Agnes (d.1801), who married John Sibbald from Whitelaw and Walter Cunningham from Hindhope, and had 20 children in total, with Col. Sibbald of Pinnacle being a grandson of hers. He may also have had a daughter Elizabeth who was the 2nd wife of William of Whithaugh. He is buried in Lindean churchyard, this location suggesting a connection with the family of 'James Elliott of Bridgheugh' mentioned by Scott of Satchells. Thomas (17th/18th C.) recorded at Whitmuir Hall in 1709. In that year he purchased meal for the use of the Selkirk Town Herd. Thomas (b.c.1685) eldest son of Thomas in Oakwood Mill and related to the Elliots of Borthwickbrae. He was also tenant in Oakwood Mill, was described as a 'malster' (presumably a maker of malt) in Selkirk and was Bailie there from 1721, being mentioned in many records. For example, he was late Bailie when he had a discharge with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1727, the Bailie whose servant was involved with a debt case in 1737, the Bailie involved in a legal case in Selkirk in 1741 and the ex-Bailie asked about non-payment of annual rent on part of Selkirk Common in 1752. He may also be the Thomas recorded in receipts with Selkirk in 1743. In 1708 he married Bessie, eldest daughter of John Tudhope (also a Bailie in Selkirk). Their children were John, John (again), William, Agnes, Jean, Agnes (again), Andrew, Jen (again), Robert, Elizabeth, Elizabeth (again) and Margaret. He was 'bailie of Selkirke' in 1726 when his son Thomas became a saddler's apprentice in Edinburgh. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident at Falnash Mill. His wife was Helen and their son John was baptised in Hawick Parish (probably at Caerlenrig) in 1720. His wife was probably Helen Allan, and their other children included Jean (b.1717). Thomas (17th/18th C.) wright in Selkirk. He was recorded in 1727 for work done on the herd's house and dam there. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Redfordgreen. He married Margaret Legerwood in Selkirk in 1736 and their son William was baptised in Ashkirk Parish in 1738. His wife may have secondly married James Scott in Wilton. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Harwood on Teviot. In 1740 he was 'at Harwood' when he witnessed baptisms for William Nichol, shepherd at Teindside and for Robert Elliot, tenant at Slaidhills; his brother Francis was also witness in 1740. He was described as 'in Harwood' in 1744 when he leased Northhouse and Suddenrig from the Buccleuch Estates. He was recorded in the list of rental arrears for Northhouse in the period 1745–48. In 1745 he was 'in Harwood' when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Lawson (resident of Teindside). In 1746 he and Francis (also at Harwood) witnessed a baptism for Thomas Reid at Harwood (in Hawick Parish). He is probably the Thomas, tenant in Harwood, who was owed for cheese provided to the decease William Scott of Whitehaugh in 1750. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. Thomas (1723–51) eldest son of William the 1st Laird of Wolfelee. He was a physician. In 1751 he married Helen, daughter of Sir John Elphinstone and whose mother was a daughter of Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto. He died only about 6 weeks after the marriage. A story is told of his wife being accidentally shut in a secret lower vault of Megginch Castle after being instructed to locate some family valuables and papers there, and being rescued by her cousin through chance circumstances. He predeceased his father, his death coming after catching fever in attending to a sick family. In grief, his wife spent a year living in the dark, but survived her husband by almost 56 years. Thomas (18th C.) purchaser of the Langlands estate (later called Wilton Lodge) in July 1783. His lands were valued at £ 278 12s 8d in 1788 (with much of the former Langlands estate having been sold off to others, but still including Calaburn). He sold the estate again in about 1790 to Lord Napier. He was the probably an illegitimate son of Gilbert, a younger son of William, 2nd Laird of Borthwickbrae and Sarah Growesmith. There is a record of a boundary dispute between him and the Duke of Buccleuch over the Pipewellheugh and Gardener's Haugh. His father Gilbert is recorded at Langlands on the female servant tax roll for 1785 and 1786, and he himself in 1787 and 1788. He was also taxed for having a footman and 2 horses in 1787 and 1788. In the 1789–92 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick he was listed as 'late of Langlands'. Thomas (1730–1807) son of John of Whithaugh. He was tenant in Twislehope, along with his elder brother John. He was a subscriber to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' in 1784. In 1786 along with John (his brother), also in 'Tweeslihope', he subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author. He was listed at Twislehope on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797, and his wife was also taxed for 2 dogs. It is said that Sir Walter Scott visited him at Twislehope on his first trip through Liddesdale. His will is recorded in Peebles Commissary Court in 1809. Rev. Thomas (1731–1808) local minister, 6th son of Robert 'of Carlenrickrig' and Christian Elliot of Borthwickbrae. He may be the Thomas in Stobicote who witnessed a baptism in 1757 for William Grieve and Mary Elliot (probably his sister), with the other witness being Robert Elliot in Winningtonrig (his father). He was licensed by the Presbytery of Jedburgh in 1757, presented to Kirkton on the last day of that year and ordained in mid-1758. Then he was translated to Cavers in 1763. In 1775 he complained that the Parish had had to pay Wilton to borrow its communion silverware and so in 1776 he arranged for the purchase of 4 silver cups. He paid the Horse Tax in 1785–92. He was said to have gentle manners and great modesty, but also was talented as an astronomer and mathematician. The famous Dr. Thomas Chalmers had his first ministerial duty as his assistant 1799–1800. In 1794 his salary ws £83 6s 8d, together with 2½ chalders of grain, his manse and garden and 11 acres of glebe land. In 1760 he married Anne, daughter of William Elliot (2nd Laird) of Borthwickbrae (presumably his cousin). Although she died only a year later they did have a child, William (b.1761), who became an architect in Kelso (designer of the extension to the old Wilton Kirk), and probably the same William became a wright's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1775. He published a description of Cavers for Sinclair's Statistical Account and a paper on practical astronomy, 'New and improved Method of taking Observations at Sea' in the Transactions of the Philosophical Society of Edinburgh. A miniature portrait of him exists. A communion token dated 1761 (the second oldest in existence from the Parish) dates from his ministry. He died in Kelso. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included: Margaret (b.1769); James Thomas (b.1771); Thomas (b.1774); William (b.1777); and Isabel (b.1780). It is possible that he was the Thomas who married Ann Veitch in Southdean in 1762. Thomas (18th C.) mason at Newmill. He married Helen Douglas. Their children, born in Hawick Parish were: Betty (b.1771, with 'Margaret' crossed out); Margaret (b.1772); Walter (b.1772); and James (b.1774). Walter and James were probably the masons recorded at 'Brough Shankfoot' on the ballots for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799 and 1801; Robert, another mason living at the same place in 1801, may have been a younger son of his. The witnesses in 1771 were Thomas Laidlaw and William Riddell. He could be the Thomas who in 1800 witnessed a baptism for Thomas Glendinning, shepherd at Blackcleugh. Thomas (b.1741) from the Ewes valley, son of Robert and Janet Scott. He married Elizabeth (born in Bowden), daughter of Robert Carruthers and Isobel Balmer. Their children included: William (1770–1824), who married Jean Easton; Robert (1781–1858); Elizabeth ('Betty', 1782–1843), who married farmer James Scott; Mary (b.1786); and Thomas (b.1791), who married Isabella Aitchison and may have died in the U.S.A. Thomas (1744/5–1800) 3rd son of Robert of Redheugh. His brother John farmed at Redheugh, but he also lived there and farmed Foulshiels. He is the Thomas who was recorded on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as farmer at Redheugh. He was also taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. In 1786 he subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author. In 1793 his brother John of Redheugh disposed of the stock and household furniture from Redheugh to him 'in order that he may be enabled with more ease and convenience to live upon the lands of Redheugh'. He married Mary Thomson. Their children included: Jean (1794–1867), who married Thomas Jardine; Robert (b.1794), who married Jessie Elliot and inherited Redheugh from his uncle; and Margaret (1797–1823), who married William Nichol. He and his wife are buried in Castleton cemetery. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Wester Parkhill in 1781 and Parkhill in 1784. He married Margaret Elliot in Roberton in 1775 and their children included Margaret (b.1778), William (b.1779), Agnes (b.1781), Janet (b.1783) and Christian (b.1784). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick. He is said to have married Margaret, daughter of William Elliot, cooper in Castleton and farmer at Dinlabyre. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Thomases. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded at Binks in 1783. His children included: Isabel (b.1783); Archibald (b.1788); and Thomas (b.1791). It is possible he was connected to the Thomas of Colterscleuch who lived at roughly the same time. He could be the Thomas, recorded in the Cavers Parish records being rebuked in 1784 for eloping with his pregnant friend the previous year, with their daughter being baptised in Glasgow; his wife was Isabel Dalgleish and their daughter was Elizabeth (b.1783), with Thomas (b.1791), baptised in Roberton, being another child. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Appletrehall according to the 1797 Horse Tax register, when he owned 2 work horses. He could be the smuggler referred to in a song of the early 19th century – 'There's yin Tam Elliot of Appletreehall, O' smuggling he's aye alike keen; But he lost five ankers, I've heard them say, When comin' frae Boomer wi' gin . . . ' [T]. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at 'Fenzlehope' in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Borthwick Mains, recorded on the 1794–97 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1797 he was owner of 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax at Borthwick Mains in 1797. Thomas (1771–1850) son of 'Captain' Robert and brother of Capt. William of Harwood. He lived at Kirndean in Liddesdale. He was a Corporal in the Roxburghshire Yeomanry (Volunteers), directing some of the Liddesdale part of the troop, along with his brother Mark. Together with Robert Kerr Elliot (his nephew) he is recorded loaning money in 1805, which was repaid by James Scott in 1845. He is probably the Elliot from Kirndean who was on the Committee of the Proprietors of Castleton Library. He was farmer at Kinrdean listed among heads of households in 1835–41. He is still recorded at Kinrdean in Slater's 1852 directory (even although he was deceased). In 1802 in Southdean Parish he married Helen (1776/7–1849), elder daughter of Thomas Scott of Peel. They had 5 sons and 6 daughters: Esther (c.1803–27); Robert (1805–24), Ensign in the 16th Madras Native Infantry, who died at Wallajabad in India; Thomas Scott (1806–32), who died at Lanton; Elizabeth Pringle (1808–18); Margaret (b.1809), who died in infancy; Margaret (again, 1810–39), who married William Boog of Sweethope; William (1811–71), the eldest surviving son, who inherited the lands of Peel from his uncle Thomas Scott (and the lands later descended to John, farmer at the Flatt in Liddesdale), taking the additional surname Scott; Helen (1813–82), who married John Elliot, tenant in Flatt; Ann Jane (1815–92), who died at Friars Mount, Jedburgh; Christian (1817–86); John (b.1819), 2nd surviving son, who inherited Riccalton from his uncle John Scott, and also took the additional surname of Scott; and Henry (b.1821–63), who farmed at Kirndean for a while. Thomas (b.1766) younger son of William of Whithaugh. He was a doctor in Carlisle. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821 and to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He married Eliza, daughter of Robert Batey of Hightown near Haltwhistle and their children were William (doctor in Carlisle), Robert (b.1811), Elizabeth (b.1813), Margaret (b.1814), Sophia (b.1816), Thomas (b.1817, surgeon in Carlisle) and Jane Isabella (b.1819). Thomas (b.1771) son of William in Hillhouse and Mary Haliburton. He may have been tenant in Hillhouse for a while, like his father. He died unmarried. Thomas (1776–1838) son of Walter, from the Henderson's Knowe branch. He had brothers William, John and Archibald. He was recorded as a servant at Colterscleuch on the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. He may be the Thomas who was a servant at 'Rige' (i.e. Caerlenrig) on the 1801 Militia ballot. He lived at Colterscheuch (where he is recorded in 1800) and Bowanhill. He married Magdalene (or 'Maddie') Thomson (1776–1861). The family emigrated to the 'Scotch Settlement' in St. Lawrence County, New York in about 1815 and eventually settled in Andes, New York, where he died. His children were: Mary, who married ploughman Walter Scott in 1822 and then emigrated to America; Walter (1798–1858), who lived at Niagara, Ontario; Elizabeth ('Betty', b.1800), who married Jimmie Hastings of Bovina; James (1802–28); William (1809–88), who settled in Bovina; Robert (1812–18), who died at sea; and Isabell (b.1815), who married John Rae in Scotland and emigrated to New York state. Several letters have survived to him from relatives in Scotland, covering the period 1818–34, which were transcribed by descendants in 2002. Thomas (18th/19th C.) married in Hobkirk in 1809, although his wife's name is not recorded. Thomas (b.c.1780s) shepherd at Harden, according to the 1812 ballot for the Militia in Roberton Parish. He may have been related to Robert, who was tenant farmer at Harden at the same time. Thomas (b.1791/2) born in Castleton Parish, he lived in Roberton Parish. He was a labourer living at Howcleuch in 1841. He was Land Steward at Borthwick Mains in 1851 and 1861, and still recorded there in 1868. It is possible he is the Thomas who was a labourer at Eilrig on the 1812 Militia ballot in Roberton Parish. He may have been related to Thomas who was at Borthwick Mains a few decades earlier. He married Mary Grieve and their children included: James (b.c.1815); Thomas (b.1818); Esther (b.1819); John (b.1821); Helen (b.c.1825); and William (b.c.1833). Thomas (b.c.1800) agricultural labourer in Castleton Parish. He may be the Thomas, son of John and Janet Little born in 1799. In 1835 he was at Myredykes and in 1837–41 was listed as shepherd there. He married Anne Pott (b.c.1811) and their children included John (b.1829), Betty (b.1832) and Janet (b.1840). Thomas (19th C.) owner of property on Slitrig Crescent, marked in Wood's 1824 map at around No. 10. It is unclear who he was, since he is not listed in Pigot's 1825/6 directory or the 1841 census. He could be the Thomas from Hawick who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. Thomas (1804/5–bef. 1861) originally from Ireland, he was a hosiery worker in Hawick. In 1841 he was on the High Street in Mather's Close. In 1851 he was at Lynnwood Cottages. However, in 1860 he moved to Bonchester, where he was postmaster and letter carrier for the Rule valley. He was first to introduce a spring cart to the district and would carry passengers to and from Hawick. However, the venture was not a great success and he gave up, eventually moving elsewhere. In 1824 he married Margaret Hume, from Cavers Parish. Their children included: James (b.1825), who was a merchant at the Sandbed; Elizabeth (b.1827); Mary (b.1829); Peter (b.1831); Robert (b.1834); Rev. William Hume (1837–1927), minister at Ramsbottom; John Little (1839–60); Thomas (b.1842); Michael (b.1844); George Lewis (b.1846); Michael (again, b.1849); and Betsy (1852–57). Thomas (1807–91) son of William and Jean Easton, he was farmer at Mangerton. He was recorded as shepherd at Mangerton among heads of households in 1835–41; his brother Robert was also listed as a shepherd. In 1841 he was listed as a labourer at Mangerton. In 1851 he was farming 115 acres there, and employed 5 labourers. In 1852 he was listed as miller at Mangerton Mill and was listed at Mangerton in a directory of 1868. In 1838 he married Janet (1815–47), daughter of joiner John Douglas. Their children included: William (1839–1923), who died at Gattonside; Elizabeth Beattie (1841–1911); Jean Easton (1842–1910), also died at Gattonside; Helen Douglas (1844–1917), also died at Gattonside; Janet Anne (1846–97); and John (1847–1904), who worked for a bank in London and married Margaret Eliza Middleton. Thomas (1811/2–76) grocer in Newcastleton, probably son of joiner Andrew. In 1851 and 1861 he was at about 14 South Hermitage Street. In 1841 he married Hannah Storey, who died in 1882, aged 61. Their children included: Mary (b.1843); Andrew (1845–1930), who married Margaret Glendinning; Betty (b.1847); Margaret (b.1850); Thomasina (b.1853); Arkle; Helen; Hannah Janet (b.1862), who died in infancy; and John James (1865/6–1944), who died in Longtown. The family are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Thomas (1815/6–87) son of John, who farmed at Highfield, Crinkledyke and Deadwater, and grandson of Robert in Hermitage. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1852. In 1861 he was at Under Hindhope in Oxnam Parish. He succeeded his brother John as farmer at Nether Hindhope in Oxnam Parish. He married Elizabeth Turnbull from Redmoss. Their children included: John (1859–1918) in Hyndhope; Thomas of Attonburn, who married Jane Robson from Bellingham; James; Mary; Margaret, who married Dr. J.P. Elliot from Bellingham; Robert Turnbull of Chatto; Jean (d.1913); Elizabeth (d.1870); Susan, married A.O. Rutherford; William Scott (1876–1912); Walter of Toft (b.1878); Arthur of Hindhope (1880–1968); and George of Alnam Moor and Brockdam (1883–1933). Dr. Thomas (1817–59) son of a doctor who came from Whitehaugh in Liddesdale. He was probably born in Carlisle. He studied in Edinburgh and Paris and then took up a surgeon's practice in Carlisle, in partnership with his brother William. He became known as a pioneering ophthalmologist, who had an early understanding of how to cure strabismus (squinting). He was on the Carlisle committee for the proposed railway between Hawick and Carlisle. He died of typhus at the age of 42 and has a plaque to his memory in Carlisle Cathedral. Thomas (19th C.) wright recorded in Newcastleton in Slater's 1852 directory. It is possible he is also the Thomas listed as grocer in the same directory. Thomas (1821–69) elder son of Robert of Redheugh and Jessie Elliot. He was born in Castleton and inherited Redheugh jointly with his brother John. In 1851 (while living at Redheugh with his father) he was already listed as farmer of 90 arable plus 1200 moorland acres, and employer of 4 labourers. He was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale in the 1850s. He was a Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire. He married Elizabeth Kyle and their children included: Robert, who inherited Redheugh and married Effie McGregor Corbett; and Anna Mary, who sold Redheugh in 1918. He died at Knockton, just a few days after his father. He is buried in Castleton cemetery along with his wife. Arthur (1864/5–93), who died in India and is marked on the same gravestone, was probably another son. Thomas (1825–64) younger son of Robert and Janet Black. He was a grocer in Hawick. In Slater's 1852 directory he was listed on the Fore Row as a grocer and spirit dealer, and in 1851 he was also listed as a blacksmith. In 1847 he married Helen Welsh and their children included: Helen Broad (b.1848); Robert (b.1850); Janet Blake (b.1853); and an unnamed child (b.1855). He was buried in the Wellogate (although the inscription is illegible). Thomas (c.1827–89) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Elizabeth Armstrong (c.1819–1919), who died at Glendivan. Their children included Mary (b.1851) and probably Maggie (1866–86). He died in Langholm. Thomas Robert Barnewall 8th Laird of Harwood (1871–1924), only child of Robert Henry of Clifton Park. He succeeded his father to Clifton Park and his uncle William (7th Laird) in Harwood. He was also referred to as 'of Clifton'. He sold Harwood to William Elliot of Muir Glen in 1924. He married 3 times: firstly in 1892 to Rose, 3rd daughter and co-heir of Col. John Joicey of Newton Hall, Northumberland, and she died in 1912; secondly in 1915 Dagmar, daughter of C.E. Ahlbom of Landekrona, Sweden, and she died in 1937; and lastly in 1942 to Mrs. Helen Campbell. He had 7 children: Robert Barnewall of Clifton Park, who lived in Carmarthenshire; Liet.-Comdr. James Kerr; Thomas William Henry; Rose Adelaide Maud; Frances Eva; Lieut. Charles Edward of the K.O.S.B.; and Diana Catherine. Thomas (b.1832/3) son of Thomas and Margaret Hume. In 1861 he was living at 7 Sandbed with his brother James, who was a grocer. He was then a draper's assistant. In 1877 he was still living on the Sandbed when he donated to the Museum a 'Chinese letter'. Walter (13th/14th C.) recorded in the Ragman Rolls as William 'Alight' or 'd'Alyth' (in Perthshire) when he swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. It seems likely that he was a direct ancestor of the Elliots of Roxburghshire He was imprisoned at Tonbridge Castle and his younger brother Thomas was taken to Kenilworth Castle. The family lands at that time were 'Alyth' or 'Eliot' in Perthshire, although they were probably given Redheugh and associated lands in Liddesdale by Robert the Bruce in the early 1300s. He further paid homage to Edward in 1304. In 1306 he is listed among the adherents of Bruce who forfeited lands, and it was probably in the few years following that he was granted Redheugh. There are no recorded links between him and the later Roberts of Redheugh; however, it may be that his descendants were called Robert in honour of his patron. His son Thomas is recorded as a witness to a Perthshire charter in 1304. Walter (15th/16th C.) recorded in a list of owners of crofts and rigs in Selkirk in about 1529. His name appears as 'Watte Elwand' and he owned a rig at 'quhitreig'. Walter (16th C.) recorded in 1563/4 when his wife Christine Roberton was involved with a transaction for lands in Bowden. Walter (17th C.) Factor and Chamberlain to Robert, Earl of Roxburghe. In 1637 and 1638 he was involved with discharges with the Treasurer of Selkirk. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Margaret Wilson and their children included Elizabeth (b.1635); Janet (b.1644); Janet (again, b.1646); John (b.1648); James (b.1651); and Marion (b.1655). Walter of Arkleton (1634–1702) second son of Adam Elliot of Meikledale, his mother being a daughter of Glendinning of that Ilk. In 1669 he bought back the lands of Arkleton (from Francis Scott), which had previously belonged to the Elliots; he was described as 'indweller in Arkleton', showing that he already lived there. In 1671 he paid tax on £700 of land for Arkleton. He probably had the old tower rebuilt as a farmhouse, which contains a stone bearing the date 1676 and initials 'W.E.' and 'K.F' (for him and his wife). He is probably the 'Walter Elliot of Erkleton, he is a man of Note; So is Muckildean his Brother, he's son to Janet Scot' mentioned in Scott of Satchells 'postral'. Scott of Satchelss also says that 'he was called nothing but Shepherd fourty year, And yet he is the just and very man, Whose Goodsir and Grandsir was Lairds of Ercketoun'. He registered arms in 1676 and in 1694 documented how the estate was to be inherited after his death (excluding his eldest 2 sons). He contributed £100 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. In 1698 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1670 he married Katherine, daughter of Arthur Foster of Stanegarthside; her will is recorded in the Commissariot of Dumfries in 1684. Their children were: Adam of 'Tyneside', who married Ann Drury; Arthur of Harwood, who married Anne Disney; William of Arkleton (d.1721), who married Anne Ainslie of Jedburgh; Nichol in Unthank, who married Jane Lithgow; James, who married Miss Chambers; Walter, who died unmarried; Henry, Robert and Gilbert, who all died young; Jeanette, who married Gideon Scott (later of Falnash), brother of Walter of Harwood; Helen, who married Andrew Murray of Tundergarth by contract of 1679; and Mary, who married Robert Graham of Slipperfield. He is buried in Ewes churchyard, along with his wife and several children. His will is recorded in the Commissariot of Dumfries in 1717. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Helen Grieve and their children included: William (b.1671); Margaret (b.1673); and Adam (b.1675). Walter (17th/18th C.) 4th son of William of Unthank. He was described being 'of Carotrig', which was Carewoodrig. He died unmarried. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was at Commonbrae in 1704 when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott in Blackcleugh and in 1708 when he witnessed a baptism for Thomas Telfer, workman in Blackcleuch. Walter (17th/18th C.) miller of Hawick Mill. He was recorded as an elder of Hawick Parish in 1711. He was 'tacksman of ye mill' in 1709 when he witnessed a baptism for undermiller Walter Riddell (along with the other undermiller, James Paterson). He was also 'tacksman if ye milne of Hawick' in 1711 and 1714 when he witnessed baptisms for Archibald Aitkin, undermiller in Hawick (with Walter Riddell as the other undermiller). He was called 'tacksman of ye milne and customer of Hawick' in 1712 when he asked the Session to find him and his family specific seats in the Church 'seeing he was burdensome to others'. It thus appears that he was tenant at Hawick Mill and also a weaver of some sort. Robert, who was 'Tacksman of the Mill and Lands of Hawick' around 1720 was probably his son. Walter of Ormiston (17th/18th C.) son of Henry of Harwood. He witnessed his brother's marriage in 1700 and a bond by his brother in 1703. The connection with Ormiston is confusing, since it was probably his son Walter who acquired Ormiston from the Gledstains of Cocklaw. He is said to have married the 1st daughter of Andrew Kerr of Lindean (whose first name is not recorded); however, this may be confusion with later family connections with Currer descendants of Kerr of Lindean and Whitmuir. They are said to have had 4 sons, all of whom died without a male successor. However, it seems likely that he was succeeded by another Walter, who was one of the founders of carpet-making in Hawick. Walter (17th/18th C.) Bailie-Depute of the Regality of Hawick. He is often referred to in Parish records as simply 'Bailie', but held the office of the representative of the Baron, rather than Magistrate of the Town. He is recorded as 'Bailie, substitute of Gideon Scott of Falnash' in 1700/1 when he presided over a criminal court in Hawick, banishing an offender (who had been in irons for 10 days) from the town. He was 'bailie of the regaility of Hawick' in 1703 when he witnessed a baptism for miller Robert Deans. He is recorded as 'bailie' when he witnessed a baptism for Bailie Robert Ruecastle in 1705, for wright John Pringle, for miller Walter Riddell (along with miller James Paterson) and for wright John Dalgleish (along with Gideon Scott of Falnash) in 1707, for glover John Scott and for shoemaker John Scott in 1708 and for weaver Alexander Hislop in 1710. In 1709 he was 'bailie deput of the regalitie' when he witnessed a baptism for Schoolmaster John Purdom and also 'bailiff' when he witnessed baptisms for wigmaker John Scott, for Henry Orrock and for tailor John Scott. He was also 'Bailie' when he witnessed baptisms in 1709 for Bailie Robert Ruecastle and for John Scott 'Whitegate', in 1711 for Walter Stoddart (herd in Harwood), in 1712 for John Wilson in Branxholme Town, in 1713 for his namesake the merchant Walter Elliot and in 1714 for candlemaker John Scott, for Bailie George Martin, for John Aitkin in Allanhaugh, for cooper John Turnbull and for Andrew Waugh. He was 'bailie of ye Regalitie' in 1713 when he witnessed a baptism for carrier David Minto. He witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert in 1717. He is described as 'bailie-deput of the regality of Hawick' in 1718, when he witnessed a baptism for merchant William Dickson and also when his servant John Turnbull was rebuked by the Hawick Parish Session. By 1721 he was 'late Baillie Depute of the Regalitie' (probably meaning he had given up the office, rather than being deceased) when he was recorded having provided 'as much oak as was ane axtree to the great church bell in the year 1718' (i.e. the axle for the bell). He may be the same as one of the other Walters. He married Marie Lindsay, and their son Francis was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1701; he was there described as 'bailie', with the witnesses being Francis Elliot 'in Hawick' and James Ogilvie. He may also be the merchant in Hawick whose son Gideon was baptised in 1700, with witnesses Gideon Scott of Falnash (after whom the child may have been named) and Bailie Walter Graham. Walter (d.1741) son of Henry of Peel. He was a naval surgeon on H.M.S. Wager, which shipwrecked off Patagonia. This event became infamous because of what followed, with the survivors marooned on an island in the southern winter. There was a mutiny and the crew split into groups. Walter was among officers who were set adrift before regrouping with some of the men and trying to row up the coast of Chile. After suffering several mishaps and enduring horrendous weather Walter became ill and was ashore with 4 officers when the 6 other men rowed off in the boat, never to be seen again. He died of starvation, while the others traded their last possession, a musket, and were taken in a canoe and were imprisoned by the Spanish, eventually to return to Britain. John Byron (later Vice-Admiral and grandfather of the poet Lord Byron) wrote

'he died the death many others had done before him, being quite starved. We scraped a hole for him in the sand and buried him in the best manner we could'. Walter (17th/18th C.) farmer in Brugh. He was 3rd son of William in Whitehaugh and Braidlie (who repurchased Redheugh) and descended from the Elliots of Falnash. It is unclear whether he farmed at Brugh or if the appelation was just to distinguish him from other Walters. The name of his wife is not recorded. He had 7 children (the order of births being unknown): John, farmer at Adderstoneshiel, who married Helen Moffat from Garvald; Robert (b.c.1700), who married Elizabeth Scott from Doorpool, and whose children lived in Hawick; Adam in Hartside, who married Mary Pott; George, who lived in Cuba; Helen, who in 1727 in Hawick Parish married James Gray, tenant in Whitlaw; William (b.1710) who was a cooper and married Hannah Scott; and Gilbert (b.1725) who was tenant in Blackburnfoot and married Betty Forbes. William was baptised in Kirkton Parish and Gilbert in Cavers. Walter (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He married Bessie Scott in 1712. Their children included: Janet (b.1713); Archibald (b.1715); John (b.1717); Margaret (b.1719); Jean (b.1724); Marie (b.1726); Bessie (b.1728); and Agnes (b.1730). The witnesses in 1713 were Bailie Walter Elliot (who was therefore clearly a different man, but perhaps related to him) and Francis Elliot, in 1717 were candlemaker John Scott and glover John Scott (one of whom may have been related to his wife), and in 1728 were Bailie (probably Robert) Ruecastle and Francis Ruecastle. Walter (1702–bef. 21) only son of Adam of Teindside and grandson of Walter of Arkleton. He was baptised in Hawick Parish. He died before marrying and was succeeded by his sister Katherine. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Broadlee in 1726 when his son James was baptised. There are several other children baptised in the parish who could be his. Walter of Ormiston (d.1777) probably son of Walter, he was one of the founders of carpet manufacturing in Hawick. He (or perhaps his father) obtained Ormiston after 1734, when the last of the Gledstains of Cocklaw died, and he proceeded to build a mansion house there in 1747. Before that he was tenant in Bellendean and Braidhaugh. He was in Bellendean in 1736 and 1741 when two of his children was baptised in Roberton Parish. He is probably the Walter, tenant in Bellendean, who was recorded as brother of Isobel, when she married Walter Turnbull of Firth in 1738. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. In 1766 he wrote to the Duke of Buccleuch, in response to a suggestion that a woollen factory be developed on one of the Duke's estates, proposing that Hawick would be the perfect place. He formed a partnership with others in 1769 (perhaps earlier), constituting the main Hawick carpet factory. He was one of the Commissioners appointed in the court case regarding the division of Hawick Common in 1767. In 1735 in Roberton he married Margaret (b.1716), daughter of George Currer of Hartwoodburn. Their children (mostly baptised in Roberton) included: James (1736–1782), who inherited Clerklands; Andrew (b.1739); Simon (b.1741); Walter (1744–80), who died at Bellendean; and Helen (b.1747), who married Thomas Currer (perhaps a cousin), Bailie of Selkirk. The first 3 children were baptised at Bellendean and the last 2 at Braidhaugh (in Cavers Parish). The death of his daughter Janet is recorded in Hawick in 1804. He secondly married Isobel or 'Tibbie', (probably youngest, b.1708) daughter of William Elliot of Borthwickbrae, and she died in 1797 (being referred to as 'Mrs. Elliot of Ormiston or Isobel Elliot of Borthbrae'. 'Mrs Elliot of Ormston in Hawick', who paid the female servant tax in 1789 and 1791, was probably his wife. Walter (18th C.) married Isobel Hogg in 1750, both being from Wilton Parish. Walter (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Southdeanrig in 1757. His children included John (b.1757). He was probably related to William, who was at Southdeanrig at about the same time. Walter (b.1731) son of William from Roberton and Bessie Scott from Wilton. He was a resident of Wilton Parish. His children were born at Alton, 'Moortown' (probably Moorfarm or Muirfield) and Wester Groundistone. In 1758 he married Helen (or Elinor or Nelly) Robertson (or perhaps Robison) in Ashkirk Parish. Their children include: Elizabeth (b.1759); Elspeth (b.1761); Janet (b.1765); Violet (b.1773); Nelly (b.1776) and Mary (b.1779). John (b.1771), baptised in Roberton, son to Walter in Mabonlaw, may also have been his child. He may also be father of William (b.1767), also baptised in Roberton, son of Walter at Whithope. Walter (bef. 1818) farmer at Henderson's Knowe, near Teviothead, where he is recorded in 1778. The identification of his parents is unknown, but he was probably related to the earlier Archibald and the contemporary John, farmers at Bowanhill; it is possible he was son of Archibald and brother of

John. He had a sister Isobel, who died in about 1819. He married Isabel Grieve; it is unclear who her parents were, but she was surely related to other Grieves who were in the Teviothead area at the same time, and she had sisters Nelly (who married Archibald Scott) and Euphan (who may have lived in Galashiels). Their children included: Thomas (1776–1838), farmer at Colterscleuch and Bowenhill, who later emigrated to New York state; Christian ('Kitty', b.1778), who moved to work at Philhope in 1818, married a shepherd, probably Gavin Cranston, and was living at Harwoodsikefoot in 1823; William (b.1780), miller, emigrated to Bathurst, Canada; Margaret (1783–1826), died from complications of childbirth; John (b.1788), who also emigrated to Bathurst, Canada; and Archibald (b.1791), who remained in Scotland. He was dead before 1818 when his wife wrote to their son Thomas using her maiden name 'Isabel Grieve'; she visited their children in Canada in 1824 and may have died in New York state. Walter (18th/19th C.) cooper at Dinlabyre. He is probably the farmer at Dinlabyre, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John is recorded separately as farmer there (and with more horses), and so presumably a near relative. He married Isabel Douglas and their children included: Christian (b.1777); Adam (b.1779); John (b.1781); Adam (b.1790); and probably Catherine, Margaret, Henry, Elizabeth and Walter. He may be the son of Adam in Hartside born in 1762 (but that would make him too young to have married by 1777). Walter (1753/4–97) younger son of Robert in Hermitage and brother of John. He was probably tenant at Hermitage and also at Millburnholm. He was at Millburnholm in 1786 when he subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author. He is probably the Walter listed as a farmer at Hermitage on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls; he owned 2 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He married Helen Crozier (c.1767–1851) from Brighouse. Their children were: Robert (1791–1858), who married Mary Murray from Whisgills and farmed at Hermitage; Jean (1792/3–1872), who married Henry Elliot from Colterscleuch; John (1795/6–1834) in Templehall; and Helen (b.1797/8), who married Walter Scott, from Newton near Hawick. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1783 he married Janet Blaikie, who was from Wilton Parish. Their son William was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1785. Walter (1762–1827) shoemaker of the Cross Wynd, son of Robert and Isobel Scott. He married Margaret (or 'Peggy') Oliver in Kirkton Parish in 1802. Their daughters were Margaret (b.1803) and Isobel (b.1805), of whom Adam Brown painted miniature portraits, as well as Janet (b.1807). He is listed in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. His wife Margaret carried on the business and is listed in the 1837 directory. Lt.-Col. Walter of Old Melrose (1766–1809) christened in Roberton, he was a younger son of John Elliot of Borthwickbrae. He became Lieutenant Colonel in the 22nd Regiment of Foot (the same rank reached by his elder brother William, who changed his surname to Lockhart). He was recorded among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788. In 1788 he was already listed as owner of Old Melrose. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and in 1819 (when already deceased). He was still listed in 1811 as owner of Old Melrose. He died unmarried. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. He married Jane Haig. Their children included: Christian (b.1793); Robert (b.1795); Mary (b.1797); Adam (b.1800); Margaret (b.1802); Walter (b.1804); William (b.1806); and Christian (again, b.1811). Some of these baptisms did not include the wife's name, but seem likely to be the same family. It is possible that Jean, born to Walter and Jean 'Harg' in Ashkirk Parish in 1789 was also their child. Walter (b.1772) son of Thomas and Helen Douglas. He was recorded as a mason at 'Brough Shankfoot' on the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. His brother James was also on the list. He was a mason at the same place in 1801, along with James and Robert (probably another brother). Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1818 he married Euphemia, daughter of James Laidlaw and Margaret Scott from Hobkirk Parish. They had 3 daughters and 1 son: Anne; James; Janet; and Margaret, who married James Kennedy and had 11 children. He was deceased by 1841, when his wife is listed as a seamstress at Mill Bank along with his daughter Janet. Walter (b.1787) probably son of James and Helen Elliot. In 1851 he was living at 'Dinleahaugh' (i.e. Dinleyhaughfoot). He married Janet Dinwoodie (b.1801), from Dumfriesshire. Their children (some of whom were born in Langholm Parish) included: Walter (b.1833); William (b.1835); James (b.1836); and John (b.1838). Walter (18th/19th C.) toll-keeper in Newcastleton listed among heads of households in 1835. He may be the same as the shepherd at Castleton Townfoot in 1836 and 1837, farmer at Greenholm in 1838 and 1840, and labourer in Newcastleton in 1841. Walter (18th/19th C.) recorded as a flesher in Denholm in 1837. Sir Walter 4th Laird of Wolfelee (1803–87), collector, Indian archæologist, naturalist and sportsman. Born at Stewartfield (also known as Hartrigge) and baptised in both Southdean and Edinburgh, he was eldest surviving son of James, the 3rd Laird. He spent his early life at Hartrigge near Jedburgh and was educated at home by a tutor, then at a school near Doncaster. He received a position with the East India Company at the age of 15 spending 2 years at their Haileybury School in Berkshire and then another 2 years in the college of Fort St. George in Madras, where he developed a proficiency in Tamil and Hindustanti. He had an illustrious career in the Indian Civil Service 1821–60, working with the Board of Revenue and as private secretary to Lord Elphinstone. He was later Vice-Chancellor of Madras University and a Member of the Council of the Governor of Madras, briefly serving as Provisional Governor. Early in his career he was captured during an uprising at Mahratta, and was imprisoned for 6 weeks. He was a keen sportsman (i.e. hunter), being involved in many hunting trips, some described in Col. Walter Campbell's book 'My Indian Journal'. He was an early contributor to the 'Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal' and helped establish the 'Madras Journal of Literature and Science'. In 1833 he travelled through the Middle East with Robert Pringle of Yair and others, being present at the Church of the Holy Sepulchre when about 500 pilgrims were crushed to death on Good Friday. In 1837 he was appointed private secretary to Lord Elphinstone (a distant cousin), Governor of Madras. He eventually rose to become a Member of the Council of Madras, which was the highest position a civilian could attain. He studied various historical and archæological sites and became the leading authority on antiquarian subjects in southern India. He was responsible for rescuing (or removing) the Amaravati Marbles (now in the British Museum), compiled a history of the coins of southern India, donated his Indian coin collection to the British Museum and wrote an important work of ethnobotany 'Flora Andhirica' (1859). His hunting trophies from India were fixed around he entrance hall and staircase at Wolfelee. He only succeeded to the estates at the age of 52, and appointed William Oliver of Langraw as factor. In 1860 he returned permanently from India and retired to the family home at Wolfelee, where he had the House alterted and extended and immersed himself in natural history and other projects. He was a Vice-President of the Archæological Society. He donated several items to the Museum in 1858, a huge collection of preserved animals specimens, Indian coins, an Indian battle-axe, an Australian stone hammer and '2 very valuable silver rods of state, nearly 5 feet each in length' in 1860 (which were stolen from the Museum in 1865, and he offered to have the 'recovered silver made up again in the original form'), as well as the bronze horde found near the summit of Ruberslaw in 1863 and 'six Egyptian mummies, 4 of the sacred Ibis, and 2 serpents' in 1865. In 1866 he loaned several items to the Museum for a temporary exhibition: 'several heathen images; a number of Indian weapons, including a carved dagger which belonged to Shums-ood-Dean [Shamsuddin Ahmed Khan], who was hung for shooting Major Fraser, the Resident at Delhi; six sets of copper plates, bearing the seals of ancient Hindoo kings; a German wheel lock gun of the sixteenth century, &c.' In 1875 he also donated '14 reptiles' and 'numerous letter sent from the beleagured troops in Cabul, during the war of 1841–2, enclosed in quills to elude the vigilance of the enemy'. His collections have been the focus of an exhibit in the Museum, these included stuffed animals, Indian weapons and coins, and he also owned several Raeburn paintings. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1861 and became a Life Member of the Archæological Society in 1863. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1862. He also served as a Justice of the Peace, Commissioner of Supply and Tax Commissioner for Roxburghshire, as well as Deputy-Lieutenant for the county. He was heavily involved with the construction of the new Hobkirk Kirk in 1863, and was said to have an 'unwavering belief in the truths of Christianity'. In 1867 he contributed a sketch of the history of 'Denholm and its Vicinity' to the Berwickshire Naturalists' Club. In 1868 he also gave land for the erection of a new Wolfelee Free Kirk. In 1871 he published a call for cooperation among regional societies of naturalists. Also in 1871 he donated to the Museum '2 photographs of the Milnholm Cross, and 1 of tablet in wall of Mangerton Tower'. He was listed as owner of Wolfelee on the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. By 1875 he also owned part of Kirknowe, Wester Swanshiel and half of Langraw. He was also on the committee for the Upper Teviotdale Fisheries Association. He was knighted (as a Knight Commander of the Star of India) in 1866, was a Fellow of the Royal Society, as well as several other learned societies and was awarded an Honorary Doctorate by Edinburgh University in 1878. In 1885 he published a final volume of 'Coins of Southern India', revising the proofs by ear, since he was quite blind by then. His study of the song 'Rattling, Roaring Willie' was published in 1886. In 1839 (in Malta) he married Maria Dorothea (1816–90), daughter of Sir David Hunter-Blair of Blairquhan (grand-daughter of Sir James Hunter-Blair, Provost of Edinburgh). They had 6 children: James Thomas Spencer (1845–92), who succeeded; Walter Blair (1847–1869), Navy Lieutenant, who died at sea; Edward Hay Mackenzie (1852–1920), who succeeded his brother; Dorothea Helen, who in 1866 married William Eliott-Lockhart, 6th Laird of Borthwickbrae; Herman F., who served with the Black Watch and died childless in Mauritius; and Caroline Elizabeth, who married he cousin Arthur von Poelnitz. Lady Elliot was known as an outspoken woman, who shared in some of her husband's interests and made Wolfelee an open house for visitors to the district. Sir Walter became blind in old age, but retained his memory to the end, which came suddenly. He is buried in the kirkyard at Chesters and a memorial plaque was placed in hobkirk Kirk. His collection of the coins of Southern India was gifted to the British Museum. A limited-edition book 'Sir Walter Elliot of Wolfelee: A Sketch of his Life and a few Extracts from his Notebooks' was written by Robert Sewell in 1896. Walter F. (1804–74) son of John, he was born in Hobkirk Parish and was a joiner in Chesters. In 1841 he is recorded as farmer at Abbotrule and in 1851 as joiner at 'Abbotrule (penticle)'. In 1827 in Hobkirk Parish he married Margaret (1803–80), daughter of George Minto. Their children included: Helen (1828–1915); John (1830–1910); George (b.1831); William (b.1835); James (b.1837); Walter Henry (b.1841); Robert Henderson (b.1843); and Margaret (b.1849). He emigrated to the U.S.A. with his family in 1852, joining his brother John, who had gone out about a decade earlier. They settled in Otsego County, New York. Walter (b.1811) son of John and Margaret Forrest, he was born in Castleton Parish. In 1841 he was a quarryman at Stitchehill Quarry. In 1861 he was listed as a blind quarryman, living with his mother on South Hermitage Street. Walter (b.1819/20) born in Castleton Parish, he was shepherd at Lairhope in Teviothead Parish in 1851 and 1861. In 1881 and 1891 he was a shepherd living at Singdean. He married Elizabeth (or 'Eliza', b.1819/20) Elliot and their children included: William (b.1843); Jane (b.1845); Thomas (b.1847); Walter (b.1850); James (b.1853), also a shepherd; Margaret (b.1856); Jane (b.1858); and Elizabeth Turnbull ('Betsy', b.1862). Walter (1828–93) son of Robert and Mary Murray. He was farmer at Hermitage in 1861, having taken over from his father. In 1861 he was living there with his sister Mary, a domestic servant and 3 farm workers. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1866. In 1864 he married Agnes, daughter of John Armstrong and Janet Glendinning. Their children were: Robert (b.1865), who also farmed at Hermitage; Mary Murray (b.1867), who married John G. Wilson, manufacturer in Hawick; Janet Glendinning (b.1869), who died aged 14; and Ellen (b.1873), who married Archibald R. Oliver Rutherford of Dinlabyre. Walter (1840–99) son of Andrew, farmer at Twislehope. He was recorded as farmer at Twislehope in 1868. He married Anne Brown and their children were: Andrew (b.1874); James (b.1876); Eliza (b.1878), who married Thomas Potts; Elizabeth Jane (b.1880), who married Christopher Hether and Archibald Bridges; John (b.1881), married Anne Gwilliam; Anne (b.1883), married William Broatch; Sarah (b.1885), married Edmund Harvey Thompson and lived in Galt, Ontario; Walter (b.1887), married Gertrude Gwilliam; Agnes (b.1889), married Dennis Rivers Le Deau; Janet, died in infancy; and David (1898–1918), killed in action in France. In 1905, after his death, most of his family emigrated to Canada. Walter Nichol (1846–82) son of William and Christian Crozier, he was born in Liddesdale Parish. He married Mary Cowan, who died at the Golf House, Hawick in 1933, aged 85. Their daughter Jane Tait died in Hawick in 1892, aged 21. He himself died at Millburn. Walter Blair (1847–69) 2nd son of Sir Walter of Wolfelee. He was born in Madras, served in the Royal Navy, became a Lieutenant and died of yellow fever on H.M.S. Racoon. Walter (b.1850) son of Walter, shepherd at Singdean. In 1876 he is recorded winning the steeplechase at Jedburgh Games, running barefoot. Walter (b.1851) eldest son of Thomas in Blackhaugh and descended from the Elliots of Newhall. He worked as a factor in Argyll, but in 1896 purchased Kirndean in Liddesdale. Later he also bought Walterhead of Dryfe in Dumfriesshire and was tenant at Clenries. His children were Mary, William (who became tenant of Middletown, Stow),

Thomas and Walter. Walter of Harwood (1888–1958) son of auctioneer and farmer, William, he was born in Lanark. He was descended from the Elliots of Newhall, and hence Horsleyhill. His father purchased the estate of Harwood. He studied medicine at Glasgow University, and served with the Scots Greys during WWI, being decorated with the Military Cross and Bar. Early on he developed a centrist stance in politics, as well as an interest in science. He became a Conservative M.P. for Lanark, Kelvingrove, Scottish Universities and Kelvinside again, being Secretary of State for Scotland, Minister of Health, Minister of Agriculture, Financial Secretary to the Treasury and Privy Councillor. He was Rector of Aberdeen and Glasgow Universities, Lord High Commissioner to the Assembly of the Church of Scotland, elected a Fellow of the Royal Society and made a Companion of Honour. He was also made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1933 and also made a Freeman of Edinburgh and Lanark. Late in life he settled in the estate at Harwood that his father had purchased. He suffered a terrible accident at Hawick Station in 1943, trying to catch a moving train on an icy morning, when he fell between the platform and the carriage, breaking his pelvis and other bones. It took him most of the year to recover from his injuries. In 1956 he was appointed Lord High Commissioner to the General Assembly of the Church of Scotland. He was described as 'a big man physically and he was a big man in his mental range and in scholarship and courage ... a Borderer to the very marrow of his bones'. In 1919 he married Helen, daughter of Lt.-Col. Hamilton, but this ended with a tragic accident on the Isle of Skye during their honeymoon. In 1934 he remarried, to Katherine, daughter of Sir Charles Tennant of Peeblesshire, who was an active politician on her own, later becaming Baroness Elliot of Harwood in 1958. He died suddenly and is buried in Hobkirk churchyard. Walter (1934–) Selkirk-based poet and historian. He spent his early life in the Ettrick valley, served in the K.O.S.B., then worked as a fencer and woodcutter, before a fractured skull led him to change career to being a museum assistant, performer and writer. His books include Clash-ma-clavers chap book' (1985), 'Song for Yarrow' (1991) and the series of guide-books 'Ballads Trail' (2000), 'James Hogg Trail' (2000) and 'Sir Walter Scott Trail' (2000), as well as in 'Jorum: six poets in Border Scots' (2000). William (13th/14th C.) Burgess of Perth who signed the Ragman's Rolls in 1296. His name is recorded as 'William Alight'. Since there is a strong suggestion that the Border Elliots came via the Perth and Angus areas, it seems possible that he was the direct ancestor of the first Laird of Redheugh, perhaps given lands in Liddesdale by Robert the Bruce in the early 14th century. William (14th C.) recorded as 'Eliot of Upton in ye Clay' in an English document of 1333. His son Hugh was pardoned by Edward III on account of his service at the siege of Berwick. William 'One-Eyed' (14th C.) recorded in Cumberland in 1389, appearing before the justices of gaol delivery. His nickname was recorded as 'monoculus' and his surname as 'Elwald', the same as Richard 'parvus'. William of Gorrenberry (15th C.) recorded as 'Willielmo Elwaldo' in 1484 when he was one of the men directed by the Earl of Angus to infeft Robert of Redheugh in the lands of Larriston. In 1489 he was one of the men further directed to infeft Robert of Redheugh in other lands, there recorded as 'Wilielmo elwad de gouinbery'. He may also be the William who was witness (along with Ninian, Robert, John and Andrew 'Elwald' and others) to a sasine for the lands of Robert of Redheugh in 1497. He was probably closely related to the Elliots of Redheugh and Larriston, as were the later Elliots of Gorrenberry. However, it has also been suggested that this branch of the family was one of the 'twelve great families' of Elliots who came to Liddesdale in the 14th century. William (15th C.) recorded in the records of the Justice-aire held at Jedburgh in 1493. Hector Lauder was allowed to 'compone' for several crimes, including associating with him and 'alias fures de branxhame' (i.e. other thieves of Branxholme). In 1494/5 John and Thomas Liddersdale in Hawick were allowed to 'compone' for aiding the 'elwaldis de branxame' in their crimes. It thus appears that there was a branch of the Elliots living near Branxholme at that time, although it is unclear how they might have been related to other Elliots. Perhaps the same William 'elwald' was recorded at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5 when John Hervey in Fairnilee had remission for crimes that included resetting him and Robert Heiton. William (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'Willelmi elwald' in 1494/5 when he failed to appear along with 85 other Elliots, Armstrongs, Wighholms, Croziers and others. This resulted in fines for the Lord of Liddesdale (Patrick, Earl of Bothwell) and the Captain of Hermitage (George Turnbull of Hallrule). His name was given first, suggesting he may have been an important member of the clan. Ralph, listed as brother of William in 1494/5 may have been his brother. Perhaps the same William was also described as 'Wilzam Elwald', son-in-law of George Armstrong in a document of 1500, listing pledges of good behaviour made to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell. Several other men of the same name are mentioned in that document, e.g. William and David, sons of William (who may have been his sons, but without further designation it is impossible to say). William (15th/16th C.) son of William. He was listed among many men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5 to answer for their crimes. It is unclear which William was his father, but David (also son of William) was probably his brother. William 'Siders' (15th/16th C.) listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. He is listed as 'Willelmi elwald syders'. He is also recorded in the 1498 pledge to Patrick Earl of Bothwell, along with many other Elliots, Armstrongs and others. He is listed there as 'Wilzam Elwald, Siders'; the designation is possibly the same as 'Side'. William (15th/16th C.) listed in 1501/2 as 'William Elwalh his follower' when Andrew Kerr of Fernihirst received the lands of Feu-Rule from their superior, Sir William Douglas of Cavers. He may have been acting as Kerr's Bailie. He may have been the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. William (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'Willemno elwald de lahope' in 1502 when he was surety for Gilbert. His lands may have been Langhope (or perhaps Ladhope or Lawhope or somewhere else). Probably the same William was accused in 1502, along with James Foster, of stealing a horse from David Brown, out of Edinburgh, with William Turnbull 'de lahope' as surety. He may be the same as one of the other Williams. William (15th/16th C.) brother of Robert. In 1502 he was surety for his brother Robert, who was convicted of stealing 5 cows from John Spedding out of Blackhaugh. He may be the same as one of the other Williams. William (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'in Ramsigill' in a list of Elliots and others given respite for their crimes in 1510. Since Robert of Redheugh is listed with only a small number of other Elliots, this might suggests he was closely related to the chief, as well as to Robert of Dinlees and John in Sundhope. He may be the same William 'in Rammilgill' recorded as a tenant of Whitrope in 1541; the other tenants were Leon, John and Robert. He must have been related to Robert who was also 'in Rammisgill' in 1541. William of Larriston (15th/16th C.) second son of Robert of Redheugh, 11th Chief, recorded in 1511. He is listed as brother of Robert of Redheugh in a 'respite' given in 1515/6. In 1516 he had a further respite in the Register of the Privy Seal, where he is 'William Elwald of Larestanis'. A number of other Elliots are also listed, specifically those at Mosspatrick, Dinlees, Thorlieshope, Sundhope and Heuchhouse and 'Bagget', and others bound to them, including men by the name of Forester, Thomson, Gledstains, Turner, 'Leche', Atkinson, Caverhill, Rowill (presumably Rule), Lawson, Wilson, White, Telfer, Nixon, Henderson, Simpson, Hunter, Davidson, 'Billop' (i.e. Billhope), Warwick, Dickson, Noble, Burn and 'Purdoun' (Purdom). He was probably serving as chief of the Elliots in 1516, since Robert of Redheugh (his nephew perhaps) had been killed at Flodden, and the next in line Robert was probably still a minor. He probably led the clan during the minority of the next Robert of Redheugh (probably his grand-nephew). He may be the William of Larriston who is recorded in 1547, along with William 'younger' (so presumably his son). He is said to have married the heiress of Robert Scott of Horsleyhill and to have had one son, whose son was Gavin, the first Elliot of Horsleyhill (if this was not William, then perhaps he had another son). He may be the Elliot of Larriston whose daughter married Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley. William (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'William Elwald in M^{c}Patrick' in a 'respite' of 1516 to William of Larriston and a large number of neighbouring Elliots and others. He may be related to the William in Mosspatrick recorded in 1541. William (15th/16th C.) listed in a 1516 'respite' to William of Larriston and several other Elliots of Liddesdale. He appears as being 'in Heuchous', this probably being Heuchhouse near Dinlabyre. The later Martin of Heuchhouse is surely his descendant. William (16th C.) witnessed a document in Selkirk in 1528, along with Thomas. Perhaps the same William is recorded in the Selkirk Protocol Books for 1535, along with Percival (probably a relative), Andrew 'Louche', Patrick Gourlay and others, accused accused of taking grain from 'le Schaw' belonging to John Hall. They claimed that Hall reaped grain that they had sown themselves. He may also be the William who promised to pay James Dunlop for his butter in 1544. In 1544/5 he had a bond to return an Englishman to his captors, Walter Scott of Branxholme and 'Perse Elwand'. He may also be the William who purchased a half tenement from Alison Turnbull in 1545. William (16th C.) son of Alexander. He was a servant to the Thomas Armstrong of Mangerton, listed along with a large number of Armstrongs and others who were denounced as rebels in 1535 for a raid on Craik. 'Law's John' was also listed, and so possibly a relative. William 'Mend the caill' (16th C.) named along with Robert 'de Flaswod' in a trial in Jedburgh in 1535. Robert Scott of Allanhaugh was accused of assisting them in stealing 5 cows from 'Corsle' (probably Corslie on the Gala Water) from John Veitch. They were probably among the thieves of Liddesdale who it is claimed that Scott brought to attack Midlem and other places. His nickname may refer to the vegetable 'kale'. William (16th C.) recorded in 1537/8 as being 'in Layheuch' (i.e. Leahaugh) along with brothers James and Simon. They were entered by Robert of Redheugh and his brother Archibald for breaking open the shop of Thomas Graham in Selkirk and stealing 100 merks worth of cloth, hides, etc. They were also bound not to harm Thomas Graham or his friends and servants in the future. He was presumably related somehow to the Redheugh branch. William (16th C.) referred to as 'Williame Ellot callit Bruk' in 1540/1 when he had respite for treasonable acts, including not being at the Solway raid and associating with the Douglases. One possibility is that his name is associated with 'Brugh'. William (16th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1540/1 when he was given respite for being at the horn. He had been tried in Kelso, but since then had found surety. It is unclear where he was from. William (16th C.) tenant of Mosspatrick recorded in the rental roll of Liddesdale in 1541. Williams with no designation are also listed as tenants of several other farms, including 'Pantodene', Singdean, Heuchhouse and the small steadings of Clearlands, etc. It is unclear if some of these were the same men. He was probably related to the William recorded in Mosspatrick in 1516. William 'Cock' (16th C.) recorded in 1541 along with Willie 'White Sark' and Clement Crozier, accused of having killed Englishman Robert Hall at 'Tredermayn'. His name is listed as 'Wilkoke Elwald', which seems likely to be a combination of his forename and nickname. The same 'Wilcokes Elwald' was listed along with Clem Crozier and Robin of Thorlieshope, accused in 1541 of resetting English fugitive Robsons. He may have been related to 'Cock' Crozier and it seems likely he was father of 'Wilcokis Hob' recorded in 1569, as well as ' 'Wilcox' Gawen Ellott' recorded in 1587/8. He may be the same as one of the other Williams. William 'White Sark' (16th C.) recorded in 1541 along with 'Wilkoke' and Clement Crozier. They were accused of having raided 'Tredermayn' and killed Englishman Robert Hall. His name is given as 'Willy Elwald called 'whitsarke'. William (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as a tenant of the lands of 'Lyndene' in the Barony of Bowden, along with other 'Elwalds'. William (16th C.) listed in 1544 as 'William Elwode John Crossier sister sone', when he was among local men who gave their assurances to the English. The John mentioned here, who was presumably his mother's brother, was a prominent member of the Crozier family at that time, possibly the son of 'Cock Crozier', who seemed to be chief of the Slitrig valley branch of the family a generation earlier. William (16th C.) resident of Whithope recorded in 1549, among a list of the tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme who complained about the Kers ravaging their farms. William of Larriston (16th C.) recorded as 'Ellot of Larestanis' in 1556 when he had a bond for entering William Nixon to John Kerr of Ferniehirst. He may have been the son of the previous William of Larriston, and the 'younger' mentioned along with William of Larriston in 1547. He is probably the 'yowng Wylliam Elwand' involved with a bond to enter some Elliots as prisoners at Ferniehirst in 1546; however, his bother Simon was witness on his behalf. He also (along with Robert of Redheugh and Archibald) had a bond to enter Robert Crozier as a prisoner in 1548; he signed with the help of the notary (meaning that he could not write). Around the late 1550s he was one of the men on the panel to resolve the conflict over the lands of Newbigging (in Hassendean) between the children of Gavin of Horsleyhill. He may be the 'Williame Ellot, callit young Williame' listed (after Robert of Redheugh) in 1561 among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. He is surely the 'William Ellot of Lamestone' recorded in part of the trial for the murder of David Scott of Hassendean in 1565, along with Gavin of Horsleyhill and William of Falnash. For his non-appearance John Douglas of Cavers and William Douglas of the Crook were fined and he was denounced as a rebel. However, he may be confused with William of Braidlie, who was also described as being 'of Larriston'. William 'Elder Will', 'the Tod' (d.bef. 1586) recorded in 1561/2 in a bond between Elliots and the Kerrs of Ferniehirst to enter a Routledge. The other Elliots were Archie in Falnash, Archie's son Gavin, and John of Copshaw (all of whom may have been relatives). He is also recorded in 1567 when his son John was captured in Hawick for being a Liddesdale thief. In 1569 he was 'elder Will Ellot' when he was pledge 'for himself and his haill branche', with Alexander Home of Manderston as his surety. Also in 1569 he was 'Elder Will the Tod' when held in Blackness Castle as pledge for his eldest son and also 'David Carling his brother'. In 1570 he was among a group of Elliots who signed a bond related to the release from ward of his son Hob, as well as John of Heuchhouse. There was surety for one of his sons (name not given) in 1577, according to the register of the Privy Council. He may be the 'Will Ellot, callit the Eldar Tod' whose son John is recorded in pledges in 1578 and 1580. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned. He had been among the sureties for an earlier assurance for his son Hobbie, as well as John of the Heuchhouse. He is also recorded in 1580/1 when his son John was convicted of rieving. In 1581 he was 'Will Ellott, called Elder Will', among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. His sons David and Martin signed the bond of assurance to the English Wardens, taking 'the burden upon us for ourselves, brethren, and brethren bainres and servants. He is probably the 'Willie the Tod' from Liddesdale who was already deceased in 1586 when his son William was granted a lease of the lands of 'Culgatis'. He may be the Will of Heuchhouse accused along with Martin's Archie in 1590, of stealing from 'Halliden' and additionally he was named among Elliots, Nixons, Shiels and others who in 1590 were accused by the tenants of Woodhall of stealing from them; however, these are probably his son William. The Will of Heuchhouse accused (along with Rich and others) accused of raiding into England in 1595 may have been his son William. William 'Wedder-Neck' (d.1561) hanged in 1561 for the crimes of theft and reset, along with Peter Turnbull ('the Monk') and Henry Black in Softlaw. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Elliots. His name is recorded as 'Will Ellot, callit Woddir-nek'. William 'Will' (16th C.) listed in 1563/4 along with George in Adderstoneshiel, Alexander and 2 Croziers. They were to be presented by John Gledstains of Cocklaw to answer accusations brought against them by Englishman William Selby. His name is recorded as 'Will Ellot of the Burnmouthis', which seems likely to have been Burnmouth near Saughtree (although perhaps there was another place of the same name in the Slitrig valley, where the Gledstains' lands were). William (16th C.) listed as 'bastard sone to vmqle Robert Elliot' in the 1564 trial for the murder of David Scott of Hassendean, along with Elliots of Horsleyhill and others. His father may have been Robert, 15th of Redheugh. He may be the 'William Ellot of the Redhughe' who was among several Elliots accused by the English in 1581 of stealing cattle and goods from 'Symwhaite'. He may also be the William, brother of 'Robin Ellot' accused of raiding Englishman Andrew Taylor's livestock and goods in 1582. William (d.1580) 5th Laird of Horsleyhill, he was the 2nd son of Gavin, the 1st Laird. He is presumably the William, along with his father Gavin and brothers Andrew and Robert, accused of murdering Hugh Douglas in about 1547. In the late 1550s he was involved in the family dispute over the lands of Newbigging in Hassendean and in 1563 was arguing with John Scott in Catslack. He is probably the William of Horsleyhill who witnessed a bond in 1561/2 between several Elliots and the Kerrs of Ferniehirst. He is probably the William of Horsleyhill recorded in the Register of the Privy Council in 1563/4, along with his brother Robert, in a case involving the Scotts of Tushielaw stealing cattle from Bailielee; their cautioner was John Preston, Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1564 he was listed as 'fadir bruther and tutour' to Gavin, son of the deceased Robert of Horsleyhill; this was in connection to the complaint by John Turnbull of Hassendean against Dand (who was also his brother). In 1564 it was presumably he (although the Lairdship around this time seems hard to follow) who was found guilty of involvement in the murder of David Scott of Hassendean; also involved were Robert, Gavin and Archibald, who were probably his brothers. He was banished after this, but was pardoned in 1565 by Queen Mary (perhaps because of his marriage to a Kerr). He purchased the lands of Horsleyhill from his nephew William, initially in 1568 for a period of 15 years, finally buying them outright from William's wife Margaret Turnbull in 1570/1. In 1569 he also bought the Middle Mains of Hassendean from his nephew. In 1572/3 he promised the Regent that his family, servants and tenants would continue to be obedient subjects, with Thomas Weir of Kirkton as cautioner (it is unclear what events this was in response to). In 1574/5 he was involved in a court case where Scott of Buccleuch claimed some lands; he was able to prove that he was infefted in Westerhouses, Clarilaw and Hassendeanburn, but his superior, William Douglas of Cavers, was instructed to remove him from the lands of Catslack. In 1575 he was one of the men summoned by the Privy Council to settle the feud between the Elliots and the Pringles; his brother Gavin was also summoned. In 1575/6 he was a complainant regarding 'mails' for his steading of Easter Montbenger. He may be the William 'of Torslyhill' (if this is an error for 'Horsleyhill') on Monipennie's c.1597 (but drawn up earlier) list of Border Lairds. He married Elizabeth Kerr sometime before 1556, and secondly in 1569 married Elizabeth, daughter of James Douglas of Cavers. He had at least 2 children: Robert, who succeeded; and William of Caveling, (b.1572), Burgess of Peebles, who married Christian Chisholme. James in Peebles may have been another son. In 1688 Capt. Walter Scott of Satchells states that his father knew him very well, and gives some of his family connections. William 'Will' (16th C.) tenant of Gavin of Elliot of Falnash in 1569. The Laird appeared in Hawick to give surety for his tenants. His name is recorded as 'Wille Ellot' and he may have been related to Dand, Jock and Hob, other Elliots also listed as tenants. William 'Ringan's Will' (16th C.) mentioned in 1579 when his son 'Archie Ellot, sone to Ringhanis Will the portar' was among Armstrongs and their compatriots who promised to yield to Lord Maxwell. He is separately recorded in 1579 as 'Ringanis Will Ellot the portar in Glenvoran'. He may have been related to Ninian, tenant in Ewesdoors and Glenvoran (with Will, son of Ringan the Porter also named in the same citation). Possibly the same 'Ringanis Wille Ellot' was listed in 1611 for not appearing at court in Jedburgh. William 'Grey Will' (16th C.) recorded in 1569 when John of the Park was held in Balwearie Castle, as pledge for him and 'Hob Mirk Ellot'. He was listed in 1574 among Scotsmen who were reset in England. His name there is given as 'Will Ellott, called Gray Will'. He is also listed in 1583 among the Elliots of the Park branch. His name is given as 'Will Ellot, gray Wille'. He is probably father of 'Grey Will's Jamie', who is also listed. He is 'Gray Will' when listed along with Jock of the Park in a list of Borderers in the 1580s. William (16th C.) recorded in Lindean in 1580/1 when he had a marriage contract with Helen, daughter of Robert Fletcher, witnessed in Selkirk. William 'Jock's Willie' (16th C.) listed in 1578 among Border Lairds who promised to meet to suppress lawlessness on the Border, after being released from being warded with George Ramsay of Dalhousie. He was also warded with George Ramsay of Dalhousie in 1580, when ordered to be presented to the Privy Council. He was recorded in 1581 when he was released from being warded as pledge for the 'gang' of Elliots of Burnhead. Hob, brother of Gavin's Hob (this may be an error for Gavin's Jock) of Ramsiegill remained as pledge for these Elliots. Also in 1581 he was 'Will Ellott, called Jokkis Willie, pledge for the haill gang of Rampsygill'. He was also recorded in 1582/3, when Martin of Braidlie, Gavin's Jock and Robert Kerr of Ancrum were fined by the Privy Council for his non-appearance, along with 'Ill Hob'. He was 'plege for the haill gang of Ramsygill, quha wer ressavit be thame out of ward of the tolbuith of Edinburgh'. 'Ill Hob' of Ramsiegill was his brother, and presumably they were both sons of Jock. In 1586 Robert of Redheugh was ordered to appear as surety for him, under penalty of 1000 merks; he is there recorded as 'Will Ellott, called Jokis Willie'. His son may be the 'Wyll Ellotts John of Burnheads' recorded in 1595. William 'Will the Lord' (16th C.) recorded in Monipennie's list of Border chiefs of c.1594. He is listed under Ewesdale along with 'John the Portars Son' and 'Will of the Devisleyes'. In 1569 he is 'Will Ellot callit the Lord' when held in Loch Doon Castle as pledge for John of Fiddleton, Hob 'the Lady' and Hob of Unthank, all Elliots of Ewesdale. In 1578/9 he is 'Will Ellot, callit the Lord', when John Carmichael, younger of that Ilk was caution for him (and other Elliots of Ewesdale) not to raid into England. It is possible he is the same man as Will of Fiddleton. William (16th C.) merchant recorded in 1580 when he witnessed witness an agreement in Riddell between James Riddell in Maxton and John Riddell in Newton Mill. He may have lived near Riddell, or otherwise was from Selkirk. William (16th C.) recorded as 'Will of Devisleyes' in Monipennie's list published about 1594 (although probably compiled earlier). He is listed among the Elliots of Ewesdale. It is possible that the place is a misreading of 'Eweslees'. William (16th C.) son of 'Jock's Willie', although it is unclear to which branch of the family he belonged. In 1580/1 he was sentenced to imprisonment for theft, along with several other Elliots, Armstrongs and Nixons of Liddesdale. William 'Will' (16th C.) tenant in Mosspatrickhope in 1581 when he appeared on a list of Armstrong, Elliots and others who accused the Scotts and their allies of various crimes.

He and 2 others gave assurances for the Elliots of Gorrenberry to the English Wardens in 1584. In 1587/8 he was 'Will of Mospatrikhoip' when his son James is recorded being warded with the Laird of Balmuto (John Boswell). He is recorded as being 'of Morspatrikshors' in Monipennie's list of Border chiefs (published around 1594) along with 'Archie Keene' under the heading 'Gorumberie'. He is probably related to the William who was tenant in Mosspatrick in 1541. William 'Airchie's Will' of Gorrenberry (16th C.) 2nd son of Archibald of Falnash and Gorrenberry. He is first mentioned around 1556 and probably still alive in 1596. In about 1556 he is 'Vil Ellot callit Arche Wille' when, along with Walter Scott, he rented 'Westcoit' in Ringwoodfield from the monks of Melrose. He is probably the William 'callit Archeis Will' listed in 1561 among men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. His brother 'Gawin Elwald' also appeared before the Queen in 1561, promising to provide the names of thieves. He was 'of Gorrimberry' when witnessing a bond of his father's in 1561/2, and hence must have acquired Gorrenberry by then. In 1567 Robert Scott of Thirlestane and Master Thomas Weston relieved Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme as surety for him and Sim Elliot in Dodburn. He is recorded in 1569 acting as surety for his tenants in a bond of security signed at Hawick (but not listing any tenants explicitly); he is there recorded as 'Will Ellot alias Archeis Will'. When he failed to appear in 1569 (along with Gavin of Falnash and Sim of Dodburn), Scott of Buccleuch was to be liable for £1000. He was also one of the designated relief pledges for Gavin of Falnash in 1569. Along with several other Elliots he signed the bond with the Regent Morton in 1572. He is probably the William 'of Gorumberry' who was to be entered into ward in St. Andrews in 1573. In 1574 he was involved in a dispute with William Douglas of Cavers over the lands of Caerlenrig (which had been held on wadset by his father from Douglas' father). Douglas tried to have him removed from the lands, and in 1576 the case was still not settled, with his sisters having to confirm that he was still alive. He may be the William in Gorrenberry who was one of the men summoned by the Privy Council in 1575 to resolve the feud between the Elliots and the Kerrs and also summoned with other Border Lairds (including Robert of Redheugh and Martin of Braidlie) to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. He is recorded as 'William Ellott of Goddamburie' when accused along with Tom of Copshaw, the Armstrongs of Whithaugh, and others of attacking the farms of the Laird of Bellister in England in 1587. He was said to have been part of the group who raided Carlisle Castle to free 'Kinmont Willie', being named by an English informer as 'Will Ellott goodman of Gorrombye' (although he is likely to have been too old to take part himself). In 1590 he and Simon Armstrong of Whithaugh were accused of rieving from the Lord Warden's tenants. In 1590/1 he was 'of Gorrumberry' among men that the Earls of Bothwell and Murray were to enter before the Privy Council; he is probably also the 'Will Ellot of Fallinesche' who along with Walter Chisholme of that Ilk, was ordered to present his brother Archie. He is probably the William 'of Gorrumberrie' in 1599 (unless this was a son) among Elliots who signed a bond at Branxholme with the Warden of the West March regarding the inhabitants of Liddesdale; along with Robert of Redheugh, Martin of Braidlie and Jock of Copshaw he was listed as one of the 'principallis of oure brenche'. His son may have been the 'Willie's Archie' who, along with many other Elliots, signed bonds with Scott of Buccleuch in 1599; he did this with his hand on the notary's pen 'because I can nocht wryte my selff'. He is the 'doughty Willie o' Gorrenberry' in some versions of the ballad 'Jamie Telfer in the Fair Dodhead'. William 'Will o the Steele' (16th C.) recorded in 1569 when he and his brother Hob of the Shaws were excepted from the pledge that John of Thorlieshope had for the whole of that branch of the Elliots. A letter from Sir John Forster in 1576 complains that his brother John 'Elwood' had stolen 100 sheep from his lands in Hexhamshire. In 1581/2 his son Will was listed among men accused of raiding Harwood-on-Teviot. He was listed among the Elliots of the Braidlie branch in 1583. In 1584 he was among the Elliots of the Thorlieshope branch who gave assurances to the English Wardens at Hermitage. In 1590 there is a complaint by the tenant of Birdoswald about a raid into England made by both old and young 'Will Ellot of the Steill' in 1588, and in 1590 there was a further complaint against 'Will of the Steile the elder, and his son Will'. The younger William is also recorded on his own in a further accusation in 1590, while he was accused in 2 separate cases, where he is 'elder Will of the Steile' (and 'Steill') and in a further complaint of 1590 (for stealing from Englishman John Armstrong 2 years earlier) where his is just 'Will of the Steill'. Both he and his son were among men accused in 1590 of having raided the farm of Dotland a couple of years earlier. Both he and his son are on a 1590 list of Elliots (including from Redheugh and Braidlie) accused of raiding the English farm of 'Whynatlie' in the previous year. Also in 1590 he is 'old Will Ellot of the Steile' listed among Elliots and Armstrongs complained about by a large group of Englishmen for a raid on Blackcleugh in Kirkhaugh. Hence it seems likely that all mentions of Will of the Steele after that date are probably for his son. William (16th C.) recorded as possessor of the fields in 'rindaill' near Hermiston for which in 1580 Patrick Johnstone gave sasine to his father John Johnstone's wife Marion Wilson. William 'Will' of Hartsgarth (16th/17th C.) probably 2nd son of Robert (15th) of Redheugh. He was hence brother of Robert (16th) of Redheugh, as well as 'Gibbie wi the Gowden Gairties', Archibald and Gavin of Brugh. He was sometimes referred to as 'Robyn's Will' and was recorded as early as 1581. He was said to have ridden with his brother on raids into England and the pair were involved in a dispute with Scott of Buccleuch. In 1581 he is probably the Robert , listed along with Gavin as brothers of Robert of Redheugh in 1581 when they witnessed the sasine for Gavin Gledstains inheriting Stobs (with Gavin of Bailielie, Robert of Redheugh and 2 tenants of Swinstead also acting as witnesses). In a letter from Musgrave to Queen Elizabeth's Chancellor he is 'Wille Ellot of Harskarth', brother of the chief. He was accused of leading a group of Liddesdale and Teviotdale men on an attack into Mindrum in England in 1583/4, in which several men were killed and a number taken prisoner; these being freed by the King and the Warden had orders to get him to repay what was stolen, but that had still not been done by 1590/1. In a letter from the King in 1584 he is described as 'Will Ellot of Hartstarth bry^{r} to Robene of Reidhwech'. He was 'of Harkescarth, called Robyns Will' when accused of being on a raid on the tenants of Featherstonehaugh in 1587; Martin's Airchie was also there, as well as 160 others, and it is claimed that they burned 23 houses and took 3 prisoners. In 1586 his brother Robert of Redheugh was instructed to enter him in court. He served as a guardian for his nephew Robert (17th) of Redheugh; in about 1590 he was listed as 'Will Ellot of Harthscarth, tutour of Reidheuch' among the landed men of the Borders. In 1590/1 he was 'Will Ellot of Haitscarth' among men that the Earls of Bothwell and Murray were to enter before the Privy Council. In 1591/2 Walter Scott of Goldielands acted as surety for him. In 1593 he was 'of Lariston' when accused of being involved in the death of Charltons in England, along with Scott of Buccleuch. He was also 'William Ellot of Lawreston' when accused in 1593 (along with Martin of Braidlie and Kinmont Willie Armstrong) of leading about 1000 men in a raid on Redesdale, taking 1005 head of cattle, 1000 sheep and 24 horses, as well as burning a mill and stealing £300 worth of goods. In 1593 he was 'of Hartscarth' when accused of killing 2 Tynedale men called Dods. In 1594 there was a complaint against him by Enlgishman Gilbert Park of 'Warton'. In 1595/6 he complained about men of Tynedale who was stolen cattle from him, and was himself involved on a retaliatory raid into England; he was there 'Will Ellot of Larrestone alias Harskarth'. He was 'of Larestone' in 1594/5 when there was an attempt to deliver Jock Graham as prisoner in his stead. He is probably one of the 2 Williams who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. He appears to have held Hartsgarth through wadset until 1595/6, when it was gained by William of Larriston (son of Martin of Braidlie). In 1597 he (along with his hephew Robert of Redheugh and John of Copshaw) wrote from Larriston to the English Warden, explaining that they had sworn to the Scott of Buccleuch that they would not have dealings with any Englishmen. He was also known as William 'of Rigg' until 1622, when Winningtonrig was sold by his brother, and he received 2500 merks for his share. In 1605 he represented his mother, Marion Hamilton, in a complaint against the Douglases. He was recorded in 1618 among a large group of Elliots and others who John Scott in Newark complained attacked his farm at Foulshiels in Liddesdale, beating up one of his workers there; not appearing, the accused were denounced as rebels, but he and Robert of Redheugh appeared later and the horning was suspended. Some time before 1608 he married his half-cousin Jean, daughter of Robert Rutherford of Edgerston, with her mother being a daughter of Gavin Eliott of Stobs; this may be garbled into him being the 'William called 'Neck of Steel', a son of Robert Elliot of Laristoun', who is said to have married Joan, daughter of Thomas Rutherford, the 'Black Laird' of Edgerston. He may have married a second time, since in 1642 the deceased Jean Rutherford is described as his 1st wife. He probably had children, but this branch of the Elliots was extinct by 1634 (as stated in the matriculation of arms for Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs in 1673). Note that some genealogies suggested he had 3 sons, including William of Roan, but this may be confusion with another William, perhaps the son of Martin of Braidlie. His children probably included: Robert (d.bef. 1637), who succeeded; Francis, who succeeded his brother; and James, who was 'second lawful son' in 1639. William 'Willie' (16th C.) son of William, 'callit the Tod'. He is probably the eldest son (name not given) of 'Elder Will the Tod', who, along with his brother 'David Carling', were the pledges for whom their father was held in Blackness Castle in 1569. In 1586 he was granted a lease of the lands of 'Culgatis' in Liddesdale by Francis, Earl of Bothwell. It is unclear where exactly these lands were. Given a connection with 'Tod', it is probable he was son of 'Elder Will'. William (16th C.) tenant in Dodburn. In 1586, along with his brother Archie, he was accused of 'a great strough at the Eschelles in England'. William of Falnash (probably their laird) was surety for them at the Justice Court in Jedburgh. By 1602 the Crown was still trying to get William of Falnash to pay the £60 for him and his brothers Archie and Sim, for 'a great stouth commited by them at Eschellis'. William (16th/17th C.) recorded in an indenture of 1594/5 between the Scottish and English Wardens. His name is written as 'Wille Ellott, called Cowfaughes' when he was delivered as a pledge for the crimes of Hob (who may have been related). Probably the same man was 'Will Ellott, called Cowsauche' listed among Liddisdale men declared as fugitives for not attending a court in Peebles in 1605. He may be related to John 'Cowshawes' who is recorded in 1590. William 'Will' (16th/17th C.) recorded along with 'Riche Ellott of the Hewghhouse' in 1595, as well as another Elliot called Hob. They were accused of stealing horses from a farm in England. William of Braidlie (d.1606/7) 2nd son of Martin, who was probably responsible for the burning of Hawick in 1565. He was known as 'Will o the Dale', as well as being 'of Larriston', 'of Hartsgarth' (although this may be confusion with a different man, brother of Robert of Redheugh) and later 'of Dinlabyre'. He may be the 'Will Ellot of Bradlie' who entered the bond of 1557 to bring 'Robene Pet' to the Warden, John Kerr of Ferniehirst (although that seems too early, and hence may be a different William). Along with several other Elliots he signed the bond with the Regent Morton in 1572. In 1574 he was one of the hostages taken by the Regent Morton to ensure the good behaviour of the clan and was held by James Scrimgeour, Constable of Dundee. In 1578, there was a pledge to the King to meet with other Border Lairds to promise to suppress lawlessness on the Border, with his cautioner being James Scrimgeour, Constable of Dundee; he was there referred to as 'sone to Martine Ellot of Braidley'. However, within a few months he headed 200 men on a raid into Tynedale. He may have spent time in the wars in Flanders and France, since he is not recorded for more than a decade. He was 'of Larriston' in 1593 and 1594 (making him possibly confused with another family branch). He led the Elliots and Armstrongs in a massive raid on Tynedale in 1593, with as many as 1,000 men taking part; they drove more than 2,000 head of livestock back to Scotland, as well as taking £300 in goods. In 1595 he was 'of Lareston' when his servants John and Clement Nixon were complained about for a raid into England. In 1595/6 he may be the same man as 'William Ellott of Harscat a principal actor in the attempt of Tyndale' delivered by Scott of Buccleuch to Sir John Forster (this is presumably Hoscote, but it is not entirely clear if this is the same or a different William). In 1596 he was 'Wille Ellott of Lairston' when (along with Walter Scott of Harden and the young Laird of Whithaugh) accused of stealing a large number of cattle and horses from 'the Leabecke at Wilkinskarre'. He was 'Will Ellott of Larestane' in 1597 among a list of men the English Warden demanded pledges for. He is probably the 'William Ellwald of Duneleabyre' listed among 5 Scotsmen delivered by Sir Walter Scott to the English Deputy Warden in 1597 as hostages for the general peace on the Border. He remained a prisoner for more than 2 years, despite pleas by several Elliots for his release. In 1598/9 he was 'William Elwood, elder', (to distinguish him from a youngster of the same name) among a group of Scotsmen who tried to escape from their English prison. In 1600 there was an offer to substitute his son Robert, which was rejected; however, he and Simon Armstrong of Whithaugh escaped soon afterwards. He may also be the William 'of Eskez' listed in 1600 (along with William of Clintwood and Simon Armstrong of Whithaugh) as the men delivered by Scott of Buccleuch to the English Warden as pledges for Liddesdale; after his escape from York he is described as 'Will of Hescottes an Elwood', suggesting he is the same William who was tenant in Hoscote (but then the designations become hopelessly confused!). In 1606/7 he was one of the leaders in Liddesdale who were rounded up and executed by the Earl of Dunbar, then

Commissioner on the Border. He married Mary, daughter of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, and their children were: Robert of Dinlabyre; Gavin of Braidlie; and William of Braidlie. He was hanged at Foulden Justice Court along with his nephew Martin and other Elliot and Armstrong leaders. William (1546/7–aft. 1616) 4th Laird of Horsleyhill, son of Robert, he succeeded from his brother Gavin when he was 19. In 1566 he was served as heir to Gavin in a Precept of Clare Constat of the Middle Mains of Hassendean and of Horsleyhill, from the superior, Alexander, Lord Home. He then settled the '4 merk land' of Horsleyhill on his wife, Margaert Turnbull. There is no record of children for the couple. In 1569 he gave a charter of the lands to his uncle William and in 1570/1 his wife sold Horsleyhill to his uncle William. However, it appears he also sold Horsleyhill and the Mains of Hassendean to his uncle Gavin in 1572, with his uncle William taking the case to court, with Gavin's infeftment being annulled in 1574/5. In 1573 he also sold Caveling to his uncle William. He may be the William of Horsleyhill who is recorded in a bond of 1594/5, when James Gledstains of Cocklaw pledged that Hector and Richard Turnbull of Clarilaw would not harm him or Gavin Eliott of Stobs. In 1616 he is recorded acknowledging the redemption of the reversion of the Middle Mains of Hassendean, granted by his grandfather Gavin of Horsleyhill to Lord Home in 1555. He may be the William of Horsleyhill whose son Robert 'Ellet' is among those listed in the King's 1594 'respite' for the murder of Lord Maxwell at Dryfe Sands; if so, then he had at least one child. William 'Will o the Steele' (16th/17th C.) son of the elder William. In 1588 both old and young 'Will Ellot of the Steill' were complained about for a raid. In 1590 he is recorded as 'William Ellott of the Steile the younger' among a group of Elliots and others who took livestock and goods from Over Warden in England. Also in 1590 both he and his father were accused of leading a raid on Catton, where they took livestock and prisoners. He was further accused in 1590 (along with Shiels and Nixons) of stealing from Roland Walker. Both he and his father were accused in 1590 of being in a group of Elliots and others who raided Dotland about 2 years earlier. He is listed along with Elliots and others accused in 1590 of stealing from the 'Hewrde' family, maiming and taking prisoner Christopher 'of the Whithall'. Both he and his father are on a list of Elliots (including from Redheugh and Braidlie) accused of raiding the English farm of 'Whynatlie' in the previous year. In 1596 there was a complaint that he and others (including Anthony Elliot of Binks and Geordie Simpson) had raided lands in England at King Water. In 1597 he is listed among men for whom the English Warden demanded pledges. In 1597 he was 'William Ellwald of Steale' when he was among 5 Scotsmen delivered by Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch to the English Deputy Warden. However, he was recorded as 'Will Ellwood alias Will of the Stile' when released on a bond to return to Scotland; however, he soon led a raid into Tynedale, taking 200 head of cattle and 30 horses in broad daylight, so that the English Wardens called for his execution. He may have escaped punishment, since he is recorded in 1599 as 'Will of the Steill' when, along with many other Elliots, he signed a bond with Scott of Buccleuch. William of Braidlie (16th/17th C.) son of William of Braidlie and Dinlabyre. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. William of the Binks (16th/17th C.) 2nd son of Simon of Philhope and grandson of Martin of Braidlie. This line of Elliots of Binks is easy to confuse with the slightly later line that came from the Elliots of Falnash. His wife's name is not recorded. Their children were: Anthony 'in Rouchlie'; Simon of the Binks (d.bef. 1656); James; and Robert (d.1663). William 'Will' of Fiddleton (16th/17th C.) recorded occupying Fiddleton in 1567. In 1578/9 John Carmichael, younger of that Ilk was caution for him, that he would not raid into England. He was 'Will Ellot of Fiddiltoun' listed in 1586 among 'principallis of the brokin men of the west marche' in a document by King James VI instructing his Lieutenant on the Border. He was complained about for a raid into England in 1589. He is probably the 'Will of Fyttington' listed among a large group of Elliots who were accused in 1590 of taking Ralph Hall and other prisoners and ransoming them. Also in 1590 he was listed first in a group of Elliots and about 80 others accused of stealing from 'Trowhen' and killing 2 Englishmen in 1589, with the complaint repeated in 1590; he was there 'Will Ellott of Fydderton'. Additionally in 1590 he was the first in a list of Elliots, Armstrongs and Croziers, said to be 200 strong, who were accused of raiding the towns of 'Allenton' and 'Linbriggs', taking 100 cows, 20 horses and 20 prisoners. He was also listed among Elliots, Armstrongs, Turnbulls, Laidlaws and Croziers, accused in 1590 of rieving from the Laird of 'Troghwen' and Hedley of 'Garret

Sheills'; he was also among a group accused of having earlier stolen livestock and goods from the same people. Also in 1590 he was listed along with other Elliots, Croziers and Armstrongs, accused of taking cows and horses from the tenants of Woodhall and Netherhouses in England. In about 1600 Sir James Sandilands complained about the theft of 2 horses by him. He was 'Will Ellot of Fiddiltoun' in 1602 when Robert of Reidheugh was declared to be answerable for him; Sir James Sandilands complained that he had stolen 2 horses from him and hence Elliot of Redheugh was liable for the restitution. He was probably the Will of Fiddleton listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605; his sons John and Ringan were also listed as fugitives. He was apparently still alive in 1608 when his son Ninian was sentenced to be executed for killing one of the King's Guards while trying to escape arrest. William, son of John of Burngrains, was also convicted (and the records confusingly also switch the 2 men's fathers in one part, so it is possible that his son was William and not Ninian). He must have been related to the Gavin and John recorded in 1606. William 'Will' (16th/17th C.) recorded as 'Will Ellott, sone to Will Ellot of the Steill' in 1581/2, when he was among men accused of raiding the farm of Harwood-on-Teviot. He was declared a rebel after not appearing. William 'Will' of Thorlieshope (16th C.) listed in 1590 along with Will of Fiddleton and others of stealing livestock and goods from the Laird of 'Troghwen' and Hedley of 'the Garret sheills'. His name is given as 'Will Ellott of Thorleshoppe 'Renyon Will' ', suggesting that his father was Ninian. William 'Will' 3rd Laird of Falnash (d.bef. 1620) son of Gavin. He is first recorded in 1564, when he was 'Gawenis Willie, of Fallinesche' at the trial for the murder of David Scott of Hassendean; he was denounced as rebel for not appearing, but must have been rehabilitated later. In 1566 he was among a group of Elliots cited for attacking the Pringles and killing George Pringle of Torwoodlee; this was part of a feud between the 2 families. He also purchased 'Hoscoit' (i.e. Hoscote). In 1575 he was listed as son of Gavin of Falnash among those summoned to answer for the feud between the Elliots and the Pringles. In 1579/80 he was charged by John Carmichael, Keeper of Liddesdale, with raids into England. He is probably the William of Falnash who signed the Assurance of Liddesdale with the English Warden Sir John Forster in 1584; this was along with Robert of Redheugh and Martin of Braidlie, making it clear that he was an important Elliot chief at that time. In 1586 he was cited along with 15 other Border lairds for failing to bring their followers to justice. Additionally in 1586 he was 'Will Ellot of Hoistcoitt or Fallinesche' when listed among leaders in upper Teviotdale. He was also surety for 2 of his tenants in 1586, Will in Dodburn and his brother Archie; however, the fines were not paid and by 1590 he was 'put to the horn' (with a follow-up case before the Privy Council in 1602). In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. He is named in 1590/1 in a case brought against the Scottish Wardens and leaders on the Border, for failing to produce certain fugitives. In about 1590 he is listed among the landed men of the Borders. He is probably the 'Williame Ellet in Fellinesche' listed (along with his son Robert and many others) in the King's 'respite' of 1594 for the murder of Lord Maxwell at Dryfe Sands. He is mentioned in an indenture of 1594/5 between the Wardens, his case (whatever it was) being delayed. He may be one of the 2 Williams who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. He was one of the trustees for the young Robert (17th) of Redheugh appointed in about 1597. In 1598 there were complaints to the Privy Council by Sir James of Sandilands about raids on his property in which his name is listed; in a follow-up court case in 1600, Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch's agent denied responsiblity for him and his crimes. In 1598/9 there were complaints by the widow of James Douglas of Knightsridge against several of his 'brother's, tenants and servants' for reiving from 'Corsetburne' (in Lothian); this included 'Stottan Gib' and his brother John, Will in Falnash Mill, Archie of Muselee and his brother Alexander, and Adie Scott 'the Peck' and his son. He was accused of resetting the stolen cattle and failing to appear in court, was denounced as a rebel. Along with his son Robert, he signed a bond with Scott of Buccleuch in 1599. Also in 1599 he witnessed the bonds (signed at Branxholme) between Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and the Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddesdale. Additionally in 1599 he was listed among Scotts and others who were charged to find sureties for 'observing the King's peace'. In 1600 he was among leaders from the Borders who were ordered to attend a meeting at Falkland to discuss 'the present disordouris of the Bourdours'. In 1602 he signed the 'New General Band' along with other Border landlords. Also in 1602, he and his eldest son Robert were denounced as rebels for failing to appear before the Privy Council 'to give their advice for keeping good rule in the Borders'. The Crown Treasurer brought a case against him in 1602 for non-payment of £60 in fines as cautioner for Will in Dodburn and his brothers Archie and Sim, for reiving in 1586, with a horning in 1590; he was again denounced as a rebel and his goods escheated. He received 500 merks for redemption on the lands of Outersiderig with Walter Scott of Synton. He then purchased the farms of upper Ewesdale from the Earl of Home, specifically Mosspeebles, Over and Nether Woodend, Unthank, Fiddleton, Blackhall and Mosspaul; he forced out the former tenants. After Martin of Braidlie and Prickenhaugh was executed in 1607, he paid the 4000 reversion money to Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig and acquired the lands of Braidlie in the Barony of Hawick. In 1607 he was cautioner for John Elliot of Copshaw, who was found guilty of the murder of George Pringle of Torwoodlee; he had to pay the fine of 500 marks on the non-appearance of John of Copshaw. He had a charter of the lands of Arkleton (presumably purchased from the Armstrongs) in 1611. Also in 1611 he served as cautioner in Jedburgh for Gavin 'of the Schawis' and for the Laird of Foulshiels. Additionally he was part of an assize at the Justice Court on Jedburgh in 1611. He signed a bond in 1612 (along with several Scotts) for keeping the peace in the Borders. In 1618 he is referred to as 'William Ellote, called of Fallinasche in Braidlie', suggesting he had already passed Falnash to his eldest son; this is when he was accused by Walter Scott of Buccleuch of cutting down 60 alders from Gorrenberry, with Gilbert in Falnash Mill (possibly his brother) also accused of stealing timber. Not appearing before the Privy Council, he was denounced as a rebel. He had 4 sons: Robert of Falnash, J.P. in Roxburghshire who married Marion Scott; John of Arkleton, also called 'of Falnash', who married Ester Armstrong; Archibald, who is mentioned in 1595; and probably one other, who owned Unthank, and whose children were the Elliots of Meikledale, Mosspeeble, Unthank and Eweslees. William 'Will' (16th C.) tenant in Falnash Mill in 1598/9. He was listed among the 'brothers, tenants and servants' of William of Falnash who were complained about by Margaret, widow of James Douglas of Knightsridge, for stealing cattle from her lands of Corsetburn. He was 'Will Ellott in the Miln of Fallinesche'. William (d.c.1608) son of John of Burngrains. Listed (along with his brother Hob) among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. Along with Ninian, son of William of Fiddleton (although they are also confusingly listed the other way round, with his father being Will of Fiddleton) he was sentenced to execution in 1608 for killing one of the King's Guards while resisting arrest. The pair had been declared rebels some years earlier for crimes including theft and murder. William of Caveling (b.1572) 2nd son of William, 5th Laird of Horsleyhill. His mother was Elizabeth Douglas of Cavers. In 1592 he was passed over (in favour of Gavin Eliott of Stobs) as tutor to his nephew William of Horsleyhill because he was still too young. In 1599 he was described as indweller and Burgess of Peebles; his connection was through his uncle, Archibald Douglas, who was Parson in Peebles. He was served heir to his father in some lands in 1603, when he was described as a Burgess of Peebles. About this time he sold Caveling to Gavin Eliott of Stobs. In 1604 he bought (under wadset and reversion) the lands of Cruxton from Robert Scott of Thirlestane. He was listed in 1607 among Douglases and others who swore not to harm the Horsburghs. He may be the William 'called of Horsliehill' who was among the group of Scotts and others who attacked Selkirk Mill in 1608. Also in 1608 he rescued a man who was chased into his house in Peebles by a gang of his enemies. He was still living in 1610. He married Christian Chisholme. William of Gorrenberry (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1611 when he was one of the cautioners for 'Kirstie Ellot callit Hobis Kirstie'. Other cautioners included Robert of Redheugh, Archie of Clintwood, Martin's Hob and William of Princkinghaugh, some of whom were probably relatives. He was also witness in 1613 to the infeftment of the lands of Robert of Redheugh. It is unclear how he was related to the other Elliots of Gorrenberry or of Redheugh. William (16th/17th C.) son of Archie of Clintwood. He is listed among 5 Scotsmen delivered by Sir Walter Scott to the English Deputy Warden in 1597. His name is repeated in 1600, when the list of pledges for Liddesdale, delivered to the English Warden by Buccleuch consisted of him, William 'of Eskez' (possibly 'Hoscote', and probably his uncle, William of Braidlie and Dinlabyre) and Simon Armstrong of Whithaugh. He was described as 'young Elwood', also called 'the boye' when listed in 1598/9 as one of the Liddesdale prisoners in England. In 1600 (after the other 2 Liddesdale pledges had escaped from prison in York) he is described as son of 'an Ellwood called Martins Archie', making it clear that he was a grandson of Martin of Braidlie. William (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. He was recorded as 'Will Ellott in Burneheid, called Murth'. He was presumably related to other Elliots of Burnhead and may also have been related to Jock 'the Murt'. William 'Gled Will' (16th/17th C.) listed among men those who were fugitives for not appearing in a Borders Commissioners' court in Hawick in 1605. He is recorded as 'Gleyd Will'. William (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1617 being 'called of Cowshaw'. This may have been an error for Copshaw. Along with his eldest son Archie and servants Hob Elliot and a Crosier, he was arrested for stealing sheep and held in Jedburgh Jail. Andrew Riddell of that Ilk, John Riddell, heir apparent of Riddell and John Molle of that Ilk were appointed to a commission to try them. William (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1619 as brother to Robert of Redheugh when Robert Rutherford of Edgerston complained that he remained at large depsite being declared at the horn. He could be the same man as William of Hartsgarth, but it seems more likely he was from the next generation. William (16th/17th C.) son of Martin and Agnes Lorraine. In 1618 his mother granted him her half husbandland of lands in Lilliesleaf. He later deponed this land to Andrew Riddell, as confirmed in a service of heirs to Walter Riddell in 1702. William of Prickinghaugh (16th/17th C.) recorded as witness to the 1613 infeftment for Robert of Redheugh in his lands. It is unclear how he was related to Christie (son of 'Martin's Hob' of Prickinghaugh) who was declared a rebel in 1611. Also in 1611 he was one of the cautioners for 'Kirstie Ellot callit Hobis Kirstie', with others including Robert of Redheugh, William of Gorrenberry, Archie of Clintwood and Martin's Hob, some of whom were probably relatives. He was also recorded in 1618 among a large group of Elliots and others who John Scott in Newark complained attacked his farm at Foulshiels in Liddesdale, beating up one of his workers there; not appearing, the accused were denounced as rebels. William of Rig (16th/17th C.) 2nd son of Robert of Redheugh, 16th Chief and brother of Robert. He may have been raised partly by his step-father Gavin Eliott of Stobs. He was probably the brother of Robert of Redheugh who had a bond to appear at court in Jedburgh in 1611. He was witness to the infeftment of Robert of Redheugh in his lands in 1613. He may also have been known as 'of Hartsgarth'. He married Jean, daughter of Thomas Rutherford of Edgerston and Jean Eliott, co-heiress of Stobs. Their children were: Robert (d.bef. 1637), who succeeded; Francis (d.bef. 1699), related to the Elliots of Dinlabyre; and James (d.bef. 1699). He may be the William of Hartsgarth who died in 1613 and whose great-grandson William of Dinlabyre was 'Kene'. He was acquitted of charges at court in Jedburgh. He may have been related to Archie and Hob, both called 'Kene', recorded a few decades earlier. William 'Blackheid' (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1611. 2 Hendersons were accused in Jedburgh of several crimes, including the theft of 4 cows of his from the lands of Flatt. He may have been related to Airchie and Jock, who had the same nickname. William (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1618 as servitor to William Middlemas, younger of Lilliesleaf. Along with Middlemases and others, he was accused of harassing and attacking George Turnbull of Belses and his farm workers and was ordered to be imprisoned in Edinburgh Tolbooth. Archibald 'of Clintoun' (possibly Clintwood) was also involved. William 'Sweet Milk' (d.1627) from the Rule valley, said to be a minstrel. He is cited for immorality as 'William Sweet Milk' in the Cavers Parish records in 1623 and along with Robert Scott and Helen Langlands in 1624. He was killed at Newmill in a duel by William Henderson from Priesthaugh, as immortalised in the song 'Rattlin Roarin Willie'. Although the basis of the story was traditional, the Jedburgh Presbytery records describe his 'fearful and cruell slaughter' and the excommunication of his assailant. A thorn bush near the spot was called 'Milksweet Willie's Thorn', and was still pointed out in the early 1800s. It is unclear to which branch of the Elliots he belonged, however, his murderer is said to have been rooted out by Gilbert Eliott of Stobs and young Elliot of Falnash (either of whom may have been a distant relative). It is possible he was related to 'Dandie Ellot called Sweet Milk' whose name is recorded in association with complaints about raids into England in 1598. William (16th/17th C.) 7th and last Laird of Horsleyhill, son of Robert and Agnes Scott. He was a minor when his father died in 1592, with his grand-uncle Gavin of Stobs appointed as his tutor. In 1606 curators were appointed to manage his affairs and in 1607 they requested from the Chancery the writs and charters of Horsleyhill so that he could be served heir to his grandfather William. However, he sold Horsleyhill shortly afterwards to Gilbert Eliott of Stobs and was thereafter 'called of Horsleyhill', rather than being the Laird. He became a retainer of Robert Scott of Haining, who may have been related to his mother. In 1617 he was accused of attacking William Mitchellhill, a Burgess of Selkirk, apparently trying to rip his ears off, as well as half his beard, this after 20 days earlier having said he 'avowit to cause cutt the said complenairis luggis out of his head'; however, he was acquitted on assurance of 'his great oath'. In 1619 he was found guilty of attacking and stabbing William Turnbull in Philiphaugh, who had loaned a plough to Sarah Lough in Selkirk to till a piece of land that he had tried to get for himself; he was fined £40 and ordered to remain in Edinburgh until he found caution for 500 merks. He is probably also the 'Wm. Ellott, sometimes in Horslaw' who in 1623 was acquitted of the charge of stealing sheep from Clinthill. William 'Will' (16th/17th C.) listed among Liddisdale men declared as fugitives for not attending a court in Peebles in 1605. His nickname was given as 'Cauldfute'. William 'Laurie's Jock's Willie' (16th/17th C.) listed among men of Teviotdale declared as fugitives for not appearing before a court in Jedburgh in 1606. His name is recorded as 'Willie Ellott in Carlaverok, called Lowrey's Jok's Willie'. His father was therefore John and his grandfather 'Laurie' (or Lawrence). However, the designation 'Carlaverok' is confusing, since this is not in Teviotdale. William (16th/17th C.) brother of 'Dandie of Bowholmes'. In 1611 he was listed among Liddesdale men who did not appear at court in Jedburgh. William 'Dun Wullie' (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1618 as 'Dun Willie Ellott in Ailmuir' among fugitives listed at the Privy Council. He presumably lived at Alemoor. William (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1622 and 1623 being in 'Huntlaw'. John Nichol in Craikhope was caution for him at the Judiciary Court in Jedburgh. William 'Gib's Will' (17th C.) one of 3 men who were meant to carry out the murder of Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1624, as part of the ongoing feud between the 2 families. The other men were Gavin of Hillhouse and 'Gib Ellott, callit the Tutour', who may have been his father. All 3 later confessed. William (16th/17th C.) Bailie in Selkirk. In about 1618 he was listed among men who witnessed the illegal use of hagbuts and pistols. Probably the same William William 'Will' (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1618 among a large group of Elliots and others who John Scott in Newark complained attacked his farm at Foulshiels in Liddesdale. He is described being 'called of the Park', suggesting he was related to earlier Elliots of the Park; others accused of being involved include Elliot of Redheugh, Hartsgarth and Prickinghaugh. Not appearing, the accused were denounced as rebels. William (16th/17th C.) resident of Harden. He was listed among men who had illegally used hagbuts and pistols in Ettrick Forest in about 1618. in Selkirk was involved in 1619 with a caution not to harm him and his family. He was 'procurator' for James Melrose in a land transaction in 1629. His brother James was one of the witnesses. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Jean Murray and their children included: Robert (b.1634); Jean (b.1636); Marie (b.1640); and William (b.1643). William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Agnes Stoddart and their children included: High (b.1635); Gavin (b.1640); Robert (b.1642); and Bessie (b.1645). William (d.1637) eldest son of Robert, he is described as 'Younger of Falnash'. In 1635 he married Margaret, daughter of Archibald Maxwell of Cowhill. Their daughter Margaret was christened in Hawick 2 years later. His wife was granted the liferent of Outerside and an annual rent of 200 merks from 'Falnesche, Caulschaw and Tandilneir'. He was dead within a few months of the baptism of his daughter. His wife may have remarried a Haswell, since Margaret Haswell held the liferent of Outerside in 1643. Falnash was inherited by his brother Archibald. William (d.bef. 1638) youngest son of Gavin of Brugh. He was probably born locally, but became Provost of Peebles, and founded the Peebles branch of the family. He was served heir to his father in 1603. He was Provost of Peebles in 1620 in a case before the Privy Council and in 1622 when he served on an assize at the Court of Judiciary in Dumfries. He married Mary, daughter of John Ker of Faldonside and their children were: Lillian (d.1638); Gavin, who witnessed a tack for his brother in 1643; and Harry, who was Parson at Bedrule. He is sometimes suggested (e.g. by Tancred) to have instead been son of William Eliott of Stobs. His great-grandson, Sir John was physician to the Prince of Wales and was created a baronet in 1778. William (16th/17th C.) recorded being 'callit of Peill' in 1622 when 2 men were accused of stealing sheep from his lands at Brighousecleuchhead. William (16th/17th C.) recorded being 'in Heisches' in 1623, when he was entered at the Judicial Court. His cautioners were Gilbert Eliott of Craigend and Archie of Bowholm. However, it is unclear where 'Heisches' may have been. William (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1623 being 'callit of ye Mylne, in Cassiltoune', presumably meaning he was tenant in Castleton Mill. A man was found guilty of stealing a clock from him. William 'Will' (16th/17th C.) son of Thomas of Bonjedward. In 1623 along with George Johnstone in Essenside he was found guilty of stealing a horse from Walter Scott of Burnfoot-on-Ale. He was probably executed as a result (and may have also been referred to as son of 'Thome of Fawsyde'). William (17th C.) possessor of the lands of Hermitage in 1632. He may have been ancestor of the later Elliots of Hermitage. William (17th C.) recorded as being 'called of the Boulex' when he was listed among a large number of Borderers who were declared fugitives in 1642. It is unclear where the place name might have been, but many of the men he is listed with were from the Liddesdale area. William (17th C.) described as 'William Ellot, tailor in Cavers' in a Hawick magistrates case of 1642, when Douglas of Cavers' servant accused him and several other people of stealing his wallet in Hawick. William (17th C.) from Ashkirk, he married Mary Taylor. Their children included James (b.1651), with baptismal witnesses John and William Welsh. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His wife was Agnes Elliot and their son Francis was born in 1653. William of Mosspeeble (17th C.) 2nd son of an unknown Elliot, probably owner of Unthank. His grandfather was William of Falnash. He married Mary, daughter of John Carmichael, Laird of Castlehope. They had 2 sons: Robert of Mosspeeble, who died unmarried; and John of Castlehope and Billhope. William (17th C.) recorded in 1662/3 as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for Canonbie and Morton, and in 1663–70 for Hawick, Hassendean and Eckford. He is probably the same as one of the other Williams. William of Binks and Harwood (d.1662) eldest son of Simon of the Binks. In 1637 he bought the lands of Harwood, including Tythehouse and Appotside from Edward Lorraine (with the permission of Gilbert Eliott, who had the lands in wadset). However, his father was listed as owner in 1643. Thus, although he is sometimes referred to as the 1st Elliot Laird of Harwood, this may really have technically been his father Simon. He later sold Binks to John Elliot of Burnmouth. He may be the William 'in Harret' who acted as surety for Janet Scott (wife of John Glendinning, 'Sowtail') in 1644, when she promised to appear before the Justice-General on a charge of witchcraft. He is listed in a contract for the vicarage teinds of Hobkirk Parish in 1648 and discharge of 1649. He was also the William 'of the Burnmouth, indweller in Liddesdale' who had a loan discharged in 1653. In 1654 he purchased a wadset of Appotside from Edward Lorraine and his son Walter; his signature was written by the notary because he could not write himself. He purchased Appotside outright in 1656 and was confirmed in his charters of Harwood, Tythehouse and Appotside by his superior, Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs. He (along with his son John) purchased lands at Baxtonlees near Peel in 1659 from Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs. After the Restoration both he and his brother Robert were fined £1,200 for supporting the Commonwealth. He was recorded paying £433 6s 8d on the Land Tax Rolls in about 1663. He married Christian Greenlaw in 1627 and in 1659 gave her a sasine of 'liferent' of Appotside (presumably as part of the marriage contract); he was then described as 'of Apitsyde'. His children were: Simon of the Binks and Swinside (although there is some confusion between him and his son William); Henry (or 'Harry'), who succeeded to Harwood; Jean, the eldest daughter; Margaret, who married William Elliot of Philhope; Jean (also called 'Jennet'), the youngest daughter); and John of the Binks and later of Baxtonlees or Peel. George may have been another son, who died about 1666. He was 'indweller in Burnmouth', although described as 'of Harwood', when he died. His testament and inventory of goods are in the National Archives. In 1665 'Harie Elliot, son-in-law' is recorded as an overseer of William of Binks, who may have been him (if the date is correct). William of Unthank (d.1670s) probably 3rd son of the 4th son (whose first name is unrecorded) of William of Falnash, his brothers being Adam of Meikledale, William of Mosspeeble and Ninian of Eweslees. He 'flitted from Eweshead' in 1642' and probably moved to Gorrenberry. He is recorded in 1660 when he was guardian to the 2 grandsons of his brother Ninian in Eweslees. He is referred to as 'called Unthank' in a list of debtors in the last testament of William Elliot of Harwood and Binks in 1662. He was also among the men fined (£1800) after the Restoration in 1662, presumably meaning that he acted against the King in the Civil War. In 1670, along with Simon of the Binks and Swinside, and his own son Adam, he purchased Lymiecleuch (including Corriesike, Langbyre and Giddenscleuch) from William Eliott, younger of Stobs. He is probably the William who paid the land tax for half of Lymiecleuch in 1678 (the other half being paid by Sir William Eliott of Stobs). His children included: Robert, who died unmarried; Adam of Mosspeeble and Lymiecleuch; William of Penchrise; and Walter of Carewoodrig. Rev. William (c.1617–85) from Borthwickshiels, son of Robert. He graduated from St. Andrews University in 1637 and became minister at Yarrow in 1641. In 1654 he was one of the local men who signed an attestation about the 'carriage and deportment of the deceased Francis Earl of Buccleuch'; this was part of efforts to have the fines reduced on the Buccleuch estate that had been imposed by Cromwell for the Earl supporting King Charles. He was confined to his parish in 1662 for refusing to conform to Episcopacy. However, he was 'indulged' (i.e. allowed to resume his duties) in 1679 for about a year. In 1664 he had a bond with Sir William Scott of Harden (his father and grandfather having had close connectons with the Scotts of Harden). When he died he had debts amounting to £8,333 13s 4d (Scots probably), with his brother Thomas in Borthwickshiels becoming his executor. His will is recorded in 1686. William of Lymiecleuch (17th C.) local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, according to James Wilson. He may have been a son of Ninian of Eweslees, or else was son of William of Unthank and the same as William of Penchrise (or perhaps was William of Unthank himself). William of Penchrise (17th C.) son of William of Unthank, he was the first Elliot at Penchrise. In 1680 he was called as a witness in the trial of local Covenanters, but did not appear. Also in 1680 he was charged with being at a conventicle given by the ousted Abbotrule minister James Ker of Grange; he was fined £25 and set free after payng it. He may have been the same William (along with Robert) of Lymiecleuch and Penchrise who was involved in a court case in 1695 over not paying a bond due to John Riddell of Haining; not appearing, their lands were yielded to their guarantor, Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs. He married Bessie Grieve, who died in 1683 (her will being recorded in 1684). Their children included: William of Penchrise, who married Janet Elliot of Thorlieshope; Henry in Riccarton, who married Isobel, daughter of John Elliot in Dinlees; John in Leahaugh, who married Mary Elliot; Ninian in Ruecastle, who married Agnes Paterson; Adam in Catlowdie, who married Mary Irving; Jean, who married Robert Grieve in Teindside; and Eupham, mentioned in 1683. William of Straghan (17th C.) said to be a direct descendant of the Eliotts of Stobs, he was the progenitor of the County Fermanagh branch. He was a Lieutenant in the army, who defended Ballyshannon and fought under William III at the Battle of the Boyne. He married his cousin, Mary, daughter of William Cairnes of Killyfaddy. William of Bewlie, 1st Laird of Borthwickbrae (b.1658), eldest son of Thomas of Bewlie, who was tenant in Borthwickshiels. His mother was Margaret Scott from Chamberlain Newton. He could be the William who (along with Thomas) witnessed a baptism for James Murray, herd at Borthwickshiels in 1683. He is probably also the William who witnessed baptisms for Patrick Riddell of Muselee and Marie Elliot (his sister) in 1682 and 1686. His connection to the local Scotts is mentioned by Scott of Satchells, who says of the Elliots, 'The Rest of their Pedegree, I know them not, Except Bewly and Muckledean that's related to Scot'; Satchells also writes 'And good William Elliot of Bewly, he drives up the rear; The Rear's the second place, if souldiers be but stout, He is sure to have the Van, if the word be face about'. He may be the William who was taxed for 4 hearths at Borthwickshiels in 1694 (assuming he kept his father's tenancy of the farm there). It is said that he wanted to buy Horsleyhill, but since it was not for sale, he instead purchased Borthwickbrae. He could be the William 'of Belvie' who in 1696 directed the Bailies of Selkirk to incarcerate William from Castleton. He received a Crown Charter for Borthwickbrae in 1698. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690, 1695 and 1704. He was involved in a bonds with Henry Elliot of Harwood in 1692 and with Sir William Scott of Harden in 1694. He contributed £200 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. He was one of the 'curators' for Alexander Scott of Synton. Scott of Satchells describes him as a good farmer ('kept the sheep upon the Down') and a generous supporter of the poor ('was the Poors relief, for he fed and clad them both with Flesh and Fleece'), in contrast to his cousin James of Bridgehaugh. He was still 'of Bewlie' in 1699 when he complained about non-payment by Gilbert 'of the Park' and his son William in Castleton. In 1701 he became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh, gratis. In 1686 he married Isobel, daughter of William Scott of Synton and sister of John

Scott of Synton. He may also have married a second time, but that name is unknown. He had 16 children, 9 of whom survived: Thomas (b.1687), who must have died young; Jean (b.1688), who in 1705 married Gideon Scott of Newhouse, brother of the Laird of Woll; William (1689–1756), who succeeded to the Borthwickbrae Lairdship; Francis, who became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1710; Mary, who in 1715 married Gideon Burnet in Whitehope; Christian (b.1697), who married Robert Elliot of Rig (probably Caerlenrig) in 1721; Anne (b.1704), who married Thomas Elliot, minister of Kirkton and Cavers; Susanna (b.1704); and Margaret, who married William Borthwick in Glendinning. Isobel (or 'Tibby', b.1708) may have been his youngest daughter and married Walter Elliot of Ormiston – 'William Elliot of Belie, ye understand the man, He's married with the sister of Scot of Sinton, Who him callumniats with a mis-report, I'le say he is a Liar in his Throat' [CWS]. William of Philhope (17th C.) eldest son of Archibald of Philhope. He married Margaret Elliot of the Binks and Harwood in 1663. He is recorded in the 1678 Land Tax Rolls as 'William Elliot of philip for braidlie', paying the tax for land valued at £216 in Hawick Parish. He was also listed paying tax on land valued at £400 in Selkirkshire in 1678; he was recorded being 'of phillip' and 'hes bene thretie [although hard to read] yeires bypast residenter in the land'. He was 'Wm Elliott of Phillip' on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. In 1700 his wife assigned to him the remainder of the money bequeathed to her by her mother. His son William was a witness to this document of 1700. He was probably succeeded by William, although father and son are hard to separate in records. He may have been the Elliot of Philhope who entered into a teind agreement with the curators of the Duke of Buccleuch in the late 1660s. William (17th C.) listed as son of deceased William of Philhope, son-in-law of William of Binks, when he was in the testament for the deceased George, son of William of Binks. He was recorded in a list of landowners and tenants of Hassendean Parish in 1666. He was one of the heritors in support of the suppression of Hassendean Parish in favour of Roberton. There is a 'letter of horning' against him (and Henry Elliot of Harwood) by Walter Scott, called Westport in 1676. His son Arthur became an apprentice skinner in Edinburgh in 1694. And possibly the same Arthur married Mary Douglas in Edinburgh in 1721, by which time William is recorded as deceased. Another son James became a tanner's apprentice in Edinburgh, also in 1694. William (17th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1669 fellow merchant Samuel Newbie was convicted of striking him in the head with his sword 'to ye effusion of his blood, in great quantity' and wounding him in the face with a bridle. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick recorded in 1693. The Bailie of Regality, William Scott, was in his house sorting out some financial business between John Hardie and Walter Ruecastle, when he was assaulted by Walter Ruecastle. He must have been an innkeeper, or some prominent townsman. He could be the William of the Sandbed listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He may be the William recorded in the Sandbed in 1702 when he witnessed baptisms in Hawick for shoemaker George Allan and for Alexander Ogilvie in 1708 and again for shoemaker George Allan in 1709. Probably the same William, married to Agnes Allan had children baptised in Hawick, including: Margaret (b.1685); and William (b.1687). The witnesses in 1685 were Robert Allan and James Deans. William of Dinlabyre (d.1693) son of William of Braidlie and Mary Scott, daughter of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. However, he seems to have lived rather late in the century for a man whose grandfather is meant to have died in 1607, suggesting that there may be some confusion here. He was a local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, and appears to have been the most prominent Elliot in Liddesdale in the latter half of the 17th century (after the death of the last Robert of Redheugh). He may be the William 'of Dunliebyre' whose lands in Castleton Parish were valued at £400 in 1643; if this was not him it must have been an earlier relative. He was 'of Dunlybyre' in a deed of 1663. In 1667 he was 'now of Dinlabyre' when served heir to his great-grandfather William (who died in 1613), in the lands of Killoley, Bighouse, Heuchhousebrae, Dinlabyre, Easter Flicht, 'Hie-Eshies' and Burnfoot in Liddesdale; in 1691 he appears to have been served again as heir to his great-grandfather William of Hartshaugh in 4 quarters of the lands of Killoley, Brighouse and Heuchhousebrae (called the lands of Dinlabyre), as well as Easter Flicht, 'Hydashes' and Burnfoot. He is probably the William (transcribed as 'of Dunlilerpies') who paid tax on £400 of land in Castleton Parish in 1663. In 1672 he was appointed one of the Justiciars for the Borders (for apprehending mosstroopers). He signed the bond of provision for fulfillment of Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs marriage contract in 1677. He paid the land tax on £400 in Castleton Parish in 1678. He was made a Justice of the Peace in 1680. He was said to be one of the local lairds who persecuted Covenanters. A carved stone lintel bearing his initials and the date 1682 is built into a rockery at Dinlabyre and an earlier one dated 1668 might suggest when he had the house rebuilt. Walter Scott of Satchells dedicated part of his 'post'ral' to him in 1688. In 1691 he was served heir to his grandfather. He firstly married a sister of Archibald, Lord Rutherford and secondly in 1686 married Margaret Scott. His children included: Robert, who probably sold Dinlabyre; Thomas; Henry; Gilbert, apprenticed to a periwig-maker in 1692; and Christian. His testament is recorded in 1693. William of Caerlenrig (17th C.) local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, according to James Wilson. William (17th C.) tenant in Carewoodrig. He is recorded being 'in Carritridge' in 1685 among local men who were accused of frequenting conventicles and took 'the Test'. William of Meikledale (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of Adam of Meikledale. He succeeded on the death of his brother Andrew (who was eldest son of Adam with his 2nd wife, Janet Scott) in 1682. He was served 'heir of tailzie' to his 'brother german' (meaning that they had the same mother as well as father) Andrew's lands of Meikledale and Meikledalehope. In 1696 he sold (by 'wadsett and reversion') Meikledale to his nephew William, 3rd son of Walter of Arkleton. He married Barbara Forrester and also possibly a Scott of Merrylaw. His children included Adam (who died at Hartside in 1760) and Lucy. He is said to have died in reduced circumstances, leaving his children unprovided for. He was still alive in 1698. William (17th C.) indweller in Burnmouth in Liddesdale. In 1687 he had 26 shillings stolen from his purse at Hawick fair by Andrew Wilson 'ane vagrant persone alleadging he was born in the toune of Liddesdale. William (17th C.) recorded being '[writer?] at Casseltoune' when he was incarcerated in Selkirk at the insistence of William 'of Belvie' [possibly Bewlie] for non-payment of annual rents. William (17th C.) recorded as resident at Pinglehole in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) tenant in Stripshielden in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. William (17th C.) tenant in Powisholm in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. William (17th C.) resident at Gillfoot in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. William (17th C.) resident at Westburnflat in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax records of 1694. William (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. He could be the merchant who witnessed a baptism (along with merchant Robert Brown) for weaver Adam Brown in 1700. William (17th C.) tenant in 'outer slaidhills' according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) resident at Monk's Croft (in Hassendean Parish) according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to John who was also listed there. William of Arkleton (1665–1721) 3rd son of Walter of Arkleton, he succeeded to the estate after his father disinherited his older brothers. In 1700 he had a Crown Charter for the lands of Meikledale and Meikledalehope, which he purchased from his uncle William of Meikledale. In 1702 along with his brother Adam, he gave a bond of 2,000 merks to Alexander Orrock, which formed part of the Orrock Bequest for the Grammar School. In 1707 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for his brother Adam 'of arcleton att harwood'. He could be the William of 'Eckleton' recorded in 1719 in a dispute with John Johnstone. In 1692 he married Anne, youngest daughter of Robert (or perhaps Andrew) Ainslie of Jedburgh and she died in 1733 (with her will recorded in the Commissariot of Dumfries); her dowry involved Meikledale. His children included: Katherine (b.1697), who married David Laing of Westerkirk, secondly Charles Telfer minister of Hawick and thirdly Robert Elliot of Fenwick; William (b.1700), who died unmarried; Adam (b.1702), who succeeded and married Christian of Thorlieshope; and Christian (1704–23). He is buried in Ewes Kirkyard. His will is recorded in the Commissariot of Dumfries in 1722 and 1724. William (17th/18th C.) son of Gilbert 'of the Park'. In 1699 there was a complaint of non-payment by William of Bewlie against him and his father. He was 'in Castletoun' with an additional word that may be 'waiter'. William of Cooms (d.1714) younger son of Robert of Black Tarras (or perhaps the eldest son, it is not clear). He inherited Cooms (half of Black Tarras) from his father. He was declared bankrupt in 1690, but receive a Crown charter of Cooms in 1708 (perhaps being enabled to keep Cooms because his brother-in-law purchased Lodgegill from his brother Simon). He married Helen, sister of William of Thorlieshope. Their children included: John (b.1709), who married Agnes, daughter of Robert Mader of Greenhill; a second son, whose name is unknown; Henry in Sorbietrees, who married Christian Scott of Falnash; and Simon. William (17th/18th C.) tenant in 'Adderstown' (probably Adderstoneshiel) in Cavers Parish. His children included: an unnamed child (b.1698); Jean (b.1701); Frances (b.1704); and Margaret (b.1705). In 1708 he was listed being in 'Etherstonesheils' when his daughter Betty was baptised. William of Wells, 'the Lace-man' (c.1670–1728) descendant of the Elliots of Brugh, he was eldest son of John and Margaret Johnstone, who lived at Southfield and are both buried in Hawick. It is also speculated that he derived from an illegitimate son of Gavin of Brugh, but these generations are quite uncertain. He was an apprentice to merchant Patrick Johnstone, but it is unclear where this was (since there is no record of it in Edinburgh). Johnstone seems likely to have been a relative of his mother and was a Bailie in Edinburgh (perhaps the Patrick who was later Provost of Edinburgh). In 1692 he became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh and was by that time already a merchant in London. He was a successful dealer in gold and silver lace, hence his nickname 'the Lace-man', and was also described as the King's tailor in London (but this could be local hyperbole). He owned an estate in Reigate in Surrey. He is referred to as 'of Brugh and Wells', having purchased the estate of Wells in 1706 from Thomas Rutherford; this was on the advice of his son-in-law (Gilbert Eliott), who owned neighbouring farms. He had Wells erected into a barony in 1707 and registered his arms in 1711. He is surely the same Mr. Elliot, born and educated at Nether Southfield, who is recorded as supplying Hawick Parish with a new mort-cloth in 1720. About 1720 he also purchased the estate of Haddon (near Kelso) from Sir Gilbert Eliott (it is said, to help him financially). Further Borders purchases included Ormiston, Hunthill and Scraesburgh. Despite his local lands and importance, he lived mainly in London, visiting the Borders seldom and briefly. He is said to have lost money in the South Sea Bubble around 1720. He worked to have his son-in-law pardoned after he had to flee following the death of Col. Stewart of Stewartfield in 1726. He spent £1000 setting up his son in business in London, and also left 'many thousands of pounds' for the grandchildren of Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs, his son-in-law. He married Eleanor, whose last name is not known, and she died in 1745; she may be the 'Ellenor Tankard' who married William Elliot in London in 1682. Their children included: William, who succeeded and became a Colonel; John, whose son inherited Wells; Eleanor (d.1728), who married Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs; Charlotte (d.1753), who married Maj.-Gen. Roger Eliot (of the St. Germains family), Governor of Gibraltar, and secondly married a Mr. Burroughs; Arabella, who married John Bishop and had a son Elliot Bishop; and Margaret, who married Jonathan Waggaman. He left a sizeable fortune when he died. When he witnessed his daughter Eleanor's marriage contract in 1702 it was also signed by John Elliot, tailor of London, who must have been a relative, possibly his son. Portraits of him and his wife, and of his daughter Lady Eliott, once hung in Wells House. His will was made at St. Martin in the Fields, and describes his surviving family, as well as mentioning a miniature portrait of his painted by Mr. Harle. He was buried in the Dissenter Burial ground at Bunhill Fields. An inventory of Wells House, drawn up for his son in the second quarter of the 18th century, includes portraits of him and his wife, as well as his daughter, Eleanor. William of Swinside (17th/18th C.) eldest son of Simon and grandson of William of the Binks and Harwood. He received a charter of Swinside during his father's lifetime in 1674. He could be the man mentioned by Scott of Satchells in 1688 as 'To see William Elliot of Swin-side, it is my full desire', as well as 'Therefore no Shepherd Swain my Muse will e're deride, And far less William Elliot the good Laird of Swoonside, Since thou art a worthy and a lovely one, Not like Envy, all consum'd to Skin and Bone'. Satchells dedicates this part of his 'Post'ral' to William, uncle to Sir William Eliott of Stobs, who is (confusingly) a different William. He was witness to the marriage contract of a daughter of Henry Elliot of Harwood in 1692. He was 'younger of Swinside' in 1698 when he was on the Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire, but just 'of Swinside' when listed as one of the heritors of Roxburghshire who petitioned Parliament in 1700. He was also a Commissioner of Supply in 1704. Sometime before 1702 he married Barbara, eldest daughter of Thomas Rutherford of Wells. She died by 1722 and he remarried, probably to Elizabeth McClean. In 1730 he purchased Sharpitlaw in Kelso Parish, which he conveyed to his son Robert, retaining liferent for himself. He had 9 children: William of Swinside (b.1701); Thomas (b.1703); Sussana (b.1705); John (b.1706); Adam (b.1709); Elizabeth; Walter; George; and Robert of Sharpitlaw. Note that Tancred's history places him as the son of William of the Binks and Harwood, rather than the grandson. A document of 1707 lists William 'younger of Swinsyde', so it is also possible that there was an additional generation. Gideon, son of William of Swinside, became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1736, and was probably of this generation also. William (1661/2–1731) tenant in Whithaugh and Braidlie. He was eldest son of John of Castlehope and Billhope and descended from the Elliots of Falnash. Around 1730 he bought Whithaugh for his 1st son and Redheugh for his 2nd son. He married Isabella (c.1680–1769), daughter of Scott of Falnash (perhaps Gideon Scott, who would be the right generation, or his brother Robert). Their children included: John of Whithaugh (c.1702–78), who married Margaret, daughter of Robert Scott of Gorrenberry; Robert of Redheugh (1709–93), who married Margaret Beattie; and William in Braidlie (1711–71), who died unmarried. Note that the dates of his birth and death are very uncertain, with some sources suggesting he died in 1767, aged 89. He and his wife were buried at Hermitage Chapel. William (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of James of Redheugh and brother of Robert of Larriston. He was grandson of 'Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters'. He will was proved in 1694. According to a family pedigree of about 1704 he 'went away to be a horner'. William of Penchrise (17th/18th C.) son of William of Penchrise and Bessie Grieve. His siblings included Henry in Riccarton, John in Leahaugh, Ninian in Ruecastle, Adam in Catlowdie and Jean (wife of Robert Grieve in Teindside). He is probably the William of Penchrise who was imprisoned and fined for attending a field conventicle at Abbotrule, probably in about 1680. He married Jane (or Janet), daughter of John Elliot of Thorlieshope. Their children included: Gilbert of Mount; John; Walter; James in Millholm; William in Selkirk, who married Marion Elliot; and Adam in Dykeraw. He may also be father of Thomas, who was born in Cavers Parish in 1699. Note that information about this family seems uncertain. William (17th/18th C.) younger son of Adam in Dykeraw, he was tenant farmer in Millbunholm. He is said to have firstly married a Miss Henderson and secondly married Marion Nixon, with whom he had a son William in Dykeraw. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His children included: Beatrix (b.1707); Agnes (b.1710); and Dand (b.1714). William 1st Laird of Wolfelee (1688–1768) second son of Thomas of Oakwood Mill and grandson of Thomas of Borthwickshiels, with his mother being Jean Inglis. He was a lawyer in Edinburgh, being sent there by his father, although it is said he did not really settle down to a serious business life until his marriage. He was apprenticed to Andrew Haliburton, W.S. and his own law office was in the Lawnmarket, although later he also had an office in Selkirk (with receipts recorded with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1729, 1733 and probably 1744). He dealt with legal business for Scott of Harden for several decades. He purchased the estate of Wolfelee in 1730 (from his distant relatives, the Eliotts of Stobs), although it is said that he seldom stayed there, except when his legal business took him to the area. He sold off the Stonedge part to his future father-in-law. His estate was valued at £1233 6s 8d in the 1740s. In 1751 he bought several neighbouring properties from William Kerr of Abbotrule, as well as half of Kirknowe from Richard Mair. And in 1757 he and his son Cornelius bought 'Forkings of Unthank', 'Eyelee', the 'old Glebe of Hobkirk' and the 'Cleugh or back brae of Unthank' from Thomas Scott of Stonedge. He became a Burgess and Guild Brother of Edinburgh, gratis 'for good services', in 1753. He was on the panel for the inheritance of the lands of Scott of Whitehaugh in 1753. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. In 1722 he married Helen, daughter of Robert Elliot of Midlem Mill and Elizabeth Elliot of Harwood. In 1727 he secondly married Margaret, daughter of William Scott of Stonedge, and she died only 3 years later. In 1732 he lastly married Margaret, daughter of Adam Ogilvie of Hartwoodmyres, and she died in 1796; there was a portrait painted of her. His children were: Thomas (b.1723, by his 1st marriage), a doctor who pre-deceased his father; Elizabeth (also by his 1st marriage), who married William Ogilvie of Hartwoodmyres, her father's brother-in-law; Cornelius (1733–1821), who succeeded to Wolfelee; Adam (1740–1804), who married Rose Leonardi, worked in Danzig, and died on the Isle of Wight; Thomas, who died in infancy; Robert, merchant in Amsterdam, who bought Pinnaclehill, Kelso; Samuel, merchant in Antigua; Janet (or Jean), married Maj. Henry Balfour of Pilrig, Leith; and Helen, married Capt. Robert Davidson of Pinnaclehill. Not known as a great land improver, he nevertheless purchased several Border estates, becoming quite wealthy in later life. He was a friend of the Grieves of Branxholme Park, often staying there. He is said to have been tall and handsome. He was healthy and working up until the day he died. William (17th/18th C.) son of John in Harden and grandson of Adam in Dykeraw. He was tenant in 'Hole', which is probably the same as 'Hollows'. His children included William, John and Isabel. William of Harwood (d.c.1736) 3rd Laird (although some say he was 4th), eldest son and successor to his father Henry. He is recorded in bonds of 1693 and 1694 as the eldest lawful son of Henry and in 1697 as 'younger of Harret'. In 1698 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire as 'younger of Harrow'. His father assigned the lands of Harwood, Appotside and Tythehouse to him, suggesting he took over financial control of the family estates, although his father appears to have lived for several years afterwards. He was just 'of Harwood' in 1700 when he was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament. He is listed in 1704 as one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire. He married Jean (or Jane), eldest daughter of Walter Scott of Todrig by postnuptial contract in 1700. The witnesses (probably all relatives) were Robert of Midlem Mill, Henry in Hudshouse and his own brothers Walter, John and Henry. They had 10 children: Henry (1700–84), who succeeded; Thomas and John, who died young; Robert, 'Captain', whose son William became Laird of Harwood; Elizabeth, who married William Scott of Milsington; Jean (1709/10–74), who married William Elliot of Lodgegill and Tarras; Marion (or 'Mary'), who married John Scott of Weens; and Margaret, Christian and Janet, who all died unmarried (Janet in her 90th year). It is unclear when he succeeded to his father, but certainly by late 1707, when he was involved in the discharge of a bond along with Walter Scott of Todrig (his father-in-law). He had a bond of provision for his children in 1720, updated in 1726. He had a reputation for being eccentric (or perhaps 'of weak intellect') and for not seeing eye to eye with his son and heir, Henry. In 1731 they both ran horses in the annual race held near Hartshaugh, and he tricked his son by buying an old racehorse from Newcastle, which won at a canter; it is said that the cheers could be heard across the Rule valley. He let much of the Harwood estate to James Pott and his brothers, provoking his son into appealing to the Court of Session, and having him placed under trust, with only a small annuity. This 'Bond of Interdiction' was in 1731 and to last 21 years. The appointed trustees were Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs, Robert Elliot of Midlem Mill, Thomas Scott of Todrig (his brother-in-law), Henry (his son) and Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto. He was essentially forced to resign his lands to his son in 1733. His wife had a contract in 1736 restricting her 'liferent' and handing over the mansion house of Harwood to her son Henry. William of Thorlieshope and Overton (17th/18th C.) eldest son of John of Thorlieshope. His father settled on him several lands, including 'Isgill'. In 1690 Simon of Lodgegill and his brother William of Cooms were declared bankrupt, and he was awarded Lodgegill, which he settled on his own brother Henry. In 1698 he acquired Blackhall and Overton from his father-in-law (Andrew Ainslie), and had a crown charter for these lands. He was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament in 1700 and was appointed Commissioner of Supply in Roxburghshire in 1704. He could be the Laird of Thorlieshope whose Chaplain, Mr. Tait, was recorded preaching in Hawick in 1721. He forced his cousin's son Adam to sell Meikledale in 1725 to pay off debts. In 1729 he entailed all his lands on his eldest son William. In 1682 he married Christian, eldest daughter of Andrew Ainslie of Blackhall (who had been Provost of Jedburgh). They had at least 10 children, including: William of Thorlieshope and Overton (b.1694), whose 2nd wife was Margaret, daughter and heiress of Arthur Elliot of Harwood; John; Robert; Walter (b.1701); Elizabeth (b.1702); James (b.1704); Walter (again), described as 5th son; Helen, who married William Mather of Greenhill; Christian, who married Adam of Arkleton; Cecile (b.1706), who married William Hall, tenant in Hyndhope; and Andrew (b.1707), tenant in Edgerston Tofts. He moved to Oxnam Parish and is buried there. William (17th/18th C.) cottar in Ashkirk. He married Mary Ker and their son Thomas was baptised in 1715. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1719 he married 'Jesobel' Wilson, who was also from Roberton. Perhaps the same William is recorded at Mabonlaw in 1721 when his son Walter was baptised and in 1726 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. He may be the William at Whitecleughside whose son Walter was baptised in 1727. Either he or a different William was recorded at Alemoor in 1721 when his son James was baptised. William (17th/18th C.) writer in Edinburgh who acted as agent for the Burgh of Selkirk. In 1724 he was paid by Selkirk for researching the town's erection as a regality. In 1733 he was paid for inserting an advertisement for Selkirk Races in an Edinburgh newspaper. He may be the 'younger writer in Edinburgh' in a case with the Burgh of Selkirk. Probably the same writer in Edinburgh had a receipt for salary from the Burgh of Selkirk in 1742 and further receipts for legal work in 1743 (including borrowing the charter of 1449 to establish the establishment of a court of regality in Selkirk), 1745 (including a dispute with Douglas over Selkirk's right to a market). He may be the William also recorded in discharges with the Burgh of Selkirk in the 1750s. He is probably from one of the local Elliot families and may be the same as William of Wolfelee. William (1689–1756) 2nd Laird of Borthwickbrae, eldest son of William and Isobel Scott. In 1708 he was 'younger' when he was listed as one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire. He is probably the Elliot of Borthwickbrae who in 1715 and 1716 witnessed baptisms for Alexander Scott of Synton (his brother-in-law). In 1721 he leased the west end of Branxholme Muir from the Scotts of Buccleuch for 21 years. Little else is known about him. In 1706 he married Margaret (probably his cousin), daughter of John Scott of Synton, and they had 14 children (mostly baptised in Roberton): William (b.1706), christened at Roberton, but died at sea; Margaret (b.1707), who married Thomas Scott of Wauchope, who later purchased part of the Borthwickbrae estate; John (1711–92), who succeeded to Borthwickbrae; Magdalene (b.1713), who married Walter Grieve of Branxholme Park; Elizabeth (b.1716), who died unmarried in 1809, aged 92 (90 in the Parish Register); Jean (b.1718), who married Thomas Borthwick in Shaws; Alexander (b.1720); Mary (b.1722); Christian (b.1724); Thomas (b.1726); Gilbert (b.1728), who probably died young; Ann (b.1729), who married Thomas Elliot, minister of Kirkton and Cavers in 1760; Gilbert (b.1731), whose son Thomas purchased the Langlands estate; and Isobel (b.1731), who married Walter Elliot of Ormiston, one of the founders of Hawick's carpet-making trade. He must have been quite young when he married. A Roberton Parish record of 1707 relates to Isabel Riddel, who acted as midwife to his wife, the baby being delivered 'before the time'. William of Thorlieshope and Overton (1694–1744) eldest son of William of Thorlieshope. He lived in Oxnam Parish. His father settled on him the lands of Blackhall in 1698, Thorlieshope in 1711 and the remainder were entailed to him in 1729. In 1727 he acquired Demainholm from John of Demainholm and in 1731 he sold Meikledale to William Scott in Meikledale. In 1707 he had an illegitimate child with Isobel Minto, Charles. In 1711 he married his 2nd cousin Margaret, daughter and heiress of Arthur Elliot of Harwood. His wife was recorded as having the third most highly valued lands in Hawick Parish in 1710. They had 8 sons and 6 daughters, including: Robert, who succeeded; James (b.1726); Walter (b.1729); and Andrew (b.1737). Col. William of Brugh and Wells (1696–1764) eldest son of William of Brugh and Wells, 'the Lace-man'. He was guardian for his nephew Granville Elliott (son of his sister Charlotte and the deceased Roger Elliott) around 1720. He joined the Army in 1722 as Coronet in the Royal Regiment of Horse Guards and was then Captain in Churchill's Regiment of Dragoons. He was served as heir to his father in 1730. However, he spent most of his time at his estate near London, with Archibald Jerdan acting as his factor at Wells (and whose surviving rental book from 1728–60 gives a glimpse into the conditions of a Border laird at that time). At Wells he was keen on devloping the gardens, had a bowling green, kept dogs and also had fishing and hunting gear. His Border estates included Ormiston (in Eckford Parish) as well as Hadden (near Kelso). In 1737 he became a Major in the Grenadier Guards and was Lieutenant-Colonel by 1741. In 1743 he was at the Battle of Dettingen, where he served as A.D.C. and equerry to King George II. His lands in Sprouston were valued at over £3500 in the 1740s. His nephew George Augustus Eliott (later Lord Heathfield) and his cousin Capt. John Elliot (son of Gilbert of Winningtonrig) were officers under him. He resigned his army commission in 1746. He paid the window tax for 'Walls' in Hobkirk Parish in 1748. He was elected M.P. for Caine, Wiltshire in 1741 and held the seat until 1754. He went through a long legal battle with Lady Rutherford of Chatto over his father's purchase of Ormiston, this ending in 1753. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. It is said that he took a keen interest in the well-being of his Elliot relatives. In 1737 he married Lady Frances Nassau d'Auverquerque (apparently against her father's wishes), daughter of Henry, Earl of Grantham, and she died in 1772. They had one child, Henry (b.1741), who died in infancy. The family are buried at St. James', Westminster. He was succeeded by his nephew William Nassau. William (17th/18th C.) resident in Hawick. He married Margaret Balmer (or Bulmer) in Hawick Parish in 1725. Their children included: Helen (b.1728); and Archibald (b.1729), who may be the weaver who married Janet Aitken. William (17th/18th C.) carter in Hawick. In 1732 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Walter Scott 'wynhead'; the other witness was John (who was surely a relative) and the pair probably witnessed another baptism a few weeks earlier for George Deans. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded at Peelbrae in 1727 and Peelbraehope later. His children included: Janet (b.1727); William (b.1729); and Helen (b.1731). William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Crumhaugh, where he is recorded in 1716 and 1718. In 1720 he is 'late tenent in Crumhaugh', but in 1729 was still 'in Crumhaugh'. He is probably the William who (along with John) witnessed a baptism in 1728 for Andrew Leithead, workman in Goldielands. He married Bessie Brown and their children, baptised in Hawick, included: Walter (b.1716); Walter (again, b.1718); and William (b.1720), baptised posthumously, presented by his brother John (tenant in Goldielands). The witnesses in 1716 were Walter Scott of Crumhaugh and Andrew Riddell, in 1718 were Andrew Riddell and John Scott, and in 1720 was Beadle John Scott. Probably the same William in Crumhaugh secondly married Margaret Scott in 1726 and their children included John (b.1727) and Christian (b.1729). The witnesses in 1729 were John Elliot (probably his brother) and Walter Scott (perhaps related to his wife). William (1703–91) son of John in Dinlees, he was tenant at Park in Liddesdale. He is mentioned in 1730 as brother of John in Park. He married Miss Scott from Blackhall, probably Helen Scott (1702–74). Their children included: John in Bygate (1731–1808); Margaret (1736–1827), who married Archibald Armstrong in Sorbietrees; and Violet, who married George Dalgleish in Castleton. 'Miss Vilette Elliot, Park' subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' in 1784. William of Bush (1705–79) 2nd surviving son of John. He married Margaret, daughter of Robert Aitcheson, farmer at Eweslees. He inherited Binks from his brother Robert in 1754. He farmed at Arkleton for 20 years, as well as farming Bush and Binks. His children were: John; Henry, who married Jean Laidlaw from Gorrenberry; Christian (b.1738); Jean (b.1740); Robert (b.1742); and Margaret (b.1745). William (18th C.) younger son of William of Penchrise and Janet, daughter of John Elliot of Thorlieshope. He lived in Selkirk. He married Marion Elliot from Linslaw and their children included William, Robert and Mary (who married A. Muir in Whithaugh). William (18th C.) resident of Roberton and Wilton Parishes. He married Bessie Scott from Wilton in 1727. Their children included: Walter (b.1731), born at Whitfield, who is probably the Walter whose children were born at Alton and Wester Groundistone; and Agnes (b.1733), born at Groundistone. The witnesses in 1731 were John and James Scott. William (b.1706) eldest son of William of Borthwickbrae and Isobel Scott. He died at sea, but the details are not recorded. The farm was inherited by his brother John. William (1707/8–41) son of Robert and Jean 'Ruan', he was a merchant in Castleton. He died aged 33 and is buried at Teviothead. John, who married Hannah Grieve, may have been his brother. William (18th C.) son of Adam in Dykeraw. He was tenant in 'Hole' (although it is unclear where this was). His children included William, John and Isobel. William of Tarras (1708/9–79) son of Henry of Lodgegill and Margaret Elliot of Midlem Mill. His father died in 1714 and his uncle John of Binks was appointed one of his curators. He succeeded to Lodgegill (or Black Tarras) in 1732. He rented Ginglenwells from the Duke of Buccleuch in 1736. His estate was valued at £200 in the 1740s. He was involved in bonds with Capt. Robert Elliot for Fairnielees in 1761 and Blakehope and Lodgegill in 1763. He was a great breeder of race-horses, and once raced an unknown horse in Newcastle, but was virtually ruined by betting debts when it fell near the post after he had backed it heavily. The financial problems during the American War meant he had to sell Blakehope and Tarras to the Duke of Buccleuch, but he was allowed to lease Dinlees for a modest rent. 'Article and account of the roup and sale of horse, nolt, and sheep, beloning to Mr Elliot of Tarras, exposed to sale by the trustees for his creditors, at Broadlee, 8th June, 1763' was donated to the Museum by James Wilson in 1862. In 1731 he married Jean Elliot (1709/10–74), daughter of William, Laird of Harwood. Their children included: Henry (1731–90), tenant in Dinlees; Margaret, who married Mr. Haig; Janet, who died unmarried; John (1741–54); Jane (1742–61); William (b.1745), also tenant in Dinlees; and Jean, who married Mr. Crichton. He and his wife are buried at Castleton. William (1711–71) tenant in Braidlie on Hermitage. He was 3rd son of William in Whithaugh and Isobel Scott. He died unmarried and was buried at Unthank, where the stone stated that he died aged 50. However, a family pedigree also suggests he was born in 1694. William (b.1710) son of Walter in Brugh. He was a cooper (in London according to some sources, but that is surely a transcription error, since his entire family were born and lived locally). He married Hahhah (or Anna) Scott and their children, born in Castleton Parish, were: Elizabeth (b.1755), who married Robert Mathieson from Castleton; Helen (b.1757); Agnes (b.1759), who married William Elliot from Selkirk; Ann (b.1760); James (b.1762); William (b.1764); and John (b.1767), also a cooper. Margaret, who married Thomas Elliot from Hawick, was probably also his daughter. William (18th C.) dyker in Hawick Parish. He witnessed baptisms in 1741 for James Nimmo and in 1742 for shoemaker John Brown. He is recorded as a 'Diker' in 1760 when he hired the Hawick mortcloth. He is probably the dyker who married Margaret Elliot in Hawick and paid extra to the Kirk Session 'for marrian in ye manse' (suggesting either that it was a quick wedding or otherwise that they were dissenters of some sort). William of Whithaugh (c.1723–76) eldest son of John of Whithaugh. He is probably the William 'of Whitehaugh' listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761, with William 'junior' perhaps being his son. He firstly married Margaret Shortreed (c.1735–88) from Essenside (perhaps daughter of Robert) and secondly married Elizabeth Elliot, probably sister of the Laird of Wolfelee; she may be the 'Betty Elliot of Whithaugh' whose death is recorded in Hawick in 1798. His children were: Elizabeth (1754–1815), who maried Robert Weir from near Canonbie; Margaret (c.1755–1837), who lived in Kirkcaldy and made a family pedigree in about 1790; Jean (c.1757–1839), who married James Bogle from Kirkcaldy; John (1759–1847), who married Jean Elliot of Binks; Robert (1761–1840), Captain of 'the Hope', who married Alison Gregg; William, (1762–1843), W.S., J.P., lived in Hawick; Isobel (1765–1808); Thomas (b.1766) doctor in Carlisle; and James (1769–1824), who was a merchant in Hawick. He is said to have died aged 59, but this seems unlikely given the ages of his parents and siblings. William (18th C.) farmer at Whithaugh in Wilton Parish. In 1756 he married Isabel Jackson and their children included Agnes (b.1757), 'Ketty' (b.1759), Helen (b.1761), John (b.1763) and William (b.1766). It is unclear how he might have been related to the contemporary William of Whithaugh. William (18th C.) shepherd at Harwood in Hobkirk Parish. His children included Henry (b.1741), Jean (b.1743) and William (b.1751). Probably the same William was shepherd at 'Hawkcleughlongels' (which seems likely to be Hawklawtongues) in Hobkirk Parish, having children Jean (b.1745), William (b.1747), Walter (b.1752) and Janet (b.1755). William (18th C.) resident at Southdeanrig in Cavers Parish. His children included: William (b.1743); Robert (b.1746), possibly the tenant farmer in Powisholm; William (again, b.1748); Janet (b.1750); and Helen (b.1753). William (18th C.) shepherd at the Flex. His wife was Janet Gledstains and their son James was born in 1743. William (18th C.) resident of Toono-Rule. He had a daughter Isobel baptised in 1748. William (1722/3–1806) described as 'portioner in Lanton Mains' on a tombstone at old Abbotrule Kirk. He must have had a close connection with the Abbotrule area. He may also have been tenant at Knowesouth, recorded on the Land Tax Rolls in 1811. He married Jean Henderson in Bedrule Parish in 1759, and she died in 1807, aged 79. Their children included: Margaret (b.1760); Mabel (b.1762); Janet (b.1764); Jean (b.1768); Robert (b.1769), also farmer at Lanton Mains; and William (b.1772). 3 of his children died in infancy. He was probably brother of George, tenant in Doorpool. William Nassau of Brugh (1736–75) only son of John, who was 2nd son of William of Brugh and Wells ('the Laceman'). In 1764 he was served heir to his uncle Col. William of Wells, and took the additional name of his aunt's family, Nassau. Also in 1764 he married Martha Tryphena Louisa, daughter of Sir Nathaniel Meade; she died in 1796. Her name was given to a wood on the Wells estate, 'Mead's Grove Plantation'. Their only son William, who succeeded, was an M.P. He may have earlier married Mary Scawen of Reigate. In 1775 he purchased West Lees, extending the Wells estate. But he died a few months later at his lodgings in Bath. William (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Marion or Mary Laidlaw and their children included Adam (b.1750), Henry (b.1753) and Mary (b.1761). Dr. William (18th C.) physician in Jedburgh. He is recorded as liferenter of Dryden and part of Headshaw in 1788. Dryden was then valued at £290 and his part of Headshaw at £116 19s 6d. He was among a group of men to whom Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto granted liferent of part of his lands in order to add them to the Roxburghshire voters' roll. He may have been related to the Elliots of Minto, William (18th C.) farmer at Nether Stanegarthside, probably son of Thomas. He married Mary (or Marion) Pattison, who died in 1794. Their children included: John (b.1761); Robert (1784–1813); Margaret (1769–1846); an unnamed child

(b.1772); and Mary (b.1780). The family are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Dolly, who married Andrew Pattison in Nether Stanegarthside, and died in 1763, aged 64, was probably related to him. William (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. Probably the same William was father of Gideon (b.1767) and John (b.1777). William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, perhaps tenant in 'Sandridgeshiells'. In 1746 he married Margaret Elliot and they had a daughter Margaret in 1755. William (18th C.) recorded at Cavers in 1791 when he subscribed to John Learmont's book of poetry. William (1723–97) son of Robert of Caerlenrig. He farmed at Winnington Rig and neighouring farms. He and his father Robert were witnesses for a baptism for William Grieve (farmer in Southfield) and his sister Mary in 1764. He may be the William who was joint possessor (along with Robert Potts) of the farm of Turn in 1779. He was recorded as farmer at 'Winnington' on the 1785 Horse Tax Rolls and 'Winningtonridge' in 1786, continuing there until 1797 when he farmed at 'Winningtonrigg & c.' and owned 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid tax for having 4 non-working dogs at Winningtonrig in 1797. He married Margaret Anderson and she died in 1845, aged 90. Their children were all baptised in Kirkton Parish. Their sons were: Robert (1790–1872), tenant at Teindside; James (b.1791), who died in infancy; and William (1796–1842), tenant at Mangerton. Their daughters probably included: Christian (1786–1880), who married Walter John Grieve, farmer in Southfield; Margaret (b.1788), who died in infancy; Margaret (again, 1793–1809); and Mary (1795–1837). His will is registered with Peebles Commisary Court in 1798. William (18th C.) tenant farmer at Templehall in Rulewater, recorded in 1751 when the lands were sold. His son William, younger, was also mentioned. His daughter Elizabeth was born in 1750. William (18th C.) Hawick baker, son of Henry in Riccarton and Isobel Elliot. He is probably the William listed as Bailie during the 1760s to 1780s. In 1762 and 1765 he witnessed baptisms for fellow baker Robert Scott, junior. He is recorded as 'baxter' in 1763. He is probably the baker who witnessed a baptism for merchant Walter Scott in 1766 and one for shoemaker Peter Wilson in 1777. He was one of the Magistrates during the proceedings for the Division of the Common and in 1769 was appointed to the commission to discuss the Common with representatives of the Duke of Buccleuch. He paid the horse tax in Hawick in the period 1785–90 and 1794. He married Janet (her name sometimes given as 'H.') Grieve of the Branxholme Park family. Their children were: Henry (b.1756); Jean (or Jane, b.1759), who died unmarried; James (b.1761); Walter (b.1763), who died young; and Helen, who married Henry Armstrong from Riccarton Mill (who may have been a cousin). The witnesses in 1763 were Excise Officer Archibald Campbell and merchant Thomas Wilkie. William (c.1714–1806) shepherd at Templehallshiel. He was already herd at Templehallshiel in 1758, when his first child was baptised. In 1757 he married Helen Turnbull (c.1725–95) from Wilton, with the marriage being recorded in both Wilton and Hobkirk Parishes. Their likely children are: Robert (b.1758), possibly the cattle dealer in Newcastleton; Thomas (b.1761); George (b.1762); Henry (b.1764); and Margaret (b.1770). It also seems likely that he was father of John, labourer around Wauchope. He died in Newcastleton and his wife died at Roan. William (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He married Betty Wilson in 1756 and they had a son John (b.1760). He witnessed a baptism for James Buckham in 1764. His name also appears to be written in the baptismal records for 1765, but crossed out. William (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included: John (b.1760); and Helen (b.1761). He is probably the William who married Christian Oliver in Southdean in 1758. William of Arkleton (1735–91) eldest surviving son of Adam and Christina Elliot, he was baptised in Ewes Parish. He succeeded when quite young, and in 1744 had tutors appointed, including Andrew, younger son of William of Thorlieshope. However, the estate was probably heavily encumbered when he succeeded. He became a doctor in Jedburgh, where his children were born. He subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). He paid tax in Jedburgh for having a male servant in the period 1778–85 and a female servant in 1785, as well as the Horse Tax in Jedburgh from 1785. He is probably the Dr. William of Jedburgh who was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788. He may also be the William of Arkleton who was as a voter in Dumfriesshire in the same year. He inherited Thorlieshope through his wife, but sold it to James Jardine, tenant of Arkleton. He firstly married Marie, a sister of Dr. Lindsay, then secondly married Cassandra, daughter of Robert Elliot of Overton, co-heiress of Thorlieshope. His children were: Adam (1774–97), Lieutenant in the 72nd Regiment of Foot, who died unmarried; Robert

(1775–1810), Major with the 5th Bombay Native Infantry, who died at sea; William (b.1777), army surgeon, who died unmarried while serving in the West Indies; Margaret ('Peggy', 1779–1816), who married Adam, son of Rev. William Scott of Southdean; John (b.1781); and Gilbert (b.1784). His son Robert succeeded when he returned home in 1803 and his daughter Margaret succeeded in 1810. William (18th C.) farmer at Burnhead and Appletreehall. His wife was Helen Hume and their children included Janet (b.1770), Margaret (b.1773) and Jean (b.1775). William (18th C.) resident of Chisholme in the Borthwick valley. His daughter Margaret was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1773. Other children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included Alexander (b.1754), William (b.1754), Janet (b.1758), William (b.1764), Walter (b.1766) and Margaret (b.1767). William (18th C.) son of Robert of Redheugh. In 1744 his father had a confirming charter for Redheugh, in which he was assigned the farm in fee. He was later tenant in Hillhouse. He was disinherited by his father in 1786, for reasons that are not recorded. He married Margaret Haliburton from Roughley in 1764. Their children included: William (b.1765), who was a doctor in Newcastle; Robert (b.1767), who was a lawyer in Kirkcaldy; John (b.1769), a merchant in London; Thomas (b.1771) in Hillhouse; and Margaret (b.1774), who married Castleton Schoolmaster Mr. Forsyth. William (c.1745–95) buried in Castleton Kirkyard. His wife was Elizabeth Oliver (c.1759–85) and they had a son James. He was probably related to Walter (1755–77), who died at Tweedenside. He himself died at 'Dedburn'. William (d.bef. 1809) farmer at Myredykes. He was recorded as farmer at Myredykes and other farms on the 1794–97 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 3 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He was also taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. His only daughter, Helen, married James Oliver (farmer at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot) in 1797. His wife's death is recorded in Hawick Parish in 1809. Bailie William (d.1795) merchant in Hawick, whose death is recorded there. He was Bailie during the 1770s and 80s. He is probably distinct from the baker who was also Magistrate around the same time. He witnessed baptisms for ex-Bailie John Hardie and for Bailie Andrew Scott in 1772 and for George Turnbull and Isobel Hardie in 1777. He could be the William in Hawick recorded in letters preserved in Selkirk in the Walter Mason Collection from the years around 1791. He is probably the man recorded in a diary entry by John Sibbald in 1781: 'Went over to Hawick on Tuesday. Dined in Bailie Elliot's. Was sorry to see Mrs Armstrong in such a condition, being deprived of the use of her reason for some time past. Bought a big coat from Bailie Elliot, which cost me, mounting and cloth, £1, 18s, 6d'. William (c.1740–96) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Isabel Crozier (c.1740–82). Their children included: Marion (b.1761); Janet (1765–1838); James (b.1770); and James (again, b.1772). He died at 'Pigeonhole' and is buried in Castleton Kirkyard. William of Brugh (c.1740–1817) eldest son of Capt. John and Jean Grieve. He was a grandson of Gilbert, who farmed at Winningtonrig, and was descended from the Elliots of Brugh. He is said to have been born in Belgium (presumably where his father was serving), although his siblings were all christened locally. He was given a commission in the Army in 1758, was appointed Cornet in the Inniskilling Dragoons in 1761 and was appointed A.D.C. to Gen. Johnstone (who commanded the forces in Ireland) in 1766, holding that post until 1780, but being transferred to the 11th Dragoons in 1779. He was also Commissary General of Stores for the Army in Ireland. Shortly after being married in 1780 he left the Army and entered the Church. He became Rector of Trim, as well as being Chaplain to Bishop Ossory and also a regimental chaplain. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Nicolas FitzGerald, from Turlough, County Mayo. Their children were John (who died as a young man), Eliza (who married John Mockler from County Meath), Harriet (who married Capt. Eliott Seward, godson of Lord Heathfield), Lt. Col. William (d.1845) and Gilbert (who served in the Army and was Governor of the Island of Paxos). He died in Cheltenham and was buried in St. Mary's Churchyard there. Maj.-Gen. William (1741–1803) only son of Gilbert of Larriston, who was the direct heir of the Elliots of Redheugh and Larriston. His mother was Margaret, daughter of James Scott of Calfield. His father died when he was quite young. He is said to have worked for a while as a tailor's apprentice at Bowanhill (Teviothead), perhaps spent a year at Skelfhill, then entered the service of Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs as a stable boy. Being recognised as the head of the clan, Sir Gilbert had him educated and arranged for him to go out as a cadet in the East India Company Artillery in 1761. By 1763 (or perhaps 1764) he obtained a commission and was rapidly promoted, becoming a Lieut.-Col. in 1782. It is said that he distinguished himself in the Carnatic, where he commanded artillery under Sir Eyre Coote. He made a small fortune in the East India Company and was able to resign in 1785, to return home. He repurchased the lands of Larriston (including Nether and Over Larriston and Blackhope) from William Oliver of Dinlabyre in 1786, and added Larriston Rig and (also called Haggiehaugh) in 1790. His lands of Larriston were valued at £834 in 1788. He is recorded at Haggiehaugh on the both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls (when he was a Colonel) and in the same year when taxed for having a male servant. He served as a Deputy-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire in at least 1797 and 1798. He was also a Deputy-Lieutenant of Dumfriesshire. He tried to establish his claim to be head of the clan through court proceedings in Jedburgh (presided over by the Sheriff, the same Oliver of Dinlabyre), being formally served heir to his grandfather Robert of Larriston in 1788, and matriculating arms in 1793. Perhaps country life was too quiet for him, because he resumed his commission with the East India Company by 1788. However, it seems unlikely that he returned to India, and may have worked for the company in England, rising to the rank of Major General. He died unmarried and named George Fraser Scott (a son of his cousin) as his heir. A memorial to him in Littleham Church, Exmouth misspells his appellation 'of Larrinton'. He is probably the William from Castleton whose will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1803. William (1744/5–93) farm worker who lived at Deeburn in the Hermitage valley. His children included Elizabeth (b.c.1770). William (1745–1807) son of William, who farmed at Tarras and Lodgegill. He was tenant in Dinlees on Hermitage Water. In 1786 he subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author. He is recorded at Dinlees on the Horse Tax Rolls in 1785–89 and 1794. He was taxed for having 4 non-working dogs in 1797. He married Agnes Amos (c.1753–1842) from Langholm. Their children included: Margaret (b.1781); William (b.1790), who also farmed at Dinlees; and Henry (b.1792) in Colterscleuch. William (1753–1821) son of Robert and Janet Wilson. He was born in Ewes Parish. He married Jean Davidson (1751–1827) from Canonbie and their children were born in New Langholm. He could be the William listed at New Langholm on the subscription list for William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. Their children included: Margaret (b.1783); Robert (1785–1849); John (1785–1847), who became a minister in Peebles and married Janet Scott; William (1789–1822), who lived in England; Matthew (b.1791), who died young; Janet (b.1793); and Jane Beattie (b.1797), who died young. William 'Willie' (c.1750–1827) son of Robert in Hermitage and Janet Scott from Greenwood. He was tenant in Millburnholm. He was the farmer there when Sir Walter Scott and Robert Shortreed visited on their tour around Liddesdale; it seems likely that Scott took some of the qualities of 'Dandie Dinmont' from him (in addition to James Davidson if Hyndlee). The meeting is described in detail by Scott. He is probably the farmer at Millburnholm who is recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls in the period 1786–1797 and also on the Dog Tax Rolls in 1797. A story is told of how he came out of his door when the Liddesdale Volunteers passed his house at the False Alarm in 1804; he followed them to 'the Edge' dividing Liddesdale from Teviotdale and encouraging the men to face Napoloen is meant to ahve stated 'dinna let him ower the edge'. In 1787 in Hawick he married Elizabeth Laidlaw from Falnash, who died in 1822, aged 72. Their children were: Jean (b.1792); and Robert (1793–1858), who married Mary Scott from Skelfhill and died in Toftholm. His birth is not recorded, but on source states he was born in 1759. William (1761–c.1835) son of Rev. Thomas of Kirkton and Cavers. He was an architect in Kelso and may have been the William who became a wright's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1775. He built the Teviot Bridge near Kelso 1794–95 (probably to designs by Alexander Stevens). He also designed the extension to the old Wilton Kirk, which was built in 1801. Langholm Town Hall and the houses at Chesters and Crailing were his work, as were renovations at Yair and Drumlanrig Castle. He married Jean Robertson in 1791 and their children included: Esther (b.1792), who married Charles Scott of Knowesouth; Thomas (b.1793), who died in infancy; John (b.1795), W.S. in Hawick and Jedburgh, who married Janet Usher; William (b.1797), surgeon in London; Ann (b.1799) who married Kelso ironomomger Thomas Sibbald; Jean (b.1799); another Thomas (b.1802); Alexander (b.1804); Robert (b.1807); and Walter (b.1810), who carried on the architect's business in Kelso. William Nassau of Brugh and Wells (1766–1818) only son of William Nassau of Brugh and Wells, whom he succeeded in 1775. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788; he was described at that time as having 'a good estate' and supporting Sir Gilbert Elliot. In 1778 and 1779 in Hobkirk Parish he was taxed for having 3 male servants. In 1788 he is recorded as owner of the lands of Wells and West Lees (in Hobkirk Parish) and Huntknow (listed in Bedrule Parish), as well as Ormiston (in Eckford Parish) and Hadden (in Sprouston Parish). He was also taxed for having a male servant at Wells in 1794 and 1797 (along with Gilbert Eliott, who was serving as his factor there). Already owner of the Wells estate (which had been erected into a barony by his grandfather), in 1801 he purchased the adjacent Barony of Bedrule from the Kerrs of Cavers Carre. This included the lands of Bedrule, Fulton, Dunionhill, Dunionshank, Bedrule Mill, Gourlaybog and Poinderhaugh. He became an M.P., for Portarlington 1801–02 and for Peterborough in 1802–18. He was Chief Secretary for Ireland and was a member of the Privy Council. In Westminster he was called 'the Spectre of the Castle', because he was so thin; however, he was said to be well regarded by his contemporaries. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and in 1819 (when already deceased). He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. He was also recorded as owner of Wells and West Lees, as well as the Barony of Hadden, on the Land Tax Rolls in 1811. He died unmarried at Minto House. He had named his relative Lord Heathfield (or his son) as his successor to the Wells estate, but outlived them both, so succession fell to Sir William Eliott of Stobs as heir of the line. He left his portrait, plate and library to Lord Minto. His will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1818. William (1762–88) son of John and Hannah Grieve. He was a surgeon, who died at Cape Coast Castle in Africa. He is mentioned on the family's gravestone in Castleton cemetery. William (1762–1843), W.S., J.P., younger son of William of Whithaugh (descended from Elliot of Mosspeeble) and Elizabeth Elliot (probably sister to the Laird of Wolfelee). He was a writer (i.e. lawyer) in Hawick, where he was also a Justice of the Peace, and he lived in Newcastleton in later life (probably from about 1820). It is also possible he was the writer in Edinburgh who subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). He was 'Writer in Hawick' in 1789 when he paid tax for having a female servant. He also paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1791–94. He is probably the William who in about 1800 contributed £2 2s to the local subscription to help fund the forces to stop the French invasion. He drew up a pedigree of the Eliotts in about 1790 (and made a formal deposition of the document in 1841, when he was living in Newcastleton); this was said to be quite accurate back to the time of his great-grandfather's generation, but incorrect before that. He subscribed to John Learmont's book of poetry in 1791. He is probably the writer in Castleton who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825 and may be the William from Castleton who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He is described as 'Writer Ind.' living in the house of joiner John Cavers in Newcastleton at the time of the 1841 census. He seems to have died without issue. William in Orchard see William Elliot Lockhart. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1797 he married Janet Gordon from Hawick Parish. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His children included: William (b.1796); and Frear (b.1798). William (1765–1851) eldest son of William in Hillhouse and Mary Haliburton, he was born in Castleton Parish. He may be the William of Liddesdale who studied at Edinburgh University 1784/5. He received a surgeon mate's diploma from the Royal College of Surgeons in Edinburgh in 1794. He was a doctor in Newcastle. In 1808 he received an M.D. from St. Andrews University. He married Jane Grieve, from Newburn. Maj. William (1766–1802) eldest son of Cornelius the 2nd Laird of Wolfelee. He was a Major in the 1st Madras Cavalry and died in Vellore (southern India). His portrait (in a red hunting coat) was painted by Raeburn. Wolfelee was inherited by his younger brother James. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Dykecroft, recorded on the 1794–97 Horse Tax Rolls. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. William (d.1816) Town Herd of Hawick. He is 'late Town Herd Hawick' in the record of his death. It is possible he was the same as the William recorded at Whitchesters in 1797. He was already Town Herd in 1800 when the death of his sister Janet is recorded. William (18th/19th C.) recorded at Whitchesters in 1797, when he paid tax on 2 non-working dogs. William (18th/19th C.) servant at Hassendeanburn, recorded in the Lieutenancy Book in 1797. William 5th Laird of Harwood (1766–1835) son of 'Captain' Robert and Elizabeth Pringle of Clifton. He succeeded his uncle Henry, who had considerably improved the estate. Gideon Pott, farmer at Penchrise, was appointed to clear his debts before he succeeded to the estate. Shortly afterwards he joined the recently formed Roxburgh Fencible Dragoons. He was promoted to Major and served under his distant relation Lt.-Col. William Elliot (later Elliot-Lockhart) of Borthwickbrae, repelling the French from Killala Bay in Ireland in 1798. It was claimed that his men were guilty of killing a group of Irishmen who were hiding in a straw barn (this apparently told by a man from an Irish Cavalry regiment who visited Hawick a few years later, whose father and brothers were said to be among the dead). In 1788 his estate consisted of Harwood, Appotside, Fairnielees, Templehall and Kilnknowe, valued at £2143 2s. Also in 1788 he was mentioned as being about to be added to the list of voters in Roxburghshire. He subscribed to John Learmont's book of poetry in 1791. He paid the Horse Tax in Wells in 1791 and Hundalee in 1792. He was recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses at Borthwickbrae. In 1802 he was made Captain commandant of the western troop of the Roxburghshire Yeomanry (Volunteers). Every man of the troop assembled (in Jedburgh) at the False Alarm. He was commonly called 'The Major' locally. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. He was a member of the Jedforest Club from 1812. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. In 1811 he was recorded on the Land Tax Rolls as owner of Harwood and Appotside, as well as Fairnielees, Templehall and Kilnknowe. In 1819, after troubles over the proposed Reform Act, he suggested forming his own troop of yeomanry to quell the riots, but the offer was declined. He lived for many years at Hundalee (where he paid tax for having a male servant in 1792–94 and the dog tax in 1797), where several of his children were born, and was also tenant at Stonedge. He then leased Weens from 1819 or 1820 for a few years, moving to Greenriver (Stonedge again in 1824) and then Mossburnford. He also had a house in Jedburgh. In 1834/5 he had a new house built at Harwood, but he died before moving into it. In 1804 he married Helen (or Eleanor, c.1783–1846), 2nd daughter of Maj. John Rutherford of Mossburnford. His children were: Robert Kerr (b.1805), who succeeded to Harwood; Eleanor (or 'Ellen', b.1806), who married John Paton of Crailing; and John (b.1809), who married Jane Jerdan of Bonjedward and farmed at Primrosehill. He was buried in Hobkirk Kirkyard. His will is registered with Jedburgh Sheriff Court in 1838. William of Borthwickbrae, see William Eliott Lockhart. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Wilson in 1791 and their children included Archibald (b.1792), Isabel (b.1794), Janet (b.1796) and Walter (b.1798). His widow and son Archibald were living at about 59 High Street in 1841. William (18th/19th C.) herd to Thomas Oliver in Hobkirk Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. His name was entered between those for Longburnshiels and for Stonedge, perhaps giving a clue to the location. William (b.c.1770s) servant at Twislehope according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. William (b.c.1770s) labourer in Newcastleton according to the ballots for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799 and 1801. William (b.c.1780) mason in Hawick. He was listed on the ballot for the Militia in 1801, but not before. William (b.c.1780) shepherd at Skelfhill according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Thorlieshope. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots connected with Thorlieshope. William (18th/19th C.) drover in Castleton Parish. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Roan. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. It is unclear how he was related to other Elliots. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. His wife was Isabel Jackson and their children included William (b.1801) and John (b.1803). They could be the William (aged 65) and Isabela (aged 70) living at Langhaugh in 1841 and recorded as labourer at Langhaugh in 1838–41. William (1770–1824) son of Thomas and Elizabeth Carruthers. He lived at Foulshiels and later Hartsgarth in Castleton Parish. He was probably the 'W. Elliot, Hartsgarth' who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He married Jane Easton and their children included: James (b.1800); Robert (b.1802); George (b.1805); Thomas (b.1807); Ann (1810–92), who married Walter Armstrong; William (b.1812); Betty (b.1815); Walter (1818–99), died a bachelor; Walter (again, b.1819); and Jane (b.1822). He drowned in the Kershope Burn and is buried at Unthank. William (1772–1855) son of George, like his father he was tenant farmer at Doorpool in the Rule valley. He was recorded as tenant in Doorpool on the ballots for the Militia in Southdean Parish in 1799 and 1801. He was a prominent member of the Relief Kirk in Jedburgh. In 1812 he married Isabella Stephenson, who died in 1850, aged 65. Their children included: George (b.1813); Janet (b.1815); Richard (1817–91); William (1819–91); and John (1823–1910), who married Agnes Stevenson Rutherford. His sons Richard, William and John were tenants in Hartwoodmyres for about 50 years. He died at Hartwoodmyres. The family were recorded on a memorial stone at old Abbotrule Kirk. William (c.1778–1843) from Hawick. He married Agnes 'Bone' and they had a son William (c.1800–78), who married Jane Oliver. In about 1833 he emigrated to Canada, settling in Halton, Ontario. William (c.1780–1824) from Castleton Parish, he lived at Gillside. His wife was Mary Murray and their children included: Mary (b.1803); Nelly (b.1811); Betty (b.1815); Christian (b.1818); Eppy (b.1821); and Isabel (b.1824). William (b.1780) son of Walter, who farmed at Henderson's Knowe. He was a miller in Hawick Parish and was thus recorded on the ballot list for the Militia in 1801. In 1817 he emigrated with his family to Smith's Falls, Lanark County, Ontario, arriving on the Alexander. There he was heavily involved with the Presbyterian Church. In 1851 he was living in Bathurst Township, farming 20 acres and owning 2 grist mills and a saw mill, on the River Tay. In 1802 he married Margaret ('Peggy') Scott, as recorded in Wilton Parish. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1802); Janet (b.1804); William (b.1806); Margaret (b.c.1806); Adam Scott (1807–99), also a miller who died in Ontario; James (1810–1900); Walter (b.1812); John; Ellen (1816–1909); Janet (b.1820); and Jenny (b.c.1825), born in Canada. At least 3 of his children were baptised 'in the presence of the Associate congregation' of Hawick. He is probably the miller whose child is recorded dying in Hawick in 1815. In Canada his son Thomas died of dysentery in 1819 and he also had twin daughters in 1819, both of whom died in infancy, as well as another daughter Janet (b.1820). He also had a daughter Isabel who married Adam Foster in Ontario in 1830. Several letters from him to his brother Thomas are preserved; one letter suggests he was 'keeping school at a place called trooptown'. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children included: Walter (b.1800); James (b.1802), probably the grocer in Denholm; Nelly (b.1804); and Betty (b.1806). William (b.1790) son of William, tenant at Dinlees. He was farmer at Dinlees on Hermitage Water, like his father. His children included William, Jessie, Helen and Margaret. He is probably the 'W. Elliot, Dinlee' who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. William (c.1790–1853) labourer in Castleton. In 1841 he was at Little Whithaugh with his wife's mother, Jenny Crozier also living with them. In 1851 he was a widower and farm servant at Whithaughburn. He is listed as a farm servant at Whithaughburn in 1835. William (18th/19th C.) labourer listed at 'North Gunholm' (perhaps meant for Greenholm) among male heads of households in 1835. He married Jean Oliver (c.1792–1847). Their children included: Agnes (b.1813); Betty (b.1815); John (b.1817); Jean (b.1819); James (b.1822); George (b.1825); Gideon (b.1828); William Keir (b.1830); and Helen (b.1832). He died at Whithaughburn. William (1789/90–1869) boot and shoe maker in Newcastleton. He is listed in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He probably lived at 6 Whitchester Stret. In the 1841 census he is listed with his wife Christian and children Betty, John (also a shoemaker), Ann, Christian and James. His cousin Robert Murray ('Formerly Teacher') was living with him in 1851. He married Christian Elliot (1797/8–1846) and their children included: Betty (b.1819); William (b.1821); Helen (b.1823); John (b.1825); Isabel (b.1827); and Anne (b.1829). He may have been son of cooper John and Betty Crozier, who was born in 1790. William of Brugh (1789/90–1845) eldest surviving son of William, Rector of Trim, and descended from the Eliotts of Brugh and farmers of Southfield. In 1818 he succeeded as head of the Elliots of Brugh on the death of William of Wells. He became a Lt.-Col. in the Royal Canadian Rifles. He served in the Peninsular Wars and commanded the Niagara frontier, where he died, and where there is a memorial to him in St. Mark's Church. In 1829 he married Mary Ann Charlotte Moore, daughter of Capt. Moore of the Royal Marines. Their children were: Rev. William, Prebendary of Hereford; and Capt. Henry Sheridan (d.1867). William (1792–1811) youngest son of the 1st Earl of Minto. He was 3rd Lieutenant on the H.M.S Fox and died returning from Bengal. William (1794/5–1866) shepherd in Castleton. In 1861 he was on Langholm Street. He married Isabella Armstrong, from Nichol Forest, Cumberland, and she died in 1870, aged 75. Their children included: Walter (1820/1–40); Robert (1825/6–74); Violet; and Agnes (1836/7–90). William (b.1794/5) mason in Roberton Parish. In 1841 he was living at Whitecleuchside and in 1851 was at Woodfoot (probably Cleuchfoot). His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Mary, Isabella, Francis and William. Perhaps the same William was a widowed dyke builder living at Myrselawgreen with his daughter Jane in 1861. William (b.1795/6) from Selkirk, he was 'Tacksman, Toll-bar' at Mackside Toll in 1861. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included James, George and William. William (1796–1842) younger son of William, farmer at Winningtonrig. He farmed at Mangerton and died unmarried. William (1796–1838) son of John and Jean Scott. He was farmer at Flatt in Castleton Parish, like his father before him. He had a bond with Haddington distiller Archibald Dunlop in 1823. He was one of the Tory supporters who became a victim during the 'Tully's Mill' mobbings at the 1837 election. He was riding away from the Tower Inn when the mob 'did attempt violently to seize and stop his horse, and did pursue him with violently jold him down upon the ground, and did tear the greater part of his clothes off his person, and did beat and injure him in his person, particularly in his hand'. William (1797–1869) younger son of William, architect in Kelso and grandson of Rev. Thomas of Cavers. His brother John was a lawyer in Hawick. He was born in Kelso and became a surgeon in London. He married Sarah Georgina Miller and they had 14 children. William (b.c.1800) son of John, labourer at Wauchope Gardens. His children were born at Saughtree in Castleton Parish, although he was living at Wauchope Cottages in 1841 and Tythehouse in 1851 and 1861. He was Farm Steward at Tythehouse in 1861. He married Margaret Murray (who died before 1851) and their children included: Elizabeth (or 'Betty', b.1822); John (b.1823); Margaret (b.1824); Thomas (b.1826); James (b.1828); Scott (b.1830); Anne (b.1832); and Agnes (b.1835), who married Peter Cairns. William (1801–64) hosiery manufacturer who founded William Elliot & Sons in 1823. He was son of James of Goldielands and brother of Dr. Adam and of Margaret, who married John Wilson, 'the Dip'. He served his time as a stocking-maker, then built up his own business in Slitrig Crescent (around No. 6). His business is listed as a hosiery manufacturers on the Crescent in Pigot's 1837 directory. He was an executor for the estate of fellow manufacturer John Nixon in 1849. In 1851, essentially as an extension of his nearby factory he built Tower Mill over the Slitrig and paid for a new bridge (now part of the Kirkstile) to be built in place of the Auld Brig (which was demolished, with the approval of the Town Council and Roads Trustees). As a result he obtained possession of the stone from the demolision of the Auld Brig, some of which found its way into other buildings. He was one of the Orrock Trustees. He was also a Town Councillor from 1861, and his portrait hangs in the Museum. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He became a Life Member of the Archæological Society in 1859. He lived on the Crescent. It was said that the citizens of Hawick, keen to hear about the future fortunes of the hosiery industry, looked forward more to his spech at the New Year's factory festival than they did to the throne speech! He is also supposed to have said that he preferred hosiery because 'though it was not so profitable, it gave most employment in proportion to the capital invested'. He was probably the William whose heirs are recorded in about 1874 owning part of the 'particate lands' once owned by shoemaker Robert Oliver. He married Isabella Scott (b.c.1806) in 1836. Their children included: Jane Carfin (b.1836); Agnes (b.1838); James (b.1840); William Scott (b.1843); and Adam (b.1844) of Caverton. His 2 sons carried on the firm of Elliot's. He died at the old family home of Goldielands. William (b.c.1802) son of Robert, tenant in Powisholm. He farmed at Harden in Castleton Parish. He married Jean Pattison (b.c.1811). Their children included: Robert (b.1839); and William (b.1843). William (19th C.) blacksmith and leader of the Jedburgh drum and fife band. He walked to Hawick in 1832 after the Reform Bill was defeated in the House of Lords, calling on Hawick men to follow him to London to overthrow the Lords, a threat he was talked out of. He later left Jedburgh, then emigrated to America, where he set up the Elliot Frog and Switch Company in St. Louis, which helped build the U.S. railroads. William (19th C.) from Hawick, he is recorded as winner of the 'standing high leap' at the 1834 Common-Riding Games. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William Scott of Peel see William Scott-Elliot. William Scott of Arkleton see William Scott-Elliot. William (19th C.) resident of North Andover in Massachusetts. He must have had a local collection, since in 1859 he donated to the Museum an American Diver and in 1862 donated 'a large & extensive collection of coins, containing some of great interest, as, a Scottish coin of Robert II, a Roman one of Vespasian etc.' William (1812–c.78) raised by William and Jane Easton, he appears to have actually been the illegitimate son of William's younger brother Thomas (i.e. the man whom he would have called uncle) with Isobel Aitchison (who may have died in childbirth). He was shepherd at Scotch Kershope in at least 1841–1861. In 1841 he married Christian Crozier (1806–77). Their children included: John (1842–79), died at Whithaugh Mill; William (b.1844); Walter Nichol (1846–82), died at Millburn; and James (1848–1928), farmer. William Thomas (1812–90) younger son of James, 3rd Laird of Wolfelee. He was brother of Sir Walter. He and his brother George Mackenzie emigrated to Australia where they established a sheep station at Johngboon and then at Canoona in Queensland. They were involved in an incident with Aboriginal people in 1856, where several people were shot. In 1875 he donated to the Museum 'specimens of ancient papyrus'. He died in Munich, Australia. William (1814–67) son of Robert and Janet Black. He was a joiner on the Loan. He was listed as a joiner at about 2 Loan in 1851 and as 'House Proprietor' at 2 Loan on the 1861 census. He married Helen Smith, and their children included: Robert (1851–1930), who married Isabella Mitchell; Helen T. (b.1852), who lived in Liverpool; Peter Smith (1854–1915), who married Jane Drinnan; Janet B. (1855–1933), who married Alfred Hannah; Elizabeth (1857–1934); William R. (1859–1934), who was a teacher; and Martha (1863–1945), also lived in Liverpool. His younger brother John Scott Elliot was Cornet. William (1817–98) son of Henry in Colterscleuch and Dinlees. He was tenant in Colterscleuch. He was helping his father with the farm according to the 1851 and 1861 censuses. William (b.1817/8) from Castleton Parish, he was shepherd at Arkleton in 1851. His wife was Helen and their children included Jane, Esther and Henry. William (b.c.1819) agricultural labourer, born in Castleton. In 1851 he was a cattle-feeder at Ruletownhead in Southdean Parish and in 1861 was a ploughman at Broadhaugh in Teviothead Parish. He married Jemima Elliot and their children included Elizabeth (b.1852), Isabella (b.1854), John, Margaret and Matthew. William (1819–91) son of William, tenant at Hartwoodmyres. He farmed at Hartwoodmyres along with his brothers Richard and John. He was recorded at Hartwoodmyres in 1868. William (1820–97) shepherd of the Ewes valley and elsewhere. He married Helen (1821–63), daughter of Robert McVittie from Fiddleton, and secondly married Elizabeth Little. Their children included: Jean (1846–1929); Esther (1846–96); Henry (1850–1940); Janet (1851–62); Helen (b.1854); William (1856–1920); Elizabeth (1859–1933); John Henry (1861–1925), who died in Waimate, New Zealand. He died at Peelbraehope and was buried in Ewes Kirkyard. William (19th C.) recorded at 'Road End' near Newcastleton in 1868. This could perhaps be the same as Steeleroad-end. William (1828–91) son of Robert and Eleanor Davidson. His father was farmer at Millburn in Castleton Parish. In 1861 at Lochburnfoot near Teviothead he married Helen (1839–1920), daughter of James Miller and Euphemia Winthrope. At that time he was living at Falnash. In 1862 they emigrated to New Zealand, and he died at Nevis, Central Otago. Their children were Euphemia Wintrup, Helen Davidson, Jane, Isabella Douglas and Ann Jemima. Rev. William Hume 'Hume' (1837–1927) from Hawick, son of Thomas and Margaret Hume. He was brother of James, merchant in the Sandbed. He trained as a writer's apprentice in Hawick. He went to Edinburgh University in 1859, and was minister at Haltwhistle in Northumberland. In 1874 he became minister of the St. Andrews Presbyterian (Dundee) Church in Ramsbottom, and served until his retirement in 1907. He wrote 'The Country and Church of the Cheeryble Brothers' (1893), and 'Story of the 'Cheeryble' Grants: from the Spey to the Irwell' (1906), describing the real life counterparts of the Scotsmen used as inspiration for characters in Charles Dickeons 'Nicholas Nickleby'. He also wrote verse, for example 'God and our Country', about the Covenanters, as well as verse in both Scots and Lancashire dialects. He was a keen member of the Bury and District Burns Club as well as the Manchester Branch of the Dickens Club. He was said to have a 'remarkable command of the Scotch language and Scotch dialect, and also of the Lancashire dialect'. He married a daughter of P.L. MacTaggart of Liverpool. He is buried in Wandsworth Cemetery, London. William (19th C.) Hawick's first cabman. His daughter Jessie married Alexander Kyle. William 'Wullie o Gowdlands' (or Goldielands) (19th C.) simple-minded soul who lived at Goldielands, and liked to dress up for special occasions, marching in front of the Saxhorn Band, the Volunteer Band, with the Cornet, etc. He was long remembered for one occasion when he arrived the night before a band event so as not to sleep in. William Claude 7th Laird of Harwood (1835–1922) eldest son of Robert Kerr. He succeeded to Harwood in 1873, with Clifton going to his brother Robert. He was born at Greenriver and baptised at Mossburnford. Educated at Cheltenham College, he entered the army in 1854 and soon became a Lieutenant in the 9th (Norfolk) Regiment. He was decorated in the Crimean War, but had retired from the army after only about 2 years. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He was a keen hunter and also proficient in boxing. In about 1874 he was recorded as owner of the farms of Harwood, Appotside and others. In 1876 he married Bertha Eliza, daughter of William Charles Blackman of Southsea, and she died in 1895. After his marriage in 1876 he lived mainly in Wales, seldom visiting Harwood, which was let out for the hunting season. He had no children and was suceeded by his nephew Thomas. William (b.1838/9) born in Castleton Parish, he was a cattleman, living at Adderstone Shiels Cottages in 1901. His wufe was Christina and their children included ploughman James. Col. William Scott (1841–aft. 1919) son of William, with whom he is easily confused, his mother being Isabella Scott. He had brothers Adam of Caverton and James of Mosstower. He ran the factory at Tower Mill and lived at Teviot Lodge. Some time before 1900 he installed electric lighting at his house at Teviot Lodge, using wires running from his factory at Tower Mill. In 1859 he (or perhaps his father) instigated setting up a company of Hawick Volunteers, and he eventually became Colonel of the Battalion. In 1863 he donated Russian fossils to the Museum. In 1874 he won a shooting competition between Volunteers from around Scotland. tHe was later Major and Honorary Lieutenant-Colonel of the Battalion's successors, the Border Rifles, serving until 1891. He was also a keen meteorologist, and regularly sent his readings to GJ. Symons who published British Rainfall readings. He donated fossil shells to the Museum. In 1919 he retired from the firm of William Elliot & Sons, and passed ownership to his son, who was also William Scott. He married Margaret Cadenhead, daughter of Dr. George William Thompson. He secondly married Elizabeth MacNee. His second daughter was Isabella. His youngest daughter Margaret (b.1879) married manufacturer William Boyd Sime. Teviot Lodge was gifted to the High School by his daughters in 1933. William (1830/1–1903) eldest son of Lt.-Col. William, he succeeded as head of the Elliots of Brugh in 1845. He was educated at Cambridge and trained as a minister, becoming Prebendary of Hereford Cathedral and Rural Dean of Hereford. He married Anne Louise Bennett in 1829 and their children were Col. William (who wrote 'The Elliots of Brugh and Wells') and Gilbert John. He wrote a study of Eccesiastical Dilapidations. Lt.-Col. William Fitzwilliam Elliot (1849–1928) 4th son of the 3rd Earl of Minto. He served with Princess Louise's Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders. In 1906 he wrote 'The Trustworthiness of Border Ballads' and followed that with 'Further Essays on Border Ballads' (1910). In these he commented on several ballads and what fraction of them might be genuinely traditional, rather than adapted by more modern writers. In 1880 he married Elizabeth Fanny, daughter of John Rutherford of Halifax, Nova Scotia. His children were Mary Adelaide (who married Sir John Hepburn Milne-Home), Margaret Cecil Anne (who married Maj. Frederick Adrian Cathcart) and John Augustis Gilbert (who worked in Kenya). William Scott (19th/20th C.) son of Col. William Scott of Teviot Lodge. He took over the hosiery firm of William & Elliot and Sons when his father retired in 1919. William (b.1859) son of Walter of Hollybush and descended from the Elliots of Newhall, he was an auctioneer in Muirglen, Lanark. He farmed at Langburnshiels on the Harwood (on Rule) estate and in 1924 he bought the whole estate from the 8th Laird, Thomas Robert Barnewall Elliot. He was a prominent auctioneer in his day, who was well known in agricultural circles. In Glasgow in 1866 he married Ellen Elizabeth Shields, daughter of a farmer. Their children were Ellen Elizabeth (who married Lt.-Col. John Craig of the Royal Scots Fusiliers) and Walter, who also farmed at Harwood and was an M.P. William of Brugh (b.1861) elder son of Rev. William, Prebendary of Hereford. He matriculated arms in 1902, establishing his descent from Gavin of the Brugh and Robert of Redheugh. He wrote the book 'The Elliots of Brugh and Wells'. In 1890 he married Mary Frances (d.1919), daughter and coheiress of Arthir B. Warre of Westfield House, Ramsgate. Their only child was Allison Mary, who married her cousin Lt.-Col. George Augustus Elliot of the Royal Irish Regiment. Sir William of Brugh (1896–1971) born in Wormit, Fife, elder son of Gilbert John of Brugh, he became head of the Elliots of Brugh. He joined the army in 1915, becoming a pilot in 1918 and was shot down and rescued in Russia in 1919. He rose to become Air Chief Mashall and Chief Staff Officer to the Minister of Defence, also receiving a knighthood. He married Elizabeth Rosemary Alice Chancellor and their children were Louise Elizabeth Rosemary and Simon John. Willot (15th

C.) recorded in the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. Along with Roland and some Armstrongs, Hector Lauder, brother of the Laird of Todrig, had remission for bringing them to the area to attack the tenants of Whitmuir. They are described as 'traitors of Leven', but are as likely to have been from Liddesdale as England. Lauder's crimes also included resetting Elliots, Armstrongs, Fosters and others who were traitors; this makes it seem likely he and Roland were already declared as rebels before this time. His name is recorded as 'Willot elwald', but this is odd, since 'Willot' was sometimes a variant of 'Elliot'. Zandra see Alexandra (also formerly spelled 'Elot' and permutations including 'Allot', 'Eliot', 'Ellat', 'Elleott', 'Ellet', 'Elliott', 'Ellot', 'Ellote', 'Ellott', etc., as well as variants such as 'Ellwalld', 'Ellwand', 'Eluand', 'Elwalde', 'Elwode', 'Elwolde', 'Elwood', 'Eluat', 'Ilwand' and even 'Willat'; see also Eliott and Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound).

