Hardie (hawr-dee) n. Adam (17th/18th C.) recorded at Mabonlaw in 1711 and 1713. His children included: James (b.1709), baptised in Wilton; Thomas (b.1711), baptised in Wilton; and Adam (b.1713), baptised in Robertson. Perhaps the same Adam had a son James (b.1720) baptised in Minto. Agnes ‘the Crocodile’ (d.1776) Hawick resident whose death is recorded with this unusual nickname. She could be the Agnes born to Patrick and Agnes Hardie in 1720 or the Agnes born to James and Janet Little in 1722. David (19th C.) farmer at Priesthaugh. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1870. He could be the David who was farmer at Sorbie in 1861. David T. (19th/20th C.) secretary at Blenkhorn, Richardson & Co., Ltd. He served as Treasurer of Hawick Free Kirk 1889–95. His mother was Elizabeth Taylor. George (d.bef. 1721) tenant in Acreknowe. He is listed there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1721 his widow Elspeth Reid married smith John Scott. George (b.c.1785) hosiery manufacturer in Denholm. At one time he employed 20 workers. He was listed as a stocking maker in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was living on Westside with his wife Nelly. He appears to have been dead by 1851. Henry (17th/18th C.) merchant of Hawick. He was listed ‘eist the water’ among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. He is probably the ‘Harie’ who was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. In 1702 he was fined for being found drinking during the time of the Sunday sermon at George Renwick’s inn. He may be the Henry who was married to Isobell Newbie, or Grizzell Young. He is probably the Henry who witnessed a baptism for James Hardie in 1682 (with Walter Hardie as the other witness). Perhaps the same Henry (along with William, possibly his brother) was recorded in 1683 when he was among a group of men fined for throwing stones across the Teviot at night; they were fined for causing injury and ordered to pay for the clothes being bleached there that they damaged. Isabel (17th C.) daughter of cooper Robert. In 1683 she was struck by stones thrown across the Teviot by a group of men, wounding her, when she and Elspeth Scott (servant to Bailie Scott of Ormiston) were watching linen clothing that was being bleached there. James (15th C.) listed among the Roxburghshire men who had remission in 1488/9 from James IV for their support of the previous King, especially on the battlefield at Stirling. Most of the men appear to have been closely associated with Douglas of Cavers. James (17th C.) Hawick Councillor in 1668. Perhaps the same James is listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was also listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Hardie and their children included: Walter (b.1682); William (b.1684); Henry (b.1685); James (b.1687); and John (b.1689). The witnesses in 1682 were Walter Hardie and Henry Hardie, who may be related to him and his wife. James (17th C.) listed among the ‘Cottars in Hassanden’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is surely related to the ‘John Hardis’, who is also listed there. James (17th/18th C.) described as ‘at ye Wester Kirkstyle’ in 1723 when the Hawick Session gave him money ‘to buy a beast for carrieing heather, leading of fuel, and carrieing to anie who would employ him’ to help him support his wife and several small children. Probably the same James ‘Heardye’ was paid by the Council in 1739 for ‘liding 600 difeits to tolboothe’ (i.e. transporting 600 divots for the roof of the Tolbooth). It is possible he is the same James as the pedlar described by Robert Wilson. He could be the James, married to Janet Little, whose children baptised in Hawick included Agnes (b.1722), Mary (b.1724) and Janet (b.1727). James (18th C.) merchant in Hawick Parish. In 1746 (along with flesher Robert) he witnessed a baptism for weaver Joseph Car ruthers and Bessy Hardie. It seems likely he was related to both Robert and Bessy. James (18th C.) pedlar from Hawick. It is said (by Robert Wilson) that he was involved in the riot at the Winter Fair when the Commissioners of the Duke of Buccleuch tried to extract a duty. He apparently felled 5 Sheriff Officers with an oak club, which was afterwards held as a family relic. At the end of the scuffle he apparently shattered the sword of the leading Officer, and this was later recounted in a song (which does not survive). He may be the ‘Hardie’ recorded being paid by the Council in 1767 along with ‘Tinlin’ for watching the Auld Brig during the flood. A deceased James is described as a labouring man in Hawick in 1774 when his daughter Elizabeth married James Little in Edinburgh; whether this is the same man is unclear. A James, son of William and Bessie Scott was born in Hawick in 1720. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at ‘Doverford’ in Southdean Parish, according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. James (d.1808) weaver in Hawick, son of Robert. He married Betty Waugh in 1754 and their children included: John (b.1757); Helen (b.1760); John (again, b.1761); and Barbara (b.1764). James (b.1803) son of Rev. Thomas Samuel and grand-nephew of Rev. Charters of Wilton. He was listed as a surgeon living at Wilton Manse in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. James (b.1805/6) shoemaker in Hawick. He was listed on the Kirk Wynd in Pigot’s 1837 directory and also on the 1841, living with his mother Jean. His wife was also Jean, and she died before 1851. Their children were Helen and Elizabeth. In 1851 he married Helen Kersel, who was from Jedburgh. By 1861 he was at 16 Buccleuch Street. James (b.1813–91) born at Bridgehouse, Castleton, son of William and Violet Douglas. He was an agricultural labourer, living at Hartsgarth Burnside in 1851 and on South Liddel Street in Newcastle in 1861. He may be the James who was elder of Newcastleton U.P. Kirk from 1855 until his death. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for John Elliot of Brugh in 1675. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Brown and their children included William (b.1672) and Agnes (b.1675). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Wright and their children included Margaret (b.1673), Helen (b.1674), Isobel (b.1677), Marion (b.1679), Jane (b.1685) and Agnes (b.1686). John (b.1690) may also have been his child. John (17th/18th C.) recorded as a ‘student’ in 1680 when he witnessed a baptism for William Hardie. John (17th C.) listed among the ‘Cottars in Hassanden’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is surely related to the ‘James Hardis’, who is also listed there. He may be the John who witnessed baptisms for Dand Elliot in Robertson in 1681, another for George Davidson in 1687 and one for Adam Craig in 1688. John (1668/9–1731) carrier in Hawick, son of carrier Walter. In 1693 he was fined for ‘an most egregious ryott committ by him upon the Sabbathday on Steven Greenshells’ by pushing him out of his seat in the Loft of St. Mary’s, as well as pulling on his bonnet. He was recorded as a carrier when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Lamb in 1708 (along with carrier James Aitken). He married Isabel Aitken, who died in 1739, aged 53; she was probably related from the family of carriers called Aitken. Their children included: Bessie (b.1707); Margaret (b.1709); Agnes (b.1712); Helen (b.1713); Robert (b.1719); William (b.1722); John (b.1725); and 2 unnamed children (according to the gravestone). The witnesses in 1709 were John and William Gardner and in 1712 were merchant William Gardener and James Aitken ‘duke younger’. The family are buried in St. Mary’s along with the family of Bailie Robert, who must have been closely related (perhaps his brother). John (17th/18th C.) ‘younger, maltman’ in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He was ‘John Hardie younger’ of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. Since he was John younger, he was probably son of the maltman John recorded in the 1660s and 70s. He may have been the John Hardie, junior, maltman, who was uncle of Mary, wife of William Wilson (‘Whusky Wullie’), and hence had an only daughter, Agnes. John (b.1679) son of Patrick and Janet Scott. He was a tailor in Hawick. Probably the same John was involved in some financial dealings with Walter Ruecastle in 1693, in connection with which Ruecastle assaulted the Bailie of Regality, William Scott. In 1706 he married Isobel, daughter of William Aitken. Along with his new father-in-law he was fined for holding a ‘supernumerary marriage’, i.e. having more guests than allowed by law. In fact the guests included the 2 Bailies, the Town Clerk, Scott of Horsleyhill and Dr. Scott. His children probably included: Bessie (b.1707); Agnes (b.1712); Helen (b.1713), who could be the Helen whose son Samuel was born in 1738, with ‘Father Dead’, or the Helen married to shoemaker Andrew Scott; Agnes (again, b.1716); Robert (b.1719); and William (b.c.1722). In the record for the 1707 baptism he is stated to be brother to ‘Bailie Hardie’, which presumably meant Robert; the witnesses were tailor James Cowan and James ‘Duke’ Aitken. John (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He was on the short-list of candidates for Cornet in 1710 and 1711, but was not elected. He is recorded as merchant of Hawick in 1712 when he married Helen Cowan, servant to Widow Bell in Edinburgh. He was fined by the Hawick Bailies for his ‘irregular marriage’, which was performed in the Canongate by ‘W. Selkirk’; this may have been William Selkirk, who was ousted in 1690 for being an Episcopalian, suggesting that either the bride or groom (or both) subscribed to this church. There are several Johns born in Hawick in the relevant period who could have been him, e.g. son of James and Jane in 1683, son of James and Bessie in 1689 or son of John in 1690. John (18th C.) married Margaret Scott in Kirkton Parish in 1716. Bailie John (1722–1800) councillor and manufacturer. He was grandson of Bailie Robert, although it is unclear who his parents were. It is also said that he had a brother nicknamed ‘Whether or No’. He introduced stocking frames to Hawick in 1771, bringing 4 of them back from a business trip to Glasgow, and setting them up at 37 High Street (the screw of the first one in use is in the Museum collection). This is usually considered as the beginning of hosiery manufacturing in the town. As a result Hardie is sometimes referred to as ‘Father of the Hawick Knitwear Industry’, although he only worked in the hosiery business for a few years. It is said that people taught in his stocking-shop were transplanted to Wooler, Kelso, Jedburgh, Langholm, Melrose, Selkirk and elsewhere. There is a single example of his business records in the Museum. In 1766 he was recorded as a merchant when he witnessed a baptism for Adam Pott. In 1769 he was appointed to the commission to discuss the Common with representatives of the Duke of Buccleuch. He was later accused of accepting a bribe in order to facilitate the Division of the Common. In 1771 he was paid by the Council for a bottle of wine when he carried out business with agents of the Duke of Buccleuch. In a description of Hawick’s trade in about 1777 he is said to have had 4 frames for making stockings, with James Halden being the only other stocking manufacturer in Town, with 2 frames. He made on average 2400 pairs of stockings per year, but gave up ‘in consequence of family distress’, with John Nixon effectively taking over from him. In 1781, 1785, 1787 and 1789 he witnessed baptisms for William Roger. He is probably the John who paid the Horse Tax in Hawick most years in the period 1785–92 (listed as ‘Merchant’ some years). In 1787 and 1789–91 he paid tax for having a female servant. He owned land in several places around the town, for example being described as ‘portioner of Weensland’ in 1787; he was listed as owner of land valued at £36 5s 8d (purchased from the Scotts of Horsleyhill) in 1788 and still listed as owner in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (although deceased by then); this land was later split between Mrs. Watson of Wilton Bank and Thomas Lindsay Watson. He was Bailie almost continuously from 1771–1800, being chosen more often as Magistrate than anyone else of his time. In 1790 he stopped the rebel Cornet's cavalcade from going out past the West Port (immortalised in the unofficial 'shairmy pайдle' verse of 'Teribus'), telling the first of the rebel cavalcade. This allowed the elected Cornet and his party to proceed unmolested to the Moor, and hence the Common Riding passed without violence. He was known for his quick temper and for his upstanding and fearless manner. It is said that boys used to detour around the Cross so as to avoid his castigation as he leaned over his shop half-door. A story is told (by Robert Wilson) of how he was instructed by his doctor to go to Berwick to bathe in the sea a dozen or so times, which he did over only a couple of days, returning to his shop 3 days later and saying to his physician 'And did ye imagine, Doctor, that I was to stay in Berwick ten or twal days? – ye ken that was impossible'. Another story tells how he surprised a supposedly dumb 'spaeaman' in order to make him cry out and expose himself as a swindler. He was thereafter said to be able to make the dumb speak! Part of the dialogue from one of his court cases is preserved. He married Janet Elliot, and she died in 1760, aged 34. Their children included Margaret (b.1757). He secondly, in 1762, married Rebecca, daughter of George Swan; she died in 1809, aged 68. He had further children, including: John (b.1763); Rebecca (b.1764); Janet (b.1765); George (b.1766); Robert (b.1767); Rebecca (again, b.1768); John (again, 1769–82); Janet (again, b.1772); George Ann (b.1774); and William (b.1776). The witnesses in 1763 were James Henderson and William Elliot and in 1764 were weaver George Swan (probably his father-in-law) and Church Officer Alexander Bunyan. He was sitting Bailie in 1777 when he witnessed a baptism for George Turnbull and Isobel Hardie (perhaps his daughter) and another for Betty Hardie (perhaps also his daughter) and a man called Little. He witnessed a baptism for John Crosbie and Janet Hardie (probably his daughter) in 1796. The family gravestone records that 16 children in all are interred there (presumably they mostly died young). He is buried in St. Mary's Cemetery, and in 1933 the Callants' Club erected a bronze plaque at 37 High Street (near the Cross), where he lived. He was the last local male descendant of a long line of Hardies. John (18th/19th C.) listed along with Robert as a carrier in Hawick on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He had 5 work horses. Both he and Robert paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785–1791. An unnamed child of his died in 1808 and his son John in 1809. He is probably the John, who married Helen Scott in 1751, and whose children included: James (b.1759); Elizabeth (b.1761); John (b.1763); and an unnamed child (b.1768). The witnesses in 1763 were Robert Hardie (perhaps his brother) and George Scott (probably related to his wife), and in 1768 were carrier Thomas Thomson and weaver George Turnbull. John (18th/19th C.) boot and shoe maker in Newcastleton, listed in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1841 he was at about 22 North Hermitage Street. His wife was Agnes and they had a son, Robert. By 1851 he was receiving parish relief. John (1815–91) son of William and Violet Douglas. He was teacher at the small school at Burnmouth, south of Newcastleton in the 1860s. He married Mary Fleming, who died in 1850, aged 28. John Mungo Wilson (1920–98) descendant of Bailie Robert, he presented the Drums and Fifes with 3 new drums in 1980 in commemoration of his great-grandfather Oliver's Cornetship 150 years earlier. He was presented with one of the old drums in return. He worked in the oil industry, and was a life member of the Archaeological Society. Margaret (17th C.) resident of Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among 'ye poor'. Margaret Hunter (1801–44) daughter of Rev. Thomas Samuel and grand-niece of Rev. Charters of Wilton. She was 'Miss Hardie, Wilton Manse' in 1825 when she subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick'. She married Rev. Joseph Thomson of Ednam. Mary (1717–96) wife of William Wilson, 'Whusky Wullie' (1713–91). She was one of 8 children, her siblings being: Janet (b.1712); Robert (b.1714); John (b.1719); Agnes (b.1720); John (again, b.1723); Christian (b.1725); and Janet (again, b.1729). When she married in 1737 she may have been the only surviving child. Her uncle was John, junior, maltman, and she was distantly related to Bailie John Hardie. Oliver (b.1800/1) Cornet in 1830, he lived at the foot of the Kirk Wynd and farmed at the Wellogate. He was also a church warden at St. Cuthbert's. His wife was Margaret and their children included Mary, James and Robert. He was probably related to shoemaker James, who lived next door. Oliver (19th/20th C.) grocer on Silver Street, along with his brother Thomas Mason. They acquired the business of James Laing after his death. Along with his brother 'T.M.' they presented a new set of drums and fifes to the town in 1930, in commemoration of their grandfather's Cornetship of 1830. He lived at 10 Wilton Hill Terrace. He served as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. Patrick (15th C.) resident of Linton. In 1493, along with James in Grahamslaw, he had remission for several crimes, including theft of 60 sheep from Wilton and arson there, as well as theft of 2 oxen from Robert Elliot. His surety was Andrew, son of James Ker. Patrick (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Patrick Harde’ as a witness to a charter of David Scott of Hassendeane in 1510/11. Patrick (17th C.) carrier in Hawick listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He may be the same resident of the west-side of Hawick recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. Parish. He married Janet Scott, who was served in 1667 as heir to her great-grandfather, Patrick Scott, surgeon in Hawick. Their children included: Robert (b.1670), who probably died young; Robert (1672–c.1738), carrier in Hawick; James (b.1675); John (b.1679); and Patrick (b.1682), cordiner in Hawick. It is said that the only sons who survived were Robert and Patrick (but this cannot be true if tailor John was also his son). Patrick (1682–c.1755) son of Patrick and Janet Scott. He was a cordiner (also referred to as shoemaker) in Hawick. His brother Robert was a carrier (but this may be meant for ‘cordiner’) in Hawick and died in about 1738. In 1735 he purchased a property on the west side of the Howegate that had previously belonged to Robert Scott of Fahash. In 1711 he married Agnes Hardie, only daughter of maltman John; it is unclear if they were cousins or otherwise distantly related. Their only surviving child was Mary (1717–96), who married William Wilson, ‘Whusky Wullie’, Burgh Procurator Fiascal. They also had children Robert (b.1714), Janet (b.1712), John (b.1719), Agnes (b.1720), John (again, b.1723), Christian (b.1725) and Janet (b.1729). The witnesses in 1712 were fleshers Robert and George Renwick. Richard (17th C.) wright recorded as ‘Ritchie Hardie’ in 1644 when he was one of the men who appraised horses in Hawick for the Covenanter army. He is probably the Richard, married to Margaret Leyden, whose daughter Isobel was baptised in Hawick in 1636. Richard (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, probably the son of Samuel baptised in 1731. He married Jean Beattie in 1756. Their children included: Helen (b.1760); Janet (b.1762); Betty (b.1766); Janet (again, b.1770); and Jane (b.1772). His daughter Jean died in 1781. Robert (17th C.) cooper in Hawick. In 1683 his daughter Isabel was injured when she was watching linen clothing that were bleaching and a group of men threw stones across the Teviot. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Riddell and their children included: Margaret (b.1670); Bessie (b.1676); and Agnes (b.1681). The witnesses in 1676 were Walter Purdom and James Scott (perhaps the Bailies with those names). He is probably the Robert who witnessed a baptism for James Brydon in 1676 and another for John Glendinning and Janet Riddell in 1678. He may be the Robert who was fined in 1657 for insulting Walter Purdom and James Thorbrand, Hawick’s Commissioners in Kelso, as well as calling the Burgh Officers ‘men-sworn lowns’. Bailie Robert (1661/2–1718) Hawick Magistrate in at least 1701 and 1702. In 1699 he and Patrick Richardson petitioned for Hawick to be relieved from the ‘fredom of trade’ tax. In 1702 he and George Martin were listed as Bailies when they witnessed a baptism for tailor John Scott. In 1703 he and his wife were rebuked by the Kirk Session for making a disturbance at the wedding of his wife’s brother William Oliver (to Christian Hart). In 1704 he witnessed baptisms for tailor John Scott and for baxter Walter Boyd. He is recorded in 1705 as intermediary in a disputed bill between Gideon Scott of Highchester, William Little of Hassendeane Townhead and Thomas Turnbull of Knowe. He was Senior Bailie in 1706 when the Cornet-Elect (Thomas Hardie, presumably not a close relative) refused to carry the decrepit flag; he took over the duties, carrying it out of town, while the Junior Bailie carried it back, and they appointed others to carry it at the Moor. Also in 1706 he was severely insulted by John Binnie, previous Bailie, who was then fined and barred from being on the Council in future. In 1707 his brother John had a child baptised; this suggests he was son of Patrick. He was still on the Town Council in 1707 (when a fine was imposed on the 2 acting Bailies) and was Bailie at the 1709 Common Riding. Along with Bailie James Burn he witnessed a baptism in 1709 for wigmaker John Scott. In 1710 he was stated to be one of the men given a key to the Charter Chest. He was also one of the Bailies in 1710, when the weavers resolved to settle their arguments over seating order in their loft in St. Mary’s. He was an ex-Bailie when the bond was granted by the Council (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. He witnessed

John (b.1726); Barbara (b.1728); James (b.1730); and Janet (b.1735). Robert (18th C.) listed as a house servant at Midshiel in 1791, when he was working for Archibald Douglas. Robert (18th/19th C.) listed along with John as a carrier in Hawick on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. The same 2 men paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785–91. His daughter Nellie died in 1819. They are probably the Robert and John (in that order) who witnessed baptisms for John Douglas and Isabel Hardie (perhaps his daughter) in 1793 and 1795. He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for John in 1763. He could be the Robert who married Christian Lyon in Kirkton Parish in 1749 and whose children (baptised in Hawick) included Agnes (b.1756), Robert (b.1759), James (b.1761) and Robert (again, b.1765). Robert (d. bef. 1808) Hawick resident. His son James was a weaver whose death is recorded in Hawick in 1808. He could be the Robert who, along with James, witnessed a baptism for William in 1764. Robert (b.1791/2) farmer at Sorbie in Ewesdale. He was there in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Helen and their children included David (who was later overseer of the farm), Henry, Margaret, Walter, James, Janet, Isabella, Robert and John. Robert (d. bef. 1809) flesher in Hawick, possibly son of the earlier Robert. In 1809 his son William died. Rev. Dr. Robert (1808–37) born in Hawick, son of farmer John. He attended St. Andrews University 1822–3, then Glasgow and Edinburgh Universities. He became Professor of Rhetoric at Anderson’s College, Glasgow. He is probably the same Rev. Robert, LL.D. whose letter written on a voyage from Glasgow to George-town in 1837 has been published and is in the National Archives. He was appointed minister of St. Catherine’s, British Guiana, but must have died shortly afterwards. A portrait of him exists.

Samuel (18th C.) resident of Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He could be the Samuel baptised in Hawick in 1738, son of Helen. Thomas (17th C.) married Bessie Runciman in Roberton Parish in 1687, probably in the former Hassendean Parish. She was probably sister of Helen and Walter, who were married shortly before her in Roberton. In 1687 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Runciman (probably his brother-in-law). Thomas (17th C.) resident of Ashybank who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He is listed as a merchant among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He (or perhaps his son) was probably the Thomas who was elected Constable in 1706, but refused to carry the flag due to its decrepit condition. This led to near riots, with the Bailies taking over the responsibility, and the Council supplying a new flag for the following year. He was fined ten groats for his absence from the Common Riding and £20 for refusing to carry the Colour. In 1711 he witnessed a baptism for workman Adam Sanderson and in 1712 another for William Miller. He is probably the Thomas who was an elder of Hawick Kirk, recorded in 1717 being appointed to collect monies from ‘Hilhousland, Weensland, and Weensland mihne’, suggesting he lived in this area. In 1722 he was still an elder, assigned to collect monies from the east end of the Town. He could be the Thomas who married Jean Irwin (or ‘Virran’), and whose children baptised in Hawick included Helen (b.1712), Janet (b.1715), James (b.1718), Bessie (b.1721) and Barbara (b.1725). Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Calfield in Wilton Parish. His son Thomas was baptised in 1709. Rev. Dr. Thomas Samuel (d.1810) son of James of the Customs House in Leith, and nephew of Dr. Charters of Wilton (his mother being Jean). He was educated at Edinburgh University, was licensed by the Presbytery of Edinburgh in 1794 and ordained in 1796 as the Chaplain to the 7th Fencibles. He was presented to Ashkirk Parish in late 1797 by Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto and became minister at Ashkirk in 1798. He obtained a doctorate from Edinburgh University in 1805. He was described as knowledgeable, compassionate, charitable and modest. His voice was apparently rather feeble, but he was nevertheless said to be ‘in the first class of Scottish preachers’. He was recorded making efforts to distribute cheap grain to parishioners in 1799. In 1800 he married Jean Colville (who died in 1816), daughter of the minister of Ormiston. Their children included: Margaret Hunter (1801–44), who married Rev. Joseph Thomson of Ednam, previously of Teviothead; James (b.1803); Jane Charters (1805–21); and Thomas Samuel (b.1810). In 1805 in Hawick he published a collection of exercises for schools, ‘Extracts for the use of parish schools’, which ran to 3 editions. His ‘Sermons’ were also published in Hawick in 1811 (edited by his uncle, Dr. Charters), and a manuscript copy was presented to the Museum by John Scott of Rodono in 1863. Walter see Wat Hardie. Walter (17th C.) described in 1686 as a ‘traveller’ (i.e. a ‘carrier’) when he was fined for ‘speiking reprochfullie of the Minister of the tome before William Layng one of the present Bayleyes’. This was Rev. John Langlands, who was an Episcopalian, this being just before the Revolution. His son John was fined in 1693 for fighting in the Kirk. His wife was probably Janet Grieve, and their son John was baptised in Hawick in 1671. He may be the Walter who was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He may be the Walter who Falnash (probably Gideon Scott) confessed to striking in 1677, when he was punished by the Hawick Bailies. He is probably also the Walter for was fined in 1678 for saying that Walter Scott of West Port ‘would be hanged’. He may be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for James Hardie in 1682. Walter (17th/18th C.) wright in Hawick. In 1709 he witnessed a baptism for wright John Pringle. William (17th C.) described as a ‘cowpar’ (i.e. cooper) in a case in the Burgh Court of 1642 when he was fined, along with James Tudhope and Adam Martin on account of their livestock eating Gilbert Watt’s oats. He may be the William who married Bessie Scott in Hawick in 1638 and whose children included Thomas (b.1638). However, there are several alternative Williams at about the same time, e.g.: married to Malie English, daughter Bessie baptised in 1641; married to Janet, daughter Isabel born in 1648 and sons William and James born in 1654 and 1657; married to Manie Leyden, daughter Helen born in 1648; or married to Helen Rennaldson, sons John and George born in 1644 and 1651. William (17th C.) ‘tacksman of the customs’ for the Earl of Queensberry in Hawick in 1673. That year there was a major disturbance when the agents of the Early tried to ‘ride the fair’, with him being imprisoned in the Tolbooth. The Hawick Bailies claimed that he had tried to extract ‘more than the usual custom’ from the market and refused to discuss this with them. William (17th C.) listed among the ‘Deficiens in Hauick Parich’ in 1694. He appears to be at ‘The Tour of Hauick’. Perhaps the same William (along with Henry, perhaps his brother) is recorded in 1683 when he was among a group of men fined for throwing stones across the Teviot at night, injuring a couple of women who were watching their linens, and damaging the clothes being bleached there by James Brydon. William (17th/18th C.) probably a member of the Hawick Council. In 1701 he was one of those appointed to collect the ‘stent’ in the area ‘cast the water’. Presumably the same William is described as ‘mealmaker’ in 1705 when he was appointed to collect another ‘stent’ for putting lead on the steeple of Hardie’s Byre

St. Mary’s. He could have been one of the farmers of the West-end. He could be the William who married Janet Scroggie and whose daughter Isobel was baptised in 1680 (with student John as one of the witnesses). He may be the same William mentioned in a case of 1685 when William Purdom was charged with abusing him and one of the Bailies. He may be the William, son of John and ‘Jenet English’ born in Hawick in 1654 (their second son of that name) or the William born to James and Isobel Huntly in 1657. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Acreknowe. His daughter Janet was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1718. William (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. In 1760 he witnessed a baptism for blacksmith Robert Young. He could also be the William who witnessed a baptism in 1777 for Betty Hardie and a man named Little; Bailie John Hardie was the other witness, suggesting they were brothers or some other close relation. William (18th/19th C.) Hawick butcher. He is listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, before carriers Robert and John, and so may have been closely related. He married Janet Scott in 1763 and their daughter Agnes was baptised in 1764. The witnesses were Robert and James, who were surely closely related. He could be the William ‘Caddan’ (the meaning of which is unclear) who died in 1809, son of flesher Robert. He could be the William, son of John, who was born in about 1722 and had brothers Robert and John. William (1779–1861) son of Thomas and Esther Armstrong, he was an agricultural labourer in Castleton Parish. He was listed among heads of households 1835–41, living at Brighouse and Dinlabyre; there was also a younger William in the Parish at that time, at Hudshouse. In 1851 he was at about 9 Doncaster Street in Newcastleton. He married Viola, daughter of James Douglas, who died in 1856, aged 69. Their children included: Thomas (b.1811); James (1813–91), also a labourer in Castleton; John (1815–91), schoolmaster; Walter (1817–82), a labourer in Newcastleton; Christian (b.1819), who died young; Esther (b.1822), who died in infancy; Elizabeth (or Betty, 1822–1900), who married William Telfer, grocer in Edinburgh; Christian (1826–54); William (1829–1916), who moved to Edinburgh; Kitty, who married Walter Ketchin; Esther (b.1831); and Matthew (b.1834). He died at Burnmouth Schoolhouse, where his son John was teacher. William (1829–1916) son of William and Violet Douglas, he was born in Castleton Parish. He moved to Edinburgh and worked as a railway porter. In 1870 he married Mary Knox and their children were Isabella and Violet (often spelled ‘Hardy’ in older records).

Hardie’s Byre (hawr-deez-bi-ur) n. barn once near the top of the Loan, where the Hardie family farmed – ‘Up the Loan they went like fire, Till they came to Hardie’s byre . . . ’[T].

Hardie’s Hill (hawr-deez-hil) n. hilly area near Crowbyres, named after the Hardie family who farmed there for generations. It reaches a height of 211 m and has a triangulation pillar. It is sometimes known in the plural as ‘Hardie’s Hills’. The hollow (presumably to the south-west of the summit) was said to be where Hawick’s inhabitants hid when the English attacked the town. It was sometimes called ‘Auld Hawick’ (although how much this idea was invented in the era of Victorian romance is unclear). Its slopes were the scene of the ceremonial sod-cutting for the Hawick-Carlisle railway in 1859. A stone ball found there is in the Museum – ‘ . . . O’ Hardie’s high and rugged hill An auld historic spot’[GD], ‘Tis sweet to see the gloamin’ grey Creep o’er the grassy fell, And mark the sunbeams gowden ray Light up old Hardie’s Hill’ [JT], ‘Here Hardie’s Hills in rugged beauty rise, With knowes and hollows interspersed between . . . ’[JCG], ‘And saw the sun o’ Easter Heeze up and lowe until It kinneld till a burnin’ buss The thorns on Hardie’s Hill’ [DH].

hardiess (har-dee-es) n., arch. boldness, temerity – ‘ . . . I haue taine the hardiess heireby till visy zou in my auin absence . . . ’ [SB1584].

Hardisike (har-dee-sik) n. Thomas (18th C.) coachman at Cavers in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for James Douglas. His name may be an error for some other surname.

Hardlee (hawrd-lee) n. former farmstead near the head of the Hyndlee Burn to the east of the Note o the Gate. Some of the sheppfolds there are said to have been made from the stones of the Hare Cairn. Francis Cavers was shepherd there in 1861. ‘Hardlee Flow’ is marked there on the modern Ordnance Survey map, in the depths of Wauchope Forest.

hards (hawrdz) n., pl., arch. coarse fibres of flax left over from ‘heckling’ and often used to make sack-cloth.

hard-sutten (hawrd-su-in) adj., arch. having young formed (said of an egg).

hard up (hawrd-up) adj. in poor health – ‘Then, take my word, ye’re `gey-hard-up’, For the symptoms never lie . . . ’[DH], ‘Aw veesited her in the Cottage, bit she was guy hard up’, ‘ . . . An hard up means oo erni weel, An no justis short hard-up gentry

hard-up gentry (hawrd-up-jen-tree) n., arch. the poor upper class – ‘Hard-up gentry = impecunious snobs’ [ECS].

Hardway (hawrd-wä) n. former name for lands in the Ewes valley. It is listed among the lands in Ewesdale held by Alexander, Lord Home in 1506 and 1509/10. It is recorded along with Mosspaul, Fiddleton and other lands in 1535 when superiority of parts of Ewesdale were confirmed to George, Lord Home. It is also listed as part of the Lordship of Ewesdale in about 1610. The lands were also listed as ‘Hordway’ in 1663 among those owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1663 (also ‘Hairlaw’, it is also a mill there. ‘Harlaw’ and ‘Harlawwood’ are former name for lands). ‘Hairlaw’ is recorded in 1578/9. There was also a mill there. ‘Haer Hill’ is also recorded as part of the Lordship of Ewesdale (it is ‘Hardvy’ in 1506).

the Hare Cairn (tha-hür-kärn) n. former ancient cairn which stood on the farm of Hyndlee in the headwaters of the Rule, now deep within the forest. It was close to the Wheel Causeway, near the shepherd’s cottage that was built later, the area called Swirefoot. The cairn was quite extensive, and said to have covered about an eighth of an acre. It was dismantled to build some sheep-folds and walls, and there was already no sign of it by 1859, although 2 burial cists were found beneath it. It is said that there was a slab bearing a carving of a leaf-shaped sword and cavities, which was sent to Abbotsford (also called ‘Haer Cairn’).

the Hare an Hoonds (tha-hür-an-höondz) n. hostelry at 60 High Street in the mid-19th century.

Harecairn Sike (hür-kärn-sık) n. small stream in the southern part of Hobkirk Parish, which runs into the Hyndlee Burn. Near the head of the burn used to be Hare Cairn. The Ordnance Survey Name Book (in 1859) notes that although no trace of it survived, 2 cists had been found there. It lay on the path of part of an old road identified with the Wheel Causeway.

Hare Cleuch (hür-klooč) n. small stream to the west of Penchrise farm. There was a rifle range near here for Stobs Camp.

Harestreuthheid (hür-klooč-heed) n. Harecleuchhead, former farmstead between Troutlawford and Penchrise, near the head of the Hare Cleuch. Labourer Thomas Douglas and family were there in 1841 and Edward Barton was shepherd there in 1861. A drove road used to pass near here (it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Hare Grain (hür-grän) n. small stream that rise on Pike Hill and flows roughly to the east to join the Lairhope Burn to the west of Lairhope.

Haregrain (hür-grän) n. former farmstead on the Hare Grain, to the north of Hislop, near the boundary between Teviothead and Roberston Parishes. Robert Laidlaw was there in 1709. When Margaret Scott married William Scott (in Hislop) in Hawick in 1728, she was said to be from ‘Hairgrain’. By 1788 it was valued along with Falnash at £684, part of the properties of the Duke of Buccleuch. The value was still the same in 1811. Hairgrain Edge is the south-eastern extension of Pike Hill near there (it is ‘Hairgrain’ in 1788.

Hare Hill (hür-hilik) n. hill to the east of the B6399 just after Berryfell farm, being the south-western spur of Berryfell Hill. On its western slopes, crossed by the road, are 2 linear earthworks of fairly narrow proportions. One of them may have had a drainage function, leading down into Carlin Hole. The area to the north is known as Little Hare Hill.

Harehope Sike (hür-up-sık) n. small stream that rises between Threep Head and Esdale Law and runs roughly northwards to join the Ale Water.

Harekamb (hür-kawn) n. former name for lands in the southern part of Lilliesleaf Parish. In the early 13th century a piece of Walter of Riddell’s demesne lands below there were among those granted to Melrose Abbey. It is unclear how to pronounce the name, or what its modern equivalent might be (although it might be connected with Harelaw and Kames).

Harelaw (hür-law) n. farm between Lilliesleaf and Hassendean. A drove road used to pass here on its way to Groundistone and the Borthwick. This may also have shared part of its route with a Roman road, probably connecting Newstead with Raeburnfoot (although this is more speculative). James Turnbull was farmer there in 1851.

Harelaw (hür-law) n. name of an area right on the Border, east of Canonbie, site of the tower of Hector Armstrong in the late 16th century. There were also Grahams in this area in the 16th century. ‘Andro Armstrong, callit Lang Andro, in the Hairlaw’ is recorded in 1578/9. There was also a mill there. ‘Harlaw’ and ‘Harlawwood’ are listed among the Dumfriesshire possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1663 (also ‘Hairlaw’, it is ‘Harlawe’ in 1583 and ‘Harlaw’ in 1663).

Harelawcleuch (hawr-law-klooč) n. name for a former farm in Jedforest. It is described as 3 steadings valued at £3 6 shillings in 1538 and 1539. In the Exchequer Rolls the comptroller was allowed the ‘fermes’ from ‘Harlacleweh Vestir’ for the year of 1538. In 1541 Patrick Laidlaw, John Oliver and Richard Oliver were tenants in part of the farm, paying 33s 4d and John Laidlaw tenant in the other part, paying 11s 6d (it is ‘Hairlawcleuch’ in 1538 and 1539 and ‘Harlawcleuch’ in 1541).

Haremoss (hār-mos) n. the end of the main turnpike road through Hawick in the late 18th and early 19th centuries, established by the ‘Scots-Dyke to Hare-moss Road Act’ of 1764 (published 1770). It is on the A7 between Ashkirk and Selkirk, and marks the boundary of Roxburghshire with Selkirkshire. James Ruickbie was a toll-keeper here for a while. Haremoss Loch is on the right-hand side of the A7, and the area is known as Hare and Dunhog Moss Nature Reserve.

Hare Sike (hār-sīk) n. small stream in the upper Borthwick valley, running roughly to the south to meet the Borthwick just beyond Craik village. In the headwaters is a sheepfold, as well as another old enclosure, visible on aerial photographs.

Harestanes (hār-stānz) n. Regional Countryside Centre off the A68 near Ancrum. The mediaval hospital known as Ancrum Spittal stood nearby, and was burned in 1545. The farm was developed as the Home Farm of Monteviot Estate in the early 19th century, with the present farmhouse being built in 1877, and converted to a farmhouse being built in 1877, and converted to a

Harestanes (hār-stānz) n. Regional Countryside Centre off the A68 near Ancrum. The mediaval hospital known as Ancrum Spittal stood nearby, and was burned in 1545. The farm was developed as the Home Farm of Monteviot Estate in the early 19th century, with the present farmhouse being built in 1877, and converted to a visitor centre and craft workshops in 1979–80. It provides a centre for wildlife interpretation and a starting point for several nearby walks (the name is reputedly from ancient standing stones that once existed here).

Hargrave (hawr-grāv) n. James (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Nether Dykeraw according to the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. James (1798–1865) born at Chesters (in Southdean), son of Joseph and Jane Melrose. He was educated at the old school at Stoulsie and also at Gala Academy. Upon graduation he was a schoolmaster himself at Midlem for a couple of years. In 1819 he emigrated to join other family members in Quebec, Canada and worked as a fur-trader for the Hudson’s Bay Company for over 40 years. He started as a clerk in 1821 and finished as Chief Factor at the isolated York factory in Rupert’s Land (in modern Manitoba) on Hudson Bay, retiring to Ontario. He married Letitia Mactavish and their children included Joseph James, Letitia Lockhart, Mary Jane and Dugald John. Much early correspondence of his still survives, some published in ‘The Hargrave Correspondence’ (1938) and others in ‘The Letters of Letitia Hargrave’ (1947).

Hargreaves (har-grēvz) n. John (18th/19th C.) carrier who purchased premises at 16 Bucleuch Street in 1820, developing stables and a warehouse there. The property is labelled ‘Mr. Hargreave’ on Wood’s 1824 map, and would later become the Grapes Inn. He is listed in 1825/6 running a service to ‘Edinburgh and all part of the North’, with Walter Jardine as agent. He is listed in Pigot’s 1837 register with service to Carlisle, Edinburgh and the English north-west on Tuesdays and Fridays. He is probably the John whose heirs are recorded owning part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick in about 1874.

Hargreaves’ (har-grēvz) n. firm of carriers in the 19th century. Before the coming of the railway, their wagon passed through Hawick twice a week each way, carrying goods between Edinburgh and London. They brought the first 4 power looms to Hawick from Manchester in 1830, the trip taking 3 weeks. They are listed as ‘John Hargreaves, agent Walter Jardine’ in Pigot’s 1825 directory.

Harigals (ha-ri-gulz) n., pl., arch. the entrails of a fowl, pluck, the intestines of a human, innerds, guts – ‘Scots an Ingleesh in a frightenin, diggin mad-keen ti teer the harigals oot o other’ [ECS] (also written ‘harrigals’).

Harkness see Herkness

Harl (hawr-rul) v., arch. to drag, haul, scrape, rake, n., arch. the act of dragging, a tug – ‘Then, with a harl, Out o’ baith house and hal’ they pack them, To the wide warl’ [JR], a sitter, coarse person – ‘Thou breeds baith mony a slut and harl, Out o’ baith house and hal’ they pack them, To the wide warl’ [JR], a sitter, coarse person – ‘Thou breeds baith mony a slut and harl, O’ slander’s nurse!’ [JoHa].

Harl (hawr-rul) v. to roughcast, cover the walls of a building with a mixture of cement and gravel – ‘the Howegate re-development involved harlin aa the hooses it the back’, ‘... texture of harled walls accented by shadows cast by pebbles from oblique sunlight’ [DH], n. the mixture applied during harling.
the Harlequins (\textit{thu-hawr-hu-kwinz}) n. full name of the Quins.

Harley (har-lee) n. Walter (b.1814/5) from Dalkeith, he was a frameworker in Hawick. In 1849 he married Joan Kersel, from Jedburgh. Their children included Robert, Adam and Joseph. In 1861 the family were living on Mather’s Close.

harly (har-lee) adv. hardly – ‘ee’d harly ken eet’, ‘she’s harly the belle o the ball’, ‘... an forbye, it was harly the weather for stressin’ [ECS], ‘Similarly, mang (= among), harly (= hardly), dwinglt (= lingered or tarried), etc., are preferred to ‘mang’, ‘har’ly’, ‘dwing’lt’, etc.’ [ECS].

harn (hawn) n., arch. a course form of course cloth – ‘Given for Seven Ells of Harn for Little Joly’s Serks, 18s’ [PR] (short form of harness (hawr-nis) n., poet. gear, armour – ‘But little harness had we there But auld Badrule had on a jack ... ’ [CPM].

Harperhill (har-pur-hil) n. former name for lands in the Barony of Cavers that were part of the lands belonging to the ‘hospitaile de Rowle’ (i.e. Spittal-on-Rule). An acre of arable land there was granted to Archibald Elliot in Gorrenberry (probably the same as Archibald of Falnash) by James Douglas of Cavers in 1554, along with the advowson of the chapel at Caerlenrig. In a following letter of reversion, Elliot agreed to pay 86 pounds Scots for the holding the land and patronage for 13 years. This acre was said to be ‘super lie Harparhill’ and be then occupied by William Storie. It is unclear whether the land was near Spittal-on-Rule or near Caerlenrig or elsewhere.

Harrison (haw-ree-sin) n. John (19th C.) resident of Teviothead Parish. In 1858 he married Joanna, daughter of Henry Elliot, tenant in Colterscleuch. Their children were: Ettie (b.1860); Margaret Charlton (1865–1935); John (b.1867); Henry (b.1869); Janette (b.1873); Walter Scott (1876–1944); and Elliot (b.1879). After the death of his sister-in-law Margaret in 1920, Margaret and Walter became joint tenants in Colterscleuch. Robert (18th C.) along with Robert Elliot of Fenwick, William Oglivie of Hoscote and Thomas Watson (‘writer’ in Hawick) he proposed setting up a stillhouse and brewery in 1737. This may have become Hawick’s first distillery and brewery on Slitrig Crescent, and he was probably one of the partners in the business. Since his surname is not locally common, he may have been brought in from elsewhere as an expert in this business. Walter Scott (19th/20th C.) joint tenant in Colterscleuch along with his sister Margaret Charlton. In 1920 they succeeded their aunt Margaret in the tenancy.

Harrot (haw-ri’) n. former local pronunciation of Harwood, also used to refer to the Laird of Harwood in the Rule valley (it is marked thus on Stobie’s 1770 map; also spelled ‘Harret’ and other variants).

the Harrow Inn (\textit{thu-hawr-ro-in}) n. inn run by James Ruickbie in the early part of the 19th century, on the ground floor of 12 High Street. It was a haunt of the local literati, including the Ettrick Shepherd among others. The motto on its signboard was ‘Sow in Hope’. The neighbouring property was for a while the Ordnance Arms, and it may be that the name was for a period used for both. It may sometimes be confused with the ‘Plough Inn’, which was on the Sandbed. The site was redeveloped as part of the Royal Bank in 1857.

Harry o Burnheid (haw-ree-\-o-burn-heed) n. nickname of Henry Paterson.

Harry’s Well (haw-reez-wel) n. popular name for a well at Burnhead, so named because ‘Harry o Burnheid’ used to sit there.

Hart (har’) n. Adam (17th/18th C.) married Jean Armstrong in Wilton in 1704. Their son Adam was baptised in 1704. Perhaps Bessie (b.1707) and Isabel (b.1710), baptised in Cavers Parish, were also his children. Adam (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1733 he was in Deanbrae. He married Bessie Robson in Wilton in 1731. His children included: Christine (b.1733); and James (b.1740). Adam (18th C.) married Mary Helm in Cavers Parish in 1752. Adam (18th C.) witnessed a baptism for James Dalgleish (resident of Goldielands) in 1778. He could be the Adam who married Janet Hislop in Wilton in 1770, with children Jean (b.1771) and Bessie (b.1774). Perhaps the same Adam married Margaret Tait in Wilton in 1775. Adam (b.1774) son of James and Helen Riddell, he was born in Wilton Parish. In 1841 he was farmer at ‘Lower Lockies hedge’. He married Alison Turnbull in 1800. Their children included: James (b.1801), weaver; Walter (b.1805), also a weaver; Adam (b.1808); John (b.1813), coal merchant; and Helen (b.1816/7), who kept house for her unmarried brothers James and Walter at Lockiesedge.
Adam (b.1808) son of Adam and Alison Turnbull. He was living at Greensidehall in 1851, with his wife Isabella and children Adam, William and Isabella. Adam (19th C.) Cornet in 1863 and Acting Father in 1889. He was a Town Councillor and strong supporter of the Common Riding and was Master of Ceremonies at Common Riding events through the 1890s. He was one of the Councillors who turned out at Common Ridings from the late 1880s, encouraging others to do the same. He can be seen riding near the head of the Procession in the 1899 film clip. He may be the Adam of Lockieshedge whose son George Turnbull was killed in the Boer War in 1900. Andrew (17th C.) maltman in Hawick listed among those contributing to funds for the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the Andrew listed ‘eist the water’ among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. He may be the Andrew who married Margaret Yule in Jedburgh in 1679 and whose children, born in Hawick, included: George (b.1681); Andrew (b.1684); and James (b.1686). He witnessed a baptism for William Taylor in 1682. Fr. Dominic (??–??) priest at S.S. Mary & David’s 1930–38. He oversaw the opening of the new Halls shortly after he arrived. He was transferred to Lochgelly. George (17th C.) blacksmith in Minto Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who married Janet Stewart in 1752. Their children included: Isabel (b.1753); James (b.1754); George (b.1756); Janet (b.1758); William (b.1760); Isabel (b.1763); and Mary (b.1765). Probably the same George witnessed baptisms for George Scott in 1747, for James Beattie and William Telfer (both in Borthaugh) in 1758 and for William Riddell in 1759. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who married Margaret Elliot in 1771. John (b.1758) was probably his son. George (18th/19th C.) recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as farmer at East Highchesters, when he owned 2 horses. He also recorded living at Highchesters in 1799. He married Helen Knox in Hawick Parish in 1785 and had children George (b.1787), Jean (b.1788), James (b.1789), Janet (b.1792), Nelly (b.1794), Isobel (b.1796), Elizabeth (b.1798), George (b.1799) and George (again, b.1800). The first 6 children were baptised in Wilton Parish and the others in Hawick and Roberton. George (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who married Agnes Stot. Their son John was baptised in 1778. He may be the father of an unnamed son (b.1779) and Thomas (b.1787). George (b.1800) born in Roberton Parish, son of George and Helen Knox. He was probably related to the earlier George and William who were at Highchesters. He was farmer at Highchesters in 1841, was shepherd at the Malt Steep in Wilton in 1851 and was ‘Farm Steward, Game Keeper & Shepherd’ at Pilnuir in 1861. His wife was Jane (from Dundee) and their children included: John; Isabel; George; and William. Hector McBean (1890–1972) born in Hawick, he played for Hawick Waverley Rugby Club and became a teacher. He served in the K.O.S.B. during WWI. He spent 27 years teaching Latin and coaching American football at Greenwich Country Day School in Connecticut, U.S.A. (from its foundation). Here he was said to be very popular with his pupils and was apparently the most inspirational teacher President George Bush (Senior) ever had! He retired back to the Hawick area in 1952, living at Midlem, Lilliesleaf, Hawick and finally North Berwick. He taught Latin at Hawick High School for a couple of years and became active in St. Cuthbert’s Kirk. He wrote ‘St. Cuthbert’s Scottish Episcopal Church, Hawick, A Centenary Chronicle, 1858–1958’. It is unclear if he was related to Rev. James William Tasker Hart. James (17th/18th C.) tenant at Appletreehall. He married Isobel Moore in 1703 and their daughter Isobel was baptised in 1705. George (b.1709) was probably also his son. In 1711 he was recorded as tenant in Easter Burnfoot when his daughter Jean was baptised. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Helen (or ‘Nelly’) Riddell and their children included: Adam (b.1774); John (b.1776); James (b.1779); Jean (b.1781); and Betty (b.1784). James ‘Hart of Harts’ (c.1753–1818) farmer at Wilton Burn. It is said that at the age of 25 he stood 6 feet 3 inches tall, weighted 33 stones and was the strongest man in Scotland. He may be the son of George and Janet Stuart, born in Wilton in 1754, with siblings George, William, Isabel, Mary and another brother. He is probably the James recorded as owner of part of Roughheugh (valued at £10 6s 8d) in 1788, and still recorded there in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Martha Elliot and their children included James (b.1785). Rev. James William Tasker (19th/20th C.) rector of St. Cuthbert’s 1892–1903. He had been minister at Barnes (Surrey), Teddington (Middlesex), St. Paul’s (Bristol), St. George’s (Bristol), Leckhampton (Gloucester) and St. Paul’s (Swindon), but exchanged with Rev. Douglas Powell.
Hartop

Ware of Hawick. He wrote the poem ‘The Birth of the Moat’. He had to terminate his incumbency in 1903 due to the threat of losing his eyesight. He wrote ‘The Autobiography of Judas Iscariot, A Character Study’ (1884). Jean (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident who possibly kept a boarding house, or took in orphans perhaps. In 1725 she was given money and grain for keeping Bettie Hay and someone else with the surname Jolly. She could be the Jean who was married to William Bruntfield and had 6 children baptised in Hawick Parish in the period 1712–21. John (17th/18th C.) Glover and innkeeper in Hawick. He was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He witnessed baptisms in 1696 for William Swan, in 1699 for James ‘Col-wort’ in Whitlaw, in 1700 for gardener Gideon Gardner and for flesher Thomas Wilson, in 1701 for tailor William Scott, merchant George Martin and James Grieve from Wilton, in 1702 for James Robson’s illegitimate child and for Bailie George Martin, in 1704 for tailor Robert Wilson and for shoemaker Robert Allan, and in 1705 for Walter Scott in Hawick Shiel. In 1702, along with ex-Bailie John Binnie and merchant Patrick Angus, he was fined for drinking after the ringing of the 10 o’clock bell. In 1702 he complained about 25 people (including the 2 Bailies), being illegally involved with dealing in foreign cloth, woollen garments etc.; his name is written ‘Heart’. Also in 1702 he witnessed a couple of baptisms in Hawick. In 1703 he was fined for the ‘penny-bridal’ at the wedding of his daughter Christian to William Oliver; he was also temporarily removed as an Elder. In 1704 he witnessed baptisms for Bailie George Martin and for tailor Thomas Wilson. He may be the John whose daughter Mary married James Weens in Hawick in 1717. He could be the John listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. John (b.1813) son of Adam and Alison Turnbull. He was listed among heads of households in 1840 and 1841 as a ploughman at Silverbuthall. He was listed as an agricultural labourer at Silverbuthall in 1841 and 1851 and a coal merchant at Lockiesedge in 1861. His wife was Betsy and their children included Margaret, Adam, Alison T. and James K. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Whitfield in 1790. He married Margaret (or ‘Peggy’) Scott and their children included: Christian (b.1788); Janet (b.1790); Margaret (b.1792); and Mary (b.1796). William (18th/19th C.) resident of Highchester. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821 along with ‘G. Hart, Haychesters’. He could be the William, son of George and Janet Stewart born in Wilton Parish in 1760 and the William married to Margaret Scott, whose children born in Wilton included Mary Christian (b.1788), Margaret (b.1792) and Mary (b.1796). He may also have had a son George born in Cavers Parish in 1802 (also formerly written ‘Heart’).

Hartsgarth

Harts (harts) n. former lands in Liddesdale, valued at 12 shillings in a rental roll of c.1376. It seems likely this was related to Hartsgarth and Hartside, which are also listed.

Hartsgarth (harts-gawrth) n. farm on the Hartsgarth Burn, between Hermitage and Newcastleton. It occurs in a rental roll of c.1376, with a value of 3 shillings. It was home to a branch of the Ellists in the late 16th and early 17th centuries. There was formerly a tower-house there, but its precise location is unknown (although marked next to the modern farmhouse on the 1862 Ordnance Survey map). Jeffrey suggests that 3 large stones from the old house were built into the garden gate at Redheugh. It was granted to Robert Elliot of Redheugh by Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus in 1479. ‘Rowie Croser in Hartshkarthbunfute’ is recorded in 1611. In about 1622 the wadset of the farm was purchased by William (for 3,800 merks), brother of Robert Elliot of Redheugh. Through marriage to his niece the lands became owned by James Elliot, 6th son of Gibbie of Stobs by 1639. Rowie Crozier was tenant there in 1622 and 1623. It is traditionally said that Margaret Kidd lived there, providing several illegitimate children to Elliot of Larriston, including perhaps ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters’. The lands were valued (along with Langhaugh) at £466 13s 4d in 1678. Robert Elliot of Larriston became bankrupt and sold the lands to Christopher Irving of Binks in 1688. Irving’s daughter married Adam Beattie who became the next Laird. It was sold by Adam Beattie to John Oliver of Dinhlayre in about 1700, and sold by William Oliver to William Sharp in 1773, who was there until at least 1789; he was recorded as owner in the 1788 county valuation. It was sold by Adam Beatte in 1713. In the 18th century there was an entry in 1630 and it was owned by William Elliot (formerly of Rigg and Hartsgarth) from about 1640. Lawrie Turnbull was owner there in 1643, when it was valued at £15 (although Gilbert Elliott of Craigen and Hartshaugh also owned lands in Abbotrule valued at £65, so perhaps the whole farm was valued at £80). It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. It was again farmed by Turnbulls in the 17th century. In 1694 Walter Riddell was tenant there, with Andrew Dodds the blacksmith and James Haig, Andrew Turnbull, Adam Scott and John ‘Hinge’ also resident there. Later ownership passed to the Elphinstones, with William Elphinstone being recorded as owner in 1707, when it was valued £60 (including the mill and mill lands). It was sold to William Kerr of Abbotrule in 1713. In the 18th century there was an annual horse race on a haugh near here. It was part of the lands sold off by William Kerr of Abbotrule in 1751. In 1788 it was part of the estate of Cornelius Elliot of Wolfelee and valued (along with Hartsgarth Mill) at £60. 2 spindles whorls from the farm are in Hawick Museum (spelled ‘Hartishauch’ in 1567, ‘Hartischauch’ in 1588 and also ‘Hartishauch’, ‘Hartisheuch’, ‘Hartisheugh’, ‘Hartishaugh’, ‘Hartishaukh’, ‘Hartishauke’, ‘Harts-haugh’, ‘Harty’s-haugh’, ‘Hartshaughe’, ‘Heartshaugh’, etc.; it is marked as ‘Hartshauch’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and has the modern spelling by Stobie’s 1770 map; the name presumably derives from deer).

Hartshaugh Mill (hert-suf-nil) n. former separate farm just south of Hartshaugh, containing a corn mill. The extensive mill lade (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map and the 1863 Ordnance Survey map) had its cauld about half way between Forkins and the mill. Adam Turnbull was there in 1623. William Elfinstone was tenant there in 1694. Janet Wilkie from there died in 1760. Thomas Smith was tenant in 1788 and 1797 and is still listed as miller there in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. It was listed among the properties of Cornelius Elliot of Woolee in 1788 (and still in 1811); along with the mill lands, Braidaugh, Mackside and Blackcleaghmouth it was valued at £355 2s. John Short was listed as miller there in 1837 and 1852. James Laidlaw was farmer there in the 1860s and a Mr. Waugh about the 1780s. Part of the lands of Unthank were incorporated within the farm around the early 19th century. The lands were once part of the Barony of Abbotrule, and were sold by William Kerr of Abbotrule to William Elliot of Wolfelee in 1751. Behind the stable door used to hang a perforated stone, used as a charm to stop witches from using horses at night (sometimes written ‘Hartseough’; it is ‘Hartshauche Mill’ in 1623, ‘hartschaugh milne’ in 1681, ‘hartschaughmilne’ in 1694, ‘Hartshaughmiln’ in 1751 and ‘Hartsheughmiln’ in 1797).

Hartsia (hart-sid) n. former farm in Liddesdale, to the north of Cleuchhead. Hartsde Sike is still on the map there. It may be related to the lands of ‘Hyrtistede’ listed on a c.1376 rental roll (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Hartside Sike (hart-sid-sik) n. stream in Liddesdale, rising on the southern slopes of Arnton Fell and running roughly south-easterly to join the Liddel Water to the east of Steelreoad-end.

Hartsteed (harts-steed) n. former lands in the upper Liddesdale valley, recorded on a rental roll of c.1376, under the section called ‘Ermyldoune’. They are listed as ‘Hyrtistede’, with a value of 2 shillings. It is possible this is the same place as Hartsgarth or associated with Hartside Sike, which flows east off Arnton Fell. ‘Hyrtystede et Perysynocstede’ are listed under the ‘Quarterium de Ludne’ in the same c.1376 rental roll, with a valued of 5 shillings.

Hartwud (har’, her’-wud) n. former name for lands between Ashkirk and Selkirk. They are mentioned in a list of lands forfeited by the Earl of Douglas to the Crown in 1455. They were split into 3 steadings, the ‘Eststedle’, ‘Myddilstede’ and ‘Weststedle’ of ‘Hertwode’. The western part was leased by William Turnbull in 1479 and 1486, and this seems to have been what was later called Hartwoodburn. Probably the same William ‘White’ Turnbull is recorded there in 1494/5 when the farm was burned. The steadings were leased to the Earl of Bothwell, Rutherfords and Homes at the end of the 15th century and remained Crown property until at least 1502. Robert Nichol and John Fletcher had sheep stolen from there according to a record in 1494/5. Lawrence Rutherford was recorded being now there in 1502. The Middlesstead was tenanted by Andrew Ker of Greenhead in 1541 (it is ‘hartzwo’ in 1494/5, ‘Hertwod’ in 1502 and ‘Hartwod’ in 1541; ‘Hartwod’ and ‘Hartwood B.’ are marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Hartwudburn (har’-, her’-wud-burn) n. Hartwoodburn, farm off to the left of the A7 just before Selkirk. It was formerly a home of a branch of the Scotts and thirled to Oakwood. It is perhaps the Eaststead of Hartwood mentioned in the latter part of the 15th century. William Turnbull leased these Crown lands in 1479. It was feued to Alexander, Lord Home, in 1510. The lands were occupied by Walter Scott in Headshaw in 1541, paying £26 yearly. In 1621 it was still valued at £26. In 1627 a band of Scotts, from Whithaugh, Headshaw, Huntly and elsewhere harassed the tenant of the Earl of Home there. The lands were valued at £416 13s 4d in 1678. Lands there were held by the Homes when inherited by 3 heirs portioners in 1693. It was owned by John Pringle of Clifton in 1785, when valued at £208. James Laidlaw was tenant there in 1785. It was owned by Mark Pringle of Clifton in 1802 and still valued at £208 (it is ‘Hartwodburne’ in 1468, 1474 and 1542 and ‘Hartwoodburne’ in 1621 and 1678).

Hartwudmyres (har’-wud-mirz) n. Hartwoodmyres, farm on the road over Woll Rig towards the Ettrick valley. John Wilson was recorded as tenant there in 1494/5. It was seat of a branch (or branches) of the Scotts from at least 1539/40 until 1695. Elizabeth Stewart held the lands in 1512. William Scott was tenant there in 1539/40. In 1541 the tenancy was claimed by John Home of Cowdenknowes. Walter Scott, younger of Tushielaw, was there in the 1570s. Scott of Hartwoodmyres held lands valued at £26 13s 4d in 1643. A 10-merk land (of old extent) there was inherited by Sir William Scott of Harden in 1676. The lands were valued at £566 13s 4d in 1678.
Later it was home to the Ogilvies. John Grieve was there in 1785–91 and Archibald Park 1792–97. It was valued at about £460 in 1785 and 1802. In the mid-to-late 19th century it was farmed by brothers Richard, William and John Elliot. A Roman fort and site of a Roman camp are between here and Oakwood (it is marked ‘Hearthwoodmyris’ on Adair’s c. 1688 map; it is ‘hartwoodmyrs’ in 1494/5, ‘Hertwoodmyris’ in 1512, ‘Hertwodmyris’ in 1541, ‘Hartwoodmyres’ in 1573, ‘Hartwoodmyres’ in 1612, ‘Hertwoodmyres’ in 1618, ‘Hartwoodmyre’ in 1628, ‘Hartwoodmyers’ in 1638, ‘Hartwoodmyre’ in 1648 and ‘Hearthwoodmyres’ in 1692).

Harvey (hawn-vee) n. Hugh (1841–1914) station master at Belses 1874–1906. In 1864 he married Margaret Burns, who died in 1915. Their children Margaret (‘Love’) and Nellie both continued to work at the station after their father retired. The family also ran a gig as a taxi service. After he retired he moved to Firview above the station. He is buried at Ancrum Kirkyard. Documents relating to this time have been published in ‘Backtrack’ magazine. Robert (b.1819/20) born in Hawick, he was a farm-worker in Roberton Parish. In 1851 he was living at Highchesters Cottages and in 1861 was a ploughman at Roberton Glebefoot. He married Barbara Deans in 1845 and their children included Andrew, Margaret, Mary, Jane, Helen, Agnes, Janet, Robina Deans (b.1855) and Robert (b.1856). Rev. Thomas (c.1645–1717) graduating from Glasgow University in 1665, he was a minister in Ireland for 13 years, and then spent some time in England. He attended the first meeting of the Synod of Lothian in 1687 after the ‘Toleration’ and became the first post-Revolution minister at Abbotrule in 1689 (although it is unclear in these troubled times when he actually took over from Robert Spottiswood, since it is also claimed that Abbotrule was one of the few local parishes where the minister was not ‘outed’). It is also unclear exactly how many years he remained, since it is recorded that that James Ker was formally reappointed in 1690, but was probably too elderly to take up the position; he may have assisted Ker for some time. In 1692 he was translated to Auchterderran in Fife, but suspended in 1699 for profaning the Lord’s Day. He then went to Ireland and settled at Donoch, near Londonderry. He married a daughter of this same James Ker. Thomas (b.c.1800) tailor at Kippielaw in Wilton Parish. He was listed there among heads of households in 1840 and 1841. He was also recorded there in 1841, along with his wife Agnes and children James, Andrew, Agnes, William and Thomas (also spelled ‘Harvie’ and ‘Hervey’).

Harwick (har-wik) n. city in Pennsylvania, U.S.A., village in Cambridgeshire, name of small towns elsewhere in the world and also sometimes a surname (not to be confused with a similar, but more illustrious word).

Harwud (har-wud, har-wood, haw-ri’) n. Harwood, a seat of the Elliots, near the head of the Rule Water, locally known as ‘Harrot’. This has long been a major estate of Hobkirk Parish, existing since before the Reformation. It was held by Eustace of Lorraine in the early part of the 14th century, being forfeited to the Blairs of that Ilk some time before 1357. However, the Lorraines were restored to the lands at some point, certainly by the middle of the 15th century. ‘John Lorane of Harwood’ is recorded in 1464/5, and the lands continued to be held by the Lorraines until the early 17th century. The farm was burned by the English in 1542. The estate was attacked over a period of years by some of the Turnbuls, part of a feud between Lady Margaret Lorraine (nee Turnbull) and some of the rest of her Clan. Edward Lorraine had sold the lands partly in wadset to Rev. William Weir and then in 1632 the pair had a further wadset to Gilbert Elliot, with the reversion of the lands to Edward Lorraine (for 6500 merks) if he repaid the amount within 5 years. However, in 1637 it was sold outright to William ‘Ellot’, son of Simon of the Binks, who became the first Elliot Laird of Harwood. The Cranstons were superiors around this time, with those rights passing to the Elliots of Stobs. It was ‘Harrot, or Harwood’ in 1643, when valued at £433 6s 8d and owned by Simon Elliot. ‘Harrat with mill thereof’ was listed among the properties of Sir William Elliot of Stobs in the Barony of Feu-Rule in the late 17th century. It was valued at £633 6s 8d in 1678 (including what used to be Appotside). Francis and Thomas Elliot were recorded there in 1746 and Walter Heatley in 1765. Henry Elliot paid tax for 14 windows there in 1748. By 1788 it was ‘Harwood, or Harrot’, valued at £433 6s 8d. It is said that one of the early Elliot Lairds were engaged in (illegally) driving cattle across the Border. J.P. Alison designed servants quarters as an addition to the house in 1906. The 8th Elliot Laird sold the estate to William Elliot (from Lanarkshire) in 1924, and it later passed to his son, Walter, who was an M.P. and cabinet minister. His wife would become Baroness
Harwud

Katharine Elliot of Harwood. 5 flints discovered there are in Hawick Museum, as well as a piece of green pottery. There are several other places of the same name, including those in the Teviot and Slitrig valleys (the origin of the name is probably just ‘hare’s wood’; it is ‘Harwod’ in 1464/5, ‘Harwode’ in 1562 and 1631, ‘Harrat’ in 1598, 1648 and 1649, ‘Harwold’ in 1606, ‘Harrit’ in 1643, ‘Harret’ in 1655, ‘Harrett’ in 1678, ‘Hared’ and ‘Harit’ in 1694, ‘Harrit’ in 1699, ‘Harrot’ in 1700, ‘Harrote’ in 1728, ‘Harriot’ in 1748 and ‘Harrot’ in 1797; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Harewood’, with ‘Woode of Harewood’ just to the north, however, it is ‘Harrot’ on Stobie’s 1770 map, reflecting the contemporary pronunciation).

Harwud (har-wud) n. Harwood, area in the upper Slitrig valley containing Harwood Knowe (crossed to the south by the Catrail) and Harwood Burn, which runs north to join the Langside Burn and then the Slitrig. Remains of an 18th–19th century farmstead were investigated in the mid-1980s before the area was ploughed for forestation.

Harwud see Harwud on Teviot

Harwud (har-wud, har-wood) n. William (15th C.) Chaplain who witnessed an instrument for lands in Morebattle relating to Melrose Abbey in 1444. He also witnessed another instrument for the Abbey in 1445.

Harwud Burn (har-wud-burn) n. Harwood Burn, stream that passes Harwood (in Hobkirk Parish) to join the Rule Water at Forkins (marked ‘Harrot Burn’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Harwud Burn (har-wud-burn) n. Harwood Burn, stream in the upper Slitrig valley. It rises with the King’s Sike and Drowning Sike and joins Langside Burn between Stanishope and Shankend. The Catrail crosses its headwaters. The main name was owned by the Eliotts of Stobs at the end of the 17th century, e.g. being listed in the Land Tax Rolls for 1678 and inherited by Sir William Eliott in 1692. It is ‘Harrotburn’ in 1678 and ‘Herretburn’ in 1692).

Harwud Cottage (har-wud-ko’e-eej) n. Harwood Cottage, former house on the Harwood Burn, to the south-west of the main estate in Hobkirk Parish (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Harwude (law-wud) n. former name for a stream recorded in the royal charter for the lands of Whitslade in about 1170. It is referred to as ‘rivulo de Harwude’, but the identification with a modern location is uncertain (the pronunciation is uncertain, but it is assumed that this is the same word as the other local ‘Harwoods’).

Harwudhill (har-wud-hill) n. Harwoodhill, lands that were once owned by the Scotts of Crumhaugh, and possibly the Scotts of Hardwood. It was presumably land near Harwood-on-Teviot. It is listed among lands in the Barony of Hawick held ‘in tenantry’ by the Baron in 1511, 1572, 1594, 1615 and again in 1686, where it is ‘sometimes called Lant’. The tenant was Adam Scott in 1502. There is a sasine of 1722 giving these lands and others ‘in liferent’ to Beatrix Scott, wife of Walter Scott of Crumhaugh (in 1502, 1572 and 1594 it is ‘Hardwoodhill’ and it is ‘Hartwoodhill’ in 1511).

Harwud Hoose (har-wud-hoos) n. Harwood House, in Rule Water. The old house was built in the 17th century and had 1665 carved over its lintel. In the 1694 Hearth Tax roll, 7 hearths were listed at ‘Harits hous and office houses’. The new house was built in 1834/5 for Maj. William Elliot. The stables were altered by Dick, Peddie & MacKay in 1901 (see also Harwud).

Harwud Knowe (har-wud-now) n. Harwood Knowe, hill in the headwaters of the Slitrig Water, to the east of the Harwood Burn, between Shankend and the Maidens. It reaches a height of 333 m. There may have been a farmstead near here, with James Elliot in ‘Harrotknow’ being recorded in Hobkirk Parish in 1760 and John Elliot in 1775 and 1780.

Harwud Lake (har-wud-lak) n. pond to the south-west of Harwood House in Hobkirk Parish. It was part of the former mill lade system.

Harwud Mill (har-wud-mil) n. Harwood Mill, farm and former corn mill in Hobkirk Parish, just south of Forkins, on the Harwood Burn. It may be the same mill that was known as ‘Apruts Mill’ in the 17th century. It was the location for the ‘hail’ for the ‘uppies’ in the game of Hobkirk Baa in the 19th century. The Hearth Tax rolls lists 4 hearths there in 1694. Walter Turnbull was tenant there in 1797. It is listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory, with Walter Cavers as the miller. James Smith was farmer there in 1868 (also written ‘Harwoodmill’, it is ‘Haratmilne’ in 1694 and ‘Harrotmiln’ in 1797; it is marked ‘Harrot Mill’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Harwud on Teviot (har-wud-, haw-ri’-on-tee-vee-i’) n. farm on the west bank of the Teviot, south of Newmill. Called ‘Harwood on Teviot’ to distinguish it from Harwood in the Rule valley (as well as Harwood in the Slitrig valley, and others throughout the U.K.). It was once split into ‘Nether Harwood’ and ‘Over Harwood’. The lands were owned by the Abernethy family from at least 1393 until 1494, passing then to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell. In 1580 it was held by Margaret Douglas, Countess of Bothwell in liferent, and in heritage by her son Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch; they complained about a gang of about 18 Elliots attacking the farm and stealing 40 cows and oxen and leaving 14 lying dead, all at the instigation of Martin Elliot of Braidlie. It was the seat of a branch of the Scots in the 17th and 18th centuries (formerly at Broadhaugh and descended from the Scots of Newark). The arms of the Scots of Harwood has a band with 2 crescents and a star on the background of an oak tree, and motto ‘Ardenter Amo’. The lands were listed in 1634, 1653, 1661 and 1663 among those held by the Scots of Buccleuch. Walter Scott of Harwood is recorded on the 1678 Land Tax Rolls; along with Falnash it was valued at £1550 13s 4d. In 1681 Thomas, son of Thomas Crawford, merchant in Edinburgh, was served heir to the lands of Over and Nether Harwood. William Forestier is listed there among the poor of Hawick Parish in 1694. James Stevenson was tenant there in at least 1705–08, with the lands owned by Adam Elliot of Arkleton. The estate was sold by Robert Scott of Harwood to Henry, Duke of Buccleuch in about 1738. By 1788 it was valued at £440. William Gladstone was farmer there in 1797, when he is recorded having 3 work horses. In 1811 it was valued at £440 as part of the properties of the Duke of Buccleuch. John Beattie was farmer there in the 1860s. There are also several others Harwoods in Britain (it appears as ‘Harwode’ there in the 1860s. There are also several others Harwoods in Britain (it appears as ‘Harwode’ in 1393, ‘Harwod’ in 1435, ‘Harewode’ in 1446/7, ‘Herwod’ in 1477, ‘Herwode’ in 1494, ‘Harwode’ in 1510/1, ‘Harrett’ in 1581/2 and ‘Harweode’ in 1634 and 1652; it is marked ‘Harwod’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Herrot’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Harwud Park (har-wud-pawrk) n. former shepherd’s cottage near Harwood. It was ‘Harrot Park’ in 1788 when Alexander Lillico was herd there.

Harwud Rig (har-wud-rig) n. ridge to the north of Skelfhill Pen, reaching a height of 393 m.

Harwud Sike (har-wud-sik) n. small stream that joins the north side of the Teviot near Harwood.

Harwudsikefit (har-wud-, ha-ri’-sik-fi’) n. Harwoodsikefoot, former farmstead at the foot of the Harwood Sike, in Teviothead Parish. James Elliot is recorded as farmer there in 1797, and several of his children died there. Shepherd William Oliver was there in 1851 (also written ‘Harwoodsikefoot’).

Harwudtoon (har-wud-toon, haw-ri’-toon) n. Harwoodtown, a former farm and settlement adjacent to Harwood in the Rule valley. Thomas Turnbull was from there in 1567. It was owned by Hector Turnbull of Stanedge in 1609 and Andrew Turnbull in 1610. The old houses there were pulled down by Henry Elliot, who was Laird in the latter part of the 18th century. There is now no sign there was once a hamlet there (it is ‘Harwoodtoun’ and ‘Harwodtoun’ in 1562 and 1567, and ‘Harrottown’ about 1605).

hash (hashi) v., arch. to cut, particularly with a scythe, slice, hack, chop, slash – ‘...and how horribly the bogs were hashed ...’ [HSR], to fatigue a person, overtire oneself – ‘It’s been a gey hashin’ day for iz at the herst, A’m muittit oot an’ fair platchin’ [GW].

hash (hashi) n. a mess, a clumsy failure – ‘hei made a right hash o eet’, a confused mass, a confused crowd of people, a haver, blether, person clumsy in speech, general term of contempt – ‘He’s a wundy hash’ [GW], ‘Ye muckle, careless, thoughtless, thriftless hash. To spend yer siller an’ fair platchin’ [GW].

hass (has) n., arch. the neck, throat – ‘Then deep in her hass she mutter’d a word, And proddit him a gossip.

hasnae see hasni

hasni (has-, has-ni, -ne, -na) contr. hasn’t, has not – ‘Wha hasna heard how I withstood That whilk they ca’ ‘The Great Hawick Flood’?’ [AD], ‘He hasna got a copper so he daurna’ ring the bell’ [WE], ‘The care o life she hasna een to see ...’ [WL] (also spelled ‘hasna’ and ‘hasnae’).

hass (has) n., arch. the neck, throat – ‘Then deep in her hass she mutter’d a word, And proddit him in the flanke’ [JTe], ‘The master’s hearte raise to his hass, His stomach vow’d to flynch’ [JTe], ‘He laid hons on him, an’ tuik him bie the hass, sayin’, Paye me that thou awest’ [HSR], ‘I am weare o’ my cryin’; my hass is dryet, mine eyne feil while I waite for my God’ [HSR], the neck of a glen, head of a pass – ‘A gigantic castle to guard the ‘hass of the hope’’ [WaD] (this occurs as a suffix in several local place names. e.g. ‘Hawkhass’, ‘Sorbie Hass’ and ‘Whitrope Hass’).

Hass (has) n. farm on the A7, south of the Carter Bar, between Huntford and Edgerston. There are signs of old fields banks and rig lines there. A quarry nearby contains basaltic rocks from the Hawick-Acklington Dyke (also called ‘the Hass’).

the Hassely Cleuch (thu-ha-su-lee-clooch) n. former cottage in the west corner of Stonedge farm. ‘Hobbie’ Elliot lived there in the late 18th century.

Hassendean (has-in-deen) n. hamlet and surrounding district about 6 miles north-east of Hawick at the foot of Minto hills, and once the site of the first station north of Hawick on the Waverley Line. This was also once a separate parish, having a link with the monks of Melrose Abbey from early times.

- After decades of debate over the distant parts of the Parish (particularly those in the Borthwick valley, with a new church built there in 1658), the Parish was suppressed in 1689, with the area redistributed among to Minto, Roberton and Wilton. There are stories of near riots during the de-roofing of the Kirk in 1690. The Barony of Hassendean was presumably once a single estate, but became 2 separate parts, with the western and eastern half baronies having separate Barons.
- Walter Fitz Alan was granted land there by Malcolm IV about 1155. A ploughgate of land here was given to Paisley Priory in the 1180s by Alan Stewart (son of Walter). The lands were included in a dowry granted to Joan of England (sister of the English King) when she married King Alexander in 1221. In 1304/5 there is a record of the rentals from the farms there, ‘by the hands of Sir Alexander de Balliol’. In about 1320 James Cunningham was granted lands there by Robert the Bruce, this being the eastern half barony, and the Cunninghams held the superiority of these lands for perhaps 300 years. The lands were temporarily given to Henry Percy in 1334 (although the English never really had control over southern Scotland) and in 1341/2 the vills of Jeddeworth, Bonjedworth, and Hassenden were granted to Henry Percy. There were further mentions by the English King in 1356, 1397 and 1408. William Livingstone of Drumry was baron of ‘Lang Hassendean’ (presumably the eastern half barony) in a document of 1470 and it passed to Alexander, Lord Home in 1493/4. In 1482 Elizabeth Cunningham inherited the eastern part from her father; it was ‘then waste’, but valued at £10 Scots in times of peace and was held of the superior the Lord of Kilmours (another Cunningham). In 1493 a man was charged with bringing Englishmen to the area where they stole 100 cows, as many sheep and other gear. Walter Taylor was recorded there in 1493 and Matthew Turnbull in 1494/5. It is recorded that Alexander Lord Home was owner of lands there in 1502. The area was long a seat of the Scotts of Hassendean, the first being David in the mid-15th century, and Sir Alexander Scott of Hassendean reported to have fallen at Flodden. This branch of the Scotts held the lands until about the end of the 17th century (when the lands became part of the Buccleuch estates); their motto was ‘Trusty and True’. The lands were burned by the Earl of Hertford’s men in 1545 (and recorded by the English as ‘Hessington’). The superiority of the lands was confirmed to Alexander, Lord Home in 1509/10 and James, Earl of Home in 1621. In 1718 the farm of ‘Hasindean & Marlside’ was part of the estates of the Scotts of Buccleuch, covering 583 acres (‘besides two pieces of land which are intermixed with it’) and bounded by Kames, Minto, Hassendeanbank, Knowe, Townhead, Horsleyhill, Hassendean Common, Newlands and Huntlaw. The farmhouses (together with trees) are shown clustered about the modern location, on the eastern side of the Hassendean Burn, with a corn mill also there. The central estate of Hassendean was at some point split into Hassendean-bank, Hassendeanburn and Teviot-bank. It was home of Dickson’s nurseries from 1728 until the early 19th century. The tenant farmers were the Turnbulls through the 18th century. Robert Dickson is recorded owning 8 horses there in 1797 and Adam Turnbull was a farmer there at the same time. The lands were listed in the 1788 county valuation and the Land Tax Rolls of 1811 as owned by the Duke of Buccleuch and valued at £533 6s 8d. The Shiel family farmed there in the early to mid 19th century. It is also famous from the ballad ‘Jock o’ Hazeldean’ and the tune ‘Hazeldean’ – ‘…They are a’ away to Hassendean burn, And left both wheel and cards’ [T], ‘Hassenden came without a call, The antientest House among them all’ [CWS], ‘…Then came Alton; And the Cessford had a sasine in 1519, and his son Walter Ker in 1543, confirmed in 1576. Meanwhile William Turnbull held a piece of the land in 1536 (probably Cockerheugh), and in 1540 reference is made to the deceased John Turnbull of Hassendeanbank. The farm was burned by the Earl of Hertford’s men in 1545. George Turnbull from here was recorded in 1573. Robert Ker, 1st Earl of Roxburgh, inherited the lands in 1610. Thomas Turnbull was infefted in these lands by the Com- mendator of Melrose in about 1622; they were valued at £550. Lands here were still listed as being part of the Lordship of Melrose in 1680 (a vestige of the connection with Melrose Abbey). Sir William Douglas of Cavers inherited 6 acres of land here in 1687, followed by his brother Archibald in 1698. William Redford was tenant in 1688. The lands passed to Minto Parish in 1690. Adam Young was there in at least 1690-94. Additioally John Redford, William Turnbull and Richard Turnbull were there in 1694, with Margaret Renwick, Janet Henderson and Mungo ’Modrell’ listed among the poor. James Turnbull was there in 1785. The Duke of Roxburghe (perhaps just as superior) exchanged his lands here with those of George Douglas of Cavers at Denholm Haugh in 1797. It was listed under the Duke of Roxburghe in the county valuation of 1788 and the Land Tax Rolls of 1811, and the Earl of Minto in about 1874, with a value of £550. The Dickson family held the estate through most of the 18th and 19th centuries and had nurseries nearby. Andrew Bruce was farmer there in 1797, when he owned 12 horses. Ephraim Selby was farmer there until the 1860s, when his son Robert too over. Col. Archibald Dickson had the house rebuilt in the late 1870s. Latterly it was the home of Ken Oliver. The course of the Teviot used to change after floods and ice-storms, and sometimes in the 18th century would pass by the foot of Hassendeanbank brae. To the north-west lie the faint remains of a double-ditched settlement, about 160 m by 75 m, with another possible settlement adjacent. To the south, by the Teviot, are cropmarks indicating a roughly oval fort, 60 m by 30 m, and there is also an old enclosure just south of the farm (also written ‘Hassendean Bank’; this is probably what is labelled ‘Banck’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map on the opposite side of the Hassendean Burn from the Kirk; it is ‘hassynede bank’ in 1409, ‘Hassidenbank’ in about 1410, ‘Hasidenbank’ in 1432, ‘Hassindanbank’ in 1492, ‘hassindeane bank’ in 1502, ‘Hassindenbank’ in 1510, ‘Hassindanebank’ in 1512, ‘Hassindanebank’ in 1516, ‘Bank-hessington’ in 1545, ‘Hassinbank’ in 1573, ‘Hassindanebank’ in 1579, ‘Hassindenbank’ in 1634, ‘Hassendeanebank’ in 1684, ‘Hassindanebank’ in 1607, ‘Hassenda- nbank’ in about 1622 and 1640, ‘Hassindinbank’ in 1670 and ‘Hassendeanebank’ in 1680).

Hassendeanburn (has-in-deen-burn) n. farm and estate at Hassendean, previously part of the lands of the Barony of Hassendean, on the north bank of the Teviot, about 3½ miles from Hawick. John Hope and James Shiel were listed there among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694. It was home of the Dicksons who made the area famous for establishing the first and largest nursery and seeds business in Britain, starting in 1729 and expanding to Hawick by 1766 (and being the progenitor for nurseries in Edinburgh, Chester and Perth). Archibald Dickson was there in the 1780s. Christian Dickson was living there in 1861 and George Mack was farmer later in the 1860s. A new house was constructed in 1876, with designs by Wardrop and Reid and there were al- terations in the 1890s to designs by J.P. Alison. Hawick Provost Robert Fraser Watson lived there in later life. At one time the house contained the writing desk of Napoleon Bonaparte, purchased by Watson. The mansion was demolished in the 1950s, but some of the trees planted in the area may survive from the days of the Dicksons. There is still a farm there. Just south of the farm buildings there is a road bridge over the railway (it is ‘Hassendenburn’ in 1566 and ‘Hasandenburne’ in 1694; it is probably what is marked ‘Burnfeoote’ on Blaue’s 1654 map, between the Kirk and Tower of Hassendean).

Hassendean Burn (has-in-deen-burn) n. stream that passes through the former Parish of Hassendean. It effectively rises on the eastern slopes of Drinkstone Hill, running roughly to the east and being joined by the Dearly Burn and Huntlaw Burn. It turns roughly south at Hassendean village, with a rail bridge over it at a culvert, then joining the Teviot near Hassendeanburn.

Hassendean Burnfit (has-in-deen-burn-fi’) n. former name for lands near where the Hassendeanburn meets the Teviot, presumably lower down than Hassendeanburn farm itself. This is probably the ‘Burnfoot’ listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hassendean Parish, with John Veitch and William Liddell listed there among the poor of the Parish. It may be the ‘Burnfoote’ marked near to Hassendean on Blaeu’s 1654 map.

Hassendean Common (has-in-deen-ko-min)

n. former Common of Hassendean Parish, to the west of Hassendean. It bordered on the lands of Wester Groundestone, Drinkstone and Clarilaw. Its division was discussed at least as early as 1757, when it was part of the Parishes of Minto and Wilton. It was divided in 1763 and subsequently enclosed into fields (a detailed map exists from 1762), at the instigation of the Buccleuch estates; an action was brought in 1762 against Henry, Duke of Buccleuch by Capt. John Douglas of Midshiels, John Chisholme of Stirches, Thomas Turnbull of Knowe and others. As well as those men William Scott of Burnhead also received a share. The name survives in the farm in that area. A drove road used to cross it.

Hassendean Court (has-in-deen-kör’)

n. part of Stirches, off Hazelwood Road, built in 1975 and named after the Hassendean district.

Hassendean Hill (has-in-deen-hil)

n. small hill between Horsleyhill and Hassendean farms. It reaches a height of 171 m.

Hassendean Kirk (has-in-deen-kirk)

n. church of the ancient parish of Hassendean. It originally belonged to the Bishop of Glasgow, being granted by David I, confirmed in 1170. However, it was granted by the Bishop of Glasgow to Melrose Abbey, for the sustenance for poor pilgrims coming to Melrose, as confirmed in about 1195, 1206, 1220 and 1231/2. It was dedicated to St. Mungo (or Kentigern) in the reign of William the Lion and then in 1193/4 patronage was given to the monks of Melrose Abbey, who built a house there, the Monk’s Tower, as a hospital for wayfarers and pilgrims. In 1315 the profits from the church were re-assigned to Melrose Abbey, with a confirmation in 1326. In 1488 the Vicar was bound not to interfere with the Abbey’s right to the ‘erde silver of the quer’, i.e. the money charged for burials in the kirk choir. William Grahamslaw was recorded being ‘apud ecclesiam de hassinden’ in 1493, suggesting that he was farmer of lands there. Melrose Abbey held the church essentially until the Reformation; there was still a rental for the ‘kirkland of Hassinden’ recorded in about 1564. These kirklands were probably the ‘Hassindenkirk’ farmed by John Turnbull of Hassendeanean in about 1560, and went to William, Earl of Morton in 1608. The churchyard there must have held local burials for many centuries. In 1670 it was declared that Turnbull of Knowe owned the burial place within the bell house. There were still marriages taking place there in 1687. The parish was suppressed in 1689 and the church roof removed to Roberton, amid scenes of great hostility in 1690 (not in 1687, as suggested by the verse). This followed several decades of uncertainty over the status of the parish. A crowd gathered to try to prevent the unroofing, and the first man to climb a ladder was said to have been killed falling after being struck by a stone. Sheriff Douglas was called and was supposedly cursed by an old woman. There was also said to have been a scuffle near Hornshole, with the church bell thrown in the river (and either left there or retrieved to be the bell for Roberton). The historical record of events indicate that it was indeed a serious riot and that workmen were injured (but not killed), with several of the heritors accused of instigating the riot. The last incumbent was Francis Scott, who was removed in 1689 after the Revolution; other local ministers filled in for a few years, the last being Samuel Johnstone in 1693 (perhaps preceded by James Borland). The ruined church can be seen in a sketch of 1788 (by Adam de Cardonnel, based on a drawing by Archibald Rutherford in 1776), showing decorated arches. It was largely swept away, along with some of the graveyard, in a flood of the Teviot in January 1796 (or possibly 1795), the destruction completed by the 1806 flood, so that now no sign of it remains. The exposed coffins and headstones of the Ogilvies were removed to Ashkirk kirkyard. The site of the church is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, and since the Teviot has changed its course somewhat, the location now corresponds to a bank on the south side. Several pieces of sculpted stone, said to have been from the church, were discovered in the rock garden of Teviot Bank, including a ‘cresset’ (medieval lamp stand) described in 1918. There is additionally part of a carved tombstone built into the garden wall at Minto House. And a piece of sculpted stone, the capital of an Ionic wall pillar, was found in a field beside Roberton Kirk in 1963, which may also be a piece of the old Kirk at Hassendean. The old bell in Roberton Kirk, inscribed ‘For the Tolbuith of Melrose – 1649’ may have hung at Hassendean for a while before being removed to Roberton, and possibly being thrown into Hornshole by angry parishioners according to tradition. It is recorded in 1716 that the widow of the last minister gave some church items to Roberton Parish, namely a large bible, pulpit cloth, pewter vessels and session books. There is an existing communion token that is plain and square, bearing the letters ‘H.K.’ A roll of the ministers is: Richard, Dean around 1170s to 1190s; William, Vicar around 1280; probably John Cavers in the 1480s; Walter Douglas in at least 1488/9–1500; John Duncan, Vicar until 1538; George Scott, Vicar from 1539; Kentigern Reid, 1539; John Duncan (again), Vicar until 1544; John Anderson, Vicar from 1544; Patrick Crawford, Chaplain in 1549; Thomas Weston, Vicar c.1568–76; William Auchmowtie (Minister, along with several neighbouring parishes), from 1574; John Scott, Reader in 1575; Thomas Newbie, Reader 1576–82; John Bonar 1594–c.95; Simon Scott, from 1595; John Mather 1602–09; Robert Collace, Reader in 1606; Allan Lundie 1610–11; James Mitchelson 1611–13; Alexander Forrest 1613–58; William Mushet 1664–78; Francis Scott 1678–89 – ‘It was in the year o’ aughty-sev’n Highchesters ca’d oot a’ his men To meet the Shirra of Tividale At the Kirk o’ Hassendean’ [T] ‘K. of Hasindein’ is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Hassendeankirk (has-in-deen-kirk) n. former name for lands associated with the church of Hassendean. ‘William Trumbill of Hassindane Kirk’ is recorded in 1553/4. It is ‘Hassindenkirk’ in 1564 when John Turnbull of Hassendeankbank complained that he had 80 sheep stolen from there. These lands were formerly associated with Melrose Abbey.

Hassendean Ladylands (has-in-deen-lä-deelands) n. another name for Ladyland.

Hassendean Mains (has-in-deen-mänz) n. former name for a farm in Hassendean Parish, presumably being the ‘home farm’ for the Baron of Hassendean. A charter of 1516 records Sir Walter Scott of Branxholmie gaining the lands of ‘Nether Mains of Hassendean’ and the ‘Mains of Hassendean’ from the forfeiture Alexander, Lord Home. In 1535 there was a revocation of a charter James Lundy had for ‘Ouir and Nethir Manys of Hassendean’ and also a charter Sir Walter Scott of Branxholmie had for ‘Estir Manys of Hassendene’. In 1550/1 Robert, son and heir of Adam Scott of ‘Nethirimans of Hassindene’ is recorded being infested in the lands of Little Drinkstone (this is probably the same as Adam and Robert Scott of Clarilaw and Alton). The ‘Middle Mains’ and the ‘East Mains’ were described in the 16th century. The Middle Mains was granted to Gavin Elliot by Alexander, Lord Home (superior of Hassendean) in 1555, along with Horsleyhill. In 1616 the ‘Middle Mains of Hassendean’ was sold by the Earl of Home to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. The Earl of Tarras held the lands in 1694, when the residents recorded there were George Scott, Walter Riddell, Margaret Riddell, Thomas Turnbull, Walter Turnbull, Robert Learmonth and Robert Brown, with James Grieve listed among the poor.

Hassendean Mill (has-in-deen-nil) n. former corn mill at Hassendean farm. It is clearly marked, on the east side of the Hassendean Burn, on the 1718 Buccleuch survey. The mill dam and mill lade are marked on the 1841 Ordnance Survey map. It is recorded being repaired in 1744 and in 1752 its ‘cauld and dam’ suffered great damage from a flood in July.

the Hassendean Oak (thu-has-in-deen-ök) n. outstanding example of an ancient oak tree (Quercus petraea) near Hassendean. It has a short, squat trunk, with an extensive crown, suggesting it was once pollarded. The trunk has a circumference of about 20 ft (194 cm) and it reaches a height of 26 m.

Hassendean Pairish (has-in-deen-pä-reesh) n. old parish of Hassendean, centred around the farms of Hassendean, but extending into the modern Wilton area, and also containing a detached part in the Borthwick valley. It existed from at least 1155, when Malcolm IV granted the land to Walter, son of Alan the Steward. The chapel belonged to the monks of Melrose from the end of the 12th century, when they were given its lands and tithes in order to build a hospital for pilgrims to Melrose. This building was referred to as the Monk’s Tower, and the lands connected with it were called the Monk’s Croft. The church itself was situated near where the Hassendean Burn meets the Teviot. The main part of the Parish was burned along with much of Teviotdale by Hertfords men in 1545. The Cunninghams were superiors of the eastern half Barony from the early 14th century, for about 300 years. In 1598 some of the ‘non-entries’ in the Barony were gifted to the Diocese of St. Andrews by James IV. By the 17th century most of the land was owned by Scott of Buccleuch. In 1643 the total valuation of the lands in the Parish was £6326 and in 1678 was £7704. The Parish teinds were valued at £232 6s 8d in 1643; this valuation continued in 1707 and in 1788, when transferred to Wilton, and still held by the Scotts of Buccleuch. In 1649 the land and crops of the Parish were valued at about £4200 in Roxburghshire and £1200 in Selkirkshire. In 1678 the rents in the parish were valued at £7793 10s
Hassendean Pond

8d in Roxburghshire and £1133 6s 8d in Selkirkshire. The Parish long had an isolated part in the Borthwick valley, roughly between the Harden and Roberton Burns; this part may have been served by the chapel at Chapelhill (just across the Borthwick), with a priest supplied by the Parish, and lasting until about the Reformation. A series of petitions and inquiries finally led to the whole of Hassendean being joined to the newly created Roberton Parish in 1658, but reinstated in 1666, only to be finally suppressed in 1689 and redistributed to Minto, Roberton and Wilton. Most of the lands went to Minto, while the vicarage tonts etc. were given to the new parish of Roberton. The church roof was removed to Roberton in 1690 amid scenes of violence, resulting in a workman being killed and apparently a curse being placed on the Douglases of Cavers. The graveyard continued to be used until partially swept away in a Teviot flood of 1796, which also removed the remaining ruins of the old church. A register of births and marriages from the parish has been preserved, covering the period 1679–89 and included within the records of Roberton Parish.

Hassendean Pond (has-in-deen-pōnd) n. pond at Hassendean, probably formerly used for curling. The 1812 minutes of Hawick Curling Club notes that ‘R. Wilson bet Jas. Millar that the Dove Mount Well is 20 feet higher than Hassendean Pond. R.W. lost. Thereafter Millar bet Wilson that the Dove Mount Well is no higher than Hassendean Pond, but Mr Thomson (who decided the former bet offhand) could not decide this without a great deal of trouble’.

Hassendean Schuil (has-in-deen-skil) n. former school in Hassendean Parish. The only known schoomaster there is Robert Collace, recorded in 1613 and 1631.

Hassendean Station (has-in-deen-stā-shin) n. railway station on the Waverley Line situated at Hassendean. This was the main station for the area around Denholm, and the first station on the line to the north of Hawick. The station still has a footbridge connecting the platforms, while the main station building has been renovated for domestic use. The section of railway nearby had a couple of railway bridges and a road bridge. A cart ran every day between Denholm and the Station in the latter part of the 19th and early 20th centuries.

Hassendean Toon (has-in-deen-toon) n. former farm, probably an alternative name for the main farm at Hassendean itself, which was also referred to as ‘Toonheid’ or ‘Knowetoonheid’. Like much of the area the lands there became part of Minto Parish in 1690 (it is ‘Hassynande toune’ in 1548/9).

Hassendean Toor (has-in-deen-toor, -tow-ur) n. former tower in Hassendean, also known as ‘the Monk’s Tower’. It is referred to as the ‘Castle of Hassendene’ in a charter of about 1537. It could be the same as the ‘tower and fortalice’ at Easter Hassendene, mentioned in a sasine of 1532. It passed from Melrose Abbey to the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1546/7. It is referred to in a confirming charter of 1574 as ‘Hassindene alias Munkis Tower’, 1653 as ‘Hasendene-tour alias Munckisture’ and similarly in 1661. In 1663 ‘all and hail the toure and fortalice callit Hassendein Tour alias Monckis Tour, with the barne, yairdis, girmallis, croftis, housis, and bigingis thairof’ is listed among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch. ‘Scott of Satchells refers to ‘John Scot of Monks-tower, brother to old William Scot of Altoun’. The Ordnance Survey Name Book of 1862 describes that the remains were removed about 15 years earlier and the stones used to build the farmhouse at Hassendean.

haste (hāst) v., arch. to hasten, make haste – ‘...he has seen the Town’s Herd scare and haste them out of the way with his dogs’ [C&L1767].

Hastie (hās-tee) n. John (c.1680–c.1730) member of a family that had been pipers in Jedburgh for generations. His death was lamented in a poem published in Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784), but dating from decades earlier. It was also reprinted by John Leyden in ‘The Complaynt of Scotland’, referring to it as ‘this excellent Dirge, which elucidates so much the manners of the Border Pipers’. From the poem we learn that he was also a fiddler; it ends with ‘Here lies dear John, whase pipe and drone, And fiddle aft has made us glad; Whase cheerfu’ face our feasts did grace – A sweet and merry lad’. He was said to be a player of the Lowland bagpipe (rather than a bellows-driven pipe of the Northumberland form) and to be the first piper to introduce several tunes that became common among Teviotdale pipers. He was succeeded in about 1731 by his nephew Robin (or Robert), who was last of the Hasties to be piper in Jedburgh. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Jean Gledstains and their children included Alexander (b.1646). Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hummelknowes on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls.

Hastings (hās-tinz) n. Sir Robert (13th/14th C.) Englishman who was Sheriff or Constable of Roxburgh at least 1298–1304. In 1302 he, along with Sir Alexander Baliol was appointed to superintend the construction of a fortress in Selkirk. In 1301 he pursued some men who had stolen cattle from England, and along with Sir Hugh de Audley and others captured the 12 men, including 2 of the appellation 'del Hepe'. This was part of an agreement between himself, his brother Sir Richard and Sir Hugh de Audley for pursuing robbers in Roxburghshire. Also in 1301 he wrote to King Edward describing actions that had been taken against John de Souls. In 1301/2 he was one of 2 men appointed by Edward I to oversee the construction of a new castle at Selkirk. In 1303/4 he was Sheriff at the inquest to decide on the inheritance of the half barony of Wilton.

Warren (1732–1818) East India Company civil servant who went on to become Governor-General of India, but was impeached for corruption (although acquitted on his return to Britain). After his trial he stayed at the Mossaun Inn and visited Hawick as a guest of James Anderson at Wilton lodge, being famously ordered off Thomas Turnbull's lands at Wilton Glebe when out hunting—`Ye're that damned Indian rubber (robber) Warren Hastings; get off the ground at yince' [RM].

Hastrel (hast-rul) n., arch. someone who speaks or acts confusedly.

Haswell (has-wel) n. James (1714/5–82) probably son of John, who was Provost of Jedburgh. He himself served as Provost of Jedburgh in 1766. He was Sheriff-Substitute of Roxburghshire in 1780. He married Mary Paterson and had a son, John. He was buried at Jedburgh Abbey. John (17th C.) taxed for 2 hearths on the west-side of Hawick on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Margaret (17th C.) described as 'liferenter of Uttersiderg' in a 1643 evaluation of Wilton Parish lands, where she is listed as the 5th largest landowner. She is probably from the family of later Provosts of Jedburgh. She could be the Margaret, daughter of Archibald Maxwell of Cowlhill, who married William Elliot, younger of Fahash in 1635, and was granted liferent of Outerside; Elliot died in 1637 and it seems reasonable to suppose that she remarried. Thomas (115th/16th C.) recorded in Belses in 1502. He was surety for John Buckingham, who was also in Belses. William (17th C.) on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He could be the William, married to Marion Scott, whose children baptised in Hawick included: Agnes (b.1679); Isobel (b.1681); Margaret (b.1685); and Janet (b.1688). The witnesses in 1688 were Robert Scott and John Mark. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for wright Walter Gledstains and his wife Janet Scott in 1678 and another for William Taylor in 1680 (also written ‘Hasuell’ and ‘Hasswell’; cf. Hessel).

One of Scotland’s leading textile centres, it is also famous for its Common Riding, rugby, and long tradition of civic independence. It is first recorded in the 12th century, and built up around the Tower and St. Mary’s Church. It has been a Burgh of Barony since some time in the 15th century, with the earliest existing Charter being from Sir James Douglas in 1537. It was burned by the English in 1418, 1548 and 1565, and the inhabitants burned it themselves in 1570 so as to not to provide food or shelter to the invaders. Almost all records before the 1630s were lost through incursions of ‘Englishmen and thieves’ – ‘Up wi’ Hawick, its rights and common ….’ [AB], ‘…That while we hold in memory the warrior days of old, Hawick’s trade shall prosper more and more, her sons be more extolled’ [JEDM], ‘But this I ken for certain shair – A day frae Hawick’s a day wasted’ [DH], ‘…And Hawick there in the middle, The centre o’ them a’’ [WL] (through the 12th and 13th centuries there are spellings like ‘Hawhic’, ‘Hawyk’, etc., which continued until the 17th century, with the modern spelling first appearing in the early 14th century; the origin of the name is uncertain, with ‘hedged houses’ from the Old English ‘haga wic’ being the most popular, although there are no early enough examples with the ‘g’ to prove this, and other ideas, such as ‘town on the low pasture’ or ‘high dwelling’ have also been suggested).

Hawick (haw-wik, hoik) n. the other one, population 536, in Kandiyohi County, Minnesota, U.S.A., Zip code 56246. It is on the Burlington Northern Railroad and MN highway 23, close to the city of Willmar (and coincidentally to the slightly larger town of Melrose) and 68 miles from Minneapolis. The site was first settled in 1857, officially incorporated in 1866 and named ‘Roseville’. A station was built there when the St. Cloud and Willmar branch of what was the ‘St. Paul, Minneapolis and Manitoba Railway’ reached the town in 1886. The station was originally named ‘Russell’, but said to have been renamed Hawick by railway manager Robert Manuel (son of a Hawick Burgh Surveyor) when it was realised there was another Russell elsewhere.

There is a separate Roseville nearer to Minneapolis, and the name ‘Hawick’ stuck for this little township. The usual pronunciation is of course different, with the w pronounced and the accent on the first syllable (note that details of the naming are unclear, it is unclear who exactly Robert Manuel was, and there is a separate story of a Norwegian name ‘Harvig’ which became Hawick).

Hawick (ha-wik) n. the third one, a deserted medieval village in Northumberland, near where Hawick Farm and Hawick Crags are on the modern Ordnance Survey maps. In the 12th century the village of Hawick was part of the Lordship of Bolbec, and held by the Lords of Bolam in the 13th century. Thomas of Woodstock, 6th and youngest son of Edward III of England, was created Duke of Gloucester there by his brother Richard II in 1385 on an expedition to Scotland. There is reference to a ‘Bastell House’ there in 1541 and a record of 1584 records that 4 ‘decays’ had taken place since 1535, although it is unclear precisely what this refers to. It is absent from the hearth tax list of 1666, there are only 6 families recorded there in 1734 and 4 buildings in a map of 1769. The township was transferred from Kirkharle to Kirkwhelpington parish in 1847, by which time it must have been already little more than a farm. Much of the earlier earthworks have been put under the plough, but the boundaries of the former village can still partially be seen in ridge and furrow. The nearby Chapel Hill probably contained the chapel near its summit; St. Katherin’s chapel at Hawick is recorded in the 13th century, and a font plus bones were dug up there in the 18th century. Nearby there is a neolithic site, consisting of a small area of sandstone containing at least a dozen cup-shaped marks, some of which are apparently arranged along the rim of a circle (the origin is suggested to be the Old English ‘haga wic’, i.e. the same as for our town, although there is no indication of any direct connection).

Hawick (ha-wik) n. name of a former parish in Queensland, Australia, near the town of Blackall, approximate Latitude 24°29’ South, Longitude 145°46’ East.

Hawick (ha-wik) n. homestead in South Australia, north of the town of Borderland, approximate location is Latitude 35°52’ South, Longitude 140°53’ East.

Hawick (ha-wik) n. fictional district in the video game ‘Grand Theft Auto’. In 2013 the text at the Grant Theft Auto V web-site describes the shopping experiences of the town of Los Santos, including ‘the disheveled and disaffected drug addict hipster vibe in Hawick’. This caused much offence when reported in the press, although ‘hipster’ seems quite complementary.

Hawick (hIk) n. the dialect spoken in and around Hawick – ‘ee’re no allowed ti speak Hawick it the skuil, ee heh’i speak posh’, ‘Braid Ha-wik’ [ECS].

Hawick (hik) n. song with words by J.L. Hercus and music by Adam Grant. The words come from a poem penned by James Hercus, sometime before his death in 1885, with the music coming later. Since the words describe many of the Hawick traditions, it is somewhat mysterious that it should have been written by an Orkadian, who, although living in the Borders, appears to have had no strong ties to Hawick. It is recorded being sung as a new song at the 1898 Colour Bussing by R.T. Paterson. The music was said to be by ‘M. Rosenberg’, which was a pseudonym for Adam Grant. It was then sung regularly at Colour Bussings, and there is a suggestion that the tune may have changed, with the modern one first sung at the 1910 Colour Bussing by George Scott. It was popular with singers John Campbell and Robert T. Roddan.

Hawick (ha-wik) n. A.P. (20th C.) Guizer Jarl in the 1921 Shetland Up-Helly-Aa festival, so a ‘Hawick’ man has been the Shetland Cornet (in a festival that, incidentally, is only about 200 years old). Andrina Isbister (1891–1963) daughter of Thomas and Anderina Smith. She is buried at Hisswick, Northmavine. Andrew of ‘Skatsta’ (16th/17th C.) possibly son of Victor, he is recorded in Shetland documents of 1575, 1580, 1586. In 1575 he was ‘of Stratsa’ in the Register of the Privy Seal when one of those listed as having been falsely accused by Lord Robert Stewart, tyrannical Earl of Orkney and Shetland. In 1578 he was a debtor to the burgesses of Dysart. Then in 1596, along with his brother David and others he was accused of attacking Robert Cheyne of Ury, who was Bailie of ‘Tingwall’. He is also mentioned in a charter of 1613, although that may be his son. Andrew Hugh (1905–62) son of Gideon Anderson Smith and Jane Hawick (so he took his mother’s name). He was born at Leith and married Barbara Nicolson Malcolmson. He is buried at Knab Side Cemetery, Lerwick. Bartholomew (16th/17th C.) possibly the same as the son of Vincent, he married Catherine Sinclair in Orkney in 1612. His wife left a testament in 1630 when he is described as ‘Bartillmo Hawick of Nescheoun, parish of Delting’. Elizabeth (18th/19th C.) married Magnus Stove in 1811. Elizabeth Mary (1896–1989) daughter of Thomas and Anderina Smith. She married John Tulloch in 1931. She is buried in Knab Side Cemetery. Edmund (b.c.1630) farmer in Pul- burgh, West Sussex. He is recorded in 1690 in a list of seatings at Sidlesham Church. George (16th C.) recorded as Reader at Kirkbuddo in 1574. Gideon Smith (1832–1909) born at Sand- voe, Northmavine, Shetland. He married Louisa Ratter and died at Pund of Mangaster. Gilbert (b.1863–1941) born at Tingon, Sullon, Northmavine. He married Barbara Henderson Tulloch in 1892. Isabella Ann ‘Bella’ (1910–90) musically talented Shetland woman, whose married name was Hunter. She restarted the Lerwick Girl Guides, arranged musicals and operettas and gave Scottish country dancing lessons. A book of reminiscences of her life was written by Ann Hill in 1993. James (17th C.) Jedburgh resident, who is recorded having several children christened there in the 1640s and 1650s, including James in 1647, who was probably the eldest son and father of a later generation of Jedburgh Hawicks. It is unclear whether he was related to the Shetland branch, or descended from one of the earlier ‘de Hawick’s. James Cheyne (1855–1927) born at Houbans, Northmavine in Shetland. He married Margaret Henderson. James (1893–1976) son of Thomas and Anderina Smith. He was born at Nib- bon and is buried at Hillswick. Jane (1858–1931) born at Gruna, Gunnister, Northmavine. She married Gideon Anderson Smith and is buried at Mid Yell. John (13th C.) recorded in the Boldon Book of 1183, a listing of the Bishop of Durham’s lands. Under the village of Whickham he is ‘John Hawyk’, holding 2 cottages and 6 acres. John (d.c.1568) servitor to John Gledstains, who was Senator of the College of Justice. A record of his testament is recorded in Edinburgh in 1568/9. John (18th C.) married Isobell Scollay in Delting in 1753. Katherine (16th/17th C.) of the Shetland family. She married Laurence Sinclair of Ustaness (who was born in 1575). Her husband was found guilty in 1602 of being part of the murder of Mathew Sinclair of Ness (a cousin of some sort) and was denounced as a rebel in 1611 for failing to appear. Their children were William, Robert and Matthew. Kenneth Arthur (?)–(?) computer scientist. He obtained his Ph.D. from Edinburgh in 1991 and held positions at the Edinburgh University Parallel Computing

Centre, the Northeast Parallel Architectures Centre in Syracuse, New York, the University of Adelaïde, (where he worked with Hawick-born David Wallace), and as Chair of Computer Science at the University of Wales, Bangor. He was Professor and Chair of Computer Science in the Institute of Information and Mathematical Science at Massey University, New Zealand from 2003. Since 2013 he has been Professor at the Digital Centre, University of Hull. Margaret (13th/14th C.) from Northumberland, she was admitted as a taxpayer in London in 1309/10, where she is referred to as ‘Margarita Hawyk, no doubt a widow’. Margaret (15th C.) first recorded in 1428 as a nun at Neasham, in the Parish of Hurworth on the Rivert Tees. She was elected as Prioress there in 1429, her surname being written as ‘Hawyk’. In 1436 the Bishop of Durham ordered an investigation into whether the rules and morals of the nunnery were being kept up. A further commission in 1437 found several defects and excesses and this led to her resignation as Prioress. However, she was allowed to remain there, with the use of a private room. There is no information about how she was related to anyone else of the same surname. Margaret (17th/18th C.) of the ‘Scatsta’ family, she married Alexander Dunbar of Hardwell, probably in the early 1700s. Margaret Robb (1928–97) daughter of Robert Laurence. She was a primary school teacher. She married Gerald Kingsley Greening. Matthew (d.1645) one of the earliest members of the Shetland family, he was tenant in Southladie in Yell. One of his children had the curious name ‘Matches’. His wife was Ingagarth Gregorindochter, and died in 1648. Robert (d.c.1587) Burgess of Dunfries whose testament is recorded in Edinburgh in 1587. Robert (d.1648) tenant in Firth in Delting. His testament is recorded in Shetland. Robert (18th C.) married Margaret Scollay in Delting in 1757. Thus he probably married his brother’s sister-in-law. Robert Laurence (1898–1963) born in Lerwick in the Shetland Isles, son of a fishing skipper. He served in WWI and in 1931 emigrated to New Zealand, where he was a rubber factory worker, chauffeur, grocery assistant and farmer. He married Elizabeth Halcrow in Lerwick in 1926. Their daughter was Patricia Margaret Robb. Vincent (16th C.) first of the Shetland Hawicks of whom we have record. He is mentioned in a deed of 1573 (in the Melby charter chest) as ‘umgol Vincentius Hawick of Scatstay’, so he was presumably already dead by then. His family members are also listed there, namely Robert, Andrew, Daniel, Matthew, Bartholomew, James, Thomas, John, Christian, Samuel, Margaret, Catherine, Janet, Agnes, Elspeth, and Sarah. This Andrew may well be the same as the one noted above. Whether Vincent was the original settler from the Hawick area is unknown (‘Hawick’ is fairly rare as a surname, but ‘K.A. Hawick’ comes up frequently in web-based searches, because of his computing connection; see the Hawicks and de Hawick).

Hawick Amateur Operatic Society (hIk-aw-ik-oo-pree-tik-sal) n. musical organisation founded in 1910, with the first performance being H.M.S. Pinafore in 1911. It has mounted an annual musical production most years since then. Ian Seeley wrote a history of the society in 2010, ‘On With the Show’.

Hawick Amateur Swimming Club (hIk-aw-ik-am-ee-ur-soo-min-kluh) n. swimming club based in Hawick, established shortly after the Corporation Baths were gifted to the town by the owners of Wilson & Glenny in 1912. It was also known as the Hawick Amateur Swimming Association. Local swimmers Ronnie Murphy, Tom Robson and Brian McConnell has particular success in the 1950s and 60s. The Club disbanded when ‘the Baths’ closed in 1982, but re-established in 1995 by Alison Bruce and Jean Amos, now based in the Teviotdale Leisure Centre.

Hawick Among the Hills (hIk-u-mung-thu-hilz) n. written by John Inglis in the 1870s to the tune of ‘Scotland Yet’, and dedicated to James Winthrove (his friend who had emigrated to Canada). It is recorded being sung by Inglis himself at a farewell function for a Mr. Routledge in 1878. New music was written by William Inglis Robson in 1887, perhaps influenced by Balfe’s ‘Killarney’. It was first sung at the 1887 Colour Cussing (in the Council Chambers) by Nellie Anderson and then at the 1889 Colour Bussing by Miss McGregor. Addie Inglis changed the arrangement, removing some of the more ornamental Victorian parts. The original second verse is now rarely sung.

Hawick an Area (hIk-an-á-ree-a) n. Ordnance Survey Pathfinder map number 485, 1:25,000 scale, useful for detailed roads around Hawick.

Hawick an Border Car Club (hIk-an-bór-dur-kawr-klub) n. main local automobile racing club. Its aims are to further the interest of motoring and motor sport, including organising events and promoting competitions.

Hawick an Borders Motorbike Club (hIk-an-bór-durz-mo-ur-bik-klub) n. Hawick & Borders Motorcycle Club, which organises the annual Jimmie Guthrie Memorial Run of old motorbikes at Denholm Green, started in 1962. Often shortened to ‘Hawick & Borders M.C.C.’.

Hawick an Buccleuch Boolin Club (hIk-an-bu-kloo-boo-lín-klub) n. erroneous name sometimes given for a local bowling club. There are neighbouring, but separate, Hawick and Buccleuch Clubs.

Hawick and its Old Memories (hIk-and-its-öld-me-wo-reez) n. book compiled by James Wilson and published in 1858 as an addendum to his ‘Annals of Hawick’ (1850). It is also known as ‘Memories of Hawick’. It contains additional notices of the Town, further extracts from the Burgh Records, transcripts from the Parish Records and Treasurer’s Book, and extensive appendices. These include early documents relating to the Town, as well as biographical information on several prominent residents of Hawick and neighbourhood. These include several items published for the first time, e.g. the genealogy of the Douglasses of Cavers.

Hawick an Eskdale (hIk-an-esk-däl) n. Ordnance Survey Landranger map number 79, 1:50,000 scale. This is the most common map of the roads around Hawick, although in fact Hawick is awkwardly placed in the north-east corner.

Hawick Anglin Club see the Anglin Club Hawick an Teviotdale in Sang an Poetry (hIk-an-teev-ee-i-däl-in-sawng-in-pō-i-ree) n. compact disk released by the Callants’ Club in 2006, incorporating a dozen pieces.

Hawick an Wulton Cricket Club (hIk-an-wul’-in-ki-ki’-klub) n. Hawick’s cricket club, playing in the Border League, with grounds and clubhouse at Buccleuch Park since 1860. Cricket was introduced to Hawick around 1844, with several teams being formed in 1849. Hawick & Wilton formed by later amalgamation and was the only one to survive. The original members of the Hawick and Wilton club were John Scott, William Dryden, Thomas Scott, John Waugh, Martin Pott, William Ainslie, William Howieson, James Scott, William Turner, Charles Paisley, Robert and Dandy Mather, James Fiddes and George Wilson (secretary), all of whom lived in Wilton. They played on the Upper Haugh and then the Under Haugh and practised at Galalaw, before being gifted Buccleuch Park by the Duke of Buccleuch. It was this club that introduced the ‘handling code’ in 1872, after they had purchased a football to keep the players fit in the winter months, this leading to the formation of Hawick R.F.C. A pavilion was built, along with new fencing, following a 3 day ‘Charles Dickens’ bazaar in 1889. The ground was developed in the 1970s, with a new brick pavilion built to replace the wooden one. The team is amateur, but has often had a single professional player.

Hawick an Wulton Fitbaa Club (hIk-an-wul’-in-fi’-baw-klub) n. rugby football club connected with Hawick and Wilton Cricket Club. It was formed separately from ‘Hawick Football Club’ in 1885 and folded in 1890. For a few years there were these two teams existing, as well as St. Cuthbert’s. They played their matches on the cricket field.

Hawick Archæological Society (hIk-ar-kee-u-lo-jee-kul-su-sl-i’-ee) n. Hawick’s club devoted to local history, founded in 1856, organising lectures, outings, and publishing the annual ‘Transactions’ since 1863. The Society was Hawick Art Club officially started on 16th September 1856, with the founders including William Norman Kennedy, Robert Michie, J.A.H. Murray, Alexander Michie, James Thom, George Webster and Robert Murray. The first lectures were given on 27th September 1856 by George Webster and Robert Michie and the first of the regular monthly meetings was on 8th October that year. The basic organisation of monthly meetings and an annual outing was quickly established. However, the Society was reconstituted in 1888 after meetings had lapsed for a couple of years (there were no meetings in 1886 and 1887, and only a few in 1888 and 1889, partly because the Society was engaged in moving its collection to the new Museum in the Buccleuch Memorial). It celebrated its jubilee in 1906, with the freedom of the Burgh given to J.A.H. Murray at a banquet attended by 260 people. It received its own coat of arms in 1992. Objects of interest were donated to the Society at regular monthly meetings, resulting in the need to rent premises to store them, with the first Museum being opened in 1858 at the eastern end of the High Street. After several moves the Society offered its collection to the Town Council on the condition that Wilton Lodge be converted to a Museum, the move happening in 1910. Monthly lectures have been organised annually since the club began, with the season now concentrating on the winter months, and talks usually held in the Town Hall on Tuesday evenings. The society has done a great deal to preserve and commemorate the history of the Hawick area.

Hawick Art Club (hIk-ar’-klub) n. the main art organisation in Hawick since being established in 1930. The Club holds weekly meetings, as well as regular art tutorials and talks. It also holds an annual open art competition. The Club at one time held an extensive collection of local paintings, which were handed over to the Council, eventually finding a home in the Scott Gallery. An earlier organisation, called the Hawick Fine Art Association, held an exhibition in 1883 and in 1884/5.

Hawick Athletic Club (hIk-awth-le’-eeek-klub) n. name used around the 1940s for the boxing club run by Frank Finney at Stonefield.

Hawick Baa (hIk-baw) n. handball game, played on the day before the game in Jedburgh (which was on Shrove Tuesday), or in earlier years the Monday after Shrove Tuesday, the last time being in 1939. Hawick’s game is probably not as ancient as that of Jedburgh, or even those of Denholm and Hobkirk. Although its origin is unclear, it took place regularly until about 1780, and then restarted in 1842. In the intervening years Hawick players used to attend the Denholm and Hobkirk games. The first ‘baa’ of 1842 was ‘hailed’ by John Gilroy. In 1893 it apparently was played a week early due to an error in Oliver & Boyd’s Almanac. The game ran annually, with a break during WWI until 1919, and then continued until the outbreak of WWII, and was not revived afterwards. The main game was known as the ‘men’s baa’, with the ‘callents’ baa’ played on the Saturday before. It took place mainly in and around Commercial Road and the Teviot, with much activity in the river itself. The two sides were the West Enders and the East Enders. In the 18th century there were battles between the ‘Eastla’ and ‘Westla’ gangs, mainly youths under about 16 that formed into regiments, with drums, flags, halberds, clubs, etc., in the 2 or 3 weeks before Eastern’s Eve. The hails in the 1840s were the toll-bar at the Haugh end of Commercial Road, and opposite Dickson & Laings, where the town boundary crossed the river (the area between these hails being open ground at that time). By the 1850s the hails were moved to the Coble Cauld and the arches of the railway bridge over the Teviot. Balls were sponsored, often by local businesses, with about 6 or 7 per year, each having a prize or money going to the hailer. One ball in 1866 took 3 hours, but normally balls were much shorter. One year the game reached the Sandbed, with players scrambling over a roof, and in 1902 much of the activity took place on the frozen Teviot. Many injuries were noted, and there may also have been one or two drownings. One of the balls is in the Museum.

Hawick bake (hIk-bák) n., arch. an occasional name for a sort of hard-baked scone seasoned with all-spice – ‘There’s a sugar bool an taffy, tipenny pies, curney scones an’ Hawick bakes …’ [JEDM] (possibly named in competition with ‘Selkirk banni’).

Hawick Balls (hIk-bawlz) n. local confection, consisting of a ball-shaped boiled sweet with a mint flavour. It was said to have been invented by ‘Bonnie Aggie Lamb’ and manufactured by Hills since around 1900. The recipe was later bought by Smiths and then by Buchanan’s of Scotland, based in Greenock – ‘Sookin a Hawick Ball as A gaun throwe Gala … ’ [IWL] (note, typically pronounced bawlz not bawz).

Hawick Benefit Building Society

Hawick Benefit Building Society  (hIk-be-ni-f'-bil-din-su-i'-ee) n. mutual improvement society in Hawick, which probably did not last very long. The National Archives have some records from 1851.

Hawick Bicycle Club  (hIk-bi-see-kul-klub) n. cycling club formed in Hawick in 1881, eventually becoming Hawick Cycling Club.

Hawick Biliard Club  (hIk-bi-lee-urd-klub) n. club set up in 1877, based in a building erected at the corner of Beaconsfield Terrace and Green Lane, also known as the Teviotdale Club.

Hawick Boolin Club  (hIk-boo-lin-klub, -bô-lin-klub) n. lawn bowling organisation, formed in 1854, and possibly the oldest bowling club in the Borders. There were 42 original members when it was founded, and the first President was John Laing. The club green was originally at Allars Crescent (before the houses were built there) and then between North Bridge Street and Bourtree Place (where the Baptist Church was built). The club organised the first Border open tournament in 1872. The green and clubrooms are on Buccleuch Street to the west of the Old Parish Church, the site being granted by the Duke of Buccleuch in 1873, and opened the following summer. The Duke was gifted with a pair of gold-mounted bowls by the Hawick and Buccleuch clubs in 1882. J.P. Alison designed a new pavilion, built in mock-timbered style in 1892. A special 150th anniversary badge was produced in 2004.

Hawick Brae  (hIk-brä) n. local name for the steep hill that rises from Bonchester in the direction of Hawick.

the Hawick Burghs  (thu-hIk-bu-ruзв) n. parliamentary constituency, created after the Representation of the People (Scotland) Act of 1868, which lowered franchise and redistributed seats. It was composed of Hawick, Selkirk and Galashiels, being separate from the counties of Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. George Trevelyan was the first M.P. in 1868, and the constituency was dissolved in 1918. The M.P.s who won elections were as follows: 1868 G.O. Trevelyan; 1869 (bye-election) G.O. Trevelyan; 1874 G.O. Trevelyan; 1880 G.O. Trevelyan; 1882 (bye-election) G.O. Trevelyan; 1885 G.O. Trevelyan; 1886 (bye-election) G.O. Trevelyan; 1886 A.L. Brown; 1892 T. Shaw; 1894 (bye-election) T. Shaw; 1900 Sir J.N. Barran; ?? (sometimes also called ‘the Border Burghs’).

Hawick Cashmere Company  (hIk-kash-meer-kum-pi-ne) n. knitwear company based at Trinity Mills, also known as ‘Hawico’. It was essentially a rebranding of Hawick Hosiery Co. in 1990.

Hawick Castle  (hIk-kaw-sul) n. motte and bailey castle built by the Lovels in the early 12th century on high ground above the town. At first it was probably a wooden tower and palisade. The site was abandoned by the mid-16th century, in favour of the Tower, and now only the ‘Mote’ remains.

Hawick Ceemetry  (hIk-see-mi’-ree) n. former name for the Wellogate Ceemetry.

Hawick Characters  (hIk-kaw-reek-turz) n. book edited and published by Robert Murray in 1901. It contains short chapters on several ‘weel-kent’ people from Hawick’s streets around the early 19th century. Although the idea was no doubt Murray’s, in fact most of the entries were much from much earlier articles for the Archeological Society written by William Norman Kennedy. Illustrations were based on Adam Brown paintings or were provided by T.H. Laidlaw. A second series of characters was presented in 1910.

Hawick Chess Congress  (hIk-ches-kong-gres) n. annual chess meeting held in Hawick since 1992 (with a gap in 1997), first organised by Stephen Palmer-Douglas and Jim Taylor.

Hawick Choral Society  (hIk-kô-ru-sul-su-sl-i’-ee) n. organisation which staged choral performances, formed perhaps around 1860 and lasting for several decades. Charles Taylor was conductor around the 1870s. It was also known as the Hawick Choral Union. It was reconstituted in the years immediately after WWII, but did not last long.

Hawick Christmas Parade  (hIk-kris-mis-pu-räd) n. community-based parade, started in 1986 by the Everlyn and Gilbert Sangster. It consists of floats walking groups and Santa, running between Mart Street and the Big Haugh. Money

Hawick Common see the Common

Hawick Common Riding (hlk-ko-min-rid-ing) n. booklet first published by the Callants’ Club in 1983, written by Ron Taylor, but with input from a large number of people. Although originally meant for school children, it is the definitive description of the Common Riding tradition. It was revised in 1998 by Frank Scott.

Hawick Common Riding (hlk-ko-min-riding) n. booklet published in 2009, full title 'Hawick Common Riding, An Illustrated Guide’. It was written by Lesley Fraser and Judith Murray. A ‘Kidz Guide’ was also produced at the same time, telling the story of the Common Riding from the point of view of Rupert the horse.

The Hawick Common Riding (thu-hlk-ko-min-rid-ing) n. 78 r.p.m. recording released by the Beltona label in the 1930s. It features a medley of Hawick songs in 2 parts. The songs covered are ‘The Border Queen’, ‘Up wi’ Auld Hawick’, ‘Clinty’, ‘I Like Auld Hawick the Best’, ‘Pawkie Paiterson’, ‘Bonnie Teviotdale’ and ?? This is probably the first time these songs had been recorded. The singer was ‘Allan Ramsey’, probably a pseudonym for James Dalgleish. Accompaniment is by a small band, including strings.

Hawick Common Ridin, 1846 (hlk-ko-min-ri-din-i-teen-for-e-siks) n. painting by Andrew Kennedy, being the earliest known visual representation of the festival. It is a view from near the foot of Walter’s Wynd showing the Cornet and the Right- and Left-Hand Men crossing the Teviot on horseback near Laidlaw’s Cauld, while the games are in progress on the Under Haugh (i.e. Commercial Road area), with stalls, tents and a stand erected for spectators. It also shows the sparse houses in Wilton at that time. The painting now hangs in the Museum. The painting was restored in 2014.

Hawick Community Hospital (hlk-ko-mew-ni-ee-hos-pi-nil) n. local hospital, replacing the Cottage Hospital and opening in 2005 on Victoria Road. The hospital consists of a single storey building.

Hawick Crags (ha-wik-krazz) n. hill near Hawick Farm in Northumberland. There is a Romano-British settlement near here (about 440 m south of Hawick Farm) at the north-east end of the crags.

Hawick Cronies (ha-wik-krö-nee) n. song recorded on a 78 r.p.m. record in the 1930s, with ‘Hawick’ on the flip-side. It was sung by ‘Allan Ramsey’, who was probably James Dalgleish. The song starts with a humorous dialogue between a Teri man and an English woman. The writer of the lyrics and origin of the tune are unknown. It was on the Beltona label, catalogue number 1838.

Hawick Curlin Club (hlk-kur-lin-klb) n. organisation established in 1803, being one of the first organised sports clubs in Town. It had 59 members when it formed, including Archibald Dickson (seedsman), Dr. Robert Douglas, John Graham (brewer), Rev. James Henderson, Thomas Hill (saddler), David Laing (hosier), John Oliver (Town Clerk), Bailie Oliver (baker), Francis Rutherford (watchmaker), Charles Scott (glover), James Scott (tobacconist), Rev. W. Williamson, Robert Wilson (historian), and Rev. Dr. Young. Games were played at various times on Hillslesland Moss, the Coble Pool and Laidlaw’s Cauld. The club was re-constituted in 1854, with the Duke of Buccleuch as Patron, after giving his permission for the club to use Loch Park. The curling pond near St. Leonard’s was used from 1866 until 1890, when a new pond at Crowbyres was opened. Competitions with other local clubs were held in the late 1800s, these clubs including Branxholme and Borthwickbrae, Teviothead, Rulewater, Hassendean and Minto. The Hawick club seems to have folded before WWI.

Hawick Cyclin Club (hlk-si-klin-klb) n. Hawick Cycling Club, which formed in 1881 as the Hawick Bicycle Club, becoming the Hawick Amateur Bicycle Club in 1889 and then adopting its present name in 1901. In the late 19th century the club’s uniform consisted of grey outfits with maroon caps. Members on penny farthings can be seen outside Wilton Lodge in 1881. In 1901 a team was raised by James Haig (apparently annoyed at no Teri’s being picked for Scotland) which challenged and beat a rest of Scotland team. The the Hawick Exiles Club (thu-hIk-ek-silz-klub) n. club that thrived in the Manchester area in the late 19th and early 20th centuries. It grew out of the large number of Teris who were drawn to that area by textile work. The club met in ‘the Crown’ in Salford, with the first Chairman being John Smith.

the Hawick Express (thu-hIk-eks-pres) n. weekly newspaper, established in October 1870 by James Dalgleish as the ‘Hawick Express and Scottish Border News’. For many years John Rule was editor and part proprietor, then Mr. Craw took over the business, followed by James Edgar, who was editor as well as proprietor. It was originally priced at 1 penny, and in competition with the Advertiser. It merged with the Advertiser in 1915 to become the ‘Hawick Express & Advertiser and Roxburghshire Gazette’, then the ‘Hawick Express and Roxburghshire Advertiser’ from 1930 and simply the ‘Hawick Express’ from 1964. It finally merged into the ‘Southern Reporter’ in 1983.

Hawick Farm (hI-wik-farm) n. farm in Northumberland, near Great Bavington. There was a deserted mediæval village near here called ‘Hawick’.

Hawick Fermers’ Club (hIk-fer-murz-klub) n. local agricultural body, existing from 1776 (although perhaps existing informally shortly before then) until 1868. It was possibly the earliest farmers’ club in Scotland (although the ‘Honest Country Club’ was a sort of short-lived nearby predecessor). The founders were Adam Ogilvie, Rev. James Erskine (Roberton), John Lawrie (Hawick), James Wilson (Hawick) and William Turnbull of Burnfoot, who was the first President. It formed for ‘the improvement of farming’, meeting on the first Thursday (i.e. market day) of each month, and discussing many topics. The membership soon expanded, being 25–60 in its first 50 years. The Club established the corn market in 1778 (occurring from noon until 1 p.m. at the Cross on market days). It was also largely responsible for starting an annual fair at Rink in October of 1779, which became the biggest fair for the sale of draft ewes and ‘wedders’ in the South of Scotland. The Hawick hiring fair on the 1st, and 3rd Thursdays of April was recommended by the Club and started on the 3rd Thursday in April 1780. The October cattle Tryst was also suggested by the Club and started in 1785. There was ploughing contests organised by the Club for several years, as well as prizes for the best livestock (until 1814 when this was superseded by the prizes of the Border Agricultural Society). The Club recommended starting a market for cattle and horses on the May Fair day in 1826. It was also instrumental in planning the Corn Exchange in Hawick during Hawick Film an Video Group

Hawick Film an Video Group (hlk-fi-lum-an-vi-dee-o-group) n. established in 1964 as Hawick Film Group, it meets fortnightly in Croft Road, putting on film shows and organising competitions. They were responsible for the film ‘Sons of Heroes’ shortly after forming, and several more recent local videos.

Hawick Fitbaa Club (hlk-fi-baw-klub) n. name used in the 19th and early 20th centuries for what would become Hawick R.F.C.

Hawick Framework Knitters Association (hlk-fram-work-ni-urz-aw-sö-see-ä-shin) n. Hawick’s first legal labour organisation, set up in 1840. It was also known as the Hawick Stockmakers’ Association and may have been the same as (or allied with) the Hawick Hosiery Trade Society.

Hawick Free Kirk (hlk-free-kirk) n. original name for the Free or Protesting Church, founded in Hawick in 1843, following the Disruption. The church was erected in 1844 in Free Church (later St. George’s) Lane and changed its name formally from ‘Hawick Free Church’ to ‘St. George’s United Free Church’ in 1900. The last sermon in the old building was in August 1914, and the new larger church was opened in 1916. The church is now known as ‘Teviot Kirk’.

Hawick Free Press (hlk-free-pres) n. local newspaper, published 1897–1908 by William Henderson. It was an advertising and news sheet, published free every Wednesday.

Hawick Freendly Society (hlk-freend-lee-su-sl-i-ee) n. mutual aid society existing in Hawick from the late 18th century, probably about 1779. George Caw printed their rules in 1791. It formed to provide a fund for sick and injured workers, and along with a second similar society it was dissolved by its members some time before 1838. Another such society was set up in 1802 and was also dissolved by 1838.

Hawick fri Wulton Lodge, 1800 (hlk-fri-wul-lin-loj-i-teen-hum-dur) n. usual title given to what is probably the first picture of Hawick, hanging in the Museum. It is a water-colour by an unknown artist, being a view from about the gates of the Avenue looking towards the town.

It is also referred to as ‘Hawick Old Bridge and Cobble Pool in 1800’.

Hawickgate (hlk-ga) n. former name for an area in Jedburgh. It was effectively superseded by the Teviotdale Farmers Club, which formed in 1859. Lists of members and minute books from 1776 are in the Scottish Borders Archive (also known as the ‘Hawick Farmer Club’).

Hawickgate (hlk-ga) n. former name for an area in Jedburghside and Hawickgate were valued at £10 per acre for a total of £620. By the late 18th century the teinds of the lands were held by Douglas of Adderstone. The bulk of the lands (still valued at £220 along with Jedburghside) were owned by the ‘Acerers of Jedburghside and Hawickgate’ in 1788; at the same time Thomas Waugh of Hawkburn held 13 acres in Hawickgate that had belonged to the Marquis of Lothian (valued at £130), 6 acres in Jedburghside and Hawickgate that had belonged to James Riddell (valued at £60) and 2½ acres in Jedburghside and Hawickgate that had belonged to James Chisholme and 6 acres that had belonged to James Riddell (presumably the name comes from being on the road out of Jedburgh towards Hawick).

Hawick gill (hlk-jil) n., arch. a somewhat jocular term for half an imperial pint, i.e. twice the size of a standard gill. It occurs in the traditional song (printed in Ramsay’s collection of 1724) often called ‘Andro and his Cutty Gun’ – ‘Blyth, blyth, blyth, was she, Blyth was she but ben; Weel she lo’ed a Hawick gill, And leugh to see a tappit-hen’ (this being a quart jug), the verse also being referred to in a note in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Guy Mannering’. Note that the same song appeared in Robert Burns’ ‘Merry Muses of Caledonia’ in a bawdier version, without the reference to Hawick. The phrase occurs in Scott’s ‘Carle, Now the King’s Come’, written in 1822 – ‘A Hawick gill of mountain dew, Heised up Auld Reekie’s heart, I trow’ [SWS]. The lines ‘Come, hostess, bring’s a Hawick gill, An’ to his health I’ll fill’ are from 1813, ‘If her ye’d gien a Hawick gill, She might been leal’ from about the same time and ‘Bring’s a Hawick gill, An’ her’s to Hawick’s bonnie lassies!’ in 1859. The phrase was certainly known in the Edinburgh area, but it is unclear if it was in common use outside poetry, and there are no physical examples of the measure known in Hawick. However, this entry appears in the Hawick Treasurer’s books – ‘Mor payed at traying ye wine – 2 double gilles, 12s.’ in 1732.
Hawick Gas Light Company

This suggests that the measure was in use locally, even of the phrase was not. Despite this, it certainly entered the vocabulary of later local poets – ‘Ye’er sides are retchit an’ I’m gey ill. Come let us bae a Hawick gill For auld lang syne, or aiblins twa, This air is damp an’ unco raw’ [WNK], ‘...gie um a gude Hawick gill; it’ll dae um nae herm’ [JEDM], ‘The auld Miser has cost me three guid Hawick gills already this mornin’ and he’s no fu’ yet’ [JEDM], ‘Then Fenwick, bring’s a Hawick gill, An’ here’s to Hawick’s bonnie lasses!’ [GWe], ‘A Hawick gill was in my e’e, – My heart as light as oyn feather, – When warm wi’ love and barley bree, I crossed the moor amang the heather’ [JT].

Hawick Gas Light Company (hIk-gaws-li’-kum-pi-nee) n. private company set up to provide gas lighting (and later gas for cooking and heating). Founded in 1830, with 12 directors, it only became part of Scottish Gas in 1948. The company installed gas lights in the main streets in 1831. Its main premises were at the southern corner of Commercial Road and Bath Street until about 1882, when they moved to Mansfield Road.

Hawick Girls’ Patriotic Club (hIk-gir-ulz-pa’-ree-o’-ekl-kub) n. organisation founded in 1915 in Hawick to organise fund-raising events during WWI.

Hawick Glebe (hIk-gleeb) n. area formerly owned by the Parish Church, from which the minister could receive additional income. The location of the lands changed over time, as the Town developed. In 1447 a description of the parish states that the vicar has ‘for his mansion four acres of arable land of its ecclesiastical glebe’. In about 1738 it is described that there were 7 acres, and these were situated off the Loan, to the west of Myreslawgreen. These lands were later exchanged for land where Slitrig Crescent was built, and then exchanged again for land in the Wellowgate. It is marked on Wood’s map of 1824 around the area of Wellowgate Place. In 1839 it was stated to consist of about 16 acres and was let at an annual rent of £62.

Hawick Golf Club (hIk-golf-kub) n. founded in 1877 by Robert Purdom and others, it was fully formed by early the following year, with a committee of 7. The Club received permission from the Town Council to use part of the Vertish Hill, provided no damage was done. General Scott of Hoscoite was the first Honorary Captain, with ex-Provost R.F. Watson the Captain, and Robert Purdom the Secretary and Treasurer. It was the first such club in the Borders. The Ladies Club was started at least as early as 1893. The course is on the Vertish Hill, being part of the Common, rented from the Council, but maintained by the club. There were originally 11 holes, with one more added in 1879 and the last 6 completed by 1894. The first Clubhouse was a house at the foot of Burnflat Brae adapted for use about 1880. The present Clubhouse was built in 1894/5, on land gifted by the Duke of Buccleuch, and with funds from a bazaar, which included the performance of J.E.D. Murray’s ‘The Caddie’s Ghost’. The design of the clubhouse was by J.P. Alison. It was extensively refurbished in 1996. The course has 18 holes, is 5,933 yards, par 68 (5,239 yards, par 69 for the ladies course), and with stunning views from several holes. The following is a list of the holes in order: Road; Thorntree; Nipknowes; Well; Terrace; Hunter; St. Leonards; Quarry; Alcohol; Whitlaw; High; The Corner; Herds; Wood; Gallery; Pit; Burgess; and Home. The course record is 61 and the longest hole is the 7th. Famous golfers to have played there included Tony Jacklin in 1989. An early history was published by James Barrie in 1898 – ‘I have climbed the Loan a hundred times On the way to Vertish Hill; The caddies I’ve met by St. Mary’s chimes, And engaged them with right goodwill, But now, alas! ‘tis a hope that is past, The game’s a perfect bore; The strain on my brain can no longer last – I’ll never play golf any more’ [RGD].

Hawick Group (hIk-groop) n. name sometimes given by geologists to particular Silurian shales of the Southern Uplands accretionary terrane, found near Hawick. It is of particular interest because of the so-called Llandovery-Wenlock extinction event, involving graptolites, as described by the work of Charles Lapworth.

Hawick Guide (hIk-gid) n. ‘Hawick Guide: Directory and Yearbook’ published by James Edgar in the early 1900s. As well as being a tourist guide, it contained private addresses of local gentlemen, farmers and societies, as well as a death roll.

Hawick Heritable Investment Bank (hIk-her-it-a-bul-in-vest-min’-bawng) n. local bank that was a limited company, founded in 1876. J. Murray was the agent in the 1880s. It lasted into the early 20th century and some records are in the National Archive. It may have merged with the Standard Property Investment Co. of Edinburgh in the mid-1930s.

Hawick High Schuil (hIk-hI-skil) n. Hawick’s secondary school, on Buccleuch Road. Also the name of a private tutor’s school that was in the Subscription Rooms at 13 Buccleuch Street, in the second half of the 19th century, when the present High School was still named the Buccleuch School. This private school lasted until about 1874. The first appearance of ‘Hawick High School’ as a secondary school was when it was started by the School Board as a fee-paying school for senior students, following a petition by ratepayers. It was situated in roughly 1874–76 in the Masonic Hall at Myrselawgreen. It was effectively replaced by Teviot Grove Academy, which became the senior part of Buccleuch School (although based at the east end of town). This became ‘Buccleuch Higher Grade School’ in 1908, and eventually ‘Hawick High School’ in 1915. A web-site listing illustrious former pupils was started as a school project in about 2011. There is film of a school sports day at the cricket field in 1909/10.

Hawick Hill (ha-wik-hil) n. homestead in Western Australia, south-east of the town of Wagin at Latitude 33°24′ South, Longitude 117°29′ East (there is also a ‘Mount Hawick’ and ‘Hawick Island’ in Western Australia).

Hawick Home Mission (hIk-hō-m-mi-shin) n. evangelical group set up in 1873, interdenominational, but intimately related with the Baptist Church. The instigators were John Beattie, Willie Miller and Tammie Bell, who convinced the gospellers J.G. Scroggie and W.D. Dunn to come to the town from Galashiels at the end of 1872. They carried on gatherings for 17 weeks. A meeting was then held, overseen by Lord Polwarth, which resulted in the founding of the Mission, with 46 members enrolled and Willie Miller as the first President. 2,000 people attended a ‘camp meeting’ at Netherhall, with Scroggie and Dunn in attendance. In 1873 and for many years afterwards, Lord Polwarth invited the members to spend Common Riding Saturday at Mertoun House; later the venue was changed to Harden Glen. The organisation strongly opposed the Common Riding. In 1879 the Mission agreed to contribute to the Baptist Church’s appointment of a new pastor. There was also a choir formed. The group purchased and converted Oliver’s former auction house in Bourtree Terrace in 1883. The main services were on Sunday evenings and were packed during their most popular period. Meetings were also held in a house on Baker Street, on the Miller’s Knowes in the summer, at Drumlanrig Home, and in some of the surrounding hamlets, particularly Newmill. In 1887 there was disagreement over the rules and most of the committee resigned, to be replaced by a new committee. They also ran services for the troops out at Stobs. The organisation was also involved with the Christian Endeavour youth movement. Originally having members who were also in other local congregations, by 1907 it was effectively a church in its own right; however, numbers were by then starting to decline from the high of 210 members. A Superintendent (i.e. resident pastor), Mr. Conneley, was appointed in 1928, but stayed only a few months. After WWII there were also open air meetings at the Horse. In 1952 the Mission started to celebrate Communion, it joined the Fellowship of Independent Evangelical Churches in 1955 and appointed P.D. Chisnell to be Superintendent in 1957. In 1963 they withdrew from the F.E.I.C., sold off their main hall in 1967, sold more in 1974, and allowed Youth With A Mission to use their space in 1977. Some former members eventually joined the Y.W.A.M. offshoot, the Abundant Life Church. In 1985 the Mission finally closed, handing over its remaining property and records to the Baptist Church across the street.

Hawick Horse (hIk-hors) n. Hawick Horse Racing Association, a body that organises local ‘flapping’ meetings. It has its origins in the decision to break away from the National Hunt and Jockey Club Rules for the Common Riding races of 1883. Local races have been run under a variety of rules since then. The Border Horse Racing Association was set up in 1972 with founding members Donald Fairgrieve (Gala), Charles McCrerie and Murray Richardson. When many of the Border towns broke away from the B.H.R.A. in 1987 the H.H.R.A. or ‘Hawick Horse’ was formed.

Hawickhorst (ha-vik-horst) n. surname originating in Germany, dating to the 13th century, with descendants in the U.S.A. and elsewhere. It is unrelated to our town, probably being a corruption of the German ‘Habicht horst’ meaning ‘hawk’s nest’.

Hawick Horticultural Society (hIk-hor-tee-kul-tew-rul-su-sl-ee) n. local gardening society, founded in 1849, shortly after Hawick’s first allotments were started. John Forbes was President for many years. Highlights of the society’s calendar were the twice yearly shows. It survived until the 1970s.

Hawick Hosiery Manufacturers Association

Hawick Hosiery Manufacturers Association (hIk-hö-shu-ree-maw-fak-chu-rurz-aw-soo-sea-ä-shin) n. business organisation representing the interests of local knitwear manufacturers, formed at a meeting in 1909, with 9 companies represented. It was constituted as ‘Hawick Hosiery Manufacturers’ Association’ a year later, with 7 more companies joining. It started as effectively a cartel for fixing prices (i.e. to avoid local companies undercutting each other) and evolved to focus more on setting wages. In 1966 the word ‘Hosiery’ was replaced with ‘Knitwear’. The Association disbanded in 1999.

Hawick Hosiery Trade Society (hIk-hö-shu-ree-träd-su-sl-i-ee) n. former workers’ organisation in Hawick. It was formed out of the disputes between employers and employees, relating to wages and working conditions. In about 1868 a new arbitration body, formed of 9 employers and 9 workers was formed, and this resolved to abolish the Society, except in its purely charitable role.

Hawick Hosts (hIk-hösts) n. local tourism guides, consisting of blue-jacketed hosts out on the streets to assist tourists in the summer months since 1998. The original idea came from Scottish Enterprise Borders, but its implementation involved the Scottish Borders Council, Scottish Borders Tourist Board, Hawick Chamber of Trade and local businesses. It is now organised by the Hawick Welcome Initiative. The Hosts welcome visitors at the main car parks and pedestrian areas, handing out brochures and encouraging them to ‘stop, shop and explore’.

Hawick hug (hIk-hug) n., arch. a tight embrace in wrestling, mentioned in Wilson’s ‘Tales of the Borders’ — ‘He therefore threw his arms round the back of his opponent … with the intention of giving him a ‘Hawick hug’, but he found he could not join his hands together so as to effect his purpose, and his strength could not accomplish it’ (probably related to the ‘Cornish hug’, but the connection with Hawick is uncertain.

Hawickify (hIk-kee-fl) v. to make something more Hawick-based, particularly to convert to Hawick dialect – ‘…it’s been on the back burner a’ this time waitin on iz gettin roon ti hevin a go at Hawickifyin eet’ [IWL], ‘This is an Edinburgh sang, bit oo’ve Hawickified eet’ [DC].

Hawick Immortals (hIk-i-mor-ulz) n. poem published privately some time in the early 20th century (and at least before 1959), listing many Hawick nicknames of the past. It is anonymous, and the writer takes pains in an introduction to explain that no offence is meant, and in no case is the nickname associated with the actual name of the person. It may have been written by R. Jamieson. Most of the nicknames come from a period around the mid-19th century.

Hawick in Bygone Days (hIk-in-bl-gön-däz) n. book written by James Turnbull in 1927, when he was in his 70s. It contains many stories of his youth and a description of essentially every shop in the town in the 1850s and 60s.

the Hawick Inkle Company (thu-hIk-ing-kul-kum-pi-nee) n. ‘inkle’ loom weaving company that existed from at least 1782. In that year it leased from the Burgh part of the Common Haugh, as well as the Easter Common Haugh (now Teviot Crescent) and Myreslawgreen, to use as bleachfields; in fact that part of the Under Haugh became known as the Bleachfield. The partners in the company were Dickson, Turnbull and Robertson, 2 of whom were also involved in carpet manufacturing. It is stated (by James Wilson) that the Duke of Buccleuch gave land ‘with a water-fall, for an inkle manufactory, and for bleaching; but this trade, after thriving for a good many years, was discontinued’. However, it is unclear if the same company was referred to here, and if so if it was the land in Wilton. There is a record (from the Board of Trustees for Manufactures) of aid being given to Dickson, Turnbull and Robertson in 1765 and in 1785. The company bought the Rough Heugh waulk mill from John and William Thomline (dyers and finishers) in 1797. The company did not last long into the 1800s, and inkle manufacturing in general was only important in Hawick for a few decades.

Hawick in Scene an Song (hIk-in-sean-sawng) n. video created by Madge Elliot and Cameron Robson in 2002, with support from Hawick Tourist Association and Hawick Millennium Group. It features film scenes from 1999–2001, along with Hawick songs performed by local singers.

Hawick Instrumental Band

Hawick Instrumental Band (hIk-in-stru-men'-ul-bawnd) n. forerunner of the Saxhorn Band, it was active in Hawick in the middle part of the 19th century, before the Saxhorn Band was formed in 1855.

Hawick in the 20th Century (hIk-in-thu-too'-ee-th-sen-chu-ree) n. publication of the Callants’ Club in 2004, representing several aspects of the town during the first hundred years of the history of the Club.

Hawick Invicta (hIk-in-vik-ta) n. junior football team based in Hawick, which existed somewhere around the years 1922–24.

Hawick Island (ha-wik-I-lind) n. small island in Montague Sound, Western Australia. This is one Hawick that is not far from the sea! Its approximate location is Latitude 14°20′ South, Longitude 125°22′ East.

Hawick Jail (hIk-jal) n. the town prison. This was formerly in the Tolbooth and then the old Town House. There it was apparently partly below ground, about 16 ft by 12 ft, and apparently not too hard to escape from! Because of this, people were sometimes imprisoned in the steeple of St. Mary’s. The jail was referred to as ‘the Thiefs’ Hole’ or ‘the Rogues’ Hole’ or ‘the Saut Box’. In 1778 it was described in the Town book as the ‘loathsome, wretched Jail of Hawick’. Towards the end of the 18th century it was described as being partly used as a blacksmith’s shop and sometimes as a prison, where men were held for a night or two before being sent to the county prison; it was also too cold in the winter for the Magistrates to meet in the upstairs room, and so they would meet in an inn. The county jail was in Jedburgh, and was often used for local prisoners, because of the inadequacy of the cell in Hawick. A new jail was built on Allars Bank (later Nos. 5 and 6), perhaps around 1840. This was overseen by Michael Anderson, until the Police Act came in, about 1861. A register for 1844–62 has been published by Graham Maxwell.

Hawick Jock (hIk-jok) n. nickname for a character from the 19th century – ‘Goold Ballantyne and auld Hawick Jock, Wattie Moudie, Jock Gray and a’; Jenny’s Penny wi’ plaid o’ check, Betty Revel and auld Jean Law’ [HI].

Hawick Kirk (hIk-kirk) n. usually referring to St. Mary’s, which was for many centuries the parish church of Hawick. The first mention of a church in Hawick is in 1183, when ‘Henry the parson’ was witness to a charter. The church was dedicated to St. Mary in 1214. The ‘Auld Pairish Kirk’ was the parish church of Hawick in the period 1844–1987.

Hawick Knitwear (hIk-ni’-wär) n. local knitwear company, based on Liddesdale Road, with a history dating back to 1874. At one point it employed more than 200 people. The company went into administration in 2016, but was partly purchased by a Hong Kong based business soon afterwards.

Hawick Knitwear Manufacturer’s Association (hIk-ni’-wär-maw-new-fawk-chu-rurz-aw-sö-see-ä-shin) n. local employer’s association. They conceded to a guaranteed 4 day working week following the general mill strike of 1972. The association wound up in 1999, with Ray Cholpas as the last Director/Secretary.

Hawick Lasses (hIk-law-seez) n. reel composed by Robert Pringle.

Hawick Lau (ha-wik-low) n. (1974– ) Hong Kong actor and singer, with Chinese name Lau Hoi Wai. For a teenage heart-throb, his English stage name seems somewhat peculiar to say the least. He grew up in Hong Kong, but also spent some time at High School in Canada. His TV roles include the series ‘Virtues of Harmony’ and his albums are ‘A Boy’s Story’ (1998) in Cantonese, and ‘La La La’ (2000) in Mandarin.

Hawick Mary (hlk-mâ-ree) n. nickname for a resident of Jedburgh in the early part of the 19th century. It was said that she was ‘not too strict in regard to morals’, and ‘was sometimes called on by the Rev. Andrew Bonar in the usual discharge of his ministerial duty’ [HAST1873]. She may have kept a boarding house, where Wull Ainslie stayed. Her full name is unrecorded.

Hawick Medico Relief Society (hlk-me-dee-kô-ree-lee-su-sl-i’-ee) n. benevolent society in Hawick in the early 19th century. It was a medical insurance club, led by Robert ‘Lurgie’ Wilson. It arranged for payment of the members’ medical bills, with a monthly contribution. It is described as still existing in 1839.

Hawick Military Association (hlk-mi-li-ti-ree-aw-sô-see-ã-shin) n. local Volunteer unit, which commenced in 1798 after the perceived threat from the French army of the Revolution. It was formally disbanded in early 1801 (perhaps to have a new grant to put it on a firmer footing) and re-embodied later in 1801. However, it was disbanded again in 1802 after the Treaty of Amiens. The original name, ‘The Volunteer Loyal Armed Association of Infantry, was quickly abandoned. The Captain Commandant was Gilbert Chisholme of Stichers. A ceremonial standard, presented to the Volunteers in 1799 (by Mrs. Chisholme) is in the Museum. The men presented Chisholme with a silver cup in 1802 when they disbanded. They consisted of about 60 men, and were the main volunteer infantry corps at the time (with the Roxburghshire Yeomanry being the local Cavalry unit). They had a highly decorative uniform, consisting of scarlet coats with long swallow-tails, green facings and lapels, together with black stock and white frills, white waistcoat and breeches, short black gaiters and heavy cross-belts of white leather with a brass badge in the centre bearing the words ‘Hawick Volunteers’, as well as 62 brass buttons, and a tall bear-skin shako with a white feather plume and white epaulettes. The men also would all have had powdered hair at that time. Another volunteer unit, the Light Company of the Roxburgh Volunteers, formed in 1803 after war broke out again with France. The Roxburghshire Local Militia was formed in 1809, with the 1st Regiment based in Jedburgh and the 2nd Regiment based in Kelso.

Hawick Mill (hlk-nil) n. the old town corn mill, once the property of the Baron of Hawick, with a fraction of the grain going to the superior according to the ancient feudal system. There is mention of a mill in Hawick as early as 1412. The valuation of the Parish in 1627 describes ‘the Myll land, estimat to pay 3 bolls in stok, and 3 firlotts teynd’. The 1686 ratification of the Barony of Hawick to Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch includes ‘all and heal the Milne of Hawick, with the milne lands, multures, sucken, knaveship, and pertinents of the samen whatsoever’. The land at the Miller’s Knowes was once farmed by the miller. Originally the mill was in the Mill Port, with the lade going through Backdamgate, behind the Tower and crossing under the Tower Knowe. There is a record of repairs in 1744. This mill was partly washed away in the 1767 flood, and demolished soon afterwards. The new mill was built on the Mill Path and had fields in the Wellogate area. ‘Husband Lands of Hawick with Mill and Customs’ was valued at £2626 13s 4d in 1707, when part of the holdings of the Scotts of Buccleuch, and still valued at the same amount in 1811. Wood’s 1824 map shows a corn mill on Backdamgate and a flour mill on Mill Path. The Mill Path buildings survive and were renovated as flats in 2002 – ‘The miller o’ Hawick Mill fed mei Wi’ mony a kind o’ corn’ [JSB].

Hawick Mill Hoose see Mill Hoose

the Hawick Missal Fragment (thu-hlk-mi-sul-frawg-min’) n. name often used to describe a section of a medieval missal, discovered in the Heritage Hub in 2009. Dating from around the 1180s, the 4-page fragment was found within uncatalogued papers originally from the family of Rutherford of Knowesouth. It was intensively studied by Dr. Matthew Cheung Salisbury of Oxford University. It was first sung in Oxford and inspired musical events held at the Abbeys of Jedburgh, Kelso and Melrose, as well as Glasgow Cathedral, including compositions by Sean Dougherty, Michael Nyman, Grayston Ives and Goldie.

Hawickmoor (hlk-moor, mewr) n. former cottage on Hawick Common, the site lying in the field known as Upper Acreknowe, which is to the south-west of the Reservoir. It was written ‘Hawick Muir’ in 1841, when the tenants were James Cairns and his sons James and William. The younger James was there in 1851 when it was called ‘Hawick Farm’ and was Town Herd in 1861 when it was ‘Hawick Moor, Herd’s House’. There is now no evidence of former habitation at the site (it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, south of Pilmuir Rig and is marked on J.P. Alison’s map of the Common in 1777).

Hawick Moss (hIk-mos) n. name given specifically to the boggy area around the old curling pond, opposite the entrance road to St. Leonard’s, and to the field to the west of there, the ‘Moss Brow’, i.e. to the left of the road, after the Nip Knowes, on the way to the racetrack. The name is sometimes also applied to a wider area – ‘...It’s aw gaed into Hawick Moss, An’ twas like to swally mei’ [JSB].

Hawick Mossbrow (hIk-mos-brow) n. top of the hill near the original race-course gate. The name was explicitly used for the field there, lying to the left of the road after the crossroads on the way to the racetrack. This was essentially the centre of the old Common – ‘Take a glass o’ cheerin’ whisky, Then down o’er Hawick Mossbrow fu’ frisky’ [AB] (also ‘Hawick Moss-brow’ and ‘Hawick Moss Brow’).

Hawick Moss Plantin (hIk-mos-plawn’-in) n. tree plantation west of the road between St. Leonards farm and Williestruther cottage. It contains the former curling pond and the site of a cottage.

Hawick Muir (hIk-moor, mewr) n. another name for the Mair. Also sometimes the address formerly given to tenants of various farmsteads on the Moor, or particularly to the former cottage to the south-west of Acreknowe Reservoir.

Hawick Music Club (hIk-mew-zek-klub) n. club based in Hawick that organises classical music concerts. It was founded in 1951.

Hawick Mutual Improvement Society (hIk-mew-chew-ul-im-proov-min’su-sl-i’-ee) n. local improvement society existing around the end of the 19th century, peaking around the 1870s. It was also called the ‘Hawick Young Men’s Mutual Improvement Society’.

the Hawick News (thu-hIk-newz’) n. newspaper founded in 1882 by printers John McNairn and James Vair. It was the first local paper to use illustrations, and moved from the broadsheet to smaller format in 1980. It was taken over by Scottish Borders Press in 1998, then became part of Tweeddale Press Group in 2000, which is part of the larger Johnston Press, which was in turn acquired by the Scotsman Group in 2006. The Loch Park print works closed around 2000, and from then it was printed in Newcastle. Jason Marshall became editor in 2007. However, he left in 2016 as it decreased its original content.

the Hawick Newsletter (thu-hIk-newz-le’-ur) n. newspaper published by Robert Black for a short period in about 1846. It mainly consisted of material extracted from the Galashiels publication the ‘Border Watch’.

the Hawick Observer (thu-hIk-obs-ver-vur) n. newspaper, full name ‘the Hawick Observer and Scottish Border Intelligencer’. Published by J.D. Kennedy in 1842, it was Hawick’s first newspaper. It consisted of a quarto sheet of 8 pages, and its circulation quickly rose to 2,000. However, it only ran for 6 issues, being stopped by legal issues of the time, restricting publication and taxation of newspapers.

Hawick Oil Refinery (hIk-oi-ul-ree-fi-nu-ree) n. former business operating briefly in the mid-19th century near where the Burns Club is now situated, adjacent to the gas works. It was started by John Wield from Blacketlees, Annan in about 1866, producing paraffin for lighting and heating, probably using coal or shale. Wield was bankrupt by 1868 and all of the physical plant sold off.

Hawick on the Net (hIk-on-thu-ne’) n. one of the first Hawick-based web-sites, set up in 1999 by David Henderson.

Hawick Orchestral and Choral Society (hIk-or-kes-trul-in-kö-rul-su-sl-i’-ee) n. local musical organisation, also known as Hawick Amateur Orchestral Society. It held its first concert in 1891, conducted by Walter Fiddes-Wilson, and the programme included ‘Rend Your Hearts’ by Hawick’s own Joshua Taylor. The orchestra performed at the Overseas Night in at least 1939.

Hawick Ornithological Society (hIk-or-ni-tho-lo-jee-kul-su-sl-i’-ee) n. local bird-watching club, existing in the latter part of the 19th century.
Hawick Pairish

Hawick Pairish (hIk-pa-reesh) n. Parish of Hawick, approximately 16 miles long and 4½ miles wide. It lies south of the river Teviot from Wilton Parish, which also lies within the modern town of Hawick, the detailed boundary between the two parishes being complicated (with Orrock Place previously lying in Wilton and the Common Haugh, including Albert Mills, Commercial Road etc., previously being in Hawick). From early times the parish was associated with the Diocese of Glasgow, and had by far the highest value of all the Rectories in the Deaconry of Teviotdale (e.g. £16 in 1275). The Parish Kirk was St. Mary’s until 1844, when the title moved to the Old Parish Church on Buccleuch Street, reverting again to St. Mary’s in 1887. The Parish borders on the parishes of Roberton, Wilton, Cavers, Kirkton and Teviothead. The narrowest part is roughly opposite Bucklands, and the widest part at the western extremity, stretching from near Southfield to near Chapelhill. At one time it reached all the way to the border with Dumfriesshire, including Stock Hill and Whithope Edge, and going almost to Moodlaw Loch when it still contained parts of Roberton. The Parish once extended all the way to Craikhope, Wolfcleuchhead and Howpasley, but lost most of the Borthwick valley to Roberton Parish in 1682. It also extended all the way to Mosspaul until Teviothead Parish was created in 1850. The northern corner has long been near where the B6399 meets the A698 around Haughhead. A valuation of the lands in the Parish was made in 1627, when there were about 800 commissants. In 1649 the land and crops of the Parish were valued at about £15,500 (with an extra £400 in the Sheriffdom of Selkirkshire); in 1678 the rents were valued at £15,545 10s in Roxburghshire and £460 in Selkirkshire. The first description of the Parish with any detail is around 1738, and describes how, besides the Burgh, it contained 31 ‘steads or hamlets’ and 1800 ‘catechisable persons’, 2/3 being in the town itself. The Parish is described again in the 2 ‘Statistical Surveys’ of Scotland (firstly by Rev. R. Gillan in 1793) and there is a further description of the parish from a gazetteer of 1868. In 1793 the land was valued at £11,591 11s, but the real rent was about £2800 sterling. J.J. Vernon wrote ‘Parish and Kirk of Hawick’ in 1900. Heritors records exist for the period 1710–1934, and financial records for the Parish begin in 1724. The register of births starts in 1634 and is fairly complete, except for gaps in 1657–69 and 1747–56. The marriage register covers 1699–1730, 1751–1800 and from 1834 on. The death register was started in 1755. The population of the Parish was estimated to be about 2700 in 1755, 1928 in 1791 and 3688 in 1811. It remained fairly stable until the beginning of the 19th century and then exploded, doubling in the first 40 years of that century and being about 8700 by 1861, with the vast majority in the town itself.

Hawick Pairish Council (hIk-pa-reesh-koon-suul) n. the Parish Council and Poorhouse Committee, which in 1894 took over much of the work of administering local welfare, which had previously been carried out by the Parochial Board.

the Hawick Pairsbhip (thu-hIk-pa-r’-nur-ship) n. organisation set up in 2001 as a community-led partnership to support the local economy, improve the fabric and appearance of the Town and build local confidence and pride.

Hawick Panto (hIk-pau-t’o) n. Hawick Pantomime Group, who have produced their annual locally-flavoured performance before Christmas in the Town Hall since 1980, when they presented ‘Babes in the Wood’.

the Hawick Paper (thu-hIk-pa-pur) n. local newspaper, established in 2016 by Jason Marshall, essentially in response to the Hawick News losing most of its original content. Published weekly, on Fridays, it prides itself on being a genuinely Hawick-based new source.

Hawick Parliamentary Debating Society (hIk-par-li-men’-a-ree-ba’-in-su-sl-i’-ce) n. local debating club that existed in the latter part of the 19th century, peaking in popularity in the 1880s.

Hawick Pictorial (hIk-pik-t’o-rec-ul) n. one of a number of annual booklets, containing photographs of events from the previous year. Hawick Legion published pictorials from 1939, continuing until 1959. Local newspapers also continued with annuals into the 1960s. The idea was resurrected by F.W. Scott in 2002.

Hawick Pictur Theatre (hIk-pik-tur-thee-i’-ur) n. formal name for the Wee Thea.

Hawick Pipe Band (hIk-pip-bawnd) n. started as the Hawick Boys Brigade Pipe Band, founded by Bob Short in 1937, with the adult band formally established in 1965. The Band has gone on several international tours, as well as an annual visit to Bailleul. The band recorded an album of 8 medleys in 1975. Band leaders have included Bruce Slorance, Bob Short, Allan Smith and Cameron Renwick.

Hawick Place Names (hlk-pläs-, -plis-nämz)
n. book describing the origin of the names of streets and other geographical features in Hawick, written by William S. Robson and published in 1947. The material in the book had been published in the Archaeological Society Transactions in the previous 2 years. It contains a ‘Auld Hawick, A Series of Pictorial Reconstructions’, drawn by Allan Watt Robson, showing how the town may have looked in the 9th, 12th, 15th and 18th centuries, as well as a detailed view of Hawick at the time of the 1537 Charter. The book was essentially updated by Harry Nivet in his article ‘Some Changes since the Second World War’ and more recently in ‘Street Names of Hawick’ by Lilias Britton.

Hawick Prison see Hawick Jail

Hawick Prisoners o War Scheme (hlk-pri-zë-nurz-ô-wawr-skeem)
n. fund for sending parcels to local men held in Germany during WWI.

n. short film made in 1948, with score by Sir Malcolm Arnold.

Hawick Racecourse (hlk-räs-kôrs)
n. also known as ‘St. Leonard’s Park’, it was built at Hawick Moor for the Common Riding races, being first used in 1854. At about 240 m it may be one of the highest race courses in the country.

Hawick Radicals (hlk-räw-dee-kulz)
pl. Hawick was once famous for revolutionary political zeal, particularly in the late 18th and early 19th century, when there was great excitement about the revolution in France and about the possibility of increasing political franchise through the Reform Bill. The leading ‘blackneb’ of the late 18th century was Dr. Freeman, whose main disciple was Robert ‘Lurgie’ Wilson. Many Hawick Liberals were prominent in discussions in the early 19th century, and important organisers of the local Reformers included James Edgar and James Duncan. The 5 elections of the time were focal points for political demonstration, namely those of 1831, 1832, 1835, 1837 and 1841. In 1831 about 1,000 workers from Hawick (including ‘Wat the Drummer’) marched to Jedburgh to protest the election, their numbers being swelled at Denholm, Spittal and Jedburgh to about 2,000. Local accounts have them being loud and boisterous, but orderly, while other accounts state that they jostled the carriage of Sir Walter Scott and were nearly riotous. An engraving of the ‘Election Riot at Hawick’ is in Cassell’s ‘Illustrated History of England’, showing a pitched battle on the Auld Brig during one of the elections of the 1830s. A troop of dragoons was called out to Hawick during the elections of both 1835 and 1841. Each side claimed unfairness by the other, the Liberal-supporters of Hawick claiming that the Sheriff and County Officers were all Tory supporters (underscored when the Sheriff read the Riot Act from the window of the Conservative Party committee room in the Tower Hotel!), while the Bailies and Constables of Hawick were said (although this is disputed) to have publicly sported the blue ribbons of the Whigs. Treatment of Tory supporters was often quite rough in these times, particularly in 1837, when ‘winging’ and ‘Tully’s Mill’ were common. This led to 4 men being imprisoned after an enquiry by a special commission, as well as a motion in the House of Commons to disenfranchise the Hawick voters, which was defeated by only 26 votes! These episodes left Conservative vs. Liberal politics at a high level of animosity for many decades. The debate over whether the railway line should proceed via Langholm or Newcastleton turned effectively into a political contest between the Tories and the Whigs. There was also great commotion at the election of 1880, with youths daubing passers-by with coloured dye-stuff. In 1884 there was a huge demonstration in favour of extending the household franchise from the Burghs to the counties – with the slogan ‘In ’84 I’m found as true As I was found in ’32’. The march was said to be a mile long and a crowd of about 10,000 gathered at Loch Park to hear speeches. This radicalism was considered to have its roots in the Borderer’s spirit of independence – ‘That changed as the form or the time may be, Hawick may be brave, Hawick may be free’ [JoR], ‘So bad was the conduct of the Hawick Radicals alleged to have been at this particular election . . .’ [JTU].

Hawick Rangers (hlk-rän-jurz)
n. one of the earliest Association Football teams in Hawick, doing well for several seasons in the late 19th century.

Hawick Reading Room (hlk-ree-ding-room)
n. reading room listed at the Tower Knowe in 1837, with Charles Williamson as Secretary
Hawick Reivers

(note that the Conservative Reading Room was separate).

Hawick Reivers (hIk-ree-vurz) n. song written by Ian Seeley in 1995. It was dedicated to J. Elliot Renwick who had arranged for previous songs of Seeley’s to be published at the Buccleuch Printers. It was recorded by Elliot Goldie and first sung in public by Iain Scott at the Callants’ Club ‘New Book’ concert in 2002.

Hawick R.F.C. (hIk-ar-ef-see) n. Hawick Rugby Football Club, popularly known as ‘the Greens’, formed by members of Hawick and Wilton Cricket Club in 1873. They initially played at Buccleuch Park, moving to the Volunteer Park in 1885 and to Mansfield Park in 1888. The club was the only one in Scotland to play the visiting New Zealanders in 1889. The original strip consisted of blue and white striped jerseys and stockings, with navy shorts and caps; the dark green jerseys were adopted in 1885. A victory at Gala gave Hawick the Border championship in 1893, and an away victory over Watsonians in 1994 was seen as a turning point for the team. Hawick won its first Scottish Championship in 1896, beating Watsonians at home. They also won the very first Border League in 1901–02. The team has been consistently among the leaders in Scottish rugby since the War, and has maintained a place in Division One of the Scottish championship since it began in 1972. They have won that league 12 times, as well as the Scottish Cup twice (1995–6 and 2001–2). ‘Fifty years’ football in Hawick, 1873–1923’ was published in 1923, ‘100 Years of Hawick Rugby’ in 1972, ‘The Green Machine: 125 years of Hawick Rugby’ in 1998, and ‘Glimpses of Green’ in 2002.

Hawick Robbers (hoik-ro-burz) n. football team that played up the Park in the mid-20th century.

Hawick Royal Albert (hoik-roi-ul-al-bur’) n. Hawick Royal Albert Football Club, an Association football team that plays in the East of Scotland League. It formed in 1946 as a splinter from the main Hawick team before the war, the Railway Sports Club. The founding meeting took place in the old Labour Party rooms above the Queen’s Head, with the main instigators being William Bunton and Harry Wear, and the funds started with the raffling of half a dozen eggs. The name comes from a Larkhall team that Bunton had played for (founded 1928 and still in existence). Early games were played at Wilton Lodge Park, with the changing hut doubling as an ice-cream kiosk. They moved to Albert Park in 1963, where the steel framework of the stand was salvaged from Wilson & Glenny’s. Fortunes of the team have been mixed, with probably their most successful period being the mid-1960s. Their strip is royal blue with red and white trim.

Hawicks (hIkz) n., pl. as well as the town in Teviotdale, there is a township in Minnesota, U.S.A., a former village in Northumberland, a parish in Queensland, Australia, and a homestead in South Australia, as well as hills, islands and many streets named after our town. There are a great number of spellings of the modern Hawick that are to be found in older documents, including: Awyke; Haik; Hawewyk; Hanie; Hauuc; Hauwic; Hawwic; Hauwycke; Hauwyk; Hauc; Hauyke; Haucie; Hawic; Hawicke; Hawiek; Hawike; Hawyck; Hawicke; Hawyce; Hawyke; and Hayck.

Hawicks (ha-viks) n. occasional surname in Germany, e.g. Heike Hawicks, researcher at Duisberg University in Germany.

the Hawicks (thu-hIkz, ha-wiks) n. ‘Hawick’ is a fairly rare surname, with the known examples probably all being traceable to the parish of Delt ing in the Shetlands. The tradition is that someone called Scott was forced to flee the Hawick area in the 16th century, probably for rieving or political reasons. A deed of 1573 (in the Melby charter chest) refers to ‘umqle Vincentius Hawick of Scat stay’ (now called ‘Scatsta’). The Christian names of this Vincent’s family include Robert, Andrew, Daniel, Matthew, Bartholomew, James, Thomas, John, Christian, Samuel, Margaret, Catherine, Janet, Agnes, Elspeth, and Sarah. There is also a record in the parish of Dysart of an Andrew Hawick of Zetland. There are also people of this surname in Jedburgh in the 17th and 18th centuries, but it is unclear if they were related to the Shetland branch. In addition to people with ‘Hawick’ as their actual surname, there are also a number of examples in the 12th to early 16th centuries of the appellation ‘de Hawick’ or sometimes ‘of Hawick’ (see de Hawick).

Hawick Savins Bank (hIk-sa-vinz-bawngk) n. another name for the Hawick Bank for the Savings of Industry, also known as the Savins Bank. It was the forerunner of the Trustee Savings Bank in Hawick, claiming continual existence since 1815 (or perhaps 1814). From 1835 it was officially called the National Security Savings Bank of Hawick and was for a while located at 2 Oliver Place. The purpose-built construction at 11 High Street replaced an old house there with small windows, containing a booksellers and drapers, and was opened in 1915, to designs by J.P. Alison (echoing the classical style of the other High Street banks). Minute books and other records covering 1815–1971 are stored at Glasgow University. A plaque on the building commemorates the history of the bank.

Hawick Schuil Board (hIk-skil-börd) n. Hawick School Board, set up in 1873 to oversee education in the Burgh, which it did for about 50 years before responsibility was taken over by the Council.

Hawick Schuil o Airts (hIk-skil-ō-ārts) n. Hawick School of Arts, established following a public meeting in May 1824 instigated by James Douglas of Cavers. It was opened in August 1824 by Mr. Wilson of the Edinburgh School of Arts (which became Heriot-Watt). This was probably Hawick’s first adult educational organisation, holding regular classes and lectures in arts and sciences over the following years. It led to the establishment of the Buccleuch Memorial.

Hawick Scientific an Philosophical Sociery (hIk-sI-in-ti-peek-an-fi-in-so-fee-kul-su-sl-ī-i’-ee) n. organisation of the latter part of the 19th century.

Hawick Scout Pipe Band (hIk-skow’-pip-bawnd) n. pipe band associated with the Hawick Boy Scouts. The band are believed to be leading recruits in a photograph taken at the Station in 1914 and the first recorded mention of the ‘Hawick Boy Scout Pipe Band’ was in 1917. It was reformed in 1936 by Willie Johnstone. In 1953 the band adopted the Sutherland tartan (in honour of District Commissioner Norman J. Sutherland). This was probably Hawick’s first adult educational organisation, holding regular classes and lectures in arts and sciences over the following years. It led to the establishment of the Buccleuch Memorial.

Hawick Sheriff Court (hIk-she-riif-kōr’) n. sheriff court that met in Hawick (rather than Jedburgh) during the middle part of the 20th century. Records for the court from 1838–1975 are in the National Archives.

Hawicksheiel (hIk-sheel) n. farm between Earlston and Lauder, located to the south of Nether Blainslie. It lies close to the course of the Southern Upland Way. It is recorded in records of Melrose Abbey, and other than the name, had no connection with Hawick.

Hawick Shiel (hIk-sheel) n. former farm on the Allan Water, to the south of Southfield, at one point a small but thriving village. It was bounded on the west by the Allan Water and on the east approximately by the Dodburn road. It lay just beyond the boundary of the old Common and was a tenanted farm long owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, consisting of 124 acres, bounded by Hawick Common, Dodburn, Stobicote and Nether Southfield. Nothing remains of the main cottage, and its precise location is now uncertain, although it is marked on J.P. Alison’s map of the Common (and on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map) on the hill immediately to the west of the Troutlawford, between the road and the Allan Water. In 1718 the house is marked on the north side of the Gate Burn, about midway between the road and the Allan. The location of this farm, beyond the 18th century boundaries of the Common, but with the name ‘Hawick Shiel’, may support the idea (as suggested by Craig & Laing) that the Hawick Common originally extended over an even larger area. The farm was also referred to as ‘Hawicksheiel-gate’. It is said that residents of the farm were formerly weavers. The lands here are probably those referred to as ‘Uverhawicksheilis’ and ‘Netherhawicksheilis’ in a ‘letter of reversion’ of 1482 between Robert Scott of Haining and David Scott of Branxholme. It was described in a 1627 parish valuation as being similar in value to Upper and Nether Southfield, producing 4 lbs. in vicarage teinds. Robert Thomson was tenant there in 1679 and James Davidson in 1687 and 1698. The householders recorded in 1694 were James Stinson, George Nichol, John Jackson (weaver), James Craw, Simon Miller, James Scott, William Douglas, Robert Riddell, John Irvine, James Davidson, William Henderson and William Rodger (shepherd). Archibald Glendinning and Robert Stevenson were tenants there in 1702. Robert Scott, Simon Miller and Walter Scott were living there in 1704. John Irvine was tenant in at least 1704–06. James Davidson, Simon Miller and Walter Scott were all tenants in 1706. Walter Scott was tenant in at least 1706–12 and Walter Nixon in 1708–12. Residents in 1716 included shepherd James Borthwick, as well as Simon Miller and Walter Nixon. In 1721 the tenant was John Scott, another John Scott also lived there and John Laidlaw was tailor there. James Hume was there in 1743. John Ker was blacksmith there in at least the period 1758–60. James Anderson ‘in Hawickshead’ was recorded on a gravestone in Borthwick Waas Cemetery and probably a tenant there. Walter Scott was tenant there in 1797. The local poet John Halliday was born there in 1821; Helen and Barbara Halliday are recorded there in 1841, probably his mother and sister. The Murray and Scott families were also there in 1841. Thomas Douglas was shepherd in 1851, with Andrew Scott living there as a labourer. Near the crest of the hill to the north were the remains of an ancient burial cairn (also known as ‘Hawick Shiels’, ‘Hawickshiel’, and ‘Hawickshiels’, it is ‘Hawick Scheils’ in 1627, ‘Hawicksheels’ in 1704 and ‘Hawick Sheels’ in 1721; it is marked ‘Hawick Sheils’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map of the county and is ‘Hawick Shiels’ in 1841).

Hawickshiels see Hawick Shiel

Hawick Shiel Yett (hIk-sheelz-ye’) n. former cottage near Hawick Shiel. It may have been distinct from the main farmhouse (the name is used on the 1841 census, but absent by 1851).

Hawick Sings (hIk-singz) n. local talent night taking place weekly during the summer months. It was started around 2000 in Thorterdykes, and has been located in several other places since, including the Burns Club and the Bandstand.

the Hawick Songs (hIk-sawngz) n. book of words and music, published by the Callants’ Club in 1957 and revised and enlarged in 2001. This anthology grew out of the compilation of songs published by Adam Grant before WWI. The 1957 collection was largely the work of Adie Ingles, who changed some of the original keys of the songs and altered (usually simplifying) many accompaniments. Some of these changes were controversial at the time. The set of words published in booklet form at the same time was familiarly known as the ‘Reid Book’ and the 1978 version as the ‘Blue Book’. The 2001 edition, largely the work of Ian Seeley, who led the editorial committee, includes several new songs, but only a few changes to the older ones. It was dedicated to Frank T. Scott. A reprint of the booklet in 2009 includes words to 2 newer songs.

Hawick Songs and Recitations (hIk-sawngz-awnd-re-si-tá-sheinz) n. booklet published by James Edgar in 1892, with a second (shorter) edition in 1901. It collected together the words for several Hawick songs and poems, and had an introductory article written by J.E.D. Murray.

the Hawick Spate (thu-hIk-spá’) n. name sometimes used to refer to the Slitrig flood of 1676.

Hawick Speaks (hIk-speeks) n. tape published by the Hawick Camera Club and 1514 Club in 1993, featuring three parts of George Shankie’s ‘Speak Teri’, Ian Landles song ‘Hawick’s the Best’ and 15 poems in the Hawick tongue.

Hawick Stands Alone (hIk-standz-u-lón) n. song written by George Goodfellow around 1995. It is a retelling of the 1514 story, in a style with country music overtones. Ian Seeley provided the piano accompaniment for the 2001 Hawick Songs anthology.

Hawick Street (hIk-stree’) n. there is a Hawick Street in Carlisle, Clydebank (or Glasgow), Wishaw (Lanarkshire), Karori (Wellington, New Zealand), Roxburgh (New Zealand), Tokoroa (New Zealand), Valley View (Adelaide, South Australia), Ashgrove (Queensland), Beloit (Wisconsin), Berkeley County (West Virginia), Los Angeles (California), Perry Township (Ohio) and Rockton (Illinois). In addition there is: a Hawick Avenue in Paisley and Topeka (Kansas); a Hawick Close in Little Sutton (Elsemere Port) and Melling Mount (Liverpool); a Hawick Commons Drive in Concord (North Carolina); a Hawick Court in Greenock, Stanley (County Durham), Greenvale (Victoria), Kellyville (New South Wales), Warwick (Western Australia), Belmont (Michigan), Chapel Hill (North Carolina), Dublin (Ohio), Kensington (Maryland), Owings Mills (Maryland) and Severna Park (Maryland); a Hawick Crescent in Larkhall (Lanarkshire) and Newcastle-upon-Tyne (also an industrial estate); a Hawick Drive in Coatbridge, Dundee, Atlanta (Georgia), Austin (Texas), El Cajon (California), Round Rock (Texas), Severna Park (Maryland) and Valparaiso (Indiana); a Hawick Grove in Heywood (Lancashire); a Hawick Lane in Bella Vista (Arkansas), Dallas (Texas), Durham (North Carolina), Kensington (Maryland), Knoxville (Tennessee), Lakeland (Florida), McDonough (Georgia), and Topeka (Kansas); a Hawick Place in Louisvile (Kentucky); a Hawick Point Road in Crystal River (Florida); a Hawick Road in El Paso (Texas), Erie (Pennsylvania), Inwood (West Virginia), Raleigh (North Carolina) and Sunnyvale...
Hawick Subscription Library

(California); a Hawick Terrace in El Cajon (California); a Hawick Valley Lane in Charlotte (North Carolina); and a Hawick Way in Sacramento (California).

Hawick Subscription Library (hIk-sub-skrip-shin-II-bru-re) n. founded in 1762, members paid an annual fee for the privilege of borrowing from the collection. It was located at 6 Buccleuch Street and lasted until the end of the 19th century. There are existing subscription books from 1810 and 1878. In 1846 the library has some 3500 volumes.

Hawick Summer Festival (hIk-su-mur-fes-ti-vul) n. festival coordinating community events and promoting tourism in August. It was started in 1984 by the Sängsters.

Hawick Telegraph (hIk-te-la-grawf) n. newspaper, published by W. Morrison & Co. in the latter 19th century. It was launched in 1882 at a cost of a halfpenny in direct competition with the Hawick News, but was never as successful. It was incorporated into the Standard, Border Times and Hawick Telegraph which was printed 1887–90.

Hawick Teviotdale (hIk-tee-yi’-dâl) n. cricket club formed in 1850 when the Hawick team amalgamated with the immigrant English cricketers. They won a game in Selkirk in 1851, probably the first game played by a Hawick team in another town. Thomas Rawlinson played for them as a professional in the late 1850s.

Hawick Thistle (hIk-thi-sul) n. local amateur football team.

Hawick Times (hIk-tîmz) n. local newspaper, published by Robert Black in 1857 and printed in Edinburgh. It only lasted for 12 issues.

Hawick Toonheid (hIk-toon-heed) n. former name used for St. Leonard’s farm. It is recorded on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, but it is unclear how widespread its use was.

Hawick Toon Trail (hIk-toon-trâl) n. project funded by the Scottish Borders Council, the Scottish Borders Tourist Board and the European Regional Development Fund, which laid out a series of historic trails in 1998/9. The trail is in 3 sections and covers approximately 6.5 km (4.5 miles). There is a leaflet guide together with information panels at the old Exchange car park and numbered plaques attached to buildings at points along the trail.

the Hawick Torch (thu-hIk-torch) n. Hawick version of the 2012 Olympic torch, made by jeweller Hamisg Smith after learning that the official torch would miss the Town on its journey through the south of Scotland. It was used as a focal point for several events in Hawicks ‘Year of Sport’, including the parade of about 3,000 schoolchildren down the High Street to the Opening Ceremony in the Volunteer Park.

Hawick Total Abstinence Society (hIk-tô-al-awb-stîn-ins-su-cl-i’-ee) n. organisation founded in Hawick in 1838, which was part of the Temperance Movement that was then sweeping the nation. The first abstinence society in Hawick was formed in 1832 (or perhaps 1835), but this new society had members swear off all intoxicating beverages. Over 300 members had taken the pledge in the first week, following the preaching of a Mr. Mason, methodist from England, this causing much consternation in the town. Their soirees, usually held in the Subscription Rooms, were popular events through the latter half of the 19th century, with lectures, speeches and tea service. The New Year soiree of 1865 attracted over 1,000 people. There was also a Juvenile branch of the society, which met in Miss Riddle’s rooms.

Hawick Trades Library (hIk-trâdz-II-bru-ree) n. library established in 1802 to provide for the reading interests of members of Hawick society not catered for by the Subscription Library, which had much higher subscription rates. A catalogue exists from 1833. Richard Wilson is listed as librarian in 1837. At its height (around 1850) the library boasted 1400 volumes.

The Hawick Tradition (thu-hIk-tra-di-shin) n. local history book written by R.S. Craig and A. Laing, with illustrations by Tom Scott, published in 1898, and having full title ‘The Hawick Tradition of 1514: The Town’s Common, Flag, and Seal’. This remains one of the most significant studies of local history, with a detailed discussion of the common and arguments supporting the veracity of the Hornshole story.

Hawick Tribunal (hIk-trI-bew-nul) n. Military Service Tribunal in WWI, consisting on Provost Melrose, Bailies Lyon and Wilson, James Conn, R.H. Dickso, Alex Johnstone and Andrew Haddon. It heard appeals for avoiding conscription based on various criteria.

Hawick Turnpike (hIk-turn-pik) n. name for the toll road through Hawick, used in the late 18th century. The specific road went from Moss-paulgreen to Haremoss (i.e. the Dumfriesshire Border to just outside Selkirk) and was part of what became the A7. Papers relating to the road, over the period 1762–69 are in the National Archives of Scotland.
Hawick United

Hawick United (hlk-yoo-ni’-eed) n. local football team, formed in 1962 by players from Hawick Royal Albert reserves. Six weeks later they had already formed their 2nd team, Hawick United Colts.

the Hawick Volunteer Corps (thu-hlk-vo-lun-teer-kör) n. Volunteer unit formed in 1861 after a group resigned from the newly formed Upper Teviotdale Riffe Corps in a dispute over the appointment of officers. It was the 5th corps in Roxburghshire and had Provost George Wilson as Captain. The Corps disbanded in 1863 after an unfortunate argument that led to Bailie George Hardie Fraser being removed as Lieutenant.

Hawick Volunteers (hlk-vo-lun-teerz) n. song written by James Thomson in 1860 and sung to the tune of ‘The Red Cross Banner’ (possibly composed by Sydney Nelson in about 1841), although later re-arranged for the song by Adie Ingles. It was composed in connection with the volunteer company of soldiers, of the same name, organised in 1860 to meet the perceived threat from France. The song was written for George Hardie Fraser and first sung by him at a function held for the Volunteers in Dangerfield Mill. It was the first ‘new’ Hawick song for about 40 years, since James Hogg’s setting of ‘Teribus’. The song is also known by the title ‘The Rifle Volunteers’. It appears on the 2006 CD ‘Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry’, sung by Michael Atiken.

Hawick Wattie (hlk-waw’-ee) n. nickname of homeless wanderer Walter Scott.

Hawick Waverley (hlk-wä-vur-lee) n. Hawick Waverley Association Football Club, an amateur side in Hawick. They started in the Hawick and District Pub League in 1976, sponsored by the Waverley Bar. For the 1980/1 season they joined the Border Amateur League as Hawick Waverley. They won the League in 1993/4 and have also won several local cups. In 2001/2 they stepped in to split their pool of players with the Royal Albert, to allow that team to survive. In 2004/5 they won the Border Cup, the Waddel Cup and the League title (the name, like that of ‘Heart of Midlothian’, ultimately comes from Sir Walter Scott’s novels).

Hawick Waverley (hlk-wä-vur-lee) n. a junior rugby club of the early 20th century, with full name Hawick Waverley Union Football Club, not to be confused with the Association Football side.

Hawick Weekend Advertiser (hlk-week-end-ad-vur-tl-zur) n. local newspaper, published 1932–47. It was printed by R. Deans & Co., after the earlier ‘Deans Weekly’ had failed because of complaints by newsagents over free advertising sheets. From 1935 it was printed by W. Simpson, was abandoned during WWII, but revived in 1946.

Hawick Welcome Initiative (hlk-wel-kum-i-ni-shya-teev) n. voluntary organisation that promotes Hawick by enhancing the experiences of visitors, particularly through the Hawick Hosts scheme.

Hawick Woollen Manufacturin (hlk-wur-wu-lin-ma-new-fak-tew-rin) n. Hawick Woollen Manufacturing Co. Ltd., operated in the old Hunter and Young factory on Commercial Road from about 1922. The firm went into liquidation in 1925.

Hawick Workers’ Mill (hlk-wur-kurz-mil) n. woollen factory set up as a workers’ collective to supply gloves, hats and scarves for the republican effort fighting Fascism in Spain, as well as a commercial concern to support to help with local unemployment. It was set up in late 1936 when local members of the National Unemployed Workers’ Movement took over a disused mill on Mansfield Road to produce clothing for anti-Fascist forces in Spain, as proposed earlier by Councillor Willie Stoddart. Production started in early 1937, with some national fund-raising to subsidise the work, as well as private orders later, and the workforce grew to 20. However, the end of the Civil War and the harsh economics at the start of WWII led to its closure in 1939. An article was written on the subject by Don Watson in 1999.

Hawick Wullie (hlk-wu-lee) n. (18th C.) nickname of a simple-minded character who was born in Hawick, but used to frequent the court house in Kelso in the latter part of the 18th century. He is described in William Jerdan’s autobiography and is said to have been the original of Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Goose Gibby’ (also referred to as ‘Wullie Hawick’).

Hawick Workin Men’s Buildin an Investment Co. (hlk-wur-kin-menz-nil-din-in-vest-min’-kum-pi-nee) n. company formed in 1864, to build better houses for the working classes, and to encourage home ownership. Originally a ‘society’, it became a limited company and assumed this name in 1888. The President for a long time was David Pringle, with Walter Haddon as Secretary for almost 30 years. This Hawicky (Hi-kee) adj. relating to Hawick, redolent of the traditions or language of Hawick – ‘Yon story be Elliot Cowan Smith is aboot is hawicky ee can git’ (note that this essentially rhymes with ‘psyche’).

Hawick Y.M. see the Y.M.

Hawico (Hi-ko) n. name used by Hawick Cashmere Company.

Hawik (Hlk) n. another of the known early spelling variants of Hawick. It is recorded, for example, in the charter of 1446 for Branzholme and neighbouring lands and recorded in the Jedburgh Justice-aire of 1510, in the charter to Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1511 and in the Register of the Privy Seal in 1535. The spelling was common throughout the 16th century. It is also on Mercator’s map of 1595 (where it is intriguingly marked right on top of the Slitrig, slightly south of the confluence with the Teviot) and is also spelled this way on Coronelli’s 1696 map.

Hawike (Hlk) n. one of the early spellings of Hawick, e.g. in the regranting of the Barony in 1459, and in an English letter of 1544 when it is said that ‘the warden of the West Marchies shuld burne Hawike’.

Hawikuh (Hw-w-koo) n. ancient native American pueblo near Zuni, New Mexico, which was excavated 1917–23. It was the location of the Battle of Hawikuh at Cibola in 1540 (only 26 years after Hornshole!), being the first battle between native peoples and Europeans (led by Coronado) in the Southwestern United States.

hawk see hack
the Hawk (Thu-hawk) n. nickname of Walter Scott of Whitslade.

hawkythrow (Hawk-a-throw) n., arch. a country carpenter or other wright (noted by J. Jamieson).

Hawk Burn (hawk-burn) n. small stream rising on the western slopes of Ruberslaw and flowing into the Dean Burn, to eventually join the Teviot. In the woods near the head of the stream is a ‘burnt mound’.

Hawkass (hak-haws) n. former farm about 10 miles south of Hawick, in the headwaters of the Langside Burn, roughly between Priesthaugh and Whitrope. W. Little was there in 1868. It is now a ruin – ‘...And o’er high hill, and hollow glen, Round Liddle-head, and Penchrise-pen, The Carter, Windbrough, and Hawkhause, The dark cluds wad themsel’s amass’ [AD] (also written ‘Hackhass’, ‘Hawk Hass’, ‘Hawkhause’, etc.; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Hawkass Linn (hak-haws-lin) n. waterfall in the upper part of the Langside Burn in the Slitrig valley, to the east of the farmstead of Hawkass. There is an earthwork here, on a narrow promontory between the Fore and Mid Burns, with ramparts and ditches blocking the main approach from the south-west. Although the age is unknown, it has been suggested it is mediaeval.

Hawk Hill (hak-hil) n. hill to the west of the Maitens, near the farmstead of Hawkass. It reaches a height of 439 m.

Hawklaw (hak-law) n. area to the east of Windburgh Hill, now in Wauchope Forest, about 15 miles from Hawick. There is Hawklaw Plantation, Hawklaw Bog, the farmstead of Hawklawtongues and the former cottage Hawklawshope. Douglas Lillico lived there in the 1820s. John Wilson was shepherd there in the mid-1800s. Bob Hobkirk (the fiddler) was the last tenant there.

Hawklawtongues (hak-law-tungz) n. former farmstead and shepherd’s cottage in the headwaters of the Wauchope Burn, to the west of Wigg Knowe. It was also known as Wauchope-head. In 1811 it was ‘Hawkleytongues’ when listed among the lands owned by Walter Scott of Wauchope. William Elliot may have been shepherd there in the mid-18th century. George Scott and family were there in 1841 (it is ‘Hawclay’ in 1841).

Hawk Syke (hak-sik) n. small stream that rises near Hawk Hass and joins the Dod Burn.

Hawthorn (haw-thorn) n. steading on the Glenkinnon Burn, between the Yarrow and Tweed valleys, to the south-west of Ashiestiel. In 1541 the lands were ‘occupiit with the kingis gudis and the mail thairof pait be his hirdis, extending Hawthorn Park

Hawthorn Park (haw-thorn-pawrk) n. former name for lands in Minto Parish. In 1779 it is listed as being valued at £43.16.s. In 1811 'Hathorn Park' was owned by Lord Minto, and with livery held by the late Lord Westhall.

Hawthornside (haw-thorn-sid) n. farm on the A6088 shortly before Bonchester. The lands were originally called 'Hangingside' and owned by Richard 'Hangandside of that Ilk' until 1562, when sold to John Elliot of the Park. The name change was complete soon after it came into the hands of the Eliotts of Stobs, in the mid-17th century. However, it may be that originally the names 'Hawthornside' and 'Hanging side' referred to adjacent farms, since both are listed among the properties of Sir William Elliot of Stobs in the Barony of Feu-Rule in the late 17th century and early 18th centuries. It was formerly one of the major estates of Hobkirk Parish (and the Barony of 'Feu-Rule'). 'The town of Hathornsyde callit the newtoun' was recorded in 1562. The lands were involved in (difficult to follow!) deals in the late 16th and early 17th centuries involving the Hamiltons, Lorraines and Rev. William Weir. Part of the lands may be those 'under the name of Hawthorn' valued at £171 belonging to Sir William Douglas of Cavers in 1643, which were later acquired by the Eliotts of Stobs; the £40 lands belonging to Thomas Turnbull in 1643 may also have been part of Hawthornside. There were certainly Turnbuls of Hawthornside for several generations; William Turnbull was there in 1612, Robert and William Turnbull in 1682 and Adam Turnbull in 1688. Archibald Douglas paid the land tax on £171 there in 1678 and Adam Turnbull for £40. John Reid and Thomas Reid were listed as residents there in 1694. The lands there were valued at £610 9s 7d in 1779. In the 1788 county valuation the parts previously held by Thomas Turnbull and Sir William Douglas were valued at £40 and £171, respectively, and part of the estate of Sir Francis Elliott of Stobs. Thomas Scott was there in 1788-91 and George Scott was tenant there in 1792-97. In 1811 the farm was valued at £610 9s 7d and owned by Sir William Elliott of Stobs. Robert and Walter Barrie were there in the 1860s and Mrs. Renwick in 1868. The nearby Peelknowe probably indicates that there was once a peel tower there; this may be what was burned by the English in 1545. The farmhouse is said to have been built using its stones, including some large door rybats (one of which was removed to a builders' yard in Hawick in the 19th century). There may also have been a mill on the lands in the 17th century, perhaps a threshing mill powered by water from a pond. Roads here branch off towards Denholm and to the Slitrig valley. Hawthornside Hill to the west reaches 935 ft (287 m) and has a triangulation pillar. There was an observation post near here during WWII. A pear-shaped stone with a hole through it, which was found on the farm, is in the Museum (formerly written 'Halthornside', 'Hathronside' and variants; it is referred to as 'Hawtreinsyde' in 1561, 'Hathornse’ and ‘Hathronsyde’ in 1562, ‘Halthornsyde’ in 1602, ‘Halhornsye’ in 1612, ‘Hawthornside’ in 1630, ‘Hangingside’ in 1645, ‘hathoursyde’ in 1678, ‘Halthornsye’ in 1682, ‘Halthornside’ in 1688, ‘Hatranside’ in 1694 and ‘Hathornside’ in 1797; it is ‘Hathornside’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, and has the modern spelling by Stobie’s 1770 map).

Hawthornside Heights (haw-thorn-sid-hüts) n. high ground through which the A6088 passes near Hawthornside farm, reaching a height of 254 m (834 ft) (also 'Hawthornside Height').

Hawycce (ha-wik) n. another early variant of the spelling of Hawick, recorded in 1431 in a letter of 'attestation' for William Turnbull, Parson of Hawick and in a Glasgow Diocese document of about 1447.

Hawycce (ha-wik) n. spelling for Hawick on Gordon's manuscript map of Ettrick Forest and adjoining provinces, c.1650. It is 'Hawyck' on the 1570 'Theatrum orbis terrarum' of Ortelius.
Hawyk (ha-wik) n. one of the more common early spellings of Hawick, appearing in records of 1279–80 mentioning ‘Geoffrey de Hawyk’ and many other times in records of the 13th–15th centuries. It is the spelling given in the Ragman Rolls of 1296, the spelling in the 1393 charter for Teindside and Harwood, as well as the c.1406 charter of the Barony of Hawick to Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig and the 1484 and 1511/2 sasines for the Barony. The spelling was fairly common in the 16th century. Abraham Ortelius’ c. 1580 map is marked ‘Hawyk’.

Hawyke (ha-wik) n. spelling recorded in the confirming charter of Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1412, well as as in letters of 1543/4 and 1565, and the bond for suppressing thieves in 1568.

