Quarry Rig (kwa-ree-rig) n. ridge just to the south of the upper part of the Ale Water, being the north-east spur of Deep Slack. A linear earthwork here extended for about 400 m, joining the head of the Hoscote Burn with the Ale Water. Although suggested (by Lynn) to be part of the Catrail, it is probably of more recent and less significant origin. It has now been obliterated by forestry.

quarry-skeelie (kwa-ree-skee-lee) n., arch. a slate-pencil composed of a piece of soft stone of the sort found in quarries.

quarter (kwar′-ur) n., arch. fourth part of a unit of volume or weight – ‘For five quarters of cheese £3, 16s.’ [BR1638], ‘Th’ breid in Glesca bein’ reduced a ha’penny th’ quarter laif’ [HEX1921], fourth part of land, perhaps referring locally to a quarter of a ‘particate’ – ‘...one Walter Paterson, laird of Burnflat, and tenent of a quarter land in Hawick ...’ [C&L1767].

quarter days (kwar′-ur-daz) n. four days formerly regarded as ending a quarter of the year. This was when rents and other payments became due. In Scotland they were traditionally Candlemas, Whitsunday, Lammas and Martinmas.

quarter-master (kwar′-ur-mas′-tur) n. a quarter-master, an official in an incorporated trade, responsible for collecting dues and looking after business affairs. In Hawick this was specifically the name given to the 2 representatives of the 5 (later 7) incorporated trades. They were added to the Town Council in 1739 and remained on it until the council was reorganised in 1861. In 1749 the Council decreed that they should be elected annually before Michaelmas. In 1781 it was formalised that they should be elected on the day before (i.e. Thursday) the election of the Bailies in October. They were also known as ‘deacons of trade’ or just ‘deacons’ – ‘The quarter-masters of the weaver trade complain upon two of their craft, that, ... appealed against a fine, for disobedience to the trade, of four groats to the bailies, and eight pence to the quarter-masters ...’ [JW1676], ‘Complaines John Swan and Robert Tinline the two quartermasters of the trade of weivers within the tounse for themselves and in name and behalf of the corporation thereof’ [PR1716].

Quartersides (kwar′-ur-sidz) n. former name for a small piece of land in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1788 it was valued at £50, along with Ryechester, when owned by Edgar Hunter of Linthill. It was recorded in the county valuation of 1788 being owned by Charles Riddell of Muselee and in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1811 having been purchased by Sir John Buchanan Riddell.

quarter wage (kwar′-ur-waj) n., arch. wages or allowance for a quarter year – ‘Walter Bryson addressed the Session desiring that supplie may be given to him for helping to pay the quarter wage for one of his twins latele brought forth ...’ [PR1725].

Quartus (kwawr′-tis, kwawr′-is) n. pen-name of William Landles for his weekly notes of a religious flavour published in the Hawick News in the 1970s and 80s. They were collected into three books, ‘I to the Hills’ (1979), ‘All Good Gifts Around Us’ (1982) and ‘Roving Commission’ (1992).

quash (kwash) adj., poet. still, suppressed – ‘...the yirth feeter an’ was quash’ [HSR].

quat (kwat) v., poet. to quit, relinquish, leave – ‘I mean to drap it a’thegither, To curs’t an’ quat it; ’Tis the advice o’ my auld nither, An’ faith I’ll tak’ it’ [WiD], ‘They strachtwayte quetat their netts an’ folloet him’ [HSR], ‘For a this thaye didna quat sinnin’’ [HSR], pp., arch. quit, quitted, left (also quut and cf. the past participle forms quitten and quutten).

the Quater-Centenary (thu-kwa′-ur-senteen-nee-ree) n. Hawick’s celebration of the 400th anniversary of the Hornshole incident, which took place in June 1914. This included a home-coming celebration for overseas visitors, a special Vertish Hill Sports on the Saturday before the Common Riding, a ceremony to mark the 700th anniversary of the consecration of St. Mary’s, the unveiling of the Horse monument, a grand historical pageant in the Volunteer Park, and other functions. There was also a special trophy, the 'Quater-Centenary Plate' at the Common Riding Races, won by Walter Barrie.

queen (kween) n., arch. school-girl who gave the master the largest sum of money on Candlemas Day, gaining certain privileges. The custom was said to have been abolished in about 1887.

Queen (kween) n. Manasses (b.c.1790) from Ireland, he was a blacksmith in Hawick. He lived on the Round Close in 1841 and had moved to Wilton Kirkstyle by 1851. Living on Langlands Bank in 1861, he was a former framesmith. His wife was Mary, and their children included John, Ann, George, Christian, William, James and Alexander.

the Queen (thu-kween) n. nickname for one of 2 people (the other being ‘the King’) who lived on Sunnyside in Denholm in the late 19th century.

Queen Caroline (kween-kaw-ru-lín) n. Caroline Amelia of Brunswick-Wolfenbuttel, wife of King George IV. The marriage was not happy, and their relationships were a great scandal of the time, the couple being separated for 25 years. In 1820, with the death of George III, she was effectively put on trial, claiming her right to be Queen, against the wishes of the new King. There was great commotion in Hawick, as elsewhere, with the Liberals supporting the Queen and the Tories favouring the King. A message of support was sent by the town to the Queen, which was apparently the first she had received. Supporters illuminated their windows the night the trial result was announced, and some non-supporters had their windows smashed.

Queen Mary see Mary Queen o Scots

Queen Mary’s Burn (kween-mā-reez-burn) n. stream joining the Hermitage Water west of the Castle, presumably named by an association with Mary Queen of Scots visit to Hermitage.

Queen Mary’s Well (kween-mā-reez-wel) n. spring on Hawthronside farm, where it is traditionally claimed that Mary Queen of Scots stopped to drink on her ride between Jedburgh and Hermitage Castle. The location is the second field from the farmhouse on the right-hand side of the road when going from Hawick to Buncaster. The field was also known as ‘Queen Mary’s Field’. The spring was widely used in the mid-19th century, and still existed in the early part of the 20th century, although the effects of drainage had moved its location somewhat (also known as ‘Mary’s Well’).

Queen o’ Fairies’ Hole (kween-ō-fā-reez-ho̱l) n. natural hole in the hills side in Liddesdale, on the south-west of Hunter’s Hill, to the east of Castleton.

The Queen o’ the Auld Scottish Border (thu-kween-ō-thu-awld-skō-‘eesh-bör-dur) n. song with words and music by Ian Seeley, written in 1995 and dedicated to Ian Landles. It was first performed by Elliot Goldie at the 1514 dinner of 1995 and included on the 2006 CD ‘Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry’, sung by Michael Aitken. It is the 3rd of the 5 Hawick songs written by Seeley, and probably the one that has been performed the most.

the Queen o the Dean (thu-kween-ō-thu-deen) n. local name once used (e.g. referred to by James ‘Dictionary’ Murray) for a large pine tree in Denholm Dean.

Queensberry (kweenz-bu-ree) n. title in the peerage of Scotland, associated with descendants of the Douglasses of Drumlanrig, derived from a hill in Closeburn Parish, Dumfriesshire. It is unusual because the Dukedom (created in 1684 and inherited by the Duke of Buccleuch in 1810) is now separate from the Marquises (created in 1682). Subsidiary titles held by the Marquess of Queensberry include Earl of Queensberry (created 1634, Viscount Drumlanrig (1628) and Lord Douglas of Hawick and Tibbers (also 1628).

Queensberry Place (kweenz-bu-ree-plis) n. original street name for the upper houses in Waverley Terrace, named after the Dukedom of Buccleuch and Queensberry, but discarded in 1882.

Queen’s Drive  (kweenz-driv) n. long U-shaped road, part of Burnfoot, built in 1953 and named after the visit by King George VI and Queen Elizabeth in 1947. It was apparently originally to be called ‘Elizabeth Drive’.

the Queen’s Heid  (thu-kweenz-heed) n. the Queen’s Head, a pub at the corner of the High Street and the Cross Wynd, address 32 High Street. The original building exists on a photograph from 1868. The building was rebuilt in 1886, when the proprietor was Robert Young and a projecting bowed corner was added later. It can also be seen in a photograph of 1903. Rugby trophies won by the Wanderers are on display here. The Labour Party used to meet in the upstairs rooms, and this is where Hawick Royal Albert were formed in 1946. The building is listed grade B.

the Queen’s Mire  (thu-kweenz-niə) n. a boggy area between the Priesthaugh and Braedlie Burns, so called because of Mary Queen of Scots 40 mile ride via there from Jedburgh to Hermitage to visit Bothwell. For many generations afterwards people could point out the spot where her horse was said to have become stuck. She is also supposed to have lost her pocket watch on the ride, this being found about 250 years later by a shepherd. Based on Blaen’s map of 1654 (itself based on decades earlier manuscripts) it may have formerly been called ‘Mosspattern’.

queer  (kweer) adj., arch. entertaining, amusing, humorous – ‘…They get some queer story frae Eppy McGee’[JT], very great, considerable, particularly in the phrase ‘queer lot’ – ‘There must bei a queer lot o’ money in th’ world yet { notwithstandin’ short time an’ bad trade’[HEX1921].

queer  (kweer) n., arch. choir, the part of a church east of the nave, particularly referring to part of a pre-Reformation building. The gallery in St. Mary’s had this name, this being the area with bench seating, some of which was rented annually to the highest bidder – ‘Accompt of the money requisite for helping and pointing the kirk and queer of Hawick’[PR1713], ‘…had possessed the place near to John Elliot’s seat in the queer …’[PR1715], ‘For avoiding confusion, the communicants are to go out att the Queer door’[PR1718] (also spelled ‘queir’, ‘quire’, etc.; in the pre-1763 Hawick Kirk this part was separated by the chancel arch).

the Queer Door  (thu-kweer-dör) n. former name for the entrance to the pre-1763 St. Mary’s Kirk, which went through the chancel or ‘queer’ – ‘The town officers to wait upon ye Queer door during ye Service’[PR1718].

Quin (kwin) n. Roger (1850–1925) Border poet and wanderer, described as ‘the homeless poet’. His grandfather was described as a travelling tinker from Ireland, who married an aunt of Esther Faa-Blyths, Queen of the Gypsies. It is said that as a boy he was allowed to hold the skull of Robert Burns when he was reintered along with his eldest son. He wrote ‘Borderland and Other Poems’ (1910, 1933) and ‘Midnight in Yarrow and Other Poems’ (1918). A plaque near Galashiels reads ‘Here Roger Quin author of the Borderland gazed on Scotland’s Eden’, and there is a street in that town named after him.

Quinn (kwin) n. Edward ‘Eddie’ (1898–1982) well-known local accordion player, born in Berwickshire, he worked as a farm labourer at Carterhaugh for much of his life and retired to Eckford. He made two 78 r.p.m. recordings, released in 1929 and 1930. ‘Quinn’s Band’ was popular at dance venues throughout the Borders in the 1930s and 1940s.

Quins (thu-kwinz, -kwunz) n. Hawick Harlequins, a ‘junior’ rugby team, playing in the Borders District League. Their clubrooms are at 6 Baker Street and their matches are played at Wilton Lodge Park. Their strip consists of a black, blue and gold hooped shirt and black socks. The name originally derived from the motley collection of shirts that they wore. One of their highlight was playing in the Scottish Bowl final at Murrayfield in 2002. The unofficial club theme song is ‘The Mighty Quin(s)’. ‘The first 50 years: Hawick Harlequins R.F.C.’ was written by G.W. Fraser.

the Quintinshill Rail Disaster (thu-kwinz-inz-hil-räl-dee-zaw-stur) n. tragedy of May 1915 on the Caledonian line, just north of Gretna Green. A packed troop train ran into a stationary local train, and an express ran into the wreckage. A total of 227 people were killed, making it Britain’s worst ever rail disaster. At least 3 men with a Hawick connection died.

quit-claim (kwɪ'-klæm) n., arch. the act of renouncing a claim, v., arch. to renounce a claim, declare someone discharged from an obligation – ‘...and hereby for me, my aires, successors, or assigneyes exonerat quit claims and simpliciter discharges the saidis two baylyeas ...’ [BR1701] (once a common legal term).

quoad sacra (kwŏ-ad-sak-ru) n. ecclesiastical term for a church which is not the main parish church, but used for the convenience of some of the parishioners. This was the term applied to St. Mary’s after the Old Parish was built.

the Quoitin Club (thu-kwoi'-in-klub) n. the Buccleuch Quoiting Club, a sporting organisation, with the game consisting of metal hoops or horseshoes being thrown at a metal stake. It was popular in the late 19th century, with pitches on Buccleuch Street, adjacent to the Buccleuch Bowling Club green. The club fell apart around WWII through lack of support, and the pitches were converted into the Henderson Garden. There was also another Club in the Mansfield area for a while, and in addition the game was played in Denholm.

the Quoitin Haugh (thu-kwoi'-in-hawf) n. popular name for the grassy banks of the Teviot between the Teviot Bridge and old suspension bridge in Denholm. Quoits were played here during the latter part of the 19th century until WWII. The field was also used for other sporting events, and also for church services in the summer. At the Denhom Ride-out the horses are usually held there.

quoits (kwoits) n., pl. game in which curved iron projectile are thrown at a stake in the ground in order to try to encircle it, also known as ‘horseshoes’. The game was popular in Hawick from the late 19th century until the 1930s, with a pitch on Buccleuch Street. There was also an area in Denholm used for the same purpose and a field next to Roberton Kirk used in the early 20th century.

quot (kwot) n., arch. the portion of a dead person’s estate payable for confirmation of the testament – ‘To be deuidit in thrie pairtis the deidis pairt is, iiijs. Quharof the quot is, xxiiij £ vs.’ [SB1574].

the Race Ball (räs-bal) n. former name for the Ball, used until the 1880s, with the earlier name being the ‘Cornet’s Dance’.

the Race Committee (thu-räs-ko-mi’-ee) n. Committee responsible for organising the Common Riding race meetings, formed probably in the early 19th century, and originally having more influence than the Ceremonial Committee (which was only formally established in 1887). In 1865 they took over from the Cornet the task of collecting race funds, which in 1883 was replaced by an entrance charge for the Muir. The Provost usually served as the President, with the Secretary also being Clerk of the Course. In 1908 it became a sub-committee of the main Common Riding Committee.

Race Course Park

Race Course Park (rās-kōrs-pawrk) n. name for a field to the north of St. Leonard’s Park racecourse, between the enclosures known as ‘Baillie’s Hill’ and ‘Nipknowes Field’.

the Racerigg (thu-rā-sīg) n. former name, used in the 18th century, for part of the Common. The precise location is unknown, but it may have been where races were once held near Pilmuir Rig. It was stated in 1767 that it marked the southern end of the region of the Common where the Town Herd would typically use for the Hawick livestock (also written ‘Racerig’).

the Races (tha-rā-seez) n. a race meeting has long been associated with the Common Riding, now being an intrinsic part of the Friday and Saturday festivities. The first explicit record of the races is in 1723, but they were probably happening much earlier. There were prizes from early times, some provided by the Town, e.g. in 1723 a ‘saddle exposed to be run for in May last’ is described, in 1725 the Council gave £2 ‘for this year’s plate’ and in 1727 ‘the cup for the race’ is recorded. Early races may have been held at the Deidhaugh, but the first known location was at the Vertish, ending in 1819. For the next two years they were on a field behind the Vertish Hill, then moved to Pilmuir Rig in 1822 and remained there until 1853. These were the Friday morning races, which had no accompanying family entertainments. In the early 19th century they started at 11 a.m., with the crowds returning to Hawick for dinner (early in those days), before the afternoon races at the Haugh, which started at 5 p.m. They took place, along with the afternoon races and games, on the Common Haugh itself in 1854. The afternoon’s events at the Haugh started with a 3-lap race by the Cornet and his Right- and Left-Hand Men. Sports and other amusements also used to continue on the Haugh on the Saturday. Both the Upper and Under Haughs were used, with movable fences between them. In 1854 the Haugh was used for the last time (in the afternoon only), and the new race-course at St. Leonard’s used for the first time (in the morning only). From 1855 all the races have been held at St. Leonard’s, with Saturday races started in 1868. In 1856 there was a steeplechase for the first time. There were also foot races held at the Moor until 1863. In the latter part of the 19th century the Saturday was considered to be ‘ladies day’ (after the Ascot tradition), with the women of the town dressing up in their finery. Until 1865 most of the funds for the races and the games were collected by the Cornet and the Right-Hand man. Thereafter official collectors were appointed, with admission to the Moor introduced in 1883, and racecards first issued in 1889. The Races were last held under Jockey Club rules in 1876, and with the disbanding of the British Racing Club in 1895, the Races were then held under local rules. The Races were first filmed in 1900.

rack (rawk) n., arch. a stretch, a shallow wide ford, especially where the person crossing has to take a slanting course – ‘They led him thro’ the Liddel-rack, And also thro’ the Carlisle sands’ [T], ‘Rack. A very shallow ford, of considerable breadth, Teviotdale’ [JoJ], a cart-wheel rut, capacity for expansion, elasticity, v., arch. to wrench, sprain, overstrain – ‘... the skirls an the dirls, the raameen an the raackean an the cammeleen, the daands an the dunts an the skraucheen an the skreeeven’ [ECS], ‘Av’e gaen an rackeet masul wui raxin owre fer owre’ [ECS], to stretch – ‘He’ll shew the curse that Job invokit, When raucking patience, clean outraukit, Brak through her brand’ [JoHa], ‘rackin’ the rowins’ means to stretch the loosely carded wool so as to make the yarn of uneven thickness, to fret, worry unnecessarily – ‘Ee needna rack eersual aboot eet; eel’se it’ll be aa better orbelang’ [ECS] (cf. rax).

Rackesse (ra-kēs) n. Adam (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Adame Rakkes in Thorlieshope’ in 1611 when he was also part of the assize at the Justice Court on Jedburgh. He may have been related to the Armstrongs nicknamed ‘Rakkes’ (and spelling variants) at about the same time. George ‘Geordie of the Hillhouse’ (17th C.) thief from Liddesdale who is recorded in the 17th century. In about 1645 he, along with Lancie Armstrong of Catleigh and others, stole about 80 cows and oxen from England, and on the way back to Liddesdale returned the few animals belonging to a poor English minister, after he agreed to take smell with them. It is unclear if his surname is a mis-transcription of a more familiar name. Robert ‘Hobbie’ (17th C.) recorded in 1633 as ‘Hobby Rackes’. His shepherd Archie Armstrong ‘called Hollas, who duellit in the Mearburnheid’ was captured for having a stolen cow in his possession (it is unclear if this corresponds to a more familiar surname).

rackit (raw-kēt’, -ki’t, pp., adj., arch. wrenched, sprained, twisted – ‘Or ease their bosoms rackit sair, Wi’ disappointment ill to bear’ [RDW], rack-peen

rad (rawd) adj., arch. afraid, apprehensive – ‘I’se raad he’ll tooorfel’ (said at Newcastleton, c.1860) [GW], ‘...E’en let him pop, I’m little rad I founder, Though Excommunication grace the ban’ [JoHa], ‘In littl an’ limb we’re soon’ an’ hale, Sae troth we’re little ra’d o’ smoorin’ ’ [JoHa] (also written ‘raad’).

Rad (rawd) n., arch. popular term for a Radical in the early-to-mid 19th century – ‘One of the ‘Rads’ told the writer that once a tail came off in his hands ...’ [RM].

Radcliffe (rawd-kiff) n. Sir Cuthbert of Dilston (d.1545) son of Sir Edward. He was Sheriff of Cumberland, like his father. He also served as Deputy Warden of the English Middle Marches 1540-3 and Captain of Berwick 1544–5. He was captured by the Scots at the Battle of Haddo Rig in 1542. He was described as ‘a wise man well learned and well minded to justice but no adventurer to the field’. He married Margaret, daughter of Lord Clifford and was succeeded by his son Sir George. Sir John (c.1480–1527) from Crosthwaite in Cumbria. He was an English commander of part of the force that raided the Borders under Lord Dacre in 1513. His detachment of 500 men burned ‘the town of Dyker’, which was probably Dykeraw in Southdean Parish, explicitly ‘thei layed corne and straw to the dore and burnit it both rofe and flore and so smoked them out’. They then burned Southdean and Lustruther towns, taking prisoners and goods.

Thomas 3rd Earl of Sussex (c.1525–1583) also Viscount Fitzwalter and Lord of Egremont and Burnell. He was Lord Deputy of Ireland and became Lord Chamberlain under Elizabeth. His mother was Elizabeth Howard, sister of the Surrey who fought at Flodden. He was President of the ‘Council in the North’ 1568–72, suppressing a revolt of northern English earls. He then led part of the English force that invaded across the Border in 1570, along with Lord Hunsdon. They were responsible for the razing of many towns and buildings, including Hawick on April 18th and Branxholme the following day, this requiring gunpowder. Apparently (according to Stowe’s Chronicle) the Hawick people unhatched their houses, burned it in the streets and fled, leaving nothing for the English army. There is a tradition (recounted by Robert Wilson) that the townspeople attacked enemy patrols into the night, but there is no evidence to support this. His force also destroyed the Kerr strongholds of Ferniehirst and Crailing, while simultaneously Scrope’s men laid waste to the Scottish West March. As many as 300 villages and about 50 towers were destroyed.

rade (råd) pp., arch. rode – ‘They rade the proper place about: But the laid he was the wiser man, For he had left nae gear without’ [CPM], ‘An’ efter prigging doon its price, A bargain forthwith made; Bestrode its back, an’ homeward bound Wi’ conscious pride he rade’ [FL], ‘...an mosstrooper an reever rade bye ti foray an fecht an reipin raid’ [ECS], ‘We rade a’ nicht i’ the dark, And swam the Eden in flude ...’ [TK], ‘The day they rade the mairches The wather was its best ...’ [WL] (also written ‘raed’ and ‘raid’; the past participle is ‘ridden’ as in English).

Rae (rae) n. Agnes (17th C.) listed as resident at Mabonlaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Her surname is recorded as ‘Ree’. Agnes (d.1795) recorded as a midwife in the Hawick register of deaths. Andrew (16th C.) listed as resident of Standhill to John Turnbull of Knowe in 1659. This name is possibly an error for ‘Ker’. Andrew (18th C.) recorded as ‘Servitor to Harwood’ when his daughter Jean was baptised in Hobkir Parish in 1738. Other children baptised there who might be his included ‘Nama’ (b.1741), Thomas (b.1744) and Helen (b.1746). Gilbert (18th/19th C.) renter at Denholmhill, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Rev. Hector (c.1683–1639) received his degree from Edinburgh University in 1603 and became minister at Nisbet in 1608. He was translated to Hownam in 1609. signed the National Covenant in 1638, probably in Hawick. Hugh (14th C.) cleric connected with Cavers Parish in 1387 (and written ‘Raa’). In 1389 Henry Wardlaw was given the vicarage of Cavers, void after he obtained the church of Stractaven. He was also referred to as subdean of Glasgow. James (15th/16th C.) witness to a document relating to Whitchesters for the Scotts of Branxholme, signed in Edinburgh in 1500. His name was recorded as ‘Jacobo Raa’. James (16th C.) listed among people who were owed money by William Scott, younger of Branxholme, when he died in 1552. He is listed as ‘Jacobo Ra eius seruo’, presumably meaning he was a servant of William. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Minto Parish. His children included: Bessie (b.1716); Maddie (b.1719); James (b.1721); and Helen (b.1725). James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Scott and their children included: Walter (b.1764); Isabel (b.1766); and James (b.1777), baptised in Jedburgh Parish. He could be the James, son of Walter and Margaret Garner, baptised in Hawick in 1743. It is also possible that his children (with no mother’s name given): Robert (b.1768), baptised in Cavers; Elizabeth (b.1769), baptised in Bedrule; John (b.1771), baptised in Bedrule; Jean (b.1772) and Thomas (b.1772), baptised in Cavers; Walter (b.1774), baptised in Bedrule; and Jean (again, b.1779), baptised in Cavers. The witnesses in 1764 were Robert Scott (probably a relative of his wife) and Walter Rae (perhaps his father). James (18th/19th C.) resident at Chesters (Southdean) according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. James (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Redheugh. He was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. James (18th/19th C.) plumber in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He could be the James, son of William and Rachel Scott who was born in Hawick in 1764. His son William (a stockmaker) died in 1838. James (20th C.) plumber in Hawick. He was Cornet in 1923. This year is often referred to as the ‘Plumber’s Year’ because of the torrential rain, which blew away the shelter at St. Leonard’s. Janet ‘Jenny Saut Haa’ (d.1758) elderly wife of the owner of the Salt Hall, who cut her throat in the eastern attic of the Salt Hall in 1758 (or perhaps 68), causing uproar when she was buried in Wilton Old Churchyard. With the minister away, the authorities allowed the burial there, against some popular feeling. On the following morning the coffin fell upon her husband when he opened the Saut Haa door. the coffin was reburied, but appeared again the next day. It was then temporarily buried at the most northerly point of Wilton Common, until the minister returned and insisted on burial back in the churchyard. Her final burial place was in the area reserved for unchristened babies in the churchyard. There is a similar story about Tibbie Tamson in Selkirk. Jean (1731/2–1838) resident of Deloraine, who reached the age of 106. During ‘the forty-five’ she helped at Branxholme to hide cattle and household goods from the Highlanders. She was a great-great-grandmother, and there were 5 generations alive at once. John (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident who was described in 1723 as ‘creeple in this toum’ when money was given for a coffin for his child. John ‘Jock’ (18th/19th C.) resident of the Hawick area. A story is told of Rev. Charters of Wilton finding him up his fruit tree – ‘What are you doing there, John?’ ‘Naething ava’, sir’. ‘Strange man, John, all that trouble for nothing’ [BP]. He is probably the same as one of the contemporary Johns. John (b.c.1780) carter in Hawick. He was at the Kirkwynd in 1841, with his wife Margaret and children William, James, Douglas, John, Walter and Isabella. He probably lived at 6 Kirk Wynd. Walter, a shoemaker who lived next door, was probably his brother. John (18th/19th C.) listed as a poulterer on the Sandbed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Probably the same John is a ‘salt and egg dealer’ at the Kirkgate in 1837. John (b.1803/4) born in Cavers Parish, he was a stocking needle maker in Hawick. He was listed on the High Street in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories and on the Howegate in Slater’s 1852 directory. He lived on the Kirkwymd in 1841, with his wife Catherine, on the Mid Raw in 1851 and was boarding on O’Connell Street in 1861. His wife was daughter of Arthur Balbirnie, writer of ‘The Auld Sang’. He had a daughter who died in 1838. John (b.1805/6) carpenter and cabinet-maker in Hawick. He was on the Crescent in 1841, in the Village in 1851 and on Drumlanrig Place in 1861. He married Elizabeth Miller in Wilton in 1832 and their children included Thomas, John, Mary N., William N. and Walter. John (19th C.) listed in Slatters’ 1852 directory as an earthenware dealer on the High Street. There is a separate listing for a High Street greengrocer of the same name. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (19th C.) one of 5 men tried for rioting and assault at the 1837 election in Hawick. He was found guilty and ‘put to the horn’. John (b.1825/6) wool spinner in Hawick, born in Wilton. In 1861 he was living at 11 Back Row. He married Elizabeth Ann Ekron in 1847 and their children included: John (b.c.1847); Margaret (b.c.1848); Jemima (b.c.1854); Mary (b.1856); Helen (b.1858); James (b.1860); and Janet (b.1865). John (1897/8–1975) born in Hawick, he was Cornet in 1923 and later lived at Towerburn. He married his Cornet’s Lass Isabella ‘Bella’ Neish Elder (who died in 1989, aged 87). John ‘Jock’ (20th C.) pipe major of the Scout Band in the years 1960–62. He once had the honour of being Solo Piper at the Edinburgh Tattoo. Margaret (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Mr. ?? (18th C.) owner of a large tract of land stretching between where Havelock Street and Dovecote Street now are. The land was ultimately divided, part becoming Dovemount, and being the site of the well that supplied much of Wilton for more than a century. Robert (18th/19th C.) grocer on the Loan, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Robert (b.c.1790) gardener at Dovemount. He was listed at Dovemount among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835–41. He was also there on the 1841 census. His wife was Mary and their children included James, John and Isabella. Thomas (18th C.) resident at Milingtonshiel in the 1760s and 1770s when his children John, Margaret and Jean were baptised in Rober- ton Parish. He is probably the Thomas at Borthwickbrae Parkhead in 1774 when his son Thomas was baptised. It seems likely that these were all his children (baptised in Roberton Parish, with no mother’s name given): John (b.1762); Margaret (b.1763); James (b.1765); Betty (b.1767); Jean (b.1771); and Thomas (b.1774). Thomas (18th C.) workman in Hawick. He married Mary Scott in 1775 and their children included: Andrew (b.1778); and John (b.1779). The witnesses in 1778 were Joseph Goven and Mungo Armstrong. Thomas (18th/19th C.) paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785, when his name is recorded as ‘Rhea’. He also paid in 1787 and 1791. He was a carter in Hawick according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He may be the Thomas who married Janet Gled- stains in Hawick in 1799. He is probably the Thomas who witnessed a baptism for William Aitchison in Hawick Parish in 1797. Thomas (18th/19th C.) charged with sheep-stealing from Phaup in 1818. He was caught because of selling the skins in Hawick and jailed in Jedburgh. He was probably hanged. Thomas Ian (1926–89) educated partly at Hawick High School, he studied history at St. Andrews University and eventually became keeper of manuscripts at the National Library of Scotland. He wrote ‘The Administration of the Scottish Frontier 1513–1603’ (1966), ‘Scotland at the time of Shakespeare’ (1965), edited ‘The union of 1707 its impact on Scot- land’ (1974), co-edited ‘The Burgh Court book of Selkirk, 1503–45’ (1960). He also wrote several other articles, including some for the Transactions and was a member of the Archaeological Society. Walter (18th C.) resident in Hawick. He was fined and imprisoned in Dumfries in 1760 for attacking Leonard Fleming, an excise officer. When his sentence was done he was to be set on the pil- lory at Dumfries with a label on his breast reading ‘I stand here for having been guilty of committing a most atrocious battery upon the person of an excise-officer when in the exercise of his duty’. He could be the Walter, married to Margaret Gardner, whose children included James (b.1740), William (b.1741), James (again, b.1743), an unnamed child (b.1745), George (b.1758) and Agnes (b.1762): the 1758 baptism was witnessed by shoemaker George Gardner and William Veitch. Walter (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, recorded at Whitfield in 1772. He married Ann Walker in Ashkirk in 1770 and their children included: Gilbert (b.1770), baptised in Ashkirk; and William (b.1773), baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1772 were Walter Scott and James.

Robson. He witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott at Whitfield in Wilton Parish in 1772. Walter (b.c.1785) shoemaker on the Kirk Wynd. In 1841 he is recorded at about No. 6 and in 1851 is on Slitrig Crescent. His wife was Mary and children included Thomas, Robert, Andrew and Margaret. He was surely related to John, the carter who lived next door. Walter town street sweeper, who came 2nd in the 2004 Citizen of the Year vote and joint 3rd in 2005. William (d.1367) Precentor of the Diocese of Glasgow, he was elected as Bishop of Glasgow in 1338, following the death of John Wishart. He was consecrated in 1339 and remained Bishop until his death. He thus had authority over Teviotdale. William (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 when he had a cow belonging to him stolen from the house of Robert Aitkin in Minto. His name is given as ‘Willelmo raix’; however, it is possible he is the same man recorded as William ‘rany’ in 1493. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed among the ‘Cottars’ on the Hearth Tax roll there. William (19th C.) married Mary Ann Dryden in Wilton Parish in 1826. Their children born in Roxburghshire were: Jean (b.1831); Janet (b.1832); and John (b.1834). In 1835 they emigrated to the Montreal area, following the Dryden family a year earlier. They then moved to North Dumfries Township, near Galt in Ontario. 7 other children were born in Canada. William (b.1812/3) painter on the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 and 1851 he was at about 48 High Street, with his wife Mary. They had a daughter Isabella S. The death of his aunt Agnes Rae is recorded in Hawick in 1838. William (b.1814/5) born in Hawick Parish, he was shepherd at Ruecastle in 1851. His wife was Helen (from Oxnam) and their children included Isabella, Jane, George, Walter and John (formerly spelled ‘Ray’, ‘Rea’, etc.).

Raeburnfit (rā̂-burn-fi) n. site of a small Roman fort in Dumfries & Galloway, where the Rae Burn joins the White Esk, a few miles north of Eskdalenuir. It marks the end of the Roman road from the upper Borthwick valley via Craik Cross. There may have been an extension of this road over Groundistone Height to Harelaw and towards Newstead.

Raegill Bogs (rā-gil-bogz) n., pl. marshy area to the south of Hermitage Castle, just by Toftsholm Sike. There is an example of a ‘burnt mound’ there, as well as the remains of 4 shieling-huts and an area of enclosed rig.

Rae-knowe (rā-now) n. rising ground on which the farmhouse of Nether Bonchester stood, near the present-day Bonchester farmhouse.

Raesknowe (rās-now) n. farm on the Allan Water, behind Newmill, on the opposite (east) side of the Allan Water from Allanhaugh tower. It was a home of the Scotts in the 16th century, and afterwards a tenanted farm owned by the Duke of Buccleuch, and being contained within the Lordship of Whitchesters. In a 1627 valuation it is described as paying ‘presentlie in stok and teynd 26 bolls; estimat in stok to 14, and 3 in parsonage, 4 lbs. in vicarage’. David Scott of Raesknowe, related to the Scotts of Allanhaugh, is listed as one of the ‘pensioners of Buccleuch’ by Scott of Satchells. It is shown in the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch, when it consisted of 231 acres, bounded by Whitchesters, Newbigging, the Allan Water and the Teviot, and with Reasknowe Mill being a separate farm at its south end. The former small tower there was already in ruins by 1663. In the period 1690–96 the farm was jointly leased by Walter Bell, John Armstrong, Walter Riddell and David Graham. In 1698 it was leased by John Armstrong, Walter Riddell and David Graham. In 1694 the householders listed there were Walter Bell, David Graham, John Armstrong and George Wilson (shepherd). John Graham was tenant there in about 1710. In the 18th century the area was a small thriving hamlet, which had a schoolmaster appointed in 1723 to teach the poor children of the neighbourhood. Archibald Douglas was farmer there in 1797. A bronze jug was dug up there around 1835, having 3 feet, a handle and a spout, probably mediaeval (also called ‘Raesknowes’; it is ‘Raisknowis’ in an undated 16th century document, ‘Raiskno’ in 1627, ‘Raeknow’ in 1640, ‘Raeknow’ in 1641, ‘Raeknowes’ in 1690, ‘Raeknow’ in 1692, ‘Reskno’ in 1694, ‘Resknowes’ in 1717, ‘Reskno’s’ in 1718, ‘Roseknow’ in 1797 and ‘Raes Knowe’ in 1841; it is marked ‘Resesknow’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, but incorrectly placed in the middle of Hawick Moor; the name related to roe deer).

Raesknowe Mill (rās-now-mill) n. former corn mill on the Allan Water, north of the farm of Raesknowe, an alternative name for Allanhaugh Mill. It is shown in 1718 as a separate farm to Raesknowe, consisting of 14 acres on the haugh opposite to where the Rampy Sike meets the Allan, with the mill itself at the east side, near where the foot of the North Burn. The mill lade appears on the map, starting near Lochburnfoot and running along the east side of the Allan, to join again after the mill (it is Raesknowes milne in 1718).

Rae son Park (ra-sin-pawrk) n. street off the right of Stiches Road, built in 1928 and named after builders John Rae & Son, Victoria Road.

Raff (rawf) n. Rev. Eric Maitland Kirk (1892–1927) son of William Watson of Melbourne and Victoria Black, and grandson of William of Woodlee, Forres. He was educated in Melbourne, graduating in 1915 and being ordained there the following year. He was then at Efate Island, New Hebrides Mission until 1923 and came to Scotland the following year, becoming assistant at St. Michael’s, Dumfries and then was appointed to Rosyth. He became minister at St. Mary’s in March 1926, but died at Bournemouth only a year later. He married Ruth, daughter of John Baird.

Raffle (raw-fül) n., arch. a lottery, in the 19th century specifically an event organised to raise money for people in ill-health or who were emigrating etc., prizes being won by dice throws.

Ragabuss (raw-ga-bash) n., arch. a ragamuffin, good-for-nothing – ‘He was nothing but a liar and a reprobat, and a Jacobite villain and knave, and … a ragabast [sic]’ [Ash1712], adj. very poor, destitute – ‘Rag-a-buss, A designation given to those who are very poor, Roxb.’ [JoJ] (also written ‘rag-a-buss’, ‘ragabash’, etc.).

Ragabuss (raw-ga-bus) n. nickname of an itinerant around the early years of the 19th century. He engaged Wull Slush in a steeplechase on foot at the Common Riding one year (when held at the Vertish), the race degenerating into a fight.

Ragarth (ra-garth) n. former lands in Liddesdale, located on the Kershope burn and attached to the estates of Mangerton. They are recorded as being worth 7 shillings and 6 pence in a rental list c.1376 in the charters of the Douglasses of Morton. In 1541 ‘Ragarth, Sorbe, Sorbetrees’ was part of the property of the Laird of Meriantoun, valued at 10 merks, and separately ‘half of Regarth’ was also listed, with a value of 5 merks. It is ‘Raegirth’ on Blaeu’s.c.1654 map, on the north side of the Kershope Burn, east of Kershope (it is possible it is related to Raegill Knowes, close to Kershope Bridge).

Ragarthshaw (ra-garth-shaw) n. former farm in Liddesdale, in the ‘Quarterium de Ludne’ according to a c.1376 rental roll, with a value of 6 shillings. It was presumably near the main farm of Ragarth (recorded as ‘Ragarthshaw’).

Raggit (raw-gi’, -gee’) adj. ragged – ‘A raggit cout a race has won, And sae might little Jock’ [JT].

the Raggit Schuil (thu-raw-gi’-skil, -gee’-skil) n. former name for Drumlanrig School applied by those from elsewhere in the town. The name was also used for the Mission School of Allars Kirk, which was on Allars Crescent in the 1870s, with Mr. Robert Grieve sometimes acting as teacher.

Raggle (raw-gul) n. a groove cut in wood or stone to enable another piece to fit into it.

the Ragman Rolls (thu-rawg-min-rölz) n., pl. list of names of those Scots swearing allegiance to Edward I of England. The smaller roll was signed at Norham in 1291, and the larger one at Berwick in 1296, after Edward was victorious at the Battle of Dunbar. There were more than 1,500 names of Scottish landowners, clergymen and Burgesses, making this a valuable historical record. The attachment of seals also gives a unique insight into the heraldry of the time. The communities of Jedburgh and Roxburgh were among burghs that paid homage. The roll includes the following local men, (a sub-set of those described as ‘of Roxburgh County’ unless otherwise stated): Adam, Parson of Soul-done (presumably ‘Soudon’); Emme de Almere (Alemoor in Selkirkshire); Rogier de Almere (Alemoor in Selkirkshire); Alisaundre de Bailliol (or ‘Bailiol’ or ‘Bailiol’ of Cavers); William de Bradel-eye (possibly Braidlie on Hermitage); Thomas de Chartres; William de Chartres; John de Chesolm (from Berwickshire); Richard de Cheselmh; John Comyn de Badenach (senior and junior, Barons of Bedrule); Johan de Conevetie (Parson of Acrum); James de Crak (in Selkirkshire, possibly Craik); Simon de Cresseuelle (possibly Creswell in Hassendean Parish); Robert de Dene (Parson of Wilton); Gwy de Denum (Donholm); Randulf de Derum (possibly an error for ‘Denum’); Johan de Ethereston (possible Adderstone); William de Fansyde (possibly in Southdean Parish); Richard de Flex; Herbert de Gledestan (of Lanarkshire, direct ancestor of the local family); Adam de Gourlay; Robert Grundi de Neuton (who possibly gave his name to Grundistone); Aley Gurnay (possibly ‘Gourlay’); Johan de Harden; Robert de Hawyk (or ‘Hauweyck’); Adam de Hep (probably ‘Heap’, but perhaps ‘Hepburn’); Alisaundre de Hirdemaneston (probably ‘Hermiston’ near Liliesleaf); Adam de Hodolm (of Dumfrisshire, probably holder of Kirk Borthwick); Wautier de Holcote (Hoscote perhaps?); Henry de Hommes (possibly Whames on Borthwick Water); Robert de Hunteleghe (presumably Huntly); Johan de Lillesclif (Liliesleaf); Johan de Lilleslyue (in Peebleshire, possibly the same man); Agneys raiconcile (rā-koun-sīl) v. to reconcile.

raid (råd) n., arch. a foray on horseback, mounted attack – ‘Now Liddesdale has ridden a raid, But I wat they had better staid at hame ...’ [CPM], ‘But yet for a his cracking crouse, He rew’d the raid of the Red-Swire’ [CPM] (note that this word was revived by Sir Walter Scott and became standard English for a sudden attack in general).

the Raid o the Redeswire (thu-räd-ō-thu-reed-swir, reedz-wfr) n. sometimes referred to as the last battle between Scotland and England, taking place near the Carter Bar in 1575. The event was apparently an accidental skirmish, taking place at a Warden Court, held at the Carter Fell, when hostilities suddenly broke out between the two sides. Sir John Carmichael led the Scots who beat Sir John Forster’s men, with the timely arrival of the Jedburgh contingent with their cry ‘Jethart’s here’, turning the battle. The Hawick men there were led by Little Gladstain ‘good at need’, with the ‘Laird’s Wat’ of Goldielands also present, along with many Elliots, Armstrongs, etc. Sir John Heron, one of the English leaders, was slain, and the Warden taken prisoner. It is said that 5 Scotsmen and 6 Englishmen were killed. The battle site, near the Carter Bar, is commemorated by the Redeswire Stone and is the destination for the most arduous ride as part of the Jethart Callant’s festival. It is recorded months later that proclamations were posted at the Mercat Cross of Hawick and other towns, instructing anyone who had taken goods from the Englishmen during the skirmish to return them and prohibiting anyone from raiding into England or to threaten the peace. A romanticised version of the tale is told in a ballad of the same name. This exists in part of the ‘Bannatyne Manuscript’. It was first printed as ‘The Ballad of the Reid-Squair’ in Ramsay’s ‘Ever Green’ (1724), and appears with the same verses, but slightly altered words, in Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784) and later in Scott’s ‘Minstrelsy’. The manuscript appears to have been written about the late 17th century, but almost certainly was transcribed from a version passed through oral tradition. It contains a much larger number of names than most ballads (although some of them are somewhat garbled), and hence must have been written by someone in remembrance of the events of 1575 – ‘Then Tividale came to wi’ speed, The Sheriffe brought the Douglas down, Wi’ Cranstone, Gledstain, good at need, Baith Rewle Water and Hawick town’ [T] (there are many spelling variants, the manuscript of the ballad reading ‘Rid Square’).

raigular (rå-gew-lur) adj. regular – ‘hei was a raigular it the Queen’s Heid’, adv. regularly – ‘...hei walks roond Heysike raigular’ [IWL], ‘...Jinglin’ raig’lar ilk a week Owre-bye the Copsaw airt’ [DH].

Ralph’s Acre  (rawlf-s-kur) n. lands adjacent to Trinitylands, mentioned in the rental returns for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1692. This could be the same place referred to as ‘Blakie’s Acre’ in the 16th century.

Ralphtree Grain  (rawlf-tree-grān) n. small stream in Liddesdale which rises on Tinnis Hill and flows into Todhunter Grain and then the Tinto Burn. An old sheepfold shows that shepherds worked in even as remote a place.

Ralton (rawl-tin) n. former lands in Liddesdale, to the south-west of Redheugh. Modern maps show the farm of Raltonside on the Ralton Burn. Ingram Armstrong is recorded there in 1535, along with Robert and Archibald Armstrong. In 1541 they were valued at 3 pounds and 7 shillings, with tenants Robert, Ninian and Thomas Armstrong. Ingram Armstrong there is recorded in a 1585 remission for men of Dumfriesshire and related areas, along with John alias Ralton. This is probably the ‘Rouraltonholme’ possessed by John Scott in 1632 and also the ‘Ratoumholme’ listed among the lands of Kerr of Ancrum on the same document. Rig lines have been seen to the north-west of Raltonside, and there is also an old boundary bank there (it is ‘Raltoun’ in 1535, ‘Raltoun’ in 1541 and ‘Raltoun’ and ‘Reltoun’ in 1585).