Ellioti (e-lee-o-tee) n. specific name for several species found on or around the Indian subcontinent, which were first described by Sir Walter Elliot of Wolfelee. They are specifically: Buceros, hornbill; Dendrocopus, woodpecker; Golunda, groove-toothed mouse; Leopardus, leopard; Pernis, honey buzzard; Platydoris, sea slug; Syrmaticus, pheasant; and Tupaia or Anathana, tree-shrew (also spelled 'Elliotti' and 'Elliottii').

Elliot-Lockhart see Lockhart

Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound (e-lee-i'-mu-ri-kin-in-mund) n. Arthur Ralph Douglas (1846–1923) son of William Hugh and brother of Gilbert John, the 4th Earl of Minto. He was editor of the Edinburgh Review and Liberal M.P. for Roxburghshire 1880–92. In 1880 he defeated Sir George Henry Scott-Douglas by only 10 votes. He also defeated Charles Barrington Balfour of Newton-Don in 1885 and Mark Francis Napier in 1886, when he had become a Unionist. However, he lost in the rematch of 1892, although he returned as an M.P. for Durham 1898–1906. He was Financial Secretary to the Treasury 1903–06. In 1888 he married Harriet Dagmar Ryan and they had 2 children, Robert Douglas (who died young) and Capt. Hubert William Arthur (of the Wiltshire Regiment). Emma Eleanor Elizabeth nee Hislop (1824–82) daughter of Gen. Sir Thomas Hislop and wife of the 3rd Earl of Minto. She wrote several works relating to family history, including 'A Memoir of the Right Hon. Hugh Elliot' (1868), 'Life and Letters of Sir Gilbert Elliot, first Earl of Minto' (1874), 'Lord Minto in India' (1880) and 'Border Sketches' (1870). George Francis Stewart 'Doddy' (1822–1901) son of Gilbert, the 2nd Earl of Minto. He was an English barrister and was private secretary to Lord Russell (who was married to his sister Frances). He wrote 'The Border Elliots and the Family of Minto' (1897) as well as some other works. He was given a celebratory dinner in the Exchange Hall in 1868. In 1874 he was living in London when he donated to the Museum: '(1) a mummy head of a crocodile (about half grown); (2) a bundle of mummies of infant crocodiles; (3) a mummy band; (4) two necklaces of various coloured beads; (5) a mummy of the sacred ibis; (6) portion of cloth in which th humand remains were enveloped when discovered. The above were all found under ground near the village of Maadbeh, in Upper Egypt, on the Nile'. He died unmarried. His diaries are in the National Library of Scotland. Gilbert see Sir Gilbert Murray Kynynmound Elliot. Gilbert (1782–1859) 5th Baronet and 2nd Earl of Minto, born in Lyons. He was son of Gilbert the 1st Earl, who had adopted the extra surname after inheriting titles through marriage. Educated at Edinburgh University and Cambridge. He was Captain of the Roxburgh Militia 1802–05, and later (from about 1808) Lt.-Col. Commandant of the 1st Regiment Roxburghshire Militia. He became M.P. for Ashburton in Devonshire, and then for Roxburghshire from 1812 (following a long family tradition), defeating Alexander Don by 6 (or perhaps 7) votes. He was only M.P. until 1814, when he succeeded as Earl, taking up his seat in the House of Lords. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. He was an early member of the Jedforest Club, but resigned in 1834 following a dispute over politics. It was suggested that he intervened during the 'Lang Stand Oot' of 1822/3. He was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1825 and subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in that year. He was ambassador to Berlin 1832–34, First Lord of the Admiralty 1835–41, and Lord Privy Seal 1846–52. It is said that while he was in charge of the Admiralty there was a complaint raised about the number of Elliots who held positions in the Navy. He was also Deputy-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire and a member of the Royal Society. He retired to Minto House in 1852. In 1806 he married Mary, daughter of Patrick Brydone (traveller and author) of Lennel House near Coldstream, and she died in 1853. They had 10 children: Mary Elizabeth (d.1874), who married Baron Dunfermline; Francis Anna

Maria (1815–1898), who married Lord John Russell; Elisabeth Amelia Jane (d.1892), who married Frederick Romily; Charlotte Mary (d.1890), who married Melville Portal; Harriet Anne Gertrude (d.1855); William Hugh (1814–91), who became 3rd Earl; Adm. Sir Charles Gilbert John Brydone (1810–95), who married Loiusa Blackett and Henrietta Emily Liddell; George Francis Stewart (1822–1901), who a barrister in England, and wrote 'The Border Elliots'; Lt.-Col. Gilbert, who married Katherine Anne Gilbert; and Sir Henry George (1817–1907), who married Anne Antrobus. Gilbert John (1845–1914) 4th Earl of Minto, eldest son of William Hugh. Born in London, he was educated at Eton and Cambridge. He was known as an allround sportsman in his youth, excelling on horseback and running, as well as at rowing, shooting and angling. He served in the Scots guards 1867–70 and in 1871, along with 2 of his brothers, was in Paris during the Commune. He rode in the Grand National 5 times (breaking his neck in 1876) and won the Streeplechase de Paris in 1874. He was newspaper correspondent in a number of wars and an officer in others (serving in the Scots Guards), this taking him to various parts of Europe, Asia and Africa. He was Commandant of the Border mounted volunteers. He first went out to Canada in 1883 as military secretary to the Governor-General, and there helped suppress the rebellion led by Louis Riel, being present at the battle of Fish Creek. Back in Scotland, he was heavily involved with the Border Mounted Rifles and in 1889 became Brigadier-General of the Scottish Border Volunteer Brigade. In 1891 he succeeded to the Earldom of Minto, before which he had the title of Viscount Melgund. In 1898 he was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick at a public banquet held in the Town Hall. He became Governor-General of Canada in 1898, serving until 1904 and then was Viceroy of India (1905–1910), being jointly responsible for the Morley-Minto reforms of 1909. He returned to Scotland in 1910, but did not long enjoy his retirement. In Hawick he was made an Honorary Burgess in 1898, following his appointment as Governor-General of Canada, and Minto Place was named after him. In 1883 he married Mary Caroline, daughter of Gen. Charles Grey. They had 5 children: Eileen Nina Evelyn Sibell (1884–1938), who married Lord Francis George Montagu-Douglas-Scott, 6th son of the Duke of Buccleuch; Ruby Florence Mary (1886–1961), who married the 2nd Earl Cromer; Violet Mary (1889–1965) who firstly married Lord Charles George Francis Mercer Nairne and secondly became Lady Astor; Victor Gilbert Lariston Garnet (1891–1975), who succeeded; and Gavin William Esmond (1895–1917), who was killed at Flanders. Photographs of him show a fine handlebar moustache. He died at Minto House and was buried there. Many streets, schools, parks and towns (particularly in Canada and India) were named after him. Sir Gilbert Edward George Lariston 'Gibbie', O.B.E., J.P. (1928–2005) 6th Earl of Minto, succeeding his father in 1975. He was baptised in S.S. Mary & David in Hawick. Queen Mary was his Godmother. Educated at Eton and Sandhurst, he was commissioned into the Scots Guards and served as aide-de-camp to the Commander-in-Chief in the Far East and then Cyprus. He returned to run the farm at Minto, and played an active part in local affairs. He was elected to the Borders Regional Council, serving Hermitage Ward in 1974–80 and 1980–96, as well as being Convenor for the period 1990–96. In politics he was an independent. He was a J.P. for Roxburghshire from 1961 and was Depute Lieutenant for Roxburgh, Ettrick and Lauderdale. He was called 'Gibbie' by his friends, the same nickname used generations earlier in his family. He was a Brigadier in the Royal Company of Archers, the Queen's bodyguard in Scotland. He served on several national committees, including being President of the South Scotland Chamber of Commerce, and was awarded the O.B.E. in 1986. A battle with the Secretary of State for Scotland in 1991, where he objected to the preservation order placed on Minto House, led to its demolition. In 1952 he married Lady Caroline Child-Villiers, and after a divorce married Miss Ballantine of New Jersey, and had 2 children: Gilbert Timothy George Larriston (b.1953), who succeeded; and Laura (b.1956). Gilbert Timothy George Lariston of Minto (1953–) son of Gilbert Edward George Larriston, he became 7th Earl of Minto in 2005. Hugh Frederick Hislop (1848–1932) 3rd son of the 3rd Earl of Minto. Like several members of his immediate family he served as an M.P., for the North Division of Ayr, 1885–92. In 1879 he married Mary Euphemia, daughter of Col. Samuel Long. His children were Nina Emily (who married Sir Charles Lennox Somerville Russell), Mabel Victoria (who married Hugh Munro and secondly married William Stewart McGeorge and Lieut. Hugh Samuel Roger of the Coldstream Guards. Sir Victor Gilbert Lariston Garnet (1891–1975) 5th Earl of Minto, son of Gilbert John. He was known as Viscount Melgund until he succeeded his father in 1914. He weas educated at Eton, being then commissioned into the Lothian and Border Horse before entering the Scots Guards in 1913, becoming a Captain and serving through WWI. After the war he read the Roll of Honour for the fallen in WWI in St. Cuthbert's Kirk. He then went to Canada as A.D.C. to the Governor-General. Returning to Scotland, he ran his estate and played an active role in local work, becoming a Justics of the Peace and Deputy Lieutenant of Roxburghshire in 1924. In 1930 a portrait of the 1st Countess Minto by Joshua Reynolds was stolen from his private collection at Minto House and has never been recovered. In 1921 he married Marion, daughter of George William Cook of Westmount, Montreal. They had 4 children: Bridget Elliot (1921–2005), who married Lt.-Col. James Averell Clark and Maj. Henry Claude Lyon Garnett; Willa (b.1924), who married Maj. George David Chetwode; Gilbert Edward George Larriston (b.1928), who succeeded; and Lieut. George Esmond Dominic (b.1931), who married Countess Marie-Anna Esterhazy, 'Bunny'. William Hugh (1814–91) 3rd Earl of Minto, eldest son of Gilbert. He was Liberal M.P. for Hythe 1837–41, Greenock 1847–52 and Clackmannanshire 1857–59. In 1859 he succeeded to the Minto titles. In 1860 he had a writ for the lands and Barony of Headshaw, part of Hassendean Common and Langhope. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1863. He was Deputy-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire, served on the Lunacy Board for the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk and Berwick and chaired the Board of Lunacy Commissioners for Scotland. He was also a Justice of the Peace and Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire, as well as on the county Prison Board. He was a staunch supporter of the Established Church. He gave the main speech at the inauguration of the Leyden Monument in Denholm in 1861. He was also Patron of Hawick and Wilton Football Club. In 1866 he loaned items for a temporary exhibition in the Museum: 'Indian, Chinese, and Malay weapons; Eastern scpetre, set with uncut jewels; Eastern state spears; a Burmese volume, certainly in a style of binding and general get up which must be pronounced remarkable; the hat of the Chinese Commissioner Yeh, who made rather a prominent figure in Eastern politics and warfare some years ago; and a sword taken by Lord Nelson in the battle of Cape St Vincent, and presented by him to the then Lord Minto'. In 1844 he married his cousin Emma Eleanor Elizabeth, daughter of Gen. Sir Thomas Hyslop (or Hislop). They had 4 children: Gilbert John, who succeeded; Arthur Ralph Douglas, barrister, who married Madeleine Harriet Dagmar Ryan; Hugh Frederick Hislop, M.P., who married Mary Euphemia Long; and Lt.-Col. William Fitzwilliam, who married Elisabeth Fanny Rutherford. He died in London. William Brownrigg (1820–1900) eldest son of John Esmond Elliot, M.P. He was a J.P. for Roxburghshire and a Commissioner of Supply for the county. He was also a member of the Jedforest Club. He resided at Benrig, near St. Boswells. In 1858 he married Mary Geraldine, daughter of Justin McCartie of Carrignavar, County Cork. Their children were William Gerald and Cyril Herbert, both of whom died unmarried (whether the extra names are included in the Elliot surname or as middle names is confusing in these generations, with the triple-barrelled surname typically being only adopted by the Earl of Minto; note that 'Kynynmound' is also spelled 'Kynnmond' etc.).

the Elliot Bandstand (thu-e-lee-it-bawnd-stawnd) n. bandstand constructed in the Park in 2015 on the site of the former structure, named in commemoration of Zandra Elliot (see also the Bandstand).

the Elliots (thu-e-lee-itz, e-litz) n. important local family since at least the 15th century, thought to have been granted land in Liddesdale sometime in the 12th to 14th centuries, perhaps originally as vasals of the Douglases. There are theories and legends of how they came originally from Angus or from Eliot (now called Arbirlot) in Forfarshire, or were descended from a Norman soldier named 'Aliot'. This might be consistent with 'William Alight, burgois de Seint Johan de Perth' (who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296) being a direct ancestor of Elliots who were granted land in Liddesdale, perhaps in the time of Robert the Bruce. The first published suggestion that the Elliots came from Angus was probably by Capt. Walter Scott of Satchells in 1688. Another version of the origin of the name is that it derives from the old English personal name Elwold; this is consistent with some of the earliest local recordings of the name as 'Elwald', 'Ellwand' and variants (although it is possible that this was simply a scribal affectation). Perhaps the most likely early history has a Breton origin, perhaps 'Halegouët' (or Huelgoat), with land (later called 'Alyth') being given in Perthshire around the late 12th century, then moving to Liddesdale when given the lands of Redheugh around the early 14th century. There were people of that name close to the Borders from at least the 13th century (e.g. 'Elewald' and 'Helewald' in England in 1230, and Reginald son of Eliot in Dumfriesshire in the period 1242–95); the close geographic connection makes these people seem like likely ancestors for the Border Elliots, although other branches may have a different origin entirely. The first recorded example in the Borders may date from 1425/6 and there is certainly a 'Johannis Elwald' in 1436 and Gilbert in 1453. The family grew more powerful and numerous through the 15th century and in the 16th century effective took over control of Liddesdale from the Armstrongs. In 1494/5, among a list of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire there were listed 27 Elliots. They then had a reputation as notorious rievers, e.g. the Master of Hailes brought in 'the Elwands' in 1515/6. The clan submitted to England in 1547, with 74 men giving their pledges to Lord Wharton. Under Martin of Braidlie they were particularly powerful in the 1560s, but this led to a deadly feud with the Scotts, which included burning Hawick in 1565! A letter of 1583 lists the leaders of the family in Liddesdale. The clan suffered after the Union of the Crowns and attempts at 'pacification' of the Borders. The Elliots of Minto are derived from a grandson of the Eliotts of Stobs (who spelled their name differently), who in turn come from the earlier Chiefs at Redheugh in Liddesdale. The family moved their seat to Stobs for some time, although the chief once more sits at Redheugh. The Elliots of Brugh were also once well represented in Hawick, with other branches such as the Elliots of Horsleyhill and Wolfelee also being locally important. Elliots have been famous as soldiers, administrators and landowners. A pedigree of the family, dated about 1704, was discovered among the papers at Minto. The clan motto is 'Fortiter et recte' (boldly and rightly) – 'The double L and single T Descend from Minto and Wolflee, The double T and single L Mark the old race in Stobs that dwell, The single L and single T The Eliots of St. Germains be, But double T and double L Who they are, nobody can tell' [T], 'Land of Elliots and of fame, Of every bold and Border name, The Scottish pulse still beats the same Through kindly-hearted Liddesdale' [DA].

Elliot's (e-litz, e-lee-itz) n. stockingmakers of the mid-19th century, William Elliot & Sons, with their factory in Slitrig Crescent (probably No. 6), as well as at Tower Mill. The firm began around 1820, growing out of Waldie, Elliot & Co. (the Crescent), with Wilson & Elliot (Tower Knowe Mill), being formed in 1823. Elliot went on his own from 1830, later giving up spinning and focussing on hosiery. The firm was still listed at the Crescent in Slater's 1852 directory. It acquired Stonefield Mill and the old Waulk Mill in 1850 and had the new Tower Mill built (also on the site of the Auld Brig) in about 1852. The same firm later built Buccleuch Mills on Green Lane in 1862 (more recently Glenhowe). It had sseparate factories for spinning and knitting. In 1869 it is recorded that the firm employed 617 men, women and children, manufacturing 'Cheviot wool stockings, drawers and undershirts'. In 1871 the 3 locations employed 490 people between them, spinning 70 tons of wool and manufacturing 70 tons of goods. In 1896 J.P. Alison designed a new wool store for the factory.

Elliot's (e-litz) n. building firm of J. & R. Elliot in the 20th century. They purchased land from Watson's at 30 Commercial Road in about 1950. The firm was run by Ian Elliot from the 1960s and then his wife Zandra from 1990.

Elliots Field (e-litz-feeld) n. isolated house by the Slitrig, seen from the Waverley Line between Stobs and Shankend. It is on the east side of the Slitrig, by Fleety Wood and was later called Fleety Cottage. Andrew Beattie appears to have been tenant or shepherd there in the 1820s and 30s. William Maben and family were there in 1841, Robert Grieve and his wife were there in 1861, along with a domestic servant and 8 lodgers who were working on the railway. Robert Grieve was there in 1861 and R. McLean in 1868. Some shale from here, part of the Riccarton Beds, were found to contain graptolite fossils, including specimens of the species called 'Monograptus riccartonensis' (marked 'Elliotsfield' on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, it was recorded as 'Elliottfield' in 1857 and 'Eliotsfield' in 1860).

Elliot's Folly (e-litz-fo-lee) n. popular name used for a building constructed by Henry Elliot, Laird of Harwood in the mid-1700s. It was built on a small hill near an ancient camp, was thatched with heather and used by the Laird to watch his workers.

Elliotside (e-li'-sīd) n. lands that were formerly part of the estate of Douglas of Cavers, precise location uncertain. There are deeds relating to the lands in 1545, 1566 and 1614.

Elliot's Mill (e-litz-mil) n. former name for Toor Mill.

Elliott (e-lee-i') n. Nichol (b.1835–1904/5) born in Cornhill, Northumberland, near Coldstream, where his father was Schoolmaster. He became a joiner, working around the Borders. In the late 1850s he worked at Wilton Lodge, which was then being renovated for David Pringle. His 'Literary Hours of a Working Man' (1862) consists of prose and verse pieces, many from around this time, some having been previously published in the Hawick Advertiser. He also had poetry and prose printed in the Border Treasury (in the 1870s), as well as a longer story 'Nellie Macpherson'. Later he worked as Clerk to Sunderland Police Court and published essays and poems in papers from Sunderland and Newcastle (see also Elliot).

Ellis (e-lis) n. William (19th C.) married Margaret Scott Easton in Wilton Parish in 1852. William (b.1818/9) from Ireland, he was a shoemaker in Hawick. He is probably the William who in 1867 donated to the Museum 'part of the base of a horn found in sinking a well at Teviot Crescent Mill, 14 feet below the surface of the ground, and 4 feet below the level of the river'. He was a teacher living at 2 O'Connell Street in 1851 and a shoemaker at 1 O'Connell Street in 1861. He is probably the William who donated 3 coins to the Museum in 1871. He married Jane Ferguson in 1861 and their children included William.

Ellit see Elliot

Ellot (e-li') n. older spelling of 'Elliot' or 'Eliott', common into the mid-17th century. This spelling reflects the common local pronunciation (also written 'Elot' and other variants).

ellwand (el-wawnd) n., arch. a measuring rod one ell (about 37 inches) long, a yardstick – '. . . for ane elwand after the form of any other standard, vizt., to be made of iron jumpt after the length of the standart elwand of the town and burgh of Jedburgh for tryell of the ellwands' [BR1687], '. . . the ellwand or yard-stick used in the course of his business by his great-grandfather, who was known by the soubriquet of 'Handless Wat' ' [WAPJ] (also written 'elwand').

Ellwand see Elliot

elm (e-lum) n. elm (note normally pronounced as 2 syllables).

Elm Bank (e-lum-bawngk) n. original name of villa-type house at 6 Fenwick Park. It was built for Burgh Surveyor John Manuel in 1884, to designs by Manuel himself. The land was previously owned by Thomas Laidlaw of Sillerbuthall and joiner John Inglis, and before that the Turnbulls of Fenwick and Brieryyards. The access road became known as 'Manuel's Brae'. The house was bought by Robert Scott-Noble about 1900 and renamed 'the Elms'. It was used as Wilton Manse in the period 1945–90 and then renamed 'Ellistrin' when purchased by Ron and Eileen Smith.

Elmbank (e-lum-bawngk) n. small house in Denholm that used to be the preacher's house attached to the Cameronian Chapel.

Elm Cottage (e-lum-ko'-eej) n. former cottage to the north of Elm House, off the Green in Denholm.

Elm Court (e-lum-kōr') n. housing developed by Eildon Housing in 2000, in the renovated Store Dairy off Orchard Terrace, also incorporating the former Provost's House. It consists of 30 flats.

Elm Grove (e-lum-grōv) n. street in the Wellogate, built off Orchard Terrace in 1897 by Hawick Working Men's Building and Investment Company. It was named after the elm trees that used to grow there. The Hawick Co-operative Society had extensive premises in the street, including stables for the Store horses, as well as a grocer's shop and a butcher's. One of the last town gas lamps from this street is preserved in the Museum. Nos. 1–7 are grade C listed buildings.

Elm Hoose (e-lum-hoos) n. villa-style house at 17 North Bridge Street, converted into a hotel. It was built as the residence of Dr. John R. Hamilton in about 1880. After conversion to a hotel the dining room became one of the town's popular restaurants. The hotel incorporates adjacent buildings, giving it a complement of 16 rooms. It closed in the 2010s, but reopened in 2022 as the Hawick Hotel. It is grade C listed.

Elm Hoose (e-lum-hoos) n. house in Denholm near the eastern corner of the Green. It held a baker's shop in the late 19th and early 20th centuries and housed the Co-op store from 1951–85 (not to be confused with the hotel in Hawick).

Elm Hoose Hotel (e-lum-hoos-hō-tel) n. name used for Elm Hoose after it was converted into a hotel.

the Elms (thu-elmz, e-lumz) n. name given in 1901 to the house off Weensland Road known as 'Elmbank' (or 'Elm Bank'), which had been built in 1884. It was purchased in 1945 as a manse for Wilton Parish Church. By the 1990s it was back in private hands and renamed 'Ellistrin', with present address 6 Fenwick Park.

eln (eln) n., arch. a unit of length approaximately equal to 37 inches, a yard – '. . . fyned John Brown for weaving linen for ten penneyis the elne against their will . . . ' [BR1660], '. . . that none who shall cast peats for this year in Whitchesters Moss shall take above twelve yards of measure alongst the Moss side for spreading of the said peats, and that conform to the said twelve elns there must be a bridge left' [BR1735], '... to take no more ground to spreed peets next the moss side than the breadth of eight elns ...' [BR1743] (also ell).

Elphinstone (el-fin-stin) n. Alexander (17th C.) witness in 1652 to the marriage contract between Robert Eliott (2nd son of Simon of the Binks) and Margaret Riddell (eldest daughter of William, portioner of Bewlie), where he is described as 'in Hopsburne'. In 1653 he is recorded in a sasine as 'indweller in Hobisburne, baillie in that part to William, Earl of Lothian'. He was presumably related to the later Alexander. Alexander (17th/18th C.) eldest son of William and Margaret Langlands. In 1713 he sold the lands of Hartshaugh and Kirklands of Hobkirk to William Kerr of Abbotrule. Arthur (1688–1746) 6th Lord Balmerino. In 1740 he signed the agreement of the arbiters for the site of the Teviot Bridge in Hawick. Six years later he was beheaded for taking part in the Jacobite rebellion. John of Henderstoun (16th/17th C.) brother of George, Janet and Agnes. William Turnbull of Rulewood had a 'letter of apprising' against him in 1622 for non-payment of several bonds. He then had to yield up the Barony of Henderstoun (in Peeblesshire) and other lands to Turnbull. His son and heir was William. John (d.1649) 2nd Lord Balmerino, son of James, who was tried for supporting catholocism. He was imprisoned for opposition to Charles I, but eventually pardoned. He remained a staunch Covenanter, presiding over the Parliament which met in Edinburgh in 1641. In 1643 he was recorded in the valuation rolls as owner of Over Crailing and the Wester Mains of Hundalee. He also held lands in Hobkirk Parish, valued at £4844 16s 8d. It is said he was a mortal enemy of William Eliott of Stobs. Some of his lands in Rulewater were sold to John Stewart, Earl of Traquair and combined into the Wells estate. However, the bulk of his Rulewater property eventually became part of the estate of Eliott of Stobs. He was succeeded by his son John, and the titles became extinct in 1746 when Arthur, 6th Lord Balmerino was beheaded for supporing the Jacobite cause. Thomas (d.c.1519) received a gift of rights of the lands of Hassendeanbank, along with William (probably his son) in 1510. In 1512 he is also recorded in the Register of the Privy Seal along with his wife Elizabeth (an error for Janet?) Turnbull in a deed for Hassendeanbank. In 1512 he had a charter from Cuthbert Cunningham, Earl of Glencairn for half of the lands of Hassendeanbank, along with his wife Janet Turnbull (daughter and co-heiress of Walter Turnbull of Gargunnock). William had a 'precept of clare constat' in 1519, suggesting he was deceased by then. William (d.c.1486) younger son of Sir William of Pittendreich. He took up an ecclesiastical career. He became a Prebendary Canon of Glasgow and was Rector of Ashkirk by 1437. In 1479 he was stated to be holder of the Prebendary of Ancrum. He probably succeeded to his sons rights as Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1481. He may have held the office until he died. He fathered a son, William, with an unknown woman of baronial family. It has been suggested that his was Margaret, daughter of Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig and Hawick. This (illegitimate) son William became Bishop of Aberdeen and founded the university there in 1495. William (1431–1514) Bishop of Aberdeen and Chancellor of Scotland, son of William, Archdeacon of Teviotdale and grandson of Sir William of that Ilk. His mother may have been Margaret, daughter of Sir William Douglas, 1st Baron of Drumlanrig and also Baron of Hawick. He was an official at Glasgow University in the 1470s and became a Lord of Council in Parliament by 1478. He appears to have held some of the rights of Archdeacon of Teviotdale in the period 1479–81, with his father taking over from him. He was on the Privy Council in 1508/9 when John Muir of Rowallan was directed to give 'warrandice' to George Scott for Dryden, Commonside and Over Harwood. He was probably the William who (along with Thomas) received a gift of the rights of the lands of Hassendeanbank through 'non-entry' in 1510. William (15th/16th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1519 he had a 'precept of clare constat' for half of the lands of Hassendeanbank. Thie suggests he was son of Thomas, who held the lands in 1512. Almost immediately he gave a charter of the same lands to Andrew Ker of Cessford and Agnes Crichton. William (17th C.) acquired the lands of Hartshaugh in the Rule valley, along with his heir Alexander. The lands were probably bought from Gilbert Eliott of Craigend in the mid-1600s and remained in the family until 1713. It is unclear to which branch of the Elphinstones he belonged. In 1637 he was 'Williame Elphingstoun in Blacklyemouth, alias Steytheveyage' (presumably 'stay the voyge') when he witnessed a Hobkirk sasine. He married Margaret, daughter of John Langlands, the minister of Wilton. William (17th C.) listed as tenant of Hartshaughmill on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was surely a descendant of the earlier William of Hartshaugh. He was recorded as owner of Hartshaugh (including the mill and mill lands) in 1707, when they were valued at £60 (formerly written 'Elphingston', 'Elphingstoun' and variants).

Elrickhill (el-rik-hil) n. lands near Denholm, recorded in the Douglas of Cavers deeds around the 16th century. In 1511 it is 'Elrechill' when listed (along with 'Drileth', 'Murelaw' and 'Dennummains') as part of the Barony of Cavers. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687, when written 'Ellrighill', and by his brother Archibald in 1698, when transcribed 'Elvighill'. It is unclear exactly where these lands were located, but presumably near Denholm.

else (els) adv., arch. already, ere now – 'Forbye, A was i the hert's hyimm, els!' [ECS], '... for it was weel-on o haaf-past five, els!' [ECS], 'Have ee come back else!' [GW] (also written 'els').

elshin (el-shin) n., arch. a shoemaker's awl – '... or pinglin' wi' an elshin like the souters o' Selkirk' [JMW], '... gave him, to use his own words, 'hawf an inch o' the elshin'' [WNK] (also elsin).

elsin box (el-sin-boks) n., arch. a box for holding awls.

Elwald (el-wawl') n. early form of Elliot, e.g. recorded in a in 1497 when several men of that name witnessed a sasine for Redheugh. It is unclear if the Gilbert son of 'Elewald', 'Walter son of 'Helewald' and 'Helewald' son of Herbert, listed in an assize in Newcastle in 1230, were connected. Perhaps the earliest record is for 'Johannis Elwald', who witnessed a sasine for Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee in 1436. Gilbert Elwald is mentioned in 1453, on a document relating to lands in Feu-rule. 'John Elwalde' of Thorlieshope is recorded in 1488 and 1498. 'Robert Elwolde, of the Hermitage' is recorded in 1491. A letter of remission for Patrick Earl of Bothwell in 1500 names 14 men of that surname in Liddesdale and surrounding areas. The same spelling is used in the Register of the Privy Seal in 1510 and 1516, for families of Redheugh, Larriston, etc., so this is clearly an alternative early spelling (although Pitcairn in his 'Criminal Trials' states 'The Elwalds, notorious Border Thieves. The name is now extinct'). It is unclear whether this spelling was related to the pronunciation of the time, but it seems likely it was only used by scribes as an anglicised version of the name. In 1526/7 we have Gavin recorded, and in 1535 George and James. William and Robert Elwald are recorded as Liddesdale thieves in 1535. In the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale the name is recorded consistently as Elwald. Letters from English Wardens to their superiors from around this time also consistently use the form 'Elwald' (with spelling variants; although one letter of 1542/3 uses the perhaps more phonetic spelling 'Eylwittes'). James Elwald in Dalkeith is recorded as witness to a document relating to the lands of Pettie in 1555. In a list of Borderers charged to appear before Queen Mary in 1561 we find the names 'Elwald' and 'Ellot' used interchangeably. By the end of the 16th century the forms 'Elot', 'Ellat', etc. are certainly more common. It is also possible that some of the earlier references were to an entirely different family, e.g. there were Elwolds in Ellingham Parish, Northumberland in the 12th century, in Newcastle in 1230 and throughout the Border counties of England in the 13th and 14th centuries. A man called 'Elewald' was killed in 1278/9 when accidentally struck in the head by a mallet near Alston in Cumbria. There were also people of the designation 'de Elaund' recorded in Northumberland in the 1260s and 1270s, which may be the same family (also written 'Ellwald', 'Ellwalld', 'Eluwald', 'Eluvald', 'Elwad', 'Elwalde', 'Ewal' and occasionally 'Elwand' and 'Elwood'; the '-wald' ending suggests a Saxon origin, and there is an 'Elwoldus' mentioned as early as 964 in the Melrose Chronicle; the use of this form for members of the Border Elliot family has caused some confusion in accounts of the origins and history of the Elliots, but was probably mostly an affected form used in formal documents).

Ely Grain (e-lee-grān) n. small stream that joins Linhope Burn at the shepherd's cottage of Elygrain (see also Alliegrain).

emigration (e-mee-grā-shin) n. moving overseas, expatriation. This was common for local people, particularly in the 18th and 19th centuries, with the usual destinations being America, Canada, Australia and New Zealand. Most boats would leave from the western ports, Hawick folk often being ferried from Annan to the ships that left Liverpool. In the early part of the 19th century it was common to see carts leaving along the New Road towards Langholm, loaded with woman and children and modest lugguge, with the men walking, and friends following them a mile or so out of town.

em (em) v. am (first person singular, present tense) – 'A em so', 'em A allowed oot the night?', 'A em listenin ti ee' (often used emphatically; also sometimes um as well as occasionally the English am).

Emmett (e-mi', -mit) n. John T. (1828–98) English architect and architectural critic who designed the new Wilton Church, built 1859–62. He had previously been responsible for Bath Street Independent Church in Glasgow (now called Renfield St. Stephen's and also referred to as Blythswood), which has the tallest spire in that city. He also designed Sandyford Church, Glasgow. It is said that he was influenced by Gothic revivalist August Welby Pugin, and that his designs (being quite Gothic and Anglican in appearance) heavily influenced later Presbyterian and Episcopalian church designs in Scotland.

Emmettshiels (e-mi'-sheelz) n. former name for lands probably near Harwood-on-Teviot, in the Barony of Hawick. They were held 'in tenandry' by the Baron of Hawick from at least 1511, mentioned again in 1572, 1594 and 1615, and recorded again in the ratification of the Barony of Hawick to Anna Duchess of Buccleuch in 1686. They were owned by the Scotts of Crumhaugh in the latter part of the 17th century. Precisely where they were is uncertain, but in 1686 they are 'the lands of Harwoodhill and Emmetsheels, somtymes called Lant and Emmetsheells' (it is 'Emetschelis' in 1511, 'Emetscheilis' and 'Emetschelis' in 1572, 'Emeschellis' in 1594 and 'Emetscheillis' in 1615).

emni (em-, am-, um-ni) contr. am not, literally 'amn't' – 'A emni din yit', 'Mibbe ee're feenished, bit A emni', '... an' in the nicht seesen, an' amna seelent' [HSR], '... whase shoon I amna wurdy til bear' [HSR] (also spelled 'amni' etc.; used for emphasis, cf. emn't; it is unclear why 'A emni' is used sometimes in preference to 'Am erni'; local dialect fills the gap left in standard English, where 'amn't' doesn't exist).

emn't (em-in', am-in', um-in') contr. am not – 'A'm the wunner, emn't A?', 'emn't A the daftest glaik ee've ever seen?' (also imn't; usually precedes the first person singular pronoun; cf. emni; emmen is a shortened form).

Emond (e-mind) n. Robert (19th C.) probably son of James and Thomasina Montgomery. He was Cornet in 1876 and flesher to trade. He was arrested along with 7 others after Edward Dearden was fatally injured at the Thursday Night Chase, but later released. Probably the same Robert was listed as a butcher in Selkirk in 1897. He may be the power-loom tuner who died in Selkirk in 1913, aged 79.

the Empire (thu-em-pIr) n. name for the cinema at the Exchange in the early 20th century.

the Employment Exchange (thu-em-ploi-min'-iks-chānj) n. Hawick's Employment Centre, which opened in 1939 on Teviot Crescent, off the Little Haugh. The building later housed Diesel's nightclub and then the Santa Marina restaurant.

[BR1706], to pawn, put up as security – '... I am a Gentleman by Parentage, but my Fathers having dilapidate and engaged their Estate by Cautionary ...' [CWS].

the Engineer (thu-in-ji-neer) n. name of one of the stagecoaches which regularly ran between Carlisle and Hawick before the railway, the other being 'the Favourite'. The route started at the Tower and finished at the Grey Goat Hotel (on English Street) in Carlisle. The coach ran from 1825 until 1862. Robert Govenlock was one of the original guards. According to Pigot's 1825 directory the 2 coaches were called 'the Mail' and 'the Sir Walter Scott', but it may be that these names were never used locally.

England (ing-glund, -glind) n. country to the south of Hawick, usually entered across the Carter Bar or near Canonbie. The 19th century saw a large immigration to Hawick of people from English hosiery centres around Derby, Leicester and Nottingham – 'Ours was a land – a free fair land – Ere England had a name; And minstrel's harp and warrior's brand Have aye upheld her fame' [JT], ' 'Mong the beauty spots of England I have rambled far and near ... But I like auld Hawick the best' [TK], 'Dive ee leike ti beide up Ingland?' [ECS], 'Here were the white road from England Drops to the Rule and the Jed, Leaps the proud pulse of the exile, Back to the motherland sped' [WL] (sometimes written 'Ingland'; note the pronunciation is always i-, never e-).

Englandshire (ing-glund-shIr) n. humorous name for England – 'Here, hevin contemplated the 'glorious river Tweed – clear and majestic' Burns, for the first time in his life crossed owre inti Englandshire ... ' [IWL] (a Landlesism).

English (ing-gleesh) adj. coming from south of the Border, n. the people living south of the Border – '... in refusing to go as ane gyd to the Inglis to Langholm' [BR1651], 'The English love to sip through a stiffened upper lip. They believe they are a race of self-made men; thus relieving the Almighty of the blame for making Blighty, and relieving Him of blame for making them' [TD], v., arch. to translate into English – ' 'And startled up auld liart carlins may be Englished, 'and transformed themselves into old grey headed witches' ' [EM1820].

English (ing-gleesh) n. Adam (17th C.) Hawick resident, married to Margaret Thorbrand. Their children included: John (b.1642); Janet (b.1644); William (b.1646); and Janet (again, b.1649). Probably the same Adam is listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694 (it is possible that this is a variant of 'Inglis').

the English Cricket Field (thu-ing-gleesh-kri-ki'-feeld) n. former field near St. Cuthbert's, used for cricket, P.S.A. rugby matches etc., situated where Lyle & Scott's offices now stand.

the English Grammar Schuil (thu-ing-gleesh-graw-mur-skil) n. another name for Hawick Grammar School, once in Orrock Place. The name possibly came from a combination of the formerly separate 'English' and 'Grammar' schools, and may only have been used once they were merged in about 1825 (otherwise the name is too confusing!).

the English Kirk (thu-ing-gleesh-kirk) n. informal name for the Episcopal Church, because of its ties with the Anglican Church. In Hawick this was the name given (with no obvious sense of disparagement) to St. Cuthbert's Church, partly also because of the number of southern incomers who joined its congregation.

the English Schuil (thu-ing-gleesh-skil) n. name formerly used to refer to the 'Parish' as opposed to 'Grammar' school, i.e. the elementary school, which was taught in English rather than Latin. Pupils were between the ages of 6 and 14, typically attending for 2 years, learning reading, writing and arithmetic. In the 17th century the school-house was St. Mary's Kirk. In 1683 there was a plea made for the school to be housed elsewhere than the Kirk, partly because 'the pews had suffered a considerable loss by the scholars breaking the same'. The school continued to use St. Mary's until ousted by the Grammar School in 1711, after which the Schoolmaster was paid an amount to rent a schoolhouse; it is unclear what building was used in the early 18th century. In 1715 it is recorded that 5 merks were appropriated by the Council for the rent of a house for the school, with the other half to be paid by the Kirk Session. In 1722 the master was given 40 merks by the Council for renting a school-house for 4 years 'when he had not the liberty to teach in the kirk' and in 1737 he was allowed £8 annually for the rent of a schoolhouse. In 1739 the first purpose-built school was erected, being 30 feet by 16 feet (inside the walls); this was probably at Slitrig Bank. The school once had its own flag that was carried in the Common-Riding procession, behind the Grammar School flag and in front of the apprentices flag, according to the 1747 Council decree. In 1756 the Schoolmaster was given £4 'towards assisting him in the reparation of his dwelling house', with the heritors probably paying the other half. The building was damaged in the 1767 flood, with the Schoolmaster's house carried away. Again money had to be given to rent a different building, and in the early 1800s part of the Town House was used when the school was once more repaired. It united with the Grammar School in 1824/5. The same name was later informally used for St. Cuthbert's School, which was attached to 'the English Kirk' and opened about 1848, with a purpose-built school constructed 1849/50. An Episcopalian school was also opened in Wilton in 1851, and there appears to have been a third one in the town at about the same time.

the English side (thu-ing-gleesh-sīd) n. the other side of the Border into England – ''Here Johnie Armstrang, take thou my sword, That is made o' the metal sae fine; And when thou comest tae the English side, Remember the death of Hughie the Graeme'' [T], '...James Olifer, toun piper, seeing several immoralities, revellings, drunkenness, frequent cursing, blaspheming ye name of God, ... beside his irregular marriage on the English side ...' [PR1720], 'The long line of the Carter, Teviotdale flung wide, And a slight stir in the heather – a wind from the English side' [WHO].

enlairge (in-lārj) v. to enlarge – '...To gratify yer ain puir spite Enlairging every flaw' [FL].

enlichten (in-lich-tin) v., arch., poet. to enlighten – '...the commandment o' the Lord is pure, enlichtenin' the eyne' [HSR], 'His lichtenin's enlichtenet the warld; the yirth saw, an' trimmlet' [HSR], '...an' was enlichtened on the poseetion as regairds the Common-Ridin'' [BW1939].

enormitie (ee-nor-mi-tee) n., arch. a shocking crime, outrageous wrong – '...quhither we or any of oure foirsaidis be the actoris of the enormities, sall be chalenged ...' [SB1599], '...by yr night rambling commit divers and sundrie abominable irregularities, unlawful faults, and enormities and abuses by yr scandalous outrages ...' [BR1706], '...John Binnie, late Baylyea for his miscarriages, egregious enormities and faults ...' [BR1706].

enshair (en-shār) adj. to ensure – 'Enshair for sunshine! That's what they want tae dae tae make the Common-Riding pay' [HE1939].

Ensign (en-sīn) n., arch. a standard-bearer in an army unit. This word is used in the 1706 Burgh Records to refer to the Cornet, but does not appear again after that – '...and voted Thomas Hardie, merchand, to be ensigne and to carrie the colour' [BR1706].

enter (en-tur) v., arch. to present oneself or someone else in court, to assume possession of lands or property – '...to haue enterit, ressauit and rentallit, and be the tennour heirof enteris, ressauis and retallis the said Gilbert and his airis ...' [SB1591].

entry (en-tree) n., arch. presentation to a court – '...and thair to remane quhill lawfull entre be takin of him be Sir Jhone of Farnehirst, Knycht' [RBA1561].

envade (en-vād) v., arch. to invade – '...in his time the Murrays and Rosses envading each other; with cruel killing, two thousand were killed in either Parties' [CWS].

epie (e-pee) n., arch. a blow with a sword (also yepie; noted by J. Jamieson).

Episcopacy (e-, ee-pis-kō-pi-see) n. the government of a church by bishops, also known as 'prelacy' in Scottish history. This form of church organisation was thrown out in Scotland during the Reformation, about 1560. However, Episcopalianism was also favoured by the Stewart kings, as well as by most of England, and Charles I tried to forcibly reimpose this form of worship and governance on Scotland in 1637. This led to the signing of the National Covenant in 1638 and the Solemn League and Covenant in 1643, and the resultant complications over Scotland's role in the English Civil War. Later Episcopacy was forceably re-introduced in Scotland following the restoration of Charles II in 1660. All ministers appointed since 1649 were ordered to resign and ask for reinstatement. Although most accepted, the strongest Covenanters refused, particularly in the sourth-west of Scotland, where there was a growing rebellion as more bishops were appointed. There then followed 2 decades of persecution of the Covenanters until Presbyterianism was again introduced in the Revolution of 1688–89. Episcopalian ministers were ejected soon after William arrived in Britain, and for the next few years ministers continued to be removed for refusing to 'pray for William and Mary'. The last Episcopal incumbent of Hawick Parish was John Langlands, ousted in 1689 during the Revolution. Episcopal services apparently continued for a while in a private house on the Kirk Wynd. The ideals became mixed with those of the Jacobites through the 18th century. Thomas Somerville, minister at Cavers, apparently refused to take the oath for William and Mary, moving to Hawick to preach to a group of Episcopalians including members of the Gledstains and Chisholme families. Along with Francis Scott (ex-minister of Hassendean) they set up a meeting house at the Playlaw (i.e. near the Auld Mid Raw and Kirk Wynd) in 1712, following the passing of the Act of Toleration. A small groups continued to met in a house in the Kirk Wynd until about 1777, with Rev. Findlay McLennan leading the last services.

With a lapse of almost 70 years a mission station was started by Rev. W.S. White of Jedburgh in 1846. Rev. Robert Campbell continued in the following year, the first baptism was 1847, the Church Schools were built in 1850 and the new Church itself opened in 1858 (also written 'episcopacy').

Episcopalian (ee-pis-kō-pā-lee-in) adj. belonging to the Episcopalian Church, pertaining to the government of a church by bishops.

Episcopalianism (ee-pis-kō-pā-lee-in-i-zum) n. the doctrine of governing a church through bishops, prelacy. In Scotland's history this has tended to mean the opposite of Presbyterianism.

the Episcopalian Kirk (thu-ee-pis-kō-pā-lee-in-kirk) n. the Scottish Episcopalian (or Episcopal) Church is essentially a vestige of the Disestablishment of the Church of Scotland in 1689. It is run by bishops, and has much in common with the Church of England. Like the rest of Scotland, Hawick's parish church was Episcopalian in the period 1662–89. Thereafter local Episcopalians probably met in secret. There is an entry (in the Parish Kirk records of the 1770s) of a baptism performed by Rev. Findlay McLennan 'Minister of the Episcopal Congregation of Hawick') in 1753. The church met publicly again in a Kirk Wynd house in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. This building was situated at the western end, opposite the churchyard. A new church was opened in Jedburgh in 1844 and a mission was started in Hawick by the Jedburgh minister in 1846, meeting in the Orrock Place Grammar School, with the school (and possibly the congregation itself) meeting in Inglis' Ballroom from 1847. The Church Schools were built about 1850 on Slitrig Crescent, with services held there for several years. The purpose-built St. Cuthbert's Church was erected in 1857/58, with the site and building paid for by the Duke of Buccleuch.

the Episcopal Schuil (thu-ee-pis-kō-pal-skil) n. another name for St. Cuthbert's Schuil. There was also a private school taught under Episcopal supervision in about 1846 by Thomas Marchbanks in a pended apartment in the Mid Raw; probably the same school operated in the ballroon of the Half-Moon Hotel around a year later. An Episcopalian school opened on Wilton Crescent in 1851, and in 1852 it is recorded that there were 3 such schools operating within Hawick and Wilton, with 180 children registered.

Eppy (e-pee) n. Christian name, a pet form of Euphemia, Elspeth or Elizabeth (also spelled 'Eppie').

Eppy Suitty (e-pee-si'-ee, -soo'-) n. local nickname, probably from the late 18th or 19th centuries. Her real name was probably Euphemia Stevenson, and her name came with the darkness (or dirtiness) of her attire. She is described in an Edinburgh Magazine article of 1820 as a modern witch, who wore a mantle that was 'black as soot (whence probably she derived her title), and of a most aromatic perfume' and also wore a large hood. Her personal appearance was also said to be striking, with 3 prominent teeth and a long 'whiskin' beard'. She was said to be demanding of food and money, promising good luck to those who complied and cursing those who refused. She told fortunes, especially relating to affairs of the heart, and it is said that she was so well connected with the common people, that she could use the information gathered previously to yield apparently impressive readings. Her death is said to have come a few days after convincing her own sister to sever her foot, after the apendage had been giving her so much trouble that she wanted it to be amputated. She may have been married to William Scott, with the death of their daughter Helen recorded in 1805. She was dead by 1820 and was said to have lived into the 90s – '...the far-famed Euphemia Stevenson, alias Black Eppy, alias Eppy the Witch, alias Eppy Sooty' [EM1820], '...bar yeh haaflang chaap as black as Eppie Suittie' [ECS], 'Black as the yiss o spades; black as Eppie Suittie. – Expressions signifying exceeding blackness' [ECS], 'Eppy Sootie and Wullie Pairk, Geordie the Buck and Higgins Phill, Jamie Nichol the Hawick band clairk, The Duddy Laird and Shallow Bill' [HI] (also written 'Eppie Suittie' and variants; the name may have been in more widespread use as a dark-faced 18th century witch).

Ermildon (er-mil-din) n. former name for 'Ernilton' in Liddesdale, which probably corresponds to the modern Arnton. In the c.1376 rental roll (among the charters of the Douglases of Morton) 'Newland de Ermyldoun' has a value of 13 shillings and 4 pence (see Ernilton').

ern (ern, e-rin) n. iron – 'it was made o solid ern', '... She'll raise her cruikit Earn-like gab, An' gie my feelings sic a stab' [JoHa], 'Thou sallt brik thame wi' ane rodd o' ern' [HSR], 'Whase feet thaye hurtet wi' fetters; he was layde in ern' [HSR], '... whan wud turns geizant an ern lowps abreed' [ECS], 'When ma last ern shot's been shankeet ... ' [IWL], 'There yaised ti be a lovely bit o cast ern engineerin, the sluice outlet at the fer end ... ' [IWL], adj. made of iron – 'Ern Yetts! Ern Yetts!' [RM], v. to iron – 'ee'll hev ti ern yer ain claes this week', 'it'll look better when it's erned', 'A'm fair muitteet oot wi wui weshin an ernin, an thing' [ECS] (also spelled 'earn'; cf. airn).

Ern Cleuch (ern-klooch) n. stream that joins the Ettrick Water between Singlie and Ettrickbridge. The lands there were owned by the Crown from at least 1456. They were associated with a branch of the Turnbulls in the 15th century, perhaps the same branch who were also at Whithope and Harden in the Borthwick valley. John Turnbull was Laird there in 1464/5. It is probably the Crown property of 'Ernheugh', which was let along with Singlie to Walter Turnbull of Gargunnock in 1484, Thomas Home of Langshaw in 1490, Patrick Home of Fastcastle in 1492 and Sir Robert Ker in 1499. It remained Crown property until at least 1502. The Laird of Whithope 'in ernheuch' was recorded in 1494/5 and Robert Scott was recorded there in the same year. David Pringle was recorded there in 1502. The Laird of Cessford was tenant in 1541, paying £28. It passed to Sir William Scott of Harden about 1605 and was later owned by the Scotts of Bonnington (it is 'Ernhuche' in 1456, 'Ernhuych' in 1464/5, 'Erncleuch' in 1468, 'Ernheuch' in 1490 and in 1494/5, 'Erneheuch' and 'erneheuch' in 1502, 'erin heuch' in 1534, Ernheuch' in 1541, 'Orneheucht' in 1580/1, 'Ernescleugh' in 1593, 'Erneheuche' about 1605 and 'Ernesheugh' in 1624; 'Earnhead' is marked on Gordon's c.1650 map).

Erneside Craigs (ern-sīd-krāgz) n. craggy outcrop in southern Castleton, situated between Blinkbonny Height and the Kershope Burn. Nearby are the remains of a settlement, about 70 m by 40 m in size.

Ernest Augustus (er-nist-aw-gus-tis) n. (1771–1851) King of Hannover. He was 5th son of George III, being made to serve with the Hanoverian hussars in 1790, returning to England in 1776. In 1799 he was created Duke of Cumberland and Teviotdale. Very unpopular in Britain at the time, he was variously accused of murder and incest. Because of the rules of succession he became King of Hanover in 1837 on the death of his brother William IV, and was apparently much more popular there than back home. He married Friederike Caroline Sophia Alexandrina of Solms-Braunfels. He outlived his 8 brothers and was succeeded by his son George V of Hannover. Ernest Augustus William Adolphus George Frederick (1845–1923) only son of George V of Hanover and grandson of Ernest Augustus. After the death of his father the assumed the title of Duke of Cumberland and Teviotdale in the British peerage. However, he was an officer in the Austrian army, and since he fought against Britain in WWI he had his titles stripped in 1919. He was thus the 3rd and last Duke.

erni (er-ni) contr. aren't, are not – 'they erni likely ti help', 'looks erni everyhin ee ken', also used to negate 'am' – 'am erni gaun oot the night' (there are spelling variants; cf. arni, erren, ern't and irni).

Ernilton (er-nil'-in) n. former house marked on Blaeu's 1654 map, located in the hills approximately north of Steele Road. The area to the north is marked 'Erniltoun b. fell', corresponding probably to the modern Arnton Fell, suggesting that one of the streams there was the Ernilton Burn. The rental roll for Liddesdale from about 1376 lists 42 separate pieces of land under 'Quarterium de Ermyldoune', which is probably the same place. The name was thus formerly of much greater significance. Owners of land there around 1376 include 'Johannis Raufson', 'Ricardi Broun', 'Thome Gilson', 'Ade de Syde', 'Elie Nobill', 'Dauid Stodhirde', 'Ennie de Lawys', 'Ricardi de Lawis', 'Roberti de Lawis', 'Mathei Meryng' and 'Willelmi Nycson'.

Ernip Slack (er-nip-slawk) n. former name for a glen north of Stirches. The precise location is unclear, but W.N. Kennedy describes that it was about a half-mile beyond Stirches and in the early 1800s the Edinburgh road crossed this deep glen, which had a reputation for being haunted. Rev. John Young and a local farmer were accosted there by a supposed spirit, which turned out to be a robber in disguise, who was accosted by the minister and told to desist from his criminal activities or he would be reported (the name is otherwise unknown and may refer to the dip at a bend in the road just south of the 'Fower Road Ends'; 'ernip' may be a misheard or mistyped 'ernit').

ernit (er-ni') n., arch. an earth-nut, the edible tuber of certain wild plants, particularly Bunium bulbocustanum and Bunium flexuosum – 'In loose soil, not only in woods, but on open banks, the Earthnut, or Arnut, well-known to country boys, who 'howk' for its esculent chestnut-tasted tuberous roots, is an abundant product' [JAHM] (also written 'arnut'; cf. ern-nit).

the Ern Kirk (thu-ern-kirk) n. iron sheeting structure that existed at the site of Wilton South Church from 1888–1894, having been given to the local United Presbyterian Church by worshippers in Rothesay.

ern-mail (ern-māl) n., arch. a red stain on cloth caused by rust – 'Ern-mail = iron mould; an iron or sodium stain on cloth' [ECS].

ern-nit (ern-ni') n., arch. an earth-nut, particularly Bunium bulbocustanum and Bunium flexuosum – '. . . we used to go to the wood . . . and howk 'ern-nits' ' [JTu] (also ernit).

Ernpistols (ern-pis-tulz) n. popular name for the Nichol family, who were bakers in Hawick in the 18th century. One of the family, William, became a naval officer.

ernt (ernt, ern') pp. ironed – '. . . Then ernt and weel aired Afore a roarin' fire o coals' [DH].

ern't (e-rin') contr. aren't, are not – 'ern't they the yins fri Lynnwud?' (note that this is used before the noun, where erni tends to be the form used after the noun; also spelled 'errent').

Erntage (ern-tij) n. local variant of Hermitage.

erren (e-rin) contr. aren't, are not – 'they're awfi sair losers, erren they?' (short form of ern't; culd be written 'er'n' ').

errent see ern't

erse (ers) n., imp. arse, the fundament, bottom, hinder part of something – 'deh teer the erse oot o'd', a stupid or contemptible person – 'deh mind him, hei's jist an erse', a mess – 'ee made a right erse oot o that, didden ee?'.

erse-brod (ers-brōd) n., arch., imp. a backboard, tail-board of a cart – 'For I was lan'-ward bred, and lang For thick-broon at brig-ends, and speech As blunt's the erse-brod o' a cairt' [DH] (also 'erse-board'; cf. ear-board).

'ersel (ur-sel, er-sel) pron. herself – 'naeb'dy wad gaun wi 'er, so she hed ti gaun 'ersel' (see also hersel).

erselins cowp (ers-linz-kowp) n., arch. a fall onto the buttocks – 'Arselins coup. The act of falling backward on the hams' [JoJ].

Erskine (ers-kin) n. Adam (15th C.) left 3 sheep in the 1491/2 will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme. He is listed as 'Ade Erskyn'. Alexander

(d.bef. 1509) served heir to his father Thomas in 1494, when he became 3rd Lord. He thereby also inherited the estates of Synton and Dalgleish and the office of Sheriff of Selkirk (as well as many other lands and titles), for which he already held a crown charter of 1489. He witnessed a document relating to 'Langhassendean' in 1480/1. He had a sasine for Synton on 1493. He held the lands on formal presentation to the King of a pair of gilt spurs at Whitsunday, if asked. He may be the Laird of Whitslade who was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5. In 1502 his son and heir Robert had a charter of the lands of Nisbet from him. He married Christian, daughter of Sir Robert Crichton of Sanquhar. Their children included Robert (4th Lord), Walter, Christian and Agnes. He later married Ellen, daughter of Alexander, 1st Lord Home. Andrew history teacher at Hawick High School. He met fellow librarian Pamela in Hawick; they married in 1958 and had sons Jonathan and Adam. Charles of Shielfield (1771–1825) 2nd son of Rev. James, he succeeded on the death of his brother Lieut.-Col. Henry. He was a lawyer, who was Sheriff-Substitute for Selkirkshire, as well as being Baron Bailie of Melrose, and stayed at the Priory there. He was a good friend of Sir Walter Scott, under whom he worked. He was a founding member of the Jedforest Club. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. In 1806 at Borthwickshiels he married Barbara, only daughter of George Pott of Todrig. Their children included: James, who succeeded, and married his cousin Barbara Pott; and Col. George Pott, who married Jane, daughter of Rev. G. Coventry. David Stuart (1742–1829) 11th Earl of Buchan, succeeding his father Henry at the age of 27. One of his brothers was Harry, Lord Advocate of Scotland and another was Thomas, Lord Chancellor of England. Interested in history and the arts in Scotland, he was a founder member of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland. He also founded the Ednam Club to maintain interest in the poetry of James Thomson (who he knew when he was a child) and had a tablet erected on Thomson's grave in Richmond. It was said that he encouraged Burns to write 'Scots Wha Hae'. He was also instrumental in having the Encyclopædia Britannica published. In 1786 he purchased the Dryburgh estate, saving the abbey from further destruction. He used it as the centrepiece for his planned 'Caledonian Temple of Fame'. The main parts of this vision that were completed were the obelisk in the Abbey grounds, the Wallace statue and the Temple of the Muses. He had Dryburgh House substantially rebuilt and lived there until his death. Robert Murray gave a talk about him to the Archæological Society in 1862. A strong anti-slavery proponent, it was said that he had a sign put at Dryburgh saying 'No American slaveholder allowed to enter here'. Sir David (1772–1837) historian and dramatist. His father, the 11th Earl of Buchan, had bought Dryburgh Abbey, saving it for posterity, and he inherited the estate in 1810. He wrote historical plays, among them 'James V; or, The warlike days o' Hab of Hawick: an historical drama' in 1829, published by John Anderson, Edinburgh, 1830 (this being a fanciful version of the old story). He is also described as 'Captain Erskine of Dryburgh'. He died without issue and the Dryburgh estate passed to Henry David, 12th Earl of Buchan. Rev. Henry 'Harry' (1692/3–1773) son of James of Sheilfield in Berwickshire and Elizabeth, daughter of John Scott of Ancrum. He was licensed to preach by Kelso Presbytery in 1722, was presented to Roberton Parish at the end of 1727 and became minister there early the next year. He was recorded in discharges with the Burgh of Selkirk in 1742, 1751, 1754, 1767 and 1772. In 1762 he had a commission from Patrick Cunningham (perhaps his brother-in-law) to grant his lands in the Parish of Wilton (possibly at the Sandbed) to Walter Scott. He married Janet, daughter of Rev. Robert Cunningham, minister of Hawick; she died aged 64 in 1766. Their children included James (b.1731), Marjory (b.1734) and Robert (b.1740), baptised in Roberton. He was succeeded in the Roberton ministry by his son James. The memorial tablet to Rev. Robert Scott of Roberton had some lines added to it in his memory also. Note there is a slightly earlier minister of Chirnside of the same name (whose wife Margaret Halcro is famous for being roused from the family mausoleum when the sexton tried to cut the ring from her finger, thereby recovering and living for another 51 years!) and his son Ebenezer, founder of the secession church, who were related to him. James of Grange (1680–1754) 2nd son of Charles, 5th Earl of Mar. He served as Lord of Session. He held the superiority of the lands of Whitslade and Dalgleish, which he sold to James Adam in 1723. He married Rachel, daughter of John Chiesly of Dalry. Rev. James (1731–88) son of Harry, the minister of Roberton, he was licensed by the Presbytery of Selkirk in 1757 and became preacher at Caerlenrig 'chapel-of-ease' (i.e. Teviothead) in

1763, remaining for only about a year. He was presented to Kirkton at the end of 1763 and became minister there in 1764. He was then translated to Roberton Parish in 1774, replacing his father. A new Manse was built for him soon afterwards. He was one of the founders of the Hawick Farmers' Club in 1776. In 1777 he succeeded his cousin Patrick as 7th Erskine of Shielfield. In 1779 he was listed as 'Rev. James Askin of Drybrugh' in Roberton Parish when he was taxed for having a male servant. He wanted to transfer to Wilton (according to a letter of 1784 to Hugh Scott of Harden). He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls in Roberton Parish in 1785. In 1786 he was translated to St. Boswells, but died only about 2 years later. He married Henrietta Scott, daughter of Charles of Goldielands, and she died in 1818 at the age of 79. Their children included: Henry, who was in the army and succeeded, but had no offspring; Charles, who became a lawyer in Melrose, married Barbara, daughter of George Pott of Todrig and succeeded his brother; and William, who was a preacher and tax surveyor in Haddington. James of Shielfield (1809/10–75) son of Charles. In the 1850s he was said to hold the female representation of the female line of the Scotts of Goldielands and Crumhaugh. He married his cousin Barbara Pott and she died in 1886, aged 76. He was succeeded by his son Charles. He and his wife are buried at Dryburgh Abbey. Sir John (d.1552) 5th Lord Erskine, 2nd son of Robert, who died at Flodden. He was also referred t as 'of Nisbet'. He was named along with his father in an indenture of 1510 involving lands within their Barony of Synton, with Kers. He inherited the lands of Synton from his father in 1513 and they passed to his son and heir John in 1557. He married Margaret, daughter of Archibald Campbell, Earl of Argyll. His 2 eldest sons, Robert and Thomas, died before him and he was succeeded by his son John. His daughter Margaret was a mistress of James V, and mother of James, Earl of Mar (and later Regent of Scotland). John (d.1572) 6th Lord Erskine and 1st (or 22nd) Earl of Mar, son of John, 5th Lord Erskine. In 1565 he received a charter from the Queen, restoring to him the earldom of Mar as heir of Isabel, sister of the 2nd Earl of Douglas. He was a member of the Council of Mary, Queen of Scots, guardian of James V and served as Regent of Scotland in 1571. In 1557 he inherited his father's lands of Synton. He was among the prominent men of the nation who signed the document declaring James as Monarch (in place of Mary) in 1567. He married Annabella, daughter of William Murray of Tullibardine, and was succeeded by his son John, 2nd Earl of Mar. His daughter Mary married Archibald Douglas, 8th Earl of Angus. John (c.1562–1634) 2nd (or 23rd) Earl of Mar and 1st Lord of Cardross, son of the 6th Lord Erskine. He served as Treasurer of Scotland. He inherited his father's lands of Synton in 1573, but sold them to the Earl of Buccleuch in 1619. In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. He is recorded gaining the lands of Synton and Synton Mill from Sir John Edmondston in 1593. He resigned his lands in 1620, so they could be re-granted to his heir. This included superiority over the local lands of Synton, Whitslade and Dalgleish. He married Anna, daughter of David, Lord Drummond and was succeeded by his son John and had several other children. John (d.1653/4) 3rd or 24th Earl of Mar, descended from the family who formerly held lands at Synton. In 1635 he was served heir to his father's Earldom of Mar, which included superiority over Whitslade and Dalgleish (which was one third of Synton). The Scotts of Whitslade held the main estate at this time, and Synton was held by the Scotts of Buccleuch. He married Jean Hay (daughter of the Earl of Erroll) and was succeeded by his son John, who was Chancellor and married Mary (or Margaret), daughter of Walter Scott, 1st Earl of Buccleuch. Pamela nee Bowell (1932/3–2020) librarian in Hawick. Born in London, she forged a career as a children's librarian. At Hawick Library she was responsible for introducing children's story hour, increasing the number of books that junior members could borrow, and organising visits by authors. She was also a union representative, fighting decreases to library budgets. In the 1980s she completed a degree in sociology at the Open University. In 1958 she married fellow-librarian Andrew, who became a history teacher in Hawick; the couple had sons Jonathan and Adam and retired to Edinburgh in 1989. Sir Robert (d.1452) 1st Lord Erskine, son of Sir Thomas of that Ilk and his 2nd wife, Janet Keith of Synton. Through his mother he probably inherited the Synton estates and possibly the hereditary sheriffdom of Selkirk. He witnessed charters during the regency of the Duke of Albany. He was captured at Homildon Hill in 1402, but released by 1405 and was again in English captivity in 1427. He claimed the Earldom of Mar in right of his mother in 1435. He passed on his estates (retaining the 'liferent') to his son Thomas in 1448, this including Synton and Dalgleish. He married a Stewart and secondly Elizabeth, daughter of David Lindsay of Glenesk. He was succeeded by his son Thomas, 2nd Lord. Robert (d.1513) son of Alexander, 4th Earl of Mar. He had a charter for the lands of Nisbet, Synton and lands within Selkirk in 1499/1500. He and his heirs had a charter for Nisbet in 1502. He obtained a charter of the lands of Synton and associated lands of Whitslade and Dalgleish in 1507/8 (when he was heir apparent to his father). Part of the deal was that he could infeft Whitslade to John Cockburn of Ormiston and John Glendinning the lands of Dalgleish. He was Baron of Synton, rather than owner of specific lands within it, since Scott of Synton is mentioned as early as 1509, about the time he became 4th Lord. In 1510 there is an indenture of him and his son, with Ralph Ker of Primside Loch and Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst involving lands in Synton, as well as Nisbet; this was witnessed by John of Dun, as well as Alexander and Robert, who were probably all closely related. He married Isabella, daughter of Sir George Campbell of Loudon. Their eldest son, Robert, died before him and he was succeeded by his second son Sir John, the 5th Lord. The youngest of his 3 sons was James, who married Christian Stirling, and who was progenitor of the Erskines of Shielfield. He was killed at Flodden. Robert (18th C.) surgeon in Hawick who in 1772 witnessed a baptism for shoemaker John Oliver and Helen Currer. Perhaps the same Robert married Katherine Gledstains and their daughter Mary was baptised in Hawick in 1775. She is probably the 'Kate Gladstains Mother to Molly Eskine' whose death is recorded in 1816. Thomas of that Ilk (d.c.1404) son of Sir Robert, Chamberlain of Scotland. He witnessed charters during the reign of Robert III. He was witness to the confirmation of the lands and titles of George Douglas, Earl of Angus. He held many other titles and positions, including Keeper of Edinburgh Castle in 1371. He was recorded as Sheriff of Selkirkshire in 1373. In 1383 he is recorded when Peter 'of Koeburn', Lord of Henryland renounced to him the rights to the rentals from the lands of Dalgleish in Selkirkshire. In 1389 he witnessed the charter of Walter Scott to the superiority of Kirkurd; he is there referred to as 'consanguineo nostro', suggesting he was related to King Robert II. In 1398 he is mentioned in a document for Sir John of Swinton. He married Mary, daughter and heiress of Sir William Douglas (with a dispensation from the Pope in 1365); she died in childbirth and a duel was fought over the right to her titles, the crucial dispute being over whether her child was stillborn or died after birth. He secondly married Joneta Keith, from whom he may have inherited the Synton estates. He was captured at Homildon Hill and may have died while a prisoner. He was succeeded by his son Robert. Thomas (d.1493/4) 2nd Lord Erskine, son of Sir Robert, the 1st Lord. Among other lands he held the estate of Synton and office of Sheriff of Selkirk, which passed to his son Alexander. This may have come through his grandmother Joneta Keith, Lady of Cadzow. He had a crown charter in 1448 for the lands of Erskine, Sheriffdom of Aberdeen, etc., as well as the lands of Dalgleish and Synton; these had been resigned by his father, while retaining 'liferent'. He was 'Thoma, domino Erskin' when witnessing charters for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1451/2 and 1455 and another for the Douglases in 1456. He was listed on a retour of inquest for lands in Berwickshire in 1464. He is recorded as Sheriff of Selkirkshire in 1469. He also served as Justiciar for Lothian in 1474. Along with Alexander, he witnessed an 'instrument' relating to lands in Hassendean in 1480/1. He resigned his lands in the King's hands in 1489, and they were re-granted to his heir, Alexander. He married Janet Douglas, possibly a daughter of the 1st Earl of Morton. His children included Alexander, 3rd Lord; Helen; Isobel; Elizabeth; and Mariotta or Muriella. He may also have been father of Margaret, who married James Rutherford of that Ilk and Wells. He died 3 months before his son Alexander succeeded in April 1494. William (16th C.) Parson of Campsie and Commendator of Paisley. He was appointed as titular Archbishop of Glasgow in 1585, but deprived in 1587, when the General Assembly dissolved the archbishopric. He may have continued to be referred to as Archbishop until 1594, but unlike his predecessors, played no important role in affairs in Teviodale. His seal was rather crude compared to those of earlier bishops, showing St. Kentigern and the words 'SIGILLUM GUILIELMI ERSKENE ARCHIEPISCOPI GLASGU.' (formerly written 'Erskyn', 'Erskin' and variants).

es (ez) v. is (third person singular, present tense) – 'she es so', '. . . how grand a privilege it hez been and still ez ti bide in the West End' [IWL], 'If we are inquiring about a sick friend we might say, 'Is hei bediit?' We would not, however, hear the word 'is' so sounded in the answer. 'Hei ez that, puir fella' ' [WL] (often used emphatically, in response to a statement, even if it contained 'is'; note is is also frequently used, depending on context, and eez is sometimes used for emphasis; also spelled 'ez').

Esa (ee-sa) n. (b.c.457) possibly first chief of Bernicia, the Anglian kingdom of north-eastern England and south-eastern Scotland, which included Hawick. He was succeeded by his son Eoppa and grandson Ida who became the first genuine King of Bernicia.

Escape (ees-kāp) n. organisation providing services to support young people, officially known as Escape Youth Services. It was set up in 2004. Drop-in sessions have been held at Havelock Street, at Burnfoot Hub and in Denholm.

E-scape (ee-skāp) n. Hawick-based electronic band of the late 1980s and early 1990s, mainly Iain Scott on vocals and posing, supported by Keith Middlemas and sometimes others. They were the last band to play at Humphrey's (ex-Marina) before it burned down.

Eschetho (e-she-tō) n. lost place-name in Lilliesleaf Parish, probably replaced with Lintobank or perhaps being the same as the lands later referred to as 'Riddell' (the name is recorded from about 1150 and likely comes from the Old English 'æsc sceat hoh', meaning 'the corner height with the ash tree').

Es'dale (es-dāl) n. poetic name for Eskdale – 'The braes o' Es'dale's bonnie, Her streams are sweet an' clear . . . ' [JoHa].

Esdale Law (es-dāl-law) n. hill to the west of Hawick, just north of Blawearie, reaching a height of 357 m. It has been suggested that the line of a Roman road passed here, connecting Craik Cross with Dere Street, via Groundistone Heights and Harelaw.

Esdale Sike (es-dāl-sīk) n. stream that rises near Blawearie and flows in a north-western direction to reach the Ale Water.

esh (esh) n., arch. ash (the tree or wood) – 'Aa mind yince o' sei-in a wice-like esh-plant that was growin' on a steep cley bankin' . . . ' [DH].

Eshiebank see Ashybank esk (esk) n., arch. the eft or newt – 'The pert little eskis they curlit their tails, And danced a myrthsome reele' [JTe] (also ask).

the Esk (thu-esk) n. popular name for the River Esk. It is formed of the Black and White Esk, which merge near Castle O'er Forest. It then runs through Langholm, merges with the Liddel and the Eden and empties into the Solway Firth. Historically it was an important part of the West Marches. In 1583 Captain Thomas Musgrave described it thus: 'Eske is a fayre ryver, and cometh throughe Esdall, and is Scottishe, inhabyted with Battesons of Esdell, untill it come neare a placed called the Langhalme castill and meateth with the water called Use, which waters and dales are bothe my Lorde Maxwells untill it come to Canonby kyrke, and then the Armestronges and Scottishe Graymes have it untill it meete the ryver of Lydall at the Mote skore, where Fargus Grayme his howse stands. Then it taketh the devysyon of the realmes untill it come to a place called Morton rigge where Will of Kinmont dwelleth; then there is a mere dyke that goeth to a ryver called Sarke, then is Eske Englishe on bothe sydes, and Sarke ryver devydes, and there are Graymes on both sydes, the one English, the other Scottishe untill it come to Gretnay, where it meteth Eske and both rune to Bownus, and soe take the sea' – '. . . Till saddening memory all our haunts restore, The wild-wood walks by Esk's romantic shore' [JL], 'Where Esk sweetly jinks, among hills overhanging, An' valleys unmatched in verdure sae braw' [JoHa], 'From rocks and glens, and lofty peaks, In many purling rills; The Esk rolls on through spangled meads, Adorn'd with verdant hills' [WSB], ' 'Twixt Esk and Till there were maidens fair But none with the sheen of her nut-brown hair . . . ' [WHO], 'But though the men who rode are gone, A ghostly spirit marches on, Frae Langholm's Esk tae Teviotside, A troupe of phantom Rievers ride' [Sco] (note there are several other rivers of the same name, including the one running past Dalkeith and Musselburgh, the one in Cumbria, another in Angus, and a fifth in North Yorkshire).

Eskdaill (esk-dāl) n. courtesy title of the heir to the heir to the Dukedom of Buccleuch (i.e. first son of the Earl of Dalkeith), which keeps the older spelling. It was written this way in 1619 when Walter Scott was created Lord of Whitchester and Eskdaill, as well as Earl of Buccleuch.

Eskdaill Bank (esk-dāl-bawngk) n. street rising steeply uphill across the roundabout from Mart Street, better known as the 'Killin Hoose Brae'. It was developed in 1897 and named after a title of the Scotts of Buccleuch.

Eskdaill Terrace (esk-dāl-te-ris) n. street named in 1883, developed in 1885, and incorporated into the west end of Weensland Road in 1955. Since the land was originally purchased from the 5th Duke of Buccleuch, it was named after one of the titles given to Walter, Lord Scott of Buccleuch in 1619 and more recently borne by heirs to the Earldom of Dalkeith. The main road to Denholm used to pass through this location (i.e. above the present Weensland Road) until rejoining near Bogliebarns (i.e. near the present Little Shop).

Eskdale (esk-dāl) n. valley of the River Esk, running from roughly Canonbie to Eskdalemuir. It was once a Lordship, held by the Avenel family from the late 12th century until it passed to the Grahams through marriage in 1243. In 1309 Robert the Bruce confirmed a charter to Melrose Abbey of lands there (held of Graham) and the superiority was granted to Sir James Douglas. It remained with the Earls of Douglas until they forfeited their lands and it was granted to George, Earl of Angus in 1458/9. Melrose Abbey still held lands there in the 15th century – 'March! march! Ettrick and Teviot-dale! Why my lads dinna ye march forward in order? March! march! Eskdale and Liddesdale! All the blue bonnets are over the border!' [T] (it is 'Eschedale' in about 1185 and 'Esckedal' in 1235/6).

Eskdale an Liddesdale Fermers' Association (esk-dāl-in-li-diz-dāl-fer-murz-aw-sō-see-ā-shin) n. farmers club existing from at least the 1830s. It met alternately in Langholm and Newcastleton, with prizes given for the best livestock.

Eskdalemuir (esk-dāl-mewr, -mār) n. town in Eskdale, with the Meteorological Observatory and Seismological Station above, as well as the Girdle Stanes and Loupin Stanes and the Samye Ling Temple nearby. The lands there were long owned by Melrose Abbey, for which the Scotts of Buccleuch held the office of Bailie from around 1484, and it still belonged to the Abbey in 1553/4. The area used to be a centre for sheep farming, but is now heavily forested. An old drove road used to pass by the north of Hawick to the Borthwick valley and then go from Howpasley over towards Eskdalemuir. A mine, owned by Johnstone of Westerhall, was worked there in the 19th century. The parish of Eskdalemuir was created in 1702 from part of Westerkirk – 'The staghounds, weary with the chase, Lay stretched upon the rushy floor, And urged, in dreams, the forest race, From Teviot-stone to Eskdale-moor' [SWS], '... And then, ten miles thrae onywhere, We had arrived at Eskdalemuir!' [DH] (it is 'Eskdailmur' in 1524, 'Esdaill Muyr' in 1553/4 and 'Eskdaill Mure' in 1633).

the Esmond Elliot Wards (thu-ez-mind-e-lee-i'-wawrdz) n. wards in the Cottage Hospital, named for the Hon. Esmond Elliot, brother of Lord Minto, who was killed in WWI. His sister Lady Violet Astor gave a sum to build the wards, and the foundation stone was laid by the Prince of Wales in 1924.

esni (ez-ni) contr. isn't, is not – 'she esni, is she?', 'hei esni gaun ti be the wunner o ony beauty contests' (sometimes used for emphasis, cf. isni and issen).

esp (esp) n., arch. the trembling poplar or aspen.

espaicially (es-pā-shu-lee) adv. especially – 'Gali folk er aaright, espaicially thaim thit support the Greens' (also spaicially).

Esplin (esp-lin) n. Thomas (19th C.) English stockingmaker who came to Hawick in the mid-1800s. He helped introduce cricket to the Town. He may be related to (or an error for) John, who was living at about 19 Howegate in 1841.

Essendean (e-sin-deen) n. fictitious town in Robert Louis Stevenson's 1886 novel 'Kidnapped'. It lies on the (also fictional) Essen Water, somewhere in Ettrick Forest. The name would appear to be an amalgam of Essenside and Hassendean, both near to Hawick and not really in Ettrick Forest. Given the great care that Stevenson took with the geographical accuracy of the journey of the hero of the book through the Highlands, it is incongruous that he invented a location in the Borders for the start of the journey.

Essenside (e-sin-sīd) n. hamlet to the west of Ashkirk, consisting of Wester and Easter Essenside, with Essenside Head above the former and Essenside Loch above the latter. Old Essenside was a former farmstead between Western Essenside and Essenside Loch. An ancient fort and settlement are in the hills to the west. The lands were owned by branches of the Scotts from the 16th century, and Easter Essenside was later farmed by the Shortreeds for several generations. Bernard Shortreed was recorded as tenant there in 1494/5. George Shortreed was there in 1579. Residents recorded in 1581 were Walter Chisholme, Robert Waugh, John Johnstone, William Chisholme, Mungo Robson, Thomas Shortreed, David Shortreed there, Thomas Aitchoson and James Hall. In about 1616 a group of Scotts murdered Walter Scott 'in Essenside' (son of 'Auld Wat' of Harden) while he was fishing on the Ettrick. Geordie Johnstone was there in 1623. In 1643 the teinds of the Laird were valued at £60 and held by Robert Scott of Heap. In 1678 John Scott of Synton is recorded as owner of these lands, valued at £365. The 'Laird of Todrick younger' was listed there in 1694. Robert Prendergast was herd there in 1698. An oak panel in Ashkirk Kirk bears the arms of the family, the motto 'non eget arcu' (he needs not the bow) and the date 1702. William (probably Scott) was a tenant there in 1702, and William Redford also lived there. In 1799 George Ballantyne and John Robson were servants there and Samuel McKain a labourer – 'Out beyond the Langhope Burn and over Essenside . . . ' [WHO] (it is marked as 'Essinsyd' on Gordon's c.1650 map, while Blaeu's 1654 map shows 'W. Essinsyid' and 'E. Essinsyid' and it is 'Eastenside' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; it is 'eschinsyd' in 1494/5, 'eschynesyd' in 1544, 'Eschinside' in 1569, 'Eschinsid' in 1581, 'Ashinsyde' in 1617, 'Eschinsyd' in 1622 and 'Essinsyde' in 1623).

Essenside Heid (e-sin-sīd-heed) n. hill above Wester Essenside, reaching a height of 314 m, and now being in a wooded area. The higher hill to the west (which appears to be unnamed) contains the remains of a fort and settlement. The hill-fort is oval, about 75 m by 50 m, with 3 ramparts, and containing 9 hut-circles, some perhaps being from a later settlement. Another hill to the north (also unnamed) contains traces of cord rig.

Essenside Loch (e-sin-sīd-loch) n. body of water lying just above Easter Essenside in the Ale valley. It is listed in 1649 among the lochs in Selkirkshire. A plan of the Loch was made by John Ainslie in 1774. In 1815 there was a dispute between Archibald Cochrane of Ashkirk and Gilbert Elliot, Ear of Minto, over rights to the marle in the loch. There are rig lines visible to the south of the Loch – 'But ere they had won where the wandering moon Lit Essenside Loch with her diamond shoon Red Rowan was galloping free on the heath With his neck outstretched and the bit in his teeth' [WHO] (it is 'Esynside Loch' in 1649 and marked as 'Essinsyde L.' on Blaeu's 1654 map).

est (est) n., arch., poet. a nest – 'A bird-est' [JoJ], 'Whare the burds mak thair ests: as for the stork, the fir-tries ar hir hame' [HSR], 'Yis, the sparra hæs fuund ane hous, an' the swalla ane est for hirsel' . . . ' [HSR], 'The hen's est' [GW].

et (et) pp. ate – 'oo et oor denner, then oo went oot', 'A hink the dog et eet', 'A et aa that tablet ee made', 'Ei says ei's leike ti bowk. A dinna wunder at eet; ei ett till ei was leike ti burst' [ECS], '. . . bit A bocht an ett twae cookies an a whank o cheese' [ECS] (also written 'ett'; this is the past tense form, while etten is the common past participle).

Etal Castle (e-tul-kaw-sul) n. ruin dating from the 14th century, near the River Till in Northumberland. Built by the English Manners family to guard the Tweed it was overwhelmed and destroyed by the Scots in 1497.

the Eternal Cooncil (thu-ee-ter-nul-koon-sul) n. popular name for the Town Council before the reorganisation of 1861, named because of the Council members' habit of re-electing each other. The ability of the old council to largely choose the new one goes back to a 1469 Act of the Scottish Parliament and was ratified in a decision by the Court of Session in 1781. There it was stated that the existing Councillors and new Bailies should elect 15 councillors 'who shall continue in their office during life' (also written 'Eternal Coonsul').

ether (e-thur) n., arch. an adder, any species of snake – 'A paddo'-bull frae Kutisgail, An etther wi' a rattlin' tail . . . ' [JoHa], 'If Mairch comes in wi' an ether's heid, it gangs oot wi' a peacock's tail' [GW] (cf. adderstane).

ether-bell (e-thur-bel) n., arch. dragonfly – 'I have never been able to ascertain from whence this name of ether-bell is derived' [RB].

etten (e'-in, e-tin) pp. eaten – 'Decerns Thomas Oliver to content and pay to James Scott, lorimer, 3 half firlots of aitts eitten by his guids and geir . . . ' [BR1642], '. . . no a beite o meat hed a etten threh ma brekfist ti the now' [ECS], 'It's no' sae much juist bein' ett'n, Tho' sic a trial I'm no forgettin'. . . ' [DH] (also written 'ett'n'; this is the past participle, while et is the usual past tense, but also see eat).

ettelt (e-tul') pp., arch. intended, attempted – 'For thaye ettlet ill agayne thee . . . ' [HSR] (also written 'ettlet').

Ettleton (e-tul-tin) n. former settlement near Newcastleton, with a churchyard that still contains mediæval gravestones. It is reached from a short dead-end road leaving the main road south of Newcastleton by the Milnholm Cross. Some of the oldest stones have been incorporated into a wall, which is dedicated to the memory of the Armstrongs, and others are behind a railing. The church was in the partonage of the Lords of Liddesdale, and although it appears to have had the status of a parish, there is no record of any minister serving there. There is now no sign of the church that served the area until 1604, when it was merged with Castleton; the building was located on a terrace to the north and west of the graveyard. There are the remains of a settlement to the north (said to have been a village once), where ancient coins were foind in the early 19th century. A more extensive farm and field system is located to the west, possibly being the lands of Side. There was also probably another chapel at Chapelknowe, at the edge of the old parish towards Canonbie. It appears on Bagomond's Roll of 1275 as 'Rectoria cum vicaria de Eddiltoun'. In the Exchequer Rolls for 1540 the teind lambs were paid to the rector there, amounting to £29 12s. The farm there along with Millholm, was possessed by David Goldie and James Mitchelson. The patronage and teinds of the kirk are still mentioned along with Castleton in the 1653 service of heirs for Mary Scott of Buccleuch and in the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch, when it is described as a 'pendicle' of Castleton (the name probably derives from the Old English personal name 'Edla' or 'Eadhild'; it first appears as 'Eddiltoun' and 'Eddilstoun' in the 13th century; it is 'Edilstoun' in 1540, 'Eddiltoun' in 1575, 'Eddiltoun' in 1632 and 'Edingtoun' in 1653, 'Eddilton' and 'Eddiltoune' in 1663; 'Ettiltoun K.' is marked on Gordon's c.1650 map, 'Ettiltounspa' on Blaeu's 1654 map and 'Ettletown' is on Stobie's 1770 map; note the potential confusion with Eddleston near Peebles).

Ettletonside (e-tul-tin-sīd) n. former farmstead near Ettleton. It is listed in 1632 along with Potterlampert, as a possession of Sandy Armstrong (it is 'Eddiltounside' in 1632 and 'Edingtoune' in 1653).

Ettleton Sike (e-tul-tin-sīk) n. small stream in Liddesdale, which rises on Kirk Hill and flows past Ettleton cemetery to join the Liddel opposite Mangerton. To the south there is a small terrace with the remains of a rectangular building, and there are field-banks and rig lines in the area, visible on aerial photographs. On a hillside to the north are the remains of another rectangular hut, together with a field system.

Ettleton Spa (e-tul-tin-spaw) n. former spa said to have been located near Ettleton in southern Castleton Parish.

Ettrick (e'-reek, et-reek) n. village on the Ettrick Water, well away from main roads. James Hogg, the Ettrick Shepherd was born near here and is buried in the parish church graveyard, along with Tibbie Shiel and Thomas Boston. There has been a church there for about 800 years, and the village was once 'Ettrick Kirkton'; the 'New Kirk' came to be the main parish kirk, surpassing the small chapel at Over Kirkhope. The name is also used for a former parish, and in general for the valley. Lands there that were granted by Alexander II to Melrose Abbey and are described in detail in the charter. The present church was built in 1824. There is also the Boston Memorial Hall. The lands of 'Ethrik', Rodono and 'Carrick' were erected into a free regality by James I in 1436 (origin uncertain; sometimes formerly spelled 'Etterick', it is 'Ethrẏc̃' and 'Ethric̃' in c.1236, 'Etricke' in 1415 and 'Ettryk' in 1519; 'Etrik Kirk' is marked on Gordon's c.1650 map).

the Ettrick (thu-e'-reek) n. popular name for Ettrick Witter – 'On Ettrick's banks, ae simmer night, At gloaming when the sheep cam' hame, I met my lassie, braw and tight, While wand'ring through the mist her lane' [T], 'The border lass sings it in strains sweet tho' sad, On the banks o' the Ettrick or Yarrow' [WS], 'Fareweel, my Ettrick! fare-ye-weel! I own I'm unco laith to leave ye; Nane kens the half o' what I feel, Nor half the cause I ha'e to grieve me!' [ES].

Ettrickbank (e'-reek-bawngk) n. cottage in Ettrickbridge, once the home of the Ettrick Shepherd and of the Scott family in the mid-19th century.

Ettrickbrig (e'-reek-brig, et-reek-brig) n. Ettrickbridge, also called 'Ettrickbridge-end', a village set out by the 3rd Duke of Buccleuch in the late 18th century in the Ettrick valley, west of Selkirk. The lands there had been held by the Scotts of Harden until about 1746. The original bridge there was built of freestone in 1628 by Auld Wat of Harden and had 3 arches. The romantic version of the story is that the old riever had accidentally killed a child in a cross-Border raid, and at the request of the Abbot of Melrose erected this bridge at a spot where several lives had been lost crossing the river, so that in future many lives would be saved. The bridge was ruined by 1715 and rebuilt in 1739, but washed away in 1777. The replacement came in 1780 about half a mile further up-river, and this had the old stone displaying the Harden coat of arms built into it. It was widened in 1858. The Cross Keys Inn was once a coaching inn and survives as a hotel.

Ettrick Brig-end (et-reek-brig-end) n. the village of Ettrickbridgend, also known as 'Ettrickbrig'.

Ettrick Forest (e'-reek-for-ist, et-reek-for-ist) n. name formerly used for a large tract of land generally lying to the west of Selkirk, and also sometimes called 'Selkirk Forest' or just 'the Forest'. It formed the last large part of the great Caledonian Forest situated around the Ettrick and Yarrow valleys, and now almost entirely gone. It consisted of Scots pine, oak, birch and hazel. However, it should be noted that the word 'forest' could also refer to an area of bare, high land, rather than necessarily implying that it was full of trees. It became a royal hunting forest, with royal parties being based at Selkirk and Galashiels. Lands there were granted to Sir James Douglas by Robert the Bruce in 1321, and they remained in the superiority of the Douglases until forfeited to the Crown in the middle of the 15th century. Rents were paid to the Crown, with a few specific farms where the King or Queen kept their own flocks of sheep. Margaret Tudor received lands there in 1503, which later passed to the Scotts. There was often a Keeper of the Forest, with the Earl of Gloucester being one of the first appointed, by Edward I. It was also used as a sanctuary for fugitives, with Wallace and Bruce hiding there, for example, and known as a lawless place in rieving days. In early times there were special Forest Courts, with jurisdiction over the residents, and the Forest was divided into 3 Wards, known as Ettrick, Tweed and Yarrow. Each Ward was under the charge of 2 rangers, one of whom was referred to as the Master Ranger. The Wards were divided into steadings; in the 15th century there were 45 in Ettrick, 23½ in Yarrow and 17 in Tweed, each paying £6 in rent, as well as payment in livestock – '... May hang upon a soor ploom tree, And sleep in Ettrick Forest' [JT] (it is 'forestam del Selkirk' in 1328 and 'Ettrik-Forest' in 1525).

Ettrick Haa (et-reek-haw) n. name for a legendary house near Ettrick village. It's existence may have been suggested by stories of the former farm of Ettrickhoose. It was said that in about 1700 James Anderson of Tushielaw evicted the tenants of some of his lands there and built a large house, which by the early 19th century was aleady gone. The Ettrick Shepherd stated that the house in which he was born had been used as a stable on this estate – 'Ettrick Hall stands on yon plain, Right sore exposed to wind and rain; and on it the sun shines never at morn, Because it was built in the widow's corn; And its foundations can never be sure, Because it was built on the ruin of the poor. And or [ere] an age is come and gane, Or the trees o'er the chimly-taps grow green, We winna ken where the house has been' [T].

Ettrickheid (et-reek-heed) n. area around the head of the Ettrick Water. The lands there were part of the holdings of Melrose Abbey, for which the Scotts of Buccleuch had the office of Bailie from the late 15th century (it is 'Ettrikheid' in 1524 and 1525 and 'Etrikheid' in 1553/4).

Ettrickhill (et-reek-hil) n. village, being the western extension of Ettrick. Here is the monument to the Ettrick Shepherd, marking the site of the cottage he was born in.

Ettrickhoose (et-reek-hoos) n. Ettrickhouse, former farm in the Ettrick valley. In 1557 Scott in Thirlestane paid rent to Melrose Abbey for these lands. The tenants there in 1609 were John Scott, James Amos and Archibald Stewart. Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane had a charter for these and other lands in about 1620 and granted them to Sir Walter Scott of Whitslade in about 1622. They were inherited by Thomas Scott of Whitslade in 1655. The existence of this old farm probably gave rise to the local legend of the large villa of Etrrick Haa being built there around 1700 (it is 'Ettrikhous' in 1557, 'Atrikhous' in 1564, 'Ettrikhous' in about 1622 and 'Etrickhouse' in c.1680; it is 'Ettrtikhous' on Gordon's c.1650 map).

Ettrick Pairish (e'-reek-pā-reesh) n. parish in Selkirkshire, containing the upper reaches of the Ettrick valley, extending to St. Mary's Loch. It is bounded by Roberton to the south-east. It incorporated the ancient parish of Rankilburn or Buccleuch from 1650. There was a 'New Kirk' there from the early 16th century, with the present building dating from 1824 (it is 'Atrik' in 1539).

Ettrick Pen (et-reek-pen) n. summit that is the highest point in the headwaters of the Ettrick, on the border with Dumfries & Galloway, reaching a height of 692 m (2,270 ft). It was long referred to as 'Eskdalemuir Pen' by those living in Eskdale – '. . . For, swift as the deer on Ettrick Pen Sweep at the sound from scaur to glen, And swift as the towering kestrel stoops When a field mouse moves in the bracken hoops' [WHO], 'Away owre i' the wast, Ettrick Pen, raxin abune his neebors, And the muckle roond shooders o' the Moffat Hills . . . ' [DH] (the name is probably another example of the p-Celtic 'pen'; it is 'the pen of Etrikhead' in 1649; 'Hill of Penn of Eskdail moore' is marked on Gordon's c.1650 map).

Ettrickshaws see the Shaws

the Ettrick Shepherd (thu-et-reek-she-purd) n. popular name for the other James Hogg.

Ettrickside (et-reek-sīd) n. the district of the Ettrick Water – 'There are brase on Ettrickside Where the broom and bracken bide; But the're charmin' spots that hide Roond auld Hawick' [TK].

Ettrickside (et-reek-sīd) n. former name for a farm in the Ettrick valley, owned by the Scotts of Thirlestane in the early 17th century, with tenants in 1609 being William 'Houp' and Thomas Brydon. It was once part of the parish of Rankilburn. In 1621 it was described as an 'outset' of Gamescleuch (it is 'Ettriksyde' in 1609, 'Etriksyd' in 1621 and 'Etrickside' in c.1680; it is marked 'Ettricksyid' on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Ettrick Terrace (e'-reek-te-ris, et-reek-te-ris) n. street in 'the Terraces' of the Wellogate, built around 1892 by Hawick Working Men's Building and Investment Company, and named after the river.

Ettrick Witter (e'-reek-wi'-ur, et-reek-wi'-ur) n. river that rises at Ettrick Head, east of Moffat, and joins the Tweed near Abbotsford. The first bridge across it was built for Alexander II in 1234 and connected Kelso Abbey with a cell of monks at Lesmahagow in Lanarkshire, although it is unclear how long it lasted. The next bridge was built by Auld Wat of Harden at Ettrickbridge in 1628 and replaced in 1780. There was also a ford near here from at least 1647. A decription of Selkirkshire written in 1649 states that 'the Water of Etrik begins at Lochfell, called Etrikhead and meets with Yaro and both fall in together at Sunderlandhall as said is, and is in length 16 miles' – '. . . I hear the lintie in the whins Where Ettrick rins' [JBS], 'So Ettrick flowed by an elf-heart led With an elf-song sung the while, And the crystal tear that a fairy shed Made a wasted moorland smile' [WHO] (the river was formerly known as 'Ethric', 'Etryk', 'Hetterich', 'Etreyich', 'Atric', etc., and may be related to the Old Welsh 'Atre' meaning 'playful'; 'Etrick fl.' is marked on Gordon's c.1650 map).

Eunson (yoon-sin) n. Paul educated at Hawick High School, he is a pediatric neurologist at the Royal Hospital for Sick Children in Edinburgh. He has worked to train pediatricians in developing countries.

Eure see Evers

the Evangelical Union (thu-ee-vawn-je-lee-kul-yoon-yin) n. evangelical church group in Hawick, formed in 1848 and later renamed the Congregational Kirk (although there were separate, but related, groups with that name at about the same time, the early history being complicated). They met on O'Connell Street, with Rev. Alexander Duff being the first minister. The church was formed on E.U. principles, but only joined the Scottish Evangelical Union in 1859. The building was constructed on O'Connell Street in 1848–9 and finally sold about 1892 when the new church was erected on Bourtree Place. Also called the 'Evangelistic Union' and later the 'E.U. Congregational Church' when there was a union between the Evangelical and Congregational churches in Scotland. It was finally renamed simply the 'Congregational Church', and moved to new premises on Bourtree Place in 1894.

Evans (e-vinz) n. Dr. Rufus Easson (d.1945) general practitioner in Newcastleton. He lived at Northfield, North Hermitage Stree. He served as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He married Rose Alice Vassie. Their daughter Helen Christina drove ambulances in the London Blitz and wrote fiction under the name 'Jane Oliver'.

evendoonness (ee-vin-doon-nis) n., arch. straightforwardness, frankness, honesty, candour – 'But dinna blame me for my evendoonness, Joost wyte thysel' for fateing me the sphere O' rustic life . . . ' [JoHa] (cf. eendoon).

even on (ee-vin-ōn) adv., arch. continuously – 'It rain'd even on' [GW] (also written 'even-on').

ever (i-vur) adv. ever (note the pronunciation, also sometimes spelled 'ivver' or 'ivir').

the Ever Burn (thu-e-vur-burn) n. former name for a stream near the lands of East Mains, the precise location being uncertain. It is descibed in a sasine of 1688 as forming the south boundary of Cramptlands Croft.

the Evergreen (thu-e-vur-green) n. common name for the Evergreen Hall.

Evergreen Hall (e-vur-green-hawl) n. the Evergreen Club for the elderly was started in 1960, meeting in church halls until this hall was built at the foot of Dovecote Street by public subscription, and opened in 1965 by Lady Polwarth. The land had previously been the site of the hut used for Pentecostal (or Apostolic) meetings. It is the traditional starting point for the children's procession to the Vertish Hill Sports.

Everhaa (e-vur-haw) n. another name for Overhall – 'Here kneels James Langlands o' that ilk, A Borderer both true and keen; For he's the Lord of Langlands fair, Of Everhall and Wilton Dean' [BCM1880].

everlestin (i-vur-les-tin, -teen) adj., poet. everlasting – 'Blisset be the Lord God o' Israel, frae evirlestin til evirlestin' [HSR], 'Thy kingdoom is ane evirlestin' kingdoom, an' thy dominione induurs throweowt a' ganæratians' [HSR], n., arch. a semmingly interminable amount of time, particularly used in the phrase 'a guid everlestin', meaning 'perpetually' – 'Yince an thon wumman sterts, she hashes an blethers for a guid everlesteen' [ECS], 'Yince an' she begins, she raims on for a guid everlestin' ' [GW].

everly (e-vur-lee) adv., arch. constantly, continually – 'Oor forebears an ther Southron neebers coodna sit soft ava i thae days: they war everly natterin an fechtin' [ECS], 'Everlie the road was thrang wui' droves o' nowt' [ECS] (also 'everlie').

evermair (e-, i-vur-mār) adv. evermore – 'For time's turning fortune may tum'le oor way, And throw o'er the mirkiness light evermair' [JoHa], 'What! risk my life? the deil be there, Ye'se want a kirk for evermair' [RDW], '. . . at they richt han' ther ar pleesurs for evirmair' [HSR], 'Gang awa frae ill, an' do guid; an' dwall for evirmair' [HSR], 'Oh, oor herts are heavy and sair! A' things are changed for evermair . . . ' [FL], '. . . I'd cherish her, my faultless dove For evermair' [WP], 'Till in His hame I dwall for evermair . . . ' [WL].

Evers (ee-vurz) n. Sir Ralph (1508–1545) officer of Henry VIII, born in Witton Castle, Yorkshire, son of William the 1st Lord Eure (or Evers). He was married to Margery Bowes (grand-daughter of Sir Richard Bowes, who had been Warden of the English Middle Marches). He was deputy at Berwick and Governor of Scarborough Castle in the siege of 1536. About 1545 he became English Warden of the West Marches, at the same time as his father was Warden of the East March. In 1544 he led a raid on west Teviotdale, when Branxholme tower was burned, 8 Scots slain, 30 taken prisoner and a large amount of livestock carried off. His force met Hertford's force at Edinburgh, after razing Haddington and Hawick on the way from England (although this may be an error, since the two places are hardly on the same route). He was certainly in charge of the force that looted and burned Jedburgh in 1544. He later led an English invasion that devastated the Borders in 1545, being promised lands that he conquered in Teviotdale and the Merse. This invasion followed the raid of Lord Hertford as part of the 'Rough Wooing', in which the Border Abbeys were attacked and tombs were destroyed. It probably included Hawick, although there are no explicit records of this. He was supported by several Kers and other locals, at the siege of Conlingham and the burning of Selkirk. His forces were routed at Ancrum Moor, where he was killed along with his fellow commander Sir Brian Latoun. He was ironically buried at Melrose Abbey, which his own forces had desecrated earlier. Apparently his body was skinned and the skin used to make purses for Scottish officers. An English ballad, 'Lord Ewie', is about him – 'Lord Ewie was as brave a man As ever stood in his degree; The King has sent him a broad letter, All for his courage and loyalty' [T]. Ralph 3rd Lord Eure (1558–1617) son of William. He succeeded Sir John Forster as Warden of the English Middle March in 1595. In February of that year he wrote to Burghley 'Sir Robert Kerr rode to Edinburgh with a number of Kers who are reconciled to him and Fernieherset. It is thought in revenge of the quarrel of the Trumbils which the laird of Buccleuch undetaketh. And so Buccleuch is strengthening the Armitage which lies too near is here – has also drawn most of the Elliots to his house at Hawick, and keeps an extraordinary number in the house there.' He apparently resigned after complaints were made against him. Note that he was the 4th generation of his family to have been a March Warden. He married Mary Dawnay of Sassay and was succeeded by his son William. Sir William 1st Lord Eure (c.1483–1547/8) son of Sir Ralph Eure (or Evers) and Muriel Hastings. He was appointed by the Earl of Surrey to be one of the Marshalls of the English army that attacked Jedburgh in 1523. He was Sheriff of Durham and Northumberland and Warden of the English East March in the 1530s and 1540s. In 1541 he complained about the large flocks of Scottish sheep and other animals that were being pastured on the English side of the Merse. He married Elizabeth Willoughby of Parham. Since his son Sir Ralph died before him, he was succeeded by his grandson William, the 2nd Lord. William 2nd Lord Eure (1529–93/4) son of Sir Ralph and grandson of William, 1st Lord. He was Warden of the English Middle March about 1553–57. He married Margaret Dymoke of Scrivelsby and was succeeded by his son Ralph (also written 'Eure', 'Evre', 'Ewrie', etc.).

every (e-vu-ree) adj., arch. hungry (noted by J. Jamieson; also aiverie and eevenoo).

everyday (iv-ree-dā) n., arch. a week-day, as opposed to Sunday, a working-day, adj. worn on weekdays – 'Everyday claes' [GW] (cf. ilka-day).

everyhin (iv-ree-hin) pron. everything – 'everyhin happens for a reason' (can be spelled 'ivryhin'; see also aathing and aahing).

everyin (iv-ree-yin) pron. everyone – 'It's no everyin that can blaw aboot a menshion in the Charter!' [BW1979].

evict (e-vikt) v., arch. to obtain or recover by legal right – 'Monks meadow evicted by the min[iste]r for his glybe' [Buc1692].

evite (e-vee') v., arch. avoid, evade – 'The Treasurer could not attend this day the Session in the Manse by reason of some emergencie he was trysted with and could not evite' [PR1724].

Ewart (yoo-ur') n. Adam (15th/16th C.) tenant in 'langhop' in 1502, this probably being Langhope near Ashkirk. He was fined for not appearing at the justice-aire held in Selkirk, and served as his own surety. Thomas (19th C.) resident of Baker Street. In 1877 he donated to the Museum an 'old silver coin found in Branxholm, and three copper coins'.

the Ewe an Lamb (thu-yoo-an-lawm-in) n. public house on the Sandbed at 3 Orrock Place, previously known as St. Leonard's Vaults, and popularly called 'the Monkeys'. It was rebuilt in the 1950s, the earlier building dating back to around 1860, which replaced an even older building. It may be the location for one of the oldest licensed establishments in Hawick. James Elliot was proprietor from at least 1841 until the late 1860s. Wullie Smith was landlord in the latter part of the 20th century. The pub closed in 2005, becoming the Y.M. clubrooms, but re-opened as Deans' Bar in 2016. During the procession of the Drums and Fifes on the Thursday night of the Common Riding, the band stop here briefly; it is suggested that this is because the rebel Cornet's flag was displayed outside the pub here during one (or both) of the disputed Common Ridings of 1790 and 1809 (sometimes referred to as the 'Ewe & Lamb Inn').

Ewe Hill (yoo-hil) n. hill on the south side of the upper Hermitage valley, located south-east of the farm of Twislehope. It reaches a height of 471 m.

Ewe Knowe (yoo-now) n. small hill in Liddesdale, to the south-east of Dinlabyre, being the northern spur of Hunter's Hill, with Wilson's Pike above them.

Ewe Knowes (yoo-nowz) n. name for a hilly region in Liddesdale, just to the west of Foulshiels Wood, being an eastern extension of North Birny Fell.

Ewelair Hill (yoo-lār-hil) n. hill in Craik Forest, just north-west of Wolfcleuchhead. It lies between Muckle Knowe and Grey Hill, reaching a height of 434 m.

Ewen (yoo-win) n. Andrew (c.1760–1840s) born in Kelso, son of Andrew and Mary Hogherd. He was a skinner and tanner in Hawick. He had the premises in Tannage Close from 1812, moving to Slitrig Crescent by the 1820s. He was listed as Andrew 'sen. Crescent' in Pigot's 1825/6 directory and his tannery on Slitrig Crescent is shown on Wood's 1824 map, around No. 1. He is probably the 'Mr. Ewen' who was among the reform-minded men who met regularly in the upstairs room of Robert 'Lurgie' Wilson. He was listed among heads of households of Wilton Kirk in 1835. He was listed as a tanner in Pigot's 1837 directory. His business was eventually taken over by John Nichol, who was later Provost. He was a staunch Whig who worked to help elect Capt. Elliot. It is said that Elliot influenced the Whig members of the county to appoint his son as the Minister of Hobkirk the year after the 1832 election. He married Jane Peddie (from Kelso), and their children included: Jean (b.1790), who was living unmarried at Slitrig Crescent in 1851; Andrew (b.1792), a manufacturer in Jedburgh; Mary (b.1794); Helen (b.1796); Rev. John (b.1800), local minister; and Henry (b.1804), also a skinner. He was still alive in 1841 and listed in Slater's 1852 directory (although he was probably deceased by then). His children Jane, Helen and Robert were all living together unmarried on Bridge Street in 1861. One of his daughters was probably the 'Miss Ewen' who donated a 1576 bible to the Museum in 1857 and a 'stone ball, found at Haddon Rig' in 1864. Andrew (b.1792) son of Andrew. He worked in Hawick before moving to Jedburgh, where he was a manufacturer. He was still in Hawick in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick'. He is recorded as 'Andrew Ewen, jun.' as a currier on the Crescent in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. In 1841 he was a manufacturer at Allars Mill in Jedburgh, living with his son Robert. Henry (b.1804) son of Andrew and Jane Peddie. He was also a skinner in Hawick. In the 1837 Commons inquiry into 'fictitious voters' he was mentioned as exchanging property with John Haldane in Selkirk, apparently for the purpose of voting. He is recorded as such in the electoral roll of 1837 and on the 1841 census is living with his elderly father and sister Helen on the Crescent. In 1851 he was listed as a farmer on Slitrig Crescent and in 1861 was at 3 Bridge Street (probably corresponding to the modern No. 20), still unmarried with his mother and sister. In 1857 he donated the skull of an ancient ox to the Museum, found at Synton Moss. James Kerr (b.1863) son of Robert. In 1877 he was still living with his family at Millbank when he donated 9 coins to the Museum. Rev. John (1800–75) son of the Hawick skinner Andrew and Jane Peddie, he was born in Hawick. He was educated at Edinburgh University and licensed to preach in 1822. He became assistant to Rev. James Arkle in Hawick soon afterwards, apparently refusing to accept remuneration for this position. He was then tutor to several notable Roxburghshire families, including travelling in Europe, and also worked as preceptor to the only son of a gentleman in Yorkshire. He was presented (by William IV) as minister of Hobkirk in late 1833 and ordained there in 1834. This was said to be due to the influence of Capt. Elliot (brother to Lord Minto) who his father had supported in the election the year before. There was much dissent among the heritors and some even laid an accusation of simony against him, so it was a year before he was finally ordained. He also acted as Persbytery Clerk. His was appointed by the Crown amid some controversy, the heritors being uable to agree. He remained there until his death. He wrote a statistical account of Hobkirk Parish in 1834. The oldest known communion token from Hobkirk is from 1837 and bears his initials; it is crudely made and probably formed from the material of older tokens. In 1841 he is recorded living at the Manse with Jane an Margaret (presumably his sisters). He married Isabella Yeaman (who died in 1898), daughter of James Fitchie, manufacturer of Deanfield, Meigle. Their children were: Anna Jane, who married George Watson, minister of Hownam; Rosanadra, 'Rose' (1849–1912), who married Col. John Joicey of Newton Hall, Northumberland; John Sangster (1851–1913), stockingmaker; and Charles Henry (1855–1909) engineer. Robert (18th C.) gardener at Cavers in 1786, when he was working for George Douglas. His name is recorded as 'Ewans'. Robert (1823–1900) native of Hawick, son of Jedburgh manufacturer Andrew and grandson of Hawick skinner Andrew. He was educated at Peebles, then briefly worked in the Hawick Town Clerk's office before working with his father in the hosiery trade in Jedburgh. For many years he worked for William Watson & Sons, then about 1860 opened his own tweed and hosiery firm at Millbank, apparently the first firm to make tartan stockings; he sold the firm in the early 1880s and it became Currie's and then Hogg's. He was part of the old 'eternal council', and after reconstitution became a Councillor and Magistrate for 9 years before being Provost 1875–78. His Provostship saw the new sewage works developed, and the purchase of Wilton Manse and Glebe. He was a Libreal who worked locally for the Reform Bill. Although not a Common-Riding supporter, he was a member of the Parochial Board, member of the South of Scotland chamber of Commerce, one of the founders of Hawick Heritable Investment Bank, a deacon in the Hawick Free Church and served on the Committee of the Archæological Society. In 1841 he was living with his father in Jedburgh, but by 1851 was living on Hawick High Street with his widowed mother Elizabeth and sisters Elizabeth and Jane. In 1861 he was recorded as a hosier, employing 40 people. He married Blanche Bridget Kerr in Edinburgh in 1856 and their children included: Andrew (b.1858); Eliza Maria (b.1860); James Kerr (b.1863); Edwin (b.1865); Charles (b.1870); Sarah Jane (b.1872); and Helen (b.1875). He wrote several booklets that were published in Hawick: 'The Relief of the Nation' (1869); 'Dull Trade, its Causes and Cure' (1869); 'What is Free Banking?' (1870); 'Foreign Impressions in France, Switzerland, Italy, Austria and Germany' (1873); 'The Life of Trade as Affected by our Monetary Laws' (1873); 'A Modern Ballad on the Reign of Mammon and Social and Economical Reform and People's Banks, with a Glimpse into the Coming Century'; 'American Impressions' (1878); 'Through Canada in 1878'; and 'Industries and Banks' (1885). In 1873 he presented a talk to the Archæological Society on 'Ancient and Modern Modes of Exchange'. Long involved in banking, he left Hawick about 1880 to promote the 'People's Bank of Scotland Ltd.' in Glasgow, died in Edinburgh and is buried in the Wellogate (also sometimes 'Ewin').

Ewen's Court (yoo-winz-kōr') n. former name for Tannage Close, after Andrew Ewen, skinner, who ran a tannage business there. It marked the southern end of the Little Haugh on Woods 1824 plan.

Ewen's Loch (yoo-winz-loch) n. small pond in the 'Ewen's Moss' area, to the west of Kaimend.

Ewen's Moss (yoo-winz-mos) n. former name for an area in the hills to the south-east of Hawick, corresponding to the area now centred on Ewen's Loch, west of Kaimend. This is south of the once much larger Hilliesland Loch.

Ewes (yooz) n. settlement on the River Ewes, a few miles north of Langholm, or more generaically the name for the valley. The surrounding parishes of 'Over Ewes' and 'Nether Ewes' were here. The church by the roadside at Ewes, built 1866/7, is famous for its ancient bell hanging in the fork of a tree. It is built on the site of the 13th century Nether Kirk of Ewes, dedicated to St. Cuthbert. There was formerly a school here and a blacksmith's and post office to the north at Brieryshaw – 'Sequestered vale! my loved, my native Ewes, Thy beuty's worthy of a nobler song, Nor can these broken notes express the strong Unuttered thoughts that thrill my rustic muse' [MW].

Ewesdale (yooz-dāl) n. valley of the River Ewes, running north of Langholm. It is familiar to Teries who drive much of the valley between Fiddleton and Lanholm along the A7. Historically it appears never to have been a barony, and to have been separate from the Regality of Eskdale to the south. Lands there were granted to William, Lord Douglas (junior) in about 1341, when forfeited by William Lovel. In 1456 it was granted by the King to George, 4th Earl of Angus, after being resigned by Robert Graham of Ewesdale (actually swapped with lands in Forfarshire); it was stated that it had formerly been in Dumfriesshire, but had been transferred to Roxburghshire. Sasine was given in 1456/7 at the principle manor of 'Mallano', although it is unclear where that was. Through the 15th century it was a Lorsdhip, held by the Douglases. The upper part (with the 'Ower' Kirk) was once a Lordship of the Homes, while the lower part of the valley belonged to the Lindsays, then the Maxwells; the 2 parts were united in the hands of Alexander, Earl of Home in about 1610. However, the superiority of the lands in the lower part (along with patronage of Nether Ewes Kirk) continued to be held by the Maxwells into at least the 18th century. The valley was burned by the English in 1514, when it was described as '8 myles of Lienth in the said Marchies, wherupon was 27 pleughes'. George, Lord Home, granted lands in 'the vuyr parrochin of Ewisdale' to Ninian and David Armstrong in 1528. Throughout the 16th century it was listed among those places near the Border whose inhabitants were responsible for 'dalie slauchteris, birning, fyre raising, open reffis, thiftis and depredationis'. In 1579 there is a record of a feud between the Elliots of Ewesdale and the Armstrongs of 'the Gyngillis'. Much of the land fell into possession of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1643. The 'lordschip of Ewisdaill' was listed among the possessions of the family in the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. The region was for a time part of Roxburghshire (on account of being part of continguous lands held by the Duchess of Buccleuch), from at least 1672, and was last restored to Dumfriesshire in 1747. A description of the parish published in 1748 notes 'there were never any ratts known in Ewisdale or Eskdale'. The name formerly applied to parts of Eskdale as well. There were once mills at Meikledale, Sorbie, Arkleton, Bliss, Glenvorane, and Wrae. The main families of the area were the Littles, Armstrongs, Elliots, Scotts (of Ewesdale) and Beatties. An ancient turf dyke ran along the hills on the western side of the valley, and old roads of various vintages can be traced up the hillsides and across the pass at Ewes Doors. There are many signs of ancient habitation in the area, with more than a dozen locations marked as settlements, along with a couple of hill forts. A book 'The Ewes Valley: An Historical Miscellany' was written by Brenda I. Morrison and R. Bruce McCartney in 2000, with a historical article by John Elliot (spelled 'Euesdaill', 'Euisdaill', 'Euisdale', 'Eusdail', 'Eusdale', 'Ewisdaill', 'Ewisdale', 'Ewysdale' and variants; it is 'le Vale de Ewithe' in 1296; some sources suggest the origin of the name is 'efts dale' or 'newts dale', but it seems more likely that like other local rivers, the origin of 'Ewes' is obscure).

Ewes Doors (yooz-dōrz) n. pass at the source of the Eweslees Burn, about a mile up the burn from Eweslees farm, off the A7 south of Mosspaul. There is a mound here that may have been a Roman watch tower. The land might also have been known as Glenvorane and was owned by a branch of the Elliots in the 16th century. It was the location of a fight between the Elliots and the Scotts in August 1565, part of the feud between the Lairds of Braidlie and Branxholme, in which several Scotts were killed; it was said that the Elliots raided into Scott territory, then about 400 of them waited in ambush at the pass, killing 6 of the Scott party (2 Scotts, 2 Dalgleishes, a Short and one 'Theffinmis') and capturing 60. Another story tells of how Walter Scott of Branxholme and his men laid in wait here for a gang of Cumbrian raiders, scaring them off and recapturing their booty. There was once a chapel near here (presumably closer to the river), dedicated to St. Paul and connected with Melrose Abbey; however, it is unclear if this was distinct from the relatively nearby Over Kirk of Ewes (which was dedicated to St. Mark). This is probably the Church of 'Eweddors' listed in Bagimond's Roll in 1275 and the Church of 'Wynchedurris', which was held by William Cramond from at least 1296. The last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1575 records a debt owed 'to the porter of Ewisdy^{r} for the rest of the price of ane horse'; this suggests that there may have been a change-house located at the pass here, with the proprietor known as the 'porter'. Archibald Elliot was there in 1586. There are also several linear earthworks here, crossed by the terrace-way that forms part of the old road from Eweslees to Caerlenrig (which may have been originally Roman). The Parish of Ewes was disjoined from Dumfriesshire and united with Roxburghshire in 1672 (it is 'Ewichdores' in 1321, 'Ewis dores' in 1565 and transcribed as 'Ellis Durris' in 1586).

Ewesdown Sike (yooz-down-, yowz-doon-sīk) n. stream in the headwaters of the Teviot. It joins Worms Cleuch at the steading of Ramsaycleuchburn, becoming Rams Cleuch.

Ewes Fit (yooz-fi') n. Ewes Foot, former name for an area near the foot of the Ewes Water, or more specifically for the ford near the confluence with the River Esk (just north of Langholm) which was once part of the main route towards Hawick.

Ewes Heid (yooz-heed) n. area at the head of Ewes Water (it is 'Euss head' on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Ewe Sike (yoo-sīk) n. small stream in Liddesdale, rising on Ewe Knowe and running north to become part of Boghall Burn.

Ewes Kirk (yooz-kirk) n. name of one of 2 churches in the Ewes valley, formerly referred to as the Ower Kirk and the Nether Kirk. The upper one was abandoned after the Reformation and the congregation merged with that of the lower one. The present building was constructed in 1867, with designs by James Burnet of Langholm. The parish was linked with Westerkirk in 1955 and with Langholm Erskine in 1970, then fully united with Westerkirk in 1974. A roll of ministers is: Roger Kirkpatrick in 1556; William Graham, from 1627; Mr. Chisholme until about 1646; John Lithgow 1646–64; John Home c.1664–81; John Melville early c.1682–89; John Lithgow 1689–94; Robert Darling 1694–1717; Robert Malcolm 1717–61; Richard Scott 1761–90; John Clunie 1790–91; John Laurie 1791–1817; Robert Shaw 1816–53; Thomas Smith 1853–1901; David Preston 1901–18; John Alexander Kerr 1918–56; James Jamieson Glover 1956–73; John Ballantyne Cairns 1975– .

Eweslees (yooz-leez) n. farm off the A7 near where the Mosspaul Burn meets the Eweslees Burn. John Elliot 'callit of the Dewisleis' is recorded in 1578/9. Edward Aitchison was tenant there in 1711. Hugh and David Scott were there in the period 1788–97. Robert Scott was farmer there in 1841 until at least the 1860s. Eweslees Knowe is about 7 km to the north-west. Remains of rig-and-furrow cultivation can be seen near the head of the Eweslees Burn, as well as signs of several enclosures. In 1942 an RAF Hurricane aircraft (JS346) crashed into the hillside in poor visibility, narrowly avoiding the farmhouse, and killing the pilot, Prince Supeabat Chirosakti of Siam (it is 'Dewes leases' in 1590, 'Dewslies' in 1661 and 'Dueslees' in 1730; it is 'Dewislyis' on Blaeu's 1654 map and 'Dewislees' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Eweslees Hope (yooz-leez-hōp) n. farmstead up the Ewesless Burn from the farm of Eweslees. It was occupied in 1841 by Armstrong Scott and Mary Scott (probably his mother).

Ewes Pairish (yooz-pā-reesh) n. parish of Ewes, just over the boundary into Dumfriesshire, but formerly part of Roxburghshire. The population in 1755 was 392.

Ewes Witter (yooz-wi'-ur) n. Ewes Water, small river that rises in the Blackhall and Mosspaul Burns and joins the Esk at Langholm, with a length of about 8 miles (13 km). The A7 road follows the valley of Ewesdale after crossing down into Dumfriesshire near Mosspaul (it is 'Euss fl.' on Gordon's c.1650 map and 'Ewss Riuer' on Blaeu's 1654 map).

the Exchange Bar (thu-eks-chānj-bawr) n. public house at 9 Kirkstyle or 1 Silver Street, opposite the former Exchange Buildings, and popularly known as 'Dalton's' after an early proprietor, John Dalton. It has been there since the mid-19th century, the building previously being the Chartist Store. It is a grade C listed building.

the Exchange Buildins (thu-eks-chānj-bil-dinz) n. built over the Slitrig beside Towerdykeside, the foundation stone was laid in 1865 by the Duke of Buccleuch. A photograph of 1860 shows the site before construction commenced. The buildings consisted of a large hall, accommodating about 1500 people (and thus the largest in town), smaller halls, an arcade of shops and a house. It had a duel role as agricultural hall and entertainment centre, but soon came to be used mainly for concerts, shows, etc. It was later used as a dance hall and cinema, with various names, the Empire, the King's, the Odeon, the Classic and finally the Marina. In later years it was a bingo hall, with attached bars, most of which burned down in 1992. The northern section and the Arcade doorway survive, the rest being converted into a car park in 1998. The remaining three level building is designated to house the Border Archives.

excommunication (eks-ko-mew-nee-kā-shin) n. official exclusion from the Church, being the ultimate punishment in former times. Imposition of this order meant that public proclamations were read at all nearby churches ordering all parishioners to shun the offender, and to refuse to offer them food or shelter. Civil rights were also affected, until an Act of 1690. But in general excommunication meant being a social outcast and losing one's livelihood. The Pope excommunicated the whole of Scotland for Robert the Bruce's involvement in the murder of John 'Red' Comyn (who was Baron of Bedrule, among other places). This led to the Declaration of Arbroath, and the eventual lifting of the National excommunication. There are no records of individual Teris suffering this fate. In 1724 2 people from Stow had their Act of Excommunication read at Hawick Kirk and all the churches of the Presbytery of Merse and Teviotdale.

fair (fār) v., arch. to become fine, clear up (said of the weather) – '. . . the assurances of our friends that 'it would not fair today' [JAHM].

fair (fār) n., arch. 'ti take a body ti the fair' is to take aback an over-confident person, to disagreeably surprise someone – 'Now that's nate where A got a drop that raether taen iz ti the fair!' [ECS] (usually occurring in the passive voice).

Fair (fār) n. Richard (16th C.) owner of half a particate of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick's 1537 Charter.

Fairbairn (fār-bārn) n. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His son Thomas was baptised in 1651, with witnesses Patrick Angus and Patrick Nichol. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Castleside, in Ashkirk Parish, recorded on the 1789–97 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1797 he was owner of 8 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. In 1801 his servant at Castleside, Thomas Johnstone, was on the ballot for the Militia. James (18th/19th C.) from the Hawick area, in about 1815 he emigrated with his family to the 'Scotch Settlement' in St. Lawrence County, New York. He may be the James recorded as servant at Denholm Mill on the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799 and miller at Denholm Mill on the 1801 Militia ballot. James (b.1806/7) born in Westruther Parish, he was farmer at Easter Fodderlee around the 1860s. In 1851 he was living in Jedburgh, but by 1861 he was farming 212 acres and employing 7 labourers. His wife was Helen Rutherford, and they also lived with his mother-in-law, who was a farmer's widow. By 1868 his wife was recorded as farmer at East Fodderlee, and so he was presumably deceased. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded at Spittal in 1781. His children included Betty (b.1779) and David (b.1781). John (b.c.1780) servant at Wester Essenside according to the ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish in 1801. Perhaps the same John married Janet Dick and had a son Gilbert baptised in 1817. John (b.c.1780) hind at Belses according to the ballot for the Militia in Ancrum Parish in 1801. John (1858–1943) son of the Maxton blacksmith Charles, with his mother being Elizabeth Elliot, he came to Hawick in the early 1900s. He eventually became manager of the King's Theatre (in the Exchange Buildings). He retired in 1928. He was known as a writer of poetry, several of which were published in the Hawick Express. His output includes 'Alec, Oor Bellman', 'On Seeing A Tramp Passing', 'Look On The Bright', 'The Cornet's Chase' and 'Wilton Park'. He also published the poem 'To the most glorious . . . Memory of . . . Sir Walter Scott' in 1932. However, he is best remembered as writer of 'The Exile's Dream', which was put to music by John Huggan. He died at his home, 25 Wilton Crescent, and is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Peter (1807/8–69) from Edinburgh, he was a shoemaker in Hawick. He married Janet, daughter of Michael Grieve and Rachel Scott, and she died in 1877. In 1861 he was living at 3 Fore Raw. Robert (1813/4–96) married Hannah Ann Murray, as recorded in Cavers and Southdean Parishes in 1825. His wife died at Lanton Craig in 1851, aged 49. He emigrated to America with his family, with daughter Helen dying in Nebraska in 1872 and Margaret at Burnkinford in 1845. He died at Elmira, Illinois, and there is a memorial to him and his family in Bedrule kirkyard. Thomas (18th/19th C.) journeyman wright in Lilliesleaf according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Thomson and their children included Elizabeth (b.1800) and John (b.1802).

Fairbairn's Craigs (fār-bārnz-krāgz) n. rocky region to the south-west of Larriston Fells in Castleton Parish, located near the head of the Staneshiel Burn.

fairce (fārs) adj., arch. fierce – '. . . thir verra rigs was den for fairce sodgers in fechtin-graith' [ECS].

fair dae wi (fār-dā-wi) v. to need, desire strongly, 'murder' – 'A could fair dae wi a fish supper the now', 'Now oo've got nae rails or bridges Hawick could fair dae wi' thum now' [AY].

fair din (fār-din) adj. done in, worn out, exhausted – 'Whilst admitting to being 'fair din', our mothers took a great pride in the results of their wash-day' [BB], '. . . the horse hez obviously been in a battle. It's fair dune. It's jeegered . . . ' [IWL] (also spelled 'fair dune' etc.).

fair dows (fār-dowz) n., arch. fair dos, fair play.

The Fairest Spot o' a' (thu-fā-rist-spō'-ō-aw) n. song with words and music by Tom Ker, written about 1890. It was often performed at social nights for the Teviotdale Bicycle Club and first sung at the Common Riding at the 1909 Colour Bussing by T. Caldwell. It fell into obscurity after WWI, but was revived after WWII, with music arranged by Adam Rutherford Grant (from his own memory and some notes left by Tom Ker and Adam Grant). In its new form it was first sung by George L. MacDonald at the Callants' Club Smoker in 1948. It has the same rhythm and meter as Ker's 'I Like Auld Hawick the Best', and like his other songs, each 'chorus' has different words. Again falling out of fashion for decades, the song was revived for the 2005 Colour Bussing by Joyce Tinlin and is included in the CD 'Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry' (2006) sung by Joyce Tinlin.

Fairfoul (fār-fowl) n. Andrew (c.1606–63) son of a minister from Anstruther, he studied at St. Andrews and became minister of North Leith and then Duns. In 1661 he became the first Archbishop of Glasgow after the Restoration. He was zealous in persecuting Covenanters. He died on his way to Edinburgh after less than 2 years in office and is buried at Holyrood. His seal showed a crozier and a saltire, with a monk and a tree with fowls, together with a fish and the words 'SIGILLUM R. P. ANDR. ARCHI[EPISC]OPI GLASGU'.

Fairgrieve (fār-greev) n. Alexander (19th C.) described as a misionary in Hawick. He ran a bible class associated with the East Bank Church, the group meeting in a room in the old Museum in Orrock Place. In 1866 he donated to the Museum a 'miniature bust of Wesley'. David (b.1791/2) born at Ledgerwood in Berwickshire, he was a tailor on the Howegate, listed in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories and in Slater's 1852 directory on 'Middle row'. In 1841 and 1851 he was on the Mid Row. His wife was Janet and they had a son Robert. George (b.1781/2) from Jedburgh, he was a tin-plate worker in Hawick. In 1841 he was a tinsmith on O'Connell Street and in 1851 he was listed as a white-smith at about 6 High Street. Slater's 1852 directory lists 'George Fairgrieve & Son' on the High Street. His wife was Margaret and their children included William, Thomas, Helen and Margaret. George D. (19th/20th C.) 5th man to serve as Secretary of the Congregational Kirk. Helen (b.1830/1) daughter of tinsmith George. She was listed as a milliner on the High Street in Slater's 1852 directory. James (18th/19th C.) tin-plate worker on the High Street, listed in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. In 1837 he was listed as an ironmonger as well as tin-plate worker at the Tower Knowe. In 1841 he was living at Tower Knowe (probably No. 3) with his wife Isabella. Janet (17th C.) listed among the poor householders in Abbotrule who could not pay the Hearth Tax in 1694. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Bruce and their children included: Anna (b.1720); and William (b.1726). His name was transcribed 'Fergue' in 1720. The witnesses were Bailie Martin and candlemaker John Scott. John (b.1789/90) from Galashiels, he was a carrier in Lilliesleaf. He is probably the John from Galashiels who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawik' in 1825. His daughter Jessie married road labourer James Goodfellow. In 1852 he is listed running his cart from Hawick to Lilliesleaf, leaving from the Plough on Thursdays; his name is given in Slater's directory as 'Job' (also written 'Fairgreave', 'Fairgreive', 'Feirgrive' and 'Fergrieve').

Fairhurst Drive (fār-hurst-drīv) n. part of Burnfoot, built in 1950 and extended around 1966. The name derived from the fact that the first houses were of the early concrete 'Whitson Fairhurst' style. Later houses built to fill gaps were of a different style.

fairies (fā-reez) n., pl. imaginary mischievous spirits. The exact nature and appearance are ill-defined, this being part of their mystique. However, the picture of small, winged creatures is largely a Victorian English invention, having little in common with the Scottish concept. Local stories often had them as small creatures, sometimes dressed in green. There was great local superstition about fairies until well into the 19th century. People claimed to have seen them cavorting at the Miller's Knowes and the Wellogate. 2 green circular mounds, or 'fairy rings' (now known to be generally caused by a fungus) were once situated on the north bank of the Teviot, but were obliterated when Laidlaw's Cauld was built. Similar rings once existing at Carterhaugh were supposedly related to the fairies in 'Tamlane'. Windburgh Hill was supposed to be a domain of the 'guid folk', and a shepherd disturbing them by throwing a stone into the (non-existent) bottomless loch there is said to have caused the great flood of the Slitrig in 1767. An area in the Borthwick Water was called the Fairy Knowe, apparently where a shepherd was thrown in the flooded burn by the fairies. An article on local fairies, written by 'A.M., Hawick' (probably Alexander Miller) appeared in the Edinburgh Magazine in 1820. A man was said to have given his shirt to fairies at Nether Tofts and was rewarded with riches for the rest of his life. A child of a woman at Minto Craigfoot was said to have been swapped for a changeling and only saved when Rev. Borland of Bedrule administered a concoction made from the foxglove. Another tale is of a changeling baby who became 'an ugly emaciated creature', who demonically played the fiddle and was thrown in the fire by a tailor, when the original baby reappeared. James Ruickbie told a story of a girl in Innerleithen who was taken by the fairies, but returned after prayers. The farm of Winningtonrig was said to have 2 fairies, which often performed favours on the farm, but once were interrupted while piping and dancing, and in retaliation made all the animals call out loudly for the next day. A fairy at Bedrule was said to have been given the farmer's wife's last barley, and in return filled her meal chest. It was said that the favourite food of fairy folk was 'peasemeal brose'. Objects that were meant to offer protection from these spirits include a husband's 'blue bonnet', a hank of red thread, a natural stone with a hole in it, and branches of the rowan tree. Related supernatural phenomena of local lore include 'bogles' and 'spunkies'. Prehistoric tools and other artefacts turned up by the plough were formerly asscociated with fairies or elves.

fairin (fār-in) n., poet. a gift purchased at a fair – 'Aye, b' my faith! we've got oor fairin' – Oor hirsels gane, past a' repairin' ' [JoHa], 'But few were the fairings puir Bessie e'er got – Though bearded and beautiless aye had a lot' [JoHa].

fairkishin (fār-ki-shin) n., arch. a good quantity, sometimes implying untidiness – 'Thae scones ir weel heirt; A pat a guid fairkeesheen o butter inti thum' [ECS] (cf. ferkishin.

Fairley (fār-lee) n. John A. (19th/20th C.) wrote the articles 'The Religious Experiences of Catherine Hamilton, 1688–1753' (1906), 'Allan Cunningham' (1907), 'Bailie Smith of Kelso's Account of the Gypsies of Kirk Yetholm in 1815' (1907) and 'Douglas Graham, Skellat Bellman of Glasgow and his Chap Books' (1908), all published in Hawick. Robert (19th/20th C.) weaver from Northumberland, who lived in Selkirk, Innerleithen and elsewhere, but spent much of his life in Hawick. He wrote poetry, being a prize-winner in the Verter Well competition, where he used the pseudonym 'Birkinshaw'. He published 'Poems and Songs' (1881) and a second edition called 'Teviotside Musings' (1892) (also sometime spelled 'Fairlie').

Fairloans (fār-lōnz) n. farm in Liddesdale, located to the east of Saughtree, near to Myredykes and very close to the Border. Robert Armstrong was tenant there in 1694. Walter Jardine was farmer there in at least 1794–99, with James Beattie as shepherd in 1797. Robert Bettie was servant there in 1799. Walter Jardine, Percy Hedley and Andrew Thomson were there in 1801. David Jackson was shepherd in the early 19th century. Nearby limestones quarries were developed, this being the 'Thorlieshope Lime Works and Fairloans Quarries'. In 1841 the 'spa' at Deadwater was also listed as being here – 'One of our earliest memories takes us back to a pleasant summer spent among the rush-covered marshes, dark peat-stacks, and 'gousty' apartments of Fair-Loans' [JAHM] (it is marked on Stobie's 1770 map).

Fairloans (fār-lōnz) n. farm near the head of the Kale Water, north of the Border at Catcleuch Hill. It should not be confused with a place of the same name in Liddesdale. Around 1800 an old woman lived there called Kitty Hall, a native of Northumberland, who recited for James Telfer a version of the ballad 'The Death of Parcy Reed', this being published in 1844.

fairm (fārm) n. a farm – 'Holstered pistols cairried For gairdin' o' the fairms, Less militant in eichty fower The year thae laid doon airms' [MB] (cf. the more common ferm).

fairn (fārn) n., arch. a fern, specifically applied to bracken – '. . . he wad gi'e 'im a maud-neuk fu' o' fairns – an' muckle cleishers tae!' [HAd1861], 'A'll sort ee, yih little bleckie, for poww-in aa ma fairns (ferns)' [ECS], 'Ilk day, I'll gather soft green fairns For beddin' for oorsels an' bairns' [WP].

Fairneylaw (fār-nee-law) n. George (d.c.1493) priest of the Diocese of Glasgow who is recorded as notary for a sasine relating to Hawick in 1490. He is separately recorded as 'Sir', usually indicating that he was a cleric without a Masters degree. He was notary to a sasine of 1484/5 relating to Mangerton, where he is called 'Priest' and another sasine for a 'tenement' in Hawick in 1484, where he is referred to as 'Chaplain, Glasgow Diocese'. According to tradition he was a chaplain sent from Melrose Abbey to collect the tithe from Roger (or sometimes Robert) Langlands. When he persisted Langlands supposedly drew his broadsword and cut off Fairneylaw's head at Wester Hepe. The story further relates how Langlands escaped punishment from the King by apologising for removing the chaplain's hat, but omitting to add that his head was inside it! How much of the story is true remains unclear, although it is clear that Fairneylaw did have a local connection, and there is a record of Roger Langlands being denounced a rebel in 1494/5 for failure to appear to answer for the slaughter of 'Sir George Farnylaw, chaplain'. It is also unclear whether there is a connection with the Heap Cross, which probably once existed at Stirches, and which was traditionally said to mark the site of the murder (however, it seems likely its existence as a marker long preceded these events). Fairneylaw Place in Stirches is named after him. Janet (16th C.) listed in the 1552 last testament of William Scott, younger of Branxholme. She is recorded as 'Jonete Farnielaw', but it is unclear whether she was from the Hawick area or not. John (16th C.) holder of 2 particates of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick's 1537 Charter. His name is written 'Farnelaw'. It is conceivable that he was related to the earlier priest. William (15th C.) recorded as 'William Farnlie' when witness to a charter between Henry Wardlaw of Wilton and John Scott of Thirlestane in 1483. It is not impossible that he was related to George (the name is also spelled 'Farnylaw', 'Farnelaw' and other variants).

Fairneylaw Place (fār-nee-law-plis) n. part of Stirches, off Stirches Road, along with Oxnam Court and Maxton Court, built in 1978 and named after Sir George Fairneylaw – 'Then thinking it time to finish off The story of the bonnet, He said, wi' a twinkle in his een, 'The Abbot's heid was in it' ' [FL].

Fairneyside (fār-nee-sīd) n. former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, listed as 'Fairney-side' in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls.

Fairnielees (fār-nee-leez) n. Fernielees, part of the former estate of Harwood in the Barony of Feu-Rule. It belonged to Hector Turnbull of Stonedge in 1609, when he sold it to Gibbie Eliott of Stobs by wadset and reversion. It may be the 'Fairnylies' where in 1623 Michael Birnie stole sheep belonging to Walter Scott of Todrig and Simon Nichol. It is recorded in a contract of 'wadset' in 1647 (discharged in 1649) involving Walter Riddell and William, Earl of Lothian. Different quarters of the lands were owned by Sir Walter Riddell, Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers and James Laidlaw. 'Tithous with 4th part of the lands of Fernilie' were listed among the properties of Sir William Eliott of Stobs in the Barony of Feu-Rule in the late 17th century. In 1694 the 3 east quarters are recorded being sold by Gilbert Elliot of Stonedge to Henry Elliot of Harwood. There were Ogilvies there in 1758. By 1788 it had been disjoined from the estate of Eliott of Stobs and was valued at £1200 (meaning it was a large farm at that time), forming part of the estate of Elliot of Harwood. In 1811 it was listed among those lands owned by William Elliot of Harwood and with the same value. These lands were still being referred to in documents of the late 19th century. The precise extent is uncertain, but Lurgiescleuch was the eastern quarter of the lands. Fernielees Sike rises between Berryfell Hill and Pike Fell and joins Lurgies Burn just north of Lurgiescleuch (it is 'Phairnilies' in 1562, 'Fairneleyis' in 1609, 'Fairnileyis' in 1647, 'Fernilies' in 1677, 'Fairnelies' in 1694, 'Phairnilies' in 1700 and 'Fairneylees' in 1811).

Fairnilee (fār-nee-lee) n. mansion house in the Tweed valley, near Yair, built 1904–06 by John James Burnett. It was a Crown property from at least the 1460s, leased to Thomas and James Ker in 1480 and by 1501 let to George Ker. John Hervey was recorded there in 1494/5, when he had remission for rieving crimes. In 1541 it was tenanted by George Ker of Linton. The farm remained a property of the Kers until at least the late 17th century and there were Rutherfords of Fairnilee in the 18th century. The grounds contain the ruins of 'Old Fairnilee', a 16th century house, where Alison Rutherford wrote her version of 'The Flowers of the Forest'. It was also the setting for Andrew Lang's story 'The Gold of Fairnilee'. It was listed among the principal houses of Selkirkshire in an account of 1649. Until 1818 the main road from Selkirk to Edinburgh passed here, avoiding Gala. This is probably the 'Fernleigh' mentioned in the 1837 inquiry into 'fictitious voters', 10 men having been denied their claim to the life-rent there, including John Goodfellow, William Goodfellow, John Hislop, Andrew Ewen, Peter Wilson and Walter Wilson, all of Hawick (also spelled 'Fairnele', 'Farnile', 'Farnelee', 'Fernilea', etc.; it is 'Farnylee' in 1501 and 'Fairnalie' in 1780; it is 'Fairnilie' on Gordon's c.1650 map; the origin is probably Old English for 'ferny pasture').

Fairnington (fār-nin-tin) n. hamlet just to the north of Peniel Heugh monument. There was formerly a hospital associated with the place. There is said to have been a stone circle in the nearby Harlaw Plantation, but there is now no sign of it. 'The entire barony of Farnyndon' is listed in c.1380 among lands that were claimed by England. There were once Maitlands living there. In 1494/5 Ninian Rutherford in Ancrum was allowed to 'compone' for stealing cattle and grain from several tenants there and Walter Rutherford for similar crimes, the victims including men by the name of Hogg, Ormiston, Stenhouse, Purves and Wyat. The Earl of Bothwell was recorded as owner in 1502. Also in 1502, James Rutherford (called 'Kay') had remission for stealing cows, sheep, geese and oats from here, the farmers being called Hogg and Ormiston. The lands (including the hospital) were listed among those possessed by the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1634. The estate was sold by Francis Scott, Earl of Buccleuch to George Rutherford in about 1647, and was afterwards a seat of a branch of the Rutherfords. The mansion house dates mainly to the end of the 17th century, but incorporates part of an earlier structure. It is said that there was once a stone circle in a field to the east (the origin of the name is Old English 'færing dun', meaning 'the ferny hill', and first occurs around 1200 as 'Faringdun'; it is 'farnynton' and 'farnyntoun' in 1502, 'Farnyntoun' in 1505, 'Pharnyngtoune' in 1568/9, 'Farnyngtoun' in 1580/1, 'Faringtoun' in 1601, 'Farningtoune' in 1634, 'Fernytoun' in 1642 and 'Fairniton' in 1649; it is 'Fernitoun' on Blaeu's c.1654 map).

fairny-faced (fār-nee-fāsd) adj., arch. freckled.

Fairnyside (fār-nee-sīd) n. former farmstead in the upper part of the Allan Water. It was described as a 'pendicle' of Brugh in 1660. It is shown on the 1718 survey of Scott of Buccleuch lands, attached to Skelfill and Langcleuchside. It was leased from Buccleuch Estates in 1744 by Elizabeth Mason, widow of Robert Scott of Harwood, along with the farm of Skelfhill (marked 'Fairnysyide' on Blaeu's 1654 map, perhaps on the western side of the Skelfhill Burn; it is 'Fairneside' in 1718 and 'Ferniside' in 1744).

fairs (fārz) n., pl. fairs and markets were once important focal events for towns, involving buying and selling, as well as hiring and entertainment. In Hawick there were several regular fairs, which petered out by the end of the 19th century. The horse- and cattle-related tryst was on the third Tuesday in October, starting in 1785. The main hiring (of servants) and cattle fair was on the 17th of May, with another on the 8th of November (also called the Winter Fair). For a while the May Fair lasted over 2 days, and was one of the most important events in Hawick's annual calendar. In 1669 there was a request by William Douglas of Drumlanrig for the town to be allowed to hold 2 other fairs and this was allowed by the Crown, these being on the 6th of May and 10th of September, 'for buying and selling of horse, nolt, sheip, fish, flesh, meill, malt and all sort of grain, cloath, lining and wollen, and all maner of merchant wair'. St. Jude's Fair was mentioned in 1673, and this may have been another name for the Winter Fair. In 1697 it is recorded that 17th June was a market day and in 1700 27th June was a fair day (but it is unclear which one). Herds were hired on the 1st, 2nd and 3rd Thursdays in April starting in 1780 and moving to the 1st of March by the late 19th century. A sheep market (also called the Tup Fair) was on the 20th and 21st of September, and a wool fair was held on the first Thursday after the St. Boswells Fair in July (or sometimes the day before, i.e. 17th). Fair days were extremely busy in town, with the High Street, Tower Knowe and Sandbed thronging with people. Into the late 18th century they were also commonly scenes of fighting and riots – 'The rural Fair! in boy-hood's days serene, How sweet to fancy was the novel scene, The merry bustle, and mix'd uproar, While every face a jovial aspect wore' [JL].

Fairside (fār-sīd) n. former farmstead in Liddesdale, probably close to Steeleroad-end. It is listed in 1632 among lands possessed by Hab Henderson, along with Todscleuch, Tailside and Cleuchside.

fair wather (fār-waw-thur) n., arch. flattery, coaxing – 'Phrase: 'If he'll no dae't be fair wather, he'll dae't be foul' [GW] (= by severity)' [GW].

fairy (fā-ree) n. an imaginary being with mischievous magical powers – 'Survey yon ring, of lively green, Where fairies, dancing, erst were seen' [JTe] (see also fairies).

fairyfauld (fā-ree-fawld) n., arch. a fairy ring, nearly circular ring of dark grass (or sometimes mushrooms), said to be where fairies held their meetings, but naturally explained by the outward growth of the mycelium of a fungus as it exhausts the soil nutrients.

the Fairy Faulds (thu-fā-ree-fawldz) n. former name for an area on the Wilton side of the Teviot, next to the ford that was at the foot of Walter's Wynd (so where Victoria Laundry was later built). The name presumably relates to the 2 'fairy rings' that could once be seen there (due to the growth pattern of a fungus), but were eradicated when Laidlaw's Cauld was built. W.N. Kennedy in 1857 describes (although not from personal observation) that it was an ancient encampment of some sort, destroyed in about 1800. A 'claystone axe' was found there, and once in the Museum collection – 'A fine polished stone Celt, found in gravel of bed of Teviot, near Victoria the Fairyfauld's Stream (thu-fā-ree-fawldz-streem) n. former name for a stream that entered the Teviot near the ford at the foot of Walter's Wynd, on the opposite bank. It may also have been used as a fanciful name for the Teviot itself before industrialisation – '... before Laidlaw's Cauld was built, the river was a fine stream, which auld folks called the 'Fairyfauld's Stream' ... ' [JTu] (also written 'Fairy Fauld's; the name derived from the 'fairy rings' which once existed beside the stream).

the Fairy Knowe (thu-fā-ree-now) n. former name given to a hill somewhere in the upper Borthwick valley. It is said that a shepherd was thrown into a flooded burn by the fairies there.

faisible (fā-zi-bul) adj., arch. neat, tidily done, fair, satisfactory, of pleasing appearance, respectable – '... A made a faisable mael oot o pei-soop ... wui twae rake o curny-dumpleen owre-an-abuin' [ECS], 'She'd mony a hatter, puir craitir, bit she wuddlt an brocht thae bairns up rael faisable, for aa' [ECS], 'I dinnae want buriet in Wulton, boys, For although it's faisable near ... ' [DH], 'And drucken Airchie swore, life-lang, Wull's funeral was the best Attendit that he'd ever seen And the maist faisible dressd' [DH] (also spelled 'faisable').

faithfi (fāth-fi, -fe) adj., n. faithful – 'Wha's aye been faithfu' to me when fate blew bleak an' snell' [JoHa], 'Colin will just say what he thinks, that his Mysie was a guid brave hearted lassie tae stand sae faithfu' tae sic a blackguard' [JEDM], 'There was aye a lot o' religious tolerashion in Haaick an naebody cared how their neebirs worshipped so the door was aye open teh the faithfeh' [BW] (also written 'faithfu' ' etc.).

faix see faiks

faizart (fā-zar', -zart,) n., arch. a puny, effeminate man – 'Where fainting fazard dare not show their face; And calls their off-spring Thieves to their disgrace' [CWS], an impudent person, a hermaphrodite fowl – 'Faizart, Fesart, A hermaphrodite of the gallinaceous tribe, Roxb.' [JoJ] (also written 'fazard', etc.).

faizen (fā-zin) v., arch. to unravel, fray at the ends – 'It's beginnin' to faizen oot' [GW].

faizent (fāzin') adj., arch. frayed, unravelled – '... a shauchlin, husslin-shoodert keibult wui ... stoory claes aa tairgets an spatches an faizzent-ends' [ECS], 'It's a' faizen't oot' [GW] (also 'faizzent').

faizenins (fā-zin-inz) n., pl., arch. frayed edges or ends.

fake (fāk) n., arch. a trick, performance – 'Thus a clever fake describes a smart act or 'turn' at a theatre or elsewhere' [ECS].

Fake Graham (fāk-grā-um) n. nickname for several male members of the local Graham family.

Fala (faw-la) n. town on the A68 just into Midlothian. Fala Moor stands on the high ground between Fala (on the A68) and Falahill (on the A7). It was there in 1542 that James V tried to organise an attack into England, but the collected nobility refused to follow him.

Falahill (faw-la-hil) n. former seat of a branch of the Murray family. It is a farm just off the A7 before crossing from the Scottish Borders into Midlothian. Franklin D. Rooseveldt named his Scottish terrier 'Murray the Outlaw of Falahill' ('Fala' for short) in recognition of his distant Borders ancestors (also written 'Fallahill', 'Fallohill', 'Fallowhill', 'Faulehill', 'Faulohill', 'Fawlahill', 'Fawlawhill', 'Fawlayhill', 'Fawlohill', etc.).

Falahill (faw-la-hil) n. former farmstead in Lilliesleaf Parish, just to the north of Greenhouse farm. It is marked on the 1766 'Plan of Nether Raperlaw and Falahill', owned by Gilbert Elliot of Minto. It is also on Stobie's 1770 map. James Riddell was farmer there in 1789–91.

Falahill Summit (faw-la-hil-sum-i') n. highest point on the Waverley line between Hawick and Edinburgh at 880 feet above sea level. The summit itself was level and had extensive sidings. The lands of Falahill were once a seat of the Murrays – 'Frae the grey auld city it started oot Wi' an unco herty will; But it hirpled alang like a sair dune man Or it breested Fala-hill' [WL].

falchion (fal-chee-in) n., poet. a short sword having a convex edge and sharp point – '... Yet, not of warring hosts and faulchion-wounds Again the harp of ancient minstrels sounds' [JL] (also written 'faulchion').

Falconer (fawl-ki-nur) n. Rev. James Fraser (1922–89) born at Wishaw, son of James Davidson. He was educated at Dalziel High School and Glasgow Skerry's College. He served in the R.A.F. 1940–47 then attended Glasgow University and Trinity College 1947–51. He was student assistant at Cambuslang Old 1949–52, licensed by the Presbytery of Hamilton in 1951 and ordained as minister at Saltcoats South Beach in 1952 and later moved to Aberdeen Mannofield. In 1975 he moved to become minister of Denholm and Bedrule, linked with Minto. He remained until his retirement in 1977. In 1948 he married Jean Watt and they had a son, David Watt. Robert (15th C.) recorded as 'Robertum Fawconnar' when he witnessed the 1450 'retour' for the Barony of Hawick. All the other men listed were important locally. He was also 'Roberto Falconar' in 1452 when he witnessed the sasine for the Barony of Hawick going to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. His name appears among a list of 4 burgesses. Thomas (15th C.) witness to the 1432 sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas; he is there 'Thoma Fallconar, presbiter' (presumably of Glasgow Diocese). He is also recorded as 'Thoma Falconar capellano' in 1452 when he was one of the witnesses to the sasine for the Barony of Hawick, signed in Hawick. He was thus a chaplain, presumably of Hawick or Cavers. He was probably related to Robert, who was also listed. And a second Thomas is also listed as a witness. William (15th C.) recorded as witness to a sasine of 1490 when Robert Scott purchased a 'teneemeent' from Robert Cessford in Hawick. He was probably a local resident.

falderal (fawl-du-rawl) n., arch. folderol, trifle, petty matter, fancy but inconsequential thing – 'They can eat their falderals that like, but recommend mei tae a sonsy bicker o' guid auld fashioned Scotch porridge . . . ' [JEDM] (see also faltheral).

Faldonside (faw-, fal-din-sīd) n. hamlet, house and nearby Loch just south of the Tweed between Selkirk and Melrose. The estate was long owned by the Kers. Sir Andrew Ker of Faldonside was a prominent Laird in the latter part of the 16th century. Part of the lands were owned by the Riddells of that Ilk in the 17th century. There were also Scotts there in the 17th century. A 1649 description of Roxburghshire states that there was a 'Loch at Fallinside'. There were Rutherfords there in the 18th century. Being immediately to the south-west of Abbotsford, the estate here was planted in a similar style to Abbotsford in the early 19th century – 'The braw lads o' Faddonside, The lasses o' the Peel, And when ye gang to Thornilee Ye'll ca' at Ashiesteel' [DJG] (formerly written 'Fadounsyde', 'Faudounsyde', 'Fawdonside', 'Fawdounside', 'Fawdounsyde', etc.).

the Falkland Raid (thu-fawl-klind-rād) n. raid on the Royal Palace at Falkland in 1592, led by the Earl of Bothwell, along with 300 horsemen from the Borders, including Wat of Harden. The raid was unsuccessful in capturing the King, James VI, but Bothwell did take him prisoner at Holyrood the following year. After the raid Walter Scott of Goldielands and Gideon Murray were instructed to destroy the houses of Harden and Dryhope belonging to Walter Scott of Harden (although it is unclear if this was done).

fall (fawl) n., arch. old Scots unit of length, also used for area. As a length unit it corresponded to 6 ells or about 18.6 English feet, with measurements traditionally being made using a rope of this length. A Scots furlong was 40 falls and a Scots mile 320 falls. After unification with England the fall became 6 English ells or 22.5 feet. As a unit of area it was one square fall, i.e. 36 square ells or about 346 square feet. 40 square falls (or just '40 falls') were equivalent to 1 rood or ¼ of a Scots acre.

Falla (faw-la) n. village in Oxnam Parish, to the east of Camptown off the A68 (the origin of the name is probably Old English 'fag hlaw', meaning 'speckled hill' and first occurs as 'Falaw' in 1549).

Falla (faw-la) n. John (17th C.) from Kelso, he was accused of being a Covenanter. He was taken prisoner at Whitsom Fair and tried along with Thomas Turnbull of Knowe in 1681. His surname is given in the court documents as 'Ffala'. He was found not guilty of raising arms against the government and being involved in the attack on Drumlanrig's Tower in Hawick. In 1684 he was charged with supporting and resetting rebels and after being sentenced to transportion, died in prison. John (d.c.1743) wright living at Swanshiel in Hobkirk Parish. He made coffins for those on the poor roll, as recorded in 1725. However, He was also elder and treasurer to the Parish Session during the time of Rev. Riccarton, and so there may be 2 generations here. John (18th/19th C.) joiner recorded in Chesters in Ancrum Parish in the 1797 Lieutenancy Book. John (18th/19th C.) wright in Hawick. The death of his unnamed child is recorded in 1808. Robert (19th C.) son of John, he was a mason who lived at Hassendean Common. In 1851 he is recorded there with Alison (possibly his mother) and Jane, probably a daughter. Letters from him exist dealing with the Smith family who moved to Manchester. William (19th C.) married Mary Manuel in Lilliesleaf in 1834. William (b.1805/6) born in Wilton, he was a woollen slubber who lived on O'Connell Street in 1841. His wife was Margaret and their children included Jean, Margaret, George, Betty, Simon and William. By 1851 the family were in New Abbey, Kirkcudbrightshire, where he was a woollen machine keeper, and soon afterwards they emigrated to America. By 1870 they were in North Andover, Massachusetts and by 1880 their surname appears to have changed to 'Falls'. The house he lived in in O'Connell Street was known as 'William Fala's house' on the 1851 census.

Falla Cleuch (faw-la-klooch) n. stream that rises on the northern slopes of Drinkstone Hill and drains into Synton Loch.

falli (fa-li, -lō) n., arch. a fellow – '... Caleb ... told them he had fulfilled his promise, but 'dinna let on what ye've seen, an' than ye can lauch at the next fallows 'at come oot' ' [WNK], '... a muckle big, bang fallih, braid-shoodert, rash an stuffy, that staapeet alang the Jethart road wui a taatih-steppin streide' [ECS], 'There are no 'Yauld, bang fallows' or 'Muckle leash fallows' now-a-days' [JTu], '... A dizen near, I'm sure they were, O fallaws in a raw' [WaD], '... A buirdly auld falla wi' muckle to sell, And muckle to gie wi' his crack' [WL] (also written 'fallih' and 'fallow'; cf. the now more common felli).

falliship (fa-li-ship) n., poet. fellowship – 'Sall the throne o' inequitie hae fallaschip wi' thee ...?' [HSR].

Falnash (fawl-nash, faw-nesh) n. farm and hamlet near Teviothead, reached by the side road across the Teviot at Bowanhill. Centuries ago it was the major estate in the area. It could be 'le Fallyneshe' listed among the lands of Sir James Sandilands in 1389. It is described as a '20 merklands' around 1390 when given to Thomas Cranston of that Ilk was the residence of Dalgleishes in the mid-15th century. In 1456 William Dalgleish had a sasine for the lands, which had previously been in the hands of the King. Simon Dalgleish had a sasine in 1464. In 1511 it was confirmed to a later Simon Dalgleish, with the consent of his son Kentigern. The Elliots owned the lands from at least 1556. In 1569 a bond of security signed in Hawick lists the following tenants: 'Wille Ellot, Johnne Turnair, Jame Caveris, Georde Armestrang, Georde Turnbull, Andro Turnbull, Jame Billop, Jame Bichat, Dande Ellot, Jok Ellot, Hobbe Ellot, Jok Murray, Will Huntar, Johnne Nobill'. In 1627 its value was 'estimat to 300 merks in stok; in teynd to 40 lb'. In 1643 the lands of Robert Scott of Falnash were valued at £1400. In 1667 Archibald Elliot paid 9,000 merks to Francis Scott to clear the 'reversion' on the lands, and then sold them to his brother Gavin Elliot of Caerlenrig. Walter Scott of Harwood and Falnash is recorded on the 1678 Land Tax Rolls; his lands in Hawick Parish were valued at £1550 13s 4d. James Baptie was recorded as resident there in 1678. James Veitch was smith there in 1706 and James Scott was shepherd in at least 1713–14. The lands held by the Laird of Falnash once extended much further than the modern farm; in the 1718 survey of holdings of the Scotts of Buccleuch the lands of Falnash bordered on those of Commonside. Gideon Scott, the Duchess of Buccleuch's Chamberlain in the late 17th and early 18th centuries lived here and was called 'Old Falnash'. He also acted as the Duke's Bailie in Hawick, and others in his family were also nicknamed 'Falnash'. The Scotts of Langshaw also held lands here along with the mill (so this may be Falnash Mill), inherited by Walter of Langshaw from his father Francis in 1690. In 1703 James Stewart was smith there and Robert Riddell was miller. John Scott was recorded there in at least 1703–05 and William Scott was tenant in 1712. The estate of Gideon Scott of Falnash was valued at £1517 13s 4d in the 1740s. Walter Scott paid tax for 11 windows there in 1748. The lands were sold by Thomas Scott of Falnash to Henry, Duke of Buccleuch in about 1760. By 1788 Falnash and Haregrain were valued together at £684. Robert Laidlaw was the farmer there in the 18th century, followed by Thomas Laidlaw. John Baptie was shepherd in 1797 and Thomas Shortreed was tailor there. Thomas Shortreed and John Turnbull were there in 1801. In 1811 it was valued (along with Haregrain) at £684, part of the properties of the Duke of Buccleuch. William Turnbull was farmer in 1841 and in 1851, when the farm covered 4500 acres and had 17 labourers. Robert L. Turnbull was farmer in the 1860s and 70s. The burial place of the Scotts of Falnash is in Teviothead Cemetery, with a large table-stone once inscribed with most of the names. The area was part of Hawick Parish until Teviothead Parish was formed in 1850. Before the mid-18th century one of the routes from the south towards Selkirk diverted at Teviothead and went over to the Borthwick valley via Falnash, Lairhope and Old Howpasley – '... Falnash, and Commonside; inform Fenwick, and Goudiland, With Ha'ick, Burnfoot, and Hassindean, to wait on my command' [WSB] (the name first appears in the late 1300s as 'Fallyness'; it is 'Fallinashe' and 'Fallineche' in 1456, 'Fallyn Eche' in 1461, 'Fallinesch' in 1464, 'Fawnesch' in 1511, 'Fawnyche' in 1561/2 and is later spelled 'Falineshe', 'Fallenash', 'Fallenashe', 'Fallenesche', 'Fallenesh', 'Fallinasch', 'Fallin-asche', 'Fallinashe', 'Fallineche', 'Fallinesch', 'Fallinesche', 'Fallineshe', 'Fallnesg', 'Falnashe', 'Falneesche', 'Falnesche', 'Falnesh', 'Falneshe', 'Falnish', 'Fanash', 'Fanesh', 'Faneash', 'Fawandeshe', 'Fawenesh', 'Fawinesche', 'Fawnesche', 'Fawnyche', etc.; it is transcribed 'Fenneske' in 1644, written 'Fennish' in Hawick Burgh records of 1728 and 'Finesh' in tax records of 1748; it is marked 'Fanessh' on Blaeu's 1654 map; its origin is simply Old English for 'at the fallen ash-tree'; note there is also a 'Fawnys' in Berwickshire, near Mellerstain).

Falnash (fawl-nash) n. Richard (13th C.) described as 'Richard de Fawnys' when his daughter Christian married William of Haliburton. This may well have been Falnash, since the Haliburtons of that Ilk were involved in transferring the lands to Thomas Cranston of that Ilk in the late 14th century.

Falnash (fawl-nash) n. nickname for Chamberlains of the Duke of Buccleuch in the 18th century, who were Lairds of Falnash. The Chamberlain also acted as Bailie of the Regality of Hawick, with local administrative power, involvement in the kirk session, etc. Previous owners of Falnash, the Elliots, were also given that appellation – 'For Stobs and young Falnash, They followed him up and down In the links of Ousenam Water They found him sleeping soun' ' [T].

Falnash Burnfit (fawl-nash-burn-fi') n. former name for a farmstead near Dryden. John Elliot died there in 1832. The Helm family lived there in 1841.

Falnash Mill (fawl-nash-mil) n. former farmstead near Falnash, perhaps the same place later called Birkiebrae. William Elliot was tenant there in 1598/9 (while another William was Laird of Falnash). Gilbert Elliot was there in 1618. It may be the lands of 'Falnish de molendino [mill]' inherited by Walter Scott of Langshaw from his father Francis in 1690. Walter Davidson is recorded there, among the poor of Hawick Parish, in 1694. Robert Riddell was there in 1703 and Thomas Elliot in 1720. James Veitch, blacksmith, lived there in the early 18th century and Robert Elliot in the mid-18th century. Walter Hogg lived there in the early 19th century. Adam Beattie and his family were there on the 1841 census. In about the middle of the 18th century, near Falstone, a boy called Paterson was born without hands or feet, and shortly after his birth his family moved to here, where he was brought up, although not long afterwards the family moved again to the Carlisle area, where he died at the age of 7; at the time many claimed that this fulfilled a prophecy (sometimes ascribed to Alexander Peden, but probably older) which went 'Atween Craig-cross and Eildon Tree A bonny bairn there is to be, That'll neither have hands to feight, not feet to flee; To be born in England, brought up in Scotland, And to gang hame to England again to dee' (it is 'the Miln of Fallinesche' in 1598/9, 'Fallinasche Mill' in 1618, 'falneshmilne' in 1694, 'falnesh milne' in 1707; 'Falnesh milne' in 1720 and 'Falnashmiln' in the 18th century).

Falnash Parkheid (fawl-nash-park-heed) n. former farmstead near Falnash. The Andison family were there in 1841.

the False Alairm (thu-fawls-a-lārm, -a-lā-rum) n. perceived French Invasion on the evening of Tuesday 31st January 1804, when warning signals blazed all across the Borders, calling men to arms to repel Napoleon's forces. At 9 p.m. in Hawick a beacon was lighted at the heights of Crumhaugh Hill, known then as Gotterson's Knowes or the Watchknowe. James Knox spotted it and ran down the Howegate to the Tower Knowe, firing his gun to signal the lighted beacon, and gaining a prize of 20 shillings. Caleb Rutherford then went around town beating his drum. A trumpeter (James Moffat) was dispatched up the Slitrig valley to rouse the men as far as Liddesdale, where several men swam across the Liddel to muster. A piper there mounted his donkey and played the rousing 'I am little Jock Elliot and wha daur meddle wi' me?' Walter Scott of Wauchope was at the head of the company that came from Liddesdale to meet the company of Capt. Corse Scott of Synton at the Tower Knowe. All the local volunteer units were mobilised, and people bid farewell to their loved ones. The Liddesdale volunteers reached Hawick by 8 a.m., travelling on horse and foot. After the muster at Hawick, the mounted men proceeded down the Teviot valley, many reaching Duns before they heard of the mistake. The foot volunteers were arranged on parade at the Haugh by Lord Minto, awaiting marching orders, which fortunately never came. Capt. Pringle of Whytbank was visiting Lord Napier at Wilton Lodge at the time and the butler is supposed to have said 'My Lord, supper is on the table, and the beacon's blazing'; Pringle rode to Selkik to assemble his troops there. The Selkirk men marched off and reached as far as Dalkeith. Meanwhile the Berwickshire Yeomanry mustered at Duns and marched to Dunbar. A tailor from Denholm, who marched off with the others, but would rather have remained at home was apparently heard to mutter 'Aw wush aw was a wummin! aw wush aw was a wummin!' Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto swam across the flooded Teviot on his horse to reach the muster at Jedburgh; there a labourer from Horsleyhill volunteered on the spot to join the company of men. The Roxburghshire Yeomanry also mustered in Jedburgh, marching all the way to Duns, while the Selkirkshire Yeomanry mustered in Selkirk and marched to Dalkeith. In Berwick, the North Durham Cavlary marched into town, and the volunteers were put on guard duty awaiting the French invasion. The Alarm had been raised by a soldier at Home Castle at about 8.30 p.m., probably mistaking the fire from a charcoal burner at Shoreswood Colliery for a warning beacon. It spread via beacons on Caverton Edge, Pennielheuch, the Dunion, Crumhaugh Hill, the Tudhope, the Wisp and Black Andrew. Although there were rumours on the following evening that the French were not really coming, the official word did not come until the morning of 2nd February. The readiness and speed with which the troops were mobilised was a source of great local pride, although some suggested it had been a ruse to test the Volunteers (but there is no evidence to support this). Sir Walter Scott describes some of the local events in his note 'Alarm of invasion' in 'The Antiquary' (he himself is said to have ridden from Gilsland to reach Dalkeith 24 hours later). The events have been described by several writers, e.g. Robert Murray in 1868. There were annual commemorations for some time afterwards, e.g. the farmers of Teviotdale would meet at Mount Teviot toll bar, where many had been when they heard of the beacons being lighted. The Hawick Provost lit a centenary beacon at Crumhaugh Hill in 1904, but the planned speeches were abandoned because of the wind and rain. There was a reenactment in 2004, with 'Walter Knox' firing the warning shot and the Honorary Provost and Drums and Fifes leading a procession to Crumhaughhill; unfortunately the weather meant that other celebratory fire could not be seen from the Watch Knowe – 'They found that the beacons burning Had been but a false alarm; And, to their delight, That e'en without a fight Their country was safe from harm' [TK], 'One moment the watcher stood, robbed of his wit, Then he roared to the farmhouse: 'The beacons are lit! The lightnings are loosened, the war dogs untied, And it's time for the Borders to saddle and ride!' ' [WHO].

falset (fawl-si') n., arch. falsehood, fraudulent dealing – '. . . ploittit aganis the said Erle of Buccleughe ane manifest falsit, and caussit vitiat the said dispositioun and chairtour . . . ' [SB1624].

Falset (faw-, fawl-si') n. former name for lands in upper Liddesdale, near Saughtree. It is probably the 'Terra de Fawsyde' in the Ermildon area of upper Liddesdale, on the c.1376 rental roll and valued at 33 shillings. It is recorded in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale, value at 48 shillings and tenanted by Henrisons (possibly Hendersons). It is recorded as 'Cleuchside otherwayes designed Falset' among the possessions of Hab Henderson in 1632, suggesting it was associated with Cleuchhead. It was marked as 'Fasetsyde' on Blaeu's 1654 map, near Saughtree, roughly between Pinglehole and Dawstonburn, perhaps near the modern Spout Sike. It is mentioned as 'Fallsett' on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, when it appears to be confused with Pinglehole.

Falshope see Phaup

Falside (fawl-sīd) n. farm in Southdean Parish, between Chesters and Roughlee. This could be the lands held by 'William de Fausyde', who swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. It was mentoned in a document of 1502, when Ralph Ker of Primside Loch obtained a charter of appraising of the lands after George Douglas, Master of Angus failed to present one of his tenants who had stolen from the English. 2 towers near here, 'West Fawsyde and Est Fawsyde with a pele of lyme and stane in it' were burned by Dacre's men in late 1513. It was described as 8 steadings valued at £10 in the Exchequer Rolls in 1538 and 1539 (with William Douglas being allowed the 'fermes' from there in 1538 and Sir Andrew Kerr of Fernihirst in 1539. Tenants in 1541 were Adam Cowman, Robert Oliver (alias 'Laird'), Ninian Oliver, Walter Oliver, Roger Oliver (called 'Little Roger'), Robert Laidlaw, Alexander Laidlaw, John Oliver, and Roger Oliver (called 'Lang Roger'). The lands were split into 9 separate steadings with a total value of 175 shillings. Ringan, Dandy and Martin Oliver were recorded there in 1544. Jock Common was tenant there in 1571/2. It was among lands inherited by Robert Douglas of Brieryyards from his father John in 1606. In 1669 there were 5 Oliver tenants, namely Stephen, David, Thomas and 2 Patricks, as well as Commons. In 1694 the tenants recorded were Steven Oliver, David Common and John Oliver, Thomas Oliver and his sons, and (another) Steven and Dand Oliver. In the 17th century the lands were split into 'East Fa'side', 'West Fa'side' and

'Fa'side'. The Olivers were tenant farmers there through the 17th century until 1747 and were the ancestors of the Olivers of Langraw. George White and John Armstrong are recorded there in 1797, Andrew Armstrong was shepherd in 1799 and James Mable was a servant in 1801. Andrew Whillans was a hind there in at least 1831–37. William Pringle was shepherd there in 1841, 1851 and 1861. J. Ord was farmer in the 1860s. The farm also had a mill, with a mill pond. On the hill on the opposite side of the road there are signs of rig and furrow. There was also a place of the same name in Selkirkshire, owned by the Scotts in the 16th century. There is a restored 16th century L-plan mansion of the same name in East Lothian (also 'Fawside' etc.; the name dates back to at least 1502/3 and the origin is probably Old English 'fah side', meaning 'the speckled slope'; it is 'Fawsyde' in 1538, 'Fawsyd' in 1539, 'Fawsid' and 'Fawside' in 1544, 'the Fawside' in 1571/2, 'Fawsyde' in 1606, and 'Fa'syd' and 'Fasyd' in 1669; it is 'Fasyde' on Blaeu's 1654 map and 'Fallside' on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Falside (fawl-sīd) n. former lands in the Yarrow valley in Selkirkshire, north of Foulshiels. They were once Crown lands from at least 1456 until 1502. James Scott (also of Kirkurd and Hassendean) was recorded as possessor of the lands of 'Myddilstede de Fausyde' 1473–99, being granted the lease for life. James Scott is recorded in 1494/5 having sheep stolen from him there. In 1501 the rentals were assigned to his wife Margaret and son John, and he again had the lease in 1503. Margaret, received the lands 'in liferent' in 1510, with the heirs of the deceased John (probably James' son) being granted heredity. Adam Scott 'in Falside' is recorded in 1526 and 1531/2. Adam Scott claimed the tenancy in 1541, paying £13 6s 8d yearly. This was probably the 'Fawsyde' where Janet Scott, widow of Robert 'Elwand' received instruments for lands at Appletreehall that she bought from Robert Scott of Howpasley. It was recorded as a 40-merk land in 1653. The 'landis and steading of Falsyd' were listed among the Buccleuch estates in the services of heirs in 1634, 1653 and 1661, and in the marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch in 1663. The lands were later in the hands of the Scotts of Hassendean. And in 1693 they were still part of the estates of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch (it is 'Falsyid' on Blaeu's 1654 map; it is 'Fausyde' in 1456, 'Fawsyde' in 1473, 'Fawside' in 1480, 'Fausyde' in 1483 and 1491, 'fawsyd' in 1494/5 and 'Fawsyde' in 1541; it is 'Fasyd' on Gordon's c.1650 map and 'Fasyid t' on Blaeu's c.1654 map).