Hay (hā) n. Alexander (16th C.) tenant of one of the farms of Midshields, Appletreehal, Broadlee, Cotlaw or ‘Burnside’ in 1562/3 when Lord Alexander Home tried to remove his ‘pretended tenants’. It is possible that the same Alexander was notary public for the ‘Band of Teviotdale’ in 1564 and for the retour of 1574, where the young Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme was served heir to his great-grandfather. Rev. Alexander James (d.1957) born in Aberdeen, he was educated at Edinburgh University and Theological College. He served as Episcopalian minister in Glasgow, becoming Rector at St. John the Evangelist in Glasgow. He moved to St. Cuthbert’s Kirk in Hawick 1911–55. His incumbency spanned both World Wars, and he was heavily involved in the life of the Town during these troubled times. Along with his wife he took on the extra duties of teaching the School during WWI and for several years afterwards. He also served as Chaplain at Stobs Camp 1911–45. He was appointed Canon of St. Mary’s Cathedral in Edinburgh in 1937 and served as Diocesan Inspector of School in Edinburgh. After he retired he became Honorary Canon attached to St. Mary’s Cathedral. His son Charles was also an Episcopalian minister and Canon. He is buried in St. Cuthbert’s churchyard. Andrew, W.S. (17th C.) ‘writer’ (i.e. lawyer) who purchased the estate of Whitehaugh from Robert Scott of Headshaw’s son in 1623. He in turn sold it to Walter Scott of St. Leonards in 1656. He also bought Headshaw, Dryden, Crawknowe and Clewes in 1623. He drew up an important document in Hawick in 1641, dealing with succession to the Thirlestane estates. He is probably the clerk of the same name mentioned in the charter for the lands of Goldielands in 1620. He is probably the same man as Andrew of Haytoun, son of John of Kingsmeadows, Peeblesshire, who signed the Acts of the Writers of the Signet in 1612 and died in about 1655. Ann nee Little (1795–48) born in Langholm, daughter of fleshers John and Jean Armstrong. She married Robert, who kept the Crown Inn on the High Street. She was publican there in Pigot’s 1837 directory. She was listed as publican at the Crown in the 1841 census, living with her children Jane and Thomas. Beatrix (18th/19th C.) daughter of Rev. James of Roberton. In 1825 she was on the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. She married John Jamieson. Rev. Charles (1910/11–89) son of the minister at St. Cuthbert’s Church. He was born in Glasgow, but raised in Hawick and educated at the High School, where he was head boy and captain of the rugby team. He also turned out for Hawick R.F.C. a few times. He studied at Edinburgh and Cambridge and was inducted as a minister in 1934. He assisted as Whitley Bay, taught in the Royal Grammar School, and had appointments at Windermere, Newcastle, Healy and Heddon-on-the-Wall. He was appointed Honorary Canon of Newcastle Cathedral in 1970 and Rector of Glendale in 1973 and retired to Wooler in 1980. He was heavily involved with rugby, particularly at school level, as well as the Scouting movement and school camps. He had 1 son and 4 daughters. James (d.1609) 7th Lord Hay of Yester, brother of William, 6th Lord. In 1607 he gave a charter to Walter Scott of Todrig. He married Margaret, daughter of Mark Kerr, 1st Earl of Lothian. His children included: Sir William; Margaret; and John, 8th Lord of Yester and 1st Earl of Tweeddale. Rev. James (1751/2–1825) a native of Banffshire, he graduated from King’s College Aberdeen in 1772. He became minister of Ettrick in 1775, but was translated to Kirkton later the same year and then to Roberton in 1786. He paid the Horse Tax at Roberton in 1789–97. He retired in 1801 because of his health, and was assisted by William Berry Shaw. But his health improved, and he resumed again as minister in 1812, serving until his death. In 1785 he married Arabella Douglas (who died in 1793), daughter of the minister of Jedburgh. Their children were: Beatrix, who married John Jamieson; William (b.1777); Janet; and John (b.1791). He wrote a description of Roberton Parish for Sinclair’s Statistical Account of 1794. James (b.c.1780) mason journeyman listed at ‘Allers’ on the 1841 census. He probably lived on the Mill Path. His wife Janet came from Kirkton Parish, and was a widow.
in 1851. Their children included James, Ann and Rachel. He may be the mason of the same name listed on Teviot Crescent in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He is probably the mason James, whose child died in Hawick in 1808. James (1846–1918) from Hawick, he moved to Edinburgh and was a noted amateur photographer. There is a photograph taken in the early 1900s showing him with his son and grandson, both also called James. He died at Bargrennan, Dumfries and Galloway.

John (d.1508) 1st Lord Hay of Yester, son of Sir David of Locherworth and Yester, Sheriff of Peebles. He was on the 1492 inquest deciding on who should inherit the lands of Richard Rutherford. In 1501 he was recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in relation to fines for James Scott in Hassendean. He married Mary, daughter of John Lindsay, 1st Lord of the Byres (who was Baron of Chamberlain Newton). In 1468 he remarried Elizabeth, daughter of Sir George Cunningham of Belton, and through her inherited several local lands. This included Appletreehall, Easter Hassendean and Todrig. He was succeeded by his 2nd son John, 2nd Lord Yester, who died at Flodden. Other children included: Sir Thomas, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Alexander, Lord Home; Isabel, who married Sir Walter Ker of Cessford; George of Menzion; Isabella, who married Sir Robert Lauder of the Bass; and Margaret, who married William, 3rd Lord Borthwick. He may be the ‘Johanni Haw’ mentioned in the last will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme. John (d.1513) 2nd Lord of Yester, son of the 1st Lord. In 1511/2 he had a charter for the lands of Todrig in Selkirkshire and other lands in Peeblesshire. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Crighton of Sanquhar and was succeeded by his eldest son, also John. He was killed at Flodden. John (d.bef. 1543) 3rd Lord of Yester, son of Sir John, 2nd Lord, who died at Flodden. In 1530 he was one of the Border Lairds who submitted to James V to keep better order. And he also ‘came in the King’s will’ for his brother (also) John allowing thieves Adam Nixon and Robert Elliot to go free. A charter of 1532 grants him the lands of Easter Hassendean ‘with tower and fortalice thereof’, as heir to his grandmother Elizabeth Cunningham. He married Elizabeth Douglas, daughter of George, Master of Angus, and secondly married a Dickson of Smithfield. He was succeeded by his son John. John (d.1557) 4th Lord Hay of Yester, son of John. In 1553 he issued a charter that refers to William Scott of Harden and his wife Elizabeth Ker. He was probably superior for some local lands. He fought at the Battle of Pinkie in 1547, was taken prisoner and held in the Tower of London for 3 years. In 1650 he was named one of the overseers of the tutors for the children of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. He was succeeded by his eldest son, William. His seal showed a quartered shield, with Gifford and Fraser, together with the Hay coat of arms, a crest on a helmet, with a goat’s head and the words ‘S’ JO[HANNES DOMINUS DE YES]TER QUARRTU’. John (b.1595) 8th Lord Hay of Yester, son of James, who he succeeded in 1610. In 1635 he gave a charter of the lands of Todrig to Thomas Scott and his wife. He was made 1st Earl of Tweeddale in 1640. He was succeeded by John, 1st Marquess of Tweeddale, who married Jane, daughter of the 1st Earl of Buccleuch. John (b.1626) 1st Marquess of Tweeddale, son of John, 8th Lord Yester. In 1666 he gave a charter for Todrig, showing that he was still superior for some local lands. He switched allegiance several times during the Civil War, and served as Lord President of the Scottish Council and Extraordinary Lord of Session under Charles II. He was later Lord Chancellor of Scotland. In 1654 he acted along with Gideon Scott of Highchester on behalf of the Countess Mary Scott of Buccleuch, to attempt to reduce the huge fine imposed by Cromwell. In 1644 he married Jane, daughter of Walter Scott, 1st Earl of Buccleuch and was succeeded by John, 2nd Marquess. Robert (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He was recorded at Pathhead in 1777. He married Marion Crozier and their son John was baptised in 1777. Robert (c.1781–1832) proprietor of the Crown Hotel in the mid-1800s. He was ‘innkeeper, Hawick’ in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’. He is listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and was at the Crown Inn in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. His brother was James. He married Ann Little (d.1848) from Langholm, who carried on at the Crown after his death. Their children were: Jane, who married Robert Grieve, and took over at the Crown after her mother’s death; and Thomas, who was Cornet in 1847. The family are buried in St Mary’s. Robert (b.1816/7) hostler listed at about 21 High Street in 1841. By 1851 he was a mason, living on Allars Crescent. His wife was Margaret and their children included Ann, Jessie, James, Betsy, Robert and William. Thomas (d.1815) resident of Allars. His death is recorded in Hawick. He is probably the Thomas whose unnamed child died in Hawick in 1787.

Hayck (hčk) n. spelling for Hawick on Nicolas Sanson’s c. 1665 map of Scotland, as well as Frederik de Wit’s c. 1680 map and Vincenzo Coronelli’s 1689 map.

Haycorse (hč-kors) n. former name for an area near Branxholme, precise location uncertain. There was once a ford across the river near here, where the road from the Borthwick valley crossed to join the main road into Hawick via Haysike and Crumhaughhill (‘Hay’ here is probably ‘high’ and ‘corse’ could be ‘cross’, with a connection to Chapelhill).

Haye (hč) n. hay – ‘When a the rest’s set tae the haye . . . .’ [JSB], ‘We’ll suin wun the hai-ee wui this grand dryin wund’ [ECS], ‘. . . And mony a wainch in hey tumble’t’ [DH] (also spelled ‘hey’; note that there are variations in the diphthong, going from ‘ā-ee’ to ‘u-ee’).

Hayick (hč-ik) n. occasional surname, not to be confused with a town in the Borders.

Hayknowe (hč-nów) n. former cottage near the river close to Harwood-on-Teviot. John Scott, Adam Kyle and their families lived there in 1841, with residents being William Robson and Henry Jackson in 1851. It is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, on the west side of the road just north of Teindside Cottage. The name was still in use in the early 20th century – ‘Yeddie Kyle o’ Hayknowe, who can han’le the bow, Was trysted to play on the fiddle’ [JoHa] (also written ‘Hayknow’).

Haynicht see hainit

Hayside (hč-síd) n. old steading on the south side of Drinkstone Hill. John Cavers and his family were living there in 1841, as well as the MacGregors. Robert Michie was shepherd there in 1861. It has long been a ruin (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map; it is ‘Highside’ on the 1841 census).

Hayensis see Heysike

Hazelbankstead (hč-zul-bawngk-sted) n. former lands in the upper part of Liddesdale, listed in a rental roll of c.1376 as part of the ‘Ermyldoue’ section. The lands are recorded as ‘Hesylbankstede’ and with a value of 13 shillings and 4 pence. They could be connected with Hazelyside, to the west.

Hazeldean (hč-zul-deen) n. romanticised name for Hassendean. It may have first been used by John Leyden and is connected with Sir Walter Scott’s ballad ‘Jock o’ Hazeldean’. However, the beginning of this song was based on the much older ‘John of Hazelgreen’, and hence the word was essentially invented by Scott. It is also the name of one of the tunes traditionally played by the Drums and Fifes, which is a Strathspey reel in A Major. Note that it is different from the ballad ‘Jock o’ Hazeldean’ – ‘. . . By which a moulder-pile is faintly seen, The old deserted church of Hazel-dean, Where slept my fathers in their natal clay, Till Teviot’s waters roll’d their bones away’ [JL], ‘. . . To fade, unbless’d, since on the church-yard green Its lord o’erthrew the spires of Hazel-dean’ [JL], ‘In Hawick twinkled many a light, Behind him soon they set in night: And soon he spurred his courser keen Beneath the tower of Hazeldean’ [SWS] (the name derives from a note by Sir Walter Scott, claiming that Hassendean is a corruption of this name, although there is no evidence to support this).

the Hazel Dog o the Toor (thu-hč-zul-dög-ā-thu-toor) n. nickname for Andrew Murray of Spittal Tower.

Hazelhope (hč-zul-höp, hiz-lup) n. another name for Hislop farm and surrounding area.

Hazelwud House (hč-zul-wud-hoos) n. Hazelwood House, a large Victorian villa in the Stiches area, designed by John Guthrie and named after the hazel trees that used to stand there. It gave its name to Hazelwood Road, Lane and Court. The Laidlaw family lived there in the late 19th and early 20th centuries.

Hazelwud Court (hč-zul-wud-kör) n. Hazelwood Court, part of Stiches off Hazelwood Road, built in 1974 and named after Hazelwood House.

Hazelwud Lane (hč-zul-wud-län) n. Hazelwood Lane, small lane in Stiches beside Hazelwood Court.

Hazelwud Road (hč-zul-wud-röd) n. Hazelwood Road, a street originally giving access to the Anderson Sanatorium from Stiches Road, now connecting Stiches Road with a large part of the housing estate. It was named after Hazelwood House.

the Hazely Cleugh (thu-hč-zu-lee-klooch) n. small stream on the north side of Berryfell Hill, which eventually joins the Cogsmill Burn and the Slitrig.
Hazely Hirst

Hazely Hirst (hā-zu-lee-hurst) n. area to the north of Berryfell Hill, east of Black Bog and west of Stonedge Hill (see Hasliehirst).

Hazely Muir (hā-zu-lee-nweyr) n. former name for land in Liddesdale, south of Kirndean, between Powet Sike and Harden Burn (it is marked ‘Eizallie Muir’ on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map).

Hazelyside (hā-zu-lee-sīd) n. farmstead in the hills about 4 miles north of Newcastleton, with Hazelyside Rig above reaching 328 m. The shepherd’s cottage is till roofed, and stands inside a field system, including a large area of rig, shieling-huts, a sheepfold and a bothy. There are also the remains of 2 shieling huts on a terrace about half-way up Hazelyside Rig, possibly the farm of ‘Estirhesilyslye’ listed in rental records of c.1376 (valued at 5 merks) and 1541. ‘Westirhesilyslye’ is also listed there (with a value of 24 shillings), and was presumably to the west. To the south of the shepherd’s cottage there are 2 water-filled holes that are probably bomb craters, presumably from army practice (the origin is simply the Old English for ‘slope with hazels’; it first occurs in 1376 and is ‘Islysyde’ in 1624).

Hazelyside Hill (hā-zu-lee-sīd-hil) n. hill in Castleton Parish, a mile or so to the west of Newcastleton. There is no obvious relationship with the farm of Hazelyside and the hill Hazelyside Rig, which are a few miles further north. On the eastern slope there are the remains of a cottage, at least 8 huts, a kiln, a quarry and sheepfolds and enclosures.

Hazely Sike (hā-zu-lee-sīk) n. small stream in Craik Forest, which feeds Craikhope Burn, to the west of Comb. There are old enclosures there.

the Health Centre (thu-heith-sen’-ur) n. centre for health care in Hawick, built on Teviot Road in 1989 on part of the site of the former Rodono Mill. The architects were Scott & McIntosh.

Heap (heap) n. former name for the estate that included Easter Heap (roughly Siverbuthall) and Wester Heap (East Whitehaugh). It was also known as ‘the Heaps’ and spelled ‘Heip’ or ‘Hepe’. The older spelling is preserved in Heip Hill House on Greensidehall Road. In the 17th century it is also referred to as ‘Hoip’ and ‘Keip’. Adam ‘de Hep’ and Robert Welgh ‘de Hep’ signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. In 1431 (sometimes erroneously written as 1413) James Langlands gave heritable possession of the lands of Heap to Walter Scott and his heirs. They had previously belonged to Robert of Hepe. The document of 1431 (among the Buccleuch papers) is one of the oldest pieces of local writing in Scots (rather than Latin). In 1451 (confirmed in 1453) the lands were swapped by Sir Walter Scott for those at Milsington owned by John of Langlands. Walter Scott of Heap is recorded in the 1490s, and may be the same as Walter Scott of Whitehaugh. The Scots of Heap also held teinds of lands in Ashkirk Parish (which were still mentioned in 1788, when in the hands of Elliot of Minto). For centuries the eastern lands were part of the Langlands estate. Andrew Scott was tenant in 1628. In 1643 Mrs. Donaldson was liferenter of ‘an merk land of Heap’, but by 1678 this piece of land was owned by the Langlands of that Ilk. The combined farms of Easter and Wester Heap had 47 communicants recorded in 1650 (with surnames Aitchison, Aitken, Almond, Brydon, Davidson, Easton, Elliot, Fletcher, Fowler, Gray, Johnstone, Learmonth, Lorraine, Mitchell, Percival, Rule, Scott, Sheen, Stevinson, Stewart, Waugh, Welsh and White). In 1694 the tenants were John Waugh, William Anderson and William Scott, with William Easton also resident there. In 1711 tailor John Cairns, shepherd William Aitkin and weaver William Stewart were all there. It is marked on a 1718 survey of Buccleuch properties, indicated being to the south of Stouslie. James Easton was there in 1725, William Sanderson in 1727, William Easton and William Goodfellow in 1733, Thomas Scott in 1751, John Russell in 1772 and George Ainslie in 1780. Andrew Hall was tenant there in 1797, along with William Jackson. Robert Oliver was farmer in 1841 (the origin of the name is uncertain, perhaps being simply ‘a heap’ or from the Old English ‘heah hop’, meaning ‘high valley’; the name first occurs as ‘Hep’ in 1296 and is ‘Hepe’ in 1451, ‘Hepe’ in 1492, ‘Hep’ in 1494, ‘Hoip’ in 1616, ‘the Hai’ in 1628 and ‘Hepe’ in 1727; it is incorrectly marked ‘Heane’ on Blaue’s 1654 map, while ‘Heape’ is also marked way over the Teviot, roughly near West Cote).

Heap (heap) n. Adam (13th C.) signatory of the Ragman Rolls in 1296. He is recorded as ‘Adam de Hep . . . del counte de Rokesburgh’, and he is the first named on one particular document. His seal shows what is possibly a rose bush with the words ‘S’ADE DE HEPE’. This is probably Heap in Wilton Parish (and not ‘Hepburn’, as has been suggested), although it is unclear what surname his descendants might have had. Robert ‘Welgh de Hepe’ also swore fealty to Edward at the same time, so they may have held the east and west portions separately. His seal is attached to the Ragman Rolls, perhaps showing a rose-bush. Henry (13th/14th C.) recorded as ‘Henry del Hepe’ in 1301 when he was the first named of a group of 12 ‘common and notorious thieves’ who were captured by Hugh de Audley, the Sheriff of Roxburgh, Sir Alexander Balliol and others at ‘the moor of Alkirk’ in Roxburghshire; it is unclear where this was, but it is possibly Ashkirk. The others named were ‘Thomas le fitz Margarete’ and ‘John del Hepe’. The cattle and other goods they had taken from England were taken back, and they were imprisoned in England. John (13th/14th C.) one of a group of men captured in a wood near ‘Alkirk’ in 1301 and taken to either Berwick or Bamborough Castle. He was probably related to Henry ‘del Hepe’, who was also captured. Robert (15th C.) recorded as ‘Rober-tus de Hepe’ in 1427 when he was on the inquest panel for the inheritance of the Barony of Hawick by William Douglas of Drumlanrig. He no longer hid the lands of Heap in 1431 when they passed to the Scotts, but he was one of the witnesses to the document.

the Heap Cross (thu-heap-kros) n. monument said to have been placed in Stirches (at Crosshall) to mark the murder of George Fairneylaw, sometimes referred to as Abbot of Melrose (although he was a cleric attached to Glasgow Cathedral). It was demolished sometime after the middle of the 18th century, with the stone trough that formed its base being destroyed later. The remains of the cross (if it ever existed) became lost; it has been suggested that they form part of the reconstructed Market Cross by the Museum (although that cross head is the one found at Abbey Sike in Castleton). A more mundane suggestion for its purpose is that it was a mediæval wayside cross, pre-dating the murder. It was supposed to have borne the inscription: ‘This is the place where Langlands slew The holy priest of Melrose: And Langlands shall be of that ilk nae mair When time has levelled this cross’. The story was first related by Robert Wilson, although he connects it with James (not Robert or Roger) Langlands.

Heape (heep) n. farm marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map (probably in error), roughly at the position of West Cote, about 2 miles north-east of Hawick (it also appears on the original Pont manuscript from the 1590s).

Heap Ford (heep-ford) n. former name for a farmstead in Wilton Parish. It is ‘Heap foord’ in 1747 when John Smith was living there. Presumably it was near a ford of some sort, perhaps over the Stiches Burn.

the Heap Hills (thu-heap-hilz) n. hills in the area behind Mayfield and Stirches, specifically Heip (or Heap) Hill, which rises to 256 m and the neighbouring hilly area – ‘Wi’ halitin’ step by Stirches brae To roam the Heap Hills over . . .’ [WFC].

Heap Inn (heap-in) n. former place name in Wilton. It is recorded in parish records in 1747 when David Scott lived there. It is presumably the name for an inn on the main road to Selkirk (and beyond to Edinburgh) passing through the Stiches area, but its precise location is uncertain.

heapit (hee-pee, -pi) pp., adj. heaped – ‘. . .for serveing the cure at the said kirk of Wiltoun the said year, twelve bolles victuall, half beir half heipit aitt meill . . .’ [SB1633], ‘And straight they went to the tything pocke, ’Twas heapit to the heade . . .’ [JTe], ‘Airth the air it swirlin’ sweepit; – At ilka nook snaw wreaths lay heapit’ [RDW], ‘. . .He hands it oot as ’tware a boon, In heapit, generous measure’ [WP].

the Heaps (thu-heeps) n. farms of Wester Heap and Easter Heap and surrounding region, located in Stirches. It is traditionally infamous as the area where Sir George Fairneylaw, ‘Abbot of Melrose’ (actually a Glasgow Diocese cleric), was beheaded by Roger Langlands in 1493. The name is also used for the ‘Heap Hills’ – ‘The Vertish, Heaps and lovely hills Are balm tae sooth the ex-iles ills’ [JCa] (also spelled ‘Hepe’ and ‘Heip’).

the Hearse Hoose (thu-herzs-hoos) n. name for a former house on the Loaning in Denholm, presumably where the local horse-drawn hearse was once kept.

heather (he-th) interj., arch. exclamation of surprise, wonder or doubt – ‘Ay, heather!’ [GW], ‘Ai heather! sic a yooky waddeen; nae streiv!’ [ECS] (perhaps sometimes a euphemism for ‘Hell!’).

heather-bleat (he-thur-blee) n., arch. the snipe, Capella gallinago – ‘I wander’d forth alang the green, To list the heather-bleeter’s cry’ [JTe], ‘Among other terrors she told me about the ‘heather-bleat’ as being the most fearsome of all, believing, as she did, that it was a ghost pure and simple' [RB] (sometimes ‘heather-bleater’, also mossblutter and bleater).

heather-claw (he-thur-kla) n., arch. a dog’s dew-claw, named because of its tendency to catch in the heather, and hence often being cut off.

heather-cow (he-thur-kow) n., poet. a tuft or twig od heather – ‘Where they’d get ere they came back A rive amang the heather-cowes’ [HSR].

Heather Jock (he-thur-jok) n. nickname of John Mitchell, featured in William Easton’s songs ‘Kinly Stick’ and ‘Run Them In’, and a poem by Thomas Chapman, as well as being mentioned in ‘Hawick Immortals’ – ‘Scottie Dottle and Reuben Watt, Dickie Lyon and Jethart Jim, Sam’l Lawrence and Wat the Cat, And Heather Jock baith gray and grim’ [HI], ‘O come, my muse, Sam’l Lawrence and Wat the Cat, And Heather and Reuben Watt, Dickie Lyon and Jethart Jim, mentioned in ‘Hawick Immortals’ { ‘Scottie Dottle poems by Thomas Chapman, as well as being mentioned in ‘Hawick Immortals’}.

Heather Wud (he-thur-wud) n. plantation in the upper part of the Dod Burn, to the west of Peelbraehope. East of here is an old enclosure.

heathery (he-thu-ree) adj. covered with heather – ‘A hantle heh the twaesome [hills] seen sin the beacons war kuittelt on ther heathery.

Heathfield (heeth-feeld) n. temporary name for the shepherd’s cottage on Town-o-Rule farm, just north of Weensmoor, otherwise known as ‘Drythropple’ (the name change was attempted about 1850 by Sir William Elliott, and is marked as such on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, but the name was never adopted by the locals).

Heathfield Cottage (heeth-feeld-ko’-eej) n. cottage in the north-eastern part of Cavers Parish, just to the south of the Dykes and north of Blawearie. It is not located particularly close to the cottage formerly known as Heathfield, and so the connection with the name is unclear.

Heatley (heet-lee) n. A. (18th/19th C.) resident at Gillside, probably in Castleton Parish. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Woodburn in 1767 and Borthwickbrae Burnfoot in 1772 when his son John was born. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included: John (b.1767); Betty (b.1768); Andrew (b.1769); Agnes (b.1770); and John (b.1772). George (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Muselee in 1732 and 1734 and Howcleuch in 1736.

His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included: Isobel (b.1732); Mary (b.1734); and Alexander (b.1736). James (17th/18th C.) witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1698 for John Scott of Gorrenberry. James (18th/19th C.) grocer in Lilliesleaf, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He appears to have been living at Woodburn in 1727, 1732, 1734 and 1737. In 1726 he married Margaret Thomson, who was from Galashiels. His children, baptised in Roberton, included: Jean (b.1727); Alexander (b.1730); Isobel (b.1732); Christian (b.1734); Elizabeth (b.1737); Andrew (b.1739); and John (b.1741). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Woodburn in 1757. He may be the Thomas who married Katherine Cowan in Roberton in 1754. He was surely related to (or perhaps even the same as) the earlier Thomas in Woodburn. His children included William (b.1757), Margaret (b.1759) and Thomas and Robert (b.1761). He may be the Thomas who was guilty of fornication with Jean Douglas in Roberton Parish in 1749. Thomas (1826/7–1905) born at Attonburn, he was ploughman at Lantoon Mill. He died at Broadhaugh, Teviot. His wife, Margaret Hobkirk died at Hartshaugh Mill in 1898, aged 64. Their children included Thomas and Margaret. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1726, 1728 and 1736 he was in Roberton itself. His children included: Alexander (b.1724); Margaret (b.1726); Isobel (b.1728); Ann (b.1732); and James (b.1736). Walter (18th C.) resident at Harwood in 1765 at ‘Wester Loach’ in 1771 at ‘Wester loch house’ (presumably by Braunchholme West Loch) in 1774. His children, baptised in Roberton, included William (b.1765), James (b.1769), Christian (b.1771), Janet (b.1774) and Walter (b.1777). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Woodburn in 1722, 1724, 1726 and 1729, Chisholme in 1736 and Woodburn again in 1742. In 1720 he married Janet Young, who was also from Roberton. His children included: Margaret (b.1722); Alexander (b.1724); George (b.1726); William (b.1729); Magdalene (b.1736); Walter (b.1739); and Thomas (b.1742) (also written ‘Hately’ and ‘Heatlie’, ‘Hetlie’, etc.).

the Royal Highland and Agricultural Show was held in Hawick in 1914, lasting 4 days in July, about a month after the Town’s Quater-Centenary celebrations. It was staged in Wilton Lodge Park, with 37 acres of the Park given over to the Show, including building a temporary bridge to connect with the ‘Playing Fields’ across the Teviot. Local farmers took many of the sheep prizes. The first 2 days had good weather, but it rained almost continuously on the last 2 days. Since 1960 the Show has had a permanent hom at Ingliston, and so it will never visit Hawick again.

heidroom (heed-room, -rowm) n., arch. outermost piece of arable land on a farm, usually adjacent to the common land, the outer part of a croft – ‘Item, that ilk Nicholson his heid room dyck yeirlie, for uphawlding of nichbourheid with uthers ...’[BR1640], ‘Drinkston has what the neighbourhood call a head-room, but he calls it several ground, and he uses it in the same manner as he does the rest of his farm’[HAST1916].

heids (heedz) n., pl., arch. top pupil, most scholarly student in a class – ‘A’m heeds o the cless this week, and ee ken Tam Broon? – aweed, hei’s fits’[ECS] (also written ‘heeds’).

heids an throws (heedz-in-thrawz) adv., arch. heads and tails, arranged with hops and bottoms alternating, head to tail – ‘... war cowpreet inti ilka seike, heids an throws’[ECS].

Headshaw (heed-shaw) n. Headshaw, farm just north of Ashkirk, near Headshaw Loch, once home of a branch of the Scotts and later of the Elliots. There are Shortreeds recorded there in the 15th century. The Scotts owned the lands from at least 1484/5 and held them for about the next 150 years, with Robert Scott of Headshaw selling the lands to Andrew Hay in 1623. In 1581 a group of Elliots complained to the Privy Council of ‘cumand by the yett of Eidschaw, in thair lefell bissyness’ when they were attacked by Walter Scott and his servants, one of the Elliots having his hand cut off in the fight. In 1623 Alexander Steven was recorded as master of a school there. Andrew Allan, John Govenlock and James ‘Coutart’ were there in 1623. They were purchased in 1629 by John Scott of Yorkston, 2nd son of George, 12th Laird of Synton. In 1643 the lands of Headshaw, ‘Crawknows, and Cleuches’ were valued together at £760 10s; at the same time the Duke of Lennox held the feu-duties, valued at £18 5s. William Scott of Headshaw paid tax on £1028 for the estate on the 1663 Land Tax Rolls and £1160 1s 4d in 1678. The main house is listed with 6 hearths on the Hearth Tax roll of 1694, with the estate having 6 tenants listed, as well as 6 of ‘ye poor’. When the last male heir, John Scott of Headshaw, died in 1691, then the heiress was his sister Mary, who had married Patrick Porteous, Burgess of Peebles. Mary Scott and her husband sold the lands to Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto in 1696, and they were erected into a Barony about 1698, with ratification to Sir Gilbert and his son Gilbert in 1705, and then combined into Sir Gilbert’s Barony of Minto and Craigned. James Redford was tenant there in 1703. Tax was paid on 18 windows there in 1748. William Scott was recorded there in 1773 and William Simpson was farmer in at least the period 1785–97. In 1779 it was liferented by George Pott, except for parts liferented by Dr. William Elliot (roughly the southern part, valued at £116 19s 6d) and Rev. Simon Haliburton (parts to the west and north-west, valued at £149 14s 2d); the total was valued at £870 (including additional teinds). In 1780 the lands of Dryden and Clews (within the Barony of Headshaw) liferented to Elliot were described as including ‘Longhaugh and Strawbrae [probably Shawbrae], Infield Crawknows, and the half of the Kirkrig’, as well as a piece of land on the south side of the Ale. In 1811 it is recorded that land had the superiority formerly life-rented by Pott, Haliburton and Elliot. The feu-duty of Headshaw was still owned by the ‘College of Glasgow’ in 1788 (and still so recorded in 1811), valued at £18 5s. Mungo Thorburn was farmer there in the 1860s.
Heidshaw Loch

Heidshaw Loch (heed-shaw-loch) n. Headshaw Loch, small body of water just to the northwest of Headshaw farm, near Ashkirk. It is 17 acres in extent, and is stocked with rainbow trout for fishing.

Heidshaw Mill (heed-shaw-mill) n. Headshaw Mill, former corn mill situated on the Headshaw Burn south of the present Headshaw farm and just north of Ashkirk. It was owned by the Scotts of Headshaw, until probably sold to the Elliot of Minto in 1696 along with rest of the estate. William Scott was there in 1640. John Riddell was there in 1694 when he was ‘deficient’ on the Hearth Tax roll, and there were 3 other poor people listed there (presumably without a hearth). Peter Grieve was miller there in 1745. James Glendinning was farmer in 1797 (separate from Ash Kirk Mill, which was on the A7). It was written ‘Heidschawmilde’ in 1694; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Ittscha Mill’ and is ‘Head shawmill’ by 1770).

Heiton (hee’-in) n. stragglng village between Jedburgh and Kelso, on the A698. It formerly had 2 ale houses, and was in the 18th and 19th centuries the main stopping place for travellers between the 2 towns. Population 140 (1991). ‘The High Toun on the Hill’ (1985) by Ian Abernethy is a local history (the name is first recorded in 1152 and its origin is probably the Old English ‘heah tun’, meaning ‘the high farm’).

Heiton (hee’-in) n. Andrew (16th/17th C.) servant ‘in the Nutoun’ recorded in 1606. This was in relation to an action between the Grahamslaws of Little Newton and Turnbulls in Rulewater, and hence this is likely to have been the Newton near Bedrule.

Helcaldenburne see Hellcaddrourburn

Helen Kid’s Curse (he-lin-kidz-kurs) n. traditionally Liddesdale story about Helen (or Maggie) Kid (or Kidd), daughter of one of the retainers of Elliot of Larriston. The young Elliot fell in love with her, but the marriage was against the wishes of his family, particularly the female members, who lured his intended on some pretence and had her poisoned. As she lay dying she cursed the family to remain unloved, either single or miserable in marriage.

Helen’s Plantin (he-lin-plawn’-in) n. wooded area to the north-west of the location of the farm at Synton.

Hellcaddrourburn (hel-kaw-drin-burn) n. former farm in upper Liddesdale, somewhere on the Caddrour Burn. The ‘Hellecadrour burn’ is recorded on Sandison’s c.1590 map of the Deabateable Land, branching off the main river in the upper Liddel valley. It is ‘Helcaddrourburne’ in 1632, when listed among the Earl of Buccleuch’s lands in Liddesdale. It could be related to ‘Holecadrumhill’, which is recorded in 1628.

Helles Memorial (he-lis-mun-mo-reed-ul) n. main British and Commonwealth war memorial at the end of the Gallipoli Peninsula in Turkey. It serves as a memorial for the entire Gallipoli campaign and place of commemoration particularly for those who have no known grave. Almost 21,000 names are listed on the walls surrounding the 30 m obelisk. It was unveiled in 1924 and the Burgh of Hawick sent a marble plaque in 1926, which can still be seen on the grounds (the only town specifically to do so).

Hellmoor (hel-moor) n. Loch of about 60 acres, stocked for fishing, off the B711 west of Roberton and north of Alemoor. Before the damming of Alemoor, this was the larger of the lakes in Roberton Parish. A local legend has it that the Devil lived here, and created the Catrail – ‘He was lithe as the willow whose wands in spring Dance to the tune that the winds have taught her, His hair was black as the corbie’s wing, His dark eyes deep as the Hellmuir water’ [WHO] (also called ‘Hellmuir’; it is probably the body of water labelled ‘Hardemoore L.’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘hardmoor Loch’ on Adair’s c. 1688 map).

Hell’s Hole (helz-hol) n. former name for a pool in the Catlee Burn in Rulewater, marked on a map of 1772. It appears to have been adjacent to the ‘Boglehole Haugh’. The area is still marked on the modern Ordnance Survey maps.

helm (he-lum) n. helm (note normally pronounced as 2 syllables).

Helm (helm) n. former name for lands in the Barony of Cavers, whose location is not known. It could be the ‘helmys’ where Matthew Elliot was recorded in 1494/5 as being former tenant. It was listed in the 1511 confirmation of the Barony to James Douglas, along with Middle, when they are described as having a corn mill and a waulk mill attached. It is probably the ‘Helme, midle with mill’ that was incorporated into the Barony of Hallrule in 1649. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698 (it is ‘le Helm’ in 1511 and ‘Helme’ in 1687).

Helm (he-lum, helm) n. George (17th C.) resident of Dryden in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. He appears along with James, to whom he was presumably related. Perhaps the same George had a son William baptised in Roberton Parish. James (17th C.) listed at Dryden in Ashkirk Parish on the Hearth Tax roll of 1694. George was also listed and their name was written ‘Helme’.
James (b.c.1812) farm worker living at Borthwick Mains in 1841. In 1851 he was living at Hassendean. He married Hannah Hewitson in Hawick in 1838 and their children (baptised in Jedburgh) included: George (b.1838); Robert (b.1840); Jane (or ‘Jean’, b.1843); and William (b.1845). He may be the James, son of Thomas, baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1810. John (18th C.) listed as coachman at Wilton Lodge in 1791–97, when he was working for Lord Napier. His surname appears to be ‘Helem’ in 1791. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Outerside. He married Margaret Renwick in Roberton in 1702 and their children included: Agnes (b.1704); William (b.1705); John (b.1706); Margaret (b.1709); Margaret (again, b.1713); and John (b.1715). Thomas ‘Tom’ (b.c.1886) from Hawick, son of James and Jane Ogilvie. He was a professional rugby league player. He was a forward for Oldham, and also played for Great Britain. His 1910 cap for the Australian tour is in the Museum. William (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Isobel Renwick and their children included: Margaret (b.1683); and Janet (b.1684). William (b.1688) was probably also his child. In 1687 he witnessed a baptism for William Cairncross. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Borthaugh, recorded in 1729. He married Margaret Falside in Hawick in 1715. Their children included Thomas (b.1726) and Thomas (again, b.1729). The witnesses in 1729 were William and Robert Scott. William (18th C.) married Mary, daughter of Walter Riddell, in Hawick in 1723. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Easton and their children included William (b.1796). William (1781–1868) son of William and Helen Huggan. Described as a ‘residenter’ in Hawick, he was one of the 18 founders of the Relief (Allars) Church. In 1841 was an agricultural labourer living at Newmill on Teviot and by 1851 described as a former agricultural labourer. He married Margaret Graham (1778/9–1858) from Canonbie. Their children included: Isabella (1805/6–1856); Helen (1809/10–75); and Robina (1814/5–1858). The family are buried in Borthwick Waas; the William buried next to them is probably his father. William (b.c.1780) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was a shepherd at Shiplaw Corse in 1851. His wife Margaret was from Cavers Parish. He could be the agricultural labourer listed with Margaret at Linnfoots in Tweedsmuir in the 1841 census. He could also be the William who paid tax for having 3 non-working dogs at Birneyknowe in 1797. William (1811/2) shepherd at Birney Knowe. His wife was Margaret and their children included Margaret, William, Alexander, Robert, John, Janet, Mary and Thomas (also written ‘Helmen’ and ‘Helbun’).

Helmburn (helm-burn) n. farm just south of Ettrickbridge. It was part of the estate of Scott of Harden until about 1746 (marked ‘Elmaburn’ on Blaen’s 1654 map).

Helton (hel-tin) n. William (16th C.) recorded as ‘Willie Helboun, Stewart’ in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. It is unclear whether or not he came from close to the Hawick area, like a large fraction of others listed.

Hemlaw Knowes (hem-law-nowz) n. hills to the west of the B6357 (Note o the Gate road), south-west of Hyndlee and essentially the north part of Wauchope Rig. They reach a height of 334 m (1099 ft).

Hemmers (hem-urz) n. William (15th C.) listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice- aire in 1494/5. His surname is given as ‘hèmers’, which does not seem to be like any familiar names in the area.

hempie (hem-pee) n., poet. a rigor, literally a person deserving of a hempen rope, a wild, boisterous or silly girl – ‘. . . quo Bessie Elliot, a free-spoken Liddesdale hampy’ [LHTB], ‘. . . The hempies, too, when young and glaickit, And strung in bands, like gems colleckit’ [AD].

hemp-seed (hemp-seed) n., arch. the stem or seeds of the plantain, Plantago major.

hen (hen) n. informal way of addressing a woman, varying between familiar and patronising – ‘Wull ee gaun a message for iz hen, an’ I’ll gie a buttered scone’ [BB].

hen (hen) v., arch. to hedge, give an undertaking, to dare (someone) to perform some bold feat – ‘And jury courts to haud when some coward laddie henn’d, And gat his buttons scarrit at the hen-an-chickens (hen-an-chi-kinz) n., arch. a garden daisy with a cluster-like growth, Bellis prolifera.

Hendawick (hen-du-wik) n. trade name used by James Henderson & Co. for their exclusive line of woollen underwear. A booklet ‘Hawick the home of Scotch Underwear’ was published around 1900.

Hendawick (hen-du-wik) n. name given in 1918 to the aeroplane funded by War Bonds raised by the employees of James Henderson & Co.

Henderland (hen-du-lind) n. settlement on the Megget Water just west of St. Mary’s Loch. William Cockburn had a sasine for the lands in 1457. Henderland Tower was here, where James V is said to have had Cockburn of Henderland hanged on his own tower door, as celebrated in the ballad ‘The Border Widow’s Lament’; in fact Cockburn was hanged in Edinburgh in 1530 as an example to other thieves (also formerly ‘Hinderland’, ‘Hendirland’, ‘Henryland’, etc.).

Henderson (hen-du-sin) n. Adam (17th/18th C.) tenant in Side. In 1706 his 2 servants, Robert Elliot and John Robson, were rebuked by the Castleton Kirk Session for fighting on the Sabbath. Adam (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Orchard in 1717. He probably married Margaret Gledstains in 1706 and had children: Elspeth (b.1707); Margaret (b.1709); James (b.1712); Helen (b.1714); and James (again, b.1717). Adam (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included: Margaret (b.1736); Marion (b.1741); and Walter (b.1744). Adam (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included: James (b.1773). Adam (18th C.) groom at Synton in 1778, when he was working for Alexander Scott. It is possible he was the coach-drive of the same name (no location given) who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Adam (d.bef. 1811) weaver in Hawick. His son James was a smith who died in Hawick in 1811. He could be the Adam whose children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included James (b.1773). Ainslie (1979– ) born in Edinburgh and grew up in Denholm. He was in a local band called ‘Sunshine’. He was an unsuccessful contestant (coming 4th) in the first season of the TV show ‘Fame Academy’, but went on to have a hit single ‘Keep Me A Secret’ in 2003. He released an album ‘Growing Flowers By Candlelight’ in 2006. However, failing to find further success in music, he trained in animation, receiving a BAFTA New Talent Award in 2012. In 2013 he won a BAFTA as co-writer of ‘The Making of Longbird’. Andrew (16th C.) listed in 1580 among those implicated in the ambush of Scotts and Gledstains at Whithaugh. In 1581/2 he was described as servant to Lancie Armstrong of Whithaugh and named in connection with accusations of raids on farms around Hawick. He was declared a rebel after not appearing to answer the charge. Perhaps the same Andrew was listed in a complaint about a raid into England in 1595, along with John of Hoghill, ‘Auld Wat’ Scott of Harden, Armstrons and Elliot. Andrew (17th C.) married Jean Runciman and their daughter Isobel was baptised in 1686. This was in the Hesendean part of Roberton Parish, although his entry is labelled ‘in Ancrom P’. Andrew (18th C.) farmer in Todshawhill recorded in 1771. He could be the Andrew, married to Betty Thomson, whose children included: William (b.1763), baptised in Ashkirk; Margaret (b.1766), baptised in Hawick; and John (b.1771), baptised in Roberton. Archibald (16th/17th C.) servant to the Laird of Mangerton. In 1606 he was accused, along with Ninian Armstrong of Tweeden and ‘Fair Airchie’ Armstrong, of the murder of Andrew Smith and cutting the nose off Thomas Tweedie. Archibald ‘Airchie’ or ‘Watshod’ (16th/17th C.) accused at the 1622 Circuit Court of stealing 4 sheep belonging to Mungo Dalgleish in Winnimont Rig. He was found guilty and sentence to be hanged. It is unclear where he came from. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th/17th C.) tenant at Riccartonfoot along with John Robison around Hallowe’en 1623 when they had sheep stolen by Adie and Will Usher. Archibald (17th C.) recorded as ‘in Kirkton’ in a Hawick magistrates court case of 1642, when he was listed among men accused of stealing the wallet of a servant of the Laird of Cavers. Archibald (17th C.) tenant in Dinley in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Archibald (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Parkhill in 1742 and Eilrig in 1743. Bettie (b.1742), Margaret (b.1743), Adam (b.1744) and John (b.1745) were probably all his children. He is probably the Archibald, recorded at ‘Esikkiell syke House’ in 1753 when his son Archibald was baptised in Roberton. He may be the Archibald who witnessed a baptism (along with Walter Burn) for John Scott in Hawick in 1765.
Henderson

Bessie (17th C.) wife of Cuthbert, who was a butcher in Hawick. She has the distinction of being the first person recorded in the Town Book (in 1638) being sentenced to the stocks, 48 hours in this case, for stealing peats from Bailie William Scott. She also afterwards had to stand at the Mercat Cross with the peats on her shoulders and a sign declaring her crime. Christian (b.1770) listed as ‘Independent’ and living with 2 female servants at the East end of Hawick in the 1841 census. She was probably the widow of someone wealthy enough to provide for her. Cuddy (16th C.) recorded in 1566 among men who were to be entered with the Warden of the Middle Marches. He is listed along with Simon Oliver and Mathew Douglas, and was to be entered by John Rutherford of Hunthill. His first name may have been short for ‘Cuthbert’ or otherwise could be a nickname. Cuthbert (17th C.) ‘fleshour’ in Hawick recorded in 1638. His wife Bessie was accused of stealing peat from Bailie William Scott. Daniel (19th C.) proprietor of the Bonchester Bridge Inn. He was also a grocer there. He had a sister who married John Malcolm, schoolmaster at Hobkirk. Dandy (19th C.) one of the first 2 Hawick natives (the other being Jim Fiddes) to play cricket in town, after returning from working in England. He was apparently small and knock-kneed and played at short-stop. His proper name may have been Andrew. David of Wester Essenside (18th C.) recorded as ‘Henderside’ among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was probably son of Matthew, who was owner of Wester Essenside in 1758. David, J.P. (1826–87) younger son of Robert. He was tenant of the Gatehousecote farm on the Abbotrule estate, owned by his father. He eventually inherited Abbotrule from his brother John, and was listed there in 1868. In about 1874 he was recorded as owner of Gatehousecote, Wester Fodderlee, Doorpool and Midquarter, as well as parts of the lands of Grange, Ruletownhead, ‘Bossithill’ and Burnkinford, which had previously been possessed by Charles Kerr of Abbotrule. Additionally, he owned lands in Jedburgh Parish. Like his brothers, he was keen on hunting and kept a stable of horses. He was also said to be very shy of female company. He was a member of the Jedforest Club and served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He died unmarried and was buried at Ashkirk kirkyard. The estate was left to his cousin James Cunningham. Elizabeth (d.1797) recorded as ‘a widow died in Silverstreet’. It is possible she is the Elizabeth who married James Storie in Bedrule in 1755 (perhaps the same James who died earlier in the year in Hawick). Francis (17th/18th C.) smith who lived at the Flex. Along with William, also smith at the Flex, he witnessed a baptism in 1700 for William Lilloco, herd at the Flex. He is recorded in 1702 as the son of Thomas, smith at the Flex, who fixed the clock in 1701–2. In that year the Council agreed that he should be hired to keep the clock (in St. Mary’s) in good working order, with an annual payment of £6 Scots. Also in 1702 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Martin, tenant at the Flex and another for Archibald Glendinning in Hawick Shiel. In 1704 he and William (both smiths at the Flex) witnessed a baptism for George Scott, smith in Hawick and in 1705 the pair witnessed a baptism for Walter Martin in the Flex. In 1706 he was charged with the responsibility of keeping the clock of St. Mary’s Kirk in working order, agreeing to be paid 6 shillings yearly to keep it working. In 1708 he witnessed baptisms for Thomas Boyd, gardener at the Flex (along with Francis Paterson, who was also in the Flex) and for Thomas Penman in Whitchesters. In 1710 his son William, smith at Denholm, complained that the Burgh owed £10 in arrears for his father’s salary, suggesting he was deceased by then. Francis (1798–1835) son of Joseph and Isabel Tudhope. He was brother of ship-maker John and Nancy, who married shoemaker Richard Wilson. He was a stocking-maker in Hawick and later joined the 76th Regiment of Infantry. He died in Dominica, West Indies. He may also have used the name ‘Hardy’. Francis ‘Frank’ (1820–1900) born in Lynnwood, son of John and Elizabeth Mortlock. He is said to have gone off to the gold rush and returned with sufficient wealth to set up his sons in business. In 1851 he was a wool spinner at 9 Teviot Crescent and in 1861 was living on Havelock Street. In 1878 he served as Acting Father to his son James. He married Agnes Aitkin (from an old Hawick family) in Wilton Parish in 1842. Their children included: John, took over the business of grocer and merchant George T. Pringle; Elizabeth; Christina Scott; Louisa; Jane; and James Aitkin (b.1859), who was Cornet. He died at 5 Loan. Francis (b.1894) son of James Aitkin and Margaret Parker. He served in the Lothians & Border Horse. He was Cornet in 1922. He had a grocer’s business on Buccleuch Street and lived at Langbaulk farm. He was Jubilee Cornet in 1972. George (16th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of 1540 as the King’s shepherd in the lands of Brugh. He was paid £3 6s 8d for 5 bolls of grain. He was surely related to William and Richard who were recorded in neighbouring lands that were all part of Ringwoodfield. George (16th/17th C.) tenant in Winnimfield. In 1607 he was accused of leading a group of men who cut down trees on the lands of Birkwood belonging to Robert Elliot of Redheugh. The claim was that in 1605 they had cut down 100 birches, 300 alders, 300 hazels and 400 willows. However, he was acquitted, the as announced by ‘the Assises, be the mouth of Johnne Gledstanes of Wintingtonlaw’ (who could hardly have been impartial!). George (17th C.) schoolmaster at Hobkirk, recorded in a discharge of 1657 for his fee for ‘service at the kirk of Hopkirk’. He must have served as Clerk for the Parish, since he wrote up discharges for the vicarage teinds. He also served as Reader at the Kirk. He served until at least 1660. George (17th C.) resident of Bedrul Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton and was related to smith James. George (17th/18th C.) recorded being paid out of the Wilton poor box in 1705. George (18th C.) hand-loom weaver who lived at Kilknowe in Hobkirk Parish. As well as blankets, he also wove a coarse tweed cloth, which was much used locally. His grandson George lived at Weens West Lodge. George (18th/19th C.) recorded as ‘Geo Wat [or War] Henderson’ on his inscribed curling stone, which is in the Museum. It is unclear who this gentleman was, but he was presumably local. George (b.c.1803) mason who lived in the Round Close. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Kirk in 1840 and 1841. His wife was Helen and their children included George, William and John. George (18th/19th C.) farmer at Bush in Ewesdale in at least the period 1794–97 according to the Horse Tax Rolls. He was recorded as ‘George Henderson Esq’. He also paid the dog and clock taxes in 1797. Helen (17th C.) listed as cottar at ‘Bridiholl’ (probably Briery-hill) in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (16th/17th C.) granted a cottage-land in Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. James (16th/17th C.) recorded being in ‘Catheuch’ in 1611. Robert Scott, Bailie of Hawick acted as cautioner for him in court in Jedburgh. He was then acquitted of the charges. James ‘Jamie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded being in ‘Noltlawis’ in 1611 when his son Hob was cited for non-appearance at court in Jedburgh. The lands were probably Nolt-lair in Liddesdale. James (17th C.) married Margaret Rutherford in Ashkirk Parish in 1634. James (17th C.) resident of ‘Langsyntowne’. In 1676 he and his son James in Borthwickshiel were found guilty of breaking his son out of the prison, where he was being held for striking Margaret, wife of Scott of Coldhouse. They were also found guilty of ‘committing of ane ryott upon above twenty persons, whereof the bailey and clarke wer a part’. It is unclear where ‘Langsyntowne’ might have been. James (17th C.) resident of Borthwickshiel recorded in 1676 when he was found guilty of striking Margaret, wife of Scott of Coldhouse. He was imprisoned in the Tolbooth and then his father (resident in ‘Langsyntowne’) tried to break him out of jail; they were charged with fighting with more than 20 people in this incident. James (17th C.) resident at Wester Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. He could be the James who witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk for James Gray in 1689. James (17th C.) resident of Orchard on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (1655/6–1728) smith at Bedrule Newton, who is buried in Bedrule churchyard. His wife may have been Elizabeth Dodds (who died in 1705, aged 27), wife of James, ‘smith and porshoner in Lantone’, who is buried nearby. He is listed under the Laird of Newton’s farms in Bedrule Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He may be closely related to George, who appeared on the same list. He may have earlier married Margaret Bruntield, who is listed as ‘spouse to James Henderson, smith in Newtoune’ when her will is recorded in 1684. James (17th/18th C.) tenant in Weensland. He married Marie Graham and their son John was baptised in 1709, with witnesses merchant Patrick Angus and smith John Scott. James (17th/18th C.) tenant in ‘Smithsfield’ in Kirkton Parish in the early 1700s. His children included Thomas (b.1708) and Margaret (b.1710). Perhaps the same James was at Effledge in 1716 when his son William was born. Magdelen (b.1720) may also have been his daughter. He may have been related to Robert, whose children were baptised in Kirkton Parish in the 1720s and 30s. James (17th/18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He married Elizabeth Lumsden. Their son John was baptised in 1720, with witnesses merchant Robert Robson and smith Thomas Huntly. James (18th C.) carter who witnessed a baptism for Robert Young and Margaret Henderson (probably his sister) in 1757. He is probably the James who witnessed a baptism for merchant John Hardie in 1763. He also witnessed a baptism in 1766 for William Richardson and Isobel Henderson (probably his sister).
Henderson

He may be the James, son of Robert, baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1733, and part of the family of farmers and carvers who later lived at 53 High Street. He may be the James whose children, baptised in Kirkton Parish, included: Robert (b.1757); Thomas (b.1758); James (b.1760); Margaret (b.1762); Janet (b.1764); George (b.1765); and Rebecca (b.1765). Rev. James (1761–1840) born in Jedburgh, he trained as a tailor, but changed course and re-educated himself for the ministry in the Burgher secession church. He became minister of the East End (Burgher) Church in 1791, following several years without a minister, and at least 2 other men being called unsuccessfully. His own ‘call’ was signed by 214 of the congregation in that year, and he had also been called to Airdrie and Kirkintilloch. Known as an enthusiastic and effective preacher in his early days, after several years he suffered some kind of fever, which gave him relapses during which his physical and mental faculties failed him. It is said that in later years his longer sermons thereby suffered from a lack of clarity. However, his running commentary on the metrical psalms remained popular. He was said to have preached against people attending the Carterhaugh Baa in 1815. He was noted for establishing some of the earliest Sunday Schools around 1817 (although Hawick had 2 as early as 1786), and also a Thursday afternoon bible class, which attracted students from a wide area. His Sunday School was open to all denominations, and was the sole source of education for many local children. He was described as a popular preacher, held in awe by his congregation. He was also one of the first members of Hawick Curling Club. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He travelled every Tuesday and Friday to Kelso, returning on Wednesdays and Saturdays. In 1837 he was still listed travelling to Kelso every Tuesday and Friday. In 1837 he was one of the Tory supporters who was said to have had his coat torn off his back at the election in Hawick. He was also a Hilliesland ‘Laird’ and was recorded as a farmer, living at about 53 High Street, on the 1841 census. He married Janet, 3rd surviving child of linen manufacturer Charles Scott (and he was thus an uncle of Sir James Murray). His business was located at ‘the Pend’, 53 High Street (probably the last pended house on the High Street itself), which in those days had no shop in front. His property is shown on Wood’s 1824 map. His children were: Margaret (b.1819), who married Hawick jailor Michael Anderson; Walter (1821–91), ‘Wattie Ernyetts’, farmer; an unnamed infant (d.1823); Charles (b.1825); Janet (b.1827); James (b.c.1830), who emigrated to Canada; John (b.c.1832), who was in the 72nd Highlanders and married Jane Johnstone; and George (b.1842), who became an estate agent in New York. He is presumably the same carrier who was Cornet in 1815, and whose expenses are discussed in detail in an article for the Transactions by Mr. Winning. James (18th/19th C.) listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory as a Slater and glazier on the High Street. Probably the same James is also listed as a plumber. He was probably also a partner in Chesser & Henderson, who were listed as slaters, plumbers and glaziers in 1852. He may be the same man as one of the contemporary Jameses. James (b.c.1804) greengrocer in Hawick, born in Kirkton Parish. In 1841 he was living on the Round Close, with occupation given as ‘Post’. By 1851 he was a green-grocer on the Cross Wynd. His wife was Mary, from Bedrule. Their children included George, Peter, Margaret, James and Euphemia.

James (b.1815/6) farmer at Netherraw in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was recorded there in 1861, farming 295 acres and employing 6 people. He could be the farmer at Minto Kaims who became a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland in 1863. He married Elizabeth Minto and their children included Janet D. and Robert. James (b.1834/5) baker in Hawick, son of green-grocer James. In 1861 he was at 9 Cross Wynd. His wife was Ann and their children included Mary and Margaret. He is probably the James who was one of the main people to start the Hawick Dramatic Club. James (1840–1901) hosiery manufacturer. He was in partnership with A.P. Innes from 1868, and built Victoria Mills on Victoria Road in 1875. The firms split in 1885, when James Henderson & Co. took over the front part of Victoria Mills and focussed on the retail market. He was one of the earliest members of the Golf Club Committee in 1878 and later Club Captain. He lived at Woodside and was father of Sir Thomas. He was heavily involved in Hawick Free Kirk, presiding over the jubilee celebrations in 1893 and giving gas lamps for outside the front door in 1900, as well as being an elder and Sunday School teacher. He is probably the James who married Elizabeth Jane Cruickshank in Edinburgh in 1869. The James Henderson Memorial Building was opened at the Hawick Cottage Hospital in 1933, paid for with funds from his son Sir Thomas and named in his memory. Bailie James Aitkin (1859–1916) son of Francis and Agnes Aitkin. He was a Councillor and Bailie in Hawick. He was Cornet in 1878 when he was listed as being a grocer. His own father Francis served as his Acting Father. He did duty as Left-Hand Man both in 1880 and 1881. He was Acting Father in 1899 (for his nephew, the year of the first film clips of the Common Riding) and also in 1908. In 1892 he married Margaret, daughter of Roger Parker, gamekeeper at Brunxholme. Their children included: Francis (b.1894), grocer; and James Aitken (b.1905), Provost. James (d.1924) son of farmer Walter. He farmed at Broadhaugh and Wilton Burn. He married Margaret Cleghorn, who died in 1904, aged 45, and later married Jane Turnbull Beatie, daughter of the farmer at Todshawhaugh. His children (by the second marriage) were Margaret Turnbull (who married a Moffat solicitor), Walter (who became a doctor) and John Beatie (who was a farmer). James (19th/20th C.) younger son of carrier James. He emigrated to be a farmer near Vancouver, Canada. His children were James and Margaret (who married Isaac Miller and had a family of 8). James Aitkin, J.P. (1905–93) son of Bailie James. He was a grocer at 5 Loan, and later farmer at Crumelknowes. He was on Hawick Town Council from 1949 for Slitrig Ward, then Provost for 1962–68, and was also an Honorary Sheriff Substitute. He was first selected as Provost in 1958, but declined, feeling that he did not have enough support. In 1968 he lost the Provostship after Davey Atkinson was selected by lot, and he resigned from the Council 3 days later. He was a keen Common Riding supporter, being President of the Mosstroopers’ Club and Acting Father in 1949. He orchestrated the visit to Hawick by the Queen and Duke of Edinburgh, and fought against the closure of the Waverley Line. Several improvements happened during his term as Provost, including construction of the Coble Cauld and salmon run, and council housing at Burnfoot, Silverbuthall and the Loan. He also worked to diversify the local economy by encouraging new companies to come to the Town, such as Bantel and Shumberdown.

He was known as a very private man. He married Jean Norman and they had 3 sons. He sold his farm in 1977, moving to London, then Hampshire, then Tarraby (near Carlisle), and finally Kirkintilloch. Henderson Road was named after him. Sir James son of Sir Thomas, he opened the new Henderson Technical College on Commercial Road in 1971. Jane (19th/20th C.) first organist at St. George’s Kirk when instrumental music was introduced there in 1910. Janet (17th C.) recorded in 1679 when she was cited by the Council for publicly accusing John Moore (servant of Walter Scott of Westport) of ‘stealing of ane pair of plaiding hose off some thorns, which she could not make out’. Janet (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when she was at Hassendeanbank. Jean (17th/18th C.) resident at Brox in Castleton Parish. In 1699 she was rebuked by the Kirk Session for cutting kale at the Roan garden on the Sabbath. Jenkin (16th C.) listed among Borderers by Monipennie in about the 1580s. He is recorded as ‘Jenkyne Henderson in Kartley’ in the section under Liddesdale, and listed along with Ringan Henderson (possibly from Caddroun Burn). It is unclear where ‘Kartley’ may have been. John (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained of his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholme. John (d.1564) convicted and hanged for sheep-stealing and related crimes. Also hung for the same crimes were Hob Scott 'callit of Colyfurd', John Scott 'the Clerk' and Mark Elliot 'callit of the Hill'. His own name is recorded as 'callit John the Falser', meaning a forger. It is unclear where precisely he came from. John (16th C.) recorded as a 'foular' in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was probably from Hawick, given that those he was listed beside were Hawick merchants. He was owed £8 'for wyld fouls'. John (16th C.) recorded as 'John Henderson of Hethersheils' in 1584 when he signed the bond of assurance between men of Liddesdale and the English Warden. It is unclear where he was from, but his name appears along with the Gedstains from around Hawick. John of the Hoghill (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1595 among men complained about by the Lord of Gilsland for raids into England. His name is listed after 'Auld Wat' of Harden (for 2 separate raids) and along with Elliots of Falmash and Burnhead, as well as Andrew Henderson and Armstrongs. His lands were likely to be Hoghill in upper Teviotdale. He may be one of the 2 Johns who signed a bond written by Sir John Forster to try to end family feuds on the Border in 1595/6. John (16th/17th C.) cordiner of Hawick, accused by the Lord Advocate in 1612, along with many others, of over-charging interest on loans. John 'Jock' (16th/17th C.) tenant in Whitchesters recorded in 1628 when he was on a list of men accused by the Earl of Buccleuch of chopping down his trees at Todshawhaugh or Trinitylands. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Helen Forest. Their children included: William (b.1646); Bessie (b.1650); and Malie (b.1656). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Bessie Goodfellow. Their children included: Helen (b.1636); Margaret (b.1638); Janet (b.1640); and Bessie (b.1643). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Elizabeth Brown. Their children included: William (b.1671); Margaret (b.1674); and James (b.1675). John (17th C.) living at Stouslie according to a baptismal record of 1682. He married Janet Aitkin and their children included William (b.1682). The witnesses were William Aitkin (perhaps father of his wife) and Charles Wood. John (17th C.) listed as tenant at Whitfield in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He paid tax on 2 hearths. John (17th/18th C.) servant to Thomas Pringle (although it is unclear who this was). His children, baptised in Kirkton Parish, included: John (b.1716); Magdalen (b.1720); and Janet (b.1723). John (18th C.) miller in Hawick. He married Mary Cowan. Their children included: Isobel (b.1725); Helen (b.1727); and Mary (b.1729). The 1725 baptism was witnessed by shoemaker George Oliver and cooper John Aitkin. John (18th C.) resident at 'Todrigg' in 1764 when his daughter Jean was baptised in Roberton Parish. Perhaps the same John was recorded at Todrig on the 1791–94 Horse Tax Rolls. He may be the John who married Jean Learmonth in Roberton in 1761. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Borthwickbrae in 1773 and 1775, at Mabonlaw in 1780, at Hoscote in 1781, 1785 and 1787 and at Outerside in 1788. His children (although it is possible there are 2 families here) included Janet (b.1773), twins Joan and Agnes (b.1775), William (b.1777), Nelly (b.1780), Helen (b.1781), John (b.1783), Janet (b.1785), Walter (b.1787) and Isabel (b.1788). He is probably either the John who married Bessie Glendinning in Roberton in 1767 or the Robert who married Helen Cowan in Roberton in 1768. John (18th C.) resident of Crumhaugh. He subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' in 1784. John (18th C.) carrier in Hawick around the 1760s. He married Betty Scott. He may have been the father of carrier James. He could be the John whose daughter's death is recorded in Hawick in 1787. John (b.c.1778) farmer recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls at Longbaulk. In 1841 he is at 'Longbalk' along with Margaret, probably his daughter. John (18th/19th C.) from Minto Parish, in 1791 he married Betty Stavert from Cavers Parish. Their children included: John (b.1801), baptised in Bowden; and Christian (b.1809), baptised in Lilliesleaf and Maxton. John (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Penchrise. He was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. John (18th/19th C.) listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. His occupation is not stated, but he owned 2 horses. He could be the carter whose child is recorded being buried in Hawick in 1829. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at 'Turlenbrae' in 1797, according to the Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 2 horses. The farm was in Wilton Parish, probably near Coldhouse. He could be the John who married Betty Laidlaw in Wilton in 1802. John (18th/19th C.) from the Berwick area. He married Betty Gray, who died in 1329.
Henderson

at Woll in 1798. He then remarried. His children included: John Gray, surgeon with the East India Company; and Robert, Laird of Abbotrule. His son John Gray purchased the farm of Chapelhope (near St. Mary’s loch) for him. John (18th/19th C.) labourer in Hawick. He lectured in the Town Hall after Fair, presenting himself as a Hawick tweed minister. He made a splash at the 1893 World’s Fair, claiming his factory was at ‘Weenswick, who appears to have been something of a con-man. He was paid £T 7 10s for 11 bolls and 1 firlot of oats.

John Gray (d.1814) from Brownmuir farm near Berwick, he was son of John. He joined the East India Company as a surgeon in 1778, and was based in Bengal. In 1813 he became a member of the Medical Board, which came with a large salary. He was buried overseas with military honours, and left a sum of more than £80,000 to his family back in Scotland. His father John died in about 1816, and most of the money went to his brother Robert (who purchased Abbotrule). John (1789–1863) born at Lynnwood, he became a factory manager. In 1841 he was living on Damside and working as a spinner. In 1861 he was a wool carder in Wooler. In 1809 he married Elizabeth (‘Betsy’) Mortlock (b.1789), who was from London. Their children included: William (b.1810); Francis (b.1820); Jane (b.1824); Thomas (b.1826); and John. He secondly married Jane Harkness. He died at Wooler and his wife died the following day. John Gray (1820–61) son of Robert, from whom he inherited Abbotrule. He had previously farmed Ruletownhead. In 1851 he was still living with his elderly father, and several siblings, at Abbotrule House, and listed as farmer of 500 acres, employing 12 men and 8 women. He was a keen hunter and kept his own pack of harriers. He was said to be the most sociable of the Henderson brothers William, Robert and David. He was also a member of the Jedforest Club. He had an accident one day near Cavers Lodge while driving with his carriage to Hawick, when the carriage went over the parapet, leading to the death of both horses, although he and his driver were thrown clear. About 1854 he sold the farm of Chapelhope (by St. Mary’s Loch) to John Scott, W.S. John (19th C.) licensed grocer of 3 Drumlanrig Square. He married Mary, daughter of Provost Robert Milligan. John Graham (b.c.1865) supposed tweed manufacturer in Hawick, who appears to have been something of a con-man. He claimed his factory was at ‘Weensforth’. He made a splash at the 1893 World’s Fair, presenting himself as a Hawick tweed manufacturer. He lectured in the Town Hall after returning from this trip. In 1899 he was convicted of fraud in Aberdeen, having advertised his tweeds in a Dundee newspaper, but simply collected money sent to him (at his Hawick address) and never delivered the goods. He was arrested in Glasgow and found to have carried out this fraudulent scheme throughout Britain, with Hawick’s Chief-Constable Macdonald speaking at the trial about all the complaints against him. He may have had premises in part of Weensland Mill, and a warehouse on Dovecote Street. He was the ‘J. Graham Henderson’, tweed manufacturer of Hawick, who was subject of 2 separate poems by notorious poet William McGonagall. Joseph (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident, who married Isabel Tudhope in 1794. Their children included: Betty (b.1794); Agnes (b.1796), who married shoemaker Richard Wilson; Francis (1798–1835), who died in the West Indies; Josina (b.1801); and John, who became ship-builder in Liverpool and then Stockport. The witnesses in 1794 were Hugh Grieve and John Tudhope. The witnesses in 1798 and 1801 were John and Walter Tudhope. He is probably the Joseph recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick; the record states that ‘Joseph Henderson & Co.’ owned 2 horses. Matthew (15th/16th C.) listed in 1510 among the associates of Robert Elliot of Redheugh who received respite from the Privy Council for their crimes. He is listed as ‘Matho Hendersone’ and ‘Hendersoum’. John is also listed, so presumably a brother or son. Matthew (16th C.) Hawick resident who had 2 particates of land confirmed to him on the south side of the public street in the 1537 Charter. This is probably the same land known as ‘Matthew Henderson’s Croft’, later later called Nichol’s Croft and now known as the Village. Matthew of Tunnochside (18th C.) owner of Wester Essenside, recorded in 1758 when the boundaries with his neighbour George Pott of Todrig were straightened. David (recorded there in 1761) was probably his son. Ninian ‘Ringan’ (16th C.) recorded as ‘Rinizan Henderson in Arnil-tonburne’ on Monipennie’s list of Borderers in the 1580s. He is listed under Liddesdale, and so his lands were either ‘Heldcaldenburne’ (probably the Caddrown Burn) or perhaps Arkleton in Ewesdale. Richard (16th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls for 1540 as shepherd to the King in the lands of Westcoterig, Southcoterig and ‘Bolburg’. These were surely part of the lands of Ringwoodfield. He was paid £7 10s for 11 bolls and 1 firlot of oats. He was probably closely related to William, who was the King's shepherd at 'Northous, Stobbetait, et Cokburn' and George, who was at Brugh. Robert 'Cheese-wame' (16th C.) one of a group of Armstrongs and others involved in a raid in which the farm of Howpasley was burned and 60 cattle stolen from it in 1535. His name is given as 'Robert Hendersoune alias Cheys-wame', presumably meaning 'cheese-belly'. Robert 'Hab' or 'Hob' (17th C.) listed in 1611 as son of Jamie in 'Noltlawis' when he was cited for non-appearance at court in Jedburgh. He was also listed in 1632 as possessor of lands in Liddesdale. These were 'Noltlares', Hightrees, Burnmouth, Dawsonburn and Prickinghaugh. Presumably the same 'Hab' is also listed as possessor of the lands of Todsclueuch, Fairside, Tailside and Cleuchside (probably all close to the modern Steeleroad-end). Robert (17th C.) resident of Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among 'ye poor'. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Shaws in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Robert (17th/18th C.) workman in Hawick. He married Jean Falside and their children included Robert (b.1701), Margaret (b.1703) and Marion (b.1706). The witnesses in 1701 were carrier William Attken and tailor Alexander Hislop and in 1706 were Robert Thomson from Newmill and Andrew Riddell from Goldielands. Robert (17th/18th C.) servant of Rev. Robert Cunningham. In 1714 he witnessed a baptism for John Ekron. Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded being in Hilliesland in 1721 when his son John was baptised in Kirkton Parish. Other children baptised in Kirkton Parish who were probably also his were: Christian (b.1729); Agnes (b.1731); Thomas (b.1731); James (b.1733); and Isobel (b.1735), who probably married manufacturer William Richardson. Based on the dates, it also seems likely that he was the James who married Janet Phaup in Kirkton Parish in 1720, and had children, baptised in Hawick Parish: Janet (b.1723); and Margaret (b.1725), who may have married blacksmith Robert Young. He was probably ancestor of the farmers who lived at 53 High Street. Robert (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Ormiston in 1727 and Denholm in 1730. His children, baptised in Cavers, include: John (b.1724); Bessie (b.1727); Robert (b.1730); Thomas (b.1733); and Helen (b.1739). Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He witnessed a baptism for James Black at Packhouses in 1774. Robert (18th C.) gardener at Minto in 1785 and 1786, when he was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. Perhaps the same Robert was listed as owner of a 'House and Yard' in Minto Parish in 1779, which in 1811 was owned by Lord Minto and valued at £1 16s 7d. Robert (b.1760/1) born in Galashiels, son of John and Betty Gray. He was brother of surgeon John Gray, who left a considerable fortune when he died in 1814. With this he purchased the Abbotrule estate in 1818, and also inherited the more distant farm of Chapelhope (near St. Mary's Loch), which had been purchased for his father. He was listed as a Commissioner of Selkirkshire in 1819. He was said to have been a shy man, and only thought of marriage when he inherited these farms, writing to Isabella, daughter of William Scott, farmer at Singlie, and marrying her soon afterwards. His spinster sister Jean lived with him for many years. He was also a brother-in-law of Rev. Scott, the Secession minister of Bonkle and also related to Rev. Adam Cunningham, minister of Crailing. He was listed among the local gentry in Pigot's 1837 directory, and along with his son John in Slater's 1852 directory. It is said that when his son James died aged 20, he arranged for his surviving sons (John, William, Robert, David and Charles) to be placed at Abbotrule farms at nominal rent, but with Henry Elliot running the farms, since they were more interested in hunting. He had 6 sons (all of whom died unmarried) and 2 daughters: Margaret Pott, who died unmarried; John Gray, who succeeded; William Scott (b.1821), a lawyer; Robert (b.1823); Betty Gray, who married William Thomas Ormiston of Glenburnhall; David, who succeeded his brother John; James, who died aged 20; and Charles, who farmed at Doorpool. He lived until at least 90, being still recorded in the 1851 census, when he was farmer of 150 acres, employing 10 men and 6 women. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Douglasfield (in Wilton Parish) in 1797, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. Robert (18th/19th C.) shoemaker in Lilliesleaf, as recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. Robert (b.c.1795) farmer at Barns in Kirkton Parish in 1841. His wife was Agnes and their children included Isobal, Catherine and Janet. Robert (b.1823) younger son of Robert of Abbotrule. He farmed at West Foderlee and was a member of the Jedforest Club. In 1851 he was living with his father and other siblings at Abbotrule House and listed as farmer of 200 acres, employing 4 men and 2 women. He died unmarried. Thomas (16th C.) servant of the Laird of Mangerton. There was a bond in 1548/9 to enter him as a prisoner with the Laird.
of Ferniehirst. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Ruecastle and their children included: Isobel (b.1646); Marion (b.1648); George (b.1651); and Bessie (b.1657). The witnesses in 1651 were John and James Nichol. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Adderstonelee on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Birkhill in Hobkirk Parish. He was listed among the ‘deficient’ on the Hearth (17th C.) resident at Birkhill in Hobkirk Parish. He was listed among the ‘deficient’ on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Clarilaw in Haseendale Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. In 1692 he was renting half the Duchess of Buccleuch’s lands of Clarilaw (with James Dryden holding the other half). He is probably the Thomas who (along with James Dryden) witnessed a baptism in Roberton Parish in 1682 for James Douglas and Janet Henderson (probably related to him). He also witnessed Roberton Parish baptisms for Andrew Rodger in 1683, for George Hill and Walter Clerk in 1687 and for John Turnbull and William Scott in Clarilaw in 1688. He could be the Thomas who married Margaret Turnbull and whose children included: Helen (b.1680); Margaret (b.1685); and Thomas (b.1688). The witnesses in 1688 were James Douglas and John Armstrong. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Briery Yards according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the Thomas who married Isobel Sanderson in 1687 in Roberton Parish. He could be the Thomas whose son Robert was baptised in Hawick in 1692. Thomas (17th/18th C.) smith at the Flex. In 1701 he made a contract with the Hawick Council to fix the kirk clock, which had ‘stood dumb and mute for about twelve yeirs tyme’, this job taking about a year to complete. In 1706 another smith, Francis was charged with keeping the clock in working order; this may well have been his son. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, he was at Clarilaw in 1724, 1727 and 1729. He could be related to the earlier Thomas at Clarilaw. He married Jean Synton in 1713. Their children included: Elspeth (b.1719); John (b.1722); Jean (b.1724); Margaret (b.1727); and Margaret (again, b.1729). His wife’s name is transcribed ‘Sintoun’, ‘Syston’, ‘Wintoun’ and ‘Wintown’. The witnesses in 1724 were John and Walter Scott and in 1729 were John Scott and John Dryden. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Ashkirk Mill, recorded as owner of 2 horses on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (b.1782/3) saddler on the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was living with his sister Janet at about 10 High Street in 1841. In 1851 he was retired on the Cross Wynd, living with his sister, together with niece Janet Turnbull and nephew William Douglas. Thomas P. (18th/19th C.) evangelist from the Baptist Union. He visited Hawick in 1845 and 1846, during which 3 people were baptised. Soon after this there was a meeting to discuss the formation of proper church in Hawick. Thomas W. ‘Waugh’ (b.1817/8) son of Robert and Janet Broomfield. He was listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory as a baker in Lilliesleaf, and referred to as ‘Waugh Henderson’. He probably lived on the south side of Main Street. His wife Mary was from Crailing. Their children included Robert, Jessie and John. Sir Thomas, J.P. (1874–1951) of Langlands. Son of James and Elizabeth Jane Cruickshank. He was Member of Parliament for Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire for 1922/23, and a partner in the company that later became Braemar. He was Chairman of Hawick’s War Bonds fund-raising committee during WWI. He was also on Hawick Town Council and was Honorary Sheriff-Substitute for Roxburghshire. He was donor of the original Henderson Technical College (opened in 1928) as well as the Henderson Memorial X-Ray Department at the Cottage Hospital (named in honour of his father). He also funded an extension to the Library in 1939. He also served as President of the South of Scotland Chamber of Commerce. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1933, and was also President of the Coalition Liberal Association. Along with Mrs. George Scott of Langlee, he gifted a glass screen to St. George’s Kirk, and he later gifted collection plates and then the new Manse at Broomicknowe. His workers sometimes referred to him as ‘the Wheenge’. In 1900 he married Helen Scott Thyne; they had 2 sons and 1 daughter. Thomas ‘Tom’ (1941/2–2002) from Selkirk, he was a Director of Turnbull the Dyers in Hawick, retiring in 1998. He became a Selkirk Town Councillor in 1973 and was Provost there from 1979 to 1997. He was a local rugby and cricket enthusiast, and supported charities with fund-raising walks. He died while walking the Mich Moor. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Forrest and their children included: John (b.1677); William (b.1680); and Walter (b.1683). Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Craw and their children included Bessie (b.1682), Janet (b.1685) and James (b.1688). The witnesses to the 1682 baptism were Robert and John Scott (who appear to have been carriers) and for the 1682 baptism were Robert Cunningham and John Hardie, listed as ‘students’. He could be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for tailor John Wilson in 1678. Walter (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Ormiston in 1708 when his son Adam was baptised in Cavers Parish. Other children included: James (b.1706); Bessie (b.1711); and Marion (b.1715). Walter (17th/18th C.) ‘cas-sayer’, i.e. a road-layer, being the only one in Hawick in his day. He was listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He was probably the Walter recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘payed but not listed in Hauick Toun’, from the west side. He became a Burgess in 1695, paying his fee by ‘casasing the melkie gutter stone cas’. He could be the Walter married to Janet Craw or the Walter married to Agnes Forest. Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Milsingtonshiel in 1726 when his son John was baptised. Walter (18th/19th C.) paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785–91 (although in 1790 his name was given as ‘William’). He was also recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick, where he had 2 work horses. He could be the father of James, and farmer at 53 High Street. He could be the merchant Walter who witnessed a baptism for Archibald Paterson in 1775. Walter ‘Wattie Ernyettes’ (1820–91) eldest son of carrier and farmer James. He also lived at 53 High Street. He is probably the farmer listed on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Margaret Scoon, who died in 1898, aged 77. Their children were: Elizabeth, who married butcher William Nisbet; James, farmer at Broadhaugh and Wilton Burn; Janet, who married tweed merchant Mark Currie, and gifted the Chinese Shelter to the Town; Agnes, who married bank manager William Park; and Margaret. Waugh see Thomas W. William (16th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls for 1540 as shepherd to the King in the lands of ‘Norhous, Stobbe-Tait, et Cokburn’. These were surely part of the lands of Ringwoodfield. He was paid £10 for 50 bolls of oats. He was probably closely related to Richard, who was the King’s shepherd at Westcoterig, Southcoterig and ‘Bolburg’ and George who was at Brugh. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) tenant of Simon Elliot in Dod Burn, listed in a bond of security signed in Hawick in 1569. His name is given as ‘Will Hendirsoun’. It is not inconceivable that he was an ancestor of the ‘Rattlin Roarin Willie’. He could be the same man as the King’s shepherd recorded in 1540. William ‘Will’ (16th/17th C.) listed among Liddesdale men who did not appear at court in Jedburgh in 1611. He was listed as ‘callit Harrilsuord’, but it is unclear where he was from or what his nickname meant. William (d.1627) ‘parichoner’ in Priesthaugh, reputedly a noted local ballad-maker and brawler. He supposedly slew Robert Rule in a duel near Allanhaugh, as immortalised in the ballad ‘Rattlin Roarin Willie’. In fact he killed William Elliot, who was nicknamed ‘Sweet Milk’, and may have come from the Rule valley. The Presbytery records describe how he was called to appear on several Sundays and eventually excommunicated for the murder. It is said that he hid after the murder, but reappeared at Jedburgh Rood Fair and was seized in Oxnam Water by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs and young Elliot of Falnash, being subsequently executed. William (17th C.) tenant in Flex, recorded in 1674 when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Stoddart, also in Flex. He could be the same as (or the father of) the William in Flex recorded 3 decades later. William (17th C.) tenant in Millburnholm in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. William (17th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He is listed among the ‘deficients’ of the Parish. William (17th C.) resident at Hawick Shiel in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. He may be the William whose daughter Anna married Robert Thomson in 1700. His is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for James Davidson (in Hawick Shiel) in 1698. William (17th/18th C.) smith at the Flex. He was ‘younger in Flex’ in 1708, suggesting that his father was also William. Along with Francis, also smith at the Flex (and perhaps his brother), he witnessed a baptism in 1700 for William Lillico, herd at the Flex. He also witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1700 for Walter Paterson of Burnflat, in 1702 for Robert Scott in Goldielands, for smith George Scott, for merchant Thomas Hotson, for Robert Stevenson in Hawick Shiel and for others, in 1704 for Robert Cairns (tailor in Whitlaw), for Robert Scott, tenant in the Flex and for George Scott (along with Francis), smith in Hawick, in 1705 (along with Francis Paterson) for Walter Martin, tenant in the Flex, for Robert Nickson in Dodburn and in 1706 for Walter Paterson in Burnflat and for Adam Scott in Kirkton in 1709. He is probably the William, ‘younger’ at the Flex who witnessed a baptism for the Henderson Gairden
Henderson

William Lillico, herd at the flex, in 1709. He married Janet Turnbull and their children included: William (b.1707); Margaret (b.1708); and Francis (b.1709). The witnesses in 1708 were Francis Paterson and Robert Stoddart in the Flex. In 1709 were John Gledstains of Whitlaw and Archibald Paterson ‘Casier’. Perhaps the same William is recorded as a smith in Denholm in 1710 when he complained to the Sheriff of Teviotdale that the Burgh of Hawick owed him £10 for payment ofsalary owed to his father Francis for keeping the clock of St. Mary’s in working order; he was made a Burgess of Hawick in lieu of payment. William (17th/18th C.) recorded in Acreknowe when he had children baptised in Kirkton Parish. He appears to be distinct from William, smith at the Flex. His children included Andrew (b.1708), Walter (b.1710), Janet (b.1715) and Isobel (b.1722). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Stoulslie in 1706 when his son John was baptised. He could be the same man as the resident of Clarilaw. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Clarilaw. His servant George Easton had a child baptised in Wilton Parish in 1709. His daughter Isabel was baptised in Wilton Parish in 1704. He is probably the William who in 1704 witnessed baptisms for Archibald Riddell in Borthaugh and for Robert Elliot in Galalaw. He could be the William recorded as an elder of Wilton Parish in 1711. William (b.1780/1) born in Cavers Parish, he was farm overseer at Netherhall. He is recorded there in 1841 and in 1851 was listed as Overseer of Parks. His wife was Betty (from South dean) and their children included Adam, William, Elizabeth and Alexander. William (b.c.1805) carter at Wilton Pathhead. He was living there in 1841, along with his wife Margaret and children Agnes, Jane, William, Euphemia and John. He could be the same William as the coach-driver who was an early member of Allars Kirk. William (19th C.) coach-driver who was an early member of Allars Kirk. William Scott, W.S. (1821–59) 2nd son of Robert of Abbotsrule. He trained as a lawyer, being apprenticed to William Charles Balderston and John Scott. He became Writer to the Signet in 1845. He died unmarried. William (19th/20th C.) publisher of the ‘Hawick Free Press’ (formerly spelled ‘Hendersone’, ‘Hendersonne’, ‘Hendersoun’, ‘Hendersoune’, ‘Hendirsoun’, etc., as well as sometimes ‘Henrison’ and similar).

the Henderson Gairden (thy-hen-dur-sin-gar-din) n. public flower beds and seating area next to the bowling greens on Buccleuch Street. It was converted from the former Quoiting Club pitches.

the Henderson Memorial (thy-hen-dur-sin-me-mo-ree-ul) n. the James Henderson Memorial X-ray building at the Cottage Hospital, which was opened in 1933 through the generosity of Sir Thomas and Lady Henderson, and named after Sir Thomas’ father. It was designed by local architects Alison & Hobkirk.

Henderson Road (hen-dur-sin-rod) n. part of Burnfoot, a short street connecting Galalaw Road with Appletreehall Road, built in 1960 and named after Provost James Henderson.

the Hendersons (thy-hen-dur-sinz) n. family that ran a dairy in the 19th century, living in the Back Row, farming fields up the Loan and having grazing rights at Wilton Lodge.

Henderson’s (hen-dur-sinz) n. James Henderson & Co. Ltd., hosiery manufacturers of the late 19th and early 20th centuries, occupying the front part of Victoria Mills and focussing on the retail side of the market. Their line of underwear used the trade name ‘Hendawick’. The firm split from Innes, Henderson & Co. in 1885, and reamalgamated again in 1920. J.P. Alison designe a yarn store for the company in 1902. Balance sheets from the company exist from 1896 and the Museum has minutes and other papers from 1920–46. This was also the name of a grocer’s shop in the Sandbed in the mid-20th century and later a travel agent’s at 18 High Street.

Henderson’s Knowe (hen-dur-sinz-now) n. former name for the farm of Bowanhill at Teviot head, also known simply as ‘the Knowe’. It is located on the right-hand side of the A7 just before the turn-off for Teviothead Church. The older farm of Bowanhill was on the hill on the left-hand side of the A7. Thomas Hume farmed there in the 1820s. Walter Scott was farmer there in 1841.

Henderson’s Pend (hen-dur-sinz-pend) n. also known as Henderson’s Close, a passageway off the High Street that was removed around 1860, where??.

the Henderson Tech (thy-hen-dur-sin-tek) n. Henderson Technical College, built in 1926 on Buccleuch Road through the beneficence of Sir Thomas Henderson, and used for further education in technology, science and art. It was formally opened in 1928, when the High School, rebuilt after the devastating fire 3 years earlier, was Hendersyde

Hendersyde (hen-dur-sid) n. area in Ednam Parish, just to the north-east of Kelso, containing the village of Hendersyde Park, the farm of the same name and a large estate, once the seat of the Waldie family. The mansion was built in 1803 (the origin of the name may be ‘Henry’s slope’ and is not recorded until the early 18th century).

Henrison

Henrison (hen-ree-sin) n. Archibald (15th C.) recorded among many men from Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aiire in 1494/5. He also reopened. Taken over as part of the High School, a new building was opened in 1971 on Commercial Road, used for vocational and other educational courses. In 1984 it became part of the Borders Colleges of Further Education and was known as the Henderson Building. This closed in 2009 and was replaced with a smaller building on Buccleuch Road (below the old Cottage Hospital). The 1971 building was demolished in 2010 to make way for a supermarket. The original Hender-son building is part of the High School, used for Art and Business Studies.

Hendry (hen-dree) n. Adam (17th C.) recorded as ‘Hendrie’, tenant at Wauchope, when he witnessed a sasine for lands at Harwood in 1664. His brothers Adam and Thomas were also witnesses. It is possible that this is a mistranscription for another name, e.g. Kedzie. James (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was living at Harden Anna in 1720 and 1723. He is probably the James who married Margaret Scott in Robertson in 1718. His children included: John (b.1720); James (b.1721); and William (b.1723). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Todrig in 1710 and 1714. His children, baptised in Robertson Parish, included Bessie (b.1710) and Margaret (b.1714). Probably the same John married Agnes Riddell in Wilton in 1708 and their children baptised there included Anna (b.1709), Helen (b.1716) and John (b.1719). With Agnes Riddell he also had a daughter Janet (b.1712), baptised in Selkirk. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was gardener at Whitfield in 1709 and was still living there in 1721. His wife was a woman and their children included Anna (b.1709) and James (b.1721). The 1721 witnesses were Thomas ‘hontlie’ and Robert ‘shortridg’. Robert (18th C.) house servant at Midshields in 1794, when he was working for Archibald Douglas. William (1708/9–79) cooper in Denholm. His wife was a Lamb, who died in 1797, aged 73. Their children included Agnes (who died aged 22), as well as Nelly, John, who died in infancy. William (18th/19th C.) grocer and earthenware dealer on the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory (also written ‘Hendery’).

Henraugh (hen-hawg) n. former farmstead near Branxholme Park. In 1672 it was leased along with Branxholme Mains and Park to Walter Scott of Harwood. In 1673 it was referred to as ‘with the Steill and Henraugh’ when Branxholme Muir and Park were leased along with it.

hen-hertit (hen-her-tee, -ti) adj., arch. chicken-hearted, cowardly – ‘He’d little need be hen-hertit that hed ti beer the ramstam onfAA ...’ [ECS].

Henlawshiell (hen-law-shell) n. former cottage between Nether Tofts and the A6088, on the former farm of Upper Tofts. John Whillans lived there in at least 1769–74. This was where John Leyden spent his youth. The Leyden family moved there in about 1776, Leyden’s father being a shepherd and then overseer. It can be seen in a sketch of 1817 by T.J. Scott (from the Scots Magazine). The house was of very simple construction, and no sign of it survives. A wayside granite obelisk marks its site near Nether Tofts, on the side road off the A6088 from Hawthornside Heights. This marker was placed there in 1895. A polished stone axe found there is in the Museum – ‘At night-time by the hamely hearth O’ theekit Henlawshiell He’d hear sic tales o’ Border ploys That garr’d his een to reel’ [WL].

Henrison (hen-ree-sin) n. Archibald (15th C.) recorded among many men from Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aiire in 1494/5. He is probably related to Gilbert, David and William, who are also listed along with him. David (15th C.) one of the men who did not attend the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1494/5. The Lord of Liddesdale and Captain of Hermitage were fined. Quentin, Archibald, Gilbert and William were also listed. Perhaps the same David was killed at Maxton Kirk, with John Fawlaw in Liddesdale having remission for his murder. Gilbert (15th C.) listed along with Archibald, David and William, among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. Henry (16th C.) recorded as tenant in Burnmouth in Liddesdale in 1541, along with James. James (16th C.) listed among the tenants of Newton in Bedrule in 1531. He may be related to some of Archibald, Gilbert, David and William, who are recorded in 1494/5. James (16th C.) listed in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale, along with Henry, as tenant of Burnmouth. Henry was presumably his brother or son. John (15th C.) listed as ‘John Henryson’ among the Roxburghshire men who had remission in 1488/9 from James IV for their support of the previous King, especially on the battlefield at Stirling. Most of the men appear to have been closely associated with Douglas of Cavers. Perhaps the same John in Lintalee is recorded in 1493 when Patrick Hall in Newbigging has remission for his murder; he may have been related to Thomas ‘dwelling in Jedforest’ who is also mentioned in 1493. John (16th C.) tenant of Saughtree listed, after Robert, in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. Ninian (16th C.) one of the tenants of the lands of ‘Falset’ listed in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. Robert and 2 Williams were also listed. Since the same place was tenanted by Hab Henderson in 1632, it may be that ‘Henrison’ was really ‘Henderson’. Quentin (15th C.) listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. His name appears as ‘quintini henrison’. Richard (15th C.) witness to the 1469 and 1479 sasines for Wolfelee. It seems likely that he was local to Rulewater and probably related to the later James. Robert (16th C.) recorded as tenant of Saughtree on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. John is also listed, and so they were probably related. Perhaps the same Robert, along with William, Ninian and another William, was tenant of the nearby lands of ‘Falset’. Thomas (d.bef. 1493) recorded as ‘dwelling in Jedforest’ according to the 1493 Justice-aire. He had sheep stolen from him by Patrick Hall in Newbigging and Hall also had remission for his murder. He was probably related to John in Lintalee who was also killed by Hall. Thomas (16th C.) tenant of Howletcrook (somewhere near Saughtree), according to the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale. William (15th C.) listed along with Archibald, Gilbert and David, among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. William (16th C.) name of 2 men who were tenants of the lands of ‘Falset’ as recorded in 1541, along with Robert and Ninian. It is possible this is the same as William Henderson, who was the King’s shepherd in Northhouse and neighbouring lands in 1540. William (16th C.) listed among those implicated in the ambush of Stothhouse and Gledstains at Whithaugh in 1580. His name is given as ‘William Henrysoun, callit Strymare’, although the meaning of the nickname is unclear. He must have been a supporter of Lancie Armstrong of Whithaugh (formerly ‘Henrisone’ and ‘Henrisoun’; it may have formerly been the same as Henderson).

Henry (hen-reec) n. parson (‘persona’) recorded as witness to a land transaction confirmed by Pope Lucius III in 1183, where Henry Lovee gave lands at Branxholme to the canons of St. Andrews. 2 chaplains, Algar and William, were also witnesses. These are the 3 first known clergymen associated with Hawick, although whether any of them may have lived locally is unknown.

Henry (hen-reec) n. name of 8 Kings of England. Henry I (c.1068–1135) 4th son of William I, the Conqueror, he was the first English King after the Norman Conquest. He married Edith, daughter of Malcolm II of Scotland. Henry II (1133–89) first English Plantagenet King, he was nephew of David I, who knighted him at Carlisle in 1149. He occupied Southern Scotland following a decisive victory at Alnwick. In 1157 he forced William ‘the Lion’ to yield the title of Earl of Northumbria. Henry III (1207–72) son of John ‘Lackland’, he reigned from 1216. Although he was considered a failure personally, England flourished under his reign. In 1237 he signed the Treaty of York along with Alexander II, this possibly happening at Cavers. It was also signed by Hugh de Baliol (among others), who may have been Laird of Cavers at the time. His sister Joanna married Alexander II of Scotland and his daughter Margaret married Alexander III. Henry IV (1367–1413) King of England from 1399, he was son of John of Gaunt and grandson of Edward III. In 1400 his army entered Scotland and declarations of his feudal superiority were read at market crosses of Kelso, Dryburgh and Jedburgh. He spent much of his reign suppressing rebellions, such as that led by Henry ‘Hotspur’ in 1403 (effectively begun at Cocklaw near Hawick). In 1405 he claimed the townm castle and territory of Jedburgh as his personal property. He suffered from a serious skin condition (possibly leprosy) as well as acute attacks of some unspecified form. Henry VIII (1491–1547) King of England from 1509 until his death. He was son of Henry VII and 2nd monarch of the Tudor dynasty. As a young Duke of York he was made English Lord Warden General about 1495. His reign included the time of Flodden, and it was his troops that razed Hawick and surrounding towns during the Rough Wooing of 1544/45. Famous for his 6 wives, he died grossly overweight, suffering from gout and possibly from syphilis – ‘Tell King Henry! Reach him speedy, Men of Hawick, though poor and needy’ [RSC], ‘We saw King Henry’s raiders, We had until the dawn to turn the tide of battle, And show Hawick stands alone’ [GLG].
Henry

Henry (hen-ree) n. Isobel (17th/18th C.) wife of James Turnbull, candlemaker. She acted as a teacher for poor children in Hawick Parish, recorded in the Session records of 1721. And in 1724 she was allowed ‘eightsence a quarter to teach poor children’. James (17th C.) recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. He may be the James, married to Elizabeth Elliot, whose children included: an unnamed child (b.1671); and Bessie (b.1679). The witnesses in 1671 were John (perhaps his father) and James Martin. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Easton in 1705 and their children included Isobel (b.1706) and William (b.1708). James (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Common in Cavers Parish in 1793. James (b.1811/2) from St. Boswells, he was a grocer and carrier in Lilliesleaf. He was listed as a grocer in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1852 he also ran a cart to Edinburgh from Lilliesleaf. In 1861 he was listed on the north side of Main Street (but was not there in 1851). William (18th/19th C.) cooper in Denholm, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 2 horses. It is possible he was the William who married Anne, daughter of blacksmith George Stevenson, in 1771 (also written ‘Hendry’ and ‘Henrie’; see also Hendry).

Henry Mullens (hen-ree-mu-linz) n. Hawick resident of the 1900s. Whether this was his proper name or a nickname is unclear – ‘Wagga Wagga and Jocky Slung. Rumpie Laidlaw and Rob the Laird, Jocky Tencocks and Wullie the King, Henry Mullens and Hope the Gaird’ [HI] (also written ‘Mullins’).

Henry of Cranstoun (hen-ree-ov-kran-stin) n. character in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’, presumably inspired by the Cranstons of 16th century Denholm (and perhaps by Henry Cranstoun who married Margaret Wauchope around 1653). In the poem he finally succeeds in marrying Margaret Scott, although their families are sworn enemies. A stained glass representation of him was made for Silverbuthall House, and now hangs in Drumlanrig’s Tower – ‘He was stately, young and tall dreaded in battle and love in hall Henry of Cranstoun, and only he, Margaret of Branksomes choice should be’ [SWS].

the Henry Scott Riddell Cairn (th-hen-ree-skö’ri-du-l-kärn) n. monument at Dryden Fell on the farm of Commonside to commemorate the poet Henry Scott Riddell. It was erected in 1874 by John Marshall & Co. of Hawick, funded by the Archæological Society and Lodge 111. It is 50 ft (13 m) high and 50 ft round the base. It has been visited annually by Lodge 111 and Edinburgh Lodge 36 since 1908. It was repaired in 1926 and renovated in 1999. Its plaque reads ‘Sleep on, gentle bard, for though silent for ever, Thy harp in the hall of the chieftan is hung; No tune from the memory of mankind shall sever The tales that it told, and the strains that it sung’.

Henry’s hurl (hen-rez-hu-rul) n., arch. a great hurry – ‘A hurried job was often given ‘Henry’s hurl’, though who the Henry was I am not able to say’ [WL].

Henry Street (hen-reed-stree) n. street in Newcastleton, off North Hermitage Street, opposite Moss Road (presumably named after Henry Scott, 3rd Duke of Buccleuch).

Henry the Hadda Man (hen-ree-thu-hadu-mawn) n. nickname for Henry Milne (see hadda).

Henry the Wolfing (hen-rez-woo-lin-fin) n. nickname probably referring to Henry Lovei.

hen’s mairch ti the midden (henz-mær-chti-thu-mi-din) n., arch. a pompous procession – ‘The element of scorn in the local phraseology perhaps reaches its peak in the summing up of an over pompous procession as ‘The hen’s mairch to the midden’’ [WL].
Hensmeat

Hensmeat (henz-mee) n. nickname for one of the men called Robert Scott in mid-1800s Hawick.

Hen’s Nest (henz-nest) n. popular name for a house built in the Village by Adam Irvine of Breweryhouses and his wife Henny around 1824-28, the name deriving from a remark by Irvine that he was building a ‘nest for oor Henny’. The name was also used for the whole of the Village area for many decades. The house itself was officially named ‘Woodlands’, although the nickname was preferentially used. James, Eliza and Robert Hogg (children of the author of ‘Teribus’) were living there in 1851.

hen-taes (hen-táz) n., arch. a species of crow-foot, Ranunculus acris or Ranunculus repens (also known as ‘craw-taes’).

Hinton (hin’-in) n. James (17th/18th C.) resident in Milsingtonshiel in 1716 and 1717. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included Helen (b.1716), Adam (b.1717) and Jean (b.1722) (formerly written ‘Henton’).

Henwuddie (hen-wu-dee) n. Henwoodie, former herd’s cottage, situated behind Girnwood in the upper Borthwick valley. An area is referred to as ‘Henwoodie common’ on the 1718 survey of Buccleuch properties, while Henwoodie itself was listed as part of the farm of Bellendean. Robert Inglis was recorded there in 1728 and William Sinton in 1764-66. James Grieve was tenant there in the years around 1800, when it was united with East Buccleuch. William Grieve was tenant there in the 1820s and 30s. Francis Armstrong and family lived there in 1841. The ruin was still standing until about 1970 (it is marked ‘Henwoodie’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map; the same name is used for a place on Oxnam Water, which was the place of rendezvous for the Cranstouns).

Hepburn (hep-burn) n. Adam (15th C.) brother of the Master of Hailes. He was leasing the Crown lands of Altrieve, but yielded them up to James and John Alemoor in 1488. Adam (c.1492–1513) 2nd Earl of Bothwell, son of Patrick. He succeeded to his father’s titles and lands in 1508, these including the Lordship of Liddesdale and Castle of Hermitage, as well as all the associated churches and benefices, and some lands in Longnewton and Ancrum (Sandystanes). He held the patronage of Hawick Parish, and several of his relatives are recorded in connection with Hawick Kirk. He also held the Barony of Chamberlain Newton and the half Barony of Wilton. The ‘retour’ and sasine relating to him in 1508 have many local lairds as witnesses. In 1505 he obtained a ‘precept’ for lands, including ‘Elmer’ (Alemoor, confirmed in 1509), and in 1511 there was a confirming charter for lands, including some local areas, such as Wester Alemoor, as well as the Baronies of Wilton and Chamberlain Newton. He may have been appointed Warden General of the Scottish Marches about 1513. He also served as Lord High Admiral of Scotland. He married Agnes Stewart, illegitimate daughter of James, Earl of Buchan (she had also already had an illegitimate daughter with James IV, and went on to marry 3 more times) and was succeeded by his son Patrick. He died at Flodden along with at least 2 uncles and a brother-in-law. George (15th/16th C.) along with David Hoppringle, Walter Scott of Howpasley and William Middlemas, he held lands at Boonraw, which passed to Robert Scott of Stirches in 1504/5. Probably the same ‘Georgio Hepburne’ witnessed the charter of Boonraw granted to Robert Scott of Stirches by Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1505. George (16th C.) recorded as Parson of Hawick about 1560 or earlier. He is mentioned in 1562 when the General Assembly ‘ordained the Superintendent of the Lothians to summoun’ him ‘to answer such things as should be laid to his charge’; this probably indicates that he was not conforming to the changes brought through the Reformation. He was described as a kinsman of the patron (at that time James, the 4th Earl), and hence probably appointed to the ‘living’ of Hawick without actually ministering to the congregation. Although the precise dates are unknown, he must have been the last incumbent before the Reformation. Note that there was a minister of the same name, son of Patrick of Waughton, who was recorded at Prestonhaugh from 1562, dying in 1585; this parish was also known as ‘Hauch’ and hence easily confused with Hawick, e.g. ‘George Hepburn, parson of Hauch’ is recorded in an inventory for the Earl of Bothwell in 1563/4. James (16th C.) priest mentioned in the Hawick Charter of 1537, along with several others. He is designated ‘Mr.’, indicating that he already had his ‘M.A.’ degree. He was one of the owners who was obliged to pay annual rents to James Blair He was probably a distant relative of the Earl of Bothwell, and possibly one of the 2 kinsmen mentioned in a letter of Dacre’s in 1532 as going from Hawick to help protect Hermitage Castle. He may be the ‘Sir James Hepburne, chaplain’ who was witness to a discharge relating to Scott lands by Patrick Earl of Bothwell in 1528/9. James 4th Earl of Bothwell (c.1536-78) son of Patrick, he was usually referred to as simply ‘Bothwell’. The family had owned lands in Liddesdale since 1492, and he was served heir to his father in 1556. He was made Lieutenant of the Scottish Marches (unusually all 3 of them) in 1558 and took over Hermitage Castle. He was allied with Mary, Queen of Scots, and the Catholic cause. In 1559 he was charged (along with Ker of Cessford and Lethington) with keeping peace on the Border. In 1560 he was appointed as one of 7 commissioners to prepare for the Queen’s return from France. Accused of plotting against the Queen’s brother Lord James Stewart (the Earl Moray), he was imprisoned in 1562, escaped from Edinburgh Castle, hid at Hermitage and escaped to France, where he remained for 3 years. On his return (after Mary had split with her brother) he rose in favour and regained control of Liddesdale and the Wardenship of the Marches. In 1563/4 there was an inventory of reversion for his lands belonging to his relative Jane Hepburn, widow of George Home of Wedderburn. He was present in the palace on the night when Rizzio was murdered, apparently escaping through a window. He married Jane Gordon, daughter of the Earl of Huntly in 1566, but the marriage lasted barely a year. Also in 1566 he tried to suppress the Border clans, summoning the leaders of the Elliots to Hermitage, and holding them there; but Jock Elliot of the Park failed to appear, and so he rode out to find him. He was seriously wounded in attempting to capture Jock Elliot, apparently being hit in the head, body and hand with a short sword, and almost not getting access to Hermitage when his servants carried him back there. Mary Queen of Scots visited him 8 days later, while he lay wounded in Hermitage Castle on her famous ride from Jedburgh that year. He married her the following year, having participated in the murder of her previous husband, Lord Darnley. In 1567 he gave a charter of East Craik to John Cockburn of Ormiston, returning lands that had been forfeited to Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He soon became unpopular with other Scottish nobles and was forced to flee, eventually being imprisoned in Denmark, where he died insane. He was succeeded by his nephew Francis Stewart – ‘Fierce Bothwell I vanquished clean, Gar’d troopers an’ fitmen flee; By my faith I dumfoondert the Queen, An’ wha daur meddle wi’ me?’ [T]. John (16th C.) priest of Hawick, recorded in the 1537 Charter, along with James Hepburn and 4 others. From his designation ‘Mr.’ it is likely he already had his ‘M.A.’ and was a fully qualified priest, although his status in Hawick is unknown. He may also have been one of the 2 kinsmen of the Earl of Bothwell mentioned in connection with Hawick in 1532. Also in 1532 he was referred to in the Selkirk Protocol Books as the ‘pretended rector of Hawyk’; Sir Walter Scott (probably of Buccleuch) and Robert Scott complained that he had had them excommunicated after they failed to pay ‘certain teind sheaves’ in what they called a ‘false writ’. In the 1540 Exchequer Rolls he was recorded receiving payment for the teind-lambs and wool. It is also possible he was the John, brother of Sir Patrick of Waughton who was accused (along with his brothers Adam and Alexander and other Hepburns) of the murder of Gilbert Wauchope in 1534/5. And in 1526 he could be the ‘Mr John Hepburne’ who had a remission along with Sir Patrick of Waughton, John of West Fortoun, William of Crag, Patrick Whittlaw of that Ilk and others for assisting David Home of Wedderburn. He may be the ‘Johanne Hepburne’ who witnessed a sasine for Scott of Branxholme in 1500 and witnessed the sasine for Adam inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale in 1508. John (d.bef.1561) Archdeacon of Teviotdale from 1544, when the office was resigned by John Lauder. However, Lauder retained most of the benefices until 1551. It is possible this was the same man who had earlier been a priest in Hawick. Patrick (d.1483) 1st Lord of Hailes, son of Adam of Hailes. His mother was Janet, daughter of Sir William Borthwick. He had brothers William and George. His main lands were in Lanarkshire, but he also held lands in Berwickshire. He was a Conservator of the truces with England in 1449, 1451–7 and 1459. He was also the last Scottish Keeper of Berwick Castle. He was predeceased by his son Adam and succeeded by his grandson Patrick, who became the 1st Earl of Bothwell. His daughter Euphemia married Andrew McDougall of Makerstoun. Patrick (bef. 1466–1508) 1st Earl of Bothwell, son of Adam and Helen Home. He was also Lord Hailes, Sheriff of Berwick, fought against James III at Sauchieburn, and rose to great power under James IV. He gained considerable power on the death of James III and crowning of the young James III, including having control over Lothian and the Merse (jointly with Alexander Home). He was Master of the King’s Household, Custodian of Edinburgh Castle, Sheriff-Principal of Edinburgh and Haddington and Admiral of the Kingdom. He had a Crown Charter for the Lordships of Crichton and Bothwell in 1488, and the Bothwell title was raised into an Earldom later the same year. He was Warden of the Western Marches 1489–1503. He leased the Crown lands of the Eaststead of Hartwood in 1490. In 1491 he gained leases of the Crown lands of Deloraine, Warleshope and Eldinhope, following the death of Sir David Scott of Buccleuch. He also held a great deal of land, and essentially exchanged Bothwell Castle with Hermitage in 1492 (after the Douglases of Angus were forced to resign the Lordship of Liddesdale).

He does not seem to have resided for any length of time at Hermitage or had much personal involvement in the district. In 1493 he was surety for many Elliots and others who were involved in cases at the Itinerant Court of the Judiciary held in Liddesdale. In 1494/5 he was the Lord of Liddesdale who was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh for many men of Liddesdale, in particular Elliots, Armstrongs, Wigholms and Croziers. Also in 1494/5 David, son of James Scott in Hassendean, obtained remission for stealing livestock several times from his farms. In 1498 he was fined at a Justice-aire held in Jedburgh as pledge for men dwelling in Liddesdale.

There is a record in the Register of the Privy Seal of the pledges he received for good behaviour for a large number (56) of Borderers; the list is valuable for naming many early members of the Armstrong, Crozier, Elliot, Nixon and Turnbull families in particular. In 1493 and 1494 he was fined for not appearing at the Judiciary Court as Lord of Liddesdale, and in 1494/5 he was fined for not appearing as surety for 85 Borderers whose conduct he was responsible for. There were similar fines in the 1490s, which the King forgave him on account of his good service. In 1494 he gained the lands of Teindside and Harwood. He had the patronage of Hawick Church, presumably through its connection with the Collegiate Church of Bothwell at that time. In 1494/5 David, son of James Scott in Hassendean, had remission for stealing cows, oxen and horses from him. In 1500 he gave a precept of sasine to Walter Scott of Branholme for the lands of Grahamslaw; he was there described as Lord of Hailes and Crichton. He was involved with the treaty of marriage of James IV with Margaret Tudor of England in 1501. In 1501 he was granted ward of the lands of Branholme, Eckford and Lanton. In 1502 he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh to ‘give suit’ for his lands of Wilton; it is unclear how much earlier he gained the western half-Barony of Wilton. In 1504 he had a gift of the lands and barony of Kirkurd through non-entry following the death of David Scott of Buccleuch.

He is recorded as Baron of Chamberlain Newton in 1504/5 and of the half Barony of Wilton in 1506. In 1505/6 he argued that George, son of Robert Scott of Whames had no legal right to inherit his father’s lands of Muirhouse. He married Janet Douglas and later Margaret Gordon. His children were: Janet, who married George Seton; Adam, who succeeded as 2nd Earl; Patrick, who married Nichola Home; William of Rollanston; John, Bishop of Brechin; and Margaret, married Archibald Douglas, 6th Earl of Angus. Patrick of Boltoun (c.1494–1576) Sheriff of Haddingtonshire and Master of Hailes, he was the 2nd son of Patrick, the 1st Earl of Bothwell. He served as one of the tutors during his nephew Patrick’s minority. He was appointed to govern Liddesdale during this time, but was not generally present there; after complaints were made, and the tutors threatened with action, he travelled to Hermitage in 1518 and sent back a report to the Bishop on the wild state of the Borders at that time. He stated that he had pledges ‘for the Elwandes of Reidheugh and their band like as I had before and for the Elliots of the other gang of Gorremberry, except so many as win in Teviotdale’. He married Nichola, daughter of Alexander Lord Home, and was succeeded by his son Patrick of Fairmington. Patrick (1512–56) 3rd Earl of Bothwell, son of Adam. He was also Lord of Hailes and Crichton and served as the King’s Lieutenant. He was a minor for many years after succeeding to his father’s titles and estates after Flodden. His tutors were his uncle Patrick, Master of Hailes (later Sheriff of Haddingtonshire) as well as other relatives who were Prior of St. Andrews and Bishop of Moray: his uncle (as next in line) probably served as governor of Liddesdale during his minority. He may have held the patronage of Hawick Church, like previous Earls of Bothwell. In 1525/6 he appears to be superior (perhaps Baron) of the lands of Stouslie, Groundestone and Harden, when he granted the tenancy to George, Lord Home (this is confirmed in 1538, and in another document with date probably incorrectly transcribed as 1552). The transfer of ‘Truslye’ (probably Stouslie) and ‘Groundeston’ in Chamberlain Newton were confirmed passing from him to George, Lord Home in 1535 when previous charters relating to Home lands were revoked; and he was still superior of Stouslie, Groundistone and Harden when Alexander, 5th Lord Home inherited in 1551. In 1528/9 he gave a discharge for ‘non-entries’ of lands held by Walter Scott of Branxholme and several other Scotts. In 1529 he entered a bond to keep the peace in his Lordship of Liddesdale. But he was imprisoned for about 6 months in 1530 when there was no real improvement, following the execution of the Lairds of Henderland and Tushielaw. This encouraged him into a potentially treasonous correspondence with the English in 1531 and 1532; the Earl of Northumberland describes a secret meeting between them, and 3 of his attendants in 1531, in which he promised 1000 gentlemen and 600 commoners to serve on the English side. This led to further imprisonment (all of this activity up to 1532, makes it seem unlikely he was really born in 1512). However, he must have been partially rehabilitated, since he was granted lands near Lilliesleaf in 1534. But had to resign his estates in 1538, seeking exile and only returning to Scotland following the King’s death in 1542. In 1543 he signed the ‘Secret Bond’ with Cardinal Beaton, resisting English influence over the young Queen Mary. In 1544 he and Lord Home headed a force that made some attempt to defend Edinburgh against the English invaders under the Earl of Hertford. In about 1540 Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme promised that if the King allowed him to return to Hermitage, then Scott would help him keep peace on the Border, ‘to oist, birn, sla and distroy ilk XV days’ until any of the King’s enemies give sufficient pledges. Another scheme (in about 1547) to yield up Hermitage to the English and marry the Duchess of Suffolk in return, were foiled, causing him to seek exile again, where he remained until pardoned by Mary of Guise in 1554. He again acted as Lieutenant of the Scottish Marches. In 1556 he was involved in expeditions against the Armstrongs, accompanied by the Laird of Drumlanrig, but ‘the banditti had the advantage in two encounters’. He married Agnes Sinclair and their children were: James, the 4th Earl; Jane, who married John Stewart, Lord Darlney, and twice later; and Margaret. Patrick of Farnington (c.1517–c.45) son of Patrick of Hailes and Bolton. He was Sheriff of Lothian. He probably held the lands of the Lordship of Winnington, since in 1610 they were inherited by his great-granddaughters Marion, Jean and Margaret Hamilton. He married Agnes, daughter of George Hoppringle of St. John’s Chapel. Their only child was Marion, who married James Hamilton of Sprouston (who took the designation ‘of St. John’s Chapel’), whose sons included John Hamilton, father of Marion, Jean and Margaret. Robert (15th C.) recorded as ‘Robert of Hepburn’ in 1424 when he was part of a ‘retour of inquest’ held in Hawick to decide on the inheritance of part of the Barony of How-nam. Most of the other men were quite local. Sir Robert of Alderston (16th C.) recorded in 1587 as Lieutenant of his Majestys Guard, stationed in the West Marches to keep order there. They were attacked by a group of rebels, including Christie and Andrew of Langholm (probably Armstrongs). Probably the same man was implicated in forcibly taking away the daughter of a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1600. In 1608 he was charged with going into the ‘West wnitrie’ to apprehend the rebels Ninian and William Elliot, resulting in one of his men being shot. William (15th C.) member of the panel of 1456 which acquitted Andrew Ker of Altonburn of the charge of helping the English to burn lands around Jedburgh. His name is recorded as ‘Wylyam of Hepburne’. He was also witness to a charter for Ker of Altonburn in 1443 (also spelled ‘Hepburne’, ‘Hepborne’, etc., in earlier records).
usually referred to as ‘of Mertoun House’. He was a member of the Jedforest Club. In 1835 he married Julia Frances Laura, last surviving child of Rev. Charles Boultree and Laura, sister and heir of George, 4th Earl of Egremont. Their children were: Georgina Laura; and Frances Margaret Julia, who married Joseph William Baxendale. Henry Francis of Harden, 7th Lord Polwarth (1800–67) son of Hugh, the 6th Lord. He was listed as a Commissioner of Selkirkshire in 1819, when still younger of Harden. He was appointed Deputy Lieutenant of Roxburghshire in 1826. As well as Harden and other estates, he inherited Mabonlaw and Highchesters in 1843. He was Tory M.P. for Roxburghshire from 1826, being re-elected in 1831 by 57 votes to 14 against Sir William Elliott of Stobs in the last election under the pre-Reform system (with a vote at a meeting of the freeholders of the county). During that election about 1,000 Hawick men marched to Jedburgh to demonstrate. He was also selected to be one of Scotland’s Representative Peers in Parliament 1843–67. In 1845 he was appointed Sheriff Principal of Selkirkshire and in 1861 he became Lieut.-Col. in the Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire Rifle Volunteer Corps. He also served as a Commissioner of Supply, Justice of the Peace and member of the Police and Prison Boards for Roxburghshire. He was also Lord-Lieutenant of Selkirkshire and a Lord-in-waiting to the Queen. He was known as a great student of agricultural matters and a prize breeder of Leicester sheep. He was also a member of the Jedforest Club. He was an elder of the Church of Scotland and several times a member of the General Assembly. In 1835 he married Georgina, daughter of George Baillie of Jerviswood and Mellerstain, who was sister of the Earl of Haddington; she died in 1859. His children were: Walter Hugh Hepburne-Scott, who succeeded; Henry Robert, who married Ada Douglas-Home; Mary Lilias; Helen Georgina; Katherine; and Harriet Frances, who married Cndr. Henry Baillie-Hamilton. He is also sometimes referred to with just the surname ‘Scott’, although his son was very definitively Hepburne-Scott; he can also be confused with his brother Francis, who was Roxburghshire M.P. 1841–47. Henry Alexander 10th Lord Polwarth and Baron of Harden (1916–2005), son of Walter Thomas. He was Deputy-Lieutenant of Roxburghshire from 1962, Vice-Lord-Lieutenant of the Borders Region from 1975, and member of the Royal Company of Archers. Educated at Eton and King’s College, Cambridge, he served in WWII as Captain of the Lothians and Borders Horse. He succeeded his grandfather in 1944, since his father had died 2 years earlier. He was selected as one of Scotland’s 12 representative Peers in Parliament 1945–63. Qualified as a Chartered Accountant, he served as Governor of the Bank of Scotland, Chairman and President of the Scottish Council for Development and Industry, Minister of State for the Scottish Office, Chairman of the Scottish National Orchestra, Chancellor of Aberdeen University, and on the Board of Directors of many companies. He married Caroline Margaret Hay of Marlefield and they had one son (Andrew, who succeeded) and secondly married Jean, daughter of Adm. Sir Angus Graham of Gartmore and Ardroch. Walter George 13th (or 15th) Laird of Harden and 9th Lord Polwarth (1864–1944), son of Walter Hugh. He was Deputy Lieutenant of the counties of Haddington, Berwick, Selkirk and Roxburgh. He also served as a Justice of the Peace. He was Lieutenant-Colonel in the Territorial force and Hon. Colonel in the 8th Battalion Royal Scots. He was selected to be one of Scotland’s Representative Peers in Parliament 1929–44. In 1888 he married Edith Frances, eldest daughter of Sir Thomas Fowell Buxton. Their children were: Walter Thomas (1890–1942); Alexander Noel (b.1892), killed in WWI; Patrick John (b.1899); Helen Victoria; Margaret Mary; Edith Christian; Grizel Frances Katherine. He was succeeded by his grandson Henry Alexander. Walter Hugh 12th (or 14th) Laird of Harden and 8th Lord Polwarth (1838–1920). He was son of Henry Francis Scott (M.P. for Roxburghshire) and Georgina Baillie. He adopted the extra surname ‘Hepburne’ after the estates of the Hepburnes of Humbie descended to him. He also assumed chieftainship of the Scotts (owing to the failure of the direct male line on the death of Francis 2nd Earl of Buccleuch). He inherited Bewlie Mains in 1860 and Mabonlaw and Highchesters in 1868. He also held estates in the parishes of Maxton, Merton, St. Boswells, Smalholm, Kirkhope and Selkirk. He was Lord-Lieutenant of Selkirkshire and Deputy Lieutenant of Roxburghshire. He was Convenor of Roxburghshire County Council and served as a Justice of the Peace in the county. He was also selected as one of Scotland’s Representative Peers in Parliament 1882–1900. He was Captain in the Roxburgh Rifle Volunteers from 1868. In 1873 he presided over a meeting to set up the Hawick Home Mission, and for many years invited the members to spend Common Riding Saturday at Mertoun House. In 1863 he married his cousin Lady Mary Gordon, daughter of George, 5th Earl of Aberdeen. In 1915 he secondly married Katherine Grizel Baillie (a cousin), daughter of the Canon of York. His children were: Walter George, who succeeded; Henry James (b.1866); George (b.1871); Robert (1873–1950); Charles Francis (b.1874); Georgina Mary; Lillias; Mary Harriet; Grisell Katherine; and Katherine Grace. Walter Thomas (1890–1942) Master of Polwarth, eldest son of Walter George, 9th Baron Polwarth and also Laird of Harden. He was a Captain in the Lothian and Border Horse Yeomanry, and also Commanding Officer of the local battalion of the Home Guard. He served as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. In 1914 he married Elspeth Glencairn Campbell, daughter of the Bishop of Glasgow. Their children included: Henry Alexander (b.1916), who succeeded his grandfather; and Francis Michael (b.1920).

Hepe see Heap

Her (her, hur) pron. her – ‘She wad speake the hint legs off a cuddy, her’ [WL] (often added for emphasis after a phrase; note usual pronunciation of e vowel, and that sometimes the h is dropped).

Herbert see Herbert de Selkirk

Herbertson (her-burt-sin) n. Andrew (18th/19th C.) farmer at Hungryhill in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Lilliesleaf Parish, when he owned 2 horses.

Herbour (her-bur) n. a harbour – ‘A herbour for auld muillins O’ lang-forgotten pieces . . . ’ [DH], v. to harbour – ‘. . . there was that mony beggars that the toon got a bad name for herbouring thum a’ . . . ’ [BW1961].

Hercus (her-kis) n. James Logie (1846/7–1885) writer of the words of ‘Hawick’. Born in Kirkwall (Hercus or ‘Harcus’ is a fairly common name there), he may have worked as a house painter with his father. He was listed in the Kirkwall censuses of 1851 and 1861. He was living in Stockbridge in 1868 when he married Joan Jamieson Laidlaw. Their children included James Mack, John, Margaret Jamieson and William Laidlaw. In 1871 he was working as a clerk in Glasgow. There is no evidence he ever lived in Hawick, and no clue why he produced his poem of that name. Other poems he wrote with a local connection were ‘Minto Crags’ and ‘Dr. John Leyden’. His work was collected in ‘Songs of the Borderland and other Verses’ (1888). In 1898 Adam Grant (using the pseudonym ‘M. Rosenberg’) set ‘Hawick’ to music. He died at the age of 38 in Glasgow and was buried in Morebattle.

Herd see hird

Herd (herd) n. nickname of John Scott in the early 18th century.

Herd (herd) n. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Hermitage in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Eilrig in 1710 when his son Walter was baptised. He is probably the Walter who married Bessie Grieve in Robertson in 1708. William (d.1679) from Ashkirk Parish. He is recorded as one of the men banished to America in 1679 for being a Covenanter, and dying at Moul Head of Deerness, in Orkney, when their ship wrecked and they were ordered shut up before the hatches. William (17th C.) resident in Dykecroft in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694.

the Herd’s Hoose (thu-herdz-hoos) n. popular name for a former shepherd’s cottage located on Hawick Moor, probably near Pilmuir Rig. It may be the ‘herd’s house’ recorded when payments were made for building it in the Town Treasurer’s book of 1755, and which cost £4 12 0 when paid for in 1766. It was the location for the ‘Curds and Cream’ (meaning the Friday morning ‘Hut’) in the years 1872–76 (probably the same place as Hawickmoor).

hereaway (heer-a-wa) adv., arch. hereabouts, in this neighbourhood – ‘I can tell you about the vera last fairy that ever was seen hereaway’ [LHTB], ‘Thay’re scheiran’ aa roond heir-a-wa’, reaping is going on all around in this direction’ [JAHM].

hereaway-thereaway (heer-a-wa-tha-wa) adv., arch. hither and thither, here and there – ‘The bairns ran hereaway-thereaway’ [GW].

herefore (heer-for) adv., arch. therefore, on this account, in payment of this – ‘. . . owr wil is heir-for, and we charg zou strattlie, and commandis that ze incontinent . . . ’ [SB1500].

hereship (heer-ship) n., arch. an armed raid, especially for carrying off cattle etc., e.g. ‘William Grymyslaw, at the Kirk of Hassindene is accused of helping the English of Tynedale in a Hereship’ in 1493.

Heriot (her-e-i) n. small town on the A7 and former station on the Waverley Line, about 30 miles north of Hawick.

Heriot (her-e-i) n. Archibald (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as Captain of Ancrum. He was surety at the Justice-aire for Robert Taylor, once in Longnewton, then in Sansystanes. He was fined later for failing to enter Robert Taylor. Archibald (16th C.) Rector of the Parish of Kirkton. He resigned the Rectory in 1550, when it was presented to William Cranston. James (15th/16th C.) appointed Rector of Ashkirk in 1505. This was about the same time that Richard Bothwell became Prebendar, so presumably he was actually the minister. He probably only lasted a couple of years, since William Watson is described as the late Vicar in 1508. James (b.1825/6) from Legerwood in Berwickshire, he was a coachman, living at Howdenburn in 1851. By 1861 he had moved to Coldstream. His wife was Agnes and their children included Walter, John Stavert, William T. and Margaret (see also Herriot).

Heriot House (he-ree-i’-hoos) n. Heriot House, former toll-house on the road to Edinburgh, located shortly after the road crossed the Heriot Water, later a post office. John Govenlock was innkeeper there, probably in the late 18th century (also spelled ‘Herriot’).

Heritage (her-i’-ееj) n., arch. property ‘...for our hole house of Readhewghe, men and servants dwelling on our heritage and steadying within Liddesdale and Tevidale ...’[CBP1584].

The Heritage Hub (thu-her-i’-ееj-hub) n. home of the Scottish Borders Archive (covering Berwickshire, Peeblesshire, Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire) and Local History Centre, based in the renovated Exchange Buildings from 2007.

Heritor (her-i’-ur, her-i-tor) n., arch. a landowner in a parish, responsible for the financial burdens of the parish, as well as having some collective responsibilities for appointments, but without the power of the local feudal baron. Heritors were jointly liable (in proportion to the value of their land) for paying the schoolmaster and similar public burdens. In some documents heritors would be distinguished from tenants by being referred to ‘of’ their residence, rather than ‘in’. It was the practice at least until the mid-18th century for the minister to pay respects to each heritor in order of precedence, each man rising to bow. The heritors were allocated particular seats in the Kirk, as recorded for example on a register of 1683, with the seating being ‘in the body of the church below the lofts’. Hawick Parish Heritors records exist for the period 1710–1934.

Herk (herk) v. to hark – ‘herk whae’s speakin’.

Herken (her-ken) v. to harken – ‘Herkan untill the voyce o’ my crye ...’ [HSR], ‘Herken, O douter, an’ considir, an incline thine eer ...’[HSR], ‘Expected mei tae herken tae tidin’s hei hed brung ...’[MB].

Herkes (hur-kes) n. Rev. Moira first local female minister. She was minister at Denholm and Bedrule, linked with Minto, 1985–88. She then went to Prestongrange Church, in 1998 went to St. Andrew’s-Erskine Parish Church, Dunfermline, and later moved to Gardner Memorial Church, Brechin. She was also assistant at Dunkblane Cathedral in 1996 at the time of the school shootings.

Herkness (herk-nis) n. (Harkness) Adam (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Isobel Rutherford and their daughter Isobel was baptised in 1731. He could be the son of John baptised in 1707. Adam (18th C.) married Isobel Porteous in Hobkirk in 1761. Their children, baptised in the Associate Congregation in Jedburgh, included: Andrew (b.1762); Helen (b.1764); Walter (b.1767); and William (b.1772). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His son John was baptised in 1703. Andrew (17th/18th C.) married Helen Hobkirk in Bedrule Parish in 1717. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, recorded at Clarilaw in 1727 and 1729. He married Helen Hunty in Cavers Parish in 1715. Their children (baptised in Wilton) included: Helen (b.1727); and Helen (again, b.1729). The witnesses in 1727 were John and Francis Scott and in 1729 were William Douglas and Robert Liddell. Andrew (b.1782/30) labourer of 9 Loan who was charged with the culpable homicide of Elizabeth Young (of the same address) in 1888.

George (17th C.) resident of Acreknoe on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Hannah ‘Nellie’ (d.1849) daughter of Nellie Paterson, who was a sister of Robert. She was thus the niece of ‘Pawkie’ Paterson, as immortalised in the verse of the song; however, there is some confusion over whether ‘Nellie’ was ‘Pawky’s’ sister or niece, since Robert’s father Archibald was also ‘Pawkie’, and additionally she had a sister, who was also Helen (and hence ‘Nellie’). She married Charles Gray Laidlaw and lived up the Loan. She was also mentioned in ‘Hawick Immortals’ – ‘Peggy Duncan and Jenny Din, Nellie Herkness and Mensie Mein; The Wilton Priest wi’ his coat o’ skin, Stanley Stewart and Candy Jean’ [HI]. Helen (b.c.1795) tollkeeper at the North Toll Bar in 1841. It is possible that she was the Helen, daughter of Robert, born in Hawick about 1803/4. James (17th C.) tenant on the Cavers estate. In 1684 he was among a group of tenants who complained at having to pay a year’s rent as part of the authorities attempts to extract the fines imposed. on ‘the Guid Leddy Cavers’ for being a Covenanter supporter. He could be the James listed at Kirkton on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. James (17th C.) recorded ‘in Worchit’ when his will was listed in 1686. If this is ‘Orchard’, then he could be the same as the tenant from Cavers recorded in 1684. James (18th C.) mason in Hawick. In 1742 he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Joseph Lothian. He married Betty Dickson in 1730 and their children included: Helen (b.1737); James (b.1740); Betty (b.1742); and William (b.1746). The witnesses in 1742 were mason David Laing and wright Thomas Winthorpe. James (1740–1823) mason at the West Port, son of mason James and Betty Dickson. His son was Thomas, mason in Hawick. James (1816–1903) son of Thomas and Helen Scott, he was born in Hawick and became a well-known local builder. He lived later at 13 Allars Crescent. He is listed as a builder on Allars Crescent in Slater’s 1852 directory, being recorded in 1861 as employer of 30 men and 6 boys. Some of his best work can be seen at the banks his firm built at 4 Tower Knowe and 12 High Street. In 1847 he married Jane, daughter of Walter John Grieve, tenant in Southfield, and she died in 1881. Their children included: Christian (Kitty) Agnes (b.c.1851), who married Glasgow traveller John Anderson; and James (b.1855). James (b.c.1818) son of Thomas and Helen Paterson. He was a stockingmaker in Hawick. He was living with his mother Helen at the West Port in 1841. He appears to have been in Jedburgh Jail in 1843, 1849 and 1859. In 1851 he was a boarder with George and Agnes (related to him through marriage) Robson on the Kirkwynd, where his wife is described as a widower. He probably had children Helen (b.c.1846) and Thomas (b.c.1848). In 1861 he was a boarder with Jean McDonald at 5 Mid Raw. He married Martha Gadd in 1851 and she died in 1902. Their children included: Job (b.c.1852), who was Sheriff Officer; Edward (b.c.1853); Catherine (b.1855); Hannah (b.1856), who probably died in infancy; James (b.1857); Elizabeth (b.1860); John (b.1862); Archibald (b.1865); and Mary (b.1868). Job (b.c.1852) Sheriff Officer who lived at Wilton Dean. His paternal grandmother was the sister of ‘Pawkie’ Paterson. In 1881 he was listed as a Prison Keeper. In 1872 he married Agnes Jardine in Wilton Parish. Their daughter Elizabeth was born in 1873. John (17th C.) married Margaret Aitchison in Bedrule in 1693. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Orchard on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to William, who was also listed there. He may be the John whose daughter Margaret was baptised in Hawick in 1693. He may also be the John who was living at Borthwickhaugh in 1707 when his son Adam was baptised in Wilton; he was surely related to William who was tenant in Borthwickhaugh. John (17th/18th C.) recorded at Winningtonrig in the early 1700s. His children baptised in Kirkton Parish included Lancelot (b.1708) and Janet (b.1710). Perhaps the same John also had children baptised in Cavers: Jean (b.1694); Helen (b.1697); Margaret (b.1700); and an unnamed child (b.1703). John (18th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. His son John was baptised in 1771. Robert (d.bef. 1813) resident of Hawick. In 1811 his heirs are recorded as owners of ‘Part of Particot Lands of Hawick’. These lands were later owned by William Munro. He could be the Robert who married Agnes Small in Hawick in 1771. He could also be the mason whose child died in 1790. Thomas ‘Tam’ (1787–1855) born in Middlebie, Annan, son of Thomas and Hannah Murray. He was a spinner in Hawick. In 1841 his wife Helen and son James were at West Port (while he must have been absent). He was living at 7 Loan (probably the same place) in 1851 and described as ‘Pauper (road labourer)’. He married Helen, daughter of Archibald Paterson and sister of Robert ‘Pawkie’; either she or her daughter was the ‘Nelly Herkness’ of the song. Their children were: Helen (b.1803/4); Archibald (b.1806/7); Hannah (1807/8–55); James (b.1820/1), who married Martha Gadd; Betsy, who died aged 6; and Edward, who died aged 12. He died just a month after his wife. Thomas (b.c.1787) mason recorded at ‘New Glebe’ in 1841. This was likely at Rockvale on Liddesdale Road. In 1851 he was at ‘Rockville’ (i.e. Rockvale) and listed as a farmer of 16 acres. He was probably the mason who was recorded on the short-list for Cornet in 1817. He married Helen Scott. Their children included: James (b.1816), also a builder; Gideon (b.1820); John (b.1825); Elizabeth (b.1827); Agnes (b.1830); and Helen (b.1832). He may be the Thomas who was buried at St. Mary’s in 1858. Walter (17th C.) resident of Spittal-on-Rule on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. William (17th C.) resident of Orchard on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was surely related to John. William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Borthwickhaugh. His children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included: Helen (b.1709); and Mary (b.1712). William (18th C.) tenant of Birkhill farm, just south of Billerwell. He had a daughter called Marion, who visited Prince Charlie's camp when the army spent the night nearby, and apparently made a fool of herself trying to follow them as far as Wauchope Rigg, until brought back by her friends (also written 'Hearkness', 'Herkennesse' and 'Herkness').

herlin (her-lin) n., arch. an immature sea-trout – 'Whiles hei saw a herlin soon, And whiles killt a troot – Niver o' his awnership Had hei a meenit's doot' [DH].

herm (herm) n., v. harm – 'it wunni dae ee muckle herm', '... gie um a gude Hawick gill; it'll dae um nae herm' [JEDM] (cf. the less common hairm).

Herman Law (her-min-law) n. hill south of St. Mary's Loch, reaching 614 m. The Town possesses a Tom Scott painting of the area.

Hermiston (her-mee-stin) n. farm just south of Riddell in Lilliesleaf Parish. It is probably where 'Alex' de Hirmannist' was from, witness of a document for lands in Lilliesleaf in the early 13th century. Probably from the same family was 'Alisaundre de Hirdemaneston', who swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. The Stewarts of Hermiston have a burial aisle in Lilliesleaf kirkyard. It should not be confused with (although the name has the same origin as) 'Herdmansdoun', near the site of Herriot-Watt University in Edinburgh; that was the location for R.L. Stevenson's unfinished novel 'The Weir of Hermiston', and home of the Sinclair's, who nevertheless have some location connections. The one in Lilliesleaf Parish may be the place where Quentin Crozier was recorded in 1494/5. It was farmed by Adam Rutherford and was raided and burned about 1502 by David Scott, called 'Lady, in Stirkschawis', along with several Englishmen. Adam Scott of Hermiston was on inquest panels in 1494 and 1509 and also a witness to a document for the Scotts of Branxholme in 1500. John Scott was also recorded there in 1502. Patrick Johnstone inherited half the lands from his father Quentin in 1510. Andrew Scott was portioner there in 1638. In 1643 Robert Scott of Whitslade held lands there valued at £156 (Wester Hermiston), while Andrew Scott and William Johnstone held lands valued at £130 (Easter Hermiston). In 1663 the lands were owned by Andrew Scott and William Johnstone. In 1678 Thomas Scott of Whitslade, John Scott of Synton and John Johnstone were the owners. James and George Davidson and Robert Cairns were there in 1694. The Western and Eastern parts were combined by 1743. George Johnstone sold his part of Hermiston to James Shortreed in 1758, these lands being valued at £260. Robert Moffat and Francis Blaikie were (at least formally) part owners in 1761. Capt. (later Adm.) John Elliot owned 3 husband-lands there, purchased from James Shortreed in 1778. James Trotter was farmer there 1787–88. William Govan was owner in 1788, having purchased both the Easter (formerly belonging half each to 'Sinton' and 'Johnson') and Wester parts. John Stewart was owner in the mid-19th century and Andrew Stewart later (the origin is probably Old English 'hierde mann tun', meaning 'the herdsman’s farm'; it first appears as 'Hirdmamestoun' from about 1165, is 'Hirdmanestoun' in 1296, 'Hirdmanstoun' in 1494, 'hirdmanstoun' in 1494/5, 'Hirdmanston' and 'hirdmanstoun' in 1502, 'Hyrdmanstoun' in 1510, and 'Hermiston' in 1797; it is still 'Hermiston' on Gordon's c. 1650 map and 'Hermiston' on Blaeu's 1654 map, but 'Easter Hermiston' and 'Wester Hermiston' are on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Hermiston (her-mee-stin) n. Alexander (12th/13th C.) recorded as 'Alex' de hirdmanesetoun' when he was witness to a grant by Hugh de Normanville to Melrose Abbey in the period 1200–02. He is also listed as 'Alex' de Hirmansist' in the period 1214–49, when he witnessed the sale of lands in West Lilliesleaf to Melrose Abbey. Alexander (13th C.) recorded as 'Alisaundre de Hirdemaneston' in Roxburghshire in 1296 when he swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. He was 'Alexander of Hirdmanstone' when he was on a jury in 1305. His lands were probably Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish, and it seems likely he was a descendant of the earlier Alexander.

Hermiston Burn (her-mee-stin-burn) n. stream that flows to the east of Satchells and the west of Hermiston farm, running northward to join the Ale Water.

Hermitage (her-mi'-eej, her-mi-taj, ern-tij) n. popular name for Hermitage Castle and also the name of the nearby hamlet at the confluence of the Whithrope Burn with the Hermitage Water. The local pronunciation was formerly 'Erntage'. There was once a schoolhouse here, now a craft shop. The farm around the Castle was owned by William Elliot in 1632. Walter Herd was tenant in 1694, with William Armstrong also recorded there. To the east of the Castle there are the ruins of a farmstead, which is depicted on a 1718 estate plan, as well as several turf-walled stock enclosures. In the 1718 survey the farm covered 548 acres, bounded by Millburnholm, Toftholm, Greystonehaugh, Dinlees and Rispylaw, with a part on the south side of the Hermitage Water. Walter Elliot is recorded as farmer there in 1794–97, Robert Elliot in 1841 and 1851, and Walter Elliot in 1861. Also in the area around Green Sike there are remains of boundary dykes, rig lines and a mill-lade running to the north of the farm buildings. A charter of 1508 refers to the castle, fortalice and manor of Hermitage – ‘...Rush from brown ruins, scarr’d with age, That brown o’er haunted Hermitage: Where, long by spells mysterious bound, They pace their round, with lifeless smile, And shake, with restless foot, the guilty pile. Till sink the mouldering towers beneath the burden’d ground’ [JL] – ‘Hermitage wistfully lifts her head, Where the mists on the lone moors fall: Ferniehurst, lulled by the crooning of Jed, Lies wrapped in her sylvan shawl’ [WL] (the origin of the name is probably via the Old French ‘ermitage’, there being a local tradition that a hermit’s cell existed here before the castle was built; the name dates back to at least that the mid-14th century, with the castle first referred to in 1244; it is ‘Terram vocatum l’Ermytage’ in 1352, ‘Hermitaig’ and ‘Hermitagis’ in 1508, ‘Armytage’ in about 1540, ‘Armytage’ in 1583, ‘Armetage’ in 1594 and 1632 and ‘Armitage’ in 1653).

Hermitage Brig (her-mi’-eej-brig) n. two-arched road bridge over the Hermitage Water, built by Smith of Darnick for the Duke of Buccleuch in 1832.

Hermitage Brigend (her-mi’-eej-brig-end) n. Hermitage Bridgend, cottages near Hermitage Bridge. In 1861 the families of blacksmith Walter Beattie and shepherd Peter Robson were there.

Hermitage Castle (her-mi’-eej-kaw-sul) n. one of the best preserved strongholds in the Borders, located on the Hermitage Water north of Newcastleton. Replacing an earlier castle at Castleton, it was probably originally built by Sir Nicholas de Soulis around 1240 (the first record of it is 1244), and was held by that family until about 1320. However, during the invasion of Scotland by Edward I the castle was held by Sir Simon Lindsay, who was directed to repair ‘the walls, houses, and others in said castle’. It has also been suggested that it was first built by the Comyns, or even by the earlier Bolbeck family, but this is less clear. The oldest surviving parts date from the early-to-mid 14th century. There were 4 main building periods, the current shape taking form in the 3rd period, around 1400, with the final major phase being the oblong wing on the south-west corner, and a continuous wooden hoarding below the battlements. The blocking up of all but the southern entrance happened later. It was retaken from the English by Sir William Douglas (the Knight of Liddesdale) in 1338, and probably had the corner towers built soon after. Douglas had Ramsay starved to death there in 1342 after capturing him in Hawick. The Castle was taken by the English after the Battle of Durham in 1346, but was recovered in the late 1350s. It was further extended by the Douglases in the 14th and 15th centuries. The large 13 × 22 m keep has been in existence since about 1388. Small square towers may have been added about 1400 and the extra wing and wooden superstructure about a century later. The Castle also has extensive fortified earthworks, including a large enclosure to the west and north, which may be the remains of a settlement. To the west the defences are bounded by Lady’s Sike and to the east by Castle Sike (streams that have been partly diverted). An old wall further out called the White Dyke was probably the boundary of the deer park. The castle passed from the Black Douglases to the Red Douglases, although with complications because the Lord of Liddesdale sometimes appointed a separate Keeper of Hermitage. It was later given to the Hepburns of Bothwell (exchanged by Patrick Hepburn in 1492 for Bothwell Castle on the Clyde). The castle appears to have played little role during the troubling times of the early 16th century, but Boswell continued to govern it. Hence Mary Queen of Scots famous ride there to visit the wounded Earl of Bothwell in 1566. Bothwell’s estates were forfeited to the Crown in 1567, although granted to his nephew Francis Stewart in 1587, from whom they passed to his stepson, Walter Scott of Buccleuch, and remained with the Scotts of Buccleuch for more than 3 centuries. It is last referred to as an active castle in 1612, when ‘Roger Scott, captain of the Airmitage’ is recorded in A Hawick court case. ‘The castell, toure, and fortalice of Hermitage with frie forest and regalitie thairf’ are listed among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653, 1661 and 1663. Abandoned in the middle of the 17th century, it is shown in an 1802 sketch by Williams, another by H. Weber and a third by William Scott from Newcastleton. In order to preserve the stonework, it was much restored around 1820 by the Duke of Buccleuch, although it is uncertain how much this changed the castle’s appearance. It was taken over by Historic Scotland in 1930. Several artefacts have been found here, including a silver ring.

with a Douglas heart, which was worn by Sir Walter Scott. There is a tradition of a gold ring being unearthed by a mole, suggested to be the lost signet ring of Mary, Queen of Scots; another story says the gold ring bore the words ‘In Broderlie Anite’. There have been a few Common Riding Ride-outs to here, probably being the longest ride. Some of the old iron work is in the Museum (e.g. a door handle, donated in 1900, a door key and an old mini-cannon). As well as the adjacent chapel, there are many surrounding earthworks and the defensive ditches of the Castle, suggestive of field systems and enclosures. Since its ruin the castle has been a place of mystery and dark legend. It was said by locals to have sunk into the ground due to the weight of the guilt of the blood spilled there, with 30 feet being toppled, 30 feet sinking down, and 30 feet left standing. Stories of the deeds of Soulis and other former residents also abound – ‘As we gaze on its massive walls and tread its courts, what a host of apparitions leave their enchanted stations in the cells of memory, and pass in motley array before the mental vision!’ [JAHM], ‘The Castle of Hermitage, mould’ring and grey, Where Soulis and Douglas held merciless sway’ [DA], ‘I’ll keek throwe the mist to an age O’ glamoure roun’ Hermitage’ [WL] (it is ‘Armetage’, ‘Armitage’, ‘Ermitage’, ‘Ermtag’, ‘Ermytage’, etc. in the 14th to 16th centuries, e.g. ‘Castell of the Ermitage’ in 1469/70, ‘caustro de Hermitaigh’ in 1508, ‘castrum de Armtage’ in 1541, ‘Harmytage Castle’ in 1584 and ‘castro de Armitage’ in 1634).

Hermitage Chaipel (her-mi’-eej-chá-pul) n. remains of a probably early 13th century chapel and graveyard about 400 m to the west of Hermitage Castle. It was dedicated to St. Mary and connected with Kelso Abbey. It is referred to in the Kelso Chartulary as the ‘hermitage called Mercheleye’ on the ‘Merchingburn’, and was established by the Bolbeck family (of Northumbria) for 2 monks, Roger and William, and to be staffed by exactly 2 monks thereafter. In 1222 the monks asked to be placed under the direct protection of the Pope. It was later endowed with 26 acres by Eustace de Baliol. It measures about 5.5 m by 14 m, with walls almost 1 m thick. Some of the stonework appears to be 14th century, but after that the chapel does not appear to have been rebuilt or much altered, but was simply allowed to fall into decay once it was disused. However, this ‘hermitage’ gave its name to the river and also the castle. It was excavated in 1900 under the direction of J.P. Alison and more thoroughly in 1926 by H.M. Office of Works. A low mound outside is traditionally said to be the burial place of ‘Cout o Kielder’. The Chapel and burial ground must have been used by the lords of the Castle. There are more modern graves there from local families in the 18th and 19th centuries, particularly the Elliots of Hermitage. It is said that the old font was still in existence until the end of the 18th century, but then disappeared. Some pieces of carved stonework are in the Hawick Museum, including a small head – ‘And next they pass’d the chapel there; The holy ground was by, Where many a stone is sculptured fair, To mark where warriors lie’ [JL].

Hermitage Park (her-mi’-eej-pawrk) n. former lands listed on the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale as ‘Park de Ermetag’. It was valued at 7 merks 6 shillings and 8 pence. It may have been associated with the deer park at Hermitage Castle.

Hermitage Schuil (her-mi’-eej-skil) n. former school in Hermitage village. It is the same school referred to as Millburn in 1841. It was opened in 1809 and had about 40 pupils in the 1830s. James Elliot was master there in 1837 and James Scott in the 1850s and 60s. Agnes Grieve was running a grocer’s shop in the schoolhouse in 1861. The building is now a private house and craft shop. The Borders Archive has registers for 1873–1952 and log books for 1937–52.

Hermitage Viaduct (her-mi’-eej-vl-a-duikt) n. former railway viaduct across the Hermitage Water, just before it joins the Liddel Water. It has been demolished.

Hermitage Witter (her-mi’-eej-wi’-ur) n. minor river that passes near Hermitage Castle to join the Liddel Water. ‘Cout o Kielder’ is supposed to have been drowned in a pool of the river near the Castle around 1290. It may originally have been called the ‘Merchingburn’ with its name changed to that of the Castle in the mid-13th century (it appears to be incorrectly labelled ‘Riddell flu.’, presumably in confusion with the ‘Liddel’, on Sandison’s c.1590 map).

herns (hernz) n., pl., arch. brains – ‘Wui breezes thre thre the Border hills ti blow away the ooder Heronhaa, Heronhill, a cottage near Southfield that was the birthplace of Sir Andrew Smith. It was located about 100 m to the east of the road south through Hawick’s Common, after the turn-off for Southfield and just before the Troutlawford. Although nothing can now be seen of the building, it was excavated by the Archeological Society in 1968 and a commemorative cairn built by the roadside (on the opposite side) to mark it. In 1856 it was recorded that about 50 years earlier a large cairn was removed from here, requiring 600 cart-loads of stones, and in which a ‘cist-vaen’ with bones of a ‘primeval giant’ and a piece of flint were found; it is unclear if this is the same as the cairn removed from the Auld Caa Knowe at about the same time.

Heronhill Ludge (her-in-hil-luj) n. gatehouse for the former villa at Heronhill. It is situated at 152 Weensland Road. It was built in 1865 to designs by Jont Thomas Rochead, at the same time as the main house, with an extension in the mid-20th century. It is a single-storey, octagonal plan lodge house, built in an Italianate style, with prominent ornamental stacks. It is a grade C listed building.

Heronhill Pond (her-in-hil-pond) n. name of the pond on the hill behind Heronhill House, reputedly so-called because of the herons that used to nest there. This was formerly a wetland, which was dammed to create a pond for the villa built there.

Heronhill Schuil (her-in-hil-skil) n. private school based at Heronhill House in the mid-to-late 20th century. It was moved from St. Helen’s, Bridge of Allan.

Heronhill Terrace (her-in-hil-te-ris) n. housing built in 1866, previously called part of Weensland Road, renamed in 1875 after Heronhill House. The area was demolished and grassed over in 1966.

Heron-Maxwell (he-rin-maks-wul, -wel) n. Edward of Teviotbank (1821–90) youngest child of Sir John Heron-Maxwell of Springkell in Dumfriesshire. He spent time in Ceylon. In 1847 he married Elizabeth Ellen, only daughter of Col. William Henry Stopford-Blair of Penninghame, Wigtownshire. He may have adopted the surname ‘Heron-Maxwell-Blair’ when he succeeded to the lands of his father-in-law. He purchased Teviot Bank in 1860, and thereafter lived in Roxburghshire. He was recorded there in a directory of 1868. He was one of the original members of the Border Mounted Rifles and was a Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire. He was also a Deputy-Lieutenant of Dumfriesshire. He is listed as owner of the lands of Knowe in Minto Parish in about 1874. His children included: John Shaw; Capt. William Henry Stopford; Elizabeth Ellen; Mira; and Louisa Susan Marlborough. John Shaw of Teviot Bank (1850–99) eldest son of Edward. He served with the 14th Hussars and retired in 1880. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1889. He was succeeded by his brother William H.S.

Heronshew (he-rin-, hern-shoo, -shewr) n., arch. a heron – ‘The herensheugh fisht the swain’ pule In blew days and grey, And niver cam’ a thing ava To gliff the lad away’ [DH] (there are spelling variants cf. huirn).

Heron Wud (he-rin-wud) n. wood in the Rule valley, just south of the location of Wells house. There is an earthwork about 360ft south of the house, in the north-west part of the wood, with a stream running through it. There are at least 3 banks associated with the structure, but its full size is hard to tell because of cultivation.

the Hero o Quebec (thu-hee-rö-ö-kwe-bek) n. local nickname for Henry Scott.

the Hero’s Grave (thu-hee-röz-gräv) n. former name for the Caa Knowe, also called ‘the Giant’s Grave’. A cairn long stood there, being removed about 1809 or 1811. A crude stone coffin was said to have been unearthed, about 6 to 8 feet from the surface. As described in the New Statistical Account in 1839 this enclosed ‘a human skull, with several bones of more than ordinary size’. Hence it was perhaps the burial mound of some ancient chiefetain, and selected as the site of the calling of the Burgess Roll for this reason. On the other hand, it may have been simply one example of a Bronze Age burial cist and associated mound, which happened to be near the southern extremity of the Common. A bronze spearhead found near here was once in the Museum, but may have been lost. ‘26 artefacts of flint and other forms of chalcedony possibly found near the Giant’s Grave on Southfield farm’ were also once catalogued in the Museum’s collection (see also the Auld Caa Knowe).

herp (herp) v. to harp, play the harp, dwell on – ‘stop herpin on about eet, an A might gie yin’, ‘But if ever a body keeps herpin’ on The way that folk takes him in .’. [FL], n., arch. a harp – ‘Prayse the Lord wi’ herp; sing untill him wi’ the psaltrie, ane instrument o’ ten strings’ [HSR], ‘Sing untill the Lord wi’ the herp; wi’ the herp an’ the voyce o’ ane psalm’ [HSR] (cf. the less common hairp).

Herr Cut (her-ku) n. epithet for a German barber in Hawick in the 1960s and 70s.

the Herriers (thu-her-ce-urs) n. popular name for the Teviotdale Herriers running club.

Herries (he-rez) n. Agnes see Agnes Maxwell. Andrew (d.1513) son of Herbert, he was 2nd Lord of Terregles. In 1499/1500 he had a charter for the family estate, which included the lands of Feu-Rule. In 1510 he had another charter for the Barony of Terregles, including ‘terras de Fewroull, cum tenentibus’, infefting William as his heir. He married Beatrix Herries (but this was annulled), then Janet, daughter of Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, and lastly Nichole Home. He was killed at Flodden and succeeded by his son William. Herbert (d.c.1505) son of David and Margaret Crichton, he was 1st Lord of Terregles. He probably held Feu-Rule, along with other territories. His sons Andrew, Mugo and John were all killed at Flodden. Nigel (c.1195–c.1240) son of William, he held the post of Ranger of Ettrick Forest, which included the lands of Rankilburn. His name was usually written 'Heriz'. He was succeeded by his son Henry. William (d.1543) 3rd Lord of Tergles, son of Andrew. Among the titles he held was the Barony of Feu-Rule. In 1509 he granted the lands of Rulewood to John Gourlay. He gave a charter of Harwood and Hawthornside to Hector Lorrain in 1531, witnessed by Robert and John, who must have been relatives. He married Catherine Kennedy and was succeeded by their only surviving child Agnes (who married Sir John Maxwell). Thereafter the Barony of Feu-Rule was held by Maxwells (see also Maxwell).

Herring (he-rint) n. Adam (12th/13th C.) recorded as 'Adam Hereng' when he witnessed a charter of Coldingham Priory in the reign of William I. In about 1193 he witnessed a gift of land in Mow to Kelso Abbey. He was probably father of Petronella, and may have had a connection with the Borthwick area; she is referred to as daughter of 'Adam Harang of Meinichoch', which is probably Minto. This same family became Barons of Glaucuine and owned lands around Dunkeld and Blairgowrie. Petronella (13th C.) daughter of 'Adam Harang of Meinichoch', which is probably Minto. In the reign of Alexander II she granted 'to God, St. Mary, St. Benedict and the port of Minto. In the reign of Alexander II she granted 'to God, St. Mary, St. Benedict and the port of Minto. In the reign of Alexander II she granted

Hertford (her-foird) n. Edward Seymour, Earl of Hertford (c.1506-1552). He was appointed Lord Warden of the Marches in October 1542 and was Lieutenant General in 1544 when he was in the north for a second time. In 1542 he wrote to Henry VIII, describing the farms his men had burned in the Scottish Borders. He and his forces carried out a vindictive Border raid in 1545, burning many towns and destroying towers, houses and abbeys as part of what became known as the‘Rough Wooing’. He had already led the burning of Edinburgh in 1544 (which included raz-ing Haddington and Hawick), and been defeated at Ancrum earlier in 1545. The laying waste of the Scottish Borders covered 15 terrible days in September 1545, and is detailed in an account to King Henry VIII. He was later raised to be the Duke of Somerset. He was Jane Seymour’s brother and uncle of Edward VI, for whom he served as Lord Protector until falling out of favour and being executed.

hert-grewn (her'-groom) adj., arch. corpulent, overly stout.

herth (herth) n. a hearth – ‘relaxin it yer herth an hame’.

herthstane (herth-stän) n. a hearystone – ‘For my dayes ar consumet like reek, an’ my banes ar brunt as ane herthstane’[HSR].

the Herth Tax (thu-herth-tawks) n. tax imposed on fireplaces in 1690 and collected over the subsequent years. The amount charged was 14 shillings per hearth (a hefty sum for the less well-of) and was levied to support the army. Because it was based on fireplaces in houses, it was essentially a tax on family units. The poor did not have to pay (but were in some cases listed by name), as well as hospitals being exempt. The list of those responsible for the tax, drawn up in Roxburghshire in 1694 (although probably representing the state of the parishes a year or so earlier), is an invaluable record of the residents in the county at that time. It is the closest thing we have to a census at the end of the 17th century.

hert-hungry (her'-hung-u-ree) adj., arch.
ravenous, famished – ‘No that A was hert-hungry nih, aether; or thance A micht heh been gay pookin ‘cheese-an-breed’ off the hedges ti nattle hertit *(her'-tee', her-ti') pp., adj. hearted, usually in compound adjectives – ‘hei’s awfi chicken-hertit him’, ‘A feelin-hertit yallih-yorleen . . . ’[ECS], ‘. . . Ma warm-hertit Treasure, O, wad A lo’e yow winded or knocked out by a blow (also spelled

the Hert o Hawick (thu-her'-ö-hlk) n. the Heart of Hawick Townscape Heritage Initiative, an urban regeneration project for the centre of Hawick in the early years of the 21st century, partly funded by the Heritage Lottery Fund.
Hesseldale

Hesseldale (hez-, hes-ni) contr. hasn’t, has not – ‘he hasn’t got a leg ti stand on’ (hasni is also occasionally used).

Hessel (hes-sull) n. Charles (1788–1859) born in England, he was a whip and thong-maker of the High Street, as well as a baker. He was recorded on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was at about No. 25. In 1851 he was listed as a whip-maker and master baker, employing 4 men and 2 boys. He was also listed as both baker and whip-maker in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was a member of Allars Kirk and served as Preses of the Relief Kirk Session. He married Isabel (or Isabella) Kennedy, daughter of Margaret (from Cavers); she died in Stirling in 1873. Their children included: Thomas (b.1822); Margaret (b.1823), who probably died young; James (b.1825), who married Elizabeth Milligan in 1848; Charles (b.1827), who married Margaret Kersel in 1853; Elizabeth (b.1829), who married John Todd in 1849; Francis Ralph Oliver (b.1832); John Harrison (b.1834); and William Dickson (b.1839). Members of his family later moved to Stirling.

Charles (1827–60) son of Charles, the whipmaker. He was a tinsmith in Hawick. In 1853 he married Margaret (c.1826–96), daughter of Adam Kersel. Their children were: Isabella, who married Margaret Kersel in 1849; Francis Ralph Oliver (b.1832); John Harrison (b.1834) and William Dickson (b.1839). Members of his family later moved to Stirling.

Hesseldale (he-sul-dal) n. former lands in Liddesdale, listed on the 1541 rental roll, valued at 12 shillings and tenanted by John Nixon. The precise location is unclear, but it is listed among other lands that are in the general area of Larriston.

Hessel’s Close (he-sul-klös) n. former name for a passageway at 25 High Street, named for the baker and whip-makers there.

Hessen (he-zin, he-sin) contr. hasn’t, has not (short form of hesni’t).

hesni’t (he-zin’) contr. hasn’t, has not – ‘she hasn’t, she she?’ (sometimes shortened to hesnen; this form is used interrogatively and occurs before the noun, cf. hesni).

hest (hest) v., poet. hast – ‘...behal'd, thou art fair; thou hest dows’ eyne’ [HSR], ‘...for thou hest liftet me up, an’ hestna made mine enemies til rejoysce over me’ [HSR].

hes’t (hest) contr. has it – ‘hes’t the same colour is the other yin?’.

Heuchhoose (hewch-hoos) n. Heuchhouse, former lands in the Liddel valley, roughly opposite Dinlabyre, near the modern Steele Road. It is probably the place listed as 'Hoghouse', with a value of 15 shillings, on a rental roll of Liddesdale around 1376. It was a seat of a branch of the Elliots in the early 16th century. In 1541 the tenant was William Elliot, and it was still valued at 15 shillings. Martin Elliot of Heuchhouse was among the thieves captured at Hawick in 1567 and drowned. 'Johmn Ellott' of Heuchhouse is recorded in 1570. 'Haugh-house' in the 1580s, 'Gray was farmer there in 1797 (it is `Heuchous'. was possessed by Gavin Elliot in 1632. Heugh Heid (hewch-heed) n. former farmstead in southern Liddesdale, just south of Tinnis Burn, to the west of Under Burnmouth. It is sometimes also recorded as 'Haughhead'. Archibald and James Armstrong were there in 1697 when they were summoned by the Kirk Session to answer charges of not observing the Sabbath. Archibald Armstrong was tenant farmer until about 1757. There were Kyles there in 1794 and 1797. According to William Scott (in the 1821 'Beauties of the Border') the farm stood on a rocky precipice, and the farmer there lost his stock to a bad winter, tumbling them off a high rock, after which he told a cattle-dealer that the had 'met with a Mr. Linn, who has taken all I had at one price' (it is marked 'Heughhead' on Stobie's 1770 map and is shown on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map; it is listed as 'Heughheads' in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls).

Hewick and Bridge Hewick. It is also an occasional surname.

Hewisbridge see Hewbridge

Hewitson (hew-it-sin) n. Agnes ‘Nancy Whutson’, ‘Auld Nancy’ (1810/1–88) familiar sight in Hawick of the mid-19th century, along with her donkey ‘Jess’. She was daughter of John, a mole-catcher, and Agnes Reid. A resident of Wilton, she was unmarried and worked much of her life as a coal carter. With her little cart she supplied coal to the working classes in small loads. Ill health forced her to give up her trade a few years before her death. George (17th C.) resident at Side in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. His surname is written ‘Houitsone’. John (b.c.1780) born in England, he was a mole-catcher in Wilton, living at Dowmaven. He married Agnes (or Jane), sister of Wull Reid, bedlar at Wilton. His children included: Agnes was later known as ‘Auld Nancy’; Jane; Archibald, who worked as a skinner; and John. John (b.1812/3) born in Kirkton Parish, he was educated in Wilton School. He became schoolmaster at Clarilaw in about 1839. He is listed as teacher at Clarilaw among heads of households in 1840 and 1841 and also on the 1841 census. By 1851 he had moved to be schoolmaster at Hadden in Sprouston Parish. His wife was Martha and their children included Eliza, William, Janet O. and Martha. Manie (17th C.) listed among the poor living at Hassendean on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Her surname was written ‘Houitsone’.

Robert (17th C.) recorded as ‘Howitson’ in 1657, when he was ordained to pay Hawick schoolmaster for past wages ‘for teaching of his sons in the schole several quarters byegane’. He must have been a relatively prominent man in the Parish, to be able to afford such fees (see also Howison and Whutson).

Hewitt (hew-i’) n. Rev. George Burrill (20th C.) attended Cheshunt College, he became minister at Elmwood Avenue, Warrington in 1939. He was minister of the Hawick Congregational Kirk from 1942. He wrote ‘1848–1948 – Hawick Congregational Church – Centenary Commemoration’ in 1948.

Hewbridge (hewz-brij) n. cottages and area around a bridge over the Liddel Water just to the south of Steelcroad-end. A new bridge was built there in the late 19th century, to replace the dangerous older one. The area to the west of the river is called Hews Hill or Hewis Hill and could be associated with the older ‘Heuchhhouse’. It is possible this is the place recorded in 1632 as ‘Hoillis in the gait with the pertinents pertaining to Robert Ellot of Dinlabyre’. Robert Douglas was farmer at ‘Huisbridgend’ in 1851 and William Minto was blacksmith there in the 1860s (also ‘Hewisbridge’, it is ‘Hewessbridge’ in 1821).

Hewson (hew-sin) n. Rev. J. (19th C.) 3rd official pastor of Hawick Baptist Kirk. He served for the years 1871–74. He is probably the Mr. Hewson who served at Coathridge 1875–78.

Hexham (heks-ouni) n. town in Tynedale in Northumberland with a nearby Priory. It once constituted its own shire and was an important administrative centre in the English Middle March. The Moothall is the ancient palace of the Bishops of Hexham, first built around 1100, rebuilt in the 14th century. The town also contains the Border History Museum. It was formerly connected with Hawick (via Riccarton) through the Border Counties Railway Line. It was a band of men from this area who were ambushed at Hornshole in 1514. Population 11,300. The town was formerly used in exclamations, such as ‘Gang ti Hexham!’, which meant the same as go to blazes.

Hexham Abbey (heks-oun-aw-bee) n. Abbey at Hexham, the Priory of St. Andrew, dating mainly from about 1170–1250, being built on a site that held a church since 674. It is now the Parish Church of St. Andrew, with ancient arms being a yellow saltire on a blue background. Lord Dacre was Bailiff of Hexham and some of his men were known to be involved in raids on the Scottish Borderland land in 1514. It is believed it was their flag that was captured at Hornshole. The Hawick Provost took part in the consecration of the new nave of Hexham Priory in 1908, with the Hawick Flag loaned for the procession (and of which there is a photograph). A copy of the Hawick flag was presented to Hexham Abbey by the Callant’s Club in 1914, and a replacement presented by the Provost in 1972 – ‘And I watch the lads’ eyes light with pride and their spears lift once again To Hexham’s pennon blue and gold above their leader’s rein’ [JYH].

Hexham-birnie (heks-un-bir-nee) n. a very remote place, ‘Hei leev’d in Hexham-birnie’ was part of a once popular rhyme (cf. ti Hexham).

Hextilda (heks-til-da) n. (12th C.) daughter of Bethoc and Uchtred FitzWaldeve. She was granddaughter of King Donald III. Through her mother she inherited the Barony of Bedrule, among other lands. She married Malcolm, 2nd Earl of Atholl, and secondly Richard Comyn, Lord of Tynedale. Her children included Henry, 3rd Earl of Atholl and William Comyn, Earl of Buchan. Her son William inherited the Barony of Bedrule. Note that ‘Huwe de Hextildespeth’, from Roxburghshire, signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296, and may have been owner of lands named after her.

Highchester

Society and Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries. He purchased the farm of Arkleton in Ewesdale and in 1977 established the Arkleton Trust to promote agriculture and rural development.

Highchester see Highchesters

Highchesters (hi-, hi, hā-ches-turz) n. farm along the Borthwick, opposite Todshawhaugh. It was formerly the seat of the Scotts of Highchester, who are the direct ancestors of the Scotts of Harden and was sometimes used as the dower house for Harden. In the 17th century it consisted of the separate West Highchesters and East Highchesters, with the former being the main estate. There were 21 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650 (with surnames Adam, Allan, Brash, Brown, Cowan, Gavin, Gledstains, Heatlie, Napier, Noble, Renwick, Riddell, Robson, Scott, White and Wilson). The lands were transferred from Wilton Parish to Robertson in 1690. There were 4 separate households listed there in 1694. There are records of 1700–04 of a dispute over ‘Haychester’s loft’ in Wilton Kirk, the right of these sittings having passed to Robertson Kirk. At Robertson in 1701 the Laird’s seats consisted of 9½ feet either side of the East end. The lands were associated with the Harden estates in the 18th and 19th centuries. James Learmonth, Adam Scott, Robert Neil and James Laidlaw were recorded there in 1710, James Robson in 1711, Robert Riddell in 1716–22, Adam Glendinning and John Wilson in 1718, Robert Scott and William Beattie in 1720, James Scott in 1721, William Scott in 1721–23, Walter Turnbull in 1723–24, William Hume in 1725, James Scott in 1727 and William Brown in 1731. George Tait was living there in 1742, Robert Scott in 1743, James Stot in 1753, Alexander Scott in 1756, Andrew Watson in 1757, James Hume in 1762, William Scott in 1763–66, David Laidlaw in 1764, John Scott in 1766, William Miller in 1781, Robert Hobkirk in 1781–86, James Hobkirk in 1784, Walter Scott in 1786, Peter Waldie in 1795–98 and James Turnbull is recorded as tenant in 1797. In 1788 the lands were recorded along with Harden and Dunbush valued at £486 6s 8d. Thomas Miller lived there in 1801, William Hart in 1821, George Hart in 1841 and Robert Brydon was farm steward there in 1868. A perforated stone disc from here is in the Museum (also written ‘Haychester’ and formerly ‘Haychesters’, ‘heychesters’, etc.; the name occurs in 1502 as ‘Hawchesteris’, ‘Haychesteris’ in 1643, ‘Heechester’ and ‘Heychester’ in 1648, ‘Haychester’ in 1650, ‘Heigh Chester’ in 1657, and ‘Haychester’ and ‘Haychasters’ in 1694, ‘Haychesters’ in 1710, was regularly ‘Heychester’ in the 17th century and becomes the modern form by the late 18th century; it is ‘Eister & Wester Heychesters’ on a parish map of 1650, ‘Haychester’ in de Wit’s c. 1680 map, while Blaue’s 1654 map shows ‘W. Haychester’ and ‘E. Haychester’ and it is ‘High Chesters’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map; the origin is probably Old English ‘haga ceaster’, meaning ‘the fort with the hedge around it’, with the connection to the nearby hill-fort; ‘Underchesteris’ is recorded in 1482, perhaps suggesting that the lands were split into ‘Under’ and ‘High’ chesters at that time).

Highchesters Cottages (hi-ches-turz-ko‘ee-jeez) n. former name for cottages on the right hand side of the Borthwick road, before coming to the main farm of Highchesters (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Highchesters Hill (hi-ches-turz-hil) n. hill of the Borthwick valley, just above Highchesters, reaching 258 m and containing a hill-fort at its southern end. It measures about 70 m by 50 m and has 3 fragmentary ramparts, with the entrance probably at the north-east. It is described as a ridge fort, and may be from the early Iron Age.

Highchesters Loft (hi-ches-turz-loft) n. gallery in the older Wilton Kirk, the sittings on which were owned by the Laird of Highchesters, i.e. Scott of Harden. After 1690 the right was transferred to the new Robertson Kirk, but disputed by Highchesters, since some of his property remained in Wilton. The former heritors of Has-sendean complained in the period 1700–04 that they wanted sittings in this loft or would not pay for repairs. This old building was finally replaced in the 1760s. It is unclear whether the loft received a new popular name before its demise.

Highchesters Mill (hi-ches-turz-mil) n. mill attached to the Highchesters estate, mentioned in 1732. It was on the south side of the main road just after the Highchesters farmhouse, and once had a mill lade, connecting across the loop in the Borthwick Water there. Robert Thomson was there in 1733. John Hume was living there in 1748, John Scott was tenant there in at least 1762–72 and John Haldane was tenant in the 1850s. In 1788 and in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls it is listed along with Harden and Dunbush, as part of the estate of Walter Scott of Harden. The farmer there in 1841 was Peter Pennycoik and there were also Deans and others there (it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

(high doh) n. extreme agitation – ‘she was up ti high doh wi aa the weddin plans’.

Highend (high end) n. farm in Hobkirk Parish on the side road between Hawthornside and Forkins. The main road from Hawick to Newcastle used to pass this way before the early 1800s when the new road via Bonchester Bridge was made. It was once a small cottage containing two rooms, which was used as a public house, and had another small adjacent cottage called ‘the Highend of Langraw’. The last proprietor of the inn was Robert Douglas. Around 1778 the attached lands were combined with those of Little Gledstains and the Sneep and farmed by John Common. Mrs. Taylor was recorded there in at least 1841–68.

Higher (hl-ur) n. advanced level of the Scottish Certificate of Education, taken in a number of subjects, usually in the 5th year of High School. Not as advanced as the English A Level, but Scottish students generally take a wider range of subjects – ‘she failed her Higher Latin, bit got threi O Grades’.

Highflicht (hl-flicht) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in 1541, and presumably part of the lands of Flicht.

high heid yin (hi-heed-yin) n. a leader, person in authority, big cheese – ‘... teh Amairiche where hei met a lot o’ the high heid yins at the White Hoose’ [BW].

Highhoos (hl-hoos) n. former farmstead in Liddesdale. It appears to be combined with Hightrees, Howden, Harden and Burmworth on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch. It may correspond to the farmhouse shown on the map at about the location of Upper Larriston. It is possible this is the ‘Hie-Eshies’ inherited among other Liddesdale lands in 1667 by William Elliot of Dinlabyre, and transcribed ‘Hydashes’ in 1691.

Highland see Heeland

Highlee (hl-lee) n. former farmstead near Highlee Hill, south of Lustruther in Southdean Parish. John Oliver was tenant there in 1669 and William Oliver in 1694 (it is ‘Hielic’ in 1669 and ‘heylie’ in 1694).

Highlee Hill (hl-lee-hil) n. hill in Southdean Parish, lying to the south-west of Lustruther and east of Wolfelee, reaching a height of 307 m. The gentle peak lies in an open area of moorland, and contains the remains of an ancient settlement, perhaps Iron Age. It is about 60 m across, and has been denuded by cultivation and quarrying. There are also old sheepfolds, boundary dykes, enclosures, lazy beds and rig and furrow lines in the area. A track across the hill towards Lustruther may be one of the alternative routes of the Wheel Causeway.

the High Level (the hl-lev-in) n. pub at 11 Green Terrace, since at least the late 19th century, sometimes called ‘the Level’.

the High Loft (the hl-loft) n. former balcony in St. Mary’s Kirk, before it was rebuilt about 1763. It was also known as ‘the Common Loft’, and sometimes referred to as ‘the Rowly-Powy Loft’, suggesting that it was not very stable. It was one of two such lofts reached from the steeple side, the lower one being called ‘the Middle Loft’ or ‘the Steeple Loft’.

High Mangerton (hl-man-jer-in) n. former name for part of what was once Mangerton farm, presumably the higher part. In the 1718 survey of Scott of Buccleuch properties it was included as part of Sorbietrees.

the High Plantin (the hl-plawn-in) n. popular name for a plantation near Wilton Dean, probably the one above Overhall Road, joining the high part of Whitehaugh Road. This wood contains an ancient earthwork, about 300 x 170 feet, at the south-west end of the plantation, much disturbed by quarrying.

the High Road (the hl-rod) n. popular local name for the road leading north-east out of Roberton, up the B711 and through the Borthwickbrae estate to join ‘the Low Road’ at Borthwickbrae Burnfit.

High Sate (hl-say) n. High Seat, hill between the Teviot and Borthwick valleys, between Comonside Moor and Broadlee Moss, north of Dryden Fell and south of Broadlee Loch. It reaches a height of 347 m.

the High Schuil (the hl-skil) n. Hawick High School, on the north side of Buccleuch Road, Nos. 26–28. It was originally started as the Buccleuch Public School in 1860 to replace the Grammar School, which had been founded in 1710, and merged with the parish school in 1824. The new School Board took over responsibility for it in 1872 and there were enlargements soon afterwards. After major renovations in 1908 (with designs by Joseph Blaikie) the name was changed to Buccleuch Higher Grade School, and became ‘Hawick High School’ in 1915. There was a serious fire there in 1925, with pupils being taught in church halls until the school was reopened in 1928. The architect for the new building was John Alexander Carfrae. Note that the High School was not free for everyone until about WWII. The land of Teviot Lodge was gifted to the school in 1933, with science buildings and gymnasium built there around 1960. The Extension building, the new Technical building, the Games Hall and the Dining Block were all built in the 1970s. There were extensive modernisations in the 1990s, at a cost of around £6 million, including new link corridors, Library, Music and Special Educational Needs Department. The buildings have multiplied and it is now the largest secondary school in the Scottish Borders, with about 1,000 pupils.
Highsidelees

School Inspectors’ Reports for 1915–39 are in the National Archives, as are Leaving Exam results 1940–45.

Highsidelees (hl-sid-leez) n. possible name of a farmstead near Teviothead, near Falnash and Lairhope (marked ‘Hiesyidlies’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

the High Street (thu-hi-stree’) n. the main public road or highway through the centre of Hawick, once forming a large fraction of the inhabited part of the town. Earlier names include the ‘public strict’, ‘the hei gate’, ‘the common gait’, the King’s High Street’ and ‘the common Heigh Street’, with the modern name appearing by the end of the 18th century. The street has seen many changes, being renovated in 1715 and repaved in 1721, and having the gates removed in the latter part of the 18th century. It was repaved (along with the Howegate etc.) in the late 1780s, and many of the outside staircases were removed in 1791. In the late 18th century almost all the houses were still roofed with either thatch or turf. Lighting appeared first in the 1830s and the granite sets were only lifted in 1962. Some of the last thatched houses (roughly opposite the Town Hall, and sticking out into the pavement) were demolished in 1879. The street was made one-way in 2007. House numbering probably happened in Hawick first on the High Street, but not formally until the mid-19th century; there were no numbers given in the first census of 1841, while the numbering in the 1851 census started at the other end of the Street and without the odd/even split! The sides are normally referred to as the ‘north’ and ‘south’ sides, even although they are closer to being ‘west’ and ‘east’. In the 1537 there were 80 ‘particates’ on the south side and 48 on the north side. The north (or west) side has odd numbers, while the south (or east) side has even numbers. One of the earliest surviving buildings is the pended house at No. 51, while Nos. 24–26 are late 18th century, and parts of many early houses surely survive within the mainly 19th century buildings. The Town Hall dominates the centre of the Street, built 1884–86 to replace an earlier ‘Town House’ and even earlier Tolbooth. The centre of the street is the foot of the Cross Wynd where the Market Cross stood until 1762. The bulk of the buildings date from the second half of the 19th century, with several of the particularly elaborate ones being originally built to be banks. Prominent unifying design features are the eaves course linking the upper windows, as well as the continuous hoodmoulds above the first floor windows; the original designer of these features is unknown. The High Street remains the focus for shopping and other activity in the town, and is usually referred to simply as ‘the Street’. A bronze ring-brooch from around 1400 was found in 1956 during building work at No. 48. Many of the buildings on the High Street are listed (it is ‘Heigh Street of Hawicke’ in 1688).

High Tofts Quarry (hl-tofts-kwa-ree) n. former quarry near the farm of Upper Tofts. It was around here that geologist David Milne-Home used to illustrate his theory of lava filling up a crack in the rock, to explain the basaltic dyke crossing part of Roxburghshire.

Hightreis (hl-triz) n. Hightrees, former name for lands in Liddesdale, connected with Mangerston estate. They are listed on a rental roll of c.1376 as ‘Hetres’ associated with Mangerston, with a value of 18 shillings, and also as ‘Hetreis’ associated with Ermildon, with a value of 15 shillings; this suggests the lands were in 2 parts. On the 1541 rental roll ‘The Hie Treis’ were valued at 16 shillings, with tenants Robert and David Elliot. ‘Neather Hietreis’ was listed among the farms possessed by Gavin Elliot in 1632 and ‘Hietreip’ (presumably a transcription error) among the possessions of Hab Henderson. It is probably the same place as ‘Hietrels’ marked on Blaeu’s c.1654 map west of Thorlieshope. It is presumably the same as the farm of ‘Hightree’, where there were Armstrongs in the 18th century. It was presumably close to Hightrees Cleuch. It was combined with Highhouse, Howden, Harden and Burnmouth on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, although its precise location is not shown.

Hightreis Cleuch (hl-triz-klooch) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded as ‘Hietreeluchis’ on the 1541 rental roll. The tenant was Matthew Nixon and they were valued at 15 shillings. It is probably the ‘Hetherclewes’ listed in 1544, when Matthew Nixon from there was among Scotsmen.
Hi-I-Obby (hi-I-o-bee) n. nickname of Robert Aitken – ‘Anon Jock Bewlie shuffles by, And Hee Hi hobbles ahint pell-mell; There’s Jamie Jolly watchin’ a skly, And Daft Jamie ringin’ St. Mary’s bell’ [HI] (there are various spellings).

Hill (hil) n. former farmstead in Jedforest, probably near Mervinslaw and Cleithaugh. Thomas Oliver was the tenant there in 1669.

Hill (hil) n. David (1755–1836) carrier who lived at the Mid Raw. He ran his cart to the Newcastleton area once a week. He is mentioned in the poem ‘At Easter’ by David Hill (his descendant). He married Agnes Waugh, who died in 1832, aged 75. Their children included: Isabel (1776–1832), baptised in Southdean Parish; and Thomas (1787–1824), baptised in Ancrum Parish, who was a minister in Montreal. He and his family are buried at St. Mary’s. He was surely related to James (son of Thomas) who was a carrier from at least 1841. David Octavius (18th/19th C.) described as a ‘Supervisor’ in Hawick in 1815. He married Elizabeth Scott and their son Alexander was born in 1815, the witnesses being excise officer Robert Turnbull and his wife, Ann Scott. David Octavius (1802–70) painter and pioneering photographer. His enormous painting of the Disruption of 1843, the First General Assembly of the Free Church of Scotland, is well-known, and its execution introduced him to Robert Adamson and the technique of photography. The pair established a partnership that revolutionised photography as an artistic medium. In 1835 he painted a landscape view of Hawick, taken from around Wilton Hill. David ‘Davie’ (1911–1977) prolific local poet, born in the Westend, and educated at Drumlanrig and the High School. He worked in advertising for one of the local mills, then volunteered for the R.A.F., returning after the War to work in the family firm making Hawick Balls. He befriended poet Hugh MacDiarmid, and contributed regularly to the Hawick News and Hawick Express. He wrote the well known poems ‘The Vertish’, ‘Shundert’, ‘The Spetchman’s Sang’, ‘Robbie Dye’, ‘The Bleach’, and many more, as well as some fiction and a play, ‘The Sow’s Lug’. A short-story, ‘Thirty Six Hours’, about a young soldier from the Borders, was published in 1944 and he had several pieces broadcast on the radio. He was a founder member of the Camera Club and active in the Callants’ Club and Archaeological Society. A collection of his poetry finally appeared in 2011, called ‘Ain Gait’, on the 100th anniversary of his birth. He married Robertina (‘Ina’) Scott Morrison, from Langholm. They had a son, David Andrew and a daughter Christine Morrison. George (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Janet Jackson and their daughter Jean was baptised in 1687, with witnesses Thomas Henderson and George Ormiston. James (16th/17th C.) granted a half husbandland of land in Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. James (17th C.) resident at Newhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. James (18th C.) gardener at Knowesouth in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for Thomas Rutherford. James (b.1799/1800) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was a carpenter at Borthwickbrae Cottages. His wife was Margaret and their children included Euphemia, David, John, Margaret, William, Mary, George and Helen. He may be the James, son of Peter, baptised in Hobkirk in 1796. Rev. James minister of Teviothead Kirk 1940–63. During his first year he acted as junior minister to James Livingston. James (b.1816) son of Thomas, he was a carrier on the Mid Row. He is recorded there in 1841, with wife Agnes and children David and Jane. In Pigot’s 1837 directory he is recorded running a weekly service between Newcastleton and Hawick, leaving from the Mid Row every Tuesday. In 1851 his wife was a widow, living at about 7 Mid Row with her mother and siblings. He married Agnes, daughter of cabinetmaker John Scott. Their children were David (ancestor of the Hawick Balls family), Jane, Jemima and Robert. John (16th/17th C.) listed after several Armstrong of the house of Whithaugh in a 1601 list of men who were said by the English to be outlaws under the Laird of Buccleuch. He thus presumably lived in Liddesdale and was an associate of the Armstrongs. John (17th C.) listed as tenant at Mervinslaw in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Rev. Rowland (1744–1833) English evangelist, who did much to establish Sunday Schools in Scotland, against the will of the established church. He visited Scotland in 1798 and described a Hawick funeral in his diary. Sir Rowland (1795–1879) English educator and postal reformer. He invented a rotary printing press and developed a system of pre-paid penny postage that revolutionised communications, and

He invented a rotary printing press and developed a system of pre-paid penny postage that revolutionised communications, and for which Hawick made him an Honorary Burgess in 1844. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident at Has sendeanburn. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Thomas (b.1774/5) from Langholm, he was a saddler on the High Street. He is listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories and Slater’s 1852 directory. His shop was at about No. 28 in 1851. He married Mary Nichol and their children included Robert, James (b.1816) and Annie. Thomas (1787–1824) baptised in Ancrum Parish, he was son of David, who was a carrier in Hawick. He was ordained in 1818 as minister of the Burgher congregation in Glenluce. However, there was soon a dispute over his behaviour, ending with him being rebuked by his Presbytery and he demitted in 1820. He then spent some time in Hawick, before appealing to the Burgher Synod in 1822 to be reinstated. This was agreed to about a year later. He then emigrated to Canada, acting as assistant to Rev. Easton in Montreal, where he died suddenly. William (17th C.) cottar at Apple treehall according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the William who witnessed a Hassendean baptism for Robert Ormiston and Marion Hill (who may have been his daughter). William (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1710 he was found guilty of ‘egregious ryotts’ in St. Mary’s Kirk. The witnesses saw him ‘stryke twyce Wm. Greenshiels with ane staff and thereafter Wm. Greenshiels strike at him with his bonnet’, this during the reading of the scriptures. He married Janet Sanderson and their children included John (b.1709) and Thomas (b.1722). The witnesses in 1720 were Bailies Walter Graham and George Martin. William ‘Bill’ (1941– ) born in Hawick, he was educated at Trinity, Burnfoot and the High School. In Hawick he was in the Cycling Club and the Saxhorn Band. Moving to Edinburgh in 1959, he worked in local government and education. He formed a folk trio there with Tom Smith and Jean Brooks, called The Caern, with him on vocals, banjo and guitar. They released ‘Introducing The Caern, a Collection of Scotch Folk’ in 1969 (which included a version of ‘Kinly Stick’), as well as ‘Irish Folk Favourites’ (1971) and ‘Welcome to Ireland’ with The Bards (1997). They toured with Jimmy Shand and appeared on television. As a solo artist he recorded ‘Miscellaneous Dross’ (1974) and ‘Bill Hill’s Police Record’ (1978). Several of his songs, such as ‘The Portree Kid’, ‘The Scottish Holiday’ and ‘The Sunday Driver’ were regularly in the repertoire of bands such as the Corries. He presented ‘Folkspun’ on Radio Forth for a couple of years and has been a popular after dinner speaker as well as Edinburgh tour guide.

the Hill (thu-hil) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, seat of a branch of the Elliots. ‘Joanni de lie Hill’ is recorded in 1541, Mark callit of the Hill’ in 1564, and Archie and Jock of the Hill in the 1580s. They were related to the Elliots of Ramsiegill according to the letter of 1583 from the English wardens. Archie Elliot of the Hill and ‘Johne Ellot of the Hill’ are recorded in 1611. It is listed among the lands in Liddesdale held by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs in 1632 (and listed among rentals of Kelso Abbey). It is unclear where this place was located, but it is possibly the same as Laws Hill, which was formerly the lands of Laws.

Hill Burn (hil-burn) n. small stream in Minto Parish, rising on the west side of the Minto Hills and running south to join the Grinding Burn. There are remains of rig and furrow lines on both sides of the burn (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Hillend (hil-end) n. former name for lands near Commonsidie in upper Tevioldale. In 1591 these lands, along with Commonside, Northcroft and ‘Stoghill’ were already occupied by Gilbert Elliot when leased to him by Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch.

Hillend Drive (hil-end-driv) n. part of Burnfoot, built in 1953, with gap sites filled in around 1963. It was named after ‘Hillend Plantin’, a popular name for the plantation there. During WWII the area was trenched for army training.

Hillend Parks (hil-end-pawrks) n. former name for lands on Minto estate. It was listed in 1779 and 1811 along with Coach Park, with a value of £72 17s 6d. Several small pieces are also listed as ‘House and Yard at Hill-end’, suggesting that there were cottages there. It was also listed in 1779 as ‘Hill-ends-park’ in a description of the boundaries of Minto Townhead.

Hillend Plantin (hil-end-plawn’-in) n. local pronunciation of ‘Hillend Plantation’, formerly on Burnfoot farm, lying on a small hillock east of the main road, between Burnfoot Road and the Apple treehall road.

hill-forts (hil-fórts) n., pl. archaeological sites generally composed of ramparts and ditches around an enclosure, often with signs of buildings on the insides. Usually they have not been excavated, and so the designation is based on morphology only. They date back to the Iron Age, peaking not long before Roman occupation, although some may have been inhabited as far back as the Bronze Age and some well into the Middle Ages. The smallest probably contained a single dwelling, while the largest housed whole communities, although whether they were used permanently or only during periods of perceived danger is unknown. The bulk of them are near the summits of hills, which peaked up above the forests in the valleys below. There are more than 300 such sites identified in the Scottish Borders and over 100 in Roxburghshire alone, with many more designated as ‘earthworks’, ‘settlements’ or ‘enclosures’. The hills around Hawick, particularly to the south, have many of these fortified settlements. The Slitrig valley alone has had about a dozen identified, the first list of 13 being made by Sir James Murray in 1863.

Hill Heid (hil-heed) n. hill in the region east of where the Teviot and the Allan meet. There are the remains of a fort between here and the old farmstead of Newbigging.

Hillheid (hil-heed) n. Hillhead, farm to the east of Lilliesleaf, between Chapel farm and Craggs farm. John Young was farmer there in 1841 and Robert and John Smail in the 1850s and 60s. A nearby enclosure was excavated in 1998, discovering it to be a complicated multi-epoch settlement, including evidence of habitation in the Iron Age and Roman times.

the Hillheid (thu-hi-hi-heed) n. local name for the area around Denholmhill. In the late 19th century it was said to be still possible to see stones that had been placed there to mark individual Denholm Feuar’s portions of the Common – ‘. . . and the ridge between Denholm and Ruberslaw known as the Hillhead (where this rock is quarried as road metal’) [JAHM].

Hillheid Hoose (hil-heed-hoos) n. Victorian villa in Hawick, designed by John Thomas Rochead in 1863. It may have been given a different name.

Hillhouse (hil-hoos) n. Hillhouse, farmstead in Liddesdale, to the east of Newcastleton, on the Tweed Burn. A tower is marked on Blaeu’s c.1654 map, and it may correspond to the position of ‘Louselaw’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; it is said that the foundations existed in 1795 and the location was pointed out to the Ordnance Survey in 1858. This site (where no solid evidence has been found) is in the forest of Hillhouse Wood near Castle Hill. This may be the main house shown on the farm on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, on Gall Sike to the east of Dykecrofts Cottage on modern maps. In 1718 the farm was combined with Baxtongill, consisting of 383 acres, bounded by Potterlamport, Whithaugh, Nolt-laith and Chingills. The southern boundary was the Tweed Burn and Whithaugh Burn was to the north. It also shared a common of 37 acres with Potterlamport. William Scott, was described as ‘in Hillhous’ in 1528 when he was one of the arbitrators for deciding on succession to the Borthaugh lands. Ninian Teviot ‘of the Hillhous’ was among Liddesdale men accused of stealing horses from near Hexham in 1579. Hector Armstrong ‘of the Hillhouse’ was accused of rieving in 1587/8. ‘Hob of Whithaugh’ son to John Eamont of Hillhouse’ (presumably an Armstrong) is recorded in 1590. This is probably the ‘Hilhous’ where Thomas Crozier was in 1623. Gavin Elliot of Hillhouse is one of 3 men who were meant to have planned the murder of Walter Scott of Buccleuch in a foiled plot of 1624, part of a feud between the Elliotts and the Scotts. Elizabeth Elliott, daughter of ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters’ married John Turnbull of Minto in 1641, and after her husband died lived at Hillhouse. ‘Geordie Rackesse of the Hillhouse’ is recorded as a cattle thief in about 1645. William, son of Robert Elliot of Redheugh, was tenant there in the late 18th century. It may also have been known as Tweedenbank (formerly ‘Hillhouse’ and variants such as ‘Halhouse’ and ‘Hilhouse’; it is indicated near the head of what looks like the Tweed Burn on Pont’s original 1608 map; it may be that some of the references are to other places with the same name).

Hillhouse (hil-hoos) n. possible name for lands in Rulewater. It may be that this is the same place as the lands in Liddesdale, or that there are 2 different places that are confused. In a pardon of 1516 for a large number of Turnbuls for any part in assisting the Hones in plotting against the King, we find ‘James Turnbull in Hillhouse’ and ‘Fergus Turnbull there’. They are listed among the Turnbuls of Hallrule, but it is unclear where these lands might have been.

Hillhouse (hil-hoos) n. Hillhouse, cottage on the former Minto estate, situated to the east of the old churchyard. In 1788 (and repeated in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811) ‘Hillhouse park’ was valued at £32 15s 10d.

Hillhouse Wud (hil-hoos-wud) n. Hillhouse Wood, plantation near the farm of Hillhouse in Liddesdale. It is marked on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, shown on the north side of the Tweed Burn, and still shown in essentially the same place on modern maps.
Hillieside (hi-lee-sid) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the 1541 rental roll as ‘Heliesyde’. The lands were valued at 5 merks and were vacant at that time. It is unclear exactly where these lands were.

Hilliesland (hil-eez-lind) n. home of a branch of the Gladstains family in the 17th and 18th centuries. The proprietors were Town Clerks for about 110 years, with only short intervals. It was once a separate hamlet, with several cottages, although there is now no sign of its former population. In 1627 it was described as a land ‘paying 12 bolls, estimat to 8 in stok, 2 in teynd’ annually. The land corresponds roughly to the area immediately west of Kaimend farm, i.e. the land beyond what would be called the Wellogate. Walter Gladstains of Hilliesland paid the land tax on £66 13s 4d in 1643 and John Gladstains in 1678. It is shown in a survey of the lands belonging to the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718, as an enclave within the East Mains of Hawick, covering 37 acres, including the modern Mossills Loch on the north and extending to the Wellogate Brae on the south. The main house was situated near Hilliesland Moss (or Loch, a marshy area to the north of Ewen’s Loch), and the garden wall was still visible in the early 19th century. It is said that until about the mid-18th century the Laird’s herd was pastured along with the Hawick Town Herd (presumably because the Laird was a Burgess of Hawick, owning several houses in the Town). George Johnston was tenant there in 1709. The land was later owned by the Duke of Buccleuch, and up until the early 20th century had fields rented by farmers, known jocularly as ‘Hilliesland Lairds’, who had their barns and stables in town. In 1788 it was ‘Haly’s land, or Hill’s land’ when valued at £66 13s 4d as part of the properties of the Duke of Buccleuch. It still had the same value in 1811 – ‘I see again each knowe and knoll, Each memory spot, each gable end, Frae Lynnwood doon tae Horns-Hole – Frae Stirches ower tae Hilliesland’ [HI] (also written ‘Halysland’, ‘Hilhousland’, etc., it is ‘Hilliesland’ in 1627, ‘Hillieslands’ in 1678, ‘Hillhouse’ in 1684 and ‘Hilhousland’ in 1708 and 1717; it is probably the ‘Gallaslande’ mentioned by the English in 1548/9).

the Hilliesland Lairds (thu-hil-eez-lind-lairdz) n. former nickname for a group of minor landowners in the area above the Wellogate. This included the Aitkens of the Kirk Wynd, the Kyles, the Purdoms and the Hendersons. Some of the local ‘Laird’ nicknames may have applied to men who had such lands.

Hilliesland Loch (hil-eez-lind-loch) n. small body of water out beyond the Wellogate Brae by Kaimend, formerly referring to a lake which is now filled in, which lay on the town side of the Kaimend Hills, north of the smaller Ewen’s Loch. It still has a farm track running along its south side, and a boundary following the contours along its irregular north side. It was used as a skating pond in the latter part of the 19th century, at a nominal rent from the Duke of Buccleuch, and earlier had been used for curling matches (it is clearly marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map as ‘Hillsland Loch’).

Hilliesland Moss (hil-eez-lind-mos) n. another name for Hilliesland Loch.

the Hillock (hu-nil-ok) n. former name for an area on the Wells estate. As factor of the estate, Archibald Jerdan described how timber cut from the ‘Hilloch’ was sold. It is unclear exactly where this was.

Hill Park (hil-pawrk) n. name for the field on Hawick Common, between St. Leonard’s and Flex farms, bounded by Golf Course Park and Flex Lodge Park.

Hill Pond (hil-pound) n. small pond east of Bedrule, near the northern boundary of Southdean Parish. It drains into Fulton Burn. To its east is a linear earthwork, which could be part of a boundary line linking streams between the Rule and Jed Waters (like another feature crossing the north of Black Law); its age is unknown.

the Hill Road ti Roberton (thu-hil-ro-d-ti-ro-bur’in) n. road from Ashkirk over towards Roberton, connecting the Ale valley with the Borthwick valley, made famous in Will Ogilvie’s poem of the same name – ‘The hill road to Roberton, Ale Water at our feet, And grey hills and blue hills that melt away and meet, With cotton-flowers that wave to us and lone whaups that call, And over all the Border mist – the soft mist over all’ [WHO].

Hills (hilz) n. George (d.1931) son of William and Mary Miller. He wrote ‘Amor Patriae and other verses’, published by W. & J. Kennedy in 1929. William (19th/20th C.) saddler of 4 Oliver Place. He married Mary, daughter of shoemaker John Miller. Their children were Agnes, Mary and George.

Hillshaugh (hilz-hawch) n. former farm in Hobkirk Parish, just north of Tythehouse. It was the residence of the Dalkeith family through much of the 18th and all of the 19th centuries. James Scott was there in 1786, mason Alexander Dalgelish in 1790 and George Adamson is recorded as tenant there in 1797 (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Hillside (hil-sid) n. former name for a private school in the latter part of the 19th century run by Miss A. Scott, possibly the same as Heron Hill.

Hillslap (hil-slapw) n. ‘L-plan’ tower 2 miles west of Melrose, where the Allan Water joins the Tweed, built around 1585, but ruined until restored in the 1980s as a home (during which excavations were also carried out). It has been suggested it was the model for Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Glendearg’ (in ‘the Monastery’), to which its name was changed, and has also known been known as ‘Calfhill’. The original Laird was Nichol after performing an operation on a farmer at Upper Toft. He was presumably from the family of woollen manufacturers in Jedburgh. James Lindsay (1855–1928) Jedburgh local historian who wrote many articles about Border history in the early part of the 20th century.

the Hilton (thu-hil-in) n. former name for lands in ‘Wester Hassingden’ (i.e. Hassendean), as transcribed from a document of 1588, where Robert Douglas of Nether Hassendean and ‘Robert Scot there’ were ordered to turn over to the Lords of Council and Session all documents related to this place. hirdit (hir-dde’, -di) pp. herded – ‘Dirlin daized caesaments, still, wi the roll O’ Dunnottar’s hirit deid ...’ [DH].

hirds (hirdz) n., pl. shepherds, herdsmen. It is estimated that at one point perhaps as much as a quarter of the able-bodied men in the Borders worked as shepherds. This fraction decreased dramatically when fences and dykes were built at the end of the 17th century. Before the 20th century the occupation was usually hereditary, and shepherd’s families were often better educated that those of most farm servants; Tancred suggests this is because they were descended from younger sons of Lairds. The size of a flock in the Border hills was typically around 40, with free cottage and peats as well as a quantity of grains given in exchange for the labour. Until the mid-19th century the blue bonnet and plaid were widely worn.

hirin (hi-rin) n., arch. a baking with rich ingredients.

hirin fair (hi-rin-far) n. a fair or market held for the purpose of engaging farm servants and labourers, but also as a focus for general entertainments. These were traditionally around the Whitsunday and Martinmas ‘term days’, corresponding to the May and November Hiring Fairs in Hawick. The practice was formally abolished in Scotland in 1939 – ‘Reels and schottisches till the reid sun’s sinkin’, Syne in the cool nicht air, Lads and lasses in their pairs gang linkin’ Hame frae the Hiring Fair’ [WL].

hirple (hir-pul) v. to hobble, limp – ‘there he is hirpling along the Street as usual’, ‘...puss had ‘hirpled thrice withershins’ round house, and then suddenly made a spring to the riggin ...’ [EM1820], ‘A was nae hippeet heipalt, heis farm at the end of where the sd. bayleya was sittand in William Elliot his houss ...’ [1693] (see also eis, beis, hes).

hirsel (hir-sul) n. a flock (particularly of sheep) – ‘...depones he gave way to the hirsel under the charge of their Herd because it was a weighty hirsel or a meikle hirsel, and he (the Deponent) had no will to maigar or mix his charge with the Hawick hirsel’ [C&L1767], ‘Acquant me wi’ whare thou mak’st thy hirsel til rest at nun’ [HSR], ‘Like ane hirsel o’ sheepe ye led the peeples ...’ [HSR], ‘...and this system of management went on under the sagacious and pawkie herd until the minister’s wife had a scattered hirsel of sixteen ewes’ [WNK], ‘Childhood revels on the levels Where my hirsels graze’ [WL], land allotted to a shepherd, area of pasture under control of one shepherd – ‘The beat o’ sheep on hirsels green ...’ [WL], v., arch. to arrange in a flock – ‘Store-farming has been improved. Summer hirseling is given up, and ewe-milking done away’ [RJS].

the Hirsel (thu-hir-sul) n. country residence of Lord Home, near Coldstream, dating from the 17th century, but with many alterations. The grounds are open to the public, and contain the lake (constructed in 1786), as well as an extensive collection of well-preserved estate buildings, lodges, gates, bridges and follies (including a dovecote). Just to the north-west is the best-preserved motte hill in Berwickshire – ‘... Shall ever homage with thee lay, – The Hirsel yet for me! Elysian spot! while lasts a string, My lyre I’ll tune to thee’ [AS] (also spelled ‘Hirsell’).

hirse (hir-sul) v., arch. to move along in a sitting position, fold oneself up while sitting.

hirst (hirst) n., arch. harvest – ‘Yince, when aw was comin’ frae hirst ...’ [RM] (also hairst and herst).

hirst (hirst) n., arch. a hillock, unproductive piece of ground (the word survives in place names, e.g. Hasliehirst and Rouchhirst).

his (hiz) possessive, arch. formerly used in place of the possessive, in a peculiar sentence structure – ‘... William Douglas was onlawed and ammercate for ane exhorbitant marriage wt. Thomas Lune his daughter ...’ [BR1689], ‘... while the sd. bayleya was sittand in William Elliot his houss ...’ [1693] (see also eis, beis, hes).

