died young, and he also had at least 3 illegitimate children: Elizabeth; Janet, who may have married Patrick, Lord Ruthven; and George (d.1590), who was among the assassins of Rizzio and became Bishop of Moray. He died of 'St. Anthony's Fire' (erysipelas) and died at Tantallon. Archibald of Timpendean (16th C.) son of Andrew, he was 2nd Laird. In 1527 he had a gift of lands in 'Langton' in Roxburghshire. He also had a 'precept of clare constat' for the lands of Hassendeanbank. These had belonged to Andrew his father. In 1517 he married Ann, daughter of Peter Marshall from Lanton, and was succeeded by his son Andrew. Archibald (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. Sir Archibald of Glenbervie (d.1570) only son of Sir William of Glenbervie and Braidwood, who was 2nd son of Archibald 'Bell the Cat'. He married Agnes, daughter of William Keith, 2nd Earl Marischal. They had 9 daughters and 1 son, William of Glenbervie, who succeeded his distant cousin as 9th Earl of Angus. He secondly married Margaret, daughter of John Carmichael of Meadowflat and thirdly married a daughter of Alexander Irvine of Drum. Archibald 8th Earl of Angus (1556–88) son of David, the 7th Earl. He succeeded to the titles and lands when only about 2 years old. His father's cousin Margaret, Countess of Lennox, objected to his succession, but eventually relented, effectively as part of the deal for her son Lord Darnley marrying Queen Mary. His tutor and guardian was his uncle, James, Earl of Morton, who became Regent. He bore the crown at the first parliament of James VI in 1567 and became a member of the Privy Council in 1573. He was one of the executors of the will of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch in 1574. In 1574 there was a 'bond of manrent' with him from several Rutherfords and another with several Turnbulls. At about the same time he gained further lands, including some forfeited by Kerr of Ferniehirst, and also had the gift of the marriage of the heir of Branxholme. In 1576 there was another bond with 'certain Gentlemen of the Border' from East Teviotdale and one with the Kers of Primsideloch. In 1573 he was appointed as Sheriff of Berwick, in 1574 Lieutenant-General over all the Borders, in 1577 Warden of the West Marches and Steward of Fife and in 1578 re-appointed Lieutenant-General of the Western Marches of Scotland. Following his support of Morton, the deposed Regent, he was declared guilty of high treason in 1581 and fled to England. He then lost his estates, baronies and lordships, including Feu-Rule, Wells and Hallrule. After the Raid of Ruthven in 1582, he returned to Scotland and was given permission to reside at Tantallon, but continued to be involved in intrigues among various factions in Scotland. He was a zealous Presbyterian, supporting the Protestant cause. Along with other banished Lords he captured Stirling Castle in 1585 and secured an agreement from the King to restore their estates. In 1586 he became Earl of Morton (effectively succeeding his uncle) and was again appointed Warden of the Marches and Lieutenant-General of the Border, with special instuctions from the King about how to deal with the Borderers. He held justice courts at Jedburgh in January and April of 1586/7 and was then stated to be Lieutenant of the East and Middle Marches; a long list of criminals who did not appear was given (valuable as a historical record of Borderers). In 1587 he served as cautioner for William of Cavers, George, younger of Bonjedward, John Turnbull of Minto, John Edmonston of that Ilk, Gavin Eliott of Stobs, Walter Ker of Littledean, Richard Rutherford of Edgerston and Hector Turnbull of Wauchope. In 1573 he married Mary Erskine, daughter of the Earl of Mar, who had been Regent and held lands at Synton; she died 2 years later. In 1575 he secondly married Margaret Leslie, daughter of the Earl of Rothes, who he divorced in 1587 he thirdly married Jean Lyon, daughter of Lord Glamis and widow of Robert of Lochleven. He had a posthumous daughter, Margaret, but she died young. Having no sons by any of his wives, he was succeeded by his distant cousin William, grandson of Sir William of Glenbervie and Braidwood, who was 2nd son of Archibald 'Bell the Cat'. He became ill in 1587 and despite treatment from baffled doctors, died the following year. Rumours of witchcraft led to the execution of at least one unfortunate woman. Archibald (d.1610) son of William of Cavers, he became Chaplain of the Archdeaconry of Glasgow in 1573, holding the Parsonage and Vicarage of Peebles. In 1603 he and Alexander Horsburgh of that Ilk were sureties for Patrick Porteous of Hawkshaw. There was a feud between the Douglases around Peebles and the Horsburghs in which he was involved. In 1607 he made assurance that he and his kinsmen would not harm William Horsburgh in Sarogis; his named kinsmen were his sons John and James, his nephews William Elliot in Peebles, James Elliot and Thomas Douglas and William, son of James Douglas of Cavers. His son John was Parson of Kilbucho, and was served heir to him in 1611. A second son was killed by William Horsburgh of that Ilk in 1610 and his daughter Agnes married John Galloway, an Edinburgh lawyer. In 1653 his grand-daughters Margaret and Jean were served heirs to his tenement of land in Peebles. Archibald (d.c.1602) recorded in 1602 when his son William was served heir to him in a cottage-land of land within the town of Lilliesleaf. Perhaps the same Archibald in Friarshaw is recorded being granted a cottage-land in Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. Archibald of Tofts (16th/17th C.) said to be one of 4 natural sons of the Regent James, 4th Earl of Morton, who was executed in 1581 after being captured by a Stewart. There could be confusion between Archibald of Pittendreich and Archibald of Tofts, although it seems that they may have been the same man. He could be the Archibald who in 1581 was one of the executors for the will of his brother William in Crook. He was one of the associates of Sir James of Parkhead and Torthorwald (perhaps his nephew), who was killed on Edinburgh High Street by one of Stewarts in 1608. Also in 1608 his lands (of Tofts presumably) were served to his nephew Martin of Tofts (son of his brother William of Crook); this establishes a connection between the Douglases of Crook and Tofts, even if these families relationships are still confusing. He was Commissioner for Berwick at the 1617 Scottish Parliament; he may have been the first of Tofts and also Laird of Fastcastle (although this may be a different Tofts and hence a different man). Also in 1617 he was among Border Lairds who renewed their bond for keeping the peace. His brother James is recorded in a complaint of 1618. In 1619 appointed as a Commissioner for the Merse, for dealing with idle and incorrigible persons and was also appointed as Sheriff of Berwickshire. Also in 1619 he had a charter for the lands of 'Pittilisheuche' and in an undated charter the lands of Hartsyde. In 1620 he was part of a Commission to appoint Robert

Swinton of that Ilk as Sheriff of Berwick. Also in 1620 he had legal proceedings against the widow and son of Robert Johnstone of Leuchars. His wife may have been Alison Home. His children included William of Tofts and Archibald of Lumsden. Archibald (16th/17th C.) recorded in a deed of 1607 as master of an 'adventure school' in Hawick. He was thus one of the earliest Hawick teachers that we know about, even although there is no other information about him. Archibald (17th C.) recorded as possessor of 'Porterleyne Greina' in Liddesdale in 1632. This is Greena in the very south of Roxburghshire. He was a servant of William, Earl of Morton. In 1634 his daughter Margaret was served heir to his lands of Greena, Purvinen and Burnmouth. Archibald (1609–55) eldest son of William, 1st Marquess of Douglas, from whom he inherited the title Earl of Angus. Before he succeeded his father he was known as Master of Angus and Lord Douglas. He was made a Burgess of Glasgow in 1632, along with his father and uncle Francis. He signed the National Covenant in 1638, but appears to have been unwilling to take up arms in its defence. Among his titles was the superiority of Jedforest (i.e. Southdean). He left for the Continent, but returned in 1641 and was a member of the General Assembly until 1649. He was appointed as Commander of the Douglas Regiment after the death of his brother James, but resigned in favour of his brother George. He went over to King Charles II in 1650 and was created Earl of Angus and Ormond. He lived quietly in Edinburgh for his last few years. In 1628, he firstly married Anne, daughter of Esmé Stewart, 3rd Duke of Lennox. He secondly married Jane, daughter of David, 2nd Earl of Wemyss. His eldest son James succeeded to the Earldom of Angus and Lordship of Jedforest and would become 2nd Marquess of Douglas. Other children were: 2 daughters who died unmarried; Archibald (b.1653), Earl of Forfar; William, who died in childhood; and Margaret, who married the 1st Viscount Kinghorn. Rev. Archibald (c.1641–96) youngest son of Douglas of Tilwhilly, he graduated from Edinburgh University in 1661. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Kelso in 1663 and ordained that year at Douglas. He was translated to Cavers in 1664, where he was minister for about 9 years. He moved to Newton in 1673 and then Newbattle in 1681, but was deprived later that year for refusing to take the Test. He was re-admitted in 1683 in Saltoun, where he remained until his death. He married Janet Carmichael (daughter of the minister of Ewes) in 1694. Their son Archibald became Wagon-master General to the British Forces, and his son John became Bishop of Salisbury. They also had 2 daughters, Helen and Janet. Archibald of Hawthornside (17th C.) local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, according to James Wilson. He paid the land tax for Hawthornside in 1678 when it was valued at £171. It is unclear how he was related to other Douglases. Sir Archibald (d.1669) 10th Laird of Cavers, son of Sir William, he was also 'of Denholm and Spittal'. In 1634 he and his wife Rachel Skene had a charter from Charles I for several lands, including the town of Denholm. He was one of the signatories of the Covenant of 1638 in Hawick. In 1643, 1644, 1646, 1648 and 1649 he was 'fear of Cavers' when listed among the members of the Committee of War for Roxburghshire; father and son served as Convenor in 1649. In 1640 he was sent from the Scots army, 'with a trumpeter, and only two gentlemen', to assure the mayornd aldermen of Newcastle that they would be unharmed by the passage of the army. He may have commanded part of the Parliamentary Army in the 1640s. In 1648 he (along with his father) was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. He bought the lands of Kirkton from Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs in 1655. He is probably the Sir Archibald who in 1656 witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk Parish for Thomas Scott of Whitslade. He succeeded on the death of his father in about 1658. In 1658 he bought Denholm and Spittal from William, Lord Cranston (whose family had held them in feu for generations), uniting these lands with the Cavers estate. In 1660 he was appointed as a Parliamentary Commissioner (i.e. M.P.) for Roxburghshire, serving until 1663. In 1662, following the Restoration, he was fined £3,600. This is partly because he took the side of the ministers who were ejected from their livings in that year, declining to approve of the appointment of the replacement for Rev. Gillan. Also in 1662 he resigned his lands and titles in favour of his eldest son William, and William's wife Katherine Rigg, following an agreement made as part of their 1659 marriage contract. He was probably the Sheriff who paid the land tax on £5344 for lands in Cavers Parish and £4480 in Kirkton Parish in 1663. He married Rachel, daughter of Sir James Skene of Halyards, who was President of the Court of Session; their initials (S.A.D. and D.R.S.) appear over the fireplace in Westgate

Hall, which they had built in 1663. He was only Laird for a few years, and was succeeded by his son Sir William. He also had a son James (1633–74), who was murdered by Andrew Rutherford. Capt. Thomas, described as brother of the deceased Laird in the 1680s was probably also a son of his; he was a soldier known for killing Covenanters. He also had daughters Anne (b.1636), who married Robert Bennet of Chesters in 1652 and Elizabeth (b.1637), who married Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh, Archibald (17th C.) described as 'tutor of Cavers' when he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1678. It is unclear who this refers to, perhaps an uncle of the 12th Laird, William, who was in his minority. Archibald (17th C.) listed at Whithope among 'The poor in Hauick Parioch' on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Archibald (17th/18th C.) weaver in Nether Southfield. His son Francis was baptised in 1706, with the witnesses being Bailies Walter Graham and George Martin. Archibald (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1706 he married Marion Wright and their children included: Marion (b.1707); Archibald (b.1709); and John (b.1722). The witnesses in 1707 were weavers James Lunn and John Swan, and in 1709 were James Scott 'Doctor' and Robert Elliot. It is possible he is the weaver called Douglas (with no first name give) whose son Thomas was baptised in Hawick in 1713; the witnesses were Thomas Shiel (probably in Todshawhill, who may have given his name to the child) and 'drover' James Scott. Archibald (17th/18th C.) resident of 'Rige' in Kirkton Parish. This is perhaps Winningtonrig. His children included William (b.1716), Robert (b.1718) and Agnes (b.1720). Archibald of Cavers (c.1668–1741), 13th Laird, son of Sir William and younger brother of Sir William the 12th Laird. In 1695 he was the 'brother to Cavers' who was appointed as a Commissioner of Supply to Roxburghshire. He was also described as brother to Sir William of Cavers when he contributed £500 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. Additionally in 1695 he was probably the 'Mr' Archibald who witnessed a baptism for John Scott of Gorrenberry (probably his brother-in-law). In 1696 he rented Minto from Helen, Countess of Tarras for 3 years. He succeeded to the Cavers Lairdship from his brother William in 1698. He was also Sheriff Principal of Roxburghshire. He was listed on a tax document for the Lordship of Melrose in 1700. He became a Privy Councillor in 1703. He was Commissioner for Roxburghshire to the Scottish Parliament (i.e. M.P.) 1700–07. In 1704 he witnessed a baptism for George Douglas of Friarshaw. In 1706 he was made a Burgess of Edinburgh (gratis) in right of his father. He voted for the Union in the last Scottish Parliament of 1707. He then represented Roxburgshire in the first Parliament of Great Britain 1707–08. He also represented the Dumfries Burghs as M.P. 1727–34. His lands in Cavers Parish were valued at £7263 in 1707. He was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Glasgow (gratis) in 1715, along with Archibald, Duke of Douglas (for whom he was guardian) and his own servant Walter Scott. He supported the royalist cause in 1715, raising horses to send to the north. A letter to him (from the Duke of Argyll) as Sheriff of Roxburghshire in 1716 complains about the local men who have apparently deserted from the King's service. He was Reciever General for Scotland 1705–18 (it is said the appointment was due to his strong Hanoverian leanings). He complained that his dismissal was part of an intrigue by pro-Jacobites, but he was granted a £400 pension in 1721 and in 1725 was appointed Paymaster (or Postmaster) General for Scotland. He was entered as a Burgess and Guild brother of Edinburgh in 1707. He was a curator for the Dukes of Douglas and Queensberry when they were minors. He was said to have been a great supporter of the loyalist cause in the Jacobite uprising of 1715, advancing money to the Scottish exchequer and raising forces in Roxburghshire. He also supported Andrew Murray (ancestor of James 'Dictionary' Murray), a loyalist who had been persecuted in the north, settling him in the lands at Spittal Tower. In 1723 he complained to the Bailies of Selkirk that a shoemaker there had accused him of theft and threatened to throw stones at him. In 1727 he, his brother Thomas and son William gave a bond to William Scott of Whitehaugh. He was also one of the main instigators for setting up a spinning school in Hawick in 1734. Also in 1734 he witnessed the marriage of his niece Violet Douglas with John Oliver of Dinlabyre. In 1738 he sold Over Hassendean to Francis, 2nd Duke of Buccleuch and in 1739 sold 'Ladylands' to John, Duke of Roxburghe. In 1739 he and his son were among the local landowners asked to decide where the Teviot Brig in Hawick should be built. He married Anna, daughter of Francis Scott of Gorrenberry (in Edinburgh in 1693) and possibly later Elizabeth Scott of Gala (although this may be confusion with his son Archibald); he may also have been the Douglas of Cavers who secretly married

Mary Houston in 1708. His sons William, Archibald, James and John all became Laird in turn. His daughter Ann married William Campbell of Fife. He also had daughters Catharine and Euphane (who later lived with their brother James at Cavers). The bells of Hawick Kirk recorded being rung for 'Lady Douglas' in 1728 are probably for his wife. Archibald (1694–1761) son of the 2nd Marquis of Douglas and Mary Kerr. He succeeded at the age of 6, becoming 3rd Marquess, and was made Duke of Douglas at age 9. His guardians included his mother, the Earls of Lothian and Morton, Lord Jedburgh and Lord Charles Kerr. He had several titles restored to his family, including Viscount of Jedburgh Forest. He was superior of extensive lands, including in the Jed valley and Southdean Parish. He was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh in 1714 and was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Glasgow (gratis) in 1715, along with Archibald of Cavers, who was one of his guardians. He acted against the Jacobite uprising in 1715. In about 1725 he appears to have been involved in the death of Captain John Ker, son of Lord Mark Ker, his brother-in-law. He was close to his sister Jane (who had been betrothed to Francis Scott, who became Duke of Buccleuch), but in later life fell out with her. He unwillingly hosted Bonnie Prince Charlie at Douglas Castle in 1745. His lands in Southdean Parish were valued at about £5000 in the 1740s. Late in life, in 1758, he married Margaret, daughter of James Douglas of Mains. His wife 'Peggy' was known for her intelligence and wit; they separated, but were reunited. Having no heirs, he settled his estates on his nephew Archibald James Edward Stewart-Douglas, son of his sister Jane. After Douglas Castle burned down in 1758, he had it rebuilt to plans by Robert Adam, but died before it could be completed, and only one wing of the planned house was ever constructed. Archibald (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded at the Trows in 1747 when his son Thomas was baptised. Archibald of Cavers (d.1774) 15th Laird, son of Archibald and younger brother of William. He was the first Laird in the 18th century to focus attention on the Cavers estate. He was Postmaster General for Scotland from about 1736 and was given that title in 1739 when he was made a Burgess of Edinburgh in right of his father. He took over the Lairdship on the death of his brother William in 1748, but had been given the Sheriffship of Roxburghshire when his brother became M.P. for the county in 1742. In 1747 he received £20,000 Scots compensation when the heritable sheriffships were removed by the Crown; at that time he was described as being 'of Deanbrae'. He paid the window tax in Cavers Parish in 1748 and 1753. He sold part of Oakwood to Walter Scott of Harden in 1755. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. In 1764 he subscribed to Sir Robert Douglas' 'Peerage of Scotland'. He is probably the Laird who had the Cameronian Chapel and Manse built in Denholm, perhaps in the 1740s. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Hugh Scott of Gala (and she died in 1808 in Edinburgh), but they had no surviving children. He lived at Deanbrae, and was succeeded by his brother Rev. James. He died after several years of illness. Archibald (18th C.) tenant of Berryfell. A notice is recorded in 1778 regarding the creditors of his estate, so he may have died shortly before. He was listed (by John Sibbald) among local farmers who had failed in 1778. Archibald (18th C.) gardener recorded at Midshiels in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for Capt. John Douglas. Archibald James Edward (1748–1827) son of Sir John Stewart of Grandtully and Lady Jane Douglas. He was twin of Sholto, who died young. His surname is sometimes given as Stewart-Douglas or 'Steuart-Douglas'. After a protracted legal battle ('the Douglas Case') he was served heir to his uncle, the 3rd Marquess of Douglas. He was created 1st Baron Douglas of Douglas in 1790 and was M.P. for Forfarshire. He also held lands in Southdean Parish, stretching essentially from Jedburgh to the Border. He could be the Archibald of Douglas who was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1780 and Selkirkshire in 1788, and who was recorded holding the Lordship of Jedforest in 1788 (valued at more than £4000). In the 1788 county valuation he is also reorded as owner of Peel in Castleton Parish. He was a member of the Jedforest Club from 1810. He married Lucy, daughter of William Graham, 2nd Duke of Montrose. He secondly married Frances, daughter of Francis, Earl of Dalkeith (and sister of Henry, Duke of Buccleuch). His children were: Archibald, 2nd Baron Douglas; Charles, 3rd Baron; Jane Margaret (b.1779), who married Henry James, son of Sir Henry, 3rd Duke of Buccleuch, and who later inherited the estates; Caroline Lucy, who married Adm. Sir George Scott; Frances Elizabeth, married William Moray Stirling; Mary Sidney, who married Robert Douglas; Sholto Scott; Rev. James, 4th Baron, who married Wilhelmina Murray, and after whom the title became extinct and the estates went to Lady Montagu; and George. Capt. Archibald (18th C.) probably 2nd son of Thomas, and grandson of Sir William of Cavers. He was Inspector of Works at Berwick. He was named in the will of his cousin Rev. Dr. James Douglas of Cavers, and would have succeeded if Andrew (probably his older brother) had not had male issue. Archibald of Timpendean (1718–81) son of William, he was the 10th Laird. He appears to have taken on the Bonjedward title as well, following the death of the last of that line (although this is not proven). He is probably the Archibald of Timpendean who was baptised in Jedburgh in 1725 and in 1739 became an apprentice with merchant Archibald Angus in Edinburgh. His lands were valued at £567 in the 1740s. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He gained a significant part of Lanton Common when it was divided in 1769. He is recorded in sasines in 1780 for lands at Chesters and Edgerston. He was taxed in 1778 for having a male servant. In 1765 he married Helen, daughter of Andrew Bennet of Chesters, and she died in 1808. His children included: William (b.1770), who succeeded; Andrew (1772–1827), Physician in the Royal Navy, who died in London; Robert (b.1774); and Archibald (1778–1833). Archibald (d.1814) weaver of Hawick Parish. In 1783 he witnessed a baptism for Peter Wilson and Joan Kedie (his sister-in-law) and in 1784 he and Peter Wilson witnessed a baptism for Thomas Kedie. He may be the Archibald who witnessed baptisms for John ekron in 1784 and 1786. In 1768 he married Janet (1745–1811), daughter of baker John Kedie. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1769); Janet (b.1771), who married shoemaker George Deans; Robert (b.1774), hosier, who married Sally Beck; John (b.1780), stockingmaker, who married J. Aitchison. The witnesses in 1771 were the whole congregation. In 1774 the witnesses were Robert (surely a close relative, perhaps his father or brother) and weaver David Miller; the next baptismal entry was for a child of David Miller, with witnesses weavers Robert and himself. He may be the Archibald who witnessed baptisms for children of Dr. Robert in 1782, 1785, 1787, 1788 and 1790; if so then perhaps they were brothers and both sons of weaver Robert. Archibald of Adderstone (1755–1825) younger son of Andrew, grandson of Thomas and great-grandson of Sir William of Cavers. He was christened at St. Martin in the Field, Westminster. On the death of Capt. James of Cavers in 1786 his brother George succeeded to Cavers, while he inherited the lands of Adderstone (consisting of Adderstonelee and Adderstoneshiel) and Midshiels and lived at the latter. He held the lands of Midshiels and Coliforthill by 1788 and also held Bankend, as well as teinds of lands in Jedburgh Parish (including Hawickgate). He was at Midshiels in the period 1788–95 when taxed for owning a carriage and was taxed for having up to 5 carriage or saddle horses at Midshiels in the period 1787–97. He paid tax on 3 female servants at Midshiels in 1787, 2 in 1788, 1 in 1789 and 2 in 1790 and 1791. He also had 4 male servants at Midshiels in 1790, 3 in 1791–92, 2 in 1793 and 4 in 1794 and 1797. He also had 2 farm horses in 1797 and also paid tax on 3 non-working dogs in the same year. He was probably the Douglas of Midshiels who subscribed to John Learmont's book of poetry in 1791. In about 1800 he contributed £50 to the local subscription to help fund the forces to stop the French invasion. He was recorded as owner of Midshiels in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, as well as lands in Jedburgh Parish (including Bankend and part of the teinds of 'Hawick-gate') and Adderstone plus Adderstonelee. He served as a Deputy-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire in at least the period 1797–1801 and was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. He married Jane Gale from Whitehaven. Their children were: Anne Mary (b.1787); Jane (b.1789); Katherine Rachel (b.1790), who married James Dove of Wexham House near Windsor; Elizabeth (b.1792), who married Ensign Aaron Reid of the 72nd Highlanders; Grace Thomasina (b.1793); Andrew John (b.1795), who died at Midshiels in 1806, before his father; Archibald Pringle (b.1796), who succeeded; and Thomas (b.1798). Archibald (18th C.) resident of 'Kirktown' in 1791 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. He is probably the Archibald who married Janet Laidlaw in Kirkton Parish in 1789. Archibald (18th/19th C.) recorded at Raesknowe in 1797, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. It is possible he was the Archibald, married to Janet Kedie, who had several children baptised in Hawick Parish about the 1770s. Archibald (1773–1844) 2nd Baron Douglas, son of Archibald, 1st Baron. He was educated at Eton and his main residence was at Bothwell Castle, Lanarkshire. He inherited his father's lands in Southdean Parish, where he was the major heritor. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819, while still younger of Douglas. Archibald Pringle of Adderstone (1798/9–1860) eldest surviving son of Archibald, from whom he inherited the lands of Adderstone and Midshiels. He was 'Jun. Esq. of Adderstone' in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. It is possible he was the 'Mr. Douglas' listed (by Walter Wilson) among the reform-minded men who met regularly in the upstairs room of Robert Wilson. He was a reform politician and M.P., who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1834. He owned the lands of Adderstoneshiel and Adderstonelee and lived for a while at Midshiels (being listed there in Pigot's 1837 directory). He was one of the 4 heritors of Kirkton Parish. He was Captain in the local (Dumfries) Militia 1820–25. He was also a member of the Jedforest Club. In 1851 he was recorded as 'Landed Proprietor Justice of the Peace' at Midshiels. He married Margaret Violet, daughter of Mark Pringle of Haining and Clifton, and she died in 1868; she is recorded as proprietor of the Haining in a directory of 1868. They had one child, Anne Elizabeth, who succeeded to Fairnilee and Haining, married John Pattison in Melrose and was eventually succeeded by Andrew Seth Pringle Pattison, Professor of Logic and Metaphysics at Edinburgh University. Archibald (b.1803) son of Robert and Catherine Beck. He was a frameworker and later postman, living in the Round Close. In 1841 he was living at about 7 Sandbed and was at the Round Close by 1851. He is recorded in the 1860s as postal messenger for Cavers Parish. He married Barbara (or 'Barbary') Scott in 1834. Their children included: John (b.1835); Janet (b.1837); James (b.1839); Catherine (b.1841); Robert; Ninian; Mary; Barbara; and Helen. His daughter Janet married blacksmith John Halliday. Archibald William (1818–58) 8th Marquess of Queensberry and also Baron of Hawick, among other titles. He married Caroline Clayton and was succeeded by his famous son John. Arthur (16th C.) recorded in 1535 as 'in Efflesche' when, along with Thomas 'Fresall', he had 13 cows and oxen stolen by William Scott 'in Layk'. He was presumably a tenant farmer at Effledge. Arthur (16th C.) recorded as being 'in Kirktoun' when he witnessed a sasine for the lands of Crook in 1569. He is presumably the same Arthur who was one of the agents to whom the precept of sasine was directed for the same lands in the previous year, suggesting that he was related to the Douglases of Crook. He may be related to (or the same man as) Arthur in Effledge. William in Kirkton was also a witness in 1569, and so probably a son or brother. Charles (1663–1739) 2nd Earl of Selkirk. He was 3rd son of William, who was Duke of Hamilton and Earl of Selkirk, among other titles. His father resigned the Earldom to him in 1688. He died unmarried and was succeeded by his brother John. Rev. Charles (d.1745) son of Andrew, he was minister of Cavers. Licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in early 1738, he was presented by Archibald Douglas of Cavers later that year and remained minister until his death. In 1735 in Bedrule Parish he married Isabel Douglas (who died in 1748), daughter of Walter, minister of Linton. Their children were: Andrew (b.1735); Walter (b.1737); Archibald (b.1739); Isobel (b.1740, or Isabella), who married James Newgigging in Edinburgh in 1759; William (b.1742); and Charles (b.1744). Charles 3rd Duke of Queensberry (1698–1778), 3rd son of James, the 2nd Duke. He inherited the Dukedom, since his elder brother James (who was allowed to inherit the Marquessate and Earldom) was criminally insane and kept locked up. He was created Viscount Tibbers and Earl of Solway, and retained several Scottish titles, including Lord Douglas of Hawick. He was also Lord Lieutenant of Dumfries and Kirkcudbright. He was a patron of the poet John Gay. In 1706 he became a Burgess of Canongate, gratis. He married Catherine, daughter of Henry, Earl of Clarendon. His wife was a friend of many of the writers of the day, and she apparently died from eating too many cherries. Since he was predeceased by his 2 sons, upon his death the English titles expired, while the Scottish ones went to a cousin William, grandson of William, Earl of March. Charles of Kelhead (1777–1837) son of Sir William Douglas and Grace Johnstone. He was the 6th Marquess of Queensberry, succeeding on the death of his cousin William in 1810, although the Dukedom passed to Henry Scott of Buccleuch. He acquired the Marquessate through marrying Caroline Scott, daughter of Henry, 3rd Duke of Buccleuch. This made him also Viscount Drumlanrig and Lord Douglas of Hawick. He may be the 'Honourable Charles Douglas' to whom the superiority of Wauchope was conveyed by Charles Scott in the early 1800s. He was one of Scotland's representative peers 1812–32. He served as Lord Lieutenant of Dumfries 1819–37. Having no male issue, the titles passed to his younger brother John. Charles 'Charlie' wrote 'Happy memories of Gatehousecote and Rulewater'. Christian (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. Christine of Trows (16th C.) recorded in 1574 in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, when she still owed grain for her share of the teinds of Cavers

Parish. Her name is recorded as 'Cristiane Douglas, Lady Trowis'. It is unclear who her husband had been and how she was connected with the Douglases of Cavers. Craig one of Hawick's most successful athletes, winning many middle distance races in the 1960s and early 1970s. He was Scottish 880 yards champion in 1963 and champion over 1500 m in 1969 and 1971. David (15th C.) witness to a 1483 sasine given by William Douglas, Laird of Cavers, relating to lands in Hassendean. Since he was listed immediately after William, then he may have been his son or brother. Either the same man or a different David was on the inquest panel for James Douglas of Cavers inheriting the Barony from his father. Probably the same David was on the 1482 panel for Elizabeth Cunningham inheriting the lands of Appletreehall and the eastern part of Hassendean; George of Bonjedward, James and Patrick are also listed, and possibly closely related. He may be the David, son of William, for whom the Sheriff (William of Cavers) was fined for his non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493; it seems unlikely that his father was the same William as the Sheriff. He could be the 'Dauid Dowglas' who was among the bailies appointed by Patrick, Earl of Bothwell, for giving a sasine of the lands of Grahamslaw to Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1500. He may be the same 'Dauid Dawgles' who witnessed a sasine for Scott of Buccleuch in 1500. David 7th Earl of Angus (c.1515–57) son of Sir George of Pittendreich and nephew of Archibald, 6th Earl. He died only about 6 months after succeeding to the Angus titles and lands. In 1552 he married Margaret, daughter of John Hamilton of Samuelton, who was widow of James Johnstone, younger of that Ilk. His children were Archibald, who succeded as 8th Earl; Margaret, who firstly married Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch and second married Francis Stewart, Earl of Bothwell; and Elizabeth, who firstly married John, Lord Maxwell (and later Earl of Morton), secondly married Alexander Stewart of Garlies and thirdly married John Wallace of Craigie. David (16th C.) recorded as 'Davie Dowgles' in 1584 when he signed the bond of assurance between men of Liddesdale and the English Warden. His name is listed along with local Gledstains, suggesting that he was from somewhere around Hawick. Perhaps the same man was 'David Douglas of Yarlsyde' in 1586 when his son William was declared a rebel for his part in the murder of 6 Grahamslaws of Newton. David Harrington Angus (1929–) 12th Marquess of Queensberry, also holding the title of Baron of Hawick. He was educated at Eton and served in the Royal Horse Guards. A noted pottery designer, he was Professor of Ceramics at the Royal College of Art 1976–78. He married firstly Ann Jones, secondly Alexandra Mary Clare Wyndham Sich and thirdly Hseuh-Chun Liao. He had 4 daughters and 3 sons, the eldest being Sholto Francis Guy Douglas, Viscount of Drumlanrig, who will succeed to the titles. He also had an illegitimate son, Ambrose Jonathan Carey, head of a security and intelligence firm, whose half-sister married Salem bin Laden. Dunbar (1722–99) 4th Earl of Selkirk. He was son of Basil Hamilton and grandson of Lord Basil Hamilton, who was a younger son of the 1st Earl. He succeeded his granduncle in 1744 and adopted 'Douglas' as his surname. He attended Glasgow University, was granted an honorary Doctorate of Civil Law and was Rector there. He was also Lord Lieutenant of Kirkcudbright. During the American War, John Paul Jones attempted to kidnap him, but found him absent from his home on St. Mary's Isle (near Kirkcudbright). He was a Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh. In 1758 he married Helen, daughter of John Hamilton, son of the Earl of Haddington. He had 7 sons (6 of whom predeceased him) and 3 daughters. He was succeeded by his youngest surviving son Thomas. He died at his residence in George Street, Edinburgh and was buried at Holyrood Abbey. Dunbar James (1809–85) 6th Earl of Selkirk. He was son of Thomas, 5th Earl, born in London. He succeeded when still a minor and there were later disputes over his Canadian holdings. He graduated from Oxford with first-class honours in Mathematics. He was a Conservative Representative Peer from 1830. He married Cecily Louisa Grey-Egerton, but the couple had no issue. He died and was buried in Kirkkudbrightshire. On his death the Earldom of Selkirk was assumed by his relative the Duke of Hamilton. It is unclear if he ever visited Selkirk. Elizabeth nee Graham (14th C.) wife of William Douglas 'the Knight of Liddesdale'. After her husband's was killed in 1353 she sought protection from England, retaining rights to Hermitage and Liddesdale from Edward III, provided she married an Englishman. She did so, marrying Hugh, brother of William, Lord Dacre, and together they were granted Hermitage Castle and Liddesdale in 1355. This arrangement allowed her daughter and nephew, who had been kept as English hostages, to be released. However, by 1358 the Castle was in possession of William, Earl of Douglas (the same relative who had killed her husband). Elizabeth 'Bessie' (17th C.) recorded in the Council records of 1665 when dyer James Scott swore that she reproached Bailie Deans. She specifically said 'that Bailie Deans was made bailie out of pity, and that the yard pertaining to John Pasley was not truelie marched' [BR1665]. Elizabeth (b.1678) daughter of John Douglas, she married Sir William, 12th Laird of Cavers about 1690. He died about 8 years later and in 1700 she remarried Sir Andrew Home, Lord Kimmerghame, son of the Earl of Marchomont. Elizabeth 'Bessie' (18th C.) recorded in 1758 when she hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth. Elizabeth 'Lizzy' (18th/19th C.) married to James. In 1835 she became the first letter-carrier of the Rule valley, going with her donkey and cart twice a week to Jedburgh; her husband was almost blind by then. She lived at Hoddleswoodie. Her children included Mary (b.1797), James (b.1799), Charles (b.1800) and Nelly (b.1808). Elizabeth nee Beattie (1779–1858) from Langholm, she married joiner John Douglas (1778–1838). She was post-mistress in Newcastleton in 1851, living around Langholm Street. Her daughter Christina assisted her. She was also listed as postmistress in a directory of 1851. Francis Archibald Kelhead (1896–1954) 11th Marquess of Queensberry, also holding the title of Baron of Hawick. He served with the Black Watch and was wounded twice during WWI. He was succeeded by his son David. Gavin (c.1474–1522) 3rd son of Archibald 'Bell the Cat', his name is also written 'Gawin' or 'Gawain'. He was traditionally said to have been Rector of Hawick for a short time from 1496 before becoming Provost of St. Giles, Edinburgh and then Bishop of Dunkeld. However, it seems more likely that he was in fact Parson at 'Haugh', which was an old name for Prestonkirk Parish, and not at Hawick (although things are further confused by both churches being attached to the College of Bothwell around that time, and by a claim that there was an oral tradition going back to the mid-18th century that he was associated with Hawick, independent of the documentary reference to the word 'Haugh'). He studied at St. Andrews until 1494, becoming Rector of Prestonkirk and East Linton. In 1501 he was appointed Provost of the Collegiate Church of St. Giles. In 1503 he was procurator for his brother George in a financial agreement with Ralph Ker of Primsideloch made in Jedburgh. In 1512 he (along with his father) was on the jury in the trial of Sir William of Drumlanrig for the murder of Robert Crichton of Kirkpatrick. He was made a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1513 'for the common good of the town'. He failed to secure the Bishopric of St. Andrews (despite seizing the Castle), but instead became Bishop of Dunkeld in 1515. He was later involved in power struggles between Angus, Arran and Albany. He wrote poetry in the vernacular and translated Virgil into Scots, later fleeing to England and seeking the protection of Henry VIII because of political intrigues and rivalries. He died of the plague in London while in exile, staying the house of Lord Dacre, and is buried in Savoy Church. He may have had an illegitimate daughter, Margaret, but left no heirs. His fame is as a poet and translator, although probably nothing was published during his lifteime. 'The Palice of Honour' was dedicated to James V and one other, 'Conscience' survives. His most noteworthy contribution was a translation of Virgil's 'Æneid' into Scots. He was possibly the first person to refer to his language as 'Scottish'. He is said to have left an illegitimate daughter, Margaret, who married Robert Crawford of Auchinames in Renfrewshire and secondly Semple of Fulwood – 'Here Gawin Douglas took his way, On Sabbath morn and holy day When vested priests in cope and stole Said masses for Drumlanrig's soul' [WNK]. George (c.1378–c.1403) 1st Earl of Angus, illegitimate son of William, 1st Earl of Douglas with Margaret Stewart, Countess of Angus and of Mar (who was his father's brother-in-law's wife!). His mother resigned her Angus title to him in 1389, but he did not assume the title until his betrothal in 1397. Sir William 1st of Drumlanrig and Archibald 1st of Cavers were his nephews. Confusion over the lack of confirmation of the charter of Cavers to Archibald led to James Sandilands gaining the lands (as well others, perhaps through his grandmother, Eleanor, daughter of Sir Archibald 'Tineman' Douglas). Sandilands passed them to him, according to a 1397 charter confirmed by Robert III; this included the Barony of Cavers, Sheriffdom of Roxburgh, Lordships of Jedburgh and Liddesdale, town of Selkirk, lands of Bonjedward, Lordship of Abernethy and many other titles and estates, following the death of Isabella Countess of Mar (his half sister). However, this never transpired, since the right was given back to James Sandilands (the King's brother-in-law) in 1404/5, after his own death (although some lands were later recovered by his son William). There is also an agreement of 1400 in which Sir Malcolm Drummond, Lord of Mar, agrees to give him the rights to lands in Liddesdale, including recovering the rents and other dues from Sir James Douglas of Dalkeith, in return for rights to lands in Angus. His attempts to recover Liddesdale and other lands led to a feud with Sir James of Dalkeith. In 1402 he supported the 4th Earl of Douglas in invading Northumberland. He was captured by the English at the Battle of Holidon Hill and probably died in English captivity, possibly during an outbreak of the plague. He married Mary Stewart, daughter of King Robert III. Their children included: William, 2nd Earl and the first of the 'Red' Douglases; George; and Elizabeth (or perhaps Mary), who married firstly Alexander, Lord Forbes and secondly Sir David Hay of Yester. His wife remarried 3 times after his death.

George (c.1427–63) 4th Earl of Angus, younger son of William the 2nd Earl (and not, as some sources suggest, 2nd son of George, the 1st Earl). He succeeded on the death of his brother James in 1445/6. In the power struggles of the mid-16th century he was head of the 'Red Douglases'. He was Lord of Liddesdale and Jedburgh Forest, as well as Lord of Abernethy, and also held many other lands. He had a sasine for Jedforest and Liddesdale in 1447. He served as Warden of the East Marches and also the Middle Marches. In 1448 he accompanied the Earls of Douglas and Ormond on retaliatory expeditions into Northumberland; this was the last time that the Red and Black Douglas chiefs rode together. He was one of the signatories of the Border laws document drawn up in 1449. After William, 8th Earl of Douglas was killed by the King and others in 1452, he sided with James II (who was his cousin) and helped destroy those who were rebellious to the King. In 1453 he appointed Sir Archibald Douglas of Cavers, Sheriff of Roxburgh, and his son William, as Bailies of Liddesdale and Keepers of Hermitage Castle. At about the same time he placed Jedburgh and Lintalee in the hands of Andrew Ker of Cessford. He was probably present at the siege of Abercorn in 1455 and later that year led the royalists at the Battle of Arkinholm, where 1 of the Black Douglas leaders (Moray) was killed, another (Ormond) captured and hanged, and a third (Balveny) fled to England. In 1456 he was granted Ewesdale by the King, previously possesed by Robert Graham; his attorney for the sasine was Hector of Lauder. For services to the King he was also made Lord of Douglas in 1457. In 1458/9 he was granted superiority of Eskdale, which had been held by James, Earl of Douglas. He was said to have been injured at Roxburgh in 1460 when he was standing near the King when the cannon exploded; however, he was still able to capture the castle a few days later. He was present at the coronation of James III at Kelso, and according to one story was the person who placed the crown on the young King's head. In 1462 he obtained from the Crown a gift of all the lands in Roxburghshire that had been held by the Earl of Douglas. Also in 1462 he had an indenture with Henry VI of England to make him a Duke of England in return for his assistance; however, he died before becoming an English Duke. His last military act was to lead a force of perhaps 20,000 men to relieve a siege of French soldiers at Alnwick. He married Isobel, only daughter of Sir John Sibbald of Balgony in Fife. In 1471 his wife Isobel, countess of Angus and her children (John of Douglas, Isobel Douglas, Elizabeth of Douglas, Margaret Douglas, Giles Douglas and Alison Douglas) litigated against her brother-in-law William of Douglas of Cluny for witholding grain and other goods and rentals from several lands, including Hawick. His wife secondly married Sir Robert Douglas of Lochleven. His children included: Archibald, 'Bell the cat', who succeeded as 5th Earl of Angus; John, who probably died young; Anne, who married William, 2nd Lord Graham; Isobella, who married Sir Alexander Ramsay of Dalhousie, and secondly Thomas Livingstone; Elizabeth, who married Sir Robert Graham of Fintry; Margaret, who married Sir Duncan Campbell of Glenorchy, who died at Flodden; Jane (or Janet), who married David Scott, younger of Buccleuch in 1472 and secondly George Leslie, Earl of Rothes; Giles (or Egidia); and Alison. He was buried at Abernethy.

George of Bonjedward (d.c.1452) 3rd Laird, son of John. He was retoured as heir to his father in the demesne lands of Bonjedward in 1439. He was succeeded by his son George. Another son, William, is mentioned in 1476, and John may also possibly have been a 3rd son. George (15th C.) witness in 1433 to a feu charter between William Douglas of Drumlanrig and Simon of Routledge for Birkwood, just outside Hawick. The other witness was Archibald of Cavers, and so he may have been his son or other close relative. He may be the same 'Georgio de Douglas' (esquire) who witnessed (at Hawick) the sasine for the Barony of Hawick going to William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1452. And perhaps the George who witnessed a document relating to Whitchesters for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1456, where he was listed after Sir Archibald of Cavers, and Archibald's son, also Archibald, suggesting he may have been a son or brother to the Laird at that time. George of Bonjedward (15th C.) son of George, whom he succeeded in 1452 as 4th Laird. He renounced some lands to Jedburgh Abbey in 1458. He was a member of the panel in 1464/5 ruling on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburgh to Archibald of Cavers; he is recorded as 'of Bone Jedworth'. Probably the same George (recorded as an esquire) was witness to the sasine made at Cavers for the same purpose. He may have been a relative of the Cavers branch, as well as related to James, who was also a witness. In 1464/5 he was also on the panel to rule on the dispute between William Douglas of Drumlanrig and Alexander Gledstains; he is there 'of Buniedwort'. In 1468 he was witness to a charter for Sir Alexander Home of that Ilk, in 1471 for James Rutherford of that Ilk and in 1475 for Walter Ker of Caverton. William 'brodir to George of Dowglass of Bonegedworth' was recorded in 1476. He was a witness to the 'tack' granting lands in Selkirk to David, younger of Branxholme, in 1478. He was probably the George who was on the panel for Elizabeth Cunningham inheriting Appletreehall in 1482. He may also be the George who witnessed the sasine for the Barony of Hawick at the Mote in 1484. In 1485/6 he witnessed a charter for Robert Ramsay of Cockpen. In 1488 he witnessed the grant of Auld Roxburgh to Walter Ker of Cessford. In addition he could be the George who was mentioned in a document relating to Ruecastle in 1491 and who was on the panel for the inheritance of the lands of Branxholme and Buccleuch in 1492. Either he or a later George was the George of 'Bwnjedworth' who witnessed the sasine for George, Master of Angus being infefted in the Lordships of Eskdale and Ewesdale in 1499. He may be the 'Gorgis of Dowglas' who was one of the assessors of the lands of Whithope in 1500 and the 'Georgio Dowglas' who was appointed Sheriff Depute of Roxburghshire in 1500 in order to give sasine of lands to Walter Scott of Buccleuch. In 1479 he granted the lands of Timpendean to his son Andrew, with the consent of his oldest son, James; this separated the family line into 2 (although they would merge again later). However, James does not appear to have inherited Bonjedward, and so presumably predeceased him. John and William, brothers of the Laird of Bonjedward, were convicted of attacking Sir William Colville in 1502; this seems unlikely for men in their 60s, supporting the idea that there are 2 generations compounded into 1 man here. The 1504 list of men associated with the Archbishop of Glasgow who had remission for the slaughter of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey includes George of Bonjedward, who is either him or his son; the list follows with Andrew, John, Robert, William and Master Steven. George of Bonjedward (15th/16th C.) probably son of the earlier George or possibly son of William. He could be the Laird in 1502 whose uncle Robert acted as surety at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. In 1503 he was 'de Bonjedworth' when he witnessed a financial agreement in Jedburgh between George Douglas, Master of Angus and Ralph Ker of Primsideloch; John was the next witness and so possibly his brother. He was 'bailie in that part' in 1504 when sasine was given to William Turnbull for the lands of Maxton Craig. Additionally in he was listed among those associated with Robert Blackadder, Archbishop of Glasgow, who had a royal letter of protection for his tenants and others while he travelled to Rome in 1504, as well as remission for certain crimes; this included involvement in the killing of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey, with Andrew, John, Robert, William and Master Steven listed immediately after him, and so perhaps his close relatives. In a separate list John is recorded as his brother, while Robert was brother of Andrew of Timpendean (and certainly also related). He was also listed on the 1506 remission for the same crime (suggesting he was more closely involved perhaps); there his brother John is listed after him. In 1508 he was fined by the High Court of the Judiciary. He served on the retour panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale in 1508. He is probably the Laird of 'bone Jedworthe' on an assize in 1508/9 for convicting Andrew Ker and others at the Judiciary Court in Selkirk. He was appointed as temporary Sheriff of Roxburghshire (along with John Rutherford of Hundalee) in 1509 to hear the inquest for James Douglas inheriting Cavers from his father William. Also in 1509 he witnessed a sasine for lands in Linton. He would have been the Laird of Bonjedward who is recorded as one of the leaders of the men who had a skirmish with superior English forces at Sclaterford in 1513. He is probably the George (with no affiliation given) who was appointed as temporary Sheriff to oversee the sasine for the Barony of Hawick in 1514. He witnessed a document for Ker of Linton in 1516. He was 'of Bunjedward' in 1523 when he was on a panel in Jedburgh for the Homes. He may be the George who was on the panel of retour for Gordon of Stichill in 1525 and the George of 'Boonjedward' who witnessed the indenture between the Scotts and the Kers in 1529/30. Note that these generations are rather confused, with the possibility that several Georges are compounded. He may have had brothers John, William and Hugh, and a sister Jane who married Sir Archibald Rutherford. His children may have included William (who succeeded), Isobelle, Hugh and possibly John. William, son of the Laird of Bonjedward in 1502, was probably his son. The witnesses John and James Douglas listed in the sasine for Maxton Craig in 1504 (for which he acted as bailie) may have been his brothers or sons. George (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as tenant of Trows when David Oliver 'in Stryndis' had remission for stealing 20 sheep from his lands, as well as several other similar crimes. Also in 1502 he was surety for Archibald in Effledge, who had remission for crimes. In 1517 he was 'Georgum Douglas de Trowis' when he was on the panel for deciding on the inheritance of Scott of Branxholme. He may have been the uncle of Sir William of Cavers recorded in 1500 and the George who served as depute for the Sheriff of Roxburghshire (Sir William) in a 1501 retour for Robert Elliot of Redheugh. He may also have been the George who was listed (third, after Douglas of Cavers and Douglas 'of Denbray') in the 1488/9 list of Roxburghshire men given remission for their support of the former King, James III. He may additionally be the George for whom William of Cavers was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493 and again in 1494/5. George (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as tenant in Swinside, when his brothers Adam, Robert, Henry and Simon had remission for kidnap, theft and attempted murder. Ralph Ker of Primsideloch acted as surety. Also in 1502 he was recorded among other Douglases and some Davidsons who were convicted and had remission for oppressing Sir William Colville of Ochiltree. It is possible he is the same as one of the other contemporary Georges. George (c.1469–1513) Master of Angus, he was eldest son of Archibald, 'Bell the Cat', 5th Earl of Angus. In 1488/9 he was appointed to the Lordship of Liddesdale and other titles, after they were resigned by his father; this included Hermitage Castle, as well as Lordships of Eskdale, Ewesdale, Jedforest and Selkirk, as well as Douglas and Tantallon. He was present in Parliament in 1488 and 1490. The family were forced to give up their lands entirely in 1491, probably after a deal they made with the English (although he appears to have retained Eskdale and Ewesdale). Following this, his father handed him over as surety to King James. Patrick, Earl of Bothwell got the lands of Liddesdale, and he received the Barony of Bothwell in exchange. However, he was confirmed in the Lordships of Douglas, Jedforest, Liddesdale, Selkirk, Ewesdale, Eskdale, etc. in a sasine of 1499. In 1493 he was surety for Robert Turnbull 'in laris' (possible Lairhope) and in 1494/5 he was surety for John Young in Roughlee. In 1499 he had an indenture with the Royal Treasurer for keeping good order on the Border and was also appointed Warden of Eskdale. In 1499/1500 he met with Lord Dacre, the English Warden to sort out several cases of raiding across the Border. In 1501 he was liable for the pledges imposed upon Adam, David and Robert Turnbull. In 1502 he had to concede the lands of Falside in Jedforest to Ralph Ker of Primside Loch; this was for failing to deliver 'Sym Scott of Arkyn'. He was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1502. He was also fined in 1502 for not arresting a reiver named Davidson, 'Grace-behind-him', and the King deprived him of the Lordship of Eskdale. Additionally in 1502 he was fined for failure to arrest 3 Olivers, as well as John Turnbull 'de france' and others. In 1505/6 there was a summons for him from James IV, for failing to pay the dowry of 250 merks promised to Sir William Douglas of Cavers for the marriage of his daughter Alison and Sir William's son and heir; he also had to pay £500 Scots for loss and interest. In 1506 his lands of Ewesdale, including Fiddleton were granted to Alexander, Lord Home. In 1507/8 he had licence from the King to wadset some land in Jedforest and also a charter for the recognosced Lordship of Selkirk and lands of Philiphaugh. In 1509 he had a discharge over the marriage of his daughter Elizabeth with George, son of John, Lord Hay of Yester and an agreement with Ralph Ker of Primsideloch involving Philiphaugh. He was involved in litigation over ownership of land in the following years. In 1510 he was fined for failing to appear at the Justice Aire in Jedburgh regarding his lands of Jedforest. There was a contract in 1485 for him to marry Margaret, eldest daughter of Laurence, 1st Lord Oliphant; however, the marriage did not happen. By 1488 he married Elizabeth, daughter of John, 1st Lord Drummond, who was widow of Sir David Fleming; the couple's discovered near consanguinity was approved by Papal dispensation in 1495. Their children included: Archibald, who succeeded as 6th Earl; Sir George of Pittendreich; William, who was Prior of Condingham and Abbot of Holyrood House; Elizabeth, who married John Hay, 3rd Lord of Yester, owner of land at Hassendean; Alison, who was contracted to marry William Douglas of Cavers, but married Robert Blackadder, who died at Flodden, and secondly married Sir David Home of Wedderburn, who was also Laird of Wolfelee; Janet, who was burned at the stake (for what seem like fabricted charges), but had earlier married John Lyon, 6th Lord Glamis (whi she was accused of poisoning) and secondly Archibald Campbell of Skipnish (who died falling while trying to escape from Edinburgh Castle); and Margaret, who married Sir James Douglas, 7th Baron of Drumlanrig and Hawick. He died at Flodden along with his brother Sir William, and the titles went to his eldest son Archibald. Sir George of Pittendreich (c.1499–1552) son of George, Master of Angus and brother of Archibald, 6th Earl of Angus. He owned several lands in Elgin. He had a reputation for being a sharp negotiator and adept political manipulator. He was an advisor of his elder brother Archibald and his sister-in-law Queen Margaret and was declared a traitor by the Duke of Albany in 1515. He spent at least 2 years in exile in England. He was an important member of the Red Douglases in their attempts to control the young James V in 1528, after which he lived in exile in England. Around 1541 and 1542 he is mentioned many times in letters from the English March Wardens. Having his lands restored in 1543, he was involved in negotiations of peace with England, which failed and effectively led to the Rough Wooing. He was later a supporter of Mary of Guise. In 1547 he represented the Douglases, with George Lord Home repesenting the Homes in a case before the Privy Council regarding a feud between the families. He narrowly escaped capture by the English at Dalkeith Palace in 1548. He married Elizabeth, daughter and heir of David Douglas of Pittendreich. His children included: David, who became 7th Earl of Angus, and whose daughter Margaret would marry Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, as well as Francis, Earl of Bothwell; James, who married the Earl of Morton's youngest daughter Elizabeth; and an illegitimate son George, who became George of Parkhead. George (16th C.) recorded along with Ralph in 1563 when William Gourlay ordered them to remove themselves from lands in Cavers owned by Andrew of Friarshaw. He said that he sold the half husbandland and still wanted to be a tenant to Andrew. He could be the same as one of the other Georges. George of Bonjedward (16th/17th C.) son of William. In 1560 he was 'of Abone-jedburgh yownger' when he witnessed the bond between the Rutherfods and the Kers at Ancrum Spittal. He was still 'younger and fear' in 1562 when he served as surety for George Turnbull of Barnhills. In 1566 he was 'younger of Bonjedward' when he married Isobel Ker. In the register of the Privy Council he was surety in 1571, for William Kirkton of Stewartfield in 1572/3, for Englishmen in 1575, separately for Gavin Elliot Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and John Turnbull of Minto in 1576 and for others in 1577. In the period 1568–72 he held the benefice of the parsonage and vicarage of Southdean. He was still 'younger of Bane Jedburgh' when listed among the arbitrators for the Elliots in their feud with the Pringles in 1575. In 1576 he witnessed the 'bond of manrent' between several Borderers and Archibald, 8th Earl of Angus; the other witnesses were his father William and Malcolm of Mains. He was also witness at Jedburgh in 1576 to another bond between the Kers of Primsideloch and the Earl of Angus. In 1576/7 he was charged with paying the fine of £1000 for a supporter of John Turnbull of Minto breaking the bond between factions among the Turnbulls and violently attacking a servant. He signed an agreement with Rutherfords and Turnbulls in 1578, annulling all former bonds and swearing allegiance to the Crown. Also in about 1578 he was involved in a bond between the Kers and Rutherfords. In 1578/9 there is mention at the Privy Council of an agreement to stop a feud between him (along with several Rutherfords and Turnbull of Bedrule) and the Kers of Cessford; there was also separately a feud between him and Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. He was still 'younger' in 1580 when named in a transaction in Selkirk. In 1580 Archibald, Earl of Angus, made a promise to the Privy Council on his behalf for the behaviour of the men of Teviotdale. In 1581 he was among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes and also listed among Border Lairds who denounced their bonds with Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. He was still 'younger' on a list of men charged to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4 and on a bond of support for the Warden, Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, about the same time. In 1586 he and William of Cavers were cautioners for the Turnbulls of Bedrule. In 1587 Archibald, Earl of Angus, acted as cautioner for him, when he was still 'younger'. He was a Commissioner appointed by Parliament in about 1588. Also in 1589 he was fined for not re-entering Wat Turnbull of Bedrule into ward in Edinburgh Castle. In 1589/90 he was listed as one of the leaders in Roxburghshire charged with seeing that people subscribed to the Confessions of Faith. He is listed among Lairds who appeared before the Privy Council in 1591 to promise to support the Warden of the Middle March. In 1591/2 he acted as surety for Andrew of Timpendean and in 1592 William Stewart of Traquair was surety for both him and Andrew of Timpendean. He was probably the Laird referred to in 1597 in an English letter listing Scotsmen who had reset English fugitives. He is probably the 'Laird of Bungeddard' in 1598 who was wounded when a group of Scotsmen out hunting were attacked by a larger English group, with his servant Robert Pringle killed and his son taken prisoner. He signed a bond among Border Lairds in 1602, for keeping the King's peace. He is probably the George who was named as a Commissioner for keeping peace in Roxburghshire in 1610 and may have been the Laird of Bonjedward from whom 10 cows were stolen in 1611. He married Margaret Stewart of Traquair in 1573. He appears to have been succeeded by William, presumably his son. He may also have been the father of Hugh and Hobbe (recorded in 1540/1, unless that was an earlier generation). George (16th C.) Sheriff Clerk of Roxburghshire, referred to in a case of 1601 as having been deceased for several years. Robert Turnbull took over the office after his death. He is probably the 'Maister George Dowglas, notar publict' who witnessed the 1568/9 bond between the Scotts and Kers, signed in Melrose. He is also probably the same 'Magistrum Georgium Dowglas clericum vicecomitis' and notary public for the brief of 1569 where Grizel Borthwick inherited the syperiority of Wilton Green, Wiltonburn and Overhall. George 'Pealman' (16th C.) recorded in Swinside in 1578/9. He is listed in 1586/7 being 'callit Peilman, in Swinsyde', among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He is also recorded as 'Pealman' in 1590, along with Thomas and Thomas Ainslie of Swinside, when they were accused of a raid into England 3 years previously. It is unclear what his nickname meant or how he was related to other Douglases. George (d.c.1597) obtained a gift of the parsonage and vicarage of Kirkton from James VI in 1567/8, following the death of William Cranston. He is also recorded as Reader there in 1575, when William Auchmowtie was Minister for several parishes. In 1576 he was 'non-resident' and an unnamed Reader was paid the Rectory and Vicarage revenues. He is probably the 'Mr George dowglass' who was an executor for the will of William Douglas in Crook in 1581. He was also mentioned as Minister in 1585. He is recorded as deceased in late 1597 when the parsonage and vicarage was given to John Douglas. He is clearly distinct from the slightly later minister of the same name of Southdean and Hobkirk, although it is not impossible they were related. George (16th C.) recorded in 1595 as 'servant to the Laird of Cessfurde'. His son Andrew was among a group of schoolboys who were imprisoned in Edinburgh Tolbooth for being part of the 'Royal High School Riot' of 1595. It seemsi likely he was the same man as another George. George (16th C.) son of William in Crook. In 1581 his father bequeathed to him 'the acre of land callit knopperis know'. He seems to be distinct from the George who was minister of Kirkton. Rev. George (c.1579–1609) local minister. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1599. He held the vicarage of Hobkirk from 1602, then was presented to Southdean by William Earl of Angus in 1607 and translated to Hobkirk in 1608; however, it is unclear for what period he held these simultaneously. He also had the intake from the lands 'callit the Vicarie-Hill' probably in Hobkirk. George of Friarshaw (d.c.1623) said to have been son of William and brother of John in some genealogies. However, he may instead have been the George, son of Andrew in Friarshaw recorded in 1592 when the pair had a charter from Melrose Abbey for the lands of Friarshaw (in Lilliesleaf Parish). He was said to be the 3rd Douglas Laird of Friarshaw and to have succeeded in 1603. He is recorded in 1610 as 'George Dowglas of Freirschau' when he was part of an inquest into lands in Rulewater. He is probably the George 'called of Freirschaw in Lillisleif' who in 1616 was accused of attacking William Allan in Lilliesleaf, his wife Janet Henderson and clerk Gilbert Watt, and of harassing the tenants of Riddells of Riddell and Woodhouse; his accomplices were his brothers William and Robert and William's son Robert and not appearing he was to be denounced as a rebel. In 1617 he and George in Lilliesleaf complained about attacks on their houses at Lilliesleaf and Friarshaw by John Rutherford 'Provost's Jock', James Middlemas (brother of William Middlemas of Lilliesleaf) and Patrick Brotherstanes. In 1618 he and his son Andrew complained about attacks on them and their lands by Andrew Riddell of that Ilk, Andrew Riddell of Lilliesleaf and Simon Riddell of Riddell Mill. Specifically it was claimed that: the Riddells put about 500 sheep on a field of their wheat, keeping them there for 8 nights; the Laird of Riddell attacked him and his son when they approached him at the Parish Kirk, calling them 'notorious and commoun thevis', pursuing them 'with a drawne quhinyear [whinger], shoiring and avowing with mony horrible aithis that he sould haif tayne the said Georg lyfee as he tooke my brotheris', and being stopped by others gathered in the kirkyard; and their farmers called Hill and Smail had their ploughshares removed so that they could not plough. It is unclear if the claim that one of his brothers had been murdered by the Riddells was true. In 1576 he married Margaret, daughter of Hugh Middlemas in Midlem and was succeeded by their son Andrew. In 1615, he secondly married, Agnes, daughter of John Douglas, Provost of Haddington. In 1619 he and Agnes complained about non-payment by a flesher in Selkirk; his son Andrew represented him in court. The year of his death is unclear, since he appears to have been listed in 1628 among the major landowners of Roxburghshire who met to elect M.Ps. George (16th/17th C.) tenant in Lilliesleaf. In 1617 he and George of Friarshaw complained about attacks on their houses at Lilliesleaf and Friarshaw by John Rutherford 'Provost's Jock', James Middlemas (brother of William Middlemas of Lilliesleaf) and Patrick Brotherstanes. This was part of an series of incidents and complaints between the Douglases, Middlemases and Riddell. He was probably a close relative of George of Friarshaw. George (16th/17th C.) servant of William Turnbull, younger of Bedrule. In 1619, with William Turnbull and his son Thomas Turnbull, there was a declaration to capture them, having been denounced as rebels in 1616 for carrying guns. George of Bonjedward (d.1682) probably son of William. His sister Mary married John Douglas of Timpendean. He may be the 'appeirand of Bonjedburgh' who was appointed as a new Commissioner for the Middle Shires in 1618. In 1631 he was recorded as 'appearand of Bonjedburgh sheriff of Teviotdale'. In 1632 he made a discharge of 20,000 merks to Sir Patrick Murray of Elibank. In 1636 he had a tack for mills in Jedburgh. He signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638. In 1642 he was named to a commission to try a large number of Borderers who had been declared fugitives. He is probably the George of Bonjedward mentioned in 2 Parliamentary documents in 1643 and he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in that year. In 1643 his estate was valued at about £5000; this included the Town, Mains and Mill of Bonjedward, the 'Herd's House', the Mains of 'Tour' and lands in Ulston and associated teinds, as well as Philogar in Hownam Parish and Cunzierton in Oxnam Parish. Also in 1643 he made arrangements to provide for his sister Mary, who had become widowed. The tutors of his children are mentioned in 1658. He is recorded in a deed of 1665 obtaining the teinds on Bonjedward from the Earl of Lothian. He was also recorded in bonds in 1673. He paid tax on his estate valued at £4000 in 1678. In 1678 he was 'fined 27,500 merks for irregularities' and was George 'of Bonjedburgh' when fined 6,000 pounds Scots in about 1680 for being a Covenanter. He married Christian, daughter of Sir Patrick Murray of Elibank; she was recorded as 'Lady Bonjedburgh' in 1641 and again in about 1677. Their children included: George, who succeeded; John; Alexander; and Henry. Elspeth (b.1668), baptised in Jedburgh, son of 'Laird Bonjedburgh Dowglas' and Walter (b.1674), who was baptised in Jedburgh, son of the 'Laird of Bonjewart' were probably his children. George of Bonjedward (d.1695) son of George. He was mentioned in 1641 in the 'Commission for receiving of the brotherly assistance from the Parliament of England'. He inherited Bonjedward from his father in 1682. He was also served heir to lands in the Barony of Ulston in 1682, which had been owned by his father George and great-great-grandfather William. In 1683 he was fined due to him and his wife not attending their parish church. He was imprisoned in Edinburgh as a Covenanter in 1685, 'having now lien in prison three months, being sickly'. He was probably Laird when 'Boon Jethert his hous' had tax paid on it for 17 hearths (a huge number at that time). He was succeeded by William, presumably his son. Another son was probably Gilbert, 'brother-german to the Laird of Beansedbrugh', who became an apprentice to John 'Weier', wigmaker in Edinburgh in 1699. His will is recorded in Peebles Commissariot in 1695. George (17th/18th C.) described as 'in Whitfield' in 1705 when he leased Todshaw from Gideon Scott of Highchester for 11 years. He had already been a tenant when the lands were owned by Langlands of that Ilk and left a year after the farm changed hands (so perhaps braking his lease in about 1706). It is possible he was the George whose son William was baptised in Wilton in 1707. In his 1764 evidence regarding the division of Wilton Common, Robert Scott of Coldhouse described him as a relation of his, who had impounded horses that he found grazing on the 'head-room of Whitfield' when he was tenant there. George of Friarshaw (1673–1753) son of Henry and Martha Lockhart, he became 7th Laird in 1701. In 1701 his servant George Reth was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Glasgow (gratis). In 1707 he became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh in right of his father. He was an advocate based in Edinburgh and was His Majesty's Solicitor for Tythes in Scotland. In 1717 his servant Margaret Ker married Robert Bunyan (son to Thomas Bunyam mason in Cavers Parish) in Edinburgh. In 1747 he matriculated arms, these being the arms of Douglas of Cavers with minor differences. In 1702 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Patrick Scott of Ancrum. Their children included: Henry (1703–78), who succeeded to Friarshaw, but had no male heirs; Sir James of Springwood (b.1704), who was a Rear Admiral and succeeded his brother; Margaret (1706–41), who died unmarried; Peter (1714–35); Agnes (b.1720), who married Col. Robert Scott of Horsleyhill; Andrew (1725–72); Elizabeth (1726–51), who also died unmarried; Robert (b.1727), who was a Lieut.-Gen.; Jean (1729–58), who married John Patoun of Inveresk; and 11 other children who died young, including Joan (b.1713), who was baptised in Ancrum. The witnesses in 1703 were Sir John Scott of Ancrum (his brother-in-law), Sir Gilbert Elliot of Headshaw and George Baillie of Jerviswood and the witnesses in 1704 included his brother Andrew, Sir Patrick Scott of Ancrum (his father-in-law), Sir Gilbert Elliot of Headshaw (by then of Minto) and Archibald Douglas of Cavers. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included Bessie (b.1712), Margaret (b.1720) and George (b.1722). George of Bonjedward (d.c.1750) son of William. He probably sold part of the family lands to Thomas Rutherford of Edgerston in the period 1710–15. The rest may have been sold by his creditors, Lord Cranston, Lord Cassilis, the Master of Ross and Mr. Wauchope in the 1730s and 40s. He is probably the Douglas of Bonjedward who witnessed a marriage in Melrose in 1711. He was on a list of prominent local lairds in 1713. His lands were valued at £1533 6s 8d in the 1740s. He was succeeded by his son John in 1754 and may also have had a daughter, Christian, who was mentioned to be included on the charity roll after his death. George (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included Gilbert (b.1736), Bessie (b.1738) and John (b.1744). Prhaps the same George had a son James (b.1740) baptised in Cavers and a son Gilbert (b.1749), baptised in Kirkton. George (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. He married Janet Douglas and their son John was baptised in 1781. George of Cavers (1754–1814) eldest son of Andrew, merchant of London and grandson of Thomas, who was the 5th son of Sir William of Cavers. He was christened at St. Martin in the Fields, Westminster. He became the 18th Laird of Cavers on the death of his father's cousin Capt. John in 1786 (some accounts of an intervening Thomas seem confused). He was previously a paymaster for the Royal Navy. His younger brother Archibald inherited the lands of Adderstone and Midshiels; however, he was also listed on the 1787 tax roll as being 'of Midsheels', where he employed 4 male servants. In 1788 his lands in Cavers Parish were valued at £7350, including lands previously owned by Lord Cranston, William Douglas, Turnbull of Toor, Lady Symington and William McGill. As well as Cavers estate, in 1788 he was listed as owner of Kirkton, Effledge, Whitriggs and East Middle in Kirkton Parish (valued at £1480), Haughhead (in Hawick, which was listed as formerly part of Scott of Horsleyhill's lands of Weensland) and Cunzierton and Harcarse in Oxnam Parish. He was probably the Laird of Cavers who subscribed to John Learmont's book of poetry in 1791. He paid tax on 3–5 female servants in the period 1786–91, 4–5 male servants in 1786–93, 6 in 1794 and 5 in 1797 (in 1788 his servants were entered elsewhere). He was also taxed for owning a carriage in the years 1786–98, and for having 7 carriage horses in 1786 and 3 in 1787. In 1788 all his horse tax was recorded in Lothian, then he had 4 carriage horses 1789–94. Also in 1797 he is recorded as owner of 6 farm horses at Cavers on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, as well as 5 carriage or saddle horses. Additionally he was taxed for having 4 non-working dogs in 1797. In 1788 he was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire and was described at this time as having 'a good estate' and 'inclined to Opposition'. In 1797 he exchanged his lands at Denholm Haugh with those of the Duke of Roxburghe at Hassendeanbank. He was a keen Mason, being Provincial Grand Master from 1801 until his death. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805. In 1808 he famously rode to the top of Ruberslaw in a coach-and-four, to meet the Laird of Wells to settle a boundary issue over dinner. In 1811 he became a member of the Caledonian Horticultural Society. Also in about 1811 he was listed as owner of the Barony of Cavers (valued at £7250) in the Land Tax Rolls, and the part of Weensland called Haughhead, as well as Kirkton, Effledge, Whitriggs and East Middle. In 1812 he petitioned, along with his trustee Archibald Tod of Drygrange for exemption on the land-tax on Cavers estate. He married Lady Grace Stewart (also known as Jane Stuart), daughter of Francis, 8th Earl of Moray, in Edinburgh in 1789, and she died in 1846. Their children were: James (b.1790), who succeeded; Jane (b.1793); Francis James (1796–1821), a Lieutenant in the Coldstream Guards; and Jane (again, d.1809), who died unmarried. Sir George of Friarshaw and Springwood (1754–1821) son of Adm. Sir James of Friarshaw. He was the second Baronet. He was a Captain in the 25th Regiment of Foot and also commanded the Kelso Volunteers. He sold off Friarshaw in 1788, the year after he succeeded. He is probably the Sir George who owned the lands of Longnewton in 1788, as well as other lands in Ancrum Parish. He was taxed from 1791 for having a housekeeper and 3 male servants at Springwood and 4 female servants in London. In the period 1789–98 he was taxed for owning a carriage and horses. In 1784 he became M.P. for Roxburghshire, retaining his seat until 1806. He served as a Deputy-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire in at least 1797–1801. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811; he paid the land tax in 1811 for lands in Ancrum Parish, Roxburgh Parish and elsewhere. He was still listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819 (although deceased by then). In 1786 he married Elizabeth (d.1801), daughter of John Boyle, Earl of Glasgow (who was the niece of his step-mother). His children were: Elizabeth Georgina (d.1795); Helen (d.1791); and Sir John James, who succeeded. George (b.c.1780) cottar in Southdean Parish, living at Chesters in 1841. His wife's name was Margaret. George (b.c.1780) resident of Southfield in Hawick Parish according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. George (18th/19th C.) tenant at Belses Mill, recorded on Pigot's 1825/6 directory. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish whose daughter Betty was baptised in 1818. George (b.1789/90) gamekeeper in Newcastleton. He was listed as a labourer in Newcastleton among heads of households in 1835, and was listed as a 'game watcher' from 1836. He was living at around 11 North Hermitage Street in 1841 and was 'Wood Man' at Greens in 1861. He married Margaret Ingles and their children included: John (b.1819); John (b.1821); James (b.1824); Margaret (b.1827); Elizabeth (or 'Betty', b.1829); Janet (b.1831); Jessie (b.1832); and Agnes Armstrong (b.1835). He could be the 'G. Douglas, Castleton' who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. George (19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Isabel Ferguson and their son James was baptised in 1834. George (19th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His son James was baptised in 1839. George (b.1810/1) farm servant at Bairnkine in Southdean Parish in 1851. He was unmaried at that time. George (19th C.) sawyer in Hobkirk Parish. In 1841 he was at Doveshaugh Braehead. He married Helen White and their children included James (b.1839), Margaret (b.1842) and Jessie (b.1844). George (b.1814/5) from Edinburgh, he was a railway guard in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on Wilton Place. His wife was Ann and their children included Helen, Ann and Margaret. Capt. George of Timpendean (1819–65) son of William, he was the 12th and last Laird to hold the family lands. He sold the estate in 1843 to the Marquess of Lothian. When stationed in the Channel Islands he was accused by a local farmer of killing a bullock, exonerated in the civil court, but found guilty by court martial. He was Chief Commissioner of Western Gold District in Australia. He married Mary Beevor Carver. Their children included: Emma (b.c.1844); and Sholto George (b.c.1846), who died aged 13. He died at Bathurst, New South Wales. His brother Henry Sholto succeeded as head of the Timpendean line. George (b.1818/9) born in Minto Parish, he was miller at Roxburgh Mill in 1861. His wife was Agnes and their children included John, George, James, Elizabeth and Henry. George (1825–94) born in Ashkirk of humble stock, youngest of 3 sons of John and Mary Hood. His family emigrated to Canada in 1832 after his father's failing fortunes as a miller. After trying a succession of jobs he became a Methodist, and eventually became President of the Wesleyan Theological College of Montreal. He was made LL. D. by McGill University in 1869. He married Maria Bolton Pearson in 1855 and they had 4 daughters. Sir George Henry Scott see Sir George Henry Scott-Douglas George (1840/1–1913) farmer in Oxnam Parish. He became tenant at Ruletownhead in the late 1800s when Tom Brown retired from farming. He later held several separate farms, including Hindhope, Plenderleith and Mainside, plus Campvale in Northumberland. He married Isabella (1842/3–1907), daughter of Andrew Turnbull, farmer at Redlees in Northumberland. His children included: Andrew (b.1865), who farmed Riccalton, Doorpool, Philogar and Saughtree; Mary (b.1867); Thomas (b.1869), who took over at Ruletownhead; John (b.1870); Alice (b.1872); and John (again, b.1874). He hunted with the Jedforest Hounds. He and his wife are buried at Oxnam. Sir George Brisbane Scott (1856–1935) poet, writer and critic, born in Gibraltar, but with a long connection to Kelso, where he lived at Springwood Park (and descended from the Douglases of Cavers through the Friarshaw branch). He was son of Sir George Henry Scott-Douglas and inherited the family estates after his elder brother had died in the Zulu wars. He was also the 4th Baronet of Friarshaw. He was a Justice of the Peace and Deputy-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire. He was also a member of the Jedforest Club. He wrote a novel 'Caerlenrig', serialised in the Border Magazine in 1896/7, 'History of the border counties, Roxburgh, Selkirk, Peebles' (1899), and edited many books of Scottish poetry, fairy tales, etc., e.g. 'Scottish Fairy and Folk Tales' (1894, 2000). He helped manage the 'Scott Bequest Fund' in the latter part of the 19th century, which was used for educational and charitable purposes in Hawick and Wilton Parishes. He never married and was succeeded by his nephew Sir James who squandered the family fortunes. Rev. G.H. (19th/20th C.) from East Bank congregation in Hawick, he was ordained as minister of Patna in Ayrshire. Probably the same man was Presbyterian minister in Singapore, retiring in 1929. Sir Henry of Lugton and Lochleven (c.1340–96) son of Sir John of Lothian and nephew of Sir William, 'the Flower of Chivalry'. In 1377 his relative Sir Alan Stewart of Ochiltree (in Ayrshire) granted him the Barony of Langnewton. In 1383 he had a grant from King Robert of the customs of Haddington and in 1393 he received the Barony of Lugton in Midlothian and the castle and lands of Lochleven in Kinross. In 1390 he had a further charter from King Robert II for the lands of Langnewton. In 1392 William Cochrane resigned 2 tenements in Langnewton to him. He married Marjory, daughter of Sir Walter Stewart of Ralston and their children included: Margaret, who married Sir John Wallace of Craigie; Sir William of Lochleven; and Helen, daughter of Walter Hamilton of Darngaber. Henry (15th/16th C.) recorded in Oxnam Mains in 1502. Along with his brother Robert, he had remission for stealing cattle from William Colville, with Ralph Ker of Primsideloch as their surety. Henry (15th/16th C.) brother of George in Swinside. In 1502, along with his other brothers Adam, Robert and Simon, he had remission for several crimes. This included kidnapping William Colville of Ravenscraig, Robert Boyd and John Kennedy and holding them for ransom in 'Leven', as well as destroying 3 horses from the same men, stealing a sword, a shield and a purse from them and planning to murder William Colville of Ochiltree. Ralph Ker of Primsideloch was their surety. Also in 1502, along with his brother Robert, he separately had remission for stealing cattle from William Colville from Sunlaws, as well as occupying his lands of 'farnesyd'. Henry (17th C.) son of William and grandson of Andrew of Friarshaw. He was 'in Nether Priestoun' in 1665. In 1680 he was 'Old Henry' when recorded along with his brothers George and William. His sons were: William of Nether Prieston; and George of Burlands, Crofts and other lands in Midlem. Henry of Friarshaw and Belses (d.1701) son of Andrew and Jean Home of Polwarth. He was said to be 6th Laird of Friarshaw and also held the Lordship of 'Belches' called Pinnacle and 'Burlands'. He was a writer in Edinburgh; in 1678 he became a Burgess and Guild Brother there, in right of his father-in-law. In 1698 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1700 he was listed in a tax document for the Lordship of Melrose. He married Martha, only child of Samuel Lockhart of Castlehill in 1672. His children included: George (b.1673), who succeeded, with the witnesses to his baptism in Edinburgh being advocate George Lockhart, John Lockhart of Castlehill, merchant James Inglis and writer James Galbraith; James (1674–1757), whose son James was M.P. for Malmesbury; Thomas (1676–1730), a Colonel in the Army; Sarah (b.1678); Henry (b.1679), who died young; Martha, who married John Murray of Corstorphine; Elizabeth (b.1681); Samuel (b.1682); Henry (1684–1753), who had a plantation on Antigua; Andrew (d.1732), who in 1704 witnessed a baptism for his brother George and died in India; William (d.1741) Commander of H.M.S. 'Falmouth', who lived at Chiselhurst, Kent; and Jean, who married a Fordice.

Richard was recorded as 'fifth son to umq. Hneyr Douglas of Friershaw (west of Greyfriar's Churchyard) when he became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1707. Henry of Friarshaw (1703–78) son and heir of George of Friarshaw, he became 8th Laird in 1755. He also held the lands of Pinnacle as well as lands in Langlands. He was recorded (incorrectly as 'of Triershaw') as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He left a daughter Mary, who married Sir James Cockburn and died in 1766. Maj. Henry George Sholto of Moorlands (1820–1892) son of Maj.-Gen. William. He succeeded his brother Maj. George as 13th Douglas of Timpendean, although the family estate had been sold by then. He was a Deputy Leiutenant of Leicestershire and held the Lordship of Fowlmere Manor. He married Mary Mitchell and had 13 children, including Lt.-Col. Henry Mitchell Sholto, who succeeded as head of the family line. Lt.-Col. Henry Mitchell Sholto (1847–1931) son of Henry Sholto. He married Georgina Ethel Gilbard and was succeeded by their son Maj. Henry James Sholto. Maj. Henry James Sholto (b.1903) son of Lt. Col. Henry Mitchell Sholto. He was the great-grandson of Maj.-Gen. William of Bonjedward and Tmipendean. He matriculated arms in 1952 as the representative of Douglas of Timpendean. He married Cynthia Armorel Emily Fyers and their son James Alastair Sholto was born in 1939. Henry Scott (1935–), M.B.E., local farmer and official Common-Riding Song Singer 1985–1999. He was born at Catslackburn in Yarrow and attended school at Yarrow and Philiphaugh, and then attended Hawick High School when his father moved to Craik. They then moved to Hyndlee and finally Howahill (near Bonchester) in 1949, where he took over and farmed for about 50 years. He was Acting Father in 1978 and has been involved in many other aspects of the Common Riding. He was President of each of the Callants' Club, the Ancient Order of Mosstroopers and the 1514 Club. He also long represented the Uppies in the Hobkirk Baa and threw up a single baa to uphold the tradition in 2021. He sings regularly in the Borders and beyond and has released 2 tapes, 'Singing for Fun' in 1988 and 'The Border Way' in 1998, which include some of his own compositions. He has been particularly well known for his rugby-related songs. He sings 'The Lasie That Works In The Mill' on the 2006 CD 'Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry', having partly adapted the more minimal tune sung by Walter Peden. He chaired the Callants' Club subcommittee which brought out the 2001 edition of 'The Hawick Songs'. His 'Hosie's Whistle' features on 'Sounds of the Borders' (2012). His son John was Cornet in 1989 and his daughter Jill was Chief Guest in 2002. He himself was the 'quincentenary' Chief Guest in 2014. He was awarded an M.B.E. for services to the community of Bonchester in 2014. Hugh (d.c.1274) eldest son of William, Lord of Douglas. It was said that some neighbours in Douglasdale tried to ambush him, but he turned the tables on them and inflicted severe punishment on the Purdies there. He married Marjorie, sister of Sir Hugh Abernethy (and probably daughter of Sir Patrick); the marriage contract of 1259 is the earliest surviving charter of the Douglases and mentions lands of Chamberlain Newton within the dowry. It is unclear whether or not he survived his father, but the succession of the family was taken up by his brother William 'the Hardy'. Hugh 'the Dull' (1294–c.1345) Lord of Douglas, he was 2nd son of William 'the Hardy' and younger brother of Sir James 'the Good'. He was taken prisoner by the English in 1296, when he was just 2 years old. In 1325 he is recorded as a Canon of Glasgow and Priest of Old Roxburgh and in 1329 witnessed a confirming charter relating to the Church at Roxburgh. He succeeded to the Douglas titles in 1333 after the death of his brother Sir Archibald and then his nephew William, Lord Douglas. He probably fled to France during the time that England controlled southern Scotland. In 1342 he resigned his estates and titles (including the Lordship of Jedforest and Selkirk Forest, and several Baronies, such as Bedrule, Eskdale and Westerkirk) into the King's hands, to be regranted to his nephew William of Lothian, who became 1st Earl Douglas. He then appears to have retired into life as a priest; however, he was probably dead by 1345, when Edward III bestowed Old Roxburgh on someone else. His nickname probably came from his unassuming lifestyle. Hugh (c.1429–55) 4th son of James 'the Gross', his older brothers were William, 8th Earl of Douglas, James, 9th Earl and Archibald, Earl of Moray. He was created Earl of Ormond in 1445 and held lands in Moray, Aberdeenshire and Lanarkshire. In 1449 he led an expedition against the Percys near Gretna, known as either the Battle of Sark or the Battle of Lochmabenstane, with a large number of Englishmen drowning in the Sark estuary and the Earl of Percy being taken prisoner. He may have taken charge of the main Douglas estates when his brother William was in Rome in 1450. He was made Sheriff of Lanark in 1454. In 1455 he took part with his other brothers in the Douglas revolt against the King, culminating in the Battle of Arkinholm, where he was captured and later beheaded in Edinburgh. His wife's name is unknown, but they had a son, also Hugh, who was Dean of Brechin. Hugh (b.c.1431) recorded as Prebendary of Hawick in 1460. He was also Rector of Carnismule (or Kirkymur) in Whithorn, Treasurer of Glasgow, Canon of Aberdeen, Brechin and Bothwell and held the prebends of Kincardine and Guthrie. He was Treasurer of Glasgow from about 1457 until at least 1460. These were clearly financial and titular positions, and he is unlikely to have ever set foot in Hawick. He held the office through its connection with the Collegiate Church of Bothwell, and the patronage of the Douglases. He was nephew of James, Bishop of St. Andrews and directly related to King James II. He was probably a younger son of William, 2nd Earl of Angus. Hugh (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as 'Hew of Douglace' when, along with 'Rinzeane of Rutherfurde' he took George Young from Minto, for whom Walter Scott of Buccleuch acted as surety. He could be the same 'Hugonin Dowglas' who was one of the bailies appointed by Patrick, Earl of Bothwel for the 1500 sasine giving Grahamslaw to Walter Scott of Branxholme. He could be the same man as Hugh, Dean of Brechin, who in 1493 had an indenture with Archibald, 5th Earl of Angus (his cousin) over the lands of Avendale and in 1496 had another indenture over lands that included Gledstains in Lanarkshire. Hugh (d.c.1547) murdered, according to accusations at least, by Gavin Elliot in Horsleyhill and his sons Robert, William and Andrew. It is unclear to which branch of the Douglases he belonged. Hugh (16th C.) recorded in 1558/9 as 'Magsitro Hugone Dowglas', when he was Rector of 'Sowdoun' and Chamberlain of Melrose Abbey. He was still in possession of Southdean in 1563. He may have been related to George of Bonjedward, who held the fruits of the rectory of Southdean from 1566. Hugh (17th C.) recorded as 'Hew Douglas' residing at Blackleemouth in Hobkirk Parish when he witnessed a sasine in 1637. Hugh (b.1825) probably son of James and Mina Henderson. He was a flour miller in Rulewater who later became a warehouseman. He married Agnes, daughter of William Laidlaw. Their daughter Mary married Police Judge James McMorren. Isabel Countess of Mar (1360–1408) daughter of Margaret, Countess of Mar, and William, 1st Earl of Douglas. She was also known as 'Isabella'. She inherited several of the Mar titles (including Cavers) when her brother Sir James was killed at Otterburn in 1388 and she succeeded to the Earldom of Mar on the death of her mother in 1390. She granted the lands of Cavers to her (illegitimate) nephew, Archibald Douglas, but the confirmation of Robert III was not obtained, and the lands were 'recognosed' to the King. According to a ratification of 1397 the lands of Cavers were given by James Sandilands (the King's brother-in-law) to George Douglas, Earl of Angus (her half-brother and the King's son-in-law). However, she outlived both Sandilands and the Earl of Angus, and the lands may have returned to her. In 1405 Robert III granted Cavers and the Sheriffdom of Roxburgh to Sir David Fleming, who was killed a few months later. In 1412 her charter was confirmed by James I and her nephew Archibald finally succeeded to become 1st of Cavers. In a similar way her lands of Drumlanrig went to her other nephew, Sir William, 1st of Drumlanrig. And in 1404 she granted the lands of Bonjedward to her (half) sister Margaret, who became the 1st Laird there. She firstly married Sir Malcolm Drummond, brother-in-law of Robert III. She secondly married Alexander Stewart, son of the 'Wolf of Badenoch' (brother of Robert III) and in 1404 granted to him and his heirs the Earldom of Mar; however, he would die without heirs, leading to a later dispute over the Mar lands and titles (which meant that there were 2 separtate Earls of Mar for some time). Her seal bore an image of a lady holding the Douglas and Marr shields. Isabel (15th/16th C.) wife of John Scott of Roberton. It is unclear which branch of the Douglases she came from. In 1532/3 there was a process started in Selkirk to decide on the succession for her husband's lands to their son Walter. Her procurator, Stephen Scott, protested that any sasines for Walter should included her rights to certain lands during her lifetime. Isabella (1630–73) daughter of William, 7th Earl of Morton. She married James Graham, 2nd Marquess of Montrose. Her husband died in 1669 and in the following year she purchased the Glasgow house of the Stewarts of Minto from Sir Ludovic Stewart. Isobel see Isobel Scott. J. (18th/19th C.) resident of Stonedge in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border'. Sir James of Lothian or 'Laudoun' (d.c.1330) probably son of William of Midlothian. His wife was called Joan and he had at least 6 children: William, who was illegitimate; Sir William of Liddesdale, 'the Flower of Chivalry'; Sir John, ancestor of the Earls of Morton; James (d.1335); Elizabeth, who married Sir Thomas Somerville; and probably Joanna, who married Hugh Gifford of Yester. Sir James Lord of Douglas (c.1286–1330) known variously as 'The Good' or 'The Good Sir James', 'The Black Douglas' and 'The Brave Douglas'. He was son of Sir William 'le Hardi', his mother being Elizabeth Stewart. He was brother of Sir Archibald of Liddesdale and Cavers. He fought alongside King Robert the Bruce and after the death of John Comyn (in 1305/6), who was branded a traitor, Bruce gave him all of Comyn's lands, which included the Barony of 'Bethocroul', i.e. Bedrule. He recaptured Roxburgh Castle, 1314, apparently disguising his men as oxen. He commanded the left wing at Bannockburn, probably including thousands of Borderers. After the battle he chased the young Edward II and his men all the way to Dunbar Castle, where he escaped to England by ship. He was believed by the English to have almost supernatural power. In 1315/6 he witnessed the granting of part of Philiphaugh and the office of Constable of Selkirk to William Turnbull (and jointly to William Barbour). In 1316 he killed Edmond of Caillou of Bordeaux, English Governor of Berwick, after a foray into Teviotdale. He was also involved with some other engagements with the English around Berwick in 1316. And in 1317 he ambushed an English force near Lintalee, using birch branches woven together to prevent escape; a wreath of stakes was added to his arms in 1325, possibly to commemorate this incident. He was one of the signatories of the Declaration of Arbroath in 1320. In 1320 he was also granted the town, castle and forest of Jedburgh, including the lands of Hassendean, Newland, Lessuden and Alton. He is also recorded being granted (probably around 1320) the lands of 'Sonderland, in the barony of Hawick' and 'Lintonrothbrekis' (this was in 'Robertson's Index', and probably corresponded to Sunderland in Selkirkshire along with lands connected with Lintalee or Linton in Roxburghshire), as well as the forests of Selkirk, Ettrick and Traquair. He witnessed the grant of Bedrule to Sir James Cunningham in 1321. He was made Warden of the West Marches about this time, when the Scottish army went to Ireland. His local residence was at Lintalee. In the Douglas 'Emerald Charter' of 1324 there are many lands listed as being conferred upon him by the King, without some of the usual feudal oblications; this was at least partly in lieu of a large ransom payment that he could have collected for 3 French knights who surrendered to him at the Battle of Biland. These lands included the Barony of Douglas, Forest of Selkirk, Constabulary of Lauder, Forest of Jedburgh, with Bonjedward, Barony of Bedrule, and Baronies of Westerkirk, Staplegordon and Romanno. Other lands were confirmed to him at that time, probably including Cavers, and Ringwood. The grant of Jedburgh and its Castle to him was renewed in 1325. He died in Spain, at the Battle of Teba, while returning the Bruce's heart to the Holy Land. He had 2 children by unknown mothers: William, Lord Douglas, who incorporated the 'bloody heart' into his arms and died at Halidon Hill; and Archibald 'the Grim', who was illegitimate, but later became Earl of Douglas – 'There was a man so dark and true, What Scotland loved so dear, There was a king whose lang will rue, The Scot what fled him here' [T]. Sir James of Dalkeith (c.1330–1420) eldest son of Sir John of Lothian. He was nephew of Sir William, Knight of Liddesdale and succeeded to several of his properties, but not Liddesdale and Hermitage, which went to William, Lord of Douglas. He was one of the Commissioners for the truce arranged with England at Ayton in 1384. He endowed chapels in Dalkeith. In 1404/5 his seal is on the document confirming the attachment of Cavers Kirk to Melrose Abbey. In 1372 he married Agnes, daughter of Sir Patrick Dunbar. He thereby gained the lands of Mordington, Whittinghame, Morton and an estate on the Isle of Man. He secondly married Egidia, daughter of Walter Stewart, half-sister of King Robert II and widow of both Sir James Lindsay of Crawford and Sir Hugh Eglinton. His legitimate children were: Sir James, who succeeded; Sir William; Margaret, who married Philip Arbuthnot of that Ilk; Agnes, who married John Livingstone of Callander; and Jean, who married Sir John Hamilton of Cadzow. He also had 2 illegitimate sons: John of Aberdour; and Sir James of Aberdour. He died in an influenza epidemic. His wills, dated 1390 and 1392, are among the oldest surviving wills in Scotland; these describe many of his personal effects, as well as a stipulation that all the bonds of his uncle, the 'Knight of Liddesdale', should be burned. Sir James (c.1358–88) 2nd Earl of Douglas and of Mar, son of Sir William, the 1st Earl and Margaret, Countess of Mar. In about 1380 his father transferred to him the Lordship of Liddesdale. He was 'domino Vallis de Lydale' in 1382 when witness (along with his father and brother Archibald) to a confirming charter for Sir John of Swinton. He succeeded to all the lands and titles on the death of his father in 1384; this included the extensive Douglas estates in southern Scotland. He owned several local pieces of land, including Cavers estate (although these may have been formally held by his mother Margaret, Countess of Mar in her own right). He witnessed several charters during the reign of Robert II. He and Lord Lindsay had French assistance in mounting raids into England in 1384, and despite a peace treaty with England, he was one of the leaders in a force that invaded England in 1385, again with help from French knights. In 1586 he led a raid on the area around Cockermouth. Sometime in the period 1384–88 he granted his Barony of Drumlanrig to his son William. He had a confirmation of rights in the Barony of Cavers to Melrose Abbey in 1388. Also in 1388 an army assembled at Jedburgh, and part of it, under the Douglas banner, marched into Northumberland. He met with the force of 'Hotspur' Percy at Newcastle and following some skirmishes, he fought the English leader in combat, capturing his pennon, and taunting him to take it back. The forces met at Otterburn, where the Scots were victorious, but not before he was killed. This was recounted in ballads, where 'a dead man won the field', with him supposedly hiding his mortal wounds from his countrymen; the reality is that he probably died right away, although it may be that in the confusion it was not clear until much later that he had been lost. He married Isabella (also known as Eupheme) Stewart (daughter of Robert II), possibly at the age of only 15; they had a son who died in infancy. Since he left no legitimate heirs, he was succeeded by his cousin Archibald 'the Grim', Lord of Galloway. His wife received a third of his lands in Selkirkshire and also kept the Lordship of Liddesdale in her own right after his death; she secondly married Sir John Edmondstone of Dunreath and died in about 1410. His illegitimate sons William and Archibald eventually became heads of the Drumlanrig and Cavers branches, respectively. He also had illegitimate daughters Eleanor (who married Sir William Fraser) and Joan (who married William, 5th Lord Dacre). His sister (also Isabella) may also have inherited some of his lands, becoming Countess of Mar and holding Cavers, Jedburgh Forest, Selkirk, Drumlanrig, etc. He is buried in Melrose, although the location of his tomb is lost. Stories are told of his armour being kept at Cavers House (as well as the stolen Percy banner), but these are merely legends. James 'the Gross' (1371–1443) 7th Earl of Douglas, he was 2nd son of Archibald 'the Grim', 3rd Earl of Douglas and succeeded his great-nephew, William (who was beheaded in 1440). Before becoming Earl of Douglas he was referred to as 'of Balveny' (or 'Balvenie'). His nickname came from his corpulence in old age. In the early 1400s he also served as Warden of the Marches while his brother Archibald was in captivity in England. In 1403 he made a deal with Percy, Earl of Northumberland, but then had his soldier burn Berwick, resulting in a complaint from King Henry. In 1405 he accompanied Sir William of Drumlanrig and others on a safe passage to 'tilt' in England. In 1405/6 he killed Sir David Fleming, who held the lands of Cavers at the time; this arose out of the fact that Isabella Douglas, Countess of Mar, had granted Cavers to her nephew Archibald, but Robert III had instead given the Barony and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to Fleming. In 1427 he was one of the witnesses to the charter granting the Barony of Hawick to William, son of Sir William of Drumlanrig; he is listed there as 'Jacobo de Douglas de Balvany'. In about 1432 he was superior of the Barony of Cavers when the grant of the Kirk to Melrose Abbey was confirmed. In 1432 he witnessed a charter of Sprouston for his nephew, Archibald, 5th Earl of Douglas. He was made Earl of Avondale and Lord Balveny in 1437. In the same year he was appointed Justiciar for the South of Scotland; as such he ruled on a legal dispute regarding the ownership of East Mains in a retour of 1437, siding with the Baron of Hawick, his relative! He succeeded to the Earldom of Douglas when already more than 60 years of age. In 1441 he appeared at a General Council in Edinburgh, the last time he is noted appearing in public. He married Beatrice, daughter of Robert Stewart, Duke of Albany. In about 1425 he secondly married Beatrix Sinclair, daughter of Henry, Earl of Orkney, and with her had 11 children: William, who succeeded as 8th Earl; James, who succeeded his brother as 9th Earl, and was a twin with Archibald; Archibald, who became Earl of Moray, and was killed at the Battle of Arkinholm; Hugh, Earl of Ormond, who was executed after capture at Arkinholm in 1455; Sir John, Lord of Balveny, executed in 1463; Henry, who was a priest; George, who died young; Margaret, who married Sir Henry Douglas of Borg; Beatrice, who married Sir William Hay of Erroll and secondly Arthur Forbes; Janet, who married Robert Fleming, son of Sir David Fleming, who he killed; and Elizabeth, who married William Wallace of Craigie. He was buried at St. Bride's in Douglas. Sir James (c.1372–1441) eldest son of Sir James of Dalkeith. In 1404 he and his son James were among the witnesses at Dalkeith to a confirmation that Melrose Abbey held the patronage of Westerkirk Church. In 1405 he accompanied Sir William of Drumlanrig and others on a safe passage to 'tilt' in England. He was made 1st Lord of Dalkeith, and also held lands of Morton, Mordington, Whittinghame and others. In 1392 he married Elizabeth Stewart, daughter of Robert III (the marriage contract being signed as early as 1371). He secondly married Janet, daughter of Sir William Borthwick of that Ilk; after his death she secondly married Sir George Crichton, Earl of Caithness. His children included: William, who married Margaret, daughter of Sir William Borthwick and widow of William of Abernethy, and predeceased him; James, who succeeded as 2nd Lord Dalkeith, although he was declared insane and had a curator for 19 years; Henry of Borgue, who married Margaret, daughter of James 'the Gross', 7th Earl of Douglas; and William, who became proprietor of Morton and Whittinghame and was progenitor of the Douglases of Whittinghame. James (d.1446/7) 3rd Earl of Angus, eldest son of William, the 2nd Earl. He was served heir to his father in 1437, when perhaps 11 years old. His estates and titles included the Lordship of Jedforest and probably also the Lordship of Liddesdale. In 1439 he was superior for Jed Forest on a document for the Douglases of Bonjedward; he presided over an inquest held at 'Richermuderake', where George was served heir to his father in the lands of Bonjedward, to pay a silver penny annually at his tower of Lintalee. In 1445 he was forced to forfeit lands by the 8th Earl of Douglas, part of the feud between the Red and Black Douglas branches. He was part of a marriage contract in 1440 with Joan, 3rd daughter of James I (who was dumb, and later married James Douglas, 1st Earl of Morton), but it seems that he died before the wedding could take place. He died without issue and was succeeded by his brother George. James (15th C.) part of the panel for the 'retour' of William Douglas inheriting the Barony of Hawick in 1450, done in the presence of Archibald of Cavers. All the panel members were prominent Roxburghshire landowners, but it is unclear who he was exactly. Probably the same James was witness to a charter for William of Cavers (for the lands of Blackpool) in 1450. He may be the same as James, Captain of Drumlanrig, who was the Earl's Bailie, recorded in the 1452 in the sasine for the Barony of Hawick to William of Drumlanrig. James (15th C.) recorded as 'Jacobo de Dowglas' when he was the first witness of the sasine made at Cavers in 1464/5 for Archibald Douglas inheriting the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire. This suggests he was a relative of the new Baron, perhaps an uncle. George was also a witness, so probably related. He may also be the James who was mentioned in 1476 in an action brought by John, Lord Somerville. James (1425–1488) 9th Earl of Douglas, 2nd son of James the 7th Earl, he succeeded his brother William. There was a decree in 1447 (confirmed in 1449/50) that he was older than his twin brother Archibald, based on the sworn statement of their mother. Before that he was known as 'of Heriotmure' and afterwards was Master of Douglas. He was with his brother when they raided Alnwick in 1449. Also in 1449, he fought in combat with French caveliers at the wedding of James II. He went to Rome with his brother William in 1450 and then spend several months in London. The course of his life was changed after the murder (by the King and others) of his elder brother in 1452; he thereby became the 9th Earl of Douglas. He rode into Stirling with his brother Hugh and 600 men, renounced their allegiance to the King and burned much of the town. The King and his men marched to Selkirk and Dumfries to intimidate the vassals of Douglas. He had sassine in 1452 for superiority of the Baronies of Sprouston, Smailholm, Hawick, Bedrule and 'Broundoun'. As superior of the Barony of Hawick, he gave the 'precept of sasine' for the barony for William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1452. The revolt he headed against the King appeared to have ended in late 1452, but resumed in 1454, with the King's force destroying several of his towers, including lands in Ettrick Forest. He himself fled to England with just a few men, leaving his younger brothers to lead their vassals against the royal troops. This came to a head at the Battle of Arkinholm, with the King's men led by their kinsman, George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus; Archibald, Earl of Moray was slain in battle, Hugh, Earl of Ormond was captured and beheaded in Edinburgh and John of Balvany escaped to England (with another brother Henry not being mentioned in the chrinicles). He forfeited his titles in 1455, including Lord Warden of the Marches, which afterwards ceased to be hereditary. In 1461 he and his brother John were sent by the English King to stir up rebellion among the Lords of the Isles, and in 1462 he was sent to reconnoiter the Border for a possible English invasion. His brother John was captured in Ewesdale and he again fled to England, where he was treated well by King Edward. In 1462 his lands in Roxburghshire were granted to George, 4th Earl of Angus, who was also given the Earldom of Douglas. In 1463 the Scotts of Buccleuch received new charters from the Scottish King for assisting on the royal side in the rebellion he led. Although the English King demanded that his lands in Scotland be restored, that never happened. In 1479 he was again near the Border, involved in some English business, and in 1482 he was given a commission to receive Scotsmen who would renounce their country and settle in England. Also in that year, he was part of a treaty involving Alexander Stewart, Duke of Albany and Archibald, 5th Earl of Angus to assist King Edward in the conquest of Scotland. He rode to Lochmaben with Albany in 1484, now an old man, where he was unhorsed and captured. He was then banished to Lindores Abbey, where he died. It ws said that while at Lindores he wrote to his kinsman, Douglas of Cavers, pleading with him not to follow in his footsteps, but to be faithful to the King. In 1453 he married Margaret 'the Fair Maid of Galloway', daughter of Archibald Douglas, the 5th Earl, and widow of his brother William (hence she had been his sister-in-law); this required a dispensation from the Pope. According to tradition, she was killed in a siege of Threave Castle, actually she went to England with her husband, returning in 1459 and in 1460 marrying the King's half-brother, John Stewart, Earl of Atholl. Some time in the period 1461–84 he secondly married Anne, daughter of John Holland, Duke of Exeter, but there was no issue from either marriage. James (15th C.) recorded as deputy to the Sheriff of Roxburghshire, William Douglas, in 1471. He was also listed in regard to extracting fines from the courts of Ettrick Forest in 1471. It is unclear who the William was (probably a Douglas of Cavers, but perhaps William of Cluny); his identity is a mystery, but he may have been a brother of the Laird of Cavers, possibly a younger son of Sir Archibald, 3rd Laird. James (d.1498) 5th Baron of Drumlanrig, and also Baron of Hawick. He was son of Sir William, who he succeeded in 1484. He had a brother, Archibald, who was ancestor of the Cashogle branch. He married Janet (probably eldest) daughter of Sir David Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch, the marriage contract being signed between the fathers in 1470. When he inherited the Drumlanrig and Hawick Baronies, he and his wife already held the demesne lands of East Mains and Kirkton. He is recorded in a document relating to lands in Drumlanrig by Grierson of Kepanoch in 1490. In 1492 he granted the Barony and Castle of Drumlanrig to his son William, retaining the liferent for himself. In 1494 he gave the lands of West Mains and Crumhaugh to his son and heir William. His Bailies appointed for the purposes of this sasine were George, William and James Douglas (probably relatives of some sort) and Gilbert 'M'Cawill'. His children were: William, who succeeded; Gavin; and Janet, who married Roger Grierson of Windiehill and Lag (who died at Flodden). He appears as Baron in a charter of 1502 for Whithope (the dates perhaps being in error). James (15th/16th C.) tenant in Swinside. His brothers Adam and 2 Johns were listed along with him in 1502 when they were convicted and had remission for oppressing Sir William Colville of Ochiltree. Douglases of Bonjedward, Davidsons and the junior Laird of Riddell were also listed. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 being 'in onstoun', which could perhaps be a transcription error for 'Ormiston' or a variant of 'Ulston'. He was among Douglases from Bonjedward and Swinside, as well as Davidsons, who were convicted and had remission for oppressing Sir William Colville of Ochiltree. Sir James (d.1545) 5th (or 6th) of Cavers, son of Sir William, who he succeeded in 1506. In 1508 he had a charter for the churches of Spittal and Caerlenrig. He was already Sheriff of Roxburgh in 1508 in the 'retour' for Adam Hepburn as heir to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell, in the Lordship of Hermitage. In 1509 he received special consideration from the King as his father's heir because of 'the gude and thankful service done to the Kingis hienes ... quhilk deit in defens of his realme and resisting of his inimies of Ingland and rebellis'. This included the lands and Barony of Cavers, with free disposition of his marriage and other rights. He was 'in the King's ward' before this, suggesting he was a minor until 1509. In 1509/10 the lands and Barony of Cavers were 'recognosed' in the King's hands to be regranted; this finally resolved the issue of inheritance that arose a century earlier. In 1511 he had a royal charter of 'novodamus' from James IV, for the town of Cavers, with the lands, castle, manor and mill; the charter lists the lands within the Barony of Cavers at that time. Also in 1511 he resigned his superiority of the lands of Rutherford and Wells, into the King's hands, to be given to Helen Rutherford. In 1512, along with his wife Elizabeth Murray, he had a charter for the lands of 'Zarlside' (presumably Earlside) and 'Pencrise'. He would have been Sheriff of Teviotdale at the time of Hornshole, as well as the earlier Sclaterford skirmish. In 1515 he is recorded as Baron of Hawick giving a charter of Whithope to William Scott, brother of Walter of Branxholme. He was Sheriff in 1517 for the 'retour' of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He was on an inquest for the succession of the lands of John Home in 1523. In 1529 he served as surety that James of Drumlanrig would not attempt to escape from ward in Edinburgh Castle. In 1530 he was one of the Lairds who submitted themselves to the 'King's will' to keep peace on the Border. He is recorded in 1529/30 when William Routledge resigned his half of the lands of Crook to him; the resignation was to 'an honourable man, James Douglas of Caueris, in name and on behalf of Martin Douglas' (whose relationship is unknown). He is recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books in 1534/5 (but mis-transcribed as 'John') as Sheriff of Roxburghshire when he gave sasine for lands in Rutherford. In 1538 he was involved in a dispute with Thomas Ker of Sunderlandhall over the lands of Ashybank. In 1538 he was convicted (along with Kers and Rutherfords) of allowing several rebels to live on their land etc. In 1541 he complained to the Lords of Council that Walter Scott of Branxholme had burned his farm of Whitriggs; 41 of his associates (probably mainly tenants) are listed in the case. Also in 1541 he was involved in a dispute over a sum of money with William 'Familtounne', with William as a witness. In 1537 he married Elizabeth, daughter of John Murray of Falahill, who was probably 'the Outlaw Murray'. His known children are: Sir James, who succeeded; William, 1st Laird of Friarshaw; and Robert of Todholes.

Sir James (d.1558) 6th (or 7th) of Cavers and Sheriff of Teviotdale, son of Sir James and Elizabeth Murray. In 1545 he succeeded his father as Baron of Cavers and Sheriff of Roxburgh, as well as succeeding to the lands of Kirkton Mains in the Barony of Hawick. In late 1545 a Parilamentary decree arranging 500 horsemen to be mustered in Teviotdale stated that 25 of them could be chosen among his followers and friends and captained by either him or his brother. In 1546 he is recorded in a bond along with several other Borderers presenting Elliots of Thorlieshope as prisoners to John Kerr of Ferniehirst. Around 1547 he was among the Border Lairds who paid homage to the Duke of Somerset. In 1550 he granted the lands of Colifort to William Scott. In 1551 he signed the 'Auld Band of Roxburgh', 'with my hand at the pen' (suggesting that he could not write). He was indicted in 1552 for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. In 1553/4 he was Sheriff for the 'retour' of the young Sir Walter Scott as heir to his grandfather. In 1554 he gave a notorial instrument for an acre of land in the Barony of Cavers to Archibald Elliot in Gorrenberry. He married Christian, daughter of Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst, and her testament is recorded in 1581. His children included: Sir William, who succeeded; James, mentioned in 1584/5; and Robert, mentioned in 1585. After his death his wife kept the 'liferent' of Effledge, Cote and Kirkton Mains.

Sir James (1498–1578) 7th Baron of Drumlanrig and also Baron of Hawick, son of William. He re-granted the town its charter in 1537 when he was 39. In 1514 he inherited the Barony of Hawick, with special dispensation from the King because of his age (this would have been shortly after the Hornshole incident). 'Bonds of manrent' to him are recorded in 1518 (with Lord Robert Maxwell), 1526 (involving Ninian Crichton of 'Bellibocht'), 1527 (involving John Menzies of the 'Castalbyll'), 1544/5 (involving Andrew Rorrison of 'Bardanocht'), 1545 (involving John Cunningham of 'Byrkschaw') and 1550 (involving John and George 'Carrydderis of Holmendis'). In 1526 he had a 'respite', along with James Gordon of Lochinvar and 37 of their kinsmen and associates for communing with Alexander Forester (and others dwelling upon 'Levin') and for the murder of Thomas McClellan in Edinburgh. He helped in the attempt to rescue the young James V from his brother-in-law the Earl of Angus in 1526, along with Scott of Branxholme. Also in 1526 he protested that what was done against the Scotts of Howpasley, Allanhaugh and Borthaugh, who all held lands of him, should do him no prejudice. In 1529 he was held in Edinburgh Castle, perhaps under suspicion by the King, with James of Cavers serving as surety that he would not attempt to escape. However he was later engaged by the King in many battles. In 1532 he was accused of treason by Robert Charteris of Amisfield (with the reasons not being recorded) and the challenge was settled in single combat at Holyrood, but ended without injury on either side; in one description of the combat he is described as 'sumquhat sand-blind' (i.e. short-sighted). In 1535 the King revoked several charters relating to the superiority of lands formerly held by the Homes, including Broadlee in the Borthwick valley that had involved him. In 1536/7 he had a gift from the King of all the non-entries, taxes, etc. due from his lands in Dumfriesshire, while they were in the King's hands after his father's death at Flodden; this was confirmed by another grant by Queen Mary in 1541/2 and charters of 1544/5. In 1537 he was witness to a precept for the lands of Ker of Primsideloch. In 1538 he had a marriage contract for his daughter Janet to marry William, son of Archibald in Cashogle (probably a first or second cousin). He was in England in 1541, apparently having been accused as accessory to murder, and having fallen out of favour with the Scottish Crown. He was taken prisoner after the battle of Solway Moss in 1542. In 1542/3 he witnessed the marriage contract between Archibald, 6th Earl of Angus (his brother-in-law) and Margaret, daughter of Robert, Lord Maxwell. In 1543 he joined the Earl of Angus in warlike movements against the Earl of Lennox and others. He also appears to have given his support to the English about that time. In 1543/4 he was charged with the murder of the Rector of Kilbride. In 1545 he was among Border lairds who gave assurance to 'have na intelligence with Ingland' and also among lairds of Teviotdale who signed an assurance to end feuds. He was appointed as a 'justiciary' to apprehend criminals in his area in 1546. He and other Douglases had a 'bond of manrent' with the Earl of Arran in 1546. In 1548 he was granted the ward mad marriages of Janet and Marion, co-heiresses of Simon Carruthers of Mousewald; in 1561 he married off the elder sister, but made her agree to make over her land rights to him, but when he tried to do the same for the younger sister, who insisted on choosing her own husband and retaining her lands, she threw herself off Comolongon Tower and Mousewald was granted to his son Sir William of Hawick. In 1549 his lands at Drumlanrig were plundered by Lord Wharton. An inventory and will was drawn up for him in 1550. In 1551 he was recorded as superior of the lands of Broadlee in the Borthwick. In 1552 he was appointed as one of the Queen's Commissioners to meet the English Commissioners. In 1553 (or perhaps as early as 1550) he was knighted by the Regent, the Duke of Chatelherault and appointed Warden of the Western Marches, with the use of the Castle of Lochmaben during his wardenry. He was continued as Warden according to a Commission of Queen Mary in 1555. In 1556 he accompanied the Earl of Bothwell on expeditions against the Armstrongs. In 1558 there was an agreement between him and Charles Murray of Cockpool to submit to the decision of James, Lord Somerville. In 1559 he infefted his son William as his heir in the lands of Drumlanrig, Sheriffdom of Dumfries and other lands including the Barony of Hawick; this consisted of 'the town of Hawik with mill, lands of Eist Manis, West Manis, Crunach and Kirkton Mannis, Flekkis, Carlinpile, &c., and in tenantry Howpaslet, Chesholme, Quhitechestir, Edgaristoun, &c.'. He was present in Parliament in 1560 when the Confessions of Faith were ratified and in 1561 at Edinburgh Tolbooth he signed the first Book of Discipline of the Convention of Estates. It has been stated that his support for the Protestant cause at that time would have virtually exonerated the people of Hawick from maintaining the lamp before the altar of St. Mary's. In 1563/4 he had a marriage contract between his daughter Janet and William, eldest son of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford. In 1564 he and his son Sir William of Hawick were given remission for associating witn James, Earl of Moray and others. In 1564/5 he witnessed the bond between the Scotts and the Kerrs to end their feud. He was in great favour with Queen Mary being one of the noblemen who remained in Dumfries in 1565 to meet the Queen; however, he acted against her in 1567 when she was captured at Carberry. He was at the Battle of Langside in 1568 (although quite an old man by then), fighting on the side of the Regent Moray (i.e. against the Queen's supporters). In 1569 he served as surety for Archibald Armstrong of Mangerton. He is recorded several times entering accused men before the Privy Council in the years around 1570. He was himself taken prisoner in 1571 by David Spence, Laird of Ormiston, probably on the orders of the government; his son narrowly escaped and not knowing if he was alive or dead he had his captors let him send this letter: 'Willie, Thou sall wit that I am haill and feare. Send me word thairfoir how thou art hwther deid or livand? Gif thou be deid, I doubt not but friendis will let me know the treuth, and gif thou be weid, I desyre na mair'. He visited John Knox on his death bed in 1572. In 1573 he was liable to a fine when the man he was cautioner for failed to appear. Also in 1573 he signed the 'Band of Roxburgh' in 1573. In 1574 he was one of the noblemen appointed to resolve the dispute between the Johnstones and Maxwells. Also in 1574 there was a deed where he agreed to infeft his lands to his grandson James, son of the late

Sir William of Hawick. There is a bond of 1575 relating to offences against him by friends or servants of John Johnstone. Also in 1575 he was 'surety in relief' according to the register of the Privy Council. In 1578 he appended to his will a statement of concern that his grandson and heir should not be influenced by the 'wickit nature' of his mother. Called 'Old Drumlanrig' towards the end of his life, he was succeeded by his grandson Sir James. He is known locally as 'the Generous Donor' because of the 1537 charter (although there is some ambiguity about whether his father is meant and in fact Hawick's first granting of burgh status came from an even earlier Douglas of Drumlanrig). He was responsible for building the 'L-shaped' main part of Drumlanrig's Tower, probably around the 1550s; it is traditionally said that he was born in the Tower in Hawick, but there is no evidence for this. It has also been fancifully suggested that he may have been the one to carry the flag back from Hornshole, but this seems highly unlikely. He firstly married Margaret, daughter of George Douglas, Master of Angus, and sister to Archibald, 6th Earl of Angus. They had at least 3 daughters: Janet, who married Sir William Douglas of Cashogle, and secondly John Charteris of Amisfield (possibly a descendant of the Charteris family of Langlands, and son of the man who had accused him of treason); Margaret, who married John Jardine of Applegirth; and Nicholas, who married John Johnstone of that Ilk. Things did not go well with this marriage, a notorial instrument of 1530 legally recording that he 'required her earnestly to go with him to his place and dwelling of Dumlanrig, and adhere to him as spouse ought to spouse', which she had previously refused to do. The couple divorced, and they were still arguing in court about the financial settlement in 1539. He secondly married Christian, daughter of John Montgomery, Master of Eglinton, and sister of the 2nd Earl of Eglinton; her testament is recorded in Edinburgh in 1581. In 1540 he resigned his lands of Drumlanrig and others into the hands of his superior, in order to regrant them to his heirs and to his wife Christain Montgomery 'in liferent'. In about 1540 the couple had a letter of dispensation from a Cardinal in Rome, allowing them to marry, although they were 'within the simple third and quadruple fourth degrees of affinity'. With her he had 1 son, Sir William of Hawick (who predeceased him), along with 4 daughters: Margaret, who married 3 times, to the Lord of Sanquhar, the Earl of Menteith and Wauchope of Niddrie; Helen, who married Roger Grierson of Lag and Rock Hall; Janet, who married James Tweedie of Drumelzier, and secondly William Ker of Cessford (with a daughter Mary Ker marrying Sir Walter Scott, 'the Bold' Buccleuch); and Christian, who married Sir Alexander Stewart of Garlies. He also had a son John (perhaps illegitimate) who was described as 'in Steppis' when he was denounced as a rebel in 1556 for murdering a Dalyell; a natural son, John 'in Erschemortoun' is recorded in 1564 (presumably the same one mentioned in 1556). 5 more children are also recorded (including 'bastard dochter' Janet, Alison and Agnes, and 'bastard son' Thomas, all recorded in the 1550 testament), there being in all 3 Janets and 2 Margarets! Elizabeth, who had a marriage contract with Andrew Ker of Caverton, may also have been his daughter (with the marriage perhaps not going ahead, suggesting she may have died). Being predeceased by his only legitimate son, he was succeeded by his grandson (i.e. William's son), Sir James. When his grandson succeeded him in 1578, there was an inventory of his possessions drawn up (by the Parson of Cummertrees), stating that he had 'beildit the haill hous and pallice of Drumlanrig', held the 'hous and toure of Hawik, and conqueist [i.e. acquired] the Sowtre landis in Hawik', as well as many other properties. His will was recorded in the Commissariot of Edinburgh in 1581. His seal showed 3 mullets (i.e. stars) in the 1st and 4th quarters, a heart in the second and third and 3 crosses on a band across the top – 'Then Douglas of Drumlanrig, He helped to ease the pain, By granting lands his charter Made Hawick's heart beat again' [GLG].

James 4th Earl of Morton (c.1516–81) 2nd son of George of Pittendreich, who was Master of Angus. In 1543 he married Elizabeth, youngest daughter of James Douglas, 3rd Earl of Morton, and was made heir, thereafter taking the title 'Master of Morton'. He was involved in politics and warfare during the Rough Wooing, probably not present at Ancrum Moor, but part of the force that marched into Northumberland later in 1545. In 1548 he was taken prisoner by Lord Gray after a siege at Dalkeith and held prisoner in the Tower of London. He remained in England for several years, where he learned the 'English tongue and tone, which he did ever thereafter much delight to use'. In 1553 he succeeded to his father-in-law's titles and estates, including Dalkeith House. His elder brother David became 7th Earl of Angus in 1557, but died soon afterwards and he became tutor and guardian to his young nephew, Archibald,

8th Earl of Angus. He sat on the fence during the early days of the Reformation, but by 1560 was firmly on the Protestant side. He was an ambassador to England in 1560 and an advisor to Mary, Queen of Scots, in 1561, being appointed as Lord Chancellor of Scotland in 1563. Although personally disliking Henry Darnley, he did not publicly oppose his marriage with the Queen, probably because he required acquiescence from Darnley's mother, the Countess of Lennox, in claims regarding the succession to the Angus title and estates. However, he was said to be one of the main instigators of the plot to murder David Riccio in 1566, the fatal dagger being wielded by his cousin George Douglas. Afterwards he fled to England and then Flanders, but was soon pardoned and returned, to enter into a conspiracy with Bothwell and others against Darnley. In 1567 he received ratification of his earldom from Parliament. Turning against Bothwell, he led the army that forced Bothwell to surrender in 1567; this was after the offer of a duel between the pair was refused by Queen Mary and he even handed the sword of Archibald 'Bell the Cat' to Lord Lindsay to fight a duel. Shortly aftewards the 'Casket Letters' (long disputed as possible forgeries) came into his possession. He was one of the leaders of the army that defeated the forces loyal to Mary, Queen of Scots in 1568, leading to her imprisonment in England. He was certainly one of the most powerful noblemen during this period of civil war and narrowly escaped death himself (it is said at the intervention of Scott of Buccleuch) when the Regent Lennox was killed in 1571. Also in 1571 he controversially yielded up the Earl of Nortumberland (part of the Catholic uprising, captured by Eckie Armstrong in 1569) to Queen Elizabeth. In 1572, following the death of the Earl of Mar, he himself became Regent of Scotland (the last of the 4 men to hold this position), one of his first acts being an amnesty for some of the Queen's adherents, but not William Kirkcaldy of Grange, who had held Edinburgh Castle under siege for almost 3 years, and was hanged in 1573. Although he had disputes with churchmen (over his support for the idea of having bishops) and several noblemen, his time as Regent was relatively peaceful; he was eventually forced to resign in 1578 and effectively retired to Lochleven Castle. In 1574 he was the main executor named in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch, and he served as 'tutor' to the young Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch during his minority, among other things appointing Sir Walter Scott of Goldielands as Bailie Depute of the Regality of Melrose. Having lost several allies, including his nephew the Earl of Angus, he was accused of involvement in the murder of Darnley, along with his kinsman Archibald Douglas (son of Sir William of Whittinghame, who had fled to England). After 5 months in prison, and with only one witness being called against him (Sir James Balfour, who was himself involved in the murder), in 1581 he was found guilty of taking part in the murder of Darnley, and hence of treason. He was executed the next day using the 'maiden' (similar to a guillotine) that he had helped introduce to Scotland. His body was buried in Greyfriars Kirkyard and his head, displayed at the Tolbooth, joined it 18 months later. His nephew (son of his sister-in-law Beatrix) John, 8th Lord Maxwell, was made Earl of Morton after his death (having made a deal with Esme Stuart, Earl of Lennox, and being part of the jury who tried him). However, in 1586 another nephew, Archibald, 8th Earl of Angus, succeeded to the Earldom. He was succeeded in some of his lands by his nephew Archibald, 8th Earl of He married Elizabeth, daughter of James Douglas, 3rd Earl of Morton; she was said to be long insane and died in 1574. Although the couple were said to have had 10 children, there were no surviving male heirs. He is also reported to have had around 7 illegitimate children, including: Sir James of Spott, lay Prior of Pluscarden, exiled in 1583/4, forfeited his estates again for connection with Francis, Earl of Bothwell, and restored once more in 1603; Archibald of Pittendreich, also exiled in 1583/4; George, who was crippled; and William, whose will is recorded in Edinburgh in 1590. His capture was instigated by accusations from Capt. James Stewart (later Earl of Arran), which led to a reprisal, with Stewart being killed by James Douglas of Parkhead in 1595, and then the perpetrator being killed by a Stewart in 1608. James (16th C.) probably son of Sir James of Cavers and brother of Sir William. In 1565 he (along with William of the Crook) was fined for the non-appearance of William Elliot of Larriston and William Elliot of Falnash at the trial for the murder of David Scott of Hassendean. He is listed as brother of the Sheriff in 1584/5 among the Borderers summoned to appear before the Privy Council. James (16th C.) son of John of Whitriggs. In 1586 he was denounced as a rebel for his part in the slaughter of 6 Grahamslaws of Newton; the others named included sons of Douglas of Cavers and Douglas of Earlside, as well as several Turnbulls. James of Earlside (16th C.) recorded as 'goodman of Yerlesyde' in 1590 when he was among a group accused of taking livestock, goods and prisoners from the Pott's of Carrick. Others listed include Elliots of the Hill, Martin's Clem Crozier, Thomas Laidlaw of the Haugh and John Henderson of Plenderleith. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Douglases. James (16th C.) listed as 'James Dowglas called of Deynebray' when he witnessed an instrument of sasine for Crook in 1592. He must have had an association with Deanbrae, and may be the brother of Sir William of Cavers recorded in 1565. James of Todholes (16th C.) recorded as surety with the Privy Council in 1572 for a man in Edinburgh. He is probably the James 'of Todholes' who was listed among the men implicated in the murder of David Rizzio in 1565. He may be the Douglas of 'Todheils' whose heiress Helena married Robert, 3rd son of Sir James Douglas of Cavers. He is surely related to the later James, recorded as 'apperand of Todhoill' in 1601. Sir James (d.1612) 8th of Cavers, son of Sir William and Euphemia Ker. In 1576/7 his father resigned his lands, Barony and Sheriffship to him, reserving 'liferent' for himself. It thus appear that he took over running the Cavers estates during his father's lifetime. In 1579 he was 'younger of Cavers' when he witnessed a sasine for Midshiels and Appletreehall. In 1588 he was Sheriff of Roxburghshire (but still 'younger' of Cavers). In 1589 he was on a list of Border Lairds who failed to appear before the Privy Council to give 'thair gude advise anent the gude reule and quietnes of the Bordouris' and were denounced as rebels; his name appeared along with that of his father William. About 1590 he was listed among landed men of the Borders. In 1590/1 James Douglas of Spott acted as caution for him that he would pay the appropriate fees when released from the Tolbooth of Edinburgh. In 1591 he served as surety for Walter Turnbull of Bedrule. Also in 1591 he subscribed to a bond of allegiance to the King against Bothwell, Home and others. In 1593 he (along with the Warden, William Ker of Cessford) was granted a warrant to apprehend Sir John Ker of the Hirsel. In 1597 he signed a bond with William, 10th Earl of Angus, long with Douglases and others. In 1599 he was denounced as a rebel for failing to appear to explain why he had not turned over the Lorraines who were outlawed for killing David Turnbull, younger of Wauchope. He was also denounced, along with his deputy 'Hob of Bedroule' Turnbull, for not paying the collected taxes to Mark, Lord of Newbattle. There was a further general complaint by the Privy Council that as Sheriff he had failed to hold head courts (since 1586), administer the law and particularly allowed several men to go free who had been denounced as rebels; he and his Depute were ordered to appear before the Privy Council. In 1600 he was accused, along with the Cranstons of that Ilk, with resetting Thomas Cranston of Morriston. He was Sheriff of Roxburgh in 1601 when he appeared at the trial over the Kerr-Turnbull feud in Jedburgh. Also in 1601 he was one of the Scotsmen (along with Turnbull of Minto) accused by several Englishmen of stealing their livestock from the Stobs and the Crag, as well as being in another group accused by Henry Woodrington of stealing cattle from him; in the same year he accused some of the same people of stealing 2 horses from him. In 1602 he signed the 'General Band' among Border Lairds. In 1604 he served as surety for the Turnbulls of Stanedge and Barnhills, who were tried for killing 6 sons of Grahamslaw of Newton. About the same time he bought the lands of 'Nuke' from Andrew Friarshaw, the related financial obligation being the focus of a court case of 1607. In 1610 he was named as a Commissioner for keeping peace in Roxburghshire. Also in 1610 he and his son William had a bond (with Thomas Turnbull of Minto acting as cautioner) not to harm Alexander Horsburgh of that Ilk or his colleagues; the nature of this dispute is unclear. He married Margaret (or perhaps Janet) Cranstoun in 1580, having a son Sir William, who succeeded; she could be the Margaret, connected with the Sheriff of Roxburgh, recorded in the Register of Testaments in Lauder in 1632. He later married a daughter of Sir James McGill and had 2 sons who took the surname McGill: James, probably related to the later minister of Cavers, Walter McGill; and Thomas. If this is the Thomas described in 1634 as 'son to late James Douglas of Cavers' when he became an apprentice merchant in Edinburgh, then he probably died a few years later than 1612. The 1643 valuation of Cavers Parish lists both 'Anna McGill, Lady Summington' and 'Mr Walter McGill' as landowners, suggesting that they may both connected to his family, perhaps his children, or otherwise siblings of his 2nd wife. His daughter Elizabeth married William Eliott of Stobs, and later Sir William Douglas of Kelhead. Another daughter, Margaret, married John, son of Archibald Douglas, Archdeacon of Glasgow in 1607. The James of Cavers who wrote a letter to the Privy Council in February 1613 is presumably his son, since he was deceased by then. Sir James (d.1615) 8th Baron of Drumlanrig and also Baron of Hawick. In 1572 he was served as heir to his father, Sir William of Hawick (who predeceased his grandfather) and grandfather Sir James of Drumlanrig (who was still alive at that time). This included the town of Hawick, with its mill, together with the lands of 'Eist Manis, West Manis, Crumhauch et Kirktoun Manis, Flekkis et Muryneis, Ramsay Clewis, Braid Ley, Tenesyde, Carlingpule et Almonslandis' and in tenandry the lands of 'Howpaslet, Chesholme, Quhitehoip, Drydame, Commounside, Ovir Harwod, Emetscheilis, Nethir Harwod, Wyndislandis, Eister et Wester Heislehoip, Langhauch, Lairis Toftis, Kirkwod, Harwodhill, Quhitechestir, Fynnik, Edgaristoun, Edgaristounschelis et Quhomis'. There was a further deed of 1574 where his grandfather declared him to be his heir. He succeeded to Drumlanrig in 1578 on the death of his grandfather James (his father having already died). At that time an inventory of his possessions was drawn up, showing that he owned many pieces of land. In 1581/2 he was ordered to enter a number of Bells, Grahams and others before the Privy Council. In 1582 he was cautioner (along with Robert, Provost of Lincluden) for William Bell for rieving, the pair were committed to ward in 1583 for gathering 50 or so men and raiding the farm of Bonshaw, and in 1585 was surety for Robert himself. He was often in dispute with his neighbour in Dumfriesshire, Thomas Kirkpatrick of Closeburn (Sheriff of Dumfries); in 1591 he forcibly removed a prisoner from a court being held by Kirkpatrick and was consequently suspended from being Bailie of Morton. In 1592 he had a bond not to harm Kirkpatrick, with his cautioners being Robert, Provost of Lincluden (probably his great-uncle), Robert of Cashogle and 'Mr' John Douglas. He had a confirming charter of his lands granted by James VI in 1591/2, which was ratified by Parliament in 1594; this listed the Barony of Hawick as including the lands transcribed as 'East Manys, West Manys, Cruhauch and Kirtoun of Manys, Flekis, Maisterayneis, Ramsay Clewis, Braidley, Teindside, Carling Pule and Almouslandis' and in tenandry the lands of 'Howpasley, Chisholme, Whitehope, Dryden, Commonside, Over Harwood, Emeschellis, Nether Harwood, Weyndislandis, Easter and Wester Hessilhoip, Langhaugh, Laws, Tofts, Kirkwood, Harwoodhill, Whitchester, Fynnik, Edgerston, Edgerston Scheillis and Quhawmes'. In 1593 he signed a bond of cooperation with Maxwell of Castlemilk and Kirkpatrick of Closeburn against Sir James Johnstone of Dunskellie. In 1595 he accompanied Lord Hay on a foray into Annandale. A bond of 1601 between the Bailies and Burgesses of Hawick and him led to a dispute that lasted for many years after his death. In 1603 he was cautioner for John Douglas, in lands of Glencairn. Also in 1603 he was cautioner for many people in a dispute with Sir James Johnstone, Warden of the West Marches. In 1607 there was a complaint made against him and others by Adam Menzies of Enoch; this mentions his son and heir William, 2nd son (probably James) and his natural son John. He was served heir to his grandfather James' lands in Dalswinton in 1608. He sat in Parliament as a minor baron in 1608 and 1609. He had a remission in 1609 from the King, for any killing or other acts committed by him during his time as Warden of the West Marches of Scotland, before the union of the crowns. In 1609 many of his lands were united into the Barony and Regality of Drumlarig by Crown charter. He sat in the General Assembly in 1610. About 1610 there was a dispute between him and Walter Scott, Lord of Buccleuch over the lands of Whithope. Also in 1610 he brought an action against William of Howpasley and James Gledstains of that Ilk to remove from lands of his (including Howpasley, which it seems likely that he gained through a wadset), as well as for taxes he claimed they owed him as superior. In 1610 he was appointed keeper of the rolls for the Justices of the Peace of Dumfriesshire and in 1612 was appointed a commissioner for keeping the peace in that county. In 1612 the Bailies of Hawick made a legal challenge to Drumlanrig's hereditary authority by imposing a stent on householders within the Burgh and also a tax at the market (in order to pay off debts the town had contracted) without the permission of the Baron; he complained to the Privy Council, also alleging that they were refusing to allow his own men to collect the traditional market dues and confined his 'tacksman' to the steeple of St. Mary's! In 1615, sometime after gaining the lands of Howpasley, about 60 of his sheep were slaughtered by a band of men collected by Lady Scott of Howpasley and Jean Scott of Satchells. It is clear from all of this that he (or perhaps his local officers) was far from popular locally. He married Mary Fleming, sister of John, 5th Lord Fleming, the marriage contract being in 1581; his wife was granted liferent of the demesne lands of Hawick in 1616. In later life his affairs were taken over by his son William, who eventually succeeded and became 1st Earl of Queensberry. Another son was Sir James of Mouswald (or 'Mousell'), whose son James was an M.P. His natural son John married Isobella, daughter of John Douglas of 'Killivarrand' in 1607. Other children probably included: David of Airdoch; George of Pinzerie; Janet, who married William Livingstone of Jerviswood; Helen, who married John Menzies of Castlehill; and Christian, who married Robert Dalzell, 2nd Earl of Carnwath. His natural son John married Isobella, daughter of John Douglas of 'Killivarrand' in 1607. He may also have had a natural daughter, who was also called Janet and married John Carruthers, 8th of Holmains. James (16th/17th C.) recorded as 'apperand of Todhoill' in 1601, when he was described as being shot 'with twa bullettis in the wambe' when listed among the wounded in the skirmish between the Turnbulls and Kers in Jedburgh. He appears to have been an ally of the Turnbulls of Minto. He is also recorded as surety in a trial of 1612. He was presumably related to earlier Douglases of Todholes (or Todhills) and was possibly son of Robert of Todholes. James (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1601 as 'in Cruik' in the court case dealing with the skirmish between Turnbulls and Kerrs (and their supporters) on Jedburgh Fair Day. He was wounded 'in the neife' (i.e. fist) and dismembered 'of ane pairt thairof'. Several others in the Turnbull party were killed and others maimed, while 2 on the Kerr side were killed. He was probably related to the earlier William of Crook and Martin in Crook. He is probably James, son of William, who was bequeathed 'the roum callit ye hunthill wt ye best unset in ye cruik' by his father William in Crook in 1581; for the land in Crook he was to pay 13 shillings 4 pence to the heirs of his father (i.e. his brother Martin). James (d.bef. 1603) son of William 1st of Friarshaw. He appears to have died before his elder brother John, and hence the Lairdship went to the next brother, George. James (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1607 as being 'in Freirschaw' in a court case with John Haliburton of Muirhouselaw. The case centred on an obligation of £1,000 that James Douglas of Cavers had paid to Andrew of Friarshaw for the lands of 'Nuke'. He must therefore have been a close relative of Andrew, although the connection is not clear. He could be the same man as James, son of William (1st of Friarshaw), except that James appears to have died before 1603. James (16th/17th C.) described as 'in Cavers' in a 1612 document listing people convicted of charging too much interest on loans. Along with John (also in Cavers, and probably a relative) he failed to appear and was denounced as a rebel. Sir James (c.1591–1656) 1st Lord Mordington. He was brother of William, who was 10th Earl of Angus and 1st Marquess of Douglas. He held lands in the Rule valley, being granted Templehall and Brewlands in 1627. He married Ann, daughter of Laurence, 5th Lord Oliphant and was succeeded by his son William. James of Lochleven (16th/17th C.) 2nd son of William, 6th Earl of Morton. He was Commendator of Melrose Abbey in about the years 1569–1606. He thus held the superiority of some local lands, including the kirklands of Hassendean and Cavers. In 1573 he led a court case against Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch for the 'wranguis violent and masterfull casting doun demolitioun ... of the principale abbay and kirk of Melrose. He is recorded as Laird of Lochleven in 1581 when he was superior of some lands in Langnewton. In 1586 he complained that Kers, Rutherfords and others had stopped him from collecting his teinds in Langnewton. In 1592 he was surety for Robert Kerr of Newton and for Hector Turnbull of Wauchope. Also in 1592 he was superior of the lands of Crook in Cavers Parish when they were granted to William Scott; William Scott 'in Hawik' was his Bailie for the transaction. He evenutally resigned the Melrose lands into the hands of his nephew, William, Earl of Morton. He firstly married Mary, daughter of Sit Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, secondly married Helen (or Eleanor), daughter of William Scott of Abbotshall, and thirdly married Jean, daughter of Sir James Anstruther. He had at least 8 children. Sir James of Mousewald (16th/17th C.) son of Sir James, 8th of Drumlanrig, and younger brother of Sir William of Drumlanrig (and Earl of Queensberry). In 1619 he was declared a rebel for failing to appear when charged with the murder of John Carruthers of Dormont. In 1621 he and his brother William of Drumlanrig were charged with being involved in an altercation in which pistols were fired, Robert, son of Sir Robert of Cashogle lost an ear and Thomas Coupland was killed. In 1615 he married (possibly as his 2nd wife) Helena, daughter of Sir William Grierson of Lag. His son James was an M.P. 1644–47. Rev. James (d.c.1658) minister of Cavers. He graduated from St. Andrews University in 1637, became the assistant to Walter McGill at Cavers in 1647, and succeeded after his death 4 years later. He is recorded as still being minister in April 1658 and probably continued until his death (with James Gillan taking over later that year). Note that the minister of Hobkirk at about the same time had the same name. He may have been closely related to the Douglases of Cavers, and/or the previous incumbent Walter McGill (this being the surname of the 2nd wife of Sir James of Cavers who died in 1612). However, the precise relationship is uncertain. Rev. James (1624/5–65) younger son of William Douglas of Bonjedward and brother of John, who was minister of Yetholm and Crailing. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1645 and became minister at Hobkirk in 1652, where he remained until his death. There is a discharge of 1657 for vicarage teinds of Harwood in the National Archives involving him. He was one of the few conformist ministers in the district who were not expelled in the early 1660s, i.e. he accepted Episcopacy. He married Jean Martin and their children included: William, who succeeded to the lands at Newhall and Plewlands in 1669; and Robert, his 2nd son, who became an apprentice apothecary in Edinburgh in 1679. Thomas, lawful son of James, witnessed a document for Hobkirk teinds in 1657, but would have been too young to be this James' son. He was buried in Hobkirk graveyard, on 'Cowdie's Knowe', his gravestone (a through-stone) being marked 'MAISTER IAMES DOWGLAS SONE TO THE LAIRD OF BOONIEDB(VR)GH LATE MINISTER OF HOBKIRK'. James (d.1671) 2nd Earl of Queensberry and also Baron of Hawick, son of William, the 1st Earl. He succeeded his father in 1640 and acquired many additional lands (particularly in Dumfriesshire) to add to the family estate. In 1640 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Rev. Robert Cunningham. In 1642 he was named to a commission that was charged to apprehend and try a large number of Borders men accused of being 'notorious criminalls, theeves and ressetters of thift'. In a county valuation of 1643 he is recorded having land equal to about $\frac{1}{3}$ of the total yearly value of land in the Parish of Hawick (amounting to £5424 16s 8d). He was firmly a supporter of the Royalist cause during the time of the Civil War. He was intercepted on his way to join Montrose after the Battle of Kilsyth (travelling with his kinsman the Marquess of Douglas), imprisoned in Carlisle, forced to pay a huge fine in 1645, but was pardoned by Cromwell in 1654. In 1650 Drumlanrig Castle was attacked by Col. Gilbert Kerr and a group of men who objected to his Royalist stance, including Sir Andrew Ker of Greenhead, William Kerr of Newton and many others; these men were later compelled to pay damages to him. In 1653 he was the superior who granted Weensland, Shaws and Burnflat to William Scott of Horsleyhill. In 1661 he and his son (William, Lord Drumlanrig) was listed as owing £907 to the Duchess of Buccleuch for the teind duties for their lands within the Barony of Hawick. In 1663 he is recorded paying the Land Tax of £6140 for his property in Hawick Parish, this included £1080 for the 'Milne and Customes'. In 1669 he complained to Parliament about the high valuation placed on his lands in the Barony of Hawick. Around 1670 he disputed Hawick's rights to the Common (this battle being taken up by his son William after he succeeded as Baron of Hawick). He firstly married Mary, 3rd daughter of James, 2nd Marquis of Hamilton, the marriage contract being in 1630; they had no issue. In 1635 he married his second wife Margaret, eldest daughter of John Stewart, 1st Earl of Traquair (she died in about 1673). They had 9 children: William (b.1637), who succeeded and became 1st Duke of Queensberry; Lt.-Gen. James (d.1691), who was at Bothwell Bridge and the Battle of the Boyne; John (d.1675) who died in the Siege of Treves (or Trier); Robert (d.1676), who died in the Siege of Maastricht; Mary, who married Alexander Stewart, 3rd Earl of Galloway; Catherine, who married Sir James Douglas of Kellhead; Henrietta, who married Sir Robert Grierson of Lag, who was the inspiration for the character 'Redgauntlet'; Margaret, who married Sir Alexander Jardine of Applegirth and secondly Sir David Thoits, and was known for being penurious; and Isobel, who married Sir William Lockhart of Carstairs. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Brown and their children included: Bessie (b.1640); Agnes (b.1644); John and Isobel (b.1647); and Janet (b.1651). James (d.1674) brother of Sir William of Cavers and son of Sir Archibald. He was stabbed by Andrew Rutherford of Townhead when they were returning from dining at Swanside near Jedburgh, and died from the wounds. Rutherford was caught, tried and beheaded in Edinburgh. Robert Scott of Horsleyhill gave evidence, being one of the fellow diners, along with Charles Kerr of Abbotrule and William Ker of Newton. James (c.1646–1700) son of Archibald, Earl of Angus and 1st Earl of Ormond. In 1660 he succeeded his grandfather William as 2nd Marquess of Douglas. He had 16 curators during his minority, including Sir Archibald of Cavers and the Lord of Drumlanrig. He struggled most of his life with debts that he inherited and also with a dishonest Chamberlain. He is probably the Marquess of Douglas for whom Thomas Laidlaw paid the Land Tax in Southdean Parish in 1663. In 1663 he was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Glasgow (gratis). In 1668 he was served heir to his father in several titles, including the Lordship of the Barony of Jedforest and of Selkirk; he thus held the superiority of Southdean Parish. He paid tax on land valued at £4475 in Southdean Parish in 1678, as well as lands in Jedburgh and in Selkirkshire. He received estates forfeited by Claverhouse after the Revolution. He contributed £500 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. He was a Privy Councillor under Charles II and James VII. A commission was apppointed to manage his estates in the 1690s, including the Duke of Queensberry, Earl of Lothian, Sir James Murray of Philiphaugh and Sir Francis Scott of Thirlestane. He had to sell Tantallon in 1699. In 1670 he married Barbara, daughter of John Erskine, Earl of Mar and secondly married Mary, daughter of Robert Kerr, 1st Marquess of Lothian. His marriage with his first wife was filled with dispute and its end was said to be be be be be be be be be immortalised in the ballad 'Waly Waly' (and although some of that song clearly predates this era, instead the story is contained in a ballad called 'Jamie Douglas'). His children included: James, Earl of Angus, who died at the Battle of Steinkirk, aged 20; William, who died in infancy; Archibald (b.1694), who became 3rd Marquess; and Jane (b.1698), who was betrothed to Francis Scott, Earl of Dalkeith (later Duke of Buccleuch), who instead married a different Jane, daughter of the Duke of Queensberry and she eventually married John, sone of Sir Thomas Stewart of Balcaskie. James (17th C.) son and heir of William, who was described as an advocate in 1672 when he inherited his father's Lordship and Barony of Jedforest (i.e. the superiority of lands in Southdean). They were probably related to the Marquesses of Douglas, who had held this Barony in the decades before. He was probably dead by 1684, when his sisters Margaret and Jean were served as joint heirs to this same Lordship. James (17th C.) tailor in Roberton Parish. He married Janet Henderson and their children included: James (b.1682); and Thomas (b.1686). The witnesses in 1682 were Thomas Henderson (probably reated to his wife) and James Dryden, and in 1686 were James Dryden and John Armstrong. James (17th C.) recorded as a 'student' in 1678. He witnessed (along with another student, Walter Laing) the baptism for Andrew Angus in Hawick Parish. James (17th C.) listed as a resident of Whitriggs on the 1694 Hearth Tax roll. He was probably related to Jean and John, who were also listed. James (17th C.) listed in the 1694 Horse Tax rolls at Cavers. James 2nd Duke of Queensberry (1672–1711), eldest son of William the 1st Duke. He was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Glasgow (gratis) in 1680, when still a boy. He was served heir to his father in 1695. He was created Baron Rippon, Marquis of Beverley and Duke of Dover in the British peerage, and still held several Scottish titles, including Lord Douglas of Hawick. While Earl of Drumlanrig he was appointed Colonel of the 6th Horse Guards Regiment, and 'Drumlangrig's troop' mustered in Hawick in 1687. He was made a Privy Councillor in 1690 and was one of Scotland's representative peers in Parliament 1707–08. He served as Lord High Treasurer of Scotland as well as Secretary of State and Lord High Commissioner and is credited with drafting the 'Act of Union' of 1707 (hence being sometimes known as the 'Union Duke'). In 1706 he resigned his titles into the hands of the Queen, to be regranted to himself and his heirs. He married Mary, daughter of Charles, Lord Clifford. One of his daughters, Jane, married Francis, Duke of Buccleuch. The titles of Marquess and Earl passed to his insane son James, while the Dukedom passed to a younger son, Charles. James (17th/18th C.) resident of 'Kirktoun' farm. His children baptised in Kirkton Parish included Betty (b.1718), John (b.1720) and Robert (b.1725). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at East Mains in 1716 when his daughter Elspeth was baptised. Elspeth (again, b.1720) may also have been his child. James of the Trows (17th/18th C.) related to the Cavers family, the connection said to be through an illegitimate son. He may also at one point have been Laird of Earlside. In 1720 he was tenant at the Trows when he made a loan to Archibald Douglas of Cavers. His children included: Thomas (b.1705); Margaret (b.1709), who married James Oliver; and Esther (b.1715), who married Thomas Turnbull (of the Hawick carpet factory). He is probably the same James who was listed at Trows on the 1694 Horse Tax records. His son-in-law James Oliver is said to have taken over the farm of Earlside from him. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children may have included William (b.1697), Robert (b.1697), James (b.1698), William (b.1700), Margaret (b.1700);

Rachel (b.1701), Archibald (b.1702), Agnes (b.1703), George (b.1704), Marion (b.1705), James (b.1706), Walter (b.1707), Bessie (b.1707), Margaret (b.1707), Jane (b.1710), Andrew (b.1710), Isabel (b.1712), Helen (b.1713), John (b.1714), James (b.1716), James (b.1717), Isabel (b.1719) and Robert (b.1722). There are surely at least 2 families here. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Clarilaw in 1709 when he married Agnes Scott, the marriage being registered in Cavers. He may be the James whose children, baptised in Wilton, included William (b.1710) and Thomas (b.1713). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded living at 'brodlees' in 1721 and 1724 and was there for 18 years from about 1716–34. This appears to be a farmstead, Braidlies, near Brieryyards (but could feasibly be the farm of Broadlee in Ashkirk Parish). He married Agnes Davidson in 1708 and their children included: Jean (b.1716); Janet (b.1718); Margaret (b.1721); and Agnes (b.1724). The witnesses in 1721 were William and James Douglas (who were surely related) and in 1724 were William Douglas and James Dryden. Thomas (b.c.1715) was also his son (and gave evidence for the division of Wilton Common in 1764, stating they later lived together at Midshiels). He is either the same man or father to the James who was living at 'Broadlees' a generation later. Sir James of Friarshaw and Springwood (1704–87) 2nd son of George and brother of Henry of Friarshaw. He was the 8th Laird of Friarshaw in Lilliesleaf Parish, and the 1st Baronet. In 1750 he purchased the lands of Bridgend near Kelso and changed the name to Springwood Park (although it was also known as 'Springfield Park'). He became a Rear Admiral. In 1759 he carried back to Britain the news of Gen. Wolfe's victory at Quebec. He later served as M.P. for Orkney. He is probably the James of Bridgend listed among the Commissioneris for Roxburghshire in 1761. In 1775 he entailed Springwood Park along wth his other estates. He succeeded to Friarshaw after the death of his brother in 1778. He is listed being taxed for having several male servants from 1778. He is also recorded in the Carriage Tax Rolls, Horse Tax Rolls and for having female servants tax roll (with as many as 6 servants) at Springwood Park in the 1780s. He was a Knight of the Order of Bath and was created a Baronet in 1786. In 1753 he married Helen (1727/8–66), daughter of Thomas Brisbane of Brisbane. In 1768 he secondly married Helen (d.1793), daughter of John Boyle, Earl of Glasgow. His children included: Sir George, who succeeded; James (1755–1840), also an Admiral, who was among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788 and married Elizabeth, daughter of Capt. Robert Scott of the Royal Navy; Thomas (1756–85); Henry (1758–1839), a judge at Patna; and Mary Isabella, who married Sir H.H. Macdougal. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Anna Pott and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1732. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded in Denholm in 1733 when his son William was baptised. Perhaps the same James was at Ormiston in 1737 when his son Archibald was baptised. Other children baptised in Cavers who could be his include John (b.1729), an unnamed child (b.1732), James (b.1732), William (b.1733), Thomas (b.1734), Janet (b.1735), Archibald (b.1737), another unnamed child (b.1738) and Archibald (b.1740). He may be the James who married Ann Pott in Cavers in 1731. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at 'Mitchels' (i.e. Midshiels) in 1739, Burnhead in 1742 and 'Broadlees' in 1747 and 1748. He and Thomas witnessed a baptism in 1739 for Walter Grieve in Midshiels. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for Andrew Stuart and Janet Douglas (perhaps a relative) in Langlands in 1742 and another for Thomas Scott in Galalaw in 1744. He married Janet Turnbull in Wilton in 1738 and their children included: Rachel (b.1739); James (b.1740); William (b.1742); Agnes (b.1744); Gavin (b.1747); and Jean and Martha (b.1748). The witnesses in 1739 were James Turnbull (perhaps related to his wife) and James . . . [perhaps Grieve], in 1742 were Robert Scott and James Dryden, in 1747 were John and Walter Scott and in 1748 were James Dryden and William Scott. He is either son of the James who was at 'brodlees' (i.e. Braidlies) 2 decades earlier, or else the same man with a 2nd marriage. James (18th C.) merchant of Hawick. In 1742 (along with gardener Robert Turnbull) he witnessed a baptism for merchant Robert Taylor and Margaret Douglas (perhaps his sister). In 1745 he witnessed a baptism for gardener Walter Irvine and another for gardener Robert Turnbull and Euphan Douglas (who may have been related). Based on these witnesses it seems feasible that Margaret (wife of merchant Robert Taylor) and Euphan (wife of gardener Robert Turnbull) were his sisters. He may be the man of this name who paid tax for 14 windows in Hawick in 1748. He married Margaret Scott in Wilton in 1739 and their children (baptised in Hawick) included: William (b.1740); Betty (b.1742); John (b.1744); and Margaret (b.1745). The witnesses in 1742 were druggist Gideon Scott and tobacconist Robert Taylor. He may be the James whose son Alexander died in Hawick in 1781 and the deceased merchant whose daughter Janet died in Hawick in 1809. Rev. Dr. James (d.1780) 16th Laird of Cavers. He was 3rd son of Archibald, and became heir and executor for his brother Archibald in 1774. He was Prebendary of Durham and received a Doctorate in Divinity. It is said that he had a road built by which a coach and 6 could ascend to the top of Ruberslaw; he was said to have made a journey as far up as he coul go, accompanied by Sir James Graham of Netherby. He was taxed for having 5 male servants in 1778 (a butler, a footman, a coachman and 2 gardeners) and 6 in 1779. In Edinburgh in 1750 he married Jean Halyburton (or 'Peggy Haliburton'), sister of Col. Hailburton of Pitcur, but they had no surviving children. He was in turn succeeded by his brother John. His will stated that if his brother John failed to have male heirs he was to be succeeded by his cousins Andrew, then Capt. Archibald, then Robert, and 'whom failing, to my lawful heirs whatsoever'. His sisters Catharine and Euphane were also provided for at Cavers. His will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1781. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, who was at Appletreehall in 1748. He married Bessie Dryden in 1747 and their son William was baptised in 1748, with witnesses Walter Scott and James Dryden. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Alison Hendry in 1752 and their children included James (b.1754). James (18th C.) married Agnes Scott in Wilton in 1761. James (18th C.) butler at Cavers in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for James of Cavers. He could be the James whose daughter Margaret was baptised in 1772 and the James in Cavers whose son Alexander was baptised in 1779. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at 'Berryfellhouse' in 1787 when his son James was baptised. He could be the James whose son William was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1786. Other children baptised in Cavers who may have been his include Betty (b.1766), John (b.1768), James (b.1774), Jean (b.1776) and Katherine (b.1777). James (18th C.) married Betty Veitch in Cavers Parish in 1782. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hoddleswoodie in 1790 when his son Hugh was baptised in Hobkirk Parish. He is probably the James whose wife Elizabeth became the first letter-carrier of the Rule valley in 1835, by which time he was said to be almost blind. Their other children included Mary (b.1797), James (b.1799), Charles (b.1800) and Nelly (b.1808). Other children, baptised in Hobkirk around the same time, who may have been his, include Francis (b.1792), Isabel (b.1794), William (b.1795) and Wilhelmina (b.1806). James (d.1829) tenant at Corbyhall. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, recorded at Over Southfield in 1792. He was listed as tenant at 'Upper' Southfield according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He married Margaret Douglas and their son Robert was baptised in 1792. The witnesses were James and Robert, who seem likely to be related to him and to his wife; the entry occurs right after the baptisms for all the children of Dr. Robert, suggesting a possible link. He may be the James whose illegitimate child (with Janet Wilson) was buried in Hawick in 1799; this may be the James born to those parents in Wilton in 1795. James (1743–1827) born at Braidlie in Castleton Parish, he was son of John and Christian Nichol. He married Christian Scott (1745–1825) in Dykeraw. Their children included: Christian (b.1770); Jane (1771–1855), who married John Cavers; Helen (b.1775); John (1778–1838), a joiner in Castleton; Walter (b.1780), who kept the Douglas Hotel on St. Andrew Square in Edinburgh; and Violet (1788–1856), who married William Hardie, and died at Burnmouth Schoolhouse. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Ainslie in 1781 and their children included Thomas (b.1782). James (b.1764/5–1840) shepherd, probably at Meadshaw. He married Margaret Warwick, who died at Meadshaw in 1829, aged 48. Their 4th son John was shepherd at Craik and died at Meadshaw in 1840, aged 20. He himself died of smallpox in Kedzlee in Melrose Parish. The family are buried in Borthwick Waas. James (b.c.1770s) brewer at Whiskyhouses in Hawick according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. James (b.c.1770s) servant at Bowanhill according to the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. He was listed as a shepherd at Bowanhill on the 1801 Militia ballot. James of Cavers (1790–1861) son of George and Lady Grace Stuart, he succeeded on the death of his father in 1815. For a brief period, John Leyden acted as his tutor. He was among the first to be listed on the 'Donations' page for the Hawick Savings Bank in 1815. In 1824 he established a School for the Arts in Hawick, and instituted popular educational lectures, as well as being instrumental in setting up an Agricultural Society. For acts such as these he was made an Honorary Burgess in 1825. He also supplied books to libraries in the outlying areas (e.g. to Ashkirk Parish, as described in 1837). About 1824 he also offered to support a preacher to visit among people in the Hawick district, being turned down by the Secession Kirk, but being accepted by the Congregational Union of Scotland, from whom he engaged Francis Dick to preach in the area over the next 19 summers. Apparently a group of such travelling preachers that he supported were referred to as the 'Cavers missionaries'. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He served as Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He was a heritor of Cavers and Kirkton Parishes, and also listed in 1839 among the major landowners of Hawick Parish. He was the first President of the Edinburgh Society for Promoting the Establishment and Maintenance of Itinerating Libraries, founded in 1826. In 1841 he was living at Cavers House with his wife, 7 children, 9 female servants and 1 male servant. In 1851 he was still there, with 3 children, 5 female servants and 1 male servant. He may have been the James of Cavers who wrote words for the song 'Hollin, Green Hollin'. He was said to be well read in many fields, and contributed articles on religious topics, publishing booklets such as 'The Advancement of Society' (1825), 'Errors Regarding Religion' (1830), 'The Structure of Prophecy' (1850), 'Popery and Infidelity' (1852), 'Rome and Maynooth' (1852), 'The Truths of Religion' (1830), 'An Address on Slavery, Sabbath Protection, and Church Reform' (1838), 'The Philosophy of the Mind' (1839), etc. In 1820 he married Emma (d.1882), daughter of Sir David Carnegie, 4th Baronet of Pittarron. Their children were: James (b.1822), who succeeded; Agnes (b.c.1825), died unmarried; Mary (b.1825/6–59), who married William Elphinstone Malcolm of Burnfoot (Dumfriesshire); Emma (b.c.1829–70), who married Capt. Robert Erskine Anderson; Ellen (1830–1911), who married Rear-Adm. George Palmer; Stuart (1833/4–50s); and Lucy (b.1840/1), also died unmarried. His widow stayed at Midgard after his death. James (19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Isabel Telfer in 1816 and their children included: William (b.1816); Betty (b.1818); and Thomas (b.1821). James (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Douglas and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1821. James (1806–82) born in Edinburgh, but baptised in Castleton, son of John and Betty Beattie. He was a carpenter in Newcastleton and farmer at Roan. He was listed as a joiner in Newcastleton among heads of households in 1835–41. In 1851 he was at about 6 Langholm Street and employed 5 men. He also ran a saw mill, according to an 1852 directory. By 1861 he is recorded as farmer at Roan (and a widower), employing 2 shepherds and 3 labourers. He was listed at Roan in a directory of 1868. In 1881 he was a master carpenter employing 5 men and a farmer of more than 3000 acres, employing 7 people. He firstly married Charlotte (1809–57), daughter of Adam Glendinning. In 1863 he secondly married his cousin Elizabeth (1819–87), daughter of Edinburgh hotel keeper Walter Douglas. James (19th C.) married a Wilson. Their daughter Margaret Scott was baptised in Wilton in 1839. James of Cavers (1822–1878) son of James and Emma Carnegie, he succeeded in 1861. He was either the 20th or 21st Laird in descent from Archibald, son of the Earl of Douglas. Margaret Park wrote a poem commemorating his birth (published in Bet Young's book of verse in 1823). He was interested in local antiquities and was a Fellow of the Royal Society of Antiquaries of Scotland. He may be the James who was the 31st listed member of the Archæological Society in 1856; he became a Life Member in 1857. James Wilson dedicated 'Memories of Hawick' (1858) to him, when he was still 'youngr of Cavers'. He chaired the ceremonies for the opening of the Teviot Bridge at Denholm in 1865. He held the lands of Haughhead, formerly part of Weensland, as recorded in about 1874. He wrote a short article about John Leyden in 1875, recalling stories told him by people who knew Leyden personally; this appeared as a supplement to the Archæological Society Transactions. In 1858 he married Mary Graham, daughter of Sir Andrew Agnew, 7th Baronet of Lochnaw in Wigtonshire. There were celebrations of the marriage in Denholm and Hawick, involving tenants, school children and local gentlemen. He died without a male heir and was succeeded as Laird by his niece, Mary (who was daughter of his sister Mary and William Malcolm and who became Mrs. Palmer Douglas). He was buried in a new vault attached to old Cavers churchyard. James (b.1822/3) stockingmaker in Hawick. In 1851 he was living on Backdamgate with his mother Janet and sister Isabella. In 1861 he was on Silver Street, still with his mother and sister Janet. He donated coins to the Museum in 1858. Bailie James (1826–1885) born at Horsleyhill the year of the 'Droothy Summer', he was 3rd son of farmer John of Easter Essenside. He was an apprentice with John & George Oliver, writers, then was cashier with William Wilson & Sons and Wilson & Armstrongs before becoming Actuary of Hawick Savings Bank (also known as the National Security Savings Bank of Hawick). He was the first Manager of the Hawick Heritable Investment Bank, Ltd., later being their Actuary, and was a Director of Hawick Working Men's Building and Investment Co. He was also a member of the Total Abstinence Society, becoming their President and a keen speaker on temperance subjects. He was additionally a member of the Hawick Literary and Scientific Society about 1850. He first became a Councillor in 1868 and returned again in 1883, when he was made a Magistrate. He was long remembered for his integrity and honesty. He was a Life Member of the Archæological Society by 1859. In 1861 he was living on Brougham Place with his mother Elizabeth and 4 siblings. He married Isabella Cochrane (related to Andrew the tailor), who died in 1857, aged 27. They had at least one child, John, who died in infancy. Douglas Road was named after him, and for a time also Douglas Terrace. James (19th/20th C.) drummer in the Drums and Fifes who received a presentation for 50 years' service at the 1921 Colour Bussing. His uncle Andrew was also a member of the band. James 'Jimmy' (d.2019) engineer from Hawick. He was an apprentice motor mechnic at Guthrie's during WWII, then moving to Woodcock's. He then moved to Thurso where he was project engineer at Dounreay, the Atomic Energy Authority's experimental reactor and was transferred to Sellafield in 1968. In Hawick he was Captain of the Trades and played a few times for Hawick R.F.C. James 'Jim', son of Jimmy. He lived in Hawick until about the age of 10 when his father moved to work at Dounreay. He attended Aberdeen University and worked as a soil scientist in Oxfordshire and then Penicuik. Jane (d.c.1494) daughter of George, 4th Earl of Angus. In 1472 she married David Scott, younger of Buccleuch, who died in 1484. In 1484 she made a claim for 8 years worth of rent for lands held by Walter Scott of Howpasley. Before 1492 she married George, Earl of Rother. Her brother Archibald, Earl of Angus, was her executor. Janet (15th/16th C.) daughter of Archibald, 5th Earl of Angus. In 1495 the Barony of Terregles was granted to her by James IV; this included the lands of Feu-Rule. She married Andrew, son of Herbert, Lord Herries of Terregles in 1495. Janet (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as 'jonet douglass'. This was on a list of associates of James of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. Janet (16th/17th C.) daughter of Sir James Douglas, Baron of Hawick. She married William Ker of Cessford, and their daughter Mary married to Sir Walter Scott, 'the Bold Buccleuch'. Janet (19th C.) worked at the British Linen Bank and was involved with Allars Kirk in the 1820s. Jean (17th C.) daughter of advocate William Douglas. In 1684 she and her sister Margaret were served as joint heirs to the Lordship and Barony of Jedforest, as well as the Barony of Chirnside, after reversion from their brother James about a decade earlier. Jean (17th C.) listed as a resident of Whitriggs on the 1694 Hearth Jean (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1749 she 'compeared in the publick place of Repentance for he relapse in the sin of fornication with Thomas Heatlie'. After repentance for several Sundays and paying a fine, she was absolved. Tax Rolls. She was probably related to James and John, who were also listed. Jill (1969–) daughter of Henry, television rugby commentator, married name Hogg. She was Common-Riding Chief Guest in 2002. Sir John (d.1350) son of James of Lothian and younger brother of Sir William, 'the Flower of Chivalry'. His children included: Sir James of Dalkeith; Thomas; Sir William; John of Strabock; Sir Henry of Lugton, progenitor of the Douglases of Lochleven; Nicholas of Dounteray, Wakefield and Mains; Ellen; Margaret, who married Sir Adam de Glendonwyn of that Ilk; and Elizabeth. His sons James, Thomas, William, John and Henry were named in the 1351 will of his brother Sir William. He was killed at Forgie Wood by assassins said to be sent by Sir David Barclay; his brother was suspected of having a hand in the subsequent murder of Barclay. John of Bonjedward (d.1438) son of Margaret Douglas and Thomas Johnstone, who took the surname Douglas. He succeeded his mother to the lands of Bonjedward and was succeeded by his son George in 1439. John of Balveny (d.1463) son of James, 7th Earl and brother of William and James, the next 2 Earls. Along with his brothers and others, he was part of a force that tried to wrest power from the King in 1455. George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus and the Scotts of Buccleuch led a force that met them at Arkinholm (Langholm); this battle must have included a great many Borderers. He escaped across the Border to join his brother James. However, he was later captured and executed. Robert Scott of Todshaw and others received a reward from the King for his capture. John (15th/16th C.) brother of the Laird of Bonjedward, probably George. In 1502 he and his brother William (as well as Douglases in Swinside, Davidsons and the junior Laird of Riddell) were convicted and had remission for oppressing Sir William Colville of Ochiltree at his lands of 'hardanehed'. John (15th/16th C.) listed as the name of 2 brothers of James in Swinside in 1502 when they had remission for certain crimes. Pitcairn, in his 'Criminal Trials' book, notes that it was not unusual at that time for more than one son to be given the same forename. Adam was another brother mentioned and George in Swinside was also listed. John (16th C.) younger son of William of Drumlanrig, who was killed at Flodden. He was brother of Sir James of Drumlanrig and Hawick. He was described as brother of James of Drumlanrig in a respite of 1526, as well as when he witnessed a charter in 1530/1, and when he witnessed his brother resigning his lands of Drumlanrig and others in 1540 in order to be regranted. In 1544 he had a notorial instrument for accepting money from his brother James on the condition that he no 'play at cartis, dyse, tabblis, or lay by hand at the said playis wytht any man'. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as a witness in 1524 to the agreement between Martin Douglas and James Routledge, regarding lands at the Crook in Cavers Parish. He appears to be recorded as son of Nicholas (although the document is hard to read). John (d.1574) son of Robert and cousin of Hugh, who was son of William of Bonjedward. He was born in Longnewton, and his precise connection to the Douglases of Bonjedward and Timpendean is unclear. He matriculated as St. Leonard's College, St. Andrews in 1515 at the same time as some future reformers, and graduated in 1517. His subsequent movements are unclear, although he spent some time in Paris. He eventually became the first Protestant Archbishop of St. Andrews in the years 1572–74 and was Chancellor of the University there. He was one of the 'six Johns' who wrote the 'Scots Confession' and 'First Book of Discipline' of 1560. He was claimed to be uncle of George, who was martyred as a Catholic priest in England in 1587. John (16th C.) recorded as minister of Bedrule in February 1563/4. He must have just taken over from John Stewart or William Kerr, and was only minister himself for a short time. Whether he was the same as the later minister of Hobkirk and Southdean is unclear. He was designated 'Sir', meaning that he was a priest with only a Bachelor's degree. John (16th C.) presented by James VI to the vicarage of Hobkirk in 1576/7 on the death of Sir David Turnbull. Probably the same John was Reader of Southdean 1574–87 (although this last date may be an error, since John Scott was also Reader during that time); he was certainly recorded as Reader there in 1575. It is possible that the same John had the parsonage and vicarage of Kirkton bestowed upon him in 1597, on the death of George Douglas. John of Whitriggs (16th C.) recorded in 1585 when William Douglas of Cavers and Edward Lorraine of Harwood were cautioners for him. His location is recorded as 'Quhyterig'. He is probably the 'Johnne Douglas of Quhytekirk' whose son James was declared a rebel in 1586 for his part in the murder of 6 Grahamslaws of Newton. He is also listed in about 1590 among 'Landit Men' of Scotland. It is unclear how he was related to other Douglases of Whitriggs. John (16th C.) recorded in 1583 when he was among men charged to appear before the Privy Council. His designation was given as 'of Welles or Todhoillis'. He may have been father of James of Todholes, who was recorded slightly later and was probably also related top Robert of Todholes, who was a son of Sir James of Cavers. John (16th/17th C.) 2nd son of Martin in Crook. In 1592 he received a 'letter of pension' from the Commendator of Melrose, with 7 merks to be taken from the kirkland of Hassendean and 3 merks from the lands of Crook. Perhaps the same John was living at the Trows in 1618 when he was recorded as witness to a sasine for the Kirklands of Cavers, including Crook. John of Brieryyairds (d.bef. 1606) recorded when his son Robert was served as his heir in 1606. The lands he inherited were Easter and Wester 'Rouchlie', 'Rowchlienwik', 'Breirbuss', the 20-shilling lands of 'Quhitsyde' and a 4-pound land in 'Fawsyde', all lying in Jedforest. John of Friarshaw (d.bef. 1603) eldest son of William of Friarshaw. He was the 2nd Laird of Friarshaw. He is listed in 1579 as a debtor to the deceased James Liddersdale, Burgess of Selkirk. He is probaby the 'Joannis Dowglas in Freirschaw' whose son William was granted $\frac{1}{2}$ husbandlands in the town of Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. He may also be the 'Joannis Dowglas in Freirschaw' whose son William was granted $\frac{1}{2}$ husbandlands in the town of Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. He is said to have died without male issue and been succeeded by his younger brother