Falsyde (fawl-sīd) n. Helen (b.1787) recorded as 'a very old woman' in 1787 when she died in Hawick. Her surname is written 'Falsyth'. James (b.c.1376–bef. 1418) cleric of St. Andrews Diocese. He received his B.A. in Paris in 1393/4 and he was recorded there as Licentiate of Arts in 1396. He acted as a notary at Dalkeith in 1402. He was 'de Fausyde, priest, M.A.', who already held the church of 'Gogar' in St. Andrews Diocese, when he requested a benefice in Dunkeld in 1403. In 1404 he was recorded as clerk and notary of St. Andrews Diocese when he witnessed the Papal confirmation of Melrose Abbey having the patronage of Westerkirk Church and in 1404/5 for 'Meikle Cavers' being attached to Melrose Abbey. He was a notary at Cavers in 1404, at Dalkeith in 1404/5, 1406 and 1406/7, at Makerstoun in 1406, at Melrose in 1414 and at Edinburgh in 1418. He witnessed the charter from Archibald, Earl of Douglas in about 1406, granting the Barony of Hawick to Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig. He acted as witness for a few other documents in Edinburgh (sometimes as clerk to Archibald, Earl of Douglas) and at Melrose, suggesting perhaps that he was living in the parishes of Grogar and Bedrule. He still held Grogar in 1411 when he also had the benefice of the Church of Dalkeith. He was back in Paris in 1413 when he formally received his M.A. (perhaps correcting an earlier mistake). He probably resigned Grogar in about 1413 when he became Parson of the church of 'Ruiale', probably 'Rule' (i.e. Bedrule), and likely retained that until his death. Another James 'of Fausyd' of Glasgow Diocese was an imperial notary in the 1450s and may have been related. James (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. James (17th/18th C.) gardener in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1700 for Walter Martin in Alton Croft, for glover James Scott and for Schoolmaster John Purdom, in 1702 for James Robson's illegitimate child, in 1703 for carrier David Minto and for William Wilson in Fenwick, in 1704 for James Irvine, tenant in Hawick Shiel, and for John Rutherford, in 1705 for merchant William Oliver, in 1706 for shoemaker George Allan, in 1707 for wigmaker Richard Miles, in 1708 for gardener William Riddell (along with gardener James Dunn), for Dand Gray in Whitlaw, for glover James Burn, for Robert Tudhope (servant to Falnash), for David Young and for

John Rae, in 1709 for merchant James Simpson, for William Scott, tenant in Whitchesters and for William Scott, son-in-law of John Scott, tenant in Branxholme, in 1711 for merchant William Black (whose wife Elizabeth Falsyde was probably related to him), in 1712 for Walter Bryson and for William Turnbull (along with 'Mr' Thomas), in 1716 for shoemaker John Scott (and 2 others on the same day), and in 1719 for William Goodfellow. He is probably the James recorded as an elder of Hawick Kirk in 1718 (but not mentioned as such in a list a year earlier). He married Isobel 'Jerdon' (or Jardine). Their children included: Marion (b.1692), who married Andrew Turnbull; Janet (b.1694); James (b.1701); and William and Bessie (b.1704). The witnesses in 1704 were glovers James Burn and James Scott. He may have been related with Thomas. John (16th/17th C.) servitor of the Laird of Buccleuch. He is listed among the 180 supporters of Sir James Johnstone who had a respite in 1594 for killing Lord Maxwell and others at Dryfe Sands. John Cuthbert Rutherford (d.1915) son of Rev. J.T., minister of Eskdalemuir. He was training as a lawyer when WWI broke out, and as a member of the 1/5th K.O.S.B., he served as a Lance Corporal. He was killed by a shrapnel shell in Gallipoli. His 2 older brothers were also killed in the war, and it appears that the surname may have died out with them. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1767 he married Margaret Armstrong, who was from Castleton Parish. Margaret (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694, when she paid tax for 2 hearths. It is possible that she is the Margaret who married William Scott, but was widowed and secondly married Robert Thomson in Newmill. Nicholas (13th C.) signatory of the Ragman Rolls in 1296, where his name is given as 'Nicol Fausy' in the county of Roxburgh. He may well be an ancestor of the local Falsides. William (in Roxburghshire) and Robert (in Edinburgh) also signed in 1296. His seal was attached, showing a tree of four branches. In 1298 he is recorded in an English document as a 'rebel with the Scots', when he and his wife Loretta are recorded as former owners of lands at Doddington in Northumberland; his name is there 'de Fauside'. In 1303/4 he is 'de Fausside' when his wife's dower lands in England were restored to him. Philip (14th C.) owner of lands in Liddesdale, listed on a c.1376 rental document of the Douglases of Morton. His lands are recorded as 'Terra Philippo de Fausyde cum Holdoun', worth 35 shillings. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Winningtonrig according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. His name is written 'Faside' and he was probably related to the William who is also listed. He may be the Thomas who witnessed baptisms for William at Woodburn in Roberton Parish in 1686 and for Adam Elliot (resident of Whitchesters) in Hawick Parish in 1704. He may be the Thomas whose son Alexander was baptised in Wilton in 1699. He may be the Thomas in Park who witnessed a baptism for William Allan in Hawick in 1717. Thomas (17th/18th C.) mentioned in an Edinburgh marriage record of 1712 as 'doctor of the grammar school at Hawick'. He was also recorded in 1709 as Schoolmaster at Hobkirk. So whether he was actually associated with Hawick school (perhaps temporarily), or whether this was an error, is uncertain. In 1712 he was designated 'Mr' when he witnessed a baptism for William Turnbull in Hawick; the other witness was James, who was probably a relative. He married Anne, daughter of the late Alexander Robertson in Edinburgh in 1712. Walter (18th/19th C.) servant of Bewlie Mains in Lilliesleaf Parish. He is recorded in 1798 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. Later in 1798 he is listed among those who paid £10 in order not to serve. William (13th C.) recorded as being 'de Fausyde' in Roxburghshire when he swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. He may have been related to 'Nicol Fausy', who also signed. He was also on a jury in 1304 at Dumfries (made up of men from Dumfriesshire and Roxburghshire) to decide on the privileges claimed by Robert Bruce, Earl of Carrick (later King); he was there 'del Fausyde'. His lands may have been the Falside in Southdean Parish. In about 1315 King Robert granted him the lands of 'Brenglese' in Dumfiresshire. William (14th C.) recorded in 1335/6 when he was pardoned by Edward III for crimes in Scotland, along with Eustace Lorraine and Richard of Craik. His name is listed as 'Willo de Fawsede' and it is possible he was a descendant of the earlier William. William (16th C.) factor (or similar) for Scott of Branxholme in the Parish of Eckford, recorded in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1574. William (17th C.) resident of Woodburn in 1686 when his daughter was baptised in Roberton Parish. The witnesses were Thomas (who was surely a relative) and Robert Learmonth. He could be the same William who was later at Winningtonrig. William (17th C.) resident at Winningtonrig in Cavers Parish in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. His name is written 'Faside' and Thomas is also listed, and so presumably related. William (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Fletcher in 1718, the marriage being recorded in both Wilton and Kirkton Parishes. John (b.1730) and William (b.1733), baptised in Cavers, may have been his children. Probably the same William witnessed a baptism for tailor James Scott and Janet Falsyde (who was probably related to him) in 1719 William (18th C.) carrier and Burgess in Hawick. In 1741 he and John Horsburgh were banished from Hawick after being convicted of theft, and had their names erased from the list of Burgesses (also written 'Faesyde', 'Fallside', 'Falsyth', 'Faside', 'Fasyde', 'Fauside', 'Fausyde', 'Fawside', 'Fawsyde', etc.).

faltheral (fawl-thu-rawl) n., arch. a folderol, trifle, vagary – 'Wi' sair be-ravelt faltheral, An' looks as black as thunner' [JoHa] (see also falderal).

[HSR], '... the paines o' hell gat haud on me: I fand truble an' dool' [HSR], 'In freedom's lap it fand a mother ...' [JEDM], 'A fannd the caald fair awfih' [ECS], 'A faand the guid o that denner as suin as A'd gaen wui'd' [ECS], 'While mill sounds jar and grate, I've fand The secret o' it a'' [WL] (not particularly Hawick pronunciation; also written 'faand' and 'faund'; this is the past tense form of finnd, while the past participle is more usually funnd).

fang (fawng) n., arch. plunder, burden, v., poet. to catch, acquire – 'When guarded by this fourfold fence, Auld Nick can never fang us; Nor Bonapart' e'er drive us hence, Nor villains mint to wrang us' [JR], 'But if the warl' be like to wrang ye, Its frowns will fear, its smiles will fang ye' [JR].

Fang (fawng) n. Douglas (??–) son of Kenneth, one of the Fang Brothers who purchased Pringle of Scotland from Dawson International in 2000. He was Hong Kong Industrialist of the Year 2002. He was named C.E.O. of Pringle's in 2005, replacing Kim Winser. In 2008 he announced that production would cease in Scotland. Kenneth (??–) born in Shanghai, he is Chairman of Fang Brothers Knitting Limited. His company bought Pringle of Scotland in 2000, with promises of new investment and job security. He was awarded a C.B.E. in 1990 and an O.B.E. in 1997.

fankit (fawng-kee', -ki') adj., pp. entangled, in a twisted mess – '... Brave Parcy rais'd his fankit sword And fell'd the foremost to the ground' [LHTB].

Fanna Bog (faw-na-bōg) n. high, boggy area to the west of the Note o the Gate. Singdean Burn rises here.

Fanna Hill (faw-na-hil) n. hill to the west of the Note o the Gate, reaching a height of 514 m (1643 ft) and containing a triangulation pillar. It is one of the highest hills in Hobkirk Parish (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and on Stobie's 1770 map; a region to the south is labelled 'Muckle Fanna' on the 1718 map).

fanner (faw-nur) n., arch. a machine used to create wind for winnowing chaff – 'The winnowing machine, or corn fanner, from the best information, made its first appearance in Hawick' [RRG], '... goes over every part of the fanners, the outer wheel and thrashing mill' [RJT] (often plural).

Fanns (fawnz) n. farmstead near the Fanns Burn, north of Langhope and Todrig and west of Ashkirk. It is located just to the west of where the Fanns Burn meets Blindhaugh Burn. Robert Riddell was recorded there in 1661. James Brown was a mealmaker there in 1747. Another Robert Riddell was herd there in 1762. Note that there is a farm of the same name in Yarrow Parish, farmed by Andersons in the 19th century (also spelled 'Fans', it is 'the fans' in 1661 and 'the Fannes' in c.1680; it is marked on Ainslie's 1773 map).

fareweel (fār-weel) n., interj., arch. farewell – 'Then fareweel to couthie contentment an' peace . . . ' [JoHa], 'Fareweel to Teviot's flowery vales, My heart is unco wae tae lea' thee' [JS], 'Fareweel, John Barleycorn, fareweel! Nae mair your scorn I'll dree' [JT], 'Hail guid freends, fareweel an' thenk ye, I've been gled to grip your hand' [WL].

farle (faw-rul) n., arch. a large slice, quarter, fardel – 'Syne a farle o cake frae my mither he got, And she ca'ed him a brave little mannie' [JT].

Farnylaw see Fairneylaw

Farquhar (far-kur) n. Alexander (18th C.) married Mary Newlands in Roberton in 1756. Francis (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Janet Collard and their children included: Margaret (b.1803); Jessie (b.1805); Anne (b.1806); Jane (b.1808); Francis (b.1810); and Robert (b.1812). George (b.1776) son of James and brother of Robert. He was a stockingmaker in Hawick according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. He was still on the ballot for the Militia in 1801. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Oliver in 1775 and their children included: George (b.1776); Robert (b.1778); James (b.1779); Peter (b.1781); unnamed (b.1784); and James (b.1789). His name was written 'Fraquar' in 1789. The witnesses in 1789 were Robert Oliver of Burnflat and baker James Oliver (who was surely related to his wife). James (18th/19th C.) grocer at the Sandbed, listed in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He could be the same as the tobacconist listed living with (presumably) his brother Peter in 1841. He could also be the James on the Cross Wynd, listed as an insurance agent for the United Kingdom company in 1852 (although probably deceased by then). James (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He maried Elspeth Turnbull in 1844, the mariage recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishs. Their son Peter was baptised in Hawick Free Kirk in 1846. Margaret (b.1810) daughter of Peter and Elizabeth Beck. She was a milliner in Hawick. In 1861 she was described as 'Proprietor of Houses' at 5 Cross Wynd. Peter (b.1781) son of James and Margaret Oliver, he was born in Hawick. He was a stocking needlemaker on the High Street, recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory, where his surname is listed as 'Fairquhar'. He is also listed on the High Street in 1837. In 1841 he was living at about 39 High Street with his wife Elizabeth, children Margaret (a milliner), Isabella (a teacher) and Catherine (who married Thomas Scott), and (presumably) brother James. His wife was living with their 3 daughters on the Cross Wynd in 1851 and so he was presumably deceased. He married Elizabeth Beck, who was probably a daughter of stockingmaker William Beck. Their children included: Margaret (b.1810); Isobel (b.1812); Elizabeth (b.1814), who married Joshua Colledge; Catherine (b.1816), who married millwright Thomas Scott; and James (b.1823). Robert (b.1770s) shoemaker in Hawick. He was recorded in 1797 among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia, with his surname written 'Forfar'. In 1799 he was among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish', with his surname given as 'Farquhar' (Forfar)'. Robert (b.1778) son of James and brother of George. He was a stockingmaker in Hawick according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. He was probably related to George, who was listed before him.

Farquharson (far-kur-sin) n. Alexander (18th C.) married Margaret Sanderson in Hawick in 1754. Alexander (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He maried Jessie Gray and their children included: James (b.1839); Andrew (b.1841); and Alexander (b.1843). Archibald (19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Mary McDonald in 1825 and their daughter Eliza was baptised in 1826. Robert (18th C.) married Ann Tinlin in Hawick in 1757. Rev. William (1882–1935) born in Edinburgh, son of Andrew, he was educated in Edinburgh and graduate M.A. from the University in 1903. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Edinburgh in 1907 and was assistant at Dunfermline Queen Anne Street 1907–08. He was ordained as minister of St. Andrew's Church in 1908. He was one of the members of the committee that formed Hawick's first scout troop in 1909. In 1914 he left to become minister of St. Philip's Church in Portobello. He served with the Y.M.C.A. in France in 1917.

farrest (fawr-ist) adj., arch. farthest, most distant – 'The dun and the grey kept farest away, But Piaterson's meir she came foremaist' [JP] (cf. the more common ferrest and ferthest).

Farridge (fa-rij) n. Alexander (b.c.1770s) merchant in Newcastleton according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. He was 'Farries' and a labourer in Newcastleton on the 1801 ballot list. He was Alexander 'Farries', married to Margaret Mien, whose children, baptised in Castleton Parish, included Mary (b.1799) and William (b.1800).

the Fart (thu-fawr') n. nickname for Peter Elliot.

Farthin Raw (far-thin-raw) n. Farthing Row, formerly a popular name for a group of houses off Wilton Place (the origin is probably the Old English or Norse for a land measure).

Farthin Tom (far-thin-tom) n. nickname for Thomas Young.

fash (fash) v. to worry, trouble, bother, annoy – 'dinni fash is', 'This far, sir, I haue tain the baldnes till fasche zou vith . . . ' [SB1584], 'To this Langlands replied, He should warrant never one should fash him, except himself' [DCW1765], 'Some row thee in among their cash, Some gi'e themsel's a hantla fash' [JR], 'Gear gatherers get aft a fling, I'll never fash my brain wi't' [JoHa], 'Wi' dominie Davie, wha's fash'd wi' the spavie, His helper, sae funny an' friskie' [JoHa], '. . . his excuse that he would lie long enough in it by-and-by without fashing it in his lifetime' [WNK], 'See the dear comrades, turned to ashes The cursed page that once did fash us' [JH], 'Long fashed wi' a thriftless and drouthy guidman . . . ' [JT], 'We were fashed wi' the reek . . . ' [JT], 'For ne'er a ane lookit as tho' they wad fash us, Ne'er the less oo determined tae steer very cautious' [BM1900], '. . . But little the mavis fashes its heids: Fower een are better than twae!' [DH], 'Says the auld laird – 'We'll be hard fashed For the want o' weet' ' [WL], n. trouble, fuss, bother – 'Fit ti gar aa the trauchles an the fashes gang leike the snaw off the deike in a thowe' [ECS], '. . . Yer yammerin' fash, an feckless prode Can only be a pest in't' [WP] (from French).

fashies (faw-sheez) adj., arch. troublesome, annoying, tricky – 'Fleis an midges . . . kittle craiters (mae ways as yin) an fasheez ti middle wui' [ECS] (a variant of fashious; spelling varies).

fashionin (faw-shi-nin) n. narrowing and widening while knitting, to shape the final garment.

fashionit (faw-shin-ee', -i') pp., poet. fashioned – '. . . an' in thy buik a' my membirs were writ, whilk on an' on wer fashanet, whan as yit ther was nane o' thame' [HSR].

fashious (faw-shis) adj., arch. troublesome, peevish, fastidious – '. . . Poets an' pipers wear the wale O' seats and lasses, An' a' allow they never fail In being fashious' [JoHa], 'I mind I was aince at the foot o' the Kale, And my courage was fashious to smother . . . ' [JTe], 'And there's mony a less pleasant and mair fashious way o' spendin' a caller wunter efternune . . . ' [DH], '. . . bit oo wasneh sae fashious then, an it was only yince a eer onyway' [BW1961] (see also Fashies).

fashrie (fawsh-ree) n., poet. trouble, fuss, annoyance – 'To yerkings and yells frae a loose lither tongue, To fashries an' flytings, while ye maun sit dumb' [JoHa].

Faskenn (fas-kin) n. tower house marked on Blaeu's c.1654 map near the Whitrope Burn meets the Hermitage Water. It could be related to Flaskett Sike, which is in the same area, or may be a transcription error.

fassent (faw-sen') pp. fastened – '. . . An' wi' a cord he has fassent her To the fit o' the maister's chayer' [WiSp].

Fasson (faw-sin) n. Lieut. Francis Anthony Blair 'Anthony' or 'Tony' (1913–42) born at Lanton in Bedrule Parish and educated at Jedburgh Grammar School, he joined the Royal Navy. Along with Colin Grazier, he volunteered to swim out naked to a damaged U-Boat in the Mediterranean, after the crew had been captured. They recovered several documents and pieces of equipment, passing them to someone else in a small boat, before the submarine sank, drowning him and Grazier. The recovered items included the 'M4 Enigma Machine' and codebook, which were passed to Bletchley Park, where the cipher was cracked, and probably thousands of lives saved as a result. He was posthumously awarded the George Cross 'for outstanding bravery and steadfast devotion to duty in the face of danger'. There is a plaque horouring his memory in Bedrule Kirk.

Fast Castle (fawst-kaw-sul) n. stronghold dramatically perched on the coast between St. Abbs and Cockburnspath. It has existed since the 14th century, long possessed by the Homes, and notorious during the reign of Logan of Restalrig. An old lock from the Castle was presented to the Hawick Archæological Society in 1856.

Fastcastle (fawst-kaw-sul) n. former farm in the Rule valley, on the west side of the river, near the bridge to Bedrule Mill. It became part of the extensive estate of Wells and was probably adjacent to Doveshaugh. In 1644 John and Thomas Young from there were cited by the minister for not signing the Covenant; at that time it was owned by the Earl of Traquair. Robert Turnbull was there in 1715 and Adam Craig in 1717. John Riddell was there in 1791. In about 1795 it was listed among parts of Cavers Parish that were nearer to Bedrule Kirk than their own kirk. An ancient fortification at 'Fast' was possibly an outwork of Bedrule Castle, which lay about 500 m to the south-east. It is just by the roadside, on a natural rise, built up into a motte-like structure, with a rampart on the summit enclosing an area about 35 m by 25 m. Just to the north-west there are signs of rig-and-furrow cultivation in aerial photographs (it is written 'Falsecastle' in 1715 and 1717; it is marked on Stobie's 1770 map).

fast days (fawst-dāz) n., pl., arch. an old church custom of fasting on particular Sundays, with preparatory services on the preceeding Saturday and thanksgiving services on the following Monday. This was particularly prevalent before the annual Communion service, before which there would be a Sacramental Fast Day, when all work was suspended and there were 2 (long) church services. This custom died out locally towards the end of the 19th century. Official fast days in Hawick were the 2 Wednesdays before the last Sunday of June and before the second Sunday of December. Earlier than the 19th century the June days were closer to harvest time. Other neighbouring areas had different days, but typically on Wednesdays or Thursdays (although in Castleton it was the Friday before the 2nd Sundays of June and November). There were also other days officially prescribed for fasting, sometimes by Act of the General Assembly, e.g. for prayers 'for King George and his royal family' in 1715, with several other examples yearly in the Parish records – '... ye durst not crook ye're mooth tae whustle on a Fast-day, but now ye may whustle or sing or anything ye like on a Sabbath day' [WiS].

Fasteneven (faws-ten-ee-vin) n. another name for Fastern's E'en – 'Of holidays throughout the year, There's nane that raises sic a steer As Fasteneven ...' [JoHo].

Fastern's E'en (faws-turnz-ee-in) n., arch. old name for Shrove Tuesday, or the day before fasting starts at Lent. Festivals of different sorts were held in many Scottish towns, including handball games, sometimes referred to as 'Fastern's E'en Baa'. In Hawick the Baa game was held on the previous day, in earlier years on the following Monday, and before about 1780 on Fastern's Eve itself. In the 2 or 3 weeks leading up to the event there would be fights between gangs of youths from the 'Eastla' and 'Westla' sides of town – '... shall keep the same assurance till Fasternes eve next to come ...' [CBP1584], 'At Fasten's E'en, when ba's are played, I'll look for ane that is nae here ...' [TCh].

Fastheugh (fawst-hewch) n. former lands on the southern side of the Yarrow valley, with Fastheugh Hill rising above. The lands were owned by the Crown in the latter part of the 15th century. William Donaldson was there in 1493 when he had 12 goats stolen by William, son of William Scott of Goldielands. In 1494/5 James Ker was tenant there when sheep were stolen by Adam Howison in Commonside. John Clerk was also living there at the same time when his goods were plundered. In 1502 John Murray of Falahill's farm there was raided by Turnbulls. And in 1535 a raid on these lands was among the crimes for which Robert Scott of Allanhaugh was accused; at that time they were held by Lancelot Ker. Lands there were granted to James, son of James Pringle of Tynnes in 1540. George Ker was tenant there in 1541, paying £30 yearly; he was probably George of Gateshaw, son and heir of Lancelot Ker, who was 'now living in Fastheucht' in 1544. John Brydon was there in 1590 when the will of his wife Janet Scott was registered in Edinburgh. William Scott 'in Fasthauche' was one of the men accused in 1618 of the murder of Adam Dalgleish in Deuchar. The lands were part of the Buccleuch estates in 1663 and when surveyed in 1718 (it appears on Gordon's c.1650 map as 'Fastheugh' and Blaeu's c.1654 map as 'Fastheuch'; it is 'Fasthewch' in 1456 and 'Fastheuch' in 1590 and c.1680).

Fasthill Plantin (fawst-hil-plan-tin) n. plantation near Synton, just to the south of Synton Parkhead (it is already marked on the 1863 Ordance Survey map).

fastit (faws-tee', -ti') pp., poet. fasted – 'An' whan he had fastet fortie days an' fortie nichts, he was efterwairds ane hungret' [HSR].

fat (faw') n., arch. a vat, wooden tub – 'Two females are convicted of stealing great quantities of ale, sometimes turned, sometimes working in the fatt ...' [BR1697].

fate (fā') n., arch. a feat of valour, brave act, especially in battle – 'But when a Courtier did any valiant fate; He was cry'd up to th' stars, and made Lord of State' [CWS] (also written 'fait').

fatefi (fā'-fi) adj. fateful – '... But then yin fatefih day, A retail giant came oor way, And it wasni long afore, They'd ta'en owre yon Presto store' [IWL] (also spelled 'fatefih').

Fathill Plantin (faw'-hil-plawn'-in) n. plantation on the Chisholme estate, to the north-west of Parkhill and to the west of Churnton Burn. There is a possible old enclosure there.

fatit (fā-tee', -ti') pp. fated – '... An' riggit ribs, where snurk'lt skin is fatit To lanely hing where flesh could stay nae langer' [JoHa], 'But thou, my plaid, has ne'er been fatit, 'Mid war's proud panoply to strut it' [JoHa].

Fatlips Castle (fa'-lips-kaw-sul) n. tower built in the 16th century, perched on Minto Crags, and sometimes also called Minto Tower. It is 9 m, 3 stories high, with a vaulted basement and parapet walk. Built by the Turnbulls, it passed to the Elliots in 1705, and is now the property of the Minto estate. It was restored in 1857 and then renovated in 1897/8 (to designs by Sir Robert Lorimer) as a shooting lodge and private museum. The collection on display included an early, large breech-laoding gun (possibly the one taken from Sebastopol by Col. Sir Gilbert Elliot), a muzzle-loading cannon (taken by Adm. Elliot from the French off the Isle of Man in 1760) and a third cannon (that belonged to the mutineers of the Bounty was recovered from deep water off Pitcairn Island by Capt. Russell Elliot). At that time there was a carriage drive approaching it from the west. Since the 1960s it was sadly neglected and became vandalised. However, a grass-roots campaign, supported by the Minto estate, resulted in funds being secured from public and private funds, and a renovation was completed in 2013. A fanciful tradition states that an underground passage led from here to Barnhills Castle. The origin of the name is uncertain, but one idea is that it derives from the look of Turnbull of Barnhills; there are other stories, including that of a goat on the Dunion, which warned of the approaching English, or that gentlemen were traditionally allowed to kiss one of the ladies on entering – '... an the gray waas o Fatlips keekeet oot threh atween the treis that skuggeet Barnhill's staney bed' [ECS] (it is sometimes stated that it was also known as 'Catslick', but that may be an error; note that there is another Fatlips Castle near Symington in South Lanarkshire, and a couple of others elsewhere, marked on old maps).

Fauch Grain (fawch-gr=an) n. small stream in the headwaters of the Hermitage Water. It rises on Wetherhorn Hill and joins Chapel Grain.

Fauchwin Sike (fawch-win-sīk) n. small stream in the the Hermitage valley. It rises on Guile Hass and joins the Carewoodrig Burn.

faugh (fawch) adj., arch. fallow, n., arch. fallow ground – 'He plew'd the faugh' [GW] (also written 'fauch').

Faughill (faw-hil) n. farm and hamlet just west of Bowden (the name may derive from Old English for 'variegated hill', is also spelled 'Fauchhill', 'Faughhill', etc. and is recorded on Stobie's 1770 map).

faughish (faw-gish) adj., arch. palish, having faded colours – '... just as it begoud to get faughish derk' [LHTB].

fauld (fawld) v. to fold – 'did ee fauld up they claes yit?', 'Paid James Wintrope for falding brods in Bailies' loft, 1 14 0' [BR1735], 'These taits o' gowden hair, Aboon thy faulded eye' [HSR], 'Aside the sparkling jewels put, thy silken robes gae fauld ...' [TCh], 'The bonnie wee flowers fauld their leaves in the gloamin' ...' [JT], '... And robin faulds his ragged pipes, Reckons his arles and airts awa' [DH], 'In owre the Firth a clean wind blaws And the fauldin' plaid is gethert ...' [WL], n. a fold (also written 'fald').

fauld (fawld) n. an enclosure for livestock, sheepfold, pen – 'When the sheep are in the fauld, and the ky at hame, And a' the warld to sleep are gane ...' [CPM], '... one year there was a dyke on one side of a fauld, built within the edge of the Common' [C&L1767], 'To mark the gloaming's mantle dun O'erspreading fauld and lea' [JTe], '... nar hegaits owt o' thy falds' [HSR], 'I've suffered cauld in Auld Nick's fauld. In nichts o' drookin' rain I've seen it ...' [TD], 'Yon are the hills that my hert kens weel, Hame for the weary, rest for the auld, Braid and high as the Aprile sky, Blue on the tops and green i' the fauld' [JBu], 'The last sheep cryin' thrae the fauld, The afterglow duist turnin' cauld ...' [DH], group of people bound together by common beliefs, congregation – 'To where the Faither's fauld at last ...' [WL] (see also fauldit).

-fauld (fawld) suff. -fold, something occuring in multiple parts, an amount to be multiplied by – '... an' broucht furth frut, sume ane hundret-fauld, sume saxty-fauld, sume thretty-fauld' [HSR].

faulder (fawl-dur) n. a folder, person in the knitwear industry who folds finished garments, usually attaching the hanging tag and placing the garment in its bag for presentation.

fauldit (fawl-dee', -di') pp., adj. folded – 'They think if they're only fauldit up In the empty husk o' a creed ...' [FL].

Faulds Cottage (fawldz-ko'-eej) n. farmstead to the west of Buccleuch.

Fauldshope (fawldz-hōp) n. farm south-west of Selkirk, over the Ettrick from Oakwood. Note that it is easily confused with 'Phaup' near the head of the Ettrick. A ruined keep here was once the home of the Hoggs, including Will Hogg called 'the Wild Boar o Fauldshope' and several wives who were reputed to be witches. One 'Lucky Hogg' is supposed to have turned Michael Scot into a hare. The Hoggs held Fauldshope under the Scotts of Harden for centuries and are commemorated in James Hogg's 'Fray at Elibank'. William Scott was there in 1535. Andrew, son of William Scott 'in Faldishop' gained the lands of Broadmeadows in 1624. It was rented by the Earl of Traquair in 1633. Adam Scott was there in 1722 and William Dalgleish in 1797 – 'Young Wattie o' Harden has crossed the Yarrow, Wi' mony a hardy an' desperate man; The Hoggs and the Brydens have brought him to dare you, For the Wild Boar of Fauldshope he strides in the van' [ES] (it is marked as 'O. N. Falshope' and 'Falshope' on Gordon's c.1650 maps and 'O. Falshoop' and 'N. Falshoop' on Blaeu's 1654 map; it is probably the 'Faulishop' recorded in 1456, and is 'Feldishoup' in 1535 and 'Faldshope' in c.1680).

fault (fawl') n., arch. a misdemeanour, offence – '... by yr night rambling commit divers and sundrie abominable irregularities, unlawful faults, and enormities and abuses by yr scandalous outrages ...' [BR1706] (cf. the more common faut).

fause (faws) adj., poet., arch. false – 'Behold, the setting sun that gilds the skies! O! whan I'm fause, may it nae mair arise!' [CPM], 'Itt wasne kinde, thou cruelle manne, To prove sae fause a luve to me ...' [JTe], '... Fed by fause hope, wild fou wi' airy vision' [JoHa], 'The fause and fickle-hearted loon, He hookit wi' another' [JoHa], '... And the three fause Ha's o' Girsonsfield Alang wi' him he has them ta'en' [LHTB], 'Bewaure o' fause prophets, whilk come til yow in sheep's claethin'' [HSR], '... or what sall be dune untill thee, thou fause tung?' [HSR], 'Bestow on the gay a' the favours o' fashion, Bestow on the great a' that money can yiel'' [DA], 'By thae fause notions the lass had naething To caa her bonny, – but she had ae thing' [WL].

fausehood (faws-hood) n., arch., poet. falsehood – '... an' heth conceifet mischief, an' brung furth fausehuud' [HSR], '... an' thair richt han' is ane richt han' o' fausehuud' [HSR].

fausely (faws-lee) adj., poet. falsely – 'Natheless thaye flattiret him wi' thair mooth, an' thaye spak fauslie untill him wi' thair tungs' [HSR], 'Blisset ar ye whan men sall misca' yow, an' persecute yow, an' sall say a' kinkind o' ill agayne yow fauselie' ...' [HSR].

faut (fawt, faw') n., arch. fault – 'I'd rather be ca'd Hobie Noble, In Carlisle where he suffers for his faut, Before I were ca'd traitor Mains, That eats and drinks of meal and maut. Fala, &c.' [CPM], '... For poets maistly lack the faut aye O' being blate' [JoHa], 'Wi' pity view a brother's fau'ts, ne'er strive to show his failings' [JoHa], 'Ye keep ye're neibours aw in fear, Ye're fauts they winna hide' [BY], 'Now we a' have oor fauts, do the best that we can ...' [UB], 'For gif ye forgie men their fauts, your heævenlie Faether wull alsua forgie yow' [HSR], '... cleense thou me frae seceret fauts' [HSR], 'On neighbours fauts, how prone to dwell, For tongues gae clanking like a bell' [RF], '... a faut easy eneuch putten richt' [ECS], 'Ti finnd faut wui = to find fault with' [ECS], v., arch. to fault.

fautless (faw'-lis) adj., arch. faultless – 'He tells me through the chink wi' care Aboot his fautless, dainty ware ...' [WP].

the Favourite (thu-fāv-ri') n. name of one of the regular stagecoaches operating in Hawick in the 19th century. In Pigot's 1825/6 directory it is listed leaving the Spread Eagle in Jedburgh for Hawick on Tuesdays and Fridays at 5 p.m. and leaving Hawick for Kelso via Jedburgh on Tuesdays and Fridays. In 1837 it is listed leaving from the Tower Inn on Tuesdays and Fridays at 8 a.m., bound for Jedburgh and Kelso. Later in the 19th century it was one of 2 coaches running between Hawick and Carlisle, the other main one being called 'the Engineer'.

faw (faw) adj., arch. multi-coloured, variegated (the word survives in several place names, e.g. Faw Hill, Fawhope, Falla and Falside).

Faw see Faa

Fawcett (faw-si') n. Richard owner of Wolfelee when it was run as a hotel.

Faw Hill (faw-hil) n. hill in Southdean Parish, just to the north-east of Ruletownhead, reaching a height of 331 m (1,086 ft) and containing a triangulation pillar. On the eastern slopes, towards the farm of Ashtrees, there are the remains of an ancient settlement, perhaps of the Iron Age, but now almost levelled by cultivation (the name probably comes from the Scots 'faw', meaning variegated in colour).

Fawhope see Phaup

Fawhope Knowe (fawp-now) n. hill in Liddesdale, just to the south-east of Riccarton Junction, reaching a height of 294 m. Fawhopeknowe Sike rises to the north and passes there to join the Riccarton Burn. John Crozier is listed as shepherd there in at least 1797–1801. There were 4 huts there housing railway workers on the 1861 census (also sometimes 'Phaup Knowe', it is 'Phaupknow' in 1797 and 1799 and 'Phaupnowe' in 1801; a farmstead there is marked 'as Fapknow' on Stobie's 1770 map; it could be related to the places listed as 'Folepul' and 'Fopillis' in earlier documents).

Fawhopeknowe Sike (fawp-now-sīk) n. stream in upper Liddesdale, which rises on the slopes of Saughtree Fell and runs southwards, to the east of Riccarton Junction, passing Fawhope Knowe and through Catscleuch Culvert, to join Riccarton Burn.

Fawlaw (faw-law) n. George (15th C.) recorded being 'in hawic' at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. He had remission for stealing a 'dacre' of (i.e. 10) hides from James Braidfoot out of 'le bog de Selkirk'. His surety was Robert Scott of Whitchester. George of Wells (16th C.) surety for John in Littledean in 1502. He is also recorded in an inquest in Jedburgh in 1523. He is also listed as 'George Fawlo of Wallis' in 1530 among the Border Lairds who submitted themselves to James V to keep better order. He may have been Laird of Wells east of Jedburgh. James of Spittal (17th/18th C.) recorded as 'James Falay' in 1700 among the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament. John (15th/16th C.) tenant in Littledean. He was recorded at the Justice-aire in 1502, as surety for his wife Janet Rutherford, and was fined for her non-appearance. Later in 1502 he had remission for being part of the slaughter of David Henrison in Maxton Kirk and for stealing from Muirhouselaw in the company of Thomas Grahamslaw; his surety was George of Wells. Additionally he had remission in 1502 for involvement in the seizing of 3 Henrisons from Muirhouselaw, delivering them to Englishmen, to be held for ransom, for stealing livestock from them and for associating with Herbert Pringle; his surety was Walter Haliburton. Also in 1502, he may be the John of Softlaw who was granted the lands of 'Perislawis' in Oxnam by Andrew Kerr of Over Crailing. Perhaps the same John was granted a charter for 'Ester Fawlaw' in 1510, along with the office of the East Ward of Roxburghshire. In 1512 he had a charter for Softlaw. John (b.c.1780) cooper in Lilliesleaf according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. He married Alison Hilson and their son Robert was baptised in 1809. Philip (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as 'philippi fawlo' when he and James Liddersdale 'in hawik' were sureties for each other at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, and failing to appear, were to be fined at the next court. He was said to be of the same place as James Liddersdale, i.e. Hawick. Also in 1502 he was 'Philip Faula' when Alexander 'Wyndis' of that Ilk was convicted of the 'forethought felony' done to him on St. Mary's Day while riding to Branxholme, with Robert Scott being fined for non-appearance. It is unclear what malice was done to him, whether it was connected with the charges against him at the same court. He is probably the same 'Philip Faulo' who had 4 horses stolen from him and his neighbours at 'Quhitchester-holme' by associates of John Dalgleish around 1510. He may have been related to the later local priest Thomas. Thomas (16th C.) priest mentioned in the Charter of 1537, with 2 particates of land on the south side of the public street. He is designated both 'Sir' and 'Mr.', making it unclear whether he held merely a Bachelors or a full Masters degree in the priesthood. Since several other clergymen are also mentioned, it is unclear what his status was within St. Mary's Kirk of the time. A possibly related William Fawlaw also possessed a particate of land on the north side of the street. William of Kirkton (14th C.) listed on a 'retour of inquest' if 1438 for Ker of Altonburn. He was certainly a Roxburghshire Laird, but it is unclear whether this was the Kirkton near Hawick. William (16th C.) holder of a particate of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick's 1537 Charter. William (d.bef. 1560s) farmer in Hobkirk Parish. The land 'callit Williame Fallawisclois' to the east of Nether Billerwell is mentioned in 1562 (also spelled 'Fallaw', 'Faula', 'Faulaw', 'Faulo', 'Fawlo', 'Fowlaw', etc.).

the Feast o the Assumption (thu-feest-ō-thu-aw-sum-shin) n. Feast of the Assumption of Mary, a Catholic celebration of the assumption of the body of the mother of Christ into heaven, which supposedly happened several days after she was entombed. This is celebrated on 15th August, and prior to the Reformation would have been an important day in the Hawick calendar, particularly because of the Parish Church being dedicated to St. Mary. Papal permission for 'indulgences' in 1432 refer to the multitudes who 'are wont to flow there, especially for the Feast of Assumption'. Also in 1432 the Rector asked for permission to hear confessions of all those who attended the Feast days. The 'retour' for the Barony of Hawick in 1450 states that it is held of the superior, the Earl of Douglas, for the payment of an arrow at Hawick Kirk on the day of the Assumption. The Charter of 1511 indicates that the Barons of Hawick are to be paid an arrow 'in blenche-ferme' on this day. Similarly, in the 15th century, Scott was to pay a silver penny to Inglis at St. Mary's on this day for the lands of Branxholme.

fechtin (fech-tin) n., arch. fighting – 'An sic veeshyis fechteen as it was, tui!' [ECS].

Fechtin Chairlie o Liddesdale (fech-tin-chār-lee-ō-li-diz-dāl) n. nickname for an Armstrong or Elliot from Kirndean, Castleton Parish, whose exploits are described by Sir Walter Scott in his notes for 'Guy Mannering'. A story is told of how he stopped at 'Mump Ha' ', an inn at Gilsland, where his pistols were filled with 'tow', which he only just discovered in time to fight off a band of robbers when he was crossing over into Scotland. This is supposed to have taken place in the mid-1700s, with Scott claiming that he got the story from people who had heard it directly from Fighting Charlie.

feck (fek) n., arch., poet. amount, quantity, number, force, value – 'Be kindly unto them, and couthy and free, Then you'll fin' in the feck o' them Donald M'Gee' [JoHa], 'What feck o' folk wad there be there? Fenwick (fen-eek) n. house and area on the Teviot opposite Branxholme Park and just down from the Muir. Walter Scott of Fenwick was witness to a document for Whitchesters in 1456 and others in 1484/5 and 1488. William Scott of Fenwick was recorded in 1502, was on an inquest panel in 1509 and gave a pledge for another Scott in 1510. The 'ditch of Fenwick' formed part of the northern boundary of the Common in the 1537 charter. It is listed as part of the Barony of Hawick in 1511, 1572, 1594 and 1615, among those lands held by the Baron 'in tenandry'. Later it became part of the Lordship of Whitchesters. In 1627 it was described as a 'neuer payit ferme', i.e. a farm that had never been rented to a tenant, and 'estimate to pay 8 bolls in stok, parsonage 2 bolls, and vicarage 3 lbs'. In 1643 these are probably the lands of Robert Scott of 'Cloak' valued at £100 and still held by him in 1678. In the 1718 survey of lands of the Scotts of Buccleuch it is shown that a small part of the farm lay on the northern side of the Teviot. There were Elliot lairds there in the late 17th and early 18th centuries. Robert Grieve was there in 1714. Walter Scott was there in 1722, William Grieve was tenant there in 1723 and John Scott was 'coater' there. It was farmed by Scotts until the mid-18th century. Robert Scott of Fenwick and Robert Elliot of Fenwick were both recorded in 1747. The lands of Robert Elliot of Fenwick were valued at £496 13s 4d in the 1740s. Bailie Thomas Turnbull purchased the estate in 1762. William Scott was there in 1771. The farm was still valued at £100 in 1788 (and still in 1811) when owned by Thomas Turnbull; Thomas Turnbull of Fenwick is the largest owner of land within the Burgh of Hawick on Wood's 1824 map. David Lees was farmer there in 1861, when it was composed of 140 acres. In 1895 the farm was gained by the Scotts of Buccleuch, being exchanged for Fenwick with James Elliot of Flex. The farmhouse dates from the late 17th century, but has been extensively renovated. It is a 2-storey structure of harled rubble. The entrance has a lintel bearing the initials 'R S' (presumably 'Robert Scott') and 'M T' and the date 1687; a shield above has been suggested to be the arms of Myrton of Cambo, ancestors of Kerr of Cavers Carre, although this seems hard to understand. The house is a grade B listed building. In the 'scaur' there, water can be seen oozing out of a line marking the division between 2 layers of glacial till. A 'curious tree root taken from the water pipes' there was donated to the Museum by the Town Council in 1876 – '... Falnash, and Commonside; inform Fenwick, and Goudiland, With Ha'ick, Burnfoot, and Hassindean, to wait on my command' [WSB] (earlier spelled 'Fynnik' and other variants; the origin is probably Old English 'fen wic', meaning 'the dwelling by the fen'; the name appears at least as early as 1456, when it is 'Fenwyk', it is 'Fenvik' in 1484, 'Fenwik' in 1484/5 and 1488, 'fenuik' and 'fynvik' in 1502, 'Fenwyk' in 1509, 'Fynwik' and 'Fennyk' in 1510, 'Fennyk' in 1511, 'Fynnik' in 1526, 'Fenyk' in 1530, 'Fenvik' in 1540, 'Fynnik' in 1561, 1572, 1594 and 1615, 'Fynnyk' in 1562, 'Phenik' in 1627 and 'Fenik' in 1729; it is on Gordon's c.1650 map as 'Fennik', on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Fennick' and on the 1718 Buccleuch survey as 'Fenick').

Fenwick (fen-eek) n. Francis P. 'Frank' (b.1855) son of John, proprietor of the Tower Inn, he was born in Hawick. He was farmer at Northhouse and was a guest at some Common-Riding functions in the 1880s. He became proprietor of the Tower Hotel and was Acting Father in 1893. He was also a starter at the Common-Riding Races. In 1901 he was a retired farmer at Barnes. He may have later lived at Hartsgarth. His wife was Mary A., and their children included John B. and David B. James (19th C.) landlord of the Tower Hotel in the mid-19th century. He was on the original committee of Hawick Bowling Club, and probably first President. This is probably confusion with John. John (17th C.) son and heir of Randall. In 1652 he gave a lease of lands to his sister Catherine, including 'Hawicke' in the parish of Kirkharle (i.e. the one in Northumberland). John (1807–74) born at Auchtergaven in Perthshire, son of Peter and Grizal Donaldson. His elder brother Peter and he moved to the Hawick area. He was proprietor of the Tower Hotel in the middle part of the 19th century, with William Crozier as his head hostler. He is recorded providing the dinner for the Magistrates' party at the Common Riding of 1840. He was there in 1841, with his wife Helen (probably Stewart), 6 female servants and several guests. He was listed as innkeeper at the Tower in Slater's 1852 directory. His caricature from 1856 appears in the book 'Noctes Hawickianæ'. He helped with the last ceremonial run of the coach from Hawick to the south in 1862. He was recorded in 1868 as farmer at Northhouse, where his brother Peter farmed earlier. In 1849 he married Janet Crone or Bawden and was listed with her at the Tower Hotel in 1851; she died in 1888, aged 73. Their children included Sophia Agnes (b.1851) and Francis Peter (who became proprietor later). He was said to have married a second time. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. – '... Then, Fenwick, bring's a Hawick gill, An' here's to Hawick's bonnie lasses!' [GWe]. Peter (b.1794) from Auchtergaven in Perthshire, he was son of Peter and Margaret Brown and elder brother of John who was innkeeper of the Tower Hotel. He was farm steward at Northhouse in 1861, managing 1700 acres and employing 6 people. He was unmarried. Randall (d.bef. 1652) recorded as 'of Hawicke' in grants of 1624 and 1626 from the Swinburne (Capheaton) Estate Records. His wife was Katharine. He may have been son-in-law of Edward Gray of Howick (by coincidence). His son and heir was John and a daughter was Catherine. This is presumably the 'Hawick' in Northumberland. Sir Roger of Wallington (d.1544) commander of part of the English force under Lord Dacre in 1513. He led 300 men who burnt the town of Lanton near Jedburgh.

Fenwick Burn (fen-eek-burn) n. stream that flows to meet the Teviot near Fenwick.

Fenwick Loan (fen-eek-lōn) n. former name for the road running from Haysike over to Whitchesters. The name was referred to in the description of the boundaries of the Common in 1767 – 'The east down that Syke into Weatland Burn and the dykes of Alton Crofts, and so on to Fenwick Loan head, where the march turns south by hillocks up the west side of the head of the Loan . . . ' [C&L1767].

Fenwick Park (fen-eek-pawrk) n. name given in 1890 to an area of large houses, reached from Weensland Road up Manuel's Brae. Some of the houses had been there perhaps a century before. This included St. John's, which had been known as Ivybank, St. John's Manse (previously 'The Birks') and Elmbank, or 'The Elms'. New building occurred in the few years after 1962 to make the modern housing development of Fenwick Park. The name derives from Fenwick on Teviot, specifically referring to Thomas Turnbull of Fenwick who owned land there.

Fenzlehope (fenz-lup) n. former farmstead in Liddesdale, where Thomas Elliot is recorded as farmer in 1797. It could be related to the earlier records of 'Folepul' and 'Fopillis', but note that 'Phaupknow' is listed separately on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls (it is possible it is the same as Failziehope).

fer (fer) adj. far, distant – 'si near and yet si fer', 'For the kingdoom o' heæven is as ane man gangin' intill ane fer countrie . . . His wife was Shirley and they had 3 children. Helen (b.c.1785) innkeeper and spirit dealer in Denholm. She was born at Linhope. She was probably married to Alexander, farmer at West Middle. In 1837 she was recorded as a widow, and 1841 she was living around Eastgate with her children Alexander, Margaret and Janet. She is recorded as vintner and grocer in 1852. Hugh 'Doug' (1948/9–2020) brought up in Oliver Park, he attended Trinity and Hawick High School and served with the K.O.S.B. He then had a job with the Council, particularly working with the unemployed. After retirement he was a volunteer at Burnfoot School, where he was known as 'Papa Doug' and was warmly remembered by staff and pupils. He was a member of the Burns club and a darts player. He married Annemarie and had children Billy-Jo, Kelly, Susan, Louise and Hugh. James (b.c.1780s) labourer at Hoscoteshiel, according to the 1812 ballot for the Militia in Roberton Parish. James (18th/19th C.) spinner in Hawick. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. James (b.1800/1) listed as a mason journeyman in Denholm in 1841 and a mason around Sunnyside in 1851. The family emigrated to Australia in 1855. He married Anne Laing in Cavers Parish in 1828 and she died in Melbourne in 1881. Their children included: Thomas (b.1829); Betty (b.1832), probably died young; an unnamed child (b.1834); Betsy (b.1836); Walter (b.1838); Alexander (b.1841); Christina (b.1844), also perhaps known as Catherine, probably died young; Anne (b.1846); Agnes (b.1849), who married William Laidlaw in Melbourne; and Mary (b.1852). Their children were christened in the Free Kirk of Jedburgh. He died of dysentery in Australia. James (19th C.) married Jane Knox in Wilton in 1839. James 'Jamie' (d.c.1861) character who worked at Mosspaul most of his life, first as a 'post-boy', then as a 'strapper'. He worked there for almost 50 years. He was only once allowed to take the reins of the coach, but overturned it near Langholm. He was a widower by the time of the 1861 census and died a few months later. Rev. John (c.1655–1737) ordained as minister of Roberton in 1696, after several years of appeals to the Presbytery for preachers to be supplied. For part of 1697 he helped with vacancies in Angus and Mearns and received calls from Aberbrothock and Montrose, which the Presbytery refused. There then followed some debate in which the Commission for the Assembly blamed the Presbytery for not declaring the parish vacant. He was finally translated to Aberbrothock (i.e. Arbroath) in 1699, despite a petition to the General Assembly from his parishioners. It is said that he had the old Abbey Church there destroyed, in order to build himself a tomb. He married firstly Margaret MacDougall and secondly Bethia Brand. John (17th/18th C.) married Isabel Bruce in Cavers in 1719. John (18th C.) married Mary Easton in Wilton in 1764. Their children included: Alexander (b.1765); and Christian (b.1766). John (18th C.) married Margaret Mein (or 'Mean') in Wilton in 1769. Their children included: William (b.1770); Thomas (b.1772); Janet (b.1776); John (b.1778); and Andrew (b.1781). John (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded at Ormiston Mains in 1779, 1780, 1782, 1784, 1786 and 1788 and as farmer at Harwood in 1796. He was tenant at East Mains in Cavers Parish in 1801 when his sons William Thomas and Robert were all listed on the ballot for the Militia. He married Agnes Grierson and their children included: William (b.1779); Margaret (b.1780); twins Robert and Thomas (b.1782); Alexander (b.1784); Nelly (b.1786); Andrew (b.1788); Isabel (b.1790); Mary (b.1792); and John (b.1796). The entries of his children's baptisms appear to have been added later to the Cavers records (perhaps indicating that he belonged to a non-established church). John (18th/19th C.) paid the cart tax in 1790 and 1791, when he was at Kippielaw. He was also recorded at Greensidehall in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 2 work horses. John (18th/19th C.) tenant at 'Newharrot' (i.e. New Harwood), listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 4 horses. John (b.c.1770s) labourer at Silverbuthall according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Wilton Parish. Perhaps the same John married Mary Hamilton in Wilton in 1799 and had a son John (b.1800). John (b.1774) recorded as son of Alexander in West Middle on the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. He was also on the 1801 Militia ballot. He married Nelly Jackson in East End Kirk in 1806. Their children, baptised in East Bank Kirk, included: Isobel (b.1806); Martha (b.1808); Margaret (b.1810); Alexander (b.1812); James (b.1814); Martha (b.1816); Helen (b.1818); Andrew (b.1820); Andrew (again, b.1824); and Janet (b.1827). In 1841 his widow was an innkeeper and spirit dealer on Eastgate in Denholm, the inn taken over by his son Alexander. John (19th C.) married Margaret Scott in Hawick in 1839. John Mein (b.1839) son of James and Jean Mein, he was born in Selkirk. He was Cornet in 1861, the first from Wilton after it merged with Hawick. He was a waiter at the Railway Hotel in Princes Street. He was step-son of the hotel-keepers George and Jane Burns, and was half-brother of Cornet Andrew Burns. He can be seen in an early photograph of 1862, as Right-hand Man to Cornet Richardson. Robert (b.1782) son of John and twin of Thomas. He was a servant at East Mains according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. He was listed there along with his brothers William and Thomas, all sons of John, tenant in East Mains. Robert (19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Helen Easton and their daughter Mary Anne Easton was baptised in 1842. Robert (1953–98) born and educated in Hawick, son of Tom and Jessie Ferguson. He studied geography at Edinburgh University and then town planning at Heriot-Watt. He joined the City of Glasgow Council and was later head of policy development with C.O.S.L.A. Thomas (18th C.) married Helen Smith in Bedrule Parish in 1731. Thomas (18th C.) mason in Denholm in 1786 when his son Alexander was baptised in Cavers Parish. Thomas (18th/19th C.) groom and house servant at Stirches in 1791, when he was working for Gilbert Chisholme. He was still at Stirches in 1794 and 1797, when he was servant and gamekeeper. In 1792 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Stewart, who lived at Stirches. Perhaps the same Thomas married Margaret Graham and had a son George (b.1780) baptised in Wilton. Thomas 'Tam' (b.1772) labourer who brought up a large family in the 'Saut Haa'. He was recorded as a spinner at Pathead on the 1799 and 1801 ballots for the Militia in Wilton Parish. He was listed at Pathhead among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 and 1840. He was one of two men chosen in 1842 to point out the old marches of Wilton after the suggestion by Bailie Fraser. In 1841 he is recorded at Wilton Pathhead, with his wife Isobel, daughter Jane and son William. Thomas (b.c.1780) servant at Ashybank according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. Thomas (b.1782) son of John and twin of Robert. He was a servant at East Mains according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. He was listed there along with his brothers William and Robert, all sons of John, tenant in East Mains. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of the Hawick area. He married Betty Oliver and their children, baptised in East Bank Kirk, included Nelly (b.1806) and George (b.1808). Thomas (b.c.1814) tailor at about 8 Howegate. His wife was Jane, and their children included Isabella and Nancy. Thomas 'Tom' (19th C.) blacksmith at 24 Drumlanrig Square in the mid-1800s. The property was owned by the Dinwiddies. There was also a blacksmith's next door at No. 22. Thomas (1832/3–1907) joiner and fencing contractor of Hawick. He married Elizabeth Clark, who died in 1925 (and who was related to Sir J.A.H. Murray). Their children were Jane and Elizabeth (who died young), plus James (commercial traveller of Leeds), Jane Aleine and Margaret Isabella (who both moved to New Zealand) and Agnes Burns (who married James Caldwell and also moved to New Zealand). William (18th C.) tenant in Trowmill. He was there in at least 1787–88. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: Alexander (b.1787); Janet (b.1788); George (b.1790); and William (b.1792). William (b.c.1770) spinner who lived at the Sandbed. He was listed among heads of households in 1840 and 1841. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included William and Helen. William (b.1777) son of John, he is recorded at East Mains in 1799, on the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. He was on the Militia ballot in 1801 along with his brothers Thomas and Robert, all sons of John, tenant in East Mains. William (18th/19th C.) 'hynd' in Minto according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799.

Ferniehirst (fer-nee-hurst) n. lands and tower just south of Jedburgh, built in the 1470s by Sir Thomas Kerr following his marriage to Margaret Kerr of Kersheugh. The tower there is sometimes referred to as 'Ferniehirst Castle'. The land was valued (along with Limekilnwood) in 1538 at £4 6s 8d. It was stormed by Dacre's men in 1523, recaptured by Sir John Kerr and his men in 1549, when they butchered all the French garrison. It was destroyed soon afterwards by James VI and rebuilt in 1598. Disused in the 18th century, it was renovated in the late 19th for the son of the Marquis of Lothian, but work was stopped in 1892 when that son was killed in a shooting accident. The castle lay unused until 1934 when taken over as a youth hostel until 1985. In 1988 it was restored again by the Marquess of Lothian, and is now a Kerr family home, also containing the Kerr Museum. It is said to be haunted by the 'Green Lady'. The castle features in Jedburgh's Callants' Festival – 'Hermitage wistfully lifts her head, Where the mists on the lone moors fall: Ferniehurst, lulled by the crooning of Jed, Lies wrapped in her sylvan shawl' [WL] (also spelled 'Ferniehurst', as well as variants such as 'Fairnyhirst', 'Farneherst', 'Farnihirst', 'Farnyherst', 'Farnyhirst', 'Farnyhyrst', 'Fernyherst', 'Phairnehirst', 'Phairnihirst', 'Phairnyhirst', 'Pharniehirst', 'Pharniherst', 'Pharnihirst', 'Pharnyherst', 'Pharnyhirst' etc.; the origin of the name is probably the Old English 'fearnig hyrst' meaning 'the ferny wood'; it first appears in 1493 as 'Fairny hirst'; it is on Gordon's c.1650 map as 'Fernihest'; there is a place of the same name in Caddonfoot and Stow Parish).

feu (few) n., arch. in Scots law, the right of an individual to use lands in exchange for a fixed annual fee in grain or money to the landowner; in Hawick, after the division of the Common, town lands were feued, with the rent going to the Common Good, v., arch. to let as a feu – 'The lands of Over hassindean, east and west syde throf with the milne & maynes of the same is fewed out by ane new right To Adam Scott of Hassindeane' [Buc1692], 'Some land for some buildings we wanted to feu, And would pay him the value he thought was his due' [JCG].

feu chairter (few-chār-tur) n., arch. a feu charter, a legal document describing the most common kind of land tenure within the old feudal system of Scotland, where all land was held 'of the superior'. Effectively the Crown owned all lands, a barony or lordship would be held 'of the Crown' by a nobleman, an estate might be held 'of the nobleman' by a laird, and a smaller piece of land might be held 'in feu, of the laird'. There could also be sub-feus (and leases or tenancies, with significent less rights to use the land), so that there were not always clear levels in the system. In any case, interpreting old charters in terms of modern ideas of ownership can be challenging. Feudal tenure was finally abolished in 2000.

feuchen (few-chin) pp., arch. fought – 'An' met wi' freends, an' feughan faes, an' jokit muckle glee, An' danced an' sung sae glad aneath the auld aik tree' [JoHa] (cf. foughten for another past particple of fecht, as well as the past tense forms feucht and focht).

feucht (fewcht) pp., arch. fought (the pronunciation formerly had a long diphthong merging ū and oo; cf. focht).

Feu-Rule (few-rool) n., arch. former barony within Rulewater, once stretching the entire breadth of Hobkirk. It was also sometimes referred to as the Barony of Hallrule. The lands were formerly part of the Barony of Cavers and later became a barony on its own. The existence of this barony probably explains why there was never any barony of 'Hobkirk'. The entire barony was once 'thirled' to Hallrule Mill. In 1453 there was a letter of reversion of the lands from Andrew Ker of Altonburn to Sir Robert Colville of Oxnam. In 1479 they were still held by the Kers of Cessford when Margaret Ker renounced all rights to her uncle Walter. In 1495 the superiority was granted by James IV to Janet, daughter of Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. About that time the lands consisted of Town o' Rule, Hallrule, Hallrule Mill, Deanside, Appotside and Tythehouse in Hobkirk Parish, along with Holm, Middle and Hangingside in the Parishes of Cavers and Kirkton. In 1499 half the lands were resigned by Sir William Colville in favour of Andrew Kerr of Over Crailing, but the 'reversion' of the lands was granted by Elizabeth, Lady Pedmont (Sir William Colville's daughter) to her son-in-law Robert Colville of Cleish in 1541; however, the Colvilles appear not to have repaid the long-standing debt. In 1509/10 the lands were listed among the holdings of Douglas of Cavers, dating back to the time of King David; however, this may have explicitly meant Hallrule and it is called 'Fewhawroull' in 1511, when the 'mill thereof' is also mentioned. It was owned by Lord Herries of Terregles and the Kerrs of Ferniehirst jointly, then in 1562 there was a 'decreet of division' of the lands between Agnes (4th Lady Herries) and Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst. In 1574 it was in the hands of the King through forfeiture by Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, alhough he held it again from 1581. John Maxwell, Lord Herries and Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam were in dispute over the lands in the 1610s. In 1629 the superiority was transferred to Sir Andrew Kerr of Jedburgh from his deceased son, but then passed to Sir Patrick Home of Polwarth in 1632 and William, Earl of Lothian in 1649. The bulk of the lands were owned by Lord Balmerino in 1643, valued at more than £4800 and by Eliott of Stobs in 1678, when Stonedge and Fairnielees had been disjoined and the value was roughly halved. The Mains of Feu-Rule were inherited in 1632 by Margaret and Isobella from her brother Walter Turnbull of Rawflat. The Barony passed from William, Earl of Lothian to William Eliott of Stobs later in the 17th century. In the 1690s it passed from Sir Gilbert Eliott to his son Sir William. The Common for the barony lay on the farm of Hallrule, and is referred to in a retour of 1610 for Appotside. Before 1722 the Lairds of Weens had the right to graze on the Common, but in that year it was arranged that 1/15th of the land be given to Weens in exchange to yielding the pasturage rights, although retaining the right to cast peats on the Common (also written 'Few-rule', 'the feu of Roull', 'Feureul', 'Fewaruell', 'Farroule', etc.; it is 'Feoroule' and 'the Fewroule' in 1453, 'the Feu of Roule' in 1479, 'Fewroule' in 1499, 'Fewrouell' in 1500, 'fee of Roul' in 1501/2, 'Fewroule' in 1509/10, 'Farroule' in 1541, 'Fewroull' in 1562, 'Fewroulie' in 1574, 'Fewroull' in 1581/2, 'Fewalroull' and 'Fewrewlie' in 1602, 'Fewrowll' in 1603, 'Fewrewell' and 'Fewruill' in 1610, 'Fewelrule' in 1629, 'Feualroull' in 1632, 'Fewalroull' in 1637, 'Few of Roull' in 1647, 'Fowroule' and 'Feuaroull' in 1656, 'Fewaroull' in 1659 and 'Feweroull' in 1703).

the Fever Hospital (thu-fee-vur-hos-pi'-ul) n. hospital built at Burnfoot, off Burnfoot Road, as an isolation hospital for victims of infectious disease, particularly scarlet fever. Formally called the Hawick and District Joint Fever Hospital, or the Hawick and District Infectious Diseases Hospital, it was funded jointly by the Town and County, but in fact saw little use. The hospital was designed by Alexander Inglis and built around 1902. It had 24 beds and also had an adjoining wooden smallpox hospital. The name 'Fever Hospital' was also sometimes used as an alternative name for the Anderson Sanatorium, built on the site of a former dilapidated building at Howdenburn in the last few years of the 19th century. The former Fever Hospital became an annex of Burnfoot Primary School in the 1960s and was converted into a Social Work Outreach Centre in the 1990s.

fey (fī) adj., arch. predestined, fated to die soon, behaving in an excited way, crazy – 'I play'd wi' siccan hearty glee, The neibours vowed that I was fey' [JoHa], 'Na, but ye maun surely be fey! Wad ye degrade yoursel' in the sight o' a' your kin?' [JTe] (note the pronunciation).

the Ffoull Well see the Foul Well

-fi (fi, fe, fu, fā) suffix -ful, in words such as 'awfi', 'gowpenfi', etc. (also spelled '-fih', 'fu' ' and '-fae'; the pronunciation varies, but fi is predominant and the general Scots foo is not local).

fiar (fee-ur) n., arch. someone who holds a property in fee, i.e. a person holding the lands in which someone else possesses the life rent, hence usually the son of a Laird who is already effectively running the estate (a Scots law term, also spelled 'fear'; see also feer and feuar).

Fiars Court (fee-urz-kōr') n. body that set prices for different kinds of grain in a county, typically each February. In Roxburghshire it was presided over by the Sheriff-Depute (also sometimes feers court).

ficht (ficht) n., v., poet. fight – 'Pleed my caus, O Lord, wi' thame that straive wi' me: ficht agayne thame that ficht agayne me' [HSR], '... whilk teeches my han's til mak' weir, an' my fingirs til ficht' [HSR] (see the more common fecht).

fickle (fi-kul) v., arch., poet. to puzzle, perplex, entangle – 'Yet fickled as we thus are here, Our fate might been a waur ane' [HSR], 'Than gaed the Pharisees, an' tuik cunsil how they might fickle him in his tak' [HSR].

Fidd (fid) n. George (18th/19th C.) recorded as footman at Chisholme in 1797, when he was working for William Chisholme. His name may be a transcription error for some other surname.

Fiddes (fi-dis) n. Adam (19th C.) married Margaret Park in Hawick in 1853. David (b.1773/4) originally from Makerstoun, he was a miller in Wilton. He is recorded as miller in Hawick on the 1799 ballot list for the Militia. He is recorded as joint proprietor of Roughheugh Mill along with Walter Chisholme, on Pigot's 1825/6 directory. In 1837 he and his son John were proprietors there. He was still 'Miller, Tacksman' there on the 1841 census. His wife was Elizabeth ('Betty') Miller. Their children included: John (b.1802), baptised in Makerstoun, later also miller at Roughheugh; David (b.1803), baptised in Makerstoun, also a miller, some of whose family emigrated to Australia; William (b.1803), probably twin of David; George (b.1808), baptised in Wilton, who was a skinner; and Thomas (b.1820/1). David (b.1803) son of David, he was junior miller at Roughheugh Mill and also a baker. Fisher (fi-shur) n. Alexander (b.1802/3) from Galashiels, he was Schoolmaster in Newcastleton from the end of 1823. He was also an elder of Castleton Kirk. He was recorded there in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories and was also recorded as Schoolmaster in the 1841 and 1851 censuses. In 1852 he was still Parish Schoolmaster, and also acted as Librarian. He married Georgina Fyfe and their children included: Alexander (b.1828); George Fyfe (b.1829); Jean (b.1832); Robert (b.1834); Thomas Stavert (b.1836); Alice (b.1838); Jessie (b.1840); Angus Barton (b.1843); Margaret (b.1848); and James (b.1851). Alexander (b.1828) son of Alexander the Schoolmaster, he was born in Newcastleton and educated in Edinburgh. He was a teacher in Galashiels, where he was also editor of the Border Advertiser. He published many verses, for example 'The Gala Forest Rifles' in support of the volunteer movement in the 1850s. He was the 34th listed member of the Archæological Society in 1856, where he is recorded as 'Mr. Alexr. Fisher, Editor, B.A. Galashiels'. He walked part of the Catrail, along with William Kemp and Robert Michie (as described in a paper published much later, in 1877). In 1859 he donated to the Museum a coin and an 'Arabian spear-head and shark's jaws', was made an honorary member of the Society for 1860, donated 'upwards of 70 copper coins' in 1860 and in 1861 a stone amulet found near Darnick Tower, as well as arrow and spear-heads from Galt, Ontario. He was probably the 'A. Fisher' whose poem about Hermitage Castle was published in 1863. He emigrated to Canada, where he died. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His daughter Janet was baptised in 1681 with witnesses James Learmonth and John Mark. Daniel 'Deefy Danny', owner of a fruit shop on the Bridge Street corner of the Baptist Opening in the middle part of the 20th century. He started in business with a fruit and vegetable barrow. David, M.B.E. (1874–1938) Hawick Provost, born in Galashiels. He worked in the grocery trade around Scotland, becoming Ministry of Food District Inspector for South-East Scotland in WWI. He was a J.P. for East Lothian from 1912, and moved to Hawick when he acquired James Brydon & Sons, High Street, in 1919. Becoming a councillor for South High Street Ward in 1922–38, he was Provost 1931–38. He also became a Magistrate and was honorary treasurer, as well as being Vice-Convenor of Roxburgh County Council. He received an M.B.E. in 1932. Fisher Avenue was named after him. His portrait was painted by James Tait. Rev. James (d.1640) minister of Southdean from 1626. He was translated to Yarrow (St. Mary's Kirk of the Lowes) in 1635. He signed the Covenant in Hawick in 1638, as minister of 'Sct marie Kirk of the Lowes'. He gave £20 towards building the library at Glasgow University in 1637. James son of Danny, he managed Mitchell the glaziers on Oliver Crescent and was affectionately known as 'Gless Erse' Malie (17th C.) cottar at Grange in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. This was probably a woman's name, a pet for of 'Mary'. Mrs. ?? (18th C.) listed in Hawick among those taxed for having female servants in 1789 and 1790. She was presumably the wife of a fairly wealthy Hawick resident of the day. William (d.c.1715) Schoolmaster at Ewes Kirk. His will is recorded in the Commissariot of Dumfries in 1715 (formerly also spelled 'ffisher', 'Fischar' and 'Fischer').

Locally the game has its roots in the 'baa' (i.e. handball) games played annually in many Border towns, as well as more casual games played at other times of the year. There is mention of a large match of around 1600 played at 'Kelsy' (probably Kelso) in the memoirs of Robert Carey, the English Warden of the Marches. The 'Carterhaugh Baa' of 1815 was essentially a re-enactment of those early games. The Rugby and Association rules only became adopted in the latter part of the 19th century – 'Then strip lads, and to it, though sharp be the weather, And if, by mischance, you should happen to fall, There are worse things in life than a tumble on heather, And life is itself but a game of football' [SWS] (also spelled 'fitba'' etc.).

fit-weshin (fi'-we-shin) n., arch. traditional good-luck ceremony, performed before weddings in the 18th and early 19th centuries. The washing was done by a female friend of the bride-to-be, usually on the Tuesday before the wedding. A tub of warm water was prepared, containing a ring from a married woman present (the finding of which in the tub being considered lucky). All those present washed the bride's feet, and there were often pranks involving soot etc.

Fitz Alan (fitz–aw-lin) n. Edmund 9th Earl of Arundel (1285–1326) son of Richard, 8th Earl. He took part on the war against Scotland in 1306 and was appointed Warden of the English Marches in 1316. He organised an expedition against Scotland in 1317 and part of his force was ambushed by Sir James Douglas' men at Lintalee. He went in and out of favour with the English King and was eventually executed. However, his estates were restored to his eldest son Richard. Hawise (13th C.) daughter of Alexander, 4th High Steward of Scotland and sister of Sir James, 5th High Steward, she was heiress of Old Roxburgh. She married John de Soulis, and so became Lady Liddesdale. Her daughter Muriel married Sir Richard Lovel. Walter (b.bef. 1115–77) first High Steward of Scotland under David I. He helped encourage Norman families to settle in Scotland. He owned large amounts of land in western Scotland, but also Birchenside on the Leader Water in Berwickshire and Hassendean in Teviotdale. He witnessed the renewal of the grant of Ringwood to Melrose Abbey in the late 1160s. In the late 1160s he was witness to the confirmation of the gifts of lands to Jedburgh Abbey. In 1166 he witnessed a charter by King William to Robert de Brus. After his death there was a document confirming the lands he had given to the monks of Paisley Priory, including a ploughgate in Hassendean (called Huntlaw). He married Eschina de Molle, heiress of Molle (or Mow) and Huntlaw. Their son was Alan, 2nd High Steward. The Stewartship was therafter hereditary and led to the Stewart Kings several generations later. His seal shows a knight on horseback, holding a sword and shield and with the words 'SIGILL. WALTERI FILII ALANI' (also written 'Fitzalan').

Fitz Malger (fitz-mal-gur) n. Race (12th C.) granter of half the lands of Shortbutts to Jedburgh Abbey. This took place in the late 1100s, and the lands were in Liddesdale, described as being in the territory of Sorbie. Presumably his father was 'Malger', a name that occurs among some Norman families south of the Border.

the Flag (thu-flawg) n. Hawick's colour, standard, pennon, pennant, or pensil, also known as 'the Banner Blue'. It is meant to be a copy of the original flag captured at Hornshole, which is believed to have originally belonged to a group of English soldiers attached to the Priory of Hexham. The oldest surviving flag dates from 1707, sometimes called 'the Union Flag', since it contains the date 1707 (but the connection with the Union of the Kingdoms is probably just a coincidence) and is in the Museum; it was ordered by Bailie Ruecastle at a cost of £10 14 shillings, and was ready for the end of May that year. It was a replacement for a much older flag, which was so decrepit in 1706 that the Cornet-Elect refused to carry it, causing near riots. The result was that the Bailies took the responsibility of carrying the Flag that year, while the young men of the town appointed their own unofficial Cornet (whose name is not recorded) to carry another Colour. The Hawick flag is 'A Banner Azure with Saltire Or' with the date 1514 also in gold, and should be pennon-shaped (with the date read correctly when held like a lance). The vertical line may have simply hidden a seam. The letters 'HC' (for 'Hawick Colour' or 'Hawick Common' or perhaps even 'Hawick Callants', no one is entirely sure) were probably added later, perhaps to the original after its capture. The 1707 flag, of much lighter material than later version, was probably not the first replacement (although some have suggested that it might have been). A flag from around the end of the 18th century still had the correct colours, but with '1514' in red and the cross in yellow; this was repeated for the replacement of 1832. A new flag made in 1865, and carried by the Cornet in the procession for the opening of the Allan Water supply and the opening of the Carlisle railway, was mistakenly given a red (or crimson) cross, and was square-shaped ('. . . They love the banner that leads them on – the banner of red and blue' [JEDM]). New flags were purchased in 1865, 1877 and 1892, still with the wrong colours. The error was probably made around 1850 (or 1845 and again around 1855 if 2 flags were purchased between 1832 and 1865), presumably because of indifference by the Town Council and citizens to the details of the ceremonial side. At the end of the 19th century it was established (by Craig & Laing, although the yellow colour had been suggested a few years earlier by J.E.D. Murray) that the flag should be pennon-shaped and with a golden cross, and this was implemented for the new flag of 1903, with subsequent copies retaining this design. The old coloured Flag was last used at the Thursday morning Chase of 1903 (and can be seen outside the Town Hall in an 1893 painting by Frank Wood). A replica flag was made by the ladies at Pringle's and sent to the K.O.S.B. troops in Germany during WWII, then returned with the names of places where local men had fell embroidered on it. Flags of schools and guilds were also carried in earlier Common Ridings, but since the mid-18th century only the Town's Colour has been allowed. In 1851 the Flag was stolen when flying at the Tower Hotel overnight, but recovered a week later in Silver Street. Until 1861 the flag used to fly from the Chief Magistrate's (sometimes the Junior Magistrate's) house until it was bussed on the Thursday evening. After that year this happened at an inn selected by the Cornet, until the Colour Bussing was moved to the Town Hall in 1887. Now the unbussed Flag first appears at the Thursday morning Chase and is bussed on the Thursday evening, after being displayed from the Town Hall balcony all day. After being bussed inside the Town Hall it is waved from the balcony and left on display there. On the Friday the Cornet carries it at the Chase, then the Acting Father takes it to St. Leonard's, where it is displayed outside the farmhouse. It is then taken by the Cornet on the Ride around the Marches. After the Cutting of the Sod it is carried by the Acting Father, and handed again to the Cornet at the gate from pilmuir Field onto the Mair. The Cornet rides proudly round the course with the Flag and later it is displayed from the roof of the committee room. Leaving the Mair, it is dipped in the Teviot and is returned to the Council Chambers for the night. On the Saturday it again goes to the Mair, and is returned on the Saturday afternoon at the Handing Back ceremony. The Flag was loaned to Hexham Abbey for the procession for the consecration of a new nave in 1908, with a copy presented to the Abbey by the Callants' Club in 1914 and a replacement presented by the Provost in 1972 (the one last carried by the Cornet in 1971); this now hangs in the abbey's north nave, with the 1914 copy returned to Hawick. There was a new flag in 1972, which was used until 1991. The flag was bussed by the Queen at a special Golden Jubilee ceremony in Melrose in 2002. It is rarely brought out except at the Common Riding, but formerly was used in local processions, e.g. at the opening of the Allan Water supply in 1865 (when a new Flag was provided) and the Dod Burn water supply in 1882. The Flag is also draped over the coffins of ex-Cornets, the practice beginning with James Smith in 1904. A practice flag (green, with the words 'Aye Defend' in yellow, donated by the Mosstroopers' Club) is used by the Cornet and the Acting Father at the Mair after the Wednesday morning Chase. A new flag was provided in 2014 – 'Hail to the banner that proudly floats o'er us, Hail to the brave hearts that bear it along' [JT], 'Then rally around the good old flag – let the slogan ring out again!' [JEDM], ' 'Guid sake, Jamie', replied Mr. Hunter 'Just here's our Flag. It's our Flag. We're prood o't. Gather round it. Set it up. Up wi' the Flag. That's the idea – up wi' the Flag!' ' [BM1898], '... And blue as my wee lad's wondering eye Watching the Flag go fluttering by' [JYH], 'The flag is oor emblem, an' stands for a' that wei cherish an' haud dear' [BW1939], 'The flag for which oor fithers died At Hornshole be Teviotside' [IWL].

flain (flān) n., poet. an arrow – 'The swallow-tail frae teckles flew, Five hundred flain into the flight ... ' [CPM].

flaip (flāp) n., arch. a flop, thud, a clean or unbroken fall – 'I've gotten mony flaips an' fa's, Baith cleek and cross ... ' [JoHa], a dull, heavy sound caused by a fall.

flair (flār) n. floor – 'hey, there's nae coat hooks on a flair!', '... tellt her no ti weer her best evenin dress ti the Ball because the Toon Hall flair wad be awfi dirty' [IWL], 'Ye scrubbed the flair until it shone' [IJ], 'Ma auldest sisters washed the close, The other yin's dune the flair' [AY], '... it shattered into a hunder pieces, it disappeared aa ower the flair and the table an hing' [IA] (see fluir for the earlier pronunciation).

Flake Hill (flāk-hil) n. hill on the northern side of the Borthwick valley, opposite the farm of Eilrig. It reaches a height of 318 m.

flam (flam) n., arch. a flame, flare, glare – 'Thon burnin' Zeppelin made a grand flam i' the lift' [GW], '... een as the flaam o the waather-gleam skails afore'd the cluds threh the owrecuissen lift' [ECS].

flaneerin (flawn-eer-in) n., arch. fancy-work, embroidery, decorative trimming.

flang (flawng) pp., arch. flung, did fling – 'Salome flang like a wanton, free, A lunt, the flash o' her witchin' ee' [WL] kicked out the legs, danced – '... an laap an flaang as yauld as a wuddie' [ECS] (also written 'flaang'; this is the past tense, while the past participle is usually 'flung').

flanker (flang-kur) n. one of the 2 wing forwards in rugby, playing at numbers 6 and 7, and forming part of the back row in scrums.

flankit (flang-kee', -ki') pp., arch. flanked – 'An' by ill fortune's forces flankit, I will be laith, To quat the muse, while ae auld blanket, Can hap us baith' [JR].

flannen (fla-nen, neen) n., adj., arch. flannel – 'Ma flaaneen serk's aa up ma back an 's hard as buckram' [ECS], 'A can mind when tredsman wore Flannen serks wi a navy blue stripe' [DH] (also written 'flaaneen' and variants).

flapper (flaw-pur) n. one who owns or trains horses for 'flapping' meetings, also a horse that races at such meetings.

flappin (flaw-pin) n. amateur horse-racing in the Borders, not under the Jockey Club or National Hunt rules. The word has been used elsewhere in Britain (and also for greyhound racing), but the Borderers have been the most enthusiastic supporters of unofficial racing. The main locations are at Hawick Moor, Langholm and Selkirk (at the Rig). Those at Hawick Moor that are not associated with the Common Riding are organised by 'Hawick Horse'. There were also races on Flatt farm near Newcastleton until the early years of the 21st century. There were formerly meetings across much of Scotland, although support waned in most places, with the last meeting in the Aberdeen area around the 1990s. The only other place in Scotland to now have such race meetings is Irvine. Among places known to have meetings in the past are Insch (Aberdeenshire), the Black Isle, Bogside, Lanark, Canonbie, Dumfriesshire (near Newton Stewart) and Galashiels (once). Historically, flapping has a reputation as a hot-bed of swindlers and ruffians, and the exclusive Jockey Club still gives a 'warning off' penalty for participants. The Common Riding of 1946 was the first flapping meeting to be held in Scotland. The Tradesmen's Handicap, run on Common-Riding Friday is the flappers equivalent of the Derby – '... daein a pickle flappin tae on his Uncle Elec's Nell' [IWL], '... Till hei got intae flappin', racin', no under orders' [MB] (the origin and antiquity of the word is uncertain, but there is a claim it comes from an old slang word for a loose woman; however, it seems more likely it is related to 'flap', recorded as 'a sudden happening' in Aberdeenshire).

flappit (flaw-pi', -pee') pp. flapped – 'He crawed and flappit ower the dyke, An' roosed the bees ayont the bike' [WFC].

flare (flār) v., poet. to flatter, cajole, brag – 'He ever shunn'd the wheedlin' pack, Wha flare ane up wi' fulsome crack' [JoHa] – 'And mind ye lass, I'm no come here To seigh and sab, and flare and vow' [HSR] (also written 'flair').

Flask (flawsk) n. former lands on the east side of the Ewes valley, between Hoghill and Terrona. Flask Wood is still marked on the Ordnance Survey map. It was also formerly called 'Flaskholme', although in some periods the 2 names may have referred to distinct neighbouring lands. Along with Howgill and Glendivan it was described as a 10-merk land when inherited by Robert, Lord Maxwell in 1550, by John, Lord Maxwell in 1604 and by Robert Maxwell in 1619. Archibald Armstrong 'in Flascholme' is recorded in 1607. It may be the 'Flocksteid alias Flasket' possessed by John Scott 'balie in Liddisaill' recorded in 1632. Both Flask and Flaskholme are listed among the Dumfriesshire possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653, 1661 and 1663. It was 'Flask alias Flaskholme' when the superiority was inherited by John Maxwell, Earl of Nithsdale in 1670 and by William, Earl of Nithsdale in 1696. There were Armstrongs there in the 17th century. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, when it consisted of 540 acres, bounded by lands of the Laird of Cooms, Howgill, Nether Wrae and Terrona. It is also stated that 'the water hath done it much damage by altering its course'. John Anderson was there in 1783. Robert Beattie, James Johnston and their families lived there in 1841 (it is 'Flask' on Gordon's c.1650 map, 'Flaskhoome' on Blaeu's 1654 map and on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Flasket Sike (flaws-ki'-sīk) n. small stream on the west side of Whitrope Burn in upper Liddesdale, just north of Buckstone Moss.

Flaskwud (flawsk-wud) n. Flaskwood, former name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale, listed as vacant at that time. A document of 1529/30 states that Robert Elliot 'alias Flaskvod' is to be brought in to answer crimes perpetrated against George Ker of Linton. It was probably the 'Flaskett' included along with Over Closs, Millburn and several adjacent farmsteads when surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718. The farm was presumably on the Flasket Sike, off the Whitrope Burn in upper Liddesdale.

flat (fla') n. a storey in a mill, or an area defined for specific factory production, e.g. 'the Back Flat' or 'the Middle Flat' – '. . . one day while going through one of the spinners' flats there he noticed a piecer lounging about' [JHH].

flat (fla') n., arch. a cow-plat, cake of cow dung (Jamieson says this is 'apparently from its flat form').

flate (flā') pp., arch. scolded, chided – 'An' Luckie Macrandie, she flate and she swore, An' she chased her auld wooer richt oot at the door' [JJ] (also 'flaet'; this is the past tense of flyte, noted by E.C. Smith, but also see fleet; the past participle is flitten).

flatlins (fla'-linz) adv., poet. flatly, at full length – 'Ane other thro' the breeks him bare, While flatlins to the grund he fell . . . ' [CPM].

Flatt (flaw', flat) n. farm just north of Kershopefoot, on the Scottish side of the Border. It is already 'Flatt' in 1541 when valued at 5 merks and tenanted by Simon Armstrong. 'Young Sim' was recorded as residing there in 1583. Will Elliot 'called Blakheid' had 4 cows stolen from the lands there in about 1610. Lancie Armstrong of Flat was recorded in 1611. It was possessed by Francis Robson in 1632. Elspeth Scott was tenant there in 1694, and paid tax on 3 hearths. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, extending to 442 acres, bounded by the Kershope Burn, Liddel Water and Sorbietrees; the map shows the house in the same place as today's farmhouse and some old trees corresponding to the modern Sorbiholm Strip. Henry Elliot paid tax on 11 windows there in 1748. Elliots were tenants in the later 18th and early 19th centuries. Henry Elliot was there in at least the period 1785–91. John Elliot was farmer there in 1797 Walter Armstrong was a servant there in 1799. Servants James Elliot and Francis Nichol were there in 1801. Another John Elliot was farmer in the 1860s. There was a mill pond to the east. A mineral spring on the farm was once considered to have healing properties, and is marked 'Stinking Well (Chalybeate)' on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map The farm was used for 'flapping' race meetings in the latter part of the 20th century. It is also a former name for lands to the east of Smailholm Crags (also 'The Flatt', it is 'the Flates' in 1583; it is 'Fleet' on Gordon's c.1650 map, 'Flett' on Blaeu's c.1654 map and 'Flat' on Stobie's 1770 map).

flatty (fla-tee) n., poet. an ignorant person – 'What mak's ye spae o' caul' an' want, To gliff puir corky-noddl'd flatties?' [JoHa].

flauch see flach

flauchter see flachter

flaught see flacht

flaw (flaw) n., arch. a piece of ground used for drying peats – 'A flaw o' peats, the spot of ground occupied by an individual, on the edge of a moss, on which his peats are spread for being dried, in the summer season' [JoJ], a quantity of peats (also flowe).

Fleck (flek) n. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer in Hobkirk Parish. He paid the Horse Tax at 'over Chesterhall' in 1797; this was probably a temporary name for Over Bonchester. His children included: Betty (b.1789); and James (b.1791).

Flecks see the Flex fleece (flees) n., arch. a supply of stock, a flock or company of people, humorous term for an outfit of clothes – 'A've bocht a new fleece o warm claes for the wunter months' [ECS].

the Fleece see the Fleece Inn

Fleece Close (flees-klōs) n. passageway at 6 High Street, named after the Fleece Inn, the ballroom of which it led to. In the mid-19th century there was the sign of a golden fleece at the entrance.

the Fleece Inn (thu-flees-in) n. inn formerly at 6 High Steet, also known as 'the Golden Fleece'. It was reached by the long passageway there, behind what was for a long time Davies the saddler's. The attached ballroom was further up the close, with access from an outside staircase (seen in an old sketch). In the middle of the 19th century it was used for many purposes, including weddings, dances, theatrical performances and concerts in the winter, as well as 'Blinnd Wull's' dance classes. At one point there were 3 separate dance instructors using the ballroom. It was a popular place for raffles to raise money for distressed workers. There were performances of all kinds there, including the exhibition of a supposed mermaid and performances by Borders clown Billy Purves. One of the last performances there was a recital of selections from Shakespeare by a father and daughter. It was also used for many years for the monthly business meetings of Allars Kirk, with the upper room (No. 5) used for this purpose known jokingly as 'the Manse'. Thomas Easton ran a school here for a while and in 1838 it was the location for the meeting that organised the opening of the Chartist Store (i.e. the Co-op). George Hunter was the proprietor in 1825 and 1837, Margaret Best is listed there in 1852, then James Hay, followed by James Scott, with the last tenant being town bellman Samuel Lawrence. The licence was reduced from that of a hotel to a public house in 1871 and lost altogether in 1875 for a 'breach of certificate'. There are 2 sketches made by T.H. Laidlaw in 1899. The ballroom was demolished in 1948 – 'Jock Buckham to the Fleece is gane To sleep among his rags . . . ' [WE].

fleech (fleech) v., poet. to cajole, coax, beseech, flatter – 'But what are a' their fleeching tales to me? Colin I loo, but them I downa see' [CPM], 'At fair or at preaching, nae wooing nae fleeching – The Flowers of the Forest are a' wede away' [JEM], 'An' that in nae most awfu' gracious manner; I'm plainly blunt – nor kens the way to fleech' [JoHa], 'Nae fleeching an' fondness, but glunching an' strife, Bestriddles the way o' a man wi' a wife' [JoHa], 'I've fleech'd an' foughten a' in vain – Jock disna seem to care; I've thrashed him o'er and o'er again Until my airm was sair' [JT].

fleet (flee') v., poet. to floar, to flow, flood – '. . . blaw apon my gairden that its spices may fleet owt' [HSR], 'Where the weet comes frae the flowe, And fleets, ye mind, on yon bit lea' [HSR], arch. to be awash with water – '. . . and boggy ground on the other which fleets water all the winter season' [GT].

Fleety Wud (flee'-ee-wud) n. wood on the east side of the Slitrig, to the south of North Berryfell farm. The cottage there is Fleety Cottage or Fleety Haugh, formerly called Elliotfield (the name presumably relates to propensity for flooding in the area).

fleg (fleg) v., arch. to frighten, scare, drive away by scaring – '. . . But stuff my wame wi' guid kail brose, To fleg the caul' Syne strutting in guid plaidin' hose, I look fu' baul' ' [JR], '. . . An' scripture anathema's gather, To fleg the faithless' [JR], to fling (as a horse, from a fright), n. a fright, scare – 'An' if ye meet wi' Whisky Meg, That honest hearted carlin, Gude faith your cares will get a fleg . . . ' [JR], '. . . She threw doon a guinea, and thought it weel waired, For he, to her ailment, had given a fleg' [TCh].

fleggar (fle-gur) n., arch., poet. someone who flinches, one who frightens – 'Even in the Tranties, wi' their beggars, The spoilers had found fearfu' fleggars' [AD], a horse that is prone to flinging off its rider (the meaning of Agnes Douglas' line may possibly instead be 'an exaggerator, liar'just be 'scarer').

flei (flī) n. a fly, any general flying insect – 'is that flei a cleg or jist a hoose-flei?', 'shut yer mooth or the fleis'll get in', 'Dirty white-wesh, deid-rot treis, Baked bean tins and mawky fleis . . . ' [DH], v. to fly – 'she's gliffed stiff ti flei', 'But hei took iz roond the Haugh – Oh, how the time did flei!' [DH], '. . . it's sixteen eer sin oor Queen an Prince Philip last veesiteet the toon. How time fleis' [BW1978] (also spelled 'fley'; see also hoose-flei, mauky-flei and shairny-flei).

flei ceemetry (flī-see-mi'-ree) n. humorous term for fly paper – 'They came to a horrible, fascinating end on revolting 'fly cemetery's' . . . ' [BB], humorous term for a fruit slice made of pastry and currants.

fleich (flīch) v., poet. to cajole, flatter – '. . . wi' fleichin' lipps, an' wi' ane duuble hairt do thaye speik' [HSR].

flei-hauf (flī-hawf) n. fly-half in rugby, playing at no. 10, and being effectively the leader of the backs.

flei-hook (flī-hook) n. a fishing fly, especially in the phrase 'dressed like a flei-hook', meaning overdressed.

flei-in adder (flī-in-aw-dur) n., arch. the dragon-fly (also 'fleein adder', 'fleein ether', etc.).

flei-in bent (flī-in-ben') n., arch. a rough grass, purple melic, Molinia cærulea.

flei-in oot (flī-in-oo') adj., arch. sticking-out – 'Yet there was a Hawick wumman used to take a flyin-oot lip whenever the train got to Reston Junction . . . ' [DH].

flei in the air (flī-in-thu-ār) interj. used to express doubt – 'that's nae mair gold is flei in the air'.

Fleming (fle-min) n. Sir David of Biggar (d.1405/6) eldest son of Sir Malcolm. He distinguished himself at the Battle of Otterburn in 1388. In 1404 he was a Commissioner for negotiating a truce with England. Being in royal favour he gained several properties and titles, including being (briefly) given the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburgh by King Robert III on being forfeited by the Earl of Douglas in 1405. This was despite Isabella Douglas, Countess of Mar, granting the lands to her nephew Archibald Douglas. In 1405 he was one of those ensuring (unsuccessfully, for he was captured by the English) the safe passage of Prince James of Scotland by ship to France, to escape the plottings of the Douglases. However, his party was returning and met at Long Hermiston Moor, where he was killed by James Douglas of Balveny (later 7th Earl of Douglas), son of Archibald 3rd Earl of Douglas. As a result Cavers (and the Sheriffdom) returned to Douglas hands, and later Douglas of Balveny became the 7th Earl of Douglas. He married Jean, daughter of Sir David Barclay of Brechin and secondly married Isabel, heiress of Monycabow. He had a daughter Marrion (who married William Maule of Panmure) and 2 sons, Sir Malcolm and David. He was ancestor of the Earls of Wigtown. F. (19th C.) in 1874 donated to the Museum 'two oil paintings'. Hugh (12th C.) landowner at Malton in Yorkshire. He is recorded in Reginald of Durham's collection of miracles of St. Cuthbert, probably written in the 1170s. He was said to have fled Malton due to the incursions of the army of William the Lion, and sought refuge in the chapel of St. Cuthbert in the Slitrig valley. A vision of the saint told him to take moss from the stone basin that was outside the chapel and place some under his hood. He was thereby able to pass his enemies undetected and return to Malton. There is a Nicholas Fleming of Malton recorded in William Eure's regiment in the 17th century who might possibly be a descendant. James (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those 'Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun'. He was probably from the west side. His surname appears to be 'Fliming'. He is probably the James 'Fleemin', married to Agnes 'Putrie', whose children born in Hawick included William (b.1685), Margaret (b.1687) and Isobel (b.1692). John (14th C.) chaplain at Hawick in the mid-1300s. He may be the same as 'John de Hawick' mentioned in 1356. All that is really known about him is recorded in an action brought against him by John Leche, secretary of the Bishop of Glasgow in 1363, asking for confirmation that he held the Hawick benefice 'although John Fleming, a younger man than himself and not a priest, held the Church and contested it, saying the patronage belonged to him'. The John who held benefices in St. Andrews in the early 1400s, 'notwithstanding that he is dispensed as the son of a priest' may have been his son. John of Boghall (1529–72) son of Malcolm, who was Lord High Chamberlain. He succeeded his brother James as 5th Lord Fleming. He was a strong supporter of Mary, Queen of Scots. He was granted the 10-pound land of North Synton in 1566, after it was forfeited by James Veitch. However, the Veitches had the lands restored to them in 1583/4, by his son John, 6th Lord Fleming.

John (18th/19th C.) cabinet-maker in Castleton listed among the subscribers to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He is listed as a joiner among heads of households in 1835. He was listed as a wright in Newcastleton in Pigot's 1837 directory. He does not occur on the 1841 census. John (19th/20th C.) farmer at Roan, near Newcastleton. He served as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. Robert (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Ruecastle. He was taxed in 1797 for having 2 non-working dogs. Robert (b.c.1810) tailor who lived on Kiryard in 1841. He was there along with shoemaker Walter, probably his older brother, as well as Elizabeth, probably their mother, and children Janet and James. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included Robert (b.1772) and Thomas (b.1793). Thomas (b.c.1780) recorded at Bedrule on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. He is 'late Roxbr. Light Dragoons', suggesting that this excepted him from selection. He may be the Thomas who married Isabel Whillans in Bedrule in 1802. Thomas (19th C.) married Christina Fraser in Wilton in 1851. He may be the Thomas who donated coins to the Museum in 1858. William (18th/19th C.) recorded as a teacher on Melgund Place in Pigot's 1837 directory. He is probably the young Schoolmaster called William who was residing in Kelso in 1841. He died in about 1846.

Flemington (flem-ing-tin) n. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Cauldmill in 1720, 1723 and 1731 and Deanbrae in 1738. He married Ann Turnbull in 1720 and their children included: Margaret (b.1721); Thomas (b.1723); Robert (b.1726); Robert (again, b.1728); Archibald (b.1731); and Margaret (b.1738). His name is sometimes written 'Flemingtown'; it is a rare surname in the area.

flenders (flen-durz) n., pl., poet. splinters, fragments – '... Now ye your barrels into flenders May ding wi' speed' [JoHa], '... thou sallt basch thame inti flendirs like ane patter's vesshel' [HSR], 'Thou didist smatter the heæds o' leviathan intil flenders ...' [HSR].

flesh (flesh) n., arch. a general term for butcher meat – 'A made a faiasable mael oot o pie-soop, ... caald flesh, picklt ingans ...' [ECS], '... for aw've the pot on the day, an' aw henna the flesh in yet' [JTu].

flesher (fle-shur) n., arch. a butcher – 'Item, to Adam Lidderdale, flescheour in Hawik, for flesche to the place, tuentie pundis' [SB1574], 'The said day, Bessie Henderson, spouse to Cuthbert Henderson, fleshour, being accused ...' [BR1638], '... Past fletcher, wabster, hind' [DH] (also sometimes 'fletcher'; several spelling variants exist, cf. also fleshour).

fleshers (fle-shurz) n., pl., arch. butchers, once one of the 7 incorporated trades, which until 1861 had two representatives on the Town Council. There were formerly strict laws attached to the treatment of meat, which the Town Council enforced, e.g. in 1713 a flesher was fined for bringing a carcass into the Town that had already died in the country. The incorporation obtained its 'Seal of Cause' in 1720, when there were 7 members. In 1836 there were 6 people in the incorporation, each being required to provide 'a beef-steak for the whole corporation' on entry. They had ceased to exist by the end of the 19th century. In Selkirk the 'Fleshers', a remnant of the former trade incorporation there, are still an active group with their own reception etc. during the Common Riding. The amount of business done locally was at a fairly low level until the latter part of the 18th century. Cutting the hamstrings of escaped cattle in the public street was one of the barbaric practices of the 18th century mentioned by Robert Wilson. An 1860 photograph (of George Davies' shop) shows the once common sight (before being banned in 1862) of carcasses hanging up outside the shop – 'Item, that all flescheris present the hale flesh slaine by them at the mercat place ...' [BR1640], 'The fleshers are ordained by the council not to sell skins until they shall first be exposed in the market place ...' [BR1663], 'The incorporations are 7, viz. weavers, tailors, hammermen, skinners, fleshers, shoemakers, and baxters' [RRG].

fleshour (fle-shoor) n., arch. a butcher – 'Item, to Adam Lidderdale, flescheour in Hawik, for flesche to the place, tuentie pundis' [SB1574], 'The said day, Bessie Henderson, spouse to Cuthbert Henderson, fleshour, being accused ...' [BR1638], 'John Briggs, fleshour, was onlawed and amerciott for giving two provocations, one aggt. Wm. Payslay, and the other aggt. Michell Trumble ...' [BR1683] (an older version of flesher).

the Flesh Mercat (thu-flesh-mer-ki') n., arch. former name for a market held in Hawick to sell meat. In 1755 it is recorded that 'The Flesh Mercate' was finished at the cost of £20, suggesting there was a building constructed especially for this purpose. It is specifically recorded that a 'cross-tree' was put up there in 1755 and there was a 'roup' for it that year (presumably it was rented by butchers). However, in 1762 the Council resolved to 'take down the Flesh Market and Cross', and to dispose of the stones and timber; this suggests that it may have been located close to the foot of the Cross Wynd.

flet (fle') pp., arch. scolded, chided – 'The tongues o' wives wha never flet, The picture o' a mither's pet' [JoHa] (cf. flate).

Fletcher (fle-chur) n. Adam (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Thomson and their children included William (b.1689). Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was living at Borthwickshiels in 1718, 1722 and 1724. He may have married Margaret Tait in 1715. His children included: Janet (b.1718); Margaret (b.1720); James (b.1722); and Adam (b.1724). He was surely related to William who was at Borthwickshiels about the same time. Alexander (b.c.1780) saddler in Newcastleton according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. He was also listed as a saddler in Newcastleton on Pigot's 1837 directory and Slater's 1852 directory. He was at about 48 North Hermitage Street in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Elizabeth ('Betty'). Probably the same Alexander was listed as a tailor in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, recorded as miller in Synton Mill in 1689 and 1698. In 1689 he had a discharge with the treasurer of Selkirk in the name of his wife Margaret Smail. He witnessed baptisms in 1689 for John Turnbull and for William Balmer, in 1691 for George Robison and for Robert Gledstains, and in 1694 for James Rutherford and for William Palmer. Also in 1694 he and William witnessed a baptism for John Cuthbertson and Isobel (who was surely related). He married Margaret Smail and their children included George (b.1688), Isobel (b.1692), William (b.1696), Janet (b.1698), Helen (b.1701) and Andrew (b.1704). Andrew (18th C.) Hawick resident, married to Janet Kedie. Their children included: Janet (b.1737); Mary (b.1740); and Walter (b.1741). He was probably related to Betty Fletcher, who was married to Thomas Kedie at about the same time. He is probably the Andrew who hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth in 1760. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Whitfield in 1759 and also in 1765 when he was among the men selected to perambulate the boundaries of Wilton Common in 1765. He married Mary Henderson in 1756. Their son James was baptised in 1759, with witnesses William and Robert Scott. George (d.c.1558) son of Thomas, from whom he was given the lands of Ruecastle in 1519. His son was John. George (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His son John was born in 1636. Perhaps the same George married Isobel Veitch and has a son Andrew baptised in 1653. He also witnessed a baptism in 1652 for Thomas, who was probably a brother or other close relative. George (17th C.) owner of lands in Ruecastle in Bedrule Parish. In 1643 his lands were valued at £12. He is probably related to the George who was recorded in Bedrule Parish in 1694. George (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate and is probably related to James and John, who are also listed. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1690 he (along with William) witnessed a baptism for John and Isobel Brydon. He married Agnes Veitch and their children included James (b.1705). George (18th C.) witnessed a baptism for James Henderson in Branxholme in 1728. George (18th C.) tenant farmer at Turn near Stobs. He was there in the 1750s when his servant Robert Thomson got into a violent altercation with the Hawick Town Herd over his flock being hounded off the Common. He could be the George, son of James, born in Bedrule Parish in 1730. James (16th C.) recorded in Huntly in 1580 when he witnessed an agreement between the tenants in Dodhead and Singlie. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His children included Andrew (b.1632) and William (b.1635). James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Reid, whose surname is written 'Red'. Their children included: William (b.1670); Thomas (b.1672); James (b.1675); and Helen (b.1676). James Haining states that 'in some notes of James Wilson, Town Clerk, appears a famous Fletcher m. to Isobel Reid or Rae', but it is unclear what was famous about him. He is probably the James, son of Thomas, born in Ashkirk in 1644. James (17th C.) tenant in Bellendean. Along with several other men from the upper Borthwick, he was charged in 1685 with being a Covenanter. However, all the men took the 'Test' and promised not to frequenct conventicles. His name is given as 'Flesher'. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His name is recorded as 'Flatcher'. His wife was Janet Scott and they had a son George (b.1662). James (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. His children, baptised in Bedrule Parish, included William (b.1693) and

George (b.1698). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. He may have been son of the earlier James. His children included Mary (b.1726), Margaret (b.1728) and George (b.1730). Andrew (b.1732) and William (b.1735), baptised in Ashkirk Parish, may also have been his children. Rev. James (1725/6–1803) from Dalkeith, he became the first minister of the Newcastleton Burgher Kirk in 1762. He was one of 6 students who entered the divinity hall in 1758, only 2 of whom became ministers. His appointment to Castleton came after a long delay, caused by difficulty in finding a suitable man. He was said to be skilled at optics and keen on astronomy, and a friend of James Veitch of Inchbonny. He is also said to have built a 'wooden horse' which he used to get around the Parish; it is unclear whether or not this was an early predecessor of the bicycle. There were also stories of how he had second sight and predicted things about the next 3 ministers of the parish. He was said to be 'a man of singularly primitive manners' and was not a successful minister, being a strict disciplinarian and having an off-putting manner. A new Kirk was built around 1773, but it was said that the congregation was in decline by 1793. Around this time there was also the establishment of Newcastleton, dramatically altering the parish. A complaint was made to the Selkirk Presbytery in 1801 that he was preaching against accepted doctrine, which led to discussions of his dismissal, during which he announced his resignation; he had apparently come to a new but unorthodox understanding of the Trinity, and written of this in a preface to an edition of Dr. Watts on 'The Sonship of Christ'. He moved back to Dalkeith and shortly before his death published 'The orthodox scheme freed from the remains of Arianism . . . ', largely a commentary on the works of Rev. Isaac Watts. He married Christian Beattie in Castleton in 1769 and they had a daughter, also Christian (d.1835). The family are buried in Castleton churchyard Janet (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1639, along with 4 other women, she appeared before the Session 'and gave in sufficient excuse that they could not come to the communion, their bairns all lying in the pocks [presumably smallpox or similar]'. John (15th C.) resident of Hartwood. In 1494/5 Walter Rutherford in Phaup was allowed to compone for several crimes, including stealing sheep from him and Robert Nichol. His surname is recorded as 'flegiar'. John (16th C.) son of George, he inherited the lands of Ruecastle in 1558/9. Then he immediately sold the lands to Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst. Perhaps the same John was recorded in 1563 leasing part of the lands of Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish and in 1580 witnessing a transaction involving the Johnstones of Hermiston. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick and Ashkirk Parishes. He married Isobel Brydon and their children included: Janet (b.1680), baptised in Hawick; and Isobel (b.1690), baptised in Ashkirk. The witnesses in 1690 were William and George, who were probably related to him. John (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. He may be the John whose children baptised in Bedrule included: Helen (b.1693); Thomas (b.1696); Margaret (b.1698); Isabel (b.1701); Janet (b.1704); Jean (b.1708); John (b.1706); and possibly Jean (b.1718). John (18th C.) tenant in Branxholme. He married Margaret Scott, and their children included Margaret (b.1726). John (18th/19th C.) saddler in Hawick with Andrew Aitchison. In 1799 he was selected by ballot to serve on the Roxburghshire Militia, in place of John Henderson, who had been declared a deserter. He asked for more time in order to find a substitute. However, since there appears to be no record of a substitute being found, he presumably served. Peter (18th/19th C.) weaver in the West-end. Along with Robert Leithead, he walked to Selkirk to secure the services of the drummer and fifer there for the 'rebel' party during the 1809 Common Riding. He is probably the Peter who had a child John with Jane Paterson in Wilton in 1794. The death of his illegitimate grandchild was recorded in 1816. Robert (15th C.) owner of the lands of Ruecastle. He had a sasine for the lands according to the Exchequer Rolls of 1471, with his name given as 'Roberto Flesware'. He was succeeded by his son Thomas. Robert (d.c.1492) son of Thomas. He inherited the lands of Ruecastle (in Bedrule) in 1470/1. Robert 'Hob' (16th C.) recorded in 1561 when Robert, son of Walter Scott of Synton, promised to produce him at the next truce day at Coldstream. This was to answer the charge that he stole 3 horses from Steven Simpson in Berwick. He is recorded as 'Hob Flescheour'. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1717 he was recorded as tenant in Huntly. He married Agnes Renaldson and their children included Andrew (b.1706), William (b.1708), Andrew (again, b.1717) and Andrew (again, b.1723). The 1717 baptism took place in the Manse 'there being Examination that day'. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Hoscote in 1710. He probably married Bessie Scott in Roberton in 1708. His children included: Isobel (b.1710); and Helen (b.1714). Robert (d.bef. 1800) recorded as Robert 'Flecker' in 1800 when his wife Annie Scott died in Hawick. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded as a herd in 1796. His children included William (b.1794) and James (b.1796). Thomas (d.c.1470) inherited the lands of Ruecastle from his father Robert in the 5th year of the King's reign (i.e. either 1441 or 1464), 8 years after his father's death. Thomas (15th/16th C.) son of Robert, from whom he inherited the lands of Ruecastle. In 1497 he retained Ruecastle after having them held 'in wadset' to Janet Moscrop. He gave the lands to his son George in 1519, except for 'liferent'. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Minto and their son Walter was baptised in 1652. The witnesses were George (presumably a relative) and Robert Mathieson. Some of these children (with no mother's name recorded) may also be his: George (b.1631); Isobel (b.1634); Janet (b.1635); Margaret (b.1638); Manie (b.1642); James (b.1644); Janet (b.1646); and Margaret (b.1647). Thomas (d.1680) from Bedrule parish, where he has one of the earliest surviving gravestones. Walter (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Kedie in 1692 and their children included William (b.1696) and Janet (b.1698). William (15th C.) tenant in 'le crug', which could be 'Crook' near Hawick. His name is given as 'William flegiar' when he failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493; he appears right after 4 Routledges who are connected with the lands of Trows near Crook. He was also called in 1494/5 and again failed to appear. William (17th C.) resident of Castleside in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He may be the William who (along with George) witnessed a baptism for John in 1690. He is probably the William who in 1694 (along with Andrew) witnessed a baptism for John Cuthbertson and Isobel (who was surely related). William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Borthwickshiels in 1721, 1723, 1725, 1727 and 1729. He may have married Isobel Smail in Roberton in 1722. His children included: Walter (b.1721); Margaret (b.1723); Mary (b.1725); Andrew (b.1727); William (b.1729); and Margaret (b.1731). He may have been brother of Adam who was at Borthwickshiels at the same time (formerly spelled 'Flechar', 'Fleggear', 'Flegiar', 'Fleigar', 'Fleschar', etc., as well as sometimes 'ffletcher' and variants).

the Fletcher (thu-fle-chur) n. reputedly the sole survivor of Selkirk's men, who returned from Flodden with an English flag and cast it down. The 'Casting of the Colours' is the ceremonial re-enactment of this at Selkirk Common Riding every year. Whether there is any veracity to the story is unclear, and there is a contradictory version involving a Town Clerk called Brydon.

flewn (floon) pp. flown – 'she's never been abroad or flewn onywhere', 'It has flewn away' [GW], ''The nest's flewn' (= young ones have taken wing' [GW] (cf.the older flown).

the Flex (thu-fleks) n. farm on the northern side of the road between St. Leonard's and the Slitrig, and a name for that general area. The name is old, with a 'Richard de Flex' of Roxburghshire signing the Ragman Rolls in 1296, and Alexander of Flex witnessing a charter in 1357/8. It was included in a list of lands claimed by the English Crown in c.1380. Alexander Gledstains held the lands in the early 15th century, with a confirming charter in 1458, but had to yield them to William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1464/5 following a case before the Justiciary South of the Forth. William Douglas had a sasine for these lands (along with Kirkton Mains) immediately following; this was done at the 'principale messuagium', i.e. main dwelling. In the charter for the Barony of Hawick in 1511 these lands were listed among those held by the Baron 'in property'. James Scott of Flex is recorded in 1556. The lands were among those inherited by James Douglas in 1572 along with the Barony of Hawick and listed among the property of the Baron in 1594. In a land valuation of 1627 it is listed as 'estimat to 100 merks in stok, parsonage 2 bolls, vicarage 5 lbs'. A charter for the land was given to John Gledstains in 1653, when it was described as 'extending to five merks, old extent', and it was probably the main residence for the Gledstains of Whitlaw. It was still valued at 5 merks (of old extent) when inherited by Francis Gledstains of Whitlaw in 1672. John Stoddart was listed there among the poor of Hawick Parish in 1694 and Robert Stoddart was there in 1695. William Lillico was herd there in 1700. Walter Martin was there in at least 1700–02. William Henderson was smith there in at least 1702–09 and Francis was also smith in at least 1702–04. John Davidson was tenant there in at least 1718–22 and Archibald Paterson in 1716–19. William Hill was a weaver there in 1720. Anne Stothart was there in 1723. John Thomson was there in 1726. John Irvine was tenant in 1741, with John Cavers and John Goodfellow also there. James Reid and William Scott were there in 1743. Robert Boyd purchased the farm in 1751 and in 1753 march stones were laid out along the burnside to mark the boundary with the Common. John Scott was 'residenter' there in 1764. John Laing lived there in the late 18th century, and William Eliott Lockhart in the late 19th. By 1788 the lands of Flex had been disjoined from those of Whitlaw, were valued at £144 10s 9d and were owned by Mrs. Elliot of Borthwickbrae; it had the same value and owner in 1811. William Scott was there from at least 1799 and was also recorded 'at Flex' in 1811. Henry Scott Riddell also lived here for several years, walking 9 miles to preach at Teviothead. In about 1874 it was recorded being owned by Allan Eliott Lockhart. The Cornet and followers come back to Hawick this way after the 'Orderin o the Curds an Cream'. A fanciful tradition states that an underground passage led from the farmhouse to Goldielands Tower. J.P. Alison designed a house (or alterations perhaps) in 1896. An oval-shaped hollowed stone found there is in the Museum – 'To Flex and Wulliestruther, St. Leeonards, Haggisha', And Hawick there in the middle, The centre o' them a' ' [WL] (note that it is usually referred to as 'the Flex', rather than just 'Flex'; also spelled 'Flecks', 'Flexis' and other variants; it is 'Flex' in 1296, 'Fleckes' in 1304, 'Flexis' in 1458, 'Flekkis' in 1464/5 and 1511, 'Flex' in 1514, 'Flekkis' in 1559 and 1572, 'Flekis' in 1594 and 1615, 'Flexs' in 1700, 1707 and 1709 and 'Flexes' in 1717; it is marked 'Flecks' on Blaeu's 1654 map and 'Flax' on the Buccleuch survey of in 1718; the origin of the name is obscure, with the 'x' ending suggesting that it may not have been meant as a plural, although 'fleck' is a Scots word for a cattle pen made of hurdles).

Flex (fleks) n. Alexander (14th C.) recorded in 1356 when ordered by Edward III to be released from the Tower of London. This was because he had promised not to communicate with 'the enemy in Scotland'; he was recorded as 'Alexander de Flex a Scotsman'. In 1357 he was 'Alexander Fleckes' on a panel of inquisition held in Roxburgh. He was witness to a charter granting the lands of Altonburn to the Kers in 1357/8; all of the other men were from Roxburghshire, and so presumably these were the lands near Hawick. Probably the same 'Alexandro de ffleckys' witnessed a charter for lands in Lessuden being granted to Melrose Abbey in about 1370. A document of c.1380, listing lands claimed by England (following the truce), includes 'the lands of Flex which were Alexander Flex's, with his lands in Hawyk'. In 1361 he was on another panel of inquest in Roxburgh, relating to Nether Crailing. He must have been related to the earlier Richard. Richard (13th C.) recorded as being 'de Flex' in Roxburghshire when he signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. His seal shows a crescent enclosing a star (suggesting a connection with the Scotts perhaps) and the name 'S'RICARDI DE FLECHIS'. He was also on a jury in 1304 at Dumfries (made up of men from Dumfriesshire and Roxburghshire) to decide on the privileges claimed by Robert Bruce, Earl of Carrick (later King); he was there 'Richard del Fleckes'. His lands were presumably those at the Flex, near Hawick.

Flex Back Burn (fleks-bawk-burn) n. another name for Acreknowe Burn (it is so described in the 1767 description of the Common).

the Flex Brae (thu-fleks-brā) n. another name for the road leading from St. Leonard's past Flex farm down to the Slitrig.

Flex Burn (fleks-burn) n. stream running from Wulliestruther down to the Slitrig.

Flex Lodge Park (fleks-loj-pawrk) n. name of the field on Hawick Common to the north-west of the Flex farm.

Flex Mairch East (fleks-mārch-eest) n. enclosure on Hawick Common Moor to the east of Williestruther cottage.

Flex Mairch West (fleks-mārch-west) n. field on Hawick Common to the east of Williestruther Loch and south of the field called 'Flex Mairch East'.

the Flex Stakes (thu-fleks-stāks) n. race run at the Common Riding. An amount of £500 was left by James Elliot (d.1923), farmer of the Flex, with the interest to be run for yearly.

fley (flā, flī) v., poet. to scare, frighten, put to flight, make flee – 'Peur man! silly man! thou's sic a fleyed thing! Wey, what is thou so fleyed o', Jack?' [JTe], 'And whiles a wee bit prayer began, To fley away the ghaists and witches' [JT], 'He was fley'd oot o' his wuts' [GW] (cf. flei).

fley see flei

flicher (fli-chur) n., arch. a flake (also flicht and flichter).

flicht (flicht) n., arch., poet. flight – '... Ahint slee Reynard in his flicht Ower hill an' heath' [JJ], flicht (flicht) n., arch. a flake (of soot or snow), a small speck (e.g. in porridge or other food), a mote of dust – '... where yin braiths God's air clear an no suddlt wui suitty flicht' [ECS] (also flicher and flichter).

'... The gems that whirl in crazy flicht Maun end in draiglin' lifeless mud' [WP].

Flicht (flicht) n. former name for an area in Liddesdale, south-east of Castleton, close to the Border. It is now marked by 'Flight's Moss' on the Ordnance Survey map, although the area around the farm 'The Flatt' near Kershopefoot may also be meant. It is recorded as 'Flygh' in the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale, with a value of 20 shillings. The farm of 'Hieflycht' is listed in 1541, with a value of 3 pounds and tenanted by Martin Nixon. Matthew and John Nixon were there in 1544. Hob Elliot of Thorlieshope was 'in Flict' in 1587/8 when held in ward with the Laird of Balwearie. The eastern part was inherited by William Elliot of Dinlabyre in 1667 (and apparently again in 1691), having earlier been held by his great-grandfather William of Hartsgarth. John Wilson was tenant there in 1694 and James Lamb also a resident. In the 1718 survey of Scott of Buccleuch lands it appears to be combined with Kirndean and Clintwood. Robert Robertson was shepherd there in 1797. It is marked on Mercator's 1595 map of Scotland as 'Flightes cha.' and on other roughly contemporary maps as 'Flightes cast', suggesting there was confusion over whether there was a chapel or a castle there. It is probably the 'Flygh superior' listed as a 36-shilling land. The remains of a farmstead are located near the head of the Boghall Burn. The New Statistical Account mentions 2 'camps' on the farm, one round and the other square (it is 'Flycht' in 1516, 'Fleght' in 1544 and 'Flight' in 1694; it is 'Flicht' on Gordon's c.1650 map, while Blaeu's 1654 map shows 'East Flicht' and 'West Flicht', with 'Flicht's Fell' above, while it is still marked on Stobie's 1770 map and is labelled as a ruin on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

flichter (flich-tur) v., arch., poet. to flutter, to fly about lightly (as snow) – 'He little ken'd my heart was flight'ring fain. My winsome lad! O gin ye war my ain!' [CPM], '... an the flichterin burdies daibbelt an dookeet' [ECS], 'The broun leaves flichtered crinklin' Wi' the first soft flecks o' snaw' [WL].

flichty (flich-tee) adj., arch. flighty – '... proving yet again that it's no' the weemen-folk that's flichty!' [DH].

flid (flid) n. a flood – 'Oor hames are hie, we ken nae flude ...' [JoHa], '... And calm'st the raging, roaring fluid, When dashing wild' [RDW], 'The neist big flude 'ill show them fun' [WNK], '... shurelie in the fludes o' grit waters thaye sallna cum nie untill him' [HSR], 'For as in the days that wer afore the fluid ...' [HSR], 'Oo've a hist'ry thrae the Fluid Oo've a Moat where Druids stuid' [TK], 'Through fire and fluid the real auld gutter bluid Aye circled roond the auld green Moat' [TK], v. to flood – 'A says 'What er oo gaun ti dae now?', cos it was fliddin virtually the whole road ...' [IA] (also spelled 'fluid' and 'flude' and probably formerly pronounced flūd).

fliddin (fli-din) n. a flooding – 'The fluidin's gey bad aa the watergate lang, – I've a fine pair o' towels, as cheap as they're strang!' [WL].

the Flid Merk (thu-flid-merk) n. name sometimes used for the plaque at Towerdykeside, marking the level of the Slitrig flood of 1846. The level was marked annually by James Smith, Cornet that year, and a painter to trade. The plaque was placed there by him and his friends in 1902, with the inscription 'Flood Mark July 1846'.

flids (flidz) n., pl. the Teviot floods every few years, with signficant floods in 1796, 1806, 1846, 1926, 1938, 1948, 1953, 1955, 1963, 1977, 2005 (twice, the October one being the worst in living memory), 2015 (with 600 people being evacuated from their homes), 2020 (with the collapse of the Bridge Hotel), etc. A record of 1782 notes damage to the bridges along the Mosspaul to Haremoss Turnpike (essentially the A7). Dramatic floods at Minto are reported in 1783 and 1789, and a torrential rain-storm in 1806. The flood of November 1938 swept away the Victoria Bridge and the Mansfield Bridge. The Slitrig can also rise rapidly, and perhaps even more dramatically. The most infamous such event was the Great Flid of August 1767, when the river rapidly rose 22 feet (about 6.5 m) above its normal level, sweeping away many houses, as well as the old Corn Mill, and drowning 2 people. The Teviot flood of early 1796 (described as the 'ice-fllod of 1795 by J.A.H. Murray) carried away part of the burial ground at Hassendean. Sir Walter Scott describes the flood of 1806, when the lower floor of Minto House was filled with water and trees and livestock sailed past his own house. This flood also devastated Rulewater, particularly at Bonchester Brigend. The 1806 flood was also bad around Denholm, sweeping away the bridge over the Dean Burn, and removing the remains of the burial ground at Hassendean. The high flood of 29th July 1846 (the Slitrig Flig, sometimes also called the Great Flood) swept away Slitrig Crescent footbridge and its level is marked by a brass plaque in Towerdykeside about 1.5 m (5 feet) above pavement level. This flood followed a tremendous thunder storm starting between 7 and 8 o'clock, with the water level rising steadily, the town bells being rung at midnight, and the level peaking at 14 feet above normal shortly afterwards. The Auld Brig was again blocked by debris and effectively dammed the Slitrig. Lynnwood Cauld and 2 bridges over the Slitrig were swept away. Walls, caulds, carts, trees, cattle, etc. were carried off. Silver Street became part of the river, water ran over the Tower Knowe and down the Mill Port and water flowed down the High Street as far as the Round Close, forming streams to the Teviot down several closes. The worst damage was to the businesses on the Sandbed. The Teviot also overflowed, causing great damage over a wider area, and sweeping away iron railings at the Haugh. There was similar damage in Teviotdale (with the haugh at Denholm being afterwards buried in several feet of sand), Rulewater (where the river was said to be 10–12 feet higher than normal and Hobsburn bridge was lost), the Slitrig valley Liddesdale (where some cottages were washed away) and elsewhere, with a rider drowning while returning from Langholm Common Riding. There was another severe flood in Liddesdale in July 1849, with Whitrope Toll House and stable washed away and water pouring down the main street in Newcastleton. A stone in Newcastleton commemorates the flood there. In 1862 part of the Haugh flooded overnight on the Friday of the Common Riding, making conditions extremely wet for the Saturday races and games. In August 1901 flooding in some parts of the town was caused by intense rain following an unprecedented hailstorm, with hailstones larger than an inch in diameter, which caused damage to windows, crops and trees and killed many birds. The year 1948 also saw a major flood throughout the Borders, about which there is a book, 'The Great Borders Flood of 1948' by Lawson Wood. The Teviot's highest flow rate (since recording began in 1963) was 142.4 m^3/s on 17th February 1997. The floods of early 2020 washed away part of Bridge House and devastated Newcastleton – 'On Hawick burst the flood's resistless sway, Plough'd the paved streets, and tore the walls away, Floated high roofs, from whelming fabricks torn; While pillar'd arches down the wave were borne' [JL].

Flight see Flicht

flinders (flin-durz) n., pl., poet. splinters, smithereens – 'The moon was clear, the day drew near, The spears in flinders flew, But mony a gallant Englishman Ere day the Scotsmen slew' [T], '... The next chain'd dore that they came at, They gard it a' in flinders flee. With my fa ding, &c.' [CPM], '... he sall saufe the childer o' the needie, an' sall brik in flinders the oppresser' [HSR].

Flintoff (flin-tof) n. Butler (18th C.) dancemaster, who must have travelled around the Borders towns. He was recorded using the Town House in Jedburgh for dance lessons. In 1785 he is 'Mr Flintiff (teacher of dancing)' who paid the Hawick Council for renting the Town House for 2 months. In 1787 his school in Hawick was taken over by a Mr. Turnbull. In 1769 in Oxnam Parish he married Ann Rutherford and they had children John, Walter, Mary, Archibald, Susanna and Thomas Winterup (also written 'Flintiff' and 'Flintuff').

flird (flird) n., arch. a flimsy and poor piece of fancy dress, anything insubstantial – 'A thin flird' [JoJ], pl., poet. vanities, vain finery – 'Let manly worth doff the flyrds of folly' [HSR] (also written 'flyrd').

flird (flird) v., poet. to flirt, move about restlessly (use by James Ruickbie).

flisk (flisk) v., arch., poet. to frolic, caper, frisk – 'There, often seen in other days, The fairies flisked a thousand ways ...' [AD], n., arch. a caper, flick, whisk.

flit (fli', flit) v. to move house, remove from one place to another, change one's dwelling place – '... did wairne him ... to flit and remove fra the haill foirsidis landis ...' [SB1624], 'He must not sell any of the straw, hay or dung from the farm and his servants must flit on the agreed date' [SPB1773], 'The Prince of Wales, he Regent is, his father's throne to sit, For that's the way the world goes, – the aged they must flit' [BY], '... similar penalties were imposed on bachelors of a certain number of years standing, on ministers who did not flit, ...' [DMW], 'Oo'll beide i this hoose ti Whussenday, an than oo'll flit' [ECS], '... But they cam' and condemned it, and garred mei flit' [DH], 'There's flitting east, there's flitting west, Their rents are raised anew' [WH], flitten (fli-tin) pp., arch. scolded, chided (past participle of flyte, noted by E.C. Smith).

flittin (fli'-in) n. a house removal, formerly applied to the moving of farm workers at Whitsuntide – '... the spinning wheel, ... was an indispensable top-piece to the bride's home-going flitting' [JAHM], 'There's flittings east, there's flittings west, Their rents are rais'd anew ...' [WH], 'A sei there's a flittin next door', 'At the fit o the brae a flitteen was gaun on' [ECS].

float-whey (flō'-whā) n., arch. a dish made by boiling whey, particularly from ewe's milk – 'Flot quhaye, a common dish in the pastoral districts of Scotland, formed by boiling the whey after it is expressed from the cheese curds, with a little meal and milk, when a species of very soft curd floats at the top' [JL] (also called whey-brose).

Flockhart (flok-hawr') n. William (16th C.) farmer at Hawthornside. 'Williame Flockartis barne and yaird' are listed in the 1562 Baronial dispute in Feu-Rule.

flocks (floks) n., arch. waste wool or cotton used for stuffing mattresses and furniture – 'Lift the tyke, that's filled wi' flocks ...' [IJ].

Flodden (flo-din) n. battle of 9th September 1513, the Scots being led by King James IV, and Henry VIII's English by Thomas Howard, Earl of Surrey. The motivation was to divert some of the English troops away from their French campaign. However, the battle was disastrous for the Scots, with Surrey bringing his forces in behind them, making retreat back to Scotland nearly impossible once things started to go badly. The battle commenced about 4 p.m. and went on into the night. Eventually James was dead, along with 1 archbishop, 4 abbots, 12 earls, 17 lairds, perhaps 400 knights and as many as 10,000 others. Borderers under Huntly and Hume played a significant role and suffered huge losses. Sir William Douglas and most of the Hawick men were also killed. One exception was John Chisholme, who returned with the family pennon, although his brother was killed (the spearhead of the pennon was displayed at a Museum exhibition in Hawick in 1866). In the wake of Flodden the Borders was left with almost no defence against the ravages of Surrey and Dacre – 'Sons of heroes slain at Flodden! Met to ride and trace our common' [JH], 'Scotia felt thine ire, O Oden! On the bloody field of Flodden ...' [JH], 'Green Flodden! on thy blood-stain'd head Descend no rain nor vernal dew; But still thou charnel of the dead, May whitening bones they surface strew!' [JL], 'In days of yore at Flodden's fatal field, The Hawick heroes cried they would not yield' [MP], '... I knew I had stayed from Flodden, and I wish that I were dead' [RSC], 'When the grief that flowed from Flodden Had assuaged its keenest pain ...' [TK], 'When our life looks at its Floddens, where cherished dreams lie low, And big, brave hopes, like burghers dead, are smitten by the foe' [JYH]. A sword said to have been found at Flodden was presented to the Archæological Society in 1856. A memorial plaque was built into the wall on the steps leading to St. Mary's Kirk in 2013. A list of high-ranking Scotsmen who fell at Flodden is included in Patrick Abercromby's 'Martial Achievements of the Scots Nation' (1808), an amended list by Robert White appeared in 'Archæology Æliana' in 1861 and another in 'The Scottish Antiquary' in 1899. Among the noblemen and landowners with local connections who were slain at the battle are: William, Lord Borthwick (possibly); Robert, son of Robert Chisholme of that Ilk; George Douglas, Master of Angus; Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig; Robert Elliot of Redheugh; Robert Erskine of Synton, Earl of Mar; John Hay, 2nd Lord Yester; Adam Hepburn, 2nd Earl of Bothwell; Sir David Home of Wedderburn; John Murray of Blackbarony; Sir Alexander Scott of Hassendean (possibly); John Scott of Haining; Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley; James Stewart of Traquair; and John Stewart of Minto (perhaps).

Flodden Field (flo-din-feeld) n. site of the Battle of Flodden, west of the River Till, near Branxton, about 6 miles from Coldstream, in Northumberland. The site was known as 'Flodden' in Scottish records, but was often Twiselhaugh in early English documents. The precise locations of the encampments and engagments are not certain. Many of those killed were buried at St. Paul's church in Branxton. A large memorial cross was erected at the battle site in 1910 – 'At Flodden field our fathers fought it ...' [AB], 'With dauntless hearts, unknown to yield; In slow procession round the pile Of heaving corses moves each shadowy file, And chaunts in solemn strain the dirge of Flodden field' [JL], 'Iron wills that nane can turn, Hearts that canna yield, Victory at Otterburn! Death on Flodden field!' [JBS], 'O Flodden Field, O Flodden Field, Ma heart is wae for thee' [JEDM], 'To him whose patriot pride is stirred By memories of the past revealed, Though long resigned to fox and bird What spot so sad as Flodden Field!' [WHO], 'From those who fought on Flodden Field we shall not turn away' [DJ].

Flodden Field (flo-din-feeld) n. verses written by James Hogg in 1819, along with the song 'the Colour', both having the identical 'Teribus' chorus. 'Flodden Field' consists of 15 verses about the Battle of Flodden, and it thus effectively forms the first part of the Hornshole-inspired song. However, it has been seldom sung, in comparison to the familiar 'Teribus'. The first edition was published in Kelso, and the 2nd by Robert Armstrong in 1824, with several changes. The 3rd was also printed by Armstrong in 1829, but does not bear Hogg's name, while the 4th was printed by John Elder in 1836, and another by Kennedy's in 1837, the last before Hogg's death. The first 3 editions are all quite rare, and there may be no existing copy of the 1st. The song was revived for the 2013 Flodden quincentenary, sung by Michael Aitken.

the Flodden Memorial (thu-flo-din-me-mō-ree-ul) n. memorial on Flodden Field, erected in 1910. The Flodden Memorial Committee, representing both sides of the Border, was chaired by Sir George Douglas. The monument consists of a celtic cross of grey Aberdeen granite, 12 feet 6 inches high on a rough-hewn granite and concrete cairn. The inscription reads simply 'Flodden 1513. To the brave of both nations. Erected 1910'. It is located on Piper's Hill near Branxton.

flooered (floo-urd) adj., arch. scabby, losing wool (of sheep) – 'Flower'd, flour'd, adj. A term applied to sheep, when they begin to become scabby, and to lose their wool, Teviotd.' [JoJ].

the Flooer o Rankleburn (thu-floor-ō-rang-kul-burn) n. nickname of Mary Scott.

The Flooers o the Forest (thu-floo-urz-ō-thu-fo-rist, -flow-) n. ancient song whose words exists in 3 separate versions, written by Mrs. Patrick Cockburn (Alison Rutherford), Jean Elliot (of Minto) and Mrs. John Hunter. The tune is recorded in the early 17th century and may not originally have had words. It is also unclear whether the song originally had a connection with the battle of Flodden. Jean Elliot's version of the words made the song a lament for the death of James IV and other Scotsmen at Flodden. It was published anonymously, and only identified with Elliot later. In Selkirk this version is known as 'the Liltin', and the tune is played after the Casting of the Colours. Alison Cockburn's lyrics appear to be about a financial crisis, and were probably written earlier than Elliot's (although not published until 1765). The song was immensely popular in the 19th century, being regularly sung in Hawick at the Colour Bussing and similar events. The tune is played internationally at funerals and remembrance ceremonies, where it is often referred to simply as 'the Lament' – 'I've heard the lilting, at the yowe-milking, Lasses a-lilting before dawn o' day; But now they are moaning on ilka green loaning; 'The Flowers of the Forest are a' wede away' ' [T].

the Flooer o Yarrow (thu-floor-ō-yaw-rō, -flowr-) n. nickname for Mary Scott, popularised in a ballad of the same name. She was from Dryhope Tower and married Walter Scott of Harden about 1576. She was mother of 6 sons and at least 4 daughters. It is also said that she raised another boy who was found in the spoil from a Cumberland raid (like 'Whaup o the Rede), and grew to be a poet, composing some of the Border ballads – ' 'Tis Yarrow's fairest flower, who through the gloom Looks wistful for her lover's dancing plume' [JL], '. . . Amang them aa there was nane to marrow Auld Harden's leddy, the 'Flooer o' Yarrow' ' [WL].

flooery (floo-ree, floo-u-ree) adj. flowery – 'And yonder is the Lover's Lane And Lynnwood's floo'ry braes' [GD], 'Fornent iz, athort the fer seide o Teiot's flooery vale . . . ' [ECS], 'Now a'm no yin for floory talk, Or prone ti airs n' graces. A'll no pretend ti suffer fools, A' say it ti their faces' [IHS/GoM].

Floors Castle (flōrz-kaw-sul) n. castle near Kelso, built by John, 1st Duke of Roxburghe, between 1718 and 1740. It was designed by William Adam, and extended around 1839 by William Playfair. It is the home of the Duke and Duchess of Roxburghe, and the largest inhabited house in Scotland. It includes collections of art, porcelain, taxidermy and tapestries. James II was killed here when a cannon exploded in 1460, and it was 'Greystoke' in the Tarzan film of 1984. The entire estate is enclosed by a continuous high wall, with a few lodge houses, and contains terraced woodland and open parkland (also formerly 'Fleurs'; the origin of the name is probably just Old English for 'floor' or 'ground' and first appears as 'le fluris' in 1516).

floory docken (floo-ree-do-kin) n., arch. goosefoot, Chenopodium Bonus Henricus or Chenopodium album (named for the apparently powdery leaves).

He became Bishop of Glasgow in 1202, but resigned in 1207 before he was consecrated. He was also Chancellor of Scotland. He died in Zeeland. His seal bore the figure of a young man seated at a lectern with a book, with a rod of office in one hand, and has the words 'SIGIL. FLOREN[TII GLAS]GUENSIS ELECTI'.

Florida (flo-ri-da) n. farm in Liddesdale, situated just before Old Castleton on the B6357. Between the house and the river lies an earthwork, possibly a homestead of mediæval date, which lies partially in woods and has been partly eroded by the river. The old house of Dykeraw lay somewhere to the east in what is now forest. John Turnbull and family were there in at least 1841–68. William Hislop was there in 1841 and John Scott and his family in 1851.

Flosh Burn (flosh-burn) n. stream joining the Leap Burn to form the Lang Burn near Langburnshiels, which then becomes the Slitrig. It is joined by Kiln Sike below Robert's Linn and had several other waterfalls on burns that join it from the east. It marks the start (or end) of the Catrail ('flosh' is an old Scots word for boggy ground).

Fodderlee (fo-dur-lee) n. farms and general area on the east side of the Rule valley between Hallrule and Billerwell. David Shiel was tenant there in 1567. The lands there were acquired by Adam French from Jedburgh Abbey in 1569 and were split into the East and West farms in the 17th century. The lands were recorded as part of the Lordship of Jedburgh in 1587. John Shiel was there in 1586/7. In 1643 Helen Turnbull held lands there valued at £80 and James Turnbull £180. It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. In 1678 the land tax on £100 was paid by Mark Turnbull and on £80 by 'the widow in fotherlie'. The lands (or perhaps just their superiority) were among those inherited by William Kerr of Abbotrule in 1680. Robert Kerr of Fodderlee was first recorded in 1685, and appears to have owned half of the lands. Mark Turnbull was tenant in the late 1600s. John Turnbull, John Kerr and George Scott were recorded as tenants there in 1694. The east lands passed to Robert Kerr's daughter Mary (who also married a Kerr) and then grandson Andrew. The lands were valued at £80 in the 1740s. In 1757 it passed to Robert Thomson, whose mother was Margaret Kerr. Andrew Oliver, 'Fodderleebirks', is recorded in 1784. 'Fodderlee, Fodderlee-bank head, and Fodderlee-birks' are recorded in 1795 as parts of Hobkirk that are closer to Bedrule Kirk than their own kirk; these same lands were among those moved to Hobkirk when Abbotrule was suppressed. James Davidson was tenant there in 1797 and Thomas Davidson lived there in 1799. Andrew and Henry Halliday were there in 1801. The modern map shows Old Fodderlee, Easter Fodderlee and Wester Fodderlee, this last being closest to where the Fodderlee Burn joins the Rule Water. A report in 1836 describes how a cairn was removed near there 'near to a place where tradition says a battle had been fought' (it is 'Fodderlie' in 1567, 'Foderly' in 1569, 'Fodderley' in 1587 and 1588, 'Fodderlie' in 1643, 'Fotherlie' 1643 and 1670, 'fotherlie' in 1678, transcribed 'Foderlae' in 1680, 'Fotherlie' in 1690, 1694 and 1707 and 'Fatherlee' in 1797; it is marked as 'Fodderly' on Pont's c.1590 manuscript map, 'Fodderlie' and 'Foddirlie' on Gordon's c.1650 maps, and 'Fodderlie' on Blaeu's 1654 map; also written Fotherlie, see also Auld Fodderlee, Easter Fodderlee and Wester Fodderlee).

Fodderleebankheid (fo-dur-lee-bawngk-heed) n. former farm near the modern Easter Fodderlee. It is shown on Stobie's 1770 map. William Hall was living there in 1774 when it is 'Foderly bank head'.

Fodderleebirks (fo-dur-lee-birks) n. former farm near Fodderlee in Abbotrule Parish. It is marked on Stobie's 1770 map near the site of the present Wester Fodderlee. Andrew Oliver was recorded there in 1784.

Fodderlee Burn (fo-dur-lee-burn) n. stream flowing into the Rule Water from the south, past Abbotrule. A memorial plaque by the road marks the site of the Sclaterford, where there was a skirmish between a large English raiding party and some local forces in 1513 (also spelled 'Fodderlie' etc.; the origin is probably simply 'the fodder meadow').

fog (fōg) n., arch. moss, particularly as used for thatching or for packing between slates – 'Item for leading the sclates ... Item for fogg gathering and carrying' [PR1713], '... shall not be allowed either fog or fuel, neither to cast, win, or lead peats, turfs, or divots, or lead clay or mortar out of the Common ...' [JW1719], 'Disposition by the said George Langlands, ... of all and haill a part of the lands of Howlands, as therein described and bounded, with the liberty of fog and seal in the commonty of Wilton' [DCW1742], 'The fog or moss, which grows on the edge of the spring, and is sprinkled with the water, is about eight inches high' [RAB] (also written 'fogg'; cf. foggit).

foggage (fo-geej) n., arch. winter grazing, the second growth after the hay has been cut – 'They are supported during the winter by the foggage and coarse hay ...' [RAB], '... then the lambs were put to the charge of the Town Herd of Hawick ... and continued on the muir until the stubble foggage' [C&L1767], '... a body can finnd the praicious scents o field an foggeege' [ECS].

foggie (fo-gee) adj., arch. mossy, covered in moss or lichen 'We've speel'd upon its foggie stem, an' dern'd amang its green ...' [JoHa], – '... an clappeet masel doon a meenint on ov a foggie bank' [ECS] (also 'foggy'; cf. foggit).

foggit (fo-gee', -gi') pp., arch. covered in moss, moss-grown – 'The lambs loup as light by the aul' foggit thorn, The rose blooms as bright i' links o' the burn' [JoHa] (also foggie).

foggy bee (fo-gee-bee) n., arch. a small yellow bee, the carder bee, bombus muscorum – '... And harried the byke o' the wild foggy bee' [JT].

fog-hoose (fog-hoos) n., arch. a small house, built or lined with moss – 'Jamie sat in the fog-house with a red pirnie on ...' [RM].

foin (foin) pp., poet. to thrust in fencing – 'His mode of fighting to rehearse Is a smiple thing; He foined and lounged, and ever leapt, As hopping in the ring' [JTe].

foir (foir) adj., arch. fore, situated in front – '... all hennis, cockis, and caponnes, be cuttit and schorne in the wing, and all young foulis be cuttit in the foir toe ...' [BR1655].

foir (foir) adj., arch. word of unknown meaning, possibly an error for 'feir', meaning in good health – 'The quhilk day, Adam Gowanlocke in Hoitt, having apprehendit ane foir meir, quhyt mainet and quhyt taillet ...' [BR1641].

fold (fōld) adj., arch. made of turf, earthen – '... there was a fold dyke built on the Common by the possessors of Fenwick, which dyke was levelled by order of the Magistrates and rendered useless' [C&L1767] (probably an anglicised version of fail).

Folepul (fōl-pul) n. former lands in Liddesdale recorded on a rental roll from about 1376, and listed under the 'Foresta' section. They are valued at 40 pence. Their location is unknown (this could be a transcription error, although it is unclear for what). It could be the same place listed as 'Fopillis' in the 1541 roll, when it was valued at 2 shillings, but vacant. It was possibly related to Fawhope Knowe.

folk (fōk) n. people, mankind, inhabitants, one's family – 'Thou hauds folk doon that weel might rise . . . ' [JoHa], 'Some folk think a' other folk gowks . . . ' [FL], 'Ee canna pass keind – it belangs eer foak, man!' [ECS], '. . . an gliffin auld folk an bairns, baith' [ECS]. The population in 1851 was about 9000. Hawick's present population is around 16,000, and the recorded peak was in 1891, with a total of 19,204 people – 'But I like auld Hawick, and her folks I like, Her men and maidens free' [FH], 'Hear me, ye Folk o' Teviotdale, I'm here ti tell nae flatterin' tale' [WP] (sometimes written 'foak'; cf. the older fouk and the poetic fock).

Forbes (fōrbz) n. Archibald (1869–1937) son of John, he was born at Wilton Lodge. He took over the running of the nurseries business from his father in 1909. He was also President of the Hawick Horticultural Society. He married Eleanor Snowdon Currie and their children included John (1900–61). Sir Arthur (1623–95) 1st Earl of Granard, son of Sir Arthur of Castle Forbes in Ireland. He commanded a Royalist Scottish force in the 1650s. In December 1653 he came down from the north with 80–100 men and with Andrew Kerr of Sunlaws and Chatto as prisoner, and stopped at Borthwickbrae. Pursued by an English Commonwealth force, they were easy to follow in the snow and there was a skirmish at Philip in the upper Borthwick valley. The English were victorious, but Forbes managed to escape, apparently recuperating in a cottage near Glasgow. He later fought for the loyalist cause in the north in 1654, and was captured at Glenlyon. He returned to Ireland, was made Earl and joined the cause of William III. He is buried in Sligo. John (1841/2–1909) proprietor of the Buccleuch Nurseries on Slitrig Crescent. Born in Aberfeldy, Perthshire, he came to Hawick in 1867 as gardener at Wilton Lodge for David Pringle, later becoming tenant of the gardens. He started up his own business in 1870 at the Dovemount Nurseries, then after about ten years moved into larger premises on Slitrig Crescent, the land granted by the Duke of Buccleuch. Named the Buccleuch Nurseries, they became famous throughout Britain, and were a prominent sight from the railway. The gardens received a royal warrant and the name was changed to the Royal Nurseries in 1907. It then became a private limited company in 1908. He won many awards for his floral displays. He was Councillor for Slitrig Ward for 3 years, and long involved with the running of St. Andrew's Church. John (1900–61) son of Archibald and grandson of John, who founded Forbes Nursery. He married Maggie Toshack (1897–1980) and Lizzie Addison McEwan (1898–1940). His children included Archibald ('Archie', 1928–87). He was Master of Lodge 111 in 1929/30 and President of the Callants' Club in 1938. Lillias Magdalene nee Scott (1918–2013) daughter of composer Francis George Scott, she was born in Glasgow. She was known as a singer, and published poetry over about a 75 year period, some of it in Scots. An autobiographical collection, 'View from the Bench: My Life in Poetry', appeared in 2011. She firstly married composer Erik Chisholm, and after his death married clarinettist John Forbes. William (19th/20th C.) Schoolmaster at Hermitage. He wrote 'Hermitage Castle: its ruins and historical and traditional associations' (1899), which was published in Hawick.

Ford (fōrd) n. Andrew (18th/19th C.) recorded as tenant in Lilliesleaf Mill in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. Brian (1936/7–) raised in Teviot Road, he attended Trinity and Hawick High Scools. First working as a plumber and frameworker, he did National Service with the Queen's Own Irish Hussars, where he excelled at rugby, shooting and boxing. He then worked in local knitwear mills, moving to a job in York in 1959, but soon returned to Hawick, working at several mills, including 20 years at Lyle & Scotts, then opening his own knitwear shops and finishing with a job at Hawick Hosiery. He married Helen Murray in 1960 and they had 3 children, Beverly, Brian and Graham. They mostly lived at Slitrig Cresecent. In 1983 he won the veterans' sprint at the New Year meeting at Meadowbank. He and his wife celebrated their diamond wedding anniversary in 2020. Mary Helen 'Helen' nee Murray (1941/2–2020) brought up in Allars Crescent, she attended Drumlanrig and Hawick High Schools. She started working as a collar linker at Turner & Rutherford's in 1957 and in 1960 married Brian. Their children are Beverley (b.1966), Brian (b.1968) and Graham (b.1970). After raising her family she returned to work at Glenhowe, retiring in 2004. She was involved with the Wilton Dean W.R.I. and the Bright-Eyed Daughters' Association, and was a great Common-Riding supporter. She served for many years as a Community Councillor and took up running at the age of 55. She and Brian celebrated their 60th wedding anniversary in 2020, but she succumbed to the coronavirus shortly afterwards. Her features are captured on the 'Return' statue at the Tower Knowe. W. Inglis (20th C.) 6th Secretary of the Congregational Kirk.

forepairt (fōr-pār') n., arch. the earlier portion of a period of time (noted by E.C. Smith).

the Foreraw see the Fore Raw the Fore Raw (thu-fōr-raw) n. row of pended tenements that stood on the south-east side (i.e. left hand side on the way up the hill) of what is now Drumlanrig Square. The entrance to William Lockie's Mill was there. It also once held the Teribus Arms and the West-end Mission (it is 'Front row' in Pigot's 1837 directory; presumably it was 'Fore' relative to St. Mary's Kirk, with the Back Row being further away).

Fore Raw (fōr-raw) n. Fore Row, name used for a row of houses in Wilton Dean on the 1841 census. By 1851 it was known as 'Front Row', and was numbered from 1 to 6. This referred to a block of houses on the north side of the Dean Road, where it meets the Overhall Road. The name distinguished it from Burn Row, which was lower down, and Upper Row, which was up the small track above the green. The names were probably never in general use and disappeared by the time of the 1861 census.

foresaid (fōr-sād) adj., arch. aforesaid, previously mentioned – 'This foresaid Valter Scot depairtit this life in Govdilandis in November ye zeir of God 1596 and vas (of age at his deth) 64' [MI1596], '. . . att the foresaid intimation all are to be warned to shun unnecessary converse with these persons or anie of them' [PR1724], n. above-mentioned person – '. . . the said Ann, Dutchess of Buccleugh, and her foresaids to call the said Minister, Elders and Heriters above mentioned . . . forest (fo-rist) n., arch. a preserve, a tract of land, often bare and hilly, upon which deer were traditionally hunted – '. . . 'Trees', retorted the gillie; 'wha ever heard o' trees in a forest?' ' [RB] (note, the former use of this word did not imply trees!).

Forest see Forrest

forestair (fōr-stār) n., arch. an outside staircase at the front of a building – 'A conspicuous feature of many of the dwellings was the 'out' or 'forestairs' projecting onto the streets' [V&M]. Many of the examples on the High Street were removed around 1721 when the streets were paved, and more were removed by order of the road trustees in 1749, with the Council paying more than £50 to have the work done. One of last sets in Hawick was removed in 1884 when the old Town Hall was demolished. Perhaps the last example is in St. Mary's Place – 'Paid expense of fore stairs, taken away by order of trustees, 55 18 1' [BR1792] (also ootstair).

forestall (fōr-stawl) v., arch. to buy goods before they reach market in order to resell them at a higher price – 'Thomas Howison, merchant, is fined for forestalling two bolis of beir from the Lady Newtoune, and ane from Gladstanes' [1699], 'Four Hawick fleshers are fined £40 Scots each for forestalling the sheep market, by buying of sheep and lambs, and instantly, for gain, reselling them to the butchers of Jedburgh' [BR1700].

forestaller (fōr-staw-lur) n., arch. someone who profits by buying up goods before they get to market in order to increase the price and resell them – '. . . except sick fynes and ammerciaments as sall be exacted off personnes, forstallers of the mercat of this burgh, and marcatting of unsufficient goods' [BR1670], 'Various persons are fined 'for breach of the proclamation of His Majesty's Privy Council, against regrating of victuals and forestallers' ' [JW1699] (also written 'forstaller').

the Forest Club (thu-fo-rist-klub) n. dining and coursing club, based around Selkirk, also sometimes known as the 'Ettrick Forest Club'. It was established in 1788 by 13 lairds of the Ettrick Forest, modelled on similar clubs in Edinburgh. Members met once a month (outside winter) in the County Hotel, Selkirk. Coursing was introduced in 1794 and lasted for 60 years. Sir Walter Scott (of Abbotsford) was a member. Michaela Reid wrote a history of the club in 2000.

forester (fo-res-tur) n. someone who manages a forest, specifically the keeper of a tract of land such as Ettrick Forest, also applied more generally to a huntsman – 'To wind a Horn they did not scorn, In the loftiest degree, Which made the Forrester conceive, They were better Keepers than he' [CWS].

Forester (fo-res-tur) n. Alan (16th C.) tenant of 'Syskett' in 1541. This was probably in the far south of Roxburghshire and he was probably related to the Foresters who possessed neighbouring lands. Andrew (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as the tenant of Ryleknowe, near the southern tip of Roxburghshire. Probably the same Andrew was also tenant of 'Avirholme' along with Lancelot. He was probably related to Simon, who was tenant of the nearby Burnfoot. George (18th/19th C.) married Agnes Easton in Wilton Parish in 1810. Henry (18th C.) farmer at Langraw in Castleton Parish according to the 1788–94 Horse Tax Rolls. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in a 1510 list of associates of Robert Elliot of Redheugh who received respite for their crimes. His name appears as 'Forestare'. In 1515/6 he was recorded in another remission to Robert Elliot of Redheugh and others, where he is listed as 'in Grenehauche'. This could be Greenhaugh in Northumberland, but seems more likely to be Greena in Liddesdale. In 1516 he was also part of the remission given to William Elliot of Larriston and his associates. James 'Rowie's Jamie' (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1603 among a gang of Elliots, Armstrongs and others who had raided 'Sewingdene' in 1601, stealing livestock and goods and injuring several people. He is listed being 'called Row's Jame' and may be related to Simon Elliot of Binks, whose servant was leader of the gang. John (c.1353–c.1428) cleric of Glasgow Diocese, perhaps originally from St. Andrews Diocese. He was likely related to Walter, also a priest. He was educated at Paris and was 'John Scotus' when he was on the committee for the English Nation in 1373/4 and he was a proctor in Paris, with Scottish students under him including John Leche. He held Strathbrock (now Uphall) Church in St. Andrews Diocese by 1385/6 when he was also granted a Canonry of Oyne in Aberdeen and was granted a canonry in Glasgow in 1389. He taught Canon Law in Paris, moved to Orleans, took a judicial position in Scotland, but was back at Paris from at least 1392. He was a Papal chaplain from 1395 and in that year had permission to hold 2 benefices. He was again on the committee of the English Nation and served as Receptor in 1399/1400, following a bout of the plague. In 1403 there was a request for a canonry of Moray or Brechin for him. He was Archdeacon of Glasgow 1409–14, following the death of Simon de Mandeville, but eventually resigned his claim in favour of George Borthwick, swapping it for the Prebend of Aberdour in Aberdeen. He was said to be in unlawful possession of a Prebend of Brechin in 1415/6. He is recorded as Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1418, although said to be holding this unlawfully after the death of James Watson, and he was passed over in favour of John Scheves, hence only holding the Archdeaconry for a couple of months. He was then granted Carstairs Prebendary and still held a canonry of Glasgow in 1425. There were other contemprary priests of the same name. John (16th C.) recorded in 1532 as 'Johny Forestar'. He is listed along with Sym (to whom he was surely related), Croziers and Elliots, who were the subject of a commission ordered by the King to capture them, for the killing of Thomas Dalgleish and Adam Turnbull in Teviotdale. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John 'Shake Buckler' (16th C.) listed among the Liddesdale men denounced as rebels in 1535 for a raid on the farm at Craik. His name is givn as 'John Forrestare, called Schaik-buklar'. His servant Ninian Gray is also listed, so he must have been a man of fair substance. John (16th C.) listed in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale as tenant of Greenhaughshaw. It seems reasonable to assume he was related to James in Greenhaugh (his son perhaps), and that he was related to the tenants of nearby farms with the same surbame, namely Alan, Andrew, Lancelot, Simon and William. John (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1602 as 'good-son' to Simon Armstrong of Whithaugh. This means he was either son-in-law or step-son of Simon, suggesting that either Simon has married a Forester or his daughter had. He was part of a group of about 20 Armstrongs and Elliots who attacked Hallrule, killing a shepherd there and stealing about 120 sheep. John (17th C.) resident at Hudshouse in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John of Stanegarthside (17th/18th C.) nephew of Nicholas, from whom he inherited 'Greina, Purviven and Burnemouth' in Liddesdale in 1693. Lancelot (16th C.) joint tenant of 'Avirholme', along with Andrew, in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. Robert of Stanegarthside (d.1598) buried at Staplegordon Church in Cumbria. He may be the 'Forster' of Stanegarthside who killed Williami Armstrong near where the Kershope Burn meets the Liddel. Simon 'Sim' (16th C.) recorded in 1532 as 'Symme Forestar'. He is listed along with Johnnie (to whom he was surely related), Croziers and Elliots, who were the subject of a commission ordered by the King to capture them, for the killing of Thomas Dalgleish and Adam Turnbull in Teviotdale. He may be the same as the tenant in Burnfoot in 1541. Simon (16th C.) tenant of Burnfoot (on the Tinnis Water) in southern Liddesdale, according to the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. He was probably related to Andrew and Lancelot, who possessed neighbouring farms. William (15th C.) held the benefice of Cavers Parish from about 1450. He could have been from the Torwood or perhaps Corstorphine branches of that family. He resigned Cavers in 1467, with the Pope issuing an edict for the appointment of the new priest, previous appointments (including presumably his) being made by the monks of Melrose. William (16th C.) recorded in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale as tenant of Bennetholm. He was probably related to the other contemporary Foresters. William (17th C.) listed at Harwood among 'The poor in Hauick Parioch' on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls (also written 'Forrester'; once interchangeable with 'Foster').

the Foresters (thu-fo-rees-turz) n. mutual aid society, once very active in Hawick. The Ancient Order of Foresters has its origins in the 18th century, and was established in its modern form in 1834. As an example of a 'friendly society; it was very important in providing a form of insurance for workers. Individual branches were known as 'courts', the Hawick one being 'Flower of Teviotdale', No. 5771. Office bearers would wear a sash and the organisation used to turn out in local parades. The Roll of Honour of local members who fell in the wars was formerly in Orrock Church Halls and is now in the Museum. John Halliday wrote an address to be spoken at the Annual Anniversary of Court Teviotdale – 'For arms, let them have friendship, love, and truth; And in the cause be eloquent each mouth, As advocates of peace, and exil'd mercy's barristers, And thus let them be call'd – The Order of Foresters' [JoHa].

the Foresters' Hall (thu-fo-rees-turz-hal) n. hall on O'Connell Street, run by the Hawick branch of the Foresters, occupying the lower floor beneath the British Legion, formerly being part of Johnstone's tea rooms. the Forkin Burn (thu-for-kin-burn) n. former name for a stream, recorded in an account of Roxburghshire in 1649. The description is that it 'begins 3 miles above the Falinshe and runs into Tiot at the said Falineshe'. It seems likely this is an early name for Limiecleuch Burn.

Forkins (for-kinz) n. farm south of Hobkirk, near where the Wauchope, Harwood and Catlee Burns meet to form the Rule Water, on the west side of the bridge. It was also formerly known as 'Forkins of Unthank'. There was once a blacksmith's there, and in the 17th century there was an inn at this location, in use until the early 19th century; its remains lie among trees on the east side of the bridge, near the entrance lodge to Wolfelee. It was formerly on the main route from Hawick to Newcastle, until the new road was built via Bonchester Bridge in about the 1820s; this was also part of a drove road. There was also a local police station there in the latter part of the 19th century. The lands were sold by Thomas Scott of Stonedge to William Elliot of Wolfelee in 1757. Thomas Mathieson was smith there in at least 1751–59. Walter Amos was wright there in the late 18th century and Richard Renwick was a labourer there in 1797. Andrew Amos was blacksmith there in 1851 (also called 'the Forkins' and sometimes written 'Forkings'; it was 'Forkens' on Stobie's 1770 map; the origin of the name is probably from the division in the river, rather than the road, but there are no early records of the name).

the Forkins (thu-for-kinz) n. name used for the area where the Hermitage Water meets the Liddel Water in Liddesdale.

Forkins (for-kinz) n. former farmstead in the upper Borthwick valley. It is marked on Ainslie's 1773 map, near where the Howpasley Burn joins, close to where the modern turns towards Craik.

forlane (for-lān) pp., poet. forgotten, set aside – 'The Lord redeims the saul o' his servents; an' nane o' thame that trust in him sall be forlaine' [HSR].

Forman (fōr-min) n. Sir John of Davine (d.bef. 1516) son of Nicholas. His brother Andrew held the Archbishopric and Primacy of Scotland, and was said to be one of the instigators for the Battle of Flodden. In 1502 he and his brother were granted the ward of the lands of Rutherford by James IV and he was one of the 'tutors' appointed to Helen, heiress of Rutherford. He was Sergeant Porter to James IV, and was knighted in 1503. In fact he married Helen Rutherford, who inherited the lands of Rutherford, Wells and Edgerston after the death of her brother Richard. Along with his wife, he was infefted in these lands by the King in 1505 and 1506. In 1504 he (when referred to as 'of Ruthirfurde') was pardoned for being an accessory to the murder of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey. He was represented by James Oliver in his lands of Edgerstone at the Justice Aire in Jedburgh in 1510. The lands of Rutherford, Wells and others were confirmed to him and his wife by James IV in 1511. He was one of the few Scots taken prisoner at the Battle of Flodden. He probably had a daughter who married William Gouraly of Kincraig. John (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1699 and 1702 for tailor Walter Riddell (both along with baxter John 'Weelands'). In 1705 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Michael Scot. In 1706 he married Margaret 'Weelands', who was also from Hawick Parish. Their son John was baptised in 1707, with witnesses William Aitkin and William Laing. It is recorded in 1711 that the 'half Ducatoon and twentie shillings Scots piece' that he 'pawnded' to guarantee his marriage had not been claimed and so was given to the poor fund. It is unclear whether this donation was simply the intent, or whether something happened to the couple in the intevening years. They had a son John in 1707. Maria Helen Campbell nee Fraser (1858–1947) daughter of Alexander Campbell Fraser, who was Professor of Logic and Metaphysics at Edinburgh University, she was born in Edinburgh. In Rosslyn Chapel in 1891 she married Robert. Taking the shootings at Borthwickshiels for several years, her husband purchased the estate in 1912, but died before they could move there in 1914. After WWI, she gave the funds for building the Forman Hall in Roberton, in memory of her husband and their great-nephew, who was killed at Flanders in 1917. She died in Roberton. Nicholas (d.1478/9) succeeded as Archdeacon of Teviotdale on the death of Patrick Hume in 1478. However, he died within only a few months, before he could be confirmed. Patrick (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1729 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker George Oliver. He married Agnes Turnbull and their children included: Patrick (b.1702); Agnes (b.1707); and Janet (b.1709). The witnesses in 1709 were glover John Scott and Patrick Angus. Robert Brodie (1845–1914) son of Adam, who was a Free Church minister in Fife, he worked for Liverpool shipping company Balfour-Guthrie, and lived in San Francisco for more than 20 years. He is one of the men who brought golf to the Liverpool area, winning the Spinks trophy of the Royal Liverpool Golf Club in 1871. In later life he rented Borthwickshiels for shooting for several summers and purchased it in 1912. However, he died just 2 weeks before he and his wife were due to move there in 1914. His wife funded the Forman Hall in Roberton, dedicated to his memory and that of her grand-nephew, D.N. Campbell Ross, who was killed in WWI. The Trust established in his name also gave money to Hawick Cottage Hospital in 1945, eventually resulting in a new outpatient unit being built, with the 1952 opening carried out by his nephew Campbell Forman (also sometimes written 'Foreman').

Forman Hall (fōr-min-hal) n. community hall in Roberton, situated approximately opposite the church. It was designed by J.P. Alison and built in 1922/3. It was funded by Mrs. M.H. Forman of Borthwickshiels in memory of her husband Robert, and also her great-nephew, Lt. Campbell Ross, who was killed at Flanders in 1917, commemorated on a plaque inside. It also contains a roll of honour for locals who fell in the Great War. It has been used for many different kinds of function and event, e.g. wedding receptions, dinners, W.R.I. meetings, youth club and yoga classes. The hall celebrated its centenary in 2023 (sometimes incorrectly written 'Foreman Hall').

formit (fōr-mee', -mi') pp. formed – 'The se is his, an' he mæde it; an' his han' formet the drye lan' ' [HSR].

fornenst (for-nenst) adv. opposite, against, in front of – 'Up yon cundy that opens fornenst tae the Plum' [??], 'Come wi mei ti Hobkirk kirkyaird and juist fornenst – guid auld Hawick word meanin opposite or in front o – the kirk door ee'll come on a heidstane . . . ' [IWL], 'The cadger whoa'd his powny cairt Fornenst the 'Pig and Sty' ' [WL] (also fornent).

fornent (for-nent, for-nen') adv., arch. in front of, opposite to, over, against – 'Use in a singular sense, in relation to marriage. 'Such a one is to be married'. 'Ay! wha fornent?' i.e. to whom' [JoJ], '. . . beeking fornent the sun' [??], '. . . croonin the braeheeds hich abuin Tweed an forenent bieldy Dryburgh' [ECS], 'Come up – the foroutin (fo-row-tin) prep., arch. without – '... the said landis of Quhitchester to be haldin of the said William ... foroutyn ony langer delay ...' [SB1470].

Forrest (fo-rist) n. Rev. Alexander of Huntlaw (d.c.1658) minister at Hassendean. He graduated from St. Andrews in 1603 and was ordained at Kailzie in 1613, then translated to Hassendean later in the same year. He was rebuked by the Presbytery in 1615 for 'receiving the gudwife of Sintoun to the communion, notwithstanding he understood she was ane contemner both of her awin min. (Mr Alex. Hog, Ashkirk) and of the Word out of his mouth' (whether this was an indication of religious dissent or a purely personal matter is unclear). He was one of the 55 ministers who signed the 'Liberties of the Kirk' protest to Parliament in 1617 and gave £20 towards building the library at the University of Glasgow in 1636. In 1626 there is a 'letter of deliverance' against him in favour of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe and Walter Scott of Ancrum, probably relating to a debt or disputed teinds. In 1633 he was owed £333 6s 8d for his stipend in the inventory of the deceased Earl of Buccleuch, as well as £9 12s for the communion. In 1649 he was 'invaded with a drawn sword' by one of his parishioners, Robert Hislop. In 1655 (although this date may be an error) his son was served heir to his lands of Huntlaw. He appears to have continued as minister at Hassendean until 1658 and died before 1665, when the Presbytery met to decide what payment was due to his son. He was recorded in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls (although probably deceased by then), among owners of lands that were then in Hassendean Parish, when he paid for lands valued at £66 13s 4d; this was Huntlaw, which remained with his family for another couple of generations. He married Margaret Clerk and their children included William of Huntlaw, and Alexander, who became minister at Kirkton. In 1665 his son William was served heir to his lands of Huntlaw. Archibald of Huntlaw (who rented Huntlaw to Thomas Turnbull of Knowe in 1703) was probably his grandson and Agnes, who married George Minto, was his great-granddaughter. Rev. Alexander (c.1622–83) son of Alexander, minister at Hassendean. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1642 and became minister at Kirkton in 1664. He remained minister there until his death, and sat on the local (Jedburgh Presbytery) at least in 1666. He is recorded in 1665 repaying the money owed by William Forrest (possibly his brother) to Walter Clerk. He paid the land tax on £66 13s 4d for Huntlaw in 1678. His 'insicht and plenishing, with librarie, and abulziments of bodie' were estimated to be about £200. He married Anna Douglas (d.1681), whose will is recorded in 1682. Their children were: Archibald; Richard; William (became a tailor's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1691); Margaret (married James Mirrielies in Edinburgh in 1702); and Anna. His will is recorded in 1683. Archibald of Huntlaw (18th C.) probably grandson of Andrew. His lands in Ashkirk and Lilliesleaf Parishes were valued at £66 13s 4d in the 1740s. James (17th C.) one of the tenants in Mervinslaw according to a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. His name was given as 'fforsett' (which could feasibly be another surname, such as Forsyth). Jean (17th/18th C.) Hawick woman who ran an inn in the late 1600s and early 1700s. She was listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. She was also listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. In 1702 she was fined for allowing people to be drinking in her house after 10 o'clock at night; those accused of being there included Francis Gledstains and James 'Leythen'. Her name is written 'Jeane Forrest' and 'Jane Forrest'. Julie (1968–) lawn and indoor bowler from Hawick, who took up bowls from a young age, and won the Teviotdale Indoor Ladies Singles 10 times between 1990 and 2007. Outdoors she won the Scottish Triples in 1997, the British Isles Triples in 1998 and the Scottish Pairs in 1998. But she has excelled mostly indoors. She won the Scottish Indoor Pairs in 1992, 1994 and 2008, the Triples in 1993 and 2010, and the Singles in 2001, 2003, 2008, 2009, 2010, 2013, 2019 and 2020. She was also Scottish Masters champion 3 years in a row, 2001–2003, and British Isles Singles champion in 2004, 2010, 2011 and 2019. She represented Scotland in the 1998 Commonwealth Games. She won the Mixed Pairs World Championship in 2002 2003 and 2013 and the World Indoor Singles title in 2004, 2010, 2013 and 2014. She was named Senior Sports Personality of the Year by Roxburgh Sports Council in 2004 and presented with a silver quaich at a special ceremony in the Town Hall the same year. She was also voted Hawick's Citizen of the Year in 2004. In 2007 she was inducted into the Scottish Borders Hall of Fame and is an Honorary Life Member of the Scottish Indoor Bowling Association. In 2021 he received a lifetime achievement award from Future Hawick. In 2024 she was Chief Gues at the Common Riding. She has worked as an early-years practitioner at Burnfoot Community School. Thomas (14th/15th C.) Scottish cleric, whose designation is recorded as 'de Foresta' and variants. He may have taken his name from Jedforest or Ettrick Forest. He took his B.A. in Paris under John Forester (but there is no evidence he was a relative) in 1379/80 and M.A. in 1381. He stayed in Paris and served as Proctor of the English Nation, being there until at least 1395. His own records apparently show that his Latin was poor and his spelling of Scottish names quite inconsistent. Probably the same Thomas 'Forestarii', from Glasgow Diocese, was given the promise of a benefice in the gift of Melrose Abbey in 1394. Probably this same man was 'de Foresta' in 1404 when he witnessed the confirmation of the grant of the Church of Cavers to Melrose Abbey; he was then Licentiate in Decrees and Rector of the Parish of Southdean. He was still Rector of Southdean when he witnessed a document at Carnwath in Lanarkshire in 1415, but was replaced by Robert Penwen by the early 1420s. Another 'Thomas Forestar' held a canonry and the Prebendary of Dalmaik in Aberdeenshire from at least 1427 until 1438, and is not likely to be the same man. Walter Torrie 'Wattie' (1880–1917) born in Kelso, son of a fishing tackle maker. He was a gifted sportsman, playing rugby and being ambidextrous at cricket. He moved from Kelso R.F.C. to Hawick R.F.C. and was first capped for Scotland along with Hawick's Willie Kyle in 1903. He was full-back for Scotland for a couple of years until he broke his collar bone in a Hawick versus Gala match. During WWI he served at Gallipoli, was awarded the Military Cross, and was promoted to Major. He died leading his men in an attack during the Second Battle of Gaza. William of Huntlaw (17th C.) son of Rev. Alexander, minister at Hassendean. In 1665 he was served heir to his father's 10-shilling land of Huntlaw in Hassendean Parish. He is recorded as 'in Huntlaw' in a record of 1666 listing landowners in Hassendean Parish. William (b.c.1780s) shepherd at Easter Alemoor, according to the 1812 ballot for the Militia in Roberton Parish. Probably the same William married Jane Wilson and had children baptised in Roberton, including Jane (b.1812), William (b.1813) and Walter (b.1815) (sometimes spelled 'Fforest' in earlier records).

Forrester see Forester Forrester-Paton (fo-ris-tur-pā'-in) n. Rev. Colin (1918–2004) born in Alloa, son of Alexander and nephew of Ernest, an Indian missionary. He was educated in Moffat, Norfolk, Oxford University and London University. Ordained by the United Free Presbytery in 1943, he left for missionary work in Ghana, with the Student Christian Movement. There he was involved with literature and translation, as well as ecumenical work. Both he and his wife became associated with the Christian Council of Ghana. They returned to Britain in 1972 and the following year he became an associate minister in Hawick, connected with Wilton and Burnfoot. He retired in 1983, but was appointed Chaplain to the Queen in 1981 and Extra Chaplain to the Queen in Scotland in 1988. He married Jean Lorimer Crichton Miller in 1943 and they raised 3 children while in Ghana, Helen Shaw (b.1944), Keith Miller (b.1948) and Robert Campbell (b.1950). He was editor of 'Hugh Douglas: One Man's Ministry' (1993).

forrit (for-i') adj., adv. forward – 'can ee stand a wee bit ferther forrit?', 'hei's lookin' forrit ti the Trades', 'Tam was awa hame on the yaud, and if we wait on him coming back we may sing straiht on and forret till neist Sabbath day' [WNK], '... in kase the richteous pit foret thair han's untill iniquitie' [HSR], '... who now slunk back as quick as they had formerly pressed forrit to the front' [AM], '... so will Maister Melrose o' Hopehill please come forrit at aince tae assist in gettin' the dammed horse oot o' the dam' [JEDM], 'At yeh shop-door a motor stuid, an forrit A gaed ti finnd oot whae was ocht eet' [ECS], 'To kill or free I forrit ran – Whan on my shooder was his han'' [DH], '... and I steppit forrit to gie him the sad news' [DH], 'It's the week, tae, when oo look forret teh readin aboot the different ceremonies ...' [BW1974], 'Burns was nae doobt lookin forrit ti meetin um but fund um ti be a bit o a disappointment' [IWL], (of a clock) running fast, adj. lacking in restraint, overly eager – 'oor awfi backwards it bein forrit', v., arch. to forward, aid, help – 'I threw by my crook, an' wi' thrawin' the wuddie, Fu' eithly I aided to forrit the fray' [JoHa] (also written 'forret'; cf. foretsome).

forrit (for-i') n. a forward on a sports team, specifically nos. 1–8 in rugby – 'hei aye played in the forrits, bit sometimes prop an sometimes lock', '... And sixteen forrits o' thirteen stane Cam' doon on the top o' Dye!' [DH].

forrit-owre (for-i'-ow-ur) adv., arch. with a forward stoop – 'Hei walks forrit-owre' [GW].

forritsome (for-i'-sum) adj. forward, bold – 'The first of the five had to be a 'forritsome' lad, as he had the doors to open and begin the play' [RM], ''In fact,' said he, 'we've a wey o' dealin' Wi' forritsome callants that come here stealin'' ' [WL].

forsaid (for-sed) pp., adj., arch. aforesaid, previously mentioned – '... with power to the said Robert Scott oy and air foirsaid, his airis and assignais foirsaidis ...' [SB1569], 'The said day the baylyeas forsaid and ton counsell did approve of ane litle hand Bell ...' [BR1694] (also written 'foresaid', 'foirsaid', etc.).

Forster (for-stur) n. Andrew (16th C.) listed in 1581/2 among the men accused by the Countess of Bothwell of raiding her lands at Eilrig. He is described as 'Andro Forster, callit Craikcrop, baneist Englishman', and was an accomplice of the Armstrongs of Whithaugh. He was declared a rebel after not appearing to answer the charge. He could be related to the 'Andro Forster' who was recorded in 1541, accused of being involved in raids into England in which men were killed. George (15th/16th C.) witness in 1497 for a document relating to the lands of Robert Elliot of Redheugh. Like the others, he was probably from Liddesdale. Henry of Stonegarthside (d.c.1699) younger son of Arthur of Stonegarthside. He inhabited the family estates after the death of his brother Nicholas in 1673; this included Kershopefoot, as well as 'Greenah' and other lands in Scotland. However, there were later legal battles over the inheritance, with his nephew John. In 1688 Walter Scott of Satchells dedicated part of his 'Post'ral' to him. He is there referred to as 'the worshipful and very much respected and generous Gentleman, Henry Forrester of Stonegarthside, in the Kingdom of England, Justice of the Peace and Coram in the said Kingdom, in the Reign of King Charles the Second'. He married Christian Scott, who was cousin of Sir Gideon Scott of Highchester (it is unclear who her parents were, although her father was probably a younger son of 'Auld Wat' of Harden). He enlarged Stonegarthside House in 1682, after his marriage. He had several children with Christian and after she died he remarried and spent his last years at Carraw in Northumberland. Sir John (d.1602) younger son of Thomas of Adderstone. He became Constable of Bamburgh Castle and later held lands around Alnwick. He was part of an English force that sacked southern Scotland in 1557 and was Warden of the English Middle March by 1559/60. He was Deputy Governor of Berwick and also Deputy Warden of the East Marches in 1563. He escorted Mary Queen of Scots to Berwick. He was also Keeper of Tynedale and Redesdale. He and George Heron of Chipchase supported the Regent Moray on attacks on Liddesdale in 1569. He accompanied Sussex and Hunsdon on the raid into Teviotdale in 1570, when the Hawick folk burned the thatch themselves; he personally led the 'horsmen too burne the townes and vyllages adjoynynge' He was the Warden of the Middle March during the Raid of the Redeswire in 1575 (with his name being recorded as 'Sir George Foster' in the ballad), when he was taken prisoner and held for a few days in Dalkeith. There are several letters from him in 1576 to the Deputy Warden for West Teviotdale, William Douglas of Bonjedward. He was still English Warden in 1584 when he and Lord Scrope led a raiding force of 7,000 men that invaded Liddesdale, taking the tower at Larriston and capturing 18 prisoners. After harrying the valley, he received a bond of assurance from the chiefs of Liddesdale (who spoke for most of the Elliots, Armstrongs and others). In 1595/6 he got the heads of several families to sign a bond of assurance to try to end the feuds existing between 25 English families and 'the Ellotes, Armestrongs, Crosers, Nixsons, Nobles, Larences, Hendersons, Batysons, Sympsons and Lyttles' in Scotland. It is said that he was challenged by a laird of Rulewater to a jousting match, which took place at the 'Justin Haugh'; he was badly injured and laid under a bush to recover, this field being known as 'Foster's Bush'. He married Jane Radclyffe, heiress of Blanchland. He had several daughters and was succeeded by his (probably illegitimate) son Nicholas. Robert 'Hob's Robin' (16th C.) English fugitive from Bewcastle who fled to the Scottish side. He was described in a letter from Thomas Wharton in 1541, along with Adam, as 'grete offenders agaynst Inglishmen and Scotishmen'. In 1542 his men burned 'the Cassilhill, Reyhilles in West Tevedall', stealing livestock and taking 2 prisoners; this may be one of the nearby Castlehills, although it is unclear where 'Reyhilles' may have been. A few days later his men burned 'Cromokhilles' in West Teviotdale, which is surely Crumhaugh Hill. Their father 'Hob' was warded in Cockermouth Castle in 1541, bu the Captain of Carlisle Castle would not take him. Roland (16th C.) probably a brother of Sir John. He was one of the assistants to the English Warden and served as Captain of Wark Castle. In 1565 he wrote to Bedford, describing the ambush of the Scotts by the Elliots at Ewes Doors. He is probably the 'Rowie Forester' recorded in 1569, when Archibald Armstrong of Mangerton, Martin Elliot of Braidlie and Lancie Armstrong of Whithaugh gave assurances to him 'that thai sall mak obedience according to the rest of the cuntre' (see also Foster).

Forster's Buss (for-sturz-bus) n. former name for a field between Bonchester Bridge and Bonchester Hill, a little above the flat ground once known as 'Jeistins'-haugh'. The name is said to have been because this is where an Englishman, Forster, was killed in combat.

forsuik (for-sik, -sūk) pp., arch. forsook – 'Than a' the discipels forsuik him, an' fled' [HSR] (this was the past tense form, while the past participle was more usually 'forsaken').

forsuth (for-sooth) adv., arch. truly, in truth – '... be twa ewynly porcionis, off the quhilk forsuth nynetene yerris male I graunt me wele content ...' [DoR1445].

Forsyth (fōr-sīth) n. Andrew (1949–2007) from Edinburgh, he came to Hawick as a police officer. He also became involved with the Scouts, the Duke of Edinburgh's Award Scheme and Hawick R.F.C. Christian (18th C.) chambermaid at Wilton Lodge in 1791, when she was working for Lord Napier. George (b.1810/1) from Oxnam, he was farmer at Ashybank in the 1860s. In 1861 he was farming 283 acres and employed 10 people. He married Oreina Loff Hall and their children included James R. and Agnes H. Gideon (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Blackcleuch near Teviothead on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was a labourer at Bowanhill in at least the period 1781–88. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: Christian (b.1781); Agnes (b.1783); Ann (b.1783); Isabel (b.1786); and Walter (b.1788). James (b.c.1780) recorded at Adderstoneshiel on the 1801 Militia ballot. He was probably younger brother to Robert, who was at Adderstoneshiel on the same list (as well as in 1799) and William, who was there in 1799. James (b.1791/2) born in Stow, he was a shoemaker in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on the Back Row and in 1851 he was recorded as 'Shoemaker, Artillery Pensioner' on Silver Street. His wife was Joan and his children included: John; Agnes; and Andrew W. Janet (18th C.) chambermaid at Stobs in 1785 and 1786, when she was working for Sir Francis Elliot. John (b.1831/2) born in Selkirk, son of shoemaker James, he was a warehouseman in Hawick. He was still living with his parents on Silver Street in 1851. In 1853 he was accused of being father of a child born to Agnes Minto. In 1861 he was living at 50 High Street. He married Helen Knox in 1854, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. He is probably the John of the High Street who donated coins to the Museum in 1863. In 1865 he and Adam Sinton were found guilty of stealing the coin collection from the Museum. John B. (20th C.) Burgh Chamberlain of Hawick in the 1940s. Mr. ?? (18th/19th C.) Schoolmaster at Castleton in the early 1800s. He married Margaret, daughter of William Elliot in Hillhouse. Robert (b.c.1770s) servant at Adderstoneshiel according to the 1799 and 1801 ballots for the Militia in Kirkton Parish. He was surely related to William, who was also at Adderstoneshiel in 1799 and James, who was there in 1801. He may be the Robert, married to Janet Turnbull, whose children included Robert (b.1807), baptised in Cavers Parish. Robert (b.1807/8) born in Denholm, he was a hosiery manufacturer. He was living around Main Street in Denholm in 1841, with his wife and a young weaver called Thomas Turnbull. In 1851 he was in Galashiels as a hosier master, employing one man. His wife was Catherine. Thomas (18th C.) cottar at Salenside in Ashkirk Parish. His children included Agnes (b.1762). Walter (19th C.) flesher in Hawick, recorded in 1873 when he was a Commissioner for the estate of flesher James Rodger. His shop was at 40 High Street. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Hutton and their children included: Jean (b.1785); and Agnes (b.1788). William (18th C.) hind at Hassendeanbank. He married Margaret Gray and their children, baptised in Minto Parish, included: Thomas (b.1784); Peter (b.1785); Betty (b.1787), who married carrier William Tait; John (b.1790); and Peggy (b.1794). William (b.c.1770s) resident of 'Ingram' in Cavers Parish. In 1997 he was listed among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia, with his surname written as 'Falsyth'. In 1799 he was 'Falsyth (or Forsyth)' at 'Ingerhope' listed among those whose names had not been drawn in 1797, but were no longer living in the area. Perhaps the same William was a servant at Adderstoneshiel according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Kirkton Parish. He was surely related to Robert, who was also at Adderstoneshile on the same list. He could be the William, married to Janet Turnbull, whose daughter Janet (b.1799) was baptised in Castleton in 1799. William (b.c.1780) servant at Newton in Bedrule Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. William W. (b.c.1870) born in Midlothian, he was Maths master at the Buccleuch School. He served as acting Headmaster during 1906–08 when the school was remodelled. He may be the same W.W. Forsyth who was made an Honorary Teri at the Tuesday morning 'Hut' of 1894 (also written 'Forsyde' and 'Forsythe').

for't (for', fort) contr. for it – 'Ay faith tho' they should get their skin For't soundly drubbed' [JR], '... Wad tempt o'o for tae jouk the schule and seek the flooery braes' [VW], 'The old farmer, 'Tattie Willie', wouldnae pay me for tae drive a pair so we had tae move' [TH], 'A body was need ti ken'd off leike as Wattie Laidlaw kennd eet, for ti tell owre, off-luif, aa its dambrod-checkeet story' [ECS], '... an bocht a wheen picter-postcairds for ti send away up Ingland' [ECS] (this use of 'for' is redundant in standard English; also written 'for tae').

fortnit (for'-ni') adj., arch. fortunate – 'She's been gey fortnit' [ECS].

Fortun (for-tun) n., arch. Fortune, chance personified – 'An so it is that A heh thae thochts ti faa back on gin Fortun takes a pick at iz ... ' [ECS].

the Forty Fits (thu-for'-ee-fits) n. popular name for the track leading from Calaburn farm to Whitehaughmoor etc., off the road north of Whitehaugh. A continuation of this road leads towards Shielswood Loch. It is marked 'drove road' on the Ordnance Survey map, and may well have been such, although the nearby drove road of which we have a description passed more directly from Whitehaugh to the 'Fower Road Ends'. The name probably derives from the dykes on either side being about 40 feet apart.

the Forty Thiefs Bus (thu-for'-ee-theefz-bus) n. humorous name sometimes used for the minibus used at the Common Riding to transport the Committee members from the Hut to the Moor.

the Forty Thiefs o Redfordgreen (thu-for'-ee-theefz-ō-red-furd-green) n. popular name around the 1830s for a group of 'faggot voters' arranged by local Tories to swamp the local elections.

foryeild (for-yeeld) v., poet. to repay, recompense – 'The Lord rewairdet me akordin' til my richteousniss; akordin' til the cleenniss o' my han's he heth foryeildet me' [HSR].