Hislop (hiz-lop) n. farm at the end of where the Falnash road branches off at Teviothead. It was formerly also called ‘Hazelhope’ and is on the Hazelhope Burn and at the foot of Hazelhope Hill. In the earliest documents it is recorded separately as Easter and Wester Hislop, e.g. in a list of the lands that the Baron of Hawick held ‘in tenandry’ in 1511, 1572, 1594 and 1615. Matthew Graham is recorded there in 1502. In 1624 the lands were purchased from the Earl of Douglas by Robert Elliot of Falnash. In a 1627 Hawick Parish valuation it is stated to have ‘no corn growing thereon; estimat in stok to 100 lb., in teynd to 16’. In 1647 Archibald Elliot of Falnash was served heir to his father’s 10 merk land there. The lands were owned by the Scotts of Crumhaugh from 1674. The Easter and Wester farms were among those inherited by Sir Francis Scott of Thirlestane from his brother Walter in 1695. William Hislop was there in 1698. By 1707 it was valued along with Ramsaycleuch at £549 4s. Michael Anderson of Tushielaw owned ‘the lands of Hislops, Easter and Wester’ in the early 18th century, passing them in 1714 to his son, also Michael. Archibald Scott was tenant in at least 1709–11. By 1788 it was owned by Mrs. Anderson of Tushielaw. The herds recorded there in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls were John Scott and John (or perhaps James) Govenlock. In 1811 the lands were valued along with Ramsaycleuchburn at £549 4s, when owned by the Andersons of Tushielaw. B.T.G. Anderson was recorded as owner in about 1874. A coin from the reign of Alexander III was unearthed from there in the 19th century, along with several others said (in 1839) to have been found there, with a couple in the possession of John Grieve of Branxholme Braes. It is possible that the place gave rise to the surname, but this is unknown (the name first appeared in 1502 as ‘hesliop’, is ‘Heslyhope’ and ‘Heslihop’ in 1511, ‘Hislehoip’ in 1547, ‘Heslyhope’ in 1572, ‘Hessilhoip’ in 1594, ‘Heissilhoip’ in 1615, ‘Hesilope’ in 1627 and 1674, ‘Hissilhoipes’ in 1647, ‘Hesilopes’ in 1695 and ‘Hieslop’ in 1761; the origin is Old English ‘haesel hop’, meaning ‘the valley of the hazels’).

Hislop (his-lup, his-lop) n. Adam (17th C.) resident at Newton (near Stobs) in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. He is listed right after John, and hence presumably related. Adam (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. In 1690 he witnessed a baptism for Thomas Scott and Jean Hislop (perhaps his daughter or sister). Alexander (17th/18th C.) tailor and Burgess in Hawick. In 1684 he had a charter of disposition for a piece of land in the East Mains of Hawick, which he gained from Patrick Cunningham. He disposed this to his wife Bessie Ruecastle in 1688. He was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’. He was probably a a member of the Hawick Council and in 1701 was one of those appointed to collect the ‘stent’ money ‘east the water’. He is probably the Alexander who witnessed a baptism for Walter Purdom in 1676 and another for John Aitkin in 1699. He is recorded as a tailor when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Henderson in Hawick in 1701 and another for James Laidlaw (in Branxholme Town) in 1702. In 1711 he (along with fellow tailor William Gledstains) witnessed a baptism for carrier William Rae. His children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included: Robert (b.1670); and Bessie (b.1672). He may be the Alexander who in 1676, along with Adam Young, was found guilty of using a ‘half-pecke ane inch short or thereby’. Alexander (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick, probably son of the earlier Alexander. He married Alison McLeUan and their son John was baptised in 1705. These other children baptised in Hawick Parish were probably also his: Marion (b.1694); Janet (b.1696); Margaret (b.1697); Alison (b.1700); Marion (again, b.1703); James (b.1707); and John (b.1710). The witnesses in 1700 were Patrick McLeUan, merchant Walter Oliver and Henry Orrock, and in 1705 were Burgh Officer Alexander Scott and tailor James Turnbull. Alexander (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was living at Howcleuch in 1710. His children included: John (b.1702); Margaret (b.1703); Helen (b.1705); and Margaret (again, b.1710). Andrew (17th/18th C.) shepherd at Headshaw. He married Isobel Brown and their son John was baptised in Ashkirk in 1703. Andrew (17th/18th C.) resident of Chisholme. His daughter Isabel was baptised in Robertson parish in 1703. He could be the Andrew whose daughter Jean married William Scott in Selkirk in 1726. Andrew James (19th/20th C.) lived at 60 High Street. He served as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. Archibald (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1501/2 as ‘Archibald Hesilop, vtherwais callit Schir Suythe’ when he had remission for resetting some Rutherfords, who were rebels at the time. It is unclear where he was from. A.J. (19th/20th C.) Bailie who was involved with setting up the P.S.A. rugby team. Christopher (b.c.1795) farmer at Teviothaugh in 1841. His wife was Ann and their children included Peter, George and Christopher. Rev. David (c.1833-1904) born in Leadhills, he graduated B.A. from Glasgow University in 1858, then attended the Glasgow Evangelical Union Hall, becoming Evangelical Union minister at Montrose and then Leith. He served as minister at the Evangelical Union Church (later the Congregational Church) in Hawick in the late 19th century. He was the first officially E.U. minister to preach there, visiting for about 5 Sundays in 1858, and turning down a ‘call’ to Hawick the following year. In 1862 he became minister in Leith, and accepted a new call from Hawick in 1864, following Robert Mitchell’s sudden departure. He remained until 1902, increasing the membership to 400. Since some of the congregation came from far afield, he would travel out to Bedrule, Ettrick, etc. in a gig. In his day Sundays consisted of a Morning Fellowship, followed by 2 sermons, the Sabbath School in the afternoon and an evening bible class. He was seriously ill for the first half of 1880, but recovered. He was friendly with Rev. Dr. Macrae and other Established Kirk ministers, unlike some of his E.U. predecessors. He became ill again in 1902, and a trip to the Canary Islands being of little help, he resigned that year and was made Honorary Pastor. Following his death 2 years later, a memorial plaque was placed on the east side of the former apse of the church. His brother Robert, minister in Glasgow, married Susan, daughter of Walter Wilson of Orchard. He appears to have married Jane Borthwick Holdway and their children included: Isabell C. (b.c.1864); Christina Grace (b.1871), born in Hawick; and David (b.1873), born in Hawick. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ nee Ruecastle (17th C.) wife of tailor Alexander. In 1688 her husband transferred a croft of land in East Mains to her. She could be the Elizabeth who was born to Robert Ruecastle and Janet Scott in Hawick in 1650. Emma nee Elliot (d.1866) daughter of Hugh Elliot, her uncle was the 1st Earl of Minto. She is recorded as ‘Mrs. Hislop, Minto-House in 1825 when she subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. She married Sir Thomas, Baronet Hislop. Her daughter Emma Eleanor Elizabeth (b.1824) married William Hugh Elliot-Murray-Kynynmound, 3rd Earl of Minto (with the couple being first cousins). George (16th C.) farmer at Town-o-Rule. His dwelling house and yard are listed in the Baronial dispute over Feu-Rule in 1562. George (16th C.) listed at Swinside among men accused of raiding a farm in England in 1587. ‘Dande Heslopp’ was also listed. He was also accused of raiding another farm in 1588. George (b.1801/2) cartter at Hassendeanburn in 1861. His wife was Margaret and their children included Jane and Elizabeth. Helen (17th/18th C.) recorded at Mervisnawl in the Wilton session book for 1707. She confessed to being ‘with Child’, the father being an Oliver, servant to the Laird of Langlands, who had fled the area. James (17th C.) resident of Colterscleuch on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. James (17th/18th C.) resident at Lairhope in 1698 when his son William was baptised. The witnesses were William (whose own child had been baptised the day before) and James Laidlaw. James (b.c.1795) from England, he worked as a ‘Lime quarry man’ at Larriston Rigg. In 1841 he was living there with his wife Mary and children John, James and Annie. James (b.1831/2) baker on the High Street. He was tried in 1857 for the murder of his wife Isabella on the High Street. James ‘the Gallopin Chairger’ (d.1902) cadger (i.e. carrier) who moved to Hawick and lived beside the ‘Cadger’s Well’ for about 40 years. He regularly carried his goods to Riccarton. His nickname came from the snail-like pace of his working horse. Janet (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. John (17th C.) resident at Newton (near Stobs) in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. He was presumably related to the Adam who was also listed there. John (17th C.) resident at Chapelhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (18th C.) shepherd at Gorrenberry in about 1750. He must have been related to Walter and Jean, who were hired about the same time, and also Jean. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Broadlee in 1767, Dearnburnhaugh in 1768 and 1772 and Woodburn in 1774. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included Margaret (b.1767), Agnes (b.1769), John (b.1772) and William (b.1774). John (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (b.c.1772) hosiery manufacturer and draper on the High Street. He is recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and John & Co. is listed in the 1837 and 1852 directories. He is probably the John from Hawick who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was listed among a group of 10 men who had been denied their claim to be on the electoral roll in Selkirkshire on the basis of joint life-rent there. In 1841 he was at about 15 High Street in 1841; he lived there with Helen, probably his wife, along with 2 servants and 2 draper’s apprentices. John (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He probably had a local connection. John (b.1804/5) originally from Selkirk, he was a grocer and spirit dealer at about 60 High Street. He is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Jane and their children included Isabella, John, Thomas, Jane and Margaret. John (b.1797/8) shepherd at Knowehead near Newcastleton in the 1850s. He was listed among heads of households in Castleton Parish in 1836–41. His wife was Helen and their children included Isabella, Robert, Mary, Margaret and William. He was probably dead by 1861, when his son Robert was shepherd at Knowehead. John (b.c.1817) cabinet-maker living on Needle Street in 1841. His wife was Mary and they had a son, Robert. Martha (b.c.1775) baker, recorded at about 21 Howeagate in 1841. She was presumably widow of the former head of the family. Their children included James and Betty. Mary (18th C.) cook at Stobs in 1785 and 1786, when she was working for Sir Francis Elliott. Presumably the same person is listed as ‘Nanny Hyslop’ in 1789 and 1791, still cook at Stobs. Nicholas (15th C.) witness to the document of 1488 in which Greenwood (i.e. Girnwood) and the Lyne were leased by Sir Thomas Turnbull to Robert Scott of Allanhaugh. It was signed at St. Mary’s Church in Ettrick Forest and his name appears as ‘Nicholao
Hislop

Hislop Gairdens

Ninian (18th/19th C.) shepherd at ‘Kittylinns’ (i.e. Kidd’s Linn) in Castleton Parish. He is listed among male heads of households in 1835 and 1836–38. In 1840 and 1841 he was at ‘Stanehillburnfoot’ Walter, listed at Stanehillburnfoot was surely related. Robert (16th C.) listed as ‘Ronet Hislip’ among the tenants of the lands of Newton in Bedrule in 1531. Robert (b.1839/40) son of shepherd John. Like his father he was shepherd at Knowehead near Newcastleton. Robert (19th/20th C.) son of Robert and Johanna Edmondson and nephew of Bailie Stephen Anderson. He was Sheriff Clerk Depute in Hawick. Robert Steven ‘Steve’ (1962–2003), also known as ‘Hizzy’, from a local motor-biking family. He was born in Hawick and grew up in Chesters, attending Jedburgh Grammar School. He won his first T.T. race in 1987, eventually winning 11 races there, including 3 races in both 1989 and 1991, and breaking the 120 m.p.h. barrier for the first time. He is also remembered for winning on a Norton in 1992, the last victory by an all-British machine. In 1990 he won the British 250cc Supercup, he was world champion in endurance racing in 1993 and British Superbike Champion in 2002, despite suffering horrendous injuries that year, and breaking his neck in 2000. He lived on the Isle of Man and published an autobiography ‘Hizzy’ in 2003. He was training to be a helicopter pilot, but crashed near Caerlenrig. An exhibition of his life and memorabilia was set up in Drumlanrig’s Tower. There are memorial statues in the Cemetery (unveiled in 2005, a full-scale representation, looking over at his hero Jimmie Guthrie) and on the Isle of Man, and he is buried in Southdean graveyard – ‘Farewell to a brave Border callant, the Isle of Man, and he is buried in Southdean’ [TD]. Simon (15th C.) witnessed in 1482 to the resignation of the lands of Mangerton, made at Branxholme. He is recorded as ‘domino Symone Hiseliop capellano’ and appears after the Rector of Southdean; he was this a chaplain, but of which parish is unclear. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Thoama Hiselop’ in 1501 when he witnessed a document relating to the lands of Lairs for the Douglases of Drumlanrig. Thomas (b.1806/7) born in Cavers Parish, he was a clock-maker in Hawick. He was living on the Fore Raw in 1851 and was listed as a clockmaker on ‘Front row’ in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1861 he was at 8 Fore Row. His wife was Ellen, from Perthshire, and their children included James and Jean Walter (18th C.) shepherd hired at Gorrenberry in about 1750. Walter (b.1800/1) from England, he was a labourer and roadman in Castleton Parish. He is listed among heads of households in 1835–41, when he was living at ‘Staneihlburnfoot’ and Brighouse. His wife was Agnes and their children included Ninian, Betty, Anne, John, Margaret, Mary, Walter, William and Jemima. The family emigrated to America in 1842. Walter (b.1800/1) born in Liliesleaf Parish, he was farm steward at Deanbrae in Cavers Parish in 1861. William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Hislop. His son William was baptised in 1698. Archibald and John Scott were witnesses. He himself witnessed a baptism for James in Lairhope on the following day. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1712 he was recorded as ‘servitor to Walter Nickson in Hawicksheels’. He later lived at Over Southfield. He was described as a ‘workman’ in 1721. He married Agnes ‘Lateth’ (or ‘Lauder’) in Hawick Parish in 1711. Their children included: William (b.1712); Christian (b.1716); John (b.1719); Robert (b.1721); Bessie (b.1724); and Margaret (b.1725). The witnesses in 1712 were Walter Nixon and Walter Scott, both tenants in Hawick Shiel and in 1721 were Walter Nixon and James Grieve. William (18th/19th C.) labourer at Old Castleton. He was recorded among heads of households in the Parish for the first time in 1837, when he was a roadman from Oakenshaw Toll, England. He was listed at Old Castleton in 1840 and 1841. He emigrated to America about that time. William (b.1809/10) agricultural labourer in the Hermitage area. In 1841 he was at Florida (or Dykeraw). In 1861 he was living at Old Dykecrofts, but in 1868 was listed as farmer at Gorrenberry. His wife was Mary (formerly spelled ‘Heaslope’, ‘Heislop’, ‘Heislope’, ‘Hislope’, ‘Hyslip’, ‘Hyslop’, etc.).

Hobbie Noble (ho-bee-nō-bul) n. border ballad that first appeared in print in ‘Caw’s Poetical Museum’, published in Hawick in 1784. The origin of the manuscript was probably John Elliot of Redheugh. The hero of the poem is one Robert Noble, although it is unclear if he was based on a real person. He was an Englishman who had been banished and was residing with the Armstrongs of Liddesdale. ‘Sim o the Mains’ (a Scottish traitor) persuades him to go on a raid to England, and then tells the ‘land-sergeant’ there about his coming, so that he is captured. Brought back to Carlisle Hobbie refuses to confess, saying he would rather be a prisoner than a traitor – ‘Now Hobie was an English man, And born into Bewcastle dale; But his misdeeds they were sae great, They banish’d him to Liddesdale. Fala, &c.’ [CPM], ‘The laird’s Jock ane, the laird’s Wat twa; Oh! Hobie Noble thou ane maun be, They coat is blue, thou has been true, Since England banish’d thee to me’ [CPM].

Hobhouse (hob-hooz) n. John Cam 1786–1869) 1st Lord Broughton. Known as a great radical politician in his younger days, he was M.P. for Westminster and a friend of Lord Byron. In 1823 and again in 1824 he spent several days staying at Chisholme, the home of Charles Chisholme, the brother-in-law of his friend Edward Ellice. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825.

Hobkirk (hob-kirk, höp-kirk) n. village about 7 miles south-east of Hawick, and about 3/4 of a mile up the Rule Water from Bonchester. It still has a traditional ‘Baa’ game. It is also the name for the surrounding parish, which includes Bonchester, and which originally belonged to the canons of Jedburgh Abbey. It is essentially the same as the Barony of Feu-Rule, recorded until the mid-16th century (the name was first recorded in 1220 as ‘Hoppchirk’, and became became ‘Hopekirk’, ‘Hopkirk’ or ‘Hopes kirk’ through the 16th and 17th centuries, becoming corrupted to ‘Habkirk’, ‘Habskirk’, and finally ‘Hobkirk’ in the 18th century; it is marked ‘K. of Hoppkirck’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; the origin is probably Old English for ‘church in the valley’, or possibly Old Norse for ‘shelter church’).

Hobkirk (hob-kirk) n. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. He married Rebecca Turnbull in 1694. His daughter Janet was baptised in 1695. Adam (17th/18th C.) shepherd in Hawick Parish. In 1713 he was described as ‘tounherd in Hawick’, meaning that he served as the Town Herd. He was also shepherd for Thomas Kedie in Over Southfield and at Whitlaw. He married Bessie Laidlaw in Hawick in 1712 (when described as ‘herd in Whitalia’); she was ‘servitrix to Bailie Burn’. Their children included: John (b.1713); Robert (b.1715); and Agnes (b.1717). The witnesses in 1713 were Bailies James Burn and Robert Hardie. Perhaps the same Adam also married Margaret Laidlaw (unless this is the same woman and the name is an error) and had a daughter Margaret (b.1719). It is also possible that he was the James whose children baptised in Robertton Parish included James (b.1721), when he was at Parkhill. He was probably the shepherd recorded at Hummelknowes when his daughter Janet was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1723. Adam (1744/5–1809) probably from the Hawick area, he was a merchant in London and Jamaica. He was probably the Adam recorded returning to Kingston, Jamaica in 1774 and was in partnership with a Mr. Moore in 1779/80. His wife is recorded important goods for her shop in Kingston in 1779 and 1780, and also for posting a reward for the return of a runaway slave. He is recorded several times in Jamaica in the 1780s and up to 1794. He is likely to be the Adam from London who was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1784. He is probably the Adam of 34 Hart Street, Bloomsbury, who took out fire insurance in 1786 and the Adam recorded renting property belonging to the Duke of Bedford in St. Giles in the Fields and in Bloomsbury, in the years 1786–1809. His wife was Mary (surname not recorded), who died in Chelsea in 1825, aged 70. Their children included: Adam (c.1780–1853), who died in France; Samuel (c.1784–1853); William (c.1785–1825), who was in the Dragoons and died when washed overboard.
from a ship returning from Jamaica; and Mary (b.1789–c.1804). Note that he is easy to confuse with another Adam from London, son of William and Letitia, whose siblings had essentially the same names. His will of 1809 gives most of his estate to his wife, but also some to his sister Margaret (through William Scott of Hawick) and brother Walter. His address in 1809 was Gower Street, St. Giles in the Fields. He was buried at Westminster. His family later fought over his estate, including his property in Jamaica. Adam (d.1829) probably born in Cavers Parish, he may have been the son of John born in 1750. He is said to have worked at Abbotrule, Grange and other estates. He married Jane Scott in Roberton Parish in 1787. Their children included: John (b.1788), christened in Hawick Parish, who emigrated to America; Archibald (1790–1867), christened in Southdean Parish; Mary (b.1792), who married Thomas Scott; and Adam (b.1795), who also emigrated to the U.S.A. He died at Todlaw farm, near Jedburgh. Adam (1795–1864) younger son of Adam. In 1823 he married Elizabeth Ferguson (who died in 1871), the marriage recorded in Wilton and Southdean Parishes. In 1830 he emigrated to U.S.A., along with his wife and daughters Jane and Isabel. They had 3 more daughters in America, as well as a son, Adam A. Adam (b.1802) born in Ashkirk Parish, son of Thomas. He was a shepherd at Kirkope, Selkirkshire. He married Margaret Elliott in 1835 and their children included: Jane (b.1836); Thomas (b.1837); Jessie (b.1840); William (b.1841); John (b.1844); Elizabeth (b.1846); Mary (b.1848); Andrew (b.1850); Margaret (b.1853); and Robert (b.1856). Allan became a justice of the peace in 1864. Andrew (15th C.) resident of Eckford. He is recorded in the Justic-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493, when 2 men had remission for stealing from him, with Robert Scott of Whitchester acting as his surety. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included: Margaret (b.1742); and Margaret (again, b.1743). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isabel Andison in Hawick Parish in 1759 and their children included: Isabel (b.1759); and William (b.1761). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Cook in 1773 and their children included John (b.1774). Andrew (b.1786/7) born in Cavers Parish, he was a shepherd in Yarrow Parish. He was at Eldenhope in 1841 and Hartleap in 1851 and 1861. His wife was Jane and their children included John and Thomas. Andrew (b.1820) son of James, he was born in Denholm. In 1861 he was a woollen framework knitter in Lanton. He married Isabella Daniel in Bedrule Parish in 1861, and their children included: James (b.1867); and Andrew (b.1870). Andrew (b.1822/3) born in Denholm, son of James and Jane Scott. In 1861 he was a woollen framework knitter in the village of Lanton, living with his sisters Margaret and Isabel and his nephew William. Andrew Borthwick (1885–1977) born in Hawick, son of Thomas and Mary Miller. He served in the Navy and died in Mitcham, Victoria, Australia. Andrew Moss (20th C.) probably son of James and born in Cavers Parish. He was Headmaster of Newcastleton School in the 1940s and was first Secretary of the village hall committee. Archibald (b.1790) born in Southdean Parish, son of Adam and Jane Scott. In 1841 he was a farmer at Todlaw in Jedburgh Parish and in 1851 and 1861 he was a grocer in Jedburgh. He married Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’ or ‘Eliza’) Millar in 1823 in Jedburgh. Their children included Adam, Christian, Jean (who married George Miller in Hawick), Mary, Eliza and Martha. Christina nee Scott (b.1792/3) born in Melrose, she was a grocer at 41 High Street, recorded in 1861. George (16th C.) recorded in 1541 on a list of tenants and other associates of James Douglas of Cavers when he complained about his farm of Whitriggs being burned by Walter Scott of Branxholm. He may have been related to John, who was also named. George (18th C.) resident of Appletreehall. He married Betty Lorraine and they had a son George (b.1789), baptised in Wilton. George (b.1789) born in Wilton Parish, probably son of George, he was an agricultural labourer. In 1851 he was living at Darnick Vale near Abbotsford and was a widower in Darnick village in 1861. His wife was Margaret and they had a son George. He is probably the George who married Margaret Davidson in Wilton Parish in 1817. George (1805–1881) son of Thomas and Janet Nichol; he was born in Ashkirk Parish and worked as an agricultural labourer and shepherd at Stobice. He is recorded there on the 1841 to 1861 censuses. In 1838 he married Elizabeth (‘Betty’) Scott in Castleton; she came from Eves and died in 1898, aged 88. Their children (baptised at Teviothead) were: Thomas (b.1838), who was a ploughman at Hermiston in 1861; Jane (b.1839); William (b.1841), also a shepherd; Janet (b.1843); Margaret (b.1845); Eliza (b.1847); George (b.1852); and Elizabeth
Hobkirk

(‘Betsy’, b.1855). He died at Stobicote. George (19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His wife was Mina Nichol and their children included Margaret (b.1834); she was probably the wife of Tom Heatley who died at Hartshaugh Mill in 1898, aged 64. George (1816–77) 4th child of William and Agnes Laidlaw, born at Highchesters. He was brother of James, farmer at Broadhaugh and Robert, builder. He was Cornet in 1843. He was a baker in Hawick and afterwards corn merchant in Backdamgate. He is probably the George who sang at the centenary Burns night in 1859. In 1841 and 1851 he was living on Teviot Square, probably about 3 Sandbed. In 1861 he was at ‘Crescentfoot’, i.e. Backdamgate, and was at Backdamgate on a register of 1866. In Slater’s 1852 census he was listed as a corn merchant on Teviot Square. He is probably also the George who farmed at Broadhaugh. He helped found St. Andrew’s Free Church and was an active member of the Parochial Board, with a particular interest in the administration of the Poor Law. In 1849 he married Jessie (1828–1913), daughter of cabinet-maker Walter Wilson, but they had no issue. He died at Slitrig Villa. George (b.1824) from Oxnam, son of Robert. He was a resident of Southdean Parish. He was at Falside in 1841. He married Margaret Robson and their children included: Robert (b.1848); and John (b.1851). George M. (1884–1970) Hawick-based architect. He was son of joiner Thomas. He was associated with his father’s business and started designing buildings from about 1905. He was involved with the designs for the Museum conversion in 1910 and St. George’s Church in 1913. He was probably articled to J.P. Alison. From the early 1920s he was in partnership with Alison, the business eventually turning into Aitken & Turnbull. Other building designs attributed to him included Council Housing on Renwick Terrace and at Rosebank, Bemersyde House, Rutherford Lodge, Allars Kirk and Hall, the Pavillion, Blackfriars Kirk in Jedburgh, the Relief Kirk in Kelso, Hawick Cottage Hospital, Selkirk Gas Company, Taddei’s Cafe and Billiard Salloon, 4 Wellington Street, Langton Mill Farm near Duns, Drumlanrig’s Tower renovations and Burnfoot Parish Kirk. James (15th/16th C.) one of the Bailies appointed in 1512 by James Douglas of Cavers to give sasine to William Cranston in the lands of Denholm. His name is recorded as ‘Jacobo Hopkirk’. James (16th C.) recorded as Vicar of Carrington (or Kerriington) Parish in Midlothian in 1549. He is an early example of someone bearing this surname. He must have converted to the new religion, since his name appears as Reader of the same Church in 1574. James (d.1679) from Cavers Parish. He was among the 200 men who died on ‘the Crown of London’ when it shipwrecked off the Orkneys and the captain refused to unlock the hatches to let the prisoners save themselves. The ship was transporting Covenanters to America after their capture at Bothwell Bridge. James (17th/18th C.) recorded being ‘in Burnflat’ in 1705 and as ‘easier coater to Walter Paterson’ in Burnflat in 1708. He was presumably a road-layer living in a cottage on Paterson’s land at the time. He married Helen Paterson, who was called Isabel in the 1702 marriage record in Cavers Parish; she was probably related to the Patersons of Burnflat. Their children (baptised in Hawick) included Margaret (b.1705) and John (b.1708). The witnesses in 1705 were Walter and Archibald Paterson and in 1708 were Walter Paterson of Burnflat, Archibald Paterson, ‘Casier’ and Francis Paterson in Flex. James (18th C.) married Isobel Murray in Roberton Parish in 1751. James (18th C.) married Janet Black in Hobkirk Parish in 1764. She was daughter of William Black. James (18th C.) married Janet Hogg in 1777, the marriage being recorded in Wilton and Ashkirk Parishes. James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Highchesters in 1784 when recorded as ‘junior’ (suggesting he was son of James. His children included: Nelly (b.1783); and Nelly (again, b.1784). He may be the same James who married Jane Scott in Roberton Parish in 1785. He was surely related to Robert, who was at Highchesters at the same time. James (18th/19th C.) miller in Castleton Parish. He married Jane Scott. Their son Robert was a labourer and quarryman. He is probably the James, married to Jean Scott, whose children baptised in Cavers Parish included: Margaret (b.1805); John (b.1807); Isabella (b.1808); William (b.1812); and Andrew (b.1820), frame-worker in Lanton. James (b.1814/5) from Jedburgh Parish. He was a tailor in Hawick. He was a lodger on the Fore Row in 1851 and was living at 50 High Street in 1861. His wife was Jane and their children included Janet, John, James, Margaret and Graham. James (19th C.) married Jean Beattie in Castleton Parish in 1849. James (1819–1904) born in Roberton Parish, younger son of William and Agnes Laidlaw, and brother of Robert, William and George. He was for a while a baker and was later farmer at Broadhaugh, and also also farmed at Eilrig. In 1851 he was living with his parents in Peebles as a master baker. In 1861 he was a farmer at West Langlee in Ladhope Parish. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1862. He showed Cheviot sheep in local competitions and was Chairman of the Teviotdale Farmers’ Club. He also gave an account of the plague of voles that hit the Border counties in 1876. He served as a Magistrate for Roxburghshire county and was on the Hawick Parish School Board. He was responsible for building the Evangelical Union Kirk on O’Connell Street in 1848–9. He was also one of the first Deacons of that church (which became the Congregational Kirk) as well as one of the first Trustees. He married Mary Scott Taylor, sister of Provost John Melrose’s wife. Their children included Maj. Ernest William (b.1890). He died in Melrose. James (19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Jane Common and their children included: Margaret (b.1856); and Graham (b.1859). James (b.1867) born in Cavers Parish, he was son of Andrew and Isabella Daniel. He was a joiner. In 1898 he married Elizabeth Maclean and they had 2 children, including Andrew Moss, Headmaster at Denholm School. John (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance. He was recorded being ‘in denui’, which is probably an abbreviation for ‘denumum’, i.e. he lived in Denholm. He was cited again at the Justice-aire in 1494/5. John (16th C.) recorded among a list of tenants and other associates of Sir James Douglas of Cavers in 1541. He may be related to George, who was also listed. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes (or Janet) Hunter in Bedrule Parish in 1712 and their children included Margaret (b.1717) and an unnamed son (b.1720). James (b.1714) was probably also his son. John (18th C.) married Helen Robertson in Cavers Parish in 1739. He may have been father of James (b.1744), George (b.1746) and Adam (b.1750). Perhaps the same John was later married to Ann Wright and had children (baptised in Cavers Parish): an unnamed son (b.1753); Helen (b.1755); and John (b.1757). Walter (b.1759), Marion (b.1761) and William (b.1763) were probably also his children. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Bryson and their children included Robert (b.1786). John (18th C.) gardener at Timpendean in 1778, when he was working for Archibald Douglas. John (18th C.) married Isabel Scott in Hawick Parish in 1774. Their children included James (b.1784) and Janet (b.1787), both born in Robertson. He was recorded living at Harden in 1784 and Harden Anna in 1787. He could be the John who witnessed a baptism for Robert Scott, farmer in Whitchesters, in 1766. He may also be the John who married Isabel Waugh in 1789, the marriage being recorded in Hawick and Cavers Parishes. John (b.1787) from Robertson, probably son of John and Isabel Scott. He was a framework knitter on the Back Row in 1841, on the Kirk Wynd in 1851 and at 22 Howegate (probably now 1 Loan) in 1861. His wife was Helen (or ‘Ellen’) and they had a grandson John Green. John (1788–1852) son of Adam and Jane Scott, he was baptised in Hawick Parish. He lived in Southdean Parish, but in 1835 he followed his younger brother Adam out to America, settling in New York state. He married Christian Riddell in 1829 in Hobkirk Parish and she died in 1875, aged 81. Their children included: Janet (b.1830), who probably died in infancy; Adam (b.1832); Jane (b.1834); and Isabella (b.1838). John (b.c.1805) agricultural worker in Southdean Parish. He was living at Falside in 1841. He married Margaret, and their children included Agnes (b.c.1827), Margaret (b.c.1833), Esther (b.c.1835) and John (b.c.1838). George, who was at Falside in 1851, was probably also his son. John (1809–89) born in Galashiels, he was a joiner and cabinet-maker in Hawick. He lived at 4 Allars Bank and on Allars Crescent. He was listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Jane Borthwick (probably daughter of the Newmill miller), who died in 1884, aged 74. Their children included William, Jane, Thomas and John (who died young). His sons carried on the joiners firm of W. & T. Hobkirk. John (b.1813) born in Wilton Parish, probably son of Robert. In 1841 he was living on Buccleuch Street and listed as a District Police Officer. He was a knitter at 10 Teviot Crescent in 1851 and was a gardener living at 29 High Street in 1861. He married Margaret Smith from England in 1832. Their children included Elizabeth, Jane (b.c.1835), Eliza and Robert (b.c.1850). John (b.1819/20) from Jedburgh, he was a machine-cleaner in a wool factory, living at the Sandbed. In 1851 he was at Buccleuch Street, with his older brother William also living with his family. In 1861 he was at ‘10 Sand Bed, Back House No 1’. His wife was Isabella, and their children included William. He is probably the John who married Isobel Fulton in Wilton Parish in 1847. John (19th C.) resident of Robertson. He married Jane Pringle in 1862 and their daughter Sarah was baptised in the same year. John (19th C.) married Beatrice Cunningham.
Hobkirk

Mowbray in Wilton Parish in 1871. John (1836–1911) born in Hawick, son of Robert and Margaret Roxburgh. He worked as a teacher of music and a tailor in Douglas, Lanarkshire. Later he was postmaster there. In 1860 in Hawick he married Margaret Eliza, daughter of William Martin. Their children included: Mary MacDonald (b.1861), born in Hawick; Margaret (b.1863), who married George Hogg, gardener at Bucklands, also born in Hawick; Janet Nesbit (b.1865); Elizabeth Charteris (b.1867); Robert (b.1869), who died young; William Martin (1870–1946); John Roxburgh (b.1872); Mina Beatrice (1877–1967); and Flora (b.1879). John (d.1941) said to have been son of William and grandson of William, he was Chairman of Weensland Spinning Mills. He was Chairman of Hawick Parochial Board in the 1880s and was also as a Justice of the Peace. He served as Treasurer at St. George’s Kirk 1914–21 and there is a memorial lectern to him and his wife in St. George’s. He was President of the Callant’s Club in 1923. In later life he lived at Ladylaw. He married Robina Hogg, who died in 1939. They are buried in Wilton Cemetery. Matthew (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 when he served as surety for Henry Turnbull in Unthank, as well as for himself. He was fined for non-appearance. Robert (18th C.) resident of Roberton. He married Marion Nichol and their children included Margaret (b.1739). Robert (b.1715) son of Adam. He was shepherd on several farms around Hawick in the 18th century, specifically Over Southfield, Goldielands, Flex and Whitleth. He was Hawick Town Herd roughly 1752–57. He may thus have been the Herd from whom a new house was built in 1755 and who in 1756 was given a shilling by the Council ‘when his child was almost burnt to death’. He gave evidence in 1767 in relation to the use of the Common; he was at that time married and living in Hawick. Robert (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Highchesters in 1781 and 1786. He married Jane Crozier in 1778, the marriage being recorded in Robertson and Ashkirk Parishes. Their children included: James (b.1779); William (b.1781); John (b.1782); and Margaret (b.1786). He was surely related to James, who was at Highchesters at the same time. Robert (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Laidlaw in Cavers Parish in 1800. Robert (18th/19th C.) probably son of John and Janet Bryson. He married Margaret Blaikie in Wilton in 1812. Their children included: John (b.1813); Jean (b.1815); Robert (b.1817); Joseph (b.1819), who moved to the United States; Anna (b.1821); and William (b.1822). In 1841 his wife and 3 children were living with Hector Blakie (probably his brother-in-law) at Howdenburn, and so he was presumably deceased. His wife, son Jospeh and 2 other children emigrated in 1842. He is probably the proprietor of the Grapes Inn, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Robert (c.1801–72) son of James and Jane Scott, who came from Roberton. He lived in Newcastle, where he worked as a labourer, including at the Stitchellhill Linery. He was listed as labourer in Newcastle among heads of households in 1835. He was recorded as a farm worker who was living at Cleithaugh in Southdean Parish in 1841. In 1861 he was living on Douglas Square. He married Mary Armstrong from Canonbie, who was listed in the 1841 census as ‘Wife of R. Hobkirk, Q’man’. Their children included: Jean (or Jane, b.1822), who married Richard Murray; William, who was a gardener in Lancashire; Robert (b.1833); and Agnes (b.1838). Their children probably also included Janet, Walter, Helen, Mary and Margret. Robert (1801–61) born in Ancrum, son of Walter and Beatrice Dunlop. He worked as a coal merchant in Hawick and lived at 69 High Street. In 1841 he was listed as a gardener at Slitrig Cottage, was a coal salesman on the High Street (around the Crown Close) in 1851 and by 1861 he was a gardener at about 69 High Street. In 1830 he married Margaret, daughter of John Roxburgh from Ancrum. Their children included: Janet (b.1831); Walter (b.1834); John Roxburgh (b.1836), who moved to Douglas, Lanarkshire; Robert Roxburgh (b.1838); and Robert (again, b.1842). He died in Hawick. His widow is recorded applying for poor relief in 1866 and 1867. Robert (b.1808/9) born in Ashkirk Parish. He was a shepherd at Berrybush in 1851. In 1861 he was listed as a former shepherd, living at Huntlaw Cottages in Minto Parish, along with his brother Thomas, who was a cattle dealer, and his niece Janet (from Teviothead). Robert (1809–1911) mason of William Hobkirk & Sons, eldest son of William and Agnes Laidlaw. He was baptised at East Highchester in Robertson Parish, and was brother of George and James. He was an early Trustee of St. George’s Kirk. He was living at 10 Teviot Crescent in 1851 and listed as a builder on Teviot Crescent in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1861 he was a mason at Hope Hill Cottage in Wilton Parish. He later moved to Southburn, Tundergarth. He married Elizabeth Grierson in 1849 in Kirkton; she was sister of Hobkirk

Thomas Grierson, farmer at Effledge. His children were: Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (b.1851); William (b.1852); Robert (b.1853); Agnes (b.1855), who married Alexander Scott, farmer at Kinninghall; Margaret (b.1857), who married Provost Edward Wilson; Wilhelmina (b.1859); Georgina Isabella Grierson (b.c.1863), who later married the same Alexander Scott; and Jenimia (b.c.1865). He later moved to South Burn, Dumfriesshire and may have died at Tundergarth. Robert (b.1815/6) from Ancrum, he was a shoemaker in Hawick. He lived on the High Street (probably near No. 55) in 1851. He married Margaret Turnbull in 1841 and their children included Jane J.D., William, Janet and Margaret. Robert (19th C.) married Annie Hogarth in Hawick in 1875. Robert William ‘Bob’ (1921–2002) fiddler, born in Westerkirk. His father (William Smith) played the bagpipes and his mother (Mary Janet Black) played the melodeon. He took up the fiddle at the age of 14, and played his first dance at 16. He worked as a herd at Colterscleuchshiel (near Teviothead), then Hawklaw (near Bouchezter). In later life he worked at Dodburn Filters, which gave him more free time to pursue his music. In 1950 he married Elizabeth (Lily) Margaret Beck. He played for the Teviotdale Valley Dance Band and the Roger Dobson Scottish Dance Band. He was a founder member of the Borders Strathspey and Reel Society. He performed his folk fiddle music widely, being Scottish Fiddle Champion three times and featured on the albums ‘The Borders – songs and dances of the English-Scottish Border’ (1960) and ‘Border Fiddlers’ (released 2000, from much earlier recordings). A tune he wrote, sometimes used by morris dancers in the English North-west is called ‘Robbie Hobkirk’s Polka’. Following a serious car accident and a stroke, he has limited use of his left-hand side, but recovered enough to keep playing until his last days. After his death there was a celebratory session in the Horse and Hounds, with a memorial concert the following year at Thorterdykes. Thomas (d.1568) yeoman of Gateshead, County Durham. He is an early example of someone bearing this surname, and may be related to many later Hobkirk of the Newcastle area. His daughter Katherine was recorded being of Laystoffe, Suffolk. His daughter Agnes was married to Anthony Bell, a sailor. In 1573 there was a deed between the 2 sisters relating to his lands in Gateshead. John who died in the same place in 1573 was surely related. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish who married Bessie Cessford in Bedrule in 1694. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Perhaps the same Thomas in Denholm married Margaret Scott in Cavers Parish in 1708 and was recorded in Denholm in 1716. His children included: Bessie (b.1709); James (b.1711); Janet (b.1713); Margaret (b.1716); Thomas (b.1718); James (again, b.1721); and William (b.1730). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Janet Cathrae in 1724. He was at Borthwick Mains in 1725 when their daughter Margaret was baptised. It is possible he was the same man as Thomas from Cavers. Thomas (1716–81) born in Glasgow, he lived in Dalkeith, purchasing Dalbeth estate in about 1754 after making his fortune as a tabacco merchant in the West Indies. He married Elizabeth Smellie in 1744 and their children were Mary, Barbara, Elizabeth, James, Francis, Elizabeth, Mary (again), Margaret, Thomas, Francis (again), and Mary (once more). In 1774 he matriculated arms, probably the first of his surname to do so. He was 5th and only surviving son of Francis and Mary Paterson, and said to be great-great-grandson of a John ‘Hopkirck’, who came from Germany. His connection to the Hobkirk area is unknown. Thomas (b.c.1717–67) born in Scotland, he lived in London. It is possible he was the Thomas, son of Thomas, baptised in Cavers Parish in 1718. He firstly married Elizabeth Parry in 1748 in St. George, Mayfair. Their children were: Walter (b.1750); Margaret (b.1751); and Thomas (b.1753). He secondly married Eleanor Pegus in 1760 in St. Martin in the Fields. Their children included: Jane Eleanor (b.1761); Ann (b.1762); John Peter (b.1763); and Jane Dorothy (b.1765). He was buried at St. Paul’s Church, Covent Garden. Thomas (18th/19th C.) nurseryman in Hawick. He married Isabel Scott in in 1793, the marriage being recorded in Jedburgh and Maxton Parishes. Their children (baptised in Hawick) included: James (b.1795); and Robert (b.1797). The family are buried in Old Wilton Kirkyard. Also buried there is his sister, Janet (d.1826), who moved in Ashkirk Parish. In 1791 in Cavers Parish he married Janet Nichol, who was from Southdean. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer at Whinfield. In 1851 and 1861 he was a shepherd at Synton Mill. Their children included: Margaret (b.1794); William (b.1795); John (b.1797); Janet (b.1799); Adam (b.1802), shepherd at Kirkhope; George (b.1805), shepherd at Stobicote; Robert (b.1808); and Thomas
Hobkirk

(b.1813), shepherd at Dykes. Thomas (b.1813) son of Thomas, he was born in Ashkirk Parish. In 1841 and 1851 he was shepherd at Dykes in Cavers Parish. Thomas (19th C.) married Janet Jackson in Castleton Parish in 1865. Perhaps the same Thomas married Mary Jackson in Teviothead Parish in 1869. Thomas (1847/8–1930) son of John, he ran the joiners firm W. & T. Hobkirk with his brother William. He lived on Orchard Terrace and was an office-bearer for St. George’s Kirk for 57 years. In 1871 in Wilton Parish he married Margaret (or Mary), daughter of Robert Miller and Anne Scott. Their children included: John (b.1872); George M. (1884–1970), local architect; and Andrew Borthwick (1885–1977), who died in Australia. Thomas (b.1879), who served in the Navy, may also have been his son. Walter (17th C.) attorney in Hawick. In 1688 he represented Bessie Ruecastle, wife of Alexander Hislop in a land transfer with her husband. Walter (18th C.) married Agnes Cessford in Bedrule Parish in 1707. Their children included: William (b.1707); Adam (b.1709); James (b.1710); Walter (b.1712); Margaret (b.1713), perhaps the Margaret who married John Cessford in 1748; and William (again, b.1715). Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Ester Dryden and their children included Margaret (b.1743). He may be the Walter whose son Adam was baptised in Robertson Parish in 1739. Walter (18th C.) married Jean Millar in Hawick Parish in 1757. Walter (18th C.) married to Betty Dickson. Their children included: Walter (b.1761), baptised in Hawick Parish; James (b.1764), born in Duns; and William (b.1766), also born in Duns. Walter (b.1761) born in Hawick Parish, son of Walter and Betty Dickson. He lived in Ancrum Parish, where he may have been a gardener. He married Beatrice Dunlop in 1793 in Ancrum and their children included: William (b.1797); Helen (b.1799); Robert (1801–61), who died in Hawick; Walter (b.1804); and George (b.1806). Walter (b.c.1829–69) born in Hawick, he emigrated to Australia. He was a shopkeeper, butcher and publican in North Adelaide, Campbelltown and Port Augusta. In 1852 in Jedburgh he married Alice or Alison Rae. He emigrated to South Australia in 1854, along with Alison (probably his wife), Elizabeth (b.1838, perhaps his sister), Margaret and Robert. The passage was horrific, with cholera killing many on board. William (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 when George Shiel in Bedrule had remission for stealing a sheep of his from Bedrule. William James (d.1679) laird of land in Hobkirk parish, and one of the earlier people to bear that surname (actually written ‘Hopkirk’). He was a covenanting supporter who was imprisoned after the Battle of Bothwell Brig. Later sentenced to transportation to the American Colonies, he was drowned when the transportation ship wrecked off Moul Head in the Orkneys. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living in Denholm in 1702. His children included Thomas (b.1702). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His children included Andrew (b.1715). William (18th C.) resident of London, he was landlord of ‘the George’ in Enfield in the 1770s. In 1772 he married Letitia Hawes and their children (mostly baptised at St. Andrews Church, Enfield) were: Adam (b.1774); Alicia (b.1775); Sarah (b.1777); Mary (b.1778); William (b.1779); Henry (b.1781); and Samuel (b.1783). Given the similarity of names, it seems likely he was related to the older Adam who lived in London at that time, was also connected with Jamaica, and probably came from the Hawick area. William (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Longside in Cavers Parish. He was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. He is probably the William whose children baptised in Cavers Parish included: Thomas (b.1767); William (b.1770); George (b.1771); John (b.1773); Jean (b.1775); Mary (b.1779); Betty (b.1780); and Rachel (b.1782). William (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Brewhouse and their son Alexander was baptised in 1724. William (18th C.) resident of London, he was landlord of ‘the George’ in Enfield in the 1770s. In 1772 he married Letitia Hawes and their children (mostly baptised in Roberton) were: Adam (b.1774); Alicia (b.1775); Sarah (b.1777); Mary (b.1778); William (b.1779); Henry (b.1781); and Samuel (b.1783). Given the similarity of names, it seems likely he was related to the older Adam who lived in London at that time, was also connected with Jamaica, and probably came from the Hawick area. William (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Longside in Cavers Parish. He was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. He is probably the William whose children baptised in Cavers Parish included: Thomas (b.1767); William (b.1770); George (b.1771); John (b.1773); Jean (b.1775); Mary (b.1779); Betty (b.1780); and Rachel (b.1782). William (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Riddell and their daughter Isabel was baptised in 1811. William (1781–1859) probably son of Robert, he was christened at Robertson. He was a mason, and was the founder of the Hawick builders firm William Hobkirk & Sons. In 1809 in Wilton Parish he married Agnes Laidlaw (1790–1873). Their children (mostly baptised in Robertson) were: Robert (1809–1911), also a mason; William (1811–70), baker; Margaret (1813–61), who married Adam Beattie, millmaster in Edinburgh; George (1816–77); James (1819–1904); Adam (1822–70); John (1825–76), who married Margaret Leishman and died in Edinburgh; and Thomas (b.1829), who died in infancy. In 1841 he was a mason living at Ashkirk Mill, with his wife and sons Robert, James and Thomas, while the rest of the family were at the Sandbed. In 1851
Hobkirk Baa

He and his family were living in Peebles. William (b.1810/1) from Jedburgh, he was a handloom weaver in Hawick. In 1841 he was living with the family of his brother John on Buccleuch Street. William (1811–c.70) son of William and Agnes Laidlaw, who were from Robertson. He was a baker on the Sandbed. He was recorded there in 1841 with his brothers George (also a baker), Adam (a joiner’s apprentice) and John (baker’s apprentice), as well as sister Margaret. He and his brother George were also corn merchants for at least 25 years. He gave evidence to the Commission into the law of ‘hypothec’ in 1865, stating that he had been a corn merchant in Hawick for 10 years and Edinburgh for 15 years, buying grain from Prussian and Danish ports. He is probably the brother of James of Broadlaw and hence the William who wrote poetry (baker’s apprentice), as well as sister Margaret. James Smith (1871–1942), baptised in Southdean Parish. His wife was Marion Laidlaw and their children included: Mary (b.1845), born at Craik; and Andrew (b.c.1849). William (19th C.) married Marky Scott in Haddington. He was from Selkirkshire. In 1861 he was a shepherd at Peelbraehope. His wife was Mary (or Marion) and their children included: Mary (b.1845), born at Craik; and Andrew (b.c.1849). William (19th C.) married Marky Scott in Hawick Parish in 1843. William (19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. His wife was Marion Laidlaw and their children included: Mary (b.1845). William (1841–1913) shepherd at Borthwickshiels and later at Edgerston. He was probably son of George, shepherd at Stobicote. He is probably the shepherd of that name living at Skelfhill in 1861. In 1865 at Hummelknowes Mill he married Janet Smith, and she died in 1906. Their children were: James (b.1864), baptised in Bedrule; George (b.1866); Ellen (b.1867); William Smith (1871–1942), baptised in Southdean Parish, who also worked on local farms; George (again, b.1872); Thomas (b.1874); and Helen (b.1876). He died in Hawick. William (1841–1913) Hawick mason and joiner who was involved with Hawick Free Kirk. He was son of John and Jane Borthwick. He ran the joiners’ firm W. & T. Hobkirk with his brother Thomas. He married Jean Brown and later Margaret, daughter of Archibald Johnstone Donaldson, oil extractor.

William Smith (1871–1942) son of George and Janet Smith, he was born at Letham in Southdean Parish. Based on the birthplaces of his children, he must have worked on Letham farm and at Elfhill farm, Westerkirk, probably as a shepherd. In 1908 he married Mary Janet Black. Their children were: Agnes (‘Nan’, b.1909); Janet (‘Jenny’, b.1914); and Robert (‘Bob’) William (b.1921). He died at Hawklaw, near Bouchester, and was buried in the Wellogate Cemetery (also spelled ‘Habkirk’, ‘Hapkirk’, ‘Hopekirk’, ‘Hopekirke’, ‘Hopkirk’, etc. in earlier records).

Hobkirk Baa (hob-kirk-baw) n. handball game still played in the village of Hobkirk, also sometimes called ‘Bonchester Baa’. The ball is traditionally thrown up on the site of the old church (and in earlier times was thrown over the building). There are 3 hails for each side: for the ‘doonies’ they are at Hawthornside, at Abbotrule and behind the Horse and Hounds; for the ‘uppies’ they are at the Forkins, at Wolfelee and at Highend. In earlier times they were about a mile from the kirkyard, at Harwood Mill for the uppies and Hobsburn for the doonies. Additional hails at Abbotrule House and Drythropple were added in the 1840s (apparently because the Stewart brothers had been so successful in preventing the ball getting up the water to the single hall. The event is traditionally held on the first Monday after the New Moon after Candlemas. In early times it was traditional for the ball to be thrown over the church before daylight and for some participants to climb up to ring the bells. Stalls were set up on gravestones in the churchyard, selling nicknacks, snacks and liquor. The heritors tried to suppress the gathering in 1803, but failed.

Hobkirk Glebe (hob-kirk-glee) n. lands once attached to Hobkirk Kirk. They were referred to as ‘all and haill the old Glebe of Hobkirk’ in 1757 when sold by Thomas Scott of Stanedge to William Elliot of Wolfelee. These could be the same as the lands of ‘Hobkirkmanse’, listed as being farmed by Andrew Ormiston and James Turnbull on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls.

Hobkirk Kirk (hob-kirk-kirk) n. church of Hobkirk parish, built in the narrowest part of the Rule valley. It dates back to at least the 12th century, and at early times belonged to Jedburgh Abbey. In 1220 the vicarage was valued at 10 merks, with the vicar being obliged to give the canons half a stone of wax annually at the feast of St. James (as part of an agreement between Jedburgh Abbey and the Diocese of Glasgow). Jedburgh Abbey continued to receive benefits from the church until the time of the Reformation, when the tithes (from Wells, West Lees, Billerwell, Hallrule, Town o’ Rule, Hobsburn, Weens, Gledstains, Howa, Stonedge, Appotside, Hawthornside and Wauchope) amounted to 1 chalder, 3 bollis of barley and 1 chalder, 6 bollis of meal. The present church, with its great square tower dates from only 1862–69, with David Rhind as architect, and was restored in 1914. It incorporates parts of the older church of 1690–92, demolished in 1862, which was plain and heather-thatched, with a clay floor 2 steps below the churchyard, and no ornamentation (and can be seen in an old sketch). A bell and belfry were added in 1741, the bell (inscribed with that date) and belfry roof being later moved to Weens House. The old church was re-thatched in 1742 and 1758. It was substantially repaired in 1777 after the suppression of Abbotrule Kirk; the roof was slated and a new aisle was built to hold the new worshippers from Abbotrule. It was again repaired in the 1840s with the floor repaired (but a mass of human remains was found just below the surface and reinterred. There is also some existing carved stonework from an earlier 12th century chapel (one piece engraved with the date 1211), which was situated on the rising ground to the north-east of the churchyard and was probably the original ‘Ecllesia de Roule’; three carved capitals are described in 1904. They were recovered from Weens House in 1937, along with others from a nearby cottage in 1950, and are now in the present church, with a decorated quoin later positioned in the churchyard. A baptismal font stone was said to have been on Cowdie’s Knowe before being moved to Weens garden. The eastern gable of the early church was incorporated into the newer (17th century) one and the chancel converted into an aisle for the Elliots of Harwood. It has also been suggested (by Jeffrey) that the earliest church was at Town o’ Rule. The previous minister’s house was repaired in 1659 and the Manse was listed as ‘waste’ in 1694, so that no tax was paid on its 5 hearths. Tax was paid on 17 windows for the manse in 1748. The current Manse dates from 1770. The glebe lands constituted about 15 acres, augmented by 24 acres from Abbotrule. The kirkyard was enclose by a wall in about the 1820s, before that being regularly used for games and displaying goods during Hobkirk Baa. It is said that an ancient stone kist was once discovered when digging a grave near the site of the old church, and a large quern was unearthed when digging foundations for an aisle for the Wauchope family. Prominent sites in the kirkyard are devoted to the Elliots of Harwood, and the families of Wauchope and Weens. The church was without a minister for about 5 years following the ‘Revolution’ of 1689. There was also formerly a Free Kirk established near Wolfelee serving those who ‘came out’ of Hobkirk and Southdean Parishes in 1843. The Parish was linked with Southdean in 1973, united with Southdean and linked with Cavers and Kirkton 1888–96, and then in 2004 became included in the new parish of Ruberslaw (along with Denholm, Minto, Bedrule, and Southdean). The church originally belonged to Jedburgh Abbey. Parish records exist dating back to 1726. A partial roll of the ministry is: Rodger, Parson of Rule in about 1170 and in 1214; Ada Onidius, clergyman around 1220; Aley, Parson of Rule in 1296; James Ben- net, Vicar until 1550; David Turnbull 1550–76; John Douglas, from 1576; George Douglas, possibly 1602–9; Thomas Thomson 1609–26; William Weir 1626–51; James Douglas 1652–65; John Ainslie 1665–82; John Liddell 1683–89; Nichol Edgar 1694–1724; Robert Riccalton (Riccarton) 1725–69; John Riccalton (Riccarton) 1765–1800; Benjamin Dickson 1800–33; John Ewen 1834–1875; Archibald McPhail 1876–1907; John Gordon 1907–19; John A. Clark 1919–21; David L. Cattanach 1922–53; Stephen Goodbrand 1954–82; James A. Strachan 1983–88; Adam McC. Bowie 1988–96.

Hobkirk Pairish (hob-kirk-pa-reesh) n. parish about 7 miles south-east of Hawick, containing Bonchester Bridge and Hobkirk villages. It runs along the Rule Water from the watershed with Liddesdale in the south to the boundary with bedrule Parish in the north, being about 11 miles long and 3 miles wide. It was bounded by Bedrule, Cavers, Kirkton, Southdean and Castleton. The parish was mentioned as early as 1220 and before the Reformation consisted of the estates of Wells, West Lees, Billerwell, Hallrule, Town o’ Rule, Weens, Hobsburn, Hawthornside, Gledstains, Unthank, Appotside, Howa, Stanedge, Harwood and Wauchope. The old Barony of Feu-Rule may have originally corresponded with the boundaries of the Parish of Hobkirk. In the county valuation of 1643, the lands of the Parish were valued at £8542 10s. In 1649 the land and crops of the Parish were valued at about £7600 and in 1678 the lands were valued at 8542 13s 4d. It was extended by having part of Abbotrule annexed to it in 1777. The original church probably dates from the early 13th century. It was replaced by a second church, completed in 1693 and used until 1862. The present church, partially incorporating the older one, was built in 1869, and restored in 1914. The proprietors of the parish were for a long time the Turnbulls and many Elliots of Harwood are also buried in the churchyard. The parish has given rise to a surname. A history of the parish and surrounding area is given in George Tancred’s ‘Rulewater and its People’ (1907). Records of baptisms and marriages begin in 1726. The Borders Archive has Parish records for 1846–1930.

Hobkirk Schuil (hob-kirk-skil) n. school in Hobkirk Parish, existing from at least the early 17th century. Tancred describes its state in the 1840s, being a small cottage lying below Kirknowe, with one room for the schoolmaster and another for the scholars. The floor was of clay, the benches narrow, the lighting poor, the only heat from the fireplace, and no sanitary facilities. A new building was erected shortly afterwards and is shown on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map to the south of the Kirk. There were 60 pupils there in the 1830s. Thomas Young was schoolmaster in 1616, William Rutherford in 1616 and 1618, James Arbuthnott in 1619, George Henderson in 1657, William Clerk in 1681, Andrew Watson in 1693, Sam Oliver 1726–50, William Armstrong 1751–1808, William Turnbull 1821–46, Thomas Shiel probably until 1856 (when he died), John Malcolm from 1857 and Thomas Culbertson from 1866. The Borders Archive has school board minute books for 1873–1919. There was also once a school for girls, situated at Cleuch Head, and established by Mrs. Elliot of Wolfelee.

Hobkirkstile (hob-kirk-stil) n. another name for Kirkstile in Hobkirk Parish (it is so marked on Stobie’s 1770 map; also spelled ‘Hobkirk-style’).

Hob o Alton (hob-ø-awl’-in) n. nickname for Robert Scott, Bailie of 1612.

Hob o Thorlinsope (høb-ø-thor-linz-höp) n. nickname of Robert Elliot, one of the Liddesdale theives apprehended in Hawick in October 1567.

Hobsburn (hobz-burn) n. mansion house near Bonchester, dating to the 17th century and now run as a small guest house. The house is on the stream called Hobs Burn, which joins the Rule Water at Bonchester Bridge. The lands there were once a Lairdship within the Barony of Feu-Rule. ‘Hogg’ Shiel was recorded there in 1494/5. Robert Turnbull was there in 1562 and his house was already called ‘the auld hous’ at that time. Walter Turnbull ‘of Hoppisburne’ is recorded in 1568, and was Laird in 1574 when he had to appear before the Regent and Lords of Secret Council for building his own mill there; this may have been a small threshing mill, powered by water from a pond. Walter Turnbull of Hobsburn was cautioned by the Privy Council in 1580. Thomas Turnbull is recorded there in 1589 and 1590. James Turnbull ‘of Hoppisburne’ servitor to Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst is recorded about 1601. The lands were sold in 1606 by Thomas Turnbull, younger of Hobsburn, to John Scott, brother of Walter Scott of Allanmount. The lands of ‘Hoppisburn and Weynds’ are there described as being between Hallrule on the east, Rouchlaw Sike on the west, Nether Bonchester on the south and Hallrule Common on the north. The house itself may date to around 1600, and is said to be the oldest house in Hobkirk Parish. It was used as a dower-house by the widow of Sir Gilbert Elliot in the late 17th century. In 1691 it was sold to Thomas Inglis. James Turnbull was tenant there in 1694. The estate was formerly an important one in Hobkirk Parish, recorded before the Reformation, and at one time extended as far as to include the lands of Midburn. The lands later became part of the Stonedge estate, with ‘Hobsburn’ being the name used for the main house there in the 18th century. The name was changed to ‘Greenriver’ around 1793 by James Chisholme, after his Jamaican plantation, but reverted back to the original later. Along the south side of the stream, to the east of the house, lies an ancient earthwork, called Duncan’s Hole. The ‘Kail-pot (or Kitchen)’ was the location for the ‘haill’ for the ‘dooies’ in the game of Hobkirk Baa in the 19th century (recorded at least as early as 1562, it was formerly written ‘Hoppisburn’, ‘Hoppisburne’, etc., being ‘Hopisburn’ in 1494/5, ‘Hopisburne’ in 1567, ‘Hoipisburne’ in 1574, ‘Hoppisburne’ and ‘Hopisburne’ in 1580, ‘Hoppisburne’ in 1582 and 1606, ‘Hoppesborne’ and ‘Hoppesburne’ in 1590, ‘Hopsburne’ in 1652, ‘Hobisburne’ in 1653, ‘Hobisburn’ in 1677 and ‘Hobsburne’ in 1694; the name probably derives from the stream there).

Hob’s Burn (hobz-burn) n. stream that runs roughly east to join the Rule Water at Bonchester Bridge. Hawthornside Burn and Mid Burn join it further up (labelled ‘Hopps B.’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).
Hobburn Yett

Hobburn Yett (hobz-burn-ye’) n. former place name in Hobkirk Parish. It is recorded as ‘Hoppsburne Zett’ in the 1562 document relating to the Baronial dispute over lands in Feu-Rule. It probably lay to the east of Hobburn, near the haugh and what is now the village of Bonchester Bridge.

Hob’s Knowe (hobz-now) n. hill between Craik village and Bucleuch, directly between Black Rig and Deep Slack, reaching a height of 366 m. There is a disused quarry there (it is unclear who the ‘Hob’ might be).

Hob the Lonkie (hob-thu-long-kee) n. nickname for Robert Scott, recorded in 1612. It is possible the name was actually ‘Loukie’, meaning ‘blessed’.

hoch (höch) n., arch. hock, joint in the hind leg of an animal, back of the knee, ‘to cruck a hoch’ means to bend the knees in order to sit or kneel – ‘A cruiketh ma hoach an clappeet masel doon a meenint on ov a foggie bank’ [ECS] (also written ‘hoach’; cf. hough).

hockey (ho-kee) n. game played with sticks and a small ball, popular as a girls school sport in the latter part of the 20th century. The sport had been popular with both sexes in the last few years of the 19th century and in the early 20th, with matches played in the Park. Hawick’s particular claim to fame in the world of field hockey is that Ivan Laing scored the first goal in the Olympics in 1908.

hocky (ho-kee) interj., arch. used as an emphatic declaration, sometimes ‘By hocky!’.

Hoddam (ho-dam) n. Adam (13th/14th C.) swore fealty to Edward I in 1296, when he is recorded as being ‘de Hodolm’. His seal showed a squirrel (or perhaps lion rampant) with the words ‘S’ADE DE HODVME’. He is recorded as ‘Adam de Hodholme’ in the early 1300s when he resigned lands in the Borthwick valley. This included Kirk Borthwick and Hoscote. The lands that he had formerly held in Kirk Borthwick were granted to William Barbour in about 1321. He was presumably associated with Hoddam (or ‘Hoddom’) in Dumfriesshire, later a seat of the Maxwells. The Borthwick lands were then granted to William Barbour by Robert the Bruce. He was presumably a supporter of the opponents of the Bruce. Robert of Hoddon, from Roxburghshire, who also signed the Ragman Rolls of 1296, was surely a relative.

hodden (ho-din) adj., poet. a coarse, grey, homespun, woollen cloth – ‘The blanked blue or hoddin grey, which the outer garments of our forefathers displayed . . .’ [RW], ‘. . . To be coosily cled In the coorsest o’ hodden grays’ [WL], ‘Hither and yont thru the hodden mist Rise the merks o’ her classic story . . .’ [WL] (also spelled ‘hoddin’ and familiar from Burns; the cloth was naturally grey from a combination of wool from white and black sheep; possibly related to harden).

hodlemadock (ho-dul-maw-dok) n., arch. a dumpy person who walks with a waddle.

Hodleswuddie (ho-dulz-wu-dee) n. Hodleswoodie, former farm on the lands of Hobburn. It lay on the roadside near Bonchester Bridge and was still thatched in the mid-1800s. In the early 1700s Rev. Nichol Edgar is supposed to have convinced a ghost to stop haunting Hobkirk churchyard and instead walk a straight line between here and Howaburn; this was recounted by George Tancred, and may have been the subject of a lost ghost story of John Leyden, entitled ‘Hodlesswoodee Haugh’. James Turnbull was there in 1786 and James Douglas in 1790 (also written ‘Hoodleswoodie’, it is ‘Hodleswoody’ in 1786).

hodgel (ho-jul) n., arch. a kind of dumpling, made of oatmeal (a ‘yitmeal hodgel’) or flour, apples or other ingredients, a stodgy piece of food – ‘A nice hodgel o’ dumplin’’ [GW], a stour,

Hodgins

Hodgins (ho-jinz) n. William ‘Billy’ Hawick middle distance runner. He set a new record for the 880 yards in 1956 and was 6 times winner of the British half-mile championship. At the Common Riding games the 800 m race is competed for the Billy Hodgins Challenge Cup.

Hodgson (hoj-sin) n. Rev. James (19th C.) pastor at Hawick Baptist Kirk 1896–97. He edited ‘Grace and Truth’, the local church newsletter. There was friction during his incumbency, and he resigned, but was convinced to return. However, 30 members of the congregation formed their own group, meeting on Union Street. He therefore stepped down for good, and it took great effort to reunite the congregation and appoint his successor. Richard (1812–77) Borderer and M.P. for Devonport. He was Chairman of the North British Railway when it was selected to extend their Edinburgh line through Hawick to Carlisle, but was forced to resign in the late 1860s amid financial irregularities. At the sod-cutting ceremony in 1859 he was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick; his wife turned the first sod. He may also have been called Thomas – ‘High o’er the rest, Tam Hodgson stood – High, like a farmer’s cock – And loudly crowed, till all his band Re-echoed what he spoke’ [T].

hodiel (ho-deel) n., poet. a dumpling made of oatmeal, fat and seasoning, or sometimes with flour, apples, etc. – ‘Dumplins, hodielis, weel made up Wi’ suet, spice’ [JoHo] (cf. hodgel).

hodrod (hod-rod) n., arch. a confused collection of things, conglomeration – ‘A perfec’ hodrod o’ stuff lyin’ in ablow the bed’ [GW].

Hoffman presser (hof-man-pre-sur) n. job in the knitwear industry, someone who operates a Hoffman presser. This was the first generally available steam presser.

Hogarth (ho-garth) n. James (b.1879) born in Galashiels, he was educated at Melrose School. In 1895 he became an apprentice gardener at Newton Don, then moved to Culdees Castle, worked in Lord Powerscourt’s gardens near Dublin and was then at Perthshire and Midlothian, before taking up employment at Weens in 1903. At Hallrule in 1903 he married Bessie Thomson (b.1878), whose parents were in Mackside Tollhouse. Paul (b.1959) wing forward for Hawick R.F.C. He moved to Edinburgh, where he worked as a landscape gardener. He was Captain of the Scotland B side. T.A. (19th/20th C.) Secretary at Hawick Baptist Church 1901–13.

hogg (hög) n. a young sheep, after weaning but before its first shearing – ‘...£11 Scots for some malt, ane yow, and twa hoggis’ [BR1638], ‘...stock wethers hogs unclipt, 12s. 9d.; ditto ewe hogs unclipt, 14s. 2d.; ewe hogs sold at market, 11s. 3d.’ [RGJH], ‘Our helper, workmate, slave and friend, you are the one we have to send to gather ewe and hogg’ [TD] (also written ‘hog’; the word is used in several place names, e.g. Hog Gill, Hoghill and Hog Knowe; the diminutive is hoggie).

Hogg (hög, hog) n. Adam (b.1709/10) shepherd in Newbigging for 10 years, for 6 years at Alton Croft and then was at Todshawhaugh. He gave evidence at the court case for the division of the Common in 1767. He was probably the Adam, son of James, born in Hawick in 1710. Adam ‘Satch’ (20th C.) art teacher at Hawick High School. Agnes (18th C.) cook at Woll in 1785, when she was working for Charles Scott. Agnes (1824/5–1902) daughter of James of ‘Teribus’ fame. She married stocking-maker Adam Laing and their children were: Jane (b.c.1845), who married James Renwick; James (c.1847–1900), grocer; Euphemia (c.1851–1918), who lived at Marlefield and died unmarried; Eliza (b.c.1853), who married William Pitcairn, Headmaster of Buccleuch School; Agnes (1855–1910) who married manufacturer Francis Elliot Wilson; Adam (b.1858), who died young; Christina Grey (b.1861), who married Alfred Warr, minister of Rosneath, and had 2 sons who were well-known clergymen, Alfred Ernest Warr and Charles Laing Warr; and Jessie D. (b.1864), who married James White and lived in Glasgow. Alexander (16th/17th C.) granted in 1595/6 the husbandland in Lilliesleaf that was formerly owned by the late James Bennet. Rev. Alexander (d.1619) graduating from St. Andrews University in 1601, he received testimonials from the Presbytery of Hamilton, and became minister at Ashkirk in 1611. A dispute with ‘the gudewife of Sintoun’ (probably the widow of Walter Scott... of Synton) in 1615 led to her taking communion at both Hassendean and Lilliesleaf Kirks, which resulted in a rebuke for both those ministers. Presumably this arose out of a difference of opinion on church matters between this lady (as one of the parish heritors) and her minister. He was minister until 1619 and died before March of the following year. He married Agnes Scott (who later married James Scott of Whitslade). Their children included: Jean, who married Robert, son of Robert Scott of Chesterhouse; and Elizabeth. Alexander (17th C.) probably schoolmaster of Bedrule (according to a gravestone of his widow Margaret in the churchyard there). Alexander (d.c.1687) resident in ‘Newton’ whose will if recorded in 1687. It is unclear which Newton this might have been, although certainly in Roxburgh, Selkirk or Peebles counties. Alexander (18th/19th C.) listed operating as a carrier, along with John Brown, in Pigot’s 1825 directory. They left from Denholm to Edinburgh every Monday fortnight. Amos see John Amos Andrew ‘Dandy’ (16th C.) witness in 1550 to a lease granted by the curators of the young James Cranston to his mother Janet Beaton, who was wife of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. It was witnessed at Branxholme, and so he was probably a local man. Andrew (18th C.) recorded at Threephead in 1781, 1785 and 1787. His children, baptised in Roberton parish, included: Jane (b.1781); Euphan (b.1783); Nelly (b.1785); and Andrew (b.1787). He could be the Andrew, son of James, baptised in Roberton in 1747. Andrew (b.1802/3) born in Lilliesleaf Parish, he was educated in Selkirk and Edinburgh. He may be the son of James born in Lilliesleaf in 1798 and was surely related to John, the poet at Roadhead. He was schoolmaster in Roberton in the 1820s and early 1830s and helped prepare the description of Roberton Parish (written by the minister) for publication in the New Statistical Account of Scotland in 1841. In 1833 he moved to be schoolmaster in Wilton, where he is recorded several times in the period 1835–41. He lived there with his sister Mary, described as ‘housekeeper’, and Elizabeth, who was probably a younger sister. He prepared a description of the Parish for the New Statistical Account (1834), where he is described as ‘formerly schoolmaster of Roberton, now schoolmaster of Wilton’. In 1851 he was Inspector of Poor in Wilton, living on Wilton Place and was listed as ‘collector of poor rates, Wilton place’ in Slater’s 1852 directory. Charles ‘Charlie’ or ‘the Mumper’ (?– ) grandfather of Jake Irvine, he played forward for Hawick R.F.C., worked on the railway and was known for his pawky humour. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th/18th C.) recorded being paid out of the Wilton poor box in 1705. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (1938/9– ) local woman who was raised on a farm, she worked at Trowmill and Barrie’s and lives in Denholm. She wrote a memoir ‘Echoes: The Memoirs of a Country Woman’, a novel ‘Web of Intrigues’ (2008) and several books of poetry. Francis (b.1798) son of William and Jane White, he was an agricultural labourer from Ashkirk Parish. He was listed at Drinkstone among heads of households in 1840 and 1841. On the 1841 census he was living at Drinkstone Cottage, at Castleside in 1851 and at Woll Lodge in 1861. He married Margaret Scott and their children were: William (b.1822); Charles (b.1824); Elizabeth, ‘Betty’ (b.1824); Jane (b.1828); Christian (b.1831); Margaret (b.c.1835); Anne (b.c.1838); and Francis, ‘Frank’ (b.1840), the Hawick song writer. Francis ‘Frank’ (1840–1880) son of Francis and Margaret Scott, he was born at Drinkstone Cottage. His father was a farm worker, who moved back to the Ashkirk area. In 1851 they were at Castleside and in 1861 he was a lodger with his brother Charles at 16 Buccleuch Street. He later lived at 1 Allars Bank. He became a solicitor’s clerk with George & James Oliver in Hawick. He was writer of ‘I like Auld Hawick’, which is his only known poetical work, contributed to the magazine of the Hawick Literary Society in 1867. He acknowledged himself as writer 10 years later when he sang it at a dinner for the departure of Bailie Michie. He was active in the Conservative Association, being the joint Secretary and Treasurer. He was also instrumental in setting up a Public Library, a keen member of the Congregational Church, the Good Templar movement and other improvement societies. He became a member of the Archaeological Society in 1865, was Treasurers for 12 years, and contributed some papers to the Transactions (e.g. one about ‘Some Old Songs, with Local Allusions’). He became ill and died suddenly in the Exchange Hall. He is buried in Wilton Cemetery, and Frank Place was named after him. A portrait of him exists. George (d.c.1687) shepherd in Sundhope when his will was recorded in 1687. It is unclear which Sundhope this was. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. One of the oldest surviving headstones in the old kirkyard commemorates his wife Margaret Leyden, who died in 1695 and another wife, Janet Elliot, who died in 1705.
George (17th/18th C.) miller in Hawick Parish. He married Mary Hogg in 1725. Their children included: Alexander (b.1726); and Janet (b.1727). The witnesses in 1727 were Benjamin ‘Th...’ and John Scott. George (18th C.) shepherd on the farm of Whitlaw. His house was described in the perambulation of the Common carried out in 1767, and lay within the boundaries of the Common. He was probably related to James, recorded at Whitlaw in 1766. George (c.1792–1850s) mason who lived at Bramble Hall. He firstly married Margaret Forsyth in Cavers in 1815, and she died in 1832. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1823); William (b.1824); Thomas (b.1826); and George (b.1831). In 1836 he secondly married Mary Pearson from Castleton. Their children were: Helen (b.c.1838); Alexander (b.c.1841); Adam (b.c.1843); Joseph (1845–1903); James (b.c.1848); and Andrew (b.c.1850). He is recorded on the Back Row on the 1841 census. George (b.1795/6) farmer at Barebacklaw in Ashkirk Parish. He was there in 1861, listed as farmer of 28 acres. His wife was Isabella, and they had a son James. George (1817–74) originally manager at William Watson’s, he took over the hosiery branch at Underdamside in 1863, forming George Hogg & Sons. He married Elizabeth Cavers, who died in 1880, aged 61. They had 9 children, including: George (b.1840), partner in the family firm; and Helen Wilson (b.1841–2–95), who married George Redhead; Robert (b.1847/8), 3rd son, also a manufacturer; Adam (b.1850), who died young; Elizabeth (b.1852); Andrew White (b.1854); and Margaret Ker (b.1857). A portrait of him exists and he is buried in Wilton Cemetery. His sister Christian married baker Andrew White. George (b.1816/7) son of William, farmer at Cavers Knowes. He took over the farm from his father, running it along with his younger brother Robert. George, J.P. (1840–1900) eldest son of George. In 1874 he became partner (along with his brother Edward) in the family firm of George Hogg & Sons, hosiery manufacturers, which then moved to Millbank. He was a councillor from 1886 for Teviot Ward, a Bailie from 1888, Provost 1890–93 and returned to the Council in 1898. A keen bowler, Mason and cricket supporter, he was also a member of Hawick Parish Council and Poorhouse Committee. He married Agnes Paterson of Melrose (who died in 1928, aged 81) and is buried in Wilton Cemetery. George (b.1862) born at Woll Gate in Ashkirk Parish. He was gardener at Bucklands. In 1891 (in Lanarkshire) he married Margaret Hobkirk (1863–1938) from Hawick. Their children were William, John, Annie, Selby and George (all born in Wilton Parish). George (b.c.1870) from Newcastle. He apprenticed with a blacksmith, but showed a literary interest. In 1886, at about the age of 16, he produced a monthly newspaper, entitled ‘Hogg’s Journal and Newcastle Review’. In all 5 issues were published (in Hawick by Vair & McNairn). James (15th C.) recorded as witness to a sasine for the lands of Denholm Mains in 1465/6. Perhaps the same James was on the ‘retour’ panel for the Kers of Altonburn in 1446/7. James (17th C.) resident at Horselee in Cavers Parish in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) rented quarter of the farm of Wiltonburn from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1690. He is also listed as resident at Wiltonburn on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls; Walter, who was listed after him, was surely related. James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Euphan Elliot in Eskdalemuir in 1725. He was living at Howpasley in 1726. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, probably included: an unnamed child (b.1726); James (b.1730); and John (b.1735). If he remarried, then Andrew (b.1747), baptised in Roberton, may also be his son. James (18th C.) resident of Burnflat. He married Mary Rutherford in Hawick Parish in 1764 and had a daughter Isabel in 1764. James (18th C.) resident of Whitlaw. He was probably related to George, who was recorded as shepherd at Whitlaw in 1767. He married Christian Hood in Hawick in 1764 and their children included: Agnes (b.1766); Walter (b.1768); and George (b.1773). The witnesses in 1766 were the whole congregation. James (d.1782) cooper in Hawick. His death is recorded in 1782. It is possible he was the father of James, writer of ‘Teribus’, whose father is said to have died when he was an infant. He could be the James who married Mary Rutherford in Hawick in 1763 or the James who married Christian Hood in 1764. Mary Rutherford died in Hawick in 1808, with her deceased husband referred to there as ‘Cudy’. James (18th/19th C.) stocking-maker in Hawick. His wife Lizzy Thomline died in 1816 and an unnamed twin of his died a week later. It is not impossible that this is the same man as the author of ‘Teribus’, if he was married twice. He may be the ‘workman’ James recorded in 1779 when he witnessed a baptism for carrier Gideon Scott. James (18th C.) wright in Hawick Parish. In 1772 he married Jane Dawson and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1773);
Hogg

James (b.1792), who served in the army; Adam (b.1782); John (b.1784); Is-abel (b.1787); and Susan (b.1787). The witnesses in 1779 were John Kyle and Robert Thomson. James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Helen Wilkie in 1789, who was also in 1779 were John Kyle and Robert Thomson. James (1770–1835) poet and novelist, called the ‘Ettrick Shepherd’, not to be confused with his more famous namesake and contemporary from Hawick! Locally he was referred as ‘Jamie the Poeter’. From a common upbringing, it is said that he never fit in well with polite society, and lived most of his life in the Borders.

He was born at Ettrick Hall, in a cottage that was demolished in 1847. His father Robert was a shepherd who lived to about 90, and his mother was Margaret Laidlaw, who was a great teller of tales and singer of songs. He spent a total of 2 periods of about 3 months at school, worked as a cowherd, then at age 16 got a job in Peebleshire, moving to Yarrow in 1790, where he had use of his employer’s library, and started to write verses from 1796. He took lease of the farm at Ettrick House in 1800, soon after publishing his first poem, with a collection ‘Scottish Pastorals, Poems, Songs, etc., mostly written in the dialect of the South’ in 1801. He met Sir Walter Scott and became friends with Allan Cunningham. Finding no success in farming, he moved to Edinburgh, where he attempted to pursue a literary career, while continuing odd agricultural jobs. Success came with the publication of ‘The Queen’s Wake’ in 1813, followed by life rent of Altrive (in the Yarrow valley) being given to him by the Duke of Buccleuch in 1815. He continued to publish verse and works of fiction, his poem ‘Kilmeny’ and novel ‘Confessions of a Justified Sinner’ were literary landmarks. At age 50 he married Margaret Phillips from Annandale, and they had one son. He was a frequent visitor to Hawick, particularly for fairs and Common Ridings, and was a friend of James Ruickbie. A poem ‘Round About Hawick’ appears in the tale ‘The Souters of Selkirk’ and the Punch-Bowl public house features in another story. There is a statue of him at Ettrick Hall where he was born – ‘Beside the lone St. Mary They have raised to him a pile, – ‘Mid the haunts of elf and fairy, The scenes he loved so well’ [JT], ‘And next the name of Ettrick’s Bard I saw; Sons of the desert – nature’s darling child! Say, shepherd, from what sources didst thou draw They strains so sweetly beautiful and mild?’ [JTe]. James (18th/19th C.) tenant of Lilliesleaf Mill, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. James (c.1780–1838) writer of the familiar version of ‘Teribus’. We have no record of the date (or even year) of his birth. Born in Hawick, his father died in infancy, and he was hired as a shepherd at Wisshill at age 9 or 10, becoming a stocking-maker’s apprentice 2 or 3 years later. He became an avid reader and was a member of the Anti-Burgher (Green Kirk) congregation (probably the reason why his children’s births are not in the Hawick Parish records). He also repaired and made several improvements to the stocking frames, and was once jailed for labour organisation. ‘An Address to the Inhabitants of Hawick’ (1809) was his first poetical production; it seems that the actions of the Council regarding changes to the Common Riding, and appointment of a Cornet, in opposition to the wishes of the inhabitants of the West-end, fired him up into becoming an ardent Common Riding supporter. His version of ‘Teribus’ was developed soon afterwards, the final version being published in 1819, along with ‘Flodden Field’, its pre-quel. He wrote an additional verse for the tri-centenary of 1814. He also wrote a poem on the Carterhaugh Baa, and another on the death of Rob Reid of the Roadhead’s dog Flora, but nothing else survives. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was said to be short in stature; in an argument with Robert ‘Lurgie’ Wilson, Lurgie said ‘Ye’re a big man to be sae little’, to which he replied ‘An’ ye’re a little man to be sae big’. He married Ebenezer (which in those days could be a woman’s name) M. Porteous in 1817 in Wilton Parish, and she died in 1846, aged 58. She was living on Green Wynd in 1841 with children James, Euphemia, Eliza and Robert. Their children included: Euphemia (b.c.1819), who may have married a Mr. Henry; James (b.1821/2); Eliza (b.1823/4), who married Andrew Ramsay of the Queen’s Bodyguard, who was later clerk at the Tower of London; Agnes (b.1824/5), who married stockingmaker Adam Laing; Robert (1827/8–1825), also a frame-worker; and possibly Margaret, who married John Gilroy. In 1851 3 of his children were living together at ‘Hensnest’ in the Village. A commemorative plaque was unveiled at 14 Loan on the night of Common Riding Thursday 1900 (by his grand-daughter Miss Hogg), although the date of his death given there disagrees with what is in the register of deaths. The parish register notes ‘James Hog Stockingmaker (Poet) (died suddenly)’. He was buried in Wilton Old Cemetery, where his gravestone was refurbished in 2008 – 'So long as Hawick upon the Teviot stands – Long as the Common Riding is in vogue – So long your song, sung by her jovial bands, Shall still immortalize the name of Hogg' [JR]. James (b.1801/2) agricultural labourer who was living at Todshawhill Cottages in 1841. In 1851 he was at 'Old Easter Es-senside' and in 1861 at Netheraw Cottage in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1827 he married Margaret Robson in Robertson Parish. Their children (mostly baptised in Kirkton Parish) included: Agnes (b.c.1833); Thomas (b.1835); James (b.1837); and Alexander (b.c.1839); Walter S. (b.c.1841); and Margaret (b.c.1846). Either he or perhaps his father could have been the James, resident of 'Todjahill' in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. James (b.1801) from Lilliesleaf, son of James and Mary Hendeson. His brother John was a mason and he also had siblings Jane and Robert. He was farmer at Crumhaughhill. He is recorded there in 1841 and 1851, when he farmed 126 acres and employed 3 men. By 1861 he farmed 75 acres and he was still recorded there in 1868. His wife was Agnes and their children included: James and William.
James (b.1821/2) son of James Hogg of 'Teribus' fame. He worked as a framework knitter. He was said to have considerable literary abilities.
He was also interested in local history, being an early member of the Archeological Society (No.
21 on the membership list). In 1851 he was living at 'Hensnest' in the Village, with his siblings
Eliza and Robert. In 1861 he was at 5 Slitrig Bank. He married Jessie Douglas (from Bellie in Morayshire, 1833–1913) in Ancrum in 1860.
Their children included Jeannie (1861–1954) and Euphemia (1865–1937). He died at 6 Dalkeith Place. James (19th C.) grocer in Hawick. His shop was at 9 High Street, and was the oldest licensed grocer's in town in the late 1800s, with the old building demolished about 1900. Probably the same establishment can be seen in an 1899 photograph at 28 High Street. James (b.1870/1) Stationmaster in Hawick. He married Elizabeth M. Reid, who died in 1945, aged 67. He is buried in Wilton Cemetery. John (16th/17th C.)
granted 2 cottage-lands in Lilliesleaf in 1595/6.
John (17th C.) resident at Newbigging in Hawick Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is listed as 'webster there'. John (d.1822) son of a Lilliesleaf schoolmaster. He moved to Hawick, and became a weaver at Roadhead, where he published his volume of verse ‘Poems on Different Subjects’ (1806). This contains many poems in dialect, whose lines have been used as early examples in dictionaries. He was also known for his penmanship, and may have worked for a while as a teacher. He was a good friend of James Ruickbie, and he appears in Wilson's 'Tales of the Borders'. He married Beatrice Stuart. Their children include John Amos, one of the founders of Hawick Co-op. He was buried in Old Wilton Churchyard.
He may have been son of Andrew and Helen Archibald, born in Lilliesleaf in 1764 (and baptised there in 1765). John (18th/19th C.) resident of Mangerton. He was there in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border'. He was probably related to Robert, who was at Mangerton in 1797. John (b.1792/3) born in Ashkirk Parish. He was shepherd at Forkins in 1861. His wife was Helen, from Robertson. John Amos (1795–1882) son of the poet John, he was born in Lilliesleaf. He was a stockmaker in Hawick and locally was very influential in liberal politics, particularly the Chartist movement, being the first Secretary following its formation in 1838. This led to him being one of the founders of the Hawick Co-operative Society in 1839. In 1841, 1851 and 1861 he was living at 1 Kirkwynd. His wife was Agnes and their children included Margaret, John, Joan, Christian, Agnes and Helen. He was grandfather of John Gilroy the bookseller, through his daughter Margaret.
Rev. John (d.1877) from Hawick, he was associated with Allars Kirk and ordained as a minister in 1846 at Dumfries Townhead. However, he resigned over financial uncertainty in 1850. He travelled to Canada, becoming a minister in Hamilton, Ontario, moving to Detroit in 1859, and by 1861 had become a Church of Scotland minister in Guelph. He obtained a Doctorate of Divinity in 1870. He married Jane McMillan (also from Scotland) in Detroit. A photograph of him exsists. John (b.1828/9) born in Robertson Parish, he was a butcher in Hawick at 71 High Street. His wife was Mary Black, who died in 1877, aged 44.
Their children included: Janet (1860/1–1942);
and Elizabeth Mary (b.1867), who died in infancy
John (1831/2–97) shoemaker in Newcastleton.
In 1861 he was on South Liddel Street. He married Margaret Hogg, who died in 1922, aged 85.
Their children included: John (b.c.1856); Walter (1858/9–96); Thomas Taylor (1859/60–1958); Robert (1861/2–1949), who married Mary Graham; and George (1868/9–95). They are buried at Ettleton. John (1853–1908) local artist. His paintings of ‘Wilton Lodge’ and ‘Teviot Bridge'

He was Cornet in 1983. His sons Stuart and Graham both play rugby. Joseph (1845-1903) son of George from Hawick and Mary Pearson from Castleton. He worked as a French Polisher. In 1864 he married Margaret, daughter of William Laidlaw in Hawick. They had 15 children and the family emigrated to the U.S.A. in 1894, settling in Philadelphia. Their children were: George (b.1864) who died young; Christina (1866-1919), married John Leithead; George (1869-95); Mary (1871-74), died young; William (b.1873), died young; Robert (1874-1917); Mary (b.1875), died young; William Laidlaw (1876-1944); Alexander (1878-1901); Daniel (b.1880); Margaret L. (b.1882); Joseph (b.1884); Rachel Laidlaw (b.1887), died young; Mary (1890-1909); and James (b.1891), died young. Robert (15th/16th C.) witness to the 1508 sasine where Adam Hepburn inherited his father’s Lordship of Liddesdale. Walter was listed just before him, and so probably related. Most of the men were local, but it is unclear how they may be related to other Hoggis. Robert (17th C.) resident in Weensland. He married Margaret Anderson and their daughter Bessie was baptised in 1688. The witnesses were Bailies William Laing and Robert Wright. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Mangerton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 6 horses. He was probably related to John, who was recorded there in 1821. Robert (1786-7-1857) coachman at Edgerston, son of Robert. He married Isabella Murray, who died in 1860, aged 71. Their children included: Robert (1817/8-53); and Elisabeth, who died aged 13. They are buried in Bedrule kirkyard. Robert (1827/8-1913) younger son of James, author of ‘Teribus’. He worked for 30 years for hosiery manufacturers Renwick & Co, this being run by the husband of his niece, Jeanie Laing. Robert (1854/5-96) coachman in Hawick. He married Mary McBain, who died in 1933, aged 92. They are buried in Wilton Cemetery. Stuart (1992-) son of John, who was Cornet and played for Hawick R.F.C., he attended Trinity and Hawick High Schools. He played back for the Wanderers and the P.S.A. before being selected for Hawick R.F.C. himself, and later signing as a professional for Glasgow Warriors. He was first capped for Scotland in 2012, when still a teenager. He now has more than 50 caps for Scotland and was named player of the tournament in the 2016 and 2017 Six Nations competitions. He also toured with the British and Irish Lions in 2017. Thomas (17th C.) shepherd at ‘Chisholme and Widburne’ in Wilton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Thomas (18th/19th C.) socking-maker in Hawick. His unnamed child died in 1816. Thomas (18th/19th C.) carter in Hawick. His daughter Betty died in 1810. Thomas (1791-1882) born in Yarrow, he was an agricultural labourer at Borthaugh. In 1841 he was living at Borthaugh Cottages and was at Cottage No. 2 in 1851. He may be the Thomas who was a shepherd at Hartwoodburn Cottage in 1861. He married Jane Soon (1795-1847). Their children included: Thomas, died in infancy; Janet (1818-43), who married William Bell; Isabella (1820-98), who married Thomas Murray; Euphemia (1823-46); Thomas (again, 1827-46); Julian (b.c.1827); Margaret (1829-1902), who married Simon Gordon and died on Staten Island; and Robert (1832-1904), who died in Rhode Island. Thomas ‘Tom’ (1934-) local councillor and Honorary Provost 1992-96. Walter (15th/16th C.) lited as a witness to the sasine of 1508 in which Adam Hepburn inherited Liddesdale and other lands previously belonging to his father, Patrick, Earl of Bothwell. Robert is listed after him, and so they may have been related. Walter (16th C.) lited among those named on the side of the Kers in the 1568/9 bond between the Kers and the Scotts. This was to resolve the long-running feud, including apolgising in Melrose Abbey for the murder of the earlier Sir Walter in 1552. This suggests that he may have been involved in that murder on Edinburgh High Street. Walter (17th C.) listed as resident at Wiltonburn on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James, who was listed after him, was surely related. Walter (18th/19th C.) recorded at Teindsideburn according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Walter (b.1777/8) born in Ashkirk Parish, he was frame-worker in Hawick. He married Euphemia (or Euphan) Hardie in Wilton Parish in 1815. Their children included: George (b.1817); Christina (b.c.1819), who married Andrew White; and Robert (b.1819/20), who worked as a woolen finisher. In 1851 he was living with his daughter Christina and her family on Wilton Path. Walter (1784/5-1826) died at Faurnash Mill. He is buried at Teviothead along with his son Thomas. He is probably the son of Thomas and Isabel Stavert born in 1785. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident at ‘Bridgend’ when he paid the cart tax in Cavers Parish in 1791. He may also be the Hawick carrier who owned 2 horses according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Walter (19th C.) ploughman to Mr. Pringle at Hyndlee farm. He was a member of the original congregation of Wolfelee Free Church. Walter (19th C.) married Mary Jane Hobkirk in Hawick in 1874. William (15th C.) witness to the sasine of 1464/5 in which William Douglas of Drumlanrig was given the lands of Kirkton Mains and Flex. He is recorded as ‘Wilelmo Hog’, and most of the other appear to have been local. William (17th C.) recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls at Borthaugh. William (17th C.) resident at Easter Highchesters according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. William (17th/18th C.) married Isobel Laidlaw in Wilton in 1714. Their children included: William (b.1715); Isobel (b.1717); and Isobel (again, b.1720). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Hardie and their children, baptised in Wilton, included John (b.1722) and James (b.1724). The witnesses in 1722 were James Hardie (perhaps his father-in-law) and John Scott. Probably the same couple also had children baptised in Melrose: Andrew (b.1727); George (b.1729); Jean (b.1732); and Agnes (b.1734). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included: Margaret (b.1721); and an unnamed son (b.1722). Andrew (b.1743), also baptised in Cavers, may also have been his son. William (18th/19th C.) joiner and cabinet maker on the High Street, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He is probably the wright of that name whose daughter Janet died in Hawick in 1797 and the wright of that name whose wife ‘Beannie’ Crawford died in 1805. He may also be the wright whose wife Margaret and daughter Margaret Elliot both died in 1809. He witnessed a baptism for Andrew Turnbull in 1808. William (b.1774/5) from Roxburgh Parish, he was tenant farmer at Cavers Knowes. In 1861 he is recorded there as farmer of 183 acres. His wife was Margaret and their children included George and Robert (who both carried on the farm), together with Andrew, Margaret, Ellen and Marie. William (b.1779) born in Hawick Parish, son of James and Jane Dawson. He lived at Robertson Woodfoot. He is recorded there as an army pensioner in 1841 and ‘Chelsea Pensioner’ in 1851, along with his sister Elizabeth. In 1819 he married Helen Oliver in Robertson Parish and she was deceased by 1851. William (b.1857) son of George and Mary. He lived at 3 Back Row and enlisted with the Royal Scots in 1881. William C. ‘Bill’ (?–) Hawick’s last Town Clerk 1968–75 and first Chief Executive of Roxburgh District Council. Wilson (1898–1969) son of Robert and Joan Wilson, he was born in Hawick. In 1933 he married Isabella (‘Bella’, 1899–1935), daughter of John Ekron. They had a daughter Brenda (b.1934), who married Wilson Clark. He died in Hawick (also spelled ‘Hog’, ‘Hoge’ and ‘Hogge’ in early documents).

hogg an tatti (hög-in-taw’-i) n., arch. a dish involving sheep that died naturally, along with potatoes and other ingredients – ‘Hog and Tatoe. It is customary with those who have store-farms to salt the ‘fa’en meat,’ (i.e. the sheep that have died of ‘the sickness,’) for the use of the servants through the winter. This is stewed with onions, salt, pepper and potatoes; whence the name, Teviotdale’ [JoJ].

hoggie (hö-gee) n., arch. a young sheep – ‘…doddies an stirks an queys an stots an gimmers an hoggies an grumphies an guissies’ [ECS] (diminutive of hogg).

hogg in hairst (hög-in-härst) n., arch. a young sheep that is marked at the end of harvest, when it has ceased to be a lamb – ‘A lamb is smeared the second time, a ewe-hog is denominated a gimmer, and a wedder-hog a dy mond’ [JL].

Hog Gill (hö-gil) n. stream in the hills to the west of Newcastleton. It rises on Roan Fell Flow and runs through Hog Gill Bog to join the Black Burn, with a waterfall known as Hog Gill Spout just before that. There are old sheepfolds and a shepherd’s bothy nearby (the name is probably related to young sheep).

Hogg’s Journal (höz-jur-naal) n. monthly newspaper printed by Vair & McNairn in Hawick for George Hogg of Newcastleton. It ran for 5 issues in 1886. It’s full title was ‘Hogg’s Journal and Newcastleton Review’. It was said that Hogg was only about 16 years old at this time.

Hogg’s Mill (höz-nil) n. originally in Underdamside and part of William Watson & Sons, it was taken over by George Hogg in 1863 as a hosiery factory; Hogg had previously been manager of the hosiery side at Watson’s. This factory had much earlier been the ‘Inkle House’ and also known as Roughheugh Waulk Mill. Around 1885 the company moved to area between the Mill Path and the railway. The factory there may have formerly been the premises of Robert Ewen, and took up the entire site between the railway line and Mill Path. The taller block was built on the north side of the property in 1887, this was an imposing Victorian building, with large windows, ornamental corbels near the rood level and an ogee-headed gable on the side facing the road. This factory became derelict in the 1980s, burned down in 1999 and was demolished a year later. An in-house history was written for the centenary ‘The House of Hogg of Hawick, 1855–1955’.

Hoghill (hog-hill) n. former farmstead above Teindside and Commonside, marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map. It is listed in 1686 among the lands of Anna Duchess of Buccleuch, which were occupied by Robert Grieve in Commonside. It is probably the place where John Henderson ‘of the Hoghyll’ by Robert Grieve in Commonside. It is probably Anna Duchess of Buccleuch, which were occupied 1654 map. It is listed in 1686 among the lands of Teindside and Commonside, marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map. It is listed in 1686 among the lands of Anna Duchess of Buccleuch, which were occupied by Robert Grieve in Commonside. It is probably the place where John Henderson ‘of the Hoghyll’ came from in 1595.

Hoghill (hog-hill) n. farm on the east side of the Ewes valley (and A7 road) between Sorbie and Wrae. It is probably the same as the place came from in 1595.

Hog Knowe (hog-now) n. hill to the south of the B711 just before reaching Clearburn Loch.

Hoglar-burn (hog-lär-burn) n. former name for a farm in Lilliesleaf Parish. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls it was recorded among the properties of the Riddells of that Ilk, having been purchased from Andrew Gray. It was valued at £15 11s 9d. It is unclear where it was located.

Hogmanay (hog-mu-nä) n. New Year’s Eve. Note that before 1600 the New Year in Scotland started on March 25th (long preceding the change in England, which happened in 1752). It was traditional for children to go around local mansions singing for cakes, thus it was also called ‘Cake Day’. Another country custom was to remove gates on this day to let the New Year in. It was also a custom in the early 19th century for local youths to gather up all the carts they could and lock them together across the High Street, blocking the street; the origin of this prank is uncertain – ‘Fраe ilka door they’re jinkin’ To hail the happy day And they a’ gang a’ linkin’ To seek their Hogmanay’ [JT] (from Old French; see also Hanganay, Hangmanay and the New Eer).

Hogs (högz) n., pl. work that piecers would enter in their daily pay book, even although they would not actually finish until the following day, this being generally considered a bad practice and sometimes known as ‘working a deid horse’.

Hogsdale (hogz-däl) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded in 1541 as ‘Hogisdale’, with value 6 shillings and 8 pence. The location is uncertain.

Hog’s Haugh (hög-hawch) n. former name for a flat area of land on the northern side of the Ale Water between Castleside and Burnfoot (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Hogshiel (hög-sheel) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded in 1541 as ‘Hogischeill’, with annual value of 6 shillings and 8 pence. It is uncertain where this was located.

Hogson (hog-sin) n. Gilbert (15th C.) listed as ‘suitor’ for Riddell of Lilliesleaf and Whitton at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493. His surname is recorded as ‘Hoigson’.

Hoilhouse (hoil-hoos) n. Hoilhouse former lands in Hobkirk Parish, once part of the Barony of Feu-Rule and part of the dispute over superiority of the Barony in 1562. It is unclear where these lands were located, but they were adjacent to Hawthornside Wood and Little Glide-stains, probably to the east of these lands. There is a place of the same name near Moffat, as well as others elsewhere in Scotland (written ‘Hoilhous’, it presumably means ‘house in the hollows’).

hoise (hoiz) n., arch. a hoist, heave – ‘Gie’d a hoise’ [GW] v., arch. to hoist, heave – ‘For aa that the sun, hoisin itsel i the lift overheed . . . ’ [ECS], ‘A patriarch-leike body, – heed-bared, an airm hoised as ei hailed the Musies’ [ECS] (also written ‘hoize’; cf. heeze).

Holcaldrumhill (hol-kal-drum-hil) n. possible place name near Hawick. It is recorded in 1628 when ‘James Scot in Holcaldrumhill’ is among men accused by the Earl of Buccleuch of chopping down trees on his lands at Todshawhaugh and Trinitylands. It occurs in the petition after men from Galalaw and Heap, but it is unclear where this place could have been, or if it was transcribed correctly. It may be related to the farm of Hellcadrounburn, which was somewhere near the Caddroun Burn in upper Liddesdale.

holden (höl-din) pp., arch. held – ‘. . . the granting of which . . . the said Laird of Gladdstaines, will be holden and reput as ane piece of singular the Hole in the Waa (thu-ho-l-in-thu-waw) n. popular name for a close next to the Stag's Head bar on Drumlanrig Square, or the house next to it (the south corner of which contained the hinges for the West Port). This house contained an inn in the early 19th century. John Inglis was born there in 1838.

the Hole o the Burn (thu-ho-l-o-thu-burn) n. former name for a piece of land beside Denholm Kirk, which was also a right of way around the church. It was so-called because a stream flows under there and was usually covered by a flagstone.

Holiday (ho-li-di) n. Christopher (1707/8-47) son of John. He was returning home from Carlisle and near Longtown was attacked by Adam Graham, who shot him in the back and beat him with his own staff. He is buried in Ewes Kirkyard.

Holland Hoose (ho-lind-hoos) n. pub at 4 Drumlanrig Square, established in 1885, formerly being ‘Graham’s Hotel’, with proprietor John Graham. The name is possibly in connection with the Earl of Holland, who was a well known literary patron of his day; however, it has also been suggested to be connected with Dutch wool merchants who once lodged there. Thomas Graham was publican later. It closed in the 1990s and the building is now a beauty parlour, after renovations in the early 2000s (also sometimes ‘the Holland Hoose’).

Holliday (ho-li-di) n. John (1858/9-1945) tenant farmer in Demainholm. He married Jane Elliot, who died in 1922, aged 44. Their children included: Margaret Jane (1917-9); Mary Evelyn (1916-7); and Elizabeth Jane (1920-1). He died at Caulside House. They are buried in Ettleton Cemetery.

the Hollies (thu-ho-leez) n. house in Denholm on the Wynd.

hollin (ho-lin) n., poet. holly, the holly tree – ‘Alone in greenwood must I roam, Hollin, green hollin: A shade of green leaves is my home, Birk and green hollin’ [JDC].

the Hollow Burn (thu-ho-lo-burn) n. another name for the Flex Burn around Whitlaw. It is so named (along with ‘the How Burn’) in the 1767 description of Hawick Common. It may be that the name was only applied to the lower part of the stream, between the point where Whitlaw Slap joined and the mouth at the Slitrig. James Wilson describes it as lying between Meikle Whitlaw and Little Whitlaw.

the Hollows (thu-ho-loz) n. former lands just north of Canonbie, by the A7. This was essentially the same place as ‘Gilnockie’, where the Armstrongs once had a tower (or 2 towers). The restored tower there is now called ‘Gilnockie Tower’, although Hollows Tower was quite distinct, with the original Gilnockie being just on the other side of the River Esk. It seems likely this is the place meant by ‘Hoilhous’ in records of Armstrongs of the 16th and early 17th centuries. The Scotts of Buccleuch possessed the lands there according to the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. It was a hamlet in the 18th and 19th centuries, with a blacksmith and half a dozen other houses (it is ‘Hoihous’ in 1622 and ‘Halhous’ in 1663; it is marked ‘ye Hollas’ on Sandison’s c.1590 map and ‘Hollous’ on Gordon’s c.1650 manuscript map).

holm (höhm) n. a stretch of low-lying grassland, ‘usually by a river, a meadow, a’haugh’ (see also hown).

Holm (höhm) n. former name for lands near Bedrule, adjacent to Middle, both also being formerly known as Dykes. The farm may once have been part of the Barony of Feu-Rule. It is listed along with Middle in the 1511 charter of the Douglasses of Cavers. This land was once part of the Wells estate (it is ‘Helm’ in 1511 and 1634 and ‘Holme’ in 1738).

the Holm (thu-höhm) n. familiar name for Newcastleton, a shortened form of Copshawholm, so called because it was built on the ‘holm’ (i.e. low, flat land) occupied by some former holdings called Copshaw. The name could correspond to the lands of ‘Holme’ which were recorded in the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale, with a value of 12 pence and no tenant – ‘The Holm’... a teacher came...

here, an he’d been here months an he said ‘it must be a very big orphanage at Newvastleton’ [IWL].

Holm Brig (hōm-brig) n. bridge over the Liddel Water at the south end of Newcastle. It was built in 1823 by local builders William Crozier and John Nichol.

Holmdows (hōm-dōwz) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded in 1541 as ‘Holmedows’ and stated to have no tenant. It is unclear where these lands were.

Holmfait (hōm-fait) n. Holmfoot, farm in Castleton Parish, situated near the south end of Newcastle. It may be another name for ‘Townfoot’. William Little was a mason there in 1821. George Underwood was there in 1868.

Holm Hill (hōm-hill) n. hill just to the west of Newcastle. It was formerly the site of the Common attached to the village, where the householders would pasture their cattle, and where each residence was assigned 2 acres of land. It now hosts the 9-hole Newcastle Golf Course.

Holm Sike (hōm-sīk) n. small stream that joins Whithope Sike near the farm of Whithope, to form Howford Sike and run north to join the Borthwick Water (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map; it is possible that the name is connected to Whames).

Holshiel (hol-shiél) n. probable place name in Liddesdale, recorded as ‘Holschel’ in a rental roll of c.1376, in the ‘Quarterium de Ludne’.

holsie-jolsie (hol-see-jol-see) n., arch. a confused mass of different sorts of food, as in pigswill (a Teviotdale example of rhyming reduplication; noted by J. Jamieson).

Holstruther (hol-stru-thur) n. lost place name near Branholme. It is recorded in the description of the half barony of Branholme in the charter of 1420 where it was granted to the Scotts of Buccleuch. The lands lay ‘on the west side of the Syke, running down from the kirkland’, suggesting perhaps a connection with the former chapel between the Newmill Burn and Chapelhill farm (‘struther’ refers to a marshy area, as in ‘Wulliestruther’ and ‘Buckstruther’).

holt (ōl’) n., poet. a wood, stretch of wooded land – ‘And they flew oure sea, and the flew oure land, Oure mountain, holt, and town . . . ’ [JTe].

the Holt (thū-hol’) n. former cottage on the lands of Harwood-on-Teviot, also known as Hott.

Holydean (hō-ō, ĕ-lee-deen) n. ruined castle, once the home of the Kers, about a mile west of Bowden. It was built in 1350 and largely demolished around 1760, with the remaining part incorporated into the farmhouse. An adjacent gable contains Hobby Ker’s Well and there are also the remains of an ancient chapel nearby. There was also an ancient deer park here, and there are some old ash and birch probably surviving from this period. The lands were among those in the original grant to the monks of Selkirk by David I (the origin of the name is probably Old English ‘halig denu’, meaning ‘holy valley’; it first occurs as ‘Olyden’ in 1385, then in Abbey charters frequently as ‘halyden’ or ‘halydene’ until the 17th century; it is Cas of Halyden’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map and ‘Holly Dean’ on Roy’s c.1750 map).

Holywell Rig (hō-lee-wel-rig) n. ridge to the south of Priesthaugh farm, between the Skelfhill and Priesthaugh Burns. It reaches a height of 428 m. The name is surely connected with the spring at Priesthaugh, which was supposed to have healing powers and was a site of pilgrimage at least until the early 17th century. The northern slopes have signs of cultivation terraces and a linear earthwork.

Home (hōm) n. Alexander (d.c.1460) 1st Lord Home, son of Sir Alexander and Jean Hay. He was one of the signatories of the Border laws document drawn up in 1449. He married Margaret, daughter of Alexander Montgomery, and secondly married Marion, daughter of John Lauder. His children were: David; Nicholas; Sir Thomas; Ellen, who married Adam Hepburn, Master of Hailes and secondly Alexander, 3rd Lord Erskine; Alexander, Master of Home, whose son Alexander succeeded; John, Prior of Coldingham; Katherine, who married John Sinclair and then Archibald Douglas; George of Ayton; and Sir Patrick of Fastcastle. His son Alexander was assigned the farm of Aikwood in 1492. Alexander (d.1506) 2nd Lord Home, son of Alexander, Master of Home and Agnes Hepburn. He was grandson of the 1st Lord Home, whom he succeeded about 1461. In 1464 he was on an inquest regarding the inheritance of the lands of Swinton. He fought against James III and gained considerable power after the crowning of the young James IV. He became a Privy Counsellor in 1488 and was Warden of the East Marches 1489–96. He was also made Great Chamberlain of Scotland in 1488, and the offices of several wardships were transferred to him, e.g. he became Bailie of Ettrick Forest, Keeper of Newark Castle and Ranger of the Ward of Yarrow; he had the lease of Tinnis for his fee from 1488 until 1496, with his son Alexander mentioned in 1492. He also had the lease of Kirkhope. In 1491 he and his son Alexander were mentioned in relation to the lands of ‘Aikwod et Huntlie'. He also leased Gilmainscleuch in 1492. In 1492/3 King James IV granted him the lands of 'Grenewod' (in the Borthwick valley), which had formerly belonged to Sir Thomas Turnbull. In 1493/4 he gained superiority over Appletreehall from Elizabeth Cunningham and lands and the Barony of Hassendean from William Livingstone of Drumry. He served as Comptroller and Ranger for Ettrick Forest, and is recorded many times in the Exchequer Rolls around 1500 regarding payments for lands in Ettrick. In 1501 he was granted relief for the 40-pound lands of Chamberlain Newton. In a 1501/2 bond of reversion, he promised to pay Robert Scott of Stirches £100 Scots for the lands of Harden. In 1502 he was fined for non-appearance to 'give suit' for his lands of Hassendean, Appletreehall, Broxfied and Crailing at the Justice-aine in Jedburgh. In 1502 (as superior of the lands) he granted Appletreehall to Walter Scott of Howpasley. He also received the rental of Carterhaugh as Keeper of Newark Castle in the period 1503-07. He served as Great Chamberlain of Scotland. He married Isabel Douglas and secondly Nichola (sometimes written ‘Nicolas’), daughter of Sir George Ker of Samuelstown (and step-daughter of Marion Sinclair, who was widow of George of Wedderstain). He was succeeded by his sons Alexander and then George. Another son, Andrew, feued the lands of Cacrabank and Coreseleuch in 1510. He also had a daughter Elizabeth, who was Lady Samuelton in 1542. Alexander (d.1516) 3rd Lord Home, eldest son of Alexander, 2nd Lord. In 1490 he was appointed, jointly with his father, as Bailie of Ettrick and Keeper of Newark Castle. He leased Tinnis in Yarrow along with his father in 1492, as well as Aikwood, ‘Douglascrag, Qnihithop, Duchir and Tynnes’. In 1493/4, when he was still ‘Master of Home’ he was infected in the lands of Hoscote, which had formerly belonged to Robert Turnbull. He succeeded his father in 1506, the lands including Greenwood (Girnwood), Lyne, Stouslie, Groundistone and Harden in Roxburghshire, as well as Ewesdale and extensive lands in Berwickshire. He had a confirming charter of his lands in 1509/10, including the Barony of Hassendean and lands of Appletreehall and Ewesdale, as well as many other properties. Like his father, he was Receiver of the accounts for Ettrick Forest, starting in 1507. In 1510 he feued the lands of Oakwood, Redfordgreen, Hartwoodburn, Huntly, Altrieve, etc. In 1511 he was among the witnesses to the charter granting the Barony of Hawick to Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1512/3 he bought Broadlee (in the Borthwick valley) from Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig. He was Lord Warden General of the Marches from 1510 until about 1513. He commanded part of the Scottish force at Flodden, leading the vanguard with Alexander Gordon, Earl of Huntly and routing the force of Sir Edmund Howard, but coming under criticism for remaining inactive afterwards. However, he was executed for treason because of his support for the Earl of Angus in trying to control the young King James V, while his brother William, Prior of Coldingham, was assassinated by the Hepburns. Sir Anthony Darcy (or ‘De la Bastie’) was made Warden in his place, and all of this led to Darcy being killed by Sir David Home of Wedderburn. His estates were forfeited, which led to Sir Walter Scott of Branzholme gaining Harden, Hoscote and lands in Hassendean (although many of his lands were restored by Parliament to his brother George in 1522). His lands in Ewesdale went to Robert, Lord Maxwell. After the execution, his head (and his brother William’s) was fixed to the Edinburgh Tolbooth, but forcibly removed by his brother George and buried in 1520. In 1516 a large number of Turnbells and others had remission from the King for treasonably helping him and his brothers. He married Agnes, daughter of James Stewart, Earl of Buchan and secondly married Katharine Stirling. He was succeeded by his brother George. His daughter Janet married John Hamilton and succeeded to the lands of Samuelton. Alexander (d.1575) 5th Lord Home, son of George, 4th Lord and Margaret Haliburton. He was appointed Warden of the East Marches in 1550. In 1551 he had a ‘retour’ for his father’s lands, which included Stouslie, Groundistone, Harden, Broadlee, Hoscote and Girnwood, as well as lands in Berwickshire and elsewhere. In 1555/6 he had a ‘precept of sasine’ for Hoscote and also summoned William Scott in Harden to appear at Melrose Abbey to receive the sum of £40 Scots as redemption of these lands. He was appointed Warden of the Eastern Marches in 1557 and reappointed in 1561. In 1559 there is a ‘letter of reversion’ between him and William Scott of Todrig (and Harden) and his son Walter; although he had sold them his lands of Harden, they agreed to resign them to him on payment of 160 merks. In 1562 he was appointed Warden and Keeper of the Lordship of Liddesdale. He was among the prominent men of the nation who signed the document declaring James as Monarch (in place of Mary) in 1567. He was warded in Edinburgh Castle in 1574. He married Margaret, daughter of Walter Ker, and secondly married Agnes, daughter of Patrick, Lord Gray. He was succeeded by his son Alexander, 1st Earl Home. Alexander (c.1567–1619) 6th Baron Home and 1st Earl Home, son of Alexander, the 5th Lord, whom he succeeded in 1575. Among the titles he inherited was Baron of Hassendean, including the lands of Appletreehall. He was also Warden of the East Marches. In 1587 Andrew Home, Commendator of Jedburgh infected him in the Lordship of Jedburgh, which included Ruecastle, Abbotrule, Bonchester and other parts of Rulewater. In 1590/1 he was named in a case brought against the Scottish Wardens. In 1594 he had a Commission, along with Sir Robert Ker and Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, to raise all men between the ages of 16 and 60 to fight against the Earl of Bothwell and his followers. In 1601 he was warned by James Cunningham, Earl of Glencain to remove himself from lands in the Barony of Hassendean and in 1612 he was summoned to produce all his documents relating to lands in Hassendean. He was appointed Lord Warden of all the Scottish Marches in 1603. In 1610 he complained to the Privy Council about a large number of Armstrongs and others for not paying their teinds. In 1611 he was served heir to his grandfather George, Baron Home. In 1616 he sold the lands of Middle Mains of Hassendean and Wester Hassendean (or Horsleyhill) to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. His testament of 1616 survives. He married Christian, daughter of William Douglas, 5th Earl of Morton and secondly Mary Sutton, daughter of Lord Dudley. He was succeeded by his son James and then by a cousin, also James. After the death of James his heirs were his daughters Margaret (Countess of Moray) and Anne (Lady Maitland), who were the superiors of some local lands, including Harden. He had a natural son, William, who was Provost of Dunglas. Alexander (d.c.1684) Covenanter supporter. Along with Thomas Turnbull of Standhill, he led the men who besieged Drumlanrig’s Tower in Hawick in 1679. At his trial the Town’s Sheriff Officer described how he rode ‘on a bay horse and that he had pistols before his saddle, and a cloak lines with red, and his own hair which was blackish’. He led about 100 rebels, who broke into the tower and took away the arms the following day. He was hung for his crimes. Andrew (16th C.) 2nd son of George, 4th Lord Home, he was Commendator of Jedburgh. ‘Maister Johne Hume son to the Abbot of Jedburcht’ is recorded in 1547, and was presumably his son. In 1561 he was among men who were to appear before the Privy Council to present criminals. In 1567 he sold many of the abbey’s lands (including Abbotrule) to Adam French and his wife Margaret. In 1569 he was one of the sureties for George Rutherford of Grange and John Turnbull in Abbotrule. In 1583/4 he granted half the meadow of Belses to Walter Turnbull of Bewlie and the other half to William Middlemas of Lilliesleaf. Sir David of Wedderburn (d.1467) 2nd son of Sir Alexander of Home and Dunglas, and younger brother of Alexander of that Ilk. He was armour-bearer to William Douglas, 2nd Earl of Angus, who granted him the lands of Wedderburn in 1413 (confirmed by James I in 1431), as well as Hutton in 1415/6. He witnessed a charter for the Earl of Douglas in 1433/4, Archibald, Earl of Douglas also granted him Wolfelee and Wolfeleehope in 1436 (with associated sasine), confirmed in 1464, along with Stonedge. He was thus the 1st Home Laird of ‘Wollee’, (i.e. Wolfelee). He was made Bailie of Coldingham Priory in 1442. In 1443 he witnessed a charter for the lands of Hownam. It is said that his older brother, Alexander, went to France in his place, dying at the battle of Verneuil. He had a discharge to Sir Alexander of that Ilk (probably his nephew) in 1464. He married Alice de Wedderburn, from whom he may have gained his main titles. He had 2 sons, David and Alexander, his elder son predeceasing him, so he was succeeded by his grandson, George. Given that he is recorded over a period of 50 years, he either lived to a very old age, or else there are 2 generations here. David (15th C.) elder son of Sir David of Wedderburn. He witnessed a charter for the lands of Hownam in 1443, along with his father and several other Homes. He is probably the David who was one of the signatories of the Border laws document drawn up in 1449. He married Elizabeth Carmichael, who died in 1495. He predeceased his father and his son George was served as heir to the lands still vested in his mother when she died. Sir David of Wedderburn (d.1513) eldest son George, he was also 3rd Laird of ‘Woollee’ (i.e. Wolfelee). His father passed on the lands of Wolfelee to him in 1474, retaining ‘liferent’ for himself. In that same year he also had a sasine for the lands of Wedderburn. In 1479 he had a sasine for the lands of Over Woollee, Nether Woollee and Wolfehopelee. Also in 1479 he had sasine for half of the lands of Polwarth, resigned by his mother, Mariota Sinclair. He succeeded his father in most of his lands following his death.
in 1497. Also in 1497 he had respite as head of 100 or so men for burning lands of William Wallace of Craige. In 1501/2 he had remission, along with others for the murder of ‘John Low-donne’. In 1502 he succeeded to his father’s lands of Morriston, Peilrig and others. He is probably the Sir David who had 20 oxen and cows stolen from his lands at Lammermuir by David Oliver in Strange, as recorded in 1502. In 1505 he leased lands in the barony of Upsettlington, in 1506 had sasine for ‘Hetschaw’ in Lauderdale and in 1507 inherited his father’s lands of Jardinefield. Along with his brother John he witnessed a document for Melrose Abbey, regarding land in Leith, in 1510. He married Isabella, daughter of David Hoppringle of Smailholm and had 8 sons. 7 sons (known as ‘The Seven Spears of Wedderburn’) accompanied him to Flodden, where he was slain along with his eldest son, George. The traditional story is that their surviving retainers carried them from the battlefield wrapped in the Wedderburn banner. Tradition also says that the same banner was used in 1650 at the Battle of Dunbar, when another Sir David and his son George were slain. His children were: George, who was killed at Flodden; David, who succeeded; Alexander of Manderstoun; John, who married Beatrix, heiress of Andrew Blackadder of that Ilk; Robert, who married Margaret, other heiress of Blackadder of that Ilk; Andrew, Parson of Lauder; Patrick, progenitor of the Homes of Broomhouse; probably Bartholomew; Margaret, who married John Swinton of that Ilk; Isabella, who married William Cockburn; Mariota, who married James Towers of Innerleithen. A record of 1551 states that his wife ‘Elizabeth Hoppringle’ (presumably an error for Isabella) died 5 years earlier, when certain lands were inherited by his grandson, also David. His seal showed a lion rampant, together with a crest on a helmet, with a boar’s head. David of Wedderburn (d.1524) 2nd son of Sir David, he succeeded to the estates when his father and elder brother were killed at Flodden. He thus became 4th Laird of ‘Woollee’ (i.e. Wolfelee). In 1510 he had the rental from his father of the lands of ‘Mydelest of Windidurris alias Blackhauch’ in Ettrick Forest. He had sasines for inheriting his father’s lands in 1513/4 and 1514, and in 1515 had sasine for Over and Nether Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee. In 1516 he had sasine for Coldingham and lands in Ayton. He helped the Earl of Angus (his brother-in-law) retain control over the young James V. In 1517 he received half of the lands of Manderstoun, which had belonged to the executed Alexander, Lord Home. In 1517, in revenge for the deaths of his cousins Alexander, Lord Home and William, Prior of Coldingham, he killed Sir Anthony Darcy (or ‘De la Bastie’), the newly appointed Warden of the Marches, who had been installed at Home Castle by the Regent Albany. Later making peace with Albany, he helped with the siege of Wark Castle, being rewarded with a gold chain by James V. In 1522 his possessions were all restored, and he had sasine for the Hirsel, with the Lordship of Dunbar. Included was a new sasine for Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee. There are letters preserved from 1523 between him and the John, Duke of Albany, Regent of Scotland. When the Earl of Angus was forced to flee to England he also fell out of favour. He married Alison Douglas, widow of Robert Blackadder (also killed at Flodden) and sister of Archibald, 6th Earl of Angus; she survived until at least 1543, as documents relating to her lands and teinds show. He was killed in a conflict with the English, leaving 3 young sons (including George and David, who both succeeded, the other being John, killed by the English in Coldingham Tower in 1542) and 3 young daughters. Shortly before his death he appears to have been involved in a conflict with the forces of the Earl of Arran (Lieutenant to the King) in Edinburgh and later at Stirling; the force included his relative George, Lord of Home, as well as Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, and about 160 Borderers, who received remission in 1526. Sir David of Wedderburn (d.1574) 2nd son of David, he succeeded his brother George in 1547, also becoming 6th Laird of ‘Wollee’ (i.e. Wolfelee) and ‘Wolhoplee’. He was a supporter of Queen Mary and of Bothwell, and also of the young King James VI. He had sasine for Wolfelee in 1550. In 1551 he inherited his brother’s lands of ‘Myddilsteid and Wynddydur-ris or Blackhauch’ in Ettrick Forest. In 1552 he had a contract with his sister-in-law Joan Hepburn over rents of Wedderburn and other lands, as well as a tack with the Parson of Whitsome. In 1553 he had a contract for lands in Ayton and in 1554 a letter of reversion for Middlestead and Blackhaugh. In 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. There were documents relating to Whitsome in 1560, 1562 and 1571. There was a further instrument for Blackhaugh in 1563. In 1564 he had a gift of the duties from the family lands since his brother’s death. He was put in ward in Galloway, this being changed to Edinburgh and then waived in 1566. Also in 1566 he refused to sign the Roxburghshire ‘General Band’ of 1561, stating that he lived in the Merse and was not guilty of the crimes committed by the men of Teviotdale. In 1567 he was commanded to present several Turnbells and Olivers to answer to accusations associated with raids into England. He had discharges for fees on lands of Coldingham and in Renfrewshire in 1572/3. He married Mariota Johnstone, daughter of the Laird of Elphinstone, and she died in 1564. He secondly married Margaret Ker, widow of Pringle of Whytbank. His children included: George, who succeeded to the estates; David of Godscroft, who became a historian, writing a family history in Latin, as well as a history of the house of Douglas; James, Parson of Hilton; John, who is said to have died from the effects of over-studying, and was declared a rebel for the murder of George Home, sometime of Spott; Isabel, who married John Haldane of Glenegales; Margaret, who married David Home of the Law; Julian (or Juliane) who married Sir John Ker of the Hirsel, but divorced him, secondly marrying James Hoppringle of Whitelaw; and Janet, who married William Cockburn of Langton; and an illegitimate son, Patrick. Unlike many generations of his ancestors he actually died in his bed in comparatively old age. George of Wedderburn (d.1497) eldest son of David and grandson of Sir David of Wedderburn, whom he succeeded in 1467. He also became the 2nd Laird of Woollee (i.e. Wolfelee), with a sasine in 1469. He had a charter for lands in Bonkle in 1470. In 1473/4 he is recorded componing with the King in order to infeft his son and heir in his lands. In 1474 he resigned the lands of Wolfelee into the hands of Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, to be infefting in his son David, reserving ‘liferent’ to himself and a ‘terce’ for his wife. In 1476 he bought the lands of Jardinefield from John Jardine of Applegirth and also lands in Duns. In 1477 he had a pension for serving as Keeper of Berwick Castle. In 1478 he had sasine for the ‘Plewland’ in Lauderdale in 1490 and a sasine for Coldingham in 1495. He was charged to enter James Currer at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1494/5. He had a ‘retour de service’ for inheriting his father’s lands in Berwickshire in 1495, which had been held by his mother Elizabeth Carmichael, who died in that year. In 1496 he and his wife had a sasine for ‘Hetschaw’ in Lauderdale. He had a brother, Patrick, who was progenitor of the Homes of Polwarth. It is said that he and his brother fell in love with the 2 daughters and heirs of John St. Clair (or Sinclair) of Hermandstoun (their mother being Catherine, sister of Alexander, Lord Home), and had to forcibly extract them from their uncle’s clutches at Hermandstoun Castle. He married Mariota (or Marion), while his brother married Margaret and they split the lands between them. He had 2 sons, David (who succeeded) and John (who appears to be a cleric when recorded in 1510). He was killed in an engagement with the English. His widow secondly married George Ker of Samuelston. George (d.1513) eldest son of Sir David of Wedderburn. He was one of 7 brothers, known as ‘The Seven Spears of Wedderburn’. He was killed along with his father at Flodden. It is said that as the heir he was encouraged by his family to leave the field, but on the way home he stopped off at Coldstream Priory, where the Prioress, Isabella Pringle, convinced him to return to the Battle and his doom. His brother David succeeded to Wedderburn and other lands, including Wolfelee. George 4th Lord Home (d.1549) son of Alexander, 2nd Lord, he succeeded from his brother Alexander, 3rd Lord Home, who was beheaded in 1516. Another brother was John, Abbot of Jedburgh. In 1520 he rode to Edinburgh with a large force, removed the heads of his brothers from the Tolbooth and held a funeral and banquet in their honour. Many of the family lands (or at least the superiority over those lands, including kirk patronage, etc.) were restored to him by an Act of Parliament in 1522 (and confirmed by a revision of previous charters issued by the King in 1535). This included parts of Broadlee, Harden, Groundistone and Stouslie (or at least the tenancies of these lands, rather than the superiority). In about 1524 he and David Home of Wedderburn were considered as rebels when a force of about 160 Borderers met with them in Edinburgh and went to Stirling to try to confront the Earl of Arran (presumably in support of the Earl of Angus); remission was given to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and others in 1526. In 1525 Simon Armstrong had a ‘letter of reversion’ with him for lands in Ewesdale, including Moss paul, Fiddleton and Untank; he must have been the superior of Ewesdale at this time. In 1525 he had a ‘precept of sasine’ from Patrick, Earl of Bothwell, for lands of Stouslie, Groundistone and Harden (this being for the superiority), confirmed in a ‘precept of clare constat’ with date transcribed as 1552.
(but probably 1525 is meant). In 1525 he had another precept for lands in Bonecle, together with Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee. In 1528 he granted the upper part of Ewesdale to Ninian and David Armstrong, and they had a bond of ‘manrent’, pledging to serve him. He was appointed a Royal Lieutenant for keeping peace on the Border in 1529. In 1530 he was one of the Border chiefs imprisoned by James V for failing to keep thieves and other ‘broken men’ in order. In 1535 he gave a confirming charter of Harden to William Scott, as well as a letter of reversion to him for the lands of Harden and Hoscote. In 1540 William Scott of Harden gave the lands of Nether Harden to Simon Scott of Fenwick ‘until George, lord Home, redeems them’. In 1543 he signed the ‘Secret Bond’ with Cardinal Beaton, resisting English influence over the young Queen Mary. He served as Warden of the East Marches in 1543. In 1544 he and the Earl of Bothwell headed a force that made some attempt to defend Edinburgh against the English invaders under the Earl of Hertford. In 1546 he was appointed for a year as Warden of the Merse and East Marches. He married Mariota, daughter of Patrick Haliburton, Lord of Dirleton. His children included Alexander (5th Lord, who succeeded to his father’s lands and titles in 1524 at age 9. And he had sasines for most of the lands in the next few years. In 1528 he received a confirming charter of the family estates from James V, including for Wolfelee. During his minority the estates were managed by his uncle, Alexander of Manderstoun, and after reaching majority he was for a while confined to Blackness Castle (where he had 2 illegitimate sons, David and George, to a daughter of the Captain of the Castle). In 1540 his mother had an assignation for the lands of Hutton from the Earl of Glancairn, to go to him after her death. In 1541 he claimed a feu of Blackhaugh in Tweed. In 1542 he had a new arrangement for renting Blackhaugh in Ettrick Forest. In 1545/6 he had a gift from Queen Mary of the lands of Morriston in Berwickshire and also a sasine for Easter Polwarth. He married Joan (or Jean), daughter of Sir Patrick Hepburn of Waughton and had 3 children, his only legitimate son John predeceasing him (although he also had a ‘natural’ son, David). He died at the Battle of Pinkie and was succeeded by his brother David. His wife remarried to John Hamilton of ‘Ryisholm’. Her husband was killed by a group of Turnbulls from Belses, who were declared rebels in 1580; however, she also accused her nephew, also George of Wedderburn, of harassing her and her servants. Sir George of Wedderburn (1552–1616) eldest son of David, he was also 7th Laird of ‘Woollee’ (i.e. Wolfelee), confirmed in a sasine of 1564. He was born at Elphinstone and was a sick child, but grew rapidly in his youth. Until the age of 7 his teacher was John Knox. His father gave him lands in Berwickshire in 1566/7. He succeeded his father in 1574, including the lands in Berwickshire, as well as ‘Wolley and Wolhopey’. In 1574/5 he had sasine for Wedderbrun, Hutton, Jardinefield and the Hirsel. Also in 1574/5 he had a discharge for part of the dowry for his sister Isabel and in 1576 he had a financial agreement with his step-mother Margaret Ker. Also in 1576 he was surety for some Haitlies. In 1578/9 there was a discharge for teinds of Whitsome and in 1579 a decreet involving the lands of Upsetlington. In 1578 he was appointed Warden of the East Marches and also served as Comptroller of the Royal Household for King James VI. Because of his position the documents relating to him are extensive. There are several preserved letters between him and the King regarding Border matters. In 1579/80 he was involved in a bond with Sir John Forster, Warden of English East March. In 1580 he had the ‘escheat’ of Eckie Turnbull of Belses and John Young in ‘Camys’, who were convicted of the murder of John Hamilton of Cumnock; however, he was also accused by Hamilton’s widow (Jean Hepburn, Lady Wedderburn, who was his aunt) of harassing her over a longer period. Also in 1580 he had an agreement with the Commendator of Pluscarden. In 1581 William Lord Hay of Yester was caution for him not disturbing ‘Jehane Hepburne, Lady Weddirburne’. In 1581 he was relieved of ward beyond the River ‘Erne’ and in 1584 of his ward in Castle Doune. In 1584 he and his supporters had permission from the King to return home from the first Raid of Stirling. He gave a charter of ‘Kymmerghame’ to William Brown in 1585. In 1586 he had sasine of the Tweed fishing around Upsetlington, and another sasine for half of Polwarth. He had an acquaintance of a financial arrangement with Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus in 1586. He was further relieved of ward in 1586. In about 1588 he was appointed as one of the Parliamentary Commissioners for Berwickshire. In 1589 his brother John was granted Godscroft and other lands and also his brother James was granted teinds of Hilton and Otterburn. In 1590/1 he was cautioned for Alexander Lord Home in a case brought against the Scottish Wardens. In 1591 he made an agreement with his relatives John and David Home over the lands of Hilton. In 1593 he and his brothers supported a letter of ‘Law-burrows’ for his sister Julian against her former husband Sir John Ker of the Hirsel and his family, not to molest her in her liferent of the lands of Littledean. He served in the Scottish Parliament in the period 1590–1605, as a minor Baron and also representing Berwickshire. His testaments of 1590 and 1596 are preserved. In 1598 he was involved in a contract with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme (dated at Edinburgh and at Hawick) regarding Patrick Hepburn and the lands of Whitsome. In 1597/8 he had a contract from Robert Logan of Restalrig for Hutton, Bonniton, Berwick Castle and other lands in Berwickshire formerly belonging to Sir George Ogilvie of Dunlugas. In 1597 Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch wrote to him from Hawick regarding relations with England, presumably as a result of the capture of Kinnmont Willie the year before. His account books as Comptroller of the Royal Household from 1597 and 1598 give details of daily consumption and where the Court was located. In 1599 his ‘escheat goods’ in the regalities of Jedforest, Bonkle and Bothwell were given to John Simson of Dryburnford due to a debt. In 1601 he had sasine for the lands of Whitsome and in that year many of his tenants complained they were in arrears because of the ‘barrenness of the hail grund and landis in this cuntrey’ for the past 3 years. In 1602 he purchased lands in the Parish of Duns. Apparently as a result of debts incurred while serving as Royal Comptroller he had to sell some of his estates, including Woollee, which he sold to Sir William Cranstoun in 1605; this severed a 170 year connection between the family and the Rule valley. In 1608 he was asked to appear before the Privy Council for not repaying a debt of several years earlier. There were still disputes over fees for his time as Comptroller up until he died. In 1577/8 he married Jean Haldane, sister of John Haldane of Gleneagles. His children were: David, who succeeded, married Margaret Home, widow of Sir Mark Ker of Littledean, and was Sheriff of Berwick, but died at Dunbar along with his own son George (like their ancestors at Flodden); Anna, who married James Stirling of Keir; Isabel, who married George Home of Manderstoun; Elizabeth, who married Walter Ker of Fawdonside; Margaret, who married Hugh, Lord Loudoun and Archibald Stewart of Ardgowan; Mary, who married James Dundas of Arniston; and Beatrice, who married John Dickinson, minister at Kells.

George (c.1556–1611) 3rd son of Sir Alexander of Manderston, he became the 1st Earl of Dunbar. In his last decade he was extremely important in Scotland, being the chief advisor to James VI in Scotland. In 1606 he was made sole Commissioner on the Scottish side for keeping peace on the Border. He did this by ruthlessly pursuing alleged thieves, often having them convicted and executed with no real trial. He is said to have had 140 men executed soon after taking office and later had 5 of the leaders in Liddesdale executed, as well as 14 others. This was one of the last blows that broke the Elliot and Armstrong clans, causing many of those left to disperse. He also had the names of fugitives posted on market crosses, the list running to 262 names; many were in the West March, but there were 24 Elliots and about 40 Armstongs. James (16th C.) one of the men indicted in 1552 for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch. He was listed as ‘James Hwme’ along with ‘Wille Hwme in Fawnis’ and others. James (c.1607–33) 2nd Earl of Home, served heir to his father Alexander in 1621, including the lands and Barony of Hassendean, containing Appletreehall, as well as Redfordgreen, Drycleuchshiel, Hyndhope, Whithope, ‘Fawodscheill’, Huntly, Altrieve, Cacrabank, Hartwoodburn and Corsecleuch. He was granted the ‘teinds and spiritualities of the Abbey of Jedburgh’ in 1621, which included lands in Rulewater; he resigned the superiority of these lands to Sir John Ker of Jedburgh in 1624. In 1630 he paid the agreed 8,000 merks to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs for the resignation of the lands of Middle Mains of Hassendean and Wester Hassendean (also called Horsleyhill). He married twice, but had no children, and was succeeded by a distant cousin, James. His sister Margaret was served as heir to some of his lands in 1633. James (d.1666) 3rd Earl of Home, son of James of Whiterig, descended from the 2nd son of Alexander, heir of the 1st Lord Home. His mother was Lady Anne, daughter of George Home, Earl of Dunbar. Before he succeeded to the Earldom he was known as ‘of Cowdenknowes’. He was served heir to his father and to his grandfather in 1633. He married Jean Douglas, daughter of William, 8th Earl of Morton. His sons Alexander, James and Charles were all Earls in turn. Janet (17th C.) recorded in 1643 as liferenter in ‘...side’ in Abbotrule Parish. This was probably Mackside, with her land being valued at £50. She was probably widow or mother of a previous landowner there. John (b.1487) younger son of Sir Alexander, Lord Home. He became Abbot of Jedburgh. In 1530 he was ordered by the King (along with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and John Edmondson of that ilk) to desist in their dispute over the lands of Ednam. In 1531 he introduced the charter for Hector Lorraine inheriting Harwood and Hawthornside. He was probably the ‘Mr. John Home’ who granted lands in upper Liddesdale to Scott of Harden, these being ‘Over and Nether Clifioupis, Quhytkeirk and Quhyteland, Ermscleuch and Abbotsifies’. In 1543 he signed the ‘Secret Bond’ with Cardinal Beaton, resisting English influence over the young Queen Mary. Sir John of Cowdenknowes (d.bef. 1573) probably son of Mungo, who died at Flodden. They were descended from the 1st Lord Home.

In 1541 he was tenant of Hartwoodmyres. He was the first man named in the indictment for Kers and others for the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme on Edinburgh High Street in 1552. He was said to be ‘ane strykar of the said Valter with zur awin handis’, to have cried out to Cessford ‘Streik, tretour, and straik for thi faderis saik’ and afterwards to have stated ‘Ly thair, with my malison, for I had lewor gang by thi graif, nor thi dure’. He and his bairns were named in the 1564/5 bond between the Kers and the Scotts. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir Andrew Ker of Cessford (whose death was blamed on the Scotts). In 1524 Andrew Ker resigned lands in Smallholm to the couple. He was succeeded by his son Sir James. Rev. John (c.1630–90) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1650, was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of Dalkeith in 1658 and by the Bishop of Edinburgh in 1662. Probably in about 1664 he became Episcopalian minister at Ewes. However, he was deprived in 1681 for not taking ‘the Test’. He married Ann, daughter of David Livingstone of Dunipace. He died in Edinburgh. Katherine (15th C.) daughter of Sir Alexander, 1st Lord Home. She firstly married John Sinclair and secondly married Archibald Douglas. In 1479 she requested a copy to be made of a charter for Polwarth, with her procurator being Thomas Pitt, Rector of Abbotrule. Margaret (d.1683) daughter of Alexander, Earl of Home and brother of James. In 1627 she married James Stewart, 4th Earl of Moray and had 9 children. In 1633 she was served heir to some of her brother’s lands, including Redfordgreen, Drycleuchshiel, Hyndhope, Whithope, ‘Fawdscheill’, Huntly, Altrieve, Cacrabank, Hartwoodburn and Corsecleuch. Patrick (d.1478) cleric who became Archdeacon of Teviotdale after William Croyser was deprived in 1441. However, he was in dispute for a while with Walter Blair. He was Archdeacon from 1443 (when he is recorded as a witness), but did not settle the claims with Blair until 1446. In 1451 he lost the office to Croyser again, but regained local possessions a couple of years later and was fully recognised as Archdeacon when Croyser died about 1461. He resigned on a pension in 1472, and was still referred to as Archdeacon when abroad in 1474. He died in Sutri, Italy. His seal had a shield with the 1st and 4th quarters showing 3 papingoes (i.e. parrots) for Pepdic, and the 2nd and 3rd showing a lion rampant, for Home. Sir Patrick of Polwarth (d.1503) 2nd son of Sir David, he was Comptroller of Scotland in the period 1499–1502. His name appears many times in the Exchequer Rolls for that period. He leased the lands of Aikwood in 1490. In about 1500 he acted as bailie for George Ker of Samuelston in a land deal involving John Ker, as well as Alexander Lord Home and Nichola Ker. In 1499 he was assigned the Middlestead of Langhope (probably in the Ale valley) as well as Redford (perhaps related to Redfordgreen). Sir Patrick of Fastcastle (d.1507) son of Alexander, 1st Lord Home. He was assigned the lands of Singlie and Erncleuch in 1488 and again in 1492. He was one of the negotiators for the truce between Henry VII and James IV. He was father of Cuthbert of Fastcastle (who died at Flodden), Ada, Elizabeth, Isabel, Alison and 2 others. Sir Patrick (d.1648) 1st Baronet of Polwarth, son of Sir Patrick and Julian, daughter of Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst. He was served heir to his father in 1611. In 1632 he gained several baronies and estates in 1632, including Feu-Rule. He represented Berwickshire in the 1630 Parliament. He married Christian, daughter of Sir Alexander Hamilton and of Innerwick (and his wife later remarried to Robert, 3rd Lord Jedburgh). He was succeeded by his son Patrick, Lord Polwarth. Ranulph (13th/14th C.) English nobleman who was granted part of the estate of Chisholme (along with Robert de Mansers) by Edward in 1317. However, 3 years later it was restored to John de Cheseholme. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) indicted in 1552 for the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme on Edinburgh High Street. He is recorded as ‘Wille Hwme in Fawnis’ (probably Fawnyis in Berwickshire) and listed along with James, the Laird of Cowdenknowes and other Homes (written ‘de Hum’ and variants in the earliest documents, as well as ‘Hume’, ‘Howne’, ‘Hwme’, ‘Hwume’, etc.; see also Hume).

the Home (thu-höm) n. name sometimes used for the Haig.

Home By Burnfoot (höm-bl-burn-foo’) n. song with words and music written by Neil Mackay in 1970. The song was written in response to a competition devised by Burnfoot Residents’ Association, for a song celebrating both the Common Riding and Burnfoot. It was sung as one of three finalists at a reception given for the Cornet at the Burnfoot Roadhouse on his return from Denholm. It has rarely been sung since it was first written. However, arrangements have also been made for brass band (by Robert Hume) and for piano (by Ian Seeley).

the Home Guard (thu-höm-gârd) n. voluntary defence organisation during WWII, operating 1940–44. It was formed of men who were either too young, too old or in protected occupations, and so could not serve in the regular army. The local unit was called the 1st Battalion, Border Home Guard. In Hawick they organised training, were set up originally to be a second line of defence for invasions and later to cope with air-raids. Their commanding officer in the early days of the war was Walter Thomas Hepburne-Scott, Master of Polwarth and later was Lieut.-Col. Ben Montgomery. They had a ‘stand down’ parade in the Volunteer Park in December 1944. A closely allied organisations was the Royal Observer corps, who were set up as spotters on neighbouring hills, e.g. near Earlside. Observers at Jedburgh and Ashkirk both spotted Rudolph Hess’s plane in 1941 (note, note usually pronounced hám-gârd).

Home Law (höm-law) n. hill just to the north of Buccleuch, reaching over 410 m. It has an earthwork on its southern slopes.

the Homes (thu-hewnax) n. leading family of the Eastern March (roughly Berwickshire) during the 14th to 17th centuries, who have continued to have local influence until the present. They are said to be derived from the Earls of Dunbar and Northumbria. They traditionally had many lairds, rather than a single powerful chief. Home Castle lay just south of Greenlaw, while recent Earls of Home have lived at the Hirsel near Coldstream. Major lands of the family included Ayton, Coldingham, Eyemouth, Fastcastle, Lamberdon and Paxton. In the 15th to 17th centuries the Lords and Earls of Home held lands and superiority of lands much more local to Hawick, including Appletreehall, Broadlee, Chamberlain Newton, Ginwood, Groundstone, Harden, Hassendean, Hoscote, Midshiels, Stouslie and Wolfelee. In addition the Homes of Wedderburn also held superiority over lands in Rulewater. Old manuscripts of the Earls of Home are described in a volume by William Fraser in 1891, while those of the Homes of Wedderburn were published in 1902 – ‘Lord Hume he has summoned Tweed, Ettrick, and Yarrow; Tweed, Ettrick, and Yarrow obeyed his call’ [JH] (also sometimes ‘Hume’).

Homildon Hill (ho-mul-din-hill) n. battle of 1402, north-west of Wooler, in which Henry ‘Hotspur’ Percy defeated and captured Earl Archibald Douglas and inflicted heavy losses on the Scots. Henry IV gave Percy little credit for this victory, and claimed the ransom money for himself. However, he did bestow all of Teviotdale on Sir Henry Percy. These events led to the siege of Cocklaw Castle (at Ormiston) the following year, when Percy was to be further upset at Henry’s lack of support, leading to the revolt against Henry (also called ‘Humbleton Hill’).

The Honest Country Club (thu-o-nist-kun-ree-klub) n. club formed by local gentleman farmers in 1711, which only lasted until 1716, although it served as a sort of predecessor for the Hawick Farmers’ Club and the Teviotdale Farmers’ Club and Wisp Club much later. The founding members were John Pringle of Hairing, Walter Scott of Woll, William Plumber of Middlestead, Andrew Pringle in Haining, Philip Scott in Oakwood, Andrew Waugh of Shaw and Adam Ogilvie, younger of Hartwoodmyres. 6 other members were admitted in 1712–14. The minute books exist in the National Archives, with the last entry reading ‘this day the club did not meet the whole members being more concerned, the storme being so great to preserve their sheep from sterewing then for clubbing’.

Honest Men and Bright-Eyed Daughters (o-nist-men-in-bri-íd-dow’-urz) n. book created by Ian Landles and Derek Lunn, published in 1991 to accompany an exhibition in the Scott Gallery. It consists of photographs and ‘pen portraits’ (in dialect) of ‘fifty o’ Hawick’s weel
Honeyburn

Honeyburn (hu-nee-burn) n. farm just before Denholm. It is believed that the church lands of Denholm mentioned in the 14th century were located here, and the house still has a cross on the west gable. It may be that the monks of Melrose Abbey had an apiary here. The farm was formerly part of the Cavers estate. A tenant there in 1684, Robert Tait, was declared as a fugitive for being a Covenanter. The current house is certainly old, was once thatched and has internal walls with an interesting construction. Andrew Haddon moved there in 1848 and several generations of Haddons were there subsequently. The road from Hawick to Denholm used to pass to the south of here (also called ‘Honeytoon’ and similar; it was ‘Hurnyburn’ in 1684).

Honey Burn (hu-nee-burn) n. stream that joins the Teviot from the south near Honeyburn farm. It was formerly called ‘Staney Burn’.

Honeyman (hu-nee-pin) n. David (19th C.) head gamekeeper on the Cavers estate. On one occasion he was beaten up by a gang of Hawick poachers who had come to find the assistant keeper, John Sibbald.

Honeytoon (hu-nee-toon) n. Honeytown, former name for the farm and hamlet at Honeyburn. The farmer there in 1797 was James Heron and James Turnbull was a retired farmer there in 1841 (it is so labelled on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Honorary Burgess (on-ur-ur-ee-bur-jis) n. person who is admitted to the Burgess role gratis, rather than paying for the privilege. They continued to be appointed in Hawick long after there were no formal Burgesses, usually the honour being given to people who were not resident in the area. This honorific title carries no specific rights in the modern era, but formerly was equivalent to an ordinary Burgess, without the need to pay a fee. It is equivalent to the ‘freedom of the Burgh’ or being made a ‘freeman’ in other towns. One of the first entries in the Town Book is for Robert Wright, shoemaker in Easter Burnfoot, who was admitted in 1690 ‘in respect it is the custom of all towns, that the Provost or other Magistrates have the liberty to create 2 or 3 Burgesses gratis’. In 1694 2 men were admitted for having served for the Town in the Militia. Formerly the Bailies would sometimes make a local a Burgess for free. However, in 1718 it was decreed that no Bailie should thereafter create ‘any person burgess gratis, except it be some gentleman or other stranger, upon and for onerous causes’. The past list includes the following: 1734 Robert Scott of Horsleyhill; 1735 John Scott ‘wool combers’; 1736 Archibald Stevenson; 1740 William Adams and Francis Gatton; 1746 Charles Scott; 1748 Francis Scott (Earl of Dalkeith); 1749 Charles Johnstone; 1750 James Atkinson, John Chisholm, Mark Maugham, Michael Hoyes, William Robertson and John Elliot; 1751 John Dick; 1753 William Kirk; 1755 John Ramsay; 1760 Anthony Barclay and Robert Elliot; 1767 Lawrence Porteous; 1775 Adam Ogilvie; 1776 Andrew Lookup, William Robertson, John Haldane and James Wood; 1777 Thomas Scott, David Loch, Walter Grieve, Joseph Davidson and John Smith; 1778 Lieut. John Douglas and John Scott; 1779 Charles McKenzie; 1784 Adam Hobkirk; 1785 Vincent Lunardi; 1802 Lt.-Col. William Dickson, Capt. Archibald Campbell and Capt. McQuarrie; 1803 Lieut. Thomas Oliver; 1806 William Nixon; 1813 Hugh Mitchel; 1814 James Anderson and Charles Chisholme; 1818 James Grieve and David Moncrieff; 1819 Prince Leopold of the Belgians; 1821 Walter Montague Douglas Scott (Duke of Buccleuch) and Lord Montague; 1823 Edward Ellice, William Lockhart and Charles Riddell; 1825 James Douglas, Gilbert Elliot (Earl of Minto) and Sir William Elliott; 1828 Walter Scott and John Corse Scott; 1830 Dr. Robert Douglas; 1833 Capt. George Elliot; 1834 Henry Brougham (Lord Brougham and Vaux); 1834 Archibald Douglas; 1836 Thomas Murray; 1837 John Elliot; 1838 Dr. Andrew Smith; 1840 Lord John Russell; 1844 Richard Cobden and Rowland Hill; 1856 Louis Kossuth and Gen. Sir James Simpson; 1859 Richard Hodgson and James Wilson; 1881 William Elliott Lockhart; 1885 William Scott (Duke of Buccleuch); 1898 Gilbert Elliot Murray Kynynmound (Earl of Minto); 1904 Andrew Carnegie, Thomas Shaw and John Montague Douglas Scott (Earl of Dalkeith); 1906 James Murray; 1910 Lt. Gen. Baden-Powell; 1925 Earl Haig and David Cathels; 1933 Lord Dalkeith, Walter Elliot and Sir Thomas Henderson; 1970 David Atkinson; 1971 Chay Blyth; and 1974 the K.O.S.B.

Honorary Provost (on-ur-ur-ee-pro-vist) n. term used to refer to the Provost during the Common Riding ceremonies after the reorganisation of 1974 meant that Hawick no longer had civic head. The Honorary Provost is selected by the local councillors, chairs the Provost’s Council, acts in the role of Provost during the Common Riding and represents the Town at other town's festivals. The Provost's monogram is used as a decoration in the Town Hall during the Common Riding events. Perhaps the most important duty is the statement to congratulate the Cornet's Lass on bussing the Flag and then asking the Cornet 'to ride the meiths and marches of the commonty of Hawick according to ancient custom then having done so return the Flag to the Provost's Council Chambers on Saturday unsullied and unstained' (see also the Provost).

hoo (hoo) v., arch. to howl, hoot like an owl – 'The hoolet frae his garret grey Hoos up the glen at close o' day …' [DA].

hoo (hoo) adv., conj., arch. how – 'Hoo memory wreesals at the sneak Whene'er the 'slogan's soulded …' [RH], 'They wondered hoo to spend the day, When busybodies cam' their way' [WFC], 'Aye, they tell it still when the tale they raise, Hoo the pair lived couthily aa their days' [WL], '…And that was hoo twa he'rts were rowed intae yin' [DJ] (not commonly Hawick).

hooch (hooch) interj., arch. exclamation denoting triumph, excitement or exhilaration, particularly during Highland dancing – '…List to the hoochin' o' the couple in the middle On the day o' the Hiring Fair' [ECS], '…Boston Memorial Hall, where many a good 'hoochin' country dance has sent the Ettrick hoolets mad with envy …' [DH].

Hood (hood) n. Alexander (17th C.) tenant in Lilliesleaf. He held land valued at £10 in 1643 and is still recorded on the Land Tax Rolls in 1678. These lands were later owned by William Redford. Andrew (1815–69) stockingsmaker of Sillerbithall. He married Elizabeth Murray (1819–1905) and was thus an uncle of Sir James A.H. Their children were James (hosiery foreman), Elizabeth, Betsy and Christian. He was living on Bourtree Place in 1851.

F. Murray (19th/20th C.) known locally as a singer. G.B.W. (19th C.) tweed manufacturer of Wilson & Glenny's. George (18th C.) tenant in Cauld Faulds according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records, where his surname is written 'Huide'. He is probably the George, married to Agnes Armstrong, whose children baptised in Robertson Parish included John (b.1679), William (b.1682), George (b.1685) and Margaret (b.1687). The witnesses in 1682 were James Johnstone and Walter Armstrong and in 1687 were Robert Turnbull and John Noble. George (17th C.) cottar at Horsleyhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (18th C.) wright of Dryburgh. He married Isobel Spottiswoode (sister of 'The Hazel Dog o the Toor') who lived 1718–1809. His descendants included the Hoods who were drapers in Lilliesleaf, as well as G.B.W. James (b.1813/4) brother of Andrew, he was a thatcher and slater. In 1841 he lived with his mother, Helen, and siblings, on Walter's Wynd. By 1851 he was married to Janet and living at the Kirkstyle. His children included John, Betty, Charles and Janet. J.L. (?–??) local knitwear manufacturer. He became a partner with Walter Scott Barrie and James Scoon, then co-founded Scoon & Hood, tweed manufacturers, Teviotdale Mills. John (17th C.) resident at Hassendean Townhead according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John Murray (20th C.) son of James, he became editor of the Hawick Express, coming there after working for the Manchester Guardian. He was known as a stickler for precision. Robert (17th C.) listed as 'Rot. Hod' in 1689 when he was fined by the Hawick Magistrates for an irregular marriage with Margaret Armstrong. He was described as a ‘passenger’, suggesting that he was not from Hawick. The couple eloped to England, but were harshly fined ‘their haill moveable goods and gear’ and ‘banished the toune in all tyme to come’. Rev. Thomas Neilson (1922–82) born in Coatbridge, he became a structural engineer and draughtsman, but re-trained for the ministry, thus following the path of his twin brother, James. He was licensed at Hamilton and served as assistant in Airdrie and Stonehouse. In 1967 he became minister at St. George's West in Hawick, which was to be his only charge. He died after collapsing in the Church of Scotland Bookshop in Edinburgh. He married Margaret in 1957 and had no children. William (17th/18th C.) weaver in Newbigging and then in Nether Southfield. He married Margaret Stevenson and their children baptised in Hawick Parish included: William (b.1701); Robert (b.1704); Agnes (b.1708); and Robert (again, b.1710). The witnesses in 1704 were John and Gilbert Elliot in Nether Southfield and in 1708 were Robert Scott in Newbigging and Walter Scott, tenant in Nether Southfield. He witnessed a baptism for James Davidson (in Hawick Shiel) in 1698. William (b.1701) son of William, he was born in Hawick Parish and was a weaver in Hawick Shiel. He was at Whitchesters for 6 years before spending the period from about 1727 at Hawick Shiel. He is probably the weaver William who witnessed a baptism for James Hume in Hawick Shiel in 1743. In 1757

he was one of the residents of farms neighbouring on the Common who had their ‘bakes’ at Black-grain Moss broken up on the orders of the Town Council and were fined. In 1767 he gave evidence relating to the use of the Common: at that time he was still married. William (17th/18th C.) employee of Pringle of Roughhead Mill. In 1723 he was recorded ‘att the large kirk door in sackcloth betwixt the second and third bells’ and was rebuked for adultery with Isobel Lethen. It appeared that the omus was on this couple to prove the death of Isobel’s husband, Benjamin Taylor. However, the required proclamation at Leith pier probably involved too much expense, so he appeared in sackcloth for 6 Sundays, and Isobel for no less than 11 Sundays, plus his employer paid a fine on his behalf. It is possible he was the same as the weaver at Hawick Shiel. William (18th C.) resident of Newton in Wilton Parish. He married Isobel Armstrong in 1761 and their children included: Jean (b.1762); Janet (b.1766); and William (b.1770). The witnesses in 1770 were William and Thomas Irvine (formerly spelled ‘Houd’, ‘Honde’, ‘Howd’, ‘Hud’, ‘Hudd’ and variants).

Hoodie’s Hill (hoo-deez-hil) n. small hill in Southdean Parish, just to the south of Roughlee. There was an extensive area of rig lines here, now covered with forest.

Hood’s Lands (hoodz-lawndz) n. former name for lands in Lilliesleaf Parish. They belonged to William Redford, then were acquired by Edgar Hunter and before 1811 were part of the estate of William Riddell of Camieston. They were valued at £10.

hooper (hoo-ur, hoor) n., ins., imp. a whore, prostitute, insulting term for a slutty or ugly woman – ‘that sister o hers is a right hooper’, ‘But my auld hoor O’ a rowan, rangy Wi life, gars spreid, lauchin still, Her white-airmed charms Abreid’ [DH] (also written ‘hoor’).

hook-bar (hook-bawr) n. a method in knitwear manufacturing for beginning to knit a garment without the use of a rib skirt or cuff, used seldomly for specific designs only.

Hook Brothers (hook-bru-thurz) n. lemonade manufacturers on Slitrig Crescent in the mid-20th century. Their premises were located where Baxter’s the wool brokers were previously and is now part of Stonefield.

Hopper (hoo-pur) n. Thomas Howey (b.1816/7) from Northumberland, he was a druggist in Hawick. He was at 3 High Street in 1841, 1851 and 1861. In 1851 he was a widower, with his sister Sarah as his housekeeper. He married Janet Hall Elliot in Hawick in 1844. He had children Christina W., Georgina E., Adam and Elizabeth. His caricature from 1856 appears in the book ‘Noctes Hawickianae’. Apparently he made a bet that he could punch through the crown of his hat, but failed, since the hat just came away from the rim. His name is sometimes written ‘Hoope’.

hoor (oor) n. an hour, note that the singular form is often used for the plural – ‘she’s been in there six hoor already’, ‘it plays ‘Teribus’ every quarter o an hoor’, ‘... an’ tak’ deep thoucht o’ thee in the hoores o’ the nicht’ [HSR], ‘Sae in about hoorn (hoorn) n., poet. a horn – ‘But my hoorn salt thou set hie as the hoorn o’ ane unicorn . . . ’ [HSR], ‘He alsua raises up the hoorn o’ his people, the praye o’ a’ saumts . . . ’ [HSR].

hoose (hoos) n. a house, dwelling – ‘there’s a moose loose in the hoose!’ ‘dis naebody ken how ti turn off a light in this hoose?’ ‘In hauuld or hoose’ [HSR], ‘We hae house, and hould be-side’ [HSR], ‘I am Clinty, Clinty, Clinty, frae ma hoose upon the rock’ [JEDM], ‘They’re fer owre mony foak i the hoose for yow ti sort eersel’ [ECS].

The Hoose o Refuge (thu-hoos-ō-re-fewj) n. former name for the old house at the top of the Green Wynd, at one time the Nag’s Heid. It was used as the town’s poor house; providing a night’s shelter and porridge in the morning for the destitute and itinerant people. Thomas Wells was Keeper of the House in 1851. It is listed on the Loan in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1881 it existed at 4 Loan, adjacent to the Combination Poorhouse, and presumably had a somewhat complementary role, as a last resort refuge for the travelling unemployed. James Smith, house painter (and ex-Cornet) was the keeper at that time. Its functions were presumably taken over later by the Combination Poorhouse.

hoose-room (hoos-room) n. house-room, accommodation in a house, lodging – ‘. . . the sma Conventicle o’ hens that bide, This nicht o’ Februar thaw, Hoose-room at Haggis-ha’ [DH].

Hooses (hoo-seez) n., pl. groupings of pupils at the High School for the purposes of competitive sports. The 4 houses were Branxholme, Cavers, Harden and Minto, with specific colours for each. These designations were used through most of the 20th century, but have recently been replaced with less historical names.

hoosewife (hoos-wif) n. a housewife – ‘The hoosewife, the minister, the followers They fought the shutdoon tae the end’ [AY].

hoosework (hoos-wurk) n. housework – ‘Aw think she still has kindly thocht is o’ Danny and gaungs pairt o’ the day tae help Mysie wi’ hoose-work’ [JEDM].

hoot (hoot, hoo) interj. exclamation of dismissal, impatience, remonstrance, etc. – ‘Hoot aye, there’s plenty’ [JoHa] (cf. hoots and the locally much more common howt and howts).

hoots (hoots) interj. exclamation of annoyance or disagreement – ‘Hoots, gae way wi’ ye Mr. Spunk, ye maun let me stand ma hand on this suspicious occasion’ [JEDM] (rare locally, cf. howts).

hope (höp, hop, whup) n. a small upland valley, hollow enclosed at one end, now mainly in place names – ‘Thus the proper name Hope, signifying a particular kind of glen, they pronounce as if written whupp . . . ’ [RAC]. It is particularly common in the Borders, e.g. in Hobkirk, most often at the end of the name, when it is often shortened, e.g. Kershope, Phaup (Fawhope), Hislop (Hazelhope) and Philip (Philhope). Double uses of ‘hope’ include Dryhope-hope and Lewenshopehope in Yarrow and Twislehope Hope in Liddes-dale – ‘The clouds sail doon Teviotdale Owre e-ey hope and grain, The road and river wanly glint And the hills are derk wi’ rain’ [DH].

Hope (hôp) n. Alexander (19th C.) fictional character in the book ‘Alexander Hope: A Hawick Story’, written by Rev. John Thomson and published in 1878. Alexander is the son of a Hawick man who had made good in Australia and sent his son back to Scotland to learn about sheep farming etc. Horatio Nelson Trafalgar (b.1807) eldest child of William and Jane Scott. He was presumably named in honour of Nelson’s victory and death at the battle a year or so before he was born. He was a clerk in Hawick and subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. It is unclear what happened to him, but he may be confused with a man of a similar name who emigrated to Prince Edward Island. James (18th C.) resident of Mackside in Southdean Parish. In 1764 and 1767 he had unnamed sons baptised. Probably the same James had these other children baptised in Southdean: Margaret (b.1752); Robert (b.1753); and James (b.1755). James (18th/19th C.) linen draper in Hawick. He was listed as a member of Allars Kirk in 1829. John (16th C.) one of the King’s shepherds, who, along with John Hall, had sheep stolen from him by a group of Armstrongs and others in 1535. This was at ‘Braidlee in the Forest’, which was probably the farm in the Borthwick valley. Some 97 men were recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of 1540 in ‘Braidie and Filop’ when they were paid 26 13s 4d for 10 bolls of grain. John (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, the part associated with Hassendean. He witnessed baptisms for Walter Gledstains in 1681, for Walter Crinklaw in 1686, for Adam Sanderson in 1687 and for John Scott in Appletreehall and for Hector Shiel in 1688. He married Barbara Graham and their children included: William (b.1681); Marie (b.1686); and Elizabeth (b.1689). The witnesses in 1681 were Robert Thomson and Adam Sanderson and in 1686 were William and James Redford. John (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when he was at Hassendeanburn. John (1671/2–1748) gardener at Wells. He ‘lived in a thatched cottage with his wife, keeping a cow and poultry, and from time to time supplying the mansion with their produce’. The estate factor

Archibald Jerdan describes that the plate of the house (i.e. silver cutlery, etc.) was in his care. He married Betty Samuel, who died in 1742, aged 76. Their children included: James (1698/9–1769); and Margaret (1708/9–86), who married Robert Scott, gardener at Wells. He is buried in Bedrule kirkyard. John ‘Johnnie the Whup’ (b.c.1785). From the family that gave its name to the lands of Hopehill, off Wilton Crescent. He is probably the John, married to Mary, who lived at ‘Roadside’ in 1841, and is described as an ‘Independent Gentleman’ in the census. John ‘Hopie’ (1941/2– ) Cornet in 1963 and Acting Father in 1998. He was Master of Ceremonies at the Common Riding for many years. He also served as Chairman of the Hawick Community Council. He was Jubilee Cornet in 2013 and played a prominent role in the Big Return in 2014. Matthew (1764–95) probably son of John, born in Langholm. He was a merchant in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He married Jane Potts in Hawick in 1781 and their children included: Walter (b.1782); Robert (b.1785); Helen (b.1787); and Janet (b.1789). His first wife appears to have died in 1789 and he secondly married Elizabeth Hill and had 5 more children in Langholm. His death is recorded in Hawick. Mona born in Hawwick, but raised on Stornaway, she started working in Hawick’s Registrar’s Office in 1981 and retired 29 years later. She married local knitwear firm owner Eric. Mungo (17th C.) described as ‘in Hassendean Know’ in a list of landowners and tenants of Hassendean Parish in 1666. He may be the ‘Hope in Hassingdeaneburne’ who is listed on a tax document for the Lordship of Melrose in 1700. Peter (19th/20th C.) early trainer of Hawick R.F.C. Dr. Robert (1812–78) born in Morebattle, son of Robert and Joan Culbertson. He graduated M.D. from Edinburgh University in 1834, winning a surgery prize. He came to Hawick as assistant to Dr. John Douglas. He may have set up on his own, since in Pigot’s 1837 directory he is listed separately as a surgeon on the High Street. In 1838 he emigrated to New South Wales, practicing at Narellan, and then moving to live near his brothers. Together they established flour mills, farmed sheep and supplied goods to miners during the gold rush. They were early viticulturists in the Geelong district. He also served in the Victorian Legislative Council. He married Catherine Elizabeth Hassell. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Mary Reid and their son Hopeheid

John was born in 1767. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick who married Margaret Napier in 1767. Their children included: Andrew (b.1770); and Agnes (b.1773). He is probably the Thomas whose child died in 1773. Thomas (18th C.) resident of ‘New Harrot’ in Hobkirk Parish in 1788 when his daughter Euphie was baptised. Perhaps the same Thomas was the tenant at Langraw in Hobkirk Parish, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (18th/19th C.) owner of the land at Hopehill, as marked on Wood’s 1824 map. His 2nd wife was Elizabeth Ingles. William (17th C.) farmer at Branxholme Town in 1671, when there were 7 tenants recorded there. His name also appears in connection with Branxholme Town in 1675 and 1677. He could be the William, married to Bessie Martin (also a surname from that area) whose daughter Helen was born in 1646. He is probably the William ‘in Branxsome’ whose will is recorded in 1684. William (17th/18th C.) gardener in Hawick. In 1721 his daughter Margaret married shoemaker William Tait. William (18th/19th C.) mail-guard in Hawick. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He could be the William who married Jane Scott and whose children, baptised in Hawick, included: Horatio Nelson Trafalgar (b.1807); Harriet Ormond (b.1808); Mary Ann (b.1810); Henry Charles (b.1812); William Todd (b.1814); Samuel Todd (b.1817); Jane (b.1819); and Wilhelmina Amelia (b.1822), who married James Blenkinsop. His son Thomas died in 1819. William ‘Willy’ (b.1788/9) from Ancrum, he was a draper and grocer in Denholm. His shop was probably on Sunnyside. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed as a linen draper. In 1851 he was living with his niece Margaret as house-keeper. He used to travel around the neighbouring valleys (including Rulewater) with a covered cart containing his wares. He died unmarried (formerly written ‘Hop’).

Hopeheid (höp-heed) n. Hopehead, former name for lands near Larriston Rig. They were purchased (perhaps under ‘wadsett’) from Robert Elliot of Larriston along with Larriston Rig by John Elliot of Thorlarshope in 1675 and there was a further wadsett in 1697 with Robert, son of the previous Robert Elliot. It is unclear exactly where these lands were located.

Hopehill (höp-hil) n. house on the land adjacent to Hope Park, off Wilton Crescent, which was named by the Hope family who once lived there. It was later the home of wool merchant David Law, Rev. Robert Mitchell and Provost Melrose. It is also referred to as ‘Hopehill Cottage’ and is now run as a guest house.

Hopehoose (höp-hoos) n. Hopehouse, farm in the Ettrick valley between Tushielaw and Thirlestane. It was owned by the Scotts of Thirlestane in 1609 when the tenants were Thomas Hislop, Robert Paterson and Robert Cowan. In about 1622 it is described as a ‘pendale’ of Thirlestane (it is ‘Hoiphous’ in 1609 and 1622).

Hope-Johnstone (höp-jon-stin) n. Capt. Wentworth William ‘Wenty’ (1848–1910) famous British gentleman jockey, who rode his first flat race at Hawick in the 1860s, borrowing boots and breeches for the occasion, and apparently hearing the starter and his brother trying to fix the race! Later in his career he twice won 5 races in one afternoon.

Hopekirk (höp-kirk) n. former name for Hobkirk, in use before the 18th century.

Hope Park (höp-pawrk) n. former name for an area in Wilton which became the upper end of the west side of Wilton Crescent. It was named by a family called Hope who lived there in the late 18th and early 19th centuries.

Hope Sike (höp-sik) n. stream that rises near Hare Hill, passes the farmstead of Pleaknowe, joining Stewart’s Cleuch and running not the Slitrig from the east.

Hope the Gaird (höp-thu-gärd) n. one of the guards (the other well-known one being Dougal) on the Royal Mail coach, which passed through Hawick in the early part of the 19th century. His first name is unrecorded. They had a livery of scarlet and gold, and were armed with blunderbuss and pistols – ‘Wagga Wagga and Jocky Sling, Rumpie Laidlaw and Rob the Laird, Jocky Tennocks and Wullie the King. Henry Mullens and Hope the Gaird’ [HI], ‘With hats in hand, and three loud cheers, Hope the guard first started, And drank is Royal Highness health, All in good order parted’ [BY].

Hopkirk see Hobkirk

Hopper (ho-pur) n. Thomas H. (b.1816/7) from England, he was a druggist at 3 High Street in the 1841, 1851 and 1861 censuses. His wife was Williamina and their children included Christina W., Georgeina E., Thomas and Elizabeth.

hoppergaw (ho-purgaw) v., arch. to sew seeds unevenly, so that the plants grow in patches (noted by J. Jamieson).

Hoppringle

Pringle family (the derivation is something like ‘small enclosed valley of the round hill’, although an earlier romantic theory suggested it meant ‘son of the pilgrim’).

Hoppringle see Pringle

Hopsburn see Hobsburn

hork (hork) v., poet. to scrape, dig – ‘But [the muse] … horking howks ‘mang epita’s, Sin’ Davie’s dead’ [JoHa].

the horn (thu-hörn) n., arch. trumpet used figuratively to declare someone an outlaw, to be declared ‘rebel at the horn’ or ‘at the King’s horn’ is to be outlawed (from the former practice of the King’s herald giving 3 blasts on his horn at the Cross of Edinburgh to pronounce the person an outlaw).

the Horn (thu-hörn) n. ridge on the east side of the A7 just before coming to Linhope farm. It is essentially the southern extension of Meg’s Hill, and is flanked by Frostlie Burn and Mare Sike.

the Horn Brig (thu-hörn-brig) n. bridge that the A7 takes over the Frostlie Burn just north of Linhope. So named because the stage-coach guard used to sound his trumpet on the approach to Linhope farm. The bridge has been modernised from the original.

Horne (hörn) n. Donald, W.S. (1787–1870) 2nd son of John of Stirkoke. He trained as a lawyer, being apprenticed to his uncle, John Home of Stirkoke, Caithness. He became Writer to the Signet in 1813. He was a keen volunteer in Edinburgh. He acted as Edinburgh agent for the Duke of Buccleuch in the 1830s. He held strongly Conservative political views and was involved in electoral struggles in the years after the passing of the Reform Bill. Before the 1835 election he purchased property in the Borders, splitting into lots and registering people from Edinburgh and elsewhere as ‘faggot voters’. As a result he was not entirely popular among Hawick folk, and someone mistaken for him was beaten by the mob at the election. In 1837 it is said that the mob was waiting around the Tower Knowe the night before the election threatened to kill him when he arrived (although his name is confusingly given as ‘David’ in some of the records). His offices in Edinburgh were in Sir Walter Scott’s former house. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1836. Later in life he grew deaf and at the Jedforest Club he got up to return his thanks when mishearing a toast to ‘the donor of the horn’. In 1821 he married Jane, daughter of Thomas Elliot Oglvie of Chesters, and she died 13 years later. They had 3 sons, James being the eldest and father of Lord Horne – ‘There’s honest Horne, a man o’ zeal, He’d face the verra diel, Mak’s MUSHROOMS spring in ilka biel’, To help the cause’ [RDW], Julie ‘Jules’ (1963– ) local writer, born in Hawick and living near Kelso. Her writings have appeared in several anthologies, as well as on the radio and in theatrical performances. She was joint winner of the Robert Louis Stevenson Award in 2002 and her play ‘Allotment’ won a Scotsman Fringe First in 2011. She published ‘Nanonovels, Five-minute Flash Fiction’ in 2015 and ‘Wrapped Town’ in 2016. Neil High School Rector 1993–2006. Robert (d.bef. 1690) tenant in Acreknowe. The will of his widow Janet Veitch is recorded in 1690.

Horne Court (hörn-kör’) n. former factory and warehouse at 13 Dovecote Street, converted into flats in 1984 and named after W. Horne & Son, the North Bridge Street furnishers who owned the warehouse for many years. It had earlier been owned by Laidlaw’s and by R.G. Maxwell & Co., cloth merchants.

Horne’s Pool (hörnz-pool) n. place on the Teviot near Hawick mentioned in Sir Walter Scott’s journal as ‘a scene of deep and solemn retirement … from its having been a daily haunt of a contemplative schoolmaster known to him in his youth’. Scott stopped here with the Wordsworths in 1803. It is surely Hornshole, since it lay between Denholm and Hawick, and here a stone bridge crossed the water at a deep and still place’ according to Dorothy Wordsworth. However, Scott’s story of a former schoolmaster of named Horne is belied by the name of the place going back to at least the 15th century.

the Hornet (thu-hör-ni’) n. joke version of the Cornet, selected on the Saturday night, formerly at the ‘Greetin Denner’. He is carried around by the other supporters, using a broom instead of a flag.

hornie (hör-nee) n., arch. a small horn, diminutive term for a horned animal, the devil, especially in the phrase ‘auld hornie’.

hornie-holes (hör-nee-hölz) n., arch. a game similar to ‘cat and bat’, played by 4 people, involving a stick and a hole – Hornie-holes. A game in which four play, a principal and an assistant on each side. A. stands with his assistant at one hole, and throws what is called a cat (a piece of stick, and frequently a sheep’s horn) with the design of making it alight into another hole at some distance at which B. stands, with his assistant, to drive it aside with a rod resembling a walking-stick, Teviotdale’ [JoJ].

Hornie Robbie (hör-nee-ro-bee) n. nickname of an old Hawick character – ‘Baith auld and young are mixed I trow – Rob Lurgie lingers wi’ the lave, Caleb and Clinty seem cronies now Wi’ Hornie Robbie and Cannie Dave’ [HI].

hornin (hör-nin) n., arch. the process of putting someone ‘to the horn’ – ‘...be deluyerance of the lordis of Comsale, of horning, poiinding and warding, the ane without preudice of the vther ...’ [SB1599].

Hornshole (hörns-höl) n. site about 2 miles down the Teviot from Hawick, where the river narrows into a deep, dark pool. The name originally applied to a farm on the north side of the river, but is now associated with a small piece of land on the south side of the bridge. Here tradition says that a band of Hawick youths routed a party of English marauding soldiers in 1514, bringing back their flag triumphantly to Hawick. Although it does seem likely to have happened, there is little evidence of historical value relating to the events of that skirmish, or for fixing precisely where it occurred. Nevertheless several speculative accounts of the battle have been written. The first mention of the events in print occurs in Balbirnie’s ‘Auld Sang’, which simply states ‘By Teviotside they took this Colour, A dear memorial of their valour’; this dates from around 1800. Hogg’s slightly later song, published in 1819, devotes about half of the verses to these events, including an explicit mention of Hornshole, ‘Nigh where Teviot falls sonorous, Into Hornshole dashing furious, Lay their foes with spoil encumbered: Quite secure, even sent’nels slumbered’. However, the first detailed account to be published in prose (in Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’) refers to the site of the skirmish as ‘the Trows’ rather than the more specific ‘Hornshole’ (this making sense in the days before the bridge). That account (originating with Scott of Burnhead) tells how the Magistrates decided to resist the marauding English group, sending out about 200 people from Hawick, who massacred the roughly 40-strong English force. There is, of course, no evidence to support these numbers, and most likely there were far fewer people involved. And whether it was at the Trows or Hornshole, there is no reason to doubt the basics of the tradition. However, given that existence of the ‘chase’ of former days from the Bogliebarns (said to re-enact the return with the Flag), it seems likely that the action took place on the south side (consistent with the Trows, or near Hornshole Pool, but not consistent with being on the lands of Hornshole itself). The traditional date of the riding of the marches suggests that the event took place near the end of May, although the letter from Dacre describing English raids was written in mid-May and the full moon (when raids often took place was around the 8th of May (in the old-style calendar). In the 15th and 16th centuries the name ‘Hornshole’ was definitely used for a farm on the northern/western side of the Teviot, in Hassendean (later Wilton) Parish. There are many variants of the name, including ‘Horne’s Pool’ (probably erroneously) by Dorothy Wordsworth and ‘Hornshiel’ (in the 17th century). The conflict is said to have taken place on a piece of flat land on the southern side of the river, perhaps near where the monument was erected in 1901 – hence it was perhaps more likely to be at ‘the Trows’ (Cavers side) rather than ‘Hornshole’ (Wilton side), although the name may have been used to apply to the pool in the river, rather than the lands on one of the banks. James Turnbull of Hornshole was witness to a document for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1456. Adam and Walter Turnbull in Hornshole were allowed to ‘compone’ for other crimes in 1493. William Douglas of ‘hornshyle’ is recorded in 1494, being surety for Simon and Matthew Routledge, tenants in the Trows. James Turnbull was tenant there in 1501, Adam Turnbull in 1502 and John Turnbull in 1516. The lands were granted to Thomas, 2nd son of Thomas Turnbull of Minto in 1619. In 1643 the lands were valued at £100 and owned by Rev. John Turnbull of Makerstoun. In the 1663 valuation the owner was William Turnbull. In the 17th century the superiority was held by the Hamiltons, Earls of Haddington, along with other lands previously possessed by Melrose Abbey. The lands were still part of the Lordship of Melrose in 1670. In 1678 the lands were valued along with Brieryyards (in Hassendean Parish) at £360. The bell from Hassendean Church is supposed to have been thrown into the Teviot there during the dispute with Roberton in 1690. At this time the lands were transferred from the suppressed Hassendean Parish to Wilton. John Scott was tenant there in 1694, while Janet Young was listed among the poor. Walter Riddell was living there in 1737. The Brieryyards mansion house overlooks the pool in the river here, and a bridge was built in 1774. In 1788 the lands were owned... by Turnbull of Fenwick (along with Briery Yards). The Cornet’s Lass lays a wreath at the monument after the Kirkin on the Sunday before the Common Riding; before 1977 they did this after the Colour Bussing – ‘Nigh where Teviot falls sonorous, Into Hornshole dashing furious’ [JH], ‘The flag for which our fathers died At Hornshole be Teviotside’ [IWL], ‘When in Hornshole valley, with sword and shield held tight, Like a phoenix rising from the ashes, We crushed the English might’ [GLG] (the name possibly originates from the promontory of land and the deep pool, another possible origin is ‘Orm’s hole’, but that is merely speculation, and it is unclear whether a feature in the river gave its name to the farm or vice versa; there are many spelling variants; it is recorded as ‘Hornshole’ in 1456, ‘Hornishole’ in 1488/9, ‘Hornishoile’ in 1491/2, ‘Hornyshole’ in 1493 and 1494/5, ‘Hornishole’ in 1501 and 1502, ‘Hornshole’ in 1516, ‘Hornisholl’ in 1562/3, ‘Hornshoill’ and ‘Horinsholl’ in 1619, ‘Hornishole’ in 1640, ‘Hornesholl’ in 1645, ‘Hornesholl’ in 1655, ‘Hornsholl’ in 1663, ‘Hornshewill’ in 1670, ‘hornsholl’ in 1678 and ‘Hornsholl’ in 1694 and 1737; the area in the river is marked ‘Horn’s Hole’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Hornshole (hōrnz-hōl) n. song composed by Ian Landles in 2008, written for Song Singer Michael Aitken and performed at a concert held at Thorderykes that year. The music is essentially a slow foxtrot. The piano arrangement is by Ian Seeley.

Hornshole Brig (hōrnz-hōl-brig) n. the bridge at Hornshole, built over the Teviot in 1772–74 with money from neighbouring landowners, assisted by a grant from the Road Trustees. It has a single arch over a narrow stretch of the river, and crosses near a deep pool. Construction was by Adam Scott and John Pott, although Scott gave up following an accident when the framework to build the arch collapsed. The work was hampered by the difficulty of getting materials to the site. Pott died soon after completion, as the result of an injury suffered when removing planks after the bridge was completed. It is a grade C listed building – ‘And lang as Hornshole Brig shall stand, That trusty valour through the land ... ’ [JLH].

Hornshole Hill (hōrnz-hōl-hīl) n. small hill to the east of Courthill farm, lying high above Hornshole Bridge. This is a reminder that the area formerly called Hornshole was on the Wilton/Hassendean side of the the Teviot (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Hornshole Monument (hōrnz-hōl-mo-nwe-min’t) n. monument erected in 1901, on a small piece of land near Hornshole, gifted by Capt. Palmer-Douglas of Cavers, and paid for with money left over from the ‘Return to Hawick’ painting subscriptions. It was unveiled (by Bailie Lawson’s daughter) on the Saturday before Common Riding, after the Kirkin ceremony, the Cornet’s Lass lays a wreath here. And after the ride-out on the Saturday before the Common Riding, the Principals stop here, singing ‘Teribus’ and standing in their stirrups.

Hornshole Pool (hōrnz-hōl-pool) n. pool in the Teviot at Hornshole – ‘...Stirring the ripples on Hornshole Pool Where Dacre woke to his day of dule’ [JYH] (it seems reasonable to suppose that the land on the north side of the river got its name partly from the ‘hole’ in the Teviot here, and then this name was transferred back to the pool).

Horsburgh (hōr-bu-ru) n. Alexander of that Ilk (1753–1829) son of John and Elizabeth Rutherford. In 1778 he married Violet (d.1834), daughter of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe, the marriage taking place at Knowe and being proclaimed in Innerleithen. Through his wife he came into possession of the lands of the Turnbulls of Knowe. In 1834. He was served heir to to Pirn and Horsburgh in 1779 and to ‘Tounheid of Hassendean’ in 1787. In 1788 he was listed under ‘Votes of Rutherford of Edgerston’ among the voters of Roxburghshire. He was involved with Thomas Turnbull (his brother-in-law) in dispositions regarding lands at Hassendean Common in 1789.
His children (baptised in Innerleithen) included: John (b.1779), who died young; Susan (1780), who married Walter Scott of Raeburn; Elizabeth (b.1781); Jean (b.1782); Charlotte (b.1784); Violet (b.1785); Thomas (b.1787), who succeeded, but died unmarried; Alexander (b.1788); Samuel Mitchelson (b.1789); and Mary Nisbet (b.1791). Alexander (b.1825/6) farmer at Greenhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1861 he was farmer of 158 acres there, employing 5 people. He was still recorded there in 1868. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th/18th C.) recorded receiving money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727. John of that Ilk (1704–74) from the family based around Peebles and Innerleithen and who would eventually inherit the estates of Turnbull of Knowe. He was involved with a court action and ‘letters of horning and poinding’ against Rev. George Hall of Abbotrule in 1735, to recover a loan. There was a similar action against Thomas Watson, Clerk of the Regality of Hawick in 1757. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Peeblesshire in 1761. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir John Rutherford of Edgerston and that Ilk and that Ilk (1704–74) from the family based around Peebles and Innerleithen and who would eventually inherit the estates of Turnbull of Knowe. He was involved with a court action and ‘letters of horning and poinding’ against Rev. George Hall of Abbotrule in 1735, to recover a loan. In 1758 he was hired to thatch the roof of Hobkirk Kirk with broom. William (b.1800/1) born in Cavers Parish, he worked on farms in Robertson Parish. He was farmer at Hoscostesiel in 1841, ‘Drainer’ at Howpasley in 1851 and agricultural labourer at Old Howpasley in 1861. He married Mary Jackson, and their children included: Janet (b.c.1833); Walter (b.1835); James (b.1838); Elizabeth (b.1840); William (b.1842); and Adam (b.1845).

the Horse (thu-hors) n. the equestrian statue standing at the east end of the High Street, erected by public subscription in 1914, and properly known as the 1514 Memorial. It is a life-size bronze statue, on a stone plinth, designed by William Beattie (his plaster model of 1913 being in the Museum). It was unveiled by Lady Sybil Scott (daughter of the Duke of Buccleuch) on the afternoon before the Colour Bussing in 1914, as part of the Quater-centenary celebrations (and the unveiling ceremony was filmed). The inscriptions were completed by Thomas Beattie in 1921. It also now gives its name to the open street area surrounding it, which was previously known as Central Square. Since 1923 it has been publicly bedecked with blue and gold ribbons by the Cornet after the Colour Bussing ceremony (filmed at least as early as 1929). The horse that modelled the statue was well-known for being able to keep still, but apparently a bucket was used to rest its front foot on! The face of the rider was apparently modelled on that of A.H. Drummond, Cornet of 1888. The monument was moved slightly in 2003 as part of traffic re-routing, and had an extra base added. A ‘time-capsule’ from 1914 was discovered, and another was buried there in 2005. In 2004 the plinth was removed from the base to try to curb vandalism problems. The inscription on the base reads ‘Merses Profundo Pulchrior Evenit’, which is from Horace Odes, 4.4.65, and translates literally as ‘Plunged in the depths, he emerges more magnificent’, paraphrased perhaps as ‘You can’t keep a good man down!’ (here ‘Merses’ may also be a play on the Merse). It is a grade A listed building – ‘...And the Horse is there, and the Callant Wi’ the brave flag held high’ [WL], ‘Now Hawick’s aye chowked wi’ cars, And the plan that wad relieve eet, Means hevin’ ti move the Horse, Whaever wad believe eet’ [IWL].

the Horse an Hoonds (thu-hors-an-hoonz, -howdz) n. country pub in Bonchester Bridge, just before the bridge, at Bridge-end. It was established as a coaching inn in 1701, but a new building was erected there by James Chisholme of Hobbsburn in the early years of the 19th century. It was originally intended as a house and jointer’s shop, but soon became a major stop on the Hawick to Newcastleton road, which was opened in the 1820s. Robert Turnbull was the first proprietor of the new pub at that time. James Rutherford was proprietor around 1900. It was for a long time the only public house in the parish of Hobkirk.

horse-cloth (hors-kloth) n., arch. a cloth used to cover a horse, particularly the special funerary cloth hired out from the Kirk Session when a horse was needed to transport a body a great distance for burial. There are several mentions of this in the Hawick Parish records of the 18th century – ‘Received from Singlie for the horsecloath, £1 16s’ [PR]’, ‘Mrs. Scott the bestcloth wt the hors clos for her husband, Mr. Scot of Harwood, £4 10s’ [PR] (cf. mort-cloth).

Horselee (hors-lee) n. former farmstead in the Slightig valley on the opposite side of the river from...
Newmill-on-Slitrig, lying near the Horsleyhill. At the Reformation it was part of the Lordship of Winnington, being listed among the lands owned by the Hamiltons in 1610. It was among the lands of Winnington purchased by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs from Robert Elliot of Redheugh in 1622. It was listed among the lands owned by the Eliotts of Stobs in 1657 and still part of the Barony in the late 17th century. It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. James Hogg, Walter Cavers and James Reid were there in 1694. Walter Scott was there in 1720. It was valued at £136 12s 3d in 1788 when disjoined from other parts of the Stobs estate. The farm may be the ruin and enclosure marked in the area on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, but of which no sign remains; it is listed as the site of a hill-fort in 1863. Robert Turnbull was there in 1682. In 1684 the tenant (William Armstrong) was among the local men fined for attending conventicles. Francis Aitkin was there in 1789–90. Michael and John Broad are recorded as farmers there in 1797. It was still recorded among the farms of Elliott of Stobs in 1813, when still valued at £136 (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map; also spelled ‘Horslee’, ‘Horseley’, ‘Horselie’ and ‘Horsley’; it is ‘Horslie’ in 1610, 1657 and 1694, ‘Horse-lie’ in 1684 and ‘Horsly’ in 1720; the origin of the name is obscure; there is no obvious connection with Horsleyhill, except that closely related Elliots/Eliotts once owned both).

Horselee Burn (hors-lee-burn) n. Horsleyhill Burn, stream that runs in a westerly direction to join the Slitrig Water at Colislum.

Horsemansford (hors-mun-ford) n. farmstead in the Hermitage valley, just south-east of Gordenberry. Robert Knox and his family lived there in 1861 (it is on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Horse Park (hors-pawrk) n. former name for a piece of land on Minto estate. It was listed in 1779 (and in 1811) with a value of £34 11s 6d and a rental of £9 9s. It was said in 1780 to be possessed (probably as a tenant) by William Thomson (it is ‘Horse-park’ in 1780).

Horse Park (hors-pawrk) n. former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. Probably the lands of the same name were those listed as part of the Bonjedward estate in 1707.

the Horse Pool (thu-hors-pool) n. pool in the Teviot at the bend near Teinside Cottage (also written ‘the Horsepool’; perhaps this was a place where horses could be washed).

the Horse Tax Rolls (thu-hors-tawks-rölz) n. farm horse tax rolls, listing the names of owners of work horses, the register taken in 1797 and 1798. It forms a useful list of the farmers and merchants in and around Hawick at the end of the 18th century.

the Horsewaird (thu-hors-wärd) n. former name for a piece of land in Minto Parish. In 1683 a piece of land in Craigend, called ‘lie Grassland’ is mentioned being in the ward of ‘Horsewaird’. A dyke there is mentioned in the 1695 charter to Gideon Scott of Highchesten when describing how it bordered a piece of land at Minto Mains, with Craigend house at the other end. Among the lands inherited by Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto in 1778 was ‘the inclosure called Horsewaird’.

Horsleyhill (hors-lee-lil) n. farm and area around it, about 3 miles north-east of Hawick, between Clarilaw and Hassendean. The estate seems to have been owned by a branch of the Scotts in the 15th century, and was inherited through marriage by the Elliots about 1555. Gavin Elliot was listed as a tenant there in 1551, and was probably great-grandson of Robert Scott of Horsleyhill (whose daughter and heir married William Elliot of Larriston). In 1555 Alexander, Lord Home (superior of Hassendean) granted a charter, on wadset and reversion, to Gavin Elliot. However, there was some kind of local dispute between the Elliots and the Scotts, culminating in the murder in 1564 of David Scott of Hassendean, with the Horsleyhill Elliots playing a leading role, and several of them being executed as a result. In 1616 it was also called ‘Wester Hassendean, with tower, fortalice, etc.’ when it was sold by the Earl of Home to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. It was sold by the 7th Elliot Laird to Elliott of Stobs in the early 17th century and passed again to the Scotts. ‘Mar. Scott, gudewife of Hosliehill’ is recorded as owner of lands valued at £637 in 1643. William Scott was Laird in 1663 and Robert Scott in 1678, when the land was still valued at £637. William Collin was living there in 1682 and John Renwick in 1688. The Scotts of Horsleyhill were a prominent local family, who had a house at the top of Walters Wynd, still partly surviving at 51 High Street; ‘The Laird of Horslihill’ was taxed for 4 heaths in Hawick in 1694. The Scotts of Horsleyhill also held lands in the eastern part of Hawick (perhaps just to the north of the Little Haugh) until sold to Walter Purdom in the early 18th century, as well as land in Weensland and elsewhere. The lands became part of Minto Parish after Hassendean was suppressed in 1690. Householders (probably tenants) on the farm in 1694 were John Noble, John Turnbull and Thomas Knox. Others listed among the cottars and poor there were George Knox, Bessie Turnbull, William ‘Culling’, Agnes Knox, George Hood, William Aitken, Robert Scott, John Knox and Janet Gray. The road was improved around 1773 to connect to the Turnpike road at ‘the Niton’. By 1788 the land had been split into the ‘North-end of Horsliehill’ (owned by Robert Dickson, valued at £382) and ‘South-end of ditto’ (owned by Archibald Dickson, valued at £255). ‘Messrs Ainslies’ were farmers there in 1797, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. It was listed in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811, when the south part was owned by Robert Dickson (valued at £255), while the north part was owned by Archibald Dickson’s heirs (valued at £382). Andrew Hall was there in 1861. There was presumably once a peel tower there, but there was already no sign of it by 1845. In the early-to-mid 20th century the farm at Horsleyhill was known as a local dairy farm. In 1991 a group of 56 Edwardian coins was found in a field there – ‘He turned him now from Teviotside, And, guided by the tinkling rill, Northward the dark ascent did ride, And gained the moor at Horsliehill’ [SWS] (also spelled ‘Horsliehill’, ‘Horsley Hill’ and other variants; it is ‘Horsliehill’ in 1561/2, 1563 and 1564, ‘Horslihill’ in 1573, ‘Horshehil’ in 1581, ‘Horshehill’ in 1604, ‘Horsliehill’ in 1605 and 1678, ‘horslihill’ in 1682, ‘Horslawhill’ in 1688, ‘Horslihill’ in 1690, ‘Horseliehill’ in 1797 and ‘Horsley-hill’ in 1811; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map and is ‘Huslawhill’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; the origin is uncertain, although some connection with horses seems obvious).

Horsleyhill Cottages (hors-lee-hil-ko’-ee-jeez) n. collection of cottages to the south of Horsleyhill, essentially the same as the place formerly called Westerhouses. The Deans family were joiners there in the 19th century.

Horsleyhill’s Wynd (hors-lee-hilz-wînd) n. former name for Walter’s Wynd, until the mid-18th century. It was named for the town house of the Scotts of Horsleyhill, which was at the top of the street. Fixing of ‘the port in Horslee Hills Wynd’ is recorded in 1704.

Horseliehill see Horsleyhill

Hoscoat see Hoscote

Hoscote (hos-ko’) n. estate in the Borthwick valley, about 6 miles from Hawick, with the entrance gates and lodge on the main road at Deanburnhaugh. ‘Wautier de Holcote’, who swore fealty to Edward I in 1296 could have been an early owner (if this is a transcription error). The lands were resigned by ‘Adam of Hodholme’ in the early 14th century and bestowed upon William Barbour by Robert the Bruce. It then appears to have been part of the holdings of the Scotts of Buccleuch and Rankleburn, but in 1410 was probably the ‘Thostcotys’ (or ‘Thostcotys’) granted to Sir William of Borthwick on resignation by Robert Scott. It was recorded being west of Milsington in 1451. The lands were resigned by Robert Turnbull of Hoscoat into the hands of their superior William Lord Borthwick and then conferred upon Alexander Master of Home in 1493/4. David Turnbull was recorded there in 1494/5. The lands were gained by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1516 through forfeiture of Alexander, Lord Home. However, by 1535 there was a revocation of the previous charter, and so Hoscoat appears to have passed to George, Lord Home, with William, Lord Borthwick as superior. In 1551 it was inherited by Alexander, 5th Lord Home, the lands described as ‘worth 3 merks yearly are held in chief of John Lord Borthwick for service due and wont’. And in 1555/6 Alexander Lord Home summoned William Scott of Harden to appear at Melrose Abbey to receive £40 Scots as redemption of these lands (suggesting it passed to the Scotts of Harden). William Elliot and Gavin Elliot appear to have been tenants there in 1579/80 and William again in 1583/4. The farms of ‘Hoscot’ and ‘Hoscotrig’ were owned by Wat Scott of Harden in 1580 when they were attacked by a group of Ellots and Armstrongs; they stole ‘ foure scoir ky and oxin, sex horse and meris, and the insicht and plennesing of foure of his pure tennentis houssis’. ‘William Elliott of Harscat’ was handed over as a prisoner to the English Warden in 1595/6 and probably the same ‘Will of Hescottes an Elwood’ was a Scottish pledge who escaped from prison in York in 1600: it seems likely he was tenant in Hoscoat. In 1643 Sir William Scott of Harden was served heir to his great-grandfather William’s 40-shilling land there, and then the land was inherited by Sir William Scott in 1676. There were 14 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely John Elliot, William Scott, Janet Elliot, Francis Scott, Margaret Clerk, Bessie Scott, Robert Elliot, Agnes Scott, John Govenlock, Joan Glendinning, Adam
Hoscote Burn

Glendinning, Marion Andrew, William Davidson and Bessie Davidson. Walter Chisholme was there in at least 1703–10, Robert Fletcher in 1710 John ‘Huotson’ and Thomas Cairns in 1711–16, John Cathrae and John Murray in 1712 and 1718, Adam Dalgleish in 1718, Thomas Cairns and Walter Grieve in 1721 and Simon Nichol in 1725. It was long a seat of the Scotts and was tenanted by the Ogilvies (Chamberlains to the Duke’s of Buccleuch) in the early 18th century. On the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, some lands in Liddesdale (between Foulshiels and Netherraw, around Hartgarth) were shown belonging to the Laird of Hoscote. In about 1723 Hoscote was sold to Adam Pott, and on his death passed to his son George. On George Pott’s death it was split between his nephews John Grieve and George Stavert, and later was entirely acquired by George’s brother Adam Stavert. The estate was in the parish of Wilton until Roberton was formed in 1689. It is also in the part of the Borthwick valley that was once in Selkirkshire. John Henderson was recorded there in 1781–87 and Robert Brown in 1792. The teinds of Roberton, Howcleuch and Hoscote were valued at £33 6s 8d in 1785 and 1802, while John Grieve paid the land tax on £200 in 1785 and Adam Stavert in 1802.

The present building was erected in 1858 for John Stavert. It was probably designed by the Edinburgh architects Brown and Wardrop. From 1937 it was the home of Maj. John Dunlop, who was appointed to run Lyle & Scott’s as an ammunition factory.

Hoscoterig (hos-ko’-rig) n. former farmstead near Hoscote. It was raided by Elliots and Armstrongs in 1580. It is unclear exactly where this was (it is recorded as ‘Hoscotrig’ in 1580).