Ralton Burn (rawl-tin-burn) n. stream that rises near Roan Fell and Millstone Edge, on the border of Roxburghshire with Dumfriesshire and gather’s several other streams before passing Raltonside farm, joining the Ryedale Burn and running into the Liddel Water between Sandholm and Newcastle. The area has the remains of several farmsteads, as well as boundary banks, enclosures, huts and sheep-folds. Near the head of the westernmost feeder stream are a couple of shepherd’s cairns (it is marked on the 1718 Buccluech survey).

Raltonside (rawl-tin-śid) n. cottage on the Ralton Burn to the north of Newcastle.

ram (rawl) v. to push, thrust, shove, act precipitously and with violence – ‘…the skirls an the dirls, the raameen an the raackeen an the skirls an the skreeven’ [ECS] (also written ‘raam’).

rambaskious (rawl-baws-kee-is) adj., arch. rough, unpolished (noted by J. Jamieson; also rambaskish).

rambaskish (rawl-baws-kish) adj., arch. rough, unpolished (noted by J. Jamieson; also rambaskious).

Rambler (rawl-blur) n. pseudonym for George Penman, Hawick News columnist, writing nostalgic pieces about Hawick and district, in the 1970s and 80s. There had been a much earlier column with similar content, around the early 1900s.

the Rambler’s (thurawl-blurz) n. popular name for a former pended house situated where the O’Connell Street opening now is.

rambusk (ram-busk) adj., arch. robust, vigorous (also ‘rambaskious’ and ‘rambaskish’ in Teviotdale; J. Jamieson notes this also in Ettrick Forest).

rame (rām) v., arch. to complain, harp, repeat, request monotonously – ‘A’m fair hert-seek o that; ee’ve raimd on’t aa nicht’ [ECS], ‘Yince an’ she begins, she raims on for a guid everleston’ [GW], to talk nonsense, rave – ‘And, Willie, never rake frae hame, Wi’ cronies dear, to rant and rham’ [JoHa], n. a tedious repetition of the same sound (also written ‘raim’).

rammleguishon (rawl-mul-gu-shin)n., arch. a sturdy, rattling fellow (noted by J. Jamieson).

rampaj (rawl-pay) v., arch. to rampage, rage furiously – ‘...tho their chafts war ditherin an their chafts war ditherin an their chafts war ditherin an a short burst of speed, like a ram uses in charging, a headlong rush – ‘He took a ram-race and smashed open the door’ [HAST1868], an impetuous progression, anything done at unreasonable speed – ‘Howt! Thay sang that chorus fer owre quick.

the Rampart (thurawl-pur) n. area around St. Mary’s Churchyard and Old Manse Lane, distinguished by the high wall there. This features as the location for the third scene in ‘The Gutterblades’ – ‘...Nannie, an auld freend, will be roond the Ramparts at the chap o six, he has guid news tae tell you …’ [JEDM] (also ‘The Ramparts’ and ‘Rampart Place’).

Rampsigill see Ramsiegill

Rampy Sike (rawl-pee-si) n. small stream that runs roughly north-east to join the Allan Water near Allanhaugh Bank. There is a small, roughly oval-shaped enclosure there, of indistinct enough form that it is hard to guess its age. On the haugh opposite where the sike joins the Allan Water was formerly the site of Raesknowe Mill.

ram-race (ram-rās) n., arch. a short burst of speed, like a ram uses in charging, a headlong rush – ‘He took a ram-race and smashed open the door’ [HAST1868], an impetuous progression, anything done at unreasonable speed – ‘Howt! Thay sang that chorus fer owre quick. Thay made a perfect raam-race o’d’ [ECS], ‘It was a Day’s Dander A wanteet, an no a raam-race

Ramsay (rawm-zee) n. Sir Alexander of Dalhousie (d.c.1342). He fought at Borough Muir, was involved with the capture of Leuchars castle and relieved the siege of Dunbar Castle. He harassed the English in the Borders, often with a relatively small force, and was made Warden of the East March in 1340. He was known as a paragon of chivalry, being a champion on the jousting field. At Easter 1342 he captured Roxburgh Castle from the English and was rewarded by David II with the Keepership of Roxburgh Castle, and the Sherifffdom of Teviotdale that usually went along with it. Sir William Douglas, who was already Sherif of Teviotdale, was outraged at this and had Ramsay captured while holding court at St. Mary’s Kirk in Hawick a few months later (there is some uncertainty about whether it was 20th or 21st June). Several of his followers were slain and he himself was wounded and imprisoned in the dungeons of Hermitage Castle, where he starved to death. He is said to have survived for 17 days by eating grain that fell through from the granary above. In the 1790s a local mason apparently broke into Hermitage vaults, finding human bones, as well as a bridle, saddle and sword; it was said that these were the remains of Ramsay. The bit that was found was presented by Sir Walter Scott to the Earl of Dalhousie, Ramsay’s direct descendant. Ramsay Road in Hawick was named after him in 1933. Allan see James Dalgleish. Andrew (17th/18th C.) tenant in Bedrule. His wife Margaret Scott died in 1723, aged 65, and is buried in Bedrule kirkyard. Rev. Andrew Mitchell (1809–69) from Tollcross in Glasgow, he became the 4th minister of the Relief (Allars) Church in 1833. He was the first President of the Hawick Total Abstinence Society, leading to some dispute over the use of Allars Kirk for meetings. He also allowed his church to be used for Revival meetings, against the wishes of many in his congregation. In Pigot’s 1837 directory he is listed on the Crescent. In 1841 he was living on Buccleuch Street. He resided in 1846, and left Hawick, with a large crowd seeing him off at the Tower Knowe. He moved to Australia to become Minister of Collins Street Church in Melbourne. In about 1850, along with 3 others, he formed the United Presbyterian Church of Victoria. He married Isabella Milne and their son Robert was a politician and lawyer in Australia.

An early photograph of him exists. Sir George of Dalhousie (d.c.1629) son of James of Cockpen, he was 2nd Lord Ramsay of Melrose. He gained the lands and title in 1618 from his relative John, Viscount Haddington and Lord Ramsay of Barns. He is recorded in 1613 collecting the vicarage teinds from Thomas of Turnbull of Knowe. This suggests that he already had patronage of Hassendean Kirk at that time. He became Earl of Holderness and sold the lands of Melrose to Sir Thomas Hamilton. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir George Douglas, and was succeeded by his son William, who became Earl of Dalhousie. James (18th C.) recorded being in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1806 when his marriage to Barbara Morton announced in Melrose Parish. John (c.1580–1618) Viscount of Haddington, Earl of Holderness. He was son Robert of Wyliecleuch. In 1609 he was granted the lands and income from Melrose Abbey, becoming Lord Melrose. This included the Kirks of Cavers and Hassendean. The grant was at least partly because of the help he had given the King in the Gowrie Conspiracy of 1600. In 1618 he resigned his lands and titles in favour of his relative Sir George of Dalhousie.

John (18th C.) Hawick resident who was among the many men listed as fugitives in 1684 for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. John (18th C.) surveyor of coals, who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1755. He was probably not from Hawick, but it is unclear where he was from or what his connexion with Hawick was. In 1757 there is a record of 5 shillings ‘Spent with Mr Ramsay the coalman (coal-viewer)’, this being related to the petition for the coals’ that the Town Clerk had sent. It is unclear exactly what this was about, but he is also recorded being paid 10 shillings and 5 pence in the same year. John M. (b.1885) uncle of Jessie MacDonald, he grew up in Denholm, served in WWI, was a postman for the Stobs area and lived at Orchard Terrace in later life. He wrote an account of Denholm in the years around 1900 for the Transactions. Robert (1842–82) son of Rev. Andrew Mitchell, who was minister of Allars Kirk. He was born in Hawick, but the family emigrated to Australia when he was about 5 (one of his siblings dying on the voyage). He studied law at Melbourne University, became a solicitor and became involved in politics as secretary for a committee trying to abolish state funding of religion. He served as a member of the legislative assembly of Victoria from 1870, being heavily involved in education and the separation of church and state. He was also partially responsible for the police actions that led to the capture of the Ned Kelly gang. He married Isabella Catherine, daughter of Robert Urquhart. They had 2 sons and 2 daughters. He was buried in Melbourne general cemetery. William (d.c.1695) tenant in Bedrule Mill. He married Margaret Turnbull. In 1695 he and his wife left 500 merks for the poor of the Barony of Bedrule, with the family of Cavers Carre as trustees. He is probably the William recorded in Bedrule Parish on the Hearth Tax records of 1694. William ‘Wall Slush’ (d.c.1830) known as a vagrant and drunkard. Although not born in Hawick, he travelled around upper Teviotdale for the period roughly 1790–1830. He was said to have been from either Carluke in Clydesdale or brought up at Heriot’s Hospital in Edinburgh. Not known for his beauty, he was described as being ‘as unprepossessing in his looks as it is possible to conceive, and his raiment was in classic keeping with his countenance’. He claimed to have a sister who was far uglier than himself. He had a squint, with one eyelid almost covering his eye, and a lower lip that drooped noticeably. He also lost the use of his legs through frostbite, and afterwards went about on a donkey. A story is told of how he once stood in for the driver of the cart between Edinburgh and Hawick, but was so drunk from stopping at every inn that by the time he reached Dovemount he mistook the gable of Wilton Kirk for another possible watering hole. He spent much of his time in the Black Bull, or sleeping it off in Hawick Mill. One year, when the Common Riding races were at the Vertish, he came across another beggar, called Ragabuss, and the pair race for tuppence in a steepleschase on foot, which degenerated into a fight. He once insulted Blind Wullie Craw (as recounted by William Norman Kennedy), who immediately threw off the lines ‘O! Hush, hush, Wall Slush, Wall Slush, The Ostler o’ Black Bull, As lazy a loon as what’s i’ the toon, And his head’s like a wee picked skull’. There is an Adam Brown portrait of him in the Museum, and an article by William Norman Kennedy in the first Archaeological Society Transactions. William (b.1802/3) born in Sprouston Parish. In 1851 he was a proprietor of 94 acres at Calaburn in Wilton Parish. His wife was Isabella and their children included Elizabeth (who married brickmaker William Taylor) and Christian. William (b.1851) born at Armadale, West Lothian, he was the last preacher at the Cameronian Chapel in Denholm, which closed in the 1920s. He also served as an elder in the United Free Church there. He was ‘colporteur’ for the Religious Tract Society as well as School Attendance Officer. He married Christian Wilson in 1872. Their children were Peter (who married Helen Stoddart in Hawick), Christina, George Wilson, James, Jane, John, William and Jessie (who married Thomas Ramage in Hawick).

Ramsaycleuch (rawm-zee-klooch) n. farmstead above Merrylaw, reached by the side road from Teviothead, and lying just north of Rashiegrain and the source of the Teviot. The areas of Ramsaygrain West and Ramsaygrain East lie to either side. In the 1511 charter for the Barony of Hawick the lands were listed among those held by the Baron ‘in property’. The lands were included in the list of property of the Baron of Hawick (Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig) in 1572 and 1594. Douglas of Drumlanrig has a ‘horning’ in 1607 against William Scott of Gledstains to remove from these and other lands, followed by a further action in 1610 for Scott and James Gledstains of that Ilk owing him taxes. Robert Grieve was tenant in 1609. Half of the lands there were owned by the Scotts of Crumhaugh in the 17th century. The lands were among those inherited by Sir Francis Scott of Thirlestane from his brother Walter in 1695. By 1707 it was valued along with Hislop at £549 4s. The lands were owned by Michael Anderson of Tushielaw and Hislop in the early 18th century. Mrs. Anderson of Tushielaw was owner in 1788. John Armstrong is recorded as farmer at ‘Ramsaycleuchburn’ in 1797. William Riddell (brother of Henry Scott Riddell) was tenant there in the mid-19th century. In 1811 the lands of ‘Ramsaycleuchburn’ were valued along with Hislop at £549 4s, when owned by the Andersens of Tushielaw. This area was part of the western extremity of Hawick Parish until Teviothead was formed in 1850. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows a ruined building at Ramsaycleuchburn (the origin of the name is possibly Old English ‘hramsa cloh’, meaning ‘the ravine of the wild garlic’, although the terrain does not seem very suitable; it is easily confused with Ramsaycleuch in the Ettrick valley; it appears in 1511 as ‘Ramsy Clewis’ and ‘Ramsyclewis’, ‘Ramsiclewis’ in 1514, ‘Ramsay Clewis’ in 1572, ‘Ramsay Clewis’ in 1594, ‘Ramsay clewch’ and ‘Ramsecleuch’ in 1609, ‘Ramseclewis’ in 1610, ‘Ramsayclewechis’ in 1615, ‘Ramsecleuch’ in 1621, ‘Ramsaycleuche’ in 1674, ‘Ramescleuch’ in 1675 and ‘Ramsecleuch’ in 1695, with ‘Ramsaycleuchburn’ recorded in 1714; it is marked ‘Rapshycleuch’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).
Ramsay Road (rawm-zee-röd) n. street behind Moat Park, built in 1933 and extended in 1969. The housing overlooking the ‘Scer’ is sometimes known as the ‘Haggis Haa’ scheme. Named after Sir Alexander Ramsay (since it is beside the old highway where he made his last fateful journey).

Ramseycleuch (rawm-zee-klooch) n. farmstead in the Ettrick valley, near the village of Ettrick. It was formerly owned by the Scotts of Thirlestane. John Scott of Thirlestane had a ‘tack’ from Melrose Abbey for these lands in 1535 and Robert Scott of ‘Schastaine’ in 1557. Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane had a charter in about 1620, and granted them to William Scott of Harden in about 1622. A ‘pendicle’ called ‘Tima- about 1620, and granted them to William Scott of Harden in about 1622. A ‘pendicle’ called ‘Tima-Ramshakle (rawm-shä-kul) adj., arch. ramshackle, v. to search diligently (cf. ramshackle).

Ramsiegill (rawm-zee-gil) n. former lands in Liddesdale, once a seat of a branch of the Elliots. The precise location is uncertain, but it was in the hills somewhere to the west of Riccarton. It is listed as ‘Ramspysgill’ in about 1376 on a rental roll of Liddesdale, in the section called ‘Ermyl-doune’, and with a value of 13 shillings and 4 pence. ‘William Elwald in Ramsigill’ is recorded in the Register of the Privy Seal for 1510 and on a rental roll of 1541. ‘Hobbe Elwald of Ramsiegill’ is among men the King ordered to be apprehended in 1532. Robert in Ramsiegill and ‘Old’ Robert of Ramsiegill are both also recorded in 1541. In 1541 the farm was leased by John Elliot and valued at 6 shillings and 8 pence. ‘Gavin o Ramsiegill’ was one of the Liddesdale thieves captured in Hawick by the Regent Moray in 1567. ‘Gavin’s Jock’ from there was recorded in 1574 and 1582/3. ‘Ill Rob of Ramsigill’ was convicted for theft in 1580/1. Jock Elliot of Ramsiegill is listed in 1583 as one of the Elliots of Burnhead. Hob and Rowe Elliot ‘of Ramsiegill’ signed a bond for the behaviour of all the Elliots of Ramsiegill in 1584, along with Airchie of the Hill and Will’s Hob. And a number of Elliots from there were named in a bond of 1587. Hob and Gavin separately accused the English of raids on their lands there in the 1580s. The man who hanged himself when imprisoned in Hawick steeple in 1612 may also have been from this family branch (it is marked ‘Rampsigill’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map in the hills to the east of Roughley Burn, between ‘Ernitlon’ and ‘Lires’; it is ‘Ramsigill’ in 1510, ‘Rammisgill’ in 1541, ‘Rampseygill’ and ‘Ramsygell’ in 1563, ‘Ramsygill’ in 1569, ‘Ramsigill’ in 1580/1, ‘Rampseygill’ in 1581 and ‘Ramsigill’ in 1583; the origin may be similar to that of ‘Ramsaycleuch’, i.e. related to the Old English for ‘wild garlic’; there is also a ‘Ramsigill’ in North Yorkshire).

Ramstam (rawm-staam) adj., arch., poet. haphazard, rash, heedless, unceremonious; ‘Hei’d little need be hen-hertec that hed ti beer the ramstam onfah . . . ’ [ECS], ‘My strength was renewed, but the haugh was plewed, And I made but a ramstam rin . . . ’ [WaD], ‘He wasna blate, he was rale ram-stam, He’d swallowed a wee thing mair than a dram’ [WL], n., poet. haphazardness, chaos – ‘And roun and roun the world may spin Wi’ its ram-stam and steer . . . ’ [WL].

Ramstougar (rawm-stoo-gar) adj., arch. rough (in various senses), coarse (of cloth), characterising a particularly masculine woman, vulgar, heedless, harebrained, rowdy, quarrelsome (all of these meanings noted by J. Jamieson).

Rand (rawnd) n., arch. a narrow strip, a streak of a different colour in cloth, a streak of discoloration in anything imperfectly cleaned or dried (noted by J. Jamieson).

Randan (rawn-dan) n., arch. spree, particularly in the phrase ‘on the randan’, meaning being involved in a wild celebration (noted by E.C. Smith).

Randie see randy

Randit (ran-dee’, -di’) adj., arch. streaked, striped, dyed a variegated colour – ‘Randit, ill-wiishen claes’ [GW], ‘Randit tweeds, bread, but- ter’ [GW], ‘Ma froak hesna dyed weel at aa; it’s awfullies randeet’ [ECS], ‘That wumman’s claes ir na laaf seindiet; they’re hinging oot i the gaerd- een aa randeet’ [ECS].

Randolph (ran-dolf) n. (d.c.1185) husband of Bethoc, who was probably daughter of Don- ald III. He was Lord of Strathnith or Nithsdale. However, his story sometimes seems mixed up with others. His name is also translated as Ralph. His wife may have been a daughter of Fergus, Earl of Galloway and Princess Joan of England. Not long after the founding of Jedburgh Abbey they granted a carrucate of land (60 acres) in Ruecast to Jedburgh Abbey, confirmed by William the Lion. Through his wife he gained the barony of Bedrule (or ‘Bethocrule’). He also grante lands in Dumfries to Kelso Abbey. He was probably son of Dunegal (or Stranith, or Nithsdale), and brother of Duvenald (or Donald), Duncan and Gillespie (or Gillepatric). Bedrule also soon passed into the hands of the Conyns, suggesting that the Bethoc was the daughter of Donald III, whose daughter Hextilda married Richard Comyn. His descendants took the surname Randolph.

Randolph (ran-dolf) n. Thomas (13th C.) Sheriff of Roxburgh, recorded as witness to a document for Kelso Abbey in 1266. He was probably a descendant of Randolph, Lord of Stranith. He was Chamberlain of Scotland 1269–78. He married Isabel Bruce, who was probably sister of King Robert the Bruce. His son Sir Thomas became 1st Earl of Moray.

randy (rawn-dee) adj., arch., poet. wild, disorderly, disreputable, aggressively rude – ‘...strictly discharging all her Majesty’s leidges within ye shyre to resett Gipsies, Vagabonds, Randie beggars, and idle persons ...’ [PR1711], ‘Now randie Tibbie takes the road, Wi’ a’ her neebour wretches’ [JoHa], ‘Cam’ ye straight alang the toon, Or doon the randy raw? Ha’e ye seen a truant loon Playin’ at the ba’’ [JT], ‘The inn was thrang wi’ singin, The randy clash rang high ...’ [WL], n., arch. a scolding woman, a mischievous girl (also written ‘randie’).

randy-wife (rawn-dee-wif) n., arch. a scolding virago (also ‘randy-wumman’).

range (rānj) v., arch. to search, probe, rummage – ‘A’ll mebbies finnd et if A range the kist’ [ECS], ‘Weel, A ranged the haaf o the toon, or A turnt staaed’ [ECS], ‘A’ve ranged a’ the drawers, an’ canna find it’ [GW], to agitate water, especially to scare fish from hiding places, to poke the ashes from between the bars of a grate so that the air can circulate – ‘Taik the poker an range the bars o the feier’ [ECS].

ranger (rán-jur) n., arch. a pot scrubber, particularly one made of a tied bunch of heather.

Rankilburn (rawng-kul-burn) n. older spelling for the valley of the Rankle Burn, also known as Buccleuch. The precise boundaries of the lands are not known, but certainly larger than the lands later known as Buccleuch. This was once a separate parish, which was merged with Yarrow in 1621, but then disjoined from Yarrow and annexed to Ettrick in 1650. It appears that in 1236 the lands belonged to Nigel de Heris, the King’s forester. The land probably passed to the Scots some time shortly after 1249, perhaps as part of the appointment as Keeper of Ettrick Forest.
Sir Richard Scott was the first known Laird of Rankilburn in the late 13th century. The first residence was probably on the motte at Phen-zhopehaugh, later moving to ‘Buccleuch Castle’.
There was also a chapel on the Rankle Burn, the cemetery of which was the final resting place for many early generations of the Scots of Buccleuch. When the lands were inherited in 1492 they were said to be then waste, but normally valued at £20. They were still listed separately from Buccleuch in the family lands inherited in 1517 and 1553/4 and the lands were included in the main Barony of Branxholme according to the services of heirs in 1634, 1653 and 1661, and the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. – ‘Of Ettrick’s-hue he took a view, Than to the left hand did turn, Where he did see that Forrest hie, Which then was called Rankelburn’ [CWS] (it is ‘Rankilburne’ in 1415, 1463, 1484 and about 1580, ‘Ranckyburen’ in 1415 and 1491/2, ‘Rankylburn’ in 1491/2, ‘Rankilburn’ and ‘Ranckylburne’ in 1517 and ‘Rankilburne’ in 1528, 1574 and 1634; it is marked ‘Rankilburn’ and ‘Bourn of Rankilburn’ on Blaeu’s 1654 maps and mis-transcribed as ‘Kankisburn’ on Moll’s 1745 map).

Rankilburn Chaipe (rawn-g-kul-burn-chaipul) n. former chapel near the old seat of the Scots of Rankilburn. It was also known as ‘Buccleuch Kirk’. The chapel was situated at the confluence of the Rankle Burn and the Kirk Burn, about 5 miles up from the Ettrick, with Kirk Hill and Priest Sike to the east. When it was established is unclear, but possibly around the 13th century when the motte was established at Rankilburn (later called Phenzhopehaugh);
It was certainly already in existence by 1415, since in that year the tithes for Bellendean were transferred to it (when the Scots of Rankilburn swapped Bellendean for the lands of Glenkerry with the monks of Melrose Abbey). It is marked ‘Rankilburn K.’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, and ‘Ruins of Buccleugh Kirk’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map; today there is a semi-circular sheepfold enclosing much of the site, which is in the forest. The walls of the former chapel can still just be made out, these being modest in size, about 12 m by 8 m, 2 sides being partly marked by the sheepfold walls and by carven banks. Another bank may mark the wall of the kirkyard. There are 2 other rectangular enclosures just to the west of the sheepfold, presumably the remains of other buildings (or these have also been suggested to be the walls of the church itself). Scott of Satchells says that 9 Lairds of Buccleuch were buried there, perhaps starting after David and ending with the permanent move to Branxholme. There is a tradition that the last Scott burial was within 3 yards of the east door of the church. It is stated that the chapel was already ruined by 1566. There was a legend of a blue marble font (in which generations of Scotts had been baptised) being buried among the ruins, but no such relic has been found. Satchells says that around 1585 a young Walter Scott of Buccleuch and Robert Scott of Thirlestane found ancient tombstones buried there, bearing the arms of Buccleuch, along with some other sculpted stones. In 1801 the site was visited by a party including Sir Walter Scott and the Ettrick Shepherd, but they found nothing of any significance. William Scott (from Burnmouth) stated in 1821 that ‘frequently human bones are washed away by the encroaching of the stream’. There was an excavation around 1877, but little was discovered. The rector in 1453 was James Spottiswood, and the reader in 1491/2 was John Scott. David Scott of Buccleuch left money for the church when he died in 1491/2. Following the ruin of their nearby manor, the Scotts abandoned the area for their new seat at Branxholme, and the church probably fell into disuse at that time. In 1574 John Scott, minister of Ashkirk had oversight there. After the Reformation the parish was united with Yarrow and then Ettrick and was not considered large enough to require a reader (it was ‘ecclesiae de Rankilburn’ in 1453 and ‘Rankilburn’ in a Church of Scotland document of 1586). Rankilburn Meadowhole (rangks-me-di-höl) n. former name for a pool which would sometimes form in the meadow to the South of ‘the Birns’ of Chapelhill.

Rankilburn Pairish (rawng-kul-burn-pär-reesh) n. former small parish, sometimes referred to as Buccleuch, consisting of the land between the Rankle Burn and the Timac Water. Its establishment is unclear, but it certainly existed before 1415. In the early 17th century it was united with Yarrow, but in 1650 it was annexed instead to Ettrick. At that point it consisted essentially of the lands of Deephope, Mount Common, Gamescleuch, Ettrisckie, Annelshope, East Buccleuch, West Buccleuch, Tushielaw, Cacrabank and Crosslee.

rankit (rawng-keev', -ki') pp., adj. ranked, lined, set in rows – ‘The yoke-a-tulie rankit up, And doon the Loan like fire’[JT], ‘Door an dochty, framin the view, war rankeet Naeter’s Wardens o the Mairches’[ECS].

the Racle Burn (thu-rawng-kul-burn) n. stream that rises and flows roughly north to meet the Ettrick at Cacrabank, near Tushielaw. The valley of the Rankle Burn is synonymous with the Buccleuch area, and was the original family seat of the Scotts of Rankilburn or Buccleuch. There is a ballad called ‘The Maid of the Rankle Burn’ (it is marked ‘Bourn of Rankilburn’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map, ‘Ranckill B.’ on Adair’s c. 1688 map and ‘Rankgle Burn’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map; see also Rankilburn).

raninel-trei (ra-nul-tri) n., arch. a beam, or branch-stripped tree, forming the roof-tree of a house – ‘And oure the auld man’s rigging back She laid her ranel-tree shanke’[JTe].

ranshackle (ran-shaw-kul) v., poet. to ransack, search thoroughly – ‘I'll ranshekel the hale house till I find it’[JoJ] ‘And when they cam to the fair Dodhead, Right hastily they clam the peel; They loosed the kye out, ane and a’, And ranshackled the house right weel’[T] (also written ‘ranshekel’; cf. ramshaickle).

rant (rawn’) v., arch. to romp, roister, indulge in boisterous fun, sing or play a lively tune – ‘The rantin’ sungs, the leeberal drams …’ [RM].

Ranks Meadowhole (rangks-me-di-höl) n. former name for a pool which would sometimes form in the meadow to the South of ‘the Birns’ of Chapelhill.

rap (rawp) v., arch. to fall rapidly (said of tear-drops) – ‘…Our tears come rapping down in spates, Since thou art gone’[CPM].

rap (rawp) v. to knock on a door (more common than ‘knock’; cf. chap; noted by E.C. Smith).

rape (ráp) adv., poet. quickly, rapidly – ‘Then rude and rape a bairie scream’d’[JR].

Raper (rä-pur) n. Robert (d.c.1814) from Minto in Roxburghshire, recorded when his will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1815. Given that the name is otherwise unknown, this may be a transcription error, but otherwise he may have been a servant of Lord Minto.

Raperlaw (rä-pur-law) n. farm roughly between Minto and Lilliesleaf villages. The lands there were a possession of Jedburgh Abbey from its founding in the 12th century until the Reformation. Humphrey of Raperlaw is recorded as a witness in about 1201. Reginald of Durham, in his collection of miracles of St. Cuthbert, recounts a tale of a woman from here, crippled from birth, who was cured after spending the night at Cuthbert’s chapel on the Slitrig (probably at Cogsmill). Matthew Lamb was recorded as tenant there in 1494/5, as well as George and James Davidson. George Davidson had 2 horses and 14 sheep stolen from him there before 1502. The ‘lands and town of Raperlaw’ were part of the lands sold to Adam French in 1567 and still part of the Lordship of Jedburgh in 1587. Hob Turnbull was there in 1579. The lands there were inherited by William Middlemas of Chapel from his father, also William, in 1622; it appears that at that time it was part of the Barony of Raperlaw. The farm was feued by Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning to Turnbulls and Davisons in 1632. William Wood was tenant there in 1634. In the 1643 county valuation, the owners of lands recorded there were James Middlemas of Raperlaw (valued at £416), Walter Turnbull (valued at £100 10s), Adam Turnbull (valued at £104), Andrew Davidson (valued at £65), William Turnbull (valued at £104) and David Davidson (valued at £195). Lands there (or perhaps the superiority) were owned by the Kers of Cavers Kerr in the later 17th century. It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. Walter Scott of Alton owned lands there valued at £416 in 1678, as well as James Middlemas (£134 18s 6d), Ralph Davidson of Greenhouse (£104), Andrew Davidson (£65), Robert Elliot in ‘Wyliespeel’ (£104) and John Douglas (£195). Some of these parts were later known as Greenhouse and Catshawhill. Thomas Turnbull was a tenant there in 1684 when he was declared as a fugitive for being a Covenanter, along with George Young, a servant to George Gray, who was also a tenant there. James Runciman was blacksmith there in 1694, with other householders at that time being William Chisholme, Walter Middlemas, James Middlemas, John Gray, John Riddell, John Robson and James Scott (and John Turnbull among the ‘deficients’). It may have been sold by the Scotts of Alton to the Horsburghs of that Ilk about 1710. ‘Scott of Alton’s Lands in Raperlaw’ are referred to in 1788 (and in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls), valued at £416 and listed under Lord Minto (the origin is probably Old English ‘rapera hlaw’, meaning ‘rope-maker’s hill’; it first appears as ‘Raperlaw’ in about 1150, then ‘Raperslaw’ or ‘Rapeslaw’ in about the 1170s, ‘Raperell’ and ‘Rapereslaw’ in about 1200, and has its modern spelling from 1315; it is transcribed as ‘Raperlaw’ in 1502, ‘Ryperlawe’ in 1548/9, ‘Raperlaw’ in 1622, ‘Reaperhall’ and ‘Reperlaw’ in 1670, ‘reper law’ and ‘Reaperlaw’ in 1678 and ‘Reaperlaw’ in 1684, ‘Repertslaw’ in 1684 and ‘Roperlaw’ in 1797; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Raperlaw’.

Raperlaw (ra-pur-law) n. Humphrey (1/13th C.) listed in the period 1200–02 as witness to the grant of lands near Maxton to Melrose Abbey. His name is listed as ‘Umfr’ de Raperell’. Also in about 1200 he was granted lands at Coldingham, when he is listed ‘Vafrido de Raperslaw’.

rappit (ra-pee, -pi) pp. rapped, knocked struck – ‘I rappit lang, then rappit strang, But answer I gat nane’ [WaD].

rap up (rawp-up) v., arch. to rouse by knocking, knock up – ‘But Wull pled for them to rap up Georgie Oliver, of the Wester Toll Bar . . .’ [RM].

ra-ra-raw (r-ra-r-ria) n., arch. gout weed, Ἐρυκοπόδιον Podagaria, a tall plant with tiny white flowers, formerly used by children in Hawick to adorn themselves with on the eve of the Hiring Fair, marching and chanting ‘Ra-ra-rae, the nicht afore the Fair! The drum’s i’ the Walligate, the pipes’ i’ the air. Silk an saiten, Goold an’ naiteen; Tig! – for the morn’s the Fair Day!’ [GW].

raise (raiz) pp. did rise, rose – ‘hei rase in time ti hear the Drums an Fifes stertin’, ‘He raise, and rax’d him whar he stude And bade him match the muckle Cairter { booksome shelve’ [RDW], ‘Then up they raise, with ghastrous look, And to their steedis they flew . . .’ [JTe], ‘Wi’ that he raise, (the clock struck twelve.) And rax’d a box frae aff the shelve’ [HSR], ‘I rse up til opin til my beloe’ [ECS], ‘For a’ the craws rase up at yince In a cawin’ cloud o’ joy’ [DH], ‘Twa had rase high in the world’s een, But ane was puir: They cracked o’ wisdom whaur they sat Sae couthie there’ [WL] (also written ‘raise’; this is the past tense of ryse, while the past participle is ‘risen’, as in English).

rash (rawsh) v., arch. to rush, act with great haste – ‘To rashe through a darg’, to perform a day’s work hastily’ [JL], ‘Behald he smat the rok, that the waters rashet owt . . .’ [HSR] (also written ‘rashe’).
rash (rawsh) adj., arch. active, vigorous, agile, in good health – ‘He’s a rasch carl o’ his years’ [JoJ], ‘. . . a muckle big, bang fallih, braid-shoodert, rash an stuffy’ [ECS] (also written ‘rasch’).

rashie (raw-shee) adj., arch. full of rushes (also written ‘rashy’; it occurs in place names, e.g. Rashiegrain and Rashy Hill).

Rashiegrain (raw-shee-grān) n. farmstead near the head of the Teviot, beyond Merrylaw. The lands there formed part of the estate of the Scotts of Crumhau in the 17th century. In a Hawick Parish valuation of 1627 it is listed along with Wormscleuch and Commonbrae, valued jointly ‘in stok 120 lb., in teyd 20 lb’. It could be the ‘Rashile’ listed among lands around Teviothead that were part of the Barony of Cavers in 1687 and 1698. The lands were among those inherited by Sir Francis Scott of Thirlestane from his brother Walter in 1695. John Scott was there in 1702. By 1707 it was valued along with Commonbrae at £261 19s 4d. An unspecified matter of discipline occurring there came to the Hawick Session’s notice in 1752. William Anderson was owner in 1761. The farm was purchased in 1771 by Bailie Thomas Turnbull, along with other neighbouring properties. In 1788 it was owned by William Turnbull of Rashiegrain. In 1811 it was still valued (with Commonbrae) at about £262. The Hope family were living there in 1841. ‘Rashiegrain Height’ is an area south of there, by Pikethaw Hill, on the border with Dumfries & Galloway – ‘The waters o’ the Teviot Are drumlie at Trowmill But ootbye Rashiegrain Fresh sprung frae Teviotstane They’re clear as crystal rill’ [WL] (spelled ‘Rashiegrain’ etc. in older records, it is ‘Raschegrane’ in 1627, ‘Raschiegrem’ in 1674, ‘Raschegrain’ in 1675 and transcribed ‘Rasheglen’ in 1695 and ‘Rashlie’ in 1698; ‘rashie’ means covered in rushes and ‘grain’ is an old Scots word for a branch of a stream).

Rashie Grain (raw-shee-grān) n. small stream in Craik Forest, rising between Craik Cross Hill and Craik Moor and joining Northhope Burn.

Rashie Park (raw-shee-pawrk) n. former name for a field somewhere between Stobs and Cogsmill (mentioned in Robert Grieve’s diary in 1863).

Rattlin Roarin Willie (raw-lin-ro-in-willie) n. song popularised by Burns, which is supposedly local, being about events that happened to William Henderson of Priesthaugh in 1627. Willie, a local ballad-maker and brawler, slew ‘Robert Rule’ somewhere near Allanhaugh. Burns heavily edited it and added a third stanza in praise of his friend William Dunbar, which has disguised its origin. But Sir Walter Scott added 4 further verses about Willie’s capture by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs and ‘young Falnash’ (probably Archibald Elliott). The Presbytery records show that William Elliot was wanted for the murder of William Henderson in 1627, surely the basis for the song. The tune also has various versions, existing as the air of the song, as well as for both the pipes and the fiddle. Whether the origin was with Willie himself or someone else is unknown – ‘Rob Roole he handled rude And Willie left Newmill’s banks Red-wat wi’ Robin’s blude’ [T].

rauchle (raw-kul) adj., poet. bold, impetuous – ‘...He’ll find her [Britain] yet the same in war – A rauchle, ready-haundit kimmer’ [JoHa], ‘Rauchle gulls daily re-anoint Enthroned King Edward ...’ [DH] (also written ‘raucle’).

raucht (rowght) pp., arch. reached (particularly the past tense of reach; also written ‘raught’).

Raufson (rowf-son) n. John (14th C.) owner of lands in ‘Ermildon’ (i.e. somewhere around Arnton Fell) in Liddesdale according to a c.1376 rental roll. ‘Terra Johannis Raufson’ is listed there with a value of 16 shillings.

rave (rav) pp., arch. tore, rived – ‘...and for having fallen upon the said Bailie and rugged and rave the hair off his head’ [BR1694], ‘...How the jockies in their fury Rave an’ ruggit’ [RH] (also written ‘raive’; this is the past tense of rive, which can also be ‘rived’; cf. the past participles reen and ‘riven’ as in English).

Ravenburn (ra-vin-burn) n. former shepherd’s cottage on the farm of Hyndlee, situated to the east of the Note o’ the Gate, now deep within Wauchope Forest. It appears to be ‘Reavinburne’ in 1694, when there was a hearth listed there with a value of 16 shillings. The shepherd there in the mid-1800s was Walter Cavers. The stream there is the Raven or ‘Reaven’ Burn, which forms part of the headwaters of the Jed.

Ravenswud Junction (ra-vinz-wud-jungshin) n. Ravenswood Junction, a junction of the Waverley Line with the Berwickshire Railway, between Newtown St. Boswells and Melrose, near the Leaderfoot Viaduct. The line connected Hawick with Greenlaw, Duns and Chirnside and ran from 1856 until part was washed away in a flood in 1948. The name came from the nearby house, built in the 1820s on the estate formerly known as Old Melrose.

raw (raw) n. a row – ‘A cood wale oot Rule Waeter’s coorse feine, – merkeet wui raws on raws o treis’ [ECS], ‘Fowr in a raw = four abreast’ [ECS], ‘A raw o treis; a raw o krames; a raw o hooses’ [ECS], ‘They gaed twae in a raw’ (= two abreast)’ [GW], ‘Aw’ll gie ye a’ twa or Raw (raw) n. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) recorded as ‘Jake Rawe Martyn Crossons servaunte’ in 1544, when he was among a large number of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. It is possible that the Martin Crozier was the one who resided at Earlside, but it is possible another Martin is meant. Thomas (19th C.) merchant and commission agent in Hawick. His estate was sequestered in 1885. He was a member of the committee for Hawick Baptist Church around 1880.

Rawflat (raw-fla’) n. farm between Old Belses and Bloomfield in the southern part of Ancrum Parish. In 1502 Bartholomew Turnbull was tenant and Thomas Turnbull in 1540. Walter Turnbull was Laird there when ordered to vacate the lands in 1581. However, later in 1581 he was murdered by a band of other Turnbells, and then his wife ‘and hir puir bairmes’ were harassed by Turnbells firing their weapons at the farm. ‘Jaquie Laidlaw’ was a tenant in 1601 and Walter Turnbull was ‘younger of Raflat’ in 1603. It is also recorded in a criminal case relating to 1612, when it was owned by the Davisons and farmed by William Rutherford. The lands were sold by Wal-

reach (reech) v., arch. to bring out or down after reaching (the past participle is raucht).

reader (ree-dur) n. a lay preacher who assists the Minister in Church. In earlier centuries the term referred to someone appointed to read the scriptures instead of the ordained priest or minister. In many post-Reformation churches there was a minister in charge of several parishes and a separate reader for each parish, often having been Catholic priests, and allowed to continue to preach, but barred from administering the sacraments; such appointments stopped following an Act of the General Assembly of 1581. The office of reader was officially abolished after the adoption of the Westminster Directory in 1645, but nevertheless continued in practice. The term later came to be used to refer to the Precentor. In Hawick in the 18th and 19th centuries the Reader (who was usually the schoolmaster and Session Clerk) would read the scripture aloud for the congregation for up to an hour before the regular service began, and also during the interval in the lengthy services.

readiest (ree-dee-ist) n., arch. most ready for use, most immediately available as currency – ‘...agree that an new colour, standard, or pencell, should be bought ...and to that effect to uplift and take the readiest burgess money’ [BR1707].

the Readin Room (thu-ree-din-room) n. name formerly used for any one of a number of places where newspapers etc. could be read for a fee. There was one on Denholm Main Street in the late 19th century.

the Read Roads (thu-reed-rōdz) n. name sometimes given to the former road passing from upper Teviotdale into Ewesdale. The road is mentioned in a travel account of 1629. It was the principal road from Carlisle to Hawick before about 1765 when the turnpike was opened. All traffic would have been on foot or horseback. Many miles of the old hollowed out tracks can be seen on the hillsides around Linhope and Mosspaull.

A good stretch is visible looking back from Linhope as the track stretches over part of Lightning Hill towards Phaup, close to the route that the Mosspaull Ride-out usually takes. There is also a suggestion that it may have partly followed the course of a road built by the Romans, connecting the Lower Esk with Teviotdale, via Eweslees, Ewes Doors and Caerlenrig. Another (or related) road has been traced over the pass from Ewes Doors, via Haggis Side and Corbie Shank.

Redford (red-furd) n. former name for an area near the modern Redfordgreen. It was owned by the Crown from at least 1456, mentioned many times in the Exchequer Rolls from at least 1448, and consisting of 3 steadings. In 1459 they were let to David Scott. In 1480 they were granted to the Laird of Cranston. In 1486 the 3 steadings were leased again to Sir David Scott of Buccleuch, ‘without grassum on account of their waste condition’. It was leased by Patrick, Earl of Bothwell. In 1499 it was occupied by Robert Scott in 1499, when let to Patrick Home (the King’s comptroller), on the refusal of Robert Scott. It was still Crown property in 1502 and in 1510 the 3 steadings of ‘Hyndhop, Dricleuchsell, et Redefurfegrene’ were feued to Alexander, Lord Home (it is ‘Redefurde’ in 1450 and 1480, ‘Redurfurde’ and ‘Reidfurde’ in 1490, ‘Reidefurde’ in 1492, ‘Reidfurde’ in 1499 and ‘Redefurde’ in 1502).