Foster (fos-tur) n. Abraham 'Abie' (16th/17th C.) tenant in Greena who was accused in 1623 along with Hob of stealing sheep belonging to Gilbert Eliott of Stobs from Kershope. He was ordered to be banished. He may be the same 'Abraham Foster in Grenehall' listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605; Sim 'in Grenehall' was also listed and hence presumably related. Elizabeth 'Betty' (18th C.) housemaid at Branxholme in 1791, when she worked for Adam Ogilvie. Sir George see Sir John Forster. Gilbert 'Gib' of Foulshiels (16th C.) named in 1590 along John Elliot of Heuchhouse and Martin's Clem Crozier. They were accused of stealing livestock and a detailed list of items from a servant of Sir John Forster. He was surely related to John of Foulshiels. Helen (19th C.) charged with the murder of her daughter Betsy at the Slitrig in 1867. They lived at Catherine Scott's boarding house on the Loan. Henry (17th C.) recorded as 'Harie forrester' when he paid the land tax on £420 for Greena in Castleton Parish in 1678. He was probably descended from earlier Fosters in Greena. James (15th/16th C.) accused in 1502, along with William Elliot, of stealing a horse from David Brown, out of Edinburgh. Their surety was William Turnbull 'de lahope' (possibly Langhope). James (b.1821/2) from Dumfries, he was a tailor in Hawick. In 1861 he was a journeyman tailor living on Langlands Bank. His wife was Agnes and their children included James, John, William, David and Thomas. His son 'Mr James Foster, jr.' donated a 'Roman copper coin' to the Museum in 1860. Jean (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among 'ye poor'. John (16th C.) listed as 'younger, of Fouleschelis' in 1581, among Elliots and Armstrongs complaining about crimes committed by the Scotts and their allies. He could be related to the John 'Forster' recorded in 1541, accused of being involved with raids in which Englishmen were killed. John (16th C.) son of 'Meikle Rowie' of Greenhaugh. He is recorded in 1583 among a large group of men led by William of Kynmont into Tynedale. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His daughter Janet was baptised in 1647. John (b.1771/2) horse-trainer from England. He lived at Kirkgate and Kirkyard (i.e. St. Mary's Place) in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Mary, and their children included John and Jean. Law (16th/17th C.) resident of Greena. In 1611 he is listed as 'in Greneha' among men who failed to appear at court in Jedburgh. It is unclear what the forename 'Law' might be. John (b.1811/2) from Castleton, he was a labourer in the Hawick area. In 1861 he was living at Stouslie Schoolhouse. His wife was Agnes and their children included William, Robert, David, James, Jessie, Adam, John and Walter. Some of his children were born in Ewes and Teviothead. Robert 'Hob' (16th/17th C.) recorded as 'callit Foulscheillis' in 1623 when he and Abie Foster in Greena were accused of stealing sheep belonging to Gilbert Eliott of Stobs from Kershope. He was ordered to be banished. His lands were probably Foulshiels in Liddesdale. He was probably related to the earlier Gib and John of Foulshiels. Robert (17th/18th C.) miller in Synton Mill. He married Agnes Donaldson and their children, baptised in Ashkirk Parish, included: Andrew (b.1701); and Margaret (b.1703). Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded as farmer at Leahaugh in 1836 when he was head of household in Castleton Parish for the first time. He was still there in 1837, but disappeared after that. He was perhaps son of the labourer recorded in Bygate and Upperraw 1835–41. Roland 'Meikle Rowie', (16th C.) tenant in Greenhaugh. In 1583 his son John was listed as part of a large group under William of Kinmont who raided Tynedale. Roland 'Rowie', 'Ower the Moss' (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1623 when he was found guilty of stealing from several farms. He stole 20 sheep from Myredykes, 20 sheep from 'Callshiels' and a horse from Chapelhill. He was ordered to be hanged for these crimes. Simon 'Sim' (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. He was recorded as 'Sym Foster in Grenehall' and listed along with men from Liddesdale and Eskdale. Abraham 'in Grenehall' was also listed. Thomas (b.c.1770s) servant at Liddelbank according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. He was a labourer at Greena on the 1801 ballot, with his surname written 'Forster'. William of Greena (16th C.) recorded in 1583 when it was said he had a daughter who had married Englishman Hob Foster of Kershope. William of Foulshiels (16th C.) signed the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens, on behalf of his 'bairnes and servands'. His name is listed along with many Elliots of Liddesdale, and is recorded as 'larde of Fowlesheils'. William (16th/17th C.) recorded in Langhaugh in 1611 when Roger Scott, Captain of Hermitage, was cautioner for him in Jedburgh. William (17th C.) recorded in 1642 as brother of the deceased James in Greena. This was on a long list of thieves of the Border who were to be tried. He may be the same man as 'Weilliam Foster, called Rossis Will' on a list of 'mosstroopers' (i.e. men branded as thieves) in about 1648. William (17th C.) witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1683 for Thomas Briggs and Jane Foster. William (b.c.1780) servant of John Oliver at Langburnshiels according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Hobkirk Parish. William Air (1801–62) from Coldstream, he worked as a shoemaker, later moving to Glasgow. He is remembered for the verse that he published, especially those relating to angling contributed to 'Whistle-Binkie'. He was a friend of the Ettrick Shepherd, and shared with him a love of country sports (see also Forster).

Foster's Bush (fos-turz-bush) n. popular name for a field lying near the Justin Haugh, perhaps now part of Bonchester village. It is said that the English Warden Sir John Forster took part in a jousting challenge there and was unhorsed and wounded by one of the lairds of Rulewater. His supporters laid him under a bush to recover, hence the name of the field. Tancred states that it was still known by this name in the early 20th century.

fot (fō') n., arch. a footless sock used in wet or snowy weather – 'A chaamp that turns foats an cuittiekins soappin-wat' [ECS] (also spelled 'foat'; usually plural; cf. fottie).

fother (fo-thur) n., arch. fodder, food for livestock, v., arch. to feed cattle or horses, humorously applied to feeding people, to cater – '. . . a richt toon an big eneuch ti fother an fend for fremd folk an gangrels' [ECS].

Fotherlie (fo-thur-lee) n. variant of Fodderlee.

fottie (fo-tee, fo'-ee) n., arch. a child's stocking or woollen boot, booties – 'And ye'se get fotties for yer feet At the Big Bazaar' [JT], someone whose trousers, stockings or boots are too wide (cf. fot).

fotty (fo-tee, fo'-ee) adj., arch. having feathery legs (said of hens).

fou see fow

foucht (fowcht) pp., arch. fought – 'Thaye cam roun' aboot me alsua wi' wurds o' hætret; an' foucht agayne me wuthoutten ane caus' [HSR] (focht is more common).

foughten (foch-tin) pp., poet. fought – 'And with this lade I've sprawl'd and foughten Hail ten lang mile' [JoHa], 'I've fleech'd an' foughten a' in vain – Jock disna seem to care . . . ' [JT] (cf. the more common feuchen).

fouk (fowk) n., pl., arch. people – 'But ye are happy, and I'm glad it's sae, And may rejoice whan ither fouk are wae' [CPM], 'Od! there's some fowk has a face for onything' [JoHa], 'And curs'd be ambition, the plague o' this land, That sets fouk a-langing for things that are grand' [JoHa], 'Ah, dear Sir, it's no a' goud that glitters, and at ony rate the rich fouk gie aye least away' [RW], 'For thou wult saufe the aaflicket fouk . . . ' [HSR], 'Thou sellist thy fowk for naucht . . . ' [HSR], 'Weel, some fouk say it was the Pechs, an' some the Romans . . . ' [WNK], 'Pretensic fowk gaed primpin' by, Snirkin' at sic a din . . . ' [DH] (also written 'fowk'; cf. the more modern folk).

Foulbrae (fowl-brā) n. former name for lands in Roberton Parish. Gavin Dryden was living there in 1723. The location is unknown. Perhaps the same location is where labourer James Hall was living in 1800 when he had a child baptised in Cavers Parish.

Foulden (fowl-din) n. Matthew (18th C.) incomer to Hawick around 1733, when he was asked by the Council to produce testimonials from his former residence, Jedburgh. Still failing to produce them by 1738 he was given another 10 day's ultimatum and then banished from Hawick along with his wife and family. His surname was written 'Fouldoun'. A 'Matthew Fowlden' was born at Stobo in Peeblesshire in 1674 and could be related (possibly the same as 'Fulton').

Fouledge (fowl-eej) n. farmstead to the west of Skelfhill farm (the name could refer to birds or dirty; marked on the c.1860 Ordnance Survey map)).

Fouledge Park (fowl-eej-pawrk) n. name for a piece of land on Minto estate. In 1779 (and 1811) 'Fowledge Park, and one north of it' was valued at £45 10s 11d.

Fouledge Sike (fowl-eej-sīk) n. stream that rises near Fouledge runs past Alderybar and joins the Southdean Burn, to run into the Northhouse Burn and then the Teviot (G. Watson suggests that the name is 'foul leche', meaning 'smelly ditch').

Foulis see Fowls

Foulmire Heights (fowl-mīr-hīts) n. high ground on the Border, roughly between Saughtree and Kielder. It reaches a height of 396 m, is the site of a triangulation pillar, and is the source of the Larriston Burn.

Foul Mooth (fowl-mooth) n. nickname for Robert Robson.

the Foul Raid (thu-fowl-rād) n. popular name for the failed attempt by a Scots army under Archibald, 4th Earl of Douglas, to take Roxburgh and Berwick from the English in 1416. Hearing of a large English force, the Scots retreated ignominiously. In retaliation the English army attacked Teviotdale and Liddesdale, including the burning of Hawick, Jedburgh and Selkirk.

Foulshiels (fowl-sheelz) n. former hamlet west of Selkirk along the Yarrow, opposite Newark Castle. It was once a seat of the Scotts, and now a farm. Mungo Park was born here in 1771. An ornamental piece of grate found in the ruins there was donated to the Museum in 1900 (also written 'Foulsheils'; it is 'Foulsheels' on Gordon's c.1650 maps and Blaeu's 1654 map and 'Foullsheills' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Foulshiels (fowl-sheelz) n. farm about 2 miles north of Newcastleton, to the right off the B6399, above Redheugh. A bridle path once connected this with the upper Hermitage valley, via Harstgarth Fell and Twislehope. It was formerly split into Nether and Over Foulshiels. South of the farmstead, on a terrace on the slopes of Foulshiels Rig are the remains of a settlement. And on a ridge just to the west is another ruined building, along with field-banks, and extensive boundary banks and signs of cultivation along the Well Sike. About 470 yards (420 m) north of the present farmstead is the probably site of the tower-house of Foulshiels (marked on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map), with 2 enclosures, remains of a farmstead, boundary dykes and 'lazy-beds'. The tower is about 12 m by 8.5 m and has been robbed of stone. John Elliot was recorded there in 1502. Its location is probably the 'Foulschelmoore' in a rental record of 1541 and possibly the Nether Foulshiels mapped by Pont. In 1541 it was valued at 6 shillings and at that time the lease was vacant. 'Johnne Forster, younger' is recorded as proprietor in 1581, William Foster in 1584 and Gib Foster in 1590. Archibald Elliot was there in 1611. The farm was once owned by the Elliots of Redheugh, but was part of the ongoing dispute with Scott of Buccleuch in the early 17th century. John Scott in Newark was tenant of the 33-shilling land there in 1618 when he complained that a group of about 100 Elliots and others had tried to attack his workers and servants, but not finding them there had removed all the hay and fodder, then returned to bind and beat Wat Dickson, subtenant there. Hob Foster was associated with the farm there in 1623 when he was accused of stealing sheep from Kershope. The farm was owned by the Bishop of Caithness in 1632. Walter Turnbull was tenant there in 1694. Further to the west on the north side of Ewes Knowes are the remains of 7 or 8 turf buildings, probably the township of Over Foulshiels. Along the track to the north of the modern farmstead are the remains of a turf sheepfold and closer to Foulshiels Wood there are 2 or 3 others. The farm was surveyed in 1718 along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, when it consisted of 1729 acres and was bounded by Roan, Tarras, lands held by the Laird of Hoscote and the Hermitage Water. James Elliot was shepherd there in 1835 (the origin is probably from Old English 'ful' and Middle English 'schele', meaning 'the dirty huts'; the name appears as 'foulschelis' in 1502, 'Fouleschelis' in 1581, 'Foulscheillis' in 1611, 'Foulscheillis' in 1618, 'Foulschellis' in 1632 and 'Foulsheills' in 1694; it is on Gordon's c.1650 map as 'Foulsheels', on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'O. Foulsheels' and 'N. Foulsheels', on the 1718 Buccleuch survey as 'Foullsheills' and has its modern name on Stobie's 1770 map).

Foulton see Fulton

the Foul Well (thu-fowl-wel) n. former spring on Braidhaugh farm in Rulewater. It was located near the modern farmhouse, and said to have once been the cause of much sickness on the farm. It was eventually disused on account of its supposed harmful effects on the residents (mentioned by Tancred, it is also written 'the Ffoull Well').

Foulwud (fowl-wud) n. Foulwood, former lands in Liddesdale, recorded on a rental roll of c.1376. 'Foulwod superior' and 'Foulwod inferior' were both valued at 10 shillings. In a rental roll of 1541 'Ovir Foulwod' was leased to Alexander Armstrong (probably son of 'Ill Will') and 'Nethir Foulwod' to Simon Armstrong (probably of Tinnisburn). The lands of 'Fowlwoodis' are also listed separately, but with no additional information. 'Foulwodles' is listed among the Liddesdale possessions of the Sheriff of Teviotdale in 1632, and 'Fawhead alias Foulwod' among possessions of Thomas Kerr of Ancrum. Nether Foulwood became the modern Gillside. The stream to the west is Foulwood Sike (it is marked on Blaeu's c.1654 map; 'Ouerfoulwod' and 'Netherfoulwood' are recorded in 1541).

Foulwud Sike (fowl-wud-sīk) n. Foulwood Sike, stream in southern Liddesdale, rising on Sufficient Hill and running roughly eastwards to join the Liddel near Gillside.

foumart (fow-mar') n., poet. the pole-cat, Mustela putorius – 'The waizle dunne frae the auld grey cairn, The theiffe foulmart came nighe' [JTe], '... an assemblage of hares, hedgehogs, ferrets, foulmarts, badgers, tom-cats, and such-like unsightly creatures' [JTe], an offensive person or object – '... in case it had played the foumart wi him durin' the forenoon ...' [DH] (also written 'foulmart').

founert (foo-nur', foo-nurt) pp., arch. foundered, collapsed (usually with drunkenness) – 'He stottit oot wi' founert look, Syne at the sky he spiert ...' [WL] (also spelled 'foonert'; cf. foondert).

the Fountain (thu-fown'-in, -foon'-in) n. ornamental fountain in Wilton Lodge Park, in front of the Museum. It was installed as a result of money left to the town by Gilbert Davidson in 1896 and erected in the following year. Unlike the Brown Fountain and the MacNee Fountain, it does not usually have the name 'Davidson' attached to it, but is commonly referred to as simply 'the Fountain'. The main cast-iron part of the fountain came from McDowell, Steven & Co., Milton Ironworks in Glasgow. It was painted silver through most of the 20th century and has decorations including dolphins and turtles. During renovations it was discovered that the original colour was probably blue and gold, and it was returned to this condition in 2018.

Fountainhall (fown'-in-hal) n. village on the A7 towards Edinburgh and former station on the Waverley Line, at the junction with the Lauder Light Railway.

the Fountainheid (thu-fown'-in-heed) n. former name for an area near the Vertish, perhaps related to the spring there. When the Chase was up the Loan, this area was the end of the gallop. A report on the Common Riding for 1855 states that during the Chase 'Haggis-Ha' and Fountainhead were reached, and the riders then adjourned to Mr Grieve's, Whitchesters.

Fountainheid Plantin (fown'-in-heed-plawn'-in) n. wood at the Vertish, across from Woodend cottage.

fousome (fow-sum) adj., poet. having fullness, well-supplied – 'To end this jargonaic clatter, An' mak' it somewhat fousome matter . . . ' [JoHa].

fout (fowt) n., arch. a spoilt child, especially a fussy one – 'Mam's-fout, a spoiled child, Teviotd.' [JoJ], 'A mammie's or mother's fout' [GW].

foutsome (fowt-sum) adj., arch. forward, interfering, officious – 'A foutsome little brat' [GW] (noted by J. Jamieson).

Fouty Sike (fow-tee-sīk) n. stream in sourthern Liddesdale, running westwards to join the Liddel near the cottage of Clerkleap. The wood near its foot is known as Foutysike Wood and is shown as old trees on both sides of the stream on the 1718 survey of Buccleuch properties.

fow (fow) adj., arch. full, sated – 'And O, my friend! wi' me he'll share a heart, As fow o' kindness, as its free o' art' [CPM], '. . . for it's ill speakin atween a fow man and a fastin' [ECS] (Scottish proverb), 'An what A'd ti haud-sae, A Wasna boass, – if the truith be telld, A was riftin-fowe!' ' [DH], 'The built in bed where fowre bairns slept The oothoose where the coal was kept . . . ' [IWL] (also spelled 'fowr' and 'fowre'; the double syllable pronunciation is much more distinct than in most other parts of Scotland).

fower-oors (fow-ur-oorz) n., arch. a meal taken at 4 o'clock or 4 hours before bedtime, particularly by farm-workers – '. . . an' sae, efter gettin' there, and gettin' some four-'oors an' supper, they made faimily wurship . . . ' [BCM1880].

the fower posts o misery (thu-fow-ur-pōsts-ō-mi-zu-ree) n. popular name for the narrow stocking frame used around the mid-19th century during a time when the hosiery workers made very poor wages.

the Fower Road Ends (thu-fow-ur-rōd-endz) n. cross-roads at the top of Stirches Road, past the Convent and Stirches Mains, a popular area for country walks. The road ahead leads to Tandlaw and Drinkstone farms, to the left is Stouslie and to the right the Boonraws and the A7. A drove road used to come from Boghall to here, and then continue towards Stouslie on its way to the Borthwick valley. The name is also sometimes used to refer to the crossroads at the top of the Nipknowes – 'Sirches Mains and the fower road ends Drinkstone, or Boonraw West Ma feet turn left gaun on tae Stouslie That's the road aw like the best' [AY].

fowerteen (fow-ur-teen) n. fourteen, arch. a fourteen-shilling piece – 'There was left in a bagg within the box . . . , ane old fourteen, two seven shilling pieces, two old three shilling pieces

. . . ' [PR1712] (used only sparingly compared with 'fourteen'; see also foarteen).

fow-hauden (fow-haw-din) pp., adj., arch. full-handed, lavishly supplied, well-stocked – 'Yih saucy sorrih! ee'r owre fow-hauden' [ECS] (cf. fow).

fowie (fow-ee) adj., arch. comfortably independent – 'Possessing a comfortable inpdendence, Roxb. It is never used like Bene, as a term of respect; but always in such connection as to suggest a different idea; as 'He's a fowie body', expl. as equivalent to 'an old hunks'. It is derived from Fow, full' [JoJ].

Fowler (fow-lur) n. Alexander (18th/19th C.) resident of Riddell in Lilliesleaf Parish. He is recorded in 1798 on the list of men balloted to serve in the Militia, but John Malcolm acted as substitute for him. Perhaps the same Alexander married Elizabeth (or 'Betty' Scott and had children: James (b.1810), baptised in Wilton Parish; John (b.1812), baptised in Lilliesleaf Parish. Auntie (d.1781) recorded in Hawick's death records as 'old Auntie Fowler'. It is unclear what her full name might have been. David (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included Margaret (b.1739), Adam (b.1743), George (b.1745), Margaret (again, b.1748), Joseph (b.1755) and Jean (b.1758). Isobel (17th C.) listed at Slacks among the poor of Southdean Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Her surname is recorded as 'fouller'. John (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His daughter Christian was baptised in 1740. John (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. He married Jean Thomson in 1750 and their children included Anne (b.1752) and James (b.1754). John (b.1732) may also have been his child. John (d.1795) tailor in Hawick, son of Robert. He died in Hawick. John (b.c.1770) labourer in Hawick according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. Later in 1799 he was balloted to serve in the Militia, in place of John Scott (or Young) who had deserted; however, he produced a certificate to show that he was too old and Adam Leyden was drawn in his place. John (18th/19th C.) hind at Synton Parkhead. In an 1803 list of Volunteers, he is recorded having a 'sore leg, but willing to serve'. John, F.E.I.S. (b.1844) teacher who taught in Hawick for more than 40 years. Born in Rossshire, he came to Hawick as Headmaster at the West Port Free Church School, transferring to Drumlanrig in 1872. In 1866 he donated to the Museum a 'beatiful specimen of the carabus nitrens [beetle], got near to Peel Fell', as well as geological specimens and 'an old Edinburgh newspaper'. In 1867 he donated several more items, including a model of the 'Scottish Maiden', an old knife and bronze ornaments from Ross-shire, and a 'piece of the stone on which Prince Charlie is said to have stood while the troops were breakfasting previous to Culloden, and of that on which the Duke of Cumberland stood while watching the battle'. Probably the same Fowler, of Longview, made a sketch of the 'Chamberlain's Hoose' about 1870. In 1872 he donated a piece of mica to the Museum (probably from a pupil) and in 1875 a 'stalactite from Cromarty'. He married Elizabeth Sinton in 1872 and she died in 1920. Their children included William, Elizabeth, Robert, Annie, John, Margaret (a teacher in Kerikeri, New Zealand), James and George (who may have married Margaret Hamilton and moved to Brooks, Alberta). John (19th C.) first Secretary of the Hawick Home Mission when it was founded in 1873. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Riddell and their children included Margaret (b.1652), Helen (b.1654) and an unnamed child (b.1655). The witnesses in 1652 were William (surely a relative) and Hector Paisley. Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded as 'Fouller' when he was paid to be Hawick's Town Piper in 1721. He probably took over from James Oliver and continued until about 1732. His name may also have been written 'Foulier'. Perhaps the same Robert 'in Sea Croft' married Margaret Elliot and had children Elizabeth (b.1743) and Isobel (b.1745); the witnesses in 1743 were merchant John Cavers and shoemaker John Scott. His marriage with Margaret Elliot is probably the one recorded in Bowden in 1730. Robert (18th/19th C.) forester to the Duke of Buccleuch at least in the period 1798–1807. He worked at Hassendean Common and probably elsewhere. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of the Hawick area. He married Margaret Turnbull and their children included: Margaret (b.1791), baptised in Bowden; Betty (b.1795), also baptised in Bowden; Samuel (b.1804), baptised in Minto; and Agnes (b.1806), baptised in East Bank Kirk. Thomas (16th C.) servant to Robert, son of John Langlands of that Ilk. He is recorded in 1581 as witness to the sasine for half the Barony of Wilton being transferred from James Langlands of that Ilk to his son Robert. Walter (17th C.) named on a list of 'idle and masterless men' suggested by the Hawick Bailie to the Privy Council as suitable for sending to the wars in Germany in 1627. When produced before the Privy Council by the Bailie he was one of the men who were found 'not fit for the wars' and dismissed. Perhaps the same Walter married Helen Langlands and had a son James (b.1634) baptised in Hawick. Walter (17th C.) witnessed a baptism in Hassendean (officially Roberton Parish) in 1683 for Robert Scott and Isobel Turnbull. Rev. William (c.1560–1612) poet and scholar who was Parson of Hawick in the reign of King James VI. He was son of William, a merchant of Edinburgh, with his mother possibly being Janet Fokart. His sister Anne married Sir John Drummond. He graduated from St. Leonard's College, St. Andrews in 1573/4 and received his M.A. in 1578. He then studied in Europe, but apparently suffered at the hands of some Catholic Scotsmen and returned to Britain, acting as a spy to the Duke of Lennox in London 1583–84. He was appointed Rector of Hawick in 1585, being presented by Francis, Earl of Bothwell. He apparently received ⅔ of the salary, while the Reader (and actual minister), William Auchmowtie received the other ⅓. In 1587/8 he assigned the 'tack' of Hawick Kirk to Walter Scott of Buccleuch for 5 years. He was still described as 'Rector of Hawick' when he was witness to a 1595 land document of Walter Scott of Branxholme. And later in 1595 when he witnessed another document of Sir Walter's, he is described as 'secretary to the Queen'. He accompanied Sir Peter Young to Denmark in 1589 to take part in the negotiations of the marriage of James VI with the Princess Anne. He became Master of Requests and Secretary-Depute to Queen Anne in 1589, and later her Secretary. He must have been at Holyroodhouse during much of this time; there is no reason to believe he ever visited Hawick, and he probably ceased to be Rector in 1601. However, there are papers of the period 1602–07 relating to an action with the feuars and others over payment of the Parish teinds. In 1606 he gave a feu charter to Walter, son of Walter Scott of Buccleuch, for the Kirklands of Hawick, except for the Manse and Glebe. And in 1608 he is still described as 'parson of Hawick' in a 'tack' whereby Sir Gideon Murray of Elibank received the teinds of Hawick Kirk. In 1603 he accompanied the Queen to London and never returned. He was apparently known as a great anagram maker. He wrote 'An Answer to the Calumnious Letter and Erroneous Propositions of an Apostat named M. Jo. Hammiltoun' (1581), dedicated to Francis, Earl of Bothwell, as well as a commendatory sonnet for James VI's 'Essayes of A Prentise' (1584). His better known poetic works were published posthumously by his nephew, the poet William Drummond of Hawthornden, namely 'The Tarantula of Love' and a translation of Patrarch's 'Trionfi'. In perhaps his most famous work, the 'The Triumphs of the most famous Poet, Mr. Francis Petrarke, translated out of Italian into English' (published 1587), he refers to himself as 'P. of Hauicke'. Several other pieces exist in mansuscript form, including an almost complete translation of Machiavelli's 'Prince', as well as some unfinished verses, anagrams and scrolls of official letters in French, Italian and Latin. Some of these manuscripts are still in Edinburgh University library. He married (although his wife's name is unknown) and had 4 surviving children, with his eldest son, Ludovic being recorded as portioner of Restalrig. After his death he was succeeded as minister of Hawick by Thomas Abernethy. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Bessie Scott. Their children included: Robert (b.1644); Helen (b.1657); Bessie (b.1648); Manie (b.1650); Helen (again, b.1652); Walter (b.1654); and Agnes (b.1656). Probably the same William witnessed a baptism for Robert in Hawick in 1652. William (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His daughter Bessie was baptised in 1744. William (18th C.) recorded in New Woll in 1788 when he was accused of non-payment of a bill by William Thomson in Yair. Also in 1788 he married Jennie 'Bellinten' (i.e. Ballantyne) in Ashkirk (formerly spelled 'Ffoular', 'Foullar', 'Fouler', 'Fouller', 'Fowller', etc.).

Fowlerawe (fow-lu-raw) n. former lands in the Slitrig valley, listed in 1547/8 in an English communication about farms they had burned. They were the property of the Laird of Gledstains, along with 'Torne' (probably Turn) and 'Wenerton'. The exact location and pronunciation are unknown.

Fowlerslands (fow-lurz-lawnds) n. former place name in Cavers, probably near Denholm. There was a confirming charter for these lands 'in Denum' to Thomas Cranston in about 1380. It was among the lands held by Thomas Cranston of that Ilk in 1458/9. It was referred to in 1483 when William Douglas of Cavers renounced these lands to John Cranston of that Ilk, as well as part of Denholm Mains. It was listed as part of the Barony of Cavers in 1511. It was regranted to Sir William Cranston in 1512 (where it is referred to as being 'near the town of Dennom'), and listed as part of the Barony of Cavers in 1509/10. In 1636 it was referred to as 'the land called the foulleris lands' when passed from John, Lord Crnston to his nephew William Cranston. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. It was then described as lands in Denholm (it is 'Foullerysland' or 'Fouleryslande' in c.1380, 'Fowlaris lande' in 1458/9, 'Fowlaris landis' in 1509/10, 'Foularis landis' in 1511, 'Fowlersland' in 1512, 'Foullars lands' in 1574 and 'Foullerlands' in 1687 and 'Foulerslands' in 1698).

Fowlertoun (fow-lur-tin) n. Alexander (d.c.1423) cleric who was a servant of the captive James I. He held some rights of the Archdeaconry of Teviotdale, probably in succession to John Lyon. His surname is written 'de Foulertoun'.

Fowls (fowlz) n. Rev. David (17th C.) presented to Bedrule Parish by Lord Stewart of Traquair in 1633 and ordained there the same year. However, he was translated to Oxnam (probably a more valuable living) in 1634. He was deposed in 1639 for contempt of the Acts of the General Assembly. He thereafter lived in England, abandoning his 7 children. But in 1662 he petitioned Parliament along with his son John, claiming he had been deprived simply for refusing to sign the Covenant, and was then given a stipend. He appears to have spent much of the intervening time in England and was described being in Paddington, Middlesex in 1663. He married and had 7 children, including James (who became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1648) and John. James (18th C.) footman at Stobs in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for Sir Francis Eliott (also written 'Foulis' and other variants).

fowre see fower

fowrpit (fowr-pi') n., arch. the fourth part of a peck – '...John Scott, Wyndheads, and Robert Taylor's half-peacke near ane half-fourpitt short' [BR1676] (also written 'fourpitt' and variants).

fowrt (fow-ur') n., adj., arch. fourth (cf. fowrth).

fowrth (fow-urth) n., adj. fourth – 'At the fowrth A'm often in the treis ...' [IWL].

Fox (foks) n. Charles 'Charlie' (19th C.) wandering beggar in the Hawick area. Frank Hogg (writing in 1876) describes him as a 'tinkler' who travelled 'with his family, and sometimes a donkey' and would sell 'besoms, mugs, &c.' He was said to be a good singer and teller of stories, who was welcome in many farmer's kitchens. It was said that he was capable of working, but preferred his itinerant lifestyle. On one occasion he occupied the empty cottage at Titlingbrae on Wilton Common, along with his wife and 5 children. When his wife gave birth to a son there, a local landowner offered to adopt the child, but he refused. James (b.1811/2) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was a cattle dealer at Wolfelee Glen in 1851. His wife was Margaret (from Innerwick, East Lothian) and their children included George, Margaret and James. John (18th C.) married Janet Ormiston in Wilton in 1822. Patrick (b.1822/2) labourer in Hawick, born in Cavan, Ireland. In 1851 he was living on the Mid Row. In 1857 he married Rosa Bergland and their children included Mary and John. Peter (19th C.) married Margaret Scott in 1830, the marriage recorded in both Hobkirk and Southdean Parishes. Robert (19th C.) married Jane Whillans in Hawick in 1863. William (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Jedhead in Southdean Parish. In 1797 he was listed in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire, with the annotation 'Subst.', suggesting there was a substitute for him serving in the Militia. However, his name appears again in 1798 and later that year he was sworn into the Militia. He could be the roughly 60-year-old William recorded at Wauchope Common in 1841, living with Agnes (b.c.1795) and Marion (b.1832/3). In 1851 his widow was at '2 Wauchope New house', along with their daughter Sarah (b.1822/3) and her husband George Rutherford. He is probably the William who married Agnes Cameron in Hobkirk Parish in 1816.

the Fox an Hounds (thu-foks-in-howndz) n. public house on Main Street in Denholm, built as a coaching inn in 1741. It was run by William Leyden in the 1850s and 60s, Mr. Brodie in the late 19th century and Mr. Sanderson in the early 20th. It still has some guest rooms today, and also hosts occasional folk music events (it is incorrectly the 'Hare & Hounds' in 1852).

foxfit (foks-fi') n., arch. common name for the fir club-moss, Lycopodium selago or clavatum – '...the humble club mosses ...In the local dialect these plants are called the Foxfoot, from some similar idea that conferred on them of old the Greek Lycopodium, or Wolf's foot' [JAHM].

foy (foi) n. a farewell dinner or party, often before a wedding – 'They cam to me, my foy to set, And kindly Jean received them' [AHS], 'May'e plenty hae o' gospel gear, Braw godly foys, An', odsake, Jamie, aye beware O' drucken ploys' [JoHa], 'Did the deed-raap soond ...i the nicht efter guid King fozzy (fo-zee) n., arch. spongy, soft – '... cakes leavened, or puffed up, or fozzy' [JL] (also 'fozzie' and variants elsewhere; cf. foozy; from Dutch).

fra (fraw, fru) prep. from – 'Item, that all flescheris present the hale flesh ... and that nane cut out nor tak away any fra them ...' [BR1640], 'The principle River is Tiot ... and runs fra the West to the east, till it go in to Tweed at Kelso' [MGC1649], 'Fra sister fonts o' auld lang syne ...' [JEDM], 'Sprung fra the hills – the Border hills! In freedom's lap it fand a mother ...' [JEDM], 'I am Clinty, Clinty, Clinty, fra ma hoose upon the rock' [JEDM], from the time that – 'Fra he entered English ground, the order was thus ...' [T] (rarer pronunciation, cf. fri and threh).

frail (frāl) n., arch. a flail – 'The plough and harrow, Commend me thra thé; The frail it is a flinging fiend ...' [JL].

Frainch (frānch) n., adj., arch. French – '... Whiles drank a stowp wi' Dandie, And saw the yeomen thrang To quell the Frainch Invasion When the false beacons glared' [DH].

Frainch loaf (frānch-lōf) n., arch. a fancy kind of baker's loaf, having a crust on top and being higher on one side, so that slices are heart-shaped.

Probably the same John witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk in 1652 for Robert Brown and another in 1656 for George Tait. John (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among 'ye poor'. John (17th C.) resident of 'ye wood' in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was listed right after the householders at Gatehousecote, but it is unclear where precisely his house was. John (18th C.) weaver in Denholm. He married Margaret Smith in 1744 and their children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: William (b.1747); Helen (b.1750); Helen (again, b.1753); and John (b.1755). John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included Margaret (b.1770) and John (b.1776). John (18th/19th C.) joiner living at Bedrule in 1797 when his name appeared in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire. The annotation says 'Serving' and his name appears again in 1798; later that year he was sworn into the Militia. John (b.c.1780) servant at Galalaw according to the ballot for the Militia in Wilton Parish in 1801. John (b.1808/9) originally from Ayr, he was a woollen manufacturer in Langholm. He married Margaret Turnbull (from Hawick) and their children included Robert, who was born in Hawick. Richard (17th/18th C.) hired as Schoolmaster in Castleton Parish in 1707. He was probably previously Schoolmaster at Westruther, from 1691. Robert (b.c.1780) servant at Woodhouse in Southdean Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Robert (b.1839/40–1934) son of Langholm manufacturer John. He was born in Hawick. He married Ellen Wilhelmina Diener in Hawick in 1865 and they emigrated to Cape Colony, South Africa. In 1872 he donated to the Museum a coin, a diamond matrix and Vaal River sand, all from South Africa. William (16th C.) listed in 1540 among the tenants who were warned to remove themselves from Todrig when Alexander Lauder succeeded to the lands. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1640 he and 2 others had to make public repentance for playing at 'nineholes' (i.e. nine men's morris) on Sunday. His name is probably written 'Frater'. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1777. His children included Ann (b.1777) and Margaret (b.1788). (also formerly written 'ffrater' and 'Frater'; this could be a variant of Fraser).

frame (frām) n. a knitting frame, formerly a hand-knitting machine built into a wooden frame, but in the modern era being a machine making many garment bodies or sleeves at once – 'There's a blithe kin' o' music In the whushin' o' the frames' [WL].

frame flat (frām-flaw') n. the floor in a mill on which the knitting frame were housed (see flat).

frame-worker (frām-wur-kur) n. a person who works the knitting frames in a mill, traditionally a male job – 'Aw yon frame workers and knitters Shaded frae the sun bleezin' doon . . . ' [AY].

Framysden (fra-mis-din) n. John (d.1418) appointed as Bishop of Glasgow by Pope Boniface IX in 1391. This was as a result of a dispute in the church at the time, since Matthew de Glendonwyn was already Bishop. He was never recognised within Scotland.

France (frawns) n. country in Europe, across the English channel from England. The Lovels and many other Norman families originated in northern France. The 'Auld Alliance' between France and Scotland started formally in 1295 and united the two countries against their common foe, England (although the details of the alliance over the centuries are extremely complex). A treaty of 1512 made all citizens of Scotland citizens of France and vice versa. The alliance effectively ended with the death of Mary of Guise, the wife of James V, in 1560. Britain formally declared wr on France in 1756 (as part of the Seven Years War), the event being marked by drinking (as recorded in the Town books). The French Revolution had a dramatic polarising effect on Britain in the latter years of the 18th century. In Hawick there was a meeting of pro-war, anti-reform supporters in 1792, chaired by Lord Napier, leading to the following years being extremely politically charged, with animosity and suspicion between the 2 groups. The 'loyalist', pro-war group consisted mainly of wealthier men, while the 'reformist', anti-war group was mainly from the working classes. There were several specific incidents, such as 2 reformist publicans being denied licenses by the local J.Ps. Sympathisers of the Revolution were referred to as 'black-nebs'. There was a great enlisting into volunteer army units, prompted by a concern about French invasion, culminating locally in the 'False Alairm' of 1804. During the Napoleonic Wars there were French prisoners of war in Hawick. Huge numbers of local men fell in France during WWI and again during WWII, many still lying in unmarked graves. Hawick became twinned with the French town of Bailleul in 1973.

France (frawns) n. James (18th/19th C.) Supervisor of Excise in Hawick recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory.

the Franchise Agitation (thu-fran-chIz-aw-ji-tā-shin) n. name generally given to a series of political demonstrations during the summer and autumn of 1884, demanding equally voting rights for a much larger fraction of working men, particular in rural districts. In Hawick there was a march of approximately 6000 people along the High Street, the procession being 2 1/2 miles long, with 10 bands, along with many flags and banners. Several banners are preserved in the Museum, particularly from Dicksons and Laings. The Representation of the People Act (also known as the Third Reform Act), introduced by William Gladstone, was passed at the end of 1884.

Francis Hole (fran-sis-hōl) n. popular name for a pool in the Teviot, to the east of Denholm (mentioned by James Murray in 1863).

Francis' Well (fran-si-seez-wel) n. spring at the left-hand side of the main A7 just after Newton, to the north of Hawick. The origin of the name is uncertain, but could be related to St. Francis if connected with the nearby 'Hallywell Hill', which has its own 'Hally Well'. John Cavers was farmer at the steading there in 1797, when it is recorded as 'Franciswell'.

Frankie's (frawng-keez) n. Frankie's the Inn Place, bar at 14 Bourtree Place.

Frankie o the Stobs (frawng-kee-ō-thu-stōbz) n. nickname for Sir Francis Eliott.

Frank Place (frangk-plis) n. street near Loch Park that had tenements constructed on it in 1881 and demolished in 1977. The location was the southern end of Lothian and Garfield Streets, directly opposite the top end of Allars Bank. It was named for Frank Hogg, who lived near there at the time of his death.

Frank Place Brig (frangk-plis-brig) n. occasional name for the road bridge over the railway at the top of Allars Bank and adjacent to the former Frank Place, also sometimes called the Wellogate Brig.

Frank Scott Court (frangk-sko'-kōr') n. sheltered housing development off Buccleuch Street, built 2001/2 and named after ex-Provost Frank Scott. The bell from the Old Parish Church is displayed at the front of the building, having been cast at the Whitechapel Foundry in 1841.

Fraser (frā-zur) n. Alexander of Ewesdale (14th C.) recorded in 1348 when he was reported to have recently been Sheriff of Aberdeen. Although is family was based in the North and he was 'de Ewnysedale' in the Exchequer Rolls, his designation was probably Eswesdale and he was a descendant of John who acquired these lands through marriage. Alexander of Ewesdale (14th/15th C.) resigned his lands in Ewesdale sometime before 1426, when they were granted to Simon Little. This included Meikledale, Kirkton, Sorbie, etc. His former Barony of 'Malannok' was granted to Sir William Graham and his wife Marion Stewart (sister of the King) in 1430. Alexander (b.c.1790) from Tinwald in Dumfriesshire, he was a stockingmaker in Hawick. He was living at 12 O'Connell Street in 1851. His wife was Janet (or Jane) Ainslie and their children included James, Andrew, Anne (b.1822), Joan and Robert. Alexander (b.1830/1) from Cockburnspath, he was a railway porter in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at the Railway Stables. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Elizabeth Elliot. Andrew (b.1814/5) from Midlothian, he was a stockingmaker in Hawick. In 1861 he was living up the Dean. In 1843 he married Isabel (or Isabella) Rodget, who was from Hawick. Christian 'Christie' nee Clyde (b.c.1805) resident of Highchesters Cottages already a widow in 1841. In 1851 she was living at about 4 Mill Port. Her children incuded Christian, Jane, John, Rachel, Hugh and Isabella. David 'Davie' (1949/50–) local boxer, coached by Jock Thorburn. He had 80 victories from around 100 bouts, including 3 schoolboy championships and 2 at youth level. He represented Scotland in an international tournament at the age of 16. After injury and disappointment he chose not to follow the professional route, but instead coached with Hawick Amateur Boxing Club. He also set up his own club, based at the Royal Albert for several years from 1994. George (b.1809/10) from Sanquhar in Dumfriesshire. In 1851 he was an artillery pensioner living on Ladylaw Place. His wife was Barbara and their children (born in Trinidad, England and Ireland) included John, Thomas, Mary Ann, Janet and Helen. George Hardie (1823–81) second son of Bailie Robert Fraser and great-grandson of Bailie John Hardie. He was a draper by trade, succeeding his father in 'John Hislop & Co,', 51 High Street. First elected to the Council in 1853, he was twice a Magistrate, as well as a J.P., and continued on the reconstituted Council, for North High Street Ward. He was Junior Magistrate in 1859 when he became a Life Member of the Archæological Society. He was made Provost in 1868, serving until 1871. He was a Whig Liberal in politics. He was a member of the first School Board and of the Parochial Board. He also led the resignations from the 4th Roxburghshire Volunteers and became Lieutenant in the new 5th Roxburgh (Hawick Volunteer Corps). However, in 1863 he was involved in the argument between the two corps, which led to his dimissal and the disbanding of the 5th Roxburgh. The song 'Hawick Volunteers' was composed and first sung for him in 1860. He donated a coin from the time of William & Mary to the Museum in 1862 and 'screw of the first hosiery press used in Hawick by Bailie John Hardy' in 1877. He was a keen Common-Riding supporter and said to have had a fine tenor voice. He was also a leading light in the Masons, and involved in the formation of the Lodge St. James. In addition he was an early Trustee of St. George's Kirk. He was living at 15 High Street in 1851, partner in a draper's firm employing 10 men. He was living at 13 Teviot Crescent in 1861 and at 7 Teviot Crescent in 1875. In 1877 he donated to the Museum 11 volumes of the Kelso Mail covering some of 1799–1840. In 1845 he married Mary Anne Stewart, from Blair Atholl. Their children (some baptised in Hawick Free Kirk) included: Helen (or 'Ellen', b.1846); Robert (b.1849); John Stewart (b.1850); and Colin Arthur Campbell (b.1854). On his retiral he was presented with an inscribed tea set, later became landlord of the Imperial Hotel, and was buried in St. Mary's (note, his name is also sometimes 'Hardie'). George (19th C.) married Margaret Deans in Wilton in 1847. George (b.1830/1) frameworker in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at No. 21 Loan with his wife Isabella and 3 children. He married Isabella Maxwell (or Chambers) in 1852 and their children included Jessie (b.1853), Betsey and John. George, J.P. (d.1962) came to Hawick as Excise Officer in 1936. He served for 18 years on the Town Council starting in 1940 and was Provost 1945–58. He gave his name to Fraser Avenue. He died at his home in Edinburgh. George Watson reporter who covered rugby for the Hawick Express. He could be the George Watson who married Wilhelmina Glendinning (1891–1961). Ian Acting Father in 1994 and Common-Riding Committee Secretary since 2017. Jack

(20th C.) well-known local 'fixer-upper'. Brought up in Cavers, he worked as a joiner in Mansfield most of his life, and was famous for renovating old cars and bikes. He also rescued and restored the whistle from Blenkie's mill and the Willie Leggat statue. He took part in the John o' Groats to Land's End rally of Austin 7 enthusiasts in 1982 and 1992. He was an elder at Cavers Kirk. His son Kenny is a champion canoeist. James (b.1817/8) stockingmaker in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at Silverbuthall Cottage. His children included Eliabeth and Alexander. He could be the James who married Marianne Renwick in 1852. John (13th C.) married Alicia, daughter of William of Conisbrough, Lord of Staplegordon, in about 1245. He and his wife were granted the land of 'Rig', which were presumably somewhere in Dumfriesshire, and through her also gained lands in Ewesdale. He was presumably ancestor of the later Frasers of Ewesdale. John (17th/18th C.) preacher at Hassendean Kirk the last 2 Sundays before it was demolished. He went on to become the minister at Glencorse in 1691, and was transferred to Alness in 1695. There is an assignation against him in 1692 from Thomas Shiels (minister at Roberton), claiming the stipend of Hassendean to which he believed he had the right. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Darling and their daughter Jane was baptised in 1810. John (19th C.) baker and flour dealer at the Sandbed, listed in Pigot's 1837 directory. John Hislop (1818–65) merchant in Hawick, son of Robert. Like his father, he was a draper. He was recorded in Jedburgh Jail in 1848. In 1849 he was one of the trustees appointed to manage the business affairs of William Lindsay Watson. In 1851 he was a draper living with his father at 7 Teviot Crescent and in 1861 was a 'Linen & Woollen Draper', living at 15 High Street and employing 1 man and 3 apprentices. He appears to have died unmarried. He may be the John who donated coins to the Museum in 1861. He may also be the Bailie Fraser who became a life member of the Hawick Archæological Society in 1862. John (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Christina Rutherford and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1852. Kenneth 'Kenny' (1953/4–) son of Jack, he is known as a champion canoeist. For decades he could be seen regularly training on the Teviot and Alemoor Loch. He was part of the U.K. racing team in the 1980s and regularly toured Europe to compete. He was Scottish White Water Champion 7 times. He has continued to win events in the senior age categories. He worked as a motor vehicle lecturer at Henderson Technical College. Lesley daughter of Ian and Nancy. She studied at the Edinburgh College of Art. She has worked as a local photographer who produced 'Hawick Common Riding, An Illustrated Guide' along with Judith Murray in 2009. Her imaging and photography company is 'ILF Imaging', known for its extensive coverage of the Common Riding, as well as providing general photographic services. Along with her father she opened a photography shop at No. 2 Sandbed in 2009, moving to 1 Howegate in 2018. She designed the junior Mosstroopers' Club tie in 1995. She has been Treasurer of the Common-Riding Committee since 2017. She proposed the toast to the Common Riding at the 2018 Dinner. Mrs. ?? (d.1840) midwife in Hawick. Her death is recorded in 1840. Neil (19th C.) married Jane Stewart in Hawick in 1838. Peter (b.1793/4) from Tranent in East Lothian, he was a frameworker in Hawick. He was living on Ladylaw Place in 1851 and in 1861 was a widower living with his daughter Elizabeth on Wilton Terrace. His wife was Catherine (from Rhynie in Aberdeenshire) and their children included Elizabeth (who married Lewis H.J. Thornton), Jemima and at least one son. Bailie Robert (b.c.1795) from Selkirk, he was father of Provost George Hardie and a draper by trade. He took over the business of John Hislop, who may have been his uncle. His premises were at 7 Teviot Crescent. He is recorded as a merchant on Teviot Crescent on the electoral roll of 1832 and the censuses of 1841 and 1851 (when he was a widower). He was a good friend of William Laidlaw. Although his family joined the Free Kirk after the Disruption, he remained a staunch 'Auld Kirker'. He was listed as a Steward at the 1834 and 1836 Common-Riding Races. He was mentioned in the 1837 Commons inquiry into 'fictitious voters'; he swapped a liferent in Roxburghshire with one in Selkirkshire belonging to William Muir. In 1847 he was given the tack of the Waulk Mill in Selkirk. In 1849 he was appointed as one of the trustees to manage the business affairs of the deceased William Lindsay Watson. In the 1850s he was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District. He may be the Bailie who in 1865 donated to the Museum a shilling of Mary, Queen of Scots. He married Rebecca Crosby and their children included: Janet (b.1816), who married William Lindsay Watson; John Hislop (b.1818); Margaret (b.1821); George Hardie (1823–81), who became

Provost; and Rebecca. A portrait of him exists. Robert (19th C.) resident of Roberton. He married Janet Lindsay and their children (baptised in Roberton United Kirk) included: Jane (b.1846); Robert (b.1848); and James (b.1851). Robert (b.1832/3) son of William, he was a stockingmaker in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 35 Loan. He married Margaret Miller (daughter of William Miller and Robina Scott) in Hawick in 1860 and their children included Janet. He also had step-sons Robert and John Oliver. He may be the Hawick stockingmaker who was recorded in Hawick Jail in 1850 and Jedburgh Jail in 1849, 1850, 1860 and 1864. Roderick (18th/19th C.) married Janet Hart in Roberton in 1812. Sir Simon of Olivercastle (d.c.1291) from Peeblesshire, son of Sir Simon. He held extensive lands in Scotland, and was Keeper of Ettrick Forest, as well as Sheriff of Traquair and Peebles. In about the 1280s he was witness to a resignation of lands by Richard of Rule. In 1291 King Edward I ordered him to deliver harts to the Bishops of St. Andrews and Glasgow. His son, also Sir Simon, led the Scots to victory at the Battle of Roslin in 1303, refused to swear fealty to Edward, fought with Robert the Bruce, was captured by the English and was executed in London. Simon Lord Lovat (c.1667–1747) Chief of the Fraser Clan, he was famous for his belligerent nature and for changing allegiance, being a supporter of the House of Hanover in 1715 and of the Stuarts in 1745. He supposedly passed through Hawick along with the Jacobite army in 1745. There is a story told about a local man who acted as a guide and met him, later becoming a barber in Newcastle, and slitting the throat of one of the men who testified against Lovat. Defeated at Culloden, he was beheaded at the Tower of London, the last man to be executed in this way in Britain. Simon (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabella Martin in 1852 and their daughter Jane was baptised in 1854. William (d.1760) supposed Jacobite deserter who settled in the district and is buried in Teviothead churchyard, apparently at the age of 107. the Free Gairdeners (thu-free-gār-di-nurz) n. the British Order of Ancient Free Gardeners, a friendly society with Lodge No. 3465 operating in Hawick from the 1880s until the early 20th century. Dr. Barrie was the first and most enthusiastic member. There were 2 separate branches at one point, 'Flower of the Border', Hawick, No. 146 Border District, and 'Lily of the Border', Hawick, No. 6 Border District. There was also briefly a junior branch 'The Flowerbud of the Border' (Juvenile), No. 23 Border District. The National Archives have some of their records.

the Free Kirk (thu-free-kirk) n. the Free Church, established after the Disruption in 1843, when hundreds of Church of Scotland ministers left to form the Free Protesting Church. In Hawick Rev. John Wallace left as minister of the Parish Church along with about 600 of the congregation of 800. They met originally in the East Bank Meeting House, then built their own church in 1844. The site was purchased from Mr. Anderson, with Mr. Nixon of Lynnwood laying the foundation stone. This became St. George's Church, which was long afterwards known as the Free Church or Free Kirk, and is now renamed Teviot Church. A second congregation started meeting in the West-end in 1855, leading to the construction of the West Port Kirk in 1866. Another Free Church congregation, St. Andrew's, was founded in 1866, with the church itself constructed in 1868, to serve the northern part of town. There was also a Free Kirk started about the same time in the Borthwick (the Snoot), another in Denholm in 1844 and one at Wolfelee about 1849.

Freeman (free-mun) n. Patrick (17th/18th C.) charged in 1701 with going over the Border into England to get married. He is recorded giving evidence that the Burgh Officer was the first person to arrest him (i.e. that it was not done on the authority of any other court). Thomas (19th C.) married Jane Benson in Hawick in 1845. Walter (18th C.) clockmaker in Hawick. He was engaged by the Council in 1747 to fix and upkeep the clock on St. Mary's, with an annual salary of £1 5s. This included providing iron work for a dialplate on the west side and alterations to the dialplate on the east side. He was listed among those whowere owed money by the deceased William Scott of Whitehaugh in 1750. He is also recorded making 420 communion tokens and a stamp for Hawick Parish Kirk in 1751. In 1752 he was paid the remains of his salary for upkeep of the clock for a year. He may be the same as the Walter who led the 'Patriots' (or was at least related to him). He married Margaret Falside and their daughter Janet was baptised in 1758; the witnesses were William Dyce and Walter Ruecastle. This could be the same Janet whose funeral was recorded in East Bank Kirk in 1819. He is probably the Walter who was recorded renting the 'mortcloth' in Hawick in 1773 and also in 1774 for his 'goadsister'. He was probably the same watchmaker Walter whose daughter Isobel married John Clark in Edinburgh in 1780. He is probably the 'Walter Freemans, Watchmaker', whose death is recorded in Hawick in 1781. Walter (18th C.) leader of a secession movement in Hawick Kirk. He also led the 'Patriots', a group of 205 Burgesses and others who took the Town Council to court 1778–81, claiming they had improperly managed the Common on behalf of the Burgesses (particularly in letting a portion of it) and questioning their authority. They particularly complained about the Bailies, stating that they were 'generally a set of poor low men' and that 'he that drunk most in the Baillies' house had most interest in the decision'. In 1778 he and James Dryden were jailed in Hawick over the weekend and then taken off to Jedburgh Jail for another 2 days before being bailed (he is probably the one of the pair described as being 'in bad health' at the time). The Court of Session ruled in favour of the Magistrates and Council, but the outcome also led to the Council being fixed at 31 members and also the court costs led to the Town getting into debt. He could be the Walter 'Freedom' who witnessed a baptism for George Nicholson in Hawick in 1799. He could be the Walter whose child died in Hawick in 1821. William (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included Jean (b.1728) and Janet (b.1730). Dr. William (1751/2–1821) surgeon and liberal politics leader in Hawick in the latter part of the 18th century. He was said to be a 'blackneb' and had a portrait of Napoleon in his house (which apparently he would turn upside down when he disapproved of news of Napoleon's exploits). He was an early friend of Robert Wilson, apparently influencing his political and religious views; it was said that 'Dr. Freeman had made Rob Wilson a' but the soul'. He subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' in 1784. He paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in the period 1789–97. He is probably the William who married Helen Scott in Hawick in 1788. He seems likely to be related to Walter the clockmaker, perhaps his son, and possibly brother of the later Walter. He was buried at St. Mary's, his gravestone reading 'A man of sterling honour, integrity, and benevolence. A warm friend and affectionalte Relative. His talents as a professional man were of the highest order and were ever at the service of the poor' (also written 'Freman').

freen (freen) n., arch. a friend – 'My blessing be upon ye, Wattie, On' a yer freens, an' favourite dawtie . . . ' [JoHa], 'Jock glowrs aroond, an' spies a freen' . . . freendly society (freend-lee-su-sI-i'-ee) n. a benefit society, organised for mutual assistance among workers. The Hawick Friendly Society was the first such organisation in town, forming about 1790; the articles to be observed by the members of the 'Friendly Society at Hawick' was published in 1791. A second organisation formed about 1810, but both were dissolved by their members some time before 1840. The Foresters became important from the mid-19th century, with the Free Gardeners formed in the 1880s, and Trades Unions also appearing in the late 19th century to fill a similar need.

freendship (freend-ship) n. friendship – 'Teri-Bus is now a charm That keeps heart an' freendship warm For auld Hawick' [TK], 'And ye'll fin' the warmth o' freendship Down the lang years still the same' [WL].

French (french) n. Adam (d.c.1578) 8th Laird of Thornydykes in Berwickshire. He was son of Robert and Anne Home and grandson of Adam (who in 1502 was on the panel for Sir David Home of Wedderburn inheriting some of his father's lands around Lauder). He was a minor at the death of his father and had a charter from Thornydykes in 1555/6. He was involved in a contract relating to lands in Gordon in 1563 and in 1567 he had an action involving lands at 'Petcokkis'. In 1569 he acquired from Andrew Home, Commendator of Jedburgh Abbey, the lands of Ulston, Nether Crailing, Auld Jedburgh, Ruecastle, Abbotrule, 'Bowatsyde', Grange, Fodderlee, Over Bonchester, Mackside, Gatehousecote, Hartshaugh, Langraw, Raperlaw, Firth, Belses, Ancrum and others. This was for the sum of 30 hundred merks. In 1574/5 he was involved in a dispute over teinds in the Parish of Gordon. He married Margaret, daughter of Robert Hoppringle of Blindlee, and she died in 1582; her wills are registered in Edinburgh in 1584 and 1594. His children were: Robert, who succeeded; James, executor of his mother's will, who led an action against the Abbot of Jedburgh in 1583; and John, tutor of Thornydykes after his brother James died; Alexander, who was mixed up with the Earl of Bothwell; Thomas, who was in the King's service; Margaret; Christine; Jonet; and Eupham. Adam of Thornydykes (1599–1617) only son of Robert, he was 10th Laird of Thornydykes. He was also Laird of Abbotrule and other lands that had been purchased by his grandfather from Jedburgh Abbey. His uncle John was appointed as his tutor in 1604. It is said that at the age of 14 he was attending school in Haddington when he was kidnapped from the care of his guardian Sir John Home, by William Home of Hardiesmill, John Cranston of Moriston and Sir Patrick Chirnside of East Nisbet, taken to Berwick and married to Sir Patrick's daughter, Jane. This led to a trial before the Supreme Court of Scotland. However, the King finally allowed the marriage, but he died before there were any children. His 3 sisters, Jean, Alison and Margaret were served as his heirs in 1625. George (16th C.) 4th son of Adam, 6th Laird of Thornydykes. He is listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English in raids upon the farms of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. James (d.c.1604) 2nd son of Adam and Margaret Hoppringle. He acted as executor for his mother. In 1583 he instituted proceedings against the Abbot of Jedburgh. In 1588 his brother-in-law John Baillie of St. John's Kirk had a letter of reversion to him for the annual rents of the former lands of Jedburgh Abbey, including Abbotrule, Nisbet, Ruecastle, Over Bonchester, Mackside, Belses, Over Ancrum, etc. He died soon after his older brother Robert and his younger brother John became his heir. Robert (d.1603) son of Adam and Margaret Pringle, he was 9th Laird of Thornydykes and 2nd of Abbotrule. In 1582/3 he and his mother had an action against a number of men for spoliation of their lands of Jordanhill and East Gordon. He was part of a feud that resulted in the death of Ninian Spottiswood in 1588. He was denounced as a rebel in 1592 for helping the Earl of Bothwell. In 1589 he married Margaret, said to be only daughter and heiress of William Turnbull, younger of Bedrule (who pre-deceased his father), with her mother being Margaret, daughter of Sir John Home of Cowdenknowes; she died in 1593, leaving no children. He secondly married Margaret, daughter of Mark Home of Hardiesmill. Their children were: Adam, who succeeded; Jean, who married John, brother of William, Lord Cranston; Alison, who married Thomas Cranston of Huntliewood and secondly William Marjoribanks of Stainerig; and Margaret, who married Robert Brownfield of Todrig in Berwickshire. His brother John was appointed tutor to his son Adam in 1604. Robert of Frenchland (16th/17th C.) son of Robert, with his mother probably being sister of Christopher Halyday of Raehill in Annandale. He was served heir to his father in 1610. In 1613 he was a cautioner for John Johnstone of Westerraw to infeft Andrew, son of William Scott of Bowhill in some lands. He may be the French of Frenchland appointed to assist Walter Scott of Buccleuch to administer justice in the Middle Shires in 1622. In 1598 he married Isabell Scott, who was from the Bowhill Scotts. They had 9 children, including William (who succeeded), Adam (who later acquired Frenchland and Thornydykes), Margaret (who became co-heir and married her kinsman William French) and Marian (also co-heir, who married David French, her sister's brother-in-law). William (18th/19th C.) local man who got stuck in the cleuch on Toon-o-Rule farm one night while riding from Hawick to Abbotrule. It is said that he managed to pull himself out, but that his horse drowned, and the horse-shoes were found many years later when someone was casting peats.

frenfi (fren-fi) adj., poet. furious, wrathful – '...an' let thy frenfu' angir tak' haud o' thame' [HSR].

frennishin (fre-ni-sin) n., poet. a state of extreme agitation, rage, fury – 'He castet apon thame the frennishin o' his angir, wræth, an' indignatione ...' [HSR], 'Ye ruul the frennisin' o' the se; whan the waves o't ræise up, thou quashist thame' [HSR], a state of distraction, such as when a child is woken from sleep – 'He is ... in a frenishen' [JoJ] (there are spelling variants; also frainishin).

Fresall see Frissell

fresh (fresh) n., arch. a thaw, the breaking of a spell of frost – 'Atween a frost an a fresh = the setting-in of a thaw' [ECS].

fri (fri, fre, frā) prep. from – 'where div ee come fri?', 'Then can I be glad when sae far I am frae thee ...' [JoHa], '...A day frae Hawick's a day wasted!' [DH], '...frae ma hoose upon the rock' [JEDM], '...And keep oor dear hames frae disorders' [WS], 'I'll sing the test a Callant tries When far frae hame and weary' [RH], '...An' at his voice the deid folk leapt Frae oot their graves' [WP], also sometimes meaning 'of' – 'hei deid fri a hert attack', conj. from the time that – '...they are to be put in the jouggs all the time frae the people convenes till they go home again' [Ash1643], 'Frae she cam in, her tongue never devauldit' [GW] (the pronunciation varies, and can often be between the examples given; also spelled 'frae'; cf. the less common fra and the older threh).

Friarshaw (frI-ur-, fre-shaw) n. farm on the north side of the Ale Water, roughly between Riddell and Lilliesleaf. It was the seat of a branch of the Douglases, descended from the Cavers line (but with a genealogy that is not well established in detail). In 1563 William Gourlay warned George and Ralph Douglas to remove themselves from a husbandland there belonging to Andrew Douglas. William Douglas (d.1575) was probably the first Laird of these lands, followed by Andrew. It was valued at £5 12s 6d in 1592. In the 17th century the superiority was held by the Hamiltons, Earls of Haddington, along with other lands previously possessed by Melrose Abbey. James Shiel was there in 1628. It was valued at £285 13s 4d in 1643, 1663 and 1678 (including feu-duty of £13 6s 8d to the Earl of Haddington). It was still part of the Lordship of Melrose in 1670. In 1678 the feu duties were valued at £13 6s 8d, and held by the Earl of Haddington. Walter Riddell of Friarshaw is recorded in 1695. The lands were valued at £901 19s 4d in the 1740s. There were Turnbulls there in the late 18th century. In 1788 it was owned by Rev. William Campbell. Andrew Wilson was servant there in at least 1799–1801 and James Redford and William Riddell in 1801. The 1811 Land Tax Rolls lists the owner as William Scott of Friarshaw, with a value of £286 (plus £60 in teinds). There were Scott-Douglas owners in the 19th century, but by the 1870s it was part of the estate of the Sprots of Riddell. It was called 'Jerusalem' by the locals, and was once monastic property. Another farm to the north-west is called Friarshawmuir. The family of Douglas of Friarshaw also owned a piece of land in Edinburgh, west of Greyfriars' Kirkyard, which was purchased to extend the burial ground. The Douglases of Friarshaw were cadets of the Douglases of Cavers, differences by making the bordure nebuly – 'We'd cross the brig and thread the wood, And climb to Friarshaw, Where we can see the Minto Hills And rugged Ruberslaw' [FL] (the name probably comes from Middle and Old English 'frere sceagga', meaning 'friar's wood'; it first appears in 1563 as 'Freirschawe' and continues with similar spelling for the next century, being 'Freirshaw' in 1580, 'Freirschaw' in 1581, 'Freirshaw' in 1618, 'Friershawe' and 'friershaw' in 1678, 'Frier-shaw' in 1695 and 'Friershaw' in 1707; it is 'Freereshaw' on Pont's c.1590 manuscript map, 'Freereshaw' and 'Freersshaw' on Gordon's c.1650 maps and 'Freershaw' Blaeu's 1654 map).

fricht (fricht) n., arch. a fright – '…an' ane fricht til mine acquantince; thame that did see me owtbye flede frae me' [HSR], 'I was ane reproch amang a' mine enimies …an' ane fricht til mine acquantince' [HSR], 'Bairnies wi' it get sic frichts, There's no ane that sleeps soun' …' [TCh], '…Advisin' Jimmie not ti dee Wi' useless fricht' [WP], v. to frighten '…eneuch to fricht the verra whaups frae their haunts' [BM1907].

frichtfi (fricht-fi, -fu) adj., arch. frightful – 'There's whiles a wee thing that wags uncontrolled, And causes a frichtfu' skaith …' [WFC] (spelled 'frichtfu'' etc.).

fri'd (frid, fred) contr. from it – 'the trouble wi Gala is, oo're no fer enough fri'd', 'A was guy fer fri'd it the time', 'The water that cam' frae'd was caller and clear …' [JCG] (see also thrih'd).

Fridi (frī-di) n. Friday (also spelled 'Fridih'; note the pronunciation with ī rather than I).

the Fridi (thu-frī-di) n. Common-Riding Friday, being the Friday after the first Monday in June and the main day in the traditional celebrations, lasting almost a full 24 hours for the principals. The earliest it can be is 5th June and the latest is 11th June. It starts with the Drums & Fifes assembling at 6 a.m. in the Kirk Wynd, traditionally playing 'Teribus' and 'John Paiterson's Mare Rides Foremaist'. It proceeds with the Snuffing and the Cornet's Breakfast, with the Drums and Fifes continuing on a route round the old parts of the Town. The Cornet then gets the Flag and walks with it to the Tower, where the 'Auld Sang' is sung. The Procession of the officials' motorcade plus riders then starts, going through Wilton then along the High Street and up the Loan for the Chase. The married riders go to the front as usual, this being the only time anyone rides past the Flag. After the Chase up the Nip Knowes the Acting Father takes the Flag to St. Leonard's, where the main 'Hut' takes place. Here the curds and cream are served, which were ordered on the Thursday of the previous week. After the Hut, the mounted procession proceeds round part of the Common for the actual Riding of the Marches, with the Cornet performing the Cutting of the Sod. They then make their way to the Mair, with the Flag being placed on the roof of the committee room during the Races, and the Cornet being presented with a race-crop. After the events at the Moor, the riders proceed via Crumhaughhill and Myreslawgreen, where they receive refreshments. The Principals then go to the Coble Pool for the Dipping of the Flag, then the Song Singing, before returning the Flag to the Town Hall for the night. Then there is the Cornet's Dinner and finally the Ball, ending with the climb to the summit of the Mote at dawn. Before 1752 it was fixed as the last Friday in May, but since then (largely because of the 11 day shift to the Gregorian calendar) it has been in June. In the early 19th century the Magistrates and retinue left town at 10 a.m. and then the cavalcade returned to town after the Races, 3-abreast, led by the Town Clerk and the band. They would then march the Burgh boundaries and adjourn to the Town Hall for dinner. Until about the 1880s, after the 'mounting song', the precession would walk to the Senior Magistrate's house to collect the Flag, and then carry out a short 'chase' in the direction of Hornshole, before proceeding to the Howgate. The modern schedule was essentially set down in the 1880s.

Friend (frend) n. Edmund (19th C.) native of somewhere along the Malay Archipelago. He was given as a gift to Gilbert Elliot, Lord Minto by one of the Rajahs of the kingdoms there in about 1811, as part of negotiations for support against the Dutch and French. Lord Minto emancipated these slaves, but kept the two eldest boys as domestic servants; he chose the surnames 'of Homo [man] and Amicus [friend], that I may always be put in mind to treat my humble property like men and friends instead of cattle', based on a quotation from Seneca. Along with Francis Man he became part of the household staff at Minto, one of them being groom. However, it is unclear what became of them. Gilbert (1825–1911) son of John and Mary Scott. He was baptised in Minto Parish and in 1841 and 1851 was living with his mother and siblings in Denholm. In 1861 and 1871 he was a gardner living at Milnthorpe, Westmorland. He married Elizabeth (Betsy) Wilson and their children included: George (b.1847/8); Elizabeth (b.1855/6); Mary (b.1857/8); Margaret (b.1863/4); Gilbert (1865–1930); Catherine (b.1867/8); and Jane (b.1871). He died in Clitheroe, Lancashire. John (19th C.) married Mary Scott in Ancrum Parish in 1824. They had 3 children baptised in Minto Parish: Gilbert Elliot (b.1825); Adam (b.1827); and Agnes (b.1830). Given the name of the first child, it seems very likely that John was in fact the same man called 'Edmund' in a letter from Lord Minto, i.e. that he was originally from Bali or one of the neighbouring regions of what is now Indonesia. His wife (presumably widow) was living in Denholm (probably Sunnyside) in 1841, along with children Gilbert and Mary and working as a dressmaker. In 1851 the family were probably on Eastgate in Denholm, his wife then a widow, his sons both being gardeners and his daughter Agnes a baker's wife with a grand-daughter Mary Beattie also living with them. His son Gilbert married Betsy Wilson and lived in Heversham, Westmorland and his grandson, also Gilbert lived in Clitheroe, Lancashire.

frig (frig) v., arch. to potter, to indulge in trifles, to dress showily, primp – 'Set ee up wui eer feiky mollups an eer friggeen an falderals! Soem folk heh sic a tredd wui thersels, – primpin!' [ECS].

frisel (fri-sel) n., arch. metal used for striking a flint – 'The donations to the Museum during the month comprised the following: 6 frisels, Border district . . . ' [HAST1900].

Frissell (fri-sel) n. Andrew (16th C.) son of the Laird of Overton and brother of William. Along with his brother he was accused of being involved in 2 raids on English farms in 1589. David (15th C.) appointed one of the procurators of Thomas Armstrong of Mangerton in 1482 when Mangerton passed to David Scott of Branxholme. His name is recorded as 'Dauid Fresell'. Jean (17th C.) listed at Mervinslaw among the poor of Southdean Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. John (15th C.) recorded as 'Johannem Fresell de Vuertone' (probably Overton) when he was on the panel for James Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick in 1484. He may be the Laird of Overton fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493. John of Overton (16th C.) listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English in raids upon the farms of the lower Borthwick valley belonging to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. Patrick (15th C.) recorded as 'senior in Smailholm' in 1494/5 when he was found to be infirm at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1509 as part of the inquest panel for ruling on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffship of Roxburghshire by James Douglas. In 1517 he was 'Robertum Fresal de Buntoune' when he was on the panel of 'retour' for Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. Thomas (16th C.) tenant at 'Efflesche', i.e. Effledge in Cavers Parish. In 1535 along with Arthur Douglas he had 13 cows and oxen stolen, with William Scott 'in Layk' being accused. They are described as 'common thieves of Liddesdale. He is probably related to the previous Robert. William (14th/15th C.) recorded in the early 1400s when a certain Thomas [surname obliterated] was granted the church of St. Cuthbert 'de Ewsdamlui' following his death. His surname was recorded as 'Fresellis'. Perhaps the same William 'Fresal' was recorded in 1424 when he was on a 'retour of inquest' in Hawick for settling claims to lands on Hownam. Most of the other men were Teviotdale Lairds. William of Overton (16th C.) recorded in 1590 when he and his brother Andrew were named along with Rutherfords, accused of a raid into England. They were both also among a group of Teviotdale men accused of rieving from Woodburn in 1589, and were there said to be 'sons to the Laird of Overton' (formerly 'Fresal, 'Fresale', 'Fresel', 'Fressell', etc.; note that the name may have been an early variant of Fraser).

frit (fri') n. fruit – 'For aw hae hed a taste o' the frit o' knowledge trei . . . ' [MB] (also spelled 'fruit' in analogy with other 'ui' words, even when pronounced with an i).

the Frostlie Burn (thu-frost-lee-burn) n. stream that rises as the Linhope Burn and runs roughly north along the A7 to reach the Teviot near Teviothead. It gives its name to the general area, which is also sometimes 'Frostylee'. A description of Roxburghshire in 1649 states that it 'begins at Hard well, and runs into Tiot at the Falineshe' – 'Where rising Teviot joins the Frostylee, Stands the huge trunk of many a leafless tree . . . Since that bold chief who Henry's power defied, True to his country, as a traitor died' [JL] (it first appears as 'Froserlie' in 1604, then 'Frostelie' in 1610 and 'Frostile Burn' in 1649; it is 'Frostanly B.' and 'Frostalie b.' on Blaeu's 1654 maps, but is actually the Mosspaul Burn labelled incorrectly on the Ewesdale map; the origin is probably 'the forester's clearing' in Old English).

Frostylee (fros-tee-lee) n. an old name for the Frostlie Burn and for the steading there. This was part of the extensive lands of Ringwoodfield as part of the Buccleuch estates in 1660. It was listed in 1653 and 1663 among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch, being a 10 shilling land along with Linhope and Phaup; these were united with lands in Wilton and others into 'the tenement of Blackgraine' – 'The gear was driven the Frostylee up, Frae the Frostylee unto the plain, Whan Willie has looked his men before, And saw the kye right fast drivingi' [T], 'Richt ower frae Frostylee To Kersop in Siccan Stour, We garr'd the Southrons flee Wi' mony a clash and clure' [TK] (also written 'Frostlie'; it is 'Frosterlie' in 1653 and 'Frostlie' and 'Frosterlie' in 1661 and 1663; 'Frostālie b.' is marked on Blaeu's 1654 atlas).

Fulton (ful'-, fool'-in-) n. lands between Bedrule and Fodderlee, once the site of a small village. There is a ruined 15th century pele tower there. Adam Turnbull is recorded there in 1390. John Turnbull of 'Foultoun' took part in 1426 in the inquiry into the leprosy of John Turnbull of Minto. Thomas and Roland Turnbull were recorded there in 1493 and Cock Turnbull, William White and Robert White in 1494/5. Thomas Turnbull was tenant there in 1501 and George Russell in 1502. In 1502 some Olivers were allowed to compone for stealing 100 of the Laird of Bedrule's sheep from there at different times. In 1516 James V granted remission to several Turnbulls, including Adam, George and Andrew in Fulton. The tower is recorded being burned the Earl of Hertford's men in 1545. It was the home of Margaret Home of Cowdenknowes in the 1570s, before her marriage to William Turnbull of Bedrule, and then was a Turnbull stronghold. In the 1580s it was the seat of Walter, heir apparent of Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. A letter of 1602 from William Turnbull to his father-in-law Thomas Ker of Cavers describes how he took possession of the lands and lists the tenants there at that time. In 1619 John Stewart of Traquair accused several Turnbulls of stealing wood from his lands at Huntliehill; this included Walter in Fulton and his son Thomas, as well as Robert, Mungo and Robert 'Fendie' Turnbull and James Ainslie, who were also there. In 1623 Andrew Paterson, tenant there, was accused of stealing an ox and a cow, but found not guilty. The Kers were granted the lands in 1623, along with other Turnbull possessions (probably on default of loans). It was among lands owned by Sir Thomas Ker in 1643, valued at £440. William Turnbull was there in 1690, George Scott in at least 1692–1703 and George White in 1694. It was owned by John Ker of Cavers Carre in 1788. William Elliot of Wells bought the lands from the Cavers-Carre family in 1801. It was among lands owned by William Elliot of Bedrule in 1811. The minister of Bedrule formerly had the right to cut turf annually on the moor here. A Roman coin, specifically a denarius of Augustus, was found to the west of the tower. Further to the south-east is a possible ancient enclosure (the name occurs in 1296 as 'Fougheltona', is 'Foultoun' in 1390, 'Foultone' in about 1390, 'Foultoune' in 1426, 'foultoune' in 1493, 'foultoun' in 1494/5, 'Fowltoun' in 1501, 'foultoun' in 1502, 'Foultoun' in 1516, 'Folton' in 1545, 'Foultoun' in 1583/4, 'Fultoune' in 1643 and 1678, 'Faltoune' in 1684, 'ffoultoun' in 1690 and 'Foultin' in 1694; it is marked as 'Foultoun' on Pont's c.1590 manuscript map and Gordon's c.1650 map and 'Foultoune' on Blaeu's 1654 map; the origin is probably Old English 'fugol tun', meaning 'bird farm').

Fulton (fool'-in) n. Alexander (b.c.1780) servant at Mackside according to the ballot for the Militia in Southdean Parish. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, living at Skelfhill in 1736, when his son Robert was baptised. He is probably related to his contemporary John. James (18th/19th C.) stocking needle maker on the High Street, listed in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His son William was baptised in 1715. John (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded at Denholm in 1736. His children included: Margaret (b.1736); William (b.1740); and Janet (b.1747). Perhaps the same John was married to Janet Hogg and had an unnamed child baptised in Cavers in 1751. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Appletreehall in 1743 and 1744 and Burnhead in 1747. He married Margaret Amos in 1737 and their children included: Isobel (b.1740); Janet (b.1743); Gideon (b.1744); Bessie (b.1746); John (b.1747); Thomas (b.1750); Isabel (b.1753); Margaret (b.1755); Mary (b.1757); and Gideon (again, b.1760). The witnesses in 1743 were James Dryden and Walter Scott and in 1744 were James Dryden and Adam Armstrong. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, perhaps son of John. He was living in Denholm in 1777 and Denholm Dean in 1779 and 1783. His children included: John (b.1768); Janet (b.1770); Robert (b.1777); William (b.1779); Alexander (b.1783); Margaret (b.1786); James (b.1789). William (1794–1875) first (and possibly only) Governor of Hawick Jail. He was born in Jedburgh, son of John and Rachel Watson. He was wounded in Holland in the 1st (Foot) Regiment, being struck in the face and chest by a bullet, and being pensioned out of the army. He was then a roadman at Castleweary for about 25 years (where he is recorded in 1841), before becoming farmer at Mertin's House (recorded in 1851). He is said to have been ruined as a farmer on account of his stackyard being burned down 2 or 3 years in a row, and was succeeded at Martin's House by the Knoxes. He then became Governor of Hawick Jail (on Allars Bank), but it is said that his wife did not enjoy the situation and he instead became a forester at Eildon Hall, farmed at Mertoun House and moved to Denholm. He married Margaret, daughter of John Cairns and Elizabeth Louisa Thorburn, and she died at Martin's House in 1859, aged 63. His children were: John (1815–1903), who emigrated to Ontario, Canada; Elizabeth (1818–1904), who died in Appleby; James (1820–86), born at Alton, died in Manitoba; Mary (b.1824), who married Walter Riddell and live in Hawick; Anne (1827–1909), who married John Scott and lived at Castleweary; William Scott (1831–91), a banker in Appleby. He died at 4 O'Connell Street and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery (formerly written 'Foultain', 'Foulton', 'Fultan', etc.).

Fulton Toor (ful'-, fool'-in-toor, -tow-ur) n. ruined peel tower dating from the 16th century, about 1½ miles south of the village of Bedrule, on the side road between Bedrule and Fodderlee. It was long a stronghold of the Turnbulls. The tower is recorded being burned the Earl of Hertford's men in 1545. Tradition holds that the last occupant of the tower was a strong Turnbull who was overcome by the Kers of Ferniehirst, pouncing upon him while he was singing to his infant child on his knee: 'Little wat ye wha's coming, Jock and Tam and a's coming'. The remains of the tower are one storey high and surrounded by turf covered foundations of out-buildings. The dimensions are about 7 m by 9 m, and oblong in plan, with a circular stair-tower on the east. The walls of the tower were repaired around 1880 to preserve the ruin.

the Fyre Brigade (thu-fīr-bree-gād) n. municipal fire service within Hawick, in early days operating out of the old Town House. The Council first resolved to purchase a fire engine in 1809, and it arrived from London in 1812. Prior to that the Burgh had a few leather buckets, a couple of ladders and several iron hooks on poles for dealing with burning thatch. The new 'engine' consisted of a carriage on a swivel, several lengths of pipe and many leather bags for carrying water. A force of about 50 volunteers was established in 1814, but at first were only paid with ale! A report of 1836 states that the fireman were paid a total of £5 annually. The engine was adapted several times an additional one purchased in 1847. By the late 1800s the engine was pulled by 3 horses yoked together; pictures exist from this period, as well as a short film of about 1900. The engine acquired in 1894 was a Merryweather Greenwich Gem, pulled by horses until a motorised engine replaced them in 1918; a second engine was purchased in 1931. The first uniforms were simply white jackets. The uniform issued in 1882 consisted of a blue coat, white linen trousers and helmet. Hawick's first actual fire station was constructed in 1857 at Slitrig Hall, 2–6 Old Manse Lane (at the end of Slitrig Bank), where some evidence of the original building's use can still be seen. This station served the town through the rest of the 19th century and into the early 20th. A new Fire Station was constructed on Commercial Road in 1914, which in turn was replaced with the new headquarters on Wilton Hill in 1971. The Hawick Fire Brigade became part of the National Fire Service in 1941. A full time brigade started in 1963, along with the purchase of a new engine. It was later incorporated into the Lothian and Borders Fire Brigade and in 2013 the local brigade became part of the Scottish Fire and Rescue Service (see also the Fyre Station).

the English force) in 1570; Branxholme, Whitchester and the neighbourhood were burned by the English in 1533; Goldielands (and surrounding farms) burned by the Kers and English in 1548; 'ye fyer at Wal. Scott's' was recorded in 1732; in 1773 the Burgh Officer was paid 'for watching the town after fire'; the False Alairm 1804; Dangerfield Mills 1842; Weensland Mill 1852; Wulton Mills 1867; Lynnwood Mills 1869; the Corn Mill 1870; Dangerfield Mills 1872; St. Mary's 1880; Innes, Chambers & Co. 1920; St. Andrew's Kirk 1922; High School 1925; Pringle's Rodono 1939; Turnbull's, Slitrig Crescent 1940; the Wee Thea 1955; Turner & Rutherford's, Mansfield Mills 1955; the Paddock at the Mair 1957; Turnbull's the Dyers, Slitrig Crescent 1959; Scoon & Hood's 1959; Wilson & Glenny's 1959; Ann Howard's, Heronhill 1959; gas explosion, Lynnwood Road 1963; Blondette's c.1988; the Croon 1990; Humphrey's (Corn Exchange) 1992; Hogg's Mill 1999; Weensland Mill 1999; the Auld Fyre Station 2002; Watson's Cairdin Shed 2003; Dangerfield Mill 2003; Lyle & Scott's, Burnfoot 2005 – 'Hawick had been twice burned, and the fealty of the people twice proved by fire' [RW]. Many nearby houses have been destroyed in fires, including: Stobs 1712; Ancrum 1873, 1885; Linden Park 1921; Riddell 1942; and Wolfelee 1977.

the Fyre Station (thu-fīr-stā-shin) n. Hawick's initial fire station was in part of the old Town House. A new station was built at the end of Slitrig Bank in 1857, perhaps including parts of an earlier house. This had an arched entranceway for the vehicles and roundel windows above. The location was presumably chosen for its proximity to water in the centre of the Town; however, it later proved too inconvenient for the larger fire engines to negotiate the narrow streets there. So a specially built Fire Station was constructed on Commercial Road, designed by Alex Ingles and completed in 1914. The old station was converted into a meeting house by the Christian Brethren, renamed Slitrig Hall. The arch was bricked up and a stage was included in the interior. This was converted into a residential property in 2016, with the arch turned into a large window; additionally the baptismal pit (perhaps once a maintenance pit for the fire engines) was retained. The new station on Wilton Hill was opened in 1971. The old Commercial Road building became part of the Town yards, but being largely derelict was a victim of arson, and demolished in 2002.

Gadd (gawd) n. Job (1786–1869) English-born stocking-maker of the mid-19th century. He was born in Derbyshire, son of Thomas and Ann Follows. He came to Hawick some time in the 1830s, moving from Shepshed, Leicestershire. He was fond of giving speeches, and for a time was known as 'the Dumb Precentor' because he took over the Precentor's seat in the Parish Church when the Precentor occupied a seat in the choir, even although he never himself sang a note. The family were living on Walter's Wynd in 1841, at about 62 High Street in 1851 and at 1 Teviot Place in 1861. He married Catherine Foreman (1789–1850) in 1810. Their children, baptised in Shepshed, included: Ann (1812–28); Sarah (b.1815), who married Thomas Beresford in Leicestershire; Job (b.1817), also a stocking-maker in Hawick; Mary (b.1820), who married Alexander Mitchell in Melrose in 1841; Catherine (b.1823), who married John Gordon in Kelso in 1844; Martha (b.1825), who married stocking-maker James Harkness in Hawick in 1851; Jane (b.1827); Ann (again, b.c.1830), who married Peter Butler in Hawick in 1849 and died in Molong, New South Wales; and James (b.c.1832). He appears to have secondly married Margaret Halliday (from Lochmaben) in Hawick in 1854. Job (b.1817) son of Job, he was a stockingmaker like his father. He was born in Leicestershire and moved to Hawick as a child. He married Jane Scott in Hawick in 1842 and their children included Job (b.1843/4) and Elizabeth (b.1844/5). In 1856 he secondly married Ann Pringle, and with her had further children Robert (b.1857), Catherine (b.1861) and James (b.1863). The family were living at 12 Sandbed in 1861 (also written 'Gad' and 'Gedd').

Gadeni (gaw-de-nee) n. an ancient tribe that lived south of the Forth, including present-day Lothian and Tweeddale, according to Roman geographers. The central town, sometimes called 'Gadanica' or 'Gadenica', is supposed to have been near Jedburgh, but has also fancifully been suggested to have been nearer to Hawick (e.g. at Chapelhill). There is controversy over whether they existed at all, or whether the appearance of the name in some versions of Ptolemy's 'Geography' are an error for 'Otadini' (the same as the Votadini).

gainage (gā-neej) n., arch. the instruments of tillage, the lands held by base tenure (noted by J. Jamieson as an old Roxburghshire word).

gainer (gā-nur) n., arch. a gander, a stupid person – 'Ye'll maybe haud me but a cacklin' ganner' [JoHa], v. to wander, go about aimlessly.

gainit (gā-nee', -ni') pp., arch. gained – '... his richt han' an' his haly ærm heth gainet him the victerie' [HSR], '... gif he sall hear thee, thou hest gainet thy brither' [HSR].

gair (gār) adj., poet. greedy, covetous – 'Hark! how gair Cumclutch, 'mid his satellites, Wi' brazen lungs and trumpet-roaring throat' [JoHa], 'Thus a close-fisted, penurious person is usually described as 'gair gaun' ' [RG] (also 'gare').

gair (gār) n., arch. a strip of green grass on a hillside, patch of fertile land among heather or barren land, hence a strip in general – '... from a stone at Shielswood march on the little heathery rig, and then down a green gare inclining to the right, as you go eastward, which gare goes into Wooburn' [DCW1765], 'Gair, Gare. The term is used to denote any thing resembling a strip or streak; as, a blue gair in a clouded sky, (synon. bore,) a red gair in a clear sky, Roxb.' [JoJ] (also written 'gare'; the word survives in some place names, such as 'Cat Gair' in the upper Borthwick).

Gair (gār) n. former farmstead in the Borthwick valley, mentioned in records from the mid-17th century. It lay in the part of Roberton that was previously in Hawick Parish, on the south side of the valley, probably near Todshawhaugh. John Pringle was recorded there in 1755 and Robert Scott in 1769 (probably related to the Scots for a strip of green on a hillside; it is 'Gare' in 1769).

Gair (gār) n. farm by the Tima Water in the Ettrick Forest. The house was built around 1760. Andrew Laidlaw was tenant there in the mid-18th century and Walter Laidlaw later in the 18th century (also called 'the Gair').

gairden (gār-din, -deen) n. a garden – 'Ane gairden fenset in is my tittie, my spuuse ...' [HSR], 'My! Sic a floors ee heh in eer gairdeen' [ECS], '... And the blackies whusslin owre a' the braes and gairdens!' [DH], 'somebody telt Wullie there wuz a big Hogmanay pairty in the gairdens at Princes St.' [JCo], '... That it ended in ablow the swing In the gairden at Wudend' [IWL], v. to garden (also sometimes 'gairdeen').

gairdener (gār-din-nur) n. a gardener – '... she's still an active gairdener, though now approachin 90' [IWL] (also written 'gaird'ner').

Gairdener's Haughs (gār-di-nurz-hawchs) n. Gardener's Haughs, a former name for the Playing Fields off Buccleuch Road. This is recorded in a boundary dispute of the late 18th century between Elliot of Langlands and the Duke of Buccleuch (also written 'Gardenershaugh').

gairdenin (gār-de-nin) n. gardening – 'Hab says it's a game played against the wather, the same as gairdenin ...' [DH].

Gairden Knowe Park (gār-din-now-pawrk) n. former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, listed as 'Garden Know Park' in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls.

gairden-rake (gār-din-, -deen-rāk) n. a garden rake – 'Examples of raik, rake, to raik, to rake, etc.: – Gairdeen-raik, muck-raik, beier-raik' [ECS].

Gairdner (gārd-nur) n. (Gardner) George (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He is probably the George, son of James, baptised in Hawick in 1716. His wife was Mary Porteous (or 'Partis') and their children included: Walter (b.1742); James (b.1743); Janet (b.1744); George (b.1746); Andrew (b.1756); Mary (b.1758); Isabel (b.1762); and Margaret (b.1765). The witnesses in 1743 were ex-Bailie William Tudhope and mason Andrew Turnbull, in 1744 were glover John Scott and merchant William Oliver, and in 1762 were tanner John Elliot and Church Officer Alexander Bunyan. In 1758 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Rae and Margaret Gardner (perhaps his sister) and another in 1760 for shoemaker James Porteous. In 1764 he witnessed a baptism for weaver Charles Scott and his wife Janet Porteous (who may have been his sister-in-law). He may be the shoemaker of that name who witnessed a baptism in 1786 for fellow shoemaker John Wiens. Gideon (d.1702) gardener in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers' list for the new Kirk bell. He was a resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. In 1701 he witnessed a baptism for Adam Scott, along with miller James Paterson. He married Margaret Davidson and their children included: James (b.1686). Probably the same Gideon later married Margaret Paterson (unless there is an error in surnames and there was only one wife). Their children included: Margaret (b.1700), who in 1719 married William Turnbull, weaver near the Westport; and Isobel (b.1702). The witnesses in 1700 were merchant George Martin and glover John Harrt. The baptism in 1702 was posthumous, with James Paterson, the child's uncle, making 'faith for her education'; the witnesses included Robert Thomson in Newmill and James

Scott 'Ormiston'. James (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick Parish. He witnessed baptisms in 1721 for merchant John Johnston in Hawick and in 1723 for workman James Dickson. In 1713 he married Isobel Renwick. Their children included: John (b.1714); George (b.1716); Margaret (b.1718); and Mary (b.1722). The witnesses in 1718 were Thomas Hardie and David Miller and in 1722 were gardener John (surely a relative) and Beadle John Scott. He may be the James who witnessed baptisms in Wilton in 1730, 1733 and 1736 (along with John) for Robert Renwick, who lived at the Sandbed (and may have been related to his wife). It sems likely he was the James 'only lawful son of John Gardner younger, gardner in Hawick', who in 1740 purchased the lands of 'Marilaws croft' (i.e. Morlaw's Croft), with George Langlands of that Ilk as superior; in 1756 he was 'designed younger, shoemaker in Hawick', when he sold the property to mason Adam Scott. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Learmonth and their daughter Barbara was baptised in 1761. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Murray and their son James was baptised in 1641. John (17th C.) gardener in Hawick. In 1691 he was fined for not becoming a Burgess after being requested several times, and then 'out of higher contempt of the baylyeas yr awthoritie did run his way down the Tolbuith stairs'. Probably the same man was 'oest the water' (i.e. west of the Slitrig) on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He is probably the gardener listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4 and the gardener who witnessed baptisms for gardener Thomas Boyd in 1699, George Andrew (servant to Douglas of Cavers), Robert (Lord) Oliver in 1704 and for shoemaker Robert Oliver in 1706. He is probably the John who, along with William (perhaps his brother or son) witnessed a baptism in 1709 for carrier John Hardie. He may be the John who was fined £10 in 1691 because he tried to run away down the Tolbooth stairs when cited by the Bailies. He seems likely to be the 'John Gardner younger, gardner in Hawick' whose 'only lawful son' James was in 1740 assigned the lands of 'Marilaws croft' (i.e. Morlaw's Croft); this suggests there was an earlier John. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, probably the second son of John who got married in 1716. In 1718 he was 'in Sandbed' when he and flesher Robert Renwick (also at the Sandbed) witnessed a baptism for innkeeper Adam Richardson. He may also be the John 'Gardner' (apparently written as 'Glendinnen' in one record) who witnessed a baptism in 1718 for flesher George Renwick. He was living at the Sandbed in 1721. In 1730 and 1736 (along with James) he witnessed baptisms for Robert Renwick, who also lived at the Sandbed. He married Isobel Wilson (or 'Wilke' or 'Wilkison') in 1716; he was recorded as 2nd son to John in Wilton Parish and she was servant to Mr. James Innes. Their children included: John (b.1716) and Margaret (b.1717), baptised in Hawick; and James (b.1719), Janet (b.1721) and Isobel (b.1723), baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1721 were another John and William Gardner (who were surely relatives). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at the Sandbed in 1725. He appears to be distinct from the John who was married to Isobel Wilkie and lived at the Sandbed at the same time (and whose child's baptism he witnessed in 1721). He married Mary Simpson in 1721, the marriage being proclaimed in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. Their children included: an unnamed child (b.1723); and Walter (b.1725). The witnesses in 1725 were John and Walter Scott. John Waldie (19th/20th C.) farm steward for the Earl of Minto at Hassendeanbank. In 1892 he married Helen Dickson, daughter of William Elliot and Christina Pow. His son Andrew (born before their marriage) took over as farm steward after him. The other children emigrated and were William, Christina Elliot, John, Betsy Waldie, Mary Helen McCreadie and James ('Jim'). Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He was recorded at the Sandbed in 1697. He married Agnes Scott and their children, baptised in Wilton, included: William (b.1697); and Agnes (b.1699), who married gardener Walter Scott in 1722. The witnesses in 1697 were John and Robert Scott. Jean (b.1708), baptised in Wilton with no mother's name given, may also be his child. It is also possible that William (b.1683), baptised in Hawick, was also his child. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Turnbull and their children included: Robert (b.1710). William (17th/18th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He was listed as a gardener among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for John Tait (whose wife may have been a relative) in 1696. He could be the William, married to Agnes Scott, whose son Robert was born in Wilton in 1697. He is probably the gardener who witnessed baptisms for weaver Andrew Jardine, younger, in 1703, 1711 and 1713. In 1703 he witnessed a baptism for fellow gardener John Vair and in 1717 another for James Richardson. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Isobell Morton in Hawick in 1702. Their children included Agnes (b.1705), with witnesses Michael Bridges and Adam Jardine. William (b.1683) born in Hawick, son of Robert. He may be the William who, along with John (perhaps his brother) witnessed a baptism in 1709 for carrier John Hardie. He is probably the merchant who witnessed baptisms in 1710 for carrier David Wilson and in 1712 for carrier John Hardie. He is probably the merchant William who was elected as Cornet in 1710; if so he cannot be the William who married Isobell Morton in Hawick in 1702, but could be the William who married Agnes Aitkin in August of 1710. Their children included: Margaret (b.1711); William (b.1713); and John (b.1716). He is probably the William, merchant of Hawick recorded in 1721 when his servant Thomas Weddell was rebuked for fighting on the Sabbath (spelled 'Gardiner', 'Gardner', 'Garner' and variants).

Gairie Gill (gā-ree-gil) n. stream that rises fairly close to the Nine Stane Rig and runs south to join the Roughley Burn.

gairtens (gār-tens) n., pl., arch. ribbon-grass, Phalaris arundinacea (also lady's gairtens).

gait (gā') n., arch. a goat – '... they hair is als ane flok o' gaits, that kythe frae Muunt Gildad' [HSR], '... an' he sall shede them ane frae anither, as ane shepherd sheddith his sheep frae the gaits' [HSR].

gait-berry (gā'-be-ree) n., arch. the berry of the bramble (noted as an 'old name' in Teviotdale by J. Jamieson).

gaiter (gā'-ur) n., arch. a sheaf of corn set up to dry, with the tops tied together and with their bottoms spread out (also gaitin).

gaiter-trei (gā'-ur-trī) n., arch. the bramble bush – 'Gaiter-tree, An old name given to the bramble, Teviotd.' [JoJ].

gaitin (gā'-in) n., arch. the act of setting up corn sheaves to dry, a single sheaf of corn, tied near the head and spread out at the foot to dry more quickly, a stack of corn set up in this way (noted by J. Jamieson; cf. gaiter).

gaivel (gā-vul) n., arch. a gable – 'Item, whatsomever person that mindes to big ane house, he sall haif half gewill of his nichbour's rowmes, for the whilk he sall haif libertie to big and lay to his gewill' [BR1640] '... wer solemly sworne and admitt marchers of the toune betwixt neighbour and neighbour annent the marching of yr. yards and gavell ...' [BR1686], '... the gavel to be built with stone and lime, with three stone chimneys in the south end ...' [JJV], '... at the 'gavel' of the houses belonging to Mrs. Inglis and Mrs. Gladstanes' [WAPJ] (also written 'gavel'; formerly 'gewill' and variants).

Gala (gaw-lu, gaw-la, gaw-li) n. Galashiels, the traditional rival town of Hawick. It is built in the narrow valley of the Gala Water near the confluence with the Tweed on the A7 and a former station on the Waverley Line. It was known as a producer of a kind of coarse grey (or sometimes blue) cloth in the 17th and 18th centuries, and there were early waulk mills there, used by weavers throughout the district. The town developed along with the textile industry, and the Scottish College of Textiles is here, part of Heriot-Watt University since 1998. The Braw Lad's Gathering in June celebrates the town's 1599 charter and was established as long ago as 1930. It includes a ride to the Raid Stane, where supposedly some English soldiers were killed while picking plums in 1337, an event also commemorated on the town's coat of arms. The betrothal of Margaret Tudor to James IV occurred at the Market Cross in 1503. The lands were owned by the Crown in the early 16th century. If the town has a jewel it is Old Gala House, with parts dating from 1583. Now a museum, it was the former home of the Lairds of Galashiels, who were first Pringles and then Scotts. The Scotts of Gala burial aisle dates from 1636, although both the original church and the gothic replacement were demolished. New Gala House was home to 'St. Trinian's' School during WWII, but was also demolished. The 'Hunters' Haa' was an old peel tower that stood till the late 18th century, while the town's Tolbooth was demolished in 1880. The Cornmill Fountain is a converted mill lade. The 'Border Reiver' equestrian statue is by Thomas Clapperton, a Gala native, outside the 1867 Burgh Chambers, which have an imposing clock tower by Robert Lorimer (added 1924–27). The main road from Hawick to Edinburgh only went through Gala from 1818, previously being via Fairnilee and Clovenfords. The town did not become a municipal burgh until 1864, although it had possessed burgh of barony status since 1599. The origin of the rivalry with Hawick is a mystery, but dates back at least to the time of the Carterhaugh Baa, when the Gala men switched sides. Population (1991) 13,753. It is said that if Gala didn't exist, then Hawick and Selkirk folk would have invented it in order to have something to agree on – ' 'Bout forest trees let Gala brag, We carena what belang them' [JT], '. . . The Hawick team tae play fower games And oo've picked twae Gala reserves' [AY] (note that the pronunciation of the final vowel sound can vary, and hence it is colloquially spelled 'Gali' etc.; the meaning of the name is 'huts on the Gala Water'; Teries often talk about going 'ower ti Gala' rather than using another preposition; it is 'Galowaschelis' in 1456, 'Galloschelis' in 1512 1525 and 1549, 'Galloscheillis' in 1574, 'Gallowshiellis' in 1598, 'Gallascheilles' in 1633 and 'Gallowschiells' in 1651).

the Gala Bell (thu-gaw-lu-bel) n. former bell from Gala that for some time hung in the Bell House at Watson's Dangerfield Mills in Hawick. The bell bears the inscription 'JOHN MEIKLE, FECIT, EDINBURGH: FOR GALASHIELS, 1695' and although it was rumoured to be from the Kirk in Gala, was probably actually from the Tolbooth there. After a new building was constructed, the bell lay unwanted in a builder's yard, where John Paterson (manager at Watson's) brought it to Hawick to install as the factory bell at Dangerfield Mills. It was rung in celebration in 1859 when word was received in Hawick about the extension of the Waverley Line to Carlisle. At the New Year's celebrations in 1861, James Goodfellow read 'Address to the Factory Bell'. It was the subject of banter in the local press in the 1880s, with a humorous suggestion that Gala men should liberate it from Hawick! When exactly it returned to Gala is unknown, but the bell now resides in Old Gala House.

Galabrae (gaw-lu-brā) n. home of Peter Laidlaw in the late 19th and early 20th centuries. This may either be 'Galalaw Braefit' or one of the houses at Howdenburn.

Gala Law (gaw-lu-law) n. hill on the northern outskirts of Hawick, 221 m high, with a white concrete triangulation point, and also he name for the surrounding area. Foxhounds used to meet there in the mid-19th century. The hillside was set on fire to commemorate victory in the Crimean war in 1856 and took decades to recover. Whins later took over the hill. Behind is the Galalaw Business Park – 'For I like auld Hawick Wi' a' her kindly folk Frae Galalaw tae Haggisha' And auld St. Mary's Clock' [RMc], 'Gala Law ablaze wi' colour Wi' golden broom and whins . . . ' [AY] (the origin is possibly from Old English for 'gallows hill', like the similar names near Biggar, Kelso and Gullane, and certainly having no connection with Galashiels; it seems an unlikely place for a public gallows to be situated, although it is possible that it served this purpose in the old Barony of Chamberlain Newton).

Galalaw (gaw-lu-law) n. farm above Guthrie Drive, on the slopes of Gala Law. The lands were owned by a branch of the Scotts from at least 1494 until 1762. In 1494 James Scott of Kirkurd granted the lands to his son David (later of Hassendean); at that time it was valued at 6 merks annually, and was held for the annual payment of 3 silver pennies at the Feast of the Pentecost, if asked. David was further recorded in 1507/8 and 1510. John Scott of Hassendean owned the lands in 1528/9. In 1534 Gavin Elliot sold the 40-shilling lands of 'Neder Gallelaw' to William Scott, the sealing of the letter of reversion being done at Hassendean Kirk. James Renwick was tenant there in 1628. It is probably the land (valued at £156) owned by a Scott (first name not recorded) lifrenter of Newton in 1643. William Scott of Galalaw paid tax on £156 in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663 and 1678. Robert Scott was recorded there in 1681. The land there was part of Hassendean Parish until being assigned to Wilton in 1690. Tax was paid on 5 hearths in 1694 for 'Gallalaw his hous and cottars'. William Turnbull was there in 1697 and Robert Elliot in 1704. Alexander Scott of Galalaw is recorded in 1718. John Easton was there in 1723, Walter Veitch in 1724, Walter Riddell in 1732, Thomas Scott in 1744, John Scott in 1746, Adam Laidlaw in 1747 and Thomas Scott in 1751. The lands were valued at £756 in the 1740s. Alexander and Robert Pott were owners in 1788. James Aitkin is recorded there in 1797, when he owned 3 horses. George Aitkin was a servant there in 1799 and John Fraiter and William Hall in 1801. It was said that at the raising of the False Alarm in 1804, the family there were sitting down to their potato supper 'and for fear the French came suddenly on them the pan was quickly cleaned out'. The lands (or at least part of the lands) were owned by William Oliver 'Auld Cash' when he died in 1808; in his will they were described as 'the six merks lands of Galalaw ... lying within the old parish of Hassendean now annexed to the Parish of Wilton, Barony of Chamberlain Newton and Shire of Roxburgh. Robert Pott was recorded as owner in 1811, when it was valued at £156. Robert Turnbull was owner from at least 1821 and later sold a small part to Chisholme of Stirches. In 1851 Robert Turnbull farmed 150 acres there and James Elliot farmed 250 acres. The hill has been taken over by whins and has a triangulation pillar on top (it is 'Gallowlau' in 1494, 'Gallolau' in 1501, 'Gallolaw' in 1507/8 and 1510, 'Gallowlaw' in 1511 and 1581, 'Gallolaw' in 1528/9, 'Gallalaw' in 1663 and 1681, 'Gallow Law' and 'Gallalau' in 1690, 'Gallalaw' in 1718 and 1770, 'Galolaw' in 1786 and 'Gallawlaw' in 1821; the origin may related to 'gallows', as for similarly named places elsewhere, although there is no known connection to hangings).

Galalaw Braefit (gaw-lu-law-brā-fi') n. former farmstead at the foot of Galalaw hill, possibly also the same as 'Galabrae'. James Turnbull was there in 1841.

Galalaw Business Park (gaw-lu-law-biz-nis-pawrk) n. industrial park near Galalaw, developed in the early 1990s through funding by Scottish Enterprise. Largely empty a decade later, it received further funding and expansion in 2017 and 2021.

Galalaw Cottages (gaw-lu-law-ko'-ee-jeez) n. Cottages near Galalaw farm ??.

Galalaw Knowes (gaw-lu-law-nowz) n. former alternative name for the Miller's Knowes (the origin is probably the same as for 'Gala Law', but there is no obvious relation between them).

Galalaw Road (gaw-lu-law-rōd) n. street in the Burnfoot area, named after the hill on the other side of the A7.

Galalean (gaw-lu-lee-in) n. someone from the town of Galashiels, not to be confused with 'Galilean' or 'Galileean', both of which suggest a certain nobility.

Galashiels (gaw-lu-sheelz) n. full name of Gala, an unattractive town that has to be passed through on the A7 to Edinburgh (in early records it is 'Gallow-shiels' etc.).

Galashiels grey (gaw-lu-sheelz-grā) n. course, grey cloth, formerly manufactured in Galashiels – '... with an annual douceur of a suit of Galashiels gray and a Kilmarnock bonnet' [DMW], 'It is interesting to find him next year writing to a business correspondent in the 'old country' to send 'Galacheils Gray at 6d or 7d per ell, to be here in September or October for winter only' [HAST1921] (the cloth was probably made from a combination of white wool and black wool; it is recorded in 1736 that 'at Gallowshiels are made a few coarse Kerseys, called Gallowshiels Grays, for Home-consumption').

Gala Witter (gaw-lu-wi'-ur) n. Gala Water, a river that joins the Tweed from the north-west at Galashiels. The river is about 21 miles long. The Waverley Line crossed it no less than 15 times, with most of the bridges still existing – 'Tho' the Esk has pearly sprays, And the Gala windin' ways; The're some bonnie banks and braes Aboot Hawick' [TK] (it is 'Galu' in 1268).

Galbraith (gawl-brāth) n. John G. (19th/20th C.) native of Hawick, he moved to Glasgow and wrote the romantic rieving book 'Rough-Riding Scots' in 1910. Michael John born in West Lothian, his family were from the island of Barra. He trained at the University of Glasgow and at the Royal Scots College in Spain. He was assistant priest at St. John the Baptist in Corstorphine, as well as being curate in Currie, Balerno, Ratho, Barnton and Ravelston. In 2008 he was appointed Priest at S.S. Mary & David, with responsibility also for chapels in Jedburgh and Kelso. in Corstorphine. He left in about 2012 and moved to St. Andrews in 2014. Rev. Robert (1866–1937) educated at Glasgow University, he was licensed by Paisley Presbytery in 1891. He was licentiate at Saughtree Kirk for a few months in 1892. He was then assistant at Linlithgow, ordained at Buckie in 1898 and was later minister of Fordoun. William (16th/17th C.) mentioned as minister of Bedrule in 1599, having previously been at Penicuik. He had a son called John.

gale (gāl) n., arch. collective noun for geese – 'A gale of geese, a flock of geese, Teviotd. This is said to be a very ancient phrase' [JoJ].

Galfrid (gal-frid) n. recorded as Vicar of Southdean when he witnessed a charter for Laurence Avenel in the period 1260–67. Radolph, Rector of Hawick, was also a witness. His name is recorded as 'Galfrido vicarii de Soundon'. Galfrid or Galfridus was the latinised form of Jeffrey.

Gali see Gala

Gall (gawl) n. George (19th/20th C.) joiner in Hawick. He married Margaret, daughter of tailor John Riddle; she died in 1896, aged 39. Their son Robert was a collector with the Gas Company in Hawick.

Gallaslande (gaw-lis-lawnd) n. former lands in the Slitrig valley, listed in 1547/8 in an English communication about farms they had burned. They were the property of Clement Crozier, along with 'Hoble Knowes' (probably Hummelknowes). It seems likely that this is the same place as Hilliesland.

gallayniel (gaw-lā-neel) n., arch. a big, gluttonous, ruthless man – 'Wae be to them for a pack o' greedy gallayniels – they haena the mence of a miller's yaud' [ES] (noted in Roxburghshire by J. Jamieson).

galled (gawld) adj., arch. made sore by rubbing, said of the back of an old horse that has been long ridden – '. . . and no quadruped of the equine race, however old or 'galled' the 'jade' might be, that could possibly be got for love or money, but was brought into requisition' [HAST1866].

Gallic (gaw-leek) n. unintelligible speech (also Gaelic).

Gallipoli (gaw-li-po-lee) n. Turkish peninsula that was the site of a disastrous military campaign of 1915. The 1st Battalion K.O.S.B. were there from the beginning, late April 1915, with the 1/4th K.O.S.B. (Territorials) arriving in June. Many local soldiers of the 1/4th K.O.S.B. were involved in a particular offensive on 12th July; with the benefit of hindsight it is clear that many strategic mistakes were made, in particular the instructions to take the 3rd Turkish trench led to confusion when the trench turned out not to exist, and the soldiers were caught in fire from all sides when they overshot and then tried to turn back. More than 80 men from Hawick and district lost their lives on that day, most remaining under the fields where they fell. The whole campaign was a disaster, with the peninsula with over 120 local men buried or lost there. The peninsular was evacuated by January 1916 after the futility of the whole military campaign became clear to the commanders. A memorial wreath has been laid at the Horse by the Callants Club (first in 1916, then annually from 1930) 'In remembrance of the Hawick Territorials of the 1/4th Kings Own Scottish Borderers who fell bravely charging the Turkish trenches, Gallipoli, 12th July 1915. The ancient spirit of our fathers hath not gone.' A commemoration at the War Memorial was later added to the events to mark that day. In 1926 several locals were able to travel to visit the place where their loved ones had fallen, and a marble plaque from the town was installed at the Helles Memorial. In 1933 the 1/4th K.O.S.B. Gallipoli Comrades Association was formed, based in Hawick and holding an annual dinner on 12th July. The Callants' Club raised money to send 6 veterans back for the 50th anniversary; a special memorial service was held in Trinity Church and 2 cypress trees, grown from Gallipoli seeds were planted at either side of the War Memorial (although they succumbed to the Scottish winter). In 1974 the Callants' Club took over the financial responsibility of the 12th July commemoration and an oak tree was planted to replace the cedars. The last Comrade died in 1992, and thereafter the Callants' Club have continued to lay wreaths at the Horse and the War Memorial. To mark the centenary, a group of 20 Teries visited the peninsula, marking the resting places of all known local men there – 'A tear dims my eye as I view the memorial, Head bowed, I remember how callants like me Laid down their lives to ensure us our freedom And lie now at Ypres and Gallipoli' [IWL].

gallivant (ga-li-van') v. to go about idly (particulaly noted in Teviotdale by J. Jamieson, suggesting the local usage may be more common than in standard English).

the Gallopin Chairger (thu-gaw-lo-pin-chār-jur) n. nickname for James Hislop, also known as the 'Gallopin' Cadger' – 'Black Andra' and the Birsin' Badger, Tammy Roberton, Deevil Bell; The Blue Laird and the Gallopin' Cadger, Baillie Birsleton and the Mell' [HI].

Galloway (ga-lō-wā) n. Rev. Alexander (1847–1926) born in Tillicoultry, son of William and Isabella Dawson. He received his B.D. from Edinburgh University in 1872, was licensed by Edinburgh Presbytery that year and became assistant at Bowden, Lasswade and St. Mary's, Partick. In 1876 he became minister at Milton of Balgonie and was admitted as assistant and successor to Minto Kirk in 1878, taking over fully from Rev. J.P. Macmorland in 1893. He was Lecturer on Church Music to the Divinity Students of the Scottish Universities 1912–14. In 1885 he married Margaret Rankin, daughter of William Smith, minister of Douglas. Their children were: William G., merchant in Japan, died in New York 1936; Isabella Dawson; Elizabeth Eleanor; and Alexander, Lieutenant in the K.O.S.B., later Instructor at Camberley Staff College. He was one of the compilers of the 'Scottish Hymnal' (1885), 'The Scottish Anthem Book' (1892), 'The Church Hymnary' (1898) and the 'Scottish Mission Hymnbook' (1912), as well as helping with 'Hymns, Ancient and Modern' (1889). Sir Alexander (1895–1977) born at Minto manse, youngest child of Rev. Alexander. He was educated on the Isle of Man, and volunteered when war broke out in 1914, joining the Cameronians, then seeing active service with the K.O.S.B. at Gallipoli, being one of the last to leave the Peninsula. He received the M.C. in 1918. He remained in the army after WWI, eventually becoming an instructor at Camberley Staff College, then commanding the 1st Cameronians and the Staff College at Haifa. He served as chief staff officer for the 8th Army in Egypt. He then had a series of posts, including after WWII being Commander-in-Chief of British forces in Austria. He was knighted in 1949, retired in 1950 and died at Norham, Northumberland. He married Dorothy Hadden, daughter of Frank Hadden White from Northumberland, and they had 3 sons. William (19th/20th C.) manufacturer of William Galloway & Sons. He had a boiler-house and dyeworks built on Commercial Road in 1888. This lay opposite the Victoria Laundry and was later occupied by Renwick's. His firm only occupied this building for about 5 years.

the Gallops (thu-gaw-lups) n. name for relatively new houses near Hassendeanbank. They were built on the pond for the former water wheel, which was filled in in the 1970s. The name comes from the popular name for some nearby fields.

galloway (ga-lō-wā) n. a small, study breed of horse, originally from Galloway, often used as a pack animal – '. . . a party of Tynedale men passed the window in tattered clothes, driving lean galloways laden with coals' [WSB], 'As the merciful man is kind to his beast, so the carrier before ministering to his own wants stabled and suppered up his galloway' [WNK].

the Galloway Road (thu-ga-lō-wā-rōd) n. former name for the road used for carrying coal from the Kielder area to Hawick, i.e. the 'Note o the Gate' or B6357. The name came from the Galloway ponies that were used to make the trips.

Gall Sike (gawl-sīk) n. small stream in Liddesdale, rising to the south of Dykecrofts farm and running roughly north-west to join Whithaugh Burn. The oroginal house on Hillhouse farm appears to be shown on this stream on the 1718 survey of Buccleuch lands.

gallus (ga-lus) adj., poet. bold, daring, self-confident, rash, reckless – '. . . Ready to roar away in the gloaming Wi' gallus young lads that think lichtly o' scaith' [DH], '. . . Airchie o' the Reuch Sike, gallus auld Airchie, The lang nicht afore him, now' [DH].

galore (ga-lōr) n., poet. plenty, superabundance – 'An' he gæfe thame galore for thair greed . . . ' [HSR].

Galoshins (ga-lō-shinz) n. traditional folk play, common in many parts of Scotland, a variant of the 'resurrection' drama found in many parts of Britain (e.g. in England, where it is an example of a 'mummers play'). The words of the play were passed down orally, and involve a hero called 'Galoshin', sometimes St. George, a doctor, and other characters. The height of popularity may have been the mid-19th century. It was typically performed for money by groups of 'guisers', usually young boys, visiting inns or private houses. Its timing was connected with either Halloween or Hogmanay (like other 'guising'). It may be that this is the longest surviving example of a richer tradition dating back to Mediæval times. It is unclear how prevalent this play was in the Hawick area, but Robert Murray wrote an article (published in 1903) about how a version was introduced to Hawick by a family of stocking-makers from Ancrum called Turnbull. There were still some recollections in the early 21st century, from families connected to Bowden and Bonchester – 'Here comes in Galoshuns. Galoshuns is my name; My sword and pistol by my side, I hope to win the game' [RM].

galt (gawlt) n., arch. a castrated boar (noted by J. Jamieson as a Roxburghshire word, but perhaps in error).

Galt (gawlt) n. former name for a town in Ontario, Canada, which was a common destination for Hawick emigrants in the 19th century. The settlement in an area along the Grand River was promoted by William Dickson, who sold lots to predominantly Scottish settlers. The town was originally called Shade's Mill and was renamed Galt in 1825, after John Galt, Scottish novelist and Commissioner of the Canada Company. The town grew as an agricultural hub, with industry developing from the 1830s and the town becoming known as 'the Manchester of Canada'. It was said that in the late 19th century it was a place where 'broader Scotch is spoken than in Galashiels, yet only five per cent. of the nhabitants are native born Scots'. Originally the largest town in the area, it was eventually eclipsed by Berlin, which was later renamed Kitchener. The city of Galt continued to exist as a separate entity until 1973, when it became part of the new city of Cambridge, adjacent to Waterloo. Many street names in the area reveal the early Scottish influence. Local families with connections to this area include Aitkin, Amos, Broadwood, Cavers, Dryden, Kersel, Lamb, Lee (including James Paris Lee), Murray, Scott and Spalding.

Galteri (gal-te-ree) n. James (14th/15th C.) papal chaplain who held the Archdeaconry of Teviotdale, along with the Church of Innerleithen, until 1418. In that year the Archdeaconry was given to John of Scheves. However, there was dispute over the position in these years, with John Forester also claiming to be Archdeacon.

game (gām) n., arch. sport, amusement – '... none did resort to his house for game but such as were of a good age' [PR1724].

game (gām) adj., arch. lame – 'A game leg, a leg hurt by accident, so as to make the person lame, Roxb.; also Northumb.' [JoJ] (compare the English 'gammy').

Gamel (ga-mel) n. clerk of the 12th century, during the reign of David I. With the permission of his sons Osulf and Ughtred, he granted the lands of 'Caverum' to Jedburgh Abbey probably around 1138. This gift was confirmed in charters by Earl Henry and by King William (in the period 1165–70), and reconfirmed in 1229. This was probably part of the Barony of Cavers (although Cavers Carre is a possibility).

the Games (thu-gāmz) n. the Common-Riding Games, held at Volunteer Park, also sometimes called 'the Sports'. Amateur games, now long abandoned, were held on the Friday, with professional games on the Saturday, now moved to the Sunday. Until the early 19th century the Games were entirely amateur, with profssional sportsmen only appearing later. In earlier times there was less of a distinction between the Games and the Races. In the 19th century there were Games on the Friday afternoon (after the Dinner) and on the Saturday morning, which were held at the Common Haugh, and included sprints and middle-distance running, hurdles, walking, jumping of several varieties, quoiting, shot-putt, wrestling, Highland dancing and costume contests. There were also special races for boys and for old men. Professional cycling races were a feature in the very late 1800s. They were held on the Saturday morning at the Haugh from about 1855–67 and moved to the afternoon in 1868. The 'Shows' would also accompany the Games on the Haugh, and this must have been true from early times. The Games were moved to the Volunteer in 1893. The Amateur and Professional Games were switched back and forth between the Friday and Saturday in the early 20th century. The Amateur Games ending up on the Friday by 1913 and were discontinued in 1961. The Cornet stopped attending the Saturday Games from 1964. It became a tradition for the 'Big Fower' to engage in a pillow-fight balanced on a beam, and for this to take place at the Games. The Games were held on the Saturday before Common-Riding week in 2005. Latterly the 'Hawick Border Games' have been on the Sunday after the Common Riding.

Gamescleuch (gāmz-klooch) n. ruined 16th century tower near Ettrick village, on the opposite side of the valley to Thirlestane. It is said to have been built for Simon Scott (2nd son of Sir John of Thirlestane), who may have been poisoned by his step-mother on the eve of his wedding. The lands there were also referred to as Thornhill and Ettrickside and were formerly referred to as a steading of Mount Common. They were once Crown property, in the King's hands in the 1480s, but granted to Adam Scott in 1490 'without grassum owing to its sterility', and again in 1492. Alexander Lauder was recorded there in 1502. The lands were again assigned to Adam Scott of Tushielaw in 1510. William Scott in Sundhope was tenant in 1541, paying £14. William Scott in Hartwoodmyres assigned his steading there ('callit Eittriksyde') to his son John, acknowledging an arrangement already made with Simon Scott in Thirlestane; the superior at that time was William Cranston of that Ilk. They were held by the Scotts of Thirlestane in 1573, but shortly afterwards passed to the Scotts of Tushielaw and then back again, following a 'decreit arbitrall' by Sir Walter of Branxholme in 1603. 'Mr' Arthur Scott of Gamescleuch was Laird in the 1590s. The dispute over these lands grew into a feud between the Thirlestane and Tushielaw branches. The murder of Walter Scott of Gamescleuch by John Scott of Tushielaw in 1609 may have been the inspiration for the 'Dowie Dens of Yarrow'. The lands were also known as 'Thorniehill', and in 1621 and 1667 were described having an 'outset called Etriksyd'. James Easton was there in 1716 when he had a child baptised in Roberton and Alexander Laidlaw was herd there in 1726. James and Thomas Dodds were there in 1784 and James Tod in 1791. It seems that an exchange of land was made in about 1812 with the farm of Annelshope. There is now a caravan site there – 'Gae warn the lads of Thirlstone, Gemscleugh, and Newburgh fair, With Tushielaw, and Midgehope, in armour to appear' [WSB], 'When the magic wing of the midnight hour Stoops low to the worn old Gamescleuch walls ...' [WHO] (it is 'Gammilliscleuch' in 1479, 'Gamliscleuch' in 1486, 'Gilmynscleuch' in 1490, 'Gammylliscleuch' and 'Gemmyscleucht' in 1492, 'gammilliscluch' in 1502, 'Gamilliscleuch' in 1510, 'Gammiscleuch' in 1541, 'Gammilscleucht' in 1562, 'Gemmillisheuch' in 1573, 'Gamiscleucht' in 1579/80, 'Gemmylliscleich' and 'Gammescleucht' in 1581, 'Gammiscleucht' in 1585, 'Galmelliscleuch' in 1591/2, 'Gammilsheuche' in 1592, 'Gemmilliscleuch' in 1593, 'Gilmuirscleuch' in 1597/8, 'Glemmiliscleuch' in 1602, 'Gemilscleuch' in 1603, 'Gamellscleuch' in 1605, 'Gemmilscleuch' in 1608, 'Gemmiliscleuche' in 1621, 'Gemmeltscleugh' in 1667, 'Gemmelscleuch' in c.1680 and 'Gemscleugh' in 1784; it is marked 'Gelmiscleuch' and 'Gemlscleuch' on Gordon's c.1650 map and 'Gemmillscleuch' on Blaeu's 1654 map; not to be confused with Gilmanscleuch, also on Ettrick Water).

Garnel Sike (gar-nul-sīk) n. small stream in the headwaters of the Borthwick, joining the Craikhope Burn from the west, between Craikhope and Comb (probably from old Scots for a granary).

Garnet (gar-ni') n. David (18th C.) groom at Minto in 1793 and 1794, when he was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot.

the Garrison (thu-gaw-ree-sin) n. popular name for a former tenement at the corner of the Howegate and Silver Street. 'Hab o' Hawick' was supposed to have lived there in the 16th century. It was a 3-storey building, pended on the ground floor and with a corner turnpike stair. It was demolished in about 1799, and was apparently so well built that it had to be undermined and fell into a mass that blocked the street. The site was rebuilt in 1801 and was later the location for a printer's, a post office, a library and a shop.

garron-nail (gaw-rin-nāl) n., arch. a large nail – '. . . with eighteen garron nails for sarking and sclating the house of Woelie' [GT] (from Old Scots 'garron', a beam).

garth (gawrth) n., arch. a homestead, shallow and shingly part of a river (the word survives in place names, such as Garthside, Hartsgarth, Ragarth).

Garthside (gawrth-sīd) n. farm just to the east of Denholm. An ancient burial cist was discovered near here in 1902 (perhaps just across the A698), consisting of several red freestone slabs containing a few pieces of bone.

gas (gas) n. Hawick's gas lighting first appeared on the High Street in 1831, being the first among Border towns (and replacing the 60 oil lamps of 1813). The lighting ceremony was celebrated with a banquet. Electric lighting arrived in the early 20th century and one of the last lamps (from Elm Grove) is preserved in the Museum. Hawick Gaslight Company started in 1830 on part of the old Under Haugh (now Commercial Road), moving to Mansfield Road around 1882. In the early years the company was run by a manager with a single assistant. The manager's house was formerly at the other side of the ford at the foot of Walter's Wynd. The company also had a showroom at 66 High Street. Nationalised as part of Scottish Gas in 1948, the main works were dismantled in 1968 after conversion from coal gas to natural gas in 1964. The town was converted around 1970, with new pipes etc., to use the North Sea supply. However, the gasometers on Mansfield Road continued to be used as holders for the high pressure gas delivered from Granton in the Lothians.

Gascoin (gas-koin) n. George (18th C.) listed as footman at Wilton Lodge in 1791–93, when he was working for Lord Napier. In 1794 and 1797 he was listed as footman and gamekeeper at Wilton Lodge; in 1797 he was recorded as 'William'. Helen (18th C.) housekeeper at Wilton Lodge in 1791, when she was working for Lord Napier. She may have been wife of George (also written 'Gascoing').

gash (gawsh) n., poet. prattle, impudent language – 'As to think that ye can wi' yer gab and yer gash Buy up my vote wi' four and sixpence in cash' [JCG].

the Gas Hoose (thu-gaws-hoos) n. the gas works, originally at the north end of Teviot Bridge from 1830, moving to Mansfield Road around 1882 – '... As we sailed from the Gashoose bar' [WE] (also sometimes hyphenated).

Gaskin (gas-kin) n. Benjamin Thomas of Tushielaw (d.1818) son of Col. Gaskin of the Barbados. In 1818 he married Anne Verona Simmons, who succeeded to the estates of her mother, Barbara Anderson. This included Tushielaw and Hislop. He may have taken the surname Anderson when gaining the lands, but died shortly after the marriage. His posthumously born son Benjamin was listed as 'Benjamin T.G. Anderson, Esq. of Tushielaw' in 1838, among the major landowners in Hawick Parish. His widow secondly married Rev. Thomas Gordon Torry.

Gass (gaws) n. Colin Windram (1953–) born in Gala, where he grew up and played for the rugby team in the 1970s. In 1981 he played for Hawick Trades and then for Hawick R.F.C. He was in the Greens side that won the championship 5 times in the 1980s. He also played for the South of Scotland and the Scotland B team. He lives in Selkirk. George (??–??) Burgh Treasurer and Callants' Club President 1930. He was also a Church Warden at St. Cuthbert's and organist there. William (18th/19th C.) carter in Hawick. His wife Ann Wilson died in 1811.

the Gas Works (thu-gaws-wurks) n. the gas works, near the present Burns Club from about 1830, moving to Mansfield Road from about 1882. The three gasometers there were familiar sights to generations of Teries – '... 'Juist haud strecht doon bye the Gas Works, And ye're there', says Robbie Dye' [DH].

gate (gā', gāt) v., arch. to get – 'Aw'll be hanged if aw gang a fit past yonder till aw gate a weetin', onyway' [WNK] (this is not a common form, cf. git and geet).

Gate Burn (gā'-burn) n. stream running in the area just beyond the Caa Knowe. It rises in several streamlets and runs in a roughly southwestern direction, joining the Thieveshole Sike and crossing the road at the Troutlawford before joining the Allan Water. Its course once formed part of the boundary of the old Common (it is probably named after 'Southfieldgate', a former farmstead near there).

gate end (gā'-end) n. part of town, neighbourhood, immediate surroundings of one's residence – 'git back ti yer ain gate end', '. . . and that in this 'gate end' I entered into my articles and was apprenticed to my profession' [JoA], 'A was in that gate-end, so A thowt A'd just drop in an sei ee', 'The whole gate-end kens = all the neighbours know' [ECS], 'It's mony a month sin oo last saw ye in this gate-end' [JEDM], 'But Wat o' Harden this nicht will ken To keep his neb in his ain gate en' ' [WL] (also written 'gate en' and sometimes hyphenated 'gate-end').

Gatehoosecote (gā-tees-, gā'-ees-kō', gā'-hoos-ko') n. Gatehousecote, farm between Abbotrule and Hallrule Mill on the Foderlee Burn. John Turnbull was recorded there in 1493. John, Andrew and Thomas Turnbull were recorded there in 1502. In 1516 the tenants were Andrew Turnbull, William his brother, Thomas, Patrick and David. The lands were acquired in 1569 (along with several others) by Adam French and were described as being 'with woods' in 1588. Jock Turnbull was tenant there in 1575. There were Lorraines there in the early 17th century. It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670, when it was described as having a mill. This was probably a small threshing mill, powered by water from a pond. The lands (or their superiority) were among those inherited by William Kerr of Abbotrule in 1680. John Shiel was a tenant there in 1684 when he was listed as a fugitive who had attended conventicles. In 1694 there were 3 householders (probably tenants) listed, Margaret Lorraine, Thomas Pringle and William Turnbull, as well as 3 cottars. It was long part of the Abbotrule estate, although almost sold off in the 1790s after being combined with Over Bonchester. It was a major farm on Abbotrule, having its own entrance lodge. Andrew Murray was there in 1801. It was listed among the properties of Charles Kerr of Abbotrule in 1811, and valued at £298. William Brodie was farmer in the early part of the 19th century. Henry Elliot was tenant in the 1840s, followed by David Henderson, John Usher, Peter Mackinnon and Donald Teacher into the 20th century. Around 1875 it was owned by David Henderson of Abbotrule and valued at about £300. Tom Douglas was owner in the early 20th century, when it was valued at about £223. It may also have been known as 'Yetthouse' (the origin of the name is probably the Old English 'gat hus cote', meaning 'cottage beside the goat shed'; it is first recorded as 'Gaithouscot' in 1493 and 1494/5, is 'gaithous coit' in 1502, 'Gaittuscott' in 1550, 'Gatthouscott' in 1569, 'Gaithous Cott' in 1575, 'Gaithouscott' in 1588, 'Gatascot' in 1595, 'Gaithouslok' in 1616, 'Gattascot' in 1619, 'Gatascott' in 1670, transcribed 'Goatsorecoattis' in 1680, 'Gattascot' in 1684, 'Gaithous scott' in 1694, 'Gatehouse Scott' in 1801 and 'Gatehouse-Scott' in 1811; it is 'Gatehouscott' on Pont's c.1590 manuscript map, 'Gathouscot' on Gordon's c.1650 map and 'Gatehouscott' on Blaeu's 1654 map; it is 'Gatehaughscot' on a 1788 gravestone).

Gateshaw (gā'-shaw) n. hamlet south of Morebattle, on the Kale Water. It was formerly a seat of a branch of the Kers, starting with Thomas Ker in 1451. The former tower there may also have been known as Corbethouse, this being a nearby estate (although this is debated). A newer house referred to as 'New Gateshaugh' was built in about 1522 and also burned by the English in 1545. The estate was sold by John Ker to Sir William Scott of Ancrum in 1749. In 1758 Scott sold the estate to William Kerr, Chamberlain to the Duke of Roxburghe (the origin is probably from Old English for 'goat's wood'; it is first recorded in the mid-15th century as 'Gaitschaw').

gatewards (gā'-wurdz) adv., prep., poet. in the direction of, directly towards – 'I wull cum intil thy hous in the multetud o' thy mercie; an' in thy feær wull I wurship gaitwairds thy haly temple' [HSR], 'I am my beloefet's, an' his desæyre is gaitwairds me' [HSR] (also written 'gaitwairds' and sometimes 'gaitwaird').

Gaylor (gā-lur) n. David (1846/7–1924) from the Dunbar area, he came to Hawick as a young man to learn the watchmaking trade with Mr. Gowans and Mr. Rutherford. He then went briefly to Bishop Auckland before returning to Hawick in 1875 to set up his own watchmaker's and jeweller's business. This was originally based at 14 Howegate, moving to 59 High Street about 1877, where he worked for 47 years. He was an early photographer around Hawick and would put on shows in the Exchange Hall and elsewhere, with his son William assisting, and his niece Dorothy providing piano accompaniment. The showing of local slideshows was continued by his son William and lasted until the 1950s; his early 'magic lantern slides' collection is still in the Museum. His Border Kinematograph business (with partner local manufacturer Sime) made films in the period 1899–1903 and they at one point considered buying the 'Wee Thea', but wound up due to lack of financing. Their films represent the earliest moving images of Hawick Common Riding and other local events, and are only a few years later than the first known films in Scotland. He was for a long time a Deacon in the Congregational Kirk and is said to have identified with the 'Psychic Movement' in later life. He married Jeanie (or Jane), daughter of blacksmith William Pow, and she died in 1919, aged 70. Their children were: David William, who became a Congregational minister at the East E.U. Church in Greenock; Elizabeth S., also known as 'Bessie'; William Pow, who followed his father as an optician; and Margaret Jean, who married Andrew Dalgleish and had 2 sons who were Galashiels builders. William Pow 'W.P.' (1880/1–1963) son of David, whose jewellers business he carried on at 59 High Street. He was known locally as a sportsman (e.g. in the Cycling Club), amateur actor and singer, who made Adam Grant's 'Three Humorous Songs' his own in the first quarter of the 20th century. He served as the 5th Treasurer for the Congregational Kirk. He continued his father's interest in photography, continuing 'lantern slide' shows until the 1950s. After WWI he also became an optician, giving up the jewellery side of the business. He married Helen Scott Clark, who died in 1964, aged 78. David William Pow was their son.

ged (ged) n., arch. the pike, Esox lucius – 'The silver trout, the slippery eel, And geds as greedy as the deil' [T] (also gedge).

Geddes (ge-dis) n. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was living at Eilrig in 1781, Broadlee Burnfoot in 1787 and Philhopeshiel in 1789. He married Mary Anderson in Roberton in 1780 and their children included William (b.1781), Margaret (b.1787), Andrew (b.1789) and Janet (b.1792). He could be the Andrew recorded in a letter in Selkirk in 1828 regarding a payment. Gilbert (15th C.) appointed one of the procurators of Thomas Armstrong of Mangerton in 1482 when Mangerton passed to David Scott of Branxholme. His name is recorded as 'Gilbertum Geddes'. James (18th/19th C.) recorded as butcher in Hawick in the 1799 ballot list for the Militia. Butcher William was also on the list and probably his brother. He was still on the ballot in 1801. John (16th C.) recorded in Branxholme in 1581. He received sasine of an annual rent on lands in Haining from Robert Scott of Haining. He then granted a reversion for the sum of 100 merks. William Smith, servant of Walter Scott of Branxholme was one of the witnesses. John (18th/19th C.) from the Hawick area. He emigrated to America, settling in Delaware County, New York, while his brother William settled in Lanark county, Ontario. John (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Miller and their children included Mary (b.1836) and Jane (b.1841). Matthew (14th/15th C.) priest at the church of St. Mary of the Forest in Selkirkshire in 1409. He may have been Rector in the period 1401–24. He was removed from the position before 1419 'on the ground that he was notoriously stricken with leprosy and utterly debarred from the society of men', although this was disputed and he may have been returned as Rector. Robert (b.c.1780) flesher in Hawick according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. He was probably related to fleshers William and James. William (b.c.1770s) Cornet in 1801. He was recorded as a flesher in Hawick on the Horse Tax Rolls in 1797. He was recorded as butcher in Hawick in the 1799 ballot list for the Militia. Butcher James was also on the list and probably his brother, additionally Robert was a flesher on the 1801 list and possibly another brother. On the 1799 list he was 'Butcher Constable', suggesting that he had 2 jobs. It seems unlikely he was the William, son of Andrew, baptised in Roberton in 1781. He may be the butcher in Langholm, who died in 1817 at the age of 34 and is buried in Ettleton Cemetery along with his wife Margaret Armstrong. Their daughter Jane was baptised in Langholm in 1816. William (18th/19th C.) local man who emigrated to the area of Lanark County in Canada, with a letter surviving to his friend James Miller in Delaware County from about 1822; his brother John settled in Delaware and is mentioned in the letter. It seems unlikely he is the same William who was Cornet in 1801, but they may have been related (also written 'de Gedes', 'Geddis', 'Giddes' and 'Geddos').

geddholes (ged-hōlz) n., pl. popular name for some former holes on the flat land near where the Dean Burn meets the Teviot outside Denholm. The name may be related to the word 'gedd', meaning a pike, and the holes may also have once been used for soaking flax.

Gemmels (ge-mulz) n. Andrew (d.1793) wandering beggar known across all of the Borders, particularly in rural areas. He was the original for 'Edie Ochiltree' in Sir Walter Scott's 'The Antiquary'. He was a soldier in his youth and was a popular teller of stories (claiming to have fought at Culloden). He travelled around on his own horse, usually sleeping in an outhouse. He wore a blue gown, broad bonnet and strong iron-soled shoes and carried a walking stick about as tall as himself. He was also a great player of draughts. It was said that he had a nephew who farmed in Ayrshire and grew rich on the profits from his begging. William Thomson once bought a horse from him, which he used on his farm at Calaburn; there it was known as 'Gemmel's mare'. His gravestone in Roxburgh cemetery is inscribed 'Behold the end o' it – The body of the gentleman beggar ANDREW GEMMELS alias EDIE OCHILTREE was interred here who died at Roxburgh Newtown in 1793 aged 106. Erected by W THOMSON farmer Over Roxburgh 1849'.

General Knowledge (je-nu-rul-no-leej) n. nickname for a boy called Moodie who was from Denholm and born in the early 1820s. He was given the nickname from having the reputation for being the best student produced by Minto School at a time when it had a very strong reputation under William Grant.

the General's Toor (thu-je-nu-rulz-toor) n. tower on the Riddell estate, built on an old motte, surrounded by deep ditches. It is hollow, with a spiral staircase and parapet, with a timber-lined room at the top, complete with fireplace. It was erected in 1885 by Maj.-Gen. John Sprot, built by John Herbertson of Galashiels. Its height is 81 feet 9 inches. and it was constructed in memory of John Sprot's father Mark, who died in 1883 at age 81 years and 9 months! There is also a local story about the sons only getting the land if they built a foot onto the tower for each year the old man survived.

the Generous Donor (thu-je-nu-ris-dō-nur) n. name used poetically for Sir James Douglas, who granted the Charter of 1537. It is sometimes also applied to his father Sir William Douglas, in whose baronial charter of 1511 Hawick is created a Burgh of Barony (although in fact the original 'donor' was probably one of their 15th century ancestors).

Geo. & Jas. Oliver (jōrj-an-jāmz-o-lee-vur) n. firm of solicitors of long standing in the town. It grew out of the partnership of John Oliver and John Elliot, set up around 1791. The firm was established as 'John & George Oliver, writers and bank agents' in 1829 after John Elliot moved to Jedburgh. It was a partnership between Hawick's Town Clerk John Oliver and his eldest son. When John died in 1849 a younger son James came into the partnership. Their original offices were at 11 Buccleuch Street in part of what became Pesco's. In 1852 the firm are listed as writers on Buccleuch Street, as well as insurance agents for the British Guarantee and for North British. From about 1852 (although there is some confusion over this date) they were then in the upstairs offices of the Commercial Building at 4 Tower Knowe, and remained there until moving to 13 High Street in 1986. Latterly the firm has also been an estate agents. Their register of sasines for 1779–1840 is in the National Archives.

the George (thu-jōrj) n. popular name for the Whisky House Mill, which stood opposite St. Cuthbert's Church, also known as 'the Royal George'. It was a stocking-shop, with the building later becoming part of Melrose's enginerring works.

George (jōrj) n. name of 4 British Kings, George I (1660–1727) King from 1714, first of the house of Hanover. He was nominated as King by Queen Anne, under political pressure to bypass James Stewart. In 1714 the Council and Burgesses of Hawick had to swear an oath of allegiance to the new King. In opposition to his rule the Jacobite rebellion occurred in 1715, although with little support in the Borders. The King spent much of his life in Hanover, and never learned to speak much English – 'Your Geordie was a German laird, That used to delve his ain kail yard!' [T]. George II (1683–1760) King from 1727, son of George I. George III (1738–1820) King from 1760, grandson of George II. He initially took an active role in government (losing America for example). However, he had a nervous breakdown, suffered from the hereditary disease porphyria, and was declared insane in 1810. His domestic life was uncharacteristically tranquil, with his devoted wife Charlotte Sophia. It is recorded that a fiddler was paid for playing before the Bailies and Justices of the Peace in Hawick when he was proclaimed as King in 1760 and further money was paid for liquor at his accession to the throne in 1761. Hawick officials used to regularly celebrate his June 4th birthday with the 'King's Rantin'. Half-pennies of his reign were often counterfeit, merchants in Jedburgh refusing to accept them, leading to a legal battle in 1785, which went all the way to the Lords. George IV (1762–1830) King from 1820. He was appointed as Regent in 1811, with his father being unfit to rule. In Hawick there was a festive meeting to mark the occasion, with Bailie James Oliver proposing the toast 'The Mucking o' Geordie's byre'. In 1822 he became the first reigning monarch to visit Scotland since 1650. He stayed for 2 weeks at Dalkeith House as a guest of the Duke of Buccleuch. In Edinburgh, George IV Bridge was named after him. Obsese and unpopular, it was hoped his visit would calm the rising Radical moevement in Scotland. The visit was partly organised by Sir Walter Scott, and led to an upsurge in the use of tartan for formal occasions. He has been portrayed on film by Rupert Everett, Peter Ustinov and Hugh Laurie, among others. George V King of Hanover (1819–78) son of Ernest Augustus, born 3 days after his cousin, Queen Victoria. His full name was George Frederick Alexander Charles Ernest Augustus, and like other members of his family, was usually considered to have no surname. He became blind in a childhood accident. He acceded to the Hanoverian throne in 1851, when he also became the 2nd Duke of Cumberland and Teviotdale. He escaped to Austria when Hanover was annexed by Prussia in 1866. He married Princess Marie Alexandrina, daughter of Joseph, Duke of Saxe-Altenburg. He had one son, Ernest Augustus William Adolphus George Frederick, who became the 3rd and last Duke of Cumberland and Teviotdale. He spent most of his last years in Paris, where he died. George V (1865–1936) King from 1911. For his coronation celebrations in Hawick there was a procession from the Town Hall to the Old Parish Church, and then a parade up to the Mote for a ceremony in which the Duke of Buccleuch handed over that land to the town. George VI (1895–1952) King from 1936. He made a 'secret' visit to Hawick in 1943 to inspect the troops and returned in 1947 with Queen Elizabeth (the Queen Mother) and other members of the Royal Family, including the future Queen. His coronation in 1937 was marked in Hawick with a great parade of bands and floats, some of which exists on film. Trees were also planted in the Park, and a miniature silver spade used on

ghastrous (gas-tris) adj., poet. monstrous, unearthly – 'His gibbet-like face, and his gasterous-like look, By tongue they can never be spoken ...' [JTe], 'Then up they raise, with ghastrous look, And to their steedis they flew ...' [JTe] (also written 'gasterous').

the Giant's Grave (thu-jI-ints-grāv) n. former popular name for the cairn at the Auld Caa Knowe, also known as the Hero's Grave.

gib (gib) n., arch. a male cat, particularly if castrated – '... oor black kitlin's like Betty Kebbie's gib cat, but ee're nae mair like auld Mowdie than ee're like Spunk the Miser' [JEDM], 'And a' the gibs i the neeborhood Girn in a wild dismay – But little the mavis fashes its heids: Fower een are better than twae!' [DH] (the origin may be a connection with 'Gib' as the short form of 'Gilbert', just as in modern English we have a 'tom' cat.

Gib (gib) n. short form of Gilbert.

Gibb (gib) n. David Scobbie, M.B.E. (1933–2007) born in Hawick, he was an apprentice at Braemar before doing National Service in the Air Force. He was later a traveller for Braemar before joining accountants John J. Welch & Co. in 1976, where he remained until retirement. He was well known locally as a singer, with a strong bass voice. He sung regularly at the Common Riding, particularly 'Up Wi' the Banner', 'Pawkie Paiterson' and 'Clinty'. He was a founder member of the Hawick Music Club, and heavily involved with the Hawick Amateur Operatic Society and P.S.A. Choir. He also sung with Carlisle's Abbey Singers and the Border Television Choir. A committed churchman, he was Elder and Treasurer of Trinity Church. He received the M.B.E. for service to entertainment in 2002. He added music to James Y. Hunter's poem 'Hawick Lasses – 1514' in about 2001 and sings the song on the 2006 CD 'Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry'.

Gibbie (gi-bee) n. pet form of Gilbert.

Gibbie's Dance (gi-beez-dawns) n. tune written by Adam Grant for J.E.D. Murray's play 'The Witch o' the Wisp Hill', later arranged for the Saxhorn Band by George Guy.

Gibbie the Gowk (gi-bee-thu-gowk) n. daft fictional character in J.E.D. Murray's play 'The Gutterbludes', where he is described simply as 'A Hawick worthy'.

gibble-gabble (gi-bul-gaw-bul) n., arch. idle, babbling talk (an example of 'rhyming reduplication').

Gibby's Sike (gi-beez-sīk) n. stream that rises near Penchrise farm and runs in a north-easterly direction, through Gibby's Cleuch Culvert on the Waverley Line, to join the Slitrig Water (it is marked 'Back Sike' on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

giblich (gib-lich) n., arch. an unfledged crow (noted by J. Jamieson).

Gib Nose (gib-nōz) n. formerly an area near Princes Street, explicitly referring to a small piece of land bounded by Albion Place (now Princes Street), Wilton Crescent and the former Wilton Crescent Lane. Owned by the Langlands family, it was first feued to James Davidson in 1768. William Nichol is recorded as farmer there in 1797. It is marked on Wood's map of 1824, with 'Mrs. Davidson' as owner. There were 6 separate households recorded there on the 1841 census (named probably for the triangular shape of the land and possibly an early association with someone called Gilbert; also spelled 'Gibsnose' and 'Gib's Nose').

Gib o Holmsteed (gib-ō-hōm-steed) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded in 1541 as 'Gib of Holme Steid'. It is unclear where these lands were, or what the name might designate.

Gibsnose see Gib Nose

Gibson (gib-sin) n. Adam (18th C.) married Betty Scott in Wilton Parish in 1767. Their children included: Robert (b.1770); Janet (b.1774); Agnes (b.1776); James (b.1778); and Christian (b.1781). Adam 'Yeddie' (19th C.) Hawick man, famous for his angling skills, for whom the song 'Lean Yeddie Gibson' was written after his death while fishing the Teviot in the 1850s. He is buried in the old Kirkyard. Andrew (18th C.) married Janet Scott in Wilton Parish in 1735. He may be the Andrew whose funeral is recorded in Wilton in 1751. George (18th C.) witnessed a baptism for John Thomson in the Flex in Hawick in 1726. James (18th/19th C.) servant at Hassendean in Minto Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. James (b.1822/3) farmer at Ettrickshaws. His wife was Agnes and they had at least 5 children. He is probably the James of 'Shaws' who in 1872 donated to the Museum a 'sculptured sone (fragmentary), supposed to have been a baptismal font'. Jean (17th C.) resident of Dryden in Ashkirk Parish. In about 1640 she was cited by the Session 'for going bye the church on the Lord's day, neglecting worship, and compassing her own ends'. John (1774–1814) born in Ayr. He was a soldier with the 94th Regiment of Foot. Posted to Hawick in 1795 (probably related to the French prisoners of war), he married Janet, daughter of Hawick butcher Gideon Renwick. Posted elsewhere, the couple returned to Hawick around 1802 and he worked as a nailer. He then re-enlisted, deserted, was press ganged into the navy, jumped ship, worked in Langholm and Kelso, and was acquitted for desertion. He was back in Hawick by 1810, and the family had 11 children. He is recorded as a nailer in 1810 when 2 of his unnamed children died. In late 1813 he murdered his wife at their home in the Mill Port, apparently accusing her 12th child of being fathered by a Frenchman, and of poisoning him. He was the last person to be hung in Hawick, the event taking place in the Haugh; this was unusual, and may in fact never have previously happened in the Town. He wrote 'Some particulars of the life of John Gibson' while awaiting execution. It is basically a screed on the evils of drink. Perhaps the only child to survive was Gideon, who was a witness to the murder, but at 10 years old too young to give evidence. John, W.S. (19th C.) solicitor who was an agent for the Buccleuch estates, in at least the period 1822–78. He was originally called 'younger'. He was present at Branxholme at the banquet held in honour of the Duke of Buccleuch in 1839. Miss (19th C.) teacher at the girl's school at Cleuch Head in Hobkirk Parish in the 1860s. She could be inspiration for the poem 'The Flower of Rule' by Robert Allan. Rev. Mungo (c.1660–1735/6) graduating from Glasgow University in the early 1690s, he was ordained as minister of Abbotrule Parish in 1698. He was translated to Sanquhar in 1713, and remained there until his death (brought on by a stroke suffered in the pulpit). He had 2 sons, George and William, and 1 daughter, Janet. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Clarilaw in 1730 and 1736, and Appletreehall in 1739. He married Janet Dryden in 1728 and their children included: Margaret (b.1730); Helen (b.1733); Helen (again, b.1735); James (b.1736); Adam (b.1739); Robert (b.1743); and Agnes (b.1746). The witnesses in 1736 were Thomas Dodds and 'Rober' Gibson (perhaps his father) and in 1739 were William Scott and John Pringle. Robert (d.1810) stocking-maker in Hawick, son of Walter. His unnamed child died in 1810. He may be the Robert who married Henrietta Murray in Wilton in 1796. Ronald 'Ronnie' (1947/8–2003) Cornet in 1970. His Lass was Vivienne Young (sister of the 1963 Lass) and his Acting Father was Wattie Scott. Ross A. Cornet in 2014, the Quincentenary year. He had the Hornshole Monument incorporated into his Cornet's Tie. Walter (18th C.) mason in Hawick. His son William died in 1798. He may be the Walter who married Janet Miller in Wilton in 1755. He could be the Walter, son of mason William, born in Wilton in 1723. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1766 he married Janet Laidlaw, who was from Hawick Parish. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Mary Armstrong and their son Walter was baptised in 1778. William (18th C.) mason in Wilton. He was at Tandlaw in 1708. In 1707 he married Helen Rodger (or Roger). Their children included: Robert (b.1708); Margaret (b.1713); Bessie (b.1715); Agnes (b.1719); Walter (b.1723); and William (b.1725). He may be the William who witnessed the baptism of an illegitinate child for James Dodds in Clarilaw in 1744. William (d.1798) mason in Hawick, son of Walter. He had an unnamed child who died in 1798. He is probably the William born to Walter and Janet Miller in Wilton in 1756 (also spelled 'Gibsone' etc.).

Gibson's (gib-sinz) n. temperance hotel of the early 20th century situated on North Bridge Street. It became the Kings Hotel sometime after WWII. Gibson's moved to West Stewart Place, which later became Kirlands Hotel.

Gid (gid) n. short form of Gideon.

Giddenscleuch (gi-dinz-klooch) n. Gideonscleuch, farmstead near the of the side road from Teviothead, just before Merrylaw. The stream Giddens Cleuch joins the Teviot just there. 4 archæological features, perhaps hut bases, were found on a broad terrace about 600 m south-west of the farm. The lands were listed in the early 16th century as part of those held by John Gledstains of Cocklaw and that Ilk. It was among lands purchased by Gilbert Eliott of Stobs from Douglas of Cavers in 1620. It was 'Guiddigscleuch' among lands owned by the Eliotts of Stobs in the latter part of the 17th century. However, it appears to have been in the Barony of Cavers when Sir William Douglas succeeded as Baron (i.e. superior of these lands) in 1687 and when his brother Archibald succeeded in 1698. The lands were included among those of Lymiecleuch (along with Corriesike and Langbyre) when sold by William Eliott of Stobs to a group of Elliots in 1670, but may have been bought back shortly afterwards. They were among lands inherited by Sir William Eliott from his father in 1692. John Thomson was there in 1724, David Scott in 1727, '[blank] Moor' in 1741 and John Scott in 1749. There were Armstrongs there in 1841 – 'There are three wives in Hassendean, And ane in Briddyyards, And they're away to Gittenscluech, And left their wheel and cards' [DJG] (the name means 'the ravine belonging to Gideon'; it first appeared as 'Guidwyniscleuch' in 1509/10, is 'Guddisclucht' in 1519/20, 'Guidingiscleuche' in the early 17th century, and later is 'Guidinscleughe', transcribed 'Gudduscleuch' in 1620, 'Gandinscleuch' in 1687, 'Guiddingscleuch' in 1692, 'Gidinscleugh' in 1694, 'Guidinscleugh' in 1698 and 'giddens Cleugh' in 1724; it is marked on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Guiddinscleuch'; there is presumably a connection with a local family that used Gideon as a first name, e.g. the Scotts of Harden).

Gideon Scott & Sons (gi-dee-in-sko'-in-sonz) n. Hawick millwrights, set up by Gideon Scott in the latter part of the 18th century. The premises were on the Cross Wynd. Gideon's sons Gilbert and James were also millwrights. The firm's assets were sequestered in 1842.

Gigson's Flat (gig-sinz-flaw') n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded as being vacant in the 1541 rental roll, where it is 'Gigsonis Flatt' or perhaps 'Gibsonisflatt'. The location is uncertain, but it is listed after Kilgarth.

Gilbert (gil-bur') n. Mr. (19th C.) gamekeeper living at Harden Cottage. In 1869 he donated to the Museum 'antique stirrup, found at Harden.

Gilboa Wud (gil-bō-u-wud) n. name given to a large plantation to the north-east of Ruberslaw (the origin of the name is unclear, but may not be very old and is presumably connected with the mountain in Israel; it is marked 'Gilbo Wood' on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Gilchrist (gil-krist, -krīst) n. Rev. John (d.1746) from Dumfriesshire, he was son of Mungo in Holm of Dalgarno. He was presented to Bedrule Parish in late 1713 and ordained there in early 1714, succeeding James Borland. In 1714 he officiated the marriage in Minto of Andrew Ogilvie (of Branxholme) with the sister of the minister of Minto. In 1716 he was recorded in a 'Lybell' in Selkirk, against John and Andrew Riddell. He was a substitute preacher in Hawick in 1721, when the minister was ill. He dissented from the Act of Assembly of 1740 which deposed 8 seceding ministers. He remained at Bedrule until his death, and was succeeded by George Dickson. His only daughter married John Cranstoun the minister of Ancrum.

the Gilded Chamber (thu-gil-deed-chām-bur) n. a series of get togethers taking place initially in a golden decorated room at the Gretel bar in 1966, which grew into an annual event. The event later moved to the Volunteer. It is a sing-song for men only, and traditionally accompanied by potted-meat sandwiches.

Gildhouse (gild-hows) n. former name for lands near the Ettrick valley, probably associated with the later farm of Gildiesgreen, between Hellmoor Loch and Upper Shaws Loch. They were formerly Crown lands, split into the Weststead, Middlestead and Eaststead. In 1479 Thomas Scott had remission for a fine for these lands. David, son of Walter Scott in Headshaw leased part of the lands in 1486. John Cranston of that Ilk leased part of the lands in 1492. Robert Scott of Stirches was leasing the Weststead in 1501, when that was referred to as 'alias Dodbank'. In 1502 the eastern part was said to be known as Bailielee and was leased to Peter Turnbull in 1510. In 1510 the west steading was feued by Walter, son of Robert Scott.

Gildshaw (gild-shaw) n. lands in Liddesdale, precise location uncertain. They are recorded as 'Gildschaw' in a rental roll of 1376, with a value of 6 shillings and 8 pence. This may be the same as the place recorded as Gillshaw in the 16th century.

Giles (jīlz) n. Rev. Alexander (1825–1915) born in Kennethmont, Aberdeenshire, son of farmer John, he was educated at Aberdeen University and New College, Edinburgh. He was minister of Ashkirk Free Kirk 1866–97. In 1878 he married Cecilia, daughter of John Dudgeon from Kensington-gate. In 1894 he secondly married Catherine Macnaughton, daughter of Rev. Alexander Grierson. His children included: John Dudgeon (1880–1940), a medical superintendent, who was killed in an air raid; and Alexander Falconer (1881–1963), a historian. He died in Edinburgh.

gill (jil) n. a unit of measurement equal to one quarter of a pint or about 142 millilitres for Imperial measures. Note that Scots gills were at one time about one third greater in quantity. Scottish bars generally served spirits in shots of one fifth of a gill, but some used one quarter. A metric measure of 25 millilitres is now more common. A 'Hawick Gill' was once a term for half an imperial pint – 'Till gills intae half mutchkins turned, Half mutchkins intae bottles, An' mair the wit an' fancy burned The mair we wat oor throttles' [VW], 'To bide man, I had man, Though sair against my will, For fear that, owre dear that, I might buy the wedding gill' [JoHa], 'Ilk ane that came in they bid e'en hae a gill, To heighten their speerits to glee, man' [JoHa], 'Lordsake, how mony o' thae things gangs to a gill; aw never gat sic a tait afore' [WNK], 'When I look back on time that's past, On siller spent sae ill, I mourn that I, to mend the warst, Took aye anither gill' [DA], 'A

gill (gil) n., arch. a gully, narrow valley, ravine – 'Gil, ('g' hard). A steep narrow glen . . . It is generally applied to a gully whose sides have resumed a verdant appearance in consequence of the grass growing, Roxb.' [JoJ] (also written 'gil'; the word survives in place names, generally for streams in higher areas, e.g. Hog Gill, Long Gill and Rough Gill to the west of Newcastleton, as well as the lands of Lodgegill, Ramsiegill, etc.).

Gill (gil) n. Peter (16th .) listed among people who were owed money by William Scott, younger of Branxholme, when he died in 1552. Several of the people listed before him were from the Hawick area. William (18th C.) married Margaret Neil in Ashkirk Parish in 1776.

the Gill (thu-gil) n. popular name for area around Gillside and Gillbraehead, south of Newcastleton – 'The fields alang the waterside; The fire abune the Gill; Auld Clintoch where the hoolets hide; The loanin' up the hill' [ECB].

Gillan (gi-lin) n. Rev. James (c.1629–68) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1650, he became Minister at Cavers in 1657 or perhaps 1658. He was deprived in 1662 for refusing to conform to Episcopacy, and forced to leave the Presbytery of Jedburgh. He moved to Edinburgh, and then out to Currie for his health (and because outed ministers were then banned from the city). However, one night in 1668 he was seized by a group of soldiers, who claimed to be searching for the person who had tried to assassinate Bishop Sharp (actually James Mitchell, after whom Mitchell's Slack was named). They forced him to run back to Edinburgh at midnight and stand outside waiting for the West Port to open, after which he was imprisoned. The next day he was taken before the Privy Council, but dismissed by them when they realised the mistake. He died 2 days later, probably as a result of the harsh treatment he had received. His name was often spelled 'Gillon'. His sister Elizabeth married William Forrest of Norserk. It is unclear whether he was related to the later ministers of St. Boswells and Hawick, but he was unmarried. He may be buried in Greyfriars in Edinburgh. Mary (d.1800) local whose death is in the Hawick register for 1800. She was 'Miss Mary Gullon' and died at 'Dumfries Correction house'. Rev. Robert (1761–1824) born in St. Boswells, son of Robert who was minister there. He had a sisters Mary Anne and Margaret (who married the minister of Melrose) and a brother Joseph (possibly the 'Joseph Gillon, Esq. Edinr.' who subscribed to Jamieson's Scots dictionary in 1808). He was educated at St. Mary's College and Edinburgh University, licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery and ordained at Ettrick in 1787, where he was presented by Lord Napier. He was translated to Hawick in 1789, being presented by Henry, Duke of Buccleuch. However, there is an existing letter from the Magistrates and Town Council to the Duke of Buccleuch, protesting the appointment, so he was presumably not a popular choice. Despite this, he remained until 1800, when he was accused of an irregularity of some sort and demitted his charge; this was described by W.N. Kennedy in 1862 as 'he was under the necessity of demitting the charge, the causes of which were minutely detailed' (but these details were not printed). He moved to Edinburgh, but nevertheless, remained one of the Orrock Trustees. He paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in the period 1790–97. There is a letter from him in 1791, preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. In about 1800 he contributed (£1 1s) to the local subscription to support the war against France. In 1793 he wrote an account of the town for the Old Statistical Account of Scotland, which contains valuable tidbits of information (including details of the beginnings of manufacturing in the town). He also wrote several books, including 'An abridgement of acts of General Assemblies of the Church of Scotland from the year 1638 to 1802 inclusive' (1803) printed in Hawick, 'A short view of modern astronomy, for the use of schools and private classes' (1814) and 'A compendium of ancient and modern geography' (1823). He also edited 'The Scottish pulpit, a collection of sermons' (1823). In 1798 he married Mannie (or Marion), daughter of William Campbell, minister of Lilliesleaf, and she died in 1845 at the age of 63. Their son Robert was born in Hawick and became an eminent minister of Inchinnan, Glasgow. Their other children were William, Margaret, Alexander Murray, Cauvin and Agnes Farquharson. Rev. Dr. Robert (1799–1879) born in Hawick, son of minister Robert. He studied at Edinburgh High School and University, was licensed in Selkirk in 1829 and ordained in Stamfordham, Northumberland in 1830. He was minister at South Shiels, Holytown (Lanarkshire), Wishaw, Abbotshall (Fife) and then St. John's (Glasgow) for 14 years. When a thunderstorm broke out during a fiery sermon he preached at Hawick during his early days, it is said that one parishioner remarked 'Yon was grand scenery for Dr Gillan's sermon'. He was active in social and political movements in Glasgow and was conferred with a doctorate of divinity by Glasgow University in 1853. He moved to the small parish church of Inchinnan, Renfrewshire in 1861, but continued to lecture broadly. He was presented with his portrait in 1870 and was Moderator of the General Assembly in 1873. He published many of his sermons, including 'A General Fast Sermon' (1832) and 'The Decalogue' (1856). In 1833 he married Anne, daughter of George Green, minister at Carmunnock. She died in 1847 and he secondly married Laura, daughter of John Buttery of Woodville. His son George Green was chaplain in the East India Company. He died in Inchinnan Manse (also written 'Gillon').

Gillbeck (gil-bek) n. possible name for a farmstead in Liddesdale. It is transcribed as 'Guilbeck' in the 1718 survey of lands of the Scotts of Buccleuch, when it was combined with Nether and Over Steele, along with other small farmsteads. It might be associated with the nearby Gill Sike.

Gillbraeheid (gil-brā-heed) n. Gillbraehead, farmstead in Liddesdale, of the B6357 between Gillside and Demainholm. It was formerly 'Geilbraehead'. This was where the minister of the Castleton Burgher Kirk lived in the 1760s to the end of the 18th century, and where their first meeting house was built. Thomas Turnbull was smith John Turnbull a mason there in 1799. Thomas Turnbull was still there in 1821 and James Armstrong in 1841. Thomas Chapman was carter there in 1861 and Richard Telfer was there in 1868 (it is marked as 'Guilbraehead' on Stobie's 1770 map and is 'Geelbraehead' in 1799).

Gillespie (gi-les-pee) n. John (b.c.1780) miller in Hawick according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. This was probably at Hawick Mill. Marion (17th C.) recorded in the Council records of 1665 when she confessed to pulling the hair out of the head of Walter Lorraine. She was also accused of harassing another man at about the same time. She may be the Marion, daughter of Robert, born in Hawick in Hawick in 1639. Robert (17th C.) smith in Hawick. He was a Councillor who signed the 1640 'Act of Bailies and Council' and was recorded being elected to the Council in 1648. Also in 1648 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott and Isobel (probably a relative). He is probably the Robert who married Marion Stoddart and whose children born in Hawick included: John (b.1636); Marion (b.1639); Patrick (b.1641); and Stephen (b.1642). The witnesses to the 1640 baptism were William Wilson and James Paisley.

Gillfit (gil-fi') n. Gillfoot, former farm in Castleton Parish near the modern Gillfoot Moss. The farm of 'Guylefoot' is listed among the Liddesdale possessions of the Sheriff of Teviotdale in 1632, and also 'Guyldfoot' among the lands of Thomas Kerr of Ancrum. James Scott was tenant there in 1694, with John Little and William Elliot also listed as householders. It is shown on a survey carried out for Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718, when it consisted os 266 acres and was bounded by the Liddel Water, Demainholm, Whisgills, Side and Millholm. William Stewart was farmer there in the mid-18th century. Robert Elliot and family were there in 1835. John Armstrong was shepherd at 'Guilfoot Upper' in 1851 and William Little a labourer at 'Guilfoor Under'. William Armstrong was shepherd there in 1861 (it is 'Guylefoot' in 1632, 'Geillfoot' in 1694, 'Guillfoot' in 1718 and 'Geelfoot' in 1760; 'Guilfoot' is marked on Stobie's 1770 map; the name is surely just the foot of the gully).

Gillfit Moss (gil-fi'-mos) n. Gillfoot Moss, boggy area in Castleton Parish, on the west side of the Liddel valley, opposite Mangerton. There is the remains of a farmstead there, including foundations of 2 buildings, as well as enclosures and rig lines visible from aerial photography. This is surely the old farm of Gillfit).

Gillheed (gil-heed) n. farmstead in Liddesdale, situated on Foulwood Sike, south-west of Mangerton. The name presumably derives from being at the head of the gully ('Guilhead' is marked on Stobie's 1770 map).

Gillhoose (gil-hoos) n. former lands in Liddesdale, listed as 'Gilhouse'(after 'Gillestede') in a rental roll of c.1376. It was valued at 4 shillings.

gillie (gi-lee) n., poet. a male servant – 'Wha sendet tokins an' ferlies intil the middle o' thee, O Egypt, apon Pharaoh an' a' his gillies' [HSR].

gilliegawkie (gi-lee-gaw-kee) n., poet. a foolish or silly young man (used by John Hogg in 1806).

Gillies (gi-leez) n. Brian (1957–) son of George, he grew up in Burnfoot. At the age of 10 he joined the Hawick Legion Pipe Band. He was an apprentice knitter at Barrie & Kersel and then worked at Hogg's. On the spur of the moment he signed up for the Royal Scots Dragoon Guards, where he spent 9 years as a gunner and joined the regimental band, eventually becoming Pipe Major. He returned to Hawick to be a knitter, but later served as Pipe Major with the Oman Army Pipe Band. On returning to Scotland again he joined the Annan Ex-Serviceman's Pipe Band. He later worked at Johnstons of Elgin in Hawick. He has played pipe solos at many events, including the Edinburgh Tattoo in 1985. He scored 'Highland Cathedral' for pipes, based on a tune written by German musicians Ulrich Roever and Michael Korb in 1982 (originally intended for a military band, rather than pipe band). He wrote the song 'Wauchope Cairn' which the Burns Club sing on their annual visit to Wauchope, as well as 'The James Thomson Bridge' to commemorate that opening. James (b.c.1780) carrier in Hawick according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Rev. James Wardrop (b.1862) trained at Glasgow Evangelical Union Hall, he was place in India with the London Missionary Society. In 1899 he became minister of Newcastleton Congregational Church, remaining until 1905. He was then minister at Muirkirk, Ayrshire and at Manse Street, Fraserburgh. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His wife was Catherine Gillies and their son Thomas was baptised in 1687. John (18th C.) married Euphan Thomson in Wilton in 1832. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1736 he was a witness for a baptism for Robert Riddell, who lived at the Sandbed. His name is written 'Gillas'. Walter (17th/18th C.) tenant of 'Crack know' in Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Brown and their children included: unnamed (b.1698); and Margaret (b.1701). William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1777 he married Mary Henderson in Hawick and she died in Hawick in 1800 (also written 'Gillis').

Gilligan (gi-lee-gin) n. Charles (b.1841/2) from Hawick, son of James, he emigrated to Dunedin, New Zealand. In 1868 he donated to the Museum a 'section of Cook's Strait cable, New Zealand, and several sheets of photographs'. James (b.1805/6) born in Sicily, he was a clothes and furniture merchant in Hawick, at 8 Howegate. In Slater's 1852 directory he is listed as a 'broker'. In 1861 he was at 2 Howegate, listed as a clothier employing 11 men and 3 women. In 1868 he donated a fossil shell to the Museum. His wife was Elizabeth and they had children: Sarah: James; Robert; Charles; and John. In the 1841 census he is a pedlar at about No. 18 Howgate. James (b.1835/6) born in Cavers Parish, son of James, he was a clothier like his father. He became a member of the Archæological Society in 1858. In 1861 he presented to the Museum 'an old clock case of sculptured stone' and also a 'carved stone table'.

Gillis (gi-lis) n. David (19th/20th C.) Schoolmaster at St. Cuthbert's School from early 1894 until he retired in 1915. He was also heavily involved in local musical activities and the Volunteer movement. He moved to Greenlaw after he left Hawick.

gillore (gi-lōr) n., arch. galore, plenty, wealth (noted by J. Jamieson).

gill-maw (gil-maw) n., arch. a gourmand of coarse manners, guzzler – '... as 'a greedy gilmaw', one who is not nice in his taste, but devours by wholesale, Roxb.' [JoJ] (also gull-maw and cf. gollimer).

Gillon (gi-lin) n. Fr. Thomas (19th/20th C.) priest at S.S. Mary & David's 1918–24. He was said to have been quiet, but well-respected in the Town. He moved to Linlithgow. His time as priest saw the introduction of the 1918 Education Act and the return of the survivors from the War (see also Gillan).

Gillshaw (gil-shaw) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded in 1541 as 'Gilschaw et Burnhous'. It is unclear where these lands were, but possibly related to 'Gillfoot', 'Gillhead', etc. (see also Gildshaw).

Gillside (gil-sīd) n. farm in Liddesdale, on the west bank of the river to the south of Mangerton. A carved stone found over the fireplace in the old cottage there is described in 'Chronicle of the Armstrongs'. The area was formerly known as Nether Foulwood, and the stream to the west is still called Foulwood Sike. William Dalgleish lived there in the 1830s and 40s. The name may also be related to the lands of 'Side', which are marked to the west on Stobie's 1770 map (probably the 'Geelside' where William Elliot and family lived in the early 1800s).

Gill Sike (gil-sīk) n. small stream in Liddesdale, which rises near Snaberlee Rig and runs roughly westwards to join the Hermitage Water near Leahaugh.

Gillsteed (gil-steed) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in a rental roll of c.1376 as 'Gillestede', with a value of 2 shillings. This could be the same place as 'Gillside' or 'Gillshaw'.

gill-stowp (gil-stowp) n., arch. a tankard of about a 'gill' capacity – 'The yill-cup, the gill-stoup, Flee, like a sticking bull' [JoHa], '... While you do revel, rant, and roar, Owre gill-stoups, wi' the rambling core' [JoHa].

Gilmanscleuch (gil-munz-klooch) n. hamlet in the Ettrick valley, just north of the farms of Deloraine, and near where the Gilmanscleuch Burn meets the Ettrick. The farm was once a Crown property, from at least the 1456. It was assigned to James and Roger Alemoor in 1484, Steven Lockhart in 1486, Patrick Home of Fastcastle and Robert Lyle in 1490, Alexander, Lord Home in 1492, George Home in 1501 and Adam Scott of Tushielaw in 1510. John Scott in Thirlestane claimed the tenancy there in 1541. A tower here was once home of a branch of the Scotts, with the land passing from the Scotts of Gilmanscleuch to Walter Scott of Harden in the late 16th century, when 'Auld Wat's' youngest son (possibly John) was slain in a hunting match; he apparently said that the lands were worth a dead son. Robert Scott from here was killed by Elphistones sometime before 1621 (and so the 2 murders may sometimes be compounded). The lands (or perhaps the superiority) were later sold by John Scott of Harden to Anne, Duches of Buccleuch and passed to Francis, Duke of Buccleuch along with other lands in the Lordship of Ettrick Forest in 1735. The Scotts of Gilmanscleuch started with James in at least 1589, with William being the last in the early-to-mid 18th century. When Francis Scott inherited the lands from his father John in 1686 the lands were valued at £20 6s 8d ('feudi-firmae'). Adam Scott was tenant in 1737 and James Borthwick was a cottar there in 1752. James Scott was there in 1797. In 1802 it was valued at £67, when part of the Buccleuch estates. Adam and James Scott were joint tenants in the 1820s and 1830s. 'Daft Jock Gray' came from there; he was a singing beggar in the early 1800s. Henry Scott was farmer in the 1860s. The upper half of a quern was found near there was donated to the Museum in 1870 – 'There's Daft Jock Grey o' Gilmanscleugh, And Davie o' the Inch, And when ye come to Singley, They'll help ye in a pinch' [DJG], ''Warn Wat o' Harden, and his sons, Wi' them will Borthwick water ride; Warn Gaudilands, and Allanhaugh, And Gilmanscleugh, and Commonside' [T], 'In Gilmanscleuch, beneath the heuch, My fathers lang did dwell; Ay formost, under bauld Buccleuch, A foreign fae to quell' [ES] (the origin is probably from 'Gillemon's ravine'; also formerly written 'Gilmerscleugh' etc., it was 'Gilmyiscluche' in 1456, 'Gilmynniscleuch' in 1467, 'Gilmyniscleuche' in 1468, 'Gilmynniscleuch' in 1477, 'Gilmynscleuch' in 1484, 1488, 1501, 1502 and 1510, 'Gylmyniscleuch' in 1541, 'Gilmynniscleucht' in 1580, 'Gylmyniscleucht' in 1581 and 1585, 'Gilminiscleuch' in 1593, 'Gilmenscleugh' in 1602, 'Gilmescleuch' in 1609, 'Gillmiscleuch' in 1644, 'Gilmelscleuche' in 1647, 'Gillmensclewgh' in 1656 'Gilmenscleuch' in the late 1660s, 'Gillminscleugh' in 1678, 'Gilminscleuch' in c.1680, 'Gillmenscleugh' in 1690, 'Gillmenscluch' in 1693 and 'Gilmersclewch' in 1711; it is 'Gilminscleuch' and 'Gilnimscleuch' on Gordon's c.1650 maps and Blaeu's 1654 map).

Gilnockie (gil-no-kee) n. tower of the Armstrongs, near the confluence of the Liddel and the Esk, i.e. in the 'debatable lands'. The original tower stood at the east end of Gilnockie Bridge (over the Esk), and now consists only of earthworks, the centre having been extensively quarried (including for use in Gilnockie Bridge) and later crossed by the A7. This is possibly the tower burned by the English in 1528. Another (or later) tower is on the west bank and further north, at Hollows. It was restored in 1978–80, and now houses the Clan Armstrong centre. This second tower is famous for being the home of Johnnie Armstrong (usually called 'of Gilnockie' to confuse things!), who was killed at Caerlenrig in 1530; it is also known as 'Johnnie Armstrong's Tower' or 'Hollows Tower'. This restored tower also contains an ancient stone, with carved spiral symbols, reused as a door sill. The name was also used for a nearby station on the Langholm branch of the railway – 'The Elliots and Armstrangs did convene; They were a gallant companie: We'll ride and meet our lawful king, And bring him safe to Gilnockie' [CPM], 'But when Johnny went from Giltnock-Hall, The wind it blew hard, and full fast it did rain; 'Now fare thee well, thou Giltnock-Hall, I fear I shall never see thee again'. ' [T].

Gilpin (gil-pin) n. Rev. William (1724–1804) from a well-known English family, he was educated at Oxford, where he trained as a minister. He set up his own school, became a biographer of religious reformers and published illustrated volumes of his British travels, which revolutionised travel writing and attitudes. He was later Prebendary at Salisbury. During one tour, he visited Hawick in 1776, making a sketh of the Auld Brig as sen from below the bridge. This is the oldest known sketch of any part of the town of Hawick. It shows 2 arches and the wooden parapet erected to replace the stone one washed away in the 1767 flood. It also unfortunately omits any of the surrounding buildings.

Gilpin Horner (gil-pin-hōr-nur) n. character of Scottish legend, said to be an evil goblin. He was the basis for the goblin page in Sir Walter Scott's 'Lay of the Last Minstrel', and said to be the inspiration for the whole work, when the future Lady of Buccleuch urged Scott to write a poem based on him.

gilravage (gil-raw-veej) v., arch. to create an uproar – 'Gilravage ... To raise a tumult, or to make much noise, Roxb. To rove about; to be unsteady; to act hastily and without consideration, Roxb.' [JoJ], n., arch., poet. noisy merry-making, uproar –'Wi' hypicritikil mokirs in thair gilravages, thaye naschet apon me wi' their teeth' [HSR], a disturbance, state of confusion – 'Gilravage, Gilraivitch, ... confusion, conjoined with destruction; as that of a sow, &c., destroying a garden, by rooting up the plants, Roxburgh' [JoJ].

Gilrig (gil-rig) n. place name in Roberton Parish, referred to in papers of the Buccleuch estates in the 1750s.

Gilroy (gil-roi) n. Andrew (19th C.) mason who in 1873 donated an antique pipe to the Museum. He could be the son of dyer John. John (b.1820/1) from Jedburgh, he worked as a dyer in Hawick. He was father of Councillor John. He hailed the first Hawick Baa in 1842, when the game was revived. In 1851 he married Margaret, daughter of John Amos Hogg. In 1861 the family are recorded living at 7 Sandbed. His children included John, Andrew, Agnes, Janet, Beatrix and Margaret. Bailie John (19th C.) grandson of John Hogg the poet, he was a Magistrate in the late 1880s, as well as Chairman of Hawick School Board and Treasurer of the Co-operative Society. He ran a newsagent's shop at 7 Howegate. He married Margaret ('Maggie'), daughter of shoemaker John Rutherford in 1869. William (1810/1–72) mail-coach driver and uncle to Bailie John. He married Isabella Harkness, who died near Dublin in 1896, aged 87. Their children included Margaret, who married Mr. Watson of Mooney's Brewery, Dublin. He died at Belfast and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery.

Gilroy's (gil-roiz) n. shop on the Howegate from the late 19th century. It was a booksellers, toy shop and now mainly a newsagents.

Gilsland (gilz-lind) n. village in northern Cumberland, on the Irthing River, and near Hadrian's Wall. It was the seat of the Dacres and also near the once strategically important Gilsland Gap. In former times the area was a popular holiday destination, and was known in the 18th and 19th centuries for its healing waters, e.g. the poet Leyden's father went there to recover his health in 1800 – ' 'Mong the beauty spots of England I have rambled far and near, By the northern lakes at Gilsland, Derwentwater, Windermere' [TK].

Gilsland see Guyslands

Gilson (gil-son) n. Thomas (14th C.) owner of lands in 'Ermildon' (i.e. somewhere around Anrton Fell) in Liddesdale according to a c.1376 rental roll. 'Locus Thome Gilson' is listed there with a value of 8 shillings.

giltit (gil-tee', -ti') pp., poet. gilded – 'But never think to dit my shameless een, Wi' stoury hopes o' richly giltit fame' [JoHa].

gimmer (gi-mur) n., arch. a young ewe, usually between its first and second shearings, or between weaning and first shearing – '... wedderis, gymmir et Dynmont octingenta' [SB1492], 'Item, vpoun the landis of Glenpoyt, in pasturing with James Brewhouse, fourtene scoir and xvij gymmeris, quharof thair is xl gymmeris hes lambes ...' [SB1574], 'A lamb is smeared at the end of Harvest when it is denominated a hog; hence the phrase harvest-hog. After being smeared the second time, a ewe-hog is denominated a gimmer, and a wedder-hog a dymond' [JL], 'For either gimmer, hogg, or croak, By George, I'll g'ye a cowin' ' [JoHa], '... during the second winter she is called a gimmer, during the third a quinter, and thereafter she becomes a ewe' [RG], 'A gimmer licked a muckle Cheviot, big enough tae loup the Teviot' [TD].

gimmer (gi-mur) n., poet. a gossip, contemptuous term for a woman – 'Or may I ne'er mair taste peat reek, I'll bang ye for a gimmer' [JoHa].

gin (gin) conj., arch. if, whether – 'Says – 'What would you do, young Branxholm, Gin ye had me, as I have thee?' [JL], 'But gin you'll come wi' me, my sark I will sell ...' [WE], 'Gin ye be ought like other cattle, Ye'll sometimes like to weet yer throttle ...' [JoHa], 'And gin I live, my dainty cock, Until she hae a waen, Gin I be near, I'll buy't a frock, For auld langsyne' [JoHa], '... And gin ye want to reach her heart, It's there noo never fear ye' [RH], 'Were ye ever in Hawick toun: Gin ye hae, then fill your glasses! [GWe], '... An' gin the fair set Muir allures, The air's sae fresh an' sweet' [WFC], 'Gin I'd a bit mair O' wordly riches, And needna work a' day ...' [DH], 'And gin I'd to wale but the yin ...' [DH], 'Gin we grant that he's richt He'll pit up for the nicht ...' [WL], that, oh that – 'O! gin I but could gain her heart, How smooth the stream o' life would run' [JoHa], by that time, when – 'An so it is that A heh thae thochts ti faa back on gin Fortun takes a pick at iz ...' [ECS].

ginger (jin-jur) n. a fizzy soft drink of any flavour – 'When A was wee the kids would ask for ginger when they played For that's the name they gave to every drink they ever made' [Sco] (this usage common around Glasgow).

ginger breed (jin-jur-breed) n. ginger bread – 'Losh, Ah've forgotten the ginger breed men an' the ha'penny whustles . . . ' [JEDM].

ginger wine (jin-jur-wīn) n. a dark, spicy cordial drink made with 'ginger wine essence', which derives from a secret recipe of Kennedy's (now Crosby) the chemists. There were probably other variants of this, such as the 'black betty' sold in Denholm.

Gingills (ging-gilz) n. former lands in Ewesdale, a little north of Langholm, once a seat of the Armstrongs. The spelling is variable, and it is also possible it is sometimes confused with Chingills, near Mangerton in Liddesdale. In 1579 the Privy Council ordered that several of the principle 'Armstrangis of the Gyngillis' should give assurance about the behaviour of the others. In 1583 an English account of the number of men in various parts of the Middle Marches listed 'Euesdale, Gingles, 300'. Thomas Armstrong 'of the Gyngils' signed the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens. Ringan Armstrong 'of the Gyngills' is recorded in 1590. Towers of 'Ecki gingles' and 'Tho. of ye Jingles' are recorded on opposite sides of the Ewes valley on Sandison's c.1590 map of the Deabateable Land. It may be the place transcribed as 'Creingills' in the Lordship of Melrose, among lands inherited by Sir John Riddell of that Ilk in 1669 (also written 'Gingles' and variants; it is 'Gyngillis' in 1573; see also Chingills).

Ginglenwells (ging-lin-welz) n. former house on the Hermitage Water, roughly opposite Gorrenberry. William Armstrong was tenant in 1694, with John Elliot also residing there. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties, when it was combined with Dinlees, consisting of 1067 acres and bounded by Greystonehaugh, the Lord of Hoscote's lands, Twislehope, Rispylaw and Gorrenberry. The lands there were rented by William Elliot of Tarras from the Duke of Buccleuch in 1736. There is possibly an association with 'Chingills' or 'Gingills', although they were near Mangerton and in Ewesdale, respectively (it is marked on Blaeu's 1654 map and is 'Ginglanwalls on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; it is 'Ginglenualls' in 1694, 'Ginglenwalls' in 1722 and 'Ginglanwalls' in 1736).

the Girdle Stanes (thu-gir-dul-stānz) n. stone circle ner Eskdalemuir, not far from 'the Loupin Stanes'. 26 stones remain in a nearly circular arrangement of about 38 m diameter, with some having been washed away by the White Esk.

girl (gi-rul) v., arch. to thrill, shudder, shiver, tingle, make one's teeth tingle – 'That chairkin' skeelie gars iz girl' [GW], 'A duist hyit jairgin things, an that menseless road-injin fair garrd mei girrl!' [ECS] n., arch. a shiver, sudden thrill (also written 'girrl').