Hoscoteshiel (hos-ko’-sheel) n. former steading above Girnwood in the Borthwick valley, being near the end of the Catrail. Thomas Glendinning was there in 1756. In 1797 the farmers there were Thomas Brydon, Mary Park and William Gladstone. John Broad was there in 1800. William Horsburgh was farmer in 1841 (also written ‘Hoscote Shiel’; it is ‘Hosketshiel’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map and ‘Hoscateshiel’ in 1797).

hosiery (hō-shu-ree) n. stockings, stocking making. Knitting socks was once an important domestic activity. The industry began in Hawick with the introduction of the first 4 stocking frames by John Hardie in 1771, building upon the successful carpet and inkle manufacturing. In a description of Hawick’s trade in about 1777 (by David loch) it was stated that Hardie had 14 frames and James Halden had 2. Hosiery manufacturing was soon expanded by John Nixon, around 1780, along with other firms shortly afterwards. Originally the industry was based on linen and worsted, but after about 1785 it moved over to lambswool. In 1791 it is reported that there were 12 frames in Hawick, that the trade employed 14 men and 41 women, and that 4099 pairs of stockings were produced. A Hawick Hosiers banner, with painted date 1797, may be one of the oldest existing trades society banners in Britain. By 1800 there were 22 men employed in the trade, with an average wage... of 8 shillings and 4 pence. In 1824 there were 8 mills with 20 sets of machines, and in 1826 it was stated there were 500–600 stocking frames in the Town. Broad frames were first introduced in 1827, allowing shirts and underwear to be more easily made. In the early days the frames were in houses or small stocking-shops, with children assisting with winding etc. Usually the frames were each located by a window, since the work needed good light, and the machines were operated by the use of foot treadles, with the workers sitting on high stools. By 1837 there were 14 mills with 40–50 sets of machines, employing about 200 people. Firms expanded rapidly and quickly branched out into woollen underclothing generally. The move to larger factories came with the advent of power-driven frames in the early 19th century. It is said that in the 1840s 2,000 of Scotland’s 2,600 knitting frames were located in the Borders, and more than half of those were in Hawick, producing more than a million pairs of stockings per year. By the mid-19th century Hawick was the centre of Scotland’s hosiery industry. Around that time workers commonly had a 60 hour work week and were paid fortnightly, with few holidays. Boys and girls started work legally at 13, but were often younger. By the late 1860s there were 900 frames in Hawick, but they produced up to 6 pieces at a time. A strike in 1872 improved working conditions, and largely saw an end to the practice of workers renting frames from their employers. This grew into the present knitwear industry, which has employed a large fraction of the town’s labour for over 200 years. The word ‘hosiery’ is still used to refer to the local industry, although it has focussed on present knitwear industry, which has employed a large fraction of the town’s labour for over 200 years. The word ‘hosiery’ is still used to refer to the local industry, although it has focussed on hotels (ho-telz) n., pl. Hawick has had many hotels through the years, although many establishments that called themselves ‘hotel’ or ‘inn’ were probably simply pubs. There was also a fashion for Temperance Hotels in the last half of the 19th century. A list of genuine hotels might include: Bridge Hoose Hotel; the Buccleuch Hotel; the Central Hotel; the Croon Hotel; the Elm Hoose Hotel; the Imperial Hotel; the Kings Hotel; Kirklands; the Mansfield Hoose Hotel; the Station Hotel; the Toor Hotel; the Victoria Hotel; the Washington Hotel.

Hotson (hot-sin) n. George (1651/2–1728) tenant in Netherraw. His children included John (1702/3–47). He could be the George, son of William Hotson and Jean Scott, born in Hawick Parish in 1645. John (17th C.) resident at Wester Heap according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. His surname is written as ‘Hotsone’. Thomas (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He married Jean Elliot and their children included: William (b.1702); and John (b.1704). Janet (b.1707) and James (b.1711), baptised in Hawick with no mother’s name given, are probably also his children. The witnesses in 1702 were John Elliot in Nether Southfield and William Henderson in Flex. Walter (17th C.) resident at Barnes in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. It is unclear if his surname may be a variant of some more common name. He could be the Walter, son of Robert and Isabell Davidson born in Hawick Parish in 1653. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Acreknowe in Kirkton Parish. His children included Janet (b.1719) and Walter (b.1721) (the surname is perhaps a variant of Howison or Whutson).

Hotspur (hot-spur) n. nickname of Henry Percy.

Hott Hill (hot-hiil) n. hill to the west of Newmill, and just south-east of Branxholme Wester Loch, height 312 m. Another unnamed peak to the west reaches a height of 326 m. The former farmstead of ‘the Holt’ on Harwood estate is surely connected.

hot trod (hot-trod) n. a hot pursuit in rieving days, referring to the law allowing people who had been robbed to raise support within a fixed time, to mount a legal pursuit to recover their property. They could cross the Border if necessary, with the leader brandishing a piece of burning turf on a lance as a symbol (this gave rise to the phrase ‘hot to trot’). Rules for reprisals in this manner were outlined, for example, in a treaty of 1549, although it is suspected that the laws were simply used to justify rieving.

Howa (how-u) n. former estate in Hobkirk Parish roughly to the west of the Kirk, containing the farm of Howahill and the former farms of Howerbank and Howashiel. Walter Turnbull ‘of Howay’ is recorded in 1530 and Watt Turnbull ‘in Howa’ in 1565. In 1606 George Turnbull there was involved with raiding Appotside and Harwood. Gavin Turnbull in Howa is also recorded in 1606 as part of a feud between Turnbulls and the Grampslaws of Newton. The main house was located on a dry hill with a spring at its foot, not far from the present farm of Howahill; by the 19th century there was already no sign of the original house, except for a stand of ash trees. By the 17th century it was part of the extensive Stobs estate. It then became part of the Stonedge estate, being sold to Adam Scott in the early 18th century. In the 1800s a bronze pot was found in a drain and a battle-axe in an adjoining field (recorded as ‘Howa’ in the earliest documents, e.g. in 1567, it is ‘ Howe’ in 1606 and 1677; it is ‘Howa’ on Blaue’s 1654 map, although it is unclear precisely to which farm this refers).
Howabank (how-u-bawngk) n. former farm in Hobkirk Parish, once part of the more extensive farm of Howa and later incorporated into the estate of Hobsburn. Rev. Nichol Edgar is supposed to have convinced a ghost, which had been haunting Hobkirk churchyard, to instead walk a straight line between here and Hoddleswoodie.
Howacre (how-a-kur) n. former name for lands in Lilliesleaf Parish, once owned by the Riddells of that Ilk. It is listed in the service of heirs for Sir John Riddell in 1669, the description being ‘an acre of land at the east end of the town of Lilliesleaf, called Howaiker’.
Howahill (how-u-hill) n. farm south-west of Bonchester, once part of the estate of ‘Howa’. It is now the main farm in this area, where there

Howard (how-urd) n. John (1726–90) English prison reformer. He spent 2 nights in Hawick in the late 18th century (as described by Robert Wilson). Sent away from the Black Bull, he stayed at the King’s Head (run by Nelly Dickson) and attended the East-end (Burgher) meeting house (which was then without a permanent minister), and apparently gave largely to the collection. He may also have attended Dr. Young’s church service (although this could be confusion). His ideas on improving prison conditions were not taken up until the 19th century, with Jethart Jail being one of the best preserved examples of a ‘Howard Reform Prison’. Thomas Earl of Surrey (1473–1554), son of Thomas, he was also 3rd Duke of Norfolk, and known locally as ‘Surrey’. He married Anne Plantagenet, becoming brother-in-law to Henry VII. He fought at Flodden and became Earl of Surrey in 1514, when his father was made Duke of Norfolk. He then led devastating raids on the Scottish Borders, including the burning of Jedburgh in 1523, which he described in a detailed letter. He became a great survivor in the treacherous court of Henry VIII (who married one of his nieces) and unusually for the time, he died of old age. His tomb, bearing his effigy, is in Framlingham Church – ‘Shall proud Surrey; shall yon Howards, Tell the king they fought with cowards?’ [JH]. Thomas 4th Duke of Norfolk (1536–72), grandson of Thomas the 3rd Duke, he commanded English forces in Scotland in 1559–60. He had several marriages, including one to Lord Dacre’s widow. He also proposed marriage to Mary Queen of Scots, was later involved in plots within England and was executed for treason.

Howarth (how-urth) n. Robert (b.1794/5) from Rochdale, he was a grocer near the top of the Back Row, listed on the 1851 census. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed as a ‘broker’. His wife was Catherine and they had sons James and George.

Howashiell (how-u-sheel) n. former farm in Hob Kirk Parish, roughly between Midburn and Higend. It was rented by John Turnbull in the late 18th century (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map; also referred to as ‘Howashiells’).

How be (how-bee) prep., arch. how would it do to, what about – ‘How be yow clippin the gress the teime A’m sawin the seed?’ [ECS], ‘Where wull oo gang? Oh, how be gaun owre owre ti Stobs an back be the Crescent?’ [ECS] (local idiom, cf. what be).

Howburn (how-burn) n. George (16th C.) listed among people who were owed money by William Scott, younger of Branxholme, when he died in 1552. He was owed the relatively large sum of 4 pounds and 4 shillings. He was probably related to James who is recorded in 1537. John (16th C.) listed in Hawick’s 1537 charter as a holder of one particate of land on the south side of the High Street.

Howcleuch (how-klooch) n. farm on the left just after Robertson, on the B711. It was owned by a branch of the Scotts from at least the early 16th century. In 1535 Walter Scott of Robertson sold it to his brother Stephen Scott, and Stephen’s son John. Lands there called ‘Slak et Westsyde de Howcleuch’ were described in 1621 as pertinents to the lands of Borthwickbrae. It was owned by the Scotts of Harden from at least 1643. There were 12 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely Andrew Wilson, Janet Fletcher, William ‘Howatsonne’, Margaret Telfer, John Armstrong, Margaret Ballantyne, Adam Little, John Wilson, Simon Wilson, Mary Scott, Walter Hobkirk and Janet Fenwick. James Richardson was there in 1683. It was mentioned in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. A mill there is referred to in the late 17th century. The lands were part of a legal dispute between Gideon Scott of Highchester and Walter Scott of Woll in the early years of the 18th century. William Scott was there in at least 1710–12, Alexander Hislop in 1710, John Stevenson in 1716 and Robert Learmonth in 1717. It was sold by Scott of Harden in 1719 and then owned by the Haliburtons (of Jedburgh), perhaps through marriage to the Elliots of Swinside. John Stevenson and Walter Nichol were there in at least 1718–21, Thomas Nichol in 1722, John Anderson in 1725, Walter Turnbull in 1727, Walter Park in Howcleuch Burn 1728, John Hume and John Riddell in 1731, John Pringle in 1733, William Richardson in 1734, George Heatley in 1736, William Laidlaw in 1742, Francis Scott in 1743–57, John Miller in 1743 and Andrew Davidson in 1752. In 1755 it was bought by Walter Scott, farmer at Commonside, and direct descendant of Walter of Goldielands. It then passed to his 2nd son Charles. James Scott was recorded there in 1756, Francis Scott and Robert Elliot in 1757, Walter Deans in 1762–74, James Thomson in 1764, Robert Chisholme in 1767 John Miller in 1774 and Walter Wilson in 1788. ‘Mr. Grieve’ is recorded as owner of 2 horses there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. The teinds of Roberton, Howcleuch and Hoscote were valued at £33 6s 8d in 1785 and 1802, and possessed by the Duke of Buccleuch, while Walter Scott (in 1875) and Charles Scott (in 1802) of Waunhope paid the land tax on £133 6s 8d. At the same time William Elliot of Borthwickbrae owned ‘West side of Howcleugh’. Thomas Irving was there in 1821. It was farmed by the Elliots in the 19th century. There is a walled enclosure for the Scotts of Howcleuch in Roberton Cemetery (the name first appears as ‘Houcleugh’ in 1533; it is also spelled ‘Houcleuch’, ‘Houcleuch’, ‘Houcleuche’, ‘Howcleugh’, ‘Howcleuch’, etc.; it is marked on a parish map of 1650, Blaeu’s 1654 map records ‘W. Houdeuch’ and ‘E. Houdeuch’, presumably transcription errors, while Adair’s c. 1688 map shows ‘Howcleugh’; the origin is probably Old English ‘ hôh cloh’, meaning ‘the ravine by the height’).

Howcleuch Burn (how-klooch-burn) n. stream that passes Howcleuch and joins the Borthwick Water near Borthwickbrae Cottages (it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map as ‘How Cleuch’).

Howcleuchshiel (how-klooch-sheel) n. farm beyond Howcleuch, at the end of the ‘Hill Road to Roberton’. The residents in 1841 were mason Francis Govenlock and labourer David Storie and their families. There is a stone horse trough at the roadside. The spring flowing into it was used as a source of drinking water well into the 20th century (it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

How Dean (how-deen) n. tree-lined stream between Melgund Glen farm and Minto village. It runs south into the Grinding Burn. In 1780 it is recorded that ‘Hawdean Syke’ formed part of the eastern boundary of the lands of Hawthorn Park and Mailchester Park; also ‘Howden syke’ was listed as part of the boundary of the lands of Minto Townhead.

Howden (how-din, how-den) n. wooded hollow through which the Howden Burn flows, on the north side of Hawick. There are many other Howden’s in Britain and several others in the Borders, e.g. a farm a little west of Selkirk and another just south-east of Jedburgh (from Old English ‘wooded hollow’).

Howden (how-din) n. former tower in Liddesdale, on the east side of the valley a little north of Larriston. The stream there is still known as Howden Cleuch, but there is no evidence of the site of the house. In the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale it is valued at 15 shillings, and tenanted by William Nixon, who was also recorded in 1544. ‘Hary Niksoun of Howden’ is recorded in 1581. ‘Dinlaybre and his lands, Larestoun, Howdoun, and Sheipshelden’ are recorded in 1632, when possessed (probably meaning tenanted) by Robert Pringle. It was combined with Highhouse, Hightrees, Harden and Burnmouth on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch (it is ‘Holden’ in 1541 and ‘Hawden’ in 1544; it is ‘Houdenn’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map, and marked on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and de Wit’s c. 1680 map of Scotland as ‘Houden’).

Howden (how-din) n. former name for land in Minto Parish. It is listed in the 1779 and 1811 Land Tax Rolls along with ‘Quarter of Whitefield’, valued at £47 11s 3d. It was among lands whose liferent had been granted to Rev. Robert Elliot in 1779.

Howden (hoo-, how-din) n. David (1811–73) born in Hawick, he married Alice Hunter Chalmers in 1841 and farmed at Churnside. He emigrated to New Zealand in 1848 as a ploughman-manager and their son John was born on the voyage. He is credited with ploughing the first furrow at Dunedin (with his plough in the museum there). He was first Chairman of the school committee at Green Island Bush, and in recognition of his early services to education the name of School Street was changed to Howden Street in 1953. The couple had 8 children in all. John (18th C.) recorded as butler at Minto House in 1788, when he was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. He was listed as butler and gamekeeper in 1794 and was still butler there in 1797 (also written ‘Houden’).

Howdenbank (how-din-bawngk) n. name sometimes used for the Anderson Sanatorium, built in 1911 on land overlooking the Howden Burn (at the eastern end of what is now Silverbuthall) on the site of a more modest earlier sanatorium. The whole area was also known by the same name.
Howdenbank (how-din-bawnk) n. street built in 1965 as the eastern addition to the Silver-buthall scheme. It was named after the nearby Howden Burn.

Howdenburn (how-din-burn) n. name for the area around the Howden Burn, also known as Howden. This was long one of the routes to Selkirk. The name was used in the 19th century for the northern end of Wilton Hill. There were 18 households with that address on the 1851 census – ‘…large crowds lined the Howdenburn road and the skirts of Galalaw Hill, to meet the musicians’ [RM], ‘How might I come to the auld toun? Sall I the New Road spurn. And glint the tops of the long lums Fae the brow o’ Howdenburn’ [WL] (also written ‘Howdenburn’, ‘Houden burn’, etc.).

the Howden Burn (thuh-how-din-burn) n. stream that is the lower part of Stiches Burn, flowing alongside Howdenbank and the A7, in the northern outskirts of Hawick, thereafter running underground to join the Teviot – ‘My thocht like carrier doos return Tae wander through the streets at e’en. Frae Haggis-Ha’ tae Howden Burn – Frae Miller’s Knowes tae Wilton Dean’ [HI].

Howden Cleuch (how-din-klooch) n. stream that flows roughly north-west to join the Teviot opposite the farm of Teindside. To the north of the stream are the remains of an earthwork, now almost obliterated by ploughing.

Howden Cleuch (how-din-klooch) n. small stream in Liddesdale, on the east side of the Liddel about mid-way between Burnmouth and Larriston.

howdie (how-dee) n., arch. a local woman who acts as unofficial midwife. She was traditionally also in charge of cutting the whole cheese which was given for luck after birth, up until the 19th century.

howdie-fee (how-dee-fee) n., arch. a small amount of money traditionally given to a child at a private baptism, when bread, cheese and whisky were partaken of by guests.

Howedykes (how-diks) n. name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded in 1541 as ‘Howdykis’, with a value of 18 pence, and with no tenant at that time. It is unclear where these lands were located.

the Howe Ford (thuh-how-ford) n. former name for the ford near the modern Parkdaill, which was used to cross the Teviot to reach the Borthwick valley. The name derived from it being the lowest crossing point in the area.

the Howegate (thuh-how-gä) n. one of the oldest streets in Hawick, leading up from the Sandbed to the Loan, which was formerly the course of the main road to Carlisle. There was once a minor gate at the bottom, leading to Silver Street and the Auld Brig. There also used to be a public well at the foot of the street on the south side. The spelling was ‘Howgate’ until the latter part of the 19th century. It was extensively and sympathetically redeveloped in the period 1980–85, by Aitken & Turnbull, beginning with the east side, and is part of Hawick’s conservation area, this work winning several awards. At the back of 7A is an inscription with the letters ‘DA’ in a square and the date 1855. In about 1931 a stone cross was discovered under old plaster of No. 15, perhaps associated with a right-of-way to St. Mary’s along Needle Street. The house visible at the back of No. 18 is surely one of the oldest in Hawick. 10 pottery and clay pipe fragments found in developers’ trenches are in the Museum. Much of the street is grade C listed (the origin has been

Howf (howf) n. a meeting place, haunt, particularly a pub, sometimes implying a hovel-like or disreputable state – ‘... ane saufa hie-piece for the oppresset; ane saufa hie-howff in times o’ truble’ [HSR], ‘The heich hills ar ane howff for the wild-gaes, an’ the roks for the rabbits’ [HSR], ‘The quarters of the Hawick carriers in the Grassmarket was a great howf of Wall’s’ [WK], ‘She saw them wha she’d envied sair, Mothers, wi’ minds the houfs o’ care’ [JHA], ‘The Reuch Sike ... a guid name for a fiddler’s howf, I’ve aye thocht, sin syne’ [DH], ‘His howfs i’r the Level at denner time, ...’ [IWL], ‘One of the best known howfs was Jean Renwick’s ...’ [??], v., arch. to frequent a place, haunt, take shelter – ‘He drave doun the maukins to howff ’mang the whins’ [HSR], ‘... and whae was aye a welcome visitor about the mills, where he howfed ... ’ [BCM1886] (also written ‘howff’ and ‘hوقف’; probably from Dutch or Flemish).

Howford (how-ford) n. farm near Ettrickbridge, once a home of part of the Scott family. It was formerly referred to as the middle steering of Langhope (perhaps referring to the Langhope ove the hill towards the Ale Water). John Scott and Thomas Tweedhope are recorded in 1494/5 having some of their sheep stolen from there. In 1510 the feu passed from Sir William Cranston to Alexander Scott. Alexander Scott held the 6-pound lands there in 1512. The lands were claimed by Robert Scott in 1541, paying £25. Robert Scott of Howford is listed by Scott of Satchells as one of the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch, and was said to have been given the lands of ‘Cowdhouse’ (i.e. Coldhouse) for his service. Walter Scott of ‘Howfuird’ married Marie, sister of Robert Scott of Hartwoodmyres in 1615. James Murray was tenant at Howford Mill in the early late century. There is another Howford near Traquair – ‘Warn Dryhope, and Catslack, Howford, and Huntlee free, Whitslade, Todrigg, and Sallenside, the morn to wait on me’ [WSB], ‘... A song to the pebbles to speed their way. And the sorrel horse went stiff of his wound As he climbed the steep of the Howford brae ...’ [WHO] (also formerly written ‘Howford’, ‘Howfuird’, ‘How-furd’, etc.; it appears to be marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Noufurd’).

Howford Haugh (how-ford-hawch) n. former name for the ground on the south side of the Coble Pool, i.e. roughly the present location of the High School.

Howford Sike (how-ford-sik) n. stream on the south side of the Borthwick valley near Whithope farm. The smaller streams of Whithope Sike and Holm Sike join to form it near Whithope (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Howgate see Howegate

Howgill (how-gil) n. former name for lands in the Ewes valley, possibly at the modern Hoghill. There were Armstrongs there in the 16th century. Along with Flask and Glendivian it was described as a 10-merk land in 1550, when inherited by Robert, Lord Maxwell, by John, Lord Maxwell in 1604, by Robert, Lord Maxwell in 1619, and still held by John, Earl of Nithdale in 1670 and William, Earl of Nithdale in 1696. It is listed as part of the lands of Ewesdale about 1610. It is listed among the Dumfriesshire possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653, 1661 and 1663. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, when it consisted of 476 acres, bounded by lands of the Laird of Cooms, Flask, Over Wrae and Glendivian. Adam Jardine was there in 1783. There were Jacksons and Lewises there in 1841 and A. Stevenson was farmer in the 1860s (it is probably the ‘Howgilsyd’ recorded in 1611; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map, with 2 other places of the same name on the Tinnis Water to the east; it is ‘Hogel’ on Gordon’s c.1650 map and ‘Hougli’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Howick (hō-wik) n. often confused with Hawick, it is a small village in Northumberland, east of Alnwick, famous for being the site of Howick Hall. This was the home of Charles Grey of Howick, who was variously Earl, Baron and Viscount (as well as British Prime Minister and the man for whom the tea blend is named), a later Earl (who was Secretary for the Colonies) and other Lord Howicks down to recent times. Several towns were named after them, including settlements near Auckland, New Zealand, in Ontario, Canada and in Natal, South Africa. There are additionally small Howicks in Monmouthshire and West Sussex, a Howick Cross in Lancashire and a Howicks in Surrey.

howie (how-ee) n., arch. diminutive form of ‘howe’, a small hollow – ‘On height and in howie there’s many a ewie Lamentin’ the loss o’ their lammers this day’ [TCh].

Howieson (how-ee-sin) n. Adam (18th C.) local writer of some pieces of music for the violin in the late 1700s, published later by Adam Grant. Specifically ‘Three old Hawick Tunes from ‘Adam Howison, his Music Book. Begun Hawick, 19th April, 1766’ was edited and arranged by K.E.R., Hawick; this consisted of ‘The Lasses o’ Hawick’, ‘Lament on the division of Hawick Common, 1777’ and ‘The New Bridge of Hawick’. He may have been father of ‘John Howison’, who was a fiddler and composer of music. Isobel (17th C.) resident of Dryden in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. John (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Skelfhill. He paid tax in 1797 for having 2 non-working dogs. Robert (18th/19th C.) made up a bill of mortality for Hawick in 1818, which is a valuable social record of that time. Robert ‘Stiltie Robbie’, ‘Horny Robbie’ (c.1839–1900) familiar figure on the streets of Hawick in the 19th century. He was crippled following an accident in his infancy. He became a stockmaker at Ancrum for a while, but also worked in Hawick. He was well known as a race card seller at Borders Common Ridings, with his cry ‘Sold again, gentlemen, sold again’ and his distinctive red hunting coat, given to him by one of the Scotts of Buccleuch. There is a photograph of him with his race cards and walking sticks in 1881. He could be the Robert born to John Howison and Jane Cavers in Hawick in 1838, the family residing in the Kirk Wynd (see also Howison; formerly spelled ‘Houatsone’, ‘Huison’, ‘Howatsonne’, etc.).

Howison (how-ee-sin) n. Adam (15th C.) recorded at the Justice- aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. Alexander Turnbull, son of Andrew Turnbull of Dryden, had remission for the crime of resetting him and Robert Jackson. It seems likely he is the same man as ‘Adam howatson in commonsyd’ who had remission in 1494/5 for stealing 6 sheep from James Ker in Fasthough. His surety was Alexander Turnbull in Commonside. Adam (18th C.) breeches-maker in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). Robert, mason in Langholm, subscribed to 26 copies (one of the largest numbers), and may have been a relative. He may be the Adam who married Janet Storie in 1775, and she died in 1787; their children included Robert (b.1780). He could also be the Adam whose wife Janet Walker died in Hawick in 1822, aged 62. It is possible he was the same as the writer of music Adam ‘Howieson’. Adam (b.c.1845) son of frame-worker John and Jane Cavers. He was a stockmaker with Innes & Henderson, who apparently first raised the suggestion that the Burgh should purchase Wilton Lodge. In 1867 he married Jean Welsh. Isobel (d.1628) resident in Riddell. She was tried in 1628 for the crime of being a witch, dispositions being taken in both Lilliesleaf and Melrose. Her name is recorded as ‘Isobell Howetsone’, and the men given a commission to try her were Sir James Pringle of Galashiels, Andrew Riddell of that Ilk and Robert Scott of Hartwoodmyres. Among the detailed accusations are that she cured a boy in Midlem, who later had a calf die, and that she visited a farmer at Clarielaw in the form of a bee. She was presumably burnt at the stake. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) one of the tenants of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Eildsdale in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for them in Hawick, that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. His name is recorded as ‘Jokke Howatsone’. John (18th C.) local man who was well-known throughout the Border country as a fiddler. However, little concrete is known about him. He is also said to have composed some tunes, and may be the same as ‘Adam Howieson’. W.N. Kennedy (writing in 1863) states that he was half brother of John Pringle, also known locally as a fiddler and composer. James Wilson mentions him briefly in 1858, stating that he was grandfather and teacher of John Pringle. He was said to have died at a relatively young age, his step-father (or perhaps father) saying, as the coffin was lowered, ‘Here lies the master of music’. Bailie Robert of Orchard (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He is probably the Bailie Howieson recorded in 1731. He purchased a bible for the Burgh in 1734 and was involved with plans for the rebuilding of St. Mary’s in 1763. He was appointed as factor for the spinning school that was set up in Hawick in 1734. Also in 1734 he was one of those appointed to ask the Chamberlain of Buccleuch why he had removed the Bailies’ seat from the Kirk. He is probably the Robert ‘Howison’ who acted as Bailie Depute for the Regality of Hawick in 1736. In 1738 he was appointed one of the Commissioners for the construction of Teviot Bridge, and in 1739 was one of the Councillors appointed to oversee the construction of a new Parish school. In 1740 he was ex-Bailie when he witnessed a baptism for smith Robert Young. In 1744 he purchased Orchard from Archibald Crombie. He witnessed baptisms for druggist Gideon Scott in 1744, for Patrick Panton in 1745 and for carrier James Oliver and merchant Francis Gledstains in 1746. He paid tax for 15 windows in Hawick in 1748. In 1749, along with 5 others and ‘the Club of Hawick’, he loaned the ‘Town money to help pay off the debt coming from building Teviot Brig. He is recorded in 1751 distributing some money among poor parishioners, which had been given in by ‘a Gentleman in the neighbourhood (tho’ not of this Parish)’ and also one of 4 people appointed by the Session as a trustee for dealing with Francis Revecastle’s estate. In 1757 he is ‘Bailie Robt. Howieson of Oarchyard’ when he witnessed a baptism for John Nichol. He was listed as ‘Robert Huison of Oarchyard’ among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was referred to as late Bailie in 1763 (in connection with the Town borrowing to pay for the new bell). He could be the Robert who is recorded paying for use of the Parish ‘mortcloth’ in 1773. His children included: Elisabeth, who married Robert Scott, from the Scotts of Farnash; and Agnes, who married Rev. George Dickson. After his death Orchard went to his grandson William Dickson. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Barbara Ruecastle and their children included: John (b.1783); and Elizabeth (b.1785). Thomas (17th C.) ‘workman’ listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. Thomas (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1699 he was fined for ‘forestalling’ barley from Lady Newton and from ‘Gladstanes’. He was recorded as Thomas ‘Huison‘ or ‘hutson’ whose children baptised in Hawick included: Thomas (b.1692); James (b.1700); William (b.1702); John (b.1704); and Walter (b.1709). The witnesses in 1700 were Thomas Elliot in Hummelknowes and Robert Huntlie and in 1702 were John Elliot in Nether Southfield and John Scott, tenant in Brauxholme. His was a merchant in Hawick with surname ‘Hoatson’ in 1713 when his marriage with Janet Miller was proclaimed in Wilton Parish. He may also be the Thomas ‘Huison’ who married Margaret Scott and whose children baptised in Hawick included Thomas (b.1715), and possibly the Thomas who married Jean Elliot and had a son James (b.1711). Walter (17th C.) baker listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He could be the Walter ‘Huison’ who had an unnamed daughter baptised in Hawick in 1690. William (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. His children included: Jean (b.1726); Ann (b.1728); Euphan (b.1728); Isobel (b.1730); and Thomas (b.1733). He could be the William who was at Ormiston in 1723 when his son William was baptised in Cavers Parish; this may be the later mason in Hawick. William (d.bef. 1797) mason in Hawick. In 1764 he was witness to a baptism for James Buckham and Jane Howison (who was probably his sister). He married Helen Renwick from Harwood in Hobkirk Parish in 1760. Their children, baptised in Hawick, included: Jane (b.1764); Elizabeth (b.1765); Ann (b.1770); and Helen (b.1778), probably the ‘Nelly’ who died in 1797. His wife Helen died in 1782 (see also Howieson; formerly spelled ‘Howatson’, ‘Huison’ and variants).

howk (howk) v. to dig, unearth, excavate, extract, carve out, scrape, root like a pig, pull up – ‘stop howkin yer nose laddie’, ‘they got twae bob each for tatti howkin’, ‘He made ane pitt an’ howkit it deepe . . . ’ [HSR], ‘Thay howkit owt inequities: thaye akomplish ane ei- dent enquirie . . . ’ [HSR], ‘And woblin’ lobseters’ mony feet Houk oot the howest pool’ [JL], ‘He stabbed into the sappy clay, And howked, his ea- hy’s hed a right howkin fri his fither’.

howkit (how-kee’, -ki’) pp., arch. dug, excavated, scraped – ‘. . . And he howkit up the fatte curatte Thatte burset in Easter week’ [JTe], ‘The greedy worms were crawling there, An’ ilka hole they howkit suir’ [RDW], ‘. . . whilk withowtten caus thaye howket for my saul’ [HSR], ‘. . . thaye haec howket ane pitt afore me, in the middle o’ whilk thaye thamesel’s hae fa’i’ [HSR].

Howlands (how-lindz) n. former name for part of the Langlands estate, extending between Roadhead and roughly Wilton Path, and south of Langlands Road. Originally feued from George Langlands to David Knox in 1741, it stayed with the Knox family for several generations subsequently. Part of the land, where Wilton Grove Howlands was built, was feuded to John Ormiston in 1764. ‘Howlands inclosure’ was valued at £13 16s in 1788 and owned by Archibald Ormiston (and still recorded that way in 1811). The lands then passed to the Cathrae family and later were recorded being owned by Mrs. Elizabeth Graham and Mrs. Agnes Bowie. The land further to the east was once called Easter Howlands. The name survives in Howlands Terrace and also a house at Norwood (the name derived presumably from being relatively low lying).

Howlands (how-lindz) n. an alternative name for Newlands, as recorded on the ‘Decreet Demolishing the kirk of Hassendean’ and establishing which parts went to neighbouring parishes’ (although possibly a transcription error).

Howlands Hoose (how-lindz-hoos) n. former name for house on Wilton Path. It is listed as the residence of the Knox family in the 1851 census. They farmed lands off Langlands Road.

Howlands Mill (how-lindz-mil) n. former name for the main knitwear factory at the western end of Victoria Road. It was built for Greenwood, Watt & Co. in the 1880s, and designed by John Manuel. It originally contained 78 looms, but had enough space for as many as 300 looms in three large bays, and was powered by steam from the outset. There was an extension in the early 1900s on the site of some former cottages. It was sold in 1911 to Sime, Williamson & Co., who changed the name to Dean Mills. Later it became part of Innes-Henderson and finally Braemar. The mill was demolished in 2004 to make way for the new hospital, with the tower being the first to go, in the midst of attempts to save it. Some of the stone was used for the bases of the Steve Hislop statues in Hawick and the Isle of Man (also sometimes plural ‘Mills’).

Howlands Nursery (how-lindz-nur-su-ree) n. former plant nursery on Victoria Road, preserved in a photograph of 1885. Turnbull’s factory was built on the site soon afterwards.

Howlands Terrace (how-lindz-te-ris) n. street off Wellington Road, built in 1890 and called after a former name for the area.

Howlet (how-li) n. former farmstead in Liddesdale, near Saughtree. It is recorded as ‘Howletcruik’ in the 1541 rental roll after Saughtree. The farm was valued at 30 pence and tenanted by Thomas Henrison. It is associated with the farms of Saughtree and Pinglehole on the 1718 map of Scott of Buccleuch properties, when it is ‘Houlet’.

hown (hown) n., poet. a low-lying stretch of grassland, a ‘haugh’ – ‘They ran their horse on the Langholm howm, And brak their spears wi’ meikle main . . . ’ [CPM] (also holm).

How Meadow (how-me-di) n. former name for a small farm between the farms of Castlehill and Chapelhill, a little to the north of Newmill on Teviot. From the Buccleuch properties survey of 1718 it was the upper part of Castlecide, and had no farmhouse of its own. It had ‘Reggs’ on its west and Chapelhill around its north and east, and consisted of 35 acres, with the Newmill Burn cutting through the middle. On modern maps it lay roughly between Newmill Burn Plantation and Loch Sike Plantation.

Hownam (hoo-, how-num) n. village in the eastern Borders, where the Hownam Burn meets the Kale Water. Lands there were once held by the Rulie family, resigned by the 4 heiresses Marjory, Isabella, Janet and Ellen in 1443. It has a church built around 1600, but extensively renovated in 1752 and 1840. The church was gifted to Jedburgh Abbey at the end of the 12th century. The parish is supposedly the birth-place of the legendary figures ‘Rab the Ranter’ and ‘the Flying Tailor’. The ‘Hownam Rings’ and the ‘Shearers’ are nearby ancient stone arrangements, and there are also several hill-forts and cultivation terraces in the area. Hownam Law, an outlier of the Cheviots, reaches a height of 449 m (1472 ft) and contains the remains of one of the highest hill-forts in Scotland. This is also the name of the surrounding Parish of south-eastern Roxburghshire, bordering on the Cheviots and England. The Roman road Dere Street passes through the parish, which also contains the fort at Pennymuir – ‘The mist is deep on Hounam Law, And Cheviot sits within the cloud, The drenching rain it still does fa’; The howling gusts are lang and loud’ [JTe], (also spelled ‘Houman’; the origin of the name is uncertain, since there are different early variants including ‘Hunoned’ and ‘Hunum’ occurring from the late 13th century).

Hownam (hoo-, how-num) n. Robert (17th C.) resident of Woll in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll (also written ‘Hounam’).

howp (howp) n., arch. hope – ‘For thou art my houpe, O Lord God . . . ’ [HSR], v. ‘. . . he sall refreschen an’ mak’ strang your haurt, a’ ye that houpe in the Lord’ [HSR] (also written ‘houpe’).
Howpasley

Howpasley (how-pas-lee, hups-lee) n. farm at the end of the Borthwick road, just after the turn-off for Craik and about 7½ miles beyond Robertson. Until 1689/90, when the Parish of Robertson was formed, it was part of Hawick Parish. In the 15th century the lands were held by the Stewarts of Dalswinton and Garlies, who resigned them in 1468. In 1467/8 James III granted the lands to Alexander Scott of Abington (probably a younger son of Walter Scott of Kirkurd and Buccleuch), after they were resigned by Alexander, son and heir of William Stewart of Dalswinton. Walter Scott of Howpasley and Robert Scott of Howpasley were both recorded in the 1490s. Robert Jackson was recorded there in 1494/5. Matthew Graham was there in 1502. In 1511 the lands were listed among those held ‘in tenandry’ by the Baron of Hawick, Douglas of Drumlanrig. The old tower near here was burned by Dacre’s men (and ‘twenty-eight score sheep and other gear’ taken) in late 1513. It probably stood just to the east of the steadings of Old Howpasley, about a kilometre further up the Howpasley Burn. In 1535 the farm was burned and raided by a group of Armstrongs and others from Liddesdale. The lands continued to be listed among those held ‘in tenandry’ by the Baron of Hawick in 1559 and 1572. However, sometime in the late 16th century Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig took the lands for himself, infuriating the widow Lady Scott of Howpasley, who held a meeting in Hawick in 1615 and organised a group of men to slaughter all of Douglas’ sheep. The lands are still listed among those held by the Baron of Hawick in 1615. In a parish valuation of 1627 it is ‘in stok estimat to 300 merks, vicarage 32 lb’. There were 7 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650, namely Thomas Nichol, Margaret Scott, Bessie Graham, John Scott, James Nichol, Margaret ‘Cobban’, Bessie ‘Lyntoune’, Margaret Graham and Helen Nichol. The Covenanters Andrew Hislop is meant to have been sheltered here in 1683 before Claverhouse’s soldiers caught up with him and shot him. William Telfer and Thomas Pott were tenants there in 1685. From 1674 and for the first half of the 18th century it was owned by the Scotts of Crumhaugh, then sold to the Duke of Buccleuch about 1760. However, at least part was among those inherited by Sir Francis Scott of Thirlestane from his brother Walter in 1695. William Telfer and Thomas Pott, from there, were in 1685 accused of being Covenanters supporters. Walter Scott and Adam Laidlaw were there in 1703. By 1707 the lands were valued at £722 3s 4d. John Cunningham was there in 1711, Thomas Bell in 1712, John Moffat in at least 1716–21, Archibald Scott in 1718, William Pringle in 1721–23, William Park in 1725 and James Hogg in 1726. John Pringle was there in 1761–61, William Pringle in 1761–67, John Telfer and Walter Wilson in 1766, William Oliver in 1772, Walter Paterson in 1780, Adam Pringle in 1781, John Rutherford in 1786, James Grieve in 1787 and William Angus in 1789. Walter Grieve was farmer there in 1797 and James Oliver from 1858. In 1788 and 1811 the farm was still valued at £722 3s 4d and owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. One of the routes from Langholm to Selkirk used to pass here (before about the mid-18th century), coming from Teviothead and travelling up the Borthwick valley. A drove road also used to connect the upper Borthwick valley with Eskdalemuir via this area. There was a small school near here from the mid-19th century until 1947. A green track leads along the Howpasley Burn to ‘Auld Howpasley’ and the shepherd’s cottage at Howpasleyhope – ‘...Howpasley, he sent out his brother, And Allan-haugh sent out another’ [CSW] (the name appears as ‘Hewpaslot’ in 1485, with several spelling variants thereafter, including ‘Holpaslot’, ‘Houpaslot’, ‘Houpaslet’, ‘Houpaslot’, ‘Howpasley’, ‘Howpaislay’, ‘Howpaislet’, ‘Howpaislott’, ‘Howpalsloit’, ‘Howpalslat’, ‘Howpasla’, ‘Howpanslaw’, ‘Howpalslate’, ‘Howpaslatt’, ‘Howpalslaw’, ‘Howpsslocht’, ‘Howpssloth’, ‘Howpssloth’, ‘Howpsslot’ and ‘Howpsslay’, with the modern form appearing by the late 17th century; it appears as ‘Houspallas’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, ‘Houpaslett’ on de Wit’s c. 1680 map of Scotland, ‘Houplaslett’ on Visscher’s 1689 map and ‘Howpasee’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map; the origin of the name is probably Old English ‘holh pth sld’, meaning ‘the valley with the sunken path’).

Howpasley Burn (how-pas-lee-burn) n. stream that rises near Stock Hill and runs north to become part of the Borthwick near Craik village. Smaller streams that feed it include Stock Grain, Ladshaw Sike, Gavel Sike, Foul Cleugh, Mark Sike, Whiteholm Sike, Bloody Sike, Cat Cleugh, Hedley Burn, Rut Sike and Loans Cleuch. Howpasley Comb (how-pas-lee-koom) n. former shepherd’s cottage on Comb Sike, far to the south-west of Howpasley, just to the south of Craikhope, (see also Combe).

Howpasleyhope (how-pas-lee-hop) n. former shepherd’s cottage up the Howpasley Burn from the modern Howpasley. This marked the furthest limits of habitation of the old boundaries of Hawick Parish.

Howpasley Schuil (how-pas-lee-skil) n. former school near Howpasley, located just on the left after the turn for Craik village. It was provided by the Duke of Buccleuch for his tenants in that area, sometime before 1873. In that year it was presented to Robertson Parish. It was thereafter used as a school and also for occasional church services and as a Sunday school until 1947, when the pupils and teacher, Mr. Dodds, were transferred to Robertson. The Borders Archive has registers and log books for 1875–1947.

Howpaslot see Howpasley

howt (howt) interj. expression of annoyance, objection, doubt or dissatisfaction, tut – ‘howt, A cann’dae’d, ‘howt, A deh ken’, ‘Hout lod! the hirin’s no’ begun At a!’ cries drouthy Wullie [JoHa], v., arch. to discredit, dismiss with contempt, pooh-pooh – ‘...to hallow out at windows and too hout the bayleys when passing by in the streets ...’ [BR1706], ‘... and such gentle contradictions as ‘Hout, tout, faither’ ‘[WNK], ‘Hout, you an’ yer abstract ... Gudewife, gie Andrew his denner i’ the abstract the day, an’ see how he’ll thrive on’t’ [JAHM] (also spelled ‘hoot’; this corresponds to ‘hoot’ in some other parts of Scotland).

howt aye (howt-I) interj. yes, certainly, of course (also ‘howts aye’).

howts (howts) interj. expression of annoyance, objection or dismissal, tut – ‘howts mun, deh be daft’, ‘o howts no’, ‘Howts mother, gie me the can objection or dismissal, tut { ‘howts mun, deh be part of Scotland, and ‘tuts’ in parts of England).

Hoyes (hoiz) n. Michael (18th C.) merchant of Newcastle, who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1750.

Hudshoose

Hudshoose (huds-hoos) n. Hudshouse, area to the north-east of Saughtree, between the Dawson Burn and the Liddel, marked on the maps now as Hudhouse Rig. In the 1541 rental roll for Liddesdale the lands are valued at 20 shillings and with Philip Crozier as tenant. It is among lands in upper Liddesdale which were once held by Jedburgh Abbey. ‘Francie Batie’ was there in 1611 and Hob Glendinning in 1622. In a listing of lands in the Lordship of Liddesdale in 1632 occurs ‘Steid forenent the Hirdhous, Hundhous, possesst be the Erle of Bucceleuche’; this surely relates to these lands, although the precise location of the Stead and Hirdhouse are not clear. The farm was owned by Elliot in the late 17th and early 18th centuries. James Turnbull was tenant there in 1694, and other householders were John Forrester and John Armstrong. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, when it was a long piece of land in the north-east/south-west direction, covering 1820 acres, bounded by Myredykes, Peel, Thorlisshope, Dawstonburn and Singdean. There were 2 houses marked on the farm un 1718, one by the Liddel, near the site marked ‘Tower (remains of)’ on modern maps, and the other close to Myredykes farmhouse. Robert Pott was tenant there in the mid-1700s. John Turnbull was there in 1821. Archibald Scott, William Hardie and their families were there in 1841. Matthew Elliot and family were there in 1851 and it appears to have been abandoned soon after. The New Statistical Account reports in 1839 the existence of 2 circular earthworks on the farm. The remains of a farmstead and probable tower are located to the south of Hudshouse Rig on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, between the Liddel Water and the side road from Saughtree to Kielder. A report from 1896 (and a visit by the Berwickshire Naturalists’ Club in 1889) suggests that there are remains of 3 British camps on the southern slopes of Dawston and Hudshouse Rig, but there is no evidence for this today. On the crest to the southeast are the remains of an old cairn by a sheep-fold. It is said that the Highlanders crossed here in 1745, one of them dying as a result of gorging on mutton (the origin is probably from the Old English personal name ‘Hud’; it is ‘Hudshous’ in 1541, ‘Hundishous’ in 1611, ‘Huddishous’ in 1622 and 1637 and ‘Heeds-house’ in 1839; it is marked on Gordon’s c. 1650 map as ‘Hudshous’, Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Hudshouse’ and also ‘Hudshouse’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; there is another Hudshouse near Dent in Yorkshire).

Hudshoose Rig (hudz-hoos-rig) n. ridge of land between the Dawston Burn and the Liddel Water. Essentially the same area is known as Dawston Rig. On the north side, the old road passes a little up the rig, to the east of the moder B6357. On the south side, near where the Caddrour Burn joins the Liddel are the remains of a settlement, consisting of two ‘round-abouts’, as well as a linear earthwork, once believed to be associated with the Catrail (it is marked ‘Da ston Ridge’ on the 1718 Bucceleuch survey).

Hud-stane (hud-stän) n., arch. a stone placed transversely to strengthen a hearth – Hud-stane, a flag-stone set on edge as a back to a fire on the hearth, Dumfr. Teviotd.’ [JoJ],

Hue an cry (hew-an-crI) n., arch. the pursuit of a suspected riever, announced by public proclamation, with a legal obligation on others to follow the pursuit. This was part of the Border Law, as laid down in the 15th and 16th centuries, and its use at that time led to the modern meaning of the phrase (from Middle English).

Huggan (hu-gin) n. Adam (1855–1904) son of Robert and Janet Cumming, he was a tobac coonist at 17 high Street. He married Mary Sinton, who was sister of Thomas Sinton, skinner, and she died in 1906. George (b.1809) born in Jedburgh, son of John and Ann Mortimer. He was a framework knitter in Hawick. His wife was Isabella Marshall, and their children were: Jessie (b.c.1837); Agnes (b.c.1839); Thomas (b.c.1842); William (b.c.1845); James (b.c.1847); and Fanny (b.c.1850). George (c.1824–95) son of Thomas and Katherine Swan from Jedburgh, and brother of Thomas. He moved to Hawick and was a frameworker. In 1846 he married Jemima Rae in Hawick; she was daughter of John and Margare t Cumming. They lived at 7 Back Row in 1851 and 1861. Their children were: Margaret, who married James Wilson; Thomas, who mar-rried Mary Stringer; Catherine; George (b.1855); James (b.1858), who married Elizabeth Richardson; Jemima (b.1860); John (b.1863), who mar-rried Isabelle Turner; and Andrew Swan (b.1869).

John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Earlside, recorded on the 1792–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He was owner of 6 farm horses in 1797. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. He may be the John whose death is recorded in Hobkirk Parish in 1817, with his wife a year later. John (1914–89) writer of music for John Fairbairn’s poem ‘The Exile’s Dream’. Born at 8 Wellogate Place, his father, also John, was a frame worker, who died of wounds in 1918, and his mother was Isabella Carstairs Clark. He was brought up on Galdstone Street and Mansfield Road. He worked for Innes, Henderson & Co. after leaving school, but had a love of music, learning from local church organists, gaining the L.R.A.M. and L.T.C.L. diplomas, and becoming organist at St. John’s. He attended teacher training at Moray House 1836–37, then left to become music master at Buckie, Banffshire, before joining the R.A.F. in 1940. After the War he became Principal Teacher of Music at Galashiels Academy, and remained there until retirement in 1974. He taught piano in Roxburghshire for 2 more years, then moving to Edinburgh. In 1957, as an exile living in Gala at that time, he objected to the song being included in the Hawick Songs ‘Red Book’, insisting that it was no good! But his family gave permission for inclusion in the later ‘Blue Book’, allowing it to reach a wider audience. He died at Edinburgh Royal Infirmary. Robert (b.1811) from Jedburgh, son of John and Ann Mortimer. He was a frameworker in Hawick, like his brother George. His wife was Janet Cumming (or Common), and children included: John (b.c.1845); James (b.c.1850); and Adam (1855). They were living on Walter's Wynd in 1851. Thomas (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident. In 1713 he was queried about what is probably the first recorded ‘irregular marriage’ in the existing Session records. He married Elizabeth (‘Bessie’), daughter of Bailie Graham in Longtown in England in 1713; this may have been an elopement. In the following year he was allowed to baptise his child, following a rebuke before the pulpit. In 1716 several people were reprimanded for late night drunkenness and a fight at his house, the meeting connected with the fact that he ‘had disposed ane hatt to a public raffle’. He probably started the fight with William Oliver in the house of Isobel Gledstains. Thomas (18th/19th C.) saddler in Hawick. In 1796 he married Janet Tait. Their son John (b.1797) was baptised in Hawick Parish, with the witnesses being George Caverhill and William Wilson. He witnessed a baptism for William Easton in 1795. Thomas (b.1785) born in Jedburgh, son of William and Elizabeth Turnbull. He married Katherine (or Catherine) Swan and the family moved to Hawick, where he was a ‘woollen hand loom weaver journeyman’. Their children (baptised in the Associate Kirk in Jedburgh) included: George; Thomas (b.1826); John (b.1828); Christian Catherine (b.1831); and James (b.1833). They lived on the Back Row in 1841. Thomas (1825/6–1901) from Jedburgh, son of Thomas and Katherine Swan. He came to Hawick and worked as a stockingmaker. In 1846 he married Elizabeth Stevenson, a cousin of carrier Andrew Stevenson, and she died in 1887, aged 63. Their children were: Margaret Janet and another Janet, who all died young; Thomas (b.1857), who died in Rhode Island; Isabella (b.c.1849); Robert (b.1862), who died in Selkirk; Christina; Elizabeth (Betsy) Stevenson (b.c.1851), who married Walter Thorburn; and William (b.1864); a 3rd Janet (b.1866); and Margaret (b.1868). In 1861 they were living at 46 Loan. William ‘in Wauchoip’ (17th C.) recorded in the 1641 Town Book as an appraiser for a horse. It is unclear which Wauchope he may have been tenant for. He may be the William who married Bessie Wright and whose daughter Bessie was baptised in Hawick in 1644. William (b.1816/7) from Jedburgh, he was a frameworker in Hawick. His wife was Janet (b.c.1810), and their children included: Thomas (b.1842); Margaret (b.c.1844); John (b.c.1846); and Christina or ‘Kirsty’ (b.c.1850). They were living on the Loan in 1851 and at 1 Back Row in 1861 (formerly spelled ‘Huggon’, ‘Huggens’, ‘Hugon’ and variants).

huggery-muggery (hu-gu-ree-mu-gu-ree) adj., arch. disorderly, dishevelled, in disarray, topsy-turvy – ‘Imagin iz: . . . ruflt claes, creest an huggery-muggery [ECS], . . . a boy with dishevelled hair, unwashed face and tattered clothes, altogether a huggery-muggery, lazy-looking lout’ [JHH], adv. in a confused and disorderly state (an example of ‘rhyming reduplication’).

Hugh (hew) n. (d.1199) also known as ‘Hugo de Roxburgh’ he was a Chancellor of Scotland. He was elected Bishop of Glasgow, succeeding Jocelin, but may have died before he was consecrated. He is buried in Jedburgh Abbey. Hugh (hew) n. brewer of Hassendean, recorded around the 1220s when he was granted lands of Cresswell by Christina, daughter of William, son of Adam of Hassendean. His name is given as ‘Hugoni’.

Adam (18th/19th C.) builder on Buccleuch Street, recorded on Pigot's 1825/6 directory. He had an unnamed son who died in 1819. Both he and Robert are listed as masons in Hawick, when they subscribed to William Scott's 'Beauties of the Border' in 1821, along with mason 'J. Hume'. George (1783-1857) son of Ashkirk toll-keeper Robert and Jane Elliot, he was baptised in Elsdon, Northumberland. He was a shepherd and died in Yetholm Parish. His wife was Elizabeth Hall. Isabel (d.1829) listed as ‘tranty’ when she was buried in Hawick. She was the second of the 2 sisters known as ‘the Tranties’, with Marjory dying in about 1814. They kept a boarding house and were known to be intelligent above their station (which is what the word ‘tranty’ meant). She may be the ‘Isobel’, daughter of Walter and Helen Dryden, baptised in Hawick Parish in 1742. James (18th/19th C.) listed as a mason in Hawick when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was surely related to Adam and Robert, masons who also subscribed to the book. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His daughter Margaret was baptised in 1648. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Paterson and they had an unnamed son baptised in 1686. James (17th C.) tenant in ‘Shappelhill’ in 1684, when his wife Margaret Scott’s will is recorded. He was probably tenant at Chapelhill and either the same man as the James who died around 1720, or else a close relative. He is probably the James who witnessed a baptism for Patrick Scoon in Roberton Parish in 1763 for an ‘irregular marriage’. James (d.bef. 1795) farmer at Chapelhill. He was tenant at Chapelhill in 1763 when a son Walter was born. He is recorded still renting Chapelhill from the Duke of Buccleuch in 1792, but by 1795 he was deceased and the farm was taken over by his son James. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Chapelhill. He took over from his father in about 1795, when he was recorded at both Chapelhill and Branxholme Common. He was at Chapelhill on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses, and also on the Dog Tax Rolls as owner of 2 dogs. He was leasing Chapelhill and Branxholme Common in 1802 and was in arrears for Chapelhill in 1812. James (b.1799/1800) born in Wilton Parish, he was an agricultural labourer. He married Elizabeth Goodfellow and their children included: Janet (b.1824); James, Jane, Elizabeth (b.1833); Agnes (b.1840). 1851 he was in Crailling and in 1861 was at Edgerston. James (b.c.1800) farmer at Chapelhill. He is mentioned in a letter of 1827 as father to an illegitimate child (with Jess Dickson of Harwood). He was probably the John recorded as tenant at Chapelhill in the period 1831–40. In 1841 he was recorded as farmer at Chapelhill, along with William (probably his brother) John (17th/18th C.) son of James. Resident in Parkhill in 1710, Easter Parkhill in 1717 and Whithope in 1721. In Roberton Parish in 1709 he married Bessie, daughter of Adam Elliot. His children included: James (b.1704), Robert (b.1706); James (again, b.1711); John (b.1717); and Thomas (b.1721). 1429

John (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Howcleuch in 1731 when his son Walter was baptised. He may be the same as John at Highchesters. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He is recorded at Easter Highchesters in 1736. He married Jean Cowan in 1729. His children probably included: John (b.1736); and Margaret (b.1738). He could be the John who witnessed a baptism in Wilton Parish in 1733. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Hume and their children included: James (b.1745). John (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He is recorded at Highchesters Mill in 1757. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, probably included John (b.1748), Walter (b.1749), Helen (b.1754), Robert (b.1756), Janet (b.1757) and Margaret (b.1759). He is surely related to the John who was at Easter Highchesters in the 1730s (and could be the same man, if he married twice). John (18th C.) Mason in Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Armstrong in 1766, the marriage being recorded in Hawick and Hobbkirk Parishes. Their children included: Robert (b.1767); Helen (b.1770); Margaret (b.1772); Adam (b.1774); Margaret (again, b.1776); Janet (b.1778); Adam (again, b.1781); and John (b.1783). The witnesses in 1776 were William Armstrong, schoolmaster at Hobbkir (perhaps his father-in-law) and Robert. John (18th C.) resident at Easter Highchesters in 1733. He may be the same as John at Howcleuch. He is listed on the Back Row in Pigot’s 1837 directory and on the Mid Raw in 1841. By 1851 his wife was a widow living on the Kirkwynd. He married Margaret (b.1803), daughter of grocer Walter Scott. Their children included: Isabel (b.1824); Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’, b.1826), who married John Gladstone; Janet (b.1829); Mary (b.1831); Robert (b.1834); Christian (or ‘Kirsten’, b.1835); Margaret (b.1836), who probably died young; Walter (b.1838); and Sarah Scoon (b.1841). John (b.1828/9) from Langholm, he was farmer at Glednest in Teviothead. In 1861 he was farming 18 acres there, and he was still recorded there in 1868. His wife was Janet and their children included William Ellen D., Andrew, Walter and John. John (19th/20th C.) hatter, glover, hosier and shirtmaker of 8 Oliver Place. He can be seen outside his shop in a 1901 photograph. Joseph of Ninewells (1757–1838) son of John and Agnes Carre, who was only daughter of Robert Ker of Cavers Carre. His uncle was the celebrated the philosopher and historian, David. He was a Captain in the 2nd Dragoon Guards, but retired to his family estate. He was patron of Bedrule Parish in the late 18th century, presumably a right that was inherited through his mother. He died unmarried. Joseph (1777–1855) Tory M.P. for the Borders constituency in 1812, born in Montrose. He trained as a doctor before turning to politics, eventually becoming a radical, campaigning for universal suffrage and religious freedom, moving to the Whigs and shifting to a Middlesex seat. Marjory (d.c.1814) one of the ‘Tranties’ along with her sister Isabel. These 2 unmarried sisters kept a boarding house and were said to be ‘more intelligent than their neighbours in a similar humble condition of life’. She may be the ‘Margaret’, daughter of Walter and Helen Dryden, baptised in Hawick Parish in 1738. Patrick see Patrick Home. Patrick (17th C.) resident at ‘Chisholme and Widburne’ according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. He had 2 kilns there and paid tax for 3 hearths. He was probably the Patrick who served as cautioner for his brother Robert, who leased part of Borthaugh in 1690; the two were also renting part of Borthaugh in 1691 and 1692, and he was cautioner again in 1694. It seems likely that he and his brother Robert were blacksmiths. Patrick (18th C.) recorded at ‘Callendridgerigg’ (presumably Caerlenrig) in 1726 when he married Helen Scott in Cavers Parish. Other children, baptised in Cavers, who may be his include: Magdalen (b.1730); Margaret...
Hume

Robert (19th C.) listed as grocer on ‘Front Row’ in Slater’s 1852 directory. He may be the son of grocer John. Robert (19th C.) shepherd at Templehall. His daughter Mary married postman Robert Thomson. Robert (b.1828/9) from Lilliesleaf, he was a shoemaker in Denholm. In 1861 he was a lodger with John Davidson on Canon-gate. Robert (b.1834) frameworker in Hawick, son of grocer John. In 1851 he was still living with his mother on the Kirkwyn and in 1861 he was at 28 High Street. He married Isabella Elliot in 1856 and their children included: John (b.1855); Margaret (b.1856); Isabella (b.1859); Archibald (b.1861); Walter (b.1862), who became Headmaster at Drumlanrig; Robert (b.1865); Jane (b.1867); Thomas (b.1870); Janet (b.1872); and William (b.1874). Thomas (17th/18th C.) elder of Hawick Parish. In 1715 he gave in the money that had been ‘mortified’ by James Grieve (farmer at Commondies) for the poor of the Parish, particularly those from the ‘highlands’. In 1717 he was assigned the duties of collecting money from Harwood, Teindside and Commondies, suggesting that he lived in this area. Presumably the same Thomas was described in 1718 as ‘officer of the Excise in Hawick’ when he was hauled up by the Session for his ‘irregular marriage’ to Jean, daughter of Andrew Brown, wright in Kelso. The marriage was carried out by John Middleton and witnessed by other excise agents, Thomas Burden and Andrew Lithgow. Thomas (17th/18th C.) described as ‘Mr’ and ‘probationer’ in 1713 when he witnessed a baptism for John Scott, herd in Drydenburn. This presumably meant that he was a young preacher (before being ordained) working at the chapel in Teviothead. In 1714 he was ‘preacher’ when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Laidlaw, herd in Commondsie. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He married Agnes Scott and their children included: Williamina (b.1804); William (b.1806); Elizabeth (b.1808); Mary (b.1810); Isabel Aitchison (b.1812); James (b.1815); and Barbara (b.1819). He may be the resident at Henderson’s Knowe when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Thomas Arthur (19th/20th C.) step-son of letter-carrier Robert Thomson. He was an apprentice gardener at Weens, then moving to Wells, Hunthill and Wolfelee. He married Margaret Oliver, daughter of the Bedrule blacksmith, and they had 3 sons and 2 daughters. Walter (17th C.) listed as ‘broken and fled’ at Borthaugh among the ‘deficient’ on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He is

(b.1733); Mary (b.1735); Walter (b.1738); William (b.1740); John (b.1743); Adam (b.1745); and Alexander (b.1747). Patrick (18th C.) farmer in Hawick Shiel. In 1757 he was tenant there, and was found (along with other neighbouring tenant farmers) to be making ‘bakes’ at Black Grain Moss, against the explicit orders of the Town Council. As a result a group led by Bailie Robert Scott mustered in Hawick at 4 a.m. and went up to the Common, to break up the peats. He may be the same as the tenant of Todshaw. Patrick (18th C.) tenant in Todshaw. His daughter Helen was born in 1755. He is probably related to James, who farmed at Chapelhill. Robert (17th C.) leased quarter of the farm of Borthaugh in 1690, with his brother Patrick acting as cautioner. In 1691 and 1692 both he and Patrick were the farmers of 1/4 together, and in 1694 he held 1/4 himself again, this continuing until at least 1698. In 1696 his cautioner was James, who was hence surely related. He is recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls at Borthaugh: he was listed ‘with tuo kilns’, suggesting he was a smith or other artisan.

It seems likely he was blacksmith at Borthaugh. Robert (18th C.) tenant along with Walter at Chapelhill in 1725. Robert (18th C.) mason in Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: John (b.1738); Christian (b.1739); Margaret (b.1743); Agnes (b.1745); and Walter (b.1747). Robert (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Katherine Govenlock and their son William was baptised in 1759.

Robert (b.1740) son of Walter and Helen Dryden. He was a toll-keeper, living in Ashkirk and then at Elsdon in Northumberland. He married Jane Elliot (b.1743) in Hawick in 1769. Their children included: William (b.1771), baptised in Hawick; Robert (b.1774); Thomas (b.1775); James (b.1779); George (b.1783), shepherd; and Walter (b.1787). Three of his children were baptised in Ashkirk Parish and the last 2 in Elsdon. Robert (18th/19th C.) mason in Hawick. He married Elizabeth (‘Betty’) Stewart in 1793 and she died in 1797. Their children included: Mary (b.1795); and John (b.1797), grocer in the West End. Robert (d.1840) builder on the Fore Row, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He was probably related to Adam, who was a builder on Buccleuch Street at the same time. The pair both subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821, as well as mason ‘J. Hume’. He was recorded as a mason in the death register of 1840 (along with 9 others on the same day, and hence possibly in a cholera outbreak).
probably the Walter, living at Chapelhill, whose funeral is recorded in Wilton Parish in 1720. He may be the Walter, married to a Scott (forename not recorded) whose daughter Margaret was baptised in Wilton in 1694. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, recorded at Parkhill in 1713 and Mains in 1720 and 1723. These are probably all his children (baptised in Roberton): Robert (b.1709); William (b.1711); William (again, b.1713); Margaret (b.1714); John (b.1715); William (b.1720); and Beatie (b.1723). It is possible that he is the same as the Walter who married Margaret Scott in Hawick. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1707 he married Margaret (or Marjorie) Scott, who was step-daughter of Robert Thomson in Newmill. Their son Walter (b.1728) was baptised in Hawick Parish, with witnesses probably (but hard to read) the Laird of Harwood and Walter Hume. Thomas (b.1718), also baptised in Hawick Parish, may have been his son. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Hill in Robertson Parish in 1724, the marriage also being proclaimed in Ashkirk Parish. It seems likely that his wife was the same Janet Hill whose husband James had been farmer at Chapelhill. It is unclear how closely related he might have been to his wife’s first husband. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish in 1724. Note that there was another marriage of a Walter in the same Parish at almost the same time. This Walter lived in Roberton Parish, and may be the tenant in Chapelhill. Walter (17th/18th C.) rented the farm of Chapelhill along with Robert in 1725. He also acted as cautioner for James in 1735, who rented Chapelhill. He was presumably a close (but older) relative of James. Walter (18th C.) carrier at Branxholme Town. He married Helen Dryden and their children (baptised in Hawick Parish) included: Margaret (b.1738); Robert (b.1740), who probably married Jane Elliot; Isobel (b.1742); and Helen (b.1744). It may be that his daughters Margaret and Isobel were the sisters known as ‘the Tranties’. The witnesses in 1740 were blacksmiths James Dryden, elder and younger, from Newmill, who were surely related to his wife. Walter (18th C.) married Isabel Elliot in Roberton Parish in 1745. Walter (18th C.) married Isabel Wright in Kirkton Parish in 1749. Their unnamed son was baptised in 1749. Walter (18th C.) married Janet Graham in 1755, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and Roberton Parishes. Their children, baptised in William Parish, included: Walter (b.1758); and Margaret (b.1761). Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was living at Whitfield (in Wilton Parish) in 1799, when recorded as ‘Mr Walter Hume’. He married Mary Beattie in Roberton in 1796 and their children (baptised in Roberton) included: James (b.1797); Adam (b.1799); and Christian (b.1802). He could be the farmer at Woodburn in Roberton Parish according to the Horse Tax Rolls of 1789–94. Walter (b.c.1810) drover living at Chapelhill in 1841. His wife was Agnes and their children included Walter, John, James and Jane. He was surely related to James, who was farmer at Chapelhill at the same time. Walter edited ‘Fifty years’ football in Hawick, 1873–1923’ (1923). He was an early member of the committee of Hawick R.F.C. Walter (b.1862) Headmaster of Trinity School. He was son of Robert, and grandson of Mary (or Margaret) Scott, who was a daughter of grocer Walter Scott. He was also known as a singer. Hummelknowe Mill (hu-nul-nu-mil) n. former corn-mill at Hummelknowes. Thomas Scott was miller there in 1642. In 1684 the tenant, James Scott, was among the men fined for attending conventicles. Robert Elliot was miller there in 1694. James Elliot was tenant in 1700 and through the early 18th century. Robert Cairns was living there in 1715 and Robert Elliot in 1720. It was tenanted by Scotts for more than a century, the last miller being Walter Scott, who left in 1855. John Scott is recorded as tenant there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, as well as Walter Glendinning. John Scott was listed as miller there in 1852 (also referred to as ‘Humble Knowe Mill’ and other variants, it is ‘Hummelknowe Ml’ in 1642, ‘humbleknowmilne’ in 1700, ‘Hummelknow mille’ in 1715 and ‘Humbleknows miln’ in 1797; a mill is marked there on the east bank of the Slitrig on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Hummelknowes (hu-nul-nu-z) n. farm by the Slitrig just outside Hawick, reached over the Hummelknowes Bridge. It appears to have been owned by Robert Lorraine in 1428/9, when his son Patrick resigned the lands in favour of his niece Janet Rutherford. It was burned in 1547/8 by the English, when referred to it as ‘Hoble Knowes’. There were Croziers there in 1569 when a bond of security was signed by ‘Clame Crosar in Hammilknowis’ and 8 other family members. In 1574 this was among the lands that James Gledstains of Cocklaw served as surety for, with Clem Crozier having been his tenant there. It was owned by the Gledstains of that Ilk in 1643.

It was among the farms owned by the Gledstains family on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when William Glasgow was tenant and 3 other householders were listed there. James Elliot was there in 1700. Thomas Miller was living there in 1717 and Adam Hobkirk was shepherd there in 1723. It was held by Gledstains of that Ilk until 1734, when it passed to Scott of Burnhead. Robert Elliot was living there in 1735 and Robert Stavert in 1737. William Scott of Burnhead was owner in 1788 (as also reported in about 1811), when it was valued at £254. William Scott Watson was owner in about 1874. George Jobson was farmer there in the mid-to-late 19th century. It was also formerly the location for a corn-mill. The 234 m high hill above is the site a hill-fort (also ‘Humble Knowes’ and often two words ‘Hummel Knowes’); spelled ‘Hummelknows’ on some Ordnance Survey maps; the origin is probably Old English ‘hamel cnoll’, meaning ‘abrupt, steep, rounded hills’; the name first appears as ‘Homylknolle’ in 1428/9 and is ‘homylknollis’ in 1494/5, ‘Hummilknowis’ in 1569, ‘Humilknowis’ in 1574, ‘Humbleknows’ in 1643, ‘Humelknous’ in 1694, ‘Humbleknow’ in 1700 ‘Hummilknoues’ in 1704, ‘Humbleknowes’ in 1718, ‘Humbleknows’ in 1748 and 1753, transcribed as ‘Huntliknows’ in 1788 and ‘Hummelknows’ in 1811; it is mis-spelled ‘Humilknowis’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map, but is ‘Humilknowes’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Hummelknows’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Hummelknowes Brig (hu-nul-nu-z-brig) n. bridge over the Slitrig, just off the B6399 leading to Ormiston etc. It is sometimes known as ‘Lover’s Lane Brig’ or ‘Greenbraeheids Brig’. It was opened by Princess Christian in 1869, and hence formerly referred to as the ‘Princess Christian Bridge’.

Hummelknoweshaugh (hu-nul-nu-z-hawch) n. farmstead on the left-hand side of the B6399 Newcastleton Road opposite the Flex road-end. The area of land between the main road and the river was formerly known as ‘Whitlaw Haugh’. The farm was also known as ‘Hankumshaugh’. Mason Robert Scott lived there in 1841 and Walter Paterson was recorded there in 1861 and 1868 (also written ‘Hummelknoweshaughe’ and ‘Humbleknowshaugh’B).

Hundalee (hun-du-lee) n. farm about a mile south of Jedburgh, off the A68. It was long the seat of the Rutherford of Hundalee. There was a corn mill there at one time. In about the 1490s a group of Kers were indicted for oppressing the tenants, ‘casting thame out of their housis and landis’. It was listed in 1538 among lands in Jedforest that had passed to the Crown, but the lands were ‘claimed by the laird thereof’; at that time it was valued at £10. There were schoolmasters recorded there in the early 17th century. The nearby ‘scaur’ on the Jed once held an ancient cave, which collapsed some time around 1880 (the origin is probably from Old English ‘hund hoh leah’, meaning ‘hound-hill-wood’; it first occurs as ‘Hundwaley’ in the 1450 return for the Barony of Hawick; it is ‘Hundole’ in 1464, ‘Hundwelley’ in 1464/5, ‘hundolee’ in 1494/5, ‘Hundole’ and ‘Hindole’ in 1502, ‘Hinduelle’ in 1504, ‘Hundolee’ in 1525 and 1526, ‘Hundolee’ and ‘Hundoley’ in 1538, ‘Hundoley’ in 1541, ‘Hundeley’ in 1551, ‘Hundelie’ in 1549, 1553/4, ‘Hundoley’ in 1553, ‘Hundelayle’ in 1560, ‘Hundele’ in 1564 and ‘Hundole’ and ‘Hundoley’ in 1569; it is ‘Hundalee’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map.

the Hunder Stair see the Hunder Steps

the Hunder Steps (thu-hun-dur-steps) n. also known as the ‘Hundred Steps’ (or ‘Stairs’), and previously as ‘Jacob's Ladder’. It is a stairway leading from the top of Wilton Path down to Bath Street. It is indicated in Wood’s 1824 map as a path, still as a path in 1850, as steps in 1859 and in 1867, and well established by the 1898 Ordnance Survey map. It never had 100 steps, the number varying with time, but currently being about 95, although there are still arguments about this! It was closed in 2002 following safety concerns, but reopened later that year after refurbishment. Although most of the surrounding buildings have been demolished, the stairs themselves survive, now starting from the back of the Sainsbury’s car park. However, the ownership of the land has been a matter of debate. The coat of arms in the wall at the foot of the steps was rescued from the Buccleuch Memorial (also called the 'Hunner Steps' or 'Stairs').

hunderth (hun-durth) adj., n. hundredth – 'The 1514 Memorial was commissioned ti merk the fowre-hunderth anniversary o the incident that took place the year efter the battle o Flodden' [IWL], 'What cood be mairi appropriate on that form's hunderth birthday' [BW1978] (also hundert).

Hundlecleugh (hun-dal-klooog) n. former name for lands in Cavers Parish. In 1716, quarter of these lands, called Curriescleugh, were bought by Walter Scott (uncle of Walter of Crumhaugh) from Walter Scott of West Port. The precise location of the lands is unclear.

hundreth (hun-drith) n., arch. a hundred – '...the soume of twa hundreth meriks of vsuale mone of Scotland ...' [SB1470], '...writtin at Hawik the penult day of Januar, in the yir of God ane thousand fyf hundreth thre score ane yeir' [RBA1561], 'First, anent the scool wad be ane hundreth pounds allowed for the maintaining of a scool in this large toune' [PR1627], '...their releiffe of two hundreth merks payd out by them as the pryce for building of the steiple loft ...' [BR1685], 'Summa totalis is Foure hundred and Fyve bolls of victwall and Foure hunderwecht and twenty Eight keans' [Buc1690], hundreths – '...the true liberties and privileges of the sd. burgh enjoyed for some hundreth of years by-gane ...' [BR1706].

Hunewic (hun-wik) n. mentioned in a charter granted by the English King John to Henry Lovel in 1208. This is probably 'Honeywick' near Castle Cary in Somerset and not a variant of Hawick.

Hungerflat (hun-ur-flaw') n. lands in Liddesdale, listed in a rental roll of around 1376. It is recorded as 'Hungeryflat' and with a value of 40 pence (G. Watson suggests that the name came from poor land with soil that required much manure).
Hunsdon

Hunsdon (hunz-din) n. Lord Hunsdon was the title of Henry Carey.

Hunt (hun') n. Henry (19th C.) came to Hawick from England as a stockmakingter. He later took over the licensed grocers in O'Connell Street which had formerly been Thomas Bell's. He married Agnes Waugh in 1845 and had at least one child, Henry David.

Hunter (hun'-ur) n. Adam 'Ade' (16th C.) brother of Matthew, who was 'John Crosyer kynsman'. They were listed, along with another brother Pate, and Matthew's son Martin, in a 1544 list of local men who gave allegiance to Henry VIII. Perhaps the same man was 'Eddie Hunter', servant to Robert Elliot (probably the Laird of Redheugh), listed in 1541 among Scotsmen accused of burning the corn of William Carnaby at Halton. Adam T. (1879/80–1906) son of Robert, he was a traveller for Wilson & Glenny and killed in a train accident near Arbroath. Agnes Sophia (1777/8–1856) daughter of Dr. Henry Hunter of London, who wrote 'Sacred Biography, Translations of Lavater' and 'St. Pierre's Studies of Nature'. She was niece of Rev. Dr. Charters of Wilton. She published 'Miscellany' in Hawick in 1811. This was a small volume of essays on education and related other topics. Several of the articles were contributed by her uncle, Dr. Charters. She also wrote an account of the life of her uncle, included in James Wilson's 'Hawick and its Old Memories'. She became Mrs. Semple and had a son who was a doctor in London. Alexander (16th C.) tenant of the farm of Justicelie according to the rental roll of Jedforest in 1541. William and John were joint tenants. Alexander (1882–1952) son of William and Margaret Paxton. He drove one of Hawick's first taxis. He married Catherine Elliot (1877–1974), who was from Liddesdale. Their children were: William Alexander ('Bill', 1906–92); James ('Jim', 1907–43); George (1909–89); John ('Jack', b.1911); Percival Archibald ('Percy', b.1913); and Walter (b.1914). Andrew 'Dand' (16th C.) one of the tenants of Sir Walter Scott of Howparstley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for them in Hawick, that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Hannah Laing (possibly daughter of Walter) and their children included George (b.1770/1), born at Appletreeth and baptised in Wilton. Thomas Blyth and James Dryden were witnesses at the baptism. Andrew William (1810–60) son of George with his first wife Margaret Laidlaw. He was the first person to be baptised in the new Relief Kirk congregation in Hawick, this happening on the Haugh, since the church did not yet have its own premises. He married Elizabeth MacLean in Jedburgh in 1831 and their children included: Elizabeth (1832–1914); Margaret (1834–1908); Jane (1837–71); George (1839–1913); Andrew (1841–42); Andrew (1843–1921); Thomas (1845–1942); William Andrew (1848–1913); Agnes (1851–1937); and Jessie (1853–1926). He lived in Preston for a while, where some of his children were born. He emigrated to Canada in 1842, one of his sons dying on the voyage. The family settled in Beverley Township near Hamilton, Ontario. The area was later known as 'Hunters Corners'. He died in a horrific sawmill accident. His son Thomas started an insurance brokerage business, which still exists. Other descendants are still farming in the Hunters Corners area. Andrew Galloway (c.1809–82) from Denholm, he trained as a chemist and wrote some articles for the Encyclopædia. He founded the Glasgow business A.G. Hunter & Co., who were 'Hat and Forage cap Manufacturers to the Queen, Prince consort and Royal Family'. He married Isabella, daughter of James Wilson (from Hawick) and their children included: Thomas C. (b.1833); Andrew George (b.1838); Sir William Wilson Hunter (b.1840); and John James (b.1842). He may be the Andrew, son of George, who was born in Cavers Parish in 1802. He died at Deneburn in Denholm. Charles (b.1806/7) from Lochmaben, he was a frame-worker in Hawick. For many years he was President of the Chartist Association, formed in Hawick in 1838. He married to Anne Carswell (or Kersel), and their children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included: Janet (b.1831); Margaret (b.1833); James (b.1836); John (b.c.1838); and Feargus O'Connor (b.c.1840), presumably named after the Irish Chartist leader. In 1841 and 1851 the family were living on the Loan and in 1861 were at No. 26 (probably now 24). Col. Edgar (d.1807) son of Dr. William and grandson of Rev. William of Lilliesleaf. He already held Midlem Mill by 1788 and also lands in Lilliesleaf Parish, specifically Chapel (valued at £390), 'W. Scot's acres' (valued at £200), Porteous Croft (valued at £78), Childknow (formerly part of Raperlaw, owned by James Middlemas, valued at £82 12 2), part of Greenhouse (valued at £16 3s), Union Hall (valued at £121 10s), additional lands that had formerly belonged to the feuars of Lilliesleaf.
catered the dinner arranged at the top of Ruberslaw where the Lairds of Cavers and Wells were to settle a boundary issue. A storm began and the party had to decamp the tent and retire to a barn, and when the cart jolted on the way down he is said to have uttered ‘The deil’s in the man’ about the carter, the closest he ever came to cursing! He was recorded at the Fleece Inn in Pigot’s directories of 1825/6 and 1837. He took over from James Kennedy (of the Ordnance Arms) as superintendent of the weigh-house in Hawick, and served until the weigh-house was closed. He was one of the founders of the Relief (Allars) Kirk, and early meetings of the church Managers took place on his premises. He was recorded on the High Street in 1841. It was said that old parishioners of Cavers used to frequent his inn in Hawick. He married Agnes Laidlaw, who died in 1821. Their only surviving child was Andrew William (1810–50), who was a millwright, living in Jedburgh, then Preston for a couple of years, before emigrating to Canada in 1842. He secondly married Agnes, daughter of Thomas Laidlaw and Janet Davidson and she died in 1864. Their children included: Thomas Laidlaw (1823–97), who was an engineer in Gateshead; Margaret (b.1826), who may have married a Turnbull; George (b.1826), probably a twin of Margaret, who moved to Edinburgh; Janet Davidson (1828), married James Dunlop and went to London; Hannah Laing (b.1830), who married Samuel Barnes; and Agnes (b.1833), who died in infancy. He later moved to the Roond Close, where he died. In 1851 he is listed at the round close as ‘Formerly a Tailor (a pauper)’. He was buried at St. Mary’s.

Rev. George (1829–1881) born in Earlston, son of James and Margaret Waugh, he was educated at Earlston and Edinburgh University. He was licensed by Earlston Presbytery in 1852 and became assistant at Linton and at St. Mary’s in Hawick. He was ordained as minister of Kirkton in 1857 and remained until his death. He married Ann Elizabeth Favey. George (1840/1–1916) from Minto Parish, he was son of farm-worker Andrew and Helen. He became teacher at Ringford near Kirkcudbright. He wrote an article on the history of the Parish of Tongland. His wife was Euphemia, and their children included John and Andrew. James (15th C.) recorded as ‘Jacobo Huntar’ in 1453 when he witnessed a sasine at Milsington. Several of the other witnesses were local men, but it is unclear where he was from. James (15th/16th C.) recorded among the Borders men who were pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. Steven is listed right after him and so probably a close relative.

(15th/16th C.) recorded among the Borders men who were pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. Steven is listed right after him and so probably a close relative.
James (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His wife was Rachel Lockie. Their children included William (b.1803). James (1821–92) eldest son of Thomas ‘Kittlin Soup’. He was cashier at Watterson’s, Dangerfield Mills and later a commission agent. He was also a manager of East Bank Church. He married Helen Young, who died in 1897, aged 71. Their children were: Thomas, who married a Coutts of Selkirk; Robert, mill manager and local poet; John Young, photographer; Beatrice, who married Thomas Hunter; Margaret D., who married Alexander Bonthorn Patrick; and Jane, who married printer William Clegg Shaw.

James Young (1877–1937) son of Robert, he became Headmaster of Cellardyke School in Fife and should not be confused with his uncle John Young Hunter. He was born at 4 Brougham Place and educated at Buckleuch School. He attended the Free Church Training College in Edinburgh and in 1899 became an assistant teacher at Drumlanrig School. He graduated M.A. from Edinburgh University in 1900 and held positions in Dalbeattie and St. Andrews. He became headmaster at Lundin Links and then at Cellardyke. He wrote a biographical sketch of his father for the Transactions. He wrote several poems of a local flavour, including ‘Hawick Lasses – 1514’ (set to music much later by David Gibb), ‘The Heart’s Hame of the Callant’, ‘June Fever’, ‘The Ca’-Knowe’, ‘Follow the Flag!’ and ‘Sing me a Song, a Hawick Song’. He wrote ‘Heart’s Hame o’ the Callant’ was written for the Colour Bussing of 1899, and recited it himself. For many years, until about a decade before his death, he contributed a Hawick-based poem to the Hawick Express every Common Riding, including ‘Hawick Lasses – 1514’. He died in Crieff in his sleep and is buried in the Western Cemetery, St. Andrews. Jess nee Johnstone (19th/20th C.) one of the 5 sisters who lived to be over 80 and whose photo hangs in the Museum. She stayed at the Toll-house above the Dunk, and was called ‘Jess o the Toll’. John (16th C.) tenant of the farm of Justiceceee according to the rental roll of Jedforest in 1541. William and Alexander were joint tenants. John (17th C.) rented quarter of the farm of Wiltonburn from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1690; this was along with his brother Thomas. He is also listed as resident at Wiltonburn on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Appletreehall in 1764. In 1755 in Minto Parish he married Ann Whillans (or ‘Whollance’), probably daughter of William Whillans and Janet Stothart. Their children included: George (b.1757), possibly the mason of Packhouses; Jean (b.1759); Margaret (b.1762); Rachel (b.1764), who married Peter Kyle; and William (b.1767). The witnesses in 1764 were James dryden and Alexander Smith. He was probably related to Walter (married in Wilton in 1767) and Andrew, resident of Appletreehall. John (18th C.) groom at Cavers in 1786, when he was working for George Douglas. Probably the same John was a house servant at Midshiel in 1788, working for Archibald Douglas. John (d.bef. 1837) proprietor of the Black Bull Inn at the Sandbed, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He is probably the John from Hawick who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He married Mary Oliver, who was from Kirkton Parish. Their children included: Francis (b.1813); Mary (b.1816); Margaret (b.1821), who married Provost Robert Milligan; and John (b.c.1823). In 1837 his wife Mary was listed as vintner at the Black Bull, and so he was presumably deceased; in 1841 she was running a pub on the Round Close, and she was listed as a former innkeeper there on the 1851 census. He was said to be son of a mason from Peathouses, perhaps George. John (1824–1905) cabinet-maker of John Hunter & Sons. He was said by James Haining to be son of a mason who came from the North and lived at Peatihouses; however, this may be confusion with John of the Black Bull. About 1879 he had 4 villas built on land at Wilton Hill, and lived in one himself, ‘Olive Bank’. Hunter Terrace there was named after his son Robert. He was associated with the Hawick Baa game in its early years. He was said to have brought together his brother-in-law, Robert Richardson, with Robert Noble, to form the partnership Richardson, Noble & Co. He married Esther, daughter of spinner John Richardson. Their sons were Robert and George (manager at Abbots Mill, Galashiels). John Young ‘J.Y.’ (1850–1903) photographer, born in Hawick, son of commission agent James and brother of poet Robert. He trained in photography with John Aitken in the Arcade. He started his own business on North Bridge Street in the 1870s, then moved to 59 High Street in 1888. Following his father’s death in 1893 he also became a commission agent. He was the first Chairman of the Common Riding Ceremonial Committee from 1887, with the Committee being established at a meeting in his photographic studio in April of that year. In those early days the Chairman was probably the most important member of the committee. He was also Honorary Secretary for some years, until James Edgar was appointed in 1900. Through his efforts (and those of a few others) the Common Riding revamped its traditional ceremonies and dramatically increased in popularity. He also acted as judge at the Common Riding Races. He was personally in charge of arrangements for the Colour Bussing for about 15 years and resigned from the Ceremonial Committee in 1895. He was also heavily involved with running the Saxhorn Band, and with other musical associations in the town. In addition he was an active member of the Mutual Improvement Society, the Parliamentary Debating Society, the East Bank Literary Society, the Ornithological Society and Lodge 111. He was one of the originators of the Con Club, and also helped start the working men’s flower shows. He followed cricket and keenly played bowls, being Hawick & Wilton President. Although he became lame, he was seen around town in later years on his tricycle (and is probably in the c.1890 photograph of the ‘Coffin End’). He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. (Note that the poems signed ‘James Y. Hunter’ were written by his nephew). Martin (16th C.) son of Matthew, who was ‘John Crosyer kynsman’. They were listed, along with two brothers of Matthew, Ade and Pate, in a 1544 list of local men who gave allegiance to Henry VIII. They may have been the same Hunter family connected with Wiltonburn. Mary nee Oliver (b.1781/2) born in Kirkton Parish, she married innkeeper John. Her husband was proprietor of the Black Bull at the Sandbed. However, she was listed as proprietor herself in Pigot’s 1837 directory, and so he was presumably decease. In 1841 she was running a pub on the Round Close, and living with her son John and daughter Margaret. The pub could have been the Royal Oak. She was still alive in 1851. Matthew (16th C.) cousin of John Crozier who is listed in 1541 among Scotsmen accused of burning the corn of William Carnaby at Halton. Matthew, son of John Crozier was also mentioned, although the precise family relationship is unclear. Presumably the same man was ‘Matthew Hunter John Crosyer kynsman’ listed in 1544 among Crozier and others who swore allegiance to Henry VIII; his brothers Ade and Pate, and son Martin, are also mentioned. He may be the same as the resident of Wiltonburn in 1549. Matthew (16th C.) resident of Wiltonburn, recorded in 1549 as ‘Matho Hunter’ among a list of tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme who complained about the Kers raiding their farms. He was probably related to his neighbour, Patrick. He may be the same man as the cousin of John Crozier. Patrick (16th C.) tenant at Wilton Green resident, recorded in 1549 when tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme complained about their farms being burned by a group of Englishmen and Kers in the previous year. It seems likely he was related to Matthew, who lived at Wiltonburn at the same time. He could be the ‘Patte’, brother of Matthew, ‘John Crosyer kynsman’, who was listed among local men who swore allegiance to Henry VIII in 1544; another brother listed was Ade, as well as Matthew’s son Martin. Robert (d.1816) resident of Hawick. In 1788 he married Mary Welsh, who died in 1823, aged 72. His death is registered in Hawick. Robert (1819–53) grocer at 16 Howegate, son of Thomas ‘Kittlin Soup’. He was born at Chesters, but lived almost all his life in Hawick. In 1841 he was grocer and spirit dealer on the Mid Raw and in 1851 was on the Howegate. In 1852 he is listed as a grocer on Silver Street. He married Jane Fleming, who died in 1883, aged 63. Their only child was Sir Thomas (b.1850), Edinburgh Town Clerk. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Robert (1854–1905) writer of poems such as ‘An Auld Man’s Common Riding’, ‘Hawick Common Riding’, ‘Oor Ain Kaillyaird’ (sent to Robert Murray in Canada), and ‘The Teri Test’, as well as the words for the song ‘Oor Bonnie Border Toon’. Born in Hawick, he was son of James and brother of J.Y. and Thomas. On leaving school he worked for William Watson’s as a power loom tuner, and spent some time working in Banff and Carlisle. He then became a cashier at Wilson & Glenny’s and was managed there for 25 years. He was an ardent Temperance supporter, elder of East Bank Church, Sunday School teacher and President of the local Band of Hope. He was also Masonic Bard (for Lodge 111) and won second prize in a poetry competition for the Burns statue dedication in Dumfries. He married Margaret Douglas Turnbull, who died in 1919, aged 63. Their son James Young also composed local poetry, and wrote a biographical sketch of his father for the Archaeological Society Transactions. He died at 13 Beaconsfield Terrace and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery, where his refurbished gravestone was unveiled at a special ceremony in 2005. Robert R. (1856–1938) son of cabinet-maker John, he moved into the hosiery trade, setting up Hunter & Co., Abbostford Mills, Galashiels, along with his brother George and partner Thomas Owens. He later established Inverleith, Hawick. Hunter Terrace was named after him. Steven (15th/16th C.) listed as ‘Stevin Hunter’ in 1526 among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned for an attack on the Earl of Arran. He is listed right after James, who was presumably related. Thomas (16th C.) listed as ‘Hountar’ in 1534 when he was a witness at Hassendean Kirk for the sealing of a letter of reversion when Gavin Elliot sold the lands of Nether Galalaw to William Scott. It is unclear if he was from Hawick, Hassendean or Selkirk (in whose Protocol Books the record appeared). Thomas (17th C.) servant to Walter Earl of Buccleuch. He was listed in the deceased Earl’s inventory in 1633, when he was owed for his annual fee. It is unclear if he was a servant at Branxholme or in Edinburgh or elsewhere Thomas (17th C.) brother of John. In 1690 the pair were joint tenants of part of Wiltonburn farm. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Shortreed and their children included: John (b.1697); Robert (b.1701); ‘Betrech’ (b.1703); James (b.1706); Thomas (b.1709); and Thomas (again, b.1713). Perhaps the same Thomas was living at Harden in 1716 when his son Walter was baptised in Roberton Parish. Thomas (b.1777/8) from Glenholm in Peeblesshire, he was a farm worker at Branxholme. In 1841 he was a servant at Branxholme Park and in 1851 he was a house servant at Branxholme Woodfoot. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Janet and Grizel (or Grace). Thomas ‘Kittlin Soup’ (b.1789) born in Ancrum Parish, son of John. He was a farm labourer around Hawick and then farmer himself. He had several fields up the Loan and also kept cows. In 1815 he married Margaret Dodds, and they lived at Alton, then Haysike (where they were in 1841 and 1851), as well as Chesters, before moving to Drumlanrig Place (by 1861). Their children were: John (b.1817), who went to Australia; Robert (b.1819), grocer; James, commission agent (1821–92); Margaret (b.1823), who married Alexander Purdom; Mary (b.1825), who married tailor Robert Martin; Agnes (b.1828), who married clogger John Jackson; and Jeanie (b.1830), whose husband Elliot Cowan carried on the farming activities of his father-in-law. He was grandfather of local poet Robert and photographer J.Y. Thomas (b.1799/1800) from Earlston, he was a hand-loom weaver in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on the Round Close, and in 1851 at Slitrig Cottage. His wife was Mary, and their children included Magdalen, Elizabeth, Margaret, John and Thomas. Sir Thomas (1850–1919) native of Hawick, son of Robert the grocer and cousin of Robert the poet and J.Y. He was educated for a while by J.A.H. Murray, and trained under Thomas Purdom, the Hawick Town Clerk. He received a first prize in Scots Law at Edinburgh University, became W.S and Notary Public in 1893 and in 1895 became Town Clerk of Edinburgh. He was also Deputy Lieutenant for the county, and heavily involved in the affairs of his local church. Provost William Scott Nichol worked in his offices for a time and he was Callants’ Club guest in 1913. Thomas (19th/20th C.) eldest son of James, brother of Robert (the local poet) and John Young. He was hosier manufacturer with Hunter & Young of Commercial Road. He married a Miss Coutts of Selkirk. Their sons were James Young, who worked with the Royal Bank of Scotland in Edinburgh and William Coutts, who farmed near Ancrum and married Isabella, daughter of George Davidson. Thomas (19th/20th C.) commission agent, known for his geniality, who lived at 9 Carnarvon Street. He married Beatrice Hunter, daughter of commission agent James. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Johnson in 1767. William (16th C.) recorded as ‘William Huntare’ among a list of the occupiers of the lands of Newton in Bedrule in 1531. William (16th C.) recorded as tenant in Mervinswood in a rental roll of 1541. Elizabeth Hunter was one of the tenants at Mervinslaw and hence probably related. William (16th C.) tenant of the farm of Justicelieu according to the rental roll of Jedforest in 1541. Alexander and John were joint tenants, but his name occurs first, suggesting he may have been the senior one. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) tenant of Gavin of Elliot of Falnash in 1569. Elliot acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. His name is recorded as ‘Will Hunter’. Rev. William (1657–1736) minister at Lilliesleaf. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1693, was licensed by Kelso Presbytery in 1694 and was ordained at Lilliesleaf in 1695. He was a friend of Thomas Boston. He was termed one of the ‘twelve apostles’ for being one of a group of a dozen ministers who gave a petition to the General Assembly in 1721 against an Act that had condemned ‘the Marrow of Modern Divinity’. He was referred to as ‘of Union Hall’, since he acquired lands there.

Hunter Holes

Hunter Holes (hunt’-ur-holz) n. area near the head of the Dirthope Burn in the upper Borthwick valley, on the north-eastern side of Crib Law. Now part of Craik Forest, a bike trail goes through the area.

Hunter an Young’s (hunt’-ur-an-yungz) n. hosiery manufacturing firm of Thomas Hunter and William Young, operating on Commercial Road from about 1885 until around 1914. The building was then occupied by Hawick Woollen Manufacturing Co. Ltd. 1922–25 and Wilglen Hosiery Ltd. from 1925 until the 1930s. The building was L-shaped, and the main part was used by the Hawick Scouts as their headquarters. The part used by the Scouts was demolished in 2000, with the part at the back left standing.

Huniwar (hunt’-ur-holz) n.

(part of the Linthill estate in Lilliesleaf Parish). It was probably because of him that a dissenting petition, presented to the General Assembly in 1732, was signed at Raperlaw. He married Alison, daughter of James Hogg, minister of Carnock, and later married Margaret Potts. His children included: Alison, who married Adam Milne, minister of Melrose; William, a doctor, who acquired the Linthill estate and passed it to his son Col. Edgar Hunter; and Margaret of Courtthill, who married Thomas Riddell of Camieston, 3rd son of the 4th Baronet of Riddell. Dr. William (d.1781) son of Rev. William. He inherited the farm of Linthill in Lilliesleaf Parish. These lands included those separately called Union Hall, Ryechester and Quartersides, as well as part of Greenhouse. He paid the window tax there in 1748. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. Part of the lands of Child-Know were sold by him to Robert Dickson of Huntlaw. In 1780 he was approved to be added to the voters’ roll for Roxburghshire; in 1788 he is stated to be about to be enrolled on the list of Roxburghshire voters, but was already deceased, with his heir living abroad at that time. He married Margaret Edgar (who died in 1792) and their children included: Col. Edgar, who inherited Linthill; William; and 2 daughters. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His wife was Janet Wait and their children included: Walter (b.1784); and Agnes (b.1786). William (1836–1920) hedger at Linthill in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was son of George (an agricultural labourer in Melrose Parish) and Alison Cockburn and was born in Lauder Parish. He later moved to Hawick, where he was a park-keeper and lived at 14 Linden Terrace. He married Margaret Paxton, daughter of a cabinet-maker in Nairn. Their children were: Margaret (b.1869); Alison Isabella (b.1873); William (1874–95); Mary Jane (‘Jean’, b.1877); and Alexander (1882–1952), who married Catherine Elliot. Sir William Wilson (1840–1900) possibly born in Hawick, he was son of Andrew G. and Isabella Wilson and grandson of William Wilson, manufacturer. He was educated in Glasgow, graduating from the University in 1860. He led the open competition for the Indian Civil Service in 1861 and went out to Bengal in 1862. He was author of several books on the history of India, beginning with ‘The Annals of Rural Bengal’ (1868), which ran to 6 editions. He also wrote ‘A Comparative Dictionary of the Non-Aryan Languages of India and High Asia’ (1868) and ‘Orissa’ (1872). He wrote an influential government report on Indian Muslims in 1871 and was selected to lead a statistical survey of the whole of India, ‘The Imperial Gazeteer’, on which he worked for 12 years. Additionally the report of the Commission in Education, over which he presided, revolutionised education in India. He served as Vice-Chancellor of the University of Calcutta in 1886 and retired from active service in 1887 (when he was knighted). He then lived in Edinburgh and Oxford, where he devoted himself to working on a history of India, and contributed a weekly article on Indian affairs for the Times. He wrote several other books, including short biographies on ‘The Rulers of India’ (1875), ‘Bombay, 1885 to 1890’ (1892), ‘The Old Missionary’ (1895) and ‘The Thackerays in India’ (1897). He received honorary degrees from Glasgow, Oxford and Cambridge. In 1863 he married Jessie Murray and they had 2 sons. He died of influenza, having only managed to publish one volume of his planned history (with one more following posthumously). He was buried in Cumnor, near Oxford. William John ‘Big Billy’ (1934–2016) Hawick Scotland rugby player, playing as a lock. He played rugby at the High School, then the P.S.A. and Linden. He first played for Hawick R.F.C. in 1952 and eventually became team Captain. He was a regular member of the South of Scotland side and received the first of his 7 Scotland caps in 1964. He also played for the Barbarians. He worked at the skinyards and was manager at Hawick Abbothoir, before setting up his own boarding and breeding kennels. He also played golf and showed prize-winning canaries. He married Helen and had children Alan, Derek and Stuart (formerly written ‘Huntar’ and ‘Huntare’).

the Hunter Lounge (thu-hun'-ur-lownj) n. part of the Burns Club, named after Tom Hunter who was Secretary for 19 years.

Hunter’s Hill (hun'-ur-hil) n. hill in Liddesdale, to the east of Castleton. It reaches over 290 m and has Queen o’ Fairies’ Hole on its south-west side.

Hunter’s Pool (hun'-ur-pool) n. popular name for a pool somewhere to the south of Newcastleton – ‘...Laigh doun I louted on my knees, An’ preed the Hunter’s pool’ [ECB].

the Hunter’s Sweepstakes (thu-hun'-ur-sweep-stäks) n. race formerly held on both days at the Common Riding. It was only for horses that rode in one of the local hunts. It is recorded in 1875 over 2 miles on the Friday, with another race over the same distance on the Saturday.

Huntershill (hun'-urz-hil) n. former name for lands in the Barony of Winnington, once owned by the Eliotts of Stobs. It is recorded at the end of the 17th century, but its precise location is uncertain. It is probably the half merkland of ‘Huntleighass’ listed among properties inherited by Sir William Eliott of Stobs in 1692.

Huntford (hun'-ford) n. farm on the A68, just north of the Carter Bar and junction with the A6088. The are signs of an old stock enclosure there.

Hunthill (hun'-hil) n. farm just to the south-east of Jedburgh, formerly a seat of the Ruthford family. It was formerly also known as ‘Scraesburgh’ or Scraesburgh. It seems that the land held by the Douglases of Cavers in the 17th century was a different place, even although it had the same name. It was one of the places where dragoons were posted in about 1676, so that they could scour the local countryside for people attending illegal field conventicles. The house dates from around 1800, replacing an earlier tower-house. The entrance gate has lions rampant on the piers. It was owned by the Bells of Hunthill and then the Meins of Hunthill in the 19th century – ‘Boonjeddart, Hundlie, and Hunthill, Thir three they laid weil on at last’[CPM].

Hunthill (hun'-hil) n. former farm in Cavers Parish, although probably the same as lands adjacent to Hunthill near Jedburgh (just in a different parish for historical reasons). Some of the lands there (or perhaps just the superiority) belonged to the Douglases of Cavers in the 17th century. It is recorded in a document of 1581 relating to Douglas of Crook. It was owned by the Gledstains of Dod in the 17th century, and seems likely to correspond to the ‘Gledstane’s Lands’ that were once part of the Barony of Scraesburgh (which was an old name for Hunthill), mentioned as properties of the Gledstains in the 15th and 16th centuries. In 1676 Abraham Gledstain of Hunthill was served heir to these lands of his grandfather Walter Gledstains of Dod; at that point they were described being in the Abbcy of Jedburgh and Parish of Cavers. There is an inventory from 1775 in the papers of the Douglases of Cavers. In 1788 it was owned by the Duke of Buccleuch and valued at £50. ‘Hunthill, formerly Scott of Horselyhill’s’ is recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls among the properties of George Douglas of Cavers, when it was valued at £50. Perhaps the same Hunthill (or part of it) was included in a valuation of the lands of Eliott of Stobs in 1779 and 1811.

Hunthill (hun'-hil) n. former name for lands that were part of Acreknowe farm. In 1788 the ‘Remainder of Acreknow, Hunthill and Abbot’s-acre’ were valued at £151 2s 11d. On the 1811 Land Tax Rolls the ‘Remainder of Acre-know, Hunthill, and Abbot-acre’ were owned by Sir William Eliott of Stobs and still valued at £151. It is possible this is the same as part of the lands of Hunthill near Jedburgh.

huntigowk (hun'-ee-gowk, hunt-ee-gowk, hunt-thu-gowk) n. an April Fool trick, fool’s errand, to ‘make someone huntigowk’ is to play an April Fool’s trick on them – ‘First an’ saicont o’ April, Hunt the gowk another mile’ [GW] (additionally spelled ‘hunty gowk’, hunt-the-gowk, ‘hunty gowk’, etc.; also hundie-gowk).

Huntingdon (hun-ti-din) n. Alexander (12th/13th C.) granted the land called ‘Schotteschailes’ (probably Satchells) in Lilliesleaf Parish in the period 1202-07. The grant was by the Bishop of Glasgow for his homage and service, including that of his father.

Huntknow (hun'-now) n. former farm that was once part of Bonjedward estate, listed in 1707. In 1678 it is recorded in Bedrule Parish, owned by Andrew Ker of Wells and valued at £66 13s 4d (plus teinds). It was still recorded this way in 1788 (and continued in 1811), when owned by William Elliot of Wells.

Huntlaw (hun'-law, hunt-law) n. farm on the B6359, just west of Hassendean and about 5 miles north of Hawick. In about the 1180s one ploughgate of land here was granted by King William to Paisley Priory; the land had previously been held by Richard the Chaplain and Walter Stewart, son of Alan. This land was still confirmed to Paisley Priory by James II in 1451/2. In 1643 the lands were listed as part of Hassendean Parish, valued at £66 13s 4d and owned by ‘Martin . . . of Huntlaw’, with the surname not listed. A 10-shilling land there was owned by Rev. Alexander Forrest, minister of Hassendean, and inherited by his son William in 1665. Alexander Forrest paid the land tax on £66 13s 4d there in 1678. Adam Inglis was living there in 1682. In 1690 Huntlaw became part of Minto Parish, after Hassendean was suppressed. James Wilson was recorded there in 1694. It was formerly one of the homes of the Dicksons. In 1811 it was owned by the heirs of Archibald Dickson and valued at £66 13s 4d. Thomas Drawhill was farmer there in the 1860s (also ‘Houndlaw’, ‘Huntla’ and other variants in earlier documents).

Huntlaw (’hun’-law) n. Ann (18th C.) housemaid at Cavers in 1789 when she was working for George Douglas. Her name appears on the female servant roll as ‘Huntla’.

Hunt Law (’hun’-law) n. small hill to the west of Commonside farm, off the right-hand side of the A7 (travelling from Hawick). It reaches a height of 296 m. Running from here to Dryden, to the south, is a linear earthwork, stretching about $\frac{3}{4}$ of a mile. It seems similar to the nearby Cattrail. It was probably a boundary ditch for lands lying between the Back and Dryden Burns. It is possible that this area is associated with the lands of ‘Huntlieassoun’, which are listed among those in the Barony of Cavers owned by the Eliotts of Stobs at the end of the 17th century.

Huntly (’hunt-lee) n. area west of Woll Rig, consisting of Huntly Rig, Outer Huntly (also called Over Huntly), Inner Huntly, etc. Robert ‘de Huntelegh’ signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296, and may have been associated. The farm there was owned by the King from at least 1456. In 1478 it was leased to John, son of Sir Thomas Turnbull. William Turnbull was recorded there in 1494/5. Lands there remained Crown property until at least 1541. Michael Scott of Aikwood was tenant of half the lands there in 1541, the other half being occupied by Walter Scott in Synton, together paying £22. It was burned by the English in 1543, and at that time was a property of the Laird of Buccleuch. Part of the lands were held by the Countess of Bothwell in 1581/2 when a band of Nixons and others stole 6 cows from there. It was an estate possessed by the Scotts in the 16th century and earlier part of the 17th century. Scott of Satchells says that Outer Huntly was held by Robert Scott of Lanhope for his service to the house of Buccleuch. It was valued at £22 when included among lands whose superiority was held by the Earl of Home. John Scott of Huntly succeeded his father James in 1638, and Walter Scott of Huntly is recorded in 1844. The lands were owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1663 and when ‘Outer Huntlie’ was surveyed in 1718. However part was held by the Homes when inherited by 3 heirs portioners in 1693. In 1802 Outer Huntly was valued at £313 and Inner Huntly at £14, when they were part of the Buccleuch estates; Hugh Scott of Harden also paid tax on £126 for his part of Inner Huntly. Robert Grieve was there in the 1860s and 70s – ‘Warn Dryhope, and Catslack, Howford, and Huntlee free, Whitslade, Todrigg, and Sallenside, the morn to wait on me’ [WSB] (it is recorded in the late 12th century as ‘Huntlie’ and later often spelled ‘Huntlee’ or ‘Huntli’; it is ‘Huntlee’ in 1456, ‘Huntle’ in 1471, ‘Huntlee’ in 1477 and 1541, ‘Huntl’ in 1581/2, ‘Huntley’ and ‘Hundley’ in 1608, ‘Huntile’ in 1621 and ‘Huntleys’ in 1663; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Huntlij’).

Huntly (’hunt-lee) n. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Little Cote who was listed in the 1694 Horse Tax rolls. He may be the Adam whose children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included Isabel (b.1695), Margaret (b.1700), Margaret (again, b.1702) and Marion (b.1705). Isobel (b.1708) and Bessie (b.1710) may also be his children. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1715 and 1723 he was living atOrmiston. He probably married Marion Haddon in 1713. His children included Jane (b.1714), Adam (b.1715), Isobel (b.1717), Walter (b.1720) and William (b.1723). Adam (18th C.) recorded in 1746 when he was paid ‘for going two rounds to the country in quest of baggage horses to the military’. This was during a period where soldiers were billeted in Hawick. He was probably a carter, and likely an ancestor of the later carter Adam. Adam ‘Yeddie’ (18th/19th C.) carter whose cart doubled as the Steward’s stand at the Common Riding Races. James (17th C.) listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is probably the resident of the east-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Whitriggs in 1720. He probably married Bessie Nichol in Cavers in 1706. Their children included: Isabel (b.1708); Robert (b.1710); William Hunwick (hunt-lee-burn) n. house southwest of Melrose, which was called Toffield until bought and improved by Sir Walter Scott in 1817. Part of the estate was used to build the Borders General Hospital in the late 1980s.

Huntlyburn (hunt-lee-hill) n. former farm in the Rule valley, once part of the Wells estate. It may have been the same as ‘Rulewood’. In 1619 John Stewart of Traquair accused a large group of Turnbulls of cutting down a large quantity of timber from his lands there, taking away 24 horseloads. John Murray is recorded as farmer there in 1797 (also written ‘Hundly’, ‘Huntlea’, ‘Huntley’, ‘Huntlie’ and variants).

Hunwick (huntigowk) n. village in County Durham, about 10 miles southwest of Durham.

hur (hur- chin) n., arch. a hedgehog – ‘...in sic a fear that he fand every hair on his head
hurdies rise like the bises of a hurcheon'[LHTB], ‘The hurcheon raxed his scory chafts, And gept wi' gurning joye'[JTe], ‘But were a’ the hale world to stick To their hurchin hides, I ween The liberal soul wad be richer far Wi' a heart baith kind an' clean'[FL] (from Middle English).

hurdles (hur-deez) n., pl., poet. the buttocks, haunches – ‘Fegs, my lads, I daurna tell her That fair Emma is the cause, Lest she should come owre my hurdies For transgressin' sae the laws!' [TCh], ‘Sae Wull sat crooched wi' his hurdies chilled, His heid wi' the black forebodin' filled ...' [WL], ‘Auld Warlock Hermitage There on the haugh. hurkle-backit (hur-kul-baw-kee', -ki') adj., arch. having hunched shoulders, hunch-baked.

Hurbles (hur-kul-bus) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the 1541 rental roll along with the other lands of ‘Cleirlandis, Robsteid, Thomscotsteid, Cranswat, Gusbank’, with tenants William Elliot, David Elliot, Bartholomew Nixon and Ninnian Elliot, valued at 5 merks. They were presumably a set of adjacent small steadings, but their location is uncertain.

Hurkle Rig (hur-kul-rig) n. ridge just north of Redfordgreen, reaching a height of 371 m.

Hurredwunter Knowe (hur-kul-wun-tur-now) n. hill in south-eastern Liddesdale, at the southern end of Larriston Fells and reaching a height of 442 m. There may be a connection with the lands of ‘Hurbles’ (but the name is surely related to being cold and bleak in the winter).

hurl (hu-rul) v. to roll along, wheel, go for a ride – ‘can ee hurl yer sister’s pram ower ti yer auntie’s?’, n. a ride in a vehicle – ‘A took ma grannie oot for a hurl in the car’, ‘Yince an A’d wun there, A thocht, A might mebbies cood geet a hurl the lenth o Hawick’[ECS], ‘...ye might have gotten a hurl a’ the road tae the verrn yett'[RM], ‘Mr. Wm. Easton said it would be very shabby in the Council to expect the Race Committee to pay for their hurl'[HNe], fall of material or water – ‘...And they were buried forty feet Aneath that awesome hurl'[HSR].

hut (hu’) pp. hit – ‘it looks like a bomb’s hut eet’, ‘hei got hut over the heid’, n. a hit (cf. the alternative hat and the past participle form hutten).

the Hut (thu-hu’) n. building at St. Leonards farm, where the Cornet and his supporters are entertained on the Thursday night, the Thursday morning and the Friday morning. There are also less formal Huts on the other mornings of Common Riding week, but the Friday morning Hut is the main event. On each occasion there is a series of songs and toasts and good-natured male camaraderie. Tickets for the Friday event (available in limited numbers to non-riders) are always highly sought after. After the Hut there is the traditional singing of ‘Teribus’ in front of the farmhouse. The Friday morning ‘Hut’ is where the Curds and Cream repast occurs, ordered from a local farmhouse at the Thursday evening Chase the week before. This is recorded as being held at Whitchesters in 1846, Newnill on Slitrig in 1856, Crumhaughhill in 1860, the ‘Herd’s House’ 1872–76, Pilmuir 1882, St. Leonard’s 1883–1900, Pilmuir 1901–11 and at St. Leonards from 1912 until now. In earlier times a marquee was erected at St. Leonard’s. The building itself was constructed at St. Leonard’s in 1924 (following a wet Common Riding the previous year, when the tent was blown away!) and extended in 1964. Exactly when the full schedule of entertainment became a feature of these events is unclear, but now tickets are a highly sought after commodity. It usual for many people to listen outside to the entertainment – ‘It’s a’ happenin again, the great occasion is here but it a’ sterted this morning wi that ‘tremendous grand Hut’’ [GM], ‘The world hez mony wonderful venues, the Hollywood Bowl, the Sydney Opera House, the Albert Hall in London, the Volunteer Hall in Galashiels but nane o thum can touch the Hut’ [IWL], ‘And as long as St. Leonard’s Hut shall stand That trusty valour through the land Shall tell the story proud and grand Of Hawick on the Border’ [IWL], ‘Unlike other farm sheds, the Hut is not for agricultural purposes’[BEL].

hutch (huch) n., arch. an embankment built to hinder water from washing away the soil (noted by J. Jamieson).

Hutcher’s Riverside (hu-churz-ri-vur-sud) n. former name for a small piece of land in Minto Parish. It was listed in 1779, with a value of £1 16s 6d, and still listed in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. In 1780 it was said to belong to Thomas Kennedy (although also said to be included in the lands of Deanfoot lenerated to Robert Trotter), with a rent of 10s.

Hutchin Brae (hu-chin-brä) n. name given to an area to the east of old Cavers house, and west of West Middle, on a side road leading to the south.

Hutchison (hu-chee-sin) n. Thomas (17th C.) carrier on the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. Thomas Oliver ‘Tom’ (1931–98) educated at Hawick High School, he was in the Border Schoolboys team in 1949. He studied science at St. Andrews University. He joined I.C.I., becoming a manager of the plastics division, and joining the Board of Directors in 1985. He was President of the Association of Plastics Manufacturers in Europe 1980–82, Deputy-Governor of the Bank of Scotland, Deputy Chairman of Cadbury Schweppes and on several other boards. His wife was Frances and they had 3 sons. He lived in the London area and had a house in Normandy, but stayed close to his Scottish roots (also ‘Hutchisone’).

huther (hu-thur) v., arch. to heap together, over-clothe – ‘The bairn’s fair hudder’t wi’ claes’ [GW] (also spelled ‘hudder’; cf. huudder).

Hutlerburn (hu-lur-burn) n. farm on the south side of the Ettrick valley about a mile east of Et trickbridge (probably what is marked ‘Hontyr’ on Blaen’s 1654 map).

hutten (hu-in) pp. hit – ‘hei was hutten wi a muckle stane’, ‘...for thou hest hutten a’ mine enimes apon the cheikbane’ [HSR].

Hutton (hu-in) n. Adam (17th C.) resident at Sundhope in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. His surname was written ‘Houtite’, and must have been closely related to Robert, who was also listed in the same place. It is unclear if the modern equivalent of his name was ‘Hutton’, ‘Howitson’, ‘Whutson’, or something else. Adam (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Veitch in 1761 and they had twins Isobel and Elizabeth (b.1762). The witnesses were Walter Scott, Commo sside and Thomas Bunyan, Teindside. Alasdair, O.B.E. (??– ) Conservative Member of the European Parliament for South of Scotland 1979–89. He was on the Scottish Borders Council since 2002 for Kelso Central, where he has been Convener. He is also known as a broadcaster and has been the narrator for the Edinburgh Military Tattoo for many years. He reads about John Buchan on ‘Sounds of the Borders’ (2012). Alexander (17th C.) listed as resident at Outerside on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John, who was also listed there, was surely related. Alexander (17th/18th C.) tenant in Slaidhills. He married Christian Simpson in 1706 and their children included: Andrew (b.1707); and Helen (b.1709). Note that he is (presumably incorrectly) ‘Adam’ in one baptismal record. Perhaps the same Alexander had a child Jean baptised in Wilton Parish in 1694. George (18th/19th C.) resident at ‘Apple-tree-Hall’ in 1811 when he was on the subscription list for Andrew Scott’s book of poetry, printed in Kelso. Rev. George (d.c.1868) born at Camieston in Howden Parish. His parents were members of the Secession Kirk in Lilliesleaf. He was educated at Edinburgh University and then taught at several schools. He entered the Divinity Hall of the Secession Church in 1826 and in 1831 he was inducted as the 3rd minister at the Anti-Burgher Kirk of Linlithgow, East. He retired in 1863 because of ill-health and moved to Greenock for the last 5 years of his life. He married twice, having 3 sons and 1 daughter. Henry (18th/19th C.) farmer at Kershope, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. His surname is listed as ‘Hutson’. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Scott and their children included: John (b.1645); and Helen (b.1653). James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1680 he witnessed a baptism for John Grieve in Eilrig. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1775 he married Janet Black and their children included: James (b.1776); James (again, 1777–81); Thomas (1779–81); and Janet (b.1781), who probably married Adam Kersel in Kirkton. John (17th C.) listed as resident at Outerside on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Alexander, who was also listed there, was surely related. John (b.1819/20) from Ewes, he was a master clogger at 4 Howegate in 1861. His wife was Agnes and they has a son Alexander; his wife’s children from a previous marriage were Jane and Robertann Laurie. John Elliot ‘Elliot’ (1942/3– ) son of butcher Billy. He was Cornet in 1968, riding his thoroughbred ‘Shish Kebab’. In 2018 he was Jubilee Cornet. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Sundhope in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. His name was written ‘Houiton’, and he was surely related to Adam, who was also listed there. Robert ‘Hobby Hutton’ (18th C.) travelling pedlar who lived at Sundhope in the Hermitage valley. As described in ‘ Beauties of the Border’, he was an eccentric and irascible character, who would board with others when travelling, but refuse to stay in the same house as any other traveller, and would also fly into a rage when offered potatoes. He could be the Robert recorded in Sundhope in 1748. Robert (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at ‘Borthbrae parkhead’ in 1757. His children included Helen (b.1755), Henry (b.1757) and Thomas (b.1759). Robert (18th/19th C.) labourer at Peel in Castleton Parish. He is listed among heads of households in 1835 and 1836. He is probably the shepherd at Peel called Hutton from whom William Oliver of Langraw collected many Border ballads. William (16th C.) resident of Borthaugh, recorded in 1549 when tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme complained about their farms being burned by a group of Englishmen and Kers in the previous year. He could be the same as ‘Willie’ who is recorded in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, signed in Hawick in 1574; he was left ‘threttie or fourtie pundis, as it sall pleis to his said spous and vther freindis, and he to serve his wyf befor ony vtheris’. William (d.c.1683) shepherd in ‘Tuishope’ in 1683 when his will was recorder in Peebles Commissariat. This could have been Twislehope. William (b.1794/5) shepherd at Thorlieshope in 1861. He married his housekeeper Jemima Scott in 1863 (formerly written ‘Hutoun’).

Hymers (hl-murz) n. Alexander (17th C.) resident of Easter Burnfoot according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Edward (b.1802/3) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was farmer at Ashtrees in Southdean Parish in the 1860s. He was also at Bilerwell in the 1850s. In 1861 he was farming 272 acres at Ashtrees, and employing 7 people. His wife was Margaret, and their children included Helen (who married Robert Cavers) and probably Mary (who married Andrew Ormiston). His name was recorded as ‘Hindmarsh’ in an 1868 directory. William (18th/19th C.) from St. John Lee in Northumberland, he moved to Hobkirk Parish and lived for a while at Limekilnedge and later moved to Jedburgh. His first wife was Hannah and his second wife was Eleanor Plummer, from Southdean Parish. Their children included: Mary (b.1800); Edward (b.1802), the 1st son; Robert (b.1803); Anthony (b.1805); William (b.1808), 4th son; and Jane (b.1810).

Hyndhaughheid (hindo-hawch-heed, -hew-) n. Hyndhaughhead, former fortified house in Southdean Parish in the upper Jed valley, roughly between Falside and Whiteside. It was situated on the south side of the Jed Water, and there are still clear remains there. The tower was 6.2 m by 4.3 m and had an enclosure to the south-east. There are also signs of a smaller building to the east, and another larger one to the north (presumably part of the farm). To the north-east of the tower are also the remains of an old kiln. It was one of the towers burned by Dacre’s men in late 1513, specifically a force including Nicholas Harrington, Nicholas Ridley, Thomas Middleton and George Skelton. It was valued at 22 shillings in the Exchequer Rolls of 1538 and 1539. Margaret Oliver and her son Gilbert were there in 1541, paying 25s yearly. Dand and Adam Oliver from there were among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII in 1544 (but may have switched sides at the Battle of Acrum Moor). This may explain why it was burned (again) in 1544, by a forced led by ‘Mr. Clefforth and Besforth’. David Oliver of ‘Hyndweche’ is recorded in 1557 and David ‘in Hynhauchheid’ in 1597 was one of the Oliver chiefs. James Oliver was the tenant there in 1669, and at the time of the Hearth Tax (1690s) it was occupied by Lady Shaw (although who she might be is unclear). There were also Kers there in the late 17th century. The farm appears to have been abandoned by the mid-19th century. An area to the west contained rig and furrow, as well as old stock enclosures and sheepfolds, but all have been destroyed by cultivation. Note that Slack’s Tower and Clesslee Tower were quite close by (it is ‘Hyndhalghhehede’ in 1513, ‘Hyndhauchheid’ in 1538, ‘Hyndhauchheid’ in 1538, ‘Hynddrawghthe’ in 1541, ‘Hindawgheid’ and ‘Hyndrawghthe’ in 1544, ‘Hynochheid’ in 1669 and ‘Hyndhaughead’ in 1694; it is marked as ‘Hyndheuchheid’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, but on the wrong side of the Jed, and is ‘Hindhaughead’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Hyndhope (hin-dup, hind-höp) n. farm in the Ettrick valley roughly opposite Singlie, with ‘Old Hyndhope’ further uphill to the south. It was one of the 3 steadings of Redford held by the Crown in the 5th century and feued to Alexander, Lord Home in 1510. In 1541 Walter Scott in Haining claimed the tenancy, paying £15 13s 4d yearly. 1644 Katherine Kendell, widow of John Young, brought a case before parliament to force Walter Scott of Huntly to eject him from the lands and provide her with the duties of this farm. It became the property of Rev. Alexander Cunningham about the 1660s, and was sold to James Mercer of Scotsbank around the 1720s. Thomas Elliot farmed there in the mid-19th century and Gideon Scott in the 1860s (also spelled ‘Hindhope’, it is ‘Hyndhop’ in 1510 and ‘Hindhop’ in 1542; it is marked ‘Hyndhoop’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, along with the burn, ‘Hyndhoopo B.’ and is ‘Hindehope’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; there is another farm of the same name in Oxnam Parish).

Hyndhope (hin-dup, hind-höp) n. former lands in the Barony of Plenderleith, Oxnam Parish. They belonged to Andrew of Rule, passing through his 4 co-heiresses to Andrew Ker of Altonburn in 1544/5. The Davidsions were tenant farmers here in the 18th and 19th centuries including James, ‘Dandie Dimmont’. There were Halls there in the 18th century. William Oliver was farmer there in the early 19th century and Thomas Elliot later in the 19th century (easily confused with the farm of the same name in the Ettrick valley; written ‘Hindhope’ on modern maps).

Hyndlee (hind-lee) n. farm and hamlet on the ‘Note o the Gate’ road, south of Wolfelee, in the headwaters of the Rule valley. The lands there were an old possession of the Douglases. As part of Jedforest, the farm passed from Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, to the Crown in about 1537, with Walter Scott of Buccleuch being accused of occupying the lands. In 1541 the farm was valued at 25s, with half tenanted by George Turnbull in Billerwell and half by Adam Rutherford in Grange. This could one of the farms tenanted by John Oliver according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. A supposed encounter there between an old shepherd and some of the fairy folk is recounted in ‘The local historian’s table book’ in 1844. The tenant there in the late 18th and early 19th centuries, James Davidson, was partly the original for Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Dandie Dimmont’. Robert Laidlaw was there in at least 1785–88 and Thomas 1789–91. Andrew Scott was there in 1821. Later the farmer was David Pringle of Torquhan, succeeded in 1889 by Mr. Thornton. The stream that forms the extreme south-eastern portion of the Rule valley is Hyndlee Burn. A cairn called the Hare Cairn once stood near the shepherd’s cottage by the Wheel Causeway (note the pronunciation stresses the first syllable; also spelled ‘Hindlee’, it is already ‘Hyndlee’ in 1538, is ‘Hynile’ in 1539 and 1544 and ‘hyndla’ in 1694; it is ‘Hindlie’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Hyslope

Hyslope (hiz-lup) n. Alexander (17th C.) town treasurer at the end of the 17th century (a variant spelling of ‘Hislop’).

hyrin (hi-rin) n., arch. payment received for being hired – ‘Syne he’ll gether his hirin’ and gae Alang on his roun’ . . . ’[WL] (also written ‘hire’ as in English; cf. hirin fair).

hyuck (hu-yuk) v. to throw, chuck, toss – ‘hyuck eet ower here when ee’re din, wull ee?’; n. a throw (a variant of yuck; see also chuckie).

hyucker (huy-kur) n. a big one, particularly a stone – ‘it was a hyucker o a stane’.

Ida (I-du) n. (b.c.517–559) ruler of the kingdom of Bernicia, formally founding it in 547 (although it had existed earlier). He was thus the earliest recorded monarch of a kingdom that probably included the Hawick area. He married Bearnoch and their sons Giappa, Adda, Æthelric, Thedoric, Frithuwald and Hussa were all supposed kings afterwards (although some may have been grandchildren or nephews).

Ida (I-del) n. (12th/13th C.) Chaplain of Lilliesleaf Kirk, recorded as ‘Idelo’ in about 1201, when he witnessed a charter granting lands to Melrose Abbey.

Idel (ee-del) n. (12th/13th C.) priest of Lilliesleaf Kirk, recorded in about 1201. His name is written ‘Idello’.

I Like Auld Hawick (I-lik-awld-hlk) n. song written by Frank Hogg with music by Mrs. Euphemia Dumbreck, being one of the few Hawick songs well suited to the female voice. The words were written in 1867 for the Hawick Literary Society magazine. The music was written probably around 1876, perhaps in response to a request in the Hawick Express in 1875 when reprinting the words. It is the only one of the older Hawick songs with the tune (or words) written by a woman. The song was probably first performed in public at a farewell dinner by Hogg himself in 1879, and first sung at the Colour Bussing by R. Paterson in 1887. It is the only poetical work of Hogg’s that is known. The full poem contained 7 verses, but today only the first, second and last verses are usually sung. The tune was rearranged by Adam Grant around 1930, with the publication dedicated to ex-Provost James Renwick.

I Like Auld Hawick the Best (I-lik-awld-hlk-thu-best) n. song with words and music by Tom Ker, arranged by Adam Grant (although originally credited to ‘M. Rosenberg’). Grant considered this to be his best musical arrangement of a Hawick song. It was first sung at the 1900 Colour Bussing by Robert T. Paterson and at 23 other Colour Bussings before WWII. It has a different chorus for each verse, often confusing the audience. The words may have been influenced by Jeffrey’s ‘Mary of Argyle’. Ker also wrote a second version of this song, which is never sung. For the last decades of the 20th century and the first decade of the 21st this was regularly performed by Viv Sharp.

the Ill Week (thu-il-week) n. period immediately after the death of Elizabeth I of England in 1603, when there was much looting and burning throughout the Borders. It is also sometimes referred to as the ‘Busy Week’. There was a belief that until the new monarch was proclaimed, the rule of law was suspended, and hence families of the Border (particularly the west marches) determined to settle old scores. Raids were of such an intensity for several days that the period was given its name. There were serious reprisals by King James afterwards, particularly against the Grahams, but also Armstrongs, Croziers, Elliots, Irvings, etc.

the Image Gairden (thu-i-meej-gär-din) n. former name for a private school and its gardens. It was situated in the Langlands/Sunnyhill area, and can be seen on the 1846 painting of the Common Riding Races. It may have been the same building that was also known as ‘Wilton Cottage’. The school was run by Agnes, daughter of Wilton Schoolmaster James Turnbull and her mother, Margaret, and was presumably a school for girls. The name came from the statuettes and carvings in the school grounds. The land there may have previously been owned by ‘Auld Cash’, and then his assistant Francis Ballantyne – ‘The ‘Image Garden’ wi’ some parks. Were soon our decent, honest Clerk’s’ [RDW], ‘Ladylaw, the F.C. Manse and the Image Garden ...’ [V&M].

However, it had many difficulties and disappeared entirely in 1813, although it effectively led to the Congregational and Baptist Kirks in Hawick. Charles Gray accepted Baptist principles (like his patrons the Haldane brothers), leading to most of his congregation abandoning him. He subsequently left Hawick, since the number of Baptists was too small to support him. However, some carried on, to form the Hawick Baptist Church later, while others continued to worship as Independents, later becoming the Congregational Kirk. The Independent Kirk was still recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory, but with no minister listed. In 1839 it was described that there were only 18 members, who met in a school-room. In Slater’s 1852 directory Rev. William Munro is listed for the Independent Chapel on Melgund Place, separate from the Congregational Chapel on O’Connell Street.

He was Acting Father in 1964 and President of the Callants’ and Mosstroopers’ Clubs, but will always be remembered for his contributions to Hawick music. He had piano lessons as a child and organ lessons from George Smith (organist at St.
Cuthbert’s). He was a church organist and choirmaster at St. Margaret’s Kirk from the age of 18, and continued when it merged with Wilton South about 4 years later, remaining until 1959. In that year he became organist for St. George’s West, and moved to the Old Parish in 1961 and in 1969 started a brief period at Trinity, finally moving to St. Mary’s Kirk in 1970. He composed the music for ‘We’ll Follow oor Cornet’, ‘The Callant’, ‘Auld Hawick, My Dreams’, ‘Auld Hawick where I was Born’ and ‘Borthwick Water’ and made new arrangements for many more songs. His work on the 1957 compilation ‘The Hawick Songs’, containing many revised accompaniments and several changes of key, established the versions of most of the popular songs as we know them today. He also wrote songs for other Border town’s festivals. He was accompanist at Common Riding functions for a couple of decades from 1970, was the driving force behind the Callants Club records, and wrote ‘Notes and Comments on the Songs of Hawick’, published from his notes in 1992. He was regular pianist for the Callants’, Mosstroopers’ and 1514 Clubs. For the 1514 Club he instigated the ‘Hawick Sings’ concerts and wrote the music for the Club’s song. He died in the Cottage Hospital and is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Alexander (18th C.) wright in Hawick. His unnamed child died in 1798. He could be the Alexander, married to Margaret Elder, whose son Alexander was baptised in Hawick in 1791, with witnesses James Hume and John Elder (although the entry is hard to read). Alexander (1822/3-51) tenant in Blackburn, son of James. He is recorded at Blackburn in 1851, farming 11 arable acres and 1800 acres of moor, with 3 labourers on the farm. His son Alexander died in St. Boswell’s in 1902, aged 50. They are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. He also had daughters Isabella (b.c.1846) and Jane (b.c.1850). Alexander (19th C.) Hawick resident. He married Agnes Scott. Their children included: Walter Hall (b.1873); George Scott (b.1874), painter in Leicester; Alexander, painter-decorator in Hawick; and William Scott, local watercolour artist. Alexander ‘Alex’ (d.1961) brother of W.S.A. and George. He had a picture-framing business, and also became a house decorator, based at 10 High Street and then Burlington House, North Bridge Street. His brother William (W.S.A.) also worked for the business. George Scott (1874–1952) son of Alexander and Agnes Scott. He was brother of Alexander and W.S.A. After studying at the Royal College of Art in London and became a painter and lithographer in Leicester. He was Principal of the Leicester College of Art. He had works exhibited at the Royal Academy and the Royal Scottish Academy. He painted a view of Haggishaa, as well as ‘Goldielands and the Teviot from Over-hall’, ‘Scotch Fir near Wilton Dean’ and ‘Sunrise near Scarborough’, which are in the Museum. J. (18th/19th C.) resident of Bowanhill in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. James (17th C.) resident of Cavers who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (1705–94) born in Ewesdale, he was tenant farmer in Millholm in Castleton Parish. When the Duke of Buccleuch took over Millholm he was moved to be tenant of Blackburn. He married Janet Anderson, who died in 1760, aged 50. He secondly married Agnes Brydon, who died in 1807, aged 71. Their children included: James (b.1762), who took over as tenant of Blackburn; Elizabeth (b.1765), who married Archibald Scott; Janet (b.1767), who married Thomas Murray; William (b.1769), who married Elizabeth Ballantyne; Alexander (b.1771), who married Margaret McLaren; Agnes Brydon (b.1773); and John (b.1781), who married Isabella Ballantyne. He is buried at Ettleton, next to ‘Inglis’ families of Newcastleton. James (18th/19th C.) carrier, operating between Hawick and Berwick, according to Pigot’s 1825 directory. James (1760/1-1845) farmer at Blackburn, to the north-west of Newcastleton. He is recorded there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls and still there in 1841. He married Mary Elliot, who died in 1816, aged 55. He secondly married Isabella (or ‘Bella’) Oliver, who died in 1872, aged 87. They are buried in Ettleton Cemetery, along with 4 of his children, who died in infancy or were stillborn. His son Alexander (b.1822/3) succeeded as farmer at Blackburn, and he also had a daughter Janet (b.c.1827). John (18th/19th C.) baker on the Howegate, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. His unnamed child died in 1808. Mrs. S.A. local artist who made a coloured sketch of a print by James Dalgleish ‘High Street Hawick 1839’. William (b.1815/6) born in Lyne Parish, Peeblesshire, he was a shepherd. In 1841 he was at Foulage, Peeblesshire, but in 1851 and 1861 was shepherd at Whaupshaw in the Borthwick valley. Later he may have been shepherd at Priesthaugh. His wife was Agnes Fleming, from Drumelzier. Their children included: James (b.1842); Thomas (b.c.1844); Catherine (b.c.1847); Christian (b.c.1839); Agnes (b.c.1856), who probably married William Bell, who farmed at Langraw; and Jane (b.c.1858).
William Scott Andison ‘W.S.A.’ (c.1880–c.1950) local artist, brother of Alexander and George. His parents were Alexander and Agnes Scott. His paintings are usually signed ‘W.S.A.I.’ or sometimes ‘W.I.’ He was an apprentice with Francis Scott, painter and decorator at 26 High Street, later moving to work in his brother Alex’s business. Tom Scott was a major influence on him as a young artist, and one can see similarities in their watercolour styles. He painted many scenes of long gone parts of Hawick, including a picture of the ‘Auld Mid Raw’, about 1880, which is in the Museum, inside of which was found a ‘secret’ painting of Needle Street. He made a well-known sketch of St. Mary’s from the Kirkstyle in 1909 and the Museum also has ‘The End of the Wood’. He had 23 paintings exhibited at the Royal Scottish Academy. He also worked as a photographer, based on the High Street with his brother Alex and then at Burlington House, 25 North Bridge Street. A bachelor all his days, he lived at 9 Lothian Street, and died at a hospital in Melrose (see also Inglis).

Ingleside (ing-gul-sid) n. villa built on Buccleuch Road around 1903 for Robert L. MacTaggart, designed by J.P. Alison. It is a grade C listed building.

Inglis (ing-ulz -gulz) n. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Thorbrand and their children included John (b.1642), Janet (b.1644), William (b.1646) and Janet (again, b.1649). His surname is recorded as ‘Inglish’. Adam (17th C.) listed among the deficient of Hassendean Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was at Wester Grundistone, ‘Adam Inglis there out of the shire’. He could be the Adam ‘in huntla’ (presumably Huntlaw), married to Margaret Minto, whose daughter Margaret was baptised in Robertson Parish in 1682, with witnesses Walter Knox and Thomas Wilkie. Alexander (15th C.) from the Manor family, he must have still held some lands near Branholme. In 1461 the lands of ‘Kirktone and Toftis’ in the Lordship of Branholme were confirmed to his daughter and heir Katherine, wife of ‘Arnou Gourlau’. He may be the same Alexander ‘de Tarvate’ who witnessed a document for the Douglases in 1457 and who witnessed a charter in 1475/6. Alexander (15th C.) proposed as Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1471, after the resignation of Patrick Hume. However, he appears not to have taken up the office. It is possible he is the same Alexander who became Dean of Dunkeld in 1477 and Archdeacon of St. Andrews in 1480.
unclear whether he served Ashkirk in the period 1679–85, when the previous Presbyterian minister, Robert Cunningham was reinstated. In any case he was moved to the Parsonage of Glasgow in 1685. He became Rector of Glasgow University in 1686, but had to flee at the Revolution in 1689. In 1694 he became Rector of Killybegs and Raphoe in Donegal, Ireland. David (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1790 he married Marion Stavert. Their children (baptised in Yarrow Parish) included: James (b.1790); Margaret (b.1792); and Agnes (b.1795). Francis (b.1804/5–83) son of William and Elizabeth Ballantyne. He was a grocer in Newcastleton, listed in 1837 and 1852. In the 1851 census he is recorded as a labourer, at about 9 North Hermitage Street. His wife was Janet Scott and their children included: William; Jane (b.1830), who married Robert Lunn; Eliza; Andrew; and Archibald. George (15th C.) appointed one of the procurators for Thomas Armstrong of Mangerton in 1482 when he resigned Mangerton to his superior in order for these lands to pass to David Scott of Branxholme. His name is recorded as ‘Georgium Inglis’. Harold ‘Harry’ (17th C.) servant of Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane. In 1623 he compile an inventory of the titles and deeds in the Thirlestane charter chest. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Laidlaw and their children included Janet (b.1694). James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Woodburn in 1731 when his daughter Helen was baptised. He is probably the James who married Helen Beattie in Roberton in 1730. James (1723–1806) schoolmaster in Hawick, son of Walter and Margaret Wilson, he was born in Hawick. He was father of Town Clerk James, local prankster ‘Wat’ and Hawick’s postmistress, Joanna. He was Hawick Parish Schoolmaster for a long period. He was master during the flood of 1767, when the school on Slitrig Bank was washed away. In fact he was teacher at ‘the English Schuil’ from 1756 until his death, a period of about 50 years. Apparently before his death and in several years following, his ex-pupils would meet for dinner at the Cross Keys Inn to celebrate his birthday. Complaints about his low salary were responded to with an increase in 1768. He is recorded as serving as postmaster in 1772 and also in 1789, so he must have held this position for at least that period. He also served as Session Clerk, Precentor and Reader for the Parish, as well as Heritor’s Clerk. In 1768 he witnessed a baptism for writer (and Town Clerk) John Gledstains (who was his brother-in-law), when he is recorded as ‘English Schoolmaster’; in the same year Gledstains and surgeon James Wilson witnessed a baptism for him. He was witness for baptisms of 2 children of John Goodfellow and Janet Deans in 1784 and 1786 and for William Jackson and Jamet Miller in 1788 and 1791. He is probably the Postmaster who witnessed a baptism for Town Clerk James (his son) in 1792. He married Joan (or Joanna) Gledstains in 1757 and she died in 1795. Their children included: James (b.1757); James (again, b.1759), ‘Town Clerk; Elizabeth (b.1760); Walter (b.1762); Joanna (b.1766), post-mistress; Agnes (b.1768); and John (b.1770), who was a baker. James (1759–c.1820s) son of James and Joanna Gledstains, he was nephew of Town Clerk John Gledstains and was Town Clerk himself 1790–1810. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784) and is probably the James from Hawick who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He is probably the writer in Hawick who paid the Horse Tax in 1789–97 and the James listed among local men who contributed money for the war against France around 1799. He may also be the James who was Ensign in the Hawick Military Association (volunteers). He was recorded as ‘Town Clk’ in 1792 when one of his children was baptised in Hawick. He married Helen Bunyan in 1792 and their children included: Betty (b.1792); James (b.1794); Joanna (b.1795); and Christian (b.1799). The witnesses in 1792 were Thomas Bunyan, farmer at Teindside, and Postmaster James (probably his father). Although it has been stated that he died in 1810, this was only the year he ceased to be Town Clerk. He was certainly alive in 1814 when there was a court case regarding a document he had drawn up for a shepherd (whose wife had apparently been compelled to sign, although she could not write her own name). He is surely also the ‘Ingles Jas.’ listed as a writer and notary on the High Street in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory (probably drawn up a year or 2 earlier). His ledgers covering 1781–97 are in the National Archives of Scotland. James (18th/19th C.) farmer on the High Street, probably at No. 26 in 1841. He married Ann Stewart and their children included Elizabeth (b.1827), William, Ann, Margaret, Janet and Jane. He could be the James ‘Jnn., Mealdealer’ who was on the 1817 short-list for Cornet; in which case he may be the James, son of James and Helen Bunyan, born in Hawick in 1794. James (18th/19th C.) carrier listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He ran between Hawick...

and Berwick once a week. James (b.1790/1) spinner from Selkirk, he lived at Appletreehall. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835–41. He married Margaret Thorburn. Their children included: John Thorburn (b.1821); Margaret (b.1823); William Thorburn (b.1826); Alexander (b.1838), who probably died young; Thomas Thorburn (b.1831); Andrew (b.1835); and Andrew (again, b.1838). James (1793/4–1876) labourer in Newcastleton. In 1861 he was on South Hermitage Square. He married Helen Robson, who died in 1873, aged 74. Their children included: Adam (d.1829), Walter (d.1841), Betty (d.1844) and Frances (d.1846), who all died young; James (1824/5–53); and Francis (b.c.1847). They are buried at Ettleton. He may be the James recorded as grocer in Newcastleton in 1835–40 and then labourer in 1841; he was a grocer and spirit dealer in Newcastleton in Pigot’s 1837 directory, along with Francis who was also a grocer. James (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He probably had a local connection and could have been related to Thomas, who also subscribed. James (1802/3–95) mason in Newcastleton, son of John and Isobel Ballantine. In 1841 he was living at about 5 South Hermitage Street and in 1851 and 1861 was a ‘Stone Dyke Builder’ on South Hermitage Street. In 1825 he married Isobel (d.1892), daughter of Adam Glendinning. Their children included Elizabeth (1825–1908); Isabella (b.1827); Caroline (b.1829); John (b.1831); Margaret (1833–1921), who married John Scott; Adam (b.1835); Francis (1837–1922); William (b.1839); Alexander (Sansy, 1841–1917); Thomas (1843–74), who died in East India; Charlotte (b.1845); Robert (1847–1913); and James (b.1851), who married Isabel Edgar. They are buried in Ettleton. James (b.1816/7) from Ancrum, he was a joiner in Hawick. In 1851 he was living on the Back Row. In 1861 he was listed as a journeyman cabinet-maker at Myrselawgreen. His wife was Mary and their children included Elizabeth, John, Robert, James T. and Andrew. James (b.c.1820) spinner, living at the Crescent in Hawick. He was listed in 1841 among heads of households for Wilton Kirk. He was probably eldest son of James and Margaret Thorburn. James (19th C.) miller at Spittal-on-Rule in the 1860s. James (1842–88) son of James, who was shepherd at Whaupshaw up the Borthwick. He worked as a shepherd and later as a cattle dealer, dairymen and butcher. In 1868 in Teviothead Parish he married Eliza (b.1847), daughter of shepherd James Elliot and Mary Nichol. Their children were: Mary Jane (b.1869); William (b.1870); Agnes (b.1873); James (b.1876); John (b.1878); and Walter (b.1880). He died in Hawick. Joanna ‘Miss Inglis’ (b.1766) post-mistress until 1809, sister of ‘Wat’ and James (since she was never referred to as her first name, she could have been a different child of James and Joanna Gledstains). She apparently succeeded in the position from a letter carrier named Tinlin who could neither read nor write. John of Manor (15th C.) son of Sir William of Manor. He had a charter confirming him in his father’s lands of Manor from the superior Archibald, Earl of Douglas. In 1420 he exchanged half of Braxholme with Sir Robert Scott of Murdostoun, as confirmed in a ‘letter of transumpt’ in 1431. Thus began the long association of the Scotts of Buccleuch with Braxholme and the area immediately to the south of Hawick. In 1431 he was also witness to the document transferring the lands of Heap from James Langlands of that Ilk to Walter Scott of Buccleuch. His wife was Janet. He was succeeded by his son Thomas, to whom he and his wife resigned their lands of Braxholme etc. in 1435. Sometime before this (the charter is undated) he granted the lands of ‘Kyrktoune and Toftis’ in the Barony of Hawick to his uncle Sir Simon, this being witnessed by his brother Robert, Sir Thomas, Keeper of Castle Douglas and William of Manorhead (surely near relatives), as well as Robert Scott of Murdockstone and ‘James of Ra’, Burgess of Selkirk. John (15th C.) Rector of Southdean recorded in 1471 as witness to a charter granted by Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, to Robert Graham of Eintree. He is listed as ‘D. Joh. Inglis rectore de Soudone’. Another John was also listed as a witness, and so may have been related. John ‘Johnnie’ or ‘Step Stately’ (16th/17th C.) Hawick man recorded in 1612 along with several others for charging too high an interest on loaned money. His name is missing from the original list, but included as ‘Johnne Inglis, callit Step Staitlie’, in the list of those found guilty. He appeared to answer the charge, and hence presumably paid a fine and was released. Rev. John (d.1743) minister of Southdean. He was licensed by Selkirk Presbytery in 1711 and ordained at Southdean in 1718. He preached at least once in Hawick, in 1721. In 1736 John Oliver became his assistant. When he died (unmarried) he left a library of 119 volumes to his successors. John (18th C.) resident
Inglis

In 1861, living with his mother Agnes. John, son of John, born at Broadlee in 1743. His children included: John (b.1771); Elizabeth (b.1773), who may be the 'Lilias' who married George Scott of Wilton in 1789; Margaret (b.1776); and Robert (b.1779). He could be the John, son of John, born at Broadlee in 1743. John (1770–1832) son of teacher James, he was a baker in Hawick. His death in Hawick is recorded in 1832. John (b.c.1775) wright at Deanbrae. He was living at Deanbrae Bar in 1841. His wife was Elspeth and their children included in William, James and Thomas. He may be the resident of Cavers who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. John (1797/8–1861) descended from the Walter Gledstains who was Town Clerk of Hawick. He worked as a framework knitter in Hawick. In 1838 he married Mary Blakie, and she died in 1861 aged 62. He was father of John the local writer and museum curator. He was recorded as a handloom weaver on the Loan in 1841 and 1851. In 1861 he was a ‘Chelsea Pensioner’ and frameworker at 2 Loan. His children were: Joan, who married Robert Whalley in Lancashire and emigrated to Australia; John (1838–1928); and Martha (or ‘Matty’, b.c.1840). He could be the John from Hawick who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. John (b.1808/9) from Southdean Parish, he was a joiner at Newmill Damfoot. He was there in 1841, 1851 and 1861. His wife was Susan, from Dumfries, and they had an adopted daughter, also Susan. He may be the John who married Susana Anderson in Hawick Parish in 1839. He could be related to Andrew (b.1805/6), who was also a joiner from Southdean. John (b.1829/30) farmer at Salenside Lodge in Ashkirk Parish. He was probably son of William. In 1861 he was farmer there and living with his wife Helen, children Beatrice and William, and sister Agnes. John (b.1829/30) carter at 78 High Street. He was recorded as ‘Farmer of 10 acres & Carter’ there in 1861, living with his mother Jessie (from Crailing) and his cousin James Taylor. John (19th C.) member of the committee for Hawick Baptist Church around 1880. John (1838–1928) writer of the words for songs ‘The Banner Blue’ and ‘Hawick Among the Hills’, as well as ‘Bonny Brierhill’ and many other poems contained in the book ‘The Borderland and other poems’ (1879 and 1907). Born in Hawick (in the ‘Hole in the Waa’ on Drumlanrig Square), he was son of John (a ‘woollen journeyman’, descended from the Gledstains of Cocklaw) and Mary Blakie. It is said that his 2 grandfathers were schoolmaster in Hawick and the last Coble Pool ferryman (although other information suggests they were baker John Inglis and Peter, not Hector Blakie, so perhaps these were his great-grandfathers). He worked in the tweed industry for Wilson & Armstrong. In 1872 he moved to Guelph, Ontario with his young family, and there worked for a hosiery firm, which was co-owned by David McCrae (father of poet John McCrae, famous for the WWI poem ‘In Flanders Field’); he wrote several poems while living in Guelph. However, after only 2 years (apparently after suffering a bereavement) the family returned to Hawick and he worked as foreman for Wilson & Glenny. His poem ‘Borderland’ was first published in Guelph in 1875. After retiring he became curator of the Museum, setting out the exhibits after the move from the Buccleuch Memorial to Wilton Lodge, and continuing for the rest of his life. He was a Volunteer, where he was known as a good marksman, was a Director of the Hawick Working Men’s Building & Investment Co., and also involved with the Border Bards’ Association and the Foresters. He was an elder of Wilton Church and a lifelong abstainer. He married Ellen (or Helen) D. Rodger, who died in 1907, aged 65. They had 6 children: John (1864–1935), who married Isabella Turnbull; Andrew, who was a trooper with the Imperial Yeomanry, killed at Bethlehem, South Africa in 1900; Robert (1868–1933); William; Mary Ellen (1882–1971), who married George Storie; and Elizabeth, who died in infancy in Canada in 1872. He died in his 91st year at Wilton Lodge and is buried in Wellogue Cemetery. His photograph is in the Museum. John (1864–1935) eldest son of John the poet. He married Isabella Turnbull and their children were John, Maggie, William and Douglas Rodger (1899–1989). Katherine (15th C.) daughter and heir of Alexander. She married ‘Arnou’ Gourlay. In 1461 she inherited the lands of ‘Kirktone and Toftis’ in the Lordship of Branhholme according to a sasine given by Walter Scott of Branholme. Lilias (18th C.) chambermaid at Borthwickbrae in 1785, when she was working for John Elliot. She married George Scott in Robertson Parish in 1789. She was ‘Lillie’ in 1790 when their son Robert was baptised in Wilton and ‘Lillies Englis’ in 1793 when their daughter Sophia was baptised (perhaps named after the daughter of Lord Napier, who was born at Wilton Lodge in 1791). She was probably a maid at Wilton Lodge in the 1790s, working for Lady Napier. In 1799 she went to Yair House to attend Lady Pringle, and stayed there to have her own children, 5 days after Charlotte Pringle was born at Yair. These were the twins, named Francis Napier Scott (after Lord Napier) and Alexander Pringle Scott (after the Laird of Whytbank and Yair); on the baptism record her name appears as ‘Elanor’. She may be the same woman as ‘Elizabeth’ who was baptised in Robertson Parish in 1773, daughter of John Inglis. Marion (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Haunick Toun’. Mrs. ?? (18th C.) recorded in the description of the flood of 1767, when 2 houses to the east of hers were swept away, this being somewhere near Towerdykeside. She may have kept an inn or similar. Patrick (15th C.) part of a ‘retour of inquest’ held in Hawick in 1424 to decide on the inheritance of part of the Barony of Hownam. Most of the other men were quite local. He was ‘Patricium Inglise’ in 1427 on the ‘retour’ for the Barony of Hawick. Robert (17th C.) maltman in Hawick. In about 1651 he was judged by the Bailies to pay £30 to the town’s use, because he was not burdened with quartering the English army in February and March last. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Redfordgreen in 1723 and Henwoodie in 1728. He married Bessie Thomson in Robertson in 1727 and their children Henry (b.1728). Francis (b.1723) may also have been his child. Robert (19th C.) tenant farmer at Wolfhopelee. He married Joan, daughter of William Elliot, who was shepherd at Wauchope. Sir Simon (15th C.) uncle of John of Manor and Branxholme, and hence probably brother of Sir William. He was granted the lands of ‘Kyrktoune and Tofts’ in the Barony of Hawick by his nephew John; the charter is undated, but must have been before John resigned the lands to his son Thomas in 1435. Other witnesses include Sir Thomas, Keeper and Bailie of Castle Douglas, and William of Manorhead, Laird of Langholm, as well as Robert Scott of Murthockstone. Simon (15th C.) recorded as ‘dominus Symoni Ynglis’ in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme, when he was bequeathed 40 shillings. He was probably a minister of one of the local churches. Thomas of Manor (15th C.) son of John of Branxholme and Murdostoun. He had a charter of the lands of ‘Brankishelme, Goldilandis, Quitlaw, Quitrig, Todschawhillis, Harwod and Kirkton tofts’ given by the Earl of Douglas in 1435 (having been resigned by his father and mother). In 1446 he exchanged the second half of Branxholme and other lands in the Barony of Hawick (Todshawhill, Todshawhaugh, Goldielands, Whitlaw and Whitrig) for lands in Lanarkshire (Murdostoun and Hartwood) with Sir Walter Scott, thereby effectively ending the local influence of the Inglis family; in this charter he is recorded as ‘Thomas Inglis de Menmar, dominus de Brankishame’. In 1449 he was ‘Thoma Ynglis de Murthowstoun’ when he witnessed the charter of renunciation of Lochurd and Kirkurd by Walter Scott of Bucleuch. He was married twice, his son William succeeding to Murdostoun, while John was given the lands of Manorhead. As well as John, sons with his second wife, Christian, included Oswald and Gavin. Thomas (17th C.) surgeon-apothecary in Kelso. In 1691 he and his wife Margaret Scott had a bond with Gilbert Elliott of Stonedge for the lands of Hobshurn. This was continued in a document on 1693, but discharged in 1694 when payment was made by Henry Elliott of Harwood. Given the habits of the times, either he or his wife could have been related to Elliott. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Stoddart and their children included Isabel (b.1762). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was living at Borthwick Burnfoot in 1787. He married Nelly Turner in Robertson in 1784 and their children included Robert (b.1787) and James (b.1791). Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He probably had a local connection and could have been related to James, who also subscribed. Walter (d.bef. 1777) resident of the Hawick area. The death of his son John is recorded in 1777. He could be the Walter ‘Englis’ whose son John was baptised in Kirkton in 1728. Walter ‘Wat’ (1762–c.1830) candlemaker with a shop at 2 Tower Knowe. He was son of James and Joanna Gledstains and brother of James, the Town Clerk. He was a lover of practical jokes, sticking coins to the pavement, and once cooking his dog for some guests. He once tricked the exciseman with a keg of water hidden in the pool by the Auld Brig (while the keg of smuggled gin they were looking for was hidden in a friend’s house, although in the end the friend kept the gin, knowing he could not complain to anyone). He is probably the Walter who witnessed a baptism for William Duncan in 1793. In 1796 he was involved in a prank about revolution breaking out in Hawick, which was believed enough to appear as a story in the British Chronicle in Kelso, and this ultimately led to the Kelso Mail appearing after the Chronicle went defunct. He was listed as a merchant in Hawick in 1797 when he paid the dog tax – ‘For mischief and for planning plots Ye’ve aye ta’en muckle pride; Ye keep yer neibours a’ in fear. Yer fauts they winna hide. Ye’ve aye made fun o’ other folk. At that ye never fail; Ye play yer pranks on young and auld, Ye made the Kelso Mail’ [BY], ‘Auld Rob Young o’ the Back Raw’s there, Biddy the Hawker’s sellin’ preens; Wat Inglis is at his tricks yince mair, And there’s baith Jock and Sandy Weens’ [HI]. Walter (19th C.) schoolmaster of St. Cuthbert’s School for a short period in 1893/4, between Mr. Turnbull and Mr. Gillis.

when he was able to compose for stealing sheep tenant of Phaup (in the Ettrick valley) in 1494/5 possible that the same William was recorded as the lands of Glenpyet in the Yarrow valley. It is Thomas. In at least the period 1485–92 he leased William (15th/16th C.) son of Murdostoun (15th/16th C.) of Langlandsshill (in Peeblesshire). He had a sasine for Langlandsshill in about 1500. He may have been related to the family of Murdostoun. He witnessed a charter for lands in Peeblesshire in 1506/7. In 1512 he was given lands at Mervinslaw by Roger Langlands of Wilton for 1 penny ‘blech farm’, payable at Pentecost in Wilton Kirk. He may therefore have been a relative of the Langlands family also. His brother David was also a witness to this charter. Also in 1512 he had a respite, along with John Symonton of that Ilk for making counterfeit money. William (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. William (16th/17th C.) resident of Hawick who was among those cited by the Privy Council in 1612 for charging interest of more than 10 percent. He appeared to answer the charge. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Preacher and their children included William (b.1661). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was in Roberton itself in 1710, 1713 and 1718. His children included: Margaret (b.1706); Robert (b.1710); John (b.1713); and James (b.1718). William (17th/18th C.) workman in Hawick Parish who married Margaret Wilson. Their son William was baptised in 1721, with witnesses Walter Scott of Crumhaugh and Bailie George Martin. William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1763 he married Helen Murray, from the same parish. William (18th C.) resident of Appotside Moor when his children were baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1786 and 1788. His childdren included Robert (b.1778), John (b.1780), William (b.1782), Walter (b.1784) Isabel (b.1786); and Betty (b.1788). William (b.1769) born at Milnholm, son of John and Agnes Brydon. He lived in Castleton Parish. He could be the William from Castleton who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He married Elizabeth (1776–1860), daughter of Francis Ballantyne, who was born at Whitaughburn. Their children included: Francis, who married Janet Scott; James, who married Helen Robson; Agnes, who married Thomas Hall; Elizabeth, who married William Hardie; Robert (d.1892), who married Elizabeth Hall; and Janet, who married James Grieve. William (b.c.1780) from Stow Parish, he was farmer at Salenside.

Sir William (d.c.1420) probably brother of Sir Simon and also related to Sir Thomas, who was Keeper of Castle Douglas and William of Manorhead, who was Laird of Langholm. He was the first of the Inglis of Murdostoun, who had a family home at Branxholme. During a foray in 1395 he answered the challenge of the English champion Thomas Struthers (or Strother) and killed him in single combat at Rulehaugh. This was witnessed by Archibald, Earl of Douglas and Henry Percy, Earl of Northumberland, the two Wardens of the Marches. Another version of events describes how his men surrounded Jedburgh Castle, scaled the walls with ladders and attacked Struthers (who was custodian of the Castle). They were forced to flee when the English soldiers returned from the town, and he was then challenged to combat by Struthers for breaking his oath to observe a truce. In 1396 King Robert III granted him the barony of Manor, south-west of Peebles, in recognition of this deed (all of that barony except the lands of Hundelshope, which belonged to William of Gledstains, ancestor of the local Gledstains family). He was succeeded by his son John, while another son was Robert and his grandson was Thomas. William of Murdostoun (15th/16th C.) son of Thomas. In at least the period 1485–92 he leased the lands of Glenpyet in the Yarrow valley. It is possible that the same William was recorded as tenant of Phaup (in the Ettrick valley) in 1494/5 when he was able to compose for stealing sheep and associating with ‘traitors of Leven’. Probably the same William ‘Ynglis’ obtained remission from the King at the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1494/5. William (15th/16th C.) of Langlandsshill (in Peeblesshire). He had a sasine for Langlandsshill in about 1500. He may have been related to the family of Murdostoun. He witnessed a charter for lands in Peeblesshire in 1506/7. In 1512 he was given lands at Mervinslaw by Roger Langlands of Wilton for 1 penny ‘blech farm’, payable at Pentecost in Wilton Kirk. William (b.c.1780) from Stow Parish, he was farmer at Salenside.
Inglis’

He was recorded there in 1841 and 1851. He married Betsy Harvey, from St. Boswell’s. His children included Helen, Margaret, William, James and Jane. He was probably also son of John who farmed at Salenside Lodge. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Bonchester recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William (1796/7–1851) merchant in Hawick, who was Cornet in 1827. He was proprietor of the inn and attached ballroom at 64 High Street, which was later known as the Half-Moon Hotel. The well near there also popularly bore his name. His property is marked there on Wood’s 1824 map, and also the well on the street. In 1837 and 1841 he was on the High Street and listed as a grocer. He was still listed as a vintner on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory, although he was deceased by then. Late in life (in 1846) he married Jessie Best, who kept a hotel at 16 Buccleuch Street with her widowed mother (Margaret Best, nee Rae). Their son William was also Cornet. His wife must have survived him, since the inn also became known as ‘Mrs. Inglis’. She later moved to 78 High Street.

William (1802/3–85) born in Yarrow Parish, he was farmer at Salenside in Ashkirk Parish. In 1861 he was farming 80 acres there and living with his son William. It is unclear how he was related to the William recorded earlier at Salenside. He is buried in Ashkirk Cemetery. William (1818/9–1885) quarryman in Newcastle. In 1861 he was living at about 7 North Hermitage Street. He married Marion Murray, who died in 1887, aged 71. Their children included: Helen (1845/6–54); Robert (1848/9–73); James (1849/50–75); and Robina (1833/4–98). They are buried in Etterlon Cemetery. William (19th C.) wool merchant of Welogate Bank. He took an early photograph of the old Town House of Hawick, also showing the Cross Well. He was for a long time a staunch member of Hawick Free Kirk, being an elder and Clerk of the Deacon’s Court. However, he resigned in 1887 after objecting to the minister allowing a parade of volunteers in the church, but withdrew his resignation after huge consternation among the congregation. He was also known for being a staunch Temperance supporter and long operated the ‘magic lantern’ at meetings of the Sunday School and Band of Hope. He married Jessie Blaikie (daughter of saddler George), who died in 1905, aged 75. William (1840/1–81) joiner in Newcastle. He married Margaret Currie, who died in 1880, aged 33. Their children included James (1873–1883). He may be the William recorded at Stitchelhill Limery in 1841. William (b.1848/9) son of Cornet William of the Half-Moon Hotel and Jessie Best. He was Cornet himself in 1868. He attended school in Kirkton, perhaps where his mother’s family had come from. By 1881 he was proprietor of the Half-Moon Inn. William (1847/8–1909) builder in Newcastle. He married Mary Dickie, who died in 1914, aged 76. Their children included: John (1871/2–1909); Mina (1875/1964), who married Robert M. Sibbald; and Jessie (1877/1913). They are buried at Ettleton. William (19th/20th C.) farmer at Doorpool. He was owner in the early 20th century, when the farm was valued at about £210 (formerly ‘Englis’, ‘Inglsche’, ‘Inglis’, ‘Inglyshe’, ‘Inglis’ and variants; see also Inglis).

Inglis’ (ing-ul-zeez) n. former carrier’s firm, also known as ‘the Berwick Smack’, which made weekly trips between Hawick and Berwick before the arrival of the railway.

the Inglis’s (thu-ing-ul-eez, -ing-gul-zeez) n. family who had an early home at Branxholme, acquired some time after 1335, and held under vassalage to the Earls of Douglas. In 1395 Sir William Inglis answered the challenge of an English champion Sir Thomas Struthers, killing him in single combat at Rulehaugh, for which the King granted them land near Peebles. In 1420 John Inglis exchanged half of the lands of Branxholme for lands at Murdostoun (or Murthockstone, in Lanarkshire) with Sir Robert Scott of Rankiburn. In 1446 they exchanged the rest with Sir Walter Scott for other lands in Lanarkshire. However, they kept the lands of ‘Kirkton Tofts’, as confirmed in 1461 and passed to the Gourlay family through marriage to Katherine Inglis, heir to Alexander.

Inglis’ Well (ing-gulz-wel) n. former water supply somewhere around O’Connell Street.

Ingram (ing-grum) n. (d.1174) of unknown origin, he had brothers Simon and William and was also known as ‘Enguerran’, ‘Engelram’ and other variants. He was Archdeacon of Teviotdale from around 1160, and served as Chancellor of Scotland under Malcolm IV 1161–64. He was then elected Bishop of Glasgow and consecrated by the Pope in France. He authorised the opening of the tomb of St. Waltheof. He witnessed the renewal of the grant of Ringwood to Melrose Abbey in the late 1160s. In 1166 he was ‘Engelram’ when he witnessed a charter by King William to Robert inkle (ing-kul) n. linen tape woven on a narrow loom and typically used for trimmings. The industry was important in Hawick for a few decades, starting in 1782 or 1783 – ‘The inkle manufacture was begun in the year 1783’ [RRG], ‘... the lasses o’ the Inkle House factory dancing round it’ [AM] (also spelled ‘inkle’).

the Inkle Hoose Factory (thu-ing-kul-hoos-fawk-tu-reec) n. another name for the Hawick Inkle Company built in Under Damside, off the present-day Commercial Road. It is probably the same structure known as the Roughheugh Waulk Mill (adjacent to the Roughheugh Corn Mill). The building was leased in 1797 by William Wilson to manufacture hosiery, and was still known as ‘the Inkle House’ long after the manufacturing of linen had ceased in Hawick. The building continued to be used by the partnership of Wilson & Watson, and when they split in 1818 it went to William Watson & Sons, who continued to use it as a stocking shop. In about 1863 this part of the business was taken over by George Hogg (also written ‘Incle’).

inlack (in-lak) n., arch. deficit, shortage – ‘Decerns Andrew Deans, skinner, to content and pay to Walter Robson ... for the inlack of wool sold to him’ [BR1642], v., poet. to lack, want – ‘The young lions inlack, an’ thole hungir: but thaye that seik the Lord salna inlak onie guid thing’ [HSR], ‘Thy muil is like ane roound gobbit that inlaksna likker ...’ [HSR], ‘The Lord is my shepherd; I salna inlak’ [HSR].

Inner Grey Hill (in-ur-grā-hil) n. small hill just to the north-west of Drinkstone farm. It is connected to Outer Grey Hill and together they form part of Drinkstone hill.

Inner Hallrule (i-nur-haw-rool) n. former name for part of the farm of Hallrule, in distinction to Outer Hallrule. In 1779 ‘Inner-Halrule, consisting of six inclosures’ was valued at £493 17s 8d.

Inner Hill (in-ur-hil) n. small hill between Northhouse and Old Northhouse, reaching a height of 309 m.

Innerleithen (in-ur-lee-thin) n. large village in Peeblesshire at the confluence of the Tweed and the Leithen Water. An important knitwear centre since the setting up of Alexander Brodie’s Caerlee Mill in 1788. It grew further when its medicinal spring was publicised by Sir Walter Scott in ‘St. Ronan’s Well’. It has held the annual St. Ronan’s Border Games since 1827, started by the Edinburgh Six-feet-high Club. This is now mixed in with the annual festival, including the ‘Cleikum Ceremony’ in which St. Ronan drives out the devil, as well as a Standard Bearer leading a procession through town and up Caerlee Hill. Robert Smail’s Printing Works is operated as a museum and Traquair House is nearby. Latterly it has been best known as the home of Caldwell’s museum and Traquair House is nearby. Population (1991) 2,315 (the origin is probably Gaelic ‘confluence of River Leithen’, which in turn is probably Old English for ‘broad’; it was sometimes formerly ‘Inverleithen’).

innerie (i-nu-ree) n., arch. a tenement reached by a common passage or staircase – ‘Hei beides in o thon innery’ [ECS], ‘Why should there no’ bei a stane putten up tae merk th’ site o’ Gotterson’s Innery?’ [HEx1921] (also written ‘innerie’).

innerliness (i-nur-lee-nis) n., arch. compassion, sympathy (noted by J.A.H. Murray).

Innes (i-nis) n. Alexander Pringle (1837–89) born at Robin’s Nest, Yair, he was a manufacturer of A.P. Innes & Co, which became White’s of Hawick. He formed a partnership with James Henderson in 1868, which split again in 1885, when he took over the rear part of Victoria Mills and concentrated on the wholesale market. He was President of the Hawick Total Abstinence Society in the 1880s and he talked at the 1884 franchise rally held at Loch park. He married Agnes Laing and their children included: Alison Mackay (b.1863); Mary Jane (b.1865); William (b.1867); Charlotte (b.1868); Agnes (b.1870); William Henderson (b.1871); and Hannah (b.1874). He died at his home, The Firs on Sunnyhill. Alexander Kedie (1855–1938) son of John and Mary Kedie, and older brother of Robert. He was born in Glasgow, but came to Hawick in the 1870s. He was a woollen merchant in the partnership Innes, Stevenson & Co. until 1892, then in partnership with F.E.H. Chambers. He later became sole partner in tweed merchants Innes, Chambers & Co., Commercial Road. He lived at Lindisfarne. He served as a Bailie around 1900. During WWII he was accused of trading with the enemy, but found not guilty. He married Annie Brydon. Their son James Brydon (b.1891) was killed at Gallipoli. When he died he left a sum of £1000, in the name of his son J.B. Innes, to be distributed to the poor in Hawick at Christmas, with preference given to soldiers and ex-soldiers. James (c.1685–1767) born in South Leith, son of wine merchant Robert. He was educated in Edinburgh, where he graduated M.A. in 1704. He became the first schoolmaster of Hawick’s Grammar School, staying 1710–18. He was then appointed Minister at Mertoun in Berwickshire. He married Christian, daughter of advocate Robert Munro in 1726 and she died in 1770. Their children were: Mary; Robert, who was a doctor; Capt. Albert; James, minister of Yester; and Anne. James (b.1756/7) from Kelso, he was schoolmaster in Bedrule from 1799. He is recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1841 he was still schoolmaster, but already in his 80s, with his son William acting as assistant schoolmaster. He was still living with his son William and still recorded as schoolmaster in Slater’s 1852 directory. Lieut. James Brydon (1891–1915) son of Alexander, he grew up at Lindisfarne in Hawick. He was educated on the continent and fluent in French, German and Italian. He travelled in Europe on behalf of his father’s firm, Innes, Chambers & Co. He served with 1/4th K.O.S.B. and was seriously wounded during the charge of 12th July 1915 and found by his cousin W.K. Innes. He asked his cousin to cut off his arm and give him a cigarette; then he died, still cheering on his men. His memorial headstone in Wellogate Cemetery has his image carved into it. John (c.1817–70) silk merchant in Glasgow. He spent time in Hawick in the 1850s and in 1854 married Mary, daughter of Robert Kedie from Hawick. Their children were: Alexander Kedie (b.1855), who lived at Lindisfarne in Hawick; Robert Kedie (b.1858), draper and manufacturer in Hawick; John William (b.1860); and Jessie (b.1862). Robert Kedie (1858–95) born in Glasgow, son of Hawick parents John and Mary Kedie. He was nephew of William Kedie. He returned to Hawick in 1879 as a manufacturer, becoming partner in William Kedie & Co., along with Blenkhorn and Richardson. His hobby was apparently breeding ‘Dandie Dinmonts’. He was Captain in the Border Rifles (volunteers) in the late 19th century. He married Catherine Brown Oliver, daughter of James Oliver and Jane Rutherford). They lived at the Old Manse and later at Wilton Bank. They had an only child, William Kedie (1893–1958). In poor health for a couple of years, he died at age 35. He had a military style funeral and his grave in the Wellogate Cemetery is marked with a sandstone obelisk. After his death his wife remarried, to Herbert Higham Llewellyn and died in Harrogate. William G. (b.1805/6) son of James, schoolmaster at Bedrule. In 1841 he was assistant schoolmaster at Bedrule. He became teacher at Nisbet, and in 1851 he was recorded at Nisbet Schoolhouse as teacher of English, Mathematics and Latin. He married Mary and their children included Agnes, Jane, Mary, Alexander, Eliza and Alison. Maj. William Anderson (19th/20th C.) Cornet in 1892 and Callants’ Club President in 1914. Innes, Chambers & Co. (i-nis-cham-burz-in-ko) n. tweed manufacturers of the early 20th century. Alexander Kedie Innes became sole partner and the main factory was at 33 Commercial Road. It was badly damaged by fire in 1920 and the site purchased by the Masons in 1921 to build their new Lodge.

Innes-Henderson (i-nis-hen-dur-sin) n. Innes, Henderson & Co. Ltd., Hawick knitwear company, with their main mill on Victoria Road. The firm started in 1868 in what was basically a cottage at Wilton Grove. They built Victoria Mills on Victoria Road in 1875. In 1885 the firm split, with Henderson supplying the retail trade and using the front building, and Innes dealing with the wholesale trade from a 3-storey building behind. The firms of A.P. Innes & Co. and James Henderson & Co. operated separately until merging again in 1920 (although the exact relationship between them during the intervening years is complicated). They also had a small factory on Commercial Road for a while. They supplied specially designed knitted underwear for Eric Shipton’s Everest expedition. The firm made the Braemar label, to which they changed their name. The firm finally went out of business in 1973. Records covering the period 1896–1973 exist, with the Museum having some 20th century papers.

intarsia (in-tawr-shu) n. a knitted pattern resembling mosaic and being visible on both sides of the fabric. The technique was first used for socks as early as the 1850s, being developed for ‘Robert Pringle & Son’ under the direction of Walter Pringle. It was revived in about 1954 at Ballantyne’s of Peebles and brought to Hawick when Pringle’s hired Walker Stewart, and then installed new machines at the Rodono Mill in 1955. This became a characteristic of their most successful product lines for the next few decades.

Invocation (in-vō-kā-shun) n. song written by J.E.D. Murray and Adam Grant as a finale to the 1914 Pageant. It was sung by a huge chorus, accompanied by the Saxhorn Band on the 2 nights of the quater-centenary celebrations, and published by Grant in 1915. The music is now played by the Saxhorn Band during the handing back of the Flag on the Saturday of the Common Riding, and the words are rarely heard. The tune may have been influenced by the German hymn ‘Nun Danket alle Gott’. It is also sometimes called ‘Hail Great and Glorious Power!’, because of the line in the song. The words are now seldom sung, although they were resurrected for the 2004 Callants’ Club centenary commemoration service (often incorrectly or dialectally ‘The Invocation’).

inward (in-wārd) adj., adv., poet. inward – ‘Their inward thought is, that their houses sall contina forevir...’ [HSR], ‘Behald, thou desyrist fraught in the inward pairts...’ [HSR].

the I.O.G.T. (I-o-ō-jee-tee) n. the Institute of Good Templars, an international organisation founded in 1851, promoting total abstinence from alcohol. The organisation arrived in Hawick around 1870 and soon 5 Hawick lodges were formed: the Scottish Border Beacon; the Teviotdale; the Rose of Teviotdale; the Slitrig; and the Ever Watchful. They each held weekly meetings. The first survived the longest, and two others were formed later in the 19th century: the Hope of Hawick; and the Jubilee. They had a hall down the Round Close, referred to as ‘the I.O.G.T. Hall’ or ‘Templar’s Hall’, which was also used by many other groups, e.g. the Brethren and the Saxhorn Band.

I.O.U.S. Mechanics (I-o-ew-ess-me-kaw-neeks) n. Friendly Society, active in the latter part of the 19th century, with separate Teviotdale and Hawick (No. 4) Lodges. It may have been set up around 1845 and lasted until at least 1888. The Teviotdale Lodge met in the Temperance Hall on the first Monday of the month. The National Archives have some undated records.

ir (ir) v. are – ‘ir ee gaun’?, ‘Whae ir oo and Whaer oo ir, Facts a’ Callants should Ken’ [JEDM], ‘Is yours a fardin’ tae? ir ee (ir-e) interj., arch. will you please, if you’re willing – ‘...used exclusively after a request in the sense of ‘if you please’. The word willing or agreeable might almost be taken as being understood to follow the pronoun. Thus a Hawick bairn might say: ‘Mother, gie’s a peece, ir ee?’ [ECS], ‘Gie’s a yin, ir ee?’ [ECS], ‘Faither, tak’ us teh sei the Greens (the local Rugby team) this efternune, ir ee?’ [1947].

Ireland (Ir-lind) n. Thomas (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun’.

Irelands (Ir-lindz) n. John of that Ilk (15th C.) holder of lands in Wilton, which were commonly known as ‘Irelandis lands’. In 1454 he gave a charter of these lands to David, son and heir of Walter Scott of Kirkurd; he is recorded as ‘Johannes de Irelandys de eodem’. The family were mainly based in Stirlingshire and Perthshire; it is unclear whether he ever actually resided in Wilton, and if so where he moved to afterwards. He is recorded as witness to a charter for William Hay in 1450, signed at Perth. And either he or his father was mentioned in a charter of 1424 for lands in Perth. It has been remarked that the families of Inglis, Irelands and Scott all owned adjacent lands in the 15th century, i.e. names associated with England, Ireland and Scotland.

Irelands-lands (Ir-lindz-lawndz) n. common name for lands in the western half-Barony of Wilton, which were granted by John Irelands of that Ilk to David Scott in 1454, with the superior being Henry Wardlaw, Baron of Wilton. The lands were to be held of the Baron for the yearly fee, if asked, of one pair of spurs and one pound of cucumbers! It is unclear where these lands were. Presumably the name came from the connection with the Irelands family, and was replaced with another name (or the former name).

the Irish (thu-I-reesh) n. people from Ireland. It is said that in about 1806 there was only one native of Ireland living in Hawick, who ‘when teazed by boys, was accustomed to threaten to tear their limbs from their bodies’. Many more arrived to work in the knitwear industry during the 19th century, boosting the congregation of the Catholic Chapel. Lots of labourers who worked on railway construction in the 1840s to 1860s were from Ireland.

the Irish Harp (thu-I-reesh-hawrp) n. former hostelry at 9 Baker Street, run by Frank Sheridan in the mid-19th century.

the Irish Schuilmaister (thu-I-reesh-skil-mä-tur) n. nickname of Thomas Lawler.

Irn Brew (I-rin-, ern-broo) n. orange-coloured carbonated soft drink, popular in Scotland, also known as ‘Irn Bru’. Scocha wrote a song about it in 2011 – ‘Irn Bru, Irn Bru, Built ye up, when ye grew, Its the only thing to do, Drink, Irn Bru, Irn Bru, Irn Bru, Irn Bru’ [Sco].

irni (ir-ni) contr. aren’t, are not – ‘they irni the same ony mair’, ‘...But, tell the truth, the legs irna the same Nowadays. Weel, sin’ auld-age wunna hide’ [DH], ‘...awfih vexed that the Miss Lindsays irni pairt o the supper pairty’ [IWL], ‘...Pairish Kirk is hooses now Folk irni the same somehow’ [IWL] (also written ‘irna’; usually used after the noun, cf. irn’t).

irn’t (i-rin’) contr. aren’t, are not – ‘Hawick folk ir better than Gala folk, irn’t they?’ (note that this form usually preceded the noun or pronoun, cf. irni).

the Iron Age (thu-I-rin-äj, -ern-) n. period of development following the Bronze Age, characterised by the spread of iron tools and weapons, beginning around the 8th century B.C.E. New settlers arrived in the Borders around the 1st century B.C.E. and took over from the former Bronze Age residents. Tribes speaking Brythonic were already well established by the time of the Roman occupation (about 70 C.E.). Most of the examples of forts, settlements, homesteads and earthworks that pepper our local hills are from the Iron Age. A particularly good example is on Whitecastle Hill, between Chapelhill farm and Branxholme Loch.

Iron Castle (I-rin-kaw-sul) n. ancient earthwork in Southdean Parish, just to the east of Westerhouses. It occupies the top of a small knoll just to the south of Ironcastle Sike. It is about 75 m by 30 m and has been partially obliterated by a plantation. It seems likely to be an Iron Age settlement.

irregular mairriage (i-re-gew-lur-mä-reej) n., arch. term used to describe a marriage taking place outwith the church, often by poor people, and sometimes simply involving a pledge before witnesses. Discovery of such an arrangement often resulted in a fine imposed on the couple by the Kirk Session, as well as attempts to identify the person who performed the marriage and the witnesses present, so they could also be fined or imprisoned. However, these arrangements continued in any case, presumably some being elopements, some simply to save money, and others because of religious differences. When discovered, any children produced by the union would be refused baptism until amendments had been made by the couple.

irreverent (i-re-vu-rind) adj., arch. irreverent
- 'James Scott, called Pedee, is fined for one great disobedience to the bailies . . . , but gave them opprobrious and irreverent language, and sicklike this day . . .' [BR1679].

Irvine (ir-vin, ā-rin) n. Adam (b.1791/2) brewer at Whisky Houses in Hawick. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He is listed there on Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1841 he is listed as a brewer at Whisky-houses, living with his wife Henrietta and children Jessie, Mary, Alison, John, Adam, Henrietta and Andrew. His assets were sequestered in 1842.

Agnes ‘Nanny’ (18th C.) cook at Burnhead in 1791, when she was working for William Scott. Andrew (17th C.) shepherd at Doecleuch according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Wiltonburn. He married Elizabeth Dunlop in Wilton Parish in 1733. Their children included: Jean (b.1734); James (b.1736); Many (b.1739); Walter (b.1742); Allie (b.1744); Elizabeth (b.1747); William (b.1751); and Andrew (b.1754). The witnesses in 1747 were Walter and Thomas Scott. Probably the same Andrew witnessed a baptism in 1727 for Walter Scott at Wiltonburn and another in 1751 for Hector Blaikie at Boathouse. Andrew (1786–1870) son of Walter and Janet Smith, he was baptised in Hawick Parish. He was an actuary with the National Security Savings Bank and grocer at 26 High Street. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He is listed as a grocer on Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories, in Slater’s 1852 directory and on the 1841 census. In Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory he was treasurer of the Savings’ Bank on the High Street. In 1851 he was listed as a grocer, Treasurer to the Saving’s Bank and Heritor’s Clerk. In 1852 he was also agent for the Aberdeen insurance company. He was an elder and session clerk for the West End Church. He was given the ‘Gledstone Bible’ by William Smith (‘Wull the Cutler’), who may have been a relative of his mother. He married Mary Roger, and their children included: Walter (b.1820); William (b.1822); tweed manufacturer and merchant; Margery D. (b.1823); Janet (or ‘Jessie’, b.1825); Alexander James (b.1828); Mary (b.1832); and Adam (b.1836). Archibald (18th C.) resident of Hawick and Wilton Parishes. In 1759 he was recorded at Wester Mill in Wilton. He married Mary Elliot in Hawick Parish in 1758. Their children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included: Janet (b.1759); John (b.1761); and Betty (b.1763). The witnesses in 1759 were Thomas Scott and James Dryden and in 1763 were ‘Mr John Laurie student’ and church officer Alexander Bunyan. Elizabeth (18th C.) housemaid at Minto in 1791, when she was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. George (17th C.) servitor to maltman John Hardie. In 1666 he was fined by the Magistrates for cutting divots at Myreslaw-green, even although his master had directed him to go to ‘the shortier dikes’. George (18th/19th C.) farmer at Mains (near Castleton), recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is probably related to William ‘Irving’ who was at Mains in 1821. He is recorded there in 1777. He married Jane Armstrong and their children included: Mabil (b.1775); Dolly (b.1777); Dorothy (b.1778); William (b.1781); Elizabeth (b.1782); William (again, b.1784); and John (b.1788). Jake R. (1940– ) local Liberal councillor and Honorary Provost 1982–88. He wrote ‘The Westenders’ (1990). James of Cleuchhead (16th/17th C.) servant of Lord Cranston, he was recorded in 1610 when Robert Elliot of Fulnash was cautions for him. This was for answering the charge of wounding John, son of Adam ‘Haliday in Lure’. His name is given as ‘James Irving of Cleuchheidis’. Given the identity of his cautioner, it seems likely his home was at Cleuchhead in Liddesdale. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was tenant of Wiltonburn in 1711. In 1724 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott at Wiltonburn. His probably the James who married Janet Miller in Wilton in 1703 and had other children Andrew (b.1704), Thomas (b.1708) and James (b.1713). James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Mary Riddell and their children included Walter (b.1716) and James (b.1718). James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His wife was Helen (or ‘Nelly’) Turnbull and their children included: James (b.1756); Robert (b.1758); Many (b.1759); and James (again, b.1762). Perhaps the same James secondly married Isobel Learmonth and had a son James Andrew in 1765. The witnesses to this baptism were Andrew Irvine and Walter Lorraine. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His wife was Isabel Learmonth and their son James Andrew was baptised in 1765. James (d.bef. 1797) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife Marion Blyth died in Hawick in 1797. James Stewart ‘Jamie’ (1820–91) descendant of ‘Staney Stewart’ (whom he was named after), a familiar character on the streets of Hawick, in the 19th century. Born in Hawick he was a simpleton, harmless when sober, but often drunk in his.
Younger days. He spent 4 years in Melrose Asylum, after which publicans were ordered to refuse to serve him. He was known for his amazing memory and a fear of the army. Janet (b.c.1788) recorded as farmer at Newton in Wilton parish in 1851. She farmed 383 acres and employed 1 labourer. In 1841 she was living in the household of John Oliver, who was probably a retired farmer at Newton. Jean nee Kennedy (1876–1962), M.B.E, pharmacist who was the first female president of the Royal Pharmaceutical Society of Great Britain. She was daughter of bookseller Walter Phillips and Jane Law. She was an apprentice in Hawick with chemist Thomas Maben. She move to Glasgow where she worked at the Glasgow Apothecaries Company and the Glasgow Royal Infirmary. She married chemist Peter Irvine and assisted him in running 2 pharmacies in Galagasc. The couple worked in London during WWI and she became responsible for the pricing of subscriptions in the south-east for 35 years. She was made an M.B.E. in 1928 for ‘meritorious service in connection with the National Insurance Scheme’. She was first woman to be president of the health insurance staff of Whitley Council, then of the Insurance Committee Officers Association for England and Wales and the National Association of Women Pharmacists. In 1937 she became only the third woman member of the Royal Pharmaceutical Society and became its first woman President in 1947. Her portrait (by Norman Hepple) hangs in the Pharmaceuticals Society headquarters. John (17th C.) resident at Hawick Shiel in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. He is recorded as tenant in Hawick Shiel when his children were baptised in 1704 and 1706. His children included: James (b.1704); and Margaret (b.1706). The witnesses in 1704 were James Gray in Whitlaw and gardener James Falsyde and in 1706 were Walter Nixon and Walter Scott in Hawick Shiel. He is probably the John, married to Janet Aitkin, whose children born in Hawick included Margaret (b.1684) and Janet (b.1684). He may also have been father of Walter (b.1696). John (18th C.) married Bessie Scott in Wilton in 1739. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Lees in 1759. He married Agnes Scott and their children, baptised in Hawick, included James (b.1759), Walter (b.1761), Agnes (b.1763), Walter (again, b.1765), Margaret (b.1767), Helen (b.1769) and John (b.1772). It is possible they are the same as the couple of the same name who previously had children in Wilton (although the overlap in 1759 seems to make that doubtful). John (18th/19th C.) resided at Teindsideslope in 1797, when he was taxed for having 3 horses. John (b.c.1817) from Southdean Parish, he was farm steward at Commonside in 1851. His wife was Margaret and they had a daughter Helen. Peter educated at Hawick High School, he wrote ‘Scotland the Best’. He has been involved in the organisation of many arts festivals and events in Scotland. Reginald (d.c.1267) served as the 2nd Archdeacon of Teviotdale from 1242. In 1245 he moved to become Archdeacon of Glasgow. He died before 1268. Robert (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Janet Telfer and their children included: Margaret (b.17645); William (b.1766); and James (b.1773). Robert (18th C.) recorded as tenant of the land of Nut Bank in Minto Parish in 1780. Robert (18th C.) paid the cart tax in Wilton Parish in 1789. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He probably had a local connection. Samuel (18th C.) schoolmaster in Wilton during at least the 1760s. In 1767 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Rev. Robert Riccarton. He may be the same as Samuel in Newfield. Samuel (18th C.) farmer at Newfield, near Hummelknowes, brother of Walter, who lived at Northhouse. He was part of the group that founded the Green Kirk in 1763. He owned 2 horses at Newfield according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Ormiston in Cavers Parish. His children included: Andrew (b.1701), who married Bessie Turnbull in Minto in 1723; Thomas (b.1703); Isabel (b.1706); James (b.1708); William (b.1710); and John (b.1713). He may also be the Thomas whose children baptised in Minto Parish included: Alison and Bessie (b.1715); Walter (b.1717); Samuel (b.1719); Helen (b.1721); and Adam (b.1724). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Langlands in 1722 and was at Netherhall in 1726 and 1729. He witnessed baptisms in 1724 for Andrew Martin at Clarilaw and for James Young at West Burnfoot, in 1728 for John Blyth at Stirches, in 1729 for James Easton at Alton and in 1735 for William Nichol in Stouslie. He married Margaret Scott in 1718 and their children included: Walter...

(b.1719); Thomas (b.1722); John (b.1726); and Adam (b.1729). The witnesses in 1722 were John Scott and John Wilson and in 1726 were Adam Scott and John Irvine and in 1729 were John Scott and John ‘Dryon’. Thomas of Newton (18th C.) recorded in the 1786 Horse Tax Rolls in Wilton Parish. He and William witnessed a baptism for William Hood at Newton in 1770. Walter (18th C.) factor for the Langlands estate. He ran the estates after the death of George Langlands and before Robert was served heir in 1758. He is probably the Walter who married Helen Scott in Wilton in 1736. His children included: David (b.1737); Mainie (b.1739); and Margaret (b.1745). In 1745 he was recorded as a gardener, and the witnesses to the baptism in Hawick were merchant James Douglas and Andrew Turnbull senior. He is probably the Walter who witnessed a baptism for James Noble, resident of Mervinslaw, in 1751. His name is also written ‘Irvin’. Walter (18th C.) resident of Northhouse. His brother Samuel was at Newfield. They were part of the founding group of seceders, who met in Hawick in 1763, leading to the establishment of the Green Kirk. He was recorded at Northhouse on the 1786–90 Horse Tax Rolls. Walter (18th/19th C.) recorded as owner of part of Weensland in 1788. His land there was valued at £18 1s 8d and had probably been purchased from the Scotts of Horsleyhill. He was still owner according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He was surely related to William, who had owned part of Weensland earlier. He is probably also the Walter who paid the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. He may be the Walter who married Janet Smith in 1785 and whose children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included Andrew (b.1786), Robert (b.1788), Alison (b.1790) and Adam (b.1792). Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Newfield. His wife ‘Ailey’ Thomline died in Hawick in 1815. He was probably son of Samuel or Walter. Walter Scott (19th C.) frameworker and Cornet of 1886. He returned from America in 1887 to take up his duties as Right-Hand Man, a long journey in those days. He was honoured with a special reception, where he was presented with a gold medal and watch. He was unable to repeat the feat as Left-Hand Man, however. William (18th C.) recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick in 1785. He is probably the William who was a Bailie in the 1770s. He is probably the William listed in 1788 as former owner of 2 parts of Weensland (having purchased this from Scott of Horsleyhill) valued at £23 19s 6d and £23 8s 10d, and by 1788 owned by William Dickson of Orchard. He is probably also the William who owned the farm of Newton (valued at £238) in 1788; if so he and Thomas witnessed a baptism for William Hood at Newton in 1770. He is also mentioned as a former owner of part of Weensland in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1811. He may be the Bailie who witnessed a baptism for merchant James Scott in 1796. William (b.c.1765) farmer at Glendivan in the Ewes valley. His wife was Henrietta and their children included John (who took over the farm), Archibald, Isabella, Jessy, Eliza, William and Robert. His wife was a widow by 1851. William (b.c.1785) listed as ‘Ind.’ on the 1841 census, when he was living at about 54 High Street. William of Newton (18th/19th C.) recorded as owner of Chamberlain Newton in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He was a subscriber to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Glasgow who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He probably had a local connection. William (b.1793/4) farmer at Cavers Mains, listed in 1841. In 1861 he was there farming 186 acres. He married Mary H. Elliot, probably daughter of John, who lived at Shiplaw Corse. William (1824–93) son of Andrew of the Savings Bank. He was a manufacturer in partnership with ‘Allie’ Laing in the latter part of the 19th century, the warehouse at 26 High Street giving its name to ‘Irvine’s Close’. He was a local leader in politics and social reform in the 19th century. He was involved in the Hawick press and also wrote some poetry. For a while he also lived at 67 High Street. He presented a couple of Roman coins to the Museum in 1863 (the former pronunciation was ā-rin; previously written ‘Irvin’, ‘Irwin’, ‘Irvine’, ‘Urvin’ and variants; see also Irving).

Irvine’s Close (ir-vinz-klös) n. passageway at 26 High Street leading to Laing & Irvine’s tweed business in the mid-19th century.

Irving (ir-vín) n. Archibald ‘Bauldie’ (19th C.) farmer at Shiresleuch. Christopher of Binks, ‘Kick-ma-leerie’ (17th C.) said to have been a fiddler, it is unclear where he originated from. It is also unclear why he got his nickname (since it has 2 somewhat different meanings). He became fairly wealthy and was a local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s. He bought Binks from Simon Elliot of the Binks and is recorded there in the 1678 Land Tax Rolls, paying tax on the value of £300. He is also recorded in 1678 as owner of part of the former estate of Elliot of Larriston in Castleton Parish, valued at £700. By about 1688 he had bought all of Over and Nether Larriston, Greenholm, Redheugh, Hartsgarth, Langhaugh and Gullenflat from Robert Elliot of Larriston, who died bankrupt. His children were: wife of Adam Beattie, to whom he gave Hartsgarth, Langhaugh, Greenholm and Redheugh in Liddesdale; and Mary, wife of Adam Elliot, who got Catlowdie in Cumberland. The lands of Binks passed to John, 3rd son of John Elliot of Thorl eshope.

David (1778–1860) born in Langholm, son of Janetus and Helen Little. He was educated at Langholm Grammar School and privately there and then at Edinburgh University. He was intended for the Church, but devoted his life to literature. His first publication was ‘The Life of Robert Ferguson, with a critique on his works’ (1799), followed by ‘Lives of Scottish Authors’ (1801), ‘Elements of English Composition’ (1801, running to 12 editions), ‘The Lives of the Scottish Poets’ (1804) and ‘Memoirs of the Life and Writings of George Buchanan’ (1807, 1817). He obtained an honorary doctorate from Aberdeen in 1808. He married Ann Margaret Anderson in 1810, but she died 2 years later. He secondly married his cousin Janet Laing. In 1820 he was appointed principal librarian of the Faculty of Advocates, Edinburgh. He published extensively on topics of Scottish literature, editing volumes for the Ballantyne and Maitland Clubs, and contributing to the Encyclopedia Britannica. Later works include ‘An Introduction to the Study of the Civil Law’ (1837), the 2 volume ‘Lives of Scottish Writers’ (1839) and ‘History of Scottish Poetry’, published posthumously. Edward ‘Reid’ (16th C.) recorded in 1591 when he is accused of joining a group of Ellots of the Hill and others in stealing from the tenants of Scaleby. He is recorded as ‘redd’ Edward Urwen. George ‘Geordie’ (16th/17th C.) part of the notorious riving family of the West Marches. In 1590 he was ‘Geordie Kang’ when accused, along with Christie Armstrong of Bargnies and other, of riving from Willie Graham in Leven. He was probably the ‘Geordie Kange’ who in 1592 was accused by Taylors on the English side of stealing livestock and goods; other Irvings listed were Willie, Ritchie and Tom of Rowanburn. In 1597 he was ‘Georde Urwen alias Kange’ when the English Warden demanded a pledge for him. Along with other Irvings (probably his brothers) they were ‘Davy, Will, and Geordy Kang’ complained about in 1600/1 for a raid on Scotchby in England, accompanied by Armstrongs of Bargnies and Kinnmont. Note that several earlier Irvings are mentioned in earlier English records (e.g. in 1541), who were probably related. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was James ‘Irwin’, married to Isobell Liddell, whose children baptised in Hawick included William (b.1681), James (b.1682) and Robert (b.1684). He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James (17th/18th C.) rented a third of the farm of Wiltonburn in 1698. He was recorded as tenant in Wiltonburn in 1708 when his son Thomas was baptised in Wilton. Other children, baptised in Wilton, who could be his, include James (b.1713). James (17th/18th C.) married Janet Miller in Hawick in 1702 (recorded in Wilton in 1703). He could be the James in ‘aiches’ (but hard to read, possibly Stirches?) whose daughter Elizabeth was baptised in 1704: the witnesses were William and John Scott. Other children may have included Andrew (b.1704), Thomas (b.1708), William (b.1711) and James (b.1713). He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for George Lorraine in 1706. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish who married Mary Riddell. Their children included: Walter (b.1716); and James (b.1718). He may be the the James with wife ‘Riddell’, whose daughter Marion was baptised in Wilton in 1698. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Glendivan in Ewesdale in 1797 according to both the Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. Richard ‘Ritchie’ (16th C.) accused by Taylors in 1592 of stealing livestock and goods; other Irvings listed were Willie, Geordie and Tom of Rowanburn. His name is written ‘Richie Kange’. Thomas of Rowanburn (16th C.) accused in 1592 by Taylors on the English side of stealing livestock and goods; he was probably an Irving, since he was listed just after the ‘Kangs’, Willie, Geordie and Ritchie. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Howeurch in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. William ‘Willie’ (16th C.) recorded as ‘Willie Urwen’, servant to John’s Christie Armstrong, when accused of being part of a gang of Armstrongs and others who raided the farms of Mounbenger, Deuchar and Whitehope in 1582. William ‘Willie Kang’ (16th C.) listed in 1590 along with Armstrongs and others who were accused of riving from Beawcastle. He was also ‘Willie Kange’ when accused.
Irwin

in 1592 by Taylors on the English side of stealing livestock and goods; other Irvings listed were Geordie, Ritchie and Tom of Rowanburn. He is also complained about in 1596, among Scotsmen accused of leading raids into England. His name is given as ‘Willie Yrwen ‘Kange’ and one of the ‘Kanges’ along with Geordie (probably his brother) in a complaint about a second raid. Associates on these and other raids included Armstrong of the Hollows, Jamie Elliot called ‘Tod’ and other Armstrongs and Elders of southern Liddesdale. He and other Irvings were probably the ‘Willie Kange and his brethren’ who were said to have been involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. His brother David was listed in 1605 among men of Eskdale, Ewesdale, etc., declared fugitives at a court in Peebles. It is unclear what the nickname meant. William (18th/19th C.) resident at Mains (probably in Castleton Parish) in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was probably related to the George ‘Irvine’ who was at Mains in 1797. William (18th/19th C.) portrait painter in Longtown. In the Carlisle Exhibition of 1824 he exhibited these paintings: ‘W. Brown Esq. Hawick’; ‘Alexander Brown, Esq. Orchard’; ‘Mrs Dixon, Hassendeanburn’; and ‘A Dixon, Hassendeanburn’. He died aged 60. He was listed as a portrait painter in London in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’; he must have been related to John, a painter in Longtown who also subscribed to the book. William S. (19th C.) teacher in Hawick. He was President of the Hawick Branch of the Educational Institute of Scotland and Vice-President of the Scientific and Philosophical Society in the late 1800s. He also acted as Clerk to the Deacon’s Court of Hawick Free Kirk from 1887. In 1889 he left to become Headmaster of Westerkirk School (formerly written ‘Irwine’, ‘Irwing’ ‘Irvine’, ‘Urvin’, ‘Urwin’ and variants; see also Irvine).