George. However, he may be the brother of Andrew 'in Freirschaw' mentioned as joint occupier of Friarshaw in 1592, when his son George, along with Andrew (his brother) had a charter for the lands from Melrose Abbey. He may have been succeeded by his brother George. John 'Johnnie' (16th/17th C.) from Cavers, he was on a 1612 list of men convicted of charging more than the allowed rate of interest on loans. Along with James (also in Cavers, and probably a relative) he failed to appear and was denounced as a rebel. John (16th/17th C.) tenant in Wattie's Spindles before becoming the Earl of Angus' tenant in Lintalee in 1617. George Ker complained that he had been unfairly removed from Lintalee, but it was found that the write were in order. He is probably the 'John Dowglass in Lintelly' who witnessed a document relating to Trinlyknowe in 1622, with his name appearing as 'John Dowglass of Waderspindillis' on the following instrument. It is unclear how he was related to other Douglases. He married Margaret, illegitimate daughter of William, 10th Earl of Angus. John (16th/17th C.) witness in 1619 to a bond signed in Hawick between Adam Turnbull of Abbotrule and John, son of Walter Scott of Chamberlain Newton. He is recorded as being 'called of Toftis', presumably meaning he had been associated with the lands of Tofts in Kirkton Parish. John 'Hallas' (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1628 among a list of men accused by the Earl of Buccleuch of cutting down trees on his lands near Hawick. It is unclear what his nickname might have meant. John (17th C.) 'in Cavers, called of Piehill' recorded in a 'summons of reduction' (i.e. court case to nullify illegal deeds) brought by William Bennet in 1630. His son was William. John of Timpendean (d.bef. 1643) recorded in the 1643 valuation roll when his heirs had their '6 husbandlands' in Jedburgh Parish valued at £158 and his widow's land at £260. His wife was the 'John Douglas's Widow' who had liferent of Timpendean in 1643. It seems likely he was son of Stephen and that this is an extra generation compared with some family trees. John of Timpendean (d.1671) he was said to be 6th Laird and son of Stephen, but may have been son of the earlier John. In 1632 he married Mary Douglas of Bonjedward and she was still alive in 1661. He was succeeded by his son William. John (17th C.) landowner in Castleton Parish. In 1663 he paid the land tax of £420 for his lands in Castleton and £200 for his lands 'in Kirktoune' (although it is unclear if this meant Kirkton Parish or lands in Castleton). John of Gervald (17th C.) 2nd son of Sir William of Cavers. He was Sheriff-Depute in 1637 when giving sasine of lands in Maxton to David Erskine. He could be the 'Johne Douglas' (no designation given) who signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638. In 1642 he was granted lands of Burnmouth, 'Greina' (Greena) and 'Purvinen' in Liddesdale 'in fee', with his father having the 'liferent'. He was probably the John 'of Garvart' who was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1648 and 1649. Archibald 'of Garvat' was probably his son; he was involved with court action in the 1690s to recover debts from Gilbert Eliott of Stonedge. One of his daughters married George Scott of Boonraw, Bailie-depute of Hawick. John (17th C.) tenant in Bedrule Mill. In 1674 he was fined by the Hawick Magistrates 'for forestalling the market by his selling meal at twa prices in ane market day'. John of Timpendean (b.1656) 8th Laird, he was retoured as heir to his father William in 1688. He paid tax on 3 hearths at his house in 1694. He is probably the Douglas of Timpendean who was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1695 and 1704. He was probably the Laird who acquired Lanton sometime between 1678 and 1707. In 1679 he married Euphan, daughter of William Turnbull of Sharplaw and Christian Ker (and descended from Douglas of Cavers). Their children were: Christian, who must have died young; William, who succeeded; Alison; John; Euphan, who married William Grey in Jedburgh; Mary, Christian (again), who maried William Smeal in Jedburgh; George; and Archibald, who became an apprentice skinner in Edinburgh in 1714. He and his wife were summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1684 for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism, and his father-in-law gave a bond of caution for the couple. John (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Janet Henderson and their children included: James (b.1682); and Thomas (b.1686). In 1681 he witnessed a baptism in Roberton for William Scott and in 1688 another baptism for Thomas Henderson and Margaret Turnbull. John (17th C.) married Helen Runciman in Roberton Parish in 1687. She was probably brother of Walter Runciman who was married the previous year. John (17th C.) 'workman' listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Johns. He was also a 'workman' in 1699 when his wife Janet Rae was accused of enticing

Isobel, daughter of John 'Sheine' to steal various items from her own father's house; he and his wife agreed to leave Hawick, but a couple of months later Walter 'Trumble, at the east port' was fined for letting a house to them. Probably the same Workman is recorded in 1705 when his son James was baptised, with witnesses tailor David Miller and gardener Patrick McLellan. John (17th C.) listed as a resident at Nether Tofts in Kirkton on the 1694 Hearth Tax roll. He may be related to the John recorded in Nether Tofts in 1720. John (17th C.) listed as a resident of Whitriggs on the 1694 Hearth Tax roll. He was probably related to James and Jean, who were also listed. John (17th C.) pedlar in Cavers who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) resident of Crook who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) recorded at Catshawhill in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. The later John of Catshawhill may have been his son. It is possible he was the John who paid the land tax for part of Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1678. John (1665–1744) 3rd Earl of Selkirk. He was 4th son of William, who was Duke of Hamilton and Earl of Selkirk, among other titles. He succeded to the Earldom of Selkirk from his brother Charles. He was also Earl of Ruglen, Viscount of Riccarton and Lord Hillhouse. He may have had the surname Hamilton-Douglas. He was succeeded as Earl of Selkirk by his brother Basil's grandson Dunbar Hamilton of Baldoon. His daughter Anne married William Douglas, Earl of March, 2nd son of the 1st Duke of Queensberry. John (b.1673/4) 'indweller in Hawick' who in 1767 gave evidence regarding the earlier use of Hawick Common. He was said to be 93 years old, married, and had lived within a mile of Hawick for the previous 70 years. He gave many details relating to the Common, particularly from around 1710. He stated that he was a Burgess of Hawick, although possessing no property in the Town, and since his sight had failed him about 10 years previously, he had been on the Poor Roll, with also some support from his son. There was a John born to John Douglas in Jedburgh in 1673 and another born to George in Jedburgh in 1674; one of these may well be him. It was said that he was blind for his last 10 years. John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Todshawhill. He is recorded there in 1711 and 1718. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included: John (b.1710); Grizell (b.1711); and John (b.1718). He could be the John who married Margaret Langlands in Cavers in 1708. Rev. John (c.1679–1750) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1699, he was licensed by the Presbytery of Jedburgh in 1705. He was presented to Kirkton Parish in 1706 and became minister there at the beginning of the following year. In 1711 he carried out a marriage in Hawick Parish (after the death of the minister, Alexander Orrock) and he preached in Hawick in 1712 during the dispute over Rev. Robert Cunningham's move from Wilton. In 1718 he was one of those appointed to examine the candidate for Schoolmaster in Hawick, and preached at least twice in Hawick, in 1721 and 1722. In 1719 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Walter Scott of Crumhaugh. In 1726 and 1737 he officiated at the baptisms of sons of his colleague Rev. Hugh Kennedy of Cavers. He paid the window tax at 'the mance' in Kirkton Parish in 1748. He died unmarried. A heart-shaped communion token inscribed 'K.K. 1734' (the earliest in existence from the Parish) dates from his ministry. John (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Landglands in Cavers in 1708. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Whitriggs in 1716 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. There were several marriages in Cavers that could be his. John (17th/18th C.) resident in Nether Tofts. His son Archibald was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1720. Other children baptised in Kirkton who were probably also his included: Archibald (b.1720); Thomas (b.1722); Robert (b.1724); Archibald (again, b.1725); John (b.1726); William (b.1728); Jean (b.1730); Walter (b.1731); Jean (again, b.1733); Isobel (b.1734); Janet (b.1736); and George (b.1738). John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Earlside in 1728 when he married Margaret Douglas and also there in 1729 when their son John was baptised. He could be the John who was in Eastcote in 1731 when his daughter Esther was baptised. There are several other children, baptised in Cavers, who could also be his. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Denholm in 1733 when his son John was baptised. He may have been related to James, who lived in Denholm at the same time. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Cavers itself in 1741 when his daughter Janet was baptised. Perhaps the same John was at West Middle in 1744 when his daughter Margaret was baptised and in Cavers again in 1747 when his daughter Elizabeth was baptised. John (b.c.1712) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Christian

Nichol and their children included: James (1743–1827); Janet (1743–1834), who married shepherd Ninian Elliot; Isabel (b.1748); Margaret (b.1751); Robert (b.1753); and Christian (b.1758). John (18th C.) piper who is recorded being paid in the Kirk Session records of the early 1700s. He may be related to the later piper of the same name. John (18th C.) merchant who was tenant at Braidhaugh in the Rule valley in 1740. It is unclear what his profession really was. John of Bonjedward (d.1760s) retoured as heir to his father George and grandfather William in 1754. He is already recorded paying the window tax at Bonjedward in 1748. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was the last Douglas 'of Bonjedward', although the family lands had already been lost (but he may have sold the last part to Archibald Jerdan in 1751). It is possible that he had a son Andrew who was factor at Bonjedward for the Lothian Estates in 1733. This branch of the family appears to have at some point failed in the male line. Lieut. John (18th C.) of H.M.S. Speedwell, made an Honorary Burgess in 1778. He may have been related to the local Douglases. Capt. John (18th C.) paid the window tax at Timpendean in 1753. It is unclear how he was related to other Douglases of Timpendean. Capt. John (d.1786) 17th Laird of Cavers, and also of Midshiels. He was the 4th son of Archibald to succeed to the Lairdship. He served with the Royal Navy, commanding H.M.S. 'Greyhound' in 1745, when he captured 2 heavily-armed privateers, and later commanded H.M.S. 'Unicorn', which helped take the privateer 'Marshal Broglie', belonging to Brest. He retired from the Navy about 1750 and then purchased Adderstonelee and Adderstoneshiel from Francis Scott of Gorrenberry (possibly his cousin). About the same time he also bought Midshiels from Scott of Crumhaugh, and was therefore sometimes known as 'of Midshiels'. He was also known as 'of Ederton' (presumably meaning 'Adderstone'). He may be the John 'of Adderstoun' listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. He is recorded in 1762 as one of the men raising an action against Henry, Duke of Buccleuch over the division of Hassendean Common. In 1765 he was named as one of the commissioners for assessing the boundaries of Wilton Common. In 1775 he was involved with Turnbull of Knowe in arranging the repair of the road leading to Hawick 'by the back of Meadshiells' and the road leading by Clarilaw and Newton to the main Turnpike road. He was listed (as 'of Adderstone') on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He succeeded to Cavers on the death of his brother Rev. Dr. James in 1780, but was already an old man by then. He was taxed for having 3 male servants in Wilton Parish in 1778 and 1779 and 4 in 1785. He was also taxed for having 5 female servants and 7 carriage horses in 1785, as well as for a carriage in 1786. He married Ann, younger daughter of Hugh Scott of Gala, who may have been the sister of his brother Archibald's wife. Having no male issue, he was succeeded by George, son of his cousin Andrew. John of Catshawhill (18th C.) recorded as owner of these lands in Lilliesleaf Parish in the 1740s, when valued at £195. He was listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. He may have been son of the previous John associated with these lands in Lilliesleaf Parish. John (18th C.) postillion (i.e. assistant coachman) at Cavers in 1779, when he was working for James Douglas. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded at Northhouse in 1784. He married Margaret Douglas and their children included Margaret (b.1784). John (18th/19th C.) servant at Longnewton, recorded in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. John (b.c.1770s) weaver in Hawick according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. He was later described as a stockingmaker in Hawick and was on the ballot again in 1801. Unnamed children of his died in 1811 and 1816. He could be the John who married Isobel Douglas and whose daughter Mary was baptised in 1793, with witnesses Robert and John Hardie. John 'Johnnie' (18th/19th C.) itinerant beggar known throughout the valleys of Yarrow, Ettrick, Eskdale and Liddesdale, his parish of origin being unknown. It is said that he never let his clothing go to rags, but replaced each item as necessary. He slept over winter in the barn of some kind farmer, then started his wanderings again each Spring. Communion services at the rural churches were his special pleasure. He died after a very short illness. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Chesters (Southdean) according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Hartsgarth in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He could be the shepherd 'James' taxed for having 3 non-working dogs at Hartsgarth in 1797. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Bewlie, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (18th/19th C.) servant at Belses, recorded in the Lieutenancy Book in 1797 and 1798, when he was balloted. He had not signed up by the end of 1798, but paid £10 in early

1799 to avoid serving. He was a hind at Belses on the 1801 Militia ballot. John (b.c.1770s) wright at Nether Burnmouth according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. John (d.bef. 1810) one of the last pipers in Hawick. He may have been related to the piper John who was mentioned in the early 1700s. The death of his daughter Betty is recorded in 1810; she may have been the Betty born to John and Isabel Hardie in Hawick in 1783. He may thus have been the John who married Isobel Hardie and whose children included: William (b.1777); Helen (b.1779); Betty (b.1783); John (b.1785); Margaret (b.1793); and Janet (b.1795). The witnesses in 1793 and 1795 were Robert and John Hardie (who were probably related to his wife). John (1778–1838) born at 'Greenna' in Castleton Parish, son of James. He was a joiner and cabinet-maker in Newcastleton, listed in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He was also an elder in the Parish. He was listed as male head of his family in 1835–38. In 1837 he was listed as a wright 'and saw mill'. He married Elizabeth ('Betty', 1779–1858), daughter of William Beattie, from Langholm. His wife worked as post-mistress in Newcastleton. In 1841 his widow (along with Christina and 2 joiner's apprentices) was living at about 6 Langholm Street. Their children were: Helen (1804–80), who married farmer James Elliot; James (1806–82), carpenter; Christina (1808–79), who married George Hall; William (1810–23); Janet (1815–47), who married farmer Thomas Elliot; Mary (1817–91), who married Langholm ironmonger Archibald Glendinning; Margaret (1819–97), who married shepherd William Robson; Walter (1822–99), who died in Santiago de Cuba; and John (1822–92), who emigrated to Mobile, Alabama. John (c.1780–bef. 1851) farmer in Cavers and then Minto Parishes before becoming tenant at East Essenside, where he is recorded in the 1841 census. He was tenant at Easter Essenside in 1843 when he witnessed a baptism for James Brydon. He married Elizabeth Turnbull in Cavers Parish in 1819. Their children (mostly baptised in East Bank Kirk) included: John (b.1820); Elizabeth ('Betsy', b.1822); William (b.1824); James (b.1826), who probably died young; Helen (b.1828); Andrew (b.1830); Agnes (b.1831); Robert (b.1832); Margaret (b.1834); and Thomas (b.1837). In 1851 his widow was living at Easter Essenside with his eldest son and several of his children. John (18th/19th C.) tenant at Ashkirk Mill, recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He married Mary Hood and they had 3 sons: James (b.1821); John (b.1823); and George (b.1825), who became a Methodist minister. He emigrated to Montreal in 1831, after failing fortunes as a miller, with his family following in the next year. In 1830 he wrote a letter to Margaret Usher, wife of his brother William, to inform her of William's death; it is preserved in a museum in Ontario. John (1779–1856) 7th Marquess of Queensberry, inheriting the titles (including Baron of Hawick) from his elder brother Sir Charles. He married Sarah, daughter of James Sholto Douglas, and was succeeded by their son Archibald. John (1786–1851) shoemaker of Hawick, who was Treasurer for the Relief Kirk. He was recorded as a Howegate shoemaker on Pigot's 1837 directory. He was listed at about 13 Howegate in 1841. His widow Elizabeth (b.1788/9) was still there in 1851, along with her brother John Kedie, tobacconist. He was also listed in Slater's 1852 directory (although deceased by then). Dr. John (1788–1861) local doctor and philanthropist, who was younger brother to Agnes, Mary and Robert. He was born in Hawick, son of Robert (also a doctor), with his mother being Margaret Aitchison, niece of William Oliver, 'Auld Cash'. Note that there is an earlier doctor of the same name recorded in Selkirk in 1733, who could possibly have been related. Athletic in his youth, he excelled at several sports, and retained an interest in gymnastics throughout his life; he boasted of his ability to jump across Wilton Dam when he was young. He was also known for his literary interests and his writing and speaking abilities. He appears to have studied medicine in Edinburgh in 1809, and then served in the army, joining the 46th Regiment of Foot as a Surgeon's Mate in 1810, after receiving a medical diploma in London. He sailed for the West Indies and was promoted to Assistant Surgeon in 1811. In 1813 he transferred to the 8th Regiment of Foot and served during the American War, being based in Niagara in the campaigns of 1813–15. By 1814 he was in charge of the hospital in York (near Toronto), which treated the wounded shipped back from the front. He completed his medical degree in Edinburgh in 1815 and 1816, and he received a pension of half-pay after 8 years in the army, when he returned to Scotland. He then joined his father's medical practice in Hawick, being also joined by his brother Robert. As the most active doctor in the dominant medical practice in Hawick, he grew to be a much respected member of the community, known for his generosity. In 1819 he published 'Medical Topography of Upper Canada', which was one of the only first person accounts by a surgeon in the War of 1812; the book also describes the topography of the region where he was stationed in Canada, as well as the standard of living of the Canadians and a description of the native peoples. He also wrote a detailed account of the cholera outbreak of early 1832, including details of his own bout with the disease (although propriety forbade him from discussing in detail the case of his sister Mary). And he is said to have fought valiantly in the 1849 cholera epidemic. Working with his brother Robert, the Douglas practice had the bulk of Hawick's medical business in the early-to-mid 19th century. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He is recorded as a physician on Damside on Pigot's 1825/6 directory and on the High Street in Slater's 1852 directory. He became a member of the Wisp Club in its second year. From 1831 he lived at 52 High Street (where the Victoria Hotel was built). He chaired the Coronation Dinner held in Hawick in 1831. In 1841 he was there with his siblings Robert, Agnes and Mary, as well as his wife Jane (from Teviothead) and daughter Margaret. His brother Robert contributed less to the practice in his later years, and died in 1845. He then continued with Dr. McLeod as a partner, and left the practice entirely in his hands by the mid-1850s. He published several medical articles were said to be held in high esteem for the soundness of his views and clarity of his writing. In Hawick he helped edit books for publisher Robert Armstrong, and was particularly fastidious about punctuation. He also contributed to the Hawick Advertiser, writing obituaries of Elliot Aitchison, Capt. Thomas Scott of Shielswood and Hawick's Dr. Walter Graham. He donated items to the Archæological Society Museum, including: a 'brick from Babylon with inscription as deciphered by Colonel Rawlinson; 'Nebuchadnezzar, King of Kings and builder of Babylon'; Kaffir Chief's hunting sash; pair of sandals; Kaffir waterproof pail of plaited rush; Burmese idol of alabaster, &c.' in 1856, as well as a 'cluster of marine zoophytes' in 1857. He could be the John who was listed as a Steward at the 1836 Common-Riding Races. In politics he was a Liberal, and strong supporter of the Reform Bill. In 1851 his children were Margaret, Mary and Robert, and his sisters Agnes and Mary still lived with them. In 1861 his widow Jane and children Margaret and Mary are recorded at 52 High Street. He appears to have married late in life, his wife probably being Jane Aitchison (who may thus have been a cousin of some sort), daughter of William Aitchison, farmer at Linhope. Their children were: Margaret (b.1840); Mary (b.1841–1915), who married Walter Pringle (son of manufacturing founder Robert); and Robert (1845–61), who died of consumption only a couple of weeks before his father. Three young children of his also died within a few weeks of each other. A portrait of him exists (although its whereabouts are unknown). He was well-known for his literary interests, and believed to be the author of some anonymous 'jeux d'esprit'; it has even been suggested that he wrote the words for 'Pawkie Paiterson' (although it is more generally attributed to 'Soapy' Ballantyne). He was also a supporter of the local literati, sharing the hospitality of his home with Thomas Pringle, William Knox and Henry Scott Riddell. The only surviving poem of his is 'The Sunflower', which was taken down in shorthand by James Jamieson and later published in the Hawick Advertiser (and in 'Living Bards of the Border'). He was a sought-after speaker, the last such occasion being at the centenary event for Burns' birth, held in Hawick in 1859. He was said to have often treated people without fee or reward, and to attend to patients irrespective of their social status. At his funeral, all the shops on the High Street closed as a mark of respect. Partly as a result of his efforts during the cholera outbreak, he had a Memorial erected in his memory in Wellogate Cemetery, in what was once an ornamental annex. This was constructed in 1879 in the form of a decorative drinking fountain, sculpted by Mr. Beveridge of Edinburgh, and probably the most grandiose monument in the entire cemetery. It (unusually) contains a likeness of him, and the inscription reads 'A skilful physician. An accomplished scholar. A public spirited citizen. A wise counsellor, and a charitable and sympathising friend to the poor & suffering during a lengthened professional career in this town and district.' John (b.c.1790) agricultural labourer in Southdean Parish. In 1841 he was living at Bairnkine with his wife Janet and children George, Margaret, Janet and Adam. John 'Douglas the Brave' (b.1800) Selkirk mason, known for casting the colours for the hammermen for 55 years in succession, lastly in 1887. He met both Sir Walter Scott and the Ettrick Shepherd and was said to be the last surviving participant in the Carterhaugh Baa, saying that after Gala switched sides 'Nae wonder that Selkirk and Hawick even yet canna get on wi' Gala'. The Hammermen pay a visit to his grave each Selkrik Common Riding. John (b.c.1800) born in Jedburgh Parish, he was a shepherd in Southdean. In 1841 he was a labourer at Ashtrees and in 1851 and 1861 was shepherd at Doorpool. He married Agnes Oliver in 1835 and their children included: Robert (b.1836); Eliza Robert (b.1837); George (b.1840); William (b.1842); Thomas (b.1845); and James (b.1847). In 1841 their household also contained: Adam (b.c.1827); John (b.c.1829); and Elizabeth (b.c.1831). John (19th C.) married Mary Linton in Hawick in 1835. John (b.1814/5) joiner living on the High Street. He was at about the top of the Millport in 1841 and 1851. He was listed on the High Street in Slater's 1852 directory, and was also listed as a 'turner'. His wife was Agnes, and their children included Andrew, John, James and William. John (b.1820) son of John and Elizabeth Turnbull, he was born at Stobs in Cavers Parish. He was tenant at East Essenside like his father. He had 2 bronze 'celts' that were found on the farm in the 1880s, and also in 1856 presented to the Archæological Society an 'ancient mill' found on Castleside Hill. In 1851 he was recorded at Easter Essenside as farmer of 120 arable acres and 380 acres of pasture, as well as employing 3 labourers. In 1854 in Hawick he married Alison Munro Scott (1828–97), daughter of Charles Scott; she was a cousin of Sir James A.H. Murray. Their children included: Margaret Scott (b.1855); Eliza (b.1857); Alice (b.1859), who probably died young; Ellen Mary (b.1860), who married Roberton Schoolmaster Thomas Wilson; Agnes Mcewen (b.1862); John (b.1864); Charles (b.1866); Alice (again, b.1868); and Elizabeth Williamina (b.1871). Sir John James see Sir John James Scott-Douglas John Sholto (1844–1900) 9th Marquess of Queensberry, with other titles including Baron of Hawick. He married Sibyl Montgomery and later Ethel Weedon. He served as a representative peer for Scotland at the House of Lords 1872–80. He is best known for introducing the 'Queensberry Rules' for boxing. He is also remembered for the libel suit brought against him by Oscar Wilde after he had publically objected to the liaison between Wilde and his son Lord Alfred Douglas, the suit eventually leading to Wilde's conviction for immoral conduct. His first son Francis pre-deceasing him and he was succeeded by his second son Percy. An absurd caricature of his ghost appeared in the animated series 'Mike Tyson Mysteries'. John (1903–65) born in Hawick, son of John and Barbara Handyside. In 1931 he married Jemima ('Mina', 1902–93), daughter of John Ekron. Their children were: Mina (b.1935), who married John Carruthers; and Charles (b.1940), who married Margaret Wilson. John (20th C.) served as 4th Treasurer for the Congregational Kirk. John member of Hawick Saxhorn Band for more than 60 years. Katherine (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. Lady Katherine nee Rigg (17th C.) wife of Sir William the 11th Laird of Cavers. She was daughter of Thomas Rigg of Atherne and Euphemia Monipennie. Her aunt Janet Rigg married Sir Walter Riddell of that Ilk, and she was descended from John Row of Perth, a colleague of John Knox. Known as 'The Good Lady Cavers' (or 'the Guid Leddy o Cavers'), she turned Cavers house into a Covenanting centre, sheltering the famous preachers Peden and Cargill. She also had her own private chaplain, Adam Abercorn. Along with her husband, she was an ardent supporter of the Covenanters. As a result her eldest son William was removed from her and placed in the care of tutors appointed by the Privy Council. Widowed in 1676, 3 years later she was ordered to hand over her infant sons as punishment, but refused to do so; this was on account of her having her children educated at home, instead of in the way prescribed by the men appointed as their tutors. She was pursued by the King's advocates Sir John Nisbet and Sir George Mackenzie and the infamous commissioner Urquhart of Meldrum. Although no real evidence could be produced against her, she refused to swear an oath and was declared guilty. She was imprisoned first in Edinburgh Tolbooth, and then spent 2 years in Stirling Castle. The fines imposed on her were several times larger than her estates could support, and as a result her tenants were expected to pay additional rent, to which they tried to appeal. She is said to have encouraged Covenanter preachers to hold meetings on her estate, this including Samuel Arnot, Donald Cargill, Thomas Douglas, Alexander Peden, Archibald Riddell, Matthew Selkirk, Gabriel Semple, John Welsh, David Williamson and the former tutor to her children, James Osborne. After her son William returned from abroad he paid the fines and presented a bond that she would either conform within 14 days or leave the country; she chose the latter, spending her last years in exile in England. However, she appears to have returned to Cavers after the Restoration and died there. Her story is described in the book 'The Ladies of the Covenant' (1851) and there is a chapter dedicated to her in 'The Covenanters of Teviotdale' (1908). Malcolm of Mains (16th C.) witness in Jedburgh in 1576 to the 'bond of manrent' between several Borderers and Archibald, 8th Earl of Angus. The other witnesses were William of Bonjedward and his son George. He was recorded as 'Malcolme Dowglas of Manys'. In 1580 he was the keeper of 'Scot's Hob's Gavin' Elliot and others held in Blackness Castle, who presented the prisoners to the Privy Council. Margaret (b.c.1376) illegitimate daughter of William, 1st Earl of Douglas. The name of her mother is not known. She was gifted the unentailed lands of Bonjedward by her half-sister Isabel Douglas (while ther brother George obtained the entailed lands), and thus she was the first Laird of this line of Douglases. This was in 1404 (although it is possible it was a confirmation of an earlier grant). She married Thomas, son of John of Johnstone (but it is unclear who exactly he was), who changed his name to Douglas in order to inherit. They were succeeded by their son John. She was still alive in 1425. Margaret 'the Fair Maid of Galloway' (d.c.1474) daughter of Archibald, 5th Earl of Douglas. When her 2 brothers were killed at the 'Black Dinner' in 1440, she was left as the sole heir and gained the Lordship of Galloway. She married her cousin William, who became 8th Earl of Douglas, and after he was killed she married his brother James, who was 9th Earl. However, she later married John Stewart, 1st Earl of Atholl. With her 2nd husband she had 2 daughters: Janet, who married Alexander Gordon, 3rd Earl of Huntly; and Elizabeth, who married Andrew, 2nd Lord Gray. Margaret 'Dame Margaret', Countess of Bothwell, see Margaret Scott. Margaret (17th C.) sister of Sir William of Cavers. She married John Douglas (who died in 1616), minister of Kilbucho and later Robert Livingstone, minister of Skirling in 1631. Her children with her first husband were William and James. Margaret (17th C.) daughter of Archibald of Greena. In 1634 she was served heir to her father's lands. This included Greena, Purvinen and Burnmouth in Liddesdale as well as lands near Duns Kirk. Her father was described as a servant to the Earl of Morton. Margaret (17th C.) daughter of advocate William Douglas. In 1684 she and her sister Jean were served as joint heirs to the Lordship and Barony of Jedforest, as well as the Barony of Chirnside, after reversion from their brother James about a decade earlier. Margaret Violet nee Pringle (1800–68) only daughter of Mark Pringle of Fairnilee, Clifton and Haining. Her brothers John and Robert were M.Ps. in Selkirkshire and each in turn succeeded to the family estates. She succeeded to Haining and Clifton on the death of her brother Robert in 1842. However, after litigation, Clifton went to Robert Kerr Elliot of Harwood in 1845. She also held the lands of Easter Alemoor in 1845. She married Archibald Douglas of Adderstone, and after her husband's death in 1860 she was one of the principle landowners in Kirkton Parish. Their only child was a daughter, Anna Elizabeth, who married John Pattison; she was the 'Mrs. Anne Elizabeth Pringle or Pattison' who paid the land tax on Adderstone and North Synton in about 1874. Mark (16th/17th C.) clerk of Glasgow Diocese. He was notary in 1606 for the sasine of the lands of Hobsburn and Weens, sold by Thomas Turnbull to John Scott. He may thus have been attached to Hobkirk Parish or one of the other neighbouring parishes. Mark originally from York, he had family connections with Hawick. He trained in architecture in Edinburgh, becoming a registered architect in 1981. He worked in Edinburgh and Carlisle and from 1993 was Building Conservation Officer with Borders Regional Council, later becoming team leader of the planning department's heritage and design section. He was involved in setting up the Heart of Hawick Townscape Heritage Initiative, as well as the Hawick Conservation Area Regeneration Scheme, and managed the Tower Mill and Heritage Hub projects. He is an enthusiast for the building designs of J.P. Alison. Martin (15th C.) recorded on a document of 1523 when James Routledge paid him for part of the lands of Crook. He was also recorded in 1529/30 in an instrument of resignation by William Routledge, tenant of half of the lands of Crook. The resignation was to 'an honourable man, James Douglas of Caueris, in name and on behalf of Martin Douglas'. It is unclear who he was or how he was related to James, who was Laird of Cavers at the time. Martin (16th C.) listed in 1566 among men who were to be entered with the Warden of the Middle Marches. The record states that Richard Rutherford of Edgerston was to enter 'Martine Dowglas at Howanturk' (but it is unclear where this might be). Martin of Tofts (16th C.) witnessed a sasine of 1579 for the lands of Midshiels and Appletreehall. William of Cavers 'gave sasine' and James 'younger of Cavers' was a witness, so he may have been a near relative. It is unclear how he was related to the later Martin. Martin of Crook (16th/17th C.) son of William of the Crook. He is recorded in the 1581 document whereby William granted lands within Crook to his son James, this being part of a promise made before the marriage contract between his son Martin and his wife; this suggests that he was the elder son and heir. Also in 1581 he was listed as heir in his father William's will. His wife's surname was given as Hoppringle in 1581, but curiously her first name was left blank. In 1592 he was son and heir of the deceased William when he had the disposition of the 'mails' of Crook (extending to 40 shillings and 7 merks), as well as the kirk lands of Hassendean and Cavers, given by Melrose Abbey. He had a precept of 'clare constat' for inheriting his father's land of Crook, with the agent of the superior of the lands (James Douglas of Lochleven, Commendator of Melrose) being William Scott 'in Hawik'. In 1592 his 2nd son John received a 'letter of pension' from the Commendator of Melrose. In 1608 he is 'of Toftis' when he was served heir to his uncle Archibald, brother of his deceased father William of Crook; he thus seems to have held both the lands of Crook and Tofts. In 1615 there was a confirmation of the tack of the teinds, patronage and vicarage of Kirkton received earlier from George Douglas; his son William is also mentioned. Mary nee Kerr (1677/8–1736) daughter of Robert Kerr, Marquess of Lothian. She was the 2nd wife of James, 2nd Marquess of Douglas. Her children were Archibald, 2st Duke of Douglas and Lady Jean Stuart. After the death of her husband in 1700 she was known as the Marchioness Dowager of Douglas. She died in Edinburgh and is buried in Holyroodhouse Chapel. Mary (d.1859) daughter of James of Cavers and sister of James. In 1857 she married William Elphinstone Malcolm of Burnfoot in Dumfriesshire. Her only child Mary was born soon afterwards and would succeed to the Cavers estate on the death of her uncle James in 1878, later marrying Capt. Palmer. Mary see Mary Palmer-Douglas. Matthew (16th C.) listed in 1566 among men who were to be entered with the Warden of the Middle Marches. The record states that John Rutherford of Hunthill was to enter 'Mathow Dowglas'. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Douglases. Matthew (d.bef. 1759) apparent minister of Cavers. His daughter Isobel is recorded marrying James Newbigging in Edinburgh in 1759. However, this would appear to be an error for Charles. Mungo (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'Kentigernum Douglas' in 1517 when he was on the panel of 'retour' for Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. Mungo (16th C.) name of two men recorded in 1541 as 'mongo dowglass', presumably one was senior and the other was junior. This was on a list of associates of James of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. Oliver son of Tim. He is Assistant Curator of the Museum of English Rural Life in Reading. Percy Sholto (1868–1920) 10th Marquess of Queensberry, also Baron of Hawick. He was 2nd son of John, the 9th Marquess, his brother Francis Archibald having predeceased their father. Peter (18th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1745. He was imprisoned for not paying a bill, for drinking the health of Charles Stewart and for assuming to himself extraordinary names, such as Prince Charles'. Ralph (16th C.) recorded along with George in 1563 when William Gourlay ordered them to remove themselves from lands in Cavers owned by Andrew of Friarshaw. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as uncle of the Laird of Bonjedward. He was surety (twice) for James, brother of John Oliver in Strynds (Strange). It is unclear which Douglas of Bonjedward may have been his father. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded in Oxnam Mains in 1502. Along with his other brothers Adam, Henry, Simon and George, he had remission for several crimes. This included kidnapping William Colville of Ravenscraig, Robert Boyd and John Kennedy and holding them for ransom in 'Leven', as well as destroying 3 horses from the same men, stealing a sword, a shield and a purse from them and planning to murder William Colville of Ochiltree. Ralph Ker of Primsideloch was their surety. Along with his brother Henry, he separately had remission in 1502 for stealing cattle from William Colville from Sunlaws, as well as occupying his lands of 'farnesyd'. Robert of Lochleven (d.1513) son of Sir Henry of Lochleven Robert and Elizabeth Erskine. In 1508 he was recorded as former superior of the Lordship of Liddesdale and other lands, which were inherited by Adam Hepburn. He married Elizabeth, daughter of David Boswell. He is probably the Robert who is recorded being 'in Langnewtone' in 1508 when he was on the panel of 'retour' for Adam Hepburn in the Lordship of Liddesdale. He could be the same Robert who had a sasine for Longnewton in 1476; in 1510 he was fined for not appearing at the Justice Aire in Jedburgh, for not giving suit for his lands of Longnewton.

An illegitimate son of his, John, became Archbishop of St. Andrews. He died at the Battle of Flodden, along with (it is said) his oldest son, Sir Robert. However, his son Robert inherited Lugton in 1514. In 1522 his grandson Robert had a sasine for Lugton, as well as a precept for the Barony of Langnewton. A later descendant was jailer to Mary, Queen of Scots. Robert (16th C.) grandson of Robert and heir apparent of Robert of Lochleven in 1522 when he had a sasine for the lands of Lugton. He also had a precept from Chancery for the Barony of Langnewton. Robert (16th C.) son of Sir William of Drumlanrig and younger brother of Sir James who granted Hawick its charter of 1537. He became Provost of Lincluden Abbey in Nithsdale in about 1547, the last to hold that office. He appears to have endeavoured to profit during the Reformation, when eccelsiastical property was dispersed. On one occasion he was rebuked for using the seal of the cLincluden College without the permission of the prebendars. Shortly before 1560 he made arrangements for much of the estate of Lincluden to be transferred to himself, and in securing the support of the Bailie of the College, Sir John Maxwell of Terregles, the prebendars tried to revolt against him; however, he ultimately retained much of the property. Indeed, he and his heir (his nephew, William, later Earl of Queensberry) had a special clause in the Annexation Act of 1587 (in which most church property went to the Crown), allowing them to benefit from the fruits of Lincluden for their lifetimes. He settled in Greenlaw after the Reformation, on an estate formerly belonging to Lincluden. In 1571 he was declared a rebel for supporting the Earl of Arran, but he avoided punishment by declaring himself a Protestant. In 1588 he was charged with the murder of Sir Robert Maxwell of Dinwiddie, but seems to have again escaped any penalties. He appears to have had no legitimate children. However, he was said to have been father William Douglas, younger of Baitford or Pinzerie, who was probably actually his grand-nephew; this William was hanged in Edinburgh in 1610 after appealing to him at Greenlaw (evan although this was surely long after he had died). Robert 'Hob' (16th C.) recorded in 1540/1 when he was among a list of Scottish rebels who were 'reset' in England. His name is given as 'Hobbe Douglas of Bunjedward', and he was further stated to have been delivered to the Scottish Wardens at Coldstream. He may have been a son of George of Bonjedward. He is probably the same 'Robert Douglas, brother to the Laird of Bone-Jedburghe' (William at that time) who was 'found caution' in 1537 for the burning of Cunzierton and the slaughter of William and Andrew Hall. Robert of Todholes (16th C.) 3rd known son of Sir James of Cavers and Elizabeth Murray. He was younger brother of the next Sir James of Cavers, as well as William of Friarshaw. He could be the Robert of Cavers who witnessed a transaction in Selkirk (involving land in Hassendeanbank). He married Helen Douglas, who was heiress of 'Todheils' (also written 'Todalia', 'Todholes' and variants). Perhaps the same Robert of Todholes was Master of the Horse of the Earl of Angus in 1583 and had his lands forfeited at the Scottish Parliament in 1584. In 1604 he was surety for a burgess of Edinburgh. Robert (16th C.) son of Sir James and Christian Kerr and brother of Sir William of Cavers. He is easily confused with Robert of Todholes, who was his uncle. He was explicitly recorded in a list of 1585 of men who had been supporters of the King and had forfeitures and other legal processes on them lifted. However, he may alrady have been dead by then, the service being much earlier (since his brother William was already succeeded by his son James). He could also be the Robert of Cavers who was among men complained about by George Oliphant of Bachiltoun in 1607. Robert of Nether Hassendean (16th C.) recorded in a decree of 1588, along with Robert Scott, where they were ordered to turn over all documents concerning the lands of 'the Hilton' of Wester Hassendean. Robert (16th C.) son of William in Crook. In 1581 he, along with his mother Bessie Scott, was bequeathed the lands specifically pertaining to his father (perhaps meaning those held in 'liferent'. He was therefore presumably a younger son, with his brother Martin being the heir to Crook. He was also given 'the acre of land in ye kirktoun swyre and ye rig and yr peite medow callit fart...'. Robert of Brieryyards (16th/17th C.) recorded in a loan document of 1588, involving the lands of Roughlee and Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst. He is also included on a long list of local men whom the Baron of Hassendean issued with a 'summons of removal' from their lands in 1603. He is probably the Robert who was served as heir to his father John of Brieryyards in 1606. The lands he inherited were Easter and Wester 'Rouchlie', 'Rowchlienwik', 'Breirbuss' and the 20-shilling lands of 'Quhitsyde'. Robert 'Hob' (16th/17th C.) servant to Martin Elliot. He was listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. Robert (16th/17th C.) member of the court of James VI, who was rewarded in 1605, along with James Maxwell, with the former Debatable Lands. These were erected into the Barony of Tarras. However, in 1607 the two men brought a case against many Armstrongs and others who had tried to prevent them from possessing the lands. He was explicitly stated to be an equiry of the son of James VI. A second Act of 1609 mentions Maxwell, but not him. Robert (16th/17th C.) brother of William of Whitriggs. In 1612 he, along his brother and William Stewart, all servants of James of Cavers, was accused by Gavin Elliot of Brugh of attacking his family on their way home from Cavers Kirk. However, the group were acquitted after swearing that the claim was untrue. It is possible that the was the 'Hob Douglas in Quhytrig' who was captured as a fugitive in Dysart in Fife in 1610 (along with a servant of William Middlemas of Chapel and others). Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1616 as brother of George of Friarshaw and also brother of William. He was thus a younger son of William, 1st of Friarshaw. He and William (along with William's son Robert) were accused of attacking some residents of Lilliesleaf and harassing tenants of the Riddells. Robert (17th C.) resident in Hawick Parish. He was married to Helen Somerville. Their children included Isobel (b.1640), Bessie (b.1647) and Robert (b.1651). Witnesses to the 1640 baptism were James Scott and William Douglas. Robert (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. He is probably the shoemaker listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Robert (17th C.) carrier in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers' list for the new Kirk bell. He was listed separately from the shoemaker of the same name. He could be the Robert who was fined in 1687, along with a group of other men, for clandestinely removing their sheep from the Town's flock, without paying the Town Herd. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. His son John was baptised in 1699, with witnesses William (who was probably related to him) and William Gledstains. Robert (17th/18th C.) from the Trows family. His daughter Janet married Walter Deans from Wilton, who farmed at Howahill. It is possible he was the Robert son of James born in Cavers Parish in 1697. He could be the Robert in Earlside whose children baptised in Cavers Parish included Janet (b.1726) and Esther (b.1728). Robert (18th C.) last proprietor of the small inn at Highend in Rulewater. He had 3 daughters who were probably: Janet (b.1726); Easther (b.1728); and Agnes (b.1732). Each daughter married a farmer in Hobkirk Parish. Robert (b.1716/7) weaver in Hawick. He was nephew of Robert Wight, who owned lands at the Spetch and grandson of James Wight who first purchased the lands. His mother must therefore have been a Wight. He served as bailie for his cousin James Wight, when he sold his land at 'Spetchinhaugh' to Thomas Turnbull of Fenwick. He gave evidence in 1764 at the court case regarding the division of Wilton Common. He married 'Nicholas' Scott and their children included: Archibald (b.1743); James (b.1745); and Janet (b.1747). Merchant George Scott witnessed the baptism in 1743 and so may have been related to his wife. In 1745 he witnessed a baptism for weaver James Roger. He is probably the Robert who witnessed a baptism for Archibald (likely his son) in 1774 and along with Archibald witnessed a baptism for weaver David Miller in 1773. It is possible that he was father of both Dr. Robert (whose father was probably also Robert) and Archibald (who may be the Archibald who witnessed baptisms for Dr. Robert). He may be the Robert who rented Hawick's best mortcloth in 1772. Robert (18th C.) probably a younger son of Thomas, and grandson of Sir William of Cavers. He was a planter in Jamaica, and was named in the will of his cousin Rev. Dr. James Douglas as being next in succession after Andrew and Archibald (probably his older brothers). Gen. Robert (1727–1809) younger son of advocate George of Friarshaw. In 1745 he was Captain in a regiment of the Duke of Ancaster and in 1747 was Captain in a Scottish regiment raised by the Earl of Drumlanrig for the Dutch service. He rose to Lieutenant-General in 1794. In 1754 he married Helen, daughter of Lieut.-Gen. de Brauw and died at Zirikzee. He had 4 sons and 4 daughters, with descendants who served in the Dutch Army. Dr. Robert (d.1829) doctor in Hawick, whose connection with earlier local Douglases is not known. However, he is probably the 'Dr. Douglas', whose father Robert's death is recorded in Hawick in 1781. He may be the Robert who was recorded as a medical student in Edinburgh in 1769. He was a surgeon in the navy, and later established a medical practice in Hawick, being based at Damside. He was one of the local people who subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). He paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1785–97. He married Margaret Aitchison in Hawick in 1781; she is just 'Mrs Douglas' in the baptismal records of their children, which all appeared together in 1792 (suggesting they belonged to another congregation, perhaps the East Bank Kirk). She was niece of William Oliver, 'Auld Cash', and named in Oliver's will. Their children were: Robert (1782–1845), doctor in Hawick; Agnes (1785–1858), who wrote the 'Auld Brig' poem; Henrietta (1787–87), who died young, her name being recorded in Hawick's death records as 'Henny'; Dr. John (1788–1861), also a surgeon in Hawick; and Mary (1790–1850s). The witnesses to the baptisms were William Oliver (probably 'Auld Cash') and Archibald (who was surely related). Rev. Robert (1747–1820) son of Rev. John of Jedburgh. He was licensed to preach by Haddington presbytery in 1769 and ordained as minister of Galashiels in 1770. He is sometimes called 'the father of Galashiels', being a great promoter (and financial supporter) of the manufacturing industry in the town and establishing the Galashiels Library. He was a friend of Sir Walter Scott and sold him part of the estate that became Abbotsford. In 1797 he obtained a D.D. from Aberdeen. He married Robina Lothian from Edinburgh. Their children were: George, a Glasgow merchant; Helen, who married Rev. John Thomson of Maxton; Arabella; and Beatrice. He wrote 'General View of the Agriculture in the Counties of Roxburgh and Selkirk' in 1798, which is a useful early record. Robert (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Haddon and their children included Laurie (b.1775) and Andrew (b.1776). Robert (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Dunn and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1777. Robert (b.1774) son of Archibald and Janet Kedie. He was a hosier in Hawick and also a commission agent, perhaps leaving the area. He is probably the weaver of this name recorded in the ballot for the Militia in 1799, and still on the list in 1801. In 1800 he married Catherine (perhaps also known as 'Sally'), daughter of manufacturer William Beck; she died in Edinburgh in 1829. Their children included: Margaret or 'Peggy' (b.1801); Archibald (b.1803); Janet (b.1806); Catherine (b.1807); Catherine (again, b.1810); Elizabeth (b.1812); William (b.1814); and Sarah (b.1817). Robert (b.c.1770s) servant at Greenhill according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. Robert (b.c.1780) shepherd at Northbank in Southdean Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Dr. Robert (1782–1845) elder brother of Dr. John, and son of Robert and Margaret Aitchison. He was born in Hawick and was engaged as a medical officer, seeing active service through the entire Peninsular War. Walter Wilson wrote in 1874 of how he would recount his war exploits, including being at the Battle of Corunna (in 1809); he also told a story of how he lay flat for longer than usual after an explosion, with a soldier saying 'Oh! oor grand doctor gane at last; he has a pair of capital boots – I'll hae them', at which he sttod up and said 'I'm not quite gone yet'. After this he returned to Hawick as a surgeon, joining his father's practice at Damside, and later helping his younger brother, Dr. John. He was probably the Robert who matriculated in Edinburgh as a medical student in 1798, but only studied there for a year, joining the Royal Army Medical Corps in 1802. He was recorded as one of the first members of the Hawick Curling Club in 1803. He was one of the doctors involved in the murder case in 1814, resulting in Hawick's last hanging. He apparently liked to tell stories of his time in the war, one example being a recounting of a dangerous retreat, when the men would lie flat to avoid injury from bomb blasts, and he lay too long; one of the men spoke out that their doctor was dead and he would have his nice boots, to which he replied 'I'm not quite gone yet'. His premises were on Damside (i.e. Victoria Road). He is recorded at Damside in Pigot's 1825/6 directory, but unlike his brother John was not listed as having an M.D. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1830. He is probably the Robert who served as a Steward at the Common-Riding Races in 1834. He and John are listed as physicians on the High Street in Pigot's 1837 directory. In 1841 he is recorded as 'independent' at the home of surgeon John on the High Street. He was said to be of 'enfeebled health in his latter years', resulting in him being a less active doctor in Hawick than his brother. Robert (18th/19th C.) ploughman at Chapelhill, recorded on the ballot for the Militia in Roberton Parish in 1812. He could be the Robert, son of Robert, baptised in Roberton in 1779. Robert (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Abigail Armstrong and their children included John (b.1817) and Robert Armstrong (b.1822). Robert (1794/5–1880) Liddesdale farmer. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. In 1851 he was farming 40 acres and employing 4 labourers at Hewsbridge. In 1861 he was at Dinlabyre, farming 2,000 acres and employing 5 men. In 1879 he occupied the chair at the celebration of the jubilee of Rev. John Black, since he was the oldest member of the congregation at that time. His wife was Janet and their children included Elizabeth, James, George, Agnes, Jane, Robert and Archibald. Robert (19th C.) married Janet Michie in Hawick in 1841. Robert (1819/20–95) shepherd in Castleton Parish. He married Elizabeth Robson, who died in 1888, aged 55. They are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. He could be the shepherd from Traquair who was at Old Larriston in 1861. Samuel (d.1679) from Cavers Parish. He was among the 200 men who died on 'the Crown of London' when it shipwrecked off the Orkneys and the captain refused to unlock the hatches to let the prisoners save themselves. The ship was transporting Covenanters to America after their capture at Bothwell Bridge. Simon (15th/16th C.) recorded in Swinside in 1502. In 1502, along with his other brothers Adam, Robert, Henry and George, he had remission for several crimes. This included kidnapping William Colville of Ravenscraig, Robert Boyd and John Kennedy and holding them for ransom in 'Leven', as well as destroying 3 horses from the same men, stealing a sword, a shield and a purse from them and planning to murder William Colville of Ochiltree. Ralph Ker of Primsideloch was their surety. He also separately had remission in 1502 for stealing oxen from William Colville. Stephen (15th/16th C.) Commissioner of the Archdiocese of Glasgow. At the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1502 it is recorded that he repledged William Watson and John Beirhope as chaplains. He was 'master stevin' when listed in 1504 among tenants, dependents and associates of the Archbishop of Glasgow who were given remission for certain crimes; he is listed after George of Bonjedward, along with Andrew, John, Robert and William, some of whom may have been relatives. In 1516 he is recorded as Commissary of Teviotdale in a document for George Ker, Prebendary of Auld Roxburgh. It is unclear if he was related to local Douglases. Stephen of Timpendean (16th/17th C.) son of Andrew, he was the 5th Laird. In 1611 Robert, Burgess of Jedburgh (possibly a relative) was caution for his appearance at court in Jedburgh. In 1617 he was among Border Lairds who renewed their bond for keeping the peace. In 1631 he was one of the men accused by the minister of Longnewton of taking his teinds. In 1595 he married Jean, daughter of Andrew Haliburton of Muirhouselaw. Their children included: John, who succeeded; and Andrew, probably indweller in Edinburgh, who was deceased in 1656 when his son John became a cordiner's apprentice there. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in 1590 along with George 'Pealman' and Thomas Ainslie of Swinside when they were accused of a raid into England 3 years previously. His surname is written 'Dugles', which seems likely to be Douglas; he was presumably related to George and they were probably relatively local. Thomas (16th C.) recorded as 'Thomas Dowglas of Cavers' when he was witness to a letter of assurance of the Turnbulls in 1595. He could have been a younger son or brother of Sir James, 8th of Cavers. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as heir apparent to Whitrig in 1637 when he witnessed a sasine for lands in Maxton. This is presumably Whitriggs in Cavers Parish. He was probably son of William of 'Quhitrig', recorded in 1622. Thomas (1615/6–86) buried in Greyfriars churchyard, with a lengthy inscription on his gravestone. He is described as a 'son of the ancient and noble family of Cavers, citizen and merchant in Edinburgh'. He was 'twice city baillie, and twice suburban baillie, and with the greatest applause of justice and integrity'. The monument was erected by his cousins Richard Douglas and Robert Bennet, advocates, and Robert Blackwood, merchant in Edinburgh. He could be the Thomas, 'son to the late James Douglas of Cavers' who in 1634 became an apprentice merchant with John Ker in Edinburgh. Dr. Thomas (d.1686) descended from the Douglases of Friarshaw. He was a son of Andrew of Friarshaw and Jean Home of Polwarth. He was a doctor in London and married the daughter of a Lord Mayor of London. He died in Dublin without issue and his brother Henry succeeded. Rev. Thomas (c.1635–95) from an unknown branch of the family, he graduated M.A. from Edinburgh University in 1655 and was ordained at a church in London. He was accused of holding conventicles in 1671 and denounced as a rebel in 1674. He was present at Rutherglen in 1679 when the acts of parliament relating to religion were burned and declaration fixed to the cross there. He was also present at the Battle of Drumclog in 1679 and then preached at conventicles in the south of Scotland. He spent some time in London and became minister at Wamphray after the Revolution in 1690. He left a widow in poor circumstances, and although she made a financial arrangement for a tombstone, it is said that this was never realised. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Waterside in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. He could be the same Thomas listed on the 1694 Hearth

Tax rolls for Southdean Parish. Capt. Thomas (17th/18th C.) described as 'brother-german' of the deceased Laird of Cavers in about the 1680s. He was thus presumably brother (or half-brother) of Sir William of Cavers and son of Sir Archibald. He was commissioned as a Captain in the Earl of Mar's Regiment of Foot in 1679, replacing James Murray of Philiphaugh. During the Killing Times he was on the side of the government and was said to have 'committed much outrage and spoil' in Galloway. He is specifically associated with the murders of William Hunter and Robert Smith at Kirkcudbright in 1684 and of Robert McWhae in Borgue Parish in 1685. After the Revolution he switched sides and served in Flanders, where he reached the rank of Lieut.-Col. Thomas (17th/18th C.) married Janet Buckham in Bedrule Parish in 1692. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His son William was baptised in 1695. Thomas (b.1677) 5th son of Sir William Douglas, 11th Laird of Cavers. He was born posthumously. He is probably the 'Mr. Thomas Douglas Brother German to Cavers' who appears on a list of Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1708. He was recorded as 'Mr Thomas Douglass brother to Cavers' in 1716 when he witnessed a baptism for cooper John Turnbull in Hawick in 1716. He may have been a teacher or preacher of some sort (or 'Mr' was just in deference to his status). He is probably the Thomas 'in Linthaughlee' who was involved in bonds (with his brother Archibald and nephew William) to William Scott of Whitehaugh in 1727 and 1729. He married Jean, daughter of Andrew Pringle of Clifton and Haining, possibly in Selkirk in 1706. His children included Andrew, merchant of Suffolk Street, London, whose son George succeeded to Cavers. Capt. Archibald and Robert were probably younger sons. Some accounts give him a son Thomas, which is incorrect. He was also probably the father of Violet, who married John Oliver of Dinlabyre. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His daughter Isobel was baptised in 1704. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Denholm. His daughter Margaret was baptised in 1708. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Earlside. His daughter Violet was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1708. It is hard to separate his children from those of Thomas in Denholm; possible children included John (b.1700), William (b.1702), James (b.1706), William (b.1707), Katherine (b.1710), Thomas (b.1711), Jane (b.1713) and Thomas (b.1715). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Crook in 1741 when his son Robert was baptised in Cavers Parish. Other children of his probably included: William (b.1739); and William (again, b.1743). He may also be the Thomas described as tenant in Kennel in 1744 when his twins Elspeth and Bessie were baptised in Cavers. He may have been related to earlier Douglases who lived at Crook. Thomas (b.c.1715) tenant in Burnhead in Wilton Parish. His father James lived at 'Broadlees' (which sems to be Braidlies near Brieryyards). He also lived with his father for a while at Midshiels, around 1740. He married Euphan Douglas (from Cavers Parish) in 1749. Their children included: Peter (b.1750); Thomas (b.1752); Margaret (b.1754); John (b.1757); Agnes (b.1759); Euphan (b.1761); and Archibald (b.1765). The witnesses in 1759 were Thomas Scott and James Dryden. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children included an unnamed child (b.1745), Archibald (b.1748), Isabel (b.1750), Janet (b.1752) Margaret (b.1755), John (b.1759) and Thomas (b.1761). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, recorded at Clarilaw in 1772. He was probably related to William, who also lived at Clarilaw. He married Jean Harvey in 1770 and their son James was baptised in 1773. The witnesses were James Dryden and James Martin. Thomas (18th C.) recorded in Cavers in 1780 when his unnamed child was baptised. Perhaps the same Thomas was at West Middle in 1788 and 1790, with children including Thomas (b.1788) and Alexander (b.1790). It is possible he is the Thomas whose children, baptised in Cavers, Betty (b.1778), an unnamed child (b.1782), included Martha (b.1791), Euphan (b.1793) and an unnamed child (b.1796). Thomas (18th/19th C.) gardener in Hawick. On a list of local volunteers in 1803 he was listed as being above age but willing to serve. Thomas (18th/19th C.) from Wilton Parish, in 1787 he married Nelly Ferguson from Cavers Parish. Thomas (18th/19th C.) from Cavers Parish, in 1791 he married Sarah Winthrope, who was from Lilliesleaf. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His son Thomas was baptised in 1794. Thomas (1771–1820) 5th Earl of Selkirk, youngest son of Dunbar, 4th Earl. He was Lord Daer after the death of his brother and became Earl of Selkirk on the death of his father in 1799. He was a Fellow of the Royal Societies of Edinburgh and London. He used some of his fortune to settle poor Scottish families in Canada, particularly in the Red River valley. He was partly an owner of the Hudson's Bay Company and was involved in confrontations with the Métis people, who already occupied these lands. He spent much of his money defending himself in court and died in France. He married Jean Wedderburn-Colville and was succeeded by his son Dunbar. There are many places (towns, mountains, streets, etc.) named 'Selkirk' after him in Canada. His daughter Isabella (d.1830) is buried in Holyroodhouse Chapel. Thomas (b.c.1780) servant at Penchrise according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. Thomas (b.c.1780) servant at Horsleyhill in Minto Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Thomas (b.c.1780s) shepherd at Broadlie according to the ballot for the Militia in Roberton Parish in 1812. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Isabel (or 'Betty') Reid and their children included Robert (b.1807) and Betty (b.1807). The baptisms were recorded in both Cavers Parish and East Bank Kirk. William (b.1801), Jean (b.1803) and Nelly (b.1805), baptised in Cavers, may also have been his children. Thomas (18th/19th C.) innkeeper in Lilliesleaf. He subscribed to Andrew Scott's book of poetry, printed in Kelso in 1811. Thomas (b.c.1805) agricultural labourer. He was living at Harecleuchhead in Kirkton Parish in 1841 and was shepherd at Hawick Shiel in 1851. He married Wilhelmina ('Mina', 1810–92), daughter of John Amos. Their children were: Isabella (b.1833); William (b.1834); John (b.1836); Mary (or Marion, b.1839); Thomas (b.1842); Robert (b.1846); James (b.1849); and Alexander Hogg (b.1852). Thomas (b.1809/10) born in Hobkirk Parish. He was an agricultural labourer at Tythehouse in 1841. In 1861 he was a carter at Bairnkine Toll-bar, recorded as 'Carrier & Hawker of Groceries'. His wife was Ursula and their children included Isabella, Elizabeth, James, John, William and Jane. He may be the Thomas who in 1868 donated to the Museum a 'pair of Pincers, found while cutting a drain in the farm of Commonside, not far from the Catrail'. Thomas 'the King' (19th C.) one of the last residents of the hamlet of Unthank in Hobkirk Parish. He is mentioned by Walter Deans in his history of Unthank. Thomas (b.1825/6) from Nisbet, he was a stockingmaker in Hawick. In 1851 he was living on the High Street and in 1861 at 12 Round Close. He married Jessie Oliver in Hawick in 1849 and their children included Robert, Christina, Euphemia, John and Isabella. Thomas 'Tom' (b.1869) son of George, who farmed at Wester Hyndhope. He was tenant farmer at Ruletownhead and a keen supporter of the Jedforest Hounds. He may be the Thomas who was recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874 as owner of the farms of Ruletownhead and Gatehousecote. He was also recorded as owner of Gatehousecote in the Land Tax Rolls from about the end of the 19th century. Timothy G.O. 'Tim', 'Timmy' (1943–) born in Hawick, from a well-known local farming family, he was brought up at Gatehousecote near Bonchester, and later took over the farm there. He began to write poetry while in Australia in 1969/70 and resumed 10 years later following a back injury. 'The Lambing Man' was his first published poem and he had several broadcast on Radio Scotland. His poetry features countryside themes, as well as rugby verses, several of which are published in 'Country Places' (1983) and others in 'Borderline Ballads'. He also lyrics for some Henry Douglas songs, e.g. 'A Glorious Gloat' about the 1984 rugby Grand Slam. He has 4 children, including Oliver. Walter (15th/16th C.) uncle of Sir William Douglas of Cavers and so presumably a brother of Sir Archibald of Cavers. In 1488/9 he was Vicar of Hassendean when he was bound not to interfere with the rights of the Abbot of Melrose to the 'erde siluer of ye quer of ye said kirk of hassinden' (i.e. the fees charged for burials in the kirk choir). In 1491/2 he was recorded as Vicar of Hassendean when he witnessed a sasine for lands in Denholm and Cavers. In 1492/3 he was Vicar of Hassendean when he witnessed the confirmation of Rutherford and Wells to James Rutherford. In 1500 he was a witness to the grant of the lands of Feu-Rule by their superior, Sir William of Cavers, to Andrew Kerr of Over Crailing (possibly later of Ferniehirst). He is recorded along with George as 'Sir Walter Douglas vicar of Hassendean my uncles', with Archibald also mentioned. He is thus the earliest known minister of Hassendean. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Scott and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1648. The witnesses were James Riddell and Andrew Murray. Rev. Walter (1674–1727) son of William of Bonjedward. He was minister of Linton from 1698. He was a member of the General Assembly in 1724. He may be the Walter who married Jane Weir in Roxburgh Parish in 1699. Their children included: Elizabeth; Isobel, who married Rev. Charles, minister of Cavers; and Wilhelmina, who married a Dalkeith doctor. Elizabeth may have been baptised in Oxnam Parish in 1703. The pediment of his tombstone, bearing the Bonjedward family arms and motto ('Honor et Amor') are over the door of the church vestry at Linton. A sermon notebook of his is held in New Collage Library. Walter (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1717 he married Bessie Gray, who was from Easter Burnfoot Mill. Their children included: Robert (b.1718); Walter (b.1720); Susanna (b.1722); and Mary (b.1727). The witnesses in 1720 were Walter Purdom and Michael Scott and in 1722 were John and Robert Wilson (both in Wilton). Walter (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His son Walter was baptised in 1737. Walter (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included Walter (b.1746), Margaret (b.1748), Andrew (b.1750) and Henry (b.1754). Walter (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. He was married in 1759 (with no bride's name recorded) and his son John was baptised in 1760. Walter (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included: Margaret (b.1761); Archibald (b.1763); Mary (b.1764); Esther (b.1766); James (b.1771); Agnes (b.1773); and Helen (b.1775). He could be the Walter who married Margaret Purdom in Hawick in 1760. Walter (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He married Christian Goodfellow and their children included: Christian (b.1762); Isabel (b.1765); Christian (again, b.1767); Walter (b.1769); Walter (again, b.1773); Janet (b.1777). The witnesses in 1762 were John and Archibald and in 1765 and 1767 were the whole congregation. He may be the Walter whose marriage (with no wife's name given) is recorded in Kirkton Parish in 1759. His wife may be the Christian, daughter of John Goodfellow, baptised in Kirkton in 1735. Walter (b.1762/3) dyer in Hawick. He was from somewhere outside Roxburghshire. He married Margaret Paisley and their children included Walter (b.1824/5). Walter (1780–1850) son of James and Christian Scott, he was born in Castleton Parish. He is probably the Walter listed as a stable servant at Liddel Bank in 1797, when he was working for William Oliver, and also listed at Liddel Bank on the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1801. It is said that his sister Helen was a great favourite of William Oliver of Dinlabyre, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, and it was through the Sheriff's influence that he became established as an innkeeper in Edinburgh. In 1841 he is listed as hotel keeper and spirit dealer at the Douglas Hotel on St. Andrew Square in Edinburgh. He married Elizabeth Hardie in Edinburgh in 1803 and their children were James, Janet, Harriot, Christina, Janet, David Hardie, Elizabeth Hardie (who married her cousin Newcastleton joiner James Douglas), Col. Walter and Robert Hardie. Walter (b.1783/4) tailor on the Sandbed, listed in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He may be related to the earlier tailor of the same name. He was a tailor on the Round Close in 1851 and a master tailor at Myreslawgreen in 1861. His wife was Janet and she had daughters Agnes McMath and Helen McMath. He was one of only 11 residents of the Town who were on the 1803 Militia list and still alive in 1862. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Agnes Stewart. Their children included: William (b.1813); and Ebenezer (b.1821). Walter (19th C.) married Barbara Witherstone in 1824, the marriage being recorded in both Wilton and Cavers Parishes. Walter (b.c.1800) mason in Hawick. He was living at about 73 High Street in 1851 and at 1 Orrock Place in 1861, when listed as being married. Walter (b.1813/4) frameworker in Hawick. In 1841, 1851 and 1861 he was living at 2 Kirkgate, with his wife Willimina (or 'Minnie' or 'Mina') and children Mary, Alexander, Helen and William. He married Mina Bell in Hawick in 1839. Walter (19th C.) married Janet Elliot in Hawick in 1847. Walter (b.1824/5) son of dyer Walter, he was a wool spinner in Hawick. In 1851 and 1861 he was living at 16 Howegate with his family, along with his mother Margaret Paisley. He married Barbara Halliday in Hawick in 1849. Their children, baptised in Hawick Free Kirk, included: Mary (b.1852); Walter Paisley (b.1852); and Margaret (b.1854/5). Walter (b.1825/6) wool spinner in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 39 Loan with his wife Agnes and children Agnes, John and Thomas. Walter (b.1829/30) frameworker in Hawick, son of agricultural labourer William. In 1851 he was living with his parents at Leahead in Wilton Parish. In 1861 he was living in Wilton Dean with his wife Euphemia C. and children Helen, William and Christina. He married Euphemia Chisholme in Wilton in 1854. Walter (1839/40–1911) Hawick born, he was apprentice at Weensland Mills and then cashier for William Elliot & Sons. He was an early player of cricket in Hawick, being secretary of the Albert Club in the late 1850s. He was also involved with Hawick Bowling Club (being Secretary from 1865) and was Treasurer of the Common-Riding Committee. He married a sister of Provost Hogg, and they had 4 daughters and 5 sons. William (1174–1213) perhaps the earliest known Douglas in the family pedigree. His origin is unknown, but he must have held the lands of Douglas in South Lanarkshire. He lived before there is any known connection between the Douglases and the Borders; however, in 1174 he witnessed a charter of the chapel and castle of Peebles to Kelso Abbey. In 1213 he witnessed a charter to the Earl of Menteith (which was inspected by the English King in 1261). He probably married Margaret, sister of Freskin of Moray. His children probably included: Sir Archibald, Lord Douglas; Brice or Bruce, Bishop of Moray; Hugh, Archdeacon of Moray; Freskin, Parson of Douglas and Dean of Moray; Henry, who witnessed a charter for Kelso Abbey and was a Canon of Spynie; Alexander, Canon of Spynie and Vicar of Elgin; and Margaret, who married Hervey de Keith, Marischal of Scotland. It seems likely he was son of Theobald the Fleming. Sir William (d.bef. 1274) probably son of Sir Archibald (although these early generations are unclear) and brother of Andrew. He was referred to as 'Long-leg' because of his height. He held the lands of Douglasdale, but also held lands elsewhere, including in Northumberland. He is probably the William recorded in a Newcastle court case in 1256, in which his underage son William is also mentioned. In 1259 he had an agreement with Sir Hugh of Abernethy, over the marriage of his son Hugh to Aberthethy's sister Margerie; the dowry included lands in Chamberlain Newton. He denied being at the siege of Alnwick Castle, against the English. He and his wife 'Custancia' are mentioned in 1269 in relation to their lands of Fawdon in England. He married Constance of Batailm and their children probably included: Hugh, who married Marjory Abernethy; Sir William 'le Hardi'; and Willelma, who married William of Galbraithe. William of Midlothian (13th C.) son of Andrew. He was also known as William of Hermiston. He is mentioned in charters in 1276 and swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. Sir James of Laudoun or Lothian was probably his son, making him grandfather of Sir William of Liddesdale and ancestor of the Douglases of Morton. He also had a son Andrew of Cresswell, who was witness to a charter of Sir William of Liddesdale in 1351 (described there as Sir William's uncle). Little else seems to be known about him. Sir William 'le Hardi' or 'the Hardy' (1240–98) the Douglas starting with whom the family pedigree is secure. He was probably son of Sir William and younger brother of Hugh; however, some genealogies have different suggestions. He was recorded in 1256 along with his father Sir William, regarding lands in Northumberland. He was severaly injured in 1267 in an attack on these English lands by Gilbert Umphraville, Lord of Redesdale. He was the first to call himself 'Lord of Douglas', this in a document of 1289 with the Abbot of Kelso. He firstly married Elizabeth, daughter of Alexander Stewart, 4th High Steward of Scotland. He secondly married Eleanor, daughter of Matthew de Louvaine and widow of Sir William de Ferrers; Edward I complained to the Guardians of Scotland that she had been abducted. In fact he spent some time imprisoned for this and was fined £100. He was released in 1290 and in 1291 swore fealty to Edward I along with other Scottish noblemen. Failing to support King John Baliol, he was imprisoned in Scotland. However, he later sided with the Scots and was made Governor of Berwick, where his forces fell to the English in 1296 and he was once more imprisoned, but released when he signed the Ragman Roll. He was the first nobleman to join William Wallace in 1297, but was imprisoned by the English one last time later in 1297. He died in the Tower of London. Note that His 'manor of Faudon' was Fawdon near Newcastle, and not Souden. His sons were: Sir James 'the Good'; Hugh 'the Dull'; and Archibald of Liddesdale, Cavers, etc. He died in prison in London. William Lord Douglas (d.1333) eldest son of Sir James 'the Good'. He incorporated the 'bloody heart' into his arms, representing the heart of Robert the Bruce that his father had died in taking it to Jerusalem. He may be the William 'Seygnour de Douglas' who, along with his uncle Archibald, held the lands of Swinton from Coldingham Priory in 1333. He died accompanying his uncle Sir Archibald to the Battle of Halidon Hill. He was still a minor when he died and his titles passed to another uncle, Hugh 'the Dull', who was a Canon of Glasgow and Parson of Roxburgh. His brass seal matrix was discovered in a burial vault in North Berwick in 1788; dating from about 1332, it shows the earliest example of the use of the Douglas heart. Note that he has sometimes been mistaken in genealogies with 'the Knight of Liddesdale'. Sir William of Lothian, 'the Flower of Chivalry' or 'the Knight of Liddesdale' (c.1300–53) son of Sir James of Lothian. Note that he had an older half-brother with the same name who was illegitimate (and this has confused some historians). He was godfather and guardian of Sir William, Lord of Douglas, with whom he is also sometimes confused. His name occurs several times in inventories of Coldingham Priory in the period 1332–53. He was Warden of the Marches in 1330 (probably being appointed on the absence of 'the Good' Sir James). In 1331 he had a charter for the lands of Lochurd (within the Barony of Kirkurd, whose superiority was held by the Scotts). He stood against Edward Baliol, but was captured at Lochmaben in 1332, and spent 2 years in captivity. After returning to Scotland he helped expel Baliol and his followers. He was recorded at the Parliament convened at Dairsie in 1335 and in that year took part in a battle with Flemish soldiers (acting for the English King) at Edinburgh Castle; in leading them over the Border, he narrowly avoided capture by the Earl of Percy and was wounded in the ear, with his brother James being killed. Later in 1335 he was part of the force that killed Baliol's Lieutenant, the Earl of Atholl, at the Battle of Kilblain. He then helped liberate some Scottish castles from the English, supporting Robert the Steward when he turned patriot, and went to France to get aid, returning with French ships. He was wounded again during this time, but took part in the liberation of Perth in 1339. He may have first gained lands in Liddesdale through marrying Elizabeth (or Margaret) Graham of Abercorn, this being around 1338. In that year he marched to take possession of Hermitage, gathering provisions from an English convoy intercepted at Melrose on the way. He probably had the square towers built at the corners of Hermitage Castle. For the next few years he focused on liberating Teviotdale from the English, and by 1342 controlled all of it except for Jedburgh and Roxburgh Castles. In 1341 he led a small group of men who retook Edinburgh Castle from the English garrison through the ruse of jamming open the portcullis with a wagon with pretend provisions for the Castle. For these achievements he became known as the 'Flower of Chivalry', and gained the office of the Sheriff of Teviotdale and (honorary) Constable of Roxburgh Castle. He took part in a challenge of jousting combat by the English in 1341 (probably at Melrose) in the presence of King Edward, but injured his hand in the first encounter and could not fulfill the agreed number of contests; however, at the subsequent tournament held in Berwick, Sir Alexander Ramsay led the Scottish knights to victory (perhaps fuelling jealousy). He is probably the Sir William of Douglas (junior) who in 1341 received a crown charter of the lands in Eskdale and Ewesdale, which had belonged to Sir James Lovel (probably son of the Baron of Hawick) and William de Soulis. He was confirmed as Lord of Liddesdale in 1341/2, against a claim on the lands by Robert, the Steward of Scotland. He was referred to as 'Dominus Vallis de Lydel' in 1346, 1347 and 1351. He held the positions of Sheriff of Teviotdale and Keeper of Roxburgh Castle before the newly-returned King David granted them to Sir Alexander Ramsay for retaking Roxburgh Castle from the English. Angered and insulted, he had Ramsay captured while holding court in Hawick Kirk in June 1342, and then had him murdered (or at least starved to death) in Hermitage Castle. He was disgraced for this and spent 3 years in hiding, but was ultimately pardoned, apparently at a court in Hawick, shortly before the Battle of Durham. There he was given back all his lands and the Sheriffdom of Teviotdale and Governorship of Roxburgh Castle. He was additionally granted the lands of Aberdour, Atholl and Dalkeith; the King then had Liddesdale and Atholl swapped between him and Robert the Steward, and it was after this time that he was referred to as the 'Knight of Liddesdale'. He also had lands in Westerkirk, Staplegordon and Polmoodie given to him by Hugh 'the Dull', who was then chieftan of the Douglases. Sometime between 1342 and 1349 he is recorded as Lord of Liddesdale when he gave a grant of land in Little 'Nudref'. He was also Warden of the Middle Marches for some time during this period and there is some suspicion that he was dealing with the English in a potentially treasonous way. However, he commanded part of the Scottish force at Durham (also known as Neville's Cross) in 1346 and was taken prisoner there, being held in the Tower of London. In 1350 he was said to have been responsible for sending a gang to kill Sir David Barclay, who was suspected of killing his brother John. In 1351 he was sent back to Scotland to negotiate the ransom for King David, but returned to captivity without a deal. He was finally freed in 1352 after making a deal with Edward (to allow the English free passage through Liddesdale) and specifically agreeing to serve Edward III in all future wars, except against Scotland; he received Hermitage Castle and lands in Annandale and Moffatdale in return. He further agreed to allow his daughter and nearest male heir to be kept as hostages in England, while at the same time swearing allegiance to the Scottish King. However, shortly after returning to Scotland he was killed in Ettrick Forest by his kinsman (actually his Godson and chieftan, with whom he is sometimes confused) William, 1st Earl of Douglas. They presumably fell out over land, as well as perhaps the perception that he had sold out to the English in order to obtain his release. A fanciful version of the dispute between the pair is told in a ballad – 'The Countess of Douglas out of her bower she came, And loudly then did she call: It is for the lord of Liddesdale That I let the tears down fall' [T]. The location on Minchmoor was called Galsewood (or Galford), later renamed Williamshope, and it is said that a cross stood there for several centuries. His body was taken to Lindean Church near Selkirk and buried at Melrose Abbey. After his death his widow retained rights to Hermitage and Liddesdale and married Hugh Dacre. Their only daughter Mary spent time as a hostage in England, and married firstly in 1361 Reginald More of Abercorn and in 1365 Sir Thomas Erskine of that Ilk; she died in childbirth and her husband claimed liferent of Dalkeith on account of the child being born alive, resulting in an arranged duel between him and James of Lothian (as heir), although the duel was called off by the intervention of the King. In 1366/7 there was confirmation of a grant in 1351 he had given of his lands of Aberdour in Fife to his nephew James Douglas, presumably James of Dalkeith, son of his brother Sir John of Lothian; this was witnessed by his uncle Andrew and his older brother William. Sir William (c.1327–1384) 1st Earl of Douglas and Mar and Earl of Angus, son of Sir Archibald. He was grandfather of Sir William, 1st of Drumlanrig, and Archibald, 1st of Cavers. Raised in France, he was said by some to be a cruel nobleman and by others to be a shrewd patriot. He is easily confused with his kinsman (and originally Guardian) William, 'the Flower of Chivalry', whom he killed. Indeed he is sometimes also referred to as the 'Knight of Liddesdale' later in life. In 1342 he was granted several lands that had been resigned by his uncle Hugh Douglas, including the lands of Douglasdale, the Lordship of the Forest of Selkirk and the Baronies of Bedrule and Eskdale. It was said that he carried out a guerilla war on the English from Ettrick Forest. In 1351 he was among the men appointed to treat with England for the release of King David. He killed the previous Knight of Liddesdale in Ettrick Forest in 1353 (at a place called Galford or Galsewood, near the Glenkinning Burn); this other Sir William was his godfather and former guardian, and the 2 probably were in dispute over lands and power, although the precise details are unknown. In 1354/5 David II also granted him the lands previously belonging to his uncle James and father Archibald; this included Liddesdale (although still considered by the English to be held by Percy), the town, castle and forest of Jedburgh, Eskdale, Ettrick Forest (including Selkirk, Yarrow and Tweed), Bedrule, Cavers, Drumlanrig and many other lands; the new grant did not mention that the lands had previously been held by the other Sir William. In 1355/6 he was a negotiator with the English at Roxburgh and delayed them long enough for many Scots to flee or hide, leading the English to destroy houses and churches in the 'Burnt Candlemas'. In 1356 he was at the Battle of Poitiers, assisting the French (perhaps being detoured on a pilgrimage to pay penance for slaying the Knight of Liddesdale). That year he was also made Justiciar for southern Scotland and Warden of the East Marches. He witnessed charters during the reigns of David II and Robert II. He was made an Earl in 1356/7 and soon afterwards captured Hermitage Castle from Dacre and was made Lord of Liddesdale. In 1357 he had a confirming charter for all the lands that had previously belonged to his father Archibald and his uncle James, including Drumlanrig, which had been granted to him by Thomas, Earl of Mar (his brother-in-law). In 1358 he granted the 'advowson' of Cavers Kirk to the monks of Melrose Abbey, as well as giving them Penangushope and Cauldcleuch. In about 1360 he gave a confirming charter of the lands of Ringwood to Melrose Abbey. Sir William of Gledstains was then referred to as his Bailie of the Barony of Cavers; this marks a connection between the Douglases and the Gledstains of that Ilk that lasted several generations. In about 1361 he had a confirming charter for the Lordship of Liddesdale and other lands. His name occurs as owner of lands in inventories of Coldingham Priory in the period 1362–76. Along with some other Scottish noblemen, he was in dispute with King David over money being appropriated by him from an impoverished nation; however, he seems to have been party to a draft treaty of 1363 essentially giving up Scotland to the English King, which was rejected by the Scottish Parliament. He appears to have lived at Dalkeith for some time in the 1360s and gave up his barony there in 1370. After Robert II acceded to the throne, he was appointed Justiciar of Lothian, holding the position until 1374. In 1373/4 he gained the possessions of his brother-in-law Thomas, Earl of Mar. In 1378 he made a request to the Pope to establish a collegiate church dedicated to St. Bridget (presumably St. Bride's in Douglas, Lanarkshire) and to confirm the earlier establishment of the hospital at Holyrood (by his father Sir Archibald). He spent his last years repelling Border raids, and in 1378 he commanded the Scottish troops who defeated and captured Musgrave (then Governor of Berwick) near Melrose. In 1380 a large force under his command raided Cumberland and Westmorland; a counter-raid by the English is said to have carried the plague into Scotland. Around 1380 he witnessed a charter for Henry of Swinton and a confirming charter to Sir John of Swinton in 1382. In about 1382, with the help of the Earl of March, he succeeded in driving the English out of his lands of Annandale, and then in early 1384 he also drove them out of Teviotdale. After returning to Douglas Castle from Teviotdale, he came down with a fever and died there; he was buried at Melrose beside his uncle Sir James. He married Lady Margaret, sister and heir to Thomas, Earl of Mar, probably in about 1357. Through her he inherited several estates, including Cavers. After his death she secondly married Sir John Swinton of Swinton. He was succeeded by his son James (d.1388), who fell at Otterburn. His only other legitimate child was Isobel, who became Countess of Mar in her own right after the death of her mother in 1390. His illegitimate son George later became Earl of Angus; his mother was Margaret Stewart, widow of Thomas, Earl of Mar and Countess of Angus in her own right, who was also his sister-in-law (some accounts have claimed that they were married, but it seems clear she was his mistress). He also had an illegitimate daughter, Margaret, who married Thomas Johnstone and became the first Laird of Bonjedward. His seal bore a heart and 3 stars. Sir William (d.1421) 1st Baron of Drumlanrig, and also Baron of Hawick. He was the illegitimate son of James, 2nd Earl of Douglas, who granted him the Barony of Drumlanrig sometime in the period 1384–88 (the charter still surviving). However, he could only hope to claim other Douglas titles after the death of his aunt, Isabella, Countess of Mar. In 1389 there is a charter confirming that his mother and her second husband (Sir John Swinton of Swinton) would not molest him in the lands of Drumlanrig. He may be the Sir William given safe conduct to 'tilt' in London in 1390. He was knighted sometime before 1405 and had a passport of safe conduct (along with 24 horsemen, several of them Douglas kinsmen) to 'tilt' in England in 1405. He was granted the lands and Barony of Hawick sometime after the middle of 1406 by his cousin Archibald, 4th Earl of Douglas, 'for his service' (while the Earl was a prisoner in England); this was confirmed in a charter of 1407 by Robert, Duke of Albany. Indeed, in 1407 he was in England (with 16 other 'chivalers') as a hostage for the Earl of Douglas. He is probably responsible for building the castle at Drumlanrig, which is first mentioned in the time of his son. He witnessed a charter for Archibald, Earl of Douglas in about 1410. He was said to have taken and plundered Roxburgh Castle (then in the hands of the English) in 1411. In 1412 he received a confirming charter of the Baronies of Drumlanrig, Hawick and Selkirk from James I (written in the King's own hand, while he was a prisoner in England). In 1412 he was appointed by the Duke of Albany as an ambassador to negotiate with Henry IV for the release of James I and was thereby given a grant of safe passage to travel in England (accompanied by 40 knights and 80 other people). In 1414 he was among a few Scotsmen who had passports to visit England to negotiate for the King's return. Also in 1414 he witnessed charters for Michael Ramsay at Lochmaben and for Archibald, Earl of Douglas. In 1415 he was among a group of supporters of the Earl of Douglas who refused to pay customs to the King. In 1416 he and the Earl of Atholl were involved (unsuccessfully) in negotiations with the English over the release of King James I, and he was an attendant of the King when taken to France by the English. In 1416/7 he was alleged to have been approached by the English party that wanted the Scots to attack while the English King was in France, with the 'Foul Raid' happening as a consequence. He visited King James in France in 1420. He served in France in 1421 with the Earls of Buchan and Wigton and was present at the Battle of Beaugé, where the English were defeated, as well as at Fresnay-le-Comte, where the Scots were badly defeated and he lost his banner (later hung by the English at St. Mary's Church in Rouen); he was probably killed in this engagement. His son's 'retour' of 1427 states that he had been dead for 6 years; this means that he cannot have died at Agincourt in 1427 as some have claimed. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Robert Stewart of Durisdeer and Rosyth, and was succeeded by his only known son, Sir William. It was probably his daughter Marion who married Robert Chisholme of that Ilk. His daughter Margaret may have been mother of the illegitimate son of William Elphinstone, also William, who founded Aberdeen University. In 1410 he received Papal permission to marry 'Jacoba [Janet] de Douglas de Dalkeith', widow of Sir John Hamilton; they needed special dispensation because his new wife was related on both sides to his former wife Johanna Murray and also because he was related to Sir John Hamilton (both in the 4th degree of consanguinity). This suggests he was married 3 times. Sir William (d.1444) 2nd Baron of Drumlanrig, and also Baron of Hawick, son of Sir William. Note that these generations are confused, since there were several consecutive Williams (and he is sometimes stated to have died in 1458). In 1425 he witnessed a charter for Margaret, Duchess of Touraine and Countess of Douglas. In 1426 he witnessed a charter for Michael Ramsay at Lochmaben. He is recorded in a 'retour' of 1427 for his father's lands and titles, 6 years after his father's death. And the Baronies of Drumlanrig and Hawick were confirmed by his superior, Archibald, Earl of Douglas, in 1428/9. This suggests that he was a minor when his father died (and so may have been born in 1405/6). He may have been one of the hostages held in England in exchanged for James I in the 1420s. In 1429 there was an indenture between him and William Douglas, Lord of Leswalt, in which the Lord of Leswalt was to deliver to him the Castle of Drumlanrig, which he had held for 10 years. He is recorded in a local feu charter of 1433 granting lands at 'Byrkwode' (possibly the 'Duke's Wud') to Simon of Routledge, who was a Burgess of Hawick. It is therefore possible that he was the Baron who granted Hawick its original burgh of barony status, during his first few years as Baron. In 1437 he recovered the lands of East Mains near Hawick from Janet Murray, widow of James Gledstains; the panel decided that the lands had been held by his father Sir William. In 1450 his son William inherited his lands, and he was said to have been deceased for 6 years at that time. He was certainly already deceased in 1446, when a charter for the Scotts of Buccleuch was confirmed by the Earl of Douglas as superior of the Barony. He married Jane (or Janet), daughter of Sir Herbert Maxwell of Carlaverock, and was succeeded by his son, also William. He also had a daughter, Angelica, who married Sir Robert Innes of Innes. Sir William of Strathbrock (14th/15th C.) son of John and grandson of Sir John, who was younger brother of William, Knight of Liddesdale. He appears to have acquired the lands of Borthwickshiels from Sir Laurence Abernethy, probably through marriage. He is said to have been nephew of Helen Abernethy. He had a daughter who married George Crichton of Cairns, who was later Earl of Caithness. He granted the lands of Borthwickshiels to his son-in-law in about 1425. Sir William (c.1398–1437) 2nd Earl of Angus, son of George the 1st Earl and Mary Stewart. He succeeded his father around 1403, although since he was only about 4 years old, only some of the lands and titles went to him (including eventually Liddesdale and Jedburgh), the rest going to Archibald, 4th Earl of Douglas. In 1406 he is recorded as Baron of Cavers, when the Church was confirmed to Melrose Abbey. In 1409 he had a precept of sasine from the Regent for the Lordship of Liddesdale (although he must have been still a minor). In 1421 he was listed as one of the 21 hostages for the ransom of James I; although did not actually go into English captivity, he met the King at Durham on his release in 1424 and was knighted. He was a strong ally of his uncle, James I from 1424, becoming extremely powerful in south-eastern Scotland in the following decade. His name appears in an inventories associated with Coldingham Priory in 1426, in 1427/8 as 'Dominum vallis de Ledell et de Jedeworth forest' and in 1432/3. He was described as 'of Liddell' in 1427, although it is unclear if he ever had possession of Hermitage. In 1428/9 he directed his Bailie in Liddesdale to grant certain lands to his kinsman Archibald Douglas of Cavers. In 1430 he was a Commissioner to negotiate an extended truce with England. He was appointed Warden of the Middle Marches in 1433 or 1434, but died only 3 years later. In 1433/4 he witnessed an ecclesiastic gift by Archibald, Earl of Douglas. He was present at the Battle of Piperdean (in the Cheviots) in 1435 when an English force under the Earl of Northumberland was defeated. In 1436 he granted the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee to David Home of Wedderburn. In 1437 he was one of the noblemen who pursued those who had assassinated James I. In 1425 he married Margaret, daughter of Sir William Hay of Locherworth and Yester, the contract made in 1409 by his grandmother, Margaret, Countess of Angus and Mar; his wife survived him by almost 50 years. His children included: James, who succeeded as 3rd Earl; George, who succeeded as 4th Earl; William of Cluny; Helen, who married William, 2nd Lord Graham; Hugh, Rector of St. Andrews; and possibly others. However, after his death the reigns of power were effectively taken by the Black Douglases. Sir William 6th Earl of Douglas (c.1424–40) eldest son of Archibald, the 5th Earl. He was knighted at the age of about 4 by his great-uncle James I, when the twin Princes Alexander and James were christened. He seems to have been superior of the Barony of Cavers, as recorded in a document of about 1432, when

Cavers Kirk was confirmed to Melrose Abbey. He also held the Regality of Ettrick Forest. In 1437 he granted the lands of Primside to Andrew Ker of Altonburn. He succeeded his father in 1439, at the age of 14, gaining huge estates in Scotland. However, his power (and alleged extravagence) and the youth of King James II led to intrigues among other noblemen, ending with his untimely death in the event known as the 'Black Dinner'. He and his brother David were invited to dinner with the King in Edinburgh Castle, when it is said that a black bull's head was served at the table, this being the sign to seize the brothers, who were accused of unspecified crimes before a mock tribunal and then beheaded in the castle yard. This led to a weakening of the power of the Douglases in Scotland, presumably the real motive for the executions. He married Janet, daughter of David Lindsay, 3rd Earl of Crawford (while still aminor), but they had no offspring; she was still alive in 1482. He was succeeded by his granduncle, James of Balveny, who became 7th Earl; his sister Margaret inherited the Lordships of Galloway and Bothwell, while other lands reverted to the Crown. Sir William 8th Earl of Douglas (c.1425–51/2) eldest son of James, the 7th Earl, and twin brother of James. He was also Earl of Avondale and Lord of Galloway. He was knighted at the age of 5, when the twin sons of James I were christened. He succeeded to the Earldom of Douglas in 1443, and as a result of his marriage to Margaret, daughter of 5th Earl of Douglas, he gained the Lordships of Galloway and Bothwell; he thus re-unified the lands that had been divided after the 'Black Dinner', leading to some enmity between him and other noblemen, e.g. his distant relative, James, 3rd Earl of Angus. These lands included Bedrule, Ettrick Forest and Eskdale. He was appointed Lieutenant-General of Scotland at the age of 18. He had a sasine for the Barony of Hawick and other lands in 1446 (probably during the minority of Douglas of Drumlanrig). As superior of the Barony of Hawick, he confirmed the transfer of Branxholme and other lands in the Barony from Thomas Inglis of Manor to Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1446. It was also on his authority that Hawick Kirk became a canonry and prebend of the Collegiate Church of Bothwell in 1447. He was an instigator and one of the signatories of the Border laws document drawn up in 1448/9. Around 1449 there were raids that he (and his English counterpart, the Earl of Percy) led across the Border. Also in 1449 he was regranted the lands of Ettrick Forest and Selkirk by James II. He was Lord Warden of all the Marches of Scotland in about 1450, and appears to have split his time between his castles at Newark, Threave and Douglas. In 1450 he went to Rome, but heard that William Turnbull, Bishop of Glasgow, had joined the group working against his interests and stirred up trouble among his vassals. The King sent troops to raze Craig Douglas on the Yarrow; however, there was a reconciliation and in 1451 he was confirmed by James II in all of his lands and superiorities, including the Baronies of Sprouston, Hawick, Bedrule and Smailholm in Roxburghshire (which at that time were incorporated into the Barony of Sprouston). In 1451 he refused to grant a sasine to Sir William of Drumlanrig (and Hawick), since he was 'in the King's respite'. There are stories about his ruthless behaviour, which have no documentary support, but it appears his downfall may have been in forming an alliance with the Earl of Crawford. In any case, he was killed when attending a dinner with the King at Stirling Castle. The first blow may have been made by James II himself, with Sir Patrick Gray finishing him off and several others also stabbing the corpse. It was said that Bishop William Turnbull and others were involved in his downfall. In 1444 he married Margaret 'the Fair Maid of Galloway', daughter of Archibald the 5th Earl of Douglas, who was his cousin. He was buried at Stirling and succeeded by his twin brother James, who married his widow! William of Cavers (d.bef. 1440) son of Archibald and Margaret, he was the 2nd Laird as well as hereditary Sheriff of Roxburghshire. An existing sasine of 1432 records how he was given the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire, but with certain rights to his father, including the sheriffdom for the rest of his life. Despite conflicting accounts in some existing genealogies, it seems clear that there are additional Lairds in the mid-1400s, and that this William is distinct from the one recorded 2 decades later. He was succeeded by Archibald, who was Laird by at least 1448. William (d.1464) 3rd Baron of Drumlanrig, and also Baron of Hawick. He succeeded his father in 1450, after 6 years, suggesting he reached majority then (and so was born in 1428/9). He was probably the William of Drumlanrig who fought at the Battle of Sark in 1448. He also held the Baronies of Sprouston, Bedrule and Smailholm according to a charter of 1451. In 1451 he was also in dispute with his superior William, Earl of Douglas, who refused to grant him a sasine because he was 'in the King's respite'. In a charter of 1452

he resigned the Barony of Hawick into the King's hands in order to receive a new infeftment, and the associated sasine was confirmed to him, probably in an outdoor ceremony at the Mote ('super solum dictarum terrarum de Hawik'). He may have been the 'William of Douglas, younger', who witnessed one of Hawick's earliest known sasines in 1453. In 1456 he granted the lands of Whithope to Philip Turnbull. In 1459 he was regranted his lands in the Barony of Hawick, which had been in the hands of King James II 'for certain causes'. He was present at the 1460 siege of Roxburgh Castle (where James II was killed) and at the Battle of Alnwick in 1462, when he rode with the Earl of Angus to relieve the French garrison there. In 1463 he witnessed charters for Robert Charters of Amisfield, for Andrew Crichton and for Robert Crichton, all signed in Edinburgh. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir William Carlyle of Torthorwald. He was succeeded by his son, also William. He may also have had another son, James, who was witness to a sasine of 1489, where he is described as uncle of James of Drumlanrig. William of Cavers (d.1464) son of Archibald (and distinct from the William of 2 decades earlier). He witnessed a lease in 1445 (for lands in Borthwickshiels) along with his father Archibald and others. In 1450 he is Laird of Cavers in a letter of reversion from Walter, son of Andrew Ker of Altonburn for the lands of Blackpool in the Barony of Cavers, as well as a charter granting these lands to Walter (who was probably his nephew). He was listed as son and heir of Archibald when he witnessed the charter for exchanging Milsington and Heap in 1451. Along with his father he was created a Bailie of Liddesdale and Keeper of Hermitage Castle in 1452 by George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus (and Lord of Liddesdale), and was given the lands of Whitefield along with these responsibilities. Also in 1452 he was recorded as son and heir of Sir Archibald when he was granted the 40 merk land of 'Luthre' in Fife by James II. In 1456 he was on the panel that acquitted Andrew Ker of Altonburn of helping the English burn lands around Jedburgh. In 1456/7 he was witness to the sasine for Ewesdale passing from Robert Graham to George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus. In 1461 he was witness to a sasine of lands in the Barony of Branxholme, along with Archibald, his son and heir. In 1469/70 he was deceased when the Governorship of Hermitage Castle was given to Sir David Scott of Buccleuch; it is said that he and his son Archibald, 'schirafis', had certain lands for keeping the castle for 6 years. He was succeeded by his son Sir Archibald in 1464/5. His daughter Janet married John Ainslie of Dolphinton and another married Andrew Ker of Cessford. He may have had 2 other sons, George and Walter (vicar of Hassendean), who are recorded in 1500 as uncles to his grandson Sir William of Cavers. Note that another William was Laird of Cavers and Sheriff of Roxburghshire in 1470 when granted Mosspatrickhope, Braidlie and the Shaws, with the 'precept of sasine' following in 1472; it is thus unclear if there was one extra William in the line of Barons. William of Cluny (d.1475) 3rd son of William, 2nd Earl of Angus, and brother of the 3rd and 4th Earls. He was a guardian to James III during his minority and in 1462 he gained some of the lands forfeited by the Earl of Douglas and his supporters; this included Sunderlandhall in Selkirkshire, Traquair and Leithenope in Peeblesshire and Cranston in Midlothian, which were erected into the Barony of Sunderlandhall for him in 1464. He was thereafter sometimes referred to as the Lord of Sunderland or of Traquair. He was made Warden of the Middle and Eastern Marches in 1464, succeeding his brother, George, 4th Earl of Angus. He was also made Keeper of Douglas and Tantallon Castles. In 1470, Archibald (later called 'Bell-the-Cat') came of age, and he resigned Douglas and Tantallon to his kinsman. In 1471 Isobel (Sibbald), Countess of Angus, brought an action against him for withholding and spoiling grain, goods and rent from the lands of Tantallon, Abernethy and Bonkle, Pinnacle and Hawick. He may be the William who was recorded as Sheriff of Roxburghshire in 1471, but that seems more likely to have been a Douglas of Cavers. In 1471–74 he was recorded as Master Ranger of the Ward of Tweed when given Torwoodlee for his fee. In 1473 he also leased Galashiels, Blindlee and Mossielee. He died without an heir. William of Cavers (15th C.) recorded as Laird of Cavers and Sheriff of Roxburghshire in 1470. He was at that time granted Mosspatrickhope, Braidlie and the Shaws, with the 'precept of sasine' following in 1472. However, Sir Archibald was Laird at that time, and so it is unclear who he was, suggesting either another generation of Douglases of Cavers, or perhaps that a brother inherited (or similar). Perhaps the same William was recorded as Sheriff of Roxburghshire in 1471 in the Exchequer Rolls, with James as his deputy (although this could be William of Cluny, who was Ranger of Tweed, but there is no proof of this); in 1471 and 1473 probably this same William was given the lease of the Haining near Selkirk. Sir William (d.1484) 4th Baron of Drumlanrig, and also Baron of Hawick. He succeeded his father William in 1464. In 1464/5 he (or perhaps his guardians, if he was a minor) was involved in a dispute over the lands of Kirkton and Flex in the Barony of Hawick, against Alexander Gledstains, winning right to the lands; this probably followed the earlier William (his grandfather) of Drumlanrig's successful reclaiming of East Mains from Janet Murray (widow of James Gledstains). In 1470 he had an agreement with David Scott of Buccleuch over a sum of 200 merks, with the lands of Whitchesters as guarantee. In 1470 he had a marriage contract for his son and heir James with Janet, daughter of David Scott of Buccleuch; the dowry was 500 merks, and he agreed to infeft the couple in the East Mains of Kirkton as well as lands in Drumlanrig, while David Scott agreed to give the lands of Whitchesters to him 'in ward and relief'. In 1482 he was recorded along with his wife gaining a crown charter of lands in the Barony of Drumlanrig that he had previously resigned to the Crown; these were 'then held in chief of the Crown, not of Earl Douglas, as formerly', an arrangement that may also have applied to his Barony of Hawick. In 1484 he refused to join with the Duke of Albany and his cousin the 9th Earl of Douglas in their insurrection against the King; he joined the King's force at Lochmaben and was killed in a skirmish at Kirtlebank, also known as the Battle of Kirtle or Kirkconnel. He married Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Sir Robert Crichton of Sanquhar. His children included: James, who succeeded and married Janet, daughter of Sir David Scott of Branxholme; Archibald, ancestor of the 'Coscholgil' (or Cashogle) branch; Robert; John (perhaps the 'Dene Johne Dowglas' who signed the marriage contract for Elizabeth in 1496/7); Margaret, who married John, 2nd Lord Cathcart; Janet, who married William Somerville of Carnwarth; and Elizabeth, who married John Campbell, younger, of West Loudon. George, ancestor of the Douglases of Penzerie, may also have been his son. William (15th C.) brother of George of Bonjedward. He was recorded in a document of 1476 recording a lawsuit between the Somervilles and Ormistons over the lands of Blacklaw near Linton. William (15th C.) recorded as being 'of Denbray' when he was the second man listed (after William of Cavers) on the list of men being forgiven in 1488/9 by James IV for their support of the former King. It seems likely that his lands were at Deanbrae. Probably the same William 'in denebraa' was recorded in 1494/5 when he was charged to enter John Edmondson for the murder of Thomas Hoggarth. William (15th C.) uncle of Archibald, recorded in 1493 when William of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. He was once more cited in 1494/5, when the Sheriff was again his surety. It is unclear if he was uncle of the same Archibald (brother of another William) who was also listed in 1493 and in 1494/5. William (15th C.) brother of Archibald. He failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493; given that he was 'fratrem archibaldi', who was mentioned in the next case, it seems likely that they were both related to the Douglases of Cavers, but the exact connection is not known. He was also called in 1494/5, when stated to be brother of Archibald, and the Sheriff was fined for his non-appearance (as well as that of his brother). William of Hornshole (15th C.) listed among the 24 Roxburghshire men who had remission in 1488/9 for their support of the former King, James III, particularly on the field of battle at Stirling. In 1491/2 he witnessed a sasine for lands in Denholm and Cavers. He acted as surety in 1494 for the case of Walter Scott of Buccleuch trying to get damages from the Routledges who burned and pillaged Buccleuch. It seems likely he was closely related to the Douglases of Cavers, and is recorded as being 'of hornyshole' (and hence not the same as Sir William of Cavers, who may be the other 'William of Douglas' mentioned in the same 1494 decree). He may be one of the Williams on the inquest panel for Robert Elliot inheriting lands in Cavers in 1497/8. He may also be one of the 2 Williams on the panel for James Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick in 1484. William (15th/16th C.) referred to as being 'of Caverismilne' when he witnessed a document relating to George, Master of Angus inheriting titles and lands in 1499. It is unclear where this 'Cavers Mill' was. It is possible he was George's bother. Sir William (d.1506) 4th (or 5th) Laird of Cavers and Sheriff of Roxburghshire. He was son of Sir Archibald. It seems unlikely he is the William of Cavers recorded in 1470 (but these generations may still be confused). In 1482 he was Sheriff of Teviotdale when he protested against Walter Turnbull of Gargunnock, who had summoned him but not appeared. He gave a sasine for lands in Hassendean in 1483 and may have been the William who was first witness for a sasine of the lands of Boonraw in 1487. In 1484

he was sheriff of Roxburghshire when he gave sasine for the Barony of Hawick to James Douglas of Drumlanrig. He was said to have been a Warden of the Marches in his father's lifetime and was at the Scottish Parliament in Edinburgh in 1487. In 1488 he resigned his Barony in order to get a new charter from the King, James III. This was after he had promised to be faithful to the King and to defend him 'against all that live or die shall'; however, the King was assassinated only a few days later after Sauchieburn. It is said that he supported the King following a letter from the aged Earl of Douglas, who was imprisoned in Lindores. He had a remission (along with 24 other residents of Roxburghshire, including several tenants of nearby farms, and many Douglases) from James IV only a few months later for their 'treasonably being present against him in the field and battle near Strivelin, on St. Barnabas Day last by past' (i.e. Sauchieburn). In 1491/2 he gained from George Muirhead for his lands in Denholm and Cavers. In 1492 he was Sheriff for the retour of Walter Scott to Branxholme and Buccleuch and in 1494 for Alexander Erskine inheriting Synton. He gave a charter to Rutherford of that Ilk in 1493. In the earliest surviving Justiciary Court book, starting in 1493, he is recorded several times as Sheriff of Roxburghshire, being called to enter many men before the court (including the brothers William and Archibald, who were probably related to him); he appears to have been absent for reasons not given and was fined £310. He also served as surety for several people at the 1494/5 Justice-aire in Jedburgh. In 1497/8 there was an inquest before him to rule on the inheritance of the lands of Tillielee and Cauldcleuch by Robert Elliot; the Douglases on the panel were William, Archibald, Adam and (another) William. In 1498 he had remission (along with William and Archibald, surely his near relations) for communing 'with the rebels and traitors of 'Levin'. Also in 1498 he was involved in declaring a number of Rutherfords and others as rebels for the murder of Patrick Hepburn. In 1499 he witnessed the sasine for George, Master of Angus being infefted in the Lordships of Eskdale and Ewesdale. Also in 1499 he was superior of the lands of Feu-rule when they were resigned by the Colvilles and he granted them to the Kerrs in the following year; the witnesses were his uncles George and Walter, as well as Archibald (possibly his brother). He was Sheriff in 1500 in an appraisal of the goods of Philip Turnbull of Whithope; this document survives as an early example of local Scots. He was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1502. In 1502 he also was fined for the non-appearance of Robert, son of John Scott in Deloraine, for whom he had been surety. Additionally in 1502 he dealt with the escheated goods of James Morrison and Patrick Rufy. His brother Adam was also recorded in 1502 and also there was a document of 'respite and protection' to William, his son and heir, plus a group of Rutherfords and their kin, friends and tenants during the time he was in Denmark. In 1505 he was witness to the signing of a bond among Turnbulls at Caerlenrig. In 1505/6 he had an acquittance of 1000 crowns 'for all soumez of money or gudis restand awand apoun hym in the chekker rollis before 13 Dec. 1503'. He was on an inquest in Jedburgh for lands owned by the Homes in October 1506 and died before the end of that month. He was succeeded by his son Sir James, who received special consideration from the King in 1509 (probably when he came of age), where it was said that his father 'deit in defens of his realme and resisting the inimeis of Ingland and rebellis'. His elder son, William, had died earlier. Either he or his son William had a marriage contract in 1506 with Alison, son of George Douglas, Master of Angus (but he may have died before it was carried out). William (d.bef. 1506) eldest son of William of Cavers. He is recorded in 1502 as son and heir of Cavers. However, he died before his father and his brother James succeeded to the titles. It is possible he is the same man as William of Hornshole, recorded earlier, or the other William (with no designation) listed on the 1488/9 remission. William (15th/16th C.) recorded in Effledge in 1502. He and his brother Archibald had remission for stealing sheep from James Grahamslaw in Kames, with George in the Trows as their surety. William (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'Wilelmo Douglas in Pencress' when he was a Sheriff of Roxburghshire who gave sasine in 1508 to Adam Hepburn, inheriting his father's Lordship of Hermitage and other lands. He was presumably tenant at Penchrise, which was connected with the Douglases of Cavers around then. He was likely to be a close relative of James, who was Laird of Cavers at that time (possibly James' son William, later of Friarshaw). The sasine was carried out at Hermitage Castle and he was said to have 'took a black ox for the execution of his office'. William (15th/16th C.) brother of the Laird of Bonjedward, probably George. In 1502 he and his brother John (as well as Douglases in Swinside, Davidsons and the junior Laird of Riddell) were convicted and had remission for oppressing Sir William Colville of Ochiltree at his lands of 'hardanehed'. He may be the William, son of the Laird of Bonjedward , recorded in 1502 when he was found to be too infirm to appear before the court in Jedburgh. William of Bonjedward (15th/16th C.) suggested to have been the son of George of Bonjedward who inherited instead of his brother James. However these generations seem quite confused, and it is not clear that he existed at all. His son may have been George, 6th Laird. He may also have had children John, Jane, William and Hugh, who were siblings of this George. Hugh was separately referred to as son of William of Bonjedward and cousin of Archbishop John. Sir William of Glenbervie and Braidwood (d.1513) 2nd son of Archibald 'Bell the Cat'. In 1492 he was gifted the ward of the lands of James Auchinleck of Glenbervie, younger of Auchinleck and he married Elizabeth, his daughter; however, it took until 1509 before they obtained dispensation to marry (being too closely related). His father granted him the lands of Bothwell in 1504, but he lost it to Lanet Kennedy in 1510, receiving Braidwood in compensation. He accompanied his father and brother George to Flodden and fell there. One account says that he and 24 of his servants were cut down near the bridge over the Till, trying to protect the Douglas standard. His only son and heir Archibald of Glenbervie was father of Sir William, 9th Earl of Angus. Sir William (bef. 1480–1513) 6th Baron of Drumlanrig, son of Sir James, he was also Baron of Dalgarnock, Tibbers and Hawick. He is also occasionally known as 'the generous donor', although that title is more musually applied to his son Sir James. He is probably the 'filie domini de Drumlangryk' who was bequeathed 2 cows in the 1491/2 will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme. In 1492 he had a charter of Drumlanrig, as son and heir of James. In 1494 he was given the lands of West Mains and Crumhaugh by his father. His father died in 1498, but it is unclear if he succeeded right away. He was witness to a sasine in Dumfriesshire in 1489, when he was still heir apparent to his father William. In 1497 he held a letter of exemption from the juristiction of the Sheriff of Dumfries because of the enmity between them (he is already 'of Drumlanrig', although his father died in the following year, so there is some confusion here). In 1500 he had a charter for lands in Dalgarnock. In 1501 he had an agreement with George Scott over the lands of Laris, for which his father was superior. In 1502 he was fined for not appearing at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh (both for not 'giving presence' and not 'giving suit') for his lands of Hawick, as well as for Chisholme and Teindside. He is probably also the 'domino hawic' who at the Justice-aire in Peebles in 1502 served as surety for Alexander Horsburgh of that Ilk. He also served as a surety for Robert Grierson (one of the murderers of the Chaplain of Dumfries, and probably related to his brother-in-law, Grierson of Lag) at the Justice-aire in Dumfries in 1504. In 1507 he confirmed a charter of the 'Soltrelands' in Hawick to the Church of the Holy Trinity in Edinburgh. He had an alliance with the Maxwells and in 1508 helped Lord Maxwell drive Lord Sanquhar from Dumfries. In 1508/9 he had a charter for the Barony of Tibbers and documents record him repaying the money owed to the former Maitland owners. Also in 1508/9 he was on an assize for convicting Andrew Ker and others at the Judiciary Court in Selkirk. He was present at the Battle of Dumfries Sands in 1509 (between the Crichtons and the Maxwells and Douglases), where he was said to be responsible for the killing of Robert Crichton of Kirkpatrick; he was acquitted in 1512. In 1509 he was witness to a marriage contract between Archibald, son of George, Master of Angus, and Margaret Hepburn. Also in 1509 he signed a marriage contract between his daughter Janet and Sir Robert Maxwell. In 1510 he acted as procurator for Lord Maxwell at the Justice Aire in Jedburgh. Hawick was reaffirmed in its 'burgh of barony' status through his charter of 1511, granted by James IV. This charter renewed Douglas' right to the Hawick lands granted in 1412 (while enacting the rights of the town), which had been removed by the King in 1510. In 1512 he was involved in a court case with Robert, Lord Crichton, in which he and his associates were exonerated for the murder of Robert Crichton of Kirkpatrick because he was an outlaw at the time; however, it should be noted that Archibald 'Bell the Cat' was chancellor of the jury, which alos contained another kinsman, Gavin Douglas. In 1512/3 he sold Broadlee (in the Borthwick valley) to Alexander, Lord Home. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir John Gordon of Lochinvar. Their children included: Sir James, who succeeded; Robert, who was the last Provost of Lincluden; Janet, who married Robert Maxwell, Lord of Carlaverock; and Agnes, who married Andrew Cunningham of Kirkshaw. Another son may be John, who was described as brother of James of Drumlanrig in a respite of

1526, as well as when he witnessed a charter in 1530/1, and when he witnessed his brother resigning his lands of Drumlanrig and others in 1540 in order to be regranted. He was killed at Flodden, probably dying the day after the battle, since it is recorded that he 'died in Northumberland, in the field of war, 10 September 1513'. An inventory of his goods was drawn up by his widow, including 3500 sheep, with a total value of more than £1000 in goods. William of Brieryyards (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'Wilelmum Douglas de Brerezardis' in 1517 when he was on the panel of 'retour' for Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He is surely related to the later William. William (16th C.) owner of 3 particates of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick's 1537 Charter. It is unclear how he was related to any other Douglases. William of Bonjedward (16th C.) probably son of George. In 1534 he was required by Patick Murray of Falahill, Sheriff of Selkirkshire, to appear at an inquest in his court; he 'declared he was superior to the sheriff' and refused to give service. He was also cautioned in 1536 and 1537. He may be the William who was given the 'fermes' of Falside and Roughlee in 1538 for his roll in the accounts for Jedforest. He was probably the Laird of Bonjedward who gave his pledge to England (along with Kerr Lairds) in 1544; however, it also appears from English documents that he switched to the Scottish side at Ancrum Moor. He acted as chief of council for Sir George Douglas. In 1545 he was among lairds in Teviotdale who signed a bond to settle feuds. Also in 1545 he was appointed as one of the temporary Sheriffs of Roxburghshire in order to deal with the inheriting of Cavers by James Douglas. He was therefore presumably the 'Lard of Bune Jedworth' whose house was burned by Hertford's men in 1545. In late 1545 he was to have 16 of the 500 horsemen mustered in Teviotdale by Parliamentary decree. He was probably the 'lard of Bouniedworth' who signed a bond of assurance with Somerset at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. In 1549 he was among the supporters of Walter Ker of Cessford who was accused by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in assisting the English in raiding and burning his farms in the previous year. In 1551 he signed the 'Auld Band of Roxburgh'. He is probably the Laird of Bonjedward who was appointed as a deputy warden in 1553. In 1564 he was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1565 he was among landowners summoned before the Privy Council to try to resolve the feud between Sir Nicholas Rutherford of Hundalee and the people of Jedburgh. From 1566 he held the fruits of the Rectory of Southdean (suggesting that Hugh, who was minister there at the time of the Reformation, was possibly a close relative); he was then 'younger of Bonjedburgh'. He was among men re-ordered to appear before the Privy Council in 1567 regarding order in the Middle Marches. Also in 1567 he was among men ordered to present themselves to be warded in Blackness Castle, with his surety being James Heriot of Trabroun; at the same time he himself was surety for James Gledstains of Cocklaw. In 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting superiority of her father's lands in Wilton. In 1571/2 he joined other lairds in signing a bond to act against Borders thieves and he signed the 'Band of Roxburgh' in 1573. In 1576 he witnessed the 'bond of manrent' between several Borderers and Archibald, 8th Earl of Angus; the other witnesses were his son George and Malcolm of Mains. He was Deputy Warden of the Middle Marches in 1576 when there were communications with Sir John Forster regarding 'outrages committed by the inhabitants of West Teviotdale'. He could be the Douglas of Bonjedward who was at the Raid of the Redeswire. He is probably the William of Bonjedward who wrongfully occupied lands belonging to Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1581. He may also be the William who was listed among the landed men of the Borders about 1590. His children probably included: George, who succeeded, and was 'younger' of Bonjedward since the 1560s; John, possibly the brewer in Edinburgh, whose son George was martyred for adhering to the Catholic faith at York in 1587; Archibald; and Elizabeth, who married Alexander Laurie of Gosford. Robert, son of William 'in Bonjedward', who witnessed a sasine near Melrose in 1582, may have been another son. Additional sons might be Patrick, Donald and James, who are described as 'in Banejedward' when they witnessed a 1568 charter, as well as Andrew who was 'in Bonajedburgh' when he witnessed a Calfhill charter. William (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. Perhaps the same William witnessed a dispute in 1541 over a sum of money involving James of Cavers and William 'Familtounne'. William of Brieryyards (16th C.) witness in 1551 to a sasine confirming Alexander Cunningham as Baron of Hassendean. Also in

1551 he witnessed the regranting of Wauchope to David Turnbull by the Earl of Angus. He was probably related to the William of Brieryyards recorded in 1517, and Robert must have been his direct descendant. William of Crook (d.1580s) recorded in 1553/4 as 'Wilelmum Dowglas in Crowk' when he was on the panel for the inheritance of Branxholme and Buccleuch by Sir Walter Scott. He was the 'tacksman' of the Parsonage teinds of Kirkton in the periods 1562–63, 1566 and 1566–72. In 1565 he was 'William Dowglass of the Cruke' when he and James of Cavers (probably son of Sir James) were fined for the non-appearance of 2 Elliots to answer for the murder of David Scott of Hassendean. He had a charter in 1568 from the Commendator of Melrose Abbey for 'their three merk lands of Cruik ... to be held ... in feu farm and heritage for ever' for a payment of 40 shillings yearly, plus an augmentation of 3 s and 4 d. In 1569 he signed the bond to suppress thieves in the Borders. According to the register of the Privy Council he was warded in 1571 and served as surety in 1576. In 1574 he served as surety for a number of Borderers, specifically the residents of Earlside, Penchrise and Kirkton. He is also named in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme; he is recorded as being 'of Cruik' and along with Gavin Elliot of Horsleyhill and Robert Elliot ('Young Robin') is listed 'for the wrangus spoliatioun and awaytaking of thair teindis'. Note that Christine Douglas, Lady of Trows, is also named in the same document (and must have been a close neighbour). In 1575 he was one of the arbitrators for the Elliots in their feud with the Pringles. A document of 1581 (among the Cavers papers) records his wife as 'Eliza Scot', when he granted his son James several pieces of land within Crook (including a herb garden called 'Taillyard' and a barn called 'Trone et Troneland'); this was part of a promise made before the marriage between his son Martin and a Hoppringle. This suggests that Martin was probably the elder son and James the younger (although this is far from clear). His will from 1581, where he is recorded as 'in the Cruik', is also among the Douglas of Cavers papers; it is clear that he was still alive at that time, but probably died soon afterwards. This will lists his executors as 'Mr. George' (i.e. the minister), his brother Archibald and his wife, Bessie Scott; it also mentions his sons Martin (his heir), Robert, James and George. In 1592 (when he was already deceased) his son and heir Martin had a sasine for his lands of Crook; Martin is also recorded as his son and heir in 1608. He had a brother, Archibald, possibly the same man as Archibald of Tofts, as recorded in 1608, when his lands were inherited by Martin (his son, Archibald's nephew). It seems likely that he is closely related to the Baron of Cavers, perhaps son of Sir James of Cavers. Sir William of Hawick (d.1572) son of Sir James the 7th Baron of Drumlanrig. In 1559 his father promised to infeft him as his son and heir, in all his lands, including the Barony of Hawick. In 1564 he and several other Douglases were given remission for the murder of Hugh Douglas of Dalveen. Sometime after 1564 he was granted part of Mousewald, after the heiress Marion Carruthers had thrown herself off a tower when not able to choose her own husband and keep her land rights (with his father formally possessing her wardship and marriage, and forcing her into an arrangement against her wishes). He long fought beside his father and is listed along with him in a declaration by an extensive list of noblemen in 1570. In 1568 he commanded 200 horsemen at the Battle of Langside, fighting against Queen Mary. He was 'youngar of Drumlangrig' in 1569 when obliged to enter certain men to the court in Dumfries and was 'Sir Williame Dowglas of Hawik knycht' in the same year in a case involving Grahams. He gained the lands of 'Bagbie' (probably Begbie) in Lothian about this time. He narrowly escaped when his father was captured in 1571, but his father wrote to him, including these amusing lines: 'Willie, Thow sall wit that I am haill and feare. Send me word thairfor how thow art, whether deid or livand?' Nevertheless, he pre-deceased his father, the Barony of Hawick (as well as Drumlanrig later) going to his son Sir James; this was in March 1572/3, with the Barony and lands being in the hands of the Crown since his death about 6 months earlier. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Gordon of Lochinvar. Their other children were: Margaret, who married Sir Robert Montgomery of Skelmorlie; Janet, who married Sir James Murray of Cockpool; Helen; Christian; Jean; and William. There is a 'letter of reversion' of 1594 relating to lands held by his daughters Janet and Christian, and another of 1606. His father clearly did not get along with his wife, writing an amendement to his will in 1578, calling on his son (Sir James) to 'not receive her in household with him'. William of Friarshaw (d.1575) younger son of Sir James, 5th Laird of Cavers. He became the 1st Douglas Laird of Friarshaw. He married 'Eufame' Davidson (whose testament is recorded in Edinburgh in 1580) and was said to have been succeeded in turn by his sons John and George. However, in 1592 the lands of Friarshaw were held by Andrew (probably his son) and John (also his son), with a regranting of the charter to Andrew and Andrew's son George; hence the succession is complicated. It is possible he was the William who in 1536 allowed David Tudhope to raise oats and pasture cattle on his land of Friarshaw. It seems likely he was succeeded by Andrew. Other children were probably John, James and Alison. William (16th C.) recorded as 'in Kirktoun' when he witnessed an instrument of sasine for the lands of Crook in 1569. Arthur in Kirkton was also mentioned, and so they were presumably related. He could be the 'tacksman' at Kirkton in records of benefices in 1562. William (16th C.) tenant in Ferniehirst. In 1575 he was among men asked to decide whether Robert Fraser was responsible for stealing some English horses. Sir William (d.c.1589) 7th of Cavers. He may be the William 'in Cawaris' who witnessed a notorial instrument for Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1550. He succeeded his father Sir James in 1558, with the 'retour' signed by Gilbert Ker of Primside Loch, Thomas McDougall of Makerstoun, Robert Kerr of Woodhead, and others. He was stated to be 'of lawful age by reason of the Queen's letters of dispensation', suggesting that he was somewhat younger than 21 at the time. In 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. He may be the William who witnessed a document relating to Andrew in Friarshaw in 1563. In 1563 he sold the lands of the Mains of Spittal-on-Rule to Gilbert Ker of Primside Loch. Also in 1563 he served as security for Robert Elliot of Redheugh being appointed Deputy Keeper of Hermitage Castle. In 1564 he was listed as proprietor of part of the lands of Caveling (with Gavin Elliot holding the other part) and was ordered to present their tenant David Elliot before the Privy Council. In 1564 he was probably the 'Sheref of Teviotdaill' when listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. He was among men re-ordered to appear before the Privy Council in 1567 regarding order in the Middle Marches. He is recorded in a bond of 1567 to present 'Richie Thomsoun' to Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, the Warden. In 1569 he was among the lairds who signed a bond to keep peace on the Border. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves. In 1572/3 he swore allegiance to the Crown and Regent, probably in relation to Kerr of Ferniehirst being declared a fugitive. He signed the 'Band of Roxburgh' in 1573. Also in 1573 he tried to have Robert Elliot of Redheugh removed from the lands of Langside and Gavin Eliott removed from the lands of Caveling; he appears to have later lost this legal battle. In 1574 he had a discharge with John Cranston of that Ilk for rentals of Denholm and other lands. In 1574 he was involved in a dispute with William Elliot of Gorrenberry over lands at Caerlenrig (which his father had wadset to Archibald Elliot) and with Gavin Eliott of Bailielee (later Stobs) over lands of Caveling. Additionally in 1574 he was surety for a number of Croziers at Earlside, Penchrise and Kirkton, and was found liable to pay 5000 merks for not replacing those claimed to be thieves with 'trew men to dwell thairin'. Also in 1574 he is 'vmquhile' when named in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme as still owing on a bond, with sureties being Gilbert Ker of Primside Loch, his son Andrew Ker and the deceased William Ker of Yair. However, he appears to be still alive in 1579 as Sheriff of Roxburghshire in a sasine relating to Midshiels and Appletreehall, in which James, younger of Cavers, was witness. In 1575 he was one of the arbitrators for the Elliots in their feud with the Pringles. In 1576/7 he resigned his lands and Barony of Cavers and Sheriffship of Roxburgh to his son James, but reserving the 'liferent' to himself. This suggests that perhaps he was not in good health by that point. He signed a bond with Rutherfords and Turnbulls in 1578. He also signed a bond of support for the Warden, Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, probably in the early 1580s. In 1581 he was among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. Also in 1581 he was' among men who denounced their bonds with Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. He was denounced as a rebel again in 1583 for non-appearance. He appears to still be alive in 1583/4 and 1584/5, when he was listed among Borderers who were summoned to appear before the Privy Council. In 1586 his son William was declared a rebel for his involvement in the murder of 6 Grahamslaws of Newton. Also in 1586 he was the 'Schiref of Teviotdale' listed among leaders in upper Teviotdale in a document by King James VI instructing his Lieutenant on the Border. In 1587 Archibald, Earl of Angus, acted as cautioner for him to appear. In 1588 he was on a list of Borders 'masters and landlords' ordered to appear before the Privy Council. In 1589 he was on a list of Border Lairds who failed to appear before the Privy Council to give 'thair gude advise anent the gude reule and quietnes of the Bordouris' and were denounced as rebels; his name appeared along with that of his son and heir James. Also in 1589 he was fined for not re-entering Wat Turnbull of Bedrule into ward in Edinburgh Castle. He married Euphemia, daughter of Sir William Ker of Cessford (although it has also been suggested that he married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir William Cranston of that Ilk). He was succeeded by his son Sir James and had at least one other child, William. Rev. William (16th C.) recorded as minister at Southdean in 1585. He graduated from Glasgow University in 1580. William (16th C.) listed in 1590 along with Laidlaws, Turnbulls, Shiels and others who were accused of stealing livestock and goods from the tenants of Middleton Hall in 1589. He is recorded being 'of Yerneside' and 'Yarnside', which is probably Earlside, given that some of the other men were from Rulewater. William (c.1533–91) 9th Earl of Angus, son of Sir Archibald of Glenbervie, he succeeded his distant cousin Archibald as 8th Earl in 1588. However, the King extracted a hefty payment in order to approve the entail. He presumably also held the superiority over lands in the Borders, but probably not for long enough to have any influence there. He was a strong supporter of Mary, Queen of Scots and a staunch Episcopalian. He succeeded his father to Glenbervie in 1570 and in 1575 was retoured as heir to his grandfather Sir William (who died at Flodden). He married Egidia or Giles, daughter of Robert Graham of Morphie. He and his wife were apparently in ill health. He visited the 8th Earl on his deathbed, where apparently religious differences were not enough for the arrangements for entail. He was suceeded as 10th Earl of Angus by his son William. Other children were: Archibald (d.1584), Parson of Glenbervie; George (d.1590), also a clergyman; Robert, who succeeded to Glenbervie; Duncan, also a clergyman; John of Barras; Francis; Henry; Margaret; Jean; Elizabeth; and Sarah. Sir William (c.1540–1606) 6th Earl of Morton, son of Robert of Lochleven, with his mother being Margaret Erskine, a former mistress of James V. He was half brother of James Stewart, Earl of Moray, Regent of Scotland and cousin of John Erskine, Earl of Mar, who was also Regent. He succeeded to Lochleven on the death of his father in 1547, at the Battle of Pinkie. He took part in the assassination of Riccio in 1566. In 1568/9 he was an ambassador to England. In 1570 he was commissioned to gather the Lairds to besiege the 'castle of Longnewton', which was held by Rutherford of Fairnington. In 1570/1 the Earl of Northumberland was captured and held in Lochleven Castle. He owned the island castle where Mary, Queen of Scots was imprisoned. He became an ally and confidant of James, 4th Earl of Morton while he was Regent. In 1583 he forfeited his lands after James Stewart, Earl of Arran, returned to power; however, he was back in favour when the King was captured in 1585 and Arran was forced to flee. He succeeded to the Earldom of Morton in 1588 on the death of Archibald, 8th Earl of Angus and 5th Earl of Morton (who also spent time as Regent). He held many lands, including church lands in Hassendean and Cavers that were part of the Lordship of Melrose. He was a firm Presbyterian and hence in favour with the King, who appointed him his Lieutenant in the South of Scotland in 1594. In 1595 he complained that the Kers were harassing his tenants in Longnewton. He married Agnes, daughter of George Leslie, 4th Earl of Rothes. They had 11 children, and he was succeeded by his grandson William, son of Robert (who drowned at sea). James, Commendator of Melrose was another son; his 2nd wife was Mary, daughter of Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst. He also had a daughter Christian, who married Alexander, 1st Earl of Home and another, Isabel, who married Robert, Earl of Roxburghe. William (1552–1611) 10th Earl of Angus, son of William, 9th Earl. He attended St. Andrews University, then spent a couple of years working in the household of his relative the Regent Morton. He became a Catholic while visiting the French court, being disinherited on his return and forced into ward until he could go into exile. His father intended to favour his younger brother George, but he died in 1590 and so plan changed. He succeeded to his father in 1591 and granted Glenbervie to his brother Robert. He was then allowed by the King to reside in Edinburgh and in 1592 was appointed Lieutenant and Justiciar for northern Scotland. Embroiled in plots with the English and Spanish, he was imprisoned for treason in 1593, lived as a rebel, and had his titles and lands forfeited to Robert Douglas, Provost of Lincludden and to Ludovic Stewart, Duke of Lennox (including the Lordships of Selkirk and Jedforest and various lands in Ettrick Forest). He managed to escape Edinburgh Castle by means of rope smuggled in to him and escaped to join fellow Catholics Huntly and Errol in the north. After facing execution, he (and the other Earls) eventually renounced his religion and had his estates restored in 1597. The following year he was appointed Lieutenant of the Border, orchestrating the 'Raid of Dumfries' against the Johnstones. There are surviving documents describing his efforts to gather pledges the different clans to keep peace on the Border in about 1599. It seems that he was in poor health for the next several years. In 1605 he sold off his lands in Rulewater, including the superiority that his family had held for many generations. However in 1606 he was still 'Lord of the Regalitie of Jedburghfforrest' when he was in court to represent his subjects, a group of Turnbulls of Wauchope and others, charged with murder, theft and fire-raising at Harwood and Appotside. Never truly converting to Protestantism, he was excommunicated again in 1608 and was exiled to France, although without losing his estates. He died at the Abbey of Saint-Germain-des-Prés, where he was buried; his monument bears a long and boastful inscription in Latin. Notes on his family history did not survive, but were probably seen by the early family historian David Hume of Godscroft. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Lawrence, Lord Oliphant; the intention was that she would convert him to Protestantism, but the opposite happened. Their children included: William, who became 1st Marquess of Douglas; Sir James, 1st Lord Mordington; Sir Francis if Sandialnds, who was made a Burgess of Glasgow (gratis) in 1632; Catherine, who was contracted to marry Sir Andrew Kerr, younger of Ferniehirst; Mary, who married Alexander Livingstone, 2nd Earl of Linlithgow; and Elizabeth, who married Sir John Campbell, fiar of Cawdor. He also hd an illegitimate daughter, Margaret, with a sister of Home of the Heugh near North Berwick; she married John Douglas of Lintalee. William (16th C.) son of William of Cavers. In 1586 he was denounced as a rebel for his part in the slaughter of 6 Grahamslaws of Newton; the others named included sons of Douglas of Whitriggs and Douglas of Earlside, as well as several Turnbulls. William (16th C.) son of David of Earlside. In 1586 he was declared a rebel for involvement in the slaughter of 6 men called Grahamslaw. William (1582–1648) son of Robert and grandson of William 6th Earl of Morton, whom he succeeded as 7th Earl. He was served heir to his grandfather in 1606. Among the many lands he inherited were church lands of Hassendean and Cavers that were part of the Lordship of Melrose. He was Lord High Treasurer of Scotland. He became a Burgess of Glasgow (gratis) in 1631, along with his servants, William Douglas, William Gledstains and William Shaw (this was clearly a popular forename!). He raised money for the Royalist cause by selling his Dalkeith estate to the Duke of Buccleuch in 1642; in repayment, King Charles gave him a charter for the whole of Orkney and Shetland. He married Anne, daughter of George Keith, 5th Earl Marischal. Their children were: Robert, who succeeded; Sir James of Smithfield, who later succeeded; John (d.1650) who was killed at the Battle of Dunbar; George; Agnes, who married George, Earl of Kinnoul; Margaret, who married her cousin Archibald, 1st Marquess of Argyll; Mary, who married Charles, Earl of Dunfermline; Jean, who married James, 1st Earl of Home; and Isabel, who firstly married Robert, Earl of Roxburghe, and secondly married James, 2nd Marquess of Montrose. William (16th/17th C.) granted 1½ husbandlands in the town of Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. He was described as son of John in Friarshaw, although how they were related to other Douglases of Friarshaw is unclear (since the first John of Friarshaw is meant to have died without issue). William (16th/17th C.) son of Archibald. He was served heir to his father in a cottage-land in the town of Lilliesleaf in 1602. He could be related to the Douglases of Friarshaw. William (16th/17th C.) brother of George of Friarshaw and also Robert. He was thus a younger son of William, 1st of Friarshaw. In 1616 he and his son Robert are mentioned in the Privy Council Register, They were accused of attacking some residents of Lilliesleaf and harassing tenants of the Riddells. William of Whitriggs (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1601, along with James of Cavers and Robert Turnbull of Barhills, when Henry Woodrington accused them of stealing his cattle. He is also mentioned being 'of Quhitrig' in the Dumfries Circuit Court of 1622, when John Ainslie (Bailie of Jedburgh) and James Haswell (surgeon) were caution for him. Probably the same William 'of Whytrig' was recorded in 1612 when Gavin Elliot of Brugh complained that he and several other sevants of James Douglas of Cavers had attacked his family; his brother Robert was also involved. He is probably related to the John 'of Quhitrig' listed among the landed men of the Borders in about 1590. His son may be Thomas, recorded as heir apparent to Whitriggs in 1637. William (16th/17th C.) recorded as 'in Harwood' in 1599 when his son James became a tailor's apprentice in Edinburgh. This may be Harwood on Rule. But more likely he is the William, son of John of Little Harwood (in the Barony of Calder in Edinburghshire) who had sasine for Little Harwood in 1583. Sir William (c.1582–1640) 9th Lord of Drumlanrig and 1st Earl of Queensberry, son of Sir James of Drumlanrig and great grandson of the Sir James who granted Hawick its 1537 Charter. In 1587 he was named as the heir to the lands of the College of Lincluden, from his great-uncle, Robert, the last Provost of Lincluden. He is probably the 'Drumlangrig, younger' who signed a bond among Border Lairds in 1602. He took over running his father's affairs before becoming Baron on his death in 1615. In 1611 he was accused of imprisoning William Kirkpatrick in Drumlanrig Castle. He is probably the Sir William who had an action against the Bailies of Hawick in 1612. In 1612, while still 'younger of Drumlanrig', he was accused of kidnapping William Kirkpatrick of Kirkmichael and of illegally carrying guns, but was let off on technicalities. In 1615 he was served heir to his father's lands, including the Barony and Regality of Drumlanrig, as well as the Barony of Hawick, along with the mill and several specific lands. In 1616, as Provost of Lincluden College, he resigned his lands in Kirkcudbrightshire. In 1616 and the following years he aggressively pursued those who were responsible for the attack on his father's sheep at Howpasley (and court records suggest that several people favourable to him were on the jury). He entertained King James VI at Drumlanrig in 1617. Also in 1617 he became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh, gratis (this appearing to be repeated in 1630). He was appointed as a Commissioner for the Middle Shires in 1618. He acquired the lands of Sanquhar and the Barony of Morton. In 1621 he (as well as his brother John of Mousewald and half-brother John of 'Killievarrebe') was involved in a feud with Sir Robert Douglas of Cashogle and others, in which pistols were fired, Robert, son of Cashogle lost an ear, and Thomas Coupland was killed; however, no one was punished for the crimes. In 1628 he was made Viscount Drumlanrig, as well as Lord Douglas of Hawick and Tibbers by Charles I and was created Earl of Queensberry in 1633; that title came from a high hill in Closeburn Parish, Dumfriesshire. He must have been Baron of Hawick in 1627 when it is stated that several men conscripted into the army were his 'men and servants' and so should perhaps be sent to join his brother, Sir James Douglas of Mouswald. He is recorded paying the vicarage and parsonage teinds of Teviotdalehead to the Earl of Buccleuch for 1627–33. He married Isabel Kerr, daughter of Mark, Earl of Lothian (the marriage contract being in 1603) and his children included: James, who succeeded; Sir William of Kelhead, whose descendants who would take over the Queensberry line later; Archibald of Dornock; George, who died unmarried; Margaret, who married James Johnstone, Earl of Hartfell; and Janet, who married Thomas, Lord Kirkcudbright. The funeral of his wife Isabel Kerr, was an elaborate affair, the procession going from St. Giles in Edinburgh down to Holyrood House. William (1589–1660) 1st Marquess of Douglas, he was eldest son of William, 10th Earl of Angus, and became 11th Earl of Angus in 1611. He was a Cathlic, like his father, and was deeply embroiled in the politics of Scotland in the 17th century. He was married in 1601 (when only 12) to Margaret, daughter of Lord Claude Hamilton, 1st Lord Paisley. In 1611 he was involved in a dispute with the Kerrs of Ferniehirst over the rigth to hold courts in Jedforest; as a result his brother James was warded in prison, along with Sir Andrew Kerr and his son, and the Privy Council ruled that he had the right to hold courts, not the Kerrs. In 1616 he had permission from James VI to leave the Kingdom for his health. In 1617 his Bailies were Douglas of Bonjedward and Douglas of Cavers, when they promised on his behalf to be answerable for the inhabitants of Jedforest. He had further leave to be absent from Scotland for 11 years from 1623, leaving his estates to be run by his brother James and cousin the Earl of Morton. However, he returned in 1625, on the death of King James, hoping that his Catholicism would receive more favour under King Charles. In 1630 he had a retour as full heir to Archibald, 8th Earl. In 1632 he and his brother Francis were made Burgesses of Glasgow. He was created Marquess of Douglas in 1633 and was a Lieutenant on the Borders in 1636 (although does not appear to have been heavily involved in keeping order). When the Scottish bishops were abolished in 1638, he moved to England, and although he returned later in the year, he kept a low profile. He was recorded as owner of Swinnie, Old Jedburgh, Lintalee, etc., as well as 'his lands of Jed Forrest, being four-score steids', according to the 1643 valuation rolls. He signed the Covenant in 1644, but joined the Royalist side in 1645, just before the Battle of Philiphaugh, where he narrowly escaped capture. He apparently tried to bribe the Governor of Carlisle Castle to release his relative James, 2nd Earl of Queensberry, who was captured at the Battle of Kilsyth; he was fined for this conduct, as well as being fined later by Cromwell. He was imprisoned in Edinburgh Castle in 1646 and released after several months and the payment of a heavy fine. In his last years he continued to have disputes with the clergy. He died at the age of 71, which was older than almost all his ancestors. Although deceased by then, he was probably the Marquess of Douglas recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1663 paying £366 13s 4d in Southdean Parish. He took an interest in the family history being prepared by David Hume of Godscroft, wrote an introduction for it and was involved in its publication. He married Margaret Hamilton, daughter of Lord Paisley, and in 1632 secondly married Mary, daughter of George Gordon, Marquess of Huntly. His children included: Archibald, 1st Earl of Ormond, whose son James became 2nd Marquess of Douglas; William, who died young; James (v.1617–36), who died fighting in France; William (again), 1st Earl of Selkirk; George, 1st Earl of Dumbarton, who commanded the 'Douglas Regiment', which was also known as 'Dumbarton's Regiment', made famous in the traditional song 'Dumbarton's Drums'; Margaret, who married William, Lord Alexander; Jean, who married John Hamilton, 1st Lord Bargany; Grizel, who married Sir William Carmichael of that Ilk; Henrietta, who maried James Johnstone, 1st Earl of Annandale; Catherine, who married Sir William Ruthven of Dunglas; Isabel, who married William Douglas, 1st Duke of Queensberry; Jane, who married James Drummond, 4th Earl of Perth; Lucy, who married Robert Maxwell, 4th Earl of Nithsdale; and Mary, who died unmarried. William (16th/17th C.) son of Martin of Tofts. He is recorded in 1617 (along with his father) in letters confirming their earlier receipt of the teinds, parsonage and vicarage of Kirkton. In about 1621 he was infefted in the lands of 'Pittilesheuche' by the Commendator of Melrose. He may be the William of Tofts who wrote a eulogic poem about Robert Kerr, 2nd Earl of Lothian in about 1624, and who was said to be involved with Kerr's wife, Annabella, Countess of Lothian. He is probably the Douglas of Tofts mentioned in a document of the Bishop of Aberdeen in 1622, also relating to Douglas of Drumlanrig. He was also recorded in about the same time as brother of Archibald of Lumsden. He may be the unnamed Laird of Tofts whose lands in Kirkton Parish were valued at £300 in 1643. It is unclear how this branch is connected with local Douglases. William of Bonjedward (d.c.1636) probably son of George, it is unclear exactly when he succeeded his father. In 1597 he was 'of Boun Jedward, youngar' when he signed a bond with William, 10th Earl of Angus. He was 'Fiar of Bonjedward' in 1597. He was probably the 'lard of Bonejedburgh younger' who was among some Scottish prisoners taken from a large group who went into England to go hunting; he was released soon afterwards. He was 'fear of Bonejedburgh' in 1602 when he he signed the 'General Band' among Border Lairds. In 1617 he was among Border Lairds who renewed their bond for keeping the peace; he was probably also the Laird of Bonjedward who was a Bailie for William Douglas, Earl of Angus, promising to be answerable for the inhabitants of Jedforest. In 1618 he was among 4 prominent local men selected to apprehend Andrew and Cuthbert McDougall in Stanedge for the murder of Fergus Lorraine and to try them in Jedburgh; however, Andrew Ker asked for him to be replaced, since there was 'no speeches nor freindship betuixt' them. Also in 1618 he was probably the Douglas of Bonjedward listed among commissioners appointed by the King to keep law and order in the 'Middle Schyires'. He served as Justice Convener for Roxburghshire, and was charged in 1628 with holding courts in Jedburgh and elsewhere. He was listed in 1628 as one of the major landowners who met to elect M.Ps. for the county. In 1632 he was Convenor of the Sub-commissioners for the Presbytery of Jedburgh. He may be the William ('of blank') listed as owner of lands valued at £195 in Cavers Parish in 1643. He appears in a document of 1633 relating to Sir John Auchmuty of Gosford. He married Rebecca, daughter of Sir John Drummond of Hawthornden in 1600. He may also have married her sister, Elizabeth. His children included: George, who succeeded; Rev. John (d.1671), minister of Yetholm and Crailing; Thomas (d.1672); Rev. James (d.1665), minister of Hobkirk; and Mary, who married John of Timpendean in 1632. Sir William (d.c.1658) 9th of Cavers, son of Sir James. He was 'fiar of Cavers' in 1612 when he served as cautioner for John Rutherford in Jedburgh and Richard Rutherford in Littleheuch not to harm Lord Roxburghe and others. He succeeded sometime after the death of his father in 1618. He is probably the William, feuar of Cavers, who received the teinds of Kirkton from the minister in 1617. In 1618 he was among 4 prominent local men selected to try 2 murderers in Jedburgh and he had sasine for the 'Kirklands' of Cavers. Also in 1618 he was probably the Douglas of Cavers listed among commissioners appointed to keep law and order in Teviotdale. In 1619 he was appointed as a Commissioner 'within the boundis of Jedburgh Forrest', for dealing with idle and incorrigible persons. He is probably the Douglas of Cavers who sold Corrisike, Langbyre, Giddenscleuch and part of Caerlenrig to Gilbert Eliott of Stobs in 1620. He may be the Douglas of Cavers who in 1621 was directed to answer 'for some irreverent wordis against Sir William Seatoun'. He is probably the 'fear of Cavers' recorded in 1622 when sheep were stolen from his lands of 'Hairrlesyd' and Langside. He acted as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire for the Parliaments of 1612 (when still 'younger'), 1617, 1621, 1628–33, 1639–40, 1644, 1645–46 and 1650. He was also a member of the Privy Council of Scotland in the 1640s. In 1617 he entered into a negotiation with James VI over surrender of the Sheriffship of Cavers to the Crown, but nothing was resolved at that time. Following a decree of 1620 he arranged to give up the Sheriffship and the tiends of Cavers Kirk for the sum of £20,000 Scots. However, he complained in 1633 that he had only been paid £4,000, and Parliament agreed to let him keep the office until full payment had been made (and in fact the family were Sheriffs until the final abolition of such offices in 1747). The record he made still exists of the proceedings for the 1628 election of M.Ps. (or 'Commissioners') for Roxburghshire, including a list of all the major landowners of the county. In 1629 he was served heir to his maternal great-grandfather William Cranston of that Ilk (although it is unclear what lands he thereby gained). He became a Burgess of Edinburgh 'gratis' in 1630. He was a cautioner for Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig and was recorded as cautioner for George Douglas of Bonjedward in a marriage contract with the Murrays of Elibank in 1632. In early 1638 he was one of the local men given special powers to attempt to stop the spread of the plague. In 1638, as a Kirk Elder, he was appointed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire to enforce subscription to the 'Confessions of Faith and Bond of Union' (i.e. the 'Covenant'), and as Sheriff of Teviotdale he led the Hawick signing of the document that was afterwards preserved at Cavers. In 1639 he was one of the Commissioners of the Scottish army sent to negotiate with Charles I. In late 1640 he commanded the advance guard of the Covenanters army that was sent to Newcastle, where they were surprised to be welcomed as friends. In 1640–41 he was in England on state business, missing 2 sessions of the Scottish Parliament. In 1642 he was named to a commission that was charged to apprehend and try a large number of Borders men accused of being 'notorious criminalls, theeves and ressetters of thift', and was appointed one of the assessors to the Justice General for these courts. Also in 1642 he gained Burnmouth, 'Greina' (Greenholm perhaps) and 'Puriven' in Liddesdale from Douglas of Spott. In 1643 he was appointed to a 'commissioner for the establishment of manufactories'. His lands in Cavers Parish were valued at £5344 6s 8d, in Kirkton at £1480 (for Kirkton, Effledge, Whitriggs and East Middle), in Hobkirk £171 and in Castleton at £420. In 1643 he was one of the 2 Convenors of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire, and he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1644, 1646 and 1648. He commaded a regiment of horse, who defeated a force from the north of England on their march to join James Graham, Marquess of Montrose in 1646 and was also one of the Commissioners for trying the followers of Montrose. In 1647 he and his son Archibald were confirmed by Charles I in the office of Sheriff for their natural lives. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. In 1650 he was named one of the overseers of the tutors for the children of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. He married Ann (or Anne), daughter of William Douglas of Whittinghame and was succeeded (briefly) by his son Sir Archibald. His other children were: John of Gervald; and Helen, who married Sir William Bruce of Stenhouse. Agnes, recorded in 1663 as sister of the Sheriff of Roxburghshire, was probably also his daughter (and may have been the same as Helen). William (17th C.) 2nd son of Andrew of Friarshaw. He married Janet Scott before 1649 and had 3 sons: Henry in Nether Prieston; George, living in 1680; and William, also recorded in 1680. William (d.c.1672) described as an advocate in 1672 when his son James was served heir to his Lordship and Barony of Jedforest (i.e. he was superior of lands in Southdean). Probably the same advocate became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh in 1654 at the request of David Dick, Professor of Theology. He was probably related to the Marquesses of Douglas, who had held this Barony shortly before him. However, he may have died by 1684 when his sisters Margaret and Jean inherited the same Lordship and Barony. Sir William (d.1676) 11th of Cavers, son of Sir Archibald. He may have been the Sir William, 'younger of

Cavers' who was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1649 (but his brother Sir Archibald would have been the heir apparent at that time). He was removed as Sheriff of Teviotdale in 1662 when he refused to take the Test, therafter encouraging and protecting Covenanters. He was also cited for appointing a private chaplain and tutor who was not licensed by the Bishop. In 1659 he married Katherine, daughter of Thomas Rigg of Atherne and Eupham Moneypenny (who remarried to Sir John Scott of Scotstarvit); she was 'the Good Lady Cavers', who was indicted for similar crimes after his death and imprisoned for several years (as described in the 1851 book 'The Ladies of the Covenant'). According to the marriage contract his father resigned his lands and titles to him, this being confirmed in an 'instrument of resignation' of 1662. In 1676 he was fined for having a chaplain who was not licensed by the Bishop. He was declared an outlaw, but died before any actions were taken against him. He was succeeded by his sons Sir William and then Archibald. His younger sons were John, James and Thomas (who was born after his death, and whose grandson George continued the family line). His son William was not served as his heir until 1687. William of Coliforthill (17th C.) local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, according to James Wilson. He paid the land tax on £266 13s 4d in Cavers Parish in 1678. This was the same land owned by William Gledstains of Coliforthill in 1643 and that would be owned by Archibald Douglas of Adderstone by 1688. It is unclear how he was related to other Douglases. William (17th C.) tenant of the Cavers estate. In 1684 he was among a group of tenants of the Cavers estate who complained about the burden placed upon them by the huge fines imposed on Lady Cavers. They would have been forced into ruin had not the young Laird of Cavers (also William Douglas), returned from the Continent to take charge of matters. He may be the same man as William in East Middle. William (d.c.1687) tenant in East Middle. His will is recorded in 1687. He was surely related to Andrew, who was recorded at the same farm in 1685. William recorded in Middle in 1720 may be related to him. William of Timpendean (d.c.1688) son of John and Mary Douglas, he was the 7th Laird. In 1655 he was served heir to his father in the lands of Lanton. He is recorded on the Land Tax Rolls for Timpendean in 1663. In 1655 he married Alison, daughter of John Turnbull of Minto and Elizabeth Eliott of Stobs. Their children were: John, who succeeded; Elisabeth (b.1657), baptised in Jedburgh; Andrew, who married Helen Scott in Jedburgh; William; Robert John; George; and Alison (b.1663), baptised in Jedburgh. His wife may be the Lady Timpendean who was fined £1400 as a Covenanter, for refusing to attend her parish church. William (17th C.) son of Rev. James, minister of Hobkirk and grandson of William of Bonjedward. In 1669 he was served heir to his father's lands of Newhall in the parish of 'Boldoun' (perhaps Soudon). He also succeeded to Plewlands, which are probably the lands of that name in Hobkirk Parish. William (17th C.) listed as 'carrier in Kirkwynd' among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the William listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. He may be the William who was fined by the Magistrates in 1689 for his 'exhorbitant' wedding with the daughter of Thomas Lunn. This was against the new Act of Parliament, limiting the cost of the marriage feast. He could be the deceased William, 'sometimes carier in Hawick' whose daughter Margaret married William Martin (servant at Winningtonrig) in 1719. He may be the William who witnessed a baptism for Andrew Hart in 1684 and another for John Scott 'Wyndheid' in 1685. He may also be the William who in 1685 was involved in a fight with Robert Scott, who was accused of hitting him 'wt ane great rung'. Sir William of Cavers (d.1698) 12th Laird, eldest son of Sir William. He was removed from the care of his mother, Katherine Rigg, after she was cited for supporting the Covenanters. He was then placed under the care of tutors appointed by the Privy Council, these including Sir William Eliott of Stobs, his uncle Thomas and 2 other Douglases. There is an undated bill (c.1670s) brought by him and his tutors William and Thomas Elliot against Adam Urquhart of Meldrum. In 1678 he is probably the William of Cavers who paid the Land Tax (along with his grandmother, presumably wife of Sir Archibald, Rachel Skene) on £7694 in Cavers Parish and £1480 in Kirkton Parish. He was listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose in 1682. In 1684 he was one of the men appointed as a commissioner in Roxburghshire for prosecuting Covenanters (despite his family's loyalties). He who was entered as a Burgess and Guild brother of Edinburgh in 1684. He was not served heir to his father until 1687 (presumably because of the changing political situation), this including extensive lands in Cavers Parish and the Rule valley, as well as a few elsewhere (e.g. Carlaverock Kirk). He was an officer in the Scots Greys, being Captain in 1689 (when the regiment was commanded by another Sir William Douglas). In 1689 he was also appointed Lieutenant Colonel in the local Militia regiment. He was Sheriff Principal of Roxburghshire and was appointed as an additional Parliamentary Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1690, serving until his death. He was also Convenor of the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685 and was a Commissioner in 1690. He may be the Sir William mentioned in Dalrymple's 'Memoirs' when his French Protestant wife was forbidden from leaving France by Louis XIV in 1685. He left the army in 1694 when his regiment went to Flanders. In about 1690 he married Elizabeth, daughter of John Douglas of Newcastle. Dying without an heir, he was succeeded by his brother Archibald. His widow later married Sir A. Home. A portrait of him used to hang in Cavers House. William (1635–94) 4th son of William, 11th Earl of Angus. In 1646 he was created Earl of Selkirk, as well as Lord Daer and Shortcleuch. He was a strong Royalist supporter. In 1656 he married Anne, Duchess of Hamilton, eldest daughter of James, 1st Duke of Hamilton. In 1660 he was created, for his life only, Duke of Hamilton. He submitted to 'the Test' and was re-admitted to the Privy Council in 1682. He resigned the Earldom of Selkirk to his son Charles in 1688. He became a Commissioner to Parliament in 1690 and was appointed High Admiral of Scotland and Lord Extraordinary of the Court of Session. He was succeeded as Duke of Hamilton by his eldest son James (1658–1712), who took the surname Hamilton and was killed in a duel. His other sons were: William, who died in France; Charles (1663–1739), who was made Earl of Selkirk and died unmarried; John (1665–1744), who succeeded his brother as Earl of Selkirk; George (1666–1737), Earl of Orkney; Basil (1671–1701), whose grandson became 4th Earl of Selkirk; and Archibald (1673–1754), Governor of Greenwich Hospital and Governor of Jamaica. William 1st Duke of Queensberry (1637–95), eldest son of James the 2nd Earl. He succeeded his father as 3rd Earl in 1671. He was appointed Sheriff of Dumfriesshire in 1664. In 1665 he is recorded as William, Lord Drumlanrig, when the Scottish Parliament agreed to his request to allow 2 additional yearly fairs in Hawick, and also to grant him remission for the valuation of his Barony of Hawick. He is probably the Earl of Drumlanrig who became a Burgess and Guild Brother (gratis) of Glasgow in 1666. He trained for the bar and was on the Privy Council from 1667. By 1667 it is clear that he was already seeking legal opinion over his powers as a superior in the Barony of Hawick. In 1669 there was an Act in his favour for 2 additional yearly fairs at Hawick. In about 1672 (i.e. shortly after he succeeded his father) it appears that he or his agents proposed that the Common of Hawick be divided between him and the Burgh, but this came to nothing, and so presumably was resisted by the Town (although the surviving draft of the Hawick Commission leaves it unclear who started the proposal). In 1673 he brought an extraordinary (and frivolous) case against the Bailies and inhabitants of the Town (with 32 men named), complaining to the Privy Council that his Bailie in Hawick was attacked when he was trying to 'set the fair'; the Hawick Bailies countered by stating that this was a 'groundless libel' brought because of an ongoing dispute between the 2 parties. It is clear that the relationship between the Town and its Baron had completely broken down at that time. However, in 1675 he lost the Barony and lands (although he kept the title of Baron of Hawick), which were granted to the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch in 1675, ending about a century and a half of control of the Barony of Hawick by the Douglas family. He was appointed Justice General of Scotland in 1680, made Extraordinary Lord of Session in 1681 and in 1682 was raised to the Marquisate, made High Treasurer and appointed Constable and Governor of Edinburgh Castle. His titles already included Earl of Drumlanrig and Sanchar, Viscount of Nith, Torthorwald and Ross, as well as Lord Douglas of Kinmont, Middlebie and Dornoch, and the family additionally held the title of Baron of Hawick and Tibbers. In 1684 he was made Duke of Queensberry. James II appointed him High Commissioner in 1685 and he was heavily involved (behind the scenes) in the 'Killing Time'. But soon afterwards he argued with the crown over the repeal of laws against Catholicism and was deprived of his offices. He then retired and focussed on re-building Drumlanrig Castle, most of the work there being in the period 1679–91. Back in favour, he became Lord of Session again in 1693. He introduced a et of instructions for Scottish High Commissioners, which mostly became Acts of Parliament; this included the Act 'declaring all preaching at Conventicles in houses (as well as in fields) to be death in the preacher, and banishment and great fines in the hearers and landlords'. Additionally he introduced an instruction that prisoners being sent to the colonies who did not recognise the King's authority were to have an ear cut off, and he was also said to have brought into use a steel thumbscrew that was used to extract confessions. He is probably the Duke of Queensberry who contributed £3000 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. He married Isabel, daughter of William, 1st Marquess of Douglas and was succeeded by his son James, the 2nd Duke. His other children were: William, Earl of March, whose grandson became the 4th Duke of Queensbetty; Lord George (d.1693), who died unmarried; and Anne, who married David, Earl of Wemyss. His sons William and George became Burgesses of Edinburgh in 1684. William (17th C.) listed as a resident of Kirkton on the 1694 Hearth Tax roll. Probably the same William was listed among the tenants of Douglas of Cavers who complained about punitive rental demands in 1684, part of punishment against Lady Douglas and her support of Covenanters. William of Cunzierton (17th/18th C.) paid the land tax on £440 in Oxnam Parish in 1678. He was Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1696. In that same year there is a marriage contract between his sister Christian and Hugh Scott of Gala, preserved among the papers of the Douglases of Cavers. It seems likely he was a near relation of the Cavers branch. Cunzierton lies between Oxnam and Hownam. William of Bonjedward (d.aft. 1705) probably son of George. He is mentioned as Laird in 1685, 1695 and 1704. He was probably the Douglas of 'Bonjedburgh' who was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1696. In 1670 in Jedburgh he married Margaret Scott, and in 1699 in Jedburgh (perhaps also recorded in Ashkirk Parish) he secondly married Beatrix Scott. His children with Margaret Scott included: George, who succeeded; Rev. Walter (b.1674), minister of Linton and member of the General Assembly; and probably Isobell (b.1677), Charles (b.c.1679) and Marion (b.1683). His children with Beatrix Scott included: John (b.1705), who was baptised in Hawick Parish; and Isabella (b.1703), also baptised in Hawick. His connection with Hawick is not clear, but perhaps his wife was from there, and possibly the 'Auld Wat' Scott who witnessed the baptism in 1705 could have been his father-in-law. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elspeth Scott. Their children included: Helen (b.1687); and James (b.1702). The witnesses to Helen's baptism were James Scott and James Douglas, who may have been related to the parents. William (17th C.) resident at Hawick Shiel in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. Probably the same William witnessed a baptism for John Irvine in Hawickshiel in 1696. William of Nether Prieston (17th/18th C.) elder son of Henry and descended from the Douglases of Friarshaw. His lands were in Midlem Parish. In 1691 he married Mary, daughter of Simon Halliday from Selkirk and before 1707 he secondly married Janet Bonnington. His children included: George (b.1700); Andrew (b.1707); and Robert (b.1710). William 'Skail the Mercat' (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He is recorded as 'merchant in Hawick distinctionis causa called Scail the mercat' in a baptismal record of 1706. His nickname presumably meant 'disperse the market', but it is unclear what its origin might have been. He is perhaps the same merchant listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4 and the William listed 'eist the water' among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. He married Marion Lunn and their children included: Helen (b.1701); John (b.1703); and Bessie (b.1706). The witnesses in 1706 were Walter Wilson and Walter Oliver (both fellow merchants). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included: Elizabeth (b.1694), John (b.1696), James (b.1699), Walter (b.1701), Margaret (b.1703), William (b.1706), Agnes (b.1707), and Thomas (b.1707). 2 families may be represented here. Some of Andrew (b.1708), Bessie (b.1709), Janet (b.1709), an unnamed son (b.1712), Robert (b.1712), Elspeth (b.1713), Elspeth (again, b.1718) and Archibald (b.1718) could also be his children. William (17th/18th C.) married Isobel Glendinning in Hawick in 1705. William (17th/18th C.) married Jean 'Irwin' in Hawick Parish in 1710. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded at 'new mains' in 1716 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. William (17th/18th C.) described as 'packman' in 1716 when there were complaints made against him and John Ruecastle for sitting in seats in Hawick Kirk that were meant to be assigned to the incorporated trades. Apparently they even broke open the door to the 'Weaver's Loft' when it was locked. He may be the same as one of the other Williams. William (17th/18th C.) Sheriff Officer in Hawick. He married Bessie Scott. This happened shortly before the death of Rev. Alexander Orrock. There is a record in late 1711 of him receiving back the 'consignation money' which had been 'panded' for his marriage, having been distributed to the poor by Rev. Orrock on hearing that 'some women in ye toun did drink their quarts of Ale apiece at ye making of ye Bed'. He was 'officer' in 1714 when he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert Elliot. William (17th/18th C.) married Helen Redford in Wilton in 1713. William of Timpendean (1684–c.1730) son of John, he was the 9th Laird. He was Bailie of the Baron Court of Nisbet in 1715. He was present during the drunken meeting in the Black Bull in Jedburgh after the election of 1726 in which Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs killed Col. Stewart of Stewartfield. In 1718 he married Jean, daughter of Thomas Rutherford of Edgerston (as her 2nd husband), and she died in 1748. His children included: Archibald (b.1718), who succeeded; Susanna (b.1718), eldest daughter, who married Robert, son of Sir John Clerk of Penicuik in 1740; John; Euphan or Euphemia, who married George Balderstone in 1737; and William. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. He was 'in Middle' in 1720 when his daughter Janet was baptised. William (b.1723) may also have been his son. William (17th/18th C.) tailor in 'Rig', i.e. Winningtonrig. His son Gilbert was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1720. William (17th/18th C.) recorded being 'in Denholm' in 1721 when his son John was baptised in Kirkton Parish. Presumably he used to live in Kirkton Parish, and may be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William (d.bef. 1744) tenant in Minto Kames. He had a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1743. He was deceased by 1744 when John (Burgess of Selkirk) and John (tenant in Minto Kames) acted as tutors for his youngest son William. They were still acting as tutors in 1749 in another discharge with Selkirk. William of Cavers (d.1748) 14th Laird of Cavers, eldest son of Archibald. He was M.P. for Roxburghshire, elected in 1715, 1727, and again in 1742, remaining as M.P. until 1747. There were gaps in the years 1722–27 (when Sir Gilbert Eliott was Roxburghshire M.P. and he was M.P. for Dumfries Burghs) and 1734–42 (when John Rutherford was M.P.). He became a Burgess and Guild brother of Edinburgh (gratis) in 1715, by right of his father Archibald. He was Keeper of the General Register of Hornings in 1728 and Storekeeper of the Customs House, Ireland. In 1739 he and his father were among the local landowners asked to decide where the Teviot Brig in Hawick should be built. His estate was valued at £8746 in the 1740s. He had to yield up the hereditary Sheriffship to his brother Archibald, in order to remain an M.P. for the county. He died unmarried. William (18th C.) married Janet Harkness in Cavers Parish in 1720. William (18th C.) married Catherine Gilroy in Kirkton Parish in 1726. William (18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included Margaret (b.1726) and Andrew (b.1729). He is probably the William who was an Elder in Bedrule in 1729. William (18th C.) married Bettie Scott in Bedrule Parish in 1732. William (18th C.) married Janet Scott in Kirkton Parish in 1733. William (18th C.) resident of Spittal in 1733 when his son William was baptised in Cavers Parish. Perhaps the same William was in Spittal in 1744 when his daughter Helen was baptised. William (18th C.) resident of Eastcote in 1733 when his daughter Helen was baptised in Cavers Parish. William (18th C.) married Helen Middlemas in Wilton Parish in 1734. William (18th C.) resident of Earlside in 1741 when his son William was baptised in Cavers Parish. William (18th C.) tenant in West Mains in 1745 and 1747. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish included Archibald (b.1745) and Alexander (b.1747). This was probably the West Mains in Cavers, although it is possible it was the one associated with Hawick. William (18th C.) recorded in 1761 as 'sometimes tenant in Crook'. In that year his daughter Margaret and Martha, daughter if William Douglas, late baker in Selkirk, had a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk. William 4th (and last) Duke of Queensberry, 'Old Q' (1725–1810). He was 3rd Earl of March, until inheriting the Queensberry titles (and huge estates), including the Lordship of Hawick, on the death of his cousin Charles. He was also created Baron of Amesbury and was Lord Lieutenant of Dumfries. In his earlier years he served as an M.P. He was known as an eccentric and for his pleasurable pursuits, which involved extravagant spending of his vast furtune. He was a patron of horse-racing, and famous for indulging in various luxuries. He lived at Neidpath Castle and was criticised for cutting down the adjacent woods (as commemorated in a sonnet by Wordsworth). He died unmarried, and his estates were the subject of litigation after his death, the titles eventually being split between 3 distant cousins: the Marquess and Earl of Queensberry, Viscount Drumlanrig, and Lord Douglas of Hawick and Tibbers descended to Sir Charles Douglas of Kelhead; the Earl of March, Viscount of Peebles, Lord Douglas of Neidpath and others descended to the Earl of Wemyss; and the Duke of Queensberry, Marquess of Dumfriesshire, Earl of Drumlanrig and Sanquhar, Viscount of Nith, Torthorwald and Ross, Lord Douglas of Kinmont, Middlebie and Dornock devolved to Henry, 3rd Duke of Buccleuch. William (18th C.) youngest son of William, who was tenant at Minto Kames. He must have been a minor when his father died, since in 1744 John (Burgess of Selkirk) and another John (tenant in Minto Kames) acted as his tutors. They were still acting as his tutors in 1749 in another discharge with Selkirk. William (18th C.) resident of Clarilaw in Wilton Parish. He married Alison Thomson in 1770 and their children included: Isabel (b.1772); and Janet (b.1774). The witnesses in 1772 were Thomas Blyth and James Dryden. William (18th C.) resident of Moorfield in Wilton Parish. He married Mary Thomson and their children included Margaret (b.1772). The witnesses were Robert Fairbairn and Robert Thomson. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Agnes Common (or perhaps Cumming) and their children included Betty (b.1775), James (b.1777) and John (b.1780). William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Nelly Redpath and their children included Elizabeth (b.1778) and Margaret (b.1780). William (18th C.) married Margaret Rae in 1781, the marriage recorded in both Hawick and Cavers Parishes. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Cavers itself in 1782 when his son Robert was baptised. There are other Douglases born around the same time who could be his children. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included Margaret (b.1795). William (b.c.1770s) shoemaker in Hawick. He married Ann Kersel, who died in 1797. Their children included William (b.1794). In the description of the ballot for the Militia in 1799 he was among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish'. He was still on the Militia ballot in 1801. William (18th/19th C.) member of the East Bank Kirk. He married Betty Tait and their children included Jean (b.1807), Helen (b.1809), Margaret (b.1811), Betty (b.1813) and Betty (again, b.1815). William (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He was surely from one of the local families. Sir William of Timpendean (1770–1834) son of Archibald, he was 11th Laird. He entered the army in 1786 as an ensign in the 1st Battalion of Foot, becoming a Lieutenant in 1789 and serving in the West Indies. He raised an independent company in 1793 and moved to the 6th Battalion, serving during the Irish Rebellion and becoming Assistant Quartermaster General. He helped form the 98th Regiment, was appointed Lieutenant Colonel and served in Canada, Bermuda and the coast of America. He was promoted to Colonel in 1813 and Major General in 1819. His estate of Timpendean (including parts of what had been Lanton) was valued at £866 in 1788. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. In 1813 he was listed in the Land Tax Rolls at Timpendean. He married Marianne Tattershall in 1810 in Liverpool, and she died in 1835. They had 9 children: William (c.1811–26), who died at Harrow; Helen (c.1814–74), who married Rev. Thomas Boyles Murray; Marianne (b.c.1815), who married Rev. George William Murray; Thomas (c.1816–36), who died in Edinburgh; Capt. George (1819–65), who succeeded, but sold Timpendean; Maj. Henry George Sholto (1820–1892), who was 13th of Timpendean; Frederick (1823–73), Surgeon with the rank of Major, who died in Nova Scotia; Emma (b.c.1824), who married Col. Thomas Mauborg Baillie in 1843; and William Archibald (c.1827–84), who died in Melbourne, his home there being named Timpendean. In 1843 his trustees (presumably with the agreement of his son George) sold Timpendean, Broomhall and part of Lanton to the Marquess of Lothian. William (b.1777/8) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1841 he was on the Fore Raw, in 1851 he was living at Kirkgate and in 1861 at 5 Kirk Wynd. His wife was Mary. It is possible he is the same man as the shoemaker whose wife Ann Kersel died in 1797. He could be the shoemaker of this name recorded in 1797 among Hawick men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. He may be the William of Kirkgate who donated 2 copper coins to the Museum in 1869. William (b.c.1780) servant at Courthill according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Wilton Parish. William (18th/19th C.) glover on the Sandbed, listed in Pigot's 1837 directory. William (b.c.1800) shepherd living at Leahead in Wilton Parish. He was listed among heads of households in 1840 and 1841. In the 1841 he was recorded as an agricultural labourer at Leahead. The family seem to have disappeared after that and so perhaps emigrated. His wife was Christian and their children included: William; Walter (probably the frameworker in Hawick); Margaret; Mary; and Elizabeth. William Scott (1815–83) born in Hawick, he was son of accountant Alexander and Isabella Scott. He was educated at Heriot's in Edinburgh and worked as a mercantile accountant. In his spare time he became an expert on the life and works of Burns. He edited 'The Complete Poetical Works of Robert Burns with Memoir' (1871, revised 1876) and the 6 volume 'Works of Robert Burns' (1877–79). He became secretary of the Edinburgh Burns Club in 1877. The widow of Robert 'Lurgie' Wilson presented to him the edition of Burns that the Ettrick Shepherd had given her husband. He married Isabella Forbes and their children included: William; Daniel; David Gordon; Isabella Scott; and Jessie Irving. He drowned off the East Pier at Leith. William (b.1833/4) resident of Hallrule. He won the wrestling competition at the 1861 Common-Riding Games. He was a farm servant at Hawick Moor Farm in 1851 and a labourer living at Hallrule in 1861. William (b.1882) born at Ploughlands near Jedburgh. His father was William and his mother was Margaret Waldie, sister of the tenant in Braidhaugh. He worked on the Weens estate. In 1903 he married Jane, daughter of Andrew Thomson and they had a son William (b.1806). His great-grandparents were farm servant Thomas and his wife Janet Moscrope. His grandfather was ploughman William, who died at Nisbet Mill (occasionally spelled 'Douglass' and formerly 'Douglace', 'Douglase', 'Douglasse', 'Douglassh', 'Dowglace', 'Dowglas', 'Dowglass', 'Dowglasse', 'Dowgleiss', 'Douglasse', 'Duglass', 'Duneglas', etc.).