The Girl I Left Behind Me (thu-gi-rul-I-left-bee-hīnd-mee) n. tune that the Drums and Fifes play at certain times, popularised in the 1949 John Ford/John Wayne film 'She Wore a Yellow Ribbon'. The song is known by many different names and is claimed to have either Irish or English origins. It is known to have been played by military drum and fife bands in the early 1800s and dates back to at least the late 18th century. It is one of the tunes specifically played on the Saturday, when the band march the Cornet and mounted supporters down the Loan.

the Girls' Brigade (thu-gi-rulz-bri-gād) n. international Christian organisation for girls, founded in 1893. 1st Hawick meets at Burnfoot Kirk, 2nd Hawick at St. Mary's Kirk and 3rd Hawick at Wilton Kirk (formed in 1969). A pipe band was founded in 1972.

girn (girn) v. to show the teeth in pain or effort, grimace, distort the face, complain peevishly, grumble, whine, cry – 'stop yer girnin, wull ee?', 'John, whan he play'd, ne'er threw his face, Like a' the girning piper race' [CPM], 'I'm no acquaint wi' mealy pows; I was brought up wi' tups and ewes, High up amang the heather cowes, Where winter girns' [JR], 'The hurcheon raxed his scory chafts, And gepit wi' girning joye' [JTe], '... Girnside Bog (girn-sīd-bog) n. former name for Greenside Moss, a formerly marshy part of the Common. This name was used in the 1788 Council records when the area was largely drained.

Girnside Hill (girn-sīd-hil) n. hill on the north side of the Todrig Burn, between Wester and Easter Essenside, reaching a height of 266 m. Just north of the hill is Old Essenside, possible site of a former village, and on the southern slopes are the remains of a settlement.

Girnwud (girn-wud, -wood) n. Girnwood, a farm at the end of the road through Deanburnhaugh in the Borthwick valley. The estate here was formerly connected with 'Lyne', so that 'Girnwood and the Lyne' was its name in the earliest records. In 1317 part of the common 'de Grenwode et de Hendentheythe' (or 'Heudouchheyth', probably a variant of Outerside) was granted to William Barbour, having previously belonged to Adam of Hoddam. The lands were formerly included within the Parish of Hassendean, transferring to the new Roberton Parish in 1689/90. The lands passed from Walter Dalgleish 'of Greenwood' to Adam Turnbull in 1439. Sir Thomas Turnbull of Greenwood and Lyne leased the lands to Robert Scott of Allanhaugh in 1488, but keeping 1 acre in the north parts of both Greenwood and Lyne for himself. Alexander, 2nd Lord Home was granted these lands in 1492/3, after being resigned by Sir Thomas Turnbull. Alexander, 3rd Lord Home succeeded to these and other lands in 1506. James Turnbull was recorded there in 1503. In 1506 'the lands of Greenwood were valued at £3 Scots and in time of peace at 2 merks old extent, and were held of William Turnbull of Minto as superior, for one penny blench'. In 1522 there is a letter from James V requiring William Turnbull of Minto to receive George, Lord Home as tenant on his lands there. William, son of William Turnbull of Minto sold the lands to Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1532/3. In 1535 George, Lord Home regained the lands through royal revocation of the previous charter. The lands were held by the Scotts of Buccleuch in the late 16th century, and were stated in 1574 to be in the Barony of Minto; they were at that time valued at £10 and held of the King by service of ward and relief. The Scotts of Girnwood were tenants for about 200 years. James Chisholme of Girnwood is recorded in 1605. The lands of 'Grenwode et Lyne' were inherited in 1634 by Francis Earl of Buccleuch from his father, then passed to his daughters Mary and Anne, and 'Girnwood and the Lyne with thair pertinentis' were listed among the possessions of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch in her 1663 marriage contract. There were 9 'communicants' recorded there in 1650, namely Andrew Clerk, John Govenlock, Marion Stoddart, Isobel Nivison, Bessie Renwick, Margaret Brown, Robert Hislop, Margaret Laidlaw and Janet Hislop. It was listed among properties of the Duke of Buccleuch in 1678. Adam Elliot was tenant in 1688. Adam Scott was tenant there in 1694, and James Aitchison was also a resident at that time. Francis Beattie and James Aitchison were there in 1703, Thomas Chisholme in at least 1710–16 and Robert Scott and John Laurie in at least 1716–18. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Buccleuch properties, when it covered 603 acres (with 100 acres of 'corn land meadow and pasture'), bounded by Outersiderig, Henwoodie common and Hoscote. Walter Scott was there in 1726. John Tait was there in 1735 and Henry Paterson in 1742. The tenant reported flood damage to the crops there in 1745. Robert Mitchellhill was there in 1757 and Andrew Goodfellow in 1766. Walter Scott is recorded there in 1797 and was tenant until his death in 1818. James Glendinning was shepherd there in at least 1808–1812. Another Walter Scott was farmer there in the 1860s. Provost William Scott Nichol farmed there for a time, and there are memorial cairns there for him and his brother. The western-most section of the Catrail is near here, with part to the north now planted over, and reaching towards a tributary of the Dean Burn, while a long shallow section is also visible to the south; however, there have been debates about precisely which sections might have been part of the Catrail, and which might have been later boundary ditches. There is also another similar linear earthwork above the farm to the west, on the southern slopes of Girnwood Hill. There is a waterfall to the west of the farm, on Girnwood Linn, this probably being the associated place referred to in old documents as 'the Lyne'. Just to the north east is a small unnamed loch, with enclosures nearby, while Girnwood Loch lies much further, behind Girnwood Hill (formerly spelled 'Greenwood' and variants; it first appeared as 'Grenwode' in 1317, becoming 'Grenewod' in 1439, 'Grenwod' in 1488, 'Grenewod' in 1493, 'the grene wod' in 1503, 'Grenewod' in 1535, 'Grenewoid et Lyn' in 1574, 'Grinwood' in 1636, 'Greinwood et Linn' in 1661, 'Girnwod' in 1710 and 'Grinwood' in 1812; it is marked on a 1650 parish map as 'Girnewoode', on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Girnwoode', is 'Girnewood' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and is bizarrely shown twice on Roy's c.1750 map; the origin is Old English 'grene wudu', meaning 'the green wood').

Girnwud Linn (girn-wud-lin) n. steep gorge on part of the Hoscote Burn to the west of the farm of Girnwood. It also contains a waterfall. It is probably the place referred to from early times as 'the Lyne'. On the north side of the stream, near the bottom of the gorge is a roughly semi-circular earthwork, consisting of a ditch with a bank on each side. It measures about 75 m by 50 m, there is an entrance at the south-east end and it is best preserved at the north-west end. The interior has been ploughed and so there is no trace of any building foundations. There is a linear earthwork extending from here to more than half-way to Girnwood farm, the eastern end being the best preserved. The same earthwork may also have crossed the Linn, and extend towards Black Sike to the west. It has been suggested to have been related to the Catrail, but is clearly a less substantial boundary line.

Girnwud Loch (girn-wud-loch) n. small loch north-west of Girnwood farm, draining into the Hoscote Burn. North of here are remains of a linear earthwork, consisting of a bank and ditch, and stretching about 170 yards along a dyke to a point near the Ale Water; however, it has been destroyed by forestry plantation. This earthwork may have helped fuel the notion that the Catrail continued beyond Girnwood (it is marked, but not named, on Ainslie's 1773 map).

girny (gir-nee) adj. complaining, peevish, cantankerous, whiny – 'And bonny scab, bairn-high, Whiter than whey, On a girny simmer's day Wi' a tear in its ei' [DH], 'Mother I think had no cash and Mary Ritchie had a severe girny old father' [JeC].

Givanshaa (gi-vinz-haw) n. Givanshall, farmstead in Ashkirk Parish, marked to the east of Outer Huntly on Ainslie's 1773 map.

Glack (glawk) n. former name used for a local branch of the Scotts, apparently the same as Clack, closely related to the Scotts of Fenwick. The seat was 'Glack' in Peeblesshire, but the family also owned Fenwick and Highchesters in the mid-to-late 17th century. The Laird of 'Glak' was listed among 'Landit Men' of Roxburgh and Selkirk in about 1590 – '... Then he married a wife according to his mind, And betwixt them twa they did procreat Headshaw, Askirk, Sinton, and Glack' [CWS], 'Oh! the laird of Glack, he must not be omitted, Though he sold the land of Goldieland long e'er he got it' [CWS] (perhaps from Gaelic 'glac', a hollow; there are several Glacks elsewhere in Scotland; it is 'Glak' in 1581 and 1585, 'Glæke' in 1597 and 'Glak' and 'Glake' in 1609).

It is the opposite side of the street from Minto Place, and named after Wilton Glebe lands, which it overlooks. It included Orchard Street from 1892–99. The house at No. 1 was the site of the last shop to operate in the Wellogate, started in the early 1960s by Jean and Harry Smith, who came from Kirkcaldy. Mrs. Smith's carried on the grocers business after her husband's death, finally closing in 1995.

gled (gled) adj. glad – 'Ye're welcome, sakes ye're welcome Where ye're gled nae doot to be' [WL], 'Man, come on in, I'm gled tae see ye, In a' this time, how are things wi' ye' [JRE], 'The puir wee soul was unco gled, This was his day of days ...' [WFC].

gled (gled) n., arch., poet. a kite, Milvus milvus – 'The Kite or Gled, the Hobby and the Goshawk are also birds which ought to be found in the neighbourhood ...' [JAHM], 'His een, as greedy as gled's for gear, Wad settle whiles on a sonsie dear ...' [WL] (from Old English, the name survives in some place names, e.g. Gledsnest).

glede (gleed) n., arch. a sideways look, squint – 'A glede o' the 'Aw saw wi' a glede o' the tail o' ma ee that she was conquered noo, but aw never let on' [WNK] (also gleid; cf. gledge).

gledge (glej) v., arch., poet. to squint, leer – 'An' sun-tann'd hide, to gi'e offence is prone, After sic gledging on a scene like yon' [JoHa], 'She gledged at her cousin, and trigged up her cap' [HSR], 'The kimmers Faith and Hope gledge oot o the lamplit door Into the wundy derk o Eternity' [DH], '... and, sune, ye're daunderin' alang gledgin' aboot frae yin side to the t'other as ye gaun' [DH], n., arch. a squint, sidelong glance – 'Yeh loonge owre the brig ... an a gledge doon inti the Rule as it ran rowlin ti link in wui Teiot' [ECS], 'Wi' a gledge at the sky As the cutty reeks, A demm at a thistle And on wi' his breeks' [DH], '... wi a last gledge at St. Mary's clock keekin owre the ruifs like a sma local moon' [DH] (cf. glede).

gledhawk (gled-hawk) n., poet. the kite – 'I had rather the gledhawks piked mine eyne, I had rather the corbie's stripped me clean ...' [WHO] (cf. gled).

gledness (gled-nis) n. gladness – '... Sae grains the warld to gledness frae the deid' [WL].

Gledsnest (gledz-nest) n. farmstead adjacent to Colterscleuch, formerly in Cavers Parish, now in Teviothead. It was locally known as 'the Nest'. John Grieve and family lived there from at least the 1820s to 40s. John Hume was farmer there in the 1860s. It is run as a bed and breakfast guest house (presumably related to gled, although also suggested to have obtained the name from being build by a Gledstains).

Gled's Nest (gledz-nest) n. area at the head of March Sike, in the headwaters of Northope Burn.

the Gledstain Porch (thu-gled-stin-pōrch) n. burial aisle of the Gledstains family, forming the southern transept of Cavers Old Kirk. It is referred to in the Exchequer Rolls of 1524, and was probably even older. This once important family had lost almost all its estates and influence by the mid-18th century and the heritors had the aisle demolished.

Gledstains (gled-stānz, gled-stinz, glad-stānz) n. (Gladstone) former family seat of the Gledstains of that Ilk, situated near Biggar in South Lanarkshire. Herbert 'de Gledestan' of Lanarkshire was recorded in the Ragman Rolls of 1296. The seat moved to Cocklaw just outside Hawick around the early 15th century, after which the chief of the family was 'of that Ilk and Cocklaw'. The lands there passed to the 4th Earl of Angus after the downfall of the Black Douglases in 1455 (although small parts continued to be held by branches of the family, including Arthurshiel). There were several alternative spellings, e.g. the Laird of 'Gledstanis' was listed among 'Landit Men' of Scotland in about 1590 (the name presumably meant 'hawk's stone' originally).

Gledstains (gled-stānz, gled-stinz, glad-stānz) n. former name for a piece of land in Hobkirk Parish. Thomas Oliver was there in 1758.

Gledstains (gled-stānz, gled-stinz, glad-stānz) n. (Gladstone) Abraham of Hunthill (17th C.) possibly son of George of Dod. In 1676 he was served heir to his grandfather Walter of Dod in his lands of Hunthill. He was listed paying the land tax in 1678 for land in Cavers Parish valued at £180; this was a combination of Dod and Hunthill (then included within the valuations of Cavers Parish). By 1707 the 2 lands had been disjoined and were later owned by the Potts of Dod and the Duke of Buccleuch, respectively. He could also be the 'Laird dod' who paid tax for land valued at £14 in Eckford Parish in 1678. Adam (15th/16th C.) resident of Belses. In 1510 he was allowed to compone in 1510 for the crime of resetting, supplying and communing with rebels. Adam (15th/16th C.) resident of the Selkirk area. In 1530 he witnessed a transaction between Walter Scott in Ashkirk and his brother William Scott, over Lilliesleaf Mill. In 1532 he was represented by Andrew Shortreed when Thomas Ker, in the name of Walter Scott, requested that he repay his debt. Agnes (b.1677) daughter of Town Clerk Walter. Her baptism was carried out by Rev. John Langlands and witnessed by James Deans and wright Walter (who were both Bailies). She married Col. William Murray and went with him to Flanders. Her husband witnessed a baptism for her brother Walter in Hawick in 1722. Alexander (15th C.) probably son of Thomas of Roberton and Flex. However, it is also possible he was son of James of that Ilk and father of John of Cocklaw, recorded in the 1480s. In 1458 he had a confirmation by James II of 'terras dominicales de Kirktoune, et molendinum ejusden ac terras de Flexis in Baronia de Hawic' (i.e. the lands and mill of Kirkton and the lands of Flex). In 1464/5 he was involved in a case of 'mortancestry', where William Douglas of Drumlanrig (and Baron of Hawick) had him removed from the lands of Flex and 'Kirkton Mains', which he claimed were wrongfully possessed. Neighbouring lands of East Mains had been removed for a similar reason from James of Cocklaw's widow Janet Murray in 1437. In 1464/5 Douglas had a sasine for these lands, in which he is also mentioned. Probably the same Alexander is recorded as witness to a sasine for Denholm Mains in 1465/6, along with Matthew and Cuthbert; he is listed between the Chaplain and Notary, so perhaps he held some official role. Alexander (16th C.) Rector of Garwald in Dumfriesshire in 1539 when he witnessed a charter for lands in Langton, Berwickshire. Alexander (16th C.) Burgess who witnessed transactions several times in Selkirk in the period 1531–41. He was on an inquest there in 1536/7. In 1540 he bought a tenement in Selkirk from Alexander Lauder and his wife Marion Hay and resolved a dispute with them in 1544. In 1541 he resigned a tenement in favour of his wife Katherine Fairley and in 1543/4 he and Fairley 'his kinsman' made a bond of payment. In 1542 and 1543 he received payment for bolls of barley. In 1561 he promised to pay back the £10 Scots he had borrowed from his son and heir, John. In 1562 he assigned a tenement to George Halliwell. Alexander (16th C.) Burgess in Selkirk, who was probably related to the earlier Alexander. He was 'elder' in 1580 when he witnessed a transaction involving Marion, widow of William Scott, Burgess of Selkirk and another involving Scott of Haining and Scott of Goldielands. He may be the Burgess of Selkirk of that name who in 1580 gave up an annual rent in Selkirk in favour of John Scott in Whithope. Also in 1580 he was 'elder burgess' when, with the consent of his wife Katherine Turnbull, he gave a tenement in Selkirk to his daughter and heir Helen. Furthermore, in 1580 he was executor for the will and inventory of Janet, who may have been widow of a man called Dunn; he was left 56 shillings, while his daughters Helen and Margaret were left £6 and £4, respectively. It seems like he was a close relative of Janet, such as her brother. In 1581 his daughter Helen is recorded receiving redemption money from him and he also resigned a tenement to Helen and her husband Thomas Dobie. He witnessed further transactions in Selkirk in 1581. Also in 1581 he was among those chosen to make a 'stent roll' in Selkirk. In 1581/2 he and his daughter Helen declared that they had received money from several people, including from the testament of 'Dony Gledstanis'. Also in 1581/2 there was a marriage contract between his daughter Helen and Gavin 'Gledstanis late of Stobbis' (who sold Stobs to Gavin Eliott); the couple were to receive his tenement in Selkirk (although he reserved the liferent for him and his wife), while the groom would bring 400 merks. Alexander (16th C.) recorded as 'younger' in Selkirk in 1579 and as 'younger burgess' in 1580 and 1580/1. He may have been son or other near relative of the earlier Alexander. Andrew (14th/15ht C.) recorded as a Scotsman who was released from prison in Norwich, where he had been committed in violation of the truce with England. Andrew (15th C.) listed as 'And. de Gledstane' in 1451 when he witnessed a charter relating to the Church of Brechin. It is unclear how he might have been connected to other early family members. Andrew (15th/16th C.) listed on the 'retour of inquest' performed at Cavers in 1497/8 for Robert Elliot inheriting his grandfather's lands of Tillielee and Cauldcleuch. John of Winningtonhall is also listed and so possibly a close relative. Ann (c.1780–1850) daughter of John, the Town Clerk. Her and her sister Christian were served heir to their father in 1808 and sold 80 High Street in 1809. However, in 1811 she was probably the 'Miss Gladstanes' listed along with 'Mrs. Richardson' as owners of part of the particate lands of Hawick. With her sister, she later lodged with Wintrup the tailor in an old house where the Orrock Church was built. They were known locally as 'the last of the Gledstanes'. Her sister was said to have died unmarried, although some accounts say she married Richardson (so perhaps there was another sister). She herself married John Scott, 'Jock the Turk'. In about 1874 her family's former lands (presumably on the High Street) were listed belonging to 'Feuars of Mrs. Richardson and Miss Gladstanes' Lands'. Archibald (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'Archibald of Gledstanis' in the 1500 appraisal of the lands of Whithope. It is unclear how he was related to the other Gledstains. He may be the Archibald who was granted the lands of Adderstone and Adderstoneshiel in the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1502. He may be the 'archibaldo gledstanis' from whom 19 sheep were reported stolen from his church lands near Dumfries in 1504. Probably the same Archibald was on the panel of 'retour' in 1517 for Sir Walter Scott inheriting the barony of Branxholme. He may be the son of John, who was nephew of John of that Ilk and Cocklaw, mentioned in connection with a raid on the lands of Cademuir and Hundleshope in 1518. Archibald of Whitlaw (17th/18th C.) resident of Northhouse according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. His name is recorded as 'Mr Archibald Gedstaines' (presumably an error for 'Gledstaines') and he was taxed on 3 hearths. The 'Mr' is probably just suggesting that he was a landowner, rather than being a a preacher or teacher. In 1681 he was 'broyr. to Whitlaw' when he witnessed a baptism for Walter of Hilliesland. Probably the same 'Mr' Archibald was witness to a baptism for Rev. Patrick Cunningham in 1671 and in 1685 when he (along with James of that Ilk) witnessed a baptism for John of Hilliesland. He was again 'Mr' in 1696 and 1697 when he leased the farm of Northhouse from the Scotts of Buccleuch. He also contributed £100 to the Darien Scheme in 1695. He was also in Northhouse when he witnessed baptisms in Hawick for John Scott in Hawick and for Gideon Scott of Falnash in 1698. He was still 'Mr' and 'of whitla' when he (along with James Gray in Whitlaw) witnessed a baptism for Thomas Anderson in 1706. Bartholomew (15th/16th C.) witness in 1500, along with George and William, to a charter for Walter Ker of Cessford for the lands of Caverton. It is possible that they were connected with Kelso Abbey. Christian (d.1816) daughter of Town Clerk John. Her and her sister Ann were served heir to their father in 1808 (their brother James presumably dying before that). Some accounts say that she died unmarried, but she appears to have married manufacturer Walter Richardson. In 1811 she was probably the 'Mrs. Richardson' listed along with 'Miss Glestanes' as owners of part of the particate lands of Hawick. Cuthbert (15th C.) recorded as 'of Gledstains' when he was witness to a Cranston family sasine for Denholm Mains in 1465/6. David (15th C.) received 3 sheep in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2.

He may be the same 'Dauid Gledstanis' who witnessed a document for Scott of Branxholme in 1500. Elizabeth (15th/16th C.) resident of the Selkirk area. She was recorded in 1532 as mother of Andrew Brydon, when her son agreed to pay her, with the money related to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme (perhaps as laird of the associated land). Elizabeth (15th/16th C.) wife of Robert Ker, Burgess of Selkirk, and mother of Mark Ker. In 1534 she donated her liferent of a tenement and orchard in Selkirk to the chapel there. She also produced a charter for her lands 'of Wr. . . ' in Hundleshope before 'bailie James Gledstanis and lord superior of the same'; this may have been James of that Ilk, who was perhaps her brother or father. The witnesses included Richard and John, who were probably also relatives. Probably the same Elizabeth in 1537 promised to follow her letter of assignation to Robert Turnbull regarding wards, reliefs and non-entry of Philiphaugh. Elizabeth 'Bessie' (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In about the 1720s she is recorded being given 'brandie, &c.' by the Kirk Session, presumably for medical use. Lieut. Francis (d.1645) father of Walter the Town Clerk, and brother of Capt. James. At age 21 (or perhaps 29) he was killed at the Battle of Aulderne, near Nairn, fighting for the Covenanter army alongside Douglas of Cavers and nine other local gentlemen. He married Margaret Stewart, and his son Walter Francis was born in Hawick in 1642. Francis of Whitlaw (17th C.) probably directly related to John of Whitlaw who died in about 1672. He may have been son of an earlier John. He is easy to confuse with the Francis of Whitlaw (son of John) who was born in 1643. He may be the 'ffrancis Gledstaines' who signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638. He managed the Cavers estates when 'the Good Lady Cavers' was in prison for her covenanting principles. He served as Chamberlain to the Buccleuch estates for Hassendean, Hawick and Wilton in 1657–59, taking over from his father, who was certainly dead by 1660 (according to a document of the Scotts of Buccleuch). In 1661 it is recorded that he owed about £3500 to the Duchess of Buccleuch for rentals in Hassendean and elsewhere, where he and his late father had been Chamberlain. He was recorded in a discharge in 1663. In 1671 he was Bailie of the Regality of Hawick for William Douglas of Drumlanrig when there was a court of Regality held in Hawick. Francis of Whitlaw (b.1643) son of John, with his mother possibly being Anna Scott. It is unclear how he was related to the earlier Francis of Whitlaw. He was also referred to as being 'of Flex'. It is unclear how he was related to the Francis who was recorded in the previous few decades. In 1672 he was served heir to his father John of Whitlaw in the lands of the Flex (perhaps suggesting that there is more than one generation here). He may be the Francis of Whitlaw who witnessed the baptism of a son of Walter Gledstains of Hilliesland in 1672. He was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick in 1675. He paid the land tax in Hawick Parish in 1678 for £266 13s 4d. Scott of Satchells dedicated part of his 'Post'ral' to him in 1688. In 1692 he leased the farm of Meikle Whitlaw (which he held for service for his lifetime) as well as Little Whitlaw. He is recorded providing timber for repairing the town Tolbooth in 1692, as well as timber 'for mounting of the steeple where the bell hings'; this was valued at £40, making him the first name among the subscribers of the new bell, listed on the enactment of the Council in 1694. Also in 1692 he made a proposal to the Town Council that he be allowed to enclose part of his land, but also including 'a little brae upon our syd of the march betwixt him and us'; he would plant trees there, with the agreement that the Town receive half of the timber, when it was ready to chop down. He seems likely to be the local Gledstains who was taxed for 5 hearths at his house in 1694. His brother may have been Archibald, and although it is unclear if he had any children, it is possible that James and John may have been his sons. He witnessed baptisms for tenants at the Flex in 1700 and 1702, for apothecary Walter Scott and for John Scott of Gorrenberry in 1703 and for gardener (for Gideon Scott in Fenwick) Walter Paterson in 1704. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690, on a list of Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament in 1700 and may be the Francis of Whitlaw who was still a Commissioner in 1704. It is possible he was the Francis in Braidhaugh, servant to the Laird of Falnash, who witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1707 (for James Stevenson, tenant in Harwood and for the tenant and shepherd in Slaidhills). A sundial belonging to him was saved from destruction by William Norman Kennedy and presented to the Museum collection; it bore the initials 'F.G.', the motto 'Fide et Virtute' and the date 1693. Francis (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Agnes 'Wiggam' and their daughter Isobell was born in 1670. It is possible he is the Francis 'servitor to Falnesh' who witnessed a baptism for Walter Wilson (younger in Castlehill) in 1709.

Francis (17th/18th C.) wright in Hawick. In 1683 he was fined for attacking Bailie Thorbrand and for 'violentlie taking 4 dukes [ducks] on the street, which the baylyea had first caught'. In 1688 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Andrew Angus. He was listed as a wright among those contributing to the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the Francis on the east side of Hawick, who appears on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1702 (or perhaps 1712) he was fined by the Kirk Session for being found drinking in a public house after 10 o'clock; however, he 'protested yt. he was not in drinke'. He could be the Francis in Hawick who witnessed a baptism in 1711 for carrier William Rae (along with smith John Scott). He witnessed further baptisms in 1712 for Bailie James Burn and for William Sanderson, in 1716 for smith John Scott, in 1718 (along with smith John Scott) for weaver Walter White and in 1719 for gardener John Tait. He married Marion Scott and their children included: William (b.1678); Christian (b.1680); Marion (b.1682); Margaret (b.1682); Helen (b.1684); John (b.1686); and James (b.1689). Witnesses to the 1680 baptism were Mr. John Purdom and tailor Walter Gledstains, in 1682 were 'Mr Walter Gladstains' (probably the Town Clerk, suggesting that they were related), shoemaker Thomas Turnbull and John Riddell and in 1684 were Walter again and 'student' William. Francis (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1723 he married Helen Allan, whose surname is given as 'Allan or Bridges'. Their children included: Margaret (b.1725); and John (b.1728). He could be the Francis, son of John and Margaret Harkness, born in 1685. He could be the Francis, innkeeper, who was a Bailie in the 1730s and 1740s and who in 1723 witnessed a baptism for weaver John Weens. He was one of the 'present Bailies' in 1742 (along with Robert Boyd) when he witnessed baptisms for Rev. William Somerville and for merchant John Ruecastle. Francis (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Skelfhill in 1745 when his daughter 'Kathren' was baptised. It is possible he was the same as one of the other Francises. Francis (18th C.) merchant in Hawick who was Cornet in 1744. He may be the Francis, son of Thomas and Bessie Sanderson, born in Hawick in 1718. It was stated in the Town Book that he was 'to go to the moss on Saturday yr. after', this being perhaps the first indication of events taking place on Common-Riding Saturday. He is probably the merchant Francis who witnessed baptisms in 1741 for druggist Gideon Scott, in 1742 for gardener Alexander Donald and in 1745 for James Riddell (at Menslaws). He was listed as a merchant in the baptismal record for one of his children in 1746. He is probably the Francis who was owed money in 1750 for goods (cloth, stockings, gloves, etc.) supplied to the deceased William Scott of Whitehaugh. He married Elizabeth Scott and their children baptised in Hawick included Thomas (b.1746) and Sarah (b.1747). The witnesses in 1746 were merchant Gideon Scott and ex-Bailie Robert Howison and in 1747 were merchants Gideon Scott and Charles Tudhope. Gavin of Stobs (16th C.) recorded in 1580 when he witnessed an agreement in Riddell between James Riddell in Maxton and John Riddell in Newton Mill. He is also recorded in 1580 when he sold the lands of Stobs (for 400 merks) to Gavin Eliott, who became the first Eliott Laird there. In 1581 there was a sasine (recorded in Selkirk) for him in inherit the lands of Stobs from his brother George; this was witnessed by Gavin Elliot of Bailielie (to whom he sold Stobs) and other Elliots, as well as 2 tenants in Swinstead. In 1581/2 he was 'late of Stobbis' (suggesting that the sale of the land to Gavin Eliott had already happened) when there was a marriage contract between him and Helen, daughter of Alexander, Burgess in Selkirk. The couple were to be given a tenement in Selkirk by Alexander, while he was to bring 400 merks as part of the arrangement. It is possible that he was related in some way to the Gledstains of Selkirk. George (15th C.) recorded in 1484/5 as a witness to Walter Ker of Cessford assigning Dolphinston to his son Mark. It is unclear how he was related to other members of the family. Perhaps the same George was recorded in 1489, along with William, as witness to a retour for the Kers of St. Helen Shaw in Selkirk. Probably the same George (along with William and Bartholomew) was witness to a charter for Walter Ker of Cessford for the lands of Caverton in 1500. He could be related to the George who had sasines for Craig in Dumfriesshire in 1458 and 1459. He may be the 'Gorgoni de Gledstanys' who leased Hundleshope in Peeblesshire in 1471. George (15th/16th C.) obtained a sasine for the lands of Gladstanes in Roxburghshire in 1503, this being granted by Ninian Glendinning. It is unclear which lands are referred to here. He is probably the 'georg of gledstanis' who witnessed a bond between Turnbulls at Caerlenrig in 1505. In 1510 he witnessed a charter for this same Ninian Glendinning, for lands in the Barony of Scraesburgh. He may be the 'George Gledstanis' listed in 1526 as a brother of Adam Scott in Clarilaw and William Scott, when a large number of Borderers had remission for attacking the Earl of Arran; this would suggest he was a step-brother or brother-in-law (i.e. he married a daughter of James of Kirkurd). He may be the George who witnessed a document for the Scotts of Headshaw in 1531. George (15th/16th C.) recorded among the many Borders men who had remission in 1526 for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. He is listed separately from another George, but right before Walter, who is probably related. George of Stobs (d.bef. 1581) recorded as deceased in 1581 when his brother Gavin received sasine for his lands of Stobs. It is unclear how he was related to other local Gledstains. George of Dod (17th C.) possibly son of Walter. He was a local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, according to James Wilson. In 1643 he is recorded paying tax for lands valued at £180 in Cavers Parish; these appear to have been Dod and Hunthill, which were disjoined before 1707. He may be the Laird of Dod whose lands in Kirkton Parish were valued at £700, and whose mother was listed as liferenter of lands in Kirkton Parish, valued at £200. He is recorded as heir to Walter of Dod in 1649 when he was infefted in the lands of Hunthill (in Cavers Parish) by William, Earl of Lothian. He may have been father of Mary who married George Scott of Synton. He was recorded in a deed of 1663. He may have been father of Abraham of Hunthill, who was served heir to his grandfather Walter of Dod in 1676. Gorgon (d.1456) probably a son of the Laird of Gledstains. He was described as 'Gorgon de Gledstanys of Hundwellishop', and must have held the family lands of Hundleshope in Peeblesshire. After his death the property passed into the King's ward. He was mentioned in relation to the lands of Hundleshope in a later charter of 1471. It is possible that 'Gorgon' should be translated as 'George'. Herbert 'de Gledestan' (13th/14th C.), the earliest recorded Gladstone, from the county of Lanark, who swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. His seal bore an 8-leafed flower and the name 'S'HERB D'GLEDSTAN'. He probably gained the family lands in the Parish of Liberton, about 4 miles north of Biggar. His exact descendants are uncertain, but were known to be in Roxburghshire in 1336. It is likely that he received his Lanarkshire lands from the Douglases, because of the close connection between the families for many subsequent generations; this may also have been the origin of the move to lands in Roxburghshire. A tradition says that the family shield once bore 'the bleeding head of a savage or Saracen', perhaps relating to the Crusades. The name Herbert occurred many times later in the Dumfriesshire and Peeblesshire branches. Herbert (15th C.) rendered the accounts of Annandale in the Exchequer Rolls for 1455. He is referred to as 'eodem', i.e. 'of that Ilk' in 1456 when he witnessed a charter for Robert, Lord Maxwell. He was probably the Baillie of Dumfries mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls in 1460. Probably the same Herbert also witnessed a charter in Annandale in 1487. Herbert (15th/16th C.) Rector of Dornoch, he held lands in Over Kelwood in Dumfriesshire. He was recorded in several charters in the years 1504–08. Perhaps the same Herbert witnessed a charter for Robert, Lord Maxwell in 1525. He is probably the Herbert, Burgess of Dumfries, whose great-grandson Mark was served heir in 1610 (as well as to the lands of his son, also Mark). He may have been succeeded by Thomas, who had a charter of Over Kelwood in 1509. Herbert (d.1569) Town Clerk of Dundee. In 1541 he married Mirabella, who was daughter of his cousin (with a dispensation from the Pope) Matthew of Over Kelwood. His first wife died in 1555 and he secondly married Margaret Hepburn. He was succeeded in Over Kelwood and Craigs by his son Walter (also called 'of that Ilk') and also had a son George, who was Archbishop of St. Andrews. He may be the Herbert who was notary for a document in Perthshire in 1547. Herbert (16th/17th C.) Schoolmaster in Dumfries, recorded in 1601. In 1606 he was named in a grant by John of Over Kelwood and Craigs (to whom he was presumably a distant relative). Given his forename, he was surely a descendent of earlier Gledstains. Herbert (b.c.1600) born in Dumfries, he joined the army of Gustavus Adolphus of Sweden in about 1640. He received lands in Oestergottland in 1647, with the form of his name being 'Gladsten'. This branch of the family continued in Sweden until 1761. Another Herbert was Lieutenant in the army in Sweden and killed during the siege of Breda in 1637; he was probably related. James (d.bef. 1437) 6th of that Ilk, son of William, and younger brother of John, who he appears to have succeeded. He also had another brother Thomas, although it is unclear who was older. He probably inherited Hundleshope in Peebleshire from his mother (Margaret Turnbull), along with Gledstains in Lanarkshire and Cocklaw in Roxburghshire through his father. He was witness to a charter along with his brother

Thomas in 1404 (regarding the rights of Melrose Abbey for the benefits of Cavers Parish), and resided at Cocklaw in Cavers Parish. He was the owner of the tower during the famous siege of Cocklaw (i.e. Ormiston) by the Percys in 1403. Also in 1403 he was probably the 'James of Gledstanis' appointed as bailie of the regality of Sprouston for Archibald, Earl of Douglas. In 1413 he is recorded holding the position of Bailie to the 4th Earl of Douglas, in the Regality of Sprouston, and possibly also in the Barony of Cavers (like his forefathers held for their Douglas superiors) in a sasine for John, son of Sir William of Cranston. In 1424 he was listed on a 'retour of inquest' made in Hawick for lands in Hownam; Robert was also listed and so probably related. He married Janet Murray, who was involved in a law-suit against the Baron, Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1437 over ownership of East Mains. The next generation is uncertain, but his grandson was probably John of that Ilk and Cocklaw. He must also have been related to Alexander (perhaps his nephew) who lost the lands of Flex and 'Kirkton Mains' to the Baron in another court case of 1464/5. James of Cocklaw (d.bef. 1544) son of John. In 1519 he entered into a marriage contract with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, to marry his son and heir John to one of Sir Walter's daughters, or failing that any other woman Sir Walter selected; this involved a promise to give lands in Peeblesshire and Cavers to the couple, with Sir Walter promising to try to preserve the lands of Cocklaw intact in future. The Peeblesshire lands were in the barony of Hundleshope and the Cavers lands were 'Guddisclucht, Vnishop, Binkkis and Langbittis'. He may be the James described as 'lord superior of the same' in 1533 when Elizabeth (wife of Robert Ker, Burgess of Selkirk) produced a charter for her lands in Hundleshope. In 1533/4 he witnessed a bond between Patrick Murray of Falahill and William Stewart of Traquair. He was said to have been in possession of Cocklaw in 1534, when a fresh seal was added to the deed granting Hundleshope to John Turnbull, hence confirming him in those lands. Although the family no longer had the lands of Gledstanes in Lanarkshire, they were still called 'of that Ilk', and Arthurshiel, a neighbouring property was still owned by a branch of the family. He was succeeded by his son John, who is recorded as his heir in a dispute in 1544 with Robert Scott in Howford. James of Cocklaw (1547–c.1615) son of John. He was 12th of that Ilk. In 1567 he was among men ordered to present themselves to be warded in Blackness Castle; his surety was Sir William Douglas of Cavers. He was probably the James of Cocklaw who signed the bond uniting against the Liddesdale thieves in 1569. In 1569 he gave surety for Archibald Elliot of Corriesike (along with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, who was surety for other Elliots) and was found liable when he failed to appear, with his lands and goods to be held if he did not pay the £1000. Along with Walter Scott of Goldielands, he gave security for the appearance of a number of Hawick residents (Allan Deans, John Scott, son to Philip's Jock, and Johnnie Cavers) in a court case in Edinburgh in 1571, possibly connected with a raid. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves. According to the register of the Privy Council he was warded in 1571, had 'surety in relief' in 1571 and 1574 and served as surety in 1576. In 1572/3 he swore allegience to the Crown and the Regent (and not to assist Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst), with his surety being William Ker of Caverton. He signed the 'Band of Roxburgh' in 1573, 'with my hand at the pen'. Also in 1574 he served as surety for a large number of Borderers, specifically residents of Hummelknowes, Coliforthill and Adderstoneshiel; he was found liable to pay 5000 for not removing the thieves (who were mostly Croziers). In 1574 he was on the retours for Walter Scott of Branxholme as heir to his great-uncle David Scott, as well as his father Sir Walter Scott. He was probably the 'little Gladstane, good in need' who led the local contingent at the Raid of the Redeswire in 1575; the land near Bonchester known as 'Little Gledstains' may be connected with him in some way. He was a prominent Borderer of his time, his name being mentioned 32 times in the Register of the Privy Council, in connection with either Roxburghshire or Peeblesshire. He was probably the Laird of Gledstains who was on the defence side in the trial of 2 sons of Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule in 1577/8. In the 1570s he was one of the 'curators' of the young Robert Scott of Thirlestane. Also in 1576 he was a surety along with Walter Scott of Goldielands and James Langlands of that Ilk for tenants in Lairhope and Broadlee, as well as George Elliot, 'the Cleg', and John Stoddart, 'cobilman to the Lard of Langlandis'. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned, and was declared liable for the fines associated with the pledges made in 1576. Also in 1578/9 he was cautioner for Robin Elliot of Redheuch, pledging that he would not raid into England. In 1580 he,

Walter Scott of Goldielands and Robert Elliot of Redheugh complained to the Privy Council about Muckle Whitlaw being raided; they raised the fray, following the thieves to England. However, on their return through Liddesdale they were attacked by a band of Armstrongs and Elliots near Whithaugh. He was probably in the party that rode off to follow the raiders, and his brother Walter was killed. One of his farms was raided by Elliots and Armstrongs in 1580, as well as the farm tenanted by John Gledstains at Whitlaw. Also in 1580 he complained (along with the Countess of Bothwell and Wat Scott of Harden) of thefts and outrages committed by the Elliots on their farms. In 1580/1 he witnessed an agreement to settle a dispute between George Scott of Synton and Walter Scott of Stirches regarding the lands of Synton Mill. In 1581 he was allied with Walter Scott of Goldielands and Robert Elliot of Redheugh when they had a set of complaints made against them by Martin of Braidlie, Simon Armstrong of Mangerton and Lance Armstrong of Whithaugh; they were all charged to appear before the Privy Council with assurances for their supporters. He was a cautioner (although with Robert and Mungo, Burgesses of Edinburgh) for Walter Scott of Goldielands being entered into ward in Edinburgh Castle in 1581. Also in 1581 he witnessed a 'letter of slains' in Hawick whereby Robert and James Scott forgave the Scotts of Allanhaugh and Over Southfield for the murder of their brother George. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. Also in 1583/4 he was involved in a caution for his tenant Thomas Burnet and others in his 3 husbandlands in Hundleshope, that John Scott there would not harm them. He was the Laird of Gledstains who gave assurances in 1584 for himself and other Gledstains, with the Elliot chiefs standing as assurance. In instructions from the King to Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus (Lieutenant on the Border) in 1586, he is listed along with the Lairds of Buccleuch, Howpasley, Redheugh, Braidlie, Whithaugh and others as chiefs in upper Teviotdale. In 1589 he was on a list of Border Lairds who failed to appear before the Privy Council to give 'thair gude advise anent the gude reule and quietnes of the Bordouris' and were denounced as rebels. Also in 1589 he was surety for John Turnbull of Minto. In 1590 he was among Border landlords and heads of families ordered to find caution for the conduct of their dependents. Also in 1590, Walter Scott of Goldielands acted as cautioner for him. He was probably the Laird of 'Gledstanis' listed on the 1590 'Roll of the Clans' and is also probably the 'James Gledstanis' who was witness in 1595 to the bond between the Scotts and the Kerrs. In 1592 his cautioner was Charles Geddes of 'Rauchane' that he would not reset any of those who had supported the Earl of Bothwell. In 1594/5 he made a bond that Hector and Richard Turnbull of Clarilaw would not harm Gavin Eliott of Stobs or William Elliot of Horsleyhill; this was signed at Hawick. In 1598 his name was transcribed 'of Atrei of Cocklaw' when he served as surety for John of Craig in a bond registered in Selkirk. In 1599 he was surety for himself and for 'his man' Simon, brother of Philip Scott of Dryhope, that they would 'observe the King's peace'. In 1600 there was a complaint by the Provost and Bailies of Peebles that he had come to 'Caidmure', along with his son and heir James, his natural son Robert and his nephew James, where they slew James Dickson; they were all denounced as rebels for non-appearance. He was 'of Cocklaw' in 1602 when he signed a bond among Border Lairds for keeping the peace. In 1605 he was in court with the family of Thomas Peebles, Burgess of Peebles, who was murdered in 1561, with the family still seeking satisfaction; his sureties were John of Winningtonrig and John Rutherford, Bailie of Jedburgh. His name appears in the Register of the Privy Seal no less than 32 times, in connection with both Roxburghshire and Peeblesshire. He was regularly fined (e.g. in 1608 along with Horsburgh of that Ilk and Halden of that Ilk, binding them to keep the peace), imprisoned and denounced as a troublemaker, although he lived to a reasonably old age. In 1610 he and William Scott of Howpasley had an action against them by James Douglas of Drumlanrig for not paying taxes on their lands of 'Ramseclewis, Howpaisley and Schawis', and on his lands of Adderstone and Adderstoneshiel. He signed a bond in 1612 (along with several Scotts) for keeping peace in the Borders. In 1614 he resigned his lands of 'Hundillishope, Acolmfeild, Wodegrevingtoun' and land at the east end of Peebles to his son James, younger, and his wife; this suggests he was quite old by then. He was succeeded by his son James (who was succeeded after only a few years by Walter). His daughter Margaret married David, son of Hector Turnbull of Wauchope according to a marriage contract of 1593 (not 1567 as in one record). Another daughter Lilias married Richard Rutherford 'Dickon Draw-the Sword', who led the Jedburgh contingent at the Raid of the Reidswire.

He may also be the James of Cocklaw whose daughter Barbara married John, younger son of John Rutherford of Hunthill. James of Cocklaw (c.1584–c.1620) son of James, he was the 13th of that Ilk. He led a similar life to that of his father, committing theft, murder, etc. In 1600 he was son and heir of his father when the pair, along with his brother Robert and cousin James, went to 'Caidmure', where they slew James Dickson; this was a continuation of the family's dispute over lands adjacent to their possession of Hundleshope. However, he was Laird of Cocklaw for only a few years. In 1606 he was 'appeirand of Coklaw' when he served as cautioner for Thomas Turnbull (younger of Wauchope) who was accused of raiding and burning Appotside and Harwood. He was still 'apparent of Cocklaw' in 1608 when he appeared for Archibald Douglas and others, swearing not to harm anyone in Peebles. In 1614 he his wife Beatrice Ker were granted the lands of 'Hundillishope [Hundleshope], Acolmfeild [Acrefield], Wodegrevingtoun' which had been resigned by his father James, elder. In 1616 he (or perhaps his father) was on the jury for the trial of the ruffians hired by Jean Scott of Satchells and Lady Scott of Howpasley to mutilate the sheep and cattle belonging to Douglas of Drumlanrig. It seems that by 1618 he and his son Walter seem to have fallen into debt when their lands of Hundleshope were assessed for 7825 merks and 390 merks sheriff's fee. He was then recorded as son and heir of James, and former owner of the lands of Hundleshope and others in Peebleshire, when John Scott had a charter from James VI for their lands, including pasturage on Cademuir, and pieces of land in Peebles and elsewhere in Peeblesshire. He may be the James who was a Hawick Bailie in the 1620s. He married Beatrix Ker in about 1607, and hence Beatrix, who married James Grieve of Commonside, may have been his daughter. He was succeeded by Walter of Cocklaw and may have also had sons Robert and James. In 1620 Beatrix Ker, Lady Gledstanes (presumably his widow by then) and her 3 sons William, Robert and James, led an assault on the old lands of Cademuir near Peebles that the family had cliamed for generations; they were charged with being armed with 'swerdis, gantillatis, plaitslevis, halbertis, lances, speiris, Jedburgh stauffis'. James (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1600 as 'brother-son' to James of Cocklaw. Along with his uncle and his cousins James and Robert, they were accused of killing James Dickson near Peebles. It is unclear who his father was. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. Bailie James (16th/17th C.) Magistrate of Hawick recorded in 1627, along with Robert Scott. They were the Town's Bailies when 16 men from Hawick were listed as being 'idle and masterless' and appropriate for sending to the wars in Germany. When the men were not produced he said that 'he had not power, force nor friendship within the toun of Hawick to apprehend the persouns abonewritten or to exhibite thame'; it is unclear exactly what that meant (since it also states that the other Bailie did have 'both power and friendship within the toun'). He is probably the James who acted as witness to the Hawick Parish valuation of 1627. Capt. James (d.1645) grandfather of Walter the Town Clerk, he must have been a near relative of the Lairds of Cocklaw. He was part of Sir William Douglas' Covenanter force, and was killed at the Battle of Aulderne along with his brother Francis. James (17th C.) resident of Abbotrule Parish. He married Marion Tudhope about 1668 and her will is recorded in 1682. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Jane Forrest and their children included: Alexander (b.1670); and Gavin (b.1673). Bailie James (b.c.1640) Hawick Councillor and Magistrate in the 1660s and Magistrate in the 1670s. He was on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude's Fair. He was also recorded as Bailie in Hawick in a deed of 1673. He is probably the brother of the Laird of Gledstains who became a Burgess of Hawick in 1665. He may be the 'Baylyea Gladstaines' recorded in 1675 among the men named to go to check on the boundary wall being built by Walter Scott of Goldielands, to ensure that the Common was not being encroached upon. He is probably the 'Gledstane' who witnessed a baptism for Walter of Hilliesland (along with 3 other former or present Bailies) in 1681. In 1689 he was 'of ye age of fiftyie yeare or yrby, maried' when he swore that he had heard Thomas Turnbull insult the present Bailies. He is probably the 'late baylyea' in Hawick listed among those contributing to funds for the new Kirk bell in 1693/4 and the 'Bailyea Gladstaines' who paid tax on 2 hearths in the east-side of Hawick in 1694. He may be the James, married to Isobel 'Whyllance' (i.e. Whullans), whose children baptised in Hawick included: William (b.1673); Isobell (b.1675); John (b.1677); James (b.1678); and Christian (b.1680). Probably Rachel (b.1683), with the mother's name given as 'Helen Whillance' was also his daughter. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for carrier James Scott in 1688 and another for John Aitchison in 1682. He was 'balyie' when he witnessed a baptism for tailor Walter Turnbull in 1685. Probably the same James was 'late baylea' in 1685 when Margaret Scott, wife of dyker John Stewart, was fined for defaming his daughter Janet. Rev. James (c.1638–1694) possibly from one of the Hawick families. He graduated M.A. in Edinburgh in 1659. He was appointed minister of Gretna and Rinpatrick in 1666 amid a dispute over patronage and was moved to Yetholm in that same year. In 1674 he witnessed the baptism of a son of Walter of Hilliesland, Town Clerk of Hawick, the baptism being carried out by Rev. Francis Scott of Minto (and later Hassendean), with the other witnesses Rev. John Chisholme of Lilliesleaf and Hawick Schoolmaster John Purdom; presumably all were strong Episcopalians. He was deprived in 1689 for not reading the Proclamation, but was appointed to the curacy of Alnwick in 1692 and was buried there. James (17th C.) of Hummelknowes. Recorded in a letter to Walter, Earl of Tarras in 1692. James (17th C.) listed as a resident of Effledge on the 1694 Hearth Tax roll. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Laing in 1700. Their son James was baptised in 1701. James (d.bef. 1734) 16th of that Ilk and Laird of Cocklaw, probably son of William. Scott of Satchells dedicated part of his Scott history to him in 1688. He registered arms in the period 1672–78. He was probably the Laird in 1678 who paid the land tax on £1240 in Cavers Parish. His brother John became a tailor's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1681. He may be the Gladstains of 'Ormistoun' who was among the local lairds who were taken off to Edinburgh Castle as supporters of the Covenanters in 1683. He was one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxbughshire in 1685. He (along with 'Mr Archibald') witnessed a baptism in 1685 for John of Hilliesland. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for doctor William Scott in Hawick in 1687, along with Town Clerk Walter. He was 'of Cocklaw' in 1688 when he witnessed a baptism for Charles Scott of Crumhaugh. In 1695 and 1700 he witnessed baptisms for John Scott of Gorrenberry. He was certainly still living in 1707, when he is recorded as gaining permission to cart divots off the Common. However, a Robert 'of that Ilk' is recorded on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1704, so the succession is unclear around this time. He supposedly died unmarried, perhaps shortly before 1734 when his property was divided among his heirs; however, it is possible he died earlier and was succeeded by Robert (perhaps a younger brother). Cocklaw passed to Janet Gledstains, who was either his daughter or perhaps the daughter of Robert. James (17th/18th C.) wright in Hawick Parish. He witnessed baptisms in 1714 for William Sanderson, in 1717 for Bailie James Burn and Christian Gledstains (who may have been related) and in 1719 for William Bulloch. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (17th/18th C.) blacksmith at Dodburn. His son William was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1718. William (b.1731), also baptised in Kirkton Parish, may also have been his son. It is possible he is the same man as the blacksmith in Hawick in the 1720s. James (17th/18th C.) blacksmith in Hawick Parish. In 1735 he was paid by the Council 'for making ye coulter' (presumably for using on the Common). He married Janet Moscrop and their children included: Bessie (b.1721); Janet (b.1723); and Walter (b.1725). The 1725 baptism was witnessed by Walter Nixon and John Scott 'in Hawick'. He could be the James, son of Walter and Janet Scott, baptised in Hawick in 1688. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Orchard in 1715. His children were probably Margaret (b.1712), Marion (b.1715), Isabel (b.1718) and Margaret (b.1722). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was son of Walter and in 1718 married Marion Gledstains, daughter of another Walter. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Hobkirk and their children included Janet (b.1703), Euphan (b.1706), Bessie (b.1710) and Margaret (b.1728). The gap in births make it possible there are 2 separate families here. For the 1703 baptism he was recorded being in Whitehaugh and the witnesses were James Gray in Whitlaw and Francis Henderson in Flex. The witnesses in 1728 appear to have been John Scott and John Paterson. James (18th C.) outdoor servant working on the Wells estate in about 1730. He is mentioned in the estate book of factor Archibald Jerdan, described as a sort of handy-man. James (18th C.) possibly brother of Bailie Gledstains, they were together given responsibility about 1740 for collecting subscriptions 'west the water' for paying for the Teviot Bridge. He would be the tailor who witnessed a baptism for wright Walter Scott in Hawick in 1725. He could be the James described as a tailor in Hawick in 1735. He may be the tailor James who witnessed a baptism for weaver

William Crozier in Hawick in 1718. He may be the James (along with another John) who witnessed an Episcopal baptism for John of Whitlaw in 1753. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Turnbull in 1753. James (18th C.) tailor in Hawick Parish. He married Jean Bulloch and their children included William (b.1756) and Marion (b.1759). He is probably the tailor who provided goods to the deceased William Scott of Whitehaugh in 1750. James (1766–bef. 1808) only surviving son of Town Clerk John. He owned the property at 80 High Street that was later the Liberal Club. However, he did not long outlive his father, since his sisters Christian and Ann were served heirs to their father in 1808 and sold the property in 1809. He could be the James, son of John and Ann Weir baptised in Hawick in 1766. James (b.c.1780s) labourer at Deanburnhaugh, according to the 1812 ballot for the Militia in Roberton Parish. James (b.c.1795) farm labourer and gamekeeper who lived at Branxholme Town and later at Stintyknowe. He was probably related to the earlier Gledstains who were at Chapelhill. His wife was Barbara and their children included Betty, Agnes and Margaret. In 1861 he was 'Formerly Gamekeeper' at 'Stintyknows Far House'. Janet nee Murray (15th C.) wife of James of that Ilk. In 1437, after the death of her husband, she was involved in a dispute with the Baron of Hawick, Sir William Douglas, over the lands of the East Mains of Hawick; the 'retour' decided in favour of Douglas. Her name is given as 'Joneta de Murrauia'. Janet (16th C.) owner of $1\frac{1}{2}$ particates of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick's 1537 Charter. She may have been widow of a local Gledstains. Janet (16th C.) recorded in Selkirk in 1580 when her will and inventory was listed in the Selkirk Protocol Books, 'made by her own mouth in her own house'. She was 'alias Done', suggesting that she may have been a widow, with her husband being a Mr. Down or Dunn. Her executors were Alexander, elder Burgess of Selkirk (who may have been a close relation, such as a brother) and William Currer. The list is given of those who owed money to her, and those to whom she owed money (including Katherine Scott, widow of Ninian Scott and Marion Gledstains, widow of William Scott). She left money to Margaret, wife of Thomas Dunn (who were surely related to either her or her husband), her son-in-law Thomas Brydon, her executor William Currer and Alexander, and Alexander's daughters Helen and Margaret. Janet (d.1737) probably the daughter of James, the 16th of that Ilk (although he is also said to have died unmarried, but perhaps this is confused and he merely died with no male heirs); however, she is also said to have been daughter of Robert of that Ilk. She died unmarried and in 1738 the lands of Dod were divided among her 'heirs-portioners', who were John of Whitlaw, Robert Rutherford and Robert's wife Esther, sister of Robert of that Ilk (and hence presumably her aunt). Cocklaw was eventually sold in about 1741. John (d.1412) 5th Gladstains of that Ilk, eldest son of William and Margaret Turnbull. He was probably called after his maternal grandfather. His mother transferred her properties to him when William died, some time in the reign of Robert III (probably the late 1390s). This included Hundleshope in Peeblesshire and Roberton in Selkirkshire (perhaps the first record of the name 'Roberton'), as well as land in the town of Selkirk. It is also possible that the lands of Ormiston (or Cocklaw), Orchard, Hummelknowes, etc. near Hawick were acquired by the Gledstains through this Turnbull connection; Margaret's father John was surely related to the Turnbulls of the Borthwick Water and Selkirkshire. This was the start of the family of Gledstains of that Ilk moving their centre of activity to Roxburghshire. He was probably succeeded by his brother James, or possibly by Thomas and then James. John (15th C.) possibly 7th of that Ilk, perhaps succeeding James, who may have been his father. However, the information is uncertain, partly because of the decline of the Earls of Douglas, their overlords. He was referred to as 'Johanni de Gledstanys de eisdem' in 1456 in the Exchequer Rolls for Peeblesshire. On the fall of the house of Douglas, Gledstanes in Lanarkshire had been forfeited to the Crown, and was granted to the Earl of Angus in 1457. However, John also still held Hundleshope (in Peeblesshire) in 1482. Around this time the Dumfriesshire branch of the family separated off. In 1463 he was on the panel of retour for the 5th Earl of Angus 'Bell the Cat' as heir to his father. He is probably the John Gledstains who acted as one of the Earl of Angus' Bailies for infefting David Scott of Branxholme in the lands of Mangerton in 1482. He was probably the John of Cocklaw who was witness to a 1483 document dealing with Denholm Mains. He may have been the 'John Gestanis' who witnessed a 1487 sasine for the lands of Boonraw and the 'Johannem Gledstanis' who was on the panel for Walter Scott inheriting the lands and titles of Branxholme and Buccleuch. In 1484/5 there is a record of a dispute between the Burgh of Peebles and him (together with Thomas Lowes of Manor) over lands at Cademuir (bordering Hundleshope); the decree that he and Lowes refrain from encroaching on Peebles Common was ratified by James IV in 1505/6. However, there was a further complaint that he sent 'his houshald men and servandis, and cruelly dang and hurt thair hirdis and servandis that were kepand thair corne and gudis within thair said propir landis, and left twa of thame liand on the feild for deid', after which he sent his nephew and son, with 26 of their accomplices to drive the people off their own lands. In 1492 there was a decree from the Privy Council against him, as well as William and Archibald Douglas of Cavers, to pay to John Rutherford of Hundalee the 100 merks due to his grandfather, Nicholas Rutherford. He may be the Laird of Gledstains who was surety for John Young in Deanbrae in 1494/5. Either he or the next generation would have been the Laird of Gledstains who was fined at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1502 for failure to 'give suit' for his lands of Adderstone and Adderstoneshiel. John of Winningtonhall (15th C.) recorded as 'of Wyndetounhall' in 1463 when he acted as Sheriff of Roxburghshire for the sasine infefting David Scott in the Barony of Branxholme. He is as 'of Wyndytourhall' when witness to a document of 1483 dealing with Denholm Mains. John of Cocklaw was also a signatory, so he was probably a relative, possibly even his son. In 1484/5 he was 'Gledstanis of Wynditonehall' when he was first witness to the transfer of the lands of Whitchesters to Robert (of Allanhaugh), son of Sir David Scott of Branxholme. He was probably the John 'Gledstanis' who was one of the witnesses for a sasine of lands in Denholm and Cavers in 1491/2. He may be the John 'gledstanys' who acted as surety for the sons of Matthew in Hassendean in 1494/5. In 1497/8 he was on the panel at Cavers to rule on the inheritance of Tillielee and Cauldcleuch by Robert Elliot; he is there 'of Winditonhaw'. He may be the John recorded in 1502 when 40 geese were stolen from him from out of 'aquam de teviot' by Adam Grahamslaw. He was probably an ancestor of the later John of Winningtonhall. John (1482–1518) 8th of that Ilk and Cocklaw, probably the grandson of James who suffered the famous Siege of Cocklaw. He still appears to have owned lands in Peeblesshire; He may be the John who presented Thomas Linton as suitor for his lands of Melvilleslands at the Justice-aire in Peebles in 1502 and William Dickson for his lands of 'Wodgrewington' in 1502/3. In 1509 he leased lands at Cademuir to John Murray. In 1509 he was also listed on the 'retour of inquest' (listed first, in fact) for the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by James Douglas. He is named in a Douglas of Cavers document in 1509/10, verifying their lands and Barony, except for the lands held by him, as shown by a charter of David II (although it is unclear whether this also refers to the Gledstains lands). He allied himself with the Scotts of Branxholme and Buccleuch. In 1517 he was on the panel of 'retour' for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his father's barony of Branxholme. His lands at that time included Colifort, Ormiston, Dod and Giddenscleuch. He was apparently quite unscrupulous, trying to gain possession of part of the common lands of Cademuir (adjacent to Hundleshope), and being involved in a raid there in 1518. He was succeeded by his nephew John, who was mentioned in connection with the 1518 raid. John of Cocklaw (d.1519) nephew of John, the 8th Laird. He was the 9th Gledstains of that Ilk, although only for a year. He was probably already an old man in 1518 when there was a raid, involving him and his son Archibald, on the common lands of Peebles. It is described that the Laird of Gledstains sent forth 'John of Gledstanes his nevoy and apperand air, Archibald Gledstanes, his sone, and others to the number of twenty-six men'. He was succeeded by his son James, who contracted in 1519 to marry his son John to a daughter of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. In 1517 his daughter Helen was infefted in 'liferent' of the lands of 'Langhawcht' in the Barony of Manor in Peeblesshire. He may be the John of that Ilk whose widow Margaret 'Jardane' is recorded in 1542 requesting from the Court of Session that Lord Somerville pay her the rents on the lands of Libberton (in Lanrakshire). John of Craig and Over Kelwood (d.bef. 1537) son of Thomas, who held Over Kelwood in Dumfriesshire. He was confusingly referred to as being 'of that Ilk and Craigs', even although there were others 'of that Ilk' in Roxburghshire at the same time. He had a sasine of Over Kelwood in 1525, married Margaret Jardine, who brought a case as a widow in 1537. He was probably succeeded by his brother Matthew. John (d.1574) probably a son of Gledstains of that Ilk, but his parentage is not known. He held the lands of 'Quothquan', which extended to 26 acres of the former larger estate of Gledstains in Lanarkshire. He attended St. Andrews University 1505–8, then studied in France. In 1534 he became an advocate, appointed 'Advocatus Pauperum' and was a Lord of Sessions from 1542. He was also Procurator of Judges, Member of the Privy Council and became Doctor of Laws. He was recorded in Edinburgh in 1550, on a panel ruling for the Privy Council. His property was inherited by his nephew, also John, who was Ormond Pursuivant for Scotland. He must have lived to a great old age, or else two men are compounded here. John (1519–64) 11th of that Ilk, son of James. He probably married a daughter of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme (Janet or Christian), to whom he had been betrothed by a marriage contract of 1519/20 (which must have been shortly after he was born). This demonstrates the close links between the Scott and Gledstains families at this time. In 1537/8 there was an assurance by several Croziers that they would not harm him, his friends or servants, with Elliots acting as cautioners. In 1542 he had a sasine for the lands of Adderstone and Adderstoneshiel. He was recorded in 1544 as heir of the deceased James of Cocklaw in a dispute with Robert Scott in Howford; he complained that Robert Scott and his tutor William Scott had made an arrangement for 6 ½ husbandlands in Cocklaw and owed him 200 merks in redemption money. Philip was a witness, and hence may have been related. He was probably the Laird of Gledstains mentioned as a creditor in the inventory of the estate of William Scott, younger of Buccleuch in 1552. He is mentioned in connection with exploits of the Scotts after 1553. In 1553/4 he was 'de Coklaw' when he was on the panel for Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme inheriting from his grandfather. He was charged with the murder of Thomas Peebles and William Bell at 'Kaidmuir' near Peebles in 1561, probably a continuation of the claim on those lands made by his family for generations; his name is given as 'Jhone Gledstanis of Coklaw'. Although the trial was deferred indefinitely, his son James was pursued for damages by the descendants of the victims. Also in 1561 he was among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. In 1562 he granted 4 husband lands in Hundleshope to Thomas, son of Robert Scott of Colifort when he married his daughter, Isabella. In 1563 he was 'of Cocklaw' and Baron of Hundleshope in Peeblesshire when he acted as superior for the lands of Glenrath. In 1563/4 he gave the tenancy of lands in Hundleshope (in Peeblesshire) to 2 men after they renounced their former 'kindenes' agreement. Also in 1563/4 he promised to enter 3 Elliots and 2 Croziers for crimes against an Englishman, with Sir William Cranston as his surety. He is probably the 'Lard of Coklaw' listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1564/5 he 'and his barnis' are described as supporters of Buccleuch in the bond signed between the Scotts and the Kerrs. Although he probably firstly married a Scott, he also married Margaret Lyle, to whim he gave sasine of lands in Hundleshope; by 1568 she was married to Alexander Lauder. He was succeeded by his son James, 'little Gledstane'. His other sons were: William of Cocklaw; Walter, killed by raiders from Liddesdale; and (probably) John of Whitlaw. A document of 1561 (for the rental of Corrie Sike) states that his son and heir apparent was John, which appears to contradict other information (and is perhaps an error, unless there were 2 confounded generations here). He also had a son who married Thomas Scott. John (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. John (16th C.) resident of Selkirk. He was son and heir of Selkirk Burgess Alexander in 1561 when his father promised to pay him back for the £10 Scots he had borrowed. John of Whitlaw (16th C.) probably son of John, 11th of that Ilk. He was the founder of the Whitlaw and Flex branch of the family. He is mentioned in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme as being left something unspecified. In 1580 he is recorded as 'servand' to the Countess of Bothwell, owner of Whitlaw, when the farm was raided by a group of Elliots and Armstrongs, who stole 100 sheep. He was in the party that followed the raiders, and one of his brothers was killed in a skirmish. John of Winningtonhall (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1579 when he witnessed the transfer of Roughhope and Philhope from John Turnbull to Martin Elliot. In 1581 he witnessed a transaction in Selkirk involving lands in Langnewton; his servant John Elliot was also a witness. In 1582 he witnessed a transaction involving the Scotts of Allanhaugh, taking place at Branxholme. He is probably the John 'of Wydeton hall' in 1584 when he signed the bond of assurance between men of Liddesdale and the English Wardens, his name appearing alongside other local Gledstains. He is recorded in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. Probably the same John 'of Woudingtoun Hall' was witness to a marriage contract between the Gledstains of Cocklaw and the Turnbulls of Wauchope in 1593. In 1598 he was one of the signatories for the registration of a bond for John of Craig not to harm certain Maxwells, with James of Cocklaw as the surety. He resigned his lands in 1605 (presumably for the purposes of a new infeftment), and is there styled 'Joanni Gledstanis de Windintounhall'. He is named as surety for James of Cocklaw and that Ilk in a trial of 1605 (relating to reparations for John of Cocklaw's murder of Thomas Peebles in 1561). His location is there recorded as 'Wynningtoun-hauch' and 'Wyndington Haugh'. In 1607 he was chancellor of the 'assyse' which found George Henderson in Winnington to be not guilty of chopping down trees belonging to Robert Elliot of Redheugh. It seems likely that he was a close relative of James of that Ilk and related to the John of the same place a century earlier. John of Over Kelwood and Craigs (16th/17th C.) son of Walter. His lands were in Dumfriesshire and he was the last of his line to be referred to as 'of that Ilk'. In 1595 he was served heir to his father in the superiority of the family's original Lanarkshire lands. He was recorded in 1598 when James of Cocklaw was his surety not to harm certain Maxwells; the papers were signed in Selkirk, with John of Winningtonhall as one of the witnesses (showing that there were still connections between the separate branches of this family). In 1606 he settled Over Kelwood on his cousin Alexander, Archdeacon of St. Andrews; the grant also named Herbert, Schoolmaster of Dumfries and John, son of William, Burgess of Dumfries (both probably distant relatives). He married Agnes Maxwell, who died in 1628. His heiresses were: Margaret, who married James Watson, Burgess of St. Andrews; Elizabeth, who married Matthew Hairstanes and acquired Over Kelwood; and Agnes, who married John Hairstanes, Burgess of Dumfries, in 1622. John of Whitlaw (d.bef. 1672) son of Walter. He stood in for his father as Chamberlain for the Duke of Buccleuch for Hassendean and Wilton Parishes in the period 1641–47 and was Chamberlain in his own right by 1647–48. He remained Chamberlain until at least 1656, and in the last couple of years also acted for Eckford, Hawick and Clarilaw. He was the Chamberlain who gave an account of the personal property and debts of Earl Francis Scott of Buccleuch when he died in 1651. In 1648 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1652 for Robert Scott of Harwood and Beatrix Gledstains (probably a relative). He was granted the lands of Flex by James Douglas, Earl of Queensberry in 1653. He is probably the John of Whitlaw recorded on the Land Tax Rolls of 1663, when £133 6s 8d was paid for Flex in Hawick Parish and £266 13s 4d paid for Whitlaw; he also paid the teind of Eckford on behalf of the Countess of Buccleuch. He married Anna Scott (probably daughter of Walter Scott of Synton) and their children, baptised in Hawick, included: Margaret (b.1639); Walter (b.1640); Francis (b.1643), who succeeded; an unnamed son (b.1645); and Helen (b.1646). His son Francis was served as his heir in the lands of Flex in 1672. John (16th C.) described as 'Mr. John Gledstanes, Licentiat in the Law', when his wills were recorded in Edinburgh in 1574/5, 1575, 1584 and 1589. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Gledstains. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Margaret Wilson and their children included: John (b.1670); James (b.1672); John (again, b.1678); and Jane (b.1679). John of Hilliesland (17th C.) recorded in 1678 when he paid the land tax on land valued at £66 13s 4d in Hawick Parish. He was surely related to Walter of Hilliesland, who paid the land tax in 1643 and 1663 (perhaps he was son of Walter). He may have been father of the John admitted as a Burgess in 1692 and an ancestor of the Town Clerks who owned Hilliesland. He was recorded being 'hillhousland' in 1685 when one of his children was baptised. He married Margaret Harkness and their children included Walter (b.1676), James (b.1677), Thomas (b.1679); Archibald (b.1681), John (b.1683), Francis (b.1685) and Bessie (b.1687). The witnesses in 1685 were 'Mr Archibald' (surely a relative) and James of that Ilk. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was married to Isobel (or Bessie) Liddell and their children included Jane (b.1682) and William (b.1685). John (17th C.) recorded as brother of James of that Ilk in 1681 when he became an apprentice to tailor George Grey in Edinburgh. He was probably a younger son of William of that Ilk. John (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. He was listed separately from the carier. It is possible he was the same as the Hilliesland Laird. John (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He was listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4 and paid tax on 2 hearths according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. His son was William. In 1717 he and his son and daughter-in-law were all rebuked by the Session for fighting with one another on the street. He is probably the John 'at the East Port', who, along with his son William, were in 1700 'found guilty of stealing peats and strae, are sentenced to stand at the crosse for a season, and be banished the town'. They stole 3 loads of peat from Galalaw and oat straw from the stack yard of Rev. Cunningham; this was said to be 'out of his extreme necessity', probably related to the great famine that spread over the country at that time. John of Hilliesland (17th/18th C.) admitted as a Burgess of Hawick in 1692. He may have been son of the earlier John of Hilliesland (if not the same man) and perhaps father of the later John of Hilliesland; he was surely related to the Town Clerks of Hawick. John (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick Parish. The baptism of his son William with Isobell Burn is recorded in 1707; this is marked 'fornic:'. The witnesses were Thomas Turnbull and William Glendinning. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1717 he married Jean, daughter of Adam Glendinning and their children included John (b.1718). John of Whitlaw (17th/18th C.). It is unclear how he was related to earlier Gledstains of Whitlaw. He witnessed a baptism for William Henderson in the Flex in 1709. He witnessed a baptism for Archibald Paterson 'Casier in whitla' in 1716 and 2 others in 1717 (along with his brother William) for Archibald Paterson in Flex and for John Hobkirk in Whitchesters. He also witnessed a baptism for Town Clerk Walter in 1722. He was recorded as a Hawick Parish heritor in 1718 when the new Hawick Schoolmaster was appointed. He witnessed further baptisms in 1718 for John Davidson (tenant in Flex), with the other witness being his brother William, and in 1719 and 1720 for Archibald Paterson, tenant in the Flex. His brother James became a skinner's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1719. He is probably the same man as John of Flex who was recorded in a 1710 land valuation of Hawick Parish, when his lands of 'Flex and Meikle and Little Whitlaw' were valued at 400 merks. He probably succeeded Francis of Whitlaw, but it is unclear if he was his son or brother. He was probably succeeded by the next (and last) John of Whitlaw. John (d.1754) tenant of 'Hilliesland Walls' and presumably related to the Town Clerks' family. He witnessed a sasine made by Town Clerk Walter in 1728. He was described as being 'of Hilliesland' when admitted as a Burgess of Hawick in 1733 (and was presumably a descendant of the John of Hilliesland who became a Burgess in 1692). He may be the John who witnessed an Episcopal baptism for John of Whitlaw in 1753. He may have been the last Laird of Hilliesland to live there, and was probably the Laird who was described (in 1767) as having earlier driven his herd to Hawick Common, down the Iver Burn. John of Whitlaw (c.1710–bef. 83) one of the last of the family to own land locally. He may have been son of the previous John of Whitlaw. In 1738 he was one of 'heirsportioners' of Janet, daughter of Robert of that Ilk and Cocklaw, when she died unmarried; he thus received part of the lands of Dod that Janet had still possessed. He was listed on a memorial of 1738, claiming the right of the Lordship of Rutherford to John Scott of Belford. His lands were valued at £266 13s 4d in the 1740s. He was stated to be tenant of Whitlaw in the 1750s when Robert Hobkirk was Town Herd. He witnessed a baptism in 1759 for tailor James (possibly a relative). He was interested in genealogy and prepared a pedigree of the Scotts of Synton (through whom he was related on his mother's side), Whitslade, etc. in 1769; this was used as the basis for much of the booklet on the pedigree of the Scotts of Stokoe, Todrig, etc., which was printed privately in 1783 (by which time he was deceased). He was witness to a sasine in Hawick in 1764. He was said to have been an officer under Prince Charles and remained a Jacobite sympathiser (as described by Robert Wilson). He went about on crutches in later life, and blamed his rheumatism on the house of Hanover! He was also known for having a large feast every Christmas. His daughter Mira was baptised in 1753, by Episcopal Minister Rev. Findlay McLennan, making it clear that the family continued to follow that particular faith; the witnesses were Dr. Robert Scott of Whitslade, as well as John and James Gledstains from Hawick (who were probably his brothers, cousins, or other near relatives). The name of his wife is unknown, and it is not clear what happened to Mira, or whether he had other children. John (d.1781) has his death recorded in Hawick. He is listed as 'Elder in the Green meeting', presumably meaning the Green Kirk. It is not impossible he was the same man as John of Whitlaw. John (1724–83) son of the second Walter, writer (i.e. lawyer) in Hawick. He was recorded as a writer in 1762 and 1765 when he witnessed baptisms for baker Robert Scott. He was also a writer in 1767 when witnessing a case relating to the Hammermen. He was elected Town Clerk in 1763 and remained until his death in 1783, with a short gap in 1768–70 (precise dates uncertain), when he was deprived of office for being a Jacobite supporter and refusing to take the oath of government (although Robert Wilson's account of this is confused). He was assisted by Thomas Wintrope for several years, perhaps until 1768. He was also tenant of Meikle and Little Whitlaws, and had the farms as aliment from the Duke of Buccleuch (although this could be confusion with his namesake, John of Whitlaw). He kept a public house in town (like his predecessors as Town Clerk), where it was said that most of Hawick's civic business was carried out. He apparently liked to avoid litigation and was fond of resolving disputes by inviting both parties to his house in the evening to discuss things amicably. He wrote a detailed account of the great flood of 1767. In 1767 he one of the representatives of Hawick at the perambulation of the Common made as part of the court case for its division. In 1769 he was appointed to the commission to discuss the Common with representatives of the Duke of Buccleuch. He is probably the John who subscribed to the fund for the Slitrig Brig in 1776. He married Ann Weir, who died in 1805; she was probably daughter of the earlier Town Clerk James Weir, born in 1738. Their children included: Walter (b.1765); James (b.1766), who owned 80 High Street; William (b.1768); Christian, who married manufacturer Walter Richardson; Elizabeth (b.1776); and Ann (b.1781), who may have married John 'the Turk' Scott. The witnesses to the 1768 baptism were writer James Weir (probably his brother-in-law) and Schoolmaster James Inglis, in 1776 were surgeon James Wilson and Schoolmaster James Inglis, and in 1781 were ex-Bailie John Wilson and James Inglis again. He appears to have been the last male of the direct family of Gledstains in Teviotdale. His 2 daughters were served as heiresses to him in 1808 and sold 80 High Street in 1809 (so his sons must have been deceased by then); they are probably the 'Mrs. Richardson and Miss Gladstanes' listed in 1811 as owners of part of the particate lands of Hawick. He was succeeded as Town Clerk by his nephew, John Inglis. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick who married Margaret Beattie in 1770. They had a daughter Joanna baptised in Wilton in 1778. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick who married Katherine Riddell in 1775. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Stevenson and their son William was baptised in the East Bank Kirk in 1818. John (19th C.) married Elizabeth Hume in Hawick Parish in 1847. John (19th C.) married Jane Beattie in 1848, the marriage reported in Roberton and Jedburgh Parishes. Katherine (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. Marion (17th/18th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1697 when she and others complained that Margaret Drummond and Elizabeth Miller had stolen items from their houses, as well as from Bailie Laing's cellar. Matthew (15th C.) witness to a sasine of the Cranstons of that Ilk for Denholm Mains in 1465/6. Matthew and Cuthbert were also witnesses. Perhaps the same 'Matho Gledstanis' was witness to a letter of appraising for the lands of Whithope, directed by William Douglas of Cavers, in 1500. Matthew of Over Kelwood (d.c.1554) son of Thomas and brother of John, who he succeeded. He lived in Dumfriesshire and was referred to as being 'of that Ilk', even though the Roxburghshire branch were probably the superior line. He had a sasine of Over Kelwood in 1536. He married Elizabeth Livingstone and their daughter Mirabella married a relative, Herbert of Dundee, to whom he gave Over Kelwood in 1541. He was recorded in connection with the lands in Lanarkshire in 1542 and 1543. His grandson Walter was also referred to as being 'of that Ilk'. Mira (b.1753) daughter of John of Whitlaw. There is an entry in the Hawick Parish Kirk baptismal records that she was baptised by Episcopalian minister Rev. Findlay McLennan, with witnesses Robert Scott of Whitslade, and John and James Gledstains (who were probably uncles or other close relatives). This was one of the few pieces of evidence that there was a continuing Episcopal Kirk in Hawick through the 18th century. Patrick (14th C.) juror in Roxburgh in 1335/6, for an English inquistion regarding expenses at Jedburgh Castle. He swore fealty to Edward III in 1346 following the Battle of Durham (Neville's Cross). He may have been a son of Herbert and was surely related to William, who was also recorded in 1346. Patrick (15th C.) recorded in the 1493 Justice-aire held in Jedburgh. He was 'Patricius gledstanis in coklaw'; he must surely have been related to the Gledstains of Cocklaw and that Ilk, although appears to have been a tenant rather than a laird. He was allowed to 'compone' for multiple thefts: 12 cows from John Anderson; 58 sheep from William Knight; 120 score sheep from James Sinclair and Robert Knight; 80 sheep from James Crays; 100 sheep and 50 cows from Hartshaw; plundering from the tenants of Glengelt; and stealing horses and other things from Robert Walderston, William Allan, John Hutchison and their neighbours. His surety was Sir Robert Ker. Patrick (15th C.) tenant in Hummelknowes, recorded in the 1494/5 Justice-aire held in Jedburgh. He was allowed to 'compone' for the theft of 4 sheep from Yairi, with James Pringle of Smailholm as his surety. It seems that he was a different man from Patrick in Cocklaw. Philip (16th C.) witness in Selkirk to a document involving a dispute between John of Cocklaw and Robert Scott in Howford. Rachel (17th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1686 her servant, Janet Scott, said she bought a pack of wool from St. Boswell's Fair and that this was the same wool that William Paterson claimed was his. It is unclear how she might have been related to other Gledstains Robert (15th C.) record as 'de Glestanys' in 1420 in a request to the Pope to allow his marriage contract to go ahead. This was a marriage with Janet, daughter of William Turnbull, from Glasgow Diocese, despite the fact that he admitted earlier fornication with Janet, daughter of John Turnbull (from the same Diocese, perhaps John of Minto or John of Bedrule), who was related to his intended wife 'in the third degree of consanguinity'. He is listed on the 'retour of inquest' made in Hawick in 1424 for lands in Hownam. James of that Ilk was also listed and so perhaps related. In 1434 he witnessed a charter where Archibald, Earl of Douglas granted Nether Crailing to William Cranston. Probably the same Robert 'de Gledstanis' was a bailie of Sir William Crichton of that Ilk, when he infefted Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in Grahamslaw in 1439. And he appeared as witness allong with Crichton and others on a charter by Archibald, Earl of Douglas to the Kers of Altonburn in 1439. Probably the same Robert witnessed a charter for William Cranston of Crailing in 1443. Probably the same man is 'Roberto Gleddistanys de le Crag' in 1446 when he witnessed a charter between Inglis of Manor and Scott of Buccleuch; his lairdship was probably Craig in Dumfriesshire. He is probably the same 'Roberto de Gledstanis' (an esquire) in 1452 when he is the first witness listed on the sasine for the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1454/5 he is 'Robert of Gledstanys' when he witnessed a document for Ker of Altonburn. And in 1463/4 he was 'Roberto de Gledstanys' among the men who received a reward from the King for the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. Probably the same man is recorded as 'Glendstanys' when he witnessed a charter of 1468 dealing with the Scotts of Buccleuch and lands of Lempitlaw. Robert (15th C.) recorded as 'Robertum Gledstanis' in 1484 when he was on the inquest panel for the inheritance of the Barony of Hawick. Robert (15th/16th C.) described as being from Annan when he witnessed a charter at Caerlaverock in 1492/3. Probably the samerRobert is described as 'scutiferis' (i.e. shield-bearer) when he witnessed a charter for John, Lord Maxwell, in 1505. Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1600 as 'son natural' to James of Cocklaw. Along with his father, brother James and cousin James, he was accused of killing James Dickson near Peebles; they were all denounced as rebels for non-appearance. He and James were described as 'in Menar' (i.e. Manor in Peeblesshire) in 1599 when they faced excommunication by the Session for the murder of James Dickson. Robert (17th C.) recorded as 'pr Todschahauch' when he signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638. He was proprietor of Todshawhaugh in a 1650 list of communicants of the Borthwick valley. His wife may have been Agnes Rule, with their daughter Margaret baptised in Hawick in 1639. In 1648 he was listed on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire (along with Walter of Cocklaw and John of Whitlaw, who must have been closely related). He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Adam Scott in 1652. Either he or a son of the same name was listed in 1686 as tenant of the lands of Whames in the ratification of the Barony of Hawick to Anna Duchess of Buccleuch. Robert (17th C.) Hawick resident who was on a 1684 list of men declared as fugitives for religious nonconformity. Robert (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret and their children included: Walter (b.1688); and Agnes (b.1691). The witnesses in 1691 were Andrew Fletcher and Thomas Wallace. Robert (17th C.) tailor in Raesknowe. In 1719 and 1725 he witnessed baptisms for William Williamson, herd in Whitchesters. His children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included Margaret (b.1693) and Margaret (again, b.1700). In the 1700 record his wife's forename is given as Janet and the witnesses are David Graham and John Armstrong, tenants in Raesknowe. In 1714 he married Isobel Hobkirk, who was described as 'widow in whitchesters'; perhaps she is the woman of that name who married Whitlaw tailor Robert Cairns in 1703. There is no evidence of any children from this second marriage. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was listed as 'ane hyred servant in hawick' in 1700 and as a workman in 1708. He married Janet Brown and their children (although the mother's name is not always given) probably included: Anna (b.1690); Walter (b.1693); Robert (b.1696); John (b.1700); Janet (b.1703); Robert (b.1705), who lived in Roberton Parish; Marion (b.1708); and Margaret (b.1709). The witnesses in 1693 were John Stuart and John Black, in 1700 were weaver Thomas Turnbull and 'officer' James Lethem, in 1705 were Bailie Patrick Richardson and weaver Andrew Brown (probably his wife's father or brother) and in 1708 were merchant Robert Robson and flesher Walter Anderson. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1705 he is recorded (twice) being given money from the Session poor box. Robert (17th/18th C.) listed as 'of that Ilk' in 1704 as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. Also in 1704 he petitioned the Bailies of Hawick to let him 'cast divots in the Common of Havicke', this was to thatch his stable at Hummelknowes. It is unclear who he was, since the Laird of Cocklaw at the time was James; but perhaps he was a brother of James, and hence son of William. Probably the same Robert of that Ilk married Janet, daughter of Robert Elliot of Larriston in 1706 (and she secondly married John Scott of Gorrenberry in 1716, so he was presumably dead by then). He may be the Gledstains in Hummelknowes recorded in an account in Selkirk in 1707. Robert (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident. In 1721 he married Marion 'Lun or Douglas' (suggesting his wife had previously been married). Robert (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Borthwickbrae in 1742 and Harden Burnfoot in 1753. His children (assuming these are all the same father Robert) included Magdalen (b.1742), Thomas (b.1747), Thomas (again, b.1747), Kathrine (b.1753) and Robert (b.1756). Robert (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident. He married Jean (or Jane) Scott in 1780 and she died in 1805. Robert (b.c.1763) perhaps son of William, resident of Chapelhill. He married Mary Scott in Wilton Parish in 1788. This means he was probably different from the Robert who married Jean Scott 8 years earlier. Their children included: Peggy (b.1789); William (b.1792); and James (b.1794). When Peggy was baptised the family were at Overhall. The 1792 and 1794 baptisms were recorded in Hawick with witnesses the 'Associate Congregation'. Perhaps the same Robert was a 78 year old agricultural labourer living with the Anderson family at Whitehaugh Cottages in 1841. Robert (b.1770s) resident of Branxholme. He was recorded in 1797 among Hawick men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was listed among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (18th C.) labourer at Bowanhill in Cavers Parish. In 1797 he was listed among men balloted to serve in the Militia, with the annotation 'Serving' and his name appearing again in 1798. In 1798 it was explicitly recorded that he volunteered to serve in place of John Henderson (labourer in Hawick), who at that point had not been located. Later in 1798 he was reported to 'have joined the Regiment', as confirmed in the amended list of 1799. Robert (1778–1858) born at Gledsnest near Teviothead. He may be the same man as the labourer at Bownahill who was on the Militia ballot in 1797 and 1798. In about 1802 he married Ann Rae (c.1778–1842) and their children included: William (1805–82), who married Catherien Renwick; John (1807–84), who married Isabella Elliot and is buried in Andes; Thomas (1808–86), who married Mary Bigar and is also buried in Andes; Walter (1810–60), married Isabella Elizabeth Biggar and is buried in Andes; Violet (c.1812–24); James (1814–85); Robert (b.1817), who died in infancy; and Robert O. (again, 1819–99), who married Jane Nichol Miller from Roberton. Note that some of these children correspond to baptismal records with the father 'William'; hence it is possible he was known as both Robert and William. In 1817 the family emigrated to the U.S.A., settling in Bovina, Delaware County. They are buried in the Old United Presbyterian Cemetery in Bovina. Robert (b.1812) eldest son of William. He married Mina Nichol. In 1840 he and his wife emigrated to Canada along with his parents and siblings. Simon (16th C.) recorded in 1535 when he witnessed a bond between Mark Ker in Kippielaw, John Scott in Thirlestane and others. In 1539 he witnessed another transaction for Elizabeth, mother of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. Thomas (14th/15th C.) son of Sir William and brother of John and James. It seems that John was the eldest brother and succeeded to their father's lands, while their mother's lands were divided among the brothers. He was probably the youngest son, but that is uncertain. He may have owned the lands of Flex. He acquired Roberton (in Selkirkshire) from his mother in 1412, confirmed by a charter of James I in 1430. It is possible he is the same Thomas 'Gleddistanis' appointed (along with Stephen Scott and others) as a procurator by Ellen Rule of Primside when she resigned her lands to their superior, Archibald, Earl of Douglas in 1439. Probably the same Thomas had a charter from the Duke of Albany (around 1410) for the lands of 'Withnyhope' (or perhaps 'Wauchop') in Selkirkshire. He could be the same Thomas who witnessed a confirmation of the Church of Cavers to Melrose Abbey in 1404. His wife was Margaret and he was succeeded by their son Alexander. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1511 when he witnessed a charter for Margaret Colville relating to lands in Oxnam. It is unclear how he was related to the Roxburghshire Gledstains. He could be the Thomas who had a charter for 'Overkeldvod' (i.e. Over Kelwood, in Dumfriesshire) in 1509, and hence was probably a son of Herbert, Rector of Dornoch. This Thomas was 'of that Ilk' in Lanarkshire in 1508. He could also be the Laird of 'crag gledstanis' who was fined at the Justice-aire in Dumfries in 1504, for failing to give suit for his lands of Craig. He was father of John and Matthew, who were both of Over Kelwood and that Ilk. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1706 he married Bessie Sanderson and their children included Janet (b.1707), John (b.1710) and Janet (b.1712), Bessie (b.1716) and Francis (b.1718). The witnesses in 1707 were Bailies Robert Ruecastle and George Martin. He could be the son of John and Margaret Harkness who was born in 1679. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1723 and 1725. His children, baptised in Cavers, included Bessie (b.1717), William (b.1721), Janet (b.1723) and Walter (b.1725). Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Leithead and their daughter Helen (b.1796/7) married poet John Halliday. Thomas (b.c.1780) resident of Harwood in Hawick Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. He may have been son of William, who was farmer at Harwood in 1797. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Lunn and their children included: Agnes (b.1811); Walter (b.1817); Robert (b.1819); and Thomas (b.1821). Thomas (18th/19th C.) carter in Hawick. The death of his unnamed child is recorded in 1816. Thomas (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth ('Betsy') Michie in Hawick in 1843 and their children included: Thomas (b.1843); Elizabeth (b.1846); Eliza (b.1847); Helen (b.1848); Jane (b.1851); and Margaret (b.1853). Some of the children were baptised in the Hawick Free Kirk. Thomas (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Mary Miller and their son John was baptised in 1872. Thomas (19th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. He married Isabella Fox, daughter of Gilbert Amos, who was joiner at Chesters. He died in an accident at Southdean sawmill. Walter (15th C.) witness to a sasine of 1470 relating to the lands of Grahamslaw and the Scotts of Buccleuch. The same Walter may have witnessed a Buccleuch document of 1464/5 relating to Ladyurd, and hence be from the Peebles area. Probably the same Walter also witnessed a document relating to Kirkurd for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1475/6. Walter (15th/16th C.) listed on the pardon granted in 1526 to a large number of Scotts, Turnbulls and other Borderers who had assisted the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran. He comes right after George in the list, suggesting they were related. Walter (d.1580) probably son of John, 11th of that Ilk, he was brother of James of Cocklaw. He may be the same 'Walter Gledstanes' (location not given) who is recorded in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme being owed about £13 'for his fie' (he may thus have acted as some kind of factor or chamberlain, as his descendants did). He was killed by men of Liddesdale, led by Lancie Armstrong, when a party of Scotts and Gladstains followed those who had raided Meikle Whitlaw, but were ambushed on their way back home through Liddesdale (probably the morning after the raid on Whitlaw). After complaints to the Privy Council none of those implicated in the ambush appeared, and hence they were declared rebels. Walter of Over Kelwood and Craigs (d.c.1593) son of Herbert and Mirabella. He had a sasine for Over Kelwood in 1570 and was also referred to as being 'of that Ilk' (complicating the issue with the Gledstains of Cocklaw), being superior of the Lanarkshire lands. He was succeeded by his son John in 1593/4. Walter (d.c.1599) resident 'in Makcarstoun' when his will was recorded in the Commissariot of Edinburgh in 1599. Walter (16th/17th C.) 'servitor to the Guidman of Hayning' in 1607 when he gave evidence in the court case when Robert Scott of Oakwood accused Rev. Shaw of Selkirk of swearing. He is recorded being 'in Haining' in 1608 when he was part of a group of Scotts and others who attacked Selkirk Mill. James Gledstains was also listed. Walter of Dod (17th C.) recorded in 1627 as holding, along with Walter Scott of Buccleuch, the Trinitylands in Hawick. He may be the same Walter of Dod who was recorded in the 1640s. He (or perhaps his son) may have been Laird of Dod in 1643 when he held the lands of Adderstoneshiel, with his mother having the liferent of Adderstonelee. He may be the Walter of Dod whose daughter Eupham married John Rutherford of Littleleheugh. Walter of Whitlaw (d.c.1643) part of the assize at the Justice Court in Jedburgh in 1611. He was also part of the 1616 jury that convicted Jock Scott, 'the Suckler', of sheep stealing. He is recorded as a 'personne of assyse' in the local Circuit Court of 1622. In 1627 he was one of 9 men charged with performing a valuation of the lands in the Parish of Hawick; he was one of the men who refused to accept some of the items in the valuation, presumably because of a dispute over either the Kirland, Ladyland or Trinitylands. He was also recorded in a county valuation of lands in Hawick Parish in 1643, his lands being valued at £266 13s 4d. He also appears as Chamberlain (or Factor) to the Earl of Buccleuch in existing records of rents and teinds for the period 1631–40 for Hassendean, Hawick and Wilton Parishes, also including Denholm. He was probably ill by the next year when his son John stood in for him, and was deceased by the time of the 1642–43 accounts. In one document he is transcribed as 'Walter Gledstones in Whitehall', presumably an error. He may be the Walter of Whitlaw who is listed by Scott of Satchells as being one of the 24 'Pensioners' of Buccleuch (the only one not called Scott), who was a close cousin to the Scotts and was given the lands of Whitlaw for this service; however, this may referred to an earlier generation. He is probably the Walter of Whitlaw whose daughter Margaret married Walter Scott, Laird of Galalaw. Walter (17th C.) possessor of the farm of Blackburn in Liddesdale in 1632. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Margaret Wood and their children included Marion (b.1640) and Agnes (b.1641). Walter of Cocklaw (17th C.) probably the son of James, as recorded in 1648. He was 14th of that Ilk. He may have had brothers William, Robert and James. It is possible he was the Walter of that Ilk listed in 1617 among Border Lairds who renewed their pledge to keep the peace (although it is possible this was an error for James). It is possible he was the Walter of Cocklaw who was recorded as superior of the lands of Hundleshope in Peeblesshire in 1620 when they were granted to Sir William Scott of Harden. In 1620 he was 'of Coklaw' when there was a complaint by Gilbert Eliott of Stobs that he had not repaid 3 loans, totalling about 300 merks. He was 'Laird of Gledstains' when he witnessed the baptism of Walter of Hilliesland in 1642; this was along with his eldest son William. He was probably the Laird of Gledstains whose lands in Cavers Parish were valued at £1240 in 1643; this consisted of the farms of Hummelknowes, Ormiston and Orchard. He was 'of Coklaw' in 1648 when listed on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. He was succeeded by William, who was probably his son, and is recorded in 1663. Walter of Hilliesland (17th C.) recorded in a 1643 valuation of lands in Hawick Parish (with the spelling 'of Halysland'). His lands were worth £66 13s. 4d. per year. He is presumably different from Walter of Whitlaw, who was listed separately in 1643. However, it is unclear how he was related to other local Gledstains, but he may have been father of John of Hilliesland who paid the land tax in 1678. Walter of Dod (17th C.) recorded in 1649 when his son and heir George was infefted in the lands of Hunthill (in Cavers Parish) by William Earl of Lothian. He is probably the same Walter of Dod who married Agnes Douglas of Cavers, and whose son Walter was minister at New Abbey. His grandson Abraham was served heir to his lands of Hunthill in 1676. Walter of Flex (17th C.). He married Esther, daughter of Richard Rutherford of Littleheugh and granddaughter of John Rutherford of Capehope. His wife's mother may have been Eupham, daughter of William Gledstains. It is unclear how he was related to other Gledstains of Flex. Rev. Walter (1624–60) son of Walter of Dod and Agnes Douglas of Cavers. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1645 and in 1650 became minister at New Abbey, Kirkcudbright. He married Margaret, 2nd daughter of John Crichton of Crawfordston, who was widow of William Lawrie in Ingliston. His children included James and Agnes. His widow married James Mair, minister of Troqueer. His gravestone had the following lines (in Latin): 'Q. Wherefore lies the Gladstone Hidden by the dark stone? A. The bosom of the earth Conceals the gem of gold'. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Margaret Turnbull and their children included Marion (b.1639), John (b.1643) and Bessie (b.1649). Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Isobel Lauder and their children included Helen (b.1646) and Jean (b.1649). Walter (17th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1676

he and James Liddell were involved in checking the weights used by other traders in Town. He could be the same man as the tailor who witnessed a baptism for Francis in 1680 (suggesting that they were related). He may be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter Francis of Hilliesland (1642–1718) son of Lieut. Francis and Margaret Stewart, he was born in Hawick, about 3 years before his father was killed. His baptism was witnessed by Walter of that Ilk, and his eldest son William (suggesting a close like between the families), and was carried out by Rev. Robert Cunningham in Hawick. He was Town Clerk 1673–1696, and after a 1 year gap again in c.1696–1710, then sharing the position with his son Walter until his death in 1718. There was a significant change in the handwriting in the Town Book when he stopped writing it in the archaic form in 1718. He was Town Clerk on the list of subscribers for the Kirk bell drawn up in 1693. In 1680 he witnessed baptisms for George Young and Janet Purdom, and for John Stewart. He gave evidence in the trial of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe (for being a Covenanter) in 1681. He may be the Walter 'in Hawicke' who is listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose in 1682. He is probably the 'Mr Walter Gladstains' who witnessed baptisms for George Deans in 1673, for wright Francis in 1682, for Bailie William Scott in 1683, and for Schoolmaster John Purdom in 1685. He is probably one of the 2 men of his name who witnessed a baptism for John Cavers in hawick in 1671. He may also be the Gledstains whose letter to Sir William Douglas of Cavers in 1683 told of the imprisonment of several local lairds for trumped up charges relating to supporting the Covenanters; if so he was factor to Douglas of Cavers and wrote several letters that are extant. In 1688 he was 'wryter in Hawick' when he acted as a witness to boundaries being marked out between lands at the east end of Hawick. He was 'notar in Hawick' when there were protests made to him about the perambulation of Wilton Common in the 1690s. In 1697 he was one of 4 men who protested against the continuing of Robert Ruecastle as Bailie, through there being a vacancy and on account of an agreement made with the Commissioners of the Duchess of Buccleuch, until a new election for Bailie was held. In 1701 he was cited at the Kirk Session for being drunk at a burial and 'using expressions savouring of blasphemy in his drunkenness'; he acknowledged his guilt and being reported again in 1702 promised to endeavour to remain sober. He was 'Mr' when he witnessed a baptism for Patrick Angus in 1704 and for his son Walter in 1708. He also witnessed baptisms in 1709 for Schoolmaster John Purdom and for Robert Porteous. Either he or his son was witness for a baptism in 1709 for George Johnston, tenant in Hilliesland. In a 1710 land valuation of Hawick Parish his lands were valued at 100 merks. He was also a heritor of Hawick Parish, recorded in 1711 and 1718. He was listed as 'Mr Walter Gladstains' when he witnessed a baptism in 1687; the other witness was James, who was probably a close relative, and may have been James of that Ilk. He was listed in the same way when he witnessed a baptism for weaver John Stewart and another for tailor Walter (his namesake and probably relative) in 1688. He was also 'Mr walter Gledstaines' when he paid tax for 4 hearths in Hawick, 'eist the water', in 1694; this suggests he had quite a substantial house. In 1707 'the town clerk's wyf' (presumably his wife) was ordered by the Council to be paid back for expenses incurred at the Queen's birthday in 1706. He translated Rev. Cunninghame's 'Lines written on the situation of the burgh and town of Hawick' (possibly the earliest verse about Hawick) from the Latin. The ancient family bible, now in the Museum, appears to have been largely inscribed by him; it records his own baptism, the earlier death of his father 'and nyne sister sons of Sir William Douglass off Cavers' at the Battle of Aulderne, his own death and entries made by his son Walter and later descendants. He may also have been the Town Clerk who entertained a party of Jacobite officers while their army was encamped in Hawick in 1715 (although Robert Wilson ascribes this to a later Town Clerk in 1745). In 1704 he also provided what was probably the first translation of the 1537 Charter, appearing in print in Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He married Margaret Sinclair in Lord Torphicen's house in Calder in 1671, and she died in 1689, aged about 43. Their children were: Walter, who was also Town Clerk; Francis (1672–73), who died of smallpox; William (b.1674); Agnes (b.1677), who married Col. William Murray and went with him to Flanders; Gideon (1678–82), also died of smallpox; and Margaret (1681–82). The 1672 baptism was carried out by Rev. John Langlands and witnessed by George Langlands of that Ilk, George Scott of Boonraw and Francis of Whitlaw. The 1674 baptism was carried out by Rev. Francis Scott of Minto (and later Hassendean), with witnesses Rev. James Gledstanes of Yetholm, Rev. John Chisholme of Lilliesleaf and schoolmaster John Purdom. The 1677 baptism was carried out by Rev. John Langlands and witnessed by wright Walter and James Deans (both Bailies). The 1678 baptism by Rev. Langlands was witnessed by James of that Ilk, as well as the 2 present Bailies, William Scott and James Deans. The 1681 baptism by Rev. Langlands was witnessed by 'ye lairds of Meikle Boonraw and Horsleyhill, Mr Archibald Gledstains, broyr. to Whitlaw, Bayleas William Scott, Deanes, Gledstane, and Westport'. Bailie Walter (17th/18th C.) wright in Hawick. He was a Bailie in the 1690s. Probably the same wright is recorded as in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude's Fair. He may be one of the 2 men of this name who witnessed a baptism for John Cavers in Hawick in 1671. He is probably the wright who in 1677 witnessed a baptism for Walter of Hilliesland (Town Clerk of Hawick), who may thus probably a relative. His wife was Janet Scott and their children probably included Agnes (b.1672), Margaret (b.1673), Janet (b.1676) and Marion (b.1678). However, a tailor of the same name was also married a Janet Scott and had children about the same time. The witnesses in 1676 were John Aitkin and James Deans and in 1678 were William Haswell and James Gledstains (who was surely related). Probably the same Walter was recorded as Bailie in 1697. Perhaps the same wright is listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694 and among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Walter (17th C.) recorded in the 1678 valuation roll as portioner of Samieston in Jedburgh Parish. This land was formerly owned by Moir of Otterburn, but sold to the Duke of Roxburghe. It was listed as 'Lands in Samieston, formerly Walter Gladstain's £233 6s 8d' in 1788. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hummelknowes on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It is unclear how he was related to other family members. Walter (d.bef. 1719) tailor in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for wright Robert Cowan in 1688. He was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. He was also listed as a tailor among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Note the possible confusion with 'William', who was a tailor in Hawick at about the same time and also the contemporary wright of the same name (whose wife also had the same name!). He also witnessed baptisms for weaver Walter Greenshields in Branxholme Town in 1703 and for John Davidson and Jean Gledstains in the Flex in the 1716. His wife was Janet Scott and their son James was baptised in Hawick in 1688, with witnesses 'Mr Walter' (presumably his namesake the Town Clerk) and Bailie James Deans. Helen (b.1684) was probably also his child, with witnesses Francis (probably also a relative) and Thomas Bridges. His daughter Marion married William Stoddart ('Casaer in Flexs') in 1719. Walter (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, more specifically probably the Hassendean part. He may be the Walter, married to Janet Scott, whose son James was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1681, with witnesses John Hope and Charles Wood. He is probably the Walter who witnessed Roberton (or Hassendean) baptisms for James Scott in 1680, Robert and Marion Scott in 1683 and Adam Sanderson in 1684. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His children included: John (b.1695). He may be the same man who later married Helen Sanderson. Walter 'Walter Alison' (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick. In 1709 he was recorded as 'distinctionis causa called Walt: Alison' (to distinguish him from the Town Clerk of the same name, among others); however, it is unclear what this name may have referred to. He may have been related to Thomas, who married Bessie Sanderson. In 1703 he married Helen Sanderson (who was also from Hawick Parish). Their children included: William (b.1703); John (b.1706); Isobel (b.1709); Robert (b.1713); and Walter (b.1716). John (b.1708) and John (again, b.1711) were probably also their children. The witnesses in 1706 were Bailie James Deans and carrier Robert Aitken, in 1709 were Bailies James Burn and Robert Ruecastle and in 1716 were merchant William Chisholme and gardener William Hope. Walter junior of Hilliesland (d.1732) son of Walter who was Town Clerk. He was recorded being 'of Hilhousland' (i.e. Hilliesland) in 1707 and 1708, even although his father was still alive at that point. He himself was Town Clerk from 1710 probably until his death, with James Weir taking over from him. It was said that he was a strong supporter of the Town Herd in stopping encroachment on the Common, but that 'since his death there was never one to support the Herd, and the Common had been ten times worse used than it was before'. He is probably the Walter of Hilliesland who was amitted as a Burgess of Hawick in 1704. He was Town Clerk when he witnessed baptisms for smith James Beattie in 1719, for William Hill, weaver in the Flex in 1720, and for merchant James

Aitkin and for Simon Miller in 1722. He may have had an inn (like other Town officials in those days); it is recorded in 1724 that £5 8s. Scots was 'spent in the clerk's, being the King's birthday'. He continued writing in the family bible started by his father. This includes recording the death of 'Captaine Elliot, my brother-in-law' at Bruges in 1696. He married Agnes (or Anna) Elliott from Langholm in 1690; she was daughter of Robert Elliot and Janet Maxwell. The marriage in Langholm was carried out by Rev. John Stewart of Wilton, with witnesses being Scott of Rennaldburn and his brother James, plus 'Achin— Arkleton' (perhaps the Laird of Arkleton) and his son, as well as Archibald (presumably of Whitlaw); these were presumably all Episcopalians. The marriage appears to have been recorded in Hawick Parish in 1706, although the family bible clearly states that they were married in 1690. Their children included: Janet (b.1707); Bessie (b.1708); and John (b.1711). The witnesses in 1707 were 'Mr Walter' (presumably his father) and Thomas Laik in Billerwell (perhaps the minister in Southdean) and in 1708 were 'Mr Walter' (again) and Bailie Robert Ruecastle. Euphan (1694–95), whose birth and death are marked in the family bible, was probably his daughter; she was baptised by Thomas Somerville of Cavers, with the witnesses being James Scott of Ormiston and his son, James Deans, Rev. Francis Scott of Hassendean, John Laing, William Aitkin, Thomas Briggs, litster George Young, cordiner John Scott and weaver Andrew Brown (this perhaps representing some of the remaining Episcopalians in Hawick). There was also a daughter, born in 1692, who died soon after birth. His son Walter was baptised in 1697, again by Rev. Thomas Somerville, with witnesses being 'Mr Francis — [perhaps Scott, former minister of Hassendean], baylies Scott, Laing, Oliver wright, Walter Scott, apothecary, and divers others'. He secondly married Elizabeth ('Bessie' or 'Bettie'), daughter of Hawick tailor John Scott, in an 'irregular marriage' of 1720 (his name being incorrectly given as 'William Gladstains, toun clerk' in the Session records); this marriage was carried out by 'James Macubine', possibly an Episcopalian minister. He also witnessed an irregular marriage himself in Hawick in 1724. He was succeeded as Town Clek by his son John (1724–83). His other children included: Agnes (b.1721); Walter (b.1722); Joanna (b.1726), who married James Inglis; William (again, b.1728); and James. The witnesses in 1722 were Col. William Murray of Bowhill, Walter Scott of Crumhaugh, Archibald Scott of Boonraw and John Gledstains of Whitlaw. There is some confusion over whether he died in 1732 or later in 1739. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1762 he married Betty Sinton, who was also from Roberton. Walter (18th C.) married Betty Linton in Roberton Parish in 1762. Walter (1817–82) 2nd son of farm worker William. In 1840, along with his parents and siblings, he emigrated to Canada, settling on the banks of the Nith River in southern Ontario. He first made chairs at the Nithsvale Chair Factory, and was then responsible for the construction of the nearby Stanley Street Church and Knox Church. He ran a general store in Ayr Ontario for many years. In 1869 the family moved to a farm near Gentry, Missouri. In 1847 he married Jane, daughter of Alexander Easton and Jeannie Kyle, who had emigrated from Castleton; she died in 1914. Their children were Jane, William R., Eliza, Alexander, Jeannie Kyle, George E., Anna M., Walter and Mary. They are buried at Knox Cemetery, near Gentry. Walter (b.1817/8) frameworker who lived at 7 Kirk Wynd. His wife was Helen and their children included Helen, David, Thomas, Mary and Agnes. He is probably the Walter 'Gledstains' whose recollections of James Hogg informed Robert Murray's 1863 article. In 1866 he donated 'an old Scotch coin' to the Museum. William of Minto (14th C.) recorded in 1346 along with Patrick when they paid homage to King Edward after the Battle of Neville's Cross. He was described as being of 'Mintowe', which was presumably Minto in Teviotdale. In 1347 he was part of a panel of inquest held at Roxburgh under the English authorities; he was again 'of Mintowe'. It is possible that he was the same as Sir William of that Ilk. Sir William (d.c.1365) probably the grandson of Herbert, and hence 3rd of that Ilk. In 1354 he witnessed a charter of Robert of Alton relating to the chantry at the Church of Roxburgh; his name also appears on 4 confirming charters. He was recorded in financial documents relating to Coldingham Priory in 1356–i62. He is probably the 'William de Gledestan chivaler' who was one of 2 men commanded by Edward III to deliver a Scottish prisoner to the Tower of London in 1357. He also witnessed a deed of 1357/8 for the lands of Altonburn. He became a follower of the Earl of Douglas and accompanied the Earl to France in 1356, being made a Knight at the Battle of Poitiers. He was later imprisoned in the Tower of London for 16 months, being released in 1358. To be released he had to swear never to bear arms against the English King, except in the presence of the King of Scotland or in self-defence. In 1357/8 his wife Alice was granted passage to visit him. In about 1358 he witnessed a grant of the lands of Penangushope and Cauldcleuch to Melrose Abbey, by William, Earl of Douglas; this is the first record of a connections between the Douglases and the Gledstains of that Ilk, which would last for several generations. In 1359/60 he is 'William of Gladstanys' when he witnessed a charter by William, Earl of Douglas and Lord of Liddesdale. There is a letter of protection of 1360 from William, 1st Earl of Douglas, referring to Sir William as his Bailie of the Barony of Cavers and charging him to protect the lands of the Abbot and Convent of Melrose within the Barony (specifically Ringwood). At about the same time he witnessed a confirmation of the advowson of Cavers Kirk to Melrose Abbey. In about 1360 he witnessed a charter for lands in Lauderdale and was also recorded in the Exchequer Rolls as a watcher of wool on the marches. He was probably deceased in 1363 when his wife Alice was granted protection for her lands in the English-controlled part of Scotland. He was succeeded by his son Sir William, who was granted his lands in Peeblesshire in 1365. His seal (of 1358) appears to bear a winged lion rampant and the inscription 'S' WILLELMI DE GLEDESTANES'. Sir William (d.c.1400) son of Sir William according to a charter of 1365, when he was granted his father's land of 'Wodgrenyton, Wynkiston and Acolmfelde' in Peeblesshire, which Patrick Maxwell had resigned. In 1358 he was a prisoner in England and stated to be son of Sir William, when he was released and also given a passage of safe-conduct to study in England for 2 years. The education may suggest that he was not the eldest son at that point. In 1363 he was probably the William was among a number of Scotsmen given safe conduct into England by King Edward (probably related to a ransom). He witnessed a charter by James, Earl of Douglas in the period 1394–88 and had been knighted by then. He is probably the William who witnessed the charter by John Turnbull of Minto, granting Minto to Sir William Stewart of Jedburgh in 1390. He obtained lands near Peebles from David II, and is referred to in 1396 as 'of Gledstanes and Coklaw'. This 'Coklaw' is believed to have been in Lanarkshire, and gave its name to the tower built later near Hawick. In 1396 Sir William Inglis was granted the Barony of Manor, except for the lands there that he possessed. He also had a charter for 'Winkistoun and Wodgrainningtoun' in Peeblesshire in the time of Robert III (probably the 1390s). He married Margaret Turnbull (said to be daughter and heiress of John Turnbull), acquiring other lands near Peebles (specifically Hundleshope), as well as in Selkirk and at Roberton. His sons were John, James, William and Thomas. He appears to have been succeeded by John and later by James (although this is uncertain). In 1406 his widow Margaret resigned some of her lands in Peeblesshire and Selkirkshire to their son John, with William or Walter also holding other family lands. In 1412 Margaret resigned her lands of Roberton to her son Thomas. He may also have been father of Margaret, who was married to Sir William Wardlaw, in 1415 was contracted to marry her godfather John Turnbull, and after they were 'canonically separated' she had further Papal permission in 1417 to marry Walter Turnbull (to whom she was related in the third degree). William (15th C.) recorded in 1432 as a witness to the sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas. Although no other designation is given for him, he must have been an important local laird at the time, probably connected with Cocklaw. William (15th C.) one of the men directed by the Earl of Angus in 1489 to infeft Robert Elliot of Redheugh in certain lands. The others were William Ker of Mersington, Ralph Ker of Primside Loch and William Elliot of Gorrenberry. His relationship to other Gledstains is unclear. Perhaps the same George was recorded in 1489, along with George, as witness to a retour for the Kers of St. Helen Shaw in Selkirk. He may be the William who in 1500, along with Bartholomew and George, witnessed a charter for Walter Ker of Cessford for the lands of Caverton. It is possible that they were connected with Kelso Abbey. William of Arthurshiel (d.bef. 1565) possibly a younger son of James of that Ilk and Cocklaw. He appears to have been the first Laird of Arthurshiel in Peebleshire, and ancestor of Prime Minister W.E. Gladstone. William (16th C.) son of John of Cocklaw, who is recorded in a document of 1576. He may be the William who was a Bailie in Hawick in 1574 when Thomas Short sold a tenement in Hawick to Robert Johnstone. It is possible that he is the 'William of Flecks' who signed the 1584 bond of assurance between men of Liddesdale and the English Wardens, his name being listed along with other local Gledstains. William of Dod (16th C.). In 1627 his daughter Eupham married John

Rutherford of Capehope. This could be an error for 'Walter of Dod'. William (d.bef. 1672) son of Walter (or perhaps his younger brother), he was 15th of that Ilk. He is recorded as a baptismal witness in 1642 and is also probably the William 'of . . . ' who witnessed a baptism for William Scott of Synton in 1661. He was recorded as Laird in 1663, when he was appointed Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. In 1663 he also had sheep stolen from his land by John and Walter Glendinning. He was further recorded as Laird of Gledstains in 1663 when he paid Land Tax for £1240 for property in Cavers Parish. Perhaps the same William owned teinds and lands (valued at £130) in Makerstoun Parish in 1643, 1663 and 1678. He was recorded as William of Cocklaw in 2 deeds of 1673. He was succeeded by James, presumably his son. James' brother John was recorded becoming a tailor's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1681, and hence was presumably another son. He was probably also the 'deceased Gladstains of that Ilk' whose daughter Margaret married William Murray in Edinburgh in 1693, the ceremony being carried out by John Langlands, former minister at Hawick. He may have married Elizabeth Wishart or Margaret Riddell. It is possible that Robert (mentioned as being 'of that Ilk' in 1704) was a younger son, and that he was also father of Esther, who married Robert, son of James Rutherford, surgeon in Jedburgh. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Stewart and their son William was baptised in 1671. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Wishart and their children included: Isobell (b.1671); William (b.1673); and Margaret (b.1676). He may be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William (17th C.) Hawick resident. He married Margaret Riddell and their children included Margaret (b.1673). William (17th C.) resident of Hownam Parish. In 1681 he was imprisoned in Canongate Tolbooth for being a Covenanter. He is probably the same man as the unnamed resident of Hownam who was imprisoned everal times, always at his own expense, was fined and had his livestock taken from him. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Helen Gledstains and their daughter Marion was baptised in 1685. William (17th C.) carrier in Hawick. In 1686 he was fined 'for pulling up of the teather staicke of Baylyea Thorbrande his mair qr she was tethered in the common grasse upon the East Maines, and teathered her in the ground and upon the same place qr the baylyea's peiss was soun and growing'. Presumably this was in response to an earlier punishment from this Bailie. William (1674–c.1703) son of Walter of Hilliesland, Town Clerk. He left Hawick at 15, spent 2 years as an apprentice to writer Archibald Blyth (or Black) in Edinburgh, went to England where he 'spent four years in ane man of war called the Sueepstaks', but returned to Hawick in a poor condition. His father then set him up to fo to Flanders, where his sister and Col. Murray were living, but he returned to Hawick again. He then went out to Virgini and from there eventually become overseer in a Barbados plantation, owned by 'Mr Horas Curhadean'. However, he died after only about 8 months. This information is inscribed in the Gledstains Bible, with news of his death being transmitted to the family by 'James Haswell, pensioner in Crailling', who was 'ane tyme att Barbadoes'. He may be the William, 'student', who witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1682 and 1684 (for Francis, perhaps an uncle or other relative). William (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He was listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was probably the William listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. He witnessed baptisms for tailor James Turnbull in 1705 and 1709 and for merchant Michael Scott in 1709. In 1711 he (along with fellow tailor Alexander Hislop) witnessed a baptism for carrier William Rae. He was a member of the Council when it granted a bond (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. He may be the William who witnessed a baptism for Robert Douglas in 1698. In 1719 his daughter Sara married James, son to Walter Scott, 'Westport'. In 1730 he witnessed a baptism for this same couple. William (17th/18th C.) listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is separately listed from the tailor, and so presumably was a different man of the same name. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Isobell Porteous in 1700. William (17th/18th C.) workman in Whitlaw, as recorded in the 1707 baptism of his daughter. He married Marion Henderson and their children included Margaret (b.1707) and Robert (b.1712). The witnesses in 1707 were James Gray in Whitlaw and Bailie George Martin and in 1712 were Walter Elliot and Walter Graham (probably the Bailies). He may be the same as one of the other Williams, but appears to be distinct from the other workman in Whitlaw. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Haliburton and their son John was baptised in 1708. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He is recorded as 'workman' in 1708, 1712 and 1721, 'workman in ye toun of Hawick' in 1714 and 'workman in whitla' in 1709. He married Bessie Scott (who was also from Hawick Parish) in 1703. Their children included: John (b.1706); William (b.1708); Walter and Janet (b.1709); Helen (b.1712); Helen (again, b.1714); and William (b.1721). The witnesses in 1708 were Andrew Riddell in Goldielands and Walter Nixon in Hawick Shiel, in 1709 were Dand and James Gray in Whitlaw, in 1712 were Bailie James Deans and James Scott at Colifort, in 1714 were Bailies James Deans and James Scott and in 1721 were weavers David and John Miller. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was a servant in Mabonlaw in 1709, with his wife living in Borthwickhaugh. His children included Jean (b.1709) and Robert (b.1712). There were 5 witnesses recorded in 1709, these being the tenants in Mabonlaw: Walter Scott; Robert Scott; William Henderson; William Turnbull; and John Riddell. He may be the same William whose wife was Mary Wilson and whose children baptised in Wilton Parish included: Agnes (b.1718); William (b.1720); and James (b.1722). William (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick, son of carrier John. In 1713 he was cited in the Session book for excessive drunkenness, the minister having 'found him vomiting in his drunkenness in ye Churchyard'. He apparently acknowledged his faults on his knees and promised to live temporately thereafter. But the following year he was back before the Session 'rebuked for his frequent drinking and wasting his father's substance by Ryoting and reveling' and was further threatened with imprisonment by the Magistrates. This is one of the earliest records of a habitual drunkard in Hawick! In 1717 he was rebuked for openly fighting in the street with his wife and father, and told that if he did not refrain from drunkenness he would be sent to the Bailie, who would then send him to the Circuit Court for harsher punishment. It is possible he was the William who around the early 1720s was sent to Fogo to bring back to Hawick the widow and children of Thomas Wemyss, who had died there. In 1714 he married Helen, daughter of Robert Purves. Their children included: John (b.1717); Jean (b.1718); Euphan (b.1721); and Helen (b.1724). Marion (b.1715) may also have been his daughter. William (17th/18th C.) brother of John, who was Laird of Whitlaw. In 1717 he and his brother were witnesses for 2 baptisms for Archibald Paterson in Flex for John Hobkirk in Whitchesters, and in 1718 the pair were witnesses for John Davidson, tenant in Flex. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. William (17th/18th C.) described as being 'of Kirklands' in 1721 when his daughter Jean married gardener Robert Ker in Hawick. His lands could have been Kirklands in Wilton Parish, or one of the other local places of the same name. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for Robert Ker in 1725. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Brockie in 1726. William (18th C.) carrier in Hawick, probably the son of carrier Walter and Helen Sanderson, who was baptised in Hawick in 1707. He married Mary Baldie (or 'Baudy') and their children included: Walter (b.1733); John (b.1735); Robert (b.1738); Mary (b.1739); Helen (b.1741); and William (b.1743). The witness in 1733 were John Scott and Henry Orrock and in 1743 was smith Thomas Huntly. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Wilson and their daughter Agnes was baptised in 1743. William (18th C.) ploughman at Braidlie on Hermitage Water, recorded in 1750. William (18th C.) carrier in Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Nichol in 1754 and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1757, with the whole congregation as witnesses. William (18th C.) married Janet Lillico in Bedrule in 1756. William (18th C.) married Catherine Riddell in Hawick Parish in 1759. He was living at Chapelhill when his children were baptised in Roberton Parish in 1762 and 1763. His children included: Henrietta (b.1761); James (b.1762); Robert (b.1763), probably the Robert who married Mary Scott in 1788; and an unnamed daughter (b.1769). The witnesses in 1761 were gardener James Kyle and shoemaker William Riddell (probably related to his wife). William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Betty Riddell in 1773. Their children included: Robert (b.1774); John (b.1777); Betty (b.1781); and Jane (b.1784). William (18th C.) recorded at Teindside Bridge-end in 1784. His children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: Walter (b.1784); and James (b.1787). A second James (b.1788) was probably also his son. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Esther Nichol and their children included: William (b.1774); and Thomas (b.1782). William (18th/19th C.) listed as innkeeper in Hawick in 1791 when he paid the cart tax. It is unclear where his inn might have been. William (18th/19th C.) recorded as owner of a horse at Hoscoteshiel in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Harwood. He is recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, having 3 working horses. He may have been father of Thomas, who was recorded at Harwood on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Bowanhill Roadside (at Teviothead), listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 3 horses. He is probably the carrier at Bowanhill whose son William was recorded on the 1801 Militia ballot for Cavers Parish. He may also have been father of Robert (1777–1858), who emigrated to Bovina, New York, U.S.A. (and may possibly be the same son as William). He could also be the William recorded at Teindside Bridge-end in 1784 when his son Walter was baptised in Cavers Parish. William (b.c.1780) son of William, carrier at Bowanhill. He was listed on the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. He could be the William who married Ann Rae and whose children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: William (b.1805); John (b.1807); Thomas (b.1808); and Walter (b.1810). These births correspond to the children of Robert, who were buried in Bovina, Delaware County, New York. Hence there seems to be some possibility that he is the same man as Robert (1777–1858). The family emigrated in about 1818. William (18th/19th C.) agricultural labourer in the Hawick area, son of Robert and Mary Scott. He married Elizabeth Davidson. Their children included: Robert (b.1812), married Mina Nichol; Mary (or Marion, b.1814), who married William Paterson; Walter (b.1817), married Jane Easton; James (b.1821), married Jennie Edgar; Margaret (b.1825), married Robert Hall; Catherine (b.1827), married a Mr. Rose; and William (b.1830), married Helen Pringle. The baptisms were in Roberton Parish, when he was at Vales for the first 2 and at Parkhillhaugh for the next 3. In 1840 the family emigrated to Canada, settling at Nithvale, across the River Nith from Ayr, Ontario. William (19th C.) married Christy Stothart in Roberton Parish in 1828 (note that the spelling varies widely in older records, including 'Gladstain', 'Gladstaines', 'Gladstains', 'Gladstanes', 'Gladstanis', 'Gladston', 'Gladstones', 'Gladstons', 'Gladstoune', 'Glaidstaanes', 'Glaidstaines', 'Glaidstanes', 'Glaidstains', 'Glaidstanis', 'Glaidstones', 'Glaidstouns', 'Gleadsteans', 'Gleddistanys', 'Gledstain', 'Gledstaines', 'Gledstainis', 'Gledstane', 'Gledstanes', 'Gledstanis', 'Gledstannis', 'Gledstanys', 'Gledstines', 'Gledstons', 'Glestanes', etc.).

the Gledstains (thu-gled-stānz) n. once prominent local family, being the most common former spelling of the name 'Gladstone'. The origin of the name is probably related to the Old Scots 'gled', meaning a kite. The family had its roots in Lanarkshire (the original lands being in Libberton Parish, a few miles north of Biggar), acquired land in Peeblesshire and then moved its main centre to the Hawick area, with lands in Kirkton and Cavers, with principal residence at Cocklaw. Cocklaw Castle (at Ormiston, but never more than a minor tower house) was involved in the 1403 'Siege of Cocklaw'. In 1509/10 the lands of John Gledstains of that Ilk within the Barony of Cavers included Colifort, Ormiston, Dod and Giddenscleuch, and it was said that he had a charter of confirmation from King David (which must have been from the mid-14th century). 'Little Gladstain good at need' led Hawick men at the 1575 Raid of the Redeswire. A member of the family sold Stobs estate to the Eliotts in 1580. A major branch, connected directly to the Gledstains of that Ilk and Cocklaw, was the Gledstains of Whitlaw and later Hilliesland. They provided Town Clerks to Hawick for about 110 years with only minor interruptions (1673–1783). The family also provided Cornets in 1714 and 1744. The Cocklaw estate included Orchard and Hummelknowes, and the family held it until 1734, when the last Gledstains of the Ilk died. The burial aisle of the Gledstains of Cocklaw was pulled down by the heritors sometime in the 18th century. Branches of the family also held lands at Dodd, Coliforthill and Adderstone Shiel. They farmed at the Flex and elsewhere, and had property at 80 High Street, as well as a town house in the Mid Raw. The 'Heirs of Glaidstones' held land valued at £1240 in the 1740s. The local Gledstains lost much of their lands in the 18th century, and then the name died out, but descendants undoubtedly remain in Hawick. Another branch, of Craig and Kelwood in Dumfriesshire, also died out in the male line. Meanwhile the Arthurshiels branch flourished and produced William Ewart Gladstone, who became Prime Minister. The family aisle in old Cavers church was abandoned, but was located where a set of steps leading to the gallery was built. The family motto is 'Fide et virtue' (with faith and valour), which was engraved on a sundial belonging to Francis of Whitlaw, bearing the date 1693. The original arms feature a savage's head dripping blood, with a bonnet of bay and holly

the Gledstane Bible (thu-gled-stin-bī-bul) n. old family bible in the Museum, once belonging to Walter Gledstains of Hilliesland, Town Clerk of Hawick. It is a 'Beza' Bible, Geneva edition, dated 1601 and printed in London. It contains many handwritten entries relating to this once important local family, e.g. 'upon the 4 day of maii 1645, my father Francis Gladstanes and other nyne sister's sons of Sir William Douglas of Cavers killed at the Battle of Aulderne'. The bible came into the hands of Catherine Cheyne, a servant of the family, then passed to her nephew, William Smith (cutler in Hawick), then to Andrew Irvine (merchant in Hawick), who presented it to the Burgh. It was donated to the Museum in 1860. James Wilson described it in 1858 and W.N. Kennedy in 1860, with J.A.H. Murray transcribing many of the entries in 1878.

Gledstane's Lands (gled-stinz-lawndz) n. former name for a small piece of land near Hunthill and Lanton. The lands appear to have been held by George Gledstains of Cocklaw in 1466. They formed the dowry of Lilias, daughter of James Gledstains of Cocklaw, when she married Richard Rutherford in the latter part of the 16th century. It was 'Gladstanis-part de Langtoun' in 1510 when Ninian Glendinning had a charter for the Barony of Scraesburgh. In 1536/7 the 'ten merkland of old extent lying in the town and territory of Langtoun called Gledstanislandis' when listed as the exception to the lands in the Barony of Scraesburgh infefted to John Rutherford of Hunthill by Ninian Glendinning of that Ilk. In 1685 the succession to the Rutherfords of Hunthill estates included the Barony of 'Scraisburg alias Hunthill, exceptis 10 mercatis terrarum, antiqui extentus, vocatis Gledstanes Lands'. It seems likely that this was the same piece of land later called Hunthill and owned by the Gledstains of Dod.

Gledstone's (gled-stinz) n. Gladstone's mill at No. 10 Union Street, being adjacent to the corner of Union Street and North Bridge Street. The site had been James Brand's 'New Academy' in the mid-19th century. The mill closed in the late 1970s and was converted to a warehouse, used by N.G. Thomson.It was then converted to Blondettes bar, but was demolished after the concrete house on the corner burned down.

Gledstone Street (gled-stin-stree') n. Gladstone Street in the West End, built in 1878, and named after Prime Minister William Ewart Gladstone. The first buildings were 2 large houses and 2 small cottages on the south side. In 1897 J.P. Alison designed a tenement at No. 20.

Gledswing (gledz-wing) n. said to be the home of Hawick lawyer Adam Laing in 1908. It is unclear where this may have been.

Gled'swing Strip (gledz-wing-strip) n. narrow plantation on the north side of Ruberlaw, between Denholmhill farm and Denholmhill Wood.

gleed (gleed) n., poet., arch. a fire, flame, spark, ember, glow, glimmer – 'The brightest star that 'mang ye shane Nae winklin' gleed . . . ' [JoHa], 'Aboon the aizles' dying gleid, The laithly kerlyn satte' [JTe], 'Now blaw the glied, quo' Geordie Tait, And let us see how's a' within' [HSR], 'Come in o'er near the fire, 'Tis but a wee bit gleid at best . . . Gleed Hob (gleed-hōb) n. nickname for Robert Armstrong in the latter part of the 16th century.

gleet (glee') n., poet. glistening, glitter – 'A neck as white as the new dri'en snaw, Her hair had the gleet o' the hoodie craw' [JoHa], v. to glitter, shine.

gleety (glee'-ee, glee-tee) adj., arch. shining, glistening.

gleg (gleg) adj., arch. alert, keen of perception, quick to respond, lively, merry – '. . . An' tongue as gleg to gibe as ony shewman's' [JoHa], '. . . and esteemed by his teacher as being 'gleg in the uptake' . . . And the horses fade as they faced the glen, And the shadows gather the Harden men' [WHO] (the word is much more common further north in Scotland, and locally is used almost exclusively for Harden Glen, with 'cleuch' used commonly instead).

Glen (glen) n. Rev. Alexander (1726–1805) son of James, minister of Dirleton, he studied at Edinburgh University and was licensed by Haddington Presbytery in 1749. He became minister at Kirkton in 1751, but was translated to Galashiels in 1757. He then became minister of Dirleton (like his father) in 1769. He married Ann Blackadder (who died in 1830) and their children were James (who became a Church of England minister), Katherine, Elizabeth, Barbara (who married John Wilson in Edinburgh), John, Alexander (who became a solicitor), Nisbet (who became a naval commander), Ann and Walter. Jean (18th C.) last person to stand in the pillory at the Mercat Cross. She lived in Needle Street. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Grisel 'Person' and their son James was baptised in 1651. The witnesses were Simon and Robert Nichol.

the Glencairn Bar (thu-glen-kārn-bawr) n. public house which stood at 70 High Street, the corner of the High Street and O'Connell Street (later David Thomson's menswear shop). It had stained glass images of Burns and Scott, and the property still has the door in the corner.

glence (glens) n., v., arch. glance – '. . . like a wawkin' stick, wi' a big turned heed that the mune glenced on' [BCM1880].

Glendinning (glen-di-nin) n. farm in southeast Dumfrieshire, where the Glendinning Burn meets th Meggat Water. The old form was Glendonwyn and the area gave its name to the family, who were once Lairds of these lands. There was formerly a tower there, with remains still visible in the mid-19th century, on the south side of the Poldovick Burn, a few hundred metres south of the modern farmhouse. There was an antimony mine nearby and there are also several earthworks and enclosures in the area. In 1669 Walter, son of Robert Scott of Harwood, was served heir to his father's 7½ merkland of 'Glendoning' in the Parish of Westerkirk. There was once an antimony mine near here, with a sample of ore donated to the Museum in 1858, and an earthenware urn used in the works donated in 1862 (it is 'Glendinning' on Gordon's c.1650 map and Blaeu's 1654 map, while 'Glendinning fl.' is also on Godron's map).

Glendinning (glen-di-nin) n. Adam Fitzhugh of Glendonwyn (13th/14th C.) probably the first of the family to use the designation 'of Glendonwyn' or Glendinning. He was an important man during the reign of Alexander III. He had a charter around 1286 from John Macgill for lands in Clifton and Morebattle. He may have married Agnews, daughter of Sir John Towers. He was succeeded by his son Adam. Adam of Glendonwyn (13th/14th C.) probably a descendant of the Fitzhugh family. He held many lands under the superiority of the house of Douglas. He had a discharge of 1313 from Archibald, Lord of Galloway, for all his past feu-duties. In 1320 he had a charter from King Robert for part of the duties from Roxburgh Castle. In 1325 he was confirmed in the lands of 'Fallhope' in Roxburghshire, these possibly being 'Phaup'. He may have married a daughter of Wauchope of that Ilk and was succeeded by another Adam. Adam of that Ilk (d.1363). He held lands in Ewesdale and elsewhere, with the Earl of Douglas being his superior. These generations are confused, and it is unclear how many separate Adams there were. He may be the Sir Adam who married Margaret Douglas, daughter of Sir John of Lothian and sister of Sir James of Dalkeith (although accounts differ, and she may have been wife of a different Adam). He is probably the 'Ade Glendoning' (also transcribed as 'Glentone') who forfeited lands in the town of Roxburgh, which were granted to Henry Ashkirk in 1363. His children included: Sir Adam, who succeeded; Sir Simon, who died at the Battle of Otterburn; Matthew, who became Bishop of Glasgow; Thomas; a daughter who married a de Mundaville; another daughter who married Thomas de Moffat; and perhaps also a daughter who married an Elliot (since cleric John 'Elwald' was his nephew). Sir Adam (d.c.1397) son of Adam and Margaret Douglas, daughter of Sir John Douglas of Lothian. His grandfather was probably Adam Fitzhugh of Glendonwyn, who first adopted the 'of Glendonwyn' appellation, and his brother Matthew was Bishop of Glasgow. However, these early generations are unclear. In a rental roll c.1376 (among the charters of the Douglases of Morton) he is 'Domino Ade de Glendenwyne' and listed as holding the lands of 'Eskdale Mur' and 'Le Baly'. About 1380 he witnessed a charter for Henry of Swinton and several around the same time for William, Earl of Douglas. He acted as general receiver for the Earl of Douglas' rents. In 1385 he received a charter for the feu-duties of Scarborough. He was an envoy to the English court and also travelled to Picardy in France. He obtained charters for many lands, including 'Easter Fawhope' (probably 'Phaup', either in Ettrickdale or near Mosspaul) and Brecallow in Dumfriesshire. In 1389 he received a royal charter for 'Stabilgorton' (i.e. staplegordon). Also in 1389 he is recorded as 'de Glendonwin', in a charter confirming the lands of Wauchope to Alexander of Wauchope. In 1390 he was a witness of the confirmation of the lands of Minto to William Stewart of Jedburgh. A 1391 charter of Archibald, Earl of Douglas, dated at Glendonwyn, describes how the Earl was mortifying certain lands in the Barony of Hawick in order to found a chapel in Westerkirk, and directing him to arrange this. He may have married Margaret Douglas, but this could be confusion with an earlier generation. He was married to Wauchope's daughter Margaret and was to succeeded to the lands if there were no other heirs; this appears to have happened. His children probably included: John, who died at Homildon Hill; Sir Simon, who married Mary, daughter of Archibald, 4th Earl of Douglas; William, Adam and Matthew (clerics who were nephews of Bishop Matthew); and Robert, in Annandale. Adam (b.1379/80) nephew of Bishop Matthew. In 1394 he was recorded being aged 14. He may have been brother of William, and perhaps son of Sir Adam. Adam (15th C.) received a cow in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2. He is listed as 'Ade Glendonwyn'. Mark and Margaret were also listed. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Turnbull and their children included William (b.1686). Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Hume and their children included John (b.1682). Adam (17th C.) listed at Winningtonrig in Cavers Parish in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls, although his name is crossed out and he is then listed among the 'deficient'. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Blackburn in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Groundistone in 1698. He married Margaret Preacher in Ashkirk in 1696 and their children (baptised in Wilton) included:

John (b.1698); and Margaret (b.1699). The witnesses in 1698 were George Scott and Thomas Preacher (surely related to his wife). He may be the Adam whose daughter Jean married John Gledstains in Hawick in 1717. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Highchesters in 1718. His children included: Bessie (b.1704); John and William (b.1715); and Agnes (b.1718). Helen (b.1707), baptised in Hawick, may also be his child. Adam (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Turnbull in Ashkirk Parish in 1714. Adam (18th C.) possibly the son of William, born in Roberton in 1734. In 1765 he is recorded as shepherd at Mains in Liddesdale. He married Agnes Crozier. He had 4 sons: the eldest, William (who married Mary Elliot), being a shepherd; and the youngest, Adam (b.1762, who married Elizabeth Crook), a soldier. Adam 'Slow Adam' (d.1808) carter in Hawick. He married Isabel Roger, who died just 3 weeks after him. They had a daughter, Margaret (1770–75), who is buried at Borthwick Waas. Probably the same Adam was recorded as owner of a horse in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He could be the same Glendinning shown as owner of lands on the south side of the west-end of the High Street on Wood's 1824 map (even although deceased by then). Esther, who married John Rieve in Howcleuch, may have been his sister (since she is buried next to his daughter). Adam (1762–1851) son of Adam and Agnes Crozier, born in Castleton. He was a soldier, although it is not known which regiment he originally served in (but it may have been the Scots Greys). It is said that he served all over Europe, although family tradition also says that he never served abroad. In 1805 he was Cornet with the Royal Wagon Train, becoming Lieutenant to the 9th Royal Veterinary Battalion in 1806. He was in the party for Lord Nelson's funeral. He retired on full pay to settle back in Newcastleton. In 1841 he was at about 5 Langholm Street and listed as 'Lieut. Army R. Vet. Bat. H.P.' His wife was Elizabeth and their children included: Thomas, who served in Canada with the Royal Wagon Train; Mary (b.1804), who married John Grieve of Branxholme Braes; and Isobel (1805–92), who married James Inglis. It is possible that he was the servant at Harden and Myredykes in Castleton Parish, listed among heads of households in 1835–41. Adam (1802–68) eldest son of shepherd William and Mary Elliot. He was born at Cauldronfoot in Castleton Parish. He was a shepherd at Potholm in 1841 and at Tweedenhead in 1851 and 1861. He married Margaret Robson (from Ewes) and they had 6 sons and 7 daughters. It is said that all of his sons became shepherds, including the eldest, Adam, whose 4 sons were all shepherds in the Jed and Rule valleys. Their children included: Helen (1829–1915), who married Walter Kitchen; William (1831–1911), who married Anne Kyle and died at Gatehousecote; Peter (1833–1904), who emigrated to Canada, worked as a miner and is buried in Ross Bay Cemetery, Victoria; Adam (1836–1920), who emigrated to Victoria, Canada; Mary (b.1838), who had a daughter, Margaret; Margaret (b.1838), who lived at Shankend; Janet (1840–78), who married James Temple Robson; John (1842–1907), who died at Westshiels; Ninian (c.1844–98), a shepherd in Northumberland; Agnes (1846–90), who died in Oregon, U.S.A.; Walter (1849–1928); Isabella (b.1851); and Elizabeth (b.1852), who married George Rutherford. He died at Tweedenhead. Adam (1806–1865) son of John and Margaret Hatlie, he was baptised in Castleton Parish. He moved to Liverpool, where he was a soap manufacturer. He married Agnes, daughter of William Glendinning and Mary Elliot. Their children were: Mary, John, William, Mary, Robert, Adam, James and Randle. Adam (1855–1935) son of William, he was a shepherd like his father. He worked at Colterscleuch and elsewhere. He married Eliza (1855–1941), daughter of James Scott and Janet Cavers. He is buried in Ettleton Cemetery. They had a daughter Janet (b.1879). Alexander of that Ilk and Parton (d.1616) son of John. In 1562 he inherited the lands in Liddesdale that had belonged to his grandfather Ninian, according to a document from James, Earl of Bothwell. He was a witness to a bond of caution in 1585. He married Alison, daughter of Alexander Gordon of Troquhane and secondly Nicola, daughter of Robert Herries of Mabie. His children included: John, who pre-deceased him; Robert, who succeeded; Simon, who died young; and William, who predeceased his father and had descendants who went to Ireland. Andrew (b.1800) probably son of Walter and Elizabeth Park, he was born at Glendinning, Westerkirk. He became shepherd at Craikhope where he is recorded in 1851. In 1837 he married Jean, daughter of Andrew Anderson, who was for 50 years shepherd at Glendinning. Their children were: Andrew, who emigrated to New Zealand, where he called his farm 'Glendearg'; Thomas, who was in the county police; and William, shepherd at Kiddem Hill, Eskdalemuir, whose son Andrew was shepherd at Ruletownhead. Andrew (b.c.1815) son of William, he lived at Ashkirk Mill and was a mason. In 1834 he won the foot race at the Common-Riding Games. Andrew (19th/20th C.) son of William, who was shepherd at Kiddem Hill, Eskdalemuir, and grandson of Andrew, who was shepherd at Craikhope. He became shepherd at Ruletownhead, and had 3 brothers who were also shepherds. Archibald of Fiddleton (16th/17th C.) recorded in the Circuit Court of 1622 when he was cautioner for his brother Andrew. He also appeared, along with John Graham of 'Thicksyd', as caution for 'Lancie Glendinning, now in Dryff' (formerly tenant in Logan), as well as 'Hob and Andro Glendonnings in Logane' (also in Riddings and Hudshouse, respectively). Archibald (17th C.) resident at 'Julian' in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He was surely related to John, who was also listed there. Archibald (17th/18th C.) tenant in Hawick Shiel. He married Margaret Glendinning and their children included: George (b.1689), born in Ashkirk Parish; and John (b.1702), born in Hawick Parish. Archibald (19th C.) joiner in Newcastleton. He was listed among heads of households in 1838–41. Bartholomew (d.c.1504) eldest son of John of Glendonwyn and Parton. He was witness to Alexander Home becoming Bailie of the Lordship of Eskdale in 1495. He witnessed a charter for Gordon of Lochinvar in 1501. He probably succeeded his father John in 1503, but did not survive for long. He and his brother Simon were killed by John Lindsay of Wauchope when he was discharging his duties as Sheriff by attempting to arrange for one third of the lands of Wauchope to go to the widow of Lindsay's father; Lindsay was executed for this crime in 1505. He probably died shortly after his father, and his brother Ninian succeeded. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Gordon of Lochinvar. Christopher (b.1798/9) from Teviothead, he was a carrier at Teindsidebridgend. He married Jessie Purdom (from Castleton) and their children included Isabella, Archibald, Walter, Mary, William, Robert, Ann and Jessie. He was listed being of Northhouse in 1860 when he donated to the Museum 'antomony from the Langholm mine' and in 1862 when he donated a coin of William III. David (1860–1942) son of William, he was a shepherd like his father. He worked at Hawthornside and elsewhere. In 1883 he married Margaret Martin (1863–1934) from Canonbie; she died at Lurgiescleuch. Their children were: Matthew Martin (1883–1967), who also worked as a shepherd and married Agnes Skilling; Annie (1885–1964), who married John Easton; William (b.1886), who died in infancy; Elizabeth Agnes (1888–1983); William (again, 1891–1975), who married Mary Jane Easton; Robert (1893–1934); Adam (1896–1976); Margaret Jane (b.1899); and David Martin (b.1903). Ellen (17th/18th C.) said to be an elderly member of the Newcastleton Burgher congregation in about the 1810s. She was the last hold-out for the practice of reading each line before singing psalms in church. When the change arrived, she claimed she had gotten the better of the Session by not joining in, but reading and singing the lines later at home. George (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick Parish. He married Jean Turnbull in 1709 and their son Robert was baptised in 1710, with witnesses Andrew Davidson in Newbigging and Thomas Davidson (perhaps the man recorded at Stobicote in 1716). George (18th C.) married Isobel Lillico in Kirkton in 1733. George (b.c.1770s) carrier at Hummelknowes. He is recorded as a labourer at Hummelknowes on the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799; James was also listed there and so probably his brother. In 1801 he was a servant at Hummelknowes. He is recorded in a list of men volunteering in 1803 to fight against the French, recorded as 'horses and carts, if required'. He could be the George who was living at Lower Calaburn in 1841, aged about 65, and listed as 'Independent'. Henry (18th C.) hired at Braidlie (on Hermitage) in 1750, probably as an assistant shepherd. James (17th C.) recorded as being 'in Burgh, in Cavers parish' in 1684 when he was listed as a fugitive among many others for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. He was presumably tenant at Brugh and probably related to shepherd John, who was recorded at Brugh in 1694. He may be the 'John in Brough' whose will is recorded in 1684 (although the first name is incorrect, the match of the dates is probably not a coincidence). James (17th C.) recorded as being 'in South-field' in 1684 on a long list of men declared as rebels for refusing to take 'the Test'. James (17th C.) tenant in Stobicote on the 1684 list of men declared rebels for being Covenanters. He was listed separately from James in Southfield and James in Brugh. James (17th C.) shepherd at Whitehaugh in Wilton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. He could be the James who witnessed a baptism for Robert Stewart in Wilton in 1694. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His son Thomas was baptised in 1700. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, recorded as herd at Hawick Shiels in 1703. His children included Christian (b.1703), with baptismal witnesses Bailies George Martin and Robert Wright. Margaret (b.1701) was probably also his child. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Birneyknowe in 1716. He probably married Bessie Glendinning in Cavers in 1711 and had children Ann (b.1713), Isabel (b.1716), Thomas (b.1718) and James (b.1720). James (17th/18th C.) shepherd at Falnash. His son John was baptised in Hawick Parish (probably at Caerlenrig) in 1720. James (b.c.1704) farm worker, born at Whitchesters, probably son of John. He lived there for 41 years and later moved to Hawick. In 1761 he was one of 3 men chosen to perambulate the boundary between Fenwick and Alton Croft in order to regularise it. He could be the James who married Bessie Rule (or 'Rowl') in Hawick in 1721, both of them being described as 'in whitchesters'; their children (baptised in Hawick Parish) included Janet (b.1724), James (b.1727), John (b.1731), Robert (b.1735), Betty (b.1737) and Walter (b.1743). The witnesses in 1731 were William 'Willieson' and John Hobkirk and in 1743 were the 'whole congregation'. He is probably the James who witnessed a baptism for James Dodds (in Whitchesters) and Jean Glendinning (perhaps his daughter) in 1758. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Bowanhill in 1729 when he married Jane Turnbull. James (18th C.) resident at Broadleeshiel in 1729 when his daughter Bessie was baptised in Roberton Parish. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Telfer and their children included: Jane (b.1770); and Robert (b.1772). James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Jardine and their son James was baptised in 1776. James (18th C.) resident at Outersideshiel in 1775 when his daughter Margaret was baptised in Roberton Parish. James (18th C.) wright in Hawick Parish. His wife was Helen Laidlaw and their children included: Betty (b.1757); Margaret (b.1761); and Adam (b.1766). The witnesses in 1766 were Charles Rutherford and John Richardson. Elizabeth (b.1760), with mother's name given as 'Margaret' Laidlaw, was probably also his child. He could be the James who witnessed a baptism for carrier John Richardson in 1764. Adam is probably the son of wright James who died in Hawick in 1787. He could be the son of James and Bessie Rule baptised in Hawick in 1727. James (1749/50–1823) married Margaret Brydon, who died in 1839, aged 83. She may have been daughter of William Brydon, born in Ettrick in 1756. His wife died at Gair (probably the one on Tima Water) and he died at Glendinning. They are buried at Borthwick Waas. He could be the James, son of Thomas, baptised in Roberton in 1748. James (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isabel Hendry and their daughter Agnes (or 'Nancy') was baptised in 1772. She married Francis Coulter, who emigrated to Bovina, New York. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1769 he married Jane Telfer and their children included: Jane (b.1770); and Robert (b.1772). He may be the James, junior, whose unnamed child died in 1781. James (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded at 'Callendridge' (probably Caerlenrig) in 1772 when his son Robert was baptised in Cavers. Perhaps he was the same man as James in Hawick Parish (if Robert was baptised twice). James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Headshaw Mill, recorded as owner of 2 horses on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. James (b.1775/6) from Nichol Forest in Cumberland, he was a tailor in Newcastleton. He was recorded in Pigot's 1837 directory and Slater's 1852 directory. In 1841 and 1851 he was at about 10 South Hermitage Street, He married Esther Kyle and they had children William (also a tailor), Margaret and Esther. James (b.c.1770s) recorded as a labourer at Hummelknowes on the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. George was also listed there and so probably his brother. He was listed as a labourer at Hummelknowe Mill on the 1801 Militia ballot. James (b.c.1770s) weaver at Firknow according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. Perhaps the same James was a labourer at New Woll on the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. He could be the James who married Bell Watson in Ashkirk in 1794. Alternatively he could be the James who married Janet Hislop and whose children, baptised in Ashkirk, included: James (b.1813); Margaret (b.1815); Isabel (b.1816); Hannah (b.1817); Agnes (b.1818); Janet (b.1819); Janet (again, b.1822); Helen (b.1823); and Mary (b.1826). James (b.c.1780) hind at Belses according to the Militia ballot in Ancrum Parish in 1801. James (b.c.1780s) shepherd at Girnwood. He was recorded on the 1812 ballot for the Militia in Roberton Parish. In 1808 his child was baptised at Deanburnhaugh. He married Margaret Scott and their children (mostly baptised in Roberton) included: John (b.1808); Mary (b.1810); Robert (b.1813); and

James (b.1815), baptised in Lyne and Megget Parish. James (19th C.) married Jane Hume in Hawick Parish in 1844. James (19th/20th C.) son of William, who was shepherd at Kiddem Hill, Eskdalemuir. His grandfather Andrew had been shepherd at Craikhope, where he also worked as shepherd. James (19th/20th C.) law clerk in Hawick who was Cornet in 1909 and Secretary of the Common-Riding Committee in 1925. He served for many years as Master of Ceremonies for the Common Riding. He was also Callants' Club President in 1934 and Club Treasurer for 20 years. John (14th/15th C.) listed in 1398 among the 'borowis' for establishing the Earl of Douglas' bounds on the West March. Simon was listed after him, and they were surely related. John of Glendonwyn and Parton (d.1503) son of Sir Simon. He possessed large amounts of land, including Glendinning, Clifton, Scraesburgh, Brecallow, Wauchope, Westerkirk and Langholm. In 1493 he was ordered to pay to Kelso Abbey the teinds for Staplegordon Kirk. He is probably the Laird of Gledinning who was fined in 1494/5 for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. In 1495 he was superior of Scraesburgh when the west half of the town there was inherited by George Rutherford. He married Agnes, daughter of Robert, Lord Maxwell of Caerlaverock. He secondly married Elizabeth, daughter of William, Lord Sinclair. His children included: Bartholomew, who succeeded, but was killed by John Lindsay of Wauchope; Ninian, who succeeded his brother; Simon, also killed by Lindsay; Adam, father of John of Bishopton; and Janet, who married Gilbert Grierson, 2nd of Lag. He may be the Laird of 'Glendunwin' for whose murder Patrick 'Dunwedy' in Eskdale was hanged in 1508/9. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in Hermiston in 1502. Along with William Waugh, he had 4 cows stolen from him, with Adam Turnbull in Hornshole having remission for the theft. John (15th/16th C.) described as Coroner of Eskdale in 1507/8 when he gave licence for Robert Erskine to be infefted in the lands of Dalgleish. He was probably father of Simon, who was Coroner in 1540. John of Glendonwyn and Parton (c.1510–c.60) son of Ninian, from whom he inherited lands in Dumfriesshire, Kirkcudbright and elsewhere. He may be the 'Domino de Glendynwyn' who heritably held the lands of Riddelstead in Liddesdale according to a rental roll of 1541. In 1554 he and his mother agreed to take it in turns to provide for his foor and clothing 'considering his poverty'; he was then described being 'of Drumrith'. He married Elizabeth (or Isabel), daughter of Sir Robert Gordon of Lochinvar. Their sons were: Alexander, who succeeded; William of Garquhinye, progenitor of the Glendinnings of Mochrum; Simon, whose son was George of Laggan. John (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. His name is recorded as 'Johnne Glendonyng'. John (16th/17th C.) tenant in Byreholm. In 1623 he and Sandy Armstrong in Harden entered John Armstrong (called 'of Powsholme') to the Justice Court in Juedburgh. John of that Ilk and Parton (17th C.) son of John. He was confirmed in the family lands in 1630. In 1644 he was part of Montrose's army, setting up the King's standard in Dumfries, as a result of which he was denounced as a traitor. His goods were forfeited and he fled abroad until the Restoration. He married Isabel, daughter of George Seton, 2nd Earl of Winton. His children included: George, who married Elizabeth Glendoning of Gilston, but predeceased his father; James, who succeeded his father, but died soon afterwards without children; William who died unmarried soon after his elder brother; and Robert, who succeeded. By this time the family was focussed on their estate at Parton and all local connections appear to have been severed. John 'Sowtail' (17th C.) recorded in the Hawick Burgh Records in 1644. His wife, 'Jenet Scott, alleged witche', had William Elliot in Harwood, acting as her cautioner, promise that she would appear before the Justice-General or the Bailies of the Regality of Dumfries. John (17th C.) along with Walter (probably a brother or son) he was charged with stealing sheep from the Laird of Gledstains in 1663. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Janet Riddell and their children included: Margaret (b.1671); John (b.1674); and Helen (b.1678). The witnesses in 1678 were Robert Hardie and Robert Cowan. John (1665/6–1748) resident at Lodgegill in Castleton Parish. He married Margaret Turnbull, who died in 1755, aged 81. John (17th C.) shepherd in Brugh listed among the 'deficient' on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was surely related to James, who was declared a fugitive in 1684. John (17th C.) resident at 'Julian' in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He was surely related to Archibald, who was also listed there. John (17th C.) tenant at Westburnflat in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (17th C.) cooper in Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He is listed among the 'deficients' of the Parish. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, living at Whitchesters in 1704, 1716, 1722 and 1723. In 1716, 1722 and 1725 he witnessed baptisms for William Williamson, shepherd in Whitchesters. He is probably the elder of Hawick Kirk recorded in 1717, along with Andrew (presumably also Glendinning), when charged with collecting monies from Crumhaugh, Goldielands, Fenwick, Alton Croft and Closses, suggesting he may have lived in this area. He was recorded as an Elder in 1719 when he witnessed a baptism for William Williamson, herd in Whitchesters. He and William Williamson witnessed a baptism for John Hobkirk in Whitchesters in 1720. He is probably the John who was tenant in Whitchesters when he witnessed a baptism for John Ekron in 1723 and another for Robert Scott, weaver in Hawick Shiel. He is probably the 'Elder' who witnessed a baptism in 1725 for John Wilson ('Eggman'). He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Wilkie in 1731. He married Helen Scott in 1701 and their children included James (b.1704) and Esther (b.1707). The witnesses in 1704 were William Bell in Whitchesters and Robert Rodger. He is probably the elder of Hawick Kirk recorded in 1717, along with Andrew (presumably also Glendinning), when charged with collecting monies from Crumhaugh, Goldielands, Fenwick, Alton Croft and Closses, suggesting he may have lived in this area. He was recorded as an Elder in 1719 when he witnessed a baptism for William Williamson, herd in Whitchesters. John (18th C.) resident of Whitchesters. He was 'younger' in 1722, suggesting he may have been son of the earlier John in Whitchesters. He is probably the John who was tenant in Whitchesters when he witnessed a baptism for John Ekron in 1723. He is probably also the John who witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott, tenant in Newbigging in 1731. He married Bessie Rule and their son John was baptised in 1722, with witnesses Walter Scott of Crumhaugh and flesher Robert Deans. John (18th C.) resident of Ewes Parish. His wife's name was also Glendinning (although no forename is recorded for her) and they married in 1753. Their children included: William (b.1754); Margaret (b.1756); an unnamed son (b.1759); Helen (b.1765). Andrew (b.1759) was probably also his son. The witness in 1759 was John Laidlaw. John (1747–1819) born in Cavers Parish, son of Robert. He was a shepherd, who died at Commonbrae and is buried at Teviothead. In 1783 and 1786 he is recorded at Caerlenrig Righead. He married Isabel Miller and their children included: John (b.1783); and James (b.1786). John (18th C.) recorded at Todrig Mill in 1781. He married Beatrix (or 'Beattie') Scott in Roberton in 1780 and their children included: James (b.1781), baptised in Roberton; Katherine (b.1785), baptised in Bowden; and Janet (b.1788), baptised in Bowden. John (b.c.1770s) servant at Headshaw according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. He may be the John who married Janet Scott and whose daughter Euphan was baptised in Ashkirk in 1812. John (b.c.1780) servant at Deanfoot in Minto Parish according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. Perhaps the same John married Margaret Scott and had children James (b.1819) and Andrew (b.1821) baptised in Minto. John (b.c.1780) agricultural labourer at Appletreehall. He was listed among heads of households in 1835–41. His wife was Agnes. John (18th/19th C.) carter in Newcastleton. He was listed as male head of his family in 1835–41. He could be the resident of Castleton of that name who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. John (b.1810/1) son of William, he was a mason in Ashkirk. In 1851 he was living at Haughhead Cottage in Ashkirk Parish. His wife was Eliza (from Edinburgh) and their children included: William; John; Mary Ann; and Andrew. John (b.1858) son of William and Helen Jackson, he was born in Teviothead Parish. He worked as a shepherd at Wellhaugh in Northumberland and in Roberton Parish. He married Margaret (1867–1909), daughter of Mary Glendinning (with the father's name unknown), and granddaughter of shepherd Adam. Their children were: Helen (b.1891); William (b.1895); Mary (b.1897); Margaret (b.1901); John (b.1902); and Walter (b.1905). Margaret (15th C.) bequeathed a cow in the last will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2. She is recorded as 'Margarete Glendonwyn' and Adam and Mark are also listed. Margaret (17th C.) recorded in 1643 as liferenter of Stouslie and another farm (probably Boonraw) in Hassendean Parish, valued at £291. She was probably the 'Mary' of Dod and Whitlaw (possibly daughter of George of Dod) who married George of Synton and Boonraw. She was probably also the 'Lyfrenter of Boonraw' recorded on the Land Tax Rolls of 1663. It is unclear when she died, but her son George Scott of Boonraw was owner of the same lands in 1678. Margaret (17th C.) resident at Outerside, recorded among the poor of Wilton Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Mark (15th C.) received a cow and 2 bolls of victuals in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2. He is listed as 'Marco de Glendonwyn' and Adam and Margaret are also named. Matthew (c.1346–1408) 2nd son of Adam de Glendonwyn of Glendonwyn, he was a cleric in Glasgow Diocese. His mother was grand-niece of Sir William Douglas, 'the Flower of Chivalry' and his brother Sir Simon was killed at Otterburn. His name was recorded as 'de Glendonwyn' and other variants. He had permission to travel to England to study in 1363 and was 'Master' by 1374, although it is not clear whether he graduated at Oxford, Orleans or elsewhere. He was granted the Church of Buittle in Kirkcudbright in 1371, but there was a dispute and it probably went to another. He held the benefice of Cavers Parish from about 1374 (granted by Melrose Abbey, with the support of the Earl of Douglas), which was void by the death of John Ganon. By 1376 he also held a Canonry of Glasgow, with the expectation of a Prebend. Along with his brother Simon he was granted safe-passage to visit England from Scotland in 1377. He served as Proctor of the English Nation in Paris in 1378 and Rector there 1378/9 and remained there for at least another couple of years. In 1385 he and (now Cardinal) Walter Wardlaw were among those Scots given money to help with military expeditions to the Borders. In 1386 he was one of the negotiators with the English at Berwick. He was appointed Bishop of Glasgow by Pope Clement VII in 1387, succeeding Walter Wardlaw, and serving until his death. This meant that he had to resign the benefice of Cavers before (when it was given to Hugh Rae). He travelled to Avignon to be consecrated and there presented a petition for benefices for John de Hawick and John Leche (Rector of Hawick). He witnessed some charters for the Crown from 1389, said mass at the funeral of Robert II and preached at the coronation of Robert III. In 1390 he was appointed him one of the 9 conservators for the Border truce. In 1394 he was one of the Scottish envoys to discuss peace at Kelso (although the meeting did not occur), was at peace negotiations at Hadden in Sprouston Parish in 1399, was an envoy on the Border in 1401, and was again an evoy to Hadden in 1404. As Bishop he was involved in several disputes with other dioceses. He was recorded at Melrose in 1394/5. In 1394 he requested a benefice for his 15-year old nephew William 'Glendonwyn' and another for his 14-year old nephew Adam 'Glendonwyn'. In 1395 he sponsored a petition for his nephew Simon de Mandeville and for other kinsmen in 1396. In 1401 he introduced a new tax in the Diocese of Glasgow and presented some vestments to the cathedral's treasury. He died at his manor of Lochwood near Glasgow. Note that there was dispute in the church at the time, with an alternative Bishop (John de Framysden) appointed by Pope Boniface IX in 1391, but never recognised in Scotland. He had 6 nephews who are recorded: William; Adam; Matthew; Simon de Mandeville; Robert de Moffat; and John Elwald. Robert de Wilton was also related to him. His seal as bishop was once described, but no example survives. Matthew (b.1386/7) said to be of noble birth and nephew of Bishop Matthew, he may have been a son of Sir Adam. In 1406 his uncle petitioned for him to hold a benefice although only 19 years of age. He graduated B.A. in Paris in 1406/7 and was Licentiate of Arts there in 1408. He does not appear to be recorded afterwards. Matthew (14th/15th C.) recorded as 'Matheo de Glendonwin' when he witnessed the 1420/1 charter for the half barony of Branxholme, passing from the Inglis's to the Scotts. Perhaps the same Matthew was a Commissioner for the West Marches in 1429. It seems unlikely he was the same man as the slightly earlier cleric. Ninian of Glendonwyn and Parton (d.1541) son of John of Parton. He succeeded after his brothers Bartholomew and Simon were murdered by John Lindsay of Wauchope. In 1503 he granted a precept of sasine for George Gledstains in the lands of Gladstanes in Roxburghshire. He was confirmed in the Barony of Scraesburgh in 1510, and other lands in Dumfriesshire and Roxburghshire in the following years. He is probably be the Laird of 'straisburne' who was fined for not appearing at the Justice Aire in Jedburgh in 1510 and the Laird of 'glendunwyn' who was also called for his lands of 'langtone' and Clifton. In 1528 he resigned Clifton and Scraesburgh to the King, in favour of himself and his wife. In 1530 he was superior of Scraesburgh, when John Rutherford resigned his lands into his hands, and then he regranted them. His family appear to have lost some of their Dumfriesshire lands while Robert, Lord Maxwell was superior of Eskdale. He married Janet, daughter of Sir John Dunbar of Mochrum, and possibly also Katherine, daughter of John Maxwell, Lord of Caerlaverock. He was succeeded by his son John. He had another son Simon, who was reduced to poverty by 1554, with his son John and wife Janet Dunbar, 'lady of liferent of Partoun', agreeing to provide for him by turns. Ninian (1806–84) son of William and Mary Elliot, he was born at Shaws in Castleton Parish. He was a shepherd at Plashetts in Northumbeland. In 1836–38 he was listed as shepherd at Willowbog, England, among heads of households in Castleton Parish. In 1840 and 1841 he was at Kidd's Linn. In 1827 he married Margaret Little (1797–1841) in Westerkirk and their children were Helen (b.1827), William (b.1828), Mary (b.1830), John (b.1831), Janet (b.1833), Mina (b.1835), John (again, b.1837) and Agnes (b.1840). He secondly married Mina Turnbull (1810–93) and their children were Isabella (b.1847), Agnes (b.1847), Margaret (b.1848), Joan (b.1850), Adam (b.1853) and Robert (b.1856). He died in Bellingham. Ninian (1855–1941) son of shepherd William, he was born in Teviothead Parish. He worked as a shepherd in Northumberland. In 1879 he married Hannah Robson, daughter of Richard Brown and their children were Richard Brown, William and Annie Brown. Peter (1863–1956) son of William and Ann Kyle. He was a shepherd, like his father and brothers. He was at Wormscleuch in 1881. Richard (15th/16th C.) Sheriff in Edinburgh who confirmed in 1505/6 the summons served to George, Master of Angus for payment to Sir William Douglas of Cavers for breaking their marriage agreement. He is recorded as 'Richard Glendunwyne'. It is unclear how he was related to the other Glendinnings. Robert of that Ilk and Parton (b.1585) son of Alexander. He became heir in 1606 after his older half-brother died. He had extensive lands in Ewesdale and Eskdale. He married Margaret, daughter of William Maxwell, Lord of Terregles and was succeeded by his son John. Robert 'Hob' (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1622 as tenant in 'Logane' and also Hudshouse. Archibald in Fiddleton and John Graham in Thickside acted as cautioners for him, Lancie in Dryff and Andrew in Riddings. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen 'Hotson' and their son Thomas was baptised in 1645. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1718 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Deans. Robert (18th C.) married Violet Laidlaw in Roberton in 1729. Robert (18th C.) married Mary Helm in Roberton in 1744. Their children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included: John (b.1747); Margaret (b.1750); and James (b.1756). Robert (18th/19th C.) son of William from Howashiel in Hobkirk Parish. He is recorded in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire in 1797. Robert (b.c.1770s) servant at Orchard Cottage according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. He could be the Robert who married Isabel Murray in Cavers in 1799. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He was recorded at Stonedge on the ballot for the Militia in 1801. His children probably included Walter and Janet (b.1800) and Agnes (b.1802). Robert (19th C.) recorded as 'residenter' in Newcastleton in 1835, on a list of male heads of families. Robert Scott 'Scott' (1800–1900) born at Stintieknowe in Wilton Parish, he was farmer at Boghall. His father was Robert and his mother was Isabella Murray, who lived to the age of 96. He was listed among heads of households as a mason at Boghall in 1835 and then had his entry deleted in 1840, but was added as 'Glendinning Scott' in 1840 and 1841. He married Elizabeth Liddell (from Inveresk) in 1832, but they had no surviving children. In 1851 he was recorded as farmer of 55 acres, employing 2 men and in 1861 was still farming 55 acres, employing 1 labourer and with a female servant. In 1861 he donated boar tusks and other prehistoric animal remains found 'in a moss at Boghall'. He was still recorded at Boghall in 1868 and died at his farm. He was still visiting markets in Hawick within a few weeks of his death. When he died he was the oldest farmer on the Buccleuch estates, almost becoming a centenarian. He was said to have recalled the arrival of the news about Britain's victory at Waterloo in 1815 and told stories about French prisoners of war in Hawick. He also possessed a silver-mounted stick that was said to have come from Nelson's 'Victory' after the Battle of Trafalgar. Robert (19th C.) married Christian Scott in 1843, the marriage recorded in Hawick Parish. Their children, baptised in Roberton, included: James (b.1844); and Francis (b.1848). Robert (19th C.) tobacconist in Hawick. He donated to the Museum a 'volume of Parliamentary history, comprising twenty-one years of the reign of James I., and a collection of old newspapers, &c.' in 1876 and a 'collection of fossils from Penton Linn' in 1877. Scott (1967/8–) son of Rob, he also played for the Greens. He went to Trinity and Hawick High Schools and played for the P.S.A. and Y.M. He then played for Hawick R.F.C., as well as for the Borders and Edinburgh professional teams. He was additionally called up to represent the South and Scotland 'A'. His sons Glen, Gareth and Charlie also played rugby. Sir Simon (d.1388) son of Sir Adam of Glendonwyn. He was younger brother of the next

Sir Adam, and older brother of Matthew, who became Bishop of Glasgow. In 1368 he witnessed a charter at Cavers for lands being resigned by Thomas Baliol. He died at the Battle of Otterburn, fighting alongside his superior, the Earl of Douglas. Adam, William and Matthew, who were nephews of Bishop Matthew, may have been his sons. Sir Simon (c.1378–1437) of that Ilk, son of Sir Adam and nephew of Matthew, bishop of Glasgow. He succeeded after his elder brother John was killed at Homildon Hill. He held considerable lands, including those of Wauchope, Staplegordon and parts of Ewesdale. He also held the heriditary office of Bailie of the Regality of Eskdale. In 1398 he was one of the 'borowis' listed for establishing the Earl of Douglas' bounds on the West March. He was said to be a strong ally of the house of Douglas, helping to keep peace on the Border in the Earl's lands. He travelled to England several times in the early 1400s, and was a hostage for the Earl of Douglas in 1405. In 1406 he had a charter of the lands of Wythyn, Glencross and others in Roxburghshire. In 1407 he was witness to the charter for the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1418 he was Bailie to Archibald, Earl of Angus, infefted Melrose Abbey in the lands of Eskdalemuir. He was one of the witnesses to the charter of 1435 transferring lands within the Barony of Hawick from John Inglis to his son Thomas. He married Mary, daughter of Archibald, 4th Earl of Douglas and Margaret Stewart, daughter of King Robert III. He was succeeded by his son Sir Simon. Other children included: John, who settled in England; Bartholomew, who was Chaplain at Westerkirk, but deprived for non-residence; Janet, who married Gilbert Grierson, 1st of Lag; and Hawise. Sir Simon of that Ilk (d.bef. 1479) son of Sir Simon and Mary Douglas. He was said to be greatly esteemed by James II. He was hereditary Bailie of Dumfriesshire. In 1442 he witnessed a charter for lands in Ettrick held by Melrose Abbey. In 1443 he witnessed a confirming charter for William Cranston of Crailing. He witnessed a charter relating to lands in Ettrick in 1446. In 1449 he was one of the guarantors of the peace treaty with Henry VI of England, and he also guaranteed peace several times in the 1450s. He had a charter of income from Auld Roxburgh in 1450 and another charter of lands in Kirkudbright in 1458. He witnessed a charter for the Earl ofDouglas in 1449, another for James II in 1451 and was on an assize for the Douglases in Dumfries in 1451/2. In 1452 he witnessed the creation of the Barony of Kilmaurs for Alexander Cunningham, while on an expedition into England lef by James II. In 1454/5 he witnessed a document for the Kers of Altonburn. In 1455 he was mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls for Roxburghshire. He was at the Battle of Arkinholm in 1455, on the side of the Red Douglases, against his old chieftan the Earl of Douglas. In 1456 he witnessed a charter for Robert, Lord Maxwell and in 1458/9 had a charter for the Barony of Parton in Kirkcudbrightshire. He also served as Bailie of Eskdale in the late 1450s. In 1459 he was one of the witnesses to the regranting of the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas of Drumlanrig, made in Perth. By 1464 he was designated 'of Parton' when he was again a guarantor of a treaty with England. In 1465, as Lord of the Barony of Scraesburgh, he granted the west half of Scraesburgh and all of Hunthill to Robert Rutherford of Chatto and his wife Margaret. He firstly married Agnes Hepburn, secondly Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Alexander Lindsay, Earl of Crawford and thirdly Marjory Johnstone. In 1479 his widow Marjory complained that her husband's brother John has taken meal from her farms of 'Skraisburgh and Daldoran'. His children included: Simon, who pre-deceased him; John, who succeeded; Alexander, probably progenitor of the Drumrask branch; Archibald; Matthew, who held the lands of Whitslade, Glenkirk, etc.; and Margaret, who married Robert Rutherford of Chatto. It has been stated that he was killed at the Battle of Arkinholm in 1455 by Hugh Douglas, Earl of Ormond; however, he clearly died a decade later, with the death in 1455 perhaps being his son Simon. Simon (15th C.) listed among the Roxburghshire men given remission in 1488/9 for their support of the deceased James III. Most of the men appear to have been associated with Douglas of Cavers. It is unclear how he was related to the other Glendinnings. He may be the same Simon who produced a remission (along with William Grahamslaw) at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493. Simon of Megdale and Dalgleish (16th C.) recorded in 1540 as 'crovnar' (i.e. Coroner) of Eskdale. He acknowledged that he had received payment for Dalgleish (then in the Barony of Synton, through annexation) from his tenant John Scott of Thirlestane. He was probably son of John of Dalgleish. Simon (16th C.) resident of Selkirk. In 1579/70 it was stated by John Synton that William Scott 'alias William with the teyth' 'come furth' of his house in Shaws and stole 5 sheep belonging to '[blank] Coltarte'. Thomas (14th C.) recorded as witness to an instrument for the Hospital at Polmadie in about 1391. He was a 'scutifero' for Glasgow Diocese. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'Thomas Glendynwyn' when he witnessed a letter of acquittance for George Scott of Whames in 1510/1. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as 'Thomas Glendynnyng in Harrot' (i.e. Harwood) when he witnessed a Rulewater sasine in 1631. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Scott and their son John was baptised in 1652. The witnesses were 2 William Scotts. Thomas (17th C.) recorded in 1682 when he was fined 'for ane base abuse committ by him upon James Scott, present Baylea, in the hie streett qn. passing by wtout any ground of offence given'. He was to be fined and put in the stocks 'when he can be apprehended wtin the toune'. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Hoscoteshiel in 1756 and Outersideshiel in 1763 and 1766. He married Jean Heatlie in Roberton in 1747. His children included James (b.1748), Andrew (b.1750), Margaret (b.1752), Janet (b.1754), Thomas (b.1756), Walter (b.1759), Isobel (b.1761), Jean (b.1763), Agnes (b.1766) and Christian (b.1768). Perhaps the same Thomas was recorded at Outersideshiel on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (1751/2–1831) shepherd at Blackcleugh. He could be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for John Helm in 1802. In 1786 he married Mary Weir (d.1848). Their children included: Mary (b.1787); Robert (b.1789), who died aged 19; William (b.1795); Christian (1798–1881), who married Jessie Purdom; and Betty (b.1800). The witnesses in 1800 were Mr. George Pott and Thomas Elliot. He is buried at Teviothead. Thomas (b.1795) son of Adam, who came from near Newcastleton. His father served in the Royal Wagon Train, and obtained for him a cornetcy in the same corps when he was 18. He fought at the Battle of Waterloo. He became Lieutenant, and was transferred to the American (or 60th) Regiment, serving in Canada. Thomas (b.1845) son of Andrew and Jane Anderson. His father was shepherd at Craikhope, where he was born. He became a member of the county police force. Thomas (b.1853) son of shepherd William, he was born at Redmoss in Castleton Parish. He worked as a shepherd at various farms in Northumberland. In 1877 in Ewes he married Nicholas (1858–1930), daughter of William Murray and Agnes Bell. Their children were Ellen, William, Thomas and John James. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Scott and their son James was baptised in 1669. Walter (17th C.) resident of Coliforthill on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William was listed right after him and so surely related. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His unnamed child was baptised in 1690. Walter (17th/18th C.) married Janet Irvine in Hawick Parish in 1707. Walter (17th/18th C.) married Catherine Corbet in Hawick Parish in 1710. Their daughter Jean was baptised in 1712, with witnesses Walter Scott and Andrew Riddell in Goldielands. He is probably the Walter who witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott in Goldielands in 1712. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Glendinning and their children included Jean (b.1732). Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Lunn in 1771 (the surname transcribed as 'Sim'). Their children included: Helen (b.1772); and James (b.1773). The witnesses in 1772 were James (surely related to him) and William Elliot. He could be the Walter recorded as farmer at Hummelknowes Mill on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, and hence perhaps father of James, who was at Hummelknowes Mill on the 1801 Militia ballot. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Murray and their son Walter was baptised in 1784. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included Janet (b.1783), an unnamed child (b.1790), Henry (b.1792) and Isabel (b.1798). Walter (b.c.1785) roadman and labourer living at Lees in Wilton Parish. He was listed among heads of households in 1835–1841. His wife was Elizabeth. Walter (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Christian Paisley and their son Thomas Paisley was baptised in 1825. Walter (1849–1928) son of Adam, he was born at Tweedenhead in Castleton Parish. He was a shepherd like his father and several brothers. He lived in Northumberland, Langholm, Southdean, etc. In 1885 he married Jane (b.1859), daughter of James Turnbull and Margaret Ewart. He died at Hobkirk Manse Cottage. Their children were: Margaret (b.1885); Adam (1887–1917), who served with the K.O.S.B. and died in Israel; and James (b.1889), who died in infancy. William (1378/79–1423) nephew of Bishop Matthew. He was described as being of noble birth and 'knightly origin', suggesting he was a son of Sir Adam (or perhaps Sir Simon). In 1394 he was recorded being aged 15 when his uncle Matthew petitioned for a benefice for him (along with his brother Adam) when reaching age 18. He graduated B.A. in 1401/2 in Paris, under his kinsman (probably cousin) John Elwald, was M.A. by 1403, was then Scholar of Canon Law at Orleans, served as the Proctor of the Scottish Nation there in 1408 and 1409 and was Bachelor of Decreest by 1409 and Licentiate of Canon Law by 1422/3. He received the Church of Glencairn in Dumfriesshire in about 1401. He held a canonry and prebend of Petty in Moray some time before 1404. He exchanged this (with John de Hawick) for a canonry and prebend of Renfrew in Glasgow Diocese in 1405. He resigned Renfrew in 1409 when he was given the Archdeaconry of Glasgow, following the death of his kinsman Simon de Mandeville; however, there was a dispute with John Forester and others and he gave up his claim. He spent much of his life studying abroad, but may have visited Scotland in 1408, being given a passage of safe-conduct with his brother Simon to travel to England. By 1415/6 he held the prebends of Moffat in Glasgow and Oyne in Aberdeen, as well as canonries in the 2 dioceses, and by 1422/3 he had added a canonry of Tours in France. He was said to have had a house in France from at least 1421 and in that year served as an executor for William Douglas of Lugton. Archibald Douglas, Earl of Wigton, forcibly removed from his house some items from the deceased Douglas of Lugton. He is not recorded after 1422/3 and certainly died before 1426. William (14th/15th C.) priest of Glasgow Diocese. He was 'of noble race' and a student at Orleans in 1405 when he exchanged benefices with John de Hawick, resigning the Prebend of 'Pectyn and Brachlyn' in Moray and gaining the Prebend of Renfrew. He was made Archdeacon of Glasgow in 1409, being described as 'M.A. bachelor of canon law' and kinsman of Simon de Mandeville, whose death made the position vacant. He was Archdeacon until 1413. He was also recorded as Subdean of Glasgow in 1413/4. He was probably related to the noble Glendinnings. Perhaps the same William 'of Glendonwyne' was an executor of Sir William of Douglas, Lord Lugton, in 1421. He could be the brother of Sir Simon who had a passport for safe conduct in England in 1408. He may be the William 'Glendunwyn' recorded as 'Determinant' at St. Andrews in 1422 and 'Licentiate' in 1425. William (14th/15th C.) witness to a document for the Diocese of Glasgow in about 1465. He must have been associated with the Diocese, and was probably the William, Rector of Crawfordjohn, who witnessed other records about the same time. William (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. He was recorded being 'called Lord in the Cruikis' among men of Liddesdale and neighbouring areas. William (17th C.) resident of Coliforthill on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, probably related to Walter who was also listed there. It is possible he was the William who witnessed a baptism for tailor John Gledstains in Hawick Parish in 1707. William (17th C.) resident at Blackhope in Castleton Parish, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. William 'Will' (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. In 1778 he was at Nether Stanegarthside. He married Agnes (or 'Aggie') Johnson and their children included: James (b.1776); Robert (b.1778); Adam (b.1780); and William (b.1783). William (18th/19th C.) resident of Howashiel in Hobkirk Parish. His son Robert is recorded in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire in 1797. William (1760–1840) son of Adam and Agnes Crozier and brother of Lieut. Adam. He was shepherd at Thorlieshope and lived at Cauldronfoot. He then moved to Cooms in Tarras Water and died at Tweedenhead. He was at Cooms in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border'. He married Mary, daughter of Ninian Elliot and Janet Douglas. Their children include: Janet (1801–94), who married John Armstrong and died at Hermitage Cottage; Adam (1802–68), who married Margaret Robson and died at Tweedenhead; Agnes (1804–88), who married Adam Glendinning and died in Liverpool; Ninian (1806–84), who married Mina Turnbull; and William (1810–37), who married Judith Armstrong. William (b.c.1780) road contractor living at Ashkirk Mill in 1841. His wife was Elspeth and their children included John and Andrew, who were both masons. He could be the labourer at New Woll according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. He could be the William who married Euphan Brown and had children Walter (b.1827) and Nancy (b.1828) baptised in Ashkirk. William (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Toftholm. He was recorded as a head of household for the first (and only) time in 1836. William (b.1809/10) son of William, he was a tailor in Newcastleton, like his father. He was recorded in 1841 and 1851 at about 10 South Hermitage Street. He was absent from the 1861 census. William (1830–1911) eldest son of Adam and Margaret Robson, he was born at Boghall in Liddesdale. He worked as a shepherd, like his father and many other family members before him. He was described as 'the intelligent shepherd' at Wormscleuch in 1889 when the Berwickshire Naturalists' Club visited the area and he described the local flora. He married Anne (1830–1918), daughter of David Kyle, farmer at Broadlee in the Borthwick. Their children, born at Boghall, Wormscleuch and elsewhere in the Parish were: Adam (1855–1935), shepherd at Colterscleuch; David (b.1857), who died in infancy; David (1860–1942), shepherd at Hawthornside; William (b.1862), shepherd at Hundalee in Jedwater; Peter (1864–1956), shepherd at Wormscleuch and Gatehousecote; and Margaret (1867–1939). He died at Gatehousecote and his wife at Cleughhead, Southdean, and they are buried in Hobkirk Kirkyard. William (b.1862) son of William and Ann Kyle. Like many of his family members before him, he worked as a a shepherd. He lived in Castleton, Morebattle and Southdean Parishes. In 1897 he married Agnes (b.1871), daughter of William Hardie. Their children were: Hardie Bain (1900–54); William (b.1902); Margaret (b.1905.6); and Ann Kyle (1909–32), who married Robert Cromarty. William (1847–1921) resident of Teviothead. He married Mary Scott Anderson (1856–1938). Their daughter Wilhelmina (1891–1961) married George Watson Fraser. (formerly 'Glendonwyn'; other variants include 'Glendennan', 'Glendenwin', 'Glendevin', 'Glendinen', 'Glendinenn', 'Glendining', 'Glendinnyn', 'Glendinwin', 'Glendinwyn', 'Glendonewale', 'Glendonewing', 'Glendonewyn', 'Glendonnyng', 'Glendonowyn', 'Glendonwyne', 'Glendonyng', 'Glendowyne', 'Glendunning', 'Glendunvin', 'Glendunwyn', 'Glendynwyn' and 'Glendynwyne').