Jackson (jawk-sin) n. A. (18th/19th C.) mason in Castleton in 1821 when subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. Adam (b.1763) born at ‘Howpathy’, which may be Howpasley, he was a shepherd at Redmoss in Castleton Parish. He was a keen hunter and known as ‘The Hunter King of Liddesdale’ and is said to have served as inspiration for part of Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Guy Mannering’. He is probably the Adam listed for the first time as a head of household at Tofttholm in 1837 and still there in 1841. He married Helen Crozier. Their children included: William (1792–1819), who served at Waterloo; James (1795–1809); Adam (1797/8–1834); John, also shepherd at Redmoss; Helen (b.c.1800); Thomas (b.c.1800), who married Isabella Hislop and emigrated to the U.S.A., settling in Elmira, Illinois; Walter (1803–89), shepherd at Broadlee; and David (1806–94). Adam (b.1806/7) born in Roberton Parish, he was shepherd at Roughley in Castleton Parish. He is probably the Adam listed for the first time as a head of household at Tofttholm in 1837 and still there in 1841. His wife was Margaret and their children included Jane. Adam (b.1816/7) son of James and Elizabeth Murray, he was born in Ewesdale. He worked as a farm labourer in Teviothead Parish. In 1861 he was at Commonbrae. He married Mary Martin and their children included Walter, Mary, Andrew, Isabella and Eliza. He died at Changehouse. Adam J. (1836–1922) son of shepherd Simon. He was born in the Ewes valley. He became a shepherd at the age of 12, but emigrated to America when he was 20. In 1856 he settled in Vienna, Delaware County, New York, where he farmed with his brother. He married Francis C. Smith. He was the last survivor of a family of 11 siblings. David (18th/19th C.) farmer at Netherraw in Castleton Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. David (1806–94) youngest son of shepherd Adam. He was shepherd at Fairloans and other places in Liddesdale. He was listed as head of household at Fairloans in 1835–40 and labourer at ‘Thorliesburnfoot’ in 1841. He married Jessie Dickson. Their children included: Adam (b.1832); Janet Jardine (b.1834); Michael (b.1836); Helen (b.1837); Isabel (b.1840); and Thomas. Elizabeth (b.1774/5) from Langholm, she was a widow living at ‘Poor’s houses’ in Ewesdale in 1851. She is described as a tailor’s widow and was probably related to Margaret. Elliot (b.1851) son of David, labourer at Thorlieshope, and Janet Moffat. He was a Police Constable in Jedburgh. In 1871 he married Helen Murray, who was a servant at Flatt. He was a subscriber to David Anderson’s poetry book in 1868. Elspeth (17th C.) listed as a midwife in 1676 among others of the Abbotrule area who were imprisoned in the Tolbooth of Edinburgh for attacking the minister, George Baptie. This presumably means she objected to having an Episcopalian minister in her parish. Gordon (1952– ), M.B.E. Born in the Haig, educated at St. Mary’s, Trinity and Hawick High Schools, he was an apprentice joiner with Brydons and worked for a while for Jock Oliver’s parcel delivery service. He joined the ambulance service in 1979 and has also worked with several charities, including being Chairman of the Border Holiday Group (arranging holidays for people with physical and mental learning difficulties). In 2011 he received the M.B.E. for his work with the Scottish Ambulance Service and Border Holiday Group. He has been President of the Mosstroopers’ Club and on the Scottish Hill Sports Committee, as well as Session Clerk at Cavers Kirk. He was acting Father in 2010 and Common Riding Chief Guest in 2019. James (17th/18th C.) resident in Stobicoate in 1717 when his son John was baptised in Roberton Parish. James (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Sundhope in Castleton Parish, recorded on both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. He was probably related to the James recorded being hired at Braiddie in 1750. James (1756/7–1837) shepherd at Arkleton, son of John and Margaret Tait. In 1788 he married Elspeth Armstrong, and she died in 1815, aged 60. Their children included: John (b.1787); James (b.1789); Walter (1791–1803); Simon (b.1793), who was a labourer at Arkleton; and Mary (b.1795). The family are buried at Ewes Kirkyard. James (1763/4–1838) shepherd at Howpasley. He married Margaret Elliot (1762/3–1800). Their children included William and 2 who died in infancy. He secondly married Janet Brydon (1771/2–1850), who died at Roughley. Their son James was born in 1804, and also lived at Howpasley. James (1783–1871) son of John and Helen Laidlaw. He was ploughman at Arkleton in 1841 and 1851. By 1861 he was living at Sandyhaugh and described as ‘Formerly Ploughman’. He married Elizabeth Murray, and she appears to have already been deceased by 1841. Their children included: David (1810–71), who died at Meikledale Haugh; James (1811–70), who died at Tythehouse, Hobkirk; Robert (b.1813); Adam (1815–90), who died at Change-house, Teviothead; Helen (b.1817); Henry (1819–94), who died at Torwoodlee; Mary (b.c.1827); and Isabella (b.c.1827). James (b.1799/1800) born in Castleton Parish. He was a game-watcher at Clerkkleap in 1841. He was then living with his sister Eliza and daughter Jane. James (b.1804) son of James and Janet Brydon. Like his father, he was an agricultural labourer at Howpasley. He was recorded as ‘Howpasley New’ in 1841, with his widowed mother living with his family. In 1851 he was a retired shepherd living at about 34 North Hermitage Street in Newcastle upon Tyne. In 1833 he married Esther Hardie (from Castleton Parish) and their children included Nancy, James, John, Janet, Esther and Adam (b.1846). James (b.1829/30) son of Simon and Mary Jardine. He was a shepherd at Arkletonshiels in 1851. He was then living with his sister Elspeth and brother Adam. He was married by 1861, his wife being Margaret, and their children including Simon, John and James. He could be the James recorded as farmer at Arkleton in 1868. James (b.1829/30) born in Kirkton Parish, he was a shepherd at Borthwickshiels in 1861. His wife was Janet and their children included Adam, Francis, John Elliot and Margaret. John (d.bef. 1502) resident probably of the Holydean or Nisbet areas, who was killed along with James. At the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1502 there is mention of several men being declared fugitives for their parts in these murders, the surnames including Jack, Morrison, Rufy, Smith, Thordbrand and Weir. Additionally John Colhart in Rutherford was beheaded for the crime. The details of the events that led to these murders are not recorded. Since John’s name was given first, he was presumably either father or elder brother of James. John (16th/17th C.) Burgess of Selkirk who was recorded as ‘knokkeiper’ (i.e. clock-keeper) in 1608. John, brother of Walter Scott of Woll, and his half-brother John Turnbull came to his house and wounded him, apparently on being ‘hounded out’ by Robert Scott of Haining. The 2 were apprehended by the Bailies of Selkirk, whereupon a group of other Scotts and their followers (from Thirlestane, Bowhill, Synton and other places) rescued the pair. The exact nature of the dispute is now obscure. John (17th C.) miller of Appotside Mill, witness to a sasine of 1632. He is also recorded as ‘Johnne Jacksoune’ in 1637 when his son William witnessed a sasine in Hobkirk Parish. John (17th C.) ‘webster’ at Hawick Shiel in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His children included: Elizabeth (b.1703); and Margaret (b.1705). John (17th/18th C.) recorded at Todshaw in 1711 when his son William was baptised in Robertson Parish. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1750 he married Bessie Elliot, who was from Hawick Parish. Their children included Catherine (b.1752). John (18th C.) resident at Philhope-shiel in 1763 when his daughter Janet was baptised in Robertson Parish. He is probably the John who married Margaret Tait and had children, baptised in Robertson Parish, including: Margaret (b.1744); Bessie (b.1747); James (b.1748); John (b.1750); Bessie (b.1752); Robert (b.1753); Walter (b.1755); Isobel (b.1758) and Helen (b.1760). In 1753 the record says ‘the mother of the child being sponsor’, suggesting that he was not from Robertson, but his wife was. John (18th C.) resident of Ewes Parish. He married Margaret Tait (probably in 1754) and their children, baptised in Ewes, included Bessie (b.1755), James (b.1757), Beatrice (b.1758), Margaret (b.1769) and Simon (b.1760). It is unclear if he could be the same as the Robertson John, whose wife’s name was the same. John (1719/20–80) shepherd at Arkletonshiels. He married Margaret Tait, who died in 1794, aged 63. Their children included James (b.1756/7), who was also shepherd at Arkleton. John (1787–1870) son of James and Elspeth Armstrong. He was at least the 3rd generation of his family to be shepherds in Ewesdale. At the age of 23 he married Betty Oliver (1789–1870), who was literally from across the road. They had 16 children, born in Castleton Parish: Walter (1811–92); Peter (1813–91); James (1814–95); George (b.c.1815); Jennet (1816–97); John (1818–95); Elspeth (1820–85); Jane Jardine (1821–1907); Mary (b.c.1822); Charles Maxwell (1824–77); Barton (1826–53); Adam (1828–1908); Simon (1829–95); Betty (1831–90); Margaret (1831–1914); and Ellen (or Helen, 1833–89). Around 1880 he emigrated to America, most of his family joining him in 1840, settling in Andes, Delaware County, New York. John (18th/19th C.) resident of ‘Hardon’ (probably Harden in Castleton Parish) in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’. He may be the shepherd John who was at Riccarton in 1835. John (b.1790s) son of Adam and Helen Crozier. Like his father he was shepherd at Redmoss in Castleton Parish. He is there in 1835 (while another John was shepherd at Riccarton) and still listed there among Parish heads of households in 1841. He married Helen Moore and their children were: William (b.1821); Elizabeth (b.1825); Helen (b.1827), married William Glendinning; Adam (b.1829); James (b.1831); Walter (b.1833); Agnes (b.1835); John (b.1838); David (b.1841); and Thomas (b.1843). John (b.1801/2) born in Jedburgh Parish, he was a farmer at Bush in Ewesdale. In 1861 he was at Ewes, farming 2035 acres and employing 6 people. His wife was Eleanor H. and their children included Thomas L. John (1815/6–76) clogger in Hawick, from Langholm, he was born in Ewesdale. He is listed as a clog-maker on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1861 he was listed at 9 Howegate. He married Agnes Hunter (born in Wilton), who died in 1912, aged 83; she was described as a ‘vigorous woman, belonging to the family of grocers etc.’ Their children were Simon (who married a daughter of ‘Danny o the Dean’), Margaret (who died young), Thomas, Robert, Thomas (again), Mary (who emigrated to Australia with her mother, but died aged 16) and John (mill cashier). He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. John (d.1909) son of John, he was known as a somewhat simple individual. He worked as cashier with A.P. Innes & Co. and with William Lockie’s. He was Clerk of the Deacon’s Court at St. George’s Kirk in the early 1900s. Margaret (b.1791/2) shopkeeper at ‘Poor’s houses’ in Ewesdale. She is listed there in 1851, when she was unmarried. She was probably related to Elizabeth. Patrick (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny, probably part of the force led by Scott of Buccleuch. He is recorded as ‘Philippus Jakson’. The other men were Scotts, Turnbulls, a Gledstains, a Langlands, a Dalgleish etc., and so he is probably local. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant in Howpasley. He is recorded in 1494/5 at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh when he was surety for himself and fined for not appearing. He could also be the Robert who was recorded in 1494/5 along with Adam Howatson, when Alexander Turnbull, son of Andrew Turnbull of Dryden, had remission for the crime of resetting them. Perhaps the same Robert is listed in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501 among mostly local men who had been fined. His name is given as ‘Robertus Jaikson’. The other 15 men listed were mostly from the area immediately around Hawick. Perhaps the same ‘Roberti Jaksoune’ was also listed in 1501 among 10 men (mostly Turnbolls) whose fines were remitted. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cauonier for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. Robert (b.1832/3) shepherd at Wester Alemoor. His wife was Janet and their children included Janet and Adam. He made coin donations to the Museum. Simon (1793–1855) son of James and Elspeth Armstrong, he was a farm worker at Arkleton. He was living at Arkleton Cottage in 1841. He married Mary Jardine and their children included: Betty (b.1819); Elspeth (1822–74), who went out to America to join her brothers; Walter (b.1827); John (b.1825); James (b.1829); Simon (b.1831); William; Adam J. (1836–1922), who emigrated to New York state; and Thomas. He died at Dorniegill. Simon (b.1852) son of John, he lived at 9 Howegate. He married Margaret Stewart, daughter of ‘Danny o the Dean’, and was known as an ardent Liberal. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish who married Marion Dalgleish. Their children included: John (b.1645); and Agnes (b.1650). probably the same Thomas witnessed a baptism in 1651 for Robert Elliot. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Bellendean in 1764. He married Isobel Thomson in Roberton in 1752. His children included Margaret (b.1758) and Richard (b.1760) and Peggy (b.1764). Patrick (b.1754), baptised in Yarrow, may also be his son. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was living at Harden in 1798. He married Mary Veitch in Cavers in 1782. Their children included Robina (b.1798), baptised in Robertson. Thomas (b.c.1810) farm worker living at Broadlee in Robertson Parish in 1841. His wife was Harriet and their children included James, Robert, Janet, Thomas, Adam and John. Thomas (b.1810/1) from Westerkirk, he was farmer at Shankend in 1851. He was unmarried and living with his nieces Jeannie and Elizabeth Corbet at that time. In 1861 he was a carrier visiting Ormiston Lochend at the time of the census. Walter (15th C.) witness in 1456 to a document relating to the lands of Whitchesters, witnessed at Bruxholme for Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He is recorded as ‘Walterus Jaksoun’. The document probably refers to the retour for John of St. Michael a few years earlier. Walter (18th C.) hind at Fahnsh. In 1740 he witnessed a baptism for Archibald Elliot, cottar at Fahnsh. He married Barbara Scott in Cavers Parish in 1731. Their children baptised in Hawick Parish included: John (b.1734); Isobel (b.1737); and Betty (b.1739). The witnesses to the 1737 baptism were Walter Wilson (servant to Walter Scott in Commonside) and John Telfer (Kirk Officer). Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Riccarton in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’. Walter (1803–89) younger son of Adam and Helen Crozier. He was a shepherd like his father. He worked at Braidlie and elsewhere in Liddesdale. He may be the Walter, shepherd at Larriston, recorded in 1835–40. He married Nicholas Hislop. Their children were: Jean (b.1825); Elizabeth (b.1827), who married James Edgar, grocer in Castleton; Jean (again, b.1829); Isabella (b.1831); Janet (b.1835); David (b.1837); Margaret (b.1839); William (b.1842); Janina; and Thomasina. His children were born at North Greenholm, Cleuchhead, Redmoss, Larriston Rigg and Larriston House. William (17th C.) son of John. He was tenant at Appotside Mill in 1637 when he witnessed a sasine. William (18th C.) married Agnes Lillico in Hawick in 1722. William (18th/19th C.) recorded as farmer at Heap on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Miller in 1787 and their children included: Isobel (b.1788); Janet (b.1791); and Joan (b.1793). The witnesses in 1788 and 1791 were Postmaster James Inglis and Thomas Miller (surely related to his wife), and in 1793 were butcher George Deans and Thomas Wallace. William (18th/19th C.) married Janet Laidlaw in Wilton Parish in 1817. William (18th/19th C.) weaver in Newcastle-ton. He is listed among heads of households in 1835. William (19th C.) resident of Dinlabyre in 1868. William (b.1808/9) from Castleton, he was groom at Greenriver in Hobkirk Parish in 1861. William (b.1823/4) shepherd at Riccar-ton in the 1860s. He was possibly son of John, shepherd at Redmoss. His wife was Isabella and their children included christin, John, James and Robert T. (formerly spelled ‘Jackson’, ‘Jakson’, ‘Jakson’, etc.).

the Jacobites (thu-ja-kö-bits) n. followers of the Stuarts in the 18th century, particularly during the two rebellions of 1715 and 1745. There were local Jacobite sympathisers, but support was not widespread in the Borders. Zerubabel Haig of Bemersyde was possibly the only local nobleman to support the Jacobites, while Elliot of Minto and others were in favour of King George. However, 16 men from Teviotdale joined the Jacobite force at Jedburgh. In mid-October 1715 about 200 horsemen under Lord Kenmure and Mr. Foster passed through Hawick, where they proclaimed ‘the Chevalier’ King James VIII; the Hawick Session records state ‘No sermon, in regard of ye tumult occasioned by a numerous multitude in arms against King George and his government’. It is also said that they ransacked Stobs for the armoury that they heard was there. Robert Patten’s ‘History of the Rebellion’ describes Hawick as ‘a small poor Market-Town belonging to the Duchess of Buccleuch at whose House the English Lords with their Relations, and Mr. Forster took up their Quarters’. 3 Jacobite divisions then met at Kelso and there was much debate about what course to follow. About 2 weeks later James’ Highland host, commanded by Lord Derwentwater and his brother Charles Radcliffe, marched south, coming to Hawick from Jedburgh. Some officers, including Derwentwater, Radcliffe and Kenmure, were quartered in the Tower, while the Highland host were encamped on the Moor. There was a near mutiny there, with the Highlanders refusing to march into England, preferring to fight the enemy on Scottish ground. They spent the night of October 29th at Hawick, and that night there was a false alarm raised, with speculation that it was a ruse to test the Highlanders. The next day the soldiers marched on to Langholm and were later convinced to cross into England. The Session book records succinctly ‘No Sermon, Kenmure, Englishes and Highlanders in ye toun’. There are several other entries in the Session records of official days of thanksgiving or praying for the success of the King’s armies and such like. The country was generally in an unstable state at this time, the Hawick Minister saying in 1716 that ‘the reason was that he had not sooner begun to catechize, the countrie was in a tumult occasioned by manie rising of arms against ye present government of our sovereign, King George’. Adam Turnbull of Deneside (near Hawthornside) was also said to be a Stuart supporter and convinced to give up his family lands and flee in 1715. During the 1745 rebellion the people of Hawick appear to have offered essentially no support. Part of a force under Lord Balmerino, along with cavalry, spent the night in Hawick in November of that year, while ‘Bonnie Prince Charlie’ stayed at Larriston. Robert Wilson tells several stories about 1745 which are probable confused with events of 1715, for example that Walter Gledstains of Whitlaw was an officer under the Prince, and that a lady from Hawick followed the Prince all the way to Carlisle, but refused to be given an audience. An old man called Charles Stewart residing in Hawick Parish at the end of the 18th century was said to have been an illegitimate son of Bonnie Prince Charlie; however, many people were called Charles around that time. There is also a tale (no doubt largely fictional) of a Hawick man who acted as a guide when the army passed through in 1745, meeting with Lord Lovat, and later becoming a barber in Newcastle, where he slit the throat of one of the main testifiers against Lovat. A butter dish, said to have been used when Bonnie Prince Charlie dined at Newmill (although that seems doubtful) was presented to the Museum in 1856. Another story tells of a detachment of the Jacobite army camping near Spittal-on-Rule and after having their paymaster’s money-bag stolen the Highlanders threatened to burn Denholm, after which the money was returned. When some of the Highlanders marched up the Rule valley towards Carlisle they enlisted Sam Oliver, the Hobkirk schoolmaster to be their guide through Liddesdale. When a small part of Charlie’s army passed through Castleton they carried off a bee-hive belonging to a weaver from there; after failing to get it back he is said to have proclaimed ‘Let them go, (with a jeer), I have furnished the hive belonging to a weaver from there; after fail-

James (jāmz) n. name of 7 Stuart (or Stewart) Kings of Scotland, including 2 Kings of the United Kingdom. James I (1394–1437) King from 1406, although in name only until 1424. He had been sent away from Scotland to avoid his uncle the Duke of Albany, but was captured by the English and spent 18 years in effective captivity. He returned to Scotland and led the killing of Albany’s relatives. There was dispute over his rights to the throne, leading to him being killed in a plot involving the Earl of Atholl (Albany’s brother), possibly in a blocked up sewer at Blackfriars Monastery. In 1412, while captive at Croydon, he granted a confirming charter of the lands of Hawick (as well as Drumlanrig and Selkirk) to William Douglas of Drumlanrig; the charter was written in his own hand and still survives. James II (1430–60) King from 1437–60, he was crowned at Kelso Abbey. After the death of the Regent, the 5th Earl Douglas, he schemed to have other Douglases killed, and personally killed the Black Douglas at a state dinner. His defeat of the Douglases forces at the Battle of Arkinholm in 1455 led to the weakening of the strength of the House of Douglas, including their power in Teviotdale, which shifted to the Scotts. He became heavily involved in military conflicts with England, but brought peace and prosperity to the Nation for a short time. He also moved the capital from Perth to Edinburgh. He married Mary of Gueldrès. He granted John Langlands the half Barony of Winton in 1451. He died when a cannon exploded during the siege of Roxburgh castle, and it is said that a holly bush later marked the spot. James III (c.1452–88) King from 1460. Born the Duke of Rothesay, he was apparently not a popular King and was also reportedly bisexual. He was crowned at Kelso Abbey a week after his father died. During his minority he was under the control of the Boyd family. In 1464 he granted lands to Walter Scott of Buccleuch and Kirkurd in gratitude for services to himself and his father. He married Margaret of Denmark, receiving the Orkneys and Shetlands as a dowry. There were ongoing feuds with his 2 brothers and with other noblemen. An army was raised against him at the Battle of Sauchieburn, in which his own son fought against him. He was killed immediately afterwards by an opponent disguised as a priest. Just a few days before his death he regranted the Barony of Cavers to William Douglas, after Douglas had promised to be faithful to the King and to defend him ‘against all that live or die shall’. James IV (1473–1513) King from 1488, he was involved in the Battle of Sauchieburn against his father James III. He is regarded as an effective and popular ruler. In an attempt to make peace with Henry VII he married Margaret Tudor in 1503, celebrated in poetry as the union of the thistle and the rose (and taking place at Galashiels Market Cross). He also visited Eskdale in 1503. In 1510 he visited Rulewater to suppress some outlaws there; he is supposed to have publicly humiliated a group of about 200 Turnbulls at Spittal-on-Rule, hanging perhaps 20 of them. He removed Douglas’s lands of Hawick in 1510, but re-granted them in the 1511 charter, which contained the ‘burgh of barony’ status for Hawick. When Henry VIII invaded France he was thrown into a new conflict with England. He led the Scots at Flodden and was killed there – ‘Royal James still urged the battle. Though forewarned it would be fatal’ [JH]. ‘The fatal arrow Breathless laid the royal hero; Round him youths and warriors hoary, Ended their career of glory’ [T]. James V (1512–42) King from 1513, when only 18 months old. During his minority the country was ruled by his mother and then by the Duke of Albany. Later his step-father, the Earl of Angus, tried to wield power. In 1526 Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig (and Hawick) attempted to rescue him from the control Angus near Melrose. He visited Jedburgh in both 1526 and 1529. In 1530 he put together an army from the loyal Lairds and marched on the Borders to try to suppress the worst of the ‘Theives and lymmaris’. This led to the execution of William Cockburn of Henderland and Adam Scott of Tushielaw. He also had Johnnie Armstrong and several of his supporters hanged at Caerlernrig in a manner, which was considered grossly unfair at the time, giving rise to a ballad. He was traditionally associated with Hawick through the ‘Hab o Hawick’ episode, when he is said to have stayed at Drumlanrig’s Tower. In fact in that 1530 expedition (as traced in the ‘Household Books’) it is known that he stayed at Caerlen-rig and then at Allan Water (signing a charter at Priesthaugh), and probably got no closer to Hawick before moving through Ewesdale. However, an English letter suggests that he passed through Hawick in November 1542, en route to the fateful battle at Solway Moss (although Scott-tish accounts say that he stayed at Lochmaben Castle). He married Madeleine of France, and later Mary of Guise. He died at Falkland Palace, after the Scots defeat at Solway Moss, apparently out of a lack of will to live. He was succeeded by his infant daughter Mary (‘Queen of Scots’).

His illegitimate sons included: James, ‘the Regent Moray’; James, Commendator of Melrose and Kelso; Robert, Prior of Whithorn; Robert, Earl of Orkney; Adam Prior of Charter House; and John, Lord Darnley, Commendator of Cold-ingham. James VI (1566–1625) King of Scotland from 1567. In 1570 his army gathered at Hawick for a ‘Raid’. In 1592, Francis Earl of Bothwell and others tried to capture him at Falkland, this leading to a number of Border Lairds being denounced as rebels, including Walter Scott of Harden and Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst. He became James I of England in 1603. He was son of Mary and Lord Darnley, and was raised as a Presbyterian. He was never a very popular ruler in England, but only briefly returned to Scotland once after being crowned in London. After assuming the English throne he turned some of his attention to the Borders, setting up a commission in 1605, which appointed Sir William Cranston to ‘tame’ the Borders on the Scottish side. This spread terror across the Borders, including a huge number of hangings and forced emmigrations, and led to great hardship for many local clans. However, it also led to the region becoming much more peaceful, with the ‘Marches’ now being referred to as the ‘Middle Shires’. In 1617 he visited Cavers house on his way to Edinburgh. Known as one of the most intellectual Kings, he fostered culture in Britain and authorised the popular English translation of the Bible. He married Anne of Denmark and was succeeded by his son Charles – ‘A tale of bygone days I sing, When James the Sixth was Scotia’s king: Oft then the Borderland did ring With sounds of sternest strife …’ [JCG]. James VII (1633–1701) King from 1685–89. Younger brother of Charles II, he was Duke of York for much of his life, and converted to Catholicism while in exile in France. This led to his unpopularity throughout most of Britain.

He made attendance at conventicles a treasonous act, but had to include tolerance to Protestant dissenters in his laws of tolerance to Catholics, allowing Presbyterian ministers to return to their parishes in 1686. His is also known for having New York named after him, as well as for being heavily involved with the slave trade. The Duke of Monmouth (and Buccleuch), Charles II’s illegitimate son tried to seize the throne from him and was executed in 1685. In 1688 he was ousted in the ‘Glorious Revolution’ by the Protestant William of Orange, husband of his daughter Mary. Ministers who continued to pray for him (rather than to William and Mary) were deprived from their parishes. He died in exile in France, continuing to claim his right to the throne. His son James Francis Edward Stuart (‘the Old Pretender’) took up the Jacobite cause to regain the crown for the Stuarts.

Jameson (jām-sin) n. George (19th/20th C.)
son of Christopher and Agnes Scott, from Branx-ton Moor (near Flodden Field), Northumberland.
He was gamekeeper at Ancrum, then Chisholme and became gamekeeper at Wolfelee in 1893. In 1877 he married Agnes Hislop. James (18th C.) surgeon of Kelso who was involved in the sale of Adderstone by Francis Scott of Gorreuberry to Capt. John Douglas, brother to the Laird of cavers in 1750. Rev. William (c.1593–1661) educated at Edinburgh University, he was admitted as a minister at Peebles in 1617, and became minister at Langnewton. In 1631 he complained that several Kers from around Ancrum, Douglas of Timpendedean and others took his teinds. He was one of 51 ministers who signed a Protest for the Liberties of the Kirk’. In 1638 he signed the National Covenant, probably in Hawick. In 1640 he was translated to Jedburgh, but had to take on an assistant in 1658. He took part in 7 General Assemblies. His son John was minister at Eccles (ass also Jamieson).

James’s Plantin (jām-zeez-plawn’-in) n.
James’s Plantation, wooded area on the former estate of Synton, located just to the south of Synt-toncorses.

the James Thomson Brig (thu-jānz-tom-sin-brig) n. modern footbridge linking Teviot Road with Commercial Road, from near the bottom of Mill Port to the back of the Burns Club.
It was built in 2005 and named after local poet
James Thomson.

the James Thomson Statue (thu-jānztom-sin-staw’-yoo) n. commemorative bronze statue, sculpted by Bill Lundles, with some involvement by Iain Scott. It was unveiled in 2006, beside the bridge named after the local poet. It depicts Thomson seated at his writing desk and incorporates 4 tablets with some of his best-known verses, oriented in relevant directions, while above ‘mony a costly wraith’s been twined Ti grace his honest brow’. A smaller plaque dedicates the work to Anne Redpath. A few stones built into the plinth came from the Auld Mid Raw. Thomson himself is facing ‘Where Slitrig dances doon the glen to join the Teviot waters’.

Jamie (jä-mee) n. diminutive or hypocorism for ‘James’ (also ‘Jimmie’/‘Jimmy’ as well as the former ‘Jemmie’).

Jamie Adams (jä-mee-aw-dunz) n. Hawick character, probably of the 19th century. He could be the James Adams from England who was a road labourer living in Hawick in 1851 – ‘Sally Maclusky, Betty Johnny, Jamie Adams and Tammy Graham. The little Gover as smart as ony, Auld Mag Lamb and her penny krame’ [HI].

Jamie Cant (jä-mee-kawut) n. nickname of James Broon.

Jamie Jolly (jä-mee-jo-lee) n. local nickname, probably from the 19th century – ‘Anon Jock Belwie shuffles by, And Hie Hi hobbles ahint pellnell; There’s Jamie Jolly watchin’ a skly, And Daft Jamie ringin’ St. Mary’s bell’ [HI].

Jamie Nichol’s Trough (jä-mee-ni-kulztrof) n. alternative name for Mag Nichol’s Trough. Jamie Watson’s ‘Living Bards of the Border’ (1859). He is probably best known for his poem ‘The Aicht o’clock Bell’, about the ringing of the curfew bells in Hawick. His poem ‘Eventide in Teviotdale’ was published in the Hawick Advertiser in 1856, and he made frequent contribution there afterwards. 3 of his verses appeared in James Watson’s ‘Living Bards of the Border’ (1859). He intended to publish a volume of his poetry, but this never appeared. He had several temporary positions in Hawick, then left the Town permanently in 1861 to train as an engraver with James R. Hope in Edinburgh. He then worked with Mould & Todd, where he renewed his acquaintanceship with the engraver C.O. Murray (brother of ‘Dictionary’ Murray). Apart from a short stint in Bradford he remained in Edinburgh until about 1888 when he moved to Aberdeen.

James (b.1817/8) from Cavers Parish, he was a stocking-maker in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at Roadhead with his wife Mary Ann. James (1838–bef. 1905) born in Hawick, among his childhood friends were John Inglis and James Winthrope. From a relatively poor family, he received little schooling, but from an early age had an aptitude for drawing and reading. At about 14 he became an apprentice with James Tait, druggist, and his employer encouraged him to pursue his literary interests. At one point he took down the words of ‘The Sunflower’, the only known surviving poem of Dr. John Douglas, allowing it to be later printed in the Hawick Advertiser. He became a member of the Hawick Mutual Improvement Society in 1858, reading his first paper there that year, and remaining associated with that society until he left Hawick. His first poem ‘Home Sickness’, was published in the Hawick Advertiser in 1856, and he made frequent contribution there afterwards. 3 of his verses appeared in James Watson’s ‘Living Bards of the Border’ (1859). He intended to publish a volume of his poetry, but this never appeared. He had several temporary positions in Hawick, then left the Town permanently in 1861 to train as an engraver with James R. Hope in Edinburgh. He then worked with Mould & Todd, where he renewed his acquaintanceship with the engraver C.O. Murray (brother of ‘Dictionary’ Murray). Apart from a short stint in Bradford he remained in Edinburgh until about 1888 when he moved to Aberdeen.

James (1919/20–60) born in Hawick, he worked in the Post Office and joined the Royal Corps of Signals in 1939. In 1948 he was appointed Assistant Controller of Posts in the Federated Malay States, staying there until 1959 and then moving to Western Australia. His wife, Margaret Stewart Tweedie operated a store and post office there until her death in 1973, aged 60. Their children included J. Jardin (b.1943) and Kay (b.1952).
churches. He was a keen antiquarian, with a particular interest in language. His ‘Etymological Dictionary of the Scottish Language’ (1808) was a unique work for its time, using illustration from both old and modern Scots. The Supplement, which appeared in 1825 had the assistance of people from all over Scotland; there are many descriptions therein of Teviotdale words and idioms, which are otherwise unrecorded (these are usually noted as either ‘Roxb.’ or ‘Teviot.’). One person who helped him directly was Mrs. Patrick, the eldest daughter of Rev. Young of the Green Kirk in Hawick. Others in the Roxburghshire area included Thomas Wilkie from Innerleithen, James Fair of Langlee, the Shortreeds of Jedburgh, James Hogg (the Ettrick Shepherd) and Hogg’s nephew Robert. He laid the essential groundwork for what would become the Scottish National Dictionary. He was a keen angler and later in life spent time every summer fishing on the Tweed and its tributaries. John (b.c.1790) shoemaker in Denholm, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was on Main Street with his wife Janet Laidlaw and children James, Catherine, William, John, Andrew and Peter (also written ‘Jamisone’ and variants; cf. Jamieson).

Jamieson’s Croft (jä-mee-sinz-kroft) n. former croft near Hawick, the name being used long after the farmstead itself was gone. It is mentioned by James Wilson in 1850 and J.J. Vernon in 1900, but the precise location is uncertain.

Jamie Tackets (jä-mee-taw-kits) n. nickname for a Hawick character of the early 19th century, known for his smuggling – ‘Willie the Pailde, Gleid Rob, Knacketts, Balmer the Bugler, Bobby Trott, Pies Oliver, and Jamie Tackets, Don Pedro, Pether Hill, Waulk Scott’ [HI], ‘There’s Jamie Tackets o’ Hawick, And other two also, They saddled their horses on Sunday, And off to Boomer did go’ [T] (perhaps related to the small nails).

Jamie Tamson (jä-mee-tam-sin) n. familiar name for James Thomson.

Jamie Telfer (jä-mee-tel-fur) n. ‘Jamie Telfer o’ the Fair Dodhead’, ballad telling of the Captain of Newcastlstealing the cattle of Jamie Telfer of Dodhead, who then goes to raise the fray. It is best known from the version in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Minstrelsy’, where Telfer roused the Scotts, who rode off in pursuit, killing all the English and capturing their cattle, but leading to the death of Willie Scott. In another version (sometimes referred to as the Sharp manuscript and entitled ‘...i’ the Fair Dodhead’) it is the Elliots who are roused and the Scotts who refuse to help Telfer. There is much circumstantial evidence that Sir Walter changed the words to switch the Scott and Elliot roles, thereby mangling the geographical sense of the ballad; he is thus attacked in an essay by Col. Elliot. The existence of multiple versions is one of the reasons why the location of ‘the Fair Dodhead’ is uncertain. In the pro-Elliot version it is likely to be the former farmstead in the Ettrick valley near Singlie, while in the pro-Scott version it would make more sense if it was in the Dorn Burn valley, although there is no evidence there was ever a place there called Dodhead. Andrew Lang wrote a chapter on the ballad, defending Sir Walter Scott, and arguing that in the end it is a work of fiction, rather than history. Whatever the details of the original version or its historical accuracy, it remains one of the few Border ballads where some of the action takes place in the immediate neighbourhood of Hawick.

Jamie the Poeter (jä-mee-thu-pö-i’-ur) n. local nickname for James Hogg, the Ettrick Shepherd.

Jamie the Scaur (jä-mee-thu-skawr) n. local nickname, probably from the 19th century – ‘Dan Narry and Kit i’ the Bar, The Cud and Coulter and Five O’clock, Robbie Speedy and Jamie the Scaur, Andra Adamson and Porritch Jock’ [HI].

Jane Dice’s Kirn see Jenny Dice’s Kirk

jannie (ja-new-ar, jan-war) n. a janitor, especially in a school – ‘...the tug-o-war team were trained be Jock Heggie the jannie’ [IWL].

Januar (ja-new-ar, jan-war) n., arch. January – ‘...writin at Hawk the penult day of Januar’ [RBA1561], ‘...that the said Mr Blair did upon the twenty-third day of Januar immediatlie last bypass marry the said John Young upon the above designed Margaret Clerke ...’ [PR1706], ‘Each ’eer, as Jamuar’ – end returns, Ik yowe and stirkie waefu’ murns ...’ [DH].

Janus (jä-nis) n. column in the Hawick News, typically stirring up local issues. It was originated by Neil Mackay, but written by several contributors over the years.

japperty-jee (jaw-pur’-ee-jee) n., arch. wreck and ruin – ‘It’s a’ ti japperty-jee’ [GW] (also ‘jaapertie-jee’).

Jardine

(jar, jer, jawr-din, -deen) n. Adam (17th C.) tenant in ‘Heugh-head’, although it is unclear which Heughhead this might have been. He was mentioned in 1687 when the will of his wife Isobel ‘Rickeltown’ is recorded. He may be the Adam who witnessed a baptism for William Gardner in Hawick in 1705 and the weaver who witnessed a baptism for weaver James Brown in the same year. Adam (1758–1811) son of weaver Andrew and Betty Brown, he was a miller in Hawick Parish. He is recorded in 1790 as ‘Under Miller’ when an unnamed child of his died; this was on the same day as the child of miller John Scott, perhaps suggesting he was under-miller of Hawick Mill (and that the same disease took the lives of the new-born children). In 1794 he was a ‘workman’. He married Margaret (or ‘Peggy’) Murray in 1783, in Ewes Parish and she died in Hawick in 1797. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1783), born at Howgill in Ewes, who married Andrew Scott, from Morebattle; Andrew (d.1787); an unnamed child (d.1790); Isobel (d.1794), who died in infancy; and Helen (c.1796–1860), who died in Morebattle, unmarried. In 1798 he secondly married Jane Graham, who may have died in 1806. The witnesses in 1783 were John and William Bridges (probably his father-in-law) and William Swan, in 1673 were Walter Purdom and William Bridges and in 1678 were Patrick and Adam Bridges. Isobel may have been another daughter. John (d.1690), baptised in Hawick, was probably also his son. Andrew (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick, son of Andrew, with his stepmother being Janet Goodfellow. He was probably the son of Andrew and Janet Bridges baptised in Hawick in 1680. He was recorded as ‘Adam [sic] Jerden younger weaver’ in one version of a baptismal record of 1709. The member of the Council recorded in 1711 was either him or his father. He was ‘younger weaver’ in 1711. In 1715 he petitioned the Hawick Session to reinstate the place for his wife’s stool in the Kirk, she having been in Ewes Parish temporarily. Probably the same Andrew was questioned by the Session in 1718 about why he was seen coming out of the Beadle’s house at a late hour of the night. He witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1745 for shoemaker George Oliver. He married Helen Cook in Hawick in 1702 and their children included Janet (b.1703), Margaret (b.1705), Andrew (b.1707), James (b.1708), Beatrix (b.1709), Jean (b.1711), John (b.1713), James (b.1717), William (b.1717), Helen (b.1718), Christian (b.1719), Andrew (b.1721) and Elizabeth (b.1722). The witnesses in 1708 were weavers Thomas Briggs and John Oliver, in 1709 were John and Jasper Richardson, in 1711... were weaver Thomas Briggs and gardener William Gardner, in 1713 were William Gardner and John Napier, and in 1721 were weaver Robert Tinlin and shoemaker John Scott. Andrew (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1706 he married Margaret Fraser. He may be the same as one of the other Andrews. Andrew (18th C.) Hawick resident, possibly Burgh Officer or joiner. In 1732 he was paid for mending the beam for the weights of the clock in St. Mary’s Kirk. And in 1735 the Bailies and Council elected him ‘to keep the town clock sufficiently to his power under the penalty of forfeiting a year’s salary’. It is unclear if he is the same as one of the other Andrews. Andrew (18th C.) probably the Andrew, son of Andrew, baptised in 1721. He was a weaver in Hawick. He married Betty Brown, who died in Hawick in 1781. Their children included: Isobel (b.1743); Helen (b.1745); and Adam (b.1758). The witnesses in 1743 were baker John Kedie and wright James Roger and in 1745 were late Bailie John Scott and saddler Francis Ruecaster. Archibald (19th/20th C.) writer of ‘History of Hawick Baptist Church’ (1925), as well as a short history of Hawick Home Mission. Archibald (b.1891) son of James. He worked in his father’s tweed merchant’s on Croft Road, this later becoming a drapery business and moving to 8 Oliver Place. He started in the family business at age 14 and retired in 1962. He also served in the Artillery in WWI. Charles (b.1871/8) farmer at Riccarton. He was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale in the 1850s. He was still farmer there in 1861, but was unmarried. He was a generous subscriber to David Anderson book of verse in 1868 and was recorded as farmer at Riccarton in the same year. Gavin (d.bef. 1535) recorded as ‘umquhill Gawin Jardin’ when a charter was revoked involving the lands of Broadlee in the Borthwick to James Douglas of Drumlanrig, in favour of him. It is unclear whether his family was local. Gideon of Dinlabyre (18th C.) recorded in 1786 when he subscribed to a theological book by a Carlisle author. He was listed as ‘Mr. Gilbert Jardin, Dinlabyre’. He is also recorded at Dinlabyre on the Horse Tax Rolls in 1789–92. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Arkleton in Ewesdale in 1785–97 according to the Horse Tax Rolls. He had 3 farm horses and a saddle horse. He also paid the dog and clock taxes in 1797. James of Thorlieshope (1809/10–46) eldest son of Walter of Thorlieshope. He was tenant farmer at Arkleton, being listed there in 1841. His son-in-law was Dr. Charles Maxwell, who had the lease of the farm at Riccarton. He died at Arkleton and was buried in Castleton. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Dinlabyre, recorded on the 1794–97 Horse Tax Rolls. His name there is spelled ‘Jardane’. He was also taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. It is unclear if he was the same man as the farmer at Larriston. James (18th/19th C.) farmer recorded at Larriston on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 4 horses. He was also taxed for having 4 non-working dogs in 1797. He is also recorded at Larriston in 1794. He is probably related to other Jardines who farmed in Liddesdale and was probably succeeded by James. He may be the James of Larriston listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805. He may also be the James of Thorlieshope listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1819, along with his son Walter. James (d.c.1810) tenant farmer at Wauchope. His sons were John and Walter. He had a bond with the Elliots of Harwood in 1763. James (18th/19th C.) keeper of a public house in Newcastleton, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He was also listed as an innkeeper in Newcastleton among male heads of households in 1835, and ‘late innkeeper’ 1837–41. James of Larriston (19th C.) recorded as a principal landowner in Castleton Parish in the 1850s and 60s. He purchased Larriston from George Scott-Elliot in 1843 for £29,000. He was James ‘Esq., of Larriston, Dryfesdoholm, Lockerbie’ who was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale in the 1850s, and served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire at about the same time. In 1874 he was listed as owner of Over and Nether Larriston, as well as Larriston Rig and Blackhope. It seems likely he was son of the previous James of Larriston. He may be the James of Thorlieshope recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory and the Jardine of Thorlieshope on the Committee of the Proprietors of Castleton Library in 1832. James (1852–1927) local poet, who always signed ‘J.J. Weensland’. He was a native of Dumfriesshire, being born at Broadmeadow, Ecclefechan, son of George. He was orphaned at the age of 9, and at 13 went to work for a manufacturer in Lockerbie. Not long after he moved to Weensland, where he served an apprenticeship in a tweed warehouse. He was said to be a regular attendee of evening classes. Due to an injury he gave up work as a warehouseman and became a tweed merchant, based on Croft Road. He contributed poems regularly to the local press and lived most of his life in Hawick. He served as President of the Border Bards Association in 1881. He married Margaret, daughter of Archibald Campbell Turnbull and Mary Buchan, who came from Ancrum. She died in 1938. Their children were: Georgina; Bessie Jane; and Archibald, who took over the family tweed merchant’s. John of Applegarth (15th C.) witness to a document relating to Whitchesters for the Scots of Buccleuch in 1456; it is possible this refers to him being witness to the return of a few years earlier. He may be the same John of ‘Appelgarth’ who sold Jardinefield to George Home of Wedderburn in 1476. John (b.c.1790) born in Hawick, he later lived in Langholm. He was a shoemaker in Langholm in 1861 and was described as ‘Post Messenger’ in Langholm in 1871. His wife was Jane and their children included Walter, William and Thomas. John of Thorlieshope (b.1811) son of Walter of Thorlieshope. He farmed at Arkleton from the time his brother James died in 1846. He is listed as ‘Esq., of Thorlieshope, Arkleton, Ewes’ in the 1850s when he was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale. He was also ‘of ThorliesHope’ in Slater’s 1852 directory. He also served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He was still of Thorlieshope in the 1860s. He is listed at Arkleton in 1861, farming 2000 acres and employing 1 labourer. He was listed as owner of Thorlieshope on the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. He remained unmarried. His support of the Liddesdale route for the railway was unpopular in Langholm – ‘Has Jardine gane to mind his dogs An’ left the maps to minin’ rogues; He may invest in tups an’ hoggs, But mind I’ve said it, His cash will sink in Plashett’s bogs As fast’s he’s made it’ [BM1907]. John (b.1813/4) tenant of Ruecastle farm in 1837, and listed on the 1841 census. In 1851 he was farmer of 300 acres, employing 7 labourers. Sir John (d.1919) M.P. for Roxburghshire 1906–18. He was succeeded as Baronet Jardine by his son John Eric Birdwood. Peter (b.1847) born at Langhaugh Walls on the Wauchope estate, his mother was daughter of Langburnshiel shepherd William Tait. He was educated at Hobkirk Parish school and started working on Wolfelee estate in his teens, eventually becoming the forester. In 1866 he married Margaret Armour of Ayrshire (from the same family as Robbie Burns’ wife). They had a daughter Janet Barr, who married W. Stedman. Robert (b.1761/2) toll-keeper and spirit dealer at Ewes New Toll Bar in 1841. He was living there with Catherine, probably his wife. Robert (b.c.1778) farmer at Harwood on Teviot. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was recorded there in 1841, along with his children Agnes, Isabella (who married James Murray in Bovina, New York) and Gilbert. He is probably the Robert who married Agnes, eldest daughter of John Nixon, in Hawick in 1811; she could be the ‘Mrs Jardine Harwood’ who died in Hawick in 1815. Sir Robert of Liddelbank (1825–1905) born in Edinburgh, he was a successful merchant and Liberal politician. He was M.P. for Ashburton in Devon, then for the Dumfries Burghs and later for Dumfriesshire. He was created 1st Baronet of Castlemilk, Dumfriesshire in 1885. He owned the farm of Thorlieshope in upper Liddesdale in the late 19th century, as well as Liddelbank in the southernmost tip of Castleloan Parish. In 1874 he paid the land tax on Liddelbank, which was part of Greena. Walter (18th/19th C.) farmer at Fairloans in Castleloan Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was also taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. Walter (1771/2–1826) son of James and brother of John. He was listed along with his father as a Commissioner in Roxburghshire in 1819, when he was still younger of Thorlieshope. He farmed at Thorlieshope. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was a cautioner for the agent of the Leith Banking Company in langholm in 1822, and involved in a related court case in 1830. His wife Margaret Armstrong died in 1818, aged 32. Their eldest son James died at Arkleton in 1846, aged 36. Other children included: John (b.1811); Walter (b.1813); Thomas (b.1815); and Charles (b.1817). The family are buried in Castleton. Walter (18th/19th C.) agent in Hawick for carrier John Hargreaves, who operated to all parts of the North according to Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Walter (b.1813) son of Walter and brother of James and John. In 1851 and 1861 he was living at Arkleton and listed as a ‘Retired Lieutenant Indian Navy’. William (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784 (formerly synonymous with Jordan; also written ‘Girdin’, ‘Gyrden’, ‘Jardin’, ‘Jerdon’, ‘Jirdin’, etc.).

Jas. (jas) n. formerly common abbreviation for ‘James’.

Jasp (jawsp) n., arch. a seam or gap in the weave of fabric – ‘There’s no a broken jasp in this coat o’ meine, an’ A’ve wurr’n t’is twae eer’ [ECS] (cf. jesp).

Jean Caleb (jeen-kā-leb) n. nickname of Jean Rutherford.

Jean Cummimg’s (jeen-ku-minz, ki-minz) n. shop run by Jean Cummimg (or ’Kimming’), situated on the north side of the Howegate in the early 19th century. It was well known for selling a wide variety of ‘small-wares’, dealing with almost everything edible or useful. The shop was in an old pended house, and was reached by descending 2 steps. It had no window at the front, but had its door in halves, so the owner could lean out the top while talking with passers-by. The room at the back had a small window and was the ’Widow Cummimg’s’ house. The building was thatched until first slated in the early 1800s. The shop was taken over by Jean’s daughter Nannie. A right of way led to the back from Kennedy’s on the Sandbed, which would be walked annually (also known as ‘Jean Kimming’s’).

Jeanie Ma Lord (jee-nee-mu-lörd) n. nickname for Jean Oliver, usually written ’Jeanie My Lord’ – ’Could Jean my Lord lift up her head Or Clinty fling his arms abroad …’. [AD] (also written ’Jeany’, etc.).

Jean the Ranter (jeen-thu-rawn-tur) n. character in a poem written by Old Hobbie of Skelfhill. She kept an alehouse at Branxholme, and was said to indulge in witchcraft, making Capt. Maitland fall in love with her daughter ‘The Bonny Lass of Branxome’. Further information from James Grieve, tenant in Branxholme Park, suggested that she was Jane Scott and kept an inn at Scatterpenny. She was presumably a widow at the time of the song, which (if it describes historical events) appears to be set about the late 17th century. It is possible she was the Jean Scott listed as a householder on the 1694 Hearth Tax records.

jauk (jawk) v., arch. to screech like a jackdaw – ‘And he croupt sae queer when he offer’t to talk, That the youngsters, affrighted, did yelloch and jauk’ [JoHa].

the Jazz Festival (thu-jawz-fes-ti-vul) n. the Borders Festival of Jazz and Blues, which took place in September from 1996 until 2006, with the committee folding in 2007. The festival featured live performances, a parade and a brolly competition.

Jean (jeen) n. Christian name common in Scotland, formerly the popular form for ‘Jane’ or ‘Joan’ (in the 18th and 19th centuries this was usually the name used, even when ‘Jane’ appeared on the birth register).
game’s jecket up!’ [HAST1958], ‘She jecket ’im up again, the limmer!’ [GW], to dislocate a joint, throw out of place by jerking – ‘A’ve jecket ma cuit’ [ECS] (similar to ‘jack’ in English).

the Jed (thu-jed) n. popular name for Jed Witter – ‘O softly, Jed! they sylvan current lead Round every copse and smiling mead’ [JL], ‘Frac this hill tap wi’ me look down On yonder woods sae bonnie, Fro those that skirt the stream o’ jed Are fairer far than ony’ [TCh], ‘Now lose your girths for a beathing space Ere the deep o’ the moss to Jed we face’ [WHO], ‘Hermitage wistfully lifts her head, Where the mists on the lone moors fall: Ferniehurst, lulled by the crooning of Jed, Lies wrapped in her sylvan shawl’ [WL] (it is ‘Jed’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Jedburgh (jed-bu-ru) n. official name for Jethart (the name first occurs in relation to ‘Jedburgh Forest’ in the early 14th century, but this modern anglicised form was not applied to the town until a document of 1630; it occurs on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Jedd-brugh’).

Jeddart Justice see Jethart Justice

Jedfit (jed-fi) n. Jedfoot, former station on the Jedburgh Railway of the Kelso Branch of the North British Railway. The nearby ‘Jedfit Brig’ is the main road bridge across the foot of the Jed on the A698 from Hawick to Kelso.

Jedforest (jed-fo-rist) n. another name for Jedburgh, or the area around Jedburgh, used for example by the rugby team. ‘Jedburgh Forest’ was a former barony and regality, which included Southdean Parish and other outlying lands. The Lordship of Jedforest was held by the Douglases and the Homes and came into the hands of the Crown in 1539, which resulted in a surviving rental roll of 1541, listing the tenants and values of about 40 farms. The lands were it was valued at more than £4000 in 1811. The rugged terrain was used as cover by the Scots forces harassing the English garrison at Jedburgh Castle in the 1330s and 1340s.

the Jedforest Club (thu-jed-fo-rist-klub) n. club set up in 1810 to serve the gentlemen of the area around Jedburgh, probably inspired by the older Forest Club of the Ettrick valley. The founder was William, Earl of Ancram (later Earl of Lothian) along with 23 other men. The Club met quarterly at the Spread Eagle Inn in Jedburgh, with the membership limited to 40. The members originally had to dine in a green jacket, specially made from Cheviot wool, replaced later with blue jackets. In 1834 many of the Whig supporters left the club after the Chairman refused to drink the health of the sitting M.P. (who was a Whig).

the Jedforest Hounds (thu-jed-fo-rist-howndz) n. fox hunting group, formed in the mid-19th century in the Rulewater area. The lands were set aside for hunting by the Duke of Buccleuch and it attracted horsemen from a wide area, centred on Rulewater. The western boundary was the Allan Water, on the north the Teviot, on the east Dere Street and on the south the Border. Hounds have been kept at Abbotrule in recent times. The foxhounds were transferred from Baillie of Mellerstain to the Duke of Buccleuch in about 1827 and were the first ‘subscription’ pack in Roxburghshire. A new pack was put together in about 1885 by Charlie Sinclair, with the assistance of Captain Palmer-Douglas and others. Tom Scott Anderson was Master in about 1892–1903.

Jed Forest (jed-fo-rist) n. ancient forest around Jedburgh. The Capon Tree is supposed to be the sole survivor of the forest, although there are also still some old trees along the Jed Water in Southdean Parish. The lands there were formerly known as ‘Jedworth Forest’ and variants.

Jedheid (jed-heed) n. Jedhead, area near the source of the Jed Water, in the southern part of Southdean Parish. The farm is one of those that passed from Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, to the Crown in about 1537, with Walter Scott of Buccleuch being accused of occupying the lands. David Laidlaw was tenant there in 1694. It was also ‘Jedheads’ in 1868 when J.H. Pringle was farmer there (it is ‘Jedheid’ in 1538 and 1539 and ‘jedheads’ in 1694).

Jed Murray (jed-mu-ri) n. familiar name of J.E.D. Murray.

Jed Murray’s Studio (jed-mu-riz-stew-dee-ô) n. former photographer’s studio of J.E.D. Murray, on the east side of North Bridge Street. This was where his business moved from its previous premises located where the Post Office would later be built. Nos. 43 and 45 North Bridge Street were designed by J.P. Alison as a studio and house. They were built in an art nouveau style in 1899–1900, in red sandstone with interesting mosaic work and internal details. The ‘House’ and ‘Studio’ signs can still be read on the building. The Studio was in use until 1972, with the Border Club moving there in 1973.

the Jed Murray Trophy (thu-jed-mu-ri-trô-lee) n. the J.E.D. Murray Memorial Challenge
Jedward Terrace

Jedward Terrace (jed-wurd-te-ris) n. street in Denholm, built in the 1930s.

Jed Witter (jed-wi’-ur) n. river passing through Jedburgh and running into the Teviot—‘There are banks on bonnie Jed Where the Fairies weel micht tread . . . ’ [TK] (origin uncertain).

Jedworth (jed-wurth) n. older variant of Jethart—‘Then, Jedworth! though they ancient choirs shall fade, And time lay bare each lofty colonnade, From the damp roof the massy sculptures die, And in their vaults they rifted arches lie’ [JL] (common before the 17th century, e.g. it is ‘Jedeworth’ in 1353/4, ‘Gedwortht’ in 1456 and ‘Jedworcht’ in 1508).

jeeg (jeeeg) n., arch. a contemptible person, someone to be taunted, a ‘fright’, something of ludicrous appearance { ‘An awfli-leike jeeg’ [ECS], ‘Shuir eneuch, A wad look a richt jeeg thing of ludicrous appearance { ‘An awfli-leike jeeg’ [JW1722] (also written ‘jist’).}
jeest (jee’) n., arch. a joist—‘For gist to the steeple’ [JW1722] (also written ‘jist’).
jeet (jee’) n., adj. jet.

Jeffrey (je-free) n. Alexander (1806–74) son of Alexander and Janet Smeaton, he was born near Bewlie. He worked at Lilliesleaf Mill as a boy, but was a keen reader and in 1825 entered the legal office of James Curle in Melrose and eventually in 1838 became a solicitor of the Roxburghshire Sheriff Court. He was said to be well known for taking on what seemed like hopeless defence cases. He was a strong proponent of the Reform Bill, although his idiosyncratic views kept him apart from the other local Reformers. Interested in all things related to the antiquities and customs of the Borders, he wrote ‘An Historical and Descriptive Account of Roxburghshire’ (1836) and ‘Guide to the Antiquities of the Border’ (1838). In 1855 he published the first volume of his work ‘The Histories and Antiquities of Roxburghshire and adjoining Districts’, which was followed by 3 other volumes. This forms a valuable early collection of information about the county, although it is occasionally inaccurate or wildly speculative. He also published a few other more modest works. His wife Katherine died in 1872 and he himself died following some kind of stroke suffered while at the Sheriff Court in Jedburgh. He is buried in Jedburgh Abbey kirkyard.

the Jehovahs (thu-jē-hō-vuž) n. members of the Jehovah’s Witness movement, founded in the U.S.A. in the late 19th century, promoting active evangelism and preaching the imminent Second Coming. In Hawick the Kingdom Hall meeting house was on Buccleuch Place, in the former Teviotdale Clubrooms, and they are now based at 18 Deloraine Court.

jeest (jist) n., arch. a joist—‘The jeists o’ our hous ar cedar, an’ our raftries o’ fir’ [HSR].

Jeistins'-haugh (jist-inz-hawch) n. former name for a flat piece of land by the Rule Water at Bonchester. It is said to have been where local youths used to practice archery and jousting (also called the Justin Haugh).

Jemmie (je-mee) n. erstwhile diminutive form of James, later replaced by ‘Jamie’.

Jemmy-linkum-feedle (je-mee-ling-kum-lee-dul) n. a frivolous person—‘These frieblish characters which on the Border we call a ‘Jenmylinkum-feedle’, too conceited to be pleased with natural feeling, too shallow to fathom his subject, and too vain to deny his reader the perusal of his most triffling and common-place remarks’ [IL].

Jen (jen) n. Christian name, often a familiar form of Jane or Janet.

Jenet (je-nil) n. former version of the Christian name ‘Janet’, common into the 18th century (also written ‘Jennet’).

Jenkin (jen-kinz) n. Daniel (b.1848) 3rd son of Tom, he was born in Mauritius. He was educated at Royal College, Mauritius and attended London University from 1865. He was a student of the Middle Temple in 1874 and called to the bar in 1883. He then became a prominent lawyer in Mauritius. He firstly married Amelia Keeley and secondly married Mary Louisa Payne. His children included Daniel Remy, William, Marie, Laura Amelia and Elsie. A small street in the western part of Port Louis is named after him. Thomas Joseph ‘Black Tom’ (c.1798–1859) probably Teviotdale’s first black resident. Born somewhere on the Guinea coast of west Africa (probably in the modern Sierra Leone or perhaps Liberia), he was possibly the son of a slave-trading chief called ‘King Cock-eye’ (because he was missing an eye). In 1803, in his 6th year, he was taken back to be educated in Britain by James Swanson (or Swanstone), who was from Hawick, son of a waiter at the Tower Hotel; unfortunately Swanson died a few days after returning from Africa. On the journey the young African became a favourite (and also the object of ridicule) of the sailors, and his first attempts to say the name of his sponsor apparently sounded like ‘Tom Jenkins’, which was then adopted as his own name (although there is an alternative explanation that the name may have been a variant on his African title). After a few weeks in England, Swanson brought him back to Hawick, but unfortunately died after only a few days. Tom spent the first couple of months at the Tower Hotel, where he was cared for by Mrs. Brown, wife of the proprietor. He then lived for a few years with Tom Lunn (Swanson’s brother-in-law) at ‘Shuttlehaa’ near Teviothead, learning English and particularly the local dialect. He thrived academically at the school in Teviothead, and was also the best dancer when that was taught. He was taken on as cow-herd and errand-boy for Mr. Pott of Caerlenrig and was then hired by Mr. Laidlaw of Falnash, helping on the farm and running errands to Hawick. He was further educated at an evening school in Hawick, eventually studying Greek and Latin (buying a Greek dictionary at auction in Hawick). Already being a student assistant at the school, at the age of about 20 he became schoolmaster at Teviothead; however the appointment had to be endorsed by the authorities. Although tested and approved by the local heritors (including the Hawick minister, Rev. Arkle), he was rejected by the Presbytery. So instead, an old smiddy was converted as an independent school for him to teach in (paid for by the Duke of Buccleuch and other heritors), from around 1815 until December 1818. It is said that he taught 5 days a week and on the 6th day would walk to Hawick to continue his own studies with the master of the Grammar School, Christopher Armstrong (and would also attend Hawick Kirk on the Sabbath). He was also supported in Hawick by David Moncrieff, who additionally helped get him an introduction (and funds) to take some courses at Edinburgh University (although he was perhaps only there for a month or two). He was also patronised by the Watsons of Hawick (the Quaker family of manufacturers). After this he resumed teaching in Teviothead, but was then recommended as a missionary by the Christian Knowledge Society. He said his last farewells to his male friends (and perhaps some female ones, since it was said that ‘he never was scorned wi’ a lass’). Hawick manufacturer William Watson wrote him a reference in 1818 for the British and Foreign School Society and that year he was enrolled in their teacher training college at Borough Road in London. While there he taught at a new school for poor children in Pimlico, which he helped to set up, and also taught at a school on Grafton St., Fitzrovia. In 1821 he was sent to Mauritius to be a teacher there. He never corresponded with his old friends in Hawick, so that it was generally believed locally that he had not survived the voyage to Mauritius. In fact he was a successful and respected teacher there for the next 37 years. He ran the ‘Model School’ in Port Louis and was involved in introducing several new teaching methods (e.g. singing lessons and the use of the creole dialect). He married (his wife’s name being Augustine Laurencia Jenkins) and had 4 children, who were born in the 1840s: Samuel Thomas; Thomas Lionel, who trained as a lawyer; Daniel, also a lawyer; and Mary. His later life is unclear, with a possibility that he returned to Sierra Leone and established a private school there. Certainly a man of that name is associated.

with Sierra Leone and his story (e.g. in the article ‘Early Religious Influences in Sierra Leone’) mixes up the 2 men: he was said to have first arrived in Freetown in 1815, ‘garbed fantastically in a Scotch kilt and having the new American flag above it’, then moving to Scotland where he attended ‘classes at Edinburgh University, acting as schoolmaster in a village near Berwick-upon-Tweed, volunteering for service with the Christian Knowledge Society, and becoming a missionary to Mauritius’. He was then said to have returned to Freetown, where he established a school in Wilberforce Street and was much in demand as an orator. In 1858 his name appears on a list of members of the Mercantile Association of the City of Freetown who petitioned for a change in the way the government was administered in Sierra Leone. It is unclear how many stories are compounded here and whether our Tom Jenkins ever returned to Sierra Leone. His local story was described in a posthumous W.N. Kennedy article in the Transactions of 1870, with further details in Rev. John Thomson’s ‘Alexander Hope: A Hawick Story’ (1878). His existence in Mauritius was already noted in the 1837 publication ‘Exemplary and Instructive Biography’ (updating an article on Tom published in Chambers’ Edinburgh Journal in 1832). M. Duffil wrote further Transactions article on this subject in 1990 and 1994. In 2003 a memorial plaque was unveiled at the old smithy where he taught in Teviothead. Thomas ‘Tammy’ (19th C.) tramp who was a regular visitor to Liddesdale in the mid-19th century. He was a ‘dainty, cannie body, who always carried a cat in his bosom’. Thomas Lionel (b.c.1845) 2nd son of Tom. He was a student at the Middle Temple in 1862 and called to the bar in 1865. He practised at the supreme court of Mauritius.

Jenkin’s hen (jeng-kinz-hen) n., arch. a hen that never knew the attentions of a cock – ‘To die like Jenkin’s hen’ [JoJ], used figuratively – ‘Ti dei the daith o’ Jenkin’s hen – for the want o’ braith’ [GW].

Jen McVitie’s (jen-nuk-vi’-eez) n. tripe shop, across from Laura Bennett’s on the corner of Drumlanrig Square and the Kirk Wynd, which closed in the late 1920s.

Jenny (je-nee) n. Christian name, usually a familiar form of Jane or Janet.

jenny (je-nee) n., arch. a country girl, a man who does housework – ‘Hei’s a raigler jenny’ [GW] (cf. jessie).

jenny-aathing (je-nee-aw-thing) n. a general shop, run by a woman.

Jenny-Aathing (je-nee-aw-thing) n. nickname for former specific shop, perhaps applied to more than one such business and the female shopkeeper who ran it – ‘When ye run oot o’ butter, or need a bit soap, Jist pop roond the corner, tae Jenny’s wee shop’ [IJ], ‘Here’s Soapy Ballantyne and Wull Shush, Here’s Todd Lowrie and Peggy Neill; Davie A’-things and auld Kush-Mush, And Jenny A’-things is here as weel’ [HI].

Jenny Dice’s Kirn (je-nee-di-seez-kirn) n. former name for a bend in the Wauchope Burn in Rulewater, situated to the south of Dykeheads farmstead. It is marked this way on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, and is ‘Jane Dice’s Kirn’ on a map of 1772 (the origin of the name is unclear, but presumably it was a place where the water was churned up and named after a local character, either real or imaginary).

Jenny Din (je-nee-din) n. Hawick character of the 19th century – ‘Peggy Duncan and Jenny Din, Nellie Herkness and Mensie Mein; The Wilton Priest wi’ his coat o’ skin, Staney Stewart and Candy Jean’ [HI].

Jenny Ern-yets (je-nee-ern-yets) n. nickname for Jenny Cathrae (also written ‘A’rnt Yets’ etc.).

jenny hunder-feet (je-nee-hun-dur-fe’) n., arch. the centipede (also maggie monyfeet and maggie monyfeets).

jenny langlegs (je-nee-lawng-legz) n. a daddy longlegs, a harvestman, or sometimes cranefly (cf. deddy langlegs).

Jenny Ma Lord (je-nee-mu-lord) n. another version of Jeannie My Lord, a nickname for Jean Oliver.

jenny nettle (je-nee-ne’-ul) n., arch. a stinging nettle, Urtica dioica.

jenny-speeder (je-nee-spee-dur) n., arch. the cranefly, Tipula oleracea (cf. jenny-spinner and speeder-jenny).

Jenny’s Penny (je-neez-pe-nee) n. nickname for a Hawick character around the mid-19th century – ‘Goold Ballantyne and auld Hawick Jock, Wattie Moudie, Jock Gray and a’; Jenny’s Penny wi’ plaid o’ check, Betty Revel and auld Jean Law’ [HI].

Jenny Stott (je-nee-stö’) n. name for the field on Hawick Common, behind the trees to the west of the racecourse. The origin of the name is unknown.

Jenny the Deevil (je-nee-thu-dee-vul) n. local character of the early 19th century, full name unknown. She kept a licensed house on Silver Street that was known simply as ‘Jenny the Deevil’s’.

Jenny’s Tongue (je-nee-z-tung) n. small hill near the border of Roxburghshire with Dumfriesshire. It lies between Little Tuddhope Hill and Millstone Edge and reaches a height of about 425 m.

Jenny Tranklicks (je-nee-tran'-liks) n. nickname for Jenny Cathrae (cf. the Middle English ‘trant’, meaning a trick, or possibly a derivative of ‘trantle’, meaning a trinket).

Jenny Trankletts (je-nee-trangk-lits) n. another variant on ‘Jenny Tranklicks’, nickname of Jenny Cathrae – ‘The Sootie Kittlin’ and Bummna Rae, Jenny Tranklets and auld Cauld Kail, Jamie Sprinkie, Kessy, the Kay, Doctor H’Yiggs and the Wat Wat Sail’ [HI].

Jenny Walker’s Brae (je-nee-waw-kurz-brā) n. hill road somewhere in the Rule valley, probably a name for the road connecting the A698 with the Rule Water, between Denholm and Spittal.

Jipps (jips) n. John (b.1841) son of John and Mary Seely, from Steeple Bumstead. He was coachman to Sir William Eliott of Stobs. He married Mary, daughter of Robert Amos of Rulewater. They later moved to London, where his wife died in 1870, leaving daughters Margaret and Mary 9also written ‘Jipps’).

Jerdan (jer-din) n. Archibald ‘Baldy’ (18th C.) brother of Alexander, a rich Newcastle merchant and banker. He served for a short period as factor to Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs, being recommended to Col. Elliot of Wells in 1726. He ran the estates there (Col. Elliot being almost always in London), and instigated much planting (including 10,000 young fir trees in one purchase from Dickson’s nurseries). For his efforts he was paid £12 per year, along with grass for his horse, and allowance for paper, ink and wax, as well as the use of a modest bedroom in the mansion house. In 1742 he surveyed the lands of East and West Mains of Hawick for the Scotts of Buccleuch, leading to their division. He paid the window tax for the Wells estate in 1753. He grew quite wealthy and purchased part of Bonjedward in 1751 (with more of the estate in 1767), followed by Haughhead (in Eckford Parish) and then Brockmoor in Warwickshire. However, he continued to serve as Wells factor for the next 2 Lairds, retiring in the late 1760s. He was probably the ‘Archibald Jerdan of Boon Jedburgh’ listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. His only child was Jane, who married Thomas Caverhill and their son Archibald took the surname Jerdan as his heir. His rental book (covering the period 1728–60) was described in an article by A.O. Curie in 1908. His wife is probably the ‘Mrs. Jerdan’ who is listed paying tax in Jedburgh for having servants in her employ. Archibald of Bonjedward (c.1770s–1842) only son of Thomas Caverhill and Jane Jerdan (who died in 1780, aged 30). He succeeded as heir to his grandfather, taking Jerdan as his surname. He was taxed for having a female servant in 1785 and in 1788 was recorded as owner of Bonjedward and other lands in Jedburgh Parish, valued at more than £2400, as well as lands in Eckford Parish. His sister Jane married Rev. Peter Young of Jedburgh. He fought a legal case to keep the estate from another branch of the family. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. He was one of the founder members of the Jedforest Club and in 1810 became Captain of the 1st Regiment of Roxburghshire Militia. He was recorded as a freetholder in the Michaelmas Head Court of Jedburgh in 1811. He was said to be liberal in all things, but often came into financial difficulty, and had to sell off parts of his estate (in 1808 the estate was advertised for sale, entirely or in parts). He married Elizabeth Sarah Milner in 1808. They had 2 sons and 5 daughters. He and his wife died within a few days of each other, the local story at the time being that they had eaten something poisonous. He was succeeded by his son Thomas Caverhill Jerdan, who was a doctor with the East India Company, published ‘A Catalogue of the Birds of the Peninsular of India’ and sold Bonjedward to the Marquess of Lothian in 1845. His daughter Jane married John Elliot, son of William of Harwood. Gilbert (18th/19th C.) footman at Haggiehaugh in Castleton Parish in 1797, when he was working for Col. William Elliot. William (1782–1869) son of John and Agnes Stuart, he was born at ‘Lang Linkie’, Kelso, near where the Teviot joins then Tweed. His father served as Baron Bailie for Kelso (where the court was frequented by ‘Hawick Willie’), but died suddenly in 1796 when he himself was only 13. He took an interest in Border ballads and history from an early age. He spent time in Edinburgh, eventually moving permanently to London to pursue a writing career. He wrote extensively as an... essayist, critic and poet, eventually becoming editor of the Sun newspaper and then the Literary Gazette (for 33 years). He also became famous for standing next to Prime Minister Perceval when he was assassinated in 1811, and being the first to grab the assassin. He helped found the Royal Society for Literature in 1826. After his retirement, in 1852/3 he published his autobiography and continued to write until well into his 80s (formerly spelled ‘Jerdine’, ‘Jerdon’, etc.; see also Jardine).

Jerkin (jer-kin) n. a close-fitting, collarless, sleeveless jacket of the 16th century, the word more recently applied to a coat of any sort – ‘...While bill-men leather-jerkin clad Came bounding down the Dean’ [JI] (interchangeable with jerkined).

Jerkined (jer-kind, jir-kind) adj., pp., arch. wearing a jerkin – ‘I see the Teviot redden to a sunrise long ago And the line of helmed and jerkined lads, asplash to the saddle bow’ [JYH].

Jerusalem (je-roo-saw-lum) n. former name for a farm in Lilliesleaf Parish, also sometimes ‘New Jerusalem’. It probably corresponds to Friarshawmuir. Andrew Cunningham was farmer of 150 acres there in 1851. John Hislop was farmer there in 1868.

Jesp (jesp) n., arch. a speck, stain, blemish – ‘He hasna a jesp o’ dirt on ’im’ [GW], a seam or flaw in fabric (also jasp).

Jessie (je-see) n. a cowardly, effeminate or weak man – ‘what’s wrong wi ee, yuh big jessie?’ (cf. jenny).

Jess McVeetie’s (jes-muk-vee’-ez) n. former shop at the corner of Drumlanrig Square and the Kirk Wynd – ‘Oo went ti Paisley’s for oor tools, Jess McVeetie’s for rockools, Lynch’s hed a’ kinda o’ toys, Ellen Riddle hed her pies ... ’ [IWL], Hawick bakes ... ’ [JEDM], ‘And Jess McVeetie offered, up the Wynd, The grandest sticky taffee in the town’ [WL].

Jess o the Toll (jes-ō-thu-tōl) n. nickname of Jess Hunter (nee Johnstone).

Jethart (je-thur’) n. Jedburgh, town 12 miles north-east of Hawick, lying on the Jed Water, which flows into the Teviot. The town is first recorded in 854 as ‘Gedwearde’ and is claimed to be the first parish in Scotland. It was a Royal Burgh since the 12th century and was a former county town of Roxburghshire. A church was noted here from as early as the 9th century, with a priory established by David I in 1118, and the abbey shortly afterwards. The castle was handed over to the English in 1174, as part of the Treaty of Falaise, and was later occupied by the officers of Edward I and II. The town was given to the English by Edward Baliol in 1334, recovered by William Douglas in 1342, but claimed again by the English several times over the next century. The town was destroyed several times by the English, in 1410, 1416, 1464 and most notably in 1523 by the Earl of Surrey’s men. As well as the Abbey, a house of Carmelite friars was established in 1513. The town was long afterwards known for its pear orchards, presumably a vestige of the monk’s fruit gardens. The town was looted and burned by the English in 1544. In the 17th century it was said to be a centre for smuggling goods south of the Border, particularly malt and leather. Several early Kings of Scotland spent time there, including David I, Malcolm IV, William the Lion, Alexander II, Alexander III and Robert the Bruce, as well as Mary, Queen of Scots. The old bridge at the foot of the Canongate, dating from the 16th century, is probably similar to Hawick’s Auld Brig. The Public Hall was designed by J.P. Alison in 1900. There are several other notable historic buildings, including the Castlegate area, which was extensively repaired in the 1970s. And of course there is the Abbey and Castle. The town had a woollen factory from at least 1728, probably the first in the district. The town is also known for ‘Jethart Hand-baa’ played at Candlemas between the ‘uppies’ and the ‘doonies’, supposedly commemorating a defeat of the English at Ferniehirst Castle, when the Scots played with their cut off heads. Sir David Brewster (physicist), John Ainslie (cartographer) and Mary Somerville (mathematician) were born here, and the town also has connections with Mary Queen of Scots, Bonnie Prince Charlie and Sir Walter Scott. Just south of the town James Hutton discovered his ‘geologic angular conformity’, which supported the idea that the earth is at least millions of years old. The brach railway to the town was completed in 1856. Jedburgh Callants Festival was inaugurated in 1947, and includes a ride-out to Redeswire, as well as a mounted procession to Ferniehirst Castle and to the Capon Tree, led by the Callant. Population (1991) 4,118 – ‘Dear Borderland! Blech na’ for fear! Oor Borderland, mae foe comes near! Stand firm and sure; for Jethart’s Here! Stand firm and sure; for Jethart’s Here!’ [T] (the origin of the name is ‘Jed worth’, i.e. Old English for ‘settlement by the Jed’, with ‘Jed’ perhaps being from a Celtic word for a wood; it first occurs as

Jethart Abbey (je-thur'-aw-bee) n. Jedburgh Abbey, founded by David I for Augustinian monks in 1138, following the 1118 priory. This may have followed an earlier foundation by Eged, Bishop of Lindisfarne, perhaps in the 830s. An early chapel attached to the abbey was at Old Jeddart. It was dedicated to Mary (so that some local places called things like ‘Ladyland’ may be connected with the Abbey). The lands possessed by the Abbey from early times included Lanton, Nisbet, Crailing, Ulveston, Ancrum, ‘Alneclive’ (unidentified part of Ancrum); ‘Rule Hervey’ (later called Abbotrule), Raperlaw (in Lilliesleaf Parish) and ‘Crumesethe’ (which could be Crumhaugh); many of these are listed in the 1165 charter of King William, confirming earlier grants by David I and others. Around 1280 Sir William of Soules granted the abbey lands near Castleton churchyard. It later gained lands at Winningon and Belses. Connected churches included most of those around Jedburgh, and also Hobkirk and Castleton. The Abbey contained altars to both St. Ninian and St. Mungo. The Abbey was never fully completed, being destroyed as many as nine times by the English, including by the Earl of Surrey’s men in 1523 and in 1545 by Hertford’s men. It was occupied by the English from 1547, the French took possession in 1548, fortifying it, but levelling some of the damaged parts. Note that this constant strife means that none of the records of the Abbey have survived. Although quite ruined since then, it is the most complete of the Border abbeys, with 3 tiers of arches, an 86 ft high transept tower, and a wheel window in the west gable. Part of the Abbey was used as a local place of worship until 1875. The Kers of Ferniehirst are buried here and there is also the Marquess of Lothian Memorial. Major excavations in the 1980s revealed a greater extent to the buildings and a new visitor centre was opened then. The Abbey held a great deal of land around the Borders, including superiority over the parishes of Abbotrule, Castleton and Hobkirk.

Jethart Castle (je-thur'-kaw-sul) n. Jedburgh Castle was ceded to the English under the Treaty of Falaise in 1174, but changed hands many times over the coming centuries. It was the location for the wedding feast of Alexander III in 1285, when it was said that a ghostly apparition warned of his impending death. In 1334 it was surrendered to the English by Edward Baliol and held by them for 75 years. It was destroyed by order of the Scottish Parliament in 1409, shortly after the town was recaptured. The destruction was supervised by ‘Robert de Hawyk’ a Burgess of Edinburgh. In the early 18th century it was the site of the town gallows, with construction on the old gaol beginning there in 1820, with architect Archibald Elliot. It also served as lunatic asylum and ‘bridewell’. This prison was also often referred to as ‘Jethart Castle’.

Jethart Jail (je-thur'-kaw-sul-jail) n. former prison on the site of Jedburgh Castle, built 1820–23, and now housing a museum. It was designed by Archibald Elliot (from Ancrum) in 3 separate 2-storey blocks, the builder being Mr. Gillespie. This was the local county jail for Hawick in the 19th century, closing in 1886, and continuing in use as police cells until 1890. It is now the best preserved example of a Howard Reform Prison, considered modern in its day – ‘I’d rather lie in the belly o’ a whale Than spend a nicht in Jethart Gaol’ [T] (formerly spelled ‘Gaol’).

the Jethart Comb (thu-je-thur'köön) n. the Jedburgh Comb, an ancient artefact found during excavations at the Abbey in 1984. It is an ornate 12th century comb, carved from walrus ivory and decorated with a griffin and a dragon. It was discovered along with the torso of a man (who appears to have been murdered) and other artefacts in a pit in the Abbey grounds, and is now on display there.

Jethart Greyfriars (je-thur'-grä-frI-ulröz) n. site of a former friary in Jedburgh, excavated in the 1980s and laid out as a garden in 1993. It was home to a group of Observant Franciscans from around 1500. Also known as ‘grey friars’ or ‘begging friars’, the order were extremely rigorous in following the rules instituted by St. Francis, and led ascetic lives, going barefoot in their grey woolen robes. A superior of the convent called Home was involved in transmitting letters between Henry VIII and the young King James V. Adam Bell was a monk there, who wrote a history of Scotland up until the year 1535. The friary was burned by the English raids of 1523, 1544 and 1545, and probably never fully repaired before the Reformation.

Jethart Justice (je-thur'-jus-tis) n. popular name for the form of justice in use during the rieving days, i.e. hang them first and ask questions later. Jedburgh was the judicial seat of the Scottish West March. The phrase dates back to the late 16th century (also ‘Jeddart Justice’ etc.).

Jethart peirs (je-thur'-peerz) n., pl. pears grown in Jedburgh, long famed for its orchards, these being a vestige of the days when the monks grew fruit extensively. Many different varieties were grown, mostly derived from France, but some being Scottish variants. This included Achan, Bell-tongue, Bergamot, Bon-Chrétien, Buchanan, Cranston, Crawford, Douglas, Drummond, Fair Maid, Grey Goodwife, Honey, Lady Lamont, Longueville, Ludd, Mother Cob, Musk, Pittfrane, Pound, Rob Hyl, Warden and Worry Carle. Pears were also grown in Melrose, and probably other local places with ecclesiastical connections.

Jethart Snails (je-thur'-snälz) n. dark peppermint sweets, made by the Miller family of Jedburgh, also called ‘Jasper’s Original Jethart Snails’. The recipe was handed down to Japer Miller by a French Napoleonic prisoner of war.

Jethart staff (je-thur'-stawf) n. former type of weapon, consisting of a pole perhaps 7 to 8 feet long, topped with a long metal blade. It was also known as the Jedburgh or ‘Jeddart’ stave (and other variants). Its existence is recorded at least from 1513 and it was banned by the Scottish Parliament in 1516. It was also sometimes called the ‘Northern staff’, and the reason for its connection with Jedburgh is unknown, although it appears to have been only used in Scotland. Another weapon existed (also used in England) called the ‘Jethart axe’ (although this may have been invented by Sir Walter Scott), which was sometimes confused with the ‘staff’ (even in the arms of Jedburgh). The 2 may have also been known as the short staff and the long staff, and it is clear that the length and design varied.

Jock o Hazeldean (jok-oh-zul-deeen) n. well known Border ballad, with a version by Sir Walter Scott, although actually much older. It should not be confused with the different pipe tune ‘Hazeldean’, and derives from a corruption of ‘Hassendeen’.

Jock o the Garret (jok-oth-gaw-ri) n. nickname for a drummer in Hawick in the early 19th century.

Jock o the Park (jok-oth-pawrk) n. nickname for John Elliot who wounded Bothwell in 1566.

Jock o the Side (jok-oth-sud) n. ballad about the rescue of a prisoner from Newcastle Jail and his return to Liddesdale (bearing great similarity with the ballad of the rescue of Kinmont Willie). It was first printed in Hawick in Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). Characters named in the ballad, as well as ‘Jock o the Side’ include the Laird of Mangerton, the Laird’s Jock, the Laird’s Wat and Hobbie Noble. The subject of the ballad was probably an Armstrong, nephew of the Laird of Mangerton, and is also mentioned in Maitland’s ‘Complaint Against the Thieves of Liddesdale’ – ‘Then they ha’ rid tae Liddesdale Just as fast as they could ride And when they cam’ tae Liddesdale They cast the chains frae Jock o’ the Side’ [T], ‘Jock’s ghost cam yammerin Yammerin doon Fu o indignation For on the site o his strung to’er They built a railway station …’ [DH].

Johnman (jön-mun) n. Rev. William Andrew Patton (1837–1923) minister of Hawick Free Church (St. George’s) for a period of 43 years. A native of Blairingone (or Fossway) near Dollar, he was ordained at Darlington in 1865 and came to Hawick in 1880. Well read and interested in a wide range of topics, he wrote many articles for the Archaeological Society Transactions, served as President for many years, and was a keen collector of curios for the Museum.
Johnman’s Openin

He is credited with re-invigorating the Society after a lull in its activities and falling off in membership in the 1880s. As well as articles from the Transactions appearing in pamphlet form, his 1892 memorial sermon to Rev. Dr. MacRae was published, and also a few other sermons. He was heavily involved in efforts to get the Buccleuch Memorial and the Cottage Hospital funded. He was said to have a great frankness of speech, sometimes to the point of embarrassment, and took up strong positions in opposition to several local issues. For example, he worked hard to have rabbit baiting stopped in the town. In addition he carried out in the local press a public argument with Provost Mitchell over gambling and drinking, and was an opponent of the excesses of the Common Riding. He also caused consternation among his congregation for allowing a parade of Volunteers in the church in 1887. He was a very keen traveller, and often gave lectures after his trips. In 1900 he was appointed first Moderator of the Hawick United Free Presbytery. Throughout his ministry he lived at St. George’s Manse on Wilton Path. He served until his death. There is a memorial to him in St. George’s, unveiled in late 1924, when Dr. Cathels gave a eulogy. He served until his death. There is a memorial to him in St. George’s, unveiled in late 1924, when Dr. Cathels gave a eulogy. He left money to establish an educational bursary.

Johnman’s Openin (jön-munz-ö-pe-nin) n. former name for St. George’s Lane.

Johnnie Armstrong (jön-awrm-ströng) n. ballad about John Airmstrong of Gilnockie. It recounts how Armstrong, a noted Border riever, is summoned to meet the King, but is tricked and arrested along with his men. He pleads for his life, offering the King everything he can think of, but to no avail. The ballad is based on historical events, although liberty is taken with some details, e.g. it is set in Edinburgh, rather than at Caerlenrig. The tone of the ballad is essentially pro-Armstrong and against James V. It first saw print in Allan Ramsay’s collection ‘Ever Green’ (1724) and later appeared in Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784) and Scott’s ‘Minstrelsy’. Tradition says that it was recited for Ramsay’s collection by a 6th generation descendant of John of Gilnockie himself.

Johnnie Cossar (jön-köh-sur) n., arch. a large pin.

Johnnie Macmannus (jön-nee-nuk-maw-nis) n. local nickname, probably from the 19th century – ‘Wicked Tammy and Tidy Mars, The Sap, Paul Laidlaw and Tory Tam; Tip-ma-Daisy hame frae the wars, Johnny Macmannus and Neddy Lamb’ [HI] (this was presumably not his real name).

Johnnie Nip-nebs (jön-nee-nip-nebz) n. Jack Frost – ‘He coungers our kyloes, and causes our kebs, And a fearfu’ auld carl is Johnie Nip-nebs’ [HSR], ‘Some ca’ him John nip-nebs, and some Johnie Frost, But we ken wha he is, and we ken to our cost’ [HSR] (also Jock Nip-nebs).

Johnnie the Whup (jön-nee-the-whup) n. nickname for Johnnie Hope (18th/19th C.) whose family gave their names to Hopehill and Hopepark – ‘Poodge and Peedlum goon doon the toon, Sly Tammy and Kittlin’ Song goon up; There’s Paddy Barratt and Jamie Broon, And there’s Dick Newall and Johnny Whup’ [HI].

Johnny and the Rocos (jön-aw-and-thuro-koz) n. rock ‘n’ roll band, led by Hawick-born Bob Fish. Formed in 1973, they became professional in 1973, recording their first album ‘Shakin’ all over’ in 1978, which was followed by six others, plus compilation albums etc. Particularly popular in Germany and Scandinavia, they have had a top ten hit in Norway.

John of Hawick (jön-ov-hük) n. priest of Glasgow and notary public, recorded in 1530. There is also an earlier Rector of Hawick Church from the mid-14th century, and several other men of the same designation, making it difficult to distinguish how many of them are distinct (see de Hawick).

John Oliver & Sons (jön-ol-ee-vur-in-sunz) n. relatively short-lived woollen manufacturers of the 1830s and 40s. The business was run by Hawick lawyer John Oliver and his sons Thomas and William (and perhaps others). Along with William Wilson & Sons they purchased the Weensland Corn Mill and adjoining land from Douglas of Cavers in about 1835. However, although Wilson built a new woollen factory there, the Oliver land remained largely undeveloped until Walter Wilson built Teviot Mill on it in the 1850s. Thomas and William Oliver were recorded as manufacturers at Dean Mill in 1837, however, within a decade or so they were both tenant farmers.

John Paiterson (jön-pă-ur-sin, -pî’) n. title character of an old local song, or a short form used for the name of the song itself.

John Paiterson’s Meir Rides Foremaist (jön-pî’-ur-sinz-mär-ridz-för-mást) n. old local song, once second only in popularity to ‘Teribus’, also sometimes referred to as ‘John Paiterson’. It was discussed by William Norman Kennedy in an article in the 1863 Transactions.
The song was published in an 1887 Hawick News article in connection with the revamped Common Riding, but was already a very old song. It is played by the Drums and Fifes at specific times during the Common Riding, particularly just before the Friday breakfast, as they walk from the Kirk Wynd to the Tower Knowe via Drumlanrig Square and the Howegate. The words supposedly refer to a miller, Paiterson, who lived in the Hawick area and was known for the quality of his horses. He once entered a big race bare-back and with a straw-robe bridle, much to the hilarity of the on-lookers, but ended up winning. The King apparently wanted to buy the horse, but Paiterson instead gave it as a gift and composed the song in celebration. Another story claims that it relates to Sir John Paterson of Eccles, who rode a race on an old racecourse near Lilliard’s Edge. In fact the song is widely known (with slightly different words) throughout Britain and it has been suggested that it came from Ayrshire in the early 18th century, and related to the Patersons of Ballaird there. The tune has also been connected with a song referred to as ‘She’s yours, she’s yours, she’s nae mair oors’ which is about a race (bruise) for a bride’s handkerchief at a wedding. It is also known as (or extremely similar to) ‘The Horseman’s Port’, ‘The Black and the Brown’, ‘New Market’ and ‘The Cameronian Rant’. The song was part of the repertoire of Shetland fiddler John Sickle, was adapted by Martin Carthy in 1983 for the song ‘Fable in the Wings’ and has also been popular with some pipers.

Johns (jönz) n. William (15th C.) recorded as ‘Willelmi Johannis’ in 1436 when he witnessed a sasine for the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee. So he was probably related to the Lairds there. The other men listed were all from relatively nearby. It is possible his surname has some other modern equivalent.

Johnson (jön-sin) n. A.J. (20th C.) served as 6th Treasurer for the Congregational Kirk.

the Johnson-Marshall Report (thu-jon-sin-mawr-shul-ree-pōr’ n. local government planning report of 1967, which made recommendations for the future expansion of the Borders. This included a new community of 10,000 people in the St. Boswells area (which led to Tweedbank), but no strong priorities for Hawick.

John Spencer’s (jön-spen-surz) n. knitwear mill that occupied Heronhill House in the mid-20th century.

Johnston (jön-stin, -sin) n. Agnes (17th/18th C.) resident of Whitlaw, recorded in the Session books of 1723 when money was given to pay a woman for teaching her son. Alexander (18th/19th C.) footman at Orchard Cottage in 1797, when he was working for Robert Scott. Andrew (17th C.) resident of the Adderstone area on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is listed ‘wt ane kilne’, suggesting that he was a smith or similar artisan. David (b.1817/8) from Newlands in Peeblesshire, he was a heddle-maker on the Fore Row in 1851. His wife was Agnes, from Dumfries. He may be the same David who was listed as a shopkeeper on the Fore Row in Slater’s 1852 directory. David (1900–1982) writer of words for the songs ‘We’ll Follow oor Cornet’, and ‘My Borderland’, as well as ‘Hawick and me’ and several local poems, many included in the book ‘A Freen Among Freens’ (1974). He was born and educated in Kelso, worked as a gardener at Floors Castle and also lived in Gala, but married a Hawick girl and moved to the town. He worked as a handyman at Lyle & Scott’s Burnfoot factory and was for many years boilerman at the Victoria Laundry. He lived for much of his life in Burnfoot, hence he was sometimes referred to as ‘the Burnfit Bard’. He was a regular contributor of verse to the local press. His 2 well-known songs were collaborations with Adie Ingles. They also worked together on a song for the Burnfoot competition of 1970, and another, ‘Braw Border Queens’, survives in manuscript form. He moved away after the death of his wife, and lived near his son in Arbroath, where he died. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Elizabeth G. ‘Isabella’ or ‘Isa’ (1910/1–1981) from Hawick, she worked as a nurse in Maternity Sevices in Edinburgh and Glasgow and retired back to Hawick in 1963. She was also a keen Guide. She wrote many poems published in the local press, including ‘Ablow the Kitchen Bed’, a number of them collected into ‘Pictures in the Fire’ (1967). Rev. George (b.1550/1) became minister at Foulden in 1572 and was transferred to Ancrum a few months later. In 1574 he also had charge of Old Roxburgh, Eckford, Bedrule and Abbotrule (although they may have had separate readers). He complained to the Assembly of 1578 that another man had been appointed to part of his benefice. He also attended the Assemblies of 1581 and 1589. He is recorded in 1585 refusing to subscribe to articles drawn up by Sir John Maitland. He was transferred to Crailing before 1586, but returned to Ancrum in 1588, although probably without any further connection with Abbotrule or Bedrule. In 1608 he and 2 others refused to recognise the authority of a Visitor. appointed by the Assembly and was deprived in 1622 for not conforming to the Articles of 1618. He was declared a rebel and ordered to be imprisoned in Annadale. However, he lived until at least 1631. In 1583/4 he was among a number of men from the area who were denounced for failing to appear to give evidence in a case against the Turnbuls of Bedrue. His name is recorded as ‘Johnne Johnstoun’. Rev. John (16th C.) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1590, he became minister of Nisbet. He is recorded as also having Wilton in his care in 1594, but not in the following year when he held the charges of Abbotrule and Bedrue. He seemed to remain with this arrangement until 1599. He was translated to Longnewton in 1607. It is unclear what role, if any, he played in Wilton Parish. John (d.c.1682) tenant in Hawick, whose will is recorded in 1682. He could be the John the baptism (labelled ‘fornic’) of whose son Robert with Malie Lauder was recorded in 1680. John (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when he was at Clarilaw. John (17th/18th C.) married Margaret Hislop in 1702, his wife also being from Ashkirk. Their unnamed child was baptised in 1716. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Eilrig in 1712 when his son William was baptised in Roberton Parish. John (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1720 (along with David Gray in Weensland) he witnessed a baptism for workman William Stoddart. He married Isobel Anderson and their children included: Walter (b.1719); Agnes (b.1721); John (b.1723); Margaret (b.1726); and Jean (b.1730). The witnesses in 1721 were Robert ‘Lasten’ and James Gardner. John (18th C.) lived in Roberton Parish in 1734 when his unnamed child was baptised, with no residence given. He is probably the John who married Mary Scoon in Roberton in 1733. Perhaps the same John was at Whithope Mill in 1743 when his son Walter was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1743. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He married Marion Nicol in 1734. He is probably the John whose son John was baptised in 1734. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. Prof. Thomas Lothian (1927–2009) born in Whitburn, West Lothian, son of a railway signalman. When he was 1 year old his father was transferred to Newcastleton, where he grew up. He attended Hawick High School, leaving in 1944 when he volunteered for the Royal Navy, later becoming an officer. He gained a place at Cambridge University, but chose to go to Edinburgh so he could stay close to Hawick, where he played rugby for the Trades and for Hawick R.F.C. After graduation he went to work with Professor Gunnar Myrdahl and his wife Alva, and there learned Swedish, as well as learning about Manpower Economics. He returned to Edinburgh in 1955, where he was awarded a Ph.D. for his thesis on the Swedish Labour market. He lectured at Edinburgh University 1955–65 and became the founding Professor of Economics at Herriot-Watt, where he taught all first year Economics students in the years 1966–76. He also served on many government appointed boards and committees, e.g. the Scottish Economic Council 1977–91. In 1977 he was appointed as first Chairman of the Manpower Services Committee for Scotland. In 1981 he returned to Herriot-Watt as Principal and Vice-Chancellor. In 1983 he resolved the serious dispute between striking water workers and the Government. He worked to foster stronger ties between the university and industry. He also served as President of the Royal Society of Edinburgh 1993–96. He was Common Riding Chief Guest in 1995. He married Joan Fahmy in 1956 and they had 2 sons and 3 daughters. William (16th/17th C.) described as ‘servitour to Mariones Hob’ (i.e. Robert Scott) in documents relating to a murder trial in 1612 William (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He was living at Huntly in 1727 when his son James was baptised (spelled ‘Jhonsoun’, ‘Johnnestoun’, ‘Johnstonne’, ‘Johnstoun’, ‘Johnstown’, etc. in early documents; see also Johnstone).

Johnstone (jon-stin, -sin) n. Adam of that Ilk (d.1509) succeeded from his brother John in 1488. He wrote an agreement of ‘kindness’ towards each other with Walter Scott of Bucleuch in 1501/2. He was married to Marion Scott, aunt of Walter; she was widow of Archibald Caruthers of Mouswald. He was succeeded by his elder son James. Alex (19th/20th C.) plumber who served on the local Military Tribunal during WWI. Charles (18th C.) merchant of Newcastle who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1749. David (18th/19th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Wester Parkhill in 1799. He married Margaret Turnbull and their children included: Margaret (b.1791), baptised in Selkirk; and James (b.1799), baptised in Roberton. Gabriel (1698–1752) son of Rev. Samuel and Isobel Hall. He was born in Southdean Parish, where his father was minister. He studied at Edinburgh and St. Andrews Universities, then moved to London, where he wrote political articles for ‘The Craftsman’. In 1733 he was appointed Governor of North Carolina, where he held the position for 18 years, longer than any other Governor. Although unpopular with many, he managed to introduce several important reforms. He married (as her 4th husband) Penelope Goland, one of the wealthiest women in the province, and he secondly married Mrs. Frances Button. His children included Penelope, Henry, Carolina and Polly. He is buried at Eden House, near Edenton. Johnston County and Fort Johnston were named after him. George ‘Geordie’ (17th C.) from Essenside. In 1622 William Scott of Burnfoot (on Ale Water) was recorded having a bond of security for him. But in 1623, along with William Elliot of Bonjedward, he was convicted of stealing a horse belonging to Walter Scott of Burnfoot in Ale Water and hanged (probably in Jedburgh). He was ordered to be hanged. George (17th C.) recorded at Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was surely related to James, who was also listed there and John who paid the land tax there in 1678. He could be the George who witnessed baptisms in Ashkirk in 1689 for John Turnbull and William Balmer. George (18th C.) owner of 3 husband-lands in Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was presumably related to the earlier George. He sold the lands to James Shortreed of Easter Essenside in 1758. Gilbert (15th/16th C.) tenant at Minto Craigenet. In 1502 David Scott (called ‘Lady’) in Stirkshaws had a remission for several crimes, including a raid on those lands. He specifically had 2 mares stolen from him. William (surely a relative) is also mentioned as being a tenant there. Herbert Benyon (19th/20th C.) of Barkers. He became a partner in Hawick knitwear firm Pringle’s in 1919. Hugh (b.1814/5) from Morton in Dumfriesshire, he was an assistant gamekeeper, living at Teindside Bridge in 1841 and 1851 and Newlands (in Castleton Parish) in 1861 and 1868. He married Hannah Anderson (or Andison) in Hawick Parish in 1839 and they had children: Jane (b.1840); Thomas (b.1843); Jessie (b.1845); Isabella (b.1847); William (b.1850); Hugh (b.1852); James (b.1855); and Robert Hannah (b.1859). He was probably father of the ‘5 Johnstone sisters’ whose photo of 1910 is in the Museum (suggesting he also had daughters Helen b.c.1833 and Violet): Mrs. Andrew Burnett [Helen] of Adderstonelee; Mrs. Reid; Mrs. Jess Hunter; Mrs. Little; and Mrs. Violet Tullie of Bowanhill. Sir James of Johnstone (c.1567–1608) son of Sir John. He was made Warden of the West Marches 1588–90 in place of Lord Maxwell, this being part of the struggle for power and feud between the 2 families. He was imprisoned in Edinburgh in 1592 (perhaps for assisting the Earl of Bothwell), but managed to escape. His men pillaged in Nithsdale, leading to pursuit by the Maxwells, who gathered a large force. He amassed his own supporters, and surprised the Maxwell’s and their force at Dryfe Sands in 1593, leading to the death of Lord Maxwell and many others. Among his own supporters were a number of men from Liddesdale and Teviotdale. He was declared a rebel, but gained respite from the King in 1594. He was made Warden of the West March in 1595, probably serving until 1598. But after failing to quell disturbances he was declared a rebel and imprisoned in 1599. But he was reappointed Warden again 1600–03. He married Sara Maxwell, daughter of Sir John, 4th Lord Herries of Terregles, and was succeeded by his son James, who married Margaret, daughter of Sir William Douglas, 1st Earl of Queensberry. James of Westerhall (d.1643) son of Sir James. He married Isabella, daughter of Sir William Scott of Harden and was succeeded by his son Sir James. Rev. James (d.1622) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1598, he became minister of Minto Parish in 1607. However, he was suspended later that year in 1598, he became minister of Minto Parish. He was living at Denholm, until the manse was built. He also witnessed baptisms in Roberton for tailor Andrew Donald and for George Hood. James (17th C.) recorded at Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He paid tax for 2 hearths and was surely related to George, who was also listed there, as well as John, who paid the land tax there in 1678. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism in Ashkirk Parish for Thomas Knox in 1690. James Raymond of Alva (18th/19th C.) based in Clackmannanshire, he also held lands in Selkirkshire. In 1785 and 1802 he is recorded paying the Land Tax on Hangingshaw, Lewinshope, ‘Scadarig’, Wester Kershope, Sundhope, Hollandrig, ‘Sandbed of Sundhope’, Sundhopehead, Shaws, ‘Baillieslees’ and Helmburn. He was succeeded by his son James. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Greenhill in Ashkirk Parish, recorded as owner of 2 farm horses and 1 saddle horse on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. James of Alva (1801–88) son of James Raymond and Mary Elizabeth Cholmeley, he succeeded to the Alva estate in Clackmannanshire. He lived at Hangingshaw in Selkirkshire. He was listed among the landowners of Roberton Parish in 1841. He was M.P. for Clackmannanshire and Kinross 1851–57, and was a J.P. He was a Deputy Lieutenant of Selkirkshire. He firstly married Augusta Anne, daughter of Fletcher Norton, and secondly Sarah Mary, daughter of Lt.-Col. H.P. L’Estrange. His son Maj. James Henry L’Estrange lived at Hangingshaw. Rev. James Barbour (1815–85) 4th son of Walter and 2nd child with his 2nd wife Agnes Carlyle, he was born at Bridekirk near Annan. His elder half-brother John was an early photographer in Birmingham. He was educated at the architect’s office. He turned to religion in 1838, ran the local Scots Church Sunday School, became a member of the Independent Chapel in 1843 and attended classes at the New College in Edinburgh from 1844. He was a missionary at Culross 1846–47 and was licensed by the Free Presbytery of Dunfermline in 1848. After short periods at Stanley and Gatehouse he was ordained as the first minister at Wolfelee Free Kirk in early 1849. He lived at Denholm, until the manse was built. He was also known as a painter. He described his encounter with a ‘will-o’-the-wisp’ somewhere in the Rule valley, on his way back from preaching at Crailing. He moved from Wolfelee to St. John’s, Warrington in 1862. He resigned in 1875 and settled in Glasgow, finally moving to Dumfries in 1878, and drifted back to the Established Church. In 1839 he married Mary Maiben, daughter of Robert Whyte from Edinburgh; she died in 1860. In 1868 he married his 2nd wife, Janet Stavert, from Saughtree. His children included: probably Agnes Francis (b.1840), who died in infancy; Mary Whyte (1842–1925), who married James Cash; Robert Whyte (b.1844); James Carlyle (1846–1873) who died in Africa; Agnes (b.1848), married Andrew Tait; Walter (1850–84), baptised in Cavers, also died in Africa; Bryson (b.1853), baptised in Hobkirk, became an oriental merchant; John Carlyle (1855–1927), born in Hobkirk, became a doctor; Margaret Elliot (b.1857), born in Hobkirk, married John Robert Galloway; and William Johnstone (b.1860), born in Hobkirk, but died in infancy. He was buried in Hobkirk Churchyard. Sir John of that Ilk (d.1833) son of Gilbert. He was appointed one of the Warden of the West Marches in 1371 and it is said that he fought against the English Borderers in 1378. He was succeeded by his son Sir John, who was also a Warden of the Marches. John (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branhkolme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. John of that Ilk (1507–67) son of James of that Ilk and Mary, daughter of John, Lord Maxwell. He served as a surety for entering John, son of Walter Scott of Synton and William, son of Robert Scott in Allanhaugh in 1530/1. In 1543 there was a ‘bond of manrent’ with him signed in Hawick by Nichol Graham ‘of Meskeswaye’. He married Elizabeth Jardine and secondly Nicola, daughter of Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1545 he was among Border lairds who gave assurance ‘have na intelligence with Ingland’. He served as a Commissioner to keep order on the Border in 1552. However, he and 2 of his sons were declared fugitives in 1564. He was succeeded by his grandson Sir John, since his son James died before him. Sir John Laird of Johnstone and Dunskellie (c.1550–87) eldest son of James. He was one of the ‘curators’ for the young Robert Scott of Thirlestane in the 1570s. In 1571 he had a bond with other Johnstones, signed at Branhkolme, where he must have been visiting at the time. In the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branhkolme he was still owed ‘for the rest of his tocher gud, ane thousand and foure hundreth merkis’; he was also named as an executor of the will. He was recorded as surety in 1573, 1575 and 1576, in the register of the Privy Council and in 1574 pledged for the behaviour of many of his friends and associates, in an attempt to settle his dispute with Lord Maxwell. In 1578/9 he was cautioner for the appearance of Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and his family. In 1581 he was among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rievings crimes. In 1582 he was appointed Lieutenant of the West Marches, Nithsdale, Galloway and Liddesdale, and Provost of Dumfries. In 1564/5 he married Margaret, daughter of Sir William Scott of Kirkurd, younger of Buccleuch, and sister of Sir Walter Scott. Their children were: Sir James, who married Sara Maxwell, daughter of the 4th Lord Herries; Elizabeth, who married Sir Alexander Jardine; Margaret, who married Sir James Johnstone of Westerhall; Grizel (or Sara), who married Sir Robert Maxwell of Spottes and then Sir Patrick Vans of Barnbarroch; and Simon. John (17th C.) paid the land tax for part of Hermiston in 1678. The lands were half of Easter Hermiston, valued at £130. He may have been son of Walter, who paid the tax in 1663 and is surely related to George and James, who were recorded at Hermiston in 1694. John (d.1794) brewer at Whisky Houses. He died in Hawick. John (18th/19th C.) listed at Little Cote in 1791 when he paid the cart tax. He was farmer at Eastcote (the same place) on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was recorded as owner of 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse in 1797. John of Alva (b.1734) son of Sir James of Westerhall and brother of Sir William Johnstone Pulteney. He bought a fraction of the Philiphauge estate from John Murray in the late 1700s. In 1788 (and still stated that way in 1811) he is recorded as owner of Whitfield in Wilton Parish and Toddshaw in Roberton Parish. He married Elizabeth Caroline, daughter of Col. Keene and was succeeded by his son James Raymond. John (19th C.) one of the 6 elders of Hawick Parish Kirk who left along with the minister to form Hawick Free Kirk during the Disruption of 1843. He served as Session Clerk 1855–61. Rev. Matthew Pool (b.1843) born near Annan, he studied in Edinburgh and was ordained at Symington in Ayrshire in 1869. He became minister of Hawick Free Kirk (i.e. St. George’s) 1873–79. He was involved in national and local Liberal politics, and had a particular interest in education. After Hawick he moved to the Free Middle Church, Greenock, despite a petition by the Hawick congregation for him to stay. In 1871 he married Jane B. Milligan. Patrick (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1510 when he inherited the half lands of Hermiston in Lilliesleaf from his father Quentin. He was probably ancestor of George and James, who were at Hermiston.
in the late 1600s. Quentin (d.bef. 1510) father of Patrick. His son inherited the lands of Hermiston from him in 1510. Richard, O.B.E. (?) pupil at Trinity and the High School and keen local cricketer, he became Professor and Vice-Dean at Stirling University. He was awarded the O.B.E. in 2004 for services to language, having been Director of the Scottish Centre for Information on Language Teaching. Robert (d.1530) part of the family of Johnstone of that Ilk, he was known as a riever. He was killed by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme ‘to gratiffie the King’ shortly after the Border raid that James V organised in 1530 to suppress the thieves on the Border. This led to a feud between the Scotts and the Johnstones. Robert (16th C.) recorded in 1537/8 at the Justiciary Court held by the Keeper of Liddesdale. He appears to be listed as Keeper of Hermitage at that time. Robert (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Minto and their son John was baptised in 1689. The witnesses were Thomas Johnstone and John Minto (who were probably both related to the couple). Robert (19th C.) mason in Hawick in the mid-19th century. Robert (1821–96) born in Kelso, he worked in Hawick in the 1850s. He then moved to the Langholm area and returned to Hawick to be gardener at Brieryyards around 1870, moving later to Cleadon, near Sunderland. He married Catherine Shine in 1850 and they had 9 children: Denis William; Margaret; Robert; Janet; Alison; Catherine Marion; Jane; Agnes; and Mary. Rev. Samuel (17th/18th C.) minister at Southdean. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1677 and went to Southdean in 1690. That same year he was a member of the General Assembly. He was to have been translated to Oxnam in 1699, but instead went to Dundee. He was the last of the neighbouring parish ministers to preach at Hassendean in 1693. He married Isobel Hall, and one of their children was Gabriel, political writer and colonial governor. Simon ‘Syme’ (16th/17th C.) tenant in Foulshiel. In 1623 he entered James Graham in Moffat Water at the Commissioners’ Court. It is unclear if his lands were Foulshiel or elsewhere. Thomas (15th C.) part of a ‘retour of inquest’ held in Hawick in 1424 to decide on the inheritance of part of the Barony of Hownam. Most of the other men were quite local. Perhaps the same Thomas was on the 1429/30 ‘retour’ panel for the lands of Caverton. Thomas (15th C.) bequeathed 20 shillings in the 1491/2 will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme. He is listed as ‘Thome Jhonsoun’. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Laidlaw and their children included Helen (b.1656) and Isabel (b.1658). William (15th/16th C.) tenant at Minto Craigend around 1502 when the farm was burned by a group of Armstrongs, Turnbulls and others, led by David Scott, called ‘Lady’, in Stirkshaws. His fellow tenant farmers were Thomas Young and his son, also Thomas, as well as Simon Leitch. His name is recorded as ‘Johnesone’ and Gilbert is also mentioned there. William (17th C.) landowner in Lilliesleaf Parish. According to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls he paid tax on £130 for part of Hermiston (probably the part that had formerly belonged to Robert Scott of Whitslade). He is probably related to John, who paid the land tax there in 1678. William (17th C.) listed as resident at Brighouse in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. Sir William (1729–1805) 2nd son of Sir James, 3rd Baronet of Westerhall and Barbara, oldest sister of Patrick Murray, 5th Lord Elibank. He was a lawyer in Edinburgh, and was a friend of Adam Smith and Robert Adam, as well as a patron of Thomas Telford. He served as an M.P. in 7 successive Parliaments. He married heiress Frances Pultney and changed his last name when he inherited extensive estates near Bath. It is said at one point that he was the wealthiest man in Britain. He was involved in the construction of the main road up the Eses valley (now part of the A7), following an Act of Parliament of 1763. In 1788 he was listed among the voters of Selkirkshire, but ‘will scarcely swear’ (i.e., was unlikely to vote); his brother John was also a Selkirkshire voter, having purchased part of Philiphaugh. He was said to be extremely rich when he died. He had no sons and only one daughter, Henrietta, who became Countess of Bath and married her father’s cousin Sir James Murray, but had no children. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Spittal, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls when he owned 3 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. Additionally he was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. His son was tenant at Tower. William (18th/19th C.) listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as ‘Junior’, when he was farmer at Tower with 3 horses. He is listed after the farmer at Spittal, who was presumably his father. William (b.1792/3) born in Canowie, he was a road contractor, living at Campknowes in Ewesdale in 1841, 1851 and 1861. By 1861 he was listed as a ‘Wood Contractor and Farmer of 21 acres’. His wife was Isabella and their children included William (a

As a youth he looked after the steam engine in Weensland Woollen Mill in Hawick, then working in the dyeing house for Robert Greenwood. He married Greenwood’s daughter at the age of 16, but unable to provide for he, went out to New Zealand, finding a permanent job as an engineer and dyer in Dunedin. His wife refused to join him (after 7 years absence) and he returned to the Borders, where he took over running the family farm and bought butcher’s shops in Denholm and Ancrum. After living for a few years in Denholm, the family moved to Greenhead in 1902. He married Jane Maria, daughter of Robert Greenwood; she died in 1942, aged 89. Their children were: Bessie S. Johnstone, who died aged 9; William (b.1897), well known artist; and Mary (d.1962). William ‘Wullie’ (20th C.) local Scout leader and piper who served with the K.O.S.B. and was killed in WWII. His pipes were returned to Hawick and Rob Lyle played them at the Menin Gate decades later. William (1897–1981) artist, born in Denholm above the butcher’s shop on Main Street. He was the only son of William (farmer and butcher) and Jane Maria Greenwood. His maternal grandfather was Robert Greenwood, textile designer with Wilson & Glenny’s. He grew up at Greenhead farm near Selkirk, where his father farmed from 1902. He left school early, put off by the authoritarian style of education. He was inspired by his cousin John Maxwell, who was a tweed designer, and at an early age influenced and encouraged by Tom Scott. His work on the farm kept him from active duty until the last months of WWI. He then studied in Edinburgh and Paris, incorporating surrealist ideas into his paintings, often inspired by the Borders countryside. He lived briefly in California, and settled in London in 1931, where he taught at a secondary school, and developed radical ideas on how to develop artistic abilities in children. Along with Francis George Scott and Hugh MacDiarmid, they planned a renaissance of Scottish arts. He was one of the more influential painters of his time, particularly as Principal of the Cambertown School of Art (1938–48) and of the London Central School of Arts and Crafts (1948–61). He was awarded the O.B.E. in 1954, and an honorary degree by Edinburgh University, where many of his paintings can be seen in the Talbot-Rice Gallery. He painted a portrait of Francis George Scott (his cousin) in about 1931. He also published books, including ‘Creative Art in England’ (1938), ‘Child Art to Man Art’ (1941) and an autobiography, ‘Points in time’ (1980). He married Flora Macdonald of San Francisco, who was evacuated back to the U.S. in 1940, along with his daughter Elizabeth Jane (b.1931). He later married Mary Jane Bonning and had another daughter. He retired to Satchells farm near Ashkirk in 1960, later moving to Ettrick then near Crailing. He then had a late burst of creative output, with the help of the patronage of Hope Montagu Douglas Scott. He also in this period made a series of plaster reliefs with assistance from local plasterer George Turnbull. There are 2 short films about his life and art. He died at the Cottage Hospital in Hawick and is buried in Denholm. William ‘Bill’ nephew of Bill McLaren, he was educated at Hawick High School. He became a rugby commentator for BBC Radio Scotland. (see also Johnston; formerly also spelled ‘Johnstone’ and variants).

Robert (17th/18th C.) cooper of Hawick, who had a seat in the Wester Loft in St. Mary’s Kirk. In 1716 he was rebuked for creating a disturbance during the Sunday service. This involved John Ruecastle who stated that ‘when he entered the said Loft the above written Robert Jolly did thrust him hard by the foot upon his belly’. This followed him being appointed to keep the key to the Weaver’s Loft, so stop unauthorised people from sitting in the seats there. He may have been the Robert born to Michael in 1690 or the one born to John in 1692. Thomas ‘Tam’ (b.1878) weaver and master of Dean Mills. He served with the K.O.S.B. during WWI and was wounded. He lived at the ‘Jolly Cottage’, near St. Leonards, with his wife Annie. Their children included Thomas and Louise. He continued to live in the old cottage after his wife died, finally leaving in the early 1950s. William (17th C.) listed among the poor householders in Abbotrule who could not pay the Hearth Tax in 1694 (also formerly written ‘Jollie’).

the Jolly Trei (ˈthu-ˌjo-lee-tri) n. an old tree on Hawick Moss, near the site of Annie Jolly’s cottage. This was home to 3 generations of the Jolly family, despite being a small house with a living room and only 2 bedrooms, and with no running water or electricity. The cottage was lived in until the early 1950s and demolished in the mid-1960s, although foundations are still visible. The tree is a Norway Spruce, planted in 1937, alongside a rowan. It escaped being chopped down along with others through the intervention of the men who regularly walked the ‘Ponderosa’ loop.

the Jooly Brig (thoon-joo-glee-brig) n. popular name for a wooden footbridge over the Borthwick, near Borthaugh farm, officially known as ‘Borthaugh Footbridge’. It was built near the site of the former blacksmith’s shop, and provided a popular loop walk for several decades. The builder was local joiner David Taylor, who made a laminated with bolted wooden spars to form one gentle curve over the roughly 60 ft span. But unfortunately the weight of the bridge caused it to buckle, forming an extra rise in the middle. The bridge eventually became unsafe and was replaced by a more stable metal bridge in 1966.

Jordan Sike (jor-din-sike) n. stream in Southdean Parish, rising on Steele Knowe (near the A6088 at Charlie’s Hill) and running to the north to join the Jed Water. Between the stream and Steele Knowe, to the east, there are extensive signs of old agricultural development, including rig lines, grouse shooting butts, enclosures and boundary banks. These extend to connect with boundary dykes around Northbank Tower, and seem to show 3 distinct phases of development. There are also the remains of 3 round-ended buildings and several turf huts in the area. On the west side is a field system, an old drove road, disused quarries, shooting butts and several enclosures and boundary banks. Near the head of the stream is the start of a boundary bank, which runs for about 3 km towards Lethem.

Justice (jus-tis) n. Rev. Alexander (d.1611) he was presented to Dron before the middle of 1593 and translated to Ashkirk in 1604. The Presbytery admonished him in 1608, saying ‘that he is too passionate, and that he be more diligent in discipline’, and he was rebuked again in 1609 for being absent from the Presbytery for 4 days. He was ‘under disease’ in 1611 and ‘content to tak order anent providing his kirk at the sight of the mins. of Melrose, Earlston, and Stow’. He died shortly after this. He was married and his only son was Patrick.

justice aire (jus-tis-âr) n. circuit court of the Crown. Through much of its history Scotland’s justice was administered in 2 regions, divided by the River Forth. Hawick lay in the southern region, sometimes also for this purpose called ‘Lothian’, presided over by the Justiciar for Lothian. Itinerant courts would be held twice a year, generally in the spring and the autumn, with Jedburgh being the usual location for cases relevant to Hawick (but aires were also sometimes held at Roxburgh and Melrose). The route was often from Jedburgh to Lauder, then Jedburgh, Selkirk, Peebles, Lanark, Dumfries, Kirkcudbright, Wigton, Ayr, Dumarton and Stirling. Records still exist for such courts held in the periods 1493–1504 and 1507–1513, these being among the oldest local documents that give some detailed insight to life in the Borders. The court may have been effectively replaced by the Commissioners’ Court in the later 16th century.

Justicelee (jus-tis-lee) n. former lands in Jed-forest, recorded in a rental roll of 1541. The tenants were William, Alexander and John Hunter, and the lands were valued at 18s 9d. It is unclear where these lands were, but they are listed after Rouchhirst and Old Jedburgh.

the Justin Haugh ( thu-jus-tin-hawch) n. former name for lands in Hobkirk Parish, part of the farm of Nether Boucher and on the Weens estate. The name appears in a 1606 charter for Holbsburn and Weens, where it formed the southern boundary. It was said to be a level field, presumably near the river, and must form part of the modern village of Bonchester Bridge. Tradition says that this haugh was once used for jousting matches, but there is no direct evidence for this (also written ‘Justinhaugh’, it is ‘the Justing hawche’ in 1606 and in 1887 Walter Deans calls it ‘Jeistins’-haugh’; the name is perhaps related to jousting; see also Jeistins’-haugh).
the Juvenile Total Abstinence Society

the Juvenile Total Abstinence Society (thu-jo-ve-nil-tō-’al-awb-stin-ins-su-cl-i’-ee) n. branch of the Hawick Total Abstinence Society aimed at discouraging the consumption of alcoholic drinks. The group met in Miss Riddle’s room on the High Street in the latter part of the 19th century.

Kaim Cleuch (kām-kloo’ch) n. small stream that rises on the southern side of Kaim Law and runs in a westerly direction to join the Slitrig near Hummelknowes Bridge.

Kaimend (kām-end) n. farm, south of Ormissone, in the hills to the south east of Hawick. Part of the area was formerly also known as Hilliesland. James Rathie was farmer there in 1797 and Robert Scott in 1841 until at least the 1860s (also written ‘Kaim End’, it is ‘Comblind’ in 1811; note there is also a village called Kaimend in South Lanarkshire and a house in North Berwick; the name probably derives from ‘kaim’, which is old Scots for a comb or the ridge of a hill).

the Kaimend Hills (thu-kām-end-hilz) n. hills to the east of Hawick. One of the peaks, Kaim Law, is 238 m high, lies to the west of Kaimend farm, contains a hill-fort, and was sometimes referred to as ‘the first Kaimend’. The other main peak, sometimes called ‘the second Kaimend’, is 275 m high, lies to the south of the farm, and is named Whiteacres Hill on modern maps.

Kaim Law (kām-law) n. the highest peak in the Kaimend Hills to the immediate south-east of Hawick, reaching a height of 238 m (777 ft). It has also been referred to as ‘the first Kaimend’ and has a well-defined hill-fort on its summit. This measured about 110 m by 30 m and had ramparts and ditches that are still easy to see. The entrance was probably to the south-west, and there are indications of oval huts inside. The fort at the nearby Castle Law is surely associated in some way.

the Kaims see the Kames

kaim the heid (kām-thù-heed) v., arch. to scold, reprimand, haul over the coals – ‘A scolding wife is said to ‘kaim her man’s head’ [ECS].

the Kale ( thu-kāl) n. popular name for the Kale Witter and its valley – ‘The sweetest flower I ever saw In blossom upon hill or dale, It was a beauty, bloomin’ braw, Upon the bonnie banks o’ Kale’ [TCh].

Kale Witter (kāl-wi’-ur) n. river rising in the Cheviots, passing through the villages of Hownam, Morebattle and Eckford, and flowing into the Teviot. The river is about 20 miles (34 km) long. The first bridge over the river was probably the one at Eckford Mill, built in the 1690s. There was also a chain suspension bridge at Kalemouth, built around 1836 by Capt. Sir Samuel Brown. Douglas Hall edited the book ‘Kalewater: a miscellany’ (1999) – ‘Where you slip sullenly under the shadows Skirting the feet of old Roxburgh’s tower: Where you take, lower-like, close to your bosom, Kale, and the music of coppice and bower’ [WL] (the origin of the name may be from an early Indo-European root ‘kal’, meaning ‘hard’).

the Kames ( thu-kāmz) n. former area in Minto Parish, also called Minti Kames (also written ‘Kaims’; it is probably the place transcribed as ‘the Cayves’ after Minto in a list by Sir Ralph Bulmer in 1548/9).

Kameside Park (kām-sūd-pawrk) n. former name for lands in Minto Parish. In 1779 (and in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) it was owned by Lord Minto, valued at £65 14s, and had liferent held by Sir John Dalrymple. However, in 1780 it was stated to be possessed by William Brown, with a rental of £18 (it was ‘Kaimside park’ in 1780).

Kames Moss (kāmz-mos) n. boggy area by the old railway line at Minto, near the farm of Minto Kames. It is referred to as ‘Minto Kaims Moss’ by James Murray in 1863. It is related to the former lands of ‘Kaymes’, part of Belses, recorded being leased by Thomas Hamilton (then Lord Binning) to Walter Davidson in 1632. The area to the south of the farm now contains Kames South Loch, with Kames North Loch further north towards Standhill (cf. Minti Kames).

Kames Muir Park (kām-mewr-pawrk) n. former name for a small piece of land in Minto Parish. In 1780 it was stated to be possessed by William Smail, with a rental of £8 (it was ‘Kaimsmuir park’ in 1780).

Kay (kā) n. Rev. George (d.1766) graduating from St. Andrews University in 1729, he was licensed by Kirkcaldy Presbytery in 1734 and became minister at Collesie in 1739. He was presented to Minto by Sir Gilbert Elliot in 1741, assistant and successor to John Ritchie. However, he moved to Dysart (Second Charge) after only 2 years. He then went to St. Cuthbert’s (Edinburgh) in 1747, New Greyfriars in 1752 and Old Greyfriars in 1754. He was given a doctorate by Edinburgh University in 1759 and was Moderator of the General Assembly the same year, as well as being made Chaplain of Stirling Castle. He married Charlotte Sheriff in 1747 and their children were David, Charles and Margaret. He later married Ann Forth. Thomas (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. In 1734 he was a witness to the notarial instrument in which the Town complained about encroachment on the Common by tenants of Sir Gilbert Eliott of Stobs. He is probably the Thomas, married to Jean Briggs, whose children baptised in Hawick included Walter (b.1737), James (b.1739) and Helen (b.1742).

It seems likely he was a son of Walter, who was also a tailor in Hawick. Walter (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. In 1721 his son Robert was rebuked for fighting on the Sabbath with Thomas Weddell.

the Kay (thu-kā) n. nickname in use in Hawick in the 19th century – ‘The Sootie Kittlin’ and Bumma Rae, Jenny Franks and auld Cauley Kail, Jamie Sprinkle, Kessy, the Kay, Doctor H’Yiggs and the Wat Wat Sail’ [HI] (perhaps related to a jackdaw, referring to a chatterbox, cheating or ill-omened quality).

Kay Wud (kā-wud) n. Kay Wood, small plantation on the southern slopes of Ruberslaw, north of Town-o’Rule. It contains an old enclosure.

the Kazba (thu-kaz-baw) n. name for the No. 10, adopted around 2000, and sometimes called ‘the Kazba Venue Bar’.

Keane (keen) n. George (15th C.) witness to the sasine granting the Baron of Hawick to James Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1484. His name is spelled ‘Keyne’. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘Johanne Kene’ in 1528 when he witnessed the ‘precept’ infefting David Scott in the lands of his father, Sir Walter of Branxholme. William (15th C.) recorded as ‘Kene’ when witness to the document proclaiming William Douglas, 2nd of Drumlanrig, as the Baron of Hawick in 1428/9; most of the witnesses were local men.

keb (keb) v. to give birth to a still-born lamb, to lose a lamb at an early age – ‘Ewes are said to be keb, when their lambs die early, and they are suffered to go yield’ [JL], ‘Whareo’ ilka ane hes twons an’ nane kebbeb amang thame’ [HSR], ‘...O’ kebbin yowes and rotten lambs, wi mony hells and blasts and damns’ [TD], n., arch. a ewe that has lost her lamb – ‘Item, five scoir and ten kebbis, price of the scoir ourheid, xvij £’ [SB1574], a still-born lamb – ‘He coungers our kyloes, and kebs our kebs, And a fearfu’ auld carl is Johnie Nippins’ [HSR].

kebbuck (ke-buk) n., arch. a whole cheese – ‘And kebbucks and cruppocks enow, But Jenny Muirhead brought a capon’ [ES].

keb-hoose (keb-hoos) n. a small farm building where a ewe is confined in order to adopt motherless lambs.
keb-park  (keb-pawrk) n., arch. a field set aside for ewes that have ‘keb’ lambs.

keckle  (ke-kul) n., v. cackle – ‘Her handsome shape an’ glancin’ een Wad gart a farmer keckle’ [JR].

Kedie  see Kedie

Kedie  (ke-dee) n. Adam (18th C.) elder of the Burgher congregation at the East-end kirk. In 1791 he signed the call to James Henderson on behalf of the ‘seventy-six persons [who] could not with their own hands sign the call’. He is probably the same man as Adam Kedzie.

Daniel (17th/18th C.) resident of North Synton in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. He is probably the Daniel who witnessed a baptism for John in Ashkirk in 1690. His wife was Bessie Elliot and they had a son Thomas (b.1694). George (18th C.) Hawick resident. He was probably married to Agnes Elliot or Scott and had a son Adam in 1747, baptised in Hawick (whose grandson would become a prominent real estate developer in Chicago). He may be the George who had an unnamed son baptised in Jedburgh in 1740 and the George whose daughter Isobell was baptised in Southdean Parish in 1740. In 1763 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Grieve and Isobel Scott. James (17th/18th C.) listed in 1724 among the residents of Ashkirk Parish receiving poor money. James (b.1814/5) forester and factor at Abbotrule Grange. He presented a fossil to the Museum in 1863. His wife was Isabella and their children included Andrew, Elizabeth, William and Helen. James (19th C.) blacksmith of the Fore Row in the latter part of the 1800s, succeeding from James Bowie. It was probably his nephew William who was killed in South Africa in 1899. John (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included: Isobel (b.1690); and William (b.1693). The witnesses in 1690 were George Scott and Daniel Kedie (probably related to the couple).

John (d.1786) baker, probably son of Thomas, who was said to have been a centenarian. He is probably the John who was Cornet in 1737. He is probably also the ‘baxter’ John, son of Thomas, who was made a Burgess in 1737. He witnessed baptism in 1741 for weaver David Haig, in 1742 for shoemaker Robert Wilson and in 1743 for weaver Andrew Jardine. He is probably the John who witnessed a baptism for merchant Adam Scott in 1765. He may be the ‘John Keidzy’, the entry into whose ‘stackyard, on the south or south-east side of the high road without the West Port of Hawick’ was described in 1767 as the starting point for the perambulation of the Common undertaken as part of the court case brought for its division; he also owned houses on the Loan just beyond there. In 1766 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker James Brown. He is probably the John who was paid 1 shilling in 1783 for ‘liberty for the Dran in his Park for the Well’; this was presumably the pipe running down to the Pant Well. He firstly married Betty Turnbull from Liddesdale, and their children included: Thomas (1743–1811), also a baker; and Janet (b.1745), who married Archibald Douglas. His second wife was Betty, daughter of wright John Pringle. Their children were: Betty (1754–82), who married David Kyle of Melrose; Joan (1756–1840), who married shoemaker Peter Wilson and had 14 children; John (1759–1826), also a baker; George (b.1763); and Mary (b.1765), who married George Rutherford, a Kelso farmer. The baptism in 1743 was witnessed by shoemaker Robert Oliver and William Oliver junior, the one in 1745 by John Ruecastle and William Scoon and the one in 1765 by Alexander Bunyan and James Brydon. The 1763 baptism of George was witnessed by his grandfather Thomas. He is said to have been 85 when he died, placing his birth in 1700/1, but it seems likely he was born later.

John (18th/19th C.) recorded in 1797 as farmer at ‘Slackhills’ in Hawick Parish. This is probably Slaidhills. He also paid the dog tax in 1797. He is probably the John whose daughter Isabella (b.1786/7) married Hawick tailor Walter Riddle.

John (1759–1826) son of John and Betty Pringle. He was also a baker, but moved to London. In 1785 he married Isobel, 3rd daughter of William Grieve, farmer at Southfield, and she died in 1805. He later married M. Anderson, who died in 1831. His children were: Mary (b.1789), who married soldier James Thomson; Elizabeth (b.1791), who married farmer Robert Goodfellow; Williamina (b.1793), who married a Mr. Clark and their son Robert became a bookseller in London; Isobel (b.1795), who married first a Fairbairn and then a Warland; Jacky (b.1799), who married a Mr. Notman; John, who was a sailor; and Janet. He also had an unnamed child who died in Hawick in 1797. John (b.1804) son of Thomas and Mary Scoon. He is probably the tobacconist John who lived at 13 Howegate with shoemaker John Douglas and John’s wife Elizabeth, who was his sister. He was there at least from 1841 to 1861, and was unmarried. Robert (b.c.1759)

probably a baker. He married Janet Adamson. Their children included: Robert (b.1790); Philip (b.1793); and Jannet (b.1795). Robert (1790-1869) Hawick baker of Silver Street, son of Robert and Janet Adamson. He was probably the Silver Street baker and spirit dealer listed on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory, and whose house, on the south-east side of the Auld Brig, is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. He was also listed as a Silver Street baker on Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 his house was described as ‘Head of Silver St’ (presumably meaning at the corner with Kirkstyle). In 1861 he was described as a farmer of 8 1/2 acres, living at 1 Kirkstyle. His wife was Janet Farsyth (and she died before 1861). Their children were: Thomas (b.1816), baker and Cornet; William (b.1818), draper; Janet (b.1820); Mary (b.1823), who married John Innes; Jane Charters (1826–1912); and Joan. A portrait of him exists with his wife and son William. Robert, J.P. (1844–1915) born in Hawick, son of Thomas and Mary Fraser. He lost both parents as a child and was raised by his uncle William. He was educated at Hawick Grammar School and the Episcopalian School in Hawick. He was an apprentice with his uncle, later joining the retail merchants Stewart & Macdonald in Glasgow, where he eventually became managing partner. He also served as Director of Glasgow Chamber of Commerce and as Director of the Glasgow Night Asylum for the Houseless, and was associated with the Trades’ House, Merchants’ House, Commercial Travellers’ Benefit Society, Glasgow Savings Bank, Athenaeum and Western Infirmary. He married a daughter of William Forsyth and had 2 daughters and 1 son. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Dryden in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. He witnessed a baptism in 1690 for Andrew Riddell (who may also have been at Dryden). He may be the same Thomas who married Janet Brown and whose children baptised in Ashkirk Parish included Isobel (b.1708), William (b.1717) and Mary (b.1718); they also had a son ‘Ebenezer Kidsly’ baptised in Hawick Parish in 1723. Thomas (c.1662–c.1763) farmer and then baker in Hawick. He is one of the earliest recorded members of the local family. He could be the Thomas ‘Kedzie’ who witnessed a baptism for Francis Scott of Alton in Wiltion in 1722. He was admitted as a Burgess in 1728, with his name then recorded as ‘Cadzie’. His wife’s name is suggested to have been Betty Hitcher (although that surname is otherwise unrecorded locally), and also Fletcher (which seems more likely); she died before 1732. His children with Betty Fletcher were: Thomas, who died in infancy; John (said to be 85 when he died in 1786, but this may be incorrect), also a baker and made a Burgess in 1737, when he was probably also Cornet; Thomas again; another son; Isobel; Janet; Mary; and 2 other daughters, the 5th daughter being born in 1720. He was a witness to the baptism of his grandson George in early 1763 and it said that he died soon after in his hundredth year. Thomas (18th C.) tenant farmer in Over Southfield in the 1720s. Thomas (18th C.) son of Thomas and Betty Fletcher. He was a baker and is said to have also farmed at Borthwick in Midlothian and to have died in the prime of his life. His children included: Jane (b.1751), who married dyer Adam Scott. Thomas (1743–1811) baker of Hawick, son of baker John and his first wife Betty Turnbull. He could be the Thomas who was Cornet in 1766. He was recorded (as ‘Kedzie’) as a baker on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He married Mary Scoon, who died in 1831. Their children included: John (b.1786); Janet (b.1787), their 2nd child, who married stockingsmaker John Pringle; Betty (b.1798); and John (b.1804), probably the tobacconist on the Howegate. He died in Hawick, recorded there as son of deceased baker John. Thomas (b.1816) son of baker Robert. He was Cornet in 1836. He was a baker living with his father in 1841. He won the silver spurs for married men at the Common Riding races of 1843. He is probably the Hawick resident, married to Mary Fraser, whose children included: Joan (b.1838); Janet (b.1842); and Robert (b.1844). William (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Bessie ‘Milln’ and his surname is given as ‘Kecslie’ in 1732 when his son Thomas was baptised in Makerston Parish. William (b.1805/6) born in Jedburgh, he was groom at Arkleton on the 1861 census. His wife was Mary and their children included James, John, Margaret, William and Andrew. His older children were born in Bedrule Parish. William (1818–80) Hawick draper, son of baker Robert. He served his apprenticeship with Charles Williamson and took over the business in partnership with Walter Armstrong when Williamson left for Australia in 1839. By 1853 he was running his own draper’s business at the Tower Knowe. He also ran a small tweed manufacturing business, William Kedie & Co., which was taken over by Innes, Blenkhorn and Richardson, who built Riversdale Mills around 1880. He was a Trustee and one of the first deacons of St. George's Kirk and was involved in setting up the West End Mission. Despite being heavily involved with the Free Kirk, in 1850 he purchased the Old Manse from the established Kirk, and then lived there. In 1861 he was living on Old Manse Lane, with his sister Jane C. and niece Joan. He also raised his nephew, Robert. William (1879/80–99) nephew of Mr. Kedie, blacksmith of Drumlanrig Square. Born in Hawick, his family moved to Dundee when he was 7. He served with the 2nd Battalion, Black Watch, and was killed in action in the Boer War. He is listed on the Hawick Boer War Memorial (also spelled 'Cadzie', 'Kaidzie', 'Keddie', 'Keadzie', 'Kedzie', 'Kedslie', 'Kedsly', etc. and formerly synonymous with Kedzie).

Kedie an Airmstrong's (ke-dee-in-ærmstrongz) n. draper’s business on the Tower Knowe in the mid-19th century. It was started by William Kedie and Walter Armstrong after Charles Williamson emigrated to Australia in 1839. The flood of 1846 made a hole, 6 feet deep, at the end of the shop. The firm was listed at Market Place in Slater’s 1852 directory.

the Kedie Hoose (θu-ke-dee-hooz) n. popular name for the building where generations of Kedie’s lived, last occupied by Robert Kedie in the mid-19th century. It was a 2-storey thatched house located roughly where the spiral staircase of the Exchange Buildings was later built. An old building, it was full of ‘holes, boles and wee windows’. It had a baker’s shop on the ground floor, and in the early 19th century Mrs. Kedie kept an inn there. During the great flood of 1767 about a dozen people used a ladder across to the house to escape when trapped on the Auld Brig. It was said that the street ‘was stripped to the very rocks’ between here and Ekron’s houses. The house was said to have been the lodgings of theologist Thomas Chalmers. The house was demolished in 1863 to make way for the Exchange, but can be seen in a photograph of 1860. It was also known as ‘Kedie’s Gable’ and ‘the Brig-end’, and should not be confused with ‘Kedie’s Buildin’.

the Kedies (θu-ke-deez) n. local family of some importance in the 18th and 19th centuries, with the name also written ‘Kedzie’ and other variants. Isobel ‘Kedyea’ is recorded as mother in a Hawick birth record of 1650. A branch of the family lived in the same place for seven generations, on the west bank of the Slitrig, near the mill, known as the ‘Kedie Hoose’, before the tenement was torn down in 1863. The family were also sometimes referred to as the Old Manse Lane

Kedie’s and produced 3 Cornets. The 20-mile long street Kedzie Avenue in Chicago (and its associated subway stations) is named after a descendant of this Hawick family (also sometimes ‘Keddie’, ‘Kedzie’ and other variants; the name may be related to Cadzow near Hamilton).

Kedie’s (ke-deez) n. William Kedie & Co., also known for a while as Kedie, Darling & Co. Ltd., Hawick woollen manufacturers of the latter part of the 19th century, with main factory at Riverside Mills. William Kedie, a High Street draper, started his small tweed business in the mid-1800s, and when he died in 1880 it was taken over by his nephew Robert Innes, with Blenkhorn and Richardson as silent partners. Innes died in 1895, and Adam Darling became a partner in 1898. The firm went into increasing debt in the early 1900s and was incorporated into Blenkhorn, Richardson & Co. around 1910.

Kedie’s Buildin (ke-deez-bil-din) n. building at 7 Tower Knowe, near where the Kedie family had previously lived. It was built by Harkness the builders and is beside the steps to the Millport. The site was probably the location of the original Mill of Hawick. It is the first house on the North side of what was effectively the High Street, and was occupied by William Kedie, draper in the 1850s. The site was much later known as the Tower Cafe (also known as ‘Kedie’s Shop’ and not to be confused with ‘the Kedie Hoose’ on the other side of the Tower Knowe, or the Ruecastle Tenement formerly at 7 High Street).

Kedzie (ked-zee) n. Adam (1746–1818) son of George Francis and Agnes. In 1770 he married Margaret Stewart (1756–1820), recorded in Hawick and Castleton Parishes. Their children were: Elizabeth (1772–1850); Nancy (1774–1841); George (1777–1834); Christie Archibald (1778–1868); James (1779–1860); Margaret Hume (1780–1865); William (1781–1828); Margaret Telford (1792–1874); Janet (1783–1849); Isabel (1785–1881); Adam (1790–1820); Margaret, who died in infancy; and Mary (1797–1830). In 1795 he emigrated with his wife and eight children, staying in Bovina, Delaware County, New York, before moving to Stamford, Connecticut. His grandson John Hume Kedzie was an important real estate developer, with Kedzie Avenue in Chicago and Kedzie Street in Evanston named after him. Kedzie Avenue is a very long street running north/south through Chicago, with a subway station of the same name (spelling varies, e.g. ‘Keidzena’; see also Kedie).
Kedslie (kedz-lee) n. farm west of the A68 beyond Earlston, with a nearby hill of the same name (the origin of the personal name ‘Cada’; it is first recorded in about 1200 as ‘Caddysleya’ and is ‘Kedsliedoors’ in 1643; it seems likely that there is a connection with the local Kedie/Kedzie/Kedslie family).

keek (keek) v. to peek, peep, glance, pry, look furtively – ‘she’s keekin oot her wundi’, ‘...Tae bei a keekin’ glass’[JSB], ‘...A was rale glad ti caaannie an keek backewards at the airt A’d comed’[ECS], ‘...Keeks o’er to see its bonnie sel’[JSB], ‘I keekit roond the stane wi’ caution An chitterin’ fear ...’[WP], ‘...like Auld Jock Grieve, for instance, keekin’ oot o’ the loft window at Colterscleuch’[DH], ‘...wi a last gledge at St. Mary’s clock keekin owre the riifs wie a sma local moon’[DH], ‘...At the Mair oo keeked at ev’ry stall On this maist spaicial day of all’[IWL], (from Mediaeval English).

Keek i’ the Kirk (keek-i-thu-kirk) n. nickname for William Scott.

Keelenlows (kee-len-lows) n. former farmstead in Castleton Parish. It is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map on the west bank of the Liddel, roughly opposite Kirndean and south of Whitehaugh. It is unclear if it corresponds to some place with a slightly different name.

keelie (kee-lee) n., arch. a small Highland cow – ‘...aa keinds, untellin – kye an tuips an keilies an yowes, mixty- maxty’[ECS] (also kyloe).

keelin (kee-in) n., arch. the process of stock-taking of sheep by marking each animal with dye or ‘keel’ – ‘...‘keeling’ may be termed a sort of stock-taking, when the different classes of sheep are counted and marked with ‘keel’ (ruddle in England)[RB].

keely-vine (kee-lee-vin) n., arch. a lead pencil – ‘...when so fortunate as to obtain ...the stump of a keely-vine’[RM].

keen (keen) adj., arch. lively, spirited (noted by E.C. Smith).

Keenan (kee-nin) n. Fr. Stephen (19th C.) priest at Edinburgh, who started visiting Hawick every 3 months in 1837, until a more permanent arrangement was made a few years later. He was thus the first priest to celebrate Roman Catholic sacraments in Hawick since before the Reformation. He wrote several books, particularly ‘Controversial catechism; or Protestantism refuted, and Catholicism established, by an appeal to the Holy Scriptures’ (1846, 1849, 1854, 1875, 1896).

keep (keep) v. to fare, get along, manage, ‘do’ – ‘how’r ee keepin?’, ‘how’s yer mother been keepin since she got oot o Peel?’, to mind, tend – ‘We say keep a bairn where in English the expression is nurse (or ‘mind’) a child’[ECS] (these usages are not common in standard English).

keepit (kee-piee’, -pi’) pp., arch. kept – ‘But little wist he o’ the girdle o’ heaven That keepit her virtue fair’[JTe], ‘...thou hest keepet me alavie, that I shudna gae doun til the pitt’[HSR], ‘For I hae keepet the wayes o’ the Lord ...’[HSR] (also written ‘keepet’).

Keeper o Liddesdale (kee-pur-ö-li-diz-däl) n. title for someone appointed by the Crown to be overseer of Liddesdale, specifically in the 16th century, when it was administered separately from the Middle Marches. The deputy of the Keeper was called the Captain of Hermitage. Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme was appointed as Keeper in 1551.

Keilder (keel-dur) n. common misspelling of Kielder.

Keir (keer) n. William of Whitehaugh (d.1818) possibly son of Thomas of Powisholm and Elizabeth Elliot, heiress of Whithaugh. He was Chamberlain for the Duke of Buccleuch for Eskdale and Liddesdale from perhaps 1772 to 1818. He lived at Mihlholm, near Langholm, where he is recorded in the Horse Tax Rolls in the 1780s and the dog tax in 1797. In 1787 he advised the Duke that some people in Liddesdale were petitioning for land to create a village, which would become Newcastleton. He was in charge of the plans for the town’s layout. He subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. He is probably the William ‘of Raniston’ listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. His agricultural improvements were the focus of a 2004 Ph.D. thesis at Edinburgh University by Brian Bonnymen. He was succeeded as Chamberlain by James Davidson. Whithaugh seems to have been inherited by William, who was probably his nephew. However, it is unclear how many Williams there were. He died at Mihlholm. William of Whithaugh (b.1810) son of Thomas and Eliza Elliot, he was born at Langholm. He probably inherited Whithaugh from his grandfather. He acted as estate improver for the Duke of Buccleuch. He resided at Potholm, near Langholm until 1848. In 1851 he is recorded at Whithaugh in Castleton Parish, as farmer of over 2,000 acres and employing 18 labourers. He was at Whitehaugh in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1861 he was still at Whithaugh, which is recorded as a house having 8 rooms with 1 or more windows. He was recorded as ‘Wm. Kerr’ at ‘Whitheugh’ in a directory of 1868. He was listed as owner of Whithaugh in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. He served as Chairman of the Parochial Board for Castleton. He was President of the Liddesdale Curling Club. He was also a breeder of prize cattle. His wife was Janet. He died without issue and Whithaugh was inherited by his nephew William Little.

Keith (keeth) n. Alexander of Belses (18th/19th C.) accountant in Edinburgh. He was recorded as owner of parts of Belses (purchased from Bennet of Chesters) in Ancrum Parish in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. He presumably held some of the lands of Belses, but this may only have been for the purpose of voting. Sir Edward (c.1280–1346) son of Robert, who was Great Marischal of Scotland. He is probably the Edward mentioned in a letter from Edward I in about 1300, granting him licence to take any of the goods from ‘Monsire Guilliam de Galeys’ (i.e. William Wallace). His brother Sir Robert succeeded their father as Great Marischal and commanded the cavalry at Bannockburn. He is referred to as ‘de Kethe’ when, along with his wife Isabella de Synton, he claimed the Sheriffdom of Selkirk from Edward I in about 1305. Isabella was the sister of the previous Sheriff, Andrew de Synton, and heiress to the Synton estate. He had a confirming charter for his lands and offices from David II. He secondly married Christina (or Christian), daughter of Sir John Monteith, Lord of Annan; she secondly married Sir Robert Erskine of that Ilk. His children included: Sir William; John of Inverugie, who married Mariot de Chen; Catherine; and Janet (or Joneta), who married Sir Thomas Erskine. Jean (presumably Janet) is recorded as his heir in a charter of 1368. It is unclear whether he or any of his children played any role locally. But Joneta married an Erskine, suggesting that the Synton estates passed through her to that family. His seal is attached to the Declaration of Arbroath. He died at the Battle of Neville’s Cross. His seal was divided into 6 vertical regions and decorated with lozenges, with a diagonal stripe on top. Janet or ‘Joneta’ (c.1345–1415) youngest daughter of Edward and Christina Menteith. She was also great-grand-daughter of the 11th Earl of Mar (resulting in a long-standing claim of the Erskines to the Earldom of Mar). She married David de Barclay (in Selkirk), then David Hamilton of Cadzow and finally Sir Thomas Erskine. In 1368 she is described as ‘Jean Berclay, daughter and heir of deceased Sir Edward Keth, lord of Syntoun’. One of her sons was Robert, 1st Lord Erskine, who probably inherited the Synton estates from her.

Kelloe Plantin (ke-ło-plawn’-in) n. plantation to the west of Borthwickbrae.

Kelly (ke-leec) n. Fr. Daniel (d.1943) priest at S.S. Mary & David 1938–42. He came from the neighbouring parish of Selkirk. He was responsible for significant redecoration of the interior of the church, and cleaning of the exterior. He resigned his charge in 1941 due to ill-health, remaining as assistant for another year before retiring fully. Elizabeth see Ruecastle. Frederick (19th C.) highwayman, whose accomplices held up carts of drink and other goods around Langburnshiel and Whitope in the early 1860s. Fr. Thomas (1896–1963) born in County Leitrim, Ireland, he was ordained a priest in Glasgow in 1925 and served in Glasgow, Airdrie, Saltcoats, Glasgow (again), Newmains and Portobello before arriving in Hawick as Chaplain of St. Margaret’s Convent in 1961 (formerly spelled ‘Kellie’, etc.).

Kelly Cleuch (ke-leec-kloogg) n. small stream in Liddesdale, rising on Rain’s Hill and flowing roughly westwards to join the Liddel Water between Hewis Bridge and Dinlabyre. It is probably associated with the former farm of Killoley.

kelpie (kel-pée) n., arch. a young mischievous person – ‘Fierce drove the storm, with sleet and rain. The waters rose and raged amain, And oft we heard the kelpy’s cry Amid the tempest’s melody’ [Jte], the Kelpie (thu-kel-pée) n. nickname in use around the early 19th century.

Kelsi (kel-si) n. Kelso, 21 miles north-east of Hawick, built at the confluence of the Tweed and the Teviot. It was an abbey town from 1128 and traditionally a market town for farmers, artisans and particularly shoemakers. The lands of the village were granted to Kelso Abbey in 1343, and it became a Burgh of Barony in 1634. It was governed by the Baron Bailie (appointed by the Duke of Roxburgh) until well into the 19th century. The town was largely destroyed by fire in 1684, when it is said that 306 families lost their homes. It is renowned for its Georgian, Flemish-style Square, with a bull ring in the centre, plus the 1816 ionic-columned Town Hall, and 1761 Cross Keys. The first stone bridge of 1754 was an important crossing point for the Tweed (swept away 1797) and Rennie’s 1803 bridge was the model for the Waterloo Bridge. Kelso remains an agricultural centre, with tourism, fishing, a Race Course and light industry. Ednam House (built 1761), the Corn Exchange (1855) and the octagonal Parish Church (1771–73) are important historical buildings, and Floors Castle is just a mile to the west. The Turret House serves as a local museum. The route between Hawick and Kelso would have directly followed the Teviot for centuries; the improved road (essentially the A698) was completed in the late 18th century. Kelso Civic Week is in July and was inaugurated in 1937. It comprises the Kelso Laddie’s Reel, a ceremony at the Trysting Tree, commemorating the old Whipmen’s society, and ride-outs, including one to Yetholm. An older tradition is St. James Fair, formerly in August and now in September. ‘Guide to Kelso’ was published by J. & J.H. Rutherford in 1880. Population (1991) 5,989 – ‘Bosom’d in woods where mighty rivers run, Kelso’s fair vale expands before the sun: Its rising downs in vernal beauty swell, And fring’d with hazel winds each flowery dell’ [JL] (the name is from the Old English ‘calc hoh’, meaning ‘chalk hill’, or perhaps from Old Welsh ‘calchi’ plus Old English, meaning ‘heel-shaped spur of land’; it first appears as ‘Calcheo’, ‘Calcho’ and ‘Calkou’ in the 12th century; it is on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Cailo’; the local pronunciation ‘Kelsey’ appears in the 16th century; often also written ‘Kelsae’).

Kelsi Abbey (kel-si-aw-bee) n. Kelso Abbey, founded in 1128 by monks from Tiron, France, having been originally founded in Selkirk in 1113, with a charter by David I. The grants from David included lands in Lilliesleaf, as well as elsewhere around the Borders. The rights and lands of the monks were confirmed in a charter by Malcolm IV in 1159. It is the most ruined of the four Border abbeys, but was once the largest and wealthiest, having possessed the revenues of 33 parishes; it was not until about 1430 that its superiority was overtaken by St. Andrews. The founder was Prince Henry, son of David I, who is buried at Roxburgh. The infant James III was crowned at the Abbey in 1460 after his father was killed nearby. The last Abbot was James Stewart, illegitimate son of James V. It was burned in 1523 and then partly destroyed by a force of Spaniards in Hertford’s 1545 invasion, and burned again in 1547. Part of the Abbey was later used as a prison, and then as the parish church till 1771. Only the western section remains of a once much larger construction, with memorial additions for the Dukes of Roxburgh. The ruins are open to the public, although with minimal information no visitor centre and unlike the other Border abbeys no entrance fee either! (spelling varied over the years, with ‘Kelcho’ turning up in 1159, ‘monasterii de Kelchou’ in 1249 and ‘Calco’ still appearing in 1550).

Kelsi Brig (kel-si-brig) n. name generally used for the main road bridge across the Tweed at Kelso. The foundation stone was laid with great ceremony in 1754, but the central arch collapsed before it was completed, killing 7 workmen. The eventual cost was a staggering £3,000. It became the only substantial bridge between Peebles and Berwick, and was presumably heavily used for traffic going north from Hawick. The bridge fell into disrepair, however, and was swept away in a flood in 1797. The new John Rennie design was built 1800–03 at the huge cost of about £18,000, and it was said to be the prototype for the Waterloo Bridge in London. It has toll-houses at the northern end, this being the location of a riot by the townspeople in 1857, frustrated with paying the bridge toll for over 50 years.

the Kelsi Chronicle (thu-kel-si-kro-nee-kul) n. the Kelso Chronicle, founded in Kelso in 1783, it was the first newspaper published in the Borders. It was renamed the British Chronicle or Union Gazette in 1784, and was discontinued in 1803, but resumed again in 1832. Merging later with the Border Pioneer, Jedburgh Gazette, etc., it ran until 1932, eventually becoming part of the Southern Reporter. Because of its Liberal stance (in opposition to the Tory-backed Kelso Mail) it often covered newsworthy events in Hawick. It is also useful as a source of local death notices and obituaries, particularly before the first Hawick-based papers appeared.

Kelsi Junction (kel-si-jung-shin) n. junction of the Waverley Line with the Kelso branch line, south of Newtown St. Boswells. This linked Hawick with Kelso and points towards Tweedmouth (1851–1964), as well as to Jedburgh via another branch (1851–1948).

the Kelsi Mail (thu-kel-si-mail) n. the Kelso Mail, or Roxburgh, Berwickshire and Northumberland Gazette, one of the earliest newspapers published in Roxburghshire. It started in 1797, and was one of only printed sources of local news for about 50 years, before the first Hawick newspapers started. It was founded by James Ballantyne (friend and later publisher of Sir Walter Scott) and was staunchly pro-Tory. The first Hawick agent was John Nixon. It ceased publication in 1945. The same company started publishing books (at the suggestion of Sir Walter Scott), moving to Edinburgh in 1802, and publishing many of Sir Walter’s novels.

Kelsi Wull (kel-si-wul) n. local nickname, probably from the 19th century – ‘Wullie Dunlap and Big Frank creep Past us, and Cashie’s near at hand; There’s Kelsi Wull and Wat the Sweep, And Wullie Goudlands leadin’ the Band’[HI] (presumably a William with a connection to Kelso).

kelter (kel-tur) v., poet. to fall, tumble, go head over heels – ‘Though soul an’ conscience baith should kelter’[JR].

kemp (kemp) v., arch. to engage in a contest in the harvest field – ‘He was once kemping with a celebrated shearer . . . ’[RM], n., arch. a contest, particularly between bands of reapers – ‘The kirk day cam’, a kemp began, And hard and fast it grew . . . ’[JT], poet. a champion, great fighter – ‘Syne he’s ca’d on him Ringan Red; A sturdy kemp was he. From friend or foe in border feid Who never a foot would flee’[JL].

Kemp (kemp) n. James (b.1822) son of William and Elizabeth Ketchin, he was an ironmonger in Galashiels. He is probably the Mr. Kemp of Gala who, in 1856, donated to the Hawick Archaeological Society a mastodon tooth and other fossils and rocks. John (19th C.) brewer of Hawick who was also an early member of Allars Kirk. It is possible he is the same man as the cooper. John (b.c.1790) from Melrose, he was a cooper in Hawick. He is listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory and recorded at about 16 High Street in 1841. In 1851 he was a widower around the Crown Close and in Slater’s 1852 directory he is a cooper on the High Street. In 1861 he was a widower at 4 Melgund Place (probably the modern No. 9). His wife was Margaret and their children included Helen, Catherine, Margaret and Jane. Rev. Joseph William (1872–1933) born in Hull, son of a policeman. His parents died when he was young, and he had minimal education. He attended night school, then the Bible Training Institute in Glasgow, where he was baptised. He became minister at Kelso Baptist Church in 1897 and moved to Hawick Baptist Church in 1898. During his brief ministry several new features were added to the congregation’s work, e.g. open air services on Sunday evenings, and services were sometimes also held in the Theatre on Croft Road. He remained until 1902, when he moved to Charlotte Baptist Chapel, Edinburgh. He vastly increased the congregation there, moved to New York in 1915, then Auckland in 1920. He established the New Zealand Bible Training Institute in 1922 and became President of the Baptist Union of New Zealand in 1929, but earlier illness returned and he died a few years later. He was said to be temperamental and difficult to work with. He was extremely conservative in his theological principles, fighting against what he saw as the evils of dancing, card-playing, the theatre and cinema. He wrote some short books, including ‘The Soul Winner and Soul Winning’ (1916). He married Winifred Binnie in 1897, and they had 2 children. He is buried at Auckland, and it is reported that 6,000 people attended his funeral.
Kemp’s Castle

Kemp’s Castle (kemps-kaw-sul) n. popular name for the remains of a settlement near Blawearie. The hill there is essentially the north-eastern spur of Borthwickshiel Horn, and reaches a height of 349 m. The main enclosure is an oval about 50 m by 40 m, defined by a bank with an outer quarry ditch. The entrance is on the east side and there are as many as 5 hut circles inside. Another fainter enclosure to the south-west measured about 90 m by 75 m and contains other hut circles. This may be an early iron age settlement. There are signs of cord rig on the eastern slopes (there are other Kemp’s Castles elsewhere).

Kemp’s Close (kemps-klös) n. occasional name used in the mid-19th century for a passage-way at 7 High Street, named after the cooper’s there.

ken (ken) v. to know, recognise, be acquainted with – ‘A deh ken’, ‘div ee ken Mrs. Broon’s in the hospital?’, ‘ee deh ken the half o eet’, ‘Div ee ken Ken Dodd’s ded’s deed?’, ‘Then I could ken – and man and woman Kenn’d weel as I did – what was comin’ . . .’ [AD], ‘A ken o’ a stream lang streekit an’ blue’ [JEDM], ‘I ken that he will aye be true – For Willie lo’es me weel’ [JT], ‘Ye may ken, I was born and bred i’ the Loan’ [DH], ‘They’re but young aince, these same wee wains, And well behaved, ye ken’ [WFC], ‘Feel at hame? – A ken A will’ [IWl], sometimes used with missing subject – ‘He’ll be kens how lang wi’ that job’ [GW], to identify, see – ‘A didna ken a grain o’ odds o’d for aa A hedna seen thre kens-whan’ [ECS], n. understanding, knowledge, perception – ‘That carried the banner in days past oor ken’ [JEDM], arch. one’s mind – ‘They ken their ain ken best’ [GW] (from Mediaeval English; see also kin, kenned, kent, Ken fine, kens what and kens when).

Kennedy (ke-nu-dee) n. Alexander (17th C.) resident at Langflat (near Southfield) in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. Alexander (17th C.) resident of Riddell according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He is listed among the ‘deficients’ of the Parish, but was charged tax for 2 hearths. Alexander Allan (19th/20th C.) manager of the Wells estate in Rulewater from 1885. He had previously been at the Earl of Seafield’s Strathspiey estate. In 1877 he married Emma Groves from Gloucestershire. Andrew (b.1820/1) painter-decorator, who had a younger brother Robert. He was also known locally as an artist, painting ‘The Hawick Common-Riding of 1846’ which is in the Museum, along with portraits of some prominent Hawick men of his day, e.g. Tommy Roberton (which he donated to the Archaeological Society along with other items). He was also responsible for decorating the Victoria Bridge when it was first built. In 1841 he and his brother were recorded on the High Street (probably about No. 71). He lived near the Millport Steps, moved later to 12 Teviot Crescent (which became the Burns Club) and feued land at the foot of Baker Street. He is listed as a painter at Teviot Crescent in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was a Trustee of St. George’s Kirk. He married Elizabeth Morgan, Slater’s 1852 directory. He was a Trustee of the Club) and feued land at the foot of Baker Street.

In 1875 he found a large quantity of old coins while digging the foundations for a house on the High Street, these apparently having been deposited there in about 1555. In 1869 he married Helen Crichton, daughter of Gideon Ker. Their children were: Annie; Maggy; and Robert (b.1875), who took over the chemist’s shop. Rev. Hugh (1698–1764) born in Northern Ireland of Scottish parents, he graduated from Glasgow University in 1714 and became Chaplain to the Douglas of Cavers. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Jedburgh in 1720 and became minister of Torthorwald in 1721. He was presented to Cavers by Archibald Douglas in 1722 and became minister in 1723. He served as Moderator of the Merse and Teviotdale Synod. He remained at Cavers until moved to Rotterdam in 1737. There he translated into Dutch the works of several of the best-known Scottish and English theologians. He obtained a D.D. from Aberdeen in 1762 and was described as ‘one of the best pulpit-men in the kingdom’. He was said to be tall, slender and with an open face and ruddy complexion. He married Margaret Scott (d.1746), a sister of Walter Scott of Crumhaugh, and they had 13 children, including: William (1737–1782), who became Professor of Greek in Marischal College, Aberdeen; Walter (d.1777), who became a planter in Suriarnam; Anne, who married Alexander Livingstone, Provost of Aberdeen and merchant in Rotterdam; Rachel, who married William Fraser of Fraserfield; Beatrix, who married Capt. Bradshaw; and a son who died young. He published several sermons, some of them in Dutch, including ‘Sermon at opening of the Synod’ (1732), ‘Discourse concerning the Nature, Author, Means, and Manner of Conversion’ (1743), ‘Sermons in the Dutch Language’ (1748), ‘A short Account of the Rise and Progress of a remarkable Work of Grace in the United Netherlands’ (1752), as well as prefaces in other works. Several of his works were abridged in ‘Remains’ (1828) edited by John Brown of Whitburn.

James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Mill in 1693 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for William Veitch (also in Ashkirk Mill) in 1690. James (18th C.) chaise-driver at Teviotbank in 1794, when he was working for David Simpson. James (1771–1842) innkeeper of the Ordnance Arms and Quarter-Master-Sergeant in the Royal Horse Artillery. He was probably the James born in Cavers Parish to James. He served as ‘Preses’ of the Relief Kirk Session. He was known locally as a veteran of Waterloo. He enlisted in 1790 and retired from the army in 1818, during which time he saw almost constant active duty, including in the Peninsular War and at Waterloo. He was present at Badajos, Torres Vedras, Salamanca, Ciudad Rodrigo and Victoria. He was also part of the occupying army in Paris after Waterloo. He attained the highest grade of a non-commissioned soldier and apparently turned down a commission. He was known as one of the best artillerists in his regiment. After retiring he was miller at Spittal-on-Rule briefly, but then became landlord of the Ordnance Arms (which he presumably named), which was also known as the Cannon Inn, at 12 High Street. He is recorded there on Pigot’s 1825/6

John William (1857–1934) son of James Damone and brother of Walter Phillips, with whom he ran the firm W. & J. Kennedy. He became an expert on the history of the Borders and was said to have had a quiet disposition. He suggested and organised the erection of the Johnnie Armstrong commemorative stone at Teviothead, unveiled in 1897. He also contributed to the Transactions of the Archæological Society and was a member of the Society for 59 years. During the period 1907–33 he served as either President or Vice-President. He helped James Sinton compile his bibliography of Hawick-related works. He married Annie Scott Edie, who died in 1940, aged 71. James D., M.B.E., was their son. They also had 3 daughters, Lucille and Peggy being long time workers in the family shop. John (d.1985) from the bookseller’s family. He rose to a prominent position within the Forestry Commission, which started awarding a trophy in his name to encourage multi-purpose woodlands. Oliver (19th C.) married Sarah Ann Henson. Their son Thomas Oliver was born in Hawick in 1874. He was probably the Oliver born to James and Isabella in Hawick in about 1839. Oliver (b.1868) son of John and Helen Rutherford, was born in Hawick. He was a stocking-maker to trade, moving to Southend to set up his own company, and using ‘Medway’ as his trade name. He presented the Medway Cup in 1927, to be competed for at the Common Riding Races. A cousin on his mother’s side was Isla Coulton, niece Scott. He is probably the Oliver who either married Jane Beattie in Hawick in 1906, Isabella Hughes in 1911 or Euphemia Haldane Davies in his father’s chemist’s shop. He took over the family shop. He helped James Sinton compile his bibliography of Hawick-related works. He married Annie Scott Edie, who died in 1940, aged 71. James D., M.B.E., was their son. They also had 3 daughters, Lucille and Peggy being long time workers in the family shop. John (d.1985) from the bookseller’s family. He rose to a prominent position within the Forestry Commission, which started awarding a trophy in his name to encourage multi-purpose woodlands. Oliver (19th C.) married Sarah Ann Henson. Their son Thomas Oliver was born in Hawick in 1874. He was probably the Oliver born to James and Isabella in Hawick in about 1839. Oliver (b.1868) son of John and Helen Rutherford, was born in Hawick. He was a stocking-maker to trade, moving to Southend to set up his own company, and using ‘Medway’ as his trade name. He presented the Medway Cup in 1927, to be competed for at the Common Riding Races. A cousin on his mother’s side was Isla Coulton, niece Scott. He is probably the Oliver who either married Jane Beattie in Hawick in 1906, Isabella Hughes in 1911 or Euphemia Haldane Davies in 1916. Robert (1777/8–1860) blacksmith of Melgund Place. He was son of shepherd James and Janet Fulton and is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Robert (d.1882) older brother of William Norman and younger half-brother of James Damone. He wrote some poetry, including ‘Plea for the Common Riding’, being a strong Common Riding supporter, despite being an exile. He also wrote an inauguration ode on the unveiling of Prince Albert’s Monument in Edinburgh and verses on the erection of the Bruce Statue in Stirling. He was a civil engineer who spent much of his life in India and retired to Edinburgh. He donated a large collection of Indian artefacts to the Museum in 1863, as well as a number of coins and hunting and fishing trophies from India. He was described as ‘one of the most munificent of the donors to whom the Museum has been indebted’. He would annually bring the old snuff horn of his brother’s over to Hawick for the Snuffing. Robert (1875–1948) son of David and Helen Crichton Ker. He took over his father’s chemist’s shop on the High Street. He sold the shop in 1910 and emigrated to Canada the following year. He married Annie Wilson Miller and their children were David, John and 2 daughters who died young. He returned to England in the 1940s. Thomas (18th C.) recorded as tenant of the land of Hutcher’s Riverside in

Minto Parish in 1780. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His wife was Margaret (or ‘Peggy’) Armstrong and their children included: Thomas (b.1808); John (b.1811); Alexander (b.1813); James (b.1815); James (again, b.1817); Mary (b.1819); Robert (b.1823); Margaret (b.1825); and Catherine (b.1828). Thomas (b.1805/6) from Fife, he was a coachbuilder. He lived on the Backdamgate in 1851, employing 5 men and was listed as a coach-maker there in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife Ann was from Midlothian and they had children Thomas D. and Montague. Sir Thomas Lawrie ‘Jock’ (1928–2013) born in Hawick and educated at Hawick High School, he joined the R.A.F. in 1946 and became a pilot officer in 1949. In 1971 he was appointed Deputy Commandant of the R.A.F. Staff College, Bracknell. By 1979 he was Deputy Commander-in-Chief, R.A.F. Strike Command. He retired in 1986, with the rank of Air Chief Marshal. He also served as Deputy Lieutenant for Leicestershire and Lord Lieutenant of Rutland. He married Margaret Ann Parker and had a son and 2 daughters. Walter Phillips (1854–1913) son of James Damone and Christian Lamb. He learned about the book trade in Edinburgh, and ran the business W. & J. Kennedy with his brother John William. He was a teacher in the Science and Technology School in the late 19th century, who moved to be one of the teachers in the Buccleuch School. In 1874 he was one of two young men who raised a petition to get the School Board to support a mathematics class in the town. Eventually this led to a committee, independent of the School Board, which organised classes in science and art, which were later found a home in the Buccleuch Memorial. His contribution to technical and scientific education in the town was immense. He was also involved with the Archaeological Society. In addition he was a Volunteer for over 30 years, retiring with the rank of Major. He married Jane Law and secondly Emma Landles. Jean (later Mrs. Irvine, b.1876), first woman President of the Royal Pharmaceutical Society, was his daughter. Dr. W.P. (b.1899) was his son. After his death former pupils subscribed to the establishment of the Kennedy-Dechan Prize in science and mathematics. Walter Phillips (1899–1983) son of Walter Phillips. He was born in Hawick and educated at the Buccleuch Memorial Institute and George Heriot’s. He graduated with a B.Sc. from Edinburgh University in 1920 and a Ph.D. in 1927. He became a doctor and for a while was Professor of Physiology at the Royal Medical College in Baghdad, then moving to the Ministry of Health in London. He was a Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh. William (17th C.) listed among the ‘Deficients in Hauick Parich’ in 1694. He appears to be at ‘The mance of Hauick’ and is listed as ‘Wm Kennitie in Park’ (although it is unclear where ‘Park’ might be). William (b.1790/1) born in Hawick, he was living at 7 O’Connell Street in 1841 and 1851. He was working as a woollen spinner. His wife was Margaret Leithead, but she died before 1851. Their children included William and Thomas. Probably the same William was living in Hawick when listed among heads of household in Wilton Kirk in 1835. William (b.1817/8) born in Wilton Parish, he was living at Allars Crescent in 1851 and on Dickson Street in 1861. His wife Jane was born ‘At Sea’. Their children included William, James, Catherine, Margaret, Barbara, Thomas and Jane. William Norman ‘Norman’ (1821–1865) son of veteran James and Lucille Hervieu, from France. He was christened in Kelso. He was younger brother of Robert and half-brother of James Damone. He trained as a book-binder, probably with his half-brother. He was Inspector of the Poor in Hawick for about 15 years, but succumbed to fever after visiting a sick pauper. He was a founder of the Archaeological Society, being its first official member, acting as Secretary ‘pro tem’ in the first months, then being the first Treasurer (personally paying for the publication of the initial reports) and a regular contributor to the early Transactions. Despite his life being cut short, he contributed no less than 48 papers, on a wide range of subjects. Essentially an early folklorist, his descriptions of Hawick characters (mostly presented at the Archaeological Society, but published after his death) formed the basis for Robert Murray’s ‘Hawick Characters’. They are an invaluable source of information about ordinary Hawick people in the late 18th and early 19th centuries, containing examples of local dialect and numerous funny stories! They formed part of what he referred to as ‘The Local Ethnology of Hawick and Neighbourhood’, suggesting that we might one day have seen the publication of a full-scale book. His writing shows a skill that stands out compared with most of his contemporaries, suffused with a strong empathy for his fellow humans, with liberal views that seem quite modern (e.g. in his comments about the African-born teacher Tom Jenkins). His liberal views seem sense of humanity. He was probably the Mr.
Kennedy who donated to the Archaeological Society in 1856 ‘some very interesting fossil remains from the greywracke quarry at St. Mary’s head of Slitrig Crescent’. He was also one of the first (in 1858) to suggest the Catrail was a boundary connecting between streams rather than a defensive ditch. In addition, he performed early examinations of local hill-forts, and was elected a member of the Society of Antiquarians of Scotland. He was the first to compile a list of the ministers of Hawick Parish. He wrote some poetry, including ‘Dialogue Anent the Auld Brig’, another poem on the same subject (intended for the Auld Brig competition, but never entered) and others that appeared in the local press. In 1863 he presented to the Museum some items he had found while St. Mary’s Kirk was being renovated. He was a keen Common Riding supporter, and personally reinstated the ‘Snuffing’ tradition. He wrote a short history of Common Riding traditions, published posthumously from notes of a book he was working on. He had also been working on the Burgh records to trace the Town’s history, and had extensive notes on the history of manufacturing in Hawick, all of which he was intending to compile into some kind of book. He became a friend of Rev. James Morton (author of ‘Monastic Annals of Teviotdale’ and editor of the John Leyden collection), and helped him with preparation of a supplement to Dr. Jamieson’s dictionary of the Scottish language. In 1851 he was living at Teviot Square with a servant, and in Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed as a shopkeeper at Teviot Square. He later lived at Stonefield Cottage, where he is listed in 1861. He married Matilda Cox, who was born in Ireland. Their children included: James Robert (b.1850); Charles Robert (b.1851); Lucille Elizabeth (b.1853); William Norman (b.1856); Robert (b.1857); John Ross (b.1861); and Matilda (b.1863). His portrait was painted by his brother Robert. He is also in another portrait (by John Guthrie) along with fellow Archaeological Society founders Alexander and Robert Michie, and there is an early photograph of him. His death came unexpectedly after he attended to a feverish woman in the West-end, not being able to find anyone else to help. He is buried in the Welloagate Cemetery. William Norman ‘Willie’ (b.1856) son of William Norman. He dispensed the snuff at the Snuffing in the late 1800s and early 1900s. There is a photograph of him with the snuff mill in 1907. He may have been the proprietor of the Tower Hotel and married a daughter of Andrew Minto (formerly written ‘Kennidie’, ‘Kennitie’ and variants).

the Kennedy-Dechan Prize (ðn-ku-nu-de-dee-kin-priz) n. science bursary prize fund at the High School, set up by in memory of Walter Phillips Kennedy and Martin Dechan about 1915. The initial fund was subscribed to by former pupils, raising over £1100, with later donations by the Callants’ Club. It was used to award gold medals to 3rd year High School pupils who excelled in science and mathematics. More recently the prize has been given to final year pupils. University prizes in these subjects, available for 3 years, were also originally awarded.

Kennedy’s (ke-nu-deez) n. W. & J. Kennedy, booksellers, bookbinders and stationers shop at 2 Sandbed. It was founded by James Damone Kennedy, then continued by his sons Walter and James. They also ran a circulating library around the 1830s. They published many local books, and were the town’s pre-eminent bookshop for decades. The business left the Kennedy family in the early 1960s, being run by Frances and Allan Hobkirk, but retaining the old name. It closed in 1971 after 142 years, following a compulsory purchase order by the council as part of the Howegate redevelopment scheme; however, the planned realignment of the property never materialised.

Ken the Horse (ken-thu-hors) n. soubriquet for the Equestrian Monument at 1514 Memorial. The joke comes from the use of the statue as a landmark, particularly when giving directions, which invariably start with the question ‘ee ken the horse?’ The phrase was a focus of the speech given by Ian Landles when the monument was moved in 2003. A ‘Ken the Horse’ supporters group was started in 2009. In 2010 the Enterprise Group at Hawick High School used the ‘Ken the Horse’ brand to raise money through car stickers and other merchandise. In addition a song was written by Iain H. Scott, and some cartoons were produced.

Keown (kyoo-in) n. George teacher at Burnfoot School who gave a trophy that has been competed for since 1968 by Hawick Primary School rugby teams.

keep (kep) v., arch., poet. to catch (especially a thrown object), stem the flow of water, contain, confine, keep – ‘With jug and bowls [they] kepped the liquor as it was flowing out’ [HAST1875], ‘...A grassy pule to kep the lap o’t’ [JBS], ‘Ilka blade o’ gerss keps its ain drap o’ dew’ [JaB], ‘The gowan keps its drap o’ dew’ [WE], ‘Ti kep gushes = to dam the flow of streams of water such as run down the street channel (the gutter)’ [ECS], Keppin gushes was a favourite pastime amongst Hawick bairns, who dammed with their bare feet the water in the street ‘gutters’. Ker (ker, kawr) n. Adam (15th C.) Clerk of Glasgow Diocese who was the notary for the document giving the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas, 2nd of Drumlanrig in 1428/9, following the death of William’s father. It is unclear if he was attached to a particular local church. Adam (15th C.) appointed as one of the bailies to Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, to give sasine of Wolffee to David Home of Wedderburn in 1479. Adam (b.1808/9–79) from the Hawick area. In about 1832 he emigrated to Galt in Ontario. In 1850 he was elected as Clerk and Treasurer, serving until 1858. He then served as Mayor of Galt in the period 1868–74.

Andrew of Cessford and Altonburn (d.1444) son of Andrew, who he succeed in 1444. He was probably the originator of the left-handed family tradition. He became prominent as a supporter of the Earl of Angus and was given lands in Jedforest. It was either him or his father who was ‘Andro Ker lord of Awtounburne’ in 1445 when Henry Wood leased his tenantry of Harden Wood (within Borthwickshielis) to him. In 1446 he was ‘Andrea Ker de Awtonburne’ when he witnessed a charter between Inglis of Manor and Scott of Buccleuch. He witnessed a document for Oswald Abernethy, made before the Earl of Douglas in 1446/7, relating to the lands of Teindside and Harwood. In 1447 he was a witness to the charter of Margaret Cusing (wife of Simon Routledge, Hawick Burgess) to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was ‘Bailie in that part’ in a 1448 document whereby Stephen Scott gained the ‘Burrellands’ in Eckford. In 1450 he had a charter for lands in Stirlingshire. And he was Walter Scott of Buccleuch’s Bailie in Eckford (along with Stephen Scott) in 1454. In 1453 he had a mutual bond of manrent with Sir Robert Colville. In 1456 he was accused of bringing Englishmen to burn Eckford, Crailing, Grahamslaw and Jedburgh, but was acquitted. Also in 1456 he and his brother James were involved with collecting rents on the King’s lands in Ettrick Forest, for which he had the lease of the farms of Bowerhope and Ashiestiel. In 1457 he was made Bailie of the Lordship of Jedforest by George, Earl of Angus. In the early 1460s he sided with Robert, Lord Boyd, in seizing power from the young King James III. In 1464/5 he was on the inquest for the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffship of Roxburgh (to Archibald Douglas) and also on the panel to decide on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex (between William Douglas of Drumlanrig and Alexander Gledstains). In 1468 he and his son Walter were involved in an arrangement with Sir Alexander Home of that Ilk, when they acted as procurators...

for Henry Wardlaw of Torrie (and Wilton). In 1469/70 he witnessed the granting of the Governorship of Hermitage to the Scotts of Buccleuch for the Earl of Angus. In 1470 he was a witness to another charter for the Douglases of Cavers, and was one of the bailies appointed by the Earl of Angus to give sasine of these lands in 1472. In 1470/1 he was indicted for helping the English, bringing into the traitor James Douglas, involvement in the battle in which the Laird of Rutherford and others were captured, wounded or killed, helping Robert, Lord Boyd, in capturing the King for a period, and involvement in plotting to kill Andrew, Lord Avondale, Chancellor of Scotland; he appeared before a jury and was acquitted, with the decision witnessed by several Border Lairds. In 1471 his son and heir Walter took possession of the lands of Borthwickshiels and Harden Wood. Also in 1471 he had a debt relating to Crown lands. In 1475/6 he was witness to a document relating to Kirkurd for the Scotts of Buccleuch. In 1479 he received the ‘fermes’ (i.e. rental fees) of Jedburgh. He married a daughter of William Douglas of Cavers, and secondly married Margaret Tweedie (or perhaps Herries). His children included: Andrew, younger of Cessford, mentioned in 1464/5, who died before his father, and married Margaret; Walter of Caverton and Cessford, who succeeded; Thomas, who became the 1st Laird of Ferniehirst and is usually spelled ‘Kerr’; Robert, Abbot of Kelso; William of Yair and Bothill; Ralph of Primside Loch, also called ‘Radulpho’; and Margaret, who married Sir James Sandilands of Calder. George of Samuelston may also have been his son. Andrew (d. bef 1479) eldest son of Andrew of Cessford, but he died before his father. He is mentioned in 1464/5. He may have married a Hepburne, and after his death his wife married a Haliburton, Laird of Dirleton (she was probably the ‘Mariota’ who was wife of George, 4th Lord Haliburton of Dirleton). His only child was Margaret, who in 1479 renounced all claim to the Barony of Cessford in favour of her uncle Walter. Sir Andrew (d.1526) Laird of Cessford, son of Sir Robert (who died before he could succeed). In 1503 he had sasine for Cessford, ‘Hunteisland’, Auld Roxburgh, Altonburn, ‘Bordislandis’ and Castleside. In 1508/9 he had a charter for Auld Roxburgh and in 1511 a confirming charter for Cessford, Caverton (called ‘Rutherfurdislandis’), ‘Fetheringamyslandis’, Hownam, ‘Penniside’ and Smallholm. He served as Warden of the Middle Marches (possibly along with his brother Ralph) about 1503 and again in 1515. He probably fought at Flodden. In 1519 he had a charter of half the lands of Hassendean from William Elphinstone, Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1525 he was named on a bond for keeping peace on the Border. He was killed at the Battle of Skirmish Hill by James Elliot, a supporter of Scott of Buccleuch. This led to a feud between the Scotts and the Kers that lasted decades, and led to the murder of Sir Walter of Buccleuch on Edinburgh High Street in 1552. He married Agnes, daughter of Sir Patrick Crichton of Crichton Riddell, and was succeeded by his son Sir Walter. His other children were: Mark, Commendator of Newbattle; Andrew, who married Marion Pringle; Catherine, who married Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst; Margaret, who married Sir John Home of Cowdenknowes and was granted lands in Smallholm in 1524; and Isobel, who married Sir William Sinclair of Roslin. Andrew of Primside (16th C.) son of Ralph. He is probably the ‘Andreas ker filius Radulph’ who was part of a bond in 1498 to act upon men who were already fugitives. In 1526 he was listed among the large number of Borderers (led by Walter Scott of Branxholme) who had remission for an attack on the Earl of Arran. He was one of the men indicted in 1552 for the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was succeeded by his son Gilbert of Primside. Andrew of Greenhead (16th C.) claimed tenancy of Broadmeadows in 1541. He also claimed tenancy of ‘Myddilsteid of Hartwod’, as well as ‘Blakmeidnes’, Bailielee and half of Phaup. Andrew ‘Dand’ (16th C.) recorded ‘in Scheilstokbrayis’ in 1567 when Dame Janet Beaton, Lady Buccleuch, was ordered to present him. He was described as her ‘householdman and sevant’. Sir Walter Ker of Cessford (and his son Thomas) were also instructed to present him, since he lived on their lands. He presumably lived at Shielstockbraes, in Morebattle Parish. Andrew (d.c.1573) son of Andrew of Cessford and brother of Sir Walter of Cessford. In 1538 he was among a group of local Lairds accused of assisting ‘George Ruthirfurde, called Cokburne’ and ‘called Jock of ye Green’ Rutherford. In 1547/8 he was among the Ker who burned lands in Ale Water that belonged to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. In 1551 he was ‘broder to Cesfurde’ when he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. In 1553/4 he was one of the Ker pledges to keep good rule against both Scotland and England. Sir Andrew of Falkonside (d.1599) son of George of Falkonside and nephew of Sir Andrew of Cessford. His estate was on the Tweed, south-west of Galashiels. He complained against Robert Kerr of Woodhead in 1564, resulting in Robert being warded in Edinburgh Tolbooth. He and his children were named in the 1564/5 bond between the Kers and the Scotts; his son and heir George was to marry Janet, sister to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, but the Kers did not fulfill this part. He was said to have held a pistol at the side of Mary, Queen of Scots in 1566, when she was forced to watch the murder of David Rizzio. In 1567 he was one of the sureties for entering Hob Elliot of Thorslihope with the Regent Moray. He served as surety in 1569 for Lanie Armstrong of Whitlaugh, as well as Hob Elliot (‘callit Sweit Mylk alias Greit Leggis’), and was also surety in 1571 and 1572 and then in 1573 for some Elliots. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves and signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573. In 1572/3 he was surety for James Langlands of that Ilk and for William Douglas of Cavers; they were swearing that they would not help the Kerrs of Ferniehirst. In 1575 he was one of the arbitrators for the Pringles in their feud with the Elliots. He is listed in Monipennie’s c.1594 compilation of Border lairds. In 1573 he married Margaret Stewart, who was the widow of John Knox and they had several children. In 1632 Robert, son of Andrew of Faldonside (either him or a later generation) succeeded to lands in Feu-Rule. He also had a son John, whose daughter Mary married William Elliot, Parson of Bedrule. Sir Andrew ‘Dand’ of the Hirsel (d.bef. 1578) probably son of Walter of Litteldean and possibly elder brother of Sir John of the Hirsel. He is probably ‘Dande Carr of Litteden’ who in 1541 was accused along with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch of being responsible for the death of an Englishman. He is probably the ‘Dand Ker’ who signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’ in 1551. He is ‘Andro Ker of Hirsell’ in 1552 when indicted for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch; his son Walter was also listed. In 1553/4 he was listed among Kers in an assurance not to harm the Scotts or their followers, as well as another bond by the Rutherfords not to harm the Kers. He may be the same as Sir Andrew of Litteldean who was to satisfy George Rutherford in 1560 as part of resolving the feud create by the murder of George’s father, George Rutherford of Longnewton; he was also to ask forgiveness from Sir William Cranston ‘for being vpon the ground quhair Sir Walter Scot of Bukclewch Knycht was slaine’, this being Cranston’s uncle. He was among those required by the Queen in 1561 to appear in Jedburgh to answer for their failure to apprehend fugitives. In 1562 he was among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts. He is mentioned as one of those excepted in the 1564/5 bond between the Scotts and the Kerrs. He signed the ‘Band of Teviotdale’ in 1565, but helped by the notary. In 1567 he was one of the sureties for entering Hob Elliot of Thorslihope with the Regent Moray. In 1568/9 he was one of the main Kers to sign a contract with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme relating to the slaying of Sir Walter’s father in Edinburgh. They had to appear at the church of Melrose ‘to make homage for the said slaughter’ and his grandson John Kerr was to marry Elizabeth Murray, sister of Sir Walter (and if not, then another son was to marry another relative of Scott of Buccleuch); however, this does not appear to have happened. He may also be the ‘Andro Ker of Litteden’ who signed the bond for suppressing Border thieves in 1569. Also in 1569 he was surety for Sir William Ainslie and was ‘Sir Andro Ker of Hirsell Knycht’ when a bond was made with John Edmondson of that Ilk. He is probably the ‘Andro Ker of Littedene knycht’ who signed a bond to act against Borders thieves in 1571/2. It is unclear how he was related to the Kers of Cessford. His son was Walter of Littledean. Sir Andrew of Caverton (d.bef. 1566) son of Sir Walter of Cessford. He was the heir to the Cessford titles and estates, but died before his father, and his brother William succeeded. He was one of the men named in 1552 for their involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. In 1562 he and his father (on behalf of their whole band) promised not to enter Ancrum. Also in 1562 he was listed among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts. He may be the ‘Andro Ker of Hietoune’ (i.e. Heiton) who is mentioned as one of those excepted in the 1564/5 bond between the Scotts and the Kerrs. His wife’s name is unknown. They had 2 daughters, Grisel and Bessie, to whom his mother, Dame Isobel, served as ‘tutrix’ after his death. Andrew of Graden (16th C.) named in 1590 along with ‘Gib Elliott son to Robin’, 2 servants of Robert of Redheugh and others who were accused of stealing horses from Middleton Hall in the previous year. He is recorded as ‘Andrew Karr alias the tutor of Gradoun reset by Robine Elliot’ (suggesting he was already declared a fugitive). It is unclear how he was related to other Kers of Graden. He is probably the ‘Andrew Carr Robin

Andrew and his son Thomas. Andrew (16th/17th C.) son of William. He was succeeded by William and had other sons Andrew, Robert and Thomas. Andrew (16th/17th C.) served as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch in the period 1625–27. It is unclear whether he is one of the other contemporay Andrews. Sir Andrew of Cavers (1630–76) eldest son of Sir Thomas. He was ‘fiar thairof’ listed after his father in 1648 among the local men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves on the Border. He was probably the Andrew, son of Sir Thomas, who was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1649 and probably the Andrew ‘fear of Caveris’ who witnessed a contract relating to Appotside in 1654. He succeeded to the lands of Bedrule, as well as others, having a deed under the Great Seal in 1649. He was appointed as a Justice of the Peace in 1663. His lands were confirmed by Parliament in 1672 and included the Barony of Bedrule, as well as Ruecastle, Menslaws and others. He allowed Thomas Turnbull, chief of the Bedrule Turnbulls to stay at Bedrule Castle, Menslaws and others. He allowed Thomas to marry Margaret, eldest daughter of Sir John Wauchope of Niddrie, and she died in 1661. They had 4 daughters: Agnes, who married her cousin John Ker of West Nisbet; Anna, who married Mr. Murray of Deuchar; Margaret, who married Matthew Sinclair of Hermandston; and Jean, who married Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto. In 1689 his daughters were served as heirs to him, his father Thomas and his son Thomas. Andrew of Wells (17th C.) local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s. He was brother of Lord John of Locktour and owned lands in Rulewater, including Wells. He paid the land tax in 1678 for Huntknow in Bedrule Parish, valued at £66 13s 4d, as well as land valued at and £409 in Hobkirk Parish; he may also be ‘The walls’ who paid tax on £214 10s in Cavers Parish in the same year. In 1698 his lands were inherited by his daughter Joan and her husband John Murray of Ashiestiel and later owned by Thomas Rutherford of Wells. Sir Andrew of Greenhead (d.1665) served heir to his father Sir Andrew of Greenhead in 1617, he was created a Baronet in 1637. In 1612, when ‘younger of Greenheid’, he and his brother Thomas, were among a group of 60 or so men accused of aggressively coming to the lands of Hartwoodmyres. In 1638 he was appointed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire to enforce subscription to the ‘Confessions of Faith’. He defended Smallholm Tower against a band of English musketeers in 1640. In 1641 he was a Commissioner for maintaining peace on the Border and was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who signed a letter to the Privy Council relating to the raising of levies for sending troops to Ireland. In 1642 he was named to a commission to try a large number of Borderers who had been declared fugitives. He owned land in Bowden, Kelso, Selkirk, Sprouston and Yetholm Parishes in 1643. In 1643, 1644, 1646 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. He was also an M.P. for Roxburghshire in 1645 and 1648/9. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. In 1649 he was on the Commission for the plantation of kirks. He supported the Covenant and was imprisoned in Edinburgh and fined in 1662 after the Restoration. In 1654 he was one of the local men who signed an attestation about the ‘carriage and deportment of the deceased Francis Earl of Buccleuch’; this was part of efforts to have the fines reduced on the Buccleuch estate that had been imposed by Cromwell for the Earl supporting King Charles. In 1658 he was one of 2 commissioners sent by 20 ‘gentlemen and heritors’ of Roxburghshire to oppose payment requested from the county. In 1661 he sold the lands of Thirlestane, as well as Heiton Mains and Mill to James, brother of Sir William Scott of Harden. He owned a large amount of land in Kelso Parish according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. In 1634 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir William Scott of Harden and in 1664 he married Katherine, widow of David Carnegie of Craig, daughter of John, 1st Earl of Wemyss. His children included Sir Andrew and Sir William. Sir Andrew of Greenhead (d.bef. 1676) son of Sir Andrew of Greenhead. He was Parliamentary Commissioner (i.e. M.P.) for Roxburghshire in 1658/9 and 1669–74. He appears to have had a marriage contract with Mary, Countess of Buccleuch (while she was only about 12), but this did not go ahead. He married Jean, daughter of Sir Alexander Don, 1st Baronet of Newton, but he died without an heir. Andrew of Roughleeuneuk (d.bef. 1731) recorded as deceased in 1731 when his son Robert signed the marriage contract of William Elliot of Lodgegill and Jean Elliot of Harwood. Andrew (18th C.) married Jane Clapperton in Hawick in 1771. Their children included Andrew (b.1773). Andrew (b.c.1775) joiner in Minto. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was recorded in a directory of 1852. His wife was ‘Effy’ according to the 1841 census. He was probably the Andrew who married Elspeth Turnbull and had children Thomas (b.1810), Mary (b.1810) and Euphry (b.1814). Andrew (18th/19th C.) married Agnes Laidlaw in Wilton in 1804. Their children included Margaret (b.1805), Jenny (b.1807) and Andrew (b.1811). Ann (b.1801/2) from Jedburgh, she was wife of grocer Gideon. She ran the grocer’s show on the Fore Row after her husband’s death. She is listed in the 1851 census as ‘mistress employing one woman’ (her niece Margaret Story) and in Slater’s 1852 directory as a grocer and spirit dealer on ‘Front Row’. Catherine (16th C.) daughter of Sir Andrew Ker of Cessford. She married Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst, who died in about 1562. In 1564 she complained to the Privy Council that officers of the Queen had removed her teind sheaves from Over Crailing. She produced a document from Andrew Home, Commissor of Jedburgh, granting her these teinds for 5 years. She also argued with her son Sir Thomas of Ferniehirst over her rights to these teinds. She is referred to as ‘Dame Kathrene Ker, Lady Pharnyhirst’ and signed ‘with my hand at the pen’. In 1566 her son Sir Thomas was ordered not to molest her or her other children and servants. George of Samuelston (15th C.) probably son of Andrew of Cessford. He received a pension in 1477 for serving as Keeper of Berwick Castle. He firstly married Elizabeth Carmichael and secondly married Marion Sinclair, widow of George Home of Wedderstain. His children were: George, who married Mariota St. Clair and died without issue; and Nichola, who became his heiress and married Alexander, Lord Home. George (15th/16th C.) Rector of Auld Roxburgh. He was let the farm of Fairnilee in 1501, his name appearing as ‘Master George’. James, son of his late brother, was also joint tenant of Fairnilee. He is probably the ‘Maistir George Ker’ who was among the men to whom to whom Walter Scott of Howpasley, tutor to the Laird of Buccleuch, had to give in his accounts in 1506/7 (the others including Ralph of Primside Loch). He could be the ‘Master George’ who was listed (along with Lawrence and his brother George) being indicted for oppressing the tenants of Handalee. George of Nether Howden and Cavers (d.c.1560) 2nd son of Ralph of Primside. He was a nephew of Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst and cousin of Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst. He was the 1st Ker of Cavers Carrie, being granted the lands by the Commandator of Melrose and Kelso Abbeys in 1550 (probably his near relatives). He married Margaret Shaw of Sauchie. He was probably succeeded by Thomas, then George, then Sir Thomas, although these generations are uncertain. It is also unclear how his surname should be spelled. He could be the ‘Master George’ who 1541 was offered (along with his brother William) by Sir Andrew (Warden of the Middle Marches) as a pledge for the good behaviour of Teviotdale. He is probably the George of Cavers who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts in 1562. George of Gateshaw (16th C.) son of Lancelot. He was one of the Kers who was involved in the burning of lands in Ale Water belonging to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1547/8. He was ‘George Ker of Gaitischaw’ when he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’ in 1551. In 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft (listed separately from George of Linton, showing that they were different men). He was part of a contract with Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1569. He was probably succeeded by Richard. George of Linton (16th C.) recorded in the Protocol Books of Selkirk in 1538-40. His son and heir James is also mentioned. He may be the same as George of Linton who was accused (along with Walter of Cessford and Mark of Littledean) by Sir Walter Scott of raiding his lands at Newark and in the Borthwick valley, and also of burning Cunzierton and killing two Halls in 1537. George of Linton’s son James was granted the lands of Primside by Walter of Cessford in 1537. In 1538/9 he infested his brother Robert in the lands of Easter Blakelaw. In 1541 he was tenant of Fairnilee in Ettrick. He is probably the Laird of Linton who was among those locals giving their pledges to England in 1544. He was witness to a bond of assurance in 1545. In 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. He was one of the men indicted for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1552. In 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft.
was also listed among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts in 1562. He and ‘his bairnis, his oyis and bruder bairnis’ were listed in the 1564/5 bond between the Kers and the Scotts. He may be the George of Linton listed in 1575/6 and 1578/9 regarding the ‘mails’ on Fairnilee. George (16th C.) servant to the Warden, Sir Walter of Cessford. In 1581/2 he responded when Walter Scott came to Hermitage, on the track of a band that had raided Harwood on Teviot. Along with another servant and tracking dog, they followed the trail, but found too large a group of Ellis, who would not let them search for the stolen goods. George of Cavers (16th/17th C.) son of Thomas of Cavers. He was ‘fiar of Cavers’ in 1622 when he served as caution at the Justice Court and was ‘of Cavers’ when he served in the same capacity in 1623. He may not have lived long enough to succeed formally. In any case, his son Sir Thomas was served heir to his grandfather Thomas. Other sons included: John, who acquired West Nisbet; and Robert, who acquired Middlemas Walls. Gideon (b.c.1776/7–1843) from England, he was a grocer and spirit dealer on the Fore Row, listed there in 1837 and 1841. His mother was Eleanor (1736–1819). He was recorded on the Fore Row there in 1841, along with wife Ann and 3 children. His first wife was Elizabeth (1767–1826). He secondly married Ann Storey, who died in 1875, aged 74. Their children were: Agnes (1833/4–51); John (1834/5–65), an engineer in the Navy; Robert (‘Bob’, 1838/9–64), who worked at the Auction Mart; and Helen C. (or ‘Nelly’, b.c.1842), who married chemist David Kennedy. His wife ran the shop after his death, selling the property in 1862. Early photographs exist of his wife and 3 children separately. He is buried in Hawick. It is possible he was the hosier named Gideon who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Gilbert of Primside Loch and Greenhead (16th C.) son of Andrew of Greenhead and Primside, and grandson of Ralph. He was probably the Gilbert of Greenhead who was among the Kers accused of supporting the English at Pinkie in 1547/8, and the ‘lard of Grendeh’ who signed a bond of assurance with Somerset at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. ‘Gilbert Ker, young Laird of Grendeh’ was also among the men accused in 1537 of burning Cunzierton and killing 2 men called Hall. In 1551 he sold the lands of Bailielee (in Selkirkshire) and Caveling (in Cavers Parish) to Gavin Elliot (later of Horsleyhill). Also in 1551 he was ‘of Grendeh’ when he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. In 1553/4 he was listed (as ‘of Grendeh’) among Kers in an assurance not to harm the Scotts or their followers, as well as another bond by the Rutherford not to harm the Kers. Around the late 1550s he was one of the men on the panel to resolve the conflict over the lands of Newbigging (in Hassendean) between the children of Gavin Elliot of Horshleyhill. In 1560 he was the first person named on the bond to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherford. In 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. He was recorded in 1563 as ‘of Primsydelock’ when he purchased the Mains of Spittal-on-Rule from William Douglas of Cavers. The witnesses include William, Commendator of Melrose and Mark, 2nd son of Robert, Burgess of Edinburgh (who were surely relatives). Also in 1563 he had a letter of reversion for the lands of Yetholm, ‘wadset’ to him, his wife Elizabeth ‘Admanstoun’ and their 3rd son Walter, by James, Earl Bothwell. He was one of the Kers who is listed as an exception in the bond to end the feud with the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1564/5. In 1567 he was one of the sureties for entering Hob Elliot of Thorlieshope with the Regent Moray. In 1569 he was one of the men to sign the bond to suppress thieves in the Border. Also in 1569, Sir Walter of Cessford was surety for him. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves. He was listed in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme as surety for a bond of the late William Douglas of Cavers; other sureties were his son and heir Andrew, as well as the deceased William Ker of Yair. In 1575/6 he was a complainant regarding ‘mails’ for Braidmeadows and Middlestead. In 1582/3 there was caution for him not attacking the tenants of James, Commendator of Melrose and others, with James Veitch of North Synton and John, younger of Little dean as his cautioners. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4, along with his son Andrew. He is probably the Gilbert of Greenhead listed as a servitor of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch when he witnessed a document in Edinburgh in 1591. He may be the ‘George Karr of Prumsyde myll’ who was accused in 1590 of resetting riever Peter Oliver. A younger son of his was said to be Lancelot of Gateshaw and Crookedshaws (but this is disputed). Gilbert of Lochtour (16th/17th C.) appointed as one of the 2 executors to Gavin Elliot of Stobs. He married Gavin's... daughter Esther. His mother was one of the 3 heirs partioners to Stobs in 1607 and sold the lands to Gilbert Elliott, her half-brother. He sold Bailliecle to Gilbert Elliott in 1609 and in 1628 he sold him ‘Moiddlesteid and Blackmidding’ in Ettrick Forest, with the permission of his wife Esther Elliot and his son and heir John. Henry (d.bef. 1399) son of John. He was Sheriff of Roxburgh in 1349. He is probably the ‘Henrico Kerre’ who witnessed the confirmation of the grant of the advowson of Cavers Kirk to Melrose Abbey by William, Earl of Douglas, in about 1360. In about 1358 he witnessed a grant of the lands of Penangushope and Caudcleuch to Melrose Abbey, by William, Earl of Douglas. He was collector of the contributions from the Sherifflom of Roxburgh in the Exchequer Rolls from 1360. His wife was Elizabeth St. Michael; after his death she resigned her lands of Whitchester (in Hawick Parish) to be granted to her second husband, Sir John Maxwell of Pollock. He was probably succeeded by his son Robert of Altonburn. Henry ‘Harry’ (d.1642/3) only son of Sir Robert, 1st Earl of Roxburgh. He is probably the ‘Henrie, Lord Ker’ named in 1642 to a commission to try a large number of Borders fugitives. Since he died before his father and had no sons, the succession went to his sister’s husband, William Drummond. He married Margaret, daughter of William Hay, 10th Earl of Erroll. His daughter Margaret married Sir James Innes. His great-great grandson, Sir James Innes-Ker would later become 5th Duke of Roxburghe. Isabella (d.1650) daughter of Sir Robert, 1st Earl of Roxburgh and brother of William, Master of Roxburghe. She married James Scrymgeour, 2nd Viscount of Dudhope. In 1634 she was served heir to one third of her brother William’s lands, including part of Alton near Hawick. Her sister Maria was served heir to a third part of the lands at the same time. James (15th C.) witness, along with several other local men, to the document giving the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas, 2nd of Drumlanrig in 1427; no designation is given, so it is unclear what family branch he belonged to, but he could have been related to Andrew, who was on the same panel. Probably the same James was on the ‘retour’ panel for the lands of Caicerton in 1429/30. He may be the same ‘Jacobum Ker’ who was on the ‘retour’ for the next Douglas of Drumlanrig to inherit the Barony of Hawick in 1450. James (15th C.) son of Andrew and brother of Andrew of Altonburn and Cessford. He had a charter of Primside in 1444 and a charter for Bonnington in Linlithgow county in 1452. In 1456 he and his brother Andrew were involved with collecting rents on the King’s lands in Ettrick Forest. He could be the James who gave consent to his son’s entry for a debt to the Ranger of Ettrick Ward in 1471. James of Mersington (16th C.) listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English in raids upon the farms of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. Ironically the same James of Mersington was one of the cautioners for Sir Walter when he was in ward within Edinburgh Castle in 1540/1. His son and heir Thomas is recorded in 1557 and 1561. James (16th C.) presented to the Vicarage of Ashkirk in 1550. He may have been Vicar at Linton in 1569. James of Whitmuir (16th C.) recorded in the 1560 bond between the Kers and the Rutherfords. He signed ‘at the pen led by the notar’, meaning that he could not write himself. His lands were in Sprouston and not those near Selkirk. His son Ralph inherited the lands of Whitmuir in Sprouston Parish from him in 1603. James (16th C.) mentioned as Keeper of Hermitage Castle (under the Earl of Bothwell) in 1583. It is unclear whether he is the same as one of the other contemporary Jameses. James of Lintalee (16th/17th C.) listed as part of inquest into lands in Rulewater in 1610. About 1590 he was listed among the landed men of the Borders. Sir James of Oxnam and Craling (d.1645) succeeded from his brother Thomas, being served heir in 1603. He was son of Sir Thomas of Ferniehirst and Janet, sister of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He was half-brother of Sir Andrew, Lord Jedburgh, and succeeded to the title of Lord Jedburgh, although he did not assume it (perhaps because there was a more valid heir, their distant cousin, James, grandson of William who was full brother of Andrew Lord Jedburgh). His family were in reduced circumstances compared with the times of his father. In 1611 he had a charter for some of the lands in Roxburghshire forfeited by Lord John Maxwell. In 1620 he had a charter if lands of Belses, conferred on him by Nichol Rutherford of Hundalee (his father-in-law). He served on Parliament for Roxburghshire in 1630. He is probably the Lord Jedburgh who granted a deed to the lands of Barnhills in 1633 (hence had superiority over these lands). He was also known as ‘of Hundalie’ having inherited that estate from his wife Mary, daughter of James Rutherford of Hundalee. His children included: Robert of Crailing, 3rd Lord Jedburgh; and Jean, who married John Ker.
of West Nisbet. Rev. James of Grange (c.1601–1694) younger son of Sir John of Littledean and Margaret Whytlaw, Lady Innerwick. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1621 and was licensed to preach in 1623. He was presented to Abbotrule Parish in the middle of that year and ordained there in 1624. He was Laird of Grange in Abbotrule Parish, presumably being granted these lands by the Baron after becoming minister. In 1643 he was recorded as owner of land in Abbotrule Parish (presumably Grange) valued at £400. There was a complaint about his behaviour (along with John Scott of Hawick), at the admission of Andrew Rutherford as minister of Eccles.