Douglas (dug-lis) n. Douglas of Scotland, knitwear manufacturers based at 6 Lothian Street.

the Douglas Airms (thu-dug-lis-ārmz) n. former name for the public house at the end of Drumlanrig Bridge, later known as the Office. It was the Douglas Arms in the early years of the 20th century, and until at least the 1930s.

the Douglas Banner (thu-dug-lis-baw-nur) n. pennon held for centuries in Cavers House, after being taken from the field of Otterburn. It is about 13 feet long, and has on it a lion passant, St. Andrews cross, 2 hearts, a mullet and the words 'Jamais arryere'. It was said to have been the standard of James, Earl of Douglas, and carried from battle by his illegitimate son Archibald, 1st of Cavers. The pennon displayed at the Museum's 1866 exhibition was said to be a replica. It is now in the Museum of Antiquities in Edinburgh.

Douglas Burn (dug-lis-burn) n. stream that flows roughly south-east from Blackhouse Heights to join the Yarrow Water at Craig Douglas. A 1649 account of Selkirkshire describes 'Douglass Burn flowing from the head of Maner Water in Tweddale and falls into Yaro at Momberger' – 'Tarras and Dod and Douglas, Tinnis Water and Trow; To the drone of bees On the clovered leas, Would sing me a welcome now' [WL].

Douglas Court (dug-lis-kōr') n. street in Denholm where there were new houses built around 1966.

the Douglas Crypt (thu-dug-lis-kript) n. burial aisle at Cavers Old Kirk. This was formerly the altar end of the church in Pre-Reformation days. It was converted into a burial chamber for the Douglases of Cavers in the middle of the 17th century, about the same time the church was largely reconstructed, and a Laird's Loft was added above the crypt.

Douglas Drive (dug-lis-drīv) n. street in Denholm, parallel and to the south of Main Street, where new houses were built around 1966. It also has a section perpendicular to the main part, connecting to the Ashloaning. The street contains the Old Telephone Exchange.

the Douglases (thu-dug-li-seez) n. local landowning family, which gave Hawick its burgh status as well as its existing charter, and supplied Sheriffs of Teviotdale for generations. The 2 branches of the most importance locally are derived from 2 illegitimate sons of James, 2nd Earl of Douglas, namely William, 1st Baron of Drumlanrig and Archibald of Cavers. The Douglases held the Barony of Hawick from the late 14th century, confirmed to Douglas of Drumlanrig in in 1412. The lands remained in Douglas of Drumlanrig hands until passing to the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1675. However, the title of Baron (or Lord) of Hawick remains with the family unto this day. The Douglases held the patronage of St. Mary's Kirk in Hawick from 1447 until 1448 and again in the 17th century until 1675. The Douglases of Cavers were there from the 14th century, with the male line dying out with the 20th Laird, although the local Palmer-Douglases still have a connection. Almost all the Lairds of Cavers were called Archibald, James or William. The Douglases of Douglas and of Angus were significant nationally, although they had little local influence after the early 16th century. Other minor branches with local influence include the Douglases of Bonjedward, Timpendean and Friarshaw. There were also Douglases in early times at Hornshole, Brieryyards and the Trows. The Douglas heart represents the heart of Robert the Bruce, which was taken to the Crusades by Sir James Douglas. The family motto is 'Jamais Arrière' (never behind) – 'There circles many a legendary tale, Of Douglas' race, foredoom'd without a male, To fade, unbless'd, since on the churchyard green, Its lord o'erthrew the spires of Hassel-dean' [JL].

Douglasfield (dug-lis-feeld) n. former farmstead just south of the Dearly Burn, east of Muirfield. Robert Henderson was farmer there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls (marked on Stobie's 1770 map).

Douglas Haig Court (dug-lis-hāg-kōr') n. accommodation built on the site of the former abattoir, or 'Killin Hoose', at Eskdail Bank in 1976 by the Royal British Legion to provide accommodation for ex-servicemen and their dependants.

Douglas-Hamilton see Dunbar Douglas

Douglashaugh Plantin (dug-lis-hawf-plawn'-in) n. plantation in the Borthwick valley, between Hoscote and Outerside.

Douglas-Hogg (dug-lis-hōg) n. Keith (1976/7–) Halberdier from 2020, his great-great grandfather was 'Elec the Bellman'. Brought up in Longcroft Crescent, he attended Drumlanrig school and the High School. He served in the Blues and Royals and then the Royal Military Police. After 22 years in the military he has worked as a social care manager with mental-health charity Penumbra. He married Claire Douglas and their children are Elie, Douglas and Hugh.

the Douglas Hotel (thu-dug-lis-hō-tel) n. former temperance hotel on the Tower Knowe, where the Office Bar is now located, also known as 'the Douglas Temperance Hotel'. In the latter part of the 19th and early 20th centuries the proprietors were Cecilia and Bessie Wight (cousins of Adam Grant's wife).

Douglas' Loup (dug-lis-eez-lowp) n. former name for a part of the Wauchope Burn to the west of old Wauchope House (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Douglas o Scotland (dug-lis-ō-sko'-lind) n. knitwear firm based at the corner of Lothian Street and Allars Bank, formerly Scott & Telfer's mill, built about 1874. The firm specialised in cashmere and other luxury garments. It started in the 1950s and went through liquidation at the end of 2005.

Douglas Road (dug-lis-rōd) n. street of private houses in the Wellogate area, built in 1903, and named after Bailie James Douglas. J.P. Alison designed one of the original houses there, a double cottage.

Douglas Road East (dug-lis-rōd-eest) n. extension of Douglas Road, joining Twirless Terrace round the hairpin bends to Weensland Road, built in 1906.

Douglass (dug-lis) n. Frederick (c.1818–95) African American social reformer. He escaped from slavery and became a leader in the abolitionist movement, noted as an orator and serving as a dramatic counter-example to slavery proponents' views on black people. He travelled through Britain and Ireland for 2 years, 1845–6, and lectured in Hawick in November 1846, his only speaking engagement in the Borders. A story was told by abolitionist George Thompson (apparently when later visiting Hawick, as recounted in the Hawick Advertiser and also in the Border Counties' Magazine of 1881) that he and Douglass had stopped off in Jedburgh around midnight on a carriage ride from Newcastle to Edinburgh, and described the comical sight of the innkeeper of the Spread Eagle there, scared to his wits end that he has seen 'the very deevil himself' when he caught sight of Douglass by the light of his candle. In Hawick he was met by the coach of Walter Wilson and spent the evening at Orchard. The Relief Kirk rescinded their offer of the use of their premises for his meeting and the Green Kirk hosted him instead, with Rev. Rodgie acting as chairman. He talked for nearly 2 hours (apparently the same speech he had previously given in Edinburgh), followed by his companion Rev. James Robertson talking for a further hour. He left Hawick the following morning, but Robertson spoke again for the following 2 nights, particularly on the issue of the Free Church supporting slaveholding churches in America. It was said that in Hawick 'Mr. Douglas was again and again cheered with an enthusiasm such as has rarely been witnessed here'. It is worth adding that his surname was picked by him after he escaped from slavery, the suggestion coming from a friend who had been reading Sir Walter Scott's 'Lady of the Lake', with the extra 's' being added as a deliberate decision to spell it differently. Although he had several editions of Scott's epic poem in his personal library, and was well acquainted with the work and its author, there is no evidence that he visited Abbotsford while he was in the Borders. A plaque to commemorate his speech was unveiled at Myreslawgreen in 2023.

Douglas Square (dug-lis-skwār) n. main square in Newcastleton. North and South Hermitage Street runs to the north and south off the square. The Grapes Hotel is at Nos. 16 and the Liddesdale Hotel at No. 17 are also on the square. The square contains a war memorial, consisting of a granite plinth topped with the figure of a soldier in K.O.S.B. uniform. No. 8 was formerly the Crown Inn. There was also an old public pump well there.

Douglas Terrace (dug-lis-te-ris) n. name originally given to the lower houses in Wellogate Place, after Bailie James Douglas, but discarded in 1882.

the Douglas Tragedy (thu-dug-lis-traw-ji-dee) n. traditional ballad telling of the death (in one version at least) of the 7 Douglas brothers. This followed the elopement of their sister Lady Margaret with Lord William, having a tragic ending near Craig Douglas farm, east of St. Mary's Loch. It was further pupularised in the 1755 play by John Home – 'Lord William was buried in St Mary's kirk, Lady Margaret in Mary's choir, And from Lord William's breast there grew a red rose, And from Lady Margaret's a sweet brier' [T].

the Douglas Trei (thu-dug-lis-trī) n. chestnut tree that stood by Cavers Church until 2000. Legend said it was planted in the reign of James VI, and that if ever a limb fell a family member would die. For the last part of its roughly 600 years it was supported by wooden beams and iron chains. Another tree of perhaps the same age is still standing nearby. A local legend tells of a tunnel leading from the Warden's Tower to near here.

Dove (duv) n. Henry (b.1814/5) from Edinburgh, he was listed in the 1841 and 1851 censuses as a frameworker. However, he is probably the proprietor of 'Henry Dove & Co.' listed in Slater's 1852 directory as grocers on the High Street and at Teviot Square.

Dovecot (duv-ko') n. area lying to the Hawick side of Teviothead village. The farmstead of Dovecot is on the left-hand side of the A7, where it crosses the Dovecot Burn. The area of Dovecot Brig lies on the opposite side of the Teviot.

Dovecote Croft (duv-ko'-kroft) n. name for piece of land near the head of what became Dovecote Street. This is where St. Andrew's Kirk was built in the late 19th century, on land at the corner of North Bridge Street and Union Street.

Dovecote Knowe (duv-ko'-now) n. small hill just to the south-east of Stobs Castle, with a circular plantation on it (there was presumably once a dovecote near here).

Dovecote Knowe (duv-ko'-now) n. former name for a small hill on the south side of the Teviot east of Denholm, roughly opposite Deanfoot. It is unclear precisely what hill is meant.

Dovecote Mews (duv-ko'-mewz) n. private development built on the site of the former Drill Hall at the foot of Dovecote Street in 1986.

Dovecote Park (duv-ko'-pawrk) n. former name for a field immediately west of Kilmeny, once part of Langlands estate and probably the site of a Dovecote. It was also a name used to refer to the area around and east of Dovecote Street, before it was developed into Union Street.

Dovecote Park (duv-ko'-pawrk) n. former name for a field just south-west of Timpendean Tower. No sign of the former dovecote remains.

Dovecote Street (duv-ko'-stree') n. street off North Bridge Street, with the main housing built in 1862. It is named after a Dovecote that stood there from early times and is marked on Wood's map of 1824 (on the south side near where the Drill Hall was later built). The bus garage was for a long time near the top of the street, and the area at the foot was known as the Drill Hall until recently, with the Evergreen Hall on the opposite side. Dovecote Mews was devloped there in 1986 (also formerly spelled 'Dovecot').

Dovehaugh see Doveshaugh

Dove Knowe (duv-now) n. hill above Overhall Wood, reaching a height of 168 m. It is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map.

Dovemount (duv-mown') n. name for the eastern part of Wilton which was previously called Easter Howlands, bounded by Wilton Crescent Lane on the west, the Heaps on the north and the lands of Wilton glebe (i.e. Mansfield) on the east and south. Presumably the name derives from this being locally up a hill frequented by doves (perhaps from a nearby dovecote) – but how it could be both a 'mount' and 'howlands' is interesting! George Haliburton acquired the lands from Robert Langlands in about 1770. In 1788 the lands were probably those listed as 'W. Tudhope's lands) belonging to George Haliburton and valued at £25. Thomas Cook was living there in 1790. The lands were sold off in parts by George Haliburton and his heirs from the late 18th century. In about 1810 'Auld Dovemount' was built, along with John Graham's inn. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls George Haliburton is listed as owner, with the lands valued at £25; by about 1874 Thomas Laidlaw was owner. Sections were renamed Havelock Street and Wilton Place in 1864. Dovemount Place was named simply 'Dovemount' until 1874 (note also sometimes 'the Dovemount' and occasionally 'Dovesmount').

Dovemount Gairden (duv-mown'-gār-din) n. another name for Dovemount Nurseries and perhaps also applied to the gardens at the end of Princes Street. Part of the site became the location for the Youth Centre.

Dovemount Nurseries (duv-mown'-nur-su-reez) n. plant nursery at Wellfield, run by John Forbes in the 1870s, before he moved to Buccleuch Nurseries.

Dovemount Park (duv-mown'-pawrk) n. name used to refer to a piece of ground used for a competition between brass bands, held in Hawick in 1875, including several from England for the first time. It is unclear where exactly the location was, but the press reported a crowd of about 6,000.

Dovemount Place (duv-mown'-plis) n. street between North Bridge Street and Wilton Hill, originally called 'Dovemount' after the area through which it passed and officially renamed Dovemount Place in 1874. The road was built in 1832 to connect the east end of Hawick with Wilton across the new North Bridge. A well was by the roadside for more than a century, and one of Hawick's tolls was situated nearby. A post office at the corner with Havelcok Street closed in 1966. Note that because of the old railway station there are no houses on the east side of the street. A plaque there records improvements to the station and widening of the street.

Dovemount Toll (duv-mown'-tōl) n. one of Hawick's 4 toll houses. It was probably built around 1832, when the new road was built to connect Hawick and Wilton across the North Bridge. A plaque is near the site by the Leisure Centre, at the junction of Dovemount Place with Princes Street. It was also known as the 'North Toll' or 'Wilton Toll' and sometimes 'Wilton Place North Bar'. Mary Beattie was the toll-keeper in 1841.

Dovemount Well (duv-mown'-wel) n. well just off Dovemount Place, which was one of the main sources of water in Wilton until shortly after 1855, when it was condemened after sickness and fever broke out. An inscribed stone on the grassy bank marks its site, and the outflow from its source can still be seen entering the river near the new Waverley Bridge. The water was once regarded as having medicinal properties. It collected into a trough fed by 2 pipes, which was on the north side of the turnpike road through the 18th century until 1832. In that year the North Bridge Street/Dovemount road was built, the street level was raised and the well moved to the south side of the road. It was moved again a few times as the road was altered and closed off for good when its water was blamed for sickness (also called the 'Auld Dovemount Well').

dover (dō-vur) v. to doze, sleep lightly, be in a daze – 'A was juist doverin', 'Dissipation is a rogue, Is sometimes a dovering, At other times when cups are full, Annihilates a sovereign' [BY], 'O I gatte him in a dovering sta', He will be ill to beate' [JTe], 'He wullna thole my feet til be muvet: he that keepes thee wullna dover' [HSR], '. . . there's the ancient toon o Hawick, steeple and lum an a', doverin, already in a kind o sunny dwam . . . Dovesford (dō-vur-furd) n. farmstead in Southdean Parish, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as 'Doverford', when the farmer was James Hardie. Robert Hastie was a mason there in 1797. It is located near Camptown, and may actually be in Edgerston Parish.

Doveshaugh (duvz-hawf) n. former farmstead in Rulewater, a little to the south of Spittal Tower and west of Dykes. It was referred to in 1634 when inherited by James Stewart of Nether Horsburgh from his father; it was associated with Holm and Middle and was a 3 merkland. It was formerly within the Barony of Cavers, being on the west side of the Rule Water, but in the 18th century was listed among parts of Hobkirk Parish that were nearer to Bedrule Kirk than their own kirk. George Turnbull was tenant there in 1686 and Archibald Scott in 1721. The farms of Doveshaughbraehead and Doveshaughmill are recorded on 18th and 19th century gravestones. The lands were formerly part of the extensive Wells estate. James Scott was living there in 1739. Simon Armstrong was there in 1779 and John Neil was tailor there in 1799. In the 19th century there was a single farm there, by the Bedrule Bridge. Robert Elliot was there in 1851 (it first appears as 'Dowishauch' in 1634, and is 'Doushaugh' in 1739 and 'Dovishaugh' in 1799; its origin is probably Middle English 'doue' and Old English 'healh', simply meaning 'the dove haugh'; it is marked 'Dovehaugh' on Stobie's 1770 map and the same on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map; it is unclear if it is related to 'the Doocot Haugh' near Spittal-on-Rule).

Doveshaughbraeheid (duvz-hawf-brāheed) n. former farmstead that was later part of Doveshaugh. John Fiddes was a wright there in 1788.

Doveshaughmill (duvz-hawf-mil) n. former farm on the Tower Burn, south of Spittal Tower and north-west of the main Wells estate. There was a mill there since at least the 16th century, when it belonged to the Douglases of Cavers, was referred to as 'Helme et Middill' and had a fuller's mill as well as a grain mill. Walter Cockburn and James Henderson were tenants there in 1797, when it was recorded on the list for Hobkirk Parish. It is still recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories, with miller William Swanston (the mill is marked without a label on Blaeu's c.1654 map; it is 'Doveshaughmiln' in 1797).

dow (dow) n., arch. a dove – '... behald, thou art fair; thou hest dows' eyne' [HSR], 'An' I said, Oh that I had wings like ane dow!' [HSR], 'But the dow aye seeks the doocot ...' [WL], a dear one (cf. doo, which is more common elsewhere in Scotland).

John (c.1785–1865) from Dunkeld, he was a Master at George Watson's Hospital in Edinburgh and tutor to the family of Sir James Montgomerie Cunningham of Corsehill. He was licensed by Ayrshire Presbytery in 1818 and ordained as minister of Largs in 1831. However, he left the Established Church at the Disruption of 1843. He remained in Largs for a few months, preaching to those who had left with him. In 1845 he became first minister of Roberton Free Kirk ('the Snoot Kirk'), serving until 1852. He was living at Harden Cottage in 1852. He died in Edinburgh. Sheila educated in Hawick, where she was a keen debater. She then moved to the Universities of St. Andrews, Manitoba, McMaster and Glasgow, before becoming Preofessor of Economics at Stirling University. She was also Director of the Stirling Centre for Economic Methodology. Her research focusses on the histoy and methodology of economic thought, as well as on money and banking. She has also advised the House of Commons Treasury Select Committee.

The Dowie Dens o Yarrow (thu-dow-ee-denz-ō-ya-ri) n. Border ballad, existing in several versions. Sir Walter Scott claimed that it was about the duel between John, son of Sir Walter Scott of Tushielaw, and Walter, brother of Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane. However, this seems less clear from other versions. Another theory is that it is about the slaying of John, son of Sir Walter Scott of Harden by the Scotts of Gilmanscleuch. It is also said to be connected with a standing stone near Yarrow Kirk. William Hamilton of Bangour wrote a poem 'The Braes of Yarrow', which is based on the ballad.

In 1905 he gave the 'Immortal Memory' at the Con Club Burns Supper in Hawick and donated to the Hawick & Wilton Cricket Club (not the Hawick Cycling Club as sometimes reported), thereby becoming a patron. He ran unsuccessfully as a Unionist candidate for the Border Burghs in the 1906 election, giving an address to an audience of about 1800 in the Town Hall. He was also presented with Tom Scott's painting of Goldielands (now back in the Museum) as a wedding present by the local Unionists, and was officially a member of the Cycling Club in 1905. His 1911 short story 'Through the Veil' is a supernatural tale set at Trimontium and featuring some Borders accents.

the Drill Hall (thu-dril-hawl) n. former red brick building, constructed in 1889, to designs by J.P. Alsion, at the bottom of Dovecote Street for the local 4th Battalion Kings Own Scottish Borderers territorial units and used as a training centre. It was also used for other occasional purposes, such as during the Annual Congress of the Textile Institute held in Hawick in 1912. Later it saw use as a spacious dance hall in promotions organised by Stan Reid, and for other events, such as the New Year carpet bowling tournament. It was leased to the Post Office in 1971 as a sorting area and finally demolished in 1983, being replaced by the houses of Dovecote Mews. The Army also had temporary buildings to the west of there, including the Cadet Hall.

Drinkstone (dringk-stin) n. farm to the north of Hawick, reached by going straight at the 'Fower Road Ends'. It was known at least as early as the 16th century, when it was home of a branch of the Scotts. There was a dispute over possession of the lands between John Scott in Drinkstone and Robert Scott in Howford in 1535. John Scott of Drinkstone is recorded in the 1550s to 1570s. John Scott 'in Drinkston' was listed by Scott of Satchells among the 24 'pensioners' of Buccleuch (probably some time around 1600). Robert Scott paid land tax there for £66 13s 4d in 1663. It was part of the Buccleuch estates by 1678. The tenant there in 1694 was Robert Scott, along with James Learmonth and Robert Shortreed, with Walter Scott as shepherd. The lands became part of Wilton Parish when Hassendean was suppressed in 1690. Robert Scott was recorded there in 1696, John Easton in 1698, Many Scott in 1703 and Walter Scott in 1704. William Scott was tenant in 1709 and James Grieve in at least 1711–14. Robert Scott of Coldhouse was tenant for 1719–43. It was surveyed along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1718, when it extended to 206 acres and was bounded by Easter Groundistone, Boonraw, Tandlaw, Coldhouse and Wilton Common. John Thomson was living there in 1722, James Cowan was herd 1723–26 and John Kersel was there in 1729. The lands were valued at £30 in 1764, as part of the Buccleuch estates. In 1764 it was described that 'the head-room of Drinkston, being that part of the common of Wilton, that lies next Drinkston march' was regularly used by the tenant of the farm. The farm was re-leased from the Buccleuch Estates by John Lamb in 1744, along with a declaration about what to do if the adjacent Hassendean Common was divided. Adam Ormiston was farmer there in at least the period 1780–97. Walter Scott was a servant there in 1797 and David Scott in 1799. William Anderson was farmer there in 1841 and 1851. A ride-out to there took place in 1899 (the name is first recorded as 'Dryngstoun' in 1528/9 and 1550, 'Dringstoun' in 1535, 'Dringistoun' in 1556, 'Dringston' in 1559 'Dringgestoun' in 1574, 'Drunkston' in 1603, 'Deringstoun' in 1616 and 'Drinkston' in 1643; it is commonly 'Drinkstoun' in the 17th and early 18th centuries and is still 'Drinkston' in 1744; the origin is probably 'the dreng's or freeman's farm' and may imply a feudal relationship with the adjacent Boonraw).

Drinkstone Cleuch (dringk-stin-klooch) n. small stream to the north-east of Drinkstone farm.

Drinkstone Cottage (dringk-stin-ko'-eej) n. cottage near Drinkstone farm. The Hogg family were living there in 1841.

Drinkstone Hill (dringk-stin-hil) n. hill just north-west of Hawick, height 318 m, with a triangulation pillar. Before about the middle of the 18th century there was an old road that came from Teviothead over into the Borthwick valley, past Harden and behind Drinkstone Hill to Groundistone Height, avoiding Hawick. A drove road also used to follow a similar route.

Drinkstone Loch (dringk-stin-loch) n. former name for a body of water near Drinkstone. A description of Roxburghshire written in 1649 states that 'Drinking Stone Loch' is among the county's lochs. It is unclear if this was Drinkstone Struther or Long Moss or something else.

Drinkstone Struther (dringk-stin-stru-thur) n. name for area on Wilton Common, perhaps corresponding to the eastern side of the modern Whitehaugh Moor. It is 'Drinkston-strother' in 1765.

Drinkwater (drink-wa-tur) n. Mrs. (18th/19th C.) resident of Minto Parish, possibly housekeeper at Minto House. In 1799 William Hill is recorded as her servant in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire.

drive a prey (drīv-a-prā) v., arch. to drive off stolen cattle – 'In Coquetdale, Reed and Tyne We drive a prey wi' glee, And lunder the lubberts like swine, And wha daur meddle i' me?' [T], 'The Captain of Bewcastle hath bound him to ryde, And he's ower to Tevidale to drive a prey . . . ' [T].

Dr. Mark's Little Men (dok-tur-mawrks-li'-ul-men) n. travelling orchestra of child performers from Manchester, who were very popular in the 1850s and 60s, playing at the Subscription Rooms in Hawick.

drong (drōng) n., arch. a droning sound – 'Ma lang Dander . . . cam ti an end . . . ti the droang o the Toons clock' [ECS] (also written 'droang').

drook (drook) v. to drench, soak – 'What heaps our hearts wi' heavy wae, An' wi' saut drappin's drouks our pellit' [JoHa], 'Ae lambin' nicht o' drookin' weather a flock o' lambin' men did gather . . . ' [TD] (cf. drack; see also drooked and drookit).

drooked (drookd) pp., adj. drenched, soaked – 'the Friday was aaright, bit oo aa got drooked on the Seterdi', 'In the simmer oo get birsled, Oo get drooked bei autumn's rain, An then the wund turns snell yince mair, An the wunter comes again' [IWL] (cf. drookit).

drookin (drookin) n. a drenching or soaking, often one given to a person by surprise or against their will – 'they ganged up an gave him a drookin in the river', 'aabody got a drookin it the Common Ridin o 1971', '... dog-luggit ... tide-merked Wi mony a drowe and drookin' ' [DH], adj. soaking, wet through, drenched – 'the terrible drookin' wet Common Ridin' o' 1923'.

drookit (droo-kee', -ki') pp., adj. drenched, soaked – 'the Heavens opened an oo got drookit', 'The riven claes, an' droukit skins, That mony gat ... ' [RDW], '... for my heæd is drouket wi' dew, an' my loks wi' the draps o' the nicht' [HSR], 'I lo'e to see the harebell wi' its dancin' cups o' blue, An' bonnie is the primrose whan it's drookit wi' the dew' [JJ], '... Yer driver, drookit wi' the rain, An' whyles half-fou' [JJ], '... He soon was unca droukit craw' [WFC], '... But drookit to the verra sark I couldna raise a froon' [WL], 'The Landlord's poker face seems dour. He tells the tourist 'It's drookit stour' ... ' [TD] (also spelled 'droukit', 'drookeet', etc.; cf. drooked).

droon (droon) v. to drown – 'carefi it the river, A deh wa' ee comin hyim drooned', 'deh droon that whusky wi witter', 'When a' the lave to bed are gane, And weary toil lies droon'd in sleep ... ' [JoHa], 'He'll be drooned but it's no muckle odds; he's a useless body, an' ill never be missed' [WNK], 'Mony waters canna slocken loefe, næther can the fluuds droon it' [HSR], 'Minglin' wi' the notes of wailin' Droon'd by base degenerate railin' ' [RK], '... Which Tam, puir cratur', couldna bide, Mair like his sorrows droon' [WFC], '... It's droonin' tae, that sets mei frettin', In drams and yill' [DH] (see also droonit).

Droonin Sike (droon-in-sīk) n. Drowning Sike, small stream just to the east of the Maidean, which flows into Harwood Burn to eventually join the Slitrig. It is crossed by a section of the Catrail.

droonit (droo-nee', -ni') pp., arch. drowned – '... promeist be him to bring haill, saif and sound to Hawick, quhilk he brak, drownet, and lossit be the way' [BR1652], '... an' that he wer drounet in the deip o' the se' [HSR].

droon the miller (droon-thu-mi-lur) v., arch. to add too much water to an alcoholic drink or to in cooking.

droot (droo') n. a drought. There was a severe drought in Hawick (and elsewhere) in 1826, sometimes called the 'Droothy Simmer', and another in 1844 which brought the Town's mills to a standstill – '... And brunt broon in the lang droot Are the neep shaws' [WL].

drooth (drooth) n. thirst, dry mouth, drought, prolonged period of dry weather – 'they sautty peanuts hev gien is a right drooth', 'Let drouth hae drink her dry to weet, And hungry wames hae rowth o' meat' [JoHa], 'This day my fast I haena broken, I late last might my drouth did slocken' [JoHa], 'Ilk Oliver a drouth inherits, Leevin or dead we stick by spirits' [WNK], 'For daye an' nicht thy han' was hivie apon me: my moustir is turnet intil the drouth o' simmer' [HSR], '... the untæmet cuddies slocken their drouth' [HSR], 'Sin' that ane that slocked Samson's drooth I' the jawbone o' the cuddie' [VW], 'C'away and slacken yer drouth and we'll drink tae the best o' dochters ... ' [JEDM], 'In mony a toun I've quenched my drouth And gi'en for mony a toast the order' [GWe], 'There's mony ane that talk o' drouth When drouth they never fin', And mony a ane creates a drouth Wi' drinking late at e'en' [DA], '... an than A gaed inti a bit an slokent ma drooth' [ECS], '... Wi' the 'Paul as a bieldy Limbo Where the lost drooths Dwell' [DH], '... His is nae mealy-mooth, He's a sutten-doon drooth, But his crack is aye herty and free' [WL] (also spelled 'drouth'; cf. the less common drowth).

drooths (drooths) n., pl. droughts, dry years. Probably the worst local drought in recorded history was in the summer of 1826, 'the Droothy Simmer'. 1800, 'the Dear year' also had a drought, following on a winter of heavy rains. There was another serious drought in 1723, with the Hawick Parish records stating there was to be a fast day so 'that God may be pleased in His mercy to put a stop to ye great drought ... '.

droothy (droo-thee) adj., arch. thirsty, craving alcohol – ' 'Hout lod! the hirin's no' begun At a'!' cries drouthy Wullie' [JoHa], '... aw'll tell ye the secret o' the Hawick officers being sic fuddlers; it a' lies i' the drouthy livery ye pit them in' [WNK], '... wine seems to have been a common beverage, and sometimes, as now, to have produced quarrels among the drouthy cronies' [DMW], 'Several of the drouthy inhabitants of the royal Burgh ran to the scene of strife, and with jugs and bowls kepped the liquor as it was flowing out' [HAST1875], 'Long fashed wi' a thriftless and drouthy guidman – Wad ha'e drucken the ocean when ance he began' [JT], extremely dry – '... the drouthy summer of 1826 brought about a change ... ' [WSR], '... no least Ronnie Tait, his

the Droothy Simmer (thu-droo-thee-si-mur) n. popular name for the summer of 1826, which was hot and rainless. Whitsunday (May 15th) had a downpour, then the drought set in until the first week of August. Wheat increased in yield, while oats were very stunted and the oatmeal was full of soil and sand. Water power to some mills stopped altogether, while moorland and forest fires raged throughout Britain. Hawick's rivers (as well as the Rule) almost entirely dried up, bringing the water-powered mills to a standstill (and encouraging the introduction of steam power, starting 5 years later). It caused commercial havoc, resulting in several hosiery firms going out of business. The Common Riding that year was held very late, on 16th and 17th June. Local events were dated from this year for many decades.

the Droothy Year (thu-droo-thee-yeer) n. name given to the year 1826, because of the Droothy Simmer – 'During this year, which is still spoken of as 'the drouthy year', no rain fell from May till August' [DMW].

drop (drop) n., arch. a disappointment – 'Now that's exactly where I got a drop that raether taen iz ti the fair!' [ECS].

drope (drōp) n., arch. a measure of some kind, probably corresponding to a 'drop wecht', which corresponded to a 16th of an ounce – '... James Scott Laird's quarter of ane pound wanted ane drop, his twa unce wanted half a drop and more' [BR1676], 'Item, for six drope of Silke ... 00 12 00' [BR1707].

droppit (dro-pee', -pi') pp., poet. dropped – 'but soon as he saw him, doon droppit the gun, And up stairs like lightning away he has run' [JoHa] (also drappit).

drop-scone (drop-skōn) n. a small round flat cake cooked on a griddle, called a 'Scotch pancake' in England (see also scone).

dross (dros) n. coal or peat dust, formerly used to damp down a fire – 'The power my grandeur to destroy No yellow dross from him could buy' [WNK].

drossy (dro-see) adj., poet. gross – '... where were deposited the drossy and decaying remains of a treasurem the most valued by him of anything in this sublunary world' [JTe].

drove roads (drōv-rōdz) n., pl. routes used for driving sheep and cattle. There were formerly several of these passing near to Hawick, which were particularly used for driving cattle from the Highlands to the markets of northern England. They typically avoided difficult river crossings (e.g. the one passing north of Hawick into the Borthwick valley), as well as major towns and tolls. These routes became well established after the Union of the Crowns in 1603, and were well used until about the first quarter of the 19th century, when there was increased carrying trade on the improved toll roads. Hawick was a major stopping point for droves travelling between markets such as Falkirk and those around Newcastle and Carlisle. The Council forbade droves from using the Common after the Division of 1777, but in 1785 agreed to let them stop for 3 days at the Moor as part of a cattle fair held around Thorterdykes and Haggishaa in November (or perhaps October). The exact routes of the drove routes presumably changed with time, and several of them had overlapping sections. Most of the local examples can hardly be traced any more, although there are some sections that are still quite visible, e.g. at Muselee. There were at least 5 distinct drove roads that passed near Hawick: one via the Loan, the Nipknowes, Pilmuir, Pilmuir Rig, the Caa Knowe, Troutlawford, Harecleuchhead, Penchrise and over a ford near Shankend; a second came across the old 'Thief's Road' from Liddesdale (the 'Maiden's Way' may be essentially the same route) joining the existing road near Dod farm and hence up towards Hawick; a third came from Harelaw (between Lilliesleaf and Hassendean), along the north side of Bewlie Moor and Chapel Moor to Groundistone Heights, then crossing the Hawick-to-Selkirk road, passing behind Drinkstone Hill to Harden Cottage, then along the back of Borthwickshiels to Borthwickbrae Burnfoot, Milsington, Deanburnhaugh, Craik, Howpasley and over the hills into Eskdalemuir; a fourth road went from Newlands (on the Hassendean-Lilliesleaf road), passing Hassendean Common to Moorfield, then following the Hawick-to-Selkirk road until Boghall, then the 'Fower Road Ends', Stouslie, Dykeneuk, towards the Cala Burn, past Whitehaugh, Wilton Dean, turning right to Brieryhill, connecting with Overhall-Wiltonburn road, behind Highchesters Hill and by Harden Burnfoot to Borthwick Mains and on to the upper Borthwick valley; and a fifth road came over the Limekilnedge and up the Slitrig valley, crossed a ford at Newmill-on-Slitrig, passed behind Coliforthill (still marked as a drove road on the Ordnance Survey map) to join the Lover's Lane, merging with the old high road to Newcastle at Ormiston, and hence via Birneyknowe, Appotside, the Forkins and on to the Carter Bar to Newcastle or via the Note-o-the-Gate to Liddesdale. Another choice was to leave the road at Cleuch Head, passing between Wolfelee Hill and Mackside Hill to join part of the Wheel Causeway and hence via Wheelkirk and Deadwater into Northumberland. The route through the Borthwick valley could also pass through Deanburnhaugh past Girnwood, over to East Buccleuch, and on towards Eskdalemuir (partly marked on Mitchell's 1851 map of Selkirkshire), and there was another route past Muselee and over to Teviothead or Commonside (following part of the Catrail), connecting to Hawick via Old Northhouse. There was also a piece of drove road between Spittal Tower and Dykes. The names Kinnelcuttie (in the Borthwick) and Lightpipe (on Hawick Common) may have related to places where drovers stopped for a smoke. Note that some parts of drove roads were not marked in any way, but just represented an understood right of way. Because of this, drovers would often wander across some farms, with fights sometimes breaking out with shepherds guarding their own flocks and pastures.

drowe (drow) n., arch. a cold, damp mist, drizzle – 'And the lofty hills that stand serene 'Mid sunshine, and storm, and drow, Looked down with a calm and tranquil mien, And stamped the peace of the restful scene On the townsman's toil-worn brow' [TK], 'The daggy drowe comes drifflin on' [ECS], '... dog-luggit ... tide-merked Wi mony a drowe and drookin' ' [DH], 'Ah weel, my man, I dinna doobt You'll meet a canny drowe ... ' [WL], particularly occurring in the phrase 'a Liddesdale drowe' – 'I have heard an old lady remark, quoting a local saw: A Liddesdul drow Weets a Tibidull [Teviotdale] man Throw and throw' [BM1933], v., arch. to drizzle – '... Into shabby broun in the rain's drowin' weet' [WL] (also written 'drow'; this was once pronounced with a longer ō-oo diphthong).

drowth (drowth) n., arch. a drought, thirst – 'Where wi' herry and spulzie, wi' raif and wi' stouth, We stammached our hunger and quenched our drouth' [JTe] (also written 'drouth'; cf. the more common drooth).

drucken (dru-kin) adj., arch. drunken, addicted to alcohol – 'May'e plenty hae o' gospel gear, Braw godly foys, An', odsake, Jamie, aye beware O' drucken ploys' [JoHa], 'Take my advice, though but a brute: Leave off ilk drucken, rantin' rout' [JoHa], 'Moo indeed, ye drucken auld thief that ocht tae be ashamed o' yersel' [JEDM], 'She'll ca' mei a drucken auld deevil An' try an' look roosed a' day!' [RM], 'Bousie wi flourish, My rowan beams Like a drucken bride ... ' [DH], 'The wine was flowin', the haa was ringing Wi' drucken lauchs, and the soun' o' singing' [WL], '... the bust o Thomson which was ti be crooned as the culmination o the ceremony bein smashed in a drucken frolic afore its erection' [IWL], 'The day is treated like a big picnic, even if for some it's a gei drucken yin' [IWL], pp., arch. drank, drunken – 'I haw druken my wyne wi' my milk ... ' [HSR], 'I dinna ken how much whisky they took, mem, but they've drucken sax gang o' watter!' [V&M], '... Wad ha'e drucken the ocean when ance he began' [JT], 'A felt A cood heh drucken waeter ... till ma lugs played crack!' [ECS], n., arch. drunken people – 'An' sall begin sall begin til toober his fella-servents, an' til eet an' drink wi' the druken' [HSR].

drugget (dru-gi') n., arch. a coarse cloth made of worsted and hemp woven together. It was manufactured locally on the hand-loom in the late 18th century – 'The dress of these people was of the rudest and roughest – the women wearing coarse home-made drugget' [JJV].

the Druids (thu-droo-idz) n., pl. ancient mystical British priest class, supposed to have been associated with the Mote and other local places. Whether they ever existed at all is debated, but certainly there is nothing to link them with Hawick. There is also sometimes claimed to be a connection between the wearing of oak leaves on Common-Riding Friday and the Druids. Their supposed connection with the Mote may be entirely the fault of Sir Walter Scott – 'Dimly he view'd the Moat-hill's mound, Where Druid shades still flitted round' [SWS], ' 'Hawick shall striumph 'mid destruction' Was a Druids dark prediction' [JH], 'It first be torn not by the plough The ancient bonny green Moat-Knowe; For sair I fear it, too, maun fall, Though reared by hands Druidical' [AD], 'And this snug little town that nestles down Where druid and pagan prayed ... ' [TK].

druil (dril) v., arch. to cry mournfully.

Drumbeck see Dumbreck

Drumlanrig (drum-lan-dreeg, -rig, -reeg) n. title of the house of Douglas, particularly applied to refer to Sir James Douglas, who granted Hawick its 1537 charter. The lands are in Nithsdale, Dumfriesshire, about 15 miles north of Dumfries. They were part of the ancient earldom of Mar, which the Douglases owned since the 1st Earl of Douglas inherited it from his brother-in-law, Thomas Earl of Mar. The Barony of Drumlanrig was granted by James, 2nd Earl of Douglas, to his illegitimate son William some time in the period 1384–88; this started the line of Douglases of Drumlanrig. The lands reverted to their superior (the Crown) several times in the 15th century and also for 32 years after the death of William of Drumlanrig at Flodden. The arms of the Douglases of Drumlanrig was the quartered arms of Douglas and Mar, with a red bordure added, later changed to gold, on which was the red royal tressure, and their motto is 'Forward'. The 'Tower of Hawick' was listed among the 'principal Houses on Tiot' in 1649. The present version of the castle was constructed in the late 17th century and is owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch – 'We'll a' hie to the muir a-riding; Drumlanrig gave it for providing' [AB], ' 'Twas then Drumlanrig, generous donor, Gave (immortal be his honour!)' ... [JH] (the origin of the name is uncertain, but possibly 'ridge long ridge', with the first element either Cumbric or Gaelic; note the different pronunciations, with the most common local one having the sounded 'd' in the middle, although this is not typical outside Hawick; also note the huge variety of former spellings; it is 'Drumlangrig' in 1353/4, 'Drumlangryg' in 1357, 'Drumlangrig' in 1407 and 1412, 'Drumlangryg' in 1415, 'Drumlangryge' and 'Dromlangryg' in 1427, 'Drumlangrige' and 'Drumlangryk' in 1452, 'Drumlangryg' in 1459, 'Drumlangrig' in 1464/5, 1479 and 1484, 'Drumlangryk' in 1491/2, 'Drumlanrik' in 1494, 'Drumlangrig' in 1501 and 1502, 'Drumlanark' in 1511, 'Drumlangrig' and 'Drumlanryk' in 1514, 'Drumlanerk' in 1536/7, 'Drumlanark' in 1557, 'Drumlangrig' in 1615 and 'Drumlenrick' in 1661).

Drumlanrig (drum-lan-reeg, drum-lan-dreeg) n. popular name for Drumlanrig School and surrounding area (many different pronunciations exist).

the Drumlanrig Bar (thu-drum-lan-reeg-bawr) n. pub at 29–31 Drumlanrig Square.

Drumlanrig Brig (drum-lan-reeg-brig) n. Drumlanrig Bridge, the main bridge over the Slitrig, originally called Slitrig Bridge. It was built by public subscription in 1776–77, with stone from a Bedrule quarry, and formed of two flat arches. It made a dramatic improvement to the town, giving greater accessibility between the eastern and western parts than had been possible with the neighbouring Auld Brig and the route through Silver Street. On completion there was a public procession of the town's piper, the drums and fifes, the Magistrates, Council, Cornet and Flag, etc., with a speech on the bridge made by Bailie Hardy while the Cornet James Richardson waved the Flag on top of the bridge. Although a great improvement, it was still quite narrow, being the width of a cart, with a recess on either side. Its narrowness could be quite dangerous on fair days, when packed with people. It was widened in 1828 to facilitate the market which met there. Then it was further widened to a triple width structure in 1900, with the stone parapet replaced by ornamental ironwork. This was redesigned after structural strengthening in 1978. The 50th mile-stone from Edinburgh used to stand on the northern parapet.

Drumlanrig Castle (drum-lan-reeg-kaw-sul) n. castle in Upper Nithsdale in what was formerly Dumfresshire, this was originally the home of the 'Black' Douglas family, with the present castle being built in 1679–1691 by William Douglas, the first Duke of Drumlanrig and 3rd Earl of Queensberry. On the death of the 4th Duke of Queensberry the Castle and the Queensberry title passed to the Dukes of Buccleuch, becoming one of the four major Scottish houses they owned (the name comes from the spur of a 'drum' or 'long ridge' on which the castle is built).

Drumlanrig Home (drum-lan-reeg-hōm) n. another name for Drumlanrig Hospital.

Drumlanrig Hospital (drum-lan-reeg-hos-pi'-ul) n. the poor-house, turned into an old-folks hospital, situated off a drive at the top left-hand corner of Drumlanrig Square. The building was constructed in 1856/7. It is a 2-storey, 11-bay construction on a rectangular plan, built with whinstone, with red sandstone dressings. It was built to hold 133 inmates, at a cost of £4,000. In WWI it was used as an army hospital. In the 1930s it was renamed Drumlanrig Poor Law Institution and later became a geriatric hospital. It closed in 1994, with many of the residents moving to St. Margaret's or Crumhaugh House. It was converted into flats in 2009/10. A gable contained stonework saved from the Buccleuch Memorial, which was removed during the latest renovations. It is a grade B listed building.

Drumlanrig Place (drum-lan-reeg-plis) n. street in the West End, joining the north side of the Loan a little higher up than the Mote. It was built in 1850–55 and named after the Douglases of Drumlanrig. The corner of the street used to have a public well with water coming from Haggishaa and Dodburn. On the Saturday of the Common Riding the Drums and Fifes stop here after leading the mounted procession up the Loan, and they play Teribus as the riders pass.

Drumlanrig Quadrilles (drum-lan-reeg-kwad-reelz) n. piano tunes written by William Laidlaw and arranged by R.W. Manning, published in 1886 by Adam Grant.

Drumlanrig Schuil (drum-lan-reeg-skil) n. Drumlanrig and St. Cuthbert's Primary School, on the Loan. It started as the Hawick and Wilton Industrial School, built in the West-End around 1855. It was supported by the Duke of Buccleuch at the suggestion of Rev. Dr. MacRae. It was taken over by the new School Board in 1872 and a new school was built in 1873 by public subscription in a field behind Nos. 13 and 15 Loan, being renamed Drumlanrig. The small school associated with West Port Church merged with it in 1875. The pupils from St. Cuthbert's School joined in 1956, when the name was extended. The school was entirely rebuilt starting in 1960, with several more recent additions. School Inspectors' Reports for 1874–1953 are in the National Archives. The earliest known photograph of the school is from about 1906. James Ker was Headmaster from 1860, John Fowler from 1860 and Basil Wilson in the mid-1900s. The school is notable for the pencil-shaped bollards outside it.

Drumlanrig's March (drum-lan-reegz-mawrch) n. name used for the song or tune 'Teriodin' in the 18th century (as described by Robert Wilson).

Drumlanrig Square (drum-lan-reeg-skwār) n. open area between the Howegate and the Loan, known as 'the Raws' prior to 1886 when it was the site of the Fore Raw, the Back Raw and the Mid Raw. J.P. Alison designed some houses there, particularly at Nos. 26 and 31 in about 1891 and No. 16 in 1901. It changed considerably with demolition at the end of the 19th century and with the construction of the gardens, clock and Brown Fountain in the centre in 1910. Since then it has popularly been known as 'the Square'. Eildon Housing carried out extensive renovations on the south side of the Square in 1997. It has housed several pubs, including the Drumlanrig Bar and Barclay's currently, as well as other businesses (named after Douglas of Drumlanrig, the 'generous donor').

Drumlanrig's Toor (drum-lan-reegz-toor, -tow-ur) n. the oldest building in Hawick, being a fortified 'L'-shaped tower dating mainly to the 1550s, surrounded by later building work, particularly from the 18th century. There is also some evidence of an earlier building on the site, which probably replaced the Baron's wooden tower on the Mote, perhaps in the 14th century. Depending on the age of the first construction, it was probably built for either the Lovels or the Douglases. It is possible this was the 'tower between the bridges' referred to in 1507/8 as a property of the Scotts of Allanhaugh and Whitchesters (in which case that would be the earliest specific record). It may also be the same as the tower belonging to the Laird of Buccleuch that was burned in the English raid on Hawick in 1547/8. It is sometimes also referred to as 'the Black Tower', which may be connected to it surviving one of the times that Hawick was burned (however, there may be other explanations). As the most prominent Hawick building, it has served many purposes. In 1562 the King arranged for a court to be set up in the Tower which sentenced 20 'criminals' to be drowned in the Teviot. The Scotts of Branxholme took up residence there temporarily from 1570, after Branxholme was blown up by the English. The tower was then used as a holding place for criminals, the prison later being converted to the wine cellar of the inn. The Scotts of Buccleuch took over the tower (and the lands around Hawick) in 1671. Covenanters (led by Thomas Turnbull of Stnadhill) successfully laid siege to it in 1679, in order to take the militia arms stored within. It was then derelict until about 1701. Anne Duchess of Buccleuch had the Tower renovated, particularly in 1702–04, turning it into a major residence. It was extended to its present proportions and used as a country retreat from the main family seat at Dalkeith. It was used by troops during the Jacobite rebellions of 1715 and 1745 when they passed through the town. It was repaired in 1730–32, and when the Duke of Buccleuch paid tax for 42 windows in Hawick in 1748 that was probably for the Tower. By about 1750, with the Scotts moving to Bowhill, it was abandoned as a town house; there is an inventory of the Duke's furniture and pictures there in that year and again in 1756. In 1757 it was said to be the only slated house in Hawick. In 1764 it was occupied on a visit to the Town by Henry, Duke of Buccleuch; this was the last time it was used by the Baron. In 1773 (or perhaps 1771) it was converted into an inn, with Michael Stevenson as the first landlord, running successfully for two centuries. Probably around this time the additional stables and other buildings were added in the back. Robert Armstrong was landlord in the 1790s, followed by Billy Brown. At the end of the 18th century the walls were thinned as part of renovations, the pended roofs on the upper floors being removedthe material being used to build part of the nearby waulk mill. From about 1760 until 1862 it was the staging post for the main stagecoach from Carlisle to Edinburgh. The Tower was also the focus of unrest associated with the county elections of 1832, 1835 and 1841, when it was the main poling station in Hawick. It was sold by the Buccleuch family in 1935 and run as a private hotel, later becoming part of the North British Hotels chain. A plaque was unveiled by the Dowager Duchess of Buccleuch in 1951, stating that 'Incorporated within these walls is the Black Tower of Drumlanrig'. The stabling area became Croall Bryson's garage and was also used for a while by the ambulance service. By the 1970s it had fallen into a state of disrepair and was closed as a hotel in 1981, being purchased by the local authority in 1985. It was renovated from 1991 by Gray Marshall Associates for the Scottish Historic Buildings Trust and reopened in 1995 as a visitor attraction. 'Drumlanrig's Tower Tourist and Information Centre' contained displays focussing on the history of Hawick, the area and the tower, as well as a gift shop. Parts of the earlier building are now uncovered, including a vaulted cellar and the baronial hall. Much of the garage area was redeveloped to make Lovel Court in the early 1990s. In 2010 the tower was renovated again as the 'Borders Textile Towerhouse', with a focus on textiles history. A plaque outside marks the visit of Sir Walter Scott with the Wordsworths in 1803, and the iron door knocker bears the date 1677. It was in former times extensively used for events during the Common Riding, and some of those uses have been resumed – 'The grey old walls of Drumlanrig's tower Rang out with a heartening cheer' [JBB], '... Enduring as her ancient moat Or dark Drumlanrig's tow'r' [JI], '... To share the gen'rous feast and quaff the goblet bright, Within the storied walls of old Drumlanrig's Tower' [JEDM].

Drumlenrig (drum-len-reeg) n. Drumlanrig, often referring to Drumlanrig School and surrounding area (note that multiple pronunciation variants exist).

drumlie (drum-lee) adj., arch. muddy, turbid, cloudy, discoloured (especially of a river in spate) – 'But we must wade the ford repentance, Tho' deep and drumly it should be' [BY], 'Eh whow! Bit ma een are drumlie ...' [RM], '... to be followed only when the Teviot was too drumly or its waters too low for the exercise of the rod or the leister' [WNK], 'Before the sheep had made the water 'drumly', or again after it had cleared ...' [BM1905], 'Guid ale keeps the heart aboon, Better far than drumlie water' [GWe], 'Throwe drumly foreign dub and clairt ...' [DH], 'The waters o' the Teviot Are drumlie at Trowmill ...' [WL], also of the weather, dark, gloomy, figuratively muddled – ''Na', she said, 'It' no that he's ower deep, but that he's drumly'' [RJYS] (also spelled 'drumly').

drummer (dru-mur) n. in former times the duty of one of the Burgh Officers was to beat the drum around the town to announce proclamations, to 'drum out' criminals, etc. Specifically he would parade the town daily at 5 a.m. and 10 p.m. (the times being recorded as 4 a.m. and 8 p.m. in 1729). In 1672 the Bailies requested that the Bailie of Regality use the Town's own drummer and piper to 'set the fair' (rather than those from another town). He would also lead processions at the Common Riding, with the town supplying ribbons to decorate his coat. He would additionally announce public sales at the church door. At Christmas it was traditional for the drummer and bellman to go round the town collecting money for thmeselves for ringing the bells (with it being recorded in 1721 that the 'drummer is allowed ten shillings yearly and his Yuill wages'). All of these duties ended in the early 19th century, with the last 'drumming out of town' happening in 1824. However, town drummers continued as part of the Drums and Fifes band. Note that in 1703 payment for coats was due to 'the officers, pyper, and drumer', suggesting that at that time the positions of Town Piper and Town Drummer were separate from those of the Burgh Officers, although this distinction is less clear at other times. Thomas Boyd is described as a drummer in Hawick in 1713. Robert Wilson is described as a drummer in 1781 and 1791 – 'And list again th' inspiring strain Led on by 'Wat the Drummer'' [JT].

Drummond (dru-mind) n. Agnes (17th C.) mother of 2 illegitimate children of Walter Scott, 1st Earl of Buccleuch; one of these was John Scott of Gorrenberry. She later married Patrick Graham. In 1635 she petitioned the 2nd Earl, pointing out that she had received nothing since the late Earl's decease 2 years earlier; she was given a small sum under the condition that she asked for nothing more. Alexander (b.1808/9) originally from Gordon in Berwickshire, he was farmer at Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1861 he was farming 349 acres there and employing 8 people. He was also listed there in 1868. His wife was Ann and their children included Agnes and Robert. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1733 he witnessed a baptism for William Easton, resident of Heap. He married Helen Scott and their children included James (b.1726). Archibald Hamilton 'Airchie' (1868–1915) 2nd son of George, corn merchant of the Sandbed, he also became a corn merchant. He was Cornet in 1888, his horse being called 'Lady Oliver', after his Lass, and he won one of his own Cornet's Races on it. He was well known as a cyclist, winning many races on grass tracks, and was generally an all-round athlete. He was one of the founding members of the Callants' Club in 1903 and President in 1906. He was also President of Hawick R.F.C. in 1912. It has been said that the face of the callant on the Horse Monument was modelled after his. He married Elizabeth (1872–1966), daughter of Andrew Ekron. Their children included Jessie, Anne, Elizabeth, Margaret Ekron (1899–1988) and Archibald Ekron (1905–62). George (b.1832/3) from Greenlaw, he was a corn merchant in Hawick. He probably purchased the property at No. 3 Sandbed from Andrew Graham in 1852. In 1861 he was living a 3 Sandbed. He married Annie Hamilton, who was from Melrose. Their children included: Isabella Hendry (b.1860); Annie (b.1862); Annie Ovens (again, b.1864); Jessie Hamilton (b.1866); Archibald Hamilton (b.1868), who was Cornet; George Ovens (b.1870); John William (b.1872); and Annie Hamilton (again, b.1874). James (c.1615–75) 3rd Earl of Perth. He was son of John, 2nd Earl of Drummond and Jean Ker, who was daughter of Robert, 1st Earl of Roxburghe. In 1634 he inherited one third of the properties of his uncle William, Master of Roxburghe, with the other parts going to his aunts, Maria and Isabella. This included many lands around Kelso, but also Alton near Hawick. His brother William later became 2nd Earl of Roxburghe. He married Anne Gordon, daughter of the Marquess of Huntly. Jean see Jean Ker. John of Stobshall (c.1438–1519) son of Sir Malcolm and Mariota Murray. He was 1st Lord Drummond. He was appointed a Lord of Session in 1471 and later was made Justiciary General of Scotland. He acted as Depute Justiciar at the Circuit Court in Jedburgh and Selkirk in 1494. He was a Scottish Commissioner to negotiate Border grievances with England in 1495, 1511, 1513 and 1514. Sir Malcolm (d.1403) eldest son of Sir John, 11th of Lennox and Mary Montifex. He was head of a powerful, land-owning family. He married Isabel, only daughter of William, 1st Earl of Douglas; she was Countess of Mar in her own right. He was present at the Battle of Otterburn in 1388, where the death of his brother-in-law James, 2nd Earl of Douglas, led to him succeeding to the Earldom of Mar. His wife also held the Barony of Cavers, and he is recorded in 1390 as superior of Cavers when the Gourlays were confirmed in their lands of Rulewood. He may have acted as Sheriff of Roxburghshire from about 1389. In an English document of 1389 he has special protection for half a year for all his lands and possessions, including Liddesdale, Jedforest, the Barony of Cavers, the town and Lordship of Selkirk, the Barony of Bedrule and many more distant baronies and castles, including Drumlanrig. He died in captivity after being captured by some opponents, perhaps related to Alexander Stewart, 'the Wolf of Badenoch', who later married his widow and acquired the Mar titles. He had no children. Margaret (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident who was convicted in 1697 of stealing several items of clothing and a large loaf. Later in 1697 she and Elizabeth Miller were found guilty of stealing many items from several houses and also from Bailie Laing's cellar, using 'ane false key'. The stolen goods included 'ale, malt, peiss, beans, meall, beir, flesh, sugarloaves, cloths, petticoatts, head dresses, buskins, laces, linnens, stuffs, and divers and sundrie oyrs things'. She was said to live in the same house as Miller, and the pair were in Laing's cellar 8 separate times.

Drummond an Laing's (dru-mind-an-lāngz) n. hosiery firm on Wilton path (near the top of the 'Hunder Steps') in the early 20th century. It was formed as a partnership in 1908 by John Laing and his son Ivan, but taken over by Henderson's in 1913. This ammalgamated into Innes & Henderson in 1919, which later became Braemar Knitwear.

drum oot (drum-oo'-o̅-toon) v. to forcefully reject, overwhelm – 'A thought oo should cairry on, bit A was drummed oot'. This expression derives from the expression 'drum out of town' a form of banishment from a town and frequently a county, which in Hawick continued well into the 19th century, with the last recorded occasion being 1824. The drummer in the last years was Caleb Rutherford, assisted by Burgh officers Sandy Bryson and 'Tufty' Wilson. The 'Rogue's March' would be played on the drum throughout the procession from the old jail to the toll-bar.

drums and fifes (drumz-in-fifs) n. the combination of drums and flutes began to be used as military marching bands in the 16th century, reaching its peak of popularity in the 17th century. A fifer is first mentioned in Hawick town records in 1797. In 1798 the town gave a donation for the Volunteers to purchase drums and fifes. Selkirk and Langholm both have drum and fife bands, and other towns like Edinburgh used to – 'I hear the drums and fifes gang by and clatter o' horse and folk' [JEDM], '... For the drums and fifes are calling, and the Cornet's riding by' [JYH], '... Like the drums and fifes oot airly, And the jowe o' St. Mary's bell' [WL], 'That wakens again the auld mem'ries tae life – The jubilant strain o' the drum and the fife!' [CB].

the Drums an Fifes (thu-drumz-in-fifs) n. the band that plays a significant role at many of the ceremonies associated with the Common Riding. They are often referred to as 'the Cornet's Band', and do not play officially outside Common-Riding season. The first record of a fifer at the Common Riding is in 1797, and individual drummers were employed much earlier than that (from at least 1672). In the 18th century there are plenty of references to a piper, along with a drummer; it is possible that sometimes a fifer is meant. The band itself (with 2 drummers and 2 fifers) can be traced back to at least 1823. The tunics or uniforms date from 1907, and by the 1880s the complement was 3 drummers and 5 fifers. Their official duties begin with the Picking, and they are usually considered to start the Common Riding proper (although opinions differ on whether this is on the Thursday night or Friday morning). At the Colour Bussing procession, they start from the Kirk Wynd at 6 p.m. on the Thursday night, visiting the approximate sites of the old tolls to mark the boundaries of the old town, playing 'Teribus' the whole time. They also accompany the Cornet on his walk round town, playing specific tunes at specific locations. On the Friday morning they begin at 6 a.m. (with 'Teribus') in the Kirk Wynd, proceed to the Snuffin, and follow the same route around the old tolls to wake up the Town. Having received their rum and milk refreshments, they start again at the Kirkwynd (with 'Dumbarton Drums'), walking to the old Loan Toll, then along the High Street to the Horse. At about 7.30 a.m. (playing 'John Paiterson's Mare Rides Foremost') they walk from the Kirk Wynd to the Tower Know, via Drumlarig Square and the Howegate. They join the Cornet's Breakfast, and later join the Procession, leading the Cornet and his supporters. From the top of the Loan to Thorterdykes they play 'Teribus' and 'Jockey to the Fair' in preparation for the Friday Chase. They also lead the march from Drumlanrig Square to the Mill Path for the Song Singing and on to the Town Hall and Tower. On the Saturday they start at 8 a.m., marching from West Port to the Horse, and later play at Drumlanrig Place as the riders pass. After the Moor they lead the Cornet to the Town Hall for the Handing-Back, playing 'Teribus' twice through when he emerges with the Flag. Finally they lead the procession to the Tower, with the Principals carried on others' shoulders, where the Bull Reel is danced. In all they march about 12 miles each Common Riding. The band's complement varies, but now consists of 3 drummers and about 10 fifers. Their most characteristic tunes are 'Rumblin' Brig', 'Teribus' and 'Dumbarton Drums', and at specific times they also play 'Pawkie Paiterson', 'Hazeldean', 'Jockey to the Fair' and 'John Paiterson's Meir Rides Foremaist'. Their repertoire has also included 'Auld Brig', 'This is no my ain Hoose', 'The Girl I Left Behind Me', 'Cock of the North', 'Stumpy' and 'Kate Dalrymple' – 'Our standard is reared once more, my lads, and its folds are flaunting free, The drums and fifes bestir the air in their summons to you and me' [JEDM], 'Anon the drums and fifes send forth their strains Of martial music, rousing old and young, And many a glance from friend reveals The pleasane thoughts unspoken by the tongue' [JCG], 'Callants whom fate or fortune allured, And led beyond the range of 'Drums and Fifes', To new environments become inured, And mingle with the world's ignoble strifes' [TK].

dry-bowk (drI-bowk) n. a retch, attempt to vomit without substance.

Dryburgh (drI-bu-ru) n. area around Dryburgh Abbey, once a thriving town, linked to Jedburgh and Melrose by fords across the Tweed. It was razed by the English in 1545. The estate was held by the Erskines in the 18th century.

Dryburgh Abbey (drI-bu-ru-aw-bee) n. picturesque abbey on a loop in the Tweed between St. Boswells and Newtown St. Boswells. It was built around 1150 by the Order of Premonstratensians (also known as the White Canons) from Alnwick. The site is only a few miles from Melrose Abbey and not much further from Jedburgh. Like the other local abbeys, it was dedicated to Mary. The abbey was ruined by Hertford's men in 1545. The Abbey was purchased in 1780 by David Erskine, the Earl of Buchan, who carried out improvements and preservation. It has some remarkably complete ruins, including a rose window and the Chapter House. The grounds contain a very old yew tree, which tradition says was planted by the monks in 1136, before the foundation of the abbey. This was also the central location for David Erskine's planned 'Temple of Caledonian Fame', which helped preserve the structure and explains the elaborate historical Erskine Obelisk. The Abbey is the burial place of Sir Walter Scott and Field Marshal Earl Haig – 'Praise to the bard, immortal Scott, Who sleeps in 'Dryburgh Bowers' . . . ' [JT] (the name derives from the Old English for 'dry burgh'!).

Dryburgh Abbey Hoose (drI-bu-ru-aw-bee-hoos) n. mansion house near Dryburgh Abbey, substantially rebuilt in 1877, and home of the Erskines. It is now run as Dryburgh Abbey Country House Hotel. The Temple of the Muses near there is topped by a bust of James Thomson, author of 'The Seasons'. There is also a dovecote nearby.

Drycleuchlea (drI-klooch-lee) n. farmstead just to the north-west of Redfordgreen. This is the steading of 'Drycleuchschele' mentioned along with Hindhope and Redford in 1501. It had been occupied for the 6 previous years by Robert Scott. In 1510 it was 'Dricleuchschell' when feued by Alexander, Lord Home. In 1621 it was valued at £15 13s 4d. It was inherited by Thomas Scott of Whitslade from his brother Sir Walter in 1655. The superiority was still held by the Homes when inherited by 3 heirs portioners in 1693. Adam Scott was tenant there (and in Easter Redfordgreen) in 1716. It was listed along with Redfordgreen in the 1785 and 1802 Land Tax Rolls. John Anderson was tenant in 'Drycleugh' around 1800 (it is 'Drycleuchscheill' in 1621, 'Drycleughsheill' in 1655 and 1693 and 'Drycleughshiels' in 1802).

the Dry Dean (thu-drI-deen) n. stream that follows the A7 down from the TV mast past Ashkirk, passing the farm of Dryden and joining the Ale Water. The name is particularly applied to the lower, wooded end (it seems reasonable to assume that the stream was sometimes dry and gave its name to the neighbouring farm).

Dryden (drI-din) n. valley just before Teviothead, with Dryden Fell and Drydenhope nearby. There was formerly a fortified house here. The lands of 'draden' were said to be among those (along with Commonside and Harwood) gained by the Muirs of Rowallan through marriage with an heiress of the Comyns in about 1260; there is no original document to confirm this, but it is stated in a 17th century family history by poet and politician Sir William Muir. Philip of Dryden, who signed the Ragman Rollin 1296, may have held these lands. In 1462 the lands were given (along with Commonside and Over Harwood) by Stephen Scott of Muirhouse to Robert Muir of Rowallan in security for a loan. They were returned to Robert Scott of 'Dogehauch' on full payment of the loan in 1477. This could be the Dryden where Turnbulls were recorded in 1493 and 1494/5. John Turnbull and William Anderson were there in 1502. Stephen Scott's son George of Whames, had the lands confirmed to him in a grant of 'warrandice' in 1508/9. In 1511 the lands were listed among those held 'in tenandry' by the Baron of Hawick, this continuing in the list of 1572 for the retour of James Douglas of Drumlanrig. The lands were sold by Alan Mossman to the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1532. James Cessford was shepherd of the King's lands there in 1540 when he was paid for grain. In 1574 they were listed among the lands of Scott of Buccleuch, but held 'in chief' of Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig (for payment of a red rose), and valued at £5 'in time of peace'. The lands are stil listed among those held by the Baron of Hawick in 1615. The lands were listed in 1663 (and confirmed in 1686) among those owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. John Scott was shepherd there in 1738 and 1739. Robert Nichol was shepherd there in the mid-19th century. Running from here over Hunt Law to the north is a linear earthwork, running about ¾ of a mile (the origin is probably Old English 'dryge denu' meaning 'the dry valley', appropriate since this valley is noticeably dry compared with the surrounding land; the name appears in 1456 as 'Driden', is 'Dridane' in 1462, 'Drydane' in 1447, 'dridane' in 1502, 'Dridane' in 1508/9, transcribed 'Dry Dam' in 1540 and later 'Draiden', 'Dridane', 'Drydane', 'Drydean', 'Drydon', etc.; it is 'Drydenn' on Gordon's c.1650 maps and Blaeu's 1654 map).

Dryden (drI-din) n. farm just north of Ashkirk, off the A7. Along with Headshaw, it was owned by a branch of the Scotts, being sold by Robert of Headshaw to Andrew Hay in 1605. However, John Scott of Headshaw had a charter again for the lands in 1636 and in 1691 they were inherited by Mary Scott from her brother John of Headshaw. The lands were valued in 1643 and 1678 at £290. They were probably sold along with Headshaw in 1696 to the Elliots of Minto. In 1694 there were 5 people resident there who were taxed for having a house with a hearth, as well as 6 poor people who were unassessed. In 1705 they were included among Sir Gilbert Elliot's lands as part of a new Barony of Headshaw. Thomas Kedie was tenant there in 1717. Most of the lands there were liferented to Dr. William Elliot in 1779. They were listed among the properties of Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto in 1788, with the same value of £290. William Huntly is recorded as farmer there in 1797 and Walter Laidlaw was a labourer there in 1801. A map of the farm was drawn up in 1829. In the 1830s the farm was still owned by the Earl of Minto. James Young was farmer in the 1860s. The Dryden Riding Centre has been here since about 1980, started by Jenny Stark, and home of the Stable Life charity. Into the south wall of the stable yard has been built a disc quern, said to have been found when clearing an old water mill. Additionally, pieces of flint have been found here, as well as a pitchstone core (perhaps of Neolithic age, from Arran) and a Bronze Age axe-head. About 400 m north-east of the farm there are traces of rig lines (it appears as 'Drydenn' and 'Dryden' on Gordon's c.1650 maps and 'Drydenn' on Blaeu's 1654 map and is 'Dry dean' on Ainslie's 1773 map; it is 'Drydden' in 1694 and 'Drydon' in 1797).

Dryden (drI-din) n. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His daughter Janet was baptised in 1704. He witnessed a baptism for William Armstrong in Clarilaw in 1703. Adam (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish who married 'Catron' Scott in Roberton Parish in 1722. Adam (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Rutherford and their son William was baptised in 1741. Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who married Betty Pringle in 1761. Their children included Alison (b.1762). Adam (b.c.1780) skinner in Hawick according to the 1801 ballot list for the Militia. Adam (b.1820/1) spinner in Hawick. In 1851 he was living on O'Connell Street. His wife was Agnes and their children included Isabella. Alexander (19th C.) married Margaret Neilson in Hawick in 1845. Their children (baptised in Wilton Parish) included: Alexander (b.1856); Helen (b.1859); Adam (b.1867). He could be the weaver of Wilton who was recorded in Jedburgh Jail in 1864 and 1867. He could also be the resident of Preston who donated a coin to the Museum in 1867. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish who married Isabel Best in 1693. His children included Andrew (b.1694) and James (b.1697). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included: Isabel (b.1728); John (b.1733); Thomas (b.1736); and George (b.1743). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included: Eupan (b.1762); Andrew (b.1757); Charles (b.1767); Charles (again, b.1769); John (b.1770); and Margaret (b.1773). Andrew (1779–1848) son of Thomas and Jean Thomson. His father was blacksmith in St. Boswells, where he was born. He lived at Wilton Dean, then in 1810 moved to Lees and in 1818 to Branxholme Park Woodfoot. In 1803 he married Janet (1785–1864), daughter of John Cairns. Their children were: Mary Ann ('Annie', b.1803), who married William Rae; Thomas (b.1806), who married Agnes Kennedy; John (b.1808), married Margaret Shiel; Robert (b.1811), married Mary Clerk; Jane (b.1813), married James Brown; Andrew (b.1817), married Elizabeth Kennedy; William (b.1820); James (b.1822), married Mary Swan from Lilliesleaf; and Walter Kerr (b.1827). The witnesses in 1803 were Thomas Cairns and James Kerr. The family emigrated to Galt, Canada in 1834 when cholera was visiting the area. They established a home there near North Dumfries known as 'the Dryden Settlement'. Andrew (b.1817) son of Andrew. He was a wright of Everhall and also a member of Allars Kirk. Archibald (15th C.) listed along with John and William among the Roxburghshire men who had remission from James IV in 1488/9 for their support of James III at Stirling. It may be that the 3 men were brothers. It is claimed that he stayed in Roxburghshire, while John and William moved to England (although there is no proof of this); he may therefore be an ancestor of local Drydens. It is also suggested that he was a son of Henry, recorded on the council of James Kennedy, Bishop of St. Andrews in about 1452. Gavin (17th C.) resident of Cavers who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the 'Gawin' who married Janet Miller in 1695 and whose children baptised in Cavers Parish included: Margaret (b.1697); James (b.1699); Janet

(b.1702); John (b.1704); George (b.1706); John (again, b.1708); Margaret (again, b.1711); and Euphan (b.1714). He may be the Gavin whose daughter Margaret married Adam Turnbull in Minto Parish in 1739. Gavin (17th/18th C.) shepherd at Adderstoneshiel. His daughter Margaret was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1718. Gavin (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His daughter Bessie was baptised in 1723. His forename appears to be written 'Gain' and he was living at 'Foulbrae' (although it is unclear where this wass). Gavin (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included: John (b.1776); Robert (b.1778); and Isabel (b.1781), who may have married John Tudhope. Gavin (18th/19th C.) farmer at Cavers Knowes, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 3 horses. He could be the Gavin whose children baptised in Cavers included William (b.1784), who was a millwright in Wilton. His sons Walter and Robert were at Cavers Knowes on the 1799 and 1801 ballots for the Militia. George (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was probably related to John and Thomas, who were also listed. George (17th C.) listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls as a resident at Cavers. He is listed after Gavin, to whom he was presumably related. He could be the George whose children baptised in Cavers included Alison (b.1694) and Janet (b.1697). George (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish who is recorded as tenant in East Mains in 1748. Probably the same George married Ann Turnbull. Their children probably included Janet (b.1745), Gavin (b.1747), Mary (b.1748) and Gavin (again, b.1752). George (18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included: Isabel (b.1771); John (b.1776); and Euphy (b.1780). George (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who married Ann Ferguson in 1818. His wife may be the widow living at about Turk's Close in 1861, with her children Helen, Betsy, Jean and William. George (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who married Christian Elliot in 1828. George (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Mary Ann Gordon and their children included: Alexander (b.1858). Isabel (d.1729) resident of Wilton Parish whose death was recorded at Clarilaw. Isobel (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among 'ye poor'. James (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton and was 'deficient' on the tax roll. Perhaps the same James had a daughter Margaret baptised in 1693. James (17th C.) listed as a resident of Whitriggs on the 1694 Hearth Tax roll. James (17th C.) resident at Clarilaw in Hassendean Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He was probably related to Thomas, who was also listed there. In 1692 he was renting half the Duchess of Buccleuch's lands of Clarilaw (with Thomas Henderson having the other half). He may be a descendant of the later James in Clarilaw. He is probably the James who (along with Thomas Henderson) witnessed a baptism in Roberton Parish in 1682 for James Douglas and Janet Henderson and another (along with John Armstrong) for the same couple in 1686. He is probably the James who married 'Manie' Henderson and their children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included Helen (b.1680) and Adam (b.1684). The witnesses in 1684 were Robert Scott and Andrew Donald. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His daughter Janet was baptised in 1692. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, who married Janet Mack in 1697. He may be the James whose son William was baptised in 1703. James (17th/18th C.) blacksmith at Newmill. In 1720 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott in Branxholme Town. He married Margaret Riddell in 1715. Their children included: Robert (b.1718); Walter (b.1720); William (b.1723); Walter (again, b.1726); and Margaret (b.1729). An unnamed son baptised in 1716 was probably also his child as well as Margaret (b.1730), with mother's name given as 'Ann Riddel'. The witnesses in 1718 were the older and younger William Thomsons from Newmill, in 1720 were Robert Scott in Branxholme Town and William Thomson in Newmill, in 1723 were William and Robert Thomson in Newmill and in 1725 were William Thomson and John Riddell. In 1724 he was witness to a baptism at Newmill. In 1740 the witnesses to a baptism for William Thomson at Newmill (and also for Walter Hume, carrier at Branxholme Town, who married Helen Dryden) were 'James Drydens Elder & Younger Smiths'; this suggest that he had an older son who was also James. He was probably related to the later Drydens in that area. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Appletreehall in 1723. He married Isobel, daughter of Andrew Rodger, in Wilton Parish in 1712. Their children included: Bessie (b.1716); and Helen (b.1723). The witnesses in 1723 were John

Dryden (surely related) and John Scott. He is probably the James who witnessed baptisms in Wilton in 1723 for James Leithead in Boonraw, in 1725 for John Waugh in Appletreehall, in 1728 for John Blyth in Stirches, in 1729 for James Easton in Alton and John Miller in Appletreehall, in 1732 for William Lunn in Appletreehall and for others in the 1730s (sometimes with John). He may also have been the James who witnessed the 1730 baptism for Adam Armstrong in Burnhead and 3 baptisms for Adam Armstrong in Appletreehall (possible the same Adam). However, it is hard to tell which of these were him and which were the contemporary James at Clarilaw, who married Alison Irvine in 1721. It is also possible he is the James, married to 'Isobel Gibson' (if this was an error, or the name from a previous marriage) whose daughter Isobel was baptised in 1719. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He is recorded at Denholm in 1719 and Birneyknowe in 1725 and 1726. His children included: James (b.1717); Janet (b.1719); George (b.1725); and Margaret (b.1726). Robert (b.1729), baptised in Kirkton Parish, may also have been his child. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, who married Margaret Turnbull in 1732. He may be the James who was at Ashybank in 1733 and 1741. His children included William (b.1733) and Bessie (b.1741). John (b.1736) and Margaret (b.1738) may also have been his children. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, who was recorded at Middle in 1736 when his son Walter was baptised. It is possible that Helen (b.1733) and Marion (b.1740) were also his children. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He is probably the smith at Appletreehall recorded as Treasurer to the Wilton Parish Session in 1753. He was living at Clarilaw in 1724, 1735 and 1737. He is probably the James who (along with John) witnessed baptisms for Thomas Liddell, resident of Clarilaw, in 1727 and 1729. He may also be the James who witnessed a baptism for William Gray, resident of Clarilaw, in 1738. He may also be the James who witnessed baptisms for John Blaikie in 1737, William Turner in Burnfoot in 1741, for James Douglas in Burnhead, William Stewart in Groundistone and William Lunn in Clarilaw in 1742, and for Robert Scott in Marvinslaw and William Fulton in Appletreehall in 1743, as well as several others in 1744. Isabel, who died at Clarilaw in 1729, was probably related to him. He married Alison Irvine in 1721 and their children included: Adam (b.1722); Many (b.1724); Margaret (b.1725); Many (again, b.1728); Anna (b.1730); James (b.1732); Mary (b.1734); Elizabeth (b.1735); and Alexander (b.1737). The witnesses in 1724 were James Irvine and John Dryden (who were surely related to his wife and him), in 1735 were Robert Graham and William Nichol and in 1737 were Andrew Martin and James Turnbull. He may be the same as the farmer at Clarilaw recorded in 1744 and later. He may be the James who witnessed baptisms for John Smith (resident of the Stirches area) and Margaret Dryden (perhaps his daughter) in 1741 and 1747. Note there are several men of the same name living in this and neighbouring parishes at this time. James (18th C.) farmer at Clarilaw in Wilton Parish, tenant of the Buccleuch Estates. A record of 1744 discusses what he would do in the event of a division of Hassendean Common, which adjoined his land. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Laidlaw at Stirches in 1747. He is probably also the James who witnessed baptisms in Wilton Parish for James Lorraine in 1753. He is then probably the James who witnessed several baptisms in Wilton (e.g. at Stouslie, Appletreehall, Heap and Clarilaw) in 1758, 1759, 1769, 1770, 1771, 1772 and 1773 (suggesting that he may have been an Elder in the Kirk). He may be the same man as the James who married Alison Irvine. James (18th C.) married Barbara Scott in Hawick Parish in 1754. James (18th C.) married Mary Gray in Hawick Parish in 1760. James (18th C.) married Agnes Turnbull in Wilton Parish in 1766. James (18th/19th C.) smith in Hawick, who was Cornet in 1772. He was referred to as 'Deacon Dryden', suggesting that he was Deacon in the Hammermen's Guild. He is likely to be the James who, along with Walter Freeman, was leader of the 'Patriots' who opposed the Council and Bailies in the period 1778–81. In 1778 he and Freeman were jailed in Hawick over the weekend and then taken off to Jedburgh Jail for another 2 days before being bailed. He is mentioned as 'Deacon Dryden' in the story of the 'rebel' Common Riding of 1809, as one of the men on the Westenders side who helped keep order to avoid bloodshed. He was grandfather of Cornet James Smith and great-grandfather of Cornet John Smith. His Common-Riding cuff-links are still in the Watt family. He is probably the smith who married Agnes Pott (or Potts) in Hawick Parish in 1780; her death is recorded in 1795. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Lurgiescleuch in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border'. He could be the James, son of William, born in Hobkirk Parish in 1783. James (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident who owned a horse according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. His could be the property marked 'Dryden' on the Howgate on Wood's 1824 map. He could be the smith who married Agnes Potts (d.1795) in 1780 and who was Cornet in 1772. If so, he married again and was father of Elizabeth (b.c.1800), who married John Smith. James (1746/7–1820) shepherd at Merrylaw. His wife was Jane Pott (d.1838). James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1795 he married Christian Scott. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Mary Scott and their children included Barbara (b.1799) and Jean (b.1801). John (15th C.) listed as 'John Drydane' among the Roxburghshire men who had remission in 1488/9 from James IV for their support of the previous King, especially on the battlefield at Stirling. Most of the men appear to have been closely associated with Douglas of Cavers. William and Archibald are also listed, so presumably close relatives. John (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers. He was probably related to George and Thomas, who were also listed. John (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, probably the part corresponding to Hassendean. He married 'Marie Mure' in Roberton Parish in 1684. He witnessed a baptism for Walter Clerk in Roberton in 1687. John (17th C.) recorded in the last testament of William Elliot of Harwood and Binks as a debtor 'for a part of Fairnelies' in 1662. John (17th C.) blacksmith at Newmill on Teviot. He was probably related to the James and John who were blacksmiths there a little later (perhaps father of both of them). He was recorded at Newmill on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he paid tax on 2 hearths. He witnessed a baptism for John Beattie in 1673. He is probably the John, married to Agnes Hope, whose children included: John (b.1675); Adam (b.1683); and Agnes (b.1685). Gideon (b.1694), with no mother's name given, may also be his son. The witnesses in 1675 and 1683 were Robert Thomson and Alexander Riddell. John (17th/18th C.) smith at Newmill, probably son of the earlier smith at Newmill. He is probably the smith in Newmill who witnessed baptisms for Robert Thomson in Newmill in 1698 and for William Thomson (servant to Gideon Scott of Falnash) in 1702. He is probably also the John who witnessed a baptism for John Nichol in Newmill in 1710 and for William Allan in 'Park' and for Thomas Penman in 1712. He married Isobel Thomson and their children included: William (b.1700); Adam (b.1703); Helen (b.1705), who married Walter Hume; and Isobell (b.1708). The witnesses in 1700 were Adam Elliot of Arkleton and Robert Thomson in Newmill (who was probably related to his wife), in 1705 were Robert Manuel and William Thomson (also probably an in-law) and in 1708 were Walter Scott at Nether Southfield and John Wilson, tailor in Newbigging. He may be the John, son of blacksmith John, born in Hawick Parish in 1675. He is probably the John who witnessed a baptism for Robert Thomson in Newmill in 1698. He is surely related to James who was blacksmith in Newmill a little later (perhaps his brother). John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He witnessed baptisms in 1721 for James Lees in Clarilaw, in 1723 for James (surely a relative) in Appletreehall, in 1724 for James in Clarilaw, for John Lamb in Clarilaw and for Thomas Liddell in Clarilaw, in 1727 and 1729 (along with James) for Thomas Liddell in Clarilaw, also in 1727 for James Scott in Borthaugh, in 1729 for Robert Graham in Lees, James Scott in Wester Mill, John Miller in Appletreehall and Thomas Henderson in Appletreehall, in 1730 for Walter Rutherford in Langlands Boathouse and Adam Armstrong in Burnhead, in 1731 for Adam Scott in Lees and James Muir in Hornshole and in 1732 for Walter Scott in Wiltonburn, Adam Harkness in Stouslie, James Scott in Overhall, James Blyth in Clarilaw and William Lunn in Appletreehall. He is probably also the John who witnessed several baptisms in Wilton in 1733. Based on all these baptisms it is possible that he was an elder of Wilton Kirk. John (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His son John was baptised in Maxton Parish in 1728. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish who married Mary Davidson in 1745. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Helen Riddle and their children included: Gavin (b.1754); and Margaret (b.1755). Other children who may be his are Janet (b.1746), Gavin (b.1748), Magdalen (b.1759), John (b.1764), John (again, b.1766) and George (b.1769). John (18th C.) married Betty, daughter of Walter Amos, in Hobkirk Parish in 1767. He may be the John whose daughters 'Euphy' and Janet were baptised in Bedrule Parish in 1769. John (18th C.) married Betty Waugh in Hawick in 1789. John (b.1786/7) blacksmith at Brieryshaw in the Ewes valley. He was listed there in 1841, 1851 and 1861. His wife was Janet and their children included Andrew, George and

Janet. John (b.c.1800) recorded as 'Software Pedlar' in 1841, when he was living on the Loan. His wife was Mary. John (1808–78) 2nd son of Andrew and Janet Cairns. He was born at Lees, near Appletreehall. In 1831, like the rest of his family he emigrated to Canada. Several letters he wrote back to Scotland still survive. He married Margaret Shiel from Kelso and they had 8 children. John (19th C.) married Agnes Nichol in Hawick in 1841. John (19th C.) married Susan Ritchie in Hawick in 1852. John (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who married Isabella Muir. Their children included John (b.1855). John (19th C.) married Elizabeth Fraser in Hawick in 1874. Their children included John (b.1874), whose baptism was recorded in both Hawick and Minto Parishes. Margaret (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. Philip (13th/14th C.) recorded as 'Phelip de Dryden' when he swore fealty to Edward I of England in 1296. His lands may have been those near Teviothead. Robert (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His daughter Margaret was baptised in 1737. Robert (b.c.1785) farmer in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1841 he was living at Firth with the slightly older Walter, who was probably his brother. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1826 he and William Thomson were put in charge of the Parish mort-safes. He may be the Robert, son of Gavin recorded at Cavers Knowes on the ballots for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799 and 1801. Robert (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Dalgleish in 1828 and their children included: George (b.1829); and James (b.1835). Robert (19th C.) married Mary Pringle in Hawick in 1834. Robert (1811–75) 3rd son of Andrew and Janet Dryden. He may be the Robert listed at Damside among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. He married Mary Clerk. Like the rest of his family he emigrated to Ontario. He had a tavern and blacksmith's shop in Eramosa Township there. He had 6 children. Robert R. (19th C.) married Isabella Preston in Southdean Parish in 1858. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers. He was probably related to George and John, who were also listed. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Clarilaw in Hassendean Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He was probably related to James, who was also listed there. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included William (b.1712). Perhaps the same Thomas also married Isabel Dryden in Cavers in 1725. Thomas (b.1744) son of Andrew, he was born in Crailing Parish. He worked as a wheelwright at Nisbet and was then a blacksmith at St. Boswells. In 1771 he married Jean, daughter of John Thomson. They had 6 children, Ann, Janet, Andrew (who lived at Wilton Dean), Thomas, Robert and Jean. He secondly married Janet, daughter of Robert Fletcher and had 4 more children, William, Walter, Margaret and Thomas. Thomas (b.c.1780) servant at Mosspaul according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. Thomas (18th/19th C.) married Betty Paterson in Hobkirk Parish in 1817. Thomas (b.1792/3) from Selkirk, he was spinner at a woollen factory in Hawick. He was a member of Allars Kirk. In 1841 he was living at Gibsnose in Wilton. He married Janet Reid in 1816 and their children included: John (b.c.1820); William (b.1820), who became an engineer in Preston; Jane (b.c.1825); Elizabeth ('Betsy', b.1824/5); Jessie (b.1828/9); Margaret (b.1830/1); Robert (b.1832/3); Mary; and Thomas (b.1837/8). Thomas L. (b.1806) son of Andrew, he was a wright at Everhall. Like the rest of the family he was involved with Allars Kirk and emigrated to Ontario. He married Agnes Kennedy in 1828. They settled in North Dumfries Township, near Galt in Ontario. He worked as a joiner and then an innkeeper. They had 9 children. Thomas (19th C.) house factor and yarn agent. In 1863 he married Agnes, daughter of baker Walter Wilson. Thomas (19th C.) married Helen Anderson in Wilton Parish in 1866. He may be the Thomas, 'Engine Smith', living at Wilton Kirkhouse in 1861. Walter (15th C.) father of William. His son William was recorded in 1493, when the Sheriff of Roxburghshire was fined for his non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Walter (18th/19th C.) elder of Hobkirk Parish. He was recorded on the heritors council in 1803. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He is probably the Gavin recorded at Cavers Knowes on the ballots for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799 and 1801. He married Isabel Douglas and their children included: Nelly (b.1807); Gavin (b.1809); Isabella (b.1813); John (b.1814); Robert (b.1819); and Margaret (b.1821). Walter (b.c.1780) farmer at Firth in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1841 he was at Firth with Robert (probably his brother), plus Gavin, John, Robert and Helen (probably his children), as well as a female servant. William (15th C.)

son of Walter. He was listed at the 1493 Justiceaire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance. He was again cited for non-appearance in 1494/5. Other men listed were local and so be was probably from the Cavers or Rulwater areas. Perhaps the same Walter is recorded in 1502 being 'super aquam de slittrik' (i.e. on Slitrig Water) when he had remission for stealing sheep from Bowhill; his surety was George Douglas in the Trows. William (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Margaret Brown and their children included Thomas (b.1680). William (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish who married Rachel Turnbull in 1694. His children included: James (b.1696); and Isabel (b.1698). William (17th C.) resident of Muckle Cote who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the William who married Margaret Huntly in Cavers Parish in 1697 and whose children baptised in Cavers Parish included Helen (b.1698), Isabel (b.1699), William (b.1700), Adam (b.1700), James (b.1702), William (again, b.1703) and Margaret (b.1704). When Margaret was baptised be was living at West Middle. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His daughter Helen was baptised in 1707. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish who married Helen Lunn in 1725. He was in Denholm in 1727 and was recorded as herd in Denholm in 1730 and 1733 and also there in 1742. His children (baptised in Cavers) probably included Isabel (b.1727), Janet (b.1730), John (b.1733) and Isabel (again, b.1742). William (18th C.) married Bessie Knox in Wilton Parish in 1749. Their children included: probably Helen (b.1753); Margaret (b.1756), baptised in Cavers Parish; David (b.1759, Hawick), mother's name 'Margaret Knocks'; Robert (b.1761, Hawick); and Isabel (b.1766, Hawick), mother's forename 'Isabel'; Mary (b.1768, Hawick); Margaret (b.1770, Hawick), with mother's name given as just 'Knox'. The witnesses in 1766 were the whole congregation. William (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Falside and their children included Mary (b.1746). William (18th C.) from Bedrule Parish. His children included: William (b.1781); and an unnamed son (b.1792). Perhaps the same William had a son James baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1783. William (18th C.) married Margaret Black in Hawick in 1783. William (d.1794) smith whose death is recorded in Hawick. He may be related to James and John who were contemporary blacksmiths. William (18th/19th C.) married Janet Knox in Wilton in 1805. William (b.1784) from Cavers Parish, son of Gavin. He was a millwright in Wilton. He was listed at Dovemount among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 and 1840. In 1841 and 1851 he was on Wilton Place, probably corresponding to about 30–32 Princes Street and in 1861 he was at about 24 Princes Street. He married Agnes Dobson (from Galashiels) and their children included: Jean (b.1819); Walter (b.1821); Isabel (b.1823); Elizabeth (b.1825); Agnes (b.1830/1); Margaret (b.1832/3); and William (b.1837/8). William (b.1820) born at Branxholme, son of spinner Thomas. He left around the 1840s and founded an engineering business in Preston, which eventually became the world-renowned Thomas Dryden & Sons. He is said to have eloped with Margaret Weens, daughter of Sandy (although the marriage is recorded in Hawick in 1846). He was a guest at the 1888 Colour Bussing. William (19th C.) Hawick resident who married Mary Leyden. Their daughter Jane was baptised in 1857. William (19th C.) married Jane Dalgleish in Hawick in 1868. Their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1869. William (19th C.) resident of Wilton. He married Mary Grant and their children included: James (b.1862); and Mary (b.1864). Perhaps the same William also married Jane Dalgleish and had children Margaret (b.1869), William (b.1870) and William (again, b.1872). William (19th C.) married Elizabeth Richardson in Hawick in 1872. Their daughter Margaret Kerr was baptised in 1874 (formerly written 'Draydone', 'Dreden', 'Dreiden', 'Dridane', 'Driden', 'Dryddon', 'Drydon', 'Drydone' and variants).

Drydenburn (drI-din-burn) n. former name for a farmstead near Dryden in what became Teviothead Parish. John Scott was there in 1713. Andrew Turnbull was tenant there in 1725 (it is 'Dryden-burn' in 1713).

Dryden Burnfit (drI-din-burn-fi') n. former name for Teviothead Cottage, used in the 1851 census. The cottage there is listed as 'drydden-burnfoott' in 1694 when John Scott was shepherd.

Dryden Cottage see Teviotheid Cottage

Dryden Fell (drI-din-fel) n. hill north of Teviothead, reaching a height of 351 m. On its lower slopes the Henry Scott Riddell monument can easily be seen from the A7. On the north side, between Cauldron Hole (at the head of the Back Burn) and Cat Cleuch (at the head of the Philhope Burn) is a linear earthwork, about 500 m long. It is probably an ancient boundary ditch.

Dryden Greenhill (drI-din-gren-hil) n. farm in Ashkirk Parish, east of the television mast, between North Synton and New Greenhill farms. It was previously known as simply 'Greenhill' and was recorded as 'Greenshill' in 1797. James Johnstone was tenant there in 1797. Gowanlocks were tenants there through much of the 19th century. An axe, possibly early Bronze Age, found on the farm is in Selkirk Museum. Several flint arrowheads and other implements picked up in the surrounding area were described in 1927 by J.B. Mason.

Dryden Hill (drI-din-hil) n. hill just east of the A7 after Ashkirk, reaching a height of 303 m. The Hare & Dunhog Moss Nature Reserve is there, as well as the transmission mast. This tower was constructed in 1963 to serve as the main transmitter for BBC signals (with ITV signals coming from the nearby mast at Lindean); since 1985 it has been used purely for BBC FM radio transmission.

Drydenhope (drI-din-hōp) n. hill and former farmstead, to the right of the main A7 after Ashkirk, topped by a B.B.C. television mast, and reaching a height of 303 m (994 ft).

Dryden Linn (drI-din-lin) n. steep, wooded part of the Dryden Burn, with waterfalls, just north of Teviothead.

Dryden Quarry (drI-din-kwa-ree) n. small quarry by the side of the A7 just after Dryden farm. This gives an exposure of rock where folding of Silurian strata can be seen.

Dryfe Sands (drīf-sawndz) n. area where the Dryfe Water joins the Annan, west of Lockerbie. It was the site of a conflict in 1593, between the Maxwells and the Johnstones and their supporters. Often stated to be part of a family feud, it was more likely to be part of a struggle for political control of the Western Marches. The Maxwells under John, 7th Lord Maxwell, assembled about 2,000 men to invade Annandale; this included contingents led by Douglas of Drumlanrig, Charters of Amisfield and others. But Sir James Johnstone of Dunskellie had advanced warning and gathered the support of several local families, including Scotts and Elliots from Liddesdale and Teviotdale. Although outnumbered, the Johnstone side used surprise to rout the Maxwells, killing perhaps as many as 700, including their chief. Some accounts state that it was the intervention of Scott of Buccleuch and the his followers that swung the battle in favour of Johnstone. It is said that the wounds inflicted during the pursuit of thei fleeing Maxwell supporters gave rise to the term 'Lockerbie Lick'. A 'respite' was given in 1594 to Sir James Johnstone and 160 others for the killing of Lord Maxwell; this included Armstrongs of Liddesdale, Scotts and Chisholmes from near Hawick. A reconciliation meeting was arranged in 1608 between Sir James Johnstone and the young Lord Maxwell (who had escaped the battle); Maxwell shot Johnstone with a pistol and escaped to France, but was later beheaded in Edinburgh.

Drygrange (drī-grānj) n. hamlet on the A68 just to the north of Newtown St. Boswells, once the principal farmstead associated with Dryburgh Abbey. The estate there was owned by the Tod's of Drygrange, inherited by Sir George Leith through a daughter and sold to Edward Sprot in 1867, when a new mansion was built (the origin of the name is 'the grange of Dryburgh' and it first occurs as 'Grangiam' in the early 13th century).

Dryhope (drI-up) n. ruined tower in the Yarrow valley, famous as the home of Mary Scott, the 'Flower of Yarrow'. It was a property of a branch of the Scotts of for several generations; they were closely connected with the Scotts of Harden and Headshaw. The arms of this branch are the same as for the Scotts of Headshaw, with an extra border. George Middlemas and Matthew Paterson had cattle and goods stolen from here as recorded in 1502. In 1541 Philip Scott occupied the farm (along with 'Farmynhop'). In 1589 the Scott clan bond was signed by John, Philip and Simon Scott of Dryhope. The tower may have been razed in 1592 by royal order, because of Walter Scott of Harden's role in the Falkland Raid. The superiority over the lands was held by the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653 and 1661. The present building dates from the rebuilding of 1613, and the renovations of 1788. It measures 33 feet by 22 feet, and was 4 storeys high. There are earlier sites nearby. The balloonist Lundari attempted to come down on the hill here in 1785, losing his anchor, and not descending until he reached Alemoor. It was farmed by Milnes in the 19th century. With the aid of Heritage Lottery funding in 2003 it was renovated, as a visitor centre, with a new spiral staircase allowing visitors to enjoy the view from the roof. A carved panel has been built into the neighbouring farm building, bearing the date 1613 and the intials 'P.S.' and 'M.S.' (for Philip Scott and Mary Scott). It is possible that the tower was also home of 'Dickie' Armstrong of 'Dryupp', a notorious riever of the late 16th century – 'Now Dickie of Dryhope led that band, dryin green (drI-in-green) n. a communal lawn used for drying clothes on washing lines, often behind a tenement. Hawick formerly had many communal drying greens with poles set up for clothes lines; a few still exist, e.g. at the Little Haugh and Mote Park. There were formerly greens at Lothian Street and Garfield Street – 'A dryin' green? Aye man, it's no afore time! Yon's a sicht that I canna weel thole . . . ' [WL].

And nevir a word o lear had he' [T], 'Warn Dryhope, and Catslack, Howford, and Huntlee free, Whitslade, Todrigg, and Sallenside, the morn to wait on me' [WSB] (written 'Drihoip', 'Drihoup', 'Dryhoip', 'Dryhop', 'Dryop' and variants; it appears as 'Dryhope' on Gordon's c.1650 map).

dry-killit (drI-ki-lee', -li') pp., arch. kiln-dried – '. . . for horsing of him from Edinburgh to Hawick, and in 9s. Scots for ane dry killit fische' [BR1655].

dry-stane dyke (drI-stān-dīk) n. a wall made of fitted together stones, used to divide lands and enclose livestock. The main building phase locally was roughly 1750–1850, with a peak perhaps in the 1820s. It was stated that a recently as the 1920s there were 22 dykers who would leave Hawick every morning to go out to fix dykes.

drystraiks (drI-strāks) n., pl., arch. blows that do not lead to bloodshed, fisticuffs – 'Item, whatsomever person that committs ryottis, in giving of dry cuffis and straiks . . . ' [BR1640], 'Some of these names . . . arose from . . . a brawling disposition, or a proneness to drystraiks' [WNK] (see also straiks).

Drythropple (drI-thro-pul) n. former farmstead in Hobkirk parish, just north of Weensmoor. The house was built as a shepherd's cottage for Town-o-Rule farm in 1815 by George Cleghorn of Weens (the owner at the time). He was a teetotaller, and refusing to give the masons their traditional drink, it was given the nickname, which stuck. There was a later attempt to rename it 'Heathfield', but the locals always used the nickname. For a while it was the location for one of the hails in Hobkirk Baa. Tenants included Gilbert Aitken ('Gib o Drythropple') and John Halliday ('the Rustic Bard'). Dyker William Armstrong was there in 1861.

Drythropple (drI-thro-pul) n. former place name to the north-east of Denholm, on the north side of the Teviot, south of Minto Glen. A track there is so marked on the 1858 Ordnance Survey map. 'Drythropple and Ground' was listed as part of the Minto estate in 1779, 1788 and 1811, when valued at £3 12s 6d. Old river courses there can be made out in aerial photographs (also 'Drythrapply').

du (du, doo) v., arch. do – 'The miller o' Hawick Mill bred mei, And that Aw du weel ken' [JSB], 'Jamie understanding something, was on the wind, but unable to comprehend what it was, replied – 'Weel, what is't au maun du' ' [WNK] (the vowel sound can be somewhere between oo and ā; see the more common dae).

dub (dub) n., arch. a puddle, small pond, pool, particularly of marshy water – 'Ilk step they redouble their haste, As through dirt an' dubs they spatter' [JoHa], '. . . An' yetts play jairg, and dubs play plash' [JoHa], 'On Winter nights when Johnnie Frost Hath sealed baith dub and mire' [JT], '. . . Throwe drumly foreign dub and clairt . . . ' [DH] (possibly from Low German or Dutch; the word occurs in place names, such as 'Wylie's Dub' and 'Hackman's Dub').

the Dub (thu-dub) n. former name for the area east of 'the Vennel' (roughly Morrison Place), also known as 'Wylie's Dub' and also called 'Bridgehaugh', once a boggy area between the Howegate and the modern Buccleuch Street (also spelled 'Dubb' and sometimes 'Dubs' and 'Dubbs').

the Dubbs (thu-dubz) n., pl. former name, from around the 17th century for the marshy region between the Howegate and the Teviot (also known as 'the Dub', although that may have been a more specific area).

dubby (du-bee) adj., arch. mudy, miry.

ducatoon (du-ki-toon) n., arch. an old silver coin, possibly referring to several types, but most usually one from the Netherlands – 'Likewise there was found among the consignation money before marriages and half Ducatoon and twenty shillings Scots piece pawnded by Jo. Forman merchant in Hawick . . . ' [PR1711].

the Duchess o Gloucester (thu-du-chis-ō-glos-tur) n. (1901–2004) Princess Alice, born Lady Alice Christabel Montagu-Douglas-Scott, 3rd daughter of John, 7th Duke of Buccleuch. She was born on Christman Day in London, Princess She married Henry William Frederick

Albert Windsor, 1st Duke of Gloucester, who was son of George V. She was thus an aunt of Queen Elizabeth II. She was Colonel-in-Chief of the K.O.S.B., and during WWII worked with the Red Cross, the Order of St. John and the W.A.A.F. In 1946 she had a vacation at Branxholme with her mother the dowager Duchess of Buccleuch, and inspected the K.O.S.B. in Hawick. Her sons were Prince William and Prince Richard (who suceeded as Duke of Gloucester). After her husband's death in 1972 she was allowed to be known as Princess Alice as a courtesy from the Queen. She ceased to carry out public functions in 1999, and lived to be 102.

the Duchess's Room (thu-du-chi-seez-room) n. name of a room in the former Tower Hotel, overlooking Towerdykeside, which had been the apartment of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch. The room was decorated in a royal style, with a gold-mounted bed and footstool, which had been a marriage present from her father-in-law Charles II. She apparently visited many times with some of her 6 children. The room retained the name long after the Tower had been sold as a hotel.

Duckenfield (du-kin-feeld) n. George (19th C.) actor, producer and temperance speaker. He was a dramatist who staged a production with 'Hi-I-Obby' as the hero, the part being played by the man himself. He was a frequent visitor to Hawick, staging theatrical performances, often in the Upper Haugh, and playing many of the parts himself. A ball at the Hawick Baa was once named in his honour.

duff (duf) v., arch. to draw back from a bargain, throw up an undertaking, often used with 'on'.

Duff (duf) n. Rev. Archibald (1810–85) born in Aberdeen, he was first minister of the Congregational Church in Hawick, at that time called the Evangelical Union Kirk. He arrived in late 1848, but was not inducted until early 1849. He had been a minister in Fraserburgh for the previous 7 years, and was also briefly in Liverpool. He first preached in the Subscription Rooms until the new premises on O'Connell Street were opened in March 1849. He was a strong advocate of Total Abstinence. As well as 3 sermons each Sunday, and prayer meetings during the week, he also preached in the open air at places such as Borthaugh Woodfoot, Stobs Woodfoot, Newmill-on-Teviot and Newmill-on-Slitrig, as well as occasionally on Hawick stret corners. This kind of activity met a hostile reception from the Town's other ministers. He left for Canada in 1856 and became minister of Cowansville Church, Montreal, where he was known as an accomplished Highland dancer and named his house Teviot Cottage. In the period 1862–80 he was minister at Sherbrooke, Quebec. In 1867 he donated to the Museum 'specimens of copper and other ores, also of several varieties of native Canadian wood'. He returned to Hawick, in 1883, it is said as Dr. Duff in 1883. Note that his name is sometimes given as 'Alexander', perhaps in confusion with a nearly contemporary missionary of that name (or possibly he was genuinely known by both names). He married Catherine Hamilton in 1841. They had 4 children in Fraserburgh: Margaret Elizabeth (b.1842); John Morell Mackenzie (b.1844); and Charles (b.1847). They then had 3 children who were born in Hawick: Catherine Hamilton (b.1850); Edward Hamilton (b.1852); and Joseph Wilson (b.1854). He died suddenly in Putney, London. His wife may be the 'Mrs Duff, formerly of Hawick' who in 1865 donated American stamps to the Museum. Bert (1948/9–) brought up at the Pre-fabs and Havelock Place, he attended Wilton and Hawick High Schools. He worked at Deanbrae and Pesco's, then as a handyman for the N.H.S. A keen runner, he won the Teviotdale Harriers' Senior Cup in 1985. In 1970 he married Olive Johnston, who worked at Braemar. The couple were selected as Acting Father and Mother in 1990 and celebrated their golden wedding anniversary in 2020.

[JEDM], 'If ee canna finnd eer ain umbrella, ee'll heh ti taik an end o' meine, duist' [ECS], 'An' duist when at the derkest spot Oot o' the derkness cam a shot' [FL], interj. quite so, exactly – 'Duist! (as an exclamation) = just so! precisely! exactly! (cf. also Nate! The two are often combined: Duist nate!)' [ECS], used emphatically – 'hei es duist', ' 'A wull not! marks the emphatic negative. The corresponding affirmative is: 'A wull duist!' [ECS] (formerly the word was commonly placed at the end of a sentence; cf. the more common juist).

Duke (jook) n. nickname for 2 men called James Aitken in the years around 1700.

the Duke o Albany see Robert Stewart

the Duke o Buccleuch (thu-jook-ō-bu-kloo) n. head of the Scott family, and the most powerful local nobleman for centuries, as well as being one of the largest landowners in Britain. The first Duke was James Scott, Duke of Monmouth, after he married Anne, Countess of Buccleuch in 1663. The 2nd to 9th Dukes were: Francis Scott on the death of his grandmother in 1732; Henry Scott after the death of his grandfather in 1751; Charles William Henry Montagu-Scott from 1812; Walter Francis Montagu-Douglas-Scott from 1819; William Henry Walter Montagu-Douglas-Scott from 1884; John Charles Montagu-Douglas-Scott from 1914; Walter John Montagu-Douglas-Scott from 1935; and Walter Francis John Montagu-Douglas-Scott from 1973. The present 10th Duke, Richard Walter John Montagu-Douglas-Scott, acceded in 2007. The family homes are at Bowhill, Branxholme Castle, Drumlanrig and Dalkeith House. Historically the Duke has been a great benefactor to the town, and the present Duke retains several ties, including being patron of the Archæological Society – 'For there's mony landlords i' the land, And guid anes not a few, But ne'er a ane o' them stand compar'd wi' our Buccleuch' [WH].

the Duke o Cumberland (thu-jook-ō-kum-bur-lind) n. (1721–65) son of George II, he was William Augustus. He was a career soldier, and defeated the Jacobites at Culloden in 1746, ordering that no quarter be given. As a result he earned the nickname 'the Butcher' and Robert Wilson says that afterwards ferocious bulls or dogs were often locally given the name 'Will' or 'Cumberland'.

the Duke o Queensberry (thu-jook-ō-kweenz-bu-ree) n. title in the Scottish peerage, connected with both the Douglases of Drumlanrig and the Scotts of Buccleuch, also spelled 'Queensbury'. An associated title is the Lordship of Hawick and Tibbers, formerly held by the Douglases of Drumlanrig. The 1st Duke was William Douglas, who had been Marquess of Queensberry until 1684, and was a direct descendant of the Douglases of Drumlanrig (and Hawick). His son James became 2nd Duke and he passed the title to his own 3rd son Charles (the 1st dying in infancy and the 2nd, James, being disinherited), after which the 4th Duke was William, great-grandson of the 1st Duke. With the 5th Duke, Henry Scott (3rd Duke of Buccleuch) the title transferred to the Scotts, while the Marquessate of Queensberry was inherited by Sir Charles Douglas of Kelhead.

the Duke o Roxburgh (thu-jook-ō-roks-bu-ru) n. title created in 1707 for John Ker, 5th Earl of Roxburghe and now held by the Innes-Kers, with their seat at Floors Castle. The name comes from an old spelling of Roxburgh. The eldest son of the Duke is called Marquess of Bowmont and Cessford.

the Duke o Teviotdale (thu-jook-ō-teev-yi'-dāl) n. supended royal title. It was granted (along with the Dukedom of Cumberland and the Earldon of Armagh) to Prince Ernest Augustus, 5th son of King George III, in 1799. Ernest became King of Hanover in 1837 and died in 1851. The 2nd Duke of Cumberland and Teviotdale was Prince George Frederick Alexander Charles Ernest Augustus, who married Princess Marie Alexandrine Wilhelmine Katherine Charlotte Therese Henriette Louise Pauline Elisabeth Friedrike Georgine, daughter of the Duke of Saxe-Altenburg, and was later deposed as King of Hanover in 1866. He was succeeded by his son Ernest Augustus William Adolphus George Frederick, who was also Duke of Brunswick-Lüneburg. Being associated with the enemy during WWI he was deprived of his titles and the peerages were removed from the Roll of Peers in 1919.

the Duke o the Dean (thu-jook-ō-thu-deen) n. nickname in use around the mid-19th century, presumably for someone from Wilton Dean – 'The Duke o' the Dean comes staggerin' doon; O' the ring i' the Haugh auld Broughton's boss, And Michael Wintrup gangs roond the toon, Cryin' siller that's squandered at Pitch and Toss' [HI].

Duke Rodger (jook-ro-jur) n. nickname of Robert Rodger.

the Duke's Airch (thu-jooks-ārch) n. arch in the south wall of St. Mary's Kirk, put there during rebuilding in 1763 when it was found that the wall would interfere with the Buccleuch Vaults. It marks the probable site of the burial place of the early Scotts of Buccleuch.

the Duke's Loft (thu-jooks-loft) n. eastern gallery, over the choir in St. Mary's Church, also known as 'the Buccleuch Loft'. The site of the Buccleuch Vault is said to be under the stairs leading to this loft.

Duke Street (jook-stree') n. street running along the east side of the Teviot, constructed in 1887, involving building up of the road to the bridge level. The area was previously undeveloped, being marked 'Nursery Grounds' on Wood's 1824 map. It was named after Walter Francis Montagu-Douglas-Scott, the 5th Duke of Buccleuch. It used to have the Buccleuch Memorial at the top, built in honour of the 5th Duke, now the site of the tax and social security offices. J.P. Alison designed the tenements at Nos. 1 and 2 in 1902; the date is carved above the bay window on the corner. The street also used to run under the railway viaduct until that was removed in the 1970s. The Trinity Bar is at No. 18, and at the bottom of the street a footpath continues along the river bank. A decorated spindle whorl from there is in the Museum.

the Duke's Wud (thu-diks-wud, -jooks-) n. popular name for Whitlaw wood, south and south-west of the Slitrig, and behind the Vertish. It can be reached from the lane that skirts the left-hand side of the golf course. The wood was formerly on the Duke of Buccleuch's land, and presumably was given the name to distinguish it from the town's woods at the Vertish. The wood is now managed as a nature conservancy area by Scottish Wildlife Trust – 'And yonder is the Duke's green wood And Whitlaw's flowery braes' [GD] (see also the Duik's Wud).

dule (dool) n., poet. grief, sorrow, misery, suffering, dolour, state of lassitude – 'Dool and wae for the order sent our lads to the Border! The English, for ance, by guile wan the day' [JEM], 'Then, think what dule an' muckle strife, To marry sic a strumpet . . . ' [JR], 'O dool! an' what will douce fouk say, When this I tell – Death's stown away' [JoHa], 'O wae to the day that I first cardit woo', O dool to the weary beginning o't' [JoHa], 'In Rama was ther ane voyce heard o' waefu' dool . . . ' [JYH], '. . . Its dule I woudna dreed' [WL], 'Can we forget those olden days, The dool their evils wrought?' [JEDM] (also spelled 'dool'; cf. duil).

the Dule Trei (thu-dool-trī) n. ancient ash tree near Branxholme Tower, said to have been used for hangings. It can be seen in a painting from the mid-19th century, which is in the Museum. The tree was probably not as old as traditionally claimed, perhaps dating from the mid-17th century. It was said to once be part of a large rookery. It was largely blown down about 1880.

dull (dul) adj., arch. slow on the uptake – 'Gutterblude? Hoots, Aw'm awfi' dull o' the uptake, ee'r a' Gutterbludes – the best o' Hawick's Gutterblude' [JEDM].

Dumbarton Drums (dum-bawr'-in-drumz) n. one of the tunes traditionally played by the Drums and Fifes. The tune is similar to the traditional bagpipe tune 'The Haughs of Cromdale'. It is entirely different from the regimental tune of the Royal Scots (who were once known as 'Dumbarton's Regiment'), which dates back to the ealy 18th century, with suggestions it was the 'Scots March' referred to by Samuel Pepys in 1667. It is uncertain when or why the local tune was given this name. The tune is played during Picking Night on the march to the Cornet's house, if the route takes the band to the north. It is also played at other specific times, for example when the band lead the mounted cavalcade from Drumlanrig Square and along the High Street after the Dipping of the Flag, and to rouse the Town on the Saturday morning. The tune was combined with 'Rumblin Brig' in the Scocha song 'Bottles at Dawn'.

Dumb Nell (dum-nel) n. nickname for a resident of Lilliesleaf in the 19th century. It is said that Thomas Turnbull would 'read' to her the letters she received from her son in America, using 'signs that she understood as well as if she had heard the words'.

the Dumb Precentor (thu-dumb-pree-sen-tur) n. sometimes nickname of Job Gadd.

Dumbreck (dum-brek) n. Mrs. Euphemia nee Kinnear (1810–79) born in Rhynd, Perthshire, daughter of Charles Kinnear and Euphan Ritchie, she married John Dumbreck in 1830. She had daughters Euphemia Ritchie (b.1835) and Catherine Elizabeth (b.1837). She came to Hawick in 1865 with her husband and 2 daughters, setting up a boarding and day school for girls on North Bridge Street, named Teviotside House (and now 1 Teviotside Terrace). The school taught English, French, German, Italian, Music, Singing, Drawing and Painting. She is remembered in Hawick as composer of the music for 'I Like Auld Hawick'. Her husband died only about a year after the family's arrival in Hawick, but the school was continued by her and her daughters until 1885. She died at the District Asylum, Melrose and is buried at St. Cuthbert's in Edinburgh. Euphemia Ritchie (b.1835) daughter of John and Euphemia. In 1861 she is recorded as governess for the family of Walter Wilson of Orchard. Since this family were Quakers, then this may also have been true of the Dumbrecks. This was 4 years before the Dumbreck family moved to Hawick to start a school for girls. She and her sister Katherine probably continued to run the school after their mother's death in 1879. It is said that they retired to Colinton in Edinburgh. Kate (19th C.) presumably a daughter of John and Euphemia. She wrote 'A Seasonable Bouquet. Songs and Verses for Little Singers', which was published in Hawick (sometimes erroneously 'Drumbeck').

dumfoonder (dum-foon-dur) v. to dumbfounder, nonplus – 'Fierce Bothwell I vanquished clean, Gar'd troopers an' fitmen flee; By my faith I dumfoondert the Queen, An' wha daur meddle wi' me?' [T].

dumfoondert (dum-foon-dur') pp., adj. dumbfoundered, nonplused – '...he schot owt lichtenin's, an' dumfuunderet thame' [HSR], '...how camest thou in hidder, nat haein' ane waddin' garmint? An' he was dumfoun'eret' [HSR], 'The twa' dumfoundert, stood appall'd, An' trembling, swat – their blood ran cauld' [RDW], 'Tae my noddle and wame bees and butterflies came, Sae entranced and dumfoonert was I' [DJ].

Dumfries (dum-frees) n. main town of Dumfriesshire, and later of Dumfries & Galloway Region, lying in Nithsdale, about 70 miles from Hawick. Although well to the west of Carlisle, it still retains a flavour of the Borders, and was the major metropiolis of the Scottish West March. It has been a Royal Burgh since 1186, and a bridge there is recorded as early as 1283. Long a market town it also developed significant hosiery and tweed mills from the 18th century. The town was a major centre during centuries of strife on the Border, being burned by the English many times. It was also a haunt of Robert Burns, where he spent the last 5 years of his life, and where he is buried. The town was known as a manufacturer of textiles, rivalling Hawick in the 19th century. The 'Guid Nychburris Festival' is the local version of the Common Riding, taking place on the third Saturday in June. The town is sometimes called 'The Queen of the South' and has as its slogan 'A Loreburn!'. Population 32,136 (1991).

Dumfries an Galloway (dum-frees-in-ga-lu-wā) n. neighbouring region to the west of the Borders Region. It kept its name after the local government changes of 1995.

Dumfries Militia (dum-frees-mi-li-sha) n. the Royal Dumfries Volunteers were raised in 1795 as a local force of gentlemen. A second corps, begun in 1797, became the Dumfries Militia and recruited extensively across the Borders, including in Roxburghshire. Recruitment was initially by balloting eligible men in each parish (with the possibility of claiming exemptions or paying oneself out), with men serving for 5-year periods. This '4th Regiment of Militia of North Britain' was raised in 1798 to meet the perceived threat from France, with men from across the Border counties, including Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire; the regiment stood down in 1802, then reformed again in the period 1803–14. Bet Young wrote a couple of poems to celebrate them in the early 19th century. In the later 19th century many poor people in Hawick would sign up for spells in this regiment. When in Hawick they used the under flat of a house next to the old Town Hall as a guardroom, and during the Crimean War they used the Brewery Haugh for drilling. They were also known as the 'Dumfries, Roxburgh and Selkirk Militia' and the 'Scottish Borderers Regiment of Militia', and they essentially evolved into part of the King's Own Scottish Borderers – 'So we will end as we began, with Britain to succeed, As the Dumfries-shire Militia keeps our country well indeed' [BY].

Dumfriesshire (dum-frees-shīr) n. county to the south-west of Roxburghshire, entered on the A7 just after Mosspaul. Parts of the parishes of Staplegordon, Wauchope, Ewes, Canonbie and Westerkirk belonging to the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch were moved to Roxburghshire according to an Act of Parliament of 1672, but most returned to Dumfriesshire later. In the early 19th century there were many people living in this county who were working on frames for Hawick manufacturers, particularly in Dumfries, Langholm, Lochmaben and Lockerbie. Some of them settled in Hawick in the mid-19th century.

Dummy (du-mee) n. formerly a local nickname for someone who is unable to speak. Note that this was descriptive rather than disparaging. 'Dumbie in Branxholmtoun' is entered in the Session records receiving poor payments in the early 18th century.

the Dump (thu-dump) n. town rubbish tip, near the 'Fower Road Ends', above Stirches, adjacent to Stouslie. The earliest recorded dump (in the 18th century) was between the Slitrig and the modern Slitrig Crescent. For a while the location was in the middle of Hawick Moor (where it is said that a circus elephant is buried, after dying while performing at a circus in town, as well as the fever hospital beds). There was later a location off a road at the top of the Wellogate Brae and then the main site was near Haughhead, between the A698 and the Teviot.

dumple (dum-pul) n., arch. a quantity, bundle – 'And some brought dumples o' woo' And some brought flitches o' bacon' [ES].

dumplin (dum-plin) n. a spicy fruit pudding, often boiled in a cloth – 'A feeneeshd ma denner wui twae rake o curny-dumpleen' [ECS] (see also clootie-dumplin).

the Dumplin (thu-dum-plin) n. nickname in use in the early 19th century.

the dumps (thu-dumps) n. called 'the bumps' in England, a mild beating traditionally given to a child by school mates on birthdays, often one thump on the back for each year – 'hei hed ti rin hame efter schuil ti avoid the dumps'.

Dunbar (dun-bawr) n. Gavin (c.1490–1547) 3rd son of John of Mochrum and Janet Stewart. In 1510 he witnessed an instrument and a charter for John of Swinton, and another in 1515. In 1518 he became Dean of Moray, succeeding his uncle, also Gavin Dunbar. By 1520 he was also Prior of Whithorn (although not after some dispute), and was also Preceptor to James V. In 1524 he was appointed Archbishop of Glasgow, thus becoming the superior of the church in Teviotdale. In 1525, following the lead of Archibald, Earl of Angus, Warden of the Marches, he issued a pronouncement of excommunication against the Border clans, written in Scots as 'Monition of Cursing against the Border Clans'. This contains an astonishing curse, running to about 1500 words, which all parish priests were required to read out, including 'I curse thair heid and all the haris of thair heid ... I curse them gangand, and I curse them rydand ... I curse thair wiffis, thair barnis, and thair servandis participand with thaim in thair deides ... thair catales, thair woll, thair scheip, thair horse, thair swyne, thair geise, thair hennys ... and the gudis and housis that is necessair for their sustentatioun and weilfair', and condemning the rievers to 'all the vengeance that evir was takin sen the warlde began for oppin synnys, and all the plagis and pestilence that ever fell on man or beist'. He was a witness to several charters relating to the Scotts of Buccleuch around the 1520s. In 1531 he was the Archbishop who was renting lands in Lilliesleaf to Scotts. Although he had been given exemption to the jurisdiction of the Archbishop of St. Andrews (as Primate of All Scotland), there was a long running feud with his fellow archbishop David Beaton, including a brawl between the attendants of the 2 archbishops in Glasgow Cathedral in 1545, in which both processional crosses were broken! He was Chancellor of Scotland 1528–43. He fought against early reformers of the Church, attending the trials and signed the death sentences of several early Protestants, who were later considered as martyrs. He was buried in an elaborate tomb he had constructed for himself in Glasgow Cathedral, which was destroyed by reformers 13 years later. His seal showed an eloborate image of St. Kentigern and the words 'SIGILLUM GAVINI ARCHIEPI. GLASGUENSIS'. Patrick (16th C.) Reader at Cavers Church from 1576–78. Thomas (15th/16th C.) resident of Wauchope in Rulewater. In 1502 David Turnbull of Wauchope was his surety at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh.

Dunbush (dun-bush) n. former name for a piece of land owned by Scott of Harden. In the 1788 assessment of the county valuation it is 'Dunsbush' and valued (along with Harden and Highchesters Mill) at £463 9s. In the 1788 county valuation (and the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) it was listed along with Harden and Highchesters Mill as 'Dunsbush' (or 'Dunbush'). This was clearly the name for a piece of land near Harden, but the precise location is not clear.

Duncan (dung-kin) n. name of 2 Kings of Scotland. Duncan I (d.1040) King from 1034, succeeding his maternal grandfather Malcolm II. He was son of Bethoc, who was daughter of Malcolm. He was previously ruler of Strathclyde. He was slain by Macbeth, and his sons Malcolm III and Donald were both Kings afterwards. Duncan II (c.1060–94) King of Scotland from 1093, when he drove out his uncle Donald (Bane) III. He was a Canmore, son of Malcolm III and his first wife Ingibiorg and spent much of his life in the English court. He was killed, probably by a supporter of Donald.

Duncan (dung-kin) n. Abraham (19th C.) married Janet Knox in Hawick in 1839. Elizabeth (b.1824/5) daughter of Thomas. In 1851 she was living with her parents and siblings on the Kirk Wynd. In 1861 she was a 'Rag Cutter' living at 8 Kirk Wynd with her daughter Janet and a boarder. In 1865 she donated to the Museum 'a brass casting, representing Ceres surrounded by the produce of a luxuriant harvest'. George 'the Admiral' (b.1796/7) Hawick character of the mid-19th century. He was a stockingmaker, originally from Leith. Having been in the navy he would always turn out on special occasions wearing a blue coat with brass buttons, hence his nickname. He was living on the Loan in 1841 and 1851, and at 14 Loan in 1861. He married Janet Thorburn, who died before 1841. Their children included: Agnes (or 'Nancy'), who married David Wemyss;

Sarah; Martha; George; and William. In 1865 he donated to the Museum a 'collection of curiously worn stones found in excavating Allan Water Reservoir'. Henry (18th/19th C.) servant at Hassendeanburn in Minto Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. James (16th C.) resident of one of the farms in the lower Borthwick whose residents complained in 1549 about a raid by the English, assisted by Kers and others. He may have been at Wilton Green, and was probably related to William, who stayed at Wiltonburn and John, who was at Borthaugh. Rev. James (1753/4–1830) born in Kirkcaldy, he was minister of the Cameronian Chapel in Denholm from 1774, taking over from John Arnot. He ran a small school in Denholm in at least the period 1788–90. Said to be a great linguist, he also taught Latin and Greek to eke out his living. One of his pupils was the young John Leyden, who was said to have walked several miles every day across the moors to his classes 'when a poor barefooted boy'. Despite his learning, he was described as a plain preacher who 'possessed none of the grandiloquent embellishments in delivery'. He was a strict disiplinarian with his congregation, regularly rebuking people from the pulpit. He had a 'Black List' detailing all the sins that would stop people from taking communion; this included 'All those persons who carry away sticks from Cavers plantations without authority', for which the Laird of Cavers granted him an annual pension. Sayings of his were repeated in the area long after his passing. It is said that young visitors would sometimes come to hear his sermons to be amused by his plain speaking. It is said that once a group came over from Hawick one Sunday and left in the middle, at which he called out 'Are your feet cold already?', which was met with the reply 'it's no oor feet that's cauld, it's the sermon'. He complained in 1787 that the congregation was unable to support him and he left Denholm for Edinburgh, but he must have returned at least some of the time, since he submitted a similar complaint in 1796. He managed to keep the congregation united through his time in Denholm, but after his death they ceased to worship together and were effectively absorbed by the Independents. He left Denholm in 1809 to go to Linktown in Fife, where he was minister without being formally inducted. He retired before 1816. He married Isabella Scott and their children included: John (b.1803); James (b.1805), who became the first minister of Teviothead Parish, as well as being known as an entomologist; Janet (b.1807); and Catherine (b.1811). Leyden's father presented him with a copy of 'The Poetical Remains', which is now in the Museum. He was buried in Cavers Kirkyard, with a tombstone erected by his former congregation stating that they cherished 'the sincerity and exemplary piety of his character, his faithfulness in the discharge of his ministerial duties, and unwearied solicitude for their best interests'. It is possible he is the James, son of James and Margaret Barclay, who was baptised in Kirkcaldy in 1757. James (19th C.) one of the main organisers of the Hawick Reformers of the early 1800s. He is probably the man of the same name who was listed at Hawick in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border'. Rev. James (1805–61) born in Denholm, son of the minister of the Cameronian Chapel there and Isabella Scott. He was educated at Edinburgh University, spending a few years afterwards as a private tutor and in studying botany and entomology. He helped Rev. David Aitken of Minto compile a list of the rarer insects and plants seen in the Parish of Minto for the New Statistical Account in 1838. In 1850, at the urging of friends and family, he became minister at Teviothead, being the first incumbent of the newly created Parish. However, this was said to be against his own judgement, and a struggle because of his nervous temperament in public. He was deprived in 1853 and published a 'Letter to Members of the Church and Inhabitants of the Parish of Teviothead' in Hawick that year. However, he flourished as an entomologist, publishing a 'Catalogue of Coleoptera' in 1834, 'The Natural History of Foreign Butterflies' (1837), 'Introduction to Entomology' (1840), and 'The Natural History of Exotic Moths' (1841), as well as writing the chapters on Geology, Botany and Natural History for Jeffrey's 'The History and Antiquities of Roxburghshire', which included a list of indigenous plants. He also indexed the entire 'Encyclopædia Britannica' for the publishers. He was preparing a biography of John Leyden when he died in Denholm, and was a primary instigator for the erection of the Leyden Monument. His interest in nature and other topics were an early influence on James 'Dictionary' Murray. He was also said to have encouraged the botanical interests of John Scott, who may have been a cousin. He also made a catalogue of plants observed in the area around Jedburgh, including many species listed as being found at Denholm Dean, Minto Hill, Ruberslaw, etc.; these were to have formed a chapter in Jeffrey's 'History of Roxburghshire'.

He was a member of the Archæological Scoiety from 1857. James 'Jim' (19th/20th C.) from Aberdeen originally, he married one of the daughters of Appletreehall blacksmith Robert Davidson. The couple lived at Deanbrae and then he became joiner at Appletreehall. He was known for his prize gooseberries. He had a son Hector. In 1906 he contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirkton Kirk. John (16th C.) recorded as holder of the vicarage of Hassendean in 1538. In that year he was 'escheated for barratry' (i.e. negligence and trade in the sale of church appointments) and the fruits of the benefice were granted to George Scott. In 1544 he resigned Hassendean in favour of John Anderson. In 1553 he resigned from the Clerkship of Melrose. James V described him as a worthless old man, and he is also stated to have been 'a notorious character of the period and one of the most typical of the band of Scots who at this time were hangers-on at the papal court and agents in the purchase of benefices'. John (16th C.) resident of Borthaugh, recorded in 1549 when tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme complained about their farms being burned by a group of Englishmen and Kers in the previous year. He was probably related to William who was a resident at Wiltonburn at the same time, as well as James. John (17th C.) described as a 'traveller' in 1685 when he was charged, along with other local men, with being a Covenanter. All the men took the 'Test' in Hawick and promised not to frequent conventicles, the letter being signed by Sir William Eliott of Stobs. John (17th/18th C.) surgeon who arrived in Hawick around 1714. He is recorded in the Hawick Parish records, with the minister questioning the testimonial he had from his former parish. He was married to Anne Munroe. Rev. James Welsh (1919–82) born at Salsburgh, son of Alexander and Susan Welsh. He was educated at Shottskirk and Airdrie, worked in the coal industry 1934–39, was in National Service 1939–46, in business 1946–51 and the coal industry again 1950–57. He attended Glasgow University 1953–58. He became an elder at Shottsburn Church in 1952, was student assistant at Bellshill West 1956–58, was licensed to preach by Hamilton Presbytery in 1958 and became minister at Burnfoot in 1958. He served until 1966 when he was translated to Bourtreebush and Cookney, Aberdeenshire. In 1945 he married Janet Allardice Muir (b.1921), daughter of James Cromarty and they had a son Alexander Theodora (b.1960). Margaret 'Peggie' or 'Peggy' (19th C.) cock-eyed character in the song 'Pawkie Paiterson'. It was said that 'she could not be characterised as a beauty', but the extent to which the song was accurate is unknown. She is listed as an agricultural labourer on the Kirk Wynd in the 1841 census, living there with her son William (and next door to Thomas Duncan and his family, probably her brother). In 1851 she was a hosiery seamstress on the Back Row. She was probably the daughter of William and Betty Duncan born in Hawick in 1800 – 'Peggy Duncan and Jenny Din, Nellie Herkness and Mensie Mein; The Wilton Priest wi' his coat o' skin, Staney Stewart and Candy Jean' [HI]. Rev. Thomas (see Duncanson). Thomas (b.1793/4) weaver living on the Kirk Wynd in 1841 and 1851 with his wife Ann and children Margaret, Betty, Mary, Kirsty, William and James. He is probably the Thomas who was one of the men in the vanguard of the Hawick band at the Carthaugh Baa in 1815. W.F. (19th/20th C.) Schoolmaster at Teviot Grove Academy. He married Jane Fisher, daughter of Peter Laidlaw. They moved to Vancouver, Canada. Walter (18th/19th C.) thongmaker in Hawick. The death of a child of his is recorded in 1819. Walter (18th/19th C.) earthenware dealer of the High Street, recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. William (16th C.) resident of Wiltonburn recorded in 1549, among a list of the tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme who complained about the Kers ravaging their farms. It seems likely he was related to John who was a resident of Borthaugh at the same time and also James. William (18th C.) servant at Midshiels in 1788, when he was working for Archibald Douglas. His name appears to be written 'Duncion'. William (d.1797) wright from Eskdale who died in Hawick. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His son William was baptised in 1782. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was living at Whithope Mill in 1781 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. He married Margaret Miller in 1779 and their son Walter was baptised in Hawick in 1787. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Betty Turnbull in 1780 and she died in Hawick in 1815. Their children included: William (b.1781); Christian (b.1782); John (b.1784); Helen (b.1786); Thomas (b.1788); Betty (b.1790); Thomas (again, b.1793); and James (b.1795). Margaret (b.1800), with the mother's name given as 'Betty Duncan', may also be his child. The witnesses in 1793 were Robert Wilson and Walter Inglis. William (18th/19th C.) baker and publican in Hawick. He is 'Junr. Baker' in 1801, according to the ballot list for the Militia in Hawick. His daughter Janet died in Hawick in 1808. In 1816, along with butcher Francis Deans, he was found guilty of unspecified fraudulent activities. He may be the William born to William and Betty Turnbull in Hawick in 1781. William (b.1831/2) stockingmaker in Hawick, son of Thomas. In 1861 he was living at 14 Loan with his wife Helen Cochrane. William (b.1832/3) stockingmaker in Hawick. In 1861 he was living on Drumlanrig Place. His wife was Euphemia and their children included Jane, William, Robert and Margaret. He may be the stockingmaker who in 1867 donated a coin to the Museum (also formerly 'Duncane' and 'Dunkan').

Duncans (dung-kinz) n. former farm on Tarras Water, probably near the modern Arkleton Cottage. Duncan Sike and Duncan Rig are marked on modern maps (it is 'Dancans' and 'Donckeins' on Gordon's c.1650 maps).

Duncan's Grain (dung-kinz-grān) n. small stream forming part of the headwaters of the Frostlie Burn. It rises on Millstone Edge and Tudhope Hill.

Duncan's Hole (dung-kinz-hōl) n. earthwork along the south side (right bank) of Hob's Burn, between Bonchester Bridge village and Hobsburn house. It is on a narrow tongue of land between the burn and an old channel for the Rule Water. It consists of a rampart and external ditch, possibly of mediæval date.

Duncanson (dung-kin-sin) n. Rev. Andrew (17th C.) son of Rev. Thomas, who he assisted as minister of Bowden briefly. He moved to St. Boswell's in 1618 and was still there in 1654. He married Margaret, brother of William Riddell of Greatlaws (in Lilliesleaf Parish). In 1630 his wife was served heir to her brother. Their children included: Andrew, who was minister at Maxton; and Thomas. Rev. Andrew (d.bef. 1672) son of Andrew. In 1631 he was served heir to his mother Margaret Riddell. He was minister at Maxton from 1640 and confined to his Parish in 1662 for not conforming to Episcopacy. He succeeded to his mother's lands of Greatlaws. He was recorded in Lilliesleaf Parish in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663, when he paid £104 for Greatlaws. He was also listed at Greatlaws in 1678 (although probably already deceased). He additionally paid the land tax at Maxpoffle in 1678. John of Greatlaws (18th C.) eldest son of Mark. He was owner of the lands of Greatlaws in Lilliesleaf Parish. His lands were valued at £146 14s 8d in the 1740s. Mark of Greatlaws (17th/18th C.) married Elizabeth Haliburton, who was from the Muirhouselaw family. Their children included: Mark (b.1700); Margaret (b.1702); and John. Rev. Thomas (d.1621) probably son or grandson of Thomas of Maxpoffle and Janet Oliphant. He was presented to the vicarage of Bowden in 1567 and admitted there early the following year. In 1568 he was also Minister of Lilliesleaf. In 1571 he was presented to the Rectory of Lilliesleaf. It is recorded in 1575 (when he was 'Dunkesoun') that Bowden, Lilliesleaf, Longnewton and Melrose were all in his care, although he had the assistance of two readers, with also individual readers at each of the 4 parishes. When he died he was 'father of the church', i.e. the oldest surviving minister. His son was Andrew, who succeeded him as minister of Bowden. He may be the Thomas 'Duncan' who is recorded in a deed of 1612 as Schoolmaster at Yair (also formerly 'Duncason'; it was interchangeable with 'Duncan' in early times).

dunch (dunch, dunsh) v., arch. to strike, knock – 'Wha' mischief's that, what, deil. d'ye mean by dunchin?' [JoHa], 'Cairts an hurlbarrihs an yirrint-vans an thing, that every-wee-bittie dunsht other i the strooshie' [ECS], n., arch. a knock, blow, bump – 'But yet, what reck? we downa jook, We'll staun' a dunch, nor think o' fa'in' ' [JoHa], '. . . wui a yerk an a dunsh an a stech an a 'Parp!' Dundas (dun-das) n. Jean (b.1773/4) born in Bombay, she was ia dealer in small wares, listed at about 19 Howegate in 1841. In 1851 she was there as a servant with retired mason Peter Taylor. William Pitt (1801–83) son of Robert of Arniston, he was an advocate, who became the first Register General for Scotland, from 1854. There is some suggestion that he was not particularly assiduous in his post. He was assisted by his Superintendent of Statistics, Dr. James Stark, who may have done most of the work. His name appears at the foot of several local parish records (e.g. for Cavers in the late 18th century and Hawick in the early 19th century), suggesting that these were copied out from deteriorating originals.

Dundas-Buchan (dun-das-bu-kin) n. Henry (18th/19th C.) married Janet Turnbull. Their son Henry was bapstised in Hawick Parish in 1803.

dundrum (dun-drum) n., poet. a blockhead, dolt – 'My bluid flies up whene'er I think, How brainless dundrums sneer an' wink, An' shan' an' shile, and leering blink, At povertie' [JoHa].

Dungeon Plantin (dung-jin-plawn'-in) n. plantation of trees by the main entrance to Weens House, lying south of the house, and east of the B6357. There are 2 small hills there surrounded by a turf bank. It has been suggested that one of them was the site of the original Weens peel house, but there is no physical evidence for this. There is also a nearby linear earthwork, of unknown age or function.

Dungwell (dung-wel) n. John (16th C.) recorded in Whithope in 1580, with his surname appearing as 'Dwngell'. He witnessed a transaction in Selkirk between John Scott in Whithope and Robert Scott of Haining. Martha (17th/18th C.) recorded in about the 1720s when the Hawick Kirk Session provided her with some financial support because she was 'in trubble'. Her surname was written 'Dungwell' (the name could be a variant of 'Dingwall').

Dunhog Moss (dun-hōg-mos) n. marshy area to the right of the A7 shortly before coming to Selkirk, lying further to the east than Hare Moss. It now forms part of the Hare & Dunhog Moss Nature Reserve. There are signs of rig-and-furrow cultivation on a field to the south-east.

the Dunion (thu-dun-yin) n. hill on the back-road from Denholm to Jedburgh, formerly reaching a height of 1,092 ft (333 m). The hill lay entirely within the bounds of Bedrule Parish, but part of it may once have been in Jedburgh Parish. It was the site of an Iron Age settlement, and the summit was used as a beacon during the times of perceived threat of French invasion. More recently the contours of its peak have been changed by extensive quarrying for road metalling. The fort had a massive drystone wall surrounding the summit, enclosing an area about 170 m by 55 m, separated by a dyke into 2 enclosures. There were also external ramparts, as well as 7 hut circles, which are probably later in age, and the foundations of 2 rectangular buildings, which could have been mediæval look-out posts. The fort was excavated in 1961 and 1962, but mostly destroyed over the next decade or so. However, further excavation in the 1980s revealed that the fort covered an area much larger than just the summit. On the north-east side are 14 roughly circular scoops, corresponding to a settlement associated with the fort, with carbon dating giving an age around 100 B.C.E. A cinerary urn was found on the northern slopes by Mr. Pott of Dodd in 1885, and later donated to the National Museum of Antiquities. A stone axe-head, and 2 flint arrow-heads have also been collected from the hill. Before quarrying removed much of the summit, it was said to command one of the most glorious views in the Borders. The summit formerly hosted a triangulation pillar – 'But on the Dunion view the light Which round its waving radiance throws, Ah! 'tis the balefire blazing bright, Which warns th' approach of Southron foes' [JR], 'See the Dunion grey mark the Eildon's rise Like sentinel watch towers to greet the skies' [TC], 'When Ruberslaw puts on his cowl, The Dunion on his hood, Then a' the wives o' Teviotside Ken there will be a flood' [T], 'The autumn, with its breath of flame, Had scorched the beeches' outer leaves; A soft wind o'er the Dunion came, rustling the tassels of the sheaves' [JJ], 'When Dunion he puts on his cap, And Rubberslaw his hood, All the wives in Ale water may expect a flood' [RJT] (the name appears in a 1513 report by Lord Dacre as 'the Dungyon'; it is 'Dvnzone' in 1576, 'Dunzeon' in the 1650s, 'Dunyon' in 1662 and 'Dunian' in 1795 and 1839; it is 'Hill of Dunyonn' on Blaeu's 1654 map and has its modern spelling by Stobie's 1770 map; its origin may be 'hill with the dungeon').

Dunira (dun-I-ru) n. Victorian mansion on Buccleuch Road, being the last house inside the town boundaries on the New Road. It was probably designed by J.P. Alison and erected around 1892. It was built for tweed merchant William Laidlaw Stevenson and manufacturer James Boyd Sime later lived there. More recently it became a guest house and when the owners moved further along Buccleuch Road to the old manse house, they (confusingly) moved the name with it.

the Dunk (thu-dungk) n. deep pool at a bend in the Teviot at the southern end of the Park, often used for swimming in the summer months – 'Heavy wi' denners And heat, the scholars dreamed o' the Dunk And Coble . . . ' [DH], 'Aa want naething else adae Wi money Except to sit at the Dunk And watch the auld currency Floatin' bye' [DH], '... Or by the Dunk to Goldilands Ayont where waters meet' [WFC], 'We don't go swimming in the Park, In the Dunk oo hev a dook' [IWL] (possibly from mediæval Scots 'donk' meaning 'damp, moist').