Redford (red-furd) n. Alan (15th C.) witness to a sasine of 1465/6 for Denholm Mains. Andrew (18th/19th C.) father of Andrew, farmer at Hermiston. He was probably the Andrew recorded in 1788 as owner of part of Greenhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish. The lands were valued at £57 10s 4d and earlier owned by James (probably his father). He is probably the resident of Lilliesleaf listed in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 horses. He also paid the dog tax in 1797. He married Isabel Stewart and their children included: James (b.1768); Andrew (b.1778). He may be the Andrew whose son James was baptised in 1763. Andrew (b.1778) farmer at Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was son of Andrew and Isabel Stuart. He was tenant farmer for John G. Stewart of Hermiston. He is probably the Andrew who is recorded owning part of Davidson’s lands of Greenhouse in 1811, with his heirs being listed in 1874. He was at Hermiston in 1841 and in 1851 was farming 450 acres at Hermiston, employing 8 labourers. His wife was Isabella Scott and their children included: Andrew (b.1805), who probably died young; John (b.1806/7); James (b.1809), farmer; Charles (b.1813), also died young; Andrew (again, b.1815); George (b.1817); Charles (again, b.1822); Jessie (b.1826/7), who married Walter Govenlock; Margaret; and Elizabeth. Andrew (b.1795) tailor in Lilliesleaf, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 he was on the north side of Main Street. In the 1851 census he and his wife were recorded at the Maxwellheugh Tollbar House. He married Janet Grieve and their children included: James (b.1830), also a tailor; and William (b.c.1832), a draper. His widow was in Kelso in 1861, visiting her sister Jane Weatherstone. Tax roll in 1694. He is probably the Francis who married Bessie ‘Allion’ in 1699 and whose son William (b.1699) was baptised in Ashkirk Parish. He may also be the Francis who earlier married Isobel Chisholme in 1688; in which case John (b.1699), who Agnes Veitch in 1693, may be his son. George (b.1817) cattle dealer in Lilliesleaf, son of Andrew and Isabella Scott. He was living on the north side of Main Street in 1861 and was unmarried. James (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. His children included: Robert (b.1637) and Bessie (b.1638). His name is listed as ‘Redford’ and ‘Readfurhd’. James (17th C.) married Bessie Paterson in Ashkirk Parish in 1645. Perhaps Margaret (b.1646) was his daughter. James (17th C.) married Margaret Dodds in Roberton Parish in 1686. His wife was from Bedrule Parish. Their son William was born in 1688. James (17th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. His name is written ‘Reedfoord’. It is possible he is the James, married to Catherine Minto, whose son John was baptised in Ashkirk in 1703. James (17th C.) resident at Hassendeanbank according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, with his name written ‘Ridefoord’. James (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His son James was baptised in 1743. James (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Margaret Walker and their children included Margaret (b.1760). James (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Stewart and their children included Patrick (b.1759). James (18th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. His wife was Jean Waugh and their son James was baptised in 1765. James (18th C.) recorded in 1788 as former owner of part of Greenhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish. The lands were valued at £57 10s 4d and later owned by Andrew (probably his son). James (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf Parish. His son William was baptised in 1788. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf and Wilton Parishes. In 1841 the family were living on Damhead and he was an agricultural labourer. They emigrated to Canada in 1842. He married Margaret Wilson in 1820 and most of their children were baptised in Lilliesleaf: James (b.1821), who became a Canadian M.P.; Andrew (b.1824); Mary (b.1826); Elspeth (b.1830); and William (b.1833). He is probably the James, married to Margaret Neil, whose daughter Isobel was baptised in 1818. James (b.1809) farmer in Lilliesleaf, son of Andrew and probably a descendant of the earlier James. In 1851 he was living on Main Street, farming 100 acres and employing 4 people and was still there in 1861. His wife was Isabella, daughter of Rev. William Lauder of Earlston. Their children were Helen (b.1853) and Andrew (b.1855). James (1821–1908) born in Lilliesleaf Parish, son of James and Margaret Wilson. In the 1841 census he was living in Wilton Damhead and working as a ‘Writer’s Cl.’, presumably in the office of one of the Hawick lawyers of the time. He emigrated to Canada along with his parents and siblings in 1842. In 1851 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Alexander Gouray. He worked as a teacher, lumber merchant, manufacturer, land speculator and banker. He was involved in local affairs in Perth, Stratford and Downie and became M.P. for North Perth 1867–72. He moved to Austin, Texas in 1876, where he died. James (b.1830) tailor in Lilliesleaf, son of Andrew. He took over the business from his father, on the north side of Main Street. His wife was Janet Haldane from Ancrum. Their children included Helen (b.1852), Janet (or Jessie, b.1854), Andrew (b.1856), Elizabeth (b.1860), Euphemia (b.1862), James (b.1864), William (b.1866), Jane (b.1869) and John (b.1871). Janet (16th C.) recorded on the list of tenants of the lands of Newton in Bedrule in 1531. John (16th C.) rented an acre of land called ‘Coit acre’ and another rig of land from William Middlemas, farmer at Friarshaw in 1563 for 11 years. He could be the same John who was granted a half husbandland of land in the town of Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. John (17th C.) married ‘Heilling Jonkesone’ in Ashkirk Parish in 1634. His wife’s name may have been Helen Jenkins or Johnson. John (17th/18th C.) elder of Ashkirk Parish, written up in the 1718 Presbytery records for a dispute with Adam Scott (tenant of Woll). He accused Scott of insulting remarks directed to the elders, while he himself was accused of drunkenness and disparaging remarks made towards Scott. In 1724 he was sent to the synod with money ‘for helping to Build Meeting Houses at Babingtoun and Brandon In Ingland’. Presumably the same John married Agnes Veitch in 1693 and had children: Francis (b.1699); Margaret (b.1701); Isobel (b.1704); John (b.1706); James (b.1708); and an unnamed son (b.1714). John (18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Mary Scott and their children included: Francis (b.1739); Janet (b.1744); Agnes (b.1748); and Margaret (b.1751). Patrick (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Mark in 1655 and their children included Janet (b.1656), Thomas (b.1658) and Isabel (b.1661). Patrick (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Isobel Walker and their children included Bessie (b.1654). Robert (d.bef. 1494) recorded in a case at the Justice-аire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5. Nicholas and John, sons of Matthew Turnbull in Hassendean, had remission for his murder. It is not recorded where he was from. William (15th C.) witness to a sasine given by William Douglas, Laird of Cavers, in 1483, relating to lands in Hassendean. William (16th/17th C.) witness in 1607 to a sasine whereby John Scott gained possession of the lands of Hobsburn and Weens. His surname is recorded as ‘Reidford’. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Dunlop and their children included Robert (b.1661). William (d.c.1688) tenant in Hassendeanbank when his will was recorded in 1688. His name is written as ‘Reidfoord’. William (17th C.) resident of Hassendean Parish. He married Janet Thomson and their children included Bessie (b.1688). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Thomson and their children included Bessie (b.1688). William (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Janet Tait in 1726. Possibly the same William is recorded in 1724 as a collector of money for the Parish. William (18th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. In 1788 he is recorded as owner of the lands valued at £10 that had much earlier belonged to Alexander Hood. In the Land Tax Rolls of 1811 it is recorded that William Riddell of Camieston owned ‘William Redford’s Lands in Lilliesleaf, formerly Hood’s Lands’, which had been acquired by Edgar Hunter. William (b.1831/2) son of tailor Andrew and brother of James. He worked as a woollen and linen draper in Lilliesleaf. In 1861 he was on the north side of Main Street. He married Helen Robson and their children included Andrew and Jane (also written ‘Readfurf’, ‘Reedfoord’, ‘Redfoord’, ‘Reidfoord’, ‘Reidford’, ‘Reidfurde’, ‘Reidfuird’, ‘Reidfurde’, ‘Reidford’, ‘Riedford’, etc.).

Redfordgreen (red-furd-green) n. area off the B711 between Alemoor and Buccleuch. The farms of East and West Redfordgreen are here, and it was also once the site of a country school. The farms formerly belonged to the Parish of Yetholm. The area was once owned by the Crown and split into the 3 steadings of Redford, feued by Alexander, Lord Home in 1510. In 1541 it was ‘occupyt be the kingis gudis’, paying rental of £15 13s 4d. In 1621 it was valued at £15 13s 4d. It was inherited by Thomas Scott of Whitlade from his brother Sir Walter in 1655. The superiority was still held by the Homes when inherited by 3 heirs portioners in 1693. The teinds were valued at £28 13s 4d in 1785 and 1802. It was valued, along with Drycleuchshiel at £169 6s 8d in 1785 when held by James Lauder of Carside and in 1802 when held by Capt. Venner. Henry Thomas Rutherford was owner in the early 19th century and David Scott was tenant at about that time. The term ‘the forty thieves of Redfordgreen’ was used around the 1830s to refer to ‘faggot’ (i.e. artificial) voters after it was purchased by the Buccleuch estates – ‘By Borthwick Wa’s and Redfordgreen and on to wild Buccleuch …’ [WHO]. ‘Hear the melody begin At the door of Cleikiminn, East a mile or so of Timpendean. Drown the echo of your grief In the joy of Lilliesleaf, Or the merriment of Redfordgreen’ [WL] (it is ‘Redfurdegrene’ in 1510, ‘Reidfurdegrene’ in 1541, ‘Reidfurdegrene’ in 1621, ‘Reidfurdegrein’ in 1633, ‘Readfurdegrein’ in 1655, ‘Redfurgreen’ in 1693 and is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map; see also Redford).

Redfordgreen Schuil (red-furd-green-skil) n. former country school on the moors at Redfordgreen. The building was in Selkirkshire, but also served some of the remote parts of Roberston Parish. The school operated from 1885–1955. A grassy mound is still visible in the field, and a small cairn was placed there in recent years. A book ‘Redfordgreen School, 1885–1955’ (1995) was written by Kathleen W. Stewart. The Borders Archive holds the school admission book for 1885–1935 and log books for 1885–1955.

Redpath

Redpath (red-, reed-path, -peth) n. Adam (1776–1823) hedger at Weens estate. He started there in 1805. He had a sister Margaret. He married Jane Cook, who died in 1841, aged 67 (who was said to be insane in later life). Their children included: William (b.1804), forester at Weens; John (b.c.1805), who lived for a while at Bonchester Bridgend; Betty (b.1809), spend most of her life as a servant at Weens; George (b.1811); Helen (b.1813), married Robert Smith and lived at the Sclenty, Blacklee and Denholm; Adam (b.1817), who died in infancy; and Margaret, a housemaid at Weens, who married a Yorkshireman and moved to Aldborough. He died at Sclenty Hall. After his early death his 2 sons William and John together took over his job for a while, with William eventually taking over himself. Many of the family are buried in Hobkirk kirkyard. Adam (b.1838) son of William and Mary Smith. He worked for a while as a servant at Weens. Later he was in Noble’s factory in Hawick. Anne, R.S.A., O.B.E. (1895–1965) born in Galashiel, 2nd daughter of Thomas Brown, a textile designer, and Agnes Milne. Her family moved to Hawick when she was 6 years old, after her father was offered the job of head of design at Glebe Mills. She attended Hawick High School in the period 1901–13 and then studied at the Edinburgh College of Art (concurrently with teacher training at Moray House). Graduating in 1918, she won a scholarship to visit Europe. She returned to France in 1920 with her husband (an architect who worked with the Imperial War Graves Commission), and they lived there until 1934. Her first exhibition was in 1921, and she also decorated family furniture with flowers and birds, which would later feature in her still life paintings. In 1934 her husband’s millionaire employer lost his fortune and the family returned to Britain, she and her sons to Hawick and her husband to a job in London. She lived at 52 Orchard Terrace and on Beaconsfield Terrace. She was also President of Hawick Art Club. In this period she painted many landscapes around Hawick, and exhibited in the Royal Scottish Academy. She became best known for her vividly colourful still lifes, replete with familiar household objects, often in disconcerting combinations, with ‘The Indian Rug’ and ‘Still Life with Orange Chair’ perhaps best exemplifying her unique style. She soon became one of Scotland’s best known artists. She was President of the Scottish Society of Women Artists 1944–47 and in 1952 was the first female painter to be elected to the Royal Scottish Academy. Further trips to the continent inspired a change in style and she produced distinctive Mediterranean landscapes. She became an O.B.E. in 1955 and was also granted an honorary degree from Edinburgh University. In public she was known for her extravagant hats and designer clothes. Her self-portraits are in the Scottish National Portrait Gallery and the Glasgow Art Gallery and Museum. She later moved to Edinburgh. She suffered several heart attacks in later life, but continued to develop her artistic output, her last phase focusing on paintings of church interiors in Lisbon and Venice. In 1929 she married James Beattie Michie at Teviothead Kirk. She died following a fall at her home, 7 London Street, Edinburgh and was cremated. Books on her include ‘Anne Redpath 1895–1965, her life and work’ (1996) by Patrick Bourne, ‘Anne Redpath’ (1974) by George Bruce and ‘Anne Redpath, 1895–1965’ (1996) by Philip Long. David (b.1814/5) from Eccles, was farm steward at Galalaw in 1851. His wife was Margaret and their children included Mary, Janet, George and Robert. James L., O.B.E., served as President of the Callants’ Club in 1981, ?? . John (b.c.1805) son of Adam and younger brother of William. He worked as a labourer in the Bonchester Bridge area, living for a while at Bridgend. He was one of the first Trustees of Hawick Congregational (then Evangelical Union) Kirk, from about 1848. Margaret (b.c.1785) sister of hedger Adam. In 1841 she was living at Sclenty Hall and listed as ‘Independent’. Also there were Jane (perhaps her mother) and the younger Elizabeth and Margaret. Neil (d.1988) from Hawick, he served in the Gordon Highlanders during WWI and was one of the last surviving holders of the 14–15 Star. He later became a strong pacifist and leading member of the local Labour Party. However, during WWII he served as a Lieutenant in the Home Guard. He worked as a foreman at Braemar. An enthusiastic supporter of athletics, he became Secretary of the Scottish Games Association. He served as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. Robert (19th C.) land steward of Bonchester Bridge who was an elder in the Hawick Relief Kirk. William (18th C.) married Agnes Hobkirk in Bedrule Parish in 1771. William (c.1805–86) born in Earlston, son of hedger Adam, he was forester at Weens. When his father died young in 1823, he and his brother John took over the job on one man’s wages, but after a couple of years he took over entirely. In 1841 and 1851 he was listed as a hedger at Weens, and in 1861 was a forester.
there. He continued to work for the Cleghorns and Tancreds of Weens for his whole working life. He was made an Elder of the Kirk in 1838. He was said to have a dour temper and not to be liked by everyone. He spent some time in an asylum, later living with his daughter Mary in Denholm. He married Mary Smith, who died in 1869, aged 57; her brother was William Smith who married Mary Laidlaw from Weensmoor. Their children included: Ann (b.1833), who worked for a while as laundry maid at Weens, later living in Denholm, died unmarried; Jane (1835–74); Adam (b.1838), servant at Weens and worked for Noble’s in Hawick; Mary, in service at Weens, married Mr. Dodds; Thomas, gardener at Blennerhasset, Aspatria; and Elizabeth (b.1846) moved to York.

reek’s sel (reek-sel) n., adj., arch. thick with smoke or smell – ‘Ee’ve the hoose reek’s sel wi’ eer unfeet cutty – pit eet oot!’ [ECS].

reeky (ree-kee) adj. smoky – ‘And O, for blessings, never threshe, If ye wadna the brydle thole, For she’ll ride ye post to the clyte deil, And he to the reikye hole’ [JTe], ‘There’s a wee bit reeky howe, Where the Teviot wanders throwe’ [JEDM].

reel (reel) n. a moderately fast dance for a group of dancers in couples, or the music for such a dance, often in quadruple time.

the Reel (thu-reel) n. another name for the Bull Reel, particularly as danced by the Cornet, Principals and ex-Cornets shortly before midnight during the Ball. It is not danced by the other participants, who just watch the proceedings. It is started with the Cornet presenting his sash for his Lass to wear, and the men putting on white gloves. The Principles start the Reel, with the ex-Cornets joining in order of their year of office. The dance is also repeated in front of the Tower on the return from the Moat after dawn, but this time only by the Cornet and the Right- and Left-Hand Men. It is also danced in front of the Tower after the Handing-Back on the Saturday. Before 1855, when there were Races held at the Haugh, the Cornet and his followers would dance the Reel at the Haugh after the Dinner on the Friday, and this was repeated after the Dinner was resurrected in 1886. They would dance in the middle of the gymnastic track and this would signal the start of the Games. The Reel was first danced at the Ball (by the ex-Cornets) only in 1891. The origin of the Reel is uncertain.

reen (reen) pp., arch. riven – ‘Ain’, behold, the veil o’ the temple was reen a-twae frae the tap til the boddum’ [HSR] (also written ‘ri’en’; past participle of rive, although ‘riven’ is also used).

reengin (reen-jin) n., arch. a beating – ‘A guid reengin’ [GW], adj. robust, vigorous, active.

reens (reenz) n., pl., arch., poet. reins – ‘For thou hest hauden my reens . . . ’ [HSR], ‘. . . for the righteous God tryes the hairst an’ reens’ [HSR].

Rees (rees) n. Helen Christina Eason (1903–70) born in Newcastle, daughter of Dr. Rufus Eason Evans. She drove ambulances during the London Blitz. She wrote fiction under the pseudonym ‘Jane Oliver’, mainly historical novels and short stories. Her books include: ‘To-morrow’s Woods’ (1932); ‘Business as Usual’ (1933); ‘Cook Wanted’ (1933); ‘Evening of a Martinet’ (1934); ‘Cuckoo in June’ (1935); ‘Barrel Organ Tune’ (1935); ‘The Ancient Roads of England’ (1936); ‘Mine is the Kingdom’ (1937); ‘Reluctant Adonis’ (1938); ‘Not Peace, but a Sword’ (1939); ‘Queen of Tears’ (1940); ‘The Hour of the Angel’ (1942); ‘In no Strange Land’ (1944); ‘Isle of Glory’ (1947); ‘Sing, Morning Star’ (1949); ‘Eaglet and the Angry Dove’; ‘Faraway Princess’; ‘Queen Most Fair’; ‘Watch for the Morning’; ‘Young Man with a Sword’; ‘Pattern of Chivalry’ (1955). She married John Llewelyn Rees (also written ‘Rhy’s), who died serving in WWII in 1940. In 1942 she set up the John Llewelyn Rhys Prize for young writers, in memory of her husband. Her manuscripts and papers are in the Heritage Hub.

reeshle (ree-shul) v., poet. to rustle – ‘A reeshlin’ noise’[GW], ‘. . . That reeshles throwe the breckan’[WL], ‘The wund gangs reeshlin’ throwe the bents Cryin’ I dinna ken . . . I dinna ken . . . Unless it’s Auld Nickie Ban’’ [DH], n. a rustling sound or movement (also reesle).

reesle (ree-sul) v., arch. to rustle, rattle, make a crisp crackling noise – ‘. . . a stane-nappin injin gaed-on . . . nickerin – dirrilin – snokerin – an reesellin’ [ECS], to shake impatiently, rattle vigorously – ‘A hard the kye reeslin’ aboot the wire-fence’[GW], to beat – ‘Gin I get had o’ my nibbie, I’se reesle yer riggin for ye’[JoJ], n. a rustling sound – ‘Aa heirs a reis’le at the door’ [JAHM] (cf. reeshle).

reest (reest) v., arch. to be restive, refuse to go forward (said of a horse) – ‘The meir reestit. A reestin’ horse’ [GW], to arrest, to seize goods – ‘Ti reest a person’s belongings = to execute a warrant for their seizure; to ‘poin’d his gear’’ [ECS], n. the act of stopping short, baulk – ‘Ti taik the reest of (a horse) = to shy; rear; to refuse to proceed. Of persons cf. taik the rewe’ [ECS] (also written ‘reist’).

reest (reest) v., arch. to cure by smoking – ‘He has aye plenty hanging reestet in the mill-kiln’ [BCM1880].

the Reformation

reevick (ree-vik) n., arch. a flimsy piece of material, especially muslin cheese-cloth – ‘As thin as a reevick’[GW].

reeze (reez) v., arch. to break wind, flatulate – ‘To Reeze behind, To let wind go, Roxb. Whence the phrase, a reezing horse for one that is healthy’[JoJ].

reezie (reez-ee) adj., poet. dizzy, giddy, light-headed, capricious – ‘Lang about Ettrick may ye toddle, And clew a poet’s reezy noodle’[JR].

reffet (re-fe’) pp., poet. rieved, plundered, ravished – ‘Thou hest reffet awa my hairt …’[HSR].

the Reform Bill (thu-re-for-mi’-bil) n. parliamentary bill introduced by Prime Minister Earl Grey in April 1831, being possibly the first voluntary scheme of government reform. After much political wrangling it finally passed in June 1832 and became the Reform Act. In 1812 the entire county of Roxburghshire had only 143 voters (up from 105 in 1788), of which a mere 2 or 3 were in Hawick. Hawick people were much involved in the political discussion, with several pro-Reform resolutions being made at public meetings, some of which were passed on to Parliament or the King. A holiday was declared when news reached Hawick of the Bill’s initial passing by the Commons in 1831. Trades and societies paraded the streets and bonfires were lit at the Tower Knowe and the Cross. Parliament was then dissolved and new elections called the day after the Hawick May Fair, when a contingent of about 1,000 Hawick men marched to Jedburgh. Defeat of the Bill in the House of Lords led to near revolution around Britain, including in Hawick. Final passage of the Bill was cause for perhaps the largest celebratory parade Hawick has known, in August 1832, organised by a special Reform Committee. The day started with 10 drummers and fifers parading through the town at 6 a.m. and 9 a.m. Bells were rung, the Flag was displayed from the Town Hall, and the flags of the trades and societies hung along the High Street. The crowd was estimated at 10–12,000, and the parade itself, starting at 1 p.m., consisted of over 1200 people in 16 separate sections, accompanied by 3 bands. This included the local landed (Whig) gentry, the Cornet, Magistrates and Council, Tradesmen’s guilds and Freemasons. The parade ended at the Sandbed, where the participants were met by smartly-dressed women and girls bearing flowers. 1,146 people then dined in the open air on the Upper Haugh, catered by 8 of the Town’s hotels. The Chief Magistrate was in the Chair, and other guests included Capt. George Elliot, Sir William F. Elliot, James Elliot of Wolfelee and George Cleghorn of Weens. There were also speeches by Robert Wilson and Rev. James Henderson. There was then a further march back to the Tower Knowe, and celebrations continued in various inns. As a result of the Bill the County had 1316 voters, and Hawick itself had 300 voters added to its electoral roll. However, a Commons Select Committee investigated abuses of the Bill through ‘fictitious voters’ being added, specifically joint proprietors of property arranged between Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. At the election of 1835 there was a procession of voters and supporters from Hobkirk, Kirkton and Cavers marching into Hawick, accompanied by bands and banners. When it became clear that Lord Scott (the Tory candidate) was going to win, the crowds became quite unruly and the Riot Act was read, with a troop of the Scots Greys being called. The Reform Act of 1868 gave the vote to all male householders, and at that time the Hawick Burghs constituency was formed – ‘Huz and Mainchester carried the Reform Bill’[T].

the Reform Committee (thu-re-for-mi’-kee) n. body in the late 1820s and early 1830s refreshment composed of townsmen campaigning in support of the Reform Bill.

refreshment (ree-fresh-min’) n. a euphemism for an alcoholic drink.

ref\(t\) (ref\(t\)) pp., poet. torn, rent, pulled assunder – ‘The blasts o’ the winter, sae bitter and keen, Had ref\(t\) the sward o’ the brightest green’ [JT], ‘...I sadly mourn for my ain true love That was ref\(t\) away frae me’ [JCG].

refugee (ree-few-jee) n. a young person sent to a rural area from a city to protect them from air raids etc., particularly during World War II, also sometimes referred to as an ‘evacuee’. In Hawick they were usually children from the Edinburgh area. There were also Belgian refugees at Silverbuthall during WWII; they arrived about 1915, and most of them returned to Belgium in 1919.

guard (ree-gard) v., n. regard – ‘...and on-lawed, conforme to the acts of the town, in reg\(a\)rd of their own confessions ...’ [BR1679], ‘No sermon, in reg\(a\)rd Mr Douglass who was appointed by ye Persbyterie was labouring under a fever’ [PR1712], ‘...who was most sharplie rebuked in reg\(a\)rd both that he is a magistrate in this town and one of ye number of ye Elders’ [PR1716], ‘Daurin the whummin flude without reg\(a\)rd For ocht, bar rinnin fish, this side o Hell’ [DH], ‘Wi sma reg\(a\)rd For Hawick toon And even less For Maggie Broon ... ’ [DH], ‘...an’ was enlightened on the poseetion as reg\(a\)ards the Common-Ridin’’ [BW1939].

Regal Bailie (ree-gul-ba-lee) n. also called a Bailie of Regality, title sometimes used for the representative of the Lord whose lands included a burgh, with certain administrative and legal powers in that burgh, including collection of rents, taxes at fairs, etc. The Douglasses of Drumlanrig appointed a local man to hold this position up until they relinquished the Barony in about 1670. In Hawick this was for a long time the Chamberlain of the Scotts of Buccleuch. The office was held by the Duchess of Buccleuch until she failed to take the test legislated by Parliament for Charles II. So in 1686 the office was granted to Walter Scott of Alton. Hawick’s Regal Bailie remained a powerful local figure until the abolishing of regalities by Heritable Jurisdictions (Scotland) Act of 1747 – ‘Gedeon Scott of Falnash, regal bailie to the Duchess of Buccleuch ...’ [BR1699] (see also Bailie o Regality and Baron Depute).

regality (ree-ga-li’-ee) n. an administrative and legal area, typically larger than a barony, and usually given by the Crown. The jurisdiction of a regality superceded that of the Sheriff of the County. The Lord of the Regality had a distinct court, with its own clerk and officers, overseen by a Bailie of Regality. There were formerly 7 such jurisdictions in Roxburghshire, namely Glasgow (the former lands of that Bishopric), Hawick, Jedburgh, Kelso, Liddesdale, Melrose and Sprouston. Hawick was formerly referred to as a Regality, presumably because it was administered as the equivalent of a Royal Burgh, even although it is unclear whether it was created as such by the Crown. The first such mention appears to be in 1358 (although since this is along with Sprouston, and it may be that only Sprouston was a regality at that time, with Hawick being just a ‘free barony’) is unclear if they were both distinct regalities). Hawick was reerected into a free barony and regality in 1686, since it has fallen to the Crown after the death of the Duke of Monmouth; this new charter granted the barony and regality to Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch. It ceased to be a regality when heritable jurisdictions were abolished by Parliament in 1747, with the Duke of Buccleuch being compensated £400 as a result – ‘Aumn the egregious and insolent abuse commit by Walter Rowcastell upon William Scott, regall balyrea of the regallity of Hawicke ... ’ [BR1693].

Reginald (re-ji-nuld) n. of Durham or Coldingham (d.c.1190) medieval hagiographer, who gave one of the first mentions of Hawick in his account of the miracles of St. Cuthbert, written in the 1160s and 1170s. Reginald’s work is partly a recounting of stories told by Aelfric (or Aelred) of Rievaulx, a monk from Durham who travelled around the 1040s; but other parts of Reginald’s book are contemporary (he was certainly alive in the 1150s), and hence the date of the local tales is hard to pin down. In fact the last 6 chapters cover stories relevant to Teviotdale, the chapel in the Slitrig, Dolphinsus (Rector of Cavers), etc. The story with the most specific Hawick connection concerns Seigiva and Rosfritha, said to be from Hawick (and thus, probably the first known residents) who witness the mysterious appearance. of a candle at a chapel dedicated to St. Cuthbert in the Slitrig valley (identified with a site at Cogsmoill). He also wrote histories of St. Godric (with whom he spent time personally), St. Oswald (King of Northumbria), and possibly St. Ebba.

region (ree-jin) n. one of nine units into which Scottish local government was split following Reorganisation in 1974. Each region was divided into separate 'districts', Hawick being in the Borders Region until further reorganisation in 1995.

Regional Council (ree-ji-nil-koon-sul) n. the higher level of local council between May 1975 and April 1996. Hawick's council being that of the Borders Region with headquarters in Newtown St. Boswells. Regional councils were responsible for education, social services, roads and transport. Both District and Regional Councils were replaced by unitary authorities in 1996. Hawick lying within the jurisdiction of the Scottish Borders Council.

the Registrar's (tha-re-re-jee-strawrz) n. Registrar's office, where civil weddings took place. From 1974–97 it was located at 12 High Street, which is now a grade B listed building. Latterly the office has been within the Town Hall. The first Registrar in Hawick was schoolmaster Anthony Dodds 1854–87, following the Registration Act of 1854. James Shiel was appointed as the first Registrar of Wilton about the same time. Both of these men would operate out of their own homes, on Allars Crescent and Laing Terrace, respectively.

registrat (re-jis-trat) pp., arch. registered – ‘...and consentis that thir presentis be insert and registrat in the buikis of Counsale ...’ [SB1599], ‘...be insert and registrat in the Books of Counsil and Session ...’ [BR1672].

regrat (ree-grat) n., arch. regret – ‘...so farre sympathisez with yow ...as to afford yow, att least, some regrate’ [SB1670].

regrait (ree-grat) v., arch. to regret – ‘Being acertenit be my servand of the slauchter of zour frind, quhilk I regrait from my verr y hart ...’ [SB1584].

regratin (ree-gra-tin) n., arch. the act of re-selling, buying a commodity in order to profit from reselling it – ‘Various persons are finned ‘for breach of the proclamation of His Majesty’s Privy Council, against regrating of victuals and forestallers’ [JW1699].

reid (reed) adj. red – ‘hei hed a right reid nose on un’, ‘The sun was reid as a furnace mouth, As he sank on the Ettricke hyll; And gloamyne gatherit from the easte, The dowye world to fill’ [JTe], ‘For in the han’ o’ the Lord ther is ane cup, an’ the wine is reid ...’ [HSR], ‘The reid hairst moon climbs steep and slow a far September sky ...’ [JYH], ‘...till the brae-face was taissett an the gress ran reed wul bluid’ [ECS], ‘Hei girned at the reid, an’ grat at the blue ...’ [DH], ‘Frae reid to creamy-white ... Daft berries for daft days ...’ [DH], ‘The reid rose dwines and her petals lie ...’ [WL], ‘...To catch a glimpse yont the grey reek O’ the distant ruifs o’ reid’ [WL] (also spelled ‘reed’).

Reid (reed) n. Agnes ‘Nanny’ (18th C.) cook and chambermaid at Stiches in 1785 and 1786, when she was working for Gilbert Chisholme. Rev. Alan minister of the combined Parish of Newcastleton and Canonbie from 1889. In 2008 he moved to Kirnoss. Rev. Alexander (d.1640s) became minister of Ashkirk in 1619. He donated £11 merks towards the building of Glasgow University Library in 1636. His is probably the name transcribed ‘M. Reid, Ashkirk’ (probably ‘Mr.’ is meant) on the ‘Confessions’ of Faith, signed in Hawick in 1638. Robert Cuthbertson signed beside him as Reader, suggesting he had an assistant at that time. He married Janet Shaw and their children included John and William (who became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1648). He was present during the admission of Harry Elliot as minister of Bedrule in 1640. He witnessed a baptism for Rev. Robert Cunningham of Hawick in 1640 (who also married a Shaw, and so possibly their wives were related). He died sometime between 1645 and 1649. He married Janet Shaw and their children included John and William (who became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1648). Andrew (17th C.) listed as undermiller at Borthaugh among the ‘deficient’ on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. Andrew (18th/19th C.) farmer at Hassendean Knowe, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. He could be the lawyer who paid the horse tax in Jedburgh in the 1780s. Derek Robert Headteacher of Burnfoot New Community School, appointed in 1996. He was awarded a C.B.E. in 2002 for sevices to education and was Hawick Citizen of the Year in 2006. Rev. Edward Thomas Scott (1871–1938) Rector of St. Cuthbert’s Kirk 1903–1910. He came from a well-known Glasgow family, with 3 of his brothers being Deputy Lieutenants of that city. He had previously been assistant at St. Paul’s and then St. Mary’s Cathedral, both in Edinburgh. For most of his incumbency in Hawick he was assisted by Rev. A.L. Ross. His time as Rector was marked by acclaimed Evensong services, which attracted people from other local churches. There were several improvements to the church during his time, including chairs to replace the pews, and his gift of an oak chancel screen. He also became Chaplain to Episcopalians at Stobs Camp. He left to become Rector of St. Bride's in Glasgow, later becoming Dean and Bishop of that Diocese and later Bishop of St. Andrews. George (d.1923) local businessman. He was Secretary of the Hawick Baptist Kirk for 10 years and Sunday School Superintendent for 6 years. Gordon (1943–) born in Hawick, educated at Hawick and Gala, then at Edinburgh and Oxford Universities, continuing to train as an Episcopal minister. He became Curate of St. Salvador's Church in Edinburgh in 1967, then served as Chaplain of Salisbury Theological College and Rector of St. Michael's & All Saints Church, Edinburgh from 1972. He also served as a member of Lothian Regional Council and Convenor of Lothian & Borders Police Board. He was Provost of Inverness Cathedral 1984–87 and joined the Diocese of Gibraltar in Europe (the Church of England Diocese that covers continental Europe) in 1988. He lived in Gibraltar and Milan, and looked after chaplaincies all over Italy and Malta. He then became Rector of St. Clement’s in Philadelphia. Esther (d.1888) worked at Wester Nurseries from the age of 8, but then took over as servant to Peter Wilson’s family from Jean Renwick about 1830. The pair completed a continuous service of 106 years. She can be seen in a portrait with the family. J. (19th C.) listed in Slater’s 1852 directory as an ‘eating house keeper’ on the Cross Wynd. James (17th C.) resident at Horselee in Cavers Parish in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th/18th C.) resident at Penchrise. His son James was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1709. James (b.c.1790) miller at Newmill on Slitrig. He was there in 1841. His wife was Margaret, and their children included Agnes, William, John, George, Walter, Elizabeth, Margaret, James and Gilbert. He is probably the James, son of William in Acreknowe, baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1788. James S. (19th/20th C.) farmer at Penchrise. His brother John farmed at Barnes, which he took over after his brother’s death. He won several sheep prizes around the 1910s. Jessie Crawford describes him as ‘dour as ditchwater and as hard as nails’. John (16th C.) presented as Rector of Ashkirk in 1552. Nothing else appears to be known about him. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpsley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. His name is recorded as ‘Jak Reid’ and he was probably related to ‘Pait’, who was also listed. John (17th C.) resident of Adderstonelee on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His surname was written ‘Rid’. John (17th C.) resident at Hawthornside according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He paid tax on 2 hearths and was surely related to Thomas, who was also listed there. John (17th C.) recorded as resident at Borthwicksheils in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It is listed under the farms of the Earl of Tarras in Hassendean Parish. John (17th/18th C.) tenant farmer at Raeskwone. He married Isobel Beatie (or ‘Betic’), who was a schoolmistress. In 1721 the Hawick Session requested that he produce a testimonial from his previous parish, since his wife had asked for money for teaching poor children. In 1723 he was described as ‘a well aged man, capable to teach at ye said toun’, when the session agreed to encourage him to teach the poor children in Raeskwone. John (18th/19th C.) coachman at Cavers in 1797, when he was working for George Douglas. His name was written ‘Read’. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at ‘New Appletree-hall’, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he had 4 horses. He could be the John Reid, who was bankrupt by 1817 when there was a court case over an 1802 bill he had with John Allan, involving Adam Ormiston, and John and Thomas (his brother-in-law) Ainslie. Rev. John (19th C.) minister recorded at Castleton in Slater’s 1852 directory. It is unclear which church he may have been minister of, but it is possible he was one of the supply ministers for the Congregational Kirk. John (19th/20th C.) farmer at Barnes near Stobs. He remained a bachelor. When in Hawick he stabled his horse at the Tower Hotel; on day he ignored the advice of the hostlers to take a carriage home and mounted his horse while quite drunk, which subsequently reared and he died in the pend. After his death the farm was taken over by his brother James S. John (19th/20th C.) butcher on the High Street. His brother James died in the South African War in 1901. Katherine (18th C.) housemaid at Minto in 1785 and 1786, when she was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. Kentigern (16th C.) recorded as priest at Hassendean Kirk in 1539. He may have been the actual minister there at that time, with Sir John Duncan and Sir George Scott squabbling over the main benefice. Peter ‘Pate’ (16th C.) tenant in Outersiderig, for whom Sir Walter Scott of How-pasley stood as cautioner in 1569. He was listed as ‘Pait Reid’ and probably related to ‘Jnak’, who was also listed. R. (18th/19th C.) mason in Wilton. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. R.E. (19th/20th C.) President of the Toronto Hawick Common Riding in at least 1926 and 1927. He was presumably originally from the Hawick area. Robert (17th/18th C.) from Langholm, he was rebuked by the Castle-ton Kirk Session in 1709 for having an irregular marriage. Robert (1734/5–1822) labourer at Boghall. His death is recorded in Hawick. Robert (18th C.) recorded as house servant and groom at Stirches in 1788, when he was working for Gilbert Chisholme. Perhaps the same Robert was a servant at Silverbuthall, who married Christian Anderson and had children John (b.1810) and Richard (b.1812) baptised in Wilton Parish. Robert (18th/19th C.) served as overseer for collecting marl from Groundistone and Blackcleuch for the Buccleuch estates, in the period 1799–1807. He may be the same Robert recorded as farmer at Chesters (Southdean) in 1797. Robert ‘Rob’ (b.1791) son of William and Jean, he was born in Wilton Parish. He was a stockingmaker who lived at Roadhead and was known as ‘General Reid’ of Roadhead. He led the Hawick contingent to the Carterhaugh Baa game of 1815, gaining his nickname there. The death of his dog Flora inspired one of the few surviving poems of James Hogg; apparently he had the family bible bound in the dog’s hide after she died. He is listed as a stocking-maker at Roadhead among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835 and 1840. He is recorded at Roadhead in 1841, 1851 (by which time he was a widower) and 1861 (when he is listed as ‘Wool Frame Work Knitter’). He married Esther Cairns in Wilton in 1787. Their children included William, George, Thomas, Alexander and Jane. He is probably the stockingmaker whose child’s death is recorded in 1838. Stan (20th C.) organiser of dances in the Drill Hall, popular on Saturday nights in the 1930s – ‘Ee got intae Stan Reid’s for a tanner And a pass oot on the back o’ eer hand’ [AY]. Thomas (17th C.) tenant in Adderstoneshiel. The will of his wife Margaret Turnbull is recorded in 1682. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as resident at Hawthornside on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is surely related to John, who was also listed there. Thomas (18th C.) along with Thomas Blyth he rented Appletreehall, Knowetownhead and part of Clarilaw from Thomas Turnbull of Knowe in 1763. He is probably the Thomas who witnessed several bap-tisms in Wilton Parish in 1769 and 1770 (sug-estling that he may have been an Elder in the Kirk). Thomas (19th C.) tenant of St. Leonards farm in the late 19th century, when the order-ing of the Curds and Cream became a more for-mal event. It was probably his wife who was painted with Betsy the cow by J.E.D. Murray in 1889 – ‘And hearken ye, hearken ye, friend Tam Reid, Speakin’ loud’s a wee thing risky; Some like when here, A drap o’ good cheer, So dinna for-get the whisky!’ [JEDM]. Walter (d.bef. 1808) roadman in Hawick. He was already deceased when his daughter Margaret died in 1808. Walter (b.c.1805) mason in Wilton, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was living at Kirkstyle (probably the north side of Princes Street, near Dickson Street). He married Elizabeth Ballantyne and their children included John, Walter B., Elizabeth, Robert and Robert Ann. In 1851 his widow was ‘proprietor of houses’ at the same ad-dress. William ‘Willie’ (16th C.) listed in 1544 as ‘Wille Redde servaunte to John Crosser’, among many local Scotsmen who gave their assurances of support to the English. Many of the relevant Croziers were connected with the Slitrig valley at that time. It is possible his name was ‘Reddy’ or some other variant. William (18th C.) resident at Whithope in 1763 when his son Robert was baptised in Robertson Parish, as well as in 1773 when his son Thomas was baptised and in 1775 when an unnamed daughter was born. Other children of his were probably Margaret (b.1755), Isobel (b.1757), Agnes (b.1759), John (b.1761), Robert (b.1763) and Thomas (b.1773). William (18th C.) recorded at Acreknowe in 1788 when his son James was baptised in Kirkton Parish and in 1790 when his son Walter was baptised. He is probably the William who married ‘Angus’ Cavers in Kirkton in 1787. William (18th/19th C.) recorded as farmer at Dodburn, on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1797, when he owned 2 horses. He also paid the dog tax at Dodburn in 1797. William ‘Wull’ (c.1769–1846) sexton and beadle at Wilton for about 50 years and great-grandfather of James Turnbull. In 1835 he was Church Of-ficer at Dowemount, and in 1840 and 1841 was at Roadside. In the 1841 census he was listed at Gibsnose, with his wife Jane. He was one of the people chosen in 1842 to point out the old marches of Wilton. One of his responsibilities was ringing the church bell, and he is said to have complained about how infrequently he got to ring the bell, just before his own funeral. He was known as a great wit, and was unkindly rumoured to be in league with grave-robbers – ‘Wull Reid, hei lifts th’ deid; Collins does the same; Jimmie Riddle is a sweep And resurrection man’ [T]. His wife was Jane and their children included Janet (b.1795), who married their neighbour Thomas Dryden. William (b.1803/4) mason in Wilton. He was listed at Damside in 1840, with the address changed to Roadside, where he was in 1841. In 1851 he was a journeyman mason on Wilton Kirkstyle. His wife was Mary and their children included Helen, William, John, Jane and Walter. Rev. William (b.1823/4) from Forfar, he was a ‘probationer’ of the Free Church in Newcastleton in 1851. Since that church was only established in 1850, he was probably the first person to minister to the new congregation. He is recorded giving a temperance talk in Newcastleton in 1852, and in a directory of that year is incorrectly listed as ‘John’. William J.S. (19th/20th C.) wrote the article ‘Drumlanrig and the Charter’ for the 1938 Transactions (formerly written ‘Red’, etc.).

Reid Acre Brae (reed-ā-kur-brā) n. former name for lands near Newton in Bedrule Parish, recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls.

reid-avised (reed-a-vIzd) adj., arch. red-faced, embarrassed aspect (cf. black-avised).

the Reid Book (tha-reed-book) n. name sometimes given to the handbook-sized set of words for the most popular Hawick songs, published in 1957 along with ‘The Hawick Songs – A Complete Collection’. Carried around and dog-eared over 3 decades it was replaced by the ‘Blue Book’ in 1978 and then the ‘Green Book’ in 2001.

reid-cap (reed-kawp) n., arch. a cruel, mischievous spirit with long teeth, said to inhabit old towers – ‘Redcap’ is a popular appellation of that class of spirits which haunts old castles. Every ruined tower in the south of Scotland is supposed to have an inhabitant of this species’ [JL] (cf. Robin Redcap).

Reidcleuch Edge (reed-klooch-ej) n. Reidcleuch Edge, small hill about 2 km north of Craik village, reaching a height of 392 m. A stream to the east of there is the Red Cleuch, which runs into Shiel Sike, while a stream to the south is Red Cleuch Edge, small hill about 2 km north of Craik village, reaching a height of 392 m. A stream to the east of there is the Red Cleuch, which runs into Shiel Sike, while a stream to the south is Red Cleuch Edge, small hill about 2 km north of Craik village, reaching a height of 392 m. A stream to the east of there is the Red Cleuch, which runs into Shiel Sike, while a stream to the south is reid-coat (reed-kō’) n., arch. the scarlet ladybird. Local children used to pick it up and throw it in the air singing ‘reid-coat, reid-coat, fly away, An’ make the morn a sunny day!’ [GW].

reid-hand (reed-hawn’d) adj., arch. a legal term from the 15th and 16th centuries, meaning caught in the act of a crime, used throughout Scotland. This led to the present use of the phrase ‘caught red-handed’, which was adapted into English, especially after being popularised in Sir Walter Scott’s novels.

reid-keel (reed-keel) n., arch. ruddle, red pigment – ‘Ruddle is ‘reid keel’, plumbago is ‘black keel’” [JAHM].

Reidheugh (reed-, red-hewch) n. Reidheugh, ancient seat of the Elliot family, between Hermitage and Newcastleton. Scott of Satchells suggests that the Elliots received Reidheugh from Robert the Bruce in about 1320. The name first occurs in a rental roll of Liddesdale in about 1376 (worth 15 shillings, ‘per forincecum seruicium reddendo x s’). An Elliot of Reidheugh is referred to around 1400. There is also a story, apparently from a manuscript of the Blackadder family, of an Elliot of Reidheugh called ‘Chieftan of the South’, who was killed in battle along with his 3 sons, but had a daughter Mary who married Cuthbert Blackadder of that Ilk and had a son who was alive in 1447. However, the first definitive record of this being the family seat is when ‘Robert elwald of ye Redheuch’ is mentioned in 1476. A precept for the lands is recorded in 1489, although the date of the original charter is unknown. Robert, the 17th chief lived mainly at the new Larriston house, so Reidheugh became less prominent. That Robert failed to have a male heir and the lands went to his daughter Margaret, who married a son of Eliott of Stobs, whose descendants were the Elliots of Larriston. Thomas Armstrong is recorded as possessor of the lands in 1632. The farm itself was valued at £96 11s in 1678, when disjoined from the former estate of Elliot of Larriston. Robert of Larriston went bankrupt and sold the lands to Christopher Irving of Binks in 1688, but they were repurchased by William Elliot (descendant of the Falnash branch) in about 1730 for his 2nd son, Robert. Around this time the present house and barn were built, with the north and east sides of the farmhouse perhaps incorporating earlier walls. The farm was still valued at £96 11s in the 1788 county valuation and 1811 Land Tax Rolls. The farm suffered greatly in the flood of 1846. Robert’s grandson Robert died in 1915 and in 1918 his sister Anna Mary sold the farm to the tenants, James and Thomas Scott. Thomas Scott sold it to Sir Gilbert Elliott, 10th Baronet of Stobs in 1946. The farm has been modernised, with a small loch created by damming the Rede Burn. A clan museum is also situated there. The precise location of the original tower is uncertain, with locals pointing out one site in the 19th century (recorded in the Ordnance Survey Name Book of 1858) to the south near the railway viaduct, another just to the east of there, where there are some foundations and a third to the west of the farmhouse, where there is an enclosure where a plague has been placed marking this as the ‘Site of Redheugh Tower’ (although there is no real evidence for this). On the opposite side of the Hermitage Water there is another site claimed to be home of ‘Jock of the Park’. And north-west of the farmhouse there is an area of rig lines and field systems (also spelled ‘Redheugh’) and sometimes erroneously ‘Redhaugh’; the origin of the name is probably just ‘red height’, i.e. the height above the Red Burn; it is ‘Redheugh’ about 1376 and is recorded regularly from at least 1476; it was ‘Redheuch’ in 1489, ‘redheuch’ in 1502, ‘Redheucht’ in 1508, ‘Redheueche’ in 1510 and 1515/6, ‘Reidheuch’ in 1526, ‘the Redhwych’ in 1546, ‘the Reidhewght’ in 1547 and 1548, ‘Reidheuch’ in 1550, ‘Reidhucne’ in 1557, ‘Reideuch’ in 1561, ‘Riedheucht’ in 1563, ‘Ridhewcht’ in the 1570s, ‘Reidhewch’ in 1573, ‘Reidhuch’ in 1574 and 1591, ‘Ridhewch’ in about 1580, ‘Reidhewch’ and ‘Readhewgh’ in 1584, ‘Reidheuch’ in 1581, 1583/4 and 1584/5, ‘Reidheuch’ in 1607, ‘Reidleuch’ in 1608, ‘Reidhewch’ in 1613, ‘Reidheuch’ in 1619, ‘Ridhewche’ in 1624, ‘Reidhewche’ in 1632 and ‘Reedhewgh’ in 1694; it appears on Gordon’s c. 1650 map as ‘Reedheuch’, on Blaue’s 1654 map as ‘Redhich’ and is ‘Redheugh’ by the time of Stobie’s 1770 map).

the Reid Lion (Thu-reed-lin) n. the Red Lion Inn, at the Sandbed in the early 19th century, with proprietor Robert Scott. Also a nickname in use for someone in the early 19th century.