He was deprived in 1662 when Episcopacy was re-established, and confined to his Parish. In the Land Tax Rolls of 1663 he paid tax on £433 6s 6d for lands in Abbotrule Parish. He was also offered Hownam Parish in 1672, but it is unclear that he accepted it. In 1678 he and his daughter in law (presumably wife of James of Grange) paid the land tax on £433 6s 8d in Abbotrule Parish. He was found guilty of preaching to a ‘field conventicle’ in 1680 when he delivered a sermon to an overflowing congregation of about 500 people in his house at Grange. He was imprisoned for several weeks but released on caution. During the times of persecution when he was harassed by Adam Urquhart of Meldrum’s soldiers and is supposed to have prophetically said ‘Sir, I was a minister before you had a being, and will be one when you are gone’. His wife was also accused of witchcraft at a meeting of the Presbytery, but ‘most unjustly’ and the charge shown to be unfounded. Surviving till the Revolution, he was re-established, and confined to his Parish. In 1694 he contributed £300 to the Darien Company in 1695.

In 1689 his eldest son John was served heir to Ancrum in 1812. Their daughter Jean died in in Lanton in 1803. They are buried in Bedrule cemetery. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He witnessed a baptism for Thomas Cairns (resident of Wiltonburn) in 1780. In 1777 he married Margaret ‘Peggy’) Cairns and their children included: Betty (b.1782); Walter (b.1785); Nelly (b.1789); and Betty (again, b.1792). An unnamed child (b.1779), baptised in Wilton, was probably also his. James (d.1794) gardener to Mr. Dickson, whose death is recorded in Hawick Parish. James (18th/19th C.) cooper of the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory.

James (b.1812/3) from Kelso, he was headmaster at Drumlanrig, the ‘Ragged Schuil’, from about 1860. He married Margaret Macgregor in Kelso in 1855. Their children included: Tom (b.1856), who became a great Hawick Common Riding supporter; Margaret Clark (b.1860); Agnes (b.1862); Mary (b.1864); Elizabeth (b.1866); William Macgregor (b.1868); and James (b.1870). Janet (b.c.1815) grocer and spirit dealer on the Kirkwynd. She is recorded there in 1841 with her infant children James and Alison. John ‘of the Forest of Selkirk’ (d.c.1360) the first known ancestor of the Kers of Cessford etc. He became the first Laird of Altonburn (or ‘Auldtounburn’), acquiring the lands from John ‘of Coupland’ in 1357/8, with witnesses including William of Gledstains, William ‘de Roule’ and Alexander of Flex.

James (15th C.) mentioned in the document of 1479 resigning the lands of Broadlee (in the Barony of Hawick) by Robert Turnbull to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. His name is recorded as ‘Johannem Ker’. Probably the same ‘Johanne Ker’ was witness to the sasine for the Barony of Hawick at the Mote in 1484. Sir John of the Hirsel (d.bef. 1631) son of Walter of Littledean and grandson of Sir Andrew of the Hirsel. In the 1568/9 bond between the Kers and the Scotts he is named as the son and heir of Walter, and promised in marriage to Elizabeth Murray, sister to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, when 'he beis of perfyte age, fourtene zeiris out-run'; however, the marriage does not appear to have taken place. In about 1590 he was listed among the landed men of the Borders. In 1593 there was a letter of 'lawburrows' against him, his father and brothers, brought by his 'sometime spouse' Juliane Home and members of her family, the Homes of Wedderburn, not to molest her in the liferent of Littledean. Also in 1593 there was an order for the Warden of the Marches and Sheriff of Roxburgh to apprehend him, since he was already excommunicated and denounced as a rebel, guilty of adultery and other crimes. A further complaint by the Homes of Wedderburn in 1593/4 accuses him of 'double adultery' for also enticing the wife of Hamilton of Innerwick to co-habit with him at Spylaw. In 1598 he had 'Auld Wat' of Harden declared a rebel for failure to pay him for profits coming from Borthwickshielis. He then tried to make Scott of Buccleuch answerable for Scott of Harden's non-appearance, but this was unsupported by the courts, because it was a civil and not criminal matter. He represented Roxburghshire in the Parliament in 1605 and 1607. In 1608 he had a charter for the Barony of Maxton, Linton and Town Yetholm. He was named as a Commissioner for keeping peace in Roxburghshire in 1610. In 1611 he exchanged the Hirsel for the lands of Jedburgh Abbey and in 1624 was granted all of the lands of the Lordship of Jedburgh that had been resigned by James, Earl of Home. In 1576 he married Juliane, 3rd daughter of David Home of Wedderburn, but she divorced him in 1589 and remarried James Hoppringle of Whitehall. He secondly married Margaret, daughter of Patrick Whitelaw of that Ilk (and divorced wife of Sir Alexander Hamilton of Innerwick); his relationship with this lady was the reason for the divorce, and the legitimacy of progeny from this marriage would become part of the claim to the succession of the Dukes of Roxburghe made by Gen. Walter of Littledean more than 200 years later. His children included: Gilbert, the eldest son, who succeeded; John, who later succeeded; James, who became minister at Abbotrule; Sir Mark of Dolphinston, who married Margaret, daughter of John Home of Cowdenknowes; and possibly Robert, minister at Kelso and Linton. John (16th/17th C.) possibly a younger brother of Sir Andrew of Greenhead. He sat in Parliament for Selkirk 1617–30 and was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1649. Sir John of Lochtour (17th C.) son of John of Lochtour and grandson of Gilbert. His brother Sir Andrew was an M.P. in 1648. Either he or his father signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638. In 1643 he is recorded as owner of most of the lands in Yetholm Parish. He represented Roxburghshire in parliament in 1644. In 1648 he was one of the men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves on the Border. In 1640 he married Jean, daughter of John Kerr of Littledean (and she later married Sir John Wauchope of Niddrie, who inherited most of his lands). John (17th C.) tenant in Middleknowes. He was witness to discharges for the teinds of Hardwood and Appotside in 1655. For a further document of 1656, relating to the lands of Appotside, he was 'baillie in that part'. John of West Nisbet (17th C.) son of George and brother of Sir Thomas of Cavers. He married Jean, daughter of Sir James Ker of Crailing, who became Lord Jedburgh. His son John married his cousin Agnes Ker of Cavers. John (17th C.) gardener in 'Knows' (probably Hassendean Knowe). He is on the huge list in 1684 of men declared fugitives for being Covenanters. John of Grange (17th/18th C.) son of James of Grange, and grandson of the minister of Abbotrule. In 1689 he was served heir to his father's sisters Isobel and Elizabeth, in the annual rent totalling £88 (corresponding to 2200 merks) of the lands of Grange in Abbotrule Parish. It is unclear if the family continued its ties with Abbotrule after this. John (17th C.) listed as resident at Harden in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the John who witnessed a baptism for William Nixon in Hawick Parish in 1678. John of Cavers Carre (d.1737) eldest son of John of West Nisbet and Jane Ker of Crailing. In 1684 he inherited the Cavers Carre lands and titles from his uncle Sir Thomas. This included the Barony of Bedrule and lands in the Rule valley as well as lands in Belses, Raperlaw, Rawflat, Pinnacle and Firth. He may have adopted the spelling 'Carre' after he succeeded. He is recorded in several local bonds in the late 1600s with the Elliots of Harwood, Stanedge and others. He was also served heir to his uncle Robert (through his mother's side), Lord Jedburgh, in 1693. This included annual rents from Appletreehall, as well as many lands around Jedburgh. He married his cousin Agnes, daughter of Sir Andrew Ker. Their children included: Robert, whose son Thomas succeeded to Cavers Carre; John, who succeeded his nephew Thomas and probably married a daughter of Sir Walter Riddell of Riddell; James; and Margaret, who married Sir Alexander Don in 1705. He secondly married Miss Home, daughter of Lord Kimmerghame and their children included: George, who became Lord Nisbet. John (c.1680–1741) 1st Duke of Roxburghe. He was a younger son of Robert, succeeding to the Earldom of Roxburghe on the death of his brother Robert in 1696. Among his possessions were those formerly held by the Archdeacon of Teviotdale, including the church lands of Lilliesleaf, the office of Bailie of Ancrum, Lilliesleaf and Ashkirk, plus the lands of Hassendeanbank, Cappitrig and Alton near Hawick. He contributed £200 to the Darien Company in 1695. He became Secretary of State for Scotland in 1704. He helped bring about the union with England, and was created Duke in 1707 (the last Scottish peerage created) in relation to this. He was one of Scotland’s Representative Peers in Parliament 1707–10. He was also Keeper of the Privy Seal of Scotland and again Secretary of State for Scotland in the British Parliament. He was one of the pall-bearers for Sir Isaac Newton’s coffin in 1727. He had the teinds of Hassendeanbank from Francis, 2nd Duke of Buccleuch in 1734, bought Cockerheugh from Walter Scott of Cockerheugh in 1737 and bought ‘Ladylands’ from Archibald Douglas of Cavers in 1739. In 1745 he had the family valuables taken to Caverton Mill for safety while the army of Prince Charles passed through Kelso. He was succeeded by his only son Robert. John of Cavers Carre (d.1746) 2nd son of John and Jane Nisbet and Agnes Ker. He was an advocate. In 1742 he succeeded to the Cavers Carre estate after the death of his nephew Thomas. He paid the window tax in Bowden Parish in 1748. He may have used the spelling ‘Carre’ for his surname. He married Elizabeth Monteith, heiress of Fox Hall. His children were: John, who succeeded; Robert, Captain in the Navy; Stair Campbell, army Captain; and Agnes. All of his children except John died unmarried. John (d.1766) eldest son of John of Cavers and Nisbet and Agnes Ker. He was an advocate. In 1742 he succeeded to the estates of Cavers Carre and Hundalee. He paid the window tax in 1753. He and his son John were recorded among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Jane Reid and their children were: John, who succeeded; Alexander, in the East India Company’s naval service; Janet, who died young; and Elizabeth, who married William Riddell of Camiestown (and whose son Robert Riddell Carre would succeed to Cavers Carre). In 1763 he secondly married Jane, daughter of Sir Walter Riddell, 4th Baronet; she died in 1806. John (18th C.) smith at Hawickshields. He married Margaret Henderson and their children included Isobel (b.1758) and Thomas (b.1760). Witnesses to the 1760 baptism were Walter Scott and James Laidlaw. He witnessed a baptism for Thomas Scott in Hawickshields in 1766. John (1740–1804) 3rd Duke of Roxburghe, son of Robert, 2nd Duke. In 1797 he exchanged his lands at Hassendeanbank with those of George Douglas of Cavers at Denholm Haugh. It is said that he was attached to the oldest daughter of the Duke of Mecklenburg-Strelitz, but was unable to marry her, since King George III married her younger sister. He remained unmarried. He was appointed Lord of the Bedchamber, Knight of the Thistle, Groom of the Stole and Knight of the Garter. He collected valuable and curious books, and the sale of his collection led to the establishment of the Roxburghe Club. In 1788 he was recorded as owner of large amounts of land in Roxburghshire, in Ancrum, Bowden, Eckford, Hownam, Kelso, Lindean, Lilliesleaf, Makerstoun, Maxton, Morebattle, Oxnam, Roxburgh, Selkirk and Sprouston Parishes. He sold his lands of Hassendeanbank to the Elliots of Minto in 1799. Probably the same John was listed on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls for Hundalee Mill and other lands. He had no surviving children and after his death there was a dispute over succession; he was eventually succeeded by a distant cousin, John Bellenden-Ker. Capt. John of Cavers Carre (d.1798) eldest son of John and Jane Reid. He was a Captain in the army. He was still ‘of Cavers junior’ when recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He succeeded after the death of his father in 1766, and retired from the army, living at Cavers Carre and at Hundalee. In 1777 he had much of the old house at Cavers Carre demolished, but did not manage to have it rebuilt. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. In 1788 he was listed as a voter in Roxburghshire (and supporter of the Conservatives). Also in 1788 he was recorded as owner of Cavers Carre and other lands in Bowden Parish, as well as Bedrule Mains, Bedrule Mill, Corsecleuch and Fulton in Bedrule Parish, Belses Mill in Ancrum Parish and other lands in Jedburgh Parish. He was taxed for having male servants (both within Jedburgh and outside, presumably at Hundalee) from 1778–97, the number varying from 4 to 1. He was a bachelor in 1785–91 when taxed for having a female servant; in 1789 he was paying the tax at Hundalee. He was also taxed for having horses in the period 1785–97.

in some years in Jedburgh as well as in Bowden Parish. He was additionally taxed for having a non-working dog in 1797. He was Provost of Jedburgh and played a leading role in the politics of that burgh. He died unmarried and was succeeded by his brother Alexander. John (1834/5-65) son of Gideon, who was a grocer and spirit dealer on the Fore Raw. He was born in Hawick and educated at Jedburgh Grammar School. He became an engineer with the Royal Navy. His ship H.M.S. Driver was wrecked off Bermuda in 1861, and then spent about a year on H.M.S. Racer off the coast of America during the Civil War. Partially deaf, he was invalided from the Navy, returning to 3 Bridge Street in 1863, but dying only 2 years later. An ‘ambrotype’ photograph exists of him in uniform and many letters from him to his family survive. Maria (d.1650) daughter of Sir Robert, 1st Earl of Roxburgh and brother of William, Master of Roxburgh. She married James Haliburton of Pitcur and secondly married James Carnegie, 2nd Earl of Southesk. In 1634 she was served heir to her brother William in many lands around Kelso, Sprouston, Maxwellheugh, Midlem, Whitmuirhall, etc. Included in the list is a third part of the lands of ‘Alton prope villam de Hawick’. Her sister Isobella was served heir to a third part of the lands at the same time. Mark of Dolphinston (d.1551) 2nd son of Walter of Cessford, younger brother of Sir Robert of Caverton. He was also referred to as ‘of Maxton and Littledean’. His sister married Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He owned Borthwicksheils in 1502 when it was burned by a group of Armstrongs from Liddesdale. Also in that year he was fined for failing to enter into court several men to answer for the murder of Robert Oliver: Andrew Turnbull in Bedrule; William Turnbull, brother of the Laird of Bedrule; John Turnbull, called ‘Blue John’; Andrew Turnbull; Alan Davidson, ‘Taboner’, John Turnbull in Jedburgh; John Turnbull in Wells; and Adam Turnbull in Wells. Furthermore, in 1502 he also served as surety for John Oliver, who had been involved in some raids around the Jedburgh and Rulewater areas, was fined for not entering several men (including an Ainslie and men from Auld Roxburgh and Caverton) into the court and was surety for Adam Grahamslaw, son of the Laird of Little Newton, as well as other men. In 1505 he had remission (along with 3 others) for crimes perpetrated upon John Rutherford and others. In 1507/8 he was witness to the document for Scott of Whitchesters relating to the tower ‘between the bridges’ in Hawick. In 1515 he headed a band of Kers and others who stole 200 cattle, 30 horses and took 40 prisoners from Redewater. In 1525 he was among the Border Barons who had a bond to assist the Earl of Angus. In 1530 he was one of the Border chiefs imprisoned by James V for failing to keep the ‘broken men’ and thieves in check. In 1532 he was one of the local men appointed by the King to a commission to capture some Croziers, Elliot and Foresters for raiding Teviotdale. In the early 1540s he served as a kind of deputy to the Warden of the Middle Marches, his name showing up many times in English letters. In 1542 he was said to have gone with his brother Dand and son Davie to Kelso Abbey and taken all of the King’s sheep that were there. He witnessed an agreement between Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and William Cairncross of Colmslie in 1544. In 1545 he was ‘Mark Kar of Littleden’ among lairds in Teviotdale who signed a bond to settle feuds. About 1547 he was among the Border Lairds who paid homage to the Duke of Somerset. He was among the Kerrs accused of supporting the English at the Battle of Pinkie. In 1549 he was one of the Kers (along with Walter of Cessford and George of Linton) accused by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme of raiding his lands at Newark, as well as his lands in the lower Borthwick valley. He married Marjorie, daughter of John Ainslie of Dolphinston. His direct descendant Maj.-Gen. Walter of Littledean lost a legal battle in 1812 to be declared the rightful heir to the Roxburgh titles. Mark of Kipplaw (16th C.) one of the men indicted in 1552 for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme on Edinburgh High Street, along with several Kerrs and others. He and his son Robert of Lochtour were named in the 1564/5 bond between the Kers and the Scotts; his name appears as ‘Mark Ker of Kippeschaw’. Matthew (15th/16th C.) agent appointed by George, son of Robert Scott of Whannes in an action of 1505, where George claimed his father’s lands of Muirhouse in the Barony of Crichton. Ralph of Primside Loch (15th/16th C.) 2nd son of Andrew of Cessford. However, he may be confused with the son of Thomas of Kershuegh and Ferniehirst. He may be the ‘Radulpho Ker, fratris Waterni Ker de Cesfurd’ in 1484 when he was one of the men directed by the Earl of Angus to infect Robert Elliot of Redheugh in certain lands, and also the ‘Radulpho Ker de Primysde louch’ further directed in 1489. He is probably the ‘Radulfo Car’ who leased the lands of Broadmeadow in 1488. In 1491 he was mentioned in a document.
Ker Ker

would not sell any neighbouring lands to John bet. Another condition was that the Erskine's of Walter Scott of Synton later, plus lands in Nisland within Synton, rights to take over the lands in Synton Mains, as well as another 20 merk land in Synton; for 400 merks they bought a 20 merk land in Synton. Also in 1510 he was involved in an indenture, along with Andrew and his brother James. Also in 1510 he had the lease of Broadmeadow, Ploro and Berrybush in 1502. In 1506 he had a charter for lands in Falside in Jedforest after being yielded by George Douglas, Master of Angus for not delivering one of his tenants to court. Additionally he was also surety for the Douglas of Swinside and for Lawrence Rutherford, as well as being fined for failing to produce a riever. He may be the Ralph 'in le grenehed' who was fined in 1502 for failing to enter Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. He held the lease of Broadmeadow, Ploro and Berrybush in 1502. In 1506 he had a charter for lands in Ettrick. In 1506/7 he was one of the men to whom Walter Scott of Howpasley, tutor to the Laird of Buccleuch, had to give in his accounts. In 1509 he and his wife Margaret Rutherford sold lands in Heiton. In 1510 his son Andrew was declared a rebel and his goods forfeited after he failed to appear for killing John Brown, assisted by William in Whitmore and his brother James. Also in 1510 he was involved in an indenture, along with Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst, with the Erskines, over lands in Synton; for 400 merks they bought a 20 merk land in Synton Mains, as well as another 20 merk land within Synton, rights to take over the lands of Walter Scott of Synton later, plus lands in Nisbet. Another condition was that the Erskine's would not sell any neighbouring lands to John Murray of Falahill (his brother-in-law), for reasons that are unspecified. He married Margaret, daughter of Patrick Murray of Falahill and secondly married Margaret Rutherford. His children included: Andrew of Greenhead and Primside; George, who was probably father of Thomas of Cavers Carre; William, Commandator of Kelso; and John. Ralph (15th/16th C.) brother of Thomas, Abbot of Kelso. He may be the same as Ralph of Primside (although it appears that 2 nearly contemporary men of the same name are sometimes confounded). In 1532 he was granted a tack of the lands of Cavers Carre by his brother Thomas. He may also be the Ralph recorded having the tack of Lintalee in 1541. He married Marion Haliburton, and their armorial bearings were carved in stones saved from the old house and built into the new one in 1800. His eldest son was George. Ralph (16th C.) one of the men indicted in 1552 for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch. He is recorded as 'Rafe Ker', but it is unclear where he was from. Ralph (16th C.) entered into ward in England ‘for the bill of Newtoun’, with a bond given by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, sometime during the time of the Regent Moray. In 1573 he broke his ward and was with Lord Hay of Yester, with Sir Walter’s bond forfeited. It is unclear what branch of the Kers he came from. Richard of Altonburn (d.1437/8) probably son of Robert or Henry (these generations are confused). He was succeeded by his brother Andrew of Cessford and Altonburn in 1438 (even although Andrew appears to have been known as ‘of Altonburn’ before that). As well as Altonburn, he held ‘Wawtyswelys’ and ‘Quitebankedene’. He may be the Richard ‘Kere’ who witnessed an agreement between the Rules of Primside and the Ker of Altonburn in 1432. Robert of Altonburn (14th/15th C.) probably son of Henry and succeeded by his son Richard. Sir Robert of Caver- ton (d.1500), younger of Cessford, eldest son of Walter. In 1490 he had the lease of Bowerhope in Ettrick Ward. In 1490/1 he had a charter for lands in the Barony of Haldane. He is probably the Sir Robert who was on the panel for Walter Scott inheriting the Branxholme and Buccleuch titles and lands in 1492. He acted as surety at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh in 1493 and was also fined for non-appearance. And he was probably the Sir Robert who acted as one of the sureties in 1494/5 for Robert Langlands after the murder of chaplain George Fairneylaw, paying £20 when Langlands failed to appear. He was Master of the King’s Artillery to James IV and Warden of the Middle Marches. In 1499 he was tenant of Singlie, Erncleugh, Altrieve and Bowerhope, along with his father. He was murdered by 8 Northumbrians, who were imprisoned in Fast Castle until they died. He married Christian Rutherford of that Ilk. Since he died before his father the Cessford titles and estates were inherited by his son Sir Andrew. Another son was Thomas of ‘Marsingtoun’. Robert ‘in cavertoun’, recorded in 1502, may also have been related. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant in Sunderlandhall. He purchased Ashybank from Sir William Douglas of Cavers and sold it back to him in 1498. Possibly the same Robert ‘de Sonderlandhall’ was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the lands of Alemoor.
Ker Ker

Robert of Graden (16th C.) listed as ‘Robert Car of Greyden’ when he signed a bond of assurance with Somerset at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. He is listed as ‘Robin’ in 1547/8 among the Kers who burned lands in Ale Water belonging to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, the raid led by supporters of the Lairds of Cessford and Ferniehirst. It is unclear how he was related to other Kers. He may be the ‘Robin Ker, broder to the Lard of Ferniherst’ who was said to have sided with Sir Ralph Evers at ‘Lylzeartis Croce’ (i.e. Ancrum Moor) in 1545. He was ‘Robert Carr of Grayden’ in 1544/5 when said to have been put to the horn for the slaughter of the Rutherfords. He may also be the Robert, brother of Walter of Graden, who witnessed a charter other Kers involving Primside in 1537. He is probably the Laird of Graden named in the 1560 bond to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords; in the same bond there were arrangements made for addressing a broken marriage contract involving them, together with Rutherford of Hunthill and Ker of Newhall. He may be the Robert of Graden who was one of those excepted in the 1564/5 bond between the Scotts and the Kers. Robert of Newhall (16th C.) listed on the bond of 1560 to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. He had apparently been responsible for the murder of William Rutherford of Longnewton and was to come to Ancrum Kirk and offer his sword to George, son of William of Longnewton.

Robert (16th C.) brother of the Laird of Greenhead. In 1552 he was one of the men indicted for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He could be the ‘Robet Ker, elder, burges of Edinburcht’ named in the 1564/5 bond between the Kers and the Scotts. He is probably the ‘Roberte Carr sone to the Lorde of Grenehede’ listed in 1541 among Kers, Scotts and others who were accused of leading a raid on Mindrum and Hethpool. Robert (16th C.) local cleric. He was titular Archdeacon of Teviotdale after the Reformation and is so recorded in 1582. He was minister at Linton, Mow, Yetholm, Morebattle and Hownam. Robert (d.1622) recorded as being ‘in Bewlie’. He was executed in Edinburgh for perjury. He had apparently been bribed to lie by Andrew Turnbull in Belses in a case of stealing he brought against the Middlemasses. Sir Robert ‘Habbie’ (1570–1650) of Cessford and 1st Earl of Roxburghe, son of Sir William of Cessford. He was Warden of the Scottish Middle March from about 1594 to 1603, and assisted his father before that. In 1590 he killed William Kerr of Ancrum, part of the feud between the Kers of Cessford and the Kerrs of Ferniehirst. In 1594 he, along with Alexander Lord Home and Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, he had a commission to raise men to fight against the Earl of Bothwell and his followers. He was extremely powerful and carried on a great feud with the English Warden Robert Carey, although they apparently grew to respect one another after he was a prisoner of Carey’s at Berwick. There is a document of about 1600 recording a challenge on him by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, with the combat to involve only short swords; it is unclear if either party was injured, but it could not have been very serious. He was created Lord Roxburghe in 1600, accompanied James VI when he ascended the English throne, and was made the Earl of Roxburghe in 1616. In 1605 and 1606 there were formal apologies to the Kerrs of Ferniehirst (for the death of William of Ancrum) and compensation of 10,000 merks, which effectively ended the family feud. In 1606 he was served heir to his father Sir William, and in 1610 inherited further lands, including Hassendeanbank, which he resigned to the Baron in 1643 (probably to be regranted). He was served heir to his grandfather Walter of Cessford, in the lands of Cessford Mains in 1623. His Book of Family and Household expenses for the period 1619–30 shows much of what life was like for a wealthy Border Laird in this period. He was one of the overseers of the tutors for the children of Walter Scott, 2nd Earl of Buccleuch, who died in 1633. He was Lord Privy Seal of Scotland in 1637. His properties are listed in the 1643 valuation roll for the county, including land in Hassendean (valued at £550), Lilliesleaf (valued at £1060), Ancrum (valued at £1970), Bowden, Eckford, Kelso,
Ker

Lindean, Makerston, Maxton, Morebattle, Roxburgh, Smalholm and Sprouston Parishes. He married Margaret Maitland and then Jean Drummond. His children were: William, who died unmarried; Jean, who married her cousin John Drummond, 2nd Earl of Perth; Isabella, who married James Scrymgeour; Maria, who married Sir James Haliburton of Pitcur, and James Carnegie, 2nd Earl of Southesk; and Henry, who married Margaret Hay, but died before his father. He was succeeded by his grandson Sir William Drummond, who changed his name to Ker. He died at Floors and was the first of the family to be buried at Bowden Kirk. He was effectively the last of the male line of Ker of Cessford. His daughters Maria and Isabella were served heir to their brother William in several lands in 1634 (including Alton near Hawick). Robert (17th C.) son of Andrew of Faldonside. In 1632 he was served heir to his father in the Mains of Feu-Rule, also called Hallrule, with the mill there, plus Deanside and lands in Bowden. Perhaps the same Robert ‘of Fadeanside’ was listed as owned of lands in Lindean Parish in 1678. In 1648 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. Robert (d.1682) 3rd Earl of Roxburghe, son of William (who had been born Drummond). He was served heir to his father (as well as his mother) in 1675, inheriting a large amount of land in Roxburghshire and elsewhere, including Alton near Hawick and the office of Bailie of Ancrum, Lilliesleaf and Ashkirk. He paid the land tax for property in Ancrum Parish, Ashkirk Parish and several other parishes in 1678, as well as the teinds of Lilliesleaf Parish and the Kirklands of Bewlie. He married Margaret, daughter of John Hay, 1st Marquess of Tweeddale (her mother being Jane, daughter of Walter, 1st Earl of Buccleuch). His children included: Robert, who succeeded as 4th Earl; and John, who succeeded his brother. He may also have had another son, William, who was ‘brother-german to Roxburgh’ in the Darien Company list of 1695. He was lost at sea in the ship ‘Gloucester’ when it wrecked off Yarmouth Sands. He is said to have cried out with an offer of money for a boat, and his butler tried to save him on his back, until grabbed by another drowning man. Robert (d.1692) son of Sir James of Crailing and Marie Rutherford. He inherited Hundalee through his mother, who was daughter and heiress of Nichol Rutherford of Hundalee. He repurchased the Ferniehirst estate from the Earl of Lothian. He became 3rd Lord Jedburgh in 1670. He paid land tax for Ricclaton, Ferniehirst, Hundalee, Over Crailing and other lands in 1678. He married Christian, daughter of Sir Alexander Hamilton of Innerwick and widow of Sir Patrick Home of Polwarth. He had no children and was succeeded by his distant relative William, eldest son of the 1st Marquess of Lothian. However, the estates of Hundalee and others were inherited by his sister’s son, John Kerr of Cavers. He was effectively the last of the male line of Kerrs of Ferniehirst. His will is recorded in 1693. Robert (d.1696) 4th Earl of Roxburghe, eldest son of Robert, 3rd Earl. He was served heir to his father’s extensive lands and titles in 1684, including lands previously held by the Archdeacon of Teviotdale, the lands and advowson of Lilliesleaf Kirk, the office of Bailie of Ancrum, Lilliesleaf and Ashkirk, and Alton near Hawick. He also inherited his grandfather William’s lands of Hassendeanbank and Cappitrig. In 1695 he was appointed as one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. He was succeeded by his younger brother John. Robert (d.bef. 1721) gardener in Hawick. In 1721 his daughter Mary married cooper John Aitken. It is likely he had a son Robert, also a gardener, who married Jean Gledstains in 1721. He may also have been father of Margaret, who married gardener James Dunn, and for whom he witnessed a baptism in 1713. Robert (17th/18th C.) gardener in Hawick, possibly son of Robert. In 1721 he married Jean, daughter of William Gledstains of Kirklands. Their children included Isobel (b.1723), Patrick (b.1725), Robert (b.1735) and Adam (b.1742). He is probably the gardener of that name who witnessed a baptism in 1737 for wright James Winthrope. He may be the Robert who was given part of the responsibility for collecting subscriptions ‘east the water’ to help pay for the Teviot Bridge in 1740, and who served as a Bailie in the 1740s and 50s. Robert (c.1709–55) 2nd Duke of Roxburghe, only son of John, the 1st Duke. He married his half-cousin Essex, daughter of Sir Roger Mostyn. He was succeeded by his son John (b.1740). He also had a son known as ‘Lord Robert’ (b.1747) and 3 daughters (none of whom married). Lt.-Col. Robert of Cockertoun (1747–1781) younger son of Robert, 2nd Duke of Roxburghe and brother of John, 3rd Duke. He was known as ‘Lord Robert’. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He stood unsuccessfully as Roxburghshire M.P. in 1790, objecting to the addition of several people to the roll and the refusal of some of his supporters, claiming that he was ‘duly elected by a majority of legal voters. Thomas (16th C.) recorded as Archdeacon of Teviotdale when he died, sometime before 1534. However, this may be an error for 'William' who was Archdeacon earlier in the century. Thomas of Yair (16th C.) son of William or possibly Ralph. He was listed as 'Thomas Ker of the Yair' in 1564 when listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. He was probably succeeded by his son William. Thomas of Mersington (16th C.) son of James of Mersington. His lands were in Eckford Parish. He was recorded in 1557. In 1561 he was 'eldest son to James Ker of Mersington' when listed among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. He, 'his fader, bruder, and thair bairnis' were named in the 1564/5 bond between the Kers and the Scotts. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves and signed the 'Band of Roxburgh' in 1573. Thomas (16th C.) presented as Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1565, although these were very unclear times for such titles and benefices. He stayed in the office essentially until about 1572, when it pass to an unnamed person who was hostile to the Reformation. That was the end of the Archdeaconry of Teviotdale. Thomas of Oxnam and Over Crailing (d.1601) younger son of Sir Thomas of Ferniehirst and brother of Sir Andrew, 1st Lord Jedburgh, who was Provost of that town. There was a serious feud between the Kerrs and the Turnbulls in the later years of the 16th century and early years of the 17th. He and his servant had been declared as rebels for the murder of Henry Oliver (although there was a claim that they had a 'relaxation', but it is unclear that this was genuine). He was killed at Jedburgh Rood Day Fair in 1601 in a fight between the 2 families, when about 30 Turnbulls and allies from the Minto area came to specifically seek him out. He was slain along with his servant George Glaiser (or Glaidner), while on the other side Robert Turnbull of Bewlie and John Middlemas (brother of William of Lilliesleaf Chapel) were killed, and several men were seriously wounded. A number of Turnbulls were murdered in the following years by members of his family, including Hector Turnbull of Bewlie, who may have been one of those responsible. The case continued until 1604, with Hector Turnbull of Lilliesleaf declared a rebel for the murder of him and his servant. He had no children and his brother Sir James succeeded to the Oxnam and Crailing titles after his death. Thomas of Cavers (d.c.1628) son of George, he was the 2nd Ker of Cavers Carre. He may be the 'Thomas Ker sumtyme of Caveris' who was listed as a traitor along with Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1571/2. He may have been the Thomas of Cavers who was recorded in the 'pacification' given to Sir Thomas of Ferniehirst and his followers in 1581 and who also witnessed a bond for the Elliots in 1581. In 1590 he was acquitted of the stealing cattle from Englishman Richard Fenwick. He was also accused in 1590 of not keeping his bond to enter a Scottish prisoner. About 1590 he was listed among the landed men of the Borders. In 1594 he was temporarily imprisoned for not helping fight against the Earl of Bothwell and his supporters. In 1596 he brought a case against Englishmen for raiding his lands. He is recorded in a discharge of 1597 and on Monipennie's list of Border Lairds about the same year. In 1600 he was on the 'retour' for Ker of Cessford. In 1601 Adam Scott 'the Peck' was hanged for stealing from him at Nether Whitlaw (as well as a long list of other crimes), and he also complained against other Englishmen who had stolen sheep from him. Also in 1601 he was mentioned having about 8 years earlier been attacked and hurt as part of the feud between the Kerrs and Turnbulls. A letter from Turnbull to him in 1602 discusses possession of Fulton and mentions a number of tenants in that area of Bedrule. In 1603 he had a charter from James V for the lands of Cavers Carre and others. In 1607 he was surety for James Turnbull of Hassendeanbank. In 1611 he and his son George, along with Sir Andrew of Ferniehirst had complaints against them by Hamilton of Innerwick. In 1623 he gained possession of much of the remaining lands of Bedrule from the Turnbulls, probably through defaulted loans, this included Fulton, Crosscleuch, Menslaws, Speir-manslands and Ruecastle. He was listed among the major landowners who met to elect M.Ps. for Roxburghshire in 1628. He was succeeded by his son George. Another son was William, who is recorded in 1631, along with his own son, Walter. He also had a daughter who married William Turnbull. Sir Thomas of Cavers Carre (1593–1681) son of George. He was served heir to his grandfather Thomas in 1629. In 1631 he was one of the men accused by the minister of Longnewton of taking his teinds. In 1638 he was appointed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire to enforce subscription to the 'Confessions of Faith'. In 1642 he was named to a commission to try a large number of Borderers who had been declared fugitives. He is recorded as owner of part of Samieston in 1643 as well as lands in Bedrule.
Parish valued at £1565, consisting of the Town of Bedrule, Menslaws, Corsecleuch and Fulton, and also lands of Belses in Ancrum valued at £291, as well as lands in Bowden, Kelso and Roxburgh Parishes. In 1644 he was commended, along with Sir William Scott of Harden, for helping organise the tenants of the Earl of Buccleuch to repel the (Royalist) forces of the Earl of Montrose. In 1643, 1644, 1646, 1648 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire and in 1643–44 and 1648–49 he represented Roxburghshire in Parliament. He also held the lands of Stanedge, Lurgiescleuch and others in Hobkirk Parish in the 1640s. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Anndal. In 1654 he was one of the local men who signed an attestation about the 'carriage and deportment of the deceased Francis Earl of Buccleuch'; this was part of efforts to have the fines reduced on the Buccleuch estate that had been imposed by Cromwell for the Earl supporting King Charles. He held lands in Abbotrule (as well as Kelso) according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. He became Baron and Laird of Bedrule in 1668, perhaps earlier. He was fined in 1662, after the Restoration, for being a Covenant supporter. In 1678 he was a Commissioner for Roxburghshire for raising money for the King. He paid the land tax in Ancrum, Bedrule, Bowden, Jedburgh, Kelso and Roxburgh Parishes in 1678. Also in 1678 he was served heir to his deceased son Andrew’s lands and baronies, including the Barony of Bedrule and lands in Belses, Raperlaw, Rawflat, Pinnacle and Firth; his Bedrule lands were valued at £1632 in 1678, and included land formerly belonging to Turnbull of Bedrule. These lands were later conveyed to John, son of his brother, John of West Nisbet. He married Agnes, eldest daughter of Sir John Riddell of that Ilk, but she died in 1635. He may then have married another woman, whose name is not known. In 1638 he re-married to Grizel, daughter of Sir Robert Halket of Pitfrrane, and she died in 1682, aged 85. His children included: Sir Andrew, son of his 1st wife, who succeeded to Cavers Carre; Isabel, who married Hugh Scott of Gala; Grizel, who married Patrick Home, Lord Polwarth; Margaret, who married Alexander Haliburton of Newmails and secondly Alexander Wedderburn (and also possibly Matthew St. Clair of Herdenstoun); and Elizabeth, who married James Erskine of Shieldfield. Another daughter may have been Christian, who married Francis Scott of Mangerton. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Bessie Dryden in 1726. In 1736 he witnessed a baptism for William Lorraine, resident of Borthaugh. Thomas of Cavers (1724-40) son of Robert and grandson of John of Cavers. In 1738 he succeeded his grandfather. He went abroad for his health with a tutor, but died at Naples. His uncle John succeeded to Cavers. Thomas ‘Tom’ (1856-1932) writer of ‘I Like Auld Hawick the Best’, ‘The Fairest Spot o’ A’, ‘Where Slitrig and Teviot Meet’, and many poems, such as ‘Roond Aboot Hawick Moat’ and ‘Under the Shadow of the Moat’. He was born in Kelso, but raised in the schoolhouse of Drumlanrig school in Hawick, where his father James was head teacher. He trained as a draper and then worked in the hosiery trade, with John Laing’s and then Pringle’s, where he was a traveller. He was a keen sportsman, particularly of cricket, rugby and cycling. He played in the first official rugby game in Hawick, a match with Langholm in 1874, and captained the Greens 1877/8 (being only the second Captain) and 1880/1, as well as acting as club secretary. He was a Town Councillor for North High Street Ward for 12 years from 1900. He was a great Common Riding supporter, being Secretary of the Committee 1908–23, as well as Treasurer for many years. He was also a founder member and first President of the Callants’ Club; he was additionally responsible for honouring the annual dinner guest with an acrostic verse. He was a member of Lodge 111, writing their history in 1898, and acting as their Bard. Enjoying singing, he was a member of Hawick Choral Union, and sung some of his own compositions at gathering of the Teviotdale Amateur Bicycle Club; ‘The Fairest Spot o’ A’ would be later transcribed from memory by Adam R. Grant, and ‘Where Slitrig and Teviot Meet’ recovered from notes found after the death of Adam Grant (senior). He also wrote episode 7 of the 1914 Pageant, based on the story of ‘Hab o’ Hawick’. He was a regular contributor of verse to the local press and the Border Magazine, often using the pseudonym ‘Tee Kay’. His poetry is collected in the book ‘Some Thouchts o’ Mine in Song and Verse’ (1924); it contains 66 poems and 26 acrostics. Late in life he moved to Edinburgh and then to Glasgow (to be near his daughter), where he died. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery, with a verse from ‘I Like Auld Hawick the Best’ on his gravestone. Walter of Caverton and Cessford (d.1501) 2nd son and successor to Andrew. In 1450 he had a ‘letter of reversion’ to William Douglas of Cavers for the lands of ‘Blackpule’ in the Barony of Cavers; he was there stated to be son of Andrew of Altonburn. In 1471 he was son and heir of Andrew when he took possession of the lands of Borthwickshields and Harden Wood. In 1472 he was (along with Andrew of Cessford and David Scott of Buccleuch) appointed bailie for the Earl of Angus in order to give sasine of certain lands in Liddesdale to William Douglas of Cavers. In 1474 he had a charter of the lands of Cessford, Auld Roxburgh, Altonburn, Primside and others, which had been resigned by his father, confirmed in 1481. In 1475 he founded a perpetual chaplainry in Kelso Abbey. In 1479 his niece Margaret resigned the Barony of Cessford to him, as well as the lands of Feu-Rule and others. In 1483 he was witness to a document dealing with Denholm Mains. In 1484 his brother ‘Radulpho’ was one of the men directed by the Earl of Angus to infest Robert Elliot of Redheugh in some lands. In 1488 he had a charter for Auld Roxburgh. In 1489, along with James Riddell of that Ilk, he had a decree against him for not paying the teinds to Lilliesleaf Kirk. He witnessed a document for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1493. Also in 1493 he served as surety for several men at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. In 1494 he was on the panel for Alexander Erskine inheriting Snyton. In 1494/5 he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh and also served as surety for several people. He was appointed Warden of the Middle Marches in 1498. In 1499 he was Sheriff of Dumfries when he witnessed the sasine for George Douglas, Master of Angus gaining his local titles. Also in 1499 he had a charter from James IV for the site of the ruined castle and town of Roxburgh. In 1501 he and Henry Haitlie of Mellerstain compounded the fines of 25 men (mainly Rutherfords), according to the Exchequer Rolls. His sons were Sir Robert and Mark of Dolphinston and Littledean. He was succeeded by his grandson Sir Andrew. A younger daughter, Elizabeth, married Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch (and was previously married to Philip, eldest son of James Rutherford of that Ilk and Wells). Sir Walter (d.1584) of Cessford, son of Sir Andrew. He is mentioned (along with several local Scotts) in the 1529 indenture to end the feud between the Ker/Kers and the Scotts. As part of the arrangement one of his daughters was supposed to marry a son of Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was among the Lairds of the Borders who submitted themselves to the King in 1530 to keep better order. In 1532 he was one of the local men appointed by the King to a commission to capture some Croziers, Elliot and Foresters for raiding Teviotdale. He was Warden of the West Marches in 1536 when he bound himself to keep Edgerston Castle and to apprehend Robert Rutherford. In 1538 he was convicted (along with James Douglas of Cavers and others) of assisting several men who were ‘at the horn’, thereby breaking an earlier ‘band’. In 1536 he resigned the lands of Hassendeanbank to the Baron, William, Earl of Glencairn, and then had a sasine for them (along with his wife) in 1545. In 1537 he granted the lands of Primside to James, son and heir of George of Linton. In 1541 he was tenant of Windydoors in Tweed, as well as Bowerhope in Ettrick. In 1543 he signed the ‘Secret Bond’ with Cardinal Beaton, resisting English influence over the young Queen Mary. In 1544 he was removed from office as Warden of the West Marches, accused of plotting with the Earl of Angus, assisting the English, and using the office for his own ends.

He was among the local Lairds listed as having given pledges to the English in 1544. In 1545 a Parliamentary decree put him at the head of 250 of the 500 soldiers who were mustered in Teviotdale. In 1545 he was among lairds in Teviotdale who signed a bond to settle feuds. He was probably the ‘lard of Cesfoorth’ who signed a bond of assurance with Somerset at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. Also in 1547 he was gifted the bailliary of Ashkirk by the King, but in the following year burnt much of the Ale valley in retaliation for Scott of Buccleuch’s force attacking Ferniehirst and Cessford. In 1547/8 he and other Ker supported the English at the Battle of Pinkie and in burning lands of the Scotts of Branxholme. He was imprisoned in Edinburgh for this, but released to sign a bond of loyalty along with the Scotts. In 1549 Walter Scott of Buccleuch petitioned the Lords of Council to be able to post summonses against him, John Kerr of Ferniehirst and others at market crosses of Hawick and other towns, following their assisting the English in carrying out destruction; this specifically included the raiding of farms in the lower Borthwick valley, ‘clois tyme of harvist, of the cornis, cattell, guidis, geir, insicht, barnis, byris, biggingis, peilles, places, stables, lowss, and duelling places’ pertaining to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. There was a further complaint that he had stolen goods from Scott of Buccleuch at Newark. He was appointed Warden of the Middle Marches in 1550 and was reappointed in 1559. He was implicated in the murder of the same Sir Walter Scott in 1552, along with several other Kers and accomplices; in 1552 he pleaded for mercy to the Privy Council on behalf of the Kers, saying that they had been put to the horn, had their goods seized and were being pursued by the Scotts. In 1553 it was decided not to mete out further punishment and in 1553/4 he led a group of Kers in an assurance not to harm the Scotts or their followers and was also part of another bond by the Rutherfords not to harm the Kers. In 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. In 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. Also in 1561 he was reappointed as Warden of the Middle March. In 1562 he and his son (on behalf of their whole band) promised not to enter Ancrum. Also in 1562 he was the first man who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts. In 1563/4 he had a marriage contract for his son William with Janet, daughter of Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1564 there was a list of Borders lairds who swore to support him, with proclamations being made at the mercat crosses of Jedburgh, Kelso, Hawick and Selkirk. In 1564/5 he led the signatories of the bond with Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and his supporters, to end the family feud (partly over the slaying of the previous Sir Walter of Branxholme), promising to go to St. Giles Kirk and ask forgiveness on his knees from God and from the Laird of Buccleuch for the murder of his grandfather. In 1565 his lands at ‘the Burnes’ were raided and burned, with 2 of his servants killed, by a group of men from Liddesdale; this embroiled him in the ongoing feud between the Eliots and the Scotts. He signed the ‘Band of Teviotdale’ in 1565. Also in 1565 he had 2 of his own servants warded in England for crimes committed by servants of Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and John Rutherford of Huntill, this included a servant called Thomas Ker. In 1567 his son Thomas had a marriage contract with Elizabeth, sister of Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was an opponent of Mary Queen of Scots and fought against her supporters at Langside in 1568. In 1569 he was surety for Gilbert of Primside Loch. Also in 1569 John Rutherford of Huntill was directed to relieve him of a debt. In 1569 and 1571/2 he was one of the men to sign bonds to suppress the Border thieves. He signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573. He served as cautioner for ‘Hekky’ Armstrong in 1573 and separately for a group of Eliots, as well as being surety for the Bishop of Dunkeld in 1576.

In 1576 he had a ‘decret of transumpt’ for the lands of Hassendeanbank. In 1577 he wrote to the Regent Morton about the bond to end the feud between the Scotts and Kers. In about 1578 he was involved in a bond between the Kers and the Rutherfords. In 1578/9 there was a reminder at the Privy Council of an agreement to stop the feud between him and his son William, and the Rutherfords of Hundalee, Huntill and Edgerston, plus the Bailies of Jedburgh, George Douglas of Bonjedward and Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. In 1582 he was the main signatory of a bond to heal a feud among the Kers, instigated by the murder of David, brother of the Laird of Linton by Kers of Graden and Davidson. He married Isabella, daughter of Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst and was succeeded by his sons Sir Andrew and then William. His other children included Thomas, Agnes, Isobel (who married John Rutherford of Huntill) and Margaret (who married Alexander, 5th Lord Home). His wife, Dame Isobell, was ‘tutrix’ for their grandchildren Grisel and Bessie. Walter of Littledean (16th C.), son of Sir Andrew of the Hirsel. He was listed in 1552 among the men claimed to be involved in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was listed as son and heir of Andrew of Hirsel in 1553/4 as one of the Ker pledges to keep good rule against both Scotland and England. In 1561 he was Walter of Dolphinston (son to Sir Andrew of the Hirsel) when appearing before the Privy Council. He is the ‘Wat Ker of Dolphingstoun’ listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford, and who was also listed among Borderers to appear before the Queen to promise to keep peace on the Border. In 1567 he was ‘of Dolphingtoun’ among men ordered to present themselves to be warded in Blackness Castle; his surety was Robert Ker, younger, Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1568/9 he is listed as being ‘of Dolphingtoun’, son and heir apparent of Sir Andrew of the Hirsel, in the bond between the Kers and the Scotts; his eldest son John is also mentioned being contracted to marry Elizabeth Murray, sister to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. In 1569 he was among the lairds who signed a bond to keep peace on the Border. He is probably the ‘Watt’ of Dolphinston who swore allegiance to the Crown in 1572/3, with Walter of Caverton as surety. He signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573. In 1574 he was on the retours for Walter Scott of Branxholme as heir to his great-uncle David Scott, as well as his great-grandfather.
Ker

Sir Walter Scott. He was served heir to his father in the lands of Borthwick Mains in 1575. In 1576 he was surety for William Ker, younger of Cessford and was also involved in a dispute with others, including the Bailie of Jedburgh. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned. In 1580 he complained to the Privy Council about the Haithies and others. He signed the 1582 bond between various Kers, following the murder of David, brother of the Laird of Linton. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. His children included: Sir John of the Hirsel; Mark; Prior and Commendator of Coldstream; Andrew; James; and Robert. They are mentioned in a case brought against them by Julian Home, di- vorced wife of John of the Hirsel, to not molest her in her agreed liferent of the lands of Littledean.

Walter (16th C.) witness to a Hawick sasine in 1622 for Allan Deans. He is described as ‘anitore’, i.e. a porter. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1758 he witnessed baptisms for Robert Cowan in Borthaugh and for William Telfer in Borthaugh. He married Bessie Scott and their children included: Margaret (b.1749); Thomas (b.1751); Jean (b.1753); James (b.1755); and Robert (b.1758). The witnesses in 1751 were James Dryden and George Lamb. Maj.-Gen. Walter of Littledean (18th/19th C.). He also owned Nenthorn and East Bolton in Northumberland. In 1805–12 he was one of the 4 people who claimed succession to the Dukedom of Roxburghe. He was descended from the heirs male of the 1st Earl of Roxburghe. He lost the legal battle and this is supposed to have ruined him. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. It is said that his daughter (who became Mrs. Edward Gray) was the original for Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Di’ Vernon’. William of Mertoun and Yair (d.bef. 1512) younger son of Andrew of Altonburn and Cessford. He was tenant in the King’s lands of Yair in 1469 and regranted the lease in 1476. He was witness to a sasine in 1471 for the lands of Borthwick-shiel and Harden Wood. He was also referred to as being ‘de Martoun’ (Mertoun, in Berwickshire). In the period 1486–1499 the lands of Yair were let to him and his son William, with his son to have both steadings if he visited the Roman court. In 1493 a man obtained remission for stealing sheep from him. In 1494/5 Lawrence Rutherford in Oakwood and Adam Cranston in Oakwood each had remission for stealing livestock from his farm at Yair. In 1494/5 he served as surety for William Stable in Yair, as well as William Turnbull and James Hall in Selkirk. Also in the same year John Scott in Tushielaw was allowed to ‘compone’ for stealing sheep and cattle from his farm and tenants at Yair. He was also tenant of Williamhope as recorded in 1477 and 1499. He continued to have the lease of Yair until at least 1504. In 1505 he was appointed as Coroner and Serjeant of the county of Selkirk. He had a charter for the lands of Boithill in Peeblesshire in 1507. His wife was Christian. William (15th/16th C.) probably a younger son of the Laird of Cessford. He was Archdeacon of Teviotdale, recorded in 1491 and again in 1510/1. However, it is unclear if he was ever confirmed in the office. William (15th/16th C.) son of William of Yair and Boithill and grandson of Andrew of Cessford. He leased the Crown lands of Yair along with his father from 1486. In 1499 he had a lease for Yair, along with his father. In 1509 he was on the panel of ‘retour’ for Adam Hepburn inheriting the lands of Alemoor; he was there described as ‘juniorem de Zare’. By 1512 his father was deceased when Yair was leased to him and his mother Christian. He was probably succeeded by his son Ralph. Thomas of Yair was recorded in 1528, and surely related, perhaps grandson. This is the family commemorated in Melrose Abbey by the description ‘Here lies the race of the House of Zair’. It is possible that he died at Flodden. William (d.1566) probably son of Ralph of Primside. He was Commendator of Kelso Abbey in the period 1559–66. In 1563 he witnessed a sasine for Spittal-on-Rule, sold by Douglas of Cavers to Gilbert Ker of ‘Primysde-lock’ (probably his cousin). He could be the same as the ‘vnquhile William Ker of Zair’ recorded in 1574 as a surety for a bond between William Douglas of Cavers and Sir Walter Scott of Brauxholme. He could be the ‘William Karr brother to the said Master George’ who in 1541 was offered by Sir Andrew (Warden of the Middle Marches) as a pledge for the good behaviour of Teviotdale. Sir William of Cessford (c.1543–99/1600) 2nd son of Sir Walter. He was ‘younger’ in 1569 when he served as surety for John Elliot of the Park. He may have been the Sir William of Caverton recorded in 1571, when he served as cautioner for 4 inhabitants of Hawick. He was ‘younger of Cessford’ in 1571/2, when he signed a bond to act against Borders thieves. In 1572/3 he was surety for William Douglas of Cavers, James Gledstains of Cocklaw, John Grahamslaw of Little Newton.
Hector, son of David Turnbull of Wauchope, and several others, who were swearing allegiance to the Crown and not to help the Kerrs of Ferniehirst. He was still younger in 1573 when he was surety for presenting an Elliot. He signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573. In 1576 he was involved in a dispute with Turnbull of Bedrule over lands in Nether Ancrum. In 1577 he was involved with disputes with Davidsons and Taits. In about 1578 he and his father were involved in a bond between the Kerrs and the Rutherfords. He was younger of Cessford in 1581, and recorded as Warden of the Middle March and Keeper of Liddesdale, when he was bound for the re-entry of Armstrongs and Elliots. He was also Warden and Keeper in 1583 and again from 1588, assisted by his son Sir Robert. He was also Provost of Jedburgh and Keeper of Jed Forest. He inherited Sir Walter’s lands, including Hassendeanburn and Capplitrig. In 1583/4 he was Warden when he headed a list of Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council. In 1585 he was among the noblemen listed as having their forfeitures lifted. In about 1588 he was appointed as one of the Parliamentary Commissioners for Roxburghshire. He was listed as Bailie Principle of the Barony of Ancrum, Ashkirk and Lilliesleaf in 1589. He was Warden of the Middles March in 1590/1 when a case was brought against the Scottish Wardens, with Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst as his cautioner. He served in Parliament in 1597 and 1599. In 1562 he married Janet, daughter of Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig, who was widow of James Tweedie of Drummelzier. In about 1588 he secondly married Jean Johnstone, widow of Alexander, Lord Abernethy. He was succeeded by his eldest son Sir Robert who became 1st Earl of Roxburgh. Other children included: Sir Mark of Ormiston; Margaret, who married Walter Scott 1st Lord of Buccleuch; and Elizabeth, who married James Bellenden of Broughton. William (16th/17th C.) described as ‘in Newton’ in 1612, when the Lord Advocate listed a large number of men convicted of charging more than 12 percent interest on loans. He may have been related to Robert Kerr of Newton, possibly even his son. William of Yair (16th/17th C.) probably son of Andrew. He is recorded in 1619 when he was still ‘younger’. There was a complaint before the Privy Council that he ‘ryding on ane little naig upon the head of the water of Reule’ when James Lorraine in Appotside threatened him with a hagbut, which misfired, and he only escaped being fired at again when some others intervened. He is recorded along with his son Andrew in 1633. The Kerrs of Yair are buried at Melrose Abbey. Sir William (1622–75) 2nd Earl of Roxburghe. He was the son of Jean Ker and John Drummond (2nd Earl of Perth) and hence the grandson of the 1st Earl of Roxburghe. He married his cousin Jean Ker in 1655 and changed his name to Ker when he assumed the Earldom in 1650. In 1650 he was named one of the overseers of the tutors for the children of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. The family held extensive lands in Roxburghshire in the 1600s and he was recorded paying large sums in several parishes (including Hassendean and Ancrum) in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. He was succeeded by his son Robert. Sir William of Greenhead (d.1721) succeeded his brother Andrew as the 3rd Baronet of Greenhead in 1676. He paid the land tax in several parishes in 1678. He was fined for supporting Covenanters in 1684. He was appointed one of the 2 Parliamentary Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1685 and 1686, and again in 1702 and 1706. He was thus a member of the last Scottish Parliament, and voted for the Union. He then served on the first Parliament of Great Britain 1707–08. He was also a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690 and 1704 and Colonel of the eastern regiment of militia (appointed in 1689). Following his death there was a legal challenge in 1726 between his grandson (also Sir William) and Walter Scott of Whitfield, William Scott of Thirlestane and Walter Scott of Woll (see also Kerr).

Kerr (ker, kawr) n. Abraham W. (19th C.) clothier of Kerr & Mackenzie, 72 High Street. This could be the premises of the ‘Mr. Kerr’ recorded near there on Wood’s 1824 map. He married Charlotte, daughter of Hawick jairor Michael Anderson, and later re-married. Adam (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident, who, along with William Miller, was rebuked in 1713 for riding on stilts on the Sabbath ‘thereby causing crowds of bairns to follow them’. Alexander Boyd (1810–67) younger son of Gen. Thomas William, his grandson Alexander Nairne would succeed to the Abbotrule Lairdship. He was born in London (when the family still owned Abbotrule). He had a military career with the 24th Madras Native Infantry, ending as an Honorary Colonel. He was involved with suppressing the rebellion at Coorg in 1837. In 1838 he married Jane Helen Campbell, daughter of Lt. Gen. Alexander Murray MacGregor and Lady Charlotte Sinclair. Their children were: John MacGregor, whose son would succeed to the Abbotrule title; Charlotte Sarah Fanny; Amelia Margaret, who died young; Helen Isabella Ramsay, who died unmarried; and Charlotte S.F., who married J. Pringle, surgeon of the East India Company; and another who died in infancy. He retired to Edinburgh and is buried in the Cannongate. Alexander Nairne ‘Alec’ (1882–1964) elder son of John MacGregor, born in India and educated at Marlborough. He joined the Army in India and retired as a Lieutenant Colonel; he also served in East Africa in WWI, for which he received the Military Cross. He was also a keen sportsman. He became the 10th Kerr of Abbotrule on the death of his cousin William in 1919. He married Eva Theresa Wayne and their only child John Kinloch became the 11th Kerr of Abbotrule. Andrew of Kersheugh (d.1405) son of Thomas. He was Cup-bearer to King Robert III. He married a daughter of Edmondson of that Ilk and was succeeded by his son Thomas. Andrew of Kersheugh (d.c.1450) son of Thomas. He accompanied the Earl of Douglas to Rome in 1450. He is mentioned by Thomas the Rhymers. He married Jean, daughter of Crichton of Crichton and was succeeded by his son Ralph. Andrew of Kersheugh (d.1488) son of Ralph. He married Mary, daughter of Herbert, Lord Herries. Their children included: Thomas, who succeeded; and John, ancestor of the Kers of Greenhead, Chatto and Sunlaws. Sir Andrew ‘Dand’ of Ferniehirst (d.c.1545), son of Thomas of Smailholm and Margaret Kerr of Ferniehirst (although other accounts say he was the eldest son of Thomas of Ferniehirst and Catherine Ochiltree). He could be the ‘Andream Ker de Vuercraling’ who was on the panel for the inheritance of the lands and titles of Branxholme and Buccleuch in 1492. He served as surety for Simon Young in Roughlee in 1493, as well as Adam Kirkton. He was ‘Andream Ker de Farnyhirst’ in 1494 when he was on the panel for the inheritance of Synton. In 1494/5 there was a ‘suit of peace’ against him, not to harm the Vicar of Oxnam. He was referred to as being of ‘Vuir Crailing’ (i.e. Over Crailing) when Sir William Colville resigned the half Barony of Feu-rule in 1499, and as being ‘of Farnyhyst’ in 1501/2 when he held the half Barony; William ‘Elwald’ was there described as his follower (perhaps acting as his Bailie). In 1502 he was fined for failing to produce Patrick and Philip Turnbull in court. In 1502 he served as surety for David Oliver (‘Nae Guid Preist’) in ‘Stryndis’ (probably ‘Strange’ in Rulewater) who had a remission for several raids around the Jedburgh area, and also surety for Robert and David Oliver, as well as for John Oliver, all in the same place. He was also surety for Jedburgh men in 1502, as well as for his brother William. In 1506 he was on an inquest in Jedburgh. In 1508 he was fined by the High Court of the Judiciary. In 1509 he resigned part of the Barony of Oxnam. In 1510 he was involved, along with Ralph Ker of Primside Loch, in an indenture with the Erskines, Barons of Synton. He witnessed the 1512/3 charter of Sir William Drumlanrig when he sold Broadlee. In 1513 he witnessed a charter for John Nesbit of Dalziel. He probably led some of the Borderers at the 1513 Sclaterford skirmish. On the night after the Battle of Flodden, he broke into Kelso Abbey and ousted the superior, installing his brother Thomas as the new Commendator. In 1525 he was among the Border Barons who signed a bond with the Earl of Angus for keeping the peace. Also in 1525 he was on the panel of return for Gordon of Stichill. In 1526 he was involved in the ‘Battle of Skirmish Field’, where he supported the Earl of Angus and others against the Scotts and Elliots, who tried unsuccessfully to capture the young James V. He was listed in 1526/7 among prominent men charged by James V not to attack the lands of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, John Cranston of that Ilk and Walter Scott of Synton while those men were in ‘respite’ for the charge of treason. He was mentioned (along with several local representatives of the Scott family) in the 1529 indenture to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts. In 1530 he was one of the Border chiefs who were briefly imprisoned for not keeping thieves in check. In 1532 he was one of the local men appointed by the King to a commission to capture some Croziers, Elliot and Foresters for raiding Teviotdale. He was appointed Warden of the Middle Marches in 1538. In 1541 he claimed to hold the lands of Ashiestiel in feu. He became Bailie of Jedburgh Forest in 1542. Documents of the early 1540s give him and his son Robert the kirk to various lands, as well as the patronage of Bedrule Kirk. In 1544 he and his son John were taken prisoner by the English during a raid on Rulewater. He swore fealty to Henry in order to be released, and sided with the English army in 1545. He married Janet, daughter of Sir Patrick Home of Polwarth and had at least 7 children, including: Thomas, who pre-deceased him; Sir John, who succeeded; Janet, who married George Turnbull of Bedrule, and secondly married Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch; Isabel, married Sir Walter Ker of Cessford; Christian, married Sir James Douglas of Cavers; Margaret, who married James Menzies from Perth and secondly a Hay of Smithfield; and Robert of Ancrum, whose family carried on the Ferniehirst title after Sir John’s line died out. Andrew (16th C.) recorded as ‘Andrew Karr man to Robine Elliott’ in 1590. He was accused of being in a group led by William of the Steele who stole livestock and prisoners from Catton in England. Sir Andrew (d.1631) 1st Lord Jedburgh, eldest son of Sir Thomas of Oxnam and Ferniehirst. He was ‘younger of Farnieherst’ in 1583/4 on a list of Borderers summoned to appear before the Privy Council. He succeeded to Ferniehirst on the death of his father in 1585. In 1587/8 he had a charter confirming the bailiary of the lands belonging to Jedburgh Abbey (which had been held heritably by his father, grandfather and great-grandfather before him). He was involved in an ongoing feud with the Scotts of Buccleuch. He is probably the Laird who was accused of being responsible for a group of 100 men raiding part of Tynedale in 1589. In 1590 his servants John Chalmers and John Kirkcaldy were killed, leading to bonds by Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch not to molest him, and by 1595 he had a contract affirming he was satisfied that Scott had made amends. Also in 1590 he was accused by an Englishman of being responsible for his servant, who had stolen a horse. In 1590/1 he was cautioned for William Ker of Cessford, in a case brought against the Scottish Wardens. In 1591 he was a ‘gentleman of the King’s bedchamber’ to James VI. He was Keeper of Liddesdale in 1592, under the Duke of Lennox. He was temporarily denounced as a rebel in 1592 for helping the Earl of Bothwell. In 1593 he succeeded to the lands of Kirkdaly of Grange, through his mother. In 1594 he and his brother Thomas were denounced as rebels for a bond they made with Sir Robert Ker, apparent of Cessford. In 1595 he inherited half the Barony of Feu-Rule from his father Sir Thomas. In 1597 he sat in Parliament as a minor baron. His initials, and those of his wife, were inscribed at Ferniehirst Castle in 1598. He acted as Captain of the King’s Guard and Commissioner of the Middle Shires from around the time of the Union of the Crowns. He was also Provost of Jedburgh during the slaying of his brother Thomas by a band of Turnbuls in 1601; several Turnbuls were convicted in a protracted court case, including a counter case against him and several Kerrs and other supporters for killing and maiming some of the Turnbull party, in which it seems that the legal system was somewhat stacked in favour of the Kerrs (and he used his later elevated position to avoid trial). Also about 1601 his servitor James Turnbull of Hobsonburn is recorded disbursing money. He is probably the Andrew of Ferniehirst who held a ‘wadset’ in 1606 with Walter Scott of Todrig for the lands of ‘Harden-head’. In 1615 he had a remission for the murder of several Turnbuls and other crimes taking place while he was a Commissioner. He was created Lord Jedburgh in 1622 and inherited served lands from his father in 1625. He served as an Extraordinary judge of Session and a Privy Councillor. In 1629 he is recorded gaining the Barony of Feu-Rule (as well as other lands) as heir to his deceased son, Sir Andrew, but died himself soon afterwards. In 1631 he granted a confirming charter for the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside. In 1584 he married Anne, eldest daughter of Andrew Stuart, Master of Ochiltree. He had a son who died before him, as well as 6 daughters, and was succeeded by his half-brother James of Crailing. His children were: Sir Andrew of Oxnam, Master of Jedburgh (d.1628); Margaret, who married Sir John Macdowall of Garthland; Jean, married Thomas Kennedy of Pinwhirrie; Alison, married John Rutherford of Hunthill; Anne; Mary; and Lilias, married a McCulloch. Sir Andrew of Oxnam (d.1628) Master of Jedburgh. He was son of Sir Andrew, 1st Lord Jedburgh, but died before his father. As heir-apparent of his father, he was referred to as Master of Jedburgh. He held land in the Rule valley and specifically the Barony of Feu-Rule. He became owner of the lands of Appotside in 1610. He appears to have removed Robert Elliot "in Gledstains" in 1610, not accepting him as a 'kindly tenant'. He had a 'contract of wadset' for the lands of Templehall and Dewlawd with George Turnbull in 1612. In 1615 he had remission for the slaughter of Hector, son of Walter of Bewlie at Lilliesleat about Martinmas 1604, and of Hector Turnbull of Stenedge in 1611. It seems likely he was acting as an agent of the Commissioner for the Middle Shires, Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst. However, there appears to have been an ongoing feud between the Kerrs and the Turnbuls. He was appointed Captain of the King's Guards in 1618. In 1622 he sat on the Commission for keeping peace on the Border. He was also one of the Senators of the College of Justice. He married Margaret Kerr, 3rd daughter of Mark, 1st Earl of Lothian; she was widow of Lord Hay of Yester, and usually called 'the Lady Yester'. He had no issue, and in 1629 his lands of Ashiestiel were inherited by his father. Andrew of Sunlaws and Chatto (d.1661) son of Sir Thomas of Redden and Jean Ker, daughter of James of Chatto. He may alternatively have been son of the first James of Chatto, and uncle of John of Chatto and Sunlaws (although it is possible that 2 men are being conflated here). He purchased the lands of Chatto, Sunlaws, etc. from the Earl of Traquair after John of Chatto and Sunlaws had been forced to sell them. He was a supporter of the Commonwealth cause in Scotland, who was made Sheriff and Commissary Depute for Teviotdale. He was captured by Scottish Royalist forces in 1653 and brought to Borthwickbrae by a small force under Sir Arthur Forbes, who were pursued by an English Commonwealth force. There was a skirmish at Philip, where he was released, but run through the thigh by an English trooper in the struggle. He married Elizabeth, daughter of James Wright of Gladswood. His children were: Joan; Christian, who married her cousin, John of Chatto; and William, said to be 'a weakly boy', who was served as his heir in 1678. He may also have married Isabella Cranston and was ancestor of the Kerrs of Buchtrig and the Haie. Andrew (17th/18th C.) son of Mary Kerr and John Kerr. He inherited half of the lands of Fodderlee through his mother. Andrew (b.1786/7) from Cavers Parish, he was a carter in Newcastleton. In 1861 he was at about 13 North Hermitage Street with his wife Ellen and an elderly boarder, Isabella Elliot. Anne (d.1667) daughter of Robert, Marquis of Lothian and brother of William, she was Countess of Lothian in her own right. In 1642 she and her sister Jean were served joint heirs to their father in many lands and rights, including the church of Hobkirk. She married Sir William of Ancrum, who became 3rd Earl of Lothian. Her sons included Robert, 1st Marquess of Lothian and Charles of Abbotrule. Charles (d.1690) 2nd Earl of Ancrum, son of Robert, the 1st Earl and his 2nd wife Anne Stanley. He sat in the Scottish Parliament as a Peer 1671–81 and was said to be a Parliamentary speaker of note. He sold Ancrum to Sir John Scott of Kirkstyle in about 1670. In 1678 and 1680 his lands in Abbotrule were valued at £572 and those in Hobkirk at £300. He married in 1662 and had a son who died before him. He is said to have ended his days in poor circumstances and broken-hearted. His titles eventually merged with those of his brother’s family, the Lords of Lothian. Charles of Abbotrule (1642–82) 3rd son of Sir William, 3rd Earl of Lothian and Ann, who was sister of Robert, Marquis of Lothian and Countess of Lothian in her own right. He is the ancestor of the Kerrs of Abbotrule, his father being the 1st Kerr Laird. He held a charter of the lands of Abbotrule in 1648 (or perhaps 1658), being given this Lairdship during his father’s lifetime. This was confirmed in 1664 and 1665, whereby he received full title to the estate. The land was created a barony in 1667. From 1667 until 1678 he was one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1674 he was part of the dinner party at Swanside, after which James Douglas of Cavers was murdered by Andrew Rutherford (for which he was tried and executed). He is said to have spent much time in London and received a ring from King Charles for having the best manners at Court. In 1678 he paid land tax on £300 in Hobkirk Parish and £572 in Abbotrule Parish. He may also be the ‘Mr Charles Kerr’ who was listed holding the teinds of lands in Jedburgh Parish. In 1666 he married Cecily (or Cecil), only daughter (by his 2nd marriage) of Patrick Scott of Langshaw and Ancrum. His children were: William, the eldest son, who succeeded to Abbotrule; Charles (b.1669), who died young; Robert (b.1671), who also died young; Patrick (b.1673), who farmed at Lustruther, and was mentioned in his brother’s entail; and Cecily (b.1670), who is probably his daughter who married John Scott of Gorrenberry. His son William was served as his heir in 1680 (which may have been while he was still alive). Little else is known about him. Charles (c.1734–56) 5th Laird of Abbotrule, eldest son of William. He succeeded to the Lairdship in 1752

when still quite young. He entered the service of the Honorable East India Company, probably being introduced through Col. Elliot of Wells. After receiving a commission in 1754, he died only 2 years later, it is said in the defence of Calcutta. Since he died without children, he was succeeded by his brother Patrick. Charles of Wells (18th C.) listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. It is unclear how he was related to other Kerrs. This was probably the ‘Wells’ near Jedburgh (where he paid the Land Tax in 1771). Charles (1767–1821) 7th Laird of Abbotrule, eldest son of Patrick. He was educated at the Royal High School in Edinburgh. He trained as a lawyer, being apprenticed to David Erskine and became a Writer to the Signet in 1789. He was a friend of Sir Walter Scott at school, and to serve as the inspiration for ‘Darsie Latimer’ in Scott’s ‘Redgauntlet’; some of their correspondence was published in ‘Walter’s Postbag’ (1932). In 1792 he succeeded to the Abbotrule estate, which was probably already in debt. He is recorded in the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of Abbotrule. He also paid the dog tax there in 1797. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. He was on the subscription list for Jamieson’s Scots dictionary in 1808. In 1811 he was recorded as owner Gatehousecote, parts of Grange (formerly possessed by John Elliot) parts of Ruletownhead, ‘Bossithill’ and Burnkinford (formerly possessed by George Dickson and George Elliot), Doorpool, Midquar- ter and ‘The Parks of Abbotrule’; together they were valued at about £1100. He married Mary Ann Thompson from Peel, Isle of Man, who was only 16 at the time; he was on the island to escape creditors. He was known for debts, gambling and duelling, and fled to Jamaica, where he worked as a clerk. In 1792 he returned to claim his inheritance following the death of his father. He immediately sold off Gatehousecote and Over Bour- chester, but for some reason the sale was never completed, and he had them back again. In 1804 he also had a stable block built, bearing his initials. He purchased the neighbouring farm of East Fodderlee in 1806. He joined the Roxburghshire Cavalry and became recruiting officer. By 1800 he had fought 4 duels and purchased a commission as Paymaster of the 68th Regiment of Foot (the Durham Light Infantry). He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. In about 1814 he arranged to sell the unenclosed slope of Bouchester Hill to George Cleghorn of Weens, but desiring to change the deal at the last moment, it fell through; he blamed Cleghorn for this and is said to have had all the trees cut down on the hill to spoil the view from Weens. He then returned to the army and was Paymaster for the Royal Dragoons, perhaps serving at Waterloo. He sold East Fodder- lee in 1815. In 1818 he was forced by his creditors to sell all of the Abbotrule estate (to Robert Henderson), ending his family’s connection with the area, although the Lairdship passed to son Patrick and still survives in name today. His children included: Margaret (b.1790), who married John Oliver, younger brother of William Oliver Rutherford of Dinlabyre; Mary Anne (b.1795); Patrick (b.1796), who succeeded; and William (1800–23), who died at Penrith. He may also have had an additional daughter. He died at Weymouth only 3 years after selling the estate. Rev. Charles Alexander Gray (1933– ) educated at the Open University, Birmingham University and Edinburgh Theological College, he was ordained in 1967 and became Curate at St. Cuthbert’s in Hawick 1967–9. He went on to become a Priest in Birmingham and then Rector in Musselburgh, retiring in 1986. Christian of Chatto and Sun- laws (18th C.) eldest surviving daughter and heir of William. She was known as ‘Lady Chatto’. She extended the house at Sunlaws and had a new one built at Chatto. She married her cousin Charles Kerr, but they had no children. She left the estates to her distant relative William, son of Alexander Scott of Thirlestane and Barbara, daughter of Henry Kerr of Frogden. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (b.1878/9) from Denholm, she was a gro- cer in Newcastle. In 1852 she was listed as a shop-keeper in the village. She was also called ‘Hunter’, which was probably her married name. She lived at about 22 South Hermitage Street. In 1841 she was living with Betty Hutton or Waugh, and in 1851 and 1861 with her niece, also Betty Kerr. George of Corbethouse (16th C.) had a charter for the lands of Corbethouse in Morebatt- tle Parish in 1526. He made a pledge to serve the English King (along with many Kers and others) in 1544. He may be the ‘Johnne Ker of Corbethouse’ listed in 1553/4 among Kers in an assurance not to harm the Scotts or their followers. He was succeeded by his sons Andrew and then James. George (17th C.) described as portioner of Fodderlee in 1631 when he had a charter from the Commendator of Melrose for lands in Lessuden. He must have been related to the others Kerrs of Fodderlee. George (d.1782) resident of the Kirkwynd. His death registration records him as ‘George Kerr Kirkwind’. He could be the George who married Betty Aitkin in Hawick in 1763. He seems likely to be the George who is recorded in 1811 as previous owner of the lands called ‘Allers Garden’ (then owned by John Scott), which seem likely to have been in the modern Allars Crescent. Gilbert of Gateshaw (b.1749) son of William and Elizabeth, daughter of Gilbert Elliott of Stonedge. His father was Town Clerk of Kelso and Chamberlain to the Duke of Roxburgh, purchased Gateshaw from Sir William Scott of Ancrum in 1758, bringing it back into Ker hands. He was taxed for having a female servant in the 1780s. In 1780 he was ‘younger of Gaiteshaw’ when added to the list of voters in Roxburghshire. Around 1800 he took over as factor of Wells estate from his uncle Gilbert Elliott of Otterburn. This also meant he was given the key of Gibraltar, a memento of his relative Lord Heathfield, which he took back to Gateshaw when he retired about 1818. He married Margaret, daughter of John Hood of Stoneridge, Berwickshire. Their children were: William, who succeeded his uncle, Sir Charles; Lieut. John of the 19th Regiment, who died in Ceylon; Gilbert of the Royal Navy; Thomas, merchant, who died in Jamaica: Jane’ Eliza; Cecilia; Margaret, who married Francis Brodie; and Agnes. James of Corbet (16th C.) son of George and brother of Andrew, who he succeeded. His estate was also called ‘Corbethouse’ and included the tower of Gateshaw. He was listed as being ‘of Corbithows’ in 1560 when he was named on the bond to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords. His father Andrew of Corbethouse, had been killed by John Rutherford of Hunthill and his friends as part of this feud. As part of the arrangements to resolve the feud his daughter ‘Haufe’ was to marry William, 2nd son of John Rutherford of Hunthill. In 1561 he was among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. He was also listed as one of those excepted in the 1564/5 bond between the Scotts and the Kers. However, he was one of the men involved in signing the further bond between the Kers and the Scotts in 1568/9; he is also listed there as being ‘of Corberthouse’. He is probably the ‘James Karr laird of Corbett’ recorded in 1590 among men of Teviotdale accused of breaking their bond with an Englishman. His sons John and Andrew were among men accused in 1590 of theft and rest from Woodend, with his sons John and James being accused of a separate case in 1590. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Gilbert Kerr of Heiton. He was succeeded by his son John and also had a daughter Lillias (who married a grandson of the Earl of Bothwell). James of Chatto (d.1615) 3rd son of Kerr of Greenhead. He may be the ‘James Carr of Grenehead’ who was a deputy of the March Ward recorded in 1583. He could be the James ‘sone to the Laird of Grenehead’ who was named in the complaint by the Homes of Wedderburn against the Kers of Littledean in 1593. He became the 1st Kerr Laird of Chatto after purchasing the lands there in 1595. In 1612 he was listed among local men accused by the Privy Council of charging too much interest on loans. He later bought other lands, including Sunlaws from William Rutherford in 1614 and Hangingshaw, Gartshawfield and Pennymuir near to Chatto. He married Christian, sister of Sir John Stuart, Earl of Traquair. He was succeeded by his eldest son James. Other children included Andrew (whose daughter Christian married her cousin John) and 2 daughters. His widow remarried to William of Ancrum. In 1622 some men were accused of stealing some of her cattle from ‘Hakkerstonne’. James of Chatto and Sunlaws (d.1631) eldest son of James of Chatto. He was said to be extravagant in habits and left debts for his successor. He married Joan, daughter of Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh. He was succeeded by his son John and also had 3 daughters. James (b.c.1800) green grocer at about 73 High Street. His wife was Elspeth and their children included Elizabeth and James. James Alexander eldest son of John Kinloch, he is the 12th Kerr of Abbotrule. He married Alice Gibbs. James (19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. He married Elizabeth Goodfellow and their children included John (b.1840). Janet (15th/16th C.) daughter of Sir Andrew of Ferniehirst. She married George Turnbull of Bedrule, who died shortly before 1528. In 1530/1 she married Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme (as his 2nd wife). She held a third of the lands of Bedrule from her husband. She received the ‘liferent’ of the Lordship of Jedforest as part of the marriage contract with her 2nd husband. Because they were ‘secund and thrid of affinite, thridis of consanguinite, and thrid and ferd of affinite’ they had to ask for special permission from the Pope. However, this marriage ended in divorce after a fairly short time, with no children. Sir John (d.1562) of Ferniehirst, 2nd and succeeding son of Sir Andrew. In 1538 he was Chamberlain for the Crown’s lands of Jedforest, and was still Chamberlain in 1539, with the returns made by his brother Robert. He served as Depute to his father, who was Warden of the

Middle Marches, being recorded in this role in 1541. In 1542/3 he had to appear to answer the charge of murdering Sir John Striving of Keir. In 1544 he was taken prisoner by the English, along with his father, following a raid on Rulewater. In 1545 a Parliamentary decree put him at the head of 125 of the 500 horsemen who were mustered in Teviotdale. In 1545 he was among lairds in Teviotdale who signed a bond to settle feuds. He was probably the ‘lard of Fernyherst’ who signed a bond of assurance with Somerset at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. In 1547 and 1548 there are records of several bonds (with Elliots, Armstronngs and others) for entering prisoners with him at Ferniehirst. In 1547/8 he was one of the Kerrs who was accused of supporting the English in Pinkie, and of ravaging the lands of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme later in 1548. This included the farms of Goldielands, Todshawhill, Whithope, Wiltonburn, Borthaugh, Todshawhaugh, Wilton Green and Whames. He was knighted in 1548. He led a force that recaptured Ferniehirst from the English in 1549, from which event the motto of the Kerr’s of Abbotrule derives, ‘J’Avance’. It is also sometimes suggested that this event is the origin of the ‘Jethart Baa’, the balls representing the heads of English soldiers. A chronicler of the time describes how they butchered the entire French garrison of Ferniehirst. He was part of the feud between the Scotts and the Kers; in 1549 Walter Scott of Buccleuch petitioned the Lords of Council to post summonses against him and others at the market crosses of Hawick and other towns, following their assistance of the English in carrying out local destruction. In 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’. He was indicted for his part in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1552, along with several other Kers and his brother-in-law James Douglas of Cavers. In 1553/4 he was listed among Kers in an assurance not to harm the Scotts or their followers, as well as another bond by the Rutherfords not to harm the Kers. Also in 1553/4 his estate was given to his sons Andrew and William, following his non-appearance to answer charges of murdering Walter Scott of Branxholme. In 1557 he complained to the Regent about the behaviour of the Turnbulls of Bedrule and Hallrule raiding his lands. He purchased the lands of Ruecastle in 1558/9. In 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. In 1561/2 he (and his son Sir Thomas) had a bond with several Elliots to enter a Routledge as a prisoner at Ferniehirst. There was a decree of 1562 at his instigation, against the ‘invaders’ of his lands of South Synton. In 1561 and 1562 he raised a court action regarding disputed lands in Feu-Rule, in which he claimed half the Barony and 2/3 of the other half, resulting in a ‘decreet of division’ with Agnes Herries. He appears to have acted as some kind of assistant Warden, since there are several bonds with him in the late 1550s and early 1560s for the capture of thieves. He married Catherine, daughter of Sir Andrew Ker of Cessford. Their children were: Sir Thomas of Oxnam and later Ferniehirst; Margaret, who married John Hay, Lord Yester; Elizabeth, who married Andrew Lundin; Andrew of Nethergogar; William, parson of Bedrule; and John. In 1562 it is recorded that the Barony of Feu-Rule (essentially the Parish of Hobkirck) was divided between him and Agnes Herries. John of Shaw (d.1688) brother of Andrew of Kipplaw, he lived at Hyndhaughhead in Southdean Parish. In 1665 at Smallholm he married Catherine, eldest daughter of Sir Robert Carr of Ettal. Their children included: Margaret (1666–90); Alison (1668–1725), who married Robert Rutherford of Fairnilee and was probably mother of Alison who wrote a version of ‘Flowers of the Forest; Thomas, Robert and Marie, who died young; William (b.1679); and Marie (again, b.1681). He died at Hyndhaughhead and is buried in Southdean Kirk. John of Chatto and Sunlaws (17th C.) son of James and Joan Murray. He was forced to sell his estates to his great-uncle the Earl of Traquair, although they were later bought by his uncle Andrew. He married his cousin Christian, youngest daughter of Andrew Kerr. His children included Henry, who married Miss Wauchope of Edmonstone, and whose daughter Barbara married Dr. Alexander Scott of Thirlestane and had a son who became William Scott-Kerr of Chatto. John of Gogar (17th C.) received the ‘ward and non-entry’ of the lands of Whitslade in the period 1663–72. John (1665–95) 3rd son of Andrew of Chatto and Isabella Cranston. He is said to have died at Fodderlee, so he must have been related to Robert of Fodderlee, presumably either his nephew or cousin. He was recorded being ‘off fotherlie’ in 1690 among people owing money to the deceased Mark Turnbull (portioner of Fodderlee) and Bessie Kerr (who may have been related to him). He is probably the ‘John Ker in Fotherlie’ recorded in Abbotrule Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably the John ‘of Fodderlie’ whose will is recorded in 1695. John (17th/18th C.) servant of Walter Pringle, proprietor of Roughheugh Waulk Mill. In 1713 the Bailies heard a ‘process of riot and assassination’ against him, brought by Alexander Buchan, surveyor of ale in Hawick. John of Cavers Carre see John Ker. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Janet Miller and their children included: William (b.1779), botanist; Andrew (b.1791); and Robert (b.1793). In 1816 he made a declaration (included in the Hawick Parish birth records), along with James Miller (labourer at Northhouse), stating that his son William had been born in Hawick in 1779. John William Robert (1794–1841) 7th Marquess of Lothian, son of William, 6th Marquess. He was styled Lord Newbottle until 1815 and Earl of Ancram 1815–
24. He expanded his family estates, including acquiring Bonjedworth, Timpendale and other lands. He was a Conservative politician, serving as M.P. for Huntingdon and was Captain of the Yeomen of the Guard in the House of Lords. As Lord-Lieutenant of Roxburghshire he was charged with keeping the peace during some of the troubling elections of the early 19th century. In July 1841 he entered Hawick with a troop of dragoons who had been waiting at Hassendeanburn in order to quell the near riots. He married Cecil Chetwynd-Talbot and was succeeded by his sons William Schomberg Robert and then Schomberg Henry. John MacGregor (1839–1915) born in India, only son of Alexander Boyd, his son was to become the 10th Kerr of Abbotrule. He joined the East India Company in 1856 and served with the 3rd Madras Light Cavalry, eventually becoming a Commandant in the Army. He retired as a Colonel after serving for 32 years. He married Janetta Margaret Nairne of Dunsinnan House, who reached the age of 100. Their children were Janet Frances, Alexander Nairne (who succeeded to the Lairdship), Ida Margaret, Lorraine MacGregor and Evan Sinclair. He was very keen on shooting, fishing and golf. A portrait exists of him as a child, as well as later photographs.

John Kinloch (1924–94) only son of Alexander Nairne, he became the 11th Kerr of Abbotrule on the death of his father, although the family had long ago sold the estate. He followed the family tradition into the Indian Army and was seconded to the Singapore Police after WWII. He married Janet Barbara Ferguson and their children James, Andrew and Rosemary were born in Singapore, with Georgina following after their return to Britain. Lorraine MacDowall (19th C.) eldest son of Gen. Thomas William Kerr of the Abbotrule family. He was born in Ceylon, served in India with the 65th Native Infantry, retired as a Lieutenant and became a merchant in Edinburgh. He married Mariane White and they had 4 children, with William Alexander succeeding to the Abbotrule Lairdship title. Margaret (c.1570–1645) daughter of Mark, Earl of Lothian. She first married James Hay, 7th Lord Yester and then remarried to Sir Andrew Kerr, Master of Jedburgh. She was thus known as Dame Margaret, Lady Yester, and was founder of Lady Yester’s Church in Edinburgh. She still owned land in Kelso and Sprouston Parishes in 1643. In her will she left money for the poor and schoolmasters of the parishes of Jedburgh, Sprouston, Hobkirk and Oxnam. In Hobkirk Parish the sum of £100 still yielded significant interest in the early 19th century. Mark (d.1584) 2nd son of Sir Andrew of Cessford. He became Abbot of Newbottle in 1546 and Commendator at the Reformation in 1560. He was listed as brother of Sir Walter of Cessford in the 1564/5 bond between the Kers and the Scotts. He married Helen, daughter of George Leslie, 4th Earl of Rothes. He was succeeded by his son Mark, who became 1st Earl of Lothian. Other children included: Andrew of Fenton and Romanno Grange, who married Isabella Whittlaw; George; William, who married Jean, daughter of James Johnstone; and Catherine, who married William Maxwell 5th Lord Herries of Terregles. Mark (1553–1609) son of Mark, Abbot of Newbottle. He became Master of Requests in 1577, Privy Counsellor in 1587 and Lord of Parliament in 1591. He witnessed the 1586 marriage contract between Margaret and Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He was created 1st Earl of Lothian in 1606. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Maxwell, 4th Lord Herries of Terregles. He was succeeded by his son Robert. His other children included: Margaret, who became Lady Yester; Isabel, who married William Douglas, 1st Earl of Queensberry; and Lilias, who married John, 8th Lord Borthwick. Mary (17th/18th C.) only daughter of Robert of Fedderlee. She married John Kerr in 1686. In 1689 she was infested in half of the lands of Fedderlee, and in turn her son Andrew was infested in these lands in 1695. She was recorded as owner of Fedderlee in a tax document for the Lordship of Melrose in 1700. She was recorded as owner of ‘the east side of Fotherlie’ in 1707, with a value of £80. Mary nee Scott (b.c.1813) keeper of a lodging house at 6 Cross Wynd. Her brother was James Scott, engineer and millwright. She married Thomas Kerr, who was a blacksmith on the Cross Wynd. However, she was already a widow by 1851. Her children included Margaret, Euphemia, Mary and Andrew. Ned (17th C.) merchant listed in Hawick among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. The forename given may be an error, since it is essentially unheard of locally at that time. Nichola (15th/16th C.) daughter of George of Samuelston and his first wife, Elizabeth Carmichael. She became her father’s heiress and married Alexander, Lord Home. The couple were granted the lands of Samnleston according to a charter of 1497. Her name is sometimes confusing written ‘Nicolas’. Patrick (17th/18th C.) younger son of Charles, 2nd Laird of Abbotrule. He was described as ‘of Lustruther’. He married Agnes, daughter of Andrew Ker of Bloodylaws, and they had a son, William who is recorded in 1741. Patrick (18th C.) preacher at Teviothead from 1757 until about 1763 when James Erskine took over). His subsequent history is unknown. It is possible he was the Patrick who was ministered at Caerlaverock Castle and moved to Eskdalemuir about 1762. Patrick (d.1791) 6th Laird of Abbotrule, a younger son of William. He inherited the estate from his brother Charles in 1756, but there was some complication over the confirmation of his succession (specifically, the establishment of the death of his brother), which did not occur until 1762. He was sometimes referred to as ‘the Abbot’. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He trained as a lawyer, being apprenticed to Francis Pringle and Walter Scott. He became Writer to the Signet in 1768. He was the driving force behind suppressing the Parish in the 1770s, possibly in part because of a falling out with the minister. He supposedly then took some of the best glebe lands for himself and had the manse pulled down. It is said that 17 years later, following a Sunday Sacrament at Southdean, a pale horse appeared to the minister and elders, with a ghastly apparition of the hated laird; this was also the same day that the Laird died (although the story no doubt improved with the telling!). He was apparently bad tempered, and in later years seldom left the estate. In 1780 he objected to Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto being on the Roxburghshire electors’ roll (on account of having sold the liferent of much of his property to others); in addition he objected to addition of all the liferenters of parts of Minto and Headshaw proposed by Elliot. Clearly this was part of a political battle between the Whigs (including Elliot and his invented supporters) and the Tories (which must have included Kerr himself). In 1788 his estate in Southdean Parish was valued at £940 4s 8d, and he also held feu-duties of lands in Hobkirk Parish and teinds for lands in Jedburgh Parish. In 1788 he is listed among the voters of Roxburghshire, his privately circulated description being that he was then ‘Embarrassed in his affairs. A family’ and in the election probably a supporter of ‘the Marquis of Lothian, but thinks himself indifferently used by the Marquis’s Trustees’. In 1766 he married Jean (or Jane), daughter of Thomas Hay of Huntingdon and Mordington. His children were: Charles (b.1767), who sold Abbotrule; Thomas William (b.1768), who became a General; Margaret (b.1769), who remained unmarried; Beatrix (b.1770); and Amelia Wilhelmina (b.1771), who had a sketch made of her, lived in Edinburgh and died unmarried. After his death his widow lived on South Bridge in Edinburgh. Patrick (1796–1864) 8th Kerr of Abbotrule, and the first one not to own the family estate, which had been sold by his father Charles. He became a Lieutenant in the Royal Navy, having joined at age 15. He married Margaret Lewis and their daughter Mary Ann kept a school. He may also have married Helen Mitchell. He died at Chepstow and was succeeded by his uncle’s grandson William Alexander. Ralph of Kerseghugh (d.c.1350) early local ancestor of the Ferniehirst branch. About 1330 he was given lands near the Jed Water, with the Douglases as superiors, possibly being the first family member to settle in Teviotdale. The lands were previously known as ‘Scraesburgh’, known by him as ‘Kerseghugh’ or ‘Kershaugh’ and were essentially the same as what was later called Ferniehirst. He was succeeded by his son Thomas. Ralph of Kerseghugh (d.c.1460) son of Andrew. He married Mary, daughter of Towers of Innerleith. His sons included: Andrew, who succeeded; and Robert of Yair. Richard of Gateshaw (d.1576) probably son of George. He was named in the 1564/5 bond between the Kers and the Scotts. He had sasine for his lands from William Ker of Cessford in 1566. In 1571 he entered into a contract with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. His children included: Lancelot; who succeeded; James; Adam; and a daughter, who married Elliot of Larriston. He made his will in 1576. Sir Robert (d.1511) Warden of the Middle March who was said to have been murdered by an English trio called Starhead, Lilburn and John ‘the bastard’ Heron. This was used an excuse for King James embarking on the invasion that led to Flodden. The date may be erroneous and confused with Sir Robert Ker of Caverton, who died c.1500. Robert of Woodhead and Ancrum (d.1588) 3rd son of Sir Andrew of Ferniehirst. In 1539 he made the returns for the Crown land’s of Jedforest, with his brother John as Chamberlain. He had a charter of the lands of Woodhead in the Lordship of Over Ancrum in 1542. He also had a charter for a third of the lands of Dirlton, and also Newton in the Barony of Bedrule. In 1551 he served on the panel for David Home of Wedderburn inheriting lands in Ettrick Forest. He became quite wealthy, and was involved in dubious activity around Jedburgh, at one point taking several Burgess prisoners. It appears that in 1548 he applied for an assurance from Somerset that he could travel to his own house in order to serve the English King. The house he built at Ancrum had an inscription ‘Robert Ker and Isobel Home Foundar and Compleitar 1558’. He was listed among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts in 1562. He was in ward in Edinburgh Tolbooth in 1564, as a result of accusations by Andrew of Daldonside. He is mentioned as one of those excepted in the bond between the Scotts and the Kerrs in 1564/5. He was in ward in Edinburgh in 1565, with Sir Thomas of Ferniehirst, Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and John Rutherford of Hunthill, younger, as sureties. He was released, but this was an error and he was ordered to present himself again to be warded in 1565/6, with a case brought against him by William Turnbull, Burgess of Edinburgh, resolved shortly thereafter. In 1567 he signed a bond to support the infant King James on the throne and was also among men re-ordered to appear before the Privy Council regarding order in the Middle Marches. In 1569 he was a surety for George Rutherford of the Grange and John Turnbull in Abbotrule. He was in ward in 1571 and also ordered to pay for a cask of wine. There is an existing list of his ‘plenishing’ as removed by the Jedburgh authorities (led by Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule, along with other Turnbulls and Rutherfords) in 1571; in 1573 he complained about the raid on his house, but the authorities ruled that he had reset the fugitive Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, and had no right to complains. In 1571 and 1574 he was surety for his illegitimate sons Robert and William. In 1582/3 he was fined by the Privy Council along with Martin Elliot of Braidlie and Gavin’s Jock Elliot for the non-appearance of 2 Elliots from Ramsiegill. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. He signed a marriage contract in 1586 between his son Robert and Helen Grahamslaw of Newton. He married Isabel, daughter of David Home of Wedderburn. He was succeeded by his son William, and was grandfather of Sir Robert, the 1st Earl of Ancrum. Other children were Robert of Newton, Thomas, Catherine and Isobel. Robert of Newton (16th/17th C.) son of Robert of Woodhead and Ancrum. In 1586 he purchased Newton, in Bedrule Parish from John Grahamslaw. About 1590 he was listed among the landed men of the Borders. In 1594 he was denounced as a rebel for an assurance signed with Sir Robert Kerr, heir apparent of Cessford; along with his brother William he was warded in Dum-barton Castle. He married Helen, daughter of the same John Grahamslaw and was succeeded by his son Robert, who married Euphemia Douglas. Robert (d.1624) eldest son of Mark, he was 2nd Earl of Lothian. He married Annabella, daughter of Archibald Campbell, 7th Earl of Argyll. Without surviving male issue his elder daughter Anne became Countess of Lothian in her own right and married Sir William of Ancrum, who became 3rd Earl of Lothian. In 1641/2 his daughters Anne and Joanna were served heirs to many of his lands and rights, including the church of Hobkirk. Robert of Newton (d.c.1639) son of Robert and uncle of Robert, Earl of Ancrum. In 1622 he (or perhaps his father) gained lands resigned by his cousin Sir Robert Kerr of Ancrum. His lands included Newton in Bedrule Parish. In 1628 he was listed among the major landowners who met to elect M.Ps. for Roxburghshire. He married Euphemia Douglas. He was succeeded by his son William. Sir Robert 1st Earl of Ancrum (1578–1654) son of William of Woodhead and Ancrum (who was killed in 1590). He was made a Knight of the Bath in 1603. He was served heir to his father in 1603 and his grandfather in 1608. He spent much time in Court, acting as Charles I’s advisor on Scottish affairs. He as Captain of the King’s bodyguard until 1613 and served as Keeper of the Privy Purse. He was created Earl in 1633 and had his portrait painted by John Eycks. At one point he was forced to flee the country, having become involved in the feud between the Maxwells and Johnstanes, in which he slew Charles Maxwell in a duel. He was known for his interest in the arts, and wrote poetry himself. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir John Murray of Blackbarony, and sister of the wife of Sir John Riddell of Riddell.
He secondly married Anne Stanley, only daughter of the 6th Earl of Derby (whose portrait was painted by Cornelius Johnson), and widow of Sir Henry Portman. His children (all but the first by his 2nd marriage) were: William, who became the 3rd Earl of Lothian; Charles, who became 2nd Earl of Ancrum; Stanley, who died without issue; Vere, who married Dr. Wilkinson of Oxford; Anne, who married Col. Nathaniel Rich of Stondon; and Elizabeth. There is an interesting correspondence (sometimes called the Ancrum papers) still in existence between him and his son, covering about the last 30 years of his life, during some of which he was living in Holland to escape Cromwell’s England, as well as his creditors. He was a friend and supporter of the poet John Donne and was bequeathed one of the most recognisable portraits of him when he died; this is now in the National Portrait Gallery. Robert (17th C.) son of George and brother of Sir Thomas of Cavers. He acquired the lands of Middlemas Walls. He is probably the ‘Robet Ker of Cavers’ who complained to the Privy Council in 1628 about William Turnbull in Braidhaugh obstructing the apprehension of his son James, and for ‘hurting and wounding him’. In 1643 he is of ‘Middlemistwalls’ when recorded owning lands on Sprouston Parish. He married Isobel, daughter of Andrew Riddell of that Ilk and was probably succeeded by his son Thomas of Middlemas Walls. Robert of Fodderlee (17th C.) recorded in 1685. He must have been a son of one of the landed branches of the Kerrs; he was surely related to John, the 3rd son of Andrew of Chatto, who was born in 1665 and died at Fodderlee in 1695. In 1686 his only daughter Mary married John Kerr. Robert of Gateshaw (17th C.) 10th Laird, he was son of John. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire 1661–86. His son John succeeded him and sold the estate to Sir William Scott of Ancrum. Robert (1636–1703) eldest son of Sir William, he was 4th Earl of Lothian from 1675, became 3rd Earl of Ancrum in 1690 and the 1st Marquess of Lothian in 1701. He was a volunteer in the Dutch War in 1673. He paid the land tax in Ancrum Parish in 1678. About 1685 he raised a troop, with Sir William Eliott of Stobs as Lieutenant, to round up local Covenanters. He supported the Revolution of 1688 and served the government of William III. He married Jean, daughter if the Marquess of Argyll. He had 10 children, including: William, who was known as Lord Jedburgh before he succeeded; Charles; John, of the 31st Regiment; Mark, commander of the 11th Dragoons, who is mentioned in the song ‘Johnnie Cope’; and Mary, who married James, Marquess of Douglas, and was mother of the Duke of Douglas and Lady Jane, who had twins at the age of 52, with the succession argued in court. Robert of Cavers (17th/18th C.) son of John and Agnes Ker. His name is often written ‘Carre’. He succeeded to the patronage of Bedrule Kirk, as well as the Cavers Carre lands. In 1718 he married Jane, daughter of Robert Milne of Balmillo, and she died in the following year. He secondly married Helen, sister of Sir Walter Riddell, Baronet of Riddell. His son Thomas inherited the estate, but died in his youth. The lands then went to his brother John. However, patronage of Bedrule went to his daughter Agnes and her husband John Hume of Ninewells and Ferny Castle (brother of David Hume the philosopher). He also had another daughter, Margaret. Robert (b.c.1790) born in Cavers Parish, he was a tailor in Newcastleton. He is probably the Robert in Castleton who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was listed as male head of his family in 1835–41. He is listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 and 1861 he was at about 5 Montagu Street. His wife was Helen or Ellen and their children included Robert (carpenter), John, Francis and Walter. Robert (b.1822/3) son of tailor Robert. He was a joiner in Newcastleton. He married Margaret, daughter of John Cavers. Their children were Margaret, Robert, an unnamed daughter, John, Walter, John Cavers, Helen, Janet, and Francis Napier. The family emigrated to Manitoba, Canada. Schomberg Henry (1833–1900) 9th Marquess of Lothian, son of John, the 7th Marquess and brother of William Schomberg, the 8th Marquess. He spent much of his life in the diplomatic service, in Lisbon, Tehran, and then several European cities. He was Colonel of the 3d Battalion Lothian Regiment. He contested Roxburgh county for the Conservatives in 1868, losing to Sir William Scott of Ancrum. He lived for a while at Monteviot. He gained the lands of Belses, Ryeknow and Abbotsmeadow from John Edmund Elliot of New Belses in 1872. He also served as Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire and was also Deputy-Lieutenant of the county from 1885. He was also Rector of Edinburgh University, Secretary of State for Scotland, Keeper of the Privy Seal, Captain-General of the Royal Company of Archers, Gold Stick of Scotland, etc. Lothian Street in Hawick was named after him.
Kerr

In 1865 he married Lady Victoria Alexandrina Montagu-Douglas-Scott and hence was son-in-law of Walter, 5th Duke of Buccleuch. His children were: Cecil Victoria Constance, who married John Walter Douglas-Montagu-Scott; Walter William Schomberg, who died from a gun accident in Australia; Margaret Isobel, who lived to 96; Schomberg Henry Mark, died in infancy; Mary, who married Henry Kidd; Helen Victoria Lilian, who married Col. Frederick Walter Kerr; Robert Schomberg, who succeeded, but had no sons; Victoria Alexandria Alberta, who married Maj. William Gosling; and Isobel Alice Adelaide, who married James Cospatrick Hepburne-Scott. The Lothian titles were inherited by the families of his brothers Ralph and then Walter. Thomas of Kersheugh (d.1389) son of Ralph. He married Margaret, daughter of Thomas Somerville of Carnwath. He was succeeded by his son Andrew. He may have had another son, John, who settled near Aberdeen. Thomas of Kersheugh (d.c.1430) son of Andrew. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas Home of that Ilk. He was succeeded by his son Andrew, and had other sons Thomas and James. Thomas of Ferniehirst (d.1499) son of Andrew of Kersheugh. He was the first of his family to be designated ‘of Ferniehirst’. He probably built the original tower there, sometime around 1490. He also had a new charter of his lands from Archibald, Earl of Angus. In 1474 he was summoned to Edinburgh by the King, probably relating to keeping peace on the Border. In 1476 he is listed among other Border Lairds in an action brought by John, Lord Somerville. He married Catherine, daughter of Robert Colville of Ochiltree (who died at Flodden). His sons were: Sir Andrew, who succeeded; Ralph, ancestor of the Cavers Carre branch; Thomas, Abbot of Kelso (although this could have been a cousin); and William, who had a charter of Langlee and ‘Gallastongis’. They also had a daughter, Margaret, who married Sir Thomas of Smallholm (with whom he is easily confused). Sir Thomas of Smallholm (d.1484) son of Andrew (whose name is usually spelled ‘Ker’). He was probably the builder of the original Smallholm Tower in the 1470s. He may be the ‘Thom Ker’ who was on the panel to decide on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex in 1464/5. He married Margaret Kerr of Kersheugh and was succeeded by his son Sir Andrew. Other children include Ralph of Primside, Thomas (Abbot of Kelso, d.1528), George and William. Thomas (15th/16th C.) witness in 1501 to a notorial instrument relating to Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst’s lands of Feu-rule in the Barony of Cavers. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Thomases. Thomas of Lintalee (15th/16th C.) first man named on the panel of ‘retour’ for Sir Walter Scott inheriting the barony of Bransholme in 1517. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Thomases. Sir Thomas of Oxnam and Ferniehirst (d.1585) eldest son of Sir John and Catherine Ker of Cessford. He could be the ‘Thomas Karr son to John Kerr’ who in 1541 was offered on behalf of Sir Andrew of Ferniehirst (Warden of the Middle Marches) as a pledge for the good behaviour of Teviotdale. In 1561/2 he (and his father Sir John) had a bond with several Elliots to enter a Routledge as a prisoner at Ferniehirst. He succeeded on the death of his father in 1562. Also in 1562 he was among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kerrs and the Scotts. Later in 1562 he was ordered to appear before the Privy Council and to remain in ward, along with his brothers Andrew and William. He was a strong supporter of Queen Mary, accompanying her to Dumfries in 1565, and helping her escape from Lochleven in 1568. In 1564 he was listed as the ‘Lard of Pharnyhiro’ among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. He was involved in a feud with the Homes about 1564. Also in 1564 he was warded in Edinburgh Castle, at least partly for non-payment of teinds to the Commendator of Jedburgh; it is also reported that he and his brothers Andrew and William forcibly took the teind sheaves of Bedrule and Innerleithen. In 1564/5 he was specifically listed as an exclusion in the bond to end the feud with the Scotts, while his brothers Andrew, William and John were listed as part of the bond. In 1565 he was explicitly instructed (along with John Rutherford of Hunthill) to enter one of his servants at the next truce day, to answer accusations from Englishmen; later this was increased to 2 servants to relieve the Warden, with he himself being warded in Edinburgh Castle to redress the charges against his servants, and then was ordered to pay the expenses to Ker of Cessford. He signed the ‘Band of Teviotdale’ in 1565. Also in 1565 he is listed among men complained about by the Warden of the Middle Marches for not presenting accused men from their lands. Additionally he was a surety for Robert Kerr of Woodhead in 1565 and was among those summoned before the Privy Council to try to resolve the feud between Sir Nicholas Rutherford of Hundalee and the people of Jedburgh. In 1566 he was ordered not to molest his mother, Dame Katherine Ker, or her other children and servants. He was among men re-ordered to appear before the Privy Council in 1567 regarding order in the Middle Marches. He was also ordered to present a number of Turnbulls and others to answer charges of raiding into England. In 1568/9 he is still explicitly excluded from the bond signed between the Kers and Scotts. In 1569 he also signed the bond to suppress thieves on the Border. In 1569 he and some others were sureties for George Rutherford in the Grange and John Turnbull in Abbotrule. In 1570, along with Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, he raided into England, with Sussex and Hunsdon retaliating by demolishing Ferniehirst the same year. He was Baron of Feu-Rule, as well as holding other local titles; however, he appears to have forfeited these temporarily. His mother brought a decree of removal against him in about 1571. He was accused of treasonous acts in 1571 (and confirmed in 1574), probably meaning that he had not given up Catholic sympathies. In 1571/2 he fled from Edinburgh, meeting his supporters under Alexander Trotter and was reset at Ancrum Woodhead by Robert Kerr. He later fled to France, but returned several years later and was rehabilitated in 1581. In 1581 he gained the estates, baronies and lordships given up by Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. This included the Barony of Feu-Rule and lands of Hallrule and others. In 1581 he also had a ‘benefit of pacification’ from the King, for crimes committed by him and his followers in the period 1567–74. There was a dispute between him and John Turnbull, Baron of Bedrule, as well as the parishioners of Bedrule, over the rights of the benefice, the teinds etc.; this must have been at least somewhat related to the Reformation and the ouster of the Catholic priests. He was also Provost of Jedburgh. He may have been temporarily Keeper of Hermitage in 1563 when some Elliots are recorded in a bond to enter Jock Elliot with him. He was Warden of the Middle Marches, appointed sometime in the 1570s and perhaps again in the last couple of years of his life. He certainly served as Warden of the Middle Marches and Keeper of Liddesdale Castle by 1583. In 1585 a fray took place following a meeting of the March Wardens, in which Sir Francis Russell was killed (the English first saying it was an accident, but later accusing him of deliberately plotting the murder). As a result he was committed to ward in Aberdeen, where he died. He married Janet, daughter of Sir William Kirkaldy of Grange and was succeeded by his son Sir Andrew, 1st Lord Jedburgh. Other children by his first marriage were: Julian (or Janet), who married Sir Patrick Home of Polwarth, and Thomas Hamilton, 1st Earl of Haddington; Margaret, who married Robert, Baron Melville; Mary, who married James, son of William Douglas, 6th Lord Morton; and William, who married Elizabeth Lyon and was also called Kirkaldy of Grange. Portraits exist of him and his wife. In 1569 he secondly married Janet, daughter of Sir William Scott of Kirkurd, and sister of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch; this was part of the 1564/5 bond between the Kers and the Scotts, and he was still owed £1000 of dowry money according to the 1574 testament of Sir Walter Scott. In 1573/4 his wife was granted lands in Oxnam and Ashiesteel (while he was in exile), but there were complaints that Dame Catherine Ker, Lady Ferniehirst (his mother) and Andrew Kerr (his brother) were harassing her farms. Their children included: Sir James of Crailing; Thomas of Oxnam; Ann, who married John Elphinstone, 2nd Lord Balmerinoch; and Robert, 1st (and last) Earl of Somerset, who took the surname ‘Carr’. In 1590 his son and wife were charged with not repaying a debt that he had incurred while in England. Sir Thomas of Redden (16th/17th C.) 3rd son of William of Ancrum and Woodhead. He may be the Thomas ‘Ker of Ancrum’ whose lands in the Lordship of Liddesdale are recorded in 1632. He spent much time abroad in the army and after his return was knighted in 1633. In 1643 he appears in the county valuation records for Sprouston Parish as being ‘of Gateside, his lands in Reddin’. He married Jean, daughter of James Kerr of Chatto. Their children were: John (d.1645); James of Redden; Andrew of Chatto; Jean, who married Sir John Kerr of Lochtour and secondly Sir John Wauchope of Nithsdale; Katherine; Christian; and Vair (b.1636). He secondly married Mary Douglas and they had daughters Margaret, Mary and Anne. He also had an illegitimate son, George, with Agnes Wilson. Thomas (17th C.) recorded in 1632 as being ‘of Ancrum’ when his extensive lands in Liddesdale were listed in a Privy Council document. It is unclear who he was, since Sir Robert was Laird of Ancrum at that time (and would become 1st Earl), but he may have been the same as Thomas of Redden, brother of Sir Robert. His Liddesdale lands included Catlee, Dinlees, Over and...

Nether Tinnisburn, ‘Civishill’, Staneygill, Foulwood, ‘Wilwigholms steid’, ‘Megie Twedmes’, Whisgills, Raltonholm, Copshawholm, Gillfoot, Christie’s Hill, Pollock and Kirkhill. He was also part of a bond, recorded in 1637. Thomas William (1678–1825) 2nd son of Patrick, the 6th Laird of Abbotrule and brother to Charles, the 7th Laird. He was born in Southdean and entered military service as a Lieutenant in the 73rd Highlanders (Black Watch), eventually becoming a Major General. He may have served as Governor General of Ceylon and it is said that Raeburn painted his portrait. He married Sarah Anne, daughter of William Ker of Meadow House in Berwickshire, and she died in 1812, aged just 26. They had 5 children: Loraine McDowall, who was a Lieutenant in the 65th Native Infantry and later a merchant in Glasgow, and whose son William Alexander succeeded; Margaret Amelia, who married John, son of Francis Brodie; Alexander Boyd, whose grandson Alexander Nairne succeeded; Charles, who died young; and Sarah Anne, who married Alexander Maclean, minister of Carnwarth. The 3 oldest children were shown in a painting along with their mother. He is buried at Cannongate Cemetery, Edinburgh. Thomas (c.1810–beff. 1851) blacksmith on the Cross Wynd. He married Mary Scott in 1837; she was probably daughter of millwright Gideon Scott, who lived next door at 8 Cross Wynd. The 1841 census records him at No. 6, living with his wife Mary and children Margaret and Euphemia. There were further children, Mary and Andrew, but he died before 1851, when his wife was a widow running a boarding house at the same Cross Wynd address. His daughter Mary married Rev. Robert Fordyce, minister at West Port. William (16th C.) brother of Andrew of Ferniehirst. In 1529/30 he had a charter for the lands of Woodhead in the Lordship of Over An- crum. He could be the ‘Willelmo Ker’ who witnessed the ‘precept’ by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme infefting his son David in his lands in 1528. He may be the William who was on the panel of retour for Gordon of Stichill in 1525. It is possible that he was the William who had 101 sheep of his stolen by the Olivers of Strange according to a case at the 1502 Justice-aire held in Jedburgh; the Olivers had remission for these thefts, their surety being Andrew of Ferniehirst. William (d.c.1563) a younger son of John of Ferniehirst. He was presented to the Kirk of Bedrule in 1557. In 1562 he was recorded as sometime Parson of Bedrule (and spelled ‘Ker’). Also in 1562 he is probably the William, along with his brother Thomas of Ferniehirst, and their other brother Andrew, who were ordered to remain in ward, or be fined £1000; this was presumably related to accusations against his brother Thomas. In 1563 he is recorded along with Sir Thomas of Ferniehirst and Sir John Allan in a ‘crown pre- cept’ brought by Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and the parishioners of Bedrule, charging them to produce their writs proving that they are entitled to the benefices of the parish. This suggests some dispute over who was the minister in this time of the Reformation. Probably William held much of the benefice (like in pre-Reformation times), while John Allan was the actual minister. In 1564 he was accused along with his brothers Thomas of Ferniehirst and Andrew, were accused of forcibly taking the teind sheaves of Bedrule and Innerleithen parishes. William of Ancrum and Woodhead (d.1590) son of Robert. In 1572 he was convicted for the murder of 2 Burgesses of Jedburgh and in 1574 was obliged to appear before the Privy Council. In about 1578 he was excluded from a bond by the Kers and Ruther- fords, since he had been declared a fugitive for the murder of John Rutherford and others in Jedburgh. He is probably the Kerr of Ancrum listed in Monipennie’s c.1594 compilation of Border lairs. He married Margaret, daughter of Alexander (or Archibald) Dundas of Fingask, who was widow of Sir David Home of Fishwick. Their children were: Sir Robert, 1st Earl of Ancrum; Sir Thomas of Redden; Isabel; William of Over- ton (or Linton) and Sunlaws, Groom of the Bed- chamber to James VI and Charles I; Andrew, who probably died abroad, unmarried; and George, probably Canon of Glasgow. He was killed by Robert Ker (younger of Cessford), who was later 1st Earl of Roxburgh. The feud between the 2 families was not resolved until letters and payments made in 1606. William (16th/17th C.) recorded ‘in Newton’ in 1612 among men accused of charging too much interest on loans. This was probably the Newton in Bedrule Parish, and he was surely related to the other Kerrs of Newton. It is recorded that the appeared to answer the accusation and hence probably paid a fine and was released. William of Overton and Sunlaws (16th/17th C.) 2nd son of William of Ancrum. He was sued for the murder of Robert Turnbull of Bewlie and others in Jedburgh in 1601, but was never convicted. In 1625 he had a charter of the lands of Overton, and was styled ‘of Lin- ton’ in a confirming charter of 1629. In 1630 he was served heir to his brother George, Canon of Glasgow. He served as Groom of the Bedchamber to both James VI and Charles I. He married Isabel, daughter of John Kerr of Litteldean. Their children included: William, who married Anne, daughter of Philip, Lord Wharton; Henry; Letitia, who married Alexander Popham of Littelcote; and Anne, who first married a younger brother of her sister Letitia’s husband, and secondly married Philip Lord Wharton, father of her brother William’s wife! He was still alive in 1640. William (16th/17th C.) Sheriff-Clerk Depute of Roxburghshire, recorded in 1620 when he was witness to a bond for Thomas Turnbull in Spittal-on-Rule. He may be the ‘William Ker’ who signed the Covenant in Hawick in 1638. William of Newton (17th C.) son of Robert, from whom he was served ‘heir special’ (perhaps meaning he was underage) in 1639. This was composed of Newton, including the newly built mill, and ‘lie Smiddielands’. He was confirmed in the lands of Newton (in Bedrule Parish) in 1642/3. He is probably the ‘W. Kerr of Newton’ who signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. In 1643, 1644, 1646, 1648 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. In 1646–47 and 1656–58 he was one of the Roxburghshire representatives in Parliament. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. He was Lieut.-Col. of the regiment of horse raised in Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. In 1654 he was one of the local men who signed an attestation about the ‘carriage and deportment of the deceased Francis Earl of Buccleuch’; this was part of efforts to have the fines reduced on the Buccleuch estate that had been imposed by Cromwell for the Earl supporting King Charles. In 1662, after the Restoration, he was fined. He was probably the Laird of Newton who paid the Land tax on £853 in 1663 and 1678. He married Agnes, daughter and co-heir of John Abernethy, Bishop of Caithness. He may also have married Janet, daughter of Sir William Murray of Dunearne. He had 3 daughters, Euphemia (who may have been 2nd wife of William Kerr of Chertytrees), Agnes and Margaret (who married Andrew Kerr of ‘Sowcoatt’, possibly Chatto). Another daughter may have been Christian, who married William Turnbull of Sharplaw. He could be the William of Newton whose will is recorded in 1691 (unless that was the next generation). Sir William (1605–75) eldest son of Sir Robert, Earl of Ancrum by his 1st wife Elizabeth Murray. His 1631 marriage to Anne Kerr (daughter and heiress of Robert, 2nd Earl of Lothian), who was countess of Lothian in her own right, made him 3rd Earl of Ancrum. A series of letters between him and his father still exists. He married Anne Kerr, who was Countess of Lothian in her own right, and was elevated to the peerage as the 3rd (or 1st) Earl of Lothian. His marriage reunited the Ferniehirst and Cessford branches of the family. In 1631 he was one of the men accused by the minister of Longnewton of taking his teinds. He raised the Teviotdale Regiment (also known as ‘Lothian’s Regiment’) in 1639 as part of the Covenanters force. The Regiment crossed the Tweed with Montrose in 1640 and when Newcastle was captured Lothian was made Governor, with a garrison of 2,000 men. He resigned after the Battle of Fyvie, and the Regiment was disbanded in 1641, but reformed the next year. He had a confirmation of the Lordship and Barony of Jedburgh in 1641. In 1643 he was appointed as one of the Colonels of Foot for Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. Also in 1643 he was recorded as holder of the teinds for much of Jedburgh and Linton Parishes, as well as the lands of Over Ancrum, Woodhead, Braidlaw, Palacehill and Belses, the teinds of over Ancrum and lands in Longnewton Parish. In 1646 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. He acquired Ferniehirst and Riccalton in 1646 (from the creditors of Andrew, Lord Jedburgh), but in 1669 settled them on Robert Kerr of Crailing (later Lord Jedburgh). He became Scottish Secretary of State in 1649, and was one of the Commissioners negotiating with Charles II in 1650. He lived much of his life at Newbattle Abbey, but also held lands at Fernieeles and Templehall (part of Harwood on Rule), which he is recorded giving over for a loan from Walter Riddell in 1649 and 1652, and then transferring to Mark ‘Carre’ (presumably a relative) in 1658. He was also the 1st Kerr of Abbotsrule, acquiring the land perhaps around 1642, and gained the Barony of Feu-Rule in 1649, later selling it to Elliott of Stobs. Like many others, he was fined in 1662. He is recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663 in the parishes of Ancrum and Crailing, Hobkirk, Jedburgh, Longnewton and Oxnam. His children were: Robert, 1st Marquess of Lothian; Sir William of Halden; Charles of Abbotrule; John; Anne; Elizabeth; Mary; Margaret; Vere; Henrietta; Lilias, who probably married Thomas Lewin of Amble; and at least 4 other children who died young. A portrait exists of him. William of Chatto and Sunlaws (1653–1721) only son of Andrew. Although apparently expected not to survive to succeed, he lived to a reasonable age. He became entangled in litigation and sold Ormiston to William Elliot of Wells. He paid the land tax in Kelso and Sprouston Parishes in 1678. In 1673 he married Christian, eldest daughter of Sir William Scott of Harden. They had 7 children: William (d.1705); John, who married Margaret, niece of Sir William Kerr of Greenhead, and was disinherited; Elizabeth (b.1683); Christian, who succeeded; Robert (b.1687), who died after being transported to Maryland; Margaret (b.1689); and Joan (b.1690). He secondly married Grizel Porteous. William of Newton (17th/18th C.) probably related to the earlier William of Newton. He is recorded related to Bedrule teinds in 1692. He was probably the Laird in 1694 when he paid tax for 6 hearths at ‘the place of Neuton’ in Bedrule Parish, and whose several tenants are also listed. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1696. Probably the same William sold Newton (although perhaps not permanently) to the Marquess of Lothian in 1707. Along with his wife, he was probably the ‘Newton Ker and his Ladie’ who gifted communion cups to Bedrule Kirk in 1716. William (1661–1722) 2nd Marquess of Lothian, eldest son of Robert. He inherited the title of Lord Jedburgh in 1692, and thus sat in the Scottish Parliament. He was Colonel of the 7th Regiment of Dragoons in 1696. He succeeded his father in 1703. He had command of the 3rd Regiment of Foot in 1707, but was removed in 1713 for political reasons. He married his cousin Jane, daughter of Archibald Campbell, Earl of Argyll. He was succeeded by his son William. He was buried in Westminster Abbey. William ‘Bitterbeard’ (1667–1747) 3rd Laird of Abbotrule, son of Charles, to whom he was served heir in 1680, when still a minor. His nickname derived from his long unkempt beard. In 1689 he was appointed as a Captain in the local Militia to guard against ‘the papists’. In 1690 and 1704 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire, and in 1700 was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament. In 1700 he witnessed a baptism for John Scott of Gorrenberry. He is recorded in 1707 as owner of land in Abbotrule Parish (including Braidhaugh), valued at £700 6s 8d. It is said that he was a Jacobite supporter in the 1715 rebellion, fighting in the army of the ‘Old Pretender’, and taking several Rulewater men along with him. He appears to have been a prisoner in Edinburgh Tolbooth in 1716. He was involved (along with James, Lord Cranston) with the division of Templehall Common in 1734. He married Margaret, eldest daughter of Alexander Nisbet of Craigtinny (an oil painting of her exists) and they had 2 children: William, who succeeded; and Cecily, who married Gilbert Elliott of Stonedge. He later married Mary Henry, daughter of the Piper of Banff, and had a further 3 children: Mary, who married John Rutherford of Knowesouth in 1739, with an annulment in Edinburgh in 1750; Charles, who died young; and Charlotte, who married Dr. Thomas Elliott of Edinburgh. His second wife is supposed to have exerted strong influence on him, including convincing him to remove his beard. It is said that a portrait of him was painted, but its whereabouts are now unknown. He executed a deed of entail in 1737, where it is stated that his heirs would bear the name and arms of Kerr of Abbotrule. Also in 1737 he granted a provision of 60,000 merks for his daughters. The year of his death is said by Tancred to have been 1751, which is not consistent with an age of 81. In 1753 his wife was the ‘Lady Abbotrule’ who paid the window tax. William (1690–1767) 3rd Marquess of Lothian, son of William. He was Lord Jedburgh before succeeding his father in 1722. He served many times as a Representative Peer. He was Lord High Commissioner of the General Assembly 1732–38. He lived at Monteviot, where he paid the window tax in 1748. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir Thomas Nicolson of Kemnay, and secondly married his cousin, Janet, daughter of Lord Charles Kerr of Cramond. His children were: William, who succeeded; Robert, who died at the Battle of Culloden; and a daughter. William (c.1695–1752) 4th Laird of Abbotrule, son of William. His year of birth is unknown, and he only became Laird 5 years before his death. He paid the window tax at Abbotrule in 1748. In 1751 he sold off part of the family estates (including Mackside, Broadhaugh, Templehall, Hartshaugh Mill, Kirknowe and Blackleughmouth) by roup within John’s Coffee House in Edinburgh. He married Mary Brown of Cumberland and they had 7 children: Margaret, who died unmarried; Charles, who succeeded; Ann, who married Thomas Shortreed of Easter Essenside; Alexander; Patrick, who later succeeded his brother Charles; William, who died unmarried; and Cecily. William Henry (1713–1775) 4th Marquess of Lothian, son of William. He was the first to use the title Earl of Ancrum before succeeding. He was Captain in the 1st Regiment of Foot, then Lieut.-Col. of the 11th Dragoons, being wounded at Fontenoys in 1745 and seeing his brother Robert fall at Culloden in 1746. He was a Representative Peer in Parliament. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Caroline, only daughter of Robert D’Arcy, Earl of Holderness, great-granddaughter of Frederick, Duke of Schomberg (who was shot at the Battle of the Boyne by his own regiment). His children were: William John, who succeeded; Louisa Kerr, who married Lord George Lennox; and Wilhelmina Frances. William (18th C.) merchant of Hawick. In 1763 he was one of the men appointed by the Council to arrange for the collection of money to pay for the new bell for St. Mary’s. He may be the William whose garden wall formed part of the boundary of the Little Haugh in 1767. William of Gateshaw (1707–94) descendant of George of Linton, and Sir Walter of Cessford. His father was Andrew, merchant in Kelso and his mother was Marie Cranston. He became Town Clerk of Kelso and Chamberlain to John, Duke of Roxburghe. He was charged for having a male servant in 1778 and 1779. He was recorded as active among the freeholders of Roxburghshire in a meeting of 1780, acting on behalf of Walter of Littledean. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788. At that time he was also listed as owner of lands in Morebattle Parish. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Gilbert Elliott of Stonedge in 1739. Their children were: Andrew, who died young; Gilbert, who succeeded to Gateshaw; John, died young; Sir Charles, who succeeded his brother Gilbert; William, W.S. in Edinburgh; Robert, Lieut.-Col. in the East India Company; John, died young; Cecily, died young; Mary, died unmarried; Elizabeth, married Ellis Martin; and Essex, married Capt. John Turner. William (1779–1815) born in Hawick, son of John and Janet Miller. He grew up at the time that Dickson & Turnbull was established in Hawick as a prominent plant nursery, and it seems reasonable to imagine that this had an effect on his career choice. He became a gardener at Kew and a hunter of plants. He may have been the first professional full-time plant collector in the West. At Kew he was instructed by Sir Joseph Banks and was sent to China in 1804. There he discovered many species, including Euonymus japonicus, Lilium lancifolium, Pieris japonica, Nandina domestica, Begonia grandis and Rosa banksiae. He additionally collected plants in Java and the Philippines. He sent back to Kew Gardens some 238 plants that were new to European science, including the shrub named after him, Kerria japonica. In 1812 he was sent to Colombo in Ceylon (now Sri Lanka) to oversee the gardens at King’s House and on Slave Island. He died there 2 years later, apparently as a result of opium addiction. Borders Distillery named a gin after him. William John (1737–1815) 5th Marquess of Lothian, son of William Henry. He was Colonel of the 1st Regiment of Life Guards and later Colonel of the 11th Dragoons. He was taxed for having male servants in the 1770s. In 1788 his lands included Ferniehirst and Over Crailing in Jedburgh Parish and parts of several other parishes in Roxburghshire, namely Ancrum, Crailing, Hownam and Oxnam. He married Elizabeth, only daughter of Chichester Fortescue of Dromiskin and cousin of the Duke of Wellington. His children were: Mary, who married Gen. Frederick St. John; William, who succeeded; Elizabeth, who married John Evelyn Pierrepont Dormer; Charles Beauchamp, who married Elizabeth Crump; Vice.-Adm. Mark Robert, who married Charlotte MacDonnell, Countess of Antrim; and Maj.-Gen. Robert, who married Mary Gilbert. William John (1763–1824) 6th Marquess of Lothian, son of William John, 5th Marquess. He was founder of the Jedforest Club in 1810 (when still Earl of Ancrum) and was Lord-Lieutenant for Midlothian and Roxburghshire. He firstly married Harriet Hobart-Hampden, daughter of the Earl of Buckinghamshire and secondly married Harriet Scott, daughter of Henry, 3rd Duke of Buccleuch. He was succeeded by his son John William Robert. He died when visiting the Duke of Buccleuch in Richmond on the Thames. William Schomberg Robert (1832–70) 8th Marquess of Lothian. He was eldest son of John, the 7th Marquess. He was said to be a promising scholar at Oxford, but died while still raptively young. He married Lady Constance Harriet Ma- honesa Chetwynd-Talbot, his cousin. He was suc- ceeded by his brother Schomberg Henry. William Alexander (1831–1919) eldest son of Lor- raina MacDowall. He served in the Army in India, being awarded the Victoria Cross for action during the 1857 mutiny. However, he apparently had to leave the military after striking his supe- rior officer. He married Harriet Atty from Rugby. He published some books on riding and cavalry tactics. He became the 9th Laird of Abbotrule on the death of his cousin in 1864, although the family no longer owned any land locally. Hav- ing no children, he was succeeded by his nephew Alexander Nairne (see also Ker).
Kerrfield Burn

Kerrfield Burn (ker-field-burn) n. stream on the farm of Newton in Bedrule Parish. It is listed in a description of the lands of the farm in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. ‘New Kerrfield Houses’ were described as being to the west of there.

kerrie-haundit (ke-ree-hawn-dee’, -di’) adj., arch. left-handed (said to relate to the left-handed Kerrs of Ferniehirst, and their purpose-built spiral staircases; also ker-haundit).

Kerriot Rig (ke-ree-i’-rig) n. place name in the headwaters of the Ewes valley, marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Kerriot rigg’. It is probably the same as Carewudrig.

Kerr Pool (ker-pool) n. name for a pool in the Liddel Water in the southern part of Roxburghshire, south of Kershopefoot.

the Kerrs (thir-kerz) n. important local family, being in the Borders since the 12th century, obtaining Jedforest in 1457 and building the original Ferniehirst Castle around 1470. Kers from the counties of Stirling, Edinburgh, Peebles and Ayr signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. The Borders family had two main branches, the Kerrs of Ferniehirst and the Kers of Cessford, who intermarried and occasionally feuded. The spelling often (although not always) distinguished the 2 branches; additionally the Cavers Carre family preferentially used the ‘Carre’ spelling. They were Wardens of the Middle March for generations, dominating the history of the area around Kelso and Jedburgh. They were also associated with rieving, and received their motto ‘Sero Sed Serio’ (Late but in earnest) at Ancrum Moor.

Kerryrig Park (ke-ree-rig-pawrk) n. former name for lands that were part of Newton in Bedrule Parish, according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811.

Kersel (ker-sul) n. Adam (17th C.) resident of Hawick. His daughter Bessie was born in 1692. Adam (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1717 he married Isobell (or Helen) Jackson. Their children were born in Hawick, including: John (b.1718), also a shoemaker; Marion (b.1720); Janet (b.1723); Agnes (b.1725); Bessie (b.1727); Agnes (b.1729); and Adam (b.1731). The witnesses in 1720 were Thomas Tinlin and William Sinton. He may be the Adam from whom 3s. 2d. was received by the Town Treasurer in 1755 ‘for Rowly-powly loft’; this was presumably for his right to sit there. Adam (18th C.) gardener at Abbotrule and Weens. In 1767 he is recorded as a gardener at Abbotrule. He was listed as ‘Adam Carsal’ gardener at Weens in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for William Oliver of Dinalbyre. His name is recorded as ‘Kerswall’ ‘Carswell’ and variants at Weens in the period 1785–88. In 1757 he married Betty, daughter of George Stevenson. He is probably the Adam whose children, baptised in Southdean Parish, included: Jean (b.1761), possibly the Jean who married Adam Goodfellow in Wilton in 1788; Agnes (b.1764); John (b.1767), who married Ann Tinlin; and Betty (b.1769). He is probably also the Adam whose children, baptised in Hobkirk Parish, included: George (b.1772); Margaret (b.1774); Adam (b.1776); and James (b.1780). Adam (1745–1811) shoemaker in Hawick, son of John, and grandson of shoemaker Adam. He married Ann Scott in 1769. Their children were: Ann (b.1770); John (b.1772); Adam; William (1775–76); and Agnes (1778–79). It was probably his (later) daughter Agnes who is recorded dying in 1810. Adam (18th/19th C.) wright of Hawick Parish. He married Jean Turnbull in 1799. Their children included: an unnamed child, who died in Hawick in 1802; Helen (1803–82), who married James Hardie; Elizabeth (1806–51), who married George Fiddes; Jean, who died in 1812; Jane (1816–56), married Walter Rae; Joan (c.1818–92), married Walter Graham; and another unnamed child died in 1820. Helen may be the female servant, along with her sister Joan, living with John Hislop’s family at about 15 High Street in 1841; she was in Jedburgh by 1851. He was listed as a joiner on death certificates. Adam (1772/3–1853) resident of Kirkton Parish. In 1805 he married Janet (1781–1851), daughter of James Hutton and Janet Black from Hawick. Their children included: James (c.1818–64); and Adam (c.1820–59). There were surely more children, but no baptismal records have been found, perhaps because they were members of a secession church. The family emigrated to the Galt area of Ontario in 1831, where he was a farmer and member of the First United Presbyterian Church in Galt. They are buried at Cedar Creek Cemetery, North Dumfries, Waterloo County. Adam (1796–1862) shoemaker on the Kirk Wynd, son of John and Anne Tinlin. In 1822 he married Margaret Dryden (1789–1861) from Galashiels. They probably had 9 children: John (b.1820), who died in infancy; an unnamed daughter (d.1821); Ann (1822–77), who married Andrew Wilson; Elizabeth (‘Betty’, c.1824–1900), who married Robert Waldie; Margaret (c.1826–96); Agnes (c.1828–1912), who married John Laidlaw; John (c.1830–92); Janet (c.1832–1904) married Thomas McCabe; Charlotte (1835–1925), married John Scott; and Esther (1837–83), married George Davidson in 1855 and emigrated to Galt, Ontario, secondly marrying Andrew Hewie (originally from Berwickshire) in 1872. His unnamed daughter died in Hawick in 1840. In 1841, 1851 and 1861 they were living on the Kirk Wynd. In 1861 he is described as ‘Shoemaker now Pauper’ and he died at 12 Kirk Wynd. Note that his name is sometimes transcribed ‘Harswell’. Adam (c.1820–59) probably son of Adam and brother of James. He most likely travelled to Canada with his family in 1831, settling in the Kitchener-Walterloo area of Ontario, where he was a farmer. He is buried in Cedar Creek Cemetery along with his family members. Adam (b.c.1851) son of John and Elizabeth Tait. He was probably born in Hawick. He married Isabella Waugh and their daughter Jean married M. Gordon from Hawick. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children, baptised there, include an unnamed son (b.1768), Agnes (b.1770), Adam (b.1773) and Betty (b.1766). James (c.1818–64) said to have been born in Hawick, probably of Adam and Janet Hutton. He emigrated to Canada along with his father and family and married Mary Jane Cranston, from Yetholm. Their children were Adam, Robert, James, Adam Cranston, Alexander, Andrew, Margaret and Jessie. He lived in North Dumfries Township near Waterloo in Ontario. John (17th C.) resident of Minto Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. He is probably related to the Robert recorded in Minto a decade later. John (17th C.) resident at Wester Heap according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. His son John was born in 1693. It is possible that he was also father of shoemaker Adam (whose first-born son was called John). John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Alton in 1724, Borthaugh in 1727 and Drinkstone in 1729. In 1738 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Riddell, who was living at Alton. He married Agnes Oliver in Wilton in 1718; she was also from Wilton. Their children baptised in Wilton included: Margaret (b.1719); Jean (b.1721); Marion (b.1724); Adam (b.1727); Andrew (b.1729); and Marion (again, b.1732). Note that his surname is listed as ‘Carsel’ and ‘Carsell’. The witnesses in 1724 and 1727 were John and Walter Scott and in 1729 were William Scott and James Cavers. He may be related to the John recorded at Wester Heap in 1694. John (1718–88) son of Hawick shoemaker Adam. In 1745 he married Agnes Leithead in Hawick Parish. Their children included Adam (b.1746), who was also a shoemaker. John (b.1767) born in Southdean Parish, son of Adam. He was a shoemaker journeyman in Hawick. He married Ann (b.1761), daughter of Robert Tinlin (‘Rob the Naig’). Their children included: Adam (1796–1862), the Hawick shoemaker; Ann (1805–73), who married Charles Hunter; Margaret (1809–70), who married Thomas Newall and George Didsbury; and John (b.c.1810), who emigrated to Australia. Agnes (b.c.1803) and Janet (b.c.1807) were probably also his children, and died young. The witnesses in 1796 (when his name is incorrectly given as ‘Adam’) were shoemaker Walter Scott and miller John Oliver. He may be the John whose daughter Margaret died in Hawick in 1806 and the deceased shoemaker John whose daughter Janet died in 1811. In 1841 his wife, brother-in-law John and son John were living on the Fore Raw (suggesting he was already deceased). John (b.1772) son of Adam and Ann Scott, he was baptised in Hawick Parish. Family tradition says that they lived at the Mid Raw. He was probably the progenitor of ‘Karsells’ in the United States, Canada and Australia, with his children likely being: Robert (b.1800), who emigrated to the U.S. in 1832; Nancy, who married Charles Hunter and emigrated to the U.S. in 1852; Adam (b.1803), who emigrated to Canada; and John (b.c.1810), who emigrated to Australia in 1852. None of these baptisms are in the Parish records. John (c.1810–90) son of John and Ann Tinlin, he was born in Hawick. In 1841 he was a ‘Woollen Stocking Maker Journeyman’ living on the Fore Raw with his mother and uncle John.
Tinlin; his age was given there as 26, but that was probably an underestimate. In 1851 he was a frame-worker, living next door to shoemaker Adam’s family on the Kirk Wynd. In about 1847 he married Agnes (or perhaps Ann) Henderson and the family emigrated to Australia in 1852. Their children included Robert (b.1849–97), Margaret (1851/2–1935, also known as Agnes), John, Ann and James. The first 2 children were born in Hawick. He died at Moonambel, Victoria. John (b.1829/30–92) son of Adam and Margaret Dryden. He was a woollen spinner in Hawick. In 1851 he was living at 4 Weensland and in 1861 at 3 Kirkwynd. In 1848 he married Elizabeth Tait, who was from Kelso and died in 1892. Their children were: Elizabeth (c.1849–1911), who married Edward Wilson; Adam (c.1851–92), who married Isabella Waugh; Margaret (c.1853–1914), who died unmarried; William (b.1855) and William (again, b.1856), who both died in infancy; John (1858–1922), who emigrated to New Zealand; Robert (1860–1930), who married twice, but had no children; and two more Williams (b.1863 and b.1865), who also died in infancy. John (b.1858) son of John and Elizabeth Tait, he was born in Hawick. In 1881 he emigrated to New Zealand. His children were John Edward, Adam (‘Jim’), Robert (‘Roy’) Tait, Herbert, Kenneth Henry, Doris Guest, Norman, Jean Myrtle and Thelma Bettsworth. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children include: Jean, who married James, son of John Scott in 1726; Margaret (b.1704); and William (b.1706). He is probably related to the John recorded in Minto a decade earlier. Jean, who married James Scott in Minto in 1733, may have been his daughter, as well as Margaret, who married Thomas Thomson in Minto in 1736. Robert (1800–92) probably son of John, he was born in Hawick. He was a stocking weaver in Hawick and then in Edinburgh. He spent 12 years in the Navy, where he lost his sight in an accident. In 1832 he emigrated to Ohio, U.S.A. and later lived in Bloomington Indiana. He married Margaret Anderson and secondly Eleanor W. Finney. He lived to the age of 92. His descendants changed their surname to ‘Karsell’. Robert (19th/20th C.) local manufacturer. In about 1903 he went into partnership with Walter Scott Barrie to form Barrie & Kersel at Annfield Mills, Teviot Crescent (formerly written ‘Carsel’, ‘Carsell’, ‘Carswell’, ‘Karsell’, ‘Kersal’, ‘Kersall’, ‘Karswell’, ‘Kersell’, ‘Karsill’, ‘Kersel’, ‘Kersell’, ‘Kerswell’ and variants).

Kersel’s (ker-selz) n. small knitwear firm of the 19th century, probably preceding the founding of the Barrie & Kersel partnership.

Kershaw (ker-shaw) n. James (b.1795/6) weaver from England. He was said to be among those who came to Hawick in about 1836, following John Wilson going to the Rochdale area to learn about weaving flannel. In 1841, 1851 and 1861 he was living on O’Connell Street at the former No. 8. His wife was Betty and their children included John, Thomas, Janet, Samuel, Abraham, James, Mary and Edward.

Kersheugh (kers-hewch) n. farm on the Jed Water, just south of Glendouglas. It was a home of the Kers from early times. This is probably the place written as ‘carshuyoill’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when Andrew Douglas was there. John Douglas was there in 1797 (it is ‘Corysheuch’ on Pont’s c.1654 map, matching the former local pronunciation).

Kershope (ker-shup, -sup) n. area on the Border, immediately south of Newcastle, alongside the Kershope Burn, with Kershope Forest stretching off into Cumbria. The farms of Scotch and English Kershope are across the Border from each other here. Lands here were granted by William de Rossedale to the hospital of St. Peter in York, probably in the mid-12th century, as recorded in a copy made in the early 14th century; the grant describes the boundaries of the lands as ‘the fosse of the Galwegians and the rivulus running from thence into the Lydel, and on the other side of the fosse straight to the high moor, and so by the watershed of the moor as far as the old way of Roxburgh, and as said way falls into Creshope from above the shealings which were Eadulf’s’. This was presumably the same as the lands recorded as ‘Greshoppa’ given to the same priory by William ‘de Russendale’ and his wife, as confirmed by King Malcolm and the ‘Gressehope’ listed in the English part of Liddesdale in 1276. Being right on the Border, the area must have been regularly subject to raids. In 1494/5 Stephen Turbull, brother of the Laird of Whithope, had remission for stealing 80 cows from there along with some Englishmen, and for killing John Murray. It is recorded in 1502 that Adam Scott had 23 sheep and a horse stolen from him there. In 1541 the lands were valued at 10 merks, but said to be then waste ‘except for summering’. In 1551 it was listed as one of the places on the boundaries of Liddesdale where meetings could take place between the Justiciar of Liddesdale and the English Wardens. In 1552 it was written by the English that ‘From the foot o’ Cryssop unto the head of Cryssop three several Watches, and in every Watch four men; whereof one to be at Craighill-foot, and the other two beneath, and the Searchers for every Watch nightly to be appointed by the said John Musgrave’. Gilbert Elliott of Stobs had sheep there (perhaps on the English side) in the early 17th century. In 1633 rental was owed from there by the Earl of Buccleuch to Sir Richard Graham. In about 1645 a flock of 50 sheep, belonging to the Earl of Buccleuch, was stolen from there, but the shepherd followed the thieves to an alehouse at Kirkklinton in Cumberland, where he accosted the thieves, warning them that other men were also following, whereupon they fled, and he recovered the stolen sheep. The Scottish farm is shown on the 1718 survey of properties belonging to the Scotts of Buccleuch. At that time it consisted of 1007 acres, bounded by the Border, Sorbietrees, lands owned by the Laird of Whithaugh and Flicht; the farmhouse appears to be close to the modern Kershope Bridge. The farmer there in 1797 was Henry Hutton – ‘When cauld, sleeky showers stain the braes o’ the Kershope, They slightly skim o’er the sweet lass o’ the shiel’ [DA], ‘Richt ower frae Frostylee To Kersop in Siccan Stour, We garr’d the Southrons Wi’ mony a clash and clure’ [TK] (the name first appears as ‘Greshoppa’ and ‘Creshope’, in the mid-12th century; it is ‘Kershope’ in 1494/5 and 1500, ‘Cresoppe’ in 1584, ‘Kershoipe’ in 1633 and ‘Carshop’ in about 1645; it is ‘Kirsop’ on Gordon’s map of Scotland in Blaeu’s 1654 atlas and ‘Kershope’ is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map; it is ‘Kyrsope fott’ in a letter of 1541 dealing with disputes on the Border. It is recorded as ‘Kyrsope head’ on a map of Liddesdale drawn up by Sir William Cecil, c.1561, when there were Forsters there. It was formerly a station on the Waverley Line, marking the official crossing of the Scotland/England border on the route to Carlisle. Earthworks here are probably the site of the former tower. James Armstrong was farmer in the mid-1700s. Mr. Little was there in 1868 and Richard Armstrong in the latter part of the 19th century. There was also a mill just to the east. The place is mentioned in the ballad ‘Hobie Noble’ – ‘At Kershope foot the tryst was set – Kershope of the lily lee; And there was traitor Sim o’ the Mains, With him a private compaine. Fals, &c’ [T] (it is ‘Kirsopfoothe’ on Sandison’s c.1590 map and is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map; it is ‘Kershopfoot’ in 1821).

Kershopefoot

Kershope foot, hamlet on the south (i.e. English) side of the Kershope burn, just where it meets the Lidded Water. It is ‘Kyrsopp fott’ in a letter of 1541 dealing with disputes on the Border. It is recorded as ‘Kyrsopefoothe’ on a map of Liddesdale drawn up by Sir William Cecil, c.1561, when there were Foresters there. It was formerly a station on the Waverley Line, marking the official crossing of the Scotland/England border on the route to Carlisle. Earthworks here are probably the site of the former tower. James Armstrong was farmer in the mid-1700s. Mr. Little was there in 1868 and Richard Armstrong in the latter part of the 19th century. There was also a mill just to the east. The place is mentioned in the ballad ‘Hobie Noble’ – ‘At Kershope foot the tryst was set – Kershope of the lily lee; And there was traitor Sim o’ the Mains, With him a private compaine. Fals, &c’ [T] (it is ‘Kirsopfoothe’ on Sandison’s c.1590 map and is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map; it is ‘Kershopfoot’ in 1821).
Kershopeheed

Kershopeheed (ker-shup-heed) n. Kershopehead, a farm on the English side of the upper Kershope Burn. It is ‘Kyrsop hed’ in a letter of 1541 dealing with disputes on the Border. It is ‘Kyrsophead’ on a map of Liddesdale drawn up by Sir William Cecil, c.1561. The stream itself is marked ‘Kirsopehead’ on Sandison’s c.1590 map of the Debatable Land. The name also appears to have been used to describe the area around the head of the Kershope Burn, near Flight Moss. This is probably the area referred to as ‘Cahope-head’ in about 1645, when a group of Armstrongs left stolen sheep there, when they went off to look for food, only to find that the English owners had followed them and recovered the booty.

Kersley (kers-lee) n. Leonard (1882–1918) son of William and Hannah Shackell of Winchester. He worked as a printer with Allan Watt’s and also at the Hawick News and he was a Lieutenant in the Salvation Army. He was Lance Corporal in the K.O.S.B. He was killed in WWI. In 1907 he married Margaret Young, daughter of Walter Nisbet; she died in 1970 is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. They had children Victor William (1909–2002) and Margaret (b.1916) and lived at 2 Morrison Place. Prof. Leonard ‘Len’ (1938–) son of Victor William and Helen Haig. He was educated at Hawick High School and gained a Ph.D. from the University of Edinburgh. He is Professor in the Physics department at Aberystwyth, researching in atmospheric physics. In 1970 he married Jill Wallace and they have 2 children.

kickmaleerie (kik-ma-lee-ree) n., arch., poet. a trifle, knick-knack, particularly referring to furniture or decoration – ‘Sae mony kickmaleeries In my house do not suppose’ [JR] (see also whigmaleerie).

Kick-ma-leerie (kik-ma-lee-ree) n. nickname for Christopher Irving. He was said to be a fiddler, which was another meaning of the phrase.

kick the can (kik-thu-kan) n. children’s game in which one person tries to find the others before any of them can kick a can that is placed at base – ‘It niver cost oo owt ti play kick the can. What fun oo hed though’ [We]. ‘...whaeever was first ti kick the can, now if hei ran by mei an kicked the can, A’d ti gain away an hide, an hei was left ti dae’d’ [DaS].

Kidd (kid) n. name of a travelling dentist of the mid-19th century, who set up shop at Bunan the Barbers, 29 High Street, charging sixpence for an extraction. He could be the Thomas D., retired dentist from Lilliesleaf, who is recorded at the Crown Inn in 1871.

Kidd (kid) n. David (d.1835) mason in North Greenholm. He was listed among male heads of households in 1835. Helen see Margaret. James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was recorded at ‘Borthwickshiel Eskdail’ (although it is unclear what this means) in 1780 and at Borthwickshiel in 1785. He is probably the James who married Isabel Forsyth in Roberton in 1779. His children included: Kathrine (b.1780); Margaret (b.1782); and John (b.1785). He may be the James, son of John, born in Roberton in 1747. John (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish.
He was at Parkhill in 1753. He married Margaret Watson in Robertson in 1746. His children included: James (b.1747); Jean (b.1750); Bell (b.1753); and John (b.1756). John (18th/19th C.) paid the cart tax in Lilliesleaf in 1787–91, and was also recorded in the 1797orse Tax Rolls at Lilliesleaf. In the 1788 cart tax roll he was listed as ‘Robert’. He could be the ‘old man from Alewater’ of that name who is recorded dying in Hawick in 1805. Margaret ‘Maggie’ (16th C.) resident of the Saughtree area, also known as ‘Helen’ in a different version. She was said to have fathered several children to Robert (or perhaps William) Elliot of Larriston (or perhaps Redheugh), according to a Liddesdale tradition. According to different version, these offspring included Gilbert Elliott, ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters’ or Gilbert, who was recorded as ‘bastard brother of Robert Elliot of Redheugh’ in 1603. She is said to have lived at a place called ‘Kid’s Walls’, but had to be moved by Elliot when his wife discovered her. She then lived in a small tower he had built at Hartsgarth, the ruins of which were used to build the house there, according to Thomas Elliot of Meikledale. A different version of the story (recounted by Jeffrey) has her being poisoned by the Elliot women and with her dying breath cursing the family to die single and despised. Note that about 200 years later Robert Elliot of Redheugh married a woman of the same name, suggesting that there may be some confounding of stories (also written ‘Kid’).

Kidd’s Linn (kidz-lin) n. waterfall on the Staneshiel Burn on the farm of Dinlabyre in upper Liddesdale. It is also known as ‘Kitty Linn’ or ‘Kitty Lins’. There was formerly a shepherd’s cottage there, where Ninian Hislop was in 1835. James Armstrong was shepherd in 1851. Meg, the wife of an earlier shepherd claimed to have had an encounter with the Devil, pushing him over the precipice near her house. This inspired some lines entitled ‘The Deil’s Dead’, to which Newcastleton poet David Anderson composed the reply ‘The Deil’s no dead’ (it is ‘Kittylins’ in 1835).

Kidd’s Scar (kidz-skawr) n. clifffy region by Craikhope Burn in the upper Borthwick valley. An enclosure and some old ring enclosures are visible near there on ariel photographs.

Kidd’s Waas (kidz-wawz) n. supposed site of the former house of Helen (or Maggie) Kidd, who tradition says was a lover of Robert Elliot of Redheugh, tragically poisoned by his family to end the unsuitable match. In Jeffrey’s history of 1864 he identifies a site on the hillside on the opposite side of the valley from Saughtree schoolhouse. Shepherd Frank Turnbull identified a similar site according to a report of 1890. However, it is unclear whether there are any remains there now.

Kiddy (ki-dee) n. Rev. William (1818/9–49) from Coldstream, he became minister at Lilliesleaf Scession Kirk in 1843. However, he died suddenly of cholera only 6 years later; he visited a family with the first cholea case in Lilliesleaf village and was dead the next morning. He married Grace, daughter of Rev. Robert Cranstoun of Morebattle and left a young family.

Kid Sike (kid-sık) n. small stream that joins the north side of the Teviot near the farm of Comonside.

Kielder (keel-dur) n. village over the Border into England, in the Cheviots, where the Kielder Burn meets the North Tyne. Also the name of the general area, including Kielder Forest Park and Kielder Water. An old barn there was used in the mid-19th century for ‘Tynehead Preaching’ in the summer, with services attended by people from both sides of the Border. Kielder Castle was originally a hunting lodge, built for the Duke of Northumberland in 1775. An old gun found near there is in Hawick Museum – ‘Whar Keelder meets wi’ the Tyne, Masel an’ ma kinsmen three, We tackled the Percies nine – They’ll never mair meddle wi’ me’ [T], ‘The eiry blood-hound howl’d by night, The streamers haunt’d red, Till broken streaks of flaky light O’er Keeldar’s mountains spread’ [JL] (note often misspelled ‘Keilder’).

Kielder Forest (keel-dur-fo-rist) n. Britain’s largest forest, and the largest man-made forest in Europe, covering over 230 square miles in Northumberland. Managed as a commercial forest, mainly planted with Sitka and Norway Spruce, it is also used as a recreational area.

the Kielder Stane (thu-keel-dur-stäñ) n. a boulder marking the Border, since at least the time of the Rievers, about 3 miles east of Deadwater, now in the Kielder Forest. It is said to be unlucky to walk round the stone 3 times counterclockwise.

Kielder Witter (keel-dur-wi-ur) n. largest man-made lake in Europe, in the North Tyne valley of upland Northumberland. It is about 8 miles long, with 27 miles of coastline, covers some 2,684 acres, and is said to contain enough water to submerge all of England to a depth of 8 m. It supplies water to much of Northumbria, and is a recreational centre attracting a huge number of visitors (sometimes called ‘Kielder Lake’ or ‘Kielder Reservoir’).

Kildowan  (kil-dow-in) n. villa occupied by manufacturer William Lyle in the latter part of the 19th century, on Wilton Hill, roughly opposite the Police Station.

Kilford  (kil-furd) n. fortified house marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map, roughly on the opposite side of the valley to Riccarton in Liddesdale. It is near the Kiln Burn, suggesting that the name is connected. However, the precise location of this tower house is not known. This is probably the ‘Kylsfurd’ listed on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale, valued at 24 shillings, and with Henry and William Nixon as tenants. ‘Grey Will of the Kill Fuird’ is recorded in 1581, could also have been a tenant, recorded as ‘Kelloley cum Mylneholme’ and worth 5 merks. In 1541 it is valued at 5 merks and 13s. 4d. In 1573 it was occupied by Martin Elliot of Braidlie and thereafter by witnesses who paid a feu farm rent of 5 merks. In 1586 it is referred to as ‘the tuentie four schilling land’ when half of it was occupied by James Elliot of Blain. It was the former farm possesses by Gavin Elliot in 1632 (it is ‘Kilfurde’ in 1586 and 1632; it is labelled as ‘Kilfurd’, and probably not ‘Kilsurd’ on Blaeu’s map).

Kilgarth  (kil-gawrth) n. fortified house marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map between Todscleuch and Tailleycleuch, on the opposite bank of the Liddel valley from Larriston. There is no evidence of a former house in the area. It is probably the ‘Culigrath’ recorded in the rental roll of 1351, valued at 12 shillings and tenanted by Clement ‘Culigrath’ recorded in the rental roll of 1351, valued at 12 shillings and tenanted by Clement Crozier. It may be the land referred to as Culgatis in a leased of 1586 (possibly the same as Kingarth).

kill  (kil) n., arch. a kiln – ‘A party is fined for away taking six gang of divvats off the common of Hawick, which were casten for the use of the common kill’ [BR1680], ‘The council appoint every one to pay for burning and shealing every kill 4 shillings Scots . . . ’ [BR1729], the framework on which a corn stack is built, a gap left in a stack for airing – ‘The stack kill’ [GW].

the Kill Burn  (thu-kil-burn) n. stream in Southdean Parish, which flows along the right-hand side of the side road to Lethem, joining the Shaw Burn and eventually the Jed Water. An old boundary bank crosses the burn and goes up to the north side of Crink Law.

Kill Croft  (kil-kroft) n. piece of land above the ‘Deidhaugh’, the name being in use in the early 19th century. The land was owned by the Duke of Buccleuch and was once suggested as the site for the new schoolhouse. The area was later referred to as ‘Dr. Graham’s Field’ and eventually became part of Wellogate Cemetery (also ‘Kiln Croft’).

Kill Dry  (kil-dri) n. nickname for some Scotts in the late 18th and early 19th centuries (presumably related to the drying action of a kiln).

kill-ee  (kil-ee) n., arch. a kiln, fireplace of a kiln (also killogie and kiln-logie).

Killhouse  (kil-hoos) n. Killhouse, former farmstead in the southernmost part of Castleton Parish. It was situated on the Muir Burn, near Chapel Knowe. Robert Bryson and his family were there in 1841.

killie  (kil-ee) n., arch. a kind of seesaw made using a plank laid across a wall, with a child sitting on the longer end who is raised up by the other children pressing on the other end, an instance of using a ‘killie’, v. to raise a plank by pushing down on the shorter end, to cause a plank to be raised in this way, to throw up being (said of a horse).

killin house  (ki-lin-hoos) n. an abattoir.

the Killin Hoose Brae  (thu-kilin-, ki-lin-, hoos-brā) n. familiar name for Eskdaill Bank, so-called because of the abattoir that used to stand there. It may have been rebuilt around 1907 to designs by Alexander Inglis.

the Killin Times  (thu-ki-lin-tīm兹) n., pl. popular name for the period of Scottish history roughly 1660–88 (and particularly the early 1680s) when Covenanters were persecuted for their beliefs.

killogie  (ki-lō-gee) n., arch. a kiln, the open space in front of a kiln fireplace – ‘A muckle . . . motor-laarie – a perfect killogie for reek – cam snorkin an dunnerin bye’ [ECS], ‘The mill chimilh smuiks leike a killogie’ [ECS] (also kiln-logie and kill-ee).

Killloley  (ki-lō-lee) n. former farm in Liddesdale, said to be near the site of the Chapel at Dinlabyre (the existence of which is uncertain). It may also have been known as Killloley Chapel. The name could be related to Kelly Cleuch, which is about 1 km to the north. It is listed in the c.1376 rental list in the charters of the Douglases of Morton, recorded as ‘Kelloley cum Mylneholme’ and worth 5 merks. In 1541 it is valued at 5 merks and tenanted by Nixons. John and William Nixon were there in 1544. ‘Dand Niksoun of Kewly’, recorded in 1581, could also have been a tenant, as well as ‘Hobb Nixon of Kellely’ in 1590. In 1667 (and apparently again in 1691) it was inherited by William Elliot of Dinlabyre, having earlier been held by his great-grandfather William of Hartsgarth (it is ‘Kellite’ in 1541, ‘Kellel’ and ‘Kellele’ in 1544, ‘Kelelie’ in 1595, ‘Kellillie’ in 1667, ‘Killary’ in 1691 and ‘Kellyly’ on Pont’s c.1608 map).

Killoley (ki-lö-lee) n. John (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as joint tenant of the lands of Heuchhousehill, along with John Nixon. His name is given as ‘Kellelee’, and is surely related to the nearby lands of Killoley.

killt (kilt) pp., poet. killed – ‘Whiles hei saw a herlin soom, And whiles killt a troot . . .’* [DH] (not obviously Hawick).

Kilmenny (kil-me-nee) n. large house on Wilton Park Road built for ex-Provost George Wilson around 1879, designed by John Guthrie. It was later the residence of Charles J. Glenny. It was gifted to the Education Authority by George Heron Wilson in 1929 and used as a hostel for country girls attending the High School. For a brief period it was run as a hotel. In the years 1948–57 it provided accommodation for district nurses.

Kilnbrae (kiln-brä) n. former name for the Mill Path, in use in the 17th century, named after the kiln that stood there. This may be the kiln that 2 men climbed onto to escape the Slitrig flood of 1767 (also written ‘Kilm Brae’ as well as ‘Kiln Peth’).

Kiln Brae (kiln-brä) n. region just south of the farm of Twislehope in the upper Hermitage valley. The farmstead of Kilnbraehead was once there.

Kiln Burn (kiln-burn) n. stream in Southdean Parish, which rises on Mervins Law and runs roughly north-east to join the Jed Water near Old Jeddart.

Kilncleuch (kiln-klooch) n. possible name of lands near Abbotrule. A court case involving John, son of Gilbert Oliver ‘in kilclewis’ is recorded in 1502. It is possible that it is the same place as Kilnsike).

Kiln Croft (kiln-kroft) n. area of land near Hawick Mill, part of which was taken over for the section of Wellogate Cemetery opened in 1849 (this may be an error for Kill Croft).

Kiln Green (kiln-green) n. public park land on the haugh in the north of Langholm, between the A7 and the Ewes Water. It was said to be the location where the rescue of Kinmont Willie was planned in 1596.

Kilnheugh (kiln-hewd) n., arch.* the open space in front of a kiln, where the kiln-man could shelter, a ‘killogie’ (used by John Hogg).

Kilnhill (kiln-hil) n. former name for an area south of Weensland Road and west of Bramblehall, also known as ‘Trinity Kilnhill’, presumably named after a kiln that once stood there (perhaps associated with Bogliebarns).

Kilnknowe (kiln-now) n. former farm in Hobkirk Parish, lying to the north-west of the Kirk Manse. It was once part of the Barony of Abbotrule. It was ‘Killknow’ in Hobkirk Parish in 1678, when owned by Gilbert Elliott and valued at £80. Andrew Hood was tenant there in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. George Henderson was a weaver living there in the 18th century. Along with other parts of Abbotrule estate, it was sold by William Kerr in 1750. James Notman was there in 1788. In 1788 it was valued at £80 and owned by William Elliot of Harwood. He was still owner according to the Land Tax Rolls of about 1811, when it was ‘Kill-know’ and valued at £47 5s. It was also written ‘Kilknowe’ (it should not be confused with Kirknowe, which lies directly to the north).

Kilnknowe Junction (kiln-now-jungk-shin) n. junction where the Peebles Railway Extension joined the Waverley Line, just north of Galashiels.

Kiln-logie (kiln-lo-gee) n., arch. a kiln, the fireplace of a kiln – ‘I found the decent old miller lighting in at the kiln-logie’ [BCM1880] (also kil-logie and kill-ee).

Kiln Peth (kiln-peth) n. Kiln Path, former name for the Mill Peth. It is so marked on Wood’s 1824 map.

Kiln Peth (kiln-peth) n. Kiln Path, a lane connecting Wilton Path and Underdamside, named after the kiln for drying oats at the Roughheugh Flour Mill. The name disappeared by the early 20th century. Also a former name for Mill Path (e.g. on Wood’s 1824 map) after the drying kiln there.

Kiln Pots (kiln-pots) n., pl. local name for a series of hollows on the hillsides of the upper part of the farms of Peel and Myredykes in Castleton Parish. They vary in size from about 4 to 12 feet, and occur naturally as a result of erosion of the rock there.

Kilnsike (kiln-sük) n. ruined fortified 16th century farm-house on the road between Jedburgh and Chesters, just to the east of Westerhouses. It measures 11.5 m by 7.5 m, with the ruin still having 3 walls to the first floor. The lands were valued at 25 shillings according to the Exchequer Rolls in 1538. The tenant there in 1541 was Andrew Oliver. It is ‘kilsyk’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls when there were 2 hearths there (it is ‘Kilsyke’ in 1538 and ‘Kylsyke’ in 1539 and 1541).

Kiln Sike (kiln-sik) n. small stream that joins Ironcastle Sike to the east of Westerhouses in Southdean Parish. The remains of Kilnsike Tower are near the head of the stream and the Iron Castle settlement near the foot. There is also an area of rig lines there.

Kiln Sike (kiln-sik) n. small stream in Castleton Parish, running south to join the Black Burn to the north-west of Newcastleton. It rises on Kiln Rig and the farm of Woolhope is on its banks, with Kiln Knowe near its mouth. The area also contains old sheepfolds, boundary dykes and at least 6 peat-covered cairns higher up (‘Kill Syke’ and ‘Kill Rig’ are marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

kilt (kilt) n. traditional dress worn formerly in northern Scotland, and in the Lowlands on celebratory occasions, also known as a ‘skirt’, v., poet., arch. to hike up skirts, tuck up clothing so that the legs are free – For Mangerton-house Auld Downie is gane. Her coats she has kilted up to her knee …’[CPM], ‘The trout walloping about were too much for mother, so she kilted her coats and waded in and went home with a load of trout’[JeC] (from Danish).

kiltie (kil-tee) n. someone who wears a kilt, a humorous term for a Highlander – ‘There were two kilties with swords at their sides’[RM], ‘Kiltie, cauld bums with swords at their sides’[RM], ‘Kiltie, cauld bums …’[T].

kimmer (ki-nur) n., arch. a gossip, a close female friend – ‘The kimmer kerlyn didna youcke The places which she clew …’[JTe], ‘…Aff to a weddin’ her kimmers hae gane: Ilk wi’ her laddie has linkit awa’’[JJ], ‘Losh, women are a fickle set, I’ll never court another kimmer’[TCh], ‘…They wad swap their salvation To be in the fashion An’ please the auld kimmer’[FL], ‘The Nine-stanes, his kimmers, Can snirk at his game, But Cauldleuch and Gritmuir Think black-burnan shame’[DH], ‘The kimmers Faith and Hope gledge oot o the lamp-lit door Into the wundy derk o Eternity’[DH], v., arch. to gossip.

kin (kin) v. to know – ‘A’m fri Hawick, ee kin’ (see ken: this form is only used conversationally in certain phrases, particularly the punctuating phrase ‘ee kin’).

kind (kind) n., arch. nature, character – ‘That’s the kind o’ her shair enough’[JEDM], family, ancestry, kin – ‘Ee canna pass keind – it belangs eer foak, man!’[ECS], ‘They’re no the same kind o’ Wilsons at aa’[??], ‘Hei was the Wat the Drummer kind, wassen he’l’[CoH], sort, of any description – ‘No a biggeen kind was there ti be seen …No a leevin sool – no a body keind – did A sei’[ECS], ‘A helna spoken ti a body keind aa day’[ECS], v., arch. to resemble, take after, especially in the phrase ‘ti kind ti’ – ‘Thon wainch keinds ti ir mither’s seide o the hoose’[ECS], to sort, arrange articles into kinds (also spelled ‘keind’).

kindeh (kin-de, -di, du, -do) contr., adv. kind of, somewhat, as it were, rather, to some degree – ‘A …turnt keindih pechit’[ECS], ‘This was a fessener, an A was keinda stucken’[ECS], ‘Hei’s a smert keind o fallih, thon’[ECS], ‘Aw can kindeh mind o’d still’[RM], ‘It was kindeh wat, nae doot …’[RM], ‘…Aw’n suire there was a kindeh wink alang w’l’d’[BW1978] (also spelled ‘kinda’, ‘keinda’ and ‘keind o’; cf. kinneh).

kindeh, no verra, bit gei (kin-de-no-ve-ri-bi-gi) interj., arch. in a sort of way, yes and no – ‘Keind-o, no verra, bit gey! – An evasive, non-committal expression’[ECS].

kindit (kin-dee, -di) adj., arch. sorted, arranged into order – ‘A’ll heh ti sort thum; thay’re aa mixty-maxty an need ti be keindeet’[ECS].

kindly tenancy (kind-lee-te-nin-see) n., arch. holding of lands, mills or houses at a low or nominal rent, often granted as a favour by the Laird – ‘Heir lyis ane honest man, Johne Deinis, quah was tenant kyndlie of Havik Miln, and slan in the said Gilbert and his airis kyndlie rentallaris and tennentis in and to all and haill my fourtie schilling land of auld extent, callit Commounsye …’[SB1591].

kine (kin) n., pl., arch. cows – ‘…That he propitiously might shine Henceforth on flocks, and corn and kine’[AD], ‘And hither we’ve ridden the nicht Tam Reid As in years that have gane bye, To tell a thine Next week the kine Maun milk a double supply’[JEDM], ‘Nay, lad, these frog-fed foies of thine Will meddle not with you or me: If they be seeking butchers’ kine They’ll find them nearer to the sea’[WHO], ‘…Full many a steer ha’ they reft o’ mine, But aye they ha’ paid me in kine for kine’[WHO], ‘A haunted land, where

king (king) n., arch. a boy holding a special position at school on account of giving the largest donation to the schoolmaster at Candlemas (see breeze-money).

King (king) n. Christina (b.1827/8) daughter of James, she was a niece of Janet, who was housekeeper at Abbotrule. She also worked on the estate, being in charge of the poultry and milking. In 1888 she moved into Hawick.

James (16th/17th C.) local man described as 'in Clarelaw' in a 1612 list of people convicted of charging more than 12 percent interest on loans. James (18th C.) signatory of the document signed by 56 people at Raperlaw in 1732, protesting against acts of the General Assembly and being connected with the Secession. He was probably a resident of Lilliesleaf.

James (18th/19th C.) farmer at North Synton, recorded on the 1791–97 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1797 he was owner of 6 farm horses and 1 saddle horse.

James (b.1796/7) born in Cavers Parish, he was a farmer at Dimpleknowe near Ashkirk. In 1861 he was at Dimpleknowe, farming 200 acres and employing 6 people. In the 1860s he was recorded as a non-resident voter in Cavers Parish. His wife was Sarah. By 1868 W. Douglas was recorded as farmer at Dimpleknowe, perhaps his son. James (1916–93) born in Hawick, brother of Harry and Thomas, with his mother being Elizabeth. He was a Sergeant Major in the 6th Battalion, Seaforth Highlanders, who received the Distinguished Conduct Medal in 1944. Janet (18th C.) listed as owner of a 'House and Yard’ in Minto Parish in 1779, valued at £2 3s 11d. It was owned by Lord Minto in 1811. Janet (b.1810/1) servant to the Henderson family at Abbotrule. She served as nurse and later as housekeeper. Her niece Christina also worked on the Abbotrule estate and later moved to Hawick.

John George (d.1860s) brewer of Hawick. He died at his brewery, aged 34, and is buried in Wellogate cemetery. His widow later married R.R. MacQueen of West Port Church. Mark (18th/19th C.) cooper who lived in a small thatched cottage in Abbotrule. He was a staunch Anti-Burgher, and was known locally as 'Maister Clairk's recruiting sergeant' (Rev. James Clerk being the minister of the Townhead congregation in Jedburgh). His son Jamie followed his father’s beliefs and would alternate between attending the church in Jedburgh and Hawick West.

Robert (b.1786/7) from Jedburgh, he served in the Artillery and later lived in Lilliesleaf. He was listed in the 1851 census as a Chelsea Pensioner, living with his wife Martha Riddell and children John, James and Robert, as well as his brother-in-law James Riddell. In 1861 he was on the north side of Main Street. He was a member of the Burgher Kirk in Lilliesleaf. In 1873 his article 'Some Jedburgh Characters' was published in the Transactions.

William (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Agnes Redford and their children included: John (b.1775); Margaret (b.1778); Agnes (b.1784); and Mary (b.1786).

the King (thu-king) n. nickname for members of the family which ran the King’s Head in Hawick, e.g. Andrew Scott.

the King (thu-king) n. nickname for one of 2 people (the other being ‘the Queen’) who lived on Sunnyside in Denholm in the late 19th century. Also a nickname for an early Robert Elliot, recorded in 1500.

the King (thu-king) n. nickname for Thomas Douglas in Hobkirk.

Kingarth (king-arth) n. former lands just to the south of Riccarton, perhaps associated with some of the remains of buildings in the area (possibly the same as Kilgarth).

the King o the Dean (thu-king-o-thu-deen) n. popular name for a large tree in Denholm Dean. It was adjacent to 'the Queen o the Dean', but closer to the bank. It was among the trees swept away in the Denholm Flood of 1806.

the King o the Wud (thu-king-o-thu-wud) n. large oak tree on the Ferniehirst estate, at the top of a small ravine, to the east of the Capon Tree. It once reached a height of about 78 feet, with a circumference of 14 feet.

the Kings (thu-kingz) n. theatre on Trowdyke-side, in the old Corn Exchange buildings, having live shows and theatrical productions, the name being current in the first half of the 20th century. There were films of the Common Riding made especially for showing in this theatre in at least 1929, 1931, 1932, 1933 and 1934. It became part of the Odeon cinema chain and was also called the Odeon. It was later renamed the Classic and the Marina, and burned down in 1992. The name was also used to describe the Kings Hotel on North Bridge Street in the latter part of the 20th century – ‘...For the Kings tippence oo paid Or jookeet in doon the Arcade’ [IWL].

King’s claver

Street and later became the Commercial Inn and then the Liddesdale Hotel. In 1837 the proprietor was Sussanah Rutherford and in 1852 was William Scott.

King’s claver (kingz-klæ-vur) n., arch. melilot, a kind of clover, Melilotus officinalis.

The King’s Common Street (thu-kingz-ko-min-stree) n. former name for the road that connected the Howegate with the Newcastleton Road, in use in the 17th century. The road ran through the Kirkwyny, over a ford at the foot of ‘Manse Lane’ and up the ‘Kilmbrae’. It is mentioned in the Town Book in 1710.

King’s covenanter (kingz-kuv-in-an’-er) n., arch. a children’s street game involving a child calling ‘King’s Covenanter, come if ye dare venture’ and trying to catch any who run over, with the captive replacing the captor.

King’s ellwand (kingz-el-wawnd) n., arch. the stars in the Belt of Orion, the foxglove, Digitalis purpurea.

The King’s Heid (thu-kingz-heed) n. the King’s Head Hotel, a former inn located at 13 High Street. It was run by Nellie Dickson in the late 19th century and by William Scott (‘Wullie the King’) in the early 19th century. It may also have been the name of ‘Lurgie’ Wilson’s inn at the Sandbed for a while.

The King’s High Street (thu-kingz-hI-stree) n. common name for the High Street in old charters and sasines. Also known as the ‘King’s Highway’ and similar terms. The name also applied to the continuation of the High Street as the main thoroughfare via Silver Street, the Howegate and the Loan (it is ‘the King’s hie streat’ in 1688).

The Kings Hotel (thu-kingz-ho-tel) n. hotel at 23 North Bridge Street in the latter part of the 20th century. It was built as Northville, a private house, in the late 1800s. It then became a temperance hotel, Gibson’s, and sometime after WWII it had become the Kings. It also expanded into the adjacent building. For a few years it was run as the Roxburgh Inn, but by the mid-1990s the building had fallen on hard times and was empty for about a decade. In 2005 the main building was converted into housing units.

Kingside Loch (kingz-sid-loch) n. body of water south-east of Bucchleuch. Kingsideloch Sike flows into it from the east (possibly the bosy marked ‘Pott Loch’ on Blaen’s 1654 map; it is ‘Kingsmoorloch’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

The King’s Own Scottish Borderers see the K.O.S.B.

The King’s Rantin (thu-kingz-rawn-tin) n. former celebration (at public expense) by the local dignitaries on the King’s Birthday. Such a celebration was recorded being held for George I (who’s birthdate was 28th May) in 1724 and the expenses are recorded in 1732. It moved to 30th October in 1733, the birthday of George II. In 1739 it is recorded that festivities began at 10 a.m. In 1747 (because of the debt over Teviot Brig) the Council ordain that the Town would not pay the expenses. The festivities grew in size, particularly during the reign of George III, celebrated on the 4th of June (shortly after the Common Riding).

This was George III’s actually birthday, but the same day was also celebrated throughout Britain as George IV and William IV’s official birthdays. There was a function in the Council Chambers of the old Town Hall, with the alcohol traditionally being supplied by the Bailies. The excess of the celebration was denounced in James Hogg’s lines ‘Frugal temperance urged no cesses, Birthday rants, nor Bailie’s messes’. There were displays of home made fireworks in the town and rival ‘Eastla’ and ‘Westla’ bonfires. In the 18th century this was a major focus of activity for the town’s youth, with material being collected for about a month before, and regular raids on the opposing gang’s store of fuel. The bonfires lit at each end of town were said to be a very old tradition, but ended about 1800. In the early years of the 19th century the King’s health was drunk outside the Town Hall by the Magistrates and their guests ‘Highland fashion’, with glasses thrown over the shoulders and women of the town catching them in their aprons. In later years there was also a parade through the town – ‘Payd that night ye licker was got to Ranting 2 4 0’ [BR1732].

King’s Rig (kingz-rig) n. ridge on the north-east side of the Maidaens, crossed by the Catrail. A stream there (which joins the Harwood Burn and ultimately the Slitrig) is called King’s Sike (the connection with any King is obscure).

Kink (kingk) v., arch. to choke, gasp, have a coughing fit, to laugh until out of breath, laugh or cough convulsively – ‘He kinket and leugh as I cannot describe’ [HAST1922], n., arch. a coughing fit, catch of the breath, sound of whooping-cough – ‘That puir bairn’s gey nerr chowkett ev-ery teime ei taiks yin o thae sair kinks’ [ECS], an extreme bout of hilarity, fit of laughter – ‘A laachd ma-sul inti sic a kink A cood harly geet ma braith cannot describe’ [HAST1922], n.. arch. whooping cough, pertussis – ‘It’s no the Measles, Mistress kin-kind (kin-kind) n., poet. all kinds, all sort of people – ‘…an’ at our yettes ar a’ kin-kynd o’ amene frutes …’ [HSR], ‘Speik furth his glorie among the heathin, his wunders amang a’ kinkynes’ [HSR].

kinlin (kin-lin) n. kindling – ‘that piani wud make grand kinlin’.

kinly (kin-lee) adj., poet. burning – ‘Let kinlie cools fa’ apon thame: let thame be thrawn intil the fire’ [HSR].

Kinly Stick (kin-lee-stik) n. song written around 1870 by William Easton. It follows a satirical story about two well-known contemporaries of Easton’s, George (also sometimes referred to as Dick) Whillans (‘Kinly Stick’) and John Mitchell (‘Heather Jock’), who pawn the very shirts on their backs in order to get more drink. A fifth verse was added later (by 1909, and probably not much earlier) about visiting Milnroe’s pawn shop. The song is clearly based on the song called ‘Ring the Bell Watchman’, with words and music written by Henry Clay Work in 1865 (he also wrote ‘My Grandfather Clock’, ‘Marching Through Georgia’ and ‘Father, Dear Father’).

The song followed right after the American Civil War, and the chorus evoked images of the Liberty Bell; it was therefore extremely popular at the time in the U.S. The Hawick words can be seen as a direct parody of Work’s, being about ringing the bell at the bar, rather than in the church! Other parodies also exist, including ‘Strike the Bell, Second-mate’ and the more modern ‘Strike the Bell, Landlord’. Adie Ingles suggested that the Australian sheep-shearing version, ‘Click Go the Shears’, was brought back from there by Mitchell (Heather Jock) himself, but there is no evidence that he ever left Hawick (and the Australian version is clearly itself a parody of ‘Ring the Bell Watchman’, first published in 1891). Note that the words of the chorus are almost always slightly altered compared with the published version. The accompaniment was slightly changed for the 2001 edition of ‘The Hawick Songs’, with an attempt to restore some cheer to the music. It has been covered by some others artists, e.g. the Caern folk trio in 1969. Scocha recorded a ‘punkified’ version on their 2006 CD ‘Gie’d Sum Wellie’ – ‘…Ring the bell, Kinly, Stick, ring the bell’ [WE], – ‘…And the Kinly Stick he’s mortal And he lies upon the flags’ [WE].

Kinmont Willie (kin-mon’-wi-lee) n. nickname name for William Armstrong who was rescued from Carlisle Castle in 1596 by the Bold Buccleuch, as immortalised in the ballad. He lived at Morton Tower (also called Sark Tower), west of Canonbie, and was the Armstrong chief in that area. According to a letter from Lord Scope, there were 500 (although this is clearly an exaggeration) horsemen, supporters of Buccleuch and Kinmont involved in the assault on Carlisle Castle, ‘appointed with gavlockes and crowes of iron, hand peckes, axes and skailinge lathers’, getting in at a corner of the outer court, undermining the postern door and carrying away Willie. English reports say that 2 watchmen were killed and a guard of the prisoner injured, the action being easy because the night watch were sheltering from the weather. It is also claimed that Johnstones and Ivings were lying in wait near the Border, in case the band of rescuers were pursued and needed help. Further details are available in (probably biased English accounts of the subsequent investigation). It is said that there were meetings a few days before with certain Englishmen to plan the raid, and that some of the watchmen at the castle had been paid off. An exact roster of the rescuers is not known, but Scott of Satchells gives a list of 33 Scotts who rode with their chief, and we can assume that many Armstrongs also took part. An English informer claimed that the party included: the Laird of Buccleuch (Sir Walter Scott, later 1st Lord of Buccleuch); Walter Scott of Goldielands (probably son of the Laird); Walter Scott of Branxholme (probably an error for Buccleuch); Walter Scott of Harden (either ‘Auld Wat’ or a son of his); (Walter) Scott of Todrig; William Elliot of Gorrenberry (or perhaps a son); John Elliot, called of Copshaw (also perhaps a son); the Laird of Mangerton (Archibald Armstrong); the young Laird of Whithaugh (probably Simon) and his son (perhaps Lancelot); 3 men of ‘Calfhills’ (probably Armstrongs of Calfield); Sandy Armstrong, son to ‘Hebbye’ (son of Abraham of Woodehouselee); 4 sons of Kinmont Willie, Jock, Francie, Geordie and Sandy; Willie Bell ‘Red Cloak’ (Laird of Blackethouse) and 2 of his brothers; Walter Bell of ‘Godesby’; 3 Armstrongs from Tweed (perhaps Hector, Jock and Ringan); John Armstrong of Hollows and his brother; Christie Armstrong of Barnlges and Robbie of Langholm (probably his brother); the Armstrongs of Chingills; and...
Kinnaird (ki-näröd) n. James (17th C.) mentioned as a Burgh Officer (along with Walter Stewart) in 1638, this being one of the first records in the earliest existing Town Book. They were presumably the 2 Burgh Officers of the time, corresponding to the Halberdiers of today. He is also mentioned swearing on oath that Thomas Oliver drew his sword at one of the Bailies in a 1642 case. William (16th C.) listed as ‘Kynhard’ in 1534 as a witness at Hassendean Kirk for the sealing of a letter of reversion when Gavin Elliot sold the lands of Nether Galalaw to William Scott. It is unclear if he was from Hawick, Hassendean or Selkirk (in whose Protocol Books the record appeared).

Kinnear (ki-neer) n. Rev. Alexander (c.1627–67) Hawick minister. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1647, became Schoolmaster at Lesmahagow in 1653, and was then assistant at Roberton (in Lanarkshire), before being translated to Bathgate in 1656 and then to Hawick in 1663. His ‘friend’ (presumably a relative) James Kinnear was entered as a tailor’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1659. It is unclear whether he was locally popular, after replacing the ousted John Scott. He was a member of the Presbytery of Jedburgh in 1666 and was still described as ‘minister at Hawick’ in an Edinburgh record of September 1666, when he married Margaret Cunningham. She survived him and later married Robert Richardson (W.S.) of Edinburgh. He died a few months before being replaced by Episcopal John Langlands. A communion token from his time as minister has ‘hK’ (for Hawick Kirk) on one side and ‘M — AK’ on the other. Note that another man of the same name was minister at Whitsome Parish from 1608–54 and may of course have been related (also spelled ‘Kinnair’, ‘Kinneir’ and ‘Kynneir’).

Kinneh (ki-nu, -ne) contr. kind of – ‘. . . 00 might be proof, in some kinnae distant Border reiving incestuous brotherhood, o’ the likes o’ the Ettrick Shepherd or Sir Walter Scott, bit it’s yer ordinary Hawick man thit really makes ee stand an inch taller’ [IHS] (also kindeh).

Kinnelcutty (ki-nul-ku’-ee) n. an area in the Borthwick at the top of the steep climb in the road out to Roberton. The cottages there are still called by this name. The stone drinking trough exists, although is no longer used by travellers (the origin is possibly from drovers stopping for a smoke there; also spelled ‘Kinnelcuttie’ and ‘Kinnel Cutty’).

Kinnelt (ki-nul) pp. kindled – ‘. . . whan his wreath is kinnel onlie awee’ [HSR], ‘An’ ane fire was kinnel in their clan . . .’ [HSR], ‘. . . hed kinnelt a lunt an war thrang poatchin aboot an maskin tei’ [ECS], ‘. . . Scrapped his buits aye at the door, Kinnelt the fire, an’ never swore’ [IJ] (also spelled ‘kinlet’ and variants).

Kinnen (ki-nin) n., poet. a rabbit – ‘Make kinnen and capon ready then, And venison in great plenty; We’ll welcome hame our royal king, I hope he’ll dine at Gilnochick’ [CPM].

the Kinnin Braes (thu-ki-nin-bräaz) n. area in the Ale valley near Ancrum – ‘Before my tottering feet should fail In life’s late wintry days, Oh, let me hear the voice of Aill Amang the Kinnin Braes’ [WP].

Kinninghaa (ki-ning-haw) n. Kinninghall, farm between Cauldmill and Cavers. It is near the former farm of West Mains. Robert Scott was farming here and at Little Cote in the 1860s (also written ‘Kinning Hall’ and sometimes ‘Kinneyhall’; the name was introduced by an owner after the town in Norfolk, Kenninghall).

Kinninghaa Hill (ki-ning-haw-hil) n. Kinninghall Hill, hill in Cavers Parish, just to the east of Deanbrae, reaching a height of 217 m (718 ft). Its summit contains fragmentary remains of a hillfort, with 2 sets of ramparts and possible hut circles inside. To the south-west are the remains of a possible enclosure.

Kinnle (ki-nul) v. to kindle – ‘And saw the sun o’ Easter Heeze up and lowe until It kinnled till a burnin’ buss The thorns on Hardie’s Hill’ [DH].

kinsh (kinsh) n., arch. a lever used in quarrying, v., arch. to twist, tighten by twisting, to steal, pilfer, filch – ‘Ee’d better heide thae rock-books, or the bairns ‘ll kinsh thum’ [ECS], ‘That greedy gullinaw ov a callant hed kinshed the haaf o’ the foookie-meat A brocht hyimm’ [ECS], ‘Thae ill-deedie callants kingsh’t a hash o’ aipples’ [GW] (this is ‘kinch’ elsewhere in Scotland).

Kinshel Haugh (kin-shul-hawch) n. area on the east side of the Wauchope Burn, between Wauchope Common and Hemlaw Knowes, in Hobkirk Parish.

kinsh-pin (kinsh-pin) n., arch. a rod used for twisting ropes in order to tighten them.
kip (kip) n., arch. rush, hurry, haste – ‘Hei was in a teerin kip an wadna stoap a meenint’ [ECS], a fit of anger, outburst – ‘Wheiles she’s a richt, bit she’s awfih kippy tempert, an oo’ve fund ir in yin o ir kips the nicht’ [ECS].

kip (kip) n., arch. a turned-up tip, especially of a nose (noted by E.C. Smith), the peak of a sharp-pointed hill – ‘Brave Bruce clomb, unskathed, Abyssinia’s dread kipps’ [HSR] (also written ‘kippe’); the word is used in several local hill names, e.g. Coldhouse Kipp, the Kipp and Newhouse Kip).

the Kipp (thu-kip) n. small hill to the southeast of Heip Hill, also known as Kippielaw, reaching a height of 218 m. The name may also have been formerly synonymous with Heip (or Heap) Hill itself (marked ‘The Kipp’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

clearly of a nose (noted by E.C. Smith), the peak of a sharp-pointed hill – ‘Brave Bruce clomb, unskathed, Abyssinia’s dread kipps’ [HSR] (also written ‘kippe’); the word is used in several local hill names, e.g. Coldhouse Kipp, the Kipp and Newhouse Kip).

the Kipp (thu-kip) n. eastern spur of Todsshawhaugh Hill, lying just to the south of Todsshawhaugh farm.

Kippielaw (ki-pee-law) n. former house to the west of Stirches Road, which disappeared in the late 19th century. John Ferguson was there in 1790. The nearby hill, above Greensidehall, reaches a height of 218 m, and is also known as ‘the Kipp’. There are several other places with the same (or similar) name around Scotland – ‘The tiny yellow tormentil Is peeping here and there, The hollows of the Kippilaw Are never dry or bare’ [WFC] (also spelled ‘Kipielaw’ and ‘Kippilaw’, it is marked ‘Kiplaw’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; the origin is presumably the same as that of the place of the same name 10 miles to the north-east in Bowden Parish).

Kippielaw Moss (ki-pee-law-mos) n. boggy area with a small pond between Greensidehall and Heip Hill.

Kippilaw (ki-pee-law) n. farm in Bowden Parish, off the B6359 between Lilliesleaf and Bowden village. There were once Kers there (the origin is probably the Old English ‘copped hlaw’, meaning ‘hill with the summit cut off’; it first occurs as ‘Kyppelaw’ in 1552, then ‘Cyppealaw’ in 1567 and ‘Kypylaw’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

kippit (ki-pee’, -pi’) adj., arch. turned up (of the nose) – ‘She hes a kipeet nose, an A’ve harrd ett said that’s a sein (sign) o a short temper’ [ECS] (also written ‘kippeet’).

kipple (ki-pul) n., arch. a couple – ‘But some said she had in her han’ a kipple o’ bottles o’ branny’ [ES], the inclined rafter or beam of a roof – ‘My auld wife here And me, just quietly on steer Aneath the auld black kipple’ [HSR], ‘Wha layes the kipples o’ his chamners in the waters . . . ’ [HSR].

kipple-yill (ki-pul-til) n., arch. the drink given to workmen after erecting the rafters of a house.

Kipps Plantin (kips-plawn’-in) n. plantation to the north-east of the Minto Hills, adjacent to Lambslair Plantation and south of Standhill farm. It is probably associated with Kip’s Park.

kippy (ki-pee) adj., arch. quick-tempered, hasty – ‘Wheiles she’s a richt, bit she’s awfih kippy tempert, an oo’ve fund ir in yin o ir kips the nicht!’ [ECS], having an upturned nose.

Kip’s Park (kips-pawrk) n. former name for lands in Minto Parish. It was listed as part of the Minto estate in 1779 (and 1811), when valued at £102 7d. The rental for ‘Kip’s park and inclosure’ was £28 in 1780. It was probably associated with the modern Kipps Plantin, but it is unclear who ‘Kip’ was.

kirk (kirk) n. a church – ‘the whole familly we’t ti kirk on Sundis’, ‘Though time has wrocht a change or twae On kirk and shop and mill’ [WL], ‘Where Teviot rins by kirk and tower . . . ’ [IWS], ‘And A pick oot fer ablow iz Every weel kent kirk and mill’ [IWL], ‘ti make a kirk or a mill o’d means to do what you like with it, v. to pass through a formal church attendance, particularly applied to the Cornet during Kirking Sunday, often capitalised – ‘It is the day the Cornet is Kirked’ [BEL] (the origin of the word is the Old Norse ‘Kirkja’).

Kirk (kirk) n. Charles (b.1808/9) born in Dunfermline, he was a lawyer in Hawick. He was for a while in partnership with Walter Haddon. He had offices at the corner of the Sandbed and Buccleuch Street and was agent for Western Bank, which failed in 1857. He was an early Trustee for St. George’s Kirk. In 1852 he was listed in Slater’s directory as a ‘writer’ on Buccleuch Street, as well as agent for the Edinburgh insurance company and for the West of England company. In 1851 he was living at about 20 Buccleuch Street, and was ‘Procurator in Sheriff Court of Roxburgh Shire & in practice’. In 1861 he was listed as a Solicitor, living at 3 Buccleuch Street. In the 1860s he is recorded as the Depute-Clerk for the court, which met every other month in Hawick. He was also the local collector for the Inland Revenue. His wife was Margaret B., and their children included Charles M., Mary, James H. and Margaret H. James (d.c.1820) Rector of Hawick Grammar School 1798–1818. He was previously schoolmaster at Haddington, and came to Hawick to replace Thomas Barrie. He also applied for the position of Hawick postmaster in 1802, but appears not to have been successful. He married Eleanora Whitehead in Haddington in 1794, and their children included John, Edmond, Marion, Maria, James and Isabella; all but the first were born in Hawick. He resigned in 1818 and was then teacher in Leith. In 1821 his daughter Elizabeth married Nicholas Whitehead in Leith, but which time he was deceased. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Liverpool who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. He probably had a local connection. Rev. John (19th C.) minister of the Brighton Street Evangelical Union Church in Edinburgh. In the Spring of 1848 he came to Hawick to assist John Rutherford in leading a special ‘mission’ of prayer meetings and sermons. He joined at the end of the first week and stayed for the following 6. This led directly to the founding of the Evangelical Union (later Congregational) Kirk in Hawick. He returned to Hawick about 1858 to conduct some revival meetings and again returned in 1864 as the Rev. Prof. Kirk to induct the new E.U. minister David Hislop. 3 of his sons became ministers, including Rev. Edward Bruce, who was also a noted amateur astronomer. William (18th C.) collier of Musselburgh who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1753. James Wilson suggests that he was probably a ‘coal viewer’ (but it is unclear what that means).

the Kirk (thu-kirk) n. the Church of Scotland, which seceded from Rome in 1560, led by John Knox, and now has the largest membership of any church in Scotland. It has a Calvinist doctrine and a Presbyterian structure, where each congregation elects its own governing elders.

Kirkandrews (kirk-awn-drooz) n. area in the north of Cumbria, just over the Border off the A7, with an 18th century church and a 16th century occupied peel tower nearby. This was an important part of the English West March, owned by the de Soulis family, then passing to the Douglases and Grahams. The associated parish was part of the Debatable Land (also written ‘Kirk Andrews’).

Kirkbank (kirk-bawngk) n. former station on the Jedburgh Railway, off the Kelso Branch of the North British Railway.

Kirk Borthwick (kirk-bor-theck) n. former site of the chapel that served parishioners in the western part of Wilton Parish (which may even have been a separate Parish of Borthwick in early times) and the name used for the surrounding area. It lay near Borthwickbrae and close to Borthwick Waas cemetery. The precise location is uncertain, but it was probably on the north side of the road on a level platform on the East bank of the Kirk Cleuch, which is a narrow ravine leading up through the lands of Borthwickbrae (however, some accounts place it on the south side of the road). It was probably founded in the late 1200s and was either originally part of the Diocese of Glasgow (like much of Teviotdale), or belonged to the monks of Melrose Abbey (who held lands and pasture rights in the area). It is said that it was dedicated to the Virgin Mary. It could be the church of Borthwick referred to in the charters of Glasgow in about 1150, consecrated by Robert, Bishop of St. Andrews. The land there was referred to as Kirk Borthwick by the time of Robert the Bruce, but only as Borthwick in the first half of the 13th century. A spring about 500 m to the north-west is known as ‘Lady’s Well’, and presumably connected with the church. If the chapel was once in a separate parish, it was certainly annexed to Wilton by the early 14th century. In 1612 it is recorded that half of the living was given to Francis McGill by the minister of Wilton, and as late as 1688 it was listed as part of the charge of the Wilton minister. It was used as the church of the new Borthwick Parish for a while, until Roberton Church was built in 1659, at the centre of the enlarged parish (which was suppressed soon afterwards before finally becoming Roberton in 1689). It was probably in use until the 1650s, but ruined soon afterwards. John Langlands of Wilton (and later Hawick) may have been the last minister to preach there. It is said that the foundations of the church could still be made out up until the mid-19th century (also known as ‘Borthwick Kirk’ and ‘Borthwick Waas Kirk’; the name occurs as ‘Kirkborthewyc’ in the early 14th century).

the Kirk Cleuch (thu-kirk-klooch) n. stream to the north of the road roughly opposite Borthwick Waas Cemetery, and believed to have been the approximate location for Kirk Borthwick.

Kirkgate (kirk-gä/) n. name used between about 1837 and 1882 for the street formerly known as Old Churchyard and now called St. Mary’s Place. The house at 8 Kirkgate was run as a private school by William Murray, the forerunner of St. Mary’s and later Trinity schools.

kirk-gaun (kirk-gawn) adj., arch. church-going – ‘Wullie being a ‘kirk-gaun’ man, and a hunter of new ministers, he had many a quaint remark to make about the various styles of preachers and preachings' [RM]. 'Hech, sirs! The denty fowk! Primpin by, pair by pair, Kirkgau...’ [DH].

Kirkhaugh (kirk-hawch) n. former name for lands that were part of the Hawick Common. They were mentioned in 1725. However, it is unclear where these lands were.

the Kirkhaugh (thu-kirk-hawch) n. lands adjacent to the Kirk of Hobkirk. In 1618 there was a 'wadset' for 'the former two acres of land with a day's wark meadow adjacent thereto lying in the Kirkhauch beside the Kirk of Hopkirk'.

Kirk Hill (kirk-hil) n. hill to the east of the old Buccleuch Kirk on the Rankle Burn, reaching a height of 397 m. The name presumably comes from the former church.

Kirk Hill (kirk-hil) n. hill to the west of Ettleton churchyard in Liddesdale. It reaches a height of 282 m and is topped by a triangulation pillar. There is a hill-fort on the summit, and the extensive remains of a farmstead and field-system on the eastern slopes, possibly the lands of Side where 'Jock o the Side' lived. There are terraces, with rig lines and other signs of cultivation to the north-east. On the western side is an enclosure and associated building and 'lazy-beds'. To the west is also the remains of an old farm at Greenbourn on a spur of land called The Tongue.

Kirkhouse (kirk-hoos) n. Kirkhouse, former name for a freeholding near the boundaries of Wilton Glebe, Easter Howlands and the southern part of Roughheugh. Presumably named for its proximity to lands related to Wilton Church.

Kirkhooses (kirk-hoo-seez) n. Kirkhouses, former seat of a branch of the Scott family near Ashkirk. The land was presumably attached to the Kirk, either historically or geographically. The first Laird was James, who was a younger son of George of Synton. John, his son and heir had a confirming charter in 1609, when it is 'Kirkhois'. It was valued at £143 in 1643, when owned by Robert Scott of Whitslade. In the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls James Rutherford paid for 6 hearths and there were 6 others listed there, including a blacksmith, Thomas Brown. Thomas Scott was there in 1724 when he was given money by the Parish. The 'five-merk land of Kirkhouse' was recorded in 1753. By 1788 (and also according to the Land Tax Rolls of about 1811) it was owned by Thomas Wilkinson and with the same value as earlier – '...Andrew of Sallinside he was one, With James of Kirkhouse, and Ashkirk's John'[CWS], 'Tell Ashkirk, and Satchels, Burnfoot, and the Kirkhouse, Howpasley, and Robertson, with Harden bold and crouse'[WSB] (also called 'Kirkhouse'; it is 'Kirkhooses' in 1627).