Dun Law (dun-law) n. hill in the Borders to the south of Soutra at the western end of the Lammermuirs, reaching 393 m (1,289 ft). It is the site of a large wind farm built in 2000, consisting of 26 turbines on 40 m high towers, and easily visible from the A68.

Dunlop (dun-lop) n. Archibald (18th/19th C.) recorded at Whitmuir in Selkirk Parish according to the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. He was surely related to Walter, who farmed at Whitmuirhall. He was listed as owner of parts of Silverbuthall in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. Perhaps the same Archibald of Whitmuir was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1661 he witnessed a baptism for William Stewart. His daughter Margaret was baptised in 1644. He is probably the James who married Isobel Paterson in Ashkirk in 1643. James (17th C.) resident of Birkwood in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. William was also listed at Birkwood and so surely related. He is probably the James who witnessed a baptism for William in 1691. Along with William he witnessed a baptism for Robert Turnbull in 1694. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Johnstone and their children included Agnes (b.1708), Walter (b.1714), George (b.1720) and John (b.1724). James (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Rutherford and they had an unnamed daughter in 1738. James (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included George (b.1780), John (b.1781) and Janet (b.1783). He may be the James who witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1772 for James Scott and Marjory Irvine. James (18th C.) probably son of Walter of Whitmuir, he was a doctor in Rochdale and also in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). He is probably the 'Dr Dunlap of Rochdale' who married Miss Fisher in Hawick in 1797. His daughter Nancy died in Rochdale in 1806 and his wife Margaret in 1820, aged 50. James (b.c.1770s) servant at Eastcote recorded on the ballots for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799 and 1801. John (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as resident at Burnfoot on Ale when acting as a cautioner for William Scott there. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1718 he was recorded as tenant in Clerklands and in 1724 was tenant in Langton. It seems likely he was closely related (perhaps brother) of Walter, who was previously tenant in Langton. He married Isobel Taylor and their children included Margaret (b.1716), James (b.1718), Walter (b.1720), Robert (b.1722) and Marion (b.1724). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Archibald and and their children included John (b.1726), Janet (b.1728) and Andrew (b.1733). John (b.1710) son of Walter. He was probably also tenant of local lands. In 1760 he purchased Whitmuir Hall (east of Selkirk) from John Goudie (Divinity Professor in Edinburgh). He was succeeded by his son Walter, while another son was John. He may be the John who married Margaret Scott in Ashkirk Parish in 1745. John (18th C.) younger son of John. He was tenant of Chisholme farm. In 1779 William Stoddart had a discharge of a bill with him. His children (born in Roberton Parish, but with no mother's name given) included: James (b.1770); George (b.1771); John (b.1773); Rev. Walter (b.1775), minister at Newcastleton and Dumfries; and William (b.1777). He is probably the John 'late in Chisholme now in Selkirk Common' who was complained about in Selkirk in 1790 by Hawick carrier Archibald Paterson for non-payment of a bill. He may be the John who was listed (by John Sibbald) among local farmers who had failed in 1778. John of Whitmuir Hall (18th/19th C.) recorded in documents in Selkirk in 1821 and 1822, related to road trustees and improvements. Margaret (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among 'ye poor'. Her surname is written 'Dilape'. Patrick (15th C.) probably name of a presbyter of Glasgow Diocese who was a witness to the 1464/5 sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to Archibald Douglas. His name appears as '[]atrio de Dunlop' (with the first letter illegible). Walter (17th C.) married Janet 'Walles' (presumably Wallace) in Ashkirk Parish in 1656. Walter (17th/18th C.) tenant of Ashkirk Town and Synton Parkhead in the early 1700s. He and his brother John also between them held the farms of Chisholme, Whitslade and others. His son was John. Probably the same John was tenant in 'Longtoun' in Ashkirk Parish in 1716; He married Jean Halliday and their children included Agnes (b.1703), Janet (b.1706), John (b.1714) and Jean (b.1716). He is probably the Walter who was tenant in Ashkirk in 1753. Walter of Whitmuirhall (1738–1808) eldest son of John and brother of John. He was recorded at Whitmuirhall on the 1785–91 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1788 he was listed as owner of both Whitmuir and Whitmuirhall, valued at £673 13s 4d. He was recorded as owner of 7 horses in the 1797 Horse Tax Roll for Selkirk Parish and also paid the dog tax there in the same year. In 1761 in Ashkirk Parish he married Agnes, eldest daughter of Robert Dickson of Hassendeanburn. He had 7 sons and 5 daughters, including: James (b.1766), who was a physician in Rochdale; Katherine (b.1768); Archibald (b.1770), who succeeded his father and sold the farm of Whitmuir in 1818; Isabel (b.1772); Walter (b.1774); John (b.1776), 4th son, who lived in Ayrshire and died unmarried; Janet (b.1778); Jean (b.1780); Robert, cloth merchant in Huddersfield; William (b.1785), 6th son, who became Quartermaster-General of the Bengal army; and Charles, who purchased Whitemuir Hall from the trustees of his brother William. The earlier children were baptised in Ashkirk and the later ones in Selkirk. Rev. Walter 'Wattie' (1774–1846) son of John, who was a younger son of Walter of Whitmuir Hall. His father was tenant of Chisholme and he was born in Roberton Parish. His mother was Agnes Hunter. He was in Prof. Lawson's junior class at Selkirk. The family attended the East Bank Kirk in Hawick. He was apprenticed to a baker in Leith, but switched careers to train for the ministry in Edinburgh and at the Burgher Theological Hall in Selkirk. He was ordained at Newcastleton Burgher Kirk in 1804 (the first minister in the new building). He was said to be known for his 'ready and pungent wit' and 'famous among South country humorists for the jokes he made himself or was the subject of among others'; however, no stories survive relating to his time in Liddesdale. It is said that he baked the pie for his own ordination dinner. He lived in a manse that was built next to the new church in Newcastleton. He greatly increased the congregation during his time in Newcastleton, but was called to Dumfries in 1809, moving there in 1810. In Dumfries he became the first minister of the new Secession Kirk on Buccleuch Street there, where he served until about 2 years before his death. He married Isabella Scott, who died in 1814. He secondly married Janet Jessie McLean, who died in 1828. Their son Archibald emigrated to Australia, while his oldest daughter Catherine (or 'Kitty') died in 1838. William (17th C.) married Marion Mark in Ashkirk Parish in 1656. Their children included Jean (b.1657) and Bessie (b.1659). William (17th C.) resident of Birkwood in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. He was presumably related to James, who was also listed at Birkwood. Along with James he witnessed a baptism for Robert Turnbull in 1694. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for James Gray and Bessie Dunlop in 1689 and others for John Murray, William Scott and William Allan in 1690. He married Jean Cuthbertson in 1690 and their children included Euphan (b.1691) and Jean (b.1692). The witnesses in 1691 were James Gray and James Dunlop. Perhaps the same William had earlier married Janet Hislop, with their daughter Margaret baptised in 1688. William (b.1833/4) born in Wilton, he was a tailor in Hawick. In 1861 he was 'Tailor journeyman' living at 6 Kirk Wynd with his wife Margaret, daughter Isabella and mother-in-law Jean Marchbank (formerly written 'Dilape', 'Dinlap', 'Dinlop', 'Dunlap', 'Dunlape' and variants).

Dunlop see Wullie Dunlop

Dunn (dun) n. Eling (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for all of his tenants, appearing in Hawick to assure that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. It is unclear what this forename corresponds to, and whether this might be a woman's name. James (17th/18th C.) gardener in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1708 for gardener William Riddell (along with gardener James Falsyde), in 1712 for William Riddell and in 1725 (along with Robert Ker) for weaver Walter White and Jean Ker. He married Margaret Ker and their children included: Jean (b.1707); Janet (b.1707); Robert (b.1708); John (b.1708); Helen (b.1710); Mary (b.1713); Margaret (b.1716); James (b.1719); and Adam (b.1721). The witnesses in 1707 were Bailie George Martin and tailor Henry Orrock, in 1713 were gardener William Riddell and Robert Ker (probably related to his wife) and in 1719 were gardener William Riddell (again) and carrier James Simpson. James (b.c.1780) wright at Chesters according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Southden Parish. James B., A.R.S.A. (19th/20th C.) Edinburgh architect famous for deigning the Scotsman Building with James Leslie Findlay. In Hawick he was commissioned to design the Hawick War Memorial. Jean (17th/18th C.) born in Selkirk, she was a servant to Andrew Jerdon in Hawick, being put out of the Town twice for failing to produce a testimonial from her former Parish. She was also servant to Mrs. Fraser (although whether this was Hawick is unclear) and travelled between the parishes of Hawick, Galashiels and Prestonpans. John (1780/1–1807) from Ruletownhead, he died of fever and was buried at Byrness in Northumberland. Margaret (b.1811/2) from Jedburgh, she was a grocer and spirit merchant at Bonchester Bridge in 1851. Marilyn (??–) from Hawick, she graduated from Edinburgh University and is Senior Lecturer in Medieval History at the University of Glasgow. She has published books on Byzantine and monastic history. Thomas (15th C.) probably from the Rule valley. In 1493 Archibald Plenderleith in Bedrule was charged with stealing a cow and an ox from him. Perhaps the same 'Thomas dwn de Jedworth' was also mentioned in 1493 when Walter Ker of Cessford served as surety for the Laird of Bedrule not harming him. It is possible he was the same Thomas for whose murder John Robson in Auld Roxburgh was declared a fugitive in 1502. Thomas (19th C.) gardener at Stobs. He married Ann Henderson. Their son Robert died of consumption in 1857, aged 36. William (15th C.) witness to the document of 1488 in which Greenwood (i.e. Girnwood) and the Lyne were leased by Sir Thomas Turnbull to Robert Scott of Allanhaugh. It was signed at St. Mary's Church in Ettrick Forest and his name appears as 'Willelmo Dun'. Probably the same William is recorded in 1494/5 when Thomas Turnbull of Phaup was fined for his non-appearance in Selkirk. William (19th C.) said to have been one of only 2 residents of Bonchester Brigend who stayed in their houses during the devastating flood of 1846. William (19th C.) carrier, listed in 1852 leaving the Black Bull in Hawick on Thursday's, travelling to Canonbie and Annan (formerly written 'Dun').

Dunnan (du-nin) n. John (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. His surname is recorded as 'Dunnand', which might correspond to some other modern name. He is actually the last man named.

dunner (du-nur) v., arch. to make a noise suggestive of thunder, rumble, clatter – 'Thunners dunnered o'er ye', '... and though it gard the divots stour off the house riggins and every caber dunner ... ' [EM1820], '... When fell on her ear a dunnering sound, Mix'd with a boisterous cry' [JTe], '... She tuk alang the road hersel', As fast as she could dunner' [JoHa], 'But dunneran tyres And poisoned reek Chowk her till she Can hardly speak' [DH], n., arch. a noise like thunder – '... maist deeved an daivert an donnert wui the rummellin dunner o an eend-on bizz' [ECS].

Dunnerine Haa (du-ne-rin-haw) n. an old cottage that stood near Barnes in the early 19th century, also called 'Dunnerim'. It was the home of James Cavers, known as 'Auld Dunnerum', who reached the age of 98.

Dunnett (du-ni') n. Rev. Arthur Henry (1882–1940) son of William, minister in Kilmarnock, he was educated in Kilmarnock and at Glasgow and Edinburgh Universities. He was licensed by Irvine Presbytery in 1910, assisted at Dalziel and St. Mungo's in Glasgow and was ordained as minister of St. John's in Hawick near the end of 1913. He was translated to Teviothead in 1920. He demitted in 1924 when he was appointed as Depute Home Mission Secretary. After the Union of 1929 he became one of the Secretaries of the Home Board for the Church of Scotland. He married Jessie, daughter of John Lamb, the West Kilbride minister. Their children were: Fiona; and William Gavin (b.1919), who was also a minister. He published 'The Child's Prayer Book' (1920), 'Book of Prayers' (1925) and an article 'For Christ or Congregation' in 'The Church in Changing Scotland' (1934). Rev. William Gavin (b.1919) son of the minister of St. John's Kirk, he was born in Hawick. He was educated at Edinburgh Academy, Sandhurst Military College and Edinburgh University. During WWII he served in India, the Western Desert, Iraq, Burma, Malaya and Java, and he retired at the rank of Lt.-Col. He was student assistant at Edinburgh St. George's West 1966–67, assistant at Inveresk St. Michael's 1967–68, licensed by the Presbytery of Edinburgh in 1967, ordained by the Presbytery of Dalkeith in 1968, inducted as minister of Ormiston in 1968 and became minister at the combined charge of Hutton, Fishwick and Paxton in 1974. He retired in 1985. He was awarded the M.B.E. In 1948 he married Margaret Helena Southern and they had a son Nigel Gavin Manfred.

Dunnideer (du-ni-deer) n. Stephen (d.1317) presumably from Aberdeenshire, he was Parson of Conveth in 1301 and Chamberlain of King Robert I from about 1309. He was elected as Bishop of Glasgow in late 1316 or early 1317. He then travelled to Rome for consecration, but the Pope rejected him due to pressure from Edward II of England. He died at Paris on the return journey. The Canons of Glasgow elected John de Lindsay as his successor, while the Pope chose Englishman John de Egglescliffe (often written 'de Dunnideer').

Duns (dunz) n. small market and former county town in Berwickshire. Originally called Dunse and built on the dun (Iron Age fort), it became a burgh of barony in 1490. Duns Castle includes part of a 14th century tower, and Duns Law is the site of the Covenanters' Stone. Nearby stands Manderston House, as well as Nisbet House and Wedderburn Castle. It was the birthplace of Duns Scotus (who indirectly gave us the word 'dunce') and also has the Jim Clark Museum. Duns summer festival was started in 1949, and takes place in July. It includes a ride to the summit of Duns Law by the Reiver and his supporters. The town motto is 'Duns Dings A'!', relating to a rout of the Earl of Northumberland's men there in 1377. The town handball game was carried out until 1886 and revived recently as part of the Summer Festival. Population (1991) 2,444 (formerly spelled 'Dunse').

Duns (dunz) n. Patrick (17th C.) resident in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. His name is written 'Dunce'. Also in 1694 he witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk for James Brown.

Dunside Rig (dun-sīd-rig) n. hill to the south-west of Buccleuch and north of Phenzhopehaugh, reaching a height of 367 m.

Dunsmuir (dunz-mewr) n. Robert (15th C.) witness to a charter of 1453, the first known relating to lands in Hawick. His name was written 'Dunsmyre'.

Dunstane (dun-stān) n. area just to the south-west of Lillieasleaf village. The hill immediately west of the village was formerly called Dunstane Height and is now marked 'Dunstane Roundle', reaching a height of 169 m. Dunstane Mill is probably an old name for Riddell Mill (although it is possible it was a separate mill). Some of the lands of Riddell of that Ilk in Lilliesleaf are described in 1595/6 as being called 'the West-Maynis alias Dunstane or Myris'. Adam Young was farmer there in the 1860s (also written 'Dunston').

dunt (dun') n. a blow, thump – 'A gien eet a right guid dunt', 'Yet up he raise, the truth to tell, And laid about him dunts fu' dour . . . ' [CPM], '. . . one of the women lifted the astonished preacher by the oxters, and, carrying him off for several yards, set him down again with a 'dunt' ' [HAST1864], '. . . for it wad be a gey sair pliskie ti rin dunt up again' the braw moniment at the fit' [ECS], 'But nought will scare him frae his neuk, Or gar him rair, But hearty dunts wi' the big buik, Or fervent prayer' [DA], 'Hard are the dunts, The dule and pain, A wheen o' oor neebors Maun thole alane' [WL], v. to strike, bump, knock – 'hei fairly dunted his heid on the lintel', 'Poor Johny's heart began to dunt, He though the ghaist incivil . . . ' [JR], '. . . And he duntit and knockit to waken the lass' [JoHa], '. . . But he dunted the banes o' the bodie' [JoHa], 'My hairt dunts, my strencth fæils me; as for the licht o' mine eyne, it alsua is gane frae me' [HSR] (see also duntit).

Duntersdales (dun-turz-dālz) n. former name for land lying south of the Slitrig, between and uphill from Usuch Haugh and Deidhaugh. In 1892 it was feued by the Duke of Buccleuch to John Laing & Sons and James Melrose & Sons, both of Slitrig Crescent (the origin is uncertain, perhaps relating to 'dunters', the spirits that inhabited old castles, or alternatively a combination of Old English and Gaelic for 'hill fort athwart the valley').

Duntersdales (dun-turz-dālz) n. house at No. 6 Slitrig Bank, named after the piece of land on the other side of the Slitrig. It was built in the 1880s.

Dun Tae (dun-tā) n. hill between Carlin Tooth and Carter Fell. It may be the 'Dun' listed among the highest hilles in Castleton Parish in 1839.

duntit (dun-tee', -ti') pp., arch. beaten, struck – 'But he tirl'd fu' lood at the window glass, And he duntit and knockit to waken the lass' [JoHa].

Dupligs (doo-pligz) n. place name listed as 'Dupligis' among the farms and towers that were burned by the Earl of Hertford's men in 1545. It is listed under places on the Rule Water, but beside 'Tronnyhill' (which is probably Troneyhill near Belses). The name may be an error for some other place.

Durham (du-rum) n. small city in north-eastern England, centre of the Anglican Diocese of Durham. This traces its history to the Kingdom of Northumbria in the 7th century, the headquarters shifting from Lindisfarne to Chester-Le-Street and then the cathedral built in the loop of the River Wear from the late 10th century (and the present building started in 1093). The Cathedral still contains the remains and relics of St. Cuthbert. Teviotdale may have been part of this diocese until transferred to Glasgow sometime around 1100. Reginald of Durham, in his description of miracles attributed to St. Cuthbert, makes the first mention of Hawick in the 12th century. The town was also the location for the Battle of Neville's Cross in 1346, also sometimes known as the Battle of Durham.

Durham (du-rum) n. Adam (12th/13th C.) holder of lands in West Lilliesleaf. His son Adam sold their lands to Melrose Abbey. Adam (13th C.) son of Adam. Some time in the period 1214–49 he sold to the monks of Melrose his lands of 'Thodholesid' and 'Standestanerig' which he held of Sir William Riddell in the territory of West Lilliesleaf. This was 'out of great need for himself, his wife and his children. His name is recorded as 'Adam filius Ade de Dunelmo. The precise location of the lands is unclear, but they were adjacent to Clerklands.

Durie (joo-ree) n. Andrew (d.1558) son of John of Durie in Fife, and brother of George, who was Archdeacon of St. Andrews. He became Bishop of Galloway and Abbot of Melrose, under very dubious circumstances, it is said. He is meant to have been a very poor Abbot. In 1524 he was recorded as Postulate of the Abbey when he re-granted Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme the office of bailiary of the Abbey's lands. In 1529 he witnessed the indenture to keep the peace between the Kerrs and the Scotts. He is said to have died of shock after Protestant rioters attacked St. Giles Cathedral. His shield bore the figure of Mary, together with a kneeling bishop, the arms of Durie and the words 'S' ANDREE ABBATIS DE MELROS' (also spelled 'Dury').

Durisdeer (riz-deer) n. Andrew (d.1473) from Galloway, he is also sometimes referred to as Andrew Muirhead. He was educated at St. Andrews and Paris and became a subdean of the Diocese of Glasgow, where he was a close associate of William Turnbull. He became a Dean of Aberdeen Diocese and acted as an ambassador for King James II at the papal court in the early 1450s. Following the death of William Turnbull he was personally appointed as Bishop of Glasgow by Pope Calixtus III. He was active in national politics, being appointed to the Council of Regency for James III and attending the parliaments of 1464, 1467, 1468, 1469 and 1471. In 1468 he was one of those who went to Denmark to arrange for the marriage of the King with Margaret of Denmark. His seal showed St. Kentigern holding a fish and a crozier and a shield with the arms of Muirhead, and bore the words 'SIGILLUM ANDREE EPI. GLASGUENSIS' (often written 'de Durisdeer').

durk (durk) n., arch. a drik, short dagger – 'Assaults were common; the weapons . . . 'an durke' . . . ' [JW1649], '. . . was done by the said Helen Leythen with ane durke or whinger' [BR1687] (also written 'durk').

Durnsteids (durn-steedz) n. Durnsteads, former name for lands in the Lordship of Winnington, once owned by the Eliotts of Stobs. It was recorded in the late 17th century.

Durrough (du-roch) n. Mr. ?? (17th/18th C.) described as 'dancing-master' in the Hawick Parish records. He was in Hawick for part of 1715 and 1716, presumably teaching dance, and received a certificate for good deportment to carry to his next abode (possibly the same as 'Durrow' or 'Darrow', a family well-represented in Berwickshire).

durrin (du-rin) n., arch. a buzzing sound inside one's head, adj. having a throbbing, quivering or buzzing sensation in the head – 'A durrin' pain' [GW].

dursent (dur-sin') pp., arch. dared not – '. . . the Doctor would again have to prefer his celebrated request to be allowed to crawl under a mill-wheel after an otter, because 'I'm smaller than a dog; and I dursn't let then go there' ' [HHD] (also written 'dursn't'; see also dursni and durstni).

dwinglt (dwing-ul') pp., arch. lingered, tarried – 'A cood fain heh dwinglt, an daikert aboot in sleepery Bosells' [ECS].

Dyce (dīs) n. Isobel nee Gordon 'Mem Dyce' (1769/70–1859) daughter of Alexander Gordon of Fochabers and wife of 'Lang Tam'. She ran a school for girls in Hawick (focussing on manners and sewing), and was apparently the first such teacher to insist on being called 'Mem', hence her nickname. She is recorded receiving payment from the Session for teaching in Hawick in 1800 and 1801. She is said to have been a Catholic and died at an advanced age. Rev. Thomas 'Lang Tam Dyce' (1740–1809) son of William, Rector of Hawick Grammar School. He was educated at St. Andrews University and became preacher at Teviothead 'chapel-of-ease' in 1792. He also sometimes substituted at St. Mary's. He rode a pony, called Donald. His nickname suggests that he must have been tall. He was described as 'a man of some learning, talent, and a vast amount of eccentricity'. Several stories are told of him, e.g. on one occasion he set the congregation to sing the 179 verses of the 119th Psalm, saying to them 'chow on that the now till A gaun throwe to Falnesh for ma denner!' On another occasion, impatient at shepherd's dogs fighting in the church, he quipped 'A'll hev a shillin on the black yin!' He often picked on people during his Sunday sermon and on one occasion went too far, so that there was a complaint and attempt to remove him; however, the sermon he next preached was observed to be of sufficient quality and his 'peculiarity and occasional tendency to buffoonery were overlooked'. He is recorded signing up for the Volunteers, the 1803 register stating that he was 'above age, yet willing to serve'. He apparently went insane (possibly around 1804 when Robert Shaw took over at Teviothead) and retired to Hawick, living at the Sandbed, where his wife kept a shop. He got married in 1792; his wife Isobel, daughter of Alexander Gordon of Fochabers, was a Roman Catholic and died in Aberdeen in 1859 at the age of 90. William Norman Kennedy wrote an account of his life and character, printed in the 1868 Transactions. His death in Hawick is recorded in 1809 as 'Mr. Dice son to Decd. Mr. Dice latin schoolmaster'. William (b.1706) father of Rev. Thomas. He was son of James in Belhelvie, Aberdeenshire. He was Schoolmaster in Selkirk before moving to Hawick. He began teaching in Selkirk in 1730, with a licence to teach English, Writing and Accountancy. In 1734 he received a fee for boarding the son of Scott of Harden. He is recorded in a legal case against debtors in Selkirk in 1737. He is the 'Mr. Dyce' whose houses in Selkirk are recorded being thatched in 1742 and repaired in 1743, and who had receipts for his salary as master of Selkirk Grammar School in the years 1731–46. He was Schoolmaster at Hawick Grammar School approximately 1746–73 (although differing dates are given). In 1751 he was one of 4 men appointed by the Hawick Session to deal with the affairs of the deceased Bailie Gideon Ruecastle. He is listed among the subscribers to the 1752 reprinted Buchanan's 'History of Scotland'. He witnessed baptisms for clockmaker Walter Freeman in 1758, for wright John Kay in 1759 and for weaver John Elder in 1760. He was also witness for merchant Walter Turnbull and Katherine Dyce (who was probably his daughter) in 1764 and 1766. He married Katherine Forbes and their children, baptised in Selkirk Parish, included: Janet (b.1733); Isobel (b.1734); Katherine (b.1737), who probably married Walter Turnbull; William (1739–44); and Thomas (1740–1809), minister at Teviothead (also formerly 'Dice').

dydie (dI-dee) adj. dyed – '... deidy (dyed) paips ...' [ECS] (also written 'deidy').

dydie-egg (dI-dee-eg) n. a dyed hard-boiled egg, especially one prepared for rolling down a hill at Easter – '... Golfers and sledgers and dydie-eggs' [DH], '... Crying 'Shairly it must be time, now, To trinnle my dydie egg!'' [DH]'At Easter A've trinnled dydie eggs ...' [IWL].

Dydie-egg Day (dI-dee-eg-dā) n. Easter Saturday, when 'dydie-eggs' were traditionally rolled.

dyte (dī') v., arch. to indite, put into writing, compose – 'It's my happy hap to be Of these Scots Relations, Therefore I'le dyte their Pedegree To the eight or ninth Generations' [CWS], 'Of that Shepherds truth I cannot dyte enough, But now I'm run ashore; For Shepherds Swains, their Ewes and Lambs, I have spoken much before' [CWS] (also 'dite').

d'ye (di-ee) contr. do you – 'd'ye say si?', 'd'ye hink si?', 'Look here, d'ye see that auld humphbackit fallow, Wi' clenched megs and deep grey ferret een' [JoHa], '... d'ye think he wad hae ta'en the method he's ta'en? – na, atweel no!' [JTe], ''D'ye think I'm dry eneuch noo.' 'Gae way to the pulpit man, ye're aye dry eneuch there', was the reply' [RJYS], 'Och, d'ye think I'm an Irishman, D'ye think I'm an Irishman' [JEDM] (cf. div ee).

dye-hoose (dI-hoos) n. a part of a textile factory where dyeing is carried out, either the yarn hanks or garments being dyed in huge vats.

dyein (dI-in) n. the process of dyeing fibres, particularly cotton or wool. The Hawick dyeing industry grew up in support of textile manufacturers. Turnbull the Dyers was an offshoot of the original Hawick Carpet Company, the dyeing department being started by Thomas Turnbull in the late 18th century and located where the Bridge Hotel is now. In the early 19th century there were 2 main businesses operating in town. John Turnbull & Sons became a large operation through much of the 19th and 20th centuries, with factories on Victoria Road and Slitrig Crescent, but went into liquidation in 2000.

dyester (dI-stur) n., arch. a dyer – 'John and William Tomlins, dyesters in Reughheugh ...' [BR], 'Paid Thomas Turnbull, dyster, for dyeing and dressing officer's clothes ... 0 12 0' [BR1757] (also written 'dyster').

dyke (dīk) n. wall, especially a 'dry-stane dyke' on a farm, formerly referring to a turf or ditch boundary – 'Item, whatsomever person that monds tp big ane stane dyck betwixt his nichbour and him ... to big the hale dyck upon his neighbour's ground that refuses, and to pay the hale expense thereof' [BR1640], '... whosoevers horse or nolt shall be found breaking their neighbours dykes and destroying of yr goods ...' [BR1701], '... there was a fold dyke built on the Common by the possessors of Fenwick, which dyke was levelled by order of the Magistrates and rendered useless' [C&L1767], 'But first kneel down at the dike side, And pray for heaven's blessin . . . ' [JR], 'Auld Ringan stood against the dyke, And levell'd weel his gun' [JTe], 'The big garden dike's carried off, every stane . . . ' [JoHa], 'Dinna sit claiverin' Doon at the dyke' [GWe], 'The bairns . . . gaed lowpin an rinnin aboot deike an gerss' [ECS], '. . . bye seike an deike an waeter; bye burn an brig an haa' [ECS], 'He crawed and flappit ower the dyke . . . ' [WFC], '. . . and a glimpse o yon auld battered dyke that rins at intervals up the hill' [DH], v. to build a dyke (sometimes written 'dike' or 'dyck'; the word appears in several place names, e.g. Dykeback, Dykecroft, Dykehead, Dykeneuk and Dykeraw).

the Dyke (thu-dīk) n. former lands in Liddesdale, listed between Killoley and Hietreis on the 1541 rental roll. The lands were valued at 10 shillings and the tenant were George and Edward Nixon. Thomas Nixon and 'Fargathe Nixson' were there in 1544. The precise location is uncertain (and is not Dykeraw, which is listed separately). The land of 'Stellis, within the Dyk' is also listed on the rental roll. This was probably the home of 'Ekkie Nixsoun in Dyk', recorded in 1611. In 1632 it is 'Dyke' when listed among Gavin Elliot's lands in Liddesdale, along with Ower Heuchhoose, Nether Hightreis, Kilford and Byrestead (suggesting it was somewhere near Saughtree).

dyke-back (dīk-bawk) n. the back of a wall, used as an an epithet for something lowly – 'I was a dyke-back gett: A bondager's wean, Wi' never ocht but the bothy-cat To ca my ain' [DH].

Dykeback (dīk-bak) n. former name for land beyond the splitting of the road at the Loanhead, lying between Longbaulk Road and Rosebank, and being separated into Easter Dykeback and Wester Dykeback. Presumably it was originally the back of the area known as Thorterdykes.

Dykecroft (dīk-kroft) n. field in the West End, near the Langbaulk, which was divided into allotments around 1854.

Dykecroft (dīk-kroft) n. house marked on Blaeu's 1654 map in Liddesdale, up the stream from Burnmouth and south of Pinglehole and Dawstonburn. It seems clearly distinct from the farm of essentially the same name further south in Castleton Parish. It is unclear what it might correspond to on modern maps, perhaps near Whitehillshiel (labelled as 'Dýkcrot' in c.1654 and 'Dykrafts' in 1694; it is not marked on Stobie's 1770 map).

Dykecrofts (dīk-krofts) n. farm in Castleton Parish on Gall Sike, to the east of Newcastleton. 'Albine' Armstrong was tenant there in 1694 and William Herd was also listed as a resident there. William Elliot was farmer there in 1794–97 and Thomas Beattie was a servant in 1801. Andrew Stavert was farmer in 1841 and until at least 1868 (it is 'Dykescroft' in 1801 and is marked 'Dykecroft' on Stobie's 1770 map).

dyked (dīkd) pp., adj. surrounded by a dry-stone wall – 'A dyked fold and a herd's dwelling Are set snug in the glen together' [WL].

dyke-fit (dīk-fi') n., arch. the base of a wall – 'A wheen folk oot picnickin at a deike-fit on Dunionseide . . . ' [ECS].

Dykeheeds (dīk-heedz) n. Dykeheads, farm in the upper Rule valley, south of Wauchope farm. South-east of the farm, on the gentle slopes of Wauchope Rig, are the remains of a settlement, about 55 m by 50 m. Its interior contains the foundation of a small cottage, and it is recorded in 1892 that it was surrounded by a stone wall. The remains were once described as a 'homestead moat', but now seem more likely to be from the Iron Age, with a later cottage. Nearby there are also field boundaries and rig and furrow lines.

dyke-louper (dīk-low-pur) n., arch. an animal that jumps over walls, a person of immoral habits – 'I am informed, that the old Session records of the parish of Hobkirk take notice of a female who was commonly known by the soubriquet of Bessy Loup-the-Dykes; and who is said to have been brought before the Session for having been guilty of dyke-loupin' [JoJ].

Dykeneuk (dīk-nook) n. small loch, out past Stirches, near the side of the road between Stouslie and Calaburn farm. It is known for its bird life, and also called Leahead Loch. A family called Nichol may have lived there in the early 19th century. There was formerly a farmstead there, where Robert and Isabella Scott lived in 1841. In 1851, Robert Scott and family were in one cottage and David Halliday and family in another – 'There's Lockie o' the Stinty Knowes, There's Nicol o' Dick-neuk, And Bryson o' the Priestrig, And Hall into the Heap' [DJG] (also spelled 'Dykenook' and variants).

dyker (dī-kur) n., arch. a person who makes dykes – '. . . at which the Common riders made a sprawl and brought in the dyker, whose name was Archibald Elliot' [C&L1767], '. . . Was wringin' oot his socks and sark Wi' wry thochts o' the dyker!' [WL].

Dykeraw (dīk-raw) n. farm in Southdean Parish, located along a track south of Southdean Cottages. The former tower of the same name is about 1/3 of the way along this track. After the area was burnt by Dacre's men in late 1513 it was where the detachments met on their way back to England, with Sir Christopher Dacre leading 2000 horsemen and 400 footmen. It was once split into neighbouring farmsteads called Nether Dykeraw and Over Dykeraw. It was described being 2 steadings valued at 50 shillings in the Exchequer Rolls in 1538 and 1539. The tenants of the farm in the 17th and early 18th centuries were Olivers, ancestors of the Hawick lawyers; those recorded in 1669 are Robert, Gilbert, Thomas, elder and Thomas, younger. Andrew Jardine was a tenant there in 1684 when listed as a fugitive for being a Covenanter. Isobel Oliver was listed among the poor of the Parish there in 1694. George Oliver is recorded as tenant in 1797 and in 1801 John Oliver was 'Husbandman' and Thomas Oliver shepherd there. Shepherd James Maben and family were living there in 1841. A farmstead is shown on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map just to the east of the old tower (see also Dykeraw Toor; the origin of the name is probably Old English and Old Scots 'dic raw', meaning 'the row by the ditch'; the name is at least as old as the 16th century; 'N. Dykra' and 'O. Dykra' appear on Blaeu's 1654 map; it is 'Dykraw' in 1538 and 1539, 'Dykeraw' in 1571/2, 'Dykrae' in 1669 and 'Dikerow' in 1797).

Dykeraw (dīk-raw) n. former house in upper Liddesdale, between old Castleton and Kirndean. It is valued at one merk and let to William and Hector Armstrong according to a rental roll of 1541. 'Geordy Armstrang of Dykraw' was tried for resetting cattle in 1633. Adam Elliot was tenant there in the late 17th century. William Waugh and John Scott were recorded there in 1694. It is shown on the 1718 survey of Buccleuch properties, covering 420 acres, bounded by Kirndean, James Robson was there in 1778. lands owned by the Laird of Whithaugh, Nether Harden, Cocklaik and Whitehaugh. The location of the farmhouse is indicated, near the 176 m spot height shown on the Ordnance Survey map, but with no evidence of habitation there now. William Sharp was farmer there in 1797 and in 1801 John Inglis was a 'Driver' there and William Lillico a labourer. The whole of the former farm is now within an area of forest to the east of Florida (it is 'Dykraw' in 1541, 'Dykrae' in 1694 and 'Dikerow' in 1797; it is marked on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Dýkra', and 'Dykraw' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey, is still on Stobie's 1770 map and is 'Dikeraw' on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Dykeraw Toor (dīk-raw-toor) n. tower in Southdean Parish. It was burned by Dacre's men in late 1513, 'both roof and floor', with Dacre adding in his correspondence 'and so smoked them out'. It was burned again by the English in 1544. The remains can still be seen on the track leading towards Dykeraw farm, which is further to the south-east. The tower was oblong in shape. Part of the south-west side still exist, but not all of this is contemporary with the tower (it is 'Dyker' in 1513, 'Dycray' in 1544).

Dykes (dīks) n. farm in the Rule valley, just to the west of Bedrule and east of Spittal Tower. It may have previously been known as 'Middle' and 'Holm'. It was farmed by Turnbulls in the late 17th and 18th centuries. William Murray was there in 1724–31, Thomas Veitch in 1728 and James Murray in 1730. John Leyden was a cooper there in 1730, George Henry was living there in 1736, James Murray in 1738, James Turnbull in 1742, James Scott in 1772, Robert Scott in 1784 and Walter Scott in 1786. In about 1795 it was listed among parts of Cavers Parish that were nearer to Bedrule Kirk than their own kirk. Thomas Turnbull is recorded as farmer there in 1797, Alexander Goodfellow was servant there in 1799 and James Richardson was a servant in 1801. Henry Litster was hind there in at least 1818–22. George Rutherford was tenant there in 1819. Walter Cavers was there in 1841 and 1851 and William Veitch in the mid-19th century. It became part of the estate and Barony of Wells, despite being in the Parish of Cavers. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls it was 'That part of the barony of Wells, called Dykes', owned by William Elliot of Wells and valued at £214 10s. By the 1870s it was held by the trustees of the late Sir William F. Eliott of Stobs and Wells. 'Dykes Moor Cottage' was a small cottage there in the 19th century (also called 'the Dykes'; it is 'Dyks' on Pont's c.1590 manuscript map and 'Dÿks' on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Dykes (dīks) n. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Redford in 1646 and their children included Agnes (b.1653), Isobel (b.1656), Janet (b.1658) and Marion (b.1661). In 1658 his name is transcribed 'Thomas', but that is surely an error. The witnesses in 1661 were George ... and Walter Coltart. Robert (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Hislop and their son William was baptised in 1688. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Baptie and their son Francis was baptised in 1699 (also written 'Dickes', 'Dicks', 'Dikes', 'Dyke' and 'Dyckes').

Dykes Burn (dīks-burn) n. stream that rises on the north side of Ruberslaw and run in a roughly northern direction, passing the Dykes, to join the Rule Water at Fastcastle.

Dykesmuir (dīks-mewr) n. former farmstead in Cavers Parish, south of Dykes and just to the north-west of Blawearie. George Ormiston and his family were there in 1851 (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

dymont (dI-min') n., arch. a diamond.

eachie-peachie (ee-chee-pee-chee) adj. not much to decide between two alternatives, six of one half a dozen of the other (cf. eeksie-peeksie).

Eaglesham (ee-gul-shum) n. Walter (14th C.) priest of Glasgow Diocese. In 1363 he was confirmed in the Church of Lilliesleaf. This was despite the fact that Hugh 'Raa, who is not a priest, has unlawfully held the same for two years'. He is recorded as 'de Egglisham'. He was still in possession of the Church of Lilliesleaf in 1373, when he was Bachelor of Canon Law, and was granted a canonry with expectation of a prebend. Nothing else seems to be known about him, but it seems likely he was from Eaglesham in Renfrewshire and perhaps related to the earlier William de Eaglesham (also written 'Eglisham').

ear-board (eer-bōrd) n., arch. the front board of a cart (probably from 'a near-board'; cf.erse-brod).

eariewig (ee-ree-wig) n. an earwig.

Earl o Bothwell (e-rul-ō-both-wel) n. title of members of the Hepburn and then Stewart families. All 5 of the men to bear this title had some local involvement or influence (formerly 'Bothuel', 'Bothuile', 'Boithvile', 'Bothvile' and other variants).

Earl o Buccleuch (e-rul-ō-bu-kloo) n. former title of the head of the House of Buccleuch. Walter Scott was created 1st Earl in 1619, while Francis, the 2nd and last Earl died in 1651. The full list of the Earlship is therefore: Walter 1619–33; and Francis 1626–51. Afterwards the heads of the Scotts of Buccleuch were raised to a Dukedom.

Earl o Dalkeith (e-rul-ō-dawl-keeth) n. one of the titles of the Scotts of Buccleuch. It has been used in the last few generations by the eldest son before he becomes Duke.

Earl o Glencairn (e-rul-ō-glen-kārn) n. title for heads of the Cunningham family, who held the Barony of Hassendean in the 15th and 16th centuries.

the Earl o Hell (thu-e-rul-ō-hel) n. nickname of 'Little' Wull Ruthven, leader of one of the local gypsy groups in the early 19th century. He was involved in the 'Battle o the Brig' in Hawick.

Earl o Mar see Mar

Earl o Mar see Earl o Murray

Earl o Minti (e-rul-ō-min'-i) n. title of the Lords of the Minto estate, beginning with Sir Gilbert, the 4th Baronet who was created Earl in 1813. The family also have the titles of Viscount Melgund and Baronet of Nova Scotia. They have been the most important landowners in the area around Denholm for the last 300 years. The full list of Earls is: Sir Gilbert Murray Kynynmound 1813–14; Gilbert Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound 1814–59; William Hugh Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound 1859–91; Gilbert John Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound 1891–1914; Victor Gilbert Lariston Garnet Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound 1914–75; Gilbert Edward George Lariston once Elliot -Murray-Kynynmound 1975–2005; Gilbert Timothy George Lariston Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound 2005– (see Elliot and Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound).

Earl o Moray see Earl o Murray

Earl o Murray (e-rul-ō-mu-ri) n. one of the titles of James Stewart (spellings can also be 'Stuart' and 'Moray').

Earl o Strathearn (e-rul-ō-straw-thern) n. title of Maurice Murray (or Moray), who was Baron of Hawick and Branxholme in the early 14th century.

the Earl o Tarras (thu-e-rul-ō-ta-ris) n. title often used for Walter Scott of Highchester and Harden.

Earlside (e-rul-, yi-rul-sīd) n. farm off the side road leading from near Cogsmill to Hawthornside, south of Hawick. It was among lands resigned in 1368 by Thomas Baliol to his superior William, Earl of Douglas. It is probably the place transcribed as 'the demeinz of Charles-set' with the park in a description of Cavers Barony in an English document c.1380. It was formerly part of the Cavers estate, having been acquired by Douglas of Cavers at least as early as 1511. In that years the 'mains thereof' are also mentioned, and these 'dominicales earundem' are still mentioned in 1687 and 1698. This is probably the place transcribed as 'Yarsaye' where Martin Crozier resided in 1544; he appears to have been a prominent member of the clan at that time. In 1574 this was among the lands that William Douglas of Cavers served as surety for, the inhabitants being guilty 'for the cryme of thift in tyme bigane', this including 'Cock's Clem' Crozier, his brothers John and Rowie, 'Kate's Adie', 'Kate's Jock', 'Megat's Adie', Airchie and also 'Mark's Airchie'. David Douglas of Earlside was recorded in 1589. James Douglas was 'goodman of Yerlesyde' in 1590. It was listed among the lands of Stobs purchased by Gilbert Eliott from his half sisters in about 1608. Adam Scott was tenant in 1641. The area was said to have been used for secret Covenanters' sermons in the latter part of the 17th century; a thorn tree near there was long pointed out as the spot. James Stavert was tenant in 1682 and James Leyden in 1688. Part of the lands here were among those inherited by Sir William Eliott from his father in 1692. In the 1694 Hearth Tax roll there is an entry for 3 hearths there. Thomas Douglas and Richard Main were there in 1708. Robert Douglas in at least 1726–28, Walter Nichol and William Dodds in 1726, John Nivison in 1727 and John Douglas in 1728–29. John Lorrain was there in 1732, Thomas Telfer in 1733, Thomas Anderson and William Douglas in 1741, John Rule in 1742, William Inglis in 1772 and Thomas Scott in 1784. John Huggan was recorded as farmer there in 1794–97 and James Lunn as shepherd. Alexander Brown and John Lunn were servants there in 1799. Labourer Thomas Scott was living there in 1800. It was farmed by Peter Amos in the early 19th century, followed by his sons Thomas and then Gilbert. There is a story of some mysterious fires being set there when the Amoses were tenants; the culprit could not be found and so they procured a savage dog, which they paraded through Hawick, then let it be known how a nephew of Mr. Amos narrowly escaped being savaged by the dog, after which there were no more fires. William Telfer was there in the early 1900s. There was formerly a mill pond just to the north of the farm buildings. There is an ancient earthwork on the slopes of nearby White Hill (spelled 'Yarlside', 'Yairlside', 'Yarlsyde' and other variants from 1329 until the mid-17th century; it is 'yarlside' in 1368, 'Yarlsid' in 1511, 'Zarlside' in 1511 and 1558, 'Zarlesyde' in 1562, transcribed 'Yairdsyde' in 1569, 'Yarldsyde' in 1574, 'Yarlsyde' in 1589, 'Yairlesyd' in 1608, 'Hairrlesyd' in 1622, 'Yairliside' in 1641, 'Yearlsyde' in 1652, 'Zarlsyde' in 1662, 'Earlesyde' in 1687, 'Earlsyde' in 1688 and 1692, 'Earelsyde' in 1694 and 'Earlesyde' in 1698; the name probably means simply 'the nobleman's slope', 'eorles-side' in Old English).

Earlsideshiels (e-rul-, yi-rul-sīd-sheelz) n. former farmstead near Earlside. John Elliot was shepherd there in the 1750s.

Earlston (e-rul-stin) n. town on the Leader Water, about 3 miles up from the Tweed, and about 25 miles from Hawick. It contains the ruined tower where 'Thomas the Rhymer' was born, and has the site of the castle of the former Earls of March. The old Earlston Bridge, a thatched cottage and the Rhymer's Mill are other historic attractions. Post Office Close has a house with a lintel bearing the date 1581. Earlston Civic Week is at the beginning of July. Population (1991) 1,629. Pieces of jet necklace found in a 'tumulus' near here is in Hawick Museum (the origin is possibly 'Ercil's fort').

Earl Street (e-rul-stree') n. road between Duke Street and Trinity Street, with houses built in 1887, and named after the 6th Duke of Buccleuch (Henry Walter Scott), who had been Earl of Dalkeith.

easla (ees-la) prep., arch. to the east of, adj. eastern, easterly – 'We have also East-le and Wast-le, lying to the East and West respectively. The town of Hawick is divided by the northward-running Slitrig into two parts, known as Eastle-the-waitter and Wastle-the-waitter, commonly contracted into Eis'la-waitter and Was'la-waitter, or simply Eis'la and Was'la' [JAHM], 'The easslawaiter ba' players' [GW], prep. to the east of, n. the eastern side, particularly used to describe the part of the town of Hawick east of the Slitrig in the 18th and 19th centuries – '. . . making the selection alternately from the youths living on the east and west sides of the Slitrig, that river being the boundary line between the Easla's and Wasla's' [HAST1866] (also written 'eassla'; see also Eastla and cf. wasla).

easla-wesla (ees-la-wes-la) adj., arch. east and west, oriented in an east-west direction – 'An another ribbon, – verder-cled, rinnin eassla-wassla – telld the coorse o bonnie Teviot' [ECS].

Eastbank see East Bank

East Bank (eest-bawngk) n. former name for the area near where Trinity Church now stands, which formed the eastern extremity of the town boundary. This was the site of the East Bank Kirk, and the lower ground was once called the Wheathole.

East Bank Hoose (eest-bawngk-hoos) n. Manse of East Bank Church, beside Trinity Gardens at the start of Bourtree Place. Once the building was turned over to secular use it became a shop, run by A. Kyle then Fred W. Robertson as a souvenir and art supplies retailer in the early 20th century. Later it was a Scottish Power showroom. From 1991 it has been Hamish Smith's jewellery shop, Nos. 2 and 4 Bourtree Place, and is a grade C listed building. Local joiner Tosh Scott designed the new frontage in mahogany, and it contains custom cabinets to Hamish Smith's designs, as well as the Teribus Clock outside.

the East Bank Kirk (thu-eest-bawngk-kirk) n. church formerly built at the Wheathole, being the lower part of the current Trinity Gardens. It was originally erected in 1780 as the East End Meeting House of the East End Burgher Congregation, which had been founded in Hawick in 1773 by the 'dissenting seceders', and previous to that members of this congregation had travelled to Selkirk for services. The first minister was George Williamson, but he left after disagreements with his congregation, and it was 8 years before James Henderson was appointed. He significantly increased the numbers, placing the congregation on a firm footing. Many worshippers came from the neighbouring Parishes of Wilton, Cavers, Kirkton and Hobkirk. There were 673 members in 1806. From 1847 it became part of the United Presbyterian Church, and formed an offshoot in 1886, which became Wilton South Church. The original structure was an unpretentious, square, 2-storey building with an attached church hall. An adjacent manse was built in 1793. In 1837 a dispute over whether to build a manse for the assistant minister caused a schism in the congregation. The church was enlarged in 1877. Members of the Free Church worshipped there for about a year, before St. George's was built. The old meeting house was converted for use as a private school for a few years (the forerunner of St. Mary's and Trinity schools), and was last used by a joiner's firm in the early 20th century. Photographs of it exist from the late 19th century. The 'cexdar cone which surmounted the pulpit sounding-board' from the old kirk was donated to the Museum in 1865. The present building was constructed in 1843 higher up than the original, was officially called the East Bank United Free Church, and later became part of the Church of Scotland again. In the 1890s a Church Hall was built to designs by J.P. Alison. In 1958 the church merged with the nearby congregations of St. Andrew's and St. John's to become Trinity Church. An entrance pillar from the former gates by the Horse was dumped in the Teviot at Mansfield, but rescued to form the base of the Frank Scott Memorial Seat on the Miller's Knowes. The oldest existing communion token is marked 'Rev. J.H. 1791' and 'Ass-o-c-Hk.' on the other side. A history was written by Stewart Richmond Scott in 1923. A roll of the ministers is: George Williamson 1774–83; James Henderson 1791–1840; Adam Thomson 1833–60; James McEwen 1862–72; James Orr 1874–91; Charles Allan 1892–99; James Brand Scott 1900–07; Robert James Wright 1907–1913; David Mair 1913–1918; John Anderson 1918–1922; Stewart Richmond Scott 1922–1959.

the East Bleachin Green (thu-eest-bleechin-green) n. former public drying green off the Loaning in Denholm. Comrades Hall was built on the lower part in the 1920s, while the upper part continued to have clothes poles until about 1960, when it was turned into a children's playground.

East Boonraw (eest-boon-raw) n. farm reached by taking the right hand road at the 'Fower Road Ends', just next to West Boonraw, on the Boonraw Burn. It probably corresponds to the location of the main farm of Boonraw. Robert Scott was farmer there in at least the period 1841–72. The upper half of a quern found there was donated to the Museum in 1871 (see also West Boonraw).

East Buccleuch (eest-bu-kloo) n. farm in the Rankle Burn valley off the B711 and near West Buccleuch. This area gave its name to the Scotts of Buccleuch. The present house stands on the site of a much older manor house, near where the Clear Burn joins the Rankle Burn. This was probably the first local seat of the Scotts of Buccleuch (or 'Rankilburn', as it was originally). The modern farmhouse was built in 1832, during the construction of which the foundation walls of the castle were discovered (at the western end). The house incorporates a freestone door-rybat from the earlier mansion, as well as a stone above the door bearing the crescent moon of the Scotts of Buccleuch. It is said that an old spur, a bridle bit and other relics were once dug up there. It is also said that when a fireplace was replaced in 1921 that the floor gave way, revealing the vault of the old house. The original 'castle' there was probably a fortified house and may have been ruined in an attack by the Routledges and accomplices in about 1490, although it has also been speculated that it was destroyed by the Earl of Hertford's men in 1544. There are nearby signs of possible other buildings and rig field systems. The farm also once contained the lands of Gair and Ropelawshiel. In the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch it extended to 2265 acres, with the farmhouse in roughly the present location. 'Easter Buccleuch, and a fourth of Wester Buccleuch' were listed among the farms of the Duke of Buccleuch being let by public roup in Hawick in 1755. The 'East side of Buccleugh' stock and teind was valued at about £1145 in 1785. David Park was tenant there until about 1800, when it was taken over by James Grieve of Branxholme Park (also sometimes 'Easter Buccleuch').

East Burnfit (eest-burn-fi') n. East Burnfoot, former farmstead in the Ale valley, corresponding approximately with the modern Burnfit on Ale, with the 'West' farm actually to the south east. James Hart was tenant there in 1711, Robert Riddell in 1721 and James Brown a little later. James Cowan was herd there 1715–22 (it is 'eister burnfoot' in 1688 and 'Easter Burnfoot' in 1765).

East Burn Park (eest-burn-pawrk) n. name for the field on the Common to the east of West Burn Park and to the west of Williestruther cottage.

East Castle (eest-kaw-sul) n. fortified house said to have been at the east end of Denholm village, so-called to distinguish it from Westgate Hall, at the other end of the village. It was also known as just 'the Castle'.

East Cavers (eest-kā-vurz) n. former farm on the Cavers estate, also known as Easter Cavers.

Eastcote (eest-ko') n. farmhouse just outside Hawick, about half-way between Weensland and Denholm, lying on the left between the A698 and the Teviot. It was formerly part of Cavers estate and is now the 'Eastcote House Archery Centre'. Andrew Rodger was there in 1727, John Douglas in 1731 and William Douglas in 1733. William Blyth was there in 1772. John Johnstone was farmer there in at least 1794–97. Archibald Whillans and Charles Allan were servants there in 1797, James Brown and James Dunlop in 1799 and James Dunlop, Robert Rae and Thomas Hope in 1801. Thomas Scott was farmer there in 1841. Thomas Armstrong was farmer in the early 20th century. Aerial photography revealed the outlines of what appears to be a Roman temorary marching camp in the nearby fields. The name was used to distinguish it from West Cote and it is essentially the same as the earlier Little Cote (also spelled 'East Cote', 'East Coat', 'Eastcoat', etc.; it is marked 'Eastcot' on Stobie's 1770 map).

East Cote see Eastcote

eastle (ees-tul) prep., arch. on the east of – 'The town of Hawick is divided by the northward-running Slitrig into two parts, known as Eastle-the-waitter and Wastl-the-waitter, commonly contracted into Eis'la-waitter and Was'la-waitter, or simply Eis'la and Was'la' [JAHM] (also eassel).

the East End (thu-eest-end) n. former name for the area around the High Street, to distinguish it from the 'West End'. This was the commercial part of Hawick, where the merchants etc. lived. The name came later to refer to the eastern boundary of Hawick, around where the Horse now is. In 1770 there were 96 houses there owned by Burgesses, with a value of over £17,000. On the 1841 census it was used as an explicit address (also written 'Eastend').

the East End Kirk (thu-eest-end-kirk) n. the East End Church, also known as the East End Meeting House, the original name for what became known as the East Bank Church. The name distinguished it from the other Secessionist church, the West End (or Green) Kirk.

Easter Alemoor (ees-tur-āl-moor) n. farm beyond the dam at Alemoor Loch, on the Easter Burn, and actually to the north of the modern Wester Alemoor. It appears to have existed as a separate estate from at least the mid-16th century. David Armstrong 'of Ailmure', recorded in 1573, may be the first known owner. It was owned (along with Wester Alemoor) by the Scotts of Buccleuch in the 17th century, but by the late 18th century was the property of Pringle of Haining. Alexander Pringle, a prominent Scottish Judge, became 'Lord Alemoor'. The farm was in Selkirk Parish until incorporated into Roberton in 1689. William Lamb was there in 1714, Walter Scott in 1716, James Govenlock in 1715, Walter Scott in 1716, George Sinton in 1720, William Scott in 1725, James Anderson in 1753, John Storie in 1757 and James Grieve in 1765. John Pringle of Clifton paid the Land Tax of £308 there in 1785 and Mark Pringle in 1802. Residents in 1812 included tenant George Easton and shepherd William Forrest. There are signs of rig and furrow cultivation nearby and former buildings to the north-west (it is 'Easter Ealmuir' in 1725; it is marked on Ainslie's 1773 map).

Easter Barnhills (ees-tur-barn-hilz) n. former name for part of the lands of Barnhills. It was sold by John Turnbull of Barnhills to Ragwell Bennet of Chesters in 1613. In 1678 it was combined with Wester Barnhills when both were owned by Sir William Bennet. By 1788 the lands were valued at about £450 and held by the Miss Stewarts. Thomas Balmer and Henry Carruthers were servants there in 1801 (it is 'Easter Barnehills' on Pont's c.1590 manuscript map, but seems to be just 'Barnhils' on Gordon's c.1650 map and 'Barhills' on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Easter Buccleuch see East Buccleuch

Easter Burnfit (ees-tur-burn-fi') n. former farm bordering on Midshiels and Appletreehall, all tenanted farms of the Scotts of Buccleuch from at least the late 17th century. It was part of the lands of Burnfoot, distinct from Wester Burnfoot. The mill there is recorded from 1574, when William Scott 'in Harden' and James Scott 'in Quhitslaid' paid back Sir Walter Scott of Birkenside for a loan on the lands. James Shiel was living there in 1682. Robert Wright was a shoemaker there in 1690. The residents there in 1694 were Alexander 'Hymers' and Robert Wright. William Scott was tenant there in 1709. Bessie Gray was from there in 1717. There is still mention of 'easter Burnfoot mylne' in 1718 and in the survey of Buccleuch properties in that year it was not owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch, unlike the adjacent Wester lands. Robert Riddell was recorded there 1721–29, Alexander Moore in 1723, Walter Riddell in 1725 and James Scott in 1733–35. There are document of 1762 and 1765 relating to the sale of 'Easter Crawhill, commonly called Easter Burnfoot' between Thomas Turnbull of Knowe and William Scott of Burnhead (it is 'Easter Burnfoott' in 1694 and 'E: burnfoot' in 1725).

Easter Burnfit see East Burnfit

Easter Cavers (ees-tur-kā-vurz) n. former farm on Cavers estate, also known as 'East Cavers'. John Miller and William Nichol are listed there in 1694. Walter Lorraine was there in 1714. It is possible it was the same as Little Cavers.

Easter Clarilaw (ees-tur-klā-ree-law) n. former name for the eastern half of Clarilaw in Wilton Parish. It was included in the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, when it covered 146 acres and was bounded by Midshiels, Wester Clarilaw and Hassendean Common. It was also stated that 6 acres of land belonging to Wester Clarilaw were mixed with it, while one acre mixed with Wester Clarilaw belonged to it.

Easter Common Haugh (ees-tur-ko-min-hawf) n. former name for the Wee Haugh, including the extended area now occupied by Teviot Crescent.

Easter Craik (ees-tur-krāk) n. formerly half of the lands of Craik. In 1548/9 these lands were granted by Mary, Queen of Scots, to Sir Walter Scott and his wife Janet Betoun, having been forfeited by John Cockburn of Ormiston. The lands were re-granted to John Cockburn by James, Earl of Bothwell in 1567. It was inherited by Simon Scott in Newton in 1618, from his brother Walter. It is probably the 'Easter Craig' listed among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch according to the 1653 and 1661 services of heirs and the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. The lands were also described as having a mill (it is 'Eistir Craik' in 1548/9, 'Eister Craik' in 1567 and 'Eister Craick' in 1661).

Easter Dykeback (ees-tur-dīk-bak) n. former name for land lying on the north side of Rosebank Road, probably once part of the area known as Thorterdykes, and distinguished from Wester Dykeback, which lay further to the south-west.

Easter Essenside (ees-tur-e-sin-sīd) n. farm west of Ashkirk, adjacent to Wester Essenside. It was part of the estate of the Scotts of Headshaw in the late 16th century. In 1643 it was owned by Francis Scott of Synton and valued at £200, with the teinds being valued at £60. There were 6 tenants listed there on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. William Redford was tenant there in at least 1709–17 and James Nichol was living there in 1710. The Shortreeds were there in the 18th century, with Robert Shortreed being owner in the 1740s when the lands were valued at £365 10s, and James Shortreed was owner in 1759. In 1778 it was purchased by John Elliot, younger son of the 2nd Lord Minto (who would become an Admiral and settle at Monteviot); when he died in 1808 it passed to his nephew, the next Lord Minto. In 1788 it was valued at £365 (and had a value of 10s more in 1811). John Scott was farmer there in at least 1789–99. John Miller was servant there in 1797. John Scott was a servant there in 1801. In 1820 it may have been sold to Miss Ann Carnegie (perhaps a relative of the Elliots by marriage). It was farmed in the 19th century by John Douglas (father of Bailie James) and his son, who was also John. 2 small bronze axe-heads (or 'celts') were discovered on the farm, in 1882 and in 1887, as well as a bronze armlet, possibly loaned to the National Museum of Antiquities by Tom Scott and subsequently lost.

Easter Grundistone (ees-tur-grun-dee-stin) n. former house and farm, on the lands of Groundistone, just north of Hawick. It was 'le Estpart of Grundieston within th barony of Chamberlein-Newton' in a document c.1380 describing lands claimed by the English. It became home to a branch of the Scotts in the 16th century. 'Robert Scot of Easter-groundiston, brother-son to Robert Scot of Headshaw' is listed by Scott of Satchells as one of the 24 'Pensioners' of the house of Buccleuch. George Scott was there in at least 1682–88. It was part of the estates of the Duchess of Buccleuch by the end of the 17th century. George Scott and Robert Stewart were there in 1694, with William Bell as shepherd and James Young there among the poor of the Parish. George Scott was farmer there in 1709. William Miller was there in 1711. In the 1718 survey of Buccleuch properties it covered 371 acres, bounded by Hassendean, Newton, Boonraw, Wester Grundistone and Synton. A stream separated it from Wester Grundistone, and in 1718 farmhouses are shown on either side of this stream. Thomas Scott was tenant there in 1764. The small farmstead of Boghall was also included within its limits. John Armstrong was farmer there in 1797 (it is 'Easter Grundiston' in 1643, 'eister groundiston' in 1688 and 'Easter Groundiestone' in 1718; it is marked on Stobie's 1770 map).

Easter Hassendean (ees-tur-haw-sin-deen) n. former name for the eastern half barony of Hassendean, the name being used from at least the 15th century to refer to the part with barons being the Cunninghams. This is distinct from the western part, which included some of the northern Borthwick valley. In 1510/1 the lands were granted to David, son of James Scott of Hassendean. In 1514 Cuthbert Cunningham, Earl of Glancairn granted the lands to Elizabeth Cunningham, widow of John, Lord Hay of Yester. And in a charter of 1529, John, Lord Hay of Yester takes possession of the 'ten merkis landis of ald extent' of 'estir hassindane', previously belonging to his grandmother Elizabeth Cunningham. This was confirmed to the Hays of Yester in 1617, when the daughters and heirs of another John, Lord Hay of Yester disponed the lands to him. Although the Cunninghams and Hays held the superiority, the lands were possessed by the Scotts of Hassendean, with a confirmation to William Scott of Hassendean in 1532. In 1606 Walter Scott of Alton was served as heir to his grandfather Robert in half the lands of 'orientalium de Hassinden' with the mill there. The lands, including 'the toure, fortalice, and mylne thairof' were listed among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1661 and 1663 (it is 'Eister Hassindene' in 1514, 'Estir Hassindene' in 1532 and 'Easter Hassindean' in 1663).

Easter Heap (ees-tur-heep) n. former name for an estate roughly corresponding to the modern Silverbuthall, and being part of 'the Heaps'. In 1635/6 James Waugh was served heir to the lands there belonging to his grandfather, John Waugh 'de Heip'; this was explicitly land valued at 5 merks. In a 1650 list of 'communicants' there are 39 people listed on the estate, namely (using modern spellings) Adam Welsh, Margaret Davidson, Marion Waugh, Janet Percival, Margaret Sheen, John Percival, Walter Scott, Bessie Scott, James Aitchison, Gavin Elliot, Janet Percival, Robert Easton, James Easton, Margaret Fletcher, William Easton, Isobel Fowler, John Scott, James Scott, James Stevenson, Bessie Easton, Bessie Stewart, William Easton, Janet Gray, Helen Johnstone, James Stewart, Agnes Scott, Patrick Lorraine, William Lorraine, Marion Rule, Robert Scott, Margaret Percival, Robert Aitkin, James Aitkin, David Aitkin, Bessie Brydon, Adam Aitchison, Robert Mitchell, James Learmonth and Isobel White. James Scott had sasine for the lands in 1733. In 1765 it was 'silverbut-hall, belonging to James Scot, formerly called Easter Heip'. In 1788 it was 'Easterheap or Silverbuthall' when valued at £80 and owned by James Scott. The 1808 will of William Oliver 'Auld Cash' mentions 'Easter Heap or Heip now commonly called Silverboothall'. 'Three Inclosures and Stackyard, part of Easter Heap, or Silverbuthall, formerly belonging to James Scott, and possessed by Robert Smith, acquired from James and Walter Knox' are listed in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, with the owner being Archibald Dunlop of Whitmuir and the value being £13 (also spelled 'Heip' or 'Hepe'; it is 'Eister Heip' in 1636 and 'Eister heape' on a parish map of 1650).

Easter Hermiston (ees-tur-her-mis-tin) n. former name for lands in Lilliesleaf Parish. The lands were owned by Andrew Scott and William Johnstone, both valued at £130, along with teinds valued at £51 10s 2d. John Scott of Synton and John Johnstone owned the lands in 1678 and they were combined with Wester Hermiston by 1743. They were all owned by William Govan in 1788.

Easter Highchesters see East Highchesters

Easter Hill (ees-tur-hil) n. hill just south of the western part of Alemoor Loch, reaching a height of 344 m.

Easter Hislop (ees-tur-hiz-lop) n. former part of the farm of Hislop, mentioned in the 16th century and early 17th century (it is 'Eister Heislehoip' in 1572 and 'Eister Heissilhoip' in 1615).

Easter Hoose (ees-tur-hoos) n. house in Roberton that used to be the local manse.

Easter Howlands (ees-tur-how-lindz) n. old name for the area that was later called Dovemount (mentioned as early as 1511), making up a large part of Wilton east of Roughheugh, or today east of Wilton Crescent and Stirches Road. Note that the name does not signify that it is east of Howlands, but rather that it is the eastern lands (of the Langlands estate) which lie in the hollow. A 1726 charter granted Easter Howlands to William and Charles Tudhope, then it passed to John and William Sharp of Mackside in 1763 and George Haliburton in 1770, by which time it was known as Dovemount and subsequently parcelled off. In 1765 the land was valued at £25.

Easter Kirkstile (ees-tur-kirk-stīl) n. former name for the Kirkstile, to distinguish it from the formerly existing Wester Kirkstyle – 'John Bridges weaver att the easter kirkstyle had a child baptized . . . ' [PR1713].

Easter Langbaulk (ees-tur-lum-bawk) n. former farm on the 'Lumback' road. Archibald Scott was farmer there in the late 18th and early 19th centuries.

Easter Lees (ees-tur-leez) n. ??.

Easter Lilliesleaf (ees-tur-li-leez-leef) n. farm near Lilliesleaf. The mill, lands and town of 'Easter Lillislie' were listed in the service of heirs for Sir John Riddell in 1669. The farmer there in 1851 and 1861 was George Alexander (it is 'E: Lilsly' on Pont's c.1590 manuscript map and 'E. Lilsly' on Gordon's c.1650 map).

Easter Loan (ees-tur-lōn) n. one of a number of loanings leading from the main inhabited parts of Wilton Parish up to Wilton Common. It roughly followed the Cala Burn.

Easter Loch (ees-tur-loch) n. name sometimes used for Branxholme Easter Loch.

Easter Mertin's Hill (ees-tur-mer'-inz-hil) n. hill to the north of Crumhaugh Hill farm. It was the location for a view of Hawick painted by Andrew Richardson about 1835.

Easter Middle see East Middle

Easter Moormaw see Moormaw

Easter New Moss (ees-tur-new-mos) n. former name for a boggy area within Wilton Common, north of Woo Law, recorded in the description of the common in 1765.

Eastern Star (ees-tern-stawr) n. the Order of the Eastern Star, effectively a women's version of the Masons, although men can also be members. The Hawick branch started in 1911 and closed in 2002, being the last one in the Borders. The leaders were called Worthy Matron and Worthy Patron, and were typically appointed for 2 years.

Easter Parkhill (ees-tur-pawrk-hil) n. former name for a farm in the southern Bortwick valley, adjacent to Easter Park Hill. The former farm of Parkhill was at some point split into west and east parts. Andrew Chisholme paid the land tax there in 1678, when it was valued at £100. John Hume was recorded there in 1717 and Walter Scott in 1718. John Scoon was recorded as farmer in 1797, James Aitkin in 1800, Andrew Pringle in 1812 and William Miller in 1819. In the 1788 county valuation (and the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) it is listed among the possessions of William Chisholme of Chisholme, and valued at £100. In about 1874 it (as well as Easter Parkhill) is recorded being owned by William Richardson Dickson of Alton (see also Parkhill).

Easter Perk Hill (ees-tur-perk-hil) n. Easter Park Hill, hill in the southern Borthwick valley, south of Roberton village, reaching a height of 295 m, and with a peak to the north-west reaching 276 m. Nearby was the farm of Easter Parkhill.

Easter Sike (ees-tur-sīk) n. small stream that rises on Saughtree Fell and runs roughly southeasterly to join Dawston Burn to the north of Ashtree Cottage.

Easter Swanshiel (ees-tur-swan-sheel) n. former part of the farm of Swanshiel in Hobkirk Parish. It was situated on a promontory jutting into the Swanshiel Cleugh. In 1643 it was the larger part of Swanshiel, and valued at £66 13s. 4d. It was owned by a branch of the Turnbulls, then acquired by the Grieves of Easter Swanshiel in the early 18th century, before being sold and annxed to Wolfelee. Adam Turnbull was there in about 1663, when it was still valued at £66 13s 4d, and it had the same value in the 1740s. James Turnbull was there in 1694. The last occupant of the steading there was a pauper by the name of Loraine. By 1788 it was owned by Cornelius Elliot of Wolfelee and still owned by him in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1811 (it is 'eister Swanshell' in 1663 and 'Easter Suansheall' in 1694).

Easter Toll (ees-tur-tōl) n. one of Hawick's 4 toll houses, a plaque marks the site on Bourtree Place near the Conservative Club. The toll house is marked on Wood's 1824 map. George Grieve was tollkeeper in 1841.

Easter Wells (ees-tur-welz) n. former name for farm that was part of the Wells estate in Rulewater, distinct from Wester Wells.

Easter Whitehaugh (ees-tur-whī'-uf) n. former name for the lands also known as Wester Heap.

Easter Winds (ees-tur-wīndz) n. former name for lands somewhere near Dryden, Commonside etc. Distinct from 'Wester Winds', this may have been an early form of 'Weensland'. It is listed in 1686 among lands tenanted by Robert Grieve in Commonside in the ratification of the Barony of Hawick to Anna Duchess of Buccleuch.

Eastfield Mills (eest-feeld-milz) n. main premises of Blenkhorn Richardson & Co. Ltd. on Mansfield Road, opposite the footbridge. The main building, along with an engine room and a huge single-storey weaving shed, was erected in 1882/3 by Bell & Hill, Builders, with Melrose's planning most of the engineering. The frontage is in the style of a French Renaissance chateau, with an inscription 'B. R. & Co.' above one of the front windows. The main warehouse, fronting the Teviot, was 120 feet long, with free-stone from Woodburn Quarry. It was extended in 1886 to incorporate the spinning of worsted yarn, with the addition of 2 extra 2-storey structures, as well as a matching gatehouse. There was further expansion in the period 1895–1921, with enlargement of the weaving sheds and an additional office block on Rosevale Street. The mill carried on through troubled times, until it sounded its whistle for the last time in 1976. Since 1981 it has been home to a knitwear mill for Johnstons of Elgin. The large octagonal chimney, spinning sheds and engine house were all demolished. The mill is a grade B listed building. There is a piece of film of workers leaving the factory in 1909/10.

Eastfield Road (eest-feeld-rōd) n. built in 1962 in an area where Waverley Mills and part of Blenkhorn and Richardson's, Eastfield Mills had been. Some of the council flats there were demolished in 1998.

East Fodderlee (eest-fo-dur-lee) n. eastern part of the lands of Fodderlee in the lower Rule valley, lying east of West Fodderlee, and also Old Fodderlee. It was also known as 'Easter Fodderlee'. Near the bend in the road to the south are Easter Fodderlee Cottages, and a little further south is Easter Fodderlee March Wood. The owner in 1707 was Mary Kerr, when the value was £80. The lands were disponed by James Thomson to William Riddell in 1784 and then granted to John Thomson 3 years later. However, the lands are recorded being owned by George Thomson in 1788, and still in 1811 (so there may be some confusion with names). John sold them to Thomas Gregson in 1802, who sold them to Charles Kerr of Abbotrule 4 years after that. Kerr sold them to William Walker in 1815, and they passed to Walker's nephew James in 1832. However, in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls the farm is recorded being owned by George Thomson and valued at £80. In 1864 the farm was purchased by Sir William Francis Eliott of Stobs, who had plans to encourage the railway to pass through the land. James Fairbairn was farmer there in 1861 and his widow was recorded as farmer in 1868. The farm was bought by John Usher of Norton and Wells in 1895. There was probably a small threshing mill here, powered by water from a pond. A polished stone axe found there is in the Museum (formerly written 'Fotherlie' and variants; see also Fodderlee).

Eastgate (eest-gā') n. street running through the middle of Denholm, being part of the A698. It is also known as Main Street.

Eastgate Hoose (eest-gā'-hoos) n. house on the Loaning in Denholm. It was the home of the local master joiner around 1900.

East Grain (eest-grān) n. small stream in the headwaters of Twislehope Burn in the upper Hermitage valley, south of Twislehope Hope. It rises near Mid Hill joining Muckle Sike to become Deep Gill.

East Highchesters (eest-hI-ches-turz) n. former name for a smaller part of the main Highchesters estate, distinguished from West Highchesters. There were 9 'communicants' there in 1650, namely John White, Bessie Allan, Adam Noble, George Heatlie, Janet Adam, John Gavin, Robert Renwick, Helen Napier and James Scott. It was within Wilton Parish until the Parish of Roberton was formed in 1689/90. It was probably the farm within Wilton Parish owned by Robert Scott of Glack in 1678. In 1694 there were 5 separate householders recorded there. John Wilson was there in 1714–20. John Hume was there in 1736, John Scott in 1742 and Robert Scott in 1763. It was purchased from Elliot of Fenwick by the Duke of Buccleuch in about 1756. The lands were valued at £130 in 1764, as part of the Buccleuch estates. George Hart was farmer there in 1797. In 1788 and 1811 it was still part of the Buccleuch estates and valued at £130. George Hart was tenant there in at least 1797–1812 and James Hart was also living there in 1812 (also called 'Easter Highchesters', it is 'Easterhaychasters' in 1694 and 'Easter Heichester' in 1718).

East Hill (eest-hil) n. hill just to the south-east of the Note o the Gate. It reaches over 420 m (it is marked 'Easter Hill' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Easthope (eest-hōp) n. John (d.c.1899) son of a soldier, his widowed mother and sister came to the Hawick area, where they slept in the barn at Branxholme Braes. The mother died overnight and the children were taken charge of by Mr. Grieve, then raised by Nancy Ewart. He attended school in Newmill, was apprenticed as a stone mason, and taught the herds' children at Penchrise, later starting a school in Hawick. In Pigot's 1837 directory he is listed as a teacher on the Back Row, but it was also said that his private school was on the Mid Row. He wrote some articles for the Kelso Chronicle, which helped secure him a Civil Service job in London, where he rose to a high position.

eastin (ees-tin) adj., poet. east, eastern (noted by J. Leyden).

Eastla (eest-la, ees-la) adj., n., arch. the eastern part of Hawick, as opposed to the 'Wesla', i.e. the part to the East of the Slitrig, also known as 'Eastla Water'. The rivalry between the two parts of town used to be quite strong, with, for example, competing bonfires at the 'King's Ranting' in the 18th century, and a tradition for the Cornet to be elected from alternate sides. In the 18th century (as described by Robert Wilson) there used to be gangs from each side, made of youths under about 16 years old, which formed 'regiments' with drums, flags, halberds, clubs and even swords. They would battle in the 2 or 3 weeks before and after 'Fastern's Eve' (the time of the 'Baa' game), when injuries were common. They also used to have competing bonfires on July 4th, with material collected over the preceding month, and regular raids on each other's store of fuel. The rivalry survived into the Baa game of the 19th and early 20th centuries – '. . . a total of 86 deaths . . . 34 were in Eastla water, and 52 in Westla water' [JE] (cf. easla.

Eastla Witter see Eastla

Eastlea Drive (eest-lee-drīv) n. dead-end street in the north-east part of Denholm, off the main road after the Ashloaning, with construction began in the 1930s and finished after WWII. The local police station was on the corner with the Jedburgh road until it closed in 1971.

East Langlands Ludge (eest-lawng-lindz-luj, -loj) n. former gatehouse for Langlands House, now a separate dwelling, situated on Sunnyhill Road. It is dated 1880 and has picturesque detailing, including deep overhanging eaves. It was probably designed by the Edinburgh firm Kinnear & Peddie. It is a grade C listed building.

East Lees (eest-leez) n. former farm adjacent to West Lees, between Newton and Appletreehall. James Cranston was farmer there in the mid-19th century (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

East Mains (eest-mānz) n. former name for a set of lands to the east of Hawick, distinct from West Mains. The boundaries probably changed over time, but it consisted of essentially all the land to the east of the Burgh. Together these were originally part of the 'demesne' lands of the Baron. The detailed outline is shown in a survey of the lands held by the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1718. At that time it consisted of 572 acres, bounded by the Slitrig, Meikle Whitlaw, Hummelkowes, Weensland and the eastern limits of the Burgh; the enclave of Hilliesland and some smaller portions of lands were not included and the land was described as 'corn land which is indifferent good, but it lyeth very inconvenient by reason that there is so many hills and valleys in it'. A great deal of what is currently the eastern part of the town (including the Terraces, the Wellogate, Slitrig Crescent, etc.) was once part of these lands. Over time various parts were sold to the Burgh and other landowners, or incorporated into neighbouring farms, so that eventually the name 'East Mains' ceased to be used. There was a court case of 1437 where William Douglas of Drumlanrig recovered part of these lands from Janet Murray, widow of James Gledstains; they were there said to be in the demesne lands of Hawick 'commonly called le Estmaynis' and rightfully owned by the previous Sir William of Drumlanrig, including the mill with appurtenences. The lands of 'Est Manis of the Kirktoun' recorded in 1470 are probably the same as Kirkton Mains, and not the East Mains of Hawick. These are probably the 'easter dominical lands' which James Douglas, together with his wife, held in 1484 before he inherited the Barony of Hawick. They are listed as part of the lands held 'in property' by the Baron in the 1511 charter. Part of these lands are referred to as being to the north of the Trinitylands in a charter of 1557 (assuming that 'Vest manis de Hawik' is meant for 'East Mains'). The lands were included in the Baron's property in a promise of infeftment in 1559, the retour of 1572 and in the Parliamentary ratification for Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1594. It was listed among the lands of the Earl of Queensberry in Hawick Parish on the 1663 Land Tax Rolls, valued at £1120. The lands were described as having a mill, although it is unclear where this was simply Hawick Mill, or referred to another, perhaps on the Slitrig. would have been, and whether on the Teviot or Slitrig. In 1630 Drumlanrig gave a quarter of the lands to Thomas Lidderdale of the Isle (in Kirkcudbrightshire). They are described as 'extending to 19¾ husband lands' in 1675. In 1684 a piece of land called Cramptlands Croft, within East Mains, was sold by Patrick Cunningham to Alexander Hislop. In the 1686 ratification of the Barony to Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch it is listed first (supporting the idea of this as part of the demesne lands) as being 'nineteen husband lands and three fourth parts'. Also in 1686 it is recorded that a Bailie had his horse 'teathered in the common grasse upon the East Maines'. Rentals for the lands are included in the Buccleuch archives from 1690. However, it appears that some of the lands were purchased in the 1740s by the Duke of Buccleuch from John Scott and Thomas Turnbull (ex-Bailies of Hawick) and Patrick Cunningham. Improvements to the lands are mentioned in 1764. The lands of Crowbyreshaugh are recorded in a dispute of 1822 as being part of East Mains (it is 'Est Manys' in 1511 and 1514, 'Eist Manis' in 1514 and 1559, 'lie Eist-manis' in 1565/6, 'Eist Manis' in 1572, 'Eist Manys' in 1594, 'Eist Maynes' in 1615 and 'East Maynes' in 1686).

East Mains (eest-mānz) n. former name for a farm in Cavers Parish. It was presumably to the east of West Mains, and once formed part of the demesne lands of the Baron. James Douglas was there in 1716, George Dryden in 1748 and William Turnbull in 1782. George and John Dryden were there in 1784. John Ferguson was tenant in 1801, with his sons William, Thomas and Robert all on the ballot for the Militia (it is 'Cavers eastmains' in 1794).

East Mains (eest-mānz) n. former name for Knowetoonheid in Hassendean. It is referred to by this name in a 'letter of reversion' by Walter Turnbull, when it was assigned to the new Baron of Hassendean, Alexander, Lord Home in 1493/4 (and hence was originally the 'home farm' for the Baron). The name distinguished it from 'Middle Mains', which was also referred to in early times as part of Hassendean.

the East Mairch (thu-eest-mārch) n. the East Marches of Scotland coincided with the area known as the Merse, with wardenship often held by the Home family. It was also more or less the same thing as the Sheriffdom of Berwick. The English East March, more or less Northumberland, often had wardenship by the Percy's.

East Middle (eest-mi-dul) n. farm by the Honey Burn, east of Cavers. The name distinguishes it from West Middle. It was part of the estate of Douglas of Cavers, but in the Parish of Kirkton. It was owned by Douglas of Cavers in the 1643 and 1678 valuations. Andrew and William Douglas were there in the 1680s. It was part of the estate of Douglas of Cavers in 1788. It was farmed by James Turnbull in 1785, Alexander Douglas was there in 1795, Thomas Blyth was tenant in 1797, John Blyth was also living there in 1799 and Thomas Armstrong and John Hislop were servants there in 1801. The farm was a major local supplier of Leicester rams in the 19th century, with Thomas Scott Turnbull being the only local breeder of Border Leicesters in the 1840s. There were Turnbulls there in the 19th century and R. Ballantyne farmed there around 1900 (it is 'Easter Midle' in 1685; it is marked 'Easter Middle' on Stobie's 1770 map and is 'Easter Middles' in 1797).

East Middles (eest-mi-dulz) n. former farm to the south-east of Lilliesleaf. Labourers John Murray and Robert Goodfellow were there in 1799. It is only marked on maps today through the plantation East Middles Strip ('Eastermiddles' and 'Westermiddles' are marked on Stobie's 1770 map).

Easton (ees-tin) n. Adam (17th/18th C.) tenant in Greensidehall. His son Robert was baptised in Wilton Parish in 1709. Margaret (b.1715) may also be his child. Probably the same Adam was living at Overhall in 1723 and 1725, married Mary (or Marion) Turnbull in 1708, and their children included: Helen (b.1718), with mother's name given as 'Margaret' Turnbull; Anna (b.1720); Jean (b.1723); Beatrix (b.1725); Agnes (b.1728); Gideon (b.1731); and William (b.1734). The witnesses in 1723 were William and Robert Easton (possibly his father and brother) and in 1725 were John and Walter Scott. He may be the Adam who witnessed baptisms in Wilton in 1723 for Robert Wilson and in 1729 for Adam Wright in Dean Mill. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In about the 1720s he was given poor relief from the Kirk Session 'to take his son to the well', 'for wall water to his son' and 'To Mr Scott for druges for Adam Easton'. But not long afterwards, Thomas (presumably his son) was given money 'for one Chest to his Father and one to his Brother', meaning that both had died. Adam (18th C.) married Betty Chisholme in Wilton Parish in 1753. Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, perhaps living at Wiltonburn. He married Isabel Renwick in 1768 and their children included: Agnes (b.1770); and Thomas (b.1772). The witnesses in 1770 were Thomas (perhaps his father) and Thomas Hoy. He could be the Adam who (along with George) was recorded owning part of Roughheugh in 1788 (valued at £11 8s 8d), and still recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. Adam (18th/19th C.) resident of Oxnam Parish. In 1791 he married Isobel Helm, who was from Cavers. In 1792 he was at Shiplaw Corse when his son Robert was baptised in Cavers Parish. He may be the Adam from the Hawick area who emigrated to America in 1823. Adam (b.1783) son of Andrew and Margaret Kedie, he was farmer at Overhall. In 1851 he was farming 62 acres and in 1861 he was a widower farming 60 acres. In 1814 he married Janet, daughter of John Michie from Old Northhouse, the marriage recorded in both Wilton and Cavers. Their children included: Isabella (b.1815), who probably married mason James Scott; Margaret (b.1817); Andrew (b.1819); William (b.1821); Robert (b.1824); John (b.1826); George (b.1828); Christian (b.1830); and Helen (b.1833). Agnes (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who received poor money from the Session in 1706. Alexander (18th/19th C.) resident of Twislehope in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border'. He is probably the shepherd at Broadleehope listed among heads of households in 1835–37 and Broadlee 1838–40. He may be the Alexander, married to Jean Kyle (daughter of Andrew Kyle and Jean Murray), whose children, born in Castleton Parish, included: William (b.1822); Andrew (b.1824); Jane (b.1826), who married Walter Gledstains; Alex (b.1828); Robert (b.1834); James (b.1835); Isabel (b.1836); and Elizabeth (b.1838). This family emigrated to Ontario, Canada in 1840. He left around the same time as the other Alexander, who was surely related. Alexander (18th/19th C.) shepherd in Castleton Parish. He was listed among heads of households for the first time in 1836, when he was at Whithaugh. He was at Bellshiels in 1838 and 1840, and emigrated to America about that time. He was surely related to the other shepherd Alexander. Andrew (17th C.) recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude's Fair. He could be the Andrew, married to Helen Swan, whose son Stephen was born in 1671. Andrew (18th C.) mason in Hawick. The death of one is his children is recorded in 1782. He could be the Andrew who married Margaret Kedzie in 1771, with children including Robert (b.1773), George (b.1775), Thomas (b.1777), Agnes (b.1779), an unnamed child (b.1782), Adam (b.1783), Christian (b.1786) and Andrew (b.1789). Andrew (1743–1820s) tenant farmer at Overhall, son of Robert and Christian Murray. He was recorded as farmer at Overhall in 1797, with Thomas also listed there. He owned some property in Edinburgh and would go there for a couple of days a year to collect the rent. On one such occasion he returned early to find his daughter Christian holding a party. Being a strict and disapproving man, he said nothing until leaving the next time, when he told her 'Kirsten, if you're going to again have a party, you'd better have it a day earlier', and so no party was held again. In 1771 he married Mary (or Margaret) Kedzie, who died in 1809, aged 63. Their children included: Robert (b.1773), who became a minister in Montreal; George

(b.1775); Thomas (b.1777); Agnes (b.1779); an unnamed child (b.1782); Adam (b.1783); Christian (b.1786); and Andrew (b.1789). It is said that his wife was excommunicated from East Bank Kirk for attending the service of a minister she knew who was preaching at a neighbouring church, and so the family moved to the Green (Anti-Burgher) Kirk. Andrew (b.1805/6) born in Roberton Parish, son of George. He was farmer at Easter Alemoor and then Todrig. He was farmer at Alemoor, according to an electoral roll of 1837. In 1841 he was at Easter Alemoor. In 1851 he was at Todrig, farming 1376 acres, 46 of which were arable and in 1861 he was farming 1400 acres and employing 3 labourers. His wife was Isabella. Colin (1956/7–) attended Burnfoot and the high Schools, where he started playing rugby, settling after a while into the position of full back. After school he played for the P.S.A., being Captain in 1974/5, before moving to the Trades. He first played for Hawick R.F.C. at the age of 18 and eventually played 199 games for the Greens. He was a regular member of the team that won 4 titles in the early 1980s. He was Captain in 1986/7. He worked for the Fire Brigade. He married Elaine and they live in Hawick. Francis (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Betty Scott iin 1766 and their children included Robert (b.1767). Francis (1758/9–1829) gardener in Hawick. He was probably son of Overhall farmer Thomas (since they were recorded on the same headstone). He is probably the Francis who was recorded as a gardener at Minto in 1778 and 1779, as well as at Roberton (for the minister James Erskine) in 1779. He may be the same Francis who was gardener at Stobs in 1794 and 1797. He married Elizabeth Ormiston, who died in Hawick in 1833, aged 53. Francis (19th C.) married Betty Ormiston in Wilton in 1823. George (16th C.) recorded in 1539 as a subtenant of Margaret Falside and Walter Scott in their lands in either Ashkirk or Falside. He may be related to John and Peter, who were also listed. George (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as former occupier (along with Richard Brown) of Salenside Croft and 'Skakriggis'. These same lands were then assigned to John Scott in Kirkhouses by Walter Scott of Ashkirk. George (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1693 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. He came right after William, to whom he was presumably related. George (17th/18th C.) servant to William Henderson in Clarilaw. His children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included: Margaret (b.1702); and Helen (b.1709). George (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was recorded s tenant in Woll in 1715 and 1717. He married Bessie Murray and their children included William (b.1705), James (b.1708), John (b.1713), Agnes (b.1715) and Margaret (b.1717). George (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Tait and their children included John (b.1733). George (18th C.) paid the cart tax in Lilliesleaf in 1787. He may be the 'younger mason' recorded in Lilliesleaf in 1790 when he was involved in a dispute over an unpaid bill in Selkirk. Probably the same George is recorded in a letter to a Selkirk lawyer in 1791. George (18th C.) married Margaret King in Wilton in 1767. George (18th/19th C.) recorded in 1788 as owner of part of Roughheugh, along with Adam. They were still recorded as owners on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. It is unclear how he was related to Adam, or the other Eastons. George (1785–1875) born at Upper Glendivan in the Ewes valley. He was recorded as a roadman at Glendivan in the 1841 census. He moved to Edinburgh and became an agent of the Scottish Temperance League, who talked all over Scotland about abstinence and sobriety. In 1834 he married Mary Hetherington. Their children included James, Douglas and Margaret. His autobiography was published in 1869. George (b.c.1775) tenant farmer at Easter Alemoor, according to the 1812 ballot for the Militia in Roberton Parish. He was at Easter Alemoor in 1841 with his son Andrew. He is probably the resident at Borthwickshiels who subscribed to Andrew Scott's book of poetry, printed in Kelso in 1811. He married Elizabeth Brack and their children included: Andrew (b.1805); George (b.1809); and Margaret (b.c.1810). George (b.c.1810) son of William. He was a hairdresser in Hawick, who was an early Trustee and deacon of St. George's Kirk. On the 1861 census he is listed at 1 High Street. In 1867 he was at Market Place when he donated to the Museum 'Copies of the Town Treasurer's Printed Abstracts from 1826 to 1834'. He married Elizabeth Jane (b.c.1828), daughter of William Scott, and sister of Sir James A.H. Murray's first wife. Their children included: William, local songwriter; Robina Ann; James D.; and Elizabeth D. George (19th C.) farmer at Fenwick, recorded on the 1834 electoral roll as a tenant, with lands acquired from William Turnbull of Fenwick. George (19th C.) married Betty Davidson in Wilton in 1835. Gideon (18th C.) wright in Hawick. In 1765 he witnessed a baptism for Gideon

Scott in Hawick Parish. He married Janet Irvine in Hawick in 1763 and their children included: Margaret (b.1766); Elizabeth (b.1768); and Janet (b.1771). Witnesses to the 1766 baptism were butcher Thomas Waugh and smith Robert Telfer. He could be the Gideon, son of Adam and Mary Turnbull, born in Wilton in 1731. He may have earlier married Margaret Laidlaw in 1758. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His children included Isobel (b.1632), Margaret (b.1633), Robert (b.1635) and Marion (b.1639). The witnesses in 1652 were M... Scott and William .... James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included: George (b.1650); John (b.1652), William (b.1657); Thomas (b.1658); and Robert (b.1661). Agnes (b.1647) and Bessie (b.1648), with no mother's name given, are probably also his children. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Johnstone in 1656. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was tenant at Westerhouses in 1709. His children included: Margaret (b.1707); William (b.1709); Janet (b.1711); and John (b.1714). It is possible he is the same man as James in West Burnfoot. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at West Burnfoot in 1722 and Alton in 1729. He married Bessie Scott and their children included: Jean (b.1716); Helen (b.1719); Robert (b.1722); and Adam (b.1729). The witnesses in 1722 were William and Walter Scott (who may have been related to his wife) and in 1729 were James Dryden and Thomas Irvine. He could be the James recorded as an elder of Wilton Parish in 1711. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Heap in 1725. He married Isobel Aitken (probably in 1714, although no wife's name is given) and their children included: Anne (b.1716); Isobel (b.1720); Agnes (b.1723); and Robert (b.1725). He is probably the James who (along with Robert) witnessed a baptism in 1725 for James Smith, also resident at Heap. James (17th/18th C.) resident of 'Geamscleugh' (i.e. Gamescleuch) in Ettrick Parish in 1716 when his son William was baptised in Roberton Parish. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Janet Scott and their son James was baptised in 1764, with witnesses John Anderson and James Hogg. He may be the James who in 1765 witnessed a baptism for Robert (perhaps his brother). James (1739/40–95) tenant at Broom, which must have been in Rulewater or nearby. He was recorded on a tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard, along with his son William and an unnamed daughter. James (18th C.) married Agnes Sanderson in Hawick in 1758. It is possible that they had a son James in the 1770s (the entry being hard to read). James (18th C.) resident of Branxholme. He married Betty Cook and their children, baptised in Hawick, were Isabel (b.1774) and Mary (b.1779). The witnesses in 1774 were James Roger and William Mitchellhill. James (18th/19th C.) carter in Lilliesleaf. He married Agnes Thomson and their children included: George (b.1790); Isobel (b.1792); James (b.1794); Maney and Agnes (b.1796); and Thomas (b.1799). He is also recorded in Selkirk (in the Walter Mason Collection) in a dispute over an unpaid bill. Probably the same James, resident of Lilliesleaf, is recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is probably the James who owned land in Lilliesleaf in 1788 (still recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls), valued at £26 13s 4d, which was among those owned by Sprot of Riddell in about 1874. James (18th/19th C.) tailor on the High Street, listed in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. James (18th/19th C.) listed as a wright in Wilton on Pigot's 1837 directory. He could be the James born to Andrew and Margaret Kedie in Wilton in 1782. James (19th C.) married Harriet Rutherford in Lilliesleaf in 1823. James (19th C.) married Margaret Henderson in Southdean in 1829. John (16th C.) recorded in 1539 as a subtenant of Margaret Falside and Walter Scott in their lands in either Ashkirk or Falside. He may be related to George and Peter, who were also listed. John (17th C.) recorded in 1581 as former occupier of a 'husbandland with onset, toft and croft' in Ashkirk, later wadset by Walter Scott of Ashkirk to John Scott in Kirkhouses. John (17th C.) tenant at Salenside in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Drinkstone in 1698 when his daughter Helen was baptised. The witnesses were Robert Scott in Drinkstone and Robert Scott of Tandlaw. John (d.bef. 1691) resident of Ashkirk. He married Blanch Bell and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1691. His wife was recorded as his widow at the baptism, with witnesses Robert and John Easton (who were probably related to him). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk who married Isobel Helm and had children Isabel (b.1690), William (b.1692) and Elizabeth (b.1696). The witnesses in 1690 were William and John Scott. He may be the John who (along with Robert, also married to a Helm) witnessed a posthumous baptism for another John in

1691. John (17th/18th C.) resident in Ashkirk listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694, distinct from the James in Salenside. In 1698 he was recorded as tenant in Ashkirk. He married Janet Easton and had children Agnes (b.1695), Robert (b.1698), George (b.1699), Isobel (b.1702), William (b.1704), John (b.1707), Thomas (b.1709) and Robert (b.1715), all baptised in Ashkirk. John (17th/18th C.) resident in Ashkirk Parish. In 1710 he was 'Elder tenant in Askirk'. He married Bessie Leithead and their children included Janet (b.1706) and Agnes (b.1709). John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Galalaw in 1723. In 1724 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Veitch in Galalaw. He married Isobel Learmonth, recorded in Roberton Parish in 1713 (and perhaps the same marriage recorded in Wilton in 1714, with no wife's name given). Their children included Robert (b.1716), John (b.1718), Isobel (b.1720), Margaret (b.1723) and Agnes (b.1726). William (b.1715), with no mother's name given, may also be his child. The witnesses in 1723 were Robert Taylor and John Scott. John (18th C.) married Margaret Easton in Wilton in 1741. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Dunn and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1746. John (18th C.) married Agnes Brown in Wilton in 1769. John (18th C.) from the Damside family. He married Euphan Douglas. Their daughter Rachel married Merrylaw farmer William Goodfellow in 1773. The 84 year old Euphan who was recorded as 'Independent' on Underdamside in 1841 could be his daughter. John (18th C.) recorded as a hairdresser in Hawick on the 1799 ballot for the Militia. He was a barber in Hawick when the death of his wife (name not given) was recorded in 1805. He is probably the John who married Jane Hutton and had children William (b.1798) and George (b.1802). John (18th/19th C.) probable name for labourer at Hobkirkstile according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799 (the name is hard to read). John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He had children William (b.1806) and Ann (b.1808) baptised in Hobkirk. John (18th/19th C.) wright on Damside, recorded on Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He could be the John who married Margaret Turnbull in Wilton in 1797. John (19th C.) married Janet Henry in Wilton in 1832. Peter (16th C.) recorded in 1539 as a subtenant of Margaret Falside and Walter Scott in their lands in either Ashkirk or Falside. He may be related to George and John, who were also listed. Robert (17th C.) resident in Ashkirk listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He may be the Robert who married Isobel Helm and had a son James (b.1690), with witnesses Robert Scott and John .... He may also be the Robert who married Margaret Henderson and had a daughter Margaret (b.1698). He could be the Robert who (along with John) witnessed a posthumous baptism in 1691 for another John. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Teindside. He is buried in Wilton Old Churchyard, but some of the dates were unreadable. Robert (17th C.) resident at Wester Heap according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. He was 'in Heip' when said to be one of 2 witnesses who walked and described the boundaries of Wilton Common in the 1690s. He was recorded as 'an old man, who then lived in Hiep' in about 1705 when he was part of a group of men who perambulated the boundaries of Wilton Common, presumably to settle some dispute. This was recounted by Hector Cockburn in 1764. Robert (17th/18th C.) described as 'in Todshaw' in 1696 when he leased the lands of Todshaw for 5 years from Gideon Scott of Highchester. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Anna 'Kair' in Wilton in 1708. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes 'Steward' and their children included Robert (b.1708). Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Cavers and their children included Robert (b.1717) and William (b.1719). Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Greensidehall in 1725. He may be the Robert who witnessed baptisms in Wilton in 1722 (along with William) for Thomas Liddell, in 1723 (along with William) for Adam Easton and in 1733 for William Goodfellow. He married Margaret Scott, the marriage probably being the one recorded in 1715 (with no wife's name given). Their children included Margaret (b.1718), Helen (b.1720), Robert (b.1722), Anna (b.1725), Isobel (b.1728) and Francie (b.1730). The witnesses in 1725 were John and Walter Scott. He may be the Robert who (along with James) witnessed a baptism for James smith in Wilton in 1725. He may also be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for William, resident of Heap, in 1733. Robert (b.1706/7) son of William, who was tenant in Brieryyards. He was resident of Langlands Burn in 1764 when he gave evidence at the court proceedings for the division of Wilton Common. He said he 'was born in the parish of Wilton, and was never out from it, but half a year, all his life'. He was 'in Langlands-dean' in 1764 when listed among the men selected to perambulate the boundaries of Wilton Common and was also recorded being 'in Appletreehall' when he was a witness in 1764. He is probably the Robert who was living at Clarilaw in 1737, Borthaugh in 1742 and Clarilaw again in 1744, who married Jean Dodds in 1736 and had children including: William (b.1737); Helen (b.1739); Thomas (b.1742); and Mary (b.1744). The witnesses in 1737 were Andrew Martin and William Gray, in 1742 were George Hart and William Turnbull and in 1744 were James Dodds (probably related to his wife) and James Dryden. Robert (1702/3–91) farmer at Overhall, probably older brother of Thomas, who also farmed there. He was at Overhall in 1739, but by 1746 was living at Calaburn. He is probably the Robert who witnessed baptisms in Wilton for Adam Cuthbert (in Langlands) in 1742, William Scott (in Whitfield) in 1743, Archibald Turnbull in 1759, for John Scott (in Lees) in 1764 and for Robert Oliver in 1770. He married Christian Murray (who was from Galashiels) in Wilton in 1735, and she died at Pathhead, aged 82. Their children included: Isobel (b.1736); Andrew (b.1739); Mary (b.1740); Andrew (again, b.1743), who also farmed at Overhall; Adam (b.1746); Thomas (b.1748); and Christian (b.1750). The witnesses in 1739 were James Scott and John Lockie, in 1746 were James Robertson and John Murray and in 1748 were Walter Scott and George Lamb. Robert (18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. He married Margaret Dickson in 1754 and their children included an unnamed child (b.1755), John (b.1757) and Andrew (b.1758). Robert (d.1778) resident of Hawick Parish. His death record lists him as 'An old Man', suggesting he had no family at that time. Robert (18th C.) builder who was paid in 1751, along with Robert Oliver and their workmen, for work on the new Teviot Brig. This was explicitly for 'helping the far pillar of the bridgem and 12 drains'. He may be the Robert who married Christian Scott in Hawick in 1752. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Dickson and their children included: James (1763); and James (again, b.1765). The witnesses in 1763 were cooper Alexander Scott and church officer Alexander Bunyan, and in 1765 were James (probably his father or brother) and Alex Bunyan. Elizabeth (b.1760), with no mother's name given, was probably also his child. Robert (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included: Adam (b.1767); and William (b.1768). Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Easton and their children included Helen (b.1771). Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His daugher Tibby was baptised in 1773. Robert (1749–1823) land surveyor of Jedburgh, only son of William of Rankend and Isobel Bridges of Maxton. He was said to be a 'self taught student of natural science, chiefly astronomy and mathematics'. He was a regular visitor of James Veitch at Inchbonny. He married Mary, elder daughter of George Douglas (from the Timpendean family), tenant of Howden, and Agnes Oliver from Dykeraw. His wife survived 'nearly all their family'. Their children were: William, who died in childhood; Jane, who died young; Betty, also died young; Agnes (1784/5–1856), who died unmarried; Isabella, who married William Mattewson and died in Greenlaw; Mary, last of the family, who died in Edinburgh, aged 84; Esther (1789/90–1839), who married John Tinlin; Jean (1793/4–1865), unmarried. A memorial stone was erected to the family in Jedburgh Abbey cemetery. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Betty Easton and their children included Francis (b.1790). Robert (18th/19th C.) married Janet Young in Wilton Parish in 1796. Rev. Robert (1773–1831) son of William and Nelly Thomson, he was baptised in Selkirk. His father was a gardener and he was the eldest of 4 children. However, there is an alternative suggestion that he was eldest son of Andrew, farmer at Overhall. He attended Hawick grammar school, then Edinburgh University. He was licensed as a Burgher minister in 1793 and ordained at Morpeth in 1798. Along with 5 other clergymen he emigrated to New York in 1802 and moved to Montreal in 1804. He ministered privately to Presbyterians there and then helped found St. Peter's Street Presbyterian Church (also known as St. Andrew's), Montreal. In 1818 he helped set up the Presbytery of the Canadas. He also worked with the British and Foreign Bible Society. With his eyesight failing, he retired in 1824. He married Mary Beattie and they had 4 children, 2 of whom died in infancy. He had sermons published in 1815 and 1816. Robert (b.c.1770s) servant at Ashybank according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. He may be the Robert, son of Robert, baptised in Cavers in 1777. Robert (b.1797/8) weaver in Hawick, son of William, who was from Southdean Parish. He was living with his father on Bourtree Place in 1841 and 1851. On the 1861 census he was at 2 Bourtree Place, living with his sister Isabella and described as 'Woollen

Weaver & Chelsea Pens'. This suggests that he spent some time in the army. Stuart (1983–) born and educated in Hawick, he became a motorbike racer. He was British Supersport Champion in 2002. He has ridden for Ducati, Kawasaki and Honda. He suffered a serious crash during practice in 2011. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Anne Easton and their son Adam was baptised in 1745. Probably the same Adam, married to 'Margaret' Easton, had a daughter Margaret baptised in Wilton in 1742. It is possible that he is the Thomas who was given money by the Hawick Kirk Session in about the 1720s to pay for coffins for his father Adam and his brother. Thomas (d.1800) farmer at Overhall, probably younger brother of Robert, who also farmed there. He appears to be at Crumhaugh in 1742. He was recorded at Overhall in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls; Andrew is also listed there, who was probably his nephew. His wife Margaret Easton (apparently the same surname) died in 1777, aged 50; this was at Whitehillbrae (part of Dodburn farm), suggesting he earlier farmed there. Their children included: Margaret (1742–67); Mary (1746/7–65); Robert (1762/3–98); and Gideon, who died in infancy. The family are buried in Wilton Old Churchyard. Hawick gardener Francis may have been another son (since he was recorded on the back of the same headstone). The witnesses to the 1742 baptism were Walter Scott and another Thomas Easton. Thomas (b.1770s) stockingmaker recorded in 1797 among Hawick men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish' and he was still listed in 1801. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at West Groundistone. His daughter Mary died in 1811. Thomas (1780/1–1846) precentor of the West-end Church, who ran a school for teaching English and Music on Silver Street in the early 19th century. He is recorded there in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. His school later moved to the Fleece Inn Ballroom (presumably the High Street location where he was recorded in Pigot's 1837 directory), and it was here in 1838 that the meeting took place to organise the opening of the Chartist Store. He only taught reading, writing and counting, with Saturday morning lessons consisting entirely of reading the Bible and the Shorter Catechism. On Saturday afternoons he went round the district cleaning clocks, often accompanied by a pupil of mechanical bent. He also held singing classes in the evenings. He is listed on Tannage Close in 1841, with his wife Margaret. Thomas (b.1787/8) born in Selkirk, he was gardener at Chisholme. He was listed at Chisholme in 1841, 1851 and 1861. He married Anne Lumsden in Roberton Parish in 1917 and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1818); Helen (b.1820); Robert (b.1822); Charles (b.1823); Isabella (b.1826); William (b.1827); and John (b.1839). Thomas (19th C.) married Mary Waldie in 1826, the marriage being recorded in both Wilton and Lilliesleaf Parishes. Thomas (19th C.) married Mary Wilson in Wilton Parish in 1832. Thomas (b.1817/8) from Minto Parish, he was a 'Dresser of Woollen Hosiery' on the Back Row in 1851. In 1861 he was a hosiery warehouseman living at 1 Teviot Place. He is probably the warehouseman who in 1875 donated to the Museum '2 Seals' paws' and 'portion of French vessel sunk in Montrose habour during the Civil war 1745'. He married Jessie Linton in Hawick in 1842. Their children included Margaret (b.1843), James (b.1845) and Thomas (b.1854). William (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1693 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. George appears right after him on the list, and so was probably closely related. He is probably the William who married Isobel Dodds and whose children (baptised in Ashkirk) include a son 'Betreck' (b.1697) and another son William (b.1690). The witnesses in 1690 were James Veitch and George Scott. In 1690 he (along with George Scott) in turn witnessed a baptism for James Veitch. He also witnessed baptisms (along with James Veitch) in 1691 for John Tait and for Robert Turnbull. William (17th/18th C.) farmer in Wilton Parish. He lived at 'Mirmaw' (i.e. Moormaw) and then was tenant in Brieryyards for 18 years, until about 1745. He was simultaneously tenant in 'Calf-faulds' (i.e. Cawfaulds) for 3 or 4 years. His children included: Robert (b.1707), who lived in Appletreehall; Thomas (b.1710); William (b.1711); and Margaret (b.1713). William (17th/18th C.) listed as resident at Heap in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His daughter Agnes married Walter Hall (from Jedburgh) in 1713. He may be the William who (along with Robert) witnessed baptisms in Wilton in 1723 for Thomas Liddell and for Adam Easton (perhaps his son) and in 1724 for Andrew Martin at Clarilaw and James Young at West Burnfoot. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Helen Stavert in Roberton in 1716 and their children included Helen (b.1716) and Mary (b.1718). William (18th C.) cottar in Castleside in Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Smail and their children included: Margaret (b.1719); Isobel (b.1722); Helen (b.1724); George (b.1726); and Isobel (again, b.1728). William (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1727 he married Jean Scott and their children included an unnamed son (b.1727) and William (b.1731). William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Heap in 1733. He was probably related to the earlier William who was at Heap. He married Margaret Scott in 1732, the marriage being recorded in both Roberton and Wilton Parishes. Their children included: James (b.1733); Robert (b.1735); and Bessie (b.1736). The witnesses in 1733 were Andrew Drummond and Robert Easton (who was surely related). William (18th C.) Schoolmaster in Ewes Parish. In Edinburgh in 1739 he married Margaret, daughter of Walter Turnbull, Schoolmaster at Hawick. Their children, baptised in Ewes, included: Christian (b.1740); William (b.1742); Walter (b.1743); Elizabeth (b.1748); and Margaret (b.1751). William (18th C.) married Margaret Neil in Ashkirk Parish in 1743. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Jean Cowan and their children included Mary (b.1750) and Elizabeth (b.1752). William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Betty Wilson and their children included George (b.1757). Perhaps the same William married 'Barborow' Wilson in Wilton Parish in 1762. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Wiltonburn in 1759. He married Janet (or Jean) Scott in 1758 and their children included Jean (b.1759) and Elizaebth (b.1762). The witnesses in 1759 were Walter and Robert Scott. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: Margaret (b.1773); and Joanna (b.1777). William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1769 he married Violet Lorraine. Perhaps the same Violet Lorraine married Walter Turnbull in Hawick Parish in 1771 (in which case he must have been deceased). William (18th C.) married Elspeth Rutherford in Bedrule Parish in 1782. William (b.1768) son of Robert, he was born in Southdean Parish. He was probably the William recorded as gardener at Greenriver (working for James Chisholme) in 1797. He was a gardener at Greenriver in 1801 when his son John was listed on the Militia ballot (unless there is another generation, he must have been quite young when he had this son). He later lived in Hawick, where he worked as an agricultural labourer. He lived on Bourtree Place in 1841 and was described as a retired gardener in 1851. His children included: John (b.c.1780); Robert (b.1807/8), weaver and 'Chelsea Pensioner'; Margaret; and Isabel (b.1818/9). William (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Smith. Their children (baptised in Hawick) included: Janet (b.1795); Joseph (b.1797); Margaret (b.1798); Elizabeth (b.1800); George (b.1804); and Adam (b.1806). The witnesses in 1795 were James Winthrope and Thomas Huggan, and in 1797 were Joseph Caverhill and James Scott. William (b.1783/4) barber in Hawick, born in Ancrum. He is recorded as a hairdresser on the High Street on Pigot's 1825/6 directory, as well as a a fishing tackle maker. He is listed in the 1834 electoral roll along with his son George as a joint proprietor. In 1837 he was listed as a High Street hairdresser, as well as a fishing-tackle maker. He is still listed as a High Street hairdresser in Slater's 1852 directory, as well as a toy dealer and fishing-tackle maker. He lived at about 2 High Street according to the 1841 and 1851 censuses. By 1861 his widow was living with his son George and family at No. 2 High Street. He married Elizabeth Richardson and their children included: an unnamed child (d.1809); George (b.c.1810), who took over the business; Catherine (b.1815); John; William (b.1822); and James (b.1824). William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included Mary (b.1818), James (b.1820), William (b.1823), Christian (b.1824), Margaret (b.1826), Euphemia (b.1828) and Robert (b.1830). William (18th/19th C.) earthenware dealer of the High Street, recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. In 1837 he is recorded as simply a 'dealer' on the High Street. This could be the same man as the hairdresser. William Scott (1853–1877) son of hairdresser George and Elizabeth Jane Scott. He was related on his mother's side to local poet William Scott. He was well known for writing satirical rhymes and doggerel, leaving us with the familiar 'Kinly Stick' and 'The Anvil Crew', as well as 'Run Them In'. Robert Murray says that 'his best pieces are now lost, never having been committed to paper'. He was Bard of Masonic Lodge St. John 111, but could not have lived long in that position. He died tragically at age 23 in a shooting accident when training with the Volunteers. He had apparently stood in to replace someone else as a marker during practice at the Whitlaw Range near Hummelknowes. A poem 'Alane', found in his private notebook, was published after his death, but essentially nothing else survives (formerly spelled 'Easten', 'Eastoun', 'Eastoune', 'Eiston', 'Eistone', 'Eistonne', 'Eistoun', 'Esten', etc.).

east o the gate (eest-ō-thu-gā') adv., arch. in an easterly direction, eastwards – 'Here's Tib the Virgin and Virgin Kate, Here's baith Robbie and Babbie the Cow; Auld Chairlie Hardie gangs east o' the gate, While Dunnerum danders ower the knowe' [HI] (also 'east the gate').

East Port (eest-pōr') n. old entrance to the town, situated roughly opposite Baker Street, corresponding to the modern 74 High Street. It was removed in the mid-18th century. An entry in the Town Treasurer's Book for 1751 states that a tanner is paid 'for lime to the East Port Cross', which is the only mention of the possibility of a 'cross' being there (but may be an error). The port is marked on Wood's 1824 map. This once marked the beginning of the road out of town along Bourtree Place towards Jedburgh. A plaque was erected by the Callants' Club beside the Waverley Bar (78 High Street) in 1964. The place was formerly used to distinguish among families of the same name that lived in different parts of the Town, e.g. 'Walter Scott at the Eist-port, Robert Deannes, thair' in 1638 – '... Bailie Scott and Thomas Hardie from Wm. Dickson's house to ye East Port on both sides of ye toun' [PR1722].

East Spittal Road (eest-spi'-ul-rōd) n. former name for a road in Minto Parish. A 'Haugh be-East Spittal Road' was listed in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811.

East Stewart Place (eest-stew-ur'-plis) n. street off Wilton Hill in the area known as Stewartfield, built in 1886, and named after Rev. James Stewart.

East Teviotdale (eest-teev-yi'-dāl) n. name used to refer to lands owned by Melrose Abbey in the 15th and 16th century. They were among a list of lands to which the Scotts of Buccleuch were appointed as bailie. It is unclear precisely the location and extent of the lands so-named (it is 'Esttywidail' in 1519, 'Esttywidail' in 1524, 'Esteywidail' in 1524 and 'Est Teuidaill land' in 1553/4).

east the (eest-thu) adv., arch. towards the east, 'east of the' – '... differing ten minutes or so from its modern sister east the street' [WNK] (this was formerly a common expression).

East-the-witter (eest-thu-wi'-ur) adj., arch. another form of Easla or Eastla water, i.e. referring to the part of Hawick on the eastern side of the Slitrig – 'By cash for stent collected east the Water of Slitrig, ... 3 8 8' [BR1761], 'As soon as public worship began, the elders started on their quest, two being appointed for 'east-the-water' and two for 'west-the-water'' [JJV] (cf. West-the-witter).

East Whitehaugh (eest-whī'-af) n. former farm in the hills behind Wilton, once also known as Wester Heap.

easy (ee-zee) adv. easily – 'We were that easy pleased when we were bairns ...' [WL].

easy-osie (ee-zee-ō-zee) adj. easy-going, flexible, insouciant, unconcerned about a choice – 'A'll take either yin, A'm easy-ozie' (also written 'easy-osy' and 'easy-ozie'; an example of 'rhyming reduplication').

eat (ee') pp., arch. eaten – '... so that this strip of the common is eat along with the two contiguous head-rooms' [DCW1765], '... any pasture that was on the back side of the common was so much eat up, that his gear could not fend on it' [DCW1765] (see also et and etten).

eatche (eech) n., arch. an adze.

eatin-hoose (ee'-in-hoos) n. an eating-house – 'There was a snod bit leikely-leike eateen-hoose, nerr bye ...' [ECS].

ebber (e-bur) adj., poet. shallower – 'The good apostle's whisky cask, Would grow but little ebber' [JR].

ebbit (e-bi') interj., arch. yes but, literally 'aye, but' or 'ah, but' – 'Ehhbit NA!! Nehh!' [ECS], 'Eh, bit gaun back teh 1707 an oo find that yin o' the toon's twae bailies was a Rob Broon ...' [BW1979] (also written 'eh, bit' and variants).

Eben (e-bin) n. short form of 'Ebenezer', occasionally used in Hawick in the 18th and 19th centuries.

Ecclefechan (e-kul-fe-kin) n. town in Annandale, off the M74, birthplace of Thomas Carlyle at the Arched House, built by his father and uncle in 1795. The nearby Hoddom Castle was a Maxwell stronghold. Population 857 (1991) (named after the church of St. Fechin).

Eccles (e-kulz) n. village north-east of Kelso, in Berwickshire, also being the name for the associated parish. The village contains the ruins of St. Mary's Priory, burned by Hertford in 1545. The mansion house there dates from 1898, replacing an earlier house. Surviving estate buildings include a clock tower, dovecote and lodged gateway (the origin is probably from 'church', since there are the remains of a Cistercian Convent there; it is 'Ekkils' on Blaeu's c.1654 map).

Eccles Hoose (e-kulz-hoos) n. large house near Kelso, built 1895–8 in a Scottish 17th century revivial style.

echt (echt, ech') n., arch. eight – 'Hoo sic bits o' eggshells could haud echt full-grown men, Is a thing that aw never can yet comprehen' ' [BM1900], 'A gaed ti bed at neine an A sleepeet on till echt, gey nerr the clock roond . . . ' [ECS], 'The daily wumman had arrived at Sharp's hoose as usual, at echt in the morning . . . ' [DH], 'Is my clock an echt-day or a thirty-hour movement?' [DH], 'Echt days, ech' days, a week (ago): 'this time (or day) echt days' ' [GW], an eighth (this was once the common pronunciation; cf. aicht, aucht, aeight and eit).

echty (ech-tee) n., arch. eighty – 'He throve frae seeventeen-fifty-five And leeved to be echty-yin' [DH] (also eity, eichty and aeighty).

Eckford (ek-furd) n. village about 5 miles east of Jedburgh, and also the name for the surrounding parish, containing the villages of Eckford, Cessford and Caverton. The lands were granted to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1450 and erected into a barony in the following year. They remained part of the lands of the Scotts of Buccleuch through the 17th century. The lands were valued at £20 in 1574, and along with Lanton were held 'by the service of ward and relief'. The lands were given in liferent to Margaret Ker when she married Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1586. The lands were included in the main Barony of Branxholme according to the services of heirs in 1634, 1653 and 1661, and the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. The Barony was coupled with the lands of Hawick and Lempitlaw in the rental records of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1692, when set to Sir Patrick Scott. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Buccleuch properties. The village was burned during the 'Rough Wooing' of 1544/5. The church dates from 1771, with some earlier fragments; it closed in 2006 and is now privately owned. There is an existing communion token from 1696. The graveyard contins a Mort-house for guards to look out for grave robbers. The parish united with Crailing in 1977 and became part of Ale and Teviot United Church in 2004. The village has a community hall, built in 1930. The bridge at Eckford Mill was built in the 1690s (the origin of the name is probably 'Ecca's Ford', from the Old English personal name; it first appears as 'Eckeford' about 1200 and was 'Eckfoord', 'Ekfurd', 'Ekfurde', 'Eskfuird', 'Hecfurd', and other variants).

Eckford (ek-furd) n. Andrew George John Nichol 'A.N.' (b.1851), son of John. He carried on his father's grocer and spirit merchant business at 21 High Street, which lasted until at least the 1950s. The Museum has a stone bottle labelled 'Andrew Eckford's celebrated nourishing stout, 21 High Street, est. 1838'. Archibald (18th C.) resident of Southdean. His children included James (b.1758); and John (b.1768). James (19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Eliza Paterson and their children included Peter (b.1853). John 'Johnny' (c.1770–1843) stocking-maker in Hawick. He was described thus (in an article by Alexander Michie in 1872): 'a quiet inoffensive man of plodding habits and taciturn disposition. Dressed in a short tailed blue coat and knee breeches, his legs encased in coarse blue stockings, a low crowned broad brimmed hat on his head, his short thick body bent forward as if pressing in advance of his legs, while the firm way he planted his feet on the ground bespoke of a decided determination of character indicative of the man'. He married Jean, daughter of John Anderson, tenant at Newton in Wilton Parish, and she died in 1829. His wife was descended from Helen Lithgow, sister of Rev. Robert, minister of Ashkirk. Through her he claimed the residue of the estate of John Lithgow, who had made a fortune while serving in India. He devoted his life to trying to prove his right to the fortune, travelling widely to see headstones and interview people, and becoming known to the law courts in London, as well as to Sir Walter Scott, the Earl of Minto and others. He would work on a stocking-frame for several months and at some point say to his colleagues 'Am gaun up by, callants', and make his way south to the capital. At one point he even travelled across the Atlantic to visit New Orleans. He was also a keen reader of the Bible, but focused on the passages dealing with wealth and treasure. He died in London, still pursuing his cause, and although he was ultimately not successful, he apparently had his expenses paid in the form of 'discovery money'. However, the people of Hawick who supported his labours as 'cent per cent callants' presumably never saw any money. His marriage to Jean (or 'Jeany') Anderson (or 'Andisone') was in Wilton in 1802. Their children, many baptised first in East Bank Kirk and later in Wilton, included: Jean (b.1802); Archibald (b.1804); Agnes (b.1805); John (b.1808); Michael (b.1811); an unnamed child (b.1812); and Archibald (again, b.1814). John (1804–88) born in Cavers Parish, son of William and Jean Nichol. He was a grocer at 24 High Street, establishing his business in 1838. He is recorded at about 38 High Street in 1841, No. 35 in 1851 and Melgund Place in 1861. He was listed as a High Street grocer in Slater's 1852 directory. He was registered as a non-resident voter in Cavers Parish in the 1860s. He married Janet Kerr, who died in 1876, aged 72. They had several children who died young, including Andrew (b.1842), George (b.1844), John Nichol (b.1847) and James (b.1848); many were baptised in Hawick Free Kirk and 3 of them died in the cholera outbreak of 1849. Surviving children included: William Kerr (b.1839), who became a merchant in Leeds and married Anne Gaitskell; Euphemia (b.1840), who married George Somerville; Elizabeth Wood Fordie; and Andrew George John Nichol ('A.N.', b.1851), who was also a grocer. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. A stout bottle from his firm is in the Museum. John (b.1818/9) born in Bedrule Parish. In 1861 he was farm steward at Stichill. His wife was Mary and their children included John and James. John (19th C.) builder in Hawick. He is said to have gone out to the gold rush in New Zealand with Andrew Thorburn (son of George Thorburn, farmer at Stonedge). This would have been in about 1861. He could be the joiner from Bowden listed as a boarder on Brougham Place in the 1861 census. William (17th/18th C.) blacksmith at Blackleymouth in Hobkirk Parish, recorded in 1709. William (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included Euphan (b.1738) and Elizabeth (b.1744). William (18th/19th C.) hosiery manufacturer in Denholm in the early 19th century. He is said to have been the last such independent manufacturer in the village. He is listed as a stocking-maker in Denholm in 1852. It is possible he is the same as the farm servant living at Honeytown in 1851, with sons John, Thomas and George. William (18th/19th C.) servant at Woodhouse in Southdean Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. William (b.c.1780) born in Ancrum Parish, he was a slater in Denholm. He is probably the William who married Jean Nichol and had children, baptised in Cavers, including: John (b.1804); Catherine (b.1810); Jean (b.1815); and Margaret (b.1818). In 1851 he was a widower, living at around 21 Main Street; Jean was living there in 1841 and so probably his wife. William (19th C.) married Christian Beattie in Cavers in 1834. Their children included: William (b.1836), baptised in Cavers; and Thomas (b.1840) and George (b.1842), baptised in Minto. William Kerr (b.1839) son of John, he became a merchant in Leeds and married Anne Gaitskell. He was a bank clerk in Kelso in 1861. Probably the same William donated a silver coin of William III to the Museum in 1865 (also formerly 'Ekford').

Eckford's (ek-furdz) n. grocer's shop at 21 High Street in the mid-19th to early 20th centuries. It was run by John Eckford and later by his son A.N. Eckford. It was also the name of a kind of 'nourishing stout' that was made there.

ecky-pecky wine (e-kee-pe-kee-wīn) n. a kind of medicinal wine??.

the Eclectic Club (thu-ee-klek-teek-klub) n. society existing in Hawick in the middle of the 19th century, which met in Miss Riddle's room on the High Street and discussed literary topics.

eddart (ed-ar') n., poet. the adder – '. . . thaye ar like the deef eddart that stapps hir lug' [HSR], 'Thaye hae sherpenet thair tungs like ane serpint; eddarts' venim is anunder thair lipps' [HSR].

Edderstoun see Adderstone

Eddie (e-dee) n. John (b.1792/3) originally from Glasgow, he was a woollen framework knitter in Hawick. In 1851 he was living at about 3 Walter's Wynd, running a boarding house, with 20 boarders. He married Jean Knox in Hawick in 1841; she had previously been married to William Thomson and Francis Wilison, and so he had several stepchildren. His name is recorded as 'Adie' in the marriage record.

Edgar (ed-gur) n. (c.1072–1107) King of Scotland from 1097, he was the son of Malcolm III and succeeded his brother Duncan II. He died unmarried and the nation was split between his brothers Alexander and David.

Edgar (ed-gur) n. James (17th C.) served as 'procurator' to Walter Scott of Goldielands in 1670. This was when Scott of Goldielands brought an action in Melrose against Andrew Tunno to make copies of instruments of sasine far Goldielands, which Tunno had in the previous Hawick Town Clerk's 'protocol book'. It is unclear if he was a Hawick or Melrose lawyer. James (17th/18th C.) described as writer and servitor to Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto in 1710 when he became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh, 'for good service'. James (b.1780/1) born in Kirkcudbrightshire he was a teacher pupil, but gave up due to ill health and took up work as a stockingmaker, becoming an apprentice in Hawick in 1801. He was one of the main organisers of the Hawick Reformers of the early 19th century. He married Jean, a daughter of shoemaker Robert Oliver. In 1841 he is recorded on the Cross Wynd with his wife Jean, as well as Robert and John, probably his sons. He died in his 80s, after working about 60 years as a stockingmaker in Hawick. James (b.1827/8) from Canonbie, he was a merchant in Newcastleton. He was at about 18 Douglas Square in 1861. He married Elizabeth, daughter of shepherd Walter Jackson. Their children included Jane, Helen, Isabella, William and James (1860–1920, who died at 11 Oliver Crescent, Hawick). James (19th/20th C.) eldest son of Robert and cousin of editor James. He worked for Pringle's and was known for his lay preaching. It is said that when given some lily of the valley he planted it within a biscuit tin in the ground, saying 'Aw'm no gaun to have a weed in ma gairden'. He married Mary Scott. James (1862–1940) son of John and Isabella Richardson. He was proprietor and editor of the Hawick Express, who wrote several local books, including 'Hawick Common-Riding' (1886), 'Hawick Guide: Directory and Yearbook' (1903), 'Hawick in the Early Sixties' (1913), 'History of Lodge St. James' (1932) and 'The Provosts of Hawick' (1933). He was also responsible for promoting the songs of the Town in many publications, such as 'Hawick Songs and Recitations' (1892, 1901), 'The book of Hawick songs and verse' (1902) and 'Hawick Songs' (1914). A keen Common-Riding supporter, he was Secretary of the Committee from 1887 until around 1908, and acted as Clerk of the Course at the Races. His letter to the Hawick Express on 2nd April 1887 suggesting changes to the Common-Riding ceremonies led to the resuscitation of the festival in the following years. In 1928 he was gifted a grandfather clock for 32 years of service on the Common-Riding Committee (and this is now in the Museum). He was also one of the founders of the Callants' Club, being the first Honorary Secretary and President in 1924. He was a Town Councillor for several years. He was the initiator of the 'Betty Whutson' column in the Hawick Express. He was also Honorary Secretary of the Cricket Club. He married Janet, daughter of Bailie John Richardson, and she died in 1930, aged 65. Their son John was a banker in Edinburgh. John (c.1826–1909) son of the first Hawick James. He was a warehouseman in Teviot Crescent, lived at 3 Village and was father of newspaper proprietor James. He was a prominent Common-Riding supporter of the mid-1800s. He married Isabella, daughter of James Richardson of 'Saut Haa', and she died in 1909, aged 78. Their children were Margaret (who married baker James Scott) and James (who became editor of the Hawick Express). Jock (1920–2016) brother of Rob and Wull, he worked at Wilson & Glenny's, Mactaggart's, Lyle & Scott and Turnbull the Dyers. He played rugby for the Quins, the Y.M. and the Linden, where he was President and became a life member. He gained his Mosstroopers' badge at the aged of 57. He was known as a singer, particularly of 'Oor Ain Auld Toon'. There is a bench to his memory at the Vertish. Rev. Nicol (1658–1724) minister at Hobkirk, he was a son of John and Elspeth of Wedderlie. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1677 and was licensed by Earlston Presbytery in 1693. He was ordained as minister at Hobkirk in 1694 and served there until his death. There is a story of how one night about midnight in the church, he confronted a ghost that had been haunting the churchyard, finding it to be the spirit of a murdered cattle-dealer, and an arrangement was made that it be allowed instead to roam freely between Hoddleswoodie and Howabank. Whatever the basis of this story, he was apparently thereafter looked on with suspicion by some of the parishioners. He preached at least once in Hawick, in 1721. Session records in Bedrule in 1722 mentioned 'his bill', suggesting some financial dispute between Hobkirk and Bedrule; in 1729 there is a record in Bedrule Session of the 'annual rents due by Mr Edgars Daughters' and in 1731 'Wedderlies Bond' is mentioned, which is probably the same thing. He married Susanna, daughter of John Veitch, minister of Westruther, and she died in 1713, aged 52. Their children were Susanna, Elizabeth (who married Robert Blyth in Edinburgh in 1739) and John (who died age 17). He was buried in Hobkirk kirkyard, but it is said he was dug up shortly afterwards to be buried in some lonely spot, but his arms coming free and striking one of these superstitious men, they dropped him in the ditch and fled, so that he had to be reburied the following day. The inscription for his burial was carved into the same stone as that of Rev. James Douglas, and says 'HERE LYS NICOL EDGAR SON TO THE LAIRD OF WEDDERLIE WHO DIED UPON THE 31ST MAY 1721 AGED 67 AND HIS SPOUSE SUSANNA WHO DIED 30TH JUNE 1713 AGED 52'. Robert (1815/6–99) son of the first James and brother of John. He was a hosiery worker in Hawick. He was one of the first members of the Hawick Total Abstinence Society, joining in 1838. He is probably the spinner who donated a coin to the Museum in 1867 and the stockingmaker who donated a 'copy of the Shorter Catechism, printed in Glasgow in 1713' in 1876. He married Helen Armstrong, who died in 1888, aged 75. Their sons were James (who worked for Pringle's), Robert (who married Mary Robson, sister of the joiners, and became a baker in Inverness) and John (who married Jessie Anderson and became a mill cashier in Inverness). Thomas (19th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Margaret Wilson and their children included Robert (b.1845), baptised in Hawick Free Kirk. Walter H. (1885/6–1933) grocer in Newcastleton. He married Betty Nichol, who died in 1900, aged 31. He secondly married Jane Elliot, who died in 1910, aged 41. He thirdly married Margaret Nichol, who died in 1935, aged 60. William (d.1907) heavily involved with the Vertish Hill Sports and St. George's Kirk. He held the position of Church Officer for the 2 years before his death. He was also Clerk of the Scales at the Common-Riding Races.

edge (ej) n., arch. a watershed that does not have a prominent ridge, the word being used in several hill names, e.g. Firestane Edge, Grundistane Edge, Lamblair Edge, Limekilnedge, Millstane Edge, Reidcleuch Edge, Whisgills Edge, Whithope Edge and Wundy Edge.

the Edge (thu-ej) n. former popular name used in Liddesdale to refer to the pass over into Teviotdale, perhaps named after the Limekilnedge and Sandy Edge – 'It was amusing to hear our host, in speaking of his family, refer to one of them as being 'away somewhere ower the edge', meaning north into Scotland' [JAHM].

Edgerston (e-jur-stin) n. estate about 7 miles south-east of Jedburgh, home of the Rutherfords of Edgerston. It was a detached part of Jedburgh Parish, with its own church. There was probably a fortified house there from at least the 15th century. In 1544 it was stormed by a group of Olivers, Halls, Croziers and Turnbulls, who had entered into a bond with the English. Thomas 'the Black Laird' was possessor at the end of the 16th century; his arrival at the Raid of the Redeswire is meant to have turned the tide. Tax was paid on 7 hearths at the main house in 1694. The present mansion house dates from the 1720s, with major renovations in the 1830s. The house is surrounded by an area of diverse woodland and contains an octagonal dovecote from about 1800. Nearby farms include Edgerston Rig and Edgerston Tofts. There was a small school there, starting in the early 18th century. Records of the Rutherfords and Olivers of Edgerston are in the National Library of Scotland, including estate account books and charters (the name probably derives from the Old English 'Ecgheard tun', i.e. 'Ecgheard's town'; it first appears as 'Edyarston' in the late 15th century, is 'Edyarstoun' in 1553/4, 'Edgaristoun' in 1561, 'Edgarstoun' in 1567, 'Edyarston' in 1571, 'Edyerstoun' in 1581, 'Edzarstoun' in 1597 and still 'Edgerstown' in 1780; it is probably the place marked as 'Iedgerton' on Mercator's 1595 map of Scotland and is 'Eggerstoun' on Gordon's c.1650 map; note that it is easy to confuse with early spellings of 'Adderstone').

edgie (e-jee) v., arch. to be quick in doing something (noted by J. Jamieson).

edgy (e-jee) adj., arch. sharp, smart, quick – 'Be edgy' [GW], ' 'Look edgy' (= hurry up)' [GW].

Edie (e-dee) n. William (1865–1936) son of Robert, joiner in Hawick, and Christian Miller. He attended school in Roberton and was educated at St. Andrews University from 1882 and was licensed by the Presbytery there in 1892. He was minister at King Edward 1893–1905, Dumfries Greyfriars 1905–1910 and Inveresk from 1910 until he died. He translated 'Textual Criticism of the Greek New Testament' by Eberhard Nestle (1901).

Edina (e-dee-, -dī-na) n., poet. romantic name for Edinburgh, popularised by Fergusson and Burns – 'Ye sons of stately Edina, with page and pen, Come, buckle on your armour bright, up, grasp your swords like men' [JoHa].

Edina Place (e-dee-na-plis, e-dī-na-plis) n. street in the Terraces of the Wellogate, with houses built in 1885, and called after a poetic name for Edinburgh, e.g. Burns: 'Edina! Scotia's darling seat!'.

Edinburgh (e-din-bu-ru) n. Roger (14th/15th C.) priest of St. Andrews Diocese. He was described as of noble birth and related to the King of Scotland. He was Canon of Rouen from 1394 and Master of the Hospital of St. Germain. He was also perpetual vicar of Falkirk from 1402. In 1405 he was confirmed as Rector of Cavers, being presented by Isabella, Countess of Mar, but delayed by the Abbot of Melrose. He was deprived of benefices in 1410 for being 'a notorious schematic' and supporter of Antipope Alexander V.

Edinburri (e-din-bu-ri, -ru) n. Scotland's capital since the 15th century, now seat of the Scottish Parliament, lying between the Firth of Forth and the Pentland Hills, approximately 51 miles north of Hawick by road. Linked to Hawick by rail from 1849–1969 and by road via the A7, it has been the most important city for Hawick people for many centuries. The main A7 was dramatically improved locally as the Scotch-Dyke to Haremoss Turnpike in the late 18th century. In Hawick the main road north went up Wilton Path (after crossing the ford at the foot of Walter's Wynd or the Teviot Bridge after 1741) and then up Stirches road towards Ashkirk. In the early 18th century the road to Edinburgh then proceeded to Selkirk, followed by Darnick, and then by way of a ferry, ford and bridge to Lauder, Oxton, Channelkirk, Fala and via Dere Street to Dalkeith. The new road from Selkirk to Edinburgh was built in 1755 and went via Fairnilee and Clovenfords and along the west bank of the Gala Water. The modern route via Galashiels, Stow, Heriot and Fushiebridge was not laid out until 1833. The city had its own Riding of the Marches from 1579 until 1718. Population (1991) 401,910 – 'Did ee gang ti sei eer freends the teime ee was in Edinburrih?' [ECS] (Teries often talk about going 'inti Edinburgh' rather than using another preposition).

Edinburgh an Hawick Railway (e-din-bu-ru-an-hIk-rāl-wi) n. line operating between Hawick and Edinburgh, owned by the North British Railway. It began as the Edinburgh and Dalkeith Railway, in 1831, incorporating the Marquess of Lothian's Waggonway in 1845, extended to Gorebridge in 1847 and reaching Hawick in 1849. After being extended to Carlisle the route was renamed the Waverley Line.

Edinburgh Border Coonties Association (e-din-bu-ru-bōr-der-koon-teez-aw-sō-see-ā-shun) n. organisation formed in Edinburgh in 1865 by gentlemen in the capital city who had a conenction to the Scottish Borders. The association promoted the arts and culture of the Borders, being responsible for erecting monuments etc. At one point they owned Leyden's Cottage in Denholm and Rhymer's Tower in Earlston. A similar organisation was formed in Glasgow in 1875 and there were shorter-lived organisations in London and Sydney.

Edinburgh Borderers' Union (e-din-bu-ru-bōr-der-urz-yoon-yin) n. former club in Edinburgh, with rooms at 22 Forth Street. It was founded in 1874, with an annual dinner where both sexes were welcomed. The organisation gave prizes for essays and offered aid to Borderers who were in difficulty. They also published an edition of Leyden's poetry and a life of Sir David Brewster, as well as having their own reading room. From 1890 they instituted an annual excursion and a choir was formed in 1894, followed by a Literary and Debating Society, a Cycling Club, a Whist Club, a Golf Club and a Cricket Club.

the Edinburgh Cup (thu-e-din-bu-ru-kup) n. presented by Teries in Edinburgh, it was competed for at the Common-Riding Games in the late 1800s, the event being the 250 yards foot race on the Saturday.

Edinburgh Road (e-din-bu-ru-rōd) n. popular name for the 'new road to Selkirk' leading north out of town. It was used as a street name up until the mid-20th century for that part of the road beyond Wilton Hill, but still within the Burgh.

Edin's Hall (ee-dinz-hal) n. remains of an Iron Age broch and several other contemporary walls and earthworks on the hills above the Whiteadder outside Duns. This is the best preserved example of a broch anywhere near Hawick (also called 'Edwin's Hall', 'Edenhall' and other variants).

Edmonds (ed-mindz) n. Rev. Donald Kinloch (b.1941) born in Hawick, son of Alexander McDonald and Catherine Maria Balfour Kinlock. He was educated at George Watson's, Dalkeith High and Edinburgh University (1959–67), where he graduated M.A. and B.D. He also attended Union Seminary, New York 1967–68 and Union Seminary, Virginia 1976–78. He was student assistant at Musselburgh St. Ninian's 1965–66 and Astoria Presbytery Church, New York 1967–68, then assistant at Glasgow Rutherglen Road 1968–69. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Dlaketih in 1964 and ordained as minister of Househillwood St. Christopher's (Paisley) in 1969. In 1974 he moved to the Calvin Presbytery Church, Norfolk, Virginia. In 1974 he married Susan Phillips and they had a son, Gordon Kinloch.

Edmondson (ed-mind-, -mee-, sin, -stin) n. George (c.1842–1900) son of Isaac, he was a butcher in Hawick. The family were members of the 'English Kirk'. In 1871 he married Joan Bowie, who appears to have been the aunt of his brother Isaac's wife, Jane Bowie. Their children included: Isaac (b.1870), who died young; Isaac (b.1872), also died young; Isabella (b.c.1874); Isaac (1876–1959), who died in Galashiels; Richard (b.c.1878); Elizabeth (b.c.1880); Janet (1883–1971), who married

George Henry Cairncross; and George (b.c.1887). They also had 2 children who were illegitimate from Joan: Cathrine (b.1863), whose name is also given as Oliver and married Robert Anderson; and John (b.1868). Isaac (b.c.1785) from England, he came to Hawick probably in the 1830s, and worked as a dyer. In 1841 and 1851 he was living on the Round Close. He was listed as a dyer on the Round Close in Slater's 1852 directory. His wife was Johannah Lewarne, who was still alive (on Allars Crescent) in 1861. Their children included: George; Isaac (b.c.1820); Richard; and Johanna. Isaac (c.1820–55) from Coldbeck, Cumberland, he came to Hawick with his parents Isaac and Johanna. He worked as a skinner. He married Isabella Montgomery. Their children included: George (c.1842–1900); Richard (b.c.1843), who married Elizabeth Pattison Kennedy; Johanna (or Hannah, b.c.1848); and Isaac (1855–1924), who married Jane Bowie. He died in Hawick. Isaac (1855–1924) 3rd generation of Isaacs. He was born in Hawick, but died in Edinburgh. In 1876 he married Jane Bowie, who was the niece of his brother George's wife, Joan Bowie. His son was also Isaac (1876–1942), who died in Hawick. Isaac (1876–1942) 4th generation of Isaacs in Hawick. He married Margaret Little in Hawick in 1897. James (15th/16th C.) member of the panel for deciding on the inherticance of the Barony of Cavers by James Douglas in 1509. His name is recorded as 'James Edmestone'. James (1872/3–1947) married Mary Murray, who died in 1955, aged 81. They are buried in Wilton Cemetery. They had a son John Murray (1903/4–88). John (15th C.) recorded at the 1494/5 Justice-aire in Jedburgh. William Douglas in Deanbrae was charged to enter him for the slaughter of Thomas Hoggarth; Oswald Mason was also accused of the same crime, with Ralph Ker charged to enter him. Failing to appear he was denounced a rebel and his goods escheated to the King. Given that his surety was a Douglas from Deanbrae, then he may have been local. John of that Ilk and Ednam (16th C.) son of James of that Ilk and Katherine, daughter of George Home of Wedderburn. In 1530 he was charged (along with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and John, Abbot of Jedburgh) with disisting from his claim to the lands of Ednam. He was probably the John of that Ilk who was on panel of 'retour' in 1549 for John of Swinton and in 1551 for David Home of Wedderburn. In 1567 he was cautioner for 'Dand Ellot' of Caveling. Either he or his son was listed among the men who signed a bond in 1569 to suppress thieves on the Border. In the same year Robert Kerr of Woodhead promised to relieve him of a bond to make payment to an Englishman. In 1529 he married Euphemia, daughter of Gilbert Wauchope of Niddrie-Marischal. He was succeeded by his son Sir John. Sir John of that Ilk and Ednam (d.c.1595) son of John, he was Sheriff of Lauder. He may be the same Sir John who in 1569 signed the bond to suppress thieves in the Border and he signed the 'Band of Roxburgh' in 1573. In 1574 he was on the retours for Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme as heir to his great-uncle David Scott and his father Sir Walter. In 1575 he was found to have falsely accused Robert Fraser in Overton of stealing horses belonging to Englishman Sir George Heron. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. In 1590 he was cautioner for Walter Scott of Goldielands. He is listed among Lairds who appeared before the Privy Council in 1591 to promise to support the Warden of the Middle March. In 1591/2 he was surety for Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, when there was an accusation that he had led 200 Scotts and others to steal livestock from Drumelzier and Dreva. In 1593 he resigned his lands at Synton and Synton Mill to John, Earl of Mar. In 1595 he was listed among leaders ordered to appear in court to resolve feuds. He married Agnes, daughter of Walter Ker of Cessford and was succeeded by his son Andrew. He may be the John of that Ilk whose daughter Margaret married George Scott of Synton. Rev. John (1801–1865) son of Thomas, an Edinburgh ironmonger and Isobel Howden. He was dux at Edinburgh High School in 1815, graduated from Edinburgh University, and was licensed to preach by Edinburgh Presbytery in 1825. He was presented to the Parish of Ashkirk by Gilbert, Earl of Minto and became minister there in 1837. He may have been assistant there previous to the death of Rev. Hamilton in 1837. He walked out during the Disruption of 1843 and became minister of Ashkirk Free Kirk. It is said that he suffered great hardship as a result, for example sheltering in a small house 4 miles from the church, and then having to move to a dilapidated farmhouse 3 miles further away, before in 1845 finding a residence in Selkirk, 6 miles from his congregation (a distance that he would walk every week). He married Janet (or Jane) Waddell in 1842, and she died in 1895. Their children were Jessie Traill, Thomas

William (farmer), Isabella Howden (who married William Ross), Wilhelmina Euphemia, Elizabeth, and Mary Margaret (who married William Ebenezer White). In 1854 he edited an edition of 'Paradise Lost' and 'Paradise Regained' for schools and was assistant editor on 'Works of John Owen, D.D.' (1850–54). His surname is sometimes given as 'Edmonstone'. Richard (b.c.1843) 2nd son of Isaac. He was a hand-loom weaver in the 1861 census. He married Elizabeth Pattison Kennedy (b.c.1849) in Hawick in 1868. Their children included: Isaac (b.1869); Elizabeth Pattison (1871–1918); James (b.1872); Isabella Montgomery (b.1874), who married Bailie Francis Scott; Ann; Janet; Mary; Joanne; Richard (1884/5–1915); George; and John (b.1891), who married Jessie Hogg Wilkinson (who may have been his father's half-sister) and emigrated to Canada. Richard (1884/5–1915) son of Richard and Elizabeth Kennedy. He served in the 5th Battalion Cameron Highlanders and was killed in action. He is commemorated on the Loos Memorial in France. He married Elizabeth Robertson, who lived in South Shields. William (18th C.) recorded at Stobicote in 1727 when his daughter Martha was baptised in Cavers Parish (formerly 'Edmondston', also written 'Edmestoun', 'Edmistone', 'Edmonston', 'Edmonstone', 'Edmonstoun', 'Edmestoun', etc.).

Ednam (ed-num) n. village a few miles north of Kelso. Birthplace of James Thomson, who wrote 'Rule Britannia' and Henry Lyte, who wrote 'Abide With Me'. This is also the name of the surrounding parish, which is claimed to be the first named parish. It borders Sprouston, Kelso and Stichell, as well as part of Berwickshire. The Eden Water crosses the parish and the Tweed forms its south-east boundary. The church has communion tokens from the late 17th century. The local lairds were Edmonstones. A book 'Ednam and its indwellers' was written by John Burleigh in 1912 (the origin is 'town on the Eden Water'; it first occurs as 'Ednaham' in the early 12th century).

educat (e-joo-kaw', -kat) pp., arch. educated – '. . . ane of the chief causes thairof being this, for want of scholes qr children may be educat' [PR1627], '. . . ane of the chief causes thairof being this, for want of scholes where children may be educat' [RRC], '. . . ye mortcloth latelie sentt by Mr Elliot in London (born and educat in Nether Southfield) . . . ' [PR1721].

Edward (ed-wurd) n. name of eight Kings of England. Edward I 'Longshanks' (1272–1307) English King who invaded Scotland in 1296, removing the 'Stone of Destiny' and historical records, and beginning the War of Independence. He was thus partly responsible for the unrest that plagued the Borders for the next three centuries. After dispute over succession of the Scottish crown, he gained overlordship of Scotland and chose Baliol as the King. Later many Scottish nobles swore fealty to him rather than to Robert the Bruce. In 1307 for example, the Lovels lost their lands around Hawick as a result. After invading in 1296 he also called a 'parliament' at Berwick and forced about 2,000 Scottish landowners and clergymen to sign the 'Ragman Rolls', this becoming a valuable historical document (partially making up for those he destroyed!). In 1297 he made a presentation to Cavers Kirk, since the former Baron's lands were now in his hands. It is also said that he visited Bedrule Castle in 1298. Edward II (1284–1327) English King from 1307, son of Edward I. He was never very popular as a King, partly because he was heavily influenced by Piers Gaveston (who was possibly his lover) and later Hugh Despenser. In 1319 he appointed unnamed men to many Scottish churches, including Hawick and Cavers. He tried to continue his father's subjugation the Scots, including his disastrous expedition in 1314 to relieve Stirling Castle, which led to the Battle of Bannockburn. He was forced to flee from Bannockburn, pursued by James Douglas. He was denied entrance to Stirling Castle, but made it to Dunbar, where he escaped to England by ship. Forced to abdicate in favour of his infant son Edward, he died in a dungeon, possibly the result of a red hot poker up the backside – 'Gang cry the hounds of Douglas vale, Gang scream the Ettrick wall, Gang warn the spears of Lidiesdale, That Edward leads the foe' [T]. Edward III English King from 1327–77, including a time of much war and the Black Death. He renounced the Scottish throne in the 1328 Treaty of Northampton, accepting Scotland's right to independence. But he continued to battle the Scots and was victorious at the Battle of Halidon Hill in 1333. He was given much of southern Scotland by the puppet King Edward Baliol in 1334. And he took full possession of the Borderland in the 1340s, restoring lands to families who had supported England. The Lovels regained (at least on paper) their lands of Hawick in 1347. Edward was the self-appointed patron of St. Mary's Kirk in 1355, presenting it to 'John de Hawyk'. Edward VIII (1894–1972) British King who abdicated in favour of his brother. He visited Hawick in 1924 when he was Prince of Wales, opening the Laurie Bridge, laying a foundation stone for wards at the Cottage Hospital and giving an address in the Town Hall. The avenue from the new bridge to the Park gates were lined with school children to see the Prince, escorted by the Provost – 'The Prince was resplendent with his Chain and Ermine Robes, escorted by a Wee Soldier'.

Edwards (ed-wurdz) n. Thomas (18th C.) coachman at Riddell in 1794, when he was working for Lady Riddell. William (19th C.) dentist of Edinburgh who visited Hawick every Saturday in the latter part of the 19th century. He was based on Queen Street in Edinburgh, and set up at the Tower Knowe on his visits to Hawick. He gave a silver cup for the Cornet's Races in the 1880s and also donated a gold-mounted whip to be competed for by married supporters on several occasions through to the mid-1890s.

Edwin (ed-win) n. (585–633) King of Northumbria. He was the son of Ælla, who had been King of Deira, before it was united with Bernicia by Æthelfrith. He was expelled by Æthelfrith around 605, but was part of the force that defeated him and reclaimed the kingdom around 617. He is also supposed to have brought Christianity to the region. He was killed by Cadwallon and his allies near Doncaster (also called 'St. Edwin').

ee (ee) n., poet. eye – 'An' felt the tears o' anguish fa' in torrents frae oor ee' [JoHa], '... That aye maist filled oor ee' [JF], 'Ane ee for ane ee, an' ane tuth for ane tuth' [HSR], '... Or where quaiet rest to the ee ... ' [WL] (not characteristic Hawick pronunciation, cf. ei).

een (een) pron., poet. one – 'When lowsed at een be it hairst or plooin', The thoucht o' the haiflin turns to wooin'' [WL] (cf. pleugh).

e'en (ee-en) adv., poet. even, just – '... leaving every stitch o' rags ahint him, e'en to his very sark' [BCM1881], 'My fit stan's in an een place ...' [HSR], 'Thae last hae wroucht but ane hoor, an' thou hest made them eyn wi' us' [HSR], '... een as the flaam o the waather-gleam skails afore'd the cluds threh an owrecuissen lift' [ECS], 'Oo've a pairk in Wulton Ludge That e'en Fairy-land micht grudge' [TK] (there are spelling variants).

-een (een) suffix, arch. formerly common prefix attached to gerundial (i.e. noun) forms of verbs, e.g. 'a flitteen', 'a wesheen' and 'stop that fechteen' – '... and the form –een for the suffixes (chiefly gerundial) of awanteen (= wanting), biggeen (= building), etc., etc.' [ECS] (this seems to have been always '-in' in general Scots).

een-breen (een-breen) n., pl., arch. eye-brows – 'The now rare -n or -en form of plural is adhered to in een (= eyes), een-breen (= eye-brows), shuin (= boots, shoes)' [ECS] (cf. ei-bree).

een-brows (een-browz) n., pl. eye-brows.

eend (eend) adj., arch. straight, direct, true, exact – 'An than A gaed inti a bit an slokent ma drooth (oot ov a tanker lippin-fowe – nane o eer eend-mizzer!)' [ECS], even, quits – 'Oo'll be eend wui yow for that' [ECS], made straight or even – 'An eend leine (= a straight line)' [ECS].

eend-doon (eend-doon) adj., arch. straightforward, honest, downright (cf. eendoon).

eendins (een-dinz) n., arch. a call in the game of guinea or 'tip-cat' when a player makes a square hit (see also strechtins).

eend-on (eend-ōn) adv., arch. continuously, incessantly – 'It snawed eend-on a' efternuin' [ECS], '... and started the fray in the light of dawn, – eendon throwe aa the grewsome mowlie' [ECS], 'The monologuish man was sit An' drone eend on for ever; He loves his ain eternal voice That flows on like a river' [FL], adj., arch. continuous – 'The rummlin roar o an eend-on traffic' [ECS] (also written 'eendon').

heavily – 'The rain's steedily faa'n, faa'n In an eendoon poure' [WL] (also written 'evendoon' or 'e'endoon'; see also evendonness and cf. eenddoon).

eendy-teendy (een-dee-teen-dee) n. a children's counting game often used for selecting players, 'eenie-meanie-minie-mo' being more common in England. The full version is something like 'eendy-teendy, tithery-mithery, amba-zooka, over-dover, dick-ma-lamb, tam-toosh, ee're oot'. Another version (ascribed to joiner Walter Wilson in the early 19th century) is 'Zeendy, teendy, tethery, methery, Bomba, zitery, over, Dover, Dick Milan, Tan toosh, eir are oir out'. Variants on this are to be found throughout southern Scotland and northern England, and the obvious connection to Welsh counting suggests that this is a remnant of the ancient p-Celtic language once spoken here.

e'enin (ee-nin) n., poet. evening – 'But eenin' now, wi' gloomy face, Sets country folk a-ganging' [JoHa], '... thou makist the owt-gangin' o' the moornin' an' the e'enin' til rejoyce' [HSR], 'In the moornin' it growes up an' flurishes; in the e'enin' it is shurn doun an' wuthirs' [HSR] (also written 'eenin' ').

Effledge (ef-lij, ef-leej) n. farm to the east of Cavers, between Nether Tofts and Whitriggs, in Kirkton Parish. Effledge Cottage is just off the road to the north-east. Archibald Douglas was there in 1502. It was once part of Cavers estate, listed among the lands belonging to the Barony of Cavers in charters of 1511 and 1558. There is a 1535 record of William Scott 'in Layk' being charged with stealing 13 cows and oxen from Arthur Douglas and Thomas 'Fresall' (possibly Fraser) and 7 cows and oxen from Marion Davidson, all from the lands there. Walter Noble was tailor there in 1686 when declared a fugitive for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. It was still held by Douglas of Cavers in 1687 and 1698. William Turnbull, widow Marion Turnbull and James Gledstains were all there in 1697. James Goodfellow was there in 1710, James Henderson in 1716, Walter Graham and Robert Scott in 1720, Thomas Scott in 1764 and Robert Stavert in 1794. It was part of the estate of Douglas of Cavers in 1788. James and Thomas Bunyan were tenant farmers there in 1797 and James Bunyan in 1799. George Helm was a servant there in 1801. It was farmed by William and then Thomas Grierson in the 19th century. William Blyth was farmer there in 1868. Robert Kerr was there in the early 1900s (also spelled 'Efflidge'; the name first occurs as 'esflage' in 1502, then 'Elflesche' in 1511, and is 'Efflesche' in 1535, 'Effleche' in 1558, 'Efladge' in 1684, 'Effletch' in 1687, transcribed 'Afflecth' in 1698, 'Eflitch' in 1710 and 1716 and 'Effletch' in 1765; it is 'Efflidge' on Stobie's 1770 map; the origin is possibly from the Old English personal name 'Ælf', plus the Middle English 'leche', meaning 'a bog', but 'the elf-swamp' has also been suggested).

However, the Canons of Glaasgow had meanwhile appointed John de Lindsay. Because of the war between England and Scotland at that time, he never took up the position, and in 1323 was translated to Connor in Ireland and then to Llandaff (also written 'Eglescliffe').

Egred (eg-rid) n. (d.847) Bishop of Lindisfarne from 830 or 831, his term being noted by increased religious construction. He also assisted with the armies of Bernicia against the Picts and Scots. He constructed 2 strongholds at Jedburgh, as well as what may have been the original founding of an abbey there. A deed of his in 843 is the first known mention of Wilton.

Egyptian (ee-jip-shin) n., arch. a gypsy – '. . . the session ordainit that no person shall reset any Egyptians, and that if they tak reset agt. their will, then to come and tell the mr., and he, with the assistance of the gentn. that he shall choose, shall go and put yem out of the parochine' [Ash1643], '. . . and that not only because they are vagabond Agyptianes and idle persons, bot also, in obedience to minister and session' [BR1674].

Eildon Road (eel-din-rōd) n. part of Burnfoot, built in 1953 and named after the Eildon Hills, which can be clearly seen from here.

the Eildons (thu-eel-dinz) n. the Eildon Hills, between Melrose and St. Boswells. They are somewhat peculiarly known as Eildon Mid Hill, Eildon Hill North and Eildon Wester Hill, with heights of 422 m (1,385 ft), 404 m (1,327 ft) and 371 m (1,216 ft), respectively. Eildon Mid Hill contains a triangulation pillar. The northernmost summit held the largest Iron Age fort in Scotland, constructed around the 10th century B.C.E. The Romans built a signal station there in the 2nd century, as well as an extensive fort and settlement nearby, and called the hills Trimontium. By local legend they were separated by Michael Scot the wizard, and also Arthur and his knights supposedly sleep here, waiting to return. There was a scare in about 1903, when people spotted smoke coming from the summit (caused by burning peat) of one of the hills and imagined that an extinct volcano was about to errupt – 'From Eildon's cairns no more the watch-fire's blaze, Red as a comet, darts portentous rays' [JL], 'Gaze where Eildon's triple height Guards the secret dread' [RSC], 'A mist of tenderness so lightly folds the Eildons in her mantling love . . . ' [WFC] (they occur on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Heeldoun Hills').

the Eildon Trei (thu-eel-din-trī) n. a tree on the slopes of the Eildons where Thomas the Rhymer supposedly met the Queen of the Fairies and was spirited away for 7 years. The site is marked by the Eilden Tree Stone, which is modern (1929), but replaces an older one – 'Mysterious Rymour! doom'd by fate's decree Still to revisit Eildon's lonely tree' [JL].

Eildrig (eeld-rig) n. older name for the area around Eilrig and still used for the hill and stream there. There was a building marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map at Eildrigburnfoot, of which there are now no visible remains.

ei-lid (ī-lid) n. an eye-lid – 'she didni bat an ei-lid when A telt her', 'I wullna gie sleepe til mine eyne, or sloom til mine eelyds' [HSR].