Glendivan (glen-di-vin) n. former lands in Ewesdale, near where the Glendivan Burn meets the Ewes Water. Along with Flask and Howgill it was described as a 10-merk land in 1550, when inherited by Robert, Lord Maxwell, by John, Lord Maxwell in 1604, by Robert, Lord Maxwell in 1619, and still held by John, Earl of Nithsdale in 1670 and William, Earl of Nithsdale in 1696. It is probably the 'Glendorane' (likely a transcription error) and 'Glendovan' listed among the Dumfriesshire possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653, 1661 and 1663. John Elliot was tenant there in 1688. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, when it consisted of 368 acres, bounded by Howgill, Sorbie, Kirkton and lands of the Laird of Arkleton. The map shows farmhouses on both sides of the burn, some parts of the farm on the other side of the Ewes Water and a small area of the farm owned by the Laird of Arkleton. John Irving and Robert Armstrong were there in 1797. William Irvine was farmer there in 1841, his son John taking over later. There were also Eastons living there in 1841. A little further up the burn from the farmhouse are remains of 2 settlements (not to be confused with Glendonwyn in Meggatdale; also sometimes 'Glendiven'; it is 'Glendowane' in 1550 and 'Glendovane' in about 1610; it is 'Glendouin' on Blaeu's 1654 map, 'Glendovein' and 'Glendowin' on Gordon's c.1650 maps, 'Glendoven' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and confusingly 'Glendonwyne' on Crawford's 1804 map).

Glendonwyn (glen-don-win) n. old form of Glendinning, the family name coming from lands in the upper Meggat valley.

Glendouglas (glen-dug-lis) n. lands in the Jed valley, off the A68 south of Jedburgh, at the northern extremity of Southdean Parish. The big house was once home of the factor for the Home family. There was a school there in the 19th century, which was formally in the Parish of Southdean; Thomas Turnbull was teacher there in the 1840s to 60s. There was later a private school there, which eventually became a state primary school and closed in 2005 (also written 'Glen Douglas').

Glengaber (glen-gā-bur) n. former lands in the Yarrow valley, once owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. There was a farmstead near Glengaber Hill, north of Yarrow village – 'To the Piel and Hathern I will repair, To Analshope and Glengeber, To Whitup and to Black-grain, To Commonside, and Milsanton-hill . . . ' [CWS] (there is another place of the same name at the top of the Meggat Reservoir and a third near Fingland in Dumfriesshire).

Glenhowe (glen-how) n. knitwear manufacturers at Buccleuch Mills on Green Lane in the 20th century.

Glenkerry (glen-ke-ree) n. farm on the Tima Water, where it is joined by the Glenkerry Burn, on the B709 south of Ettrick village. In 1415 the lands were swapped for those of Bellendean, between Scott of Buccleuch and the monks of Melrose. The lands are specifically referred to as 'Wynzehope called Glenkery, west of the water of Temay'. Scott of Tushielaw paid rental to Melrose Abbey for these lands in 1557 and the half-land there was still held by Scott of Tushielaw in 1620, when the reversion was resigned to him by Gilbert Eliott of Stobs. The lands were part of the Lordship of Melrose until at least 1670. Robert Grieve was there in 1724 when he married Jean Black from Hawick Parish. John Rutherford of Edgerston owned the lands in 1802 (it is 'Glenkery' in 1235/6 and 1415, 'Glenkeyrie' in 1564 and 'Glencarie' in 1620; 'Glenkyrry' and 'Glenkirry' are both marked on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Glenmac (glen-mak) n. knitwear company with a factory up the Cross Wynd and another part on Teviot Road, which had been Walter Wilson's. The factories closed in the 1980s when taken over by Dawson International. A smaller cashmere-based factory remained at Burnfoot, associated with Barrie, but carrying on the Glenmac brand.

Glennie (gle-nee) n. George (b.1816/7) resident engineer of the Hawick branch of the North British Railway, living in Melrose. In 1849 he was charged, along with an Edinburgh contractor, with culpable homicide in the deaths of 8 railway workers who perished when the Roxburgh Viaduct collapsed during its construction. It appears that the case was dismissed when a member of the jury took ill.

Glenny (gle-nee) n. Arthur Philip (1904–67) eldest son of Charles James. He took flying lessons, like his brother Charles James. The pair partnered with Lieut.-Col. G.L.P. Henderson to maufacturer the 'Henderson-Glenny Gadfly', but eventually he withdrew his financial support in the project. The plane was designed by K.N. Pearson and manufactured at Byfleet, Surrey in 1929. Charles James (1871–1961) second son of James. He was born at Deanfield in Hawick. He worked with the family firm of Wilson & Glenny, and for many years was Managing Director, retiring in 1936. He was known as a tennis player, recorded 1891–1908. He was Border Champion on more than one occasion, won the Scottish Northern Championship in 1894 and was runner-up in the Scottish Championship in 1904. He married Ilfra Showell and they had 4 children: Elsie Ilfra Muriel (1899–1989); Arthur Philip (1904–67); James Esme (1905–80), who was Cornet; and Eileen Ilfra Wilson. He died on his 90th birthday. Elizabeth nee Pringle (20th C.) daughter of John Douglas Pringle and Susan Roberts. She was Cornet's Lass to Riddell Innes in 1931, married him the following year. They moved to London to work for Pringle's, but her husband died in 1963 and she emigrated to New Zealand in the late 1960s, where she married Jim Glenny (who died in 1983) in 1970. George Crosfield (b.1878) youngest son of James and Georgina Waterhouse. He trained as a lawyer, and practiced for a while in Carlisle, in partnership with a Mr. Mawson. He later emigrated to New Zealand, where he became a successful sheep farmer. He married Catherine Anne ('Cathy') Pringle, daughter of Walter. Their children were James Douglas, Mary Catherine and Margaret. James (1836–1914) partner in Wilson & Glenny's, who gave the Town its Public Baths in 1912. He was born in Mill of Lethenty, Aberdeenshire, only son of John and Katherine Wilson. Like his parents he was a Quaker. He was the last private owner of the corn mill and farm of Lethenty in Aberdeenshire. In 1865 he moved to Blackburn in Lancashire, where he went into business as a cotton spinner, with his cousin, John William Cruickshank. Health problems forced him to sell his business and move abroad for the winter of 1873. He returned to England, to start a cement business in Chester. He was consequently briefly in a partnership with London concrete pioneer Charles Drake (who was responsible for the Congregational Manse), although the business, based at Thorlieshope, folded in 1875. But also in 1875 he was invited to become a partner in a tweed business with his uncle George Wilson and 2 cousins, Charles John and George Murray Wilson; thus was born Wilsons & Glenny. In 1891 it became a limited company under the name Wilson & Glenny, Ltd. In 1867 he married Georgina Waterhouse (1844–1923). They had 4 children: John (1868–1919), who worked for the family firm; Charles James (b.1871), who was for a long time Driector at Wilson & Glenny; Elizabeth (1875–90), who died while still at school; and George Crosfield (b.1878), who became a lawyer and moved to New Zealand. He had the house at Bucklands extended in the latter part of the 19th century and died there. James Esme 'Jimmy' (1905–80) son of Charles James. He was educated at St. Bees in Cumbria. He was Cornet in 1927 and lived at Deanfield. An early car enthusiast, his 1926 Delage still exists. He also flew aeroplanes, first taking lessons just months after being Cornet. Along with his brother Arthur and Lieut.-Col. G.L.P. Henderson they developed a low-cost nonoplane called the 'Henderson-Glenny Gadfly', but only 3 were ever built. He flew from Cramlington to Hawick in 1930 in a de Havilland DH60 Moth, with repairs in Hawick being carried out by Jimmie Guthrie. Also in 1930 he survived a crash after engine failure at R.A.F. Turnhouse in Edinburgh, his fellow crewman being killed. He had a small aircraft hangar built at Groundistone Heights and later moved to Ravenslea on Sunnyhill Road. He served in R.A.F. during WWII and afterwards worked for British South American Airways. He married in 1936 and died at his home in Portugal. John (1799–1844) from Kinmuck, Aberdeenshire, son of James and Elizabeth Wigham. The family can be traced back to John, who was born in 1641 at Mill of Colihill (also Aberdeenshire). In 1833 he married Katherine (1798–1863), daughter of William Wilson, Hawick manufacturer, and must have been a regular visitor to Hawick. Their children were: Elizabeth (1835–45); James (1836–1914), who became partner in Wilson & Glenny's; and Mary Ann (1838–1917), who married John Charles Wilson. John (1868–1919) eldest son of James. After leaving school he entered the family firm of Wilson & Glenny. However, he retired from the business while still quite young. He married Helen Borthwick and their children were: Barbara (b.1899); Katherine (b.1903); Phyllis Mary (b.1905); and Evelyn Georgina Wilson. Mary Ann (1838–1917) sister of manufacturer James, and son of John and Katherine Wilson, she was born in Mill of Lethenty, Aberdeenshire. She married Charles John Wilson, partner of her brother. Her children included Hawick Provost George Heron Wilson. She died at Deanfield.

Glenny's (gle-neez) n. former textile mill on Bath Street, which had previously been Wulson an Glenny's. The main factory suffered a massive fire in 1959, the work of an arsonist, exacerbated by the preceding hot summer and a century of oil and grease. 350 people were put out of work, the Town's electricity supply was temporarily cut off and it was said that the heat could be felt a mile away. The factory was rebuilt a couple of years later. A carved stone was saved from the old factory and inscribed with the dates '1795–1959' by Gordon Scott. After the newer building was also demolished the stone ended up in a skip in Galashiels, but was eventually returned and installed in the Old Baths in 2012.

Glen Penango Burn (glen-pe-nang-gō-burn) n. stream forming the upper part of the Mosspaul Burn, rising on Carlin Tooth and flowing through Penangus Hope. In 1873 it is described that an old local man stated that 'the glen in front of the house is called the Glenpeneegu'.

Glenpyet (glen-pI-i') n. former name for lands in the Yarrow valley. They were Crown lands in the late 15th century, split into 3 steadings, the middle one being leased to Thomas Dickson of Ormiston in 1479. In the 1480s they were leased by Robert Lauder, William Inglis and Thomas Dickson. The Middlestead of Glenpyet was referred to as 'Wallacehil' in 1486. They were still Crown lands in 1502 when half was held by David Inglis. They were feued by the Murrays in the early and late 16th century. In 1541 they were valued at £24. They belonged to the Scotts of Buccleuch from at least the 16th century. They are recorded as 'Glenpoyt' in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, when James Brewhouse was tenant. Sir Walter owed 'males' for these lands to his half-brother Gideon Murray. Chistian Gray, widow of James Brewhouse was removed as tenant in 1581. 'Jedion Murray of Glenpint' is among the 180 or so followers of Sir James Johnstone who had a 'respite' in 1594 for their role at Dryfe Sands the year before; he is the same man later referred to as Sir Gideon of Elibank (it is 'Glenpoyte' in 1456, 'Glenpiot' in 1468, 'Glenpoite' in 1479 and 1489, 'Glenpot' in 1541, 'Glenpoit' in 1575/6, 'Glenpoyt' in 1581 and 'Glenpoytte' in 1594).

Glenrauchan (glen-raw-chin) n. former name for lands in Ewesdale. It is listed among the lands in Ewesdale held by Alexander, Lord Home in 1509/10. Archie Scott from there was declared a fugitive in 1606. It was listed among the lands in the Lordship confirmed to Alexander Earl of Home in about 1610. The lands were listed in 1663 among those owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch in the Lordship of Ewesdale. It may correspond to the modern Glenrief (it is 'Glenrauchane' in 1506 and 1509/10, 'Glenrauchan' in about 1610 and 'Glenrichen' in 1663; it is probably the 'Glegachan' marked near Eweslees on Blaeu's 1654 map).

glent (glen', glent) v., arch. to glint, gleam – ''Twas but a sternie glentin' On a pool that night' [JoHa], 'And though ambition whiles may glent On us a wee . . . ' [JoHa], 'Nae star was glentin' i' the lift; The North sent forth a blendin' drift' [RDW], 'Yonder's David wi' his een glentin' like brass tackets in his heid' [RMi], to glance sidelong, squint – 'An' whyles ne'er a word he can find oot to say, For glentin' and glimin' at Meggie M'Givelry' [JoHa], '. . . he whus'les on the dowgs, glentin' a' the time his restless eye roond him, syne at the ferns' [BCM1881], pp., poet. gleamed, glinted – 'His face was like a burning coal, His eyn, like candles glent' [JTe], n., arch. a glance – 'A glent o' his eie' [GW], a glint, gleam – 'The glent o' siller' [GW].

Glenteviot Park Lodge (glen-teev-yi'pawrk-loj) n. house south of Hassendeanburn, hear the Teviot. It operated as a small hotel until 2007 and then became a private house.

Glenvoran (glen-vō-rin) n. former lands within Ewesdale, between Eweslees and Fiddleton. The lands held the special feudal status of 'free tenandrie' and may have been connected with the lands at 'Ewes Doors'. There was once a fortified house there, with 'Hobbie of Glenvore' marked on Sandison's c.1590 map and also marked on Gordon's c.1650 map just north of Fiddleton. It is listed among the lands in Ewesdale held by Alexander, Lord Home in 1509/10. It was among a set of lands in the Ewes valley that were transferred from Simon Armstrong to George, Lord Home in 1525. This was confirmed when the King revoked a set of charters relating to lands of the Homes in 1535, including this and several other parts of Ewesdale. 'Hobbe of Glenvorane', an Elliot, is also recorded. 'Archie Ellot, sone to Ringanis Will Ellot the portar in Glenvoren' is recorded in 1579. Probably the same Archie Elliot 'of Glenworren' signed the 1584 bond of assurance with the English Wardens; his name was first among the Elliots of Ewesdale, suggesting some prominence of Glenvoran at that time. Robert Elliot from there was recorded in 1590 and declared a fugitive in 1606. The lands were listed in 1663 among those owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch in the Lordship of Ewesdale. It may have been near the modern cottage of Fiddleton Bankend where sometime around 1900 a 'piece of very substantial masonry' was found while digging a little to the west. There was formerly a mill there (also written 'Glenvorane', 'Glenvoren', etc.; it is 'Glenvorane' in 1506, 1535 and 1588/9 and 'Glenvorrane' about 1610; it is marked 'Glenvoran' on Gordon's c.1650 map and 'Glenvorann' on Blaeu's 1654 map).

Glesci (glez-ki) n. a variant of Glesgi – 'Well, Aw got back ti the auld country right enough after a favourable passage and landed in Glesgae' [JEDM], 'Some ministers in Glesca thocht it was a 'subtle peril'. Hab can hardly wait' [DH] (also spelled 'Glesca' and 'Glescae').

Glesgi (glez-gi) n. Glasgow, Scotlands largest city, approximately 80 miles from Hawick. Population (1991) 662,954. Hawick, and the rest of Peeblesshire, Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire belonged to the Episcopal Church Diocese of Glasgow from sometime around 1100 until transferred to Edinburgh in 1888. For a long time Teviotdale was one of the rural deaneries of the Diocese. In the 1960s Hawick (like many other towns) made an agreement to build housing for familes from the Glasgow area, to solve a problem with the over-expansion of Glasgow, known as the 'Overspill Programme' – 'Next hail thee, Glasgow! Three times hail! To flourish mays't thou never fail, But ever nobly cock thy crest As the metropolis of the West' [AS] (also spelled 'Glesgae'; see also Glesci; Teries often speak about going 'throwe ti Glesgi').

Glesgi (glez-gi) n. (Glasgow) James (17th/18th C.) mentioned in the Hawick Parish Records in the early 1720s when his daughter was given for poor relief 'a pair of proverbs'. Additionally he was given money for 'hous rent, he promised he would trubble us no more'. However, his name occurs regularly on the list of those receiving porr relief until finally a payment was made 'for a Cofine for James Glasgow'. Additionally there is the entry 'To J. Glasgow's wife to cast her Peatts . . . 0 12 0'. John (17th C.) from Cavers Parish. He was ordered to be transported to America in 1679 for being a Covenanter, and escaped the shipwreck in the Orkneys, which killed about 200 men. William (17th C.) presumably related to John, he was also a banished Covenanter who escaped from the 1679 shipwreck. However, most of those who survived were recaptured and sold as slaves in Jamaica or New Jersey. William (17th C.) tenant in Hummelknowes on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the William whose daughter Margaret was baptised in Hawick in 1692.

Glesgi Border Coonties Association (glez-gi-bōr-der-koon-teez-aw-sō-see-ā-shun) n. organisation founded in Glasgow to encourage interaction among and offer help to former Borderers, and to give education prizes. It was formed in 1872 when the Roxburghshire and Berwickshire organisations merged. An earlier model was the Tweedside Society, started in 1813, while the Roxburghshire Association was formed in 1857. The association gained new life in about 1885 and was most active in the late 19th and early 20th centuries, with 2 meetings per week. As well as a Literary Society, there were also Cricket, Fishing, Whist and Draughts Clubs. A bursary, named after John Leyden, was established at Glasgow University.

Goldielands (gōl-dee-lindz) n. farm with tower, set in a prominent position overlooking the confluence of the Borthwick with the Teviot. The lands were possessed by the Scotts of Buccleuch since 1446, when they exchanged half of Branxholme and neighbouring lands with Inglis of Manor for some in Lanarkshire. William, son of William Scott of Goldielands was recorded in 1493 and George Scott in Goldielands in 1510. The 'ditch of Goldielands' formed part of the northern boundary of the Common in the 1537 charter. In late 1548 the 'manis of the landis of Goldland' are among those that were raided and burned by a group of Kers, Englishmen and others, complained about in a summons by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme; 200 'thraves' of barley, along with corn cattle and other goods were lost. The farm was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch; at that time it consisted of 254 acres, bounded by Crumhaugh, Hawick Common, Alton Croft, Fenwick and the River Teviot, and with a small part on the north side of the Teviot. The Scotts of Goldielands were an offshoot of the Scotts of Branxholme, who were important in the Hawick area for several generations. The tower was probably built mostly in the 16th century, and is now a ruin on the farm. Probably its most famous resident was the first Laird, Walter Scott 'the Laird's Wat', who took part in the Raid of the Redeswire and whose son Walter was probably at the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596 and was a powerful leader of the whole Scott clan during times of minority or absence of the Laird of Buccleuch; his tombstone is preserved in the Museum, and was part of a family vault located below the steeple in the northern aisle of the present St. Mary's Kirk (later used as the furnace chamber). Tradition says that the last Laird was hanged from his own gateway for stealing cattle; however, there is no evidence of this. Walter Scott of Goldielands' lands in Hawick Parish were valued at £566 13s 4d in 1643. The family history in the 17th century is murky, but we are helped through the existence of a complaint made in 1672, preserved in the Melrose Regality records. The Scotts of Goldielands eventually failed to have a male heir, and their lands were inherited by the Scotts of Crumhaugh, except for the estate of Goldielands itself, which returned to the Scotts of Buccleuch. In 1627 the farm is described as a 'neuer payit ferme' (i.e. never having been rented to a tenant), estimated to pay '100 lbs. in stok, parsonage 3 bolls, vicarage 7 lbs. 10 sh.' It has been a tenanted farm owned by the Duke of Buccleuch since the mid-1600s. William Lyne was a tenant there in 1642. There were Elliots living there in the 18th and 19th centuries. Andrew Riddell was there in at least 1702–08. John Elliot was tenant there in 1713. In 1706 the title Baron of Goldielands was created (among others) for Henry, son of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch. A plantation to the west of the tower is probably quite old, and is shown clearly on the 1718 drawing. Andrew Leithead was a workman there in 1723. John Elliot was still recorded there in 1742. In 1788 the estate of Scott of Goldielands was recorded as having been valued at £400, and by then owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. James Elliot (schoolmaster of Wilton) lived there when he was overseer of works for the Duke of Buccleuch from at least about 1810 to the early 1840s. A 'large stone celt' found near there was donated to the Museum in 1858. There were repairs made to help preserve the tower in about 1875 – 'He pass'd the Peel of Goldiland, And cross'd old Borthwick's roaring strand' [SWS], 'Does the blaze rise on Goldielands? Walter of Branxholm grasps his brand, And calls upon his gallant band – 'For Hawick ride' . . . ' [WiS], 'But to the story that's afloat, I'll tell it while 'tis green: Near Goldielands, within the wood, A heidless man was seen' [TCh], 'O, I maun gang doon by Gowdlands To'er, Where the Teviot wails i' the wintry rain . . . ' [FGS], 'Ever more dear were the echoes are ringing Out through the green glades by Goldilands' wall; Where the sheep bleat to the sound of your going, In the lush pastures by fair Branxholm hall' [WL], 'And bursting ranks of doves rise heavenward From Goldielands' high tow'ring stone' [IWS] (also spelled variously 'Gaudilands', 'Goldiland', 'Goldilands', 'Goudielands', 'Gowdilands', 'Gowdielands', etc.; the name first appears in the mid-15th century, being 'Goldilandis' in 1435 and 'Goldylandis' in 1446 and 1493; it is 'Goldelandis' in 1510, 'Goldland' in 1549, 'Gordelandis', 'Gorlandis' and 'Goldelandis' in 1574, 'Goldelands' in 1574 and 1575, 'Gowdelandis' in 1577, 'Goldelandis' in 1574, 1580 and 1581, 'Goldelande' in 1579, 'Goldelandis' in 1583/4, 'Gaudelandis' in 1586, 'Gouldielandis' in 1592, 'Goldielandis' in 1593 and 'Gaudylandis' in 1594, and from 1596 tends to begin with the Scots 'Gowd' rather than 'Gold', e.g. 'Goudilandis' in 1596, 'Gouldielandis' in 1610, 'Gowldilands' and 'Goudilands' in 1627, 'Gowdielands' in 1643, 'Gowdilandis' in 1646, 'Goldielandis' in 1648, 'Gawdilands' and 'Gaudiland' in 1649, 'Gaudilands' in 1650, 'Gowdielaw' in 1655, 'Gowdilands' in 1673, 'Gowddielands' in 1682, 'Goudilands' in 1690 and 'Goudilans' in 1698; it is on Gordon's c.1650 maps as 'Gaudielands' and 'Gaudylands', Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Gaudylands', de Wit's c.1680 map as 'Gaudylands' and Roy's c.1750 map as 'Gold Lands'; the origin might be either from yellow flowers once growing there, perhaps from the richness of the soil or from the Old English personal name 'Golda'; there is no reason to believe the Victorian view that it was once the residence of the 'Goldie' family).

Goldielands Cottage (gōl-dee-lindz-ko'-eej) n. cottage on the farm of Goldielands. There were Armstrongs there in the latter part of the 19th century.

Goldielands Toor (gōl-dee-lindz-toor) n. tower on the farm of Goldielands. It is a typical 16th century peel tower, built in a useful location as a watch-tower to protect Branxholme. The tower is approximately 10 × 7 m, with 5 stories, and formerly had a parapet walkway. In lay-out and construction, it is similar to Burnhead Tower, and was the model for Westburnflat Tower in Sir Walter Scott's 'Black Dwarf'. There is a view in Grose's 'Antiquities of Scotland' from 1789, showing the tower in good condition and with an adjacent barmkin, although the details may not be factually accurate; it shows a walled enclosure with the large tower (along with a couple of small outbuildings) in the south-west corner, and another tower in the south-east corner. There is now no evidence of the wall, although a mound may indicate where the second tower stood. The towers may have once been called 'Speed o fit' and 'Tranty fit', who were also said to be 2 witches who lived there. The main tower is now a fairly well preserved ruin on the farm of the same name, attached to more modern farm buildings. Many original features survive, such as fireplaces, doorways, corbels and an aumbry. Tom Scott's painting of the tower is in the Museum. It is a grade B listed building.

goldilocks (gōl-dee-loks) n. the wood crowfoot, Ranunculus auricomus – '. . . appears its sister species the Galdilocks (R. Auricomus) with tender stem, elegant leaves, and large golden blossoms' [JAHM] ('galdilocks' is probably a misprint).

Golf Course Park (g/=olf-k/=ors-pawrk) n. name for the field lying adjacent to the golf course, just to the east of St. Leonards farm. It is part of Hawick Common.

goller (go-lur) n., arch. a deep, loud growl, a stifled howl, suppressed yell, v., arch. to emit a gurgling noise, to speak passionately and inarticulately, (of a dog) to growl violently.

gollerin (go-lur-in) n., arch. a gurgling sound, particularly that made by a strangled animal (noted by J. Jamieson).

gollimer (go-l-mur) n., arch. a guzzler, voracious eater (noted by J. Jamieson; cf. gull-maw).

gome (gōm) n., arch. a man (obscure; noted by J. Jamieson).

gomeril (go-me-rul) n., arch. a stupid person, bumptious person, fool – 'They said he was nought but a gomerel; for this is the word which he himself employed when he told me these things . . . ' [HSR] (also spelled 'gomerel'; cf. gamphrel).

go'n (gōn) interj., contr. go on, used to express disbelief or encouragement – 'G'on! = go on!' [ECS] (also written 'g'on').

gonial (gō-nee-ul, gōn-yul) n., arch. a sheep that has died of disease or other reason other than slaughter, 'braxy' mutton – 'I do not mean the best of you to want meal a week or twa, you have plenty of gonyell and green kail . . . ' [WSB], a dolt, a loud, empty-headed person (also spelled 'gonyel', 'gonyell' and variants).

the Gonial Blast (thu-gō-nee-ul-blawst) n. severe snowstorm in southern Scotland in early 1794, described by the Ettrick Shepherd (although there is some confusion over whether this is 1794 or 1795). Thousands of sheep were killed, particularly in Eskdale, but also in many other areas. Around 20 shepherds also perished, including William Scott at Priesthaughshiel and one at Sorbietrees. There is also a detailed description by Rev. William Brown of Eskdalemuir, including the progression of the weather from 23rd January onwards, with the fatal day being the 25th; he lists shepherds who perished in neighbouring parishes, and tallies the dead sheep in Eskdalemuir to over 4,000. It was said that many sheep were also drowned in the sudden thaw that followed the massive amounts of snow (the name derives from gonial, because of the amount of mutton available afterwards; also spelled 'Goniel').

Gonnella (go-ne-lu) n. Giocondo 'George', 'Telio' (19th/20th C.) from Barga in Lucca Province, Tuscany, Italy. His nickname may have come from 'Tiglio', which is just to the east of Barga. He lived at 6 Dickson Street and ran Telio's chip shop. His wife was Mary and their children were: Anna Leah, who married Andrew Wilkinson; and Giovanni 'Jock', who married Olive Graham. He died while on a return visit to Barga – 'A cannie fella, real name Gonnella, The chips he made were nice, Tae gaun wi a haggis slice' [IWL].

gonterniblicks (gon-tur-ni-bliks) interj., arch. an exclamation of gladness (noted by J. Jamieson, who also gives 'gonternickles').

gontrins (gon-trinz) interj., arch. exclamation of joyous admiration – 'My gontrans, lass, ye soon will fin' A wilfu' man maun hae his way' [HSR] (also 'gontrans'; specifically used in Lilliesleaf).

Goodbrand (good-brawnd) n. Rev. Stephen (1921–97) born in Aberdeen, son of William Clow Knight, he was educated in Aberdeen. During WWII he served in India and the Far East. He graduated M.A. from Aberdeen University in 1949. He was student assistant minister at Banchory Ternan East 1949–51 and at Aberdeen West of St. Nicholas 1951–52. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Aberdeen in 1952 and became 'locum tenens' at St. Andrew's Scot Kirk in Colombo Ceylon 1952–53. He was ordained as minister at Hobkirk in 1954, tking on responsibility for Southdean in 1973 and remaining until 1982. In 1951 he married Mary (b.1926), daughter of George Wilson Greenshields and Isabella Wilson Blackwood. Their children were Anne Elizabeth (b.1952) and Catherine Mary (b.1954).

Goodere (good-er) n. Rev. Wilfred Scott (1888–1963) son of Albert and Elizabeth Scott, he was educated at Lincoln Cathedral Choir School and Glasgow University. He was licensed by Lanark Presbytery in 1923, was assistant minister at Dumfries St. Michael's and was ordained as minister at Flotta in 1924. He moved to Tomintoul in 1927 and moved again to Newcastleton in 1943, but resigned in 1946. In 1924 he married Minnie Mitchell, daughter of James Arthur Gray, minister in Lesmahagow.

Goodfellow (good-fe-lō, -li) n. Adam (18th C.) married Janet Kersel in 1788, the marriage recorded in both Wilton and Roberton Parishes. He may be the Adam whose child died in Hawick in 1812. Adam (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. His children included: Robert (b.1795) and Robert (again, b.1796). Alexander (b.c.1770s) servant at Dykes according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. Perhaps the same Alexander was servant at Mackside in Southdean Parish on the 1801 Militia ballot. He could be the son of George and Elizabeth Dryden baptised in Wilton in 1779. Alexander Scott (1807–51) son of Hugh and Elspeth Scott. He succeeded his father as tenant at Trow Mill and was later farmer at Headshaw. He was listed as miller at Trow Mills in Slater's 1852 directory. In 1835 he married Isabella, daughter of Alexander Forrest. Their children, baptised in Ashkirk, were: Margaret (b.1836); Hugh (b.1838), who died in Argentina; Alexander Forrest (b.1840), Mill Master at Trow Mill; John (b.1842), who emigrated to Canada and then Washington State; William Forrest (b.1844), perhaps also died in Argentina; Elspeth Scott (b.1846), who married Thomas Laidlaw; Archibald; and Andrew, who died in infancy. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He is probably the Andrew who married Jean Telfer in Roberton in 1718. He was at Craik in 1721, 1723, 1725, 1728 and 1733. His children included: John (b.1719); George (b.1721); Janet (b.1723); Helen (b.1725); an unnamed son (b.1728); Bessie (b.1730); and an unnamed daughter (b.1733). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Milsington in 1764 and Girnwood in 1766. He married Ann Scott in Roberton in 1760. Their children included Andrew (b.1764), Gideon (b.1766) and John (b.1769). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His daughter Jane was baptised in 1772. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Broadlee in 1793. He married Euphan Cavers in Roberton in 1792 and their children included Janet (b.1793); and Andrew (b.1796). He may be the same Andrew who married Mary Hobkirk in 1799. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Greenbank in 1800. He married Mary Hobkirk in 1799 and their children included: Margaret (b.1800); William (b.1802); and John (b.1804). Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Elizabeth Armstrong and their children included James (b.1822). Andrew (c.1794–1852) probably son of Robert and Helen Lies. In 1818 he married Isobel Young in Lilliesleaf. Their children born in Lilliesleaf include Robert (b.1819), William (b.1821) and Archibald (b.1823). He emigrated to Ontario, Canada. Andrew (1807–85) son of Thomas and Isabella Renwick. He started his working life making sheep drains for Mr. Pringle at Hyndlee. He then moved to the Bairnkine, farmed Swinnie Bar briefly, then worked under James Weaver, forester to the Marquess of Lothian. In 1841 he was recorded as a wood forester, living at Stewartfield Lodge. He became forester at Hartrigge in 1846, living at the Wildcatgate. In 1846 he married Jane Mitchell, from Lanton and she died in 1892. Their children included: Jean; John; Jane and Andrew, who became forester at Abbotrule. He was known for his collection of curiously shaped stones (which after his death were largely bought by Mr. Scott of Queen Mary's House, Jedburgh). Andrew (19th C.) married Margaret Lunn in Hobkirk Parish in 1835. Andrew (b.1849) son of Andrew and Jane

Mitchell. He was forester on the Abbotrule estate from 1878. He married Janet Smail from Morebattle in 1873. Archibald (17th C.) tenant in 'Tuilshope' (presumably Twislehope) in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Archibald (17th/18th C.) from Cumberland, he was probably son of Hector, the family home being at Redsyke farm in Bewcastle Parish. He was a shepherd at Skelfhill. He may have married Mary Scott, daughter of the farmer at Falnash. His son was William, farmer at Adderstonelee. He may have returned to the Bewcastle area as an old man to live with his eldest son Hector, whose family lived there for several more generations. He also had a daughter (probably Jean) who married a Scott and had sons William (mason at Falnash Mill) and Robert (shepherd at Merrylaw). Archibald (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Burnfoot Mill in 1744 and Wester Burnfoot in 1747. He married Euphan Minto in Minto Parish in 1737. Their children, baptised in Wilton, included: Janet (b.1737); William (b.1741); Elizabeth (b.1744); and Walter (b.1747). The witnesses in 1744 were John and William Scott and in 1747 were Walter Scott and James Dryden. Archibald (b.1727) born in Hawick, son of William and Helen (or Isobel) Scott. He married Elizabeth 'Betty' Irvine. Their children included: baker Hugh (1767–1847); William (b.1752), baptised in Cavers; and Isabel, who died in Hawick in 1804. He may be the Archibald who, along with John, witnessed a baptism for Walter Douglas and Christian Goodfellow in 1762. George (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His children included William (b.1743), James (b.1744), Margaret (b.1746) and William (again, b.1749). George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Elizabeth Dryden in 1759 and their children included: James (b.1760); Adam (b.1764); George (b.1766); Alison (b.1769); Robert (b.1772); William (b.1774); and Alexander (b.1779). A child of his died in Wilton in 1764. In 1787 he witnessed a baptism for Thomas Irvine of Newton. He may be the Archibald who died in Wilton in 1793. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His daughter Elizabeth was baptised in 1798. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf and Ashkirk Parishes. He married Christian Stoddart and their children included: Agnes (b.1800); Ann (b.1802); Walter (b.1805); Jess (b.1808); James (b.1812); and Robert (b.1816). The first 4 children were baptised in Lilliesleaf and the later 2 in Ashkirk. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included Henry (b.1810) and Christopher (b.1812). George (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Elizabeth ('Betty') Morton in Bedrule in 1831 and their children included: Catherine (b.1832); Margaret (b.1834); and George (b.1836). George (19th C.) married Margaret Noble in Cavers Parish in 1834. George (19th C.) married Elizabeth Aikman in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1846. Rev. George (1861–1942) born in Hawick, son of John McDougall and Elizabeth Anderson. He was educated at Teviot Grove Academy, Glasgow University and United Presbyterian College, Edinburgh. He was licensed by the United Presbyterian Presbytery of Glasgow in 1889 and was assistant at Penruddock in Cumberland and at Stirling Allan Park. He was ordained as minister of Newarthill Church, in the Anti-burgher Presbytery of Hamilton, in 1891. He served with the Y.M.C.A. in France during WWI. He retired in 1923, then became minister at Urr in 1927. In 1905 he married Margaret Jane Nicol. He wrote 'History of Newarthill Church, Glasgow' and 'Christ's Beloved, Plea for Humility, The Finger of God'. George Lamont (1951–) local songwriter and musician, great-grandson of John Cumming. Born in Hawick and brought up at the Prefabs, he works as a gas engineer. He is the front man for the 'G.L.G. band', and was previously in the bands 'Nemesis' and 'Bogard'. An acoustic guitar player, he is also a member of the Tennessee Songwriter's Association. He wrote the songs 'Hawick Stands Alone', and 'We are the Heart of Hawick'. Gideon (18th/19th C.) originally from Roberton Parish, he is recorded living at Greenbank in 1793 and Whithope in 1795 and 1798. He married Betty Elliot in Roberton Parish in 1789 or 1790. Their children included: Andrew (b.1792); Jane (b.1795), who married John Elliot; James (b.1798); and Gideon (b.1801). Hector (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers and Hobkirk Parishes. His children included: Janet (b.1719), baptised in Cavers; and Elizabeth (b.1726), baptised in Hobkirk. Hugh (1767–1847) prominent baker in Hawick. He was son of Archibald and Elizabeth Irvine. His baker's shop was at the bottom corner of the Howegate (No. 1, on the Silver Street corner). He also milled flour for a while at Trow Mill and farmed at Greensidehall and Broomiebrae. He was said to be known for his intellect and conversation. He was said to have been excommunicated from the Green Kirk over a trifling matter, a decision which the minister (Rev. Dr. John Young) did not agree with – he stated 'Doctor, yere a decent man, an' aw dinna blame you for this; thae lang nebbet elders o' yours are a bonny set; they're placed there for the vera purpose o keepin' the members o' yere flock frae hell; and yet they've thrawn me owre to the deevil wi' as little compunction as aw wad fling a loaf into the oven; but well see whae comes to maist skaith'. He was later a keen attender of Wilton Kirk. He remarked about the new minister (Rev. Stevenson), 'Oh, he has plenty o' guid rough stuff in him, and when he comes to a difficulty he dashes in a trowelfu' o' lime, and goes on again'. The death of his sister Isabel is recorded in Hawick in 1804. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. In 1793 he married Elizabeth (or Elspeth or Euphemia or 'Epie'), daughter of John Scott; the marriage was recorded in both Hawick and Ashkirk Parishes. Their children were: John (1798–1869), Cornet, Bailie and grocer; William (1806–90), baker; Alexander, miller at Trow Mill; Betty(d.1801) and Hugh (d.1805), who died in infancy; Archibald (d.1811); and Andrew (d.1811). Hugh (d.1829) may also have been his child. Hugh (b.1838/9) born in Ashkirk Parish, eldest son of Alexander. He was farmer at Trow Mill. He is listed there in 1861 (at the age of 22) as mill master, farmer of 50 acres and employer of 7 people. He was living with his brothers Alexander, William and Archibald and his sister Elspeth. He was there later in the 1860s, but must have emigrated, since he died in Argentina, and his brother Alexander took over at Trow Mill. Isabel (17th C.) resident of Orchard on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Shiel and their children included: Archibald (b.1643); Robert (b.1651); and David (b.1655). James (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Margaret Wright and their children included: Margaret (b.1680); and John (b.1683). James (17th C.) resident of 'Dodburne in Kirkton Parioch' according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) resident at Wester Heap according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. James (17th/18th C.) recorded at Effledge in 1710. He was surely related to the earlier James from Dodburn. His children baptised in Kirkton Parish included Janet (b.1708) and James (b.1710). He could also be the James whose children baptised in Cavers Parish included John (b.1703) and William (b.1705). James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His daughter Isobel was baptised in 1718. He may be the James whose marriage is recorded in Kirkton in 1714 (with no wife's name given). James (18th C.) servant in Goldielands when he married Janet Hogg, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes in 1728. Their son George was born in Hawick in 1731. James (18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His son James was baptised in 1738. James (18th C.) farmer at Bedrule according to the 1785–94 Horse Tax Rolls. Bailie James (18th/19th C.) son of Robert and brother of Robert and John. He was a joiner in Hawick. He was a Bailie in the 1810s and served as Senior Bailie in 1821; thereafter he was always known as 'Bailie Goodfellow'. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He is probably the wright on the Back Row, listed on Pigot's 1825/6 directory and the man whose property is marked on Wood's 1824 map in about the middle of the right side of Drumlanrig Square. He was chairman of the meeting when Lord Brougham visited Hawick in 1833. He was the 12th listed member of the Archæological Society. His niece Agnes (daughter of John) married Walter Haddon. He married Magdalene (or Margaret) Scott. Their children included: Margaret (1792–1826), who married George Buckham; and Agnes (b.1796), who married Thomas Young, but died aged 20. The witnesses in 1792 and 1796 were the whole congregation. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Christian Hobart and their children included Walter (b.1805) and Jess (a son, b.1808). James (18th/19th C.) blacksmith at the Sandbed, recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. James (19th C.) married Margaret Thorburn in Hobkirk Parish in 1827. James (b.1802/3) born in Ashkirk Parish, he was living at Muirhouselaw in 1841 and in Lilliesleaf in 1851 and 1861. In 1861 he was described as 'Agricultural Labourer and Grocer'. He married Jessie, daughter of John Fairgrieve, carrier from Selkirk. Their children (baptised in Lilliesleaf Parish) included: George (b.1839); Elizabeth (b.1842); John (b.1845); Christina (b.1849); Helen (b.1851); Janet (b.c.1855); and James (b.c.1859). James (b.1824/5) born in Edinburgh, he was a 'Woollen cloth Dresser' on Wilton Place in 1851 and a 'Woollen Cloth Finisher' on Dickson Street in 1861. His wife was Isabella from Stow and their children included Elizabeth (or 'Betsy'), Mary, Isabella and George. Perhaps the same James from Hawick had 2 poems published in 'Living Bards of the Border' (1859), namely 'The Sister Slaves' and 'Flowers'. Janet (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In about 1784 she was removed from the Poor Roll after refusing to allow an inventory of her possessions to be made. Janet (19th C.) listed as a milliner or dressmaker at Wilton Place in Slater's 1852 directory. John (17th C.) Hawick resident who married Janet Scott. Their son John was baptised in 1646. John (17th C.) Hawick resident who married Janet Glendinning. Their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1652. John (17th C.) Hawick resident who married Manie Miller. Their son William was baptised in 1670. John (17th C.) shepherd at Milsington according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the John whose daughter Jean was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1686. John (17th C.) resident of Briery Yards according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th/18th C.) tenant at Southfield. He was fined in 1677 for 'abusseing of the marches of Hawicke marching betuixt John Hardie and him'. He rented half the farm of Over Southfield from the Duchess of Buccleuch in at least the period 1690–96. He was also tenant farmer at Over Southfield, according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably the John who witnessed baptisms in 1696 for Robert Scott in Newbigging and for James Story. He and his son William were joint tenants of Southfield around 1710 (as attested in evidence given regarding the state of Hawick's Common in 1767). He was listed as being at 'Southside' [probably a transcription error] in 1713 when he witnessed a birth at Branxholmtown. Also in 1713 he and his son William 'in over Southfield' witnessed a baptism for William Martin (who was farm servant there). He married Margaret Cook in 1712; he was said to have taken a wife when he was 90 years old, and this may have been that time. He was deceased by 1721 when his widow married tailor William Oliver; they were both at 'Over Southfield'. He could be the John who witnessed a baptism for John Beattie and Helen Goodfellow (presumably a relative) in Hawick in 1673. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His children included: Thomas (b.1754); and Jean (b.1756). John (18th C.) married Helen Turnbull in Hawick in 1759. John (18th C.) married Christian Cavers in Wilton Parish in 1730. Their son William was baptised in Hawick in 1731. He may be the John whose daughter Christian was baptised in Kirkton in 1735. He could be the John at the Flex, who (along with John Cavers) witnessed a baptism for John Irvine (tenant at the Flex) in 1741. He may also be the John who along with Archibald, witnessed a baptism for Walter Douglas and Christian Goodfellow in 1762. He could also be the John who hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth in 1758. John (b.1756) wright in Hawick, probably son of Robert and Margaret Scott. In 1782 he married Janet Deans, daughter of flesher George Deans. Their children included: Agnes (1784–1872), who married Walter Haddon, father of Andrew Haddon of Honeyburn; and Robert (b.1786). He is probably the John who was a quartermaster of one of the trade incorporations in 1785. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Jane Jardine in 1808 and their children included: Helen (b.1809); and Andrew (b.1811). Perhaps the same John was a labourer at Milsingtonhaugh on the ballot for the Militia in Roberton Parish in 1812. Bailie John (1798–1869) son of baker Hugh and Elspeth Scott. He was Cornet in 1822 and was also a Magistrate in Hawick. He had a grocer's and candlemaker's business at 1 Buccleuch Street. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He is probably the merchant in Hawick listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1840. He is listed in Pigot's 1825/6 directory at the Sandbed, in 1837 on Buccleuch Street and in Slater's 1852 directory (as a 'tallow chandler') on Teviot Square. He is probably the Mr. Goodfellow whose property is marked there on Wood's 1824 map. He opened the first public baths and wash-house in Hawick, by the river-side, where Orrock Church was later built. In 1837 he was involved in a dispute with the 'Trades and Operatives' over expenses for the celebration (i.e. the drinks bill) and parade for the proclamation of the new Queen. He was listed among a group of 10 men who had been denied their claim to be on the electoral roll in Selkirkshire on the basis of joint life-rent there. In Slater's 1852 directory he is listed as proprietor of the Public Baths at Teviot Square and also listed there as insurance agent for Scottish Provident. He is probably the John who was the 38th listed member of the Archæological Society in 1856, and who gave a talk on 'Cosmogony' to the Society in 1858. He ran the grocer's until 1857, when it had ceased to be successful and he then emigrated to New Zealand. He is probably the John who refused to pay the customs due from Hawick merchants to the Duke of Buccleuch (as his father than brother had done before him) and in 1854, losing the court case and being forced to auction his eight-day clock to pay the costs. He married Margaret, daughter of John Mercer and Euphemia Scott, and she died in 1838. Their children were: Euphemia (b.1828), who emigrated to New Zealand with her father; Archibald (1830–35); Margaret (b.1832), who married Walter Hume and later emigrated to New Zealand; Jane (1835–38); and John (b.1838), who also emigrated with his father. A portrait of him exists. John (b.1808/9) born in Jedburgh, in 1860 he was living at Woodhouse in Southdean Parish. He married Beatrix Beattie from Hawick in Hobkirk in 1837. Their children included: Andrew (b.1838), Thomas, Oliver, James, Peter, Robert and William. John (19th C.) married Helen Elliot in Castleton in 1844. Their children included: Anne (b.1842), baptised in Castleton; and Mary (b.1844), baptised in Hawick. John (19th C.) maried Elizbeth Anderson in Hawick in 1834. John (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Ann Swanstone and their children included Jean (b.1844). John (1825–1900) son of Robert and Elizabeth Kedzie. He emigrated to Canada, where he was a pioneer in Innisfil Township, Ontario. He married Margaret Cross and secondly Esther McCullough. John Cumming (1834–1917) born in Jedburgh, son of William and Helen Cumming. The family spent some time in Glasgow but moved to Hawick when he was young. He initially worked as a weaver, being a 'Weaver's Pirn Winder' in 1851 and a 'Woollen Hand loom Weaver' in 1861. However, he later became a publisher at 63 High Street. He was an early member and regular contributor to the Archæological Society (e.g. giving talks on geology in 1858 and archæology in 1863). In 1899 he talked on 'Ancient and Modern Modes of Interment'. He was also a keen temperance supporter. He gave a speech at the 1891 Colour Bussing, including some Common-Riding reminiscences. He wrote a memoir of his early life about 1901, which was published in the 1997 Transactions. He also wrote historical articles for the Border Magazine. In 1899 he wrote a preface for a reprint volume from 'Origines Parochialies Scotiæ' of 'The Antiquities, Ecclesiastical and Territorial of the Parishes of Hawick and Wilton'. He married Martha Hain in 1865 and Andrew Hain was their son. He wrote 'Border Biography' (1890, based on articles from the 'Hawick News'), 'Occasional Poems and Verses' (1893) and 'Hawick's Annual Festival and Other Verses' (1911), as well as producing the 'Illustrated Guide to Hawick and Vicinity' (1898) and the updated edition 'Goodfellow's Guide to Hawick' (1914). He also wrote many articles on on local history, specifically 'Hawick myths: No. 1 Gawyn Douglas' (1983), 'Hawick and Gavin Douglas' (1987), 'Reminiscences of the Hawick Archæological Society' (1891), 'Satchells (A Review) and the Riddell Monument' (1894), 'The Common Riding' (1894), 'The Bibliography of Hawick' (1896) and 'John Casper Leyden: An Historical Retrospective – Explanatory and Critical' (1903). In addition he published articles on wider topics, namely 'The Early History of Scotland, from an Archæological Point of View' (1881), 'The Archæology of Books' (1882), 'The Egyptian Question' (1882), 'The Present Aspects and Position of the Radical Movement' (1883) and 'The Social Life of the People, Politically Considered' (1892). John (1842–1912) son of Alexander Scott, tenant at Trow Mill. He was born in Hawick and emigrated to Victoria, Canada, then moved to Seattle. He married Florence Agassiz and they had 11 children. Oliver (b.1813) son of Thomas and Isobel Renwick. He married Christian Wood in Hobkirk Parish in 1838. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Scott and their children included John (b.1637), Marion (b.1640), James (b.1643), Bessie (b.1645), Janet (b.1650) and Robert (b.1652). The witnesses in 1652 were John Scott and William Nichol. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Haliburton and their daughter Isobel was baptised in 1675. Robert (17th C.) resident at Whithope according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included James (b.1696) and Robert (b.1713). Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Oliver in 1718 and their son John was baptised in 1722. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Beattie and their children included William (b.1729). The witnesses in 1729 were William and Robert Thomson. Other children (baptised in Hawick) who could be his include Bessie and an unnamed son (b.1719). Robert (1715–79) son of William. He married Margaret Scott (1721/2–87). Their children included: Agnes (1748/9–66); John (1756–86), who married Janet Deans in 1782; Robert (b.1759); and James, joiner and Bailie in Hawick. The witnesses in 1759 were the whole congregation. His wife may be the 'Widow Goodfalow' who hired the Hawick mortcloth in 1760; she is probably also the 'Widow Goodfellow spouse to Decd. Robert' whose death is recorded in 1787. They are buried in Old Wilton Cemetery. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Margaret Kedzie in 1768. John (d.1809), son of the deceased Robert, whose death is recorded in Hawick Parish, may have been his son. Robert (18th C.) farm-worker at Greenhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1789 he was recorded at Kirklands. He could be the son of Robert and Margaret Scott baptised in Hawick in 1759; however, based on family names it seems likely his father was James, perhaps from the Bowden area. He married Helen Leis (or Lies) in Selkirk in 1782; she died in Ontario in 1837. Their offspring probably included these children baptised in Lilliesleaf: James (b.1783); Thomas (b.1785); William (1787–1848), who died in North Monaghan, Upper Canada; John (b.1789); Robert (c.1791–1866), who emigrated to Quebec in about 1821; Andrew (c.1794–1852), who married Isobel Young and emigrated to Canada, along with his family and mother; Helen (b.1795), who married John Turnbull; and George (b.1800). It is possible that John (d.1809), whose death was recorded in Hawick, was his son. Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded as labourer at East Middles in Lilliesleaf Parish in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Janet (or 'Jenny') Biggar in Bedrule in 1797 and their children included Elizabeth (b.1802). Robert (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Elizabeth Dodds and their children included Margaret (b.1807). Robert (1790–1880) born at Merrylaw, son of William and Rachel Easton. He farmed at Merrylaw, Gilliestongues and Croslie (near Stow). He later worked on estates in Devonshire, Argyllshire and Midlothian and was Land Steward at Inch Estates, Liberton. He married Elizabeth, daughter of John Kedie (or Kedzie) of Hawick. They had 6 children: Isabella, who married Andrew Forgie and lived at Newbattle Abbey; Rachel; William, who married Mary Whitaker and farmed in North Wales; Margaret Elliot (b.1823); John, who emigrated to Innisfill, Canada in 1844; and Archibald, who died in infancy. Robert (b.c.1805) joiner on Teviot Crescent. His wife was Grace, and their children included Adam C., Janet, Joshua, Robert, Jane and Elliot. Robert (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Mary Dodds and their children included Helen (b.1842) and George (b.1845). Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Storie and their son John was baptised in 1675. Perhaps Archibald (b.1687), with mother's name listed as 'Margaret Goodfallow', was also his child. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. Most of his children were born in Midlothian. He married Isabella Renwick, who was from Forkins in Rulewater. He was probably a gentleman's servant, and spent the latter part of his life at Penrith. His son Andrew was forester around Jedburgh. This branch of the family is not directly connected with the Hawick family of J.C. Goodfellow etc. He is probably the Thomas, son of Robert, who was born in Roberton Parish in 1785. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He married Isobel Renwick (from Jedburgh) and their children included: Andrew (b.1807); James (b.1809); Helen (b.1811), who married Thomas Lunn; and Oliver (b.1813). He is probably the Thomas, son of Robert, born in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1785. Archibald (d.1811) may also have been his son. Thomas (c.1790–1849) miller at Roughheugh Corn Mill. He was listed as miller there among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 and 1840. He is also described as tacksman (i.e. tenant) there on the 1841 census. His wife was Mary and their children included: Mary; Robert; Jane; Janet; and Elizabeth. Walter (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was recorded in Denholm in 1773 and 1775. His children included Margaret (b.1773) and Archibald (b.1775). William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Pott and their children included Marion (b.1636), Isabel (b.1639), Janet (b.1642), Janet (again, b.1646) and John (b.1650). William (17th C.) tenant for the Duchess of Buccleuch in Phaup on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. William (17th/18th C.) servant to Francis Scott, miller at Wester Burnfoot, he lived at Leaheads in Wilton Parish. He is recorded there in 1707 (and having lately come to the area) when he was called to report to the Kirk Session. He was also at Leaheads in 1708 and in 1711. His children, baptised in Wilton, probably included: John (b.1708); William (b.1711); and Archibald (b.1713). Perhaps the same William had a second marriage in Wilton in 1718 (with no wife's name recorded). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Oliver and their son Adam was baptised in 1706. William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Over Southfield along with his father John in about 1710. This was attested in evidence given regarding the state of Hawick's Common in 1767. In 1713 he and his father John 'in over Southfield' witnessed a baptism for William Martin (who was their farm servant). He is probably the William who in 1720 witnessed a baptism for William Martin in Over Southfield. He may be the William who married Helen (or Bessie) Gledstains in 1711, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Kirkton Parishes. Probably the same

William married Agnes Wright and is recorded in Hilliesland in 1719. His children, baptised in Hawick Parish, probably included John (b.1714), Robert (b.1715), Marie (b.1716), James (b.1716) and Margaret (b.1719). The witness in 1714 was Gideon Chisholme and the witnesses in 1719 were merchant William Dickson and gardener James Falsyde. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Wilson in 1706 and their son Robert was baptised in 1715. William (1692/3–1740) son of Archibald, who came from Cumberland to Teviothead, with his mother being a Scott. He was tenant farmer at Adderstonelee. He also had half the farm of Bowanhill, Teviothead, with Archibald Elliot having the other half. He married Isobel Scott (1697–1773) at Skelfhill (listed in Cavers Parish records); she is recorded re-leasing the lands of Bowanhill in 1744. Their children were: Archibald (b.1727, with mother listed as Helen Scott); Andrew, who died at sea; Isabel; John, wine merchant in London and later Berwick; Robert, whose son William emigrated to Ontario; Hugh, who died young; and William, farmer at Merrylaw. He is buried with his wife in Teviothead cemetery. He is probably the William (or 'Will') whose children, baptised in Kirkton Parish, included James (b.1731), John (b.1733), Janet (b.1734) and Hugh (b.1735), William (18th C.) married Isabel Scott in Cavers Parish in 1725. Their son William (b.1738) was farmer at Merrylaw. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded in Boghall in 1727 and Heap in 1733. He married Agnes Wight. Their children included: Agnes (b.1727); Bessie (b.1728); Esther (b.1731); Robert (b.1733); and William (b.1735). The witnesses in 1727 were Robert and Francis Scott and in 1733 were Robert Easton and Thomas Scott. William (18th C.) married Helen Pringle in 1758, the marriage being recorded in both Southdean and Roberton Parishes. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish, recorded in Hummelknowes. His children included: John (b.1762); Robert (b.1764); Janet (b.1766); William (b.1767); Christian (b.1769); Betty (b.1771); Jean (b.1776); Nelly (b.1778); and Margaret (b.1781). He is separate from William, tenant in Merrylaw (but may have been related to him). He may be the William who married Betty Hume in Kirkton in 1762. William (1738–1821) son of William and Isabel Scott. He was tenant at Merrylaw for about 50 years. He is recorded there in at least 1788–90. He was also at Merrylaw on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls and was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. In 1773 in Wilton he married Rachel (1747–1809), daughter of John Easton, from the Damside family in Hawick. Their children were: Euphan, or 'Euphy', who went to London and married John Smith; Elspeth (b.1778); Isabel (b.1778), who married Adam Scott in Westerkirk; Rachel (b.1780), who married Thomas Proudfoot, shepherd at Headshaw; William (b.1782), stocking-maker in Hawick; Margaret (b.1784), who married shepherd William Helm; John (b.1788), who died young; and Robert (b.1790), who married Elizabeth Kedzie. He is buried with his wife in Teviothead cemetery. He is referred to as 'Old William of Merrylar [sic]' in a letter between Teviothead Elliots in North America in 1834. William (1782–1849) son of William, farmer at Merrylaw and Rachel Easton. He is probably the William 'Junr.' recorded at Merrylaw in the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. He was later a stocking-maker in Wilton, listed at Damside among heads of households in 1840. He was on Lower Damside on the 1841 census. He married Helen Cumming in Jedburgh in 1830. Their children were: William (b.1832/3), who married Isabella Amour Own and was Schoolmaster in Haddington; John Cumming (1834–1917), bookseller and local historian; Rachel Easton (b.1838/9), who married John B. Miles; and Jessie, who died young. William (18th/19th C.) from the Teviothead area, he was nephew of 'Old William', farmer at Merrylaw. His mother's name was Violet, perhaps the Violet, wife of Robert or Roger who died in Hawick in 1811. He emigrated to Canada, being mentioned in a letter between Elliots in 1834. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Margaret Dodds and their children included Jessy (b.1808), John (b.1809) and Thomas (b.1811). William (b.1799/1800) born in Roberton Parish. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer, in 1851 was a 'Roadmaker' and in 1861 was farmer, all at Curcarwood in Yarrow. His wife was Isabella and their children included Mary, Janet, Andrew, John, James, George and William. William (1806–90) son of Hugh and Elspeth Scott. He took over his father's bakery business. He was listed as a baker at the Sandbed on Pigot's 1837 directory. In 1837 he is recorded on the electoral roll as tenant of lands of James Douglas of Cavers. He was also listed among a group of 10 men who had been denied their claim to be on the electoral roll in Selkirkshire on the basis of joint life-rent there. In 1839 he decided to emigrate to Australia, but a delay in his ship's passage led him to enroll as a colonist of Port Nicholson (to become Wellington) in New Zealand. He travelled to Adelaide, spent time in Melbourne and finally made his way to Wellington, returning to Australia to bring his family in 1840 and purchasing land in Auckland in 1841. There he opened a bakery and flour mill. He later purchased land in Otara, where an oak tree he planted in 1850 is still standing. In 1834 he married Ann, daughter of John Scott and she died in 1882. Their children were: Helen (b.1836), who married Samuel C. Baird; Ann (b.1838), who married William Macky; Hugh; John; Euphemia, who married David Scott Robertson; Margaret, who died in infancy; Jane, also died in infancy; William, who died in Oakland, California; Thomas; and James Alexander. He and his wife are buried at St. John's Presbyterian Church Cemetery in Papatoetoe, Auckland. William (19th C.) lived at Kirkhope and Dodhead in Ettrick Parish. He was probably son of William and Isabel. He married Margaret Forest and their children included: John (1891–1917), who was killed in action in France; and 2 daughters who lived at 16 Wellogate Place, Hawick, one of them married to a Tucker. William (19th C.) probably from one of the Hawick families, he lived at Beaumaris in Anglesey. In 1861 he donated a set of coind to the Museum. In 1872 his wife Isabella was fined for assaulting another woman (also written 'Goodfalla', 'Goodfala', 'Goodfallaw', 'Goodfallow', 'Goodfalo', 'Goodfalow', 'Goodfelew', 'Goodfelu' and variants; note never locally pronounced gid-fe-li).

the Good Samaritans (thu-gid-saw-ma-ri'-inz) n. abstinence group which seceeded from the Good Templars in Hawick, objecting to paying money into central coffers. They lasted for many years in the latter part of the 19th century.

Gordon (gor-din) n. town and parish on the western side of Berwickshire. There was once a branch line of the Berwickshire Railway here. The 'de Gordon' family took their name from the associated barony. It is also the name of the surrounding parish. Greenknowe Tower is nearby.

Gordon (gor-din) n. Alexander (d.1575) brother of George, 4th Earl of Huntly, and nephew of James IV. He was a servant of the Queen Dowager, Mary of Guise and spent some time in France. In 1549 he sent a detailed report of the capture of Ferniehirst Castle by the English from the French. He was Postulate of Caithness and then appointed as Archbishop of Glasgow in 1550. But in the following year the see was resigned to the Pope, following a request from the Scottish Crown. Hence he was Hawick's Archbishop for about a year. He was then pensioned and given the title of Archbishop of Athens, later becoming Archbishop of the Isles and then of Galloway. He became a Protestant. In 1566 he preached at the wedding of the Earl of Bothwell and his niece, Jean Gordon, and in 1567 he signed the bond agreeing to the marriage of Bothwell with Mary Queen of Scots. Rev. Alexander (d.1785) son of Alexander of Blairtown, he was educated at Marischal College, Aberdeen 1748–52. Licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1768, was presented to Kirkton Parish in late 1774 and ordained there the following year. In 1758 he married Joan Perrie (or Pirrie), who died in 1793. They had no surviving children. Alexander (18th/19th C.) weaver in Hawick. The death of his child is recorded in 1815. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Abbotrule Parish. As a Covenanter he had to flee the region. He was captured in Bewcastle and, along with Robert Cameron, was banished to America. Rev. Charles (c.1656–1710) from Aberdeenshire, brother of John, the Provost of Aberdeen. He graduated from Aberdeen University in 1676 and became minister at Campvere in 1686. He returned to Scotland to answer calls to Dumfries and Dalmeny, the latter of which he took up in 1691. He was presented to Ashkirk Parish at the end of 1694 and became minister there the following year. He was offered the Chair of Divinity at Aberdeen University in 1697/8, and the Assembly suggested to translate him in 1698, but he refused to accept it. He was described as 'a learned and holy man of uncommon integrity'. In 1690 he married Rosina Campbell, daughter of the minister of Dumfries. Their surviving children included 2 sons, George and James, and a daughter, Christian. They had children in Edinburgh, including George (b.1691). Their children, baptised in Ashkirk, included: Alexander (b.1697); Rosina (b.1698); Isobel (b.1700); Margaret (b.1701); Daniel (b.1702); Janet (b.1703); Jean (b.1704); John (b.1705); James (b.1707); and Anne (b.1708). Charles (18th C.) house servant at Cavers in 1791, when he was working for George Douglas. Eric (20th C.) assistant priest at S.S. Mary & David's from 1942, having previously been at Portobello. James (b.1807/8) originally from Perth, he was a framework knitter in Hawick. In 1841, 1851 and 1861 he was living at 11 Back Row. He married Janet Turnbull and their children included Mary, Helen A., John, Anne McG., William and James A. His 'Aunt-in-law' was living with his family in 1851. He is probably the James who donated a coin to the Museum in 1865. He could also be the 'Mr. J. Gordon' who in 1874 donated 'fruit from Mount Lebanon'. Rev. James Drummond (1870–1944) son of Rev. William and Helen Drummond. He graduated M.A. from Aberdeen University in 1891, B.D. in 1894 and B.Sc. in 1895, when he was licensed to preach. He was assistant at St. Machar's, Aberdeen, then at Errol. He became Acting-Chaplain to the forces at Aldershot in 1900 and was then Chaplain with His Majesty's Indian Ecclesiastical Establishment, becoming Senior Chaplain in Bengal in 1921. He was translated to become minister at Bedrule in 1923 and remained until his death. He married Annie Sutherland Gunn (who died in 1955, aged 82), and their children were Nannie Drummond, William Lindsay Drummond, John Gunn Drummond and James Forrest Drummond. He is buried in Bedrule churchyard. John (18th C.) house servant at Branxholme in 1794, when he was working for Adam Ogilvie. John (18th/19th C.) Sheriff-officer and constable of Hawick. He is mentioned in the murder case in 1814 which resulted in Hawick's last hanging. He could be the Sergeant John who was living at Howdenburn in 1841, at about age 80, and described as 'Army H.P.' His wife is probably the 'Mrs. Gordon spouse to Sergt. Gordon' who died in Hawick in 1811. John (b.1806/7) sawyer who lived at Howdenburn. He was listed among heads of households in 1835–41. In 1861 his occupation was listed as 'Colporteur'. His wife was Ann and their children included Margaret, Thomas and John. Rev. John (19th/20th C.) assistant to Rev. John MacRae at Hawick Parish Church towards the end of his ministry (around 1890). He was a guest at the 1888 Colour Bussing. He married Alison, sister of J.E.D. Murray. He became a minister in Aberdeen and retired to Edinburgh. Rev. John (b.1878) son of John, the minister of Glasserton and Margaret Bryce. He also had 2 maternal uncles who were ministers. He graduated from Glasgow University in 1902. He was licensed by Wigtown Presbytery in 1905, was assistant at Galston and then ordained as minister of Hobkirk in 1907. He demitted his charge in 1919, later becoming a teacher in North Berwick and obtaining a Ph.D. at Edinburgh University in 1928. He then became minister at Channelkirk in 1927, was translated to Kirkinner in 1931 and retired for a second time in 1943. He married Mary Jane Turnbull in 1923. Patrick (16th C.) recorded in 1549 as 'Patricius Gordon' when he was listed as a tenant, along with Hector and David Turnbull, of the lands of Appletreehall. Ross (1941–) born in Croft Road, he has long been a Common-Riding supporter. He went to his first Ride-out in 1959, completing more than 400, including following 51 times consecutively to Mosspaul, as well as attending more than 150 huts. He was President of the Mosstroopers' Club in 1985. He married Jean, daughter of ex-Cornet Bill Brydon and sister of ex-Cornet Rob Brydon. Their children are Ally and Kirsty. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Moffat and their children included: Helen (b.1755); John and Thomas (b.1757); James (b.1760); William (b.1762); and Agnes (b.1765). Rev. Thomas (1844–1917) son of the minister of Twynholm, he was educated at the University of Glasgow, graduating M.A. in 1864. He was assistant minister at Bothwell, Scone, Twynholm, Balmaghie and Fenwick. He served as minister at the 'mission' church at Saughtree 1877–86. Afterwards he was assistant at Edgerston, where he was minister from 1892. He married Adelaide Dobie. He wrote 'The Scottish Reformation Movement in the Sixteenth Century' (1883) and 'Creed and Civilisation – their Alliance in the Experience of History' (1905). Walter (??–??) watchman at Innes-Henderson in the early part of the 20th century. He was well-known for his pieces of babble, e.g. 'A liner burnt ti the grund in mid-ocean', 'A'm brikkin up ma iron bedstead for fire-wud' and 'When the man's deid, hei'll be made for life'.

the Gordon Airms (thu-gor-din-ārmz) n. hostelry west of Yarrow, at the crossroads where the B709 road from Ettrick meets the A708 Yarrow road. Sir Walter Scott last met the Ettrick Shepherd here in 1830, and it is now run as a hotel. George Turnbull was the proprietor in the early 19th century, followed by John Leigh and then James Douglas.

gore (gōr) interj., arch. exclanation of surprise, used as a mild oath – 'By (the) gore! or My gore' [GW] (euphemism for 'God').

gore (gōr) n. a textile frame formerly used to make fully-fashioned ladies silk underwear, also known by the epithets 'papper' or 'bosomer' (the word is used elsewhere to mean a triangular or tapering piece of material inserted to shape a garment).

Gorebridge (gōr-brij) n. town just off the A7 towards Edinburgh, and former station on the Waverley Line. This was the terminus for local Edinburgh trains.

Gorman (gor-mun) n. James (1876–1920) articled as an architect in Perth, he became J.P. Alison's chief assistant 1899–1900. He worked on railway buildings and the Kirklee Bridge in Glasgow, as well as houses in Derbyshire, but emigrated to Penang in Malaysia in 1904, where he continued to design public buildings. Joseph Brown Dick (b.1880) younger brother of James, he trained as an architect in Perth and Glasgow. He was an assistant to J.P. Alison in 1905, later worked in Glasgow and emigrated to Montreal,

gormaw (gor-maw) n., arch. the cormorant, Phalacrocorax carbo (noted by J. Leyden).

Gorrenberry (go-rin-bu-ree) n. farm on the Hermitage Water, home to a branch of the Elliots in the 15th and 16th century and the Scotts in the 17th and 18th. It is recorded as a 10 merk land in a rental list of c.1376 among the charters of the Douglases of Morton. It has been suggested that this branch was one of the 'twelve great families' of Elliots who moved to Liddesdale in the early 14th century. The earliest recorded Laird is 'Willielmo Elwaldo de goranberry' in 1484, and in 1489 he was 'Wilielmo elwad de gouinbery'. The connection between this early Laird and other Elliots is not known. However, the lands appear to then passed to the Elliots of Redheugh. In 1541 Archibald Elliot, 3rd son of Robert of Redheugh was designated 'of Gorrenberrie' (and was later Laird of Falnash), and the lands were then valued at 10 merks. Archibald's son William was also Laird, and the last Elliot Laird on record was another William in 1613. The lands then passed to the Scotts of Buccleuch, with Walter, Lord Scott, complaining in 1618 that men from several farms in upper Teviotdale had chopped down many of his trees there. John, illegitimate son of Walter, 1st Earl of Buccleuch was given the lands in 1629. John Scott held the lands in 1643, when they were valued at £1600; they still had the same value in 1678 and 1707. A payment for the ringing of the bells of Hawick Kirk for 'Gorenberie's boril' is recorded in 1722. The lands were sold by John Scott of Gorrenberry to Henry, Duke of Buccleuch in about 1760. In 1788 the lands were still valued at £1600 and owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. Robert Laidlaw was farmer there in 1792–97. Michael Anderson was farmer there in the 1820s to 40s, James Anderson was shepherd in 1835 and David Anderson farmer in 1851. William Hislop was farmer in 1868. The motto of the Gorrenberry Scotts was 'Sperandum'. There was once a tower here, but its precise location is unknown. According to Jeffrey this earlier house was located to the west of the present farm, closer to Bught Shank; however, the rectangular mound there may have been a farmstead. Tradition connects the place with a brownie, called 'the Cowie', and John Leyden also invented the beauty 'May of Goranberry' – 'O May she came, and May she gaed, By Goranberry tower; And who was it but cruel Lord Soulis That carried her from her bower?' [JL] (also spelled 'Gorranberry', 'Gorrenberie', 'Gorrenberrie', 'Gorrinberrie', 'Gorrinberry', 'Gorronberrie', 'Goringberrie', etc.; it first occurs as 'Goranbery' in about 1376, is'goranbery' in 1484, 'gouinbery' in 1489, 'Gorrumbarry' in 1541, 'Gorranbery' in 1548, 'Gorinbery', 'Gorymbery' and 'Gorynbery' in 1554, 'Gorumbery' in 1557, 1567 and 1569, 'Gorrumbery' and 'Gorrumberry' in 1569, 'Gorumberry' in 1573 and 1575, 'Gorinberrie' in 1580, 'Gorrumberrie' in 1581, 'Gorumberry' in 1583/4, 'Goramberye' in 1584, 'Gorrumberrie' and 'Gorromeberrie' in 1599 and 'Gorumberie' in the 16th century, 'Gorrumberrie' in 1613 and 1618, 'Gorimberrie' in 1648, 'Gorrinberrie' in 1650, 'Gowrinberry' in 1650, 'Gorrumberrie' in 1654, 'Gorumberrie' in 1660, 'Gorinberrie' in 1670, 'gorrenberrie' and 'Gorrinberrie' in 1678, transcribed 'Govenberry' in c.1680, 'Gorrenberrir' in 1692, 'Gorrenberrie' in 1695, 'Gorenberie' in 1716; 'Gorenberrie' in 1722, 'Gorremberry' about 1760, 'Gorenberie' in 1763 and 'Gorrinberry' in 1797; it occurs as 'Gorramburie' on Sandison's c.1590 map, 'Goranbery' on Gordon's c.1650 map, 'Goranberry' on Blaeu's 1654 map, 'Goranberry' on de Wit's c.1680 map, 'Gorenbery' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and the modern spelling on Stobie's 1770 map; the name probably derives from the Old English 'gor ham burh', meaning 'dirty settlement at the tower' and is probably unrelated to berries, as has been fancifully suggested).

Gorrenberry Cottage (go-rin-bu-ree-ko'-eej) n. cottage by the main road to the west of Gorrenberry farm. Labourer John Armstrong and family lived there in 1851.

Gorrie (go-ree) n. William (1744/5–1816) resident of Roberton Parish. He died at Woodburn and is buried at Borthwick Waas along with Margaret (1750/1–1822) and Charles (1755/6–1834), who both died at Whithope.

Gorthon Scott (gor-thin-sko') n. area that is mentioned 'with woods' among Rulewater lands in the Lordship of Jedforest in 1587 (spelling, pronunciation and identification are uncertain).

Gospatric (gos-pat-rik) n. (11th/12th C.) first known Sheriff of Roxburghshire, and perhaps the first known person holding such an office anywhere in Scotland. He may have been son of Uhtred, who was son of Ulfkill. He owned the lands of Nether Crailing and his grant of the Chapel of Crailing was confirmed in about 1150 (probably after he was deceased). He was also listed as Sheriff when he gave a ploughgate of land in Crailing around the foundation of Jedburgh Abbey, as confirmed in later charters. He is mentioned in the charter for the foundation of Selkirk Abbey around 1120, when he was 'Cospatrico vicecomite'. He also witnessed a grant to Durham Cathedral around 1126 and witnessed another grant to the church attached to Roxburgh Castle about the same time. There were several other contemporary men of the same forename, and it is not known to what later family he may have been related. One suggestion is that he is the same as Gospatric of Swinton, brother of Colban. Given that he was Sheriff of Roxburghshire, he was probably related to John, son of Orm, who held the same office later in the 12th century.

Gospel Haa (gos-pul-haw) n. former name for a building on Ruecastle farm (presumably a jocular term, from a resemblance to a place of worship).

Goss (gos) n. Rev. Michael Stewart (b.1962) born in Hawick, son of David William and Elaine Stewart. He was educated in dumfries and attended Aberdeen University (graduating B.D. in 1985 and D.P.S. in 1990. He worked as a hotel porter 1986–88, was licensed by Aberdeen Presbytery in 1990, was assistant minister Aberdeen Newhills 1990–91 and was ordained as minister of Dundee Mains in 1991. In 1986 he married Rhona Young (b.1964), daughte of William Archibald Frew Izett and their children were Andrew William and Aileen Stewart.

got (go', gō') pp. had, especially as a teacher or similar – 'A got Ned for Maths', got called, was named – 'hei aye got 'Faggy' when hei was younger'.

go ti Hawick (gō-ti-hIk) interj. mild oath, used to express disbelief or dismay (euphemism for 'go to Hell').

gotten (go'-in, go-tin) pp. got – '... freelie ye hae gottan, freelie gie' [HSR], '... or thance A micht never heh gotten off the bit aa day' [ECS] (this participle form is more common in Hawick than in standard English).

gotten' (go'-in') contr., arch. got it – '... if as ye say, the Lord gies ye the ca', an ye had gottent either to Ashkirk or Kirkton ... ye wad ne'er let on to hear him' [WNK].

Gotterson (go-tur-sin, go'-ur-sin) n. George (16th C.) listed among associates of Sir James Douglas of Cavers in a court cse of 1541. There were also 2 Johns listed, who were probably related to him. John (16th C.) name of 2 men recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. They were probably related to George, who was also listed. John (17th C.) listed at Old Jedburgh among the poor of Southdean Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Matthew writer of 'The Callant', this probably being James Smail from Jedburgh, and not a pen-name for J.E.D. Murray as once suggested. Thomas (18th C.) resident of the Roberton and Ashkirk areas. He could be the Thomas, son of William, baptised in Roberton in 1713. He married Agnes Murray. Their children included: William (b.1746), baptised in Roberton; and Thomas (b.1748), baptised in Ashkirk. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of the Lilliesleaf area. He married Violet Laidlaw. Their son William was born in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1800 and baptised in Maxton. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Chapelhill in 1710. His surname is recorded in 1710 and 1713 as 'Guthrison'. His children included: Agnes (b.1703); Helen (b.1705); James (b.1710); and Thomas (b.1713). William 'Wullie' (b.c.1770) well-known Hawick character of the early 19th century. He farmed near Crumhaugh Hill, the area sometimes known as Gotterson's Knowes. He also kept an inn (or an 'innerie') in the 'Back Raw'; this was a cluster of buildings with a cess pool in the middle that he referred to as the 'silver lake'. Once when he refused to accepted a new tenant on the gounds that there were bugs in his furniture, the Bailie asked him if there were no bugs already at his inn and he replied 'Aw dinna mean to say onything of the kind. Aw've ower mony already, and aw dinna want ony mair!'. He was known for his skill at curing horses and cows and volunteered as a driver in the local Militia in 1803. He was mentioned in a story told about beggar John Brown, occurring about 1820. In another story, he was insulted at the reading of the Burgess Roll, with Caleb Rutherford referring to him as a 'horse-killer' rather than a 'horse-dealer', resulting in a (slow) chase between the pair. One more story recounts a verbal interaction between him and 'Lanf Tam' Dyce. He was a farmer living alone on the Back Row on the 1841 census; Mary, who lived next door, was about the right age to be his daughter. He married Janet Irvine in 1794, the marriage being recorded in both Bedrule and Ancrum Parishes. Their children (baptised in Wilton) included: Mary (b.1795); and Thomas (b.1797). When asked why he turned up to his wife's funeral in blue, rather than the traditional black, he replied 'Aw got her in blue and aw'll pairt wi'r in blue'. His 'Sunday ootsteeks' were donated to the Museum collection by John Aitkin in 1863 and a portrait of him was donated anonymously in 1875 – 'Weel he wad ken Wull Gotterson Wi' his strampin' ootsteek shoon' [DH] (formerly spelled 'Gottersonne', 'Gottersoun' and other variants, as well as 'Guthrison').

Gotterson's Innery (go'-ur-sinz-i-nu-ree) n. inn kept by Wullie Gotterson in the Back Row, where the Stag's Head is now. Martin Dechan grew up there.

Gotterson's Knowes (go'-ur-sinz-nowz) n. former name for the area around a small farm on the summit by Crumhaugh Hill, farmed by Wullie Gotterson, and containing the Watch Knowe.

Goudie (gow-dee) n. Rev. Stewart Maclean (b.1922) born in Ayr, son of Alexander Maclean. He was educated in Hamilton, Stranraer and at Glasgow University, where he graduated M.A. in 1947 and B.D. in 1950. He served with the R.A.F. during WWII. He was assistant minister at South Carntyne 1947–48, Battlefield West 1948–49 and Cardonald 1949–50, and was licensed by the Presbytery of Stranraer in 1950. He was assistant at South Pasadena in California 1950–51 and was ordained as minister at West Port Kirk in 1951. In 1958 he was translated to Maybole West and demitted his charge in 1963. In 1977 he resigned as Lecturer in Religious Education and took a term appointment as minister of Dreghorn and Springside 1977–88. He had daughters Margaret and Anne.

Gouinlock (goo-in-lok) n. Walter (1855–1907), J.P., born in Ashkirk, son of John. He was educated at Selkirk Grammar School. His father moved to Traquair Knowe in 1869, and he himself managed that farm for 20 years. He was also a cattle breeder. He was heavily involved in the Parish Council and School Board in Innerleithen. He married and had a son and a daughter (see also Govenlock).

Gould (goold) n. John (1780/1–1857) Hawick framesmith and frameworker, originally from Glasgow. He was involved in an 1834 improvement of the broad stocking frame, whereby two stockings could be made at once. He moved into the basement of 7 Brougham Place when blacksmith Murray vacated his smithy. By 1837 he was listed as a framesmith on the Round Close and by 1851 he was employing 4 men and 2 boys there. He was listed as a framesmith on the Round Close in Slater's 1852 directory. He married Elizabeth Taylor. His children included: Alex, whose wife Isabella Smith, sister-in-law Janet Smith and child John all died of cholera at Allars Crescent; William, who also worked as a framesmith; and Elizabeth. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery (also written 'Gold' and 'Goold').

Gourlay (goor-lee) n. Adam (13th/14th C.) recorded in the Ragman Rolls of 1296 paying homage to Edward I of England. His location is only given as Roxburghshire. However, he (along with Alan de Gourlay) served on a jury in 1303/4 to decide on the succession to Sir Thomas Chartres, Baron of Wilton. So it seems reasonable to suppose that he held lands fairly locally. Other men of the same surname who also paid homage to Edward I in 1296 were from Edinburgh, Berwickshire and Forfarshire. He could be the 'Ede Gurlay' whose lands of Rutherford and Maxton were granted by Robert the Bruce to John de Lindsay in 1321. Rev. Adam (1800–81) born at Chesters, near Ancrum, son of James and Margaret Redford. He graduated from Edinburgh University and was licensed to preach by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1825. He became assistant minister at Bedrule and at Lilliesleaf. In 1842 he was presented as minister of Lilliesleaf by James Henry Robert, Duke of Roxburghe. He was Clerk of the Presbytery in 1843 and Clerk of the Synod in 1853. In Slater's 1852 directory his name appears as 'Gonrlay'. He married Margaret Campbell Baxter (1813–1900), daughter of his predecessor. Their children were: James (1836–99), insurance clerk; Anne Campbell (1837–85), married George Alexander, farmer; David Baxter (1839–1913), farmer; Margaret Redford (1846–1925); Maria Nicolina (1848–93); Adamina Harriet (1852–1924); Adam (1854–88), banker; and Jane Charles Russell Currie (b.1856), married Walter Robert Brodie. Alan (13th/14th C.) served along with Adam on the jury to decide on who inherited the Barony of Wilton in 1303/4. He is recorded as 'Alain de Gourlay' and was likely related to Adam. He is probably the man transcribed as 'Aleyn Gurnay' on the Ragman Rolls of 1296, where his seal shows a squirrel feeding within two interlaced squares, with the name 'S'ALANI GORLEY'. Archibald (14th C.) father of John, who was served heir to the lands of Rulewood in 1387. Since John, son of Henry had been granted the lands in 1380, as confirmed in 1390, there may be confusion with dates. These charters are held by the Stewarts of Traquair. Arnulf (15th C.) witness to a sasine for the lands of Denholm Mains in 1465/6, when he is recorded as 'Arnulf Gurlay'. He is probably the

'Arnald Gorlay' who was part of an action (along with several other Border lairds) registered with Parliament by John, Lord Somerville in 1476. He is probably the 'Arnou' who married Katherine, the daughter and heiress of Alexander Inglis, and hence inherited lands near Branxholme. John of Rulewood was probably his son or grandson. David B. (b.1838/9) farmer at Bewlie Hill. He was listed there in 1861, farming 184 acres and employing 8 people. He was there with his brother James. He was also recorded there in a directory of 1868. Henry (14th C.) Scottish cleric who graduated B.A. in Paris in 1376/7, under John Forester (later Archdeacon of Teviotdale). He may have been related to the contemporary man of the same name who owned Ruelwood. Henry (14th C.) granted the lands of Rulewood to his son John in 1380. In 1390 the grant was confirmed by Malcolm of Drummond, Lord of Mar and Garrioch, who was Baron of Cavers. James (15th C.) recorded as 'Jacobum Gurlaw' when he was on the inquest panel for the inheritance of the Barony of Hawick in 1484. John was also on the panel. John (14th C.) granted the lands of Rulewood by his father Henry in 1380. It is possible he was the same as the later John. John (15th C.) recorded in 1432 as a witness to the instrument of sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas. He was also listed on the 'retour of inquest' for Ker of Altonburn in 1438. He must have been related to the later John of Rulweood and Arnulf. John (15th C.) on the panel for James Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick in 1484. James was also on the panel. He may be the same as John of Rulewood. John of Rulewood (15th/16th C.) holder of the lands of 'Kyrktoun' in the Barony of Branxholme. He was named on an inquest in 1497/8 (as John Gourlay of Roulwod') and was probably also the John on the inquest for succession to the Home lands in 1506. He is probably the 'Jhon Gowrlay' who was among the men chosen to value the lands of Whithope in 1500. In 1508 he was 'Johannem Gourlay in Roullwoide' on the panel for Adam Hepburne inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale. He was probably the John 'Gourlaw' who was on the panel to decide on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers in 1509. In 1509 he was granted the lands of Rulewood by William, Lord Herries of Terregles. He was already deceased in 1521 when the lands passed to his son John. He was probably son or grandson of Arnulf. John (16th C.) son of John of Rulewood. He is recorded in a sasine of 1521 granted by Walter Scott of Branxholme, for the '6 merkland of Kyrktoun' in the Barony of Branxholme. These lands had passed to the family through 'Arnou Gourlau' who married Katherine, daughter and heiress of Alexander Inglis. In 1525 he was served heir to the lands of Rulewood. In 1528 he was probably the John listed among supporters of Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus who were called to appear before the King. He is also 'John Gourlaw of Roulwood' in 1533 when part of an inquest at Jedburgh. He may be the John of Rulewood who had a contract with William Turnbull in Hassendeanbank in 1540 (probably not 1640 as recorded in one source). Robert (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. Robert (16th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1582 when he witnessed an agreement in Hawick for Alan Deans and Alexander Weens. William (14th C.) granted '10 merks of lands' in Chamberlain Newton (probably Groundistone) by William Lindsay of the Byres. The charter is undated, but probably around 1390. William (16th C.) recorded in 1563 as official representing Andrew Douglas of Friarshaw. He warned George and Ralph Douglas to remove themelves from Andrew's lands in Cavers (formerly spelled 'Gorlay', 'Gouerlay', 'Gourlau', 'Gourlaw', 'Gurlaw', 'Gurlay' and other variants; the name occurs in the 13th century on connection with the Baliols, suggesting a Norman origin).

Gourlay Bog (goor-lee-bōg) n. former name for lands in Bedrule. In the c.1795 Old Statistical Account it is recorded that there was 'a small common near the church called Gourlay Bog, on which the minister of Bedrule was also in use to pasture'. The common was divided some time in the 18th century. It was 'Gourlaybog' in 1801, when listed as part of the estates (valued at £14) bought by William Elliot of Wells (presumably related to a former owner called Gourlay).

Goushill (gows-hil) n. area between Todrig Burn and Blindhaugh Burn, to the north of Todrig farm (it is amrked on Ainslie's 1773 map).

Govan (go-vin) n. John (d.bef. 1373) cleric associated with Glasgow Diocese. His designation is given as 'de Govane' and variants. He was presented to Cavers Church by Melrose Abbey, sometime after 1363, with Papal confirmation coming in 1368. He was granted safe conduct to study in England in 1369, but studied in Paris, where he graduated B.A. in 1370/1. He had further permission to study in Oxford for a year in 1372/3, but was deceased by 1374 when Alexander de Caron held the benefice of Cavers Church. Joseph (18th C.) recorded as 'indweller in Hawick' in 1751 when he had a libel case for non-payment of a bill in Selkirk. However, there was also a complaint against him in 1751 by William Hall from Selkirk, claiming that he had been beaten in his own house and had his furniture damaged by him. He is probably the Joseph who married Margaret Dunn and whose children (baptised in Hawick), included: Mary (b.1756); and Joseph (b.1759). Joseph (d.bef. 1816) resident of Hawick. He married Elizabeth Laidlaw in 1771 and their daughter Christian was baptised in Hawick in 1772. The witnesses were John Hume and John Grieve. His wife died in 1816, when his surname was given as 'Gibbons'. He witnessed a baptism for Thomas Rae in 1778. Lawrence of Cardrono (14th C.) Sheriff of Peeblesshire in 1358/9 and probably longer. He was confiermed in lands in Lanarkshire in 1370. He was recorded as Warden of Roxburgh in 1373, when King Robert II granted him 100 shillings for ward of the Castle of Roxburgh; the money came out of the rents of Whitchesters, Adderstone, Wilton, Chamberlain Newton and Minto. William (14th/15th C.) bachelor of canon law who was perpetual vicar of 'Mucton' in Glasgow Diocese. In 1405 he requested confirmation of his gift of the Prebend of Ancrum. William of Hermiston (18th/19th C.) he was a glazier in Edinburgh, but was listed as a voter in Roxburghshire in 1788. He owned the lands of both Wester Hermiston and Easter Hermiston in 1788. He was further listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. In the Land Tax Rolls of 1811 he was listed as owner of Easter Hermiston (whose 2 parts had previously belonged to 'Sinton' and 'Johnson') as well as Wester Hermiston. He was still owner of Hermiston in 1817 (also written 'Govane' and 'Goven').

gove (gōv) v., arch. to wander aimlessly, to stare in a vacant manner – 'Confoondit by philosophy, I gove't at him, he glowert at me, And, Ah, he had an eller ee!' [DH] (also written 'goave'; see also gover).

Govenlock (go-vin-lok, gow-in-lok) n. Adam 'Adie' (16th C.) recorded in Eilrig in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. Adam (17th C.) local man, referred to as 'in Hoitt' in 1641 when he claimed a white mare that he had found on his lands. Probably the same Adam was witness in 1651 to a baptism in Hawick for James Scott and Mary Davidson and another in 1656 for Archibald Paterson. It is unclear where 'Hoitt' might have been. Adam (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Manie Beattie and their son Adam was baptised in 1661, with witnesses James Sinton and John Gray. Adam (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Northhouse. He was recorded paying tax on 2 non-working dogs in 1797. Perhaps the same Adam was recorded at Hislop on the ballot for the Militia in Hawick Parish in 1799. Adam (b.c.1780) farmer at Childknowe in Lilliesleaf Parish, recorded in 1841. Adam (b.c.1795) born in Cavers Parish. He was a wool spinner, living on Fore Row in Wilton Dean in 1841. In 1851 his address was 'Front Row No. 2'. He lived there with his brother William and niece Isabella Scott and her family. Andrew (17th C.) married to 'Menie Bettie', their son Adam was baptised in Ashkirk Parish in 1661. Andrew (17th/18th C.) married 'Grizell Hadden' in Ashkirk in 1691. Andrew (17th/18th C.) married Bessie Chisholme in Roberton Parish in 1704. Andrew (18th C.) married to Isabel Porteous. His children baptised in Ashkirk Parish included Christian (b.1745), Adam (b.1747) and John (b.1750). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His son James was baptised in 1754. Andrew (18th C.) married to Margaret Riddell. Their children baptised in Hawick Parish included Margaret (b.1763), Agnes (b.1765), Janet (b.1767), Jane (b.1770) and Andrew (b.1773). The witnesses in 1773 were William and James, with the surnames unreadable. Andrew (b.c.1780) resident of Falnash in Hawick Parish according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. Andrew (b.1789) eldest son of Robert. He married Elizabeth Kidd. He emigrated to Canada (like his brother William), settling at Stratford, Ontario. Among his descendants are Jennie Kidd Trout (Canada's first licensed female medical practitioner) and John Gowanlock (of the Frog Lake Massacre). Andrew (1788/9–1877) born in Yarrow Parish. In 1861 he was 'Retired Farmer Fundholder' at Birkwood on Ashkirk Parish. He was recorded as farmer at Calaburn in 1868. He married Beanston Broomfield. Their children George, Robina (or Beanston, b.1837/8), Alice (b.1839/40, who married Robert Campbell) and Margaret (b.1841/2) were born in Poland. He died in Wilton in 1877, aged 89. Andrew (19th C.) married Grace Scott in Wilton in 1846. David (19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Elizabeth Stewart in 1867 and their children included Elizabeth (b.1868). Duncan William (19th C.) married Isabella Nichol in Wilton in 1880. Francis (b.1781) son of James and Isabel Cumming, he was born in Hawick Parish. He was an agricultural labourer living at Branxholme Park in 1841. He married Sally Sharp in Roberton Parish in 1800. Their children (born in Roberton Parish) included: James (b.1801); John (1803–68), a mason; Elizabeth (b.1805), perhaps the servant to the Roberton schoomaster in 1841; Francis (b.1808), also a mason; Isabella (b.1810); William (b.1817); Robert (b.1819); and Walter (b.1825). Francis (1808–86) son of Francis. He was a mason living at Howcleuchshiel in 1841 and at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot in 1851 and 1861. In 1841 he married Agnes, daughter of John Lunn; she died in 1890, aged 83. Their children (born at Howcleuchshiel) were: Isabella (1842–64); and Francis (1843–64). The family are buried in Roberton Cemetery. George (b.c.1813) mail-coach driver living at the Plough Inn in 1841. George (d.1916) son of farmer Andrew, he was born in Poland. In 1891 he was farmer at Whitehaugh Moor, living with his sister Robina and in 1911 he was at Gala Rigg with sisters Robina and Alice. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Alemoor in 1711, 1713, 1716, 1718 and 1720, Borthwickshiels in 1714 and Easter Alemoor in 1715. His children probably included: Christian (b.1703); William (b.1705); Andrew (b.1707); Helen (b.1709); Walter (b.1711); Walter (again, b.1713); Walter (again, b.1714); Thomas (b.1715); John (b.1716); Elspeth (b.1716); Helen (b.1718); and Isobel (b.1720). James (17th/18th C.) married an unnamed woman in Ashkirk Parish in 1713. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was married to Isabel Cumming and their children included Francis (b.1781). His wife died in 1809. James (1754–1819) born in Roberton Parish, son of Andrew. He was tenant in Calaburn. His children included Adam (1775/6–1847), who died at Childknow. They are buried in Borthwick Waas. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Sutherland who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He is probably related to the local Govenlocks. James 'Jamie' (b.c.1820) son of Robert, he also worked as one of the mail-coach drivers in the mid-1800s. In 1843 he was listed as a 'Horse keeper' when he gave evidence regarding the overturning of the coach 'Defiant'. He was a lodger at the Crown Inn for the 1851 census. Probably the same James was proprietor of the Commercial Inn in 1865 (when he gave evidence at the trial for the robbery at the Museum). He married Minnie (or Elizabeth) Beattie, and their children were Thomas (who married Christina Shankie) and Margaret (who married Thomas McVittie). John (16th/17th C.) acted as caution (along with several others) for Mungo Scott from Castleside in 1623. He is described as 'in Heidshaw'. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Jean Glendinning and their son Thomas was baptised in 1645. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Malie Nichol and their daughter Margaret was born in 1648. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at Appletreehall in 1706. His children included: John (b.1702); Bessie (b.1703); William (b.1706); and Janet (b.1708). John (18th C.) married Margaret Renalson in Wilton Parish in 1745. John (c.1755–1819) recorded as innkeeper of 'Harriot House' (probably 'Heriot House' on what became the A7). He was the father of Robert (innkeeper of Mosspaul), married Isabella Scott in 1780 and had earlier been a shepherd at Phaup in Selkirkshire. He could be the John who was a shepherd at Hislop in 1797, according to the Dog Tax Rolls (and recorded as 'James' on the Horse Tax Rolls). John (b.c.1780) resident of Allanhaugh Mill according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. John (18th/19th C.) married Janet Forrest in Roberton Parish in 1835. John (1815–1904) born at Greenhill in Ashkirk Parish, where his father was farmer. He was a cousin of the poet Thomas Aird. He succeeded his father as tenant at Greenhill, and then was tenant at Ashkirktown. In 1841 he was farmer at Haremoss in Ashkirk, living there with his brother Walter and mother Mary. In 1851 and 1861 he was at Ashkirktown. In 1869 he moved to the farm of Traquair Knowe. He married Mary Grieve from Bowden and their children were: Christina (1846–1920); Walter (b.1848), who died young; Mary (b.1849); Jessie (1851–1938); Walter (1855–1907), who succeeded as tenant of Traquair Knowe; and Isabella (b.1857), who married Walter Sturrock from New Belses. In 1869 he became tenant of Traquair Knowe and remained there until his death. He was an elder of the original Secession Church at Midlem for 65 years. He attended the inaugural St. Ronan's Border Games in 1827. He and his wife celebrated their golden wedding anniversary in 1902. His name was usually spelled 'Gouinlock'. He is buried at Traquair. John (b.1817/8) born in Teviothead Parish, he was listed as farmer's son and farm manager at Blackhall in Ewesdale in 1861. He married Isabella Nichol, and their children included: Annie Burnet (1846/7–1926), who married William Vincent Shaw; Robert; Margaret (1854/5–1921); George Nichol (1856–64); Isabella Nichol (1859/60–1935); and John (b.1864). John (b.c.1828) son of Robert. He ran Mosspaul after his father's death, probably up until it closed. He then resumed work as a coach driver. He (or another John) was also the proprietor of the Subscription Rooms in the early-to-mid-1800s. He married Isabella Nichol in 1864 and she died in 1884. His daughter was Margaret Ruickbie Govenlock who married William Turnbull Riddle Graham and was mother of the 1902 Cornet. John Nichol (19th/20th C.) married Nelly Scott in Roberton Parish in 1904. Margaret nee Ruickbie (1792–1863) daughter of James Ruickbie, she married Robert, landlord of the Mosspaul Inn. She was born somewhere near Lilliesleaf. She was apparently widely known for her hospitality and kindness, and was quite tall. At Mosspaul she was often to be found in a seat by the open fireplace in the kitchen. Not very widely travelled, she was once quizzed about how far she had been when she replied 'Hoots, aye, aw was yince at Denholm'. Her children were Margaret, Elizabeth, James, Robert, John and Helen. She was buried at Teviothead. Patrick (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He is listed as 'Paitt Gavinlok in Quhynincleuch', which could be Whinney Cleuch in the Borthwick valley. Robert (17th C.) married to Isobel Cowan, his son Adam was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1651. Robert (18th C.) married Agnes 'Wholence' in Roberton in 1726, both being from that Parish. He was recorded at Todshawhaugh in 1727, perhaps Harden in 1732 (it is hard to read) and Parkhill in 1734 and 1742. His children, baptised in Roberton, included Andrew (b.1727), Margaret (b.1730), Jean (b.1732), John (b.1734), John (again, b.1738), Bessie (b.1740), Robert (b.1742) and Agnes (b.1744). Robert (18th C.) married Isabel Park in Roberton Parish in 1747. Robert (18th C.) recorded as 'present tacksman at Crosslee Toll Bar' in 1785 when he was involved in a dispute over a bill in Selkirk. He may be related to the other Govenlocks who were toll-keepers. Robert (1762–1825) lived in Hobkirk and Southdean Parishes. He is probably the Robert who was married in Southdean Parish in 1787 (no wife's name given). He married Betty, daughter of John Oliver and Isabell Scott of Hawick. Their children were Andrew (b.1789), James (b.1791), Robert (b.1794), Jennet (b.1795), William (b.1798) and Walter (b.1802). Robert (18th/19th C.) servant of carrier John Hardie. He was listed among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia in 1797. He was listed as a carrier in 1799 and among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not drawn still residing in Hawick parish'; in 1801 he was listed as a tanner in Hawick on the new ballot list. He may be the Robert who married Janet Hogg in 1800, the marriage recorded in Kirkton and Hawick Parishes. Robert 'Gloomy Wunter' (1787/8–1861) son of John (a shepherd at Phaup and later inn-keeper) and Isabella Scott. He was landlord of the Mosspaul Inn for about 45 years, from 1816. His tenure there saw many improvements to the hotel, although the coming of the railway led to its later closure. He also worked as a guard on the Edinburgh to Carlisle mail coach. He was said to have a commanding appearance and distinctive personality. He was additionally one of the founder members of the Wisp Club, and acted as the first Treasurer, returning thanks to the Club at their annual dinners 'with his usual simplicity and readiness of manner'. In 1821 he subscribed for 6 copies to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' and in 1825 he did the same things for Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick'. He was listed at Mosspaul in the 1841 census. In 1811 he married Margaret, a daughter of James Ruickbie. They had several children, including: Margaret, who married Mark Turnbull; James, who married Minnie Beattie; Elizabeth, who married gamekeeper Alexander Robertson; Robert; John, who married Isabella Nichol, and was grandfather of Cornet William N. Graham; and Helen (1831/2–74). He died shortly before the last coach run from Hawick to Carlisle. There is a portrait of him in the Museum, by an unknown artist. He could be the Robert to whom a debt was due according to a record in Selkirk in 1814, when he was Selkirk Toll. Robert (b.1821/2) son of Robert. He was farmer at Teindside and also involved with the Archæological Society in the late 1800s (being Vice-President in the 1870s). In 1861 he was farmer of about 4000 acres at Teindside, employing 12 people. He took part in the last ceremonial running of the stage-coach from Hawick in 1862. He was still recorded at Teindside in 1868. In 1869 it was described how he had enthusiastically helped with the excavation of prehistoric remains found at Teindside. In 1871 he reported to the Archæological Society on the excavation of a 'sepulchral cairn' at Ladyside, Heriot; fragments an urn found there were donated by him to the Museum. Along with Dr James Brydon and others, he was also involved in excavations of cairns at Cromrig (where his farm workers laboured for the day) and Langknowe, as well as other explorations at Eweslees, Fiddleton Bankend and Lanton Mains. In 1873 he had two articles on the origin of some local placenames and other words and one more in 1874 (although it is hard to tell whether some of it was meant in jest), including an imaginative description of a horse ride from Mosspaul to Hawick. Also in 1873 he donated to the Museum an 'ancient stone implement found near Teindside' and became a life member of the Society. In 1877 he wrote about 'Recent Discoveries and the Ancient Roman Pound'. He was probably also the tenant farmer at Wolfcleuchhead recorded in the 1870s. He probably died unmarried. Robert (19th C.) married Margaret Scott in Wilton in 1847. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was married to Helen Turnbull and their children included William (b.1672). Thomas (18th C.) married Helen Douglas in Wilton Parish in 1749. He was living at Roberton Burnfoot in 1752. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, include Christian (b.1751) and Helen (b.1752). Thomas (18th/19th C.) married to Betty Oliver. Their children baptised in Ashkirk Parish included Thomas (b.1814), John (b.1820) and William (b.1822), a farm labourer at St. Boswells. Thomas (18th/19th C.) innkeeper in Jedburgh, recorded in a letter in Selkirk in 1826. Thomas (1841/2–1923) born at Mosspaul, son of James. He was a blacksmith in Stow. He married Christina Shankie. He was killed by a runaway horse. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Branxholme Park. He is recorded in 1797 among Hawick men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was listed among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area. Walter (b.c.1780) servant at Belses Mill according to the ballot for the Militia in Ancrum Parish in 1801. Walter (18th/19th C.) married Mary Armstrong in Wilton Parish in 1810. Walter (19th C.) married to Mary Tait, their son Robert was baptised in Southdean Parish in 1828. Walter (1812/3–57) farmer at Dryden near Ashkirk. He was living at Haremoss with his older brother John and mother Mary in 1841. In 1851 he was farmer at Greenhill of 80 arable acres and 520 acres of hill-land, exploying 7 people. In 1848 he married Jessie Redford (from Lilliesleaf) and they had daughters Isabella S. (b.1849/50), Mary A. (b.1850/1), Jessie (b.1856) and Margaret Walteria (b.1857). In 1861 his widow was a 'Farmeress' of 600 acres at Greenhill, employing 8 people. William (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. He may be related to Adie in Eilrig and Patie in Whinney Cleuch, who are also on the same list. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1651 he witnessed a baptism for John Renwick. He could be the William whose account is recorded in Selkirk in 1660. William Paterson (1789/90–1856) born in Cavers Parish. He was a shepherd, and was recorded living with his brother Adam in Wilton Dean in 1851. William (1798–1888) born at Chesters, son of Robert. He worked as a day labourer in Rule Water. In 1842 he emigrated with his family to Bruce County, Ontario, Canada. In 1824 he married Christian (1801–91), daughter of William Laidlaw and Helen Douglas. Their children were: Robert (1825–1906), who married Jane Armstrong and lived at Brant; Helen (1827–1906), who married and had 1 daughter; Elizabeth Oliver (1829–1907), who married James Rowand, one of the first pioneer residents of Saugeen, Ontario and M.P. for West Bruce, Ontario; Christian (b.1831) unmarried; William (b.1833), born at Yethouse, who married Jane Shanks; Andrew (b.1834), who married Betsy Laidlaw; James (b.1836), who married Mary Hendry; Janet (b.1838), who married Archibald Armstrong and had 6 children; Walter Douglas (b.1839), married Mary Rogan; and John, born in Canada, married Janet Stewart. All except the last child were born in Hobkirk Parish. The family emigrated to Ontario in 1842, where he purchased some land near Brampton, Ontario. They then moved to the Saugeen area in 1851, arriving there by crossing the Saugeen River on a raft, before there were any roads. His offspring are still living in Canada. He died aged 90, when he had about 120 living descendants. William (18th/19th C.) married Anne Crozier in Wilton in 1842 (also spelled 'Gavinlok', 'Goinlock', 'Gouinlock', 'Govanlock', 'Govinlok', 'Gowanloch', 'Gowanlock', 'Gowanlocke', 'Gowanlok', 'Gowenloch', 'Gowenlock', 'Gowenloke', 'Gowinlok', etc.).

gover (gō-vur) n., arch. someone who wanders about aimlessly – 'Also in 'Johnie the gover' so nicknamed because his father frequently used the word 'gove'' [GW] (see also the Gover).

the Gover (thu-gō-vur) n. nickname in use in the mid-19th century – 'He told me where they [the poachers] had gone to, and that the 'Gover' was one of them' [HAd1869] (from gover).

the Gover (thu-gō-vur) n. nickname for a local runner in the mid-19th century. H.H. Dixon in 'Field and Fern or Scottish Flocks and Herds (South)' (1865) describes a huge crowd coming out to meet him and his trainer at Hawick Station, he having 'been trained near Bradford for a mile race.

Gow (gow) n. Alexander (1785/6–1836) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Margaret Pringle (possibly daughter of Andrew Pringle, farmer at Orchard), who was born in Ashkirk Parish and died at Old Borthaugh in 1872, aged 79. His widow and children Thomas and Anne were at Roberton Woodfoot in 1841 and at Borthaugh Cottages in 1851. His widow was visiting their daughter Ann's family in Dovemount Street at the time of the 1861 census. Their children included: Janet (1815–82), who married James Turnbull and died in Paisley; Thomas (1817/8–92), who died at Appletreehall; and Ann (b.1821/2), who married Alexander Wemyss. He died at Philhope Burnfoot and the family are buried at Borthwick Waas. It is also possible that he was the Alexander, married to Margaret Barry, whose daughter Margaret was baptised in Hobkirk in 1814. Peter 'Pete' (20th C.) proprietor of a greengrocer's shop at 2 Howegate in the 1950s.

gowan (gow-in) n. the daisy, Bellis perennis, but sometimes another small yellow or white flower – 'It's no' because the gowans braw are bonnie 'roond its ruit ...' [JoHa], 'The gowan's fair when fu' o' dew, as morning lights the lea ...' [JoHa], 'And where's the place o' rest? The ever changing hame – Is it the gowan's breast, Or 'neath the bell o' faem?' Gowanlock see Govenlock

Gowans (gow-inz) n. James (1836–1917) lived in Hawick much of his life, but died in Glasgow. He married Isabella Scott Purvis, who died in 1898, aged 55. Their children were: James, who was a schoolmaster in the Outer Hebrides and then in Edinburgh, as well as a fruit grower in British Columbia; George, who had a school in South Africa; another son who was a plumber; Katie, who married Dr. James P.A. Wilson; and Bella. John (17th C.) listed as resident at Harden in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His name is recorded as 'Gouans'. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1720 he was at Roberton Burnfoot, in 1722 at Mains, in 1727 at Parkhill, in 1733 at Mains, in 1735 at Parkhill and in 1743 at Roberton Burnfoot. It seems likely he was descended from the earlier John. He married Rachel Main (also from Roberton) in 1719. The following children born in Roberton Parish are probably his (although with no mother's names given, this is uncertain): Margaret (b.1720); Isobel (b.1722); Rachel (b.1724); John (b.1727); William (b.1730); Isobel (b.1733); and Bettie

(b.1735). Perhaps the same John secondly married Agnes Hardie in Roberton in 1740 and had further children including; Agnes (b.1741); John (b.1743); and Adam (b.1747). Joseph (17th C.) listed among the poor living at Hassendean on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (18th/19th C.) servant at Riddell in Lilliesleaf Parish in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799 (also written 'Gouans' and 'Gowan').

Gracie (grā-see) n. Bryce (b.1837) born in Troqueer, near Dumfries. He came to Hawick in the 1870s to work in the hosiery industry. He married Elizabeth Carter and their children were: Agnes (b.1857), who married John Scott; John (b.1859), who married Isabella Scott in Hawick; Isabella (b.1861), who was a midwife who married John Aitkin; Alexander (b.1863); Elizabeth (1865–1953), who married John Brotchie Brown; Mary (b.1867), who married John Alfred Scarborough in Wilton; Bryce (b.1869), who married Rachel Cairns in Hawick; William James (b.1871); Janet (b.1873), who married Archibald Aimers; Jessie (b.1876), who married John Stanton; and Margaret (b.1880), who died in infancy. The youngest 3 children were born in Hawick. Bryce (1892–1939) son of William and grandson of the earlier Bryce. He was a tailor in Hawick. He served during WWI. He later emigrated to California. William James (1871–1937) born in Maxwelltown, just before his family moved to Hawick. He married Isabella Richardson (1872–1932). Their children were: Mary (b.1895), who died in infancy; William Paul (1897–1917); and Bryce (1892–1939), tailor.

Graden (grā-din) n. former lands and tower in the northrn part of Linton Parish. It was home of a branch of the Ker family. The tower was demolished in the mid-18th century. There is another place of the same name near Coldstream in Berwickshire.

Graham (grā-um) n. Adam (19th/20th C.) undertaker in Hawick. His firm also ran taxis and rented out charabancs, based at 20 Drumlanrig Square. They transported soldiers between Stobs and Hawick. He hired his nephew David Peacock as a motor engineer and driver. The bus part of the company was taken over by S.M.T. in 1935. Alexander (16th/17th C.) grandson of William of Carlisle and great-grandson of 'Long Will'. He was described by Lord Burghley as 'principle guide to Buckclughe' and hence presumably involved in some way with the Carlisle raid of 1596. He is probably the 'Alexander Grame alias Geordies Sandie' who was an English fugitive in late 1596 who was said to have been at the rescue of Kinmont Willie and 'ever since is a common rider with Buccleuch, Mangerton and Whithaugh in their roads here'. Alexander (19th C.) along with John, presumably his brother or son, he was listed in Pigot's 1837 directory as an ironmonger on the High Street. Andrew 'Little Andro' (16th C.) recorded in 1580/1 along with 'Reid Andro' Armstrong. A man in Selkirk complained that if the Bailies there had apprehended the 2 men and subsequently released them, then the Bailies would be responsible if he came to harm. He was recorded in 1586/7 as 'Andro Grahame, callit Litle Andro', among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties; his brother Ninian is also listed. Andrew (16th/17th C.) one of the Grahams of northern Cumbria. In 1597 he gave evidence befor the English Wardens describing how he and other Grahams had aided Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in the rescue of Kinmont Willie from Carlisle Castle in the previous year. He explicitly mentioned how he and the Grahams from Brackenhill had met Scott of Buccleuch, Scott of Harden and Gilbert Eliott about 6 days earlier to plan the attack. Andrew (b.1784/5) born in Canonbie, he was a draper at 3 Sandbed. He was listed in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He was Junior Magistrate in the 1820s, recorded in 1828 when the Slitrig (Drumlanrig) Bridge was extended. In 1851 he was a retired draper on Teviot Square, and was listed among the local gentry on a directry of 1852. In 1852 No. 3 Sandbed was sold to George Drummond. In Leith in 1821 he married Christian, youngest daughter of John Nixon. Their children included: George (b.1824); Mary (b.1826); Jane Elliot (b.1827); and John (b.1830). He was one of only 11 residents of the Town who had been on the list for the Militia in 1803 and were still alive in 1862. Archibald (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His son John was baptised in 1635. Archibald (d.bef. 1706) merchant who was a Burgess of Edinburgh. He is recorded in 1706, when his son Walter, merchant in Hawick, was made a Burgess of Edinburgh by his right. This was probably Bailie Walter. Archibald (17th/18th C.) tenant in Raesknowe. He was witness in 1707 to a baptism in Hawick for weaver John Briggs. He is designated 'Mr' and the other witness was Andrew Riddell, tenant in Goldielands. Arthur of Canonbie (16th C.) eldest son of 'Long Will', the family moved to the Debateable Land in the early-to-mid-1500s. He had one daughter, who married Christopher Armstrong of Langholm. Arthur (16th C.) son of Fergus of the Mote and grandson of 'Long Will'. He married a Johnstone from Newby in Scotland. Their children included: William of the Mote, who married a daughter of Thomas Carlton. He was killed by Thomas Musgrave, Captain of Bewcastle. As a result his son William received an annual pension of £20 from the King, but Lord Burghley wrote that 'if his service hereafter be no better than as yet, the pension might be better bestowed, for he is a daily abettor of evil'. Charles (18th/19th C.) described as 'Yeomanry Trumper' in 1882 when the death of his infant son is recorded. He presumably played the trumpet for the local volunteers. David (17th C.) tenant in Raesknowe. He rented part of the farm of Raesknowe from the Duchess of Buccleuch in at least the period 1690–98. He was also resident at Raesknowe according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1700 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Gledstains in Raesknowe. He could be the David, married to Marion Bell, whose children born in Hawick Parish included: twins Bessie and William (b.1671); Robert (b.1675); and Archibald (b.1678). The witnesses in 1671 were John Elliot and John Bell (probably related to his wife). In 1682 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Bell, who was also a tenant at Raesknow. David (1677/8–1718) preacher at Teviothead 'chapel of ease' in 1715, when the church was started for people in the outlying parts of Cavers and Wilton Parishes. This is probably the same as the minister of Langholm from 1705, who was translated to Kirkmahoe in 1716 and died 2 years later. He may have simply travelled from Langholm to Teviothead periodically. He is already recorded in 1714 as 'preacher in ye meeting house in Carlangridge Chapel' when recorded as substitute for Hawick's absent minister. David (b.1807/8) from Selkirk, he was a grocer in Liliesleaf, listed in Pigot's 1852 directory. In 1851 he is recorded on the north side of Main Street. His wife was Mary and their children included John and Mary. Rev. David John (1955–) son of Frank Inglis Graham, who worked for the Post Office, and Jean Dodds. He grew up in Hawick, moving with his family to the Glasgow area in 1963. He graduated B.Sc. from Aberdeen University in 1978 and B.D. in 1981, as well as Ph.D. from Glasgow University in 1991. He was lecturer in Biblical Studies at Glasgow Bible College and served as assistant minister at Motherwell South Dalziel and Milngavie St. Paul's before being ordained by Dumbarton Presbytery in 1982. In 1998 he became minister of the linked charges of Dirleton Kirk, Dirleton and Abbey Church, North Berwick. He was appointed Tynedale New Testament Lecturer in 2000. In 1982 he married Mary Scollon MacIntyre (b.1958), daughter of Robert Blevins and they had a daughter Lucilla Mary. He wrote several articles that appeared in scholarly religious publications, including: 'The Dilemma of the Male Feminist Critic' (1996); 'Christ Imagery in Recent Film' (1996); contribution to 'Explorations in Theology and Film. Movies and Meaning' (1997); 'Comments on Commentaries: Matthew' (1997); 'Pastoral Care in the New Testament' (1999); 'Matthew' (2000); and 'Jewish and Early Christian Views of IlIness, Healing and Medicine' (2000). Mrs. Elizabeth (19th C.) recorded as owner of part of Howlands, along with Mrs. Agnes Bowie, in the mid-1800s. It is unclear who her husband might have been. Fergus (15th C.) recorded in 1456/7 as witness to the sasine for Ewesdale passing from Robert of Ewesdale to George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus. He may have been related to Robert of Ewesdale. His name is written 'Ferguse the Grame'. Fergus of the Mote (16th C.) son of 'Long Will', he probably lived near the old Liddel Castle. His children included: William, who died without issue; Arthur, who married a Johnstone from Newby; Richard of Brackenhill, who married a Batison from Scotland; George and Francis, who both lived in Scotland; a daughter who married Armstrong 'of Cafell' (probably Calfield) in Scotland; and another daughter who married Hector Armstrong of the Harelaw. Fergus (16th/17th C.) son of 'Richie's Will', he was said to have been an active participant in the rescue of Kinmont Willie. In late 1596 an English letter describes that 'he is in prison, as he is known to be a chief instrument between Buccleuch, the Grames and Kinmont for the latter's loosing'. He married a daughter of Kinmont Willie. He could be the same as the man referred to as Fergus of Plomp. Francis of Canonbie (16th/17th C.). Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch said that he would not have been able to carry out the rescue of Kinmont Willie without 'my guid frind Francis of Cannabie, and of his brother Langton, frinds to my brother Bothewell'. He married a daughter of Edward Irving. George of the Fauld (16th C.) son of 'Long Will', he lived on the English side of the Border, near the Esk. His children include: Robert, who married with 'Caruddoses' in Scotland; and William, who married an Armstrong of Whithaugh. George (b.1702/3) weaver in Appletreehall. His father lived in Wilton Parish and he had an aunt who lived at Mabonlaw. In 1716 he was a farm servant at Easter Heap and in 1717 at Newton. He then served an apprenticeship as a weaver in Lilliesleaf Parish before returning to Wilton, setting up at Clarilaw in about 1723. In about 1734 he moved to Burnhead, was at Heap 1736–41, Stirches 1741–44, Lees 1744–47, Newton 1747–49, Stirches again 1749–56 and then Appletreehall. He is probably the George who in 1737 witnessed a baptism for William Nichol, who lived at Stouslie and another for Robert (probably a relative), who was living at Brieryyards. He was among the men selected to perambulate the boundaries of Wilton Common in 1765 and gave evidence about recollections of the use of the Common. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Lees in 1744 and 1747. He married Elizabeth Noble and their children included Helen (b.1744) and Agnes (b.1747). The witnesses in 1744 were Robert Graham (surely a close relative) and James Scott and in 1747 were James Dryden and Adam Armstrong. He may be the George who in 1737 witnessed a baptism for William Nichol, who lived at Stouslie and another for Robert (probably a relative), who was living at Brieryyards. He may be the weaver in Appletreehall who was among the men selected to perambulate the boundaries of Wilton Common in 1765. George (d.bef. 1790) resident of Hawick. His daughter Helen died in 1790. He could be the George who married Helen Fletcher in Wilton in 1754. George Rome (b.1835) son of John, farmer at Hollows Mill, near Canonbie. His older brother Simon trained as a draper in Hawick, with his younger brother John also in the same business, and their older sister Mary having married Hawick draper Walter Armstrong. In 1861 he was a draper's assistant with Wood, Graham & Co., 6 Tower Knowe. From 1871 he moved to live with his mother's family, the Dicksons. George (19th C.) resident of London. In 1867 he donated to the Museum specimens of lead ore, bank cheques and tokens from upper Canada and other coins. Hugh (1966–) from Stirling, he played as prop forward in rugby. He was capped 25 times for Scotland and also played professionally in both rugby union and rugby league teams. He coached the Scottish national team forwards, later being coach for Gala R.F.C. In the period 2017–20 he was coach for Hawick, being credited for turning the 'Great Escape' and turning around the team's fortunes. Hugh 'Hughie the Graeme' (16th C.) subject of a Border ballad, it is unclear if he was a historical figure or not. The story is that the Bishop of Carlisle seduced Graeme's wife, and so he carried out a raid in which he stole the Bishop's finest mare, was then captured by Lord Scroope and hanged at Carlisle Castle. There are several different versions – ' 'Here Johnie Armstrang, take thou my sword, That is made o' the metal sae fine; And when thou comest tae the English side, Remember the death of Hughie the Graeme' ' [T]. Hutchin (16th C.) youngest son of 'Long Will'. In the survey of English Grahams carried out by Lord Burghley in 1596, he is described as 'base', presumably meaning that he was illegitimate. His children included: William, who was killed without issue; Andrew, who became chief of the local Grahams; Robert, also killed; Davie, killed, but left children; Richard, married an Irwin of Hodham in Scotland; Arthur, who married a daughter of Richard Graham, 'Gares'; and a daughter who married 'Kinmont' Willie Armstrong, the man who was rescued from Carlisle Castle. Hutchin 'Richie's Hutchin' (16th/17th C.) Englishman who was declared an outlaw for the murder of Thomas Graham (son of 'Richie's Will') and John 'Orfeur' around the end of the 16th century. He was also indicted in England for helping Scott of Buccleuch in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596 from Carlisle Castle (being 'the third man that entered the same'), as well as for theft and raiding (particularly during the 'Ill Week') and for speaking against the Queen and King. His brothers William ('Mickle Will'), George ('Richie's Geordie'), William (alias 'Carlisle') and Richard (alias 'Lenox') were also convicted. In about 1605 he obtained remission for helping in the capture of 'Sandy's Ringan' Armstrong. There are also mentions of 'Young Hutchin' around 1606, who may have been his son. He is probably the 'Hutchon Grame' listed in a letter from Captain Musgrave in 1583, listing his children as Andrew, Robbie, Arthur and Richie. Hutchin (16th/17th C.) grandson of Hutchin and great-grandson of 'Long Will'. He married a daughter of John Armstrong of Hollows. James (17th C.) footman to Walter, Earl of Buccleuch. He was listed in the deceased Earl's inventory in 1633, when he was owed for his annual fee. James (1612–50) Marquess of Montrose. He was a leader of the Covenanter forces after 1639, leading the army (including the Teviotdale Regiment) which invaded England and captured Newcastle in 1640. He opposed the Solemn League and Covenant and became the main leader of Royalist forces in Scotland from 1644, including at the Battle of Auldearn, where several local Gladstains and Douglases fell. However, his men were massacred at Philiphaugh in 1645. He fled to Norway, but was later made Captain-General of Scotland by Charles II. Landing in the Orkneys in 1650 he raised a small army, but was betrayed and handed over to the Covenanters. He was hanged in Edinburgh, his head fixed on a spike and his body quartered and distributed among the Scottish cities. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Goodfellow and their children included: Helen (b.1677); an unnamed child (b.1683); and Christian (b.1686). In 1687 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Cook. In 1689 he was recorded 'in Altoncrofts' when he (along with Robert Cook) witnessed the baptism of an illegitimate child for Walter Scott of Altoncroft. James (17th/18th C.) married Janet Scott in 1706. The marriage was proclaimed in Wilton in July and in Cavers in August. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Clarilaw in 1737 and Braidlees in 1739. He married Bessie Lamb (also from Wilton) in 1737 and their children included Walter (b.1737) and John (b.1739). The witnesses in 1737 were John and James Dryden and in 1739 were Adam Brown and James Dryden. James (18th C.) resident of Falnash. His wife was Jane Graham and their children included Mary (b.1757) and Betty (b.1758). The witnesses in 1757 were the whole congregation. Sir James R.G. of Netherby (1792–1861) eldest son of Sir James, the first Baronet of Netherby Hall in Cumberland. He served as 1st Lord of the Admiralty. He was M.P. for several different parts of England, including Carlisle 1826–29 and East Cumberland 1830–37. He switched from being a Whig to a Tory in 1835. In 1838 he proposed a motion in the House of Commons to disqualify Hawick from being a polling station for future elections after the Radicals had been harassing Tory supporters at elections. The motion was defeated by only 22 votes. He was present at the banquet held at Branxholme in 1839 in honour of the Duke of Buccleuch. James (1838–97) son of coal-agent William and Janet Turnbull. He was a frame-worker in Hawick. However, he also started his own small hosiery manufacturers 'James Graham & Son' (according to his obituary). In 1866 he married Ann Little, daughter of James Kennedy. Their children included: Elizabeth Paterson (b.1866); William (b.1868); James Kennedy (b.1870); Janet (b.1871); Walter Warwick (b.1872); and John (b.1874). He could be the James of the Back Row who in 1876 donated to the Museum 'two eggs laid by a green parrot, which has been eleven years' in his possession. James (19th C.) farmer at Braidlie on the Hermitage Water. He is recorded there in 1868. He won cattle prizes in agricultural shows. His daughter Ann Twentyman married Dr. David Somerville Doughty in 1891. He was probably the 'Graham of Broadlee' listed among local 'Hard-riding Dick's' in H.H. Dixon's 'Field and Fern or Scottish Flocks and Herds (South)' (1865). James E. 'Jimmie' Cornet in 1933, worked as a dyer. He assisted Bill Brydon as Left-Hand Man again after WWII. Jane 'Jean' (b.c.1785) grocer on Brougham Place in 1841 and the Round Close in 1851. Her children included: John (b.1807/8), a frameworker, born in Hawick; Thomas (b.c.1815), a watchmaker, born in England; and Elizabeth (b.1816/7), also born in England. She could be the Jean listed as a grocer on Silver Street in Pigot's 1837 directory. It is unclear who her husband was. Jean Cunninghame (??–) Lady Polwarth, who wrote 'Sailor's daughter: 1928–1946' (1993). Sir John of Abercorn (d.c.1337) said to have been granted the Soulis family lands in Liddesdale around the time of Robert the Bruce. He had a son, also Sir John, who died without issue. His heiress (perhaps Mary, Margaret or Elizabeth) may have married Sir William Douglas, the Knight of Liddesdale, to whom Liddesdale passed. However, this is all unclear. John (15th/16th C.) probably from Liddesdale. In 1497 he was one of the witnesses for a document dealing with the lands of Robert Elliot of Redheugh. He could be he John, brother of Matthew who was listed in the Exchequer Rolls among men of the area around Hawick who were fined in 1501. That John was brother of Matthew in Howpasley, who was surety for himself at the Justice-aire in 1502 and was fined for non-appearance. John (16th C.) witness in 1550 to a lease granted by the curators of the young James Cranston to his mother Janet Beaton, who was wife of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He is listed as 'Johnne the Grahame'. Probably the same John witnessed a bond in 1548 when some Elliots had a bond to enter Robert Crozier as a prisoner. John of 'Medoppe' (16th C.) son of 'Long Will'. Lord Burghley describes that he had sons Richard, William, Robert and John, who all married Scottish women. He could be the 'Wills Jock from Brackenhill's house' who was said to have met with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch about 6 days before the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596, to help plan the raid on Carlisle Castle. John 'Jock' (16th/17th C.) son of Rob. In 1594/5 he was offered as a pledge for William of Larriston, but was deemed to 'not worth the sum'. John (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Whithaugh Mill in 1642 he is on a long list of Border 'notorious criminalls, theeves and ressetters of thift' who were to be captured and tried. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His son Thomas was baptised in 1632. John of Claverhouse (1648–89) soldier, from a family who were staunchly loyal to the throne. He was 'Bonnie Dundee' to those who considered him a hero and 'Bluidy Clavers' to his detractors; his reputation has certainly been coloured by propaganda. The song 'Bonnie Dundee' was popularised by Sir Walter Scott. He served in France and Holland, returning to Scotland in 1677, where he rose through the ranks, eventually becoming a member of the Privy Council. He was employed by Charles II to enforce Episcopacy upon Scotland, and to persecute the Covenanters, being given special powers as head of a military commission to seek out conventicles. One of the first such expeditions was to Galashiels in 1679, where a field meeting was held by Thomas Wilkie perhaps (although there are several men of similar name) deposed minister of Lilliesleaf. In 1681 he passed through Hawick, Selkirk, Buccleuch, Craik and Wolfcleuchhead with his dragoons, in search of conventicles. George Deans refused to take him to Galashiels, defying the Bailies. His troop mustered in Hawick in 1685 and he wrote a letter from Thorlieshope in the same year. Later he was made Viscount Dundee and became a Jacobite supporter, and raised the standard of James in the north. He married Jean Cochrane, from a Presbyterian family. He was killed at the Battle of Killiecrankie. John (17th C.) servant in Newton, probably the one in Bedrule. He was recorded there in 1684 on a list of Covenanter fugitives, among men from the Southdean area. John (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick, son of merchant Walter. He is probably the John born to Walter and Janet Briggs in 1688. He was among the group of young men who were fined in 1706 for being involved in the distubances at the Common Riding that year, including carrying their own flag and defying the Bailies. He and James Scott ('of Westport') were briefly imprisoned and then fined, with his father Walter, as well as Francis Elliot, acting as their cautioners. In 1709 he was recorded as a merchant when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Porteous. Also in 1709 he married Helen Culbertson 'in Saltpreston'. Their children included Helen (b.1711). John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Raesknowe. In 1704 he was witness to a baptism for Robert Tudhope, who also lived at Raesknowe. He was there in about 1710, as attested in evidence given regarding the state of Hawick's Common in 1767. He could be the same John as the later tenant in Allanhaugh Mill. John (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He was recorded as a merchant in 1711 when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Paterson of Burnflat. In 1720 after not appearing on 3 occasions at Hawick Kirk for some sin, he was threatened with excommunication. Eventually he 'satisfied in sackcloth' 11 times before he was 'received into the society of the kirk as a lively member thereof'. It is possible he is the son of merchant Walter, who was part of the rebel party at the Common Riding of 1706. He may be the John who, along with Bailie Walter, witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1729 for merchant Walter Tudhope and Janet (perhaps his sister). John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Allanhaugh Mill. He is probably the John who in 1725 witnessed a baptism for William Riddell. He married Margaret Helm in 1724; she was also from Hawick Parish. Their children included: Christian (b.1725); and David (b.1728). The 1725 baptism was witnessed by John Scott in Over Southfield and Andrew Turnbull in Drydenburn; on the same day he witnessed a baptism for Andrew Turnbull. He may be the John who hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth in 1759. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Philhopeshiel in 1774 and Broadlee in 1785 and 1793. He may be son of the Thomas recorded at Philhope a generation or so earlier. He married Jane Gray in Roberton in 1773 and their children included: Thomas (b.1774), perhaps the man recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls in 1794; Janet (b.1783); John (b.1785); and an unnamed child (b.1793). John (1747/8–1820) Schoolmaster in Eskdalemuir. He married Elizabeth Turner, whose death is recorded in Hawick in 1804. They are buried at Watcarrick. John (18th/19th C.) brewer of Hawick who was one of the first members of the Curling Club (so recorded in 1812). He may have been related to (or feasibly the same as) the later proprietor of the Holland House. John (b.c.1770) inn-keeper and spirit dealer at Dovemount. He is thus recorded in 1841, when he was living with Anne (probably his daughter) and another Anne (probably his grand-daughter). His inn was one of the earliest buildings in the Dovemount area. Perhaps the same John was a merchant in Hawick on the 1801 ballot for the Militia. John (b.c.1770s) servant at Braidlee in Castleton Parish. In 1797 he was listed among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. John (b.1785/6) from Langholm, he was a clockmaker in Hawick. In 1841 he was listed at about 17 High Street, and in 1851 and 1861 was at No. 29. In 1842 he was in jail in Dumfries. He was listed as a clockmaker on the High Street in Slater's 1852 directory; note that there was also a separate 'Jonathan' who was a clockmaker in Hawick at the same time. His wife was Margaret. He had grand-daughters Margaret Taggart and Margaret Bell. He may be the 'Mr. Graham, clockmaker', who donated coins to the Museum in 1857. John (b.1791/2) farmer at Hollows Mill near Canonbie. He married Elizaberth Dickson. They had 4 sons and 4 daughters: Mary (b.1827), who married Walter Armstrong, draper in Hawick; Robert (b.1828); Sybella Rome (b.1828, twin of Robert); Helen (b.1830); Margaret (b.1831); Simon Dickson (b.1833); George Rome (b.1835); and John (b.1838). His sons Simon and John became drapers in Hawick (with George being a draper's assistant there), establishing Wood, Graham & Co., at the Tower Knowe in the 1850s, and then forming S. & J. Graham, silk merchants, in London in 1860 or 1861. John (b.1792/3) from England, he was a grocer and meal-dealer in Newcastleton. In 1851 he was at about 46 North Hermitage Street, and he was recorded on a directory of 1852. He may be the same John who ran a weekly cart to Brampton and another to Hawick (returning from the Bull & Butcher in Hawick on Thursdays). His wife was Jane and their children included Richard and Jane. John (19th C.) born in Hawick Parish, he was a farm servant. In 1841 he was living at Todshawhill Cottages and in 1851 and 1861 at North Sinton Cottages. He married Jane Law from Galashiels, and their children (born in Roberton and Ashkirk Parishes) included: Elizabeth (b.1833/4); Thomas (b.1835/6); Margaret (b.1837/8); William (b.1839/40); Christian (b.1842/3); John (b.1844); and Archibald (b.1847). John (b.1831) proprietor of 'Graham's Hotel' at 6 Back Row from 1869. He was son of coal agent William and Janet Turnbull. In 1851 he was a lodger on the Howegate, working as a frameworker and had the same job in 1861, with his wife being 'Milliner Straw-Hat Maker'. The family were at 8 Back Row in 1861, 1871 and 1881. In 1852 he married Helen Riddle (b.1831). Their children included: Isabella Richardson Riddle (b.1852); William Turnbull Riddle (b.1853), who married Margaret Govenlock; John (b.1855), who moved to Dublin as a coach painter; George Turnbull (b.1857), who died young; James Melrose (b.1868); Walter (1860–64); Thomas (b.1862), who married Isabella Haldane and joined the Black Watch; Martin (b.1864); Helen (or 'Nellie', b.1865), married John Murray; Agnes (b.1867), who died young;

Walter (again, b.1868), who emigrated to America; George Turnbull (b.1869), also emigrated to America; Mary Christie (b.1872); Agnes Martin (b.1873); and Jessie Isabella (b.1875). His daughter Isabella was presumably the 'Miss Isa Graham' who in 1875 donated to the Museum '2 African switches, yam, African bag, native comb, thread, and Indian corn'. John (b.c.1835) from Middlebie, he was a road contractor at Upper Glendivan in Ewes Parish in 1861. In 1857 he married Elizabeth (1832–1906), daughter of Robert McVittie, road contractor at Fiddleton. Their children included: James (b.1857); Robert (b.1859); Jane (b.1860); Michael (b.1862); John (b.1864); Elizabeth First (b.1866); Mary Scott (b.1868); Elizabeth Little (b.1870), who married James Hislop; Helen (b.1872); Janet (b.1874); and Barbara (b.1876). Several of his children were born in Teviothead Parish. John (b.1837/8) youngest son of John, farmer at Hollows Mill near Canonbie. The family had been farmers and millers on the Esk and Liddel since the time of Mary Queen of Scots. He probably moved to Hawick to apprentice as a draper, and in about 1860/1 with his brother John he founded S. & J. Graham, silk merchants of London. After 1875 (the Collie Failure) he became traveller on the Continent for Wilsons & Glennys. Retiring in 1892, he lived at Huntingstile, Grasmere, and then in France, where he died at Mentone. He married Jane Murray Wilson, daughter of Hawick Provost George Wilson and his brother Simon married his wife's cousin, Annie, daughter of John G. Wilson of Ladylaw. Their children were: Walter (b.1868); Elizabeth Richardson Dickson (b.1870); Katherine Glenny (b.1871); Madge (b.1875); Michael George (b.1879); and Jean (d.1936), who married artist Frank Bramley. John Hart (19th/20th C.) undertaker in Hawick. He was partner in the firm J. & A. Graham, which also hired out cars and charbancs, based at 20 Drumlanrig Square. The firm was dissolved when he retired in 1914, with Adam continuing. John 'Jock the Dog' (??–) larger than life Hawick man, known for tales of his huge appetite. He has worked in the mills. Jonathan (b.1802/3) from Langholm, he was a master watch and clockmaker at about 32 High Street. Note that there was another clockmaker called 'John' in Hawick at the same time. They are both listed in Slater's 1852 directory. His wife was Jane and their children included Thomas and Jane. Joseph (b.c.1790) tailor living at Ryeleahead, at the southern end of Castleton Parish, in 1841. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included John, Robert, Ann and Jane. Mandy (??–) one of two women who attempted to join Ride-outs in 1996. Mary (b.1827/8) daughter of draper Andrew. The family were living at 3 Sandbed in 1861. In 1867 she donated Russian and American coins to the Museum. Matthew (15th/16th C.) tenant in Howpasley. His brother John was recorded at the Justice-aire in 1502, when he was fined for non-appearance. Probably the same John was listed in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501 among mostly local men who had been fined, with his brother John's name appearing after his. Matthew (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1502; he was stated to have once been in Branxholme and now in Hislop, was surety for himself and was fined for non-appearance. It seems unlikely that he was the same man as Matthew in Howpasley (whose brother was recorded at the Justice-aire shortly after him). Matthew (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His wife was Nelly Oliver and they had a son Matthew (b.1783). He may be the Matthew who was a subscriber to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). Nicholas (13th/14th C.) petitioned Edward I in 1304 for return of his lands of 'Halsyngton' (probably Hassendean). These had belonged to Earl Patrick and leased to Sir William de Denum for a term. Also in 1304 there was a write from Edward I to the Sheriff of Edinburgh to deliver to him the fees from the Barony of Dalkeith, which he had held before the war in Scotland. Ninian (16th C.) recorded in 1586/7 when he is recoded with his brother 'Little Andro', among Borderers accused of crimes who had failed to appear in court and were given one more chance to find sureties. Patrick (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those 'Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun'. He was probably from the west side. Richard of Netherby (16th C.) eldest son of 'Long Will', he was prominent in the Debateable Land in the mid-1500s. His son Richard married a daughter of Edward Aglionby, which allied the Grahams with several prominent families on both sides of the Border. Other children were: William, who married a Scottish Elliot; George, who lived at 'Red-Kirk' in Scotland and married a Maxwell; Thomas of Galloway, who married a Scottish woman; and an illegitimate son. Richard of Netherby (16th C.) son of Richard and grandson of 'Long Will'. He married a daughter of Edward 'Eglyonbye' of Carlisle, which allied the Grahams with the Aglionbys, the Musgraves of Crookdale, the Armstrongs of Hollows and the Salkelds of Corby. He received lands from Henry VIII and arms from the Duke of Norfolk. His children included: Walter, who married a daughter of Robert of the Fauld and became the chief of the clan; Davie and William, who married Scottish women; John; other sons of unknown name; and Marie, who married John Armstrong of the Hollows. Richard 'Richie' of Brackenhill (1555–1606) son of Fergus of the Mote. His father had acquired Brackenhill (near Longtown) from Sir Thomas Dacre and he built a tower there in 1584. His loyalties to England were questionable. In 1592 he was part of the Earl of Bothwell's force that besieged Falkland Palace. After retreating back to England, he sheltered James Douglas of Spott. He was accused of helping Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch break into Carlisle Castle to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. Also in 1596 he was accused of taking 'blackmail' and indicted for the murder of 'Percival's Geordie' Graham, but made restitution with the family. He married a Batison from Scotland. Robert of Ewesdale (15th C.) recorded in 1456 when his former hereditably held lands of Ewesdale were granted by King James II to George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus. In another charter of 1456 he was 'of Auldmontrose' and 'uncle by the father's side' of George Douglas, Earl of Angus; his lands of Ewesdale were swapped with the Earl's lands of 'Strathechty' in Forfarshire). In 1457 the Earl of Angus granted lands of 'Widdyrryshalch' to his uncle Robert Graham of Auld Montrose, who was probably also him. Robert (15th C.) witness to a charter of 1489, signed at the monastery of Paisley. Robert of the Fauld (16th C.) eldest son of George of the Fauld and grandson of 'Long Will'. He was one of the Grahams of northern Cumbria who Lord Scrope claimed confessed to him about allowing passage of Buccleuch's men during the raid on Carlisle Castle. According to the survey of Grahams carried out by Lord Burghley in 1596, he married with 'Caruddoses' (perhaps Carruthers) in Scotland. His children included: William, who married a daughter of Armstrong of Whithaugh; and daughter who married Walter Graham of Netherby; and other sons. Robert (17th C.) listed among the 'Cottars in Hassanden' on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the Robert who witnessed baptisms in Roberton for James Thomson in 1680 and for both Robert Scott and Thomas Graham in 1681. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident in Raesknowe. In 1708 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Craw in Branxholme Town. He may be the Robert, son of David, baptised in 1675. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Lees in 1729 and Brieryyards in 1737. He witnessed a baptism in 1735 for James Dryden in Clarilaw, another for William Lunn in Clarilaw in 1742 and another in 1744 for George in Less (probably a close relative). In 1726 he married Jean Henderson, the marriage being proclaimed in Wilton and Minto Parishes. Their children included William (b.1727), Agnes (b.1729), Robert (b.1737) and Alison (b.1743). The witnesses in 1729 were John Scott and John Dryden and in 1737 were George (probably related) and John Lockie. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Helen (or 'Nelly') Simpson and their children included Margaret (b.1779) and Robert (b.1780). Robert (b.1801/2) joiner on the Cross Wynd. In 1841 he was living there, but had moved to 1 High Street by 1851. His wife was Margaret and their children included John, Thomas, Isabella, Margaret, William, Alexander and Janet. Robert (19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jane Inglis and their son William was baptised in 1853. Robert (b.1814/5) carter living at 69 High Street in 1861. His wife was Margaret and their children included Jean (who married William McDougall), Elizabeth, Thomas, John Robert, George and James. Robert M. (b.1880) born in Hawick, he moved to Edinburgh in about 1898, where he was a tailor. An accident in his youth prevented him from achieving his sporting ambitions, although he remained an enthusiastic supporter of sports, particularly rugby. Simon 'Sim' (16th C.) recorded as 'Sym of Logane' in 1590 when part of a complaint against several Armstrongs and others by Alexander Jardine of Applegirth. Others listed include Kinmont Willie and Sandy's Ringan Armstrong. Simon Dickson (b.1833) from Canonbie, son of farmer John and Elizabeth Dickson. He moved to Hawick to become an apprentice with draper Walter Armstrong at the Tower Knowe. Walter was his brother-in-law, having married Mary Graham in Hawick. Along with William Wood he formed the drapers firm Wood, Graham & Co., Tower Knowe. Then in 1860/1 he and his brother John founded S. & J. Graham, silk merchants, London. He married Annie, daughter of John G. Wilson of Ladylaw. She was a cousin of his brother John's wife, Jane Murray Wilson. He joined the Archæological Society in 1858 and donated some coins to the Museum in that year. His caricature appears in the book 'Noctes Hawickianæ'.

Thomas (15th C.) witness to a charter signed at 'Wester Torban' in 1450, relating to lands in the Edinburgh area. Perhaps the same Thomas was a Bailie of Linlithgow in a charter of 1487. Thomas of Kirkandrews (16th C.) son of 'Long Will'. His sons included: George, who married an Armstrong of Mangerton; and Christopher and Davie, who both married Scottish women. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Philhopeshiel in 1743 and Philhope in 1762. He married Elspeth Reid in 1742. his children, baptised in Roberton, included Janet (b.1743), Thomas (b.1751), Andrew (b.1758) and Elspeth (b.1762). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Ewes Parish. He married Isabel Little and their children included: John (b.1771); Elizabeth (b.1773); Thomas (b.1780); and Robert (b.1783). His earlier children were baptised in Langholm, but in 1783 he was at Fiddleton Bar. The witnesses in 1783 were Gavin Elliot and Charles Aitchison. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Margaret Knox and their children included Margaret (b.1781). The witnesses were Thomas Knox and Robert Graham, who were probably related to him and his wife. He could be the Thomas, son of Thomas, baptised in Roberton Parish in 1751. He could be the Thomas recorded at Branxholme on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (18th C.) recorded at Broadlee in Roberton Parish on the 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. He may be the Thomas, son of John, who was baptised in 1774. Thomas (b.1779/80) from Canonbie, he was farmer at Harden. He was recorded there in 1841, and in 1851 was there farming 500 acres and employing 7 people. He married Margaret Scott in 1829. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident at Borthwick Mains. He was recorded as tenant there on the 1812 ballot for the Militia in Roberton Parish. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He muct have had a local connection. Thomas (b.1814/5) born in Maryport, England, son of John and Mary. He was a watchmaker on Brougham Place and then at 16 High Street. He was listed as a clockmaker and engraver on Buccleuch Street in Pigot's 1837 directory. In the 1841 census he was living at Brougham Place with grocer Jane Graham, possibly his mother (if the name was wrong). He was at about 16 High Street in 1851 and appears on the High Street in Slater's 1852 directory. He married Isabella Wilson in 1848 and they had a son John. He may be the 'Tammy Graham' mentioned in these lines – 'Sally Maclusky, Betty Johnny, Jamie Adams and Tammy Graham, The little Gover as smart as ony, Auld Mag Lamb and her penny krame' [HI]. A portrait of him exists. Thomas (1861/2–1935) son of John, he was proprietor of the Holland House, like his father. He served for 25 years in the Black Watch and was killed in a motorbike accident at Clarilaw. His wife was Isabella. His sons James Haldane (d.1918), John and Thomas all served in WWI in the Black Watch. Bailie Walter (17th/18th C.) probably son of merchant Archibald. He was a merchant in Hawick who was a Bailie in the 1690s, and also recorded as Bailie (or ex-Bailie) in 1701, 1702, 1703, 1706, 1708, 1709 and 1712. He appears to have served as some kind of treasurer in 1701, after already being a Bailie. He is probably the merchant listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4 and may be the Walter resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He witnessed a baptism for Walter Wilson in 1695. He is probably the Bailie Graham who was charged by the Council to appear before the 'commissioners of unfree traders' to complain about the sum levied on Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1700 for carrier David Minto and for merchant William Elliot, in 1701 for fellow merchant and Bailie, George Martin, for others in 1702, for Bailie George Martin in 1706, for John Laidlaw (servant at Harwood) and Bailie George Martin in 1708 and for weaver William Hill in 1709. His 'servitrix' Isobel Beattie got married in 1709. He is probably the Walter who in 1712 (along with Walter Elliot) witnessed a baptism for William Gledstains and another for shoemaker Robert Elliot and the Bailie Walter who witnessed a baptism for carrier Gideon Amos in 1720. In 1706 his son John was among the young men fined for the disturbances at the Common Riding that year; he was there described as a merchant and ex-Bailie and acted as cautioner for the accused men. This John was probably the son of Walter and Janet Briggs born in Hawick in 1688, meaning that his wife would have been Janet Briggs. Perhaps the same Walter, merchant, is recorded becoming a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1706, by right of his deceased father Archibald, merchant, being a Burgess there. He was still on the Town Council in 1707 (when a fine was imposed on the 2 acting Bailies). He was an ex-Bailie when the bond was granted by the Council (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. Probably the same Walter is recorded as an elder of Hawick Parish in 1711. He may also be the Bailie Graham whose daughter Elizabeth married Thomas Huggan of Hawick in an 'irregular marriage' in Longtown. He is likely to be the Bailie Graham who was an elder of the Kirk, appointed in 1717 for collecting monies 'westward from the bridge to the foot of the play la', suggesting that he lived around this area; he was similarly appointed in 1722. In the 1718 survey of the lands of the Duchess of Buccleuch he is stated to be owner of a small piece of land within the East Mains of Hawick, extending to 2 acres and 12 perches. A great falling out with Bailie Ruecastle (one of the sitting Magistrates) in 1718 had to be resolved by the intervention of the Session and the Minister; he was at that time a councillor, and is said to have accused Ruecastle of 'Sacriledge, Thift' and other transgressions, the nature of which are unclear. In 1729 he witnessed a baptism for Thomas Wilkie and Janet Graham (probably his daughter) along with John (probably his son). He witnessed baptisms for weaver James Weens in 1730, for thatcher Gideon Scott in 1740 and for carrier George Richardson in 1741. He married Janet Bridges (or Briggs) and their children included John, Margaret (b.1692), Janet (b.1695), Archibald (b.1701), Jean (b.1702), Anna (b.1705) and Walter (b.1707). His wife's name is recorded in 1702 as 'Bessie'. The witnesses in 1695 were George Martin and John Turnbull, in 1702 were Bailie George Martin and innkeeper Francis Elliot, and in 1705 were Bailie George Martin and baker John Whillans. Janet, who married Walter Tudhope in Hawick in 1722, may have been his daughter. Walter of Netherby (16th/17th C.) son of Richard, he was a great-grandson of 'Long Will'. Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch wrote that he was one of the Grahams who helped him with the rescue of Kinmont Willie. He was imprisoned in Carlisle Castle in 1605 and transported in 1606. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1716. He probably married Margaret Lockie in Cavers in 1708. His children included Helen (b.1708), Margaret (b.1710), William (b.1712), James (b.1714) and Walter (b.1716). Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Effledge. His children baptised in Kirkton Parish included Malie (b.1718) and Mary (b.1720). Walter (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Riddell and their children included: John (b.1723); William (b.1725); Robert (b.1727); and Janet (b.1729). Dr. Walter (1762–1829) Hawick doctor of the early 1800s, born in Arthuret, Cumberland, son of Walter and Mary Johnson. He may have had a brother, Andrew, who was a doctor in Dalkeith. His premises were in Buccleuch Street. In about 1800 he was one of the local men contributing (£1 1s) to support the war against France. His assistant Nichol Mather is listed n Hawick on the ballot for the Militia in 1799. He was probably the Dr. Graham with whom Sir Andrew Smith served an apprenticeship. He was one of the doctors called in the trial for the murder case of 1814, resulting in Hawick's last hanging. He is recorded as Walter 'sen.' at Buccleuch Street on Pigot's 1825/6 directory and his house is marked on Wood's 1824 map. He also had a field up the Cross Wynd (perhaps the same plot of land labelled as owned by Dr. Wilson in 1824). He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. A portrait of him exists. He married Margaret Scott in Westerkirk in 1787, and their children (born in Arthuret, Cumberland) were: Mary (b.1790); Walter (b.1792), who was also a doctor in Hawick; and James (d.1799), who died in Hawick. Dr. Walter (c.1792–1858) son of Walter and Margaret Scott, he was born in Arthuret, Cumberland, and became a doctor in Hawick, like his father. His premises were on Buccleuch Street, probably at No. 10. He is recorded as Walter 'jun. M.D.' on Pigot's 1825/6 directory, and his house is marked on Wood's 1824 map. In Pigot's 1837 directory he was a physician on Buccleuch Street. He gave evidence in 1844 regarding the poor laws in Scotland, describing how diseases could spread unchecked in the Town's poorest lodging houses, where itinerant workers stayed. In Slater's 1852 directory 'Graham & Thompson' are listed as physicians on Buccleuch Street; he must therefore have been in partnership with George William Thomson. Later in life he lived at Borthaugh. In 1857 he donated copper coins to the Museum. In 1831 in Kelso he married Alison, daughter of Rev. William Brown of Eskdalemuir. Their children included: Walter (b.1832); Margaret Moffat (1834–63); Mary Elizabeth (b.1842), who married William Rodgie; and William Brown (b.1843). By 1861 his widow was living at Borthaugh along with her sisters Janet Brown and Margaret Scott, as well as 3 of their children. He died at Borthaugh. An obituary was written by Dr. John Douglas. William 'Long Will' (15th/16th C.) said to have been banished from Scotland in about 1515 and came into England with 8 sons. His descendants dominated the

in 1825. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Grahams. William (18th/19th C.) labourer at Harden in Castleton Parish. He is listed among male heads of households in 1835, when he had just left for America. William (b.1795/6) from England, he was farmer at Lawston in southern Castleton Parish. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He was recorded as head of his household in 1840 and 1841. In 1851 he was farming 500 acres and employing 8 labourers. His wife was Mary and their children included Mary, Thomas, Elizabeth, Robert, John, William, Christopher, James and Ann. William (b.c.1800) stocking weaver in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on Mather's Close. His wife was Agnes and their children included James, Helen, Mary, Agnes and Janet. William (b.1809) born at Fairnleyhaugh (or Fairnileehaugh) near Yair in Selkirkshire, he was a coal agent in Hawick. In 1841 he was on the Howgate working as an agricultural labourer. In 1851 he was living at 'Leafy House' (probably Ivy House) on Weensland Road and working as a mason's labourer. He was recorded as 'Carman' (i.e. coach-driver) in 1861, when he was living on Weensland Road. In 1829 in Stow he married Janet, daughter of Hawick shoemaker James Turnbull. Their children included: Margaret (b.1829), who married John Combe; John (b.1831), who was proprietor of 'Graham's Hotel' in Hawick; Agnes (or Ann, b.1835), who married Robert Halliday; James (b.1838), who married Ann Little Kennedy; Janet Turnbull (b.1841), who married baker William McCallum; and Helen (b.1844), who married Robert Jardine. He could be the William, son of John and Ann Dixon, born in Selkirkshire in 1803. Sgt. William (19th C.) veteran soldier who served in the Crimean War and the Indian Mutiny. He probably lived in Hawick. He can be seen in an early photograph, in the uniform of the 4th Roxburghshire Volunteers. William (19th C.) married Joan (or Jean) Walker. Their children included: James (b.1843), baptised in Hawick Parish; and Jean (b.1846), baptised in Hawick Free Kirk. William Turnbull Riddle (b.1853) eldest son of John and Helen Riddle. In 1875 he married Margaret Ruickbie Govenlock, descendant of James Ruickbie. Their son William Nichol was Cornet in 1902. The family lived at 14 Howegate. William Nichol (b.1881) Cornet in 1902 and one of the founder members of the Callants' Club. He played for Hawick R.F.C. and worked as a plumber. His father was William Turnbull Riddle and his mother was Margaret Ruickbie Govenlock, great-grand-daughter of poet James Ruickbie (also spelled 'Graeme' and formerly 'Ghram', 'Ghrame', 'Grahm', 'Grame', 'Grayme', etc.).

the Grahams (thu-grāmz, grā-umz) n. family with origins in Midlothian, with a cadet branch moving to Eskdale in the late 14th century and becoming a large clan in northern Cumbria. They were a powerful force in that area, holding at least 13 towers, until the early 17th century when they were targeted by the Earl of Cumberland and others in an attempt to pacify the Borders. They were a scourge of the English wardens, with a reputation for riding with the Scots when it suited them. 150 of the family were rounded up in about 1605 and mostly executed or deported to Ireland or sent to fight in the wars in Holland. The clan motto is 'Ne oublie' (forget not) and the crest shows a falcon killing a stork – 'For it's hey the Graems! and Ho the Graems! The gallant Graems are a' frien's to me; And if I had them a' here this nicht, Ane foot o' ground I never wad flee!' [T] (also spelled 'Graeme' and other variants).

Graham's Close (grā-umz-klōs) n. former name for a passageway near the foot of the Howegate. The name was used in the 18th century. Immediately below here is where a large hole opened up during the great flood of 1767.

Graham's Hotel (grā-umz-hō-tel) n. hostelry run by John Graham from 1869 at 6 Back Row. It was where the inaugural meeting of the Hawick Burns Club took place in 1878. In 1885 it was renamed Holland House.

Grahamslaw (grā-umz-law) n. area to the north-east of Eckford, the hill there containing 9 caves. The lands were owned by the family of Grahamslaw of that Ilk, with 'Johan de Grimmeslawe' signing the Ragman Rolls in 1296 and Christian 'Grymislaw' resigning the lands into the hands of the King in 1429. The Barony was long held by the Crichtons of that Ilk. The lands were granted by William Crichton of that Ilk to Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1436/7, with a 'precept' in 1439, and are described as '8 husbandlands' in 1528/9 when still owned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. A separate '6 husband lands' called 'Portaris Landis' or 'Porterlandis' are also mentioned as a Scott possession in 1517, 1553/4, 1574, 1634, 1653, 1661 and 1663. In 1454 an 'instrument' dealing with 'Burrell lands' in Eckford (witnessed in John Waugh's tenement in Hawick) describes how Robert 'of Grimslaw' was the former laird. A precept of sasine in 1500 grants the lands to Walter Scott of Branxholme. John Riddell owned the lands in the early part of the 19th century. The former estate there contains a beehive-shaped dovecote (the origin is probably 'Grim's hill', combining the Old English 'hlaw' with Old Norse 'Grimr', where this was a nickname for Odin, perhaps relating to the caves; the name appears as 'Grymislaw' in 1429, 'Grymyslaw' in 1500, 'Grimmislaw' and 'Grymmislaw' in 1574 and 'Greameslaw' in 1663).

Grahamslaw (grā-umz-, grimz-law) n. Adam (15th/16th C.) had sasine for the lands of Newton in Bedrule Parish in 1504, with his name given as 'Ade Grenislaw'. Probably the same Adam was a member of the panel for deciding on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by James Douglas in 1509; his surname is given there as 'Grymislaw'. He may have been father of the later Adam of Newton. It is possible he is the Adam, brother of Thomas (heir of John of Newton) who came in the King's will in 1494/5 for the theft of 60 sheep from Stouslie. He was alerady deceased in 1530/1 when his widow Agnes Davidson and heir Elizabeth received money from their cousin Ralph Davidson for a third of 'Chames' within the Lordship of Minto. James was granted the non-entry of 'Chames' in 1531, by William Turnbull of Minto. Adam of Newton (16th C.) probably the Adam, son of the Laird of Little Newton, who had remission for crimes in 1502. This was for the theft of a cow from Craigend, sheep and geese from Rutherford of Longnewton, geese from John Gledstains, pigs from Spittal, sheaves of barley from George Rutherford, grain from Menslaws and for common theft before his previous 1488 remission. He was one of the Border Lairds who submitted to James V in 1530 to keep better order. He resigned his lands of Newton (in Bedrule Parish) to the King in 1531, then gained a crown charter to the lands, along with his wife in the same year. He married Janet Rutherford and was succeeded by his son John. He is also mentioned in a sasine of 1585 (by which time he was deceased). Perhaps the same Adam 'Grameislaw' was a witness in Glasgow in 1550. Andrew (15th/16th C.) probably related to Thomas, the 2 being named in a case involving David Oliver 'in Stryndis' in 1502. Oliver was charged with resetting them, as well as assisting them in raiding farms. His surname is given as 'grymislaw'. Christiana (13th) listed among owners of land in Paxton on an inventory of Coldingham Priory in about 1298. Her name was recorded as 'Christiana de Gymelawe'. Christian of that Ilk (14th/15th C.) resigned the lands of Grahamslaw in a letter of 1429, as recorded in an 'instrument of transumpt' requested by Stephen Scott of Castlelaw in 1445. Her name is written 'Cristiane de Grimislaw'. George (16th C.) brother of Harry and nephew of the Moscrops of Jedburgh. In a court case in 1585/6 it was stated that the Bailies of Jedburgh blamed the murder of him and his brother on Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and his associates. Harry (16th C.) brother of George. He and his brother were murdered some time before 1585/6 by associates of Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. Helen (16th/17th C.) Lady Newton, daughter of John of Newton. Her father sold the family lands to Robert Ker in 1586 and she married him around the same time. Her 6 brothers were killed by a group of Turnbulls before 1586, the trial being in 1604. She had a daughter who married John Scott of Huntly. She owed her son-in-law 'for his tochergood' and eventually arranged to pay him in the form of an 'assignation' of 1000 merks owed to her by Walter Turnbull of Rawflat. However, she then arranged to enter his house on the pretext of visiting her daughter, and removed the papers while the residents were at church, taking off on horseback. John Scott caught up with her at Scott of Synton's house, where she denied that she had the paper and later tore it up and 'kaist the revin assignatioun unto the said complener with such disgracefull and vickyiid speicheis as wes moist unseameing in the persone of a moder to so kynd and loveing a sone'. She was let off with a rebuke by the Privy Council. She was also recorded (as 'Helen Granislaw') in a decree of rebellion with William Douglas in 1604. Henry 'Harry' of Little Newton (d.bef. 1606) recorded in 1606 when his sons William and George were held by the Hawick Balies for the murder of Robert Turnbull of Hallrule. They were then transferred to Edinburgh Tolbooth at the direction of the Lords of the Privy Council, and there was a complaint that the family of the murdered man wanted to ruin them and keep them in prison forever, rather than prosecute them. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in 'Camys' (probably Minto Kames) in 1502 when Archibald Douglas in Effledge had remission for stealing barley from him. Additionally both Archibald and William Douglas in Effledge had remission for stealing 48 sheep from him. John was also recorded in 'Camys' in 1502 and surely related, as was probably the later James of the same place. In 1510 he was fined for not giving suit for his lands of 'Camys' at the Justice Aire in Jedburgh. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1531 when he was granted the non-entry of the 10 merkland of 'Chames' by William Turnbull of Minto and his son William. These are the same lands that Adam formerly held (with his widow Agnes Davidson recorded receiving money for the lands in 1530/1); it seems likle that Adam was therefore a close relation. John (13th C.) paid homage to Edward I in 1296. His designation is recorded as 'de Grymeslawe'. He is the first known to have this surname. John (14th C.) recorded in 1361 on a panel of inquest in Roxburgh, relating to Makerstoun. John of Newton (15th/16th C.) witness to the 'retour' for the Kers in the lands of Borthwickshiels in 1471. He was also a member of the panel for Walter Scott inheriting Branxholme and Buccleuch in 1492. In 1493 he had remission for being with Alexander, former Duke of Albany. In 1494/5 Thomas, brother of Lord Cranston, had remission for the (unspecified) crime done to him at Denholm. He is recorded in 1498 along with Adam, when he had remission for communing with 'the tratouris if Levin, Ruthirfurdis, and Turnebullis'. In 1500 he was one of the men selected to value the lands of Whithope. In 1501 he was mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls in relation to the administration of some fines in Roxburghshire. He may be the 'Johannem Grimyslaw' who in 1482 was on the panel for Elizabeth Cunningham inheriting the lands of Appletreehall and the eastern part of Hassendean. His son Thomas was listed in 1492/3 when he witnessed the confirmation of Rutherford and Wells to James Rutherford. John (15th/16th C.) tenant at 'the Place of Camys', probably Minto Kames. In 1502 Peter Turnbull in Bonchester had remission for several crimes, including stealing 40 cows and 5 horses from his farm, with the help of some rebel Turnbulls. James was also recorded in 'Camys' in 1502 and surely related. John of Newton (16th/17th C.) son and heir of Adam. He could be the John who had a sasine for Newton in 1541/2. He could be the 'Johnne Grymislaw' who signed the bond to act against Borders thieves in 1571/2. He also swore allegience to the Crown in 1572/3, with William Ker of Caverton as his surety. In 1586 he sold Newton to Robert Kerr of Ancrum (later Newton), who married his daughter Helen. He is probably the 'Johne Grimslaw of Litill Newtoun' who was among the men accused of helping the English raid lands belonging to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1548. He is probably the same 'Johnne Grameslaw of Lytill Newtoun' whose 6 sons William, James, Robert, John, Andrew and Thomas were said to have been killed by a group of Turnbulls from Stanedge, Barnhills and Minto. In 1589 John Turnbull of Minto and Walter Turnbull of Bedrule were cited for resetting a group of Turnbulls and Douglases who were in 1586 denounced as rebels for the murders of 'Johnne Grymmislaw, younger of Newtoun, Williame, James, Andro, Robter and Thomas Grymmislawis, brothers and sons of Johnne Grymmisla of Newtoun'; the trial for restitution did not take place until 1604. John (d.c.1586) son and heir of John of Newton. Along with his brothers and uncles William, James, Andrew, Robert and Thomas, all servants of Thomas Kerr of Crailinghall, he were killed by a group of Turnbulls, Douglases and Davidsons from the Minto area. Specifically the men declared rebels in 1586 for the murders were William Douglas (son of William of Cavers), James Douglas (son of John of Whitriggs), Hector Turnbull in Barnhills and his brother George, William Douglas (son of the Laird of Earlside), Robert Turnbull (son of Sir Thomas of Bedrule), Robert Turnbull ('tutor of Barnhills) and his brothers Hector and Gavin, plus 'certain other rebels'. In 1610 a commission was appointed by the Privy Council to apprehend the accused, since they had still not found caution for the crimes. His sister, Helen Grahamslaw, Lady Newton (who had married Robert Kerr), was mentioned as one of the pursuers in the case, as well as Robert Kerr of Newton 'as sister's son'. Robert (14th/15th C.) laird of the 'Burrell lands' in Eckford Parish, as described in a document of 1454 signed in John Waugh's tenement in Hawick. He was succeeded by his only daughter Helen, who married Simon Burrell and was succeeded by their only daughter Janet, whose John Burrell resigned the lands in 1448. He may be the 'Roberto grynlaw' listed in a document for lands in Morebattle in 1445. Thomas of Newton (15th C.) member of the 1464/5 panel to rule on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by Archibald Douglas and also the panel to decide on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and Flex. He was thus a prominent Roxburghshire landowner of the time and is listed as 'Thomas Grymislaw of Newtoune'. Perhaps the same Thomas 'Grymsley' had letters of 'denization' in England in 1480. Thomas (15th C.) son and heir of John of Newton. In 1492/3 he witnessed the confirmation of Rutherford and Wells to James Rutherford. He is probably the Thomas of Newton, 'Junior', who was surety for William Falsyde in Ancrum at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1494/5. Also in 1494/5 he was 'Junior dominus de newtoun' when he and his brother Adam came in the King's will for stealing 60 sheep from Walter Scott of Howpasley and Walter Turnbull of Stouslie, from the lands of Stouslie; these sheep appeared to belong to the King. His goods were escheated and his sureties were John Rutherford of Edgerston and Ralph Ker. Thomas (15th/16th C.) accomplice of David Oliver 'in Stryndis' (probably Strange in Rulewater), recorded in a remission Oliver had in 1502. Along with Andrew he was involved in 'theftuous deeds' and was already 'at the horn'. Perhaps this same Thomas was included among Rutherfords and others who were declared rebels in 1498 for the murder of Patrick Hepburn. He was also mentioned in 1502 when Alexander Laidlaw was convicted of associating with him and the Rutherfords, as well as when John Fawlaw in Littledean had remission for associating with him and William Rutherford in Maxton was convicted of associating with him. He was also listed along with Gilbert Rutherford and Thomas Scott as rebels who Robert Rutherford had remission for associating with. He may be the same man as the son of John of Newton. Walter (17th C.) recorded as Schoolmaster at Tushielaw in a deed of 1629. William (13th/14th C.) juror in Roxburgh for an English inquistion in 1335/6 regarding expenses at Jedburgh Castle. His designation was given as 'de Grymeslawe'. William (15th C.) witness to the sasine for the Kers in the lands of Borthwickshiels and Harden Wood in 1471. In 1488/9 he witnessed an agreement between the Vicar of Hassendean and the Abbot of Melrose. Probably the same William had remission (along with Simon Glendinning) in 1493 for common theft happening before the time of his current remission. He is recorded as being 'at the kirk of Hassindene' in 1493 when he had remission for helping some men of Tynedale to steal cattle, sheep, horses and goods from Minto; Walter Scott of Howpasley served as surety for him. In 1494 he was 'William Grymyslaw' when he was a witness for the transfer of lands in the Barony of Hassendean. William (16th C.) servitor to Lord Boyd, he was admitted as Burgess of Glasgow in 1576 (formerly spelled 'Greymslaw', 'Grimslay', 'Grimyslaw', 'Grinyslaw', 'Grymislaw', 'Grymmisla', 'Grymmislaw', 'Grymmislawis', 'Grymmyslaw', 'Grymyslaw', etc.; the surname surely derives from the place in Eckford Parish).

grain (grān) v., arch. to groan – 'I'll sigh, an' whinge, an' cant, an' grane, An' mak the godly unco fain' [JR], '... Young first-time communicants, A' greenin', grainin', to be saunts' [JoHa], 'The muse is like to spleet her jaws, Wi' gauntin', greanin' och's and ah's' [JoHa], 'An' a' concerned May greet an' grane An' make their mane ...' grain (grān) v., arch. a branch of a stream or valley – 'The clouds sail doon Teviotdale Owre every hope and grain, The road and river wanly glint And the hills are derk wi' rain' [DH] (used as a suffix in some local place names, e.g. 'Alliegrain, 'Blackgrain', 'Haregrain', 'Rashiegrain', and in the name of several small streams in the upper Teviot, Borthwick and Liddel valleys, e.g. Black Grain, Caulker Grain, Chapel Grain, Corse Grain, Cow Grain, Duncan's Grain, East Grain, Ely Grain, Fauch Grain, Hare Grain, Lang Grain, Linhope Grain, Master Grain, Mid Grain, Ralphtree Grain, Rashie Grain, Rough Grain, Saughtree Grain, Stock Grain and Todhunter Grain; the word came from Old Norse through Middle English).

grain (grān) n., arch. small quantity, tiny amount, bit, speck – 'A didna ken a grain o odds o'd for aa A hedna seen't threh kens-whan' [ECS].

Grain (grān) n. name sometimes used for Saughtree Grain (J.A.H. Murray refers to this as 'th solitary cothouse of Grains' in 1861).

grainary (grān-u-ree) n., arch. a granary – 'It wis in what we ca'd the grainary the part o the steedin where they kept the grain. The sheaves wis built intae round stacks outside and thatched, an the grainary wis empty' [TH].

Grainfit (grān-fi') n. Grainfoot, former farmstead on the Tinnis Burn in Castleton Parish. Archibald Beattie was there in the 1770s. Walter Armstrong lived there in the late 1700s and Adam Telfer was there in 1797. On Stobie's 1770 map it is marked to the east of Reidmoss. It may have been at the foot of Todhunter Grain.

Grain Hill (grān-hil) n. hill in the north part of Ashkirk Parish, on the right-hand side of the Woll grainin (grān-in) adj., arch. groaning, grumbling, complaining – 'At the grey grainin' ranks o' poles that leaned . . . ' [DH].

gramarie (graw-ma-ree) n., poet. witchcraft, magic – 'Until he did his ain men see, With witches' hazel in each steel cap, In scorn of Soulis' gramarye; Then shoulder-high for glee he lap' [JL], 'Dark was the vaulted room of gramarye, To which the wizard led the gallant knight' [SWS] (there are spelling variants).

gramercy (graw-mer-see) interj., poet. thanks – 'Now Dickie has feld fair Johnie Armstrong, Fala, &c. The prettiest man in the south countrie. Gramercy, then can Dickie say, I had but twa horse thou has made me three. Fala, &c.' [CPM] (from the French).

the Grammar Schuil (thu-graw-mur-skil) n. Hawick Grammar School, founded in 1710, following a meeting of the Parish Heritors organised by Rev. Alexander Orrock, and bolstered through the Orrock Bequest of 1711 (hence the confusion about the date of its foundation). There was probably a school from about the time of the Reformation, but it may not have had a continuous existence. However, it is unclear how well supported education was in the town through the 17th century and there were several calls to teach beyond the 'three Rs' in a Grammar School, like was already established in Jedburgh and Selkirk. The Burgesses were taxed in 1710 (probably for the first time), to support this school and its master. It existed alongside the Parish School (often called the English School), which was for elementary education, with lessons in English. The Grammar School was a secondary school for the wealthier classes, which to begin with would have charged fees and taught Latin (as well as some Greek and French). The first Schoolmaster was James Innes. It is unclear where the school started, since the land at Orrock Place was obtained (from Andrew Rodger) only about 1724. At that time it contained 2 ruinous houses, plus sheds and a yard. The school seems to have been rebuilt from these buildings soon after 1724. But a new building was completed on the site in 1732, constructed by John Turnbull, mason, and Walter Scott, wright. There were substantial repairs and improvements in 1763, including ralying the garret floor, thatching, plastering, erecting a staircase, replacement windows and new seats. A new garden dyke was built in 1766 and the roof was repaired in 1771. There may have been boarders at the Grammar School from about 1794. The school used the Town Hall as overflow from 1821, and the schoolhouse in Orrock Place was abandoned in some years as being too small. By 1825 the school was run by a Rector with 2 assistants. The school was rebuilt in 1825–26, designed by Smith of Darnick, when it was merged (actually a joint master was appointed in 1824) with the Parish School to become the United Schools. In 1839 it was written that the subjects taught were reading, writing, arithmetic, geography, mathematics, Latin, Greek and French. A new room was added to the school in 1846, but then it still only contained 4 rooms. It was then in use until Buccleuch School (now Hawick High School) was built in 1860. The old building became the property of the Duke of Buccleuch, but was given to the Archæological Society as a Museum from 1862–86. Thereafter it was sold as a joiners workshop (Walter Scott & Son), and then became Chisholme Antiques, etc. It still exists beside the old Orrock Church, with high-silled windows suggesting its earlier function. The head boy of the school used to carry its flag during the Common Riding, the practice ending in 1777; the 1744 flag is preserved in the Museum.

grampus (grawm-pis) n., arch. an ignoramus, fool (noted by J. Jamieson).

grand (grawnd) adj. great, fine, splendid – 'that's a grand hat ee've on', '... For we're grand at tellin' stories at our ain fireside' [JJ], 'Now there's a new coat feenished! Is it no grand?' [JEDM], '... a grocer body gaun eis yirrints, gien iz the weel-wurn hail: 'It's a grand-day!' ' [ECS], '... A gaed an got masel cleaned an spruisht wui a grand swaibble o waeter' [ECS], 'There was'na graun new blouses every other Setturday, an' white gloves for whust pairties' [HEx1919], '... eis no only a grand singer but a nice laddie tae' [MB], 'The fremmit freends ye neebor there Are neeborlike and grand' [WL], interj. exclamation expressing approval, delight or satisfaction.

grandame (grawn-dām) n., arch. a grandmother – 'The Armes of Ker of Pherneyhirst, forst Grandame one the mother's syde, caried by Andrew Scot of Carschope' [SB1634].

grand-dowter (grawnd-dow-tur) n. a granddaughter – 'Ma great-grandfither's sister was mairried ti Robbie Burns's granddowter's husband's brother which makes mei a tremendous close relation ti oor National Bard' [IWL].

grander (grawn-dur) adj. finer, more splendid – 'Though there may be grander toons Still a Teri hert aye turns Tae the Teviot and the bonnie Border burns' [RMc].

grandest (grawn-dist) adj. greatest, finest – 'that's the grandest hing', 'Man it's the grandest place aw've ever seen And no a bit like Hawick' [AY], 'And Jess McVeetie offered, up the Wynd, The grandest sticky taffee in the toun' [WL], 'For in yon Bridge Street queue A got the grandest blether, Wi' freends like Robbie Knox And Henry's fither' [IWL].

grandfither (grawnd-fith-ur) n. grandfather – 'Gie me a guid-gaun grandfaither clock' [DH], '... Pop's grandfither George and his brother Billy were Cornets' [IWL], 'Well, ma fither an ma grandfither were baith in it, it seemed a natural progression' [IA] (also written 'grandfaither'; cf. graunfither).

the Grand Mairch (thu-grawnd-mārch) n. traditional march at the Common-Riding Ball, led off by the Cornet and his Lass.

grandsire (grawnd-sIr) n., arch. a grandfather or great-grandfather – 'The Armes of Douglas of Drumlanricke, 2d grandsyre one the mother's syde, caried by Robert Scot of Bouhill' [SB1634], 'Now to the first Grandsir and Grandam I come, Elliot of Stobs, and Scot of Hardin' [CWS], 'For he was called nothing but Shepherd fourty year, And yet he is the just and very man, Whose Goodsir and Grandsir was Lairds of Ercckletoun'.

Grange see the Grange

Grange (grānj) n. area just to the west of Chesters, south-east of Ancrum. 'Chesters' Grange' and 'Grange Banks' are shown on today's Ordnance Survey maps. Perhaps the lands were formerly separated into east and west; if so Adam Thomson was recorded at the east part in 1494/5. Lands there valued at about £1460 were owned by Rev. William Bennet in 1643, and another part owned by Gavin Elliot, valued at £260. In 1678 part was owned by William Elliot of Grange, valued at about £350. Mr. Hair paid tax for 13 windows there in 1753. The farm there was developed around 1790 by Thomas Ogilvie, who had purchased Chesters a few years before. Richard Hair was owner in 1788 and Henry Hair is recorded as farmer there in 1797. The 1811 Land Tax Rolls listed 'Part of the Lands of Grange, formerly possessed by John Elliot', valued at £108 (it appears to be 'Grange' on Pont's c.1590 manusctript, 'Grange' on one of Gordon's c.1650 manuscript maps and 'Gronge'/'Grange' on Baleu's 1654 maps).

Grange (grānj) n. former name for lands in Ringwoodfield, somewhere near Northhouse or Teviothead. Around 1557 Simon Scott of 'Fernili' and Archibald Elliot of Gorrenberry rented these lands, along with Bowanhill, from the monks of Melrose. The name is recorded as 'Grangia alias Stanyhetoun' and the value was £4. In 1564 it was recorded simply as 'Grange'. It is possible that this was a grange of the Abbey, located perhaps near Staney Hill. This could be the Grange in Castleton Parish listed in 1797 when John Turnbull was there.

Grange (grānj) n. Robert (13th/14th C.) referred to as 'de la Graunge' when he swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. His lands could have been the Grange near Ancrum, or possibly the one at Abbotrule. He was on a jury an inquest for the inheritance of Wilton and other lands of William de Chartres in 1303/4.

the Grange (thu-grānj) n. former farm in the Barony of Abbotrule, just to the north of the main house. The lands transferred to Southdean Parish and later to Hobkirk Parish. Thomas Rutherford was recorded there in 1494/5. It was among the lands purchased by Adam French from the monks of Jedburgh in 1569 and later passed to the Kers. 'Dand' Rutherford of Grange was recorded in 1581/2. The lands (with mill) were recorded as part of the Lordship of Jedburgh in 1587. In 1629 Walter Scott, son of William, who was son of Walter of Todrig, was served heir to the lands; they were at that time described as 'a 32 shilling land of old extent'. It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by Bessie and Anna, daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670, when it was described as also having a mill. Rev. James Ker, minister of Abbotrule, was also Laird of Grange in the mid-to-late 17th century; he preached a field conventicle in the house in 1679, with about 500 people listening from the lawn outside. In 1680 it was listed among lands whose superiority was held by the Kerrs of Abbotrule. In 1707 'Grange's lands' were held by 'Airs of R. Watson' and valued at £396; it must have therefore been included in a large set of farms at that time. Grange afterwards formed part of the farm of Ruletownhead. In 1788 the farm was owned by Patrick Kerr of Abbotrule and valued at £396. Part was listed in 1811 being owned by Charles Kerr of Abbotrule, formerly possessed by John Elliot, and valued at about £34. Alexander Wight was farmer there in 1797. Around 1875 it was owned by David Henderson of Abbotrule and valued at about £43 (it is 'Grayng' in 1581/2; it is marked on Stobie's 1770 map and was 'Grainge' in 1670 and 1680).