Reidmoss (reed-mos) n. Redmoss, farmstead in Liddesdale, just north of Whisgills, on the Tinnis Burn. It was at one time part of the farm of Flatt. It is probably the ‘Redmoss’ listed in about 1376 (in the charters of Douglas of Morton) as a 12-shilling land. In 1541 it was leased to Simon Armstrong (probably of Tinnisburn) and valued at 30 pence. Other lands of the same name are also listed in 1541 as being vacant. It is stated (in a note in Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784) that the former farm of Puddingburn was on its lands. Thomas Wilson possessed these lands, along with Over and Nither Whisgills, in 1632. It is described in 1718 in a survey carried out for Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch, when along with Over Whisgills, Tinnis, Bankhead and Side it consisted of 2390 acres. William Anderson died there in 1781. Thomas Telfer was shepherd there in 1797. There were Turnbulls there in the mid-19th century and Adam Scott was farmer in 1868. David Anderson wrote a song about the old tree his grandfather had planted there. There are remains of other buildings on the Tinnis Burn to the north-west, as well as old rig lines and boundary banks in the area (it is ‘Reidmoss’ and ‘Reidmou’ in 1541 and ‘Ridmos’ in 1632; it marked ‘Redmoss’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

reid-ribbon (reed-ri-bin) adj., arch. bloodshot (of the eyes), having heavily inflamed eye-lids – ‘Reed-ribbon-lin = bloodshot eyes, especially when the lids are inflamed’ [ECS].

the Reid Rose (Thu-reed-róż) n. the Red Rose, Hawick’s first Chinese restaurant, on Baker Street in the 1960s and 70s.

Reid Rowan (reed-row-in) n. burly riever mentioned in ‘The Ballad of Kinmont Willie’. Whether he represents a real person is unclear – ‘Then Red Rowan has hente him up, The starkest man in Teviotdale – ‘Abide, abide now, Red Rowan, Till of my Lord Scroope I take farewell’’, [T], ‘But ere they had won where the wandering moon Lit Essenside Loch with her diamond shoon Red Rowan was galloping free on the heath With his neck outstretched and the bit in his teeth’ [WHO].

Redscar Sike (reed-skawr-sik) n. Redscar Sike, small stream in upper Liddesdale, rising on Lamb Hill and flowing into Cliffhope Burn.

Reid’s Close (reedz-kliś) n. former passageway on the High Street, probably at No. 77. It is recorded on the 1861 census.

the Reidskins (Thu-reed-skinz) n. nickname of the Y.M. Rugby Club.

Reidsmuir Plantin (reedz-mewr-plawn’in) n. Redsmuir Plantation, small wood between Tythecoe and Harwood, on the south side of the Harwood Burn.

Reid’s Relay (reedz-ree-li) n. radio and television cable company, which helped provide Terries with decent signals in the middle of the 20th century. This included some council houses that were refused permission to erect aerials in the 1960s. In the 1930s the firm of George Reid Radio received the BBC signal on a 75 ft aerial, off Croft Road, behind their North Bridge Street premises, and relayed the signal around town by means of cables. The sets to receive the signals required no electrical power, and gave much better reception than a radio set. When TV arrived in the 1950s
Reid Swire

Reid’s installed a TV receiving mast above the Wellogate, and most Hawick households rented their sets and cable connections from Reid’s, although another local firm (Lawrence’s) competed. The end for the company came with the erection of new masts at Ashkirk, and the booster on the Miller’s Knowes.

Reid Swire (reed-swIr) n. former name for the hill on the Border, essentially synonymous with the Carter Bar. This is where the River Rede rises, and was the location of the fray of 1575 – ‘On July seventh, the truth to say, At the Red-Swire the tryst was set: Our Wardens they affix’d the day, And as they promis’d, sae they met’ [CPM] (see also Redeswire).

Reidswire see the Raid o the Redeswire Reidswyre see the Raid o the Redeswire Reid Wat (reed-waw’) n. nickname for Walter Scott, tenant at Chapelhill.

reid-wud (reed-wud) adj., arch. excessively angry, insane – ‘The copper-nosed Kers, the towzy Turnbulls, and the red-wudd Riddерfords’ [ES], working at top speed – ‘Ee’re aither reed-wud or stane-tired’ [GW] (from Old English).

Reid Wullie (reed-wu-lee) n. nickname for William Scott recorded in 1585.

relief (re-leef) n., arch. aid, financial assistance, reimbursement – ‘…that Baylyea Layng should have for his and umquhile Walter Scott their releiff of two hundreth merks …’ [BR1685], a feudal casualty paid to the superior by an heir on entry, freedom from religious oppression (these meanings are now rare).

the Relief Chaapel (thu-ree-leef-chä-pul) n. the Relief Chapel, an early name for Allars Kirk. It was called the Relief Kirk from 1844.

the Relief Kirk (thu-ree-leef-kirk) n. another name for Allars Kirk. The Relief movement, the third Secession from the Church of Scotland, was founded by Thomas Gillespie of Carnock in 1752, with patronage being the main cause of dissent. The cause was boosted by Thomas Boston joining with a large congregation from Jedburgh in 1757. A branch of the Relief Kirk was founded in Hawick in 1810, largely because of the lack of space in the existing town churches. It met for a few months in a tent on the Common Haugh, then in the Tabernacle and the Town Hall, before the new church was built on the Cross Wynd in 1811. The Church Officers originally met in a room in the Fleece Inn (which was run by one of the founders). The church was original referred to as the Relief Chapel, changed to Relief Church in 1844. It merged with the Secession Church to form the United Presbyterian Church in 1847 and with the Free Church in 1900. Allars Kirk in Hawick closed in 1948.

Relton (rel-tin) n. John (18th/19th C.) grocer at the Sandbed, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Since the name is otherwise unknown, it is possible this is a transcription error. Probably the same man was also agent for William Welch, a carrier who operated between Hawick and Edinburgh.

remain (ree-niin) n., arch. remainder, unpaid balance – ‘...and appoints him James Paterson, under miller, to pay him ake remain of his Burgess money ...’ [BR1694].

Rennaldburn (re-uld-burn) n. former lands to the east of Eskdalemuir. It was once a seat of a branch of the Scotts. The later farmhouse there is said to have been the first house built by Thomas Telford when he was an apprentice – ‘Warn Davington, and Rennelburn, with Tandhill bold and free, To meet me in full armour, the mortn at Woodhouselee’[WSB] (spelled variously ‘Renaldburn’, ‘Renalburn’, etc.; there are lands with a similar name in Jedburgh Parish).

Rennie (re-nee) n. John (19th C.) member of the committee for Hawick Baptist Church around 1880 and Treasurer of the Chapel Building Fund. He was still Treasurer in the 1890s. William (15th C.) mentioned at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1493. His name is recorded as ‘Willelmo rany’. An ox was stolen from him, from the house of Robert Aitkin in Minto. He could be the same man recorded as 1494/5 as ‘raix’ for what seems like the same crime.

Rennison (re-nil-sin) n. Richard (b.1803/4) born in Bedrule Parish. He was listed as a member of Allars Kirk in 1829, either as Liddesdale carrier or candlemaker (the other surely being his father). In 1851 he was a ‘Pensioner’ on the Back Row. In 1851 he was ‘Chelsea Pensioner; Blind’ and a lodger on O’Connel Street. In 1826 he married Isobel Annison. His wife was Isabel, and his children included Margaret, Isabel, Richard, Barbara, Elspeth and William. Richard (b.1763/4) listed as a member of Allars Kirk in 1829. 2 men of the same name were recorded, one a Liddesdale carrier, the other a candlemaker; they were surely father and son. In 1841 he was a pauper living with blacksmith William Bowie on the Mid Row (also ‘Ronaldson’ and variants).

the Renny Watson Trophy (thu-re-nee-wat-sin-trö-fee) n. trophy competed for annually at Hawick Golf Club, named after Sir William Renny Watson.

rennygull (re-nee-gul) n., arch. a impudent, unruly person.

Renouf (re-noof) n. Frederick Manse (b.1849/50-1915) born in the Channel Islands, he came to Hawick to be a servant at Wilton Lodge in the householder of David Pringle. He was later proprietor of the Washington Hotel. He had a dispute with his brethren in the Hawick Home Mission, over his involvement in the liquor trade. However, he was President of the organisation in 1904. His last address was given as Royal Bank House, Hawick. He married Agnes Hanining or Robison in Newington, Midlothian, and she died in Hawick in 1911.

renommit (re-nō-mi’) pp., poet. renowned, famous – ‘Ane a man was renommet akordin’ as he had liftet up æxes apon the thick tries’ [HSR], ‘An’ sleyet renommet kings: for his mercie induirs forevir’ [HSR].

rental (ren-tul) n., arch. a register of rents due by tenants – Rentall of the Dutches of Buccleuchs lands of the baronie of Hassindean and lands of Hawick Fernes & money rent thurf sett stock and teynd Att Hawick’ [Buc1692], v., arch. to admit someone as a tenant – ‘...to haue enterit, ressauit and rentallit, and be the tennour heiror of his mercie induurs forevir’ [HSR].

Renton (ren’-in) n. William (b.1865) second youngest of a family of 10, son of ploughman William and Janet Purves. In 1926 he wrote a memoir of his early life, which contains some interesting snippets of local flavour. The family moved around the Borders, living at Kinninghall near Hawick for a year, and he finally settled in Galashiels.

renunce (ree-nuns) v., arch. to renounce, resign, repudiate – ‘...and the said James of Murray sall discharge, renunce, and gif oure all apprising of the landis of Kirkurde ...’ [SB1591].

renuncit (ree-nun-see’, -si’) pp., arch. repudiated – ‘Compeared the haill Council, and voluntarily of their awin free will renuncit and overgave their quarterings of the soldiers to the town’s use ...’ [BR1644].

Renwick (re-neeek) n. Alexander (18th/19th C.) draper and stocking manufacturer on the Howegate, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Allan (19th C.) hosiery manufacturer of the early 1800s, operating on the High Street. Andrew (17th C.) cottar at Gatehousecote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Benjamin ‘Benjie’ (b.1800) son of James, he was born at Appotside. He was a mole-catched in Hobkirk Parish and apparently very popular in the district. He helped with shooting parties, and was also said to be a poacher. Charles (b.c.1802) son of Francis and Mary Jerdon and probably grandson of Francis and Margaret Rae. He may have been related to the Renwicks of Blackleemouth. He lived in Hobkirk Parish and married Margaret Hislop. Their children were Mary (who married Alexander Davie), Isabella (married Adam Rutherford) and Robert (married Isabella Scott). Francis (18th/19th C.) farmer at Nether Bournemouth, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 horses. He could be the Francis whose son James was baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1778. George (17th/18th C.) Hawick man who kept an inn (or ‘ane change’). In 1702 he was fined for selling ale Henry Hardie on Sunday. He was probably the George, resident of the westside of Hawick, who is recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He may be the same man as the flesher who is listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He could be the George, married to Margaret Wright, whose children included: Robert (b.1670); Margaret (b.1674); Janet (b.1676); and Isobel (b.1678). George (17th/18th C.) flesher in Hawick. He may have been son of the earlier George. He was probably the flesher who was among the young men fined for their part in the disturbances of the Common Riding of 1706. He was on the short-list for candidates for Cornet in 1710 and 1712 and was elected in 1712. He witnessed baptisms for John Ekron in 1718 and 1721. He is probably the George who married Janet Purdom in Hawick in 1714 and whose children included Helen (b.1719), Margaret (b.1721) and Janet (b.1723). George (1747/8-1854) resident of Branxholmtown. He is recorded there in 1841, with his wife and daughter Elizabeth. His wife was Agnes Ewart (1867/8–1843). He is buried at Teviothead. Gideon (18th C.) butcher in Hawick. He is probably the Gideon, son of William and Margaret Boyd, who married Katherine Miller in 1771, and whose children included: Jane (b.1771); Janet (b.1775); William (b.1778); Gideon (b.1781); and Catherine (b.c.1785), who married William Richardson and emigrated to Canada. His daughter Janet married John Gibson, and was murdered by him in 1813. Gilbert (15th C.) listed as ‘Gilbert Ranwyk’ in the 1491/2 will of Sir David Scott of Brauxholme. His progeny were bequeathed 20 shillings. He could be the Gilbert listed as a rebel in 1502, along with Thomas Grahamslaw and Thomas Scott, rebels involved in the murder of Patrick Hepburn. Humphrey (15th C.) recorded as ‘Wmfrao de Ranwyk’ in 1453 when he witnessed a sasine. Humphrey is probably the James living at Headshawhill along with ‘Pail’ Murray. Robert is listed after him, so presumably his son or brother. Most of the other witnesses were local men, but it is unclear where their lands were. Isabella (b.1826/7) from Inveresk, she was a milliner and dressmaker in Hawick. She was listed on Buccleuch Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 she was at about 7 Buccleuch Street with her younger sister Elizabeth. James (16th/17th C.) tenant in Galalaw in 1628 when he was on a list of men accused by the Earl of Buccleuch of chopping down his trees at Todshawhaugh or Trinitylands. James (1700/1–89) tenant farmer in Mangerton. He married Elizabeth Bell, who died in 1786, aged 88. Their daughter Betty (1742/3–1829) married teacher Robert Dickson. James (18th/19th C.) mole-catcher who lived at Howashiels. His children William (b.1789) and Janet (b.1792) both died young, but he moved to Appotside where another William (b.1794) and Janet (b.1796, mother of tailor James Grieve) were born, as well as Benjamin (b.1800, also a mole-catcher). He is probably the James living at Midburn in 1790 when his son George was baptised. James (18th/19th C.) merchant in Hawick in the early 1800s. James (1843–1910) born in Roberton, son of William and Jane Nichol. He was a hosiery manufacturer in Hawick. He conducted business in Dumfries for a while, returning to Hawick in 1888 to found James Renwick & Co., Ltd, hosiery manufacturers of Commercial Road. He may also have had Mansfield Mills built (or extended) on Mansfield Road. He was associated with the temperance movement and East Bank Church. In 1869 he married Jeanie Laing (1843–1927), who was grand-daughter of James Hogg, writer of ‘Teribus’. He had 4 surviving sons, 2 of whom (James and Robert Hogg) continued in the hosiery business. His 7 sons were: William (1870–c.82); Adam (1872–c.84); James (b.1874), who died in infancy; James (b.1875), who followed him into hosiery manufacturing; Robert Hogg (1877–1949), also a hosiery manufacturer; George; and William (b.1833). He died at Wilton Hill. James (b.1875) son of James and Jane Laing. He was a great-great-grandson of James Hogg, writer of ‘Teribus’. He was educated in Dumfries and at Tevioet Grove, then worked in the family hosiery firm, becoming a partner. He represented Tevioet Ward on the Town Council for 22 years from 1906, was elected Magistrate and was Provost 1922–28. His Provostship saw the High Street paved with setts, completion of the expansion of the sewage works, and the building of Moat Crescent and Renwick Terrace, the latter being named after him. He was also Chairman of the committee that built the first council houses at Oliver Park. A keen Common Riding supporter, his son James junior was Cornet while he was Provost, and he started the tradition of the Provost’s Tent. He opened ‘the Hut’ in the year that his son was Cornet. He was Chairman of the Unionist Association for many years, as well as a Callants' Club President and was an elder of the East Bank Church. He was a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He was on the committee that formed Hawick’s first Scout troop on 1909 and was one of the first 2 scoutmasters in Hawick. He can be seen in a film clip of Baden-Powell’s visit to Hawick in 1910. He married Miss Lefevre of Canterbury in 1902. They lived at Fernbank on Wilton Hill. James (20th C.) son of Provost James. He worked for the family knitwear business and moved to London to represent the firm there. His son Geoffrey was a Lieutenant in the Royal Engineers, who was murdered by a fellow soldier while serving in Germany. James ‘Jim’ (1953– ) Hawick rugby player, at Centre, a born West-ender and electricity linesman by trade. Educated at Drumlanrig and the High School, he played rugby for the P.S.A. and the Harlequins. He first played for Hawick R.F.C. at age 17, and for Scotland at 19, where he went on to gain 52 caps. He was also represented the British Lions. He was Common Riding Chief Guest in 2018. Janet (18th C.) cook and chambermaid at Orniston in 1785, when she was working for Thomas Currer. Jean (d.c.1834) servant with Peter Wilson’s family for 52 years, staying until her mistres died. She is seen in a portrait with the family in about 1830, along with her successor Esther Reid. John (17th C.) recorded in 1650 as ‘John Renneck’ when he was tenant of Todshawhill along with ‘Pail’ Murray. John (1645/6–96) buried in Teviothead cemetery. His is one of the earliest legible stones. The reverse records another John. John (17th C.) resident of Heads- shaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. John (17th C.) resident at ‘Chisholme and Widburn’ in Wilton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Both ‘John Renick elder and younger’ are listed, and jointly paid tax on 2 hearths. John (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 at Phillhope, among those ‘not Listed yet payd yr’. John (17th C.) listed among the poor living at Hassendean on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (d.1715) smith in Robertson. He is buried in the cemetery there. John (18th C.) one of the earliest known of the Hobkirk Renwicks. He had a son Robert who was baptised in 1726. He could be the John in Macksdide where his wife Bessie Miller is recorded dying in Hobkirk Parish in 1760. John (18th/19th C.) merchant in Hawick. He paid the cart tax in 1797. He married Euphan Matthewson in Ashkirk Parish in 1795. Their children (baptised in Hawick Parish) included: Thomas (b.1797); James (b.1799); Alexander Walter (b.1802); Janet Elizabeth (b.1805); and Ann Scott (b.1812). The witnesses in 1797 and 1799 were Bailie Andrew Scott and Walter Pringle. John (b.1816) son of Matthew, he was a dyker in Hobkirk Parish. He married Janet Hall, sister of James Grieve’s widow. He had a daughter and emigrated to Canada, along with his brother George. John Elliot ‘Elliot’ (1936–2006) son of Jock and Maimie, he was educated in Hawick and apprenticed as a printer with the Hawick Express. He was one of the founders of Buccleuch Printers. He was long associated with the Salvation Army, being bandmaster there for 37 years. He also played in the Saxhorn Band and in the band of the Royal Tank Corps during his National Service. He was also a member of the Rotary Club, achieving a ‘Paul Harris Fellowship’, the highest honour given to Rotarians. He married Margaret in 1956 and they had a daughter, Linda. Joseph (b.c.1807) fuller in Wilton. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish, being a fuller at Damside in 1835, and a cloth dresser at Dovemount in 1840 and 1841. His wife was Elizabeth and they had a daughter, also Elizabeth. Margaret (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when she was at Hassendeanbank. Margaret D. (b.1828/9) daughter of William and Janet. She was born in Jedburgh and lived in Minto. There she ran a school around the 1800s, separate from the Parish school, and probably for girls. Martin (15th C.) witness to the document of 1488 in which Greenwood (i.e. Girnwood) and the Lyne were leased by Sir Thomas Turnbull to Robert Scott of Allanhaugh. It was signed at St. Mary’s Church in Ettrick Forest and his name appears as ‘Martino Ranwik’. Matthew (18th/19th C.) lived at Bonchester and Drythropple. He married secondly Helen Robson. They had twins John and Mary and also a son George, both sons becoming dykers. Michael (18th C.) another early Renwick of Hobkirk. He lived at Kirknowe and later at Howahill and Unthank. His children included John (baptised in 1753), Margaret (b.1757) and Robert (b.1771). He was probably related to Andrew, who live at Howahill and then Stonedge, and had children Helen and Thomas. Miss ?? (19th C.) daughter of Thomas. She took over the post office at Bonchester Bridge, probably in the 1860s. The letter carrier appointed was James Watson. Due to some irregularity with the deliveries they were both relieved of their positions. Moses (1771–1851) son of Robert. He was a thatcher by trade. He married Violet Temple and they had a dozen children: Robert, shepherd at Dryhope; James, emigrated to America; John, who married Janet Henderson and emigrated later in life; Jessie, married blacksmith Robert Scott; Betty, married Lanton blacksmith Thomas Anderson; Helen (or Nelly), married Andrew Kerr, Jedburgh mason; Mary, married Robert Flick; Violet, married William Redshaw from Kalewater; Isabel, Margaret and Cecily, all of whom emigrated; and Charlotte, who married Robert Rutherford. revin  (v-in)  n., arch. a ravenous eater.

the Revolution  (thu-v-lin)  n.  religious and political change in Britain in 1688 and 1689, leading to the removal of James II, a Catholic, and his replacement by William I (of Orange) and his wife Mary II, both Protestants. It is sometimes known as ‘the Glorious Revolution’ or ‘the Bloodless Revolution’. It also led to the throwing out of the episcopalian system and the setting up of the Reformed, Established, Presbyterian Church of Scotland in 1690. As a result of these changes there was a dearth of Presbyterian ministers, which left Hawick Parish vacant for about 2 years, while Wilton, Cavers and Hobkirk were vacant for 5 years. Formerly Episcopalian ministers who refused to ‘pray for William and Mary’ were denied their livings. In the 33 parishes in the Presbyteries of Jedburgh, Selkirk and Kelso, only 3 ministers (at Kirkton, Abbotrule and Ancrum) obeyed the order, the others being ejected. This included John Langlands of Wilton, Thomas Somerville of Cavers and John Liddle of Hobkirk. The Scottish Episcopal Church took a long time to re-establish itself. These events also affected Scottish history for the next several decades, with Stuart sympathisers, Jacobites, staging uprisings in the Highlands.

rewaird  (wärd)  n., arch. a reward – ‘...an’ in keepin’ o’ thame ther is grit rewaird’[HSR], Rewcastle

‘...Trewlie ther is an rewaird for the righteous’ [HSR], v. to reward – ‘...happie wull he be that rewairds ye as ye hae serfet us’ [HSR], ‘The Lord rewairdet me akordin’ til my richteousniss ...’ [HSR].

Rewcastle see Ruecastle rewe (roo-ul) v., arch. to become entangled, to entangle, ravel (noted by J. Jamieson; also written ‘rewl’; cf. revel).

reyflake (re-flāk) n., poet. robbery – ‘Trustna in oppressione, an’ becumna vaine in reyflake ...’ [HSR].

rexive (reks-iv) adj., contr., arch. respective – ‘Rentall of the Dutches of Buccleugh ... made by the Chamberlaines in ther rexive charges as fol lowes ...’ [Buc1696] (used in legal documents as an abbreviation).

the Rhymer (thu-rī-mur) n. another name for Thomas the Rhymer.

Rhymer’s Croft (ri-murz-kroft) n. former lands in Ashkirk. It was part of the estate of Archibald Cpehrane of Ashkirk in the early 1800s. It is unclear exactly where it was situated.

Rhymer’s Glen (ri-murz-glen) n. supposedly the place where Thomas the Rhymer was transported to the land of the fairies for 7 years, being a small burn that flows towards the Tweed south of Melrose – ‘The Huntly burn sings low and sweet, The Rhymer’s glen is green, And on its bank this night I’ll meet My winsome Fairy Queen’ [JT].

rial (ri-ul) n., poet. a member of a royal family or the nobility – ‘Mak’ thair riolyse like Oreb, an’ like Zeeb ...’ [HSR], ‘Til bin’ thair kings wi’ cheens, an’ thair riolyse wi’ fettirs o’ em’ [HSR].

rib (rib) n. a raised ridge in knitted fabric. Formerly these were knitted on separate machine from the main items, and the workers were paid higher wages than those working the standard frames.

ribbin (ri-bin) n. ribbing, a set of raised ridges in knitwear, common on cuffs and other specific parts of a garment, often described as ‘1/1’, ‘2/2’, etc., depending on the stitches used.

rib dragger see dragger

ribe (riib) n., arch. a colewort with a tall stem, a cabbage plant that has failed to grow a useful head – ‘Ribe, Rybe, A colewort that frows tall with little or no leaf. Cabbages, that do not stock properly, are also called ribes, Roxb.’ [JoJ].

rib tops (rib-tops) n., pl., arch. ribbed part at the top of a sock or other item of hosiery (noted by E.C. Smith).

Riccalton see Riccarton

Riccarton (ri-kar-īn, -kar-tin) n. farm high up on the Oxnam Water. This is probably the place referred to in a charter to the Riddells of that ilk in the mid-12th century. 2 men from here (Adam ‘de Rukelton’ and Adam ‘de Rykeldon’, possibly the same name twice) signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. The farm belonged to Lord Jedburgh in the 17th century and the Marquis of Lothian in the 18th century (not to be confused with ‘Riccarton’, although the origin of the name may be similar, here probably being ‘Ricael’s hill’ from the Old English personal name plus ‘tun’ for ‘hill’; the name is first recorded as ‘Richeldown’ in 1150).

Riccartoun see Riccarton

Riccarton (ri-kar-īn, -kar-tin) n. town around the station on the Waverley Line, about half way to Newcastleton, being a junction with the line linking to Hexham. Before the railway it had no settlement, but it developed into a small village with as many as 120 residents. The main housing consisted of 2 terraces of housing and 4 semi-detached cottages. It had its own school and a branch of the Hawick Co-op. The farm of the same name is about 1½ miles down the Riccarton Burn on the main road, and has the remains of the old peel tower located further up the burn. The tower measures about 13 m by 9 m, now partly covered with a sheepfold, and with 2 rectangular platforms to the north, which were probably other buildings. A stone disc, probably found near here, is in Hawick Museum. The present farm was formerly marked as ‘Nether Riccartoun’, with ‘Over Riccartoun’ at the ruined tower (but still about a mile from the railway village). The lands here are recorded as being worth 7 shillings in a rental list of about 1376 among the charters of the Douglasses of Morton. In 1541 they were valued at 40 shillings and tenanted by Elliots and Croziers. Will Crozier was there in 1590. Adam Beattie was tenant in 1694. The farm was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, covering 852 acres, bounded by Pinglehole, the Liddel Water, Taylorscheuchhead, Roughlee and Laws. The farmhouse at that time is shown fairly close to the modern farm buildings. James Wardlaw was there in 1748. The Grieves of Branxholme Park farmed there in the late 18th century and in 1800 it was leased to surgeon Charles Maxwell (son-in-law of Jardine of Thoralshope). After that Jardines were the tenants. Walter Jackson was there in 1821 and Charles Jardine in at least the 1850s and 60s. There were 5 huts there housing railway workers on the 1861 census. The Riccarton-Hexham line closed in 1956, and the village was abandoned after the Waverley Line closed in 1969. Very little remains to suggest the former size of the community. Synonymous with the middle of nowhere, no road served the area until 1963 when a forest track was opened. A book ‘Riccarton Junction: memories of my life in this railway village’ was written by Kit Milligan in 1994. Graptolites and other fossils have been found in the rocks of the area – ‘Now Riccarton, to some folk, is just a godless plot o railway lines, a limbo for locomotives, clappit doon without regard for the comfort o man nor beast on the top o a bare hill’ [DH] (there are other Riccartons near Kilnamrock, Linnithgow and Hamilton and a Riccalton in Oxnam Parish; the name probably derives from Old English ‘Richard’s farm’, with perhaps a Scandinavian influence on the personal name; it first appears in 1296 as ‘Ricardestoun’, is ‘Ricarden’ around 1376, ‘Ricardtoun’ in 1541, ‘Rikkirtoun’ in 1611 and ‘Rickerton’ in 1694, 1797 and 1821; Blaeu’s 1654 atlas shows ‘N. Riccarton’ and ‘O. Riccarton’, the latter probably being the location of the peel tower, while ‘Rickerton’ and ‘Rickertone’ appears on the 1718 Buccleuch survey, and ‘Rickertown’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Riccarton (ri′kar′-in, -kar′-tin, -kal′-n.) Rev. John (d.1800) only son of Robert. He was licensed by the Presbyterian Classis in Northumberland in 1749 and ordained in 1755 as minister of South Shields. He was then Chaplain at the ‘chapel-of-ease’ in Teviothead (or Caerlenrig) from some time in 1764 or perhaps early 1765. He was presented as minister of Hobkirk in mid-1765 and became minister there at the end of that year. He farmed the lands of Unthank for some time. He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls in Hobkirk Parish in 1785-87. In 1799 there are documents relating to the value of the teinds for the lands of Harwood, suggesting a dispute between him and Sir William Elliott of Stobs on the one hand, and William Elliot of Harwood on the other. In 1780 he married Helen Irvine (or Irving, who died in 1827) and their children were: Janet, who died aged 23; Robert; Ann; William; Patrick; John, who was also a minister; James Thomas, who died aged 22; and Adam Alexander (d.1826), the last surviving son, who died in Jamaica. He wrote an account of Hobkirk Parish for ‘Sinclair’s Statistical Account’ and edited and published the works of his father in 1771–72. Rev. Robert (1691–1769) minister of Hobkirk for 44 years. Born at Earlshaugh in Jedburgh Parish, when his mother was said to be 50. He spent his early years at Venchen near Yetholm and was said to be able to read the bible before he was 5, and was later educated at Jedburgh Grammar School and Edinburgh University. However, he never attended Divinity Hall, having to return to run the farm after his father’s death. Nevertheless, he was licensed by the Presbytery of Kelso in 1717, called to Morton in 1718, but instead became assistant at Bowden. He was ordained at Hobkirk in 1725 and remained there until his death. He was described as ‘a man of uncommon penetration and good taste’ who was ‘an original, independent, and acute reasoner’. He is ‘Mr. Robt. Rickeltoun the mance’ who paid the window tax in Hobkirk Parish in 1748. He was an early friend of poet James Thomson, and his own poem ‘A Winter’s Day’ (first published in 1726) inspired Thomson’s famous ‘Seasons’. He wrote ‘A Sober Enquiry Into the Grounds of the Present Differences in the Church of Scotland’ (1723), which related to the contemporary ‘Marrow controversy’. Other publications on theological topics include ‘The Politick Disputant’ (1722), ‘Letters to a Friend’ in the ‘Edinburgh Christian Instructor’, ‘An Enquiry into the Spirit and Tendency of on Theron and Aspasio . . . ’ (published anonymously, 1762), ‘Dissertation on the Conduct of the Sanhedrim, and Advice offered by Gamaliel’ (1769) and his collected works, which were published in 3 volumes in 1771/2. He married Ann (or Anne), daughter of Henry Scott, farmer at Palacehill, and she died in 1764. Their children included: Jean (b.1726), Robert (b.1727), who must have died young; Margaret (b.1731), who married William Armstrong, schoolmaster in Hobkirk (and was mother of Hawick’s postmaster Robert Armstrong and Maj.-Gen. Adam Armstrong); John, who succeeded as minister of the Parish; Anne; Helen, who married James Murray, minister of Hallstone in Northumberland; and Elizabeth, who married Samuel Irvine, schoolmaster in Witon. Some biographical notes on him were written by Rev. Thomas Somerville of Jedburgh. He was described as having ‘a large fund of originality rather than a highly cultivated understanding’. Thomas (15th C.) recorded as being ‘of Rykylton’ in 1454 when he attached his seal to a bond for Andrew Ker of Altonburn. He is also the last listed member of the ‘retour of service’ to rule on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by Archibale Douglas in 1464/5; his name is given there as “Thomas of Riccarton Burn

Riklintoune’. He was also on the panel to decide on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex in 1464/5, where he is ‘Riklyntone of that ilk’ (also written ‘Ricaltoun’, ‘Riccalton’, ‘Rickleton’ and variants).

Riccarton Burn (ri-kar’-in-klooch) n. stream that rises near Riccarton Junction and flows southwards to join the Liddel Water near Riccarton farm.

Riccarton Cleuch (ri-kar’-in-klooch) n. former name for lands near Riccarton. In the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale they are valued at 40 shillings, with Croziers as tenants. ‘Richardton-cleucht’ was the nickname of Andrew (‘Dandy’) Crozier, who was one of the 10 thieves apprehended in Hawick in October 1567 and taken to Edinburgh tolbooth. In 1586 it was referred to as a ‘fortie schilling land’ when partly occupied by Simon Elliot and released to the Elliots by Francis, Earl of Bothwell (it is ‘Ricardtoun Cleuch’ in 1541 and ‘Ricartoun Cleuch’ in 1586).

Riccarton Cottages (ri-kar’-in-ko’-ee-jeez) n. cottages near the farm of Riccarton in Liddesdale. They are situated on the east side of the B6357. Road contractor Adam Moor and his family lived there in 1861.

Riccartonfit (ri-kar’-in-fi’) n. Riccartonfoot, former farm in the Riccarton area. In 1624 Adam Usher and his son Will were convicted of stealing sheep from there, among other crimes; the tenants were Archie Henderson and John Robison. It was among the farms occupied by Walter Scott of Goldielands in the period 1634–47. Walter Lorraine was tenant there in 1670 (it is ‘Rickartounfoote’ in 1655 and ‘Rickartonefoot in 1670’).

Riccarton Hope (ri-kar’-in-höp) n. small stream that runs roughly eastwards to the south of Bell Hill to join the Riccarton Burn.

Riccarton Junction (ri-kar’-in-jung-shin) n. station on the Waverley Line (Border Union Railway) at the junction with the Hexham line (Border Counties Railway), also known as Riccarton, although that name had formerly applied to the peel tower and farm more than a mile further down the Riccarton Burn. The station building (now demolished) included the Cooperative store and village pub. As well as the station there were also 2 signal-boxes (also demolished), an engine shed, turntable and several nearby footbridges, as well as major culverts along the line. It was opened in 1862 as simply ‘Riccarton Station’, with the ‘Junction’ being added by the North British Railway in 1905. It closed in 1969. Only the remains of the platforms and footings of the stationmaster’s house survive.

Riccartonlee (ri-kar’-in-lee) n. former name for lands near Riccarton, recorded in 1541 as ‘Riccartounlie’, with a value of 5 shillings, and at that time vacant.

Riccarton Mill (ri-kar’-in-mil) n. farmstead on the Liddel Water, to the east of the B6357 near Riccarton Farm. There was presumably once a corn mill there. James Armstrong was tenant there in 1797 and his son James was listed there on Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories (incorrectly as ‘Bickerton Mill’). Another James Armstrong was there in 1852. It was said that at least one person had drowned in the mill lade. It was a public house up until around the 1870s. It is the spot to which Dandy Dinmont directs Harry Bertram in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Guy Mannering’ – ‘But ye can come over the night as far as Riccarton, where there is a public; or if ye like to stop at Jockey Grieve’s at the Heuch’ [SWS] (it is ‘Rickertownmill’ on Stobie’s 1770 map and ‘Rickartont Mill’ in 1821).

Riccarton Schuil (ri-kar’-in-skil) n. former school in Riccarton Junction. It closed in 1963, the same year as the Beeching Report. The remaining children travelled by train to Newcastle- ton or Hawick. The school and schoolmaster’s house survive at the south-east corner of the village. The Borders Archive has registers and log books for 1878–1962.

Riccarton Sike (ri-kar’-in-sik) n. stream in upper Liddesdale, south of Saughtree. It rises on Yarrow Knowe and runs roughly north-west to join the Liddel Water. Note that it is on the south side of the valley, while Riccarton itself is on the north.

Riccarton Toll (ri-kar’-in-töl) n. former toll house on the B6357 near Riccarton Farm. Christian Armstrong was toll-keeper there in 1851. It is marked ‘Riccarton Bar’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. The house still exists.

rice (riis) n., arch. a branch, stick – ‘He travelled with two long sticks – ‘rices’ they were called’ [RM], twigs collectively, brushwood – ‘The calculation of the stake and rice stands thus: Rice at 1s. per cart, 3d. per rood; stakes, eight to the rood, 6d. . . ’[RJE], ‘. . . a cart filled with the small branches of the ash-tree, with the leaves on, – ‘ash rice’, as he described the material to me’ [RB] (also spelled ‘rise’ or ‘ryce’, and sometimes plural).

Richard see Richard Hassendean

Richard (ri-churd) n. Dean of Eskdale, in the Diocese of Glasgow, listed as a witness 1195/6.
Richard

He is the only named person who held this office. However, his surname is unknown.

Richard (ri-churd) n. recorded as Vicar of Ashkirk and chaplain to the Bishop of Glasgow in 1258 when he witnessed a charter. He is recorded as ‘Ricardo vicario de ecclesia de Askirke’.

Richard III (ri-churd-thir-third) n. Richard Plantagenet (1452–85) he was the 4th surviving son of Richard, 3rd Duke of York and Cecily Neville. He had a withered arm and crooked spine, hence his nickname ‘Crookback’. He was Duke of Gloucester and King of England 1483–85, his role in the ‘Princes in the Tower’ incident being a matter of debate. From 1470–83 he was Warden of the English West March, and in 1482 led an invasion into Scotland that took Berwick.

Richardson (ri-churd-sin) n. Adam (18th C.) recorded in the Town Treasurer’s book in 1775 for the ‘libel’ against him ‘for going by the Court with the bailies, before and after the court, 2s. – of which he paid 16d.’; it is unclear which court this was or what the trial was about. The same amount is also recorded in 1756 for the same purpose. He could be the Adam who married Elizabeth Scott in Hawick in 1755 and whose children included Elizabeth (b.1756), Joan (b.1759) and Isobel (b.1761). Adam (18th/19th C.) draper at the Sandbed, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Andrew (c.1790–1869) born in Roxburghshire, son of farmer James and Isabel Scott. He served with the Dunfries Militia, and was at Edinburgh Castle in 1814 when he married Margaret Pollock. He was later a stockingmaker, needlemaker and woollen frame-work knitter in Hawick. He may be the Andrew who was listed among people who recovered from cholera in 1832. He was living on Green Wynd in 1841. His children included: James (1816–74), who married Janet Kyle; Andrew (b.1824), married Mary Paterson; John (1826–95), china merchant, married Harriot Miller; David (b.1830); Alexander (1833–72), married Christina Burns; Isabella (b.1835); Margaret (b.1837); and George (b.1841). Andrew (1799–1876) said to be from Edinburgh. He was painter of ‘Hawick’ from about 1835, which was engraved as the frontispiece to Wilson’s ‘Annals of Hawick’ (by J. Bower). It is a view from Easter Martin’s Hill, to the north of Crumhaugh Hill farmhouse and is also known as ‘Hawick from Crumhaughhill’. It was presented to the Museum by W.E. Wilson. Probably the same Andrew was also active in the England and in the New York area, painting landscapes and coastal views, such as ‘View from Froster Hill, Gloucestershire’, ‘The Bergen Homestead’ and ‘View near Bridgeport, Connecticut’. Andrew (19th C.) foreman at Robert Ewen’s hosiery factory on the Mill Path, recorded in 1866. Bruce Cornet in 2000, hence sometimes referred to as the Millennium Cornet. He also marked the boundaries again the following year, when the full-scale Common Riding was cancelled because of foot and mouth. Catherine nee Scott (1777–1853) daughter of Capt. James, descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane. She went to India to stay with her uncle Lord Harris, and there married her cousin Capt. Gilbert Richardson of the East India Company Marine. She returned to Scotland after the death of her husband and lived at Forge, near Canonbie. She was locally known as a writer, and was a friend of the Carlyles. She wrote ‘Adonia: A Desultory Story’ (1801) and ‘Poems’ (1828). Frazer (19th C.) acted as Halberdier in the latter part of the 19th century, for many years along with Thomas Cook. There is an early photograph of him with his halberd. In 1875 it is reported that he appeared in the ‘much disputed new suit!’ (also spelled ‘Fraser’). Gavin Gala man who wrote ‘For King and Country and the Scottish Borderers’ (1987), an account of the 1/4th Battalion K.O.S.B. at Gallipoli, and ‘After Gallipoli’ (1992), an account of their activities in the rest of WWI. He has been a regular speaker at the Archaeological Society. George ‘the Blue Laird’ (b.1705/6) of the West End. He is probably the George, Burgess and ‘Indweller in Hawick’ who gave evidence at the court case in 1767 regarding the former use of the Common. He was at that time stated to be a widower and staying in part of a house rent free from his son James, given by his uncle James Purcell. He lived in Hawick all his life, except when he was in service as a boy and ‘has been at the Common-Riding of Hawick every year since he could ride a horse’. His daughter Christian died in 1803, by which time he was already deceased. James, who was also called ‘the Blue Laird’ was perhaps his son. related to James, who had the same nickname. He may be the George, son of Andrew, born in Hawick in 1703. He could also be the George who married Betty Shiel and whose children baptised in Hawick included: Helen (b.1734); John (b.1741); James (b.1743); and James (again, b.1747). George (b.c.1785) recorded as ‘independent’ on the 1841 census. His land behind the Back Row is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. He was perhaps son of James and grandson of George (both of whom were called ‘the Blue Laird’). George (1793–1871) son of William and Margaret Laing, he was born in Minto or Yarrow Parish. He is recorded as an agricultural labourer at Wester Parkhill in 1841 and 1851, and in 1861 he was at Deanburnhaugh with his son-in-law. Minto Parish and lived at Hummelknoe Mill when young and later at Parkhill. He married Elizabeth Burton, who died at Wester Parkhill in 1824, aged 30. Their children included: Margaret (1816/7–1894), who married roadman William Robson and died at 13 Dakers Place; William (1817/8–1825); and Helen (1820/1–42). In 1825 (recorded in Wilton and Roberton Parishes) he secondly married Elizabeth Henry, who died at Wester Parkhill in 1846, aged 64. He died at Deanburnhaugh and was buried at Borthwick Waas Cemetery. George (18th/19th C.) resident of London, who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He must have had some local connection. Henry (b.1801) son of James, who was Cornet in 1777, and Jane Scott, from the Milsington Scotts. He was a farmer, living at 37 Loan, recorded as farmer of 15 acres in 1861. He rented several fields from the Duke of Buccleuch. He married Beatrix (or Beatrice) Miller, and their children included: William, who emigrated to Australia in the 1850s; Margaret; Henry (b.1830), who also emigrated to Australia; Robert, who also went to Australia; James (b.1836/7), who was Cornet in 1862; and Walter. James (17th C.) farmer at Branxholme Town. He is recorded holding part of the lease there in 1675 and 1677; in 1677 he was renting along with his mother (whose name is not given). He is surely related to the John senior and John younger, who were tenants in 1671 (perhaps his father and brother). He could be the James, married to Catherine Turnbull (or Rule) whose daughter Bessie was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1671. James (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1712 he was on the short-list of candidates for Cornet. He is probably the James who married Bessie, daughter of William Aitkin in 1715 and whose children baptised in Hawick Parish include: Bessie (b.1716); Agnes (b.1717); Mary (b.1719); Isobel (b.1721), who probably married merchant James Ekron; Helen (b.1723); Patrick (b.1726); and Elizabeth (b.1731). His daughter is probably the Isobel who married merchant James Ekron.