Eilrig (eel-rig) n. farm on the 'Eild Rig', south of the Borthwick Water about a mile before Craik. Before 1689 (when Roberton was formed) it was part of Hawick Parish. The lands were held by Robert Scott of Rankilburn from the early 15th century. In 1426/7 Robert's son and heir Walter, was granted the lands by the Baron of Hawick. They were then valued at 10 merks and given 'by the service of one penny', due at the feast of St. John the Baptist. The lands were included in those resigned in 1463 and re-granted by James III in 1464 to Sir Walter Scott of Kirkurd and Buccleuch. Robert Scott of Eilrig is recorded in 1477 renting the lands of Craik. In 1492 the lands were described as being then waste, but normally valued at £10 Scots. In 1501 the tenant was Simon Scott. In 1517 the lands were part of the estate of the Scotts of Buccleuch and said to be then 'waste', but valued at 10 pounds in times of peace; they had the same value in 1553/4. This is probably the 'Elreg' where David Armstrong was in 1533, the 'Elryg' where John Armstrong was recorded in 1561 and also the residence in 1576 of 'Andro Armstrang, callit Reid Andro in Eilrig'. The lands were included in a list of those formally inherited by Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch from his great-uncle David Scott in 1574; they were at that time annexed to the Barony of Branxholme and valued at £10. In 1581/2 the lands were held by Margaret Douglas, Countess of Bothwell, when she complained that a gang led by the Armstrongs of Whithaugh and Braidlie had raided the farm; they came 'bodin in feir of weir, with jakkis, steilbonettis, speris, swordis and utheris wappinis invasive', stealing 24 cows, a horse and some goods. Adam Govenlock was there in 1586/7. The lands were listed (along with Philhope) as a 'pendicle' of Broadlee among lands inherited by the Baron of Hawick in 1615. 'Rowie of Huttikill, furth of the Lyn beside Eilrig' is recorded in 1616. The lands were estimated to pay '200 lb., in vicarage to 32 lb.' in the 1627 valuation of Hawick Parish. The lands were included in the main Barony of Branxholme according to the services of heirs in 1634, 1653 and 1661, and the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. There were 7 'communicants' recorded there in 1650, namely Walter Grieve, Margaret Hall, Janet Grieve, Janet Murray, Robert Grieve, Margaret Scott and Maly Laing. It was still valued at £10 in 1653. Sir William Scott was recorded paying the land tax on £500 in 1663. In the 1678 Land Tax Rolls it was still valued at £500 and listed as 'Ilerig' or 'Flerig' under Walter Scott of Raeburn. John and Robert Grieve were there in the 1680s. It is mentioned as 'Eilridge' by Walter Scott of Satchells, among the lands of Scott of Buccleuch. Walter Herd was there in 1710, John Johnston and William Black in 1712, John Nichol in 1716, John Shortreed in 1718 and James Rutherford in Eilrig. In 1719 it was leased by John Chisholme of Stirches from William Scott of Raeburn, then James Home of Eccles and in 1730 Walter Scott of Merrylaw. Robert Welch and James Grieve were living there in 1722, James Rutherford in 1728, Walter Laidlaw in 1733–36, John Nichol in 1735, William Scott in 1736 and Archibald Henderson in 1743. The lands were valued at £500 in the 1740s. In 1759 it was sold to the Duke of Buccleuch by Rev. John Clunie of Whitekirk, when the lands are still described as being in the Barony of Branxholme. John Mitchellhill was there in 1764, William Lawson in the 1770s, Andrew Geddes in 1781 and Francis Elliot in 1786. James Tait was tenant farmer there in at least 1787–1815. In 1788 and 1811 it was valued at £500. Ninian Scott and Thomas Elliot were there in 1812. James Scott was shepherd there in the 1840s and 1850s – 'Have you along the lonely road When the storm was raging near, Down by the old stone bridge At Eilrigg?' [WFC] (the name first appears in 1426 as 'Elerig', with several later spelling variants, including 'Ealrig', 'Ealrigg', 'Ealrigge', 'Eelridge', 'Eildridge', 'Eildrig', 'Eildrigg', 'Eilridge', 'Eilrige', 'Eilrigg', 'Elridge', 'Eldrige', 'Eldrigg', 'Elrig', 'Elryg', 'Eylrig' and 'Ileridge', as well as 'Yealrig', 'Yeilrig' and 'Yield Rigg'; it is marked 'Eilrigge' and 'Ealrigge' on parish maps of 1650, 'Ilrick' on Blaeu's 1654 map and 'Eildrigg' on Ainslie's 1773 map; the origin is probably simply 'ridge' with an Old English personal name Ælla, Ella or Illa).

Eilrig Burn (eel-rig-burn) n. stream that runs near the farm of Eilrig, flowing roughly north to join the Borthwick Water opposite Meadshaw. A building was shown on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map near the confluence with the Rough-hope Burn (marked 'Eildrig Burn' on the modern Ordnance Survey maps).

Eilrigburnfoot (eel-rig-burn-fi') n. Eildrigburnfoot, former cottage by the road near where the Eildrig Burn meets the Borthwick Water. A building is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, on the south side of the road. It is recorded in 1616 that 'Marion's Geordie' Scott and William Scott of Satchells met Jock Scott 'the Suckler' at 'Eilrig-burne-fute' after riding at night from Hawick, before meeting further accomplices and continuing to Howpasley, where they slaughtered the sheep belonging to the Laird of Drumlanrig. The Lamb family and 3 other people were living there in 1841 and just 'annuitant' Georgina Tait in 1861.

Eilrig Shank (eel-rig-shawngk) n. another name for Eilrigburnfoot (it is 'Eildrige Shank' in 1841).

Eimond (ee-mond) n. James (17th C.) probable name of a resident of Ashkirk Parish (but hard to read). He married Isobel Thomson and their son William was baptised in 1661, with witnesses Adam Ogilvie and John Tudhope. Steven (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Murray and their children included William (b.1652) and 'Andira' (b.1662). The surname may be the same as that of the earlier 'John Eamont of Hilhouse' in Liddesdale.

eiry see eerie

eis (īz) pron. his – '... eis chuffy chowks aa fairnytickles, an eis airm up ti shade eis een ...' [ECS], 'Ei turned tae eis freendly neebour And gien um the nicest smile' [AY] (also heis and hes).

eisel (ī-sel) pron. himself – '... an away ei birrlt, still buffin an smudgin inti eis sel' [ECS], 'Hei hes a guid ruice o eis-sel' [ECS], 'Ei treats me juist like eis sel But hei's the yin wi' the brain' [AY] (variant of heisel, depending on the preceeding consonant; also spelled ' 'eisel', eis sel', 'eis-sel' etc.).

ei-stern (ī-stern) n., poet. the eye muscle – 'The eye-stern of his gallant grey Fell trickling down his nose; The pricker was a bruised wight, Full hardly up he rose' [JTe] (this can also be 'eye-string').

eit (ī', īt) n. eight – 'ir ee comin oot the night it eit?' (note the other pronunciations in aeight, as well as echt and eicht; also sometimes spelled 'eight' even when pronounced properly).

eiteen (ī-teen) n. eighteen – 'Hawick was a hotbed o radicalism in the eiteen hunders' (also aichteen, auchteen, echteen and aeighteen).

Ekron (āk-, ek-ron) n. Agnes (b.1788) daughter of John and Ann Johnson. In 1841 she was a grocer on the Loan, probably at about No. 17, and was at about 8–10 in 1851. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He erected a stone in St. Mary's Cemetery to commemorate his children: Agnes (1814/5–20); Ann (1816/7–20); Agnes (again, 1819/20–23); John, Mary and Eliza, who died in infancy; and James (1828/9–30). Given that all these children died young, it is possible he is the same Andrew as the son of John, who had several surviving children with Elizabeth. Andrew (b.1792) Hawick framework knitter, son of John and Ann Johnstone. His wife was Elizabeth (surname unknown). In 1841 and 1851 he was living on Walter's Wynd. His children include: Margaret (b.1826/7), who married George Pringle in 1851; Helen (b.1828/9); Mary (b.1831/2), who married Alexander Scott; Agnes (b.1834/5), who may have married Allan Stewart in 1857; and Ann Johnstone (b.1838/9), who was living with her cousin John Hall in 1861 and married Robert B. Wilson in 1862. His daughters Helen and Mary were lodging with Jane Turnbull on the High Street in 1851. Andrew (b.1829) frameworker in Hawick, son of James and Margaret Thomson. He lived at 48 Loan, 7 Back Row and 13 Drumlanrig Square. He married Elizabeth Stewart in Hawick in 1850. Their children include: Jane (b.1851/2); John (b.1856); Margaret (b.1858); James (b.1861); Janet (b.1862); James Stuart (b.1864), who married Nettie E. Blodgett in Michigan in 1895 and died in Indianapolis; Walter (1866–1909), married Grace Thwaites, but had no children; Robert (b.1868), who lived in Philadelphia and Chicago; Elizabeth (1872–1966), who married Archibald Drummond and died in Jedburgh; and Helen (1875–78). Family stories said that James and Robert emigrated to America, with one of them being an opera singer in Boston and the other one having a wooden leg! He was still alive in 1891. Andrew (1894–c.1952) son of John and Jemima Baxter, he was born in Hawick. He changed his name to Arthur Stewart Scott, apparently due to some mix-up during WWI (because he deserted or got separated from his unit and needed a new name in order to get back into the army). He married Althea Theadora ('Dora') Jones (1895–1973). They had a son, Arthur Frederick 'Fred' Scott (b.1920). He probably died in Wales. Ann (b.1790) daughter of John and Ann Johnson. She was a grocer on the Mid Row, recorded there in 1841. She had an illegitimate daughter, Adeline (or Adelina, d.1897) with French prisoner of war Adam Bellom. Apparently she lived with Bellom for several years, but they never married. She appears to have died before 1851. James (1721–87) son of William and Mary Graham. He was a merchant in Hawick, presumably a bookseller, since he is recorded on the subscribers list for the reprinted Buchanan's History of Scotland (1752, 2 volumes), ordering 13 sets. He was also on the subscriber's list for Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784), for 12 copies, and listed there as 'merchant, Hawick'. His business is recorded as 'Messrs James Ekron, Hawick' when listed as one of the sellers of 'A Display of Genuine Christianity and Christian Love' (1784), Caw's second book published in Hawick; a copy of the book bears the inscription 'When this you see, Remember me, James Ekron'. He appears to have operated as a bookseller in about the period 1757–84. He owned property in Silver Street and in the Crescent. In 1780 he was one of 6 trustees for the East Bank Meeting House who had a bond with them for erecting the building. He is probably the James who witnessed baptisms in Wilton for Adam Ormiston (at Drinkstone) in 1780 and James Black (at Packhouses) in 1781. He was recorded as a merchant in 1784 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for what appears to be a Hume. He paid the Shop Tax in Hawick in 1785. He was probably owner (and not James Aitkin, as suggested in notes) of a book, 'The Duty and Advantage of Religious Conferences, Proved from Scripture and Reason' (1743) by Rev. John Wilson; this book (which survives and is in the Museum collection) passed to his direct descendant, Sir James A.H. Murray, who wrote on 3 pages at the beginning, describing the book's provenance. He was at Kelso Fair during the great Slitrig flood of 1767 and on returning was surprised to see some of his own goods left lying on the haugh at Menslaws. His house was one of those carried away by the flood waters, his wife escaping just in time by crawling along a ladder laid horizontally to an upper window of a house on the other side of Silver Street, across the rushing water (their house must have therefore been between Silver Street and the river). His bed was found stranded on the Common Haugh after the flood, with the cat still sleeping on it. He may be the 'Joseph Eckron' (written in error) whose 'whole onstead of houses' were stripped of furniture etc. during the great flood of 1767, and several people helping save items had to be rescued themselves; these houses were close to John Kedie's house and it said that the damage to them amounted to £1000. He married Isobel Betty Richardson, who was probably daughter of merchant James Richardson and died in 1764. Their children included: Elizabeth ('Betty', 1746–85), who married merchant Walter Scott in 1765; Agnes (1748–80), who married John Oliver in 1766, was mother of Margaret Oliver who married Charles Scott, and was maternal grandmother of Sir James Murray; and William (1758–60). He had another daughter, who married a Mr. Adams and emigrated to America; she gained his Silver Street property after his death, with the Crescent property going to his daughter, Agnes Oliver. Mary, who married John Thomline in 1772 may also have been his daughter (based on the names of her children). The witnesses in 1746 were shoemaker Robert Oliver and maltman John Moss and in 1758 were James Beattie and George Telfer. He also had young children who died in 1759, 1760 and 1764. He may be the James who hired the Hawick mortcloth in 1760. He witnessed baptisms for his daughter and merchant Walter Scott in 1766, 1768 and 1771. He secondly married Margaret Brown in Hawick in 1766; she was traditionally said to be his former maidservant and died in 1802. 'Mrs Eckron Mercht in Hawick', listed on the 1789 female servant tax roll, was probably his widow; she also paid the same tax in 1790. In 1790 there was a case on his behalf in Selkirk for non-payment of a bill by William Cranston formerly in Mackside, now in Clarilaw on Ale, for '5 yards Bleu cloth intrist one it for laying out'. Additionally his widow Margaret Brown had cases for non-payment against James Stoddart, tailor in Shielshaughand in 1790, against a servant of Andrew Thomson in Oakwood Mill in 1791 and against John Campbell in Fauldshope, now in Whitehillbrae in 1793. His death is recorded in Hawick in 1787. James 'The Blast' (b.1757) son of William and Elizabeth Dobbie. He was said to be a merchant and bookseller in Hawick in the latter part of the 18th century; however, it is posible he is being confused here with the man of the same name born a quarter of a century earlier. The origin of his nickname is uncertain, perhaps related to smoking. He was probably a member of the Masons. He was Cornet in 1779 and also wrote some poetry. He married Helen Turnbull (from Kirkton Parish) in Hawick in 1781. They had a daughter Janet (b.1782), possibly the 'Jane' who married Benjamin Hooven. He could be the James who is recorded as recently deceased in a letter of 1794 between Hawick men living in Pennsylvania. James (b.1793) South African settler, born in Hawick. He is sometimes said to be son of John and Ann Johnson, but that may be confusion with another James (based on the names of his children, it is possible that he was a son of James 'The Blast'). He worked as a ploughman. He was in the party of settlers of Robert Pringle (farmer at Blakelaw) who went to South Africa in 1820, and worked as a ploughman. He is mentioned in John (son of Robert) Pringle's 'Narrative of a residence in South Africa' (1834) in connection with a lion hunt. In 1832 he was sentenced to 2 years hard labour for the murder of a 'Hottentot' with whom he was living. He firstly married Elizabeth Keen (1796–1870), but they seem to have had no children. He secondly married Mary Ann Moffat (from Gloucestershire) and their children were: James (1835–1916); Margaret (b.1836) and Matthew (b.1837), who died in infancy; William Moffat (b.1838); Janet Margaret (b.1840); John (b.1842); Mary Anne (b.1844); Mathew Charles Linton (1849–1915); and Thomas Edward (1852–1925). James (b.1794) Hawick frameworker, son of John and Ann Johnson. He was living somewhere on the Back Row in 1841 and 1851 and was at 7 Back Row in 1861. He married Margaret Thomson in Ettrick in 1821. Their children include: John (b.1822); Elizabeth Anne (b.1824), who married John Rae; Andrew (b.1827); Andrew (again, b.1829); Helen (or 'Nelly', b.1831), who was a servant with grocer Adam Turnbull in 1851 and later that year married Alexander Ballantyne; Janet (b.1834), probably the Janet who married John Little in 1866; and Johnson or Johnstone (b.1839), who is said to have emigrated to America and worked as a lady's maid. A photograph of him exists. Jane (18th C.) recorded in Hawick Parish in 1787 when her daughter Janet was born. Perhaps the same 'Janet' had a child who died in Hawick in 1795 and a 'bastard child' who died in 1802. It is unclear who her parents were. John (18th C.) waulker, dyer and tenant in Hawick. He was brother of William, but the identity of their parents has not been established. The surname seems to be peculiarly Hawick and has not been found any earlier than the early 18th century; given that the local pronunciation was 'Aikren', it seems possible that it may be a coruption of another name, e.g. 'Aiken'. He was 'John Aikron in Hawick' in 1716, 'John Ekron Tenent in Hawick' in 1723 and 'Aikren' in 1725. He was 'John Aicron Tenent' in 1723 when he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker William Wright in Hawick. In 1714 he married Jean 'Dinlap' (presumably Dunlop), who was also from Hawick, this being the first known record of the surname; his name was written 'Akrin' and he was described as a 'walker'. Their children included: William (1714–80), who married Elizabeth Dobbie; John (b.1715), probably died young; Janet (b.1716); John (again, 1718–1801); Jean (1721–75), who married Robert Tudhope in 1767; Helen (b.1723); and George (b.1725). Witnesses to the 1714 baptism were Robert Henderson and Andrew Turnbull, servants to Rev. Robert Cunningham. Witnesses in 1716 were Bailies William Laing and George Martin, in 1718 were William Laing and flesher George Renwick, in 1721 were William Laing and Robert Renwick, in 1723 were George Martin and John Glendinning, and in 1725 were Robert Scott of Falnash and Hugh Somerville. In 1721 he is recorded as 'John Aikron Tenant in Hawick'. John (1718–1801) mason in Hawick, son of John and Jean Dinlap and uncle of James 'The Blast'. He may be the John who paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785–88. He may also be the carrier in Hawick recorded in a dispute over a bill in Selkirk in 1787. He married Agnes Douglas in 1752. Their children include: John (1754–1816), apparently known as 'Esau'; Mary; and Agnes (b.1762), who died young. The witnesses in 1762 were William (probably his brother) and John Scott. In 1784 and 1786 he witnessed baptisms for another John, presumably his son. John (1754–1816) probably son of John and Agnes Douglas. He was said to be known as 'Esau' (for reasons that are not clear). He married Ann Johnston (or 'Johnson', 1759–1820). Their children include: Janet (b.1782), who died young; Janet (again, b.1784), probably the 66 year old seamstress 'Jane' living at Kirkgate in 1851, and the seamer living at Kirkyard in 1841; John (b.1786); Agnes (b.1788), grocer; Ann (b.1790), probably the grocer on the Mid Row recorded on the 1841 census; Andrew (b.1792); James (b.1794), who may have moved to South Africa or have been a weaver in Hawick; Margaret (b.1796), perhaps the Margaret who married Andrew Anderson; Helen (1800–30), who married William Davidson in 1823; and Elizabeth (b.1807), who may have married John Brown in 1835. The witnesses in 1784 and 1786 were Archibald Douglas and another John (probably his father). He may be the 'John Ekron Junr.' who paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1791. He may also be the 'Jno. Ekron, junior' who was paid by the Session in 1795 to 'put away his dog which is said to be 'scathly' '. He and his wife are buried at St. Mary's. John (b.c.1790) army pensioner. He was living on the Loan in 1841, along with Agnes (about 40 years old) and James Oliver (about 15). He is probably the son of John and Ann Johnson, born in Hawick in 1786. John (d.1854) son of James and Margaret Thomson. He was listed as a framework knitter at about 28 High Street in 1851. He may also have helped his aunt as a grocer on the Fore Raw. In 1844 he married Margaret (d.1858), daughter of stocking-maker Thomas Anderson and Isabella Scott. John (1856–1916) son of Andrew and Elizabeth Stewart, he was a frame-worker who lived on O'Connell Street. In 1881 he was living at 50 O'Connell Street, in 1891 was a stockingmaker at 17 Loan and later lived at 35 Loan. He firstly married Agnes Carruthers (d.1883) in Hawick in 1875. In 1887 he secondly married Jemima Baxter (1865–1935), but separated from her after the death of their son James. His children were: Mary (b.1875), who married Andrew Wilson; Elizabeth (b.1876), who married Andrew Elliot; Andrew (b.1878), who died in infancy; Helen (or 'Nellie', 1879–1943), who married twice, had no children, and died in Edinburgh; Jane (b.1881) and John (b.1882), who died in infancy; an unnamed child (b.1883); Jane (b.1887), died in infancy; Andrew (1888–91); James (1890–1906); Margaret (b.1891), died in infancy; Janet (1892–1971), who married Hugh Gilroy and died in Glasgow; Andrew (1894–1952), who changed his name to Arthur Stewart Scott and died in Wales; Mary Jane (1897–1913); Isabella (1899–1935), who married Wilson Hogg and died in Hawick; and Jemima (b.1902), who married John Douglas also died in Hawick. Walter (1866–1909) son of Andrew and Elizabeth Stewart. He worked as a lorryman. He married Grace Thwaites, but had no children. He died in Edinburgh and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. William (17th/18th C.) workman in Hawick, probably brother of John and great-uncle of James 'The Blast'. Where he came from, or the identity of his parents, have not been established. He firstly married Mary Graham and their children included: James (1721–87); and George (b.1725). In 1726 he secondly married Margaret Douglas and their children included Marion (b.1727), who may be the Mary who married Walter Ballantyne in 1760. Witnesses to the 1721 baptism were shoemaker Robert Allan and Robert Hardie, tenant. The witnesses in 1727 were Bailie Purdom and candlemaker John Scott. William (1714–80) son of John and Jean Dunlop, he was a mason in Hawick. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism in 1762 for John (likely his brother). He married Elizabeth ('Betty') Dobbie in Hawick and their children include: James (b.1757), 'The Blast'; plus William (b.1762), Elizabeth (b.1766) and another William (b.1768), who all died young. The witnesses in 1768 were George Swan and Robert Tudhope (also spelled 'Ackren', 'Aickren', 'Aicron', 'Aikren', 'Aikrin', 'Eckrom', 'Eckron', 'Ekorn' and 'Ekrin'; this family seems to have been almost entirely based in Hawick in the 18th and 19th centuries; the origin of the name is unknown).

elbi (el-bi) n. an elbow – 'hei got an elbih in the face frae yin o' his brothers'.

elbi chair (el-bi-chār) n., arch. an armchair – 'Frae the wean to the granny in auld elbow chair' [JJ].

Elborn (el-bōrn) n. Barbara Louise, B.E.M., received the British Empire Medal for services to the community in Newcastleton in 2019.

elder (el-dur) n. a lay church officer elected by the local congregation to have official duties in the Presbyterian Church, and who, with the minister, compose the church session. In 1717 the Hawick Parish Session records lists 19 elders, each (mostly in pairs) assigned a specific area to collect monies from, 4 areas being in the Burgh and 6 in the countryside. Several of the elders were also heritors, with the others including farmers, tradesmen and the schoolmaster. In the 18th century the records show that the elders were zealous in performing their duty of overseeing the behaviour of the members of the congregation, including criticising each other, the Hawick Magistrates and even the Minister.

Elder (el-dur) n. Alexander 'Sandy' (d.1836) bookseller, printer and publisher of Peebles. His brother Walter was a bookbinder in Hawick at about the same time. Indeed, he spent some time working in the same trade in Hawick, as indicated by him being listed as 'bookbinder, Hawick' in the subscription list for Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). It is possible he was the son of John and Mary Brown born in Wilton in 1764 (and that he was thus half-brother of Walter). He is probably the Alexander who in Hawick in 1786 (along with John 'Senior', probably his father) witnessed a baptism for merchant John (presumably his brother). He gave Peebles its first lending library, where the young Robert Chambers would borrow books (Chambers later became a successful publisher and anonymously wrote a book in 1844 which contained ideas about the origin of the Earth and life). He also brought the first printing press there in 1814 (later used to produce that town's first newspaper). He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He married Elizabeth ('Betty') Oliver of Hawick in 1788 and they had 8 children. His daughter Agnes (b.1811) married Alexander 'Booky' Scott from Peebles, who took over the business on the High Street there. Alexander 'Sandy' (1820–1904) possibly a son of Walter by an earlier marriage. He was one of the last 2 coach drivers between Carlisle and Hawick (along with William Crozier). He started as a postboy at the Tower Hotel in Hawick and was recorded as 'postillion' there in 1851. When driving he would dress in a top-coat. He took over the Cross Keys Hotel in Canonbie in about 1860. In his old age he drove a 'four-in-hand' from Canonbie to the opening of the new Mosspaul Inn. David (18th C.) gardener at Borthwickbrae in 1794. He was listed as groom at Borthwickbrae in 1793, when he was working for William Elliot Lockhart. He married Helen Jardine and their children included Thomas (b.1794) and an unnamed son (b.1798). George (19th C.) married Elizabeth Rutherford in 1843, the marriage recorded in both Hawick and Hobkirk Parishes. John (1728–1816) weaver in Hawick. In 1786 he was John 'Senior' when (along with Alexander) he witnessed a baptism for merchant John (presumably his son). In 1788 both he and his son John 'Junr' witnessed a baptism for weaver John Brown. He may have witnessed a baptism for Margaret (presumably his daughter) and Alexander Inglis in 1791. He married Jean Stewart (b.1729) in 1769. It seems likely that this was his second marriage and that he had first married Mary Brown in 1756, with children: Mary (b.1757); John (b.1760); Margaret (b.1762); Alexander (b.1764), publisher in Peebles, and said to be brother to Walter; and Thomas (b.1766). In 1764 this John was living at the Sandbed, in Wilton Parish. The witnesses in 1757 were the whole congregation, in 1760 were Schoolmaster William Dyce and shoemaker John Scott and in 1764 were Thomas Scott and Robert Ormiston. His children with Jean Stewart included: Walter (b.1770); Ann (b.1771), who married Robert Henry; and Jane (b.1773). He is probably the John whose unnamed granddaughter died in Hawick in 1778. John (18th C.) book-seller in Hawick, probably the son of John born in Hawick in 1760. He was recorded as a merchant in 1786 when his daughter Janet was baptised, with witnesses John senior (probably his father) and Alexander (probably his brother). In 1788 both he and his father John 'Senr' witnessed a baptism for weaver John Brown. His daughter Peggy died in 1795. He is probably the John who married Margaret Lamb in 1783 and also had a son Walter (b.1784) in Hawick. It is possible that the Walter who married Isabel Lamb in 1790 was his brother marrying his sister-in-law. Robert (b.1797/8) frame-work knitter, originally from Peebles. He is recorded at about 41 High Street in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Isabella Farquhar and their children included: Margaret O.; Robert; Susan (b.1838), who married George Wallace; and John McRae. Robert (19th/20th C.) resident of Howahill. In 1906 he contributed to the fund for the renovation of Kirkton Kirk. Turnbull (b.1822/3) from Jedburgh, he was a tailor at Kilnknowe in Hobkirk Parish in 1841. He married Agnes Tait in 1847 and their children included Margaret, Rachel and John. Walter 'Watty' (1770–1849) bookbinder in the Fore Row and Howegate in the early 19th century. He was son of John and Jean Stewart. He was listed as a bookbinder in Hawick on the ballot for the Militia in 1799. He took part in amateur theatrical performances in about 1820. He subscribed to 12 copies of William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821 and 2 copies of Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. His brother Alexander was a bookseller and printer in Peebles (and also subscribed to Wilson's book). He was the seller for the 1836 edition of James Hogg's words for 'Teribus'. This was printed by John Elder of Edinburgh High Street, who was surely a relative of some sort. He was listed as a bookbinder on the Howegate in Pigot's 1837 directory. In 1841 he is recorded on the Kirk Wynd, still as a 'book binder', aged 70. In 1790 he married Isabel Lamb (d.1831), who was also from Hawick. Their children included: Mary (b.1791), who was 2nd wife of hairdresser James Brisbane; Jean (b.1792); John (1796–1844); Janet (b.1800); Walter (b.1802); Alexander (1804–22); and Ann (1806–31). The witnesses in 1791 were Robert Oliver and James Rae and in 1796 were John (probably his father) and James Hume. Walter (b.1802) son of Walter and Isabelle Lamb. He was a stocking frame-worker, recorded on the Fore Row in 1841, on the Kirk Wynd in 1851, at 69 High Street in 1861 and 11 Teviot Crescent in 1871. In 1835 he married Margaret (1818–1901), daughter of hardresser James Brisbane. Their children include: Walter (b.1835); Christine (b.1837); Isabella (b.1839); Janet (b.1841–65), the first to survive past infancy; James (b.1843); Sarah (b.1845); Walter (b.1847); Isabelle (b.1849); John (b.1851); John (again, b.1853), who married Ellen Turnbull; Mary Ann (1856–63); William Brisbane (b.1857); and Margaret (b.1860). Alexander (b.c.1822), coachman at the Tower Hotel, was possibly a son from an earlier marriage. Walter (1847–1926) son of Walter and Margaret Brisibane, he was born in Hawick. He married Jane Johnstone. Their son William Johnstone was born in Monkton, Ayrshire.

elderin (el-dur-in) adj., arch. growing old, advanced in years, elderly – 'An eldrin' lad' [JoHo], '... But a five-bar fence I sprang in a glance, And ran like an elderin' hare' [WaD] (also 'eldern' and 'eldrin').

Elder Knowes (el-dur-nowz) n. small hilly area to the south-west of where the Eildrig Burn meets the Borthwick Water. Here there are remains of an earthwork, about 40 m across (the name presumably derives from 'Eildrig Knowes').

elderman (el-dur-mun) n., arch. a councillor, bailie or head of a guild – '... quhilk being considered be the said bailie, and eldermen and council of the said bruche ...' [BR1641] (it is uncertain precisely who this term applied to; the same as an 'alderman' in England; not locally in use since the 17th century).

eldership (el-dur-ship) n. a body of elders, the office of being an elder – '... a new silver Bason for ye Baptisms, almost containing a pynt, qch the said Bailies present to ye sight of ye Eldership, and were well satisfied therwith' [PR1711].

eldin (el-din) n., arch. fuel of any kind, particularly peat or turf – 'This shire is plenteous of all sorts of grain, and store of Cattell but no other elding but Peats and Heather' [MGC1649], .'The tenants of Galalaw ... got the bulk of their elding, that is, peat and turf, from Wilton common' [DCW1765], '... the Deponent, got elding off the Common for the use of his ffamily, and he was never interrupted' [C&L1767].

eldin docken (el-din-do-kin) n., arch. the butterbur, Petasites vulgaris – 'What between the sloe-bushes, thorns, briars, and brambles on the scaurs and the elder-dockans [sic] on Nixon's Haugh, they were grievously wounded' [HAST1861] (G. Watson says this is a Jedburgh area word; it is incorrectly identified in 1861 as a local name for 'Tussilago petasites').

Eldinhope (el-din-hōp) n. farm in the Yarrow valley, on the B709, before the Gordon Arms Hotel, with Eldinhope Knowe to the east. It was a Crown property from 1456, mentioned many times in the exchequer Rolls. It was assigned to Sir Walter Scott in at least the period 1460–67, Alexander Scott in 1469 and Sir David Scott in the period 1475–90, transferring to the Earl of Bothwell in 1491 and remaining with him until at least 1496. In 1499 it was assigned to John Murray of Falahill and David Pringle, with sheep for the King's flocks there being mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls. In 1501 it was again assigned to Walter Scott. In 1502 it is recorded that the farm was pillaged by Adam Scott of Tushielaw and the Littles of Eskdale. It remained Crown property until at least 1510, when it was leased by John Murray and David Pringle. In 1539 William Scott complained that James Stoddart took violent possession of the lands. In 1541 the tenants were Andrew Brydon, John Blackstock, William Tait, John Hislop and Margaret Melroe, paying £92 yearly. The former tower there was built by the Scotts. John Chisholme was in Eldinhopeknow in 1579. The farm later became part of the Buccleuch estates, being mentioned in services of heirs in 1634, 1653 and 1661. 'Easter and Wester Eldinghope' are recorded in about 1680. Walter Scott was tenant in 1737. Over and Nether Eldinhope were valued at about £900 in 1785, with Eldinhopeknow valued at a further £370. Francis Scott was farmer there in the late 18th and early 19th centuries; he lived to the age of 94 and still travelled to church on a pony when he was 90. It is said that it suffered some of the heaviest losses of sheep during the harsh winter of 1794, around 120 animals. Note that it is easy to confuse with the 'Aldanehop' also referred to in the Exchequer Rolls of the late 15th century, this being 'Auldshope', whose name became the modern Annelshope in the Ettrick valley (it is 'Eldanehope' in 1456, 'Aldanehop' in 1468, 'Eldashop' in 1469, 'Eldainhope' in 1477, 'Aldanishop' in 1479, 'Auldanehop' in 1480, 'Aldanhop' in 1481, 'Aldanehope' in 1486, 'Auldanehoip' and 'Eldanhoip' in 1487, 'Eldanehop', in 1490 and 1491, 'eldanhop' in 1494/5, 'Eldinhop' in 1499, 'Eldanehop' in 1501 and 1507, 'Eldanhop' in 1502, 'Eldinhoup' in 1539, 'Eldinhope' in 1541, 'Eldinghope' in 1576, 'Eldinghop' in 1581, 'Elhoip' in 1634, 'Eldines Hope' in 1649, 'Eldingshope' in 1653 and 'Eldingeshope' in 1661; the origin of the first part may be Old English personal name 'Aldwine'; it is 'Eldenhop' and 'Eldinhope' on Gordon's c.1650 maps and 'Eldeenhoope' on Blaeu's c.1654 map, while 'Eldinhopeknow', 'Midle Eldinhope' and 'Over Eldinhope' are on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

eldrin (eld-rin) n., arch. a freshwater fish – 'How out of that pool there we drew many a fine young 'eldering' with the bait!' [BM1905].

Elec see Elick

eleck (e-lek) v., n., poet. elect – '. . . but for the eleck's sak' thae days sall be shortenet' [HSR].

Elec the Bellman (e-leek-thu-bel-mawn) n. nickname for Alexander Stainton, immortalised in a poem by William Peffers.

the Election Denner (thu-ee-lek-shin-de-nur) n. celebratory dinner of the old and new Town Councils in the 18th and early 19th centuries. It was held during October, and was at the town's expense up until about 1817.

Election Night (ee-lek-shin-nī') n. phrase sometimes used for the night of the Pickin.

Election Riot at Hawick (ee-lek-shin-rI-i'-i'-hIk) n. engraving by 'D.H. Tristam' of the supposed riot at Hawick during one of the elections of the 1830s. It appears in Cassell's 'Illustrated History of England' (c.1860). The engraving depicts a pitched battle between a crowd of men on the Auld Brig.

electit (ee-lek-tee', -ti') pp., arch. elected – '. . . quhilk council and communitie, all in ane vois, electit the said Gilbert Watt, notar, clark for ane yeir to cum . . . ' [BR1638].

electricity (e-lek-tri-si'-ee) n. first introduced publicly into Hawick by the Urban Electric Supply Company in 1901. The first electricity in town had been generated using the water wheel under Tower Mill some years earlier, this being constructed by William Melrose and William Elliot used to provide light in Mr. Elliot's house at Teviot Lodge.

ele'en (e-lee-in) n., poet. eleven – 'Than the ele'en discipels gaed awa intill Galilee . . . ' [HSR].

eleeven (e-lee-vin, a-lee-vin, u-lee-vin) n. eleven – 'At yin-and-eleevinpence-hap'ny a bag Ee daurna pit eet higher' [AY] (also spelled 'eleevin' etc.; cf. eeleeven).

eleeven hoors (e-lee-vin-oorz) n., arch. a light meal taken at 11 a.m. (see also 'le-en hoor).

eleevin see eleeven elements (e-lu-mintz) n., pl., arch. the bread and wine used at communion – 'James Gray in Whitla, James Davidson in Newbigging, with James Scott in Branxholm, by reason of their old age to wait upon the Elements' [PR1718].

the Elephant's Back (thu-e-lee-fintz-bawk) n. common name for a rock at 'the Dunk' from which diving is popular.

elevint (e-le-vint) adj., arch. eleventh – '. . . ffaithfullie maid and gevin vp be his awne mouth vpoun the ellevint day of Aprile, the zeir of God foirsaid . . . ' [SB1574], 'An' about the elevent hoor he gaed out, an' fand ithers stannin' idill . . . ' [HSR] (also written 'elevent'; cf. eeleevinth).

Elfhaugh (elf-hawch) n. former farm in the Rule valley, to the south of Braidhaugh, probably close to Cleuch Head. It is marked on Pont's manuscript map as 'Elphheuch' (which has become 'Elffhauch' on Blaeu's 1654 map) and close to the moden Mackside (although Mackside itself is marked much further to the north). It is likely to be the place transcribed as 'Elscheuch' in 1612 when John Turnbull was tenant there. Adam Turnbull was tenant there at the time of the 1694 Hearth Tax records. There is no obvious incidence of a similar name later (it appears to be 'Elpheust' in 1694; it is 'Elphheuch' on Pont's c.1590 manuscript map, 'Elfcleuch' on Gordon's c.1650 manuscript map and 'Elffhauch' on Blaeu's 1654 map).

elf-shot (elf-sho') adj., arch. said of diseased cattle, with the supposition that they have been bewitched by fairies – '. . . with any sudden disease, (the cause of which was usually ascribed to the malignant machinations of the fairies,) she was said to be elf-shot . . . ' [EM1820].

Elgee (el-jee) n. Jane Francesca Agnes (1821–96) granddaughter of a Church of Ireland Rector, she was an Irish Nationalist and poet, using the pseudonym 'Speranza'. In 1847 she visited Rev. William Grant and his wife Jane Dickson at Cavers Manse and may have written the poem 'Vanitas' when there, some verses from it appearing in the visitors' book there. While in the Borders she met Jedburgh tweed manufacturer John Hilson and started corresponding with him. She married Sir William Wilde and their children included the poet and playwright Oscar Wilde.

Elibank (e-lee-bawngk) n. ruined 16th century tower overlooking the Tweed, between Galashiels and Walkerburn. It was home of Sir Gideon Murray from 1594, who married off his daughter 'Muckle-mou'd Meg' to William Scott of Harden in 1611. The ballad version of the story was popularised in Hogg's 'Fray at Elibank'. Sir Patrick Murray (sister of 'Muckle Mou'd Meg') became the 1st Lord of Elibank in the 17th century, and his great-great-grandson was Gen. James, first Governor-General of Canada. A more modern house was built there in the 1840s – 'But when they arrived on the Elibank green, The yett was shut, and the east grew pale; They slinkit away, wi' the tears i' their een, To tell to Auld Harden their sorrowfu' tale' [ES] (also called 'Elibank Castle' and formerly 'Eliburn'; it is 'Elibank' and 'Elybank' on Gordon's c.1650 maps).

elieven see eleeven

Eliott (e-li', e-lee-i', el-yi') n. (see also Elliot) Alexander (1805–83) youngest son of Sir William of Stobs, christened in Cavers Parish. He was a naval storekeeper at Devonport. He was appointed as a trustee of his brother's Wells and Haddon estates in 1863. He died unmarried. Alexander Boswell (1830–82) 2nd son of Sir William Francis of Stobs. He was christened at Cavers. He was in the Royal Navy for a short period. In 1855 he married Katharine Wigrane, daughter of John Craigie, a builder in Portobello. This was apparently just 5 days after they met, with her being just 16, and the couple eloping to Lamberton Toll Bar near Berwick. With his wife pregnant, neither family approving and him not having a job, he enlisted in the 17th Regiment of Foot and was sent to India, while his wife and son went off to America with his brother-in-law James and settled in Chicago. He later obtained a divorce and secondly married Annabella, daughter of Neil Carmichael. His children were Arthur Boswell (only child with his first wife, who inherited Stobs from his uncle William Francis), Alexander Boswell Vassal (who married Hannah Josephina Kavanagh and settled in Australia), Charles James (who settled in Alaska), and Rawdon Popham Vassal (who married Nellie Thompson and died in Alaska). Archibald of Middlestead (17th C.) 3rd son of 'Gibbie wi the Gowden Gartens'. He inherited the lands of Middlestead and Blackmiddings in Ettrick from his father, according to a charter of 1637. He signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638 (along with his brothers Gavin and Gilbert). In 1662 he was fined £ for supporting the Commonwealth and then his lands were 'appraised from him' to pay his debts. There are no records of him after that. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir John Learmonth of Birkhill. Archibald of Craigend and Deanfoot (d.c.1683) 2nd son of William of Stobs. He inherited Craigend from his uncle Gilbert. In 1656 he witnessed the resignation by Edward Lorraine of the lands of Appotside and Tythehouse in Rulewater (in favour of William Elliot of the Binks and Harwood) and another contract in which the Lorraines reserved a small piece of land for themselves. He had at least 2 children, Gilbert and John. His son Gilbert was served as heir in 1683 to his lands of Craigend, Deanfoot and Minto. Archibald (1710–59) younger son of Sir Gilbert, 3rd Baronet of Stobs. He was born at Stobs and baptised in Cavers Parish. He was a merchant in London, being Secretary to Ramsgate Harbour. He married Frances Seer in 1737. He had an only child, Vernon (who was left a legacy by his uncle William). Sir Arthur Boswell of Stobs (1856–1926) 9th Baronet and Chief of the Elliots. Born at Portobello, he was the only son of Alexander Boswell and his first wife Catherine Craigie. He never really knew his father, being taken by his mother to join his uncle James Craigie in Chicago when only a few months old. He returned to Britain to attend school, but his mother's condition was that he not see his father. He spent the holidays with his aunt Blanche, but also was not allowed to see his uncle Sir William (due to the dispute between his aunt and uncle). After school he moved to Australia, where there were several Eliott relatives. There he purchased a sheep farm, but was forced to return to Britain after several droughts. He then tried dairy farming in the United States. He succeeded his uncle Sir William in 1910, but by then Stobs and Wells had both been sold. He received some compensation for these sales, and invested it in his father-in-law's business in Burbank, which failed. After difficult years, he made a career as a stockbroker in Boston and then New York. In 1884 he married Lilla, daughter of John Burbank of Boston and had 3 children: Sir Gilbert Alexander Boswell, who succeeded; Marie Vera Margaret Emily Boswell, who married Edward Bois Cowles and secondly John Francis Barry and died in the Bahamas; and Beatrice Maud Boswell, who married Frank V. Burton. He died while visiting his son near New York and was brought to Scotland to be buried in Cavers Kirkyard. His wife was also buried there in 1945. Sir Arthur Francis Augustus Boswell of Stobs and Redheugh (1915–89) 11th Baronet and 28th Chief of the Elliots. He was elder son of Sir Gilbert and Flourney Hopkins. Born in New York, he was educated at Harrow and Cambridge, where he studied economics. He joined his father in the City, and became a Member of the London Stock Exchange before WWII. He served in the K.O.S.B. and King's African Rifles during WWII. After the War he returned to the city, becoming a member of the Stock Exchange Council in 1965 and retiring in 1968. He then spent more time in Scotland. He was therefore able to move the family seat back to Redheugh after many generations. Along with Lady Eliott he started the Eliott Clan Society. He was a member of the Royal Company of Archers. He was Common-Riding Chief Guest in 1978. In 1947 he married Frances Aileen, elder daughter of Lt.-Col. Sir Francis Kennedy McClean (a British flight pioneer). They had a single child, Margaret Frances Boswell. Charles (1709–56) son of Sir Gilbert, 3rd Baronet of Stobs, he was born in London. He trained as a lawyer. He was a member of the 3rd Provincial Council of Charleston, South Carolina and served as Attorney General for North Carolina for a few months before he died. He is buried at the Episcopal Church, New Bern, Craven County, North Carolina. His gravestone is inscribed 'An honest lawyer indeed'. Charles (18th C.) son of the 2nd Gilbert of Stanedge. He was Master of a ship in the Lisbon trade. Charles (1800–19) 6th son of Sir William, 4th Baronet of Stobs. He served with the East India Company. He was killed during the siege of the fort at Capaul-droog. Charles Joseph Alexander (1937–) 12th Baronet of Stobs, distant cousin of the 11th Baronet. He married Wendy Baily in 1959 and had 5 children. Sir Daniel (1798–1872) christened in Cavers, he was the 4th son of Sir William of Stobs. He was at school at Houghton-le-Spring in Durham, along with his 3 brothers, and he later attended Edinburgh Academy. He joined the East India Company, attending their college in Haileybury 1815–17 and at the age of 19 he sailed to Madras. He showed an aptitude for Indian languages and law. He was appointed deputy Tamil translator to the Madras Government in 1822 and Maráthá translator in 1823. In 1838 was appointed as the Madras member of the Indian Law Commission, helping to draw up the Indian codes. By 1848 he was a member of the Council of Madras and in 1850 became President of the Revenue, Marine and College Board of the Madras Government. He returned to Britain in 1853, but returned a year later to be Madras representative of a new sepreme legislative council for India, and remained there until 1860. In 1867 he received the order of the Star of India. In 1818 he married Georgina, daughter of Gen. George Russell of the Bengal Army. They had 3 surviving sons and 6 daughters: William Russell (1820–93), who became a Major-General and married Jessie Mcintosh and Frances Helen Cloete; Henry Manning (1827–94), also a Major-General, married Jessie Fennell; Edward Frederick (1834–73), also joined the Indian Civil Service and married Rykie Sophia Cloete; George Augustus Robertson, who probably died young; Georgina Mary, married John Hutcheson Fergusson; Caroline Mary (d.1895), married Col. Charles Colville Young; Emma (d.1856), married Richard Stuart Palmer; Mary Bethia (d.1854), married Maj.-Gen. W.C. Russell; Cecilia Wheatley (1832–82), married Maj.-Gen. Eustace Hill; and Claudine Francis Leonora (d.1877), married Rev. T.D. Gray. He died at The Boltons, West Brompton, London. Dora Flournoy nee Hopkins (20th C.) wife of Sir Gilbert of Stobs. She carried out 40 years of research into the family history. Dorothy (16th/17th C.) daughter of Gavin of Stobs. She was served as heir (along with her sister Esther and niece Jean) in 1607. Shortly afterwards her half-brother Gilbert purchased Stobs, although it took him until 1614 to pay the amount in full and became sole owner of Stobs. She married George Haliburton of Pinnacle before 1608 and had children. Elizabeth (17th C.) daughter of 'Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters'. She married John Turnbull of Minto in 1641 (although Turnbull was technically too young), and their son John became Laird of Minto. She long survived her husband and lived at Hillhouse. It is possible she was the 'Lady Minto' recorded paying £200 in Southdean Parish on the Land Tax Rolls of 1643. Her nephew, Gilbert Elliot, would later purchase the estate and become Lord Minto. Ellinor Jane Augusta (1829–34) daughter of Sir William Francis of Stobs and Wells. There is a memorial plaque to her in Bedrule Kirk stating that she 'died after a lingering illness born with the most exemplary patience, aged 4 years 11 months'. Capt. Elliot (1712–45) younger son of Gilbert, 3rd Baronet, brother of John, William, Gilbert, Anne, Charles, Archibald, Gavin and George. He was born at Stobs a few weeks before a major fire there and was christened at Cavers. His first name was spelled like the non-Stobs branches of the family. He served in the Royal Navy, being 3rd Lieutenant on H.M.S. Argyll, then spending some time in the West Indies and in the merchant service. He was a Lieutenant on the St. George in 1742 and a year later was Captain on the H.M.S. Lively, on which he died at sea. He also captained the fireship Aetna, on which his young distant cousin John Elliot (son of Capt. John Elliot and Jean Grieve) served. In his will he left money to his nephew Vernon and nieces and Anne and Eleanor. Esther (16th/17th C.) daughter of Gavin, 1st Laird of Stobs. In 1607 she and her sister Dorothy, along with their niece Jean, were served heirs to Stobs. Shortly afterwards she sold her share to her half-brother Gilbert, 'Gibbie wi the Gowden Gartins'. She married Gilbert Ker of Lochtour, eldest son of John of Hirsel, and had children with him. Sir Francis of Stobs (d.1791) eldest son of Sir John, he was named after his aunt, Lady Frances de Nassau d'Averquerque, who was wife of Col. William Elliot of Wells, and a close friend of his parents. When young he served with the 3rd Regiment of Foot Guards. He was still 'younger' in 1761, when listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire. He succeeded in 1768 as the 5th Baronet, having already been favoured by his grandfather, who changed his will to leave all his personal estate to him (under the condition that he lived continuously at Stobs). He was known locally as 'Frankie o the Stobs' and was said not to have kept up his position in society and to have made a poor marriage (i.e. he mixed with common people!). He planned the new mansion at Stobs, but died before building work commenced. He was on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He was taxed for having 2 saddle or carriage horses in 1785, then 3 or 4 in the years 1786–91. He was also taxed for having a 4-wheeled carriage in the years 1785–91 and also for having 2 male servants from 1778–91 and 2 female servants in the period 1785–91. He was said to be in ill-health in 1788 when listed on the roll of voters in Roxburghshire. In 1788 his lands of Stobs and Lymiecleuch in Cavers Parish, together with teinds acquired from Douglas of Cavers, were valued at about £3000; at the same time his lands in Kirkton Parish (including Acreknowe, Barnes, Birkwood, Dodburn, Horselee, Newton, Smithfieldhaugh, Turn, Whitehillbrae, Winnington and Winningtonrig) were valued at £1846 13s 4d, and in Hobkirk Parish he held Hallrule, Billerwell and part of Hawthornside valued at £2355 16s 8d. It is unclear where he lived after inheriting the Stobs estates, since the mansion has burned down. However, he may have been involved with plans for a new house before he died. He was probably also the Eliott of Stobs who was one of the trustees for the Langlands estate during its last years. He was said to have been the only heritor who did not share in the spoils of the Division of Hawick's Common. In Edinburgh in 1767 he married Euphan (or Euphemia) Dickson (or Dixon), daughter of the Galashiels piper. They had 4 children: William (b.1767), who succeeded; Capt. John (d.1795), who died at sea; Anne (b.1771), who was baptised at Cavers; and Mary (d.1826), who married a Mr. Guy. He had a stroke in 1784 (after dining at Sinton with James Grieve of Branxholm Park, Gilbert Chisholme, and Mr. Riddell) and never fully recovered. Francis Willoughby (1832–82) younger son of Gilbert, who was Speaker of the Queensland Parliament. He was born in Scotland, and baptised in Melrose Parish. He emigrated to Australia when he was 7 years old. He married Sarah Jane Richards and they had 6 sons and 2 daughters. Gavin or 'Gawain', 'Gawin', etc. (d.1606/7) Laird of Stobs, also 'of Bailielee' and 'of Horsleyhill'. He was probably the 5th son of Gavin Elliot of Horsleyhill (with his 2nd wife) and was descended from the Elliots of Redheugh. It is sometimes claimed incorrectly that he was a son of William Elliot of Larriston and Mary Scott (daughter of Sir Walter of Buccleuch). He gained Bailielee after the death of his brother Andrew in 1563/4 and execution of his brother Robert in 1564. He was acquitted of any involvement in the 1564 murder of David Scott of Hassendean, and gained the escheat of his 3 relatives who were executed for the crime. He is probably the 'Gawin Ellott in Skelfhill' recorded in 1569 when he signed a bond of security in Hawick for his tenants, with the 'young Laird of Greneheid' (probably a Ker) acting as surety for him; he had 9 tenants at that time, including on farms at Skelfhill and Priesthaugh. In 1569 he was managing the lands of Skelfhill, Peelbrae and Penagushope for the young Robert Elliot of Redheugh (probably his stepson) when he signed the 'Band of Teviotdale' promising the Regent Moray to suppress rebels. He was 'of Skelfhill' when he was one of the designated relief pledges for Gavin Elliot of Falnash in 1569. Also in 1569 he was 'Gawin Ellot of Skelfhill' when there was an order from the Privy Council that he should enter into the Regent's custody on 8 days warning, wherever he should be. Also in 1569 he was surety for 9 men, who were presumably his tenants. His plege in 1569 was 'young Greneheid' and his son (actually step-son) Robert promised to enter if his father required it. He was sold Horsleyhill by his nephew William in 1569, but it seems that young William had also sold the same lands to his brother William, who won the court case to keep them in 1573/4. In 1573 a complaint is recorded against him before the Privy Council (when he was listed as brother of William of Horsleyhill); William Douglas of Cavers complained that he had no right to occupy his lands of Caveling. He is listed as 'of Bailielee' in 1573, when, along with his wife Jean Scott, he complained that his servant James Storie was attacked on his newly purchased 6 merk land of Chamberlain Newton; the attackers were Walter and John Scott, possessors of the other half of Chamberlain Newton (they were step sons of Margaret Turnbull, widow of David Elliot, who was also from the Horsleyhill Elliots). Later in 1573 Margaret Turnbull and Walter Scott promised not to harm him, his wife, their children and servants. In 1575 he is probably the Gavin, brother of William Elliot of Horsleyhill who was ordered to appear in reference to the feud between the Pringles and the Elliots. He is 'in Skelfhill' in 1575/6 when he complained that he was owed the 'mails' for his steading of Bailielee. He is probably the Gavin who Walter Scott found surety not to molest in 1576. In 1581 he was 'of Baillielie' when he James McDougall of Makerstoun gave sasine of an annual rent in Makerstoun to him and his wife Janet Scott. In 1581 he was witness to the sasine whereby Gavin Gledstains inherited the land of Stobs from his deceased brother George Gledstains of Stobs. He was first to gain the lands at Stobs, purchasing them before 1584 from Gavin Gledstains of Stobs. Thereafter he was referred to as being 'of Stobs'. In 1584/5 he was 'Gawin Ellot of the Stobbis' when listed among the Border Lairds who had to appear before the Privy Council to explain how they were helping to keep peace on the Border. In 1586 he was listed among leaders in upper Teviotdale in instructions from the King to his Lieutenant on the Border. In 1587 Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, acted as cautioner for him to appear. In 1587/8 he had Home and Cairncross cautioners for presenting Robert Elliot of Redheugh. In 1588 he was on a list of Borders 'masters and landlords' ordered to appear before the Privy Council. In 1589 he was on a list of Border Lairds who failed to appear before the Privy Council to give 'thair gude advise anent the gude reule and quietnes of the Bordouris' and were denounced as rebels. About 1590 he was listed among the landed men of the Borders. Also in 1590 he was listed as one of the sureties for the entry of Robert Elliot of Redheugh and he was mentioned in a case where the Earl of Angus was ordered to relieve the King of certain 'bills' of English complainant. In 1591 he promised not to harm Marjorie Hamilton, widow of Robert Elliot of Redheugh (probably his stepson), with Gilbert of Kirkton as his cautioner. In 1592 he was a tutor to William of Horsleyhill, his grand-nephew (although he had to fight a court case to win this right over William's father's half-brother, also William). Also in 1592 his cautioner was Thomas McDougall of Makerstoun that he would not reset any of those who had supported the Earl of Bothwell. There is a bond of 1594/5 in which James Gledstains of Cocklaw pledges that Hector and Richard Turnbull of Clarilaw shall not harm him or William Elliot of Horsleyhill; presumably there was a feud at the time between the two families. Also in 1594/5 he as surety for Gilbert Elliot of the Mains that he would pay taxes for lands in Teviotdale to James Douglas of Cavers. He is probably the Gavin among the Elliots who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. He is probably the 'Gawen Ellot who said he was Buccleuch's depity' recorded in an English letter in 1597 giving excuses for not delivering up Scottish prisoners. In 1600 he was among leaders from the Borders who were ordered to attend a meeting at Falkland to discuss 'the present disordouris of the Bourdours'. Also in 1600 he was on the 'retour' for the Kers of Cessford. He signed a bond among Border Lairds in 1602 for keeping the peace. Also in 1602 he was 'of Horsliehill' when he and Walter Scott of Harden were cautioners for Kinmont Willie Armstrong. In 1603 he is on a long list of local landowners to whom the Baron of Hassendean (James Cunninghman, Earl of Glencairn) issued a 'summons of removing' to vacate their lands. He married Jean (or Janet) Scott, sister of Buccleuch (but it is unclear which one) and widow of Robert of Redheugh; it has been suggested that the marriage was part of attempts to end the feud between the Elliots and Scotts in the 1560s. His surviving children were: Jean, who married Thomas Rutherford of Edgerston, and pre-deceased her father; Dorothy, who married George Haliburton of Pinnacle; and Esther, who married Gilbert Ker of Lochtour. His wife brought him 5 step-sons, including the young Robert Elliot of Redheugh (who acted as surety for him on several occasions). There is a suggestion that he may have been father of Gilbert, 'Gibby wi the Gowden Gartins', although information about these early generations are unclear (and there are claims that the pair were entirely unrelated). Having no sons of his own, he appointed his (probable) stepson Gilbert along with Gilbert Ker of Lochtour (his son-in-law) as executors, shortly before his death, and they were also appointed as factors and attorneys by his widow in 1608. When he died he held no fewer than 19 farms (which he had run with his stepson Gilbert's help). His daughters Dorothy, and Esther and grand-daughter Jean Rutherford inherited Stobs in 1607. There was another service of heirs in 1619, to Dorothy and Esther and also his great-grandson Robert, with a further service to these 3 in 1621. However, most of the Stobs estate was purchased in 1607 by Gilbert 'Gibbie wi the Gowden Gairtens'. Gavin or 'Gawin' (c.1625–bef. 1678) of Grange, ancestor of the family of Midlem Mill, and also of the Elliots of Minto. He was probably born at Stobs, 4th son of 'Gibby wi the Gowden Gartins'. He was 'of Grange' in 1640 when he and his wife had a charter of North Prieston and Sunderland Hall. He is recorded in 1643 being in possession of Midlem Mill as well as North Prieston in Bowden Parish and part of Grange in Ancrum Parish (valued at £260). He was apparently a royalist, his actions on behalf of the King in 1645 and 1646 were enough to grant his son Gilbert remission in 1685 for being involved in the Argyll rising. He was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1648. He was appointed Commissioner of Excise in 1661 and was a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire in 1663. He settled Midlem on his son Robert in 1653, followed by 'Graystainhauch' in 1671. He also appears to have sold Grange before he died. He paid tax for Midlem on the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. In 1688 Walter Scott of Satchells dedicated part of his 'Post'ral' to him, referring to him as uncle to Sir William of Stobs. He firstly married Mary Bennett, probably in Jedburgh (and she died without children); given the connection between the Bennetts of Chesters and the lands of Grange, his first wife was probably from that family. In 1646 he secondly married Margaret, daughter of Andrew Hay of Haystoun, Principal Clerk of Sessions. His sons were Robert Elliot of Midlem Mill and Gilbert Elliot, the first Lord Minto (note the change of surname spelling). However, these early generations are somewhat uncertain, and so the exact connection between the Eliotts of Stobs and the Elliots of Minto may never be known. His eldest daughter was Margaret, who was the mother of Rev. Robert Lithgow of Ashkirk. Gavin (17th C.) 2nd (or perhaps 3rd) son of William of Stobs. He had a will registered in 1684. He married Jean Nicolson (perhaps related to his sister-in-law, Magdelen Nicolson), receiving a dowry of £20,000 Scots. She transferred all her effects to him in a document of 1687 in which their son Gavin is mentioned. He may have earlier married Barbara Creighton. Along with his nephew Gilbert of Stonedge, he had a bond with John Turnbull in 1691. Gavin (b.1713) younger son of Sir William of Stobs. Like several of his brothers he served in the East India Company. He captained a large trading ship. He died in India before 1756. Gen. George Augustus (1717–90), Lord Heathfield and Baron Gibraltar, he was 9th and youngest son of the 3rd Baronet of Stobs, Sir Gilbert. He was born at Wells House where the family were living after Stobs House burned down (although there is also a tradition that he was born while his parents were visiting their farm at Hallrule). He was educated by private tutor at Stobs, then in Leyden and at the École Royale du génie militaire in Picardy. He returned to Scotland at the age of 18 and obtained his warrant at Woolwich in 1739. He worked his way through the ranks in different regiments and was wounded at the Battle of Dettingen in Germany, serving with the Horse Grenadier Guards. In 1759 he left to raise a new regiment called the 15th or Light Regiment of Dragoons, commonly called 'Elliot's Horse'. He was well known for strict discipline among his troops. They fought in the War of Austrian Succession, the Seven Years' War and the War of American Independence. He was involved in the capture of Havana in 1762, the spoils from which meant that he could purchase the estate of Bailey Park in Heathfield Parish, Eastbourne in 1766. He spent about a decade back in Britain during times of peace. However, he is probably best known for his stint as Commander of Gibraltar, successfuly defending the rock against a $3\frac{1}{2}$ year siege by the Spanish. After the victory he was made a Knight Bachelor by George III, and in 1787 was made Lord Heathfield, Baron Heathfield of Gibraltar. He retired to London, recovering from a stroke. However, he asked to be reappointed as Governor of Gibraltar, essentially desiring to end his days there, but died when visiting Aachen (now in Germany) on the way. He was said to have been extremely disciplined, setting an example for the men on Gibraltar, where he was 'perhaps, the most abstemious man of the age. His food is vegetarian and he drinks water. He never sleeps more than four hours at a time ... He has so inured himself to habits of hardiness that the things that are difficult and painful to other men are to him daily practice'. Robert Burns was referring to him when he wrote 'Yet let my country need me, with Elliot to head me, I'd clatter on my stumps at the sound of a drum'. He married Anne Pollexfen Drake, a distant relative of Sir Francis Drake, and she died in 1772. Their children were: Francis Augustus (1750–1813), 2nd and last Lord Heathfield; and Anne Pollexfen, who married John Trayton Fuller of Brightling, Sussex. He built a mansion on the Heathfield estate, called Ashdown House, designed by Benjamin Latrobe, which became a boys' school. The Museum has one of his walking sticks, presented by Thomas Turnbull in 1856. There is a portrait of him by Joshua Reynolds in the National Gallery, he is depicted in the huge painting 'The Defeat of the Floating Batteries at Gibraltar', which is the centrepiece of the London Guildhall Gallery, and a statue of him is in the Alameda Gardens at Gibraltar – 'Brave Elliot, as you all well know, Gibraltar's rock protected: And well he beat the Spanish foe, Tho' by a Duke directed. A scene like this you soon will see In Roxburghshire repeated: And Dukes and Dons again will be By Elliot's name defeated' [T]. Adm. George Augustus (1799–1872) 5th son of Sir William of Stobs, he was born in Cavers Parish and named after his great uncle, Lord Heathfield. He served in the Royal Navy, entering the Royal Naval College in 1812, being Midshipman from 1816, Lieutenant in 1818. He received the order of the Redeemer of Greece for defending a siege at Patras. He became Commander in 1835, Captain in 1838, Rear Admiral and 1857 and rose to the rank of Admiral in 1869. In 1837 he married Alice Anne, only daughter of Thomas N. Jeffrey, Collector of Customs at Halifax, Nova Scotia. He secondly married Harriett Sophia West, daughter of the Admiral of the Fleet. His children were: George Augustus (1838–84), a Major, who married Helen Jane Gallen and Mary Anna Crampton; and Francis John Jeffrey (1844–1903), Naval Captain, who married Florence Caroline Schmidt. He had descendants in South Africa. Gideon (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Mary Haliburton and their children baptised in Hawick were: Jean (b.1719); Barbara (b.1720); and Simon (b.1722). Gilbert 'Gibbie wi the Golden Gartins' (d.1634)

of Stobs and of Horsleyhill. From his seal it seems clear he was directly related to the Elliots of Redheugh. His parentage is uncertain, some accounts (e.g. Scott of Satchells) saying he was the son of Elliot of Larriston and a Scott of Buccleuch, while a Liddesdale tradition states that he was an illegitimate child of William (or Robert) Elliot of Larriston (or Redheugh) with Maggie (or Helen) Kidd. However, it seems most likely that he was a younger son of Robert, the 16th Chief and Jean Scott, and step-son of Gavin of Stobs (who was the 2nd husband of Jean Scott). He helped Gavin run his farms and shortly before Gavin's death in 1606/7 was appointed as one of his executors and trustees. He may also be the Gilbert 'of the Kirktoun' who in 1591 was cautioner for Gavin of Stobs in a promise not to harm Marjorie Hamilton, widow of Robert Elliot of Redheugh. There are many variants on his nickname ('Gowden', 'Garties', 'Garters', etc.), which presumably arose from his choice of colour of device for keeping his socks up! He may be the Gilbert who, along with several other Elliots, signed the bond with the Regent Morton in 1572. He is probably the 'Gebbe Ellot his brother', named after Robert, chief of the Elliots in a letter written by English Border officials in 1583. He is said to have been at the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596 and may have acted as a hostage for one of the Scotts after when they were captured after a raid on Gilsland in 1597. He is probably the 'Gybb Elwood allias Robes Gibb' who, along with Scott of Buccleuch and Scott of Harden, met with Englishmen a few days before to plan details of the raid; if this was him, then it would verify that he was a son of Robert. He may be the Gilbert of 'Hardlisdale' (possibly Horsleyhill) who was one of the leading Elliots and Armstrongs to write to Lord Scrope to get their family hostages freed from England in 1599. In 1600 he gained the lands of 'Elinburn, Schawis alias Middelsteid of Gield in Ettrick forest' from William Cranston (as registered in 1608). He may be the 'Gilbert Ellot' who signed the 'General Band' among Border Lairds in 1602. He is probably the 'Gilbert Elliot of Horsliehill' coming after Gavin of Stobs in the list of local men served a 'summons of removing' by the Baron of Hassendean in 1603; and he may be the Gilbert of 'Horsbiehill' who was on the 'retour' panel for Tweedie of Drumelzier. He was clearly a man of local importance and wealth, since in 1607 he bought Stobs from the heirs of Gavin Elliot (probably his step-father), paying off the full amount of 15,000 merks and being formally infefted by the superior Sir John Cranston of that Ilk in 1614. In 1607 he purchased Baxtonlees from John Home, as well as 'Carlinghall, Lailsell, Brounishall, Brumesclewis and Roberthill' from Hector Turnbull of Stanedge. In 1608 he purchased 'Danzeltoun' from James MacDowgall of Makerstoun. In 1609 he purchased 'Harwood in Fairnileyes and Stenletch' from Hector Turnbull. In 1610 he was recorded as 'of Horsliehill' when he stood as cautioner for Walter Scott of Harden and his sons Walter, Francis and Hugh, that they would not harm Walter Scott in Hawick, called Todshawhill, George his son, Thomas Scott, called of Ormiston, and his brother Alexander. Also in 1610 he complained to the Privy Council that Will Scott of Northhouse and his brother Hob 'assaulted him in the town of Hawik with drawn swords, and would have slain him but for his own better defence and help of certain inhabitants of the said town'; this was presumably related to a dispute over land, with the same William Scott being accused in 1608 of attacking Stobs (just before he took over ownership), threatening to burn 'all the evidents and writs of the said lands' unless they got what they wanted. In 1611 he purchased lands in Ettrick from his sister's father-in-law Gilbert Ker of Lochtour and bought further lands from him in 1628. In 1616 he bought the lands of Middle Mains of Hassendean and Horsleyhill from the Earl of Home; in 1630, along with his eldest son William, he resigned the lands on receipt of the agreed 8,000 merks from James, Earl of Home. In 1617 he (and his son Gilbert) had a 'wadset' with John Turnbull of Barnhills and purchased Wester Barnhills from Turnbull in 1618. Also in 1617 he appeared before the Privy Council with a number of other Border lairds to renew the bond for the good behaviour of his supporters and tenants. In 1620 he resigned the reversion on half of Glenkerry and Midgehope to Walter Scott of Tushielaw. Also in 1620 he complained about Walter Gledstains of Cocklaw not repaying him for a series of loans. In 1622 he was fined for not being on a jury in Edinburgh. Also in 1620 he purchased Corriesike, Langbyre, Giddenscleuch and part of Caerlenrig from Douglas of Cavers. In 1621 he had a charter for Hangingside and he also purchased the lands of Winnington and Winningtonhall from Robert Elliot of Redheugh. He is recorded in the Commissioners' Court of 1622 as having some sheep stolen from his land at Kershope in 1621 and again in 1623. And in 1623 William Wilson (of Carlisle) was hanged after being found guilty of stealing 6

sheep and 13 goats from his lands at Stobs and Teviothead, while Adam Turnbull, mille in Hartsgarth, was acquitted of stealing cows from his lands of 'Leisburne'. Also in 1623 he was on the commission (representing Roxburghshire) to discuss the export of Scottish wool to England. He is supposed to have been a great hunter of deer, and at one point angered King James by hunting on his land. He was probably the 'Sir Gilbert' mentioned in the song 'Rattlin Roarin Willie', who captured William Henderson. In 1628 he is listed among the major landowners who met to elect M.Ps. for Roxburghshire. In 1628 he received the lands of Middlestead and Blackmiddings (in Ettrick), in 1630 he gained the lands of Hartshaugh and the Kirklands of Kirkton and in 1632 he received a charter of the lands of 'Town o Rule' and was involved in a 'wadset' for the lands of Harwood (although this may have been another Gilbert). Also in 1632, he is recorded as owner of the lands of 'the Hill, Streuchehill alias Stitchelhill, Laidhop and Qhithop' (probably Laws Hill, Stitchel Hill, Laidlehope and Whitrope) in Liddesdale. He is sometimes referred to as the earliest ancestor of the Eliotts of Stobs, although the family history around this time is uncertain (and his relationship to the previous Gavin of Stobs is unclear). He married Margaret Scott ('Maggy Fendy'), and had 11 children. His wife's parents were 'Auld Wat' of Harden and Margaret Scott, 'the Flower of Yarrow'. A story is told about how he stayed under his father-in-law's roof after his marriage, with Auld Wat making the condition for his board being the plunder of the first harvest moon. His children were: William (d.1654), who succeeded him; Gilbert of Craigend and Hartshaugh (d.1680); Archibald of Middlestead; Gavin of Grange and Midlem Mill, father of the 1st Lord Minto; John (d.1639), advocate in Edinburgh; James (d.bef. 1661), married Margaret Elliot of Redheugh, heiress of Larriston; Elizabeth, married John Turnbull of Minto; Jean, married Robert Pringle of Blindlee; Margaret, married Andrew Scott of Fawside; Esther, who married Andrew Ker, ancestor of the Scott-Plummers of Sunderland Hall; and Anne, married Andrew Bell of Colross, Kelso. He is also said to have had an illegitimate daughter who married Simon Elliot of Binks. His wife was listed as liferenter of lands in Kirkton Parish in 1643; she may also have been the 'Mar. Scott, gudewife of Horsliehill' who was owner of lands in Hassendean Parish in 1643. Since he is said to have died in 1634, he is probably not the 'G. Elliot of Stobbes' who signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638; this was more likely to be his son Gavin, who signed it along with his brothers Gilbert of Craigend and Archibald of Middlestead. Gilbert of Craigend and Hartshaugh (d.1680) 2nd son of 'Gibbie wi' the Golden Gartins'. In earlier records he was Laird of Hartshaugh. He is mentioned in the 1623 Circuit Court records (along with 'Archie Ellott of Bowholme') as cautioner for 'Will Ellott of Hiesches'. In 1630 he was witness to his father Gilbert and brother William redeeming the lands of Hassendean and Horsleyhill for payment from James, Earl of Home. A contract of 1632 (between Rev. William Weir, Francis Hamilton and Edward Lorraine) records that he was given certain lands of Harwood. He held a 'wadset' from Edward Lorraine in 1633 in exchange for the lands of Tythehouse. And in 1638 he had an agreement with William, son of Simon Elliot of the Binks over teinds of Harwood and Tythehouse. In 1637 he witnessed a deed of Robert of Redheugh to his daughter and son-in-law. He signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638. Both he and his wife were described as 'zealous Presbyterians'. There is a crown charter of 1638 in the name of him and his wife for the lands of Craigend and Deanfoot, and where he is described as 'of Hartisheuche'. In 1643 he is recorded as owner of land in Minto Parish (specifically Craigend and Deanfoot), valued at £660 and land in Abbotrule Parish, valued at £65 (this probably being part of Hartshaugh). In 1643 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire and also the Committee of War for the county in 1643, 1644 and 1649. In 1649 he gave a discharge of 52 merks Scots to William Elliot of Harwood, as the part owed to him for the lands of Harwood, Tythehouse and Tythehousefield. He was recorded in a document relating to the lands of Appotside in 1656. He may be the Gilbert who in 1661 witnessed a baptism for Archibald (perhaps his brother) in Ashkirk Parish. He was fined £1200 in 1662, after the Restoration. He paid tax on £660 in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1663 and 1678 in Minto Parish. He may also be the Gilbert whose land of 'Killnow' in Hobkirk Parish was valued at £80 in 1678. In 1678 he was one of the Commissioners for Roxburghshire to raise money for the King. He married Alison Ker (from an unknown branch of the Kers), but died without issue. He was succeeded in the lands of Craigend by Archibald, 2nd son of his brother William. His wife, Lady Craigend leased the lands to Edinburgh 'writer' Thomas Porteous in 1686; she is mentioned by Rev. John Livingstone of Ancrum as one of the Covenanter supporters in Teviotdale and was fined in 1684 for refusing to give up her religious principles. Sir Gilbert of Stobs (d.c.1683) eldest son of William of Stobs and grandson of 'Gibby wi the Gowden Gartins'. In 1648 he was 'fiar thairof' listed after his father on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the Borders. In 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire along with his father. He was an ardent royalist and served in the army, commanding a troop in Sir Walter Scott of Whitslade's regiment of horse. In 1650 he was named (along with his father and several Scotts) as one of the 'tutors' for the children of Francis Earl of Buccleuch in his will and also served as one of the 'tutors testamentars' for the will of Francis. In 1651, along with his father, he bought Stonedge and Woollee (later Wolfelee) from Lord Cranstoun, his brother-in-law. However, due to Cranstoun's imprisonment, he did not claim the properties until 1659. He was Sir Gilbert 'fiar of Stobbis' who witnessed contracts relating to Appotside in 1654 and 1656. He succeeded his father in 1654, and immediately had to contend with the fine of £1000 sterling imposed by Cromwell on royalist supporters. In 1655 he sold Kirkton to his uncle Sir Archibald Douglas of Cavers. In 1656 he was the superior of the lands who confirmed the charters of William Elliot of Harwood for Harwood, Tythehouse and Appotside. In 1657 he was served heir to his father in the lands of Winnington and Winningtonhall, as well as 'Portheid', 'Horslie', 'Turie', 'Arkendknow', Winningtonrig, Over and Nether 'Swynsteid', Over and Nether Dodburn, Birkwood, Birkwoodhead, 'Bromsydbrae', 'Bromsyke', 'Huntishill', 'Abbotis-aiker', Baxtonlees, 'Ellinburne', Shaws, Middlestead, 'Gildhous' and Bailielee. He was one of the trustees for Mary Scott of Buccleuch during her minority. In 1658 he was among 20 'gentlemen and heritors' of Roxburghshire who signed a commission to oppose payment requested from the county. In 1659 he sold Peel (or Baxtonlees) to William Elliot of Binks and Swinside and his son John. Also in 1659 he had a charter of Over and Nether Wells and Macksideshaw. In 1660, after the restoration of the monarchy, he was appointed one of the Parliamentary Commissioners (i.e. M.Ps.) for Roxburghshire, and reappointed in 1669, serving until 1674. In 1662 he was appointed one of the Justiciars for the Borders (for apprehending mosstroopers), an appointment that was renewed ten years later. He was involved in a libel action with Robert Scott of Harwood in 1663. He witnessed the marriage contract of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch in 1663, and was still one of her curators at that time. He was reappointed as a Justice of the Peace in 1663, and nominated as the convenor for Roxburghshire. According to the Land Tax Rolls of about 1663 his rentals in amounted to £10,226 13s 4d, including lands in Hobkirk, Cavers, Kirkton, Castleton and Abbotrule Parishes; this also included £666 13s 4d from his mother's rentals. He was also recorded in 3 bonds and discharges in 1663. He was knighted by Charles II in 1651 on Largo sands, and was made 1st Baronet (of Nova Scotia) in 1666. In 1671 he had the lands of Stonedge separated from the Barony of Hallrule, so that he could give it to the eldest of his 2nd family. In 1673 he succeeded his cousin Robert the 17th of Redheugh as Chief of the Elliots. He is probably the Gilbert 'of woolie' recorded being taxed for £1000 in Southdean Parish in 1678. He married first Isabella (or Isobel) Cranstoun (daughter of James, Master of Cranstoun and Lady Elizabeth Stewart, who was daughter of the Earl of Bothwell) and secondly in 1661 Magdelen (or Magdaline), daughter of Sir John Nicolson of Lasswade. He had 10 children, including: Sir William, who succeeded him (and was the 2nd born son); James, recorded in 1679; John, excise collector, still alive in 1704; Elizabeth (d.1662), buried in Greyfriars Cemetery; Esther, who married William Douglas of Morton; Thomas (d.1671), who would have inherited Wolfelee and Stonedge, but died young; Gilbert (1669–1706), eldest surviving son of his 2nd marriage, to whom he gave the estate of Stonedge; another William (d.1699), merchant of Edinburgh and later of London, who married a daughter of Sir George Hume; Janet (d.bef. 1694); and Magdalene (d.1739), who married John Pringle of Stichel. There seems to be some confusion over the year of his death, but he certainly signed a bond of provision for his wife and children in April 1677. And his son Sir William was served as his heir in 1692, perhaps a while after his death. His widow occupied old Wolfelee House, until that fell into disrepair, afterwards moving to Hobsburn. Gilbert of Craigend and Deanfoot (17th C.) local landowner in the mid-to-late 1600s. He was a grandson of 'Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters' and son of Archibald (and hence cousin of the 1st Baronet of Stobs). He may be partly confused with Gilbert of Craigend and Hartshaugh, who was probably his uncle, and he is also easy to confuse with the later Gilbert of

Minto. In 1683 he was served heir to his father's lands of Craigend, Deanfield and Minto, as well as 'Grassland', Ladyland, 'Viccars land' in Hobkirk Parish, Wester Swanshiel and Clerksbank. He inherited the lands of Craigend and Deanfoot from his father, but in 1687 sold the land to Lord Tarras. He was already deceased by 1696 when his brother John was married in Edinburgh. Gilbert of Stanedge (1669–1705) eldest surviving son of Sir Gilbert of Stobs with his 2nd wife, Magdelen Nicolson. He was served heir to his brother Thomas in 1671 and succeeded to the Stanedge lands in 1682, while still a minor. The lands had been separated from the Barony of Hallrule in 1671 and originally disposed to his brother Thomas, who died shortly afterwards. As part of the arrangements for his inheritance he had to provide the sum of 20,000 for his 3 younger siblings. During his minority his 'curators' were his mother Lady Stobs, William Elliot of Grange (his uncle), Gavin Elliot in Dalkeith and John Eliott (brother of Sir William of Stobs, and his half-brother). In 1678 he is recorded as owner of lands in Hobkirk Parish; he was also 'of Stenhouse-edge' when listed as owner of Woollee in Southdean Patish. His 'brother-german' William became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1691. He became first Laird of Stonedge and also of Woollee in 1671, the lands being given by his father after an older brother died. In 1691 he had a bond with James Scott, Bailie of Hawick; this was later metioned in 1708 a procuratory document for the deceased Adam Ruecastle. He witnessed the marriage contract of the daughter of Henry Elliot of Harwood in 1692. A sasine of 1693 shows him in a bond with Sir John Pringle of Stichell over the lands of Fairnilees, Unthank, Howa, Hobsburn, Snipe and Little Gledstains. That year he also had a bond with Patrick Johnston, Edinburgh merchant and had an action raised against him and his curators by Archibald Douglas of 'Garvat' (Gervald perhaps) for non-payment; this was followed by a letter of horning' against him and Walter Scott of Wauchope by Archibald Douglas of 'Garvat' in 1695. Henry Elliot of Harwood appears to have paid off several of his debts about 1694, so it is clear he was in financial difficulties. In 1694 he sold the 3 eastern quarters of Fairnielees (part of the Harwood estate) to Henry Elliot of Harwood. He contributed £100 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. From 1698 he started on extensive alterations to Woollee, to turn the tower into a home; however, this placed him further into debt. A stone formerly built into the house (but later destroyed) was inscribed 'D.M.E. G.E. E.S.' In 1704 he was listed on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. He was long deceased in 1721 (and recorded being 'of Stonesyde') when his youngest son became an apprentice in Edinburgh. In 1693 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Walter Scott of Harwood-on-Teviot. Their children were: Magdalen (b.1694), who married Robert Ainslie; Gilbert (b.1695), who succeeded; Walter (b.1696), unmarried; Christian (b.1697), who married a Mr. Dawson, a Kelso surgeon; Helen (b.1698), who married John Haswell, Provost of Jedburgh; Elizabeth (b.1699), who married a Mr. Ogilvie of Ayrshire; William (b.1701), unmarried; John, also unmarried; Robert (b.1704), who became an apprentice wright in Edinburgh in 1721 and died unmarried; Isobel (b.1705), who married Alexander Jerdon of Newcastle; and Margaret (b.1706), who married John Angus, an Edinburgh lawyer. He died suddenly aged 37, leaving a large family of children. His widow stayed in Woollee (i.e. Wolfelee) after his death and in 1709 married James Campbell, minister at Legerwood, but separated from him in 1719. Sir Gilbert of Stobs (c.1680–1764) 3rd Baronet and Chief of the Elliots, eldest son of Sir William. Walter Scott of Satchells dedicated part of his 'Post'ral' to him in 1688, when he was 'son to Sir William Elliot of Stobs, Knight-Barronet'. He was served heir to his father in 1699. Soon after getting married he moved from London to Edinburgh, where his house was on the north side of the High Street at the top of Trunks Close (and was demolished in 1873); this was in the Canongate, where several other Roxburghshire families lived. In 1704 he was among the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire. He also lived at Stobs, but resided at Wells for a few years after Stobs House was burned down in 1712. It is possible he was the 'Gilbert Elliott of Midlamiln younger' (the family having previously held Midlem Mill) listed in 1708 as one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire. He became a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1713 by right of his father Sir William. Following the rebellion of 1715 he bought up the 'wadsets' of Adam Turnbull of Denesyde (who had been a Jacobite supporter) and forced him to leave, thereby gaining a local reputation as a high-handed Laird. He was M.P. for Roxburghshire 1708–15 and again 1726–27 (taking over from his distant cousin Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto) in a bye-election. In 1718 he drew up a bond of entail (at the insistence of his father-in-law), ensuring that none of the estate (except for Haddon) could be sold off; despite the best of intentions, this agreement led to financial trouble for later generations. After 1723 the family began to regularly spell their name with the double 't' and single 'l'. In 1722 a letter was sent to Winningtonrig, warning his tenants there not to pasture their animals on Hawick Common, and in 1723 one of the Hawick Bailies was paid for 'taking instruments' against him. In 1725 he gave the east side of Hallrule, valued at £414, to his son John, retaining the other £1939. In 1726, following a court meeting in Jedburgh, the drinking party he was with discussed the recent election (and particularly who did not ote for him) and he got into an argument with Col. Stewart of Stewartfield (now Hartrigge) in the Black Bull in Jedburgh and stabbed him to death with his sword. He apparently sobered up in Jedburgh Abbey churchyard, hid out in Wauchope Forest and fled by boat to to Holland. He was declared an outlaw, but was later pardoned and allowed to return, partly through the influence of Lord Minto and his father-in-law, William Elliot. The sword that he had used later came into the possession of the Marquess of Lothian. It is said that he led a sober and quiet life after his return. He added the farms of Lymiecleuch and Penchrise to the family estates. The Bailies and Council of Hawick complained about his tenants' encroachment onto the Common in a notorial isntrument of 1734. On the other hand, in 1736 he applied to the Board of Trade for Manufactures for a grant of £40 to purchase some looms for the manufacture of coarse tarred wool, which was probably a significant moment in the development of Hawick as a knitwear centre. In 1739 he was among the local landowners asked to decide where the Teviot Brig in Hawick should be built. He leased Peelbraehope from the Buccleuch Estates in 1744. He paid the window tax in Cavers Parish in 1748 and 1753. His estate was valued at £6819 in the 1740s. In 1750, after the death of Gilbert Elliot, son of Robert Elliot of Larriston, he arranged for the education at Stobs of Robert's grandson, William (who would later buy back Larriston and become a Major-General). In 1758 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott in Tandlaw. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He had a house on the High Street in Edinburgh, which he purchased from Sir John Scott of Ancrum. Shortly before his death he changed his will to favour his grandson Francis over his eldest son John, stipulating that Francis should live constantly at Stobs. In London in 1702 he married Eleanor (or Eleanora), daughter of William Elliot, who was a tailor in London (and later of Wells), and was a distant cousin from the Brugh branch of the family. She died in 1728 and it is unclear if he also married another Eleanor later. He had 11 children: William (1703–05), who died in infancy; Gilbert (1704–06), who also died in infancy; Sir John (b.1705), who succeeded him; another William (b.1706), who became a merchant with the East India Company; Gilbert (b.1707), also with the East India Company; Anne or Eleanor (b.1708), the only daughter, who probably died young; Charles (1709–56), who became Attorney General of North Carolina; Archibald (1710–59), who was born at Stobs and became a London merchant, being secretary to Ramsgate Harbour; Elliot (1712–45), who was born at Stobs and became a Captain in the Royal Navy; Gavin (b.1713), who was born at Wells and became Captain of a ship in the East India Company; and George Augustus (1717–90), who was born at Wells and became Lord Heathfield. His wife's dowry was said to be £15,000, which was a fortune at the time. He bestowed on her the lands of Langside, Shankend and Hawthornside, and the rentals from Penchrise. Gilbert of Stanedge and Howa (1695–1727) son of Gilbert, he was the 2nd (and last) Eliott Laird of Stonedge and also owned Woollee (i.e. Wolfelee) as well as several neighbouring farms, all of which were part of the Stonedge lands. He was said to have been a delicate child who was mainly kept at home. He succeeded at age 11, to an estate that was heavily in debt, and so the management was in the hands of his curators. In 1718 he sold Stonedge and Howa to Adam Scott, tenant of Wauchope, but retaining lands in Hobkirk Parish valued at £676 14s 8d. In 1722 he succeeded to his uncle's lands of Woollee (i.e. Wolfelee). He died while still in debt, but arranged a Deed of Provision for his younger children. In 1715 he married Cecily (or Cecilia), daughter of William Kerr of Abbotrule, having known her for many years. Their children were: Elizabeth, who married William Kerr of Gateshaw, Town Clerk of Kelso; Gilbert, who married Margaret Ainslie and was designated 'of Otterburn'; and Charles, who was a merchant Captain in the Lisbon trade. Gilbert (1707–bef. 56) 3rd son of Sir Gilbert of Stobs. He was born at the family home at Trunk's Close in Edinburgh. He served with the East India Company, serving for a while on the Heathcote. He died unmarried in India. Gilbert of Otterburn and Wells (1717–1801) eldest son of Gilbert of Stonedge. While a minor his 'tutor' was William Kerr of Abbotrule. He trained as a surgeon and in 1739 became surgeon to the regiment raised by his cousin Gen. George Augustus Eliott (later Lord Heathfield), who was born in the same Parish in the same year. He received money after the death of his uncle William and purchased Otterburn estate from Thomas Moir; however, he held Otterburn for only a few years, selling it in 1765. After retiring from the army he served as factor of Wells for his distant relative William Elliot, taking over from Archibald Jerdan, probably in the late 1760s. Sometime before leaving the country for the last time Lord Heathfield entrusted him with the key of the main gate of Gibraltar, and it later passed to his nephew when he retired. A great admirer of James Thomson (of 'The Seasons'), he acquired the armchair the poet used when composing the 'Castle of Indolence', said to have been sent to him from London by the Liddesdale-born Dr. John Armstrong). In 1787 he invited Robert Burns to dine at Wells (described in Burns diary as breakfast) during the poet's Border Tour; he insisted that Burns sit in the chair, making such a fuss over it that Burns grew confused, the situation became very awkward and the whole visit was not the great success that he had planned. In 1788 he was recorded as owner of 'Otterburn' in Morebattle Parish, valued at £224 13s 4d (and the teinds valued at £40). He was 'in Walls' in the period 1785–98 when taxed for having a carriage. He was also taxed for having 1 or 2 male servants in the period 1785–97, and a female servant in 1785–90. He was 'in Walls' on the 1785–91 Horse Tax Rolls, when he had 3 carriage horses; he is probably also the Gilbert recorded paying the horse tax at Stonedge in 1791. He is recorded in the 1792–97 Horse Tax Rolls as 'Gilbert Elliot Esq. at Wells', when he owned 2 farm horses and 2 carriage or saddle horses. He also paid tax on 2 dogs in 1797. In 1764 he married Margaret, daughter of Jedburgh Bailie and apothecary William Ainslie. He died without issue and the male line of Eliott of Stanedge therefore became extinct. Gilbert (b.1707) son of Sir Gilbert of Stobs and Eleanor Elliot. He was born in his father's house at Trunk's Close in Edinburgh. He became a merchant with the East India Company, like his brother William. He died before 1756, unmarried. Gilbert (1796–1871) 3rd son of Sir William of Stobs and Mary Russell. He was baptised in Cavers Parish and schooled at Houghton-le-Spring. In 1812 he became a 'gentleman-cadet' in the Royal Corps of Artillery and served in the Peninsular War in 1815 just after Waterloo, leaving as 1st Lieutenant in 1821. He then returned to Scotland and stayed with his mother at Wells (which his elder brother William had inherited). He was a member of the Jedforest Club from 1822, but resigned in 1834 along with other Whig supporters. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. In 1830 he married Isabella Lucy, daughter of Rev. Robert Elliot of Wheldrake (son of Sir Gilbert Elliot, 3rd Baronet of Minto), after meeting her the year before when she was visiting Weens; the couple were married at Minto. In 1839, along with his brother-in-law Dr. Grant of Jedburgh, he emigrated to Australia. There he prospered, and was appointed Police Magistrate in Parramatta, then moved to Wide Bay (north of Brisbane), where he bought a sheep station called 'Yenda'. He became Member of Parliament for Wide Bay and was appointed first Speaker of the Queensland Parliament (serving for 11 years). He apparently refused to be given a knighthood, but agreed to have his portrait painted (which hangs in Parliament House in Brisbane). His children were: Gilbert William (b.1831), who was a police magistrate and married Jane Penelope Thomson; Francis Willoughby, who married Sarah Jane Richards; Henry Alexander (b.1834); and 2 daughters. There are many descendants now living in Australia. Gilbert William (1831–93) son of Gilbert, 3rd son of Sir William of Stobs. He was born in Scotland and baptised in Jedburgh Parish. He moved to Australia with his father at the age of 8. He kept in touch with his family back in Scotland, and welcomed their kinsman Arthur (later 9th Baronet of Stobs) when he came to Australia in 1875. He married Jane Penelope Thomson and they had 2 sons and 4 daughters. Sir Gilbert Alexander Boswell of Stobs (1885–1958) 10th Baronet and Chief of the Elliots. He was born in Massachusetts, only son of Sir Arthur and Lilla Burbank. He left school at 16, worked for a bank and started his own firm on Wall Street at the age of 20. On the outbreak of WWI he joined the McGill University Battery in Canada and after training served with the Royal Artillery in England. After the War he was an apple farmer in California for a while, then returned to Wall Street. When his father died in 1926 he remaining in the U.S.A., but sent his 2 sons to be educated in England. In 1932 he retired from his partnership, bought Wolfelee and moved there himself. He also joined his cousin's firm in London, later setting up under his own name. Before he died he was able to purchase Redheugh, the ancient seat of the Elliots. In 1912 he married Dora Flournoy, only child of Alexander Stephens Hopkins of Atlanta, Georgia; she carried out extensive research on the family. They had 4 children: Charlotte Elgitha Veronica Boswell, who married Landon Thorn, secondly Capt. Andrew Burk and thirdly Stanley Maxted; Jean Cecilia Constance Boswell, who married Maj. Alwyn Nigel Parker and secondly Maj. Alan Edward Seton Jackson, K.O.S.B.; Arthur Francis Augustus Boswell (b.1915), who succeeded; and Fl.-Lieut. John Livingston Hopkins Boswell (1916–42), who was killed in action in WWII. James (d.bef. 1661) 6th and youngest son of 'Gibbie wi the Golden Gairters' and Margaret Scott of Harden. He was a lawyer based in Edinburgh. In 1620 his father gave him the half-lands of 'Glencarie' and Midgehope that were help in wadset from Robert Scott of Tushielaw. He witnessed the document whereby Edward Lorraine sold Harwood outright to William Elliot in 1537. In 1637 he married Margaret, daughter and heiress of Robert Elliot of Redheugh and Larriston, and the lands of the Elliots of Redheugh and Larriston were given to them by his father; this included Hartsgarth, 'Layfauld', 'Carriescheill', Langhaugh, Over and Nether Larriston, Blackhope, 'Greinhoillis' and 'Dowmaynholme'. The lands of Hartsgarth, Carrieshiels, Langhaugh and Bankhead were held in wadset, but he was able to pay the reversion of 3,800 merks by 1639. He may have been the 'James Elliot appeirand of Redhaugh' whose lands in Castleton were valued at £600 in 1643. His wife died in 1697 (probably in Edinburgh) and is buried in the Henderson tomb in Greyfriars cemetery. Their children (whose surnames are usually spelled 'Elliot') were: Robert, of Larriston, who married Elizabeth Maxwell, and secondly married Janet Scott of Todrig; William, who 'went away to be a horner'; and a daughter, who married William Scott of Milsington. James (d.1908) married Mary Kennedy in Hawick in 1872. His wife was daughter of James Kennedy and Elizabeth Pattison and died in 1919. They are buried in Wilton Cemetery. Jean nee Scott (d.aft. 1608) sister of Scott of Buccleuch (although it is unclear which one). She married Gavin of Stobs, probably around 1550. She was still alive in 1608 when she complained (along with her daughters Dorothy and Esther, and grand-daughter Jean Rutherford) about William Scott of Northhouse and others coming to Stobs and taking 'all the evidents and writs', threatening to burn them if they did not have their demands met. Jean (d.bef. 1608) daughter of Gavin, the first Eliott owner of Stobs. She married Thomas Rutherford the Black Laird of Edgerston and died before her father. Her only child was Jean, who married William Elliot, brother of Robert of Redheugh; she inherited the Stobs estate, along with her aunts, after the death of her grandfather. Jessie Blanche Adelaide 'Blanche' (c.1830s–98) daughter of Sir William Francis, 7th Baronet of Stobs. In 1868 she married Capt. James Wood, who was brother of her own brother's wife, Charlotte Wood of Quebec. She was appointed by her father in 1863 as one of the trustees of the estates of Wells and Haddon (essentially to exclude her brother, Sir William, from his inheritance). She was said to be unhappy at how quickly her brother remarried after his first wife (her husband's sister) died in 1878, and was then involved in about 20 years of legal battles with him over rights to the rents at Wells. John of Goodtrees (d.1639) 5th son of 'Gibbie wi the Gowden Gairters'. He became an advocate in Edinburgh. In 1632 he was described as 'bailie in that part' for a charter where his brother Gilbert purchased the lands of Harwood from Edward Lorraine and Rev. William Weir, as well as for a sasine where Rev. Weir sold Appotside and Tythehouse to Edward Lorraine. He married Marion, daughter and heiress of David McCulloch of Goodtrees (and whose wife was Margaret Elliot, a cousin). Their only child was Margaret, who married Sir Thomas Stewart of Coltness. After his death his wife remarried, to her daughter's father-in-law. John (17th/18th C.) 3rd son of Sir Gilbert, 1st Baronet of Stobs and Isabella Cranston. He was brother of Sir William and uncle of Sir Gilbert, 3rd Baronet of Stobs. In 1681 he was a witness for a bond between Walter Lorraine and Walter Scott in Wauchope. In the 1680s he was one of the 'curators' for Gilbert of Stonedge (his half brother). He was made collector of excise for Roxburgh and Selkirk in 1686. In 1687 he had a charter from his brother William for the lands of Lymiecleuch (this being obtained by adjudication from Adam Elliot of Mosspeebles and his brothers when they were unable to repay their loan); however, owing to the Revolution, he only took possession of the farm in 1695. Walter Scott of Satchells dedicated part of his 'post'ral' to him in 1688. He was cautioner for a bond by Gilbert of Stonedge in 1691 and witnessed a disposition between Gilbert

Eliott of Stonedge and Henry Elliot of Harwood in 1694. In 1702 he witnessed the marriage arrangement by his nephew Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs to Eleabor Elliot. In 1704 (along with shoemaker John Elliot) he witnessed a baptism for Gilbert Elliot in Nether Southfield; he was recorded there as 'Collector'. Capt. John (d.1696) brother-in-law of Walter Gledstains, Town Clerk in Hawick. He is recorded as 'Captaine Elliot, my brother-in-lawe dyed att Bruges in fflanderis'. Another entry states that 'Wpon the 15 of Appryll 1713 Cptaine Ellott, sone to Captaine Johne, my wifes brother, dyed of an (long sickness) at Bruges in fflanderis, and was buried in the ...' [perhaps same grave as his father]. He may be the 'Captain Elliott' who is recorded being wounded at the Battle of Steenkerque when fighting with the 10th Regiment of Foot. It is unclear if he was an 'Eliott' or an 'Elliot' and his wife's name is not recorded. Sir John of Stobs (1705–1768) 4th Baronet and Chief of the Elliots. He was born in Edinburgh, son of Sir Gilbert, and said to be named after the Duke of Argyll. He was probably educated at home, like his brothers. He received liferent of 'Eastside' when he reached 21. He became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Jedburgh in 1713 (when still a boy) and became a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1748, 'gratis'. In 1725 his father gave him lands in the east side of Hallrule, valued at £414; he still held these lands as 'junior' of Stobs in the 1740s. He was 'of Stobs, junior' when recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. His father disinherited him as much as possible in favour of his son Francis (perhaps a result of his marriage and the fact that he moved to England), and in fact he was only Baronet for 3 years before he died and was succeeded by Francis. He was one of the defenders in the action of 1767 brought by the Duke of Buccleuch against the Bailies of Hawick and the neighbouring landowners regarding the division of the Common. He married Mary Andrews of London (about whom nothing else appears to be known). His children were: Francis (d.1791), who became 5th Baronet; John (d.1769), who was Captain with the Inniskilling Dragoons; Anne (1735–1803), who died in Bath, unmarried; and Eleanor (d.bef. 1767). He died on New Year's day in 1768 at his house in New Portugal Street in London. He left everything to his wife and daughter Anne. John (d.1769) son of Sir John of Stobs and brother of Sir Francis. He was a subaltern oficer in the Inniskilling Dragoons for many years and died as a senior Lieutenant in the regiment. Capt. John (d.1795) younger son of Sir Francis of Stobs. He was a Captain in the 20th (or Jamaica) regiment of Light Dragoons. He died on the Princess Royal packet on his journey home from Jamaica. He was unmarried and his brother William was his executor. Maj. John (1793–1837) 2nd son of Sir William, 6th Baronet of Stobs. Born at Stobs, in 1812 he was gazetted to the 8th Hussars as a Cornet. By 1824 he was a Captain in the 4th Dragoons and was later promoted to Major. He died unmarried. Dame Magdelen nee Nicolson (d.1699) wife and later widow of Sir Gilbert, 1st baronet of Stobs. She was daughter of Sir John Nicolson of Lasswade. She is recorded borrowing '40 Punds Scots' for her share in building the new Hobkirk church of 1690–92. She stayed at Wolfelee and kept an account book that survives. Margaret Frances Boswell of Stobs (1948–) heir of the Chieftanship of the Elliots, only child of Arthur Francis Augustus, 11th Baronet of Stobs. She published 'The Elliots, The Story of a Border Clan' (1974). Richard of Fallahill (17th C.) younger son of William of Stobs. He witnessed a sasine in 1669 and received a charter for Falahill in 1677. He had sons Gilbert and William who were both witnesses to a bond of caution at Dumfries in 1684. Sir Robert of Stobs (17th/18th C.) recorded becoming a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1713 in right of his father Sir William. It is unclear who this might be, and it seems likely it is an error for Sir Gilbert, for whom an entry is also included in 1713. Adm. Russell (1802–81) christened at Cavers, younger son of Sir William of Stobs and Mary Russell. He was presumably named after his mother's family, the Russell's of Roseburn. He entered the Royal Navy as a volunteer in 1814, becoming a Midshipman by 1817, by which time he had been to St. Helena, Brazil and Newfoundland. He was promoted to Lieutenant in 1825, served in the West Indies and became Captain of the Espiegle in 1929. He does not appear to have served on any ships in the period 1830–36. He was a Royal Navy Captain living in Jedburgh in 1831, when (despite being a Whig) he sheltered Sir Walter Scott in his house while the mob at the election calmed down enough for the famous writer to get out of the area. He became Captain of H.M.S. Fly in 1836; after his ship arrived on Pitcairn Island in 1838 he wrote a consitution for the 100 or so inhabitants, specifically describing how everyone should have a vote (including any man or woman over the age of 18) annually to elect a Magistrate, making the Pitcairn Islanders one of the first communities in the world to have universal suffrage. A canon belonging to the mutineers of H.M.S. Bounty was recovered by him in deep water off Pitcairn Island and was once held at Fatlips Castle. His naval service ended in 1839. In 1841 he was living at Easter Langlee, but seems to have moved away from the Borders shortly after that. He later lived in Westmorland, where he devoted his time to Liberal politics and railway companies. He was appointed as Rear Admiral in 1857, Vice Admiral in 1864 and full Admiral in 1869. By 1861 he was living at Appleby Castle in Westmorland. In 1830 he married Bethia, daughter of Sir William Russell, who was his cousin (and hence had the same surname as his first name), and she died in 1843. In 1852 he secondly married Henrietta, widow of John Ward and daughter of Sir John Kaye, and she died in 1878. His children were Capt. John Francis (b.1820), Capt. Charles Francis (b.1830), Sophia Mary (b.1832), George Gilbert (b.1834), Claud William (b.1836), Georgina Katherine Grisell Billie (b.1840), Gilbert Henry John of the Royal Navy (b.1842) and Bethia Russell (b.1843). It seems that all of them died without surviving children. He died at Appleby Castle and there is a memorial to him in St. Lawrence Church, Appleby. His surname is often given as 'Elliot', although he signed it as 'Eliott'. Theresa Janet nee Boswell (d.1836) eldest daughter of Sir Alexander Boswell of Auchinleck, who had the distinction of being the last man killed in a duel in Scotland. Her grandfather was James Boswell, biographer of lexicographer Samuel Johnson. In 1826 she married Sir William, 7th Baronet of Stobs. She had 8 children and died in childbirth. She was buried in the family vault in Cavers Kirk and her hatchment is preserved there. Thomas (d.1671) younger son of Sir Gilbert of Stobs, with his 2nd wife, Magdelen Nicolson. It is said that his mother convinced his father to settle lands on his 2nd family. So proceedings were started to transfer Wolfelee and Stonedge to him, even although he was still just a boy; hence he is referred to as being 'of Woollee'. However, he died before the charter was obtained in 1671, and so the lands went instead to his brother Gilbert, who was served as his heir in 1671. William of Stobs (d.1654) eldest son of 'Gibbie wi the Golden Garties'. He was probably the first member of his family to spell his name 'Eliott' rather than 'Ellot' (as recorded in a letter of 1641). He was a strong supporter of the Covenant. He was a Commissioner to Parliament for Roxburghshire in 1641 (in place of Sir William Douglas of Cavers, who was absent in England), this being the Second Parliament of Charles I. In 1642 he was named to a commission to try a large number of Borderers who had been declared fugitives. Also in 1642 he had a charter of Borthwickshiels. He was also recorded as Convenor of the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1643. In 1643 his lands in Castleton Parish were valued at £160, those in Cavers Parish at more than £3400, Kirkton about £1200, Wilton at £260 and Hobkirk at £80. Also in 1643 his mother Margaret Scott was recorded as liferenter of lands in Kirkton valued at about £670. In 1643, 1644, 1646 and 1648 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire and for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1649. It appears that he switched from supporting Cromwell to supporting the King. In 1645 he was served heir to his father in the lands of 'Hangansyde' and Baxtonlees and he had a charter for Town o' Rule in 1649. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. In 1649 he and Walter Scott of Arkleton wrote a description of Selkirkshire, which was published in 1908 as part of Walter MacFarlane's 'Geographical Collections'. In 1650 he was named as one of the 'tutors' for the children of Francis Earl of Buccleuch in his will and also served as one of the 'tutors testamentars' for the will of Francis. He added Hallrule (it is said, through some underhand means) to the family possessions, adjoining the estate of 'Toon-o-Rule'. He bought Woollee (i.e. Wolfelee) from Lord Cranstoun in 1651. In 1621 he married Elisabeth, daughter of Sir James Douglas of Cavers (and she appears to have been a supporter of the Covenant, like the rest of her family). Their children were: Sir Gilbert, 1st Baronet; Archibald of Craigend and Deanfoot (dead by 1683); Gavin, who married Barbara Creighton and Jean Nicolson; William, probably of Grange, who had no male heir (and is sometimes confused with the Provost of Peebles who was son of Gavin Elliot of Brugh); Margaret, who married William Bennet, minister of Ancrum, and secondly James Scott of Bonnington (in Lothian); Richard of Falahill; John, who witnessed a charter in 1657; Anna, who married John Maxwell of Cowhill in 1641; Marie, who married John Young of Gulyhill; Isobel, who married Francis Scott of Arkleton in 1664; and Elspeth, who is mentioned in 1658 when her mother assigned a bond to her. It is said that he was concerned about having his lands confiscated by his mortal enemies Lord Balmerino and Lord Colvin, this eventually leading to him hanging himself. His last testament is in the National Archives. William of Grange (17th C.) probably 4th son of William of Stobs. He witnessed a charter in 1659. In 1678 he was recorded as owner of part of Grange in Ancrum Parish, valued at about £350. In the 1680s and early 1690s he was one of the 'curators' for Gilbert Eliott of Stanedge during his minority. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685. In 1688 he was 'Uncle to Sir William Elliot of Stobs' when Walter Scott of Satchells dedicated part of his 'Post'ral' to him (but in that section discussed a different William, William Elliot of Swinside). He appears to have had no surviving male heir, since a pedigree of about 1704 states that the Eliott of Grange line was now extinct. In 1788 he was listed as a former owner of lands in Nether Ancrum, valued at £20. Note that he is sometimes confused with the Provost of Peebles who was son of Gavin Elliot of Brugh. Sir William of Stobs (d.1699) 2nd Baronet and Chief of the Elliots, son of Sir Gilbert (by his first wife, Isabella Cranston). He was the 2nd but oldest surviving son and was served heir to his father in 1692. In 1672 he was appointed one of the Justiciars for the Borders (for apprehending mosstroopers), along with his father and others. In 1676 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for William Laing. Also in 1676 he was one of the men charged with seizing 5 women who were accused of attacking the minister of Abbotrule. In 1677 he inherited the Barony of Winnington and was served heir to his father in the lands of Stobs in 1692 (which, for some reason, was probably several years after his father's death). His estate included Stobs itself, as well as several lands in Cavers Parish. In 1678 he and his brother Gilbert paid the land tax on £4642 in Hobkirk Parish. He also paid for Stobs, Langside, Penchrise, Stanishope, Singley, Harwoodburn and Williamrig, valued at £1633, for half of Lymiecleuch in Cavers Parish, valued at £500, as well as £1846 13s 4d in Kirkton Parish (for Winnington, Winningtonhall, Winnington Mill, Winnington Rig, Horselee, Turn, Smithfieldhaugh, Acreknowe, Hunthill, Abbot's Acre, Birkwood, Dodburn, Newton, Whitehillbrae and Barnes). In 1684 he was entered as a Burgess and Guild brother of Edinburgh in right of his father-in-law Charles Murray of Haddon; he eventually took complete possession of the Haddon estate (near Kelso). He was appointed one of the tutors of the children of Sir William Douglas of Cavers. In 1678 he was a Commissioner for Roxburghshire for raising money for the King, and again in 1685. In 1684 he was one of the men appointed as a commissioner in Roxburghshire for prosecuting Covenanters. In about 1685 he was made Lieutenant in a troop raised by the Earl of Lothian for the purpose of rounding up local Covenanters. In 1685 he was in Hawick to oversee 9 local farmers swearing against the Covenanters by repeating 'the test'. Walter Scott of Satchells dedicated part of his 'post'ral' to him in 1688; Satchells claimed to have known his parents, and sets out his genealogy. In 1689 he was appointed one of the 2 Parliamentary Commissioners (i.e. M.Ps.) for Roxburghshire. However, he was replaced in 1693 for not taking the oath of allegiance. He was also on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690. In 1690 he was listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. He witnessed a disposition for Gilbert Eliott of Stonedge and Henry Elliot of Harwood in 1694. Also in 1694 he was served heir to his deceased sister Janet. He married Elizabeth Scott of Langshaw (d.1680, daughter of John Scott, 1st Baronet of Ancrum); he had no children with his first wife and secondly married Margaret, daughter and heiress of Charles Murray of Haddon. His 2nd wife survived him until 1739 and they had 8 children, including: Gilbert (d.1764), who succeeded; William, who became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1700; Margaret (perhaps the Margaret born in 1682 in Jedburgh Parish), who married John Paterson of Granton, later Baronet of Eccles; Magdalene, who married Alexander Scott of Synton; Janet, who married Capt. Alexander Corbet; Elizabeth, who married William Scott of Bonnington and possibly John Forrest of Edinburgh; Christian (d.1775), who married Rev. Thomas Blair of Edinburgh; and possibly John, who was in the Army. His testament is recorded in 1684. William (b.1670s) 2nd (perhaps originally 3rd) son of Sir Gilbert of Stobs with his 2nd wife Magdelen Nicolson. He was apprenticed as a merchant to Patrick Johnstone in Edinburgh in 1691. He was a merchant in Edinburgh and then London. He was left half of his sister Janet's share of the money left to his sister Janet when she died before 1694. He is said to have married a daughter of Sir G. Hume, Baronet (possibly Sir Gustavus Hume of Hume Castle, Ireland). Their children were: Jean, who married Mr. Ker of Littledean (perhaps Walter); Helen, who married Captain Wilkinson; Gilbert, Customs Officer at Gravesend and chief clerk at the War Office; and George, Deputy Searcher of the Customs at Gravesend, who married Mary

Fortrey of Woomble Hall. He was probably the brother of Gilbert of Stanedge who became an apprentice merchant in Edinburgh in 1691 and who witnessed a bond of 1694. In 1694 he was also served 'retour' to the provision given to his deceased sister Janet by his father. William (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of Sir William of Stobs and Margaret Murray. In 1700 he was apprenticed to merchant John Hepburn. William (b.1701) 3rd son of the 1st Gilbert of Stonedge and Margaret Scott. He witnessed a sasine in 1722, when he is described as 'brother-german to Gilbert now of Stonedge'. He died unmarried. William (1706–79) son of Sir Gilbert of Stobs and Eleanor Elliot. He was born in his father's house at Trunk's Close in Edinburgh. He became a merchant with the East India Company and died in London, unmarried. He had property in East Florida and on the Island of Barbados. He left a large amount of money to several family members, appointing his brother Lt.-Gen. George Augustus and nephew Capt. Francis Augustus as joint executors. His house in London was left to the Countess Dowager of Chioza. Sir William of Stobs (1767–1812) eldest son of Sir Francis, he was 6th Baronet and Chief of the Elliots. He was christened in Cavers and died at Stobs. He succeeded his father in 1791 and had the new mansion built at Stobs around 1793, to plans started by his father. The construction apparently strained his resources to the limits, already stretched by his father. This meant he had to re-lease some of his farms for a lump sum, rather than yearly rent. It is said that he also borrowed from Gideon Pott of Penchrise (his son breaking the deal he made with Pott). He also managed to make money by being allowed by the Court to sell off some of his land, but buying it himself and reselling (Hallrule, Hallrule Mill and Town-o-Rule) at a much higher price. This broke the entail made on the estate in 1725, giving his son legal problems later. In the 1790s he complained to the county Justices about the circuitous route taken by local mail and the cost according to actual distance travelled, thus helping introduce the local mail coaches. He paid tax for having 3 male servants in 1792, 4 in 1793 and 3 in 1794 and 1797. He was listed on the Horse Tax Rolls in the period 1792–97, owning up to 6 carriage horses and 3 farm horses. He was also taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in the same year. He was additionally taxed for owning a carriage in the period 1792–95. He served as President of the Heritors of Hobkirk Parish. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. He is listed in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls as owner of Billerwell, Hawthornside and the west part of Outer Hallrule; he was also listed as owner of several farms in Kirkton Parish. In the early 19th century he sold 6 enclosures of Inner Hallrule to John Wilson. In 1790 he married Mary, youngest daughter of John Russell of Roseburn, Clerk to the Signet; she died in 1850. They had 10 children (all but the first 2 baptised in Cavers Parish): Bethia Mary (1791–1854), who died unmarried; Sir William Francis (b.1792), who succeeded; John (1793–1838), who became a Major in the 4th Dragoons and died unmarried; Gilbert (1796–1871), who eventually emigrated to Australia; Sir Daniel (1798–1872) of the Madras Civil Service, who married Georgina, daughter of Gen. George Russell; George Augustus (b.1799), who became an Admiral; Charles (b.1800), who was killed in action at 19; Russell (b.1802), who also became an Admiral and married Bethia, daughter of Sir William Russell; Alexander (1805–99), naval storekeeper at Devonport; and Euphemia Elizabeth Anne (1809–99), who married Rev. David Bagot. He died suddenly at Stobs aged 44. Sir William Francis of Stobs and Wells (1792–1864), son of Sir William, he was 7th Baronet and Chief of the Elliots. He was christened at Cavers in 1793. He was gazetted to the Queen's Bays at the age of 16 and left when his father died, with the rank of Lieutenant. It is said that during this time he once lost money to the Prince of Wales at cards. He succeeded on the death of his father in 1812, before he had reached majority, and was faced with an estate that was heavily in debt. Bored with rural life he joined the Roxburgh troop of Yeeomanry Cavalry as a Lieutenant, later becoming Captain. In 1817 he was appointed a Deputy-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire. His financial situation improved when he gained the estate of Wells in 1818 on the death of a cousin (William Elliot, M.P.), although there was further litigation involved there for many years. He embarked upon a costly lawsuit over his father's sale of Hallrule, which lasted almost 20 years. His finances were in such dire straits that in 1828 he had to put them in the care of trustees. He also eventually gained back the estate of Haddon, near Kelso. He purchased East Fodderlee, and had plans for encouraging the railway to pass through his property. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. He subscribed to 6 copies of Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He stood as a Liberal candidate in the 1831 Roxburghshire election, losing to Francis Scott of Harden, but as the populist candidate he was still being carried around the streets of Jedburgh shoulder-high. It was said that on election day a procession set out from Hawick at 5 a.m., roused by the drums and fifes and set out for Jedburgh, picking up his carriage at Spittal, and numbering about 2,000 when they reached the county town. He took part in the Reform Bill celebrations in Hawick in 1832. He was also made an Honorary Burgess in 1825. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. During a trip to the north he was made a Free Burgess and Guild Brother of Wick, Banff and Elgin. He was said to have taken a keen interest in the baa game in Bonchester. He was listed among the local gentry in Pigot's 1837 directory, and was a heritor in Kirkton Parish. His wife is probably the 'Lady Francis Elliot of Stobs and Wells in the flower of her age' whose death is recorded by the Bedrule minister in 1836. Following his wife's death he sent the children to live with their grandmother, the Dowager Lady Boswell, while he lived at Mortlake near London. However, he extended Wells House around 1862, and spent his last few summers there, as well as this being the residence of his mother. In 1826 he married Theresa Janet, eldest daughter of Sir Alexander Boswell of Auchinleck, and she died in 1836 during childbirth (her hatchment is in Cavers Kirk). His wife's father had the distinction of being the last man killed in a duel in Scotland, and her grandfather was James Boswell, biographer of Johnson. They had 8 children: Eleanor Jane Ann Augusta (b.1825), who died in infancy; Sir William Francis Augustus (b.1827), who succeeded; Grace Theresa Emmeline (1828–52), who died unmarried; Alexander Boswell (b.1830), who married Katherine Craigie and Annabella Carmichael, and whose son Arthur Boswell succeeded to Stobs; Charles James John (1832–49), who died aged 16; Jessie Blanche Adelaide (d.1898), who married Capt. James Wood, and died at Hyde Park; George Augustus Leslie (1833–54), who married Mary Rattray; and Frances Elizabeth (d.1869), who married Edmund Forrest. One of his daughters became a Life Member of the Archæological Society in 1860. He was said to be furious at his eldest son marrying without his consent, and effectively dispossessed him, assigning as trustees for Wells and Haddon his brothers Daniel and Alexander, as well as his brother-in-law Gen. Vassal, Allan Eliott-Lockhart of Borthwickbrae and his daughter Blanche. He died in London and was buried in the family vault in Cavers Old Kirk. On the day of his funeral a large beech tree fell across the road near the House, making it hard for the carriages to approach. The procession was well attended when it neared the old church. His funeral 'hatchment' is in the Museum, with another copy formerly hanging in Cavers Auld Kirk. Sir William Francis Augustus Boswell of Stobs (1827–1910), 8th Baronet and Chief of the Elliots, eldest son of Sir William Francis, he was born at Stobs. At the age of 9 his mother Theresa Boswell died and he (along with his other siblings) was put into the care of his grandmother, Lady Boswell, at Ochiltree. He served for many years in the 93rd Highlanders, going with the regiment to Canada and reaching the rank of Lieutenant before he left at the age of 26. In Canada he married without the knowledge of his father, and this caused him to be dispossessed of much of his inheritance. He succeeded to the estates at the age of 37, but with much of it under the control of his sister Blache and the other trustees appointed by his father. In fact he had a protracted legal battle with his sister over the rent on Wells (this was said to be due to her unhappiness at how quickly he had remarried after the death of his first wife, who was her own hisband's sister). He lived much of his life at Stobs, and also lived at Wells in the late 1800s, but had to sell off that estate in 1896 to clear debts on it. He had the family arms regranted to him in 1869. He was a J.P. for Roxburghshire, as well as Deputy-Lieutenant for the county. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1869. He was known as a keen sportsman, being a good shot and fine horseman, and was elected Master of Foxhounds. He was the (honorary) President of Hawick Curling Club. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire from before his father's death. He became a life member of the Archæological Society in 1874. In about 1874 he was recorded as owner of Hallrule, as well as Billerwell, Hawthornside and the Stobs estate. He also owned a house in Crieff (Rubserlaw House), where his first wife died in 1878. Largely due to falling rents he was forced to sell off his lands, with Stobs itself going to the Military in 1903. He then moved to Crieff. In 1846 he firstly married Charlotte Maria, daughter of Robert Wood of Quebec, and she died in 1878 (although not an heiress, she was great-granddaughter of the Duke of Kent); however, she was rumoured by some to be the real identity of Henrietta Robinson, the 'Veiled Murderess', who was found guilty of murder in Troy, New York in 1854. In 1879 he secondly married Hannah Grizel, daughter of H.T. Birkett; she was the (rich) widow of Henry Kelsall. He only had one child, Theresa, who was brain-damaged from birth; it is said that this was owing to a fall down a flight of stairs that his wife had when seeing him carried in from a hunting trip on a gate and thinking the worst. He died at Crieff and was succeeded by his nephew Sir Arthur (note this spelling, and the common local pronunciation).

Eliott-Lockhart see Lockhart

the Eliotts (thu-e-lits, -e-lee-its) n. normal spelling of the Stobs branch of the family, adopted formally after 1723 in preference to the previous form 'Eliot', probably to distinguish the leading branch of the clan from the others (see the Elliots).

Elizabeth (ee-liz-u-bith) n. name of 1 Queen of England and 1 Queen of the United Kingdom. Elizabeth I (1533–1603) last of the Tudors, she was known in Scotland for her treatment of her cousin Queen Mary and for the involvement of England in Scottish political and religious affairs during her reign. There was a period of greater unrest on the Borders immediately after her death. Elizabeth II Elizabeth Alexandra Mary Windsor (1926–2022) longest-reigning monarch, daughter of George VI. She visited Hawick, while still Princess in October 1945, inspecting troops at the cricket field and attending a rally of women's organisations in the Pavillion Theatre. She also visited Hawick with her family in 1947. In 1952 she was proclaimed as Queen in Hawick by the Provost from a platform erected in front of the Town Hall. She came back as Queen in 1962, with a welcome organised in the Town Hall and a reception in the Crown Hotel, along with a private showing of local knitwear. and returned to Hawick in her 1978, visiting Pesco's, Volunteer Park and the Katharine Elliot Centre amongst other places. And in her golden jubilee year, 2002, she bussed the Hawick Flag at a ceremony in Melrose. Pringle of Scotland was long the official manufacturers of knitted garments to the Queen.

ell (el) n., arch. a Scots length, corresponding to about 37 inches, used to refer to lengths of cloth etc., or 45 inches for yarn, using the English convention – '... for art and part of theft and concealment ... six ells of melley, twenty-four ells of white cloth ...' [RBA1537], '... and that no weiver make any linnen cloath, of the price of ten shillings Scotts, or above, under the breadth of ane ell and 2 inches' [BR1683], 'Imprimis, for three ells of silk at 44s. per ell, £6 12 0' [BR1707], '... [CPM], '... 13s 4d in money, six quarters of wooll, a per of shoon, a ell of linnen, and a mad' [DMW], '... An' mony an ell birls roond the beam, Afore the whustle blaws' [IJ] (see also five ell o wund and eln).

Ellabank (e-la-bawngk) n. former house adjacent to St. George's Kirk, which, along with its grounds was purchased by the church in 1913. The new church was built partly on this land, and part of the old house is now used as a kitchen for the church halls. Robert Michie was living there in the 1860s, there were Scotts there in the 1880s and Bonsors in the early part of the 20th century.

Ellen Riddle's (e-lin-ri-dulz) n. former confectioners at 24 High Street, selling home made sweets and chocolates from the mid-19th century until the mid-20th. This may also have been the same premises known as 'Miss Riddle's' where several local societies held their meetings in the latter part of the 19th century – 'Oo went ti Paisley's for oor tools, Jess McVeetie's for rock bools, Lynch's hed a' kinds o' toys, Ellen Riddle hed her pies ...' [IWL].

eller (e-lur) n., arch. the elder tree, Sambucus nigra (note that the alder tree is allar).

eller ee (e-lur-ee) n., poet. enchanted eye, preternatural insight, a person with such ability – 'Confoondit by philosophy, I gove't at him, he glowert at me, And, Ah, he had an eller ee!' [DH] (also written 'elleree').

Ellice (el-is) n. Edward (1781–1863) Liberal M.P. for Coventry, known as a reformer, he was also Secretary of War and Director of the Hudson's Bay Company. His sister Helena Anne married Charles Chisholme of Chisholme. During a visit to Chisholme in 1823 he was made an Honorary Burgess. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825.

ellie (e-lee) v., arch. to disappear, vanish gradually – 'Now this is the fashion; they thus pass the day, Till night comes at last and they ellie away' [DA] (also eellie and yillie; probably from French 'aller' and piked up from Napoleonic prisoners).

Elliot (e-li', e-lee-i', el-yi') n. (see also Eliott) Adam (15th C.) recorded in 1456/7 as witness to the sasine for Ewesdale passing from Robert of Ewesdale to George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus. He may have been an Elliot of Ewesdale, and is listed as 'Elwald', along with 'Law' and 'Robyn'. Adam 'Adie' (16th C.) recorded in 1541 when he was accused of having been on a raid on Bewcastle in which Englishman 'John Makrobyn' was killed. His name is recorded as 'Edy Elwald', and his brother Ingram was also listed, as well as Airchie. Perhaps the same man was 'Edde Ellwalld, son to Gaytspalldes' listed in 1541 among a group of Elliots, Armstrongs, Croziers, Nixons and others accused of burning the corn of William Carnaby at Halton; it is unclear what his father's nickname may have meant. Adam 'Ade' of Leyes (16th C.) recorded in the 1541 rental roll for Liddesdale, when he was one of the tenants of 'Streichelhope'. He is recorded as 'Ade Elwald de Leyis' and is probably related to 'Jock o the Lies' recorded in 1587 and 'Hob o the Leyes' recorded in the 1590s. Adam of the Shaws (16th C.) recorded in the register of the Privy Council in 1574. He was also recorded in 1578/9 when his sureties swore that they had previously presented him to the Privy Council. He is listed as 'Adie Ellot, callit Adie of the Schawis' and his sureties were Robert of Redheugh, Martin of Braidlie and Gavin 'in Swinsteis', then in Newbigging; since he was said to have not been entered, then his cautioners were fined. He was also listed in 1583 among the close kin of Robert of Redheugh in a letter from the English wardens. He was 'Adie Ellott in the Schaw' in 1586 when his master Robert of Redheugh was instructed to enter him in court. He was 'Adie Ellott of the Shawes' in 1587/8 when listed among Armstrongs and others accused of being on a raid on the farms of Tristram Fenwick and Sandy Hall in 1584. He may have been brother of Gib, who is also recorded in 1583, and perhaps son of Hob, who is recorded in 1566. In 1590/1 he was 'Adie Ellot of the Schawis' among men that the Earls of Bothwell and Murray were to enter before the Privy Council. Adam (16th C.) listed as 'Ade Ellot callit Cowdais' in 1569, when he was pledge for 'himself and the haill branches of the Burnheidis and Weschaw'. Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule was his surety. He was also listed in 1569 among Borderers held in Blackness Castle. He was 'Ade Ellot callit the Cowdais' and was pledge for 'Wilcokis Hob' and Gavin's Jock of Ramsiegill. He is also recorded as 'Adie Ellot, called Cawdais' in 1578/9 among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned. He was 'callit Cowdais' there, when it was reported that he had previously been a joint surety for John of Heuchhouse and Hobbie, son of Elder Will. He was also listed as 'Adie Ellott, called Cawdes', in 1581 when he was among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. In 1583 he was recorded as 'Condus' in a letter from Thomas Musgrave to Queen Elizabeth's Chancellor, where he is listed among the Elliots of Burnhead. He is 'Ade Cowdais' when recorded along with 'Gawins Jok' under the heading 'Burnhead' in Monipennie's c.1594 list of Border chiefs. The other man was probably an Elliot, and the lands of Burnhead were probably those in Liddesdale. It is possible that 'Cowdais' is 'Cowdhouse', i.e. 'Coldhouse' (although not the one in Wilton). It is unclear what his nickname means, or even how it should be spelled. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Adams. Adam (16th C.) recorded as 'Eddie Ellott son to Davie the Carling' among Borderers complained about for a raid on Woodburn in England in 1589. He is also recorded in 1590 as 'Eddie Ellott sonne to Davye Calinge' when he was part of a group of Elliots who were accused of a raid by Thomas Hall of 'Gersomfeeld' and the tenants of 'Dortres'. In 1590 he is recorded as 'Edward Elloit son to Davye' (but this could be an English error assuming that 'Adie' was short for 'Edward') when accused along with Robert Armstrong 'the Tailor' of stealing horses from John Heron of Chipchase. Adam (16th C.) son of Davie of Dinlees, who was accused in 1590 of being in a group who were accused by William 'Loren' of stealing from 'Trewhit' and taking Robert Storie prisoner. The other men named were all Armstrongs, 'Robin the Tailor', Ringan of Tweeden, Matthew and 'Alexander's Airchie'. It is possible he is the same man as the son of Davie the Carlin. Adam of Philhope (17th C.) recorded as being of 'Fillip' (presumably Philhope) in 1643, when he became an Honorary Burgess of Selkirk, along with a number of Scotts. In 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire. He may have been succeeded by his son Andrew. It is unclear how he was related to the contemporary Archibald Elliot of Philhope. Adam of Meikledale (1598/9–1682) son of the 4th son of William of Falnash (whose name is unknown), who was probably of Unthank. He was recorded as tenant at Gorrenberry in 1656, when he witnessed a document relating to Harwood and was again so recorded in 1662. He was fined £1800 for backing the wrong side in the Civil War. He was also listed as indweller at Gorrenberry in 1657 when he purchased the lands of Isgill, Midgehow and Newbigging for his eldest son John, reserving the liferent for himself. He was described as 'in Gorrinberrie' about 1665, when he was listed (along with many other Elliots) as a creditor for William Elliot of Binks for the rent of 'Wolfebeilder' (and this was 'in Woolfhoilder' in 1662). He also was a witness to the last testament of William Elliot of Harwood and Binks in 1662. In 1669 received a charter of the lands of Meikledale, held in fee for his son Andrew. He is additionally said to have acquired Arkleton, but this may have been his son. He also held Burngrains and Carrot Rigs (i.e. Carewoodrig). He paid tax on £900 of land for Meikledale in 1671. He was grantee on a bond in 1673. He is said to have married a daughter of Glendinning of that Ilk, and secondly married Janet, daughter of John Scott of Rennaldburn. His connection with the Scotts is probably what Scott of Satchells is alluding to when he says of the Elliots, 'The Rest of their Pedegree, I know them not, Except Bewly and Muckledean [sic] that's related to Scot' and also 'Walter Elliot of Erkleton, he is a man of Note; So is Muckildean his Brother, he's son to Janet Scot'. Satchells also says 'And Janet Scot she is Muckildines Mother, A worthy Wife she of long time hath been, And hath fill'd many poor and hungry Womb, She is my Friend, therefore I do her ken, She's daughter to John call'd of Rennalburn'. His children were: John of Thorlieshope (b.1621); Walter of Arkleton (b.1634); Andrew of Meikledale; William of Meikledale; and one daughter, said to have received a dowry of 8,000 merks. He was known as a very successful farmer and left separate lands to 3 of his sons; Meikledale went to Andrew, eldest son from his 2nd marriage, but afterwards was inherited by William. He is buried in the Overkirk churchyard near Unthank, the stone being inscribed with the date of his death and also having an armorial carving of a man holding a tree in one hand (for Armstrong), with a shield in the other. His will is recorded in the Commissariot of Dumfries in 1684. He could be the basis for the tradition that the last Elliot of Gorrenberry, Adam, whose family for generations had known a friendly fairy called 'the Cowie', was said to have frozen to death by Hermitage Chapel after falling off his horse when fording the river, with the fairy giving loud lamentations at Gorrenberry, for the last time. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Girnwood. The will of his wife, Bessie Murray, is recorded in 1688. Adam of Lymiecleuch (17th/18th C.) probably 2nd son of William of Unthank. He received a lease of Mosspeeble in 1643. Along with his father and Simon of the Binks and Swinside, he purchased Lymiecleuch in 1670, from William Eliott, younger of Stobs. He had a charter for his share of Lymiecleuch in 1673, but lost everything in 1687. Along with his 2 brothers, they were guarantors for someone in 1681 (probably a tenant) who failed to appear and so they had to pay the 5000 merks fine. They could only do so by seeking an advance on Lymiecleuch from Sir William Eliott of Stobs, but were unable to repay the loan. Eventually, in 1687, Lymiecleuch was settled on John Eliott, brother of the Laird of Stobs. He was still called 'of Lymiecleuch' when involved in legal proceedings with Anna, Duches of Buccleuch, in the period 1698–1703. His children were: John in Dinlees (1650–1728), who married Margaret Scott of Falnash; and Adam in Dykeraw, who may also have been associated with Lymiecleuch. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, living at Whitchesters in 1704. He married Margaret Halliday. Their children included: Thomas (b.1689); and Isobel (b.1704). The witnesses in 1689 were Thomas Halliday (presumably related to his wife) and John Stewart and in 1704 were Thomas Falside and 'student' John Thorbrand. Adam of Beirhope (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of Simon of the Binks and Swinside. In 1704 he purchased Beirhope in Hownam Parish, which he had partly owned before that. In 1702 he married Isabelle Ainslie in Jedburgh and their children were: Simon (b.1703), mentioned in his grandfather's entail of 1714; Robert (b.1705); William (b.1707); Thomas (b.1711); Elspeth (b.1713); and John (b.1714). Adam of Teindside (17th/18th C.) eldest son of Walter of Arkleton. He was also recorded being 'of Tyndside', but the lands were clearly Teindside in upper Teviotdale. He was referred to as 'younger of Arkletoun' in 1702 when he and his brother William gave a bond of 2,000 merks to Alexander Orrock, which formed part of the Orrock Bequest for Hawick Grammar School. This presumably means he was a heritor of Hawick Parish. He was 'of Arcleton' in 1698 when he witnessed baptisms in Hawick for John Scott in Hawick and for Gideon Scott of Falnash, and in 1700 for smith John Dryden and for James Laidlaw in Harwood. He was also 'of Arcleton' in 1700 when he witnessed a baptism for James Grieve in Teindside. He witnessed further baptisms in Hawick in 1702 (when listed as 'of Arkleton' and along with his servant John Bell) for William Davidson in Holt, in 1706 for Hawick apothecary Walter Scott and in 1707 and 1708 for James Stevenson in Harwood. In 1708 Stevenson was described as '(in Harwood) tenent to arcleton', making it clear that he was owner of Harwood at that time, as well as Teindside. Also in 1708 his 'servitor' John Laidlaw had a child baptised in Hawick, with him as a witness; he is described there as 'of Arcleton In Harwood'. In 1709 he witnessed a baptism for James Grieve, tenant in Teindside. He also owned the land on which the Grammar School would be built from 1713, buying it from the Langlands family and selling it to James Rodger of Cavers in 1722 (although whether this is a coincidence or connected with the Orrock Bequest is unclear). He is said to have fallen out with his father over wasting the price of a drove of cattle his father had given him to sell in England, and also because he brought back an English woman for a wife. He was left only £200 by his father, but he did not receive the money until 1714, following an extended legal battle. Arkleton went to his younger brother William, after he and his brother Arthur of Harwood were disinherited by their father. In 1700 in Hawick he married Ann Drury (with both being described as parishioners). 1700) and had 3 children who were christened in Hawick: Katherine (b.1701), who married Robert of Midlem Mill; Walter (1705–bef. 1721); and Anne (b.1707). He may also have been father of Isobell (b.1704) and Thomas (b.1717), also baptised in Hawick. In the 1707 baptism he is recorded as 'of Arkleton at Harwood-on-Teviot' and the witnesses were Gideon Scott of Falnash and William of Arkleton (his brother). Adam in Dykeraw (17th/18th C.) younger son of Adam, who was associated with Mosspeeble and Lymiecleuch. He may be the Adam 'in Lymiecleuch' who witnessed a baptism for 'Wester' James Grieve in Commonside in 1705 and another for James Veitch, blacksmith in Falnash Mill, in 1707. His children included: Robert in Know, who married Helen Grieve; John in Harden; Adam in Tweedside, who married Isobel Glendinning; and William in Millburnholm. Adam (18th C.) tenant in Dykeraw. According to a family history he was younger son of William of Penchrise and Janet, daughter of John Elliot of Thorlieshope. However, this might be confusion with Adam in Dykeraw son of Adam of Lymiecleuch. Adam of Arkleton (b.1702) eldest son of William and Anne Ainslie, he was baptised in Ewes Parish. In 1722 he was confirmed in his father's testament as his oldest son. In 1725 he was forced by his father's cousin William of Thorlieshope to sell Meikledale in order to pay debts. In 1744 he disposed of Arkleton to his eldest son William, reserving liferent for himself and 600 merks a year for his wife. In 1733 he married Christina, daughter of William Elliot of Thorlieshope. Their children were: Arthur (1734–42); William (1735–91), physician in Jedburgh; Anne (1736–42); Margaret (b.1737); Robert (1738–40); Walter (b.1740), died young; John (b.1742); and Christian (b.1744). Most of the family were baptised and buried at Ewes. He may have died in about 1744, when his son William of Arkleton had tutors appointed. Adam (17th/18th C.) descended from the Elliots of Thorlieshope (although the details seem unclear). He married a daughter of Christopher Irving, 'Kick-maleerie'. His children were: Christopher, who became a smuggler; George, described as 'a great pugilist'; and several daughters. He is included in a family tree given in the History of the Berwickshire Naturalists' Club in 1889; there it is said that his father William died when he was young and in 1725 he was forced by his father's cousin William of Thorlieshope to sell Meikledale. He was also said to have had a daughter who inherited Hartsgarth, Langhaugh, Greenholm and 'Redhaugh' and another daughter who married Adam Elliot and inherited Catlowdie in Cumberland. It is clear that this history is at least somewhat muddled. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. He is probably the merchant in Hawick who witnessed baptisms in 1718 (along with tailor James 'Bowwston') for candlemaker George Turnbull, in 1720 for merchant John Little, in 1722 for Robert Scoon in Branxholmtown (with Scoon witnessing a baptism for him on the same day), and in 1723 for wright Richard Turnbull. He married Margaret Boston (or 'Bowston') in Ashkirk Parish in 1713. Their children included: William (b.1714); Thomas (b.1717); Isobell (b.1719); Sarah (b.1721); Sarah (again, b.1722); and Elizabeth (b.1723). The witnesses in 1722 were Robert Scoon in Branxholmtown and merchant James Hardie. Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Alison Hislop in Wilton in 1723. Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isobel Hart in Wilton in 1729. Adam (1715/6–60) son of William of Meikledale. He died at Hartside and is buried at Castleton Cemetery. He is likely to be related to the Adam who married Mary Pott, but these families seem confused. Adam (18th C.) son of Walter in Brugh and descended from the Elliots of Falnash. He was tenant in Hartside, and was surely related to the earlier Adam, who died there in 1760. He married Mary Pott. Their son Walter (b.1762) was born in Castleton Parish and was probably the farmer and cooper at Dinlabyre. Helen, born to Adam and Mary Pott in Castleton in 1772, may also have been their child. Adam (18th C.) son of Adam in Dykeraw. According to a family pedigree he was 'in Tweedside', but this could have mean Tweedenside. He married Isobel Glendinning and had a daughter Helen, who married James Elliot. Adam (18th C.) younger son of Henry of Lodgegill. He was tenant in Flatt. He married Elisabeth, daughter of Henry in Sorbietrees and Christian Scott of Falnash. Their children included Christian (b.1761); Jean (b.1762); and Henry in Canonbie, who married Helen Little. Adam (18th/19th C.) farmer at Kirndean in Liddesdale, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. It is unclear how he is related to other contemporary Elliots, or other Elliots connected with Kirndean. Adam (d.1815) shoemaker in Hawick. He was the only known son of Robert and Elizabeth Scott from Doorpool, and perhaps grandson of Walter in Brugh. His wife Peggy Scott died in 1797; theirs is probably the 1760 marriage of Adam with Margaret Scott. Their children included: Robert (1761–1810); Walter (b.1766); James in Goldielands (b.1769), Schoolmaster at Wilton; and Helen (b.1773), whose baptism was witnessed by John Elliot, tanner. He is probably the shoemaker Adam who witnessed the birth of William Elliot, son of Wilton Schoolmaster James, in 1801; this was presumably his grandson. His death in Hawick is recorded in 1815, when he is clearly listed as father of James in Goldielands. Adam (1740–1804) younger son of William, 1st Laird of Wolfelee. He was a merchant in Danzig. He married Rose Leonardi and they had a daughter Charlotte, who inherited the estate of Pinnaclehill from her uncle Robert. He died on the Isle of Wight. Adam (18th/19th C.) said to be a printer in Hawick. His wife was Margaret Wilson and they had a son Adam born in Hawick in 1812. Adam (18th/19th C.) member of Hawick Curling Club in 1812. He is probably the same as one of the contemporary Adams. Adam (1765–1852) son of shepherd Ninian. He was a carter in Newcastleton. He married Margaret Little (1763–1851). Their children included: Ninian (1786–1800); Margaret (1795–1816); Esther (b.1797), who married Robert of Powisholm; and Adam (b.1806), mason. Adam (1774–94) oldest son of William of Arkleton. He was a Lieutenant in the 72nd Regiment of Foot and was said to be present at the taking of San Domingo (presumably modern Haiti). He died of wounds in the West Indies and was unmarried. Adam of Arkleton see Adam Scott-Elliot. Adam (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He was probably son of James and Helen Elliot. He married Margaret Oliver and lived at 'Burntshields' (although it is unclear where this is). Their children included: Lizzy (b.1800); James (b.1801); Daniel (b.1803); Helen (b.1805); Isabella (b.1808); Jean (b.1811); Margaret (1813–16); and Jane (1813–36). Dr. Adam (b.1797) eldest son of James of Goldielands, former Schoolmaster of Wilton. He was born in Wilton Parish and became a surgeon with the East India Company. He is probably the Adam who was a medical student at Edinburgh University 1813–18, receiving an M.D. in 1819. He was recorded at Goldielands in the 1837 electoral roll, and was listed there on the 1841 census. He was described as 'in Goldielands' in about 1850 when he was one of the men charged with arranging the 'Coutard Fund' for the poor in Hobkirk Parish, bequeathed by John and William Dalgleish. In 1851 he was at Goldielands (listed as a former maritime surgeon with the H.E.I.C.), living with his sister Helen, cousin William, a shepherd and 3 servants. He became a member of the Archæological Society in 1858 and donated a stone hammer, stone axe and 'gigantic fossil fish' to the Museum. He was 'Dr. Elliott, Goldielands' when listed as an informant to the Ordnance Survey Name Books in about 1859. He also donated many items to the Museum in the 1860s (e.g. a rapier from Hume Castle and artefacts from China), and was consequently made an honorary member of the Archæological Society. In 1866 he loaned some Chinese curiosities to the Museum for their temporary exhibition. In 1861 he was listed as 'Graduate of the University of Edinburgh, Not practising recevg. compensation annually as Surgeon in the Ex Maritime Service of the Honl. E.I. Copany., Farmer of 200 accres Employing 5 men'. He was still at Goldielands in 1868. He donated many items to the Museum in the 1860s (e.g. a rapier from Hume Castle and artefacts from China), and was consequently made an honorary member of the Archæological Society. Adam (b.c.1800) listed as a tailor in Newcastleton in 1841. He was then at about 28 Langholm Street, with a younger tailor, Henry, as well as Jean (perhaps his siblings) and young baker John. Probably the same Adam is still recorded as a tailor in Newcastleton in the 1860s. Adam (1806–89) son of Newcastleton carter Adam. He was a mason in Newcastleton on the 1841 and 1851 census and listed as a 'Feuar' on South Hermitage Street in 1861. He married Elizabeth Murray (1818–1901). He was blind by the 1881 census. Adam Scott (1807/8–99) born in Hawick Parish, son of miller William and Margaret Scott. Along with his parents and siblings he emigrated to Canada in 1816. He worked in farming and milling and built a saw and grist mill in Sullivan township. In 1858 he moved to Bruce County, Ontario, where he is credited as the founder of the settlement of Chesley. He married Janet Halliday and had a family of 10 children. Adam (1827–80) son of Robert in Powisholm, Castleton Parish. In 1851 he was living in Wilton Kirkstyle and working as a journeyman baker. He is probably the resident of the Crescent who became a member of the Archæological Society in 1858 and in 1861 donated a heron to the Museum. In 1861 he was a journeyman baker living at 8 Allars Crescent. He later was a bread and biscuit baker in Dumfries. He married Euphemia Oliver (b.1830) in Wilton in 1851. Their children included: Mary (b.1854), who probably died young; Esther (b.1856); Mary Oliver (b.1863); Euphemia Oliver (b.1866); and Margaret Law (b.1871). Adam (19th C.) resident of Slitrig Crescent. He became a member of the Archæological Society in 1858. In 1861 he donated a heron to the Museum. Adam (19th C.) local man who served with the 92nd Gordon Highlanders. In 1874 he donated to the Museum 'a Ghoorka knife, used during the mutiny in India, a most formidable weapon', as well as 'four East Indian copper coins'. Adam of Caverton (d.c.1900) son of manufacturer William of Tower Mill. He was brother of Col. William of Teviot Lodge and James of Mosstower. In 1901 his extensive natural history collection was presented to the Hawick Museum. This included mounted butterflies and moths 'in handsome cases', as well as a stuffed badger (killed in the Kale valley in 1895), an Egyptian goose (shot near Caverton in 1886), other animals, birds and fish. Adam (d.1938) said to be the last of the hand-frame knitters in Hawick when he died. Agnes (17th C.) recorded as 'in Brighous' in 1662 among people who owed money to the decease William Elliot of Harwood. Then she was 'in Brighouce', i.e. tenant farmer in the Liddel valley in 1665 in a record relating to William Elliot of Binks. Agnes (17th C.) recorded in the Town Book in June 1698, when she was said to be due £6 Scots. The reason is not given, but it was along with money due to the Burgh Officer for his Common Riding coat, and so it may be that this was a charge for providing refreshments or similar at the Common Riding that year. Agnes (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Wester Mill in 1749. She was fined by the Wilton Kirk Session for 'fornication with James Elliot in Liddisdale'. Agnes 'Little Auld Nany' (d.1776) resident of Hawick whose death is recorded. Alexander (15th C.) listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Alexander (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1533 as husband to Isabel Murray. His wife assigned her lands in Kershop (in Ettrick Forest) to her 'brother german' Michael Scott (suggesting that she was a Scott, who first married a Murray, probably James). In 1539 his wife was 'Esebell Scott' when she discharged a loan from Michael Scott. Perhaps the same Alexander 'Elwauld' in Borthwick was recorded in 1539 when accused (in the Selkirk Protocol Books) of stealing a large number of sheep belonging to the Elliots in Cranston. Alexander 'Sandy' (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'Alexander Elwald' in 1535 when his son William was one of a large group of Armstrongs and others who were denounced as rebels for a raid on Craik. Alexander (16th C.) witness in 1550 to a lease granted by the curators of the young James Crichton to his mother, Janet Beaton, wife of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme (where it was witnessed). Alexander (16th C.) recorded in 1563/4 along with Will in Adderstoneshiel, Will 'of the Burnmouthis' and 2 Croziers. They were to be presented by John Gledstains of Cocklaw to answer accusations brought against them by Englishman William Selby. He was probably associated with lands owned by Gledstains of that Ilk. Alexander (16th C.) younger son of Gavin of Falnash. He is probably the Alexander 'of Fallon' (likely an error for 'Falnash') complained about by the English for a raid of 1589. Along with many of the same men he is 'of Fallenesche' later that same year for a raid on farms of the Laird of 'Troghwen' and Hedley of 'Garret Sheills', when they are said to have slewn 2 men and taken 2 prisoners. He was listed in 1598/9 as brother of Archie of Muselee when a number of 'brother, tenants and servants' of William of Falnash were cited for reiving. Alexander 'Mill' (16th C.) resident of Priesthaugh. He was recorded in 1574 as being 'alias Myll thair', listed after 'Law's Jock' in Priesthaugh, among men who had been ordered to be removed from the lands of Robert of Redheugh. It is unclear what his nickname meant or how he was related to other Elliots. Alexander (18th C.) from Southdean Parish. He married Christian Scott in 1766, annouced in Southdean and Ancrum Parishes. They had children Betty (b.1766) and Jean (b.1769). Alexander Kynynmound (1754–78) 3rd son of Sir Gilbert, 3rd Baronet, and brother of Gilbert, the 1st Earl of Minto. He served with the East India Company and died (unmarried) of fever while on a mission to Nagport. Alexander (b.1809) born in Hobkirk Parish, son of John. He was a shoemaker on the High Street. He was a shoemaker journeyman living at 48 High Street on the 1841 census and 23 High Street in 1851 and 1861. He married Mary Tait (b.1806) in Cavers Parish in 1833. Their children included: Rachel (b.1836); John (b.1838); William (b.1838); David (b.1842); Elizabeth (b.1844); Margaret (b.1847); Walter (b.1849); Mary (b.1854); and Agnes (b.1857). Alexander 'Sandy' (19th/20th C.) shoemaker of Wilton. He had a shop on Victoria Road, which for a long time was thatched, and later became the property of John Rae. He was connected with Allars Kirk and was also well-known for having a family of 17! He could be the same as the High Street shoemaker. Alexandra Pringle 'Zandra' nee Hogg (1940–2014) born in Hawick, she worked in the office of Pringle's after leaving school, but quickly became a model for the company. She married builder Ian in 1962, and after his death ran the firm of J. & R. Elliot on Commercial Road. She was elected Chair of the Community Council in 1999. She was Honorary Provost 2003–05 and was voted Citizen of the Year in 2005. She became a Scottish Borders Councillor in 2007 and was voted in as Honorary Provost again, serving until early 2011. A new bandstand was erected in her memory in the Park in 2015. Alison (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. Her name appears to be written 'alisaun Ilwand' and she was probably related to John and Margaret, who are also listed. Andrew (15th/16th C.) witness in 1497 to the sasine for the lands of Robert of Redheugh. Other witnesses were Ninian, Robert, William and John 'Elwald', as well as others. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. Andrew 'Dand the Man' (15th/16th C.) son of William, recorded in 1502, along with his brother 'Hob the King'. Patrick Gray from Greenhead, James Elliot in 'Quhitmere' and Ralph Ker of Primside Loch had a respite for helping them, specifically in the theft of 180 sheep from Tweeddale and Lauderdale. Andrew (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1516 as witness to a document for George Ker prebendary of Auld Roxburgh, done at Fairnilee. Perhaps the same Andrew acted as a bailie for Margaret Haliburton and George Ker in Faldonside in 1539/40. Andrew (d.1531) recorded as 'Elwald' when he was hanged for theft along with Patrick 'Dowglass' and David 'Blynskale', as given in Pitcairn's 'Criminal Trials'. It is unclear which area this involved, or how he was related to other Elliots. Andrew (16th C.) recorded as 'Andree Elwald' when he and others held the lease on Braidlie on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. Andrew (16th C.) recorded in 1544 as agent in Sekirk for Margaret Haliburton, Lady of Dirleton. He was probably the same man as (or closely related to) the Andrew who purchased a tenement in Selkirk in 1579. Andrew 'Dand' (d.bef. 1564) third son of Gavin, 1st Laird of Horsleyhill. He was involved in the murder of Hugh Douglas in about 1547. His father gave him the lands of Bailielee in 1551. He was dead in 1563/4 when there was a case before the Privy Council involving his brothers William and Robert, and sheep that had been stolen from his lands by the Scotts of Tushielaw. He is referred to as 'umquhile Andro, alias Dand Ellot' when his brother Robert in Horsleyhill appeared on his behalf and the Scotts of Tushielaw were ordered to replace the stolen sheep. Andrew 'Dand' (16th C.) tenant of Gavin of Elliot of Falnash in 1569. The Laird appeared in Hawick to give surety for his tenants. His name is recorded as 'Dande Ellot' and he may have been related to Will, Jock and Hob, other Elliots also listed as tenants. Andrew 'Dand' (16th C.) recorded as 'callit of the Heuchhous' in 1576/7 when he was convicted for theft, including stealing 80 sheep from the Laird of Cessford. He was surely related to the slightly earlier Martin of the same location and the slightly later Hob. His son John is mentioned in 1579/80. Andrew (16th C.) recorded as 'Andro Ellot, callit the Wowaris Andro' in 1578/9, when it was stated to the Privy Council that he was supposed to have been presented to the King and his Regent, but had not been. This was along with John 'callit of the Dewisleis', with sureties John Carmichael, younger of that Ilk and William Scott of Montbenger. It is unclear what his nickname meant (perhaps his father was 'the Wooer'). Andrew (16th C.) recorded in 1579 when he purchased a tenement in Selkirk. He is also recorded in 1579/80 as Burgess of Selkirk in a dispute with another Burgess, John Watson. In 1581 he loaned money to William Hogg in Melrose, receiving an annual rent of tenements in Melrose. He was a Burgess in 1581 when he was asked for the key to Selkirk Tolbooth. Also in 1581 he loaned money to John Murray in Lindean. He may be the 'Andro Ellot, alias Dandie Cow', Burgess of Selkirk, whose will was recorded in Edinburgh in 1586. Andrew 'Dandie' (16th C.) nephew of Martin of Braidlie. He was recorded in 1580 among Elliots who raided the farms of Harwood (on Teviot), Slaidhills, Whitlaw and Hoscote; he was declared a rebel after not appearing. It is unclear who his father was, and whether he is the same as one of the contemporary Andrews. The 'Dand Ellot of Braydley' complained about in 1590 (about a raid in 1588) is either him or his cousin Andrew (son of Martin of Braidlie). In 1590 he was recorded as 'Dande Ellott brother's son to said Martinge' on a list of Elliots (including Martin's sons Airchie and John), Croziers, Nixons and others accused of rieving from William Robson of 'Allerweshe'. Andrew 'Dand' (16th C.) son of Clement's Hob. He is listed in 1581 among many Elliots and Armstrongs complaining about the actions of the Scotts and their followers. It is possible that he is the same man as one of the contemporary Andrews. Andrew 'Dand' (16th C.) son of Martin of Braidlie. He is easily confused with his cousin, who was nephew of Martin, and sometimes also just called 'of Braidlie'. He is probably the 'Dand of Braidley' listed along with Clement's Hob when 'Archie Kene' was held in Blackness Castle as pledge for them. He is probably the 'Dand of Braidley' whose son Hob is recorded in 1574 when he was to remain in ward. Martin complained to the Privy Council in 1581 of an attack on him and his brother Hob while they were riding near Headshaw. The pair were attacked by Walter Scott of Headshaw and others, with one of them losing a hand and the other also being injured. His son Hob was warded in Edinburgh in 1580. He was probably 'Dand Ellott of Braidley, fugitive' listed among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580 (but his name occurs after 4 sons of Martin of Braidlie, so perhaps this was a brother or some different man). He was also listed among the Elliots of Braidlie in 1583, his name appearing as 'Dand Ellot of the Brandley', along with 'John Ellot of the same'. He is probably the 'Dand Ellot of Braydley' recorded in 1590 when there was a complaint by Englishmen about a raid made on their livestock in 1588. He is probably the 'Martin's Dande' listed in 1590 along with Will of the Steele and other Elliots and Armstrongs, accused of rieving from Englishman John Armstrong. He is also 'Martins Dande' when accused in 1590 along with Will of Fiddleton and others of stealing livestock and goods from the Laird of 'Troghwen' and Hedley of 'the Garret sheills'. He is probably the 'Dand of Braidley' listed along with Clement's Hob when 'Archie Kene' was held in Blackness Castle as pledge for them. He is probably the 'Dand of Braidley' whose son Hob is recorded in 1574 when he was to remain in ward. Andrew 'Dand' (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 as 'younger, in Borthuikmanis' when he was a fugitive from trial. Presumably his father was also Andrew from Borthwick Mains. Andrew of Blackhall (16th C.) listed among a large group of Elliots who were accused in 1590 of taking Ralph Hall and others prisoner and ransoming them. He was presumably from Blackhall in Ewesdale, since other Elliots of Ewes were also listed. Andrew 'Dand' (16th C.) brother of Hob of Bowholm. He was recorded in 1590 when he, his brother Robert and 'Willie's Airchie' of Stitchillhill were accused of stealing from Englishman Richard Thurlwall. He may be the same as one of the other Andrews. Andrew of Burngrains 'the Wooer' (16th C.) recorded by the English Wardens for stealing 92 sheep from Kirknewton. His name is given as 'Androe Ellet of the Burne grainge alias Andro the woer', and his accomplices were 'Martyne mend the kayle, &c.' Andrew 'Dand', 'Dandie', 'Sweet Milk' (16th C.) recorded in 1598 when there were complaints from Sir James Sandilands that he was among a group of Armstrongs, Elliots and Scotts who stole from his lands and 'slew and dismembered divers good subjects who rais to the fray'; in a court case in 1600, Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch's agent denied responsiblity for him and his crimes. His nickname was given as 'Sweit Milk'. He was probably related to Hob (recorded in 1569) and Gib (recorded in 1586/7), who shared the same nickname. It seems likely he was related to the slightly later William who was also called 'Sweet Milk' and whose death is supposed to have been the inspiration for the song 'Rattlin Roarin Willie'. Andrew (16th/17th C.) recorded as 'Wower's Andro' in 1605. His son Jock was listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick. Andrew (16th/17th C.) recorded as 'Dandie of Bowholmes'. In 1611 his brother Will was listed among Liddesdale men who failed to appear at court in Jedburgh; however, he was acquitted of the charges. Andrew of Philhope (17th C.) possibly son of Archibald. After the restoration of the monarchy in 1662 he was fined £1,000. Andrew of Meikledale (d.1682) eldest son of Adam of Meikledale with his 2nd wife, Janet Scott. He succeeded to Meikledale on the death of his father, but died himself later in the same year. The lands of Meikledale and Meikledalehope then went to his 'brother german' William. Andrew (17th C.) recorded as Treasurer of the Burgh of Selkirk in 1676. He gave a discharge to Thomas in Borthwickshiels (who may have been related) for some payments. Perhaps the same Andrew, maltman and Burgess of Selkirk, was deceased in 1683 when his wife Agnes Scott had a discharge with the treasurer of Selkirk. Andrew (17th C.) recorded as 'sone to Langsyde' in 1677 when there was a petition to grant him freedom of the Burgh of Selkirk. Andrew 'Dand' (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. In 1687 he witnessed a baptism for Adam Craig. He married 'Beatie' Wilson and their children included Thomas (b.1684) and Helen (b.1689). Probably the same 'Dand' had a daughter Elizabeth baptised in Roberton in 1681, with no mother's name given and witnesses John Hardie and Walter Elliot (who may have been related). Andrew (17th/18th C.) recorded as Schoolmaster in Selkirk in 1719 and 1720. He probably succeeded Robert Chisholme. Andrew (17th/18th C.) married Agnes Shortreed in Ashkirk Parish in 1726. Andrew (17th/18th C.) 3rd son of Thomas in Oakwood Mill and grandson of Thomas of Bewlie. His brothers were Thomas of Oakwood Mill and William of Wolfelee. He could be the Andrew recorded in a legal claim in Selkirk in 1736. He firstly married Agnes Shortreed and their children were: Thomas (b.1727), probably died in infancy; James (b.1728); Margaret (b.1730); Jean (b.1732); Agnes (b.1734), probably died young; and Thomas (again, b.1736). All of his children were baptised in Selkirk Parish. He secondly married Mary Simpson and their children were: Agnes (b.1746); Margaret, who married David Hagie and also Thomas Hay, both from Kirkcaldy; and Charles (1748–bef. 90), who was a Burgess of Selkirk and bookseller in Edinburgh. Andrew (1728–97) 3rd son of the 2nd Lord Minto. He was named after his grandfather, Sir Andrew Kerr of Cavers Carre. It was said that his father was a strict disciplinarian and when he once complained that he disliked boiled mutton his father said 'Let Mr Andrew have boiled mutton for breakfast, boiled mutton for dinner, and boiled mutton for supper, till he has learned to like it'. In 1746 he sailed for America, setting up as a merchant in Philadelphia. He returned to Scotland in 1761, but returned to America 2 years later when appointed Collector of Customs for New York. He was there during the American Revolution, although he fled when the city was taken, but returned as Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of New York when it was reoccupied by the British. After independence was declared he returned to Scotland and purchased Greenwells in Bowden Parish. He also had a house in George Square in Edinburgh. In America he married Eleanor McCall and later Elizabeth Plumstead (whom George Washington was enamoured with, according to family tradition) and had 9 children (including Capt. John, William and Andrew). He died at his brother John's house at Monteviot and was buried at Minto. Andrew (18th C.) groom and house servant at Woll in 1794, when he was working for Charles Scott. Perhaps the same Andrew was recorded as a servant to Rev. Thomas Sharp when he witnessed a baptism for John Lamb in Hawick in about 1789 and another for Thomas Rutherford of Knowesouth in Hawick in 1789. Andrew (18th/19th C.) recorded at Teindside Burn in 1797 among Hawick men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was listed among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area. Andrew (b.1771/2) joiner in Newcastleton. In 1841 he was at about 16 South Hermitage Street, living with Helen and Thomas (probably his children) and Thomas Simpson (probably a grandson). Andrew (1772–1850) blacksmith in Newcastleton. He is recorded as such in the 1841 census, probably at about 8 Doncaster Street. He married Janet (or Jane) Wilson and she died in 1851, aged 74. They had a son, John (1834/5–1907), who married Elizabeth Scott. They are buried at Ettleton. Andrew (1787–1866) farmer at Twislehope, son of John, who also farmed there. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He is listed among heads of households in 1835–41. He was farmer there in 1841 and in 1861 was farming 2300 acres and employed 3 people. He was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale in the 1850s. He married Eliza Armstrong and their children included: Agnes (b.1835); John (b.1836), who emigrated to New Zealand and Canada; Janet