Grant (grawn', grawnt) n. Adam (1859–1938) composer of the music for several Hawick songs and compiler of others. Born in St. Andrews, he spent his early years in Edinburgh, and at the age of 12 was apprenticed as an organ builder and piano tuner. He came to Hawick at 19 to be organist at St. Cuthbert's. He moved to St. John's in 1991 and remained there until 1936, serving the same church for 45 years. He also set himself up as a piano tutor and tuner and in 1882 opened a shop (which he shared with 3 other businesses at No. 2 High Street), selling sheet music. He moved to larger premises at 10 North Bridge Street in 1885, and lived above the shop. This became the main musical business in Hawick, selling instruments as well as music (and later gramophone records), and acting as a booking agent, as well as publisher of local music. He was official Common-Riding accompanist for more than 40 years (at least 1896 until 1937), and Callants' Club accompanist for over 30 years He also wrote non-Hawick music, sometimes under the name 'Rosenberg'. He also helped James Sinton with the musical part of his Hawick-related bibliography. His music shop finally closed in 1933. He was also a keen Volunteer, served as Captain of the Teviotdale Amateur Cycling Club and was a member of the Archæological Society and Golf Club. A member of Lodge St. John 111, he was Grand Organist to the Provincial Grand Chapter of Roxburgh, Selkirk and Peebles. His musical output included composition or significant arrangement of 'Up wi' Auld Hawick', 'Hawick', 'Oor Ain Auld Toon', 'The Anvil Crew', 'Clinty's Song', 'Bonnie Teviotdale', 'Meda's Song', 'Invocation' and 'The Wail of Flodden'. He also provided arrangement and acted as publisher for many others. His most serious piece of piano music was 'The Branxholm Waltz' and he also wrote music for plays in collaboration with J.E.D. Murray, specifically 'The Witch o' The Wisp Hill', 'The Caddie's Ghost', 'Kirsty o' Cocklaw Castle', 'Turning Back the Clock' and 'The Gutterbludes', as well as the Quater-Centenary Pageant. He probably contributed more than anyone else to Hawick's musical heritage, his publication of compilations of local songs perhaps being his lasting legacy, since this saved many songs and popularised others. He married Bessie Briggs Hall and their son Adam R. carried on the family business. His daughter Agnes Wight Hall ('Nan') died in 1912, aged 25. There is a commemorative plaque for him at 2 High Street, the site of his first music shop, designed by Willie Landles, and unveiled in 1999. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery, and since he lived to a good age and fell on hard times, there were apparently only 35 mourners at his funeral; however, traffic was stopped on the High Street at the unveiling of the plaque. Adam Rutherford (1983–1952) son of Adam, he carried on the family music business. In 1948 he arranged the music for 'The Fairest Spot o' A' ', piecing together the music from his memory and some notes left by his father and Tom Ker. He also resurrected Ker's song 'Where Slitrig and Teviot Meet' in 1949. He was organist at Southdean Kirk and then Bedrule Kirk. He also ran a dance orchestra. He married into the Wallace family who farmed at Roundabouts and they moved to Hillview, Southdean. He worked in the music shop until it closed in 1938. Afterwards he continued to be accompanist at Common Riding and other events in Hawick. He took ill suddenly when attending a Glasgow Hawick Association meeting and died a few days later. Alexander (19th C.) married Eliza Laing in Roberton in 1855. Andrew farmer at Riddell, descendant of the Sprots. In 2015 he presented a talk to the Archæoloical Society on the history of the Riddell estate. Derrick (??–) Hawick born and bred, he worked in the knitwear industry, and was known for his abilities on the rugby field. He first played for Hawick R.F.C. at age 16. He went on to gain 14 caps and to play for the Lions. Retiring at the age of 29 because of 'too many knocks on the head', he turned to coaching. Beginning with the Trades, he went on to coach for Hawick and the South and Scotland. He led Hawick to 5 consecutive Division 1 Championships. He was inducted into the Borders Sporting Hall of Fame in 2018. George (17th/18th C.) factor to Douglas of Cavers in the early-to-mid 18th century. He was rcorded as 'Factor to Mr Douglas of Cavers' in 1723, in discussions over interest on the Orrock Bequest. In 1737 he was 'Factor to the Laird of Cavers' when he and his servant John witnessed a document for William Scott of Whitehaugh. Probably the same George was the Duke of Buccleuch's Chamberlain for Ettrick Forest, Hassendean, Burnfoot and Melrose at least in the period 1748–56. He was factor for Scott of Harden 1734–55 and was also factor to Francis Scott of Gorrenberry when Adderstone was purchased in 1750. George (18th/19th C.) surgeon in the Royal Navy. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825 and must have had a local connection. George (18th C.) factor of Cavers estate. He was appointed Sheriff-Depute of Roxburghshire by Archibald Douglas in 1742. He may be the 'Mr. Grant', factor to Douglas of Cavers, recorded in the Hawick Session book of 1723. James (17th/18th C.) son of Robert tenant in 'Ashkirkmiln'. In 1714 he became a wright's apprentice in Edinburgh. John (18th C.) servant to George, who was 'Factor to the Laird of Cavers'. The pair were witnesses to a document for William Scott of Whitehaugh. It seems likely that they closely related. John Alexander William (1886–1959) born in Inverness, he was an architect in Edinburgh. His firm, J.A.W. Grant, continued after his death. They were responsible for much of the local authority housing developments in Hawick, including Burnfoot, Howdenbank and Silverbuthall. John (18th C.) factor to Archibald Douglas of Cavers, he was made an Honorary Burgess in 1751 (presumably related to George). He is listed among the subscribers to the reprinted Buchanan's 'History of Scotland' (1752). Dr. John (1823–76) from Knockando in Moray, he was a 5th generation descendant of Patrick, 2nd son of James, Laird of Grant. He served as a doctor in Hawick, and was listed as a physician on the High Street in Slater's 1852 directory. In 1851 he was listed as a general practitioner, living at about 21 High Street, with an 'M.D's Messenger' and a servant. For most of his time in Hawick he lived at the top of Walter's Wynd, 47 High Street. He was listed there in 1861, with his housekeeper and stable boy. He was well known for keeping otter hounds, Dandie Dinmonts, horses, badgers, ferrets and other animals in the back of the property in the mid-19th century. His prowess as a hunter of otters and badgers is described in H.H. Dixon's 'Field and Fern or Scottish Flocks and Herds (South)' (1865); this also contains a photograph of him with some of his dogs. His costume consisted of 'boots, Tweed breeches, and thin pink Shetland shirt over a woollen one, and his is armed simply with a pole'. The Border Magazine of 1904 contains a grizzly account of 'A Day on Teviot with the Otter Hounds' which he led in 1863, with his dogs ('Caledonia', 'Royal', 'Ringwood' and 'Pibroch') chasing an otter from Burnfoot to Spittal, and his young hound 'Bobby' being brought in to dispatch the otter. Another account published in 1904 described a hunt on the Ale Water, when he succeeded in a long-held ambition to personally capture an otter alive, but not without being seriously bitten. In 1860 he donated a wild duck to the Museum. John (19th C.) worked at Wells sawmill around the 1850s. Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded as tenant of 'Ashkirkmiln' in 1714 when his son James became a wright's apprentice in Edinburgh. He may be the Robert, married to Anne Spence, whose daughter Elizabeth was baptised in Ashkirk in 1709. Thomas (18th C.) house servant at Teviotbank in 1793, when he was working for David Simpson. Rev. William (1811–53) born in Jedburgh, son of Lewis of the Auchernack family, and Isabella Veitch of Inchbonny. His father was a saddler in Jedburgh and his sister Isabella married James Guthrie, Hawick plumber and slater. He was educated at George Watson's Hospital and Edinburgh University and became a Schoolmaster at Minto, probably in the 1820s. Under his direction it is said that the school achieved a very high reputation, with several boarders coming there from outside the Parish. He was still recorded as master at Minto in Pigot's 1837 directory. He was licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery and ordained as assistant at Cavers in May 1840, taking over as minister from James Strachan only a month or so later. He was then minister of Cavers until his death. He remained with the establishment after the Disruption, although part of his congregation left to form the Denholm Free Kirk in the autumn of 1843. In 1847 he and his wife were hosts to Jane Elgee, an Irish Nationalist who would be mother of Oscar Wilde. In his day the Sunday service started at noon (to allow the country folk to see to their animals before setting out), lasted for 2 hours, with a break and then another 2 hours. Like all ministers of the time, he was known for rebuking the congregation. In later life he had a long white beard. In 1840 he married Jane, daughter of James Dickson of Mauricewood. Their son William (1849–1911) became a wealthy timber merchant in Leith (and was Master of the Merchant Company of Edinburgh 1905–07), and his this William's son also became minister of Cavers. Their other children were: Isabella (1841–1904), who married the minister of Coltness; Lewis (b.1842), who died young; Lewis (1844–1916), Kirkcaldy engineer; Jane Dickson (1846–1924), who married Robert Michael Ballantyne, children's author; and James (1849–1911), who became a doctor and died in Tasmania. He died of cholera after visiting sick parishioners. His name is recorded on the family gravestone in Jedburgh Abbey cemetery. Rev. William Kenneth 'Ken' (1883–1971) minister of Cavers 1924–54, before it merged with Kirkton. He was the son of William and Eliza Mary Usher of Edinburgh (daughter of brewer Thomas), and grandson of Rev. William Grant who had been minister of Cavers himself. He was educated at George Watson's College and Edinburgh University, where he graduated M.A. in 1905. He was licensed to preach by Edinburgh Presbytery in 1908 and became assistant at St. Bernard's in Edinburgh. He was then minister at Edrom and of the 'Second Charge' of St. Andrew's from 1916. In 1918 he was Chaplain to the Forces serving in Salonika. In 1924 he was translated to Cavers Parish and remained as minister until 1954. He married Evelyn Maud Mary Urquhart (b.1880) in 1914 and they had one son, Alan Kenneth (1916–2010). Fr. William (20th C.) Chaplain at St. Margaret's Convent in Hawick in the period 1948–60. William Alan Kenneth (1916–2010) son of Rev. Ken, he was born in St. Andrews and raised at Cavers Manse. He became an aeronautical engineer at Boscombe Down and worked on the V Bombers. He married Eleanor Wray Sandford in 1942 and they had children Clive Roger, Colin William and John Alexander.

the Grapes (thu-grāps) n. the Grapes Inn, previously at 16 Buccleuch Street, which was the main centre in Hawick for the carrying trade, before the coming of the railway. It once had a private well, which others were sometimes allowed to use. The inn was erected by a carrier named John Hargreaves, after he acquired the property in 1820. John Beck was the proprietor in 1825, Robert Hobkirk in 1837 and Margaret Best in 1855. Most of the buildings have been greatly altered, but a turretted staircase and workshop survive.

Grapes Close (grāps-klōs) n. also known as Grapes Inn Close, the pend between 16 and 18 Buccleuch Street, named after the Grapes Inn, which once occupied that area. The name continued in use long after the inn itself closed. The Drums and Fifes march out to here on the Thursday night, since it is close to the site of one of the town's tolls. It is also on the route of the Cornet's Walk.

Grapes Hotel (grāps-hō-tel) n. hotel in Newcastleton at 16 Douglas Square, also known as the Grapes Inn and just 'the Grapes'. Jane Kyle was proprietor there on Pigot's 1825 directory and still in 1851 and in Slater's 1852 directory. John Elliot was inn-keeper in the 1860s.

graunfither (grawn-fith-ur) n., arch. grandfather – "Weel, some fouk say it was the Pechs, an' some the Romans; but ma graunfaither thocht different' [WNK] (see also grandfither).

the Gravelly Haugh (thu-graw-vu-lee-hawch) n. former descriptive name for an area on the south side of the Slitrig near Lynnwood, where the old Common boundary briefly crossed to the other side of the river. This could be what was meant in an entry from the Parish Records of the early 18th century – 'To a poore lad's cofine yt dyed in the Gravell, £2'.

gravit (graw-vi') n., arch. a cravat, a scarf, especially a warm woollen one – 'pit yer gravit on', '... had been provoked by Scott almost hanging him in his gravatt, which was ultimately to cut with a 'knyf.' ' [DMW], '... Till they've a' gotten gravats made oot o' gude rope' [UB] (also spelled 'gravat' and 'gravatt'; the accent is on the 2nd syllable).

graw (graw) v. to grow – 'Gala graws on ee efter a while, a bit like cancer', '... for which yin year hei'd ti graw a beard ...' [IWL] (cf. the more common growe).

gray (grā) n., arch. an arithmetic book (so-called from the book written by James Gray, Schoolmaster in Peebles, which was heavily used in schools in the 19th century).

Gray (grā) n. Agnes (17th C.) resident of Headshaw Mill in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among 'ye poor'. Andrew 'Dand' (16th C.) leased part of the lands of Raperlaw in 1564, along with George Gray and Thomas Allan. He was probably related to George, as well as to William, who leased another part of Raperlaw. Andrew 'Dandie' (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret 'fraiter' (perhaps Fraser) and their children included John (b.1651) and Janet (b.1657). The witnesses were Andrew Scott and John (who was probably related). Note that his name is transcribed 'David' and 'Danill'. Andrew (17th C.) resident in Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His is probably an ancestor of the later Andrew who owned lands in Lilliesleaf. Andrew 'Dand' (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, specifically the Hassendean part. In 1680 when he witnessed a baptism for Alexander Muir, along with Walter Paisley. He married Isobel Ormiston in 1679 and their children included: Helen (b.1680), baptised in Hawick; and Bessie (b.1685) and Isobel (b.1688), baptised in Roberton. The witnesses in 1688 were Robert and George Ormiston (perhaps brothers to his wife). He may be the same man as the later Dand in Weensland, or else perhaps his father. Andrew 'Dand' (17th/18th C.) resident of Whitlaw and later tenant in Weensland. Note that his forename is sometimes transcribed as 'David' rather than 'Dand'. He must have been closely related to James, who was in Whitlaw at the same time. He was tenant in Whitlaw in 1702 when he witnessed a baptism for James Colwort, also in Whitlaw. He was recorded in Whitlaw in 1706 along with James (presumably his father or brother) when they witnessed a baptism for Robert Cairns in Whitlaw. He was also in Whitlaw in 1708 when one of his children was baptised in Hawick, in 1709 when he witnessed baptisms for Adam Scott in Kirkton, for Walter Scott in Hawick Shiel, for Walter Scott in Nether Southfield and for William Gledstains at Whitlaw (both along with James), in 1711 for John Scott 'Wyndhead', and in 1713 for James Craw in Branxholme Town. He was listed as an Elder in 1713. He was recorded as tenant at Weensland in 1718 and also in 1723 when he was considered as an elder of Hawick Kirk. He was also tenant in Weensland in 1719 when his servant William Stoddart got married. He was also so labelled when he witnessed baptisms in 1723 for miller James Stot and in 1725 for carrier Thomas Porteous, for William Hislop and for tenant Robert Scott. In 1726 he witnessed baptisms for carrier John Tait and for Robert Nichol in Weensland and in 1728 another for Alexander Purdom. He was described as tenant in Weensland in 1728 when his daughter Margaret married Walter Scott from Hawickshiels. He married Janet Buckham (or 'Buchan', from Bedrule Parish) in Hawick in 1706 and their children included: Margaret (b.1708); James (b.1710); John (b.1712); Francis (b.1714); Beatrice (b.1716); George (b.1718); Mary (b.1721); and Janet (b.1723). The witnesses in 1708 were Andrew Riddell in Goldielands and gardener James Falsyde, in 1710 were Archibald Elliot in Horsleyhill and Archibald Paterson in Flex, in 1712 were William Shiel and Archibald Paterson in the Flex, in 1718 was 'Mr' James Innes and in 1721 were Bailies Walter Purdom and James Scott. He was in Weensland in 1720 when (along with merchant John Johnston) he witnessed a baptism for workman William Stoddart. He may be the Dand who witnessed a baptism for James in Whitlaw in 1728 and another (the same day) for John Anderson. He could be the Dand whose daughter Margaret married Walter Scott in 1728. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included Andrew (b.1740), Margaret (b.1741), an unnamed child (b.1746), James (b.1750), Janet (b.1752) and John (b.1754). Andrew (18th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1764 when he was paid for 'the windpointer, fen, and hands, in church steeple'. He was presumably a clockmaker or other merchant. Perhaps the same Andrew in Cavers Parish married Helen Glendinning in Hawick Parish in 1762 and had a daughter Helen (b.1770). He may be the Andrew who witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Thomas Welsh in 1797. Andrew (18th C.) owner of lands in Lilliesleaf Parish near Bewlie Mains according to a map of 1766. He is also recorded in 1788 as owner of lands in Lilliesleaf (valued at £86 13s 4d). He could be the Andrew from whom the Riddells of that Ilk purchased the lands of 'Hoglair-burn' in Lilliesleaf Parish, according to the 1813 Tax Rolls. He was probably a descendant of the earlier Andrew from Lilliesleaf. He may be the Andrew who married Janet Fowler and whose children included Benjamin (b.1781). Thomas (b.1780), with no mother's name given, may also have been his son. This Andrew was said to have been a surgeon, married 2 women who were both called Janet Fowler, had 12 children, and was father of Andrew of Linhead (in Dumfriesshire). Andrew (18th C.) son of surgeon Andrew and Janet Fowler. Although not the eldest son, he was effectively his father's heir. He married Isabella Anderson, who was from a Roxburghshire family and had several brothers. His wife was an accomplished rider, once winning the race at a wedding 'broose'; she was also a strict keep of the Sabbath and apparently a friend of Thomas Carlyle's mother. He rented the farm of Linhead from his cousin Katrine Gray; they had an agreement that she would leave him the farm on her death, but she changed her will after religious arguments with his wife. He contested the will, but lost, and had to sell the small farm of Hillhead near Lilliesleaf, to pay the legal bills. He was probably father of Andrew and grandfather of Isabella ('Free Lance'), who wrote about the family in the Border Magazine of 1899. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. In 1788 in Cavers he married Christian Hunter. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He presumably had a local connection. Andrew (19th C.) noted local jumper from Hawick, also associated with the early years of Hawick Baa. He won the running hop-step-and-leap at the St. Ronan's Games in 1830. At the Saturday Games of the 1834 Common Riding he won the 'running high leap' and the 'hop, step and leap', bringing to 23 his total of local prizes. He is probably the handloom weaver of that name living with the Crosier family at about 30 Loan in 1841. Andrew (19th C.) married Elizabeth Hume in Wilton Parish in 1833. Andrew (b.1784/5) resident of Lilliesleaf. He was probably the Andrew who is recorded as owner of 'Hungry-hills, Four Rigs and Tenement and Yard in Lilliesleaf' according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He was listed as an agricultural labourer in 1841 and as a 'Landed Proprietor (of 7 acres)' on Main Street in 1851. His wife was Jean from Gretna. Their children included: James; Catherine; and Isabella (b.1831), who wrote poetry under the pseudonym 'Free Lance'. Charles (18th/19th C.) first (and only) minister of the Independent Kirk in Hawick. He arrived in Novemeber 1805, having previously been a stone mason, and being trained by the Haldane's in Edinburgh. He also taught a school in Hawick, to earn additional income. Soon after he started in Hawick his wife tragically died. He was then talked into pursuing marriage with Betty Russell, described as 'an imbecile daughter' of a retired road contractor in the Hawick area (perhaps John), who had purchased a small estate in Annandale; this improved his financial position, but led to 'the contempt of those who held Independency in disfavour'. He also lost popularity by disciplining members of his church for attending the Common Riding. After only a few years he apparently became more of a convert to baptist views than many members of his congregation, leading to the entire church folding by 1813. He left Hawick, since there were not enough baptist followers to support him at that time. He moved to England and was said to have given up the ministry. David (17th C.) married Margaret 'Fraiter' in Ashkirk Parish in 1650. David (17th C.) resident in Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. David (17th C.) resident at Stouslie according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Dand see Andrew Gray, 'Dand'. Duncan (15th C.) witness to Hawick's earliest known sasine in 1453, where he is described as an esquire. Presumably the same Duncan 'Graye' was also witness to a charter of William Douglas of Cavers in 1450, in which James was also a witness. Francis (18th C.) resident of Weensland. He married Isobel Douglas and their children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included: Janet (b.1759); an unnamed child (b.1761); and Robert (b.1762). The witnesses in 1761 were Bailie Robert Howison of Orchard and 'student' John Laurie, and in 1762 were John Laurie (again) and George Gray (who was probably related). Francis 'Frank' (1839–1922) from Yeadon in Yorkshire, where he was bandmaster from the age of 17. He came to Hawick in 1860 with his brother Barnabas, to work as a weaver. In 1861 they were lodging at 21 High Street. He was made bandmaster for the local detachment of the Border Rifles, and remained in this position for 43 years. Since the volunteers had no instruments, he travelled to Edinburgh with Capt. Chisholme of Stirches to purchase them. He can be seen in an early photograph and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. George (16th C.) leased part of the lands of Raperlaw in 1564, along with Andrew Gray and Thomas Allan. He was probably related to Andrew, as well as to William, who leased another part of Raperlaw. George (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, he married Margaret Scott and their son George was baptised in 1653. George (17th C.) recorded as being in 'Rupertlaw' (probably Raperlaw, but possibly Ruberslaw) in 1684 when his sevrvant George Young was listed as a fugitive for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. George (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Moscrop in Kirkton in 1707. George (18th C.) Schoolmaster in Kirkton Parish from 1724, serving until at least 1732. He could be the George whose daughter Isobel was baptised in Kirkton in 1724. George (18th C.) married Margaret Elliot in Minto in 1730. George (18th C.) resident of Weensland. In 1762 he witnessed a baptism for Francis in Weensland (who was surely related). He is recorded being in 'Wiensland' in 1764 when his son's baptism was witnessed by gardener James Scott and Walter Scott (probably related to his wife). He was also listed being in Weensland in 1766 when baptismal witnesses were Adam Scott and William Elliot. He married Helen Scott in 1756 and their children included: Margaret (b.1758); David (b.1759); John (b.1762); James (b.1764); Esther (b.1766); George (b.1769); and Francis (b.1771). He could be the miller who in 1757 witnessed a baptism for miller Alexander Heatley. George (18th C.) married Helen Young in Bedrule in 1786. George (18th C.) recorded in Wiltonburn in 1794 when he was in dispute with Basil Wood (in Dangerfield) according to a document in Selkirk. He could be the George who married Agnes Turnbull and whose children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included: William (b.1791); John (b.1793); and George (b.1795). George (1770s–1808) merchant in Hawick, son of James, who was from Ashieburn. He was listed as a merchant on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls and also on the 1799 ballot list for the Militia. On the 1801 list he was 'Mercht. An Extra peace officer'. He is probably the George who witnessed baptisms for baker John Wilson in 1803, 1805 and 1807. He may be the George, married to Jane Potts, whose daughter Jane was baptised in Hawick in 1796. He died in Hawick. George (b.c.1780) labourer at Hudshouse according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish. George (19th C.) resident of 'Peatihouses', i.e. Burnhead Cottages, in 1857, when he donated coins to the Archæological Society. He was surely related to William, who was listed as a lambswool stocking maker at 'Parkhouses' on the 1851 and 1861 censuses. George (1914/15–1991) born in Hawick, he started work with Walter Wilson's and was a 'Bevin Boy' during WWII. He then worked on the railway before becoming a personnel officer with Turner & Rutherfords. He was a member of the Labour Party, was on the Town Council 1955–61 and served as a Bailie. He was also a keen amateur dramatist and singer. Gilbert (18th/19th C.) ploughman at Riddell in Lilliesleaf Parish in the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. Perhaps the same Gilbert was a farm servant to William Stevenson at Langburnshiels in Hobkirk Parish on the 1801 Militia ballot. Gilbert (18th/19th C.) gardener in Hawick. The death of his daughter Janet is recorded in 1810. Probably the same Gilbert married Margaret Gray and had a son James baptised in Hawick in 1803. Cardinal Gordon Joseph (1910–93), born in Leith, son of mechanical engineer Francis William. He was ordained as a priest in Edinburgh in 1935, then assisted his uncle, who was priest at St. Andrews, while taking a degree there. In 1941 he was appointed priest of S.S. Mary & David's in Hawick, and remained there until 1947. One of his tasks was to put together the centenary booklet. During the War years he also served nearby German and Italian prisoners of war. He also became Dean of the Borders and served on the Roxburgh education committee. He left to become Rector at St. Mary's College, Blairs (near Aberdeen) and became Archbishop of St. Andrews and Edinburgh in 1951 (at only the age of 40). He founded St. Andrew's College, Drygrange in 1953. He was made a Cardinal in 1969, the first Scottish Cardinal since the Reformation. He returned to Hawick to open St. Margaret's School in 1965 and to be principal guest of the 1974 Common Riding. He retired in 1985 and died in Edinburgh. Helen (18th/19th C.) grocer at the Mid Row in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. Isabella Anderson (1831–1909) resident of Lilliesleaf, daughter of Andrew and Jean Gray. She worked as a dressmaker. She wrote pseudonymously using the name 'Free Lance'. Her volume 'Border Rhymes' was published in Hawick in 1899. It contains a mixture of English and local dialect poems, many with a religious flavour. James (15th C.) local man recorded in 1432 when he witnessed the sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas. Also listed was John, who was surely related. He may be the same James who witnessed a charter for William Douglas of Cavers in 1450, along with Duncan, who may have been related. And he is probably the James listed as deputy to Sir Archibald Douglas of Cavers in 1455 and Sheriff-Depute of Roxburghshire in 1456 when he gave sasine of Ewesdale at 'Mallano'. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His daughter Elspeth was baptised in 1648. James (17th C.) son of William. In 1676 he was 'of Lislie' (probably Lilliesleaf) when he and his mother Isobel Turnbull had discharges with the Burgh of Selkirk. His brother John is recorded in 1678. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Murray and their children included: Dand (b.1676); Helen (b.1679); and Marion (b.1684). The witnesses in 1684 were Walter Paisley and William Taylor. In 1685 he witnessed a baptism for William Taylor. He could be the James who in 1696 witnessed (along with Walter Paisley) a baptism for William Scott in Weensland. James (17th C.) resident of Birkwood in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. He is probably the James, married to Bessie Dunlop, whose children included Agnes (b.1688), Eupham (b.1689), Robert

(b.1691), William (b.1693), Janet (b.1696), Walter (b.1701), Janet (again, b.1703) and an unnamed son (b.1707). The witnesses in 1690 were William (probably his father or brother) and James Henderson. In 1691 he (and James Dunlop) witnessed a baptism for William Dunlop. Probably the same James was listed among those collecting money for the Parish in 1724. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His children included Patrick (b.1704); Bessie (b.1706); Bessie (again, b.1707); and Margaret (b.1710). James (17th/18th C.) tenant in Whitlaw. He was an elder of Hawick Kirk. He could be the James who witnessed a baptism in 1687. He was recorded as tenant in Whitlaw in 1703, 1706, 1707, 1709, 1713 and 1720. He witnessed baptisms in 1703 for James Gledstains in Whitehaugh, in 1704 for Robert Cairns (tailor in Whitlaw), in 1706 for James Irvine, tenant in Hawick Shiel, for Robert Cairns in Whitlaw (along with Dand, presumably his son or brother) and for weaver Thomas Anderson, in 1707 for weaver Andrew Jardine and William Gledstains, workman in Whitlaw, in 1708 for Thomas Penman and James Borthwick, in 1709 for William Lillico (herd at the Flex), for Walter Scott in Nether Southfield and for William Gledstains at Whitlaw (both along with Dand), in 1713 for James Crow in Branxholme Town (when he was listed as an Elder), and in 1720 for an Anderson in Burnflat. Probably the same James was in Whitchesters in 1708 when he witnessed another baptism. In 1717 (along with John Scott, candlemaker) he was appointed to collect monies from 'Whitla, Whitlahaugh, Flexes, and Burnflat', and in 1718 he was described as 'in Whitla' and already quite aged. In 1722 he was 'older in whitla' when he witnessed a baptism for John Laidlaw in Hawick Shiel. He must have been closely related to Dand, who was also in Whitlaw. James (17th/18th C.) resident of the Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Oliver and their son James was baptised in 1723. James (17th/18th C.) tenant farmer at Whitlaw, perhaps son of the earlier James. In Hawick in 1727 he married Helen Eliott, daugher of Walter in Brugh. Their children included: James (b.1728); and an unnamed son (b.1730). It seems likely he was son (or grandson) of the earlier James, who was elder of Hawick Kirk and related to David who was in Whitlaw in 1702. The witnesses to the 1728 baptism were David Gray and John Scott. James (18th C.) resident of the Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Boyd and their children included John (b.1736) and Isobel (b.1738). The witnesses in 1738 were Andrew Stewart and William Allan. James (18th C.) resident of the Hawick area. He married Jean Lamb and their children included: Agnes (b.1745), baptised in Wilton; and John (b.1765), baptised in Hawick. The witnesses in 1765 were Walter Scott and William Robertson. He may be the James Grae' who hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth in 1758. James (18th C.) recorded in the 1740s as owner of lands in Lilliesleaf Parish valued at £86 13s 4d. James (18th C.) resident of the Allars area. He was already deceased in 1805 when the death of his son James is recorded. James 'Jamie' (b.c.1793) Hawick man who was born crippled. He famously told a story about meeting the lame Sir Walter Scott at the head of the Loan as a boy. He could be the weaver 'James Grey' recorded at about 41 Loan on the 1841 census. James (d.bef. 1808) from Ashieburn. The death of his son, merchant George, is recorded in Hawick in 1808. James (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Rutherford in Wilton Parish in 1810. Their children, baptised in Lilliesleaf, included: Isabel (b.1822) and Thomas Rutherford (b.1824). James (b.1805/6) from Jedburgh, he was a grocer in Wilton. In 1851 and 1861 he was living on Ladylaw Place. He married Margaret Murray and had a step-son Alexander James Robertson. In 1860 he donated to the Museum a 'French coin dug up at Ladylaw', in 1867 donated a 'copper coin of James III., found in Ladylaw Place gardens', and in 1871 donated an Edinburgh newspaper from 1792. James (b.1817/8) frameworker in Hawick. In 1861 he was a boarder living on Melgund Place. His wife was Mary. He is probably the James who in 1867 donated to the Museum an 'indenture betwixt John Nixon & Co. and John Gray, dated 30th July, 1781'. Janet (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when she was at Horsleyhill. John (c.1372–c.1451) priest of unknown origin, who was the illegitimate son of a married man and a nun and who had the Earl of Douglas as a patron. He studied in Paris, probably graduating M.A. in about 1392 and serving as Proctor of the English Nation. In 1395 he had a dispensation to hold a cure, despite his illegitimacy. He stayed in Paris to study medicine until 1397, returning to 1406–09 to graduate M.Med and teach there. In 1406 he had permission to hold 2 cures and 4 compatible benefices, this being extended later. In 1406 he held the Church of Kirkandrews (in Kirkcudbrightshire), but excchanged this for the Archdeaconry of Galloway in about 1416. He petitioned for the Canonry and Prebend of Ashkirk in 1408, following the previous holder, James 'Walteri' becoming Archdeacon of Teviotdale; he was Canon and Prebend of 'Askuk' (i.e. Ashkirk) in 1415 when he had an 'indult' to be promoted to holy orders, despite being son of a married man and a nun. In 1413 he was Dean of the Faculty of Medicine in Paris, but returned to Scotland in 1414 as an envoy of the French King, then acted as examiner at Paris University until about 1416. In 1415 he was described as already Rector of Kirkandrews and once a familiar of Archibald, Earl of Douglas. In 1417 he was confirmed in the Archdeaconry of 'Candida Casa' (Whithorn), already holding the Prebend of Ashkirk and Parish Church of Kirkandrews. In 1419 he served as a clerk and counsellor to the Duke of Albany and was then associated with the Scottish army in France. He was Canon and Prebend of Ashkirk in 1420 when he requested the vicarage of 'Carale' in St. Andrews Diocese; he held Ashkirk until about 1424. He held 3 benefices in France from the early 1420s, lying about his legitimacy in order to do so, but later having forgiveness from the Pope. He also had the promise of a Prebend in Aberdeen in 1424. In 1425 he was Ambassador to the Pope of Charles, King of France. Also in 1425 he requested that the Pope grant him the Church of Liston, vacated by the death of Andrew de Hawick; he was then in litigation over this with Thomas Greenlaw, but still held Liston in 1451. In 1429 he was back in Scotland when he was given safe conduct to the Border to discuss a truce and he leased land in Bathgate. He was in further litigation over a Canonry in Renfrew in 1430 and also associated with benefices in Dunkeld and Aberdeen in the 1430s. In 1430 and 1433/4 he was referred to as the King's counsellor and physician. He bought further property in Edinburgh in the 1440s, which he gifted to St. Giles in 1451; this was the last record of him. John (15th C.) recorded as one of the 'nobles' on the witness list for the 1432 sasine for William Douglas being given the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire. It took place at Cavers house and the other men were all local. He must have been related to James Gray, who is also listed. John 'Wi Yin Ei' (16th C.) servant to the young Laird of Mangerton. He was listed in 1541 among Scotsmen accused of burning the corn of William Carnaby at Halton. His nickname is recorded as 'with on ee', presumably meaning that he has an injury to one eye. He could be one of 'John Gray thelder, John Gray yonger', who were listed in 1541 among Scotsmen accused of the murder of Englishmen during several raids along with Armstrongs, Fosters and others. John (16th C.) recorded in 1582 as witness to a sasine in Hawick, involving James Jack. John (17th C.) described as 'in Lilslie' (i.e. Lilliesleaf) in 1632 when, along with 3 other men, he feued Westbarns from Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning. In 1642 his son, also John, married Janet, daughter of William Wood in Raperlaw. John (17th C.) son of John, tenant in Lilliesleaf. In 1642 he married Janet, daughter of William Wood in Raperlaw. The couple received lands belonging to Wood in Lessuden and near Barnhills. They sold the lands in Lessuden to Walter Scott of Raeburn in 1671. John (17th C.) recorded in Ashkirk in 1661 when he witnessed a baptism for Andrew Govenlock. Perhaps the same resident in Ashkirk Parish was listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. John (17th C.) recorded in 1678 as son of the deceased William, indweller in Lilliesleaf. In that year his tutors Andrew Riddell and Andrew Davidson had a discharge over annual rents with the treasurer of Selkirk. His brother James is also recorded in 1676. In 1683 Andrew Riddell is describes as his uncle. John (17th C.) recorded at Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be related to the earlier Johns from Lilliesleaf. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish, he was a weaver in Langton. He married Margaret Cumming and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1717 and their children included Margaret (b.1701), Elspeth (b.1702), Alexander (b.1704), Thomas (b.1706), John (b.1708), Patrick (b.1713) and Margaret (b.1717). John (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Helen Paterson and their children included Thomas (b.1735), John (b.1739) and Walter (b.1744). The witnesses in 1744 were merchant John Ruecastle and shoemaker John Scott. He is probably the weaver of that name who witnessed a baptism for weaver David Miller. John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Mary Laidlaw and their children included: Thomas (b.1771). John (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His daughter Barbara was baptised in 1776. John 'Auld Jock Gray' (1751–1837) born in Ettrick, son of John and Katherine Currie, his grandfather being John Currie, servant to Rev. Thomas Boston. He was father of 'Jock the Ladle', also called 'Daft Jock'. He lived at Crosslee, then several places near Selkirk. He was a wandering packman, who sold small wares to the rural communities of Selkirkshire and also sometimes Roxburghshire. He was known for being taciturn, except when the topic was religion, being a staunch Anti-Burgher. He firstly married Isobel Robinson and they had a son John (b.1783). He married a second time, his wife perhaps coming from upper Teviotdale; she left him for unknown reasons. As well as John, he also had a son William, who worked as a packman and then weaver, dying in Peebles. He died in the house of a woman named Spaldin or Mrs. Hall. John (18th C.) listed as groom at Borthwickbrae in 1793, when he was working for William Elliot Lockhart. He could be the John who married Agnes Scott (from Hawick) in Roberton Parish in 1789 and was living at Harden in 1793. Their children included: Thomas (b.1790), John (b.1792) and James (b.1793), baptised in Roberton; and Margaret (b.1795), John (b.1796), William (b.1798) and Andrew (b.1801), baptised in Hawick. It is possible he is the John, stocking-maker in Hawick, whose son Andrew died in Hawick in 1805. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Wiltonburn Epps, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 2 work horses. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Ashkirk Bridgend, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Heuchhouse in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. It is possible he was the Mr. Gray of Castleton who He subscribed to John Learmont's book of poetry in 1791. John (18th/19th C.) servant living at Bedrule in 1797 when his name appeared in the Lieutenancy Book for Roxburghshire. John (18th/19th C.) servant at Knowe in Minto Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. John (b.1770s) resident of Winnington Rig in Kirkton Parish. He is recorded in 1797 and 1798 on the list of men balloted to serve in the Militia. He eventually paid £10 in early 1799 to avoid serving, as confirmed in the amended list of 1799. In 1801 he was recorded as a servant at Nether Tofts on the 1801 Militia ballot for Kirkton Parish. John 'Daft Jock', 'Jock the Ladle' (c.1780–1837) wandering beggar and simpleton, who travelled around Selkirkshire, Roxburghshire and Peeblesshire in the early-to-mid 1800s. A native of Ettrick, he later moved to Selkirk with his packman father, Johnnie ('Auld Jock'). He was also referred to as 'Daft Jock Gray of Gilmanscleuch'. His nickname 'the Ladle' came from a version of 'And he played upon a ladle . . . ' that he used to sing, along with a ladle as prop. He was also known for imitating ministers and for bawdy songs; his songs were often so filthy that no one else would have dared to sing them in public. He would also make up his own songs by throwing together rhymes from elsewhere. He usually wore knee-breeches, bright red garters, enormous buttons and a tall hat. He is mentioned in William Chambers 'Memoir of Robert Chambers' (1871), in reference to his visits to Peebles, with the words of 'Daft Jock Grey's printed there. This may have been his most original and popular song, having the chorus 'Rob Rodger, he ca's up the rear, And Caleb beats the drum' [RM], with a different version in the Chambers book, with chorus 'And the laddie he's but young, And the laddie he's but young, And Robbie Scott ca's up the rear, And Caleb beats the drum' [DJG]. He would mimic the older local preachers and was sometimes disruptive during services. He sang rhyming couplets of Wullie Craw's, and verses attributed to him refer to people and places around Wilton and Hassendean, as well as other regions. In Ettrick Church the minister was once late and he was encouraged by some to occupy the pulpit until the service started; when the minister arrived and told him to get down he quipped that the minister should 'come ye up; they're a stiff-necked and rebellious people, and it'll tak us baith'. On another occasion is is said that he was on a ship in Leith, entertaining the sailors, and ended up being taken on their trip to Ireland. He was said to be the inspiration for 'Davie Gallatley' in Sir Walter Scott's novel 'Waverley'. A portrait of him was painted by William Smellie Watson. He is said to have been very attached to his father, and took to bed after his father's death, dying within a week. An article 'Reminiscences of Daft Jock Gray, Commonly Called Jock the Ladle' (1866) was written by Alexander A. Hogg; it points out that an earlier article about him in the Hawick Advertiser was 'little more than a mere tissue of sbsurd nonsense'. He was said to have died in 1837 in his 60th year, but the baptism of John in Ettrick in 1783 is probably him. John (b.c.1780) labourer at Clarilaw according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801 in Wilton Parish. John (b.c.1780) servant at Newhouses according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801 in Wilton Parish. John (b.c.1780) son of William in Craggs according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Lilliesleaf Parish. Rev. John (1780/1–1828) said to have been a pupil of George Scott in Lilliesleaf. He was ordained as minister at Falstone in Northumberland. He died on his way home after preaching at Kielder. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Margaret Collier in 1796. Their children included: James (b.1796); Jane (b.1802); and Christian (b.1802). The witnesses in 1796 were the whole Associate Congregation. John (b.1790/1) born in Crailing, he was a carrier and grocer in Hobkirk Parish. In 1851 he was living at 'North Town O' Rule', which is the cottage known locally as 'Drythropple'. His neighbour was the poet John Halliday. His wife was Isabella and their children included Andrew, Eliza and Agnes. John (19th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. He married Mary Waldie in Roberton Parish in 1829. Their children included John (b.1832), Mary (b.1833), Janet (b.1835) and Peter (b.1837). John 'Jock' (1812–83) born in Wilton, he lived in the West-end and was known as a cheerful simpleton. He stayed at the Corner of the Green Wynd and the Loan with his sister Lizzie and her husband James Anderson, and helped his brother-in-law with his dairy. He was a common sight on the streets, driving a donkey cart and having a pet starling. He later became bald, apparently as the result of a hair tonic, and is buried in the Wellogate – 'Jock, the cuddie's tail's off' [RM]. John Y. (19th/20th C.) left money to establish the John Y. Gray Prize Fund at the High School. Katherine (16th C.) recorded in 1538 when she had the sheep of Thomas and George Lauder removed and placed her own livestock there. This was done legally in front of Thomas Scott in Todrig and others. In 1540 she was among the tenants who were warned to remove themselves from Todrig when Alexander Lauder succeeded to the lands. She may be the same woman as Katherine Lauder recorded in 1538. She may also be the Katherine, wife of Herbert Maxwell, recorded in 1540, related to the lands of Haining. Margaret (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident, recorded in 1720 being made to stand 'upon the usual place of repentance in sackcloth' in St. Mary's Kirk for 7 Sundays. This was for 'her sin of drunkenness and baseness'. Patrick (c.1518–84) 4th Lord Gray, Sheriff of Angus, he was nephew of 3rd Lord Gray. He played an important role in the Borders during the Rough Wooing, when he sided with the English. He was captured at the Battle of Solway Moss in 1542 and pledged himself to Edward VI in 1547. He led a party in 1547/8, along with many Kers and others to burn Ale Water, then Yarrow and Ettrick, then Hawick, together with the valleys of the Teviot, Slitrig and Borthwick, particularly the lands of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and his friends. In 1548 he was captured by French troops and narrowly avoided execution. He was again taken prisoner by the English at the Raid of Swinton in 1562. He married firstly Marion Ogilvie and secondly Margaret, daughter of Walter Ker of Cessford. He was succeeded by his eldest son Patrick. Peter (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included Robert (b.1780), Margaret (b.1782), Isabel (b.1784), Jen (b.1786), John (b.1788), Mary (b.1790) and James (b.1798). Peter (18th/19th C.) carrier recorded as owner of a horse in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. He is probably the Peter from Wilton who married Jane Leithead in Roberton in 1790. Their daughter Agnes was baptised in Wilton in 1802. Robert (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Redford in 1722 and their children included Agnes (b.1723), James (b.1725) and Bessie (b.1729). It seems likely he and his wife were related to Helen Gray and William Redford, respectively, who had children a little earlier in Ashkirk Parish. Robert (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His children included John (b.1738), Jean (b.1741), Jean (again, b.1743) and Robert (b.1745). Robert (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Mary Glendinning in 1830 and their children included Helen (b.1835) and Walter (b.1838). Robert (19th/20th C.) baker at 10 High Street around the 1890s. Samuel (19th C.) probably son of tailor James. He was living on Wilton Path in 1873 when he donated a copper coin to the Museum. Thomas (16th C.) probably from Liddesdale, he was listed in 1535 among a number of Armstrongs and others who were denounced as rebels for stealing cattle and taking prisoners from Craik. Ninian Gray, servant to John Forester 'Shake Buckler' is also listed, and so may have been a relative. Thomas (16th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He held a tenement there from the Bishop of Glasgow and in 1563 leased it to his neighbour Thomas Smail for 19 years. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, probably the part corresponding to Hassendean. He married Alison Riddell and their children included: Agnes (b.1680); Walter (b.1681); Christian (b.1684); Agnes (again, b.1688); and Agnes (again, b.1690). The witnesses in 1681 were Walter Riddell (probably related to his wife) and Alexander ... (perhaps Riddell) and in 1688 were Walter Riddell and Robert Hume. He is probably the Thomas Gray who witnessed baptisms in Roberton Parish for Robert Scott in 1681 and for Rev. Francis Scott in 1684 and 1688. Thomas of Townhead (17th C.) had an 'instrument' brought against him, along with Rev. Francis Scott in 1689, by 2 of the Hassendean heritors. This suggests that he was associated with Hassendean Kirk and also refused to give up Episcopalianism. He may be the same Thomas who has an 'instrument' in his favour in 1675 'on the appearance of his wife, Bessie Scott, within the parish Kirk of Hassindene'. He paid the land tax on £214 for lands previous held by Scott of Alton and 'Now called Know Townhead' in 1678. In 1692 he 'peyed formerly for the viccorage of Hassindeane alias Tounhead'. He was recorded at Hassendean Townhead on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he was taxed for 2 hearths. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls there is a record of 'Thomas Gray of Alton's Lands, now called Know Townhead'; it is unclear where his lands of Alton were. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of 'Crackuooll' (or Cracknooll') in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. He could be the Thomas, married to Helen Scott, who was recorded as a weaver at Shielswoodhaugh in 1709; their children included John (b.1705), Helen (b.1707) and Robert (b.1709). Perhaps the same Thomas was listed in 1724 and 1727 among those collecting money for the Parish, suggesting he was a Kirk Elder. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1714 he witnessed (along with Thomas Huntly) a baptism for John Little. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Aitkin and their son John was baptised in 1738. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Isabel Scott and their children included: Thomas (b.1757); and Isabel (b.1758). The witnesses in 1757 were the whole congregation and in 1758 were Walter Wilson and Francis Paterson. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Grierson and their children included John (b.1771) and Walter (b.1776). Thomas (b.c.1770s) servant at Dimpleknow according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. Thomas (b.c.1780) tailor at Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Thomas (18th/19th C.) first definitively known proprietor of the Mosspaul Inn. He is thus recorded on an 1803 list of members of the 1st Battalion of the Roxburghshire Volunteers. He was probably landlord at Mosspaul until 1816. He was a friend of James Ruickbie, who wrote a poem about the improvements that had been carried out at the hotel – 'Tam, the storm baith loud and fierce is, Ever since I left Mosspaul, Yet accept my two-three verses, Now I'm in a tift tae scrawl' [JR]. Thomas (19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Mary Reid and their children included: John (b.1823); Thomas (b.1824); and James (b.1830). Thomas (19th C.) married Helen Linton in Kirkton in 1835. Walter (b.c.1780) ploughman at Catshawhill in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Walter (19th C.) married Hannah Mellinson in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1837. William 'Will' (16th C.) leased part of the lands of Raperlaw in 1564, along with William Redford. This was specifically the quarter belonging to George Turnbull. He was probably related to Andrew and George, who leased other parts. William (d.bef. 1676) recorded in 1676 being 'of Lislie' (probably Lilliesleaf) when his widow Isobel Turnbull had a discharge with the treasurer of Selkirk. This was probably for some annual rent, with his son James also recorded in the same year. His son John is also recorded in 1678. William (17th C.) resident at Castleside near Branxholme according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1694 he was recorded as the Duchess of Buccleuch's tenant of the farm of Castleside. He may be the William who witnessed a baptism for Andrew Murray in 1671. William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He witnessed a baptism for James Thomson in 1680. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, recorded at West Groundistone in 1732 and Clarilaw in 1738. He is probably the William who in 1737 witnessed a baptism for Robert Easton, who lived at Clarilaw. He married Grisel Nixon and their children included Bessie (b.1727), Margaret (b.1730), Helen (b.1732), Andrew (b.1735) and Patrick (b.1738). The witnesses in 1732 were Robert and George Scott, and in 1738 were James Dryden and William Anderson. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isobel Scott in 1745 and their children included: Thomas (b.1763); Helen, Isabel and Margaret (b.1765); and Isabel (b.1769). William (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His daughter Margaret was baptised in 1760. William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was living at Harden in 1787. He married Helen (or 'Nelly') Smith and their children included: Thomas (b.1779) and John (b.1781), baptised in Wilton; and William (b.1787) and James (b.1791), baptised in Roberton. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Craggs in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Lilliesleaf Parish, when he owned 3 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax at Craggs in 1797. His son John is recorded at Craggs on the 1801 Militia ballot. He could be the William whose daughter Margaret was baptised in Lilliesleaf in 1760. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included William (b.1810), James (b.1811) and John Smith (b.1813). William (b.1796/7) born in Ancrum Parish, he was farmer at Ormiston in the 1860s, having previously lived in Channelkirk. In 1861 he was farmer of 210 acres at Ormiston and employing 7 people. His wife was Marion and their children included John, Janet, Violet, Christina and Marion. William (19th C.) married Elizabeth Scott in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1853 (see also Grey).

Gray Coat (grā-kō') n. hill south of Dodburn Filters and to the east of Priesthaugh. It contains the remains of several different homesteads and earthworks and its southern slopes are crossed by the Catrail. To the north-east of the summit is an ancient cairn, about 6 m in diameter, but surrounded by 3 grass-covered bankso; it is said to resemble the Rounds of Tivla (in the Shetlands), and probably a Bronze Age burial mound. The homestead is on the northern slopes, measuring 47 m by 37 m, perhaps defined by a twin palisade and with a house about 50 m diameter house inside. There are signs of cord rig on the northern and southern sides of the summit, as well as the souther-eastern slopes. Close to the summit are the remains of a settlement surrounded by a wall about 105 m by 60 m, with entrances in the south-west and north-east. The interior contains evidence of at least 8 houses. On the south-eastern side, beside the grassy track, are the remains of a small pele-house, possibly Peelbrae or Dodrig. The pele-house was 8 m by 4 m, with some rybats discovered in an excavation. To the south-east and north-west of these ruins are the foundations of 2 other buildings.

gray-daylicht (grā-dā-licht) n., arch. dawn, the light of dawn – '... whan the slogan waekent the waller an sterteet the fray i the gray-daylicht' [ECS].

Gray Hill (grā-hil) n. hill above Old Northhouse, reaching a height of 317 m and with a triangulation pillar on top. There are 2 ancient settlements on its slopes, as well as a portion of the Catrail on the other side of the road. On the far eastern slopes there is an area of rig-and-furrow cultivation.

Grayhill Bog see Grey Hill Bog

Graystane see Greystane

greap (greep) v., poet. to grope – 'But gin they saw him when they trow he's sleepin', They'd fin' him fou, an', for ye ken what, greapin' ' [JoHa], pp., poet. groped – 'There isna in't, for thrice I've greapit: O greatest curse, that e'er for man was sew'd or shapit, 'S an empty purse' [JoHa] (cf. grape).

the Great Bell (thu-grā'-bel) n. term used to refer to the new bell of St. Mary's, recast in 1694 after 'it was rent, anno 1693, and was of new founded'. A subscription was taken around the Parish, and an Act of the Bailies and Council was passed stipulating that only the families of those who had contributed (at least 12 shillings) were entitled to use the bell to announce burials, with the same restriction applying to the hand or 'Deed' bell. These 'Havers of the Bell' still had to pay a small fee for its use, however. The list contains 180 names, including some identifying information (occupations, nicknames, etc.), and hence is an invaluable record of Hawick's wealthier citizens at the end of the 17th century. In 1718 the Bailie Depute contributed 'as much oak as was ane axtree to the great church bell', meaning it got a new 'axle-tree' to swing on. In 1723 it was ordained that anyone who contributed to the rebuilding of the bellhouse should have the same rights as those listed in 1694. The bell was taken down (and presumably replaced again) in 1747 when work was done on the steeple. Repairs to the old bell contributed to the Town's debts mentioned in 1612. The bell was replaced by a new one in 1763, when the Kirk was rebuilt. The new bell weighed 560 pounds and the exchange was arranged through ex-Bailie Thomas Turnbull in London.

the Great Flid (thu-grā'-flid) n. popular name for the flood of the Slitrig in 1767, also known as 'Hawick Flood' or 'Hawick Spate'. This occurred on 5th August 1767, beginning about 4 p.m., and lasting until after 6 p.m. There was no great rainfall in Hawick and the flood only affected the Slitrig, with the Teviot above Hawick being easily fordable that day. The Slitrig rose 22 feet (about 6.5 m) above its normal level, as many as 15 houses were swept away, along with the Corn Mill, the garden wall of the Manse and the Parish school room. The smaller arch (at the east end) and part of the northern parapet of the Auld Brig were also swept away, and from there 2 men, trapped by the rushing waters, were carried off and drowned. Mrs. Aitkin narrowly escaped by crawling over a ladder laid between upper windows across the waters rushing down Silver Street, before the house was carried away. It was also said that 14 people were trapped in the middle of the Auld Brig, 12 of them being rescued by means of a ladder to Kedie's House, the other 2 trying to escape by means of a rope held by Rob Tinlin, but the current was too strong and they were swept away, to be found dead the next day at Spittal dam, bound together by the rope. Four people trying to save belongings from Eckron's house were swept down to the Sandbed and rescued there. Two other men were rescued after climbing on top of the kiln. A servant girl waded into her master's house to rescue the £300 in gold that he had there, only to be carried away, and she narrowly escaped drowning, being cast onto a green downriver, still clutching the bag of money. It is also said that the flood carried off most of the records of the Town's incorporated trades. The waters poured up the Backdamgate and filled the closes along both sides of the High Street as far as the Cross Wynd. Part of the Tower was undermined and in danger of falling and the garden behind the Tower was filled with furniture, whole trees and the carcases of sheep. Clothes drying on the Common Haugh were later found clinging to trees near Wilton Manse. The flood was probably exacerbated by the arches of the Auld Brig becoming blocked with debris. There is a tradition that it started when a shepherd threw a stone into a loch at Winburgh Hill, disturbing the fairy folk! It is also stated to have been started by 'the fall of a Water-spout' (whatever that means!). The Hawick minister, Rev. Laurie gathered some parishioners together in the kirkyard to pray during the flood, afterwards claiming to have helped abate the waters; although apparently the flood had already much receded by then. Another incident later recounted is that a baby was carried off in its cradle, but rescued without injury; similarly, it is said that a bedstead was carried off with a cat on it, which landed safely on a sandbank in the Common Haugh. It is also said that a Hawick shoemaker, who was several miles further down the Teviot and, unaware of the flood, noticed a board on the river bank, and discovered it was his own shop sign and that James Aitkin, returning from Kelso, noticed some of his own merchandise washed up on the haugh at Menslaws. There are several accounts of the events in Hawick that day, the most detailed being by Town Clerk John Gledstains and a later one in 1861 by W.N. Kennedy (it was said in 1862 that there was at least one living eye-witness who still remembered the events), plus a short account written into a bible at the time by a Mrs. Wilson of Silver Street, and further details described by Alex Michie in 1867. The loss of property was estimated to be £4000. Repairs to the walls of the Manse property, cutting a new watercourse and making a cauld were carried out by builders John Pott and Adam Scott over the following year. The flood of 1846 is also sometimes referred to as 'the Great Flood' and also the Slitrig Flid; there is debate about which one had the higher water or was the more devastating (see also flids).

Greathill (grā'-hil) n. former name for a farm in Jedforest. It was described as 2 steadings valued at 50 shillings according to the Exchequer Rolls in 1538 and 1539. In the rental roll of 1541 the tenant was Archibald Oliver, paying 25s (it is 'Greithill' in 1538 and 'Greithil' in 1541).

Greatlaws (grā'-laws) n. place name in Lilliesleaf Parish, south of Clerklands and close to a hill-fort. The tenants there in 1562 were Walter Veitch, John Henderson, John Kedie and William Thorbrand. William Riddell was there in 1595/6. It was part of the lands whose superiority was inherited by Sir Walter Riddell of that Ilk from his father in 1636. 'Bessie Stoddart gudewife of Greatlaws' was owner in 1643, when the lands were valued at £104. It passed from Riddells of Greatlaws to ministers of the name Duncanson through marriage. Andrew Duncanson paid £104 for the land tax there in 1663 and 1678. It was probably among lands inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. Thomas Turnbull was there in 1694. John Duncanson was owner in the 1740s, when the value was £146 14s 8d. In 1788 it was owned by Sir John Riddell. William Laidlaw was farmer there in at least 1797–99. It was owned by Sir John Buchanan Riddell in 1813 and valued at £287. Hedger Peter Stoddart and his family were there in 1851 and 1861 (it is 'Grett Law' in 1562, 'Greitlaw' in 1595/6, 'Graitlawes' in 1630, 'Greitlawes' in 1636 and 1669, 'Greatlawes' in 1670 and 'Gridlaws' in 1799; it is marked 'Greeklawes' on Pont's c.1590 manuscript map and Blaeu's 1654 map, but with the modern spelling on Stobie's 1770 map).

Great Legs (grā'-legz) n. nickname of Adam Laidlaw and also Robert Elliot.

Greatmoor (grā'-moor) n. hill about 10 miles south of Hawick, between the Maidens and Cauldcleuch and reaching 599 m (1,964 ft). It is marked on the Ordnance Survey maps as 'Greatmoor Hill'. The summit contains a large man-made cairn as well as a triangulation pillar – 'Her hair, the raven's glossiest hue, That skims o'er Greatmoor's top sae high' [JoHa], 'Was there never a maid on Ettrick side Who waved to her love on his last long ride? Came never a steed over Greatmoor moss With the corpse of his rider bound across?' [WHO], '... Then Greatmoor and Windburgh against a purple sky' [WHO], 'Penchrise and Gritmuir, Ruberslaw, dark wi waist-high heather, And the slant, green, edge o' the Cairter Bar' [DH]. Also the name of another hill just west of Skelfhill Pen, reaching a height of 481 m (formerly written 'Gritmoor'; it is marked on Blaeu's c.1654 map as 'Gritt moore', a little further south of its real location and is 'Greatmoor Hill' on Stobie's 1770 map).

the Great Riot (thu-grā'-rI-i') n. popular name for a public disturbance at the Boswells Fair of 1849. A young shepherd was killed by a railway navvy, and the suspect escaped from the police. The dragoons were called in, finding someone (probably innocent) to hang for the murder.

the Great War (thu-grā'-wawr) n. the First World War, WWI, in which there were almost 1,000,000 dead on the Allied side, with over 3,000,000 casualties. Around 1,000 local men lost their lives between 1914 and 1918, i.e. about one for each day of the war. The K.O.S.B. were involved in the Gallipoli campaign of 1915, and there more than 120 men of Hawick and district died (over half on a single day). For Hawick it was also a time when the Stobs army camp was a significant part of local life. Soldiers were billetted in Hawick, and trained in several open spaces around the town. Women were employed on knitting frames, a job previously reserved for men, and many tweed manufacturers turned to filling military orders. The Common Riding was cancelled for the years 1914–18, with the Council resolving to do nothing while the war continued. However, J.E.D. Murray rode the marches on his own, and the Common Riding of 1919 was a special occasion. In 1918 the Common-Riding Weekend was used for Red Cross benefit events and the Vertish Hill Sports were held on the Saturday. 19th July 1919 was declared 'Peace Day' with bonfires lit around Britain. The Vertish Hill Sports were held on that day, with about 2,800 children each being given a bag of cakes. On 30th August that year there was a 'Welcome Home' parade in Hawick, starting at the Drill Hall and continuing to the Volunteer Park, where there was a fete and sports day. The Hawick War Memorial was erected in 1921 next to the Museum, and there are other memorials in many of the local villages. A book 'Hawick and the Great War, A Pictorial Record' was published in 1919 and a history, 'All These Fine Fellows', was written by Derek Robertson in 1999.

Great Warrington Sike (grā'-waw-rin'-in-sīk) n. stream in Castleton Parish, which rises on Larriston Fells and joins Storff Sike and then runs into Larriston Burn. There is a boundary bank and old enclosures near where it joins Storff Sike. Little Warrington Sike is to the north.

greazy-binnder (gree-zee-bin-dur) n. properly called a linker, a worker in the knitwear industry who joined up the fronts and backs (across the shoulders) and sleeves of garments before they were washed (note the pronunciation).

gree (gree) n., poet. honour, prize, good will, rank, superiority, pre-eminence – 'They shone as bright as diamonds in every degree, The Dumfries-shire Militia that day they bore the gree' [BY], 'If, in a land that aye was free, And the Green (thu-green) n. former short form for the Green Kirk – '. . . the East-bank assemblage was inferior to that of the Green, both as regards the number of adherents and means at their disposal . . . ' [WNK].

Greena (green-u) n. former fortified house in the lower Liddel valley, south of Greena Hill, southwest of Kershope. It is located on the west side of the Liddel Water, roughly opposite the remains of Stonehouse Tower. From the remains it probably measured about 10 m by 7 m, and there is also evidence for 2 adjacent buildings in an enclosure. The name was probably 'Greenhaugh' in earlier times. It is probably the lands owned by Richard 'de Grenehou' recorded in an English record of 1281/2. James in Greenhaugh is mentioned in 1510 and 1515/6. In 1541 the lands of Greenhaughshaw were valued at 30 shillings and tenanted by John Forester. 'Will o Greena' was a well-known resident, possibly an Armstrong, who was killed in a duel with Foster of Stanegarthside, the site said to be marked with a stone. Will Foster of Greena is recorded in 1583 (and could be the same man). John Foster, son of 'Meikle Rowie of Greenhawghe' is recorded in 1583. A map dated 1590 shows a tower of 'Lard o' Jockes Grenehag' near the confluence of the Tinnis Burn with the Liddel Water. There could have been two separate farms of Over Greena and Nether Greena. Robbie Armstrong and James 'Dittone' were there in 1623, as well as Abie Foster. It is probably the 'Porterleyne Greina' possessed by Archibald Douglas in 1632; he was some kind of servant of William, Earl of Angus, and his lands were inherited by his daughter Margaret in 1634. William, brother to the deceased James Foster in Greena is listed as a wanted thief in 1642. Also in 1642 John Douglas of Gervald was granted the lands of 'Greina' and others. Sir William Douglas of Cavers was owner in 1643 when the lands were valued at £420. 'Harie forrester' paid the land tax (on £420) there in 1678. The residents there in 1694 were James Steel, James Robison, John Oliver, 2 James Armstrongs, 'Arck' Armstrong, John Armstrong and John Hall. In 1707 the lands were owned by Forester of Stanegarthside and by Oliver of Dinlabyre by the 1780s. The farm was valued at £420 in 1788 and in 1811, when owned by William Oliver of Dinlabyre. William Armstrong was a collier there and John Cairns a wright in 1799. Thomas Foster was a servant there in 1801. Labourer George Turnbull and his family lived there in 1841. Robert Jardine of Liddelbank paid the land tax there in 1874, with his home being on part of the former lands there (it is 'Grenehauche' in 1515/6, 'Grenehauchschaw' in 1541, 'Greinay' and 'Greanay' in 1623, 'grinach' in 1678 and 'Grinna' in 1694; it is marked 'Grenehag' on Sandison's c.1590 map of the Deabateable Land and 'Grina' on Gordon's c.1650 map, while 'N. Grina' and 'O. Grina' are marked on Blaeu's c.1654 map and it is 'Greena' on Stobie's 1770 map).

Greena Hill (green-u-hil) n. hill in the southern part of Castleside Parish, just west of Dinwoodie and the B6357. It reaches a height of 222 m and its summit has an 11 m diameter cairn, with a triangulation pillar on top. To the north-east is a quarry, as well as a disused lime kiln, and 2 further lime kilns by the Tinley Cleuch. To the south-west, by the Muir Burn, are the remains of a lime quarry, 2 lime kilns and another building. There are also several sheepfolds, as well as boundary banks and traces of rig lines all round the hill.

Greenbank (green-bawngk) n. another name for Greenbank Toll or the farmstead that was there before the tollhouse was built. John Ballantyne was living there in 1766, Walter Cavers in 1767–71, John Hume in 1773, Charles Wilson in 1779, Walter Stewart in 1780, George Turnbull in 1781, John Muir in 1785–88, John Thomson was living there in 1795 and Walter Murray and James Scott in 1798. Adam Nichol was farmer there in 1797. Andrew Goodfellow was there in 1800. George Paterson was farmer there in the 1840s and 1850s (also sometimes 'Greenbanks'; it is on Ainslie's 1773 map).

Greenbankhaugh (green-bawngk-hawch) n. former name for a cottage to the south of the lower Borthwick road, next to the turn-off for the Snoot. Walter Scott and family were there in 1841, when it was 'Greenbanks haugh'.

Greenbank Hill (green-bawngk-hil) n. hill to the north-west of Greenbank and east of Alemoor Loch. It reaches a height of 336 m and there are signs of cord rig on its slopes.

Greenbank Plantin (green-bawngk-plawn'-in) n. plantation just to the east of Greenbank Toll.

Greenbank Toll (green-bawngk-tōl) n. former toll house at the sharp bend in the B711 about a mile west of Roberton. It was built in 1826 as an annex to the existing farmhouse when the new B711 was developed as a toll road. The small hatch for operating the tollbar can still be seen. A pond behind (to the north of) the house fed a former threshing mill and sawmill there. It is marked on the map as 'Greenbank' and was known locally as 'Greenbanks'. The farm was once part of the Borthwickbrae estate. With a plantation about 300 m to the west is a circular mound, about 22 m in diameter, which may be a burial cairn.

Greenbraeheids (green-brā-heedz) n. Greenbraeheads, a farm in the Slitrig valley just south of Hawick, reached over the Hummelknowes Bridge, or via a track off the top of Wellogate Brae. Robert Shiel and John Cairns were tenants there in 1797. James, John and Robert Shiel were farmers there in 1841 – '... While Greenbraeheads (in older times Priestcrown), To meek Crowbyres sends the signal down' [WNK].

Green Burn (green-burn) n. stream to the west of Newcastleton, behind Kirk Hill. It runs south, joining Black Grain and flowing into the Tinnis Burn. The old farmstead of Greenburn lies along its banks, as well as grouse butts and old sheepfolds nearby. To the east are the remains of 2 huts. In 1857 Dr. William Murray donated to the Museum a 'load-stone from Greenburn'.

the Green Cafe (thu-green-kaw-fee) n. cafe that stood at 80 High Street, at the bottom of Brougham Place, leading to the nickname for that street. It was established in 1838, and existed until around 1999. Latterly it has been painted red, and was for a while a confectioner's shop.

the Green Cafe Brae (thu-green-kaw-fee-brā) n. popular name for Brougham Place, also known as 'the Cafe Brae'.

the Green Cafe Brig (thu-green-kaw-fee-brig) n. occasional name for the road bridge across the former railway at the top of Brougham Place.

green coat (green-kō') n. the long-tailed dress jacket in deep green, traditionally worn by the Principals during the Common Riding. The origin of this tradition is unknown. In the late 19th century it was stated that the form of the trousers had changed, but the green coat had long been used. The first record of a Cornet being fitted for a suit was in 1815, but it is unclear if this was green. Ex-Cornet's traditionally don their old jackets each year at the Dinner and Ball, the only other time it is worn being at the Mosstroopers' ball – '... privileged ti weer baith the green jersey and the green coat' [IWL].

Greenend Sidin (green-end-sī-din) n. siding on the Waverley Line by Greenend farm, between Belses and St. Boswells stations.

Greenfield (green-feeld) n. Marion (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. Her name appears as 'old marioun grenefeild'. She was probably related to Thomas and William, who were also listed. John (b.1834/5) from Berwick, he was a teacher at Cavers School in the 1860s. He also served as Kirk Treasurer and Session Clerk. In 1861 he was a boarder, living at 20 Buccleuch Street in Hawick. Thomas (16th C.) recorded on the Green Gress (thu-green-gres) n. the Green Grass, being an old West End name for the Loaning or Tryst ground. This was 1 acre and 34 poles in area and extended to both sides of what is now Rosebank Road. It was much used as a leisure area by West Enders, and as a gathering place for youths, leading to its other popular name the Sweerin Green.

Greenhaugh (green-hawch) n. lands in southern Liddesdale, probably an older name for Greena.

Greenheid (thu-green-heed) n. Greenhead, farm to the east of Selkirk. It was once a seat of a branch of the Kers. The remains of a towerhouse were unearthed here in 1948 (Aymer 'del Greneheued' is recorded in 1305; it is marked on Gordon's c.1650 map and Blaeu's c.1654 map).

the Greenhill (thu-green-hil) n. former name for an area in the southwest part of Wilton Common. This was close to Mabonlaw and Todshaw, and it was said the tenants of those farms regarded it and Caminshaw as their 'headroom' – '... the nearest place is called the Greenhill, and the rest of it is called Caminshaw, and said ground lyes along Mabenlaw march, as far as it marches with the common, and along Todshaw march, till within sight of Whitfield' [DCW1765]; '... along which south side of the common that part called the Greenhill lies, betwixt the common-dyke and Caminshaw the whole way' [DCW1765].

Greenhill (green-hil) n. farm to the north of North Synton, now known as Dryden Greenhill. Robert Scott of Greenhill was recorded as witness to a baptism in Hawick in 1685. George Henderson was a servant there in 1797 and Robert Douglas in 1799. Walter Inglis was a labourer in 1799 and William Inglis in 1801. Mrs. Govenlock was recorded as farmer there in 1868. The Ian Stark Equestrian Centre has been based here since 2013.

Greenhill (green-hil) n. Rev. Charles Kinnear (1817–86) born at Cash, Strathmiglo, Fife, son of Charles Kinnear and Christian Baxter. He graduated from St. Andrews in 1840 and was ordained to Garelochhead in 1844. The following year he was translated to Roberton Parish, where he was minister until his death. In 1851 and 1861 he was recorded at the Roberton Manse, living with his mother Christiana and sister Margaret, as well as 3 servants. He gave some coins to the Archæological Society in 1858. He married Isabella, daughter of Horatius Blair of Glasgow, and she died in 1907. He wrote 'Sermon on the Death of Allan Eliott Lockhart of Borthwickbrae' (published in Hawick, 1878).

Greenhill Dyke (green-hil-dīk) n. former boundary running southeast from Old Whitfield to the corner of Wilton Common – '... from which pit and dyke all the witnesses agreed the dyke called the Greenhill-dyke was the march south-west betwixt Whitfield and the common' [DCW1765].

Greenhills (green-hilz) n. former farm on Tarras Water, perhaps related to the modern Greenlea Knowe (it is marked 'Greenhils' on Gordon's c.1650 maps and Blaeu's c.1654 map).

Greenholm (green-hōm) n. farm in Liddesdale, on the east side of the Hermitage valley near Snaberlee, opposite Redheugh. South Greenholm is marked on today's Ordnance Survey map, with North Greenholm gone. Aerial photography has shown rig lines and an enclosure to the northeast. It should not be confused with the lands of 'Greena' further to the south (where the Tinnis Burn meets the Liddel Water). It may be the 'Grenhowe' recorded in 1365 when Edward III bestowed protection on John Thirlwall and his tenants there and in Roughley, and also the 'Grenehow', valued at 20 merks, in Liddesdale recorded in a rental list for Douglas of Morton in the 1370s. It was owned by Elliot of Redheugh in at least the late 15th and early 16th centuries. It was one of 3 farms that Scott of Buccleuch claimed Elliot of Redheugh had falsely added to his charter; however, it was still owned by the Elliots in 1637. It was one of 3 farms given by the last Robert Elliot of Redheugh to his daughter Esther in about the 1640s. 'Gulenflatt & Greeholme' is listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, with Francis Elliot, Arthur Beattie and Archibald Armstrong recorded there. It was owned by William Manderson according to the 1788 county valuation and the Land Tax Rolls of 1811, and valued (along with Leahaugh) at £136 15s 8d. John Rutherford was there in 1797, William Kyle in at least 1799–1801 and James Cavers in 1801. Walter Elliot was farmer there in 1840. William Dodd of Greenholm lived in Newcastleton in the 1860s and John Routledge was farmer there in 1868 (marked 'Greenhome' on Gordon's c.1650 map, 'Greenehoome' on Blaeu's 1654 map and with the modern spelling on Stobie's 1770 map; it may be 'Greenholles' in 1612, 'grenehoilis' in 1613, 'Greinholles' in 1624, 'Greinhoillis' in 1637 and 'Greenhollis' in 1675).

Greenhoose (green-hoos) n. Greenhouse, farm between Hassendean and Belses. It was once in Minto Parish, being part of the Hassendeanburn estate. However, in most records it was in Lilliesleaf Parish and was part of the lands of Raperlaw in the 1643 Land Tax Rolls, owned by Turnbulls and Davidsons. In 1678 it was partly owned by Ralph Davidson of Greenhouse (valued at £104) and part by Andrew Davidson (valued at £65). John Stewart and Walter Davidson were recorded there in 1694. Andrew Davidson paid tax for 13 windows there in 1748. The lands were valued at £256 18s 10d in the 1740s. In 1766 the farm consisted of several separate pieces of land, as shown on a plan of Raperlaw. In 1769 it was bought by Walter Turnbull of Firth from Andrew Davidson. In 1788 it was recorded as belonging to Robert Laidlaw in Kingledoors, valued at £210 5s 6d. In 1797 James Turnbull was farmer there, when it was listed on the Horse Tax Rolls for Lilliesleaf Parish. Tailor William Turnbull was there in 1799. In 1811 it is recorded that 'Part of Davidson of Grenhouse's Lands in Lilliesleaf' had been acquired by Edgar Hunter and was then owned by William Riddell of Camieston; at the same time, Ralph Davidson's part was valued at £104 and Andrew Davidson's part at £65, both owned by Robert Laidlaw in Kingledoors, as well as part of Davidson's lands valued at about £37. Alexander Horsburgh was there in the 1860s.

the Green Hut (thu-green-hu') n. name given to several small shops in Hawick over the years, particularly one near the top of the Loan on the right (once a chip shop, now closed), one built off Weensland Road near the top of Trinity Steps (also once a chip shop, and still flourishing as a convenience store), and one that sold ice-cream and other refreshments up the Park. Some of them have also been known as the 'Wee Shop'. The general grocer's on Weensland Road was run by the Whillans family in the mid-20th century and by Hunter & Logan in the latter part of the 20th century.

green kail (green-kāl) n. the curly variety of kail, Brassica oleracea acephala, kail generally – 'Item, whatsomever person that steillis any of their neighbours peittis, turffis, green-kail, corn . . . ' [BR1640], '. . . or steills their neighbours peats, green kail, or other goods, under the pain of fining . . . ' [BR1696], 'There's naething i' Hielants but green kail and leeks, And lang-leggit Hielantmen wantin' the breeks; Wantin' the breeks, and withoot hose or shoon, They'll a' get the breeks when Jamie comes hame', 'I do not mean the best of you to want meal a week ot twa, you have plenty of gonyell and green kail . . . ' [WSB].

the Green Kirk (thu-green-kirk) n. popular name for the Hawick secession church at Myrselawgreen, also known as the West End Meeting House. It was established by the Anti-Burgher congregation after they had feued a piece of ground in Myreslawgreen in 1765 or 1766. Its roots went back to 1741, from which time several secessionists from in and around Hawick had attended the congregation at Midlem, and the minister there preached every third Sunday at Hutleburn farm near Ettrickbridge. This continued until the Hawick congregation was established in 1763, led by James Scott, farmer at Boonraw. The manse was not built until 1768. The church later become the West United Secession Church, after the breach in the Associate Synod had been healed, and was also described as the United Presbyterian Chapel. The first building of 1763 was replaced in 1823 (and a stone plaque bearing that date still survives). It was plain and unassuming and ceased to be used as a church in the 1870s, becoming a Masonic Hall until about 1923. It was also used for dances in the 1930s and the War years, when it was affectionately known as 'the Rabble'. Afterwards it became a saleroom run by Bert Leishman and was finally demolished in 1969 and is now the site of Myreslaw Court. The congregation meanwhile moved to Orrock Church, which was built 1872/4 (probably on 'particate' lands once owned by shoemaker Robert Oliver). The Museum has 2 old collection ladles from the church (one donated in 1875) and a communion token exists from 1768, as well as a communion cup and flagon inscribed 'United Associate Church, Hawick, 1769'. A roll of the ministry is: Dr. John Young 1767–1806; Andrew Rodgie 1807–60; James Parlane 1857–69; Thomas Cockburn 1869– (the name derives from Myreslawgreen rather than being any reference to colour).

Greenknowe Toor (green-now-toor, -tow-ur) n. ruined 16th tower just west of Gordon, between Earlston and Greenlaw. The area was originally home of the Gordons, with the L-shaped tower built in 1581 by the Setons and later sold to the Pringles. It has a famous clock-wise spiral staircase to give advantage to defenders.

Greenland Hill (green-lind-hil) n. site of a suicidal advance during the Battle of Arras in May 1917. 6th Battalion K.O.S.B. managed to advance, but were cut off. Few made it back alive and at least 14 local men are buried in unkown graves.

Green Lane (green-lān) n. street behind the old Parish Church location, above Buccleuch Street, named after the Green Wynd (Beaconsfield Terrace) which it leads off.

Greenlaw (green-law) n. town on the Blackadder Water, built in the 17th century and functioning as the county town of Berwickshire for 207 years until 1903. The Market Cross and Kirk are the oldest structures, with Hume Castle nearby. The last public hanging in Scotland took place here in 1834. The town contains the restored New Palace Theatre, home of the National Institute for Theatre Organ Studies, and the old Town Hall, built in a Greek Revivalist style in 1829. A polished jade axe-head found near here in about 1840 is a rare example of this type of neolithic artefact in Scotland. A 'pistol lock' from here was donated to the Museum in 1900. 'An Old Berwickshire Town: History of the Town and Parish of Greenlaw, From the Earliest Times to the Present Day' (1905) was written by Robert Gibson. Population (1991) 589 (the origin of the name is simply 'green mound').

Greenlaw (green-law) n. John (14th/15th C.) attendant of James Glesdstane of Cocklaw (Ormiston) who is said to have defied the Percys when they besieged the tower in 1403. He declared that he would give up the tower if not relieved by 1st August. But before then, the English army had already moved south towards Shrewsbury. He is depicted as the owner of the castle in Wilson's 'Tales of the Borders'. John (16th C.) presented to Wilton Kirk in 1549, following the death of Peter Langlands. William (d.1247) cleric of Glasgow Diocese, recorded as 'de Greenlawe' and variants. He was described as 'son of Roland son of William', he probably came from the family of Berwickshire, although not directly. He held the Church of Rossie in Perthshire from 1214 and also Kirkcaldy in the early 1220s. When Lilliesleaf became vacant in 1222, he had hopes of obtaining that benefice, but this does not seem to have happened. He held a Prebend of Auckland (in Durham) from 1227 and a Canonry of Glasgow from 1237/8. He appears to have lived in England for a while and received a grant for some fishing rights on the Tweed. He was witness to several charters, e.g. at Nisbet in 1228/9, Ancrum in 1230/1 and to Soutra Hospital in about 1230, as well as some documents connected with the Merse. He also witnessed charters for Kelso and Melrose Abbeys in the 1230s, and there is a suggestion that he may then have lived somewhere near Lilliesleaf. He was buried in the chapter-house of Melrose Abbey. William (c.1313–73/4) cleric of St. Andrews Diocese, who spent much of his life on the Continent. He was referred to as being 'de Dunbaer sive de Grinlaw' in 1333, suggesting that he was associated with both Dunbar and Greenlaw. He studied in Paris, becoming M.A. in 1342 and staying as Regent of Arts, as well as serving as Proctor of the English Nation. He was Rector of Paris University in 1345 (with Walter Wardlaw replacing him as Proctor) and left there in 1346. In 1342 he was appointed to Edzell Church (in Angus) and had a promise of a canonry in Aberdeen. He became Dean of Glasgow Diocese in 1349, which he probably held until 1366. He had the promise of the Prebendary of Botary in Moray in 1352, as well as Stobo Church in 1364, which he held until his death. He was appointed Collector of Papal Revenues in Scotland in 1352 when in Rome and later acted as Proctor there for several Scottish ecclesiastics. He was then at Avignon and Rome for the rest of his life, except for a return to to Scotland in about 1359. A promise of an Archdeaconry in Brechin did not materialise, but in 1353 he became Archdeacon in St. Andrews Diocese; however, there were conuter-claims to that position by others, including William Chisholme. He also held benefices in France. He had some rights in the Church of Cavers, but was probably never the full Rector, and resigned this before 1364. In 1357 he had permission to hold 3 incompatibile benefices and was made a Papal Chaplain in 1367/8. He died in Avignon (also written 'Girnelaw', 'Grenelaw', etc.).

Green Law (green-law) n. hill in the southern part of Southdean Parish, reaching a height of 368 m. It is north of the much higher Carlin Tooth, and now lies within Wauchope Forest. The ridge to the north-east is called Tamshiel Rig, and has the remains of an Iron Age fort. To the north-west, near what was called Coblaw Plantation are the remains of a settlement, consisting of an enclosure and foundations of 2 buildings. The site has been mutilated by forestry activity. To the west of this settlement was an old cairn, about 10 m across, now destroyed by a forestry road.

Greenlaw Sike (green-law-sīk) n. small stream or ditch forming part of the western boundary of Wilton Common. It is essentially an upper part of Todshaw Sike, but seems to have been drained, since its location on the 1764 map of Wilton common no longer corresponds with a water feature – '... to where a high road crosses the syke, from which high-way the runner takes the name of the Greenlaw-syke' [DCW1765].

green meat (green-mee') n., arch. vegetables in general, green ones in particular – '... in Scotland the tyrrany of the kail-pot has so firm a hold on the national stomach, that our countrymen can scarcely understand any 'green meat' which will not submit to the all-receiving domestic crucible' [JAHM].

Greenriver (gree-ri-vur) n. house and lands just west of Bonchester, formerly called Hobsburn and recently reverted to the original name. The 3-storey T-plan house was built about 1770, probably incorporating an older house of the early 1600s. The house was the main mansion of the Stonedge estate in the 18th century. It was renamed by James Chisholme after his Jamaican plantation in about 1793. He is recorded there on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1797, when he owned 3 horses. William Easton was a gardener there in 1801. The Elliot family lived there in the 19th century. Robert Kerr Elliot is said to have left in a hurry in 1835 (when his father died) after being told by a builder that the house was unsafe; it still stands to this day. After that it was let out as rooms, and tenanted by Henry Elliot in the mid-1800s. The farm was tenanted by James Armstrong around 1900 (it is 'Green River' in 1797).

Greens (greenz) n. farm just south of Newcastleton and north of Mangerton, on the same side of the Liddel. It is probably the 'Grenys' listed as a 3-shilling land in c.1376 rentals around Mangerton among the charters of the Douglases of Morton. In 1541 it was valued at 10 shillings, with tenant Thomas Armstrong, 'the Bul'. 'Abie' Armstrong from there was hung for murdering a blind man on Ancrum Bridge in 1623. Andrew Crozier 'Jeans Andro' was also there in 1623. It was possessed by Jock and Ninian Armstrong in 1632. In 1667 Walter Lorraine was tenant there, and also Walter Lorraine (possibly son of the previous Walter) in 1682. Hugh Beattie was tenant in 1682. In 1694 William Armstrong was tenant, with Simon Armstrong also listed there. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch; at that time it consisted of 164 acres, bounded by a common to the east, Tweeden Burn to the south, the Liddel Water to the west and the lands of the Laird of Whithaugh to the north. The farm also had 22 acres of land on the other side of the Liddel Water, bounding on Millholm and it shared a common of 116 acres with the farms of Yethouse and Chingills. Robert Thomson was there in the early 18th century, followed by William Thomson. William Ogilvie was farmer there in 1797 and William Grieve was a servant there in 1799. William Scott was farmer in the first half of the 19th century. Little Oglivie was stone mason there in 1851 and George Douglas a woodman in 1861 (note that this is easily confused with Greena near Kershope; it was 'Grenys' in 1541, 'Greinis' in 1623, 'Greenesse' in 1632 and 'Greins' in 1667 and 1694; it is marked on Gordon's c.1650 map, Blaeu's c.1654 map and Stobie's 1770 map).

the Greens (thu-greenz) n. popular name for Hawick R.F.C. after the dark green jerseys they have worn since 1885. Also used to refer to Mansfield Park as a location or the team's clubrooms – '... Lost your bonnet, and a' that was left o' your voice, As the Greens got the wunnin' try' [DH].

Greenshields (green-sheeldz) n. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Agnes Deans and their children included: Janet (b.1684); and James (b.1687). Along with Stephen (who was quartermaster of the weavers) he witnessed a baptism in 1685 for John Scott and Jane Bell. James (17th C.) tenant in Birneyknow. He was recorded in 1684 on a long list of people declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. His name is recorded as 'Greenshiels'. He was probably related to the Covenanter John. James (17th C.) resident at Stobicote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. James (17th C.) listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He was a resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He is probably the James recorded in 1687 when he was fined, along with a group of other men (including Steven, to whom he was surely related), for clandestinely removing their sheep from the Town's flock, without paying the Town Herd. He may be the James, married to Margaret Scott, whose son James was baptised in Hawick in 1684. James (17th/18th C.) resident in Whithope in Roberton Parish. His children included: John (b.1717); an unnamed son (b.1719); and James (b.1721). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Isobel Scott and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1677. John (d.1679) from Cavers Parish. He drowned on the 'Crown of London' when it shipwrecked off the Orkneys when carrying a cargo of Covenanters captured at Bothwell Bridge and bound for America. Robert (17th C.) resident in Minto Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. His name is written as 'Greinsields' and he is listed 'with an kilne', suggesting he was an artisan of some sort. Robert (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in 1703 for weaver Walter in Branxholme Town and in 1705 for weaver Thomas Turnbull. He is probably the Robert who married Margaret Henry and whose child Christian was baptised in 1703. Robert (17th/18th C.) candlemaker in Hawick. In 1702 he married Margaret Henry, who was also from Hawick Parish. Their children included Christian (b.1703). Steven (17th/18th C.) quartermaster of the weavers in Hawick in 1693. In that year John Hardie was fined for pushing him out of his seat in the balcony of St. Mary's Kirk, as well as pulling at his bonnet. Along with James (who was surely a relative) he witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1685 for John Scott and Jane Bell. He also witnessed a baptism for John Thomson in Hawick in 1687. He is probably the Steven recorded in 1687 when he was fined, along with a group of other men (including James, to whom he was surely related), for clandestinely removing their sheep from the Town's flock, without paying the Town Herd. He was listed as a weaver among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. In 1694 he was 'Steivan Greinsheils' among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. He is probably the Steven, son of Thomas and Janet Scott, who was born in Hawick in 1647. He is probably the Steven, married to Bessie Bridges, whose son Thomas was baptised in 1683, and perhaps also the Steven, married to a Rule, whose daughter Janet was baptised in 1687. The witnesses in 1683 were Francis Scott and William Swan. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Isobel Smith and their children included: William (b.1640). Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Janet Scott and their children included Robert (b.1643); Steven (b.1647); and George (b.1651). Walter was one of the witnesses in 1647, and surely related. Thomas (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He is probably the son of Steven who was born in 1683. In 1707 he was a witness for a baptism for fellow weaver Adam Scott. He is recorded as 'Greenshells' in 1714 when he (with John Swan as cautioner) pleaded with the Session to allow his weak child to be baptised, although he and his wife were 'under scandal'. In 1720 he witnessed baptisms for weaver James Scott and (with weaver James Scott) for weaver John Stevenson. He married Janet Scott and their children (baptised in Hawick Parish) included Robert (b.1714). The witnesses in 1714 were shoemakers John Scott and William Riddell. Perhaps the same weaver Thomas also married Bessie Telfer (from Hobkirk Parish) in Hawick in 1724. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included John (b.1715). Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Elliot and their children included Isobel (b.1646); and Robert (b.1649). William (b.1652) may also have been his son. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Scott and their children included: John (b.1653); Bessie (b.1655); and Janet (b.1657). Walter (17th/18th C.) weaver in Branxholme Town. He married Bessie Mitchellhill and their daughter Margaret was baptised in Hawick in 1703, with witnesses tailor Walter Gledstains and weaver Robert in Hawick (who was surely related). William (17th C.) resident of Ormiston (although it is unclear if this was the local one or not). His testament was recorded in 1687. William (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1710 he was fined for fighting with William Hill (another weaver) in St. Mary's Kirk. They apparently scuffled before the service (probably over seating) then struck at each other during the sermon. He could be the William whose daughter Marion was baptised in Hawick in 1692. It seems likely he was related to weaver Steven (also written 'Greensheils', 'Greenshells', 'Greenshels', 'Greenshiells', 'Greensheils', 'Greenshells', 'Greinsheills', 'Greinsheils' and variants).

Greenshiels (green-sheelz) n. former lands in Castleton Parish, south-west of Foulshiels and west of Redheugh. It was listed on a rental roll of c.1376 in the 'Quarterium de Ludne'. Thomas Armstrong was tenant there in 1535 when he was denounced as a rebel along with other Armstrongs. There are remains of a farmstead and related structures on both sides of the banks of Greenshiels Sike. There are old boundary dykes defining the lands, including a field system and some rig lines. The farmstead consisted of at least 4 separate buildings, plus turf huts. The farm appears to have been abandoned during the 17th century. Further up the burn, on the eastern side there are 3 shieling-huts and an enclosure (it is 'Greneschelis' in c.1376 and 1535 and marked 'Greensheels' on Blaeu's 1654 map; note that it is easy to confused with Greens, south of Newcastleton).

Greenshill (greenz-hil) n. farm in Ashkirk Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Rolls, when James Johnstone was farmer. It is probably related to Grain Hill.

Greenside (green-sīd) n. house on Main Street in Denholm, which held the Post Office in the 20th century, until 1966.

Greenside Bog see Greenside Moss

Greensidehaa (green-sīd-haw, -hal) n. Greensidehall, farm in the northern part of Wilton, reached along Greensidehall Road. Walter Cook was there in 1708 and Adam Easton was tenant in 1709. Robert Easton was there in 1725. Bessie Sanderson died there in 1750. John Cook was there in 1797. It was owned by the Scotts of Whitehaugh in the 18th and early 19th centuries. In 1698 William Scott of Whitehaugh had a sasine for these (and other) lands, as heir to his father Walter. It was a tenanted farm belonging to the Scotts of Whitehaugh in the 18th century. John Ferguson is recorded there in 1797 and James Davidson in 1841. Robert and David Campbell were farmers in the 1860s (it is 'Greenside' in 1698m and 'Greensydehall' in 1725; it is marked on Stobie's 1770 map of Roxburghshire).

Greensidehall Road (green-sīd-hal-rōd) n. road connecting Stirches Road with Greensidehall farm and the Heap Hills, the name being unofficial.

Greenside Moss (green-sīd-mos) n. former name for a boggy area near the eastern edge of the Common, roughly corresponding to where Acreknowe Reservoir was later formed. In 1734 it was one of the parts of the Common where the Town complained that the tenants of Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs were encroaching. It was largely drained in 1788 (also called 'Greenside Bog', a name that appears in the 1767 description of the Common, and 'Girnside Bog', which is recorded in the 1788 Council records).

Green Sike (green-sīk) n. stream that joins the Hermitage Water to the east of the Castle. The White Dyke follows part of its course. There are also other boundary dykes, rig lines and remains of a mill-lade there.

Green Sike (green-sīk) n. small stream in Liddesdale, rising on the eastern slopes of Millstone Edge. Near where it joins the Hartsgarth Burn there are the remains of a shepherd's bothy, 2 or 3 shieling huts, a couple of sheep shelters and an enclosure.

Green Terrace (green-te-ris) n. street in the West End, very steep at its higher part. It was built in 1866, and named after Myreslawgreen. It contains the High Level Bar, and once also had a fish and chip shop.

greenwud (green-wud) n., poet. greenwood, a wood in leaf – 'For ilka beæst o' the greenwud is mine . . . ' [HSR], '. . . wharein a' the beæsts o' the greenwud do krawll furth' [HSR].

Greenwud (green-wud) n. Greenwood, former name for Girnwood, described as the lands of 'Greenwood and the Lyne' in several documents from the 15th to 17th centuries.

the Greenwud (thu-green-wud) n. the Greenwood, former name for a wood on the Wells estate. As factor of the estate, Archibald Jerdan described how 206 ash trees from there were cut and the timber sold in the second quarter of the 18th century.

Greenwud (green-wud, -wood) n. (Greenwood) C.J. (19th C.) made a drawing of the Tower Knowe and High Street around 1850. Luke (b.c.1844) son of Robert, he was a manufacturer who resided at Howlands. In 1867 he donated several foreign coins to the Museum, as well as parts of the old sycamore tree under which the freedom of the Canton of Grisons (in Switzerland) was sworn in 1424. He donated further coins in 1869, when he was recorded as a commission agent. He was Acting Father in 1891. He married Euphemia Cranston. Their eldest daughter Mary married Dr. George Bannerman. Another daughter, Jessie, married William Oliver of Thornwood. Robert (1811–86) born in England, probably son of Luke and Betty of Rochdale. He was a textile designer and manufacturer in Hawick, partner in Greenwood, Watt & Co., with factory at Howland Mills. He came to Hawick in about 1833 (perhaps after making the acquaintance of John Wilson, who went to the Rochdale area to learn the trade of flannel weaving), later setting up his own business at Weensland Mill. He was said to be one of the first people to introduce power-looms to the mills of Hawick. He was also the first to use looms with 'rising boxes' (it is said that he solved one of the mechnical difficulties through the inspiration of a dream). In 1841 and 1851 he was recorded on the census as a woollen power-loom weaver, living at Weensland Mill Houses. He married Mary McBurnie, who was born in Cavers Parish. They had 9 children, including: Ann; Janet, who was mother of composer Francis George Scott; Elizabeth; Mary, who married Andrew Hall; Luke, tweed manufacturer; Grace; Jane Maria, mother of painter William Johnstone; Isabella (b.1855); and Robert Thomas (b.1858), draper. Robert (19th/20th C.) commission agent in Hawick. He lived at Roach Villa. He married a Furness (whose brother Robert Furness married Margaret, daughter of George Scott, mill furnisher).

Greenwud, Watt & Co. (green-wud, waw'-in-kō) n. Messrs. Greenwood, Watt & Co., tweed manufacturers. This partnership built Teviotdale Mills (Commercial Road) in 1877 and extended to build Howlands Mill on Victoria Road in the early 1880s. They moved out of Teviotdale Mills in 1888, and suffered during the manufacturing decline in the 1910s, eventually selling Howlands Mill to Sime, Williamson & Co.

the Green Wynd (thu-green-wīnd) n. former name for the road that led from the Loan towards Myreslawgreen and turned through what is now Morrison Place to join the river at the Coble Entry. It was originally part of the boundary of the area known as 'the Acre'. The land there was owned by Bailie Turnbull in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. It is clearly drawn on Wood's 1824 map. It was mistakenly labelled as what had been 'Westport Road' (Beaconsfield Terrace) on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map, and hence there is later confusion about whether Beaconsfield Terrace or Morrison Place is the 'Green Wynd' – 'There's just ae road to Heaven, and that's up the Green Wynd' [JD].

Greenwynd Heid (green-wīnd-heed) n. former name for the top of the Green Wynd, i.e. Morrison Place.

greet (gree') v. to cry, weep, whinge, complain – 'there's nae need ti greet aboot eet', 'it's better that ee laugh than that A greet', 'O fair did we greet, a meikle did we say; We took but ae kiss, and we tore ourselves away . . . [??], '. . . And ilka maid in the mirky dark can greet her quiet lane' [JYH], '. . . How starving weans and ill-used wives were seen in every street, And rows and riots everywhere wad make even angels greet' [JCG], n. a cry, period of crying – 'she aye hed a wee greet when they sung Meda's Song', 'A little, wee creaturie, . . . coming straight for him, whyles gie'in a whink o' a greet' [HAST22??].

greetie (gree'-ee) n., arch. a child's whimper or short cry – '. . . It was waefu' to hear his bit greetie' [JT].

greetin (gree'-in) pres. part. crying – 'ee're like a birthday caird, aye greetin', 'ee'll no be happy till ee're greetin', 'When leavin' country, glen, an' hame, An' a' his kin behind him greetin' ' [JS], n. a bout of crying, act of crying – '. . . the nearest of kin, be it wife, son or daughter, opens a melancholy ball, dancing and greeting' [HAST1871].

greetin (gree'-in) n. a greeting, arch. salutation – '. . . William of Dowglas of Drumlangrig, greting in God' [SB1470], '. . . by the grace of God Kyng of Scottis, to our Schereff of Teuidale and the Greetin Denner (thu-gree'-in-de-nur) n. informal dinner of the Cornet and guests, taking place on the Saturday evening after the Flag has been returned. Prizes are presented to supporters who were successful in the races, and the attendees select a 'Hornet' who carries a 'besom'. It is a particularly poignant occasion for the Left-Hand Man, who is wearing the uniform for the last time. After the dinner the Principals and guests usually visit the Shows or go back up to the Moor to listen to the live bands. The last such dinner was held in the early 2000s, and now there is a more low-key gathering of the Big Eight and friends.

greetin match (gree'-in-mach) n. humorous description of a long period of crying, particularly amongst children – 'that'll end up in a right greetin match'.

Gregg (greg) n. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Brown and their daughter Marie was baptised in 1678. The witnesses were William Scott and John Allan. Shadrach (18th C.) brazier in Hawick. His forename is quite unusual. He married Catherine Scott and their daughter Marie was baptised in Hawick in 1741. In 1743 he was 'Shadruch Greg' when he and his wife were banished from Hawick and the rest of Roxburghshire, for 'severall crimes such as stealing of cheese, clothes, tobacco, and picking of locks within the burgh'. If they returned they were to be imprisoned again 'for the space of one year, and to be scourged every month during the sd. year's imprisonment', which was a particularly harsh penalty (also written 'Greg').

Gregory's Mixtur (gre-gu-reez-miks-tur) n. widely prescribed drug of the 19th century, noted for its unpalatable taste, and named after Scottish medical professor James Gregory (1753–1821). It was actually a mixture of magnesium carbonate and powdered rhubarb and ginger. It was still used locally until about the 1920s, along with other remedies such as 'Parrish's chemical food' and ipecacuanha – 'Gregory's mixture. You know the stuff. Excellent for its purpose, of course, bit gritty . . . ' [DH].

Gregson (greg-sin) n. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Cessford on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He also farmed at Whitchesters. In 1802 he bought the lands of East Fodderlee, which he sold to Charles Kerr of Abbotrule 4 years later.

Grey (grā) n. Charles (1764–1845) Earl Grey, he was called Viscount Howick in his younger days. He became Prime Minister. Heavily involved with electoral reform, a reception was given to him by his supporters in Edinburgh in 1834, including an address from the inhabitants of Hawick. He is also associated with Earl Grey tea. Henry (c.1515–54) 3rd Marquess of Dorset and 1st Duke of Suffolk, son of Thomas. He may have been involved in the English raids of 1547, in which lands around Hawick were burned. In 1550 he was appointed Lord Warden, General of the English Marches. His 2nd wife was the daughter of Mary Tudor and he was the father of Lady Jane Grey. He was beheaded for his involvement in the conspiracy to put Jane Grey on the throne. Henry George 3rd Earl Grey (1802–94), eldest son of Prime Minister Charles, he was known as Viscount Howick until the death of his father in 1845. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. Howick, the suburb of Auckland in new Zealand, is named after him. Thomas (1477–1530) 2nd Marquess of Dorset. He was 3rd son and heir of Thomas, 1st Marquess. He was a nephew of Elizabeth of York, Henry VII's Queen. He was a royal courtier, and fell in and out of favour. He led an unsuccessful expedition to Aquitaine in France in 1512. In 1523 he was appointed Warden of the Eastern and Middle Marches and took part in raids into the Scottish Borders, his men being credited with burning several places, including the town of Hallrule. He was also appointed Lord Warden of the Marches. He married Eleanor St. John and Margaret Wotton. He was succeeded by his son Henry, 1st Duke of Suffolk. William 13th Lord Grey of Wilton (d.1562) head of the Somerset family holding that other 'Wilton' barony. He won fame in France, then was one of the English leaders at Pinkie in 1547. There he was injured by a pike in the face, but recovered and was knighted at Berwick. After that he was sent to quell resistance in the Scottish Borders, being appointed Governor of Berwick and Warden of the East Marches. In 1548 he led an advance to Haddington, which was taken and fortified. He had a garrison of soldiers in Hawick and neighbouring towns in 1549. His troops ravaged Teviotdale after they failed to take Hume Castle. He was afterwards in charge of subduing rebellions in England and was involved with trying to put Lady Jane Grey on the English throne. Pardoned, he then served in France and later returned to the Scottish Border, being appointed in 1559 as Warden of the Middle Marches, as well as Governor of Berwick and Warden of Tynedale and Redesdale. He was General in the English army in 1560 when there was an unsuccessful attempt to capture Leith. He remained Warden of the East Marches and Governor of Berwick until his death. He married Lady Mary Somerset of Worcester and was succeeded by his son Arthur (see also Gray).

He married Isabel Tinlin in 1758 and their children included: Ann (b.1760); Andrew (b.1766); and John (b.1772), who married Margaret Wight. The witnesses in 1766 were weaver Robert Tinlin (possibly his brother-in-law) and James Taylor. He may be the John, son of Andrew and Margaret Scott who was born in Bowden in 1733. John (18th/19th C.) son of John and Isabel Tinlin. In 1799 he married Margaret Wight, the marriage rcorded in both Roberton and Ettrick Parishes. Their children included Walter, Isabel, John, Effie, Andrew and Charles P. Robert (17th C.) tenant in 'Clairlaw' (presumably Clarilaw, but probably the one in Bowden Parish). He is recorded in 1684 when his servant William Roberton was among the Roxburghshire men on a list of fugitive Covenanters. He may be the tenant of Clarilaw called Grierson who married Isobel, daughter of John Sibbald of Bowden Parish. There were many Griersons in Bowden Parish at this time. Robert (1759/60–1825) tenant of Whitlaw. He married Agnes Scott. Their children included: Robert (d.1819), who was a baker in Hawick. He is buried at Bowden. Robert (1791–1849) baker at 10 High Street. His widow died in 1857. He later farmed at Whitchesters (John Campbell taking over the bakery) and was known for being a great dog lover, especially of Dandie Dinmonts. He was a teetotaller and member of the Evangelical Union Church. He is listed in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories for Hawick. He is on the 1841 census with his wife Elizabeth (1800–57). Their children included: Andrew, who farmed at Whitchesters; Beatrix or Beatrice, who married manufacturer Thomas Laidlaw; and John. Robert (b.1809) christened in Kirkton and possibly born in Hawick, he was son of William and Helen Small, brother of Adam. He married Janet, daughter of James Usher, S.S.C., grand-daughter of John of Toftfield. They emigrated to Canada where he was a farmer and teacher. He was the first teacher in Leith, Ontario and in the 1850s was a Magistrate in Sydenham Township. He called his own farm in Ontario Effledge. It was said that he resembled portraits of the Duke of Wellington. He died without children. Robert (19th C.) son of Robert. He was baker at 10 High Street, before taking over Whitchesters farm in 1861. Thomas (b.1827) son of William, the tenant farmer at Effledge. He was cousin of the farmers at Whitchesters and his sister Elizabeth married builder Robert Hobkirk. He farmed at Effledge in the 1860s and then at Braidhaugh in the Rule valley. In 1868 he was recorded as farmer at Braidhaugh along with Walter Telfer. He later lived at 'the Birks' in Hawick and became a sales agent for Cunningham and Company. He married a daughter of farmer John Telfer and they had a daughter who married. William (18th C.) farmer at Whitmuir according to the 1789–1791 Horse Tax Rolls. William (b.1785/6) born in Ashkirk Parish, he was tenant farmer at Effledge in at least the 1840s and 50s. In 1851 he was recorded as farmer there of 250 acres, employing 5 labourers. He probably married Helen ('Nelly') Small in Ancrum Parish in 1808. In 1825 he married (probably secondly) Elizabeth ('Betty') Little. His children included: Robert (b.1809); William; Helen (b.1826); Thomas (b.1827), who took over as farmer at Effledge; Elizabeth (b.1830); Margaret (b.1834); Agnes; Isabella (b.1836); Isobel (b.1839); Margaret (b.1841).

Grieve (greev) n. Adam (16th C.) listed as 'Adam Greife serwand in the brewhouse' in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott. It is unclear whether he was from the Hawick area, like many others recorded there. Agnes nee Hardie (b.1815/6) resident at Hermitage Schoolhouse. She married farm worker John, and they were living at Brox in 1841. She was already a widow by 1851, and listed as a grocer in 1861. Her children included John, Agnes, Adam and Thomas. Alexander (1826–68) born in Jedburgh, son of Michael and Rachel Scott. In 1853 he married Elizabeth Young Rutherford, daughter of Barbara Potts Young and possibly a Mr. Rutherford; she died in 1914, aged 77. The couple lived in Hawick for several years, then moved to Jedburgh, where he was foreman at Allars Mill. He was mill foreman living at Ladhope (near Galashiels) when he died. Their children were: Barbara (1853–1927), who died unmarried; Rachel (b.1855), who married railway guard James Mathieson; Michael (b.1858); Elizabeth (b.1861), who married stone mason James Russell; and Alexander (1868–26). His widow moved back to Hawick. He donated some coins to the Archæological Society in 1858. Alexander (1868–1926) born in Hawick, he was son of Galashiels mill foreman Alexander and Elizabeth Young. He was born after his father's early death. His uncle was Walter from Hawick. He was an actuary with the Hawick Savings Bank and manager of the Hawick Heritable Investment Bank, Ltd. He died unmarried and left several gits to the town. Andrew (b.1821/2) seed merchant in the Cross Wynd in 1851. His wife was Janet and their children included James. Archibald (16th/17th C.) resident of Caerlenrig in 1618. Walter Scott of Buccleuch complained that he had cut down 60 alder trees from his lands of Gorrenberry, with other men from upper Teviotdale (including Robert in Lymiecleuch) also being accused of stealing timber. He was ordered by the Privy Council to pay the Laird of Buccleuch £40. Archibald (c.1775–1852) son of Walter and Janet Grieve. His father farmed at Easter Alemoor, Hangingshaw and also Perthshire, where he was born. He married Agnes Stephenson in Yarrow Parish in 1811. He died in Ohio, U.S.A. Arthur Charles (1876–93) 3rd son of Charles John of Branxholme Park. He served as a midshipman in the Royal Navy. He was on the H.M.S. Victoria off Tripoli when it collided with H.M.S. Camperdown during manoeuvers. Only 202 of the 718 men were rescued, and he himself drowned, with his older brother William Herbert on the nearby 'Nile' witnessing the whole thing. He and his brother have a memorial plaque in St. Cuthbert's Church. Charles (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He could be the labourer who married Margaret Oliver and whose son William died in 1872. Charles John (1841–1915) farmer at Branxholme Park, like his father. His twin brother James Alexander died at a young age. He was son of William and Eliza Anne Gordon. He received an LL.B. from Cambridge University in 1866. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1878. He was a church warden at St. Cuthbert's and became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1898. In 1870 he married Elizabeth (1842–1914), 2nd daughter of Charles Alleyne Willing. Their children were: Amy Francis (b.1871); James Wyndham Alleyne (1872–1939); Mary Evelyn (1873–1923); William Herbert (1874–1908), who died in a naval explosion in Queensferry; Arthur Charles (1875–93), who went down with the flag-ship 'Victoria' aged 17; Betha Helen (1877–1937); Marion Catherine (b.1878); Christina (1879–1945); Dorothy Forster (b.1881); Charles Walter (1882–1929); Alexander Norman (1884–1920); Margaret Bruce (b.1885); and Nigel Gordon (b.1889). Charles Walter (1882–1929) farmer of Branxholme Park, son of Charles John, he was educated at Glenalmond School. He was President of Teviotdale Farmers' Club and served in WWI as Squadron Sergeant-Major in the Lothians and Borders Horse. He was also a Church Warden at St. Cuthbert's. He later lived at Westerdykes. He married a daughter of Thomas Anderson Laing. He was Acting Father in 1919, the first Common Riding after the war. Christian nee Brydon (1784/5–1854) from Ettrick Parish, she married Walter J. of Langwell. After his death she moved into Hawick. In 1851 she was an 'Annuitant' living at about 12 Buccleuch Street, and in Slater's 1852 directory she is listed among the local gentry there. Christopher (b.c.1770s) resident at Slaidhills in about 1824, along with one of his sons. His son William was born in Teviothead in 1804 and he had at least one other son. Probably the same Christopher was servant at Shankend according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish and shepherd at Shankend on the 1801 Militia ballot. He may be the shepherd who was at Ashybank in 1841, with his wife Margaret and children (or grandchildren) Elspeth and Margaret. Christopher Murray real name of Hugh MacDiarmid. David (1788–1856) son of shepherd Robert and brother of Hawick slater Walter. He was born when his parents were living at Greensidehall. In 1820 he married Maragret Murray in Selkirk. He had his own slater's and glazier's business in Selkirk. He died of cancer of the ear and was buried at Ashkirk. Elliot (c.1777–1858) born in Fortingall, Perth son of local farmer Walter and Janet Grieve. He was thus related to both the Colterscleuch and Deanburnhaugh branches of the family. He farmed at Huntly in Yarrow. In 1826 he married Harriet Turnbull (d.1857), recorded in Yarrow Parish; she died in 1857, aged 67. Their children included: Walter (b.1828/9); and Janet (of Jessie, 1832–77), who married Robert Grieve, tenant in Over Huntly. He was at Lower Huntly in 1841 and Outer Huntly in 1851. He died at Over Huntly and is buried at Borthwick Waas, where the gravestone appeared to say he died in 1852, aged 75. Elliot (c.1784–1874) son of John and Elizabeth Paisley. His children were born in Castleton parish, some of them at Blinkbonny. He married Janet Elliot (c.1777–1825) and their children were: Elizabeth (Lizzie, 1812–1907), who married Edward Dun; John (1806–38); Janet (1808–1906), who married Ninian Elliot; Sameul (b.1808), who probably died young; William Elliot (1810–80); Christian (or Catherine, b.1814), who married George Laidlaw; and Elliot (b.1816) and Ninian (b.1818), who died in infancy. The family emigrated to Canada, and lived in Westminster Township, Middlesex County, Ontario. He secondly married Jane Baty. George (18th C.) married Christian Wilkie in Hobkirk Parish in 1730. George of Easter Swanshiel (b.1731) buried in Hobkirk kirkyard. He probably acquired his farm from the Turnbulls who had owned it earlier, perhaps through being related. The session register says his funeral had use of the 'new plush moarcloth'. He was succeeded by James, probably his brother. George (1779–1841) eldest son of John and Isabella Turnbull. His father farmed at Craik and Hoscote. He was christened in Roberton Parish. He inherited Craik, as well as Outerside and Meadshaw. He is recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 work horses at 'Creak', as well as 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax at Craik in 1797. He farmed along with his brother Walter until the collapse of the wool market around 1817. He is also said to have farmed as Creich in Sutherland, but it is unclear if this is an error for 'Craik'. He moved to Edinburgh and in 1832 emigrated to Quebec, Canada with his family. In about 1809 he married Minto (b.1790), daughter of William Bell and Markie Minto. His children were: Marky Minto (1810–46), who married Charles M. Murray; Isabella (1812–1901), who married John William Schneider; Jessie (b.1814); John, who died young after wandering off in the winter; William Bell (1818–85), who married Elizabeth Fairbairn; and another John (b.1820), who married Nancy Sweet. He is buried in Montreal. George (1801–49) son of William and Jean Manuel, he was born in Lilliesleaf. He was toll-keeper at Hawick's Eastern Toll at the time of the 1841 census, moving to the North (or Dovemount) Toll Bar later. He married Margaret Lambert in Lilliesleaf in 1828, and she was the sole toll-keeper by the 1851 census. Their children included William (b.1831), James (b.1833), Isabella (b.1835) and Jeanie Manuel (or 'Jane', b.1837/8). George (b.1818/9) from Ettrick Parish, he was farmer at West Buccleuch. He was listed as a 'Stock Farmer' there in 1861. In 1868 he was recorded as farmer at Buccleuch and Ramseycleuch. George (1868–1960) son of James, farmer at West Buccleuch, where he himself was farmer later. He was born in Innerleithen and his mother was Christina Glendinning. He married Violet Glendinning, who died at Drinkstone farm in 1962, aged 76. They had daughters Williamena Mary Forster and Jean. He is buried at Ettrick. Gideon (18th C.) son of Walter in Colterscleuch. He married Isabel Laidlaw. Their children were: Walter (b.1742); and Margaret (b.1744). Gideon (b.1737) son of Walter and Jean Murray, he was born in Wilton. He married Betty Ruecastle in Hawick in 1761 and their children included: Walter (b.1761); John (b.1763); and William (b.1767). He is probably the Gideon, who was one of 2 young men carried off from the Auld Brig during the great flood of 1767. It was said that he and another man named Waugh (probably Walter) mocked shoemaker Thomas Weens for placing divots at his door to keep back the floodwaters, with him saying 'Ye'll no hae muckle fash in gettin your leather steepit the day Tam'; Weens replied 'Take tent or ye'll maybe get ye're ain hides steepit', and indeed within quarter of an hour they were both dead. Gilbert (b.c.1770s) labourer at Castleweary according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. William was also listed in the same place and so probably his brother, as well as Thomas, who was there in 1797. Hugh (18th C.) 'gauger' or exciseman in Hawick. In a baptismal record of 1789 he is recorded as 'Officer of Excise'. He is probably the supervisor of the excisemen who was tricked by Wat Inglis with an empty cask hidden in a deep pool in the Slitrig. He is probably the Hugh who witnessed a baptism for Joseph Henderson in 1794. A story is told of how he accosted Thomas Haliburton (mason from Newbigging) in Kelso, with horses laden with gin; Haliburton felled him with one blow, and when they met on the Square th following day, he asked if Haliburton had been the man who felled him, which Haliburton denied, saying 'aw wadna hurt you, Hugh, ma man, take ma word on that'. He married Helen Walker and their children, mostly baptised in Hawick, included: Margaret (b.1779); Elizabeth (b.1780), baptised in Kelso; John (b.1787); Walter (b.1789); James (b.1791); and Helen (b.1796). In 1789 the witnesses were tanner John Elliot and merchant James Dickson. His son William died in Hawick in 1797. Isabella nee Laidlaw (1764–1857) daughter of David Laidlaw from Highchesters. In 1785 she married Robert, shepherd at Harden, Heap, Todshaw, Greensidehall, etc. She had at least 7 children and died aged almost 93. James (16th C.) possibly from the Selkirk area. Along with Patrick Murray of Falahill and 'Sanders' Murray, he owed payment to the King, which in 1539 resulted in these 3 men giving 289 sheep to Robert Scott of Howpasley and Ninian Anderson. described about 1580 as factor to the Countess of James (16th C.) described about 1580 as factor to the Countess of Bothwell, i.e. Margaret Douglas, widow of Walter Scott of Branxholme. This may have been at Milsington. He is said to have been the ancestor of Walter, first known Grieve tenant of Branxholme Park, as well as the Grieves who farmed Commonside. It is unclear if he was an original 'grieve', however, a family tradition says that the local family was descended from the McGregor Clan. James (d.bef. 1621) recorded as 'in Bowmanehill', which may be 'Bowanhill' near Teviothead. He was foreman of the jury in 1612 which heard the case involving the death of Jock Elliot while imprisoned in the steeple of Hawick Kirk. His son William inherited his lands of Brotherton in 1619, when he was 'in Bowinhill'. He was deceased by 1621 when his son William complained that Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst had broken an agreement with his father and owed him £40. James (17th C.) married Margaret Laidlaw in Hawick in 1648. Their son James was born the following year, and could have been James of Commonside. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1650. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Telfer and their son Archibald was baptised in 1655. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Beatrix Gledstains and their son John was born in 1670. James (17th C.) tenant in Hyndhope (but it is unclear which one). The will of his wife Isobel Anderson is recorded in 1681. James (17th C.) tenant in Buccleuch farm. In about 1785 he was summoned before the Circuit Court in Peebles for being a Covenanter. Threatened with the loss of his farm and livelihood he weakened and agreed to take 'the Test'. However, later a group of Covenanters met secretly near his farm, as a result of which he was arrested and fined 12,000 merks. After the Revolution he returned as tenant at Buccleuch and his descendants farmed there for long afterwards. He could be the James whose children, baptised in Ettrick Parish, included an unnamed child (b.1695), Adam (b.1697), Thomas (b.1698) and John (b.1701). James (17th C.) tenant for the Duchess of Buccleuch at Linhope in the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Jameses. He is mentioned in Scott of Satchells 'postral: 'As for John Grieve in Garwold, He keeps both Board and Bed, So doth James Grieve in Lennup, And the Grieves on Commonside'; and 'Whereof James Grieve Lenup he was one, Which I have dedicated unto your Worships hand, You know him well to be an honest man, And is a just and harmless Shepherd Swain'. Scott describes his generosity to 'the needy, as they pass him by'. James (17th C.) shepherd at Priesthaugh in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) tenant in Ruletown in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. He paid tax on 4 hearths there 'for himself & cottars'. James (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when he was at Hassendean Mains. James 'Wester James' (17th/18th C.) tenant in Commonside. He is probably the James in Commonside who is mentioned by Walter Scott of Satchells in 1688. He was listed at Commonside on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he paid tax for 2 hearths. He witnessed baptisms in 1699 for James Anderson in Ramsaycleuchbun and in 1704 for Robert Rodger in Whitchesters. He may also be the James in Commonside who witnessed a baptism for John Scott in Dryden in 1706. Note there are (at least) 2 contemporary James Grieves associated with Commonside, making it difficult to distinguish him. They were 'the two James Grieves tenants in Commonside' who witnessed a baptism in 1711 for John Nichol, herd in Lairhope. He married Janet Elliot in Hawick Parish. Their children included: Helen (b.1700), who married John Anderson in 1723; Elspeth (b.1701), who in 1720 married William Grieve, probably a cousin, and had a daughter Joan, who married Dr. James Mounsey; James (b.1703), who became a doctor in Russia; and John (b.1705), who appears to have died young. The witnesses in 1700 were a different James (perhaps 'Easter') and William Waugh. In the 1705 baptism record he is 'distincionis causa called Wester James', and the witnesses were Adam Elliot in Lymiecleuch and Thomas Pringle in Cavers. He could be the same as the James in Commonside who died in 1712. James (1669–1712) younger son of William, farmer in Commonside. If he really died in 1712 (as appears on the gravestone in Borthwick Waas), then another James Grieve must have taken over from him as tenant of Commonside. His son William was farmer at Colterscleuch and Southfield. He could be the James 'easter in Commonside' who in 1708 (along with Walter in Branxholme Park) witnessed a baptism for James Laidlaw, cottar in Branxholme Park; he was probably 'Easter' to distinguish him from 'Wester James'. They were 'the two James Grieves tenants in Commonside' who witnessed a baptism in 1711 for John Nichol, herd in Lairhope. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their son James was baptised in 1700. James (17th/18th C.) married Agnes Grieve in Hawick in 1708. James (17th/18th C.) tenant farmer at Commonside. His family had farmed there for many years. However, he appears to be different from the earlier James, who died in 1712. The rental records for 'Teviotdale Head' mention James senior and junior in Commonside in the period 1715–18. He is mentioned in a marriage record of 1720 for his servant at Commonside, Agnes Falside. He retired about 1724, after which the lease of Commonside was taken by Walter Scott, later of Wauchope. He became an elder of Hawick Kirk in 1723. In 1723 he also informed the Session about the 'Fiftie merks, left in legacie by Margaret Grieve, his aunt' (this may suggest that they were both children of Walter of Branxholme Park). Either he or perhaps his father was the James who 'mortified' 100 'merks' for the poor of Hawick Parish, this being given out (mainly to those from the country parts) in 1715. He could be James who witnessed baptisms for William Hislop in 1721 and for Walter Scott in Newbigging and for William Coltart, servant in Commonside, in 1722. He could have been the James who married Beatrix Gledstains in Hawick in about 1669. He could have been the James born to James and Margaret in Hawick in 1649 or the son of John and Beatrix Gledstains born in Hawick in 1646. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Bessie Jackson and their daughter Jean was baptised in 1714. Perhaps the same James witnessed a baptism for John Robison in 1694. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Armstrong and their children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included Helen (b.1701), with witnesses smith John Scott and glover John Hart. He may be the tenant at Drinkstone in 1711 whose son Robert was baptised in Wilton Parish, with witnesses Robert Scott in Drinkstone and Robert Scott of Coldhouse. He may be the James in Drinkstone who witnessed a baptism for Robert in Fenwick in 1714. He may be the James who witnessed a Wilton baptism in 1721. James (b.1713) may also have been his child. James (17th/18th C.) tenant in Teindside, where he was recorded in 1700 and 1710. He married Isobel Grieve and their children, baptised in Hawick, included: James (b.1700); and Isobel (b.1710). The witnesses in 1700 were Adam Elliot of Arkleton and Robert Scott in Drinkstone and in 1709 were Gideon Scott of Falnash and Adam Elliot of Arkleton. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Grieve and their children included: Margaret (b.1709); and Jean and Elspeth (b.1724). It is possible this is the same man as the tenant in Commonside married to Isobel Grieve. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was living at Todshawhaugh in 1714, 1716, 1718 and 1723. In 1714 his servant James Leithead got married. In 1718 he witnessed a baptism for John Dickson, workman at Branxholme. Also in 1718 his servant Marion Laidlaw got married in Hawick. Perhaps the same James was at Outerside in 1718 and Eilrig in 1722. His children probably included (although there could be 2 families here): William (b.1711); Robert (b.1713); Helen (b.1716); William (again, b.1718); Agnes (b.1719); James (b.1722); Janet (b.1723); and James (again, b.1726). James of Easter Swanshiel (d.1733) probably brother of George, who was Laird before him. However, he only held the lands for a couple of years after his brother. He is buried in Hobkirk kirkyard. After his death Easter Swanshiel was sold and annexed to Wolfelee. James (17th/18th C.) tenant in 'Ridge', i.e. Caerlenrig. He married Janet Wilson and their daughter Helen was baptised in 1720. He could be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (1684–1781) son of Walter and Blanche Borthwick. Like his father, he was tenant farmer at Branxholme Park, as well as Todshawhaugh. He is probably the James who is recorded being in arrears for the rent of Todshawhaugh in the period 1712–18. The 'servitrix' to his children, Dorothy MacVittie, was married in 1721. In 1734 he is probably the James who witnessed the baptism of Gilbert Elliot (his grandson) in Hawick. He is recorded as tenant at Todshawhaugh in 1735. He re-leased Todshawhaugh from the Buccleuch Estates in 1744, but was recorded being in arrears shortly afterwards. He is recorded in a farming record of Robert Elliot (in Hermitage) in 1749. In 1751 he was renting 'Whelmes' as well as Todshawhaugh. There are letters of his to Scott of Harden in the 1760s in the National Archives. He was probably the James in 'Branxholm-Park' listed as a subscriber to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784), presumably signing up years before it was published. In 1707 in Hawick Parish he married Helen, daughter of John Laing of Westerkirk. His children included: Walter (1710–99), baptised in Roberton, the eldest son, who succeeded as tenant in Branxholme Park; Robert (1725–83), who married Jean Curle; William (1726–86), tenant in Southfield; James (1737–73), who married Janet, daughter of William Scott of Woll; Jane, who married Capt. John Elliot of Southfield and Brugh, probably baptised in Roberton in 1708; Anne (b.1721), baptised in Roberton; Margaret; and Fanny. James (b.1726), son of James in Todshawhaugh, baptised in Roberton Parish, also seems likely to be his child (even if the dates clash with those of other children). If James really was born in 1737, then this suggests he was married twice. He and several of his family are buried at Borthwick Waas. His wife is probably the 'Mrs Grieve Todziehaugh' who witnessed a baptism in 1757 for a child of Walter in Branxholme Park (her son). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His daughter Janet was baptised in 1712. James in Commonside (c.1694–1772) eldest son of Walter in Colterscleuch. In 1722 he could be the James of Commonside who, along with Robert Elliot of Caerlenrig and Robert Scott of Skelfhill petitioned the Presbytery for a preacher and meeting house in their district. In 1722 he married Helen (1702–84), daughter of Gilbert Elliot of Brugh and Agnes Turnbull, the marriage recorded in both Hawick and Kirkton Parishes; she died at Broadlee in 1784, aged 84, and is buried at Borthwick Waas. As well as Commonside, he also farmed at Soudenrig and Over Huntly. In 1723 he was at Soudenrig and in 1724 was recorded being in Braidhaugh. He was at Southdeanrig again in 1726, 1733 and 1735. The following children (baptised in Cavers Parish) are probably mostly his: Helen (b.1720); Janet, who died young; Isabel (b.1723); twins Robert (b.1724) and William (b.1724); Walter (again, b.1725); Agnes (b.1726); Gilbert (b.1728); James (b.1729); William (again, b.1729); Walter (b.1729); William (again, b.1731); Walter (again, b.1733); John (b.1735); Janet (again, 1737–1816), who married Walter Grieve, son of Robert in Deanburnhaugh; Thomas (b.1739); William (again, b.1741); Margaret (b.1743); and possibly an unnamed son (b.1743). He is buried in Borthwick Waas cemetery, where the headstone said he was 78 years old. His children James (d.1751, transcribed as 2 years old, but it would make more sense if this was 22) and Agnes are also commemorated on the same stone, as well as John and 'brethren and 1 sister died while children'. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Shiel, as recorded in 1722. He married Janet Nixon in Roberton in 1720. Their daughter Elspeth was baptised in Hawick in 1722, with witnesses Thomas Watson (Clerk to the Regality) and Bailie George Martin. James (18th C.) married Helen 'Shortridge' in Roberton in 1727. Janet (b.1737) could be their child. James (18th C.) married Marion Riddell in Hobkirk in 1729. James (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish whose daughter Agnes was baptised in 1739. Dr. James (1703–63) son of tenant farmer James (possibly called 'Wester James') and 'Jenet

Eliot', he was baptised in Hawick Parish. He also had an older sister, Elspeth (b.1701), who married William Grieve, and whose daughter Joan married Dr. James Mounsey. It is unclear how he was related to other local branches of the Grieve family, but it is possible they were descended from Grieves in Commonside. Note that secondary sources describing his life are often contradictory. He studied medicine at Edinburgh University, graduating with an M.D. in 1733. His first position was in Russia, as a doctor at the Kazan and Siberian factories. By 1744 he was physician to the St. Petersburg land hospital, as well as to a guard's hospital. In 1743 he married Elizabeth Tamesz (1725–58), said to be either Dutch or German. He then became St. Petersburg city physician, Deputy Director of the Russian Medical Chancery and physician to Empress Elizabeth, before transferring to Moscow as its city physician. In 1751 he was elected a Fellow of the Royal College of Physicians in Edinburgh. He returned to Britain in 1757 to arrange the education of his son James Tamesz (1744–87), practised medicine in London, but returned to Russia in 1761. He then appears to have been working for John Hobart, Earl of Buckinghamshire, the British Ambassador. He is said to have received a snuff-box inscribed 'Presented by the Empress Catherine to her body physician James Grieve' in French. He translated 'The History of Kamtschatka, and the Kurilski Islands' (1764, facsimile editions 1963 and 1973). His only son, James Tamesz inherited his mother's fortune, became a Moscow businessman, purchased property in Scotland and Surrey and is buried at Bath Abbey. He himself died in Moscow, although some sources suggest he was the physician at Charterhouse Square who died there in 1773. James (1713/14–1801) gardener at Newton. He is buried in Bedrule kirkyard. James (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His son James was baptised in 1764. James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Easter Alemoor in 1765 when his son Robert was baptised. He could be the James who married Jean Scott in Roberton in 1762. James (b.1772 and William (b.1773) could also be his children. James (18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. His children included William (b.1763), Thomas (b.1766), Christian (b.1771) and James (b.1773). James (1737–73) son of James and brother of Walter, tenant at Branxholme Park. In 1771 he married Janet, daughter of William Scott of Woll; this is probably the marriage recorded in Roberton Parish. There is a James and Janet Scott to whom several children were born in Yarrow in the 1770s and 1780s; if this is him, then he died after 1790. He is probably the James 'Junior' who witnessed a baptism for William in Southfield (presumably his brother) in 1763. James (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish whose son Thomas was baptised in 1766. James (18th C.) married Margaret Halliday in Hawick Parish in 1770. James (18th C.) recorded in Harden in 1772 when his son James was baptised. Probably the same man is described as 'the now deceased Mr. James Grieve' in 1773 when his son William was baptised. He could be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (1751–1838) son of Walter, from whom he succeeded as tenant of Branxholme Park. He is probably the 'James Grieve, Hawick' who subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784), with his grandfather James in Branxholme Park listed separately. He subscribed to John Learmont's book of poetry in 1791. He is probably the James recorded at Todshawhaugh on the 1787–92 Horse Tax Rolls, as well as at Branxholme Park in 1788 and 1782–94. He described the flood of early 1796, which swept away most of the ruins of Hassendean Kirk, and he had the remains of his relatives the Ogilvies re-interred at Ashkirk. He is recorded in 1797 as tenant at Branxholme Park, with 11 farm horses. He farmed on a large scale, also being tenant of Riccarton, Braidlie and Sundhope (in Liddesdale), Todshawhaugh and Harden (on the Borthwick), Buccleuch (in Ettrick) and Smale (in Northumberland). He is probably the James of Branxholme who in 1800 contributed £10 10s to the local subscription for the war against France. He was one of the trustees for the estate of William Oliver 'Auld Cash' (who died in 1808). Extracts from his diary were published in the Transactions in 1950. In 1821 he made some notes relating to the characters in the song 'The Bonnie Lass o' Branxholm'. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. In the 1832 electoral roll he was listed as a joint tenant (with William) of the Duke of Buccleuch's lands at Branxholme Park. He is said to have told his son that in the past Branxholme was so heavily wooded that a man could ride on a white horse from Todshawhaugh to the Castle Hill without anyone being able to see the horse. He married Agnes Hall (and not Ann Sibbald, who married his cousin James), and she died in 1836. Their children were: William Oliver, tenant in Branxholme Park; and Thomas of Skelfhill. Note that he should not be confused with his cousin James, who farmed at Bramxholme Braes at about the same time. James (18th C.) postillion (i.e. carriage driver) at Cavers in 1786, when he was working for George Douglas. It is possible he is the James whose son William was baptised in Cavers in 1789. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Cecil Liddel and their son John was baptised in 1787. James (18th C.) recorded at Howpasley in 1787 when his daughter Janet was baptised in Roberton Parish. He is probably the same as one of the other Jameses. James (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included Betty (b.1788) and Margaret (b.1794). James (18th/19th C.) farmer at 'Moorfarm' (in Wilton Parish) according to the Horse Tax Rolls of 1797. James (b.1763) son of William, farmer in Southfield. He was tenant at Roan in Castleton Parish, being recorded there on the 1788–97 Horse Tax Rolls, and in 1797 when he owned 4 farm horses. He was also taxed for having a greyhound in 1797. He was also said to be of 'Roandead'. In 1795 his child 'Elliot', with Isabel 'Whotson', was baptised in Castleton; the mother may be the woman of the same name who was the 2nd wife of Robert Jardine, farmer at Harwood on Teviot. James (c.1771–1862) son of Walter, farmer at Easter Alemoor, Hangingshaw, etc. In 1803 he married Janet Brodie in Yarrow. Their children included Jessie, who married Dr. William Buchan Lorraine (who was born in Selkirk). James, J.P. (1773–1855) son of Robert, farmer at Stonedge, and Jean Curle. He was grandson of James, tenant in Todshawhaugh and Branxholme Park, and cousin of James who was contemporary tenant in Branxholme Park. He himself was farmer at Branxholme Braes. He is probably the James who was renting Branxholme Town and Castlehill farms in 1792 and who was renting Branxholme Town in the period 1834–43. He was recorded at Flex on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1792–94. In 1797 he is recorded in the Farm Horse Tax list as tenant of Branxholme Braes and Flex, with 7 horses for farm use. He also paid tax in 1797 on 3 non-working dogs. He is probably the James of Branxholme Braes who in about 1800 contributed £5 5s to the local subscription for the war against France. He may be the Corporal Grieve of Branxholme Braes who was in the yeomanry cavalry at the False Alarm in 1804; when asked why he was carrying bales of hay he is said to have replied 'There yeables nane where we're gaun'. He was one of the trustees for the estate of William Oliver 'Auld Cash' (who died in 1808). He was among the first to be listed on the 'Donations' page for the Hawick Savings Bank in 1815. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821 and Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. In 1841 he is listed with 2 servants and in 1851 he was farmer of 2790 acres, with 10 farm labourers and 6 servants in his house. In 1797 he married Ann Sibbald (1779/80–1840); she may have been daughter of John Sibbald, younger of Pinnacle. Their children were: Ann (1798/9–1832); Jean (1801–22); Robert (1802–94); John (1803–92); William (1805–51), who worked in Liverpool; James (1807–62); Charlotte (1810–27); Margaret (c.1812–64), who died in Canada; Walter (b.1814/5); and Charles (1815/6–36). He and his wife are buried at Borthwick Waas. James (b.1775/6) farmer at Wollrig. In 1861 he was there farming 480 acres and employing 4 labourers. His wife was Margaret and their children included James, Jane and Helen. James (b.c.1780s) shepherd at Craik, according to the 1812 ballot for the Militia in Roberton Parish. James (d.1859) shepherd at Birneyknowe. He married Janet Renwick, who was sister of Benjie, a well-known mole-catcher and poacher. Their children included: Thomas (b.1820); James (b.1821), tailor at Bonchester Bridge; and Robert (b.1836/7). He and his wife later rented a cottage on Gatehousecote farm (where they are recorded in 1851) and both died in the same year at a farm at Hawthornside. James (1807–62) born in Hawick Parish, son of James, farmer in Branxholme Braes and Ann Sibbald. He became a doctor in Dumfries. He married Charlotte Sylvester Train. Their children were James and William (partners in Bullock Brothers in Rangoon), Henry Stewart and Arthur Sibbald. James (b.c.1817) born in Bowden. He was a farm worker at Midholm, then Howden, moving to Borthwickbrae Burnfoot, where 2 of his children were born. In 1861 he was farmer of 600 acres, employing 5 people, at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1873. He married Margaret Tullie, and their children were Mary Scott, James (who married Margaret Robb), Christian, George, John and Margaret Douglas. James (19th C.) married Isabella Scott in 1831, the marriage recorded in both Bedrule and Ancrum Parishes. James (b.1810/1) resident of Castleton Parish. He was a 'Male Servant' in Castleton village in 1841, a 'Labourer' there in 1851 and an agricultural labourer living on Doncaster Street in Newcastleton in 1861. He married Janet Ingles in 1837 and their children included: Walter (b.1838);

Elizabeth (b.1840); William (b.1842); Walter (b.1844); Thomas (b.1847); and Thomas (again, b.1849). James (b.1817/8) agricultural labourer in Castleton Parish, originally from Langholm. He was living at about 11 South Hermitage Street in Newcastleton in 1851 and at 2 South Liddell Street in 1861. He married Margaret Scott in 1839 and their children included: John (b.1840); Jessie (b.1841); Jane (b.1844); Isabella (b.1846); Elizabeth (b.1848); Helen (b.1850); Alexander (b.1852); Agnes (b.1854); Mary (b.1856/7); and Margaret (b.1859/60). James (19th C.) married Margaret Moore (or 'More') in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1840. Their children included: Adam (b.1841); Robert (b.1844); Margaret (b.1846); John Sprot (b.1850); and William (b.1854). James (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Elizabeth Weir and their son Robert was baptised in 1839. James (19th C.) married Agnes Sinton in Castleton Parish in 1848. James (1821–1900) son of James, shepherd at Birneyknowe, he was born in Cavers Parish. He was an apprentice tailor in Hawick with Mr. Mitchell, working with him 1837–46. He was a journeyman tailor in Newcastle and elsewhere, settling down as a tailor at Bonchester Bridge about the time he got married. It is said that about this time he resolved to become a teetotaller and struggled to overcome his earlier craving for drink. He was appointed to the Hobkirk Parish Council when it was first formed, and remained on it until his death. He also served as officer to the Hobkirk Heritors. He married Helen (or 'Ellen') Hall in Hobkirk in 1852; she was daughter of a shepherd at Gatehousecote. They had 7 daughters and 1 son: Helen (or 'Ellen', b.1852), who married W. Minto, cab proprietor in Hawick; Janet (b.1855), who married Walter Turnbull, carpenter in Bonchester Bridge; Isabella (b.1858), who married T. McGowan; Margaret (b.1860), a dressmaker, who worked for the Post Office; Mary Telfer (b.1863), who died young; Wilhelmina Elliot (b.1865), married Thomas Hogg from Selkirk; Agnes Rutherford (b.1868), married A. Bruce from Musselburgh; and James (b.1871), who was also a tailor. James (1833/4–1904) farmer at West Buccleuch. He married Christina Glendinning, daughter of Archibald and Violet Beattie. Their son Thomas died in the South African War in 1902. They also had daughters Agnes Margaret and Violet and sons William (who farmed at Stobswood, near Duns), George (who also farmed West Buccleuch) and Andrew (of Flass, Westruther). James (c.1843–80) only son of Robert and grandson of James, farmer in Branxholme Braes. He married Mary Turnbull (c.1846–90). Their children were: Thomas, who died young; Robert (1865–1920); and Mary Turnbull Pott (d.1903). James Wyndham Alleyne (1872–1939) eldest son of Charles John, farmer at Branxholme Park. He was born in Roberton Parish. He served with the Indian Forestry Service. In 1938 he was fined 10 shillings after his dog 'arrested itself' by walking into the police station, after being picked up 2 times earlier for not having a collar and tag. He lived at Beechwood Beech, Alton, Hants. He firstly, in 1910, married Ishabel MacLeod MacDonald (from Skye, 1882–1913), who died in Calcutta. He secondly, in 1931, married Marjorie Patmore. There were no surviving children from either marriage. Jane Little nee Hay (b.1825/6) daughter of Robert Hay and Ann Little. She married Robert Grieve (d.1853), who was a solicitor's clerk. She took over the running of the Crown Inn in 1848 after the deaths of her father and then her mother. She continued there after the death of her husband, moving later to a smaller hotel at 8 Bridge Street, where she lived with her daughter Annie Little. In 1863 she presented the Museum with a toddy ladle that had been used at the Common-Riding dinner for 130 years. She appears to have gone bankrupt in 1864, her assets being sequestrated. Janet (17th C.) resident of Colterscleuch on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Janet (17th C.) listed at Lairhope among 'The poor in Hauick Parioch' on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Janet (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when she was at Horsleyhill. Joan (b.1738) daughter of William and sister of Dr. John, she was born in Hawick. She was also known as Joanna. She was sent to live with her uncle, Dr. James, in Russia (although some sources mistakenly suggest she was his daughter). In 1754 she married Dr. James Mounsey (1710–73), who was a surgeon in Russia, became known as a naturalist and was elected to the Royal Society. Her husband returned to Scotland in 1762, buying the estate of Rammerscales in Dumfriesshire (and being one of the first to raise crops of rhubarb there). He long believed that the agents of Empress Catherine were out to get him, and is said to have faked his own death. His last Russian descendant died during the siege of Leningrad in 1942 (although these may be from an earlier family of his). She remarried after his death. John (15th C.) recorded at Ferniehirst in 1494/5. John Hervey in Fairnilee had remission for several crimes, including stealing 30 sheep from him. His name is written 'Johanne greiff'. John (17th C.) married 'Jenet Inglish'. Their son James was born in Hawick in 1644. This could have been James of Commonside, although there are other possibilities. John (17th C.) tenant in Eilrig. He is recorded being 'in Eleridge' in the baptismal record of 1680, when the witnesses were James Hutton and Walter Grieve. His will is recorded in 1684. He was surely related to Robert, who was at Eilrig at the same time. He married Margaret Scott and their children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included: Margaret (b.1680); and Walter (b.1682). The witnesses in 1682 were Robert and Walter Grieve (who were surely relatives). John (17th C.) resident of Garvald in Haddingtonshire. He is mentioned in Scott of Satchells 'postral: 'As for John Grieve in Garwold, He keeps both Board and Bed, So doth James Grieve in Lennup, And the Grieves on Commonside'; and 'John Grieve of Garwald a right honest one, Which relieves the poor, and proves a Christian Man; And with his small substance he is well content, Though in late times he prov'd a Puritant'. It is unclear if he was related to local Grieves or if perhaps Scott knew him from the army. John (17th/18th C.) tenant of Crurie near Eskdalemuir. He married Helen, daughter of Walter Grieve in Colterscleuch, who was said to be his cousin. He was thus presumably directly related to the Grieves of the Branxholme and Borthwick areas. His son Walter farmed at Airswood, and he had another son, John, from whom descended farmers at Deloraine and Bowhill. John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Thomson and their daughter Alison was baptised in 1739. John (b.c.1741) son of Walter and Janet Anderson. He lived in Castleton Parish, specifically at Park, where most of his children were born. In 1767 he married Elizabeth Alexandra (b.1741), daughter of Walter Paisley and Margaret Dalgleish. Their children included: Margaret (b.1768), who may have married John Kyle; Mary (b.1769); Walter (b.1772), who married Eleanor Elliot and probably moved to Ontario; Janet (b.1774), who married James Elliot; James (b.1774); William (1777–1824), who married Mary Elliot; Jean (b.1779), who married James Beattie; John (1781–1850), who died in Westminster Township, Ontario; and Elliot (1784–1874), who emigrated to Ontario. Dr. John (1744–1805) probably born in Hawick, son of William Grieve and Elspeth (or Elizabeth) Grieve (who appear to have been married 24 years before he was born). His mother's brother was Dr. James, physician in Russia and he was a good friend of Dr. James' only son, James Tamesz (who would have been his cousin). His sister Joan (b.1738) married physician and naturalist James Mounsey (who served the Russian royal family, but returned to Scotland after Tsar Peter III's death, and convinced that agents were out to get him, faked his own funeral). He studied at Edinburgh and Glasgow Universities and in the period 1778–83 served as a military doctor at Voronezh in Russia. He then returned to Britain because of his health. He had a broad interest in science, publishing a paper in the first volume of the Transactions of the Royal Society of Edinburgh on fermented mare's milk. He practised medicine in London, and was elected to 15 separate medical, scientific and antiquarian societies, including the Royal Society. He returned to Russia with his family in 1798, acting as court physician to Emperor Paul I. He (and 2 other Scots) performed the autopsy on Paul's body after his asassination in 1801. He was then physician to the family of Emperor Alexander I. In 1792 he married Rebecca Kinnersley (1771–1811). Their daughter Eliza Emma married Guy Lennox Prendergast and they had at least one other child, Maria Augusta. He died of a stroke in St. Petersburg and was buried there. John (d.bef. 1791) resident of Hawick who married Helen Thomson in 1769. Their children included: Walter (b.1770); Agnes (b.1773); and John (b.1784). His son Walter died in Hawick in 1791. John (18th C.) married Helen Cathrae. Their children Janet (b.1775) and Alexander (or perhaps Alexandra, b.1778) were baptised in Hawick Parish. John (1754–95) from Westerkirk in Dumfriesshire, son of Walter and Jean Pott. His grandmother was from the Grieves of the Branxholme area. Sometime about 1780 he and his cousin George Stavert inherited the lands of Hoscote from their uncle George Pott, and he also inherited Craik. He lived at Craik and sold his share of Hoscote to his cousin Adam Stavert in 1781. In the baptismal records for 1781 and 1785 he is described as 'Mr. Grieve of Hoscoat att Craick'. However, he appears to have still been tenant farmer at Hoscote in 1785 and paid the land tax there in that year. He was again 'Mr. John Grieve in Craick' in 1787. He was farmer at Craik according to the 1787–94 Horse Tax Rolls. In Roberton in 1778 he married Isabella or 'Bell' (1757–1835), daughter of Walter Turnbull and Dorothea Chisholme; she was born at Firth and died at Meadshaw.

Their children were: Margaret (b.1777); George (1779–1841), who was a Schoolmaster; Walter J. (1781–1861); Dolly (1783–1806); Jane (1785–1835), who married William Moffat of Garwald; John (b.1787), who died in infancy; and Isabella (c.1789–c.1831), who married David Ballantyne. He died at Craik and is buried along with several family members, commemorted on the same gravestone as the Potts of Hoscote. John (18th C.) married Isabel Pott in Hawick Parish in 1785. John (18th C.) farmer at Hartwoodmyres according to the Horse Tax Rolls of 1785–91. In 1787 his servant Jean Dunlop was mentioned in a legal case in Selkirk. John (18th C.) wright in Hawick. His wife Isobel Little died in Hawick in 1799. His son William died in 1798 and an unnamed child in 1805. In 1809 his son John died in Hawick Parish; either he or his son was 'lang John'. John (18th/19th C.) from Stow, he married Janet Stavert in Roberton Parish in 1791. Their children included James (b.1795) and Mary (b.1796), baptised in Selkirk. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Blackburnfoot in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He could be the John from Castleton who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. John (b.c.1770) son of Robert, who farmed at Easter Alemoor and elsewhere. He had a twin brother Walter. He married Helen Watson in 1812 and Helen Grieve in 1822. He lived in Edinburgh. His children were: Jessie (b.1814); Walter (b.1816); John (b.1819); Helen; Thomas; and Robert. John (b.1775/6) corn dealer who lived at Gledsnest. He was there from at least the 1820s. He was probably the John at Colterscleugh who subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. A letter (between Elliots) from 1824 states that 'John Greive is still in the Nest'. He was recorded there on the 1841 census. He married Jean Hume and their children included: Robert (b.1819); Peter (b.1821); John (b.1823); Walter (b.1827); Betsy (b.1829); William; Isabella; Jean; and Mary. Most of his children were born in Cavers Parish. He may be the John who was recorded at Newmill in Hawick Parish on the ballot for the Militia in 1799. John (b.c.1780) labourer in Newcastleton on the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1801. John (1800–80) wright of (Stobs) Woodfoot, son of shepherd Robert and brother of Walter. In 1841 and 1851 he was at Birkwood Foot (presumably Stobs Woodfoot) and was described in 1851 as a master carpenter. Along with his son Robert he started a coach-building business in Havelock Street. He was a member of Allars Kirk in Hawick. He married Elizabeth Glendinning in 1820 and after her death married Janet, daughter of James Cranstoun and Margaret Mitchellhill, in 1838. Together they had 14 children, many of whom lived long lives in the Hawick area. They were: Isabella, who married Kirkton joiner Andrew Scott; Agnes; Robert, who married Elizabeth Turnbull in Hobkirk; Helen; Elizabeth ('Betsy' or 'Betty'), who married John Lewis and later John Fleming, both joiners, and later in life had a grocer's shop on the Howegate; Margaret, who married James Christie in Hawick; John, who died of consumption; Catherine, who possibly married David Ballantyne in Hawick in 1853; James; Walter, emigrated to Victoria, Australia, married Elizabeth miller and lived to the age of 91; Helen or 'Ellen', named after her recently deceased halfsister, married gamekeeper Thomas Simpson; and William, who was a joiner in Havelock Street, but died aged 23; David, also a joiner in Havelock Stree, died age 22; and Christina, who died in infancy. John (19th C.) married Agnes Hardie in Castleton Parish in 1837. John (1803–92) 2nd son of James, farmer at Branxholme Braes. He was farm overseer at Howpasley. He married Mary (b.1804), daughter of Adam Glendinning. Their children were: Elizabeth (1827–96), who married William Beattie; James (b.1828), who married Mary Brown; Ann (b.1832); Robert (1833–1913), who emigrated to New Zealand; Margaret (b.1846/7); William (b.1839/40); John (b.1841); Adam (b.1845); Charlotte Mary Ann (b.1848); and Helen (b.1851). Katherine (1837–1916) daughter of Thomas and Marion Margaret Dickson, from Skelfhill. She helped plan the planting of shrubs at the Borthwick Waas cemetery, along with their sister Marion. In 1859 she was 'Miss Catherine Grieve, Skelhill' when she donated a large number of coins to the Museum. She could be the Miss Grieve of Skelfhill who donated Roman artefacts from Cologne to the Museum in 1863, in addition to a shrike and a platypus. Also in 1868 she donated a flying fish. Lewis (b.c.1770s) servant at Whitslade according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. Lindsay local butcher. He started in 1960, running his shop at 29 High Street since 1988. In 1992 he was Scottish Champion maker of haggis and in 2020 was given a royal appointment. Margaret nee Lambert (b.1810/11) born in Galashiels, she married George Grieve in Lilliesleaf in 1828. Her husband was toll-keeper at the Eastern Toll in Hawick on the 1841 census.

Her husband died in 1849 and by the 1851 census she was toll-keeper at Wilton Place North Bar. She lived there with her daughters Isabella and Jeanie Manuel (or 'Jane', who married clothier Alexander Scott) and servant Betsy Waugh. She secondly married James Wishart in Wilton in 1852 and he was toll-keeper at Wilton Hill in 1861. Marion Fisher (1831–1921) daughter of Thomas, farmer at Skelfhill, and Marion Margaret Dickson. Along with her sister Katherine and Robert Noble of Borthwickbrae, she planned the shrubbery around Borthwick Waas Cemetery in 1895. She also left money in her will for the upkeep of the cemetery. Michael (b.c.1775) woolspinner in Hawick. He may be the son of John and Helen Cathrae baptised in Hawick in 1780. He was recorded as a weaver in Hawick on the ballot for the Militia in 1799 and on the 1801 list was a 'Carpet Weaver'. He was living on the Fore Row in 1841 and at about 16 Howegate in 1851. He married Rachel Scott, and she died in 1851, aged 64. Their children included: Janet (b.c.1814), who married shoemaker Peter Fairbairn; Elizabeth (c.1815–88), who died in Hawick Poorhouse; Walter (b.c.1816), who married Mary Oliver; John (b.c.1817), also a woollen spinner; Rachel (b.c.1822); Mary (b.c.1824–56), who died unmarried; Alexander (b.1826), mill foreman in Galashiels; Margaret (b.1829), who probably died young; and Christina (b.1830), who married tailor William Milner. Michael (c.1842–1912) son of Walter. He left Hawick in 1874 to work in hosiery manufacturing in Leicester and retired to Queensborough. He married Isabella Scott in Hawick in 1866. Their children were: Walter (b.1867); Maggie Scott (b.1869); Thomas Scott, who became senior partner of T. Grieve & Co., Ltd., hosiery latch needle manufacturers of Leicester, inventing the fashioning needle; Adam (b.1872); William Helm (b.1874); Mary (b.1875); Janet (b.1877); Herbert (b.1878); Isabella (b.1879); Agnes (b.1882); and John (b.1886). Michael Anderson (1858–1919) son of Adam and Jane Anderson, he was a joiner in Newcastleton. In 1887 he married Margaret (1865–1930), daughter of Adam Nichol and Esther Hardie. Their children were Adam Nichol (b.1887) and Christina (b.1891). Nancy (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1801 her illegitimate daughter Nancy (born the previous year) was baptised in Cavers, the father being Robert Bain, servant at Tower farm. Norman William (1852–1936) youngest son of William Oliver, farmer at Branxholme Park, from his 2nd marriage with Sarah (or Elisa) Clarke (nee Wagstaff). He pointed out (as described by Prof. James Elliot in 1876) areas where rocks had been grooved by the action of glaciers on Branxholme Park Hill. He was 'formerly of Eskdale and Liddesdale', then was on the boards of several tea and rubber companies in what was at that time Ceylon. He was later described as 'Tropical Agriculturalist & Director of Public Companies'. He was living in East Grinstead in 1891, Tunbridge Wells in 1901 and Kensington in 1911. He compiled some information about his family history in 1893. In the years before WWI he appears to have taken the shootings in several Borders farms, namely East and West Buccleuch, East and West Deloraine and Whitehillshiels. In 1928 he gave £2,000 for a maternity home in Hawick, with the stipulation that it be named after Earl Haig. He married Charlotte Adelaide, daughter of George Hamilton Verity. Their children were William Robert, Christina Verite, Ruth Marion and Elsie Wagstaff. He died at West Heath in Surrey and is commemorated at Borthwick Waas Cemetery. His name was taken as the middle names of rugby and cricket internationalist James Norman Grieve Davidson, said to be the first person born in the Haig Maternity Home. Peter (18th C.) miller at Headshaw Mill. He married Margaret Thomson and their children, baptised in Ashkirk Parish, included: Elizabeth (b.1740); William (b.1742); Margaret (b.1745); Margaret (agin, b.1747); and Isabel (b.1753). In the 1753 baptism his forename is given as 'Patrick'. Robert (16th/17th C.) farmer in 1609 when he was one of a large number of tenants of Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane and others who were bound not to reset Walter Scott of Headshaw and others. It is unclear where he was farmer, or if he was the same as Robert in Commonside. Robert (16th/17th C.) resident of Lymiecleuch in 1618. Walter Scott of Buccleuch complained that he had cut down 16 alder trees from his lands of Gorrenberry, with other men from upper Teviotdale (including Archibald in Caerlenrig) also being accused of stealing timber. Not appearing before the Privy Council, he was denounced as a rebel. Robert (17th C.) described as 'in Commonside' in 1632 when he and several others feued the lands of Westbarns from Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning. He may have been father of Walter in Branxholme Park and William in Commonside. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their daughter Agnes was baptised in 1656. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included Robert (b.1683) and Walter (b.1686). The witnesses in 1683 were James and William, who were surely related to him. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Commonside. In the 1686 confirmation of lands to Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch, it is described how the lands of Wester Winds were 'sometimes possest' by him, and he also occupied Dryden, Easter Winds, Commonside, Nether Croft and Hoghill. He was presumably related to the earlier Robert in Commonside. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Eilrig. His will is recorded in 1686. He was surely related to John, who was there at the same time. He may be the Robert who (along with Walter) witnessed a baptism for John in Hawick Parish in 1682. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Teindside, whose testament was listed at Peebles Commissariot in 1686. He may be the Robert who (along with Thomas Borthwick, suggesting the countryside south of the Town) witnessed a baptism for Robert Laidlaw in Hawick Parish in 1676. He may be the Robert in Teindside whio in 1710 witnessed a baptism for James in Teindside and Isobel Grieve (suggesting he was related to at least one of them). Robert (17th/18th C.) married Janet Little in Cavers Parish in 1699. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Fenwick in 1714. His wife was an Elliot (with no first name given) and their children included Margaret (b.1712) and William (b.1714). The witnesses in 1714 were James in Drinkstone (perhaps a relative) and John Elliot in Penchrise. Probably the same Robert was recorded in Fenwick in 1725 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Walter Dalgleish, wright in Alton Croft. He was probably related to William, who was tenant in Fenwick in 1723. Robert (c.1690–1782) tenant in Deanburnhaugh. It is unclear how he was related to the other local Grieves. It is possible his father was James. His children were: James; Walter (d.1822) of Over Huntly; and Janet (b.1737). He died at Alemoor. Robert (18th C.) recorded in Glenkerry in Ettrick Parish in 1724 when he married Jean 'Bleak' from Fenwick in Hawick Parish. Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1749 he married Jean Hutton, who was from Cavers. His children (baptised in Roberton, but with no mothers' name given) probably included Jean (b.1751) and William (b.1758). Robert (1725–85) son of James, farmer in Todshawhaugh and Branxholme Park. He was tenant farmer at Stonedge. It is possible he was the Robert who witnessed a Hawick baptism for William Grieve in Southfield (perhaps his brother). He married Jean Curle in Roberton Parish in 1772 and she died in 1814, aged 76. James (1773–1855), farmer in Branxholme Braes, was their son. They are buried in Borthwick Waas. It is unclear if they had any other children. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Scott and their son Walter was baptised in 1763. The witnesses were Thomas Miller and George Kedie. Robert (18th C.) leather-dresser in Hawick. He was a subscriber to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). He may be the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert (1741–1829) son of William. He succeeded his father as tenant in Southfield and also tenanted Hawick Shiel. He paid the Horse Tax at Southfield in 1794 and 1797 and the Dog Tax in 1797. He is probably the resident of Southfield who was on a list of local volunteers in 1803, recorded as being above age but willing to serve. He married Jane Huggan (1754/5–1830), who died in Lilliesleaf. Their children included: Mary (b.1765); James (b.1773); Agnes (b.1780), who married Thomas Oliver, farmer in Lilliesleaf; and Walter John (b.1787), tenant in Southfield and Hawick Shiel. Robert (18th C.) recorded at Skelfhill in 1777 and 1778 when his children were baptised in Cavers Parish. His children included: Janet (b.1777); and Nelly (b.1778). He could be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (18th C.) recorded as farmer at Harwood in Hobkirk Parish on the 1789–92 Horse Tax Rolls. He was succeeded at Harwood by Walter, who was probably his son or brother. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (18th C.) paid the cart tax in Lilliesleaf in 1787–89. Robert (b.1764) son of William, farmer in Southfield and Margaret Elliot. He was a merchant in Leith. He may be the Robert who in 1783 and 1784 witnessed baptisms for John Nixon and Mary Grieve (perhaps his sister). He may be the resident of Leith who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. Robert (d.1814) shepherd at Harden, Heap, Todshaw, Greensidehall and elsewhere. In 1785 he married Isabella, daughter of David Laidlaw from Highchesters; she died in 1857, aged 92. Their children were: Walter (b.1786), bapstised in Roberton, who was a successful slater and plumber in Hawick; Robert (b.1790), also a shepherd; Margaret (b.1792), born at Heap; Isabel (b.1794), born at Todshaw, who married shepherd Robert Anderson; David (b.1788), born at Greensidehall; Agnes, who married slater William Scott; and John, who was a wright at Stobs Woodfoot. He died at Alton and was buried in Wilton Kirkyard. Robert (18th/19th C.) wright in Hawick in 1797 on the list of men balloted to serve in the Militia. The annotation 'Serving' suggests that he was signed up into the army, with his name appearing on another list in 1798. He was confirmed to be serving according to the amended list of 1799. Robert (1790–1862) 2nd son of shepherd Robert. He also worked as a shepherd. He married Janet, daughter of Robert Glendinning and Isabella Murray in Yarrow in 1817 (although she had been born in Hobkirk Parish). Their children included Robert, who married Margaret Allan and then Sarah Cunningham and died in Hawick Poorhouse. In 1861 he was recorded as an agricultural labourer at Old Belses, with wife Janet and children Jean, Margaret and David. Robert (19th C.) Clerk of the Course at the Common-Riding Races in the 1840s. He may be the same as one of the other local Roberts. Robert (b.1801/2) shepherd at Slaidhills, above Teindside. He had earlier lived in Bedrule Parish. In 1861 he was a retired shepherd, living at Elliotsfield. His wife was Elizabeth ('Betty') and their children included Margaret (b.1827), John (b.1832), Ann H., Esther, Walter, Archibald, Elizabeth and Margaret (again). By 1861 he was a retired shepherd living with his wife at Elliotsfield. He could have been the Robert who married Elizabeth Cavers in 1822/3. Robert (1802–85) eldest son of James, farmer at Branxholme Braes. He farmed at Whitchesters and later took over Branxholme Braes. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He is recorded at Whitchesters in 1841 and 1851 (when he farmed 1000 acres and emplyed 9 labourers) and at Branxholme Braes in 1861 (when he farmed 1200 acres and employed 8 men) and 1868. In 1855 he was the host of the 'Curds an Cream' at Whitchesters on the Friday of the Common Riding. He donated a coin and a bank note to the Museum in 1857. In 1833 he married Mary Pott (1804–94). Their only child was James (c.1843–80), who married Mary Turnbull. Robert (1818/9–1853) of the Crown Inn in Hawick. Born at Teviothead. He trained as a solictor's clerk, but was recorded as keeper of the Crown Inn in 1851 and in Slaters' 1852 directory. He married Janet Hay, daughter of the former proprietor of the Crown. Their children included: Robert Hay; and Ann Little, who was a governess. He died aged about 34 and his wife carried on at the Crown Hotel until 1866. Robert (1818–72) son of Walter John, farmer at Southfield. He spent about 12 years in Australia, returning to Scotland about 1851. He took over as tenant of Southfield when his father died in 1861. He is probably the Grieve of Southfield who donated a coin of Charles II to the Museum in 1862. In 1863 he married Christina Gray (1844–80). Their children were: Walter John (1865–1948), who also farmed Southfield; William Gray (b.1866), who emigrated to Denver, Colorado; Robert Elliot (b.1868), who went to New Zealand; John Wright (b.1869), who also went to New Zealand; and James Christian (b.1872), also New Zealand. It appears there were no descendants of the 3 brothers who went to the southern hemisphere. The family are commemorated at Borthwick Waas. Robert (1826–1907) son of John, elder in Allars Kirk for 50 years, and grandson of Robert, who lived at several farms in Wilton. His mother was Elizabeth Glendinning, and he was born in Wilton. He worked for several years as an estate steward for Sir William Eliott of Stobs and Wells. He was recorded as land steward at Stobs Cottage in 1861. Along with his father he then started a coach-building business in Havelock Street in 1867. In 1853 he married Elizabeth ('Betty'), daughter of James Turnbull, who may have been farmer at Billerwell (and died in 1858, aged 85), and she died in 1861, aged 34. In 1865 he secondly married Isabella Ballantyne in Hawick. His children were: Margaret (b.1854/5); John (b.1859), who married Wilhelmina Balmer and secondly Mary Gavin; Henry; Robert Ballantyne; William Henry; Annie Mary Jane; Annie Mary Jane (again); and Elizabeth, 'Lizzie'. He kept a diary (from 1857 to 1865, when he was working on the Stobs estate), which has been transcribed by one of his descendants. Robert (1825/6–1900) born in Bowden, he was farmer at Huntly in Kirkhope Parish (including land in Ashkirk Parish) from 1857. He took over the tenancy from Elliot Grieve, and married Elliot's daughter Jessie (also known as Janet). He was at Over Huntly in the 1860s and 70s and recorded at 'Outer Huntly' in 1861. His children included James (eldest son, who died at Carbon, Alberta), Henry (died at Saltcoats, Saskatoon), Elliot (died at Tweedmouth), Walter (4th son, who died aged 12), John Robert (youngest son, who died young) and Christina (joint tenant in Over Huntly until 1921). The family are commemorated on a gravestone in Borthwick Waas. Robert (1865–1920) only surviving son of James, farmed at Whitchesters and Branxholme Braes.

His children included: James; and Robert Archibald Vivian (1907–42), who was killed in action in the Middle East. Robert (1868–1945) younger son of Robert, tenant in Southfield. He married Isabella Lillies, and had no descendants. Robert (1901–77) son of Walter John, farmer at Southfield. He took over the tenancy when his father retired in 1937. His son Walter carried on with the farm until 1988, by which time the same family had held the tenancy for more than 230 years. Robert Archibald Vivian 'Viv' (1907–42) son of Robert and grandson of James, farmer at Branxholme Braes. He played rugby for Hawick and was Cornet in 1929; he and his Lass Jean Elliot had the distinction of serving a second time as Left-Hand Man in 1932 when Riddell Innes fell ill and his Lass also felt like she should stand down. He was a Lieutenant in the Gordon Highlanders and part of the 8th Army, who was killed in action on the first day of the Battle of El Alamein. He married Nora, youngest daughter of Charles James Glenny. He is commemorated at Borthwick Waas. A letter survives that he wrote from the front to his friend Willie Mactggart in Hawick. Thomas 'Tom' (16th C.) one of the tenants of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for them in Hawick, that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. His name was recorded as 'Thome Greif' and he was probably related to Will, who was also listed. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wigg in Hobkirk Parish when his daughter Helen was baptised in 1788. He is probably the Thomas who married Helen Stevenson in Hawick in 1774. Their other children included: Thomas (b.1778), baptised in Hawick; Betty (b.1782), also baptised in Hawick; and John Stevenson (b.1790), baptised in Hobkirk. He may be the Thomas who in 1772 witnessed a baptism in Hawick for William Scott and Janet Dryden. Thomas (1738/9–1828) farmer at Glendinning and at Muselee. He is recorded at Muselee on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls and also paid the dog tax there in 1797. He is probably the Thomas who (along with Charles Scott at Commonside) witnessed a baptism for Archibald Elliot in 1782. He married Jane, daughter of James Stevenson and Jane Scott; she died at Muselee in 1797, aged 43. He himself died at Glendinning and they are commemorated on a gravestone in Borthwick Waas. He may be the James, son of James, baptised in 1739 in Cavers Parish, probably son of James in Commonside. John Stevenson Grieve, baptised in Hobkirk in 1790, may have been his son. Thomas (18th/19th C.) mason recorded in Hawick in 1797 on the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was listed among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area. Thomas (b.1770s) labourer at Castleweary in Cavers Parish. In 1797 he was listed among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia and in 1799 among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not Drawn Still residing in Cavers Parish'. He is probably the labourer recorded at Henderson's Knowe on the 1801 Militia ballot; William was also there and perhaps related, as well as Gilbert, recorded at Castleweary in 1799. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farm servant of Phaup in Cavers Parish. In 1797 he was listed among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia and in 1799 among those 'In the Ballot Box 1797 not Drawn Still residing in Cavers Parish', but by then residing at Penchrise. He may have been son of William, who was shepherd at Phaup at the same time. Thomas (b.c.1780) shepherd at Larriston according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia. Thomas (1797–1848) farmer at Branxholme Park and later tenant at Skelfhill. He was the younger son of James, farmer at Branxholme Park, and brother of William Oliver. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He was wealthy enough to be employing a governess in 1841. In Hawick in 1822 he married Marion Margaret, youngest daughter of Archibald Dickson of Housebyres, and she died in 1860, aged 56. Their children were: James (1825–44); Archibald (1827–1921); William (1829–85), who farmed Skelfhill after his father died; Marion Fisher (1831–1921); Catherine (1833/4–35); Thomas (1834–79), who was a sailor and died at Valparaiso; Walter (1836–82); Katherine (1837–1916); John Scott (1840–93); and Margaret (1843–1903). Thomas Gordon (b.1844) 3rd son of William Oliver, tenant of Branxholme Park. He was a Lieutenant in the 6th Dragoon Guards. He married Fanny Strickland and their children were Marion Alison and Lillian de Alvarada. He could be the Thomas who presented photographs of an Australian chief to the Museum in 1863. Thomas (1873–1902) born in Innerleithen, son of James. His father was later farmer at West Buccleuch. He was killed at Bloemfontein in the Boer War, and his name is commemorated on the Hawick Boer War Memorial. Walter (1646–1721) possibly son of Robert and descendant of the James recorded about 1580. He was also likely to have been brother of William, tenant in Commonside.

He may be the Walter who was mentioned by Walter Scott of Satchells in 1688. He was tenant of Branxholme Park, signing the lease in 1691. He was recorded as a householder at Branxholme Park on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he was taxed for 2 hearths. He was 'in Park' when he witnesseds baptisms in 1705 for Robert Nixon in Dodburn, in 1708 for James Laidlaw, a cottar in Branxholme Park, in 1709 for Robert Laidlaw in Haregrain, in 1710 for James in Teindside and Isobel Grieve (suggesting he was related to at least one of them) and in 1713 for Walter Scott of Merrylaw (whose wife Margaret Grieve may have been related to him) and for John Elliot in Goldielands. In 1714 his servant Margaret Grieve got married in Hawick. He married Blanche (or 'Blench', 1661–1716), daughter of William Borthwick of Reashaw. Their children included: James (1684–1781), tenant of Branxholme Park and Todshawhaugh; Margaret (b.1671); Robert (b.1676); and 3 unnamed children chistened in the 1670s. Walter in Colterscleuch may also have been a son. The witnesses in 1676 were William Grieve (perhaps his brother) and John Bell. He was buried at Borthwick Waas, along with his wife and descendants. He may be the Walter who witnessed baptisms for John Blake in 1674 and for John in Eilrig (probably a relative) in 1680 and 1682. Walter (d.1688) son of William in Commonside and brother of James, who was also tenant there. He died along with his son William and daughter Jean, all within a few months of each other, and are buried at Borthwick Waas. His will is recorded in 1688. Walter (c.1670–1710) farmer in Colterscleuch. He was said to be brother of James, tenant in Branxholme Park, and hence a son of Walter (they are commemorated together at Borthwick Waas). In 1708 he was described as 'tenent in Colterscluch in Cavers parish' when his son was baptised in Hawick. His wife was probably Katherine Ogilvie (d.1759). His children were: James (b.c.1694), tenant in Commonside and Over Huntly; Walter, who married Janet Anderson from Tushielaw; William (perhaps the William baptised in Hawick in 1698), who had at least 1 son; Hugh (b.1708), baptised in Hawick, who is said to have had a son; Gideon, who married Isabel Laidlaw; and at least one daughter, possibly Helen, who married John Grieve of Crurie, said to be a cousin. The witnesses in 1708 were Walter Scott in Crumhaugh and William Clerk in Southdeanrig. Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded at Hoscote in 1721 when his son Robert was baptised. It is unclear how he is related to other Grieves. Walter (b.c.1700) son of Walter in Colterscleuch. He was recorded as tenant in Tushielaw in 1728. In 1727 he married Janet Anderson from the Tushielaw family. Their children, mostly baptised in Ettrick Parish, included: John (b.1728); Walter (b.1730); Michael (b.1732); Christian (b.1734); Margaret (b.1736), baptised in Selkirk; and James (b.1740), also baptised in Selkirk. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Midshiels in 1737 and 1739. He married Jean Murray and their children included: William (b.1734); Gideon (b.1737); and Walter (b.1739). The witnesses in 1737 were Robert Scott and John Pringle and in 1739 were James and Thomas Douglas. Walter (d.1781) recorded as 'Kirk Officer' when he died in Hawick Parish in 1781. He may be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (1710–99) son of James. Like his father he was tenant of the Duke of Buccleuch at Branxholme Park. He was recorded renting Branxholme Park from at least 1745. Along with John Elliot (younger of Borthwickbrae) he leased the lands of Linhope from the Buccleuch estates in 1744. He paid the window tax for Branxholme Park in 1748. He was involved in loans with the Elliots of Harwood in the 1750s. He may be the Walter who in 1765 witnessed a baptism for William in Southfield (probably his brother). He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1777. He rented Todshawhaugh and Whames in 1792. He held the lease for Todshawhaugh, where he was recorded in 1796 when there was a bond between William Elliot of Harwood and others with him. He was also farmer at Todshawhaugh on the 1789–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He owned 1 saddle horse and 3 farm horses in 1797, as well as paying the dog tax in 1797. His first wife was Katherine (1718–59), daughter of Adam Ogilvie of Hartwoodmyres, and the couple had children relatively late in life. He secondly married Magdaline, daughter of William Elliot of Borthwickbrae. His surviving children were: James (1751–1838), the only son; Helen (or Eleanor), who married Alexander Scott of Synton; Margaret (1755–86), who married John Balfour in Pilrig; Catherine (1757–86), who married William Sibbald of South Leith; and Jane (1762–87). The witnesses to the 1757 appear to be Mrs. Ogilvie of Hartwoodmyres (probably his mrother-in-law) and Mrs. Grieve of Todshawhaugh (probably his mother James). He died at Todshawhaugh. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Murray, and their children included James (b.1744). Walter (c.1724–90) son of John, farmer in Crurie. He may have been born in Moffat and was farmer at Crooks and Airswood, also in Dumfriesshire. He also worked as an architect. In 1744 in Roberton Parish he married Jean (1727–77), daughter of Adam Pott and Betty Elliot. The marriage was in 1744, with his wife's sister Betty marrying Thomas Stavert at the same time. Their children were: John and Elizabeth, who died in infancy; Adam (b.1748), who may also have died young; Helen (1750–63); Nathaniel (b.1751), also died in infancy; John (1754–95), who was Laird (or perhaps tenant) of Hoscote and Craik; Betty (b.1756); Helen (b.1764); and Nathaniel (again, b.1770). Walter (1736/7–1822) son of Robert in Deanburnhaugh. He farmed at Hungryhill, Easter Alemoor and Hangingshaw, and also spent time in Perthshire. In Roberton in 1762 he married Janet Grieve (1737–1816), daughter of James in Commonside. Their children were: Robert (1762/3–87), who died unmarried; twins Walter and John (b.c.1770); James (c.1771–1862); Archibald Campbell (b.c.1775); Elliot (c.1777–1858), who married Hariet Turnbull and was tenant at Over Huntly; and Jannet (1779–1858), who married Andrew Aitchison. He died at Over Huntly and was buried at Borthwick Waas. Walter (b.1767) farmer at Southfield, son of William and Mary Elliot. He is easily confused with the slightly later Walter John of Southfield (and the marriages are very similar, so they may be confounded in family histories). He is recorded on the 1790–91 Horse Tax Rolls at Southfield. He is probably the Walter recorded as tenant at Howpasley in 1794 and 1797, as owner of 3 horses, and who also paid the dog tax at Howpasley in 1797. He is probably also the Walter who died unmarried in 1801. Walter (c.1770–1851) son of Walter and Janet Grieve. He was thus descended from Grieves in Coltherscleuch and Deanburnhaugh. He was born at Broadlee in the Borthwick and had a twin brother John. He farmed at Craiglands in Dumfriesshire. He married Janet Campbell Veitch (who was christened in Lilliesleaf) and had 9 children: Robert (b.1797), who married Janet Murray; Elizabeth (b.1798), who married John Hogg; Jannet (b.1800), who married Andrew Watherston; Helen (b.1803), who married Francis Scott; Margaret (b.1805), who married David Brydon; John (b.1808), who married Mary Burns; Jane (b.1811), who died young; Walter (b.1813), who was also born at Broadlee, emigrated to Queensland and married Ann Gordon; and James (b.1818), who was born at Hartwoodmyres. Walter (b.1781) son of John and Isabella Turnbull. He is sometimes referred to as 'Walter J.' and is easy to confuse with Walter John. His father farmed at Hoscote and Craik, and he was born at Hoscote. He is referred to as being of Langwell. He married Christian Brydon. His wife is recorded as 'Annuitant' at about 12 Buccleuch Street in 1851 and is listed among the local gentry in a directory of 1852. He may thus be the 'Mr. Grieve' whose property is shown on Wood's 1824 map at about No. 12 Buccleuch Street. His children included: Isabella; and Helen. Walter (18th/19th C.) described as 'late of Langwell' on his gravestone in Borthwick Waas Cemetery. He married Christian Brydon, who died in Hawick in 1854, aged 70. Walter (d.bef. 1800) resident of Hawick Parish. The death of his son William, a tailor, is recorded in 1800. Walter (18th/19th C.) labourer at Westerhouses in Southdean Parish according to the Lieutenancy Book for 1799. Walter 'Wat' (1786–1856) slater of 23 Buccleuch Street, son of Robert (a shepherd in Roberton) and Isabella Laidlaw. He learned his trade with Thomas Cathrae, and started his own plumbing and slating business about 1805. He is listed in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories and Slater's 1852 directory as a slater and glazier. He married Janet Scott in Wilton, and she died in 1821, aged 27. Their only surviving child was Agnes (b.1817), who married engineer Adam Melrose. He later married Agnes Scott of Milsington, who died in 1865, aged 80. On the 1841 census he was living on Buccleuch Street with wife Agnes and daughter Agnes. A portrait of him exists. Walter John (1787–1861) farmer at Southfield and Hawick Shiel. Born in Hobkirk Parish, he was son of Robert; he was surely also related to the earlier Walter of Southfield. He was recorded being at Southfield in 1803 when volunteered to join the forces to resist the expected French invasion, even although under age. He was one of the founder members of the Wisp Club in 1826. He was probably the 'W.J. Oliver' to whom John Halliday dedicated his poem 'Address to my purse, on finding it empty' in 1847. In 1861 he was farming 650 acres at Southfield and employed 3 men. He married Christian (1786–1880), daughter of William Elliot and Margaret Anderson from Winningtonrig; this was in Cavers Parish in 1812. Their children were: Margaret (1813–19); Jean or Jane (1814–81), who married builder James Harkness; Mary Christian (1816–45), who died unmarried; Robert (1818–72), who also tenanted Southfield; Wilmina or Wilhelmina (1820–78), who married draper James Turnbull; Agnes (1822–47), who married Walter Purdom and died at Ormiston; William (1824–78), who emigrated to Keppel, Ontario, Canada; and Helen Margaret (1826–85), who died in Hawick, unmarried. He is buried at Borthwick Waas, along with several of his family. Walter (b.1805/6) agricultural labourer at Hallrule Porter Lodge according to the 1841 census. His wife was Jean and their children Robert, Helen, John, James and Isabella. Walter (1813–96) son of Walter, he was born at Broadlee in the Borthwick valley and christened in Ashkirk Parish. He emigrated to Queensland, Australia, where he married Ann Gordon and had 10 children. Walter (19th C.) plumber of W. Grieve & Son, 20 Buccleuch Street. Although he was no relation of the Walter Grieve of the plumbers and slaters business at 23 Buccleuch Street, he nevertheless worked for the older Walter and eventually took over the business. He may be the Walter recorded in about 1875 owning part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick. Walter (c.1816–48) probably son of Michael and Rachel Scott. He was a woolspinner in Hawick. In 1841 he married Mary Oliver, who died in 1902, aged 82. His wife was sister of William Oliver, the blind fiddler. Their children were: Michael (b.c.1842), who worked in hosiery manufacturing in Leicester, and had a son Thomas who invented a fashioning needle; Adam (b.c.1845), who was a mason in Edinburgh; and Agnes (b.c.1847), who married Crimean War veteran Andrew Butler. Walter (b.1827) born in Teviothead Parish, son of John and Jean Hume. He was a plumber, slater and glazier in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 5 Slitrig Bank with his widowed mother (then called 'Janet'), and he was then an employer of 8 men and 3 boys. He married Elizabeth Rogers and their children included: Mary (b.1862); John (b.1864); Walter Thomas (b.1865), who was Cornet in 1895; George Glen Rogers (b.1868); William Rogers (b.1871); and Jane Hume Rogers (b.1873). Walter (b.1838) son of James and Janet Inglis. He lived at Southfield, where most of his children were born. In 1864 he married Joanna Jardine (b.1846). Their children included: James (b.1867); Abraham (b.1868); ane (b.1872); Janet (b.1874); Isabella (b.1878); Christina (b.1881); and Adam (b.1884). Walter (b.1843/4) son of carpenter John. He lived at Stobs Woodfoot. In 1859 he donated to the Museum a 'curious monstrosity of fir'. He emigrated to Victoria, Australia, married Elizabeth miller and lived to the age of 91. Walter John (1865–1948) son of Robert and Christina Gray. He took over the tenancy of Southfield while still a minor after the deaths of his father in 1872 and mother in 1880. He was known locally as a keen cyclist in the early days of that sport. He served as factor to the Duke of Buccleuch at Bowhill about 1902–12, living at Carterhaugh. He was a member of the Hawick Archæological Society and local farming organistions. He married Isabella Elizabeth (1873/4–1953), daughter of Andrew Easton of Todrig, and secondly married Jane Scott in 1900. Their children were: Robert Elliot (b.1901), who took over the tenancy of Southfield; Jane Scott (1903–77); and Christina Gray (1904–70). He retired in 1937 and died at 29 Orchard Terrace. Walter Thomas (b.1865) son of Walter and Elizabeth Rogers. He was a plumber and served as Cornet in 1895. He was the first Cornet to be presented with the Cornet's Medal by the Provost. William 'Will' (16th C.) one of the tenants of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for them in Hawick, that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. He was probably related to Thomas, who was also listed. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Telfer and their children included Elizabeth (b.1644). William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marie or Marion Elliot and their children included Margaret (b.1646) and Helen (b.1649). William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Elliot and their children included Bessie (b.1656). William (1631/2–1701) tenant in Commonside. He was presumably related to other local Grieves. He was listed as tenant (along with James, as well as John Waugh) at Commonside on the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He may have been brother of Walter, tenant in Branxholme Park; he may be the William who witnessed a baptism for Walter in 1676. His children included: Walter, who had 2 children William and Jean who died with him in 1688; and James, who succeeded as tenant in Commonside. He is buried in Borthwick Waas. It is possible he was the William, who along with James, witnessed a baptism for Robert in Hawick in 1683. He is probably the William of Commonside who was mentioned by Walter Scott of Satchells in his 'Post'ral' in 1688. William (17th C.) resident at Broadlee in Ashkirk Parish, recorded on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. William (17th C.) shepherd at Priesthaugh in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th/18th C.) probably descended from the Grieves in Commonside. He was recorded as tenant in Fenwick in 1723, 1728 and 1733. He is probably the William who in 1728 witnessed a baptism for Archibald Paterson, tenant in Fenwick and another on the same day for James Sanderson, tenant in Branxholmtown. In 1720 in Hawick he married Elspeth (or Elizabeth or 'Eppy'), daughter of 'Wester James' Grieve; she may have been his cousin. Their children included: James (b.1723); Margaret (b.1724); Robert (b.1728); William (b.1731); William (again, b.1733); Joan (b.1738), who married Dr. James Mounsey; Thomas (b.1739); and John (b.1744). The witnesses in 1723 were Gideon Elliot of Harwood and Thomas Shiel in Todshawhill, in 1728 were the Lairds of Falnash and Harwood and in 1733 were Robert Turnbull and Robert Boyd. Isobel (b.1726), with the mother's name given as 'Euphem' and Michael (b.1736), with no mother's name given, may also have been his children. He may be the former tenant of Allanhaugh Mill described as being deceased in 1767. William (1707–1800) son of James, farmer at Commonside. He was tenant at Colterscleuch and Southfield. He was at Colterscleuch from at least 1741. In 1744 he is recorded as tenant of Colterscleuch and Westcoterig, along with Gideon Grieve, leasing from the Buccleuch Estates. Shortly after that he moved to Southfield. He was probably the tenant in Nether Southfield for whom James Rutherford was shepherd. In 1757 he was tenant at Southfield, and was found (along with other neighbouring tenant farmers) to be making 'bakes' at Black Grain Moss, against the explicit orders of the Town Council. As a result a group led by Bailie Robert Scott mustered in Hawick at 4 a.m. and went up to the Common, to break up the peats. He paid the Horse Tax at Southfield in 1785–89. He married Betty Grieve (1708/9–85). Their children included: Walter (b.1733); Hugh (b.1738); Robert (b.1741), who also tenanted Southfield; Mary (1744–89), who married Alexander Baptie, tenant in Southdean; and James (b.1748). He was 93 when he died and is buried in Borthwick Waas. William (18th C.) recorded getting married in Wilton Parish in 1730, but with no wife's name recorded. He may be the William who witnessed a baptism in 1729 for Thomas Stoddart, resident of Stouslie and another in 1735 for William Nichol, also resident of Stouslie. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included Robert (b.1741), Mary (b.1744) and James (b.1748). William (1726–86) 2nd son of James, tenant of Branxholme Park and Todshawhaugh. He was involved in a bond with Henry Elliot of Harwood in 1759. He was himself tenant farmer at Southfield, recorded there as early as 1759. It is also possible that he was one of the 2 William Grieves who tenanted Allanhaugh Mill in the early-to-mid 18th century. In 1751 he married Margaret Mary, daughter of Robert Elliot of Caerlenrig (who later farmed at Winnington Rig). Their children were: Jean (1757–1810); Isabel (b.1759), who married John Kedie in Hawick in 1785; Mary (1760–91), who married hosier John Nixon in Hawick in 1782; Ann (1761–1834), who married Rev. John Laurie in Hawick in 1786; James (b.1763), tenant in Roan; Christian or Catherine (1763–83), who may have married John Elliot farmer at Millburn, in Hawick in 1783; Robert (b.1764), who worked as a merchant in Leith; Helen; Tibbie, who married teacher Christopher Armstrong; Margaret (b.1765), who may also have married an Armstrong; Walter (1767–1801), who married Christina Elliot and continued to farm at Southfield as well as at Howpasley; Janet (b.1768), who married William Robertson, carpet manufacturer in Hawick in 1789; and William (b.1772). The witnesses in 1757 were Robert Elliot in Winningtonrig (his father-in-law) and Thomas Elliot in Stobicote, in 1759 were 'Mr' Robert Elliot (again) and Robert Grieve (perhaps his brother), in 1763 were Robert Elliot, 'Ridge' (his father-in-law) and James Grieve 'Junior' (probably his brother), in 1764 were 'Mr Robert Elliot' (presumably his father-in-law again) and William Elliot, 'Winnington ridge' and in 1765 were Robert Elliot (again) and Walter (probably his brother). He may be the 'William Grieve, Hawick' who subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784). William (18th C.) recorded at Priesthaugh in 1761 when his unnamed child was baptised in Cavers Parish. He could be the same as one of the other Williams. William (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Isabel Grieve and their children included James (b.1765), Charles (b.1767), John (b.1769) and Helen (b.1771). William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Ruecastle in 1758 and their children included Jane (b.1761), Walter (b.1763), John (b.1766), Walter (b.1770) and Ann (b.1772). William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included Janet (b.1777) and Hannah (b.1778). William (d.1800) tailor in Hawick, son of Walter. He married Henrietta Scott in Hawick in 1784, and she died in 1809. His son Walter died in Hawick in 1797. William (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Linhope, recorded as owner of a horse on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. It is unclear how he was related to other local Grieves. William (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Phaup, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is presumably not the same man as the shepherd at Linhope, who is listed separately. Additionally he was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs at 'Phaap' in 1797. He may have been brother of Thomas, who was also at Phaup in 1797. Probably the same William was 'Herd' at Phaup on the 1801 Militia ballot. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Perhaps the same William was farmer in Lilliesleaf in 1841, aged 75, married to Jean and living with son William and family. William (b.1770s) resident of 'Lawburnfoot' (probably Lochburnfoot) in Cavers Parish. In 1797 he was listed among men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. In 1799 he was listed among those whose names had not been drawn, but were no longer living in the area. William (b.c.1770s) labourer at Castleweary according to the 1799 ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish. Gilbert was also listed in the same place and so probably his brother. He may also be the William recorded as a labourer at Henderson's Knowe on the 1801 Militia ballot; Thomas was also labourer there at that time and perhaps related. He may be the William who was replaced as tenant at Henderson's Knowe in about 1818 and who was a merchant in Langholm by 1824. William (b.c.1770s) servant at Greens according to the ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish in 1799. William (18th/19th C.) tenant at Henwoodie in the 1820s and 30s. William Oliver (1796–1875) son of James and Agnes Hall. He succeeded his father as tenant farmer of Branxholme Park, East Buccleuch and Sundhope. He was President of the Teviotdale Farmers' Club and was heavily involved in all local agricultural matters, being known as a great breeder of hill stock. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1839. He was a member of the Photographic Society of Scotland from 1855. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1840 in Elgin he married Eliza Ann (1821–46), daughter of Charles Gordon. They had 3 sons (twins James and Charles, plus Thomas) and 1 daughter. In 1851 he is listed as farmer of 4000 acres, employing 20 farm workers and with 5 servant in his house. He was still farmer at Branxholme Park in 1868. He was listed in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874 as owner of Dinlabyre and Greena. In 1851 he secondly married Sarah Clarke (nee Wagstaff), daughter of James of Bilby, and they had 1 son. He thirdly married Mary Gordon, from Heckington. His children included: twins James Alexander (1841–46) and Charles John (1841–1915); Chistina Mary (b.1843), who married Wheatley Robertson of the Indian Army; Thomas Gordon (b.1844); and Norman William (1852–1936). William (b.1797/8) joiner and cartwright in Newcastleton. He was probably at about 2 Walter Street in 1861. His wife was Mary and their children included Elliot (a daughter), Charles, Walter and Robert. William (b.c.1804) married Margaret Dalgleish in 1837. His son Robert was born at Ettrick, moved to Queensland in 1883 and still has descendants there. William (1805–51) younger son of James, tenant in Branxholme Braes, and descended from the Grieves of Branxholme Park. He was born in Hawick and became a grocer on the High Street. He is probably the grocer and spirit dealer living on Silver Street in 1841. In 1851 he was living at about 6 High Street. He is listed as a High Street grocer in Slater's 1852 directory, and may also be the corn dealer listed there, as well as the William recorded on the High Street serving as insurance agent for National and seedsman. Additionally he may have been the William serving as 'sub-distributor of stamps' at the Stamp and Tax Office on the High Street. In 1840 he married Christian (or Christina) Graham (1814–88). They had a son, James (b.1841). He and his wife are commemorated on the family gravestone in Borthwick Waas. William (1818–85) son of George and Minto Bell. He was probably born at Craik, where his father farmed. However, the family moved to Edinburgh and then emigrated to Canada in 1832. In 1846 he bought land in Richmond township in Ontario and operated a tavern at Grieve's Corners, which still bears the family name. He married Eliza Fairbairn and their children were Esther, George, Robert, Minto, Georgina and William. William (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth Minto and their son William was baptised in 1849. William (1825–78) younger son of Walter John, farmer at Southfield. He emigrated to Canada in the early 1850s, married Agnes Fairbairn from Berwickshire and had a large family. William (1829–82) 3rd son of Thomas and Marion Dickson. He took over the farm of Skelfhill after his father's death, also having tenancy of Stobicote. He was known for being a judge of Cheviot sheep and was President of the Teviotdale Farmers' Club. He was at Skelfhill in 1861, farming 3084 acres and employing 12 people, with his brother Walter also farming 2000 acres and employinh 3 people. His sisters Catherine and Margaret were also living there, as well as 6 domestic and farm servants. He died unmarried. William Gray (1866–1914) younger son of Robert, tenant in Southfield. He emigrated to Denver, Colorado. He married Lilliam Kirschbaum and they had 1 daughter and 3 sons. William Herbert (1874–1908) 2nd son of Charles John of Branxholme Park. He was a Lieutenant in the Royal Navy. In 1893 he was on board the 'Nile' off Tripoli, when he witnessed the collision that caused the sinking of H.M.S. Victoria, with the loss of hundreds of lives, including his brother Arthur. Later he himself was killed in another naval disaster, this time involving an explosion in Queensferry. There is a memorial brass to him and his brother in St. Cuthbert's Church (formerly written 'Greave', 'Greaves', 'Greif', 'Griefe', 'Greiff', 'Greive', 'Grive' and variants).

the Grieve (thu-greev) n. name of a place in the lower Ewes valley which was used by the people of the Langholm area for drowning witches. Its precise location is uncertain, but possibly at the confluence of the Ewes with the Esk.