in a wool factory. He is recorded at Salt Hall in the censuses of 1841, 1851 and 1861. He married Helen Ballantyne, sister of ‘Wat the Drummer’. Their children included: James; Jane; Margaret; Isabella, who married John Edgar; Helen; Walter; John; William; Thomas; and Elizabeth. James (b.1800/1–32) from Hawick, brother of spinner John. He served with the 78 Regiment, the Ross-shire Buffs from the age of 17. He died in Colombo, Sri Lanka. James (b.1808/9) from Smailholm, he was a shuttlemaker in Hawick. In 1851 he was living on Slitrig Crescent and employing 2 men. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is described as a cooper and shuttle-maker on the ‘Front row’, as well as being listed as a ‘turner’. His wife was Isabella (from England) and their children included Betsy, Peter, Thomas, Isabella, Helen, David and Margaret. James (b.1813/4) grocer and tea-dealer at 73 High Street in 1851. He was listed as a grocer in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Janet and their children included Andrew, James, George, Margaret, Francis, Janet and William. James (b.1836/7) son of farmer Henry, he was a stone mason, and also farmed fields up the Loan, succeeding his father. He was Cornet in 1862. He can be seen in what is the second earliest known Common Riding photograph, standing with a group of his supporters, with a top hat and full beard. He had daughters Wilhelmina B. and Beatrice Miller. James (b.1851) son of Walter and Mary Murray. He worked as a wool-sorter and served as beadle for Hawick Parish Church. He had a son Robert, who married Ethel, adopted daughter of postmaster James Orr. James M. ‘Jimmy the Printer’ (d.2001) founder of Richardson & Son printer’s business in Dovemount Place. He coined the phrase ‘a day oot o Hawick’s a fortnight wasted’. Jamie son of Murray and grandson of Jimmy. He was Cornet in 2009. Janet (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. She probably ran an inn or shop of some kind. John (16th C.) saddler mentioned in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott in 1574, when he was still owed money from the Laird of Buccleuch. It is unclear if he was local or from Edinburgh. John (17th C.) ‘maltman’ who was listed as a Chamberlain for the Scotts of Buccleuch in the period 1628–33, responsible for part of the rents of Branhxholme and Wilton. In the last testament of the Earl of Buccleuch in 1633 he is ‘John Ritchiesone, maltman to my Lord Bukcleuche’ and owed the Earl some rental money. John (17th C.) writer (i.e. lawyer) who served as Town Clerk in 1638, and probably for a few years before. He is recorded as a notary public in Hawick in 1637. He is recorded as ‘John Ritchartsonne, clerk’ in one of the first entries in the earliest existing Town Book in 1638. He is also there listed as a notary, along with Gilbert Watt, on the short-list for next Town Clerk (with Watt being selected). He was listed as ‘notar publick’ at the signing of the ‘Conferences of Faith and Bond of Union’ (Covenant) in 1638. He was ‘notar’ when elected to the Council in 1648. He could be the same as ‘John Ritchisone, officiar and clerk in the defunctes baroune courtes’ who was owed his yearly fee in the inventory of the deceased Earl of Buccleuch in 1633. John (17th C.) listed as ‘John Ritchiesone elder’ in 1671, when, along with his son John, he leased part of the farm of Branhxholme Town. It seems likely that James, who was farming at Branhxholme Town in 1675 and 1677, was another son. It is possible he was the John, married to Helen Routledge, whose daughter Bessie was born in Hawick Parish in 1654. It is possible that he is the same man as the Town Clerk. John (17th C.) son of John, he was listed as ‘younger’ in 1671 when he was tenant of part of Branhxholme Town. He is probably the John who was married to Bessie Hope, and whose children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included Bessie (b.1670) and John (b.1673). The Hopes were also tenants at Branhxholme Town. John (18th C.) carrier in Hawick who married Isobel Scott. Their children included: William (b.1762), who must have died young; Margaret (b.1764); James (b.1767); an unnamed child (b.1769); and William (b.1772). The witnesses in 1764 were James Scott and James Glendinning. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for wright James Glendinning in Hawick in 1766. John (b.1756) son of William of the Whisky Houses mill. His brother James was Cornet in 1777 and his sister Elizabeth married manufacturer William Wilson. He is described in a Wilson history as ‘John Richardson, father of John the elder’. He may be the Hawick resident John recorded as John (1788/9–1874) spinner in Hawick. In 1841 he was living on the Back Row. He married Esther Robson, who died in 1830, aged 44. Their children included: William (1808/9–71), tailor and clothier, who died at Blackburn, Lancashire; Isabella (1814/5–54), who died at Doon in Canada; Andrew (b.c.1815); John (b.1817), who died in infancy; John (again, c.1821–88); Esther (b.c.1826); Agnes (1825/6–1906); and Robert (1828–77). His family are buried at St. Mary’s. John (1799–1869) son of Walter, manufacturer at Whisky Houses. His own of a horse in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. mother was Christian Gledstains, daughter of the Town Clerk. He was a hosiery worker who lived at Ladylaw Cottage in Wilton in 1851. By 1861 he was at Wellington Street. He married Helen Anderson (who died in 1871, aged 70) and their children included: Walter (b.1824), hosiery warehouseman; James (b.1825); William (b.1827), hosiery manager; John (b.1829), who probably died young; George Wilson (b.1830), wool merchant; Elizabeth (b.1833); and Archibald (b.1837). He was cousin of James, who lived at the nearby Salt Hall at the same time. John (19th C.) inn-keeper of the Crown Inn on Douglas Square in Newcastle on. He was listed as proprietor in 1852, but must have been absent for the 1851 census, when his wife was inn-keeper. He married Elizabeth, from Newcastleton. Their children included Margaret, Diana, Jane, John and Helen. John (1826–95) son of Andrew and Margaret Pollock. He was a china merchant in Hawick. He had a house built on the Kirkwynd in about 1879. His shop, ‘Richardson’s China Warehouse’ was at No. 8 Kirkwynd and can be seen in a photograph of about 1900 (with his wife standing outside). In 1851 he was a woollen shubber living on the Loan and in 1861 was at 12 Back Row. He married Harriet Miller (1827–1910) in 1848. They had at least 12 children, including: Andrew; Robert (b.1855); Catherine; Elizabeth; Andrew (again, b.1860); Harriet (b.1862); Margaret (b.1862); Margaret (again, b.1865); and Joan (b.1867). John (1819/20–88) mill manager of William Laidlaw & Sons. He lived at Dickson Street. He married Elizabeth Henderson, who died in 1907, aged 84. Their children included Isabella, James and Robert W. (who all died young) and John (who died at Parramatta, Australia). He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. John (b.1839) son of Thomas and grandson of James, wool merchant. He worked as a spinner, and then farmed at Newmill-on-Slitrig. He married Betsy, sister of James Elliot of Flex. His sons James and John farmed at Hummelknowes. Bailie John, J.P. (d.1918) heavily involved in religious and temperance matters in Hawick. He married Janet, daughter of George Barclay. Their children were George (who died in infancy), James (headmaster of Preston Street School in Edinburgh), Janet (who married James Edgar) and Mary. John (1859–1892) son of Robert, he took over from his father as partner in Noble & Richardson in 1877, then became partner in Messrs. Blenkhorn, Richardson & Co. in Galashiels in 1880, originally operating at Abbots Mill in Galashiels and opening Eastfield Mills in Hawick in 1883. His partner John Farrar Blenkhorn was married to his sister, while their first manager was his cousin George Hunter. He was also Lieutenant in the local Border Rifles (volunteers). He married Lizzie Maxwell (daughter of the proprietor of the Maxwell Hotel in Gala), and none of their children survived to adulthood. The family lived at 19 Buccleuch Street (Welsh’s). Suffering from ill health, he travelled to warmer climates (Australia, New Zealand and South Africa) for his last 4 years, dying of influenza at Berbeto, Transvaal. Margaret (18th/19th C.) dressmaker at the Sandbed, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Murray local printer of Dovemount Place. He was one of the founders of the Border Horse Racing Association in 1972 and a keen ‘flapping' rider and organiser. Patrick (16th C.) recorded in 1580 as ‘guid broder’ (i.e. brother-in-law) of Hector Turnbull in Belses. The pair, along with Hector’s son Dand, were accused by Jean Hepburn, Lady Wedderburn, of murdering her husband John Hamilton. They were denounced as rebels. Presumably he was married to a sister of Hector Turnbull, tenant in Belses. Bailie Patrick (d.bef. 1707) Hawick Magistrate recorded in 1694 and 1703. He owned a tenement to the south of where the Grammar School was built at the Sandbed. He was ‘present balyeya’ on the list of subscribers for the Kirk bell (although it is unclear if this was 1693 or 1694). In 1694 it is recorded that he settled his account ‘for all that he has paid for the town’s use, for great bell, little bell, steeple, and tolbuith, and all other things, being £38 : 19 : 6 Scots’. He is probably the ‘Patrick Ritchisone’ who is listed ‘eist the water’ among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. In 1699 he and Robert Hardie petitioned for Hawick to be relieved from the ‘freedom of trade’ tax. He witnessed a baptism for Bailie George Martin in 1702 and another for Burgh Officer Alexander Scott, and additionally for Bailie Robert Ruecastle and for ‘Walter Scott herd’ in 1704. He also witnessed several baptisms in 1705, and could be the Patrick who witnessed a baptism in 1687. His wife was Bessie Turnbull. His son John (born in 1688) became a printer’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1706. He is referred to as deceased in 1707 when expenses incurred earlier, during his Bailiship, were discussed by the Council. Richard (16th C.) recorded as ‘master Richardson

Richard Richardson in 1530 when he witnessed the marriage contract between Sir Walter Scott and Janet Ker. His name appears just before the Vicar of Hawick. Richard (b.1809/10) from Kelso, he was a butcher in Lilliesleaf, listed on Pigot’s 1837 directory. He is recorded in 1851 and 1861 on the north side of Main Street. His wife was Jane and their children included William, Isabella, Mary and George. Robert (16th C.) recorded as Dean of Annandale, in the Diocese of Glasgow, in 1548. He received some of the benefices of the Archdeaconry of Teviotdale from 1552. However, this overlapped with John Hepburn, so it is unclear who was really in the office. He resigned in 1565. He was also referred to as Dean of Teviotdale in 1552. Robert (17th C.) leased one fifth of the farm of Branxholme Town in 1690, with Thomas Briggs as cautioner. He was listed at Branxholme Town among ‘The poor in Hawick Paroch’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls.

Robert (1828–1877) son of John and Esther Robinson (whose memorial stone can still be seen at St. Mary’s). He became a clerk with Andrew Oliver, auctioneer’s, and was also assistant to Robert Armstrong in the Post Office. He then became head cashier with a firm in London (Scott, Bell & Co.), moved to Liverpool for a few years (working for Leech, Harrison Forwood), and was then sent abroad for business. In 1870, after about a year in India, he returned to Hawick because of failing health. He then went into partnership with Robert Noble, forming Richardson, Noble and Co., at Stonefield Mills, moving to Glebe Mills in 1873. The partnership was suggested by his brother-in-law John Hunter; they met for the second time in Hunter’s house, trying to conclude their business agreement quickly because both had another engagement that night, only to discover that they were both being admitted as members of Masonic Lodge 111. However, he died after only a few years in business in Hawick. He married Margaret, daughter of William Lawrie and half sister of William Fredrick Diener. He secondly married Jessica, daughter of Andrew Irvine of the Savings Bank. His children were: Minnie, who married John Farrar Blenkhorn; John, partner in Blenkhorn, Richardson & Co.; Ettie Isabella; William Fredrick; and Margaret Lawrie. The family were living at Wilton Hill when he died at only 48. He is buried in the Wellogate.

Thomas (b.1806) younger son of James, who was Cornet in 1777. He was a carrier and coal agent in Hawick. He was listed as a ‘Carrier’s Porter’ on the Mid Raw in the 1841 census. He may be the grocer on the Howegate listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was a carter at 14 Howegate in 1861. He later stayed at Fiddle Inn (7 Loan). He married Agnes Park and their children included: James (b.1834); William (b.1836); John (b.1839), farmer at Newmill-on-Slitrig; and Agnes (b.1842), who became Mrs. Oliver of the Railway Hotel in Jedburgh, and later Mrs. Lamb of the Waverley Hotel in Hawick. Walter (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. It is possible he was the same man as the manufacturer, who would only have been about 18 when the book was published. Walter (1766–c.1808) son of William and Isabel Henderson. He was also manufacturer at Whisky Houses. He is probably the Walter recorded in Hawick as owner of 2 horses in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls and the manufacturer who paid the horse tax in the same year. In 1794 he married Christian, daughter of Town Clerk John Gladstains, and she died in 1816. Their children included: Ann (b.1794); Isabel (b.1796); William (b.1797), who went to London and became a merchant in Glasgow; John (1799–1869); James (b.1801), a hatter in Liverpool; and Elizabeth (b.1802). After his death, in 1815, the mill was sold to Waldie, Pringle, Wilson & Co. Walter (1824–88) son of John, he was a hosiery warehouseman. He lived at Waverley Cottages. In 1847 he firstly married Mary Murray, and their children were: John (b.1848), father of James of the Salvation Army; James (b.1851), wool-sorter and beadle at Hawick Parish Church; Mary (b.1855); Walter (b.1857); and Walter (b.1859). He secondly married Janet, daughter of Robert Henderson, dairyman. William (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His daughter Agnes was baptised in 1734. William (18th C.) wool merchant and manufacturer at Whisky Houses, said to have manufactured the first woollen tweed. His brother James was his partner, as well as being Cornet. In 1787 he was granted land and a waterfall at the top of Sliotrig Cresent by the Duke of Buccleuch. He then had the Whisky House Mill built for him in 1788 for the manufacture of cloth. This factory represented one of the important early steps in Hawick’s tweed industry. He made a kind of blue cloth, and travelled to Leeds to learn the techniques for finishing his cloth. He later manufactured ‘duffle’ for women’s petticoats, as well as carpets. He paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1785–97. He is probably the William listed as ‘Merchant’ on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, with 5 work horses and 1 saddle horse, as well as on the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls.
Richardson-Dickson

He witnessed a baptism for his son James in 1796 (when recorded as ‘Wool Stapler’ (i.e. a trader in wool). He may be the member of Hawick Curling Club listed in 1812. He is sometimes confused with his son Walter. In 1752 he married Isabel Henderson (from the farming family at 53 High Street, probably daughter of Robert), and she died in 1778. Their children were: James, who was Cornet in 1777; John (b.1756); Peter Patrick (b.1759), who had no issue; Elizabeth (b.1761), who probably died young; Walter (b.1766), who took over as manufacturer at Whisky Houses; Betty (1772–1815), the eldest surviving daughter, who married manufacturer William Wilson; Robert (b.1776); and William (d.1808), merchant in Hawick. The witnesses in 1786 were James Henderson (probably his brother-in-law) and Robert Young. William (d.1808) Hawick merchant, son of manufacturer William. He married Isabella (1771–1807), daughter of James Dickson of Alton. Their son William inherited Alton after the death of his uncle Andrew Dickson, and took the additional name of Dickson. He may be the Richardson whose property is marked around 51 and 55 High Street. William (18th/19th C.) resident of ROberton Parish. He married Margaret Laing and their children included: Robert (b.1804); Elizabeth (b.1808); and James (b.1811). William (1774/5–1840) resident of Hummelknowe Mill. In Minto Parish in 1793 he married Margaret Laing and she died in 1831, aged 65. In 1833 he emigrated to Canada, where died. A commemorative stone was erected in Borthwick Waas Cemetery by their son Robert of Oxford County, Canada West. included Euphemia, James (also a joiner), Elizabeth, Margaret and Euphemia (again). William (1827–90) Son of John. He was hosier manager at Walter Wilson & Sons on Allars Crescent. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Ebenezer Robison (whip and thong maker), and she died in 1905, aged 79. They had a son, John (who died in South Africa) and a daughter, Elizabeth (who died in infancy). His grave in Wellogate Cemetery is marked with an obilisk (formerly spelled ‘Richardsone’, ‘Richardsone’, ‘Richartson’, ‘Richartsoun’, ‘Richiesone’, ‘Ritchardsone’, ‘Ritchartsone’, ‘Ritchieson’ and ‘Ritchiesone’).

Richardtoncleucht (ri-churd-tin-kloochit) n. nickname of Andrew (‘Dandy’) Crozier, one of the 10 thieves apprehended in Hawick in October 1567 and taken to Edinburgh tolbooth. His name presumably came from Riccarton Cleuch in Liddesdale, or perhaps Richard’s Cleuch near Overton Bush in the Jed valley (see Riccarton Cleuch).

Richmond (rich-mind) n. James (1834–1923) son of Rev. John, he was born in Southdean. He studied at St. Andrews University 1849–51. In 1851 he emigrated to Australia, becoming a leading sheep breeder in New South Wales. He died in Kincairney, Perthshire. Rev. John (1784–1854) son of Rev. Dr. James of Irvine. He graduated from Glasgow University in 1804, was licensed by Irvine Presbytery in 1809 and was ordained as minister of Southdean in 1810 (being presented by Archibald, Lord Douglas, for whose family he had been tutor). In 1847 he retired to St. Andrews because of poor health and died in Edinburgh. He married Catherine Mitchell (who died in 1887, aged 89) in 1825. Their children were: Isabella Georgine; Margaret Cunningham; James, who became a sheep-farmer near Dunblane and in Australia; John, died young; George Mitchell, army Lieutenant in India, killed in action near Peshawar; and Catherine, died an infant. He published ‘Ode to the Memory of Thomson, in the Temple of the Muses at Dryburgh Abbey’ (1818), ‘A Sermon on Regular Attendance on Divine Worship, in Connexion with the Spirit of the Times’ (1820). He also wrote a description of at 4 Backdamgate by 1851. He was listed as a joiner and a wheelwright on the Crescent in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1861 he was listed as a joiner and cartwright, employing 2 men. His wife was Margaret from Kelso. Their children included Euphemia, James (also a joiner), Elizabeth, Margaret and Euphemia (again). William (1827–90) Son of John. He was hosier manager at Walter Wilson & Sons on Allars Crescent. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Ebenezer Robison (whip and thong maker), and she died in 1905, aged 79. They had a son, John (who died in South Africa) and a daughter, Elizabeth (who died in infancy). His grave in Wellogate Cemetery is marked with an obilisk (formerly spelled ‘Richardsone’, ‘Richardsone’, ‘Richartson’, ‘Richartsoun’, ‘Richiesone’, ‘Ritchardsone’, ‘Ritchartsone’, ‘Ritchieson’ and ‘Ritchiesone’).
Southdean Parish for the New Statistical Account in 1834 and he left many poems in manuscript form. Sir Thomas (d.1317) English leader from Yorkshire. He took part in the siege of Carlaverock Castle in 1300. In 1317 he led a part of the English force under the Earl of Arundel, which totalled perhaps 10,000 men. Sir James Douglas organised an ambush near Lintalee, with escape was prevented by twisting together the branches of young birch trees. He himself was killed, it is said by Douglas. William (b.1828/9) from Mauchline in Ayrshire. He was a grocer and spirit dealer on the Sandbed, along with Thomas Masterton. The pair are listed in the 1851 census and as 'Richmond & Masterton' in Slater's 1852 directory (also written 'Richmont').

Riddell (ri-dul) n. hamlet about 8 miles north of Hawick, between Ashkirk and Lilliesleaf, on the Ale Water, off the B6400. The surrounding area is the old estate of Riddell, formerly a barony, which is now well wooded, and contains the ruins of the main mansion (incorporating the older peel tower) as well as a more modern tower, built nearby on the site of a mediaval motte and bailey. It was the home of the Riddells of Riddell from probably the reign of David I (the mid-12th century, when it was referred to as 'Wester-Lilliesleaf') until they were effectively ruined following the death of Sir John in 1819, and it was sold to the Sprots in 1823. The short version of the story of the loss of the family home is that in the late 18th century Sir John changed the course of the river in order to improve the view, and became bankrupt in the process. In the early 13th century part of the 'demesne' lands were stated to be below 'Harekamb'. The farm was burned in a raid by Turnbuls in about 1502, in which perhaps 450 sheep were stolen, along with 2 cows and goods, and a horse killed. The main lands were referred to as 'Riddell Mains' in 1643 and valued at £910, part of an estate of £1654. By 1678 the estate's value was £1765. Tax was paid on 11 hearths on the estate in 1694, with John Winthrope, William Archibald and Alexander Kennedy being recorded there. Riddell House was an extensive mansion, destroyed by fire in 1943, although the remains can still be seen. It was one of the places where dragoons were posted in about 1676, so that they could scour the local countryside for people attending illegal field conventicles. There are 2 lodge houses for the estate, called 'East Lodge' and 'West Lodge'. The estate also contains stables, a deer larder, two 18th century bridges and other old buildings. There was formerly a chapel on the estate. The mausoleum of the Sprot family lies within woodlands on the estate. The current farmhouse was built by Mark Sprot in 1826 as an estate office and extended in 1898; it contains a Sprot armorial panel, as well as some stones in the garden from the earlier mansion. A ridge about 700 m east of the present farm contains a roughly oval fort. A stone cist was unearthed near Willowbog Plantation on the estate around 1920 and reconstructed in the kitchen garden, although it has now disappeared. Court rolls for the barony court for 1698–1712 are in the National Archives (the origin is probably Old English ‘rydde dal’, meaning ‘valley cleared of trees’, the name being transplanted by the ‘de Rydale’ family, who held extensive lands in England; it is ‘Redoll’ in 1435, ‘Redale’ in 1436/7, ‘Reddail’ in 1479/80 and ‘Riddale’ in 1502 and 1534; it appears on Frederik de Wit’s map of c. 1680 and is labelled ‘Riddell or W. Lilsly’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Riddell (ri-dul) n. (see also Riddle) Adam (13th C.) recorded as ‘Adam de Ridal’ in an English document of 1279 involving an inquest into lands in Ireland. Adam (16th C.) brother of John of that Ilk. He was part of an inquest into ownership of the lands of Longnewton held in Jedburgh in 1533 (in which his nephew George also took part). Adam (b.1782) born in Kirkton Parish, son of George, he was a joiner at Overhall Cottages in 1841, 1851 and 1861. He was listed there at Overhall among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1840 and 1841. His wife was Isabella and their children included George, Robert, Janet, Georgina and Jessy, as well as an adopted daughter Isabella Aitchison. Agnes (17th C.) widow of Hawick merchant James Bryden, who is listed on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. She is also listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. She may have been a shopkeeper of some sort on the High Street. Her children with James Bryden included John (b.1670), Robert (b.1676), John (again, b.1683), Elspeth (b.1684) and James (b.1688). Agnes (d.bef. 1741) daughter of Henry and brother of William, portioner in Bewlie. She inherited the lands of Bewlie from her brother in 1695, specifically the 5-pound land of Bewlie and half of one of the cottage-lands in Little. She is described as ‘portioner’ of Bewley’ in 1699. She married John Nisbet, W.S. of Nisbetfield and their daughter Agnes married Walter Scott of Whitefield (later Harden). Christian and Jean Riddell (and their husbands) are recorded as her heirs in 1741. Agnes (b.1810/1) wife of Lilliesleaf joiner William. She was listed as a midwife in the 1851 census. She was a widow living at about 61 High Street, with her children Janet, Rachel and James. She may be the dressmaker of the same name listed on the Howegate in Slater’s 1852 directory. Alan (13th C.) recorded in about 1240 as witness to a charter for lands of Prenderguest, among the documents of Coldingham Priory. He witnessed another gift of land in Coldingham in the period 1248–60. It is unclear how he was related to other Riddells. Alexander (17th C.) miller at Newmill (on Teviot) according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably the Alexander who witnessed a baptism for John Dryden in 1675. He may be the Alexander, married to Isobel Little, whose daughter Christian was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1672. Andrew (16th C.) witness to a sasine in 1599 for land in Wilton. This was attached to a sasine with Robert Riddell mentioned, so it is likely he was related to the Riddells of that Ilk. Possibly the same man is described as ‘Andrew Riddill of that ilk’ when he witnessed a sasine for lands in Rule Water in 1568. Andrew of that Ilk (1549/50–1632) son of Walter, with his mother probably being Agnes Ramsay. In 1581 he witnessed a bond of caution for Elliots, when he was listed as son and heir of Walter of that Ilk. In the 1580s he was a ‘tutor’ for the young James Pringle of Galashiels and Smailholm, to whom he was related through his paternal grandmother. He also served as caution for Pringles in 1598. He was served heir to his father in 1592 and obtained a charter in 1595/6 from the Commendator of Glasgow, heir to his father Walter (making it unclear if Walter was still alive at that time). He was the first to acquire the Haining estate from the Scotts (perhaps about 1627). He is recorded in a bond of 1600 for lands in Lilliesleaf and also in 1600 was on the ‘retour’ for the Kers of Cessford. In 1610 he was appointed keeper of the rolls for the Justices of the Peace for Roxburghshire and was also named as a Commissioner for keeping peace in Roxburghshire. In 1610 he was recorded along with other Riddells, swearing not to harm Walter Scott in Hawick (called of Todshaw) and other Scotts. His cautioner was James, merchant in Edinburgh, who was probably a relative. He himself acted as cautioner cautioner for his son John in the same case. In 1611 he was commended by King James VI for his industry as convenor of the Justices of Roxburghshire. In about 1620 he had a charter for half the lands of ‘Cringillis’ from the Commendator of Melrose, and another charter for Allanshaws, ‘Woplaw’ and the west part of ‘Langlie’ from James Cairncross of Colmeslie. In 1620 he acted as bailie for Walter Scott, Earl of Buccleuch, in a charter he granted to Sir Walter Scott of Goldielands; at the same time his daughter Jean was contracted in marriage to Walter, son of Sir Walter of Goldielands. He was probably the Laird of Riddell who represented Roxburghshire in the convention of 1617 and in Parliament in 1621. In 1623 a man was found guilty of stealing 4 cows and an ox from his lands, and sheep from his lands of Whiton. In 1628 he was given a commission to hold a trial for 2 women accused of witchcraft. Also in 1628 he is listed among the major landowners who met to elect M.P.s for Roxburghshire, his son John also being listed there as ‘fiar’. He purchased half a husbandland in Lilliesleaf from William, son of Martin Elliot and Agnes Lorraine (as confirmed in a service to Walter of that Ilk in 1702). He was referred to as Baron of Riddell, and apparently refused to accept a baronetcy. He married a Pringle of Galashiels, who was either his first or second cousin. He was succeeded by his son Sir John (for whom there is a marriage contract in 1600 with the daughter of Sir John Murray of Eddleston). He later married Violet, daughter of William Douglas of Pumperston. His other children were: William of Muselee, who started that branch of the family in the Borthwick valley; James of Maybole (possible ancestor of Rev. Henry Scott Riddell); Walter (or perhaps Robert) of Hartside; Andrew of Haining, who inherited that estate; Margaret, who married Robert Rutherford of Edgerston and/or Archibald Porteous, minister of Oxnam; Isabel, who married Robert Kerr, brother of Thomas of Cavers Carre; and Jean (1600–60), who remained unmarried, and is buried at Jedburgh Abbey. Other daughters may have married Walter Scott of Goldielands (although this may be an error for the marriage contract between his daughter Jean and Scott of Goldielands) and John Baillie (ancestor of the Baillies of Mellerstain). In 1642 his widow Violet Douglas complained to the Privy Council about an attack on her tenants at Hartsde. He is buried in the family aisle in Lilliesleaf kirkyard (where until fairly recently the inscription was quite legible), alongside his 2nd wife Violet. Andrew of Haining (1605/6–41) son of Andrew of that Ilk and his 2nd wife Violet Douglas. He was served heir to his father in 1636. He was said to be a ‘favourite son’ of his father. Along with his father and mother, he has one of the earliest legible panels in the Riddell aisle in Lilliesleaf kirkyard. The initials ‘I.S.’ accompany his, probably those of his wife, who was Jean Stewart of Traquair (after his death his widow married Sir William Douglas of Kelhead). He was probably the ‘Andro Riddell’ who signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. In 1638 he was appointed Sheriff of Selkirkshire. He was appointed Commissioner to Parliament (i.e. M.P.) for Selkirkshire (or ‘the forest’) 1639–41. He married Agnes of Fawside. His daughter Violet was the 3rd wife of Sir Robert Dalzell of Glenae. He was succeeded by his son John of Haining. He is buried in the Riddell Aisle at Lilliesleaf, with the inscription ‘whose life was short and good’. Andrew (17th C.) described as ‘now indweller in Over Quitton’ in 1652 when he married Elizabeth (‘Bessie’), daughter of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe. He was probably related to the Riddells of Riddell and Whiton. Andrew (17th C.) recorded in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls when he paid for the ‘fewary of Lilslie’ in Lilliesleaf Parish. It is unclear how he was related to the Riddells of that Ilk. It is possible he was the Andrew who died in 1701 and whose headstone is in Lilliesleaf Kirkyard. Andrew (17th C.) listed as being ‘in Little-Cavers’ among men declared as fugitives in 1684 for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Dryden in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. He is listed right after John, to whom he was presumably related. Andrew (17th C.) listed as resident at Mabonlaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert and Walter were also listed there and so surely related. Andrew (d.c.1698) recorded being ‘of Newhous’ in 1698 in a list of wills registered with the Commissariat of Peebles. This was probably the Newhouse in Lilliesleaf Parish. He could be the Andrew, who was resident in Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Andrew of Haining (17th/18th C.) son of John. He was served heir to his father in 1696, this including 2 cottage-lands at Lilliesleaf Mill as well as the Haining and other lands in Selkirkshire. In 1701 he (or perhaps his sister Madgalene) sold Haining to Andrew Pringle of Clifton. Andrew (17th/18th C.) tenant farmer at Goldielands in 1705 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Walter Wilson and another for William Douglas of Bonjedward. Andrew (17th/18th C.) recorded as an elder of Hawick Parish in 1711 and in 1718. Andrew (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism in 1738. Andrew (18th C.) signatory of the document signed by 56 people at Raperlaw in 1732, protesting against acts of the General Assembly and being connected with the Secession. He was probably a resident of Lilliesleaf. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Andrew (b.1796/7) from Selkirk, he was farmer at North Synton. He is recorded there in 1851 farming 450 acres, employing 10 labourers and in 1861, as farmer of 400 acres, employing 9 men. He was still recorded there in a directory of 1868. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Mary, Agnes, John (who took over the farm), Jane, George and Janet. Rev. Archibald (1635–1708) 3rd son of Sir Walter, 2nd Baronet of Riddell, and brother of Sir John, 3rd Baronet. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1656 and became minister at Kippen by about 1670. However, these were turbulent times and he came to be persecuted as a preacher of field conventicles. In 1677 he was one of 5 ministers who preached for 3 days in a field at East Nisbet for 3000 people. He was imprisoned several times in the period 1680–84, including in Jedburgh, Edinburgh and on the Bass Rock. In 1681 he was allowed to visit his dying mother at Riddell House and was only finally released on condition of sailing to America, his wife dying on the journey. He served as minister at Woodbridge in New Jersey for about 3 years, returning to Scotland after the Revolution. However, he was captured on this return journey by the French and held prisoner (along with his 6 year old son) in deplorable conditions for 2½ years before being exchanged for 2 Catholic priests. He was then minister of Wemyss, Kirkcaldy and Trinity College (Edinburgh). His first wife was Helen, daughter of Rev. Henry Aitkenhead of North Berwick and his 2nd wife was Jean Ker. His children included: Capt. Walter (d.1738), who retook his ship ‘the Phoebe’ from the French, acquired the Barony of Granton and was probably the son who was captive in France with his father; Dr. John (d.1740), an Edinburgh physician: Janet, who married James, son of Sir James Dundas; and Sarah, who married Rev. John Currie of Oldhamstocks. His sister Alison, married Gabriel Semple, who was another well known field preacher. He was buried at Old Greyfriars Churchyard in Edinburgh. Archibald (17th C.) son of Sir Walter and brother of Sir John, he was a preacher. Like his brother, he was imprisoned for his Covenanting principles. He was said to have taken part in conventicles locally. In 1680 he was captured by Col. Henry Ker of Graden, a prominent Jacobite, while returning from Moffat Well. He was imprisoned in Jedburgh, after his watch, sword and money were taken from him. He was then taken to Edinburgh Tolbooth, and examined 3 separate times, although nothing could be found to connect him with the Battle of Bothwell Brig. However, he refused to take the oath, and so after 9 months was moved to the Bass Rock for 3 years, after which he was sent to the plantations. He was said to have served as a preacher to fellow slaves in New Jersey. After the Revolution he boarded a ship bound for Scotland, but it was seized by the French, and he spent time in a French dungeon before being among a group exchanged for French prisoners. He married an Aitkenhead and was progenitor of the Riddells of Granton. Archibald (17th/18th C.) resident of Branxholme Town, who moved to Roberton Parish. In 1723 James Crow (perhaps his former employer) pleaded with Hawick Session to provide support for him, since he ‘hath none to help him in his distressed condition and indigence save his son of 17 years who is servant in Shielswood’. He is probably the same Archibald listed as resident of Castleside (near Branxholme) on the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Sir Auskittel of Riddell (d.c.1180) 2nd Laird. He was probably son of Gospatric of Brawby and brother of Walter and Robert. However, other accounts suggest he was son of Philip and brother of Gervase, Walter and Riddell was owner of Muselee in 1788 (when it was also at Synton on the 1785 Horse Tax Rolls. He must have lived at Synton for a while. He was both male and female servants in 1787–93; he thus in 1786 and 'Charles Riddal in Sinton' taxed for having a female servant of the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He was already a widower by 1851. Major Charles of Muselie (1759–1849) eldest surviving son of Charles Riddell. Borthwick (b.1800/1) 2nd son of Robert and brother of Henry Scott, he was born in Teviotdale. He was a player of the bagpipes, and known as 'Riddell the Piper'. He was said to be the best player of the small pipes in the Borders. He played at the wedding of a son of the Duke of Buccleuch and when a daughter of the Earl of Minto married Lord John Russell. There is a record of him being at a celebration (for the return of a Teri from America) in the Fleece Inn in the late 1840s at which he sang 'Clean pease strae'. He published at least one poem and there is a tune called 'Borthwick Riddell's Hornpipe'. He was at Dryden in 1841 and in 1851 he was farming 60 arable acres and 300 acres of hill land. He was already a widower by 1851. Maj. Charles of Muselie (1759–1849) eldest surviving son of Patrick and his son Walter. He married either Ascemia de Stonegrave or Elean, daughter of Robert de Morville (or perhaps both). His name is written 'Asketil', 'Anskettill', 'Ansketill', 'Ansketin', 'Occetil', etc. The next generation appears to be confused, with different charters stating that Patrick and William were both sons. It seems likely that his children included Walter, William, Patrick, Eda and Maud. Another son may have been Ralph, but this is less clear. He may also have had a daughter who married 'Henricus de Haga', one of the early Haigs of Bemersyde. Borthwick (b.1800/1) 2nd son of Robert and brother of Henry Scott, he was born in Teviotdale. Riddell the other contemporary Geoffreys, although a direct connection with the Lilliesleaf branch seems likely. Geoffrey (12th/13th C.) probably descended from Hugh, Lord of Blaye in England, with his mother also being an English Riddell. He appears to have united the lands of Wittering and Cranston. Through his wife Hawissa, daughter of William Peverel, he gained further lands in Essex. He was succeeded by another Geoffrey (or Galfridus). Geoffrey (12th/13th C.) referred to as ‘Galfridus de Riddell’, he was a younger son of Sir Patrick. He received some of his father’s lands during the reign of Alexander II. Geoffrey (12th/13th C.) from Berwickshire. Some time before 1233 he was witness to a document for Coldingham Priory. In about 1232 the Priory of Durham granted the marriage of his heir and custody of the lands of Flemington (in Lanarkshire) to Sir William of Bondington. It is unclear how he was related to other Riddells. Geoffrey (13th C.) son and heir of John, with his mother being ‘Hauwysia’, according to a plea of 1235, relating to lands in Buckinghamshire. His wife was ‘Mabilia’ who has sasine of the lands of ‘Belyn’ and ‘Olerun’. He may be the same as one of the other Geoffreys. Geoffrey (d.1261) head of the main line of Riddells in England, son of Geoffrey. He held the Lordships of Wittering and Blaye, as well as Cranston in Scotland. He is recorded in connection to the peace settlements between England and France. He is recorded in a document at Dunwich in 1258. He was succeeded by his son Geoffrey. Geoffrey (d.c.1288) eldest son of Galfridus and head of the main English family branch. He is mentioned with reference to the conflicts between England and France, and probably still had connections with Scotland. He is recorded in a document relating to lands in Norfolk and Suffolk in 1262. His sons probably included Geoffrey, Sir Hugh and Sir Nicholas. Geoffrey (d.1319) eldest son of Galfridus, whom he succeeded in 1288 to the Barony of Blaye in England. He also possessed Wittering, as well as Cranston in Scotland, and probably other lands. He is listed as ‘Galfridus Ridel’ in a 1297 mandate to restore lands to Scotsmen who had sworn fealty to King Edward. He had a daughter, Alicia, but the family estates went to his brother Sir Hugh. Geoffrey of Riddell (d.c.1325) possibly son of Sir William and brother of William, whom he succeeded as 8th of that Ilk, although these generations are uncertain. He was also known as ‘Galfridus’, a family name that connects him with his Norman ancestors. He was probably succeeded by his son Sir William, while Sir Robert and Richard may also have been his sons. He may have had a daughter who married John Ainslie of Dolphinston. He may be the same ‘Geoffry Ridel’ recorded in 1297 when his lands in both England and Scotland were restored by Edward I because he was in that King’s service abroad; in 1298 the same man was recorded as valet of Simon Fraser, when they were both with Edward in Flanders. He made gifts to Kelso and Melfos ABBEYS during the reign of Alexander III. Sir Geoffrey (d.1346) son of Sir Hugh, head of the main English line. He was Baron of Montclaire and Lord of Wittering and Cranston. He fought against Robert the Bruce, and lost his Scottish possessions afterwards. He was succeeded by his son, Sir Hugh, who petitioned to have his Scottish lands returned, but this was unsuccessful. George (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1514 receiving the Clerkship of Lilliesleaf Kirk from the Bishop of Glasgow, succeeding the deceased Thomas Riddell. Note that the Clerk at that time was like the assistant priest. He was listed as a scholar and was no doubt a younger son of the Laird of Riddell. In 1522 he was succeeded by John, son of John Riddell of that Ilk. George of that Ilk (16th C.) son of John, he was succeeded by Walter, who was either his son or his nephew. It may be that he was just acting as Laird during the minority of his nephew, but this is unclear. He was part of an inquest held in Jedburgh in 1533 when he was heir apparent to his father. He may have been the George who was ‘Bailie in that part’, along with William, according to a document of 1535 relating to Harden (into which family at least one of his aunts had married). It is possible he pre-deceased his father, but in any case the next in succession was Walter. George (d.c.1688) tenant in Lustruther when his will was recorded in 1688. George (18th C.) recorded at Newton in Kirkton Parish when his daughter Peggy was baptised in 1787. He was surely related to John, who was farmer there at the same time. George (d.bef. 1809) resident of Howahill. His son Robert (a wright) died in Hawick parish in 1809. He may be the George who married Margaret Hobkirk in Hobkirk Parish in 1769. George William nee Hutton (1807–71) son of George Hutton of Carlton-on-Trent and Frances Mitford. He was a banker of Newmarket-on-Trent and Magistrate for Notts, Carlton-on-Trent. In 1835 he married Mary, who was heiress of Muscleee, being daughter of Walter and niece of Maj. Charles. He assumed the additional surname of ‘Riddell’ in order to inherit the lands through his wife. These lands included Whitfield in Wilton Parish. After Mary died, he secondly married Hannah-Elizabeth, widow of J.O. Lambert, and thereby married Janetta-Gonville Bromhead, Baroness. He was succeeded by his son, also George William, and had another son, Edward Mitford. The surname in these couple of generations is often hyphenated as ‘Hutton-Riddell’. Capt. George William Hutton (1836–1915) son of George William Hutton, who had married Mary Riddell, the niece and heiress of Charles of Muselee. He thus inherited the Muselee lands and may later have lived there. He was educated at Rugby and was a Captain in the 16th Lancers. He sold the Dryburgh estate, as well as Bewlie and Bewlie Moor. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. In about 1874 he is listed as owner of Toshaw and Muselee in Roberton Parish, as well as Whitfield in Wilton Parish. In 1877 he married Evelyn Mary Craven, daughter of the Earl of Craven. Their children included Capt. George Hutton and William Hutton, who was an artist. His name is sometimes hyphenated ‘Hutton-Riddell’. Gervase (11th/12th C.) one of the earliest Scottish family members, likely moving north along with other supporters of King David I. His name was recorded as ‘Gervasius’ or ‘Geraisus’. He was probably son of Philip, and surely from the Norman ‘de Rydale’ family who held lands in England. He witnessed a charter of David I in 1116. He was made High Sheriff of Roxburgh about the same time, the earliest known in that office. He is recorded as Sheriff in a charter of 1138/9 and witnessed several other charters for King David in the early 1140s. He may have married Christian de Souls, who was a donor to Jedburgh Abbey, giving a third part of the village of ‘Hernwingeslawe’ (possibly Mervinslaw). He and his brother Walter were granted a charter of that branch is a matter of debate). His son (or possibly brother) Walter was granted a charter of the lands of Lilliesleaf. He may have had other children, including ‘Jordanus’ and Adeliza (who married Henry ‘de Haga’, 3rd Laird of Bemersyde). He died at Jedburgh Abbey, probably following the custom in those days of the rich and secular bestowing gifts on ecclesiastical institutions in return for atonement. It is also suggested that he may have been unrelated to Walter ‘de Riddale’, and was instead ancestor of the Riddells of Cranston Riddell, who did not use the ‘de’ prefix in their name. Henry ‘Harry’ (d.bef. 1670) eldest son of Walter. He was ‘portioner’ of Bewlie from 1663. He witnessed a contract for lands in Hobkirk Parish along (for Lorraine of Apple-side) with his father in 1654 and others in 1656 and 1659. He also witnessed the last testament of William Elliot of Harwood in 1662. The Archbishop of Glasgow ratified his lands at Bewlie in 1665 and in the same year there was an agreement between his tenants James Wright, Walter and George Davidson with the tenant of John Riddell of Muselee over boundaries between them. He married Janet, daughter of William Scott of Horsleyhill in 1562. His children were William, Marion and Agnes (whose ‘tutor’ was Walter Riddell, younger of Riccalton). In 1686 Agnes married John Nisbet, lawyer in Edinburgh. Rev. Henry Scott (1789–1862) son of Henry, merchant in Glasgow. He was a contemporary of the author of ‘Scotland Yet’ and so sometimes confused with him. He originally trained as a lawyer, being apprenticed to James Thomson and becoming Writer to the Signet in 1811. He resigned his Commission in 1825 and retrained as a minister, being licensed by the Presbytery of Selkirk in 1829, ordained at Longformacus in 1830 and translated to Duns in 1843. In 1818 he married Agnes, daughter of Archibald Gilchrist of Edinburgh. In 1831 he secondly married Elizabeth, youngest daughter of John Home of Stirkoke in Caithness. Rev. Henry Scott (1798–1870) minister and song-writer. He was born at Sorbie in Evesdale (there is some confusion over the year of his birth), his parents Robert Riddell and Agnes Scott, being from Teviotdale. His father was a shepherd, who moved from Sorbie to Langshawburn in Eskdalemuir (when he was a child), later moving to Capplefoot (Hoddam Parish) then Deloraine in Selkirkshire. He had brothers who later lived at Dryden, near Selkirk, and Brookside in East Lothian (this elder brother moving to Ramsaycleuchburn). He was educated in short stints at Davington, Roberton and Newmill and heard James Hogg, the ‘Ettrick Shepherd’ singing in his house when he was a child. At about age 15 he became shepherd at Deloraine, 2 years later moving to Todrig, where he got to know William Knox. After his father died, when he was 18, he resolved to study for the ministry, and so attended Biggar School and later Edinburgh University (and St. Andrews for a year), eventually being licensed by Biggar Presbytery in 1830. It was at Biggar that he became to be known as a poet, publishing ‘The Crook and Plaid’, and several articles for ‘The Clydesdale Magazine’. Before finishing with university he published ‘The Songs of the Ark’, which represents his longest poetic work on a single theme. He moved to live with his brother at Ramsaycleuchburn (near Teviothead) in 1831. After the local minister died, he was appointed as preacher at Caerlenrig Chapel of Ease (i.e. Teviothead Church) in 1832 (or perhaps 1833). He stayed at the Flex in his early years, walking 9 miles to church, and writing several songs there, including ‘The Hames of Our Ain Folk’. The Duke of Buccleuch later built him a cottage at Teviothead, where he remained for the rest of his life (and where he died). He was listed at Caerlenrig in Pigoit’s 1837 directory. In 1839 he helped with the description of Cavers Parish, written by Rev. Strachan for the New Statistical Account. In 1841 he suffered what would now be called a nervous breakdown, and spent more than 3 years in the Crichton Royal Institution at Dumfries (he was missing for the 1841 census). He then returned to Teviothead, but did not resume his full ministerial duties, with other preachers taking over some of his duties until the first minister of the newly created Teviothead Parish was appointed in 1850. In 1844 he published a doctrinal volume, and in 1847 he published a volume of collected verse, as well as an extensive essay on the Ettrick Shepherd (with a later article for the Archeological Transactions. Many of his poems, written at Teviothead, were first published in the Hawick Advertiser. In later years he became involved with the Border Counties Association, became interested in local archaeological excavations and wrote about Cavers Parish for the Sinclair’s ‘Statistical Account of Scotland’. He took part in several events in Hawick, including the Burns Centenary, laying the foundation stone of the Old Parish Church, giving lectures, and awarding the prizes for the Auld Brig poetry competition. He was also Bard for the St. John’s Masonic Lodge of Hawick, and his masonic brethren visit Teviothead annually to remember him. He was presented with a harp (inspired by the lines of ‘Scotland Yet’) by Bailie Paterson in 1859 (and this is now in the Museum). William Scott also presented Mrs. Riddell with an oil painting of her husband (perhaps the portrait by John A. Horsburgh, which is in the Museum). Another portrait (by Lancelot Watson in 1889) hangs in the Museum, which also has his home-made compass and caliper set, as well as his shepherd’s crook. He was still recorded at Teviothead Cottage in a directory of 1868. His attempts at biblical translation into Lowland Scots (printed privately for Prince Louis Lucien Bonaparte) were an early philological influence on James Murray. He was writer of the words for ‘Scotland Yet’, probably Scotland’s most popular song of the latter half of the 19th century, and considered by many as the national anthem of its day (and recorded by Scocha in 2004). His publications include ‘Stanzas on the Death of Lord Byron’ (1825), ‘Songs of the Ark: with other poems’ (1832), ‘The Christian Politician; or the Right Way of Thinking’ (1844), ‘Poems, Songs and Miscellaneous Pieces’ (1847), ‘St. Matthew translated into Lowland Scotch’ (1856), ‘Book of Psalms in Lowland Scotch’ (1857), ‘The Song of Solomon in Lowland Scotch’ (1858), ‘The Poetical Works of Henry Scott Riddell’ (2 volumes, 1871) and ‘Scotland Yet and Other Verses’ (1898). His translations of biblical passages into ‘Lowland Scotch’ are interesting for the wealth of dialect words that they contain; however, with little precedent to build on, the translations are a strange mixture of genuine Borders vernacular, words taken from earlier Scots works and oddly spelled English. In all, he composed over 200 songs, with manuscripts unpublished at his death including ‘Malcolm of Wharden’, ‘Melvina of Eller’ and ‘The Dutiful Daughter’, this last being a play in 5 acts. In addition he published an article on ‘Store-Farming in the South of Scotland’ and another on ‘Foot-rot in Sheep’. In 1833 he married Eliza (1796–1875), daughter of William Clark, merchant in Biggar. Their children were: Walter Francis Montagu Douglas (1834–77), obviously named after his patron, who worked for the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank; William Brown Clark (1836–56), who was a poet of some promise, but died at the age of 20; and Robert H. (c.1840–87), who was a sheep-farmer in Australia; His own death came fairly suddenly, his last letter being an apology for being unable to attend the meeting of the Border Counties Association held in Hawick 2 days before he died. A 50 ft (13 m) high conical memorial cairn on the slopes of Dryden Fell above Teviothead is visible from the A7, erected in 1874, repaired in 1926 and renovated in 1999. A plaque was placed at Sorbie by the Callants’ Club in 1928. He died at Dryden Cottage, which also has a commemorative plaque – ‘Henry Riddell is a name Puir auld Hawick nicht fairly claim, ‘Scotland Yet’, a nation’s pride Was inspired by scenes that bide 'Mang the hills o’ Teviotside, Rich auld Hawick’ [TK], ‘A sigh on every breeze is borne, That whispers through the vale, The wimping waters seem to mourn the Bard of Teviotdale’ [JT]. Hugh (12th/13th C.) possibly the 2nd son of Sir Auskittel and brother of Walter. He is recorded as ‘Hug Ridel’ during the reign of William I, when he was witness to a document for the Diocese of Glasgow, regarding lands in Ashkirk Parish. He was ‘Hugone Ridel’ when he witnessed another charter of William I and one for the church of ‘inchethor’. He was probably the Hugh who was one of the hostages for the ransom of King William, after he was captured at Alnwick in 1174. He donated the church of Cranston to Kelso Abbey in about 1190, and is stated by some accounts to be the progenitor of the Riddells of Cranston-Riddell. Probably the same ‘Hug one ridal’ witnessed an earlier charter in the reign of King Malcolm and one from about 1151 for the Church of Brinkburne. Hugh of Wit-tering (d.bef. 1233) owner of lands in Northamptonshire. He is recorded receiving sasine of ‘Witeringa’ in 1188. His widow Sibilla was involved in land claims in 1233 and 1254. His son and heir was probably Richard, who was recorded being ‘in the power of the King of Scotland’ in 1233. He could be the ‘Hugh Ridel’ who witnessed a document (around 1206–14) for Earl David (later King of Scotland), regarding lands gifted to a church in London. Hugh (13th C.) recorded in 1236 when William Avenel made a claim against him for fees from lands in ‘Mideltun’. It is unclear where this was, or how he was related to other Riddells. Sir Hugh (13th C.) signatory of the Ragman Rolls of 1296, where he is listed as ‘Dominus Hugo Rydel, miles’. He is probably the 2nd son of Geoffrey, who succeeded to the estates of the main branch of the English Riddells on the death of his brother, also Geoffrey. He also held the lands of Cranston in Scotland. It appears that for staying too long in Scotland, King Edward II took away his lands of Wittering and gave them to his son Geoffrey.