(b.1838); Walter (1840–99), whose family emigrated to Canada after his death; Eliza Murray (b.1843), who died unmarried; Robert (1845–1918), who emigrated to New Zealand; Archibald (1847–1900), emigrated to Canada; Margaret (b.1847), twin of Archibald, who regularly corresponded with her nephews in New Zealand; Andrew (b.1849), emigrated to America; Mary (b.1849); and Thomas (1852–1906). Andrew (b.1819/20) born in Castleton Parish. He was listed at Mount in 1851 and was based at Stobs Limery in the 1850s. By 1861 he was farming 186 acres and employing 3 people at Boosmill in Liliesleaf Parish. He was still recorded at Boosmill in 1868. He married Janet Thomson in 1843 and they had a son James (b.1844). He was probably the 'Elliot of Twisselhope' listed among local 'Hard-riding Dick's' in H.H. Dixon's 'Field and Fern or Scottish Flocks and Herds (South)' (1865). Andrew (1844/5–1930) born in Castleton Parish, son of Thomas and Hannah Storey. He firstly married Agnes Telfer, who died in 1880, aged 29. He secondly married Margaret (1851–1940), daughter of shepherd William Glendinning. Their children were: Thomas (b.1883); Helen (b.1885); Hannah (b.1886); John (b.1889); Mary Jane (b.1891); Maggie (b.1892); and Bessie (b.1895). He is buried at Ettleton along with his wives and 4 children. Andrew (d.1961) married Elizabeth Ekron. His wife Elizabeth (b.1876) was daughter of John Ekron and Agnes Carruthers. Their children included John Burns, who married Margaret Butler. Anna Mary (19th/20th C.) daughter of Thomas of Redheugh and sister of Robert. Her brother inherited Redheugh, but died in 1915. In 1918 she sold Redheugh to the tenants, James and Thomas Scott. She was described as a widow at that time. Anthony of the Binks (16th/17th C.) probably eldest son of William of the Binks. He was 'Anthony of the benks' in 1590, when accused along with James of the Hill, James 'Half Lug', Hobbie 'the Tailor' and 60 others, of raiding 'Windgates', taking more than 100 cows and 4 horses, slaying George Hume, leaving 6 or 7 men near death and robbing 5 houses. He is mentioned in 1590/1 being 'of the Benkis' and 'brother-son of Martine'; this suggests he was a nephew of Martin of Braidlie, while the standard genealogy makes him a grandnephew. He was 'Anthony of the Benks' in 1596 when there was a complaint that he and others (including Will Elliot of the Steele and Geordie Simpson) had raided lands in England at King Water. He was described as 'Antone Ellott in Rouchlie' in 1622 when he was on a Jedburgh jury with his brother Simon. His forename is uncommon among Elliot and so probably came from his mother's family. Archibald (16th C.) recorded in 1529/30 as brother of Gavin. With Gavin, along with Simon Armstrong of Whithaugh and Ninian Armstrong, he pledged to bring Robert Elliot 'Flaskvod' to Fairnilee to answer for crimes prepetrated against George Ker of Linton. He must have been a prominent Liddesdale Elliot of the time, but it is unclear where he resided. Archibald 'Airchie' (16th C.) recorded in 1541 when he was accused of having been on a raid on Bewcastle in which Englishman 'John Makrobyn' was killed. He was listed along with brothers Adie and Ingram, who may have been related to him. He may be the same as Archibald of Gorrenberry. Archibald (16th C.) recorded as 'Archibald Aillat, vicar of Kassilltone' in 1557 when he wrote a bond involving Robert Elliot of Redheugh. It is thus possible that he was a relative of the Elliot Chief. He must have been one of the last priests in Castleton before the Reformation. Archibald 'Airchie' 1st Laird of Falnash (d.bef. 1566) third son of Robert, 13th Chief (who was probably killed at Flodden). His brothers were Robert of Redheugh, perhaps Martin of Braidlie and probably John of Copshaw. He was probably the Archibald, brother of Robert of Redheugh who served as surety for William, James and Simon 'Elwald' in 1537/8; he was also one of the Elliot sureties for several Croziers, that they would not harm John Gledstains of that Ilk. In 1541 he was designated 'in Gorrenberrie', and was probably the Archibld 'Elwald' who was tenant of 'Gorrumbarry' on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. He was probably the Archibald, uncle of 'Robert Elwand, sone to Robyne of the Redhwych' who signed a bond to enter prisoners with the Laird of Ferniehirst in 1546 (and then had to have the notary help him sign). In bonds for re-entry of the same men he was recorded as of 'Northows' (i.e. Northhouse) in 1547 and 'of Gorranbery' in 1548. He is also probably the Archibald (along with Robert of Redheugh and William of Larriston) who had a bond to enter Robert Crozier as a prisoner in 1548. In 1554 he was 'in Gorinbery' when he was granted an acre of arable land in Spittal-on-Rule ('Harparhill') and the advowson of the chapel at Caerlenrig; he there signed 'with my hand at the pen' led by the notary. In the following letter of reversion he agreed to hold the land and patronage of the chapel for 13 years for 86 pounds Scots. He was probably the

'Arche Elwald' who, along with 'Robyn' (probably of Thorlieshope) went 'to lord Maxwell at Gedforthe' to seek pardon for the English rebels that they were resetting. He had a Crown charter for Falnash in 1556. In about 1557 he and Simon Scott of 'Fernilil' rented Bowanhill and 'Grangia alias Stanyhetoun' from Melrose Abbey; he was there listed as 'Arche Ellot of Gorumberry'. In 1561 he was among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders and later that year appeared before a Justice Court to answer for his tenants. As 'Arche Ellot of the Fawnyche' he signed a bond in 1561/2 with Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst to enter Thomas Routledge as a prisoner (the other Elliots were his son and heir Gavin, John of Copshaw and 'Elder Will'); he may thus have been serving as Captain of Hermitage Castle. In 1562 he had another bond, along with his son Gavin, to enter John, son of Mungo Routledge to Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst. He may also have gained the lands of Arkleton. His wife's name is not known. He had 3 children: Gavin of Falnash, who succeeded by at least 1566; William, 'Archie's Will', of Gorrenberry; and Robert, 'Archie's Hob'. In 1647 his great-great-grandson Archibald was served heir to his lands, thus confirming the succession over 5 generations. His descendants held Falnash until about 1675. Archibald (16th C.) recorded in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale as tenant of Dinlees. He may be the same as Archibald of Falnash. Archibald 'Airchie' of Thorlieshope (16th C.) said in 1541 to be one of the main ringleaders of the Elliots of Liddesdale who were raiding into England. He was specifically believed to be responsible for the 'burnynge of William Carnabyes corne at Halton'; he was referred to as 'brother and son to Robert Ellwald of Thorllyshope'. Sir John Heron led a party of men from Tynedale who burned 'the saide Arche Elwodes house' at 'Thirleshope'. In 1557 probably the same man rented, along with Scott of Synton, the lands of Southdeanrig and Cauldcleuch, from Melrose Abbey; he is there recorded as 'Arche Ellot of Thirlishoup'. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Archibalds. Archibald 'Airchie' (16th C.) younger son of Gavin of Horsleyhill and brother of the next Laird, William. He is recorded as 'Arche' in 1564, along with William of Horsleyhill, Robert and Gavin, and other Elliots and Scotts, tried for the murder of David Scott of Hassendean. He was acquitted, along with Gavin, partly because he was a 'puer' (i.e. a boy under 16 at the time). In 1596/7 he was witness to a sasine and was there described as brother of Gavin of Horsleyhill. He may be the same as one of the other Archibalds. Archibald 'Airchie Keen' (16th C.) one of 10 Liddesdale rievers captured in Hawick in October 1567 and afterwards held in Edinburgh tolbooth. In 1569 he was pledge for himself 'and the haill branche of Gorrumberry'. Also in 1569 he and 'Clement's Hob' escaped from imprisonment in the Castle of Doune. Also in 1569 he is listed being held in Blackness Castle as pledge for Clement's Hob and 'Dand of Braidley'. In 1578/9 it was restated that Walter Scott, younger of Tushielaw had pledged to the Privy Council that he been entered into ward in Castle Doune (in Monteith); since this did not happen, then his cautioner was fined. He is probably the same as 'Archie Keene' in Monipennie's list of Border chiefs, published about 1594 (but prepared much earlier) under the heading 'Gorumberie'. Archibald (16th C.) recorded in 1561 renting the farm of Corrie Sike for 17 years from Gledstains of Cocklaw. The transcription of his surname is uncertain, but is given as 'Willat'. He is recorded more clearly as 'Arche Ellott in Corresik' in the bond of security signed in Hawick in 1569 by several Elliots, Scotts and others; the Laird of Gledstains there served as surety for him for 1000 merks. In 1569 the Privy Council ruled that Gledstains was liable for the £1000 when he failed to appear and additionally Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme became surety for him. Archibald 'Airchie', 'Possets' (16th C.) tenant in Whitehillbrae. He was recorded in 1574 as 'Archie Ellot callit Possettis in Quheittilbray' among men who had been ordered to be removed from the lands of Robert of Redheugh. He is probably related to some of the other Elliots of the Priesthaugh area who are also named in 1574, particularly James 'Dobson', who was also in Whitehillbrae. It is unclear what his nickname meant (but perhaps the hot drink). He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Archibalds. Archibald 'Airchie' (16th C.) recorded in 1578/9 when it was stated to the Privy Council that Martin of Braidlie and Robert of Redheugh had already entered him in ward with George Ramsay of Dalhousie. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Archibalds (but not 'Archie Kene', who is listed separately). Archibald 'Archie' (16th C.) listed in 1578/9 as 'sone to Ringanis Wil' when John Carmichael, younger of that Ilk was caution for him (and others) not to raid into England. He was also recorded in 1579 as 'Archie Ellot, sone to Ringhanis Will the portar', when he was among the 'Armstrangis of the Gyngillis and thair complices' who gave in to the demands of Lord Maxwell and agreed to end the feud between the Elliots of Ewesdale and the Armstrongs. His name was also given as 'sone to Ringanis Will Ellot the portar in Glenvoren'. He appeared personally before the Lord's of Secret Council later in 1579 and hence John Carmichael was relieved from his surety. From his name he was presumably son of Will and grandson of Ringan; this could be Ninian the same man as the 'porter' of Ewesdoors. He may be the 'Arche Ellot at Ellis Durris' (probably 'Ewis' mistranscribed) listed in 1586 among 'principallis of the brokin men of the west marche' in a document by King James VI instructing his Lieutenant on the Border. It is possible he is the same man as 'Will's Airchie' recorded a little later. Archibald 'Archie' (16th C.) nephew of Martin of Braidlie. He was recorded in 1580 among Elliots who raided the farms of Harwood (on Teviot), Slaidhills, Whitlaw and Hoscote. It is unclear who his father was. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Archibalds. Archibald (d.bef. 1583) tenant in Dodrig. It is unclear to which branch of the Elliots he belonged. He farmed at Dodrig from about 1547, and built a house there; 'he hes peceablie bruikit and josit thrie quarteris of the landis of Dodrig, pertening to the chaiplanrie of the paroche kirk of Caveris, as kyndlie tennentis thairof'. In 1583 his son Robert complained that men sent by Robert Elliot of Redheugh had attacked the workers on the farm. Archibald (16th C.) recorded in Yair in 1581 when he witnessed a transaction between James in Yair and John Gray in Lindean. He was probably related to James, as well as Thomas, who were both in Yair at the same time. He witnessed a further transaction in Selkirk in 1581. Archibald (16th C.) recorded as brother of Robert of Redheugh in 1581 when he witnessed a transaction between James McDougall of Makerstoun and Gavin Elliot of Bailielee (later of Stobs). His brother Gavin also witnessed the same transaction (and may have been Gavin of Brugh). He was also listed as one of the brothers of Robert of Redheugh according to a 1583 letter from the English wardens; he is listed separately from Archie 'Fyre the Braes', but it is unclear if the was the same as one of the other contemporary Archibalds. He may be the same as Archibald, son of Robert, 15th of Reidheugh. Archibald 'Fyre the Braes' of the Shaws (16th C.) listed in 1569 along with his brother 'Hob of the Schawis', when John of Thorlieshope was held in Wester Wemyss Castle as pledge for them. It is possible that all 3 men were brothers. He is also recorded as 'Arche Ellot' in an 1583 letter from Musgrave to Burghley, Queen Elizabeth's Chancellor. He was probably a close relative of Robert of Redheugh, since his name appears shortly after the Laird's brothers. In 1584 he was listed among the Elliots of Thorlieshope, giving assurances to the English Wardens for the following year; there he is 'Arche Ellot called Fyrebraies'. He was recorded as 'Arche Ellott of the Shawes called 'Fye the braes'' in 1587/8 when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots. He is also recorded on Monipennie's c.1594 list of Border chiefs, where he is appears as Arthur and is listed beside Rob of Thorlieshope. He could be the brother of Robert of Redheugh listed in 1579/80 among men accused of raiding into England. He could also be the same as Archibald of Thorlieshope, recorded in 1557. Archibald of the Park (16th C.) listed among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580. Others listed there are Hob of the Park and John of the Park. He was also listed in 1581 among Armstrongs, Elliots and others who accused the Scotts and their allies of several crimes. His name appears after 'James Rowe of the Park', who was probably 'Jamie's Rowe' and possibly his brother. He is probably the 'Arche Ellot, called Symmis Arche' listed as one of the cautioners for 'Symmis Rowie' and others in 1581 and 1582/3; this would make him son of Simon of the Park. His name comes first among those giving assurance for the Elliots of Park in the 1584 bond signed with the English Wardens at Hermitage. He is presumably not the same as 'young Archie of the Park' recorded in 1599. Archibald 'Airchie o the Hill' (16th C.) recorded in 1578/9 when it was stated to the Privy Council that Martin of Braidlie and Robert of Redheugh had previously entered him in ward with George Ramsay of Dalhousie, but he escaped. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Archibalds (but not 'Archie Kene', who is listed separately in 1578/9). He was also listed as one of the Elliots accused in 1581 of stealing cattle and goods from James Foster of 'Symwhaite'. In 1581 William Turnbull in Bonchester was declared a rebel after failing to appear to answer the charge of stealing a horse from him. He was further listed in 1583 as 'Arche of Hill', when listed among the Elliots of the Burnhead branch; Jock of the Hill is also listed. He was probably from Liddesdale, although it is unclear where his seat was. He signed the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens, his name appearing along with several Elliots of Ramsiegill, making it clear he was closely related to them. In 1586 his master Robert of Redheugh was instructed to enter him in court. In 1587/8 he was accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots. He was also one of the Elliots who entered a bond for 'Willie's Hob' in 1587. There was a complaint by Leonard Corbet of the Orchard that (along with Archie 'Dog Pintle' and Archie's 2 brothers) he had stolen 12 cows, 2 horses and £100 of goods, and burned 4 houses. In 1587/8 he was recorded being held in ward (by the Laird of Lochleven) as part of an attempt to quell unrest on the Border; however, he 'eshaipit and eschewit' and his pledge was charged to appear before the Privy Council. He is listed in 1590 among a group accused of taking livestock, goods and prisoners from the Pott's of Carrick; James of the Hill is also listed, as well as a Crozier, Douglas, Laidlaw and Henderson. Also in 1590 he, his brother James, Martin Crozier and others were accused of rieving from 'Borne' in Redesdale. Furthermore, in 1590 he was accused, along with several Croziers, of rieving from John Hall of Otterburn. He was also listed among Elliots, Armstrongs, Turnbulls, Laidlaws and Croziers, accused in 1590 of rieving from the Laird of 'Troghwen' and Hedley of 'Garret Sheills'. In 1590/1 he listed among men that the Earls of Bothwell and Murray were to enter before the Privy Council. In 1591 he was accused of leading a group of men to plunder from Jeffrey Tailor and stole livestock and goods from the tenants of Scaleby; others included his brother James and his nephew Jock. Probably the same man signed a bond with Scott of Buccleuch in 1599, along with 'Willie's Archie', 'Cull with the Shaid' and 'Jock o the Hill' (possibly his son). In 1602 he was among a group of mostly Armstrongs who killed a shepherd at Hallrule and stole about 120 sheep; his son Mark was also listed. He was probably related to 'Joanni de lie Hill', who is recorded in 1541. He may be the 'Archie Ellot of the Hill, callit Gleyit Archie' who was acquitted of crimes in Jedburgh in 1611. Archibald 'Airchie' (16th C.) servant to James Kerr, son of the Laird of Greenhead. In 1586 his master was instructed to enter him and another servant into court. Archibald 'Will's Airchie' (16th C.) recorded in 1587/8 among a large number of Elliots and others accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585. Others listed include Hob of Burnhead, Hob of Ramsiegill, Airchie o the hill, Jamie's Geordie and Reid Martin of Heuchhouse, which may be clues to his family connections. It is possible he is the same man as the Airchie son of 'Ringan's Will' recorded in the 1570s or the 'Will's Airchie' of Stitchillhill recorded in the 1590s. Archibald (16th C.) brother of Will, tenant in Dodburn. In 1586, along with his brother, he was accused of 'a great strough at the Eschelles in England', with William of Falnash standing as surety for them. In 1602 the Crown was still trying to recover the penalties for him, Will and their brother Sim. They all 'has become at his Majesty's will' in a court held at Jedburgh. Archibald 'the Flail' (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 being 'callit the Flaill', among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. Archibald (16th C.) tenant in Westcoterig. He is recorded as 'Archie Ellot of Westercoit' in 1590 in a case where Walter Scott of Buccleuch and Walter Scott of Goldielands were ordered to enter certain of their tenants to answer some English complaints. Archie in Doecleuch was also listed and hence a separate man; however, he may be the same as one of the other Archibalds. Archibald of Muselee (16th/17th C.) son of Gavin of Falnash and brother of William of Falnash. He was mentioned several times regarding raids on England. In 1587 he was named in relation to compensation for raids, the issue being raised with the Earl of Bothwell, Keeper of Liddesdale. His elder brother William, along with Walter Chisholme of that Ilk, was guarantor for his payment. In 1586/7 he was 'in Muselit' under the Laird of Chisholme (and hence presumably Chisholme's tenant) when he failed to find surety in relation to raids into England. In 1590/1 he was 'brother of Will of Fallinesche' among men that the Earls of Bothwell and Murray were to enter before the Privy Council. Additionally his brother Will and Walter Chisholme of that Ilk were also ordered to present him to the court. In 1598/9 he is 'Archie Ellott of Mouslie' listed among the 'brothers, tenants and servants of Will of Fallinesche'; his brother Alexander is also listed, as well as 'Stottan Gib' and his brother John, who may also have been his own brothers. Probably the same Archibald 'of Mewslie' is recorded in 1628 in proceedings of the Privy Council. He was stated to be a 'notorious thief and fugitive', who was 'committed to waird within the pitt of

Cavers', but escaped and fled to England. However, he was recaptured and imprisoned in Jedburgh. He could be the same as the earlier Archibald of Muselee. Archibald 'Airchie' of Ramsiegill (16th C.) listed among a large group of Elliots who were accused in 1590 of taking Ralph Hall and others prisoner and ransoming them. Archibald 'Airchie' (16th C.) listed along with 'Hob's Davie' of Ewesless and many other Elliots in 1590. They were accused by a group of Englishmen of taking 8 horses and well as prisoners that they ransomed. Archibald 'Airchie' (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1595 among Elliots complained about by the Lord of Gilsland for raids into England. His name is listed as 'alias Ibells Arche' (and separately as 'Ibbels Arche'), but it is unclear if this was 'Abell's' or 'Isobel's' or something else. Archibald 'Willie's Airchie' of Stitchillhill (16th C.) recorded in 1590 when he, Robert Elliot of Bowholm and his son Dand were accused of stealing from Englishman Richard Thurlwall. Archibald 'Airchie' (16th/17th C.) described as 'young Archie of the Park' in 1599 when he was one of a large number of Liddesdale Elliots to sign bonds with Scott of Buccleuch. He may have been a son of Jock of the Park or Robin. The Archibald of the Park recorded in 1581 is presumably too old to be the same man. Archibald (16th/17th C.) younger son of William of Falnash. He was mentioned in complaints about 2 raids into England in 1595, along with Wat Scott of Harden and several Elliots, including his brother Robert and uncle Gilbert. Archibald 'Dog Pintle' (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1595 among Elliots complained about by the Lord of Gilsland for 2 raids into England. There were also explicit complaints by John Hetherton of 'the Cairs' that he had stolen 20 cow, and by Leonard Corbet of the Orchard that (along with his 2 brothers and other Elliots) he had stolen 12 cows, 2 horses and £100 of goods, and burned 4 houses. He is recorded as 'Arche Ellott called dogpyntle' and 'Arche Ellott alias doge pintle', and he was brother of George 'Buggerback'. Other Elliots named along with him include those of the Hill and of Bowholm. His nickname was clearly not complimentary. Archibald of Clintwood (16th/17th C.) younger son of Martin of Braidlie. He is referred to as 'Martin's Arche of Clintwood'. He is listed in 1580 among a group of Elliots (including his brothers Gavin and Hobbie, and 3 cousins), who attacked the lands of Harwood (on Teviot), stealing 40 cows and oxen, and then later attacked Slaidhills, Whitlaw and Hoscote; he was declared a rebel after not appearing. He was also among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580. He is probably the 'Arche Ellot', brother of Gavin and Hobbie (and probably Simon) who was listed among the Elliots of Braidlie in 1583. He may be the 'Archie Ellot' who, along with Gibbie (perhaps his brother) was accused of a raid into England in 1587. He was also 'Arche Ellott of Clyntwood called Martins Arche' when accused of being on a raid on the tenants of Featherstonehaugh in 1587; William of Hartsgarth was also there, as well as 160 others, and it is claimed that they burned 23 houses and took 3 prisoners. In 1588 he was among several Elliots and Nixons complained about by the English Warden for the murder of 2 Englishmen during a raid. He is 'Martin's Arche' in 1590 when, along with his brother Gib and others, he was accused of stealing cattle and horses from England. Also in 1590 he was 'Martin's Arche' when, along with Will of Heuchhouse he was accused of rieving from 'Halliden'. In the same year he may be the Martin's Airchie accused of further rieving along with Hob of Bowhome and William 'Rydlie'. He was probably the son of Martin recorded in 1590 along with his brother John, as well as 'Martin's Gib' and Martin of Prickinghaugh, when they were accused of stealing from Englishman Thomas Rutherford of Blackhall. Additionally he was accused in 1590 of taking cattle and goods from 'Stealie' and was 'Martin's Arche', who, along with 'Martin's Dande' and other Elliots and Armstrongs, was accused of rieving from Englishman John Armstrong. Also in 1590 he was first on a list of men, including James ('Martin's man), the elder and younger Will of the Steele, Airchie 'Cowfowle' and 2 shiels, accused of stealing from 'Dotland'. He was further accused in 1590 at the head of a list of Elliots and others said to have stolen from the 'Hewrde' family, maiming and taking prisoner Christopher 'of the Whithall'. He could be the 'Arche Ellott' further listed along with elder Will of the Steele, 'Lang' John and Martin's Gib 'the cousin' in 1590, accused of rieving from the tenants of 'Greinridge'. Also in 1590 he was explitly recorded as son of Martin on a list of Elliots (including his brother John and cousin Dand), Croziers, Nixons and others accused of rieving from William Robson of 'Allerweshe'. He is 'Arche Ellott of Clentwood' listed in 1590 among Armstrongs and Elliots complained about by a large group of Englishmen for a raid on Blackcleugh in Kirkhaugh, taking many prisoners for ransom. In 1590/1 he was 'called Marten's

Archie' among men that the Earls of Bothwell and Murray were to enter before the Privy Council. He is on a list of Elliots (including his father Martin and brother Hob) accused of raiding the English farm of 'Whynatlie' in the previous year. He may be the Archie who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. He was referred to as 'Archy Ellot called Martins Arche' in 1597 in an English letter listing Scotsmen who had reset English fugitives. Also in 1597 he is 'Arche Ellott son to Martin' among men for whom the English Warden demanded pledges and he was warded in Carlisle Castle. His son William is listed among 5 Scotsmen delivered by Sir Walter Scott to the English Deputy Warden in 1597. In 1597 Lord Evers describes him as 'Arche the son of Martin a great rider'. In 1611 he acted as cautioner in Jedburgh for 'Andro Armestrang, called the Lord', as well as 'Kirstie Ellot callit Hobis Kirstie'. He was also part of the assize at the Justice Court on Jedburgh in 1611. In 1613 he was a witness to the infeftment of Robert of Redheugh in his lands. In 1615 he was banished from the Kingdoms of England and Scotland, and no more is known about him. He had at least one child, William, who was imprisoned in York Castle in 1598 at age 12, with Scott of Buccleuch appealing for his release. It is possible that either he or a son was 'Archie Ellote in Clintoun' who was accused along with Middlemases and others of harassing and attacking George Turnbull of Belses and his farm workers. Archibald 'Burnt Hand' (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1597 among defendants in cases brought by the English Wardens involving raids by men of Liddesdale. His name is given as 'Arche Ellott 'brunt hand' '. Presumably he had an injured hand. Archibald of Merry Naze (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1598 when there were complaints from Sir James Sandilands that he was among a group of Armstrongs, Elliots and Scotts who stole from his lands and 'slew and dismembered divers good subjects who rais to the fray'. He was 'of Mirrieneis', and other Elliots listed were William of Falnash and Dandie 'Sweet Milk'. It is possible he was the same man as Archibald of Muselee (given that the Elliots of Falnash also held Merry Naze). In a court case in 1600, Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch's agent denied responsiblity for him and his crimes. Archibald 'Airchie' of Thorlieshope (16th/17th C.) listed among Liddisdale men declared as fugitives for not attending a court in Peebles in 1605. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Thorlieshope Elliots. Archibald 'Airchie', 'Blackheid' (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners' court in Jedburgh in 1605. He may have been related to Jock and William, who had the same nickname. Archibald 'Airchie' of Brugh (d.bef. 1621) eldest son of Gavin, the first Elliot of Brugh. He may be the 'Archie Elliott of Dogcleoch' recorded in 1588/9 in relation to a payment for the release of 'Vicar's Hob' from Edinburgh Tolbooth. He was 'Archie Ellot of Dokcleuch, the said Sir Walter's man' recorded in a Privy Council case related to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1590; also in 1590 he was mentioned in a case where Walter Scott of Buccleuch and Walter Scott of Goldielands were ordered to enter certain of their tenants to answer some English complaints. He was probably the Archie 'of the Dobcleuch' (i.e. Doecleuch) who signed a bond with Scott of Buccleuch along with Gavin of Brugh in 1599. He is also mentioned in 1621 (after his death) having previously loaned money to Chisholme of that Ilk (probably the family of his mother). His brother Gilbert succeeded to the estate. Note that he is sometimes confused with a later Archibald (who died at the Battle of Dunbar in 1650). Archibald 'Airchie' (16th/17th C.) tenant in Foulshiels. In 1611 George Pringle in Newhall was cautioner for him in court in Jedburgh. In the same year John Ainslie, Burgess of Jedburgh was cautioner for his son John. Archibald 'Airchie' (16th/17th C.) eldest son of William 'called of Cowshaw' (possibly Copshaw), recorded in 1617. Along with his father and 2 other men, he was arrested for stealing sheep and held in Jedburgh Jail. Archibald 'Airchie' (16th/17th C.) recorded being 'of Bowholme' in 1623 when he and Gilbert Eliott of Craigend were cautioners for Will 'in Hiesches'. Archibald (16th/17th C.) recorded being 'in Burnclughsyde' in 1623 when he appeared before the Commissioners' Court in Jedburgh. Archibald (17th C.) possessor of the farm of 'Overraw' (i.e. Upper Raw) in Castleton Parish in 1632. Archibald of Arkleton (17th C.) son of John and Ester Armstrong, he was grandson of William of Falnash. He is mentioned in 1623 and was served heir to his father in 1631. In 1626 he was described as 'Archibald son of the late John Elliot of Arkleton'. Nothing else appears to be known about him. Archibald of Brugh (d.1650) eldest lawful son of Gilbert of Brugh. In 1648 he received a 'precept clare constant' from William Eliott of Stobs (as heir to his grandfather Gavin of Brugh) of the 10 merk lands of Over and Nether Dodburn and 'Brandsyde Bray'. He was Corporal in John Rutherford of Edgerston's troop, fighting for the King in the Civil War. There is a record in 1642 from him 'for a sufficient horseman and arms for the haill lands of Edgerston'. He died at the Battle of Dunbar, when Rutherford's troop was essentially wiped out. His wife's name is not recorded. His children were: John, who farmed at Southfield; Gavin, mentioned in 1665 as brother of John; and Gilbert in Carlops, also mentioned in 1665. Note that he is sometimes confused with his uncle Archibald. Archibald of Philhope (17th C.) made an Honorary Burgess of Selkirk in 1642. It is unclear what branch of the Elliots he was from. He was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire in 1646 (although incorrectly written 'Scott' in the manuscript version), probably again in 1648 (when the place is transcribed 'Phillone') and in 1649. He appears to have married Elizabeth Chisholme, who was widow of Simon of Philhope. In 1644 he and his wife were granted half the lands of Philhope from his stepdaughter Grizell. There is some confusion over his wives, since later he was certainly married to Marion Nichol; in 1651 she was granted 8 bolls of grain yearly during her lifetime in the will of Francis Scott, Earl of Buccleuch. He was listed first under the 'communicants' at Philhope in 1650, followed by 'Maly Nicoll' (presumably his wife), then Helen and Maly Elliot (probably his daughters) and 8 others (likely to be farm workers). He was also recorded in 1663 when his eldest son William married Margaret of the Binks. Andrew of Philhope, recorded in 1662, may have been another son. Archibald (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He witnessed a baptism for Thomas Johnstone in 1656. He married Elspeth (or Elizabeth) Fisher in Melrose in 1649. Their children included: Gilbert (b.1650); William (b.1652); Gavin (b.1658), baptised in Ashkirk; and George (b.1661). The witnesses in 1652 were William ... and Gavin 'Ellot' (who was probably a relative) and in 1661 were Gilbert (likely another relative) and George Scott. It is possible he is the same man as Archibald of Middlestead, younger son of 'Gibbie wi the Gowden Gartens', with his brothers including Gavin of Grange and Midlem Mill and Gilbert of Craigend and Hartshaugh. It is possible that he also married Marion Scott in 1657. Archibald of Falnash (d.bef. 1675) succeeded his father Robert, since his elder brother William had died. He was 'younger of Falnash' at the time of his sister Jean's sasine in 1637. He is probably the 'young Falnash' mentioned in the song 'Rattlin Roarin Willie', who (along with Gilbert Eliott of Stobs) apprehended William Henderson for the murder of William Elliot. In 1647 he was served heir to his father's lands of Falnash and his 10 merk lands of Hislop (in the Barony of Hawick and Regality of Drumlanrig), as well as his 5 merk land of Langhaugh. In the same year he was separately served heir to his great-great-grandfather Archibald's lands of Falnash, 'Cawsya' and 'Tandilnes' (probably Tanlaw Naze). James Douglas, Earl of Queensberry then exercised his right of reversion of Broadlee, Langhaugh and Hislop, paying 10,500 merks for them in 1650. In 1644, 1646 and 1648 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. He is probably the Elliot of Falnash who paid the land tax in 1663; the lands redeemed by Queensberry from 'Ffalmash' were valued at £716, and he separately paid tax on £360. In 1667 he paid 9,000 merks to Francis Scott for what was effectively a mortgage on Falnash, and almost immediately sold the property to Gavin of Caerlenrig, his brother. Before 1645 he married Esther Scott (probably a daughter of 'Auld Wat o Harden') and by 1660 secondly married Isobel Scott (who died by 1668). His children probably included: Archibald, who succeeded and may have married a widow of Gledstains of that Ilk; Grizell (b.1642), born in Hawick Parish; and Robert (b.1645), also born in Hawick Parish. Archibald (17th C.) married Marion Scott in Ashkirk in 1657. Archibald 'Superior of Falnash' (17th C.) elder son of Archibald. He succeeded to the estate in 1675, this including 'Cawsya' and Tanlaw Naze as well as Falnash itself. He probably married a widow of Gledstains (perhaps William of that Ilk), since Walter Gledstains is mentioned as his son in 1677. He probably had no male children, since the Lairdship went to his cousin Ninian. Archibald (17th C.) recorded as being 'in Middlester, (Midlem-mill)' in the 1643 valuation for Castleton Parish. His lands were valued at £36. He was transcribed as 'in Midlesteed' in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls, and hence the earlier record perhaps was an error for Middlestead. He was recorded among local landowners of the mid-to-late 1600s, according to James Wilson. He may have been Archibald of Middlestead, son of 'Gibbie wi the Gowden Gartins'. Archibald (17th C.) resident of Bowanhill on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He may have been father of the later tenant of Bowanhill. Archibald (17th C.) tenant in 'Bintshawe in Ewes'. His will is recorded in the Commissariot of Dumfries in 1679. Archibald (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1705 he is recorded paying for the use of the mortcloth. Archibald (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1697 he married Helen 'Broun' (or perhaps 'Burn'). Their children included: Robert (b.1704); and Francis (b.1706). Archibald (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. He is surely related to (or the same as) the slightly later Archibald in Minto. Archibald (17th/18th C.) workman in Hawick Parish. He married Helen Brown and their children included: William (b.1704) and Francis (b.1706). The witnesses in 1704 were weavers James Wight and John Swan and in 1706 were Bailies Walter Graham and George Martin. Archibald (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He is probably the resident of Minto who married Helen Gray in Hawick in 1706. His children included: William (b.1707); Margaret (b.1710); James (b.1712); Archibald (b.1715); Archibald (again, b.1719); John (b.1721); Archibald (again, b.1723); Marion (b.1726); and Helen (b.1729). It is possible that these are children of more than one family, since no mother's name is listed. Archibald (17th/18th C.) tenant in Horsleyhill. In 1710 he witnessed a baptism for Andrew Gray in Whitlaw. He may be the same as one of the other Archibalds. Archibald (1679/80–1757) recorded at Bowanhill in 1707 when he witnessed a baptism for James Veitch in Falnash Mill. In 1722 he was recorded as farmer at Bowanhill (near Teviothead), renting from the Duke of Buccleuch. The following year he rented half of the farm, with James Elliot in the other half (probably a close relative). He re-leased the lands in 1744. He was surely related to the Archibald recorded at Bowanhill in 1694. He witnessed a baptism for Robert 'Hutson' at Blackcleugh in 1741. His wife was Christian Elliot (c.1692–1779). Their children included: Archibald (b.1717/8), who succeeded as tenant of Bowanhill; Thomas (1722/3–1791), who died at Bowanhill; Walter (1726–1813), who died at Binks; John (b.1729); and Isabel (b.1731). His grandson John died at Falnashburnfoot in 1832, aged 72. Archibald (18th C.) smith in Bewlie in 1737 when he was recorded in a legal case in Selkirk. Archibald (1717/8–1812) son of Archibald, he succeeded to the tenancy of Bowanhill. He is listed there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he was taxed for 2 farm horses. He also paid tax on 3 non-working dogs there in 1797. He may be the Archibald of Henderson's Knowe whose son Walter was born in 1743. He could be the Archibald living at Bowanhill who in 1791 witnessed a baptism for Walter Riddell in Commonside. He lived to be 94 and was buried at Teviothead. Archibald (18th C.) cotter at Falnash. He married Margaret Scott and their son Robert was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1740. The witnesses were Walter Scott at Commonside and Walter Jackson at Falnash. Archibald 'Archie' (18th C.) dyker in the Hawick area. One year in the earlier part of the 18th century he was hired by the tenant of Fenwick to build a dyke that was inside the bounds of Hawick Common. At the Common Riding the riders accosted him and brought him in; he was arrested and had to give a bond for £100 Scots as a promise not to do so again. This was described by George Richardson in 1767. Archibald (18th C.) born in Roberton Parish, he lived at Boonraw in Wilton Parish. In 1759 he married Elizabeth Cunningham, who was also from Wilton Parish. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1759); Jean (b.1762); Isabel (b.1765); John (b.1767); and Alexander (b.1770). The witnesses in 1770 were Thomas Scott and Thomas Reid. Archibald (d.1803) weaver in Hawick, son of William. He married Janet Aitkin in 1760 and she died in 1805. Their children included: Mary (b.1761); Helen (b.1769); William (d.1805); and Robert (d.1775). He may be the son of William and Margaret Balmer born in Hawick in 1729. He could be the Archibald who witnessed a baptism for wig-maker Robert Miles in 1766. Archibald (1761–1823) son of Archibald, a carrier from Ancrum. He became an architect along with his younger brother James. They designed some of the most imposing late 18th century and early 19th century houses in Scotland. His designs included Stobo Castle, Calton Prison (Edinburgh), Midlothian County Hall (Edinburgh), Penielheugh monument, Jethart Castle Jail and renovations at Minto House and the Haining. He married Sarah Shiells, and they had a son Archibald, who was also an architect. Archibald (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Isobel Wilson. Their daughter Helen was baptised in 1782. The witnesses were Charles Scott at Commonside and Thomas Grieve. Archibald (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, probably related to the Elliots at Henderson's Knowe. His son Walter was baptised in 1791. Archibald (18th/19th C.) son of Robert from Harwood in Hobkirk Parish. He is recorded in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire in 1797. He was recorded as a labourer at Harwood in the

Lieutenancy Book in 1799. It is unclear if he was related to the Elliots of Harwood. Archibald (b.1791) youngest son of Walter, farmer at Henderson's Knowe. He wrote some letters to his brother Thomas Elliot in Delaware county, New York, which were transcribed by descendants. He was at Finglandshiel (in Eskdalemuir) in 1820. In 1841 he was at Finglandshiel as an agricultural labourer and in 1851 was a 'Land Drainer' there. He married Margaret Beattie and their children included: John (b.1817); Margaret (b.1818); Isabella (b.1821); Violet (b.1824); Christian (b.1826); Janet (b.1829); and James Beattie (b.1833). He may have been named after his grandfather, who seems likely to have been Archibald Elliot (1717/8–1812) son of another Archibald, who succeeded to the tenancy of Bowanhill, lived to 94 and was buried at Teviothead. Some letters survive that he wrote to his brother Thomas in U.S.A. Archibald (b.1800) son of John, he was born at Bowanhill in Cavers Parish. In 1825 he married Isabel, daughter of Thomas Oliver and Christina Elliot (from Castleton). Their children included: John (b.1827); Thomas (b.1828); and Kitty (1830–1902). In about 1830 he emigrated with his family to Delaware County, New York. There 4 more children were born: Walter (1832–1907); Margaret (1835–1901); William (b.1837); and Elizabeth. He is probably the Archibald, who moved to Galashiels to be a carpenter and merchant for a few years, and wrote to his cousin Thomas in Delaware state in 1818. Archibald (b.c.1795) stockingmaker in Hawick. He was listed as a member of Allars Kirk in 1829. In 1841 he was living on Brougham Place. His wife was Euphemia (or Euphan), and their children included: Janet (b.c.1821); Margaret (b.c.1827); Mary (b.1829); Peter (b.c.1832); Isabel (b.c.1834); and Euphan (b.c.1837). Archibald (1847–1900) son of Andrew, farmer at Twislehope. He had a twin sister, Margaret, who lived in Newcastle. He married Margaret Scott and emigrated to Canada. Their children were Andrew, John, Helen (who married Wallace Hood), Eliza, Agnes (married a Dunlop), Isabella (who married Robert Laidlaw) and Mariannei (who married John Hobson). Arthur of Harwood (d.1698) son of Walter of Arkleton and grandson of Adam of Meikledale. His lands were at Harwood-on-Teviot, for which he received a Crown Charter in 1698 (shortly before his death). He married Anne Disney and they had a daughter (his heiress), Margaret, who married William Elliot of Thorlieshope. Arthur (17th/18th C.) married Helen Martin in Bedrule Parish in 1692. Arthur (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of Walter of Arkleton. It is said that after his father had fallen out with his older brother Adam, he refused to accept the family estate, and so the lands went to his younger brother, William. Arthur (18th C.) first Schoolmaster at Caerlenrig, being appointed in 1755 and resigning 2 years later. It is unclear what branch of the Elliots he came from (but he could be the Arthur, son of Adam, born in Ewes in 1734). Perhaps the same Arthur was recorded as Schoolmaster of the English School in Jedburgh in 1760. Bramche of the Burnhead (16th C.) recorded in the 1580s accusing Englishmen Thomas Carleton and 'Riche of the Moat' of stealing 200 cattle and 40 horses from Burnhead. It is unclear whether his name is a transcription error or a nickname of some sort. He must have been related to 'Hobbie' who was Laird of Burnhead only a few years earlier. Bruce started playing rugby at Denholm School, joining the P.S.A. at the age of 15, then the Harlequins and Y.M. He played full back for Hawick R.F.C., starting in the late 1960s and was part of the team that won the league title 5 times in a row in 1973–78. He also played sevens, sometimes as scrum-half. With his wife Isobel he had children Alistair and Tracy and they live at East Middle. Charles Edward (1693–1763) eldest son of Gilbert of Nethermill, who was a merchant in Hawick. It is likely that his grandfather was Robert of Larriston. Along with his (unnamed) brother, he is said to have taken part in the 1715 Jacobite rebellion and was wounded at Preston. He escaped to Holland, where he married a Dutch lady. He then worked for the Dutch East India Company, living for a while in Java (where his brother also lived) before settling in Essex (after he was no longer considered an outlaw in Britain). There he was appointed Searcher and Tidewaiter in H.M. Customs at Burnham-on-Crouch, where he also owned a mill. He had 12 children, although only 1 son (Charles, b.1752, who wrote his name 'Elliott' and became a wealthy cabinetmaker in London) and 2 daughters survived; the first 9 were born on Java and died young. Sir Charles Gilbert John Brydone (1810–95) 3rd son of Gilbert, 2nd Earl of Minto. He was Admiral of the Fleet 1870–73. He was recorded living at Bonjedward House in a directory of 1868. He firstly married Louisa, daughter of Sir Edward Blackett and secondly married Harriette Emily Liddell, daughter of the 1st Earl of Ravensworth. They had one surviving son, Bertram Charles. Rev. Charles,

D.D. (b.1815) son of shepherd John, he was born in Castleton Parish. In 1818 the family emigrated to America. By about 1840 he had moved to Easton, Pennsylvania, where he became a Presbyterian minister. He was Professor of Hebrew Language and New Testament Exegesis in Chicago. There are other ministers of the same name with whom he is easily confused. A portrait of him exists. Col. Charles (1824–88) son of James, the 3rd Laird of Wolfelee. He was Colonel in the Royal Artillery and died in London. In 1875 he donated to the Museum 'specimens of Native Paper from Nepal, India'. In 1859 he married Christina, daughter of Sir Alexander Ramsay of Balmain, and she died in 1873. In 1877 he secondly married Mary, daughter of Henry Davidson of Muirhouse. His children were Lieut. Walter, George Ramsay, Elizabeth Maule and Mabel. Charlotte 'Black Charlotte' (18th/19th C.) only daughter of Adam and grand-daughter of William, 1st Laird of Wolfelee. Her father was a merchant in Danzig, who married Rosa Leonardi there. She inherited the estate of Pinnaclehill near Kelso from her uncle Robert (who had tried to leave it to his nephew James, but the will was insufficiently stamped). Christopher 'Kirstie' (16th/17th C.) only known child of Robert, 'Martin's Hob of Prickenhaugh'. He is recorded in 1611 when he took part in a raid on Robsons in England. Later that year he was afterwards sentenced to banishment with his wife and children by the Jedburgh court. He is recorded as 'Kirstie Ellot callit Hobis Kirstie' in 1611 when Robert of Redheugh and several others were cautioners for him and his wife. In 1618 he is recorded as a fugitive. He had at least one child, Robert. This is probably the Robert 'sone to Hobbeis Chrystie' recorded as a fugitive in 1642. Cornelius 'Auld Corrie' (1732–1821), W.S., 2nd Laird of Wolfelee, eldest son of William, the 1st Elliot Laird. He succeeded to the Lairdship after his older brother Thomas had died. He also followed in his father's legal business in Edinburgh's Lawnmarket, becoming Writer to the Signet. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761, when 'of Woollie junior'. He represented Walter Scott of Harden and Thomas Wilkinson of Chesterhall in the court case for the division of Wilton Common in 1765. He was a trustee for the creditors of Robert Shortreed of Easter Essenside in 1778. He was also one of the trustees for Dr. Robert Langlands when he sold off his estate to satisfy creditors in about 1780. He served as an executor for Henry of Peel, who died in 1780. Also in 1780 he was the lawyer for the legal aspects of several new voters being added to the county roll after being granted liferent of lands by Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto and others. He was himself on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He is probably the Cornelius who purchased Barnhills from Matthew Stewart in 1780 (and appears to have sold it back). Also in 1780 he matriculated arms, proving descent from the Elliots of Horsleyhill. By 1788 his estate included Mackside, Broadhaugh, Blackcleughmouth, Catlee, Easter Swanshiel, Hartshaugh, Hartshaugh Mill and Wolfelee, as well as parts of Stonedge and Kilnknowe. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788, privately described as probably a supporter of Sir Gilbert Elliot and also as 'Brother-in-law to Adam Ogilvie, factor to the Duke of Buccleuch' (although that appears to be an error for another Elliot branch). He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in both 1805 and 1819, along with his son James. In 1811 he was listed as owner of 'Woollee', as well as Catlee, Catleeshaw, Easter Swanshiel, 'Shiel's Lands', part of Kirknowe, lands that were formerly part of Stonedge, Hartshaugh Mill, Broadhaugh, Mackside and Blackcleughmouth. In 1765 in Leith he married Margaret, daughter of James Rannie, and she died in 1796. They had at least 6 children: William (1766–1807), a Major who died in Vellore, Madras, and had his portrait painted by Raeburn; Mary (b.1767), who married Gen. Sir Thomas Dallas in Madrid, and in later life lived with her sister Margaret; Eleanor (or Eleanora), who married Robert Anderson, merchant in Leith; Margaret Jane, who was unmarried; James (1772–1855), who succeeded; and Janet Hyndford, who married Sir John Gibson-Carmichael of Castlecraig and later John, 12th Lord Elphinstone from Edinburgh. He lived in Queen Street, Edinburgh, but also held several country residences. His will is in the Peebles Commissary Court Records in 1823. Cuthbert (16th C.) recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books in 1560. His wife Christine Roberton, widow of John Hogg of Corsehill in Bowden, gave lands to he daughter Bess Hogg, with 'Vatte Elwand' also being named. David (15th/16th C.) son of William. He was listed among many men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5 to answer for their crimes. It is unclear which William was his father, but William (also son of William) was probably his brother. David (16th C.) recorded as witness in Selkirk in 1562. David (16th C.) listed as one of the tenants of the steadings of 'Cleirlandis, Robsteid, Thomscotsteid, Cranswat, Gusbank, Hurklebuss' in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. William and David Elliot are also listed. David (d.bef. 1570) son of Gavin of Horsleyhill. He was a tenant in his father's lands of Caveling in Cavers Parish. In 1564 John Turnbull of Hassendeanbank accused him of stealing 80 sheep from his farm at Hassendeankirk. William of Horsleyhill and William Douglas of Cavers (proprietors of the lands of Caveling) were ordered to present him before the Privy Council. In 1567 he was given notice to remove himself as tenant from the 6 merk lands of Chamberlain Newton by George Turnbull of 'Wowlie'. He was probably the 'Dand Ellot of Cavilling' for whom John Edmonson of that Ilk was cautioner in 1567/8 for him to remain in ward on this side of the Tweed. The Laird of Edmonson was also surety for him in 1569. A decree of removal was given against his widow Margaret Turnbull in 1570/1. In 1573 his widow was said to have encouraged her 2 sons, Walter and John Scott, to attack James Storie, who had been placed on the other half of the farm (sold by George Turnbull to Gavin Eliott of Bailielee and Stobs, who was coincidentally also from the Elliots of Horsleyhill). His wife must therefore have remarried to a Scott. David (16th C.) son of 'Elder Will'. Along with his brother Martin he signed the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens, on behalf of their whole part of the clan. It seems likely they were closely related to the Elliots of Heuchhouse, but a different Martin from there, along with his brother John of Heuchhouse, were listed separately in 1584. David of Braidlie (16th C.) recorded in 1578 when his son Hob was released from ward, but promised to meet again to help suppress lawlessness on the Border. However, it is possible that 'David' is an error for 'Dand'. Probably the same man is recorded as 'Davie Ellot of Bracley' in 1584, when he was one of the signatories of the band of assurance with the English Wardens; he was one of 3 men to give surety for the Elliots of Gorrenberry, suggesting that 'Bracley' was an error for Braidlie. He is recorded being 'of Braidley' in 1586 when his superior Robert of Redheugh was instructed to enter him in court. David (16th C.) listed as 'Davie Ellot of Hongrige' in 1584. Along with David of 'Bracley' (probably Braidlie) and Will of Mosspatrickhope, he gave assurances for the Elliots of Gorrenberry. His designation is probably a misunderstanding of some sort, but it is unclear where he was from. David (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 being 'in the Manis' among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He may have lived at the Mains in Liddesdale. David 'Davie' of Dinlees (16th C.) recorded in 1590 when his son Adam was part of a group of Armstrongs and others accused of rieving. David 'Davie, 'the Carlin' (d.1598) probably a son of 'Elder Will'. He was listed in 1569 as 'David Carling his brother' along with Elder Will's eldest son, when 'Elder Will the Tod' was held in Blackness Castle as pledge for their behaviour. He is listed in 1574 along with his son, among Scots rebels who were reset in England. He was also complained about in 1587/8 for a raid on Tynedale in 1584, along with Croziers, Armstrongs and about 300 others, accused of stealing 800 cows, 60 horses and 500 sheep, burning 60 houses and killing 10 men; he is there recorded as 'Davye Ellot called the Carlinge'. He was also recorded in 1588, when James Dalgleish and Nichol Brydon (from the Edinburgh area) were convicted of helping bring in him and his accomplices to steal cattle. This took place in 1588, the accomplices being 'Hob Billie' Elliot and 2 Armstrongs, suggesting they were from Liddesdale. He was 'Davye the Carlinge' among a group of Elliots and others complained about for raiding into England in 1589. His son 'Eddie Ellott' (probably Adam) was listed among Borderers complained about for another raid on a farm in England in 1589 and further recorded in 1590, among Elliots accused of a raid. He was 'Davie the Carlinge' listed among Elliots, Armstrongs, Turnbulls, Laidlaws and Croziers, accused in 1590 of rieving from the Laird of 'Troghwen' and Hedley of 'Garret Sheills'. In 1590/1 he was 'called the Carling' among men that the Earls of Bothwell and Murray were to enter before the Privy Council. He may be the David who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. In 1598 he was 'Davyd Ellott alias Carlyne' who killed William Ogle on a raid in Gilsland, and was in turn killed by a group of Ogles and Shaftoes. David 'Hob's Davie' of Eweslees (16th C.) presumably son of Robert. He is listed among a large group of Elliots who were accused in 1590 of taking Ralph Hall and others prisoner and ransoming them. His name appears as 'Hobs Davie of Dewes leases'. David (16th/17th C.) son of John of Bowholm. He was listed in 1605 among men of Liddesdale declared fugitives at a court in Peebles. David (17th C.) Treasurer of Selkirk in the 1650s and 1660s. He is probably the 'elder merchant burgess of Selkirk' recorded in discharges for annual rent in 1666, 1668 and 1679. An undated account from him to the Burgh of Selkirk relates to the town coble and other matters. He may be the deceased David whose house rental is referred to in Selkirk in 1709. He was 'elder, merchant' in a deed of 1663, while his son was 'younger, burgess of Selkirk'. His son David was witness to a discharge for him in 1664. David (17th/18th C.) merchant and Burgess in Selkirk. He is recorded as 'younger' in 1708, and hence probably son of the earlier David. Probably the same merchant David was recorded in Selkirk in 1723 and 1737. David (18th/19th C.) gardener at Borthwickbrae in 1797, when he was working for William Elliot Lockhart. Dorothea Helen (d.1925) daughter of Sir Walter. In 1866 she married William Eliott-Lockhart, heir to the Lairdships of Borthwickbrae and Cleghorn. The marriage was held in Hobkirk Kirk, but officiated by her uncle, Rev. John Elliot-Bates, who was an English clergyman (this event causing much local consternation at the time). On the death of her brother Edward she became heir in line to the Elliots of Wolfelee, and also of Borthwickbrae, following her marriage to William Eliott-Lockhart in 1866. She was succeeded by her daughter Mary Charlotte Elliot-Lockhart of Cleghorn. Edmund (13th C.) recorded as 'Edmundus de Elaund' in the 1269 assize roll of Northumberland. He complained about the actions of 'Johanne de Crammelyngton' in the town of 'Corburg'. He could be an early member of the Elliot family. Edmund (15th C.) recorded among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. His name is given as 'enmundi elwald'. Lt.-Col. Edmund James (1813–54) son of John Edmund. He was born in Calcutta and died at Varna, Bulgaria. He served with the 79th Regiment. He maried Matilda Inglis. Their son Edmund Halbert was born posthumously and baptised in Wilton in 1854. Edward Hay Mackenzie 6th Laird of Wolfelee (1852–1920) 3rd son of Sir Walter. He was born in Vizagapatam, Madras and came to Britain at age 3, growing up mainly in Ayrshire and Wigtownshire. He attended Harrow, where he excelled at sports. After leaving school he played for Harrow Chequers Football Club and then Wanderers F.C., where he was part of the team that won the first 2 F.A. Cups. In 1871 and 1872 he was selected to play for a Scottish side against England in what were only the 4th and 5th international matches, and the last not to be officially recognised. He tried unsuccessfully for the Indian Civil Service and spent 3 months in a commission with the Scottish Borders Militia, then became a Lieutenant with the 82nd Regiment from 1874–88 before transferring to the 40th Regiment, the South Lancashire Regiment, where he became a Major. He also served as Private Secretary to Lord Glasgow, serving under him in New Zealand. He succeeded his eldest brother James T.S. in 1892, another elder brother Walter Blair having died in 1869. He retired early, in 1899, to attend to the family estates. He served again in the Boer War (going there at his own expense), but was invalided home, and lived for a while in London. He was a member of the Jedforest Club and a Vice-President of Rulewater Miniature Rifle Club from 1905. In 1905 he married Edith Margaret, daughter of John Charles Crawford, minister of Canehill, Couldson, Surrey. On the couple's home-coming to Wolfelee after the wedding a huge bonfire was litten on Wolfelee Hill. He made his home more permanently at Wolfelee about 1908, but sold the estate in 1912 (to Sir Robert Laidlaw) and died without issue. The heir of the line then became his sister, Dorothea Helen. He died at Middlesex Hospital, Marylebone, but it is unclear where he was buried. Elizabeth (16th C.) married Robert Waugh in Ashkirk. She became a widow and secondly married John 'Wynterhop' (i.e. Winthrope) according to a marriage contract of 1580. This was a double arrangement, where her daughter Janet Waugh was also to marry Robert, eldest son of John Winthrope. Additionally the young couple were to live 'in houshald' with her and her new husband, being servants to them, but inheriting their lands and property when they died. Her son James Waugh was also to live with them until he reached the age of majority. The contract, witnessed in Selkirk, also contained a brief list of her property, including livestock and grain from Ashkirk and annual rent on a tenement in Selkirk. Elizabeth 'Bessie' (16th/17th C.) wife of John in Redden, 'callit Johnne of Rynsiegill', a riever who was caught plundering from a Hawick Burgess in 1610, and imprisoned in the church steeple, where he apparently hanged himself, leaving her with 'ffyve fatherless bairns'. Elizabeth (17th/18th C.) daughter of Henry of Harwood. She married Robert of Midlem Mill and they had 1 son and 8 daughters. After her husband's death in 1724 the lands of Midlem Mill were sold and she moved to Berwick with 3 of her daughters.

They had a small income, which they supplemented by 'washing and dressing cambrics'. Elizabeth (18th C.) maid servant to William Scott of Whitehaugh. She was owed for some wages following her employer's death in 1750 Elizabeth 'Betty' (d.1811) teacher in Hawick. Her death record states she was 'Late Schoolmistress', but it is unclear where her school was. Esmond (1895–1917) full name Gavin William Esmond, he was son of the 4th Earl of Minto and elder brother of the 5th Earl. He was a Lieutenant in the Scots Guards in WWI, was killed at Ypres and is commemorated at Mendinghem Military Cemetery. His sister, Lady Violet Astor gave money to establish a memorial ward at the Cottage Hospital, which was opened by the Prince of Wales in 1924. The face of the Minto War Memorial statue (by Thomas J. Clapperton) is supposed to have been modelled on his. Esther (d.1664) younger daughter of the last Robert of Redheugh. In 1653 she married Alexander Clerk, Minister of Letherton. Her father left her the lands of Leahaugh, Greenholm and Gullyflat. She died in Inverness, where she was buried. Here gravestone was engraved 'Here lies the bodie of ane pious and vertuous gentlewoman called Hester Eliot spouse to Master Alex. Clerk minister of Inverness and 2nd lawful daughter to the very honourable Robert Eliot of Larriston in Liddesdale and Lady Jane Stuart . . . '. They had no children and her husband died in 1683. Frances Anna Maria 'Lady Elliot', 'Countess Russell', 'Fanny' (1815–98) 2nd daughter of Gilbert, 2nd Earl of Minto. She was born at Minto House, spent much of her youth there, then 2 years in Berlin with her family, before they moved to London in 1835. The leading Whig politician of the day, Lord John Russell proposed to her in 1840. He was a widower, 20 years older than her, and she refused. After persistence she changed her mind the following year and they were married, meaning she was step-mother to 6 children. According to her letters, she took a keen interest in the political issues of the day, being a supporter of religious tolerance and women's rights. She is said to have disliked London life and missed her life in rural Scotland. Her husband was created Earl Russell in 1861 and finally retired from active politics in 1868. She had 4 children of her own, including John (Lord Amberley) and Rollo, as well as several miscarriages. Lord Amberley died in 1876 and so her 2 grandsons, Frank and Bertrand (the philosopher) came to live with them; she probably had more influence on Bertrand than anyone else. Her husband died in 1878 and she survived him by 20 years, continuing to entertain politicians, writers, scientists and international visitors. She died at their home at Pembroke Lodge and was buried with her husband at Chenies in Buckhinghamshire. Francis 'Copshaw' (16th/17th C.) accused of stealing 2 horses belonging to 'Jock Storrie in Lewin' and 'Antone of the Scub'. He was tried by the Commissioners' Court in 1622, cleared of the theft, but found guilty of reset and sentenced to be hanged. He was probably related to the John of Copshaw who was denounced as a rebel in 1607 and may be the brother of Robert of Copshaw who was listed among Elliots and Armstrongs declared as rebels in 1611 for illegally hunting and also failing to show up for a jury in 1612. He is probably also the Francis son of 'Thom of Copschaw' who was listed among men who failed to appear at court in Jedburgh in 1611. Francis (16th/17th C.) 2nd son of William of Rig and Jean Rutherford, heiress of Stobs. He was described as the eldest lawful son and heir of William 'called of Hartisheugh' in 1637 when he was served heir to his brother Robert. In 1642 he was served heir to his mother Jean in the Mill of Edgerston, the lands of 'Rigg, Renshead, etc.' However, Robert Rutherford of Edgerston purchased these lands from him a few years later. It is said that his line became extinct, but it is also claimed that he might be the ancestor of the Elliots of Dinlabyre. Francis (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Hogg and their children included: Francis (b.1671); and Gilbert (b.1675). Francis (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Laing and their children included: Janet (b.1688). William (b.1707) could also be his child. Francis (17th C.) listed as resident at Burnfoot in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. This was probably Tinnis Burnfoot. Francis (17th C.) resident at the farms of 'Gulenflatt & Greeholme' in Castleton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Francis (17th/18th C.) resident of 'Crackuooll' in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. In 1698 he is recorded as cottar in Kirkhouses. He married Bessie Stoddart in Roberton in 1681 and their children included: Isobel (b.1689); Francis (b.1692); and Thomas (b.1698). Francis (17th/18th C.) listed as tenant at Burnfoot in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. This was probably the same place as Tinnis Burnfoot. Francis (17th/18th C.) listed as being 'in Hawick' in 1701 when he witnessed a baptism for Walter, who was Bailie-Depute of the Regality of Hawick. He may thus have been related to Walter. Also in 1701 he witnessed a baptism for smith George Scott. He was probably the innkeeper who witnessed baptisms in 1702 for Bailie Walter Graham and in 1704 for merchant Adam Turnbull (who was at the Westport, suggesting that he himself lived in that area). Probably the same Francis was 'Vintner' in Hawick when he witnessed baptisms in 1704 for James Leithead and in 1706 for carrier David Minto. He was 'in Hawick' when he witnessed a baptism for James Scott 'Laird' in 1708 (his step-son James Scott 'Doctor' was also witness to a baptism for the same man). In 1709 he was recorded as a merchant in Hawick when he witnessed a baptism for weaver Jasper Richardson. He could be the Francis whose son William was born in Hawick in 1707. He may be the Francis who witnessed a baptism (along with Bailie Walter) for merchant Walter in 1713. He is probably the merchant who witnessed a baptisms for weaver Robert Wight and for wright John Pringle in 1716. Perhaps the same Francis paid tax for 2 hearths on the west-side of Hawick in 1694 and was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He could be the Francis who acted as a cautioner in 1706 to James Scott and John Graham, when they were imprisoned and fined for being the main instigators in the disturbances at the Common Riding that year. Francis (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of William of Bewlie and Borthwickbrae. He was apprenticed to merchant John Turnbull in Edinburgh in 1710. Francis (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Mervinslaw in 1721. His wife was Helen Anderson. Their son Walter was baptised in 1721, with witnesses Walter Scott and James Irvine. Francis of Fenwick (17th/18th C.) 3rd son of Gavin of Caerlenrig. He bought Outersiderig in 1719. He married Rachel Langlands (who was probably a cousin or other relative of his brother Robert of Caerlenrig's wife Agnes Langlands). They had 2 sons: Robert, Burgess of Galasgow, who married Jean Scott and Catherine Elliot from Arkleton; and William, about whom nothing is known. He may also have had a daughter Rachel who married Walter Scott of Howcleuch and Wauchope. Francis (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Isobel Murray, and their children included: Helen (b.1741); Ann (b.1746); Isabel (b.1751); Jean (b.1754); and John (b.1756). Francis (18th C.) resident at Harwood on Teviot, brother of Thomas, who was also there. In 1740 he and Thomas witnessed a baptism for Robert Elliot, tenant in Slaidhills (who may also have been related to them). In 1746 he and Thomas (also at Harwood) witnessed a baptism for Thomas Reid at Harwood (in Hawick Parish). It is unclear how he and his brother Thomas were connected to other Elliots. Francis 'Frank' (1733–79) son of Robert of Caerlenrig. He was a skinner in Hawick. He is probably the Francis who in 1766, along with John (his brother), witnessed a baptism for merchant James Oliver and his wife Christian (their sister). He witnessed another baptism for merchant John Oliver and Christian (his sister) in 1772. He died unmarried. Francis (b.1758) resident of Roberton Parish, son of James and Margaret Scott. He was living at Eilrig in 1786 and Craikburn in 1788. In 1785 he married Mary Hislop (b.1754). Their children included: James (1786–1859); John (1788–1851); Margaret (c.1790–1859), who died on Albion Place; and William (1792–1861), who died in Hawick. Francis (b.c.1770s) recorded as apprentice to merchant John Nixon in the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. He is probably the merchant also listed on the ballot for the Militia in 1801. Francis (b.c.1800) from England, he was a farm labourer living at Ryeleahead in southern Castleton Parish in 1841. His wife was Betty and their children included Matthew, Walter, John, Helen and Katherine. Francis (1819–94) son of John, labourer and dyker at Parkhill. In 1851 he was a labourer at Parkhillhaugh. By 1861 he was a mason at Deanburnhaugh. He first married Christine Wintrup (1825–53) from Lilliesleaf in 1840; she died at Roberton Burnfoot. Their children were Andrew, James and Frank, who all died in infancy, as well as John (b.1841), Douglas (b.1843), Jane (b.1845) and Robert (b.1848). He secondly married Mary Burnet (1827–64) from Drumelzier, who died at Deanburnhaugh; they had Marion (1854–79), James Proctor (b.1857), born at Branxholme Town and perhaps Francis. He thirdly married Elizabeth Paterson (1832–98) in Hawick in 1870, and she died in Hawick. Their children were: William (b.1870); James (b.1871), blacksmith at Bonchester Bridge; and Francis (b.1874). He died at Damfoot and the family are buried at Borthwick Waas. Gabriel of the Park (16th C.) recorded in 1590 along with John of the Park, as well as Elliots of the Steele, Thorlieshope and others, who were accused of raiding into England. Since 'Gabriel' is an unfamiliar first name, it may be that the English report confused the name. Gavin (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1526/7 as 'Gavin Elwald' the Earl of Bothwell's Bailie in a document relating to the lands of Harden.

Perhaps the same Gavin was witness to documents for Ker of Primside relating to the lands of Softlaw in 1530/1. Probably the same Gavin was recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books for about 1532, marrying Margaret, daughter of Andrew 'Makduell' (i.e. McDougall) of Makerstoun; he received 200 merks from Andrew Ker in Primside and gave to Margaret his lands of 'Toftlawe' and 'Boucherflat' in the Barony of Hassendean. The same Gavin probably witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1534. Also in that year had a letter of reversion to William Scott regarding the lands of Nether Galalaw, with Thomas acting as his procurator. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Elliots, but it is possible he was the same man as Gavin of Horsleyhill. Gavin (16th C.) recorded in 1529/30 as brother of Archibald. With Archibald, along with Simon Armstrong of Whithaugh and Ninian Armstrong, he pledged to bring Robert Elliot 'Flaskvod' to Fairnilee to answer for crimes prepetrated against George Ker of Linton. He must have been a prominent Liddesdale Elliot of the time, but it is unclear where he resided. Gavin (16th C.) recorded in 1543 in English documents as 'Gawen Elwald Scotisman'. Along with a large group of other Elliots they attacked Over Howden in Lauderdale, taking a prisoner, along with 30 oxen and cows. He also led a group of Elliots who took 27 head of cattle, 40 sheep and other goods from the Laird of Cessford's farm of Newton. He may be the same man as Gavin of Ramsiegill or Gavin of Horseleyhill. Gavin of Ramsiegill (d.c.1563) chief of a branch of the Elliots of Liddesdale, with the seat being near Riccarton. The connection between this branch and other branches is unknown. In 1563 he and others from Liddesdale entered into a bond with Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst to bring in William Nixon 'Grey Will of the Kyll Fuird'. Later in 1563 his son 'Jock Ellot' was subject of a bond by Robert of Redheugh and Martin of Braidlie, to enter him before Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, in which he is described as deceased. The Gavin of Ramsiegill recorded soon afterwards was presumably another son. Perhaps the same 'Gavin Ellot, servant of the master of Maxwell' was in 1863 paid the grain tithes of Hassendean and Cavers 'for keeping Armetage and Liddisdale'. Gavin of Horsleyhill (d.bef. 1562) probably a grandson of William of Larriston, who married the daughter and heiress of Robert Scott of Horsleyhill. However, the names of his mother and father are not known. In 1543 he is 'of Hoslaw hill' when he was involved in a transaction with Ninian Cranston over a place called 'Schawes' in Ettrick Forest. In about 1547 he and his 3 sons, Robert, William and Andrew, were charged with killing Hugh Douglas; no details of this event are known. He was one of the signatories of the 'Auld Band of Roxburgh' in 1551, when he was a tenant in Horsleyhill. Also in 1551 he purchased Bailielee (in Selkirkshire) and Caveling (in Cavers Parish) from Gilbert Ker of Primside. He was granted a Charter by Lord Home in 1555, making him 1st Laird of Horsleyhill, as well as other lands. He married twice, the name of his first wife being unknown and the second being a sister of McDougall of Makerstoun. Around the late 1550s there was a dispute over the lands of Newbigging (part of the Middle Mains of Hassendean) between his children by his first wife and those by his second wife. This was resolved through a panel consisting of Gilbert Ker of Primside, David Turnbull of Wauchope, William Elliot in Larriston (probably a relative) and Robert Elliot of Redheugh. He had 6 sons: Robert, 2nd Laird; William, who later became the 5th Laird; Andrew, also called 'Dan'; David, tenant at Caveling; Gavin, who was the first of the family to own Stobs; and Archibald (possibly 'Archie Keen'). Note that the family name was often spelled 'Ellot' at that time. He may be the same as 'Gilbert of Horsliehill' (perhaps an error in transcription) who witnessed the marriage contract between William Scott of Harden and Agnes Murray, 'Muckle Mou'd Meg', in 1544. He may be the Gavin who in 1534 sold the 40-shilling lands of Nether Galalaw to William Scott of Hassendean, with Thomas acting as his procurator. He was already deceased in 1561/2 when his son Robert was involved with a land transaction in Selkirk. Gavin (16th C.) brother of Archie's Will. He is listed in 1561 among Border lairds who appeared before the Queen to promise to present the names of thieves. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Gavins. Gavin (d.1565) 3rd Laird of Horsleyhill, son of Robert, who was executed only a year before he died. He was succeeded by his brother William. In 1564 he was 'Gawine Ellot, sone to umquhile Robert Ellot of Horsliehill' who was heritable owner of part of the lands of Caveling; his 'fadir bruther' (i.e. uncle) and tutor at that time was William in Horsleyhill. He may be the 'Gawane' who was listed along with William of Horsleyhill, Robert and Archibald (as well as other Elliots and Scotts) in the trial over the murder of David Scott of Hassendean in 1564, for which he was acquitted along with Archibald. He may be the 'Guidman of Horsliehill' listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1565 he was listed along with William of Larriston and 'Gavin's Willie' of Falnash in a follow-up of the same case of the murder of David Scott of Hassendean. He may be the 'Gawine Ellot of Hosliehill' who was listed in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme as one of the men who owed him for the teinds for several years earlier; if so then he probably owned Skelfhill and Peelbrae. However, this could well be Gavin Eliott of Stobs, since it is hard to separate these nearly contemporary Gavins. Gavin in Skelfhill (see Gavin Eliott of Stobs). Gavin of Ramsiegill (16th C.) possibly son of the previous Gavin. He was one of the 10 Liddesdale thieves held in Edinburgh tolbooth after being captured in Hawick in 1567. He was also one of the Elliots who entered a bond for 'Willie's Hob' in 1587. 'Hob Ellot of the Ramsigill' is also listed, so they must have been either brothers or father and son. Also in the 1580s, along with John of Heuchhouse he accused a band of Englishmen from raiding his lands. His seat was probably somewhere near Riccarton. Gavin of Hoscote (16th C.) listed among men accused in 1579/80 of committing raids into England. He was 'Gawen Ellot of Hostcoit', accused along with Robert of Redheugh and Walter Scott of Harden of a raid on Coquet Water. William of Hoscote was also among those listed, and hence it is unclear which of the two was the Laird at the time, or whether they were the same men as other Elliots, with other designations. Gavin 2nd Laird of Falnash (d.c.1584) son of Archibald. He appears to have avoided being involved in many disputes, which is unusual for the time. He is listed in 1561 (as brother of Archie's Will) among Border lairds who appeared before the Queen to promise to present the names of thieves. He is among Elliots who had a bond in 1561/2 with the Kerrs of Ferniehirst, to enter Thomas Routledge into prison at Fermiehirst (the others were his father Archie of Falnash, John of Copshaw and 'Elder Will'). In a bond of 1562 with Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst he is described as 'of the Merynes' (i.e. 'Merry Naze'). He is first recorded as Laird of Falnash in 1566 in an altercation with Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig 'concerning violent profits from certain lands'. In 1569 he signed a bond of security in Hawick, with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch acting as surety for him; he is recorded as 'Gawin Ellot in Fallinesche' and 14 tenants of his are also listed. When he failed to appear in 1569, Scott of Buccleuch was to be liable for £1000. He was to be sent to St. Andrews as a pledge, with Will of Gorrenberry, Gavin Eliott of Skelfhill (later of Stobs) and Sim of Dodburn designated as his relief pledges. Along with several other Elliots he signed the bond with the Regent Morton in 1572. He was entered into ward in St. Andrews in 1573. In 1575 he was one of the men summoned by the Privy Council to resolve the feud between the Elliots and the Pringles. He was listed in 1576 among local Lairds who acted jointly as sureties for Hob Elliot, 'Mirk Hob' in Penchrise as well as 'Vicar's Hob' Elliot, pledging that they would refrain from theft, but in default of the pledge by 1578/9. In 1583/4 he was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council. He was dead by the end of 1584. He had at least 4 children: William, who succeeded; Archibald of Muselee; Gilbert; and Alexander 'of Fallon'. In 1598/9 there were complaints against brothers, tenants and servants of William of Falnash, including 'Stottan Gib' and his brother John and Archie of Muselee and his brother Alexander; they may all have been his sons. Gavin 'Scot's Hob's Gavin' (16th C.) son of 'Scottis Hob', hence his father was clearly Robert, and he was related to the Elliots of Park. In 1578 there was a dispute between John Cunningham of Glengarnock, who had held him as a pledge for about three years, and John Hamilton of Stonehouse, who was supposed to receive him, but let him go. He was listed in 1578 among pledges who were to meet again to suppress lawlessness on the Border. In 1580 he was among a number of Borderers held in Blackness Castle and presented to the Privy Council by their keeper, Malcolm Douglas of Mains. In 1580/1 he was sentenced to imprisonment for several crimes of theft, along with other Elliots, Armstrongs and Nixons. In 1581 Martin of Braidlie and others were cautioned for his not appearing and fined in 1582/3; he is recorded there as 'Scottis Hobbis Gawin' and 'Hobbis Jok' was one of the cautioners, who may have been his brother. He is 'Scotes Hobbe' when recorded among the Elliots of Park in 1583. Gavin (16th C.) son of Martin of Braidlie. He is listed in 1580 among a group of Elliots (including his brothers Hobbie and Archie, and 3 cousins), who attacked the lands of Harwood (on Teviot), stealing 40 cows and oxen, and then later attacked Slaidhills, Whitlaw and Hoscote; he was declared a rebel after not appearing. They were also implicted in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580. He is probably the 'Gowan Ellot called the clarke' listed among the Elliots of Braidlie in 1583. It is unclear why his nickname should be the 'Clerk' (perhaps jocularly for cleric, scholar or scribe). It is possible he was the 'Gawine Ellott of [ ]' (with the designation blank) listed first in 1590 among other Elliots, Croziers and Armstrongs, accused of taking cows and horses from the tenants of Woodhall and Netherhouses in England. Gavin of Swinstead (16th C.) recorded 'in Swinteis' in 1576 when he was 'surety found not to molest' with the Privy Council. He was also recorded as 'sometime in Newbigging, and now in Swinsteis' in 1578/9; presumably he was also the Gavin in Newbigging recorded in the register of the Privy Council in 1574. He was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned. However, he was among the sureties who swore that they had earlier presented 'Adie of the Schawis'. He was also listed similarly in 1581, among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. He was also listed in 1583/4 among Border Lairds who were summoned to appear before the Privy Council to discuss keeping peace on the Border, where he is recorded as 'Gawin Ellot of Swinsteidis'. It seems probable he was the same man as Gavin of Brugh, brother of Robert of Redheugh, who held the lands of Swinstead (and not the same as the contemporary son of Martin of Braidlie or the Laird of Bailielie and Stobs). In 1581 he is probably the Gavin, listed along with William as brothers of Robert of Redheugh in 1581 when they witnessed the sasine for Gavin Gledstains inheriting Stobs (with Gavin of Bailielie, Robert of Redheugh and 2 tenants of Swinstead also acting as witnesses). Gavin (16th C.) recorded in 1587/8 when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots. His name is given as ' 'Wilcox' Gawen Ellott'; it is unclear what this means, but one possibility is that he was 'Will Cock's Gavin', and perhaps son of Will who was related to 'Cock' Crozier. 'Wilkoke Elwald', recorded in 1541, could have been his father. Gavin 'John's Gavin' of Fiddleton (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1606 when he was accused of cutting off the nose of Thomas Tweedie 'in Dunsyre'. A group of Armstrongs were separately charged. Robert Elliot, younger of Falnash, acted as cautioner for him. Given his nickname, his father was presumably John. He must have been related to Ninian, son of William of Fiddleton, who was executed in 1608. Gavin (d.1606/7) son of Gavin of Horsleyhill, see Gavin Eliott of Stobs. Gavin of Hillhouse (16th/17th C.) one of 3 men who were meant to have plotted the murder of Walter Scott of Buccleuch in a foiled plot of 1624, part of a feud between the Elliots and the Scotts. He was listed as 'Gawane Ellott of Hilhouse' and 'Gawine Ellott in Halhouse'. Gavin of Braidlie (16th/17th C.) younger son of William of Dinlabyre and Braidlie. He is probably the Gavin, brother of Robert 'of Drumlybyre' who was denounced as a rebel in 1611, along with several other Elliots and Armstrongs, for hunting illegally, as well as destroying woods etc. Gavin (16th/17th C.) recorded being 'of Coklek' in 1611 when Robert of Falnash was cautioner for him in Jedburgh. Gavin (d.bef. 1618) described as 'Gawane Ellott in Hassindeane Burne' in 1619 when his wife Helen Elliot raised an action to try Hector Turnbull in Clarilaw for his murder. Their children Gavin, Samuel and Elizabeth are also mentioned. Gilbert, son of Gilbert Eliott of Stobs, appeared on their behalf (and so may have been a relative). Gavin of Brugh (d.bef. 1631) youngest son of Robert of Redheugh and Jean Scott, and brother of Robert the 16th chief. He was probably raised partly by his step-father, Gavin Eliott of Stobs. He may be the Gavin, who, along with his brother Archibald (brother of Robert of Redheugh) in 1581 witnessed a transaction between Gavin of Bailielee (later of Stobs) and James McDougall of Makerstoun. He may be the 'Gawan Ellot his brother' recorded along with Robert of Redheugh and other Elliots in 1583. He is 'of Brugh' when he witnessed a deed in 1597 and is recorded as 'in the Burgh' in 1599 when he had a bond with the Laird of Buccleuch. Additionally in 1599 he was one of the leading Elliots and Armstrongs to write to Lord Scrope to get their family hostages freed from England. He was among Elliots who raided into England in 1603 and later had remission for this crime. In 1612 he complained to the Privy Council about being attacked by servants of Douglas of Cavers, specifically that William Douglas of Whitriggs and others confronted his family and servants on their way home from the Kirk, 'threw thame af thair horssis, pullit thame in myris, struck them with horse wands about thair lugeis and upoun thair face', and violently took his sons sword; however, the men were acquitted. He helped his nephew Robert of Redheugh in his dipute with Buccleuch, thus putting himself in debt. In 1621 Robert granted him Over and Nether Dodburn and Branxholmebrae, as well as discharging him from all previous bonds. In 1625 he was one of the men who broke out of Selkirk jail (the others being Robert Scott of Thirlestane, George Davidson of Kames, Thomas Little of Meikledale and John 'Skaillis'). He married Margaret Chisholme (who may have been a daughter of Chisholme of that Ilk) and they had 4 children: Archibald, who died before him; Gilbert, who succeeded; Robert, mentioned in 1621; and William, who became Provost of Peebles. However, the first couple of generations of this family are quite uncertain, and it has been suggested that 2 of his sons were illegitimate. He was certainly the first of the Elliots of Brugh, a family that was well represented in the Hawick area for at least the next 200 years. In 1631 his widow sold Over and Nether Dodburn and Branxholmebrae to William Eliott, younger of Stobs. Gavin (16th/17th C.) recorded as 'of the Schawis' in 1611 when William of Falnash was cautioner for him in Jedburgh. He was further 'callit of ye Schawis' in 1623; Rowie Foster stole sheep from 'Callshiels' owned by him and John Nixon in Lawshill. He was probably related to the earlier Elliots of Shaws. Gavin (17th C.) recorded as possessor of the lands of Burnmouth, Over Heuchhouse, Nether Hightrees, Dyke, Kilford and Byrestead in 1632. Given the lands he owned, he was probably of some significance among local Elliots. Perhaps the same Gavin is recorded in the same 1632 document as joint tenant, along with John Scott, of the lands of Over and Nether 'Closse alias Welshaw' in Liddesdale. Gavin (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, married to Bessie Veitch. Their daughter Helen was baptised in 1635. Gavin (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, married to Marion Elliot. Their daughter Marion was baptised in 1636. as Gavin of Caerlenrig, who had a daughter Mary. Gavin of Caerlenrig (17th C.), 4th son of Robert of Falnash. He was mentioned as early as 1635, when he witnessed the marriage of his brother William. He had a charter of Caerlenrig from Sir Gilbert of Stobs in 1668. In about 1668 he purchased Falnash from his brother Archibald, and settled it on his son Ninian. He was 'in Carlenrick rige' in 1678 when he paid the land tax in Cavers Parish. He was ancestor of the Elliots of Caerlenrig. He married Janet Elliot by 1655 and their children included: Ninian, who succeeded as Laird of Falnash; Robert 'of Carlenrickrig' (b.1655), baptised in Hawick Parish; Francis of Fenwick; and Mary. Rev. Gavin (d.bef. 1678) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1645, he became minister at Kirkton in 1652. However, he was deprived in 1662 (for refusing to conform to Episcopacy), and forced to leave not only his manse, but the bounds of the Presbytery. His sons were Robert and William both 'in Borthwickbrae'. He was presumably related to the Elliots of Horsleyhill, Borthwickbrae, Borthwickshiels, etc., but the precise relationship is unclear. The name of his wife and date of his death are both unknown. Gavin of Outerside Rig (17th C.) recorded in a list of landowners of Hassendean Parish in 1666. Ninian of Eweslees was his grandfather, and appointed his guardian. His brothers were William of Unthank and James in Harwood. In 1662 he was among a long list of men fined and given a pardon by the King after the Restoration. In 1678 he paid the land tax for lands in Wilton Parish valued at £360. Gavin (17th C.) described as 'in Stob' in 1668 when his son Gilbert became a baker's apprentice in Edinburgh. This is unlikely to have been the same man as Gavin Eliott of Grange, since his son Gilbert was the 1st Lord Minto. Gavin (17th C.) recorded in 1673 as 'collector of customs and excise at Surone (Sowrone)' when he had 3 separate bonds. This may have been 'Souden', i.e. Southdean. Gavin 4th Laird of Midlem Mill (1727–86) eldest surviving son of Robert and Katherine Elliot. He was born in Old Langholm Castle. He left a sort of diary in the family bible. He was educated at Hawick Grammar School and then went to college in Edinburgh for 3 years, lived at Midlem Mill for 18 months and moved to London in 1743. There he joined the counting house of Alexander Coutts, before sailing to Virginia in 1745 where he opened a store. Returning to Britain in 1747, he lived in London and then in 1752 moved to Danzig as a clerk with Gibson & Hogg. He succeeded his father in 1753, but there was a large debt owed to Col. William of Wells, and the family estate was sold by the trustees in about 1756. He subsequently lived in London. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Anna Catharine Clemens in Danzig in 1758 (and he received a large dowry). They had 7 children, including Robert (who died aged 11), Catherine Elizabeth (who married Rev. William Lance), Helena Constantia (who died young), Clemens (also died young), Anna Renata (who married Adam Ogilvie of Hartwoodmyres, and received money in the will of her relative William, son of Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs), Gilbert (died aged 12) and William (the only surviving son, who became Rector of Simonburn). He died in London and was buried in Greenwich Church. Gavin of Fenwick (18th C.) last Elliot of Fenwick. He was son of Robert and Katherine, daughter of William of Arkleton. He may have also had a brother James, for whom he witnessed a baptism in 1758. In a pedigree of 1811 (by J.W. Henderson) he is said to have lived with 'a loose woman' and had a son (who went abroad in about 1796 and died), as well as several daughters. He eventually acknowledged her as his wife, in England, so his children could succeed to Arkleton. Gavin (b.c.1800) born in Channelkirk, Berwickshire, he was a stockingmaker in Denholm. In 1841 and 1851 he was probably on Sunnyside and in 1861 was on Westside. He married Isabella Best, from Cavers and their children included: Agnes (b.1824), baptised in Minto; Jane (or Jeany, b.1826), baptised in Cavers; and Henry (b.1828), who was a mason. Gedwin (18th/19th C.) listed at Haggiehaugh in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. It is unclear if his forename was an error or how he could have been related to other Elliots. George (15th/16th C.) chaplain who is recorded as witness to a document for Thomas Ker of Sunderland Hall, done at Fairnilee in 1526. His surname is 'Elwand' and John was also a witness. Probably the same 'sir George Ellot' was witness to a document for David Pringle of Galashiels and Smailholm in 1529. Also in 1529 he was recorded as 'curate in Lyndene' when he solemnized the marriage of John Rutherford of Hunthill and Christian Pringle. Probably the same 'George Elwand chaplain' witnessed a transaction related to lands at Bowhill in 1539/40 and another for the Pringles of Blindlee in 1541. Either he or a different George 'Elwand' was recorded in 1541 as a tenant of the lands of 'Lyndene' in the Barony of Bowden, along with other Elliots. George (16th C.) recorded in 1535 as 'Georgii Elwald' when he had remission for associating with 'Jacobi Elwald'. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. George (16th C.) recorded in 1550 as curator to the sister of Janet Chapman in Selkirk. He was directed to deliver money to his mother Bessie, which was to go to Margaret Chapman, who was in England. The agreement was signed in his house in Selkirk. George (16th C.) tenant in Adderstoneshiel. In 1563/4 he was listed along with Will 'of the Burnmouthis', Alexander and 2 Croziers who were to be presented by John Gledstains of Cocklaw to answer accusations brought against them by Englishman William Selby. George 'the Cleg' (16th C.) named in a pledge of 1576 by James Langlands of that Ilk, along with the 'cobilman to the lard of Langlands'. In 1578/9 the pledge to the Privy Council for the same pair of men was considered broken with the joint cautioners being liable, namely Walter Scott of Goldielands, James Gledstains of Cocklaw and James Langlands of that Ilk. George 'Jamie's Geordie' (16th C.) recorded in 1587/8 when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots. His name is recorded as 'George Ellott called James Geordie', but it is unclear which James his father was. George (d.bef. 1580) Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1580 his first-born son Thomas resigned all rights to his lands in Lindean. George 'Buggerback' (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1595 among Nixons and Elliots complained about by the Lord of Gilsland for a raid on 'Haslegyll', as well as separately for stealing 12 ewes and a ram. Others named included servants of William of Larriston, suggesting that he was from this part of Liddesdale. He was listed in another complaint in the same year, and said to be brother of Archie 'called dogpyntle'. Rev. George (1676–1748) younger son of John of Brugh, who farmed at Southfield. He graduated from Edinburgh in 1701. Also in 1701 he and his father witnessed the baptism of the twin daughters of his brother Gilbert. In 1711 he was ordained as Minister of Hownam and remained there until his death. He paid the window tax for Hownam Manse in 1748. In 1710 he married Sarah, daughter of Hugh Lind, Bailie of Edinburgh. Their children were Arabella (baptised in Kirkton, b.1712), Margaret, John, George Augustus, Robert, Sara, Jane, Janet and James. All but the first child were baptised in Hownam Parish. George (18th C.) younger son of Walter in Brugh. He is said to have lived in Cuba, but nothing else is known about him. George (18th C.) farmer at Burnmouth in Liddesdale, recorded in 1748. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Elliots in Burnmouth. George (1729/30–1805) tenant farmer at Doorpool in Rulewater. He was probably brother of William, tenant at Lanton Mains. He may be the George at Ruletownhead on the 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. He is recorded at Doorpool on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax at Doorpool in the same year. He may also be the George who owned parts of Ruletownhead, 'Bossithill' and Burnkinford that were among the possessions of Charles Kerr of Abbotrule by 1811. He married Mary Scott, who died in 1807, aged

71. Their children, baptised in Bedrule Parish, included: William (b.1767), who died in infancy; Mabel (b.1768); Mary (b.1770); George (b.1770); and William (1772–1855), who farmed at Doorpool. The family are recorded on a tombstone at old Abbotrule Kirk. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1786); Gilbert (b.1789); Janet (b.1791); Mary (b.1793); James (b.1795); William (b.1797); and John (b.1800). George of Larriston (18th/19th C.) see George Fraser Scott-Elliot. Adm. Sir George (1784–1863) 2nd son of the 1st Earl of Minto. He joined the Navy and at a young age took part in the capture of the Danish Fleet un Copenhagen Harbour, led by Lord Nelson. He accompanied his father (then Governor-General of Bengal) out to Java, and on the trip made one of the only known sketches of John Leyden. He captained H.M.S. Victory 1827–32, and was later promoted to Admiral, as well as Lord of the Admiralty. He was also General of the Mint in Scotland. A Whig in politics, he became the first M.P. for Roxburghshire after the passing of the Reform Bill in 1832, defeating Lord John Scott. He took part in the Hawick celebrations for the passing of the Bill and was made an Honorary Burgess in 1833. In 1834 many of the Whig members of the Jedforest Club resigned when the Chairman refused to toast his health. He was defeated by Scott in the 1835 election. It is said that he helped get John Ewen appointed as minister at Hobkirk. In 1810 in Calcutta he married Eliza Cecilia, daughter of James Ness of Osgodly, Yorkshire and they had 9 children, one of whom, George, was also an Admiral and M.P. He may be the 'Hon. Captain Elliot, Teviotbank' who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. Sir George (1814–93) born in Gateshead, he was a mining engineer and businessman. He was a Conservative in politics and in 1868 he became M.P. for North Durham. He was created a Baronet in 1874. He is probably the 'Hon. George Elliot' who was made a Life Member of the Archæological Society in 1869. He could be the George who was present at the excavation of the cairn on Cromrig in 1869. George Mackenzie (1822–56) 5th son of James, 3rd Laird of Wolfelee. He went to Australia with his brother William Thomas. A massacre of Aborinal people in 1856 resulted in about 200 men coming to their sheep station at Canoona, leading his men to open fire. There were about 7 locals and 2 white men killed, and the locals were then pursued. He died of illness soon afterwards and a stone was erected to his memory, with an inscription describing that he died at Gracemore Fitzroy River. Gideon of Horsleyhill (16th/17th C.) along with 'Auld Wat' of Harden and Gideon Murray, he was responsible for burning West Burnflat (in Liddesdale) in 1599, for which they obtained remission in 1604. He (probably wrongly transcribed as 'Gilbert') was one of the landowners of Hassendean who the Baron, James Cunningham, tried to evict in 1603. He was also recorded in 1611 as witness to a marriage contract of William Scott of Harden and Agnes Murray. Dr. Gideon (d.bef. 1712) third son of Robert of Bewlie, tenant in Borthwickshiels. He became an apprentice surgeon in Edinburgh in 1681. He became a Fellow of the Royal College of Surgeons of Edinburgh in 1689 and was Chair in 1693/4 and 1699/1700. In 1695 he and Thomas Burnet were employed by the Council of King William to visit the Earl of Home, then a prisoner in the Hirsel, and report whether his health would allow him to be transferred to Edinburgh Castle. In 1701 (as 'deacon of the Surgeons) He was made a Burgess of Canongate, gratis. In 1691 he married Margaret Cunningham, heiress of North Sinton and was then designated 'of North Sinton'. In 1705 he secondly married Jean, daughter of James Loch of Drylaw. In 1695 and 1704 he was listed on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. His children all died young. His portrait hangs in Surgeons' Hall in Edinburgh. Gideon of Harwood-on-Teviot (d.1735), 3rd or 4th son of Simon of Swinside and grandson of William of the Binks. He was recorded as a Hawick Parish heritor in 1718 when the new Hawick Schoolmaster was appointed. He became an Elder of Hawick Parish in 1723. In 1723 he witnessed baptisms for William Grieve, tenant in Fenwick, and for Francis Scott, ploughman in Harwood. In 1724 he purchased Teindside from his brother Robert. He is probably the Laird of Harwood who witnessed baptism in 1728 for William Grieve in Fenwick and in 1729 (along with 'Mr' Haliburton, probably his factor) for weaver James Roger. He was probably the uncle of Rev. Simon Haliburton, minister of Castleton and Ashkirk. He married Mary Haliburton in 1715; she was sister of Thomas Haliburton of Newmains, John Haliburton, doctor in Jedburgh and Andrew, W.S., and she died in 1735. Their children (all baptised in Hawick) included: Jean (b.1719); Barbara (b.1720); Simon (b.1722); Christian (b.1723), who married Rev. Isaac Davidson, minister at Sorbie, Wigtonshire; Elizabeth (b.1726), who married Isaac Davidson, minister of Sorbie; and Mary (b.1728). Only Christian and Elizabeth survived their mother. In the 1719 baptism in Hawick he is recorded in error as 'Simeon Eliot of Harwood', with his wife being a 'Halyborton', and the witnesses Gideon Scott of Falnash and 'Doctor Halyburton' (probably his wife's brother). The witnesses in 1720 were Robert Scott of Falnash and Walter Turnbull, cottar in Harwood. In 1726 he was 'of harwod' and the witnesses were Robert Scott of Falnash and Andrew Scott .... The 1728 baptism was witnessed by Robert Scott of 'F...' (probably Falnash) and 'Mr. Shiel in Todja...'. Gideon (b.c.1793) agricultural labourer in Castleton Parish. In 1835 and 1841 he was at Bellshiels. He married Agnes Anderson (b.1795) and their children were: Jean (b.1819); Betty (b.1821); Gideon (b.1824); Helen (b.1827); Mary (b.1830); Agnes (b.1832); Anne (b.1835); and Janet (b.1840). He could be the Gideon, son of John and Betty Crozier, born in Castleton in 1791. Gideon (1833–1913) son of John and Jane Goodfellow. In 1861 he was a dyker living at Muselee. In Roberton Parish in 1853 he married Margaret Wilson. Their children included: Agnes E.; Jane (b.1856); John (b.1859); Thomas (b.1861); James (b.1864); Archibald Hoy (b.1866); William (b.1868); Francis (b.1870); and Thomas (b.1873). Gilbert (15th C.) recorded as 'Gilbert Elwald' in 1453 when he witnessed a 'letter of reversion' between Andrew Ker of Altonburn and Sir Robert Colville of Oxnam for the lands of Feu-rule. It is unclear how he is related to other Elliots, but he may have a connection to John who witnessed a Rulewater sasine in 1436. Perhaps the same Gilbert is mentioned in 1493 when his son Robert produced a remission at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh for the crime of stealing a grey horse from William Scott of Tushielaw. Gilbert (15th C.) son of Nicholas, listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Perhaps the same Gilbert was accused in 1502 of the theft of 8 oxen from Newhall, with William of 'lahope' serving as his surety. He may also be the Gilbert who is 1502 was surety for John in Foulshiels. Gilbert 'Gib' of the Shaws (16th C.) recorded in 1578 when he was held by Pater Hay of Megginch, with a pledge to the King for good behaviour. Later in 1578 he was 'Gib Ellot of the Schawis' when he was released from being warded with the Provost and Bailies of Perth, but requested to meet with other Border Lairds to promise to suppress lawlessness on the Border. In 1580 he was held in ward in Falkland Castle when his keeper was ordered to present him to the Privy Council. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. He is probably the 'Gib of the Schawis' listed in 1580 when his procurator explained to the Privy Council that he had 'departit hame to his awin cuntrie and sensyne wes slayne'. In 1583 he is 'Gybbe Ellot of the Shaues' in a letter from English wardens; he is listed among the close kin of Robert of Redheugh, and surely related to Adam of the Shaws, who is also listed. Gilbert (16th C.) recorded among merchants of Edinburgh in a case before the Privy Council in 1565/6. His surname is given as 'Elwand'. Gilbert 'Gib' (16th C.) nephew of Martin of Braidlie. In 1569 he was recorded as 'Martin's Gib the Cousin' when he was among a number of pledges to support Martin of Braidlie with the Regent Moray. He was recorded being 'left with my Lord Regentis Grace to the returning of Martine Ellot'. He was also recorded in 1580 among Elliots who raided the farms of Harwood (on Teviot), Slaidhills, Whitlaw and Hoscote; he was declared a rebel after not appearing. In 1584 he was 'Gyb the cousin', who defended the tower at Larriston, which was taken by an English raiding force under Sir John Forster; he was said to have been trained as a soldier in the wars in Flanders and France. He is 'Martin's Gib being Martins cosen', recorded in 1590, along with 'Martin's Airchie' and Martin's brother Gib and others, when accused of stealing cattle and horses from England. Also in 1590 he and William, younger of the Steele, were accused of stealing cattle 2 years earlier. Additionally he was 'Martins Gib being Martins cossen' when accused of further rieving in 1590, along with elder Airchie, Will of the Steele and 'Lang' John. It is unclear who his father was, or whether he was the same as one of the contemporary Gibs. His killing by men of Tynedale is recorded in 1597, where he is 'an Ellot of Martin's clan called 'Martin's Gibbe' ', with the further description that he was 'a notorious offender in England, and besides, being a soldier and trained in war, was a captain and principal leader'. Gilbert 'Gib', 'Sweet Milk' (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He is listed as 'Gib Ellott, callit Sweit Milk'. It seems likely he was related to the earlier Hob and the later Dand, who had the same nickname, as well as William, supposedly commemorated in the song 'Ranton Roarin

Willie'. Gilbert 'Gib' (16th/17th C.) brother of Robert of Redheugh. In 1578 he was listed among Border Lairds who were directed to meet in order to pledge to suppress lawlessness; he was then 'Gibbie Ellot, broder to Robert Ellot of Reidheuch'. In 1583 a letter from Musgrave to Burghley describes him as 'Gibbe Ellot' among the most important Elliots of Liddesdale, along with his brothers Robert of Redheugh, William of Hartsgarth and Archibald. He may be the Gib, 'son to Robine Ellott' who was among a number of Elliots (along with servants of Robert of Redheugh), Croziers and others accused in 1590 of stealing livestock from Middleton Hall in England in 1589; he is recorded as 'Gib Ellott son to Robin', and his servant John Noble and 'his man' 'John Shevell' were also listed. In 1591 he was described as 'louit freind and seruitour' of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme when he rented Commonside, Northcroft, Hillend and 'Stoghill' from him, being given this lease for service performed for the Laird of Branxholme. In 1595 he was also servitor of Sir Walter Scott Branxholme when he witnessed a charter. He is probably the Gybb Elwood allias Robes Gibb' who, according to an English account, along wth Scott of Buccleuch and Scott of Harden met with some Englishmen to get help in the plan to rescue Kinmont Willie. He is probably the 'Gyb Ellot brother to Robert Ellot of Reidheuch' who was held as a prisoner in England in 1597. In 1599 he had a remission, along with Gideon Murray of Elibank and Walter Scott of Harden, for burning Westburnflat in Liddesdale. In 1603 he was probably 'my louit Gilbert Ellot of the Kirktoun' to whom Sir Walter Scott leased the lands of Wester Commonside and Northcroft. He may have been an illegitimate son of Robert the 16th Chief, with his mother possibly being Helen Kidd (unless this story is complete fabrication); he would then be the 'bastard brother of Robert Ellot of Redheugh' recorded in 1603. It is not impossible that he is the same man as 'Gibbie wi the Gowden Gartins'. Gilbert 'Gib' (16th/17th C.) younger son of Martin of Braidlie. He may be the 'Gibbie' who, along with Archie and their accomplices, was accused of taking part in a raid into England in 1587. He is probably also the 'Martins Gib' in a group complained about by the English Warden for the murder of 2 Englishmen during a raid in 1588. He is recorded as brother of 'Martin's Arche' in 1590 when, along with Gib, cousin of Martin, and others, he was accused of stealing cattle and horses from England. He was probably the 'Martin's Gib' who, along with Will Elliot of Heuchhouse and 'Adie's John' Crozier were accused of stealing from William Henderson of 'Fallofeeld' in 1590. Also in 1590 he was accused of stealing from Thomas Rutherford of Blackhall (in England), along with Martin's sons (and so presumably his brothers) Airchie and John, as well as Martin of Prickinghaugh. He was probably the 'Martin's Gib' accused in 1590 along with a list of Elliots and others said to have stolen from the 'Hewrde' family, as well as maiming and taking prisoner Christopher 'of the Whithall'. He was probably the 'Martinges Gib' listed in 1590 among Elliots and Armstrongs complained about by a large group of Englishmen for a raid on Blackcleugh in Kirkhaugh, taking many prisoners for ransom. He was probably the Gib, son of Martin, who (along with his brother John) was part of a complaint about a raid into Gilsland in 1596, led by Sir Walter Scott of Harden. He is probably the 'Martin's Gibbe' who Lord Evers described being killed by English raiders in 1597; the slayer was a Dodd, it is said in retaliation for an earlier raid. He was described as 'brought up in the wars in Flanders and France, and has since been a leader to that wicked race'. Note that he may be confused with 'Martin's Gib the Cousin', who is recorded at about the same time. Gilbert 'Gib' (16th/17th C.) younger son of Gavin of Falnash. In 1595 he was mentioned along with Wat Scott of Harden and 2 of his nephews (sons of William of Falnash), Archie and Hob in a list of English complaints against Liddesdale men. His name is recorded as 'Gibbe Ellott brother to Will E. of the Fawenesh'. He may be the 'Gilbert Ellot in Fallinasche Mill' recorded in 1618 when Walter Scott of Buccleuch complained that he had cut down 60 alder trees from his lands of Gorrenberry; William 'Ellote, called of Fallinasche in Braidlie' was also accused of cutting trees and may have been his brother. Not appearing before the Privy Council, he was denounced as a rebel. Gilbert 'Stottin Gib' (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1598/9 as 'Gib Ellot, called Stottan Gib', along with his brother John and other 'brothers, tenants and servants' of William of Falnash. There were complaints against them by Margaret, widow of James Douglas of Knightsridge, for stealing cattle from her lands of Corsetburn. His brother John was also listed; it is possible they were both brothers of William of Falnash and hence sons of Gavin of Falnash. Gilbert of the Mains (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1594/5 when Gavin Eliott of Stobs was his surety for a promise to pay taxes owed to James Douglas of Cavers for some of his lands in Teviotdale. He was there recorded being 'of the Manis'. In 1599 he witnessed bonds (signed at Branxholme) between Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and the Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddesdale. His name is recorded as 'Gilbert Ellot of the Maynis'; it is unclear where 'the Mains' might have been, but it seems likely he was a prominent Elliot of the time, and perhaps the same as one of the contemporary family members noted by another designation. He was also 'of the Mains' in 1602 when he signed the bond among Border lairds to keep the peace. Gilbert 'Gib the Galyart' (16th/17th C.) convicted in 1618 of stealing the purse of John Armstrong of Holm when they were in the house of Alexander Young of Selkirk. He was sentenced to be scourged through Edinburgh and then banished from the Kingdom. It is unclear to which branch of the Elliots he belonged. His nickname referred to a lively dance, and was apparently a common nickname for someone who was smart in dress or lively in spirit. Gilbert 'Gib the Tutor' (17th C.) described as a servant of Robert of Redheugh. He was involved in stealing cattle from Englishmen at 'Chipsies' and 'Islysyde' in about 1623. He was one of the men who had planned to murder Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1624, as part of the feud between the Scotts and the Elliots. He is listed as 'Gib Ellott, callit the Tutour', along with Gavin of Hillhouse and 'Will Ellot, callit Gibbis Will', who may have been his son. They were meant to kill the Earl in Jedburgh at the time of a Justice Court, and then followed him to Edinburgh, but after failing they confessed. Robert of Redheugh stated that the idea for the murder originally came from him, but Gavin of Hillhouse said that 'Gib wes bot a feible coutcher and wald never do the turne'. Gilbert (17th C.) married Janet Richardson in Kelso in 1635. They had a daughter Elizabeth in 1636. Janet (b.1639) and Margaret (b.1642), both baptised in Hawick Parish, were probably also his children. He may be the same as one of the other Gilberts. Gilbert (17th C.) signatory of the National Covenant in Hawick in 1638. He is recorded as being 'now in Quhithauche', which could be Whithaugh in Liddesdale. Gilbert of Brugh (d.bef. 1648) 2nd son of Gavin, he gained the Lairdship since his elder brother Archibald died before 1621. In 1621 he is recorded as witness to a contract for money due by the Chisholmes to his deceased brother. He is recorded in the Circuit Court of 1623 when he acted as caution (along with several others) for Mungo Scott in Castleside (who may have been his tenant). His wife's name is unknown and his only son was Archibald (d.1650), who was served heir to his grandfather in 1648. However, details of these generations of the Elliots of Brugh seem quite uncertain. Gilbert (17th C.) younger son of Robert of Falnash. In 1637 he was apprenticed to John Nichol, merchant in Edinburgh. Gilbert (17th C.) younger son of Archibald of Brugh. He was mentioned being 'in Carlops' and brother of John in Southfield (who succeeded to Brugh) in 1665. Nothing else is known about him. Gilbert (17th/18th C.) referred to as 'of the Park' in 1699. He and his son William 'in Castletoun' were subject of a complaint of non-payment by William of Bewlie, recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books. It is unclear how he might have been related to earlier Elliots associated with Park. Sir Gilbert 'Gibbie' (1651–1718) of Headshaw and of Minto, 1st Baronet and Lord Minto. He was younger son of Gavin Eliott of Grange and Midlem Mill, and grandson of 'Gibby wi the Gowden Gartins' (although these early generations are somewhat uncertain). His sister Margaret was the mother of Rev. Robert Lithgow of Ashkirk. He may have purchased part of the land of Minto (perhaps Craigend and Deanfoot) from John Turnbull in about 1674. He may be the 'Minto' who acted as an agent for renting some of the Duchess of Buccleuch's farms in 1675. He may be the Laird of Minto who paid the Land Tax on more than £2100 in 1678. He was a lawyer in Edinburgh, and a zealous Presbyterian. In 1679 he acted to have the preacher William Veitch's sentence commuted from execution to banishment, and it is said that this established him as a capable lawyer. In 1681 he is reported to to have ridden from London, beating the King's messenger, and allowing the Earl of Argyll to escape from Edinburgh Castle before the capital sentence was imposed. He later took part in Argyll's disastrous expedition to Scotland from Holland (perhaps helping to raise funds, along with the Lairds of Torwoodlee and Polwarth). In 1685 he was among the rebels (under Sir Patrick Home and Sir John Cochrane) who engaged the Royalist force at Muirdykes in Renfrewshire, and afterwards fled to Holland. He is probably the 'wryter in Edinburgh' listed among others in 1685 as fugitive rebels. He was convicted of high treason for plotting against the King, hid out in the Border hills and fled to Holland. He was pardoned in 1687; it was stated this was because of the service to the Crown offered by his father. He became an advocate in 1687 and was fully back in favour when William of Orange acceded in 1689, when he was appointed Clerk to the Privy Council in 1689 (until 1692). He was kinghted in 1692. In 1693 he became a Burgess of Canongate, gratis, as well as a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh (in right of his first wife); he seems to have been entered again as a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1708. In 1694 he was listed as one of the creditors of Gilbert Eliott of Stanedge. In 1696 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire and in 1698 for Selkirkshire. In 1696 he bought the Headshaw estate (from the female heiress Mary and her husband Patrick Porteous) and in 1697 purchased Langhope (probably the one near Ashkirk). He was created a Baronet of Nova Scotia (for Headshaw) in 1700 and became a Judge. He was appointed one of the Parliamentary Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1702 and hence was a member of the last Scottish Parliament, voting against the Union. In 1703 he purchased the Minto estate (which had been combined with Craigend and Deanfoot) from Gideon Scott of Highchester; his aunt Elizabeth had been wife of John Turnbull of Minto and so he may have spent time on the estate as a child. He witnessed baptisms for George Douglas of Friarshaw in 1703 and 1704. In 1704 he was one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire and for Selkirkshire. In 1705 he was appointed Deputy Keeper of the Signet and shortly afterwards was created a Lord of Session, taking the title of first Lord Minto; this means that he served as a judge on the same court that had sentenced him to death about 20 years earlier. Also in 1705 he had a royal charter for the lands of Headshaw, Dryden, Crawknowe and 'Clews' in Ashkirk Parish, which included the erection of these lands into the Barony of Headshaw, as well as the patronage and teinds of Ashkirk Parish. In 1706 he combined the Barony of Headshaw and his lands of Langhope and Minto into the Barony of Minto and Craigend. In 1705 he was one of the members of the Scottish Parliament to vote against having a single Parliament for the whole of the United Kingdom. In 1712 he and his son Gilbert were granted the lands of Shielswood by James Scott of Shielswood (and his son Walter). He is recorded in a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1717. His portrait was painted in about 1715. On the frieze of the pulpit in Ashkirk Kirk are the initials 'S / GE' and 'D / (I)C' for 'Sir Gilbert Elliot' and 'Dame Jean Carre', his second wife. He married first Mary (or Helen) Stevenson, daughter of an Edinburgh Burgess, who was his cousin, and they had one daughter, Mary, who married Sir John Elphinstone of Logie; his first wife died in 1689 after 9 years of marriage. In 1692 he secondly married Jean, daughter of Sir Andrew Kerr of Cavers Carre. Their children were: Sir Gilbert (b.1693), who succeeded; and Andrew, who drowned at age 16 on his way to Holland. Gilbert (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of Robert of Larriston and grandson of James Eliott of Stobs. He was a merchant in Hawick, was said to be 'of Nethermill' (which was probably the place of that name in Dumfriesshire, adjacent to lands owned by his grandfather, John Maxwell of Cowhill), and is described in 1696 as 'brother german to Robert Elliot of Larriston'. His son Charles Edward was born in 1693, and settled in Essex, while another (unnamed) son eventually emigrated to California, where he is said to have descendants. It is claimed that both sons fought in the 1715 Jacobite uprising and later lived in Java for a while (but like other family legends, this may be confusing generations and individuals). Gilbert (17th/18th C.) son of William of Penchrise and Janet, daughter of John Elliot of Thorlieshope. He was 'at Mount', which may have been the farmstead near Whitropefoot. He died without issue. Gilbert (c.1670–aft. 1727) second son of John of Brugh, who farmed at Southfield, and younger brother of William 'the Laceman'. He lived for many years at Nether Southfield and took over the tenancy at Winningtonrig in 1710. He was also factor for his cousin, Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs. He is probably the Gilbert who leased the farm of Over Southfield (perhaps an error for Nether Southfield) from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1698. He was at Nether Southfield in 1698 when he witnessed a baptism for James 'Colwort' in Whitlaw. Both he and John (his father) witnessed Hawick baptisms in 1700 for Robert Scott in Newbigging and for William Scott (from Wilton Parish). He witnessed a baptism for Glendinnings in 1702, and both he and John 'in Nether Southfield' witnessed a baptism in 1704. In 1705 he witnessed baptisms for James Stevenson in Harwood, for Southfield shoemaker John Elliot and for Walter Scott in Hawick Shiel, and in 1706 another for William Cowan, herd in Southfield. He was stated in 1767 to have been tenant in Nether Southfield like his father before him and in about 1710 he 'broke Hawick Common by plowing a part of it', for which he got no protection from the Duchess' Chamberlain, 'Auld Falnash'; during the riding of the Common that year his flock was hounded more than those of the other neighbouring farmers and he was fined by the Hawick Bailies. In 1717 there was a complaint that one of his servants had encroached upon the Hawick Common at Winnington Moss. He witnessed the baptism of children of Walter Scott in Newbigging in 1722 and 1725; he was then 'in Winnintounridge'. In 1727 his brother William of Wells left him money in his will. He is probably the Gilbert who witnessed the baptism of his grandson Gilbert in Hawick in 1734. He married Agnes Turnbull of Southfield in 1698; she was daughter of Walter Turnbull (from Jedburgh) and Helen Elliot (from Hawick). Their children were: Jean and Barbara, twins (b.1701); 'Helenora' (b.1702), who married James Grieve, farmer at Commonside; Jane (or 'Jannet', b.1704); John (b.1708), who became a Captain and married Jean, daughter of James Grieve in Todshawhaugh; Agnes (b.1710), who died in infancy; Elizabeth (Arabella, b.1712); James; and another Agnes (b.1718). They were all christened locally (in Hawick, Cavers and Kirkton Parishes). The 1701 baptism was witnessed by his father John and brother George, the 1702 baptism by Robert Thomson in Newmill and James Ogilvie in Branxholme and the 1704 baptism by John Eliott (uncle of Sir Gilbert of Stobs) and shoemaker John Elliot. He was referred to as 'Mr. Elliot in Rig' in the 1712 baptism and as being 'in Rige' in 1718. The year of his death is not known. Gilbert (d.bef. 1752) son of Robert of Larriston. It is unclear if he was the oldest son, but he appears to have been the only one who had issue. He settled in Newcastle and married Margaret, daughter of James Scott of Calfield. He had 2 children: Jane Stewart, who married John Williams of Kensington; and Maj.-Gen. William (b.1741), who bought back the family lands of Larriston, but died unmarried. Sir Gilbert (1693–1766) 2nd Baronet and Lord Minto, eldest son of 'Gibbie'. He was educated in law at Utrecht University in the Netherlands, and became an advocate in 1715. He was M.P. for Roxburghshire 1722–26. He reached the bench as a Lord of Session in 1726, assuming the title of Lord Minto, later becoming a Judge and eventually Lord Justice Clerk of Scotland in 1763. It is said that it was partly through his influence that his relative Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs was eventually pardoned for the murder of Colonel Stewart. In 1727 and 1731 he had discharges with the Burgh of Selkirk. Also in 1727 he became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh in right of his father and 'for good services'. He purchased Raperlaw (which had once belonged to an Eliott of Stobs), followed by Fallahill in 1727, Newlands in 1734 and part of Langhaugh in 1743. He was responsible for the extensive alterations carried out at Minto House in 1744 and 1745, including the addition of 68 new windows, and building up a library. He also improved the grounds, with a pond-head being built across the glen in 1735, an avenue of larches added in about 1736, and most of the houses moved to Minto Green. In 1739 he was among the local landowners asked to decide where the Teviot Brig in Hawick should be built. An anti-Jacobite, he reputedly hid among the crags when part of the Jacobite force stopped at Minto House in 1745. He paid the window tax for Minto House in 1748. He was said to have been interested in agriculture and dramatically changed the layout of the estate at Minto. However, he also spent much of the year in Edinburgh, where his house was on Horse-wynd. He was known as a music-lover and supposedly introduced the German flute into Scotland in 1726. He wrote verses in Italian, but none were published; his only publication was a pamphlet about improving the city of Edinburgh. His Minto estate was valued at £5678 4s in the 1740s. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1761. When appointed Lord Justice Clerk, he had a house built in Edinburgh, on Argyll Square. He was listed among the landowners involved in the court case over the division of Wilton Common in 1765. In 1718 he married Helen (d.1774), daughter of Sir Robert Stuart (or Stewart) of Allanbank; she was a leader of society in Edinburgh, serving for a while as Directress of the Assemblies. The couple had 13 children: Eleanor (b.1719), who married John Rutherford of Edgerston; Jean (b.1720), who died in infancy; Sir Gilbert (1722–77), who succeeded; Mary (b.1724), who probably died young; Robert (1725–57), Captain in the Royals; Jean (or Jane, 1727–1805), who was author of 'Flowers of the Forest'; Andrew (b.1728), who became Lieutenant-Governor of New York, married Elizabeth Plumstead and lived at Greenwells; Marianne (1730–1811), who died unmarried in Edinburgh; John (1732–1808), became an Admiral and died at Monteviot; twins Margaret (b.1734), who died in infancy and Ann (or Anne, b.1734), who married Charles Congleton of Congleton in Edinburgh in 1762; Grizell (b.1737), who probably died young; and Archibald (1743–59), who died in Antigua, aged 16. He was said to have been a strict disciplinarian with his children. He died suddenly at Minto. Sir Gilbert of Minto (1722–77) 3rd Baronet, son of Sir Gilbert.

Born at Minto, he was educated for the Scottish bar, becoming an advocate in 1743. He went to Holland in 1744 and married 2 years later. He was 'younger of Minto advocate Sherif Depute of Roxburghshire' in 1750 when he was present for the writing of a document for William Scott of Whitehaugh. He was said to be a great public speaker and a formidable debating opponent. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire 1753–65 and for Roxburghshire 1765–77 (when he died, but was succeeded as M.P. by his son). He was appointed one of the Lords of the Admiralty, as well as being Keeper of the Signet in Scotland. He was conspicuous as a parliamentary orator, being said to have almost single-handedly argued the successful case for making the office of Sheriffs in Scotland independent of the Crown. He was made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh in 1760, in right of his father and 'for great and eminent services'. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1761 (when still 'junior' of Minto). In 1761 he became Lord of the Treasury, in 1762 Treasurer of the House of Commons and from 1771 he was Treasurer of the Navy. He was also known as a man of philosophical interests and literary talent, with his song 'Amynta' being popular in its day; it begins 'My sheep I neglected, I broke my sheep-crook, And all the gay haunts of my youth I forsook' (or alternatively 'My sheep I've forsaken, and left my sheep-hook, And all the gay haunts of my youth I've forsook'). He also had poems published on the death of Col. James Gardiner and the Earl and Countess of Sutherland. In addition he wrote a letter to David Hume, which was later published. Before inheriting Minto he lived in London and later Twickenham. In 1767 he started the first experimental postal service in Hawick. He is probably the Sir Gilbert who is recorded as owner of the lands of Dryden, Headshaw, Crawknowe and Clews in about 1788. In 1746 he married Agnes Murray-Kynynmound, only daughter of Hugh Dalrymple; she was heiress (from Sir Alexander Murray) of Melgund in Forfarshire and of Kynynmound in Fife, and died in 1778. He was succeeded by his son Sir Gilbert (b.1751), who became 1st Earl of Minto and adopted the Murray-Kynynmound extension to his surname when inheriting his mother's lands. His other children were: Isabella (b.1749), who died unmarried; Hugh (1752–1830), Governor of Madras and the Leeward Islands; Alexander (1754–78) of the East India Company; Rev. Robert (1755–1824), Rector of Wheldrake; David (b.1757), who died aged 5; an unnamed son; Eleanor (1758–1818), who married William Eden, 1st Baron Auckland; and Marianne, who died in Edinburgh in 1811. He died when visiting Marseilles for his health and is buried at Minto. Gilbert (b.1725) born in Cavers Parish, son of Walter in Brugh. He became tenant farmer at Blackburnfoot in Castleton Parish. He married Betty Forbes and their children included: George, who lived in Castleton; Gilbert, tenant in Glenzier, who married a Miss Davidson; William; and Margaret, who married Adam Scott from Langhaugh. Gilbert (b.1731) younger son of the 2nd William of Borthwickbrae. He had one child, Thomas (probably illegitimate, by Sarah Growesmith), who purchased Wilton Lodge. He paid the Horse Tax at Langlands in 1785–86. He is recorded as 'Gilbert Elliot of Longlands' or Langlands when he was taxed for having a footman in 1785 and 1786 and a carriage in 1786 and 1787. He was also taxed for having 2 female servants in 1785 and 1786; his son Thomas is listed on the tax roll from 1787, suggesting he may have died or moved. Gilbert (1734–59) eldest son of Capt. John of the Elliots of Brugh. He was baptised in Hawick, the witnesses being his grandfathers Gilbert Elliot and James Grieve. He joined the Navy when no more than 10 years old, and served under Capt. Elliot Elliot (his distant cousin from the Stobs Eliotts) on the fireship Aetna. In 1759 he was on the Tyger, commanded by Capt. Brereton, 'who deserted his post for a slight wound in the head and tied a white napkin on his face and went below'. Elliot took over command of the vessel 'till a cannon shot carried away his bowels, and he dropped on the deck'. Apparently the Captain was court-martialed, and although acquitted was afterwards known in the Navy as the 'white-faced Captain' because of this incident. In his will, made a week before his death, he left most of his possessions to his shipmates, but his sword and belt to 'William Elliot of the Honourable Company's Military of Madras' (whose identity is unclear). He died unmarried. Sir Gilbert Murray Kynynmound (1751–1814) 4th Baronet and 1st Earl of Minto. Son of Sir Gilbert and Agnes Murray Kynynmound, he was educated largely in England and in Paris and travelled widely in Europe. He studied for the bar, but followed his father into politics. He became M.P. for Morpeth, Helston and Berwick in 1774 and was known for his debating skills. He was then M.P. for Roxburgh 1777–84 (following in his father's footsteps), Berwick 1786–90 and Helston 1790–95. He was served heir to his father in 1778, in the Barony of Minto and Headshaw, and the lands of Shielswood. He paid the land tax for Langhope in Ettrick Parish in 1785. In 1780 he held Craigend, but had liferented much of the rest of Minto to 6 other gentlemen (surely for the sole purpose of allowing them to vote in Roxburghshire, where he was standing as a candidate), each of them having just a little more than the required £400 of land: Alexander Alison; David Dalrymple, Lord Westhall; Sir John Dalrymple, Baron Dalrymple; Rev. Robert Elliot, his brother; Sir John Stewart of Allanbank; and Robert Trotter of Bush. At the same time he disponed the liferent of Dryden to 3 other men: Dr. William Elliot; George Potts, younger of Todrig; and Rev. Simon Haliburton. He was listed as a voter in Selkirkshire in 1788. In 1788 he was listed as owner of most of the Parish of Minto, valued at £2108 13s 4d and Newlands (which had formerly been in Hassendean Parish), valued at £80, as well as Raperlaw (valued at £416) and Willie's Peel (valued at £104) in Lilliesleaf Parish and the associated teinds (valued at £129 12s 4d), and Shielswood, Dryden, parts of Headshaw and associated teinds (valued at £1420 18s 4d) in Ashkirk Parish. He was taxed for having 4 servants (gardeners) in 1778 and 1779 and 3 gardeners in 1785 and 1786, with 5 (including butler, footman and groom) in 1787–92 and 6 in 1793, 1794 and 1797. He paid tax on 3 female servants in 1785 and 1786, 6 servants in 1787, 7 in 1788, 6 in 1789, 5 in 1790 and 4 in 1791. He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls in 1785–86, when he had 2 carriage horses, 4 in 1787–89 and 6 in 1790–94. In 1797 he was taxed for having 8 farm horses and 1 saddle horse at Minto. He was also taxed for owning a carriage in the period 1787–98. In 1791 he gave a speech in the House of Commons proposing the repeal of the Test and Corporation Acts (a popular cause in Hawick at the time). He was appointed Commissoner in Toulon in 1793, then went to Corsica as Viceroy. In 1796 the Duke of Buccleuch and others tried to convince him to remain in Corsica rather than contest the election. He was present at the Battle of St. Vincent in 1797, and a sword taken there from the Captain of the 'San Josef' was presented to him by Adm. Nelson. On his return in 1797 he was made Lord Minto for his services attempting to secure Corsica against the French Republic. He served on the Militia committee in Roxburghshire in 1797. His estate added the lands of Barnhills in 1797 and Hassendeanbank in about 1799. In about 1800 he contributed £1000 to the subscription to help fund the war against France. He was Lieut.-Col. of the 1st Battalion of Roxburghshire volunteers in the early 1800s. A speech he made at the General Meeting of the Count of Roxburghshire was published in 1803. At the False Alarm of 1804 he swam the flooded Teviot on his horse in order to reach the muster at Jedburgh. In 1806 he resigned the lands of Barnhills, Hassendeanbank, Standhill and Lantonhall in his own favour. He was appointed Governor General of Bengal (which effectively meant India at that time) in 1807, holding the post until 1813. There he annexed Amboyna and the Molucca Islands, took Bourbon and Mauritius from the French and subdued the pirates in Borneo. He also helped quell an army mutiny and personally led the expedition to take Java (where John Leyden died) from the Dutch. He was on the subscription list for Jamieson's Scots dictionary in 1808. Returning to Britain in 1814 where he was created Earl of Minto, and Viscount Melgund. Much of the improvements to the Minto estate were carried out under the supervision of his wife, since he spent so much time away; Minto House was extensively altered, with the work completed in 1814, and the plantations were added to; this included doubling the width, adding to both wings and covering the entrance hall with a cupola. Unfortunately he died on his way back to Scotland, the sad news being brought to people preparing to draw his carriage through the streets of Hawick and light bonfires in celebration. Many locals apparently refused to believe he was dead, and there grew a tradition that he lived in secret rooms in the House and wandered the Crags at night. A life-size portrait of him by George Chinnery was donated to Hawick in 1893 and used to hang in the Town Hall; in 1975 it was loaned to the Scottish National Portrait Gallery and donated permanently in 2020. In 1777 he married Anna Maria, daughter of Sir George Amyand and she died in 1829. They had 3 daughters and 4 sons: Gilbert Elliot (b.1782), who became the 2nd Earl; Adm. Sir George (b.1784); Anna Maria (1785–1855), who married Lt.-Gen. Sir Rufane Shawe Donkin; John Edmund (b.1788), M.P. for Roxburghshire; Harriet Mary Frances (1790–1825), who died unmarried; William (1792–1811), who died returning from Bengal; and Catherine Sarah (1797–1862), who married Sir John Peter Boileau. He is buried in Westminster Abbey. He adopted the addition of 'Murray-Kynynmound' to his surname by royal licence in 1797 (the surname becomes confusing at this point; see Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound). His will was proved at the Prerogatory Court of Canterbury in 1815. His portrait, by George Chinnery, is in the Museum. His wife's portrait was painted by Sir Joshua Reynolds, but was stolen from Minto House in 1930. Gilbert (18th/19th C.) son of Gilbert in Blackburnoot and descended from the Elliots of Falnash. He was tenant in Glenzier, near Canonbie and married a Miss Davidson according to a family pedigree. He is probably the Gilbert, married to Isobel Davidson, whose children, baptised in Canonbie Parish, included Elizabeth (b.1786), Margaret (b.1790), John (b.1792), Margaret (again, b.1794) and Matthew (b.1797). Gilbert (18th/19th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children included: Gilbert (b.1807); Mary Elizabeth (b.1811); and Frederick William (b.1812). It is unclear how he is related to other Gilberts. Gilbert (b.1809) born in Ashkirk Parish, son of Jesse and Margaret Smith, he was a millwright in Hawick. He was listed as a journeyman millwright on Melgund Place in 1841, by 1851 was a millwright at the Coach House on Langlands Place in Wilton, but in 1851 was still listed as a journeyman millwright at Langlands Place. In 1832 he married Cecily (or Cecilia) Robson (b.c.1811) and their children included: Walter (b.1834); Helen (b.1837); George (b.c.1839); and Margaret (b.1841). Lt.-Col. Gilbert (1826–65) 5th and youngest son of Gilbert Elliot-Murray-Kynynmoung, 2nd Earl of Minto. He served with the Rifle Brigade. In 1858 he married Katherine Anne, daughter of Rev. Dr. Gilbert, Bishop of Chichester. Gilbert John of Brugh (1864–1945) 2nd son of Rev. William of Hereford, from whom he succeeded as head of the Elliots of Brugh. He married Bessie Clark Davidson in 1895 and their children were Air Chief Marsh. Sir William and Brig. James. Grizel (17th C.) only child of Simon 'in Philhope'. She was the heiress of the lands at Philhope (in the Borthwick). When her father died she was given as ward to Robert of Falnash, and later (sometime before 1644) married his son John. In 1642 she was served heir to her great-grandfather Simon of Philhope in the 10-pound land of Philhope. In 1644, with the consent of her husband, she resigned half the lands of Philhope to her mother Elizabeth Chisholme and step-father Archibald in Philhope. Rev. Harold 'Harry of Peebles' (c.1611–53) recorded as 'Hairie Ellot' and also 'Henry Eliott'. He was son of William of Peebles, and grandson of Gavin of Brugh (near Dodburn). He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1631, taught for a while in Jedburgh, was presented to Bedrule Parish in late 1639 and ordained there in 1640. He replaced Henry Pearson, who was ousted for his connections to Episcopalianism. However, he was himself ousted from his position in 1649 for being on the side of the King. He may have remained in Bedrule until his death about 4 years later, and 'lived in a most dejected and miserable and cast down tradition'. After that the church of Bedrule was vacant for another 5 years. He married Elizabeth Douglas and also earlier Helen MacGhie (daughter of John of Balmaghie) and had at least 3 children. In 1650 he had a discharge of a debt with Robert Pringle, 'tutor' to Will Bennet of Grubet. It is recorded in 1662 that Elizabeth Douglas and 7 fatherless children petitioned Parliament, claiming persecution (presumably for not supporting the Covenants) of her husband and family for publicly supporting his Majesty's interests, for example during the expedition of 1648, and that he had been forced out of his charge, and they had lived from hand to mouth since then. They were allowed £100 out of vacant stipends (although 10 years later she had received none of it). His children include Christian, John (possibly son of his first wife, who married Elizabeth Fithie) and Adam (who may have been a minister in London). John's elder son was Thomas, who was Solicitor to the Prince of Wales, and his elder son was Sir John of Peebles (d.1786), who lived in London and was a famous physician. Hector (16th/17th C.) appeared before the Judiciary Court in Dumfries in 1622. He was recorded being 'in Rig', so that he might have been related to the Elliots of Rig; however, it seems likely to be a different Rig. Hector (18th C.) lived at Southdean, where he married Christian Oliver in 1736. Their children included: Robert (b.1738); John (b.1740); and Mary (b.1741). Hector (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. He is surely related to the earlier Hector, as well as Robert from the same parish, whose children were born about a decade later. His children included: William (b.1753); Susan (b.1754); and Christian (b.1756). Helen 'the Wutch' (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 being 'callit the Witche, in Jedburgh', among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. It was quite unusual for women to be named as criminals in this way, and she is one of only 2 such names on this particular list. It is unclear if her supposed crime was witchcraft or if this was just a nickname. Helen of Binks (b.1796) daughter of John, she was known as 'the White Rose o Liddesdale' and married Archibald Blake in Liverpool in 1820. Henry (16th C.) recorded among a large list of men of Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5, with the Lord of Liddesdale and Captain of Hermitage being fined. He was probably related to some of the others Elliots who were listed. Henry (15th/16th C.) recorded as witness to a document of 1520 for George Ker of Auld Roxburgh, done at Fairnilee. Henry (17th C.) recorded as 'Harie Elliot, son-in-law' when he was overseer of William Elliot of Binks in 1665. Assuming that the date is correct, it is inclear who he might have been. Henry (17th C.) resident of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Henry (d.bef. 1715) farmer at 'Sorbey-trees' (i.e. Sorbietrees) near Newcastleton. In 1715 Henry Elliot of Bells in Northumberland and John Elliot of Larriston in Roxburghshire were appointed 'tutors' for his children Jane, Elizabeth, Margaret, Gilbert, Christine, Henry and Adam. Based on the names and the date, it seems this may be the same man as Henry of Lodgegill. Henry 'Harry' (17th/18th C.) 2nd (or 3rd) Laird of Harwood, son of William and grandson of Simon of the Binks. His father left him the lands of Harwood, Tythehouse and Appotside. He built a new house at Harwood and also purchased Chapelknowe in 1675. He paid the land tax in Hobkirk Parish in 1678. He was Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1678 and 1690. He is mentioned by Scott of Satchells, along with his brother (John of Binks): 'But now to Henry of Hare-wood I mind for to skip, And to his Brother John, and John of Thorslee-hope'. He is recorded in 1676 as 'Harie Elliott' when he was cautioner to a 'letter of horning' against William Elliot of Philhope, brought by Walter Scott, called 'Westport'. He witnessed Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs 'bond of provision' in 1677. In 1681 he was a witness for a bond between Walter Lorraine and Walter Scott in Wauchope. He is recorded in a bond of 1683 with Robert, Lord Jedburgh, with Simon Elliot of Swinside as cautioner, and in 1688 he was a cautioner for Gilbert Eliott of Stonedge. He also feued the lands of 'Caephope and Calahope' from Sir John Scott of Ancrum in 1692. He had a bond with William Elliot of Bewlie in 1692, another in 1694 with John Kerr of Cavers, and one in 1696 with Rev. John Goudie of Sprouston. He appears to have paid off some of Gilbert Eliott of Stonedge's debts in the mid-1690s. He was the Laird of Harwood in 1694 when the tax on 7 hearths was paid on 'Harits hous and office houses'. In 1694 he purchased Fairnielees for his eldest son William, reserving liferent for himself. However, in 1699 he gave up the liferent on the condition that William paid off some of his debts and provided for the 2 youngest sons, John and Henry. He married Mary, daughter of John Scott of Dryhope and had at least 6 children. He had 3 sons who married sisters, all of them daughters of the Laird of Todrig, Walter Scott: William (who succeeded) married Jean; John married Nelly; and Henry of Peel married Elizabeth. He had another son, Walter of Ormiston, who is said to have married the eldest daughter of Andrew Kerr of Lindean. He also had a daughter Elizabeth, who married Robert Elliot, 2nd Laird of Midlem Mill, and another daughter Anne (or Anna) who married William Currer, tenant in Hyndhope. In 1699 he gave his eldest son William the lands of Harwood, Appotside and Tythehouse in agreement for paying his debts and granting him a yearly allowance (the implication is that he was infirm by this time, his son already being mentioned in all the documents relating to Harwood for several years previously). The dates of his birth and death are unknown, but he was certainly alive in 1701, and in 1707 his heir William was still described as 'younger of Harwood'. Henry of Lodgegill (1672–1714) 2nd son of John of Thorlieshope, Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. His brothers were John of the Binks and William of Thorlieshope. He succeeded his father in Hudshouse. In 1708 he had a Crown Charter of the lands of Lodgegill in Ewesdale (part of what had been known as Black Tarras), this being settled on him by his brother William, after Simon of Lodgegill became bankrupt. He was 'of Tarras' when listed as one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1708. He married Margaret (1680–1768), daughter of Robert Elliot of Midlem Mill; she survived him for more than 50 years. Their children were: William of Lodgegill, who married Jane, daughter of William Elliot of Harwood-on-Rule; John and Robert, who probably died young; Adam in Flatt, who married Elizabeth Elliot of Sorbietrees; Margaret, who married Charles, brother of Scott of Gorrenberry; Catherine, who married Edmund Atchison in Mosspeeble; Elizabeth, who married Robert Scott in Singlie; Jean, who married John Armstrong in Sorbie; and Henry (1712–94), who farmed at Flatt and married Janet Little. Henry (17th/18th C.) son of William of Penchrise and Bessie Grieve, he was tenant in Riccarton. He married Isobel, daughter of John Elliot in Dinlees, and sister of John in Park (mentioned in 1730). Their children included: William, a baker in Hawick; Catherine, married Thomas Armstrong of Riccarton Mill; and Jean. Henry of Peel (17th/18th C.) son of Henry of Harwood and Mary Scott of Dryhope. He may be the Henry 'in Hudshouse' recorded as one of the witnesses to the 1700 marriage contract between William Elliot of Harwood (his brother) and Jean, daughter of Walter Scott of Todrig. He was tenant farmer at Bells in Northumberland and was later at Deadwater. He purchased the lands of Peel (which had been called Baxtonlees) from his cousins (heirs of his uncle John Elliot) sometime after 1731. He was a tenant at Deadwater; one story is recounted (in 'Beauties of the Border') where after a harsh winter he reported to the Duke of Northumberland that unlike on the neighbouring farms he instructed his shepherds not to skin any of the dead sheep until the warm weather came, 'when, to my great joy, the most part of them came to life again!'. He is said to have been well known as a 'toper', with his standing toast being 'Here's to all Elliots and Elliots' bairns, And them that lie in the Elliots' airms'. He married Elizabeth Scott of Todrig (probably the sister of 2 of his brothers' wives). He had many children, but only 3 are recorded: Henry of Peel, who married Jean, daughter of John Elliot of the Binks and sold Peel; Walter (d.1741), surgeon on H.M.S. Wager, who died following a shipwreck off Patagonia; and William, who was a Captain and tenant in Rowanburnfoot. Either he or his son could be the 'Laird of Peel Fell' who entertained his neighbours to cheer on Prince Charlie when his army passed in 1745. Henry (1700–84) Laird of Harwood, successor to William. In 1731 he signed the marriage contract of William Elliot of Lodgegill and Jean Elliot of Harwood (this being before he succeeded to Harwood). He did not get along with his father, particularly after much of Harwood was let for an extended period to the Pott brothers. He appealed to the Court of Session about his father's behaviour and finally managed the estate for his father's trustees. He was keen to improve the lands, in particular to enclose the fields, but he cared nothing for antiquities, and had all the old buildings pulled down (including the old town of Harwood). He did, however, build an edifice thatched with heather ('Elliot's Folly') on a small hill, from which he could watch his workers. He paid the window tax in Hobkirk Parish in 1748 and his estate was valued at £1833 6s 8d in the 1740s. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He was said to be a good-looking, broad-shouldered youth and stood over 6 feet tall. His normal dress was a three-cocked hat, a long coat, top-boots and a huge necktie, which was wrapped thrice round his neck. In his old age he became quite deaf and then blind, but kept up an interest in the estate; he was led about by an Elliot who lived at Hasliehirst and became known as 'Blinnd Harrot'. Born at Harwood, he lived on the estate all his life and also dropped down dead there in the garden, aged 84, and was buried in Hobkirk churchyard. He never married and was succeeded by his nephew William; the succession was set out in a 'deed of tailzie' in 1769, and formalised in a disposition of 1783. Henry (18th C.) younger son of John, farmer in Cooms. He farmed at Sorbietrees. It is unclear if he was related to the earlier Henry in Sorbietrees. He married Christian Scott, from Falnash. Their children were: William in Sorbietres; Catherine; and Elizabeth, who married Adam Elliot in Flatt. Henry (1712–91) younger son of Henry of Lodgegill, he was farmer at Flatt. He is probably the 'Henry Eliot in Flatt' who paid the window tax in Castleton Parish in 1748. He was recorded at Flatt on the 1785–91 Horse Tax Rolls. He served as an executor for Henry of Peel, who died in 1780. In 1786 he subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author. He was a witness in 1788 at the court proceedings to establish Maj.-Gen. William Elliot as head of the clan. Also in 1788 he was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire, specifically under 'Votes of Mr. Thomas Waugh'. He married Janet Little (c.1730–99). Their children were: Margaret (b.1760), who died young; Catherine (b.1762), who married Dr. Andrew Graham from Dalkeith, probably related to Dr. Walter Graham of Hawick; Henry (1763–93), who died unmarried; and John (1769–1823), who married Jean Scott and farmed at Flatt. Henry of Peel (d.1780) son of Henry of Peel and Elizabeth Scott from Todrig. He paid the window tax in Castleton Parish in 1748 and his lands of Baxtonlees were valued at £160 in the 1740s. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He sold Peel, and afterwards farmed at Rowanburnfoot in Dumfriesshire. He married Jean, daughter of John Elliot of Binks. Their children included:

Jean, William and Thomas, who all died unmarried; Capt. John (d.1782) of the 28th Foot Regiment, died at St. Kitts; George (c.1753–1807), who had a lumber business in North Carolina; Col. Henry of the Royal Marines, who emigrated to Canada; and Catherine, who married Joseph Jackson in Harlaw Mill. His executors were: his brother Capt. William; Henry in Flatt; John of Binks; advocate Adam Ogilvie; Cornelius Elliot, W.S.; Lieut. John; Robert, brother of Henry of Harwood; and John in Burnmouth. His will is recorded in the Commissariot of Dumfries in 1785 and 1790; he is described as 'late of Peil, thereafter tenant in Rowanburnfoot'. Henry (1731–90) son of William of Tarras, he was tenant in Dinlees. He is recorded at Dinlees in 1791 when he subscribed to John Learmont's book of poetry. Henry (b.c.1740) son of William of Bush and Binks. He was tenant farmer in Stanniswater, Westerkirk. He married Jean Laidlaw from Gorrenberry and their children included: Henry, who died young; William in Stanniswater (b.1774), who moved to Fauldshope; Margaret (c.1776–1842), who married Walter Anderson of Broom; and Catherine, who married James Graham at Irving. Maj.-Gen. Henry of Rosebank, Kelso (1763–1841) younger son of Robert of Harwood. He was a member of the Jedforest Club. He was served as heir of provision to his uncle Henry of Harwood in 1787. He married Jean (or Janet, 1780–1863), daughter of Rev. Dr. Thomas Somerville. He died without issue. Henry (c.1765–1860) tenant at West Fodderlee and Westerhouses. He could be the son of William, shepherd in Templehallshiels, born in Hobkirk Parish in 1764. He was at West Fodderlee in 1841. In 1851 he was a widower at Westerhouses, farming 200 arable acres and 870 acres of moor and pasture, employing 13 people. He married Robina Burnett (c.1722–1844) in Roberton Parish in 1790. Their children included: William (b.1790), baptised in Roberton; James (b.1794), baptised in Yarrow; Henry (1802–73), baptised in Yarrow, tenant at Greenriver; and Robert (1805–45), baptised in Roberton. He died at Westerhouses. Henry (1769–1841) son of Capt. Robert and Elizabeth Pringle. He became an ensign in the 70th Regiment, serving in Ireland and the West Indies. He was then an officer with the 60th and 96th Regiments, and ended up as Lieut.-Col. He retired from the Army and settle at Rosebank, near Kelso. He became a member of the Jedforest Club and was the chairman at the 1834 dinner when refusal to toast the sitting M.P. led to most of the Whigs to leave the club. He married Janet, daughter of Rev. Dr. Somerville of Jedburgh. He died at Rosebank, Kelso, and is buried in Jedburgh Kirkyard. Henry (b.c.1770) servant at Penchrise according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. Henry (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Robina Burnet and their son Robert was baptised in 1805. Henry (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. It is unclear how he was related to other contemporary Elliots. He may be the Henry who was a servant at Wauchope on the ballot for the Militia in 1801. His children included: Henry (b.1812); Betty (b.1815); an unnamed child (b.1817); and Robert (b.1819). Henry (1792–1874) son of William in Dinlees. He was a tenant farmer in Colterscleuch and Dinlees. He leased Colterscleuch in 1816 and gave up the lease of Dinlees in 1842. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He was listed at Colterscleuch in 1841 and in 1851 and 1861 was farmer of 1700 acres there, employing 5 labourers. He was still listed there in 1868. He married Janet (b.1793), daughter of Walter Elliot in Hermitage. Their children (baptised in Cavers and Castleton Parishes) included: William (b.1813), tenant in Colterscleuch; Janet (b.1815); Helen (b.1815), twin of Janet; William (again, 1817–98) tenant in Colterscleuch; Agnes (b.1820); Agnes (again, b.1823); Margaret (1825–1905); Betsy (b.c.1829); Walter (1827–49); Esther (1833–56); Mary (b.c.1835) and Joanna (1837–1920), who married John Harrison, and had children who later farmed at Colterscleuch. He is buried at Castleton. Henry (1793–1818) eldest son of John, tenant in Flatt, he was born in Castleton Parish. He had a son William (b.1817) in Cumberland with Esther Glendinning of Newcastleton. He died in Jamaica Henry (1802–73) son of Henry, farmer at West Fodderlee and Westerhouses. He was born at Rawflat and baptised in Yarrow Parish. He was tenant of Greenriver (i.e. Hobsburn). In the 1830s he farmed at West Fodderlee, and at Gatehousecote in the 1840s. In the flood of 1846 he lost 28 sheep from the lands he farmed at Weens Haugh. In 1851 he was at Gatehousecote, farming 1300 acres of pasture and employing 35 people. By 1861 he was at Greenriver, as farmer of 4300 acres, employing 30 labourers. He lived there for the rest of his life. He also ran the various farms of the Abbotrule estate for the 4 Henderson brothers. He also had the farms of Dalgleish, Westerhouses (where he was recorded in a directory of 1868) and Dykeraw. Additionally he ran the financial arrangements for Charles Scott, who farmed at Tythehouse and Dykeraw. He is said to have been a good judge of cattle and familiar at Newcastle market. He always carried a lucky half-crown in his pocket, which was worn down to a blank piece of silver by the time of this death. He married Agnes Taylor in 1833 and she died in 1878, aged 71. Their children included: John (1831–78), a surgeon in Calcutta; Janet (b.1833), who died in infancy; Janet (1835–48); Robina (1836–1907), who married Peter Pennycook of New Hall in 1855; Agnes (1837–1906), who married William Scott and died in Edinburgh; Henry (1839–91), who succeded on the farms; Jane (1840–56); Margaret (b.1843), who died young; and Margaret (again, 1851–83). He is buried in Hobkirk churchyard. Sir Henry George (1817–1907) 2nd son of Gilbert Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound, 2nd Earl of Minto. He had a career in the Diplomatic Service, holding posts in many capitals of Europe, ending as Ambassador in Vienna 1877–84. He married Anne, daughter of Sir Edmund Antrobus. Their children were Gertrude (who died unmarried) and Sir Francis Edmund Hugh. Henry (b.c.1819) son of James, farmer at Lymiecleuch. In 1851 he was listed as head of the family, with the 3700 acre farm of Lymiecleuch held in trust for his siblings Scott, William, Walter, Mary and Janet. Henry (b.1821–63) son of Thomas and Helen Scott. In 1851 he was farmer of 'a large store farm' employing 9 labourers at Kirndean. He lived with his sisters Ann and Christian. In 1861 he was farmer at Lanton in Jedburgh Parish, where he died. Henry (b.1823/4) from Canonbie, he was a baker in Newcastleton. In 1861 he was at about 46 North Hermitage Street. His wife was Ann and their children included Robert, John, William and Helen. Henry Erskine (b.1829/30) joiner in Newcastleton. In 1851 he was journeyman carpenter with James Douglas in Newcastleton, and listed there as 'Cousin's Son'. He was living at about 6 Langholm Street in 1861, and employing 7 men. In 1859 he married Elizabeth, daughter of John Scott and Isabel Grieve. Their children included: James Douglas (b.c.1860); Beatrice Cavers (b.1861); Isabella (b.1863); William Thomas (b.1866); and Jane (b.1868). Henry (1839–91) son of Henry, from whom he took over as farmer at Greenriver in Rulewater. Shortly after his mother's death in 1878 he became ill himself, eventually becoming paralysed. He was looked after by his sister Robina Pennycook and the farm was run by his nephew James Lindsay Oliver. Herman F. (1854–95) 4th son of Sir Walter of Wolfelee. He was born in India, was educated at Harrow and joined the Black Watch, rising to the rank of Major. He was apparently very stout. He was decorated in Egypt and the Sudan and died in Mauritius. Hugh (14th C.) son of William 'Eliot of Upton in ye Clay'. He was pardoned in 1333 by Edward III for the death of Thomas 'Coppille of Hedon', on account of his service at the siege of Berwick. Hugh (17th C.) witnessed a baptism for John 'Bleak' in Hawick in 1639. This was along with William, who may have been related. He is also described as 'Hew Ellot, smith' when he was a witness in a Hawick Magistrates Court case of 1642. 'John Ellot, wag' was also a witness, so may have been his brother or other relation. He is probably the Hugh, married to Margaret Dickson, whose children born in Hawick included Helen (b.1640), William (b.1643) and Hugh (b.1644). Hugh (17th C.) recorded as 'Hewgo Ellot, smith' in 1685 when he was fined by the Hawick Magistrates for throwing off Adam Young's bonnet in the church, to which Adam Young retaliated and was also fined; Adam was also a smith, so this may have been a professional rivalry. He is probably the Hugh, son of Hugh and Margaret Dickson, who was born in Hawick in 1644. He was listed as a smith in 1685 when he witnessed a baptism for James Aitchison in 1685 (along with Lancelot Aitchison, who lived at Newmill), in 1687 when he witnessed a baptism for James Davidson and another for James Atkinson in 1687. He is probably the 'Hew Eliott, smythe in Newmylnes, in Slittrig' in 1672 when he was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick, gratis, 'by the importunity of ane person of quality'. Hugh (1752–1830) 2nd son of Sir Gilbert, 3rd Baronet of Minto. He was brother of the 1st Earl of Minto. He was educated along with his elder brother and the pair were mentored by David Hume. He attended Oxford University and finished his military training at Metz. He fought with the Russian Army and then became a British diplomat in Bavaria before being appointed Ambassador to Prussia. In 1780 he married his first wife, Charlotte von Kraut and fought a duel with her lover (a scandal that, it is said, followed him for the rest of his life). After he moved to Copenhagen he abducted his daughter Isabella from his wife's influence in Berlin, and the couple divorced. He then served in Dresden and Naples and was Governor of the Leeward Islands 1809–14. He was a strong abolitionist and was reported to be the force behind the conviction of a man for the murder of a slave in the British Virgin Islands. In the period 1814–20 he served as Governor of Madras. He secondly married Margaret Jones, after whom Lady Elliot Island in Queensland was named. His children were: Isabella (d.1826), who married George Payne; Theodore Henry (d.1842); Emma (d.1866), who married Sir Thomas Hislop; Edward Francis (1796–1866); Caroline; Harriet Agnes; Gilbert (1800–91), Dean of Bristol; Adm. Sir Charles (1801–75), who was Governor of Bermuda, of Trinidad and of St. Helena; Hugh Maximillian (1802–26); and Sir Thomas Frederick (1808–80). He died in London and was buried in Westminster Abbey. Ingram (15th C.) recorded among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He was listed after Edmund and before Martin, who he may have been closely related to. Ingram (15th/16th C.) given a dispensation to marry, within the usually prohibted bounds of consanguinity (in the 4th degree), with Elizabeth Scott. This was granted by the Archdeacon of Teviotdale and recorded in Selkirk. The witnesses included Thomas and Alexander Scott. Ingram (16th C.) recorded in 1541 when he was accused of having been on a raid on Bewcastle in which Englishman 'John Makrobyn' was killed. His brother Adie was also listed, as well as Airchie. Isabel (17th C.) resident of Castleton Parish (probably at Yethouse) according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. John, who was listed before her must have been closely related. Isabella (19th C.) listed as grocer and spirit dealer in Newcastleton in Slater's 1852 directory. She could be the Isabella from Nicol Forest in Cumberland, who was listed in 1851 at about 7 Douglas Square, with her daughters Agnes and Violet; she was wife of shepherd William. James (15th C.) listed along with Laurence, Simon and John Elwald, as well as Robert Turnbull and Robert Dalgleish, when they were said to be rebels captured by Patrick Dickson, Bailie of Peebles, in 1482/3. His name was listed first, and so he was presumably head of some Borders branch. For his service Dickson received a grant from the King for the following 19 years. He is probably the 'Jacobi elwald' recorded at the Justice-aire in Peebles in 1498 when Thomas Middlemas had remission for resetting him after he and his accomplices had burned a 'pele in bothil'. James (15th C.) recorded in the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493. Thomas Brown in Minto and George Davidson in Raperlaw were given remission for several crimes, including helping him in thefts occurring before the date of their existing remission. Probably the same James was mentioned in 1494/5 when Adam Turnbull in Hornshole had remission for several crimes, including stealing livestock from Synton, with his help. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Elliots. James (d.bef. 1503) mentioned in sasine in Edinburgh in 1503. His name appears as 'Jacobi Elwald'. James (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'Jacobus elwald' in Whitmuir in 1502, along with William Ker (in the same place) and Alexander Gray in Greenbank, when they had remission for the murder of John Ford in Selkirk. The same men also had remission for resetting the sons of William (called 'Hob the King' and 'Dand the Man') and stealing from Fairnington, with James Ker acting as surety. Also in 1502, along with John Lauder and Janet Ker, he had 7 cows stolen from him from Whitmuir, with Adam Turnbull in Hornshole being given remission for the theft. Perhaps the same James 'Elwand' was recorded in 1514 when he was a witness to George Ker appointing Thomas Ker as Archdeacon of Glasgow. James (d.1526) recorded as 'James Elwald' when he was convicted and hanged in Edinburgh for his part in the Battle of Skirmish Field. This was an event where Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, along with other Scotts, Elliots and their followers tried to wrest control of the young James V from the Earl of Angus, this being part of ongoing power struggles within Scotland. His crimes also included 'common Theft and Reset of theft'. However, it seems clear that he was simply a scapegoat, being probably the most important Elliot that was captured (perhaps a son of Robert of Redheugh, for example). He could be the 'Jacobi Elwald' recorded in 1535 when 'Georgii Elwald' had a remission from the crime of associating with him. James (16th C.) entered in 1537/8 for crimes along with his brother Simon 'Elwald' and William in Leahaugh, with sureties being Robert of Redheugh and his brother Archibald. They were accused of breaking open the shop of Thomas Graham in Selkirk. How he was related to other Elliots is unclear. James (16th C.) tenant in Skelfhill in 1569 when he was listed in a bond of security signed in Hawick. He may have been related to 'Gawin Ellott in Skelfhill' (later of Stobs) who was the proprietor of the lands. His name is listed as 'Jame Ellot in Skelshill'. James (16th C.) recorded in Yair in 1579 when he loaned money to John Gray in Lindean. The transaction was done in Selkirk and Thomas in Yair was one of the witnesses. In 1580 Gray confessed that he owed him more for the crops they had jointly sown at Lindean. In 1581 he paid the same John Gray £40 and was assigned half his grain; Archibald in Yair was a witness. James 'Jamie' (16th C.) listed among men accused of raiding Harwood on Teviot in 1581/2. He was brother of 'Rowans Hobbe'. They were declared rebels after not appearing to answer the charge. James 'Jamie' of the Park (16th C.) recorded having a pledge before the Privy Council in 1573. He was also recorded in 1583 in a list of Elliots compiled by the English wardens. He must have been related to Jock Elliot of the Park, and may also have been descended from Simon. He was surely related to 'James Rowe of the Park' recorded in 1581. He is probably the James of the Park for whom there was surety before the Privy Council in 1573. However, there may be 2 men here, since in 1573 James of the Park was deceased when his son Hob was interchanged with John of the Park as ward with Sir William Scott of Balwearie. His son Hob was also recorded in a pledge by Border Lairds in 1578. He may be the 'James Ellott of the Park' listed in 1586 when his superior Robert of Redheugh was instructed to enter him in court; Simon of the Park is listed just before him and Robert of the Park just after him, hence presumably close relatives. James 'Dobson' (16th C.) tenant in Whitehillbrae. He was recorded in 1574 as 'James Ellott alias Dobsoun thair', after Archie in 'Quheittilbray', among men who had been ordered to be removed from the lands of Robert of Redheugh. He may have been related to other man of this area who were also listed, e.g. the Elliots in Priesthaugh and 'Vicar's Hob'. It is unclear what his nickname meant. James 'Grey Will's Jamie' (16th C.) recorded in 1578 as 'Jame Ellot, sone to Gray Will Ellot. He was listed among Border Lairds who had been released from ward (in his case with George Crawford of 'Lefnoreis') and directed to meet again to promise to suppress lawlessness on the Border. In 1583 he is recorded as 'Jeme Ellot called gray Wills Jeme' when listed among the Elliots of Park (separately from Jamie of the Park). He was presumably son of 'Grey Willie'. James 'the Gyde' (16th C.) recorded as 'James Ellott, called the Gyde' in 1586 when his superior Robert of Redheugh was instructed to enter him in court. He was presumably related to John who was recorded at about the same time with the same nickname (or else 'James' was an error for 'John'). James (16th C.) recorded in 1586 being 'of the Steill' when Robert of Redheugh was instructed to enter him in court. He is presumably related to other Elliots of the Steele. James 'Jamie' of Millburnholm (16th C.) recorded in 1587/8 when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots. His name was listed as 'Jame of Milbourne home', and seems highly likely to have been an Elliot, perhaps the same as one of the other Jameses. James (16th C.) son of William of Mosspartickhope. In 1587/8 he is recorded being warded with the Laird of Balmuto (John Boswell); however, he 'eshaipit and eschewit' and his pledge was charged to appear before the Privy Council. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James 'Airchie's Jamie' (16th C.) listed among men accused in 1590 of raiding Middleton Hall in England in the previous year. He was named as 'Arches Jamye' along with 'Gib Ellott son to Robin', 2 servants of Robert of Redheugh and others who were accused of stealing horses. James of the Binks (16th C.) recorded in 1590 among Elliots of the Steele, the Park, and others, when complained about for a raid into England. On a later record of the same case he is 'of the Byrks', so there could be confusion over where he was from. In 1590 he was 'of the Bynckes' when accused of stealing a gelding and furniture from Englishmen John Heron and Henry Charlton. It is unclear how he might have been related to later Elliots of Binks. James (16th C.) recorded as 'Martin's man' in 1590 when he was on a list of men, including Martin's Airchie, the elder and younger Will of the Steele, Airchie 'Cowfowle' and 2 Shiels, accused of stealing from 'Dotland' a couple of years earlier. He was presumably a servant of Martin of Braidlie, and could be the same as one of the other Jameses. James see James Eliott. James of the Hill (16th/17th C.) brother of Airchie of the Hill. He is listed among a large group of Elliots and others who were accused in 1590 of taking Ralph Hall and others prisoner and ransoming them. He was additionally listed in 1590 along with Airchie of the Hill among a group accused of taking livestock, goods and prisoners from the Pott's of Carrick, and along with his brother Archie of the Hill among a group accused of rieving from 'Borne' in Redesdale. He was 'James on the hill', also in 1590, when named first along with Anthony of the Binks, James 'Half Lug', Hobbie 'the Tailor' and 60 others, accused of raiding 'Windgates', taking more than 100 cows and 4 horses, slaying George Hume, leaving 6 or 7 men near death and robbing 5 houses. He was also listed as brother of Airchie of the Hill among Elliots, Armstrongs, Turnbulls, Laidlaws and Croziers, accused in 1590 of rieving from the Laird of 'Troghwen' and Hedley of 'Garret Sheills'. In 1591 he was part of a group (along with his brother Airchie of the Hill) accused of plundering from Jeffrey Tailor and the tenants of Scaleby. Probably the same man is listed along with John and Mark of the Hill among men of Liddesdale and upper Teviotdale accused of raids into England in 1595. James 'Tod' (16th/17th C.) recorded as being 'alias 'todde' ' in 1596 when he was among men complained about for a raid on 'Allergarthe' in England, along with Willie and Geordie 'Kange'. He was also 'Jamy Ellott 'todde' ' when accused of raiding 'Dormontstead' in the same year. James (16th/17th C.) merchant in Selkirk. He was recorded in 1629 as brother of William, who was a Bailie there. James (17th C.) possessor of the farm of Clintwood in Liddesdale in 1632. It is unclear if he was related to the earlier Archibald in Clintwood. James (17th C.) son of John 'wag (soldier) in Hawick' recorded in 1642. He was named as one of the men accused of stealing the wallet of the servant of the Laird of Cavers in Hawick. He gave evidence, saying that he never saw the wallet. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Margaret Davidson and their children included: William (b.1650); Jean (b.1652); and Archibald (b.1655). James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His wife was Bessie Knox and their son James was born in 1651. The witnesses were William Mark and Robert Mathieson. Perhaps the same James witnessed a baptism for Thomas Mark in 1651. James (17th C.) tenant in Snaberlee, one of the executors or overseers for William Elliot of Binks in the mid-1660s. James (17th C.) recorded being 'of Bridgheuche' in a set of deeds in 1673. This is probably the Bridgehaugh in Selkirk (rather than the Bridgehouse in Liddesdale, where there were also Elliots). He was a Bailie in Selkirk. Capt. Walter Scott of Satchells mentions him in his 'post'ral' in 1688: 'If James Elliot late of Bridgeheugh be a Gentleman, Then William Elliot of Bewlie must needs be one; For their Grandsirs were two Brothersons, Though in Occupation there was difference, The one a Magistrat in Selkirk Town, The other kept the Sheep upon the Doun'. Satchells says he knew him personally, and suggests that he was not charitable to the poor: 'He was still ready to take, but never to give'. Given these connections with the Elliots of Bewlie and Horsleyhill, he was probably a cousin of William, 1st of Borthwickbrae, and likely the one said not to be such a good farmer. James (17th C.) resident of Ormiston on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It is unclear if he is connected to the later Elliots of Ormiston. He could be the same as the James who was later in Hummelknowe Mill. James (17th C.) recorded as resident at Byreholm in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) listed as tenant at 'bour' (possibly near Bower Rig) in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He paid tax on 2 hearths, since he was tenant 'wt an kilne'. James (17th C.) resident of Firth in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. James (17th/18th C.) tenant in Hummelknowe Mill. In 1700 he witnessed a baptism for merchant Thomas Howison, along with Robert Huntly in Ormiston. His children probably (with no mother's name give) included: Marion (b.1698); Jean (b.1700); Janet (b.1702); Martin (b.1707); Isabel (b.1709); James (b.1710); John (b.1715); Walter (b.1718); and an unnamed child (b.1719). James (17th/18th C.) tenant in Bowanhill. In 1723 he halved the lease of the farm with Archibald Elliot. In 1725 it is recorded that he was 'trysted with a long continued sickness'. Isobel Beattie was assisting him, which she used as an excuse to postpone appearing to be publicly rebuked in Hawick. James (18th C.) shepherd in Stobicote. His son James was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1733; this could be the James who married Betty Goodfellow and lived at Newcastleton. James (18th C.) younger son of William of Penchrise and Janet Elliot. He was tenant in Millholm in Castleton Parish. He had a son, who was also James, and who died without children. James (18th C.) tenant at Meikle Whitlaw, recorded in 1753. He was probably son of Robert of Larriston, and brother of Robert who was a senior clerk at the Pay Office in London. Helen, who married Rulewater joiner Walter Amos, may have been his sister. He died unmarried. James (18th C.) recorded as being 'Fenwick' in 1758 when his daughter Magdalene was baptised in Hawick Parish. Gavin was witness to the baptism, this presumably being the Gavin who was known as last Elliot of Fenwick. He may have been brother of Gavin and another son of Robert of Fenwick. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Young. Their children included: John (b.1760); and Charles (b.1764). James (18th C.) son of James in Millholm and descended from the Elliots of Unthank. He was 'in Castleton' (although it us unclear whether he was tenant in the farm of Castleton, or just lived in the Parish). He died without issue. James (18th C.) recorded being 'in Harrotknow' (i.e. Harwoodknowe) in 1760 when his son Robert was baptised in Hobkirk Parish. He must have been related to John in the same place, who had children baptised in 1775 and 1780. James (b.1728) resident of Roberton Parish. He was recorded at Milsington in 1756. He married Margaret Scott in 1753 and their children included: John (1754–1817); Margaret (b.1756); William (b.1757); Francis (b.1758); Andrew (b.1760); James (1761–1850); and Betty (b.1768). James (1729/30–1819) tenant at Harwood-sike-foot and then Little Whitlaw. He was at Sykefoot in 1797 when he was taxed for having 2 farm horses and 2 non-working dogs. He married Christian Blyth, who died at Harwood-sike-foot in 1796, aged 61; she was daughter of John Blyth, Deacon of the shoemakers of Jedburgh, and his second wife, Janet Scott. Their children included; William (b.1764), who died in Jamaica; Janet (b.1766); John (b.1768); Isabella (b.1773), who married farmer John Angus; and Peggy (b.1776). The family are buried in St. Mary's Kirkyard. James (1733–94) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Elizabeth (or Betty, 1729–1817) Goodfellow in 1769, and they both died in Newcastleton. His children included: James (1762–1851), who married Christian Fletcher; probably Eupham; Elizabeth (b.1766); and Elspeth (b.1770). He could be the James, son of James, shepherd at Stobicote, born in Cavers Parish in 1733. James (18th C.) listed as innkeeper at 'Harrot' in 1791, when he paid the cart tax in Hawick Parish. He was probably based at Harwood-on-Teviot. James (c.1733–1816) son of John of Whithaugh and Margaret Scott. He was a shepherd in Twislehope. He married Elizabeth Jackson (c.1744–1806) Their children included: Rolland (c.1766–99), who married Katherine Little; Barbara (c.1774–92); and James (b.1783). James of Ormiston (1736–82) son of Walter of Ormiston. In 1772 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker John Oliver and Helen Currer. In 1778 he married Isabel Rule in in Hawick; she was presumably his 2nd wife and the couple were fined by Cavers Session in 1779 for their irregular marriage. An entry in the diary of James Sibbald for 1778 states 'Heard at the fair James Elliot of Ormiston was married to his own servant'. His children included: Simon (b.1770); James (b.1776); and Andrew (b.1777), who may have been shepherd at Cocklawfoot and emigrated. All 3 of these children were baptised in Cavers in 1778. It seems that his children were unable to inherit and hence Ormiston went to his sister Helen and her husband Thomas Currer. James (1748–1828) shepherd in Castleton Parish. His wife was Helen Elliot, who died in 1809 at Cleuchhead. They are easy to confuse with a contemporary Castleton couple with the same names. Their children probably included: William (b.1773); Isabel (b.1779); Jean (b.1781); James (b.1783); John (1785–1854), who married Helen Murray and emigrated to Westminster Township, Middlesex County, Ontario; and Walter (b.1787), who may be the Walter who lived at Dinleyhaughfoot. He died at Burngrains and is buried in Castleton. James (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. His wife was Helen Elliot. They are easy to confuse with a contemporary couple of the same names. He was recorded in Tweedenside in at least the period 1774–79. His children included: Isabel (b.1774); Adam (b.1777); and Helen (b.1779). Other children probably included: Helen (b.1775); Mary (b.1780); and Thomas (b.1791). James (18th C.) resident of Harwood in Hobkirk Parish. He had sons Charles (b.1784) and George (b.1786). James (b.c.1765) joiner in Newcastleton. He is listed among heads of households in 1835–41. In 1841 he was at about 3 Walter Street. James (b.1765) son of shoemaker Robert. In 1798 he married Janet Renwick, announced in Hawick and Cavers Parishes. His wife died in 1835. James (1769–1824) youngest son of William of Whithaugh. He was born in Castleton Parish and became a merchant in Hawick. He worked as a clerk for William Oliver 'Auld Cash', who was the most prominent general merchant and banker in Hawick at the time. He was listed in Oliver's 1808 will as 'my clerk, brother of John Elliot Esq of Whithaugh'. He is probably the merchant James who witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1799, 1801, 1805, 1806 and 1808 for Joseph Peacock and Jean Miller. He is probably the James, merchant in Hawick, who was declared bankrupt in 1815, and who was listed as 'late Merchant in Hawick' in 1824 when his outstanding debts were to be sold. James (1770–1855) son of Ninian. His mother's name is not given on the baptism record, but it seems likely it was Janet Douglas. He was a shepherd in the Teviothead area; most of his children were born at Sundhope. He is probably the shepherd at Sundhope recorded on the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. In 1798 he married Janet (1774/5–1843), daughter of John Grieve and Elizabeth Paisley; she died at Broadhaugh. Their children included:

Ninian (1799–1885), who died in Ontario; Elizabeth (b.1801); Janet (b.1803); John (b.1806), who died young; Jean (or Jane, b.1809), who married James Riddell, who lived at Lochburnfoot; John (again, b.1811), probably the carrier in Roberton; James (1814–80), who died at Northhouse; and William (b.1816). In 1851 he was a retired shepherd living with his daughter Jane. He died at Valesburn. James 'Jamie' (1772–1855) 3rd Laird of Wolfelee, younger son of Cornelius, the 2nd Laird, his brother William dying during their father's lifetime. He became Writer to the Signet in 1798. He was a member of the Whin club in Edinburgh, along with a dozen or so other lawyers. Trained in his father's Edinburgh law office, it is said he did not enjoy the sedentary job, but he did attend to much of his father's country business. However, from the early 1800s he improved the Wolfelee estate by planting trees and hedges, repaired dykes, cottages, etc. He was still 'junior of Woollee' listed along with his father as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. In 1810 he became a Major in the 1st Roxburghshire Volunteers. He was also 'younger of Woolee' in 1811 when recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh. He succeeded to the estate in 1821, and for a few years lived at Mackside; he also lived at Teviotbank, Fairnington and Stewartfield. He built the mansion at Wolfelee in 1825–27 (although probably retaining some of the previous house) and it was him who changed the name from 'Woollie' to 'Wolfelee'. He was a Justice of the Peace and in 1823 fined some shepherds for playing Hobkirk Baa on the wrong day. He took part in the Hawick celebrations for the Reform Bill in 1832. He was also a founder member of the Jedforest Club, but left after a political dispute in 1834. He was also one of the Magistrates of the county who were present in Hawick during the election troubles of 1837. He was living at Stewartfield in 1837. About 1849 he gave land for Wolfelee Free Kirk and Manse to be built. He had 12 children, many of whom were born at at Stewartfield (later called Hartrigge), near Jedburgh. Although personally attached to the Established Church, he gave land to establish a Free Church and manse. In 1799 he married Caroline, daughter of Walter Hunter of Polmood and Lady Caroline Mackenzie, and she died in 1824. In 1827 he secondly married Margaret, daughter of Robert Davidson of Pinnaclehill, Kelso, his cousin, who died in 1856 (and is buried in Kensal Green, London). His children were: William (who died in infancy); Sir Walter (1803–87), who succeeded; James Forbes (1807–41), a Lieutenant with the 5th Madras Infantry, who died in Nellore; Robert (1807–96), twin of James, who reached the age of 89; John Elphinstone (b.1810), Rector of Whalton, Morpeth, who married Georgina Bates of Milburn and changed his surname to Elliot-Bates; William Thomas (1812–90), who emigrated to Australia, where he died; George Mackenzie (1822–56), who also died in Australia; Charles (1824–88), Royal Artillery Colonel, who married Christina Ramsay of Balmain and later Mary, daughter of Henry Davidson of Muirhouse and the Archbishop of Canterbury's sister; Caroline (b.1805), who died at the age of 13; Elizabeth Margaret (d.1889), who died unmarried; Eleanor Mary (1815–1915), who married Herman Freyherr von Poellnitz and reached the age of 100; and another child (with his 2nd wife), who died young. He helped 2 of his sisters out of debt. He was known as a Liberal in politics. He was said to be still riding his horse into his eighties. Bailie James (18th/19th C.) Magistrate in Hawick in the early 1800s, both before and after 1810. He witnessed a baptisms for baker John Wilson and printer Robert Armstrong in 1809. He is probably the same as one of the contemporary Jameses. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Elizabeth Young and their children included: John (b.1796); Isabell (b.1798); Daniel (b.1800); James (b.1802); and Elizabeth (b.1804). James of Goldielands (1769–1848), son of shoemaker Adam and descended from the Elliots in Brugh, he became Schoolmaster in Wilton. He started in 1792, probably succeeding Robert Alexander; however, there is a record that someone else was paid to be Precentor, so presumably he did not teach church music. He wrote 'A Scripture Catechism, with references instead of answers', running to 4 editions (the last 3 being 1798, 1803 and 1808). He was involved with land measuring from at least 1797. He retired as Schoolmaster of Wilton in about 1810 and was replaced by James Turnbull. Around the same year he was put in charge of supervising the cutting that had to be done to create the Avenue leading to Wilton Lodge. He was overseer of works (or factor) for the Duke of Buccleuch, serving from about 1810 into at least the early 1840s, and living at Goldielands; he was there on the 1841 census. Baron Von Holbein lodged with him as a prisoner during the Napoleonic Wars and there was a letter from Lieut. G. de Tallard in 1814, thanking him and his family for their hospitality. He was recorded as 'Mr. Js.át Goldielands when his father died in 1815. He was a prominent Hawick Tory, taking an active part in local politics in the early 19th century. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825 and may be the 'J. Elliot, Hawick' who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. A letter to him from 1825, relating to the Duke of Buccleuch's share of the assessment for Ettrick Kirk is preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. He was also one of the founder members of the Wisp Club in 1826. He provided the minister with details of the agricultural state of Hawick Parish for the 1839 entry in the New Statistical Account. He married Agnes Pirrie (d.1840) in Wilton in 1794; it is suggested that she was born in 1758, but that is surely too early. All their children were baptised in Wilton Parish: Margaret (b.1795), the eldest daughter, who married John Wilson, 'the Dip'; Adam (b.1797), a medical doctor, who later lived at Goldielands; Agnes (1799–1863); William (b.1801), hosiery manufacturer; Helen or Nelly (b.1803); James (b.1805), mathematics and physics professor in Liverpool; and Robert (1807–88) of Laighwood, Dunkeld. Letters of his for the period 1810–37 are in the National Archives. His will in Jedburgh Sheriff Court Records is dated 1849. His portrait is in the Museum, painted by an unknown artist. James (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is presumably the same as another James. He could be the James recorded as driver in Newcastleton in 1835 or the other James recorded as joiner. James (18th/19th C.) recorded being 'with John Stratton' (i.e. currier John Straiton) in Hawick in 1797 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was listed as 'now Currier in Jedburgh' among men who were balloted in 1797, but 'absent accountable for'. It therefore seems that he did not serve in the Militia for some reason. James (b.1772) son of Thomas and Helen Douglas. He was recorded as a mason at 'Brough Shankfoot' on the ballots for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799 and 1801. His brother Walter was also on both lists, with another mason Robert on the list in 1801 (and hence perhaps another brother). James (b.c.1770s) nailer in Newcastleton according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. James (b.c.1780) servant at Flatt according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1801. James (18th/19th C.) blacksmith, probably in Castleton Parish. He married Janet Robson and their children included James (b.1818/9), who was an agricultural labourer in Newcastleton. His wife secondly married William Cowan, who she is recorded with in 1841. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Helen Glendinning and their children included: William (b.1827); John (b.1829); Thomas (b.1832); Adam (b.1834); and Jane (b.1837). James (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Bella Armstrong and their children included: Betty (b.1826); George (b.1828); and Janet (b.1831). These 3 were all baptised in 1835. His widow, son George and daughter Janet (or 'Jenny') were living at about 11 South Liddle Street in 1841. James of Cooms (18th/19th C.) recorded in the Land Tax Rolls in 1822. James (18th/19th C.) listed as shepherd at 'Waterside, Castleton' among heads of household in 1836–41. James (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Foulshiels in Castleton Parish. He is listed among male heads of households in 1835–40. He emigrated to America in about 1840. James (18th/19th C.) teacher at Hermitage School. He was listed there among heads of households in the Parish in 1835–38 and recorded in Pigot's 1837 directory. In 1841 the schoolhouse there was occupied by labourer Robert (and family), who may have been his son. James (b.1783/4) from England, he served with the 2nd Dragoon Guards. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer living at about 54 High Street with his wife Mary. In 1851 he was a lodger with the Bells on Turk's Close and recorded as a Chelsea Pensioner. In 1861 he was living with his daughter Agnes and her husband Thomas Crosbie. James 'Lymie' (c.1785–1850) farmer at Lymiecleuch. He may have been son of James, shepherd in Twislehope. He was at Lymiecleuch in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' and in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick'. He had a bond with Haddington distiller Archibald Dunlop in 1823. He was farmer at Lymiecleuch in 1841. He was known as a breeder of Cheviot sheep and liked to argue on topics such as free trade and sailors' rights. As a member of the Wisp Club it was said that each year he had increasingly 'blenched locks, and did not decrease his waist-band', with Robert Govenlock eventually exclaiming that 'If I had a stable full of horses, with that man's constitution, in these days of opposition coaching, I'd run Croall and the whole lot of them clean off the road'. He married Betty Scott (c.1789–1835). Their children included:

Elizabeth (1810–35); James (1814–27); Rolland (b.1815), tenant in Mackside; Henry (b.c.1819); Scott (b.1824); Mary (b.c.1826); James (again, 1828–43); William (b.1830); Janet (b.1834); and Walter (b.1835). In 1851 the head of the family was Henry, with the 3700 acre farm held in trust for his siblings Scott, William, Walter, Mary and Janet. His daughters may be among the 'Lasses o' Limey' that John Halliday wrote about in a poem of the same name. James (b.1787/8) agricultural labourer in Roberton Parish. In 1841 he was at Roberton Woodfoot and in 1851 was farmer of 6 acres there. In 1861 his wife and 2 sons were living at Riddell Mill. His wife was Jane (b.1799/1800) and their children included: John (b.c.1823); James (b.c.1825), a dyker; Janet (b.c.1826); William (b.c.1828); Adam (b.c.1830); and Alexander (b.c.1832). James (1792/3–1873) carter and sheep dealer in Newcastleton. He could be the 'J. Elliot, N. Castleton' who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He is probably the cattle dealer of that name listed as male head of his family in Newcastleton in 1835. In 1851 and 1861 he lived at about 29 North Hermitage Street. He married Margaret Shiel (1808–87). Their children included: Rolland E. (1832–88), who died in New Westminster, British Columbia; Robert (b.1834); Thomas (b.1836); James (1839–47); Katherine (1841–47); Charles Scott (b.1843); William (b.1846); and James (b.1849). He died at Kershopebrae, and his wife died in Hawick. James (1794–1884) born in Roberton Parish, son of John and Elizabeth Scott. He was long-time proprietor of the Ewe and Lamb, being a spirit merchant at 3 Orrock Place. He may be the same James recorded as proprietor of a public house on 'High St.' in Pigot's 1825 directory (and this could be the Punch Bowl at No. 27, marked 'Elliot' on Wood's 1824 map), and listed as a vintner on the Round Close in Pigot's 1837 directory; this same James was proprietor of the Royal Oak in 1832. On the 1841 census he was an innkeeper and spirit dealer on the Sandbed. In 1851 he is listed as a vintner on Orrock Place, in Slater's 1852 directory he is a vintner at the Ewe and Lamb and in 1861 he was innkeeper at 3 Orrock Place. He may have ceased to be proprietor of the Ewe & Lamb in the late 1860s. At the 1855 Common Riding he served as Croupier at the Magistrates' Dinner; this suggest that as the Cornet's Father, he may have effectively been the 'Acting Father'. He married Helen Paterson (1806/7–54). Their children included: John (1835–58), who was Cornet in 1855; Helen (b.1838); William (b.1841), who died in infancy; Elizabeth or 'Betsy' (b.1843); Ann Scoon ('Annie', 1844–92); Margaret (b.1846), who died young; and James. A portrait exists of him. They are buried at Borthwick Waas. James (b.c.1797) grocer and spirit dealer in Hawick. He was on Needle Street in 1841, along with wife Agnes and children Agnes, Margaret and Benjamin. Probably the same James is listed as a grocer on the Mid Row in Pigot's 1837 directory. James (1797–1866) son of Robert and Wilhelmina Hislop, he was born in Castleton Parish, where most of his children were baptised. He became farmer at Middleholm, near Langholm. He married Helen (1804–80), daughter of joiner John Douglas. Their children included: Robert (1824–50), who died in Liverpool; Elizabeth Beattie (1825–94), who married Langholm clogger Thomas Hounam; John (1828–56), who worked as a joiner with his uncle James Douglas; Anne (1830–95); Christian Douglas (1833–89), who married shepherd William Elliot Pringle; Janet Douglas (1835–92), who married forester Adam Inglis; William Douglas (1837–87), who lived in Langholm; James Douglas (1840–1920), who also farmed at Middleholm and late lived in Ewesdale; Walter Douglas (1843–77), bank clerk, who moved to County Durham; and Douglas (1846–1919), bank cashier in Yorkshire. James (b.c.1800) from Newcastleton, he was a shoemaker on Havelock Street in Wilton, listed in 1861. His children included Andrew, Elizabeth, Helen, James and William. His children were born in Teviothead and Langholm parishes. James (b.1800/1) from Teviothead Parish, he was shepherd at Wauchope Common. In 1851 he was living at Hawthornside Cottages and listed as a shepherd, and was listed as retired at Wauchope Common in 1861. He married Margaret Scott (from Ettrick), and their children included Adam, Isabella and Mary. James (b.1802/3) born in Minto Parish, probably son of William. He was a farmer and then a grocer, wine and spirit dealer at the Crown Inn in Denholm in the 1860s. He may also have been a joiner in Denholm. In 1837 he married Mary, daughter of farmer Robert Bulman. In 1841 and 1851 he was living with his father-in-law, probably at Eastgatehall farm. By 1861 he was on Main Street as a grocer, etc. His children were: Alison (b.1838); Janet (b.1840), perhaps also known as Jessie; Elizabeth Simpson ('Eliza', b.1840), probably twin of Janet; William (b.1845); and Mary Ann (b.1850). James (b.1803/4–80) son of John and Jean Scott, he was tenant farmer at Flatt in Castleton Parish and later at Westwater. By 1851 he was 'Farmer not now tenant but residing' at Flatt. He was succeeded in the tenancy of Flatt by his nephew John. He married Margaret Little (c.1818–83) in 1847 and their children included: John (1848–66); William (1849–97), also tenant in Westwater; Thomas Scott (1850–1906), who died at Salkend; Jane Scott (1851–1928); James Main (1855–1917); George Thompson (1855–1921), who died at Twickenham; and Henry (1864–1913), an engineer, who died in Barcelona. James (b.c.1805) labourer in Hobkirk Parish. In 1841 he was living at Langburnshiels. He married Margaret Scott in 1838. Their children included: Janet (b.1838); Isabella (b.1845); and Mary (b.1850), born in Kirkton Parish. James (b.1862) may also have been their son. James of Goldielands (b.1805) son of the earlier James, who was teacher at Wilton. Later in life he was also referred to as 'Professor Elliot', while his brother Adam was called 'Dr. Elliot, Goldielands'. In 1841 he was listed as a teacher, living with his father at Goldielands. In 1851 he was a teacher of mathematics, lodging in Duke Street in Edinburgh. He contributed talks to the Archæological Society, e.g. on local geology in 1870, 'vitrified forts' in 1871, the etymology of 'Teviot' in 1874, 'Hawick Mote and its Connection' and 'The Age of Druidical Monuments in Britain' in 1875, and 'On the Ice Age in Teviotdale' and 'On the Wild Birds of the District' in 1876. In addition he described the geology of Upper Teviotdale for the Edinburgh Geological Society in 1870 and the Hawick district for the Berwickshire Naturalists' Club in 1873. He served as Vice-President of the Society in the 1870s. He described how an owl had spent a couple of months living in his bedroom's chimney, being fed by its mate, before appearing in the room, when he helped it out of the window. In 1880 he gave the land of the former bowling green off Bourtree Place to the Baptist congregation. He is probably the James who was Professor of Mathematics and Natural Philosophy at Queen's College in Liverpool. He wrote 'An Elementary Course of Practical Mathematics' (1850), which ran to several editions, 'Moses and Modern Science', as well as several other books. In 1857 he was described as 'late of Edinburgh, now of Queen's College, Liverpool'. In 1879 he wrote to the Spectator about the extraordinary mental arithmetic powers of his friend (and fellow student at Edinburgh) George Bidder. Adam, who wrote to Charles Darwin from Liverpool in 1872 (about the possible offspring of a woman and an ape), may have been his son. James (19th C.) married Agnes Lamb in Hawick Parish in 1834. James (1807–41) eldest son of James the 3rd Laird of Wolfelee and brother of Walter, 4th Laird. He was a Lieutenant in the 5th Madras Native Infantry and died in Nellore (south-eastern India). He had a twin, Robert, who died in 1896. James (b.1807/8) from England, he was a farmer in Newcastleton. In 1861 he was living in North Hermitage Street and farming 4 acres. His wife was Helen and their children included William, Isabel, John, James, Mary, Esther, Jane and Rubina. James (b.1812/3) from Langholm, he was an agricultural labourer living in Castleton Parish. He could be the 'driver' at 'Wheathaugh' recorded as a head of household in Castleton for the first time in 1837. In 1851 he was residing at Whithaughburn and in 1861 at Whithaugh Cottages (probably the same place). He married Sophia Miller (b.c.1814) from Eskdalemuir. Their children included: George (b.c.1839); Archibald (b.c.1841); Thomas (b.c.1845); Andrew (b.c.1846); Euphemia (b.c.1848); Isabella (b.1849); John (b.1851); and William (b.1854). James (b.1812/3–90) born in Northumberland, son of Robert of Hermitage, who farmed at Moraylees and Haydon Bridge. His mother was Mary Scott from Skelfhill. He farmeed at Galalaw. In 1851 and 1861 he was farming 250 acres there, and employing 12 people. At the same time Robert Turnbull farmed the other part of Galalaw. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1853. James (1814–80) son of shepherd James and Janet Grieve. He was recorded as a shepherd at Broadhaugh in Teviothead Parish in 1851 and was a labourer living at Lochburnfoot in 1861. He married Mary Nichol (1818–1901), who died in Hawick. Their children included: Janet (b.c.1841); Margaret (b.1845), who married John Young; and Eliza (b.1847), who married James Inglis. He died at Northhouse. James (b.1818/9) agricultural labourer in Newcastleton, son of blacksmith James and Janet Robson. In 1861 he was living at about 13 South Liddel Street. In Castleton in 1847 he married Ann (or Annie), daughter of Matthew Elliot and Dorothy Purdom. Their children (some of whom were born in Northumberland) included: Janet (b.1847); James (b.1849); Matthew (b.1849); Dorothy (b.1852); Isabella; Thomas; and William. He could be the labourer James who was visiting farmer Henry at Gatehousecote at the time of the 1851 census. James (b.1819/20) born at Wolfcleuchhead, he was a coal carter. In 1851 he was visiting William Mercer in Galashiels. James (b.1825/6) born at Hayeknowe, son of Thomas and Margaret Hume. He was a grocer at 2 Buccleuch Street. In 1861 he was listed as a grocer at 7 Sandbed, with his brothers Thomas and George also in his house. He married Jane Peddie Ewen in 1861. Their children included: Thomas; Jane Ewen; and James Oliver. James (1830–77) son of John. He was inn-keeper of the Grapes Hotel in Liddesdale in the 1860s and 1870s and died there. James (19th C.) married Dorothea Liddell in Wilton Parish in 1854. James of Mosstoweer (b.1840) son of manufacturer William. Along with his brother William Scott, he carried on the firm after their father's death in 1864. In 1865 he gifted a 'rare bird' to the Museum. He is probably the James 'formerly of Slitrig Crescent' who was elected a Life Member of the Archæological Society. James Thomas Spencer 5th Laird of Wolfelee (1845–92) eldest son of Sir Walter. He was born in Madras and educated at Harrow. Poor eyesight hampered some of his career prospects (and he also apparently became quite hefty in later life). He spent about 7 years in Argentina, returning in 1872, and living at Wolfelee. He became involved in local and national politics and stood as Conservative candidate for the Hawick Burghs in 1880, and was defeated by Sir George Trevelyan. He then bought some land in Manitoba, but did not live there for long. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1875. He represented the Borders at the Highland and Agricultural Society, and personally managed 2 of the farms on the Wolfelee estate (with the help of Mr. McPherson). He was a J.P. and Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He joined the Border Mounted Rifles (volunteers), eventually becoming Quartermaster Sergeant before they were disbanded in 1892. He was also a member of the Jedforest Club. In addition he was Vice-President of the Upper Teviotdale Fisheries Association in the 1880s. He was also a keen Freemason, holding high office locally and nationally. He was a guest of the 1888 Common-Riding Dinner. He was a Mason, serving as Deputy Provincial Grand Master. He succeeded his father in 1887, but had no children and hence was succeeded by his brother Edward. In 1888 he married Emily Grace, 2nd daughter of William St. Lawrence Gethin, brother of an Irish Baronet, and the couple resided at Wolfelee. He died suddenly, aged 47 and was buried in Southdean churchyard – 'My name it is J.T.S. Elliot, And I am the laird o' Wolfelee; A fig for the Rosebury Earl, Wha thinks he daur meddle wi' me' [JCG]. James (1848–1928) son of William, shepherd at Scotch Kershope. He worked as a gamekeeper in Liddesdale and was later a farmer over the Border. He married Margaret Murray (1854–1918) and their children were: Davina (1873–96); William (1875–1902); and Catherine (1877–1974), who married Alexander Hunter. James (1859/60–1936) postmaster in Newcastleton. He was grandson of William and Isabella Armstrong, who are buried in the same lair at Ettleton. He married Lizzie Jane, who died in 1919, aged 50. They had a son John who died of wounds in 1918. James 'Jimmy' (d.1923), J.P., farmer at Burnhead and later at the Flex. He was for a long time a member of the Commin Riding Race Committee. He was recorded as the starter at the Common-Riding Races in 1873 and 1875 and gave several speeches at Common Ridings in the 1890s. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1880. He also acted as Convenor of West Teviotdale for the Highland and Agricultural Society and was invited to be a wool judge when the Agricultural Show came to Hawick in 1914. In 1895 he gained the farms of Meikle and Little Whitlaw from the Scotts of Buccleuch, exchanging them for Fenwick. In 1896 he had a house built at the Flex, to designs by J.P. Alison. He was still alive in 1919 when there was a gathering of the Flex photographed. In 1892 he married Isabella Douglas Amos (d.1945), daughter of James Amos. He and his wife are buried at Borthwick Waas. He left a sum of £500, the interest to be run for as prize money in the Flex Stakes each year at the Common Riding. James (b.1873) son of Francis, he was born at Parkhill-haugh in Roberton Parish, where his father was a stone dyker. He was educated at Robert School and was an apprentice blacksmith with William Pow at Borthwickbraeburnfoot. He came to Bonchester Bridge as a journeyman blacksmith with Thomas Rutherford, then went to Edinburgh and worked with Mackenzie Brothers there for 8 years. He joined the 4th Volunteer Battalion Royal Scots in Edinburgh in 1896. He returned to Bonchester Bridge to take over as blacksmith from the Rutherfords in about 1902. He was Superintendent of Range for Rulewater Miniature Rifle Club in 1905 and then Secretary. In 1899 he was married in Edinburgh. Jane see Jean. Jane (18th/19th C.) recorded as 'Miss Jane, Burngrains' in 1821 when subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border'. She could be the Jean (b.1781), daughter of James, who died at Burngrains. Janet (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those 'Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun'. Janet (19th C.) listed as grocer and spirit dealer in Newcastleton in Slater's 1852 directory. She could be the 'Jeannie' listed in the 1851 census as mother of grocer James Edgar, probably at 28 Langholm Street. Jean nee Rutherford (d.bef. 1621) daughter of Jean and granddaughter of Gavin of Stobs. She inherited Stobs in 1607, along with her aunts Dorothy and Esther. She married William, brother of Robert Elliot, 17th of Redheugh, and they had 3 children: Robert; Francis; and James. Her husband was successively called 'of Hartsgarth', 'of Rig' and 'of Hartshaugh'. Jean (17th C.) listed as resident of Redheugh on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. There were John Elliots listed before and after her, and so she was presumably related to at least one of them. Jean (1709/10–74) daughter of William, Laird of Harwood. In 1731 she married William Elliot of Black Tarras, also called 'of Ludgegill'. The marriage contract is signed by Thomas Scott of Todrig, Charles Scott (brother of the Laird of Gorrenberry), Thomas Scott of Stonedge, George Scott (brother of the Laird of Newton), John Scott of Weens, Henry Elliot (both elder and younger, in Deadwater), Robert and William Elliot (sons of John Elliot in Larriston), Henry Elliot (son of William of Harwood) and Robert Kerr (son of the deceased Andrew Kerr in Roughleenook). Many of these men were her close or distant relatives. Their oldest son was William, tenant of 'Dinlie' (presumably Dinlees). Jean (1727–1805) born at Minto, 3rd daughter of Sir Gilbert, 1st Earl of Minto. In her teens she entertained a group of Jacobites under John Goodwillie at Minto House, while her father (a staunch anti-Jacobite) hid among the crags. She is also known as the writer of a popular version of 'Flowers of the Forest'. This was published anonymously in 1776. It was written in response to a bet by her brother Gilbert (later 3rd Baronet) that she would be unable to produce a good ballad on the subject of Flodden. She must have based her version on parts of a traditional ballad, but nevertheless her interpretation quickly became popular. And although she declined to claim credit for it, she was locally referred to as 'the Flower'. Some of her other verse is published in 'The Border Elliots and the Family of Minto' (1897). She played a strong role in sorting out her father's affairs after his death in 1766. She later moved to Edinburgh, where she was described as 'a prodigious fund of Scottish anecdote', but also that she 'did not appear to have ever been handsome'. She was said to be elegant, fashionable and intelligent, with a liking for French literature. However, she was also said to be the last lady in Edinburgh to use a sedan chair. Returning to Teviotdale in her last year, she died, unmarried, at her brother's house at Monteviot. A portrait of her as an elderly woman was painted by an unknown artist (also sometimes 'Jane'). Jean 'Lucie Lass' or 'Jeanie Luce' (c.1790–1864) postmistress in Newcastleton, particularly delivering mail to the Hermitage Water area. She was described as 'a crazy female who could neither read nor write', and it later seemed unthinkable that she would ever be entrusted with the mail. She was said to have been reminiscent of Madge Wildfire from Walter Scott's 'Heart of Midlothian'. A local character, she never wore headgear or stockings, kept her hair cropped short, used a shepherd's plaid for warmth and liked her whisky. She would be dressed in 'a drugget petticoat reaching a little below the knee, a man's coat and shepherd's plaid, with her feet and legs encased in a pair of Wellington boots' and in later years had a weather-beaten face, piercing eyes, shaggy eye-brows and an uncovered head. She was said to be treated well by residents of Liddesdale because she was related to some of the better families in the area, and also because she was such a gossip. She was succeeded as postmaster by Jamie Nichol. She may be the pauper living with carrier Thomas Turnbull's family at about 1 Whitchester Street in 1841. In 1851 she was listed as 'Parish Relief once District Post' on Douglas Square. She could be the grocer Janet recorded in Newcastleton in 1852 and could be the pauper living with the Beattie family in 1861. It is unclear what her nickname meant. Jean R. (b.c.1910) originally from Jedburgh, she also lived in Hawick and later in Stirling. In 1984 she published 'Musings of a Border Grandmother'. Jesse (b.c.1775) from Midlem, he was educated in Ancrum, Jedburgh and Berwick. He was Schoolmaster in Ashkirk from 1799 until the 1840s, a period of more than 40 years. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He is recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He married Margaret Smith. In the 1841 census he is listed at Ashkirk Schoolhouse with his wife Margaret, along with Robert and John, who were probably grandchildren. His children included: James (b.1799); Andrew (b.1800); Charles (b.1803); Margaret (b.1805); John MacKenzie (b.1807); Gilbert (b.1809), a millwright in Hawick; and Robert (b.1815). Jean (18th C.) recorded at Unthank in Ewesdale on the 1787 and 1788 Horse Tax Rolls. It is unclear how she was related to other Elliots. John (13th C.) recorded as 'Johannes de Elaund' in the 1256 assize roll of Northumberland. He complained that one of his neighbours tried to strangle him. John (14th C.) probably an Englishman, he was recorded in 1379. He went with letters from the English Privy Council to the Earl of Douglas in Scotland and to the Earl of Northumberland and Lords Clifford and Greystoke. His surname is written 'Elyot'. John (c.1379–c.1424) possibly from the Liddesdale family, although there is no proof of that. His surname is written 'Elwald' and 'de Elwalde'. He was a nephew of Bishop Matthew Glendinning, presumably meaning that his mother was a Glendinning of Glendinning. He is recorded at the University of Paris in 1398/9 when he was a 'determinant' in Arts and a 'licentiate' in 1399, and he became M.A. in 1400. He served as Proctor of the English Nation in Paris in 1401, was Regent in 1401/2 and 1402/3 and became a Fellow of Sorbon College in 1401. In 1402 he had to resign as Rector of 'Tywald' (probably Tinwald) in Glasgow Diocese when given the Vicarage of Selkirk Church, at the time being only a 2nd year student; he held Selkirk until 1421. He seems to have remained in Paris until at least 1406. He played a part in convincing Scottish authorities to recognise Pope Martin V in the late 1410s. He had permission to hold 2 benefices in 1417/8. He became Bachelor of Theology by 1417/8, perhaps among the early graduates of St. Andrews. He served as Regent of St. Andrews in at least the year 1418, succeeding John Scheves. He was present in Rome in 1420 and acted as Proctor there for George Borthwick. In 1420 he is recorded in several documents as perpetual vicar of 'Sellak Regis' (presumably Royal Selkirk) in Glasgow Diocese, when he made a request to the Pope. This was to give him a Prebend in Glasgow, the Provostship of Bothwell and the parish church of 'Kyrkmanchquo' (i.e. Kirkmahoe), which had earlier belonged to John Merton. In 1421 he pleaded that the arranged 5 year period was almost up, and he wanted an extension during which he could hold multiple benefices. He was at the Papal Court again in 1423, when he asked for many graces for himself, and again represented George Borthwick. In 1423 he was granted the Rectory of Kirkandrews in Kirkcudbrightshire, (being presented by the Earl of Douglas), to replace the benefices of Markinch and 'Selkyrke Regis' that he had held previously. Also in 1423 he asked to be given the Parish Church of 'Carnemole' in Galloway, but there was a problem with lay patronage and instead he was offered 'Alytht' in Dunkeld. He made additional requests for other benefices in the period 1417–23, which mostly came to nothing, although he obtained the Vicarage of Markinch in Fife in 1421. He probably died on his way back to Scotland from Rome in about 1424. John (15th C.) recorded as 'Johannis Elwald' in 1436 when he witnessed a sasine for the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee. The other men listed were all from relatively nearby. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots, and it is even possible he was the clan leader at the time. John (15th C.) recorded as 'Johannis Elwald' in the Exchequer Rolls of 1459 for the Lincluden area when his fine was compounded. Probably a different 'Johannis Elwald de Dauduran' is also listed. John (15th C.) cleric recorded in a document asociated with Coldingham Priory in about the middle of the 1400s. His name is written 'magistro Johanne Elwalde'; he was involved in an inquest at 'Hule' regarding capture of a ship and he was also given a safe conduct passage. John (15th C.) listed along with James, Laurence and Simon Elwald, as well as Robert Turnbull and Robert Dalgleish, when they said to be rebels captured by Patrick Dickson, Bailie of Peebles, in 1482/3. John (15th C.) recorded in 1493 as 'Jak elwald', he lived at Newton of Caverton. He had remission for several thefts: cattle from John Waddell from 'elinburn'; sheep from John Lamb in Wilton; a horse from Wilton; and sheep from William Martin in Whitchester. He also committed common theft before the time of his previous remission. His surety was Sir Robert Ker. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. John (15th/16th C.) witness to the 1488 sasine in which Robert Scott of Allanhaugh leased the lands of Greenwood (i.e. Girnwood) and the Lyne. He is recorded there as 'John Elwalde of Thorleshop' and his brother Patrick is also mentioned as a witness. In 1494/5 he was listed being 'in thornlawishop' among a list of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire. Presumably the same man is recorded as 'Johne Elwald in Thorleshope' in 1498 in a document listing many Liddesdale men who pledged themselves to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell for good behaviour. He must have been a close ancestor of Roland, Robert (or 'Hob' or 'Robin') and the later John of Thorlieshope. He may be the John who was one of the Elliots who witnessed a sasine for the lands of Robert of Redheugh in 1497. John (15th C.) listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who did not appear before the court in Jedburgh in 1494/5. His name was given as 'Johannis elwald lawson', with the last part presumably being a nickname. It is possible he is the 'Law's John' recorded 40 years later. John (15th C.) listed among Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He was son of 'wrycrag', but it is unclear how to interpret this nickname, or who his father may have been. John (15th/16th C.) resident of Foulshiels, probably in Liddesdale. In 1502 he is 'Johannes elwald in foulschelis' when convicted of stealing 100 sheep from Walter Scott, out of Hartwoodburn. Perhaps the same John (with no location give) was listed at the same court sitting in Jedburgh in 1502, among men who Marjory Turnbull in Hawick was convicted of resetting. John (15th/16th C.) listed as 'Johne Elwald in Sondhope' in a respite of the Register of the Privy Seal of 1510 given to Robert of Redheugh and several others in Liddesdale. Since only a few Elliots are mentioned, it seems likely that he was a close relative of the chief. He is also listed along with William of Larriston and a number of other Liddesdale Elliots in another respite of 1516. He is recorded there as 'John Elwald in Sandop'. He was probably tenant of the lands of Sundhope, near Whitrope. John 'Gret Johnnie' (15th/16th C.) tenant in Priesthaugh. In about 1510 he and Patrick were entered by Robert of Redheugh at a Justice Court in Jedburgh. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as witness to a document for Thomas Ker of Sunderland Hall, done at Fairnilee in 1526. His surname is 'Elwand'. Chaplain George was also a witness. John 'Law's John' (16th C.) listed as one of the band of Armstrongs and others who were denounced as rebels in 1535 for a raid on the farm at Craik. His name is given as 'John Elwald, called Lawis-Johne'; it is possible that his father was a Lawrence. He may have been a servant of Thomas of Mangerton, along with William, son of Alexander 'Elwald', who is also listed. It is possible he is the same man as (or otherwise related to) 'Law's Jock' mentioned in the 1570s. He could alternatively be the 'lawson' recorded in 1494/5. John 'Jock Unhappy' (d.1536) recorded as 'John Elwald, alias Jok Vnhappy' when he was convicted of theft etc., and hanged. John (16th C.) recorded as 'Joanni Elwald' on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. He and his brothers were the tenants of 'Catlie' (probably 'Gatliehill'). John of the Hill (16th C.) recorded as 'Joanni de lie Hill' in 1541 on the rental roll for Liddesdale, when he was one of the tenants of 'Streichelhope'. He may be related to Airchie of the Hill, recorded around the 1580s and others with the same designation. John (16th C.) tenant of Ramsiegill in the 1541 rental roll for Liddesdale. Other men recorded as being 'in Ramsiegill' (but tenants of other farms) were Robert and William. He may also be the John who was a tenant in Stirkshielhope (along with other Elliots associated with Ramsiegill); his son 'Jacobo Elwald' called 'Nelis Jok' was also named (but may be a confusion). He was perhaps related to the earlier Hob and later Gavin of Ramsiegill. John of Thorlieshope (16th C.) son of Robert (or 'Robin'). Along with others he was entered in a bond to John Kerr of Ferniehirst by James Douglas of Cavers in 1546. He was there recorded as 'John Elwand'. There are other similar bonds involving Robert of Redheugh and him in 1547 and 1548. It is unclear what crimes he was accused of. He may be son of the 'Rolland Elwald in Thorleshop' recorded in 1516 and may be related to the John of Thorlieshope recorded in 1583. John (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as a tenant of the lands of 'Lyndene' in the Barony of Bowden, along with other 'Elwalds'. John (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. His name appears as 'Johnne Ilwand' and he was probably related to Alison and Margaret, who are also listed. John (16th C.) recorded as son to 'Hob Quhytserk' in 1546 when he was one of the men to be entered as prisoners with John Kerr of Ferniehirst. He was recorded as son of 'Quhytsork' in 1548 when there was a further a bond of Robert of Redheuch with the Kerrs of Ferniehirst for him and John of Thorlieshope to be 'entered'. He was probably another Liddesdale Elliot. John 'Nelly's John' (16th C.) recorded in 1548 when, along with Robert of Redheugh and Richard of the Park, he had a bond to enter 2 prisoners with the Laird of Ferniehirst. He is recorded as 'Jhone Ellott, callit Nelleis Jhone'. He is probably the same man as 'Neillis Jok' (although listed as 'Jacobo Elwald', i.e. James rather than John) recorded in 1541 among the tenants in Stirkshielhope; he appears to have been son of another John, with his mother presumably being Helen. John 'Jock o the Park' or 'Little Jock Elliot' (d.bef. 1578) son of Simon of the Park. He was a notorious riever, and subject of a traditional ballad. His tower may have been located where Newcastleton railway station was later built. He is recorded purchasing (or perhaps leasing) Hangingside (i.e. the land later known as Hawthornside) in 1562, confirmed in 1572/3. In October 1566 he was pursued by the Earl of Bothwell, after failing to appear at Hermitage along with the other Elliot leaders. Since he refused to stop, Bothwell shot him and they then fought at close quarters. He apparently struck Bothwell 3 times, while himself being stabbed twice in the chest, and collapsed about a mile away. It is said that he died of his wounds (although this is not clear, since it seems that the same man is documented later) and traditionally this is said to have happened on the Billhope Burn. Meanwhile Bothwell was taken back to Hermitage where he eventually recovered, after being visited by Mary Queen of Scots. In 1569 he was pledge for 'the haill branche of the Park', with William Ker of Cessford, younger, as his surety. In 1569 he was held in Balwearie Castle, as pledge for 'Gray Will Ellot' and 'Hob Mirk Ellot', who were surely close relatives. In 1570 he signed a bond along with other Elliots, giving pledges for Hob, son of Elder Will and John of Heuchhouse. There was surety for him in 1573, before the Privy Council. He may be the same 'Johnne of the Park' listed among Monipennie's Border chiefs, published about 1594 (but probably compiled earlier). He was 'unquhile Johnne Ellot of the Park' when it was reported that he had previously acted as joint surety for Simmie Elliot of the Park; he also served as surety for 2 other Elliots. Unless he lived to be quite old he is unlikely to be the same John of the Park recorded in the 1580s – 'They leave not spindle, spune nor spit, Bed, bolster, blanket, sark nor sheet, John o' the Park, Rypes kist and ark, For a' sic wark, He is richt meet' [SRM], 'Wha daur meddle i' me? Wha daur meddle wi' me? Oh, ma name it's we Jock Elliot, An' wha daur meddle i' me?' [T]. John 'Jock' (16th C.) tenant of the lands of Simon Elliot in Dod Burn, listed in a bond of security signed in Hawick in 1569. His name is given as 'Jok Ellott'. John (16th C.) tenant of Fiddleton. He is recorded in 1569, along with Hob 'the Lady' and Hob of Unthank, when 'Will Ellot callit the Lord' when held in Loch Doon Castle as pledge for them. He may be related to the later John in Fiddleton. John 'Law's Jock' (16th C.) tenant in Priesthaugh. He is recorded in 1574 as 'Jok Ellott callit Lawis Jok in Preisthauch' among men who had been ordered to be removed from the lands of Robert of Redheugh. 'Lawis Thome' and 'Lawis Richie' were also named and presumably brothers. Their father may have been Lawrence, or perhaps they came from Laws in Liddesdale. Probably the same 'Jokke Ellot in Preisthauch' is listed in 1569 among the tenants that Gavin Eliott in Skelhill was surety for. It is possible he is the same man as 'Lawis-Johne' recorded in 1535. John (16th C.) described as John 'Elwood', brother of Will of the Steel in 1576 when the English Wardens complained to the Deputy Warden for West Teviotdale that he had stolen 100 sheep from Hexhamshire. He could be the same as John 'of the Steill' who was taken prisoner by Johnstone of that Ilk in 1572, with Robert of Redheugh and Martin of Braidlie entering into a bond with Johnstone for his return to Johnstone after they had 'borrowit' him. He could be the recorded John of the Steele (unless this was an error for Will of the Steele) recorded in 1590 as first in a list of Elliots of the Park and Binks, and others, accused of a raid into England. John 'Scot's Hob's Jock', 'Rob's John' (16th C.) listed among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580. His name is given 'Jok Ellott, callit Scottis Hobbis Jok', and hence he was presumably son of 'Scot's Hob'. In 1581 he was part of a bond of caution entered with John Carmichael, who had been Keeper of Liddesdale; 'Scot's Hob's Gavin' was also listed and presumably his brother. He was also part of a second bond in 1581, for the 'haill gang of Park'. He was listed in 1582/3 as one of the cautioners for Sim's Rowie of the Park. He is recorded as 'Johnne Ellot, called Robeis Johnne', and his name appears with Sim's Archie, Jamie's Hob and others. His name comes second (after Airchie of the Park) among those giving assurance for the Elliots of Park in the 1584 bond signed with the English Wardens at Hermitage; there he is 'Scotts Hobbs Jock of the Parke'. He was recorded as ''Scotts Hobs' Jocke' in 1587/8 when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots. His father was presumably Robert and his grandfather either a Scott or nicknamed 'Scot'; However, it is otherwise unclear who he was and how he may have been related to the earlier Jock o the Park. John of Bowholm (16th C.) recorded as 'Johnne

Ellot of Bewholmis' among cautioners for men accused of crimes against Englishmen in 1579/80. He was recorded as 'John Ellott of Bohomes' in 1587/8 when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots, including Hob of Bowholm. In 1590/1 he was 'called Bowholmes' among men that the Earls of Bothwell and Murray were to enter before the Privy Council. It is unclear how he was related to Hob, but they were probably brothers or father and son. His son David was declared as a fugitive in 1605. John (16th C.) son of 'Elder Will', he was sentenced to imprisonment for rieving in 1580/1, along with several other Elliots, Armstrongs and Nixons of Liddesdale. In 1581 James Stewart 'of Scherelaw' was cautioned to present him to the Privy Council and in 1582/3 Stewart was found liabile to pay a penny for his non-appearance. He was probably brother of Robert, who was captured in Hawick in 1567. Their father was clearly William, but it is unclear to which branch of the Elliots they belonged. It is possible he was 'Johnne Ellot, sone to Will Ellot, callit the Eldar Tod' listed in 1578 among Border Lairds who promised to meet to suppress lawlessness on the Border, after being released from being warded with Alexander Abercrombie of that Ilk and also the man transcribed as 'Johnne Ellot, son of the Elder Tod' who was warded in Edinburgh in 1580. John of Heuchhouse (16th C.) prisoner in Blackness Castle in 1570, along with Hob Elliot, son of 'Elder Will'. The pair were allowed to return to Liddesdale following a bond given by Martin of Braidlie, Elder Will, John of the Park, Adam 'called Cowdas', Hob of Heucchouse and 'Clementis Hob'; however, they were not produced after 8 days, and the Elliots incurred a penalty of 4000 merks. There was a reminder at the Privy Council in 1578/9 of the pledge to enter him into ward, along with Hob, son of Elder Will; they were supposed to go to the houses of John Cockburn of Ormiston and William Lauder of Halton, but did not go. He was also listed in 1581 along with William of Redheugh, Adam of Shaws, Archie of the Hill and others. They were accused by Englishman James Foster of 'Symwhaite' of stealing cattle and goods. In 1579/80 he was 'Johnne Ellot, son of Dand of Heuchhous' when he was listed among men (including Martin of Heuchhouse) accused of raiding into England. In the 1580s he (and Gavin of Ramsigill) also accused Capt. Carvell and his band 'with the clans of Leven' of stealing 200 cattle and 30 horses from their lands. He must have been related to the earlier Andrew and Martin of the same place. He could be the John who is recorded in 1583 as brother to Hob of Heuchhouse. He is recorded as 'Johnne Ellott of Heuchous' in 1586 when his superior Robert of Redheugh was instructed to enter him in court. In 1587/8 he was accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots, including 'Reid' Martin of Heuchhouse, who was surely a close relative. In 1587/8 his son John is recorded being held in ward (with the name not given) as part of an attempt to quell unrest on the Border; however, he 'eshaipit and eschewit' and his pledge was charged to appear before the Privy Council. In 1590 he was part of a group of Elliots who were accused of a raid by Thomas Hall of 'Gersomfeeld' and the tenants of 'Dortres' in England. His name was also given in 1590 along with Croziers, Fosters and others accused of stealing livestock and a detailed list of items from a servant of Sir John Forster. In 1590/1 he was listed among men that the Earls of Bothwell and Murray were to enter before the Privy Council. 'William Ellott son to John of the Hewghhouse', complained about for a raid into England in 1595, was presumably his son. John 'the Gyde' (16th C.) listed in 1576 when Robert of Redheugh acted as surety for him 'that he sould abstene fra thift and resett of thift in tyme cumming'. His name was given as 'Johnne Ellot, callit Jok the Gyde', and the pledge was stated to have been broken by 1578/9. He was probably related to Jock the Gyde recorded almost 50 years later. John 'Gavin's Jock' of Ramsiegill (16th C.) listed in 1569 as 'Gawins Jok in Ramsygill'. Ade, 'callit the Cowdais' was held in Blackness Castle as pledge for him and 'Wilcokis Hob'. Perhaps the same 'Jock' was listed as tenant of Gavin of Elliot of Falnash in 1569; the Laird appeared in Hawick to give surety for his tenants, and he may have been related to Will, Dand and Hob, other Elliots who were also listed as tenants. He is recorded in 1574 among Scotsmen who were reset in England, where he was 'Gawynnis Jok' (making it clear that his father was Gavin); his brother 'Hobbe' was also mentioned. In 1576 there was a complaint that Neil Montgomery of Langshaw had allowed him to break from ward. In 1581 he was listed along with Martin of Braidlie and Robert Kerr of Ancrum when they were cautioned for the non-appearance of Jock's Willie and 'Ill Hob', both from Ramsiegill, who were possibly his sons; they were fined in 1582/3. In 1581 the notary signed for him because he could not write himself. He was listed in 1583 as 'Joke of Ramsgill' in a letter from the English wardens, where he was the first man listed under the Elliots of Burnhead. He was probably related to the Jock of Ramsiegill recorded in 1612, as well as to other Elliots of Ramsiegill and Burnhead. Probably the same man is recorded as 'Gawins Jok' under the heading 'Burnhead' in Monipennie's list of Border chiefs (published around 1594, but probably compiled earlier). It is possible he is 'Johnne Ellot' brother of 'Stottan Gib' recorded in 1598/9 among brothers, tenants and servants of William of Falnash in complaints about reiving; they could both have been brothers of William of Falnash and hence sons of Gaving of Falnash. John (16th C.) recorded as 'Johnne Ellot, callit of the Dewisleis' in 1578/9, when it was stated to the Privy Council that he was previously meant to have been placed into ward, but in fact had not been. This was along with Andrew 'callit the Wowaris Andro', with sureties John Carmichael, younger of that Ilk and William Scott of Montbenger. He was probably from Eweslees. Probably the same John was recorded as being 'of the Dewhowses' in Ewesdale, along with Ringan, when they signed the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens. John 'Jock' of the Hill (16th C.) recorded in 1583 in a list of Elliots of the Burnhead branch. He was surely related to Archie of the Hill, who is also listed. Probably the same 'Jocke Elwood' was 'brothers sonne' to Airchie of the Hill in 1591 when they were accused of plundering from Jeffrey Tailor and the tenants of Scaleby. He is probably the Jock listed along with Mark and James of the Hill among Scotsmen accused of raids into England in 1595. Possibly the same 'Johne Ellot of the Hill' acted as cautioner in 1611 for John of Heuchhouse to appear in court at Jedburgh. John of Burnhead (16th C.) named in 1590 along with 'Gib Ellott son to Robin', 2 servants of Robert of Redheugh and others who were accused of stealing horses from Middleton Hall in the previous year. He was recorded as 'called the lard of Burneheades'. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Elliots associated with Burnhead. John 'Half Lug' (16th C.) listed among the Elliots of Burnhead in 1583, where his name is given as 'Joke Ellot called Halfe loges'. Probably the same John was 'halfe lug' in 1590, when accused with several other Elliots of leading a raid on 'Windgates' in England. He may be the 'Wyll Ellotts John of Burnheads' recorded in 1595 among Scotsmen accused of raiding into England. He was 'Jok Ellott of Burneheid, called Halfe Lug' when listed among Liddesdale men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in 1605. John 'Jock' of Thorlieshope (16th C.) listed in 1583 among the Elliots of the Braidlie branch, his name appearing as 'John Ellot of Thornesope'. He may be the same as the John of Thorlieshope recorded 4 decades earlier, but is more likely to be his son. Probably the same John was recorded in 1569 when Martin of Braidlie and Archibald Armstrong of Mangerton promised to enter him in ward if requested by the Lord Regent. Probably the same John was pledge in 1569 for 'the haill branche of the Thorlishoip (except Hob of the Shaws and his brother Will of the Steele), with Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule as his surety. He was also 'of Thorlishoip' when held in Wester Wemyss in 1569 as pledge for Hob of the Shaws and Archie 'Fyre the Brais'. John 'Jock' (16th C.) listed as 'Hobbis Jok' in 1581 when he was among those cautioned for the non-appearance of 'Symmis Rowie' of the Park. Others listed were Rob's John (unless this was an error and the same man), Sim's Archie and Jamie's Hob, who may have been related to him; they were fined in 1582/3. He was also referred to as 'Johnne Ellot, called Roweis Johnne'. John 'Sim's John' of the Park (16th C.) presumably son of Simon, and probably related to 'Jock o the Park' from a couple of decades earlier. He is probably the John of the Park for whom surety was recorded in 1573. He was to be warded with Sir William Scott of Balwearie, but was interchanged with Hob, son of the deceased James of the Park; the cautioners were Sir Walter Ker of Cessford, Andrew Ker of Faldonside and Walter Riddell of that Ilk. He may be the 'Johnne Ellot of the Park' listed in 1580 among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh. An English list of 1583 has him first among the Elliots of Park, giving his name as 'Sims John Ellot of the Parke'; others named (to whom he was probably closely related) are 'Grey Willie', 'Scots Hobbie', Jamie of the Park, 'Grey Will's Jamie' and 'Hob's Hobbie'. Also in 1583 he was 'John Elwet of the Park' when the Halls of 'Haveracres' complained that he had led about 100 men in a raid that resulted in the deaths of 4 Halls. He may be the John of the Park, recorded in 1590 along with Gabriel, as well as Elliots of the Steele, Thorlieshope and others, who were accused of raiding into England. 'He must have been related to 'Rowie' or 'Robin' of the Park, recorded in 1578 and 1581 and 'young Archie of the Park' who was one of the Elliots to sign a bond with Scott of Buccleuch in 1599 John 'Jock' (16th C.) recorded in the 1585 remission for men of Dumfriesshire as being 'Jok Ellat in Bowgranis'. This was probably somewhere near Langholm, but could be same as Burngrains. John of Copshaw (16th/17th C.) probably a son of Robert of Redheugh, his brothers being Robert, the 14th Chief, possibly Martin of Braidlie and Archibald of Falnash. In 1561/2 he was among Elliots who had a bond with the Kerrs of Ferniehirst to enter Thomas Routledge; the others were Archie of Falnash, Archie's son Gavin and 'Elder Will'. In 1568 he led a party of Elliots, Armstrongs and others, which burned the house at Torwoodlee, killing George Pringle there. In 1580 he was among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh; his brother Tom was also listed. Also in 1580 he was said to have joined the group of Elliots and Armstrongs that raided the farm of Slaidhills, stealing cattle and leaving a servant for dead. He was also in the party that attacked some Elliots, Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in Liddesdale in 1580, killing Walter Gledstains. He was listed in 1581 among Armstrongs, Elliots and others who accused the Scotts and their allies of several crimes, contrary to the bond between them. He may be the 'Jock of Copshawe' (surname not given) who was among a group of men accused in 1582 of taking part on a raid into England in which Martin Taylor and 3 others were killed. He is probably 'Joke Ellot called Copshawe' listed among the Elliots of Braidlie in 1583. In 1584 the Warden of the Middle Marches, Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, lists him among the 'principallis of the branchis of Liddisdaill'. In 1587/8 his brother Hob was held in ward with Lord Sinclair. He is also mentioned in 1588 (although this could have been his son) when Nichol Cairncross was surety for his brother Hob, who was in the Tolbooth. He may be the 'John of Copshawes' whose tower, somewhere near Saughtree, was marked on Sandison's c.1590 map of the Deabateable Land. He was named by an English informed as part of the group that raided Carlisle Castle to free 'Kinmont Willie' (although he is likely to have been too old to take part himself, and so this may have been a son). In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. In 1594/5 he was named in an indenture between the Scottish and English Wardens. He is probably one of the 3 Johns who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. In an English letter of 1596 it is stated that he had built a tower at 'Blackstone lee' (which was probably near Mangerton, or may simply have been a misunderstanding for Copshaw). He was one of the trustees for the young Robert (17th) of Redheugh appointed in about 1597. In that year he wrote (along with Robert of Redheugh and William of Hartsgarth) from Larriston to the English Warden, explainng that they had sworn to the Scott of Buccleuch that they would not have dealings with any Englishmen. In 1599 he was 'Jok Ellot of Copschaw' among Elliots who signed a bond at Branxholme with the Warden of the West March regarding the inhabitants of Liddesdale; he did this with his hand on the notary's pen 'because I can nocht wryte my selff'. He was probably the Laird of Copshaw who in 1599 was listed among Scotts and others who were charged to find sureties for 'observing the King's peace'. In 1605 he was accused, along with his son Robert (and servant John Routledge and Adam 'Rakese'), of attacking Wauchope (in Rulewater) with 100 men, stealing cows, sheep, etc., but was acquitted. He was found guilty of the murder of Pringle in 1607 and denounced as a rebel when he did not appear; if this is the same man, then he must have been quite old by then. John 'Rowie's John' (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as part of a bond of caution entered with John Carmichael, who had been Keeper of Liddesdale. Several other Elliots were listed, including Jock and Gavin, sons of 'Scot's Hob'. He was also part of a second bond in 1581, for the 'haill gang of Park'. He was also listed among the Elliots of the Park who signed for their whole band in the 1584 assurance given to the English Wardens. His name is given there as 'Roweis Johne of the Parke'. His father was presumably Ninian. John 'Jock o the Lies' (16th C.) one of a group of Elliots who signed a bond for 'Willie's Hob' in 1587. It is unclear where his seat was, but presumably in Liddesdale. He may have been closely related to the Elliots of Ramsiegill and of 'the Hill'. He was probably related to 'Ade Elwald de Leyis' who is recorded in 1541. John (16th C.) brother of 'Willie's Hob', he was part of the bond for his brother, made to William Douglas of Lochleven and his son James Douglas, Commendator of Melrose in 1587. His father was probably William. John (16th C.) recorded as 'Johnne Ellot, sone to umquhile Ringane the Portar, or Blasteis Jok' in 1578/9, when John Carmichael, younger of that Ilk was caution for him (and others) not to raid into England. He was also 'John the Portars

sonne' among Elliots of Ewesdale in Monipennie's c.1594 compilation of Border chiefs. He may have been son of Ninian 'the Porter' from Ewes Doors. John 'Lang Jock' (16th C.) recorded among Nixons and Elliots complained about by the English Warden regarding 2 separate raids in 1588. He was also recorded in 1590 as 'longe Jocke Elliot' when, along with relatives of Martin of Braidlie and others was accused of stealing cattle and horses from England. Probably the same man was 'longe John Ellott', accused in 1590 along with elder Will of the Steele, Archie and Martin's Gib 'the cousin' of stealing from the tenants of 'Greinridge'. He is also 'longe John' listed among Elliots and Armstrongs complained about in 1590 by a large group of Englishmen for a raid on Blackcleugh in Kirkhaugh. He was also named in 1590 on a list of Elliots, Nixons and others who were accused of being on a raid into England in 1588. His nickname presumably means he was tall. John (16th C.) recorded as 'Cowshawes' in 1590 along with other Elliots and Nixons when there was a complaint from the English side of the Border that in 1588 they had stolen in 'playne dayelight, thir hirdes' and 24 head of cattle. He may be related to Will 'called Cowsauche', who was a fugitive in 1605. John 'Cull the Spade' (16th C.) recorded in 1590 along with other Elliots and Nixons who were accused of going on a raid into England in 1588. He is listed separately from John 'Cowshawes', along with Gavin's Hob, who may have been close relatives. John 'the Child' (16th C.) listed among a large group of Elliots who were accused in 1590 of taking Ralph Hall and others prisoner and ransoming them. It is unclear what his nickname referred to, or whether he is the same as one of the other Johns. John (16th C.) listed among Elliots and others who were accused in 1590 of taking horses and prisoners on a raid into England. He is recorded being 'of the Hillend, but separately from Mark of the Hill (making it seem that he was not directly related to that branch), and just before Elliots of Ewesdale. John 'Jock' of Burngrains (d.bef. 1608) probably from the lands near Meikledale, in Ewesdale. In 1606 his sons Hob and Will were listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick. He is recorded as 'vmqle Johnne Ellote of Burnegranes' and also 'Jok of Burgranes' in 1608 when his son William (or possibly Ninian, since the records are confusing) was sentenced to hanging for resisting the King's Guard. He may have been related to Adam of Meikledale, who also held Burngrains later in the 17th century. John (16th/17th C.) younger son of Martin of Braidlie, referred to as 'Martin's John of Burnmouth'. He was probably the son of Martin recorded in 1590 along with his brother Airchie, as well as 'Martin's Gib' and Martin of Prickinghaugh, when they were accused of stealing from Englishman Thomas Rutherford of Blackhall. He was probably the John, son of Martin, recorded on a 1590 list of Elliots (including his brother Archie and cousin Dand), Croziers, Nixons and others accused of rieving from William Robson of 'Allerweshe'. He is probably also the John listed among Elliots (including his brother Gib, as well as Airchie of Clintwood, who was also his brother) and Armstrongs complained about in 1590 by a large group of Englishmen for a raid on Blackcleugh in Kirkhaugh, taking many prisoners for ransom. He was probably the John, son of Martin, who (along with his brother Gib) was part of a complaint about a raid into Gilsland in 1596, led by Sir Walter Scott of Harden. He was denounced as a rebel in 1611 and his lands and goods forfeited to Thomas Cranston. It is possible that he was the 'Johnne Elwode in Barmonth' listed in 1612 among those who supported Sir William Cranston in his commission to keep peace on the Border. John (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. He was son of Will of Fiddleton and listed along with his father and brother Ringan. John 'Jock' (16th/17th C.) listed among fugitives who did not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. He was son of 'Heidheid', but it is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. John 'Jock' (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1605 as son of 'Wower's Andro'. He was listed as a fugitive among Liddesdale and Eskdale men not appearing at a Borders Commissioners' court in Hawick. It is unclear who his father might have been. John 'Jock', 'the Murt' (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners' court in Jedburgh in 1605. He was also referred to in 1611 when 'Robert Ellot, called Martenis Hob' was cautioner for his appearance at court in Jedburgh. However, he was acquitted of the charges. It is unclear what his nicknamed meant, but he may have been related to Will in Burnhead, called 'Murth'. John 'Jock', 'Blackheid' (16th/17th C.) listed among Liddisdale men declared as fugitives for not attending a court in Peebles in 1605. He is recorded as 'Jok Ellott, called Blakheid'. His nickname was presumably to distinguish him from other contemporary Johns. He was perhaps related to Archibald and William, who also had the same nickname. John 'Reid Jock' (16th/17th C.) listed among Liddisdale men declared as fugitives for not attending a court in Peebles in 1605. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Elliots. John (16th/17th C.) son of Archie of Foulshiels. In 1611 John Ainslie, Burgess of Jedburgh was cautioner for him to appear in court at Jedburgh; however, he was acquitted of the charges. John of Heuchhouse (16th/17th C.) son of the earlier John. In 1587/8 he was 'Johnne Ellott, son fo Johnne of the Heuchhous' when held in ward (with the name not given) as part of an attempt to quell unrest on the Border; however, he 'eshaipit and eschewit' and his pledge was charged to appear before the Privy Council. Probably the same John of Heuchhouse was recorded in 1611 when John of the Hill acted as cautioner for him to appear in court at Jedburgh. He was acquitted of the charges. John 'Jock' (16th/17th C.) referred to in 1612 as 'in Braidlie'. He was on the jury for the trial of Hawick Bailies and others over the death of John Elliot 'in Redden' while in custody. He may have been the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John 'Jock of Rynsiegill' (16th/17th C.) from Ridden in Liddesdale, the designation is probably the same as 'Ramsiegill'. He was a thief who was caught pludering from a Hawick Burgess in 1612, and imprisoned in the church steeple. He then apparently committed suicide, and his widow Bessie 'with the ffyve fatherless bairns' brought an action against the Bailies. However, it was proved by witnesses that 'he was fund lying deid ... hangit himself in his aune belt'. He was recorded in Pitcairn's 'Criminal Trials' as 'Johnne Ellote in Redden, callit Johnne of Rynsiegill'. John of Arkleton (d.bef. 1622) 2nd son of William of Falnash and brother of Robert of Falnash (who was Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire). He was also referred to as 'of Falnash'. In 1615 he witnessed a sasine of Kirkton by William Armstrong. In 1616 he was on the jury that convicted Jock Scott 'the Suckler' of sheep stealing. In 1617 he appeared before the Privy Council with a number of other Border lairds to renew the bond for the good behaviour of his supporters and tenants. He married Ester Armstrong, who was one of the heirs-portioners of Ninian Armstrong of Arkleton. They had one child, Archibald of Arkleton. John 'the Dod' (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1624 when Adie and Will Usher were convicted for stealing sheep from him and others. He is distingusihed from John 'callit the Gyde' in the same case. He may have farmed on the Dod Burn. Perhaps the same John 'callit Dods', tenant in Thorlieshope, was recorded in 1623 when he was a cautioner (along with John Turner in Nether Nisbet) for Michael 'Birnie in Fairnylies' at the Justice Court in Jedburgh. He was probably also the 'Jok Ellot, callit Dod' who had 3 cows stolen from his lands of 'Buceburne' in 1623. John 'the Gyde' (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1624 along with John 'the Dod' when they had 5 sheep stolen from them by Adie and Will Usher. It is unclear what his nickname meant (but there was also a William Scott 'the Gyde'); he is probably related to the earlier 'Jok the Gyde'. John (17th C.) recorded in 1642 as 'Jock Elliot called Jock a gods name' on a long list of Borderers to be apprehended and tried for various crimes. It is unclear what his peculiar nickname meant. His lands were probably around Liddesdale. John (17th C.) 3rd son of Robert of Falnash. Before 1644 he married Grizel Elliot, heiress of Philhope, who had been ward of his father since her own father had died. In 1644 Philhope was sold to Archibald Elliot and Elizabeth Chisholme. He started as a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1636 (with George Leslie), but the entry is deleted 2 years later, presumably meaning that he had changes in his circumstances. This may have been the time of his marriage, when he took over running Philhope. He was probably the John, 'Falnashes brother', recorded in the Land Tax Rolls for Hawick Parish in 1663, paying £216 for Broadlee. John (17th C.) described as a 'wag', i.e. soldier, in Hawick in 1642 when he is listed among a large number of people accused of theft (probably wrongly). His son James was also mentioned there. John (17th C.) described as 'in Whitscheill' in 1665 when he was named as a debtor of William Elliot of Binks, along with many other Elliots. John (17th C.) said to have been an illegitimate son of the first Gavin of Brugh, he was hanged for theft at Hexham. However, these generations are quite confused. John (d.c.1676) tenant in Thorniewhats. His will is recorded in the Commissariot of Dumfries in 1676. John (d.1679) from Southdean Parish. He is recorded as one of the men banished to America in 1679 for being a Covenanter, and dying at Moul Head of Deerness, in Orkney, when their ship wrecked and they were ordered shut up beneath the hatches. John (d.c.1685) tenant in Hyndhope (although it is not clear which one). His will is recorded in 1685. John of Thorlieshope (1621–98) son of Adam of Meikledale. In 1657 his father purchased for him the lands of 'Isgill' (or Elfgill), 'Midgehop' (or Midgeholm) and Newbigging, retaining the liferent for himself. In 1671 he was 'indweller in Hudshouse' and already possessed Thorlieshope. He purchased Larriston Rig and Hopehead and in 1675 he gave a 'wadsett' for Robert Elliot of Larriston's lands of Over and Nether Larriston, Redheugh, Blackhope and 'Greenhollis'. He paid tax on £520 in Castleton Parish in 1678. He is probably the John of Thorleshope mentioned by Scott of Satchells, along with other Elliots in the lines 'But now to Henry of Hare-wood I mind for to skip, And to his Brother John, and John of Thorslee-hope' and 'Into your gentle hands, Sir, I do commit, John Elliot the Laird of Thorlieshope'. He probably had the house at Thorlieshope rebuilt in 1682 (since there is a stone there bearing that date). In 1690 he was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1697 he (along with his 3rd son John) purchased another wadsett on the lands of Larriston Rig and Hopehead. He was a Commissioner of Supply in Roxburghshire in 1690. It is said that he was conspicuous among the band of local minor Lairds who engaged in smuggling cattle across the Border during the time when such trade was illegal. He was a cautioner for a bond by Henry Elliot of Harwood in 1692, and also witnessed the bond between Harwood and Bewlie in 1692. He was recorded at the Castleton Kirk Session in 1698. He married Jean Elliot of Dinlabyre before 1671. In 1677 he secondly married Jean, daughter of Thomas McDougall of Stodrig. He had 10 children: William of Thorlieshope and Ove, who was also Commissioner of Supply and married Christian Ainslie; Henry of Lodgegill (1672–1714), who married Margaret, daughter of Robert Elliot of Midlem Mill; John of the Binks (1674–1751), who married Christian, daughter of Robert Elliot, factor to the Duke of Buccleuch; Andrew, who died unmarried; Margaret, who married Sim Elliot of Lodgegill; Janet, who married William Elliot in Penchrise; Helen, who married John Elliot of Cooms (or perhaps William of Cooms); Jean, who married Thomas Armstrong of Sorbie; Christian, who married John, brother of Elliot of Dinlabyre; and Elizabeth, who married Edward Elliot. He is buried at the Nether Kirk of the Ewes. John (17th C.) described as 'sometimes in Dinlibeir now in Hudshouse' in 1665 and 1668, when he was named as a creditor for the estate of William Elliot of Binks, who was his father-in-law. In 1662 he was also one of the witnesses to the last testament of William Elliot of Harwood and Binks, described as his father-in-law. John (17th C.) tenant in Unthank. He was probably son of Robert of Dinlabyre, grandson of William of Braidlie and Dinlabyre and brother of William of Dinlabyre. He was mentioned by Scott of Satchells as 'John Elliot, where I have good Cheir; That dwells in Unthank, he's brother to Dinlibire'. He is also mentioned a few lines earlier among the 'shepherd swains' as 'To John Elliot in Unthank in a Storm, I came late'. Satchells lastly mentions him in the part of his 'Post'ral' dedicated to John, brother to Sir William Eliott of Stobs (leading to some confusion, since these were different men) – 'To thank John Elliot I humbly thee desire, He dwells in Unthank, he's Brother to Dinlibire' and says that he and his wife gave Satchells shelter when he was driving his beasts during a terrible winter storm (perhaps the terrible winter of 1674). John of Brugh (1627–1705) eldest son of Archibald of Brugh. He farmed and lived at Nether Southfield. He was recorded as tenant there in at least the period 1690–98, however, he was already at Southfield when his daughter Beatrix was baptised in 1654. In 1665 he borrowed money, with his brothers Gavin and Gilbert as guarantors. In 1667 he was on the panel for William of Dinlabyre being served heir to his great-grandfather William of Hartsgarth. He is probably the John recorded at Nether Southfield in 1694, when he paid tax on 2 hearths there. In 1700 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Paterson of Burnflat and both he and Gilbert (his son) witnessed baptisms for Robert Scott in Newbigging and for William Scott (from Wilton Parish). In 1701 he was witness to the birth of the twin daughters of his son Gilbert. In 1702 he helped arrange the settlement for his grand-daughter Eleanor when she married Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs. In 1702 he witnessed baptisms in Hawick for Robert Scott in Goldielands, for merchant Thomas 'Hotson' and another along with his brother Gilbert. In 1704 he and his son Gilbert witnessed a baptism for William Hood in Newbigging. He married Margaret (1630–1706), daughter of Robert Johnstone, who was said to be Minister of Ancrum, although no man of that name held that particular office, and so he was possibly minister elsewhere. she died the year after him. They had at least 9 children: William, merchant in London, later of Brugh and Wells; Gilbert in Winningtonrig and Nether Southfield; Robert, mentioned in his brother William's will; Thomas of Haydon Bridge or Canonbie Mill, who married a Miss Robinson; an unnamed son (b.1672); George (b.1676), Minister of Hownam; Beatrix (b.1654); a daughter who married Hobbie Scott; Jeanette (b.1672), who was left money in William's will; and Joan (b.1675), also left money in her brother's will. Most of their children were christened in Hawick Parish. The witnesses in 1654 were William Douglas (perhaps of Cavers) and Gilbert Eliott (perhaps of Stobs), in 1672 were James Liddell (probably Hawick Town Clerk) and James Scott and in 1675 were John Hardie and Schoolmaster John Purdom. His wife died the year after he did and they were buried at St. Mary's, the tombstone once reading 'Here lies John Elliot in the Southfield descended from the renowned family of the Elliots of Lariston by his grandschir Gavin Elliot of the Brough ...' and that his wife was 'sister of the ancient family of the Halliburtons of Muirhouselaw'. He could be the John in Southfield who in 1680 was called as a witness in the trial of local Covenanters, but did not appear. John (c.1650–1728) son of Adam of Mosspeeble. He was described as being 'in Dinley' (i.e. Dinlees). He married Margaret Scott from Falnash (perhaps an older child of Gideon Scott). Their children were: probably Ninian (1697–1724); Adam (1702–24); John (b.1703), who died young; John in Park; William (c.1703–91), who married Helen Scott, from Blackhall; Isobel, who married Henry, 2nd son of William Elliot in Penchrise; Janet; Christian; and Anna. He died at Park. His will is registered in Edinburgh Commissary Court in 1730. John in Leahaugh (17th C.) 3rd son of William of Penchrise and Mary Elliot, he was recorded in 1683. He had a son, Archibald, who was an Excise Officer. John (17th C.) recorded being 'in Harwood' in 1688 when his daughter Bessie was baptised in Hawick Parish. The witnesses were Corporal James Campbell and Gideon Scott of Outerside. John (17th C.) resident of Castleton Parish (probably at Yethouse) according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Isobel, who was recorded after him, must have been closely related. John (17th C.) tenant in Saughtree in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (17th C.) name of 2 separate men recorded paying the Hearth Tax in 1694 for households near Redheugh in Castleton Parish. John (17th C.) resident of Castleton Parish, listed between Sorbietrees and Flatt, according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. John (17th C.) recorded as a householder at Branxholme on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he was taxed for 2 hearths. It is possible he was the same as one of the contemporary Johns. John (17th C.) tenant in Glendivan. The will of his wife Helen McVittie is recorded in the Commissariot of Dumfries in 1685. Capt. John (d.1696) from Langholm, son of Robert and Janet Maxwell. His sister Agnes married Walter Gledstains, junior of Hilliesland. An entry in the Gledstains family bible reads 'Upon the 7th of Jully, 1696, my broyr. in law, Captain John Elliot, went from Langholm and dyed at Briges, in Flanders, upon the 15th of September, yrafter in the sd. year'. His son Capt. William died in Bruges 'of ane lung sickness' in 1713. John (17th C.) resident at Monk's Croft (in Hassendean Parish) according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to William who was also listed there. John in Harden (17th/18th C.) son of Adam in Dykeraw. He had a daughter, Marion, and a son, William in Hole. His lands were Harden in Liddesdale. John (17th/18th C.) described as 'in Tower' in Cavers Parish in 1698 when his daughter Jane was baptised. John (17th/18th C.) shepherd in Langside in Cavers Parish in 1700 when his daughter Elspeth was baptised. He could be the tenant in Langside who is recorded paying tax on 3 hearths in 1694. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, where he had 2 children baptised. He married Helen Scott in Cavers Parish in 1701. Their children included: Walter (b.1703); and Margaret (b.1705). John (17th/18th C.) married Christian Grieve in Hawick Parish in 1702. They were both from Hawick Parish. John (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Southfield. In 1704 he witnessed the baptism of a daughter of Gilbert, farmer in Southfield and Winningtonrig, who was probably a relative of some sort; the other witness was John Eliott, 'Collector', who was uncle of Sir Gilbert, 3rd Baronet of Stobs. He married Helen Scott in Cavers Parish in 1701 and their daughter Margaret was baptised in Hawick in 1705. The witnesses in 1705 were Gideon Scott of Falnash and Gilbert Elliot in Southfield. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, where he married Helen Laidlaw in 1705. Their children included: Andrew (b.1705); William (b.1707); margaret (b.1709); John (b.1711); and Walter (b.1713). In 1709 he was described as a tenant, but the location is missing, and in 1711 he was tenant in Lees. John (17th/18th C.) miller at Appotside Mill who was witness to a sasine for the Elliots of Harwood in 1704. His son James was also a witness. John of Castlehope and Billhope

(17th/18th C.) 2nd son of William of Mosspeeble, he was descended from the Elliots of Falnash. Castlehope was an earlier name for Twislehope. He married Margaret, daughter of Robert Elliot of Caerlenrig. Their children were: William in Whithaugh and Braidlie (b.c.1678–1767); Robert of Castlehope and Billhope; and Walter in Brugh. John (17th/18th C.) recorded as 'in Rig' 1711 when his son Francis was baptised in Cavers Parish. It is unclear if he was related to the other Elliots in Rig. John (17th/18th C.) said in some genealogies to be son of Robert of Lodgegill. In 1711 he married Helen, daughter of John of Thorlieshope. However, this information may be confused, and his name may be an error for William of Cooms. John (17th/18th C.) wigmaker in Hawick. He was brother of Robert of Rigg. In 1718 he witnessed a baptism for a child of the deceased William Scott of Brieryhill. John of Larriston (17th/18th C.) appointed in 1715 as one of the legal guardians for the 7 children of Henry, farmer at Sorbietrees. 'John' could be an error, since Robert was the Laird of Larriston at this time. He could also be the John whose sons Robert and William signed the 1731 marriage contract of William Elliot of Lodgegill and Jean Elliot of Harwood. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Stobicote, where his is recorded in 1716, 1722 and 1728. He witnessed a baptism in 1720 (along with James Scott in Stobicote) for William Telfer, servant in Stobicote. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: Archibald (b.1716); Isabel (b.1722); and James (b.1728). Other children, baptised in Cavers to a John around the same time, could also be his. John (17th/18th C.) married Helen Turnbull in Bedrule Parish in 1714. Their children (with no mother given) may include John (b.1715), Janet (b.1723) and Helen (b.1725). He could be the John who was a Bedrule Elder in 1729. John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Goldielands and Crumhaugh. His brother William was tenant in Crumhaugh. He was already tenant in Goldielands according to a baptismal record of 1713. 2 of his servants (Walter Scott and Helen Turnbull) are recorded in 1721 getting married in Hawick. He is recorded as 'in Goldilands' in 1723 when he was considered as an elder of Hawick Kirk. In 1725 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott, workman in Goldielands; this was along with Andrew Leithead in Crumhaugh. He was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick in 1727. He is probably the John who (along with William) witnessed a baptism in 1728 for Andrew Leithead, workman in Goldielands. He is probably the John who (along with Walter Scott) witnessed a baptism for William in Crumhaugh in 1729. He was still tenant in Goldielands in the period 1730–5 when his shepherd, Robert Hobkirk, had a run-in with the Town Herd, Mungo Armstrong (as recounted in 1767). And a few years later he had to speak with the Bailies to recover cattle owned by himself and other local tenants, which the Burgh Officers had driven to the West Port after they were found being pastured on the Common. In 1720 he presented for baptism a posthumously born child of his brother William. In 1731 he witnessed a baptism for workman Robert Lawson. He married Helen Laidlaw and their son Walter was baptised in 1713, with witnesses Walter Grieve in Branxholme Park and Andrew Riddell (who also lived at Goldielands). John (17th/18th C.) described as being in Earlside in 1724 when his daughter Katherine was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1724. John of Demainholm (17th/18th C.) perhaps the John Elliot 'in Mainholm' who purchased Demainholm from Robert Elliot of Larriston in 1677. He is recorded in the period 1695–1726 in papers with the Scotts of Buccleuch dealing with his debts. In 1727 he sold the lands of Demainholm to William of Thorlieshope and Overton. However, he appears to still be listed as owner in the 1740s when Demainholm was valued at £200. He is probably the John 'of Demainholm, tenant in Windiehills, par. of Cannonby' whose will is recorded in the Commissariot of Dumfries in 1723. John of Peel (d.bef. 1721) youngest son of William of Harwood. His older brother Simon pre-deceased his father, while his brother Henry succeeded to the main estate of Harwood. He was given the lands of Baxtonlees (also called Peel) by his father. He paid the land tax on £160 in Castleton Parish in 1678, and was recorded then as being 'in Backestonelyes alias peel'. He is probably the brother of Henry of Harwood mentioned in these lines from Scott of Satchells: 'But now to Henry of Hare-wood I mind for to skip, And to his Brother John, and John of Thorslee-hope'; and 'John Elliot he who's called a valiant Lad, He's Brother to Henry Elliot of Hare-wood'. He married Elizabeth Elliot (from an unknown branch of the family). He had a son John, to whom he conveyed the lands of Peel; however, on John's death these lands went to his daughters. His children were: John, tenant in Langside in 1723; Christian, who married Adam Elliot of Unthank; Jean, who married Thomas Pringle in Kirkton; and Margaret, who married Robert Dalgleish in

Fastheugh. His daughters sold Peel to Henry, son of their uncle Henry of Harwood. He appears to have been dead by 1721, when Elizabeth is referred to as his widow (although Tancred suggests that his son John predeceased him and he lived until about 1730). John of Binks (1674–1751) 3rd son of John of Thorlieshope. He was granted a charter of Binks by Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs in 1674. His brother Henry of Lodgegill died in 1714, when he became a curator for his nephew William. In 1718 he was granted a charter for Binks by Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs. He and his descendants also held the lands of Burnmouth; he is probably the 'Jo. Eliot in Burnmouth' who paid the window tax in Castleton Parish in 1748. His lands of Binks (in Cavers Parish) were valued at £300 in the 1740s. In 1700 he married Christian (c.1682–1726), daughter of Robert Elliot, Factor to the Duke of Buccleuch, and had 9 children, but the only sons who survived to adulthood were Robert of Binks and William of Bush. His children included: Robert of Binks (1702–66); John (b.1704), who died young; William of Bush (1705–99), who married Margaret Aitcheson; John (again, b.1710), who was a Burgess of Jedburgh and died without issue; James, George, Henry and an unnamed son, who all died young or unmarried; and Jean (b.1726), who married Henry Elliot of Peel. He is buried at Castleton. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children baptised there were: Adam (b.1725); John (b.1727); and Margaret (b.1729). John (17th/18th C.) referred to as being 'of Langlands'. He married Elizabeth Wilson in Ashkirk in 1723. Their children, born in Ashkirk and Wilton Parishes, included: Isobel (b.1724); James (b.1726); Robert (b.1728); John (b.1731); and Beattie (b.1733). John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Park, son of John of Dinlees. He is mentioned in 1730, but nothing else is known about him. His brother William may have taken over the tenancy from him. John (17th/18th C.) cooper in Hawick Parish. In 1726 he was recorded at Nether Southfield. He married Catherine Elliot in Hawick in 1723. Their children included: Bessie (b.1724); William (b.1726); Katherine (b.1729); and Henry (b.1737). The witnesses in 1726 were James and Walter Scott. John of Whithaugh (c.1702–48) eldest son of William, who purchased Whithaugh for him (as well as Redheugh for his brother Robert) in about 1730. He paid the window tax in Castleton Parish in 1748 and his estate was valued at £200 3s in the 1740s. He married Margaret (c.1704–68), daughter of Robert Scott of Gorrenberry. Their children were: William (c.1723–76) of Whithaugh, who married Margaret Shortreed of Essenside and secondly Elizabeth, sister of the Laird of Wolfelee; Robert (1725–70), farmer at Hermitage and Millburnholm, who married Janet Scott from Greenwood; John (1726–1813), farmer at Twislehope, who married Janet Turnbull from Mangerton; Margaret (b.1727), who died young; Mary (b.1728), also died young; Walter (b.1729), died young; Thomas (1730–1807), also tenant in Twislehope; Helen (b.1731), married A. Waddle, purser in the Royal Navy; Isobel (1732–1807); James (c.1733–1816), shepherd in Twislehope; and Elizabeth (c.1734–1807), who died unmarried. He and his wife are buried at Unthank. John (18th C.) rented the farm of Todshawhill from the Scotts of Buccleuch in at least the years 1744–46. Note that his name may have been James rather than John. John (b.1701/2–88) from Castleton Parish. He married Hannah Grieve. Their children included: Robert (b.1761); William (1763–88), a surgeon who died at Cape Coast Castle in Africa; Janet (b.1765); John (b.1767); and John (again, b.1769). He and his wife are buried at Langholm, but mentioned on the family gravestone in Castleton (although the dates may not be correct, since he would be very old when he had his children). John (18th C.) recorded in Penchrise when his sons William (b.1728) and Thomas (b.1730) were baptised in Cavers Parish. He may be the same as another contemporary John. In 1728 he is 'in Penchross' when his sister Margaret married James Linton (from Ettrick Parish). Perhaps the same James in Penchrise was witness to a baptism for Robert Grieve in Fenwick in 1714. John (18th C.) married Agnes Best in Bedrule Parish in 1726. Their children (with no mothers' name listed) may be Thomas (b.1727), John (b.1728), Helen (b.1729), Agnes (b.1732), James (b.1734), John (b.1737) and Margaret (b.1740). John (18th C.) recorded as 'in Linhope', when his daughter Helen was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1733. He could be the same sa John 'in Southdeanrigg' whose daughter Katherine was baptised in 1741. John (17th/18th C.) from the Black Tarras branch of the family, he was eldest son of William of Cooms. In 1732 he was described as 'now of Cumes', having inherited Cooms from his father. In 1709 he married Agnes, the eldest daughter of Robert Mather of Greenhill. Their children (mostly baptised in Hawick) were: Robert (b.1711), who married Catherine Armstrong from Sorbie; John (b.1715); and an unnamed child (b.1716). John of Brugh (d.bef. 1756) 2nd son of William of Brugh and Wells. He is said to have been settled on a trade in London with £1000. He may be the John, described as tailor of London, who witnessed his sister Eleanor's marriage contract with Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs in 1702 (along with his father William of Wells). In 1735 he was described being 'of Islington'. He married Elizabeth, widow of Sir John Crispe. Nothing much is known about him, except that he died before his bother William. His only child was William Nassau, who inherited Wells from his uncle. Capt. John of Brugh (b.1708) only surviving son of Gilbert, who farmed at Winningtonrig. He was christened in Cavers Parish. William 'the Laceman' was his uncle. He may have farmed for a while at Over Southfield. He is said to have joined the Army in about 1739 and at Dettingen in 1743 served under Lieut.-Col. William Elliot, who was his cousin, and alongside George Augustus Eliott, who was another relative. In 1749 joined the 2nd Troop of Horse Grenadier Guards and he became a Captain. In 1730 he married Jean, daughter of James Grieve of Branxholme Park. Their children, mostly baptised in Hawick and Kirkton Parishes, were: Helen (b.1731), who probably died young; Gilbert (1734–59); Mary (b.1735); Helen (again, b.1739); Anne (1740–1833), eldest surviving daughter, who married Thomas Hall; and William (d.1817). A portrait shows him on 'Old Crop', the charger that his cousin George Augustus Eliott had ridden at Dettingen and gave to him. John (1710–bef. 54) younger son of John of Binks. He was a Burgess of Jedburgh. He appears to have been given the farm of Binks by his father. In 1754, after his death, his older brother William of Bush was served as his heir. He died without issue. John of Adderstoneshiel (18th C.) son of Walter in Brugh, possibly the eldest son. He was at Falnash in 1740. He married Helen Moffat from Gorvald and they had a son John, who was baptised in Hawick in 1740. John (18th C.) merchant in Castleton. There is a record of Robert, farmer in Braidlie, paying him for 'merchant goods' in 1749. John (1711–92) 3rd Laird of Borthwickbrae, being one of 14 children of William, the 2nd Laird. Probably the same John of Borthwickbrae was apprenticed to a goldsmith in Edinburgh in 1731. He was christened in Roberton and died at Orchard. In 1744, along with Walter Grieve (farmer at Branxholme Park), he leased the lands of Linhope from the Buccleuch Estates. In the period 1743–60 he had a dispute with Sir James Stuart of Coltness over the lands of Branxholme Muir. He was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1750. His wool manufacturers in Hawick is mentioned as early as 1754 (in records of the Board of Trustees for Manufacturers), although it is unclear precisely what the company made. However, this may well have been the early partnership with Thomas Turnbull and some local men. In 1761 he was recorded as a Commissioner for Selkirkshire. In 1764 he was named as one of the commissioners for assessing the boundaries of Wilton Common. He was one of the Commissioners appointed in the court case regarding the division of Hawick Common in 1767. In 1769 he formed a partnership with others in the main carpet factory in Hawick, receiving the money that was offered by the Government for encouraging initiatives in Scottish industry and agriculture. The partnership was renewed in 1779 and consisted of Walter of Ormiston (his brother-in-law), Thomas Turnbull of Minto and William Robertson from Dunfermline. He may be the Elliot of Borthwickbrae who purchased the liferent of the superiority of the Barony of Stonedge and Howa before 1766, but had renounced this by 1788. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1780. It is said that a ewe presented to him by Douglas of Cavers gave birth to a lamb in 1774 which lived until 1796 (a very old age for a sheep). He was taxed for 2 male servants in 1778, and 1 in 1779, 1785, 1787 and 1788 and 2 in 1790 and 1791. He was recorded at Borthwickbrae on the 1785 and 1788–91 Horse Tax Rolls and in 1792 at Orchard. He paid the land tax on part of Borthwickbrae and the west side of Howcleuch in 1785. He also paid tax on 2 female servants at Borthwickbrae in 1785, 3 in 1787 and 2 in 1788–91. He was taxed for owning a carriage at Borthwickbrae in the period 1785–92, and is probably the 'John Elliot Esqr. in Orchard' who was taxed in Cavers Parish in the year 1792/3. He was listed as a voter in Roxburghshire in 1788, and probably a supporter of the Duke of Buccleuch's interests in the county; the privately-printed description is 'family in good circumstances. The son has a good estate through his mother, and is at the Bar. Second son in the Army'. He was also listed in 1788 among the voters in Selkirkshire. In 1753 he married Margaret, daughter of Alexander Murray of Cringletie. In Edinburgh in 1764 he secondly married Margaret (who died in 1792), daughter of Walter Laing and heiress of the lands of Meikledale, Flex, Old Melrose and Burnfoot-on-Ale; she was probably the 'Mrs. Elliot' listed as owner of the Flex in 1788 and on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (alhough deceased before then), as well as Wester Essenside, part of Leaphill and Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish (valued together at £952). His children were: twins Alexander and William (b.1754), who died young; William (b.1764), baptised in Roberton, who succeeded, but changed his surname to 'Lockhart' or 'Eliott-Lockhart' (see Lockhart); Walter of Old Melrose (1766–1809), baptised in Roberton; Margaret (b.1767), who married David Simpson of Teviotbank and Knowe (and was mother of Gen. Sir James Simpson), and may secondly have married Walter Grieve, tenant of Branxholme Park; and Janet, who also died young. John (18th C.) tenant in Kershopeburnfoot. His wife Elizabeth died in 1752, aged 36. Their children David Matthew and Agnes died young. They are buried at Ettleton. John (18th C.) shepherd at Earlsideshiels. His daughter Elizabeth was baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1758. He could be related to the earlier John in Earlside. John (18th C.) shepherd in Langburnshiels in Hobkirk Parish. His children included William (b.1764) and Margaret (b.1770). John (18th C.) owner of part of the lands of Grange near Chesters. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls he was listed as former owner. John (1725–1801) son of Robert, from the Caerlenrig branch. He was born in Cavers Parish and was a tanner in Hawick. He was listed as a tanner in 1748 when he paid tax on 11 windows in Hawick. He is probably the tanner of that name recorded being paid in 1751 for lime for mending the East Port. He is probably the tanner who witnessed baptisms in 1757 for Hawick distiller and merchant John Aitchison and in 1762 for shoemaker George Gardner. He was appointed as Hawick's part-time postmaster in 1767 (or perhaps earlier), probably replacing Walter Turnbull; he was re-appointed, apparently against his better judgement, several years later. He lived down the Punch Bowl Close, which also acted as the post office. Probably the same John, tanner, was one of those appointed in 1763 to oversee the collection of money for a new bell for St. Mary's. He is probably the John who in 1766, along with Francis (his brother), witnessed a baptism for merchant James Oliver and his wife Christian (their sister); he also witnessed another baptism for them in 1781. In 1769 he was appointed to the commission to discuss the Common with representatives of the Duke of Buccleuch. In 1779 (although the date is uncertain) he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert Oliver. In 1787–92 he was recorded as a tanner on the Horse Tax Rolls in Hawick. In 1789 he witnessed a baptism for exciseman Hugh Grieve. In 1778 he married Margaret Curle, who died in 1807, aged 67. Their children included: Isobel (b.1779), who probably died in infancy; Robert (1780–1851), farmer at Roan; James (b.c.1781), who died in infancy; Christian (1883–1855), who died at Roan; William (1785–1827), also died at Roan; and Isobel (again, 1784/5–1859), who died in Hawick. He was buried, along with most of his family, at Teviothead. In 1773 he witnessed the christening of Helen, daughter of shoemaker Adam Elliot (suggesting they were related). His will is registered with the Peebles Commissary Court in 1802. John (1725–1813) younger son of John of Whithaugh and Margaret Scott of Gorrenberry. He farmed at Castlehope, which was a former name for Twislehope. In 1786 he subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author; Thomas, also in 'Tweeslihope' also subscribed (although it is inclear who this might have been). His wife is probably the 'Mrs Elliot, Twislehope' who subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' in 1784. He married Janet Turnbull from Mangerton. Their children were: John (b.1781), who died young; William (b.1783), also died young; Robert (b.1785), surgeon in Haltwhistle, married Jane Elliot from Cringledykes, daughter of John and grand-daughter of Robert in Hermitage; Andrew (b.1787), married Elizabeth Armstrong from Newcastleton; Walter (b.1789), who lived in Charleston, U.S.A.; and Margaret (b.1791). John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His daughter Nelly was baptised in 1785. John (18th C.) Hawick bookseller of the late 18th century. A book by Samuel Charters was published by him in 1793. John (1731–1808) eldest son of William in Park. He was tenant in 'Baggot', i.e. Bygate in Liddesdale. He was farmer at 'Bagget' and elsewhere in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 9 horses. He is probably the 'Mr. John Elliot, Park', who subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author in 1786 and who is recorded on the 1786–92 Horse Tax Rolls. He died unmarried. His will was recorded with Peebles Commissary Court in 1808. Adm. John (1732–1808) son of Sir Gilbert, 2nd Lord Minto. He joined the Royal Navy at the age of 13, becoming a Lieutenant in 1756. He was famed as a Captain for capturing a fleet of the French admiral Thurot in 1760, having chased them from Carrickfergus to near the Isle of Man. An 8 ft long cannon captured from the French was long on display outside Fatlips Castle.

On being received by the King afterwards he apparently turned down a knighthood, but received cash instead. He was also made a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh in 1760, with the entry mentioning his services and military achievements. He was promoted to Commodore, and retired on half-pay in 1765. He then served as M.P. for Cockermouth in 1767 and was appointed General of the Mint in Scotland in 1767. He returned to active duty in 1777, attaining the rank of Rear-Admiral in 1787 and full Admiral in 1795. He was 'Captain John Elliot of his Majesty's ship the Edgar' in 1780 when he was entered into the voters' roll for Roxburghshire, on the basis of his ownership of Easter Essenside and Hermiston. In 1788 he is recorded as owner of Mounthooly and other lands in Jedburgh Parish, as well as Kirklands in Ancrum Parish and Easter Essenside in Ashkirk Parish. He was listed among the voters of both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1788. He was taxed for owning a carriage, horses and dogs at Monteviot in the 1780s and 1790s, as well as for having several male and female servants. He lived at Monteviot House, where he died, unmarried. He also purchased Easter Essenside, Mounthooly and Woodend, which he left to his nephew Lord Minto. He served on the Lieutenancy Committee for Roxburghshire in 1798. In about 1800 he contributed £200 to the subscription to help fund the war against France. He was sometimes known locally as being 'of Essenside', e.g. when listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819 (when he was already deceased). He was also listed on the Land Tax Rolls for 1811 at Mounthooly (although this was after his death). He loaned books on ploughing to James Veitch and arranged a ploughing contest at Timpendean. His will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1808. John (18th C.) tenant in Wigg. His children included: John (b.1768), tenant in Wauchope Gardens; James (b.1770); and Betty (b.1772). He could be the same as one of the other Johns. John (18th C.) resident in Shankendshiels. His children, baptised in Hobkirk Parish, included Agnes (b.1771) and Helen (b.1772). He could be the same as one of the other John from Hobkirk Parish. John (18th C.) resident in 'Harrotknow' (i.e. Harwoodknowe) in Hobkirk Parish, when his children Jean (b.1778) and John (b.1789) were baptised. He must have been related to James in Harwoodknowe, who is recorded in 1760. John (18th C.) resident in 'Hargleclughhead' in Hobkirk Parish. It is unclear where this was, but possibly he was shepherd at Harecleuchhead (near the old boundary of Hawick's Common), which was actually in Kirkton Parish. His son Robert was baptised in 1762, and may have been the direct ancestor of Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Elliot Trudeau. He could also be the same as some (although surely not all) of the Johns recorded in these other nearly contemporary baptisms in Hobkirk Parish, with no mother's name given: Elizabeth (b.1758), 'in Earlsideshiells'; William (b.1764), in Langburnshiels; William (b.1766), 'in Hopehead'; John (b.1768) in Wigg; Margaret (b.1770) in Langburnshiels; James (b.1770), in Wigg; Agnes (b.1771) in Shankendshiels; Betty (b.1772) in Wigg; Helen (b.1772) in Shankendshiels; Jean (b.1775) 'in Harrotknow'; and John (b.1780) 'in Harrotknow'. Without knowing which of these children were his it is impossible to guess the names of his parents and hence trace this Elliot line further back. John of Reidheugh (1740/1–1809) 2nd son of Robert of Redheugh, whose father had purchased the ancestral farm for him. He himself farmed at Cleughhead and Foulshiels, while his brother (presumably Thomas) was given liferent of Redheugh. He is probably the farmer at 'Cleughead' or 'Cleugheads' in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1785–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He was also taxed for having a non-working dog in 1797. In 1793 he disposed of the stock and household furniture from Redheugh to his brother Thomas (who also lived at Redheugh and farmed Foulshiels). In 1799 he married Margaret, 2nd daughter of Rev. John Russell, minister of Canonbie. They had no children and he settled Redheugh on his nephew Robert in 1806. He died at Newlands and is buried in Castleton cemetery. Dr. John (18th C.) surgeon living at Cleuchhead in Liddesdale towards the end of the 18th century. He could be the same as the farmer at Cleuchhead. He subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' in 1784, and it is possible he supplied material for it; indeed he may be the 'Gentleman of taste, in Liddesdale' to which Caw was indebted for providing a manuscript copy of 'Dick o' the Cow' and other verses. He was also 'J. Elliot, M.D. Cleugheads' in 1786 when he subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author. He was visited in about 1792 by Sir Walter Scott and Robert Shortreed, on their 'raid' into Liddesdale, to gather material for what would become 'Minstrelsy of the Scottish Border'. He apparently already had a manuscipt copy of ballads that he had collected himself. He presented Scott with an old Border war horn, which still hangs in Abbotsford. And afterwards he sought out other ballads 'among the darker recesses of the mountains'. Rev. John (1749/50–1817) licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1793, he became assistant to Thomas Elliot of Cavers (who was probably his uncle). He was presented to the Parish of Kirkton in late 1800 and ordained there early the next year, remaining as minister until his death. In 1786 he married Jean Armstrong, who died in 1828, aged 75. Their children were: Elizabeth: twins Adam and Mary (b.1794); and Isobel (1797–60), who died at Coliforthill. John (18th C.) Bailie in Hawick in the 1780s. He was one of the local people who subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). His son James died in 1782. In 1786 he was recorded as 'late Bailie' when he (and shoemaker Thomas Wallace) witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert Oliver. This suggests that he may also have been a shoemaker. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (c.1750–1801) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Janet Little (c.1757–1825). Their children included: Christian (b.1792); Robert (b.1794); and Thomas (b.1799). He and his wife died in Newcastleton. John (c.1750–1821) eldest son of Robert, tenant of Hermitage. He farmed at Hermitage, Highfield, Crinkledyke and Deadwater. In some family trees he is confounded with an earlier John. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. In 1783 he married Christian Grieve (b.1753), but she died less than a year later; she was probably daughter of William Grieve, farmer at Southfield. He secondly married Margaret Scott from Skelfhill. His children included: Jean (1790–1886); Robert, who married a Miss Maxwell from Langholm and had children who emigrated to the U.S.A.; Janet, who married Robert Elliot from Haltwhistle, son of John who farmed Twislehope; James, who emigrated to the U.S.A.; John (1796–1833) in Nether Hindhope; Thomas (1815/6–87), who married Elizabeth Turnbull and succeeded his brother as farmer at farmed at Nether Hindhope; Catherine, married Robert Webster; Mary, married Robert Hall of Doanham in 1846; Elizabeth, married Gideon Yule from Kelso; and Margaret, who married John Dagg from Kidderminster. He is buried at Ettleton Cemetery, the stone being inscribed 'Here lyes John Elliot in Burnmouth and Christian Grieve his spouse'. John of Binks (1754–1820) eldest son of Robert. He served as an executor for Henry of Peel, who died in 1780. He owned Binks from at least 1788 (when it was valued at £300) and was listed as owner of Binks in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. In 1790 he married Mary Robson (1767–1858) in 1790, who was from Boghall, daughter of Adam Robson and Helen Hume; her sister Janet also married a John Elliot and she must have been related to his mother, who was also a Robson from Boghall. Their children were: Robert (b.1791), who died young; Jane or Jean (b.1792), who married William Nixon of Lynnwood; another Robert (1794–1814); Helen (b.1796), 'the White Rose of Liddesdale', who married Archibald Blake from Liverpool; Elizabeth (d.1798), who died in infancy; John (b.1799), who married Mary, daughter of Thomas Smith of Darnick and farmed at Calaburn; and another Elizabeth, who married William Turnbull of Merrylaw in 1847. In 1851 his widow was listed as an 'Annuitant, Gentlewoman', farming about 610 acres at Binks. He died at Burnmouth and is buried in Castleton Cemetery. He is probably the John who was recorded as farmer at Burnmouth on the 1785–97 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls, and who was of Binks' when listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. His will was registered with Peebles Commissary Court in 1821. John (1753/4–1817) resident of Roberton Parish. He is recorded living at Borthwickbrae in 1794 and Woodburn in 1798. In 1787 in Cavers Parish he married Elizabeth or 'Betsy' Scott (1757/8–1842), who died in Hawick. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1792); James (1794–1884), long-time proprietor of the Ewe and Lamb in Hawick; and Jean (b.1798). The marriage is probably the one recorded between James and Betty Scott in Cavers in 1787. He died at Branxholme and the family are buried at Borthwick Waas. John (18th/19th C.) lived at Bowanhill, near Teviothead. He is probably related to the earlier Archibald who farmed there, as well as Walter, who was there at about the same time. Based on a letter from his son Archibald to Walter's son Thomas, they were cousins, meaning he was brother of Walter, and perhaps son of the earlier Archibald. He married Margaret Turnbull in 1793. Their children included: Archibald (b.1800); Walter, married Jean Anderson and emigrated to Delaware County, New York; John; Margaret, who married Thomas Thompson and later George Stewart; and Betty, who married a Mr. Thompson. John of Cooms (1740/1–1809) married Margaret Helen (b.1776), daughter of Rev. John Russell, minister at Canonbie. He died at Newlands in Liddesdale. John (1760–1806) son of Ninian and Ester Crozier. He was born at Burnmouth in Liddesdale. A family pedigree describes him being 'in Middlemoss'. He married Janet Robson (1761–1848), daughter of Adam Robson and Helen Hume; her sister Mary married another John Elliot. Their children included: Ninian (1789–1870), who died in Westminster Township, Canada; Adam (1791–1871), who died in Ontario; Helen (b.1794), who joined her brothers in Ontario; Ester (b.1797), who married Robert Elliot in Powisholm; Mary (1801–77), who died in Newcastleton; and Janet (1805–81), who died at Teviothead. He died at Middlemoss, near Langholm. John of Whithaugh (1759–1847) eldest son of William of Whithaugh. He was served heir to his grandfather John in 1777. In 1788 his lands of Whithaugh (half of the former farm) were valued at £200 3s. He subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' in 1784, a theological book by a Carlisle author in 1786 and John Learmont's book of poetry in 1791. He is recorded as farmer at Whithaugh on the 1785–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He was also taxed for having a non-working dog in 1797. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819, and also served as a Justice of the Peace. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821 and Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He is probably the John of Whithaugh listed on Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories; Walter was also listed as a farmer there at about the same time. He was listed as head of his household at Whithaugh in 1835–41. He married Jean (1758–87), daughter of Elliot of Binks. They had 1 child, Elizabeth, who married Thomas Keir from Powisholm, and whose son William Keir inherited Whithaugh. He was still alive in 1841, when he was 'Esquire of Whithaugh' and in his 80s. His will is register in the Jedburgh Sheriff Court in 1848. John (1769–1823) son of Henry, he was tenant farmer at Flatt in Liddesdale. He was already at Flatt in 1791 when he subscribed to John Learmont's book of poetry. He is recorded as farmer at Flatt on the 1792–97 Horse Tax Rolls; he owned 7 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He was also taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. He married Jean Scott, from Ladhope in Yarrow, who died in 1838, aged 63. Their children included: Henry (1793–1818), who died in Jamaica; Margaret (b.1794–1804); Janet (b.1795), who married Robert Elliot of Redheugh; William (1796–1838); Jean (b.1798), who died in infancy; Jean (again, b.1800); John (1801–40), engineer in Glasgow, who married Helen Elliot of Kirkdean, granddaughter of Elliot of Harwood; James (1803/4–80), who died at Westwater; and Margaret (again, b.1809). This Margaret may have been the 'Miss M. Elliot, Flatt' who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. John (b.1767) cooper in Castleton Parish, son of William and Anna Scott, descended from the Elliots of Falnash. Some of his children were born at Byreholm. He married Elizabeth Crozier and their children included: William (b.1790), probably shoemaker in Newcastleton; Gideon (b.1791); Helen (b.1793); Anne (b.1798); Elizabeth (b.1803); John (b.1804), who probably died young; and Margaret (b.1808). John (b.1768) labourer at Wauchope Gardens, Blackcleuchmouth and Templehallshiels. He was son of John in Wigg and surely related to William in Templehallshiels. He married Betsy Taylor and their children included: William (b.1798), who lived at Wauchope Cottages; Betty (b.1800); John (b.1802); Walter F. (b.1804); Robert (b.1807); Alexander (b.1809), probably the shoemaker in Hawick; Margaret (b.1813); and Agnes (b.1815). Most of the family emigrated to Otsego County, New York. John (b.1769) son of William in Hillhouse and Mary Haliburton. He was born in Castleton Parish and became a merchant in London. He married Miss Robinson in London and they had 13 children, William, Robert, Margaret, John, Mary, Ann, Jane, Eliza, Mary, Thomas, Louisa, George and Walter. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1794 he married Agnes Inglis, also from Hawick. It is possible they are the couple of the same names who had children in Melrose Parish. John (18th/19th C.) resident in Denholm, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. No occupation or other information is given. He could be the tenant in Denholm whose son John was born in 1804. John (18th/19th C.) labourer at Blackleemouth in Hobkirk Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. John (18th/19th C.) lawyer who set up a partnership with John Oliver in Hawick around 1790. They became agents for the Commercial Bank around 1820 and are listed as writers in Hawick in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He may be the 'John Elliot, Hawick' who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He is probably the John who in 1822 got together with manufacturers William and Walter Wilson, brothers Joseph and William Nixon, Town Clerk John Oliver and John Elliot, to share a 'gig', before any long-distance transportation was available other than the mail coach. However, he left for Jedburgh in 1829 to become Sheriff-Substitute, which office he held until 1835. The Hawick firm eventually became Geo. & Jas. Oliver's. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. John (b.c.1780) resident of Rashiegrain according to the ballot for the Militia in Hawick Parish in 1801. John of Reidheugh (18th/19th C.) recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. It is unclear who this is, since the owner at that time was Robert Elliot; perhaps this is an error. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. He had several children baptised there, including John (b.1807), Brown (b.1820), Elizabeth (b.1822), Jane (b.1824) and an unnamed child (b.1826). John Edmund of New Belses (1788–1862), youngest son of the 1st Earl of Minto. He was named after the statesman Edmund Burke. He had a successful career in the Bengal civil service. He accompanied his father back from India in 1814 and had to perform the sad duty of carrying the news of his death to the Borderers who were awaiting his triumphal return to Minto (including celebrations for drawing his carriage through Hawick). He is probably the 'Hon. J.E. Elliot, Eildonhall' who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He was elected Liberal M.P. for Roxburghshire in 1837, when several people in Hawick were prosecuted for rioting. He spoke in the House of Commons in the following year, when Sir James Graham proposed a motion that Hawick be removed as a polling place; he supported the actions of the Bailies and townspeople, and claimed that the situation had been exaggerated by the other side (and perhaps fabricated in order to discredit the election). In 1841 he received a majority in Hawick, but lost to Francis Scott in the County. However, he was re-elected in 1847 and remained M.P. until 1859, being elected unopposed in 1852 and 1857. In a directory of 1852 he was listed as living at Wilton Lodge and a story is told of his wife trying to get a pair of shoes from Jock Weens, intending to pay later (which was against the old cobbler's strict payment rules). He was donor of a silver-mounted hammer for the Chief Magistrate's use in Council meetings (engraved with his initial electoral poll results). He was also made an Honorary Burgess in 1837. He was a keen hunter (despite his weight), keeping his own pack of hounds until 1844. He was elected as a Life Member of the Archæological Society in 1858. He held lands at Belses, Ryeknow and Abbotsmeadow, which were sold to the Marquess of Lothian in 1872. In 1809 he married Amelia, 3rd daughter of James Henry Cassamajor of Madras and they had 6 children: Amelia Jane (d.1837), who married Thomas Campbell Robertson; Anna Maria Elizabeth, who married Pierce G.E. Taylor; Lt.-Col. Edmund James (1813–54), who married Matilda Inglis, and died in the Crimean War; William Brownrigg of Benrig (1820–1900), who married Mary Geraldine McCartie; Capt. Amyand Powney Charles of the Bengal Army (1823–69), who married Anna Maria Alexander; and Augustus John (1824–89) of the Bengal Civil Service, who married Helen Lewis and Katherine Mangles. John (b.c.1780) servant at Whithaugh in Castleton Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. He could be the same as one of the other Johns. John (1780/1–64) from Castleton Parish, he married Ann Graham, who was from Hartsgarth. Their children were: Ellen (b.1816), who probably died young; and John (1818–1902), who married Agnes Beattie and Elizabeth Nichol in Canada. In 1818 the family emigrated to New Brunswick, with the infant John. His wife died on the voyage and he later married Helen, with whom he had daughters Elizabeth and Ellen. The family settled in Westminster Township, Middlesex County, Ontario in 1836. He was a farmer and strong churchman and gave land for the First Presbyterian Church in Westminster Township. There were several Johns born in Castleton Parish around 1781, so he could be son of John and Janet Turnbull, or Walter and Isabel Douglas or a different John entirely. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Isabel Hogg and their children included: Margaret (b.1808), who married George Stewart; Matthew (b.1811); Nelly (b.1813); Robert (b.1815); Henry (b.1817); and Janet (b.1819). John (18th/19th C.) labourer at Hartsgarthburnside. He was listed among male heads of households in 1835 and 1836. John (d.1848) perhaps son of John from Morebattle. Some of his children were born in Morebattle Parish, but most in Bedrule Parish. He was associated with Ruecastle in Bedrule Parish. He married Isabel Turnbull (1783–1854), who was born in Northumberland. Their children included: John (1806–73); James (1809–85); Andrew (1811–79); William (1813–81); Mary (1815–83); Robert (1818–89); Brown (1820–93); Elizabeth (1822–45); Jane (1822–51); and Isabel (1826–91). The entire family emigrated to Howick, Quebec, where they died. John (c.1785–1854) son of James and Helen Elliot. He was born in Castleton Parish and worked as a shepherd. He married Helen Murray and in 1818 the family emigrated to America, settling in New Brunswick and then in Westminster Township, Middlesex County, Ontario. Their children included: James (b.1811); Elizabeth (b.1813), who died young; Rev. Charles, D.D. (b.1815); John (b.1817), who died on the passage to America; John (1819–99); and possibly Helen. John (1788–1878) son of Walter, who farmed at Bowanhill. He lived in Roberton Parish and was in Liddesdale in 1824, but at about that time he emigrated with his family (along with his mother Isobel Grieve) to Bathurst Township, Ontario, where his brother William lived. He later settled in Andes, Delaware County, New York State, following his brother Thomas, who had gone there several years earlier. In 1809 he married Margaret Oliver in Cavers Parish. Their children included: Janet or Jennie (1811–82); Isabel (b.1812); Walter (1814–91); George (b.1816); Margaret (1820–39); and Nelly (b.c.1825), who was born in Canada. He died in Andes, New York. Based on naming conventions, his wife may be Margaret (b.1772), youngest daughter of George Oliver and Jean Scott, from Castleton Parish. John (1788/9–1869) son of Andrew, shepherd at Halterburn. He was an agricultural labourer living at Shiplaw Corse in Cavers Parish from about 1830, but before that appears to have lived in Roxburgh, Ashkirk and Ettrick Parishes. In 1815 in Ancrum Parish he married Margaret Hart, who died before 1841, when the family are listed at 'Sheeplawcross'. In 1851 he was shepherd at Wester Essenside. Their children included: Margaret (b.1816); Andrew (b.1817); Mary (b.1821), who probably married William Irvine, farmer at Cavers Mains; Christina (b.1823); Isabel (b.1827), who probably married Robert Elliot, gamekeeper at Cavers East Lodge; John (b.1832); Janet (b.1833); Elizabeth (b.1836); George (b.1837); and Agnes (b.1837). John (b.1790/1) agricultural labourer living in Parkhillhaugh in 1841 and Deanburnhaugh in 1851. He married Jane (or 'Jean') Goodfellow (1795–1860) in Roberton Parish in 1818 and their children included: Francis (b.1818), whose wife was Christina; Elizabeth (b.1820); James (b.1822); William (b.1824); John (b.1827); and Gideon (1833–1913). John (b.1795/5) born in Canonbie, he was an agricultural labourer in Castleton and Southdean Parishes. In 1835–41 he was living at Clerkleap and in 1851 was at Westerhouses. He married Henrietta Carruthers and their children included: Janet (b.c.1821); Gilbert (b.1831); Henry (b.1833); Mary (b.1836); Matthew (b.1838); and Elizabeth (b.1841). John (1795–1859) 2nd son of William 'of Carlenrickrig' (who was an architect in Kelso) and grandson of the minister of Cavers. He was born in Kelso and became a solicitor in Hawick and Jedburgh. In 1841 and 1851 he was a banker in Jedburgh, where he lived at Boundary Bank. However, by 1851 he is described as blind. He married Janet Usher (daughter of Thomas of Courthill). Their children included William (procurator in the Roxburghshire Sheriff Court), Thomas Usher, Isabella, John, Jane Robertson, Charles Scott, Elizabeth Pott and Esther. He should not be confused with the earlier lawyer John who had a partnership with John Oliver in Hawick before moving to Jedburgh. John John (1795/6–1834) son of Walter and Helen Crozier. He was tenant in Templehall. John (1796–1833) son of John, who farmed at Highfield, Crinkledyke and Deadwater, and grandson of Robert in Hermitage. He was tenant in Nether Hyndhope in Oxnam Parish. After his death he was succeeded as farmer by his brother Thomas. John (1796/7–1875) shepherd at Blinkbonny in Castleton Parish. He was listed there among heads of households in 1835. In 1841 he was a labourer in Newcastleton, living on North Hermitage Street. In 1851 and 1861 he was at Blinkbonny. He married Jean Armstrong (1809/10–85) from Kirkpatrick. Their children were: Janet (1828–52); Helen (1829–60); Jane (1833–97), who married James Beattie; William (b.1836), also died young; Robert (b.1837), also died young; William (1840/1–60). He must also have lived at Border Rigg, where some of his children died. The family are buried at Ettleton. John of Binks (1799–1875) eldest surviving son of John of Binks and Mary Robson. He purchased Calaburn in Wilton Parish. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. In Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories and Slater's 1852 directory he is listed as owner of Burnmouth. He is probably the farmer at Burnmouth listed among heads of households in 1835–41. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He is listed at Upper Burnmouth in 1841, along with Janet, possibly a relative. In 1851 he was farming 2,000 acres there and employed 6 labourers. By 1861 he was farming 5,000 acres and employing 10 people. He was still at Burnmouth in 1868. In 1851 he married Mary, 2nd daughter of Thomas Smith, architect in Darnick. Their children were: John (1853–1909), who married

Jane Pott Oliver; Jane (1855–1939); who married Rev. John C. Martin; and Mary (c.1858–1941). He died at Burnmouth and is probably buried in Castleton Cemetery. His portrait, by an unknown artist, is in the Museum. John (18th/19th C.) grocer and labourer in Newcastleton. He is listed among heads of households in 1835–38. John (18th/19th C.) shepherd in Castleton Parish. He is listed among heads of households at Newhouses in England in 1836 and perhaps the same shepherd is at Sorbietrees in 1840 and 1841. John (b.1800/1) from Castleton, he was a tailor who lived at Quarrelhaa, near Harwood-on-Teviot. It seems possible he was related to Henry and Adam, who are recorded as tailors in Newcastleton in 1841. In 1851 he was a tailor employing 2 men. He married Helen Scott (b.c.1806) from Galashiels. Their children included: Janet (b.1824); Robert (b.1826); John, Mungo (b.1828); William (b.1830); James Rutherford (b.1832); Nenion (note the spelling, b.1834), a lawyer in Edinburgh; Walter (b.1840); Edward (b.1842); Elizabeth (b.1844); and Thomas (b.1846). It seems the family must have moved from the area before the 1861 census. John (1801–40) son of John, tenant in Flatt in Castleton Parish, with his mother being Jean Scott from Ladhope. He was an engineer in Glasgow. He married Helen Elliot (1812/3–82), daughter of Thomas of Kirndean and grand-daughter of Elliot of Harwood. They had a son, John (1839–97), who was also tenant in Flatt. John (b.1801/2) from England, he was a shoemaker in Newcastleton. He was listed among heads of households for the first time in 1840. He was listed in Slater's 1852 directory. He married Margaret Pott (from Castleton Parish) and their children included: Betty; Andrew; James; John (b.1840); Isabel (b.1844), Esther (b.1844), twin of Isabel; and Margaret (b.1846). He lived at about 2 Whitchester Lane. John (1801/2–90) from Southdean Parish. In the 1830s he moved to Ross and Cromarty, where he was manager at Tarbot Mains farm, Poinicol, for about 50 years. He married Margaret Dagg from Castleton. Their children were: William (1825–94), who died at Poinicol; and Michael (1827–82), who died in Melbourne. John (1808–89) son of Matthew, who farmed at Netherraw, with his mother being Janet Scott. He worked as a labourer and roadman in Newcastleton. He was listed as labourer (and son of Matthew) among heads of households in 1841. In 1841 he was at about 21 North Hermitage Street. In 1861 he was on Douglas Square. Later he was tenant at Sandholm. He was said to be very knowledgeable about the area, and helped the Berwickshire Naturalists' Club on their tour of upper Liddesdale in 1889, shortly before he died. He married Frances (or 'Fanny') Broadfoot Wilson, and she died at the Grapes Inn, Newcastleton, in 1860, aged 62. He secondly married Mary Thomson. His children included: William (1826–47); Matthew (1828–65), who died in London; Margaret (1829–1904), who died in Newcastle; James (1830–77), who was innkeeper of the Grapes Inn; Janet (b.1833); Andrew (1835–1905), who died in Birmingham; John (b.1838), road surveyor; and Helen (1842–1908), who died at Brox. John (1809–81) younger son of William of Harwood and Helen Rutherford. He was born at Hundalee and farmed at Primrosehill. He married Jane, daughter of Archibald Jerdan of Bonjedward and they had a son and 2 daughters. Rev. John Elphinstone (1810–90) son of James, 3rd Laird of Wolfelee. He trained as a lawyer, apprenticing to William Bell and becoming Writer to the Signet in 1833. He was appointed as Rector of Whalton, Morpeth. In 1843 he married Georgina, daughter of Col. Ralph Bates of Milburn and changed his surname to Elliot-Bates. John (b.1810) son of Ninian and brother of Ninian and James. Like his brothers, he was a road contractor in Newcastleton. In 1861 he was living on Douglas Square with his son James (probably keeper of the Grapes Inn) and daughter Helen. He was recorded as proprietor of the Grapes Inn in the 1860s. His brother Ninian was also a road contractor. John (1811–88) from Castleton Parish, son of James and Janet Grieve. In 1841 he was a carrier, living at Scaurnook in Roberton. He married Helen, daughter of shepherd William Murray; she died at Oliver Place in Hawick in 1909, aged 86. His children included Helen Grieve (d.1855), who died at the age of 4, and 2 sons who died in infancy. John (b.1816/7) carter in Newcastleton, on Doncaster Street. In 1851 he was living with his sister Helen and nephew George Aitchison. By 1861 he had a 2nd wife Betty, and step-children James Scott and David Scott. They also had children Janet and Margaret. John (19th C.) Inspector of Nuisances in Newcastleton in the 1860s. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (b.1819/20) born in Castleton, he was an agricultural labourer in Cavers and Teviothead Parishes. In 1851 he was at Castleweary. In 1861 he was farm steward, living at Borthaugh Cottages. He married Jane Murray and their children were: William (b.1839); Matthew (b.1843); and Gideon

(b.1845). John (19th C.) married Ann Laing in Hawick Parish in 1840. John (b.1822/3) born in Castleton Parish, he was a labourer in Hobkirk. In 1851 he was at East Fodderlee Cottages and in 1861 was a ploughman at Bonchester Cottages. He later lived in Southdean Parish and in Denholm. In 1846 he married Christian (or Catherine) Scott Crozier (b.1825), from Ettrick. Their children were: William (b.1846); Jane (b.1848); Thomas (b.1852); Robert (b.c.1854); Patrick (b.c.1855); David (b.1856); Scott (b.1860); Margaret Murray (b.1862); and John (b.c.1863). John (b.1823/4) son of Matthew and Dorothy Purdom, he was born in Castleton Parish. He was a labourer living at Adderstoneshiel Stable in 1841, with his family at Adderstoneshiel in 1851 and a ploughman at Barnes in Kirkton Parish in 1861. He married Sibella Hunter (from Langholm) in Wilton in 1848 and their children included (b.c.1849): Elizabeth; Matthew (b.1851); John (b.1852); James (b.1855); Thomas (b.1858); William (b.1861); Margaret (b.1863); Dorothy (b.1865); and Georgina (b.1867). Some of the family may have emigrated to Huron County, Ontario. John 'Jock' (b.c.1825) son of George and Agnes Beattie. His grandfather drowned, perhaps when he was thrown into Whitehaugh pond near Newcastleton. He lived near Bonchester Bridge since about the 1870s and worked as a dyker. His biography is told by Tancred in 'Rulewater'; if some information was incorrect, he could be the same as one of the Johns from Castleton. John (b.1825/6) shoemaker in Newcastleton, son of William, who was also a shoemaker. In 1851 he was living on North Hermitage Street and in 1861 on Douglas Square. In 1849 he married Jane (or Jean, 1826–1905) daughter of Robert McVittie from Fiddleton in Ewesdale. Their children included: Jane (b.1850); Christian (b.1851); Janet (b.1853); Robert (b.1855); Mary (b.1857); William (b.1860); Helen (b.1863); Elizabeth (b.1866); and Isabella Anne (1869–1927), who married John Nichol and died in Ontario. John Scott (1829–1914) son of Robert and Janet Black. He was Cornet in 1851, when he was a joiner's apprentice. In 1855 he married Mary Scott, from Southdean. They had a daughter Margaret (b.1855). By 1857 he had emigrated to Culross, Ontario, along with his wife and daughter, as well as his brother Thomas. John (1830/1–1915) tenant in West Middles in Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Mary Scott, who died in 1904, aged 73. They had 2 sons called Robert who died young. They are buried at Ettleton. John Davidson (1834–96) son of Robert and Eleanor Davidson, he was born in Castleton Parish. In 1860 he married Mary, daughter of Christopher Foster. Their children were: Margaret (b.1863); Helen (b.1865); Jane (b.1868); Robert (b.1870); Isabella (b.1872); Christopher (b.1875); and Mary (b.1880). He died at Clerkleap, killed by being knocked down by a goods train. John (b.1835) son of James, a spirit dealer at 3 Orrock Place. His mother was Helen Paterson. He worked as a railway clerk and bank clerk. He was Cornet in 1855 and can be seen as Left-hand Man in the first photograph of the Common-Riding Principals. John (1836–58) 2nd son of Robert of Redheugh. He was baptised in Castleton Parish and died at Cardona, Mexico, predeceasing his father. He became a member of the Archæological Society, in 1858 donated a collection of Mexico insects to the Museum and in 1860 (presumably arranged before his death) a collection of 5 quadrupeds and 12 birds from Mexico. John (1836–1905) son of Ninian, he was a roadman like his father. In 1864 he married Jane Jackson (1840–1912). Their children were Jane (b.1865), James (b.1866), Eliza Jane (b.1868) and Marion (b.1871). John (1838–1913) son of John. He was District Road Surveyor in Newcastleton. He married Betsy, daughter of innkeeper John Scott; she died in 1889, aged 60. Their children included: Agnes (b.1865), who died in infancy; Archibald (1863/4–90); William (1861/2–1904); Frances Mary (1866/7–1907); and Jane (1872/3–1956) John (1839–97) born in Glasgow, son of John and Helen Elliot. He was farmer at Flatt in Castleton Parish, succeeding his uncle James there. He was recorded at Flatt in 1861 and 1868. When another uncle, John Scott-Elliot died, he succeeded to the liferent of Peel, and also carried on the leases on Kirndean, Myredykes and Singdean. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1863. He was said to have died unmarried, but also that the tenancies of his farms were continued by his son Walter. John (19th C.) partner in the builders firm Aitken & Elliot. He married Christina, daughter of James Wintrup. John (1853–1909) eldest son of John of Binks and Mary Smith. He is recorded as John 'of Binks, Burnmouth' when he became a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland in 1880. He matriculated arms in 1897. He owned Binks and also farmed at Burnmouth, like his father before him. He sold Calaburn, breaking his family's direct ties with the Hawick area.

He married Jane Pott Oliver and their children were: Maj. Edward John (1881–1918), who married Dorothy Allen Smith and was killed in action; Sina Gertrude Pott (1882–1965), who married Lieut.-Col. Edwyne Douglas-Jones; Lt.-Com. James Oliver (1883–1965), who married Margaret Hogben; Mary Smith Turnbull (1885–1967); John Stephen (1886–1972), Navy Captain and Surgeon, who married Magda Virginia Salvesen and became a lecturer at Newcastle University; Clement Nixon (1889–1969), who married Katherine Winnifred Penney and moved to Rhodesia; Edward John, who married Dorothy Allen, daughter of Richard Sidney Smith of Clifford Chambers, and was killed in WWI; Lt.-Col. Henry Hawes (1891–1972), who became Surgeon to the Viceroy of india and retired to Springbank, Melrose; Robin Alexander (1891–1969), twin of Henry, he became abanker in Canada; and Jean Oliver (b.1892), who was an Almoner at the Royal Free Hospital, London. Later in life he moved to Edinburgh and then for his health to Southsea, Hampshire, where he died. He was buried in Old Castleton cemetery. John Burns (1906/7–61), J.P., son of Andrew. He was a Councillor and cashier for the Gas Company. He married Margaret Butler, great-grand-daughter of Walter Grieve of Hawick. Joseph (18th/19th C.) coachman at Teviot Bank in Minto Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. Katherine of Arkleton (b.c.1700) daughter of William of Arkleton and Anne Ainslie of Jedburgh. She was married 3 times. Firstly (about 1720) she married David Laing of Westerkirk. Secondly, in 1727, she married Rev. Charles Telfer, who was minister of Hawick Parish. Thirdly, she married Robert Elliot of Fenwick (son of Francis and Rachel Langlands). Her only child appears to have been Gavin, who succeeded to Arkleton (but is said to have lived with a loose woman who he had to acknowledge as his wife to qualify his daughters to succeed to the estate). Katherine (b.1701) elder daughter of Adam of Teindside, she was baptised in Hawick Parish. In Wilton Parish in 1719 she married Robert, son of Robert of Midlem Mill. When her brother Walter died in 1721 she was served as his heir. Baroness Katharine 'Kay' (1903–1994), J.P. of Harwood, born Katharine Tennant in Peeblesshire, she was 7th daughter of Liberal politician Sir Charles Tennant and 3rd daughter with his 2nd wife Marguerite Agaranthe Miles, who was a talented musician. She died 171 years after her father was born, who had marched in support of the Reform Bill in 1832, while her grandfather was born just 7 years after the French Revolution and her great-grandfather was a witness at Robert Burns's christening in 1759. Her father died when she was 3 and her mother remarried to Major Geoffrey Lubbock. As a child she played at 10 Downing Street, where her half-sister Margot was married to Prime Minister Herbert Asquith. It is said that she once threw a toy onto the heads of suffragettes outside. She was educated at home, at Abbot's Hill School and in Paris. She studied politics at the London School of Economics, was an accomplished violinst, played the organ, spoke fluent French, rode until age 80 and boasted that she beat 2 Prime Ministers at golf. In 1934 she married Walter Elliot, Conservative M.P. for Glasgow Kelvingrove and they made their home at Harwood, near Bonchester. She was a leading public figure in her own right, being active in farming, council and social work. She was Chair of the National Association of Mixed Clubs and Girls' Clubs 1939–49, sat on the Home Office advisory committee on the treatment of offenders 1946–62 (visiting every prison in the U.K.), was on the advisory committee on childcare in Scotland 1956–65, was first Chair of the Consumer Council in 1963 and was Chairman of the Conservative Party in 1957. She was also part of the British delegation to the United Nations in 1954, 1956 and 1957. Through owning the Harwood estate, she became interested in farming, including buying and selling livestock and driving a tractor. She was made C.B.E. in 1948, D.B.E. in 1952 and was raised to the peerage in 1958 after her husband's death, becoming Baroness Elliot of Harwood. She took over the family auctioneering form of Lawrie & Symington and also stood to replace her deceased husband in Kelvingrove, losing by only a narrow margin. In local politics she served on Roxburghshire County Council for 29 years, serving on education and social work committees, as well as acting as Vice-Convener. She boasted that one of her greatest victories was getting a new sewage works for Bonchester. She also became a Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire in 1968. She worked tirelessly for the Conservative Party, although never abandoning some of her Liberal roots, being strongly against the death penalty and involved with prison reform, for example. She received an honorary L.L.D. from Glasgow University in 1959. She was the first woman, other than the Queen, to speak in the House of Lords and the first woman to get a private bill through the Lords. In 1973 the

Katharine Elliot Centre was named in her honour. The Tweeddale Press Group voted her 'Borders Man of the Year'. In 1993 she tripped over her parliamentary robes after the opening of Parliament and was rushed off to hospital, still in her robes, suffering a fractured hip. She died at Hawick Cottage Hospital shortly afterwards and was buried in Hobkirk Kirkyard. She was described as 'a sturdily built woman, wearing sensible, but rarely fashionable, clothes', who held the respect even of those who disagreed with her poltically (note her name is also spelled 'Katherine'). Lawrence (15th C.) recorded in 1456/7 as witness to the sasine for Ewesdale passing from Robert of Ewesdale to George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus. He may have been an Elliot of Ewesdale, and is listed as 'Law Elwald', along with Adam and Robin. Lawrence (15th C.) listed in 1482/3 along with James, Simon and John Elwald, as well as Robert Turnbull and Robert Dalgleish, when they were said to be rebels captured by Patrick Dickson, Bailie of Peebles. Perhaps the same 'laurencii elwald' was recorded at Mosspaul in 1494/5 when fined for non-appearance at the Court of the Justiciary, the Earl of Bothwell seving as surety (but 3 other men of the same name were also listed in 1494/5). Lawrence (15th C.) listed among Elliots and other men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He is listed separately from 2 other Laurences, but appears after William and David, sons of William, and before John in Thorlieshope. Lawrence (15th C.) recorded among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He is listed separately from 2 other Lawrences, along with Ralph, William, Edmund, Ingram, Martin and Lawrence (son of Martin). Lawrence (15th C.) son of Martin, he is listed among many Liddesdale men who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. The Lord of Liddesdale and Captain of Hermitage were fined as a result. Martin, listed just before him, as presumably his father. Len (20th C.) starting as a message boy with Stothart's in 1939, he eventually took over the firm when David Stothart retired in 1971. He ran Hawick's well-known toy emporium until its final closure in 1989. He is also believed to be the last person in Hawick to have gone through the 6-year apprenticeship as a saddler. Leon (16th C.) recorded as 'Leoni Elwald' on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale, when he and his brothers were the tenants of Sundhope. He was also listed as one of the tenants of Whitrope, along with William in Ramsiegill, John, Robert and another 'Leoni'. Madge Callaghan, M.B.E. (1928–) wife of Bob Known as a campaigner for the Waverley Line, she had a carriage on the new line nameed after her in 2015. She received an M.B.E. in 1998 for services to lawn tennis. She recited David Hill's poem 'The Bleach' on the 'Hawick Speaks' tape and on the 2006 CD 'Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry'. She was recorded speaking in dialect as part of the BBC 'Voices' project in 2004. Margaret nee Roger (16th C.) widow of Robert 'Elwand', who was a tenant of Mark Ker at Borthwickshiels. In 1540 she raised an action against 2 Murrays for stealing cattle from Borthwickshiels in 1528, apprehending her and burning her house. The Murrays defence was that their actions were part of a raid by the Earl of Angus (Lieutenant of the Borders) against thieves and traitors in Teviotdale and that she was harbouring such thieves, namely her sons David and Alexander, as well as helping her other sons John and Ringand (Ninian). Margaret (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers. She was probably related to Alison and John, who are also listed. Margaret (d.1697) heiress of Reidheugh, elder daughter of Robert. She was recorded paying the land tax (of £500) in 1663. In 1637 she married James Eliott, 6th son of Gilbert of Stobs in 1637. The couple were granted many of the Elliot lands in Liddesdale, excepting 3 farms that were given to her sister Esther and some farms that were held in 'liferent' by their father Robert. Her son Robert succeeded to the Redheugh and Larriston lands, but she retained a dower right to rentals from Larriston. She later reduced her claims in order to help her son's financial difficulties. She further reduced her claims on the family's former lands on Hermitage Water, which helped enable her grandson, Robert of Larriston, to buy back Larriston in 1695. However, right after her death Larriston Rig was sold off, and the rest of the estate was bought by Oliver of Dinlabyre in 1719. Margaret (17th/18th C.) daughter of Arthur of Harwood, who died in 1698. She was recorded as proprietor of Harwood in a 1710 land evaluation of Hawick Parish, with her lands being valued at more than £800, the third highest in the Parish. She was served heir to her father in 1711, probably when she reached the age of majority. She married William Elliot of Thorlieshope and they had 14 children. She is buried at Oxnam. Margaret nee Laing (d.1792) daughter of Walter Laing of Meikledale. She inherited

Meikledale, Flex, Old Melrose and Burnfoot-on-Ale. In 1764 she became the second wife of William of Borthwickbrae. She was recorded as owner of the Flex (valued at £114 10s 9d) in 1788, and also in about 1811 (although she was deceased by then). She also owned Wester Essenside, Leaphill and Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish, which were valued together at £952 in 1788. Her children included William (who succeeded to Borthwickbrae and changed his surname to include 'Lockhart'), Walter of Old Melrose, Margaret (who married David Simpson of Teviotbank) and at least two children who died young. Margaret (1779–1816) daughter of William of Arkleton, she was born in Jedburgh. In 1807 she married Adam, son of Rev. William Scott, Minister at Southdean. In 1810 her brother Robert died, and she succeeded him as the only surviving child of their father. She then assumed the surname Scott-Elliot and her son William succeeded to Arkleton. Margaret (19th C.) recorded as proprietor of a shoemaker's business on the Cross Wynd in Pigot's 1837 directory. Mrs. Marjorie L. nee Laidlaw (19th C.) from Ancrum Mains, daughter of Adam, who had been a builder in Hawick. She is sometimes incorrectly named as 'Margaret' rather than 'Marjorie'. She was the first librarian of Hawick Public Library 1878–94, and possibly only the second female chief librarian in Britain. She was said to be a forceful and dominating lady. She was married to a farmer, but later re-married to David McBurnie Watson. Another Mrs. Elliot, librarian, is recorded as a member of Allars Kirk in 1829, although it is hard to see that this can be the same woman. Mark (d.1564) recorded as being 'callit of the Hill' when he was found guilty of sheep-stealing and reset and hanged. Those convicted along with him were Hob Scott 'of Colyfurd' and John Scott 'the Clerk'. He may be related to later Elliots of the Hill. Mark of the Hill (d.1611) probably the son of Archibald of the Hill who was recorded in 1602. The pair were listed among Armstrongs who killed a shepherd at Hallrule and stole about 120 sheep. Probably the same Mark of the Hill was listed among a large group of Elliots who were accused in 1590 of taking Ralph Hall and others prisoner and ransoming them. He was probably the Mark listed along with James and Jock of the Hill among Scotsmen accused of raids into England in 1595. He was listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners' court in Jedburgh in 1605. He was recorded being 'in the Hill' when he was convicted and executed at Jedburgh court in 1611. He was probably a descendant of the earlier Mark of the Hill. Mark (1776–1854) brother of Maj. William Elliot of Harwood and also Thomas. He served as a private soldier in the Royal Marines and was present at the mutiny of the Nore in 1797. He later served as a Captain in the Roxburghshire Yeomanry, and helped get the Liddesdale men to the muster in Hawick. A story is told of him at an inspection of the troops in Hawick, during which his horse made a bolt forward. When Capt. Elliot of Harwood asked 'Where the devil are you going Mark?', he replied 'Ask my horse'. He was tenant farmer at Lanton, where he died unmarried. A portrait of him hung at Clifton Park. Mark (18th/19th C.) resident of Tythehouse in Hobkirk Parish according to the ballots for the Militia in 1799 and 1801. In 1801 he was listed as 'Mr' suggesting a certain status; his servant John Lunn was also on the ballot in 1801. Martin (15th C.) mentioned in 1494/5 when he was listed among Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire. His son Lawrence was listed just after him. He may have been related to the later Martins. Martin 'of Abye' and of Braidlie (d.c.1590), possibly second son of Robert of Redheugh who died at Flodden (in which case he must have been born before 1513). However, he could instead have been son of the next Robert of Redheugh (b.c.1505, 14th Chief), and hence born somewhat later. He was first known as 'of Abye', these probably being the Abbey lands in north-eastern Liddesdale that were once owned by Jedburgh Abbey. He acted as the effective leader of the Elliots in roughly the period 1563–73, presumably during the minority of his nephew. He received a Crown Charter to the lands at Braidlie in 1549; although it would seem to make more sense for this to be the lands on the Hermitage Water, in fact it seems that these were the lands on the Borthwick Water (as claimed in the Dowager Elliot's history). He is mentioned in 1556/7 as brother of Robert of Redheugh. He was recorded in 1561 as 'Martine Elwald of Reideuch' among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. In 1563 he had a bond with Robert of Redheugh to enter Jock, son of Gavin Elliot of Ramsiegill, to Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst. He was probably the Elliot of Braidlie who led the 'Brodies' in the burning of Hawick in 1565, as part of a feud with the Scotts of Branxholme and Buccleuch, perhaps sparked by the murder of David Scott of Hassindean in 1564. A raid by about 300 Elliots resulted in about 10 miles of Scott of Buccleuch's land being burned, and the deaths of many men, women and children. Counter raids followed on Liddesdale and Teviotdale for the next few years. Also in 1565 he had offered to make a deal with Lord Scrope, handing over Hermitage in return for English protection; although the offer was not fully taken up, the Elliots did receive support from the English Wardens. He was probably involved in the ambush of Scotts by Elliots at Ewes Doors in 1565. In 1566 the Elliots were again raiding into England, and the feud with the Scotts appears to have been resolved. His force to have defeated that of the Earl of Bothwell in 1566/7, sent to subdue the Elliots and others. In 1567 he received a pardon for his former crimes, and agreed to keep peace on the Border, being given money by both the English and Scottish authorities. He may have been among the roughly 300 men who raided Torwoodlee in 1568 (perhaps slaying several Pringles), and was one of the men summoned to settle the feud between the Pringles and Elliots in 1575. In 1569 he was said to have met the Black Laird of Ormiston in Liddesdale and forced him to stop giving refuge to the English Earls of Northumberland and Westmorland to return to England (from where they had fled after an uprising in support of Mary, Queen of Scots). He and Archibald Armstrong promised in 1569 to enter into ward John Elliot of Thorlieshope. In 1569 he also served as pledge for 'the haill branche of the Reidheuch that dwellis within the Swyris', with Alexander Home of Manderston as his surety. He was also pledge for the Nixons in the same year. Additionally in 1569 he gave assurances, along with Archibald Armstrong of Mangerton and Lancie Armstrong of Whithaugh, to 'Rowie Forester' (who was probably the deputy English Warden), 'that thai sall mak obedience according to the rest of the cuntre'. Also in 1569 he was recorded being held 'with My Lord Regentis Grace' as pledge for his eldest son Simon, as well as 'Archeis Hob'. Furthermore, in 1569 he appeared in Edinburgh to request that he be released from ward to return temporarily to Liddesdale, to be replaced with his nephew Gib and offered to give service 'in keping the hous of Armitage'; he signed 'with his hand at the pen'. In 1570 he wrote to the English Warden, Sir John Forster, making a deal that avoided Liddesdale being ravaged by the English on their way to Teviotdale. Also in 1570 he headed a group of Elliots who signed a bond, giving pledges for Hob, son of Elder Will Elliot and John Elliot of Heuchhouse. In about 1572, Robert of Redheugh came of age, and he ceased to be the leader of the clan; later there would be strife between the two sets of the Elliots that they led. He was probably the 'Martin of Brady' who gave a pledge for the surname of Nixon in 1573. In 1574 he was given 'liferent' of the teinds of Castleton by Scott of Buccleuch. According to the register of the Privy Council he gave a pledge for the Nixons in 1573, was also surety in 1574, was moved from ward in Blackness to St. Andrews and had reentry in ward in 1577. In 1575 he was summoned to appear to answer for the feud between the Elliots and the Pringles. He was said to have built himself a strong tower around 1576, described in an English letter being 'strongly vawted, att the head of Liddell, with open ventes for traynes of powder'; this was distinct from Larriston, but it is unclear where it was situated. In 1578 John Cockburn of Ormiston and John Carmichael, younger of that Ilk promised the Privy Council to apprehend him. In 1578/9 William Ker of Cessford and Andrew Ker of Faldonside were cautioners for him, pledging that he would not raid into England. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned; he had been surety for several different sets of men (mainly Elliots), who had not been entered into ward as promised. He is probably the Martin who in 1579 purchased a 10 poundland of land 'of Reuhop or Philop' in the Barony of Hawick from John Turnbull; he granted a reversion on these lands and then immediately gave sasine to his son Simon (who would become known as Simon of Philhope). His sons 'Sym, Gawin, Arche and Hob' are mentioned in 1580; they were implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh (and it may be that he was the instigator of the raid on Whitlaw that preceeded it). In 1580 there was a complaint by the Countess of Bothwell, James Gledstains of Cocklaw and Wat Scott of Harden that he was maintaining Lancie Armstrong of Whithaugh and his family and followers, and that a group of Elliots of the Park and Gorrenberry had attacked Harwood, Whitlaw and Hoscote; this included his own sons Gavin, Hobbie and Archie, as well as his nephews Airchie, Gib and Dandie. In 1580/1 there was caution of £2000 for his entry to the Privy Council 'when warned'. In 1581 he and John Turnbull of Minto were caution for the reentry of Hob Elliot of Braidlie (who had been released from prison in Edinburgh), as pledge for the Elliots of Gorrenberry. Also in that year he was among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. In 1581 he was allied with Simon Armstrong of Mangerton and Lance Armstrong of Whithaugh when they made a set of complaints against Walter Scott of Goldielands, James Gledstains of Cocklaw and Robert Elliot of Redheugh; he specifically complained about a group of Scotts attacking his farm of Northcroft, and of another group of Scotts attacking his sons Hob and Dand as they rode near Headshaw. All the leaders were charged to appear before the Privy Council with pledges of assurance from their supporters; it is interesting that at that time he appeared to be on sided against Robert of Redheugh. And lastly, in 1581 he had a bond of caution with Lancie Armstrong of Whithaugh and a number of other Elliots, entered with John Carmichael, who had been Keeper of Liddesdale. In 1581/2 he was declared a rebel for the non-appearance of his supporters who had been accused of raiding Eilrig, Bellendean and other farms. Along with Robert of Redheugh and 2 Armstrongs, he was also denounced in 1582/3 by the Privy Council for failing to make redress for the crimes committed by their tenants and servants. The Elliots of Braidlie are listed in an English letter of 1583 as Martin, his son Simon, Gavin 'the Clerk', Hobbie, Archie (all 4 of these probably his sons), Jock 'Copshaw', John of Thorlieshope, Will of the Steele, Dand and John of Braidlie (probably also his sons) and Simon of Harden; they were probably all closely related to him. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4 to give their advice regarding the quieting of the troubles in Liddesdale and Teviotdale, and it appears that the feud between factions within the Elliot clan were resolved at this time. In 1584 he was listed second among the Elliots when they gave a bond of assurance to the English Wardens at Hermitage Castle. In 1586 he and Robert of Redheugh were explicitly listed as leaders in Liddesdale in instructions from King James to Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. In 1586 he and his eldest son Simon had a lease of lands from the Earl of Bothwell, including Kilford, 'Hietrie Clewis' and 'Ricartoun Cleucht'. In 1589 he was listed among leaders in Liddesdale who signed a bond for keeping peace with England. Also in 1589 he was on a list of Border Lairds who failed to appear before the Privy Council to give 'thair gude advise anent the gude reule and quietnes of the Bordouris' and were denounced as rebels. There was a 'letter of horning' against him for failing to appear in 1589. He was listed on the roll of 'Landit Men' of Scotland in about 1590 and also listed among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. He was last definitively mentioned at a Wardens' meeting at the Bell Kirk in April 1590. Also in 1590 he was on a list of Elliots accused of raiding the English farm of 'Whynatlie' in the previous year, stealing 60 cows, 2 horses, taking goods worth £100 and burning 5 houses; others listed include his sons Airchie and Hob, as well as Robert of Redheugh (his nephew); of course he may not have been on this raid himself. In 1591 he had a charter of 'liferent' of 'the ten pund land of auld extent of Phillop' from James VI, confirmed by Parliament the following year; he must have been very old by this time, or this was the later Martin of Braidlie. He is mentioned in one version of the ballad 'Jamie Telfer', where he is referred to as being 'of the Preakin Tower', i.e. Prickinghaugh, which may have been his home for a while. He was among several Elliots who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6 (although, since he was probably deceased by then, this may have been his grandson, also called Martin of Braidlie). He is probably the man mentioned in an English letter of 1596 stating that 'Martin Ellott has erected a strong tower hard by the March, within this twenty or some odd yeares, strongly vawted, att the head of Liddell, with open ventes for traynes of powder'; this may have been Prickinghaugh. He may have married an Armstrong (supported by his first son being called Simon) and their children were: Simon, probably first Elliot of Philhope; William of Braidlie, who married Mary Scott of Buccleuch and was hanged in 1607; Robert of Braidlie, called 'Martin's Hob of Prickenhaugh', whose son and grandson were both declared fugitives; Andrew 'Dand'; Archibald, called 'Martin's Archie of Clintwood', banished from both Kingdoms; Gavin; Gilbert, 'Gib'; John, called 'Martin's John of Burnmouth', denounced a rebel; and a daughter who married Francis Foster of Kershopefoot. Martin 'Martin o Heuchhouse' (16th C.) one of the 10 thieves captured in Hawick in 1567 and held in Edinburgh tolbooth, unlike many of the others who were drowned. He was probably a descendant of the William 'in Heuchous' recorded in 1516. If he was not executed in 1567, then he could be the same man as 'Reid Mertin'. Martin (16th C.) presented to the Parsonage and Vicarage of Castleton in 1574. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Martins (or closely related to them). The charge was vacant in the following year. Martin 'Reid Mertin' of Heuchhouse (16th C.) recorded in 1579/80 as 'Rid Marteine Ellot of Heuchhous' on a list of men accused of raiding into England. 'Hob' of Heuchhouse is also listed as his brother. In 1584 he was 'Martinge Ellot of the Hewghehowse' when, along with John of Heuchhouse, he signed the bond of assurance with the English Wardens at Hermitage. In 1587/8 he is recorded as ' 'Reade' Martyn Ellott of the Hewghouse' when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots; John of Heuchhouse was also listed, and so presumably closely related. Martin (16th C.) recorded in 1584 along with his brother David, as sons of 'Elder Will' on the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens. They gave assurance on behalf of their whole part of the clan, but it is unclear where they were from; certainly Martin of Heuchhouse was listed separately. Martin (16th C.) recorded in 1583 as 'Rytchis Martyn', on a list of the Elliot chiefs of the time, said to be closely related to the leader of the clan. Presumably his father was Richard. Martin 'Black Baird' (16th C.) resident of Harwood, perhaps the one in on the Teviot. He is recorded in 1586/7 being 'callit the Blak Baird, in Harwode' among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He could be related to men with the same nickname recorded at Branxholme in the 1630s Martin of Braidlie (d.1607) son of Simon of Philhope ('Mertin's Sym') and grandson of the earlier Martin of Braidlie. He could be the 'Martyne' listed by Monipennie in about 1594 among the chiefs of the Border, along with the Laird of Redheugh (but this list was probably compiled earlier, and referred to his namesake, who was already deceased by then). He was also sometimes known as 'of Prickenhaugh' and so presumably inherited those lands from his relatives. He was probably the 'Martine Ellott of the Prickinge hawghe' accused in 1590, along with 'Martin's Gib' and Airchie and John (sons of Martin, and hence probably his uncles) of stealing horses from Englishman Thomas Rutherford. In 1591/2 John Turnbull of Minto acted as surety for him. In 1592 he had a charter of the lands of Philhope, along with his eldest son Simon. This charter also included rights of the Kirk of Castleton. In 1593 he was probably the 'Martyn Ellott of Bradley' who was part of the large raiding party of Elliots and Armstrongs into Tynedale. In 1599 he and Robert of Redheugh made an agreement (on behalf of their relatives and friends) to settle their differences with with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. Also in 1599 he was part of a bond with the Warden (Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch) to be responsible for the behaviour of the inhabitants of Liddesdale. He must thus have been an important Liddesdale Elliot chieftan, and sometimes confused with his grandfather, the more powerful Martin of Braidlie, who died about 15 years earlier; he was described as good old Martin's oye' (i.e. grandson). He may have acquired Braidlie in only 1606, from Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig, the cautioners for the payment of 4000 merks being Gilbert of Mains, William of Falnash and Robert Scott of Haining. He was captured in 1606 by the Earl of Dunbar (then Commissioner on the Border) and hanged at the court at Foulden (near Berwick), along with his uncle William as well as the Armstrongs of Mangerton and Whithaugh. After his death Braidlie (in the Barony of Hawick) went to William of Falnash, who had been one of his guarantors in an arrangement between him and Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig. The name of his wife is unrecorded, but their children included: Simon of Philhope; and a son, whose name is unknown, but whose son Robert was served heir to his grandfather's great-grandfather, Martin Elliot of Braidley, in 1653. Martin (d.bef. 1618) holder of lands in Lilliesleaf. He married Agnes Lorraine and had a son and William. It has been suggested that he was the same man as Martin of Braidlie; although this seems unlikely, the similarity of names may indicate a relationship with that family. Martin (17th C.) servant of John Letham. In 1656 he was ordered to pay 30 shillings 'for absence from his service for 5 weeks', although he was let off the money claimed 'for the Trooper coming to the said John Lethane'. Martin (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He married Margaret Stewart in 1821 and their children included: John (b.1723); Adam (b.1725); and Margaret (b.1729). Mary (18th C.) cook at Dinlabyre in 1791, when she worked for William Oliver. Matthew (15th C.) listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Matthew (15th C.) listed as former tenant in 'helmys' among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. His lands were possibly Helm in Cavers Parish (or potentially Whames in the Borthwick valley), and he is listed separately from another Matthew. Matthew (16th C.) chaplain who witnessed a document in Selkirk. Walter Scott of Roberton begged for clemency from Robert Hunter, for his part in the killing of Robert's brother John Hunter. Thomas, Burgess of Selkirk was also listed, and perhaps a relative. Matthew (18th/19th C.) from Canonbie, he lived in Castleton Parish. He married Janet (also known as 'Fanny') Wilson. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1782); Andrew (b.1785); John (b.1787); Matthew (1788–1874); Henry (b.1791); and Janet (b.1796). Matthew (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Betty Elliot and their children included Betty, Margaret and William. It is possible this is an earlier marriage of the Matthew who married Dorothy Purdom. Matthew (1788–1874) son of Matthew and Janet Wilson. He was a labourer in Newcastleton, living at about 9 Doncaster Street in 1841 and 26 South Hermitage Street in 1861. He is probably the labourer in Newcastleton listed among male heads of households in 1835. He married Dorothy ('Dolly') Purdom and their children included: Annie (b.1821), who married farm-worker James; Matthew (b.1821); John (b.1823), a ploughman at Barnes, who may have emigrated to Huron County, Ontario; Isabel (b.1825); and Thomas (b.1827), who possibly emigrated to Canada with his brother. His wife is probably the same Dolly Purdom who was previously married to Edward Aitchison, with a son John Douglas Aitchison baptised in Castleton in 1816. Matthew (1788/9–1877) tenant in Netherraw. He was listed as head of household at Netherraw in 1835–41. He was farmer of 20 acres at Netherraw in Castleton Parish in 1841 and 1851. He was the last farmer of Netherraw, with the buildings being demolished after his death, and much of the land planted. He married Janet Scott (c.1788–1875) and their children were: John (b.1808); Betty (b.1811); Matthew (b.1812); Robert (b.1814); Helen (b.1816); Ann (or Annie, 1819–84); William (1820–36); Andrew (b.1821); Isabel (b.1823), who married a Wilson; Margaret (b.1825); Janet (or Jane, b.1827); and Frances (or Fanny, 1829–1914). Matthew (b.1821) resident of Castleton Parish, son of Matthew and Dorothy Purdom. In 1851 he was a farm servant at Hudshouse. He married Cecilia Turnbull and their children included: Stavert Turnbull (b.1844); and Elizabeth (1850–96), who married James Duncan Helm and died in Hawick. Matthew 'Mattha' (c.1871–1945) half-back for Hawick in the 1890s, who also played for Scotland. His 1895 Scotland cap is in the Museum, the first awarded to a Hawick player. Michael (13th C.) recorded as 'Michaelis de Elaund' in the 1256 assize roll of Northumberland. He may have been an early Elliot, living just across the Border. His son Nicholas, who was 7, and Gilbert, son of Thomas, from the same place, seem to have died in an accident 'in villa de Elaund'. Miss ?? (b.1830s) became famous for knitting about 130 pairs of socks to send to local soldiers during WWI. She lived on Dalkeith Place. Mr. ?? (18th/19th C.) teacher at the 'Latin School' in Hawick, i.e. the Grammar School. His son John died in 1798. It is unclear if he was the main master or an assistant at the school. Mrs. ?? (17th C.) listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. She probably ran an inn or shop. She could be the same Mrs. Elliot recorded in 1735 when the Council records show £2 7s being spent in her establishment 'when the poer was mended', suggesting that her inn was near one of the town's ports. Mrs. ?? (20th C.) from Borthaugh. She was heavily involved in the local Women's Voluntary Service duing WWII. Nenion (1834–1907) son of John, tailor at Quarrelhall in Castleton Parish, he was born in Teviothead Parish. He trained in law and became an Edinburgh-based solicitor before the Supreme Courts of Scotland and Clerk of the Teind Court. He was involved with the Edinburgh Border Counties Association and contributed several papers to the Hawick Archæological Society Transactions (e.g. on early Scottish laws in 1872, methods of preserving public order in Scotland in 1875, 'The Templars' in 1877 and on 'Local byways' in 1901) and the Border Magazine. He published 'Teinds as existing in Scotland' (1874), 'Teind System of Scotland' (1874), 'Teind Law Reform' (1884) and 'The Birns of Chapelhill' (1892), all published in Hawick. In 1872 he donated to the Museum 'copy of Mercurius Caledonius, 1661' and also donated books in 1875. In 1862 he married Margaret Smart, daughter of an Edinburgh butcher. Their children were: John (b.1863); Nenion (1865–1907), who died in Australia; Margaret (b.1867), became a music teacher; Robert (b.1869), emigrated to South Africa; James (b.1871), died in San Francisco; Christina (b.1873); and Edward (b.1875), also emigrated to South Africa. Nichol (17th C.) 4th son of Walter of Arkleton. He was farmer at Unthank. He married Janet, daughter of Rev. John Lithgow of Ewes. His children were: Thomas (b.1700), who probably died young; Anna (b.1702); Adam (b.1703); Janet