Grieve's (greevz) n. plumbers firm formerly located between the Roman Catholic Chapel and Green Wynd. They had a private water pump there in the mid-19th century. Also the name of a coach-builders in Havelock Street in the 19th century.

grievious (gree-vee-is) adj., arch. grievous – 'His wayes ar alwæies greifious; thy juudgemints ar fer aboone owt o' his sicht' [HSR], 'An' sayin', Lord, my servant lieth at hame sick o' the paralsie, greviouslie tormented' [HSR] (there are spelling variations; note the extra syllable).

grieviously (gree-vee-is-lee) adv., arch. grievously – '. . . and most grieviously provoked him yrby, and by calling of him of ane thieffe, and sundry oyr most insolent and contemptuous language' [BR1684].

Griffith (gri-fith) n. Sir Richard Waldie (1850–1933) officer in charge of the Border Rifles. He was educated at Jesus College, Cambridge and served with the 2nd Dragoon Guards, retiring with the rank of Captain. He succeeded to the baronetcy and family estates near Kelso on the death of his father in 1889. In 1891 he became Colonel of the local volunteer regiment, the Border Rifles. Under his command the Border Rifles became the 4th battalion of the K.O.S.B., with him as Honorary Colonel. He was Chairman of the Roxburghshire Unionist Association, Chairman of the Tweed Commission and a member of the Border Union Agricultural Society. He stood unsuccessfully in the 1906 general election for Roxburghshire. However he served as a member of Roxburghshire County Council and was also a J.P. He was Lord-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire, as well as being a Brigadier in the Royal Company of Archers. A keen sportsman, he was known as a rower at university, later as a curler, yauchtsman and particularly as a breeder of racehorses. He made his fortune through mines in Bohemia and lived for a while in Australia. He married 3 times, but had no children. He wrote the foreword to the book 'With the Border Volunteers to Pretoria'.

Griffiths (gri-fiths) n. Nigel (1955–) politician. Son of a High School English teacher, he was educated there, as well as at Edinburgh University. He became Edinburgh councillor 1980–87 and Labour M.P. for South Edinburgh from 1987, being at one time Opposition Whip and spokesman on Trade and Industry.

grime (grīm) v., arch. to sprinkle, fleck – 'The sun was na up, but the moon was down, It was the gryming of a new fa'n snaw, Jamie Telfer has run ten myles a-foot, Between the Dodhead and the Stobs's Ha' ' [T], n. a flake, particularly of soot (also written 'gryme', 'greim', etc.).

grimin (grī-min, -meen) n., arch. a sprinkling – 'Old people invariably talked of . . . a gryming o' snaw' [HAST1902], 'The sunny blinks, keekin throwe atween the leafs, spurtelt the road wui greimeens o licht' [ECS], 'The mune she shines sae bricht, Till a' the yirth is marlt wi' The grymins o' her licht' [DH] (also written 'grymins').

Grimsby (grimz-bee) n. John (17th C.) recorded in 1687 as a 'tinkler' when he was fined for assaulting 'ane poore indigent beggar upon the fair day' in Hawick. His surname is written 'Grimesby', which is not a common local name.

the Grindin Burn (thu-grīn-din-burn) n. the Grinding Burn, a stream that follows the Minto to Denholm road and joins the Teviot just beyond Denholm. It was also referred to as Minto Burn on a map of 1796, when it was the boundary between Hassendeanbank and Minto estate. In 1780 'Grinden Burn' is listed as part of the southern boundary of the lands of Hawthorn Park and Mailchester Park (the origin of the name is probably Old English 'grene dun', meaning 'the stream running from the green hill', named after the Mintos; it is clearly shown on Pont's 1590s manuscript map, and may be labelled 'Grindoun', this being interpreted as the name given to the hills; Blaeu's 1654 map intriguing shows it linking to the Jordan Burn, hence linking the Ale and Teviot valleys directly!; it is 'Grydone Burn' in c.1537 and 'Grindean Burn' on a map of Minto estate in 1780, while James Murray calls it 'Grindon Burn' in 1863).

Grindin Hills (grīn-din-burn) n. possible former name for the Minto Hills. Pont's manuscript map from the 1590s indicates the word 'Grindoun' with 'hills' written below. This was transferred to Blaeu's 1654 published map as 'Grindoun h.', hence leading to some speculation that the hills gave their name to the Grinding Burn running below them. However, this name for the hills is otherwise unknown, and it seems unlikely that the Mintos ever had this alternative name, with the origin simply being misinterpretation of what was written by Pont.

Grindstane Law (grīnd-stān-law) n. hill near the head of the Kale Water, just on the Scottish side of the Border, reaching a height of 468 m. It was near here in 1598 where one of the last skirmishes occurred between the Scottish and English. Accounts differ as to the numbers involved, with the group of Scotsmen being from 60 to 200 and the English group perhaps being as large as 400. The Scots claimed they were simply out hunting, going into England on 1st August and again the following day, after which they retired to dinner at 'Grindisdame law in Scotland'. They were then chased by the larger English party (led by Woodrington and Fenwick), as far as Plenderleith, with fighting occurring 'neir ane pairt callit Knowpark'. Some Scotsmen were killed, including Andrew Rutherford, brother of the Laird of Hundalee, Robert Pringle, servant to the Laird of Bonjedward and James Robson, servant to the Laird of Greenhead. The Laird of Bonjedward was also injured and several prisoners were taken, including the younger men of Bonjedward, Hunthill and Greenhead, the Lairds of Tower and Billerwell, 2 Burgesses of Jedburgh and others, the total being as many as 12. The English also took about 50 horses. The prisoners were released, but had to appear to answer charges a few days later. The English claimed the Scots were out raiding, or at least cutting and stealing wood (which may well have been true), nevertheless, the English pursuit of the Scots was ferocious (although common for the times).

grip (grip) v., poet. to catch, seize – 'My lord may grip my vassal-lands, For there again main I never be!' Gripfast (grip-fawst) n. name of a character in a book said to have been published in Hawick, namely 'The Chronicles of Gripfast, King of Nibbledom', in 5 chapters. The book occurs in the bibliography of books connected with Hawick, published by James Sinton in 1908. It seems likely that this is some kind of a joke by Sinton.

the Gripknowe (thu-grip-now) n. name for an area either in or bordering on Hawick Common Moor, the precise position being now uncertain. It was mentioned in 1766 in the description of 9 small pieces of land that were let in order to try to prevent encroachment on the Common by neighbouring tenants. John Scott was living there in 1784. Alexander Miller was recorded on a farm there when his son William was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1786.

Grundi see Grundy

Grundistone (grun-dee-stin) n. Groundistone, former farm to the west of the A7 at 'the Heights'. The name probably relates to the 'de Grundi' family, who are recorded in the area in the early 1200s. An undated charter (probably around 1390) in which 'the five merk lands in the town of Grundiston' are granted by William Lindsay of the Byres to his son Andrew. Easter and Wester Groundistone were known as homes of the Scotts in the 16th century. In the 16th century it was part of the Barony of Chamberlain Newton. In 1535 the King revoked a former charter, and so the superiority passed from Patrick, Earl of Bothwell to George, Lord Home. In 1580/1 an agreement was made there regarding a dispute between George Scott of Synton and Walter Scott of Stirches over Synton Mill. Later the lands became part of the Buccleuch estates. The farms of Easter and Wester Groundistone and Drinkstone (along with Drinkstone and perhaps other lands) were valued at £2440 in 1643. William Taylor was tenant there in 1635 and Hector Turnbull in 1683. 'The two Grundistones' were transferred from Hassendean Parish to Wilton in 1690. Adam Glendinning was there in 1698. There was a dispute over the boundaries with Synton and Ashkirk around 1707. George Scott was recorded there in 1724, Robert Scott in 1725–29, George Stewart in 1729, Thomas Kyle in 1737, William Stewart in 1742, John Miller in 1751 and Robert Waugh in 1759. 'Easter and Wester Groundiston and Drinkston' were valued together at £2440 in 1778 and owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. Residents in 1801 included George Scott and George Stewart. There was a marl pit there around 1800. Janet Scott (probably a widow) was head of the household there in 1841, and William Potts was farmer in 1851. The area was used as a meeting place for hunting by the Duke of Buccleuch's hounds in the 19th century. There is a tradition (described by James Wilson) that an ancient stone there bore the inscription 'Remember to pray', but this had not existed in living memory by the mid-1800s, if indeed it was ever more than a fantasy (the name is first recorded in 1380 as 'Grundiestoun'; it is 'Grundiston' about 1390, 'Grandiston' and 'Groundiston' in 1525, 'Grundiston' in 1526/7 and 1551, 'Groundeston' in 1535, 'Grundingstoun' in 1580/1, 'Grundistone' in 1635, 'Grundiston' in 1643, 'Grundestoune' in 1683, 'Grundeston' in 1698, 'Easter and Wester Groundistounes' in 1707, 'Grundistoun' in 1725, 'Groundston' in 1737, 'Growndiston' in 1741, 'Grundiston' in 1744, 'Grundiston' in 1759 and 'Groundestone' in 1841; the origin is possibly 'Grundi's farm' with the Middle English personal name Grundi, and may refer to 'Robert Grundi de Neuton' who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296 and his ancestors).

Grundistone (grun-dee-stin) n. David (15th C.) Burgess of Cupar. He had a charter of the lands of 'Bangall' in Fife in 1458, with his surname written 'Grundistoun'. He is recorded as deceased in 1481 when his son Thomas had a charter for lands in Fife. It is unclear whether his name relates to the farm near Hawick. David (15th/16th C.) listed as a witness to a charter in Edinburgh in 1511. He may have been son of Thomas. Henry (13th/14th C.) English Clerk recorded in 1301. This was for delivering messages and to hasten the workers constructing the tower at Linlithgow. His name is written 'de Graundeston' and it is unclear if he is from the locally-connected family. James (15th C.) tenant of Ferny in the Edinburgh area in 1481. In 1485 he was recorded as tenant of 'Luthry' along with his son John. John (d.bef. 1490) tenant of the lands of 'Luthre' in Fife in 1490. His widow was also recorded, as well as his father James. Margaret (15th C.) recorded in 1470 as wife of Robert de Foret, when he had a charter for the lands of Foret in Fife. She was presumably related to David and Thomas. Thomas of Kingask (15th/16th C.) son of David, as recorded in a charter of 1481 when he was granted lands in Fife. He was Bailie in Cupar and also referred to as 'custumar'. He is recorded in several charters in the period 1495–1513, signed in Edinburgh or Fife, with his name spelled 'Grundestoun', 'Grundistoun' and variants. His wife was Isobel Seton. Probably the same 'Thoma Grundystoun' was witness to the charters made by Lord Lindsay of the Byres to James Scott of Kirkurd in 1484 for the lands of Over and Nether Newhall in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton. The charters were made in Edinburgh, so he may not have had a direct connection with the Hawick area; it may be a coincidence that his surname is the same as the neighbouring lands of Groundistone. Walter of Glaslie (15th/16th C.) witnessed a charter in 1504/5 for Thomas of Kingask, to whom he was presumably related (also written 'Grundiston').

Grundistone Heights (grun-dee-stin-hītz) n. Groundistone Heights, the area of high ground adjacent to the A7 north of Hawick, more commonly known as 'the Heights'. The highest point on the road is 942 ft, and marks the boundary between Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. The view from here, particularly south to the Cheviot Hills is magnificent. A former drove road used to cross the main road near here (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map), passing over Bewlie Moor and Chapel Moor on its way to the Borthwick valley. It has been claimed that a similar route shows evidence of having been a Roman road, with traces between here and Woo Law, connecting Raeburnfoot with Newstead, via Craik Cross and Harelaw; however, this is not firmly established.

Grundy (grun-dee) n. Adam (13th/14th C.) recorded as 'Adam Grondy' on the 1303/4 inquest for the half barony of Wilton. It seems likely that he was related to Robert and held lands near Groundistone. Benedict (12th/13th C.) father of Robert, who witnessed a charter in Hassendean in about the 1220s. His name is given as 'Benedicto Grundi'. He is the earliest known member of the family who gave their name to Groundistone. Robert (13th C.) son of Benedict. He witnessed a charter for Christina of Hassendean in the period 1214–49, probably the late 1220s. His name is given as 'Roberto filius eius' after that of his father Benedict. He was probably father or grandfather of the later Robert. Robert 'de Neuton' (13th C.) mentioned in 1291–96, he may have been the owner of what became 'Grundistone', with 'Neuton' presumably being the neighbouring farm now called 'the Nitton'. He signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296 and on the attached seal, which may bear a rose, his name is 'S'ROBERTI GRVNDY'.

gruntle (grun-tul) n., arch. the snout of a pig or other large mammal – 'And the stinkan brokke, wi' his lange howe loone, Shote up his gruntle to see' [JTe].

the Guaird Hoose (thu-gārd-hoos) n. name used for a house on Old Churchyard (St. Mary's Place) which was occupied by the Town Watch during the time of the body snatchers.

Gubbislie (gu-biz-lee) n. former lands in Liddesdale. 'Gubisley maior' (valued at 22 shillings and 8 pence) and 'Gusbysley minor' (valued at 8 shillings) are listed on a rental roll of c.1376. 'Gopishalch' was also listed (with a value of 4 merks) and possibly related. In a rental roll of 1541 the lands of 'Ouergubbislie' (valued at 16 shillings) were let to Thomas Armstrong of Merianton, along with Cuthbert (probably his brother), and the lands of 'Nethergubbislie' to William and Robert (possibly the same man as Cuthbert) Armstrong, brother of the Laird of Merianton (or Mangerton). From their position in this list it seems like the lands were close to Copshaw.

Gubbisteed (gu-bee-steed) n. possible name for lands in upper Liddesdale, recorded in the c.1376 rental roll as 'Gubacstede' in the area known as Ermildon. It had a value of 10 shillings. It is possible it is related to the lands of Gubbislie recorded later.

the Guitterbluids (thu-gi'-ur-blidz) n. organisation of born Westenders, having a social and charitable function. They held a dinner around the Common Riding, as well as a Burn's Supper, gave out hampers to old folks at Christmas, etc. Members wore a metal badge and had to be born within a stone's throw of the Mote. The organisation was active from 1962 until 1977, and was entirely defunct by 1990; partly its demise was connected with the rise of popularity of the 1514 Club.

The Guitterbluids see The Gutterbludes

gull (guk) n., arch. a spoilt child, often sometimes 'mammie's gull' – 'Hei's an awfih mammie's gull thon! – hingin on be hei's mother's frock-tail' [ECS].

Gullenflat (gu-lin-flaw') n. former place name in Castleton Parish, near Greenholm. It was the 'Gullyflat' that was one of 3 farms given by the last Robert Elliot of Redheugh to his daughter Esther in about the 1640s. Christopher Irving of Binks purchased the farm (along with several others) in 1688, after Robert Elliot of Larriston became bankrupt. 'Gulenflatt & Greeholme' is recorded as a location on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, with Francis Elliot, Arthur Beattie and Archibald Armstrong listed there.

Gum's Boddum (gumz-bo-dum) n. recorded in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale as 'Gummisboddum'. It was a 7-shilling land and vacant at that time. The location is unknown, but perhaps near Gumersteid.

Gundase (gun-dis) n. John (16th C.) listed in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He may have been a factor or similar for the Scotts of Branxholme. It is unclear whether there is a modern equivalent for this surname.

Gunion (gun-yin) n. Rev. Andrew Jeffrey (1822–73) from Calton in Glasgow. He was minister of Allars Church from late 1846. It is possible he was the Jeffrey who married Agnes Hume in Hawick in 1847. He remained until early 1857, when he moved to Strathaven (West), having previously resisted a call to Dalkeith. He later moved to St. Andrews Square, Greenock. In 1862 he married Agnes Ferguson (1825–93) and their children included: Agnes Anderson; and Andrew Jeffrey, who donated a Turkish copper coin to the Museum in 1875. He was said to have been supported by his wife, who acted effectively as his secretary. It is also said that he was happier 'among the literary and political activities of Hawick then he ever was elsewhere'. In 1868 he obtained an LL.D. from Tusculum in Tennessee. He wrote 'The Uses of History' (1849) and 'The Culture of the Imagination' (1853). A photograph of him exists. He had a sister who married Rev. Robert Rutherford, who was from Jedburgh.

gun-mou'd (gun-mood) adj., poet. (probably) shaped like the mouth of a gun – 'To keep them hale frae cramps an' cleeks, They sheath'd their thighs in gun-mou'd breeks' [JR] (this is obscure).

Gunn (gun) n. Rev. Peter Bryce (1905–1979) born at Oxnam Manse, he was son of Rev. Peter Bryce and Jessie Turnbull. He was educated at Rosall Preparatory School and York St. Peter's. He graduated M.A. from Edinburgh University in 1928 and was at New College 1928–31. He was student assistant at Edinburgh Trinity College 1928–31, missionary in Western Canada in 1931, assistant at Edinburgh St. Bernard's in 1932, 'locum tenens' at Hopekirk in 1933 and ordained as minister at Roxburgh in 1934. He moved to Ancrum in 1950. He was minister of Minto Parish, linked with Ancrum from 1968, until he retired in 1976. In 1940 he married Mary Morris (b.1906), daughter of Adam and Isabella Paul Gray and their children were Elizabeth Paul Gray (b.1941) and Peter Bryce (b.1947). He published 'Notes on Excavations at Falla Cairn, Oxnam' (1929) and 'Notes on Oxnam Parish' (1954).

Gunsheugh Scar (gunz-hewch-skawr) n. area of steep banks on the south side of Hartsgarth Burn, to the south-west of the farm of Hartsgarth in Liddesdale.

Gunsmith's Close (gun-smiths-klōs) n. passageway off the Sandbed, leading to the Slitrig. This was often the location for people receiving 'Tully's Mill', where they were thrown into the river and forced to come out on the Mill Port side (or vice versa). The name was in use in the early 19th century, and was presumably called after a neighbouring gunsmith's.

gurge (gurj) v., arch. to block up a waterway with ice – 'The ice is gudgin' up the burn' [GW] (cf. grudge).

gurl (gurl, gu-rul) v., poet. to growl, howl, particularly applied to the wind – 'But suire were the wa's and bieldy Frae the gusts that gae'd gurlin roun' [WL], arch. to gurgle, burble – 'Yeh bit sate on the kei-stane o the brig; yeh deek at the gurlin Yill: an A hoyed strecht for the 'clachan'' [ECS].

gurly (gur-lee) adj., poet. threatening to be stormy, rough, bitter – 'Through the darksome yew with eiry sough, The gurly breeze it did play' [JTe], 'The gurly wind wi' ragin' thuds Was like to rive my claes in tatters' [JT], 'A gurly wund beginnin' its capers Wi' lolly-sticks, beech nuts, caramel-wrappers . . . ' [DH], boisterous.

gurr (gur) v., poet. to growl, snarl – '. . . where the station-maister has verra obviously juist laid doon his howe and put on his official coat and hat when he heard the signal wires gurrin' [DH] (not common in Hawick).

Gusbank (gus-bawngk) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the 1541 rental roll along with the other lands of 'Cleirlandis, Robsteid, Thomscotsteid, Gusbank, Hurklebuss', with tenants William Elliot, David Elliot, Bartholomew Nixon and Ninian Elliot, valued at 5 merks. They were presumably a set of adjacent small steadings, but their location is uncertain.

gust (gust) n., arch. taste, relish – '. . . but he does not remember any of their names, but that riding gave him a gust of the marches' [DCW1765], '. . . The bait they catch wi' greedy gust, The clairts give them a cravin' As great for food as they've gi'en me An appetite for ravin' ' [TCh].

Gusto's (goo-stōz) n. another name for Nardini's cafe on the Howegate, run by Augustino Nardini in the mid-20th century. It was reputed to have the best ice-cream in Hawick. They also sold ice cream from the 'green hut' in the Park – 'Now Gusto's was a place tae gang – but hei's no din oo ony favours, Hei's packed in selling fish and chips – it's now an ice cream parlour' [GM].

gutcher (gu-chur) n., poet. grandfather – 'While other Barons a' their land Gat frae their gutchers free' [JR].

Guthrie (guth-ree) n. Isobel (17th/18th C.) recorded in the Hawick Kirk Treasurer's accounts as renting 'the 2nd cloath for her mother, 12s'. This was pribably in the early 1700s. James (1806–72) from Selkirk, he was plumber, slater and glazier at 61 High Street in the mid-19th century. This led to the adjacent Tannage Close sometimes being called Guthrie's Close. He is listed on the High Street in Pigot's 1837 directory and in Slater's 1852 directory. He is probably the slater John who in 1866 donated to the Museum 'the barley bannock and saut herring carried at Langholm Common-riding' that year. He married Isabella (1803–71), daughter of Jedburgh saddler Lewis Grant and sister of Rev. William Grant of Cavers. Their children were: John (b.1832), builder and architect; James (b.1836), who was a slater in Newcastleton; Lewis Veitch (b.1834); Isabella (b.1837), who died young; Isabella Ann (b.1839); Margaret Jane (b.1841); William Grant (b.1843), naturalist; and Janet (b.1845), also died young. His daughter Margaret is listed as being '2 hours' old on the 1841 census! James (b.1835/6) born in Jedburgh, son of Hawick plumber James. He was a slater, plumber and glazier in Newcastleton. In 1861 he was on North Hermitage Street. His wife was Annie and their children included James and William Armstrong. He may be the 'James Guthrie (junior)' who presented several articles to the Archæological Society in 1857, including 'a flesh fork given to Christian Jackson by Lady Johnstone of Westerhall in 1590'. James 'Jimmie' (d.1940) father of the other Jimmie, he was official bugler for the Teviotdale Cycling Club, and one of the first people in Hawick to have a motor-cycle, in 1909. He established Guthrie Motors by Tannage Close on the High Street, which closed around 1989. James 'Jimmie' (1897–1937) champion motor-cylist from Hawick, born at 5 Rosevale Cottage. He served an engineering apprenticeship with Wilson & Glenny, then joined the K.O.S.B., becoming a motorcycle dispatcher for the Royal Engineering Signals in WWI, serving in Gallipoli, Palestine and France. After the war he entered a partnership with brother Archie in the family motor engineering firm. He started winning Scottish speed events from about 1926, and then began an astonishing run at the Isle of Man T.T. races, where for 10 years he only ever finished first or second. He rode for several companies, but became best known as a rider for Norton, which dominated the European circuits in the early to mid-1930s. He set many world records over 50 km to 100 mile distances. His final record included finishing first 30 times out of 50 placings. He died following a crash at the 1937 German Grand Prix at the Sachsenring near the village of Hohenstein-Ernstthal. His body was given a military escort out of Germany and his funeral in Hawick was attended by thousands. Memorials were erected on the Isle of Man (at 'the Cutting', where he retired in his final race there in 1937) and in Saxony (at the site of his fatal accident). He was buried at the Wellogate, and a bronze statue, by Thomas Clapperton was erected in Wilton Lodge Park in 1939. A memorial bed was installed in his honour at the Cottage Hospital. A plaque was placed in 2011 at Tannage Close, near to his former workplace. A book 'Jimmie Guthrie (1897–1937): Hawick's Racing Legend' by John Rogerson and Gordon Small was published in 1997, and the Museum contains much memorabilia of his life and achievements. A new book 'Jimmy G.' by Paul Guthrie was published in 2019. John (18th/19th C.) from Selkirk, in 1796 he married Margaret Whitrope from Hawick. Their son John was baptised in Selkirk in 1796. John (1832–1903) local businessman and architect. Born in Jedburgh, he came to Hawick when his father founded the slating and plumbing firm James Guthrie & Sons in the 1850s. He took over running this firm with his 2 brothers, but also trained as an architect. He supervised the feuing of Sunnyhill and designed Linden Park, the Buccleuch Memorial, houses for the Working Men's Building & Investment Company, and many villas, including Deanfield, Hazelwood, Kilmeny, Lindesfarne, Langlands, Westwood and Woodnorton (originally Craigmore). He is probably the John listed as 40th member of the Archæological Society in 1856. He was heavily involved with the Archæological Society, being a founding member and later President, and was also involved with the Buccleuch Memorial Institute. In 1858 he presented to the Museum an amulet dug up at the west end of Roberton, in 1860 a 'large basaltic block from the Giant's Causeway', in 1861 part of a quern from Deanburnhaugh and in 1877 a 'stone whorl'. He became Treasurer of the Society in 1865. He was also a painter and art lover, and contributed travel accounts to the local press. He painted a view of the High Street from the East End in 1858, another in 1893, one called 'View of Rachel Anderson's House, High Street' and a view of the Auld Brig painted in 1869. He also painted a portrait of William Norman Kennedy, Alexander Michie and Robert Michie (3 of the founders of the Archæological Society); this was probably done after Kennedy's death in 1865, but contains a blue and yellow (rather than blue and red) Common-Riding flag). Another example is a portrait of Thomas Brown. He designed the decorations and paintings for the centenary Burns night in the Commercial Inn and spoke there on 'Burns the Pioneer'. He is also credited with bringing the 'nosey wundis' to Hawick, after he saw similar devices on a tour of the continent and built one for his house at 61 High Street. He married Elizabeth Purdom Borthwick, who died in 1908, aged 67. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. Lewis Veitch (b.1834) born in Jedburgh, son of plumber James. He was a member of the Archæological Socity from 1857. In 1868 he donated to the Museum a 'pair of antique spectacles, found in an old house at Ormiston, and small cannon-ball found on the site of Cocklaw Castle, Ormiston'. William Grant (b.1843) son of plumber James. He was a local naturalist, who noted species of insects, mosses etc. in the area around Hawick. In 1867 he presented to the Museum a 'large insect case, from the Entomological Society, in which are 200 specimens of the moths and butterflies of the district'. His name was usually written 'W. Grant' (also formerly 'Gutrie' and 'Guthery').

the Guthrie Memorial (thu-guth-ree-me-mō-ree-ul) n. bronze statue in Wilton Lodge Park, erected by public subscription in 1939 to commemorate Jimmie Guthrie. The statue was sculpted by Thomas Clapperton. There is film of the unveiling ceremony. There is also a memorial on an S-bend of the A18 on the Isle of Man, where he retired from his last TT Race, usually called 'Guthrie's Memorial'. A further memorial in Germany. at the site of his fatal crash, is called 'Guthrie's Stone'.

Guthrie's Close (guth-reez-klōs) n. mid-19th century name for a passageway off the High Street, probably referring to Tannage Close, and named after the plumber and slater's business of James Guthrie, which was at the west side (No. 61 High Street). This was later the site of A. & J. Guthrie Motor Engineers, the same family as motorbike champion Jimmy Guthrie.

The Gutterbludes (thu-gi'-er-blidz) n. musical play about local characters written by J.E.D. Murray and Adam Grant, and subtitled 'Hawick Callants Abroad and at Hame'. It was originally performed in the Town Hall on December 30th 1905, and January 1st–3rd 1906. Electric lighting was hired especially for the performances and props were borrowed from the Earl of Minto. The play is described as 'A Drama of Hawick in 1835 in two acts and four scenes', these being: 'Teri Lodge', a shanty (interior) in the Toronto forest; 'The Haugh' at Hawick Common-Riding; 'Round the Ramparts'; and 'The Auld Mid Raw', Cow Jean's lodging house. The play introduced the well-loved 'Meda's Song' and 'Clinty's Song', and also included 'The Buccaneers' (the Old Sailor's Song), 'The Funny Old Fellow' (Maxwell's Song), 'D'ye think I'm an Irishman' (Danny's Song), 'Oor Gutterblude' (Cow Jean's Oration) and 'Westward Ho!' The script is one of only 2 of Jed Murray's plays to survive. It was preserved by his son Melgund, given to Jim Peacock, and then a new production organised by Jean Wintrope in 2000, with incidental music and some new tunes arranged by Ian Seeley. The 2000 and 2005 productions were put on by the Two Rivers Theatre Company, again in the Town Hall (also spelled 'The Guitterbluids' etc.).

guttie (gu'-ee) n. a paunchy person, adj. corpulent, pot-bellied – 'The auldest was a gutty blade, A thriving Grocer to his trade' [RDW] (also written 'gutty').

Guttriehaa (gu-tree-haw) n. near Hawick??.

Guy (gI) n. George (20th C.) bandmaster of the Saxhorn Band. In 1935 he arranged several Hawick songs for the band, including 'The Border Queen' and the polka from 'The Witch o' the Wisp Hill'. Many Hawick songs are included in his 'Memoirs of Hawick' brass arrangement, with the tunes being faithful to the versions published by Adam Grant, with some additional thematic material added.

Guyslands (gIz-lundz) n. former name for Orchard. It occurs as 'Gilisland' (possibly in error) in a list of lands within the Barony of Cavers in 1509/10 (referring to charters from the time of King David) and is 'Gyislandis' in a charter for Douglas of Cavers in 1511. Variants of the name occur until the late 17th century and it was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 (it is possible these lands were related to 'Guy de Denum'; it is transcribed 'Graeslands' in 1687 and wrongly as 'Embslands' in 1698).

g'way (gu-wā) contr., arch. go away – 'G'way ee greet gogglin' gowk, ee'r Mr. Spunk eersel'!' [JEDM], 'Gae-'way! g'way = go away!' [ECS] (see also gae-'way and 'way).

Gy (gI) n. nickname for Henry Turnbull in Cavers in 1503. The word may have meant 'guide'.

gype (gīp) n., arch. an impudent person, fool – '. . . to call in a taunting manner to the other – 'Snuffy Kirke's gipes', and they in turn were urged to retaliate by returning as their cry of defiance – 'Gutty Jardine's gipes' ' [WNK] (also written 'gipe'; Jamieson described the Dumfriesshire word 'gipes' as 'An expression of puerile invective used at school, usually against pupils who come from another town').

around the 14th century and are spread around the world in small groups, maintaining the Romany language and some elements of their traditional culture. Also called 'travelling people', 'tinkers', etc., although sometimes a distinction is made between genuine gypsies and travellers of more recent Irish origin. Local gypsy familes include the Blyths, Douglases and Youngs, and they are recorded as settling in the Yetholm area since the 16th century. The Yetholm royal family was the Faas, with one of the earliest being Johnne Faa, then King Patrick Faa and Queen Jean Gordon being well known in the 17th century, and the last of the family being Queen Esther Faa Blyth who died in 1883. They also traditionally gathered at St. Boswells Fair and other local fairs. There has long been animosity against them, e.g. there was an order in 1573 that all 'vagabound and counterfaitit people calland thame selffis Egiptianis' were to be banished from the Borders. Ashkirk Session ordained in 1643 that 'no person shall reset any Egyptians, and if they insist on staying, then to come and tell the Minister, and he, with the assistance of the gentlemen that he shall choose, shall go and out them out of the Parish'. In the years following the Act of Parliament of 1609 there were several groups (mostly of the name Faa) who were found guilty of being 'Egiptianis' and hanged in Edinburgh. In 1674 William Hall and his family were banished from Hawick for attacking the Bailie and for being 'vagabond Egyptians'. In Jedburgh in 1704 11 men were found guilty of being 'Egyptians' and transported to America, while a woman was scourged through the town and then nailed to a post by her ear for half an hour. In Hawick they have been regular visitors for centuries, often setting up on the Haugh. Some of their words have entered into the Borders vocabulary. There was a large battle between groups from Lochmaben and Yetholm at Hawick Winter Fair in the early 18th century (as recounted by Robert Wilson). It apparently started over possession of a young lady, and was finally broken up by the Burgh officers. 2 of the combatants died of their wounds while several others were put in the stocks or sent to Jedburgh Jail – '... The Gypsies frae Yetholm then topped up the lot Bie chucken some Hindi words intae the pot' [WaE] (the name derives from a romantic notion that they originated in Egypt).

Hab o Hawick (hawb-ō-hIk) n. nickname for Robert Oliver, as dramatised by Capt. Erskine of Dryburgh in 1829 in the play 'James V; or, the Warlike Days of Hab o' Hawick', published in 1830 by John Anderson, Edinburgh. The basic story was first set out in Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick'. Erskine's version is a fanciful one, with Hab being rich and daring. An old chair in the Museum is said to have belonged to Hab and was donated by John Y. Scott in 1858 – 'Tell your master that here sits Hab o' Hawick at his ain fireside and a fig for King James and a' his kin!' [RW], 'Hab, honest man! how oft thy feet Hae paced me o'er frae Silver Street' [AD], 'There's Drumlanrig first av'a Jamie Thamson ('Auld Mid Raw'), Balbirnie, Inglis, Hogg an' a', Hab o' Hawick' [TK].

Hadden (haw-din) n. village to the east of Sprouston and Kelso, in the extreme north-east of Roxburghshire. The Elliots of Wells held the Barony from at least 1729, and it was later part of the possessions of the Eliotts of Stobs, then the Elliots of Wells. Hadden Rigg, the site of a 1542 battle of the Scots and the English is adjacent (also written 'Haddon', the origin of the name is probably the Old English 'haga dun', meaning 'the hill with the fenced enclosure', and hence it has something in common with Hawick; the name is first recorded as 'Hawedun' around 1200).

Hadden (haw-din) n. Bernard (12th/13th C.) nephew of Bernard, who was son of Brian, Lord of Hadden. He made grants to Soutra Hospital and Kelso Abbey in the late 1100s. He is recorded as Sheriff of Roxburgh in about 1203 (as 'Bernardo de Hawedane') and again in 1227/8. In 1223/4 he is recorded being allowed to commute his responsibilities as ward of Roxburgh Castle, and John Maxwell was listed as Sheriff at that time. In 1246 a perambulation of knights from both sides of the Border was arranged for the disputed lands between him and the canons of Carham. He had a son, also Bernard.

Hadden Rig (haw-din-rig) n. site near Kelso of a battle in 1542, where the Scottish forces of the Earl of Huntly routed those of Sir Robert Bowes and the Earl of Angus (also spelled 'Haddon' and 'Rigg').

haddo (haw-dō) n., arch. a haddock (also hadda).

Haddon (ha-din) n. Andrew (d.bef. 1737) deacon of the fleshers in Selkirk. He is probably the Andrew recorded in a 'libel' for fighting in Selkirk in 1718. He was recorded in a dispute in Selkirk in 1723, involving a clothing allowance given to his former servant. He married Janet Turner and their children included James (b.1719). In 1737 his son James was named in a court case involving removal of a door to a common close, with a group of fleshers accused of threatening to break him out of jail afterwards; he was also charged with fighting with fellow flesher John Henderson. Andrew (b.1742) from Selkirk, son of James and Margaret Hall. He is probably the flesher recorded in cases in Selkirk in 1762 and 1763. He came to Hawick in the late 1700s and married Christian, daughter of Bailie Walter Ruecastle. She was apparently due to marry Robert Howison, the banns having even been read. Their marriage was an irregular one in 1772, the couple being rebuked by the Hawick Kirk Session and later by the Selkirk Session. He was also rebuked for having a child with Helen Hunter from Philiphaugh Mill. He lived with Christian Ruecastle in Selkirk, then Edinburgh (where their sons John and Andrew were baptised in 1784 and 1785, respectively) and finally Paisley (where they had an unnamed daughter). Their children who were baptised in Selkirk were: Betty (b.1772); Betty (again, b.1773); James (b.1775); James (again, b.1778); Walter (b.1780), who returned to Hawick and married Agnes, daughter of John Goodfellow and niece of the Bailie; Margaret (b.1782); and Henry (b.1783). His grandfather may be the Andrew who was Deacon of the Selkirk fleshers in the early 1700s. Andrew (1818–94) son of Walter and Agnes Goodfellow. He was a manufacturer and farmer of the 19th century. He trained in the office of Town Clerk James Wilson. In 1841 he was recorded on the Back Row. He started with a stocking shop up the Loan, but moved his family to Honeyburn in 1848, where he was a farmer (and where several generations of the family subsequently stayed). He was there in 1851 with his mother, wife, 5 children and 4 servants. In 1861 he was farmer of 205 acres there, and employed 9 labourers. He became a Councillor and Bailie in Hawick (being on the 'Eternal Cooncil') and served on the first Roxburghshire County Council, where he was known for only speaking English when forced to! He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1857. In 1859 he joined the Jedburgh Company of Volunteers and commanded the Denholm section. In 1840 he married Anne, daughter of John White the manufacturer, the marriage recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. Their children, baptised in Hawick and then Cavers Parishes, included: Walter (b.1841); Isabella Oliver (b.1842); John (b.1845); Agnes Goodfellow (b.1849); Ann (or Annie, b.1850), who married Rev. Robert Borland; Margaret (1852–1935), who married obstetrician and gynæcologist Sir William Japp Sinclair; Janet (b.1857); Emma and Mina (b.1861); and Andrew (b.1863), who was Cornet in 1891. He may be the 'John Hadden' listed in 1852 as a farmer in Denholm. Andrew, O.B.E. (1863–1936) of Deansyde, son of Andrew, brother of Walter and John. He was a solicitor in Hawick and farmer at Honeyburn. He trained in Edinburgh and started in Hawick with the firm of Haddon & Turnbull. He was Cornet in 1891. He became Lieutenant in the Selkirk Detachment of the Border Volunteers in 1884, became Captain in 1889 and Captain-commandant in 1895. He went to the Boer War with the Border Rifles (volunteers), many of the men being from Denholm; he published some of his war diaries anonymously as 'A Hawick Man'. Apparently he and his men got to Pretoria before General Roberts and although greeted warmly, were told to make themselves scarce so that the General could enter as the conquering hero! On his return he set up as a solicitor at 7 Tower Knowe. He became Lieut.-Col. in the Volunteers, received an O.B.E. and served on the Hawick Military Tribunal during WWI. Along with his son Andrew he was heavily involved with setting up the Milk Marketing Board. In 1903 he married Margery Laing Brown (1864–1954) and their children were: Andrew (1904–93); and Marjorie Laing (1905–95), who married her 2nd cousin Donald McLeod Laing (1896–1983) in Malaya. He is buried at Denholm. Andrew Douglas 'Douglas' (1886–1952) son of Walter and brother of Ross, he was a partner in the family law firm. He became Cornet in 1910, and was heavily involved with the Callants' Club, being President in 1928, and Treasurer and Secretary for about 40 years. He married Jane Martin and their children included Walter Andrew, Jean Douglas and Agnes. Andrew, O.B.E. (1904–93) son of Andrew and May Laing Brown. He was farmer at Honeyburn and also a solicitor. He moved his firm, Andrew Haddon to 3 Oliver Place and went into partnership with David Crowe as Andrew Haddon & Crowe, solicitors. He was Burgh Prosecutor for Hawick prior to Reorganisation in 1974, was a member of the first Borders Regional Council, was involved with local Liberal election campaigns and was awarded the O.B.E. for political and public service. He was also involved (with his father Andrew) in Teviotdale Dairy and the Milk Marketing Board and was an elder in Denholm Kirk. He married Dorothy Blanche Hall in 1939. Colin (18th/19th C.) married Janet Blaikie in Wilton in 1803. Dr. David Alexander Ross 'Ross' (1890–1978) son of Walter and brother of Douglas, he was a long time doctor in Hawick at 19 Buccleuch Street. He was born in Hawick and educated at Fettes and Edinburgh University, graduating in 1913 and gaining his M.D. in 1919. In WWI he went to France with the 9th Royal Scots, being wounded and becoming Regimental Medical Officer. He later served with the 19th Field Ambulance and 14th General Hospital and was awarded the Military Cross. Back in Hawick, he went into partnership with Dr. Barrie and continued in that practice for 46 years. He travelled far and wide to visit his patients, in the early days by motorbike. He was involved with ex-servicemen's associations and the Red Cross and served as police surgeon and doctor to local factories. He was a member of the Borders Hospital Board for 19 years and took a keen interest in the Hawick Cottage Hospital. He had a son and 3 daughters. James (1719–45) son of Andrew, he was a flesher in Selkirk. He and his mother Janet Turner were involved in a dispute in Selkirk in 1737, the fleshers were accused of trying to break him out of jail and he was also accused of fighting with others near the churchyard. He married Margaret Hall and their children included: Helen (b.1741); Andrew (b.1742), who married Christian Ruecastle from Hawick; and Janet (b.1745). His widow later married John Dunn and ran the County Hotel in Selkirk. Janet (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1706 she was one of the people (presumably living near St. Mary's) who were disturbed at night by a group who were involved in drunken revelry. They delivered to her house a cripple that they had picked up from another house (for reasons that are not given). John (19th C.) farmer in Cavers or Minto Parishes. He is recorded in a directory of 1852, with his surname given as 'Hadden'. Dr. John (1845–1920s) doctor from Denholm, son of Andrew and brother of Walter and Andrew. He was born in the West End and educated at Minto school and Edinburgh University, where he was not allowed to graduate as an M.A. because he was too young, so he went on to win most of the prizes in medicine. He practised for many years as a dietician in Manchester. He also travelled the world, some of his journals being published in the Hawick News. He lived for a while in Canonbie (the house now being a hotel). He became known as an eccentric, with peculiar views on diet, such as suggesting that patients cut out their favourite foods and go on 24 hour fasts; he even suggested that a man could live on 2 gooseberries a day (but this may have been a joke)! He had the Text House built for him on Main Street in Denholm. He also bought up some properties and left them to be let rent-free to elderly residents of the village. He was one of the people present at the excavation of the cairn at Belvedere on the Cavers estate in 1895. Later in life he travelled extensively. He wrote 'A Trip to Rangoon' (1901), 'Impressions and Lessons from Burma' (1901), 'The Father's Will and How to Know it' (1901), 'A Trip to Central America' (1903), 'Mr. Chamberlain's Proposals' (1903), 'A Trip to South Wales' (1905), 'Diary of a Tour in the West Indies in 1901' and 'A Tour in England'. Marjorie (1905–95) daughter of Andrew and sister of Andrew. Her name is spelled both 'Marjorie' and 'Marjory' and she is named after her mother, who was 'Margery'. She won the Medway Challenge Cup (Cornet's Race) riding 'Rufus' on Common-Riding Saturday 1927, being possibly the first lady rider seen on Hawick racecourse. She was Cornet's Lass in 1926 and did the Mosspaul Rideout that year. She married Donald McLeod Laing (1896–1983) of Balcay in Malaya. Walter (1780–1826) son of Andrew from Selkirk and father of Andrew. He was one of the early manufacturers in Hawick, his stocking-shop being where the Baptist Church was later located. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. He was also a skilled cabinet-maker and was apparently killed while felling a tree. He married Agnes (1784–1872), daughter of wright John Goodfellow and niece of Bailie Goodfellow. It is said that her family did not approve of him and she was sent to Manchester for a couple of years, but married him on her return. They had one son, Andrew (b.1818), who carried on with a stocking-shop on the Fore Raw, but became tenant of Honeyburn in 1848. His wife Agnes gave up the stocking-shop in 1855, when the property became the West Port Mission; she also kept house for their grandson Walter. He was killed by a falling tree. Walter (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit dealer on the Fore Row, recorded on Pigot's 1825/6 directory. His house is marked on Wood's 1824 map, near the top left side of Drumlanrig Square. Walter (1841–1907) solicitor and banker. Born in the West-End, his father was Andrew of Honeyburn and his brothers were John and Andrew. He attended Minto School along with J.A.H. Murray. He apprenticed with Thomas Purdom, received further legal training in Edinburgh and returned to Hawick in 1864. He worked for the partnership Kirk & Haddon, with the partnership of Haddon & Turnbull (with Thomas Turnbull) starting in 1880, with him as senior partner. In his early days, his grandmother Agnes (nee Goodfellow) kept house for him. He acted as Police Treasurer and Collector for the Burgh from 1864 until his death. He was also agent for the Royal Bank of Scotland and associated with Kirkton and Lilliesleaf School Boards. He was Secretary of Hawick Working Men's Building & Investment Co. from 1878. In addition he acted as clerk or secretary for a large number of other local concerns, including the Exchange Buildings and the Upper Teviotdale Fisheries Association, and also as factor of Cavers estate. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1880. He was assessor for Hawick for a number of years, and Sheriff-Clerk Depute until about 1895. He was a member of the Hawick District Committee of Roxburgh County Council, and of Cavers Parish Council, a Director of Teviotdale Dairy Company and a member of the Border Mounted Rifles. He was an enthusiastic Common Riding supporter and Acting Father for J.E.D. Murray in 1890. In politics he was a Liberal Unionist. He married a daughter of Provost Ross of Dingwall and their children included: Andrew Douglas (b.1886); Walter (b.1887); David Alexander (b.1890); and Rudolph Bernard (b.1902). He built the house at Colislinn and also acquired the estate of Firth near Lilliesleaf. His son Douglas continued the family legal tradition, while Ross was a long-time doctor in Hawick. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included: John (b.1712); Marion (b.1713); Margaret (b.1716); and Andrew (b.1717) (formerly written 'Hadden', 'Haddin', 'Hadon' and 'Haldon').

Hadrian's Waa (hā-dree-inz-waw) n. Hadrian's Wall, ordered to be built by Roman Emperor Hadrian in the year 122, taking 6 years to complete. It snakes its way across England from the Tyne to the Solway, with many forts, temples and now museums along the way. It is 73 miles long and was up to 5 metres high, although only a few good sections remain. Colloquially it is used as a way of referring to the Border, although in fact is far south of the modern boundary. Nevertheless, its existence probably had a lasting influence on Border history.

hae (hā, he) v., arch. have – 'Oft hae I kiss'd, oft hae I caress'd her' [JoHa], 'Hae dune, ye say. [WP], 'The Thieves Road, and a route owre the hags o' The Roan Scartit in wi' a pencil' [DH] (also spelled 'hag'; cf. haggie and brae-hag).

Haggie (haw-gee) n. William (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as 'Willelmus Hagy notarius publicus' when he wrote a 'letter of slains' in Hawick. This was for Robert and James Scott, forgiving a group of other Scotts from Allanhaugh and Over Southfield in the murder of their brother George. He was probably a cleric of Glasgow, and may have been a minister at one of the local churches. Also in 1581 he was notary for the will of William Douglas in Crook. It is possible that his surname was 'Haig', 'Hay' or 'Heggie'. He may be the same as William Hay, who was notary and Schoolmaster in Southdean in the early 1600s.

Haggiehaugh (haw-gee-hawch) n. former farmstead in the Liddel valley, just north of the present Larriston farm. It was known in earlier times as Larriston Rig. Charles Edward Stewart's army marched this way in 1745 (probably 7th November), and he spent the night there. John Oliver paid tax on 38 windows there in 1748 (suggesting that at that time the name was used for the main farmhouse of Larriston). The lands were purchased in 1790 by Maj.-Gen. William Elliot from William Oliver of Dinlabyre for £1,900 sterling, and joined to those of Larriston. Elliot had 6 horses there according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Alexander Walker and William Miller were servants there in 1797. James Rutherford and Gifford Thomson were living there in 1801. The 1811 Land Tax Rolls lists 'Laristonrig, now called Haggiehaugh' among the properties of George Scott-Elliot of Larriston (marked on Stobie's 1770 map as 'Haggihaugh'; it is 'Haggishaugh' and 'Haggyhaugh' in 1797 and 1821; not to be confused with Haggishaa).

haggis (haw-gees, -gis) n. a traditional Scottish winter dish. Hawick butcher Lindsay Grieve was the 1992 Scottish Champion haggis maker – 'A good fat haggies, if purse can spare it; If not, he's forced to be content, And to observe an annual lent' [JR], 'An' that's as true as I'm a Scot, A redshank, Norland haggis eater' [JoHa], 'Last thochts o' a haggis (glow'rin a' roond, while bein' 'addressed' at a Burns Supper)' [DH] (also written 'haggies').

Haggishaa (haw-gees-haw) n. area around the foot of the Vertish Hill, also known as Burnflat, being the edge of the Common. The Common-Riding cavalcade used to ride this way, up until 1803, when the Cornet was thrown from his horse and injured, recovering in a house there. Until 1991 there was a row of dilapidated cottages here, one being the birthplace of 'Old Mortality'. They were demolished following a fire. The same area was fancifully said to be home of a Michael Paiterson, who entertained the local priests to dinner twice a year, on one occasion the haggis being so large that its skewer pin was used to mend the Corn Mill, inspiring Robert Burns lines 'Your pin wad help ti mend a mill In time o' need' (R.E. Scott wrote about this in the Burns Chronicle of 1964). Walter Scott of Haggishaugh was recorded as owner of part of Burnflat in about 1874 – 'At the Haggisha' we rank up, Weaver Will's auld bonnet clank up' [AB] (there are several spellings, including 'Hangmanshaa'; it appears to be 'Hagushall' on Stobie's 1770 map; the name probably derives from Old English or Old Scots for 'a copse by the waterside', although more fanciful origins, sometimes involving haggis, have also been suggested; note that 'Haggiehaugh' was an old name for Larriston in Liddesdale).

Haggishaa Brae (haw-gees-haw-brā) n. name formerly given to Burnflat Brae. In former times it was when the Procession reached here that the Riding of the Marches really began – 'The proceedings, excited much interest, indeed the Cornet's chase down the Haggisha' brae was a dull affair in comparison' [WNK].

Haggis Haa see Haggishaa

haick (hīk, hāk) n. a garment worn in Morocco, consisting of a large a piece of cotton, wool or silk cloth (a variant of 'haik', not to be confused with a town in the Borders).

Haick (hIk) n. another former spelling for Hawick (recorded as such in a Church of Scotland register of 1586, on Pont's manuscript of the 1590s, Robert Gordon's map of the Clyde and Tweed basins, c.1636–52, Blaeu's map of 1654 and Nicolaes Visscher's map of 1689; following Pont it is often written 'Haïck').

haif see hafe

haiflin (hāf-lin) n., poet. a halfling, stripling, young lad – 'When lowsed at een be it hairst or plooin', The thoucht o' the haiflin turns to wooin' ' [WL] (also hauflin).

Haig (hāg) n. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Belses. His wife was Isobel, heir of James Riddell, portioner of Lilliesleaf. Adam (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Jamieson and their children included William (b.1756), Adam (b.1758) and Mary (b.1761). Andrew (17th C.) listed as 'cottar' at Abbotrule Townhead in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Anthony (17th/18th C.) resident of Maxton Parish. In 1706 he was recorded as 'sevitour to Mr Edgar minister of Maxton' when he had a 'bastard' child baptised in Hawick. He married Margaret Hart earlier in 1706 in Maxton. Their only recorded child is Jean (b.1706), baptised in Hawick, with witnesses Bailie Patrick Richardson and merchant William Oliver. Anthony (1736–1801) weaver from Hawick, son of David. He could be the stocking-maker Anthony whose son Thomas died in 1819. He is probably the resident of Hawick who married Margaret Gibson in 1759 and had children including: Janet (b.1761); David (b.1763); William (b.1765); Margaret (b.1766); Jane (b.1767); Isabel (b.1770); David (again, b.1772); Janet (again, b.1774); and Margaret (b.1776). All these children were baptised in Hawick, but the 1770 one was also recorded in Wilton, with witnesses William Simpson and Gavin Wallace. The 1772 witnesses were David Haig (his father) and John Brown (perhaps an uncle) and the 1774 witnesses were the whole congregation. Anthony (b.1812/3) provision merchant on the High Street, at about No. 17 in 1851. He was listed in Slater's 1852 directory. He was on the first interim committee of the Archæological Society and was its 10th listed member. He presented at least 3 papers to the Archæological Society in its first few years, on topics like 'Mediæval History' and the Magna Carta. He presented a newspaper from 1772 to the Museum in 1857, as well as 'a French cannon ball, fired into the Medea steamer in 1839' and a specimen of coral. He is probably the 'Mr Haig' who donated to the Museum a Roamn coin that he had found on Ruberslaw. He was also probably the 'Mr A. Haig' who had moved to America by 1858, when he donated shells and minerals to the Museum. In 1862 he donated a Confederate five-dollar bill, in 1863 a facsimile of the charter of William Penn and in 1867 Canadian coins. He was in Germantown, U.S., when he donated to the Museum 'tongue of shell from the battle field of Chancellorsville' in 1865, a geological specimen and 'specimen of the bark of the papyrus' in 1867, 'three heads of Indian corn' in 1868, geological specimens in 1869, a 'musk rat' in 1870 and a 'short sword found at Bull's Run' in 1871. His wife was Isabella and their children included Thomas, George, Anthony, Margaret, John, Charles and William. He moved to Philadelphia and in 1863 made a donation to the Museum, when he is described as 'an old member of the Society'. Anthony (b.1823/4) weaver in Hawick. He was living at 52 Loan in 1861. His wife was Euphemia and they had a son John. Charles (b.1815/6) frameworker in Hawick. He was on the Loan in 1841 and at No. 17 Loan in 1851 and 1861. In 1867 he donated to the Museum a 'detailed account of the expense of erecting seats and plastering the 'Weavers' Loft' in Hawick old church in 1767' and in 1875 donated 'a church ladle, used in the West U.P. Church'. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Thomas, Isabell, Christina and James. David (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Margaret Brown and their children included: Anthony (b.1736); Isobel (b.1738); Margaret (b.1741); and James (b.1744). The witnesses in 1741 were wright James Roger and baker John Kedie. He is probably the David who (along with John Brown) witnessed a baptism in 1772 for Anthony (probably his son). Earl Douglas (1861–1928) soldier, born in Edinburgh. He worked his way through the ranks, seving in the Sudan, in the Boer War and in India. He was the youngest Major-General of his time and became Director of Military Training at the War Office in 1906. He established a general staff and a territorial army and organised the British Expeditionary Force. In WWI he commanded forces in France and Belgium, becoming Commander-in-Chief of the B.E.F. in December 1915. Although successful, his tactics at Somme and Passchendaele have been much debated. After his retirement in 1921 he devoted his efforts to the Royal British Legion. He was made Earl Haig in 1919 and given £100,000 by a 'grateful nation'. He became Baron Haig in 1921. In Hawick he was made an Honorary Burgess in 1925 when he attended the Callants' Club dinner. The Haig Maternity Hospital was named after him in 1930 and Douglas Haig Court in 1976. Bemersyde House near St. Boswells, was bought for him by the Government in 1921, and he was also given £100,000 by a 'grateful public'. James (17th C.) recorded as 'cottar' at Hartshaugh according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit dealer on the High Street, recorded on Pigot's 1825/6 directory. His name is listed as 'Haigh'. James (19th/20th C.) local sportsman who played scrum-half for the Greens, hockey at international level, was Scottish 10-mile championship runner, bowling cup-winner, etc. Additionally he led the cycling team that challenged and beat the rest of Scotland in 1901, after being annoyed that no Borderers were selected to represent the nation against England. He was Scottish 10 mile champion 3 years in a row. In 1904 he was a member of the 4-man Scottish cycling team at the British Empire Championships. He worked as a painter and decorator. He was bugler for the Boy Scouts, seen in photographs of the 1910 visit by Beden-Powell. He may be the James born in Hawick in 1879. James (20th C.) Hawick man who executed the 1939–45 Roll of Honour for local soldiers who fell in WWII, displayed in the Museum. The design was the same as for the WWI Roll. He may be the same man as the painter and decorator. John (18th C.) recorded in a Hawick sasine of 1764 as 'John Haig, in Whitfield, bailie in that part'. He may have been acting as a bailiff for the deed, or was a Hawick Bailie. Patrick (15th C.) listed on a 'retour of inquest' held in Hawick in 1424 to decide on the inheritance of part of the Barony of Hownam. His name is recorded as 'Hage', and most of the other men were local lairds. Thomas (b.1786/7) frameworker in Hawick. In 1841, 1851 and 1861 he was living at 5 Fore Row. He married Christian Scott and their children included Anthony (b.1811), Charles (b.1814), Margaret (b.1816), John (b.1818), Christian (b.1820), Mary (b.1823), Thomas (b.1826), Walter (b.1828) and Jane (or 'Jean', b.1832). Thomas (b.1826) son of Thomas, he was a stockingmaker in Hawick. He married Elizabeth Beattie in Hawick in 1852 and their children were Christina, Jean and Thomas. In 1861 he was a widower living with his father, sister and children. In 1871 he donated a silver coin to the Museum. He is probably the Thomas from Howdenburn who in 1876 donated a 'curiously stratisfied stone, found in Ale Water'. Walter (19th C.) married Henrietta Marchbank in Hawick in 1851. William (16th C.) apparent name of the notary in 1582 for a sasine in Hawick, involving James Jack, preserved in the Walter Mason Collection. His surname is recorded as 'Hagye' (formerly 'Hague', 'Haige' and variants).

the Haig (thu-hāg) n. Haig Maternity Home, attached to the Springbank Clinic on Princes Street, and built in 1930, through the generosity of Norman W. Grieve. It was locally sometimes known as simple 'the Home'. It was developed by the Town Council and handed over to the County. It was occupied by the Jubilee Nursing Association, Maternity Service, and Child Welfare Schemes. The labour and public wards were on the ground floor, with the nursery on the first floor. It was officially renamed the Haig Maternity Hospital when taken over by the N.H.S. in 1948 (with many subsequently pointing out the irony of naming a maternity hospital after someone associated with the deaths of so many soldiers). It delivered about 12,000 babies in Hawick from 1931 until 1988 when the B.G.H. was opened. The last baby born there was Claire White. The buildings were sold off for private housing in the mid-1990s. A history of the Haig was written by Dr. Suttie in 1999.

haigle (hā-gul) v., arch. to carry, haul, trudge, struggle forward – 'Everly, whan A haiggle on alang streets chowky wui cluds o shairny stoor . . . ' [ECS], 'Now ee must hev luitten't faa, nih! haigglin thae poaks an that nibbie an umbrellih an thing' [ECS].

Haig Maternity Home (hāg-mu-tern-i'-ee-hōm) n. original official name for the Haig, where most Teries were born from the 1930s to the 1980s.

the Haigs (thu-hāgz) n. family that appeared in the Borders in the 12th century, being based at Bemersyde, near St. Boswells, from 1412. Claims of origins of the family going back to Pictish Kings are fantasy and their origins are Norman, like other Scottish feudal landowners. The local family died out in 1857, but Bemersyde estate was gifted to Field-Marshal Earl Haig by the nation, and is still held by his family (derived from the old English 'haga', which is probably the same root as in 'Hawick').

' [TK], 'If we hain not our glorious heritage, if its memory pass away . . . ' [JYH], 'What were your arles, Tam: What did ye hain Efter a life's work For a maister's gain?' [DH], 'I made my hert a hedger's glove Tae hain integrity, Nor tae the sma' derk thorns o' love A moment's thocht did gie' [DH], 'But aye in hert o' ilka chiel Is hained the neuk maist dear' [WL], to enclose a field to preserve it for pasture or hay – '. . . for, by Falnash's order, . . . he directed them to keep off folk's corn and hained meadow' [DCW1765], to use economically, take sparingly – 'Hain the scones' [GW], 'Hain eer shuin, bairns; leather's dear' [GW], to spare oneself trouble – 'Ee may hain eersel' the trouble' [GW] (from Old Norse; see also hainit).

hainch (hānch) n., arch. the haunch – 'Jist as the terror reached my hainch, I jumpit high an' grabb'd a brainch' [WP], a jerking throw of a stone, a limp in one's walk, a leg-up (to a horse), a help-up with a heavy object, v. to throw a stone by swinging down the hand as far as the thigh, to walk with a limp (also hench).

the Hainin (thu-hān-in) n. the Haining, a house dating from 1794, in a walled estate on the left on the way into Selkirk from Hawick. Some of the decoration is by Archibald Elliot and the statuary by Canova. It served as a military headquarters during WWII, and partly burned down in 1944. The lakeside setting is impressive, and the grounds contain the site of Selkirk Castle on Peel Hill, as well as the stable block, former bear and wolf enclosures and the remains of a lectern-shaped dovecote. The estate was once granted to the Constable of Selkirk Castle. It was part of the Crown lands in Ettrick Forest from about 1456 until about 1507. It later became the home of a branch of the Scotts, said by Scott of Satchells to be descended from the Scotts of Hassendean. They held the lands from at least 1477. Robert Scott of the Haining witnessed several local charters in the late 15th century. It appears to have been held by the Murrays of Philiphaugh (recorded in 1491), before passing back to the Scotts in 1492. Sheep were stolen from Robert Scott there in 1494/5. John Murray gave permission in about 1499 for John Scott (and his son John) to hold the lease. John Scott had a charter for the lands in 1507, when it was described as a land of 7 pounds and 2 shillings of old extent. Thomas Scott of Haining held a sasine for the lands in 1538. Walter Scott was tenant there in 1541, paying £24 yearly. Andrew Riddell bought it from the Scotts in about 1625. Haining Loch is listed in 1649 among the lochs in Selkirkshire. John Langlands, minister of Wilton, had a sasine of lands there in 1664. In 1678 the lands were valued at almost £2000. Early in the 18th century the estate was bought by the Pringles of Clifton. In 1785 the lands were valued at about £1440. In 1842 it passed to John Pringle's sister, Margaret Violet, and her husband Archibald Pringle Douglas of Adderstone and Midshiels. The grounds once held exotic animals, including a bear and a large monkey; the monkey shivered in cold weather, leading to the local phrase 'Chitterin' to death, like the Hainin' Puggy' – 'Ca' up young Hob, of Gilminscleugh, Oakwood, and the Bowhill, Brave Hartwood, and Middlestead, and Hainen's valiant Will' [WSB] (it is 'Hanyng' in 1456, 'Haynig' in 1464/5, 'Hanyng' in 1484/5, 1488 and 1510, 'le Hanyng' in 1489, 'Hanyn' in 1494, 'hanyng' in 1494/5, 'Hanyne' in 1504, 'Hanyng' in 1507, 'the Hanyng' in 1526, 'Haning'in 1531/2, 'Hanyng' in 1542 and 1564, 'Haning' in 1564, 'Hayning' in 1567, 'Hanyng' in 1576/7, 'Haning' in 1585 and 1599, 'Hayneing' in 1646 and 'hayneing' in 1678; it is 'Haning' and 'Haining' on Gordon's c.1650 maps and Blaeu's 1654 map; the name may derive from being the 'hanit' or enclosed part of the ancient forest).

Haining (hān-in) n. Cuthert W. (b.1845/6) younger brother of printer and publisher James. He was recorded living with his bother in Hawick on the 1861 census. He became a draper in Liverpool. In 1873 he donated 17 copper coins to the Museum. James M. (1826–82) born in Troqueer, son of William and Mary McKay, Kirkcudbrightshire, he was a publisher in Hawick. He was was the 8th listed member of the Archæological Society. He was proprietor of the Hawick Advertiser, taking over from James Dalgleish about 6 months after the newspaper started. He took Dalgleish back as a partner when he returned to Hawick in 1857, but bought him out in 1870 after disagreement about taking his son William Dalgleish into partnership. He then sold the paper to William Morrison in 1876. His premises were at 9 High Street. In 1861 he was living with his younger brother Cuthbert and 2 servants at 9 High street and listed as 'Letterpress Printer Bookbinder' emplying 9 people. He married Agnes Robinson in Wilton in 1863, and their children included: Elizabeth Robinson (1866–70); and James Halilday (1870–1946). A portrait of him exists. James Halliday (1870–1946) son of James and Agnes Robson. He was long involved with the Archæological Society, he was Treasurer 1907–11, Assistant Secretary 1917–18, Joint Secretary 1920–25 and 1929, Secretary 1930–35 and Vice-President 1936. He wrote many articles for the Transactions. His series of monumental inscriptions in Hawick's cemeteries, with extensive notes, are an extraordinary achievement, leaving a huge legacy of local family history. He married Isabella Christina, daughter of coal merchant Thomas Rutherford.

hainit (hā-nee', -ni') pp., arch. preserved, set aside, protected by an enclosure, refrained – '...either in his nichbour's corn, meadow, or haynit gers, sal pay for ilk hors or meir 40 shillings ...' [BR1640], 'Item, that na persone nor personnis scheir medowis, balkis, or haynit gers thifteouslie ...' [BR1640] '...lo, I haena hainet my lips, O Lord, thou kennist' [HSR] (also written 'haynit').

Hair (hār) n. name of a priest or 'book-a-bosom' who was said to have travelled regularly to Ewesdale to perform baptisms and weddings, perhaps just before the Reformation – 'There is a man yet alive who knew old men who had been baptised by these Bookabosomes and who saith one of them called Hair, used this parish for a very long time' [GC1748].

haith (hāth) interj., arch., poet. mild exclamation, expressing surprise – '... To wait as valet, groom, or page, In strict attendance; For haith, lad, this is no the age O' independence' [WiD], 'Gang coole i' the same creesh ye hette, Or haith, ye'se rue youre raide' [JTe], 'An' gin ye're wantin' mair substantial proof, Come nearer haun' an' haith, I trow, ye'll get it' [JoHa], 'An', nicherin', roars 'Haith! but I hae it now' ' [JoHa], 'Ee'll no sup thae guid porreetch? My haith! ee're owre saucy' [ECS] (probably an altered form of 'faith').

Haitlie see Heatley

Haits Hill (hāts-hil) n. hill to the south of Cogsmill, reaching a height of 279 m. A field there is known as 'the Haits' or 'Hates'.

halberd (hal-burd, ber') n. a pike fitted with an axe-head, a weapon consisting of an axe-head and steel spike, or other arrangement of several sharp edges, mounted on a long pole, used in the 15th and 16th centuries. Those carried by the Burgh Officers at the Common Riding are traditionally said to be exact copies of those taken from the English at Hornshole; James Wilson in 'Annals of Hawick' states that there were people then living (around 1850) who claimed to have seen the original halberds. In 1908 the artist Tom Scott donated an old halberd head that he said belonged to Hawick – 'Paid Robert Tinlin for mending his halbard, ... 0 0 6' [BR1771], '... Hauberk and Halberd in gallant array' [JT], 'Stout tower and halberd and sword thwart the thieving invader ... ' [IWS] (from Old French; also spelled 'halbard'; cf. halbert).

halberdier (hal-bur-deer) n. a soldier armed with a halberd, a guard carrying a halberd as a sign of his duty – 'See how the Saxon plumes bob in the sky – Yeoman and carbineer, Billman and halberdier, Fierce is the foray, and far is the cry' [ES], 'The halberdiers wi' buttons clear, Like sunbeams brightly glancin' ' [JT].

the Halberdier (thu-hal-burd-eer) n. one of two official at the Common Riding who carry halberds. One of them delivers the Council's invitation to the Cornet-elect, receiving a new shilling in return. They also perform other official duties during the Common Riding, such as reading the Proclamations and leading various processions, such as the Drums and Fifes on the Thursday night. It is unclear when halberdiers began to lead these processions, but there are records in the early 19th century, and by the end of the century the present traditions were well established. In the early 1800s they would stop outside the houses of the minister, the Bailies, the Cornet and the inns where the supporters were gathered, grounding their halberds in the middle of the street and be greeted by a tray of drinks. They were originally Burgh Officers, appointed by the Council along with the town drummer and piper (or fifer), and would lead the parades in front of the musicians. Earlier records suggest that they received payment for decorating their coats at Common-Riding time. In 1712 cloth was ordered to make 4 coats 'for the tuo officers, pyper, and drummer'. And more cloth was bought in May of 1732. The present uniform is a long brown coat and trousers, with yellow trim (and 16 buttons, bearing the letters 'H.H.') and a top hat. Previously it is recorded as consisting of grey coats with mulberry-coloured collar and cuffs, long shoulder-knots of coloured ribbon, knee-breeks and Sunday hat. In 1875 it is recorded that one of the Halberdiers appeared in the 'much disputed new suit'. Through most of the 20th century he was a Council employee with the official title of 'Burgh Officer', and the other Halberdier was the 'Assistant'. He would usually read the Procalamation and deliver the letter to the Cornet Elect. This changed with Reorganisation in 1974/5, with the title changed to 'District Officer'. And with the Scottish Borders Council taking over in 1996 the job has ceased to be part of the official duties of a Council employee, with the 2 Halberdiers receiving token payment from the Common-Riding Committee. Both Halberdiers attended the official ceremony in Langholm in 1972 when Neil Armstrong received the freedom of that town. A new uniform was gifted by Lovet Mill in 2006. A bench commemorating present and past halberdiers was unveiled at the Town Hall in 2019 (see also Burgh Officer).

Halberdiers (hal-burd-eer) n. the men who have carried the halberds during the Common Riding generally perform the duty for many years, and in former times also served as town criers and policemen. Tracking them over the centuries is complicated by their changing roles, being sometimes 'Burgh Officer', 'bellman' or just 'officer'. A partial list includes: 'Jok Scott, belman in Hawik' in 1610; Walter Stewart and James Kinnaird in 1638; Wull 'the Bellman' Scott, late 1600s; John Stewart, at least 1686 until about 1696; Alexander Scott from 1696; Alexander Young, at least 1696–1707; James Oliver, recorded in 1718; James Cowan, recorded in 1723; John Stewart, recorded from at least 1723 to around 1743; Francis Turnbull, from 1734 until at least 1767; 'Wull Leppie', early 1800s; Rob 'the Naig' Tinlin, until about 1815; Sandy Bryson, at least 1794–1824; Caleb Rutherford, 1820s; John 'Tufty' Wilson, 1830s; William Turnbull, 1820s to 1840s; Tom Wells, 1850s; Thomas 'Tam-a-Linkin' Turnbull till about 1860; James Smith, 1860s; Michael Wintrope, from 1860s; Fraser Richardson, late 1800s; Tom Cook, 1880s; Walter Lawson, 1880s; William Harkness, from 1893; Mr. Beattie around 1899; John Waldie, early 1900s; Robert Naylor 1928–57; Alec Dobbie 1929–58; Bill Allan 1958–84; 'Dimmer' Anderson 1959–2008; George Milligan 1985–96; Robert Payne 1997–2019; 'Eck' Barclay 2009– ; Keith Douglas-Hogg 2020– (also called Burgh Officer).

Haldane (hawl-dān) n. James (18th C.) Hawick resident. His occupation in 1775 is 'Stocking weaver' (perhaps the first time this is recorded in the Hawick Parish Records). He married Helen Bryson in 1774. Their children included: Helen (b.1775); Ann (b.1778); and James (b.1781). The witnesses in 1775 were the present Bailie Andrew Scott and shoemaker John Scott. An unnamed child of his died in 1776. He is probably the 'James Halden' who is stated to have had 2 stocking frames in Hawick in an account of local industry written by David Loch in about 1777. James Alexander (1768–1851) younger brother of Robert, he had a naval career, but left to pursue an evangelical calling. Along with his brother and possibly John Aikman and Rowland Hill, he visited Hawick in 1798. It is said that they 'preached from a heap of stones – the debris of the old Tower of Hawick', which could have been the demolished Garrison at the bottom of the Howegate, or material removed during renovations of the Tower. The men they inspired in Hawick became known as 'Haldanites' and within a few years had started the congregation that met in the Tabernacle. He married twice (his 2nd wife being daughter of scientist Daniel Rutherford) and had 13 children. James (b.c.1770s) weaver in Hawick, recorded on the 1799 list for the Militia ballot. He is also listed in 1801, right after weaver Walter, who was probably related. James (b.c.1790) born at Chanelkirk, he was miller at Riddell Mill. In 1851 he was recorded as farmer of 60 acres, employing 2 labourers. He was listed as miller at Riddell Mill in Slater's 1852 directory. His wife Helen was from Selkirk. His children included: William; James, corn merchant in Hawick; Helen; Euphemia; and Janet. James (1823/4–98) born at Standhill farm where his father worked before moving to Riddell Mill. He came to Hawick where he set up as a corn merchant at 4 Howegate, building up the business as the railway opened to Carlisle. He ran the farm at Sinton Parkhead for a while, while his nephew ran the business. Overall he ran his corn merchant's for about 40 years. It is said he was a very strong man, who could carry a sack of oats under each arm, and once assisted the police by literally 'lifting' the culprit to the police station. He was an elder in Allars Kirk, a Liberal in politics and a keen bowler. In 1851 he married Isabella Aitken (who died in 1894, aged 60). Their children included James, Agnes (who married butcher John Davies), Isabella (who married Thomas Graham), Lizzie (who married Peter Rutherford, farmer of Clifton Hill), Jessie, Phemie, Ellen (who died aged 23), Annie Aitken (who died aged 22) and 2 Johns (who both died young). He was buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. James (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isabella Laidlaw and their children included Agnes (b.1860) and William (b.1862). James (1857/8–1930) son of corn merchant James. He was a simpleton with a 'palley' arm, who assisted his father. He also used to regularly drop in on Robert Purdom, Town Clerk, until presented with a bill for his time! James (1840/1–1884) nephew of corn merchant James, he helped run the business. He married Elizabeth Jackson (who died in 1913, aged 75). Their children were Bella, Lizzie and Jane.

John (16th C.) mentioned as one of those excepted in the 1564/5 bond between the Scotts and the Kerrs. His name is recorded as 'Johne Haldene of the Ilk'. In 1569 he was a surety along with Rutherfords, for Robert Ker of Lochtour. Also in 1569 he was among the lairds who signed a bond to keep peace on the Border. John (18th C.) mason of Galashiels, who possibly worked on the Slitrig Bridge and was made an Honorary Burgess in 1776. John (b.1814/15) born in Bowden Parish. He was miller at Riddell Mill in 1841 and at Highchesters Mill in 1851. He was listed as miller at Highchesters Mill in Slater's 1852 directory. His wife was Isabella, and their children included James, Isabella, Robert, Helen and John. Robert (1764–1842) Scottish evangelical preacher, elder brother of James Alexander. He inherited the family estate of Airthey House (now part of Stirling University), but later sold it to fund his missionary work. The preaching meetings of him and his brother in Hawick in 1798 (and not 1789, as sometimes stated) led to the formation of the Independent Church and the later construction of the Tabernacle on the Kirk Wynd, this being effectively the seed for the later formation of the Congregational and Baptist Kirks. He helped fund the construction of the Tabernacle in Hawick and supported Mr. Paton, who was the first preacher of the new Hawick congregation. The first (and only) permanent minister of the Independent Kirk in Hawick, Charles Gray, was trained at the Haldane brothers' academy in Edinburgh. Walter (b.c.1780) weaver in Hawick according to the 1801 list for the Militia ballot. He is listed right before weaver James, who was probably related (also written 'Halden').

haldin (hal-din) pp., arch. held – '...of the said landis of Quhitchester to be haldin of the said William and his aieris in myn or thair defaltis' [SB1470] (cf. the later hauden).

hale (hāl) adj., arch. whole, entire, complete – '...publicly whipped and scurged thro the haill toune ...' [BR1697], '...and after that a stent to be made through the haill town ...' [BR1644], '...in name and bahalfe of the haill toune and communitie thereof ...' [BR1684], '...and patched up ane mock colour of their own, carried the same along the haill Common and through the haill town' [BR1706], '...at the presince o' the Lord o' the haill yirth' [HSR], 'But gif thine ee be ill, thy haill bodie sall be fu o' mirk' [HSR], 'But the bonniest lass o' the hale ricmatic ...' [WAP], '...if not the haill inhabitants of the burgh ...' [RW], 'And gin I'd to wale but the yin, frae the haill slidderin' heap ...' [DH], healthy, unhurt, sound – 'On till the derkeneen rowed its hap roon deed and dei-in, an gaard the hyill yins devall an take a barley' [ECS], adv., arch. wholly, completely – 'And with this lade I've sprawl'd and foughten Hail ten lang mile' [JoHa]', n., arch. the whole, entirety – 'Oo've gaen wui the whole o thon sheivs o bannih' [ECS], v., arch. to heal, make whole – 'Hælin' a kinkind o' ailment' [HSR] (also spelled 'hail' and 'haill'; cf. the rarer hyale and hyill).

halesome (hāl-sum) adj., arch. wholesome – '...in their private capacity daily partook of the 'halesome food' prepared from it ...' [DMW], 'Even in Scotland at one time they were much, to our injury, likely to supersede the 'halesome parritch'' [RJT], 'Wi' halesome fair my brod You've set ...' [WL].

the Half Moon Hotel (thu-hawf-moon-hō-tel) n. hotel and pub situated at 64 High Street, which held popular dances in its ballroom in the 19th century. Common-Riding events were often held there. The ballroon was also regularly used for weddings and other events, and held the Episcopal school and church meetings from about 1847–50. In the early part of that century the hotel was known simply as 'Mrs. Inglis'' and was a favoured place for factory workers to meet on Saturdays to have their pay distributed. It was taken over by Anthony Boiston, who changed the name. It is recorded as the Cornet's headquarters, where the Flag was displayed from the Thursday nioght in 1875 and as the location for the more informal Colour Bussing of 1881. Although the inn is long gone, the adjacent passageway is still known as Half Moon Yard. Previous to the existence of the hotel there was a pended house on the site (also written 'Hauf').

Half Moon Yaird (hawf-moon-yārd) n. passageway off O'Connell Street, behind where the Half Moon Hotel used to be, off the south side of the street. There was a blacksmith's there, which closed in the late 1950s.

Halfpenny (hawf-pe-nee) n. Cameron 'Cam' (1964–) moved to Hawick from Glasgow with his parents at the age of 3. He attended Wilton and Hawick High Schools. He left Hawick in 1982 to attend college in Wales, later living in Australia and the Bahamas and returning to Scotland in 1994. He has lectured in social science and business research, developed curriculum and exam materials, contributed to research on dyslexia, and has written for BBC TV and Radio Scotland. He was also Poet in Residence for Queen of the South. In 2016 he wrote 'Ahlice's Adveentuurs in Wunderlannt', a translation of Lewis Carroll's book into Borders dialect. Colin (1966/7–) younger brother of Graham and Davie, all of them being local football players. He played for Hawick United, Hawick Waverley, Hawick Royal Albert, Peebles Rovers, Selkirk and Coldstream. David 'Davie' (1963/4–) played football for Hawick Hotspur, Hawick Waverley and Hawick United. After recovering from a broken leg he played for Hawick Royal Albert, Peebles Rovers, Coldstream and Lauder. He was also managed of the Albert for 1½ seasons. Graham (1960/1–) older brother of Davie and Colin. He played for Hawick Hotspur, Legion Rovers, the Waverley, Hawick Royal Albert, Hawick Legion and Hawick United. He was player-manager of the Albert at the age of 23. After 6 seasons there, he also managed at Selkirk and Coldstream.

Haliburton (ha-lee-bur'-in) n. Agnes 'Nanny' (18th C.) housemaid at Stobs in 1789 when she was working for Sir Francis Eliott. Andrew of Muirhouselaw (16th C.) son of John, whom he succeeded, his brother George dying before that. He is recorded in 1581 when he paid Walter in Ancrum for the lease of lands in Ancrum Spittal for 19 years. This included land on 'the Westside of the hill callit Paynyelheucht'. His wife Helen Pringle also gave her consent to an annual rent of grain to Walter Haliburton. He married a daughter of John Pringle of Galashiels. They had 3 sons and a daughter Jean, who married Steven Douglas of Timpendean. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Hawick. His wife was Helen Brown and they had an unnamed son in 1670. Andrew, W.S. (1673–1738) 3rd son of Thomas of Newmains, Berwickshire. His sister Mary married Gideon Elliot of Harwood-on-Teviot. He served as factor to Scott of Harden in at least the years 1711–24. He was probably the Andrew, 'writer in Edinburgh' who acted for William Elliot of Harwood in at least the period 1705–08, and probably later for William's son Gideon Elliot of Harwood. In 1700 he married Marion, 2nd daughter of Robert Elliot of Midlem Mill. He may be the 'Mr Haliburton' who, along with the Laird of Harwood (Gideon Elliot, his brother-in-law), witnessed a baptism for weaver James Roger in 1729. Probably the same writer Andrew witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1741, suggesting that the death year of 1738 is incorrect. Andrew (17th/18th C.) married Barbara Haddon in Hawick in 1707. David of Mertoun (16th C.) son of William and younger brother of Walter. In 1504 he married Euphane, daughter of the Laird of Gledstains, and whose marriage required permission from the Cardinal on account of them being too closely related. He was assigned by his father the teind sheaves of Mertoun and all the tacks of the Abbacy of Dryburgh. He is listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English in raids upon the farms of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, including Goldielands and others near Hawick. He had sons Walter, Thomas, James, Archibald and Henry. George of Pinnacle (16th/17th C.) married Dorothy, who was probably a daughter of Gavin Eliott of Stobs. In 1608 his wife was one of the heirs of Stobs who complained about a raid by the Scotts of Northhouse and others. In 1617 he was among a list of Border Lairds denounced as rebels for not appearing before the Privy Council; this was because he had failed to pay Rev. Walter Scott of Castleton as assignee to Gilbert Eliott of Stobs. In 1619 he was among a group of more than 100 men under John Ker of Langnewton who Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam complained had broken up and stolen turfs cut for his use on Oxnam Moor. In 1620 there was a complain against him by John of Muirhouselaw for not remiving himself and his family from Pinnacle; his wife 'Dorathie Ellote' and their sons George, John and Robert, are also mentioned. He is probably the George referred to as 'called of Pendicle' in 1621 when, along with his son George, John Ker of Langnewton and others, they were accused of attacking John of Muirhouselaw and associates; despite having the same surname, he appears to have been feuding with the Haliburtons of Muirhouselaw. Along with some of his associates he was declared a rebel in 1621. He was also listed in 1622 among a group of men under John Ker of Langnewton, accused of attacking the farm of Haughhead in Eckford Parish. George (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Agnes Gledstains and their children included Janet (b.1635) and Henry (b.1640). Walter (b.1642), with the mother's name given as 'Manie Gledstains', was probably also his son. George (17th/18th C.) Burgess of Hawick, recorded in 1694 when he had to pay his Burgess fee, suggesting that he had just become a full member of one of the Trades. Probably the same George was a wright who married Margaret Scott. Their children included: Walter

(b.1703); Benjamin (b.1704); and probably Mary (b.1701), Bessie (b.1707) and Henry (b.1708). The witnesses in 1704 were carrier Andrew Clerk and merchant Adam Turnbull. He may be the George who is recorded supplying liquor to Wells House in the second quarter of the 18th century. George (18th C.) local merchant who took possession of the lands of Dovemount in 1770 from Robert Langlands and subsequently sold off various parts. He is recorded at Dovemount in a baptismal record of 1780. He is listed as 'George Hallyburton, Dovemount' when he subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum', (1784). He could be the George whose house near Hawick Mill was severely damaged in the flood of 1767. In 1788 he is recorded as owner of 'William Tudhope's lands, purchased from Langlands' in Wilton Parish, valued at £25; this is probably Dovemount. In the 1811 Land Tax records he is listed as owner of Dovemount (although he may have already been deceased), 'acquired from Langlands'. Later in the 19th century the lands were owned by Thomas Laidlaw. He married Betty Wilson in 1766 and their children included: Isobel (b.1767), baptised in Hawick; and Andrew (b.1771), James (b.1772), Robert (b.1774), Jean (b.1776), John (b.1778) and Thomas (b.1780), baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1780 were Dr. James Wilson and Bailie John Wilson (who were surely related to his wife). He is probably the George whose daughter Jean died in Hawick in 1797. It is possible he is the same as the George described as 'a great smuggler' (by Robert Murray in 1875), 'who had a large number of men employed in the Boulmer trade'. George (18th/19th C.) farmer at Newton in Wilton Parish, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Henry of Muirhouselaw (14th/15th C.) descendent of the Lords of Halyburton. In 1407 he was granted the lands of Muirhouselaw in Berwickshire by Archibald, Earl of Angus. His son married the heiress of Mertoun, so that his grandson William became the first Haliburton of Mertoun. Henry (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Janet Gledstains. Their son George was baptised in 1670. He may be the Henry who witnessed a baptism for John Beattie in Hawick Parish in 1676. Henry (17th C.) wright of Hawick, listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is listed as 'Hendrie Hallaburtone', living on the west-side of Hawick on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably the Henry who had a son Henry baptised in Hawick in 1696, with witnesses John and William Elliot. Henry (18th C.) wright in Hawick, probably related to the earlier wright. He married Jean (or Janet) Deans and their children included: George (b.1740); George (again, b.1742); James (b.1744); Thomas (b.1747); and Henry (b.1759). The witnesses in 1742 were merchant John Cavers and baker Robert Scott and in 1747 were saddler Francis Ruecastle and carrier John Ruecastle. Henry (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish, living at Roughley in 1778. He married Helen Henderson their children included: John (b.1778); Mary (b.1780); and William (b.1782). They may also be the parents of Malie (b.1792), baptised in Roberton Parish. Henry (c.1780–1832) cattle-dealer in Hawick. He was probably the son of Thomas who was listed on the ballot for the Militia in Hawick in 1801. He was Cornet in 1807 and was also selected as the 'rebel' Cornet of 1809 (the dispute being at least partly because the Council selected someone from the east side of the Slitrig), but declined for (unspecified) domestic reasons. However, he still played an important part in the Common Riding that year, being describes as 'fearless, and, at the same time, a fear-inspiring man', who rode to the front of the 'rebel' cavalcade as it re-entered the Town, swinging his whip to clear a path. He was the first person to die of cholera in the outbreak of early 1832. He contracted the disease while taking his stock to market in Morpeth and died a few days later in Hawick, on 18th January. His brother James and nephew Thomas both contracted cholera, but recovered. However, a neighbour, John Murray died 9 days after him, and several other neighbours followed. He lived on the Back Row, adjacent to Rob Young the blacksmiths. The field marked 'Mr. Halliburton' behind the Back Row on Wood's 1824 map was probably his. James (b.c.1782) cattle dealer from Hawick, son of Thomas and brother of Henry. He was listed as son of Thomas on the ballot for the Militia in 1801. He contracted cholera from his brother, who was the first person to die in the Hawick outbreak of early 1832. However, he and his son Thomas both recovered. He later lived at Hopehouse in Ettrick Parish. He had another son, James He may be the James in Hawick who subscribed to 10 copies of Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. John of Muirhouselaw (17th C.) possibly son of Adam of Muirhouselaw. In 1617 he was among Border Lairds who renewed their bond for keeping the peace. In 1620 he complained that George of Pinnacle and his family were still at large despite a 'horning' for not removing themselves from his lands of Pinnacle. In 1621 there was a complaint that he was attacked at Pinnacle by supporters of Ker of Langnewton; his 2nd son 'Mr' Andrew and Robert Buckham in Belses Mill are also mentioned. He was also later attacked along with his sons John, Andrew and George and his 'sister sone' was recorded being the Laird of Fairnington. He also complained to the Privy Council that the men who attacked him were still at large. He held lands in the Baronies of Belses and Pinnacle according to the tax roll for the Abbacy of Jedburgh in 1626. He was probably the Laird of 'Morislaw' who represented Roxburghshire in Parliament in 1625. He may be the same John who was on the 'retour' for Ker of Cessford in 1600, and who had a charter for Friarshaw in 1606. He was one of the minor barons of Roxburghshire convened to try to elect representatives to Parliament in 1628. He held lands in Maxton Parish in 1643. He may be the John of Muirhouselaw who married Margaret, daughter and heiress of David Boswell of Bowhill. His son John (b.1634) succeeded to Muirhouselaw, as well as to Bowhill. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Hope and their son Andrew was baptised in 1642. John of Muirhouselaw (1634–1704) son of John and Margaret Boswell. He probably also held land at Belses. He married Jean (d.1703), daughter of Mark Pringle of Clifton and had sons John (who succeeded) and Patrick (who became Dean of Guild in Edinburgh). John (17th C.) resident of Minto Craigend who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. He is listed as owner of 4 hearths along with William Cunningham, but it is unclear who they were or why they were listed together. It is possible he was the same as John of Muirhouselaw. John (17th C.) tenant in Lilliesleaf Mill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1717 he married Isobel Lermonth, who was from Selkirk. Their children included Margaret (b.1718). Dr. John of Howcleuch (d.1750s) doctor from Jedburgh. In 1714 he married Christian, daughter of Simon Elliot of Swinside. He became Laird of Howcleuch and also owned Borthwick Mains, these perhaps being inherited through his wife. He owned both of these by at least 1727 (according to the will of Rev. Robert Scott). He was a merchant in Edinburgh and in 1744 Robert, son of Robert Elliot of Midlem Mill became his apprentice. His lands of Howclecuh were valued at £167 14s 6d in the 1740s. His son Simon became minister of Newcastleton (and married an Elliot of Midlem Mill). His daughter Margaret died in Hawick in 1798. He may have been sister of Mary, who married Gideon Elliot of Harwood-on-Teviot; he is probably the 'Doctor Halyburton' who witnessed a baptism for Mary and her husband in Hawick in 1719. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1767 he married Margaret Turnbull, who was also from Hawick. John (b.c.1780) shepherd at Twislehope according to the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Castleton Parish. Nichol (16th C.) recorded in Pinnacle in 1581 when he witnessed a transaction between Walter in Ancrum and Andrew of Muirhouselaw. Patrick (d.1703) son of John of Muirhouselaw, he was Dean of Guild of Edinburgh. In 1699 he was part of a case before the Lords of Session. This involved dispute over ownership of a tenement in Hawick that had belonged to a man named Scott who was indebted to him; the man's son, John Scott, claimed that the debt had been paid. The location of the tenement is not given and there is no way to know which Scotts it belonged to. He married Jane Erskine of Shielfield and their son George was Provost of Edinburgh. Rev. Simon (1720–1797) son of John, a doctor in Jedburgh, and Christian Elliot of Swinside. He was educated at Edinburgh University and licensed by the Presbytery of Dalkeith in 1745. In 1749 he was presented to Castleton Parish by the Duke of Buccleuch and became minister there in 1751. The delay was because of an objection by Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto, one of the Lords of Session at the time, in part because he used notes while preaching. Regarding using notes, the Presbytery stated that 'there was no law of the Church against that, and that it was practised by several ministers of the best character'. However, the objections appeared to run deeper than this, since he also had threatening letters sent to him and was insulted by a mob in Castleton, with 3 men and 1 woman imprisoned in Edinburgh for riotous conduct following the reading of his appointment; the congregation objected to having no say in the appointment of their minister and locked up the church and filled the lock with stones. Some of the members of his church left in 1751 to start a secession church (later to become the Newcastleton United Presbyterian Church). He employed a preacher to help him in 1759 and later an assistant minister, John Campbell. In 1762 he was presented to Ashkirk Parish by Sir Gilbert Elliot, and ordained there in 1763, apparently to the great delight of the Castleton parishioners. There is no record of whether he was as popular at Ashkirk! However, he did have the new church built for him there in 1791. He inherited the lands of Howcleuch and Borthwick Mains from his father, but in 1755 sold them to Walter Scott, farmer at Commonside. In 1779 he was granted liferent of Elliot of Minto's lands of Shielswood (valued at £260) and the west and north-west parts of Headshaw (valued at £149 14s 2d). This grant of lands was just so that he could be added to the Roxburghshire voters' roll; in 1788 he was listed under 'Votes of Sir Gilbert Elliot' among the voters of Roxburghshire. He was recorded at Ashkirk in the 1785–91 Horse Tax Rolls. 1794/5 he was listed in the Carriage Tax Rolls. He held the superiority of part of Headshaw in life-rent. He was described as 'simple-minded' (by Rev. Russell of Ettrick). During his bachelor days his housekeeper was his sister Peggy. He became senile in his old age. He married Elizabeth, 2nd daughter of Robert Elliot of Midlem Mill (and probably widow of Charles Paterson of Drygrange) in 1749. Their children included: Katherine; John, who was a Captain with the East India Company, died in India and was the last male representative of the family of Newmains and Mertoun; and Robert and Thomas, who both died young. 'Miss Halliburton sister to Mr. Halliburton Ashkirk' whose death is recorded in Hawick in 1798, was his sister. He wrote a description of the Parish for Sinclair's Statistical Account. Thomas of Muirhouselaw (1692–1716) son of John and grandson of John and Jean Pringle. In 1708 he married Elizabeth, 2nd daughter of George Rutherford of Fairnington. He was killed by his brother-in-law George Rutherford in a fight which flared up over a boundary dispute. His cousin George (Lord Provost of Edinburgh) married his widow and succeeded to Muirhouselaw. Thomas (18th/19th C.) carrier in Hawick. In 1791 he paid the cart tax in Hawick. He was owner of 2 work horses according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He may be the Thomas, whose father-in-law James Deans died in 1794. He may be the Thomas whose sons Henry and James were on the ballot for the Militia in Hawick in 1801 (and who were both involved in the cholera outbreak of 1832). Thomas (18th/19th C.) helped compile a 'New Valuation of Houses and Gardens in the Town of Hawick' in 1814. He could be the Thomas, farmer at Tushielaw, who, along with James (also farmer there) was listed in the 1835 electoral roll as joint proprietor of a house in Hawick, succeeding their father. It is also probable he was the same Thomas noted for being involved with smuggling; he was said to be a tall and powerful man, who felled an exciseman with one blow when encoutering him in Kelso. Walter of Mertoun (15th/16th C.) son of William and brother of David. He witnessed a bond between Turnbulls at Caerlenrig in 1505. Walter (16th C.) tenant in Ancrum. In 1581 he was son of the deceased Walter when he received payment from Andrew of Muirhouselaw for the lease of land in Ancrum Spittal and also land 'on the Westside of the hill callit Paynyelheucht or Downalddisknow'. This suggests an early version of 'Penielheugh' that is closer to the local pronunciation than the modern spelling would indicate. Several other Haliburtons acted as witnesses, namely George in Dryburgh, Nichol in Pinnacle and John in St. Boswell's, as well as George Buckham at Belses Mill. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He is recorded at Borthwickbrae in 1714, Eilrig in 1718 and Philhope in 1721. In 1703 he married 'Maly Eliot' from Hawick Parish. Their children included: Margaret (b.1709); Andrew (b.1712); Isobel (b.1714); Mary (b.1718); and Janet (b.1721). William of Mertoun (15th C.) became the first Haliburton of Mertoun through his mother Isabel de Mertoun. He had sons: Walter, who succeeded to Mertoun; David, who succeeded to lands in Dryburgh; George, who received Muirhouselaw; and John. William (b.c.1780s) shepherd at Howpasley, according to the 1812 ballot for the Militia in Roberton Parish. He could be the William who married Elizabeth Oliver and whose children, baptised in Roberton, included: Robert (b.1801); John (b.1803); John (again, b.1803); Henry (b.1805); and William (b.1807) (see also Halliburton; formerly spelled 'Haliburtonn', 'Haliburtoun', 'Haliburtoune', 'Haliebourton', 'Hallyburton', 'Halybortone', 'Halyburton', 'Heliebourton', 'Helliborten', 'Helliborton', 'Helybourton', etc.).

Halidon Hill (ha-li-din-hil) n. battle in 1333, the site being about 2 miles north-west of Berwick. It followed Edward III deciding to take back the port from the Scots. The siege of Berwick lasted months, with Edwards men ravaging the Scottish Borders while they waited. To relieve the siege Lord Archibald Douglas finally led his forces to engage the English at Halidon Hill, the Scots becoming bogged down and being slaughtered by English archers. Part of the English force was commanded by Edward Baliol.

The other Scots commanders were Robert Stewart (the future king) and John Randolph, 3rd Earl of Moray. English casualties were light, but the Scots lost thousands of men, including the Guardian, at least 5 other Earls and perhaps 90 knights. Sir Michael Scott of Rankilburn was one of the few local men who survived. It is said that the battle was preceeded by hand to hand combat involving Turnbull of Rule and Sir Robert Benhale, with Turnbull being slain. A block of stone was placed there in 1933 by the Berwickshire Naturalists' Club.

Halifax (haw-lee-fawks) n. type of British bomber that crashed near Craik village in April 1944, killing all 8 crew members. The plane was specifically a four-engine Handley Page Halifax Mark II bomber (JP190) from R.A.F. Lindholme. During a routine night navigation exercise it was spotted near Craik, with an engine on fire, and crashed on Muckle Knowe. Several locals went out to look for the location in the hopes of finding survivors and Robbie Reid from Woldcleuchhead stood guard at the site all night in his Home Guard uniform. Will Anderson was the last surviving witness. A cairn with a memorial plaque was built in the car park at Craik in 1994 to commemorates the tragic event. The local Legion have annually laid a poppy there on Armistice Day and a service of dedication for the monument took place in 2015.

Halket (hal-ki') n. John (c.1780–1828) studied at St. Andrews University 1794–8 and Edinburgh University 1801/2. He spent some time as a tutor in the family of George Douglas of Cavers. He was licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery and was minister at Coupar from 1807 until he died.

Halkyn (hal-kin) n. alternative name of Ashkirk Manse, situated just beside the church. This replaced a manse that was built in the 18th century. It contains 3 chimney-pieces saved from George Square in Edinburgh and incorporated in 1964.

Hall (hal, haw) n. Agnes (18th C.) chambermaid at Cavers in 1785, when she was working for Capt. John Douglas. Agnes (b.1799/1800) widow of Thomas. She was a draper in Newcastleton from at least 1837 until the 1860s. She had children George, Thomas and John. They lived at about 35 North Hermitage Street. Andrew (17th/18th C.) married Janet Roxburgh in Bedrule Parish in 1700. Andrew (18th/19th C.) farmer recorded at Heap on both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. He owned 8 horses, and so must have had a fair sized farm, and he also had a greyhound. He was presumably the 'Mr Hall' whose servant at Heap, Robert Reid' was listed on the 1801 Militia ballot. He could be the Andrew, married to Betty Laidlaw, whose son Benjamin was baptised in Wilton in 1809. Andrew (b.1811/2) from Minto, he was a gardener in Hawick. In 1860 he was a 'nurseryman' living on Bourtree Place when his wife Agnes Rutherford died. Their children included Ellen, Agnes and Ann. Andrew (b.1822/3) born in Edrom, he was a farmer at Horsleyhill. He is recorded there in 1861 as farmer of 395 acres, employing 10 people. His wife was Helen and their children included Anna and Margaret L. Andrew (19th/20th C.) son of Benjamin and Margaret Wilson, he was a tweed foreman. He married Mary, daughter of Robert Greenwood. Benjamin (b.1809/10) spinner at Nixon's Mill. He was living at Lynnwood in 1841 and 1851. He married Margaret, daughter of spinner Robert Wilson. Their children included Jessie, Betsy, Andrew, Isabel, Robert and Benjamin. Charles (18th C.) resident of Hawick and Wilton Parishes. He married Ann Currer and their children included: Jane (b.1759), baptised in Hawick; and Catherine (b.1762), baptised in Wilton. In 1758 he hired the Hawick Parish mortcloth. Charles (18th/19th C.) butler at Synton. In an 1803 list of Volunteers he was 'lame of a leg, but willing to serve'. David (17th C.) recorded as tenant of 'Oldsteson' in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. It is unclear precisely where this farm was, but probably near Roughlee. David (1826/7–86) from Batley in Yorkshire, he settled in Hawick in 1849 to work in the woollen trade. He became the best local cricket batsman, inspiring the game within Hawick. He helped as instructor for the Hawick team when it formed in 1849. His brother Joseph came to Hawick later. He worked as a woollen waste merchant for about 30 years. In Slater's 1852 directory he is listed as a partner with Joseph as an earthenware and glass dealer, as well as rag dealers, on Backdamgate (incorrectly listed as 'Hill'). The brothers were lodgers on the Cross Wynd in 1851, working as wool dealers, employing 4 women and 2 boys. He was at 15 Backdamgate in 1861 and later lived at Hopehill. He may be the David listed as owner of 'Part of Roughheugh in about 1874, acquired from Langlands', which had been owned by Hector Blaikie according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He married Mary Day, who remarried George White of Dudley, and died in 1904, aged 72. Their children were Rowland Carr and Lucy (who married Dr. Adam Frederick Hunter Dryden and emigrated to the U.S.A.) as well as several children who did not survive past infancy. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. George (17th C.) Hawick resident. In 1679 he was convicted of 'ane blood' on Robert Scott, and ordered to pay him 5 shillings Scots per day on account that his arm was swollen and he could not reap; exactly what this meant is not clear. Rev. George (c.1680–1740) son of Robert and said to have been grandson of the famous Covenanter Henry of Haughhead. However, it seems more likely that he was more distantly related to Henry. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1699, became Chaplain to the Laird of Torsonce (near Stow), was licensed by the Presbytery of Earlston in 1706, and became Chaplain to Thomas, Earl of Haddington. He was ordained as minister of Abbotrule in 1714 and remained there until translated to Linton in 1728. He was also presented to Lochmaben in 1722, but appears not to have gone there. He preached in Hawick at least once, in 1721. He is recorded in 1726 along with Alexander Horsburgh of that Ilk in a bond with Robert Pringle, writer in Edinburgh. And in 1733 part of a debt to Alexander Horsburgh of that Ilk was repaid. But a court action by John Horsburgh of that Ilk followed in 1735, presumably to recover the rest of the loan. In 1716 in Edinburgh he married Emelia (d.1768), daughter of Andrew Duncan in Scone. Their children were Patrick, Gilbert and Jean (who married Colin Campbell in Edinburgh). He published 'Practical Sermons on several subjects' (1732). George (18th/19th C.) married Elizabeth Oliver in Hawick in 1792, both being from Hawick Parish. Their children included: Thomas (b.1793), said to have been a sailor in the American War of 1812; and Agnes (b.1800), who married Jacob Evans and died in Philadelphia in 1884. It is claimed in some genealogies that he was born in Duns in 1763, also had children John (b.1796) and George (b.1798), both born in Duns, and emigrated to Philadelphia, dying of yellow fever shortly afterwards; however, it seems possible that two completely different Georges are being conflated here. It seems reasonable to assume that his wife was daughter of John Oliver and Agnes Ekron (based on his daughter Agnes' descendants in America having possession of Agnes Akron's book of the catechism), but any connection to Halls from Duns is much less clear. George (b.1789/90) born in Northumberland, he was a sheep and cattle dealer in Newcastleton. He was listed as a Castleton drover in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border'. He was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale in the 1850s. In 1841, 1851 and 1861 he was living at about 19 Douglas Square. His first wife was Sarah and he secondly married Christina, daughter of joiner John Douglas; she worked as an assistant post-mistress in Newcastleton. His children included Helen and John. George (b.1821/2) from Jedburgh, he was shepherd at Ruletownhead in 1861. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Andrew, Arcilla, Helen and James. George (1822/3–90) fish monger, game and poultry dealer in Hawick. His business at 40 High St. was established in 1866 and later moved to No. 66. In 1861 he was a forester at Bowmont Forest Cottages, and so must have moved to Hawick after that. His shop can be seen in a photograph of 1903, probably shortly after it moved to these new premises. He married Agnes Wright, and she died in Leeds in 1908, aged 83. His children included Cecilia, John, Betsy Briggs, Margaret, John Wright, Alison and Robert. He is buried at Oxnam. Gilbert (15th C.) witness to a sasine of 1469 for the lands of Wolfelee for Home of Wedderburn. Robert was listed before him and so presumably related. Gilbert (1771–1842) son of William and Isabel Best, he was born in Wilton Parish. He is probably the Gilbert who was a servant at Dimpleknow according to the 1799 and 1801 ballots for the Militia in Ashkirk Parish. He is recorded as 'Ind.' at Greensidehall Cottage in 1841. He was probably a retired farmer from that area. He married Agnes Robertson, who died at Ashkirk in 1835, aged 65. He died at Greensidehall and was buried in Old Wilton Cemetery. Grizel (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In about 1640 she and Margaret Lawson were publicly rebuked for 'going away betwixt sermons without any relevant excuse'. Henry of Haughhead (d.1680) son of Hobbie and Helen Scott. He owned land on the Kale Water in Eckford Parish and was said to be a relative of the Earl of Roxburghe. He was known as a man of strong religious principles, leaving his local church in 1651 and attending Ancrum instead. He refused to accept Episcopacy and took refuge over the Border. As a Covanenting elder, the local meeting place for field conventicles was on his lands, and it was here that Richard Cameron obtained his license to preach. He was said to be a close friend of Ringan Oliver of Smailcleuchfoot, as well as Rev. John Livingstone, the ousted ministr of Ancrum. He was arrested after the Pentland rising in 1666, imprisoned for a while in Cessford Castle, then exiled to Northumberland. He was back in Scotland in 1679, when he was an officer in the forces at Drumclog and Bothwell Bridge. After this battle he escaped to the Netherlands, returning after a few months, but being involved in an altercation at South Queensferry, he received a serious headwound, was captured and died on the way to Edinburgh. He has a single son, Samuel, who inherited Haughhead, and was also a supporter of the Covenanters. He also had at least 2 daughters, one of whom, Mary, married Ringan Oliver of Smailcleuchfoot. It has also been written that he had a son Robert, whose son George was an Established Church minister at Abbotrule and elsewhere; however, this seems to be incorrect, and Rev. George was probably instead a grandson of a half-brother of his. A banner that he possessed, bearing the motto 'No Quarters to ye Active Enimies of ye Covenant' still exists and is sometimes referred to as the 'Bluidy Banner'. His sword, of the Andrea Ferrara type, and a musket, were also preserved by friends. Henry (18th C.) herd in Weens. His son Henry was baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1752. Hugh (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Cavers and their children included: Ellen Jane (b.1847); John (b.1848); Thomas (b.1850); William (b.1852); and James (b.1853). Isabella 'Tibbie o Wigg' (19th C.) married George Scott, shepherd at Hardlee and Hyndlee. One of her sons was Overhall farmer James. James (d.1570s) described as 'in Wollie' (presumably Wolfelee) when Will Robson 'in Rochthewchmylne' was charged with his murder. Robson failed to appear and so his surety, James Langlands of that Ilk, was ordered to pay 20 merks to his daughter Malie. James (16th C.) recorded as resident at Essenside when acting as a cautioner for William Scott in Burnfoot on Ale in 1581. James (16th C.) recorded in 1590 when accused by the English Warden of being part of a raid into England 3 years earlier. John Scott 'the Tinckler' led the group of what was claimed to be 500 men on a day-long foray. He had sons Jamie and Hob, who are listed with him in an accusation of 1590 for a raid on 'Wartoun'. His son 'Jamy Hall of Heavisyde, younger' is recorded in another complaints of 1590. They may have been descended from William and David, who were recorded as tenants in Heavyside in 1494/5. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Burnmouth. In 1699 he was sent by the Castleton Session to Leith to obtain 'twelve flagons of claret wine, and bring it for the sacrament'. James (1719/20–88) 'dweller at Gatehaughscot' according to his gravestone in Bedrule kirkyard. He married Agnes Thomson, who died in 1786, aged 71. Their son died in Bedrule in 1794, aged 32, and was married to Margaret McKenzie. Rev. James (1726–81) son of Samuel, and grandson of the famous Covenanter Henry, he was born at Haughhead in Eckford Parish. He was ordained at Bothwell in 1750, but resigned in 1753 over a doctrinal dispute and became a Cameronian preacher in Edinburgh in 1755. He died in Edinburgh and is buried in Greyfriars Cemetery. James (b.c.1770s) clogger at Foulbrae on the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. He was also recorded as a labourer at Foulbrae in 1800 when his son John was baptised in Cavers Parish. It is unclear where Foulbrae was. James (b.1819/20) born in Morebattle Parish, he was a shepherd at Fairloans in Bedrule Parish in 1861. He married Helen Hobkirk and their children included Margaret, Helen and James. Janet (b.1774/5) listed as 'Ind.' in the 1841 census at Ewes Old Toll Bar. She was living with Mary, who was probably her daughter, and had other residents in the house, probably lodgers. In 1851 she was listed as a widow at the Old Tollbar. Jean (18th/19th C.) local character, brought up at Dodburn, she later lived at 'the Yett', near Hawick Moor. She had a reputation as a witch, with many stories told of her apparent powers. She was certainly an imposing woman, with masculine features, a hirple and a strong personality. John (15th C.) witness in 1436 to a sasine for the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee. The other men listed were all from relatively nearby, including Thomas, who was presumably related. John (16th C.) one of the King's shepherds, who, along with John Hope, had sheep stolen from him by a group of Armstrongs and others in 1535. This was at 'Braidlee in the Forest', which was probably the farm in the Borthwick valley. The same 2 men were recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of 1540 in 'Braidlie and Filop' when they were paid £6 13s 4d for 10 bolls of grain. John (16th C.) tenant of 'Newbegyne' who was witness in 1557 to the bond in which Turnbulls and others promised to bring William Nixon to Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst. The others involved were from Rulewater and neighbouring areas, and so this was probably a local Newbigging, probably the one near Oxnam. He may be the same John 'of Newbiging thelder' listed first in 1544 among Halls who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. John 'Jock' (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersiderig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. John (17th C.) servant of Andrew Turnbull, who was tenant at Wolfelee Mill. In 1684 he appeared on a long list of men declared as fugitives for religious non-conformity. John (17th C.) resident at Greena in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. John (18th C.) shepherd at Carewoodrig. His wife Mary Elliot died in 1784 and is buried in Teviothead cemetery. He may have been son of Robert (d.1789), also buried there. John (18th C.) married Violet Laidlaw in Wilton Parish in 1773. Their children included Isabel (b.1775) and Violet (b.1777). John (b.1814/5) born in Hawick, he was a wool spinner. In 1861 he was living at 3 West Port (but he does not appear to have been in the Hawick area in 1841 or 1851). His cousin Annie Ekron was also living with him in 1861 (although the relationship between them is not clear). He married Henrietta (or 'Henny') Hume in 1840; she was from Selkirk and could be the 'Mrs John Hall, Loan' who in 1870 donated to the Museum an 'antique clasp knife with leaf-shaped blade'. John (b.1817/1) born in Morebattle, he was a shepherd at Spittal-on-Rule in 1851. His wife was Alison and their children included James. John (19th C.) from Hawick, he is recorded winning 2 leaping events at the 1835 Common-Riding Games. Joseph (b.1829/30) from England, he was younger brother of David, and came to Hawick later. The pair set themselves up as woollen and rag dealers on Backdamgate. In 1851 they were employing 4 women and 2 boys and they were listed as rag dealers in Slater's 1852 directory. Kitty (18th/19th C.) originally from Northumberland, she lived at Fairloans near the head of the Kale. She recited for James Telfer (the poetic Schoolmaster of Saughtree) a version of the ballad 'The Death of Parcy Reed', which he transcribed and presented to Sir Walter Scott and was published in 'Local Historian's Table Book' in 1844. She said that 'she never liked to sing the verses, as she knew them to be perfectly true, and consequently could not bear to think there had been, of her own surname, such wretches as the betrayers of Parcy Reed'. Malie (16th C.) only lawful daughter of James in Woollie. She was given 20 merks in compensation by James Langlands of that Ilk, when William Robson failed to appear to answer to the charge of murdering her father. Mary (d.c.1758) described as 'residenter in Bridgend of Ewes' when her will is recorded in the Commissariot of Dumfries in 1758. Rev. Mercer (1855–1927) born in Galashiels, 5th son of builder John and Isabella Matthew. He attended St. Andrews and Edinburgh Universities and was licensed by Selkirk Presbytery. He became assistant at St. Mark's in Dundee and was ordained minister at Careston, Forfarshire in 1886. The next year he was translated to Roberton Parish where he was minister until his death, although he was assisted by Æneas McInnes from 1894. Peter (1847–1928) printer and reporter, he was brother of Anthony, who modelled for the 'Golden Boy' on the dome of Edinburgh University's Old College, and was a great athlete in his youth. He worked for a while for the Hawick Advertiser and later had a florist's shop in Edinburgh. Robert (15th C.) witness to the 1469 and 1479 sasines for Wolfelee. Gilbert was listed after him in 1469 and probably a close relative. Robert 'Hob' (d.c.1661) tenant of the farms of Simon Elliot in Dod Burn, listed on a bond of security signed in Hawick in 1569. Robert 'Hobbie' of Haughhead (d.c.1661) father of the Covenanter Henry. He was probably from the Halls of Sykes in Oxnam Parish. In about 1620 he married Helen Scott, who died in 1652. She was daughter and heiress of Mark Scott of Haughhead in Eckford Parish, through whom he gained the lands of Haughhead. However, there was a dispute with the superior, then Sir John Ker of Jedburgh. Their 'onlie lawful son' was Henry (d.1670). He secondly married Margaret Davidson or Young. He had at least 3 daughters, including Margaret, who married James Ker in Sprouston. He is commemorated on an inscribed tablet on Haughhead Kipp, which reads 'Here Hoby Hall boldly maintained his right Gainst reef plain force armed w lawles might For tuenty pleughs harnesd in all their gear Could not his valient nobl heart mak fear But w his sword he cut the formosts soam [chain] In two hence drove both pleughs and pleughmen home 1620'; this was probably inscribed a generation or two later then the events described and was repaired by Lady John Scott in 1854. The words presumably describe how he had to oppose men sent by the superior to plough his lands, in an attempt to show that his prescriptive rights had been broken. In 1621 there was an attack on his farm by John Ker of Langnewton (the son of Sir John), his brothers and several others, including an assault on his pregnant wife, removal of the thatch of the house and throwing all of their possesions outside; in 1622 the Privy Council found some of the men guilty and declared others to be rebels for not appearing. He and his family are buried in Eckford Kirkyard. Robert (1692/3–1789) probably shepherd at Carewoodrig, where he died. He was recorded in Priesthaugh in 1724 when he married Janet Scott, who died at Linhope in 1738. Their children (mostly baptised in Cavers) probably included: Margaret (b.1725); John (b.1727), probably shepherd at Carewoodrig; an unnamed child (b.1729), baptised in Hawick; and Mary (b.1731). He lived to the age of 96. Robert (18th C.) recorded as 'Robt. Ha, Dodburn' in 1771 when he paid the Hawick Council for 3000 divots (presumably from Hawick Common). Along with several other neighbouring farmers he paid a penny per 50 divots. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at West Mains (in Cavers Parish), recorded on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was owner of 7 farm horses and 1 saddle horse in 1797. Robert (18th/19th C.) footman at Minto according to the Lieutenancy Book in 1799. Robert (19th C.) saddler at 6 High Street along with Thomas, probably in about the 1870s. George Davies took over the business from him. Robert (19th/20th C.) son of Benjamin and Margaret Wilson. He was foreman at William Laidlaw & Son's. Samuel (1661/2–1753) only son of the Covenanter Henry. He was also a strong supporter of the Covenanters and continued to be involved in struggles through the 1680s. By his second wife, Janet Pringle, he had 2 sons: Henry, who succeeded to Haughhead and was recorded in Jedburgh in 1796; and Rev. James (1725/6–81), who became a Cameronian minister in 1750 and is buried in Greyfriars Cemetery. He died in his 92nd year. Thomas (15th C.) recorded as 'Thome de Hall' in 1436 when he witnessed a sasine for the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee. John is also listed, and so probably related. The other men listed were all from relatively nearby. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded as 'Thomas Haw' when he was on the panel which met at Cavers to decide on inheritance of certain Elliot lands in 1497/8. Thomas of Thorlieshope (18th C.) recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. It is unclear how long he held the lands of Thorlieshope or where he was from. Thomas (18th C.) farmer at High Tofts in Kirkton Parish according to the 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Silverbuthall, according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. In 1797 he was a servant at 'Mainholm' (presumably Demainholm) when listed among men balloted to serve in the Militia. The annotation 'Subst.' suggests he was substituted; however, his name appears again in 1798 and in 1797 he was listed among men whose names had been drawn in 1797. Thomas (18th/19th C.) recorded as journeyman mason in the Parish of Lilliesleaf on the 1798 list of men balloted to serve in the Militia. Mason William (perhaps a brother) served as his substitute. Thomas (b.c.1780) servant at Birneyknowe in Cavers Parish according to the ballot for the Militia in 1801. Thomas (18th/19th C.) married Janet Scoon in 1819, the marriage recorded in both Wilton and Roberton Parishes. Thomas (d.1837) Newcastleton linen and woollen draper and spirit dealer listed in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821. He may be the same Thomas, resident of Newcastleton, who was recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax rolls. He married Agnes Inglis, who died in 1865, aged 65. His widow was a draper on North Hermitage Street from at least 1841 until the 1860s. His children included George, Thomas and John. Thomas (b.1793) son of George and Elizabeth Oliver, he was born in Hawick. It is said that he was emigrated to America, became a sailor, was captured by the British in the War of 1812 and died in Dartmoor Prison. Thomas (19th C.) married Janet Beattie in Cavers in 1829. Thomas (b.1799/1800) carter in Denholm from at least 1841. In 1851 he was listed as a coal agent, living at Hassendean Station House, and in 1861 was a carter somewhere near Leyden Road in Denholm. His wife was Isabella, from Kirkton Parish. He had daughter Jane (or 'Jeany') and Helen. Thomas (19th C.) Precentor in Cavers Parish Kirk. He also ran a singing class associated with the Kirk. In 1893, when the organ was installed, he was presented with a marble clock for his many years of service and was organist for several years afterwards. T. Brian (20th C.) from Cumberland. His sister married Andrew Haddon. He was married in 1946 and started farming at Ashybank about that time. He lived for a few years in Riverside Drive in Denholm, moving to Ashybank in about 1949. He suffered a serious accident with a barn door in 1976. The family gave up farming at Ashybank after that. His children included Mike, Colin and Nigel. Walter (17th/18th C.) from Jedburgh, he married Agnes Easton in Wilton in 1713. His wife was from Heap, daughter of William Easton. Walter (1778–1863) warehouseman of Brougham Place who was one of the founders of the Relief (Allars) Kirk. In 1841 he was recorded at about 13 Brougham Place, living with his wife Agnes and children Mary and Ann. William (16th C.) recorded in 1549 as 'Williame Haw' when he was a resident of Whames and listed among the men complaining about their farms being ravaged in the previous year by a group of Englishmen, assisted by Kers and others. William (17th C.) married Janet Aitchison. Their children baptised in Hawick included Bessie (b.1652), John (b.1654) and James (b.1657). The witnesses in 1652 were William Briggs and Robert Ruecastle and in 1654 were David Beattie and William Brown. William (17th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1674 when he and his family were banished from the Town for running at the Bailie with a sword and threatening to shoot him, and 'because they are vagabond Agyptianes and idle persons'. The banishment was also 'in obedience to minister and session'. William (17th/18th C.) married Helen Anderson in Kirkton Parish in 1709. William (b.1679/80) shepherd in lands adjacent to Hawick Common. He was shepherd at Winnington Rig for 24 years, then 2 years later moved to Langflat, where he worked for 8 years, until about 1751, thereafter living at Dodburn and Acreknowe. He gave evidence in 1767 regarding the previous use of the Common, and was a widower at that time. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His son Gilbert was baptised in 1707. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children Anna (b.1719), Thomas (b.1721), Robert (b.1723), Walter (b.1724) and James (b.1732) were baptised in Kirkton Parish and Gilbert (b.1733) in Cavers Parish. In 1719 and 1721 he was recorded being 'in Rige' (perhaps Winningtonrig, but more likely Caerlenrig) and was herd in Ashybank in 1733. It is possible he is the same man as the shepherd on lands near Hawick Common. William (18th C.) tenant in Hyndhope in Oxnam Parish. He paid the window tax there in 1748. In 1730 he married Cecile, younger daughter of William Elliot of Thorlieshope and Ove. William (1733/4–1803) married Isabel Best in Wilton Parish in 1770. Their children included: Gilbert (b.1771); Agnes (b.1776); and Magdalen (b.1779). He died at Damhead and is buried in Old Wilton Cemetery. William (18th C.) resident of 'Foderly bank head' in 1774. In that year his daughter Peggy was baptised. His surname appears to have been sometimes transcribed as 'Hatt'. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Janet Ker. Their children included: Robert (b.1778); and Mary (b.1784). The witnesses in 1778 were John Ker (presumably a relative of his wife) and James Douglas. He may be the flesher whose housekeeper's death is recorded in Hawick in 1799. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Elizabeth (or 'Lissie') Liddle and their children included: Margaret (b.1783); Isabel (b.1785); Thomas (b.1787); John (b.1790); Nelly (b.1792); and Thomas (again, b.1795). William (18th/19th C.) mason in Lilliesleaf. In 1798 he is recorded as substitute for mason Thomas (surely a close relative) in the list of men on the ballot to serve in the Militia. William (b.c.1770s) butcher in Hawick, recorded on the 1799 ballot list for the Militia. He was still listed as a 'flesher' on the 1801 ballot. He may be the William who married Helen Paterson and whose children included: Margaret (b.1806); and Thomas (b.1808). William (b.c.1780) resident of Rashiegrain according to the ballot for the Militia in Hawick Parish in 1801. He may be the William who married Ann Scott in Hawick Parish in 1800. William (b.c.1780) tenant in Galalaw according to the ballot for the Militia in Wilton Parish in 1801. William (d.1854) student of divinity and assistant teacher at the Academy in the Subscription Rooms who drowned in the Borthwick on the Friday of the Common Riding. William, J.P. (19th/20th C.) foreman dyer in Hawick. He was a Director of the Working Men's Building Society, Chairman of the School Board and later of the School Management Committee, as well as a prominent local Liberal politician. He was also President of the Hawick Co-op in the 1880s and involved with the I.O.U.S. Mechanics. He was Sunday School Superintendent at St. George's Kirk 1895–1908. William, M.I.C.E. (19th/20th C.) writer of 'Liddesdale, Roxburghshire' (1903), 'Newcastleton, Roxburghshire: a border village' (1905) and 'Border village (Roxburghshire): a plea for the people: with some remarks on the Liddle and Solway fisheries' (1907). Probably the same William left money for the William Hall Day School Prize Fund in Newcastleton (formerly written 'Haw').

Halldykes (hal-dīks) n. former lands attached to the estate of Mangerton. They are recorded as 'Haldykis' in a rental roll c.1376, with value 6 shillings and 8 pence.

Halley (ha-lee) n. Joseph (1896–1915) born in Wilton, eldest son of Librarian Richard. He worked for Turner & Rutherford and played for Hawick R.F.C. He also took part in the Pageant of 1914. He served in the K.O.S.B. during WWI and was killed in Gallipoli on that fateful day, 12th July 1915. He wa buried at the Helles Memorial. Richard L. (d.1928) warper in one of the local tweed mills. He became assistant in the Library when the new building opened in 1904 and succeeded George McNairn as Librarian in 1906. He was a member of the Committee of Management of the Hawick Cooperative Society as well as the Vertish Hill Sports Committee and the Prisoners of War Committee during WWI. His children included Joseph (1896–1915). He died suddenly.

Halliburton (haw-lee-bur'-in) n. James (b.1792/3) from Jedburgh, he was a shoemaker in Denholm. He is recorded as a shoemaker in Denholm in 1837 and in 1841 was at about the Canongate. In 1833 he married Mary (1804–72) daughter of Thomas Colledge. Their children included: Janet (b.1835); James (b.1837); Jean (b.1839); Thomas (b.1842); Agnes (b.1845); and Grace (b.1850). By 1851 he was 'Proprietor of Houses' at 10 Bongate in Jedburgh. He could be the James who was listed as a Steward at the Common-Riding Races of 1836 (see also Haliburton).

Halliday (haw-li-, -lee- di) n. Agnes Davidson see Agnes Davidson Hamilton. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Southdean. His children included Andrew (b.1769) and Jean (b.1772). Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Fodderlee. His son Henry was listed on the Militia ballot for Hobkirk Parish in 1801. Barbara (b.1827/8) daughter of James and Helen Gledstains, born in Cavers Parish. She was sister of the poet John. In 1841 she was living with her mother at Hawickshiels and in 1851 she was a cook at Hallrule House. She may be the Barbara who married George Scott in Hobkirk in 1851; they were living at Stitchilhill in Castleton in 1861. David (b.c.1823) from Coldingham, he was an agricultural labourer in Wilton Parish. In 1851 he was living at 'Dykenook No. 2' with his wife Betsy (from Castleton) and son David. He may be the 'D. Halliday' who donated 2 Scotch to the Museum in 1867. Francis (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His daughter Janet was baptised in 1779. He could be the Francis whose mother 'Widow Haliday' died in Hawick in 1800. George (16th C.) recorded in 1579 as owner of a tenement in Hawick. This was a piece of land on the north side of the High Street, adjacent to the tenement of David, brother to Walter Scott in Chamberlain Newton. The same tenement was owned by John in 1560. George (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Robson in Southdean in 1809. George (19th C.) resident of the Hawick area. He married Mary Chisholme in East Bank Kirk in 1818. Their children (most born in Wilton and some baptised at the East Bank Kirk), included: Andrew (b.1823/3); Walter (b.1827/8); Isobel (b.1830); John (b.1833); and Agnes (b.1836/7). His widow Mary and 5 children were living at 1 Brougham Place in 1851. Helen nee Gledstains (1796/7–1866) mother of poet John and wife of James, who she married in 1817. Her parents were Thomas Gledstains and Helen Leithead and she came from Hawick Parish. In 1841 she was recorded at Hawickshiels with Barbara, probably her daughter. She was 'independent' at that time, suggesting that she was a widow, with enough money to live on. By 1851 she was at Easter Langbaulk (where John also lived for a while), with her grandson James (born in Langholm and working as a stable-boy in Bowden in 1861, although it is unclear who his parents were). In 1861 she was a pauper (formerly farm servant) at Myreslawgreen. It is said that her son John inherited from her a love of Scottish ballads. She died at Myreslawgreen, with another son Walter being a witness to her death certificate. Henry (b.c.1780) son to Andrew at Fodderlee on the 1801 ballot for the Militia in Hobkirk Parish. James (17th C.) flesher in Hawick. He was recorded in 1692 'for publicly selling up and down the town ane carcass of swyne which was leprous, and consequently dangerous to be made use of'. In 1693 he made a wager with fellow butcher Thomas Wilson that one of the lambs Wilson had, he had purchased himself from Burnfoot; Robert Oliver and Robert Scott were charged with deciding the bet and so they all took the lamb to Burnfoot, and when they could find no ewe to mother the lamb they declared that Wilson had won. He was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He could be the James listed as a resident of Hawick 'uest the water' on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls.

He witnessed a baptism for baker Adam Richardson in 1709. He may be the James who married Margaret Dickson, and whose children baptised in Hawick included: William (b.1669); Agnes (b.1671); Margaret (b.1675); and Isobel (b.1681). The witnesses in 1675 were Robert Wright and John Tinlin. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1683 for George Murray, resident of Wilton Parish. James (17th/18th C.) married Agnes Cessford in Bedrule Parish in 1691. John (b.1693), baptised in Bedrule, was probably their son. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. He married Helen Turnbull in 1709 and his son Thomas was baptised in 1710. He was probably related to John, who also had children baptised in Bedrule. James (17th/18th C.) married Janet Scott in 1714, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Bedrule Parishes. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Whithope in 1716 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. James (18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. He married Janet Dodds in 1758 and his son John was baptised in 1761. He may have been related to the earlier James who lived in Bedrule. James (18th/19th C.) cooper in Denholm. He was recorded there on the ballot for the Militia in Cavers Parish in 1799. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Irvine in 1795. Their son John was baptised in 1796 (with the mother's name transcribed as Margaret 'Heron'). James (18th/19th C.) resident of Birkwoodfoot in Kirkton Parish. In 1817 he married Helen Gledstains, who was from Hawick Parish. Their children included: John (b.1821), writer of 'Bonnie Teviotdale'; Walter (b.1823/4); and Barbara (b.c.1825). He probably lived at Hawickshiels, where his son John was born. On his wife's death certificate he is listed as 'Road Labourer' and on his son John's he is listed as a blacksmith. James (b.c.1825) born in Kirkton or Cavers Parish, he was a local ploughman. He married Elizabeth Hogg (from Ashkirk) in Hawick in 1847. In 1851 the couple were living in Lilliesleaf and in 1861 at Branxholme Cottage. He may have been father of George (b.1855), born in Lilliesleaf. It is possible he was closely related to poet John. Janet (18th C.) wife of Robert Scott of Scotsbank. She was recorded several times in her own right in Selkirk documents and was already a widow by 1719. She was 'Lady Scotsbank' in 1724 when a man was sentenced for breaking her garden. She was still alive in 1734. John (16th C.) recorded in 1560 as owner of a tenement on the north side of the High Street, to the west of the one owned by John Short. By 1679 this same tenement was owned by George, who was surely either his son or brother. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His wife was 'Ellisoun' and their son Adam was baptised in 1656. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. He married Helen Turnbull in 1714 and their children included: Anne (b.1715); James (b.1715); Alexander (b.1718); John (b.1720); and Archibald (b.1729). He was surely related to James, who lived in Bedrule at the same time. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He married Janet Renwick and their children inlcuded: Jean (b.1778); and Robert (b.1781). John (1804/5–65) son of Robert and Mary Stewart, he was a sawyer in Jedburgh, originally from Eccles. In 1826 he married Alison Thomson and their son John was a blacksmith in Hawick. It seems reasonable to guess that he was related to the Hawick poet of the same name. John (1821–1902) born at Hawickshiels, a few miles south of Hawick. His parents were James and Helen Gledstains and he appears to have had siblings Barbara and Walter. He was writer of the song 'Bonnie Teviotdale', as well as many poems, collected in the book 'The Rustic Bard'. He only had about 2 years of formal schooling and at the age of 10 was hired as an assistant shepherd by one of the local farmers. He was recorded as a labourer at Skelfhill stables in 1841. Sometime before 1845 he moved to Longbaulk (probably at the bottom end of the 'Lumback') where he lived for a few years before moving to Hobkirk in 1849, where he worked as a hedger, ditcher, harvester, etc. He lived for a while at Drythropple, and developed a reputation as a skilled horticulturalist. Along with Sandy and James Mathieson (gardeners at Weens and Wauchope, respectively), he founded the Hobkirk Flower Show. In 1851 he reported to a local newspaper a story of the appearance of a 'Brocken spectre' (i.e. mirage of a shadow); at that point he was living at 'North Town of Rule'. In 1854 he moved to Bridge of Allan (a different one from where he grew up!), where he was a landscape gardener and florist. He was also said to be an expert angler. He published 'The Rustic Bard: or, A voice from the People' (1847) when living at Longbaulk; this book of verse contains many pieces in local dialect, which are invaluable early published examples of the language. Other contributions include a poem in praise of Henry Scott Riddell, an 'Epistle to W.D' (whose first name was 'Wattie'), a description of the collection of curiosities of Andrew Jamieson and verses to William Oliver of Hallrule. He also features in Dr. Rodgers' 'Scottish Minstrel' (1856). In 1859 he donated a silver coin of Alexander II to the Archæological Society. It is unclear whether he had any local connections after this date, although he will always be remembered for 'Bonnie Teviotdale'. He married Margaret Carruthers in 1847, the marriage being listed in both Hawick and Hobkirk Parishes (she is probably the 'Peggy' in his poems 'O! Dinna Be Wae, Peggie', ' 'Tis Not Her Eyes So Beaming Black' and 'The Gloamin' Stars O'er Whithop Hill'); she was daughter of William Carruthers and Agnes Davidson. He is recorded living with her at North Town o' Rule in 1851. They had a daughter Agnes Davidson in Hobkirk Parish in 1851/2; she married Thomas Hamilton in Logie in 1873, had 3 children (George William Hamilton, Margaret Carruthers Hamilton and John Halliday Hamilton), died in 1908 and is buried in Logie. He is probably the man mentioned at the centenary celebrations for Burns in Bridge of Allan in 1859 when 'a song, composed for the occasion by Mr. John Halliday, and entitled 'The Scottish Folk', was sung by Mr. Dow of Keirfield'. He was certainly in Bridge of Allan in 1861, was a lodging house keeper and vintner at 'Allan Vale' in 1866 and in 1871 was a hotel keeper at the Lady of the Lake Hotel. Also in 1871 he was recorded as secretary of the Workman's Club and Reading Room in Bridge of Allan and in 1872 he was 'a keen angler' of Bridge of Allan when he gave evidence in a legal case involving disputes over fishing for parr. In the 1881 census he was recorded as a nurseryman living with his daughter and her family at Springfield Cottage in Bridge of Allan. He is also recorded as proprietor of the 'Lady of the Lake' in a Bridge of Allan directory in 1870. His wife died in 1877 and he moved to Stirling in 1893, where he stayed with relatives in the Castle Hotel (now housing the gift shop of the Castle). In the Border Magazine for 1896 he is described as maintaining a 'vigorous and hearty old age, his interest in literature, especially poetry, being unabated'. It was also said that he had been urged to issue a revised and extended collection of his poetry, but that never happened. He died in Stirling, being listed as a 'Hotelkeeper' on his death certificate,and is buried at Logie. Biographies of him are included in Rogers' 'The Modern Scottish Minstrel' (1856) and Goodfellow's 'Border Biography' (1890). George Watson gave a talk on him to the Archæological Society in 1917. John (b.1835/6) blacksmith in Hawick, son of John and Alison Thomson. His father was a sawyer in Jedburgh. In 1861 he was a 'Coachwork Journeyman' blacksmith living at 1 Brougham Place (home of other Hallidays, who must have been related) when he married Janet, daughter of postman Archibald Douglas and Barbara Scott. They were married in the Free Kirk, with witnesses Andrew Telfer and Thomas Morrison. His children included: William; Barbara (b.1855), who married James Waldie; Mary (b.1864); John (b.1867); Alison (b.1869); and Archibald (b.1871). The family were living on Teviot Crescent in 1871 and Oliver Crescent in 1883. John (b.1832/3) from Coldingham, in 1861 he was a ploughman at Westerhouses. His wife was Agnes and their children included Agnes and Isabella. Peter (19th C.) resident of Hawick. He was recorded being in Jedburgh Jail in 1832. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included Jant (b.1760), Robert (b.1762) and William (b.1767). He could be the Robert whose marriage to Bettie Bell is recorded in Kirkton in 1753. Robert (18th/19th C.) chaise-driver at Teviotbank in 1797, when he was working for David Simpson. He may be the Robert who married Mary Dickson in Minto Parish in 1788. Robert (19th C.) from Langholm, he was a handloom weaver in Hawick. In 1861 he was living on Ladylaw Place with his wife Ann and children Janet, William and Elizabeth. Thomas (17th C.) recorded in 1689 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick Parish for Adam Elliot and Margaret Halliday (who was probably related). There was a notary in Selkirk at about the same time, who may have been him. He may be the 'Clerk of Selkirk' who was one of the men who perambulated the boundaries of Wilton Common in about 1705. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Beatrix Elliot in 1743 and his daughter Helen was baptised in 1746. Thomas (18th/19th C.) married Mary Scott in Bedrule in 1817. Walter (b.1823/4) born at Southfield, he was son of James and Helen Gledstains and hence brother of the poet John. In 1841 he was a labourer at Huttlerburn farm in Yarrow, in 1851 was working with John Matheson at Ashkirk Smithy and in 1861 he was a journeyman blacksmith in Jedburgh. He married Margaret Oliver and they had a daughter Helen (b.1858). He was witness on his mother Helen's death certificate in Hawick in 1866 and was then living at 5 Abbey Close, Jedburgh. It is possible he was father of James (b.1845/6 in Langholm), recorded as grandson of Helen, living with her at Easter Longbaulk in 1851. Walter (b.1825/6) son of George and Mary Chisholme. In 1854 in Hawick he married Mary, daughter of market-gardener Thomas Leithead. Their children included Mary M.C. (b.c.1854), Barbara (b.c.1856) and George (b.c.1858). In 1861 he was living at Myrselawgreen with his father-in-law and his own family. He was recorded as a market gardener of Myreslawgreen when his daughter Isabella was involved in a paternity suit with mason William Tait in 1880. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Aitchison and their daughter Margaret was baptised in 1724. William (b.c.1768) hemp roper maker on the Back Row, recorded in 1841. His wife was Janet, and their daughter Margaret was also there. Margaret probably married Job Gadd in Hawick in 1854 and was living with her mother Janet on the Loan in 1861. William (19th/20th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Jane Wilson and their children were William, George and Frank. William 'Wull Ha' (1917–85) son of William and brother of Frank and George. He was captured in France and spent much of the WWII in prisoner of war camps in Germany and Poland. Most of his working life was spent in Braemar, where he had a reputation for being a fast knitter and was on the social committee. He was also a member of the Legion and golfed at the Vertish. His children were Sandy and Jean (also written 'Haliday', 'Halieday', 'Halladay', 'Halleday', 'Hallidy', 'Hallyday', 'Halyday', 'Helliday', 'Holyday', etc.).

hallin (haw-lin) n., poet. a cottage, dwelling, inner wall between door and fireplace – 'Hallans, sleekit owre wi' plaister, Glintin' a' as white as snaw, Worthy o' its noble maister, Kitchen, passage, rooms, an' a' ' [JR], 'There's few hearts to pity the wee cowerin' form That sits at your hallin a bield frae the storm' [JT], 'Men bound together in run-rig commonty And in the old unity of hall and hallan, tholing together . . . ' [DH] (also spelled 'hallan').

Halliwell (haw-lee-wel) n. Adam (19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He married Joan Lockie and their son John was baptised in 1843. James (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His daughter Marie was baptised in 1688. James (17th C.) gardener at Whitehaugh in Wilton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. His name is written 'Helliuell'. He is probably the James 'helliwall' who witnessed a baptism for William Telfer in Stirches in 1683 and another for George Scott in 1687. He is probably the James who married Bessie Cowan and whose son James was baptised in 1694. Janet (17th C.) recorded in 1676 when she was fined along with Isabel Stuart for fighting over the placement of their market stalls. Her surname is given as 'Holywell'. John (b.1820/1) from Eckford, he was farm steward at Bairnkine in 1861. His wife was Betsy and their children included Betsy, Richard and John. He is probably the John who in 1858 donated to the Museum a 'jug of black earthenware dug up in a garden in the town'. Robert (13th/14th C.) presented as Prebend of Southdean by Edward II in 1319. His name is written 'Robert de Haliwell' and the church is 'Suthdon'. He was probably English and held the 'living' of the church, but never went there. He is likely the Clerk of this name who petitioned the English King in 1318 and 1321/2 claiming that he had served his King since about 1290, in the Chancery and in several places overseas (crossing the Irish Sea 18 times), and needed support. He was made to resign a church in Wales and asked for an additional church following illness in 1324/5. William (17th C.) resident at Newlands on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hassendean Parish. His name is written 'Halliuall'. He was probably related to James. William (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He married Mary Watson and their children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included: George (b.1704); and Isobel (b.1708). The 1704 baptism was witnessed by fellow shoemaker George Allan and weaver John Swan and the 1708 baptism by Robert and George Allan (also written 'Haliwell', 'Hallowell', 'Helliwall' and 'Holywell'; cf. Holliwell).

Hallmoss (hal-mos) n. boggy area between Drinkstone Hill and the main A7, just north of Groundistone farm. The nearby wood is called Hallmoss Plantation. There has been a claim that part of a Roman road was visible here, as well as an ancient enclosure of some sort.

hallow (ha-low) v., arch. to halloo, make a loud call of derision – '. . . by cryeing themselve and hounding others to cry publickly and loudly to hallow out at windows and too hout the baylyeas when passing by . . . ' [BR1706].

Hallrule (haw-, hawl-rool) n. hamlet about 8 miles east of Hawick, between Bonchester and Bedrule. It was formerly a major estate of Hobkirk Parish. Much of the land of the farm there had been the Common of the barony of Feu-Rule and the farm may also have been known as the Mains of Feu-Rule. James White was a resident there in 1493. The lands are recorded being held by George Turnbull in 1493 and 1502, and in 1516 the tenants were Robert, William and Thomas Turnbull. The town there was burned by the Marquis of Dorset's men in 1523 and the tower burned by the English in 1545. The lands passed from Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus to Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1581. In the late 16th and early 17th centuries the Laird of half the lands was George Turnbull, and through his daughter Isobel they appear to have passed to the Turnbulls of Barnhills. Hector Turnbull of Barnhill was decalred a rebel and lost his lands to Alexander, Lord Home before 1602. In that year a gang of Armstrongs and Elliots attacked the farm, killed the shepherd John Wilson, and drove off about 120 sheep. It may be among the lands in Feu-Rule granted to Gilbert Eliott by Andrew Kerr, Lord Jedburgh in 1629. It is said that the Eliotts of Stobs gained the lands through some underhand method. The 'town' is mentioned in 1632 along with the Mains of Feu-Rule 'alias Fewroule vocatis Halroule' when the superiority was inherited by Robert, son of Andrew Ker of Faldonside. In 1649 parts of the Barony of Feu-Rule were erected into the Barony of Hallrule, and held by William Eliott of Stobs in the mid-17th century. By 1678 Eliott of Stobs owned lands there valued at £2142, and were merged with 2 pieces of land of Hawthornside valued at £211. The farms of 'Over and Nether Hallrule with mill thereof' are listed among the properties of Sir William Eliott of Stobs in the late 17th century. The farm was still in the Barony of Cavers when that was inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687, when transcribed 'Dowallrowl', and by his brother Archibald in 1698, when transcribed 'Dewallroull'. William Buckham was there in 1694, paying for 4 hearths, while George Brown and Walter Brown were also householders on the lands (and 3 other poor householders were additionally listed). In 1709 the Barony of Hallrule was transcribed as consisting of 'Helme, midle with mill, Hangingside, Burrel [probably Billerwell], Roulweens [perhaps Bedrule and Weens], Hathernsyde, Seasewholhous, Pleulandhill, Bonhouse, Appsdsyde with mill, Harrot with mill, Tithous with 4 parts of Riddmaburne'. In 1725 Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs gave the east side (valued at £414) to his son John. John Laik was there in 1739. In 1779 the Barony had been broken down into parts, including: 'Inner-Halrule, consisting of six inclosures', valued at £493 17s 8d; 'Over-Halrule', valued at £832 12s 5d; 'Mill and mill lands of Halrule', valued at £136 9s 10d; Billerwell; and Hawthornside. Andrew Currie and then George Currie were tenants there in the 18th century, as well as Barries. William Scott was there in 1788. In the 1788 county valuation the farm (including Billerwell) was valued at £2144 16s 8d and owned by Sir Francis Eliott of Stobs. George Rae and John Scott were servants there in 1797. The residents in 1799 included John Wilson, James Amos, William Scott and George Hope. William Turnbull, Thomas Dalgleish, John Wilson and Andrew Currie were all servants there in 1801. The farm was sold to John Wilson in about 1803, and he had the modern house built there. The farms of Inner and Outer Hallrule are described in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, with the part to the west belonging to Sir William Eliott (valued at £428 11s 6d) and the part to the east belonging to John Wilson of Hallrule (valued at £404 11d). John Wilson's part lay 'on the north-side of the public road to Weens, bounded by Billerwell march on the east; by the top of Ruberslaw, where march stones are placed, on the nort; by the said public road on the south, and on the west, forty-four yards west from the west-side of the gate next Halrule, leading to Town-o'-Rule in a straight line to the top of Ruberslaw, passing close by the Clump of Firs, the east fence of which is the march'. Wilson also owned 5 of the 6 enclosures of Inner Hallrule (valued at £427 4s 2d), purchasing them from Sir William Elliot and disponing the north-east one to Thomas Cleghorn of Weens. James and then Daniel Mather were tenants from the early 1800s; Daniel had a large cairn removed, inside of which was found an 'urn' with a herringbone-type pattern (now lost). The mansion there was occupied by Peter Pennycook in the 1860s and was a home of the Ushers of Norton and Wells. There was also once probably a small threshing mill there, powered by water from a pond. The farm contains part of Ruberslaw, and 2 Roman coins were once found here. The former farmhouse had a couple of good rooms in it known as 'the Laird's Rooms', where the Eliotts would stay sometimes when they visited the farm. There is a tradition that Lord Heathfield was born there during one such visit. The farm is fairly well-wooded and contains a walled garden, as well as a new pond. There was once a small school there, where Robert Nichol was teacher in 1726 (formerly written 'Haroull', etc., it is 'Haw of Roull' in 1484/5, 'aula de Roull' in 1493, 'Aula de Rule' in 1494/5, 'Hawroull' in 1502, 'Hawroull' in 1508, 'Fewhawroull' in 1511, 'Halroule' in 1516, 'Halrowle' in 1526, 'Halrowll' in 1527, 'Hallrewll' in 1557, 'Halroule' in 1561, 'Halroull' in 1562, 'Halrowll' in 1574, 'Halrowle' in 1576, 'Halrowll' and 'Halroule' in 1581, 'Halrowll' in 1581/2, 'Halroull' in 1595, 'Hall Roull' in 1602, 'Halrowll' in 1603, 'Halroule' and 'Hallroull' in 1606, 'Hallreule' in 1649, 'Halroull' in 1686, 'Hallroull' and 'Harroull' in 1694 and 'Harule' in 1760 and 1797; it is 'Hal of Roull' on Pont's c.1590 manuscript map, 'Hall of Roul' on Gordon's c.1650 map and 'Hall of Roull' on Blaeu's 1654 map; it has its modern spelling by Stobie's 1770 map).

Hallrule Common (hawl-rool-ko-min) n. former name for lands in the southern part of the farm of Hallrule. It is recorded in a charter of 1606 when Hobsburn and Weens were sold to John Scott. It marked the northern boundary of these lands, and is stated to be 'the lands called the Common of Halroule'.

Hallrule Mill (hawl-rool-mil) n. former corn mill and farm at Hallrule, long tenanted by the Turnbulls. The mill lands (and 1/6th of the multures) were assigned to Agnes Herries, following the Baronial dispute over Feu-Rule in 1562. In 1574 it was recorded that the whole of the Barony of Feu-Rule 'is thirlit to the mylne'. The mill passed to Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1581. The earliest named tenant on record is 'Walter Ammous' in 1685. 'Walter Almes' was still there in 1694, when he paid tax on 3 hearths 'for himself and cottar'. In the following centuries it was often let along with the farm of Hallrule. It was owned by the Eliotts of Stobs in the 18th and early 19th centuries. In 1779 it was valued at £136 9s 10d. Robert Turnbull was tenant there in at least 1797–1801. It was purchased by Thomas Cleghorn in 1805 and added to his Weens estate. In 1811 it was valued at £136 9s 10d. It is recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory and Slater's 1852 directories, when the miller was James Laidlaw. He remained until 1855 when William Bell purchased the farm from Eliott of Stobs (it recorded as 'mylne of Habroule' in 1574, 'Ha roul Miln' in a charter of 1649, 'Harroulmylne' in 1694 and 'Harulemiln' in 1797; it is marked on Blaeu's 1654 map and Stobie's 1770 map).

Hall's (hawlz) n. fishmonger's shop next to the Town Hall in the mid-20th century, which also used to have game hanging on hooks outside the windows.

Hally Well (haw-lee-wel) n. former spring to the south-east of Hallywell Hill, between Newton and Groundistone Heights on the A7. Francis Well is right beside the road, further south (it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Hallywell Hill (haw-lee-wel-hil) n. small hill just to the east of the A7 after the turn for Boonraw. The name comes from the nearby spring, although any connection to anything holy is unknown.

halse (hals) v., poet. to hug, embrace – 'Nell Cameron is a woe woman; Nae blythsume wean has she, To halse hir necke, to pat hir brieste, Or fondle atte hir knee' [WiSp] (cf. hass).

Halswelle (hals-wel) n. Keeley (1831–91) English artist. He was known for book illustrations and later as an oil painter. He lived in Edinburgh in about the period 1854–63. In 1856 he came to Hawick as part of a theatre troupe, designing the sets and also taking part as a performer for their 9-day engagement. Under the pseudonym Charles K. Tynte he prepared a series of sketches based on the troupe's time in Hawick, which was published as 'Notes Hawikianæ'.

Haltwhistle (hawl'-whi-sul) n. town in north-eastern Cumbria, important in rieving days, having several existing towers and strongholds. It was a seat of the Ridley family.

haly (hā-lee) adj., arch. holy – '... that on the Wednysday next efter the Feest offe the Inuencioun off the Haly Cros ...' [SB1431], '... hame-comin (hām-cu-min) n. a coming home – '... an' she believed him, an' liked him, an' waited for his hame-coming' [JTe].

the Hame-Comin (thu-hām-cu-min) n. the Home-Coming, the name given to the celebrations organised for Hawick people from overseas returning for the Quater-Centenary celebrations of 1914. This was originally suggested by the Callants' Club, and consisted of a reception the Friday and Saturday before the Common Riding, along with the Pageant and other events for visitors.

hamelt (hā-mult) adj., poet. belonging to home, domestic, native – 'Dame Fortune hath unto thee mateit Mair hamilt place ...' [JoHa], 'Sae dainty an' douce in my hamilt stuff-goon ...' [JoHa], 'Whae that gangs away ... will be at the pains to think of a puir, hamilt sweetheart, that hasna sae muckle as a gown till her back?' [JTe] (also written 'hamilt').

hamely (hām-lee) adv. homely – 'When mindin' neither wind nor weather, I sat an' coin'd the hamely blether' [JR], 'The hamely plain, I'll make my ain, And lo'e while I hae life' [JoHa], '... hamework (hām-wurk) n. homework – '... Henry finally gittin sent hame ti Howahill wi hamework frae the teacher!' [IHS].

Hamilton (haw-mul-tin, -mul'-in) n. Agnes Davidson nee Halliday (1851/2–1908) only known child of local poet John Halliday and his wife Margaret Carruthers. She was born in Hobkirk Parish and moved with her parents to Bridge of Allan just a couple of years later. She married Thomas Hamilton in Logie in 1873; he was born in 1841 in Lesmahagow and in 1881 was recorded as a 'Commercial Traveller (Wine)'. Their children were: George William (1874–1930); Margaret Carruthers (1877–97); and John Halliday (1879–83). Her husband probably died in the 1880s. She was living with her father in Bridge of Allan in 1861 and in 1871 when he was a hotel keeper at the Lady of the Lake Hotel there. In 1881 she was living with her family at Springfield Cottage in Bridge of Allan. They moved to Stirling in 1893 and in 1897 she is recorded living on the Esplanade there, probably working at Stirling Castle Hotel, where Thomas Low was proprietor; she herself was proprietor in directories of 1903 and 1907. This building now houses the gift shop of the Castle. She is buried in Logie Parish Cemetery. Andrew (d.bef. 1637) probably son of Andrew of St. John's Chapel and grandson of James of St. John's Chapel and Sprouston. He was described as 'in Harret' (i.e. Harwood in the Rule valley) in 1609 when Margaret Turnbull brought a court action against him for intrusion onto the lands of Tythehouse. He was also witness to the succession of his Francis (probably his cousin) and served as his 'curator'. Capt. Archibald C. (1881–1915) son of Dr. John R. and brother of Dr. James O. He worked in Burma and was killed at Gallipoli. Charles (c.1650–85) 5th Earl of Haddington, son of John. He was served heir to his father in 1670 in many lands, including those once belonging to Melrose Abbey. The local lands were Hassendeanbank, Brieryyards, Clerkcroft, Cresswell, Hornshole and Crook, as well as Rodono, Thirlestane and others in Ettrick. He also held the feu duties of Friarshaw, as well as owning most of the lands in Melrose Parish and others in Maxton and Lessuden according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1678. Della nee Oliver (1938/9–2016) she was Cornet's Lass to Billy Cavers in 1949 and was Diamond Jubilee Lass in 2009. She married Dr. Rory and they lived at Bucklands. She had children Peter and Susan. Elizabeth (1758–1816) born in Belfast of Scottish parents, she became a writer, particularly of essays. She is best known for her novel 'The Cottagers of Glenburnie' (1808), which is seen as a forerunner of the 'Kailyard' style. It was supposedly based around Wilton Dean, and written during a visit with James Anderson in Wilton Lodge. Francis (16th/17th C.) son of James of St. John's Chapel, from whom he succeeded to the lands of Appotside and Tythehouse in the Rule valley in 1610. In 1630 he granted a sasine of Appotside and Tythehouse to the minister William Weir, who was his brother-in-law. He is recorded as a witness to the 1632 sale of Harwood to Gilbert Eliott by Edward Lorraine and Rev. William Weir and gave his permission for the sale of Appotside and Tythehouse to Edward Lorraine. He could be the 'Mr. Francis Hamilton' who wrote to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1624 regarding the plot by Robert Elliot to murder Scott; he was clearly a friend of John Murray (the Earl of Annandale), Elliot's brother-in-law, and stated that Elliot should be saved for the sake of Murray. He may have moved to Baillieborough in Ireland. Rev. Gavin James (1777–1837) son of Gavin from Blackwood, Douglas. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Lanark in 1799 and ordained as minister at Harbottle in Northumberland in 1809. He was presented to Ashkirk Parish in late 1810 (by Lady Minto and her son Gilbert Elliot, Commissioners of Lord Minto, who was in Bengal) and became the new minister there in 1811. He served as Presbytery Clerk. In 1809 he was preparing essays on agricultural topics, under the patronage of the Board of Agriculture, but this never appeared in publication. He had a debt to Mr. Pringle, in letters preserved in the Walter Mason Collection in 1814 and 1815. There is an existing letter from him in 1823, regarding Captain Napier's commission to the General Assembly and there are other surviving latters involving business with Selkirk in 1818 and 1831. He compiled the entry on Ashkirk Parish for the 'New Statistical Account of Scotland'; this was prepared for publication by Walter Todd, since he died before it was due to appear. He suffered from ill health and had an assistant for the last 5 years. In 1809 at Hawick Manse (suggesting a previous connection with the area) he married Mary, only daughter of James Walker of Antigua, and they had children. Their daughter Joanna married Thomas Thorburn. Helen (20th C.) Hawick's first female plumber, working for the Gas Company in the 1940s. James (c.1415–79) son of James of Cadzow. He was closely connected with the Douglases. He became 1st Lord Hamilton in 1445. In 1471/2 he presented the marriage contract between Archibald, Earl of Angus, and Sir David Scott of Buccleuch. He leased the lands of Craig Douglas in 1459, Winterburgh, Altrieve and Berrybush in Yarrow in 1469 and Craig Douglas in 1478. He married Euphemia Graham, widow of Archibald, 5th Earl of Douglas. He was thus step-father of William, 6th Earl of Douglas and Margaret, the 'Fair Maid of Galloway'. He secondly married Mary, daughter of King James II. He was succeeded by his son James, 1st Earl of Arran. James (c.1475–1529) Earl of Arran, son of James, 1st Lord Hamilton. He helped negotiate the marriage James IV with Margaret Tudor and was created Earl of Arran on their wedding day. He was appointed Lieutenant General of Scotland, and commanded the Scottish fleet in 1513. He opposed Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus in the power struggles during the minority of King James V, and was defeated by Angus' men in the 'Cleanse the Causeway' riot in Edinburgh in 1520. In 1522 he became Lieutenant of the South. Sometime before 1526 there was an attempt to capture him, made by a force headed by George, Lord Home, and David Home of Wedderburn. This force included about 160 Borderers, many of them Scotts, Turnbulls, Pringles, etc., and all of whom received remission for their crimes; the list is useful in containing family relationships among some local families. He eventually received the lands of Bothwell from the forfeited estates of the Earl of Angus. He was listed in 1526/7 among prominent men charged by James V not to attack the lands of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, John Cranston of that Ilk and Walter Scott of Synton while those men were in 'respite' for the charge of treason. He firstly married Elizabeth, daughter of Alexander, 2nd Lord Home; this wedding was annulled when it was discovered that his wife's first husband had still been alive. He secondly married Janet, daughter of David Bethune of Creich. He was succeeded as 2nd Earl of Arran by his son James and also had many other children, including Joanna (who married Alexander Cunningham, 5th Earl of Glencairn) and at least 14 who were illegitimate. There were several called after him: Sir James of Finnart, Lord of Session; James, Bishop of Argyll and Lismore; and James of St. John's Chapel and Sprouston, whose daughter Marion married Robert Elliot of Redheugh. James (c.1516–75) 2nd Earl of Arran, son of James, 1st Earl. He was next in line to the throne after James V's only child, Mary Queen of Scots and was Regent of Scotland during Mary's minority. He became a Catholic and consented to the marriage of Mary to the French Dauphin, this leading to the Rough Wooing. He may have been present at the Battle of Ancrum Moor in 1545. He remained involved in Scottish politics, until 1565 when he moved to France, but returned to imprisonment in Scotland in 1569. He married Margaret, daughter of James Douglas, 3rd Earl of Morton. He was succeeded by his son James, who he tried at one point to marry to Elizabeth I of England and to Queen Mary. James (d.1580) illegitimate son of James, 1st Earl of Arran and brother of John, Archbishop of St. Andrews. He was nominated as Archbishop of Glasgow in 1547, but rejected the following year, largely due to his illegitimacy. Hence he was almost Hawick's Archbishop. However, he later received papal dispensation and was appointed Bishop of Argyll. He later became a Protestant. James of St. John's Chapel and Sprouston (d.1585) younger illegitimate son of James, 1st Earl of Arran. He married Marie, daughter of Patrick Hepburn of Fairnington. His children included: John of St. John's Chapel (d.1587), who married a Cairncross of Colmslie; Patrick (d.1598); James of Harwood (d.c.1610); Andrew of St. John's Chapel; Thomas of Telstane; and also probably Alexander, Marion, Margaret, Nicholas and Jane. James (d.c.1610) son of James of St. John's Chapel and Sprouston. He was sometimes referred to as being 'of Harwood'. A contract of 1598 with Hector Lorraine describes how he loaned money to the Loraines, with the reversion of Harwood and Appotside residing with him. The amount was increased to almost £1200 by 1600. By 1602 he had a feu charter of the lands of Tythehouse and Appotside, as well as having confirmation from the superior, William Maxwell, Lord Herries, that he held the right of marriage of Hector Lorraine, as well as the reversion of Harwood and Hawthornside. He probably arranged the marriage between Hector Lorraine and his niece, daughter of Robert Elliot of Redheugh and his sister Marion Hamilton. However, the Lorraines were unable to repay the 'wadset' to him, and the lands legally changed hands some time in the early 17th century, confirmed by a disposition of 1630 and 'charter of alienation' in 1632 (where he is referred to as the 'deceased James Hamiltoun of Harwood'). His son Francis inherited Appotside and Tythehouse from him in 1610. In 1619 it is recorded that Edward Lorraine was required to marry Margaret Hamilton, sister to his heir Francis. He married Jean, sister of William Cairncross of Colmslie; she was sister of his brother John's wife. His children included: Francis of Harwood; Andrew of Killenover, Donegal; Jean, who married James Chisholm of Gornewood and secondly Patrick Kincaid of Edinburgh; a daughter who married John Ballyboe of Mulenard; John; and William. James (17th C.) Hawick resident, mentioned in a court case of 1673. He stated that his wife's garment was whole before John Scott and his wife 'intromitted therewith'. Hence Scott was guilty of cutting the 'goune-tail'. He could be the James who was married to Bessie Scott, and whose son Robert was born in Hawick in 1673 (with witnesses William Paterson and William Laing). James (b.c.1800) stockingmaker of the West End. He may be the man of that name who was listed among people to have contracted cholera, but recorvered, in 1832. In 1841 he was at about 17 Loan with his wife Jean and their children Robert, Charles, James, John, Ann, Margaret and Thomas. James (19th C.) resident of Cincinnatti. He was made an Honorary Member of the Archæological Society in 1858. Dr.

James Oliver 'Oliver' (1886–1938) son of John R. and father of Rory. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1908. In Hawick he went into partnership with his father and continued the practice after his death. He joined the R.A.M.C. Reserve of Officers in 1910 and served with them when war broke out. He was in charge of No. 4 Ambulance Train, B.E.F., France when he was discharged due to ill-health in 1917. He then became Commandant of the Hawick Military Hospital. He was a keen rugby supporter and was President of Hawick R.F.C. in 1914. He was also one of the early local car owners. In 1919 he moved to the South of England, performing bacteriological research in Bournmouth. He then took up a position in the Barbados and travelled extensively. In 1916 he married Sara Chisholm (who died in 1938). Their son Rory was also a doctor in Hawick. He died at his home in Edinburgh at the age of 52, effectively as a result of his war disability. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. Jean (16th/17th C.) daughter of John of St. John's Chapel and sister of Marion and Margaret, who jointly inherited the Lordship of Winnington in 1610. The lands consisted of Winningtonhall and mill there, Swinstead, Over and Nether Kirkwoodhead, Brandside and Horselee, as well as some land in Jedburgh. She married Walter Bellenden, brother of the Laird of Auchmuill. John of St. John's Chapel (d.1587) son of James of St. John's Chapel and Sprouston. He married Margaret Cairncross, sister of the Laird of Colmslie, and secondly married Margaret Nichol. His daughters and co-heiresses were Margaret, Marion and Jean, who are mentioned in 1593, by which time he was deceased. In 1610 his 3 daughters inherited the lands of Winnington as heirs to their great-grandfather Patrick Hepburn. Their names were listed as 'Maria', 'Jeanna' and 'Margareta' and the lands consisted speifically of Winningtonhall and mill there, Swinstead, Over and Nether Kirkwoodhead, Brandside and Horselee. Rev. John (16th C.) minister at Ashkirk from 1570, being presented to the parsonage on the death of John Murie. He was thus the first parish minister after the Reformation. John Scott was recorded as Reader in 1574, but they may have overlapped. John (1626–69) 4th Earl of Haddington, younger brother of Thomas, 3rd Earl, whom he succeeded in 1645. He also had the titles of Lord Byres and Binningand succeeded to the superiority of lands previously held by Melrose Abbey, including Hassendeanbank, Brieryyards, Clerkcroft, Cresswell, etc. In 1655 he must have held the superiority of the Barony of Hassendean when he gave a 'precept of clare constat' to Thomas Turnbull for the lands of Cockerheugh. He is probably the Earl of Haddington recorded paying tax in Lilliesleaf Parish in about 1663. He married Christian, daughter of John Lindsay, 17th Earl of Crawford. He was succeeded by his son Charles. John Rankine (b.1822/3) born in Bathgate, he was teacher at Minto School in the 1850s and 1860s. One of his pupils was James 'Dictionary' Murray. He was at 'School House' in Minto in 1851, with his sister Margaret as his housekeeper, a servant and 5 boarders. He was also listed there on Slater's 1852 directory. In 1861 he was recorded as Parochial Schoolmaster, living with his wife, 3 children, a servant and a boarder. He also served as Heritors' Clerk, Session Clerk, Kirk Treasurer, Registrar and Inspector of Poor for the Parish. In 1854 he married Jane Tait, eldest daughter of Alexander Robertson. Their children included Isabella, Robert and Alexander R. Dr. John Rogerson (d.1916) born in Dumfriesshire, he was grandfather of Rory. He was a local doctor who was the main instigator for the setting up of the Cottage Hospital. He lived at Elm House, which he had built for him. He was also known for showing Irish Terriers, and was President of the Ornithological Society. He was Chairman of the Scottish Committee of the British Medical Association when war broke out in 1914, and helped coordinate medical services in Scotland during WWI. J.C. Goodfellow dedicated his 1911 collection of verses to him. He married Alice Mary, eldest daughter of the second marriage of James Oliver of Thornwood. Their sons were: Archibald (1881–1915), who died at Gallipoli; and Dr. James Oliver (b.1886), who continued his practice. He wrote 'Medical Morality as Influenced by Education' (1899). Margaret (16th/17th C.) daughter of John of St. John's Chapel and grand-daughter of James. She was sister of Marion and Jean, who jointly inherited the Lordship of Winnington on 1610. She married Robert Home of Carronsyde. Marion (d.1619) daughter of John of St. John's Chapel and sister of Jean and Margaret. Her name is transcribed as 'Mania Hammiltoune' in 1610 when she and her sisters inherited their great-grandfather Patrick Hepburn's Lordship of Winnington. Patrick (17th C.) recorded in 1651 when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott of Harwood in Hawick. Richard (15th C.) listed as a witness to the sasine for the lands of Kirkton Mains and Flex in 1464/5. His name is recorded as 'Ricardo Hammyltoune'. Robert (16th C.) recorded as Reader at Minto in 1579. Dr. Roderick 'Rory' (1920–1999) born in Torquay, both his father and grandfather being Hawick doctors, he was a doctor himself in Hawick for 38 years. He served on the Town Council from 1966, the Regional Council from 1975 and the District Council from 1985–88. Sometimes referred to as 'Rory the Tory', he was known for his magnanimous gestures (e.g. opening a local swimming gala by jumping in fully clothed). He also wrote the 'Golfer's Guide to Wee Places' (1980). He married Della Oliver. Steven (1982/3–) motor racing engineer from Hawick. He attended St. Margaret's and the High School, then completed a computer science degree at St. Andrew's University. He later earned a Masters degree in engineering, eventually moving into the world of Formula-1 racing, where he worked for Ferrari in 2012, Mercedes 2013–17 and Force India from 2018, later called Racinf Point F1 and then Aston Martin. Sir Thomas 'Tam o the Cowgate' (1563–1637) son of Thomas of Priestfield, he was a lawyer in Edinburgh who served as an Avocate, Senator of the College of Justice, Lord President of the Court of Session, Lord Clerk Register, Principle Secretary of State and Lord Privy Seal. In 1612, as Lord Advocate, he obtained a decree before the Lords of Council and Session against people in the Hawick area who had charged more than 10 percent interest. Also in 1612, when he was Lord Clerk Register, he made an index of royal charters and other ancient Scottish documents. This was described in 1798 in a book edited by William Robertson and usually referred to as 'Robertson's Index'. Since many of these charters were lost, the index forms an invaluable record of early Scottish history. He became Lord of Session as Lord Duncairn, was raised to the peerage as Lord Binning in 1616, then created Earl of Melrose in 1619 and finally 1st Earl of Haddington in 1627. He gained the superiority of lands that had been held by Melrose Abbey (and latterly by John Ramsay, Earl of Holderness), including those in upper Teviotdale. He is recorded in a charter of 1619 granting the lands of 'Horneshoill' to Thomas, 2nd son of Thomas Turnbull of Minto. In 1621 the Earl of Buccleuch resigned the lands in Ringwoodfield to him. He also held lands in Belses that he leased in 1632 and that same year he feued Firth to Hector Turnbull and also feued lands in Ruecastle and Raperlaw. He probably sold the superiority of Melrose to the Scotts of Buccleuch. He married Margaret, daughter of James Borthwick of Newbyres and secondly Margaret Foulis and was succeeded by his son Thomas. Thomas Lord Binning (1600–40) son of 1st Earl of Haddington, he became 2nd Earl. This included inheriting his father's lands in Roxburghshire and elsewhere, including superiority of lands formerly held by Melrose Abbey. There is a charter of Charles I to him for lands in the Borders, including 'Hassindenbank, Breiryairdis, Clerkcroft, Kerswell in Hassingtoun, Hornishoill, Craighous' and others. He signed the National Covenant in 1638 and served as a Major under Gen. Leslie. He was killed in a massive explosion in the powder magazine at Dunglass Castle only 3 years after succeeding. He married Catherine, daughter of John Erskine, 18th Earl of Mar. He was succeeded by his son, also Thomas. Thomas of Binning and the Byres (1626–45) son of Thomas, he became 3rd Earl of Haddington. In 1640 he was served heir to the extensive lands of his father, including the superiority of lands formerly held by Melrose Abbey. This included Hassendeanbank, Brieryyards, Clerkcroft, Kerswell and Hornshole. He is listed as owner of most of the lands in Melrose Parish in 1643. He also held feu-duty for Riddell and Friarshaw in Lilliesleaf Parish. William (19th/20th C.) resident of Earlside. In 1906 he and his wife contributed to the fudn for renovating Kirkton Kirk. W.F. (20th C.) Burgh Surveyor in the 1940s.

hammermen (haw-mur-men) n. once one of the 7 incorporated trades in Hawick, which until 1861 had two representatives on the Town Council. They were incorporated by an Act of the Town Council in 1686, giving them the right to test workmanship at fairs and markets, and fine and punish accordingly. They consisted of smiths, coopers, millwrights, engineers, joiners, masons, etc. In some processions they wore white trousers trimmed with a black stripe down the side. In 1715 there was a dispute between them and the weavers over precedence in seats in the gallery in St. Mary's Kirk. In 1836 there were 17 hammermen in the incorporation, each paying 1 shilling admission fee. The trades' books belonging to this incorporation were donated to the Museum in 1862 – '. . . to the effect the haill hamermen within the said brough and friedome therof convein and meitt together at ilk tyme they shall be required be the dicones or quartermasters . . . ' [BR1686], '. . . the elders convened to take away ye debates and diffrences among ye hammermen and tradesmen, possessors of ye loft in ye church' [PR1715].

hamp (hawp) v., poet. to stammer, stutter – 'If ye 'bout it hamp and hay My gontrans, lass, ye soon will fin' A wilfu' man maun hae his way' [HSR].

Hampden (hawm-din) n., arch. a radical, defender of rights – 'On reaching Denholm the company was greatly augmented by the village Hampdens' [RM] (inspired by a quotation from Grey's 'Elegy in a Country Churchyard', deriving from radical 17th century parliamentarian John Hampden).

hancefurth (hans-furth) adv., poet. henceforth – 'For I say untill yow, Ye sallna see me hancefurth, til ye sall say, Blisset is he that comith in the name o' the Lord' [HSR], 'But I say untill yow, I wullna drink hancefurth o' the frut o' the vine' [HSR].

hanch (hansh) v., arch. to snap, bite, particularly said of a dog when food is thrown at it, – 'May ye ne'er want a freen', gin need Should show his ganchin, snackin head Nor ill health gie you a screed, Wi's hanchin' teeth' [JoHa], to eat greedily, chomp – '. . . a stane-nappin injin gaed-on leike a tuim mill, – skrunshin – chaampin – haanshin' [ECS], to show the teeth, snarl (also written 'hansh').

handiconeive (hawn-dee-ko-nīv) adv., arch. conjointly, with joint action and sharing, especially in a secretive enterprise – 'We'se gae handiconeive about' [JoJ].

handlaclap (hawnd-lu-klawp) n., arch. a moment, handclap of time 'Handclap, a moment; q. as much time as is required for clapping the hands together, 'In a handclap', in a moment, Scotia Borealis, Roxb.; sometimes handlaclap' [JoJ] (also hantlaclap).

Hand Sike (hawnd-sīk) n. small stream in Liddesdale, adjacent to the farm of Mangerton.

hang (hawng) n. euphemism for 'hell' – '. . . A henni seen the forecast for the next ride-oots bit A hope ti hang hei gits nice weather' [We] (note that this is never hing).

hang (hawng) pp., arch. hung – '. . . an, ferrer up . . . hang another caal, leike a bruch roond a muin' [ECS] (also written 'haang'; this was once a past tense for hing, with the past participle being 'hung', as in English).

hangit (hawng-ee', -i') pp., poet. hanged – '. . . an' left them, an' gaed an' hanget himsel' [HSR].

Hanganay (hawng-ga-nā) n., arch. last day of the year, Hogmanany, also a gift given to children on this day – 'As long as Allars House existed, the bairns got their 'hanganay' every Old Year's Day' [JTu] (also written 'Hanginay'; cf. Hogmanay and Hangmanay).

Hangerhope (hawng-ur-hōp) n. former farmstead situated on the slopes of Whiteacres Hill, to the south-east of Kaimend. The ruin is marked on the 1863 Ordance Survey map. Hangerhope Plantation is marked on current maps.

Hangingshaw (hawng-in-shaw) n. site of 15th century house in the Yarrow valley, near Yarrowford, stronghold of 'the Outlaw Murray'. These were Crown lands in the late 15th century, leased by John and Patrick Murray. The lands remained with the Murray family for about 300 years. It was raided by 'traitors of Leven' brought in by Philip Turnbull in Whithope and David Turnbull in Carlinpool, who had remission for these crimes in 1502. John Murray held the lease until at least 1513. In 1527 Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme paid 500 merks to James Murray of Falahill for slaughter and spoliation at these lands. And in 1535 the lands were named among those claimed to have been raided by Robert Scott of Allanhaugh. In 1541 the lands were owned by Patrick Murray of Hanigingshaw (also of Falahill), with a rental of £50. The 18th century mansion built there burned down in about 1768, and the present house dates from 1846, after the estate was purchased by Sir James Johnstone of Westerhall. Tradition states that the custom of the Murrays was to make visitors drink an intoxicating amount of ale from the 'Hangingshaw Ladle' – 'Auld Juden he strayed by the side of a river, When the watcher on Hanginshaw-law loud did cry, – 'Ho, Juden, take care! or ye're ruined for ever, The bugle of Aekwood has thrice sounded high' ' [ES] (it is 'Hangandschaw' in 1456, 1468, 1484, 1494 and 1501, 'Hangingschaw' in 1502, 'Hangandschau' in 1507 and 1527 and, 'Hangynschaw' in 1535 and 'Hangitschaw' in 1541; it is 'Hangingshaw' and 'Hanginshaw' on Gordon's c.1650 maps and 'Hanginshaw' on Blaeu's 1654 map; there are places of the same name elsewhere, e.g. opposite Heriot).

Hangingshaw Hill (hawng-in-shaw-hil) n. hill in the upper Ale valley, to the west of Borthwickshiels. It reaches a height of 319 m. There are signs of an unenclosed settlement on the southern slopes. There is an old enclosure on the western side. Gilbert 'de Hanguydeschawe' in the county of Roxburgh, who swore fealty to Edward I in 1296 may have been connected with these lands (there is a hill of the same name near Woden Law in Hownam Parish).

Hangingside (hawng-in-sīd) n. former name for Hawthornside or perhaps adjacent or overlapping lands, in use in the 16th century. The lands were given to Richard of Hangingside after William Lorraine transferred his allegiance to the English King. 'Jock o the Park' Elliot held the lands in the late 16th century. The existence of a tower house there is suggested by the Peel Knowe just north-west of Hawthornside, and it is said that stone from the tower were used to build the new farmhouse. Gilbert Eliott of Stobs received a charter of the lands from the King in 1621 and his son William was served as his heir to the lands in 1645. In early times the farm may have been part of the Barony of Feu-Rule. It was incorporated into the Barony of Hallrule in 1649 (when both 'Hangingside' and 'Hathernsyde' were listed). Douglas of Cavers held the superiority until at least 1698. William Eliott of Stobs was served heir to his father in the lands of 'Hangansyde' in 1645 and it was listed in the late 17th century among the Eliott of Stobs properties in the Barony of Feu-Rule. It must have been soon after that the modern name of 'Hawthornside' was adopted. The land appears to have given rise to a surname (or vice versa), since the land was owned by Hangingside of that Ilk, but only for about half a century. This surname may have later been confounded with Handyside. The naming situation is more complicated, however, since the Hanganside family existed earlier, owning lands at Newton Don from the late 14th century (it was 'Hangansyde' in 1621 and 'Hanginsyde' in 1687 and 1698).

Hangingside (hawng-in-sīd) n. Adam (15th C.) recorded as 'Adam de Hangaldside' in 1426 when he was on an inquest for Walter Scott of Rankilburn inheriting his father's lands of Eilrig. A man of the same name was recorded as a monk of Melrose Abbey in Scott of Buccleuch document of 1519 and 1524. Alexander of that Ilk (16th C.) son of Richard. There is a confirmation in 1563 of a charter from his father of a third of the lands of Little Newton in Lauderdale. In 1595 his heirs were Helen and Barbara, presumably his daughters. He may thus have been the last in the male line. Alexander (16th/17th C.) probably son of John. He was a skinner in Edinburgh. In 1617 he married Margaret Symington in Edinburgh. Helen (16th/17th C.) probably daughter of Alexander of that Ilk. She and her sister Barbara, were 'heirs portioner' of Alexander. In 1595 they resigned the lands of Little Newton in Lauderdale to her and her husband Alexander Weddell. And in a crown charter of 1598 the 2 sisters resigned the lands of Hangansyde (probably the same as Hawthornside) to Alexander 'Woddell'. She still held Little Newton in 1615, along with her 2nd husband Alexander McDowall. She also had a son, Alexander. John (d.bef. 1604) referred to as 'in Nydrie Marchell' in 1596 when his son John became a baker's apprentice in Edinburgh, and his son Alexander became a skinner's apprentice in 1604. Patrick (15th C.) recorded as witness to a sasine (of the lands of 'Silwynislandis') in 1436. He is referred to as 'Patrick Hangatsyd'. Richard (14th C.) recorded in 1388 when he gave Kaimflat in the territory of Little Newton (in Lauderdale) to Kelso Abbey, for masses to be said for the sould of his superiors, William and James of Douglas. It seems that he held lands in the eastern part of what would be called Newton. Probably the same Richard was Bailie of the Earls of Douglas in the Barony of Dunbar, as recorded in 1407. Richard (15th/16th C.) granted the lands of 'Hangetsyd' (i.e. what would become Hawthornside) by James, Earl of Douglas. Since this was granted by James, Earl of Douglas, it was probably before 1488. The transfer may have been because William Lorraine had been the former owner and transfered his allegiance to England. There was a sasine confirming the lands to his son Richard in 1543. He is probably the 'Ric. de Hangandside, scutifero' who witnessed a charter in 1432. Richard of that Ilk and Little Newton (16th C.) son of Richard. There was a sasine in his name for the lands of Hangingside in 1543. He was recorded among Border Lairds paying homage to the Duke of Somerset in about 1547. In 1550 he witnessed an instrument for lands in Mellerstain. He was a juror for a retour in 1558. It appears he may have sold the lands to Jock Elliot of the Park in 1562, except that they were still held by his descendants Helen and Barbara in 1598. He is recorded as 'Richard Hangitsyde of Littilnewtoun' when he was part of a panel of 1562, deciding on a dispute in the Barony of Feu-Rule. In 1563 there is a confirmation of his charter to his son Alexander of a third part of the lands of Little Newton. Robert (17th C.) merchant in Edinburgh. George son of William (and presumably a relative) is recorded becoming his apprentice in 1643. Probably the same Robert married Agnes Garden in Edinburgh in 1642 and remarried in 1644 to Catherine Kinbli. Walter (16th/17th C.) cordiner in Edinburgh. In 1618 he married Alison Ewieson. William (15th C.) witness to a charter in 1432, along with several Wardlaws and others. William (15th C.) recorded as 'Willelmus Hangitsyde' in a Glasgow Diocese record of 1494. He could have been related to the earlier William. William (16th C.) recorded in Hartwoodburn in 1581 when he promised to repay money he owed to James Fairgrieve in Carterhaugh. William (17th C.) merchant in Kelso. In 1643 his son George became a merchant's apprentice to Robert in Edinburgh, who was presumably relative. (written 'Hangandside', 'Hangansyde', 'Hangetsyde', 'Hanginsyde', etc.).

Hangman's Acre (hawng-munz-ā-kur) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, of uncertain location, but probably near Castleton or Riccarton. It is recorded in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale as 'Hangmanis Aiker', with value 30 pence and tenanted by Thomas Armstrong (it is possible that it is related to Hagiehaugh).

hank (hawngk) v. to entangle, catch, ensnare – 'watch ee deh hank yer line on that trei', 'ma troosers got hanked in ma bike chain', to stutter, stammer, to fasten by means of a rope, hook, etc. – 'One o' the dowgs brought the hare . . . and while he was hanking it to a rope round his duds . . . ' [BCM1881], n. a skein of yarn, coil of rope, a tangle, entanglement, catch, a hesitancy in speech, stutter, an advantage over someone, hold, influence (several of the noun meanings are noted by E.C. Smith; see also hankit).

Hankumshaugh (hawng-kumz-hawch) n. farm in the Slitrig valley, opposite the foot of the Flex Brae. Crops were swept away from there in the flood of 1846. It is referred to as 'Hankholm Haugh' in 1890. It is probably the same as Hummelknoweshaugh – '. . . when travelling up the valley of the Slitrig, just as he reached the place where the river runs close by the road, below Hankums Haugh' [WNK].

Hannah (haw-hu) n. Alexander (18th C.) married Helen Graham in Hawick in 1795. Thomas (19th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. He married Jessy Mein in Hobkirk in 1824 and their son James was baptised in 1825. William (b.c.1810) clogger in Hawick. In Pigot's 1837 directory he is listed on Silver Street. In 1841 he was recorded at about No. 23 High Street. In 1836 he married Catherine McMorrine and their children included Nicholas, William and Walter. An unnamed child of his died in 1840. Probably the same William married Catherine McMerrell and had a son John baptised in Hawick Free Kirk in 1846.

hansel (han-sul) v., arch. to inaugurate, give money to mark a special occasion – 'She followed the orthodox habit of hanselling all her gifts at church' [RM], 'On one of these rounds a tea-equipage was hanseled' [RJR], n. a gift given for luck in a new undertaking.

hantla (hant-lu) n., poet. a considerable quantity, large number – 'Some row thee in among their cash, Some gi'e themsel's a hantla fash' [JR].

hantle (han-tul) n., arch., poet. a quantity, great deal – ' 'There's a hantle o' false reports aye gaun about', said Marion' [JTe], '. . . and addressed the flying apostle by saying, 'aw daursay John yer congregation's better t'ye nor a hantel aw could name . . .