However, he had other lands in Northumberland, obtained from his kinsman Sir William. He is probably the ‘Master Hugh de Rydale’ who is recorded in a Northumberland document of 1270.
Hugh (13th C.) recorded as ‘Huwe Rydel’ in the Ragman Rolls of 1296. From Edinburgh, his entry is separate from ‘Dominus Hugo’. But he could be the same man as the entry for ‘Hugh Rydel, tenant le Roi, du Comte de Edenneburgh’. His seal consists of ‘a pile in base and a chief’ with the name ‘S’HVGNIS RYEDEL’. Hugh (13th/14th C.) holder of the manor of ‘Wytering’ (i.e. Witter-ing) in Northamptonshire. He granted it to his son and heir Geoffrey in 1296, but was dispossessed in 1296 as a supported of John Baliol, when he was ‘in Scotland’. He could be the Hugh who was recorded in Berwick in 1296. In 1315 he was ‘Rydel, sometime lord of Wytering’ when his grant to his son was confirmed by Edward II. He is surely the same as one of the Hughes who signed the Ragman Rolls. He was probably the Hugh son of Richard recorded at Newcastle in a plea for lands in Cumberland in 1269. He may have been grandson of the Hugh, whose widow Sibilla was recorded in document relating to ‘Wyterine’ in Northamptonshire in 1233 and 1254. Hugh (13th/14th C.) recorded as ‘Hugh de Rydal’ when he was involved in a raid on a house in Berwick in 1296. Probably the same Hugh was recorded in 1310/1 when his wife Mary Comyn asked for support for her and her family at Berwick. Sir Hugh (d.1363) son of Geoffrey, from whom he inherited the family lands of Montclare, Wittering and others in Northamptonshire. He petitioned to recover the Scottish lands of Cranston lost by his father. He died without issue, whereupon his lands were inherited by Sir Nicholas, whose grandfather Sir Nicholas was his grandfather’s brother. After that the representative of this main family line was Sir John, who did briefly recover Cranston, but must have sold or list it shortly afterwards.
At this point the senior branch of the family in Scotland became the Riddells of that Ilk, based in Lilliesleaf. Isobel (17th C.) daughter of James, portioner of Lilliesleaf and wife of Adam Haig in Belses. In 1656 she was served heir to her father in his 16-shilling land within Lilliealeaf.
James of that Ilk (d.c.1510) probably grandson of Quentin or perhaps Mungo, or perhaps son of Mungo and grandson of Quentin. He also had a brother, Thomas. His ancestry can be traced back to ‘Geraisus de Rydale’, who married Christiana de Soulis in the early 12th century; but from this point on the genealogy is much more secure. He was one of the first of the family to be referred to as ‘of that Ilk’, although the lands near Lilliesleaf were in the family for many previous generations. In 1471 he inherited the lands of ‘Quhittounis’ (i.e. ‘Whitton’ near Morebattle) and ‘Westerlillisclef’ (i.e. Wester Lilliesleaf). He is probably the ‘James Riddale’ who was witness to a Cranston sasine for Denholm Mains in 1465/6 and the ‘James Riddale’ who witnessed the ‘retour’ for the Kers and the lands of Borthwick-shields in 1471. In 1477/8 he made an arrangement with John Waugh, over the lands of ‘Unerquhitone’, clearing debts with William Pringle: James kept Under Whiton, while John received lease of a ‘husbandland’ of land in ‘Esterlelesel’. In 1478/9 Margaret Murray resigned her lands of ‘Unirquhitone’ to him. And in 1478 he is referred to as ‘of that Ilk’ when he leased ‘Plewolande’ to John Davison in return for borrowing money. He also witnessed a charter to David, son of David Scott of Buccleuch for lands in Selkirk in 1478. In 1479 he witnessed a document for the Kers of Cessford. In 1483 he is recorded as ‘Riddale of Quhittowne’ when witness to a document dealing with Denholm Mains. An instrument of resignation of 1483 is recorded for the lands of ‘Unerquhitone’ with the Davidsons. He also witnessed a sasine in 1487 for the lands of Boonraw. In 1489, along with Walter Ker of Cessford, he had a decree against him for not paying the teinds to Lilliesleaf Kirk. He was recorded as Laird of Riddell and Whiton in 1493 and in that same year was the Laird fined for non-presence at the Justice-aine in Jedburgh, with Gilbert ‘Hoigsone’ acting as his suitor. In 1494 he was ‘Jacobumb Riddale de Quhittoun’ on the panel for the inheritance of Synton. He may have married Margaret, daughter of Sir James Lindsay. His children were: John, who succeeded; Margaret (d.1585), who married Walter Scott of Synton or perhaps Walter of Harden; and Christian, who also appears to have married Walter Scott of Harden. It also seems that there was a slightly earlier marriage between a widow of Riddell (said to have been a Kerr of Ferniehirst, probably Elizabeth) and a Scott of Harden: these marriages between Riddells and Scotts of Harden could be conflated. James of Maybole (17th C.) 3rd son of Andrew of that Ilk. It is unclear if his lands were at Maybole in Dumfriesshire or somewhere else. It has been suggested that he might have been ancestor of Robert, father of Rev. Henry Scott Riddell. James (d.bef. 1656) portioner of Lilliesleaf. In 1656 his daughter and heir Isobel, wife of Adam Haig in Belses, inherited his 16-shilling land within Lilliesleaf. James (17th C.) probably son of Walter, portioner of Bewlie, who resided at Appotside in the Rule valley. He was witness to discharges of Hobkirk teinds in 1659 and in 1660, when he was described as ‘of Harrit’ (presumably ‘Harwood’). In another document he signed as ‘son lawfull to Elispethe Haistie in Harwood’. James (17th C.) merchant listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. James (17th C.) shepherd at ‘Bosathill’ (i.e. Bowset Hill) in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was ‘deficient’ in paying the tax, and his entry reads ‘to Ingland’. James (17th C.) rented quarter of the farm of Wiltonburn from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1690. He is also listed as resident at Wiltonburn on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1694 his widow Bessie Scott was leasing a third of the farm of Wiltonburn; she may have been closely related to Robert Scott and John Scott, who were also farmers at Wiltonburn in 1694. In 1734 there is a record of the funeral of Bessie, who may have been his daughter (or wife). James (17th C.) recorded near Larriston on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He paid tax on 2 hearths, since he was recorded having a kiln. James (17th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. James (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1726 he married Isobel Williamson, who was from Stow. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, probably included: Thomas (b.1727); William (b.1729); Robert (b.1731); Helen (b.1733); Nellie (b.1734); Margaret (b.1734); James (b.1735); and Walter (b.1737). Col. James (d.1804) son of Sir Walter. He served in the army in Holland. He was entered onto the Roxburghshire voters’ roll in 1780, when listed as a Lieutenant-Colonel. In 1788 he was listed with the same rank and ‘In the service of Holland’ among the voters of Roxburghshire associated with Sir John Scott of Ancrum (suggesting that he was given freehold of some land in order to vote in the county). He was later factor of the Riddell estates. He could be the James who is recorded owning half of Kirknowe in Hobkirk Parish in 1788. James (18th/19th C.) shepherd in Liddesdale. It is said that the family lived on the banks of the Liddel for many generations, and were related to the other Roxburghshire branches. His children were: James (b.1781), who emigrated to Canada; Henry; William; and Thomas. If the birthdate of the elder son is confused, then he could be the James who married Janet Elliot and whose children James (b.1791) and Henry (b.1794) are recorded in Castleton. Sir James Buchanan (1765{84) 8th Baronet of Riddell. He succeeded from his brother Sir Walter. He was a Lieutenant in the 1st Regiment of Foot Guards, but drowned while swimming in the River Brunswick at age 19 after being Baronet for only a few months. He was succeeded by his brother Sir John Buchanan. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Leaheads in Wilton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 3 horses. James (b.1781) son of Liddesdale shepherd James. If his birth date was really 1791, then he could be the son of James and Janet Elliot recorded in Castleton Parish. He joined the army and lived in Berwickshire. He married Isabella, daughter of George Hogg (and army officer) and Margaret Van Buren (from Hackensack, New Jersey). He was living at Ednam in 1835 when he emigrated to Canada with his family. His children included: James Van Buren, who died young; George Hogg, who also died young; and Dr. Alexander Dow (b.1824), who became a doctor in Compton, Quebec. James Scott (1780/1–1835) resident of Castleton Parish. He died at Larriston Rigg and was buried in Castleton. His children Isabella (1809/10–37) and John (d.1837) died of smallpox on board the Cornubria on the coast of New Brunswick. James (b.1807/8–bef. 61) born in Castleton, he was an agricultural labourer at Lochburnfoot in 1851. He married Jane (or Jean, b.1809), daughter of Castleton shepherd James Elliot. Their children included: Janet (b.1831); Eliza (1833–81), who married Andrew Stark; Christian (b.1835); William (b.1839); Mary (b.1842); James (b.1845), who married Jessie Scott; and Jane (b.1855). His wife was a widow living at Calaburn in 1861. James (b.1836) son of John Lamb and Agnes Riddell, he was born at Timpendean. He was a grocer, butcher and farmer in the Morebattle area and later moved to Newcastleton. In 1867 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Henry Cavers, carter in Newcastleton. Their children were Adam, Violet Turnbull, Agnes Isabella, Elizabeth Jane, Margaret and Robina Cavers. James (b.1845) son of James and Jean Elliot, he was baptised in Kirkton Parish. He was a ploughman in Lilliesleaf and later a carter in Edinburgh. In Cavers Parish in 1866 he married Jessie (1844–99), daughter of James Scott and Agnes Elliot. Their children were Agnes Giles (b.1867), James (b.1869), Jane (b.1871), Robert (b.1874), Janet (b.1874), Elizabeth (b.1880) and William (b.1886). Janet (17th C.) listed as resident at Wiltonburn among the ‘deficient’ on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. Jean ‘Jeanie Ma Lord’ (18th/19th C.) married name of Jean Oliver. Jean (1600–60) daughter of Andrew of that ilk. She died unmarried and was buried in Jedburgh Abbery, with the inscription ‘Here lies a religious and virtuous gentlewoman, Jean Riddell, daughter of Sir Andrew Riddell of that ilk, …’. Jean (b.c.1655) eldest daughter of Walter of Minto. She married Sir Robert Laurie, 1st Baronet of Maxwelton. They had 3 sons and 4 daughters, one of whom, Annie, was famed for her beauty. William Douglas of Fingland composed the verses ‘Annie Laurie’ in her honour in about 1700 (but failed to woo her, since she married Ferguson of Craigdarroch). John (d.bef. 1235) recorded in a plea of 1235, relating to lands in Buckinghamshire, involving his wife’s dower lands in ‘Hadecote’. His wife was ‘Hawysia’ and his son and heir was Geoffrey. John (13th C.) recorded as ‘Johannem de Ridel’ in the assize roll of Northumberland in 1256. This was regarding a piece of land in Denton on the Tyne, which had also belonged to his father John. ‘Ela, uxor Johannis de Rydale’ is also recorded separately, and so either his wife or wife of another John. In the same records ‘Walterus de Chendal’ is accused of striking his servant, who was also called ‘Johannem de Ridal’. About the same time there was also a court case involving his mother ‘Hawysia de Newenham’ and her lands in ‘Rodewood’. John of Ayton (15th C.) recorded as witness to several charters involving the lands of Renton and Ayton in Berwickshire in about 1280. It is unclear how he was related to other early Riddells. John (15th C.) resident of lands in Luder, recorded in 2 charters of 1501. John of that Ilk (d.1542) son of James. In 1502 he was ‘junior of that Ilk’ when listed along with Douglases and others from the Jedburgh area as people guilty of attacking Sir William Colville of Ochiltree. In 1503 he had sasine for the lands of Whiton and Wyster Liliesleaf. In 1507/8 he was a witness to the document for Scott of Whitchester relating to the tower ‘between the bridges’ in Hawick. In 1508 he was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale. He may be the ‘Larde of Riddale’ who was on an assize in 1508/9 for convicting Andrew Ker and others at the Judiciary Court in Selkirk. He was a witness in 1529 to the indenture to reconcile the feuding Scotts and Kers. He was listed in the Selkirk Protocol Books in 1532 as one of 2 arbiters for Walter Scott in Headshaw’s dispute with Elizabeth Murray. He granted part of the land at Liliesleaf to Patrick Earl Bothwell in 1534. In 1535 he was witness to a charter of George, Lord Hume, confirming the lands of Harden to William Scott of Harden, and was also witness to Simon Scott of Fuewick resigning Nether Harden to William Scott of Harden in 1540. He was possibly succeeded by his son George or his grandson Walter, but these generations are confused. A document of 1533 lists George as his heir apparent, while in 1551 the lands of Bewlie went to William, brother of his heir Walter; it is unclear whether he was already deceased at this time, and whether Walter was his nephew or grandson. Other possible sons were John and George. He may be the Riddell of that Ilk who married Elizabeth Ker of Fairnilee (who later married William Scott of Harden and Todrig). John (16th C.) son of John of that Ilk. In 1522 he succeeded George Riddell (probably his uncle or other near relative) as Clerk of Lilliesleaf Parish. This means he was acting as assistant Priest, or at least held a small benefice for this position. Sir John 1st Baronet of Riddell (d.1636) eldest son of Andrew of that Ilk. In 1602 his father resigned lands in Lilliesleaf to him. In 1611 he was cautioner for Robert Davidson in ‘Fallawis’ and for Andrew Turnbull of Stanedge. In 1610 he and his father had a bond not to harm Walter Scott in Hawick (called of Todshaw) and other Scotts. In 1616 he had an inhibition from the Lords of Council regarding lands in Hownam. He was a juror at the 1623 Commissioners’ Court when he was still ‘appeirand of yat ilk’, and was voted as ‘chancellor’ of the assize. In 1623–24 he was involved in a court case over teinds for the lands of Over Whitton. In 1624 he was foreman of a jury in Edinburgh for a Liddesdale cattle-stealing case. In 1628 he was ‘apparent of that Ilk’ when charged to be part of a local Commission to hold courts. He was created a Baronet of Nova Scotia in 1628, with his lands erected into a barony and regality of New Riddell (comprising 16,000 acres on the Island of Anticosti in the Gulf of St. Lawrence). Also in 1628 he was one of the major landowners of Roxburghshire who convened to elect M.P.s., his name recorded as ‘Jhone Riddell fear of that Ilk’, his father still being the Laird of Riddell. These proceedings were quite protracted, and he even refused to serve when selected. In 1600 he married Agnes, daughter of Sir John Murray of Eddleston and Blackbarony; the husbands of her sisters included the Earl of Ancrum, Patrick Murray of Phgiliphaugh and Sir Patrick Scott of Thirlestane. Their children were: Sir Walter, who succeeded; Capt. John, an officer in the army in Holland; Sir William, who became Governor of Desborough or Desburgh in Holland; Thomas; and Ann, who married Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers Carre. He secondly married Jane, daughter of Sir James Anstruther, widow of James Douglas, Commendator of Melrose Abbey; they had one daughter, who married David Barclay of Colerne. One of his daughters may have married John Scott of Gorrenberry. John of Muselee (17th C.) local landowner in the mid-to-late 1600s, also holding the lands of Bewlie. He was son of William and Bessie Ainslie and grandson of Andrew of that Ilk, and was served heir to his father in 1653. He was recorded paying £100 in land tax in Hawick Parish in 1663; he may also be the John who paid tax on £52 in Lilliesleaf Parish for part of Cringles. In 1665 his tenant John Dodds made an agreement with the tenants of Harry Riddell (portioner of Bewlie) over the boundaries between them. In 1678 he was one of the Commissioners for Selkirkshire for raising money for the King. Also in 1678 he paid the land tax on Muselee in Hawick Parish and on part of Bewlie (formerly owned by the Turnbulls) in Lilliesleaf Parish. He appears to have married Elizabeth Haliburton in 1639 and only a few years later married Grezil, daughter of Rev. P. Schew. His children included William (who probably died young) and Patrick (who succeeded). He also had 3 daughters. John (17th C.) resident of Dryden in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll. He is listed along with Andrew, to whom he was presumably related. John (17th C.) resident of Headshaw Mill in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among the ‘deficient who can not be found out’. He may be the same John in Headshaw Mill who was also listed among ‘ye poor’. John (17th C.) recorded at Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Sir John 3rd Baronet of Riddell (d.1700) son of Sir Walter. He was sometimes referred to as ‘Blue-beard’ because he had 4 wives. He was served heir to his father (and grandfather Sir John) in 1669, including several lands in Lilliesleaf Parish and elsewhere. In 1678 he paid the land tax in Morebattle and Hownam Parishes, as well as tax on land valued at £1765 in Lilliesleaf Parish (having sold Riddell Mill, but purchased lands from the feuars of Lilliesleaf). In 1682 he was listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. He was apparently a zealous Covenanter, being imprisoned (in the Tolbooth of Haddington) for his principles, and probably also for supporting his brother, Rev. Archibald. In 1684 he was fined the most of any Roxburghshire heritor, the huge sum of £52,000. However, he received a remission from the King in 1687. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690. He was also appointed as an additional Parliamentary Commissioner (i.e. an M.P.) for Roxburghshire in 1690 and served until his death. He married Agnes, daughter of Gideon Scott of Highchester and Harden in 1659. She received lands in Whitton ‘in liferent’ from his father in 1659. She must not have survived long, since in 1661 he secondly married Helen, daughter of Sir Alexander Morrison of Preston Grange; they had a son and a daughter together. He thirdly Margaret Swinton of that Ilk, with whom he had another son and daughter. And lastly the widow of Watt of Rosehill, formerly Miss Hepburn (this only about a year before his death). His children were: Sir Walter, who succeeded; Christian, who married Henry, eldest son of Sir Patrick Nisbet of Dean; William (d.1700), who died without children; and Margaret. He may also have had a daughter Helen, who married Robert Kerr of Cavers Carre, and another son, Alexander. John (17th C.) resident of Minto Kames who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (17th C.) listed as cottar at Mervinslaw among the ‘deficient’ on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. John (17th C.) listed ‘east the water’ among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for wright Francis Gledstains in 1682, and another for Walter Lorraine and Bessie Riddell (who was probably related to him). He could be the John who married Anna Agnes Dickson, and whose children, baptised in Hawick, included William (b.1679), Robert (b.1681), Helen (b.1684) and Walter (b.1686). John (17th C.) resident at Whithope according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was taxed for three hearths, since he was ‘wt tuo kilns’. This suggests he was a miller or some other kind of tradesman. John of Muselee (17th/18th C.) eldest son of Patrick and Maria Elliot. He is recorded in a document of 1710 involving the lands of Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1707 he and John Nisbet were assigned a new loft in Lilliesleaf Kirk. In 1706 he married Margaret, eldest daughter of Walter Riddell from Lilliesleaf, who was tenant farmer at North Synton. Their children were: Patrick (b.1707), who succeeded; Walter; Andrew; William (b.1713), who moved to Berwick, where he became a successful merchant; Barbara (b.1715); John (b.1717); Alexander (b.1718); James (b.1721); Mary (b.1723); Thomas (b.1724), who was also a merchant in Berwick; and an unnamed daughter. He is probably be the John ‘of Mewslie’ recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. John of Haining (d.bef. 1696) son of Andrew of Haining and grandson of the first Riddell (of Riddell) to hold the Haining estate. He was served heir to his father in 1643. He was recorded in the county valuation in 1643, his part of Bewlie being valued at £390. He was appointed Justice of the Peace in 1663 and Parliamentarian Commissioner (i.e. M.P.) for Selkirk-shire in 1665. He is probably the Laird of Hain-ing recorded in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls, along with his mother, when they paid tax on £390 in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was Sheriff Principal and also Provost of Selkirk. In 1671 he made an agreement for setting up a stud of horses for the King’s use. He was on the Commission of Supply for Selkirkshire in 1678, 1685 and 1690. His grand-daughter Magdalene married David Erskine of Dun and sold the estate to the Pringles. He was succeeded by his son Andrew, who was served as his heir in 1696. John (17th/18th C.) famer at Minto Mill, probably related to the local Lairds. He is recorded in 1710 when his son Patrick became a barber’s apprentice in Edinburgh. John (17th/18th C.) miller, probably at Newmill. In 1724 he was witness to a baptism there. John (18th C.) tenant in Whithope Mill. He witnessed a document for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1765. John (d.bef. 1747) eldest son of Sir Walter, 4th Baronet of Riddell. He was an advocate and said to be highly accomplished. He died before his father, so that his younger brother (also Sir Walter) succeeded to Riddell. Sir John (d.1768) 6th Baronet of Riddell, succeeding from his father Walter, his elder brother Walter having died first. He was a merchant in Curacao, returning on his father Walter’s death. He was ‘of that Ilk junior’ in 1761 when recorded as a Com-misioner for Roxburghshire. In 1762 he married Jane Buchanan, daughter and heiress of James Buchanan from Sundon, Bedfordshire; he granted her a bond of provision for lands in Riddell in 1768, and she died in 1798. She must have been he Lady Riddell who was recorded in 1794 paying the tax for having 4 male servants at Riddell. In 1772 he succeeded to the Buchanan estates on the death of his wife’s brother. He died at Hamstead in Middlesex, after being Baronet for only about 3 years, leaving a young family. His children were: Sir Walter, who succeeded; Sir James Buchanan, who succeeded his brother; and Sir John Buchanan, born posthumously, who also succeeded to Riddell. His will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1768. John (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. His wife was Jean Scott and their children included: Mary (b.1743); Agnes (b.1745); Janet (b.1755); William (b.1757); and Walter (b.1765). The witnesses in 1745 were mason David Laing and merchant George Scott. John (18th C.) farmer at Newton in Kirkton Parish according to the Horse Tax Rolls of 1787–89. His daughter Maragret was born in 1786 and son John in 1787. John (b.1758) son of Frank, he was born in Hawick. He was a gardener and also sexton (but it is not clear for which church). In 1780 he married Peggy Parris and they had 12 children: Ann (b.1784), who died young; Isabella (b.1786), who also died young; Janet (b.1788), who married Michael Dryden; Francis (b.1792), who married Euphemia Scott, drove a mail coach for about 19 years, and died in Northumberland; Isabella (b.1795), died young; James (b.1797), who married Janet Rae and worked as a coachman; Adam (b.1798), who married Martha Leatherhead and moved to Edinburgh; John (b.1801), who was killed in a threshing mill at the age of 19; Jean (b.1804), who married John Watson from Selkirk; Katherine (b.1806), who married weaver John Fairgreaves and emigrated to Bridgeton, Maine; John (again, b.1809), who worked as a coachman and married Barbara Hall; Mary (b.1810), who died young. Sir John Buchanan (1768–1819) 9th Baronet of Riddell, youngest son of John the 6th Baronet, being born posthumously. He succeeded from his 2 elder brothers. In 1788 he was recorded as owner of the Riddell estate, as well as Cringles and Greatlaws in Lilliesleaf Parish and Whiton in Hownam Parish. He was said to be a man of elegant, but stiff manners, and who was a benefactor of the working classes. He was known as a keen agriculturalist with ambitious ideas, some of which led to the ruin rather than improvement of the Riddell estate. Both he and Lady Riddell (presumably his mother) were listed in the Carriage Tax Roll of 1792/3 and 1797/8 and paid tax for male servants and horses in 1794 and 1797. In the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls he is listed as owner of no fewer than 39 farm horses, as well as 5 carriage or saddle horses (with Lady Riddell listed separately in 1794, with 4 carriage horses). He also paid tax for having 9 non-working dogs at Riddell in 1797. In 1808 he was on the subscription list for Jamieson’s Scots dictionary. He was M.P. for Linlithgow Burghs 1812–19 and also stood as a candidate for Selkirkshire. He was Colonel of the 2nd Regiment of Roxburghshire local militia, based at Kelso. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. He still owned the lands of Over Whiton and others in Hownam Parish according to the Land Tax Rolls of 1811; he also owned the lands of Bank, Riddell Mains, Clerklands, Greatlaws, Cringles, Hoglaire-burn and parts of other lands in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. In 1805 he married Frances, daughter of Charles Marsham, Earl of Romney, and she died in 1868, aged 90. Their children were: Francis Jane (b.1806), born in Edinburgh; Harriet (b.1808), born at Riddell House; Walter Buchanan (1810–92), who succeeded; Rev. John Charles Buchanan (1814–79), Rector of Harrietsham in Kent, whose son John Walter succeeded later; Frances Jane; Emily (d.1881), who married John Adams; Charlotte Mary (d.1869); Gen. Charles James (b.1817), who served with the Royal Artillery; and Henry Philip (b.1819), who was born posthumously, like his father, worked with the Indian Service, and was awarded the Star of India. John (1766–1840) 5th surviving son of Patrick of Muselee and Margaret Balfour. He was an original member of the Jedforest Club and was involved with the founding of the Border Union Agricultural Society. He farmed at Timpendean, later moved to Grahaslaw and then became collector of taxes. He subscribed to Andrew Scott’s book of poetry, published in Kelso in 1811; he was listed as ‘J. Riddell, Esq. Timpendean. He died unmarried in Jedburgh. John (18th/19th C.) son of Walter, who was shepherd at Wauchope. He spent 37 years as shepherd at Clarilaw (probably the one in Bowden Parish) and then rented the farm of Berryhall next to Abbotsford. In 1841 he was at Clarilaw with his wife and daughter Betty. His wife was Margaret Turnbull from Hawick. Their children included: Walter (1802/3–81), who married Margaret Baxter, and was a farm labourer near Hawick and then at Philiphaugh; James, shepherd at Girrick, near Kelso; Robert (b.1867), who married Elizabeth Dickson and emigrated to Canada; John, who married Margaret Greive and died at Faldonside; Margaret, who married stone mason Walter Ballantyne of St. Boswells; Turnbull, who married Helen Clarkson; William, shepherd at Muselee, who emigrated to Australia; and Elizabeth, who died at about the age of 30. Many member of the family are buried at Bowden. John (b.1790/1) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was farmer at Eastfield in Bowden Parish. In 1851 he was farming 180 acres and employing 2 labourers. His wife was Agnes and their children included Archibald, Isabella, John and Thomas. John (d.1843) joiner in Lilliesleaf, eldest son of William. He married Betsy Turnbull. His children included: William (b.1816), who was also a joiner; Jean (b.1819); and Mary, who had a baby the same day that her father died. Rev. John Charles Buchanan (b.1814) 2nd son of Sir John Buchanan, 9th Baronet. He was educated at Eton and Cambridge and was a Fellow of All Souls’ College. He became Rector of Harrietsham in Kent and was Honorary Canon of Canterbury. He was heir presumptive to the Barony, since his elder brother Walter Buchanan had no children. He had 8 children of his own, and his son John Walter succeeded. John (b.1832/3) son of Andrew. He took over as tenant farmer at North Synton. He is recorded there in the 1860s, and was also a non-resident voter in Cavers Parish.

John (19th C.) farmer at Peel in Liddesdale in 1868. John (19th C.) farmer at Ormiston Mains, in Cavers Parish, in the 1860s. Sir John Walter Buchanan (1849–1924) 11th Baronet of Riddell, son of Rev. John Charles, he succeeded his uncle, Sir Walter. He was educated at Eton and Oxford and became a barrister. He served as High Sheriff of Northumberland. In 1874 he married Sarah Isabel, youngest daughter of Robert Wharton. He was succeeded by his son Capt. Sir Walter Robert Buchanan, who married Rachel Beatrice Lyttelton. Sir John Charles Buchanan (1934–2010) 13th Baronet of Riddell, succeeding his father when only 5 months old. He was educated at Eton and Oxford, being 2nd Lieutenant in the King’s Royal Rifle Corps and then qualifying as a chartered accountant. He served as Private Secretary to the Prince of Wales and Lord Lieutenant of Northumberland. He was also on many other boards and committees and was a Fellow of the Royal Society of Arts. In 1969 he married Sarah, daughter of Baron Richardson of Duntisbourne and they had 3 sons, including Walter John Buchanan, who succeeded. Sir Jordan (12th C.) probably a son of Sir Auskittel. Although he appears to be directly descended from the Riddells of Riddell, it is unclear how he was related to other Riddells in the north of England. He was most likely named after Jordannus de Fleming, who could have been his uncle. He witnessed a grant to Jedburgh Abbey in about 1160, and another grant of lands in Berwickshire and Roxburghshire to Walter, son of Alan the Steward in 1161/2. He witnessed a confirmation of donations to Dunfermline Abbey in about 1166 and another charter of lands in the Lothians and Fife at about the same time. He was also witness in 1173/4 for lands in Angus. Probably the same man was Sheriff in Northumberland, with estates at Tilmouth in Durham. His wife’s name is not recorded, but he was succeeded by his son Walter. Margaret (d.c.1631) sister of William of Greatlaws. She married Andrew Duncanson, minister at St. Boswell’s. In 1630 she was served heir to her brother’s lands of Greatlaws in Lillicesleaf Parish, but died soon afterwards. Margaret (17th C.) resident at Hassendean Mains according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. She was probably related to Walter, who was also listed there. Margaret (17th/18th C.) recorded in connection with money Sir Gilbert Elliott gave to the Hawick Kirk Session for keeping her in Wilton, suggesting she was supposed to be resident in Hawick Parish. Another record refers to her as ‘being mad’. Mary (17th/18th C.) also known as Margaret, she married John Scoon, who farmed at Branxholme Town. In 1705 she was renting part of Branxholme Town, with her cautioner being Walter (probably her brother or other close relative). She was still renting part in 1708 and is recorded along with her son (whose name is not given), leasing part of the farm of Branxholme Town in 1711 and 1712. By 1714 she was renting part of the farm with Robert Scoon, making it clear that this was her son. The pair were in arrears until at least 1718 and in 1719 she was replaced as tenant by Walter Scoon. Mary (1809–52) only daughter of Walter, who was 3rd son of Patrick of Muselee. Her mother was a daughter of Dr. Somerville of Jedburgh. In 1835 she married George William Hutton, who was a banker at Newark (son of George Hutton of Cholton-on-Trent and Frances Mitford of Mitford Castle). Their son was Capt. George William Hutton Riddell, who succeeded to the Muselee estates on the death of her uncle Charles in about 1849. They had another son, Edward Mitford Hutton Riddell. Matthew (13th C.) recorded as ‘Matheo Rydel’ when he witnessed a document relating to lands in Ayton. This was sometime in the period 1247–60. A Matthew from the previous century was Abbot of Peterburgh. Michael (14th C.) witness to a charter of Adam de Roule for the lands of Altonburn in about 1354. He is recorded as ‘Michaele de Rydale’, and was probably part of the Riddles of that Ilk. Mungo (d.1471) recorded as ‘Mungo de Redale’ in 1436/7, when Richard ‘de Lylliscleue’ resigned the lands of Lilliesleaf to him as his superior. In 1435 he is ‘Mungo de Redoll’ when he gained lands in the Regality of Sprouston from ‘Marioun Wedale’, widow of John; he held his court at ‘Westerliliesleaf’ (i.e. ‘Wester Lilliesleaf’). He may have been succeeded by his grandson (or son) James. However, his relationship with the nearly contemporary Quentin is unclear. One possibility is that he was Quentin’s son (and therefore James’ father), and that they were both referred to as ‘of Riddell’ for several years; another possibility is that they were brothers, and shared the lands of Riddell and Whiten in some way. If he was James’ father, then he also had a son called Thomas, who was James’ brother. Mungo (16th C.) described as ‘Sir Mungo Riddelle, chaplain’ when he was witness to a document in 1556 relating to the lands of Nether Harden. Given that all the other witnesses were fairly local it is reasonable to assume he was attached to one of the nearby churches, say Wilton or Ashkirk. His name occurs after that of Walter of that Ilk, who may therefore have been his father or brother. Sir Patrick of Riddell (12th/13th C.) 4th Laird, son of Ausketell (although some sources suggest he was son of Walter). He made donations to Melrose Abbey, including lands at Lilliesleaf and Whitten. In 1208/9 he confirmed the granting of lands at Whitten to Melrose Abbey, which had originally been granted by Ausketell (probably his father). In 1454 James II confirmed his grant of lands in Whitten to Melrose Abbey, his name being given as ‘Patricius de Rydale’ and the land being ‘y Wittuna’. He married Christiana de Vesci (or ‘Vesey’) of Alnwick, one of whose relatives (possibly her father) married Margaret, an illegitimate daughter of William the Lion. He was succeeded by his son Walter. It is sometimes claimed that another son was William, who married Matilda Corbet, but he actually seems to have been a brother. Another son may have been Gaufred. His seal bore a lion ‘passant’, not on a shield, and the words ‘SIGILLUM PATRICII DE RIDALA’. Patrick of Riddell (15th C.) recorded in 1438 when he was on the ‘retour of inquest’ for Ker of Altonburn. It is unclear how he might be related to other Riddells of that Ilk, particularly Mungo and Quentin, who were Lairds at about the same time. Patrick of Muselee (d.1698) son of John of Muselee and Grizel Schew, he was probably the 3rd Riddell of Muselee. He was the 2nd son, but succeeded to Muselee and Bewlie, since his older brother William had died first. He leased Roberton from Walter Scott, Earl of Tarras in 1682 for 9 years. He was on the Commission of Supply for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1690. He was probably the ‘muslie Elder’ who was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He contributed £200 to the Darien Company in 1695. In 1697 a child of his was buried in Greyfriars Cemetery, and he himself was buried there in 1698. He married Maria (or Mary) Elliot, who was from Beechwood, daughter of Thomas of Bewlie and Margaret Scott of Chamberlain Newton, and hence related to the Elliots of Borthwickbrae. He was succeeded by his son John, while his grandson William was ancestor of the Riddells of Berwick. Patrick of Muselee (1707–72) son of John of Muselee. He was probably the Patrick ‘of Newsle’ listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. He is probably the Patrick who paid the window tax on Headshaw in 1748 and on ‘Adzhall’ in Ashkirk Parish in 1753. In 1752 in Ashkirk Parish he married Margaret, daughter of Charles Ballfour of Broadmeadows. Their children included: John (b.1754), who died young; Charles (b.1756), also died young; Walter (1758–809), who was a lawyer; William (b.1759); Charles (b.1759), who succeeded; Thomas (1761–1849), with the East India Company; John (1766–1840), who farmed at Timpendean; and one daughter. It is unclear if he was born in 1707 or 1709. Peter (13th C.) recorded as valet of Sir Henry de Pinkeny in a 1298 roll of war horses used on Edward I’s expedition into Scotland. He is recorded as ‘Peter de Ridale’. Possibly the same ‘Petrum de Rydale’ is recorded along with his brothers Thomas and Robert in the 1269 assize roll of Northumberland. Philip (11th/12th C.) possibly ancestor of the local Riddells. He was probably son of Galfridus (otherwise known as Geoffrey), who accompanied William the Conqueror, gaining large English estates. He was probably brother of Hugh, who gained extensive lands in Northamptonshire, as well as Cranston in Midlothian. It is likely he was father of Gervasius, who received lands in Roxburghshire from David I. Other sons were probably Walter, Ausketel and Ralph. Philip (13th C.) Burgess of Berwick. He witnessed a charter for Soutra Hospital, which is undated, but probably shortly before 1270. He was recorded as a merchant in Berwick in 1276 and burgess there in 1277, 1281 and 1283. He was Mayor of Berwick in 1291, as recorded in one of the Ragman Rolls. It is unclear whether he was the family chief at the time, but he is referred to as ‘Philippo de Redale’. He was also recorded in a Newcastle court case in 1292, and in 1293 had a letter of safe passage for trading into England. Probably the same man donated all his lands in Berwick, Chirside, Wederburn and Whitsome in Scotland, as well as his lands in England, to the hospital of ‘Domus Dei’ in Berwick. He is recorded as burgess of Berwick again in 1300 in confirmation of a grant to the hospital there. He was also
on a jury in Berwick in 1302 and may be the ‘Philippum de Rydale’ on the 1276 assize roll of Northumberland. Quentin of Riddell (15th C.) first of the family to be designated ‘of that Ilk’. His name is also written ‘Quintin’, and this was a new forename for the Riddell family. He may have been son of Sir William, but this is unclear; most family histories leave room for at least one other generation around this time. In 1418 he was ‘quintino de redale’ when witnessing a document for Melrose Abbey. He was in possession of Riddell in 1421 when an inquisition was held. He was also recorded as ‘Quintin Liddale of that ilk’ as part of panel to decide on Archibald Douglas inheriting the Barony of Cavers in 1464/5. Also in 1464/5 he was on the panel to decide on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex. He was succeeded by his son, whose name is unknown, and then by his grandson James. His relationship with Mungo is unclear (and confusing, since he appears to be almost contemporary). He probably had a daughter who married John Scott of Synton. Ralph (12th C.) witness to several documents in about the last couple of decades of the 12th century, particularly lands in Lilliesleaf and Whitton involving Melrose Abbey. The earliest of these is probably the settlement between the Abbey and Uhtred of Grubet in 1181–86 and the latest was a confirmation of lands resigned to Patrick of Riddell, which was after 1214. His name is usually recorded as ‘de Ridale’ or variants, and in a 1454 confirmation of the 12th century grant of Whitton to Melrose Abbey he is listed as ‘Radulfo de Ridale’. He was also witness to a charter between Ranulf de Soulis and Jedburgh Abbey in the late 1100s. Probably the same Ralph was the perambulator of lands on the Kale Water granted by Uhtred of Grubet to Melrose Abbey in the period 1181–86. He appears to have been brother of Gervase, and hence a son of Philip. Richard of Wittering (13th C.) owner of lands in Northampton, who was surely closely related to the Border Riddells. He was recorded in a record of Henry III in 1241/2. It seems likely that his father was Hugh, whose widow Sibilla was recorded in a document relating to ‘Wyterine’ in Northamptonshire in 1254. His son Hugh was recorded at Newcastle in a plea for lands in Cumberland in 1269. Richard (14th C.) possibly a younger son of Geoffrey of Riddell, and hence brother of Sir William and Sir Robert. However, precisely how he was related to earlier and later Riddels of that Ilk is unknown. There is no record of a wife or family. He witnessed 2 charters to Ker of Altonburn in 1357/8 and 1358. Note that an earlier Richard was recorded about the 1230s, associated with Preston in East Lothian. Robert (13th C.) witness in about 1250, along with William, for a charter of Lempitlaw to Soutra Hospital. His name is recorded as ‘Roberto Redale’. Also in 1254/5 he was recorded in a charter for the lands of Mow and in about the 1250s witnessed a gift of lands in Berwick. Probably the same Robert was recorded in Cumberland in 1271/2. Perhaps the same Robert was witness in 1279–86 to a grant of lands in Mow to Melrose Abbey by William de Soulis. The phrase ‘Curia de Sprowsytton’ comes after his name, although it is unclear if he was the ‘curate’ of Sprouston, or some unnamed person. He was probably brother or son of William. Sir Robert of Riddell (14th C.) probably related to the nearly contemporary Richard of Riddell, but the succession in these generations is very uncertain. It is possible that he was a younger son of Geoffrey, succeeding after his brother Sir William. However, it may be that he was never Laird himself. He witnessed a charter of lands in Mow granted to Kelso Abbey. He also acted as a cautioner of the Laird of Mowe who was a hostage in England. Robert (16th C.) brother of Walter of that Ilk, in 1559 he was witness to a confirming charter for the lands of Harden. He may have been son of Walter and Mariotta Pringle (although these generations are not clear). He was Bailie of the Barony of Wilton. He may also be the Robert who received part of his father’s lands at Minto. Robert (d.c.1685) tenant in Newbigging when his will was recorded. It is unclear which Newbigging this was. He may be the Robert who witnessed a baptism for John Armstrong (probably tenant in Raesknowe) in Hawick Parish in 1676, with James Davidson (probably also Newbigging) as the other witness. Robert (17th C.) listed as resident at Mabonlaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Andrew and Walter were also listed there and so surely related. Robert (17th C.) resident at Wester Heap according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Robert (17th C.) resident at Hawick Shiel in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 at Philhope, among those ‘not Listed yet payd yr’. Robert (17th C.) resident at Appletreethall according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (18th C.) tenant of Whitehaugh Mill. He took out a one year lease on Highchesters Mill in 1743. He may be the Robert who was at Todshawhillshiel in 1788 when his son John was born. Rev.
Robert (c.1710–60) 6th and youngest son of Sir Walter, the 4th Baronet of Riddell and Mary Watt of Rosehill. He was licensed to preach by Selkirk Presbytery in 1732, was presented to Lilliesleaf by Robert, Duke of Roxburgh in 1737 and ordained that year. He remained as minister there until his death. In 1748 he paid the window tax for ‘the mance’ in Lilliesleaf Parish. It is said that he was sometimes interrupted in his sermons by his father, who was very fastidious about points of scripture. In 1755 he married a distant cousin of the Granton Riddells, Esther, daughter of Dr. John Riddell (and she died in 1803). They had no children. Robert (18th C.) resident of Kirknowe in 1790 when his son Robert was baptised in Hobkirk Parish. His other children probably included William (b.1789), John (b.1792), William (again, b.1794), John (again, b.1796), Adam (b.1798), William (again, b.1798), Betty (b.1800), George (b.1802), Janet (b.1804), an unnamed son (b.1806), Betty (again, b.1807) and Margaret (b.1809). Robert (d.1809) wright, son of George, who lived at Howabill. He is probably related to the Robert in Hobkirk Kirknowe recorded about the same time. He have been the Robert, son of George born in Hobkirk Parish in 1771. He married Mary Gledstains in Hawick in 1793. His death is recorded in Hawick Parish, as well as the death of his son James in 1808 and his wife Mary Gledstains in 1810.