Kirkhope (kir-kup) n. settlement in the Ettrick valley just west of Ettrickbridge. 'Old Kirkhope' lie in the hills above and has a ruined tower. The farm was owned by the Crown from about 1456. It was leased by Sir Thomas Cranston from at least 1471, for his fee as Bailie of Ettrick Forest, passing to John Cranston until about 1490 and then to Alexander, Lord Home. In 1502 it is reported that John Scott in Walls had remis- sion for stealing 3 of Lord Cranston's horses from here. It remained Crown property until at least 1502 and was feued to Sir William Cranston in 1510. Lord Cranston still claimed the lands in 1541. There were Turnbull tenants there in the early 16th century. Thomas Johnstone paid rent to Melrose Abbey for the lands in 1557. The lands were owned by the Cranstons of that Ilk in the late 16th century, passing to the Scotts of Thirlestane in 1594. The lands remained part of the Lordship of Melrose until at least 1670. The Scotts of Harden sold them to the Scotts of Buccleuch in the early 18th century. James Matthewson was there in 1702 and Gideon Scott in 1785. It is also the name of an ancient parish of Selkirkshire, which was reconstituted in 1852 out of part of Yarrow Parish – 'Ho! for the blades of Harden! Ho! for the ring of steel!' The stolen steers of a hundred years Come home for a Kirkhope meal!' [WHO], 'The kye are weary o' more and fern And 'tis many a mile to the Kirkhope Burn' [WHO] (it is 'Kirkhop' in 1471, 'Kirkhoup' in 1557 and 'Kirkhope' in 1564; it is marked on Visscher’s 1689 map of Scotland as 'Kirkhoop'; it is 'Kirkhoop' and 'Kirchhoopo wood', but too far away on Blaen’s 1654 map).

Kirkhope Toor (kir-kup-toor) n. 17th-century peel tower located about 7 miles west of Selkirk, near Kirkhope, built on the site of an earlier tower burned by the Armstrongs in 1543, and restored in the 1990s. It was a stronghold of the eldest sons of the Scotts of Harden. In his youth ‘Auld Wat’ brought Mary Scott of Dryhope ‘the Flower of Yarrow’ here and allegedly later ‘Young Wat’ brought ‘Muckle Mou’ed Meg’ – ‘In the mystic hush of the morning hour Came the clatter of hoofs from Kirkhope Tower ...’ [WHO], ‘...To Yarrow where the Swire climbs Around grey Kirkhope Tower [WL].

kirk (kir-kin) n. a ceremonial attendance at church, especially by councillors after an election. The term was also used in the 19th century (and earlier) to refer to the attendance at church of the bride and groom, usually on the Sunday following their Friday marriage ceremony.

the Kirkin (thu-kir-kin) n. ceremonial church service that takes place in the Cornet’s church on the Sunday morning beginning the week of the Common Riding. Traditionally lily of the valley is worn, and it is the first time for sporting the Cornet’s tie. The Principals, in formal dress (morning suits and tile hats), walking behind the Halberdiers, lead the ‘Cornet’s Kirk Parade’ from the Council Chambers to the church. Behind the Principals come the ex-Cornets in order of year, then the ex-Acting Fathers and finally the rest of the supporters, all walking in pairs. At the church the parade meets the Provost and Bailies and the service is also attended by the Lasses. There the Cornet and his Lass is presented with a bible, and afterwards the party goes for the Cornet’s Lass’s Lunch. The ceremony was initiated in 1887, when Rev. John Thomson (of St. John’s Kirk) invited the Common Riding supporters to his church on the following Sunday, after he had accepted an invitation to the Cornet’s breakfast. For many years it took place on the Sunday immediately after the Common Riding, rather than before. The officiating minister is sometimes referred to as the ‘Cornet’s Chaplain’. The 1914 ceremony was part of the Quater-centenary celebrations and also the 700th anniversary of the consecration of St. Mary’s, being attended by an estimated 4,000 people in the churchyard. In 1891 there were both Episcopal and Evangelical services in a tent on the Haugh on the Sunday after the Common Riding.

Kirkin Sundi (kir-kin-sin-di) n. Sunday preceding the Common Riding weekend, when the Cornet is ‘Kirked’. After the Cornet’s Kirk Parade and church service, there is the Cornet’s Lass’s Lunch, and then the Principals are driven to Hornshole for the laying of the wreath at the 1514 Memorial. Then they go to the Mair to inspect the course before the events of the following week. The day is also referred to as Exhibeetion Sundi. Note that before the Common Riding was revamped in the 1880s, there had been an ‘old custom of visiting the race course’ on the Sunday before, as a sort of practice for the racing which was to come.

Kirkland (kirk-lind) n. former name for lands in Lilliesleaf adjacent to Bewlie. This was ‘Kirklands of Bewlie’, which were part of the Earl of Roxburgh’s lands in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1643, valued at £90 and subsequently sold to Riddell of Camieston. In 1678 the Earl of Roxbury paid land tax ‘for the kirklands of and teyndes of the paroch’. Walter Scott of Whithfield (later Harden) owned these lands in 1720 when they were leased to James Shiel and John Mathieson. ‘Kirklands of Bewlie’ were still valued at £290 in 1788 when owned by Duke of Roxburghe. In the mid-19th century the lands were purchased by Riddell of Muselee (also ‘Kirklands’; marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Kirkland (kirk-lind) n. name for lands in Liddesdale, recorded in 1541, and said to pertain to the Vicar. Presumably these lands were near the original site of Castleton Parish Kirk.

Kirkland (kirk-lind) n. Rev. Robert (1906/7–85) born in Glasgow, he became minister of Orrock Church in 1932 and moved to Edinburgh in 1939. During the War he served with the Royal Marines and was awarded the M.B.E.

the Kirkland (thu-kir-lind) n. former name for farm lands owned by Scott of Buccleuch, and presumably once attached to the Kirk of Hawick. It is possible they were related to the ‘Kirkton’ and ‘Kirkton Tofts’ recorded in early documents. They are mentioned in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme, when the land produced ‘aittis’, ‘corne’ and ‘peis’, and ‘Willie of Allanehauch’ was given ‘the Kirkland, his awne rowme’. Probably the same land is described as ‘ye Kirkland’ in a 1627 valuation of the Parish of Hawick; it is listed among the lands closest to the Town, consisted of 32 acres, was owned by the Lord of Buccleuch and ‘payand presentlie 32 bolls in stock, estimat in stok to 12, and 3 bolls of teynd’ yearly. In 1692 the lands were described as consisting of 34 acres, and were leased by the Duchess of Buccleuch to John Scott, ‘Sodger’, Thomas Scott, ‘Laird’, Andrew Clerk, Robert Ruecastle and Walter Ruecastle (also written ‘the kirk land’, etc.).

Kirklands (kirk-lindz) n. alternative name for the lands of Wilton Glebe, originally belonging to Wilton Parish Church. This could be the ‘kirkland de Wiltoun’ where Thomas Williamson was farmer in 1493. The name survives in Kirklands Hotel on West Stewart Place. It is also the name of a house in Denholm, behind the Church.

Kirklands (kirk-lindz) n. name sometimes formerly used to describe the lands attached to Hobkirk Kirk, somewhat more expensive than those later called the Glebe of Hobkirk, and originally being in the Barony of Abbotrule. Hector Turnbull of Hartshaugh possessed these lands in 1580.
Kirklands

and had a charter in 1604 which described them as ‘the kirk lands called Vicar’s Lands of the kirk of Hobkirk’, with the Manse and Glebe being explicitly excluded. His grandson Adam inherited these lands of ‘Viccarislandis’ in 1622, along with ‘Viccarishall’.

Kirklands (kirk-lindz) n. former name for land attached to Bedrule Kirk. In 1557 a complaint was made by Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst that Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and others had invaded his lands there, beating his servants; this may have been part of a dispute over ownership. In the 16th century (as confirmed in 1581) it was ruled that this ‘half merk land of Kirklandis of Bedrowll’ belonged to Sir John Stewart of Traquair rather than Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst.

Kirklands (kirk-lindz) n. house and small estate on the south of the Ale Water, to the west of Ancrum and adjacent to the graveyard. The house dates from about 1830, and there is an enclosed parkland with large lime trees. John Richardson (lawyer, occasional poet and friend of Sir Walter Scott) lived there in the 19th century, purchasing the estate in 1830, spending the autumn months in residence until his retirement, and dying there in 1864.

Kirklands Hotel (kirk-lindz-hō-tel) n. long-time hotel in Hawick, situated in West Stewart Place. It was built as Viewforth for hatter George Porteous in 1878. It was designed with a mixture of Dutch, French Renaissance and Gothic elements, and had a later extension to the east corner. I. Washington Wallis lived in it for a while, and John Farrar Blenkhorn rented it for a few years. Prior to WWII it became a temperance hotel and after the War was run as a regular hotel. It ceased to be a hotel in 2007. It is a grade C listed building.

kirkless (kirk-lis) adj. without a church – ‘Sae try to make yersel’ content, Though kirkless aye, ye’se never want’ [RDW].

kirk-mense (kirk-mens) n., arch. a first appearance at church – ‘Gaen (an article of dress) kirk-mense or Sunday-mense, respectively, is to let the first occasion on which it is worn be a church service, or fall on a Sunday. According to an auld frie this must invoke some kind of blessing on the article and on its wearer’ [ECS] (also Sundi-mense).

Kirknowne (kirk-now) n. former farm near Hobkirk Church, once owned by the monks of Jedburgh Abbey. It was described as lying between Langraw and the Church, and is described in older deeds as being in the territory of Langraw in the Parish of Abbotrule. The farmhouse stood on a high bank above Kirkstile. The farm lies to the west of the Parish Kirk and the place is still shown on the modern Ordnance Survey map. It was owned (or perhaps tenanted hereditarily) by the Shiel family from before the Reformation, with half being sold in 1666. It was valued at £78 in 1643 when owned by Walter Shiel and also in about 1663 when Walter Scott was tenant. Thomas Boston paid tax on £78 there in 1678. James Turnbull was tenant there in 1694, with Jean Bennet and Isobel Turnbull also residents. John Mair purchased the farm in 1704 and his son Richard sold it to William Elliot of Wolfelee in 1751. Peter Smith was tenant in the late 18th and early 19th centuries. Half of the land was owned by James Riddell in 1788, with the other half being owned by William Turnbull of Langrawi (and a small part of that half by Cornelius Elliot of Wolfelee). ‘Boston’s half of Kirkknow’ was recorded among the lands owned by Cornelius Elliot of Woollee in 1788 (and continued in 1811), with another part owned by William Oliver of Langraw; the other half was possessed by Alexander Anderson. The farm of Wester Swanshiel was incorporated into it in the early 19th century, under the ownership of Sir Walter Elliot of Wolfelee. The other half of the original land was called Hobkirksyle. It should not be confused with ‘Kilknowe’ or ‘Kilknkowe’, which is also in Hobkirk Parish (also spelled ‘Kirknow’ and ‘Kirk-knowe’, it is ‘Kirkeknowe’ in 1590; it is marked ‘Kirk know’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; Tancred writes it once as ‘Kirkwood’, presumably in error).

the Kirk o the Lowes (thu-kirk-ò-thu-lowz) n. Church of St. Mary of the Lowes (or Lochs), former place of worship in Yarrow Parish, near St. Mary’s Loch. Situated on a terrace near the foot of Copper Law, there is now nothing but a mound to indicate its position. It was originally the ‘Forest Kirk’, dedicated to St. Mary and built in perhaps the 12th century. It was formerly the location for meetings and the signing of documents, e.g. one for Sir Thomas Turnbull of Greenwood in 1488. It was abandoned around 1640 in favour of Yarrow Kirk, nearer the centre of the Parish. In 1557 a band of about 200 Scots and others broke open the doors of the church looking to murder Sir Peter Cranston; they were unsuccessful and were later bound over not to harm him or his servants in the future. In 1575
Kirkpatrick

‘Maister John Scott’ was minister there, with responsibility over Ashkirk, Ettrick New Kirk and Rankleburn.

Kirkpatrick (kirk-pawt-reck) n. Roger (16th C.) recorded as Rector of the Nether Kirk of Ewes in 1556. The Parish was stated to be vacant in 1567 and 1574, and so he presumably did not survive as minister after the Reformation.

Kirk Pool (kirk-pool) n. former name for a pool in a bend in the Teviot near the site of Hassendean Kirk, opposite Hassendeanburn and Knowetownhead.

Kirk Raw (kirk-raw) n. Church Row, name used as an address in the mid-19th century. It probably refers to houses in the Kirkstyle or St. Mary’s Place.

Kirkrig (kirk-rig) n. former name for lands in Ashkirk Parish. In 1780 ‘half of the Kirkrig’ was included in lands in Dryden and Clews whose licence had been given to Dr. William Elliot.

the Kirk Road (thu-kirk-rōd) n. former name for what is now Princes Street and Langlands Road, often referred to in old documents as ‘the Kirk road from Langlands to Wilton’.

kirks (kirk) n., pl. churches. There were once many more of these in Hawick than at the present day, the proliferation of Church of Scotland churches being a result of the factions that developed within Presbyterianism in the 18th and 19th centuries. Many of the churches have gone by several different names at different times. A list of the various names that have been used for different church buildings in Hawick (ignoring smaller organisations that may not have had a permanent meeting place) includes: Allars Kirk/the Relief Chapel/the Relief Kirk/the Cross Wynd Kirk/the Cross Wynd United Presbyterian Kirk; the Anti-Burgher Kirk/the First Secession Kirk/the Green Kirk/the West End Kirk/the West End Meetin Hoose/the West End United Presbyterian Kirk; the Baptist Kirk; the Burgher Kirk/the Second Secession Kirk/the Associate Kirk/ the East End Meetin Hoose/the East Bank Kirk/the East End Kirk/East Bank United Free Kirk/East Bank United Presbyterian Kirk; Burnfit Kirk; the Congregational Kirk/the Evangelical Union Kirk/the E.U. kirk session (kirk-se-shin) n. a body consisting of minister and elected elders in the Presbyterian church, dealing with matters of religion, membership, discipline etc. in a particular parish, being the lowest court of that church – ‘The kirk-session, in compliance with recommendations from the superior courts, were in the frequent practice of setting apart days for public fasting and thanksgiving’[RJAW].

the Kirk Session (thu-kirk-se-shin) n. body of elders and the Minister of Hawick Parish Kirk, also referred to as simply ‘the Session’. They were appointed to oversee the good conduct of the congregation, and formerly would meet each week, directly after the church service. Two elders were appointed to supervise each of the districts of the Parish, 4 in the Burgh itself and 3 in the country part. The duties they carried out in the 17th and 18th centuries were later mainly taken over by the School board, police and Parish Council. It appears that the main heritors of the Parish also served as part of the Kirk Session, at least for the enactment of some of the business. The minute books of the Session meetings are an invaluable record of civil as well as ecclesiastical matters in the 18th and 19th centuries. The first existing Session Book covers 1711–25 (and is quite comprehensive), the second 1751–68 and the third 1785–1826 (these 2 recording only minutes of the more important meetings). There are also Kirk Treasurer’s books from 1723. A Session Book covering 1700–04 still existed in 1857 (and some extracts are given in James Wilson’s ‘Memories …’ book), but disappeared before the end of the 19th century. All previous books, like earlier communion plate etc., probably went with the former ministers, like they did elsewhere in Scotland around the time of the Revolution.

Kirkside (kirk-sid) n. street in Denholm, running along the north-east side of the Green and running past the church.

Kirksteed (kirk-steed) n. recorded in 1541 as ‘Kirkstead’ on the rental roll of Liddesdale, when it was listed as having no tenant. It is uncertain where exactly these lands were.

Kirk Steps (kirk-steps) n. another name for the Kirkstile, in use in the mid-19th century.

the Kirkstile (thu-kirk-stil) n. short street leading to St. Mary’s Church, formerly known as Easter Kirkstile, and also formally the address of the Church. This is where the Snuffing takes place on the Friday morning of the Common Riding. The street consists partly of a bridge over the Slitrig, which was built to replace the ‘Auld Brig’ in 1852, paid for by William Elliot (who had Tower Mill built). This bridge is about 13½ feet wide and about 5½ feet lower than the Auld Brig, and with no central pier (i.e. less obstructive during floods). There was once a building of some sort here (perhaps a storage building for the church), referred to in 1686 as ‘the church stile building’ when someone was fined for stealing lime from it. When the old church was demolished in 1763, a large part of the steeple fell here, and the material had to be carried back up for making the new building – ‘[JEDM] (also written ‘Kirkstyle’, ‘Kirk Stile’ etc.; the word originally meant the opening in the wall around a church, or the steps in the wall of a churchyard).

Kirkstile (kirk-stil) n. former farm in Hobkirk Parish, adjacent to the parish kirk, and once forming half of the lands of Kirknowe. It was held by the Shiels since before the Reformation. It passed from John Shiel to his grandson John Stevenson in an agreement ratified in 1759. In 1779 it was sold to a Ridiell, then passed to Alexander Anderson and then Peter Smith. A part of the lands held a cottage and blacksmith’s shop (also called ‘Hobkirkstile’ or ‘Hobkirkstyle’; sometimes spelled ‘Kirkstyle’).

Kirkstyle (kirk-stil) n. former cottage near the church in Ewesdale. It was occupied by 5 separate households in 1841.

Kirkstyle Place (kirk-stil-plis) n. name occasionally used for the Kirkstile.

Kirkton (kirk-tin) n. hamlet on the A6088, about half-way to Bonchester, roughly 4 miles from Hawick. This has been the main route from Hawick to Newcastle since about the 1830s (when it replaced the Wellogate Birneyknowe and Forkins road). It has a church, the present one dating from 1841, and once contained a school. It is also the name of the surrounding small parish, which is probably the same as ‘Cavers Parva’ recorded in Medieval times. Kirkton farm was formerly part of the Cavers estate. Arthur and William Douglas in Kirkton are recorded in 1569. In 1574 it was among the lands that William Douglas of Cavers served as surety for, the inhabitants being guilty ‘for the cryme of thift in tyme bigane’; this included ‘Barty Crosar’. The ‘4 and 2 merk lands’ of Kirkton were sold by Sir Gilbert Elliott to his uncle Sir Archibald Douglas of Cavers in 1655. There was a blacksmith’s there, according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. James Douglas was at the farm there in 1718. The lands were part of the estate of Douglas of Cavers in 1788. A small ball of gneiss with projecting knobs was found there and is now in the Hunterian Museum, Glasgow. A stone axe was also found there. Note that there are many other Kirktons throughout Scotland, and also an old name of lands near Branxholme (also spelled ‘Kirktoon’, ‘Kirktoone’, ‘Kirktown’, ‘Kirkton’, etc.; the name is first recorded in 1458 as ‘Kirketoune’; it is ‘Kirckton’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; the origin is simply ‘the farm by the church’, combining the Old Norse ‘kirkja’ with the Old English ‘tun’).

Kirkton (kirk-tin) n. former lands somewhere near Branxholme, referred to also separately as Kirkton Mains and Kirkton Tofts in the 15th and 16th centuries and still recorded in the 17th century. It could be the same lands referred to as ‘terra ecclesiastica’ in the 1420 charter, when half of the lands of Branxholme were granted to Robert Scott of Rankilburn. In 1446, when the other half of Branxholme and neighbouring lands were granted to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme by Thomas Inglis of Manor, the deal included superiority over ‘certain lands of Kirkton’, lying in the Barony of Hawick. In 1484 these were lands (along with East Mains) which James Douglas of Drumlanrig and his wife already held when James inherited the Barony of Hawick. Later the lands passed to the Douglases of Cavers, with ‘Kirkton and Kirkton Mains’ still being mentioned in Douglas deed of 1662. It seems reasonable to suppose that these lands were connected with the former chapel near Chapel Hill. However, it is also possible that these were in fact the same lands as those in Kirkton Parish, if they were a detached part of the Barony of Hawick (it is ‘terraram de Kirkton’ and ‘Kyrktoun’ in 1446).

Kirkton (kirk-tn) n. lands adjacent to the Kirk of Ewes, near Sorbie, near where the Kirkton Burn meets the river. This was ‘Kirkton’, confirmed to Simon Little in 1426. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, when it consisted of 583 acres of pasture and 83 acres of corn land, both shared with Brierlyshaw farm, which was owned by the Laird of Byrecleuch. It was bounded by Glendivian, Bush, Sorbie, the lands of Sir William Johnstone and Burngrains. The Byers family were there in 1841 and William Armstrong was shepherd there in 1861 (it is ‘Kirkton of Sorbi’ in 1426, ‘Kirkton’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Kirkton’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Kirkton (kirk-tn) n. Adam (15th C.) tenant in Crailing Mill in 1493, when he had remission for several crimes. He was specifically said to have been involved with theft, reset and intercommuning with the English, as well as for being with the Duke of Albany during the rebellion and for kidnapping off a shoemaker from Jedburgh for ransom. Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst served as surety for him. Probably the same Adam ‘in Oxnam Mains’ was recorded in the Justice-aire in 1494/5 when he ‘came in the King’s will’ for unspecified crimes, with Andrew Kerr again the surety. Adam of Stewartfield (16th C.) listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English in raids upon the farms of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme at Goldielands and elsewhere. In 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’.

Adam (16th C.) recorded in 1557 as tenant of the farm of Swinnie under Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst. Kerr complained to the Queen that a group of men ‘boddin in feir of weir’ came to his farm and dug up peats and terrorised him. He may be the same ‘Adam Kyrkton’ who witnessed a bond of 1557 in which Turnbulls, Elliots and others promised to bring in William Nixon. Possibly the same Adam is listed in 1561 among men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. The line ‘Wi’ Kirkton, Newton, noblemen’ in the ballad ‘The Battle of Red-Swire’ may refer to him. He may be the same man as Adam of Stewartfield. Adam of Stewartfield (16th/17th C.) succeeded his grandfather William of Stewartfield in 1606 and inherited lands in Bonjedward from his father in 1611. He married Grizel, eldest daughter of Thomas Rutherford of Hunthill. The marriage contract was witnessed at Woolee (i.e. Wolfseee) House in 1612, with Cranston of that Ilk and 2 other Cranstons (who owned the estate at the time) on the record. His son William was served as his heir in 1642. Alexander (17th C.) Provost of Jedburgh, elected in 1620. He represented Jedburgh in Parliament in 1630. Along with John Moscrop, younger (Burgess of Jedburgh) he was joint owner of Nether Bonchester until selling it to Walter Scott in 1653. Andrew (16th/17th C.) graduated from Edinburgh University in 1617 and became minister of Oxnam Parish. Probably the same Andrew, ‘M.A.’ was recorded as schoolmaster in Jedburgh in 1619 and 1623. He married Elizabeth Knox and had sons John and Thomas.

George (16th C.) one of the men indicted in 1552 for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch. He may have been related to Robert, who was also involved, and was listed along with other men from the Jedburgh area and Berwickshire. John (d.1538) associated with the Kirk of Bedrule. After he died, in 1539, Bernard Baillie was presented, but refused by the Archbishop. John (16th C.) officer of the Warden of the Middle March, William Ker of Cessford. In 1583 he appeared at a day of truce with the English Warden, in place of 2 sons of Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. Robert (16th C.) one of the men indicted in 1552 for the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He was said to have been on Edinburgh High Street with John Peacock, servant of the Laird of Cowdenknowes, and Lance Ainslie, when they stabbed the wounded Scott several times and took his cloak and bonnets. Perhaps the same Robert was listed in an actin against a Frenchman in Edinburgh in 1550. Thomas (17th C.) servant of Andrew Kerr, Lord Jedburgh. He was a witness to a document relating to Harwood and Hawthornside in 1631. William (15th C.) listed as ‘Wyll of Kyrktoun’ in 1454 when he was witness to a document for Andrew Ker of Altonburn. He is also recorded as ‘William of Kirkton’ when he was witness to a ‘tack’ of David Scott, younger of Branxholme in 1478. Since several of the other witnesses were connected with Jedburgh Abbey, this seems likely to be the local Kirkton. He may be the same William ‘Kirkton’ listed among Border lairds in an action registered with Parliament in 1476. He could be the William who had a savage for Bonjedward in 1483. Perhaps the same William ‘irkton in kirkton’ was recorded in the Justice-aire held in 1494/5 when he ‘came in the King’s will’ for crimes against Ingram Oliver in Jedburgh. Either the same William, or a later one, was fined in 1502 for failing to ‘give suit’ at the Justice-aire for his lands of Bonjedward. A possibly related ‘William Kirkton’ was one of the men who signed the pledge to help the new Warden (the Earl of Angus) keep the peace in Edinburgh in 1524/5. William of Stewartfield (16th C.) listed along with Olivers of Southdean in 1572/3, when Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and Richard Rutherford of Edgerston were their cautioners. His surety was for £1000, twice that of the other men; this appears to have been in relation to Kerr of Ferniehirst being declared a fugitive and all his former supporters swearing allegiance to the Crown. He was separately listed in 1572/3, with George Douglas of Bonjedward as surety. He is probably the Kirkton of Stewartfield listed in Monipennie’s c.1594 compilation of Border lairds. William (17th C.) son of Adam of Stewartfield. In 1642 he was served heir to his father’s 3 husbandlands in Bonjedward, as well as the lands of Stewartfield. Probably the same William is recorded as owner of lands in Ulston in 1643 (spelled ‘Kirkton’, ‘Kirtoune’, ‘Kyrktoun’ and variants).

the Kirkton Burn (thu-kirk-tin-burn) n. stream that rises near Earlside, runs through Kirkton and alongside the A6088 till past Cauldmill, joining the Teviot near Hornshole. Alongside the stream to the south of Birneyknowe is the start of a linear earthwork, which runs about 800 m to end near the road connecting Stobs with Bonchester. There are some signs of enclosures at both ends, suggesting that this was a boundary related to grazing rights. On the upper section, an exposed part of the basaltic dyke which runs across Roxburghshire was used by geologist David Milne-Home in 1842 to illustrate his theory of a crack being filled by lava.

Kirkton Hill (kirk-tin-hill) n. hill behind the Kaimends, south-east of Hawick, and south of the village of Kirkton, reaching 275 m (897 ft). It is the site of a hill-fort and there is evidence of settlements there from the Iron Age to mediaval times. The fort was oval, measuring roughly 190 ft by 170 ft, with double or triple ramparts, probably with an entrance on the south-west. The interior of the fort appears to have been later converted into a settlement, with at least 9 huts. An even later enclosure, about 60 ft by 50 ft, containing 2 scooped courts, may date from the 15th or 16th centuries.

Kirkton Hoose (kirk-tin-hoos) n. former home of John Turnbull of Slitrig Dyeworks, situated in Kirkton.

Kirkton Kirk (kirk-tin-kirk) n. church in Kirkton. Before the Reformation it was a Rectory, and it is known from at least the time of the Ragman Rolls. However, it does not seem to have had its own minister (separate from that of Cavers) until about the time of the Reformation. The former church was described in 1838 as ‘in a very bad state of repair’. The location is close to the eastern boundary of the Parish, which was inconvenient for those living further west, but meant that some families from Cavers Parish would attend Kirkton. The present church dates from 1841, and contains some panels from the previous building. In 1861 the stone slab that had formed the ‘stool of repentance’ was presented to the Archaeological Society. It was remodelled in 1906, with J.P. Alison as architect, and a nearby stable and byre were converted for use as church halls in 1933. The Manse was taxed for having 2 hearths in 1694 and 12 windows in 1748. The new Manse was built in 1866. The church was linked with Cavers in 1955 and united with it in 1976. Cavers and Kirkton were linked with St. Mary’s 1976–88, with Hobkirk and Southdean 1988–96 and with St. Mary’s and ‘Auld Pairish’ in 1996. Since 1955 the church has only been used for occasional special services. The oldest surviving communion token is from 1734, is made of lead, heart-shaped and bears the initials ‘K.K.’; another similar token is from 1761. A roll of the ministry is: Maunce Lovel in 1296; Patrick ‘of Albania’ in 1453; William ‘Amuligane’ (probably Milligan) in 1545; Archibald Heriot, until 1550; William Cranston (Vicar and Parson), 1550–67/8; George Douglas Kirkton Mains

Kirkton Mains (kirk-tin-manz) n. lands near Hawick, probably adjacent (or perhaps identical to) ‘Kirkton Tofts’ near Branxholme. They are mentioned in 1464/5 along with the Flex in a dispute between William Douglas of Drumlanrig (Baron of Hawick) and Alexander Gledstains. Douglas had a sasine for these lands and the Flex, along with the associated mill, the sasine being delivered at the ‘capitale messuagium’, i.e. principal dwelling house. There was also a mill there. The lands of ‘Est Manis of the Kirktoun, with their pertinentis, lyand in the barony of Hawie’ were among those to be infested to James, heir to Drumlanrig, as part of his marriage contract in 1470; this is probably the same as (or part of) Kirkton Mains. The lands are mentioned alongside Crumhaugh in Hawick’s 1511 Charter, as part of the Barony of Hawick held ‘in property’ by the Baron. This suggests a location perhaps near Martin’s House or Branxholme Bridgend; however, there is still a possibility that these lands were in the Parish of Kirkton, but somehow associated with lands nearer to Hawick. In 1545 these lands were specifically mentioned in the inheritance of James Douglas of Cavers, as lands he possessed in the Barony of Hawick, and again when infested to his son William in 1558. In that year the ‘liferent’ was granted to the mother of the new Laird, Christian Kerr, the value being 40 shillings and held ‘in blench ferm for one penny of asked’ from the Baron of Hawick. The lands are mentioned (again coupled with those of Crumhaugh) in the retour of James Douglas for the Barony of Hawick in 1572. In 1594 the lands of ‘Cruauch and Kirkton of Manys’ are ratiﬁed to the Baron Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig, along with many others in the Barony and it is still listed among the Baron’s lands in 1615 (it is ‘Kyrktomemanys’ and ‘Kirktoone Maynis’ in 1464/5, ‘Kirkton Manys’ in 1511, ‘Kyrktoun Manys’ in 1511/2, ‘Kirkton Manys’ and ‘Kyrktone Manys’ in 1514, ‘Kyrktoun Manys’ in 1545, ‘Kirkton Mannis’ in 1559, Kirkton Manis’ in 1572, ‘Kirtoun of Manys’ in 1594, ‘Kirktonmamnis’ in 1615 and ‘Kirkton Maynes’ in 1686; see also Kirkton Tofts).

Kirkton Pairish (kirk-tin-pa-reesh) n. small parish a few miles to the east and south of Hawick. It is narrow, being about 8 miles long by 2 miles wide, running north-east to south-west, and bounded by Cavers, Hawick and Hobkirk Parishes. It corresponded to the mediæval ‘Cavers Parva’ and had the status of a Rectory before the Reformation. It formally became a separate parish in the 16th century, and was part of the Diocese of Glasgow. A church existed there at least from the time of Edward I. The Parish is bounded mostly by Cavers, but also by Hawick and Teviothead. The boundary with Cavers used to pass straight through the farm of Cavers Mains. The extent of the Parish formerly included farms as distant from Kirkton village as Winningtonrig and Acreknowe. The lands of Middle were partly in the parish, but included in the Barony of Cavers. In 1649 the land and crops of the Parish were valued at about £4200 and the total value was £4526 13s 4d in 1678. In the early 19th century there were 4 heritors, namely, Elliott of Stobs, Douglas of Cavers, Douglas of Adderstone and Dickson of Tofts. In 1838 it was stated that there were no villages, no toll-bars and no public houses in the Parish. Parish records exist from 1707, although not all births were registered, and only a small fraction of marriages and deaths; there are gaps in baptisms 1710–15 and 1738–42, as well as several gaps in the marriage records. There was a proposal in 1766/7 to suppress the Parish in favour of a new parish in the western parts of Cavers and Hawick (which became Teviothead).
was once run by the joint Cavers and Kirkton School Board. Thomas Wilson was schoolmaster until the mid-1780s, Walter Scott taking over for a few years (including 1787) and then being succeeded by Andrew Scott. The schoolmaster from 1834 to the 1860s was Thomas Little. The ridge overlooking the school has the remains of a hill-fort, consisting of a summit area and a plateau slightly below it, with triple ramparts, but no existing evidence of internal structures. It is about 115 m long by about 40 m, but tapering to the north-east.

Kirkton Tofts (kirk-tin-tofts) n. lands mentioned as an Ingles possession in a 1435 charter, along with Branhholme, Goldielands, Whitlaw, Whitrig, Todshawhills and Harwood, but all in the barony of Hawick (transcribed as ‘Kalkistofts’). This might appear to refer to the farms of Tofts in Cavers parish, near to Kirkton, but it is hard to see how this could have been in the barony of Hawick. An undated charter some time before this (and probably before 1426, since Robert Scott was a witness) has John Ingles of Manor and Branhholme granting the lands of ‘Kyrktoune and Toftis’ in the Barony of Hawick to his uncle Sir Simon Ingles. In 1461 the lands of ‘Kirktone and Toftis’ in the Lordship of Branhholme were confirmed to Katherine, daughter and heir of Alexander Ingles, along with her husband ‘Arnou Gourlau’. And in 1521 ‘6 merkland of Kyrktoun’ in the Barony of Branhholme were given to John Gourlay, as heir to his deceased father, John Gourlay of Rulewood; since the lands appear to have been close to Branhholme, perhaps they were associated with Chapelhill Kirk. This may be the place (or places) transcribed as ‘Tofts, Kirkwood’ in the 1594 and 1615 lists of lands for which the Baron of Hawick was superior (see also Kirkton Mains).

Kirkurd (kir-koord) n. small parish and former barony in western Peeblesshire. Lands there were held by the Scotts from perhaps the early 13th century, and they were probably given the superiority of the barony in the early 14th century. Certainly the superiority was confirmed to Walter, son of Robert Scott in 1389. The family would later move their headquarters to Selkirkshire and Roxburghshire to become the Scotts of Branhholme and Buccleuch, although they continued to hold these Peeblesshire lands until the mid-17th century. Individual pieces of land within Kirkurd were held by Douglas of Dalkeith and Cockburn of Henderland. In the early 16th century there was some dispute over the lands between Sir Walter Scott of Branhholme and James Murray of Falahill. In the later 15th century the lands were considered part of the Barony of Branhholme. By 1574 the lands were valued at 80 merks, when they were considered as a separate barony of the Scotts of Buccleuch. The lands were included in the main Barony of Branhholme in 1634, 1653 and 1661, and according to the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. It was still recorded as an 80-merk land in 1653. The church there was long the property of Soutra Hospital (also written ‘Kirkurd’, ‘Kirklurde’, ‘Kirkurde’, ‘Kyrkurde’, ‘Kyrkerwe’, ‘Kyrkwrde’, ‘Kyrkurde’, ‘Kyrkurde’, etc.; it is ‘Ecclesia de Orda’ in the 1170s).

the Kirk Walk (thu-kirk-wawk) n. former popular name for the route between Cavers and the Cameronian Chapel in Denholm, via Denholm Dean, which the Douglasses of Cavers walked every Sunday through the 18th and 19th centuries.

Kirkwood (kirk-wood, -wud) n. Alexander (19th C.) first pastor of Hawick Baptist Kirk. He served the new church, perhaps intermittently 1846–52. He probably preached in Allars Crescent. W.M. Anderson took over from him. Lord Archibald Johnstone ‘Archy’ (1946– ) politician, born in Glasgow. He obtained a degree in Pharmacy at Herriot-Watt University, became the first sabbatical student President there, retrained as a solicitor, and was a partner in Hawick with Andrew Haddon for a while. He was elected M.P. for Roxburgh and Berwickshire in 1983, is a member of the Liberal Democrats, has been party Chief Whip and also spokesman on welfare issues. He holds the record for the longest period as Hawick’s Parliamentary representative. He has taken part in some Common Riding Ride-outs. He was knighted in 2003 and became Lord Kirkwood of Kirkhope in 2005 after stepping down as M.P. Rev. James (c.1650–1709) born in Dunbar Parish, he graduated from Edinburgh University in 1670, was licensed by Haddington Presbytery in 1676 and became Chaplain to the family of Sir John Campbell, Earl of Caithness (and later Breadalbane). He was then assistant at Wemyss and was presented to Minto Parish by Walter Riddell of Minto in early 1679, becoming minister later that year. However, he was deprived in late 1681 for not taking ‘the Test’. He went to Colmonell Parish around 1682 or 1683. Then in 1684, through the influence of Dr. Gilbert Burnet...
Kirkwud

(Bishop of Salisbury) he was given the modest living of Astwick in Bedfordshire. He is said to have been ‘outed’ with his consent in 1702, and moved to Ireland. He worked hard to circulate Gaelic copies of the Bible, and to promote libraries in every parish. He left some papers to the Presbytery of Dunbar detailing his efforts to circulate the Bible throughout the Highlands in Gaelic. His books were later transferred to the collection of the General Assembly. He wrote ‘A Discourse of the right way of improving our Time’ (1692), ‘An Overture for Founding and Maintaining Bibliothecks in every Paroch throughout the Kingdom’ (1699, 1889, based on which he is sometimes given the title ‘Father of the Free Libraries’), ‘A Copy of a Letter anent a Project for erecting a Library in every Presbytery, or at least every County in the Highland’ and ‘A New Family Book, or the True Interest of Families (1690, 1693). He appears to have died unmarried.

Kirkwud (kirk-wud) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded c.1376 as ‘Kyrccd’, with a value of 40 pence. It was in the section called ‘Forest’, but the precise location is unclear (perhaps near ‘Kirk Hill’ or near the old Castleton Kirk).

Kirkwud (kirk-wud) n. former name for lands listed among those held ‘in tenandry’ by the Baron of Hawick in 1511 and 1572. It is possible that this is an error for ‘Birkwood’ (it is ‘Kirkwood’ in 1511 and 1572).

Kirkwudheid (kirk-wud-heed) n. former name for lands near Winnington Rig. They were listed as ‘lie Over et Nether Kirkwudheid’ as part of the Lordship of Winnington in 1610. ‘Kirkwood’ was listed among lands in the Barony of Winnington in the late 17th century.

the Kirkwynd see the Kirk Wynd

the Kirk Wynd (thu-kirk-wind) n. old road from Drumlanrig Square to the Slitrig, named for its proximity to St. Mary’s Church. It was referred to as a ‘vennel’ in a 1610 saesine. By the 19th century it had become a very over-crowded street. Most of the older buildings were demolished in 1973/74, with a car park by St. Mary’s church and a road through to Slitrig Bank being constructed. Some houses were restored and inhabited in 1984. It is the site where the Drums & Fifes assemble to begin the main day of the Common Riding at 6 a.m. on the Friday.

the Kirk Wynd Brig (thu-kirk-wind-brig) n. another name used for Slitrig Crescent Brig.

kirky (kir-kee) adj. enthusiastic about church attendance and support of church affairs – ‘ma granny was an awfi kirky wumman’ (also ‘kirkie’).

Kirkyaird (kir-yeard, -yeird) n. a church yard, burial ground attached to a church – ‘a green Christmas makes a fat kirkyaird’, ‘…And oot through the cauld kirkyaird’ [WL], ‘…Naething but scoores and scoores o’ craws On every kirkyaird trei’ [DH] (accent on 2nd syllable).

Kirkyaird (kir-yeard) n. another name for the street by St. Mary’s, previously called Old Churchyard, and now named St. Mary’s Place. It was in earlier times part of the burial grounds of the church, the surrounding wall only being built in 1811.

Kirkyaird Entry (kir-yerd-en-tree) n. former name for Wilton Lane, for its proximity to Old Wilton Churchyard.

the Kirkyaird Well (thu-kirk-yeard-wel) n. spring by the old church yard at Spittal-on-Rule, also called the Leper Well.

kirk (kinn) n., arch. the last handful of grain cut at the harvest, formerly made into a kind of doll that was displayed conspicuously during the ensuing celebrations and for until the following harvest – ‘The kirk day cam’, a Kemp began, And hard and fast it grew: Across the rig wi’ lightnin’ speed The glintin’ sickles flew’ [JT], ‘The corn’s shorn, and fast it grew; Across the rig wi’ lightnin’ speed The corn’s shorn, and fast it grew; Across the rig wi’ lightnin’ speed The glintin’ sickles flew’ [JT], ‘The corn’s shorn, Kirnie, kirnie, ho, ho’ [T], ‘ti win the kirk’ is to cut the last handful of grain, ‘ti cry the kirk’ is to give the cheer when the reaping is finished, a harvest home, a celebration at the end of the harvest, involving eating, music and dancing – ‘…At kirk or market there was nane sae bauld’ [WL], ‘…such as acting as doorkeeper at numerous kirns and balls’ [RM].

Kirndean (kinn-deen) n. farm just south of Dinlabyre, on the Liddel Water, to the east of the road, about 4 1/2 miles north of Newcastleton. In 1541 it is valued at 1 merk on the rental roll of Liddesdale, with tenant George Armstrong. It was surveyed along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1718, when it consisted of 1589 acres, bounded by Dinlabyre on the east, Sorbtrees and the Border on the south, Dyke-eraw and lands of the Laird of Whitehaugh on the west and Whitehaugh on the north; a house is shown near the modern farmhouse and another far to the south-east. It was one a home of the Armstrongs and then by the Elliots from the early 17th century until about 1950. ‘Fightin Charlie o Liddesdale’ is described in the notes to Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Guy Mannering’, and is meant to have been an Armstrong or Elliot from here. Walter Lorraine was tenant there in 1681 and 1682. Andrew Murray was tenant there in 1694. Adam Elliot was farmer there in 1797, Thomas Elliot in 1841, Henry Elliot in 1851, William Scott Elliot in 1861 and Thomas Murray in 1868. It is said that William Scott was farmer there in the early 19th century, and had an interaction with his neighbour ‘Little Robbie o the Castleton’. In the late 19th century John Elliot in Flatt carried on the lease after the death of his uncle John Scott-Elliot. In an area of open moorland to the east lies the remains of a homestead, about 100 ft across, which is labelled on the Ordnance Survey map as ‘Homestead Moat’ (and may correspond to the position of the other house marked in 1718), although there is no indication that the ditch was ever water-filled. 3 flints found near here are in Hawick Museum. It is also the name of a farm in Zimbabwe, although whether this is connected is uncertain (the origin is possibly Old Norse ‘kjarn’ and Old English ‘denu’, together meaning ‘valley of rich pasture’; it first occurs as ‘Kyrndene’ in 1541, is ‘Kirnden’ in 1694, ‘Kirnton’ in 1797 and written ‘Cairndean’ in 1837 and 1852; it is ‘Kirden’ on Visscher’s 1689 map of Scotland, ‘Kirn’. It is also the name of a farm in Zimbabwe, although whether this is connected is uncertain (the origin is possibly Old Norse ‘kjarn’ and Old English ‘denu’, together meaning ‘valley of rich pasture’; it first occurs as ‘Kyrndene’ in 1541, is ‘Kirnden’ in 1694, ‘Kirnton’ in 1797 and written ‘Cairndean’ in 1837 and 1852; it is ‘Kirden’ on Visscher’s 1689 map of Scotland, ‘Kirn-den’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and ‘Kirntown’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

the knittin (thu-ni’in) n. the making of garments using needles and yarn, applied either to hand-made or machine made articles. Home knitting used to be much more common, taking up much of the spare time of local women in the 18th and 19th centuries. Straw or quill needles were once used, along with stocking wires.

knitwear (ni’in-wair) n. generic name for knitted clothing, particularly machine-knitted garments. Weavers were certainly a prominent class of workers in Hawick from the earliest records in about 1640. The knitting of stockings is said to have been introduced into Scotland during the time of the Protectorate of Cromwell, i.e. the 1650s. The local origins of the industry are in traditional linen and woollen manufacturing, the latter perhaps being developed through the sheep farming of the local monks. The availability of sheep, and the abundance of sources of water-power were the natural seeds for development. Spinning a weaving were originally a domestic business, but people employed specifically as weavers were already a reasonably large fraction of the population of Hawick when the Burgh records begin about 1640. In 1728 the Council encourage the manufacturing of ‘tarred wool’ by helping with the rent of workhouse and ‘to pay £20 yearly to the dresser of coarse wool’. In 1736 it is recorded that ‘at Kirkcudbright, Hawick, Mony-gaff, and other Places near the Wool Countries, several Packs of tarred Wool have been washed and cleaned, and some of it sorted and combed, spun, and wrought up into Blankets, and other coarse Goods, by private Hands, for their own Use’; the names of Hawick’s first encouragers of local industry are not known. There is early reference to a fulling mill, and wool was spun for manufacture in other towns. By the mid-1700s there was a small factory making linen checks, and from the 1750s Hawick had small factories manufacturing carpets and linen tapes. John Hardie introduced stocking frames in 1771, initially making hosiery from linen and worsted, but gradually giving way to lambswool. In about 1776 there were 65 looms in Hawick, making linens and woollens (including carpets) and just 6 stocking frames. By 1791 there were 14 men and 51 women employed in connection with the manufacture of woollen goods, making about 3500 pairs of lambswool hose and 600 pairs of cotton hose annually. In 1816 there were 7 carding mills with 44 ‘scribbling’ machines and 100 spinning jennies; the Town spun 12,000 stones of wool annually, and manufactured 328,000 pairs of stockings on 510 frames. Hawick grew as a hosiery (stockings etc.) manufacturing centre from the later 18th century into a producer of a wide range of knitwear in the late 19th century. There were over a million stockings made in 1838, with over 100,000 stones of wool consumed in the factories, where there were more than 1200 stocking frames and more than 200 weaving looms, making more than a million pairs of stockings annually, as well as other items. In 1839 it was stated that items being manufactured included ‘yarns, under clothing, flannels, plaiding, shawls, tartans, druggets, cloths of various descriptions, lamb’s wool hosiery of the finest texture, and blankets’. By 1850 there were 268 weaving looms and 3465 people were employed in the industry. In 1869 it was estimated that there were 64 set of machines, 52,864 spinning spindles, 270 power-looms and 100–150 hand looms, with 1.8 million pounds of wool being carded annually. Around 1900 there were 18 hosiery and 14 tweed manufacturers in Hawick. It took many decades for the word ‘knitwear’ to popularly replace ‘hosiery’ as the description of Hawick’s main industry; the word first appeared in the minutes of the Board of Pringle’s only in 1945 – ‘Though I’m forever roving My heart is interwoven With the fabric of this old mill town’ [DF].

knock (k-nok) n., arch. a clock – ‘For taking doun & mending of the knoik’ [BR1701], ‘... and now for mending of the knoike and putting her to chap again’ [BR1701], v., arch. to strike – ‘...he shall keep the Town’s knoike in the steeple in ane good going order and sufficient case and condition, without cracke or flaw for knocking and choping hourly night and day’ [BR1702], ‘...lyewise that oyl be furnished yearlie for the knoike, and towes for the bell ...’ [BR1704] (there were many spelling variants).

(no-kin-ow-bi’) n. knocking over bit, a mechanical device on a knitting frame for pushing the previously knitted loops to make way for the new set in order to continue the chain.

knockit (no-kee’, -ki’) pp. knocked – ‘I couldna thole his priestly greed; His threatening made me scoff; I gied my airm ane angry swing An’ knockit his bonnet off’ [FL].

knoll (nöl) n., arch. a chunk, lump, large piece of anything – ‘...an ahint hit, Ruberslaw’s michty noal, wui plewed rigs an planteens’ [ECS], ‘Sic a muckle noall!’ [ECS] (also spelled ‘knole’, ‘noal’, etc.; cf. knowe).

Know see Knowe

knowe (now) n. a small rounded hill, hillock, knock – ‘he’l be owre the knowe the now’, ‘mibbe there was a saicond shooter on the gressy knowe?’, ‘...We saw some marching owr the knows, Five hunder Fennicks in a Rock’ [CPM], ‘Gi’ me the bonnie broomy knowe, The burn that roond it rins ...’ [JEDM], ‘Fareweel! ye balmy haughs an’ knowes ...’ [JS], ‘Here Hardie’s Hills in rugged beauty rise, With knowes and hollows interspersed between ...’ [JCG], ‘In throwe the knowes o’ bracken That luddle roun’ Winnington Rig: Or slowly alang the ribboned road That said-sidges Crawbyres Brig? ...’ [WL] (sometimes written ‘know’; it is essentially a variant of the English ‘knoll’, although used more frequently; it exists in many local place names, particularly small hills).

Knowe (now) n. hamlet to the east of Hassendeanburn, on the opposite side of the Teviot from Ashybank. It was nearer to the river, with ‘Knowtoonheid’ being a little to the north. Thomas Turnbull was owner in 1643, when it was valued at £279 10s. John Turnbull paid tax on £227 8s for land there in 1663 and Thomas Turnbull in 1678. The lands became part of Minto Parish when Hassendean was suppressed in 1690. The Turnbulls of Knowe, related to the Minto branch of the family, held land here for many generations, before it passed to the Horsburghs of that Ilk through marriage. Tax was paid in 1694 for 6 hearths for ‘Know and his servants’; in fact Thomas Turnbull of Knowe acted as a collector of the Hearth Tax for Roxburghshire. Anthony Turnbull paid tax for 22 windows there in 1748. The lands were listed as owned by David Simpson of Knowe on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, when valued at £227. Edward Heron-Maxwell of Teviotbank was owner in about 1874. A glass stirrup-cup used by this family is in the Museum. Their arms showed an ear of rye between 3 bulls' heads. Andrew Reid farmed there in 1797 (also formerly spelled ‘Knowe’).

Knowe (now) n. former farmstead in Castleton Parish. It is marked ‘Know’ on Stobbie’s 1770 map, to the south of Castleton village and just to the east of Bellsheils.

the Knowe (thu-now) n. occasional short form for the Toor Knowe – ‘Forrenst the Knowe was Jimmie Tamson’s place, The queerest store your een micht see . . . ’[WL].

the Knowe (thu-now) n. former name for the farm at Bowanhill, Teviothead, also known as ‘Henderson’s Knowe’.

Knowebog Hill (now-bog-hil) n. hill in Craik Forest, near the head of the Borthwick valley, north-east of Wolfcleuchhead. It reaches a height of 377 m.

Knowe Brig (now-brig) n. former bridge over the Hermitage Water near Toftholm and Shaws farms, which once carried the main road. A farm by this bridge was known as ‘White Know’.

Knowe Burn (now-burn) n. alternative name for the Toftholm Sike, which joins the Hermitage Water between Toftholm and Netherraw. The road bridge across the stream was formerly known as the Knowe Brig, and a cottage by the roadside was Whiteknowe.

Knoweheid (now-head) n. knowehead, former farmstead to the west of Newcastleton, on the south-west side of Park Hill. It was still occupied by shepherd John Hislop in 1858 and by his son John in 1861. The remains of several buildings and enclosure walls can still be seen.

Knowesouth (now-south, noo-south) n. mansion on the road to Jedburgh, now a private nursing home. The estate was held by a branch of the Rutherford family (descended from the main Edgerston stem) from about the mid-17th century, who sometimes spelled their name ‘Rutherford’. The lands were valued at £484 in 1678. The farms of the estate featured prominently in the Hearth Tax list for Bedrule Parish at the end of the 17th century, with 4 hearths in the house and 19 tenants listed. Robert Bonnar was there in 1690. John Rutherford paid tax for 26 windows there in 1748 and 1753. When Thomas Rutherford died in 1796 and his brother Capt. John Rutherford died unmarried in the early 19th century the inheritance of the estate was disputed between the husbands of different daughters. It eventually went to Thomas’ nephew Charles Scott. He sold it to William Oliver Rutherford of Dinlabyre, who had a mansion built there in about 1835. However, in 1838 Rutherford sold it to George Pott (who had already purchased the neighbouring Ruecastle). Robert Oliver and John Rutherford are recorded as farmers there in 1797. George and Gideon Pott of Dod lived there in the 1840s to 60s. There is an oil painting of the old house, probably from the mid-19th century. The house was re-built around 1870 for William Oliver Rutherford on the site of the earlier house. It has a spectacular 18th century lectern-type ‘doocot’ (although largely hidden by trees). About 500 m to the south-east are the possible remains of a settlement (also spelled ‘Knowsowth’), it was ‘Knoushoth’ in 1694; it may be marked on Pont’s 1590s manuscript map as ‘Cowsmowth’, but is not on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Knowesouth Burn (now-south-burn) n. stream that rises on the north-west slopes of Black Law in Bedrule Parish and runs roughly northwards, past the farm of Knowesouth to join the Teviot. On the west side of the stream are the remains of a settlement. It consists of a roughly circular enclosure, about 43 m in diameter, with another bank outside, lying between 2 gullies. This is probably the ‘encampment’ described in the 1837 parish summary in the New Statistical Account.

Knowetoonheid (now-toon-heed) n. Knowetownhead, hamlet about 4 miles north-east of Hawick, between Hassendeanburn and Teviot Bank. It is on the east bank of Hassendean Burn and a little to the north of the old farm of Knowe. It was locally also known as simply ‘Toonheid’ (or ‘Townhead’) and was formerly known as ‘East Mains’ of Hassendean. It became part of Minto Parish when Hassendean was suppressed in 1690. William Turnbull held it in the late 15th century. It appears to have been part of the lands owned by Robert Scott of Alton in 1643 and owned by Thomas Gray in 1678, when it was ‘Now called Know Townhead’ and valued at £214. It was owned by the Turnbuls of Knowe in the 17th and 18th centuries, although their house was probably nearer to the river than the modern farmhouse. It was farmed by William Little around 1870. The farmhouse contains a carved wedding plaque, showing ‘1628 TT HT’, probably the marriage of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe, with his wife perhaps being Helen Turnbull; it was presumably taken from the old house of Knowe. In the county valuation of 1788 it is recorded as ‘Thomas Gray of Alton’s Lands, now called Knowe Townhead’ and valued at £214. There is another carved stone built into the wall, showing 2 dragons (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Knox (noks) n. Adam (b.1826) son of Walter and Elizabeth Hart. He was the first Cornet from Wilton. He was elected Cornet at a public meeting in 1856 after the first nominee had declined and then the Council had refused to be further involved. He is shown as Right-hand Man in the first photograph of the Common Riding Principals. He worked as a ‘flesher’ (i.e. butcher). Agnes (17th C.) cottar at Horsleyhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. She was probably related to George, John and Thomas, who were also listed there. Andrew ‘Dandie’ (17th C.) married Marion Redford in Ashkirk Parish in 1634. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Firth in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He may be the Andrew who witnessed a baptism in 1690 for Thomas in Ashkirk Parish. Andrew (1690/1–1768) tenant at Newhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Margaret Kirkwood, who died in 1768, aged 74. Andrew (1756/7–1830), tenant of Mainhill, who is recorded on the same headstone, is probably his grandson. A.O. (18th/19th C.) residing at Wilton Mill, he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Dan fictional character from ‘The Gutterbludes’, described as ‘Son of a Duke’s farmer’, one of 3 Teri schoolmates who emigrated as settlers to Canada. David (18th/19th C.) resident at Whitlaw, along with James, according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. The pair were probably the uncles of William, who was later farmer at Meikle Whithlaw; they were said to have succeeded as tenants to John Gledstains. David (b.1821) son of Walter and Elizabeth Hart. He was farmer at lands off Langlands Road, before it was developed. In 1851 he was living at Howlands House on Wilton Path, farmer of 34 acres, employing 2 men. In 1861 he was assistant farmer at Meikle Whithlaw. His wife was Ann, from Newcastleton. Their children included Agnes, William and John. David (b.1820/1) born in Wilton Parish, he was farmer at Martinshouse. In 1861 he was farming 116 acres and employing 4 people. He was also recorded there in 1868. His wife was Agnes. George (17th C.) resident at Newhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to Thomas, who was also listed there. George (17th C.) cottar at Horsleyhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to Agnes, John and Thomas, who were also listed there. He may be the George, married to Janet Robson, whose children baptised in Roberton Parish (when it still contained Hassendean) included Agnes (b.1684), Thomas (b.1687) and Andrew (b.1689). The witnesses in 1684 were John Knox (who was surely related) and John Brown. George (b.c.1805) stockmaking of Howdenburn, and early member of the Relief (Allars) Kirk. He was son of George, who was a private in the 16th Regiment of Foot, and Agnes Gordon. He lived with his sister Janet. A sketch of him exists. Henry (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 along with James, as residents of ‘Cordlane’. It is unclear where this was, but James Davidson in Raperlaw was accused of stealing 40 sheep from there. James (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 along with Henry at ‘Cordlane’. James (18th/19th C.) recorded at Whitlaw along with David on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was probably ancestor of James who farmed at Little Whitlaw a few decades later and possibly uncle of William, who farmed at Meikle Whithlaw. James (18th/19th C.) gardener at Damside who was also a volunteer. He is probably the James recorded as owner of part of Roughheugh in 1788, valued at £15 3s. He spotted the beacon on Crumhaughhill at the False Alarm of 1804. He ran down the Loan and the Howegate waving his gun, with a crowd running after him, reached the Tower Knowe and fired his gun as a signal, gaining the prize of 20 shillings. He could be the James, who, along with Walter, is described in the 1808 will of ‘Auld Cash’ as ‘late in Damside now at Silverboothall’; according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls he and Walter were formerly in possession of enclosures that were part of Silverbutthall, and he is probably recorded as owner of part of Roughheugh (later owned by auctioneer James Oliver). He may be the James who married Jean Irwin in Wilton in 1756 and had children: David (b.1757); Andrew (b.1758); Elizabeth (b.1760); Helen (b.1762); James (b.1766); Jean (b.1768); Andrew (b.1770); Walter (b.1771); John (b.1774); and Isabel (b.1780). The witnesses in 1780 were Robert ‘Irwin’ (probably related to his wife) and Thomas Rae. James (b.c.1790) farmer at Little Whitlaw. His brother William was farmer at Meikle Whitlaw. His wife was Thomasina and their children included: Archibald; Janet, who married a Turnbull; and Thomas, who was cashier at Haddon & Turnbull’s. He was probably nephew of David and James who were earlier at Whitlaw. In 1851 he was recorded there, farming 97 acres and employing 3 people. James (19th C.) resident of Harden in Castleton Parish in 1868. John (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when he was at Horsleyhill. He was probably related to Agnes, George and Thomas, also listed there. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for George in 1684. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Belses Mains on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. John (1763/4–1832) son of William, tenant at Newhouse. He farmed at Faldonside. He married Janet Scott, who died in 1836, aged 58. Their children included William and Jean, who died in infancy. He is buried in Lilliesleaf Kirkyard. John (b.1828) son of William. He was a baker in Melrose. He took over his father’s tenancy of Meikle and Little Whitlaw. However, he gave them up in 1895. He died without issue.

Rev. Robert (1606–59) eldest son of Robert, who was probably the grand-nephew of the reformer John. He became minister at Kelso in 1633. He signed the National Covenant, probably in Hawick, in 1638. He used some vaults in the old abbey as his manse, adding to the chambers used by his father. He firstly married Margaret, sister of John Ker of Lochtour and secondly Elizabeth, 2nd daughter of Sir John Murray of Philiaugh.

Rev. Robert (1606–59) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1668, he was recorded living at Cavers in 1677. Hence he may have been private chaplain or tutor for Douglas of Cavers. He wrote to Rev. Wylie (the former tutor at Cavers) about the apparently supernatural case of Sir George Maxwell of Pollock, and also about the ‘ethart’ spirit, which accompanied a lady who lived ‘in the West marches’ of Scotland. He became assistant minister at St. Mungo’s in Glasgow in 1688, but was forced to give up on account of being an Episcopalian. He was presented to Peebles in 1690, but although he was not settled, he ‘continued to possess the Kirk by violence’ and was eventually forced to withdraw. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Roberton. He married Jean Turnbull in 1682. He is probably the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Graham and Margaret Knox (perhaps his sister) in 1681. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Marion Shiel and their son Andrew was baptised in 1690. The witnesses were James Johnstone and Andrew Knox (who was surely related).
Hutlerburn in order to have votes in Selkirkshire. He married Elizabeth Hart and their children included: James (b.1809); Helen (b.1811); Walter (b.1813; Jane (b.1815); Adam (b.1817); and Helen (again, b.1819); David (b.1821), who took over the farm in Wilton; John (b.1824); Adam (b.1826), first Cornet from Wilton; and Mary. All of their children were born in Wilton Parish. His widow was living at Howlands House in 1841 and 1851. Walter (b.1813) son of Walter. He farmed at Stiches Mains. He was listed there among heads of households in 1840 and 1841. He was married to Elizabeth and their children included Jessie and Walter. William (1721/2–96) tenant at Newhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was recorded there on the 1788–92 Horse Tax Rolls. He married Janet Small, who died in 1791, aged 60. Their son John (b.1763/4) was tenant at Faldonside. They also had 2 children who died in infancy. William (1732/3–77) tenant farmer at Dunstane Moor in Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Margaret Cairns, who died in 1772, aged 34. His brother James (1726/7–1805) is recorded on the same headstone. William (1762/3–1825) tenant at Belses farm. He married Margaret Hume, who died in 1859, aged 91. Their children included: Robert (1799/1800–16); Margaret (1803/4–16); Barbara (1801/2–8); and 3 children who died in infancy. William (1789–1825) local poet, born in Firth, near Lilliesleaf, he lived for a while at The Cottage, near Orchard. He was the eldest son of Thomas, a Lilliesleaf farmer, and Barbara Turnbull (who had been married to George Pott of Todrig). He was educated at Lilliesleaf Parish School until aged 12 or 13 and then spent a few years at Musselburgh Grammar School. He was a good friend of Rev. John Cochrane of Hawick, the husband of his sister Jessie Elizabeth. His family farmed at Todrig, where Henry Scott Riddell was a herdsman in his youth, and later farmed at Langhope. He himself tried unsuccessfully as a farmer at Wrae near Langholm when he was 23, lasting about 5 years. His family moved to Edinburgh in 1820, where he worked as a journalist, wrote sacred poetry, and became a friend of Sir Walter Scott. His publications include ‘The Lonely Hearth and other poems’ (1818), ‘Songs of Israel’ (1824) and ‘The Harp of Zion’ (1825). His poem ‘Mortality’ (also known as ‘Oh! Why Should the Spirit of Mortal be Proud?’), published in ‘Songs of Israel’) was a favourite of Abraham Lincoln and it was also said that the Emperor of Russia had it printed in gold and hung on the palace walls. He was described as short, but handsome, with a fair complexion and light hair, and was said to recite his compositions enthusiastically. He died at Leith after suffering a stroke, aged only 36, and is buried in New Calton Cemetery in Edinburgh. The Museum has an original letter of his. There is a tablet to his memory in Lilliesleaf Kirk. William (18th/19th C.) of Lilliesleaf Parish. He emigrated to Canada, settling in Walterloo County, Ontario, where he called his farm Langside, after the place he left in Lilliesleaf. He emigrated with his sister Jessie (who married Robert Leithead), and their farm was next to that of his cousin Charles Scott, who was also from Lilliesleaf. He later moved to Toronto. William (b.1796/7) farmer at Meikle Whitlaw and later at Little Whitlaw. His brother James was tenant at Little Whitlaw. He was said to have succeeded 2 of his uncles, who became tenants in about 1746 (although it was probably later than this); they could have been the David and James recorded at Whitlaw in 1797. His wife was Nancy Scott (listed as ‘Mina’ in the birth records of her children). In 1851 he is recorded as farmer of 64 acres at Meikle Whitlaw and in 1861 was farmer of 150 acres, employing 5 people. He was still recorded there in 1868. His children included: Williamina (‘Mina’, b.1819), who lived at 11 Glebe View; Isabel (b.1820); David (b.1822), who went to Canada, but returned to Scotland to farm at New Hope, Kirkpatrick Fleming; William (b.1824); James (b.1826); John (b.1828), baker in Melrose, who succeeded to the farms; Margaret (b.1831); Agnes and Jessie (b.1833); and Mary (b.1836). One of his daughters became Mrs. Rutherford from Moffat (sometimes written ‘Knocks’ and ‘Nox’ in early records).

knubbie (n.-, nū-gul) v., arch. to squeeze with the hands and knees, to give artificial respiration (also knuzle).

knuzle (n.-, nū-zul) v., arch. to press the body, especially an injured person (also knugle).

Knuyvet (nī-vīt) n. Sir Henry (c.1506–bef.1547) of Charlton, Wiltshire, son of Sir Thomas and Muriel Howard. He was one of the lieutenants of the Earl of Hertford during the 1545 ravaging of the Borders. He married Anne Pickering in 1537. Their son Thomas was famous as the captor of Guy Fawkes (older form of ‘Nivet’ with many spelling variations).

the K.O.S.B. (thū-kā-ō-es-bee) n. the King’s Own Scottish Borderers, local infantry Regiment, covering the Borders and nearby areas. The Regiment was raised in March 1689 in Abbey Close at Holyrood by David Leslie, 3rd Earl of Leven. About 800 men were gathered in about 2 hours as a ‘loyalist’ force to protect Edinburgh against the Highlanders and other supporters of William of Orange. This force was eventually renamed the Kings Own Borderers in 1805 and the K.O.S.B. in 1887, and formally adopted the Leslie tartan in 1898. The K.O.S.B. has fought in almost every campaign involving the British Army in the last 300 years. There is a record of them celebrating the Hawick Common Riding in Egypt in 1889. The 1/4th Battalion (Territorial Force, pronounced ‘first fourth’, i.e. the first part of the 4th Battalion) grew out of the Border Rifles and included many local volunteers who signed up in the years leading up to WWI. In 1915, because of the losses suffered by the regular army units, the 1/4th were sent to Gallipoli, where they took place in that ill-conceived campaign against Turkey. They later served in Egypt, Palestine and on the Western Front. Later the 7th/8th presented the town with their Colours when they were disbanded after WWI. The entire Regiment was given the last freedom of the town in 1974. The Regiment paraded through Hawick in 2006 before merging with the Royal Scots to become the Royal Scots Borderers, 1st Battalion of the Royal Regiment of Scotland. In 2009 a plaque was placed outside the Town Hall to honour all the men who served with the regiment. ‘For king and country and the Scottish Borderers the story of the 1/4th (Border) Battalion, the King’s Own Scottish Borders on the Gallipoli Peninsula 1915’ was written by Gavin Richardson in 1987 and ‘After Gallipoli: the story of the 1/4th (Border) Battalion, The King’s Own Scottish Borderers 1916–1918: Egypt, Palestine and the Western Front’ in 1992. ‘Borderers in Battle: The War Story of the King’s Own Scottish Borderers, 1939–1945’ (1948) was written by Hugh Gunning.

Kossuth (ko-sooth) n. Louis (1802–94) Hungarian revolutionary, who worked for Hungarian independence, becoming President in 1849. However, the republic was short-lived, with Russia intervening to help Austria. He toured Britain and the U.S. and received ovations as a champion of liberty, including being made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1856 after delivering a lecture ‘in the cause of European Freedom’. One of the welcoming banners in Hawick had been made by James ‘Dictionary’ Murray and said ‘Thy Kingdom Come’ in Hungarian. In Glasgow he stayed at the observatory with John Pringle Nichol, who had been a teacher in Hawick. His first name is also written ‘Lajos’.

Kowe (kow) n. Thomas (15th C.) notary for the sasine giving James Douglas of Drumlanrig the Barony of Hawick in 1484. He was a presbyter of the Diocese of Glasgow. It is unclear if there would be a more modern spelling of his surname.

krame (kräm) n., arch. a temporary merchant’s booth, stall at a fair – ‘Assoilzies George Makwetie fra the claim persewit be John Scott, pethar, for a half dozen of butes, mae or fewer, allegit taken away fra his craime in Hawick’[BR1655], ‘…for the stealing and thefusously away taken out of his craime in open market ane pair of single soled shoes’[BR1680], ‘Sally Maclusky, Betty Johnny, Jamie Adams and Tammy Graham, The little Gover as smart as ony, Auld Mag Lamb and her penny krame’[HI], ‘Gibbie the Gowk’s no’ sic a gowk but he’ll pack up the krame a’ right enough’[JEDM], ‘Rows of ‘krames’ laden with toothsome dainties …’[BM1907], ‘A raw o treis; a raw o krames; a raw o hooses’[ECS], ‘…Better, daur-say, Brocht, factory-fresh (sei telly) til eer hame, twae hunder miles, than frae some mercat-krame …’[DH] (also spelled ‘kraim’, ‘crame’ and ‘cram’); still in use to refer to stalls up the Moor at the Common Riding, although it is now obscure elsewhere in Scotland; from Medieval German or Dutch).

krame-wife (kräm-wif) n., arch. a female stall-holder at a fair etc. – ‘…and on Hopekirk Ba’ morning the kraim-wives regularly took up their station in the kirkyard and exposed their wares of gingerbread, tam trott, and clagam on the old through stones’[WaD] (also written ‘kraim-wife’).

Kristenbury Crags (kris-ten-ru-ree-krawgız) n., pl. Christianbury Crags, a rocky outcrop near the farm of Flatt on the English side of the Ker shop valley. It can be seen in the distance from parts of southern Liddesdale.

Krucrewch (krook-rooch) n. Andrew (16th C.) listed among tenants of Skelfhill and neighbouring farms in a bond of security signed in Hawick in 1569. It is unclear what the modern form of this name would be, perhaps just an error for ‘Crook’ or ‘Crooch’.

KS (kā-ess) n. for a long time the 2-letter car licence plate code indicating Roxburghshire.

the Kosbies (thu-koz-bees) n., pl. popular name for members of the K.O.S.B.

the Kumfy Mill (thu-kum-fee-mil) n. popular name for the Braemar factory on Commercial

1600
Road. It was earlier the business of A. Brodie & Co.

Kush-Mush (kush-mush) n. nickname in use in the 19th century – ‘Here’s Soapy Ballantyne and Wull Slush, Here’s Todd Lowrie and Peggy Neill; Davie A’-things and auld Kush-Mush, And Jenny A’-things is here as weel’ [HI].

kye (ki) n., pl., arch. cows, cattle – ‘...Betide me life, betide me death, These three ky shall gae t’ Liddesdale wi’ me. Fala, &c’ [CPM], ‘...Or, of my great ancestor’s plight, Whan southrons stole his kye by night’ [JTe], ‘He keeps his pony and his kye: It’s strange how some folks get so high’ [RDW], ‘Ho! For the driven kye’ [WHO], ‘See them drive the kye before them’ [RSC], ‘...He had kye in the haugh, he had sheep on the hill’ [JT], ‘...Had cried to the startled guard ‘To arms! How fatten the kye on your Redeside farms?’ ’ [WHO], ‘Sae it seemed that the least the lad could dae Was to lift a wheen kye in the forenicht gray’ [WL], ‘Though gliffed for kye and horses ’...’ [IWL] ‘...For ma slice spells serious danger For Elec Cavers’ kye’ [IWL] (also written ‘ky’; this was once the common plural form of ‘cow’; see also kine).

kyle (ki) n., arch. a pin used in a kind of game of skittles (see also kyles).

Kyle (ki) n. Alexander (b.c.1795) dyer living on the Howegate, at about No. 12. His wife was Jane, and their children included John, Anne, Mary, William, Archibald and Thomas. Alexander (19th/20th C.) son of John, he worked in the tweed trade and then was tobacconist at 3 Tower Road. It was earlier the business of A. Brodie & Co.

Andrew (1805/6–91) farmer at Dinlabyre and Midtodhills near Carlisle. He was farmer at Dinlabyre in 1851, when he is recorded farming 140 acres ‘arabl, of Moor N. Known’ and employing 5 labourers. His wife was Elizabeth, who died in 1908, aged 90. Their children included: Margaret (1841/2–1908); William (1842/3–1903); Mary Anne (1844/5–1922); James; Jane (1850–96); and Elizabeth (1853/4–1924). He died in Inverness-shire and the family are buried at Ettleton. Arthur (18th/19th C.) farmer at Braiddlie in Castleton Parish. He was listed at ‘Broadlee’ in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’. He was also listed as head of household there in 1835–38. He was probably related to Andrew, who was farmer at Braiddlie in 1797. He could be the same Arthur who was farmer at South Greenholm in Castleton Parish in 1841. David (1777–1861) farmer at Broadlee in Castleton Parish. He was son of Andrew and Jean Murray. In 1851 he was listed as farme of 2000 acres of moorland, employing 4 labourers. He married Betty Milligan. Their children included: Mina Crozier (b.1821); Elliott (b.1823); Jane; Andrew; and Anne (b.1833), Anne married shepherd William Glendinning. He is probably the ‘Davie Kyle’, breeder of Dandie Dinmonts, of whom a poem was written by ‘Halbert Noble’ in 1861. He fathered a child with Jean Armstrong of Canonbie in 1832. David (b.c.1785) recorded as a ‘broker’ on the Fore Raw in 1841. His wife was Margaret. Francis ‘Frank’ (1818–c.1900) son of James and Janet. He was farmer at Hillisland, taking over from his father as the Duke of Buccleuch’s tenant there in 1843. He was Cornet in 1845 and owned 74 High Street. His son John was also Cornet and farmed at the Wellogate. In 1851 he was listed at ‘4 High Street – F. Kyle’s’ (although 74 High Street is clearly meant), a farmer of 30 acres, employing 1 person. He was listed as a farmer on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was one of the townspeople who recovered from cholera during the 1849 outbreak. He lived into his 80s and was the oldest living Cornet in the late 19th century. He turned out for the Friday at least as late as 1881. There is a photograph of him with the 1846 and 1897 Cornets; this makes him the earliest Cornet of whom we have a photograph. In 1847 he married Isabella Cairns and their children included: Agnes (‘Nancy’); Janet; Isabella; James; and John. George (18th/19th C.) farmer at New Headshaw, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls.
Perhaps the same George married Margaret Laidlaw and had these children baptised in Ashkirk Parish: Thomas (b.1762); Agnes (b.1763); Mary (b.1765); Janet (b.1767); Isabel (b.1771); and Margaret (b.1775). James (1733/4–1813) weaver in Castleton Parish. He lived at Heughhead, where his wife and some children died. However, he moved to Newcastleton, where he himself died. His wife was Agnes Armstrong, who died in 1803, aged 61. Their children included Margaret (1779/80–93). James John (d.bef. 1797) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Mitchellill in 1751 and she died in Hawick in 1797. Their children included: William (b.1757); John (b.1759); John (again, b.1760); and Walter (b.1765). James (1752–98) flesher in Hawick. He paid the Horse Tax in 1792 and 1797. He married Mary Porteous (1753–1824). Their children included: Mary (b.1778), who died young; Helen (b.1780), also died young; John (b.1781) manufacturer in Hawick; Andrew (b.1784), who died aged 10; and Mary (again, b.1786), also died young. He is buried in old Wilton Cemetery. He may be the gardener James who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Brown and Beatrice Kyle in 1793. James (c.1780–c.1843) joiner and wood-turner of the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He is likely the Kyle recorded around 74 High Street on Wood’s 1824 map (but could be the other Kyle listed at No. 33), and at about the same place in the 1841 census. He probably also farmed at Hilliesland. His wife was Janet and their children included: Nancy; Francis, who became Cornet; and Janet. He may be the James recorded in about 1874 as owner of part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick (even if he was deceased by then). Jane (b.1783/4) proprietor of an inn in Newcastleton in 1825/6, and explicitly of the Grapes Inn in 1837. This was situated at 16 Douglas Square. In 1851 she was recorded as a widow. She was living with her children William and Mary in 1841 and Mary in 1851. She was also at the Grapes Inn in 1852, although incorrectly listed as ‘Kyle’. She was probably Jean Foster, who married George and had children Betty (b.1806), William (b.1808), Fanny (b.1811), Margaret (b.1813), Mary (b.1815) and Georgina (b.1819). John (18th C.) mason in Hawick. His son Robert was also a mason; he was deceased before his son died in 1801. He could be the John who witnessed a baptism for wright James Hogg in 1779. John (c.1744–1800) farmer at Heughhead, son of William and Betty Wilson. He was recorded at Heughhead in the Castleton Horse Tax Rolls in 1789–90. And his father were probably the ‘Messrs Kyles, Heughheads’ who were taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. He married Agnes Murray, who died in 1806, aged 46. They had a daughter Isabel (d.1869). He was buried at Etterston. John (18th/19th C.) gardener at Cavers in 1797, when he was working for George Douglas. John (18th/19th C.) merchant of Hawick, who was the ‘royalist’ Cornet of the ‘Disputed Common Riding’ of 1809, selected by the Council, but opposed by the ‘Wesla Lads’. This was in objection to new rules imposed by the Council, restricting the Common Riding participants to a limited circle of invited guests. The ‘Wesla Lads’ instead appointed their own ‘rebel’ Cornet, John Tullie. Kyle had about 45 supporters, half of whom were said to be strangers, and they were hissed and cursed at by the crowds. He may be the John born to James and Mary Porteous in Hawick in 1781. He may also be the same John who was a member of the Curling Club in 1812. It is possible he is the grocer and spirit dealer of the High Street who was recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory or the stocking manufacturer of the High Street – ‘… Elect a trader ca’d John Kyle, Massy in iz merchant style’ [MB]. John (1781–1851) son of butcher James, he was hosiery manufacturer of the early 1800s, with firm John Kyle & Co. operating on the High Street. He may be the same John who was appointed as Cornet during the disputed year of 1809. ‘John & James Kyle’ was listed on the High Street among hosiery manufacturers in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In the 1841 census he is living with James and Mary, probably both younger siblings. Mary Ann, who is listed as house proprietor and hosier on the High Street on the 1851 census, is probably the same sister; she was on Bridge Street in 1861. He may have been son of James and Mary Porteous. John (1791–1866) gardener at Wilton Lodge for 50 years, he was also a Trustee and elder of the Relief Kirk. In 1851 his address was recorded as ‘Wilton Lodge Garden House’. His wife was Margaret, and children included Helen and James. John (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit dealer on the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. John ‘the Nether Wulton Youth’ (1827–1900) son of Alexander and Jane (or Janet) Reid, he was born at Netherwitton, Northumberland, and his father was originally from Kelso. His family moved to Hawick when he was about 10. He was known as a great runner in his younger... days, hence his nickname. His brothers were William, Thomas and Richard (who was a foreman skinner in Galashiels). He worked all his life with John Laing & Sons, becoming a hosiery manager. He held many positions associated with the Common Riding organisation, and was Acting Father in 1872 for his own son. He attended his 59th Common Riding dinner in 1899, this being said to be a record. He was also a keen Mason, being Master of Lodge 111. On Old Year's Night 1847 he married Margaret Hall from Eskdalemuir, and she died in 1904, aged 76. Their children were: Alexander, Cornet in 1872; James Hall, frame-smith, who married Jane Little; John, engineer in Bloemfontein, South Africa; Mary, who married Robert Millar; and William, who died in infancy. John (1829–1909) son of William and Robina Cavers. He was a carpenter, agricultural labourer and ploughman in Castleton. In 1860 he married Mary (1836–1931), daughter of John Armstrong and Janet Glendinning. Their children were: Janet (1860–1908); William (b.1836); Robina (1865–1952); Agnes (1868–82); and John Armstrong (1871–81). The family are buried in Etleton Cemetery, next to Andrew (d.1891). John (19th C.) son of Francis. He was a farmer who was Cornet in 1885. It is said that his year saw the beginning of the resurgance of interest in the ceremonial side of the Common Riding, with the Council resolving to officially support the events. He may be the farmer John whose property at 74 High Street was demolished to make way for the Pavilion Theatre. John (1871–1958) born in Hawick, son of a fine art dealer Andrew, and Agnes Waugh. He left the High School in 1888, having won the Queen’s Prize for drawing. He worked for 8 years as a watch-maker and jeweller, then got an assistant teaching position in Lancashire, and finally won a scholarship to the Royal College of Art in London. After 3 years of study, he travelled in Europe, taught at Huddersfield technical College and in Alloa and emigrated to Canada in 1905, becoming the Art Supervisor for City Schools in Vancouver. He was later described as ‘an outstanding educationalist and one of the most influential men in the history of British Columbia Arts and Crafts’. He was one of the founders of the British Columbia Society of Fine Arts, started the first art night classes in Vancouver and was also instrumental in starting correspondence courses. He was Director of Technical Education for the Province of British Columbia 1913–38. He is also credited with being the first to sponsor an exhibition by Emily Carr. He wrote and illustrated 3 books on teaching woodwork, lettering, and metalwork, ‘Design for Industrial Arts’ (1931). He married Nellie Hadfield, an English-born school teacher in 1920 and they had at least 2 daughters and a son. He established an educational trust for the High School, the Andrew, Agnes and John Kyle Bequest Fund. Robert (d.1801) mason in Hawick, son of John, who was also a mason. Thomas (16th C.) one of the men indicted in 1552 for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch. It is unclear how he was related to other Kyles. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His name is written ‘Cayle’ in 1737 when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott in Wilton. He married Marion Sliman and their children included Isobel (b.1739). Thomas (19th C.) brother of John, William and Richard. He was a commercial traveller for John Laing & Sons, and his son was also Thomas. Thomas ‘Tom’ (1830s–1921) son of Thomas, he worked for John Laing & Sons for about 60 years, mainly as a commercial traveller. He was secretary of the Trades Committee for several years, Clerk of the Course at the Moor for 11 years and member of the Race Committee and Ceremonial Committee. He was known as a good cricketer and was a keen supporter of Hawick & Wilton Cricket Club. He celebrated his golden wedding anniversary with his wife Jane Ferguson, daughter of Mrs. Burns of the Crown Hotel. William (c.1709–98) born at Burmounth in Castle ton Parish, son of William and Isobell Moffet. He was tenant at Heughead. He and his son were probably the ‘Messrs Kyles, Heughheads’ who were taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. He married Betty Wilson, who died in 1786, aged 74. Their children included: John (1743/4–1800); George (1756/7–1819); and 2 sons who died in infancy. William (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He may be the ‘William, senior, Castleton’ who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Bleauties of the Border’ in 1821 along with ‘William, junior’ (presumably his son). William (18th/19th C.) baker in Lilliesleaf, as recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. William (18th/19th C.) resident of London who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He probably had a local connection. William (18th/19th C.) listed as ‘William, junior, Castleton’ in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Bleauties of the Border’ along with ‘William, senior’. He may be the same William as the fleshers listed in Newcastle-lon in Pigot’s 1837 directory. William (b.1794) son of James and Esther Scott. He was a gardener living on the Sandbed (actually at 6 Buc-bleach Street) in at least 1841–61. In 1852 he was listed as a greengrocer on Buccleuch Street. He lived with his sisters Mary and Agnes, and nieces and nephews Helen, James, John and Margaret.
In 1861 he was recorded as a market gardener.
William (19th C.) recorded at Greenholm among the gentry living near Newcastle in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He could be the same William of Greenholm recorded dissolving the drapers John Armstrong and Company in Glasgow in 1839.
William (1796–1890) carter and farmer at Lea-haugh in Castleton Parish. In 1851 he is recorded as ‘Farmer of about 300 acres more or less’. He married Robina, daughter of joiner John Cavers and Jane Douglas; she died in 1877, aged 71.
Their children included: Agnes (1827–82), who married Andrew Mitchellhill; John (1829/30–1904); James (1830–46); William (1833–1909), farmer; Thomas (1835–1914); Jane (b.1837), who married Matthew Murray; Betty (b.1839); Henry (b.1843) and another Henry (b.1845), who both died young; James (b.1847), a shepherd; George (1850–1908), a builder; and Mary (b.1853), who died at Netherraw. The family are buried at Ettleton Cemetery. William (1829/30–1904) brother of John, Thomas and Richard. He was a commission agent. William (1833–1909) eldest son of William. He farmed at Leaugh, like his father before him. He and his brother Thomas were subscribers to David Anderson’s book of verse in 1868. He died at Leaugh and is buried at Ettleton. William Elliot ‘Willie’ (19th/20th C.) son of Alexander, he worked as a joiner and then coal merchant, and was probably the most famous Hawick rugby player of his day. He played forward for Hawick R.F.C. for many years, retiring after being concussed in the final of the 1913 Hawick Sevens. He came out of retirement during and after WWI and also played for Scotland.
In his first international match he was the only forward not educated at a Public School. He was Cornet in 1905 (formerly ‘Cayle’, ‘Kyel’, ‘Kyll’ and variants).

kyles (kilz) n., pl., arch. the game played with small skittles (James Murray wrote that this was played in Hawick ‘in the early part of the 19th C.’; possibly from Old French ‘quille’).

Kyle’s Close (kilz-kls) n. passageway off the High Street in the mid-19th century, position uncertain. There are Kyles labelled on Wood’s 1824 map at about Nos. 33 and 74; the one opposite the Cross Wynd is clearly marked as a passageway.

Kyle’s Gairden (kilz-gar-din) n. name used in the late 19th century for land near the Playing Fields, where exactly??.

kylie (kl-lee) n., poet. a small Highland cow – ‘All

labey (la-bee) n., arch. the flap of a man’s coat

the Labour Club (thu-l-hee-klub) n. the Hawick branch of the Labour Party has never had a very large membership. Many consider that the Burns Club has replaced it, at least in a social capacity. The club used to meet in rooms above the Queen’s Head. Minute books exist from 1918– 55 and for the Women’s Section 1924–53.

labourers (lā-bo-rurz) n., pl. manual workers, particular those working on farms. Formerly this was the occupation of a large fraction of the local population. Farm-servants were usually hired by the year if they were married, and by the half-year if single. Day labourers were hired for shorter periods. Tradesmen, such as masons and carpenters were paid more.

Labour Exchange (lā-bur-iks-chān) n. until 1940 this was located at 32 Commercial Road (more recently the Y.M. clubrooms). For the latter half of the 20th century it was located in the purpose-built building at the corner of the Little Haugh by the river, which is now a nightclub.

lackanee (lak-an-ee) interj., poet. alas – ‘But lak-an-ee! it happened sae, Their father’s hame in life that they Agane should never enter’ [HSR].

Ladder Law (law-dur-law) n. hill in the headwaters of the Borthwick, just south of Craikhope, reaching a height of 445 m.

laddie (la-dee) n. a boy, young man – ‘hei was hardly mair than a laddie when hei went off ti the War’, ‘The laddie that’s over the sea, Mary, The laddie that’s over the sea’ [JTe], ‘Will the mornin’ bring the laddies back in triumph o’er the foe?’ [JYH], ‘…To be a laddie racing roond The auld Mid Raw’ [JT], ‘…Like my laddie on the lea For his ain countree’ [JEDM], ‘…But aa’ve a little laddie now, As like um as a peli!’ [DH], ‘Hawick’s a grand place ti be a laddie in! Oot on a simmer morning wi the airly sun in eer een’ [DH].

lade (lād) n. a watercourse, especially one that carries water to a mill, also called a dam – ‘they decided ti fill in the auld mill lade’ (sometimes called a ‘mill lead’).

lades (līdz) n., pl. watercourses built to supply power to mills. Those in Hawick at times diverted more water than was flowing through the rivers, while at other times had a reputation for being filthy. Over time large sections of some were covered over, but some parts remained open. Signs still remain of the several that were built in Hawick. They include: the first lade off the Slitrig (the ‘Dum’ of the Backdamgate etc.); the old lade in Wilton, and its extension through Wilton Glebe lands in 1827–28; and the lade along Teviot Road. A survey was carried out of the complex of lades off Commercial Road in 1999/2000, with 2 of them being bricked up afterwards. A section of the lade in Weensland is still visible near Oliver Park.

Ladhope (law-dup) n. farm in the Yarrow valley, between Whithope and Sundhope. It was a Crown property from about 1456, being assigned to Patrick Crichton of Cranston in 1488 and Walter Scott (probably of Howpalsy) in 1490 and 1492. Dicksons were recorded there in 1494/5, accused of rieving crimes. In 1541 the lands were occupied by Robert of Howpasley, paying £24 yearly (it is ‘Ladhop’ in 1456, 1488 and 1490, ‘Laidhope’ in 1492, ‘laidhop’ and in 1494/5 ‘Laudhope’ in 1541).

the Ladies’ Circle (thu-lā-deez-sir-kul) n. a charitable and social organisation, started in 1930, the sister organisation of the Round Table. The Hawick organisation??.

the Ladies’ Clothin Society (thu-lā-deez-klo-thin-su-sl-i-ee) n. local charitable organisation, providing clothing for the poor, active in Hawick in the late 19th century. It was run by Mrs. Palmer Douglas and Mrs. Turnbull of Ormiston.

the Ladies’ Pool (thu-lā-deez-pool) n. former name for a shallow pool below the Cauld, on the north side of the Teviot (with the ‘Cat’s Pool’ being on the other side), used for swimming in summer. The name was in use in the mid-20th century when the river course almost split in two below the Cauld. Boys who went in that side were called ‘jessies’ (also sometimes ‘Lady’s Pool’).

ladies’ purse (lā-deez-purs) n., arch. the shepherd’s purse, Capsella bursa-pastoris, also used for flowers of the calceolaria.

the Ladies’ Purse (thu-lā-deez-purs) n. race held at the Common Riding from at least 1834 to the 1860s. For example in 1861 it was one of only 3 named races, with the others being races for riding gear etc.

Ladies’ Sate (lā-deez-sā) n. Ladies’ Seat, southern part of Todshawhaugh Hill, on the southern side of the Borthwick valley, south of Todshawhaugh farm. It reaches a height of 264 m.

Ladies’ Slack (lā-deez-slawk) n. pass between Heip Hill and Welsh’s Hill, just to the north-east of Whitehaugh farm (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).
Ladies’ Well (la-dee-wel) n. spring just to the east of Knowesouth. It may be the ‘Lady’s well, or Our Lady’s Well’ described in 1837, and suggested perhaps to be associated with Jedburgh Abbey. The Land Tax Rolls of 1811 includes mention of ‘Lady’s Well Meadow’ being part of Newton, adjacent to Lanton.

Ladies’ Edge (la-dee-ej) n. former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, listed as ‘Lady’s-edge’ in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls.

the Lads (thu-lawdz) n. name sometimes used to refer to followers of the Cornet, particularly the unmarried and/or younger ones. Since 1961 the upstairs gallery at the Colour Bussing has been reserved for ‘the Lads’.

the Lads’ Gallery (thu-lawdz-gaw-lu-ree) n. middle section upstairs in the Town Hall, specifically during the Colour Bussing ceremony, when it is taken up by the Cornet’s supporters. Each ‘Lad’ has a ribbon pinned on him by one of the Maids of Honour. It has become traditional for programmes to be made into paper aeroplanes and thrown down towards the Maids of Honour at the end of the proceedings.

Lady (la-dee) n. former house on Hermitage Water, located on the north side of the valley between the Castle and Braidlie, at the foot of what is now Lady’s Knowe (marked on Blaeu’s c.1654 map as ‘Lada’).

Lady Appotside (la-dee-aw-pi’suid) n. name used to refer to Lady Margaret Lorraine of Harwood and Appotside.

Lady Day (la-dee-daa) n. Feast of the Annunciation, 25th March, formerly the beginning of the New Year. The phrase is recorded in the local Commissioners’ Court for 1622, shortly after the beginning of the year had been shifted to 1st January. It was used to denote the end of the hiring period beginning with Whitsunday.

Lady Highchester (la-dee-li-ches-tur) n. title of Margaret Hamilton, wife of Sir Gideon Scott of Highchester (or ‘Haychester’).

Lady Howpaslot (la-dee-how-pas-lo’) n. name used to refer to Lady Scott of Howpasley.

Ladylkirk (la-dee-kirk) n. village on the Tweed in Berwickshire. Originally Upsettlington, its name was changed around 1500 by James IV after he nearly drowned there, it being a popular crossing point for armies. The mansion there was built in 1799, but demolished in the 1930s and replaced by a new house in the 1960s (it is ‘Lady K’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map).

Ladyland (la-dee-lawnd) n. former name for lands in the eastern part of Hawick. They are referred to in a charter of ‘Soltracroft’ (i.e. the Trinitylands) in 1557, which is described as having Ladyland to the east. This means the lands were somewhere east of Trinity, perhaps around what was later called Weensland. They are again mentioned in 1565/6 as being adjacent to the Trinitylands. A 1627 valuation of Hawick Parish states that ‘there is a land, called Ladyland, possessed by Sir Walter Scott of Goudilands, ther are sick lands as are pretendit to belong to the kirk’, suggesting a connection with St. Mary’s Kirk; the lands are valued at ‘4 bolls in stok, ane boll in teynd’. In a 1696 sasine of Charles Scott of Crumhaugh and Goldielands we find ‘Trinity lands’ included, and it seems likely this was the same piece of land, taking on the more generic name of the larger adjacent lands.

Ladyland (la-dee-lawnd) n. former piece of land in the Barony of Minto. It was formerly called ‘Hassendean Ladylands’ and owned by Douglas of Cavers; part valued at £18 was sold to the Duke of Roxburghe before 1743 and incorporated into Minto Parish, while another 6-acre part valued at £16 was sold to the Duke of Buccleuch in 1745 and also incorporated into Minto. It is described in 1683 as being 4 acres commonly called Ladyland, inherited by Gilbert Elliot along with Craigend and Deanfoot. In 1811 it was ‘Hassendean Lady Lands’; the 2 separate parts were still then owned by the Duke of Roxburghe and by the Duke of Buccleuch. The name suggests that the lands (like Lanton Ladylands) were associated with a church for which Douglas of Cavers was once patron (see also Oor Lady Land).

Ladylands see Oor Lady Land

Ladylands (la-dee-lawndz) n. former name for land near Lanton. They were valued at £10 in the 18th century and ‘formerly stated in Cavers parish’. The 1811 Land Tax Rolls describes how these lands had been in the Barony of Cavers, and were ‘Langtoun Lady Lands, now in the parish of Jedburgh’. The lands were probably connected with ‘Ladies’ Well’ and ‘Lady’s Edge’, which were once part of the lands of Newton. Like ‘Hassendean Ladyland’ in Minto Parish, these lands were probably once associated with a church for which Douglas of Cavers was patron, both formerly being contained in the Barony of Cavers (see also Lanton Lady Lands).
Ladylaw

Ladylaw (lā-dee-law) n. another name for Ladylaw Hoose and the area of eastern Sunnyhill around it.

the Ladylaw Centre (thu-lā-dee-law-seń-ˈur) n. multi-purpose commercial building converted from part of the former Wilson and Glenny’s factory on Wilton Path after it closed in 1980. The complex included a furniture and carpet warehouse, small companies, offices and a bistro, which opened in 1983. It was never fully used and closed about 10 years later, being then demolished, and is now the site of a supermarket. Only foundations are left, along with the Bath Street Centre (part of Borders College).

Ladylaw Hoose (lā-dee-law-hoos) n. house constructed above Langlands Road on Rosalee Brae for manufacturer John Wilson sometime before 1846, perhaps as early as 1830. It was the first house built in Sunnyhill, in an area of the old Langlands estate formerly known as Roughheugh, and to which it later gave its name. The name itself was probably invented by John Wilson. The house can be seen as the only one in the Sunnyhill area on the painting of Hawick from the Mote in about 1850. It was built in an Italianate style and had a north wing added in 1902, probably by J.P. Allison. Allison lived in the house himself and installed a fireplace in the central hallway, with an inscription commemorating how he survived a gas explosion at the house in 1910. It is a grade B listed building.

Ladylaw Mills (lā-dee-law-milz) n. textile mill in the Langlands or Roughheugh area, for a long time in the Wilson family, being built for Wilson & Watson’s, then being taken over by William Wilson in 1819. In 1851 it passed to John Wilson & Sons and in 1876 to Wilson & Glenny’s, with whom it remained for a century. Following a major fire in 1959, it was substantially rebuilt in 1961, but closed in 1980, to be converted into the Ladylaw Centre (also sometimes singular ‘Mill’).

Ladylaw Place (lā-dee-law-plis) n. row of houses built from 1841 on the north side of the western end of what is now Princes Street, named after the nearby Ladylaw House. The name vanished when the area was reconstructed around 1971 and renamed part of Princes Street. North of Ladylaw Place there were allotments in the mid-to-late 19th century, and before that the first open field was called ‘the Pedlar’s Field’.

the Lady Riders (th-lā-dee-rī-durz) n. Hawick Lady Rider’s Association, set up shortly after the 1996 Common Riding, amid the furor over whether women should be allowed to ride during the Ride-outs and the Common Riding itself.

Lady Symington

lady’s gairtens (lā-gār-tinz) n., pl., arch. ribbon grass, Phalaris arundinacea (also gairtens).

Lady’s Knowe (lā-deez-now) n. small hill to the west of Hermitage Castle, reaching a height of 223 m. There is a settlement enclosure on the east side, including the remains of a later farmstead and with a trackway leading downhill from it. The slopes of the hill are covered with evidence of early field systems, including cultivation terraces and rig lines.

the Lady’s Pool (thu-lā-deez-pool) n. former name for a pool in the Slitrig near Lynnwood. It is mentioned as part of a story about ‘Yedie Broon’ recounted in 1863 (descending to there from Haggishaag to clean off the sticky treacle toffees).

the Lady’s Pool see the Ladies’ Pool

Lady’s Scar (lā-deez-skawır) n. steep bank on the west side of the Liddel just north of Leahaugh Cottage.

Lady’s Sike (lā-deez-sık) n. stream that effectively forms the western part of the defences of Hermitage Castle, although it was diverted to join the Castle Sike and flow to the east. On the slope between this stream and Castle Sike there is a series of small cairns (the name presumably derives from the nearby chapel being dedicated to St. Mary).

Lady Stirches (lā-dee-stir-cheez) n. name used formerly to refer to Mrs. Chisholme of Stirches.

Lady Summington (lā-dee-si-ming-tin) n. listed among the local landowners of the mid-to-late 17th century by James Wilson. Her name is written ‘Summington’. Her lands in Cavers Parish were valued at £200 in 1643, and in one transcription of the valuation rolls she is entered as ‘Anna McGill, Lady Summington’. Her name appears to be wrongly transcribed as ‘Lady Farnington’ in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. Since her name appears alongside that of Rev. Walter McGill, then she was surely related to the minister. Rev. The children of Sir James Douglas of Cavers with his 2nd wife (a daughter of Sir James McGill) were said to have taken the surname McGill in order to claim inheritance from their maternal grandfather. It is hence possible that she and Rev. Walter were brother and sister, or alternatively (and perhaps more likely, given the timing) they were brother-in-law and sister-in-law of Douglas of Cavers. She presumably married the Laird of Symington, but which one is not clear. By 1678 her lands in Cavers Parish were back in the hands...
Lady’s Well

of the Douglasses of Cavers. In the 1663 Land Tax Rolls her name is mis-transcribed as ‘Farnington’.

Lady’s Well (lā-deez-wel) n. spring on the lands of Borthwickbrae. The 1859 Ordnance Survey Name Book describes it as ‘a well of excellent water’. It lies only about 500 m from the former chapel of Kirkborthwick, which was dedicated to the Virgin Mary.

Lady’s Well (lā-deez-wel) n. spring near Abbotrule church, presumably named after an association with ‘Our Lady’.

Lady’s Well (lā-deez-wel) n. spring lying between Wauchope and Templehall farms, close to the Wauchope Burn, in Hobkirk Parish.

Lady Synton (lā-dee-sin’-in) n. name used for the wife of the Laird of Synton, particularly the widow Isobel Scott.

Lady Todrig (lā-dee-tōd-rig) n. former name used for the wife of the Laird of Todrig, i.e. Mrs. Scott.

Lady Whitehaugh (lā-dee-whi’-uf) n. title used to refer to the wife of the Laird of Whitehaugh.

Lady Whitslade (lā-dee-whi’-slād) n. title used to refer to the wife of the Laird of Whitslade (e.g. in 1707).

laggart (lā-bur’ , -gurt) n., arch. a laggard, straggler.

laiber (lā-burz) n., pl., arch. slobber, slavers (also labber and lebeer).

laich see laigh

laid (lād) n., arch. a load – ‘...as ane hivie lade thae ar owr hivie for me’ [HSR], ‘So on I gaed, wi’ love a lade My heart played loud and flutter ...’ [WAJ], overindulgence in strong drink, as much liquor as one can hold, v. to load – ‘Blisset be the Lord, wha daye efter daye lades us wi’ goudly things ...’ [HSR] (also written ‘lade’).

laid-treis (lād-třiz) n., arch. a large frame to fix to a farm cart to allow it to take an increased load.

Laidlaw (lād-law, -lu, -lee, -li) n. Adam (16th C.) recorded among Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII in 1544. His name was given as ‘Eddie Ladlay’ from Whiteside in Jedforest, and the only other Laidlaw named among a set of mostly Olivers was John of ‘Breerbushe’. Adam ‘Great Legs’ (16th C.) named along with Douglasses, Turnbuls, Sheils and others who were accused in 1590 of stealing livestock and goods from the tenants of Middleton. He may have been from Rulewater like some of the other men named. His name is recorded as ‘Eddie Ladelie Greetleges’. He was also ‘Eddie Ladley ‘great legs’ in 1590 when accused, with David of ‘Antreasawahge’ and ‘Will the Lad’ Turnbull, of stealing sheep and injuring an Englishman. Additionally in 1590 he was accused along with David of Roughlee of stealing cattle from ‘Hefferlawes’. Presumably his nickname meant he had long legs, rather than good-looking legs! Adam ‘Adie’ (16th C.) listed in 1590 accused of raiding the English Warden’s tenants, along with Thomas of the Haugh, as well as Andrew Waugh of Wadeshill and others. He is also ‘Eddie’ when accused in 1590, along with Thomas of Haugh, of stealing a horse from Ralph Salkeld. It is possible he is the same man as ‘Great Legs’. Adam (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Veitch and their children included an unnamed son (b.1660). Adam (17th C.) recorded as being ‘in Little Cavers’ in 1684 when he was listed among a huge number of people declared as fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalanism. Adam (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel ‘Andison’ (presumably ‘Anderson’) and their children included: Alexander (b.1689). Adam (17th C.) cottar at Gatehousecote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret ‘Leadon’ (probably Leyden) and their children included Robert (b.1701). Adam (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He is recorded in Southfield in 1711. He married Janet Fletcher of Hawick Public Library. One of his children died in 1838. Alexander (15th/16th C.) recorded in Edgerston in 1502. He was convicted for commuting with Rutherfords and Grahams who were fugitives and for the murder of Patrick Hepburn, with Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst as surety. Alexander (16th C.) part of an inquest held in Jedburgh in 1533. He was probably local, like all the other men on the panel. Alexander (16th C.) tenant in Falside in 1541. His part of the farm was valued at 25s. He was probably related to Robert, who was also tenant there. Alexander (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Helen Laidlaw in 1765 and their children included: David (b.1767); Violet (b.1769); and Margaret (b.1773); and Margaret (again, b.1777). Alexander (18th C.) married Isobel Thomson in Wilton Parish in 1768. Alexander (18th/19th C.) married Nelly Hobkirk in Roberton in 1802. Alexander (d.1842) tenant farmer at Bowerhope in the Yarrow valley, He survived being buried for 14 hours following an avalanche when he was a shepherd. He was a good friend of the Ettrick Shepherd, contributed to the ‘Scots Magazine’ and wrote essays for the Highland Society. He was related to William Laidlaw, who wrote ‘Lucy’s Flittin’’. Alexander (b.c.1807) farm worker for Ebenezer Beattie at Oakwood. In 1825 Sir Walter Scott writes of an incident in which he came across some little people dressed in strange clothes, sitting under some trees near the Ettrick. Convinced that he was seeing the ‘fairy court’, he summoned neighbours, who also beheld the same sight. However, it turned out that these were puppets which had been stolen from the belongings of a man who had just given a puppet show at a fair in Selkirk, and had been abandoned in the countryside by the thieves. Andrew (16th C.) tenant in Wadeshill in Jedforest in 1541, paying 22 shillings yearly. Andrew (17th C.) resident at Branxholme Town according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Andrew (c.1725–81) tenant farmer at Gair, in Ettrick Parish. He previously lived at Glenkerry and perhaps also at Ropelawshiel, where one of his children was born. In 1746 in Westerkirk he married Agnes Glendinning, who died in 1792, aged 67; she was daughter of Archibald Glendinning and Jane Beatty. Their children were: Walter (b.1747); Robert (b.1749); Archibald (b.1751); Jean (b.1753); John (1755–69); William (1758–62); James (b.1760); Elizabeth (b.1762); William (again, b.1765); John Charles Gray (1804/5–73) youngest son of William, he was named after the evangelist preacher of the Tabernacle. He lived on the Loan (at about No. 14 in 1841). In 1851 he was a widower lodging at 5 Mid Raw with 3 of his children and in 1861 was still there (with his brother in law James Harkness). He married Hannah Harkness (who died in 1849), niece of ‘Pawkie’ Paterson. Their children included Margaret, William, Ellen (or Helen, who died in infancy), Thomas, George, a second Ellen (whose son was Walter Laidlaw) and Charles. Daniel McGowan (1826–64) younger son of William and Jane Fisher. He was a commercial traveller and partner in the family hosiery business. He built Hopehill, intending to be married, but died aged 39. There is a portrait of him. David (16th C.) tenant at ‘Aunterhauch’ (i.e. Antioch) according to a rental roll of Jedforest in 1541. He was probably an ancestor of the later David there. David (16th C.) resident at Roughlee when he was among men accused in 1509 of raiding into England 2 years earlier. He is ‘Davie Ladley of the Roughley’, and he is listed along with Adie ‘Great Legs’. Additionally he was accused in 1590 of stealing horses from John Salkeld, along with ‘Rennye’, Thomas of Haugh and Steven of the Bank. David ‘Cuddy’s Davie’ (16th C.) listed among Elliots, Armstrongs, Turnbulls and Croziers, accused in 1590 of rieving from the Laird of ‘Troghwen’ and Hedley of ‘Garret Shells’. His name is recorded as ‘Davie Laidlea Cuddis Davie’, but it is unclear who his father was. David (16th C.) described as ‘Davie Ladley of Antreahawghe’ in 1590. He was accused of stealing sheep and injuring an Englishman, along with ‘Adie Great Legs’ and ‘Will the Lad’ Turnbull. It seems likely that ‘Antreahawghe’ is Antroch in the Jed valley. David of Sunnyside (16th C.) recorded in 1590 when he was accused (along with Rutherfords, Croziers, Elliots and Armstrongs) of rieving from Woodburn in the previous year. His name is written ‘Davie Ladley of the Sonnye syde’. He probably lived around the Jed valley. David (17th C.) tenant at Jedhead in Southdean Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. David (18th C.) farmer at Highchesters. He was related to John Leyden’s father, his sister Margaret probably being Leyden’s paternal grandmother. He married Isabella Armstrong, who claimed descent from the Armstrongs of Gilnockie; she died in Hawick in 1808, when he was already deceased. Their children included: Robert (b.1753); and Isabella (b.1764), who married Robert Grieve. David (18th C.) resident at Mabonlaw in 1772 when his son David was baptised in Roberton Parish. Agnes (b.1768) was probably also his daughter. David (18th/19th C.) agricultural labourer. In 1841 and 1851 he was at Whithope in Roberton Parish. He married Helen Hart in 1825 and their children included: Robert; George; Isabella (b.1831); Helen; Margaret; and Davina (b.1838). David (b.c.1810) educated at New Mill and Edinburgh, he was Schoolmaster at Newmill from 1837. He is probably the teacher David, living with Thomas and his family at Branxholme Loch in 1841. He may be the David, son of John, born in Minto Parish in 1808. David (1907–2003) born near Hawick, and educated at the High School and then Nottingham University, he worked in accountancy, manufacturing and other jobs. He founded the first Scout troop in Hawick, and travelled to Switzerland for the very first Scout Jamboree. He moved to Cornwall, where he spent most of his life, where he was an enthusiastic Rotarian. He married Elsie in 1936. Douglas (b.1810–77) son of William and Helen Douglas, he was from the Rulewater Laidlaws. He was a licensed grocer in Hawick in the early 1800s and apparently known for selling good whisky. He is listed on the Tower Knewe in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He is recorded at about 3 Tower Knewe in the 1841 census, living with Joan and Jessie, probably his sisters. Probably before 1851 he emigrated to the Toronto area, where he married Elizabeth Ross and had a daughter Mary Douglas. He had a general store in Holland Landing and in about 1853 went to Lefroy, where he traded in grain. George (1797–1844) born in Hawick, he emigrated to America. They lived in Delaware County, New York, then moved to Niagara Township in Canada, and from about 1843 set up a farm at Caistor in Lincoln County. In 1817 he married Margaret Rae (d.1846). Their children were: William (1818–53), born in Hawick; Jenny (b.1819), who died in infancy; Jane (1821–63), born in the U.S.A.; Maria (1823–1913); Margaret (b.1824), who died in infancy; Margaret...

(again, 1825–95); and James (b.1826). Helen see Nelly. Helen (17th C.) listed as resident at Outerside on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Isabella ‘Belle’ (16th C.) tenant in Northbank in 1541, along with Thomas and Bennet. Isabella (b.1865) daughter of William, farmer at Weensmoor, and Agnes Purdom. She was recorded as a pupil teacher in Hawick in 1881 and in 1891 was in Midlothian working as a G.P.O. Clerk. She worked for the Post Office in London. Jackie (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1601 as ‘Jaquie Laidlaw’ who he was part of the raid on the Kers in Jedburgh by a group of Turnbulls and their associates. Jacob (17th C.) recorded at Antroch on the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. James (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branhomel) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. His surname is recorded as ‘Laidlo’. It is possible he is the same man as ‘Jacobi Laidlaw’ listed as a debtor in the Exchequer Rolls for Selkirkshire in 1501, along with David Scott ‘de Frascuni’ and Adam Scott, with Walter Scott of Tushielaw responsible for their pledges. James (16th C.) tenant in Letham in 1541, along with Lawrence, probably his father or brother. They paid 22 shillings yearly, with Thomas renting another part of the farm. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Scott and their children included Malie (b.1651). James (b.1648), with no mother’s name given, may also be his son. James (17th C.) owner of quarter of the lands of Fairnielees in Hobkirk Parish, recorded in a contract of ‘wadset’ of 1647. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Hislop and their children included William (b.1651). The witnesses were William Elliot and William Dickson. James (17th C.) recorded as one of the tenants in Falside in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. Robert was also listed there, and so probably a relative. James (17th C.) recorded as tenant in ‘Wadsholm’ (probably near Wadeshill) in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. James (17th C.) tenant in Kirkton. He is listed in 1684 among those declared as fugitives for being a Covenantter. James (17th/18th C.) tenant in Harwood on Teviot. He was recorded there in 1700. In 1699 in Hawick he married Margaret Hislop from Castleton Parish. Their children included: James (b.1700), baptised in Hawick; and James (again, b.1715), baptised in Ashirk Parish. He is probably the James in Branhomel Town whose son Andrew was baptised in 1702. The witnesses in 1700 were Adam Elliot of Arkleton and William Clerk in Colterscleuch and in 1702 were James Ogilvie (gardener at Branhomel), Henry Orrock and Alexander Hislop (probably related to his wife). Perhaps the same James married ‘Mary Hiselip’ in Kirkton Parish in 1716. He could be the James who witnessed a baptism for James Hislop in 1698. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. His son Adam was baptised in Robertson parish in 1703. Walter (b.1705) may also have been his son. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Deanbrae in 1716. He married Bessie Armstrong in Cavers in 1701. His children baptised in Caves included: William (b.1702); Margaret (b.1703); Walter (b.1705); Walter (again, b.1706); Janet (b.1708); James (b.1711); Thomas (b.1716); John (b.1718); Walter (b.1721); Robert (b.1724); and Agnes (b.1724). He was involved with the founding of the Union Bank of Scotland in 1830. His services to the bank were noticed after his sudden death. He died unmarried. John Douglas (1835–1911) son of James and Isabella Turnbull, he was born at Hallrule Mill. He emigrated to Canada, becoming a grain merchant in the Toronto area. He later settled in Lumsden, Saskatchewan. He married Annie Louise McKeggue. Joseph (19th/20th C.) cashier with Andrew Oliver & Sons. He was Sunday School Superintendent for Hawick Free Kirk 1889–95 and Session Clerk 1889–95. He may be the same Joseph who had a villa built around West Stewart Place about 1880. Ken see Thomas A. Kenneth Lanceot (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Northbank in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest.

Lawrence (16th C.) tenant in Letham in 1541, along with James, probably his son or brother. They paid 22 shillings yearly, with Thomas renting another part of the farm. Lawrence and James were also tenants there, and perhaps related. Lionel (17th C.) recorded in 1590 along with Thomas of Haugh. They were accused of stealing from the Reeds of ‘the Old towne’ in England. Margaret (17th C.) resident at Swinnie according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Margaret (b.1794/5) grocer at Robertson Glebefoot. She was there in 1841, along with Agnes, who may have been her daughter. In 1851 and 1861 she was listed as a ‘Huckster’ at Howcleuchshiel. She could be the Margaret, born to John and Janet Waugh in Wilton in 1796. Margaret Shiel (19th/20th C.) lived at Hazelwood and was made a Justice of the Peace in 1921. Marion (d.c.1685) resident of Abbotrule whose will is recorded in 1685. Nelly (b.1777) youngest daughter of William, wright of Town-o-Rule. She was christened ‘Nelly’ rather than this being short for something (although the 1841 census lists her as ‘Helen’). She worked on farms and took up residence at the Sclenty. She was mainly self-educated and was a keen reader. At the age of 49 she became the teacher at the ‘Sclenty Schuil’, which Mrs. Cleghorn set up in Hobkirk Parish. She was always known as ‘Mrs. Laidlaw’ although she was never married. She was known as a strict disciplinarian, but very fond of teaching. She is listed as a teacher at Sclenty Hall in 1841. She is buried in Hobkirk cemetery. Ninian ‘Ringan’ (16th C.) probably name of ‘Rennye Ladley’ recorded in 1590 when accused of stealing a horse from Ralph Salkeld. This was along with Thomas of Haugh, Steven of the Bank and David of Roughlee. He was probably from somewhere in the Jed valley. It seems likely that the same ‘Ninian Laidlo’ was listed along with Olivers of Southdean and William Kirkton of Stewartfield in 1572/3, when Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and Richard Rutherford of Edgerston were their cautioners; this was probably related to Kerr of Ferniehirst being declared a fugitive and all his former supporters swearing allegiance to the Crown. Patrick (16th C.) tenant in part of Harelawcleuch in 1541, along with John Oliver and Richard Oliver. He was probably related to John, who was tenants in the other part. Peter Fisher (1830/1–1917) 2nd surviving son of William, and brother of Thomas and William, he was named after his maternal grandfather. He planned to enter the ministry, but instead joined his father’s manufacturing business, then set up on his own as a hosiery manufacturer in Melgund Place. He later moved to Appletreehall, although that factory burned down. He then lived at Wilton Grove, where he ran a small frame shop, which was later taken over by Robert Murray, then Mr. Routledge and eventually by Peter Scott. He moved to Jedburgh at one point, to work at Allars Mill (run by other family members), but spent most of his long life in Hawick. He later lived at Galabrae and became a coal merchant, auctioneer and newspaper correspondent. He was the last surviving member of the first ‘reformed’ Council, and one of the last two surviving Hawick Burgess. In the 1850s he was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District. He joined the Free Church at the Disruption, and the first meeting to set up a Free Church in Wilton took place in his warehouse in 1866. He was described as ‘unconventional in manners and address’. In 1857 he married Catherine Gray in Rothbury. Their children were: William, who died young; George (b.1861), also died young; Jessie Lindsay (b.1862); Jane Fisher (b.1864), who married W.F. Duncan; another William (b.1866), who spent many years in Australia and later farmed in California; George Gray, a fruit grower in California; Mary, who married G.A. Hillman of Chino, California; Thomas; Daniel, a chemist in Basingstoke; and Catherine, who married chemist W.B. Rawlinson. He was healthy to the end, walking from his house at Galabrae into town until about a year before his death. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery.

Peter (19th C.) resident of Wilton. He married Rachel Scott in 1862 and their children included: Helen (b.1863); Hannah (b.1865); Sarah (b.1867); Thomas (b.1869); Robert (b.1871); and Sarah (again, b.1874). Richard (19th/20th C.) served as a Bailie and also as Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire. He also wrote articles for the Archaeological Society Transactions. In 1939 he was living at Wilton Lodge. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded being ‘in knawis edztourm’ in 1502. He was presumably tenant in part of Edgerton. He served as surety for his brother Walter (alias ‘Rutherford’), as well as for himself, and was fined for non-appearance. Robert (16th C.) tenant in Falside in 1541. His part of the farm was valued at 25s. He was probably related to Alexander, who was also tenant there. Robert (17th C.) recorded as tenant in Whiteside in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. Robert (17th C.) recorded as one of the tenants in Falside in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. He was probably related to James, who was also listed as a tenant there. Robert (17th C.) recorded in a rental roll of 1669 along with Adam Oliver. It is unclear where they were tenants, but perhaps Northbank or Slack. Robert (17th C.) listed in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. It is ambiguous where he was a tenant, but he is listed right after John in Wadeshill and before Robert in Southdean Law. He could be the tenant of Wadeshill who is recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. Robert (17th C.) listed as tenant in Southdean Law in the 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Roughlee according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He is probably the same Robert recorded at Southdean Parish on the crossed out part of the rolls. Robert (17th C.) resident of Northbank according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded in Haregrain in 1709 when his son James was baptised in Hawick Parish. The witnesses were Walter Grieve in Park and Walter Scott in Merrylaw. Perhaps the same Robert was herd in Commonsides in 1714 when his unnamed child was baptised, with witnesses Thomas Hume ‘preacher’ and Walter Purdom. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Redfordgreen in 1711 and 1724. His children included Janet (b.1711) and Bessie (b.1724). Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Eilrig in 1711. His children included Andrew (b.1711). He must be distinct from the Robert in Redfordgreen, since the baptisms are just a month apart. Robert (18th C.) farmer at Hyndlee in Hobkirk Parish in 1785–88, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. He was surely related to Thomas who was farmer there immediately afterwards. Robert (18th C.) tenant of Falnash from about the 1760s. He was a trustee for the creditors of Robert Shortreed of Easter Essenside in 1778. He was listed on the Horse Tax Rolls in the period 1785–97. In 1797 he was recorded having 3 work horses as well as 1 saddle horse. He also paid tax for 5 dogs in the Dog Tax Rolls in 1797. Around 1799 he was one of the local men who contributed money to help in the war against France. He may have been father of Elizabeth, who married William Elliot in Millburnholm. He may also have been father of Thomas, who moved from Falnash to take over the farm of Todshawhill in Eskdalemuir after the ‘Gonial Blast’ of 1795. He married Jane Shortreed and had children born in Cavers and Hawick Parishes: Elizabeth (b.1750); Mary (b.1752); Margaret (b.1753); Robert (b.1755); Jane (b.1759), who may have married Rev. William Hardie Moncrieff and died in 1821 at Falnash; Janet (b.1762); Thomas (b.1764); Janet (again, b.1765); William (b.1766); John (b.1769); Margaret (b.1771); and Cornelius (b.1772). The witnesses to the 1764 baptism were John Pott and George Pott of ‘Ridge’, while in 1766 they were Walter Scott senior (Commonsides) and Robert Scott (Skelfhill). Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Gorrenberry, recorded on both the Horse Tax Rolls in 1792–97. He also paid the dog tax in 1797. He may be the Laidlaw at Gorrenberry whose daughter Jean married Henry Elliot of Bush. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Falnash. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821 and Robert Wilson’s ‘ History of Hawick’ in 1825. He may have been son of Thomas and grandson of the earlier Robert, tenant at Falnash. Robert (d.bef. 1809) wright at West Port. He was already deceased in 1809 when his wife Margaret Scott died. He married Margaret Scott in 1790. He was probably the Hawick mason who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded at Harden in 1786 when his son Walter was baptised in Roberton Parish. He could be the Robert who married Margaret Grieve in Roberton in 1786. Robert (18th/19th C.) tenant in Kingledoors. In 1788 (and also in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) he is recorded as owner of the parts of Greenhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish that had previously been owned by Ralph Davidson and Andrew Davidson, valued together at £210 5s 6d. Robert (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Sibbald in Wilton Parish in 1803. Robert (18th/19th C.) carrier in Hawick. His son James died in 1819. He also had a child who died in 1838. He may be the Robert who married Anne Walker in Wilton in 1837. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Beatrix Michie and their children included: William (b.1815). Robert ‘Auld London’ or ‘London Laidlaw’ (1792–1878) son of William, the first of the Laidlaw family.
the family to come to Hawick, with his mother being Margaret Aitken. He rented the Moat and other fields and sold milk etc., at his house at 17 Loan. He acted as one of the witnesses called to London to give evidence about the conduct of some Hawick men at the election of 1837, and was given his nickname as a result. He is said to have told his friends on his return that during the boat trip there had ‘only been a fir deal between him and eternity’. His nickname was also pronounced ‘Auld Lunan’. He married Rachel Rae, who died in 1866, aged 71. Their children were: William (b.1815); Margaret (b.1820), who married Andrew Blyth; Rachel (b.1822); Janet (b.1825); Jane (b.1827); and Robert (b.1832), who was Cornet in 1852 and married Jessie Gow. He is probably the stockmaker Robert whose infant son’s death is recorded in 1822 – ‘Kinly Stick and eternity’. His nickname was also pronounced

Robert ‘Robbie’ (19th C.) appointed choir-master of Hawick Parish Church in the mid-19th century, being one of the first to hold such a position in Hawick. Robert (b.1825/6) butcher in Denholm. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed as a butcher and shopkeeper. In 1861 he was living with his mother Mary and sister Margaret, probably on Main Street. He may be the Robert who chaired the centenary Burns night in Denholm in 1859. Robert (1832/3–1908) son of Robert, he was a mason to trade, but later took over his father’s fields up the Loan. He was Cornet in 1852. He married Jessie Gow from Perthshire, who died in 1910, aged 48. Their children included James (who died aged 25 at Burnflat Cottage), John (who died in infancy), Robert (who died aged 17), Stewart (who died in infancy), another Robert (who died in infancy), Rachel, Eliza (who married Robert Oliver Pott, from Duns, woollen manufacturer in Honley, near Huddersfield), Walter and Agnes (who lived at Thongsbridge, near Huddersfield). Robert (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Elizabeth Murray and their children included James (b.1863) and Janet (b.1866). Robert Grierson (1856/7–1933) son of Thomas, he helped run the family tweed manufacturing business along with his brother William. He was for a while President of the South of Scotland Chamber of Commerce. He was also Captain of the Golf Club. He lived at Hazelwood in the late 1800s. After the firm folded around 1908 he carried on as a commission agent, finally retiring only a few years before his death, and passing on that business to George Wilson & Sons. Sir Robert (1856–1915) 2nd son of William and Agnes Purdon, he was born at Bonniechan. He was educated at Kirkton and Denholm schools, and served his apprenticeship with Wood, Graham & Co., drapers in Hawick. He then moved to work as a draper in London, leaving in 1875 for Cape Colony (i.e. South Africa), where he carried out business in Kimberley. In 1877 he sailed for Japan, but broke his journey in India. He moved to Calcutta, where he worked for 5 years. In 1881, along with Edward Whiteaway, he set up Whiteaway, Laidlaw & Co., which operated on a strictly cash basis (unusual for businesses in India in those days), with the first premises in Chowringhi. The firm expanded from drapery into general goods, and soon there were department stores in about 20 major cities throughout India. In 1898 he became sole partner and the firm expanded into other Asian cities (including Shanghai and Singapore); it was often referred to as ‘the Selfridge’s of India’, at its height employed 2400 people, and remained in business until 1962. He also owned tea plantations in Darjeeling and rubber estates in the Federated Malay States, and was senior partner in a shipping firm. He joined the American Methodist Church in India and became involved in missionary work and Christian schools. In particular he supported the Calcutta Boy’s School, which opened in 1877, with a girls’ school following 9 years later. He spent 20 years in India before returning to Britain, settling in Chislehurst. He bought a new house there by Camden Park and named it ‘Bonchester’; the street that it is on was later called Bonniechan Close. A Liberal, he became more interested in politics on his return to Britain, and was M.P. for West Renfrewshire 1906–10, with Winston Churchill being one of his political supporters. He was knighted in 1909, and became British Commissioner to the International Opium Commission in Shanghai. In 1909 he moved to ‘The Warren’ at Coney Hall, Hayes, and grew rhododendrons and azaleas there. A keen traveller, he was a Fellow of the Royal Geographical Society. He was also President of the World’s Sunday School Association and an Executive of the National Temperance League. In 1912 he purchased the estate of Wolfelee from Edward Elliot, 6th Laird; in later life he was referred to as being ‘of Wolfelee’. In 1879 he married Mary, daughter of Capt. W. Blow Collins and widow of W.L. Francis of the India Office. He became step-father to the several children of his wife, and together they had children: William, who died in infancy; Ethel; Mildred (or Margaret); Dorothy; and 2 daughters who also died in infancy. He had the William Laidlaw Memorial Hall erected at Bonchester Bridge in memory of his son William, as well as his father, who was also William. He left some money in his will to support a school for poor children in South India, which is still known as the Laidlaw Memorial School, Ketti Nilgiris. He privately published ‘By the Way’, about a trip he took around the world.

Robert Henderson (1872–1953) writer of the words for ‘Auld Hawick My Dreams’ and ‘Teviotdale’, among other songs. He was son of stocking-maker Thomas and Robina Henderson and born at 6 Slitrig Bank. He apprenticed as a printer in Hawick, but emigrated to America, working in Boston. On returning to Hawick he joined the Hawick Express and became foreman printer there. He contributed poems to the newspaper and also wrote the Betty Whutson’s Letter column for many years. He wrote an article on the Verter Well and associated poetry competition for the Archaeological Society. He was long connected with West Port Church, being Session Clerk there for 22 years, as well as Sunday School Superintendent. He was also a lay preacher himself and was a member of Lodge St. James 424. He married Agnes Anderson. He lived at 22 Beaconsfield Terrace, where he died, and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. Note that an older brother of the same name was born in 1863 and died in infancy, leading to some confusion over his own year of birth.

Simon (15th C.) listed as a witness on the 1432 sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas. His name is recorded as ‘Symone Laidlaw’ and he may have been a ‘presbyter’, along with Thomas Falconer.

Simon (18th C.) farmer at Boosmill in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1789–94 Horse Tax Rolls. He married Isobel Anderson and their children, baptised in Ashkirk Parish, included: Thomas (b.1758); Helen (b.1760); and Adam (b.1762). He is probably the Simon, son of Adam and Helen Bell born in Ashkirk in 1730. Steven of Bank (16th C.) recorded in 1590 of stealing horses from Englishman John Salkeld. His name is recorded as ‘Steven Ladley of the Banke’ and others named are ‘Renny’, Thomas of Haugh and David of Roughlee. He is surely related to Ninian, who was recorded as tenant ‘in the Bank’ in 1572/3. Thomas (16th C.) tenant in Northbank in 1541, along with ‘Belle’ and Bennet. Thomas (16th C.) tenant in Letham in 1541, paying 22 shillings yearly. Lawrence and James were tenants in another part of Letham and probably related. Thomas (d.1543) tenant of the Earl of Angus.

John Musgrave led a party of Englishmen on a raid into Scotland in July 1543 in which he was killed trying to recover the spoils from his farm. It is unclear where his farm was, but since the Douglases held much of Southdean, it could be that he was the tenant of Letham. Thomas (16th C.) son of Lyle. He was listed as ‘Lyalles Thome’ among men complained about by the English Warden for a raid into England in 1587. The other men were local Scotts, Oliver’s and others. Thomas (16th C.) tenant in the farm of Haugh in the Jed valley. In 1590 he was accused by John Forster of having reset Clement Crozier (son of Martin) and William Oliver of Lustruther. He was recorded as ‘Thomas Ladelye of the Hawghe’ in 1590 when he was among a group accused of taking livestock, goods and prisoners from the Pott’s of Carrick; others listed include Elliots of the Hill, Martin’s Cleen Crozier, James Douglas of Earlside and John Henderson of Plenderleith. He was also listed in 1590 accused of raiding the English Warden’s tenants, along with ‘Eddie’, as well as Andrew Waugh of Wadeshill. Additionally he and ‘Eddie’ were accused in 1590 of stealing a horse from Ralph Salkeld and along with ‘Renny’, Steven of the Bank and David of Roughlee he was accused of stealing horses by John Salkeld. He was further recorded along with Lionel in 1590, accused of stealing from the Reeds of ‘the Old towne’ in England. Thomas (17th C.) paid the land tax in Southdean Parish on behalf of the Marquess of Douglas in 1663. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (17th C.) tenant in the farm of Rouchhirst according to a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. ‘Martin Laidlae, yr.’ was also listed, and presumably his son or brother. Probably the same Thomas was listed at Rouchhirst in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls, along with John. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as tenant of ‘Antwoch’ (i.e. ‘Antroch’) in a rental roll of 1669 for Jedburgh Forest.
tenant at the farm of Haugh in the Jed valley according to a 1669 rental roll. Probably the same Thomas was still tenant in Haugh on the Hearth Tax roll of 1694. There were Laidlaws at Haugh at the end of the 16th century. Thomas (17th C.) married to ‘Euphan Bellinden’. Their son William was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1676, with witnesses Thomas Borthwick and Robert Grieve. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Isobel Lorraine and their children included: Helen (b.1686); and Isobel (b.1689). He may be the Thomas who witnessed a baptism in Roberton in 1686 for John ‘Bleak’ and Katherine (who may have been his sister, or other relative). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Stirches in 1747. He is probably the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for John Smith (also living in the Stirches area) in 1747. He married Margaret Turnbull in 1747 and their children included: James (b.1745); Thomas (b.1747); Margaret (b.1750); and Robert (b.1752). The witnesses in 1747 were Walter Scott and James Dryden. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Anderson and their children included: Janet (b.1769); Thomas (b.1771); Betty (b.1773); Agnes (b.1775); Adam (b.1778); and Adam (again, b.1780). Thomas (18th C.) farmer at Hyndlee according to the 1789–91 Horse Tax Rolls. He succeeded Robert as farmer, and was presumably his son or brother. Thomas (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1792 (along with fellow weaver William) he witnessed a baptism for Walter. He may thus have been related to the carpenter-making Laidlaws. Thomas (18th/19th C.) ‘gauger’, i.e. exciseman in Hawick. The death is recorded in 1811 of ‘Mrs. Laidlaw’, spouse to his father. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Newlands in Minto Parish, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 horses. Thomas (d.1823) farmer at Falnash. He was probably son of Robert, who also farmed at Falnash. He was listed at Falnash on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1786. He took on the additional farm of Nether Cassock in 1800. He was probably the ‘Mr Laidlaw of Falnash, a gentleman of great responsibility and intelligence’ who took the young Tom Jenkins into his household, and later encouraged his education. He married Margaret Beat- tie and had one son, Robert. He was listed at Nether Cassock when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Thomas (18th/19th C.) shoemaker at Denholm, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory Thomas (1801/2–28) son of William. He emigrated to America and died in a canal there aged 26. His children included William (grocer in Hawick and manufacturer at Cumledge Mills), Thomas (also grocer for a while), Walter (who moved to Australia), Robert (hosiery manufacturer of Glasgow, who moved to New Zealand) and Catherine (who married Alexander Mercer and moved to Australia). Thomas (b.1810/1) born in Wilton Parish, he was a farmer at Longbaulk. In 1841 he was living at Easter Branxholme Loch (with a teacher, David, who was probably his brother). He was still there in 1851. In 1861 he was recorded as farmer of 20 acres there. His wife was Hannah and their children included John, David, Peter, Thomas, Sarah, Helen, Hannah and Mary. Thomas (b.1820s) 2nd son of Thomas. He carried on his brother William’s grocer’s business at 4 High Street, then moved to Bolton. His children included William, Thomas, James and Catherine. Thomas ‘Chinny’, ‘Secky’ (1829–1907) hosiery manufacturer who ran William Laidlaw & Sons from 1855, and built the mansion house he called ‘Sillerbuthall’ (completed in 1866). His name is entered onto the Land Tax records in about 1874 as owner of Dovemount and Silverbuthall (acquired in 2 parts from James Scott) and also for owning ‘Souter’s Acre’ that was formerly part of the Whitehaugh estate. He was recorded at Silverbuthall in 1868. He was the third son of William, and continued to develop the family business. He acquired Lynnwood Mills from William Nixon in 1864, carrying out more yarn spinning, while giving up hosiery, but extending Teviot Crescent Mills. It is said that he was an easy-going boss until he found out he was being cheated by some of his employees, and thereafter was much harsher; this probably explains his nickname of ‘Secky’ (and perhaps also ‘Sheckum’). His manner was described as being brusque and unaffected. In the 1850s he served on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Hawick District. He was a Conservative in politics and was Councillor for North High Street Ward 1861–66. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He was also a member of the South of Scotland Chamber of Commerce, being President for a while. He was for many years Chairman of Hawick Gas Company. He also helped found St. Andrew’s Free Church, and deacon there for a long time. He married Beatrice, daughter of Robert Grierson, and she died in 1898, aged 66. Their children were: William; Robert Grierson, Daniel McGowan, who died aged 6 after an accident with a pony; Elizabeth, who died in infancy; Elizabeth (again), who married solicitor Henry Cousins; Jane Beatrice (b.1868), who married Anton Becker of Leeds; Margaret Isabella (b.1871), who married E. Jenkins, of the Bank of Scotland; and Kate, who lived in Edinburgh. He was buried at the Wellogate and his sons William and Robert G. wound up the family business about a year later. Several stories are told about him (in notes by James H. Haining). Thomas (19th C.) stocking-maker in Hawick. He married Robina Henderson, and their children included: Thomas (b.1864); Robert Henderson (b.1866), who died in infancy; William (b.1868); John Henderson (1870), a tailor who emigrated to Boston and settled in Port Hood, Nova Scotia, with his son Alexander Fraser being a leader in the Canadian co-operative movement; Robert Henderson (b.1872), song writer; and William (again, b.1874). Thomas (19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Ann Paterson and their children included Mary (b.1871).

Thomas Hill 'T.H.' (1846–1915) born in Annan, he became a master painter in Hawick. He was also a Bailie, and known as a local artist, living at 13 High Street. He illustrated Robert Murray’s ‘Hawick Characters’, Goodfellow’s ‘Guide to Hawick’ and Tancred’s ‘Rulewater and its People’. He also painted a back view of the old Town House. His wife Jane Scott Pow was daughter of Gavin Pow and sister of John Pow. He was also the ex-Bailie Laidlaw who was on the initial Common Riding Ceremonial Committee of 1887 and served as a Race Steward. Thomas A. Kenneth ‘Ken’ (1936–) son of Jean and Arthur of 6 Northcote Street. He started cycling at age 15, and became extremely successful. He won the Scottish Daily Express 3-day road race in 1957, later winning the Scottish 100 mile championship in record time. He was the only Scot in the 1960 Olympic Games team and in 1961 was the first Scot to complete the Tour de France, leading during the 16th stage. He emigrated to New York in 1964, where he worked as a carpenter, and later moved to Savannah, Georgia. He married Theresa and emigrated to Savannah, Georgia. He married Theresa and emigrated to Savannah, Georgia. He married Theresa and emigrated to Savannah, Georgia. He married Theresa and emigrated to Savannah, Georgia. In 2005 he was made an Honorary Life Member of the Hawick Cycling Club at a special dinner. An annual event in Hawick, the ‘Ken Laidlaw Sportive’, was named in his honour. Walter (15th/16th C.) recorded is 1502 as brother of Robert ‘in knawis edzartoun’ and also in the same place. He was ‘alias Ruthirfurd’, although it is unclear hy he would have had this nickname. His brother was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Walter (17th C.) recorded as ‘Walter Laidley in Ormiston’ on the 1684 list of men declared rebels for refusing to take ‘the Test’. This is probably the Ormiston near Hawick. Walter (17th C.) resident of Deanbrae according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Perhaps the same Walter had children baptised in Cavers Parish, including: Isabel (b.1696); Bessie (b.1701); and Janet (b.1713). Walter (1659/60–1712) tenant in West Deloraine. He is buried in Borthwick Waas, along with 6 of his children. He could be the Walter whose children baptised in Ettrick Parish included: an unnamed son (b.1695); William (b.1696); Helen (b.1696); Jean (b.1697); William (again, b.1697); an unnamed son (b.1699); and Margaret (b.1706). Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1721 when he was paid by the Council ‘for a sled fut when ye robbish was taken away at he cros’e. He was presumably a tradesman of some sort in Hawick. He may be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Scott in Hawickshiel in 1766. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Spinny and their children included: Isobel (b.1718); and James (b.1720). Walter (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Christian Anderson and their children included: Isobel (b.1737); and Margaret (b.1742). Walter (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Smail and their children included Margaret (b.1741). Walter (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Eilrig in 1733, 1735 and 1736. He may be the Walter who married Janet Chisholme in Roberton in 1731. His children included: Margaret (b.1732); Janet (b.1733); and Margaret (again, b.1736). Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Wilson and their son William was baptised in 1745. Walter (18th/19th C.) probably brother of William, with whom he came to Hawick to work in the carpet factory. He married Mary Miller in Hawick in 1780 and their children included: William (b.1781); Beatrix (b.1784); Isabel (b.1785); William (again, b.1788); Margaret (b.1792); and Robert (b.1796). The witnesses in 1792 were weavers William and Thomas Laidlaw, who were probably his brother and another relative. Walter (18th C.) recorded in 1787 as ‘Saughlaw’, when his daughter Margaret died and again in 1795 when his unnamed child died in Hawick Parish. Presumably the designation was the place where he lived, but this is unclear. He was probably related to James ‘sauglaw’, recorded in 1810.
Walter (b.1780) son of James and Margaret Scott. He was born at Weensmoor in Hobkirk Parish. He became head gardener at Raby Castle, home of the Duke of Cleveland. He had daughters Mary and Anne. Walter (b.c.1780) born at Meadowshaw, son of James and Isabella Scoon. He became a butcher in Hawick. He was listed on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was living at about 19 High Street. In 1801 he married Margaret Oliver (b.1777) in Kirkton. Their children included: Robert (b.1802); Mary (1806–81) married James Little; Isabella (b.1812) married Mr. Temple; and Walter (b.1816). Walter (b.1811/2) from Jedburgh, he was a blacksmith in Wilton. In 1851 he was on Wilton Place, at about the modern 34 Princes Street, and in 1861 on the east side of Dickson Street. His wife was Janet and their children included Thomas and Elizabeth. Walter (1838–1911) poet and local historian in Jedburgh. He wrote several articles about Jedburgh and its history and for 20 years acted as custodian for Jedburgh Abbey. He was a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland. He wrote ‘Poems: chiefly on Jedburgh and vicinity’ (1901) and ‘Poetry and prose’ (1900, 1904, 1908) – ‘...a geyan yibble poyeter an a leal Borde Scot ti buit, Walter Laidlaw maun be a sair miss ti the Waeter-gate o Jed’ [ECS]. William (16th C.) recorded in 1541 as one of the tenants of the lands of Deloraine and ‘Wardishope’ in Ettrick. William (17th C.) recorded as a tenant in Woll in 1639. He was called as a witness in a dispute between Francis Scott of Castleside and his mother-in-law, Margaret Scott. Perhaps the same William had the following children baptised in Ashkirk Parish: William (b.1631); Margaret (b.1632); James (b.1636); Janet (b.1639); Robert (b.1639); Thoms (b.1641); an unnamed daughter (b.1643); Agnes (b.1645); and William (again, b.1647). William (17th C.) tenant in the farm of Bank according to a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. John Oliver was tenant there at the same time. William (17th C.) recorded as tenant in ‘Brewbuse’ in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. It is unclear exactly where this farm was. William (17th C.) tenant in Little Cavers recorded in 1684 on a list of men declared as fugitives for being Covenanters. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Laidlaw and their children included: Agnes (b.1688). William (1656/7–1717) tailor in Dubburn. He is buried in Borthwick Waas. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His children included: Jean (b.1701); and Janet and Catherine (b.1705). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. His children included Isabel (b.1712) and Robert (b.1715). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Jackson and their children included: James (b.1706); and Robert (b.1708). William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1728 he was at Broadleshie when his daughter Bessie was baptised. Perhaps the same William was at Howcleuch in 1742 when his son James was baptised in Roberton. William (18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was at Ormiston in 1730 when his son Thomas was baptised. He is probably the William who married Margaret Reed in 1725 and had other children John (b.1727), Janet (b.1732), Betty (b.1735), Bessie (b.1737). William (18th C.) son of shepherd James, he was a wright in Town-o’-Rule. It was said that the family were related to the Laidlaws of Weensmoor, and their burial grounds were adjacent in Hobkirk Kirkyards. He married Margaret Best of Kirkton Parish in 1762; they were members of the Associate Kirk in Jedburgh. Their children included: Agnes (b.1763), who married an Oliver; Betty (b.1769); Margaret (b.1771); Thomas (b.1773); Mary (b.1775), who married a Thomson; and Nelly (b.1777), who became teacher at the ‘Sclenty Schuil’. He could be the William who died in Hobkirk Parish in 1811. William (18th C.) resident at Mabonlaw in 1764 and 1767. His children (baptised in Roberton) included James (b.1764) and Alexander (b.1767). He may be the William who married Bett Matheson in Roberton in 1762, his wife being from Yarrow Parish. William (18th C.) married Helen Grieve in Wilton Parish in 1764. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Elizabeth Brown in 1764 and their children included: Adam (b.1765); and Helen (b.1768). William (1759–1823) along with his brother (perhaps Walter) he came to Hawick from Leith to work in the Orrock Place carpet factory, being probably the first people of that name in the town (however, there was a contemporary William born in Hawick, son of William and Isabel Binnie, so this is unclear). His property on the Cross Wynd was sold in 1811 to form part of the site of Allars Kirk. He was also one of the founder members of the Independent Kirk in Hawick, being an elder in that church and calling his youngest son after one of the evangelist preachers, Charles Gray (the ‘Tabernacle’ was built next door to his wife’s family home on the Kirk Wynd). He may be the William who paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785. He was progenitor of the most prominent local branch of the family. He is probably the weaver William who in 1792 (along with fellow weaver Thomas) witnessed a baptism for Walter. In 1794 he witnessed a baptism for manufacturer Walter Richardson. He set up his own hosiery business with his son William, starting out with just 4 frames. They later expanded to both tweed and hosiery, building the main mill in 1834, and later focussing just on tweeds. He married Margaret Aitken (1765–1842), daughter of Robert and Janet Scott. They lived in the Mid Raw and their children were: Janet (b.1784), who married spinner Robert Wilson; William (b.1786), ‘Shaffles’; Robert (b.1792), ‘Auld London’, who lived at 17 Loan; James (b.1795), who married Ann Affleck and died leaving a young family; Thomas (b.1797), who emigrated to America and drowned in a canal; Walter (b.1797), who probably died in 1819; George (b.1797); Charles Gray; Isabella, who married William Wilson, spinner of Lynnwood; and 3 other sons, including one who farmed in Yarrow. He also had a daughter, Grace, who married draper George Borrowman. William (18th/19th C.) recorded as owner of a hosiery shop and hosiery mill in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William (b.1768) son of James and Margaret Scott. He was born at Hartshaugh near Bonchester (although Tannagh states he was born at Wester Swanshie). He was farmer at Weensmoor in Hobkirk Parish. He is recorded there in 1841. His wife was Helen, daughter of James Douglas from Castleton; she was said to be a favourite of the Sheriff of Roxburghshire, William Oliver of Dinlabyre. Their children included: James (b.1797), who farmed at Hallrule Mill and Hartshaugh Mill; Douglas (b.1799), born at Kirknowe, but died young; Christian (b.1801), who married William Gowanlock; Margaret (b.1803), who married William Sibbald; Mary (b.1806), married William Smith; Helen, married John Turnbull and went to Canada; Douglas (again, b.1810), who emigrated to Toronto; Joanna (b.1812), who later went to Canada and married storekeeper David Davidson; John (d.1814); William (b.1815), who later farmed at Weensmoor; and Jennet or Jessie (b.1817), who married Hawick shoemaker Charles Scott. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Greatlaws in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Lilliesleaf Parish, when he owned 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. William (1780–1845) born at Blackhouse in Selkirkshire, the Ettrick Shepherd worked for his family for 10 years. Together they helped Sir Walter Scott to gather Border ballads. He first encountered Scott when he travelled to Yarrow with John Leyden in 1802. He was a farmer, then an exciseman and later worked as Scott’s factor and secretary. He wrote several poems of his own, including ‘Lucy’s Flittin’ (which appeared in ‘The Banquet of Euphrosyne’, published in Hawick in 1811). He also wrote a description of Selkirkshire for the Edinburgh Encyclopaedia. William (18th/19th C.) married Betty Easton in Wilton Parish in 1809. William (18th/19th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Nelly Waldie and their children included Mary Jane (b.1813). William (18th/19th C.) road contractor, who was one of the first residents of Bonchester Brigend in the early 1800s. William ‘Auld Laidlaw’, ‘Shaffles’ or ‘The Auld Laird’ (1786–1861) eldest son of the first William, along with whom he founded the hosiery firm William Laidlaw & Sons in 1811, succeeding to the business of Mr. Purdom. To begin with he was the traveller for the firm, spending much time in the Newcastle area (where he often stayed at the ‘Robin Hood’ on Pilgrim Street) and further afield, sometimes in the company of Robert Leishman. One story is told of how he returned to Hawick on foot during a snowstorm, losing his way, but bumping into Willie Winter’s post, thereby recovering his bearings. It is said that he loved to bargain, and could not take a trip, even once retired, without some goods to sell. He lived for a while in a house at 14 Howe-gate, with his stocking-shop behind; this is probably the place marked ‘Laidlaw’ on Wood’s 1824 map. In 1834 he built Teviot Crescent Mills, expanding into the much larger premises there and moving into tweeds. He built up a huge manufacturing business from humble beginnings. In his day he was apparently the only person to openly sing ‘Teribus’ out of season, at the Bailies’ dinner, and he would sing the ‘Auld Sang’ at the married men’s Common Riding dinner. He was an ardent Conservative in politics, losing his coat tails during the election troubles of 1837, and objections to ‘Radicals’ seeking the vote were often made in his name afterwards. In 1814 he married Jane Fisher (daughter of a Glasgow merchant), who died in 1844, aged 50. His sons were: William (1817–59); Peter Fisher; Daniel McGowan (1824/5–54), who built Hopehill; and Thomas (b.1829). They also had daughters Margaret (who married Rev. John Gilchrist Dyer in 1846), Jane, Jessie (1833–41), one who became Mrs. McGinly, and 4 others who died in infancy. He later married Jane Rutherford (nee Waldie) at Edinburgh in 1845. Her daughter Agnes Rutherford married William, her step-brother. Although most of his family left for the Free Kirk at the Disruption, he stayed with the ‘Auld Kirk’, despite repeatedly being cited for not keeping fast days. He lived beside his factory of Teviot Crescent, and is buried in St. Mary's Cemetery. A portrait of him is in the Museum, by an unknown artist. William (b.1788) son of the first Hawick William’s brother (possibly Walter), and hence cousin of ‘Shaffles’. He was a weaver and later a grocer. Along with his brother Walter he owned property at 8 Loan. He is listed as a grocer in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Agnes Lamb. Their children included: Mary (b.c.1819), who married Thomas Stevenson; Agnes (b.c.1821), who married Hugh Douglas; and Walter (b.c.1823), an engineer with the government in India. He is buried at St. Mary’s. He could be the ‘Wm. Laidlaw, Loan’ who arranged for a musician from Jedburgh to play for the ‘rebel’ Cornet of 1809. William (b.1792/3) porter in Hawick, living at about 20 High Street in 1841. In 1851 he was described as an ‘Out door Labourer’ and living around the Crown Close. His wife was Isabella and their children included John, Margaret, Elizabeth, William, Catherine, Sophia and Isabella. He could be the William listed in Slater’s 1852 directory as a coal agent (for Arniston Colliery) at the Station. William (19th C.) married Elizabeth Middlemas in Wilton in 1844. William (19th C.) tinsmith in Hawick. He married Helen Elliot Amos (from the Hobbirk family) in 1866. William (b.1814/5) shoemaker in Denholm. In 1851 he was living with his wife Margaret Jamieson and their children Janet, Ann, Catherine, Thomas, Margaret, Joan and Jane. William (1815–80) son of Robert, ‘Auld London’. He was a frameworker living on the Loan, at about No. 9. He married Christian Affleck Scott (1815–75). Their children were: Robert (b.1838); George (b.1840); Margaret (b.1846), who married Joseph Hogg; Rachel (b.1852); and Daniel (b.1855). He took in 3 sons of his uncle James when he died about 1838: Thomas (b.c.1824); Robert (b.c.1826); and Walter (b.c.1833). William (1815–84) son of William, who farmed at Weensmoor. He is recorded as farmer of Weensmoor in 1851, farming 52 acres and employing 1 acre. He lived with his niece Mary and nephew James. By 1861 he was farmer at Bonchester, farming 152 acres and employing 3 people. He farmed at Bonchester for 19 years. He was listed on the first congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk in 1849, was a trustee and was Treasurer for 37 years. He also helped with building the first church there. In 1853 he married Agnes Purdom (from Newcastleton), aunt of the Agnes Purdom who married mason Andrew Waugh. His children included: William (b.1854), farmer at East Fodderlee; Robert (b.1856), Indian businessman and M.P. for East Renfrewshire; Agnes (b.1858), who married Stewart Douglas Elliot, a Councilor in Edinburgh; Helen (b.1859), who married James Phimister; James (b.1861), who emigrated to Canada and died unmarried; Isabella (b.1865), who worked for the Post Office in London; Arthur (b.1867), who emigrated to San Francisco and married Hattie Turner; John (b.1868), who emigrated to Australia; Margaret (b.1870), who married James Armour, a tea manager in India; Douglas (b.1874), a market gardener in Congleton; and Walter Scott (1877–1919), who trained as a doctor and managed a rubber plantation in the Straits Settlements. The William Laidlaw Memorial Hall was built partly in his memory. William (1817–59) son of William, he took over the firm of William Laidlaw & Sons in partnership with his brothers in 1845. The firm purchased Lynnwood Spinning Mill from Nixon’s. He was Cornet in 1838. In the 1850s he was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District. He married Agnes, daughter of builder Robert Rutherford, and his step-sister. Their children were: William, of Grieve & Laidlaw; and Jeannie Waldie Fisher (b.1858), who married John G. Wilson. He later married Christina F. Scott (who died in 1875, aged 59). In 1861 his widow was an ‘Annuitant’ at 3 Teviot Crescent. William (b.1818/9) originally from Melrose, he was a farmer at Clarilaw in Wilton Parish. He is listed there in 1841, when he farmed 150 acres and employed 8 men. His wife was Isabel and their children included William and Mary. William (b.1821) from Hawick. He married Betsy Elliot and became a sheep farmer in Fodderty, Ross and Cromarty. William (1821–1908) manufacturer, born in Hawick, son of James and grandson of hosiery manufacturer William. His mother was Ann Affleck, from Peebles. At the age of 17 he was left with no parents, and entered the warehouse of his uncle William on Teviot Crescent, but after a few years became a grocer. His premises were on the High Street (No. 12), where the Cannon Inn had been and the Royal Bank would be built later.

In the 1841 census he was there (near the top of the Millport), but in 1851 he was at No. 4 High Street, formerly Andrew Borthwick's property. In Slater's 1852 directory he was ‘William Laidlaw, jun.’ on the High Street. He left Hawick in 1854, turning over the grocer’s business to his brother and taking a lease of Cumledge Mills near Duns. He started in yarn weaving, but moved into blanket manufacturing. From 1875 he was also involved (along with other family members) with Allars Mill in Jedburgh. The overall business was called Laidlaw Brothers, and later Laidlaw’s Blanket and Tweed Mills, Ltd. He purchased Cumledge Mills outright in 1888. He managed the Cumledge Mill side of the business along with his sons William and Alexander, with the older brothers, James and John managing Allars Mill. In the 1930s the company directors included 3 William Laidlaws, all cousins! In 1844 he married Elizabeth Middlemas, from Ednam. Their children included: James, J.P., who was Provost of Jedburgh; John, J.P.; William; Alexander; Isabella Broomfield (who married Robert Huggan); and Ann, who was unmarried. He and his wife held their diamond wedding anniversary in 1904. He remained strongly a Teri at heart and was known for his stories of Hawick in olden times, one of his earliest memories being the celebration for the coming of age of the future Duke of Buccleuch in 1827. He died at Cumledge Mills and is buried in Preston Cemetery, Berwickshire.

William (19th C.) resident of Wilton. He married Elizabeth Bell and their children included: Mary (b.1861). William (1835/6–1917) son of Thomas. Along with his brother Robert Grierson he was a partner in Thomas Laidlaw & Sons, but wrapped up the business in 1908. He died at Broadstairs and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. William (1854–1911) son of William and Agnes Purdom. He farmed at East Fodderlee. In 1880 he married Elizabeth (‘Bessie’, 1854–1925) Hall, 2nd daughter of baker Robert Young. They had 4 sons and 1 daughter, including Douglas (b.1888), Agnes Lamb and Alexander (b.1892). In 1901 his family were living in Minto. William (b.1845/6) son of William and Jane Newell. His marriage certificate states that he was born in Dumfriesshire, although family tradition says that he came from Hawick. He emigrated to Australia and in 1870 in Melbourne married Agnes Ferguson (daughter of a Denholm mason). They had 2 sons. William (1852/3–91) son of William. He was a manufacturer of Grieve & Laidlaw, Stonefield Mills. He married Mary Reid Clark, who died in 1929, aged 76. Their children included William Rutherford Clark, who died aged 16. William (1857/8–1912) cycle agent in Hawick. He was Captain of St. Cuthbert’s (rugby) Football Club for its first two seasons, from when it formed in 1877. He was also known as a keen cyclist in his early years. He worked for 38 years with Geo. & Jas. Oliver, providing valuable assistance to John Oliver in his work as Clerk to the School Board. He was in partnership with Robert Milligan for a while as a cycle business. He married Betsy Park, and she died in 1935, aged 70. They had 2 children who died young. William (1866–1931) eldest son of Peter Fisher. At the age of 19 he emigrated to Queensland, where he was involved with gold mining and prospecting and served in the Australian Bushmen’s Corps in the Boer War. After marrying he moved to California where he became a fruit grower, and his wife Rev. Alice Z. Laidlaw was pastor at the church in Narod. (formerly spelled ‘Ladlaw’, ‘Ladley’, ‘Laidla’, ‘Laidlay’, ‘Laidle’, ‘Laidlie’, ‘Laidley’, ‘Laidlo’, ‘Laidlow’, ‘Laidly’, ‘Leudlaw’, etc.).

Laidlawhope (lād-lup) n. former farm in Liddesdale, probably on the Laidlhope Burn. It is listed as ‘Ladlawhope’ in the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale, with a value of 4 merks. On the 1541 rental roll it is ‘Ladilhope’ and still worth 4 merks, but vacant at that time. It is possible that this is the ‘Ladhope, of the laird of Howpaslettes lands called Scott’ which were burned by the Armstrongs in 1544 (although ‘Lairhope’ could be meant). It is probably the ‘Laidhop’ listed in 1632 among the lands in Liddesdale owned by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs (and listed among rentals of Kelso Abbey). In 1718 it was combined with Whitrope in the farm of Stitchilhill (it is ‘Ladhope’ in 1718).

Laidlaw Place (lād-law-plis) n. street marked incorrectly for Ladylaw Place on the 1897 Ordnance Survey map.

Laidlaw’s (lād-lawz) n. William Laidlaw & Sons, manufacturers of hosiery and tweeds, founded in 1811 as a hosiery manufacturers in the ‘Mid Raw’. The business moved after a few years to 14 Howeagate, with a second stocking-shop in the Backdamgate. Their main factory was next to the Little Haugh (Teviot Crescent Mills), erected in 1834, with extensions built to produce tweed in 1841. The firm then introduced piecing machines made by Melrose’s. They also made blankets in the 1840s. They were listed at Laidlaw’s Cauld

Teviot Crescent Mills in 1852. From 1864 they purchased Lynnwood Mills and concentrated on yarn spinning and tweed manufacture. They also operated the Weensland spinning mill for several years after 1864. The family retired from business in 1908 although the company name carried on for a while, and was succeeded by George Wilson & Sons. The main mills were later demolished, although some photographs still exist to show how extensive they were. The Museum has company ledgers from 1926–32.

Laidlaw’s Cauld (läd-lawz-kawld) n. weir once stretching over the Teviot near the old Victoria Laundry, named after Laidlaw’s Mill nearby. Traces can still be easily seen when the river is low. It was used to divert water through a mill lade, which ran alongside Teviot Crescent and through Teviot Crescent Mills, being filled in in 1914. The Cauld itself was largely removed after WWII. In earlier times there had been a ford near here, just upriver from the main ford at the foot of Walter’s Wynd. In the 19th century, when the river was frozen, there were sometimes curling matches played there. The Cornet and his Right- and Left-Hand Men are shown crossing the Teviot near the Cauld in the 1846 painting of the Common Riding. It also features in the song ‘The Anvil Crew’ – ‘But when we came to Laidlaw’s Cauld, There a horde of pirates lay’ [WE].

Laidlaw Terrace (läd-law-te-ris) n. street constructed in 1888 along the south bank of the Teviot, off North Bridge Street. This involved building up the river-side, with the library being added at the top in 1904 (now Nos. 1 and 2). It was named after William Laidlaw & Sons, yarn spinners and tweed manufacturers, with the street essentially being built to provide accommodation for workers at Teviot Crescent Mills. The bottom of the street long had an undeveloped area used as a sawmill yard and later a builder’s yard, with an adjacent footpath along the riverside.

Laidlehope Burn (läd-lup-burn) n. stream that rises near Kilmknowe, above the Slitrig’s headwaters, and flows south to join the Roughley Burn, not far from the Ninestane Rig. This is related to the farm of ‘Ladlawhope’ recorded in c.1376. Where the burn was crossed by the Waverley Line there was Laidlehope Culvert (it is written ‘Laidlehope’ by Smail in 1880).

laif (läf) n., arch. a loaf – ‘A made a fa- lasable mael oot o pie-soop, …caald flesh, picklt ingans, an nae skrimp o laif’ [ECS], ‘Th’ breid in Glesca bein’ reduced a ha’penny th’ quarter laif’ [HEx1921], also used to distinguish bread from other baked goods – ‘Howt! Laik (läk) n. James (b.1740) son of Thomas, he was born in Hobkirk Parish. In 1785–91 he was listed as house servant at Wells, working for Gilbert Eliott. In 1785 his name was listed as ‘John’. In 1791 he was listed as a butler at Wells and in 1792, 1794 and 1797 as a house servant. His name was sometimes listed as ‘Luke’. He could be the James ‘Loch’ whose son Thomas was baptised in Southdean in 1774. Joshua (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1715 he was a gardener in Cavers. His children included Christian (b.1715) and Isobel (b.1717). Rev. Thomas (17th/18th C.) minister who was licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1711 and presented to Southdean Parish in July 1716. However, the parishioners refused to sign the call in December and he ended up as minister at Longframlington, Northumberland. He was recorded in the Hawick Parish Session records of 1713 (presumably during a sermon) reminding parents to send their children to school, and also as a substitute in 1714 when Hawick’s minister was absent (also written ‘Laick’ and ‘Lake’ and probably the same as ‘Leck’).

Lailsell (lîl-sel) n. former name for lands in the upper Slitrig valley. It is listed in 1607 along with Carlinghalla (probably Carlin Hole), Brounishall (probably Broom’s Hill) and other lands sold by Hector Turnbull of Stanedge to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. It may be a transcription error for somewhere more familiar.

Laing (lāng, län) n. Adam (1818/9–1900) Hawick stockingmaker apparently noted for his gentlemanly bearing. In 1851 he was at about 29 High Street and in 1861 was living at 5 Slitrig Bank. In 1844 he married Agnes (1824/5–1902), daughter of James Hogg, the writer of Teribus’. They had 8 children: Jane (b.c.1845) or Jeanie, who married hosiery manufacturer James Renwick; James (1846/7–1909), grocer; Euphemia (1850/1–1918), who lived at Marlefield; Eliza (b.c.1853); Agnes (1855–1910) who married manufacturer Francis Elliot Wilson; Adam (b.1858), who died young; Christina Grey (b.1861), who married Alfred Warr, minister of Rosneath; and Jessie D. (b.1864), who married James White and lived in Glasgow. Adam (1859–1918) Burgh Chamberlain of Hawick, co-author of The Hawick Tradition of 1514’ (1898) with R.S. Craig, and author of Brannholme Castle and the Land of the Scotts (1901). The book ‘The Hawick Tradition of 1514’ was significant in establishing the connection between the Hawick Flag and Hexham, which overcame criticism at the time about the lack of historical evidence for the events of Hornshole. The 3rd son of Walter of Denholm Hill and Margaret Scott, he was educated in Denholm and at Teviot Grove Academy. He was an apprentice with Purdons, trained further in Edinburgh and returned to Hawick to work with W.M. Syme. He served as Burgh Chamberlain for 16 years from 1891, before becoming the first Burgh Treasurer. He was one of the founder members of the Callants’ Club, its first Honorary Treasurer, and Vice-President during WWI. He was one of the founders of the Teviotdale Cycling Club, won a couple of Mosspaull to Hawick races, and was also involved with other local sports organisations. He helped get the Liberal Club premises built and was Club Treasurer for many years. He was a member of the Archaeological Society and the Berwickshire Naturalists’ Club. He also acted as Secretary of the Public Library and Secretary and Treasurer of the Museum. In addition he was heavily involved in erecting many of the monuments and plaques carried out in his day, as well as helping resuscitate Mosspaull.

He was a keen Common Riding supporter and pushed for the resumption of the riding of the full marches at Pilmuir and the cutting of the sod ceremony. Sinton’s bibliography of Hawick-related works (which he helped to compile) states that he possessed a rare 3rd edition of James Hogg’s Flodden Field and the Colour, inserted inside of which was a manuscript of the tune as played by the town piper in 1777. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (1786–1850) hosiery manufacturer. He was son of John and Agnes Donaldson, brother of David, father of Walter and grand-father of J.T. of Linden Park. He was in partnership with his brother in the early 19th century with premises where the Sandbed Store was later located. Originally they spun yarn on the hand jenny and operated a small hosiery business. However, they joined with the Dicksons in 1802 to form Dicksons & Laings. He is probably the A. Laing whose property at Dovemount is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s History of Hawick in 1825. He probably had the house Springbank built for him, above the main factory area. The family were Reform supporters of their day. In the 1834 electoral roll he and his brother David were listed as joint proprietors in the spinning mill. He is listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 and in 1840 and 1841 was listed as manufacturer at Wilton Mills. In the 1841 census he was living at Wilton Mills. His first wife was Ann (1789–1822), youngest daughter of Walter Wilson (and sister of skinner Thomas Wilson), who died in childbirth. Their surviving children were: and Ann (b.1811) who married John Elliot and moved to Massachusetts, U.S.A.; John (b.1812); and Walter (b.1820). He secondly married Janet R., daughter of William Roger, who was his cousin. They had 2 surviving children: Margery Donaldson, who married...
Laing

William Brown from Galashiels and was mother of Alexander Laing Brown; and Alexander Brown (b.1829), who married Jane Dinwiddie. She was a widow living at Springbank in 1851 along with her son Alexander and 2 servants. Alexander ‘Allie’ (b.1829) son of manufacturer Alexander and his 2nd wife Janet Roger. He followed his father into woollen manufacturing. He was partner (with William Irving) in the firm Laing & Irving and lived at Ivybank. In the 1850s he was the Alexander (of Laing & Irvine) who was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District. He became a partner in Laing, Michie & Graham and Laing & Gawn, which later merged to become Currie, Lee & Gawn. His caricature appears in the book ‘Noctes Hawickianæ’. He is probably the Alex recorded owning part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in about 1874. He married Jane Milligan (1844–1911), daughter of James Dinwiddie, who helped establish the hosiery industry in Dumfries. They had a large family, Alexander ‘Lal’ being the oldest son. Alexander James ‘Lal’ (b.1865) son of Alexander and Jane Milligan Dinwiddie. He was a prominent Hawick rugby forward from around 1883, being Captain of the Hawick team in 1888. He represented Roxburgh County and South of Scotland. He was known as a fast forward. He also played in the British team which first went to Australia in 1888. He emigrated to America shortly after this, married twice and had at least one daughter who visited Hawick a few times and died in Palm Springs.

Andrew (b.1803/4) innkeeper of the Black Bull in Lilliesleaf, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 and 1851 he was gamekeeper at Ayton in Berwickshire. His wife was Isabella and their children included Jessy, Isabella, Thomas, Elizabeth, James, Helen, Robert and Margaret Ann. David of Westerkirk (d.bef. 1727). He married Katherine, eldest daughter of William Elliot of Arkleton in 1720. His widow later married Charles Telfer, Hawick’s minister and thirdly Robert Elliot of Fenwick. David (18th C.) mason in Hawick. He was probably the David, son of Walter, born in Hawick in 1710. In 1734 he and his men were paid for 6½ days’ work did on the West Port. He was recorded as a mason in 1742 when he witnessed a baptism for mason James Harkness and as a wright in 1745 when he witnessed 2 baptisms. In 1752 he was paid ‘for pointing a hole on the steeple-head, and altering a crack’. He was among the men paid in 1755 ‘for the herd’s house building’. He is probably the mason David who (along with mason Walter, likely his son) witnessed a baptism in 1790 for mason John (likely his other son). He is probably the Hawick mason who witnessed a baptism for William Douglas in 1794, along with mason John (possibly his son). He was deceased when his mason son Walter died in 1798. He is probably the David who married Helen Wallace and whose children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included: Walter (b.1733); Ann (b.1735); Janet (b.1737); Helen (b.1739); Jean (b.1742); John (b.1744); and James (b.1746). It is possible he was also father of Hannah (b.c.1750), who married Andrew Hunter. David (1782–1840) son of John, he was a hosiery manufacturer in Hawick. He was originally in partnership with his brother Alexander and later as part of Dicksons & Laings of Wilton Mills. He was Cornet in 1805. He lived at No. 1 Wilton Bank, which was probably the same place as Springbank. He was one of the first members of Hawick Curling Club. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Janet, daughter of John Fiddes in Hobkirk Parish in 1811; she died in Glasgow in 1868, aged 79. Their children included: Elizabeth (b.1812); John (b.1814), draper; Agnes (b.1816); Helen (b.1819); Jemima (b.1824); and James Robert (b.1827). 3 of their daughters moved to Warkworth, Northumberland. His widow was living on Wilton Bank in 1841, along with Helen, Jemima, James and a servant. In 1851 Janet was living on the Howegate with Jemima and James. He died at Springbank and is buried at St. Mary’s.

David (19th C.) Bailie of the 1820s and 1830s. He went to Jedburgh along with 70 special constables to help keep the peace in the election of 1831. He may have been the same man as manufacturer David. After the election of 1832 he released a prisoner in Hawick (by the name of Scott) who had been accused of disorderly conduct and assault. This led to complaints on behalf of the Duke of Buccleuch and others. He is probably the ‘D. Laing’ whose property is marked on Wood’s 1824 map, on the middle of the north side of the Sandbed. Donald McLeod (b.c.1898) son of Thomas Alexander and Agnes Brown. He enlisted in the army in 1914 when he was probably only about 16. After WWI he worked on rubber plantations in Malaya. He married his cousin, Margery Hadda. George (1883–1947) son of manufacturer John Turnbull and Anna Thomson. He was educated at home and in Eastbourne, along with his brothers Walter, Ivan and Maurice. He farmed at Nikuyu in Kenya. Gilbert (d.1777) son of Walter, he became a merchant in St. Petersburg. His brother was William of Meikledale and his sister Margaret married John Elliot of Borthwickbrae. He also had a nephew ‘Watty’ Scott, who spent some time in St. Petersburg, but returned to Scotland in ruin. He suffered strokes in the late 1770s and died in Russia. He married Elizabeth Catherine Gardner in 1765. Some of his correspondence is in the National Archives, labelled ‘I desire my son William not to burn these letters till he has leisure to read them all over’.

Ivan (1885–1917) 3rd son of John Turnbull and Anna Drummond Thomson. Born at Springbank (before it was the Haig Maternity Hospital), he was educated at home by a governess and at New College, Eastbourne, as well as in Belgium. When he returned to Hawick he lived at Ashleigh in East Stewart Place. Well-known as an athlete, he excelled at swimming, played three-quarter (wing) for Hawick R.F.C. and also played for the Teviotdale (mixed) hockey team. By some lucky chance he ended up playing for Scotland (with the home nations having separate hockey teams) in the 1908 London Olympics. The story goes that he was spotted on the platform by the other members of the team when their train passed through Hawick and convinced by a sporting friend, Dr. Norman Stevenson, to join the team. How much truth there is in this version is unknown (since a team sheet published the week before the game shows his name), but it certainly makes for a dramatic story! He played in 2 games, scoring the first ever Olympic goal in hockey (against Germany, which is ironic, given the events of a few years later). The official match report reads ‘At the beginning of the game Scotland attacked, and from a pass by Stevenson, Laing quickly scored the first goal’. That first game took place at Shepherd’s Bush stadium, months after the rest of the Games had finished. In the second game they were defeated by England. The team refused to play Wales for the 3rd place play-off (all in the same day!), and he apparently returned to Hawick on the overnight train. However, he never again represented Scotland at hockey. He went into partnership with his father in 1908, their hosiery business being Drummond & Laings, Wilton Path. This was later taken over by Innes-Henderson’s, with whom he remained until enlisting in the War effort. In 1915 he joined the 28th Battalion of the London Regiment, the ‘Artists’ Rifles’, and was then gazetted into the Coldstream Guards. He was awarded the Military Cross at the Somme in 1916. But he was killed by machine gun fire when his unit were taking Gouzeaucourt. Another tragic casualty of WWI, he is buried in Metz-en-Couture cemetery in France. In 2008, to commemorate the Olympic goal centenary, the Archæological Society commissioned Hamish Smith to make a trophy to be competed for annually by girls versus boys teams at the High School. Bailie James (17th C.) Hawick Magistrate. His 1672 will is in the National Archives (but he appears to have died significantly later). He was related to the Laing family who were later Chamberlains to the Duke of Buccleuch and owned land at the Flex, Burnfoot-on-Ale and elsewhere. He was a Bailie during the 1660s and 70s. He could be the James recorded as one of the owners of West Mains in 1663. He was Bailie in 1668 when the Council made a decree to support the breaking of illegal dykes on the Common. He may be the James who was Bailie in 1670/1, and whose brother William was farmer at Earlside. He is recorded as an ex-Bailie in a sasine of 1687 when his son Walter was witness to a sasine in Hawick. He could be the James, married to Helen Elliot, whose son William was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1653. James (17th C.) tenant in Earlside. In 1684 he was among a group of tenants of the Cavers estate who complained about the burden placed upon them by the huge fines imposed on Lady Cavers. They would have been forced into ruin had not the young Laird of Cavers, William Douglas, returned from the Continent to take charge of matters. He was probably son of William, who was tenant in Earlside and transported for being a Covenanter. James (18th C.) hedger in Abbotrule, recorded in 1785. James Robert (b.1827) son of David and Janet Fiddes. He was a draper on the Howegate. In the 1851 census he was at about 2 Howegate, living with his widowed mother and his sister Jemima, as well as George Webster and a servant. His draper’s partnership with Webster is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. It appears that he moved to London, where the business expanded, become a general warehousing firm. He later became partner in Paterson, Laing and Bruce, registered in London and Melbourne. He married Margaret, eldest daughter of Robert Fiddes of London. He had a son James Robert (d.1916), and a daughter Jane Tullock Fiddes. He is probably the James Robert of 27 Earl’s Court Square, London, who died in 1898. James (b.c.1847) only surviving son of Adam Laing and Agnes Hogg. He was grandson of James Hogg of ‘Teribus’ fame, and erected the gravestone to the memory of his parents and grandparents in Old Wilton Cemetery in 1909, replacing an older

He was a grocer in Hawick, being foreman in the business of Mungo Wilson on Silver Street, and later taking over. After his death the shop was acquired by Oliver and Thomas Mason Hardie. John (d.1483) from the Laings of Redhouse near Edinburgh, he held minor benefices and acted as secretary to Mary of Gueldres in the 1460s. He became Royal Treasurer from 1470 and was Clerk Register. In 1474 he was appointed as Bishop of Glasgow, thus becoming Hawick’s bishop. He founded a Franciscan friary in Glasgow in 1476. He became Chancellor to James III in 1482 and was involved in the rejection of William Scheves, Archbishop of St. Andrews. His seal bore images of 3 saints, probably Kentigern, Michael and Catherine, and also the words ‘S’ JOHIS EPI. GLASGUENSIS’. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘John Lane’ on a list of tenants at Newton in Bedrule in 1531. John (17th C.) piper who was on a list of 16 local men named in 1627 by the Hawick Bailie as suitable for sending to the army in Germany, i.e. presumably considered undesirable to the town. While in Edinburgh Tolbooth he was among 7 of them who complained that they were not in fact the sorts of men who should be pressed into military service, but nevertheless were transported to the wars in Germany. John (17th C.) resident of Woll in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. His surname is written ‘Leing’. John of Westerkirk (17th/18th C.) Chamberlain to the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1696 when he was on the Commission of Supply for Dumfriesshire. His children included: Walter, Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for Selkirkshire; John, Chamberlain in Liddesdale, who held lands at the Flex; Helen, who married James Grieve, tenant at Todshawhaugh; and another daughter who married Ogilvie of Brieryyards. John (d.c.1780) son of John of Westerkirk and brother of Walter. He was Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for Liddesdale in the period 1730–66. He also acted as ‘factor loco tutoris’, i.e. in place of one of the young Duke’s guardians for business in Teviotdale around 1756. In 1736 he rented ‘Stitchelhill and Leyes’ in Liddesdale from the Duke of Buccleuch. He lived at ‘The Roan’ and held lands at the Flex. He paid the window tax at Roan in Castleton Parish in 1748. He is recorded in 1774 writing from the Flex to his niece Meg (or Margaret) Elliot at Borthwickbrae, regarding the debts of Elliot of Borthwickbrae. He is also described as ‘of Burnfoot’ (probably in Ale Water); he was so recorded among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761 and on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. The Elliots of Borthwickbrae eventually came to possess the lands of Flex and Old Melrose through this marriage to his niece. In 1777 he gained about 7 Scots acres of Hawick Common in the Division. John (18th C.) house servant at Wells in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for William Nassau Elliot. John (1744–1816) son of David, he was a mason in Hawick. In 1781 he married Agnes, daughter of Alexander Donald (also listed as Donaldson), and she died in about 1824. They had 9 children, including: David (b.1782), manufacturer in Hawick; Agnes (b.1783); Alexander (b.1786), who married his cousin Janet Roger; Helen (b.1788); Walter (b.1790); John (b.1792); James (b.1799). The witnesses in 1790 were masons Walter and David (probably his brother and father) and in 1792 were wright William Roger and mason David (probably his father). An unnamed child of his died in Hawick in 1798. He may be the John who was recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. He conveyed all his property to his eldest son David, with the condition that he should pay £100 in rentals to his third son Walter a year after his death, or alternatively to give Walter half of the property of his ‘opposite to the West Pant-Well of Hawick’; because David ended up liable for his debts, but the other children renounced their claims, but still expected a share of money from this arrangement, it led to a dispute between the 2 brothers in court in 1829. John (18th/19th C.) mason of Hawick who worked on Stobs Castle around 1800 and who helped compile a ‘New Valuation of Houses and Gardens in the Town of Hawick’ in 1814. This may be the same mason who died at Doveshauhbraehead in 1824, aged 57 and whose wife Isabella Hunter died in Hawick in 1841, aged 69; this family are buried in Bedrule churchyard. He may be the Hawick mason whose unnamed child died in 1798. He is probably the Hawick mason who witnessed a baptism for William Douglas in 1794, along with mason David. John (1812–76) hosier manufacturer of the mid-19th century. He was son of Alexander and Ann Wilson. He was partner along with his father in Dicksons & Laings from an early age. But after his father’s death he went into business for himself at 8 and 9 Slitrig Crescent, the firm being named John Laing & Sons; it survived until 2006. He is listed as a merchant in Hawick among heads of households in Wilton Parish for 1840 and 1841. In 1851 he was living at 18 Buccleuch Street and listed as a manufacturer of woollen hosiery.
employing 28 men and 14 women. He was the first to introduce power frames into Hawick in 1858, and was also an early promoter of the use of merino wool. He was the first President of the Hawick Bowling Club. In the 1850s he was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District. He married Mary, 7th daughter of Thomas Anderson of Kirkcudbright, and she died in 1892, aged 68. Their children were: Alexander and Mary Marion (buried in Menton Cemetery, France), who did not reach adulthood; John Hugh Alexander, a doctor in Edinburgh; Janetta McNaught; Thomas Anderson, manufacturer; Patrick Anderson, also manufacturer; and Samuel James Anderson (b.1861). He died at Slitrig House. A portrait of him exists. John (b.1814) son of David and Janet Fiddes, he worked as a draper and later was a hosier and coal merchant. He was cousin of John, the hosier manufacturer. His draper’s firm is recorded on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. He lived at about 55 High Street in 1841 and 49 High Street in 1851 and 1861. His wife was Janet, and their children included James, Ellen, David and William. John (b.1817/8) from Bedrule, son of John, he was a boot-maker in Hawick. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed as a shoemaker on the High Street. In 1851 he was at about 29 High Street. In 1861 he is recorded at 10 High Street, and employed 8 men. John Turnbull (1854–1913) local manufacturer, son of Walter and Euphemia Turnbull. He was President of the South of Scotland Chamber of Commerce in the 1880s. He was prominent in local politics in the late 19th and early 20th centuries and lived at Linden Park. He was also on the original committee of Hawick Bowling Club, and President in the 1860s. He married Anna Drummond (1855–1931), 2nd daughter of Dr. George Thomson. Their sons were Walter, George, Ivan and Maurice Wyville. For several years the family held an annual New Year’s day mixed hockey match against the Grieves of Branxholme Park. Kenneth Joseph Price (b.1890) son of manufacturer Patrick Anderson. He married his cousin Florence Laing. He rode motorbikes in WWI until he learned to fly, becoming a pilot with the RAF in 1918, where he is credited as an ace with 5 victories. He is said to have been the first person to fly over Hawick. He was wounded in a motorcycle accident while on leave in 1918. He later worked as an engineer with John Melrose & Sons and lived well into his 90s. Maurice (1885–1955) son of John Turnbull and Anna Thomson. He was younger brother of Walter, George and Ivan. He was a successful district hockey player and later South selector. He served with the Royal Field Artillery in WWI and became Captain. He married Shiela Brown of Galashiels (unrelated to the other Browns who had married into this family). They had one son (who worked at the Cape Observatory) and several daughters. Norman Hugh Anderson (b.1888) son of manufacturer Patrick Anderson and Fanny Price, i.e. one of the ‘Balcary Laings’. He was a farmer at Cleuchhead. He married Cissy, daughter of Dr. George Gunn Bannerman. Their children included: George; Patrick, who received the Military Cross in WWII and set up the haulage firm P.A. Laing; and Drummond, who moved to Cape Town, South Africa. Patrick Anderson (1853–1921) son of John and Mary Anderson. He was a partner in John Laing & Sons, along with his brother Thomas. He lived at Balcary. He married Florence ‘Fanny’ Elizabeth (who was born in Chicago), daughter of Joseph Price of Clapham Common. She was sister of Mrs. Robert Pringle of Wood Norton, and died in 1917, aged 54. Their children were Patrick Lindsay Price (Major with the K.O.S.B. in WWI), Norman Hugh Anderson (farmer at Cleuchhead), Kenneth Joseph Price (engineer with Melrose’s) and Margaret Frances Lindsay (married Isaac Grey Wallis). This branch of the family were known as the ‘Balcary Laings’. Patrick Lindsay Price (b.1886) eldest son of Patrick Anderson and Fanny Price. He was a Major in the K.O.S.B. and was awarded the Military Cross in WWI. Robert (16th/17th C.) merchant of Hawick, probably a tanner. He gave evidence in the 1612 case of the death of Jock Elliot. He was ‘in the Kirkyaird of Hawick priking some skynnis’ (showing that at that time the churchyard was used for many purposes) and found Elliot ‘hingand in his awin belt; quilk belt he cuttit, and thair being lyfe in the defunct, was brocht out, but shortlil thairefter he deceist’. He may have been the same Robert who signed the 1640 ‘Act of Bailies and Council’. Robert (18th C.) footman at Minto House in 1788, when he was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. Thomas Anderson (1851–1920) son of manufacturer John and grandson of Alexander. He was a partner in John Laing & Sons, along with his brother Patrick. He was Honorary Treasurer of the South of Scotland Chamber of Commerce in the 1880s. He lived at Netherwood and Langlee. He married Agnes Eliza Douglas Brown from Kirkcudbrightshire (who died in 1933); she was sister of Esther Brown who married M.P. Alexander Laing Brown. They had a family of 11, including a daughter (who married Charles W. Grieve of Branxholme Park), Donald McLeod (who married his cousin, Margery Haddon), and Florence (who married her cousin Kenneth). This branch were known as the ‘Netherwud Laings’. Walter (17th C.) son of Bailie James. He was witness to a baptism in Hawick in 1687. Probably the same Walter witnessed a baptism in 1687. He is likely to be the merchant and listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. It is possible he was a witness to a baptism for Andrew Angus in Hawick Parish in 1678. Walter (1649/50–1736) son of John of Westerkirk. He was a ‘writer’ in Edinburgh. From 1717 he was Chamberlain to Francis, Duke of Buccleuch, covering Eckford, Lempitlaw and Langton (as well as Ettrick Forest for part of this period) and being based at Newark. He served in this function until 1734, being succeeded by William, probably his son. In 1716 he is ‘clerk to ye Duchess of Bukcleugh’ when his ‘servitor’ Walter Little married Jenet Scoon. He married Margaret, 2nd daughter of Alexander Johnston of Elshiesheills about 1713. His sons were probably William, Gilbert and James. His eldest daughter Violet married David Scott, tenant at Carterhaugh and his 2nd daughter Marion married John Laing, farmer at Westerkirk (and surely a relative) about 1750. Another daughter, Margaret, married John Elliot of Borthwickbrae (and through her the Elliots of Borthwickbrae would come into possession of her uncle John’s lands of Flex, Old Melrose, etc.). He died at Todshawaugh, home of his brother-in-law James Grieve. Walter (b.1680) son of William and Jane Thorbrand. He is probably the Walter who married Janet Bruntfield, and had children Elspeth (b.1703) and David (b.1710); although only his wife witnessed the baptisms. He may have run off with a close family member, probably to England. Walter (d.bef. 1764) probably son of Walter, he was also sometimes Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch at Newark. It is said that he was given the position after risking his life to save some papers for the Scotts of Buccleuch at Dalkeith House. His eldest daughter Margaret married John Elliot of Borthwickbrae in 1764, and she later inherited the lands of Meikledale, Flex, Old Melrose and Burnfoot. He had a son Gilbert who became a merchant in St. Petersburg and another son, William of Meikledale. James may have been another son. His relationship with John (also a Chamberlain to Buccleuch) is unclear. Walter (d.1798) son of David, he was a mason in Hawick. He is probably the son of David and Helen Wallace born in Hawick in 1733. He is probably the mason Walter who (along with mason David, likely his father) witnessed a baptism in 1790 for mason John (likely his brother). Walter (b.c.1790) farmer at Denholmhill. He is probably also the builder in Denholm, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He acquired Denholmhill farm in about 1818 and expanded the quarrying, which had been started by the Fergusons and the Littles. He opened up the eastern (white) quarry and the western (red) one. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was still alive in 1851, but dead before 1861. His son Walter took over the farm and quarry. Walter (b.1819/9) son of Walter. He took over the farm of Denholmhill and the quarry there. In 1861 he was farming 520 acres, employing 26 people on the farm, and also tenant of the quarries, employing 37 masons and 26 labourers. He was still recorded there in 1868. His wife was Margaret, and their children included Walter, Christina, Thomas, Adam and Helen. Walter (1820–1895) manufacturer of Laing & Irvine’s and later of Dicksons & Laings. He was son of Alexander and Ann Wilson and brother of John. He carried on with the firm after his brother John split off to form John Laing & Sons. He lived at Springbank and later Linden Park. He was a member of the new Town Council who argued for continued Council involvement in the Common Riding in the 1860s. He was also one of the founders of the Working Men’s Building & Investment Co., and its Chairman from 1890–95. In addition he was on the School Board and became Chairman of the Science and Technical School in Hawick, as well as the School of Art. A Liberal in politics, he was President of the Hawick Advanced Liberal Association. He married Euphemia Turnbull, who died in 1895. They had a large family, but all except John Turnbull died before reaching adulthood. Walter (1882–1959) son of John Turnbull and Anna Thomson. He was brother of Maurice, Ivan and George. He played for Hawick R.F.C. and served in the Coldstream Guards. There is a letter from him to his brother Maurice, bringing the news of Ivan’s death on the front. He married Joan Gotto from Belfast and had 2 children. He died in County Down. William (17th C.) tenant in Earlsdie, brother of James, who was Bailie in Hawick. He was tried in 1678 for being a Covenanter supporter. However, he must have escaped (perhaps one of the men to flee when their transport ship was abandoned in London). He is listed among those declared fugitives for refusing to take ‘the Test’ in 1684. He was fined 500 marks for attending meetings of outed ministers. Later the same year he was recorded as being ‘in Hawick’ when he was banished ‘to the plantations’ along with several other men. Their crime was ‘rebellion and reset of rebels’, meaning religious non-conformity following the re-introduction of Episcopalianism. On this second occasion he did not escape, but was among 32 men who were transported to Carolina, subject to great hardship on the journey and then after arrival, so that only 6 returned after the Revolution. He may be the William ‘Lyng’ whose widow was recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls, listed after the house of Earlsdie in 1694. He might be the William on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. He could be the William who witnessed a baptism for James Hamilton in Hawick in 1673 and another for William Welch (or ‘Wetch’) in 1675. He may be the William who witnessed a baptism for William Scott (who probably lived in the Borthwick valley) in 1676, as well as for Rev. Patrick Cunningham in 1680.

Baillie William (17th/18th C.) Hawick Councillor recorded in 1683 and 1684, who was Bailie in 1685 and in 1697. In 1685, along with Walter Scott, he had permission from the Council to be reimbursed for the costs of building the ‘Steeple Loft’ in St. Mary’s, suggesting that he was Bailie around the time of construction. In 1688 and 1700 he witnessed baptisms for merchant John Scott ‘Whiteyetts’ and he witnessed another for Robert Hogg in Weensland in 1688. He was ‘late baiyleea’ on the list of subscribers for the Kirk bell drawn up in 1693/4. He is probably the ‘Wm Laing laite Baiyleea’ who paid tax for 4 hearths on the west-side of Hawick, according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694; this suggests that he lived in a large house. He is probably the William who, along with ‘Mr James’ witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1700 for Glover James Scott. He was ‘late Bailie’ in 1700 when witnessing a baptism for schoolmaster John Purdom. He witnessed baptisms for shoemaker John Scott in 1708, for wigmaker John Scott, for Glover James Scott and for tailor John Scott in 1709, and for smith Thomas Hunty in 1714. He could be the same ex-Baillie who in 1721 gave the excuse that he could not mount the ‘pillar’ of repentance in the Kirk because he was ‘valetudinarie and troubled with an un easiness in his hough and feet’; the Session allowed him instead to pay a fine and be rebuked in his usual pew; it is unclear what his transgression was. In 1716, 1718 and 1721 he witnessed baptisms for John Ekron. He was probably the William born in Hawick in 1652/3, son of James and Helen Elliot. This William married Jane Thorbrand (probably daughter of Bailie James), and their children were: James (b.1676); Walter (b.1680), who married Jane Bruntfield; David (b.1681); Margaret (b.1684), who married James Gledstains; Helen (b.1686), married a Grieve; Anna (b.1688), who married John Watson, Clerk to the Regality and then John Scott in 1724; and Martha (b.c.1690), who married William Ogilvie. The witnesses in 1676 were William Elliott of Stobs and Thomas Scott of Whitslade, suggesting that he had some standing in the Town at that time. The witnesses in 1680 were William Scott, Glover and Mr John Purdom and in 1688 were James Scott and Robert Wright. He is probably the William ‘Lang’ mentioned in 1735 when the widow of Robert Scott of Falnash sold her property on the Howegate, which was to the west of his, which by then belonged to James Scott. William (1715/6-74) Chamberlain to Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch. He had a house on the Fore Row, referred to as ‘the Chamberlain’s Hoose’. He may also have been the William who, in the 1720s, owned a small corn farm and yard to the north (i.e. in Wilton Parish) of where the Grammar School was built at the Sandbed. He succeeded as Chamberlain for Ettrick Forest in 1735, taking over from Walter, probably his father; he served in this capacity until 1766. His brother was James, and he must also have been related to John, who was Chamberlain for Liddesdale (probably his uncle). Gilbert was probably another brother. Hudhouse (in Castle- ton Parish) was rented to him and his brother by the Buccleuch estates in 1742. In 1750 he purchased the lands of Meikledale from William Scott. He left these lands to his nephew, William Elliot Lockhart. William (18th/19th C.) tenant of Sinton Mains. In 1813 he brought a case against John Smith, carter in Selkirk, claiming that Smith had taken his cart and harness when they were with an innkeeper in Edinburgh (also spelled ‘Lainge’, ‘Laug’, ‘Launge’ and ‘Leing’ in earlier documents).

Laing an Irvine’s (läng-an-ir-vinz) n. wholesale tweed merchants of the 19th century, with their main factory built in 1856 at the corner of Commercial Road and Bath Street. They were effectively an offshoot of Dicksons & Laings, being tweed manufacturers and later tweed merchants. For a while they operated out of Stonefield Mill. They also had a mill in Peebles. At the 1867 Paris Exposition the firm gained a bronze medal as a manufacturer of cloth. They went bankrupt in 1868, and the building later had many uses. They also traded at 26 High Street, which was sometimes called ‘Irvine’s Close’. The partners were Alexander (‘Allie’) Laing and William Irvine. The company partially reformed as Irvine, Grierson & Stevenson. There were also later firms of Laing, Michie & Graham and Laing & Gawn, which merged into Currie, Lee & Gawn.

Laing Terrace (läng-te-ris) n. short street off Dovemount Place, built in 1872, and named after the Laings of Dicksons & Laings. It was essentially built to provide nearby housing for workers at Wilton Mills.

lains (länz) n., pl., poet. loins – ‘For my lains ar fillet wi’ foulsurne deseesee, an’ ther is nae su-undness in my fesch’[HSR], ‘Let thair cyne be derkenet that thaye seena, an’ let thair lains continwallie shak’’ [HSR].

laip (läp) v., arch. to lap – ‘A dog or cat licks or lapes (= laps) milk, etc.’ [ECS]. ‘... the cuill, silver Teiot, where it laippeet bye leafy Monteviot’[ECS], ‘The dog’s laipin’ a’ the kiltlin’s milk’ [GW] (also written ‘lape’).

laipie-luggit (lä-pee-lu-gee’, -gi’) adj., arch. lop-eared, having prominent or protruding ears (also ‘laipy-lugget’ etc.; noted by E.C. Smith).

lair (lär) n., arch. a place of shelter for livestock – ‘Three lambs I hae on Crawbrae lair Will no be worth a benty-strae’[HSR], a final resting place, burial plot v., arch. to drive livestock to an enclosure – ‘That part of the Common called the west end of the little Bailie Hill, where Mungo Armstrong used to lair the black cattle under the charge in the middle of the day’[C&L] (from Middle English; the word exists in several local place names, e.g. Cherry Lair, Dimmont Lair, Ewelair Hill, Lairhope, Lairs, Lamblair Edge, Lamblair Hill, Lamblair Knowe, Lamblairs, Marklair and Nolt-lair).

lair (lär) n., arch. learning, education, lore – ‘... an’ yow that has schule lair an’ awquant wi’ sae muckle new licht o’ things they hae fund oot noo-a-days aboot the sternes an’ sae an’ sae’ [BCM1880] (also learn).

laird (lär’d) n. a landowner, landed proprietor, nobleman, lord – ‘For here’s the laird’s Jock, the laird’s Wat, And Hobie Noble, come to set thee free’ [CPM], ‘My faither was laird o’ a weil stockit mailin’’ [JT], ‘Says the auld laird ‘We’ll hae nae crap This drookit year’ ’ [WL], ‘There was no belly-crawling dedication to some laird who had promised to take a dozen copies’ [DH] (also sometimes capitalised; in Scotland the word was applied to the owner of a estate of any size and hence is closer to the English ‘squire’ than ‘lord’).

Laird (lär’d) n. nickname of James Scott, the first recorded Comet. Thomas and Robert Scott are both recorded in 1693/4 with the same nickname, suggesting perhaps that they were all related, as well as an earlier James recorded in 1676. John Chisholme also had this same nickname in 1712. There are other similar nicknames, e.g. ‘the Blue Laird’, ‘the Black Laird’, ‘the Dud-die Laird’ and ‘the Muckle Laird’. Many of these may have been Hilliesland ‘Lairds’, i.e. local men who kept fields up beyond the Wellogate, or elsewhere around Hawick. When a landowner had a grown son they would often be the ‘Auld Laird’ and ‘Young Laird’. In earlier centuries it was common for the sons of a major landowner to be known as ‘the Laird’s Wat’, ‘the Laird’s Jock’, etc.

the Laird (thu-lär’d) n. nickname of the 18th and early 19th centuries, commonly given to men with some property, e.g. William Laidlaw, even small fields, e.g. the Hilliesland Lairds. It may also be that the name was used jocularly or ironically. A person called ‘John ye Laird’ was one of the poor of the Parish who is recorded receiving some of the collection in 1711 and ‘Wat the Laird’ was recorded around 1800.

Laird Laidlaw (lär’d-lâd-law) n. nickname for William Laidlaw (1786–1861).

Laird’s Hill (lärdz-hil) n. hill in the upper Borthwick valley, just north-east of Old How-pasley, reaching a height of 343 m.

lairdship (lär’d-ship) n. state of being a laird, territory and rights of a laird – ‘... and the said lairdship of Coklaw to cum to the airis famail of the said James ... ’ [SB1519].

Laird’s Knowe (lärdz-now) n. small hill on Craik Moor, just to the north of the old Roman road. The stream to the north-east is Laird’s Cleuch Sike. It is unclear which Laird gave his name to these features.

the Laird’s Wat (thu-lär’dz-waw’) n. popular name for Walter Scott of Goldielands – ‘... And the laird Watt, that worthy man, Brought in his surname, weel be’t seen’ [CPM].
lairge (lærj) adj. large – ‘...aw just went rummaging about, an’ then aw saw a lairge fir, an’ made ma way towards it’ [JHH].

lairge (lærj) adv., arch. boastfully (this meaning peculiar to Roxburghshire), adj., arch. boastful, bombastic, copious, full – ‘...and oblige that the sd. persones shall give satisfactione to ye kirke as orthodox and largie’ [BR1689].

lairgeness (lærj) n. largeness, arch. generosity, largesse – ‘The descriptione of Valter Scot of Govdilandis his qualities. ... Heir lys bvreit lairgenes & lavitie ...’ [MI1596]. the side road from Teviothead at Bowanhill. The Lairhope Burn passes here.

Lairhope (lær-hôp, lær-rup) n. former farm above Falnash on the Lairhope Burn, with a small loch nearby. The track here used to be (before about the mid-18th century) part of an alternative road from the south towards Hawick, crossing over to the upper Borthwick valley via Old Howpasley. The main lands were originally ‘Lairs’, with the ‘hope’ being attached, and later the base name being lost. It may be the ‘laris’ where Robert Turnbull was recorded in 1493 and ‘Robertus Scot in Laris’ is recorded in 1501. It seems likely to be the ‘towne callid Ladduppe in Tyvidiaill, of the Larde of Howpasleis callid Scot’ which was burned by a band of Armstrongs in 1543/4. Matthew Little was tenant there in 1576. Andrew Armstrong was there in 1623. It was valued in 1627, paying ‘50 lb., vicarage 10 lb.’, listed along with Chisholme and Parkhill. Walter Scott of Newton was owner in 1678, when it was valued at £266 13s 4d. It is listed along with ‘Lares’ in the list for the ratification of the Barony of Hawick to Anna Duchess of Buccleuch in 1686. Janet Grieve was listed there among the poor of Hawick Parish in 1694. James Hislop was there in 1698. James Nichol was tenant there in 1705 and John Nichol was herd in 1711. The farm was purchased by the Buccleuch estates from the trustees of Elliot of Fenwick around 1756, when it was referred to as the ‘5 merkland of old extent of Lairs alias Lairhope’. In 1788 and 1811 it is ‘Larehope’ when valued at £266 13s 4d as part of the properties of the Duke of Buccleuch. John Anderson was shepherd there in the mid-19th century, George Rutherford in 1841 and Walter Elliot in 1851 and 1861. On the south-east slope of Lairhope Braes are the foundations of several buildings and enclosures of unknown age, probably a township by the side of the former main road (it is probably the ‘Larishop’ of 1500, and is ‘Lairhowp’ in 1576, ‘Lairhoip’ in 1623, ‘Lareshope’ in 1686, ‘Larehop’ in 1698 and ‘Larehope’ in 1711; it is marked ‘Lairhoope’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; ‘lair’ is Scots for a place where animals sheltered).

Lairhope Burn (lær-rup-burn) n. stream in the headwaters of the Teviot, joining Hazelhope Burn to become Falnash Burn. It rises around Pike Hill and is fed by smaller streams such as Ruthead Sike, Hare Grain, Lousey Hass and Crib Sike. There is a marshy area around Lairhope farm.

Lairhope Braes (lær-rup-brâz) n. hilly slope just to the west of Lairhope, in the headwaters of the Teviot. The name presumably derives from being a slope on the old road that used to pass from here to the top of the Borthwick valley via Howpasley.

lairn (lærn) v. to learn – ‘she gien thum a bible verse ti lairn every night’, ‘A lairned eet fri ma fither’, ‘...gie me understan’in’, that I may learn thy commandments’ [HSR], ‘Gin I hadna traivelled, the first aine said, ‘I had never lairned, ‘Gin I hadna my buiks,’ quo the second aine, ‘I had naething aimerd’ [WL], to teach – ‘that skelpin lairned um aa right’, ‘This day Mr John Purdom gave in ane account of poor scholar’s quarter wages ... and other three in the end of the account are set down, whom he learned gratis’ [PR1712], ‘Ye glowing idiot. That’ll lairn ye tae glower at me’ [JEDM], ‘...Lairnin hunders o Hawick rugby boys The basics o the game’ [IWL].

lairnt (lærnt) pp. learned – ‘...And mony generations syne, Cauldrie, I should hae lairnt to care’ [DH], ‘...that’s where hei lairnt aboot the world’ [IWL], ‘And the thing that makes oo spacial Is oo speak in oor ain way. And now that oo hev lairnt ee, Ee can dae eet tae’ [IWL] (also written ‘lairned’).

Lairs (lærz) n. original name for lands that were later known as Lairhope. Robert Turnbull ‘in laris’ was recorded in 1493. It was owned by George Scott in 1501, with some dispute over whether it had been historically held ‘in blanch farm’ or ‘by ward and relief’, from the superior, James Douglas of Drumlanrig. Robert Scott was also recorded as tenant there in 1501. The lands of ‘Lares and Lareshope’ are listed among lands owned by Anna Duchess of Buccleuch in 1686, so they were separate at one point (it is ‘Laris’ in 1501; see also Lairhope and Larristofts).

laith (lāith) adj. loath – ‘To injure you I would be laith, So hide not thou thy horns frae me ...’ [TCh], ‘Bit ‘nae man can tether time nor teide,’ an, sweeddrawn an laith tho A was ...’ [ECS], ‘...Ilk feathered songster’s laith to gang Fräe the Bank aboon the Boosie’ [DA], ‘Sae, naething laith, hei drank it slowly doon ...’ [DH], ‘Aw tell o’ the day that Scobie was laith ...’ [MB].

laithly (lāith-lee) adj., poet. loathsome, horrible – ‘Aboon the aixles’ dying gleid, The laithly kerlyn satte’ [JTe].