(b.1704) referred to as 'in Newmill', who died unmarried; and Margaret (b.1707), who married William Armstrong of Woodhead. In 1704 he was listed being of Ewes Parish when he witnessed a baptisms for William Anderson in Ramsaycleuchburn. Nichol (17th/18th C.). His son John was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1725. Given the forename, he was probably connected with the farmer at Unthank. Nicholas (14th/15th C.) recorded as deceased in 1408 in a document relating to St. Giles' lands in Edinburgh, where he is 'Elwald'. Nicholas (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 when his son Gilbert was among Liddesdale men cited for non-appearance at the Justiceaire. Ninian (15th/16th C.) witness in 1497 to a sasine for the lands of Robert of Redheugh. Other witnesses were Robert, William, John and Andrew 'Elwald' (presumably important men of the clan), as well as 2 Croziers, a Graham and a Forster. Ninian (16th C.) recorded in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale as a tenant of the steadings of 'Cleirlandis, Robsteid, Thomscotsteid, Cranswat, Gusbank, Hurklebuss'. Another (or the same) Ninian is recorded, along with John, as tenant of Roughley in the same roll. Ninian 'Ringan the Porter' (16th C.) recorded as tenant at Ewes Doors about 1567. His nickname could be an epithet from the 'Doors'. In 1569 he was 'Niniane Ellot, callit the Portar of Ewis durris' when order to enter as pledge for 'haill Ellottis dwelland in Ewisdaill'. Possibly the same 'Renyen' was recorded as being 'of the Dewhowses' in Ewesdale, along with John, when they signed the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens. 'John the Portars son', recorded in 1578/9 and also in about 1594, was his son; in 1578/9 he was 'umquhile Ringane the Portar' when his son John (or 'Blasteis Jok') was cited, and hence he was already deceased by then. 'Archie Ellot, sone to Ringhais Will Ellot the portar in Glenvoren' could be his grandson. Ninian and John, who were tenants of Roughley in 1541, may also be related. Ninian (16th C.) recorded in a huge list of men whose superior was Lord Maxwell in 1585, when they had remission for their previous crimes. He is the first named of 'Niniane, Thome, George and Will Ellattis', suggesting they all resided in the same place. They are listed among Armstrong, Littles etc. of the area around Eskdale. Ninian 'Ringan' of Dodburn (16th C.) recorded among a large number of Elliots and others complained about for a raid into England in 1589. His name is listed as 'Rynion Ellott of Dodborne' and 'Renyon Ellott of Dodburne'. He is surely related to the slightly earlier Simon of Dodburn and Will in Dodburn. Ninian (16th C.) tenant in Colterscleuch. He was recorded in 1590 in a case where Walter Scott of Buccleuch and Walter Scott of Goldielands were ordered to enter certain of their tenants to answer some English complaints. Ninian 'Hob's Ringan' (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners' court in Jedburgh in 1605. He was recorded as 'Rinyeane Ellott, called Hob's Rinyeane'. Ninian 'Ringan' (d.c.1608) son of William of Fiddleton. He was listed (along with his father and brother John) among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. In 1608 he was sentenced along with William, son of John Elliot of Burngrains with resisting the King's Guard. They were also recorded as 'Niniane Ellote, sone to umq^{le} Jok of Burgranes; William Ellote, sone to Will of Fiddeltoun', which is confusing. The pair had been declared rebels some years earlier for theft, murder and other crimes. Hiding in 'the West cuntrie' they were sought out by Sir Robert Hepburn and men of the King's Guard, but they shot at the Guard, killing William Bailie and being captured after the house they were in was set on fire. They were sentenced to be taken to Edinburgh Castle Hill, to have their right hands cut off and then to be hanged. He must have been related to the 'John's Gavin' of Fiddleton who was tried in 1606. Ninian (d.1660) 4th son of Elliot of Unthank (whose name is unknown), he was tenant in Eweslees. His brothers were probably Adam of Meikledale, William of Mosspeeble and William of Unthank. He received a lease of Eweslees from the Earl of Buccleuch in 1643. His eldest son appears to have predeceased him, and when he died he left 2 grandsons who were minors, with their appointed guardians being William of Unthank, Gavin of Outersiderig and James in Harwood. He married Margaret 'Acheson' (probably Aitchison). His children included: a son, whose children were Ninian of Eweslees and Robert of Eweslees; Robert in Gorrenberry; and William in Lymiecleuch. However, this information is all quite uncertain. His will is recorded in the Commissariot of Dumfries in 1661; he is there described being 'in Dewslies, par. of Ewes'. Ninian (d.c.1685) tenant in Bankend in Ewes Parish. His will is recorded in the Commissariot of Dumfries in 1685. Ninian (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His son Ninian was baptised in 1694. It is possible he is the same as Ninian of Falnash. Ninian of

Falnash (d.bef. 1703) son of Gavin and grandson of Robert. He had a charter of Falnash dated 1667 from Archibald of Falnash, his cousin. He had a son, Walter. He may be the Ninian who leased Todshawhill, Whames and part of Branxholme Muir in 1672 and 1673. Ninian (b.c.1709) born at Shaws in Castleton, he may have been son or grandson of William of Penchrise and Bessie Grieve. He married Agnes Paterson and they had a son Ninian (b.1735) who lived at Riccarton. His wife's gravestone is in Teviothead cemetery; she died at the age of 58. He could be the shepherd in Commonbrae marked on the same stone, who died at Slatehills in 1762. He may have been father of Adam (1734–60), also marked on the gravestone, who died at Commonbrae. Ninian (18th C.) son of Robert in Know. He was tenant in Priesthill, which was probably the farmstead near Whithaugh. Ninian (1735–1816) son of Ninian and Agnes Paterson. He was a shepherd in Castleton, associated with Riccarton and Dod. He was at Riccarton in 1778. He was also recorded as shepherd at Riccarton on both the 1797 Horse and Dog Tax Rolls and also in the Castleton Parish section of the Roxburghshire Militia in 1797. He appears to have married 3 times, to Margaret Brydon (b.1731) at Riccarton in 1756, then Esther Crozier (1731–66) and lastly to Janet Douglas (1745–1834) at Upperraw. His children probably included: Margaret (b.1756); John (b.1760) in Middlemoss; Margaret (again, b.1763); Adam (b.1765); Ester (b.1766), who married Robert Ballantyne from Pinglehole; Mary (b.1772); Robert (b.1774); Ninian (b.1776); Catherine (b.1777); Christian (b.1778); William (b.1784); and Walter (b.1789). He died at Shaws. Ninian (1776–1847) son of shepherd Ninian and Janet Douglas, he was born at Riccarton. He was listed on the ballot for the Militia in 1797. In 1799 he was among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in the parish of Castletoun'. In 1801 he was listed as a shepherd at Sundhope. In 1841 he was listed as 'Lab. or Roadman' and living at about 13 North Hermitage Street. He married Margaret (1779–1863), daughter of John Nichol and Elizabeth Riddell. Their children included: Ninian (1808–89); John (b.1810); Helen (b.1812); James (1814–98), road contractor; and Janet (1821–1901), who had a daughter to John Nichol (presumably a cousin of some sort). Ninian (1789–1865) eldest son of John and Janet Robson, he was born in Castleton Parish and may have lived at Blackburnfoot. He emigrated with his family to Middlesex County, Ontario, and all but their first child was born there. He married Agnes Turnbull (b.c.1790). Their children included: Janet (b.1815), born in Castleton; Mary (b.1821); Elizabeth (b.1823); Esther (b.1829); Francis (b.1829); and Agnes (1837–41). Ninian (1799–1885) born at Sundhope in Castleton Parish, son of shepherd James and Janet Grieve. He married Janet, daughter of Elliot Grieve, who was born at Blinkbonny. They emigrated to Canada where their children were born, Janet, James, Elizabeth, Elliot Grieve, Gardner, John, William, James, Catherine, Thomas and Margaret. They lived in North Dorchester Township, Middelesex County, Ontario, where he was a farmer. Ninian (1808–89) son of Ninian and brother of John. He was a road contractor in Newcastleton, living on Douglas Square in 1851 and 1861. He married Jane (1812–65), daughter of John Nichol and Marion Murray. Their children included: John (1836–1905), also a roadman; Margaret (b.1838), who died young; Marion (1840–99). Patrick (15th C.) brother of John of Thorlieshope. He is recorded in 1488, when he was witness to a sasine for the lands of Girnwood. It is possible that the same Patrick was listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Patrick (16th C.) entered at a Justice Court in Jedburgh in about 1510, by Robert of Redheugh, along with 'Gret Johnnie in Priesthaugh. Patrick 'Pate' of Ryleknow (16th C.) recorded in 1569 among men that Sir John Forster served as surety for. This makes it seem like he was from the English side. Peter 'the Fart' (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He is listed as 'Petir Ellott, callit the Fart, in Pencryste'; presumably his nicknames means what it sounds like it means. Patrick (17th C.) recorded in Yair in 1678 when he had a deal about providing timber to the Burgh of Selkirk. Pauline received the B.E.M. in 2021 for service to Newcastleton's resilience group. Percival (16th C.) recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books for 1535. Along with William (probably a relative), Andrew 'Louche', Patrick Gourlay and others were accused of taking grain from 'le Schaw' belonging to John Hall. They claimed that Hall reaped grain that they had sown themselves. His name is written 'Parsevell Ellot'. He is probably the 'Perse' recorded as a witness in Selkirk in 1542 for a transactions involving Burgess Robert. In 1544 he (along with Walter Scott of Branxholme) was a captor of an Englishman who William had a bond to return to them. Phillip (18th/19th C.) saddler of Hawick (probably from the East-end). He was the Council's elected Cornet in 1790, but after he drew up a narrow list of invitees some of the young men of the town (presumably mainly the West-enders) chose George Wilson as their own Cornet instead. The two cavalcades approached the West Port from different sides of the Raws and Bailie Hardie blocked the rebel cavalcade (felling the first man with an oak stick), allowing the elected Cornet's party to proceed unmolested to the Moor (as described by Robert Wilson). Ralph (15th C.) recorded among a large list of men of Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Two men listed as 'radulphi elwald' are there, although this forename is not otherwise common among the Elliots. One of them had a brother, William, who is also listed in 1494/5. Ralph (16th C.) priest who was recorded as witness to 2 documents in Selkirk in 1532. Richard 'Little' (14th C.) recorded in Cumberland in 1389, appearing before the justices of gaol delivery. His nickname was recorded as 'parvus' and his surname as 'Elwald', the same as William 'One-Eyed', who was also recorded. Richard (16th C.) recorded in 1548 as 'Ryche Ellott of the Park'. Along with Robert of Redheugh and 'Nelly's John', he had a bond to enter 2 prisoners with the Laird of Ferniehirst. He was presumably related to other Elliots of Park. Richard 'Law's Richie' (16th C.) tenant in Swinstead. He was recorded in 1574 as 'Richie Ellot callit Lawis Richie in Swinteis' among men who had been ordered to be removed from the lands of Robert of Redheugh. 'Lawis Jok' and 'Lawis Thome' in Priesthaugh were also named and presumably his brothers. Their father may have been Lawrence, or perhaps they came from Laws in Liddesdale. Richard (16th C.) listed in 1581/2 as 'Ritche Ellott, callit Rowanes Willis Ritche' among Elliots accused of raiding the farm of Harwood on Teviot. He was presumably son of William and grandson of Roland. He is listed after 'Rowans Hobbe' and his brother Jamie, who may be related. He was declared a rebel after not appearing. Richard 'Ritchie' (16th C.) recorded in 1587/8 when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots. His name is written as 'Riche Ellott, 'Bessies wifes Riche' ', but it is unclear exactly what this means and who he was related to. Richard 'Ritchie' (d.1606) called 'Richie Ellott of Heuchous' when he was found guilty of stealing a sheep. The Border Commissioners wished to spare him, but he was nevertheless sentenced to death by the Privy Council. He could be the same man as 'Ryche Ellott of the Lewlandes', listed just before William, son of John of Heuchhouse in 1595 among Elliots complained about by the Lord of Gilsland for a raid into England. He was also listed along with Will, also of 'the Hewghhouse' in relation to another 2 raids in 1595. Richard (17th C.) see Robert. Richard (1817–91) eldest son of William, farmer at Doorpool. Along with his brothers William (1819–91) and John (1823–1910) he was farmer at Hartwoodmyres for about 50 years. In 1861 they were farming 900 acres and were all unmarried. Robert (15th C.) recorded as 'Roberto Elwald' in 1481 when he and his mother leased the lands of 'Glenstokane' in Galloway. Perhaps the same Robert had a sasine for the lands of 'Rachane' in Peeblesshire, also in 1481. It is unclear how this man (or men) may have been related to local Elliots. Robert 'Robin' (15th C.) recorded in 1456/7 as witness to the sasine for Ewesdale passing from Robert of Ewesdale to George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus. He may have been an Elliot of Ewesdale, and is listed as 'Robyn Elwald', along with Adam and 'Law' (it is also possible he was an early Robert of Redheugh). Robert of Reidheugh (d.1497) first Elliot chief about whom we have documented information. Since it is said that he died as an old man, he may have been born in the 1420s. He is described as 10th Chief of the Elliots, even although the names of the first 9 chiefs are unknown (but it is a safe bet that some of them were Robert!). It is claimed the first chief was granted lands in Liddesdale by Robert the Bruce in about 1320; this earlier Robert was probably the first Elliot Laird of Redheugh and Larriston. A record found among papers at Ferniehirst was said to refer to an early Elliot of Redheugh, 'Chieftan of the South', who was killed in battle with 3 of his sons (possibly Homildon Hill in 1402), and whose daughter Mary married Cuthbert Blackadder, whose eldest son was alive in 1447; this earlier Elliot may have been his grandfather. He was established at Redheugh from at least 1476, when he was granted lands of 'Dalman' (possibly Demainholm), 'Bluntwood' and 'the Crouke' by Archibald Douglas ('Bell-the-cat'), Earl of Angus and Lord of Liddesdale; the charter describes him as 'our velbelufyt fameliar squiar, Robert Elwald of ye Redheuch for his guid and faithful servis to us don and for to be don', and it is signed at Lintalee. In 1479 he was further granted 'Layhalcht, Carolschelis, hartsgarth et le faulde' (i.e. Leahaugh, Corrie's Shiel and Hartsgarth) in the lordship of 'ledesdale'. In 1484 he was Robert 'Elwald' of the Redheuch when the Earl of Angus directed 'Walter Scot de Edschau, Radulpho Ker, fratri Walteri Ker de Cesfurd et Willielmo Elwaldo de goranbery' to infeft him in the lands of Over and Nether 'Larrostane'. In 1489 there was a further precept for 'redehuch', 'layhauch', 'hartsgarth', 'caraschele', 'dawmane' and 'larostanys superior et inferior'. In 1491 the Earl of Angus swapped Liddesdale for Bothwell, ending the association of the Elliots with their superiors the Douglases. He may be the Robert son of Gilbert 'Elwald' who produced a remission at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493 for the crime of stealing a grey horse from William Scott of Tushielaw; his surety was Robert Scott of Whitchester. He may also be the Robert mentioned in 1493 when Patrick Hardie had remission for stealing oxen from him. It seems likely he was the 'roberti elwald, senioris' who was listed among many Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the 1494/5 Justice-aire. He is said to have had one son, Robert, Captain of Hermitage, who died in his lifetime. He was succeeded by his grandson, Robert, according to a 'retour of inquest' of 1497/8 in the Douglas of Cavers papers. He is there said to have died 'about the feast of the Invention of the Holy Cross last bypast', i.e. in early May, and his grandson inherited his lands of Tillielee and Cauldcleuch. Robert of Reidheugh (d.c.1491) son of Robert, he was also known as 'Robin'. He is sometimes listed as 11th Chief of the Elliots, even though he died in his father's lifetime. He served as Captain of Hermitage Castle (probably Deputy Keeper), perhaps being appointed on the death of David Scott, younger of Buccleuch (in about 1484). In 1491 the Earl of Angus was bound to hand over his son Robert (as well as his own son, the Master of Angus) to King James. He was succeeded by his son Robert (12th) of Redheugh. He may also have been father of William of Larriston, although these early generations are not clear. Robert 'the King' (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1494/5 among a long list of men of Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire. Patrick Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell, and George Turnbull of Hallrule, Captain of Hermitage, served as their sureties and were fined. His name was given as 'Roberti elwald vocatus king' and he is listed second (after William) in a long list, perhaps suggesting his prominence among the Elliots. He was also one of a large number of Elliots (mostly 'Elwalds') listed in a 1500 document relating to pledges of good behaviour to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell. In 1502 he is probably the 'Hob the King', brother of 'Dand the Man' and son of William, who was involved with stealing 180 sheep from Tweeddale and Lauderdale. They were already rebels at that point, with 3 men from around Greenhead producing a 'respite' for resetting them. It is unclear which William was his father, and how he was related to any other Elliots. He may be the Robert who witnessed a sasine (along with several Elliots and others) for Robert of Redheugh in 1497. Robert (15th C.) recorded among a large list of men of Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5, with the Lord of Liddesdale and Captain of Hermitage being fined. His name is listed as 'roberti elwald comitis', with his nickname perhaps being 'the Count' (to distinguish him from 'the King' and other contemporary men of the same name). Robert of Langhaugh (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1494/5 among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire. He is listed there as 'Roberti elwald de langhalch'. He is also recorded in the document listing men who pledged themselves to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1498 for good behaviour. He is there recorded as 'Robert Elwald of the Langhalch'. This is probably the Longhaugh on the Hermitage Water. Robert 'Young Rider' (15th/16th C.) listed in a large number of men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He is also listed among men who pledged their good behaviour to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1498. He is recorded as 'Robert Elwald, callit zong ridar'. Robert of Reidheugh (d.c.1516) 12th Chief of the Elliots, son of Robert and grandson of the previous Laird of Redheugh. In 1491 he is probably the Robert, son of 'Robert Elwolde, of the Hermitage' who was delivered (along with the Master of Angus) as security by the Earl of Angus to King James. He is also probably 'Robert Elwold son to ... Elwold ... the Hermitage [younger] which late [dec]eassid' to be delivered as a a surety, as recorded in an agreement between English and Scottish Commissioners in 1491. He was served heir to his grandfather in 1497/8 in the lands of Tillielee and Cauldcleuch, according to a 'retour' in the Douglas of Cavers papers (where he is 'Robert Elwalde). 2 other Robert Elliots, and 2 William Elliots were on the panel for this inquest. He had sasine for the Liddesdale estates in 1497 and in 1501 he had another retour (at Jedburgh) for his grandfather's lands, held of the Earl of Bothwell. He additionally inherited Priesthaugh, with the Abbots of Melrose as superiors. In 1502 he was 'Robertus elwald in redheuch' when he and George Turnbull in Hallrule were fined for failing to present David Turnbull in Bonchester at court in Jedburgh. He was witness to a sasine at Hermitage (for Adam, 2nd Earl of Bothwell) in 1508, along with William Elliot and Robert in Dinlees. He may be the Robert 'Elwald' who was on the 1509 panel for deciding on the inheritance of Cavers by James Douglas. He was 'Robert Elwald of Redheuch' when summoned to come before the King to promise to keep good order in 1510. Following this he had a respite in the Register of the Privy Seal of 1510 for all crimes carried out by him and his associates (except for treason) to be unpunished for 19 years to come. Also listed explicitly were Robert of Dinlees and John in Sundhope, suggesting they might have been brothers or sons (other associates were 2 Nixons, 2 Croziers, 2 Hendersons and an Armstrong). His children were Robert (possibly killed at Flodden) and a daughter who may have married David Scott of Howpasley (or possibly Tushielaw), with William of Larriston perhaps being another son. In general it seems difficult to separate him from the next Robert (in deciding how many generations there really were, and who may have been killed at Flodden). It is unclear if he was the 'Robert Elwald of Redheuche' who had a respite for his crimes in 1515/6, along with his brother William of Larriston and some Nixons, Foresters and Croziers, numbering 40 men. If this was him, then he seems likely to have died in 1516 and was succeeded by his grandson Robert in 1526. Robert (15th/16th C.) brother of William. In 1502 he was convicted of stealing 5 cows from John 'spedin' out of Blackhaugh. His brother William was his surety. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert of Reidheugh (d.1513) referred to as 13th Chief of the Elliots, even although he appears to have died in his father's lifetime. He was son of Robert, although the number of different Roberts in the preceding couple of decades seems quite uncertain. His sons were: Robert, who succeeded his grandfather in 1526; possibly Martin of Braidlie (although he seems more likely to have been his grandson); Archibald of Falnash and Gorrenberry; and probably John of Copshaw. He was probably the 'Master Ellot' said to have been killed at Flodden. However, this may be confusion with his father (since it seems hard to believe he was very old at Flodden), and there is no documentary evidence to separate the various Roberts. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'Robert Elwald of Dunle' in a 1510 respite to Robert of Redheugh and many others in Liddesdale. It seems likely he was a close relative of the Elliot chief. He is also listed as 'in Denly' in a 1516 'respite' to William of Larriston and several other Liddesdale Elliots. He was presumably tenant farmer at Dinlees on the Hermitage Water. Robert (d.1530) referred to as a 'common thief' in 1530 when he and Adam Nixon were allowed to escape from the custody of John, Lord Hay of Yester, and for which Lord Hay's brother (also John) was imprisoned in Linlithgow. Probably the same Robert 'Elwald' was hanged for theft in Linlithgow that same year, along with Matthew and William Nixon and Robert Noble. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Elliots. Robert (d.bef. 1539) recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Book in 1539/40 when his widow, Janet Scott, purchased lands in Appletreehall from Robert Scott of Howpasley. He is recorded as 'Robert Elwand of [Toungtis?]', but could possibly be a deceased Robert of Redheugh. Perhaps the same Robert was described as 'layman' when he witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1535 for Alexander Scott of Palace. Robert (d.bef. 1540) referred to as 'Robert Elwand' in 1540 when his widow Margaret Roger raised an action against 2 Murrays for stealing cattle from Borthwickshiels (where he was a tenant) in 1526. His sons included David, Alexander, John and Ringand (Ninian), all of whom were wanted as thieves. Robert of Ramsiegill (16th C.) recorded as 'Hobbe Elwald of Ramsegill' in 1532 when the King charge a commission with his capture (along with Croziers and Foresters) for the killing of Thomas Dalgleish and Adam Turnbull. In 1541 he was 'antiquo Roberto Elwald de Ramysgill' when listed among the tenants of Stirkshielhope; 'Roberto Elwald in Rammisgill' was also listed and presumably a different man (although it is unclear if they were related). Robert of Reidheugh (c.1505–bef. 1557) 14th Chief of the Elliots, served heir to his grandfather in 1526, with his father probably being killed at Flodden. His granduncle (or perhaps uncle) William of Larriston led the clan during his minority. In 1526 he inherited his grandfather's Liddesdale lands of 'Reidheuch, Layhauch, Hartsgarth, Careschel, Dalemane' and 'Over and Nether Larastanis'. In 1531 he was probably the Robert 'Elwolde' of the 'Armytage' who was one of 3 attendants who accompanied the Earl of Bothwell to a secret meeting with the

Earl of Northumberland. He was further recorded as Captain of Hermitage in a document of 1532 and another in 1548/9 (when he had a bond to enter John 'Cragill' as a prisoner with the Laird of Ferniehirst). In 1537/8 he and his brother Archibald were sureties for William in Leahaugh, plus brothers James and Simon, who had broken open a shop in Selkirk. He may be the 'Robert Elwald seriando' (i.e. 'sergeant') who was recorded as tenant of Shaws in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale; he may also be the Robert who was tenant of the lands of Copshaw. He may be the 'Robert Ellwalld' listed in 1541 among Scotsmen accused of burning the corn of William Carnaby at Halton. In 1546 his son was described as 'sone to Robyne of the Redhwych'. He was listed as 'Rot. Eluand of Reidheuch' in a 1550 bond signed by him and 10 Scotts in which they promised the Queen to keep order and hand over criminals. In 1552/3 he and Thomas Armstrong of Mangerton were appointed by the Privy Council to meet the Governor at Dumfries and accept the charge of keeping the peace in Liddesdale. He was succeeded by his son, Robert. He seems likely to have also been father of Martin of Braidlie (who led the burning of Hawick in 1565), although genealogies often have this Martin as his brother. Jock of Copshaw may have been another son (since he appears to have been Martin of Braidlie's brother). Robert 'Flaskwood' (16th C.) recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books for 1529/30. Archibald and Gavin Elliot, along with Simon and Ninian Armstrong pledged to bring him to Fairnilee to answer for attacks and other crimes prepetrated against George Ker of Linton. He is also recorded as 'Roberto Elwald de Flaswod' in 1535 in a trial in Jedburgh in 1535, where Robert Scott of Allanhaugh was accused of bringing him and William 'Mend the caill' from Liddesdale to plunder cattle at Midlem and elsewhere. His lands could be the place of this name in Liddesdale or 'Flask Wood' in Ewesdale. Robert (16th C.) son of Thomas and Helen Rutherford. In 1541/2 he inherited his deceased father's tenement and 2 rigs in Selkirk and then resigned a house to his mother, in liferent. He may be the Burgess of Selkirk recorded in 1542; 'Perse' was one of the witnesses and may have been related. Probably the same Robert witnessed a transaction in Selkirk in 1543. In 1561 his mother Helen Rutherford assigned the tenement and 4 rigs to Robert, son of the deceased Gavin of Horsleyhill, leaving liferent for herself; Robert of Horsleyhill also assigned to him the 'kindness' of the King's Croft in Selkirk. Robert (16th C.) recorded as being 'in Rammisgill' in the 1541 rental roll for Liddesdale, when he was one of the tenants at Stirkshielhope. Old Robert 'Elwald de Rammisgill' was also listed among the tenants, and is hence presumably a different man. He is surely related to the William in Ramsiegill who is also mentioned in 1541, and is probably related to the Robert in Ramsiegill who is recorded in the 1580s. Robert 'Hob' (16th C.) listed in 1544 as 'Hobbe Elwode Clemyt [Crozier's] syster sone', when he was among local men who gave their assurances to the English. The Clement mentioned here, who was presumably his mother's brother, was a prominent member of the Crozier family at that time, and possibly Clem Crozier of Stobs. It is not impossible that he was the same man as Robert of Horsleyhill (which also had a Stobs connection). It is also possible he was the same man as the 'Clement's Hob' mentioned several times in the 1560s and 1570s. Robert 'Gavin's Hob' (16th C.) witness to the bond in 1546 to enter 3 Elliots as prisoners at Ferniehirst. One of the other witnesses was a Bailie of Hawick, and hence he was probably fairly local, but it is unclear which Gavin was his father. Robert (d.1564) 2nd Laird of Horsleyhill, eldest son of Gavin, 1st Laird. His brothers were William (who later succeeded to Horsleyhill), Andrew, David, Gavin of Stobs, and Archibald. He was said to have been involved in the murder of Hugh Douglas in about 1547, along with his father Gavin, and brothers William and Andrew. In 1561/2 he was recorded as son of the deceased Gavin of Horsleyhill when he purchased a tenement and 4 rigs in Selkirk from Helen Rutherford, widow of Thomas Elliot; he promised to retain liferent of a house for Helen and gave up the 'kindness' of the King's Croft in Selkirk to Helen's son, who was also called Robert Elliot. In 1563/4 he is 'in Horslehill' when he appeared on behalf of his brother Dand, whose sheep had been stolen from Bailielee by the Scotts of Tushielaw; their cautioner was John Preston, Burgess of Edinburgh. He is probably the Robert who was listed in 1564 along with William of Horsleyhill and Gavin and Archibald (as well as other Elliots and Scotts) in the trial of the murder of David Scott of Hassendean, for which he was said to be the instigator; however, it is confusing that he was not named as Laird at the time, perhaps because he had not formally succeeded his father by then. He had at least 2 children: Gavin (d.1565), who succeeded; and William (b.1547) who succeeded after his brother. He was executed for the murder of

David Scott. His uncle Gavin (later of Stobs) was appointed as guardian to his children, although his half-brother William (later Burgess of Peebles) disputed this, but was deemed too young. Robert of Reidheugh (d.bef. 1564) 15th Chief of the Elliots, son of Robert, whom he probably succeeded some time before 1557. He may have appeared along with his father at a Judiciary Court held by Lord Maxwell in 1537/8. In 1546/7 he was 'sone to Robyn of the Redhwych' when he was among several men entering Elliots as prisoners at Ferniehirst, and in 1548 (referred to as 'younger of the Reidhewcht') had a similar bon for entering John, son of Robin of Thorlieshope. His 'eym' (i.e. uncle) Archibald was also referred to there and he signed with the help of the notary (meaning that he could not write). He had a bond for entering Nixons in 1557 and in that year his brother Martin is also referred to (confusing, since Martin of Braidlie is sometimes placed in the family tree as his uncle). He was 'of Reidhuche' in about 1557 when he rented Priesthaugh and Penangushope from Melrose Abbey. Around the late 1550s he was one of the men on the panel to resolve the conflict over the lands of Newbigging (in Hassendean) between the children of Gavin Elliot of Horsleyhill. In 1561 he was 'of Reidheuch' when listed (along with his Gavin, brother of Archie's Will) among Border lairds who appeared before the Queen to promise to present the names of those who were guilty of theft; he was called 'of Redheuch' when later listed (after Martin 'of Reideuch') among men charged by the Privy Council to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. In 1563 he was appointed Deputy Keeper of Hermitage Castle, while the Earl of Bothwell was in exile, with William Douglas of Cavers acting as security for him. He had a bond of 1563, along with Martin of Braidlie (his brother) for entering Jock, son of Gavin Elliot to Sir Thomas Ferniehirst. He married Jean Scott, sister of Buccleuch, around 1550 (and after his death she married Gavin Eliott of Stobs). His children were: Robert of Redheugh; William of Hartsgarth; Gilbert of Stobs, 'Gibbie wi' the Golden Garties' (although this is not certain); Archibald; Gavin of Brugh; and a daughter, who was the 2nd wife of Will, 2nd son of Richard Graham of Netherby. A report on the West Marches compiled in the period 1563–66 states that 'oulde Robyn Ellot and young Robyn, his son, are both dead'. Robert 'Reid Hob' (16th C.) listed in 1569 among the tenants that Gavin Eliott in Skelhill was surety for. It is unclear how he was related t other Elliots. Robert of the Shaws (16th C.) said to have been the Elliot who convinced those who had been rounded up in Hermitage Castle to allow the wounded Earl of Bothwell to enter in 1566, by agreeing to let all of them go. It is said that he was granted the rent of the lands of 'Blackgrave' as a reward. It is possible that 'Shaw' is the same as 'Copshaw', but is more likely to be the lands of that name on the Hermitage Water. In 1569 he and his brother Will of the Steele were excepted from the pledge that John of Thorlieshope had for the whole of that branch of the Elliots. Also in 1569 he was 'Hob of the Schawis', listed along with Airchie 'Fyre the Brais his brother', when John of Thorlieshope was held in Wester Wemyss Castle as pledge for them. In 1572 he was among the Elliots who signed a bond with John Johnstone of that Ilk for returning John of the Steel (who had been broken out of ward). He may be 'Hob Ellott, brother of Johnne of Copshaw' who was recorded in 1587/8 being in ward with Lord Sinclair; however, he 'eshaipit and eschewit' and his pledge was charged to appear before the Privy Council. He is also 'Hobb Ellott of the Shawes' when accused in 1590 along with Will of Fiddleton and others of stealing livestock and goods from the Laird of 'Troghwen' and Hedley of 'the Garret sheills'. In 1591 he was part of a group (along with Airchie of the Hill and others) accused of plundering from Jeffrey Taylor and the tenants of Scaleby. Either he or his son was probably the 'Hob of the Schawis' who was one of the Liddesdale Elliots to sign bonds with Scott of Buccleuch in 1599. He was probably also related to Adam and Gilbert of the Shaws who are recorded in 1583. Robert 'Hob', 'the Lady' (16th C.) recorded in 1569 among Elliots of Ewesdale. 'Will Ellot callit the Lord' was held in Loch Doon Castle as pledge him, as well as John of Fiddleton and Hob of Unthank. Robert 'Hob' (16th C.) recorded being 'callit Hob of Unthank' in 1569. This was along with Hob 'the Lady' and John of Fiddleton, when Will 'the Lord' was held in Loch Doon Castle as pledge for them. Robert 'Hob' (16th C.) tenant of Gavin of Elliot of Falnash in 1569. The Laird appeared in Hawick to give surety for his tenants. He may have been related to Will, Dand and Jock, other Elliots also listed as tenants. Robert 'Hob', 'Sweet Milk', 'Great Legs' (16th C.) recorded in 1569 when Andrew Ker of Faldonside had a bond with him. His name appears in the Register of the Privy Council as 'Hob Ellot callit Sweit Mylk alias Greit Leggis'. It is possible that he was related to William 'Sweet Milk', whose death in a duel at Newmill is immortalised in the song 'Rattlin Roarin Willie'. His second nickname presumably means that he was tall. It seems likely he was related to Gilbert, who had the same nickname recorded in 1586/7 and Dand in 1598. Robert 'Martin's Hob of Prickenhaugh' (16th C.) son of Martin of Braidlie. He was also sometimes called 'Hob of Braidlie'. His lands were at Prickinghaugh in Liddesdale. He was one of the band of 300 or so Elliots, Armstrongs and others who plundered Torwoodlee in 1568. He is probably the Robert of Braidlie for whom there was surety before the Privy Council in 1573. He is listed as 'Hobbie' in 1580 among a group of Elliots (including his brothers Gavin and Archie, and 3 cousins), who attacked the lands of Harwood (on Teviot), stealing 40 cows and oxen, and then later attacked Slaidhills, Whitlaw and Hoscote; he was declared a rebel after not appearing to answer the charges. He was also implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580. He was 'Hob' of Braidlie when sentenced to imprisonment in 1580/1 for several crimes of theft, along with other Elliots, Armstrongs and Nixons. He is probably the 'Hob Ellott of Braidley' for whose re-entry in 1581 Martin of Braidlie (presumably his father) and John Turnbull of Minto served as caution; he was pledge for the 'gang of Gorrumberrie', and was released from ward in the Castle and Tolbooth of Edinburgh. In 1581 his father complained about how he and his brother Dand had been attacked while riding near Headshaw; Walter Scott of Headshaw and 5 or 6 others attacked them and 'struckin the hand from the ane and hurt the uther in perrell of his lyff', although it is unclear whether he or his brother lost his hand. He is listed as 'Hobbe Ellot' among a 1583 list of Elliots of Braidlie and was probably also the 'Robin Ellot of Braidley' listed among the landed men of the Border in about 1590. In 1587/8 he was 'Hobbe Ellott, called Martin's Hobbe' when there was an order for Francis, Earl of Bothwell, to release the Englishman that he had captured. He is on a list of Elliots (including his father Martin and brother Airchie) accused in 1590 of raiding the English farm of 'Whynatlie' in the previous year. He is probably the Hob listed among Elliots (including his brother Gib, as well as Airchie of Clintwood, who was also his brother) and Armstrongs complained about in 1590 by a large group of Englishmen for a raid on Blackcleugh in Kirkhaugh, taking many prisoners for ransom. Two of his sons were later denounced as rebels ('Kirstie' and one other). In 1611 he was 'Robert Ellot, called Martenis Hob' when he was cautioner for 'Jok Ellot, called the Murt', for his appearance at court in Jedburgh. He was also one of the cautioners in 1611 for 'Kirstie Ellot callit Hobis Kirstie', along with Robert of Redheugh, William of Gorrenberry, Archie of Clintwood and William of Prickinghaugh. He may be the same as 'Robert Ellot, called of Braidlie' when witness to the document of 1613 infefting Robert of Redheugh in his lands. Robert 'Hob' of Heuchhouse (16th C.) listed among Elliots who signed a bond in 1570, promising to give pledges for the release of John of Heuchhouse (who was surely a brother or son) and Hob, son of Elder Will. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned; it was reported that he had previously been surety for John of the Heuchhouse and Hobbie, son to Elder Will. In 1579/80 he is recorded along with his brother 'Reid Mertin' on a list of men accused of raiding into England. In 1581 he was among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. He is recorded in an 1583 letter from Musgrave to Burghley, describing the leaders of the Elliots of Liddesdale. He is described as 'Hobbe Ellot of the Hewghus', and listed along with Robert of Redheugh and 3 of the chief's brothers, so he was presumably closely related. His brother John is also mentioned, and he could be the John of Heuchhouse who is recorded about the same time. Robert 'Scot's Hob' (16th C.) listed as 'Scottis Hob', along with his 2 unnamed sons, in a 1574 list of Scots rebels who were reset in England. In 1578 he was listed among Border Lairds who had been released from ward (in his case with John Carmichael, younger of that Ilk) and directed to meet again to promise to suppress lawlessness on the Border. In 1578/9 he is 'Hob Ellot, callit Scottis Hob' when it was declared by the Privy Council that he was meant to return to prison with William Cunningham of 'Caprintoun', with cautioner John Carmichael, younger of that Ilk. However, he had not re-entered ward with Cunningham, and hence his cautioner defaulted. He is recorded as 'Scotes Hobbe' in 1583 in a list of Elliots of Park. It is unclear whether his nickname meant 'Scottish' or that he was perhaps stepson of a Scott, or his father was nicknamed 'Scott'. It is possible that 'Hobbie's Hob', who is also listed, was his son. Gavin, who was convicted of theft in 1580/1, was probably also his son; he was 'Scottis Hobbis Gawen' in 1581. Another son, 'Scottis

Hobbis Jok' is recorded in 1580, 1581 and 1584. Robert 'Hob' of the Park (16th C.) son of James of the Park. There is a pledge for him before the Privy Council in 1573; he was exchanged for John of the Park, who was to be warded with Sir William Scott of Balwearie, and although he had been freed, was ordered to present himself again to be warded. In 1576 there is a complaint that he had been freed from ward with William Porterfield. He was listed in a promise by Border Lairds to meet to suppress lawlessness on the Border. He is listed in 1578/9 in a restatement of a promise made to the Privy Council as a 'plege for the gang thairof', that he should stay in ward with William Porterfield of Duchall. His sureties were Robert of Redheugh and Martin of Braidlie. However, he was stated to have 'not remanit bot eschaipit fra the said Williame Portarfeild'. He was listed among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580. Also in 1580 he was held in ward by the Earl of Lennox in Dumbarton Castle. In 1581/2 he was declared a rebel after failing to appear to answer charges about farms near Hawick being raided. He was presumably important in the family of Elliots of the Park, and also related to the deceased John of the Park and 'Symmy' of the Park, who were also mentioned in the same 1578/9 document. He is recorded as 'Robert Ellott of the Park' in 1586 when his superior Robert of Redheugh was instructed to enter him in court; Simon and James of the Park are also listed. Either the same or a different 'Hob Ellot of the Park' was declared a rebel of 1606. Robert 'Hob' (16th C.) son of 'Dand of Braidley' and probably grandson of Martin of Braidley. In 1574 it is recorded that he was to remain in ward. In 1576 the man with whom he had been warded, George Maxwell of Newark, was ordered to appear before the Privy Council to explain why he had been freed. He is listed in 1578 as 'Hob Ellot, sone to David Ellot of Braidley' among Border Lairds who had been released from ward (in his case with the Provost and Bailies of Edinburgh) and directed to meet again to promise to suppress lawlessness on the Border. In 1580 he was warded with the Provost and Bailies of Edinburgh, along with John, son of 'the Elder Tod'. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert 'Hob' (16th C.) listed among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580. His name is given as 'Hobbe Ellot, callit Kene'. The meaning of the nickname is unclear, but he may have been closely related with 'Archie Kene', and must have been a supporter of Lancie Armstrong of Whithaugh. Robert 'Hob' of Glenvoran (16th C.) recorded in 1587/8 among men (probably of Ewesdale) who William Maxwell, Lord Herries, was ordered to present to the Privy Council. His name is listed as 'Hobbe Ellott, alias Hobby of Glenvorane'. He is also recorded as 'Hobbie of Glenvore' on Sandison's c.1590 map of the Debateable Lands. His lands were in the upper Ewes valley. Probably the same man was 'Robine Ellott the Bastarde of Glenvoren' listed among a large group of Elliots who were accused in 1590 of taking Ralph Hall and others prisoner and ransoming them. He was mentioned in 1590 in a case where Lord Maxwell and Alexander, Lord Home were ordered to enter certain men of Ewesdale to answer some English complaints. In 1590/1 he was listed among men who both Lord Maxwell and Lord Home were to enter before the Privy Council; he was specifically called out with a few others 'to answer for all their other steel-fellows [fellow thieves]'. Probably the same 'Robene Ellot of Glenvorane' was declared a fugitive in 1606. ('Reid Hob Ellot') suggests that he had red hair. He is probably also the Robert of Skelfhill who was one of those summoned by the Privy Council in 1575 to settle the feud between the Elliots and Pringles. Robert 'Hob Billie' (16th C.) recorded in 1588 when James Dalgleish and Nichol Brydon were convicted of helping him, David Elliot, Armstrongs and others steal cattle from near Edinburgh. He is probably the 'Hobbe Ellott 'Hobbe bullie' ' listed among Elliots, Armstrongs, Turnbulls, Laidlaws and Croziers, accused in 1590 of rieving from the Laird of 'Troghwen' and Hedley of 'Garret Sheills'; he is also 'Hobb 'Bullie' ' when accused of having been in another group who stole from the same farms earlier. Robert 'Gavin's Hob' (16th C.) recorded in 1590 along with other Elliots and Nixons when there was a complaint from the English side of the Border that in 1588 they had stolen in 'playne dayelight, thir hirdes' and 24 head of cattle. He is recorded as 'Gawens Hob Elliot', but it is unclear who his father Gavin was. Robert (16th C.) recorded as being 'in Borthuikbra, servant to Wat Scott of Tushelaw' in 1589 when he refused to restore 2 mares and a horse that had been stolen. Along with 'Sandie Wemys in Hawik', Robert Fraser younger of Overton and Andrew Armstrong, he was denounced as a rebel for not appearing. He was presumably tenant at Borthwickbrae, but was not obviously related to the later Elliots of Borthwickbrae. Robert (16th C.) recorded as 'Hob bullie'

in 1589, among a group of Elliots and others complained about for raiding into England. It is unclear what his nickname meant. Robert of Reidheugh (d.c.1591) 16th Chief of the Elliots, son of Robert. He was a minor when his father died sometime around 1563, and Martin of Braidlie (probably his uncle or perhaps great-uncle) acted as clan chief, while his new step-father was Gavin Eliott of Stobs and Skelfhill. In 1569 he was 'Robert Ellot of the Skelfhill' when he promised to enter as surety in place of his step-father, if required. He became of age in about 1572 and took over as clan chief. He was recorded as Captain of Hermitage in 1573. Also in that year he was among a large group of Border lairds to sign a bond with the Regent Morton. He signed the 'Band of Roxburgh' in 1573. Additionally in 1573 there was a decree by Douglas of Cavers for his removal from the lands of Langside (which he fought against, on the basis that his father and grandfather had held these lands). He was the Robert of Redheugh who signed a bond recognising Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst as Warden of the Middle Marches in the 1570s. He is probably the 'Young Robin' recorded 'for the wrangus spoliatioun and awaytaking of thair teindis', along with Gavin of Horsleyhill and William Douglas of Crook, on the 1574 testament of Walter Scott of Buccleuch. Also in 1574 he witnessed a discharge between Douglas of Cavers and Cranston of that Ilk. Additionally in 1574 he served as surety for a number of Borderers with the Privy Council, specifically for the lands of Priesthaugh, Peelbrae, Swinstead and Dodrig; he was found liable for 5000 merks for not removing the thieves and replacing them with 'trew men'. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned, and was found liable for the fines, because the men he made pledges for had continued their rieving activities (in his case, 'Joke the Gyde' Elliot and Sim, son of Lancie Armstrong of Whithaugh). In 1579/80 he acted as surety for a group of Elliots and others accused of conducting raids into England; his brother Archie is also named there, and he himself was accused of being part of a raid on Coquet Water. In 1580 he, the Scotts of Buccleuch, Gledstains and others, followed a group of English and Scottish thieves who had raided Meikle Whitlaw; he was wounded in a fray with Armstrongs and Elliots on their return. In 1580/1 he was directed to give up his position as Captain of Hemitage. In 1581 he was allied with Walter Scott of Goldielands and James Gledstains of Cocklaw when they made a set of complaints against Martin of Braidlie, Simon Armstrong of Mangerton and Lance Armstrong of Whithaugh; all were charged to appear before the Privy Council with pledges of assurance from their supporters. Along with Martin of Braidlie and 2 Armstrongs, he was also denounced in 1582/3 by the Privy Council for failing to make redress for the crimes committed by their tenants and servants. He signed a bond of support for the Warden of the Middle Marches, Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, probably in the early 1580s. He is 'Robin Ellot, of the Redheugh' when he complained of an English raid on his lands at the Steele in the 1580s. In a letter of 1583 from Musgrave to Burghley he is 'Robin Ellot of the Reddhughe, cheife of the Ellotes', along with his brothers William of Hartsgarth, Gilbert, Archibald and Gavin, and many other Elliots, including Hob of the Heuchhouse and his brother John, Adam and Gilbert of the Shaws, Archibald 'Fyre the Braes' and 'Richie's Martin', as well as Garth Simson, all of whom were said to be his 'brethren, or his men that are daly at his commandement'. Also in 1583 he was denounced as a rebel for failing to appear to answer the charge brought against him by Robert in Dodrig, that his men had repeatedly attacked the servants there, although he had no legal right to the lands. He was recorded in 1584 as 'Robeine Ellot' in a letter from the King and was temporarily imprisoned in Edinburgh Castle, along with Martin of Braidlie and Armstrong of Whithaugh. He was chief of the Elliots (named first, along with Martin of Braidlie and William of Falnash) in their assurance to the English Wardens to keep the peace in 1584, signed at Hermitage Castle. In 1583/4 and 1584/5 he was among the Borderers who were summoned to appear before the Privy Council. In 1586 he and Martin of Braidlie were explicitly listed as leaders in Liddesdale in instructions from King James to Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. In 1586 he was instructed to enter into court his brother William in Hartsgarth, as well as his tenants and servants Adie in the Shaw, Archie in the Hill, Sim of the Park, James of the Park, Robert of the Park, David of Braidlee, James 'the Gyde', James of the Steele, John of Heuchhouse and George Simpson of the Raw; he was also ordered to present himself as surety for 'Jokis Willie' Elliot. In 1587/8 Gavin Eliott of Stobs prmoised to present him to the Privy Council. In 1588 he was on a list of Borders 'masters and landlords' ordered to appear before the Privy Council. In 1589 he was listed among leaders in Liddesdale who signed a bond for keeping peace with England. Also in 1589 he was on a list of Border Lairds who failed to appear before the Privy Council to give 'thair gude advise anent the gude reule and quietnes of the Bordouris' and were denounced as rebels. There was a 'letter of horning' against him for failing to appear in 1589. In 1590 he was named first on a list of Elliots accused of raiding the English farm of 'Whynatlie' in the previous year, stealing 60 cows, 2 horses, taking goods worth £100 and burning 5 houses. Also in 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. In August of 1590 he appeared before the King and Council to answer for some of his men, and this may be the last time he is recorded (he certainly died before June of the following year). He was probably the Laird of Redheugh listed by Monipennie (published around 1594, but compiled earlier) among Border chiefs, along with Robert (probably his son) and Martin (probably of Braidlie). He married Marion (or Marjorie), daughter of James Hamilton of Sprouston in 1572; through this marriage and its Bothwell connection, he became allied with the side of Mary, Queen of Scots. They had 5 children: Robert of Redheugh; William of the Rig and of Hartsgarth, who married Jean Rutherford; a daughter, who married Hector Lorraine of Harwood; Nicola, who married Gerard, brother of Sir Thomas Carleton; and Gilbert, illegitimate (possibly by Helen Kidd). His sons were all minors at the time of his death. He may also be the Elliot of Redheugh who is said to have married a daughter of Thomas Carlton of Carlton Hall. He could have been the 'Robert Ellot callit Yhoung Robene' who was recorded in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1574, along with William Douglas of Crook and Gavin Elliot of Horsleyhill, as men who owed him for teinds several years earlier; if so, he probably owned (or leased) Penangushope. He may also be the 'Robin Ellot' who, along with his brother William, George Simpson and their accomplices were accused of raiding into England in 1582. In 1591 Gavin Eliott of Stobs promised that he would not harm his widow Marjorie Hamilton. Robert 'Clement's Hob' (d.bef. 1578) one of the Liddesdale thieves captured in Hawick in October 1567 by the Earl of Moray, in a surprise attack during the Market. He was one of the 10 who were afterwards held in Edinburgh tolbooth, unlike the 18 who were immediately drowned. His father was presumably Clement; although it is also possible that he was the same as the Robert who was nephew of Clement Crozier (and certainly Clement was a prominent name among Croziers and otherwise unknown among Elliots). In 1569 he and Archie Keen escaped from the Castle of Doune and then went on 'a marauding expedition'; he is there listed as being 'in Gorumbery'. Also in 1569 he is listed along with 'Dand of Braidley' when 'Archie Kene' was held in Blackness Castle as pledge for them. In 1570 he was one of several Elliots who signed a bond related to the release from ward of John of Heuchhouse and Hob, son of Elder Will. In 1574 he is 'Hob Ellott callit Clemmettis Hob' when listed among a list of mostly Croziers who had been ordered to be removed from the lands of Douglas of Cavers; he is listed after Mirk Hob in Penchrise. In 1578/9 there was a reminder at the Privy Council that he had been one of the joint sureties for John of Heuchhouse and Hobbie, son of Elder Will; he is listed as 'umquhile Hob Ellot, callit Clemmentis Hob'. His son Dand is recorded in 1581. Robert 'Mirk Hob' (16th C.) one of the 10 Liddesdale rievers held in Edinburgh tolbooth after being captured in Hawick in 1567. Surely the same man was 'Hob Mirk Ellot' in 1569 when John of the Park was held in Balwearie Castle, as pledge for him and 'Gray Will Ellot'. He is probably the same as 'Mirk Hob in Peneryse' recorded in 1574 among a list of Croziers who Douglas of Cavers was supposed to have removed from his lands. His is also 'Hob Ellot, callit Mirk Hob, in Pencryise' recorded in 1576 when several Border Lairds acted as joint sureties for him; they were Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule, Robert Elliot of Redheugh, Gavin Elliot of Falnash and Walter Scott of Goldielands. He was thus associated with the farm of Penchrise. By 1578/9 he was among many Borderers state to have 'brokin and contravenit the conditioun abonespecifiit, having committit diverse crymes of thift and resset of thift'; he was thus declared a fugitive. Robert (16th C.) son to 'Elder Will', another of the Liddesdale thieves captured in Hawick in 1567. In 1570 there was a charge brought against several Elliots involving him and John of Heuchhouse, complaining that they had been released from Blackness Castle, but their clan had failed to 'enter the said pledges' on eight days' warning; among those who signed the bond was 'the said Elder Will', as well as Martin of Braidlie. There was a reminder of this pledge in 1578/9, where it was ststed that he and John of Heuchhouse had not been imprisoned in the houses of John Cockburn of Ormiston and William Lauder of Haltoun, as pledged. He was probably brother of John, who was convicted of theft in 1580/1. Robert 'Vicar's Hob' (16th C.) one of the outlaws of Liddesdale apprehended in Hawick in 1567, where he is 'Rob'. In 1574 he was listed among men who had been ordered removed from the lands of Priesthaugh and others by Robert Elliot of Redheugh; he is there 'Robert Ellott callit the Vicaris Hob'. In 1576 there was a pledge to the Privy Council that he would refrain from thieving; he was recorded there as 'Hob Ellot, callit the Vicaris Hob', with cautioners being jointly Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule, Robert Elliot of Redheugh, Gavin Elliot of Falnash and Walter Scott of Goldielands. He is probably the same 'Hob Ellott, called the Vicar's Hobb' for whom John Turnbull of Minto and Edward Lorraine of Harwood were cautioners in 1588/9, to promise that when he was released from Edinburgh Tolbooth he would re-enter when required, 'under the pain of the payment of the bill filed on Archie Elliot of Dogcleuch'. Robert 'Hob o Thorlieshope' (16th C.) one of the Liddesdale thieves captured at Hawick market by the Earl of Moray in 1567; he is recorded as being 'in Thorlinsope'. In 1569 he was entered before the Regent by Sir Andrew Ker of Hirsel, Gilbert Ker of Primside Loch and Andrew Ker of Faldonside. Probably the same Robert of Thorlieshope was appointed as one of the sergeants for the Justiciary Court held by the Keeper of Liddesdale in 1537/8. He is 'Roberto Elwald officiario' who was tenant of Thorlieshope on the 1541 rental roll for Liddesdale; 'officiario' suggests he had an official role in the area. He is 'Robyn Elwald of Thorlieshopp' listed in 1541 by the English among Scotsmen who reset English rebels; 'Wilcokes Elwald' is listed along with him, and so possibly a relative, and he is also listed along with Clem Crozier, who may have been a neighbour. He was also mentioned in 1541 when Airchie, 'brother and son to Robert Ellwalld of Thorllyshope' was listed among Scotsmen responsible for the burning of the corn of William Carnaby at Halton; this suggests that Airchie was his brother and perhaps that their father was also Robert. He is also probably the 'Robin of Thorlyshop' whose son John was entered in a bond by James Douglas of Cavers in 1546 and in other bonds with Robert of Redheugh in 1547. In 1546 he had to sign with the help of the notary (meaning that he could not write). He was probably related to (or possibly the same as) the 'Rob of Thoirlishop' recorded in about 1594. Robert 'Will Cock's Hob' (16th C.) listed in 1569 as 'Robert Ellot callit Wilcokis Hob'. He and 'Gawins Jok in Ramsygill' were the pledges for whom 'Ade Ellot callit the Cowdais' was held in Blackness Castle. It is possible he was the same man as Hob of Thorlieshope. His father was probably 'Will Cock'. Robert 'Airchie's Hob' (16th C.) third son of Archibald of Falnash, he seems to have been a regular supported of Martin of Braidlie on raids. He was mentioned in 1569 among a number of pledges to exchange for Martin of Braidlie when Martin was warded with the Regent Moray. He is probably the 'Arches Hobbes' whose 2 sons were among several Elliots and Nixons complained about by the English Warden for the murder of 2 Englishmen during a raid in 1588. Robert 'Hob' (16th C.) recorded among Nixons and Elliots complained about by the English Warden regarding a raid in 1588. His name is recorded as 'Hobbe Ellot of the Sheale', but it is unclear where his lands were. He could be the same as Hob of the Staneshiel recorded in 1590 and 1595. Robert 'Willie's Hob' (16th C.) presumably son of William. In 1584 he signed the bond of assurance with the English Wardens, his name appearing along with several Elliots of Ramsiegill, but separately from 'Hobb Ellot of Ramsegill' (the leader of this branch). He was recorded in 1587 in a bond by several Elliots, including his brother John, when he was imprisoned, probably for rieving; he had to be entered 'as haill man and feir' at Melrose. He was released in 1598, with Adam Tweedie obliged to make good for this theft. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert 'Hob' of Bowholm (d.1595/6) listed as 'Hob of Bowholmes' in a list of Borderers made in about the 1580s. He was listed along with 'Will Colithis Hob' under the area of 'Welshaw'. In 1584/5 he was listed as 'Hobb Bowholms dwellinge in Tevidale' along with other Elliots of Heuchhouse; he was singled out as the only member of the Heuchhouse branch that the leaders would not vouch for. He was recorded as 'Hob Ellott of Bohomes' in 1587/8 when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots, including John of Bowholm. In 1590 he was part of a group of Elliots who were accused of a raid by Thomas Hall of 'Gersomfeeld', and also accused of another raid along with Archie (who was probably related). In the same year he is 'Hob of Behomes' who was accused of further rieving along with Martin's Airchie and William

'Rydlie'. Also in 1590 he was accused along with his brother Dand, as well as 'Willie's Airchie' of Stitchillhill of stealing from Englishman Richard Thurlwall; he was recorded as 'Robine Ellott Bohomes'. He is 'Hobb Bohomes' when accused in 1590 along with Will of Fiddleton and others of stealing livestock and goods from the Laird of 'Troghwen' and Hedley of 'the Garret sheills'. Also in 1590 he was listed along with other Elliots, Croziers and Armstrongs, accused of taking cows and horses from the tenants of Woodhall and Netherhouses in England. He was 'Hobe Ellott of the Bowholmes' listed among Scotsmen accused of raids into England in 1595. In 1595/6 he was 'Hob of Bowholme Scotsman', servant of William (possibly the William in Hoscote who was delivered as a prisoner to England about this time), when sentenced to death for several crimes in England and 'taken with the bloody hand' by the Captain of Harbottle. He was executed at Hexham. Robert 'Ill Rob' or 'Ill Hob' of Ramsiegill (16th C.) recorded as 'Yll Hob of Ransygill' in 1578. He was listed among Border Lairds who had been released from ward (in his case with the Provost and Bailies of Edinburgh) and directed to meet again to promise to suppress lawlessness on the Border. He is 'Yll Hob' in 1580, when he was held in ward in Edinburgh Castle, with Alexander Erskine as his pledge. He was convicted for theft in 1580/1 along with other Elliots, Armstrongs and Nixons. He was recorded there as 'Hob Ellot, callit Ill Rob of Ramsigill'. In 1580 he was produced at the Privy Council to prove that he was in ward with Erskine of Gogar. In 1581 Martin of Braidlie, Gavin's Jock and Robert Kerr of Ancrum were cautioned for his non-appearance, when he was stated at that time to be imprisoned in Edinburgh Castle; his brother 'Gavin's Jock' of Ramsiegill was one of his cautioners. The same group were fined in 1582/3 for his non-appearance, as well as that of Jock's Will, his brother; he is recorded there as 'Ill Hob of Ramsygill'. In 1584 he signed the bond of assurance with the English Wardens, his name appearing first to speak for his branch, with Archie of the Hill, Rowie of Ramsigill and Will's Hob also listed. In 1587/8 he is recorded as 'Hob Ellot of the Ramsgyll' when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots. He was also one of the Elliots who entered a bond in 1587 for 'Willie's Hob'. Several other Elliots are also mentioned there, in particular 'Gavin Ellot of Ramsigill', who must have been a son or brother. He was also 'Hob Ellot of Ransgill' who complained in the 1580s of an English raid upon his lands, stealing livestock and taking prisoners. Probably the same man is ' 'yll' Hobb Elwood' recorded in 1591 as part of a group of Elliot and others accused of plundering from Jeffrey Taylor and the tenants of Scaleby. He was presumably a son of Jock and probably related to the Robert recorded as 'in Rammisgill' in 1541. However, he was probably the 'Hob Ellot, brother of Gawin's Hob (probably a transcription error for Jock) of the Rampsygill' who remained in prison in 1581 for the 'haill gang of the Burnehedis' after Jock's Willie was released; this would make him son of Gavin of Ramsiegill. Robert 'Jamie's Hob' (16th C.) listed in 1581 and 1582/3 among the cautioners for Sim's Rowie of the Park. His name was recorded as 'Hobbe Ellot, called James Hobbe', and he was listed along with Rob's John, Sim's Archie and others. His father was thus presumably James. He was also listed in 1581 along with other Elliots in a bond of caution entered with John Carmichael (who had been Keeper of Liddesdale), relating to the Elliots of Ramsiegill. He was also part of a second bond in 1581, for the 'haill gang of Park'. Robert (16th C.) listed among men accused of raiding Harwood on Teviot in 1581/2. His name is given as 'Rowy Ellott, callit Rowans Hobbe', which is confusing, although it is later 'Hobbe Ellot, callit Rowans Hobbe'. His brother Jamie, as well as 'Rowanes Willis Ritchie' are listed after him; they were declared rebels after not appearing to answer the charge. Robert 'Hobbie' of Burnhead (16th C.) Laird of Burnhead in Liddesdale (and not the one just outside Hawick). In 1584 he was accused of being part of a foray into England. He is perhaps the earliest known resident of Burnhead, and may have had the tower built for him there. In 1587/8 he is recorded as 'Hob Ellott of the Burneheads called 'Fydlers Hob' ' when accused by Sir John Forster of being on a raid on England in 1585, along with many other Elliots; the reference to 'Fydler' may refer to the nickname of his father. He was 'Robin Ellott the laird of Borneheades' in 1589, among a group of Elliots and others complained about for raiding into England. He may have been 'Hob Ellot called Hob the larde' listed among a large group of Elliots who were accused in 1590 of taking Ralph Hall and others prisoner and ransoming them. Additionally in 1590 he was among a group of Elliots, Armstrongs and Croziers, said to be 200 strong, who were accused of raiding the towns of 'Allenton' and 'Linbriggs', taking 100 cows, 20 horses and 20 prisoners. He was also listed among Elliots, Armstrongs, Turnbulls, Laidlaws and Croziers, accused in 1590 of rieving from the Laird of 'Troghwen' and Hedley of 'Garret Sheills'; there he is 'Hobb Ellott of the Burneheades'. Also in 1590 he was listed along with other Elliots, Croziers and Armstrongs, accused of taking cows and horses from the tenants of Woodhall and Netherhouses in England. He was also 'Hob Ellott called the laird of Burneheads' when complained about for another 2 raids into England in 1595, this time along with Elliots of Falnash, as well as 'Auld Wat' Scott of Harden, Armstrongs and Hendersons. Additionally in 1596 he was 'Hobb Elwood larde of Burnehead', when it was said that along with Scott of Buccleuch he met secretly with Englishmen, presumably to discuss helping each other with raids. It is unclear how he is related to other local Elliots, such as 'Bramche of the Burnhead', also recorded in the 1580s and 'Gawins Jok' recorded in the 1590s. It is possible he is the same man as 'Curst Hobbie'. Robert 'Curst Hobbie' (16th C.) recorded in 1583 (in a letter from the English wardens) among the Elliots of Burnhead. It is possible he is the same man as Hobbie of Burnhead, recorded a year later. He is probably related to other Elliots of Burnhead, as well as Elliots of Ramsiegill and of the Hill. Robert 'Rob o Thoirlishop' (16th C.) mentioned in Monipennie's list of Border chiefs, published around 1594 (put probably compiled earlier). 'Arthur fyre the Brays' is listed beside him. He must have been related to the earlier 'Hob' of the same place, Thorlieshope. He could be the son of Robert of Unthank who is listed in a pedigree of the Elliots of Thorlieshope (in the Berwickshire Naturalists' Club transactions of 1889); he was known as 'Bonny Hob', warded in Lochdun in 1569 and died unmarried (although that could be the earlier Hob of Thorlieshope). In 1584 he, 'Fire the Braes' and one other 'assure for the hole branch comenge of the howse of Thorlosope'. In 1587/8 he was 'Hobbe Ellott of Thorwishoip in the Flict' when warded with the Laird of Balwearie (James Scott); however, he 'eshaipit and eschewit' and his pledge was charged to appear before the Privy Council. He was presumably a tenant in the lands of Flicht at that time. He was recorded as 'Hob of Thorlesopp' in 1590 among Elliots of the Steele, the Park, Binks, and others, when accused of raiding into England. Additionally, along with Martin's Gib and 'Adie's John' Crozier, he was accused of stealing from William Henderson of 'Fallofeeld' in 1590. In another case in 1590 he was 'Robin Ellott of Thorlesoppe' when listed among Elliots, Nixons, Shiels and others accused of stealing from the tenants of Woodhall in England. He was listed in 1595 as 'the officer alias the laird of Thorlesop' among Elliots complained about by the Lord of Gilsland for a raid into England; the 'officer' designation suggests that he inherited the position of sergeant of Liddesdale from the earlier Robert of Thorlieshope. In a complaint about another raid in 1595 'young Robyn Ellot of Thorlesop' was probably his son. There was a complaint against him (along with a Nixon and 2 Armstrongs) by the English in 1597; but Scott of Buccleuch stated that he was already in Hexham Jail. Robert (16th C.) tenant in Dodrig, son of Archibald. In 1583 it was stated that he and his father were 'kindlie tennentis' of 'thrie quarteris of the landis of Dodrig, pertening to the chaiplanrie of the paroche kirk of Caveris' for 36 years previously, and had built a house there. This may have been the pele-house whose remains are on the east side of Gray Coat. He complained to the Privy Council that his servants there were attacked by Robert of Redheugh's men on several occasions, trying to dispossess him of the lands. Robert of Redheugh was denounced as a rebel for not appearing to answer the charge. Robert (d.1592) 6th Laird of Horsleyhill, eldest son of William, the 5th Laird. He is recorded in 1564 when he was granted all of his father's property. In 1581 he is listed along with many Armstrongs and Elliots who complained to the Privy Council about the actions of the Scotts. In 1582 he took legal action against Dame Isobel Ker, Widow of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford, for the delivery of his father's charters, specifically for Horsleyhill, 'Dowiswod', Westerhouses (called Little Hassendean), Newbigging (called the Middle Mains of Hassendean), Caveling, Monkscroft and Hassendean. However, the order to deliver these seems never to have been followed, since he died without formally being served heir to these lands. He also had a dispute with Robert Scott of Hassendean over a merk land in 'Dowiswod'; his widow Agnes Scott was served with the letter of removal in late 1592. It is unclear to which branch of the Scotts she belonged, but there may have been a connection with Haining (given that their son William was later a retainer of Robert Scott of Haining). He was listed among 'Landit Men' of Scotland in about 1590. In 1587 Ker of Grange acted as cautioner for him to appear before the Privy Council. He married Agnes Scott, and their children included: Robert, who pre-deceased him; William, who succeeded and sold Horsleyhill to Gilbert Eliott of Stobs; another Robert, who married an illegitimate daughter of Scott of Harden, and from whom the Elliots of Borthwickbrae are descended; and one more son, from whom the Elliots of Selkirk and Newhall probably derive (probably father of James, Burgess of Selkirk in 1635). The existence of these last 2 sons is suggested by Scott of Satchells, but no direct evidence has been uncovered. Robert 'the Tailor' (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1590 among a large number of Elliots and others who were accused by Ralph Hall of 'Gersomffeeld' and others for taking Ralph and other prisoners, then ransoming them. His name was recorded as 'Robine Ellot called the Taillour'. Also in 1590 he was 'Hobbie the taylor' when accused along with James of the Hill, Anthony of the Binks, James 'Half Lug' and 60 others, of raiding 'Windgates', taking more than 100 cows and 4 horses, slaying George Hume, leaving 6 or 7 men near death and robbing 5 houses. There was an Armstrong of the same name at that time, and it is possible there was confusion and they are the same man (although whether an Armstrong or an Elliot would then be unclear). Robert 'Hob of the Leyes' (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1591 in a group of Elliots of the Hill and others accused of plundering from Jeffrey Taylor and the tenants of Scaleby. He is recorded in 1595 among Elliots complained about by the Lord of Gilsland for 2 raids into England. He was also 'alias the troche', although it is unclear what this nickname may have referred to (perhaps a trough). He may have been related to some of the others named in 1595 e.g. Robert of Thorlieshope, Rich 'of the Lewlandes' or William, son of John of Heuchhouse. Robert 'Hob' of Staneshiel (16th/17th C.) part of a group of Elliots who were accused of a raid by Thomas Hall of 'Gersomfeeld' and the tenants of 'Dortres' in 1590. Hob Elliot of Staneshiel, John of Heuchhouse and Davie 'the Carlin' were also named in the same accusation. He was further accused in 1590 by William Hall of 'Gersomffeld' of rieving at 'Steward sheile', along with Quentin's Airchie Crozier and others. He was also recorded in 1595 among men complained about by the Lord of Gilsland for raids into England. His name is recorded as 'Hob Ellott of the Stanesheale alias bane pryck'. He probably lived at Staneshiel in Liddesdale, and the meaning of his nickname is unclear (but probably not complimentary). Robert 'Hob' (16th/17th C.) listed in 1595 among Scotsmen accused of raiding into England. His name was recorded as 'Hob Ellott alias kyll of the spade', although it is unclear what his nickname meant. He was listed along with John of Burnhead, who may have been related. Robert (16th/17th C.) younger son of Robert, 6th Laird of Horsleyhill and Agnes Scott. According to Scott of Satchells (who confusingly seems to refer to him at one point as William) he became a servant to Scott of Harden (presumably 'Auld Wat') and married Scott's illegitimate daughter (whose name is not recorded). He was recorded as a servant to Scott of Harden in a bond dated 1620 and Scott of Satchells states he knew personally that he was Harden's servant in the 1620s. He is the progenitor of the Elliots of Borthwickbrae, Oakwood Mill and Wolfelee. His only known child was Robert, who was 'in Borthwickshiels' – '... Though he was Servant to the Laird of Hardin, Hardin the foresaid William [sic] did so much esteem, That he in Marriage his Naturaldaughter did gain, And betwixt them two was procreat I must reveal, That Robert Elliot that lived in Borthwick-sheil' [CWS]. Robert 'Hob' (16th/17th C.) son of Jock of Burngrains. He was listed (along with this brother Will) among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded as 'in Langraw' in 1610 when he was part of an inquest for lands in Rulewater. Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded as being 'in Gledstaines' in 1610 when he renounced his possession of this part of Feu-Rule when he was not accepted as a 'kindly tenant' by his superior, Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam. This could have been the land later called 'Little Gledstains'. Robert of Dinlabyre (b.c.1580) son of William of Braidlie and Dinlabyre. In 1599 he witnessed the bonds (signed at Branxholme) between Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and the Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddesdale. In 1600 he was said to be about 20 years old when there was a plan to substitute him for his father as a hostage in England. In 1611 he was denounced as a rebel, along with his brother Gavin and several other Elliots and Armstrongs, for hunting illegally, as well as destroying woods etc.; his name is transcribed there as being 'of Drumlybyre'. He is recorded as 'Robene Ellote of Dunlabyre' in 1612 when he failed to appear to serve on the jury for the case of Jock Elliot dying while in custody in Hawick. In 1613 the King granted him all the lands forfeited by his father in 1607. In 1623 he served as cautioner for Robbie Armstrong in 'Greinay' and his brother John. Probably the same 'Robert Ellot of Dinlabyre' is recorded in 1632 in a rental roll of Kelso Abbey when he possessed the lands of 'Hoillis' in Liddesdale, as well as Dinlabyre. His sons probably included William of Dinlabyre (d.bef. 1693) and John in Unthank. Robert of Copshaw (16th/17th C.) listed in 1612 among Elliots and Armstrongs denounced as rebels for hunting illegally, as well as destroying woods etc. His brother Francis was also listed. He was also recorded among those fined in 1612 for failing to appear to sit on the jury when the Hawick authorities were accused of the murder of a man who died in the steeple of St. Mary's. His brother Francis was also listed. Robert (d.bef. 1637) eldest son of William of Rig and Jean Rutherford, heiress of Stobs. He was served heir to his mother in 1621 and was in turn succeeded by his brother Francis. Robert 'Hob' (16th/17th C.) recorded being called 'Ladd, in Quhythauch' in 1623 when he appeared before the Commissioners' Court in Jedburgh. Robert (16th/17th C.) son of Robert and a daughter of Scott of Harden, he was grandson of Robert, the 6th Laird of Horsleyhill and brother of William, the last Elliot Laird there. He is referred to as being 'in Borthwickshiels', and so must have been tenant of that farm. He married Euphemia Haitlie from Mellerstain and had 2 children: Thomas (d.1686), who succeeded him in Borthwickshiels; and William (1617–85), who became minister in Yarrow. He is recorded in a list of 'communicants' of the Borthwick valley in 1650, with his wife being 'Euphemia Hastie' and their son Thomas also listed. Robert 'Hab' (17th C.) possessor of the lands of 'Baggat' (i.e. Bygate) in Liddesdale in 1632. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert of Falnash (d.1645), J.P., son of William, he was a Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire. He was recorded along with his father (and more than 170 others) in a 'respite' of 1594 to Sir James Johnstone and his followers for the killing of Lord Maxwell at Dryfe Sands. In 1595 he was listed among Elliots and others accused by the Lord of Gildland for raids into England; he was explicitly listed with 'Auld Wat' Scott of Harden, as well as his brother Archibald and uncle Gilbert. In 1598 he was recorded as son of William of Falnash when he was witness to a document for the Regality of Melrose. He is probably the Robert 'younger of Fallinesche' who was cautioner for Gavin Elliot of Fiddleton in 1606. In 1610 he was cautioner for James Irving of Cleuchhead and in 1611 for Gavin 'of Coklek'. In 1618 his father is referred to as 'William called of Falnash in Braidley', suggesting Falnash had already been passed to him. In 1620 he was cautioner in 2 cases for Johnstones and Armstrongs in Dumfriesshire. He rebuilt the house at Falnash around 1620, probably replacing the tower with a farmhouse; a stone built into the present house carries the date 1620 and the initials 'R.E.' and 'M.S.'. The family also owned land in Wilton Parish. He is probably the 'gudeman of Fallineshe' from whose lands at Ramsaycleuch 6 head of cattle were stolen in 1621. In 1623 he sold Arkleton to Adam Cunningham, the reason not being known, but Scott of Satchells wrote 'By Maxwell's rage out of their hands it got, And was possess'd by Cunninghame and Scot'. In 1624 he purchased Hislop and Langhaugh in the Barony of Hawick. In 1627 he was one of 9 men charged with performing a valuation of the lands in the Parish of Hawick. He was listed in 1628 among the major landowners who met to elect M.Ps. for Roxburghshire. Also in 1628 he had a crown charter for the lands of Philhope and the wardship of Grizell Elliot, heiress of Philhope (to whom he would marry his son John). He was appointed a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire in 1634. He married Marion Scott (from an unknown branch of the Scotts, but perhaps the Scotts of Harden). They had 7 children: William, who married a Maxwell of Cowhill, but died before his father; Archibald, who succeeded; John, who became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1636, married Grizel Elliot of Philhope and held the lands of Broadlee; Gavin of Caerlenrig, who married Janet Elliot and was father of Ninian; Gilbert, who became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1637; Robert, who also became a merchant's apprentice in 1646; and Jean, who married Adam Carleill of Byrdkirk. Robert (d.1663) 4th son of William of the Binks and brother of Simon. He was called 'of the Binks'. In 1630 he was charged as 'ane commoun and notorious theefe' and fled to Flanders. It is described in the Register of the Privy Seal that 'he is returned again and hes begun his old accustomed trade of theft', stealing 6 cattle from Englishman Sir Arthur Gray. He was convicted of theft and tried in Jedburgh, but the Provost there released him on a bond whereupon he fled. In 1631 he turned up in Carlisle jail, from where the Sheriff of Roxburghshire requested his transfer. He had a son called Simon, who was a minor when he died. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1639 his son Francis with Margaret Douglas was baptised, with the label 'for:', meaning that the child was illegitimate. The witnesses were John Inglis and Lyle Crozier. Robert

'Hob' (17th C.) recorded as being 'called of Thorbishop' (presumably Thorlieshope) in a 1642 list of many Borderers who were to be captured and tried for theft and other crimes. In about 1648 he was recorded as Robert 'of Thorlishoppe' on a list of 'mosstroopers' (i.e. thieves). He may be the 'young Robyn Ellott of Thorlesop' recorded in 1595. Robert (17th C.) younger son of Robert of Falnash. In 1646 he was apprenticed to Edinburgh merchant Archibald Graham. Robert (17th C.) listed as a fugitive in 1637. He was also recorded as 'sone to Hobbeis Chrystie' listed among fugitives of the Border in 1642. It may be that he was listed twice, since Robert 'called Chrysteis Hob' also appears. He was probably son of the Christopher who was son of Robert of Braidlie; he was thus a great-grandson of Martin of Braidlie. Robert (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, with surname written as 'Allott'. His children included 'Heilling' (b.1636) and James (b.1645). Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Isobel Henderson and their children included: John (b.1646); William (b.1650); Bessie (b.1652); and Janet (b.1655). Robert of Black Tarras (d.bef. 1665) 2nd son of Simon of the Binks and younger brother of the William, Laird of Harwood. He was granted the lands of Black Tarras by his father. After the Restoration both he and his brother William were fined £1,200 for supporting the Commonwealth. In 1652 he married Margaret, eldest daughter of William Riddell 'portioner' of Bewlie. In his wedding contract he is described as 'in Sauchetrie' and was infefted in the lands of Black Tarras. His children were: Simon of Black Tarras; Francis; and William of Cooms (d.1714), who married Helen Elliot of Thorlieshope. He was still alive in 1663, when referred to as 'of Ludgegill indweller in Sauchtrees, Liddesdale'. By 1665 his wife was a widow. Robert 'Robin' of Reidheugh and Larriston (c.1583–c.1644) 17th Chief of the Elliots, son of Robert. He was the last of the Elliots of Redheugh in the direct male line. He was still a minor when his father died, with his guardian being his uncle William of Hartsgarth and when he was 14 the additional trustees appointed were William of Falnash, John of Copshaw and his mother's brothers, John and Andrew Hamilton of St. John's Chapel. At the time when Francis, Earl of Bothwell forfeited his lands, he was in possession of Redheugh, Over and Nether Larriston, Hartsgarth, Leafauld, Corrie's Shiel, Langhaugh, Leahaugh and Demainholm. He was said to have been able to ride from Larriston to Hawick on land that was almost entirely in Elliot hands. He is probably the Robert who was the first Elliot name signed on the bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. In 1597 (along with William of Hartsgarth and John of Copshaw) he wrote from Larriston to the English Warden, explaining that they had sworn to the Scott of Buccleuch that they would not have dealings with any Englishmen, and furthermore they offered security for the actions of their followers. In 1599 he, along with Martin Elliot (son of 'Mertin's Sym'), made an agreement to settle their differences with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. They also promised to the Warden (Sir Walter Scott) to be responsible for the inhabitants of Liddesdale. Additionally in 1599 he was one of the leading Elliots and Armstrongs to write to Lord Scrope to get their family hostages freed from England. There was also a pledge made in his name (and others) in 1599 following the murder of several Englishmen (who had been waiting in hiding to ambush the Scots) near Bewcastle. He was probably the Laird of Redheugh who in 1599 was listed among Scotts and others who were charged to find sureties for 'observing the King's peace'. In about 1600 he was ordered to pay £ for theft of horses by Will of Fiddleton. In 1600 he was among leaders from the Borders who were ordered to attend a meeting at Falkland to discuss 'the present disordouris of the Bourdours'. In 1602 he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. Also in 1602 he was declared answerable for Will of Fiddleton. He escaped the convictions and executions that came down on the men of Liddesdale around 1606; it is said that this may have been due to the influence of his brother-in-law John Murray of Lochmaben. In 1607 he brought an action against George Henderson, tenant of Winnington, accusing him of cutting down trees on his land at Birkwood. In 1608 he (and 14 other lairds) were removed from their lands by the Privy Council for being 'ringleaders suspected either of their bygone conversation or for their present disordered courses'; he was sent along with Walter Scott of Goldielands to Cupar in Fife. In 1608 he was charged by Scott of Buccleuch to remove himself from all lands in Liddesdale, but this was not followed through with; however, there was a decreet of removal in 1612, after the death of the old Laird of Buccleuch. He was then denounced as a rebel, but through the influence of his brother-in-law John Murray he obtained a new agreement with Buccleuch over these lands in 1613; this included Over and Nether Larriston, Redheugh, Blackhope, 'Greenholles', Hartsgarth, Langhaugh, Leahaugh, 'Carriescheill' and 'Dowmane'. In 1615 Buccleuch accused him of adding the names of 3 properties to the charter, and he went to London to plead with Scott of Buccleuch. A court case was started in 1617, and he was unable to produce the charter, which led to a further order of removal. However, Robert was served heir to his father in 1619, presumably part of the ongoing legal proceedings. His main dwelling around that time was at Demainholm. There were also attempts to remove his tenants; William Scott of Newark complained in 1618 that his tenants at Foulshiels were harried by a large group of Elliots, including him. He and William of Hartsgarth complained afterwards that they should not have been declared as rebels and fidning caution the horning was suspended. Over the next few years he failed to collect any rent on his lands, incurred debts and many of the old Elliot lands in Teviotdale were lost. In 1622 he and his brother William sold the lands of Winnington Rig to Gilbert Eliott of Stobs. In 1622 and 1623 he served as cautioner for Rowie Crozier from Hartsgarth. He was probably the 'Robert Ellot of Reidheuch, in Larestoun' who was removed as a tenant of Scott of Buccleuch in 1624. His brother-in-law John Murray (Earl of Annandale) apologised to Scott of Buccleuch in 1624 for a dispute over lands with Buccleuch and for stealing from Englishmen. Also in 1624 he was accused of conspiring to murder the Earl of Buccleuch, the 3 would-be assassins (all Elliots) apparently confessing their part. He was at that time prisoner in Edinburgh Tolbooth related to debts. He was also accused of being involved in stealing cattle from Cuthbert Heron, an Englishman; he seems to have escaped punishment, although his servant Adam Usher was hung for that crime. Despite being induced to confess to the crimes, pleas by Francis Hamilton and the Earl of Annandale resulted in Scott of Buccleuch asking for the trial to be postponed. Within a short period of the King's death in 1625 he received a pardon for the theft and other crimes, although it is unclear when he was released from confinement. His wife petitioned the Privy Council because of poverty during his imprisonment. It seems that when his daughter and heiress was married in 1637 he still held his Liddesdale lands, including the 3 farms that had been in dispute, namely 'Blaikhope', 'Greenhollis' and Langhaugh. He married first a sister of John Murray (later Earl of Annandale) and secondly (after 1618) Lady Jean Stewart, daughter of Francis, Earl of Bothwell and Lady Margaret Douglas, widow of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He had no children with his first wife, and with his second had no sons, but 2 daughters: Margaret, (or Mary) his heir, who in 1637 married James Eliott (6th son of Gilbert of Stobs); and Esther (d.1664), who married Alexander Clerk, Minister of Letherton, and died in Inverness. In 1637 he transferred all his lands to his daughter Margaret and her husband (and cousin) James, except for Leahaugh, Greenholm and Gullyflat, which were given to Esther and her husband, and he retained Larriston, Blakehope and Greenholm 'in liferent' for himself. The year of his death is quite uncertain, but it appears to been before the period 1666–73, when the his estate heavily encumbered by debt. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Janet 'Red' (i.e. Reid). Their daughter Helen was baptised in 1651, with witnesses John Elliot (probably related to him) and Thomas Jackson. Robert of Braidlie (17th C.) nephew of Simon in Philhope. In 1653 he was served heir to Braidlie. Robert (17th C.) recorded in several accounts in Selkirk in the 1660s, e.g. one for a Common-Riding dinner. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. He could be the Robert, son of Selkirk Burgess William, whose daughter Elizabeth is part of a deed in 1673. Robert (b.c.1645) younger son of Archibald of Falnash, he was christened in Hawick. Robert (17th C.) referred to as 'Robert Ellot, called of the Maynes' in 1659 when he witnessed a document relating to lands of Hobkirk Parish for William Elliot of Harwood. Robert of Larriston (d.bef. 1695) eldest son of James Eliott, and Margaret, heiress of Redheugh. He was thus a grandson of the last Elliot of Redheugh, as well as being grandson of 'Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters' of Stobs. He took the 'Elliot' spelling after inheriting the Liddesdale lands through his mother. He was probably the Robert of Larriston whose lands in Castleton Parish were valued at £1334 in 1643. He may have been the 'younger of Laristoune' who was an executor for William Elliot of Binks in the 1660s and when appointed Justice of the Peace in 1663. He was recorded paying the land tax (on £1334) in 1663. In 1672 he was appointed one of the Justiciars for the Borders (for apprehending mosstroopers). He was served heir to his grandfather Robert of Redheugh in 1673, inheriting these lands through his mother. However, the Teviotdale lands had already been sold off and the Liddesdale lands were heavily encumbered by debt. Hence in 1675 he was forced to put Over and Nether Larriston, Redheugh, Blackhope and Greenholm into 'wadsett' with John Elliot of Thorlieshope and in 1677 sold outright the land of Demainholm to John Elliot 'in Mainholm'. In 1678 he still paid the land tax on £1934 in Caslteton Parish. In 1685 he was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1692 he had a 'precept of clare constat' from the Commissioners of the Duchess of Buccleuch as heir to all the lands of his grandfather, Robert of Redheugh. About 1688 he was forced to sell most of his lands after getting into financial difficulties, his creditors obtaining a 'decree of adjudication'. He managed to hold onto Over and Nether Larriston only. He is probably the Laird of Larriston to whom Walter Scott of Satchells dedicated part of his 'post'ral'. In 1667 he married Elizabeth, eldest daughter of John Maxwell of Cowhill, Dumfriesshire, and she had one son with him, but died before 1675. He later married Janet, 2nd daughter of Scott of Todrig (probably Thomsa). His children were: Robert, who succeeded to Larriston; Gilbert of Nethermill, who was a merchant in Hawick; William, who was apprenticed to a barber in 1699; and Janet, who married Robert Gledstains of that Ilk and secondly John Scott of Gorrenberry. His testament is recorded in 1688, but he may have died after that. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Eweslees. Scott of Satchells mentions him as 'Robert Elliot in Diuslies, the Laird of Clacks his Frier' and also 'Robert Elliot that dwells in the Dewslies'. Unless Scott of Satchells is confused, then he may have been a brother of Janet, eldest daughter of Walter Elliot of Arkleton, who married Gideon Scott of Glack (and Falnash). Robert (17th C.) recorded in 1678 as owner of part of Raperlaw called 'Wyliespeel', or Willie's Peel. This was valued at £104, and corresponded to William Turnbull's lands in Raperlaw in 1643. In another version of the 1678 records he is transcribed as 'Richard' and 'in williespeil'. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (17th C.) recorded as 'in Blackhall' in 1680 when he was indicted at the Justiciary Commission in Jedburgh for 'reset of theft'. He probably lived in Ewesdale. Robert (17th C.) recorded as 'in Stobs' in 1684 when he was on a long list of men declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. He was actually recorded on the list twice. He may be the Robert who was listed as a Covenanter at Langside in government papers from about the same time. It is unclear whether he was related to local Elliots or Eliotts. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Giddenscleuch in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th C.) miller at Hummelknowe Mill on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be related to the slightly later Robert. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Stitchellhill in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Robert of Caerlenrig (1655–98) 2nd son of Gavin. He was also known as Robert 'of Rig'. He paid tax on 2 hearths at Caerlenrig in 1694, and 'his herd' is also listed. He firstly married Agnes, daughter of John Langlands, minister of Wilton (as recorded in the will of Agnes' brother George Langlands in 1690); she was related to his brother Francis of Fenwick's wife Rachel Langlands. He secondly married Mary Elliot, who died in 1727, aged 80. His sons were Robert (b.1690s) of Caerlenrig and John. He also had a daughter, Margaret, who married John Elliot of Castlehope and Bilhope. His testament is recorded in 1699, when he was 'of Carlenrickrig'. He is buried at Teviothead. Robert 2nd Laird of Midlem Mill (d.1724) elder son of Gavin Eliott of Midlem Mill and Grange, and probably grandson of 'Gibbie wi the Gowden Gairters'. His father settled the lands of Midlem Mill on him in 1653. He paid the land tax on £36 in Cavers Parish in 1678; it is unclear what lands these were, but they were owned by the Duke of Buccleuch by the late 18th century and listed in Castleton Parish in 1788. Also in 1678 he paid tax on about £400 for Midlem Mill and other lands in Bowden Parish. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685 and 1690. Walter Scott of Satchells dedicated part of his 'post'ral' to him in 1688. He is recorded in 1693 as witness to a bond between Elliot of Harwood and Henry Douglas, writer in Edinburgh. In 1694 he was cautioner to a bond between Henry Elliot of Harwood and John Kerr of Cavers. He also witnessed a disposition between Gilbert Eliott of Stanedge and Henry Elliot of Harwood, as well as other bonds for the Elliots of Harwood about the same time. He was described as 'sheriff in that part of the sheriffdom of Roxburgh' in 1694. He also served as a Justice of the Peace. He contributed £200 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. In 1695 he acquired the lands of 'Clarelaw, called Langsyde' and North Prieston, which he bought from John Elliot of Langsyde. He added Whitmuir in 1702. He may have acted as factor for Gideon Scott of Highchester in the period 1695–99. In 1700 he was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament. He was witness to the marriage contract between William Elliot of Harwood and Jean Scott of Todrig in 1700. He also had a 'tack' for the lands of Stanedge the discharge of which is recorded in 1700. He was factor for his younger brother Sir Gilbert of Headshaw (and Minto) from 1706; it is said that when he was introduced as the brother of Sir Gilbert, he would say 'na, na, Gibbie's my brether'. He rented Easter and Wester Hassendean from the Duke of Buccleuch in 1720. He married Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Henry Elliot of Harwood in 1678 and had 9 children: Gilbert (d.1709); Robert (d.1753), who succeeded to Midlem Mill; Margaret (c.1680–1768), who married Henry Elliot of Lodgegill; Marion, who married Andrew Haliburton of Newmains; Anny, who married Robert Paterson of Drygrange; Elizabeth, who married lawyer John Gibson and possibly another Paterson of Drygrange; Helen (or 'Nelly'), who married William Elliot of Wolfelee; Magdalen (1694/4–1773), who married John Pasley of Craig; and a 'natural daughter' Elizabeth, who married Richard Paterson, portioner of Midlem. After his death Midlem Mill was sold and his wife and 3 daughters moved to Berwick – 'Dedicated to that Worthy and Generous Gentleman, Robert Elliot Laird of Midliemill' [CWS]. Robert of Penchrise (17th C.) involved in a court case in the 1690s. Along with William of Lymiecleuch he failed to pay a bond due to John Riddell of Haining; when they failed to show up in court the farms went to their guarantor, Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs. Robert (17th C.) admitted as a Burgess of Hawick as a consequence of volunteering to be one of the Militia men for the Burgh. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was married to Marion Culbertson and in 1694 their son Robert was baptised. The witnesses were Robert Storie and Robert Halliwell and this was one of the earliest entries in the existing records for Wilton Parish. Perhaps the same Robert in Galalaw had a son Alexander baptised in Wilton in 1704; William Henderson and James Jamieson were witnesses. Probably the same Robert was described as servant to Adam Scott of Galalaw when his daughter Bessie was baptised in 1709. Esther (b.1706), baptised in Wilton, was probably also his child. Robert of Larriston (17th/18th C.) eldest son of Robert. He was 'appearant of Lariston' in 1688 when Walter Scott of Satchells dedicated part of his 'Post'ral' to him. His father sold the family's lands in 1688 after being declared bankrupt. In 1689 his grandfather, John Maxwell of Cowhill, gave him the lands of 'Cullshangan' in the Parish of Crossmichael and the half merkland of Kirkland of Kirkpatrick Irongray. His grandmother further reduced her dower rights, and with this help from his grandparents he was able to in 1695 to buy back (or perhaps redeem the 'wadsett' on) the lands of Over and Nether Larriston (including the mill, mill lands and Larriston Rig) from Christopher Irving of Binks. In 1696 he reinstated his grandmother's 500 merks dower rights from the rents of Larriston. However, after his grandmother died in 1697 he gave a wadsett for the lands of Larriston Rig and Hopehead to John of Thorlieshope and his son John. He formally succeeded his father as heir of the Elliots of Redheugh and Larriston in 1712. However, he continued to have financial difficulties and in 1719 he sold outright the last of the family's local possessions to John Oliver of Dinlabyre, these being Over and Nether Larriston and Larriston Rig. He then moved to Newcastle, but later returned to Liddesdale, taking up residence in a cottage on the farm of Redheugh, where he died. He married Mary Applebie (or Appleby), and possibly had a 2nd wife. His children included: Robert (d.1752), a clerk in London, who died unmarried; James, farmer at Whitlaw, who died unmarried; Jean; another daughter, probably Helen ('Nelly'), who married Walter Amos, joiner in Rulewater in 1768; and Gilbert, who married Margaret, daughter of James Scott of Calfield, and was father of Maj.-Gen. William. Robert of Dinlabyre (17th/18th C.) eldest son of William of Dinlabyre. He was 'appearant of Dunlibire' in 1688, when Walter Scott of Satchells dedicated part of his 'Post'ral' to him. He was recorded as 'younger' in 1697 when he married Helen, eldest daughter of Arthur Forrester of Kingfield. In about 1698 he sold Dinlabyre to John Oliver. Nothing else is known about him. Robert (1665/6–1757) resident of Castleton Parish. He was married to Jean 'Ruan', who died in 1743, aged 73. Their children included William, merchant in Castleton, who died in 1741. They are buried at Castleton. William, son of John and Hannah Grieve, is also mentioned on the gravestone, and so presumably related. Robert (17th/18th C.) probably resident at Acreknowe. He married Mary Hislop in Cavers Parish in 1703. He is likely to be the father of William, born to a Robert in Cavers in 1706. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Bessie Brydon in Hawick in 1706. He was probably the Robert whose daughter Bessie was born in Wilton in 1709. Robert (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He was recorded as a cordiner in 1706 when he was one of the Burgesses directed to pay the glovers for providing Common-Riding coats for the Burgh Officers, piper and drummer. He witnessed baptisms in 1705, 1709 and 1721. He also witnessed one in 1716 for Robert Turnbull and Margaret Elliot (who may have been related to him). In 1712 he was described being 'in Wiltonn par' when one of his children was baptised. He married Jean Elliot in Wilton Parish in 1710. Their children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included: Mary (b.1712); Agnes (b.1714); Jean (b.1717); Anna (b.1719); and Margaret (b.1720). The witnesses in 1712 were Bailie Walter Graham and mason John Napier, in 1714 were 'officer' William Douglas and John Tudhope and in 1717 were Bailie Walter Elliot and weaver Robert Turnbull. Robert (17th/18th C.) farmer in Powisholm. In 1707 he was 'taken upon tryall as precenter' in Castleton Parish. Robert of Teindside (17th/18th C.) younger son of Simon of Swinside. He was sometimes referred to as 'of Tyneside', although his lands were certainly Teindside in Teviotdale and not in England. His brother Gideon owned Harwood-on-Teviot and in 1724 he sold Teindside to Gideon, In 1718 he married Jean, daughter of Rev. John Simpson of Morebattle. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Hummelknowes or Hummelknows Mill when his children were baptised. They were: James (b.1720); William (b.1732); Robert (b.1735); and Isabel (b.1737). He may be the Robert who maried Jane Elliot in 1717 or the Robert who maried Margaret Douglas in Cavers and Kirkton in 1719. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident at Ormiston in Cavers Parish. His children included: John (b.1727); and Bessie (b.1729). Robert (d.1752) son of the last Robert of Larriston. His brother James farmed at Whitlaw, and his sister (or perhaps other near relative) Helen married Walter Amos, joiner in Rulewater. He went to London in 1712 was a clerk in the office of Sir John Bernard. He became a senior clerk in the Pay Office, Great Court Yard, St. James's, London. He lived in the Parish of St. Peters, Cornhill, London. He loaned money to the Eliotts of Stobs (his distant relations). He died unmarried. He left some silver plate, gold rings, snuff-boxes and a portrait of Lord Heathfield. Robert 3rd Laird of Midlem Mill (d.1753), oldest surviving son of Robert, 2nd Laird. He was Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for Eskdale from about 1723–27 (although complaints about his conduct are recorded in letters of the 1740s), with Robert Scott of Burnhead replacing him in 1728. In 1728 he took over as Chamberlain for Teviotdalehead from Gideon Scott of Falnash, serving until 1741. During this period he lived at Langholm Castle, Broadhaugh and Branxholme. He must also have lived at Midlem Mill for some of that period and remodelled the house, since a stone built into the mill is inscribed 'R.E. 1730 K.E.' In 1734 there was a formal inquiry by the Bailies and Council 'how he came to take down the Bailies' seat in the kirk and by whose allowance', suggesting some disagreement over the authority of the Patron versus the Burgh. He must have attended Hawick Kirk around this time, since there is a record of him being unable to attend a particular fast day around 1730 and sending £ 10s for the collection. In 1735 he rented part of the farm of Branxholme Mains. He was one of the local lairds asked to decide on the position of the new Teviot Bridge in Hawick in 1739. In 1740 a baptism in Hawick was witnessed by 'Gardiner to Midlamiln at Branxome', showing that he was living at Branxholme at that time. He leased the farms of Priesthaugh and Peelbrae from the Buccleuch Estates in 1741. He paid the window tax in Bowden Parish in 1748 (and his widow paid in 1753). In the 1740s he was 'of Middlemilne and Selkirk' when his lands in Bowden Parish were valued at about £950. In 1719 in Wilton Parish he married Katherine (b.c.1701), only child of Adam Elliot of 'Tyndeside' (i.e. Teindside) and grand-daughter of Walter Elliot of Arkleton. They had 14 children: Robert (b.1719), who must have died young; Elizabeth (b.1721), who married Simon Haliburton of Howcleuch, minister at Castleton and Ashkirk; Anny and Margaret (b.1722), who were unmarried and lived at Lichfield Street in London; Gilbert (b.1724), died in infancy and buried in Ewes Kirkyard; Gavin (b.1727), 4th and last Laird of Midlem Mill, selling the estate to Prof. George Stewart and moving to London; Henry (b.1729), baptised in Cavers; Robert (b.1730), also baptised in Cavers, served in the Royal Navy and in 1744 was recorded becoming an apprentice in Edinburgh to merchant John Haliburton of Howcleuch; Andrew (d.1779), a Major in the Marines, who died in Rhode Island, U.S.A.; Adam (d.1752), who became a baker's apprentice in London in 1741 and died in Lisbon; Maisy, who lived in Berwick with her mother; Helen (d.1798), who married James Wilkie, merchant in Marseilles; Jean (b.1738), who was christened in Hawick and lived with her mother in Berwick; and another child who died young. He is buried at Bowden. When he died the estate was in debt and was sold off 3 years later by his trustees. His widow and unmarried daughters then moved to Berwick, where they worked 'washing and dressing cambrics'. Robert (17th/18th C.) miller of Hawick Mill. He was listed as 'Tacksman of the Mill and Lands of Hawick' in the baptism records of some of his children. He was 'milner' in 1719 when he witnessed a baptism for Archibald Paterson (recordly incorrectly as 'Robert Miller' in one version). He was 'Taxman' in 1730 when he witnessed a baptism for merchant Robert Howison. He married Jean Scott and their children included: Rachel (b.1718); Jean (b.1722); Margaret (b.1724); Beatrix (b.1727); and Janet (b.1728). The witnesses in 1718 were Walter Scott of Crumhaugh and Bailie William Laing and in 1722 were Walter Scott of Crumhaugh and Schoolmaster James Anderson. He was probably son of Walter, who was listed as miller in the 1710s. He was also described as 'tacksman of mill and lands of Hawick' in 1722 when he rented Ginglenwells and Dinlees (on the Hermitage Water) from the Buccleuch estates. He was probably the Robert listed as 'Tacksman' in 1725 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for William Tudhope. Robert of Caerlenrig (1694–1777), eldest son of Robert of Caerlenrig, his mother probably being Agnes Langlands. The dates of his birth and death are given elsewhere as (1697–1767), but those on the tombstone in Teviothead are probably correct. He is described as 'of Carlenrickrig' and 'of Rig' in different records. He could be the Robert 'of Ridge' who witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1710 (but would have been quite young at the time). In 1718 his 'brother German' John, 'wigg-maker in Hawick' witnessed a baptism in Hawick for a child of the deceased William Scott of Brieryhill. In 1722 he, along with Robert Scott of Skelfhill and James Grieve of Commonside petitioned the Presbytery for a preacher and meeting house in their district. In 1739 he witnessed baptisms in Hawick Parish for tenant Robert Whutson and for John Scott at Dryden. His lands of 'Rigg' were valued at £366 13s 4d in the 1740s. Due to 'embarrased circumstances' he was forced to sell Caerlenrig and then farmed at Winningtonrig. He is among the subscribers to the reprinted Buchanan's 'History of Scotland' (1752), being listed at 'Winningtonbridge'. In 1721 in Roberton he married Christian (b.1697–1767), daughter of William Elliot of Borthwickbrae; she was sister of William, 2nd Laird of Borthwickbrae at the time of their marriage. Their children were baptised in Cavers Parish. They had 6 sons: Robert (1722–1770), writer in Edinburgh, who died unmarried; William (1724–97), farmer at Winningtonrig, who married Margaret Anderson; John (1725–1801), who married Margaret Curle; Thomas (1731–1808), who became minister of Cavers; and Francis, 'Frank' (1733–79), skinner in Hawick, also died unmarried. Another son, Gideon, may have died young. They also had 4 daughters: Mary (b.1727), who married William Grieve, farmer at Southfield; Isobel (b.1729), who married a Kerr; Agnes (b.1729), twin of Isobel, who apparently did not survive; Margaret (b.1735), who married George Pott, the purchaser of Caerlenrig; and Christian (b.1738), who married James Oliver in 1765. He and his son William were witnesses for a baptism for William Grieve (farmer in Southfield) and his daughter Mary in 1764. He and his wife both died at Winningtonrig. Robert of Binks (1702–66) eldest surviving son of John of Binks. He was tenant farmer in Burnmouth. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Elizabeth Robson (c.1722–93), who was from Boghall. Their children were: John (b.1754), who succeeded; Robert (b.1756), who died young; Jean (1758–87), who married John Elliot of Whitehaugh; Christian (1761–82); and Catherine, who died unmarried. His daughter Jean was probably the 'Miss Jean Elliot, Burnmouth' who subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). He is buried in Castleton Kirkyard. Robert (18th C.) tenant in Slaidhills. He was tenant at Slaidhills (along with Patrick Hume) in 1743 who witnessed a baptism for Adam Hogg in 1743. He married Agnes Hardie and their daughter Agnes was baptised in 1740. The witnesses were Thomas Elliot at Harwood and Francis Elliot (brother of Robert), who may have been related to him. Robert (18th C.) resident of upper Teviotdale. He was recorded at Braidhaugh in 1747 and 1748 when children of his were baptised in Cavers Parish. He married Bessie Nixon. Their children included: Robert (b.1740) in Falnash Mill; Janet (b.1743), who worked at Falnash; Thomas (b.1747) in Broadhaugh; an unnamed child (b.1748); and Beatrix (b.1750), also lived at Broadhaugh. Robert (1711–82) son of William and Margaret Mather, he was grandson of William of Cooms. He was born in Hawick Parish. He married Catherine Armstrong, from the Sorbie family and their children included: Jean, who married George Graham from Greenknowe; Thomas in Harden; Margaret, who married James Davidson; and Robert in Crookham. Robert (1720/1–82) youngest son of William,

Laird of Harwood. He joined the army as an Ensign in the 1st Regiment of Foot in 1738 and was a Lieutenant on half-pay in Sir William Pepperell's Regiment of Foot by 1757. Although commonly referred to as 'Captain', he appears never to have held that rank. In 1763 he had a bond with his brother Henry for the lands of Fernielees and a sasine in 1763 from William Elliot of Tarras for Blakehope, Lodgegill and other lands. He was also tenant at Stonedge in the late 1700s when it was owned by Robert Lisle. He served as an executor for Henry of Peel, who died in 1780. In 1766 he married Elizabeth, youngest daughter of Robert Pringle of Clifton, and she died in 1820, aged 88. They had 8 children: the eldest son, William (b.1766), succeeded to Harwood after the death of his uncle Henry; Robert (b.1767), married Anne Hilly of Portsmouth and was a Vice-Admiral in the Royal Navy; Pringle (c.1768–88) was apprenticed to a surgeon; Henry (1769–1841) married Janet, 2nd daughter of Rev. Dr. Somerville of Jedburgh and attained the rank of Major-General in the Army; Thomas (b.1771) farmed at Kirndean and married Helen, daughter of Thomas Scott of Peel; Margaret (b.1773), the only daughter, married Peter Brown of Rawflat; Andrew (1775–1810), was a Captain in the 70th Regiment and died unmarried at St. Thomas, Virgin Islands; and Mark (1776–1854), who was a tenant farmer in Lanton. He died at Hobsburn. Robert of Fenwick (18th C.) son of Francis and Rachel Langlands. He may be the Laird of Fenwick recorded paying a year's rent for the weighthouse in Hawick in 1729. Along with Walter Scott (farmer at Commonside) he leased Unthank and Fiddleton from the Buccleuch Estates in 1733. In 1737 he and Robert Harrison, William Ogilvie of Hoscote and lawyer Thomas Watson entered into a partnership to establish and stillhouse and brewhouse in Hawick. He is recorded in 1738 receiving the 'tack' from the Buccleuch Estates of a 'stillhouse and brewhouse on east side of the water of Slitridge, and of ground adjacent; also a malt kiln and barn yet to be built; all lying in parish of Hawick'. This may be the first record of brewing and distilling near Hawick; it may refer to the lands of 'Whusky Hooses' and/or the 'Brewery Haugh' on Slitrig Crescent. His lands were valued at £496 13s 4d in the 1740s. In 1747 he witnessed a baptism for Charles Scott of Crumhaugh. He became a Burgess of Glasgow in 1753. About 1756 he sold Easter Highchesters and Lairhope to Henry Scott, Duke of Buccleuch; he may have died shortly afterwards, since there are other documents between the Duke of Buccleuch and his trustees in 1756–8. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He firstly married Jean Scott (from an unknown branch of that family), this probably being the irregular marriage of Robert 'eldest lawful son to Francis' to Jean Scott in Carlisle in 1716 that was a matter brought before the Hawick Parish Session in 1717; he must have been fairly young at the time, suggesting this was an elopement or rushed marriage of some kind. He secondly married Katherine (b.1697), daughter of William Elliot of Arkleton; she had previously married David Laing of Westerkirk and Charles Telfer minister of Hawick. It is said that his only child was Gavin, who was the last Elliot of Fenwick; however, 'James Elliot, Fenwick', whose daughter Magdalene was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1758 was probably another son. Robert 'Hobbie' (18th C.) resident of a cottage called Hassely Cleugh on Stonedge farm. A story is told (recounted by Walter Deans) of how he went to the blacksmith's at Unthank to get a 'sling' (perhaps for a sled), but the smith was busy, and by the time it was his turn he had forgotten what he came for. Eventually he decided 'it was time for him ta gang hame, as he had a ferr road ta gang' and the smith said 'Ay Hobbie, it's a lang sling', to which he replied 'a lang sling, that's the verra thing a' wanted made, a gude sling, darsay am donnert'. Robert (b.c.1700) son of Walter in Brugh. He married Elizabeth Scott, who came from Doorpool. He had one known child, Adam, who lived in Hawick and was father of James of Goldielands, Schoolmaster at Wilton. Robert (18th C.) tenant in Sundhope farm in the middle of the 1700s. Robert (18th C.) resident of Ewesdale. He married Janet Scott, who was also from there. Their children included: Thomas (b.1741); and Mary (b.1743). Jean (b.1737) and Robert (b.1739), born in Langholm Parish, may also have been their children. Robert of Reidheugh (1705–93) 2nd son of William in Braidlie and Whithaugh. His father purchased Redheugh for him around 1730, thus regaining the home of his ancestors. He was tenant in Cleughhead in 1744 when he had a charter of confirmation for Redheugh in liferent for himself and in fee for his son William. In 1778 he was also tenant in Foulshiels, Kershope and Shaws. In 1786, for reasons unknown, he disinherited his eldest son William in favour of his 2nd son John. He was recorded as Robert of Redheugh on the 1786–92 Horse Tax Rolls. His lands of Reidheugh were valued at

£96 11s in 1788. He married Margaret Beattie (d.1767). They had at least 3 children: William, tenant in Hillhouse, who married Margaret Haliburton from Roughley; John of Redheugh (1741–1809), farmer in Cleughhead and Foulshiels, who married Margaret Russell; and Thomas (1745–1800), who married Mary Thomson. Both he and his wife are buried in Castleton Cemetery. Robert (b.c.1715) eldest surviving son of William of Thorlieshope and Overton. He succeeded his father in 1744 and immediately sold Thorlieshope. He is probably the Robert who paid tax at Overton (in Oxnam Parish) in 1748 and also the Robert of Overton recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He may then have moved to London. He married Mary Henderson, who died at the age of 25. He also married a second time. His children included: Cassandra, who was 2nd wife of Dr. William of Arkleton; Margaret (1751/2–1842), who died unmarried in Jedburgh; and Rebecca (b.1753), who died in infancy. Robert (1717/8–1816) resident of Roxburghshire, whose death is recorded at the age of 98. The report states that 'a short period previous to his death, he told Mr John Scott, meal-dealer, Hawick, that about 70 years ago he was sent by his father to Hawick, with one shilling to purchase a stone of barley-meal, a capful of salt, a pound of butter, and a pennyworth of tobacco – all of which he got for the said shilling'. Robert (1722–79) lived at Sorbie in Ewes Parish. He married Janet Wilson (1726–85) and their children included: William (1753–85), who married Jean Davidson; Jean (b.1756); Margaret (b.1758); Walter (b.1764); John (d.1792); and Mary (1778–88). He and his wife are buried at Ewes Churchyard. Robert (1722/3–70) eldest son of Robert of Caerlenrig. He was a writer in Edinburgh and died unmarried. He is probably the writer in Edinburgh who in 1764 acted for the pursuers in the case regarding the division of Wilton Common. He is probably also the Robert, writer in Edinburgh, who acted as Proctor for Hawick during the 1767 perambulation of the Common, undertaken as part of the case brought by the Duke of Buccleuch for its division. Robert (1724/5–70) 2nd son of John in Whithaugh. He was tenant farmer at Hermitage and elsewhere from about 1748, farming an area of perhaps 5,000 or 6,000 acres, on the eastern side of the Hermitage Water, including Braidlie, Gorrenberry, Hermitage and Millburnholm. It is said that he was a well organised farm manager, who had little help from the Buccleuch Estates. He married Janet Scott from Greenwood. Their children were: John (1750–1821), tenant in Hermitage, and also farmer at other farms, who married Christian Grieve and then Margaret Scott from Skelfhill; Walter (1754–97), who farmed Millburnholm and married Helen Crozier from Brighouse; William (1759–1829) in Millburnholm, who married Elizabeth Laidlaw from Falnash; Jean (b.1760), who married William Sharp of Hartsgarth; Robert (b.1760) tenant in Moraylees and Haydon Bridge, who married Mary Scott from Skelfhill; and Philip (b.1862), merchant in America. There are meticulous farm records of his, covering the period 1748–55, which survive. Robert (d.bef. 1777) Hawick resident. The death of his wife Betty Scott is recorded in 1777. Robert (1725–57) 2nd son of the 2nd Sir Gilbert of Minto. He was a Captain in the Royals. He died suddenly at the home of his brother Sir Gilbert. Robert (18th C.) Schoolmaster in Kirkton from at least 1751. He remained in his position until 1761, when replaced by Thomas Wilson. Nothing else is known about him. Robert (b.1730) younger son to Robert of Midlem Mill, he was baptised in Cavers Parish. In 1744 he was apprenticed as a merchant to John Haliburton of Howcleuch (who was surely related to Rev. Simon Haliburton who married his sister Elizabeth). He later joined the Navy, being an ensign in the Marines. He is also said to have been a clerk on H.M.S. Royal George. He married, but nothing else is known about him. Robert (18th C.) son of Adam in Dykeraw. He was described as being 'in Know', which is probably Priesthill Know in Liddesdale. He married Helen Grieve and their children included: Robert in Know, who married Marion Elliot; and Ninian in Priesthill. Robert (18th C.) writer (i.e. lawyer) in Edinburgh, who was legal agent for the town, particularly during the protracted case involving the division of the Common. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1761. It is possible he is the same as the descendant of the Elliots of Caerlenrig. Robert (18th C.) married Janet Rae in Hawick in 1756. Robert (18th C.) resident at Howlcleuch in 1757 when his son Andrew was baptised in Roberton Parish. Perhaps the same Robert was resident at Woodburn in Roberton Parish in 1763 and 1767 when his children Helen and John were baptised. He may be the Robert who married Janet Scott in Roberton in 1750 or the Robert who married Margaret Rieve in Roberton in 1754. Isobel (b.1760) may also have been his child. Robert (d.1799) shoemaker of the Cross Wynd. He was probably son of

Adam, older brother of Schoolmaster James (later of Goldielands), and may also have been brother of shoemaker Adam. In 1768 he witnessed a baptism for John Nichol. He subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). He may be the shoemaker Robert who in 1787 witnessed a baptism for stockingmaker Mark Sutherland. In 1761 in Hawick Parish he married Isobel Scott, who died in 1796. His children included: Walter (b.1762), who carried on his business; James (b.1765), whose wife may have died in 1835; Janet (b.1767); and John (b.1771). The witnesses in 1765 were carrier James Wilson and weaver John Wilson. Robert (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. He could be the son of Hector born there in 1738. His children included: Hector (b.1765), probably father of Robert (b.1792); Isabel (b.1767); Jean (b.1768); and Margaret (b.1771). He is surely related to the Hector whose children were born in Southdean Parish in the 1750s. Robert (18th C.) tenant in Heap in Wilton Parish. His wife was Janet Russell and their children included: Isabel (b.1776); Robert (b.1777); Betty (b.1779); and Isabel (again, b.1785). Robert (18th C.) resident at Parkhill Wester in 1774 when his son John was baptised in Roberton Parish. There are several other children born in Roberton around that time who could also be his, e.g. Robert (b.1770), Archibald (b.1777) and Henry (b.1779). Robert (18th C.) son of Robert in Know, this probably being Priesthill Know in Castleton Parish. He married Marion Elliot and died without issue. Robert (b.c.1745) son of William of Wolfelee with his 2nd wife Margaret Ogilvie. He was a merchant in Amsterdam. He purchased the estate of Pinnaclehill near Kelso. He died without issue and left Pinnaclehill to his niece Charlotte. Robert (1746–1817) tenant at Powisholm and other places in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. It is possible he was son of William in Southdeanrig. He married Wilhelmina Hislop (1763–1836). Their children included: Christian (b.1788); Margaret (1790–95); Ann (b.1793); Robert (b.1796), who also farmed at Powisholm; John (b.1797), who farmed at Middleholm; James (b.1798); Margaret (b.1799); and William (b.1802), who was farmer at Harden in Castleton Parish. Robert (c.1752–1827) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Betty Elliot (c.1755–1828) and their children included: Ann (b.1783); Elizabeth (b.1784); Helen (b.1786); and Robert (1788–1812), who was a teacher. Rev. Robert (1755–1824) younger son of Sir Gilbert, 3rd Baronet of Minto. He was Rector of Wheldrake Church in Yorkshire. In 1779 he was given liferent of a set of small pieces of land formerly called Minto Townhead, consisting of: South Croft; North Croft; Quicksands Park; Notman's Shot; Langlands; Temple Croft; Howden; Whitfield; West South Croft; Minto Town; and the green of Minto. These were valued at £461 1s 10d, enough to put him over the required minimum of £400 to be on the roll. In 1788 he was listed under 'Votes of Sir Gilbert Elliot' among the voters of Roxburghshire. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. He was still listed as liferenter of lands in Minto Parish in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. In 1788 he married Mary, daughter of Rev. Edmund Garforth of Askham. They had 5 children: Eleanor Maria Anne, who married Dr. James Grant of Jedburgh; Isabella Lucy, who married Gilbert, 3rd son of Sir William Eliott, the 6th Baronet of Stobs; Agnes, who died unmarried; Robert, who was a Captain in the Royal Navy; and Edward Eden, Accountant General in Bombay. Robert (c.1759–1844) cattle dealer in Newcastleton. He may be the son of William who was born in Hobkirk Parish in 1758. In 1841 he was living at about 10 Langholm Street, with Helen and Mary, who were probably his daughters. He is probably the Robert who married Mary Elliot (c.1768–1840) in Castleton and whose children included Isabell (1799–1804); Mary (1804–54); and Robina (1816–42). Robert (c.1760–1824) son of Robert, who farmed at Hermitage. He was tenant in Moraylees and Haydon Bridge. He married Mary Scott (c.1776–1843) from Skelfhill and their children were Robert (1809–44) and James (1813–90), who were both tenants at Galalaw. Capt. Robert (1761–1840) younger son of William of Whithaugh, he was born in Castleton Parish. He was in the Merchant Navy, serving as Captain of the 'Hope', which operated between Calcutta and Canton. He farmed at Glencartholm, near Canonbie. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He married Alison Grieg (c.1779–1856). Robert (b.1762) son of John, he was born in Hobkirk Parish. He emigrated to America, settling in Quebec, where he married Elizabeth Louise Josephte Savoie in 1788. Their children included: Andre (b.1788); Marie-Louise Allet (b.1790); Simon (1793–1865), who married Rebecca Armstrong and was great-grandfather of Canadian Prime Minister Pierre Trudeau; Joseph (b.1795); Marie (b.1796); Charlotte (b.1798), who probably died young; Helene Allet (b.1802), also died young; Margaritte

(b.1805); twins Helene and Charlotte (b.1807); and Sara-Marie (b.1810). Robert (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Roan in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was also taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. He died in Trois-Rivières, Quebec. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Harwood in Hobkirk Parish. His son Archibald is recorded in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire in 1797. It is unclear if they were related to the Elliots of Harwood. Robert 'Little Hobbie o the Castleton' (18th/19th C.) resident of Byreholm in Castleton Parish. In the 'Local Historians Table Book' of 1841 it is described that he was 'a dwarf', 'reputed to be a fairy changeling', who had died less than 20 years previously. He was 'a most irascible creature' who would pull out a knife when insulted, but was too slow to catch people. He also had a run-in with his neighbour William Scott from Kirndean, threatening the big man to a duel for tarnishing his reputation, causing Scott to flee from his house. Robert (b.1767), W.S., son of William in Hillhouse and Mary Haliburton, he was born in Castleton Parish. He became a lawyer in Kirkcaldy and died unmarried. Robert (1767–1854) son of Capt. Robert, and grandson of William of Harwood. He was born at Hobsburn in Hobkirk Parish. He joined the Navy in 1781 and rose through the ranks, becoming Commander in 1801 and going on half-pay in 1814. In 1846 he was promoted to the rank of Vice-Admiral. In 1797 he married Ann, daughter of Andrew Hilley of Plymouth. His children were: Elizabeth Pringle (1801–47); Robert Hilley (b.1803), Captain in the Navy, who married Elizabeth Carr; and Helen (or Ann), who married John Paton of Crailing, his 1st wife being her cousin Eleanor Elliot. He stayed at Hundalee and then at Glenbank and was a member of the Jedforest Club. For several years before his death he was completely blind. Robert (1768/9–1856) shepherd at Blinkbonny. He married Elspeth 'Huitson' or 'Hotson' (possibly Whitson), who died in 1815, aged 50; she was probably related to George 'Hotson' (d.1728), who is buried in the adjacent lair at Ettleton. Their children included: Margaret (b.1789); Helen (b.1791); William (b.1794); Christian (b.1799), who may have married shoemaker William Elliot; Elspeth (1803–59); Robert (b.1807); and John, who died in infancy. Robert 'Robbie' (18th/19th C.) from Langburnshiels. He was an apprentice baker with Thomas Kedie in Hawick. He produced a sketch entitled 'Wilton Path and Damside, 1810', which is one of the first representations of Wilton. It was reproduced in the Hawick News in 1910 and discussed in the Transactions in 2015. Robert (b.1769) farmer at Lanton Mains, taking over from his father, William. He married Margaret Hall (c.1778–1818) and their children included: Christian (c.1810–27); and Jane (c.1812–31). The family are buried at Abbotrule Kirkyard. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. Probably the same Robert was father of: Mary (b.1783), born at Tythehouse; William (b.1792), born at Harwood; and John (b.1794), born at Robert's Linn. Robert (b.c.1770) born in Bedrule, he was a farmer. In 1841 he is 'Independent' and in 1851 recorded as 'Pauper Formerly Farmer'. His wife was Jessy from Morebattle and their children included Margaret, Mary (who married David Turnbull), Christian and Janet. Robert of Cooms (18th/19th C.) subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He was cautioner for a bank in Langholm in 1825. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. Robert of Arkleton (1775–1810) son of William and Cassandra Elliot. He was a Captain in the 5th Bombay Native Infantry, and saw active service at the siege of Seringapatam. He returned home about 1803 to take possession of the family estate. He was then a Major in the 1st Battalion of the Roxburghshire Volunteers. He led some of the men of Liddesdale and the Slitrig valley to Hawick in response to the False Alarm of 1804; it was said that he was already in Hawick when the alarm sounded and rode out to meet his men, being knocked off his horse by the enthusiastic charge of the man at their head, Andrew Ker. He returned to India where he was promoted to Major. He later accompanied the mission to the Isle of France, where he (and many others) were killed on the H.M.S. Africaine when attacked by 2 Franch frigates. Robert 'Blinnd Robbie' (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick. His wife Margaret Robson's death is recorded in the Hawick Parish records in 1805. It appears that they were married in 1790. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Deadwater who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825 and William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He probably had a local connection. Robert (b.c.1770s) servant at Burnfoot on Ale according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. It is possible that the same Robert was listed as a servant at Whitehaugh in Wilton Parish on the 1801 Militia ballot. Robert (1780–1851) son of John, tanner in Hawick. He was probably the tanner in Hawick on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. However, he became a farmer at Roan. He may be the 'R. Elliot, Roon' who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He was listed among heads of households in the Parish in 1835–41. In 1851 his widow is recorded as farmer of 130 arable acres and more than 4,000 acres of moorland, employing 5 labourers. His wife was Isabel, who was also from Hawick. He is buried at Teviothead. Robert (b.c.1780) resident of Birkwoodfoot according to the ballot for the Militia in Kirkton Parish in 1801. Robert (b.1780/1) from Ewesdale, he was a farmer in Roberton Parish. He is probably the renant farmer at Harden recorded on the ballot for the Militia in Roberton Parish in 1812. In 1841 he was a gamekeeper at Harden and in 1851 was a retired farmer at Scaurnook. His wife was Janet (from Canonbie). He is probably either the son of Thomas and Isabel Dalgleish baptised in Ewes in 1780, or the son of Thomas and Elizabeth Carruthers baptised in 1781. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of the Hawick area. He married Ann Matheson (or 'Mather' or 'Mathrew') and their children, baptised in East Bank Kirk, included: James (b.1810); Elizabeth (b.1812); and Margaret (b.1817). Robert (b.1785) son of John, farmer at Twislehope. He was a surgeon in Haltwhistle. He married Jane Elliot from Cringledykes, daughter of John and granddaughter of Robert in Hermitage. Their children were Margaret, Jane, John (surgeon in Bellingham), Robert (surgeon in Haltwhistle), William (lived in london), Janet, Jane, Alice, Georgina, Andrew (who married Helen from Hermitage), Kate and Margaret (who married James Hill, Controller General for Scotland). Robert (1790–1872) eldest son of William, and grandson of Robert of Caerlenrig, he was born in Kirkton Parish. He became tenant in Teindside and is recorded there in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick'. Probably the same Robert 'of Teindside' was one of the founder members of the Wisp Club. He is recorded there as farmer in 1841, living with William (probably his brother) and Margaret (probably his mother). In 1851 he was recorded there as farmer of 440 acres, employing 6 labourers. He died unmarried. Robert (18th/19th C.) spinner in Hawick. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. Robert (c.1785–1849) son of William and Jean Davidson from Ewes. He was a slater in Hawick, recorded at Townhead in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He was at about 2 Loan in 1841. He married Janet 'Bleak' (or Black, c.1789–1831). Their children included: Margaret (1811–79), who married William Miller; William (1814–67), who married Helen Smith; Jane (1816–74), who married John White; Janet (1818–83), who married Thomas Thomson; twins Martha (1822–92) and Robert (b.1822), who probably died young; Thomas (1825–64); and John Scott (1829–1914), who was Cornet in 1851. His will is registered with Jedburgh Sheriff Court in 1849. Robert (1791–1858) son of Walter and Helen Crozier. He farmed at Hermitage, like several members of his family before him. He is probably the Elliot from Kirndean who was on the Committee of the Proprietors of Castleton Library. He is listed among male heads of households in 1835–41. In 1851 he was farming 2,000 acres of moorland and employing 4 labourers. He married Mary (c.1804–35), daughter of Thomas Murray and Janet Inglis, from Whisgills. She was probably already dead in 1841, and he was certainly a widower by 1851. He was wealthy enough to be employing a governess in 1841. His children were: Janet (1826–73), who married Colin Hay; Walter (1828–93), who farmed Hermitage after his father died; Thomas (1830–54), who died on the Isle of Mull; Helen (1832–93); and Mary (b.1834). Robert (1793/4–1858) only son of William, tenant at Millburn. He also farmed at Millburnholm. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821 and Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. In 1827 he married Helen (or Eleanor), daughter of John Davidson from Bewcastle; she died in 1886, aged 82, and was buried at Ettleton. Their children: included William (1828–91), who emigrated to New Zealand; Anne (b.1829); Elizabeth or Betty Laidlaw (b.1831); and John Davidson (b.1834–96). He died at Toftholm and is buried at Unthank. Robert of Reidheugh (1794–1869) only son of Thomas and Mary Thomson. He inherited the lands of Redheugh from his uncle John. During his time the road to Hawick (B6399) was built adjacent to the farm. He also had the Rede Burn partially diverted and drained the marshy area behind the farm. In 1805 (although this date seems too early) he sold Cooms and Middlemoss to Humble Lamb of Ryton. He was listed for the first time as a head of household in Castleton Parish in 1837. He was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale in the 1850s. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He was also Vice-President of the Liddesdale Curling Club. He was listed at Redheugh in Slater's 1852 directory and in the 1861 census was 'Land Proprietor' there. In 1851 he and his wife settled Redheugh jointly on their 2 sons, reserving the liferent for themselves. He was still at Redheugh in a directory of 1868. In 1820 he married Jessie (or Janet, c.1796–1871) Elliot from Flatt. Their children were: Thomas (1821–69), who married Elizabeth Kyle; Jane (1822/3–67); Mary (b.1824), who died young; John (1825–58), who died in Mexico; Mary (1827–53); Henry (b.1829), who also died young; and another daughter. He settled Redheugh jointly on his 2 sons in 1851. He and his wife are buried in Castleton cemetery. Robert (b.1794/5–1878) carrier in Newcastleton. He may also have lived at Greens. He was a carter in Newcastleton, listed among heads of households in Newcastleton in 1835–41. He was listed in Pigot's 1837 directory as carrier to Carlisle once a week, and also to Hawick once a week. In 1841, 1851 and 1861 he was at about 33 North Hermitage Street. In 1861 he was listed as farmer of 26 acres. His wife was Agnes Murray Elliot (c.1794–1876) from Westerkirk. Their children included: Isabella (b.1819); Janet (b.1821); Agnes (b.1823); Agnes (again, 1824–97); Christian (b.1826); John (1828–57); Robert (b.1830); Barton (a daughter, 1831–1920); Robert (again, b.1834); Jane (or Jean, b.1835); and James Douglas (1838–78), who died in London. Robert (b.1795/6) shepherd in Castleton Parish, where he was born. In 1861 he was living at about 1 Langholm Street in Newcastleton. His wife was Isabella and their children included Robert and Violet. His wife was from England, and his children were born there. Robert (1796/7–1865) son of Robert, tenant in Powisholm in Castleton Parish. He farmed at Powisholm, like his father, and is recorded there in the 1840s to 1860s. He is probably the 'R. Elliot, Pouseholm' subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He married Esther (1798–1889), daughter of carter Adam Elliot from Newcastleton. Their children included: Robert (1821–1908), who live at Bankend and Powisholm; Margaret (1823–1900), who married Andrew Thompson; Wilhelmina (1825–93), married John Robson and died at Teviothead; Adam (1827–80), who worked for a while as a baker in Hawick; John (1829–48); Ann (1831–95); Mary (1833–1906); James Armstrong (1835–1903); Elizabeth (1837–85), married John Glendinning from Liverpool and died in California; Sibella (1839–1911); and William (1843–1921). He is probably related to the Robert who farmed at the same place earlier. Robert (19th C.) recorded as 'Robert, esq. of Leehaugh' on Pigot's 1837 directory. He probably lived at Leahaugh near Newcastleton, and could be the same as Robert of Redheugh. Robert (1802–77) born in Castleton Parish, son of William and Jean Easton. He was an agricultural labourer and shepherd. He was listed among heads of households as labourer at Gillfoot in 1835 and Whitropeburn in 1836–38, and shepherd at Phaupknowe in 1840 and 1841. He is listed as labourer at Phaupknowe in 1841 and Upperraw in 1851. He married Betty Telfer (c.1805–75). Their children included: John (1822–26); Isabella (1827–46); William (b.1829); Jeanie (b.1832); Robert (b.1834); Sarah (b.1839); and John (b.1841). He died at Whitehillbrae. Robert Kerr 6th Laird of Harwood (1805–73) eldest son of William the 5th Laird. Before 1835 he lived at Greenriver on the Stonedge estate. He succeeded to the Harwood estates at the age of 30 and moved into the new house that his father had had built on the estate. He served in the 23rd Royal Welsh Fusiliers, reaching the rank of Lieutenant. He is said to have been a keen country sportsman, excelling at riding with the hounds. Along with some friends he started the 'Jedforest Harriers', meeting at Swinnie Toll-bar, Howahill, Chapel of Cross (presumably Shiplaw Corse), Ruletownhead and elsewhere. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1829. He was a J.P. for Roxburghshire, as well as being Deputy-Lieutenant (from 1848), a Commissioner of Supply for the county, Tax Commissioner and member of the Police Board. In 1845, after a 2 year legal battle, he inherited the Clifton estates from his cousin Robert Pringle; his tenants in Rulewater lit a huge bonfire to mark the occasion, as recounted in a poem by John Halliday. He said 'The name Clifton has been a lucky one with me. When staying at Clifton, near Bristol, I met my wife, a Miss Clifton, and I succeeded to the estate of Clifton'. On the announcement of the legal victory there was a great celebration at Harwood, with a bonfire lit on a nearby hill. He was said to be a keen supporter of the 'uppies' in Hobkirk Baa. In 1833 he married Mary Anne, daughter of Charles Claude Clifton of Twymaur, Brecon, and she died in 1871. His 13 children were: Mary-Anne Frances (1834–1917), said to be the prettiest, who married Sir Edward Cludde Cockburn; William Claude (1835–1922), who succeeded; Charles John (1836/7–1863), who died aged 27, after returning from India; Robert Henry (b.1838) of Clifton Park, who married Anna Maria Louisa, daughter of Lord Trimleston, and whose son Robert would later succeed as Laird of Harwood; Ellen Eliza (b.1839), who married Chetwode Drummond Pringle; Adelaide Catherine (1840–1926), who married Sir Basil Francis Hall; Chandos Frederick (1842–62); Anna Maria Octavia (b.1844), who died young; Caroline Clifton (1845–1923), who married James Moffat of Edenhall; Edward Claude (1846–1913), married Eleanor, daughter of John Jones of Melbourne; Charlotte Elizabeth (1848–93), who married John Dalton of Sleningford Park, Yorkshire; Anna Maria (b.1849), who married Lieut.-Col. James Colquhoun; and Mark Pringle (1851–1924). The family used to spend the winter at Brighton, where he would go hunting. He died there following a hunting accident. His will is registered with Jedburgh Sheriff Court in 1873. He was buried in Hobkirk Kirkyard. Robert (b.1804/5) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was an agricultural labourer and gardener in Hawick. In 1841 he was living at Slitrig Cottage with his wife and mother-in-law Margaret. By 1851 he was a widower, still at Slitrig Cottage and in 1861 he was a shepherd at Bucklands. He married Janet Crozier in Wilton in 1841. Their children included: Margaret (b.1842); and Robert (b.1844). He could be the son of John born in Hobkirk in 1807. Robert (1808–88) youngest son of James, Schoolmaster of Wilton, who lived at Goldielands. He was a sheep farmer in Roxburghshire, Selkirkshire and Dumfriesshire, before settling at Laighwood, near Dunkeld. He received prizes for his sheep from the Highland and Agricultural Society in the 1850s and 60s. He corresponded with George Cupples, who was gathering data for Charles Darwin, on the subject of the proportions of sheep born of each sex. He was also on that Society's Committee for Land Improvement. Robert (1808/9–44) elder son of Robert, farmer at Hermitage, Haydon Bridge, etc. His mother was Mary Scott from Skelfhill. He probably held the tenancy of Galalaw farm, but died in Madeira (or perhaps Madras, India). After his death his brother James became tenant at Galalaw. Robert (b.1808/9) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was farm steward at Westerhouses in 1851 and 1861. He married Mary Renwick and their children included Elizabeth, Margaret, John, William, Francis, Marianne, Henry (b.1851) and Agnes (b.1854). Robert (c.1811–45) agricultural labourer who was living at Fodderlee Cottage in 1841. He married Mary Elliot (b.c.1814) and their children included Elizabeth (b.c.1834), Margaret (b.c.1835) and John (b.c.1839). His will is registered with Jedburgh Sheriff Court. He could be the Robert, son of John, born in Hobkirk Parish in 1807. Robert (1807–96) younger son of James of Wolfelee and brother of Sir Walter. He was a twin of James. He was an elder of Wolfelee Free Kirk and also took a keen interest in the Sclenty Schuil. He lived to the age of 89. Robert (b.1812/3) born in Castleton Parish, he was a shepherd and labourer. In 1861 he was at about 37 South Hermitage Street. He married Mary Armstrong in 1840. Their children included: Christian (b.1842); Robert (b.1845); Jane; and Archibald. Robert (b.1814/5) born in Newcastleton, he was an agricultural labourer living around Sunnyside in Denholm in 1841. The family was living in a cottage at Hundalee in 1851. In 1861 he was a ploughman in Oxnam Parish. In 1836 he married Hannah Whillans from Crailing. Their family included: John (b.c.1837); Archibald; and Walter. His elderly uncle Walter, formerly a mason from Cavers, was also living with them in 1851. The family may have emigrated to Bruce County, Ontario. Robert (b.c.1815) labourer who was living at Hermitage Schoolhouse in 1841. He married Agnes Milligan and their children included: Jessie (or Janet, b.1835); Margaret; and Jane (b.1839); and Matthew (b.1841). He may have been related to James, who was Schoolmaster at Hermitage. Robert (b.1818/9) born in Hawick Parish, he was farm steward at Cavers estate in the 1860s. In 1851 and 1861 he was living at Cavers East Lodge (called 'Cavers Garden' in 1861). He was listed as 'gamekeeper' and his wife as 'portress'. He was probably the Robert from Cavers who donated a pair of wood-pigeons to the Museum in 1859. He was later farmer at Cavers Mains and was one of the people present at the excavation of the cairn at Belvedere on the Cavers estate in 1895. He was an Elder in East Bank Kirk. His wife was Isabella Elliot, probably daughter of John, who was shepherd at Shiplaw Corse. Their children included: Margaret (b.1850); William (b.1852); Mary (b.1854); Stuart Douglas (b.1856), an Edinburgh solicitor, who became a Colonel in the Volunteers; Elizabeth (b.1858); John (b.1860); Isabella (b.1863); Janet (b.1869); Janet (again, b.1866); Agnes (b.1869); and Robert (b.1872).

Robert (1821–1908) son of Robert, who farmed at Powisholm, and Esther Elliot. He was an agricultural labourer living at Bankend in Castleton Parish in 1861. In 1849 he married Christian Elliot (c.1826–1904) and their children included Agnes Murray (1850–1904); Robert (1851–1928); John (1853–1935); Esther; and Adam (1858–1903). He died at Powisholm. Robert Henry of Clifton Park (b.1837) 3rd son of Robert Henry. He inherited the lands of Clifton Park from his father. In about 1874 he also owned lands in Linton Parish. In 1868 he married Anna Maria Louisa Barnewall, only daughter of Thomas, Lord Trimleston. Their son Thomas became the next Laird of Harwood. Robert (1845–1918) younger son of Andrew, farmer at Twislehope. he emigrated to New Zealand in 1864 and married Elizabeth Fitt. Their children were Ettie, Eliza, Maud, Agnes and Andrew. Robert (b.1850/1) born in Kirkton Parish. In 1901 he was farm steward at Barnes Cottages. His wife was Annie and their children included Annie, Henry, Thomas, Jane, Edward and Robert. Robert of Reidheugh (d.1915) only son of Thomas and Elizabeth Kyle. He inherited Redheugh, being served heir to his grandfather in 1887. He married Effie McGregor Corbett, but they had no children. In 1918 his sister Anna Mary sold Redheugh to the tenants, James and Thomas Scott. Robert (1865–1937) son of Walter, farmer in Hermitage, and descended from the Elliots of Falnash. He also farmed at Hermitage, but gave up the lease and retired to Newcastleton. He married Isobel, sister of J.G. Wilson, manufacturer in Hawick. He secondly married Mary Elizabeth, daughter of Walter Paisley, ironmonger from Hawick. His only child was Isabella Jane Armstrong. Robert Young Scott 'Bob', M.B.E. (1920–2016) born on February 29th, so he celebrated his 21st birthday in 2004! A High School Maths teacher for 28 years, he coached tennis locally and received an M.B.E. in 1998 for services to lawn tennis. He married Madge, who coached tennis along with him, and they had sons Kim and Sean. Roland (15th C.) recorded as 'Rollando Elwald' in 1466 when he witnessed a charter at Kirkcudbright for Robert Herries. Roland (15th C.) recorded in the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. Along with 'Willot' and some Armstrongs, Hector Lauder, brother of the Laird of Todrig, had remission for bringing them to the area to attack the tenants of Whitmuir. They are described as 'traitors of Leven', but are as likely to have been from Liddesdale as England. Roland (15th/16th C.) recorded in a 1516 'respite' to William of Larriston and several other Liddesdale Elliots. He is listed as 'Rolland Elwald in Thorleshop'. He is surely related to the other Elliots of Thorlieshope, perhaps the generation between the John of the 1480s and 90s and the Robert or Robin of the 1540s to 60s. Roland (16th C.) tenant of the lands of Riccarton, recorded in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. Listed after him are William Elliot, along with Martin and Patrick Crozier. He may be related to some of the other nearly contemporary Rolands. Roland of Thorlieshope (16th C.) recorded in 1546 when he was one of the men to be entered as prisoners to John Kerr of Ferniehirst. This was along with John, son of Robert of Thorlieshope (whose relationship to him is unclear), as well as John, son to 'Hobe Quhytserk'. Roland 'Rowie' of the Park (16th C.) recorded in 1578 when he was held by Patrick Houston of that Ilk with a pledge of good behaviour to the King. He is probably the Robin of the Park who was accused (along with Simon and others) by the English in 1581 of stealing cattle and taking Thomas Routledge prisoner. He could be the man transcribed as 'James Rowe in the Park', listed along with Sym of the Park and Archibald of the Park in the Register of the Privy Seal in 1581. It is thus possible that he was son of James of the Park. However, he is probably the 'Rowie Ellot of the Park, called Symmis Rowie' listed in 1581 as the leader of the gang of Elliots of the Park released from Edinburgh Castle; his father was thus Simon. In 1582/3 his name was transcribed as 'Robbe' when several other Elliots were charged for his non-appearance. Roland 'Rowie' (16th C.) recorded in 1594 as 'Rowie Ellot of Ramsegill' when he signed the bond of assurance with the English Wardens. Probably the same man is recorded as 'Rowe Ellocht of the Hall' in a huge 1585 remission of crimes for men whose superior was Lord Maxwell; his name appears near those of Ewesdale residents, and it seems likely he was 'of the Hill' (rather than 'Hall'). 'Hob and Will Ellottis, brether' are listed after him, so possibly his brothers, or brothers to each other and more distantly related to him. Roland 'Rollie' (17th C.) described as 'called Park' in the 1660s when he was listed as a debtor of William Elliot of Binks, along with many other Elliots. He may have been a descendant of the earlier Elliots of Park. Roland (1815–41) son of James, tenant at Lymiecleuch. He was tenant farmer at Mackside in 1841. In 1837 he married Beatrice Pott (c.1799–1878), who died at Wilton Hill, Hawick.

Russell see Adm. Russell Eliott. Samuel (18th C.) possibly a resident at Wells. He was recorded as a wright in Denholm in 1723. Probably the same man was father of: James (b.1723) in Cavers Parish; Samuel (b.1725) in Cavers; Walter (b.1828) in Hobkirk and Bedrule Parishes; Alison (b.1730) in Hobkirk; and William (b.1732) in Bedrule. Samuel (b.c.1750) son of William of Wolfelee with his 2nd wife Margaret Ogilvie. He was a merchant in Antigua. He has 2 daughters: Alicia, who married William Hay Carre and Sir M.A. Crosby; and Eliza, who married Lord Despenser. Simon (15th C.) listed in 1482/3 along with James, Lawrence and John Elwald, as well as Robert Turnbull and Robert Dalgleish, when they said to be rebels captured by Patrick Dickson, Bailie of Peebles. Simon (16th C.) entered in 1537/8 for crimes along with his brother James 'Elwald' and William in Leahaugh, with sureties being Robert of Redheugh and his brother Archibald. They were accused of breaking open the shop of Thomas Graham in Selkirk. How he was related to other Elliots is unclear. Simon (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as the tenant of Park in Liddesdale. Either the same or a different Simon was also tenant at 'Coklaik'. He was probably an ancestor of the Simon of the Park recorded about 4 decades later. Simon (16th C.) recorded as 'Sym Elwald' in 1546 when he was witness to the bond entering some Elliots as prisoners with John Kerr of Ferniehirst. He signed with the help of the notary (suggesting that he could not write), 'in absens of my brother young William'. He may be the same as one of the other Simons. Simon 'Sim' (16th C.) proprietor of lands at Dodburn and adjacent farms. In 1567 Robert Scott of Thirlestane and Master Thomas Weston relieved Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme as surety for him and Airchie's Will in Gorrenberry. He is recorded in a bond of security of 1569 signed in Hawick, in which he is given as 'Sym Ellot in Dodburne', with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch serving as surety for him. 5 tenants are listed for whom he was surety himself. He may have been related to the other Elliots in the bond, e.g. Gavin in Skelfhill or Gavin of Falnash. When he failed to appear in 1569 (along with Gavin of Falnash and William of Gorrenberry), Scott of Buccleuch was to be liable for £1000. Also in 1569 he was one of the relief pledges listed for Gavin in Falnash (the other 2 being William of Gorrenberry and Gavin Eliott of Skelfhill, who were probably close relatives). Along with several other Elliots he signed the bond with the Regent Morton in 1572. In 1573 he was to be entered into ward in St. Andrews, according to the register of the Privy Council. It is possible he is the 'Sym Ellot', who with his brother Will in Dodburn and Archie, was found guilty in 1586 of 'a great stouth committed by them at the Eschellis'; the Crown was still trying to recover the penalties from their superior Will of Falnash in 1602. Simon 'Simmie' of the Park (16th C.) probably related to the earlier Simon of the Park. In 1578/9 there was a restatement at the Privy Council of a pledge that he should be placed in ward with the Laird of Corstorphine; his sureties were Martin of Braidlie and the deceased John of the Park, while Hob of the Park was also mentioned in the same document and so surely related. He was said to have escaped from ward, and hence his cautioners were fined. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Simons. He is listed as 'Sym Ellott of the Park' in 1581 among Armstrongs, Elliots and others who accused the Scotts and their allies. He was surely father of 'Symmis Rowie' of the Park, recorded in 1582/3, and possibly also father of 'Symmis Arche', who was one of the cautioners for 'Symmis Rowie'. 'Sims John Ellot of the Parke', recorded in 1583, was probably also his son. He was likely related to the other Elliots of the Park who are listed in 1583, namely 'Grey Willie', 'Scots Hobbie', 'Jamie of the Park', 'Grey Will's Jamie' and 'Hob's Hobbie'. He is recorded as 'Sym Ellott of the Park' in 1586 when his superior Robert of Redheugh was instructed to enter him in court; James of the Park was also listed and presumably closely related. Simon of Philhope, 'Mertin's Sym' (d.bef. 1592) eldest son of Martin of Braidlie. He is first mentioned in 1569, when he was among a number of pledges in exchange for Martin of Braidlie with the Regent Moray. In 1579 his father Martin purchased a 10 poundland of 'Reuhop or Philop' from John Turnbull and granted them to him. He is mentioned in 1580 along with his brothers Gavin, Archibald and Robert; in that year they were all implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh. He is 'Sime Ellot', son of Martin of 'Bradley' in a letter of 1583. In 1586 he was 'Sym Ellot, sone to the said Martene' when he occupied the farm of Riccarton Cleuch, which was released to him by Francis, Earl of Bothwell. He was 'Syme Ellott Martin's son' in 1590 when accused of stealing 8 cows from 'Medupp' in England, along with 'Ill-willed Will' Crozier and 'Quentin's Airchie' Crozier. He received a Crown Charter of the lands of Philhope (in the Borthwick valley) in 1591, along with his father. It is unclear if he succeeded to the lands for long after his father's death. There were Elliots at Philhope for several subsequent generations. His wife's name is not recorded, but his children included: Martin of Braidley; William of the Binks; and James 'in Hollis' (Hollow). His son Martin, along with Robert of Redheugh, made an agreement to bury their differences with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1599. Simon of Harden (16th C.) listed among the Elliots of Braidlie in 1583. His lands were presumably Harden in Liddesdale. It is possible he is the same man as Simon of Philhope. Simon 'in Philhope' (d.bef. 1628) eldest son of Martin of Braidlie and grandson of the earlier Simon of Philhope. He is recorded in the charter for the lands of Philhope in 1592. In 1615 his wardship, which had been in the hands of the Crown since his father's execution in 1607, was grnted to Thomas Armstrong of Craig. He married Elizabeth Chisholme (who was presumably from one of the local families), who survived him, and may later have married Archibald of Philhope. They had one child, Grizel, who was given as ward to Robert of Falnash when Simon died; she later married Robert of Falnash's son John and was heiress of Philhope. Simon 'Sim' (16th C.) recorded with a tower in the Debateable Land on Sandison's c.1590 map, to the north of Larriston. This could have been near Burnmouth perhaps. Simon 'Sim' (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1623 as 'Syme Ellott, callit Guyd, in Linsburne' when he was accused of stealing 3 cows from Jock, 'callit Dod' from the lands of 'Buceburne'. He was found guilty along with Abie Armstrong, although Archie Armstrong 'Raccas' and Francie Armstrong 'Tueden' were acquitted. He was ordered to be hanged for his crimes. Simon of the Binks (d.bef. 1656) 2nd son of William of the Binks, and great-grandson of Robert, 13th Chief. He is first mentioned in 1599 when accused of theft and then in a marriage suit with an illegitimate daughter of 'Gibbie wi' ye Gowden Garters' of Stobs. It is said that he 'hand-fasted' with her on condition that he pay a considerable dowrie if was unsatisfied with her (which he was, since he married another woman). This led to him selling Binks to Gilbert Eliott (around 1601), although his son William bought it back. In 1603 he was 'Sym Ellot of Bankis' when there was a complaint that he and others had raided 'Sewingdene' in 1601, stealing livestock and goods and injuring several people; 'Cubbie's Archie, Sym's man' (probably Archibald, son of Cuthbert Armstrong from Bankhouse) was also listed, as well as Armstrongs and others. He was forced to admit that his servant was responsible and was denounced as a rebel. He was on the inquest at the Judiciary Court of 1622 and 1623, when listed as 'Sime Ellott, Benkis in Thorlieshoip' and 'callit of Benkis'. He is also referred to as 'Syme Elliot of Binkis in Thorlieshope'. He was tenant at Thorlieshope (from at least 1622), Larriston (around 1627) and Huddishouse (around 1637). He is referred to as 'Symione Ellot called of the Benckis in Huddishous in Liddersdaill' in 1637 when his son William purchased Harwood; William may have 'wadset' the lands to him and hence he himself was listed as owner in 1643, when 'Harrit' was valued at £433 6s 8d. As a result he is occasionally referred to as the 1st Elliot Laird of Harwood. He purchased Lodgegill in 1647 and Cooms in 1650, and together these made up Black Tarras. He is recorded in a contract of 1648 involving the vicarage teinds for Hobkirk Parish, and in a discharge for the teinds in 1649. His sons were: William, more usually called 1st Laird of Harwood; and Robert of Black Tarras, who married Margaret Riddell from Bewlie. His brother Robert is noted in the Register of the Privy Seal as a thief. He also had a daughter who married a Scott, her sons John and William later witnessing a document relating to Harwood (and it is possible this was Rev. John of Hawick). His name is sometimes written 'Simeon' or 'Syme'. In 1656 his charters of Lodgegill and Cooms were confirmed by Cromwell, by which time he was deceased. Simon of Black Tarras (17th C.) probably eldest son of Robert of Black Tarras and Margaret Riddell. He inherited half of the lands of Lodgegill. He is mentioned in 1671 when he brought a case of assault and robbery of his lands of Tarras, Skelfhill and 'Longkeipsyde' against Henry in Harwood, Henry's brother James, John in Dinley, Robert of Pingleholes, William of Philhope, John of Brugh and others; this suggests some dispute with his neighbours. He was mentioned in Walter Scott of Satchel's 'Post'ral' in 1688. He was declared bankrupt in 1690 and the lands of Lodgegill were adjudged to William of Thorlieshope, who settled them on his brother Henry. Simon of Dinlabyre (17th C.) recorded in a letter of 1692 to the Earl of Tarras. He must have been related to William of Dinlabyre, who died around 1693. He may have been the last Elliot Laird of Dinlabyre, who sold the estate to John Oliver in about 1700. Simon of Swinside and the Binks (17th/18th C.) eldest son of William of the

Binks and Harwood. In 1670, along with William of Unthank and his son Adam, he purchased Lymiecleuch (including Corriesike, Langbyre and Giddenscleuch) from William Eliott, younger of Stobs. However, he sold his share to William Eliott of Stobs 3 years later. In 1672 he bought Middleknows in Oxnam Parish and in 1674 he obtained a Crown Charter of the Barony of Swinside, designating his eldest son as heir, but retaining liferent for himself. In 1678 he is recorded as owner of the lands of Swinside and Middleknowes in Oxnam Parish, valued at more than £2000. He is 'Symeon Elliott of Swinsyde' when he signed the 1678 marriage contract between the Elliots of Midlem Mill and Harwood. He is recorded as 'Simeon of Swinesyde' in a bond of 1683. In 1690 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. He was cautioner for a bond between Henry Elliot of Harwood and William Elliot of Bewlie in 1692, witness to a bond for Henry Elliot of Harwood in 1696 and cautioner for another in 1696. He registered his arms as Baron of Swinside in 1697. In 1699 he witnessed a disposition for Elliot of Harwood. In 1714 he settled various of his lands on his sons and he sold the lands of Binks to John of Thorlieshope, sometime before 1718; however, it has also been suggested that he sold them to Christopher Irving some time before this. He is probably the 'Simeon Eliott of harwood' who witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Walter Turnbull, cottar in Harwood, in 1720. He married Jean Elliot (from an unknown branch of the family) before 1672. They had 7 children: William, Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire, who succeeded to Swinside; Adam of Beirhope; Gideon of Harwood on Teviot; Simon, mentioned in 1688 (d.bef. 1714); James, also mentioned in 1688 (d.bef. 1714); Robert of 'Tyneside'; and Christian, who married Dr. John Haliburton from Jedburgh and whose son Simon Haliburton married Elizabeth Elliot of Midlem Mill. Simon John of Brugh (1940–) only son of Sir William (Air Chief Marshal). He was educated at Eton and McGill University. He is the present head of the Elliots of Brugh. He married Sonia Annabel Shand in 1972 and their children are Alice Rosalind, Benjamin William and Catherine Camilla. The family live in Dorset. Stephen (13th C.) owner of lands in Swinton, listed in an inventory of Coldingham Priory in about 1298. His name is recorded as 'Stephanus Elwald'. Stephen (19th C.) resident of Parkhill, County Halton, Canada. In 1862 he donated to the Hawick Museum a set of tone and pottery archæological artefacts. He must have some local connection. Stuart Douglas (1856–c.1930) born in Cavers Lodge, he was 2nd son and 4th child of Cavers gamekeeper Robert and Isabella. He grew up in Cavers and attended school in Cavers, Kirkton and briefly St. Mary's in Hawick. He started his legal training with Wilson & Anderson in Hawick in 1872 and moved to Edinburgh in 1876. His firm of Kirk Mackie & Elliot was located on George Street and later on Princes Street. He worked in Edinburgh as a Supreme Court Solicitor, and was also a City Councillor there. He was President of the Edinburgh Borderers' Union for 23 years and Secretary of the Edinburgh Border Counties Association for 25 years. He was heavily involved with the volunteer movement, which he joined in 1876; he was an officer of the 4th Battalion of the Royal Scots (Lothian Regiment), rising through the rank to become Lieutenant-Colonel. He wrote frequently to newspapers on vrious topics that interested him. In 1882 in Hawick he married Agnes, daughter of William Laidlaw, farmer at Bonchester and Fodderlee. Their children were Agnes Laidlaw Douglas, Isabella, Edith, Constance R., Floreance W., Robert A.D. and William Gilbert. Note that his name is also sometimes written 'Stewart'. Thomas (13th/14th C.) recorded in an English document of 1310. He was 'Ellot of Repewyk' near Hexham and was hanged for felony, but resuscitated and pardoned. It was also stated that his name was on the roll of the Brethren of St. John of Jerusalem in England. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1528 and 1534 as owner of a tenement in Selkirk. He also witnessed another document in Selkirk in 1528, along with William. Probably the same Thomas was recorded in 1534 as procurator to Gavin in a legal agreement carried out in Hassendean Kirk; Gavin (who may have been related) made a letter of reversion to William Scott for the 40-shilling lands of 'Neder Gallelaw'. He is probably the Thomas, Burgess of Selkirk, who in 1535 witnessed a document, in which Walter Scott of Roberton begged for clemency from Robert Hunter, for his part in the killing of Robert's brother John Hunter; chaplain Matthew was also listed, and perhaps a relative. He may be the Thomas who is recorded in 1535/6 jointly owning 2 rigs of land with his wife Helen Rutherford. He also witnessed another document in Selkirk in 1536. He is probably the Thomas who was listed among the friends who would vouch for Alan Mithag in 1539/40 and who witnessed another transaction in 1540/1. He is probably the Thomas who was deceased in 1541/2 when his son and heir Robert inherited his tenement and 2 rigs; Robert resigned a house to his mother Helen Rutherford, in liferent and in 1561/2 she sold her tenement and rigs to Robert, son of Gavin of Horsleyhill. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as a tenant of the lands of 'Lyndene' in the Barony of Bowden, along with other 'Elwalds'. Thomas 'Law's Tom' (16th C.) tenant in Priesthaugh. He was recorded in 1574 as 'Thome Ellott callit Lawis Thome' among men who had been ordered to be removed from the lands of Robert of Redheugh. 'Lawis Jok' also in Priesthaugh and 'Lawis Richie' in Swinstead were also named and presumably his brothers. Their father may have been Lawrence, or perhaps they came from Laws in Liddesdale. Thomas (16th C.) recorded in Yair in 1579 when he witnessed a transaction done in Selkirk. This involved James in Yair, who was probably related. In 1581 he was still in Yair when there was a promise to pay him and James Ker in Yair for the tacks on 'Brigheucht' and Lindean Mill by Thomas Ker in Sunderlandhall. Thomas (16th C.) brother of Jock of Copshaw. In 1580 he was among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh. He is recorded as 'Thom Ellot of Copshawe' when accused along with William of Gorrenberry, the Armstrongs of Whithaugh, and others of attacking the farms of the Laird of Bellister in England in 1587. He is probably the 'Thom of Copschaw' whose son Francis was listed among men who failed to appear at court in Jedburgh in 1611. Thomas of Bonjedward (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1623 when is son Will was found guilty of stealing a horse from Walter Scott of Burnfoot-on-Ale. Thomas (17th C.) servant of Gilbert of Craigend who witnessed a sasine for Appotside in 1632. Thomas (d.c.1682) tenant in 'Leidgegill', i.e. Lodgegill. His will is recorded in the Commissariot of Dumfries in 1682. Thomas of Bewlie (d.1686) tenant farmer at Borthwickshiels, son of Robert in Borthwickshiels and descended from the Elliots of Horsleyhill. He is recorded along with his parents in a list of communicants in the Borthwick valley in 1650. His only known sibling was William, minister at Yarrow, for whom he became executor (for his debts!) after his death. In 1672 he purchased Bewlie from Walter Turnbull of Bewlie and settled these lands on his eldest son William in 1675. In 1676 he was involved in the redemption of annual rent with Isobel Riddell, wife of David Elliot, Burgess of Selkirk (and widow of George Dunn). He may be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism in 1682 in Roberton for Patrick Riddell of Muselee and Marie Elliot (his daughter). He is probably the Thomas who (along with William) witnessed a baptism for James Murray, herd at Borthwickshiels in 1683. He is recorded as Thomas 'in Borthwicksheilds' in an undertaking of 1685 with Henry Elliot of Harwood. He married Margaret, daughter of William Scott of Chamberlain Newton (and she died in 1672). They had 5 children: William, 1st Laird of Borthwickbrae (b.1658); Thomas (c.1660–1723), progenitor of the Oakwood Mill Elliots; Dr. Gideon (d.bef. 1723), of North Sinton; Mary (or 'Marie'), who married Patrick Riddell (incorrectly recorded sometimes as Nichol) of Muselee; and Susanna, who married William Scott of Stonedge (and whose daughter married William of Wolfelee). His will is recorded in 1686 – 'And Robert Elliot married a gentle Dame, Hately from the family of Mellarstain, Betwixt them two was procreat sure, Good Thomas Elliot in Borthwick-shiels, That much reliev'd the Poor, And Thomas Elliot married then, The daughter of the Laird of Chamberlain Newton' [CWS]. Thomas of Haydon Bridge (d.c.1688) 4th son of John of Brugh. He may also have been described as 'of Canonbie Mill'. He married a Robinson. Their children included: George, who was killed in battle; Walter, unmarried; Gilbert, killed at Dettingen; and William, born posthumously, who was a joiner at Haydon Bridge. Thomas (1659/60–1723) tenant of Oakwood Mill, 2nd son of Thomas and Margaret Scott of Chamberlain Newton, and brother of the 1st Laird of Borthwickbrae. In 1719, along with his son Andrew, he witnessed a sasine for Helen, 2nd daughter of James Elliot in Calrous. Also in 1719 he had a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk. He may additionally be the Thomas who in 1719 was charged with taking divots off Selkirk Common. He served as Treasurer of Selkirk, as attested in 1734 when his widow had a discharge with the Burgh. He married Jean (c.1660–1743), daughter of Cornelius Inglis of Newton (possibly from the same family who once owned Branxholme); she died in Selkirk in 1743, aged 83 (although she is still recorded in a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1745). His children were: Thomas in Oakwood Mill, Bailie of Selkirk, who married Bessie Tudhope; William (b.c.1688), 1st Elliot of Wolfelee; Andrew, who married Agnes Shortreed and Mary Simpson; Bessie (b.1697), who died young; Isobel (b.1702); another Bessie (or 'Elizabeth', b.1704), who married Robert Shortreed of Essenside in 1725; and