Robert (18th/19th C.) said to have been a native of Teviotdale, he was father of Rev. Henry Scott. He was described as ‘a man of strong though uneducated mind’. He was shepherd for a long time at Langshawburn, where he was visited by Walter Scott, Pulteney Malcolm and James Hogg. He was shepherd at Sorbie (in Ewesdale) when his famous son was born. While there it is said that he planted some saplings on a hillside above Wrae, saying that he wished to live long enough for his coffin to be made from the wood of the mature trees. He then moved to Capplefoot, on the Water of Milk. While there he hired a teacher to instruct his children. Later he returned to the Ettrick to work for Scott of Deloraine, who he had been with in his younger days. He married Agnes Scott, who was also from Teviotdale. They had 6 sons and a daughter: William; Borthwick, who farmed at Dryden, Ashkirk, and was known as a piper; Henry Scott, minister at Teviothead and song-writer; Robert (1800–67), who emigrated to America and died in Rockton, Canada; Alexander Hay, who farmed in Cumberland; Walter (d.1834), who died unmarried; and Mary, who married a Jones. Robert (1800–67) born in Teviotdale, he was 4th son of shepherd Robert and brother of Rev. Henry Scott. He farmed in Cumberland for a while and then emigrated to America. He married Margaret Johnstone in 1819 and they had 10 children, including Nancy, Euphemia, Benjamin, Thomas, Robert, Ann and Walter. He died in Rockton, Ontario.

Robert (b.1839/40) son of farm labourer Walter, and descended from Hobkirk shepherds. He apprenticed as a blacksmith with Thomas Kedzie in Selkirk, but also worked in Hobkirk. He then worked in Edinburgh, Stirling and Glasgow before emigrating to America in 1864. He spent time in Michigan, Canada and Minnesota, returned to Scotland and then went back to Canada in 1870. In 1872 he started his own wrought-iron fencing business in Chatham, Ontario. He married a Miss Tocher and had 5 children. Rev. Simon (1677–1743) probably descended from a branch of the Riddells of that Ilk. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1695, licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1699 and ordained at Tyuron Church in 1701. In 1715 he marched to Stirling with some of his parishioners in defence of the King and the Protestant cause and in 1740 he was one of the 15 ministers who dissented against the resolution to depose the 8 Seceeding ministers. He married Annie Riddell, who was heiress of the lands of Newhouse near Lilliesleaf. Their only son Walter married Annie Riddell, heiress of Glenriddell. Steven (16th C.) recorded in the Register of the Privy Council in 1569. He was listed along with James Langlands as heralds in Roxburghshire, ‘Ane of the Wardane Officiaris to be maid Messinger’. It seems likely he was from the Riddells of that Ilk. Thomas (12th/13th C.) recorded as brother of Geoffrey in the period 1165–1204. He witnessed his brother’s charter for 2 oxgangs of lands in Primside. Thomas (14th C.) recorded as being ‘de Rydell’ in the 1330s when he was witness to a charter relating to the town of Roxburgh and preserved in the chartulary of Dryburgh. It is unclear how he may have been related to other Riddells. He could be the Thomas who forfeited the lands of ‘Fynlawys’ in the Barony of Oxnam, which were granted to William Stewart of Jedward during the reign of Robert II. Thomas (15th/16th C.) brother of James of that Ilk. At the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493 he had remission for being with the Duke of Albany during the time of revolt, as well as for stealing sheep. His surety was his brother, the Laird of Riddell. Thomas (d.c.1514) listed as deceased in 1514, when he was succeeded in the position of Clek of Liliesleaf by George Riddell. He was probably a member of the family of Riddell of that Ilk, holding the benefice of assistant priest in the Parish. Thomas (1696–1750) 3rd son of Walter, 4th Baronet of Riddell. The lands of Camieston near Newtown St. Boswells were acquired for him and he became the first Riddell Laird there. It is possible that he was the ‘Mr. Riddell of Camiestoun’ who purchased the Kirkland of Beflie from the Duke of Roxburgh. He may be the Thomas who paid the window tax at ‘Ferningtoun’ in Roxburgh Parish in 1748. In 1740 he married Margaret, youngest daughter of Rev. William Hunter, minister of Liliesleaf. His children were: Walter (b.1742), who died young; Margaret (1744–71), who died unmarried; Eleanor (1745–1815), also unmarried; William (b.1746), who succeeded to Camieston and married Elizabeth, daughter of John Kerr of Cavers Carre; Thomas (1748–56); and Robert (1750–93), who served with the East India Company and perished on the ‘Duchess of Athole’, being in temporary command when fire broke out, and refusing to abandon his ship.

Capt. Thomas (18th C.) son of Walter of that Ilk. He was with the Honorable East India Company, being Captain of the Adm. Pocock 1762{18th C.) from Cavers Parish. In 1797 he married Jane Govenlock, who was from Hawick Parish. Thomas of Camieston (1777–1826) eldest son of William of Camieston. He qualified as Writer to the Signet in 1805, but never followed this profession. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819 (along with his father) when still younger of Camieston. In 1805 he married Jane, daughter of William Ferrier, and she died in 1833. Their children were: Gen. William (1805–75); Walter of Cavers Carre (1807–74); John Carre (1809–80), who emigrated to Australia, where he was a member of the Parliament of Victoria; Capt. Thomas (1810–54) of the Bengal Infantry; Lillas Wallace (b.1812), married Ross Watt and emigrated to Victoria; Robert (1813–39), who died in India; Elizabeth Carre (1816–44), who died unmarried; Georgina Vereker (b.1818), who married Malcolm McNeil Rind; and Jane Ann (d.1859), who married Elijah Imprey. Thomas (d.1843) 2nd son of Liliesleaf joiner William. He was a thatcher. He married Rachel Stirling and their children included William (b.1803), who was a joiner. Thomas (1815–62) born in Liliesleaf, son of Isabella, with the father’s name unknown. He emigrated to the U.S.A., settling in Lawrence, Massachusetts, working in the mills. He married Sarah S. Henderson and their children were James, Walter and David. He drowned after falling overboard from a steamer between Fall River and New York. Thomas (b.1818/9) stocking-maker in Denholm. In 1861 he was listed on Main Street. In the 1860s he is in a trade directory as a stocking-maker, suggesting he ran his own business. He married Janet Dow and their children included Thomas, John, Robert S., James and George. Walter (d.1150s) described as ‘de Riddale, of Whitunes’ when he received a charter of half of ‘Eshteho’ (i.e. ‘Eschetho’, probably the same as Lintobank) and ‘Lillisclive’ (Liliesleaf) from David I sometime in the period 1124–53. This is recorded in a ‘transumpt’ of 1506 (i.e. a legal copy of the frail document was made in Jedburgh at that time). He may thus have been the first Baron of Riddell and Whitton. He was probably a close relative of Gervase, who witnessed some charters along with him; he may have been brother of Gervase (or perhaps his son), and hence a son of Philip. He is further recorded as ‘Waltero de ridalis’ and similar in several surviving charters he witnessed in the reign of David for St. Andrews Priory and other religious houses. A bull from Pope Adrian IV in 1156 confirms his brother and heir Auskittel in several lands. This suggests he died without any sons. However, he is known to have married Ethride de Percy, sister of the Lord of Oxenham. Walter of Riddell (12th/13th C.) son of Sir Auskittel. A Bull of Pope Alexander III (sometime before 1181) confirms him in the lands of ‘Lillescleve’, half of ‘Langetun’, ‘Witun’ and ‘Brahbe’ (Brawby in Yorkshire), which his father and forebears held of the church of Hexham. He married Guynoldu, daughter of the Earl Gospatric. They had at least 2 sons: Sir Patrick, who succeeded; and Ralph, said to have been progenitor of the Northumberland branch of Riddells. Walter (12th/13th C.) son of Sir Jordan, perhaps the first generation of the Riddells of the Newcastle area. He succeeded his father in the lands of Tilmouth in Durham and the Lordship of Whickham. He was Sheriff of Northumberland and was succeeded by Sir William. Walter of Riddell (13th C.) 5th Laird, son of Sir Patrick and Margaret de Vesci (or ‘Vesey’). He confirmed his father’s donations to Melrose Abbey, and gave other benefactions to both Melrose and Kelso. The gift to Melrose Abbey was part of Lilliesleaf and made some time before 1253; this charter also mentions land he had previously granted to Alexander, brother of Henry of Ashkirk. He married a daughter of Hugh de Gifford. He had 2 sons, Sir William (who succeeded) and Patrick. His seal bore an eagle with wings elevated, not on a shield, and the words ‘SIG[I]LL. WA[TERI DE RI][DA]LE’. Walter (16th C.) younger of Riddell, son of John. He died before his father, and the title was inherited by his son Walter. However, these generations are confused, and it is also possible that his brother George inherited, or was at least the effective Laird during the minority of his son Walter. His wife’s name is said to have been Jane. Walter of that Ilk (d.c.1580) probably son of Walter, he succeeded to the Lairdship from his grandfather John. George, who also appears to have been acting as Laird before him, was either his father or uncle. He may the ‘lard of Ryddell’ who signed a bond of assurance with Somerset at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. He was witness to a charter dealing with the lands of Nether Harden in 1556 and is also mentioned in 1559 when his brother Robert was witness to a confirming charter for the lands of Harden (although it is possible this is 1550). In 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. In 1563 he was ‘wadset’ lands at ‘Hungrie Hills’ and near the Kirk of Lilliesleaf by William Middlemas. He is probably the ‘Lard of Riddell’ listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting superiority of her father’s lands in Wilton. He served as surety for the Elliots in 1573. In 1575 he was one of the arbitrators for the Pringles in their feud with the Elliots. He was on an assize in 1577. In 1543 he married Mariotta (or Marion), daughter of Sir James Pringle of Galashiels and Smailholm. He was probably succeeded by another Walter, and also had sons Robert and William (who witnessed a bond for the Elliots in 1581, by which time his son was Laird). His seal bore a chevron between 3 ears of rye and the words ‘S’ VALTERI RIDDDEL’, while his wife’s had 3 shells on a ‘bend sinister’ and the words ‘S’ MARION HOPPRINGIL. Walter of that Ilk (d.bef. 1592) son of Walter. He was probably the Walter of that Ilk listed among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. However, these generations of Walters are quite confused. He married Agnes, daughter of George Ramsay of Dalhousie, and was succeeded by his son Andrew. He probably also had 2 daughters, one of whom married Thomas Ker of Cavers Carre and Nether Howden. His wife may have been the Lady Riddell whose conduct was singled out when the Presbyterians complained to the King about continuing supporters of Catholicism. He and his son Andrew were ‘tutors’ for the young James Pringle of Galashiels and Smailholm. His son Andrew and brother William both witnessed a bond for the Elliots in 1581, while he was Laird. In 1595/6 (suggesting he was alive then, but perhaps just confirming an earlier grant) there is a charter for the Barony of Lilliesleaf in which he is granted thr 3½ husbandlands of Lilliesleaf, called ‘West-Maynis alias Dunstane or Myris’ and 6 husbandlands and 2 cottage lands in the town of Lilliesleaf, with Lilliesleaf Mill; his son Andrew and brother William are also listed. Walter (d.bef. 1642) referred to in 1600 as ‘iar of that Ilk’, along with his wife Agnes, when they received the lands of Bewlie. He was probably son of the Laird of Riddell, or else descended from the earlier Riddells who had farmed at Bewlie. He is probably the Walter referred to in 1642 when his son William gave Bewlie to his brother Walter. Walter of Woodhouse (16th/17th C.) member of the assize at the Commissioners’ Court in 1623. He was voted as Chancellor of the panel. He may be the same as one of the other Walters. Sir Walter 2nd Baronet of Riddell (d.c.1669) son of Sir John. He was knighted by Charles I during his father’s lifetime. In 1632 there is a discharge to him from Violet Douglas, widow of Andrew of that Ilk and their 1st and 2nd sons Andrew of Haining and Robert of Hartside. He was served heir to his father in 1636; this included Lintobank, Boosmill, Easter Clerklands, Greatlaws and West Lilliesleaf (called ‘Murieknow’), as well as Over and Nether Whitton. He was one of the 2 Parliamentary Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1628–1633, and also represented Roxburghshire 1646–47 and 1650. In 1640 he had a contract with Walter Scott of Burnside concerning Chapel and other lands in Lilliesleaf. He was a supporter of the Covenant. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1643 and the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1643, 1644, 1646, 1648 and 1649. In 1643 his estate of Riddell (consisting of Mains of Riddell, Bank, Clerklands, Riddell Mill and Lilliesleaf Mill), valued at £1654; he was also owner of part of Bewlie in Lilliesleaf.
Parish (valued at £273), as well as of Whitton in Morebattle Parish (valued at £1600). In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. In 1654 he probably the ‘W. Riddell’ among local men who signed an attestation about the ‘carriage and deportment of the deceased Francis Earl of Buccleuch’; this was part of efforts to have the fines reduced on the Buccleuch estate that had been imposed by Cromwell for the Earl supporting King Charles. In 1662, after the Restoration, he was fined £6,600 (the second largest amount in Roxburghshire). He is recorded in a charter of 1659 involving his daughter-in-law Agnes Scott and lands in Whiton. He paid tax for his rentals in Howna (£3382) and Lilliesleaf (£1629) in about 1663. He married Jane (or Janet), daughter of William Rigg of Aithernie in Fife, said to be a very pious woman and niece of Katherine Rigg, ‘the Good Lady Cavers’; this may have been in 1630. Their children were: Sir John, who succeeded; William of Friarslaw, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Francis Wauchope and was the progenitor of the Riddells of Glenriddell; Archibald, Covenanting preacher, who married an Aitkenhead and was progenitor of the Riddells of Granton; Thomas, who may have married Agnes Scott and died childless; Andrew; Agnes, who married James Scott, brother of Sir William of Harden in 1659; Sarah, who married Patrick Hepburn of Smeaton in 1656; and Alison, who married Rev. Gabriel Semple of Jedburgh (once a preacher of field conventicles). Note there are conflicting accounts of his children, particularly the daughters. His son Sir John was served as his heir in 1669. His wife’s will is recorded at the Commissariat of Peebles in 1682. Walter of Belses (17th C.) recorded in 1649 when his son William became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He must have been related to the Riddells of Riddell and of Minto. He may have been the same Walter who was given the lands of Belses by his brother William (son of Walter) in 1642; if so he was described as ‘in Longhauche’. He was also possibly the ‘portioner of Bewlie’ who was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1643 and the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1648 and 1649. He may be the same Walter as the ‘portioner of Lilliesleaf’ who in 1643 held ‘20 soums’ valued at £60 and 4 acres at £26. He was also involved in a ‘wadset’ over lands at Fernielees and Templehall (in the Rule valley) with William Earl of Lothian in 1649; Sir Walter of that Ilk is also mentioned. and so was clearly distinct. He extended the loan to the Earl in 1652, when he was described as ‘now indweller in Appotsysde’. In the 1652 marriage contract of Margaret Riddell and Robert Elliot, he is described as uncle of Margaret and brother of William, deceased portioner of Bewlie. He also witnessed a contract of ‘wadset’ for the Lorraines of Appotside in 1654, also signed by his eldest son ‘Harie’ (i.e. Henry), as well as further contracts in 1656. He was mentioned in discharges of 1655 for uplifting the teinds of Harwood and Tythelhouse and in further discharges of 1657 and 1658; he acted as ‘baillie in that part’ for Elliot of Harwood and was tenant at Appotside. In 1656 he witnessed the ratification of William Elliot of Harwood in his Rulewater lands and another sasine relating to Harwood was witnessed by his sons Henry and Walter. His sons William and Henry witnessed separate documents 1659, and all 3 sons witnessed a document relating to Appotside in 1656. He is probably also the Walter who rented land from John Turnbull of Firth in 1645. He may be the Walter recorded as portioner in 1678 when he owned lands in Bewlie and also for the ‘heritors’ of Raperlaw, amounting to £273, as well as Lilliesleaf Mill (valued at £407 15s); however, that seems more likely to be the next generation. Walter (17th C.) recorded as ‘in Langhauche’ and ‘baillie in that part to the said William Elliot’ when he was witness in 1637 for Elliot of the Binks purchasing Harwood. The Langhaugh may have been the one in Liddesdale or in Hob Kirk (probably the latter). In one of the 1637 documents he is transcribed as ‘Lid dell’. He also witnessed other agreements relating to vicarage teinds of Hob Kirk Parish in 1638 and 1648, and a discharge to him and others for the teinds in 1649. In 1646 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. Walter of Minto (c.1620–c.84) writer (i.e. solicitor) in Edinburgh. He was probably 2nd son of son of William of Newhouse and grandson of William of Muselee (although these generations are confused). He purchased part of the Minto estate from John Turnbull of Minto in 1676 (confirmed in 1681). He leased the lands of ‘Kaimes and the Hills’ to William Mather of Lanton in 1683. Also in 1683 has a disposition for Minto to his son-in-law Thomas Rutherford. There was a dispute among his children over the inheritance, but eventually Minto passed to Walter Scott, Earl of Tarras in 1687 and not long afterwards sold to the Elliots. He married Catharine Nisbet in 1652 in Edinburgh, and secondly married Isabel Riddell. His children were: James (d.1687), who died young; Jean, who married Robert Laurie in Edinburgh, and was the mother of the Annie Laurie who inspired the song; Susanna, who married Thomas, brother of John Rutherford of Edgerston; Catharine, who probably died young; Grizel (b.bef. 1687), who was to have succeeded if she married a Riddell; John, who may also have died young; Elizabeth, who married James Dallas in Edinburgh; and Agnes. His daughters cleared all their interests in Minto in the 1690s. Walter (17th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. In 1686 he married Margaret Ker in Wilton. Walter (17th C.) eldest son of John ‘in Beirhope’. He is probably the Walter, ‘portioner of Beulie’ who witnessed the testament of William Elliot of Harwood in 1662. He was ‘portioner’ of Beulie in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1678 Land Tax Rolls, with land valued at £273. He (or a descendant) received part of the lands of Beulie in 1687. Walter of Newhouse (17th C.). In 1689 he was named among the officers of the local Militia, charged with defending the kingdom. He is probably the same Laird of Newhouse who (along with Turnbull of Sharplaw) was taken prisoner by a group of Covenanters soldiers in 1679 (commanded by Turnbull of Standhill perhaps). He is probably the Walter of Newhouse who married Christian Stoddart in Edinburgh in 1684. He was ‘Walter ridell of Neuhous’ in 1694 when he paid tax on 4 hearths in Lilliesleaf Parish. It is unclear if he is the same man as Walter (b.c.1620) of Newhouse who appears to have died in the 1680s. His daughter may have been Annie, who married Rev. Simon. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Hartshaugh in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. Walter (17th C.) listed at Allanhaugh Mill on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was taxed for 3 hearths because he was ‘wt tuo kilns’, suggesting that he was the miller there at that time. Probably the same Walter rented part of the farm of Raesknow from the Duchess of Buccleuch in the period 1690–98. He may be the Walter who acted as cautioner for Margaret in 1705, when she leased part of Brauxholme Town farm. He is probably the miller at Allanhaugh Mill called ‘Dustyfitt’ who was there around 1710, as attested in evidence given regarding the state of Hawick’s Common in 1767. William, who was tenant at Allanhaugh Mill and became a Burgess in 1729, was probably his son. Walter (17th C.) resident at Hassedean Mains according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He was probably related to Margaret, who was also listed there. Walter of Newhouse (d.1742) apprenticed to John Wilkie, he became Writer to the Signet in 1742. He married Jean Pringle. It is unclear how he was related to the other Riddells of Newhouse. Walter (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick who is listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is probably the same Walter listed ‘eist the water’ among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. He was married to Marion Liddell. Their son William was born in 1702, with baker John Whillans and merchant John Forman as witnesses. Walter of Frierashaw (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1695 when he contributed £100 to the Darien Company. It is unclear how he was related to other Riddells. Walter (17th/18th C.) from the Lilliesleaf branch of the family. He was tenant farmer at North Synton. In 1706 his eldest daughter Margaret married John of Muselee. Sir Walter of that Ilk (d.1747) 4th Baronet of Riddell, succeeding his father Sir John in 1700. In 1695 he would have been the ‘younger’ of Riddell who was appointed as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He was also ‘younger of that Ilk’ in 1695 when he contributed £400 to the Darien Company. He was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament in 1700 and is listed as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1704. In 1700 he was recorded in a tax document for the Lordship of Melrose. In 1706 he gave a bond of 1,000 merks to Alexander Orrock, which formed part of the Orrock Bequest; this presumably means he was a heritor of Hawick Parish. In 1727–28 he was involved with the Scotts of Davington in a land dispute. In 1692 he married Margaret, daughter of Watt of Rosehill; she was a daughter of his step-mother. His children were: John, an advocate who pre-deceased him; Sir Walter, who did succeed; Thomas of Camieston, whose son William married Elizabeth, daughter of John Kerr of Cavers Carre; William, who moved to Bermuda; Robert, minister of Lilliesleaf; Ann (or perhaps Jane or Eleanor), who married John Carre of Cavers; Sarah, who married John Forest; and Christian, who died young. He is said to have been very pious and somewhat eccentric, for example on occasion interrupting his son Robert’s sermons, saying ‘Robert, that won’t do!’, and he refused to stop people coming onto his land, saying ‘The Earth is the Lord’s!’ James may have been another son, who moved to Ireland, was knighted, and wrote his name ‘Riddall’. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident in Whithope Mill in 1717 when his daughter Marion was baptised in Roberton Parish. Walter (17th/18th C.) resident in Mabonlaw. His daughter Marion was baptised at the end of 1717 in Roberton Parish; this was 9 months after another Marion was baptised, daughter of Walter in Whithope Mill (so it is unclear if this was a different man). He could be the Walter recorded at Mabonlaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, along with Robert and Andrew. Sir Walter of that Ilk (1695–1765) 5th Baronet of Riddell. He succeeded from his father Sir Walter, since his elder brother John had died first. He became a Burgess and Guildbrother of Edinburgh in 1713 and was later a merchant at Eyemouth, probably dealing in fish and spirits. He paid the window tax for Riddell House in 1748. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Jane, daughter of John Turnbull of Houndwood near Eyemouth, the marriage being an elopement. His sons were: Walter, his eldest, who pre-deceased him by about 10 years; Sir John, who succeeded; James, who served in the Army, being a Lieutenant-Colonel 10 years; Sir John, who succeeded from his father Sir Walter, since his elder brother John had died first. He became a Burgess and Guildbrother of Edinburgh in 1713 and was later a merchant at Eyemouth, probably dealing in fish and spirits. He paid the window tax for Riddell House in 1748. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Jane, daughter of John Turnbull of Houndwood near Eyemouth, the marriage being an elopement. His sons were: Walter, his eldest, who pre-deceased him by about 10 years; Sir John, who succeeded; James, who served in the Army, being a Lieutenant-Colonel in the Dutch service; Thomas of Besborough, who served in the Navy, being a Lieutenant-Colonel, his eldest, who pre-deceased him by about 10 years; Sir John, who succeeded; James, who served in the Army, being a Lieutenant-Colonel in the Dutch service; Thomas of Besborough, who served in the Navy, and was father of Gen. Henry James Riddell, Commander of the forces in Scotland; and Andrew. Walter ‘Dusty Fit’ (18th C.) miller of Allanhaugh Mill in the early 1700s. He may have been related to the later tenant at Southdean Mill. Margaret, who married John Scoon, may have been a daughter of his (since his name appears as a witness to one of their children’s baptisms). He may be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for John Scott in Allanhaugh Mill in 1725. Walter of Newhouse and Glenriddell (d.1788) son of Rev. Simon. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Annie, daughter and heiress of Robert Riddell of Glenriddell, a very distant cousin. He thereby became Laird of Glenriddell in Dumfriesshire. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He may be the Riddell of Newhouse who sold lands in Lilliesleaf Parish to Rev. William Campbell. His children were: Robert, who succeeded, was a great friend of Robert Burns, married Miss Kennedy, and died without children; Walter, who succeeded after his brother and married Maria Woodley, daughter of the Governor of St. Kitts, Leeward Islands; Sophia; and Alexander. Walter (18th C.) resident at Whithope Mill in 1774 when his daughter Jean was baptised in Roberton Parish. He is surely related to the earlier Walter in Whithope Mill. Walter of Friar’s Glen (1758–1809) 3rd surviving son of Patrick of Museele and Margaret Balfour. He worked as a lawyer in Jedburgh. He married Christian, eldest daughter of Dr. Somerville of Jedburgh. Their children were: Patrick, who died unmarried; and Mary (b.1809), who married George Hutton, and whose son Capt. Hutton Riddell inherited Museele. He died the same year as his second child. Walter (b.1760) 2nd son of Frank, he was born in Hawick. He married Janet Hamilton and moved to Carlisle. Their children were: James (b.1784), who had 3 daughters, including Jennie, who married John Hislop; Frank (b.1786), who was a store clerk in Leith and died unmarried; Willie (b.1789), who settled in Carlisle; Isabella (b.1791); Margaret (b.1793); and Walter, who was born in Hawick, was training for the ministry, but died young. Sir Walter Buchanan (c.1764–84) 7th Baronet of Riddell. He succeeded from his father John, who died when he was quite young. Said to be of delicate health, he died just about when he reached majority. He was succeeded by his brother Sir James. Walter (18th C.) recorded as ‘of Muselee’ in a marriage bond of 1769 for his daughter Agnes with John, son of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe. He may have been a younger son of John of Muselee. Walter (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Wauchope for about 50 years. He was a shepherd there according to both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. His son John was a shepherd at Clarilaw. He could be the Walter of Hobkirk Parish whose children (with no mother’s name given) included: Robert (b.1779); Elizabeth (b.1781); Jean (b.1783); John (b.1784); William (b.1788); and James (b.1796). Walter (18th/19th C.) tenant at Southdean Mill, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 horses. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of London, who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He must have had some local connection. Walter (b.c.1785) 3rd son of William, he was a joiner in Lilliesleaf like his father. He was recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1841 he was living with Elizabeth, probably his daughter. His sons included: William, who married Margaret Lambert and emigrated to Philadelphia; and Walter, who also emigrated to the U.S.A. Walter (1798–1863) son of Hawick shoemaker William and Jean Goodfellow. He worked as a spinner in Wilton. In 1835 he was listed at Dovemount amount heads of households in Wilton Kirk, and in 1840 and 1841 was listed as living in Hawick. On the 1841 census he was on O’Connell Street and in 1851 was on Ladylaw Place. His wife was Mary and their children included William, Andrew, Thomas, Jean, Janet and John. Walter (19th C.) tailor in Hawick. He was a member of Allars Kirk in about the 1830s. Walter see Walter Riddell Carre. Walter Francis Montagu Douglas Scott (1834–77) eldest son of Henry Scott, minister of Teviothead. He worked with the Hongkong and Shanghai Bank. He married Agnes, daughter of David Arnot, minister of St. Giles. He was obviously named after his father’s patron. He died in Edinburgh. Sir Walter Buchanan (1810–92) eldest son of Sir John Buchanan, who died when he was young. He was born at Riddell House, and educated at Eton and Oxford. Although he became the 10th Baronet in 1819, the family sold the Riddell estate in 1823. However, he did succeed to the smaller estate of Hepple in Northumberland. He was called to the bar at Lincoln’s Inn in 1834. He was Magistrate and Chief Steward in Northumberland, as well as serving as an M.P. He gave a lot of help to Rev. G.T. Ridlon, in his compilation of a family history, published in 1884. He married Alicia Ann, youngest daughter of William Ripley in 1850, but they had no children. He was succeeded by his nephew Sir John Walter Buchanan, son of Rev. John Charles. Sir Walter Robert Buchanan (1879–1934) son of John Walter Buchanan, he was 12th Baronet of Riddell. He was educated at Eton and Oxford and became Principal of Hertford College there. He was also Chairman of the University Grants Committee. In 1919 he married Rachel, daughter of Cahrles Lyttelton, 8th Viscount Cobham. They had 8 children, and he was succeeded by Sir John, who was an infant at the time. Sir Walter John Buchanan (1974–) 14th Baronet of Riddell, son of Sir John Charles Buchanan. He has been Managing Director of the companies Cluff Geothermal Limited and Lilliesleaf Limited. William (12th C.) witness to documents for ‘Morgrundus’ Count of Mar, relating to St. Andrews Priory, where he is ‘Willelmo de ridal’. This was probably around the 1170s. He may be the younger son of Galfridus/Geoffrey who was Lord of Farrigdon in Northamptonshire and Primside and Glengarnock in Scotland, who served in the court of William I and died in 1214. William (12th/13th C.) son of Ansketill and brother of Patrick. In some genealogies he is stated to be a son of Patrick, but this appears to be incorrect. He married Matilda Corbet, to whom he granted several pieces of land in dowry. He received part of the lands of Whilton, although he had no heirs, so all these lands reverted to the head of the family later. His wife
He was Constable of Norham Castle and High Sheriff of Northumberland, and played a role in the managing of the Marches for King Edward II. Part of his lands was held by his brother Hugh, whose descendants were later Sheriffs and Mayors of Newcastle. His lands were eventually inherited by his 3 daughters, Isabel, Constantine and Joan. This branch of family usually spelled their name ‘Riddell’. William (13th/14th C.) possibly son of William and hence 7th Riddell of that Ilk. However, this period in the genealogy is difficult to follow, and there may well be additional generations, since some accounts suggest impossibly long lifespans. He probably died unmarried and was succeeded by his brother Geoffrey. Sir William (14th C.) possibly eldest son of Geoffrey and brother of Sir Robert and Richard. However, these generations are quite confused. He may have been knighted by David II and died in the reign of Robert II. He was probably father of Quentin or Mungo (or both). William (15th C.) recorded as ‘Wil. Riddale’ in 1498/9 when he witnessed a charter in Edinburgh. Perhaps the same ‘Willelmi Riddale’ had an escheat in Lanark recorded in 1501. William (16th C.) described in a sasine of 1535 (relating to Harden) as ‘Bailie in that part’ along with George. He was probably a son of the Laird of Riddell (although which one is unclear). William (16th C.) probably a younger son of John of that Ilk. He is described in a document of 1551 receiving the lands of Bewlie from John of that Ilk and his heir Walter, who was his brother. William of Bewlie (16th C.) brother of Walter of that Ilk, and probably son of the previous Walter. However, it seems hard to separate different Williams and Walters around this time. He may be the same William ‘in Lillslie’ who was involved in an action with William Midlemas in 1589. He witnessed a bond for the Elliots in 1581. In 1595/6 he was brother of Walter of that Ilk when he had confirmed to him the ‘5 pound lands of Bewlie and the half cottage lands in the town of Lilliesleaf’. William (16th C.) probably the name of William ‘Rydlie’ who was accused in 1590 of rieving crimes along with Martin’s Airchie Elliot and Hob of Bowholm Elliot. He may also be the ‘William Rydle of Hawcuppe’ accused of rieving in 1590, along with Will Elliot of Heuchhouse, Nixons, Shielis and others; it is unclear where ‘Hawcuppe’ may have been. William (d.c.1630) recorded being granted the lands of Greatlaws in Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. He was described as son of the deceased George and his lands were ‘6 husbandlands’. He may have been son of George of that Ilk who is recorded several decades earlier. His sister Margaret, wife of Rev. Andrew Duncanson, was served heir to his lands in 1630. William of Muselee (16th/17th C.) probably son of Andrew of that Ilk, with his mother being a Pringle. He received the lands of Newhouse (in Lilliesleaf) as his inheritance. He also had a charter of Muselee in 1618. He married Bessie Ainslie. Their sons may have been John of Muselee and William of Newhouse (although these generations are confused). Helen, a direct descendant, married William Crawford, minister of Wilton, in 1716. William (d.bef. 1652) son of Walter. He is probably the William ‘portioner of Bewlie’ who signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. In 1642 he gave the lands of Bewlie to his brother Walter. He married Helen Scott. In 1652 there is a marriage contract of his eldest daughter Margaret with Robert, 2nd son of Simon Elliot of the Binks. William of Newhouse (17th C.) probably younger son of William of Muselee. His 2nd son was Walter, who purchased the Minto estate. William of Bewlie (d.c.1695) son and heir of Henry. He was confirmed in the lands of Bewlie in 1669 and in 1670 gave part of the lands to his mother, Janet Scott. His sister Agnes succeeded to his lands in 1695 and married John Nisbet of Nisbetfield. He is probably the resident in Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Sir William (17th C.) 3rd son of Sir John, 1st Baronet of Riddell and brother of Walter, 2nd Baronet. He was knighted by Charles I and served in the army in the Netherlands, being appointed Governor of ‘Desborough’ (probably Doesburgh). He married Wendelina de Berach (or perhaps Buchan) in 1654. He had sons Walter and William, who moved to New Jersey, and other sons, Richard and John Frederick. His daughter Anne Catherine married Nicholas, son of Francis Bowyer and became heiress to her brother John Frederick (in 1677) and sister Margaret. William (17th/18th C.) gardener in Hawick. He married Agnes Nichol in 1704. Their daughter Margaret was born in 1705. Other children included John, Helen and William. William (d.1788) described in ‘Dodsley’s Annual Register’ as dying at Selkirk at the incredible age of 116. He was said to have been a smuggler in his early life, and a great lover of brandy. He was also meant to have been a heavy drinker, who went through binges lasting several days. He married 3 times, the last being when he was 95. It is unclear how he was related to other local Riddells. William of Friarshaw (d.c.1693) 2nd son of Sir Walter, 2nd Baronet of Riddell. He acquired the lands of Friarshaw in Dumfriesshire and was the progenitor of the Riddells of Glenriddell. He was an advocate, perhaps being the William, writer in Edinburgh, who was deputed by others to subscribe to the Darien Company in 1696. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Francis Wauchope. Their son Walter was the first of the Riddells of Glenriddell (formerly Gilmerston) in Dumfriesshire. Walter was served as his heir in 1693. William (17th/18th C.) living at Borthaugh in 1707 according to the Robertson Parish records. His wife Isobel had acted as midwife for the wife of William Elliot of Borthwickbrae. William (17th/18th C.) shoemaker of Hawick. In 1717 he was abused in the street by ‘Jafra the Piper’. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, son of George. He may have been the William, son of George and Janet Phaup who was baptised in Robertson in 1681. He married Isobel Morrison in 1707 and their children included: Janet (b.1716); William (b.1717); John (b.1720); and Mary (b.1722). William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Allanhaugh Mill. He was probably son of Walter, ‘Dustyfit’. In 1729 he was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick and referred to as ‘late in Allanhaughmilne’. William (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism in 1745 for wright James Roger. He is listed among the subscribers to the reprinted Buchanan’s ‘History of Scotland’ (1752); this was along with Charles Tudhope, who also witnessed the same baptism in 1745. William (18th C.) 4th son of Walter, 4th Baronet of Riddell. He emigrated to the West Indies, settling in Bermuda, where he was a merchant. He married Dinah Darrel and their children included John, Margaret, Robert, William, Sarah and Elizabeth. One of his descendants wrote a medical thesis. It is thought that this branch died out after only another couple of generations. William, W.S. of Camieston (1746–1829) 2nd son of Thomas, he succeeded since his older brother had died young. He was educated in Edinburgh and trained as a lawyer, being apprenticed to Thomas Cockburn and becoming Writer to the Signet in 1770. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1781. He was listed among the voters in Roxburghshire in 1788 and was further was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. In 1776 he married Elizabeth, daughter and heiress of John Kerr of Cavers Carre. Their children were: Thomas (1778–1826), who succeeded; John (1779–1814), who served with the East India Company and died on the way home; Jane (1781–1849), who died unmarried; Adm. Robert (1782–1860), a decorated naval officer, who succeeded to the estate of Cavers Carre and took the additional surname ‘Carre’; Elizabeth (1785–1846), also unmarried; and Margaret (1787–1843), also died unmarried. William (18th C.) wright of Hawick, recorded in 1792 when his daughter Helen married Robert Boa in Edinburgh. He could be the same as the William described as a deceased labourer of Hawick in 1794 when his daughter Isobel married David Simpson in Edinburgh. William (18th C.) joiner in Lilliesleaf. He was said to be a descendant of the Riddells of Riddell. He married Margaret Hervey and their children were: John, who was a joiner; Thomas, a thatcher; Walter, who married Batsy Young; Mary, who married Glasgow merchant Thomas Cochran; and Margaret, who married tailor James Walker. William (18th/19th C.) resident at Hermitage, born in Roxburghshire, and said to be a direct descendant of the Riddells of that Ilk. He married Catherine Brydon and they had 9 children: William (b.1801), who married Jessie Watson and emigrated to Canada; John; James; Thomas, who emigrated to Ontario, Canada and married twice; Janet; Willhelmina; Mary, also moved to Canada; Anne, emigrated to Canada and married Hugh Smith; married Robert Craig and emigrated to Canada. William (d.1827) shoemaker of Hawick, perhaps related to the earlier William. He married Jean Goodfellow in 1796, and she died in 1838. Their children included wool-spinner Walter (1798–1863). William (1789–1867) eldest son of Robert and brother of Henry Scott. He was shepherd at Bellendean at the time of the Carterhaugh Baa, when he played for the Yarrow side, being known as one of the best runners in the district; he would have hailed a ball had he not been pursued by a farmer on horseback. He and Henry Scott farmed together at Ramsaycleuch. He married Elizabeth Milne (1799/1800–53) in 1831. His wife is recorded at Ramsaycleuchburn in 1841 with 5 children.
Riddell-Buchanan

He was still recorded in a directory of 1868 as farmer at Ramsaycleuchburn. Their children (all of who were born at Ramsaycleuchburn except the first) included: Margaret (b.1831); Robert Borthwick (1833–62), who died unmarried; William Milne (1835–1913), who farmed at Ramsaycleuchburn after his father and died at Bucklands Cottage; James Scott (b.1837), who moved to Cumberland; Jessie (b.1839), who married William Easton; Agnes Scott (b.1842), who married Thomas Irving of Langholm, and secondly married James Lunn, also from Langholm; and Eliza (1844–52). Most of the family are buried at Teviothead. William (18th/19th C.) tenant at Harwood, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. William (18th/19th C.) sheriff officer in Castleton Parish. He was listed among heads of households for the first (and perhaps only) time in 1838. Maj.-Gen. William of Camieston (1805–75) eldest son of Thomas of Camieston and descendant of the 4th Baronet of Riddell. His brother was Walter of Cavers Carre. He entered the East India Company’s military service in 1823, joining the 2nd Battalion of the 30th Native Infantry, rising through the ranks until achieving command of the regiment. He commanded the 30th Regiment of European Infantry during the Indian Mutiny, and was involved in many other important campaigns. He received several medals and retired from service in 1861, returning to live at Camieston. Afterwards he played an active role in the activities of the 3rd Roxburghshire Rifle Volunteer Corps. He was also Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire. His father Thomas had married a sister of Col. Edgar Hunter of Linthill; after Col. Hunter’s death his father succeeded to the estate of Linthill in Lilliesleaf Parish, but it was sold before he succeeded. He married Margaret, daughter of Capt. John Wilkie, and she died in 1905, aged 85. They had 9 children, and he was succeeded by his only surviving son, William. He was buried at Bowden. William (1801–83) son of William and Catherine Brydon, he was born at Hermitage. He married Jessie, daughter of John and Euphemia Watson, from Oxnam Parish. He emigrated to Canada in 1831 and was a farmer in Beverley, Ontario. His children were William, John, Euphemia and James. William (b.1803) son of Thomas and Rachel Stirling. He was a joiner in Lilliesleaf, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was on the north side of Main Street. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed as a wright. He married Agnes Deans in 1832 and their children included: Thomas, a carpenter who emigrated to America; James, also a carpenter; Janet; Walter, a baker; and Rachel. He was deceased by 1851, when his wife and 3 children were living in Hawick. William (b.1816) carpenter in Lilliesleaf, son of John and Elizabeth Turnbull and grandson of joiner William. In 1841 he was a journeyman, living with Elizabeth, who was probably his mother. In 1851 he is listed on the south side of Main Street. He married Esther Thomson in 1843 and their children were: Jane (b.1844), who married James Hogg; John (b.1846); Betsy (b.1849); Andrew (b.1852); George (b.1854); Walter (b.1856); and Ellen (b.1858). William Brown Clark (1835–56) youngest son of Henry Scott, minister of Teviothead. He was born at the Flex. He attended John Watson’s Institution in Edinburgh, and then went to the University there. He was described as a student and poet of some promise, but died at the age of 20. His poem ‘The Lament to Wallace’ appeared in some collections of Scottish verse (formerly spelled ‘Reddale’, ‘Reddell’, ‘Reiddall’, ‘Ridale’, ‘Riddaille’, ‘Riddall’, ‘Riddle’, ‘Ridale’, ‘Ridle’, ‘Ryal’, ‘Rydal’, ‘Ryddell’, ‘Rydel’, ‘Rydell’, ‘Rydale’, etc.).

Riddell-Buchanan (ri-dul-bew-kain) n. compound surname adopted by some generations of the Riddells of that Ilk, after they inherited Buchanan estates through marriage in 1772. Its use was abandoned by more recent generations, who reverted to the use of ‘Riddell’, with ‘Buchanan’ as an additional middle name (see Riddell).

Riddell Carre (ri-dul-ker, -kar) n. Adm. Robert (1782–1860) 3rd son of William Riddell of Camieston and Elizabeth Kerr, daughter of John of Cavers Carre. He was a Captain in the Royal Navy, entering in 1796 and being present at several battles, including Copenhagen and Algiers. He eventually had the rank of Admiral. He succeeded to the Cavers Carre estate following the death of his uncle Alexander in 1817, and his mother in 1828. He died unmarried and was succeeded by his nephew Walter. Thomas Alexander (1831–1905) son of Walter. He succeeded to Cavers Carre on the death of his father in 1874. In the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874 he was listed as owner of lands of Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish. He was Colonel in the 4th Battalion Royal Scots Fusiliers and served with the East India Company. He was also a Captain in the Ayrshire and Wigtonshire Militia. He was a Justice of the Peace, was on the county council for Riddell Chaipel

Lilliesleaf and was Chairman of Bowden Parish Council. He was a member of the Jedforest Club. In 1865 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Alfred T. Fellows from near Nottingham; her brother was the archaeologist Sir Charles Fellows. He was succeeded by his son Ralph Gervase, and also had daughters Elizabeth Olive Geva and Grizel Geva. Walter (1807–74) 2nd son of Thomas Riddell of Camienston, and descended from the Riddells of that Ilk. He was born in Edinburgh and educated there. He worked as a merchant at East India House in London for 20 years. In 1848 he retired to Hertfordshire and in 1860 he succeeded to the estate of Cavers Carre after the death of his uncle Robert. He then took the additional surname ‘Carre’. He moved back to Scotland in 1869. He was a Justice of the Peace and Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He devoted much of his time to researching the families and characters of the Borders. He contributed to local newspapers, as well as ‘Notes and Queries’, and was in demand as a popular lecturer. A collection of his writings was published after his death, ‘Border Memories; or, Sketches of Prominent Men and Women of the Border’ (1876), edited by James Tait of the Kelso Chronicle. In 1830 he married Elizabeth Riddell MacLauchlan, only surviving child of Lieut.-Col. Lauchlan MacLauchlan. He secondly married Mary Falconer, daughter of William Currie of Linthill. His son Capt. Thomas Alexander succeeded to the Cavers Carre estate. He was buried at Bowden.