Laitin (lā’-in) n., arch. Latin. The following gem is meant to have been recited by a Hawick pupil in the early 1800s – ‘Cæsar Galliam intravit summa diligentia omnibus copiis (Cæsar entered Gallia on the top of a diligence, his forces going in the omnibus)’.

Lakes Haugh Park (lāks-hawgh-pawrk) n. former name for a piece of land in Minto Parish. It was listed ‘Lake’s-haugh’ in 1779, with a value of £36 9s 10d. It was among lands liferented to Robert Trotter in 1779, but disputed in 1780, with a rental of £10. It was still listed in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811.

Lal (lawl) n. nickname for Alex Laing.

Lamb (lawm) n. Adam (d.1808) weaver in Hawick, son of weaver John. Adam (1826–1913) born in Hawick, son of John and Elizabeth. He trained as a thongmaker, but then emigrated to Galt, Ontario, later moving to MacGregor, Manitoba, where he was among the first settlers. He firstly married Janet Laidlaw and secondly married Mary Queen. His children included Robert E. (1862–1932). Agnes ‘Bonnie Aggie’ (19th/20th C.) seller of confectionary in Hawick. She is believed to have been the originator of the recipe for Hawick Balls. She may have started in Needle Street and then moved to Commercial Road, where she was in business with Jessie McVittie. She certainly had a shop at 31 Drumlanrig Square for a while. Andrew (17th C.) tenant in Newlands. In 1684 he was listed among local men declared as fugitives for being Covenanters. Benjamin (b.1766) son of James, he was a weaver in Hawick. He married Mary Weens in 1790, and she died in 1806. Their children included:

George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, living at Wester Mill in 1751. Probably the same George witnessed in 1751 a baptism for Walter Ker, resident of Borthaugh. He married Mary Elliot in Wilton Parish in 1743 and their children included David (b.1745) and Jean (b.1751). The witnesses in 1751 were Walter and Robert Scott. George (18th C.) married Janet Laidlaw in Hawick Parish in 1759. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Nelly Paisley and their children included: John (b.1779); George and Robert (b.1780); Margaret (b.1781); and George (again, b.1789). George (18th C.) Rector of the Grammar School James (b.1791); Agnes (b.1797); and Benjamin (b.1802). 1773–87. He may have been the first to use the title of ‘Rector’. He resigned from the position, presumably to take up another position elsewhere. It is not impossible that he could be the George Lamb described as a schoolmaster and formerly a dissenting minister, who performed ‘irregular marriages’ at Lamberton Toll near Berwick, dying in 1816, aged 68. He is recorded as ‘The Rev. Mr George Lamb’ in Hawick on the subscriber list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). George (18th/19th C.) gardener in Hawick who married Janet Laidlaw. Their children included: Margaret (b.1760); Janet (b.1763); Mary (b.1765); George (b.1768); and Walter (b.1771). The witnesses to the 1760 baptism were John Laidlaw and James Briggs. He is probably the George recorded as owner of a horse in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, and the George who died in 1802, father of cooper Walter. It is possible he is the George, son of John and Janet Scott, who was born in Wilton Parish in 1740. He may also be the gardener at Wilton Lodge listed in 1792–94, when he was working for Lord Napier. George (18th/19th C.) weaver in Hawick. His unnamed child died in 1809. In 1797 in Hawick possibly the same George married Betty Turnbull from Wilton. Hugh (18th/19th C.) Hawick baker. His daughter Betty died in 1801 and his son Hugh in 1805. James (d.1683) tenant in ‘Whitrige’ in 1683 when his will was recorded. This could have been Whitrigg’s or perhaps somewhere else in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk and Peebles. James (17th C.) name of 2 separate residents of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. James (17th C.) resident at Flight in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. James (d.bef. 1808) weaver in Hawick. He was already deceased in 1808 when his son Adam died. James (b.1765/6) weaver who was an old man living at Slaidhills with his daughter Elizabeth in 1841 and 1851. James Lamb (b.c.1795) from Teviothead, he was an agricultural labourer. In 1841 he was living at ‘Eildrige Shank’, i.e. Eilrig Burnfoot and in 1851 he was at Dodburn. His wife was Catherine and their children included James, John, Catherine, George, Jane and Walter. Janet (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when she was at Stirches. Janet (19th/20th C.) shopkeeper of a baby linen and fancy goods shop at 59 High Street. She can be seen outside the shop in an early photograph. The shop sign read ‘John Lamb’, presumably her father, and they must have been from the Needle Street family. She retired in 1928 and the business was sold to Miss Rutherford and later continued by Mr. Stormont. John (15th C.) tenant in Wilton who is mentioned in 1493. Jock Elliot (from Caver-ton) had remission for several crimes, including stealing 16 sheep from him. John (1652/3–1725) weaver in Bedrule. He is buried in the Bedrule kirkyard. He is probably the John listed on the Hearth Tax records for Bedrule Parish in 1694, and likely related to the William who is listed after him. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded in ‘Gurnford’ in 1703, when his son John was baptised. This happened at the same time as the baptism of a son of John Lorraine, with the witnesses being Adam Scott and Walter Scott. He had other children George (b.1704) and John (again, b.1706). He may be the John who, along with William, witnessed a baptism for Robert Ormiston in Boonraw in 1696. He may be the John whose son William married Jean Turnbull in 1726. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Clarilaw in 1724. He is probably the John who in 1733 and 1738 wit-nessed baptisms for Robert Ormiston, resident at Boonraw. He married Bessie Collins in Wilton in 1711. Her surname is also recorded as ‘Colven’ and their children included: Janet (b.1718); and John (b.1724). The witnesses in 1724 were John Dryden and Thomas Dodds. He is probably the John who witnessed a baptism in 1729 for William, who was living at Stirches. John (d.1805) gardener on the Cross Wynd. John (b.1793) son of James and Mary. He was a needle-maker at 10 Mid Raw. He is recorded there in 1841, 1851 and 1861. He was listed as a needle-maker in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Janet and their children included Margaret, Mary, Elizabeth (‘Betsy’), Benjamin, Agnes, Isabell, Janet and John. Mary (18th C.) cook and chambermaid at Burnhead in at least the period 1786–88, when she was working for William Scott. Matthew (15th C.) resident of Raperlaw. In 1494/5 he was convicted of common theft ‘of old and new’, but his case was suspended. Miss (18th/19th C.) seller of ‘rock bools’ from the end of Needle Street in the 1800s. This could be the same as the person mentioned in ‘Hawick Immortals’ – ‘Auld Mag Lamb and her penny krame’. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He is recorded as a ‘fisher’ in 1708. He married Bessie Wilson and their children included James (b.1708), with bap-tismal witnesses carriers John Hardie and James Aitken and Bailie James Deans. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jane Ormiston in Wilton Parish in 1764. Their children included: John (b.1765); Jean (b.1767); James (b.1769); Robert (b.1771); Janet (b.1772); and Robert (again, b.1781). The witnesses in 1769 were Andrew Turner and Thomas Reid and in 1781 were weaver John Briggs and Thomas Miller. Robert (b.1784/5) born in Hawick, he was a farm worker in Roberton Parish. He was living at Hosocate Cottage in 1841 and Dean-burnhaugh in 1851. By 1861 he was a gardener in Kelso. He married Christian Noble and their children included: John (b.1808/9); Betty (b.1810/1), who married a Gibson; Robert (b.1812); Margaret (b.1814); Robert (b.1816); Christian (or ‘Christy’, b.1819); Miney (b.1821); Agnes (b.1826); Peter (b.1832/3); and Barbara (b.1830/1). The first 2 children were baptised in Minto Parish and the next 4 in Ashkirk Parish. Robert (b.c.1832) born at Wilton Pathhead, son of John and Betsy. He trained as a woollen hosiery dresser, like his father. He emigrated to Galt, Ontario, along with his older brother Adam. They later moved to MacGregor, Mani-toba, where they were among the first settlers. He farmed there and gave 2 acres of his land to establish a school, which he called Path Head School, after his birthplace. There is a cairn marking the location of the former school. Stewart (b.c.1815) Hawick resident who married Margaret Murray in 1840. He was found guilty of mobbing and rioting against Tory supporters at the 1837 election in Hawick, along with 3 others (and one who was found not guilty). Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Woodhead (probably in Evesdale). He was one of the founders of the Wisp Club in 1826. Thomas (1851–1939) slater in Hawick. He joined the Hawick Fire Brigade in 1872, eventually becoming Captain and retiring from the service in 1922. Also a keen bowler, he won the Buccleuch Bowling Club championship 11 times. Walter (1771–1846) son of George and Janet Laidlaw. He was a cooper of the Sandbed, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1841 he was living at about No. 6. He married Christian, daughter of William Phillips and Mary Scott. Their children included: George (b.1809), who moved to Canada; Mary (b.1811); William (b.1812), who trained for the ministry; Janet (b.1814); and Christian (b.1817), who was the 2nd wife of James Damone Kennedy. William (16th C.) recorded as Parson of Cavers parish in March of 1546/7. It is unknown how long he held this position or if he was ever in the parish. He was the sister’s son and heir of Patrick Panter, who was Abbot of Cambusbenneth and Secretary of State. William (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. William (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish (when Hassendean was still part of it). He is recorded at Newton in 1688. He married Isobel Leyden in 1686 and their children included: William (b.1687); James (b.1688); and George (b.1689). The witnesses in 1687 were William Leyden and James Smith and in 1688 were William and James Leyden, who were surely related to his wife. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism in 1681 and another for William Scott in Newton in 1683. He may be the William who, along with John, witnessed a baptism for Robert Ormiston in Boonraw in 1696. William (17th C.) resident at Stirches according to the 1694 Hearth Tax roll for Hassendean Parish. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Easter Alemoor in 1714 when his daughter Euphan was baptised. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Boonraw in 1724 and Stirches in 1729. He could be the William who witnessed a baptism in 1735 for William Scott, resident of Wester Burnfoot. He married Agnes Renwick in 1719 (and perhaps also proclaimed in 1718, although no wife’s name is listed). Their children included: John (b.1720); Jean (b.1724); Euphan (b.1727); John (b.1729); William (b.1731); and William (again, b.1735). The witnesses in 1724 were James and John Armstrong, in 1727 included William Lorraine and in 1729 were John Lamb (surely related) and John Scott. He is probably the William who witnessed a baptism for Walter Lorraine (resident of Stirches) in 1729 and another for John Lorraine in 1754. He could be the William ‘Ballad Singer’ who was already deceased in 1797 when his daughter Jean died in Hawick. William (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, son of John. He was recorded living at Wester Burnfoot in 1735. In 1726 he married Jean, daughter of Robert Turnbull, the marriage being proclaimed in both Wilton and Minto Parishes. Their children included: Jean (b.1728); Euphan (b.1734); Johanna (b.1735); and Robert (b.1739). The witnesses in 1735 were Walter Riddell and William Sanderson. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick who married Sarah Hume in 1763. They had an unnamed child baptised in 1766. Rev. William (1812–77) born in Hawick Parish, he was son of cooper Walter and Christian Phillips. He was educated at Edinburgh High School and University and licensed as a minister by Jedburgh Presbytery. He was preacher at Caerlenrig (Teviothead) Chapel of Ease 1843–44 and was then translated to Ednam, where he remained until his death. He married Christian Archibald MacDougall, daughter of Joseph Yair, minister of Eckford. His children were: Helen Josephine (b.1869); Walter minister of Lauder; Christian (b.1871); William (b.1874); George (b.1875); and John Yair (b.1877). lampit (lawm-pée’, -pi’) pp., arch. limped, hobbled, strode – ‘A met a doiterin, duddy, auld hallanshaker as A laampeet doon that lang brae’ [ECS].

the Lamp (thu-lawmp) n. the 1537 Charter stipulates that a lamp should be permanently burning before the High Altar of the Parish Church ‘... for the souls of the Barons of Hawick, founders of said lamp, and their successors’. According to the Charter it was the duty of the heirs of James Blair to provide this lamp, and they thus held some special status through paying one penny Scots each Pentecost in return for a half particate of land. Whether this lamp was part of the original foundation of St. Mary’s (and hence started by the Lovels) or began with Douglas of Drumlanrig, or at some point between, is unknown. It is also unclear when this arrangement ended, but certainly the burning of the lamp would have been abolished by the Reformation. The presence of Sir James Douglas at Parliament during the ratification of the Confessions of Faith in 1560 effectively exonerated the people of Hawick from their obligation to maintain the lamp. The lamp symbol appears on the Hawick coat of arms, and similar lamps were incorporated into the War Memorial – ‘The votive lamp which day and night Shed in the church its hallowed light, At matins, mass, and vesper hymn, Cast here its rays subdued and dim’ [WNK].

Lampin Lizzie (lam-pin-ii-zee) n. local character of the early 19th century.

Lanark (law-nurk) n. town in South Lanarkshire, which has been a Royal Burgh since the early 12th century. It still has a riding of the marches festival, focussed on ‘Lanimers Day’ (usually the same day as the Thursday of Hawick Common Riding) and involving a ‘Lord Cornet’ and ‘Lanimer Queen’. Population (1991) 8,877.

land-end (lawnd-end) n., arch. top end of a rig, end of a furrow – ‘...But Robin reached the land-end first And foremost o’ the boon’ [JT].

Landles (lawn-duz) n. Andrew (1815–53) originally from Northumberland, he was a master framesmith in Hawick. In 1841 he was living at Teviot Square (probably 12 Sandbed), employing 4 men. He was listed as a framesmith on the Back Row in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1839 he married Mary, daughter of David Affleck, who was born in Wigtownshire. Their children included Margaret, Maria, David and Andrew. He may have died in Australia. Andrew, J.P. (1853–1940) son of Andrew. He was a Town Councillor from 1909 and Bailie in the 1920s, as well as J.P. from 1913. He worked in the woollen industry all his life. He was involved with setting up Hawick R.F.C., and wrote a memoir of those times in the early 1920s. He was also involved with the Volunteers, the Foresters and the Home Mission. He retired from the Common Riding Committee in 1932 after 40 years of service. He married Sarah, daughter of Valentine Godfrey, and died in 1941. He was grandfather of Wullie and great-grandfather of Ian. His children were: Andrew, Professor of Music at Eugene, Oregon; David, who died young; Thomas, who was a policeman and member of the Brethren; William, who was a hosier worker and artist; John Chapman Gray ‘Chap’, who was Cornet and Provost; Jessie, who married confectioner Alexander Murray; and Mary Affleck, who married baths attendant Frederick Crozier. Andrew (1877–1944) son of Bailie Andrew. He emigrated to Eugene, Oregon, where he was a Professor of Music. He married Sarah Calderhead. His son Andrew was 5 when the family emigrated and died aged 95 in 1999; his ashes were returned to Hawick in 2001. Andrew ‘Andra’ (??–??) uncle of Ian and brother of Wullie. He was a stalwart committee man of the Archeological Society and known for his sense of humour. Ian William (1952–), B.E.M., High School History teacher, and son of Wullie. Educated in Hawick and at Edinburgh University, graduating in 1974, he then trained as a teacher at Moray House, returning to Hawick as a teacher in 1975. He later became Head of the History Department, retaining the position until retirement in 2009. He was the instigator of the battlefield tours for pupils and later adults from Hawick. He is writer of the words and music for ‘Auld Hawick, Ma Border Hame’, ‘My Teviot Valley’, ‘A’m Comin’ Hame’ and other more impromptu songs set to well known tunes. His poems include ‘The Vertish Hill’, ‘The Man that oo Ca’ Bill’ and ‘Doon Oor Close And Up Oor Stair’. He is frequent accompanist at Common Riding and other functions, having taken over in the ‘Hut’ from Adie Ingles. He has also been star of the annual Panto and played ‘Gibbie the Gowk’ in ‘The Gutterbludes’. He is a public speaker extraordinaire, local dialect enthusiast and general all-round entertainer. He has made a large number of valuable tape recordings of elderly locals (an archive of 150 cassette tapes being digitised in 2015), and contributed to local history and culture in innumerable ways. He also has an unrivalled collection of photographic slides relating to Hawick and area. He wrote ‘Honest men and bright-eyed daughters’ (1991), ‘Mair honest men’ (1993) and ‘Son of Honest Men’ (2000) with Derek Lunn. ‘Walking in the Land of the Reivers’ (2011) with Alan Brydon, and has contributed many articles to the Archeological Society Transactions, as well as serving in most capacities on its committee. He wrote the musical plays ‘A Reiver’s Moon’ and ‘1514: The Musical’ with Alan Brydon. He was Hawick Citizen of the Year in 2000,
Landles

Common Riding Chief Guest in 2004 and has been President of the 1514 and Callants’ Clubs. He also provides the acrostics for the Callants’ Club dinner guest. He was heavily involved in arranging the Adam Grant plaque, the James Thomson statue and the Bill McLaren bust. His ‘night cless’ has been popular for decades. He was recorded in dialect in 2004 as part of the BBC ‘Voices’ project. In 2013 he was awarded the British Empire Medal for services to the community in Hawick – ‘Now as maist o ee ken ‘A few remarks’ and ‘Ian Landles’ irni words ee wad expect ti come across in the same sentence!’ [IWL].

John Chapman Gray, J.P., ‘Chap’ (1892–1980), son of Bailie Andrew and uncle of Wullie. He had his schooling at Buccleuch and Wilton. He served an apprenticeship with Barrie & Kersel and spent the rest of his life with Innes & Henderson. In WWI he served with Lothian and Border Horse. He played rugby, swam and was in the water polo team in the opening game at ‘the Baths’. He was Cornet in 1921, Councillor from 1931 for South High Street Ward and Bailie from 1935. He served as Provost 1938–40, and has been described as Hawick’s first ‘working man’ Provost. The ‘Provost Landles Spitfire Fund’ raised money for the purchase of the ‘Teribus Spitfire’ in WWII. He rode the Marches himself in 1940, and led a group each year during the rest of the war. He was the first enrolled member of the Hawick British Legion, President of the Callants’ Club and of Hawick R.F.C. He was a director on the Board of the Co-op Society, Convenor of the County Health Committee and an elder in St. Andrew’s Church. Landles Road is named after him. Thomas (19th/20th C.) son of Bailie Andrew. He was a policeman and then worked with Urban Electric Co. in Hawick. He was a leading preacher with the Open Brethren. His son William was the local poet, father of Ian. William (14th C.) probably a descendant of John de Landales, who was great-grandson of Orm. He was granted the lands of Swinside and Renalston in about 1390, after they were forfeited by Robert Burrell. He was also granted a charter of lands in Oxnam. He was ‘William de Laundelis of Swynyshede’ in 1390 when he witnessed the charter of John Turnbull of Minto, granting Minto to William Stewart of Jedburgh. He also received a charter of lands in Oxnam, forfeited by John Wylie. His wife was Janet and they had a daughter Katharine, who married John Lander. William ‘Wullie’ (1912–98) cousin of Bill and nephew of ‘Chap’, he was born at 7 Sandbed and educated at Buccleuch and Wilton Schools. He worked in the knitwear industry, first for Turner & Rutherford and then at Glebe Mills, where he was company secretary. He later spent time working for Roberts of Selkirk and Thornburn of Walkerburn before returning to a Hawick firm in John Laing’s, and finally retiring in 1977. After retirement he wrote court reports for the Hawick News. However, it is as a writer that he is remembered, particularly as a poet, publishing over 400 pieces. Among these were ‘Oor Border Hame’ and ‘Borthwick Water’, both set to music. Many of his poems have local flavour, including ‘The Exile’s Return’, ‘A Callant’s Games’, ‘Hawick Sang’, ‘Hame Toun’, ‘The Centre o’ them a’, ‘The Rowan Hills sae Green’ and ‘The Herd’s Psalm’. His poetry collections include ‘A Breath frae the Hills: verses Scots and English’ (1950), ‘Gooseberry Fair, and other verses, Scots and English’ (1952), ‘Penny Numbers: poems Scots and English’ (1969) and ‘Turn o’ the Year and other poems chiefly in Scots’ (1989). As ‘Quartus’ he was writer of the ‘Thought For The Week’ Christian commentary column in the Hawick News; these were collected in ‘I to the Hills’ (1979), ‘All Good Gifts Around Us’ (1982) and ‘Roving Commission’ (1992). He wrote a short book on Will H. Ogilvie in 1992. He was awarded the M.B.E. for services to Border literature in 1996. In addition he was a lay preacher, involved with the local Brethren Fellowship. He was father of Ian W. He is buried in the Wellowgate Cemetery. William ‘Bill’ (1923–2016) cousin of Wullie and nephew of ‘Chap’. He was born in Langlands Bank and attended Hawick High School. He worked as a message-boy for the Store, was then a grocer in their High Street branch and was sent as a manager to Riccarton Junction during the War. He was a self-taught sculptor, being mentored by Anne Redpath and attended Andrew Dodds’ stone-cutting night class in Hawick. He later went to Edinburgh College of Art, winning a scholarship there, and commuting daily on the train. Training as a teacher, he taught art at the High School for 23 years, retiring in 1980. He exhibited regularly at the Royal Scottish Academy, being known particularly for his figures and has work in galleries all over the world. He sculpted the Will H. Ogilvie memorial (with a replica in Australia), the Adam Grant plaque and the James Thomson statue. There was an exhibition of his work at the Scott Gallery in 2006. He moved to Tyne and Wear in his last years. He and his wife Joyce celebrated their 70th wedding anniversary and they had two children, Eric and Linda. He was described as being a ‘gentleman but also a very gentle man’.

Landlesism (lawnd-duhz-zum) n. a play on words, often involving idiosyncrasies of the Teri tongue when contrasted with standard English. Named after Ian Landles (or perhaps his uncle Andra, to whom he credits his sense of humour), for his inability to speak for more than a couple of minutes without interjecting such a phrase. ‘Black secks’, ‘the atmosphere’s elastic’ and ‘Airchie Oliver Society’ are typical examples, while sentences like ‘Hawick folk canni dae sums, oo’ve got a Big Haugh and a Wee Haugh’ are also abundant.

Landles Road (lawnd-dulz-rohd) n. road between Mansfield Gardens and Mansfield Square, at one time site of a spur railway line for the Gas Works, Eastfield and Riversdale Mills and then a private road. It was taken over by the council and named after Chap Landles in 1985. However, it is not the address of any house.

Lands (lawndz) n. James (17th C.) baxter in Hawick. In 1688 he is recorded as a journeyman baxter when ‘convicted of breaking ane timber byncke’. He is also recorded in 1688 when his will was listed in Peebles Commissariot. He married Margaret Gledstains and their children baptised in Hawick Parish included: James (b.1682); Marion (b.1683); Margaret (b.1685); Helen (b.1686); and Jane (b.1687). The 1682 baptism was witnessed by William Douglas and John Scott ‘Whitewayts’ (also written ‘Lans’).

land-setting (lawnd-sez-in) n., arch. the letting of land to tenants – ‘The day before the arrival of the Duke of Buccleuch’s commissioners to let his land at Hawick, which took place annually, and was called the ‘land setting’’ [JJV], ‘...as the Laird of Whithaugh did signe to our minister at ye landssetting’ [PR1715], ‘When the Duchess of Monmouth attended the land-setting, at Hawick, she was remarkably fond of conversing with Hobby ... ’ [WSB]. This was a great annual occasion in Hawick, with the Duke’s Commissioners and country gentlemen gathering in the town, with a fatted ox slaughtered for the dinner, as described in Somerville’s ‘Life and Times’ (also sometimes ‘land-sitting’).

the Land Tax (thu-lawnd-tawks) n. tax imposed on lands according to their valuation. The rolls were compiled by the Commissioners of Supply in each county and form a valuable record of ownership of land, as well as details of individuals, boundaries, etc. For Roxburghshire (although not all parishes in all cases) there are specific records for 1649, 1663, 1678, 1771, 1803 and 1813 and similar records in Selkirkshire. In most cases the information is accurate a few years earlier (e.g. in 1811 for the 1813 Roll).

landward (lawnd-wurd) adj., arch. outlying, rural, literally ‘towards the land’, referring to the part of the Parish outside the Town – ‘...he should pay nothing inward to the town for tolling of the bell at landward burials’ [BR1707], ‘...of ye whole householders both in ye town and landward parts of ye parish ... extending to ye number of Eleven Score and Nyne or thereby’ [PR1712], ‘...intimation was made to ye congregation that ye minister would begin again to examine ye landward part of ye parish’ [PR1716], adv. rural, towards the land – ‘...to all burgesses in toune or landward who had onsteads of housses and tenements of lands within the said Brugh ... ’ [BR], ‘...to be gathered att ye dwelling houses of ye parishioners in this toune and landward by the Elders in their respective bounds’ [PR1722], ‘...the burden of buildings and repairing the churches ... particularly in landward or country parishes ... ’ [RWB], n., arch. the outlying part, part outside the town (also landwart and lan’-ward).

lane (lihn) adj., arch. lone, alone, solitary – ‘A lane weeda wumman’ [GW], ‘...Looks muckle to mean and lane’ [DH], n., self, combined with a possessive pronoun to indicate an action done alone – ‘...she said she was wae tae see me gang back my lane, but her father was mair spited against me than ever ... ’ [JEDM], ‘The dowie young lassie, she sits a’ her lane, An’ she greets to hersel’ at the gloamin’ fa’ ... ’ [JJ], ‘...To deck his grave wi’ the snowdrop flo’er, An’ sit an’ sing by it a’ my lane’ [FGS], ‘...And age ne’er comes its lane’ [WL], ‘...And ilka maid in the mirky dark can greet her quiet lane’ [JYH], ‘...It gangs a’ the the Border’ (1913, with his brother John). He is buried in Selkirk and the cottage hospital there was renamed the Andrew Lang unit. Janet (18th C.) laundrymaid at Minto in 1791, when she was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot.

Langbaulk (hum-bawk, lawng-bawlk) n. farmhouse on the left hand-side of Buccleuch Road, just after the Dunk, being at the end of the ‘Lumback’ road. It was formerly split into Easter and Wester parts. John Henderson was farmer here in 1797 and still recorded in 1841. Francis Henderson was there in the mid-20th century.

Langbaulk Road (hum-bawk-rōd) n. more recently spelled Longbaulk, but pronounced ‘Lumback’, this is the right fork at the top of the Loan. It was probably developed as a proper road in about 1762, as part of the coach road to Carlisle before the ‘New Road’ was opened in 1815. It is now often used for country walks. Part of the original road is a grass-grown right-of-way, which leaves the metalled road and passes the Longbaulk farm steadings. It was named in 1965, with new private and council houses built here between 1970 and 1980. The part officially called ‘Longbaulk Road’ is a dead end, with ‘the Lumback’ continuing as Crumhaughhill Road. After the ‘New Road’ was built there was for a long time a notice that read, when coming towards Hawick, ‘No road this way for the public. Trespassers will be prosecuted for evasion of the toll bar’ (the name either means ‘a long hard pull’ or refers to a long ‘baulk’ or strip of land left unploughed).

Langbits (lawng-bits) n. lands in the Barony of Cavers. In 1519/20 they were promised from James Gledstains as part of the marriage contract for his son James, and a daughter of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. It is unclear where exactly these lands were, but probably near Teviothead (written ‘Langbitiss’).

Lang Burn (lawng-burn) n. stream in the upper Slitrig valley (essentially being the upper part of the Slitrig itself) running alongside the B6399 from Shankend to Langburnshiel. It is essentially formed from the confluence of the Leap Burn, Flosk Burn and Rope Sike. The lands there may be the same as those lands recorded in a Baronial dispute of Feu-Rule in 1562 (it is probably the tributary of the Slitrig marked ‘Langhburn’ on Blaue’s 1654 map).

Langburnshiel (lawng-burn-sheelz) n. Longburnshiel, hamlet and farm near Shankend on the Newcastleton road, once site of the ‘Turf Hotel’ used by railway labourers. It was contained within Hobkirk Parish and was once part of the estate of Elliot of Harwood, being listed as ‘Langburne’ among the Harwood farms on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. Robert Oliver was there from around the 1760s, John Elliot shepherd at about the same time. Robert Elliot was recorded there in 1785, Robert Oliver 1786–90, Alexander Lillico in 1790 and Thomas Oliver in 1791–94. There was a Robertson there in 1797. The tenants were William Stephenson in the late 18th century till 1807, then James Mather from 1813, followed by Daniel Mather. The Carruthers and Elliot families were there in 1841, and the Carruthers and Scotts in 1851. Thomas Carruthers was manager of the farm there until the 1860s. The Hawick postman used to go as far as here by bicycle. Peculiar lines of stones have been noted on a nearby hill, examined by Alexander Michie and James Murray in 1863, as well as a possible hill-fort being described nearby (it is just ‘Langburn’ in 1790: this may be the place marked ‘Shells’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; it has the modern spelling by Stobie’s 1770 map).

Langbyre (lawng-bir) n. former farmstead in the upper Teviot valley, near the modern Lymiecleuch. It was among lands purchased by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs from Douglas of Cavers in 1620. It is listed among lands in the Barony of Cavers owned by the Elliotts of Stobs in the latter part of the 17th century. The lands were included among those of Lymiecleuch when sold by William Elliott of Stobs to a group of Elliotts in 1670, but may have been bought back shortly afterwards. It was among lands inherited by Sir William Elliott from his father in 1692 (marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Lang Cairn (lawng-kārn) n. Long Cairn, near the Kershope Burn, situated on Long Knowe, directly north of Scotch Kershope, now in the middle of Newcastleton Forest. It is the only known neolithic structure in Roxburghshire. It is a stone-built, barrow-like burial cairn, roughly pear-shaped, with maximum size about 53 m by 14 m, and with part of an exposed cist towards the north end. It was excavated around 1850 and investigated again in 1870 when is was said to contain ‘several stone coffins of various sizes standing exposed’. There is a nearby standing stone marking a boundary of the Debateable Lands.

Lang Cleuch (lawng-clooch) n. stream that rises on the northern side of Skelfhill and runs roughly north-eastwards to join the Skelfhill Burn.

Langcleuch (lawng-clooch) n. former farmstead marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map in the upper part of the Allan valley, perhaps near Skelfhillhope. ‘Langcleuchside’ was listed as part of the lands of Ringwoodfield in 1660. ‘Longcleuchside’ is shown on the 1718 survey of Scott of Buccleuch lands, attached to Skelfill and Fairnyside. The cleuch itself is labelled on the map, corresponding to the modern Pen Sike. John Armstrong was farmer there in the late 18th century.

the Lang Croft (thu-lawng-kroft) n. long field that once lay north and north-west of the present Crumaughill Road, and on part of which Longcroft Crescent and Road were built.

Langcroft Crescent (lawng-kroft-krä-sin’) n. Longcroft Crescent, loop off Longbaulk Road, built in 1938 and named after the ‘Long Croft’ which once stood there.

Langcroft Road (lawng-kroft-röd) n. Longcroft Road, street connecting Longcroft Crescent with Longbaulk Road, built in 1938 and named after the ‘Long Croft’.

Langdale (lawng-däl) n. remote area in Cumbria that was a neolithic axe factory. The polished greenstone volcanic tuff found here is the source for a large fraction of the neolithic axe-heads discovered around Britain. An example found at Borthwickbrae Burnfoot (measuring 4.5 x 1.75 x 0.75 inches and now in the National Museum) came from here.

Lang Eild-rig (lawng-eel-rid) n. former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls.

langer (lawng-ur) adj., adv. longer – ‘Jimmy Rae’s no cuttin hair ony langer!’, ‘if ee stand there ony langer, ee’ll take riut’, ‘...and to remove from the town for ane yair and langer ...’ [BR1644], ‘Where will ye get a whisky soss To moistify your middle, For now nae langer at Haremoss You’l hear auld Ruickbie’s fiddle’ [JR], ‘Nae langer could he thole, She tore his vera soul’ [JTe], ‘Some say it is a gross abuse, Some say they’ll it nae langer use ...’ [TP], ‘...on account o hevin been there a sicht langer’ [DH] (note there is no hard g in the pronunciation).

langest (lawng-ist) adj. longest – ‘‘Aye’, he said, things lest lagent efter they’re done’’ [JHH] (note the lack of the hard g in the pronunciation).

Lang Flow (lawng-flo) n. Long Flow, area between Redfordgreen and Bleak Law, marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map.

Langflat (lawng-fl’) n. former name for a farmstead bordering on the old Common, being the eastern part of Southfield farm, lying west of the road shortly before the Caa Knowe. Simon Learmouth and Alexander Kennedy were living there in 1694 when it is ‘Langflatte’ (mentioned in the 1767 description of the boundaries of the Common).

Langformacus (lawng-for-mä-kis) n. Langformacus, a village in Berwickshire, on the Dye Water, north-west of Duns, containing 18th century Longformacus House and associated unusual dovecote (the origin is ‘church meadow of Maccus’ in Old Welsh).

Lang Gill (lawng-gil) n. Long Gill, stream in a narrow ravine in the hills to the west of Newcastleton, rising on Millstone Edge and running roughly south to join the Black Burn. There are a couple of ruined bothies and sheepfolds along its banks, as well as turf-banked enclosure to the south (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Lang Grain (lawng-grän) n. Long Grain, stream that joins the Whitrope Burn just south of Whitropefoot. There are grouse butts in the upper part and an old sheepfold part-way down. On the banks of the stream, just to the west of the main road are the remains of 2 shieling-huts. ‘Langgrainfit’ was a former farmstead on the drove road, once an important stopping point before the turnpike road (B6399) was opened. There are many other small streams with the same name, e.g. one in the headwaters of the Teviot, another at Mosspaull and a third near Altrieve in the upper Ettrick valley (‘Grain’ is Scots for a branch of a stream, derived from Old Norse).

Langhaugh

Langhaugh (lawng-hawch) n. Longhaugh, former farm in the upper Rule valley, just north of Wauchope. The lands specifically lay to the east of Templehall and Brawlands. It is mentioned in 1767 as ‘the Twenty pound land of Wauchope and Longhaugh’ (it is ‘Langheuch’ in 1567, ‘Langhawght’ in 1604, ‘Langhauch’ in 1605, ‘Langhauch’ in 1637 and ‘Langhaughe’ in 1649; marked on Gordon’s c.1590 map, Blaeu’s 1654 map and on Stobie’s 1770 map). Langhaugh (lawng-hawch) n. Longhaugh, former name for part of the lands of Deanfoot in Minto Parish. In 1779 they were valued at £36 and part of the Minto estate, with the liferent being held by Robert ‘Trotter of Bush. In 1780 the lands were referred as ‘Long-haugh parks’. It was still listed in 1811.

Langhaugh (lawng-hawch) n. former fortified house on the north side of the Teviot valley somewhere between Teviothead and Blackcleuch. The lands were listed among those held ‘in tenandry’ by the Baron of Hawick in 1511, 1572, 1594 and 1615. James Douglas of Drumlanrig had a ‘honing’ in 1607 for William Scott of Howpasley to remove from these and other lands. In 1624 the lands were purchased from the Earl of Douglas by Robert Elliot of Falnash (along with Hislop). In 1647 Archibald Elliot of Falnash was served heir to his father’s 5 merk land there. They were sold back to the superior, James, Earl of Queensberry in 1650. They were owned by the Scotts of Crumhaugh from 1674. The lands of ‘Langhaugh water’ were inherited by Walter Scott of Langshaw from his father Francis in 1690, along with part of Falnash, Tanlaw Naze and Calfshaw. The lands were among those inherited by Sir Francis Scott of Thirlestane from his brother Walter in 1695. It is ‘Longhaugh-water’ in 1707 when valued at £166 13s 4d (and can be identified as part of the Hawick Parish lands of Sir Francis Scott of Thirlestane in 1678). It is ‘Longhaugh-water’ in 1788 and ‘Langhaugh Water’ in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, when valued at £166 13s 4d. (it is ‘Langhauch’ in 1511, ‘Langhauch’ in 1572, ‘Longhauch’ in 1610, ‘Langheuch’ in 1637 and ‘Langhauch’ in 1647; it is marked ‘Langhauch’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and Blaeu’s 1654 map). Langhaugh (lawng-hawch) n. farm on the Hermitage Water, between Netherraw and Hartsgarth. It is listed in a rental record of about 1376, valued at 10 shillings. It was held by the Elliots of Redheugh from the latter part of the 15th century to at least the early 17th. This is probably where Robert ‘Elwald’ was recorded as Laird there in 1494/5. Will Foster was recorded there in 1611. It was among the lands contested between the Elliots of Redheugh and the Scotts of Buccleuch in about 1612. It was one of 3 farms that Scott of Buccleuch claimed Elliot of Redheugh had falsely added to his charter; however, it was still owned by the Elliots in 1637. It was under a ‘wadsett’ until James Elliott (son of ‘Gibbie wi the Gowden Garters’) paid it off in 1639. The lands were valued (along with Hartgarth) at £466 13s 4d in 1678. Christopher Irving of Binks purchased the farm (along with several others) in 1688, after Robert Elliot of Larriston became bankrupt. There was a shepherd recorded there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It was purchased by the Olivers of Dinlabyre about 1700 and sold in 1773 to William Sharp of Hartsgarth. Dyker William Thomson and family lived there in 1851. Before about 1874 it was owned by the Duke of Buccleuch. By the 18th century it appears that the farm had migrated down-hill. There is now a cottage marked there close to the road. On the eastern slopes of Thornside Hill above are 2 boundary dykes, probably defining the boundaries of the former farm, and area of about 50 hectares, including evidence of ancient field systems and rig lines. On a terrace on the hillside are the remains of a farmstead and hut (it is ‘Langhalgh’ around 1376, ‘langhalch’ in 1494/5, ‘Langhauch’ in 1612 and transcribed as ‘Lahauche’ in about 1624; it is marked ‘Langhauch’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Longhaugh’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Langhauch (lawng-hawch) n. former fortified house on the former farmstead on the drove road by Whitropefoot, near the foot of Long Grain. Langhauch (lawng-hawch) n. former farmstead on the drove road by Whitropefoot, near the foot of Long Grain.

Langgrainfit

Lang Hassendean (lawng-haw-sin-deen) n. lands in the Barony of Hassendean, recorded in a charter of 1457 when they passed from William Cunningham to his son Neil, excepting the part called ‘Camehill’. There was a dispute among the Cunninghams, with the land being confirmed to Elizabeth (daughter of George Cunningham of Belton) in 1483, and confirmed again in 1514. The 1514 sasine states that the lands include a tower, so it may be that ‘Langhassendean’ was simply the name used for the main town of Hassendean. The ‘precept of sasine’ of 1514 also refers to ‘Eister Hassindene’, so these may also be the same lands. A document of 1470 refers to the whole (half) barony as ‘Lang Hassindean’. Langhaugh Langhaugh (lawng-hawch) n. Longhaugh, former name for lands in Ashkirk Parish that were part of Dryden and Clews farms. ‘Longhaugh and Strawbrae’ is listed in 1780 among the lands whose liferent had been given to Dr. William Elliot.

Langhaugh Waas (lawng-hawch-wawz, -walz) n. former farmstead near Langhaugh on the Wauchope estate, also sometimes referred to as ‘Wauchope Waas’ and popularly known as ‘the Waas’. It consisted of small patches of land between the road and the Rule Water. There may have been a small shop there in the early 19th century. The residents in the mid-19th century were William and Rachel Tait (also written ‘Langhaughwalls’, etc.).

Langheugh Hoose (lawng-hew-hoos, -hew-hoos) n. villa-style house off Buccleuch Road designed by J.P. Alison in 1905. Langheugh Road was originally its drive-way.

Langheugh Road (lawng-hew-röd) n. private street off Buccleuch Road, opposite the playing fields, containing several large houses. It was developed largely in the period 1965–70, and named after several houses had already been built. Many of the residents use Buccleuch Road as their address.

Langholm (lawng-um) n. town 24 miles south of Hawick, along the A7, where the River Esk is met by the Wauchope Water and the Ewes Water. In the heart of riever country, it has been prominent in the tweed industry, with the first major factory being built in 1832; before that there was extensive employment in cotton manufacturing, and later the town was known for the production of checked cloth. Whita Hill (1163 ft) looms over the town, with the monument to Sir John Malcolm on the summit. It was actually 2 towns on opposite sides of the Esk, with the old town being made a burgh of barony in 1610 (with other charters later that century), and the new or ‘Meikleholm’ being built to a fairly regular pattern from 1778 by the Duke of Buccleuch. At the end of the 17th century it was temporarily in the county of Roxburghshire. The library dates from 1875–78 and the Town Hall from 1811–12. The ruins of Langholm Castle lie just to the north, built around 1526 and abandoned in the early 18th century. Additionally James Playfair’s Langholm Lodge was built 1786–89 as a hunting lodge for the Duke of Buccleuch. Langholm Common Riding dates back to 1759, with the first Cornet elected in 1817. It involves the carrying of traditional emblems through the streets and the unique ‘Crying of the Fair’ (an example proclamation being published as early as 1731), while the colours are based on those of the Derby winner. John Hyslop’s ‘Echoes from the Border Hills’ (1912, revised in 1992) contains anecdotes from Eskdale in the 19th century. The book ‘Langholm as it was’ (1912) was also written by John Hyslop, with a new edition appearing in 2002. Population 2,538 (1991) – ‘The roads atween Hawick And Langholm Are the roads atween Heaven and hell . . .’ [DH], ‘. . .was a gaird on the mail coach afore hei took ower the Croon Inn in the Langumi’ [BW1979] (it is ‘ye Langhame’ on Sandison’s c.1590 map, while ‘Cast. of Langhoome’ is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Langholm Castle (lawng-um-kaw-sul) n. ruined tower in Langholm, near the confluence of the Esk and Ewes Water, once home of the Armstong. It may have been built in the 1520s and abandoned 200 years later. All that now exists are the south wall and fragments of the adjoining walls. It is also known as ‘Langholm Tower’.

Langholmite (lawng-um-i) n. person from Langholm. Famous Langholmites include Hugh MacDiarmid, Thomas Telford and William Julius Mickle.

Langholm Street (lawng-um-stree) n. street in Newcastleton which is the beginning of the road over the hills to Langholm. The Parish Manse was at No. 23.

Langhope (lawng-up) n. former name for part of the farm at Crumhaughhill. There are several other places of the same name, including a height near the Wisp Hill, a stream that joins the Ale Water and a former property of the Scotts of Buccleuch near Melrose (it was mentioned in the court case for the division of the Common in 1767).

Langhope (lawng-höp, -up) n. Langhope, farm on the Langhope Burn near Todrig, west of Ashkirk, which was once a Scott possession. It is recorded in a document from the reign of William I, relating to the Diocese of Glasgow’s lands in Ashkirk Parish. They were Crown lands in the latter part of the 15th century, split into the ‘Eststeid de Langhop’, ‘Middillsteid’ and ‘Weststeid’. In the 1470s John Cranston of that Ilk had remission for the ‘grassum’ there. In the 1480s they were leased to Ainslies, Cranstons and John Scott of Todshawhaugh. In 1499 and 1501 they were assigned to Alexander Scott and his mother, Robert Scott of Stirches, Patrick Home and William Cranston of that Ilk. It remained Crown property until at least 1502. In 1510 the west steading was feued to Thomas Cranston, the middle steading to Sir William Cranston and then Alexander Scott, and the east steading to Walter Scott. The middle steading was also called ‘Howford’, suggesting this was the place on the Ettrick, further to the north (making it unclear whether this was the same place or another Langhope on Ettrick). Walter Scott in Synton was tenant in 1541, paying £18 yearly. ‘Robert Scot of Langup’ is listed by Scott of Satchells as one of the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch (this probably around 1600). The Scotts of Langhope were descended from the Huntly branch, and owned the lands until about 1620. The old Scotts of Headshaw then bought the lands, which were sold (along with Headshaw) in 1629 to John of Yorkston, who passed it to his son John Scott of Langhope. ‘Langupmedow’ was owned by Scott of Woll in 1609. William of Langhope had a ‘wadset’ with Walter Scott of St. Leonards in 1669, and by 1677 Walter was ‘now of Langhope’. In 1688 it was sold to his son John Scott, then to Adam Scott of Bowhill in 1691. In 1691 the value was given as £18. Tax was paid for 5 hearths there in 1694. It was later owned by the Elliots of Minto (probably purchased along with Headshaw in 1696). In 1785 and 1802 it was valued at £548 ‘of Stock’ and £33 for the teinds. Walter Todd lived there in the early 19th century and Thomas Scott in the 1860s. It is also mentioned in the ballad ‘The Fray of Elibank’ – ‘Though Andrew o’ Langhope had fa’n i’ the fight, He only lay still till the battle was by, Then ventured to rise an’ climb over the height, An’’ there he set up a lamentable cry’ [ES] (the name occurs in the late 12th century; it is ‘Lang Hoip’ in 1541 and ‘Langhop’ in 1661; it appears on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Langup’ and is ‘Longhope’ by Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Langhope Burn (lawng-hōp-burn) n. stream that joins the Ale Water above Ashkirk. It is first noted as part of the boundary of the lands of Whitslade in a charter by William I and also as ‘the rivulet of Langhope’ as part of the boundary of lands granted toOrm of Ashkirk – ‘And now the dreary distance doth wear it like a bride, Out beyond Langhope Burn and over Essenside’ [WHO] (it is ‘rivulus de Longhope’ about 1170; there is another stream of the same name in the headwaters of the Ettrick).

Langhope Drive (lawng-hōp-drīv) n. Longhope Drive, part of the private housing development at the top of Crumhaughhill, built in 1979. It is named after a former croft incorporated into Crumhaughhill farm, the name meaning a piece of enclosed land, usually a hollow.

langin (lawng-in) n. longing, desire – ‘Lord, a’ my langin’ is afore thee; an’ my graenin’ isna hidden frae thee’ [HSR], ‘...an’ satisfieist the langin’ o’ ilka leivin’ thing’ [HSR], ‘...the thouths, the langin’s, an’ the resolves o’ an exile thrae hame’ [BW1939].

langit (lawng-ee’, -i’) pp., poet. longed – ‘Behald, I hae langet efter thy preceeps ...’ [HSR], ‘...for I langet for thy commandements’ [HSR].

Lang Jaymie (lawng-jā-mee) n. nickname for James Richardson.

Langlands (lawng-lindz) n. former name for a large part of western Wilton town. The more extensive estate was the eastern half barony of Wilton, being the estate of the Langlands family since at least 1451. Robert of that Ilk’s estate in Wilton Parish was valued at £953 16s 8d in 1643 and he paid tax on £992 of land for the estate in 1663. It was still valued at £992 16s 8d in 1678. On the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls the estate is recorded as being composed of Whitfield, Mervinslaw, Brieryhill, Dean Mill, Roughheugh and Heap. The Laird of Langlands is described as ceremoniously observing the marking of his land’s boundary with Hawick in the early 1700s. This happened at the Coble Pool and at Roughheugh Mill. The land remained in the family for 300 years, being diminished over time, particularly in the 18th century, and then sold off entirely in 1783 to Thomas Elliot. By that time the main estate was valued at £278 12s 8d and consisted of the half-Barony of Wilton, as well as Calaburn and ‘sundry inclosures in Rough-heugh, sold to other persons, but not yet disjoined’. It then passed to Lord Napier around 1790, to James Anderson about 1805 and finally descended to the Pringles. It was valued at £278 12s 8d in 1811, and some enclosures in Roughheugh were later sold to Rev. John Thomson, so that the value in about 1874 was about £262. By then the remaining property was known as Wilton Lodge and was purchased by the Town in 1889 as a public park. In older records there are people recorded living at 'Langlands', but it is not clear how extensive an area was covered by that designation. Note that there are several other places called 'Langlands', e.g. in Angus, Ayrshire, Devon, Essex, Falkirk, Kirkcudbrightshire, Lanarkshire, Somerset and Yorkshire (formerly spelled 'Langlandis', it is 'Langlaüs' in 1748).

Langlands (lawng-landz) n. Victorian villa-style house in Sunnyhill, designed by John Guthrie about 1878. It was built for manufacturer Walter Pringle, and was one of the earliest villas in the Sunnyhill area. There were new stables, alterations and additions designed by Peddie & MacKay of Edinburgh in 1880. It was formerly the home of the Pringles and then Sir Thomas MacKay of Edinburgh in 1880. It was formerly known as Wilton Lodge and was purchased by the Town in 1889 as a public park. In older records there are people recorded living at ‘Langlands’, but it is not clear how extensive an area was covered by that designation. Note that there are several other places called ‘Langlands’, e.g. in Angus, Ayrshire, Devon, Essex, Falkirk, Kirkcudbrightshire, Lanarkshire, Somerset and Yorkshire (formerly spelled ‘Langlandis’, it is ‘Langlaüs’ in 1748).

Langlands (lawng-landz) n. Victorian villa-style house in Sunnyhill, designed by John Guthrie about 1878. It was built for manufacturer Walter Pringle, and was one of the earliest villas in the Sunnyhill area. There were new stables, alterations and additions designed by Peddie & MacKay of Edinburgh in 1880. It was formerly the home of the Pringles and then Sir Thomas Henderson, and is now split into 'East' and 'West' parts. It is a grade C listed building.

Langlands (lawng-landz) n. former name for lands in Liddesdale. They are recorded in 1541 along with Millholm, as pertaining to the Laird of Mangerton. The precise location is unknown. It could be the same as the lands 'called Langland, within a hedge, worth 33s. 2d.' listed in the English part of Liddesdale in 1276 (it is 'Langlandis' in 1541; the existence of this name also in Liddesdale is confusing).

Langlands (lawng-landz) n. former name for land in Minto Parish. It is listed in the 1779 (and in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) along with 'Quarter of Whitefield', valued at £73 3s 6d. It was among lands whose liferent was given to Rev. Robert Elliot (brother of Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto) in 1779. In 1780 it is listed as part of the eastern boundary of the lands of Hawthorn Park and Mailchester Park.

Langlands (lawng-landz) n. former name for lands lying within the Barony of Caverton in Roxburghshire. The name occurs as 'Langislandis' in the Exchequer Rolls for the 1450s and 1470s. There is presumably no direct connection with the lands in Wilton.

Langlands (lawng-landz) n. Adam (16th/17th C.) listed among the men who accompanied Robert Scott, younger of Haining in an attack on Selkirk Mill in 1608. Possibly the same Adam (tenant of some lands that are not transcribed) accompanied the Scotts of Whitehaugh, Headshaw, Kirkhouses and Huntly when they forcibly took possession of the farm of Hartwoodburn in 1627. He may be the uncle of George of that Ilk recorded in 1610 when the family, along with several Scotts, petitioned for removal of a horn and reduction of penalties. George acted as cautioner for him and several others, promising they would not harm Walter Scott in Hawick (called of Todshawhaugh) and associates. Andrew (15th C.) monk of Newbattle, who was witness to a charter of the Barony of Cranston McGill in 1477/8. In 1488 he was Abbot of Newbattle when he witnessed another document, and was Abbot until at least 1492. He may have been related to the local family. Andrew (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1610 as uncle of George of that Ilk when there a request to lift the 'horning' and modify the penalty on their ancestor. This was probably his father James, who was declared a rebel in 1581. It seems likely that he was brother of the previous Laird Robert. He may be the same Andrew who signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638. Charles (16th C.) recorded in 1531 as 'Karolo vicario de Dryvisdall', i.e. Vicar of Drysdale near Lockerbie. It is unclear how he was related to the other Langlands. Gavin (16th C.) recorded in the register of Cupar Abbey in 1550. George (16th/17th C.) of that Ilk, son of Robert. In about 1611 he was served heir to his father in the half lands and Barony of Wilton, including the alternating advowson of the Parish Kirk. In 1610, along with his brothers Robert and James and his uncle Andrew, as well as several Scotts, he asked for suspension of the ‘horning’ (possibly the one imposed on James in 1581), and reduction of the penalties imposed to find caution that they not harm the Scotts of Todshawhaugh and Ormiston. His cautioner in this dispute was William Scott, younger of Harden, while he himself acted as cautioner for the Scotts of Sinton, Whitehaugh and Burnfoot, as well as Robert, James and Adam Langlands, plus Roger in Hawick. He was confirmed in the half barony in 1614 and is recorded in a charter (related to Easter Heap) in 1615. In 1616 he was foreman of the jury that convicted Jock Scott ‘the Suckler’ guilty of multiple thefts. He may have been succeeded soon afterwards by John, who is recorded as ‘of that Ilk’ in 1617. However, he may be the same George who was recorded several times until 1638 (if John was not actually Baron). George (17th C.) of that Ilk. He possibly succeeded his father John (or is the same as the previous George). He is listed as Laird in 1628 among the major landowners who met to elect M.P.s. for Roxburghshire. He signed the Confession of Faith in 1638. This document was also signed by Robert ‘fier of that Ilk'
Langlands

(i.e. probably his son and heir), together with Andrew and Walter of Brierhill (probably close relatives). He was probably the George who married Esther Scott, younger daughter of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden (and widow of Elliot of Fahnash). George (d.bef. 1681) of that Ilk. Probably son of Robert, he is recorded as witness to a Gledstains christening in 1672. The length of his tenure as Baron is uncertain. The land tax was paid by the ‘laird of Langlands’ in 1678 (for about £990), with the name not given, suggesting perhaps he was recently deceased and formal succession not yet established. His wife was Janet Douglas, whose will exists from 1681 (when she was ‘relict of George Langlands, of that Ilk’). Her ‘plenishing’ included ‘feather beds, bolster and cuds, some of which were stuffed with worsted, blankets, sheets and table linen, servitors, board cloths, towels, spindles of worsted, and striken yarn, round stoupit beds, kists, barrels, tubs, kongs, and bickers, one and a half dozen trenchers, pair of clatts and (hand) cairds, heckles, reels, dishes and ladles, baskets and creels, posset pig, pair of raxes and ane speit, broad pleats, two chandleis, salt fat, ane pot and flaggon, ane pynt stoup, crook, girdle and pot coffer’ [DMW]. George (d.1689) eldest son of John, minister of Wilton. His will exists, where he left a parcel of books and other goods, some money and bonds due to him. This is recorded at the commissariot of Peebles in 1690, where he is ‘Mr. George Langlands son to Mr. John Langlands late minister at Wiltoun’. It is unclear where he might have been a minister himself (or if he was instead a schoolmaster perhaps). He is probably the ‘Mr Geo: Langlands’ who witnessed a baptism in Hassendean in 1687 for Adam Scott and Esther Langlands (who were William ‘Steward’ and James Simpson (perhaps his servants). He married Anna Couper, and their children included: Marion (b.1725); Robert (1727–1803), who succeeded as last Laird; Margaret (1729/30–1819) last of the local Langlands; William (b.1732); and Isobel (b.1734). James (d.aft. 1453) of that Ilk, son of John. He succeeded to the family lands and from then the family surname was ‘Langlands’. He is mentioned in charters from at least 1427, when he was witness to the document giving the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas, 2nd of Drumlanrig; he is there recorded as ‘Jacobus de Langlands’. He is probably also the James who was on an ‘inquest of retour’ in 1424 made in Hawick for lands in Hownam (although it is unclear if he was already Laird). In 1431 he granted the lands of Heap (which had been resigned by Robert of Hepe) to Walter Scott ‘Lord of Muirhoutson’ at St. Mary’s Kirk. It thus appears likely that he was already Baron of Wilton at that time. In 1432 he was witness at the old manor of Cavers to the sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas. He is recorded as ‘Jacobus de Langlands’ in 1437 when a witness at the Jedburgh court to decide on the dispute between William Douglas of Drumlanrig and Janet Murray, widow of James Gledstains, over the lands of East Mains of Hawick. In 1447 he was ‘Jacobo Langlandis de eodem’ when he witnessed the charter from Margaret Cusing (wife of Simon Routledge, Burgess of Hawick) to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He was the father of the John to whom he resigned the half Barony of Wilton in 1451, reserving a free tenement for himself and after his death to his wife Mary (or ‘Mariote’). He also swapped the lands of Milsington with those of Heap with Walter Scott at Wilton Kirk in 1451. And in 1453 he had an ‘excambion’ with Walter Scott of Kirkurd for the freehold of the lands of Wester Heap. This was signed by his son and heir John, as well as Robert of Langlands who must have been a close relative. James of Langlands (15th/16th C.) listed as witness to Richard Rutherford being served heir to his grandfather in 1499. He is recorded as ‘James Langgles of that Ilk’. Probably the same man was ‘of Wilton’ in 1500 when listed as one of the valuators for Whithope. He was probably either the son or brother of Roger/Robert (who killed George Fairneylaw). He is also probably the ‘James Langlandis of Wiltoun’ listed among 24 Roxburghshire who had remission in 1488/9 for their support of the deceased James III, particularly on the field of battle at Stirling. James (d.c.1590) of that Ilk, probably son of John. He is recorded in a sasine of 1559 and in a bond between the Scotts and Kers in March 1564/5, where Walter Scott of Branxholme assumes the burden for ‘James Langlandis of that Ilk and his barnis’. So they were presumably related, perhaps through his wife or mother (and the suggestion is also that he had children by then). Also in that document he is listed (along with Nicholas Rutherford of Hundalee) as a special ‘umpire’ for the feud between Ker of Cessford and Ormiston of that Ilk. In 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting superiority of her father’s lands in Wilton. He is mentioned numerous times in the Register of the Privy Seal. In 1569 he was one of the sureties for some Elliotis, that they would enter into ward in St. Andrews. He was admitted as a messenger for Roxburgh by Sir David Lindsay, the Lyon King of Arms, in 1569 and mentioned in an inquest in Jedburgh the same year. He was entered before the Privy Council in 1571. He signed the Roxburgh band and ‘made faith’ to James IV and the Regent Morton in early 1572/3, with Andrew Ker of Faldonside as his surety; this appears to have been in relation to Kerr of Ferniehirst being declared a fugitive and all his former supporters swearing allegiance to the Crown. He was also surety for William, son of Walter Scott of Headshaw at the same time. He signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573 (‘with my hand at the pen’). He was also in 1573 surety for the non-appearance of William Robson, charged with the murder of William Hall of ‘Wollie’, and had to pay 20 merks to his daughter ‘Malie’ on Robson’s non-appearance. He was recorded as being ‘de Wiltounhill’ in 1574, when he was superior of the lands of Borthaugh (held by the Scotts of Buccleuch). In 1576 he gave a pledge for George Elliot, ‘the Cleg’ and John Stoddart, his ‘cobilman’. Also in 1576 he was a surety along with Walter Scott of Goldielands and James Langlands of that Ilk for tenants in Lairhope and Broadlee. Also in 1576 it is mentioned in a charter for Stewart of Minto that he held half the market rights of Minto at that time. Furthermore, in 1576 he had an obligation to relieve sureties before the Privy Council. Also in 1576 he was ordered to pay 20 merks to Malie Hall for satisfaction for the murder of her father, James Hall in Woollie by Will Robson of ‘Rochthwechmylnye’. Along with 21 other Border lairds, he was summoned to appear at Stirling as caution for his kinsmen and retainers in 1578/9, but failed to appear. He was stated to have ‘enterit the said Johne Stoddart, his cobilman, to the said lord lieutenant and Justice’, but nevertheless was found liable for the other fines. In 1581 he was on a long list of Scotts and others summoned to appear before the Privy Council to answer several charges made by Elliot of Braiddlie and the Armstrongs. He was denounced a rebel in 1581 (among a large number of Border Lairds accused of not presenting men to answer rieving charges), but must have been reinstated since he was among Lairds invited to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4 to help quiet troubles in Teviotdale and Liddesdale. In 1588 he is recorded in a contract regarding teinds with his son John (Parson of Wilton) and Walter Scott of Harden. In 1589 he was cautioner for Edward Lorraine of Harwood. The last record of him is in 1590 and he is probably the Laird of Langlands listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ in about 1590 (although probably prepared earlier). He appears to have been succeeded by Robert, probably his son. Andrew may have been another son. James ‘Jamie’ (16th C.) recorded as tenant of lands of Kelso Abbey in 1567. It is unclear how he was related to the other Langlands. James (16th/17th C.) recorded being acquitted of crimes in Jedburgh in 1611. It is unclear how he was related to other Langlands. He could be the brother of George of that Ilk who was mentioned in 1610 when they petitioned to have their hornings and penalties reduced. James (d.c.1695) brother of Rev. John of Wilton. In 1695 his nephew James was served as his heir. He presumably died without issue. His existence may provide a clue to the identity of the father of Rev. John of Wilton. James (17th C.) son of John, minister of Wilton and younger brother of George, from whom he inherited in 1691. He could be the James listed as resident of the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. In 1695 he was served heir to his uncle James. James (17th/18th C.) Baron of Wilton, who is said to have ridden a black stallion named Nimrod and would turn out in his gaudy finery for a ceremonial marking of the boundaries at the Roughheugh Mill (the axle of its water wheel being on the boundary), with him making a show of defending his property. This was described by Robert Wilson, but it is unclear which period this took place in; the name seems likely to be confused with another Baron. James (18th C.) married Janet Mack in Bedrule in 1737. It is unclear how he was related to the other local Langlands. Janet nee Douglas (d.c.1683) wife of George of that Ilk. She was a widow in her will, which includes a detailed list of her possessions, giving an idea of the contents of a late 17th century mansion house. John (d.c.1363) possibly the first family member to use the name ‘de Langlandis’, he was probably the successor to Thomas de Longueville (or Charteris), inheriting the Peeblesshire estate in 1340. He also had lands at ‘Milsallystoun’ (Milsington) and ‘Ochterhyud’ (Outerside), along with a mill there, which were granted to his widow ‘Mariote Cunyne’ (i.e. Marion Comyn) by David II in 1363. It is possible he was the John, son of Margaret, who had a charter for the Barony of Wilton after it was forfeited by William Maxwell during the reign of David II.

John (15th C.) of that Ilk, son of James. In 1450 he was ‘Johannem de Langlandis’ on the ‘retour’ for the inheritance of the Barony of Hawick by William Douglas of Drumlanrig. He was granted the (eastern) half Barony of Wilton, along with Langlandshill (in Peeblesshire) in 1451 by James II, the lands having been resigned by his father. His mother Mary is also mentioned in this charter. This is the first definitive record of a line of Langlands Lairds that would stretch over 300 years. However, it seems clear that the family (or the closely related ‘de Charteris’ family) held the lands for several generations before. He probably moved the family seat from Peeblesshire to Wilton about this time. Also in 1451 he had a charter of ‘excambion’ with Sir Walter Scott of Kirkurd (and Buccleuch), where he gave up Milsington for Heap. In 1453 he witnessed a charter of ‘excambion’ with Walter Scott of Kirkurd involving the freeholding of Wester Heap; Robert of Langlands was also an witness, so probably a brother or uncle. He is recorded attesting that John of St. Michael inherited his father’s lands of Whitchesters in a document of 1455 notarised in St. Mary’s Kirkyard. In 1455 he is also recorded as ‘Lord of Heip’. He is probably the ‘Johannes Langlandis’ listed among the men who received a reward from the King for the capture of James Douglas of Balverny in 1463/4. And presumably the same ‘John Langlandis’ was on the panel in 1464/5 to rule on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffship of Roxburgh by Archibald Douglas. It is unclear who succeeded him, but there is probably an extra generation between him and Roger, who was responsible for the death of George Fairneylaw around 1493. John (15th C.) listed among the Roxburghshire men given remission in 1488/9 for their support of the deceased James III. James of Wilton was also listed, and so they may have been related. Most of the men appear to have been associated with Douglas of Cavers. He may be the same ‘John of Langlands’ listed among the men chosen by William Douglas of Cavers to value the lands of Whithope in 1500; James of Wilton was also listed there. It is possible he was the ‘Joh. Langlandis’ who witnessed charters in Edinburgh in 1471 and 1474.

John (15th/16th C.) recorded in the accounts of the Lord High Treasurer of Scotland as an ‘Officier’ in the period 1515–1523. The business sometimes involved delivery of letters and proclamations in the Borders, suggesting that he was from the local family, perhaps even the Laird of Langlands. Another James was recorded as ‘messenger’ to the Queen, delivering letters relating to the complaint between Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst and the Turnbuls of Bedrule and Hallrule in 1557, and also witnessing the bond of 1557 in which Turnbuls and others swore to bring in William Nixon; it seems unlikely that this is the same man, but surely is related. John (16th C.) of that Ilk, possibly son of Roger. He was witness to a sasine in 1522. In 1528 he may be the John who was listed among the supporters of Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, who were summoned to appear before the King and forfeited their lands. He was made a ‘nuncio’ under the Lyon King of Arms in 1540. However, this is confused by Roger being recorded also in 1531/2. He may also be the same Laird of Langlands mentioned as a creditor in the inventory of the estate of William Scott, younger of Buccleuch in 1552.

John (16th C.) recorded in Dunfermline in 1561. It is unclear how he is related to other Langlands. John (d.c.1602) son of James of that Ilk. He is first recorded in 1575 as ‘Johne Langlandis, reidare at Wiltoun’ (i.e. Reader, meaning he assisted the minister, who served several parishes). He received a stipend of 20 merks and the Kirk lands left vacant by Thomas Weston. Afterwards he was appointed Rector and is recorded as Reader for the period 1574–85. During that time it appears that William Auchmowtie was minister for Wilton and several neighbouring parishes. The division of responsibilities between the 2 men is unclear, and it is also merely a guess that while Auchmowtie was a Protestant minister, Langlands had been trained as a Catholic Priest. In 1588 he is recorded as Parson in a contract (in which his father is mentioned as James of that Ilk), with Walter Scott of Harden involving payment of teinds. He was deposed from Wilton some time before 1590, possibly indicating that he had formerly been a Catholic. However, it is also possible that he was reinstated and served until his death, which appears to have been in 1602, when William Clerk became the new minister. It is possible that he was the minister who received the gift of about 80 acres of the Mains of Wilton, but other versions of the story (which seem more likely) say it was the 17th century minister of the same name. However, he was son of the Laird and certainly held property in his own right in Heiton and Easter Heap (and possibly elsewhere), which his son William inherited in 1612. His children included William (who was served as heir about 10 years after his death, suggesting perhaps there was an older brother or otherwise legal complications) and Bessie (who married Adam, brother of William Scott of Burnhead). Rev. John (d.bef. 1628) of that Ilk. His name occurs in a bond of 1617, and he must may have succeeded George. If he was Baron, then he was succeeded by another George. Alternatively he may have been brother (or other close relative) of George, and not actually Baron himself. Rev. John (d.bef. 1692) minister of Wilton, he was brother of the Laird of Langlands (probably Robert, but possibly George). He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1634 and became one of the Masters of Edinburgh High School in 1638. He was also one of the signatories of the Confessions of Faith in Hawick in 1638. He was presented to Wilton by Francis, Earl of B Buccleuch (incorrectly given as Bothwell in one account) in 1641. He is reputedly the minister who received the extensive (80 acre) lands of Wilton Glebe (or Mains). It is said that his brother granted him the extra land of Wilton Mains to increase his income to help with his family of 10 (this account was told by the last local Langlands). He baptised Walter Scott, son of Gideon of Highchesters in 1644. There is a record of 1648 involving Gideon Scott and Francis, Earl of Buccleuch over valuation of teinds. In 1649 there is a record of complaint against the Earl of Buccleuch, craven a more stable stipend, which appears to have been resolved. He also preached occasionally at Borthwick Kirk, probably the last minister to do so; he certainly asked to be freed of his responsibilities in the Borthwick, or to be given a stipend out of it, in 1642. He is listed as proprietor of Wilton in a list of communicants of the area west of Hawick in 1650 (while the Baron, Robert, is listed at Dean Mill); from that document his wife may have been Agnes Douglas, although elsewhere she is named as Anna Douglas (and it is not clear which branch of the Douglas family she was from), and the other household residents (presumably servants) were John Scott, William Douglas, Adam ‘Roe’ (probably Rae), Janet Scott and Janet ‘Roe’. He is recorded in a sasine in 1664 having an annual rent of land at ‘Hayning’ (probably the Haining in Selkirk). In 1662 he was confined to his Parish for refusing to conform to Episcopacy (i.e. being a Covenanter; the younger ministers were removed from their parishes), but possibly did conform, appears to have been reinstated in 1667 and is still recorded as minister in 1669. He continued as minister, but was removed some time after refusing to take the Test. There is a letter of 1683 from the Archbishop of Glasgow to the Persbytery to stop favouring him since he ‘has not preached for some Sundays’, and asking advice about John Stewart, who succeeded him that year; this suggests that he was probably removed because of religious dispute. In 1669 his son James became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh, and in 1692 his son Walter followed suit, by which time he was deceased. His children are listed (presumably in order) in the will of his son George. His daughters were: Anna, who married Henry Haswell in Crailing; Esther, who married William McKay or Mackie in Dunbar; Margaret, who married William Elphinstoun in Hartshaugh; Marion, who married Walter Leathead, portioner in Lilliesleaf; Agnes, who married Robert Elliot of Rig (i.e. Caerlenrig); and Rebecca and Jennet, who both stayed in Hawick. His sons were: George, who died in 1689; the already mentioned James; Walter, who lived in Hawick; Robert, who died between 1665 and 1668; and probably John the minister of Hawick (although this is unconfirmed, it seems extremely likely). In 1695 his son James was served as heir to his brother James. It is possible his wife was the ‘Mrs Langlands’ who was taxed for 3 hearths on the west-side of Hawick in 1694. Rev. John (1633–1707) minister of Hawick. Note that he is easily confused with the earlier minister of Wilton of the same name, who was probably his father. He graduated from Edinburgh in 1662, was licensed by the Bishop of Edinburgh in 1666 and was installed in Hawick in October 1667, replacing Presbyterian Alexander Kinnear. He is still recorded as minister in 1684 when the new ‘Steeple Loft’ was built. He was eventually deprived in 1689 for not reading the Proclamation of the Estates and not Praying for William and Mary (i.e. he refused to give up Episcopalianism after the Revolution).

Langlands

He was also accused of praying for the late King James. He was the last Episcopalian minister of Hawick Parish, before the Revolution. He is mentioned in an Edinburgh record as marrying ‘without proclamation’ William Murray, younger of Haddin to Margaret Gladstains (daughter of the late Gladstains of that Ilk) in 1693. After his removal he continued to minister in Hawick to a small congregation of Episcopalians (and presumably Jacobite supporters), in a private house at the top of the Kirk Wynd. In 1694 he acted as cautioner for Robert Langlands (who was surely related and perhaps his son) renting 1/2 of the farm of Wiltonburn. He is mentioned in a disposition relating to the Alcorne family in 1695. He is recorded in the Gledstains bible baptising 4 of the children of Walter Gledstains in the period 1672–81. He is also said to have moved to the north of England, where his family settled near Alnwick (but this seems more likely to have been the family of one of his brothers). He married Margaret Rutherford and their children were: Robert (b.1675); John (b.1678), who became a doctor; Margaret (b.1681), who presumably died young; Alision (b.1682) who may have married Francis Scott in 1713, and was recorded being in Jedburgh Parish at that time; and Margaret (b.1687). John (b.1678) son of Hawick minister John, he became a doctor. He is mentioned in a disposition of 1708 (in the National Archives) when he assigned lands to William Ainslie of Blackhill. It is possible he was the John in Woodhouselee served as joint heir (along with Robert) of Walter, Chamberlain to Sir William Scott of Harden in 1694 and whose son Walter was served as his heir in 1700. John Charles (1800–74) direct descendant of the Langlands of Wilton. A son of the Rev. John of Wilton lived and died in Newcastle, his son Ranald was baptised in 1715 and the family continued in Northumberland, with John marrying in 1764, then his son John being baptised in 1773, marrying in 1794 and dying in 1804, and his son being John Charles. He married in 1830 and had 2 sons and 6 daughters. He was born in Newcastle and became tenant of Old Berwick in 1823. He made genealogical notes about the Langlands family. The church there contains memorial panels to several family members. Margaret (1730–1819) daughter of George of that Ilk and sister of Robert, the last Laird of Langlands. She is said (in Wilson’s ‘Memories of Hawick’) to have given the origin of her family as Norman, and described the motto as ‘Bon Esperance’. She died in Hawick, at 26 High Street in reduced circumstances, some accounts saying that this was in 1814 or 15, but the later date is correct, since it is in the Hawick Parish records. She was the last person to be buried in the family aisle in old Wilton Kirk. Since this was below the loft inside the church itself, there was some opposition to this, but it is said that Dr. Charters stated that he would not allow her to be separated from her forefathers. Some of the seats had to be lifted to allow the grave to be dug, and the graveside was lit by candles because of the lack of natural light under the loft. She left £20 ‘to be distributed among the industrious of the parishes of Hawick and Wilton’. Mrs. ?? (17th C.) listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. She could be the wife of Rev. John or the wife of Robert of that Ilk. Peter (d.1549) Priest at Wilton Kirk. John Greenlaw replaced him after he died. He was presumably son of a former Laird of Langlands. Rachel see Rachel Scott. Richard (14th/15th C.) master of the hospital at St. Germains. He witnessed a charter of Robert II in 1421. He was presumably related to the Langlands of that Ilk. Robert (15th C.) witness to the 1451 transfer of Heap for Milsington, between John Langlands of that Ilk and Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was probably the brother of the Laird or younger brother to the heir, James. He also witnessed the related sasine at Milsington in 1453, where he is ‘Roberto de Langlandis’. Robert (15th/16th C.) of that Ilk, said to have been the Baron of Wilton who killed George Fairneylaw. However, it seems more likely that this was Roger, or that the names were used interchangeably. Robert (15th/16th C.) witness in 1512 to the charter where Roger of that Ilk granted his lands of Mervinslaw to William Inglis of Langlandshill. He was surely related to the Laird, probably brother or son. Robert (d.bef. 1610) of that Ilk, possibly son of James. He is recorded as witness to a bond of March 1594/5 (along with William Scott of Allanhaugh and Allan Deans in Hawick) made by James Gledstains, pledging that Hector and Richard Turnbull of Clarilaw would not harm Gavin Elliott of Stobs or William Elliot of Horsleyhill. He was still head of the family in a record of 1599, but was succeeded by George some time before 1610. George’s brothers were Robert and James, and so they were probably all his sons. Similarly, George’s uncle was Adam, so this was probably his brother. His son George was served as his heir in 1611. Robert (17th C.) named by the Hawick
Langlands

Bailie on a list of 16 ‘idle and masterless men’ fit for sending to the army in Germany in 1627. When produced before the Privy Council by the Bailie he was one of the men who were found ‘not fit for the wars’ and dismissed. Robert (17th C.) of that Ilk. He appears to have succeeded George (probably his father) around 1640. In 1638 he signed the Confession of Faith and is recorded there as ‘tier of yt. ilke’. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1643 and was also on the Committee of War for the county in 1643, 1644, 1646 and 1648. He was the second largest landowner in Wilton Parish (after the Earl of Buccleuch) in a 1643 valuation, with a value of £953 16s 8d. He was probably also the Robert whose land in Hawick was valued at £3 in 1643. He is also recorded as a heritor of Wilton in 1649. Probably the same Robert was proprietor of Dean Mill in a list of communicants of 1650, and from that document his wife may have been Margaret ‘Per’ and their (adult) children George, Adam and Margaret. In any case, he was probably succeeded by George. In 1659 another son Robert is recorded becoming a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He was fined £1,800 (about 2 full years rental as valued on his estates) in 1662 for refusing to give up episcopacy. He was probably the brother of John, minister of Wilton (who was similarly fined). He must have been the Robert of that Ilk recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663, when he paid tax on £992, with part ‘pertaining to Margaret Donaldsone’, who may have been his wife. Robert (17th C.) probably related to the Wilton family, although the connection is unclear. He was a tutor of a branch of the house of Cardross, being governor of the brothers of the Earl in the 1670s. In 1675 he was seized by guards under Sir Mungo Murray, but later released. He took refuge in Holland, returned after the Revolution and became a minister. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Todshawhaugh. In the 1686 ratification of the lands of the Scotts of Buccleuch it is stated that he was sometimes occupier of Whames. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (17th C.) listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. He could be the Robert, married to Isobel Scott, whose daughter Isobel was born in Hawick in 1680. The witnesses to that baptism were Robert Scott of Horsleyhill and George Scott of Boonraw (who were probably related to his wife). He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for carrier James Scott in 1688. Robert (17th C.) rented ½ of the farm of Wiltonburn from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1694 and 1696. Rev. John acted as his cautioner; this makes it clear that he was not the same man as Robert of that Ilk, but it also suggests that he was probably related to the minister. It seems possible that he may be the Robert, son of Rev. John, born in 1675. His will is recorded in 1696, suggesting that this is when he died. Robert (d.bef. 1725) of that Ilk, probably the son of George and Janet Douglas. He was most likely the Laird who was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685 and again in 1690. He was also probably the Laird of Langlands in 1694 when his interests in Wilton Parish are recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls; he paid tax for 6 hearths at his house. In 1687 he was granted a sasine for 2 tenements in Hawick, and is also recorded in another Hawick sasine in 1691. He also owned the piece of the Sandbed on which the Grammar School would be built, which he bought in 1701 and sold to Adam Elliot of Arkleton in 1713. In 1701 he obtained a lease of Wester Alemoor from Gideon Scott of Highchester. He could be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for gardener Robert Roger in Hawick in 1701. In 1704 he was again listed among the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire. He married Mary Scott and a sasine in her favour, recorded in 1690, may have been part of the marriage contract; it is unclear from which branch of the Scotts his wife came. He was also recorded as a Commissioner of Supply in 1704. His son George succeeded before 1725, when his widow was still alive. His eldest daughter was Isabella, who married Rev. Robert Lithgow of Ashkirk and died in 1740. Dr. Robert (1727–1803) of that Ilk. Son of George, he was the last Laird of Langlands, being served heir of the half Barony of Wilton in 1758 (with Walter Irwin acting as factor in the interim). Born in Hawick, he studied medicine in Edinburgh and practised there as a surgeon, perhaps also serving with the family of the Duke of Argyll. He played an active part in the work of Wilton Parish in the period 1759–73, his name appearing regularly in the minute books. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. As a member of the Roads Trustees Committee, he was the principal proponent for the building of the New Road for many years before it was finally approved by the Roads Trustees. His first proposal was in around 1765, and his only supporters then were Elliott of Stobs and Scott of Synton. He was also a local Justice of the Peace in the 1760s. He was one of the Commissioners appointed in the Langlands

the court case regarding the division of Hawick Common in 1767. He appears to have sold off the patronage of Wilton Kirk to Henry, Duke of Buccleuch. The estate was already much reduced when he inherited it, but it further diminished under his Lairdship. The estate was handed over to trustees (Sir Francis Elliott of Stobs and writers Thomas Tod and Cornelius Elliot) in the 1770s, and the final part was sold off in 1783. However, he kept the superiority of Langlands and on that basis was kept on the voters roll for Roxburghshire in 1780. He returned to Edinburgh to practise as a doctor in the mid-1770s. He is recorded in 1780 obtaining ‘liferent’ of the lands of Broomhall and part of Mertoun from Walter Scott of Harden, with sasine following in 1792. In 1783 he donated ‘a chicken, preserved in spirits, having two heads conjoined laterally at the back of the skull’ to the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland. He remained unmarried and died in Edinburgh in April 1803, being buried in Old Calton cemetery, in the burial place of the Boys of Maxpoffle. Roger (15th/16th C.) of that Ilk, Baron of Wilton. Based on dates he is probably a grandson of John of Langlands who is last recorded in 1455. He is said to have beheaded the messenger of Melrose Abbey, George Fairneylaw, around 1493 or 1494, in a dispute over tithes payable to the Abbey (although Fairneylaw was actually a cleric of the Diocese of Glasgow, and his own name is often incorrectly given as ‘Robert’). The tradition also states that the Heap Cross marked the spot of the murder, although this is long gone (and seems likely to have existed long before). He is supposed to have immediately sought the King’s pardon, saying that he had knocked the bonnet off a dignitary of the church, and omitting to say that his head had been in it! The only historical record (from the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, described in Pitcairn’s ‘Criminal Trials’) is of Sir Robert Ker and John Rutherford of Edgerston being sureties for his appearance to answer to the slaughter of ‘Sir George Farnylaw, chaplain’, and of him being denounced a rebel and being fined (then having all his goods forfeited to the King) in February 1494/5 for failure to appear. He appears to have had a sasine for Wilton in 1503. He was reconciled at least by 1506, when he was witness at an inquest held in Jedburgh. He was also witness to a ‘retour’ of the Earl of Buccleuch in 1508 and another of Adam Hepburne, Earl of Bothwell that same year. In 1512 there is a charter of transfer of his lands at Mervinslaw to William Inglis of Langlandshill (the name connection with the lands perhaps suggesting he was perhaps a relative) for 1 penny ‘blesh farm’ payable at Pentecost in Wilton Kirk. Robert was a witness, and so presumably a relative. There are no records of him after this (and John is mentioned in 1522), so perhaps he did not survive Flodden – ‘Oh, Langlands ye’re a graceless man An’ a graceless man are ye; If ye wunna pay the kirk its due The kirk’s curse ye maun dree’ [FL]. Roger (16th C.) recorded as ‘of Wiltonhall’ in 1531/2 in a charter of the lands of Borthaugh. This may indicate that there was another generation in the early 16th century, and he may have succeeded from John and been succeeded by another John. Roger (16th/17th C.) recorded being in Hawick in 1610. George of that Ilk acted as cautioner for him (and several other Langlands and Scotts) that they would not harm Walter Scott in Hawick (called of Todshawhaugh) and his associates. He was surely a relative of George of that Ilk (but probably not brother or uncle, since that would have been stated). Thomas (14th/15th C.) Abbott of Newbattle in 1422. He is recorded as ‘de Langlandis’ and so presumably directly related to the main family branch. Walter of Brieryhill (16th C.) signatory of the local Confession of Faith in 1638. He signed along with George of that Ilk, Robert (George’s son and heir) and Andrew, who were all surely close relatives. Walter (d.c.1694) Chamberlain to Sir William Scott of Harden. In 1694 his brothers Robert and John were served as his joint heirs. Robert was described as his immediately younger brother, and John was ‘in Woodhouseie’. His will is recorded in Lauderdale in 1698, where he is described as Chamberlain to Sir Walter Scott of Harden in the Parish of Merton. It is unclear how he was related to other Langlands; however, given the earlier connections of the Langlands of Wilton to the Scotts of Harden, it is possible he was from the local family. Perhaps he was the eldest (and otherwise unrecorded) son of Rev. John of Hawick, who also had sons Robert and John. William (15th C.) served as surety in 1493, along with the Laird of Bedrule, for John Sinclair in Minto, as well as for John Aitkin and Thomas Bell. It seems likely that he was either Laird of Langlands, or closely related. William (16th/17th C.) son of John, Rector of Wilton. In 1612 he inherited land at ‘Heytoun’ (possibly Heiton) and an annual grant of grain from ‘Eister Heap’ (spelled ‘Langlandes’, ‘Langlandis’, etc. in earlier documents).

the Langlands (thu-lawng-lindz) n. important family in Wilton, from perhaps as early as Langlands Bank

1290, and certainly 1451, until the family sold off the Langlands estate in 1783, with the last local family member dying in Hawick in 1819. Langlands Hill in Peeblesshire may have been the original family seat. The family may have once been ‘Longueville’, while the ‘de Charteris’ family may also have been one and the same; however, these connections have been the subject of much debate. Local members were buried in the eastern end of old Wilton Church, in an aisle under the gallery. A branch of the local family moved to the Newcastle area and there are memorial panels to some of them in Old Berwick church. The seal of the local family (showing a lion rampant, without motto) is in the Museum. The family shield is silver with a red chevron and 3 mullets (stars), while the crest shows an anchor standing in the sea and the motto is ‘Spero’ (‘I hope’) or ‘Bon Esperance’. The family seal was donated to the Museum in 1856 and an armorial panel in Wilton Kirk was apparently painted over in the middle of the 19th century – ‘They saw bold Langlands proudly ride In armour burnished bright, With stately Wallace by his side, Fair freedom’s fearless knight’ [JI], ‘And Langlands ne’er meets the marchmen now. To see that his flag is planted fair, And peace prevails where once was feud, And Langlands o’ Langlands is nae mair’ [BCM1880].

Langlands Bank (lawng-lindz-bawngk) n. long row of working-class housing, built between 1850 and 1855, on a parallel street to the south of Langlands Road, and named after the Langlands family who once owned the area. A series of steps led down to the lower level flats. The block can be seen in an 1865 photograph, with little other housing around. The houses were demolished in 1971 and the site grassed over, with the rubble being used to raise the level of the Big Haugh.

Langlands Boathouse (lawng-lindz-bôs-hoos) n. Langlands Boathouse, once in the grounds of what is now Deanfield, and the home of the Coble Pool ferryman.

Langlands Brig (lawng-lindz-brig) n. Langlands Bridge, a footbridge across the Teviot in Wilton Lodge Park, off Buccleuch Road at the western end of the Playing Fields. It was erected in 1894 and marks the former boundary of the Burgh (named after the Langlands family).

Langlands Road

Langlands Court (lawng-lindz-kór) n. sheltered housing complex built in 1984 near the previous Langlands Bank, and on the site of the former St. Margaret’s Church.

Langlands Dean (lawng-lindz-deen) n. former name for Wilton Dean. It was in use in baptismal records from at least 1797, but had died out by the 1860s.

Langlands Mill (lawng-lindz-nil) n. another name for Ladylaw Mill (sometimes called ‘Langlands and Ladylaw Mills’ or ‘Langlands Spinning Mill’), long the property of the Wilson family, and later the main factory of Wilson & Glenny’s. For a time the Langlands Mill part was separate, also sometimes known as the Roughheugh Waulk Mill. A new factory was built behind Dangerfield Mill, probably been 1810 and 1818 when the Wilson and Watson partnership ended; this is marked ‘Langlands Spinning Mill’ on Wood’s 1824 map. It was originally constructed for Wilson to supply yarn for his expanding stocking frame business. The mill was driven by water in the Wilton Dam. In 1831 it contained the first steam engine built in Hawick (by Melrose’s). A separate mill was built perhaps 1851 on a site adjacent to the Roughheugh Waulk Mill, and known at that time as ‘Ladylaw’, distinct from Roughheugh.

Langlands Park (lawng-lindz-pawrk) n. villa built possibly for James Oliver. It was designed in Scottish baronial style by Glasgow-based architect John Thomas Rochead in 1863. The house was renovated for Peter Scott in 1914, and so may have changed its name.

Langlands Place (lawng-lindz-plis) n. street that was incorporated into Wilton Crescent in 1865 (marked on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map).

Langlands Raik (lawng-lindz-râk) n. area mentioned in an old description of the Common at Myreslawgreen, meaning an extent of land used for grazing sheep or cattle – ‘...the highway from West Port to Langlands Raik on the east’ (i.e. the ‘Common Vennel’, so that ‘Langlands Raik’ must have been around the Playing Fields or Coble; this could be ‘Reach’, i.e. a stretch of the Teviot).

Langlands Road (lawng-lindz-rôd) n. street stretching from the top of Roadhead to Wilton Path. It was once known as ‘the kirk road from Wilton to Langlands’, and was named around 1868. The street was once very narrow, but widened about 10 feet in 1904, with some demolition of houses at the Roadhead end. The street was extended when Langlands Bank was demolished in 1971.
Langlee

Langlee (lawng-lee) n. house above Langlands Road, built in 1907 to designs by J.P. Alison. It may have originally been built for manufacturer T.A. Luing and was later the home of George Scott, son of the founder of Pesco's.

Langlee (lawng-lee) n. farm on the west side of the Jed Water, opposite Ferniehirst Castle. It was listed as ‘Langle’ in 1538 among lands in Jedforest that had passed to the Crown, but the lands were ‘claimed by the laird thereof’; at that time it was valued at 25 shillings. It is probably the lands of ‘Langle’ listed among those held by the French family in 1588 (and formerly part of the holdings of Jedburgh Abbey). It was owned by the Bruce family from the early 1800s, then the Dalrymples. James Fair owned the lands in 1788 and through the early 19th century, passing them to his nephew James Elliot Shortreed-Fair. It was bought by Charles Scott of Howcleuch (son of Walter of Wuahcpoke) in the late 19th century. The house built about the 1790s was replaced with a design by David Bryce in the 1860s. There is planted parkland from an earlier period (it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Langly’).

Langlee (lawng-lee) n. area between Galashiels and Melrose, on the north of where the Gala Water meets the Ettrick. It was formerly an estate with mansion house. It is now a rather depressing suburb of Galashiels.

the Lang Moss (thu-lawng-mos) n. area near the northern extent of the old Wilton Common, now on Drinkstone farm, just to the west of Drinkstone Hill (and marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map). It was near here that the temporary grave of ‘Jenny Saut Haa’ was located. There is another ‘Long Moss’ near Cavers Knowes farm.

lang-nebbit (lawng-ne-bee’, -bi’) adj., arch. long-nosed – ‘O ye lang-nebbit pryn’ race, Who kittle words an’ letters trace’ [JR], astute, learned – ‘Lang-nebbit words he has in store, His brains were ne’er surpassed by ony; Kirk session law, he bang’d it a’, Did Cuillie Jock o’ auld Blinkbonnt’ [DA].

Langnewton (lawng-new-in) n. Longnewton, hamlet about 3 miles south of Newton St. Boswells. This was also a small, ancient parish, which was absorbed into Ancrum at the end of the 17th century. Hence it was once the western part of the later Parish of Ancrum. The church was described as a benefice of 8 merks in 1220; there is now no sign of it. The Rectory belonged to Jedburgh Abbey. John of ‘Longa Newton’ swore paid homage to Edward I in 1296. The barony was granted to Robert, Stewart of Scotland by Robert the Bruce around the 1320s, and by the late 14th century the barony was held by a branch of the Douglases. There were Ruthfords there in the 15th century. Patrick and Arthur Crawford were at the mill there in 1493. Patrick Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell, was infested in lands there in 1499/1500 and the lands were confirmed to Adam, Earl of Bothwell in 1511. There was a tower house here in the 16th century, which in 1513 was given to the custody of Adam, Master of the Anchorite Order, for protection, and in 1589 it was taken by Andrew Ker of Newhall, who was then denounced as a rebel. The Barony was held by Francis Scott, Earl of Buccleuch when he inherited his father’s lands and rights in 1634. The whole Parish was valued at about £2500 in 1643 and 1663 and was held by the Earl of Lothian. It was among baronies and lands inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. Patrick Scott, squire of Ancrum, paid the land tax on the whole parish there in 1678, when it was valued at about £2200. There was formerly a mill here, on the right bank of the Teviot, as well as a school. The area to the north of the village was formerly known as Longnewton Common – ‘The Craig for strength, Woodhead for length, Palacehill for beauty, Sandystones the most confused place In all Longnewton barony’ [T] (the name first appears as ‘Longa Neutun’ in 1220, and is thereafter often ‘Langnewton’, ‘Langneutoune’, ‘Langnewtone’, ‘Langnewtoun’, ‘Langnewtoun’, ‘Langneuton’, ‘Langneutowe’, ‘Langnewtowne’, ‘Longnewtowne’, ‘Longnewton’, or similar; it is ‘Lang now’ on Gordon’s map of Scotland in Blaeu’s 1654 atlas; the origin is simply Old English for ‘long new town’, which is descriptive of the village).
Langowater

Langraw (lang-raw) n. Longrow, farm in the southern part of Castleton Parish. It is about the southermost part of Roxburghshire. Just north of the farm are old quarries, in one of which there are exposed parts of a cist, and in another is a grass-grown mound that was a lime kiln. There was formerly a lime kiln to the north-west, on the banks of the Muir Burn. Henry Forester was there in the period 1788–91. John Scott was farmer there in 1851 (it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Langraw Scaur (lang-raw-skaur) n. former name for cottages near Langraw (by Bonthorpe Bridge), presumably named for a ‘scaur’ there. It was also known as ‘Scaur Nook’. William Oliver, hind at Langraw, lived there in the mid-19th century.

Lang Sandy (lawng-sawn-dee) n. nickname for Alexander Scott.

Langshaw (lawng-shaw) n. ruined 16th century L-plan tower a few miles north of Galashiels, stronghold of the Borthwicks. It is very close to Colmslie and Hillslap towers. It was in the hands of Lord Home in the latter part of the 15th century and was once a seat of the Murrays (the name is probably simply Old English for ‘the long wood’ and is first recorded in 1586; it was spelled ‘Langschaw’ and variants and was later ‘Lainshaw’).

Langshawburn (lawng-shaw-burn) n. remote farmstead over into Dumfriesshire, just to the west of Craik Cross Hill. It was once split into Upper and Nether Langshawburn. Cowans and Murrays lived there in 1841 (it is marked on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch).

Langside (lawng-sid) n. villa at 39 Weensland Road. It was built for manufacturer Adam Darling in the latter part of the 19th century. James Burnet was there in the 1930s (also written ‘Langsyde’).

Langside (lawng-sid) n. former name for the lands at Langsidebrae. It formed part of the estate of Elliott of Stobs in 1678 and still recorded that way in 1811 and in about 1874. William Pott was living there in 1702 (it is ‘Langsyde’ in 1573, 1692 and 1698 and ‘Langside’ in 1678).
Langside (lawng-síd) n. farm near Bowden. A story is told of the Covenanter Alexander Peden working there in disguise and then being recognised by locals at a field preaching on the following Sunday. There were Elliots of Langside in the 17th century (easily confused with Lansidebrae near Shankend).

Langsidebrae (lawng-síd-brá) n. farmstead just to the west of the Langside Burn above Shankend in the upper Slitrig valley. This is probably the ‘Langside’ listed among lands in the Barony of Cavers resigned in 1368 by Thomas Balioi to his superior William, Earl of Douglas. The lands here are referred to as just ‘Langside’ in a 1511 charter of Douglas of Cavers. In 1573 Douglas of Cavers had a decree to remove Robert Elliot of Redheugh from these lands, but Elliot argued that ‘his fader and guidsire wes in possession of the saidis landis thir mony yeres bigane’. It is probably the farm of that name, possessed by William, younger of Cavers in about 1614 when some livestock were stolen. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when that was inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. It was ‘Langsyde’ owned by the Elliots of Stobs at the end of the 17th century, e.g. inherited by Sir William Eliott in 1692. John Elliot was tenant in ‘Langside’ in 1694. Walter and James Armstrong were farmers there in 1797, with William Hobkirk as shepherd. Thomas Cairns was there in 1868. John Rae was shepherd here in the mid-19th century.

Langside Burn (lawng-síd-burn) n. stream joining the Slitrig at Shankend and fed by smaller streams that rise on the slopes of the Maidens and Greatmoor, including Fore Burn, Mid Burn, Back Burn and Pap Sike. In its upper part is the waterfall of Hawkhass Linn, with an adjacent earthwork. A little further down, near where it crosses the line of the Catrail, there are the remains of a farmstead, being a D-shaped enclosure about 55 m across, with signs of 2 sets of rectangular foundations, one inside and one outside. The stream runs through Langside Burn Wood, near where the 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows some buildings. The steadings of Langsidebrae is to the west. There is a farm of the same name in Bowden Parish and several others across Scotland.

Langside Burn (lawng-síd-burn) n. former name for a stream near Whithope, perhaps Whames Sike. It is listed as ‘langesideburne’ in about the 1190s when Richard Lovel granted lands between Whithope and Whames.

Langslack Sike (lawng-slak-sik) n. Langslack Sike, stream that flows roughly north-east to join the Jed Water, to the east of Southdean Mill. The area is rich in archaeological remains. Hyndhaughhead Tower lay on its northern banks, and Slack’s Tower a little to the south. There was another tower house just 150 m east of Hyndhaughhead, on the south side of the stream. The foundations are still visible, about 6.6 m by 3.8 m, surrounded by banks, and with 2 larger farmstead buildings adjacent. There are also signs of rig lines, enclosures and other banks from the former farm. It is also possible that there are remains of a homestead here, buried in peat. This may correspond to ‘Watersyde’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map.

Lang Sike (lawng-sik) n. small stream joining the Leap Burn just to the west of Robert’s Linn bridge. The Catrail crosses just to the south and there are the remains of a settlement there, being about 110 m in diameter and enclosing 3 platforms. The area is now covered with forest.

the Lang Stand Oot (thn-lawng-stand-oo’) n. local industrial dispute of 1822–23, lasting 14 months. It was prompted by the Hawick hosiery employers trying to reduce wages so that they could price their goods more competitively. This was a combined effort of all the town’s manufacturers, except William Beck. Plays and other entertainments were put on in the Town Hall and elsewhere to raise money for the strikers. Strike leaders were imprisoned in Jethart Jail, but were freed without trial. Eventually the employers conceded.

lang syne (lawng-sín) adj., arch., poet. of long ago, old-time, ancient – ‘A’ ye wha doat on langsyne things, Wha heap auld armour up in bings ...’ [JoHa], ‘Jingo ring was mair i’ ma line i’ th’ lang-syne days ...’ [HEx1919], adv., arch., poet. long ago, literally ‘long since’ – ‘But aa mind a day, long-syne, Aa met ee at The Vertish edge’ [DH], ‘And whiles I think that muckle o’ life’s fun, The satisfaction kent langsyne ...’ [WL], n., arch., poet. the days of the past, old times, nostalgia – ‘... The perfect content o’ the games o’ lang syne’ [??], ‘Fra sister fouts o’ auld lang syne Sae flows your gutterblude wi’ mine’ [JEDM], ‘Gane, the auld petted ewie that fed on the lea – Naething left o’ langsyne but my grandfather’s tree’ [DA] (sometimes written as one word, ‘langsye’).
Lang Tae (lawng-tā) n. hill in Craik Forest, near the head of Wolfsleuch Burn. It reaches a height of 438 m.

Lang Tam Dyce (lawng-tawm-dis) n. nickname for Rev. Thomas Dyce.

Lang-tholance (lawng-thō-lans) adj., poet. long-suffering — ‘...fu’ o’ tendir pitie, an’ gracious, lang-tholance, an’ waynesum in mericie an’ trouth’ [HSR].

Langton (lawng-tin) n. William (b.1814/5) from England, he worked as a stocking frame-smith in Hawick. In 1841 he was at about 55 High Street, but by 1851 had moved to O’Connell Street. His brothers John and James were living with him by then. The family moved to 15 Backdamgate, then back to O’Connell Street by 1871. In 1837 in Hawick he married Mehala Dow, from London. Their children included: William (b.1837), also a framesmith; Rebecca (b.1840); Mehala (or Matilda, b.1844); Mary (b.1847); John (b.1854); Catherine (b.1851); John (b.1854); Eliza (b.1856); and Ann (b.1861).

Langtonheight (lawng-tin-hi) n. farmstead in Ashikirk Parish, just to the east of Synton Parkhead. This is probably the ‘Longtown’ where Michael Anderson and Walter Veitch were located in 1719. Walter Thomson was farmer there in 1797, with 4 work horses on the farm. Walter Scott was shepherd there in 1851 (it is ‘Longtounheight’ in 1797; ‘Longtown’ is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Langton (lawng-town) n. Longtown, town on the A7 towards Carlisle, about 3 miles south of the border. It has a handsome bridge, is near to the site of the Battle of Solway Moss (1542), and was a former station on the Waverley Line. Population about 3,000.

Langtoon see Lanton

Langview (lawng-veh) n. Longview, a Victorian villa-style house behind the ‘Auld Man’s Sate’.

Lang-wundit (lawng-wun-dee)’ adj. long-winded — ‘Ike ane believes the other ane A great lang-wundit blether, An’ like the man that couldna’ speak On anything but leather’ [FL]. ‘That langwundeet title remains iz the offishial yin altho it’s seldom spoken at length’ [BW] (also written ‘langwundeet’, etc.).

Lanso (lawn-so) n. short form for ‘John Laing & Sons Ltd.’, but not nearly as commonly used as ‘Pesco’.

Lant (lawn)’ n. former lands in the Barony of Hawick, probably the same as Harwudhill. The ratification of the Barony to Anna Duchess of Buccleuch in 1686 lists ‘the lands of Harwoodhill and Emmetsheels, somtymes called Lant and Emmetsheells’.

the Lantern Show (thu-lan-turn-shō)’ n. former name for a slide-show, particularly those associated with the Brethren Hall in Old Manse Lane in the early part of the 20th century.

Lanton (lawn-in, lawn-tin) n. village about 8 miles north-east of Hawick, half a mile off the A698. It contains several 18th century buildings and also a 16th century peel tower incorporated into Lanton House. There is also a garden having a plaque inscribed with Wallie Landles’ poem ‘Lanton’. The village used to be home of the Crowner (i.e. coroner) of Roxburgh and was also known as Cranstoun. Lands here were part of the original grant to Jedburgh Abbey in the early 12th century. Later the lands were split among several different owners, with a total value of more than £1700. Janet Turnbull had sasine for the lands in 1502, and Margaret and Elizabeth Turnbull in 1506. The area was burned by Dacre’s men, led by Sir Roger Fenwick in late 1513, and by Hertford’s men in 1545. A ‘6 pound land of Langtoune’ was owned by the Scotts of Branxholme and Buccleuch from at least 1502; they were valued at £6 in 1574, when still held by the Scotts of Buccleuch. The lands were included in the main Barony of Branxholm according to the services of heirs in 1634 and 1653, and the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. The Mathers of Lanton were a prominent family in the Jedburgh area in the 17th century. A large part of the land passed to the Douglasses sometime in the 17th century (with 2 acres there being included among possessions of the Douglasses of Cavers in 1687 and 1698) and was sold to the Fergusons in 1694, then passed to the Youngs and the Browns.

Rev. George Dickson held part of the lands from 1770, and they were sold by his trustees to Sir Gilbert Murray Kynynmound Elliot in 1796. In the 1788 county valuation draft lands there were owned by George Black of Menslaws, the Duke of Buccleuch, George Dickson’s trustees, William Douglas of Timpendean, Walter Hunter of Polmood, Andrew Mather, John Mather’s heirs, Thomas Ogilvie of Chesters, James Porteous, Thomas Rutherford of Knowesouth, Robert Scott, William Turnbull and Thomas Waugh of Hawkburn.
Lanton

There was once a school in the village (the origin is probably Old English ‘longa tun’, meaning ‘the long town’; it first occurs as ‘Langtoun’ in the mid-12th century, remaining that way for centuries, and still being ‘Langton’ and ‘Langtown’ into the late 18th century; it is ‘Langtoun’ on Blaeu’s map of 1654).

Lanton (lawn-tin, lawng-toon) n. William (15th C.) member of the ‘retour of inquest’ for Ker of Altonburn in 1438. He is recorded as being of ‘Langthoun’.

Lanton Cauld (lawn-in-kawld) n. weir in the Teviot near Lanton Mill.

Lanton Hill (lawn-in-nil) n. hill south of Lanton village and west of Jedburgh, containing a farm of the same name. There are 2 forts on its northern side. There is also a linear feature stretching from here to the south, towards the Dunion.

Lanton Lady Lands (lawn-in-lä-dee-lawndz) n. lands near Lanton that were once owned by the Douglases of Cavers and valued at £10. The lands were incorporated into Jedburgh Parish before 1788. They are described as ‘formerly in Cavers Parish’ in the 1788 draft valuation, when they belonged to Thomas Rutherford of Knowesouth. The name suggests that the lands were associated with a church for which Douglas of Cavers once held the patronage (along with Hassendean Lady Lands).

Lanton Mains (lawn-in-mänz) n. farm just past Knowesouth on the A698. In 1870 a Bronze Age cist was discovered there, containing skeletal remains, a beaker and flint flakes.

lantreen (lan-treen) n., arch. a lantern – ‘A’ll heh ti wire in, or thance A’ll no can wun doon in teime for the majeek-lantreen’ [ECS].

lap (lawp) n., poet. a leap – ‘... A grassy pule to kep the lap o’t’ [JBS], lap (lawp) pp., arch., poet. leapt, jumped – ‘Then Dickie lap a loup fu hie, Fala, &c. And I wat a loud laugh laughed he ...’ [CPM], ‘... With witches’ hazel in each steel cap, In scorn of Soulis’ gramarye; Then shoulder-hight for glee he lap, ‘Methinks I spye a coming tree!’’ [JL], ‘The yowes they lap out owre the buchte, And skippit up and downe’ [JTe], ‘And they hobbled and lap with their gysent shins, And daunced on the clammy floore ...’ [JTe], ‘An’ bauld wi’ hindberries frea the syke, I lap an’ ran a turn Alang the divots on the dyke, Doon to the Tweeden burn’ [ECB], ‘She was a yauld and willint bitch As ever lap ower hedge and ditch’ [JH], ‘He lap tae gird his sword, At his leal auld chieftain’s word’ [JEDM], ‘... an laap an flaanig as yauld as a wuddlie’ [ECS] (also written ‘laap’; this is the past tense, while the past participle is luppen).

lap (lawp) n., poet. a flap of a garment, lapel – ‘... Aye, and tell me the monie on my cloak lap; For there’s no ae fardin i’ll trust thee. Fala, &c.’ [CPM].

the Lapland Rat (thu-lawp-lind-raw’) n. nickname in use in the early 19th century.

lapper (law-pur) n., arch. a clotted mass, partially melted snow – ‘When ilk bit syke wad cast a caper Wi’ drumlie broo, and ice, and lapper ...’ [AD], v., arch. to clot, curdle, congeal, turn into slush (cf. louvered).

lappert gowan (law-pur-gow-in) n., arch. common name for the marsh marigold, Caltha palustris – ‘The Marsh or March Marigold, commonly known as Lappart Gowans, opens its large full yellow wax-like flowers in meadows and marshes’ [JAHM].

larrie (law-ree) n. a lorry – ‘Fient a trap, boaggie, gee, laarrie, caager’s cairt or hurlie’ [ECS], ‘Hei was on ov a laarrie comin birrlin alang ...’ [ECS] (also written ‘laarie’).

Larristofts (law-ris-tofts) n. lands listed in 1511 among those held ‘in tenandry’ by the Baron of Hawick, Douglas of Drumlanrig. The lands continued to be listed in 1572 when James Douglas inherited the Barony of Hawick. In 1615 it is transcribed ‘Lairsis, Toftis, Kirkwood’, which is probably ‘Larristofts and Kirkwood’. It seems likely that this is related to the lands of Lairs near Teviothead, and unrelated to Larriston, although of course there may be other possibilities (it is ‘Laristofts’ in 1511 and ‘Lairis Toftis’ and ‘Lairris Toftis’ in 1572).

Larriston (law-ris-tin) n. farm on the Liddel Water, south of Saughtree. The Larriston Burn, draining from Larriston Fells, joins the Liddel just below here. A former tower there was an important seat of the Elliots from the early 16th century. It is suggested that the site of the tower was on the Larriston Burn near Upper Larriston, some distance from the main house today. However, there may have been a separate tower-house near the modern house. Jeffrey says that when the foundation were dug up in about 1800 a large oven and an 18 pound cannon-ball were found. It may be the `Lanorowstanys' listed as a 20 merk land in the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale. Two separate farms there were formerly called Over and Nether Larriston; these were granted to Robert Elliot of Redheugh by the Earl of Angus in 1484. The farm was occupied by several Nixons in 1514. This was probably the site of the tower built by Martin Elliot of Braidlie in the 1570s and which was attacked by the English in 1584 (referred to in another English account as `Martins tower'). Probably a new tower was built by Robert Elliot of Redheugh in the late 1580s, since an English letter of 1596 describes that he `within these 12 years, has erected another called laristone'. The last Robert of Redheugh mostly resided there in the early 17th century. He had a daughter Margaret, who married James Elliott, son of `Gibbie wi the Golden Garters', and their son Gilbert became the next Elliot of Larriston. In the 1678 Land Tax Rolls the whole estate was valued at £1934, with Larriston itself valued at £834. Robert Elliot of Larriston became bankrupt and the lands of Over and Nether Larriston were sold to Christopher Irving of Binks in 1688. Tax was paid for 4 hearths at the house in 1694, and there was a shepherd and another house with a kiln recorded. Robert Elliot was able to buy back the lands in 1695, reinstating the dower rights from the rents to his grandmother (Margaret of Redheugh). Bonnie Prince Charlie is said to have spent the night here on his march south, and for a long time the bed he slept in was pointed out. When the farms of the Scotts of Buccleuch were surveyed in 1718 there were 3 small pieces of land belonging to the farm in loops of the Liddel Water adjacent to Riccarton farm. The Elliots of Larriston finally lost the lands through debt, selling Over and Nether Larriston and Larriston Rig to John Oliver of Dinlabyre in 1719 (for £1,008 6 shillings sterling). However, they were back in Elliot hands when purchased by Maj.-Gen. William Elliot (from William Oliver of Dinlabyre) in 1786. In 1788 the lands were recorded valued at £834. Maj.-Gen. Elliot left the lands to his cousin’s son, George Fraser Scott, who took the additional surname ‘Elliot’. This George Scott-Elliot was Laird in 1811 of ‘Lariston, comprehending Over and Nether Lariston, and mill and Mill Lands thereof’, valued at £627. George Turnbull was a resident there in 1821. Scott-Elliot sold the estate in 1843 to James Jardine for £29,000. It may be the ‘Lanorowstanys’ listed as a 20 merk land in the c.1376 rental roll of Liddesdale. It was popularised in the Ettrick Shepherd’s ballad ‘Lock the Door Lariston’. A lintel above the cottage door there is inscribed ‘J.S.’ and ‘M.R.’ for James of Stobs and Margaret of Redheugh – ‘See how they wane, the proud files of the Windermere, Howard ah! woe to the hopes of the day; Hear the wild welkin rend, While the Scots shouts ascend, Elliot of Larriston! Elliot for ayer!’ [ES] (also spelled ‘Lauriston’ and ‘Lariston’; the origin is probably from the Middle English personal name ‘Lauri’ or ‘Larri’, a diminuitive of ‘Lawrence’; it occurs as ‘Larrostone’ in 1484, ‘larostanys’ in 1489, ‘Lauerokestanis’ in 1515/6, ‘Larestanis’ in 1516 and 1556, ‘Larestanis’ in 1516, ‘Larastanis’ in 1526, ‘Larestane’ and ‘Lawrellstanis’ in 1544, ‘Lauerokstanis’ in 1548, ‘Lauriestone’ in 1565, incorrectly transcribed ‘Lamestone’ in 1565, ‘Lareston’ in 1595, ‘Larestounis’ in 1613, ‘Lariestoun’ in 1627 and ‘Lairiestounes’ in 1637, and although it attains its modern spelling at the end of the 17th century it is incorrectly written ‘Ladiestone’ in 1718, is still ‘Lauriston’ in 1797 and ‘Laristone’ in 1821; it appears on Sandison’s c.1590 map as ‘Ladystaine, Ro. Elliott’s’ and on Stobie’s 1770 map as ‘Laristown’).

Larriston Burn (law-ris-tin-burn) n. stream in Liddesdale, rising on Foulmire Heights and Loch Knowe and flowing west and south-west to join the Liddel Water near Steeleroad-end. Among its tributaries are Hirst Sike, Holm Sikes, Pipe Sike, Bught Sike, Stoff Sike, Little Warrington Sike, Great Warrington Sike and Westly Sike. It has several waterfalls along its length. It passes the farmstead of Upper Larriston, where the original tower-house may have been situated, as well as Lariston lime works. The farm of Lariston Burn was once separate from that of Lariston. Archibell Elliot was there in 1590 as well as ‘Geordie Nixon of the Lareston burne’ in the same year, both accused of rieving (it is ‘Lareston burne’ in 1588).

Larriston Fells (law-ris-tin-fels) n. centre of the Debateable Lands on the Scottish side, over the Border from Bewcastle Fells. The hills reach a height of 1,677 feet and feed the Lariston Burn to the west.

Larriston Knowe (law-ris-tin-now) n. hill that is part of Whitrope Edge, north of Whitrope-foot (it is unclear whether there is a connection to the Larriston further south).

Larriston Lime Works (law-ris-tin-lim-wurks) n. former lime manufactory on the Lariston Burn, to the south-east of the main farm.
Larriston Mill

This area has also been referred to as Upper Larriston. It started in 1811, and expanded in 1820 after demand from local farmers. It is labelled ‘Larriston Lime Works’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, with ‘Tile Works’ a little to the south. There are remains of lime kilns and old quarries scattered over a wide area.

Larriston Mill (law-ris-tin-nil) n. former mill at Larriston.

Larriston Rig (law-ris-tin-rig) n. farm in Liddesdale, to the east of Larriston farm, also called Haggiehaugh. John Elliot of Thorlieshope owned the lands (or perhaps just a ‘wadsett’ on the lands) from about the 1670s. They were among lands sold by Robert Elliot of Larriston to Christopher Irving of Binks in 1688, after Elliot went bankrupt. However, they were bought back by Elliot in 1695. John Nixon and George Armstrong were there in 1694. George Scott-Elliot of Larriston was owner in 1811, when it was valued at £207 and ‘now called Haggiehaugh’. James Jardine was owner in about 1874 (also also written ‘Larriston Rigg’ and ‘Larristonrig’; it is ‘Lar-’-son face’ [WL] (diminutive form of lassock).

lassock (la-sok) n., arch., poet. a small girl – ‘…And there’s nocht to marrow the tender grace Thatlichts the smile o’ a lassock’s face’ [WL] (diminutive form of lass).

Lasson (la-sin) n. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. His son John was baptised there in 1712. Perhaps the same Robert ‘Lasten’ witnessed a baptism for Hawick merchant John Johnston in 1721.

lat (law’, lawt) v. to let, permit – ‘…lat be, my lad, e’en lat it be; For sae rins a’ humanity’ [DH] (it is unclear how common this has been in Hawick; cf. luit and lut).

latch needle (lawch-nee-dul) n. a needle with a small hook at the end which is closed with a hinged latch to hold the yarn in place while the loop is formed in a knitting machine, thus allowing loop formation and ‘knock-over’ to happen simultaneously. This was common on a ‘V-bed’ hand-knitting machine and is similar to a ‘bearded needle’. It was patented by a Leicester hosier in 1849.

lately (lā’-lee) adv., arch. recently, newly, not long since – ‘Wrr. Scott the Beddel being laitlie dead, the minister thought convenient that John Scott son to the said deceat Walter should be admitted to supply the place’ [PR1717].

latewake (lā’-wāk) n., arch. a wake or ‘sittin up’ with a corpse.

the Latin Schuil (thu-law’-in-skil) n. another name for the Grammar Schuil, used to distinguish it from the ‘English’ or Parish School (also Laitin).
Latoun  (la-tin)  n.  Sir Brian   (d.1545)  English commander of Henry VIII, who was Governor of Norham Castle. Along with Sir Ralph Evers headed the invading forces that laid waste to the Borders in 1544/5, possibly including Hawick and Branxholme. Their ‘bloody ledger’ boasts of destroying 192 towns, towers, barkines, churches and houses, killing 403 Scots, capturing 816 prisoners, and taking 10,386 cattle, 12,492 sheep, 1296 horses, 200 goats and 850 bolls of corn, along with an incalculable amount of goods. He was killed at Ancrum Moor and probably buried at Jedburgh – ‘The ravag’d abbey rang the funeral knell. When fierce Latoun and savage Evers fell’ [JL] (also spelled ‘Laiton’, ‘Layton’, etc.).

latter-will  (law-tur-wil)  n.,  arch.  a will, document setting out a persons intentions for disposing of their estate – ‘Followis the Legacie and latterwill. At Hawik, the eleventh day of April, the zeir of God jmvc and thrie scoir and fourtene zeris …’ [SB1574].

Lau  see Hawick Lau

lauch  (lawch)  v.,  arch.  to laugh – ‘He that sits in heaven sall lauch …’ [HSR], ‘The Lord sall lauch at him, for he sees that his daye is cumin’’ [HSR], ‘The bairns was lauchin’ an’ schrachin’ amang the sauchs doon i’ the hauch’ [JAHM], ‘…folk noo-a-days disna believe thae things, an’ ye only get yersel’ lauched at’ [BCM1880], ‘Wi’ mony a face o’ lauchin’ glee, Around the auld hearth-stane’ [JT], ‘…it mae rain at, for ochts A care! – Lauch at! Ee’ll find A’m richt for aa’ [ECS], ‘…His frien’s a’ lauchit him to scorn, He rued the day that he was born’ [WFC], n.,  arch.  a laugh – ‘A’ll aye meind the lauch ei leuch!’ [ECS], ‘But aince and again their lauchs wad droon The dunt as at whiles they brocht ane doon …’ [WL], ‘Auld Warlock Hermitage There on the laugh, Sits square on his hurdies And gies a bit lauch’ [DH] (also written ‘laach’; the past tense is leuch and the past participle leuchten).

lauchful  (lawch-full)  adj.,  arch.  lawful, permitted by law, legally appointe – ‘…be the said vmquhile Robert as lauchfull tutore to me for the tyne’ [SB1569], ‘Item, whatsoever person that beis not present yeirlie at the Com- moune ryding and setting the ffaires, sall pay fortie schillings totes quotas, and wardit without licence or any lauchfull excuse’ [BR1640] (also ‘lauchful’ and other variants).

laud  (lawd, lowd)  v.  laud (note the diphthong in the former pronunciation).

Lauder  (lawdur)  n.  town on the Leader Water, in the former county of Berwickshire. It has preserved its original mediaeval form, with a single street widening into the Market Place, and the main road being divided by the central Mid Row, with its 18th century Town Hall. A bridge is recorded there as early as 1482. It was made a royal burgh in 1502, and was the site of the 1482 hanging of six favourites of James III by Archibald Douglas (Bell-the-Cat). Thirlestane Castle lies just outside the town. The town is on the main A68 road north from Hawick via Jedburgh, and until 1755 was also part of the route north via Selkirk, so it must have been a familiar stopping point for centuries of travelling Teries. Its Common Riding is one of the oldest, with reference to it in 1686, although it was in abeyance for 80 years before being revived in 1910. It includes a mounted procession to the Watering Stane and on to the Burgess Cairn. ‘Lauder and Lauderdale’ was published by Andrew Thomson in 1903. Population (1991) 1,064 (the origin of the name is probably a corruption of the Leader Water, however, it has also been suggested to be related to the Welsh ‘lawdrcog’, meaning ‘heaped’).

Lauder  (lawdur)  n.  Adam   (b.c.1790)  slater in Newcastleton. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821 and was listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1841 he was living at about 41 South Hermitage Street. His wife was Janet and they had children Adam, John, William, Agnes and Walter. Agnes (17th C.) resident of Dryden in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Alexander (b.1794/5) born in Smailholm, he was miller at Riddell Mill. In 1861 he was there farming 65 acres and employing 4 people. He was still there in 1868. His wife was Margaret and their children included Alexander and Mary. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Broadlees in 1731. He probably married Bessie Chisholme in 1728. His children included: Janet (b.1739); Walter (b.1731); James (b.1734); Adam (b.1738); and Margaret (b.1741). He may also be the Andrew who married Margaret Scott in Robertson in 1737. Cuthbert of Todrig (15th/16th C.). He was convicted in 1508 of several crimes. This included stealing 2 horses from Alexander Turnbull at Braidlie, resetting Lauder at Musselburgh Racecourse. Edward runner who won the 2003 ‘New Year Sprint’ event feited. David drawn and hanged and all his possessions forfeited. For these crimes he was convicted of treason and remitted for several crimes: attacking John and Adam Thomson in Selkirk; resetting Armstrongs, Elliots and Fosters; ‘wickedness’ done to Adam Thomson in Selkirk; burning Whitslade and goods stolen by Peter Turnbull of Bonchester; and further thefts from different people; stealing cows from Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. His name is recorded as ‘Hector of Lawdre’. He was also on the panel to decide on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex in 1464/5, where he is ‘of Lauedyr’. Hector (15th/16th C.) tenant in Clerklands recorded in 1493 as brother of Thomas. He was allowed to ‘compone’ at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh for a series of crimes, including stealing from several farms, bringing in Nixons from England and associating with William Elliot ‘and other thieves of Branxholme’. His sureties were Robert, son of Walter Scott of Headshaw, and the Laird of Buccleuch. In 1494 he was recorded as brother of the Laird of Todrig when he witnessed the charter for the lands of Galalaw by James Scott of Kirkurd in 1494. In 1494/5 he was recorded as brother of the Laird of Todrig when he had a remission for several crimes, including helping 2 Elliots and 5 Armstrongs, ‘Traitors of Levyn’ in a raid on ‘Quhit-mur’, involvement in a raid on the ‘Pot-Loche’ of Selkirk; resetting Armstrongs, Elliots and Fosters; ‘wickedness’ done to Adam Thomson in Selkirk; bringing in 2 Nixons; pilaging from Whitlelawhouse; the theft of cattle, sheep and a horse from the Turnbulls from Langhope; and further thefts from Shilling Green and Harthern. Robert, son of Walter Scott of Headshaw was surety for him in 1494/5. He is probably the Hector listed in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501 among mostly local men who had been fined (including Walter Scott in Headshaw and David Scott in Galalaw). In 1502 he is described as ‘in Clerklands’ when he had remission for several crimes: stealing 40 cows from John Scott of Hoddom House, along with a band of Armstrongs; burning Whitslade house with the Armstrongs; stealing 2 horses from Lauder woods; stealing several other horses from different people; stealing cows from William Wood out of Harthern and Whitlelawhouse; stealing 16 cows and 2 horses from Whitslade; and stealing cows from Traquair. John Scott ‘in le walis’ acted as surety. He also had remission for stealing 60 sheep from John Thomson in Harthern and for stealing Adam Thomson in Selkirk, with Robert Scott of Stiches acting as surety. James of Carolside, ‘Beau’ (d.1799) son of John and Agnes Adam. He was owner of the lands of Redfordgreen and Drycleughshiel in 1785. He paid the land tax on their value of £169 6s 8d. He also owned Whitslade and paid tax on its value of £266 13s 4d. His main estate of Carolside was near Earlston. John (d.c.1551) Archdeacon of Teviotdale from 1534. He succeeded George Lockhart, who became Dean of Glasgow, possibly with some exchange between the pair. He resigned the office in favour of John Hepburn in 1544, but retained some of the benefices until his death. John of Carolside and Whitslade (d.c.1788) owner of the lands of Whitslade, Redfordgreen and Drycleughshiel. He married Agnes Adam, who inherited the lands from her brother John Adam of Whitslade. He was succeeded by his son James. Sir Robert of the Bass and Quarrelwood (d.1337) son of Sir Robert. He was referred to as ‘elder’ to distinguish him from his son, also Sir Robert. He served as Ambassador to England during the time of Robert the Bruce. He was also Keeper of Berwick Castle and for a while was Chamberlain of Scotland. From about 1319 he was Justiciar of Lothian, responsible for the justice aires south of the Forth, including those held in Roxburghshire. He was present at the Battle of Halidon in 1333. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant at ‘Merch-cluche’ whose lands were raided and goods stolen by Peter Turnbull of Bonchester and a group of Englishmen. He himself was taken to Bewcastle ‘until he redeemed himself’, i.e. he was held for ransom. In 1502 Turnbull had remission for these crimes. Robert of that Ilk (16th C.) listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English in raids upon the farms of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. Thomas of Todrig (15th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1494/5. He had remission for his part in several crimes: attacking John and Adam Thomson in Selkirk; stealing sheep from Harthern; stealing from a poor man called Robert Gordon at Peebles ford; stealing 6 cows from Innerleithen; stealing a cow and a list of items from William...
Mitchell at `war'; stealing a skin from the Laird of Dewar; stealing 16 head of cattle from `cabrostoun'; stealing cattle and sheep from Purveshill; resetting Alexander, son of Robert Turnbull; a theft from William Turnbull in Shielswood; and common theft and delivery of stolen goods before the date of his previous remission. Walter Scott of Howpasley served as his surety. He is also recorded in 1493 when his brother Hector was allowed to compound for rieving crimes; since the same Hector was later recorded as brother of the Laird of Todrig, then presumably that was him. He was presumably father or elder brother of Cuthbert, who was Laird of Todrig in the early 16th century. Thomas (16th/17th C.) tenant in Braithwaugh in 1620. He was witness to a charter for Goldielands, given by Walter, Earl of Buccleuch. The lands of `Braithaugh' were presumably the place near Branxholme. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Priesthaugh in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (18th C.) resident at `Todridge'. His son William was baptised in 1732. William (d.1425/6) son of Sir Robert of Edrington and The Bass, and Edinburgh, and nephew of Sir Alan of Hatton. His mother was Annabella, and his half-brother was Alexander, Bishop of Dunkeld. He was educated in France and became Archdeacon of Lothian by 1405. He appears to have dispossessed John de Hawick from his position as Precentor of Glasgow in the period 1403-6. In 1408 he was consecrated as Bishop of Glasgow, succeeding Matthew Glendonwyn. He acted as an envoy to England and France and probably helped persuade Robert, Duke of Albany, to support Martin V instead of Benedict XIII. He was appointed as Chancellor by Murdoch, Duke of Albany, and continued under James I. It is unclear if he played a prominent role in Teviotdale. However, he did extend Glasgow Cathedral, and is buried at the old parish church in Lauder. His seal was very elaborate, showing the Trinity, saints, a kneeling bishop, shields and the words `S' WILLELMI DEI GRACIA EPISCOPI GLASGUENSIS'. William (16th C.) listed as `Maister' in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Bucleuch. He was owed money `conform to the Lairdis obligatiationn'. However, it is unclear who he was, or whether he was local (formerly `Ladder', `Lader' and variants).

Laura Bennett's (law-ra-be-nits) n. corner shop in the Kirkstyle during the 1940s and 50s – ‘... And if owts oo forgot A often would be sen-et Ti some we corner shop Like Laura Benn-ett’s’ [IWL].

the Laurels (thu-law-ulz) n. Guest House at 8 Princes Street.

Laurie (law-ree, low-ree) n. George from Jedburgh Parish, in 1793 he married Margaret Lamb in Cavers. Their children Anne and Jean were born in Jedburgh. Rev. James (c.1704–83) Minister of Hawick Parish 1757-83. He attended university along with Dr. John Armstrong (of Liddesdale and later London). He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1724, was licensed by Dums Presbytery in 1732 and was ordained at Langton in 1734. He was presented to Hawick by Henry, Duke of Bucleuch in mid-1757 and installed a few months later. He was known for being very pugnacious and was an acquaintance of the influential Dr. Alexander Carlyle (minister of Inveresk), who called him `a boundless liar' in his diaries! He was also described thus: `as a companion he was very amusing by the relation of fictitious stories'; it is said that he recounted fantastic tales based on the time he and Dr. Armstrong had joined a band of gypsies while they were students and also the time he spent visiting the doctor in London, where he claimed he befriended the top politicians of the day. He accompanied Carlyle and his party through Langholm to Carlisle, where he got into a fight `with a drunken squire of the name of Dacres, who had insulted him with foul language' (a descendant of Lord Dacres perhaps?). However, there is little independent information to support this general character assassination. He gathered some parishioners together in St. Mary’s churchyard to pray during the great flood of 1767, afterwards claiming to have helped abate the waters (although according to the miller the flood had already much receded by then!). Both the Burgher and Anti-Burgher secession churches were formed in Hawick during his ministry, presumably encouraged in part by his unpopularity. It was also said that he refused to allow the parishioners to use a well at the Manse, as they had done previously, and Council records show a wall was pulled down, which he had had built across a thoroughfare on Burgh property. In 1767 he was described as owner of property in the East End of Hawick. In 1743 he married Elizabeth Foggio (who died in 1792) and their son John was minister at Teviothead, Eskdalemuir and Ewes. They also had daughters Mary and Elizabeth – ‘Lawrie, that honest man o’ God, Deeming it judgement sent abroad Frae heaven direct because o’sin, Collected folk the kirk within’ [AD]. John (16th C.) notary to a charter relating to Harden in the Barony of Wilton in 1559. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Girnwood in 1716 and 1718. His children included William (b.1714), Janet (b.1716) and Janet (again, b.1718). Rev. John (1702/3–62) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1722, he was licensed by Penpont Presbytery in 1731 and was the second of the regular preachers at the Teviothead chapel-of-ease from 1738 until about 1745. In that year he was translated to Middlebie. He witnessed 2 baptisms in Hawick Parish in 1743 (for workmen John Rieve and John Armstrong, who may have had a connection to Teviothead); he is recorded there as ‘Mr John Lawrie preacher of the Gospel’. He married Anna Bell, who died in 1797, aged 85, and they had at least one son. Rev. John (1744–1817) son of James, minister of Hawick. He witnessed baptisms in Hawick in 1763, 1764 and 1765, when he was still a student (perhaps being the stand-in when the parents did not have other witnesses available, or else being an assistant in the church). He was licensed by the Presbytery of Jedburgh in 1767 and became the minister at Teviothead (or Caerlenrig) shortly after that. However, there is some potential confusion here with the earlier Teviothead minister of the same name, and it is hence possible this Rev. John was never associated with Teviothead. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He was translated to Eskdalemuir in 1785 and to Ewes in 1791. He was taxed for having a female servant in the 1780s. He was recorded at Ewes on the 1790–1797 Horse Tax Rolls and the 1797 Clock Tax Rolls. In 1786 he married Anne, daughter of William Grieve, farmer at Southfield, and she died in 1834, aged 73. Their children included: James (1787–1851), Lieutenant in the Royal Marines; William (1788–1842), Captain in the Royal Marines; Mary (1789–94); John (1790–1861), who became a Major General; Elizabeth (b.1793), who married Lieutenant David Maxwell, younger of Broomholm; Adam Ogilvie (1795–1814), Lieutenant in the Royal Marines, who died at sea; Robert (1797–1828), who died in Langholm; and Walter (1805–44), surgeon with the 4th Regiment Madras Light Cavalry, who died at Anantapur, India. John R. (19th/20th C.) wrote some lines in memory of his brother-in-law James Davidson. Walter (1858–1923) baker at 39 High Street, who became a licensed grocer at the foot of the Mid Row and wine and spirit merchant of 13 Teviot Crescent. He was a well known speaker at social functions and a member of the Masons. He bequeathed money for the Laurie Brig and Laurie Shelter (formerly written ‘Lourie’ and ‘Lourrie’; see also Lawrie and Lowrie).

the Laurie Brig (thu-law-re-brig) n. foot-bridge across the Teviot at the Spetch in Wilton Lodge Park, named after Walter Laurie, built in 1924 and opened by the Prince of Wales. It is near here that the riders stop to sing ‘Teribus’ on the Saturday morning of Common Riding week, the Principals standing in their stirrups. This tradition apparently began because it was once the site of a large gun, melted down like other sources of iron during WWII. The scissors used in the opening ceremony are in the Museum (sometimes erroneously written ‘Lawrie’).

Laurie’s Den (law-rez-den) n. area to the north of Faw Hill and west of the farm of Ashtrees. To the south-west there are the remains of an ancient enclosure, perhaps a mediaval stock pen (note the place of essentially the same name in Hawick, Lawrie’s Denn).

the Laurie Shelter (thu-law-re-shel’-ur) n. shelter in Wilton Lodge Park located near the Boer War Memorial, named after Walter Laurie who bequeathed money for its erection.

laurrie (law-ree) n., arch. a lorry – ‘...the muckle great, big hivy motor-lairie cam snorkin an dunnerin bye’ [ECS].

lavvy (law-vee) n. a lavatory, toilet – ‘Imagine that eer needin’ the lavvy And ee bide on the very top stair Ee can hardly quite savvy A queue when ee got there’ [AY].

law (law) n. a hill, often a large one with some-what of a pointed top, and separated from oth-ers, e.g. Black law, Broad Law, Cringie Law, Duns Law, Eisdale Law, Gala Law, Herman Law, Kaim Law, Kippielaw, Mervinslaw, Rubberslaw, Tushielaw, Woden Law, and formerly in Hawick the ‘Playlaw’ – ‘From the bridge to the foot of the play la’ [PR1717].

law (law) adj., arch. low – ‘And fare thee weel now Liddesdale, Baith the hie land and the law – Keep ye weel frae traitor Mains; For goud and gear he’ll sell ye a’. Fala, &c.’ [CPM].

Law (law) n. Agnes (17th C.) resident at Chesters according to the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Archibald (b.1770/1) born in Bowden, he was a grocer and carrier in Lilliesleaf. In Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories he is recorded as carrier, leaving Lilliesleaf for Hawick once a week. In 1851 he was ‘Landed Proprietor & Ag. Lab.’ on the south side of Main Street. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed simply as a grocer. He had a daughter Ann. Gilbert (15th/16th C.) resident of Menslaws. In 1502 it is recorded that he had 5 firlots of grain stolen from him there by Adam Grahamslaw, son of the Laird of Little Newton.

Hugh (19th C.) farmer and coal agent, who was the last tenant of the fields between Havelock Street and Howdenbank, at that time part of Wilton Mains. He may have been the same Hugh described as an engineer of Wilton Place. James (c.1560–1632) born in Fife, he graduated from St. Andrews in 1581, and became minister of Kirkliston.

As a young minister he is recorded being censured (along with John Spottiswoode) for playing football on the Sabbath. He became a royal chap-lain in 1601, and was titular Bishop of Orkney from 1605. He was Moderator of the General Assembly in 1608 and preached in favour of episco-pacy before the assembly in 1610. In 1615 he was appointed Archbishop of Glasgow, succeeding his friend Spottiswood. He must have temporarily held the superiority of local lands, since in 1624 he gave a sasine for Headshaw, Dryden and other lands to Andrew Hay, and in 1628 gave a charter of the lands of Barnhills to William Bennet. He married at least twice. James (d.c.1682) tenant in Horsleyhill. His will is recorded in 1682. He could be the James who witnessed baptisms for Robert Scott and William Scott in Robertson Parish in 1681. Jean (19th C.) name (or possibly nickname) for a Hawick character of the mid-1800s – ‘Goold Ballantyne and auld Hawick Jock, Wattie Moudie, Jock Gray and a’; Jenny’s Penny wi’ plaid o’ check, Betty Revel and auld Jean Law’ [HI]. John (d.c.1687) tenant in Hawick. His will is recorded in 1687. Probably the same James witnessed a baptism in 1682 for James Turnbull in Fenwick. Rev. John (1791–1875) coming from Linlithgow West, he was educated at Edinburgh University and licensed as a preacher of the Asso-ciate Presbytery of Falkirk. He became the third minister of Newcastleton Burgher Kirk in 1812.

He was described as ‘very young and blooming’ when he started and ‘never seemed to grow older or less comely’. He was thus an object of much attention among local farmers with marriageable daughters. He was said to be a ‘handsome and vigorous preacher’ who became known as ‘the Lion of Liddesdale’. He started one of the first Sunday Schools in the district, and brought in 2 people from Carlisle to give singing instructions to the congregation. He visited London in 1824, and his wife would only let him go if he left a portrait of himself, so he got one done in Hawick in about 2 hours. In 1828 he was translated to St. Margaret’s, Dunfermline. He moved to Innerleigh in 1850 and had his jubilee as a minister in 1862. He married Jane Murray, who died in 1847; she was from his congregation and one of 7 sisters. They had 4 daughters and 1 son: Agnes; Janie, who married manufacturer George Wilson in Hawick; Janet, who married John Tod from Dalkeith; Ellen, who married Thomas Bon-nar, architect in Dunfermline; and William, who died in Trinidad. In 1859 he remarried, to Jessie Sanderson, but she died in 1860. It is said that he was related to Prime Minister Andrew Bonar Law. He died at Eskbank, Dalkeith and is buried at Dunfermline, alongside his wife Jean Murray of Whisgills. John (1906–59) schoolmaster at Denholm. He married Margaret Janet Robertson. They are buried in Denholm. Robert (17th C.) described as ‘in Kames’ in 1632 when along with several others he feu’d Westbanks (near Belse) from Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning. Walter (19th C.) commission agent of 7 Slitrig Crescent. His daughter Margaret married Walter Scott (of Lyle & Scott), while Kate married John Rennie (of the British Linen Bank) and Jane married Walter Phillips Kennedy (bookseller). He may be the Walter, married to Janet Kedie, whose children baptised in Hawick included: Mary (b.1868); Walter (b.1872); and Thomas Kedie (b.1874).

the Law (thu-law) n. popular name used in the district of Denholm for Ruberslaw – ‘...an’ then for the Law – his ordinar’ hunting grund’ [BCM1881] (e.g. used by James Murray in 1863).

law borrows (law-bo-röz) n., arch. legal security given by a person, that they will not harm another person – ‘...James Budie, dreading personal and bodily harme of Adam Brown, weiver, and craved lawborroves ...’ [BR].

lawest (law-iist) adj., poet. lowest – ‘Thou hest layde me in the lawist pitt, in mirk, in the deeps’ [HSR].

lawfi (law-fi) adj., arch. lawful, official, proper – ‘...told her that neither God nor man was her master, and that she was a ‘lawfu’ witch’ [EM1820], legitimate, offspring recognised by the law – ‘The Beddall was ordered to summon Robert Eliot eldest lawful son to Francis Eliot ...’ [PR1717] (also written ‘lawfu’); the last meaning common in older documents, sometimes contrasted with natural).

Lawgaps (law-gaps) n. possible name for lands in upper Liddesdale, recorded in a rental roll of c.1376 as part of the area called Ermildon. It was recorded as ‘Lawgappis’ and listed as being c.1376 as part of the area called Ermildon. It was recorded as ‘Lawgappis’ and listed as being valued at 20 shillings.

lawgier (law-gee-ur) n., poet. a lawgiver – ‘Ephraim amsa is the strench o’ mine hezd, an’ Judah is my lawgier’ [HSR].

Lawhope (law-up) n. former name for land in the Barony of Ashkirk. They were part of the estate purchased by Archibald Cochrane of Ashkirk in 1795. They are described in 1815 as ‘Lawhope meadow’.

lawin (law-in) n., arch. a bill, particularly in a public house – ‘A paid ma laween ... an thae A lifet ha’ the sneck an gae oot again ti the Mercat Cross’ [ECS], ‘Yin champagne-cork, left for the lawin’, ‘By a Pipe Band efter yon drummin’ and blawin’’ [DH] (also written ‘laween’).
Lawrie’s Denn

Lawrie’s Denn (law-reez-den) n. former name for area at the east end of Hawick, in use before the houses were built there. It is marked on Wood’s 1824 map near where the Auction Mart was later built, and on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map the name appears near the beginning of Weensland Road. In 1824 the land was owned by Archibald Dickson. It is referred to as ‘Laurie’s Yard’ and ‘Laurie’s Den’ in the 1841 census. The name derives from James Lawrie who once owned the lands, together with the Old English for ‘wooded hollow’ (also written ‘Laurie’s Denn’).

Lawrie’s Flat (law-reez-flaw’) n. name marked on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map for the orchard area roughly where Trinity School was later built, a little further from the centre of town than ‘Lawrie’s Den’.

Laws (lawz) n. former lands occurring as ‘Lawis’ on the 1594 list of those held ‘in tenancy’ by the Baron of Hawick. The name occurs between ‘Langhaugh’ and ‘Tofts’, suggesting a location in the upper Teviot valley. However, it is possible that the lands meant are those in Liddesdale.

Laws (lawz) n. former name for lands in upper Liddesdale, between the B6357 and Riccarton Junction. They are recorded in the rental roll of c.1376 in the region then known as Ermildon (probably around the modern Arnton Fell). ‘Lawis superior’ is valued at 12 shillings and ‘Lawis inferior’ as 7 shillings, as well as ‘Locus Ricardi de Lawis’ (8 shillings), ‘Locus Roberti de Lawis’ (8 shillings 4 pence) and ‘Locus Ennie de Lawis’ (3 shillings); it is unclear to which family these Lairds belonged. It seems likely this is the same place as Lawshill, which is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map and associated with Law’s Hill on modern maps. It could also be the same place as ‘the Hill’, which was a seat of the Elliots in the 16th century. It is ‘Leys’ on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, when it extended to 546 acres, bounded by Dawstonburn, Soughtree, Riccarton, Roughlee and Stitchelhill; the farmhouse was shown on the map close to the place marked as the remains of Riccarton Tower on modern maps.

Lawshill (lawz-hil) n. fortified house marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map, roughly north of Riccarton farm. It is surely connected with the lands of ‘Lawys superior’ and ‘Lawys inferior’ listed on a c.1376 rental roll. Law’s Hill is essentially the southern spur of Shiel Knowe, with Palmer’s Hill Cutting passing through it. The farm was occupied by John Nixon in 1623 and by Walter Scott of Goldielands in the period 1634–47, along with Riccartonfoot and Prickinghaugh (it was ‘Lawishill’ in 1623 and ‘Laweshill’ in 1634).

the Laws of the Mairches (thy-lawz-ov-thu-mar-cheez) n. rules for governing the Border, set up by a commission of English and Scottish knights in 1249. This included the establishment of the Wardens and how they were supposed to deal with rievers etc.

Lawson (law-sin) n. Judge Alexander Sutherland (1842–1916) watchmaker and jeweller of 1 Sandbed. He started his business in 1864, and also acted as an optician, silversmith and shipping agent. He was a member of the Town Council for 43 years, being Treasurer, becoming a Bailie and later a Judge. He was a Mason, associated with B.U.R.A. No. 424. He was also one of the founding members of the Common Riding Ceremonial Committee in 1887, and acted as a Race Steward. The Lawson Bridge was named after him, and he can be seen in a photograph of the older version of the bridge about 1900. His wife’s name was Catherine. His daughter unveiled the Hornshole Memorial in 1901 – ‘... there to answer Bailie Lawson Aboot every wound and scar’ [WE]. Isobel (18th/19th C.) living at Newmill in 1793 when her daughter Margaret (b.1774) was baptised in Roberton. She acted as ‘Sponcer for the child’. James of Cairnmuir (17th C.) had the teinds of the Parish of Bedrule ratified to him in 1639, confirmed by a Private Act of Parliament of 1641. It is unclear what his connection was, but the original grant appears to have been from Rev. Joseph Tennant in 1632. James (18th C.) waiter working for vintner Robert Armstrong in Hawick in 1794. Patrick (15th C.) recorded among a large list of men of Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aire in 1494/5, with the Lord of Liddesdale and Captain of Hermitage being fined.

Robert (17th C.) listed at Whithope among ‘The poor in Hauick Parioch’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (18th C.) resident at Teindside. He married Margaret Scoon, who may be the daughter of Walter Scoon and Isobel Miller born in 1720. Their children included: Robert (b.1745); Isobel (b.1747); Elizabeth (b.1750); John (b.1756); and George (b.1760); and Walter (b.1760). His children were baptised in Hawick, Wilton and Roberton Parishes. He was probably also father of William (b.1742), with the mother’s name given as ‘Janet’ Scoon. The witnesses in 1745 were the Thomas Elliot in Harwood and Bailie Robert Boyd, and in 1750 were the Lawson Brig

John and Robert Scott from Galalaw. Robert (18th C.) probably son of Robert. He was resident at Chapelhill in 1774 when his daughter Agnes was baptised in Roberton Parish. Other children were William (b.1775), Walter (b.1776), Margaret (b.1778), Margaret (again, b.1779) and Robert (b.1782). Walter (b.1811/2) from Westerkirk, he was a farm worker in Roberton Parish. In 1841 he was at Meadow Cottage and in 1851 at Craik. In 1840 in Ettrick Parish he married Janet Jackson (from Cavers Parish) and their children included: Janet (b.1841); Jane (b.1842); Thomas (b.1844); Jean (b.1849); and Susanna (b.1854). Walter (19th C.) Burgh Officer in the 1880s, acting as Keeper of the Town Hall among other duties. He was also the halberdier in 1887 when the custom was revived of having the Burgh Officer, accompanied by the Drums and Fifes, walk to the Cornet-elect’s house on Picking Night. Sir William (d.1632) son of Thomas of Little Usworth, County Durham. He was High Sheriff of Cumberland and in 1591 was made Convener of the Commission of the Marches. Knighted in 1604, in 1605 he was Convenor to the English Commission to govern the Borders. His name occurs many times in relation to the pacification of the Borders (i.e. capturing men from various families and executing or exiling them). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. He was at Todshawhillshiel in 1716. His children included: Helen (b.1714); Robert (b.1716); and Walter (b.1719). William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Burnfoot in 1743 when his daughter Isobel was baptised in Roberton Parish. Margaret (b.1737) and Janet (b.1740) were probably also his daughters. William (18th C.) recorded at Eilrig when some of his children were baptised in the 1770s. He married Jean Elliot in Roberton Parish in 1771. His children included: Isobel (b.1772); and Robert (b.1775). William (19th/20th C.) of Edinburgh designer of Hawick’s Lawson farm. In 1821 it appears as ‘Lawstonn’ on Stobie’s 1770 map as ‘Lawsholm’, on the Liddel to the southeast of Lawson farm.

The Lay of the Last Minstrel

Lawston (law-ston) n. farm in the far south of Castleton Parish, between the B6357 and the Liddel Water, after Kershopefoot. There are rig lines to the south-east and to the south are 3 oval hollows, which are probably coal pits. There was a colliery here from a few decades startin about the end of the 18th century, the only one of consequence in Roxburghshire. The stream there is said to have once had a sulphurous spring. William Oliver was there in 1797. William Graham was farmer there in at least the period 1821–51 (it is ‘Lawstone’ in 1821 and ‘Lawstown’ in 1838 and 1851; it appears as ‘Lawstown’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

the Lawyer (thu-law-yur) n. nickname for William Oliver in the 16th century.

Lawyhaugh (law-ee-hawgh) n. possible place name in Liddesdale, recorded on a rental roll c.1376 as ‘Lawyhalch’, with a value of 3 pounds. This is distinct from ‘Langhaugh’, which is also listed, but the location, and pronunciation, are unknown. It is possible it corresponds to the small farmstead labelled on Stobie’s 1770 map as ‘Lawsholm’, on the Liddel to the southeast of Lawston farm.

lay (lā) n., arch. the movable frame of a loom, containing the reed, which oscillates to beat the yarn into place – ‘Now when sitting at work on his loom, He thought, as the shuttle flew From end to end of the moving lay, That he had had troubles enow’ [JCG].

layne (lān) v., poet. to conceal, keep secret – ‘Its I, Watty Wudspurs, loose the kye! I winna layne my name frae thee! And I will loose out the captain’s kye, In scorn of a’ his men and he’ ’ [T].

The Lay of the Last Minstrel (thu-lā-thu-lawst-miinz-trul) n. narrative poem by Sir Walter Scott, which is set partly at Branxholme. It was finished in 1804, published in 1805 and was immediately successful and hugely influential. This success contributed significantly to the romanticised view of Borders history and to local tourism. The poem is composed of 6 cantos and written in an irregular metre. The main story is told by an aging minstrel who receives hospitality from Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch at Newark Castle. He sings about the Lady of Branxholme Castle (Janet Beaton), who opposes the marriage of her daughter Margaret to Henry of Cranstoun, and enemy of the family. Her champion William of Deloraine is dispatched to get the mystic book of Michael Scott from Melrose Abbey, but Deloraine is injured by Cranstoun on his return.
and the book falls into the hands of Cranston’s dwarf retainer. The dwarf finds the book and learns a spell of illusion from it, which he uses to lure the young heir of Branxholme into the woods, where he is later captured by the Englishman Lord Dacre. Dacre comes with a force to Branxholme demanding Deloraine in exchange for the boy. But the Lady of Branxholme makes a deal whereby Deloraine will fight the English champion Sir Richard Musgrave, who has accused Deloraine of plundering his lands during a truce. The goblin page transforms Cranston into Deloraine to fight the duel, which he wins. The heir of Branxholme is released and finally Margaret and Henry are allowed to marry. But during the wedding celebrations the ghost of Michael Scott appears to reclaim the evil dwarf as his servant.

lay on (lā-ōn) v., arch. to impose, charge, levy, assess—‘...did lay on ane stent by foru classes, viz., twenty-four shilling scotts, eighteint, twelve, and six,...’ [BR1701], to fall thickly (said of snow or rain), to beat or work with vigour, to flatter, lay it on thick—‘...as (ynce an ei’d been suitten on) hei laid on an ranted off yirrs o Border rheime an lore’ [ECS], to work hard, apply energy—‘Hicher up, nerr the croon o the hill, men war layin on an chaappin ...’ [ECS].

lay ti (lā-ti) v., arch. to start on food, set about eating—‘...had their beats pasturing on the Common, they lay to it, and had passage out and in’ [C&L1767].

lazy (lā-ze) n., arch. a fit of laziness—‘Ach, na! A’ m no verrih on wui’d – A’ve taen the laizy the day!’ [ECS] (also written ‘laizy’).

lea (lee) n. a piece of fallow land, tilltund land, grassy field—‘At Kershope-foot the tryst was set, Kershope of the lily lee’ [T], ‘And Crosier says he will do war – He will do war if war can be; He’ll make the bairns a’ fatherless. And then, the land it may lie lee’ [T], ‘...my father chanced to look alang the lea at the head o’ the bucht’ [LHTB], ‘Fair May unto the window ran, To see what she could see; And there she saw the hunting band, Parading on the lea’ [JTe], adj. fallow, barren (also written ‘lee’; it is common as a suffix in place names, where it can also be ‘ley’ and ‘lie’).

lea’ (lee) v., arch., poet. to leave, depart from—‘My heart is unco wae to lea’ thee’ [JS], to leave alone—‘Lee’ yer (‘im, iz, ’d, etc.) alone’ [GW].

Leaburn Drive (lee-burn-driv) n. street off the south of Weensland Road, with housing begun in 1934, with more development after the War and the road being taken over by the Council in the 1960s. It was originally the driveway from Weensland Road to Leaburn House. The road has a turning place half-way up.

Leaburn Grove (lee-burn-grôv) n. street off Leaburn Drive, developed in 2001.

Leaburn House (lee-burn-hoo) n. former house on Leaburn Drive, demolished in 1964. It was the town-house of Thomas Lindsay Watson (presumably named after the meadow on which it was built, and the Boozie Burn that flowed through it).

lead (leed) v., arch. to convey a cart, carry peats etc.—‘May it therfor please yow to grant your peti-tioner freedome and libertie as to cast, win, and lead, make in and away take of your Commone Muire of Havicke als many divots as will snatch his said stable ...’ [BR1704], ‘...upon ane mis-sive letter from the laird of Gladstains, the bailies and council gave liberty to him to cast, win, and lead some divots off the common’ [BR1707], ‘...for him to buy a beast for carrieing heather, leading of fuel, and carrieing to anie who would employ him’ [PR1723], ‘Paid James Heardye for liding 600 difeits to tolboothe, 1 10 0’ [BR1739], ‘...the Hawick beasts seldom touched it, because of the distance, unless when they were leading their peats or turfs’ [C&L].

Leadbetter (led-be’ur) n. Alan Edmon-stoune Greenshields (1897/8–1917) son of Thomas. He was a Major in the Royal Horse Ar-tillery who was mentioned in dispatches at Gal-lipoli, was wounded at Longueval and killed near Ypres. He is buried at Elverdinghe and there is a memorial plaque in Bedrule Kirk. Thomas Greenshields, J.P. (1859–1931) son of James Greenshields and Margaret MacPherson, he was born in Glasgow and was an architect with Leadbetter & Fairley. He started his own architect’s practice in Edinburgh in 1890, taking on James McLellan Fairley as a partner in 1895. In 1897 he inherited Stobieside from his father and in about 1912 became owner of Spittal Tower near Bedrule, which he had restored. He designed the renovations for Bedrule Kirk in 1914, and the War Memorial there, and was an elder at the church 1919–31. He also designed the new Wells House, as well as many other houses in southern Scot-land. He married Mary Anne Usher (daughter of Sir John of Norton and Wells) in Ratho in 1890. There is a plaque to their memory inside Bedrule

Leaderfoot (lee-dur-f) n. Leaderfoot, a village just east of Melrose, with a modern bridge over the Tweed for the A68, together with the elegant 1779–80 Drygrange Bridge and adjacent 1865 19-arch railway viaduct. The area is sometimes jokingly called ‘Tripontium’.

leadin (lee-din) n., arch. the grain or other crops carted in from the fields — ‘Fenwick had a happy knack of turning up on such occasions as clippings and hay leadings’ [BM1907], ‘I finished ma schooling at Kirkton ... an startit work on the farm drivin a one horse wi a cart ... for feedin sheep an cartin leadin in for cattle turnips’ [TH] (see lead).

Leafauld (lee-fawld) n. former lands in Liddesdale, near Leaugh, Langhaugh and Hartsgarth. It is probably the land referred to as ‘et le fauld’ in 1479 among the lands of Robert Elliot of Redheugh. In 1637 it is ‘Leyfauld’ when part of the lands to be inherited by James Elliott and his wife Margaret, daughter of Robert of Redheugh (the name presumably comes from ‘le fauld’; it is ‘Liefauld’ in about 1624).

leaves (leefs) n., pl. leaves — ‘The fisslin leaves trimmelt an bevvert i the simmer breeze’ [ECS], ‘...keekin throwe atween the leaves ...’ [ECS] (an example of the use of a different plural in Hawick than in standard English).

Leafy Hoose (lee-fee-hoos) n. former name for a house in the Weensland area, recorded in the 1851 census. It is probably the same as ‘Ivybank’. 1779{80 Drygrange Bridge and adjacent 1865 19-arch railway viaduct. The area is sometimes jokingly called ‘Tripontium’.

Leafauld Loch (lee-hawf-loch) n. Leahead Loch, a small body of water out beyond Stirches, by the roadside roughly opposite Stintyknowe, also called Dykeneuk. There were adjacent farm buildings shown on the Ordnance Survey map of 1863.

Leaheads (lee-heezd) n. Leaheads, former farmstead by Leahead Loch. William Goodfellow was there in 1708 and Walter Scott in 1709. Alexander Cunningham was there in 1747, John Miller in 1759 and James Riddell in 1797. William Douglas was shepherd there around 1840 and Thomas Lockie was ‘Game Guard’ in 1851 (it is ‘Leeheads’ in 1797, ‘Leehead’ in 1840 and ‘Leahead’ in 1841; it is ‘Leehaugh’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Leaheads (lee-heezd) n. Leaheads, former farmstead by Leahead Loch. William Goodfellow was there in 1708 and Walter Scott in 1709. Alexander Cunningham was there in 1747, John Miller in 1759 and James Riddell in 1797. William Douglas was shepherd there around 1840 and Thomas Lockie was ‘Game Guard’ in 1851 (it is ‘Leeheads’ in 1797, ‘Leehead’ in 1840 and ‘Leahead’ in 1841; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map of Roxburghshire).

Leary

an’ he’s leal, an’ he’s on his way home . . .’ [JJ], ‘For lads leal and true, And lasses braw and fair . . .’ [TC], ‘Here though art, and where to-morrow, Fur from Hawick, leal and kind . . .’ [TCh], ‘At his leal auld chieftan’s word’ [JEDM], ‘... A laddie kind and leal’ [??], ‘...The leal hands hand oat a welcome, The sib herts still beat true’ [WL], ‘Lang may the Common Riding leeve in the herts O’ every leal Teri . . .’ [DH] (from Old English; sometimes spelled ‘leil’).

leally (leal-lee) adv., arch. faithfully, loyally – ‘...and the faith in my body leley and treuly bindis and oblisis me til a noble and honorabil man, William Douglas of Drumlangrig’ [SB1470], ‘...wee shall lelilie and trelwie keip this our bonde for all quarrells, bloods and goods . . .’ [CBP1584].

lealest (leel-ist) adj., poet. most loyal – ‘O he was the lord o’ the keenest sword, And he was never kent the glorie That leamed frae lealthfu’ (leelth-foo) adj., poet. loyal, staunch – ‘Her lealthfu’ heart’ [HSR].

learn (leem) v., poet. to gleam, flash – ‘But it never kent the glorie That learned frea flags to riggin . . .’ [WL], n., poet. a gleam, flash, glow, radiance – ‘And the brumstane lene came frae their throats, And syngit his drakit tail’ [JTE], ‘...its kools ar kools o’ fire, whilk hae ane maist vee-mament lene’ [HSR], ‘... Hae the same lene o colour As Mimi wore at her corsage And braided in her hair’ [DH] (also written ‘leme’).

Lean Yeddie Gibson (leen-ye-dee-gib-sin) n. song of the mid 19th century, written probably by William Tait and Andrew Cameron, with help from Adam Brown and set to music by Walter Davidson. It is about an enthusiastic Hawick angler who died while fishing the Teviot in the 1850s.

the Leap (thu-leap) n. name often used for Leap Hill to the south of Hawick.

Leap Burn (leep-burn) n. stream that joins the Floss Burn to create the Lang Burn near Langburnshiels. It is hence one of the headwaters of the Slitrig.

Leap Hill (leep-hil) n. hill along the ‘Hill Road to Roberton’, on the north side, to the south of Western Essenside. It reaches 319 m high and contains various ancient earthworks. A probable hill-fort, just south-east of the summit has been largely destroyed by cultivation. The remains of 2 old sheepfolds lie on the south side. This was also the name of a farmstead there, owned by the Scotts of Wolf in the early 17th century and the Laings in the 18th century, passing to the Cochranes of Ashkirk in 1795. It was valued at £140 in 1643 and owned by Thomas Scott; the teinds were valued (along with Woll, Castleside and Broadlee), valued at £208 and owned by Robert Scott of Heap. Part was owned by Mrs. Elliot of Borthwickbrae in 1788 (as still recorded in about 1811) and Allan Elliott Lockhart by 1874, still valued at £143 (it is ‘Leiphill’ in 1609, 1643 and 1788).

Leap Hill (leep-hil) n. hill between Whitrope Cottages and the Maidens, reaching a height of 472 m (1544 feet). It is often referred to as simply ‘the Leap’ and was formerly called ‘Leap Steel’. There is a linear earthwork running west from the western slopes of the hill, now hard to make out, but perhaps once running as far as the head of the Harwood Burn (it is marked ‘Lyipe’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map and has its modern spelling on Stobie’s 1770 map).

the Leap Linns (thu-leep-linz) n. popular name for a narrow gorge through which the Ale Water flows, near Leap Hill, just south-west of Shielwood farm. A pool there was sometimes a summer swimming spot. On an eastern spur of Leap Hill there, there are the remains of a settlement, about 100 m by 45 m, and contains evidence of a hut circle and 2 enclosures, probably later sheepfolds (the name is probably the ‘de Lepes intra Ashkirke et Whitesalde in Alne’, i.e. between Ashkirk and Whitslade, mentioned in a charter of the late 12th century; the ‘linns’ probably refers to the narrow gorge there, and not to a waterfall; it is marked ‘Leap Linn’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Leapsteal (leep-steel) n. former name for an area around the Leap Burn (described as part of the Catrall’s course, between the Maidens and Robert’s Linn, in William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ (1821), Wilson’s ‘Annals of Hawick’ and contemporary descriptions).

lear (leer) n., arch., poet. learning – ‘...For want o’ braith or lear’ [DH], ‘What’s this? His lear wad flythe The wisdom o’ the day!’ [WL], v. to learn, teach (also lair).

Learmonth (leer-munth) n. Archibald (18th C.) resident at Whithope in 1742 when his daughter Helen was baptised in Roberton Parish. Other children included Robert (b.1741) and Margaret (b.1746). Perhaps he is the same as Archibald ‘Lernment’ at Deanhead, whose daughter Isabel was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1737. Henry (19th/20th C.) son of Henry. He was Cornet in 1882, with his own father serving as Acting Father. He was a ‘powerloom tuner’, but later farmed at Greenbraehead, and then emigrated to Learmonth

James (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1493 when he failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493; Laurence and Thomas were listed right after him. William, son of James, who was called later, may also have been his son. They were all recorded again in 1494/5, when the Sheriff was once more fined for their non-appearance. Perhaps the same ‘Jacobum Lernontht’ was recorded in 1508 when he witnessed the sasine for Adam Herpburn inheriting his father’s Lordship of Liddesdale; many of the other men were relatively local. James (16th/17th C.) recorded as schoolmaster at Minto in deeds of 1624 and 1625. James (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Helen Govenlock and their daughter Bessie was baptised in 1683. He witnessed a baptism for Andrew Fisher in 1681. James (17th C.) resident of Drinkstone according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was at Highchesters in 1710 and Whitfield in 1712. His children included: Robert (b.1710); and Isobel (b.1712). James Pringle, J.P., Manager of the British Linen Bank in Newcastleton in the mid-20th century. He lived at the Bank House and was first Treasurer of the village hall committee. John (17th/18th C.) resident in ‘Mains’ in Robertson Parish in 1717, 1721, 1726, 1729, 1731 and 1734. He is surely related to Thomas, who was there at about the same time. His children included: James (b.1717); Robert (b.1719); John (b.1721); Agnes (b.1724); Isobel (b.1726); John (again, b.1729); William (b.1731); and Thomas (b.1734). John (d.bef. 1794) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Turnbull in 1756 and her death is recorded in 1794. They had a daughter Margaret (b.1757). Lawrence (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when he failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493; James was listed right before him and Thomas right after. They were all recorded again in 1494/5, when the Sheriff was once more fined for their non-appearance. Robert (17th C.) resident of Robertson Parish, when it contained Hassendean. He married Isobel Noble and their son John was baptised in 1686. Helen (b.1684) was probably also his child. He is probably the Robert who witnessed a baptism for William Falside in 1686 and another for James Noble in 1687. He may be the same Robert who was at Hassendean Mains according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He was recorded at Borthwickshiel in 1711, when his daughter Isobel was baptised. Probably the same Robert was recorded at Howcleuch in early and late 1717 when his sons Robert and John were baptised. He may be the Robert who married Elspeth Little in Robertson in 1708. Thomas, who married Margaret Inglis in Robertson in 1726, may also be his son. Robert ‘Rob’ (17th/18th C.) Hawkwick resident who was married to Janet Andison. In 1721 they were rebuked by the Hawick Session because they ‘did accommodat married men and young men, yea, even boyes, with Candle and Cards, they cursing, swearing and blaspheming the name of God in ye season of ye night’; this would appear to a gambling house (although possibly to do with Tarot cards). In 1724 he was further cited for ‘allowing persons for meeting in his house for playing att cards’. After promising to no longer allow people to come to his house for gambling, the Beadle was instructed to check on him from time to time, this possibly ending the practice. He may have been the Robert born in Hawick to James and Helen G Owenlock. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Wait and their unnamed child was baptised in 1763. He could be the Robert, son of Robert, baptised in Hob Kirk in 1736. Simon (17th C.) resident at Langflat (near Southfield) in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (15th C.) witness in 1475/6 to a document relating to the lands of Kirkurd for the Scotts of Buccleuch. His name is recorded as ‘Thoma Lermond’. Thomas (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when he failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493; James and Laurence were also listed, and so they were surely related. All 3 were again cited for non-appearance in 1494/5. Thomas (16th C.) one of the men indicted in 1552 for involvement in the murder of Sir Walter Scott of Branzholme and Buccleuch. He is recorded as ‘Thomas Lermont, callit Lard of that Ilk’. Thomas (16th C.) farmer at Weens, recorded as ‘Thomas Leirmont’ in the 1562 dispute over lands in the Barony of Feu-Rule. Probably a related Thomas ‘Leirmont’ is recorded in an inquest in Jedburgh in 1523. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1727 and 1728 he was at Mains. He was surely related to John, who was at Mains at the same time. In 1726 he married Margaret Inglis, also from Robertson. His children included Isobel (b.1727) and Isobel (again, b.1728). Thomas (18th C.) resident of Whitehaugh in Wilton Parish. He married Jean Riddell in 1730 and their children included William (b.1735). The witnesses in 1735 were Thomas and John Irvine. William (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance. He was recorded as son of James, who may have been the same James called earlier at the 1493 court. He was cited again at the 1494/5 Justice-aire (also spelled ‘Lermont’, ‘Learmond’, ‘Learmont’, ‘Learnment’, ‘Leirmont’, ‘Lermond’, ‘Lermont’, ‘Lermont’, ‘Lornmond’ and variants).

lease (lees) n., arch. division of the threads for weaving – ‘In order to prevent two threads of different colours from coming together in the ‘lease’ at the end of each gang or course in warping …’ [BMC1881], v., arch. to wind off, separate threads before weaving – ‘Ti lease yairn’ [GW].

leasehold (lees-hawd) n. leasehold – ‘The trinnie o’ pule and stream … the lost lease-haund o’ youth …’ [DH].

leases (lee-seez) n., pl. rentals of farms. These were traditionally made for periods of 15 or 19 years, but sometimes 9 years or shorter. The land-owner usually leased to the same farmer, sometimes extending over several generations of the same family. Rent was once paid in kind, but that eventually gave way to cash. There were several different kinds of lease, sometimes also called a ‘tack’.

leasur (lee-zur) n., arch. leisure – ‘Bot the season now confining us to our housses and giving us more leasur to mind and attend these domestick affairs …’ [BR1692] laishur).

leave (lev) n., arch. dismissal, permission to leave, playtime at school – ‘The bairns new oot o the skuil for leave, gaed … rinnin aboot’ [ECS].

leave-piece (leev-pees) n. a snack for playtime at school.

leazel (lee-zul) v., poet. to exert – ‘…naether do I leazel mysel’, makin’ a-wark in meikle matt- ters, or in things ower heich for me’ [HSR] (this word is only known once, and is suggested to be a missprint for ‘bazele’, a variant of ‘baissle’).

Leche (lesh) n. John (d.1395) secretary to the Bishop of Glasgow. He obtained the living of Hawick Church sometime before 1363 and in that year asked for papal confirmation that he held it over the former incumbent John Fleming. It is said ‘he had the church of Hawyk, near the En- lish march, which on account of wars and pesti- lences brings no fruits’. He held the Hawick benefice until at least 1378. There is no reason to believe that he ever visited the town, however. In 1366 he is recorded paying the contribution of the See of Glasgow to the King’s Chamber- lain (and there was a contemporary of the same name recorded in the Exchequer Rolls who was a Burgess of Linlithgow). In 1376 he is the John ‘Lethi’ or ‘Lechii’ who was ‘vicar-general in spir- ituals’ of Walter, Bishop of Glasgow, when he arranged the transfer of the living of Cavers to Matthew Glendonwyn. There is a Patrick, perhaps his son, who was Dean of Glasgow sometime after 1421 and before 1444, and Chancellor of Glasgow from around 1444–60 (also spelled ‘Liche’ and possibly equivalent to ‘Leth’).

Leck (lek) n. Rev. Joseph of Rawflat (c.1698–1785) minister of Yetholm, 1731–85. He gained the lands of Rawflat in 1739 and they later passed to John Edmund Elliot. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. A story is told of how he was set upon by rob- bers, and when he and the leader (the local gypsy Will Faa) recognised each other, there were apolo- gies made, and the pair agreed never to speak of it again. He married Ann Scott from Sproust and their children included: Henry (1736–67); Susan (b.1742), who married Henry Ainslie, Sheriff-Clerk of Roxburghshire; Jean; William; and Thomas. Robert (b.1811/2) from Castleton Parish, he was a publican at about 31 High Street in 1841 and 1851. This was possibly the same as the White Hart Inn and was listed as the Bull & Butcher in Slater’s 1852 directory. By 1861 he was listed as an agricultural labourer, living at 3 Slinrig Bank. He married Mary (1811–55) daughter of Robert Mitchellhill. Their children included Margaret, Jane, Mary, Robert, Julian, Helen, Thomas, James and William G.

lector (lek-tur) n., arch. a pupil of English (as opposed to Latin), someone who reads the scripture in church – ‘…those who learned humanity, and also the lectors, were all taught under one roof by the then incumbent …and when those who learned humanity, and others who were lec- tors, were disjoyned …’ [PR1713].

ledder (le-dur) n. a ladder – ‘…As he spiels up and doon his ledder o’ sang, Blithely I ken’ [DH], ‘Hei’s often swung frae scaffolds and faen frae led- ders’ [IWV] (see also the older lether).

leddy see leddy

leddy (le-dee) n., arch. a lady, female landowner or wife of landowner – ‘... her blessings on Leddie Elliot were both loud and long ...’[RM], ‘... But now I was leddy o’ houses an’ land’ [RM], ‘Hooray for Verter’s famous Well, An’ Tamson’s bonnie leddy’[VW], ‘And we’ll hing thegether like burrs, As long as oor heads we hain, For his Leddy has tabled his spurs, And Harden maun ride again’[TK], ‘Then a’ the leddies curled their brows, The cup smashed wi’ a tune ... ’[WFC] ‘... Among them aa there was nae to marrow Auld Harden’s leddy, the ‘Floore o’ Yarrow’’[WL] (also spelled ‘leddie’ and ‘ledy’, and sometimes capitalised).

led ferm (led-ferm) n., arch. a small farm that is let along with a bigger one on which the tenant resides, the smaller farm having just one or more shepherds living on it – ‘It had been the custom for many years that Craikhope was let as a led farm along with Billhom ...’[RB].

lee (lee) n., poet. a lie – ‘... But raither wud wait till oor back’s oot o’ sicht, To drap what they ken is a lee’[WFC], v. to lie – ‘Let the leein’ lipps be putten til seelence, whilk speik sadlie ... ’[HSR], ‘Thou loeist ill mair nor guid, an’ leein’ rthir nor til speik richteousness’[HSR] (cf. the locally more common lei).

Lee (lee) n. Agnes (16th C.) widow of Robert. In 1541 she was recorded as tenant of half of the farm of Old Jedburgh. Her first name is written ‘Agnete’. George (b.1803/4) probably born in Hownam Parish, son of John ‘Lees’ and Isobel Paterson. He worked for several years as a jeweller in Hawick. He married Margaret Paris in Stow in 1826; she was daughter of the Stow schoolmaster. Their children included: Mary (b.1827); John (b.1829), who must have died young; James Paris (b.1831), firearms inventor; John (b.1833) Canadian foundry owner; Isabella (b.1835); Margaret Paris; Ann; George; and Jessie. The first 5 children were born in Hawick. He emigrated to Canada with his family in 1836, originally settling in Galt, Ontario. He was recorded there as a watchmaker in 1852. Gilbert (16th C.) tenant of half of the farm of Old Jedburgh according to the rental roll of Jedforest in 1541. He was probably related to the Lees who held the other half of the lands. James (19th C.) recorded as teacher at a school in O’Connell Street on Pigot’s 1837 directory. James Paris (1831–1904) born in Hawick, son of George, a watchmaker and jeweller. His mother was Margaret Paris. The family emigrated to Galt, Canada when he was 5. There he became a watchmaker like his father, before moving to the U.S.A. and setting up the Lee Firearms Company during the U.S. Civil War, which led to the Remington-Lee rifle design of the 1880s. He later had a hand in developing the typewriter, and back in Britain developed the Lee-Metford rifle. Modifications to this design at the Enfield Royal Ordnance Factory led to the famous Lee-Enfield rifle in 1895, which was extensively used worldwide over the next 50 years. Variants of this rifle were used in every conflict from the Boer War to the Korean War, and the Lee-Enfield Mark III was the decisive British battle rifle of WWI. He married Caroline Chrysler (of the later automobile family) and had sons William and George. He died while on holiday in Newhaven, Connecticut. A commemorative plaque was placed on the stair from the Kirkwynd to St. Mary’s in 1981, the 150th anniversary of his birth. There is a large plaque in Wallaceburg, Chatham-Kent, western Ontario, where he is said to have completed the design of the box magazine while visiting his brother John. John (1833–1907) born in Hawick, son of George and Margaret Paris. He was a younger brother of James. The family emigrated to Galt, Ontario when he was only about 2 years old. He later settled at Wallaceburg, near Chatham-Kent, in south-western Ontario. He owned a foundry there, and worked with his brother to invent the prototype bolt-action rifle, which led to the Lee-Metford and Lee-Enfield series. Oral tradition says that the first shots of the prototype were fired into an oak tree outside the foundry in Wallaceburg. The original gun is housed in a museum there. He married Louisa Cordelia Clifford and had children James Paris and Frank M. Robert (15th C.) recorded as ‘Roberti de Lee’ in 1436 when he witnessed a sasine for the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee. William is also listed, before him and so probably related. Robert (16th C.) tenant in Old Jedburgh farm. In 1541 his widow Agnes was recorded as tenant of half the farm, with Gilbert (surely a relative) in the other half. William (15th C.) witness in 1436 to a sasine for the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee. The other men listed were all from relatively nearby, including Robert, who was probably related. William (16th C.) tenant of the farm of ‘Auld Jedburgh’ according to the rental roll of Jedforest in 1541. He was surely related to the other Lees at Old Jedburgh.

lee-ur (lee-ur) n., poet a liar – ‘I said in my haste, A’ men ar leeirs’[HSR] (cf. leier).
leeberral (lee-bu-ral) adj., liberal – ‘The rantin’ sangs, the leeberral drams, An’ lashins o’ bitter yill’ [RM], relating to the Liberal Party – ‘I’ve aye voted Leebereal, the Tories I ban; I’ll vote Leebereal again, Mr. Elliot’s my man’ [JCG].

the Leeberal Club (thu-lee-bu-ral-klub) n. Hawick Liberal Club, being a political and social club connected with the Liberal Party. The premises stood at the corner of the High Street and Brougham Place, and were built in 1894 on the site of Milligan’s the cabinet-makers. The architect was J.P. Alison (with help by apprentice Alexander Inglis). The club went through periods of financial difficulty, with parts of the building being let for other purposes. It closed in the late 1990s and re-opened as Hawick Sports and Social Club. However, the building has been involved in an ownership dispute, and its future remains uncertain. The building is marked with a plaque commemorating the laying of the foundation stone.

leed (leed) adj., n. lead – ‘hei was hut ower the leid wi a pipe made o leed’, ‘But, oh! the herd that’s in the clay, And cauld as leid ...’ [TCh], a needle on a knitting frame, v. to coat with lead paint – ‘Ee gaun ower the fireplace wi’ a duster But oor mothers hed a black leeded grate’ [AY] (note the pronunciation; also spelled ‘lead’ and ‘leid’).

leefi-lane (lee-fi-lan) adj., arch. quite alone, in a solitary state – ‘Left leifu’-lane in a big hoose’ [GW].

leefow (lee-fow) adj., arch. wilful, obstinate (noted by J. Jamieson).

leeful (lee-full) adj., arch. lawful – ‘...in all honest, gude and lefull queralis aganis all men ...’ [SB1527], ‘And thairfor I, the said Walter Scot of Branxhelme ... byndis and oblisiss me to fortifie, manteine, and defend the said Robert Scot of Alanehauch ... in all and sindrie their gude, iust, and leiffull actionis ...’ [SB1585] (there are spelling variants).

lee-lang (lee-lang) adj., arch. live-long, the whole – ‘There is a preacher in our chapel, Fala, &c. And a’ the lee lang day teaches he ...’ [CPM], ‘...And the lee long night she had turned and sicht, But her ailment wadna name’ [JTe], ‘...the lee-lang nicht mak’ I my bed til soon’ [HSR], ‘At nicht A’m waukrife, an’ aft the lee-lang simmer’s day ...’ [WFC], ‘...He worships her the lee lang day. She showers her favours on his croon’ [WP], ‘The dirdums o’ the wheezlebugs Chunter the lee-lang day ...’ [DH], ‘Croochin wi scaly claws lockit ticht to the spaik, The lee-lang wunter nicht, Till sweir daylight’ [DH].

leemit (lee-mi) n. limit – ‘An if ee gi’e um a time leemit o’ five meenites hei’ll probably no speak for much mair as an hoor an’ a half’ [IWL].

le-en hoor (lee-in-oor) n., arch. literally ‘eleven hour’, a mean taken at 11 a.m., usually by workers or children – ‘A guid ‘le-en hour’ [JoHo] (see also eleven hoors).

Lees (leez) n. former name for the farm now called West Lees, near Appletreehall. The old names for the lands there were Easter and Wester Moormaw. There were Scotts of Lees in the 17th and 18th centuries, connected with the Scotts of Catslack. William ‘in Lees’ was recorded in 1698. Robert Scott was there in 1705. John Elliot was tenant there in 1711, Adam Scott in 1721–35, David Renwick in 1725 and Robert Graham in 1729. George Graham was there in 1747, John Irvine in 1759 and John Scott in 1764. Alexander Somervelle was tenant there in 1812. The lands were valued at £52 in 1811, when owned by William Scott of Burnhead. John Wilson was farmer there in 1841 and Thomas Turnbull in 1861 (also written ‘Lies’; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Lees (leez) n. Alexander (b.1821/2) from Earlston, he was a blacksmith on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was at about 79 High Street. His wife was Margaret and their children included Margaret and Isabella. David (1812/3–78) farmer at Fenwick. In 1851 he was recorded as farmer of 140 acres, employing 3 people. He married Isabella Tait, who died in 1871, aged 59. Their children included Janet, Isabella and James (who married Jane Little). He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. David Crawford (19th C.) blacksmith in Hawick. He donated a set of communion plate to the Relief (Allars) Kirk before emigrating to America about 1850. These sacrament vessels went to the elders on the closure of Allars. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Clarilaw in 1721. He married Margaret Graham and their children included: James (b.1719); and Francis (b.1721). The witnesses in 1721 were John Dryden and James Blyth. Bessie (b.1723), James (b.1726) and Helen (b.1729), baptised in Minto, could also

previous year’s Right-Hand Man. During the festivities he wears the same green jacket etc. as the Cornet. He acts as back marshal during the Ride-outs. He gives recommendations for the next Cornet and generally helps the Cornet to perform his duties. The Handing-Back of the Flag ceremony is always the most poignant for the Left-Hand Man, and as the Cornet dismounts, he is allowed to hold the Flag for one last time. After the Big Four leave the balcony, the Left-Hand Man is thanked by the Provost for the role he has played in the last 3 Common Ridings, and his duties are over. Occasionally someone has served more than once as Left-Hand Man, for example William Brydon after WWII, John Kyle in 1888, and John Scott in the first known photograph of the Big Threi’ in 1857. A. Turnbull stood in as Left-Hand Man in 1897 when the real Left attended a funeral, Thomas Darling substituted in 1903 when James Sutherland left for South Africa, and James Glendinning in 1911 due to a family breavement – ‘Whae’s taen the Left Hand’s coat an’ worn it? A’m share ei’s niver been a Cornet …’ [MB].

Legerwood (le-jun-wud) n. Adam (18th/19th C.) smith at the Forkins, also known as the ‘Woollee smiddy’. He was listed among the original congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk in 1849. He married Mary Scott in 1814. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed among the ‘Cottars’ on the Hearth Tax roll there. His name was written ‘Lagertuood’. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish when his daughter Margaret was baptised in 1719. He is probably the James who got married in Ashkirk in 1715 (with no wife’s name given). John (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. His name was written ‘Ligeruood’. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Kedie and their children included: Isobel (b.1702); Margaret (b.1707); and John (b.1709). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1720 he married Bessie Riddell, who was also from Robertson, the marriage taking place in Hawick. His name is recorded as ‘Lidgertwood’ (former spelling variants include ‘Liddgertwood’, ‘Ligertwood’, ‘Litchardwood’ and even ‘Lizzarhide’).

Leggat (le-ga) n. Andrew (18th/19th C.) coachman and servant to Rev. Dr. Charters of Wilton for 42 years. He was recorded as ‘chaise driver’ for the minister in the tax records of 1797. He was a seeder, being a member of the ‘Burgher’ congregation and hence never entered the church to hear his employer preach. When his master preached at a neighbouring church, he would sleep in the carriage until the service was over. He once drove all the way to Ashkirk by mistake without the minister inside the carriage. He was said to be rather slow in his movements, and a story is told of how, when sent on an errand into Hawick, he would fetch a horse from the far end of the Glebe, so that a maidservant had already gone to Hawick and returned before he was ready to go. It is also said that frequent complaints were made by the maidservants about his old-world and disobliging ways, but the minister would always just say ‘As long as I have a house, Andrew shall have a chair’.

Andrew (18th/19th C.) gardener and house servant at Woll in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for William Scott of Woll. By 1785 he was ‘Footman & House Servant’ for Charles Scott of Woll and continued there until at least 1788. By 1791 there was a different servant at Woll, and he was listed as ‘postillion’ at Burnhead. He was still coachman at Burnhead in 1793. It seems possible he was the same man as the coach-driver for Rev. Charters of Wilton. He is probably the Andrew who married Janet Scott in Ashkirk in 1775, and whose children included: John (b.1777); Andrew (b.1779); Margaret (b.1780), possibly the same as Peggy; Gideon (b.1785); and William (b.1790), born in Wilton, who became a merchant in New York. Andrew (18th/19th C.) whipmaker in Hawick. His son William died in Hawick in 1808 and his daughter Margaret in 1810; she could be the daughter of Andrew and Janet Scott born in Ashkirk in 1780. His son William died in 1808. Gideon (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. His children included: Andrew (b.1750); Walter (b.1752); John (b.1754); Bettie (b.1856); Gideon (b.1758); James (b.1763); and Robert (b.1767). He may be the Gideon in Unthank who (perhaps secondly) married Margaret Oliver from Abbotrule in 1762. He may be the Gideon, son of Andrew, born in Kirkton in 1722. John (18th C.) listed as house and stable servant at Woll in 1797, when he was working for Charles Scott. He was probably son of Andrew, who had earlier been the servant of the Scotts of Woll. John (18th/19th C.) proprietor of a public house in Denholm, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He subscribed to Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He may be the John whose son Walter was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1791. Janet, described as ‘independent’ in Denholm in the 1841 census, may have been his widow; by 1851 she is a 76 year old pauper, recorded as born in Denholm. Margaret ‘Peggy’ (b.1780) probably daughter of Andrew and Janet Scott. She married Thomas Purdie in Wilton in 1802.

Rev. Robert (b.1861) son of James and Jane Finlay, he was born at Coatbridge (or Old Monkland). He was educated in Glasgow and learned shorthand at an early age. He worked in an accounting office, then for a newspaper, but gave up journalism to train for the Church. He was licensed in 1889 and in 1891 was ordained as minister of Wolfelee Free Kirk. He remained there until 1898 when he left for Bankhill Church, Berwick, which he resigned in 1919. He set up a Literary Society in Rulewater and contributed to several newspapers and magazines. He did not marry.

William ‘Willie’ or ‘Wullie’ (1718–1768) 2nd son of Andrew, blacksmith at Cauldmill, he grew up with his older brother Archibald and sister Margaret, who worked on Cavers estate. He was a simple-minded worker employed on Cavers estate to run errands, and is traditionally said to have been killed by the cook when he returned with the wrong vegetables. He was immortalised in stone through a crude statue, where he is posing with his dog, bonnet and basket. He lived with his sister Margaret at Cauldmill; she was a servant, possibly working in the washing house there. Lady Cavers appears to have been kind to him, since there are several estate records of purchases of clothing and shoes on his behalf. The statue was probably an apprentice piece by a mason at Denholm Quarry. One story is that Wullie did not like it and kicked off the dog’s ear in anger. The statue originally stood in the walled garden at Cavers, later being moved to the sawmill and then to near the mansion house itself. There it was vandalised and the pieces fell into different hands and the statue was believed to be lost forever. However, the pieces were collected by W.B. Little and Jack Fraser and the statue reconstructed by Fraser and placed in the garden of old Wilton Manse. After Fraser’s death (and much negotiation) it was returned to Cavers around 2002, and is now situated outside the modern Cavers Kirk. William (b.1790) born in Wilton, son of Andrew and Janet Scott. In Hawick he was a friend of William Scott, later his business partner. He emigrated to New York in 1818, where he started a dry goods firm of Scott & Leggat, with a shop on Hudson Street. He married Mary Robertson and then Jane Ann Atwill (who was a niece of William Scott’s wife). His children were: Jennett (b.1828); Andrew (b.1830); Richard (b.1833); Gertrude Roos (b.1834); William Scott (b.1839); Mary Jane (b.1840); Anna (b.1843); and Alexander (b.1845). It is said that he ‘cherished an ardent love for his native country and retained to the last in all its purity the Scottish accent’.

the Legion (tho-lee-jin) n. Hawick Royal British Legion Club, formed in 1938. The Club met originally in the Y.M.C.A. rooms on O’Connell Street, then on Commercial Road and after WWII moved to 3 O’Connell Street, which had been the ‘Central Rooms’ or Johnstone’s tea rooms. The Club existed to help ex-servicemen in difficulty and as a social centre for ex-servicemen, and was a branch of the national association founded by Earl Haig in 1921 (with the ‘Royal’ title being granted in 1971). Capt. B. Montgomery was the first Chairman and Provost Landles was the first enrolled member. The Club published the ‘Hawick Pictorials’ 1939–59. It also helped found a football team in 1953. The Club closed in 1997, with the clubrooms later used as a fitness centre. There was also a branch in Newcastleton, at 3 North Hermitage Street.

the Legion (tho-lee-jin) n. Hawick British Legion Football Club, an amateur football team, originally sponsored by the Legion club, being founded with the aid of a donation in 1953. The club has had many premises and is now located in Princes Street.

Leigh (lee) n. Henry (c.1555–c.1606) of Rockcliffe Castle, Cumbria, son of Thomas. He was appointed Deputy Warden of the English West Marches in at least 1597. In that year there was an indenture signed at Copshawholm between him and Sir Walter Scott of Bucleuch for the delivery of 5 Scotsmen. He appears to have suffered from lack of family wealth and was imprisoned, probably for meeting personally with James VI, among other things. He may be the same man who was Captain of Carlisle Castle in 1604 and a Border Commissioner in 1606.

lein (lin) pp., arch. lain (noted by E.C. Smith).

Leipzig (lip-zig) n. battle of 1813, where the coalition armies defeated the French under Napoleon, the largest battle in Europe until WWI, and the first major defeat for Napoleon. Although no British troops were involved, the victory was a cause of huge celebrations throughout the country. It was celebrated in Hawick with illuminations, probably meaning extra lamps and candles in the mains treets, burning tar barrels and a torchlight procession.

leish (leesh) adj., arch. supple, athletic, active, nimble, sometimes suggesting tallness – ‘. . . my faither was buchtin’ the Brockalow yowes to twae young, lish, clever hizzies ae night after sun-set’ [LHTB], ‘A pairteet thre the leish, swanklike fallih’ (at ‘Ad been followin eis lead) at the whusht road-end at Jeddit’ [ECS], ‘My fisbin’-wand, it’s strang and leish . . . ’ [DH], ‘The gress grew lang and leish ahint the schule’ [DH] (occasionally spelled ‘leash’ or ‘leesh’).

Leishman (leesh-min) n. James (18th/19th C.) carrier operating between Hawick and Edinburgh and the north, as well as to Newcastle, according to Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He may have amrried Catherine and had children includ ing Robert. Robert (b.1812/3) Hawick hosiery traveller from the West End. In 1837 he was running a cart from Bucleuch Street to Edinburgh and Galashiels twice a week, and once a week to Newcastle. In 1841 he was listed as a carrier on the Back Row. He often accompanied William Laidlaw on sales trips to the Newcastle area. It was said to have been ‘an open secret that Robert’s conscience did not trouble him with knotty questions of excise’ [JHH]. His wife was Margaret, and their children included James, Catherine, Agnes, Margaret, Jane and Thomas. His mother was probably Catherine (living with him in 1841). By 1871 he was living in Berwick and his name was spelled ‘Lishman’.

Robert ‘Bert’ (d.1961), well known local auctioneer, with a saleroom in the old ‘Green Kirk’ building at Myreslawgreen. He was writer of the ‘Betty Whutson’ column for many years. He was also a member of Hawick Town Council and Bailie from 1946 to 1961, when he died on a visit to Tasmania.

the Leisure Centre (thu-leeshur-sen’-ur) n. Teviotdale Leisure Centre, Mansfield Road, opened in 1982 on the site of the former railway station. It consists of a swimming pool and squat and an indoor bowling hall opened in 1985. It was designed by Faulkener-Brown, Hendy & Stonor of Newcastle, with opinions differing as to its aesthetic qualities. The bowling extension was not designed to match the original part, and here opinions do not differ. The palm tree fell into the pool in 2008.

Leitch (leech) n. Andrew (b.1838) son of Andrew from Largo, he studied at St. Andrews University 1855–59. He became a teacher, working in Castletown, Caithness, Dollar Academy, Dalry, and also in Hawick. George (b.1795/6) from Galashiels, he was farmer at Barnes in 1851. He then farming 730 acres and employing 6 people. His wife was Isabel (from Smallholm) and their children included James M., Alexander, Isabel and Richard W. Simon (15th/16th C.) tenant of Minto Craigend about 1502, along with Thomas Young and his son Thomas, and William Johnstone. Their farms had been raided by a group led by David Scott, called ‘Lady’, in Stirkshaws, for which Scott received remission. His name is recorded as ‘Symon Leich’.

Leith (leeth) n. port situated where the Water of Leith joins the Firth of Forth, now essentially part of Edinburgh. It was an important port for local trade, particularly in the 18th and 19th centuries. Sometimes proclamations were read ‘at the peer of Leith’ in order to be widely broadcast, e.g. a record in the 1723 Session books relating to an attempt to ascertain whether a Hawick woman’s husband was alive or not.

Leithead (leeth-head, lut-head) n. Andrew (17th/18th C.) weaver in Crumhaugh. In 1722 he married Rachel Scott in Hawick Parish. They had a daughter Isobel in 1726, and another Isobel in 1732. The 1725 baptism was witnessed by William Elliot and John Scott. He could be the man of that name, ‘old Andrew Cross Wind’, who died in Hawick in 1778. David (17th C.) resident of ‘Cracknoon’ in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. Henry (b.1817/8) from Polwarth in Berwickshire, he was a waiter at the Tower Hotel. He is recorded there in 1851 and 1861. His caricature appears in the book ‘Noctes Hawickianae’. He was said to have ‘a curious habit of putting his tongue out at the side of his mouth, and is here represented doing so.’ He married Helen (or ‘Ellen’) Hymers in Cavers Parish in 1856. Their children included James (b.1857), Margaret (b.1859) and Elizabeth Agnes (b.1860). Isabel ‘Tibbie o the Green’ (c.1795–1870) well-known West-ender of the mid-19th century. Daughter of market gardener Robert, the family had a garden at Myreslawgreen, the property of Mr. Turnbull of Brieryards. She lived in a house near there, possibly corresponding to 4 Myreslawgreen, being there with her brother William until his death in the 1850s. She was known as an independent but warm-hearted person who kept old-fashioned dress. She is probably the woman of this name who was among West-enders to recover from cholera in 1832. In 1851 she was described as a ‘Gardener’ and in 1861 she was an ‘Outdoor Worker’. She also had a niece Isabel Mein and a grand nephew Robert M. Laurie. Her bier is said to have been the last that used the Hawick ‘mort-cloth’. The family name locally goes back at least to William of Cavers Parish, whose daughter Margaret was married in Edinburgh in 1708. James (17th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He is listed separately from the wright there. James (17th C.) wright of Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Nockhol and their children included: James (b.1704). The witnesses in 1704 were ‘vintner’ Francis Elliot and weaver Andrew Jardine. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Ormiston who married Janet Laidlaw in Cavers Parish in 1708. James (17th/18th C.) resident in Milsington in 1717 and 1725. He may be the James who married Bessie Riddell in Roberton in 1725. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included Jean (b.1717) and an unnamed child (b.1725). He is probably also the James recorded at Todshawhill in 1722 when his daughter Margaret was baptised. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was living at Boonraw in 1723. He married Janet Hill in Bowden in 1716. Their children included: Janet (b.1723) and James (b.1725), baptised in Wilton; and Agnes (b.1728) and Isobel (b.1732), baptised in Morebattle. The witnesses in 1723 were John Scott and James Dryden. James ‘Jimmy’ (d.2003) Acting Father in 1960. In 1961 he carried the Flag again, since that year’s Acting Father, Tom Crosbie, had broken his leg. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. He was living at Ormiston in 1702 and 1716. His children probably included: Andrew (b.1696); William (b.1702); John (b.1713); and Robert (b.1716). Perhaps the same John was at Whitfield in 1698 when his son William was baptised in Wilton; the witnesses were John and Robert Scott. John (18th C.) recorded as owner of land in Lilliesleaf in 1788, valued at £6 13s 4d. He was still recorded as owner in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He was probably related to William, who also owned lands in Lilliesleaf. John (18th/19th C.) carrier in the Denholm area. He was involved in the trip to the summit of Ruberslaw where the Lairds of Cavers and Wells met to resolve a boundary dispute over dinner. He allowed the cart to jolt, resulting in George Hunter (of the Fleece Inn) to come closest in his life to cursing! He may be the John of the Cross Wynd whose unnamed child died in Hawick in 1811. John (1781–1843) born at Shankend, son of William and Janet Tait. He lived at Sandyhall (Ashkirk), Woll (Ashkirk), Birkwood (Ashkirk) and Langshaw (Melrose). In 1803 he married Jane Harvey. Their children included: William (1805–74); Robert (b.1807), who married Janet Jessie Knox and emigrated to Waterloo County, Ontario; Jane (b.1811), who married William Dodds; James (b.1816), who died in Wyoming; Thomas (b.1817); John (b.c.1820); and Janet or Jessie (b.c.1824), who married James Cousins. John (b.c.1810) carter in Hawick. In 1841 he was listed as a farmer, probably on the Cross Wynd, but by 1861 he was at Mather’s Close. His wife was Mary and their children included John, William, Janet, Henry, Thomas, Agnes, Mary and Margaret. He may have been son of the earlier John of the Cross Wynd. Richard (b.c.1775) mason who lived on the Kirkwynd. He married Elizabeth Aitkin and their children included Robert, David and Catherine. Robert (17th C.) resident in Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isabel Hogg and their son Walter was baptised in 1777. The witness were John and Walter, who ser surely his close relatives. Robert (18th/19th C.) one of the founders of the Independent Kirk in Hawick in about 1798. Robert (18th/19th C.) described as ‘R. Leithead o’ the Green’. He may be the market gardener who was father to ‘Tibbie o the Green’. In 1809 he and weaver Peter Fletcher walked to Selkirk to secure the services of a drummer and a fifer for the ‘rebel’ party at the Common Riding. He could be the stocking-maker Robert who contracted cholera in 1832, but recovered; he lived in an upper flat of the house containing Henry Haliburton on the Back Row. He married Janet Anderson in 1782. Their children included: William (b.1783), who was a frame-worker; Robert (b.1785); Robert (b.1786); Jane (b.1787); Isobel (b.1790), ‘Tibbie o the Green’; Agnes (b.1792); and Mary (b.c.1800). His mother ‘at the green’ died in 1782. He is probably the stockingmaker Robert whose unnamed child died in 1811. Robert (19th C.) stocking-maker who lived on the Loan. In 1863 he presented the Archaeological Society with the flag from the ‘Wasla Water’ party of 1809. He was surely related to the earlier ‘R. Leithead o’ the Green’ who had been involved on the ‘rebel’ side in 1809. He could be the Robert born to Richard and Elizabeth Aitkin in 1805. Walter (17th C.) wright in Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to William, who was also listed in Lilliesleaf. He may be the Walter, portioner of Lilliesleaf, who married Marion, daughter of John Langlands, minister of Wilton. Walter (17th/18th C.) recorded receiving money from Ashkirk Parish in 1727. Walter (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Elizabeth (or Euphan) Henry and their children included: Andrew (b.1766); and George (b.1768). Witnesses to the 1766 baptism were Andrew and John, who were surely closely related to him. Probably the same Walter witnessed (along with John) a baptism for Robert in 1777. William (17th C.) resident in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. William (17th C.) resident in Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he paid tax on 2 hearths. He was probably related to Walter, who was a wright in Lilliesleaf at the same time. William (17th/18th C.) gardener at Fenwick. He married Bessie Stevenson in 1714, possibly at the house of William Whillans at the Flex. This was a ‘super-numerary marriage’, i.e. the celebration had more guests than the modest amount prescribed by the law of the time. Both he and Whillans probably lost the bond that they had lodged with the Session. William (b.1721/2) farm labourer in Hawick Parish, living at Meikle Whitlaw and Flex from infancy. He worked mainly as a ploughman. In 1767 he gave evidence regarding the earlier use of Hawick Common; he was described as married at that time. He may be the William who married Bessy Gledstains, and whose children, born in Hawick Parish, included John (b.1737), Gledstains (b.1741) and Janet (b.1743). Probably the same William witnessed a baptism for James Scott in 1768. William (18th C.) recorded in the 1788 as owner of lands in Lilliesleaf Parish that had formerly been owned by the feuars of Lilliesleaf. These lands were valued at £171 10s. He was also recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls as former holder of lands in Lilliesleaf that had been acquired by Edgar Hunter and were at that time owned by William Riddell of Camieston. He was lemane (le-män) n., poet. a sweetheart, concubine – ‘ther ar thriscoore queens, and fourscoore lemanes, an’ mays wuthotten nummer’ [HSR] (there are spelling variants).

Lempitlaw (lem-pi’-law) n. village in northeastern Roxburghshire, about 3 miles east of Kelso. It used also to be the name of a small parish, which was annexed to Sprouston. The church there was connected with Soutra. The site of the 13th century parish church can still be made out in the churchyard, which includes a well-preserved hog-back gravestone. The lands there were owned by Robert Scott of Rankilburn and his son Walter in the early 15th century. They were effectively annexed to the Barony of Branxholme, remaining that way through part of the 16th and 17th centuries. In 1517 they were described as being ‘waste’, but valued at 20 pounds in times of peace. The lands were included in the main Barony of Branxholme according to the services of heirs in 1634, 1653 and 1661, and the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. In 1692 the ‘tacks’ of the lands were set to Sir Patrick Scott, along with those of the Barony of Eckford and the lands in Hawick owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Buccleuch properties and still listed as a Buccleuch property in the Land Tax Rolls of the 19th century (the origin of the name is probably Old English ‘lempedu hlaw’, meaning ‘limpet-shaped hill’; it first occurs as ‘Lempedelawe’ in 1190 and is ‘Lempatelaw’ in 1426, ‘Lempatlaw’ in 1463, ‘Lempletlaw’ in 1484, ‘Lempatlaw’ in 1517, and ‘Lempetlaw’ in 1528 and 1553/4).

len (len) n. a loan – ‘gie’s a len o a fiver’, ‘Wull ee gie’z a len o eer graip’ [ECS], ‘Gie’s a len’ o’ eer hurlbarra’ [GW], ‘Howanever, in stead o’ comin for the len o’ mine for the denner tables . . . ’ [BW1978], v. to loan – ‘Ane guid man shaws faavor an’ len’s . . . ’ [HSR], ‘Can ye len’s half a croon?’ [RM], ‘He is evir misrecorde, an’ len’s: an’ his affspring ar blisset’ [HSR] (shortened form of lend; also written ‘len’; see also take a len o).

the lenth (thu-lenth) adv. the distance, as far as required – ‘But they told Bailie Purdom who went the length, that . . . ’ [PR1722].

the lenth o (thu-lenth-o) adv. as far as, the full extent of – ‘the bairn got the lenth o the street afore they fund ’er’, ‘Yince an A’d wun there, A tocht, A mitt mebblies cood geet a hurl the lenth o Hawick’ [ECS], ‘A wun the lenth o’ the brig’ [GW].

leper squunt (le-pur-skwun’) n., arch. a leper’s squint, a small, low window in a church through which lepers could hear and see the communion service without coming into contact with the congregation. There may be an example in Cavers Auld Kirk (also written ‘leper’s’ or ‘lepers’).

the Leper Well (thu-le-pur-wel) n. popular name for a spring near Spittal-on-Rule, still current in the mid-20th century. The spring was surrounded by dressed stones, and its name gives some credence to the idea that there was once a leper’s hospital there. It was also known as ‘the Kirkyaird Well’, and used to be thought to possess healing powers, particularly for skin diseases.

leprosy (lep-ru-see) n. chronic, mildly contagious disease caused by Mycobacterium leprae, characterised by inflamed nodules beneath the skin, loss of sensation and wasting of body parts. It now occurs only in tropical and sub-tropical regions, but was common in Medieval Europe, where it was seen as both holy and sinful. It was certainly rife throughout the British Isles by the 11th century. Robert the Bruce is suggested to have died of the disease in 1329, and John Turnbull of Minto may have died from it about 1425 (causing a dispute over his lands). The hospital at Spittal-on-Rule may have been founded to help lepers, perhaps related to the Laird of Bedrule. A spring near there was known as a ‘leper well’. Cavers Auld Kirk may have a ‘leper squint’.

leprosous (le-riis) adj., arch. affected with pig ‘measles’ – ‘...[Fined] for publicly selling ... ane carcass of swyne which was leprous and consequently dangerous to be made use of’ [BR1692].