Riddell Chaipel (ri-dul-châ-pul) n. former chapel said to have stood on the lands of Wester Lilliesleaf, later called Riddell. The location was supposed to be near the old ash tree not far from the gate leading from the Easter Lodge to the mansion house, a little south of the site of the old tower. The field in which the ruins were located was known as ‘Chapel Park’. There is a report of 2 stone coffins being unearthed from the foundations around 1850, one containing a pot with ashes and pieces of armour, and the other containing bones of gigantic size.

Riddell Hoose (ri-dul-hoos) n. former mansion house on the Riddell estate in Lilliesleaf Parish. It replaced an earlier house, which in turn replaced the castle, which probably dates to Norman times. The original tower-house was probably constructed around the 14th century, enlarged in the 16th century and again in the 17th, making a long southerly front of 2 storeys. A third Storey was added in the 18th century, along with a north-west wing, with a north-east wing added in the 19th century. Tax was paid on 47 windows there in 1748. It was largely destroyed by fire in 1943, although it exists in photographs and drawings (see also Riddell Toor).

Riddell Mains (ri-dul-mâns) n. former name for the main lands in Lilliesleaf Parish held by the Riddells of that Ilk. In 1643 it was valued at £910, being the bulk of the property of the Laird at that time. It was still listed in the same way in 1788, when owned by Sir John Riddell. It was probably equivalent to what was later just called ‘Riddell’.

Riddell Mill (ri-dul-mîl) n. former corn mill on the Riddell estate, on the opposite side of the main farm. It was water powered and fed by a small lade that is now covered. The mill building survives, although all fittings have been removed and it is now in use as a barn. Situated in a bend in the Ale Water, at the foot of Dunstane Height, it was formerly also known as Dunstane Mill. In 1643 the ‘Town Mill and Mill thereof’ was valued at £247, among the properties of the Riddells of that Ilk. However, it was sold before 1678, with value of £167. Thomas Lawrie was there in 1785. It was recorded as ‘Lands of Townmill, and mill thereof’ as part of the Riddell estate in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1788. John Haldane was miller there in 1841, James Haldane in the 1850s and Alexander Lauder in the 1860s. The name was also used for a water-powered saw-mill, built on the Riddell estate in the early 19th century.

the Riddells (thu-ri-duls) n. family of Riddell of that Ilk, who gained lands at Riddell, in Lilliesleaf parish around the middle of the 12th century and were granted a baronetcy in 1628. About 1823 the estate was sold to the Sprots. For several centuries the family were buried at Lilliesleaf. The family has a Norman origin and received the lands of Ryedale in Yorkshire, being given the designation ‘de Ridel’ for several generations. Tradition (encouraged by Sir Walter Scott) told of stone coffins at Riddell bearing the dates 797 and 937. However, there is no reason to believe that the family’s origins can be traced back quite so far. The early history of the family is confused by the contemporary use of the same name by different men, with early Christian names including William, Geoffrey (or Galfridus) and Hugh. The history is further complicated by the family’s habit of calling their lands after themselves (rather than the other way around), and it seems clear that the Riddell in Lilliesleaf Parish was not the original family home. The name occurs in England at the time of Riddellshiel

William the Conqueror, when lands were granted in Northumbria, following the Battle of Hastings. Another branch of the family appears to have remained on the continent, settling in Italy in the 11th century. Meanwhile the English family moved to Scotland along with David I, Gervase being the first Scotsman. The lands they were granted near Lilliesleaf appear to have been named after their former designation. The arms of Riddell of that Ilk shows 3 ears of corn (or rye) and a red chevron. The family motto is ‘I hope to share’ and the crest shows a greyhound – ‘...To ancient Riddle’s fair domain, Where Aill, from mountains freed, Down from lakes did raving come; Each wave was creased with tawny foam, Like the mane of a chestnut steed’[SWS] (formerly spelled ‘Ridel’, etc., and interchangeable with ‘Riddle’).

Riddellshiel (ri-dul-sheel) n. farmstead in Lilliesleaf Parish, just to the north of Clerklands. The woods to the north are called Riddellshiel Plantation, and a small lake to the west is Riddellshiel Moss.

Riddellsteed (ri-dul-steed) n. Riddelstead, former lands in Liddesdale, recorded as ‘Riddale Steid’ on the 1541 rental roll. It is there said to be hereditary property of the Laird of Glendinning, held of the Lord of Liddesdale.

Riddell Toor (ri-dul-toor, -tow-ur) n. former peel tower on the Riddell estate. The name is also used for the more modern tower built nearby, referred to as the General’s Toor. The first fortified house on these lands was probably built shortly after the Riddell family acquired the lands in the 12th century. But the existing structure is probably from the 14th century, and was only revealed after the mansion burned down in 1943. The surviving walls are in the south-west corner. There is also evidence of 16th century stonework. The tower was probably converted into a mansion house in the 17th century, making a long southern front of 2 storeys, with a 3rd floor added in the 18th century, along with further wings in the 18th and 19th centuries. The ruins are now among mature woodland to the north-east of the main farmhouse.

R redder (ri-dur) n., arch. someone who acts to separate combatants – ‘...and that he was the Ridder who went from his house to make peace betwixt the said Wm. Olifer and Thomas Hugan’[PR1716].

Riddington (ri-din-tin) n. Anthony (1911-98) from Countesthorpe, Leicestershire. He was a professional cricketer, who played for Hawick & Wilton in the 1930s.

Riddle (ri-dul) n. (see also Riddell) George John (1830–1920) son of John and Isabella Richardson. He was a tailor and clothier and cousin of John, also a tailor in Hawick. His sister Helen married John Graham of ‘Graham’s Hotel’. He married Margaret, daughter of William Clark and Jane Murray, and she died in 1921, aged 91; she was a cousin of the father of Sir James A.H. Murray. The couple celebrated their golden wedding in 1900, when they had 5 sons, 2 daughters and 19 grandchildren, and they lived to see their 70th wedding anniversary. Their children were: John, fishmonger, who married Helen Elliot; William, joiner in Birkenhead, who married Jean Roberts; Andrew C., engineer on the Aberdeen steamships, who emigrated to Australia and married Georgina Johnstone; James, stockingmaker, who married Mary Elliot; Thomas, a tailor, who married Margaret Dagleish; George, Co-op store manager in Newcastle; Jane, who married hosiery manager Robert Hamilton; Robert, bank clerk in South Africa; Anne, hosiery worker; George J., Secretary of the Universities Club, Edinburgh, who married Lily Mackenzie; Isabel, ‘Bella’; William, chemist, who married Hilda Evans; Elliot, with the Bank of Nova Scotia in Toronto; Jean, who married accountant Percy Howard of Langholm; and Alexander Westwater, a chemist. Helen ‘Ellen’ (b.c.1813) born in Hawick, daughter of tailor Walter. She was proprietor of a grocer’s shop at 24 High Street, who also kept boarders. She started by selling 2d mutton pies at weekends, the business being carried on by her niece (of the same name) as a confectioner’s, and later by other family members. It was popularly known as ‘Ellen Riddle’s’ for about a century. She is recorded as a High Street grocer on the 1851 census, living with her brothers Francis and Walter, and nieces Helen and Isabella. Probably the same Helen is recorded in Slater’s 1852 directory as an earthenware and glass dealer on the High Street, as well as a grocer. In 1861 she was recorded as a ‘wool framework trimmer’ at 24 High Street, living with her niece Ellen and 3 boarders. Helen (b.1845/6–1914) daughter of tailor John and Margaret Armstrong. She was niece of the earlier Helen, from whom she took over the grocer’s and pie shop at 24 High Street. Already in 1851 she was living with her aunt Helen (and uncles Francis and Walter), as well as her younger sister Isabella, at 24 High Street (a few houses along from her parents and siblings). She was still living with her aunt in 1861 and in 1871 she was ‘Pie-Baker’ and head of household, living with her sister Mary Ann and brother Frank. James Haining describes her in the 1930s as maker of ‘celebrated pies still remembered’. In the latter part of the 19th century the back of the shop was also used as a meeting place for debating societies and other groups. J. (18th/19th C.) clogger in Castleton. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. James (18th/19th C.) chaise-driver in Hawick. The death of his infant daughter is recorded in 1822. John (b.1800) born in Selkirk, probably son of William and Agnes Hutton. It is said that the family came from Carterhaugh in Yarrow. He was a tailor in Hawick at 12 Howegate. He is listed as a tailor on the Mid Row in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and on the Howegate in 1837. He is also listed as a Howegate tailor in Slater’s 1852 directory, with his son John listed as a tailor on the High Street. He was still on the Howegate on the 1861 census, and was listed as a tailor and grocer. He married Isabella Richardson. Their children included: John (b.1819), also a tailor; William (b.1821); James (b.1822); Isabella (b.1824), who married wool merchant James Melrose; Thomas (b.1826); Agnes (b.1828; George John (b.1830); Helen (b.1831); and Catherine (b.1839), who married wool-spinner Walter Scott. John (b.1811/2) born in Cavers Parish, he was a tailor on Walter’s Wynd in the 1851 census. He was thus one of 3 contemporary Hawick tailor’s with the same name! His wife was Ellen and their children included Isabella and John. John (b.1819) son of Howegate tailor John, he was a tailor on the High Street. He is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was at about 28 High Street, a master tailor employing 3 men; in 1861 he was listed as a tailor and clothier at 24 High Street. He married Margaret (perhaps also called ‘Mary’) Armstrong in 1843; she was sister of ironmonger John Armstrong and died in 1888, aged 66. Their children included: Helen (b.c.1846), who grew up with her aunt Helen and took over the pie-making business; Isabella (b.c.1848); Walter (b.c.1850); Mary Ann (b.c.1853), who married William C. Simpson and continued pie-making; Francis (b.1855); Margaret (1857–96), who married joiner George Gall; Lancelot Armstrong (b.1859); Agnes (b.1862); and John Armstrong (b.1865). John (b.c.1820) shoemaker at 8 Howegate. His wife was Maria, and their children included: Thomas; Frederick; and Cecilia. He could be the John who donated a model of Hermitage Castle to the Museum in 1863. John Turnbull (19th C.) Hawick character of the mid-1800s, nicknamed ‘Tip-madaisy’. Mary Ann (1852/3–1931) daughter of tailor John. She married William C. Simpson. She continued the confectionary side of the business run by her sister and aunt (both called Ellen Riddle) at 24 High Street. Walter (1789–1849) son of William, he was born in Selkirk. He became a tailor of Hawick and was a trustee of the Relief Kirk. He is listed as a tailor on the High Street in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He may have been related to John, who was also a Hawick tailor at about the same time. In 1841 he is listed at about 23 High Street. He married Isobel Kedzie, whose family came from Slaidhills, and she died in 1838, aged 51. Their children were: Helen, who was a grocer (of pie fame); William (b.1822/3), a tailor, who emigrated to London, Ontario; Francis, joiner; Walter, blacksmith; and Isabel. William (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Tait and their children included: John (b.1728); and John (again, b.1730). The witnesses in 1728 appear to be John Scott and John Paterson. William (b.1822/3) son of tailor Walter. He married Wilson Stuart in Hawick in 1846. He emigrated to Canada, and settled in London, Ontario. William (19th/20th C.) joiner, with business where the Burgh yard was later located. He was a Councillor and J.P. and was for a long time Session Clerk and elder of Allars Kirk. He was probably descended from tailor Walter.

ride (ríd) v., arch. to fix boundaries, especially by perambulation, pp., arch. be ridden – ‘The said day the Baylyeas and Counsell appoynted the Commone to ryd upon Fryday nixt, the first day of June . . . ’ [BR1705], ‘ . . . did appoynt and ordaine the Common to ryd upon Fryday come eight dayes, being the twenty-sixth of May instant and current’ [BR1710] (also written ‘ryd’ and ‘ryde’; the word was used to describe the circuit of the itinerant High Court of the Judiciary in the 15th century, and was used in the context of boundary marking in Selkirk in the early 16th century; from Middle English; note the confusion with the word ‘ride’ meaning to go on horseback, which may have been confounded with this word in references to the ‘common riding’; note that the past participle use transposes the usual object into a subject, cf. belong).
ride (rīd) v., arch. to ford a river on horseback, be fordable – ‘But when the land-sergeant the water saw, It winna ride my lads, quo’ he … ’[CPM].

Ride-oot (rīd-oo’) n. Ride-out, an organised visit to one of a number of local villages or farms on Tuesdays and Saturdays in the weeks between the Picking of the Cornet and the start of the Common Riding. They are essentially practices for the big weekend, and are not part of the official Common Riding, being organised by the Cornet. The first Ride-out seems to have been held in 1891 (with Andrew Haddon as Cornet and J.E.D. Murray as Right-Hand Man) and was an outing to Lilliesleaf by 5 consecutive Cornets, followed 2 weeks later by another ride-out via Braitholme, Northhouse, Skelfhill and Priesthaugh to St. Leonard’s. The first Ride-out to Mosspaul was in 1901, James Sutherland’s year. The Tuesday Ride-outs were originally held so that shopworkers and others could attend on half-day closing, with the mill-workers being able to attend on Saturdays. Women have been officially allowed on most Ride-outs since 1997. They extend over either 5 or 6 weeks, depending on when the Picking is. The venues are chosen each year by the Cornet (with advice from the Right- and Left-Hand Men and Acting Father). The first Ride-out has been to Bönchester since about the last war. The premier event is the ride to Mosspaul, which is 2 weeks before the Common Riding. After the last Saturday Ride-out, the Principals stop off at Hornshole. There are sometimes special one-off rides because of the place of residence of the new Cornet. Locations have included Bönchester, Cavers, Cogsmill, Denholm, Ettrickbridge, Harden House, Hermitage, Lilliesleaf, Mosspaul, Newmill, Philhope Bridge, Robertson, Skelfhill, Southfield, Teindside, Teviotdale Lodge, Teviothead, West Bucleuch and Wolfelee. Each ride-out starts with a muster in Allars Crescent, leaving from Backdamgate. The Right-Hand Man acts as front marshal and the Left-Hand Man as back marshal. There are usually lots of cars packed with picnics which go to meet the riders at the appointed location. There is usually a sing-song in the village hall or similar, and before leaving the ‘Big Fower’ sing 5 verses of ‘Teribus’ while mounted. On returning to town, the Principals dismount at the Backdamgate and usually carry children on their shoulders round to the steps of the Tower where there is a strive and more song singing. A junior ride-out (for primary school pupils) was started in 2010 – ‘oo yaise

the Ridin o the Mairches (thu-rī-din-ō-thu-mār-cheez) n. the central part of Hawick Common Riding, performed by the Cornet and his followers on the Friday of Common Riding week. The riders mount at St. Leonard’s (after the Chase) and proceed to the furthest point of the Common, via Wulliestruther and Acreknewe (the Cornet passes along the Hawick side, the others free to choose), for the ceremonial ‘Cutting of the Sod’. The cavalcade proceeds to the Moor for the Races, then rides via Cramhaughhill to Myrselawgreen. The Principals next perform the Dipping of the Flag at the Coble Pool. Afterwards the whole party goes to the Millpath for the proclamation that the marches have been ridden and the Song-singing. Before the Division of the Common in 1777 the entire Common boundary would be marched, and many marker turfs or stones positioned, as well as neighbouring sheep and cattle driven off. Sometimes this would be done on foot over the few days before the ceremonial riding. The ceremony is believed to have taken place since at least the 16th century, but could be even older. The Council used to appoint 12 Burleymen to assist the Bailies in riding the marches, the appointment being a courtesy one after the Division, and the last appointments being made in 1854. Footmen as well as horsemen are recorded as part of the procession in 1725.
The practice of riding armed with pistols was officially discontinued in 1784. In the years 1900–04 and 1921 it was switched to the Thursday morning and in 1910–13 it was moved to the Saturday. J.E.D. Murray carried it on himself during WWI and Chap Landelles led the unofficial rides during WWII, while in 2001 there was an organised walk round the marches in November (see also the Common Ridin).

Ridley (rid-lee) n. John (b.1794/5) civil engineer from England. He was living at Thorlighthouse in 1861, but probably only there temporarily for hunting. His wife was Mary. Nicholas ‘Nick’ (1929–93) Baron of Liddesdale, born in Northumberland, he was educated at Eton and Oxford University. He became an M.P. in 1959, held several appointments under Edward Heath and then became a great supporter of Margaret Thatcher. He was Minister of State at the Foreign & Commonwealth Office (in the years before the Falklands War), Financial Secretary to the Treasury, Secretary of State for Transport (authoring the Ridley Report on how the Conservatives would deal with the Unions), Secretary of State for the Environment (where he popularised the phrase ‘NIMBY’, but reduced public funding for environmental protection) and Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (which he was forced to resign after likening Helmut Kohl to Adolf Hitler). He was also responsible for introducing the ‘Poll Tax’. In 1992 he was created a life peer, choosing the title ‘Baron Ridley of Liddesdale’, despite objections from Scottish politicians. His puppet (baptised in Southdean and Roberton) included: John (b.1767); and Nelly (b.1777) (also written ‘Reive’).

Riever (ree-ver) n. a plunderer, robber, marauder, freebooter – ‘They deem you the children of rievers, Unkempt, as of old, and rude; Still bound to vie with friend or foe, In keen and narrow feud’ [FH], ‘Whan thou sawist ane reyf-far, than thou becamist airt an’ pairt wi’ him ...’ [HSR], ‘... an mosstrooper an reever rade bye ti foray an fecht an reipin raid’ [ECS], ‘... The nag of the reiver was well nigh spent, With a dragging hoof and his nose to the bent’ [WHO], ‘And when reivers rode and mosstroopers trod To victory or defeat On their reiving raids through the glens and glades Where the Slitrig and Teviot meet’ [TK], ‘A haunted land, where stalks the spectral form Of buckled reiver, driving stolen kine’ [WL], ‘Oo’re born o rievers, Oo’re no receivers, Oo gie the orders, Oo er the Borders’ [DoS], ‘A’m a drunkard, a Reiver, I cannot defend A user o’ women, a killer o’ men’ [DoA] (also written ‘reiver’ and ‘reaver’).

Right-Haund Man (ri’hawnd-mawn) n. Right-Hand Man during the Common Riding, being the previous year’s Cornet. He gives recommendations for the next Cornet, and provides assistance to the new Cornet. He rides with the Cornet during many of the ceremonial events, wearing the same green coat etc. He acts as front marshal during the Ride-outs. Occasionally someone has served twice as Right-Hand Man, such as William Stoddart in 1875, and W. Lockie Thorburn after WWII. Mr. Lunn stood in as Left-Hand man in 1875, even although he had not previously been Cornet, and Robert Anderson stood in as Right-Hand Man in 1897, the year before he was Cornet! It is unclear at what point the positions of Right- and Left-Hand Man became ‘official’ during the Common Riding. ‘The Cornet and his two men’ are referred to in 1809, there is a photographic portrait of the 1857 Cornet and his 2 supporters, and a painting of 1846 showing the ‘Big Threi’ crossing the Teviot.

quarrying. To the south is a 0.8 m-high stone, which has been set up, probably as a marker.

ring-tails (ring-talz) n., pl., arch. arrears in rent, odd pieces of business left when a firm is wound up, left-overs, remnants – ‘Ring-tails, Small remnants of an thing; as, in relation to drink, it is said, ‘Tak aff your ring-tails, and brew again’, Roxb.’ [JoJ].

Ringwood (ring-wood) n. parish and market town in Hampshire, with the same name as lands to the south of Hawick. Ringwood is recorded as early as the 10th century, with a grant by King Edgar to the Church of Abingdon. Just before the Norman Conquest it was held by Tostig, who was Earl of Northumbria, and brother of King Harold. Given Tostig’s connection to Northumbria, and the fact that he held extensive lands elsewhere, there is a possibility that the Teviotdale Ringwood was named after the English one by either him or some other common landowner. The origin of the name is suggested to be ‘rima wuda’, meaning ‘border wood’.

Ringwudfield (ring-wud-feeld) n. Ringwoodfield, area on the southern side of the upper Teviot valley, formerly in Cavers Parish. It was long a property of Melrose Abbey, described as lying upon the ‘Alwent (Allan) and Teviot’ and given to the monks by Oswulf during the reign of Malcolm IV (mid-12th century). The boundaries of the lands are briefly described, but most of the names are now unfamiliar – ‘Blachapol’, ‘Bollinessburn’, ‘Crumbirche’, ‘Pennango’, ‘Brunemore’ and ‘Blackaburne’. The grant was remade by Philip de Valognes, Chamberlain of Scotland just a few years later. It was confirmed by Uchtred, son of Oswulf (and his son Uchtred) in about 1166. In about 1358 the specific lands of Penangushope and Cauldcleuch, within this barony, were granted to Melrose Abbey. There were further confirmations in the reigns of Alexander II and David II. It is recorded as ‘Ringwood’ in 1360 when Sir William, Earl of Douglas, charged Sir William of Gledstains, his Bailie of the Barony of Cavers, to defend the Abbot and Convent of Melrose as lords of the lands there. The Abbey presumably held the lands throughout the 15th century, and David Scott of Branxholme and his son Robert were made bailies in 1484. In a document of 1500 it is referred to as ‘the lordship of Ryngwodfield’. It contained (at least) the lands and steadings of ‘Ryngwodchat, Stobycot, the Burghe, Priysthaugh, Cauldchuch, Standholm, Penangushop, Sowdinryg and the Bowenhyl’ (now mostly familiar places), which were leased by Walter Scott of Branzholme from Melrose Abbey in 1500. His son, Sir Walter, was appointed Bailie of lands belonging to Melrose Abbey, including Ringwoodfield, in 1519 and reappointed in 1524. In the Exchequer Rolls of 1538 there is a note about the Comptroller’s expenses in visiting here (along with other Royal properties, including Hawick and Rodono); it seems likely that this was because Scott of Buccleuch had temporarily forfeited the lands to the Crown. In 1540 the ‘fermes’ were paid to the Abbot of Melrose, amounting to £52 6d; in addition the King’s shepherds were paid for various amounts of grain in the lands of ‘Northous, Stobbe-Tait, et Cokburn’, ‘lie Burgh’ and ‘Vestcotorig et Southcothrig et Boblburg’ (with transcription errors). The ‘lands of Ringwoodfield and the office of bailiery of Melroseland’ are recorded in the Scott retour of 1553/4; the lands were then valued at £52 52 Scots. In 1558 the Prior of Melrose complained about Walter Scott of Branzholme possessing the lands ‘in Ryngwodfield’ and the bailiary of other lands of the Abbey. In about 1564 the lands were valued at £3 6s 8d, and included Brugh, Stobcote, Ringwoodhaugh, Bowanhill, Grange, Priesthaugh, Penangushope, ‘Woisterrie’ [probably Westcoterig], Northhouse, Southdeanrig and Cauldcleuch; Sir Walter Scott inherited them from his grandfather at this time. Sir Walter Scott (the ‘Bold Buccleuch’) inherited the lands from his father in 1574. In 1621 Walter, Earl of Buccleuch resigned the lands to Thomas Hamilton, Earl of Melrose, when it is listed as Cauldcleuch, Northhouse, ‘Crawshope’, Stobicote, Brugh, Soothdeanrig, ‘Colburn’, Westcoterig, ‘Rowanhill’ [probably Bowanhill], Priesthaugh and Penangushope’. In 1660 the lands are recorded being put in ‘wadset’ to pay the fine imposed by Cromwell on Scott of Buccleuch; it was still technicall in the Lordship of Melrose and consisted of Cauldcleuch, Priesthaugh, ‘Coliburne’, Stobicote, Brugh, Soothdeanrig, ‘Colburn’, Westcoterig, Rowanhill, Priethaugh and Penangushope’. In 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch it appears to no longer be a Lordship, but it heads a list of farms that were mostly formerly contained within it and now referred to as lying within the Lordship of Melrose, namely ‘Ringwoodfield, Caldeleuch, Northous, Thirlastane, Braidhauch, Crowishoipe, Stobit-coat-burgh, Suddinnrig, Coatsburne, Westcotrig, Bowanhill, Presithauch, and..."
Ringwudhaugh

Pannangoishope'; essentially the same list occurs in the 1653 service of heirs for Mary Scott of Buccleuch. It is recorded again in the charter to James Scott, Earl of Dalkeith in 1693 (transcribed as 'Ringwoodfeild'); it is then within the Lordship of Melrose. The name does not occur after the 17th century, but is crudely the same as 'Teviotdalehead', as used by the Buccleuch estates. It seems likely that if there was a tower house it was on the land of 'Ryngwodchat', which may be an error for 'Ringwoodhaugh'. This probably corresponded with the modern Broadhaugh, a name that only appears from the end of the 16th century. The lands may also have been connected with the Scotts of Allanhaugh. It has been suggested that the associated Grange of the monks of Melrose lay somewhere between Bowan Hill and Priesthaugh. Note that local historian Walter Deans seems to have mistaken 'Ringwoode fell' for the farms of Berryfell, and 'Ringwood Hatt' for a field there called the Hates (the name of the area survives in the nearby Ringwood Hill; it is 'ringwude' in the 1160s, 'Ringwede' in about 1170, 'Ryngwodfelde' in c.1358, 'Rengwude' and 'Rengwodfield' in c.1368, 'Ringwodfield' in 1484, 'Ryngwodfield' in 1500, 'Ringwodfield' in 1519, 'Ryngwodfield' and 'Ringwodfield' in 1524, 'Rigwodfield'in 1538, 'Ringwodfield' and 'Rinvodfeild' in 1553/4, 'Ringvodfeild' in 1557, 'Ringvodfeild' in 1564, 'Ringvodfeild' in 1574, 'Ringvodefeld' in 1538/9, 'Ringvodefeld' in c.1360s, 'Ringvodefeld' in 1538, 'Ringvodefeld' in 1553/4, 'Ringvodefeld' in 1557, 'Ringvodefeld' in 1564, 'Ringvodefeld' in 1562, 'Ringvodefeld' in 1634 and 'Ringvodefeild' in 1660 and 1663; note that there is a town and parish of Ringwood in Hampshire, which is presumably unconnected).

Ringwudhaugh (ring-wud-hawch) n. Ringwoodhaugh, probable name for a steadings near Ringwood Hill, recorded as 'Ringwoodchat' in 1500. In 1557 it was 'Ringwoodchat' when Adam Scott of Allanhaugh paid rental for it to Melrose Abbey; it was valued at £5 at that time. In a rental roll of about 1564 it is 'Ringwude' in about 1170, 'Ryngwodfelde' in c.1358, 'Rengwude' and 'Rengwodfield' in c.1368, 'Ringwodfield' in 1484, 'Ryngwodfield' in 1500, 'Ringwodfield' in 1519, 'Ryngwodfield' and 'Ringwodfield' in 1524, 'Rigwodfield'in 1538, 'Ringwodfield' and 'Rinvodfeild' in 1553/4, 'Ringvodefeld' in 1557, 'Ringvodefeld' in 1564, 'Ringvodefeld' in 1574, 'Ringvodefeld' in 1634 and 'Ringvodefeild' in 1660 and 1663; note that there is a town and parish of Ringwood in Hampshire, which is presumably unconnected).

Ringwud Hill (ring-wud-hil) n. Ringwood Hill, hill which lies directly south of Newmill and above Broadhaugh farm, reaching a height of 247m. Its name is surely connected with the ancient lands of 'Ringwood' or 'Ringwoodfield' in upper Teviotdale, once owned by Melrose Abbey.

rin-im-ower (rin-im-ow-ur) n., arch. a children's game resembling 'King's Covenanter', involving trying to capture opponents as they cross a street, with the captive replacing the captor (noted by J. Jamieson; elsewhere called 'Willie Wastle', 'Tom Tiddler's Ground', etc.).

Rink Ferm (ringk-ferm) n. Rink farm, near the confluence of the Tweed and the Ettrick. It is the site of a pre-historic settlement, sometimes called 'Rink Camp'. This was also where the Hawick Farmers' Club instigated an annual sheep market in October 1779, which became one of the biggest in the South of Scotland. The land here belonged to the Laird of Edgerston.

Road End (röd-end) n. former placename near Newcastle-on-Tyne. William Elliot was recorded there in a directory of 1868.

Roadheid (röd-heed) n. Roadhead, road leading up from the Cauld, previously known as ‘Blaikie’s Brae’. The name was formerly applied to the top of that road, e.g. to the houses at Norwood that are above Roadhead, and on some old maps (e.g. the 1859 and 1890 Ordnance Survey maps) is marked at Langlands Road. Hence there is some confusion about whether the name applies to the whole of that road, or just the top part. It was adopted as a street name around 1890. There was once a draw well (possibly Hawick’s only one) situated there. The road is shown in a photograph dating from about 1885 (the name derives from being at the head of what was previously described as ‘the kirk road from Wilton to Langlands’).

Roadheid Brae (röd-heed-brä) n. Roadhead Brae, another name for Roadheid.

Roadheid Cottage (röd-heed-ko’-cej) n. former small cottage at Roadhead, which bore the date 1765 on a door lintel and survived until at least the late 19th century.

the Roadhouse (thu-röd-hoos) n. popular name for one of a number of pubs, in recent times referring to Burnfoot Roadhouse or to Thorterdynes.

Roan Fell

Roan Fell (röon-fel) n. high ground near the head of the Hermitage Water, between Millstone...
Edge and Hartsgarth Fell. It lies on the boundary between Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire and reaches a height of 568 m – ‘See! they have gained the Roanfell’s heathery crest, Not in a line, but hound to hound abreast’ [HN0] (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and on Stobie’s 1770 map).

roar (rör) v. to cry loudly, bawl – ‘hei wasni just greetin when they got bate, hei was roarin’, ‘But she ...roared and grilled, an’ grabbed ma aim’s’ [HAST1868], ‘What’s she roarin and greetin at?’ [ECS], ‘When they sortit the muddle oot at last, The lassies roared and grilled ...’ [DH].

the roarin game (thu-rö-rin-gäːm) n. soubriquet for curling, played on various ponds around Hawick from the earliest years of the 19th century and dying out in the early 20th.

roast (röst) n., poet. a roost, particularly in the phrase ‘rule the roast’ – ‘...as this House of Representatives must evidently continue to ‘rule the roast’’ [RW].

Rob (rob) n. Christian name, usually a pet form of Robert.

Robb (rob, rob) n. William Cuthbert (20th C.) High School English teacher (nicknamed ‘Pongo Robb’), author of several educational books in the 1930s to 50s. He also wrote the ‘Touchstone’ column in the Hawick Express, years??.

Robbie Barrell (ro-bee-baw-rul) n. nickname for Robert Scott, one of the many of the same name in the mid-1800s.

Robbie Dye (ro-bee-dI) n. nickname for a supporter of Hawick Rugby Football Club – ‘And though players come and players go, Wi my last braith I’ll prophesy – They may fade away, when they’ve had their day, But there’ll aye be a Robbie Dye!’ [DH] (the name is recorded at least as early as the 1950s, and based on some early supporter, although popularised in the mythic poem by Davod Hill).

Robbie Dye (ro-bee-dI) n. poem by David Hill, first published in the Hawick Express in 1957 under the pseudonym ‘HAB’. It is included on ‘Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry’ (2006), recited by Bert Armstrong.

the Robbie Dyes (tu-rob-ee-dIz) n. nickname for Hawick R.F.C., derived from the popular name of an early fanatical supporter of the Club.

Robbie Hunter’s Well (ro-bee-hun’-urz-weI) n. popular name for a former public pump well, situated against the side of a house at the foot of the Back Raw.

Robbie’s (ro-beez) n. modern bar and diner at 8 High Street, run by Robbie Watt. In 2004 it became the Tower Inn.

Robbie Scare a Hair (ro-bee-skär-a-här) n. nickname for auctioneer Robert Scott (presumably because of his lack of hair).

Robbie Scott (ro-bee-sko’) n. name occurring in a version of a song by Jock Gray, probably from the early 19th century – ‘And the laddie he’s but young, And the laddie he’s but young, And Robbie Scott ca’s up the rear, And Caleb beats the drum’ [DJG] (note that in another version the name is ‘Rob Rodger’, so this may be simply an error).

Robbie the Cow (ro-bee-thu-kow) n. nickname for Robert Scott in the mid-19th century – ‘Here’s Tib the Virgin and Virgin Kate, Here’s baith Robbie and Babbie the Cow; Auld Chairlie Hardie gangs east o’ the gate, While Dunnerum danders ower the knowe’ [HI].

Robert (ro-bur) n. name of 3 Kings of Scotland. Robert I (1274–1329) known as ‘Robert the Bruce’, he was great-grandson of David I, he was King of Scotland 1306–1329. He refused to meet the English on even ground, and achieved immortal fame for leading the 1314 defeat of the English at Bannockburn, which made Scotland a sovereign nation. He granted part of Branxholme to Walter Comyn and the rest to Henry Baliol in 1307, and split the Barony of Wilton between Gilbert Maxwell and Henry Wardlaw at about the same time. He also granted part of Kirkborthwick to William Barbour, and moved it from Roxburghshire to Selkirkshire. He visited Jedburgh at least once late in his life, granting a charter there in 1329. His heart was supposedly returned from the Crusades by Sir James Douglas and reputedly buried under the chancel’s east window at Melrose Abbey. Bruce Court is named after him – ‘...Repeats the tles of old heroic times, While Bruce and Wallace concrercate the rhymes’ [JL].

Robert II (1316–90) called ‘the Steward’, he was the only son of Walter, the 5th High Steward of Scotland and Marjorie daughter of Robert I. He played a strong role in the government of Scotland under his younger uncle David II, being Regent along with John Randolph, 3rd Earl of Moray. He was one of the Scots leaders at Halidon Hill, and escaped from the Battle of Neville’s Cross. Imprisoned for rebellion against David, he eventually succeeded to the throne in 1371 after David’s death. Confusion over the legality of his marriage with Elizabeth Mure later led to disputes among his descendants. Robert III (c.1340–1406) King from 1390. He was the son of Robert II by his mistress Elizabeth Mure, later legitimised by marriage. He was disabled by being kicked by a horse. Born John, he changed his name on assuming the throne. The kingdom was effectively ruled by his brother Robert, Earl of Fife and later Duke of Albany. He married Annabella Drummond. His son David, Duke of Rothesay became lieutenant of the kingdom, but died mysteriously at Falkland Palace in 1402. He was succeeded by his only surviving son, James I.

Robert (ro-bur’) n. (12th C.) son of Guy, he witnessed a document as Sheriff of Roxburgh in 1147. This was confirmation of a gift to Coldingham Priory that Gospatrick, brother of Dolphin, had given to Edrom and Nisbet; his name is given as ‘Roberto filio Widonis’. The same Robert also witnessed other documents relating to lands in Scotland, the last being in about 1170. This included renewal of the grant of Ringwood to Melrose Abbey in the period 1165–68 and a papal document referring to his gift to Newbattle Abbey in the 1160s. It is unclear if he was part of some well known family.

Robert (ro-bur’) n. (10th/11th C.) carpenter of Hassendean, who witnessed a charter in about the 1220s. He is recorded as ‘Roberto carpentario’.

Robert (ro-bur’) n. (13th C.) listed on the Ragman Rolls of 1296 as ‘Robert f*z* Rauf persone del Eglise de Seint Cuthlibert de Ewytlesdale’. He was thus presumably son of Ralph and served as Parson of the Nether Kirk of Ewes.

Robert Hill (ro-bur’-hil) n. hill shown being near the source of the Slitrig and Rule Waters on Gordon’s map c. 1650, between the ‘Maidens papes Hills’ and ‘Wriggs Hill’ (probably Wigg Knowe). It is unclear which hill this would be, since there is no similar modern name of any significant nearby hills. Perhaps Wyndburgh Hill (the highest in the area) is meant, or its southern ridge, being composed of Outer Knowe Head, Crow Knowe and Kiln Knowe, suggesting a connection with ‘Robert’s Linn’ below. This is probably the ‘Robertis hill’ mentioned in the 1562 document describing disputed lands in the Barony of Feu-Rule; this was adjacent to the lands of Windburgh Hope. It may be the ‘Roberthill’ that was among lands sold in 1607 by Hector Turnbull of Stanedge to Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. It is also probably the place mentioned by Scott of Satchells in relationship to the Scotts of Thirlestane – ‘John’s son, Robert, was a warden in his time, The fight of Robert’s hill he did gain; He for his king and country did maintain the truth; He married Scot, daughter to the laird of Buccleuch’ [CWS].

Robert of Heap (ro-bur’-o-heep) n. holdier of the lands of Heap (or ‘Hepe’) before about 1431, as mentioned in a grant transferring the lands from Langlands to Scott. He was probably either a Langlands or a Scott himself.

Roberton (ro-bur’-in) n. village about 6 miles west of Hawick along the Borthwick, centre for the surrounding parish. As a place name it has existed since at least the 14th century. The lands there were owned by Robert Scott in the 14th century (as recorded in 1410), and it is possible they were named after him. Sir William Gledstains acquired the lands in the last years of the 14th century and the Gledstains of that Ilk retained the lands through the 15th century. John Scott of ‘Weltoun’ and ‘Valis’ acquired the lands in 1502 and later in the 16th century there was a celebrated faster called John Scott who came from the area (and possibly the same family). James Scott, last of Roberton sold the lands to Sir William Scott of Harden in 1627. There were 9 ‘communicants’ recorded living there in 1650. The Parish was formed in 1689 out of parts of the surrounding parishes and after much dispute. In 1694 there were 7 hearths recorded there. Robert Scott was recorded as a resident in 1743. The teinds of Roberton, Howcleuch and Hoscote were granted to Convent of Thirlestane { ‘John’s son, Robert, was a warrior’} [CWS].

Robert Noble’s former tweed mill, usually known as Noble’s.

Robert of Heap holdier of the lands of Heap (or ‘Hepe’) before about 1431, as mentioned in a grant transferring the lands from Langlands to Scott. He was probably either a Langlands or a Scott himself.

political upheaval in Scotland, before the new parish of Roberton was created. The church is built on what appears to be a former settlement, which may have been the ‘Robert’s Town’ from which the village takes its name. The farm there was part of the detached section of Hassendean Parish until 1690. The present village contains the Foreman Hall, designed by J.P. Alison about 1922, and used for community events, as well as a stone pillar War Memorial. The police station there closed in 1931, but the small primary school remains. ‘Borthwick Water: two centuries of life in the parish of Roberton’ was written by Kathleen W. Stewart in 1991 and ‘Roberton: the making of a parish’ by George O. Wood in 1992 – ‘Tell Ashkirk, and Satchels, Burnfoot, and the Kirk-house, Howpasley, and Roberton, with Harden bold and crouse’ [WSB] (the name first appears in a charter of Robert III, probably in the late 1340s, it is ‘Robertistoun’ in 1430 and is usually spelled ‘Robertoun’ or ‘Robertoune’ until the late 17th century, with Scott of Satchell’s writing ‘Robertoun’ in 1688 and ‘Robertown’ still recorded in 1743; it is marked ‘Roberston’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Robertoun’ on Adair’s c. 1688 map, as well as Gordon’s manuscript map c.1650, where it is wrongly placed to the east of Hawick; the origin is simply ‘Robert’s farm’, possibly referring to Robert Scott, mentioned in 1410 as a former owner).

Roberton (ro-bur-in) n. Alexander (b.1779/80) from Linton, he was a cooper in Wilton Parish. He was listed among heads of households in 1835, being at Howdenburn in 1835, and Appletreehall in 1840. He was at Appletreeshall on the 1841 census, with his surname given as ‘Roberton’. In 1851 he was a former cooper living at Craigrig in Roxburgh Parish with his son-in-law John Forsythe. His wife was Mary and their children included Jane, Alexander, Duncan, William and George. Jamie local character of unknown age whose portrait is in the Museum.

Roberton Burnfit (ro-bur-in-burn-fi) n. former farm just near Roberton, which was part of Hassendean Parish until 1689. It was mentioned in the 1694 Hearth Tax recods. It was distinct from Borthwickbrae Burnfoot, a mile or so up the valley. William Lawson and John Gowans were there in 1743, Walter Scott in 1763, David Scott in 1774 and Adam Robson in 1775 (it is ‘Robertown burnfoot’ in 1772).

Roberton Cleuch (ro-bur-in-klooch) n. name given to the deep wooded part of the Glen Burn, just to the north of the B711 through the village.

repaired in 1827 and it is stated in 1834 that the glebe consisted of 16 acres, and crossed the county boundary, so that the Minister could vote in both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. An ornate piece of stonework (a scroll capital), unearthed in an adjacent field in 1963 (and now in the Museum), may come from Hassendean Kirk. Note that a separate Free Kirk congregation was set up after the Disruption of 1843, this being known as ‘the Snoot Kirk’ and used until 1927, with the congregation merging with that of the main church in 1930. Roberton church was linked with Teviothead 1966–72, then linked with St. Margaret’s and Wilton South 1972–83. It became formally united with St. George’s West in 1984, which was renamed Teviot Parish in 1996. A roll of the ministry is: John Colt, from c.1663; Thomas Shiels 1689–c.93; John Ferguson 1696–99; Robert Scott 1700–1727; Henry Erskine 1728–73; James Erskine 1774–86; James Hay 1786–1825; William Berry Shaw, assistant 1801–12; Alexander Nivison 1826–44; Charles Kinneir Greenhill 1845–86; Mercer Hall 1887–1927; Æneas E. McInness 1894–1929; Cyrus M. Mortimer 1930–54; James B. Primrose 1955–60; Samuel Weir 1960–65; Robert McConnell 1966–83; Neil R. Combe 1984–

Roberton Moss (ro-bur’-in-mos) n. boggy area to north of Roberton village. The filter works for Alemoor were built there.

Roberton Pairish (ro-bur’-in-pä-reesh) n. parish around Roberton village and the Borthwick valley, created in 1689 from parts of the neighbouring parishes, including Hawick, Wilton and disjoint parts of Hassendean, including the area immediately around the village itself. Todshaw and neighbouring farms came from Hawick Parish, with Milsington, Ginnwood and other farms coming from Hassendean, and Harden, Highchesters formerly being in Wilton. This followed about 3 decades of dispute, with Roberton Kirk being built in 1659, during confusion over the secession of Scott of Buccleuch (who owned much of Hassendean), but then material from the new Kirk being removed to repair Hassendean, following a decision in favour of Hassendean in 1666. The Revolution of 1688/9 and the restoration of Presbyterianism saw a successful petition to create Roberton as a Parish. The moving of the old church roof from Hassendean to Roberton in 1690 incited violence from the parishioners of the suppressed parish of Hassendean. The Parish was about 13 miles long and 5 miles wide, bounded by Ettrick, Yarrow, Ashkirk, Selkirk, Wilton, Hawick, Cavers and Eskdalemuir. The Parish long had part (about half) within Selkirkshire, but it was moved entirely into Roxburghshire in 1891. Parish registers go back to 1680, but the early ones are fairly incomplete. One of the earliest Parish records is of £38 being stolen from the poor box in the unoccupied Manse in 1700. The first meeting to assess the Parish poor was in 1740. Note that there is a separate parish of the same name in Lanarkshire.

Roberton Place (ro-bur’-in-plis) n. private housing built in 1970 at the top of the West End, off Longbaulk Road, and named after the village of Roberton.

Roberton Schuil (ro-bur’-in-skil) n. school in Roberton village. It was noted at the General Assembly in 1724 that all parishes in the Presbytery had schools except for Roberton and Ettrick. The first record of a teacher being appointed was in 1765, and a new schoolhouse was built in 1790. In 1834 it was reported that ‘one-third of the parish is so situated that the children cannot attend’, since they are ‘at a distance of five and eight miles’. This situation was probably the reason for the establishment of small schools at Howpasley and Redfordgreen. A new schoolhouse was finished in about 1835. In 1836 it is recorded that there were 60 pupils in attendance. The present school building was erected in 1875 and long served as the local primary school, with several attempts to close it, and closure finally coming in 2010. The Borders Archive has School Board minutes for 1873–1919. The schoolmaster’s house in the 1830s contained 5 rooms, including kitchen. Robert Miller was master until 1822. Andrew Hogg was master there in the 1820s, until about the mid-1830s, and Thomas Anderson from 1833 until the 1860s.

Robert Paterson Place (ro-bur’-pi’-ur-simplis) n. Robert Paterson Place, housing development at Burnflat, built in 2006 and named after the inspiration for Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Old Mortality’, who was born there.

Roberts (ro-burts) n. Rev. John minister of Southdean Kirk 1951–65. His time as minister included the period when Southdean first became linked with Edgerston.

Robert’s Hill see Robert Hill

Robert’s Linn (ro-burts-lin) n. waterfalls off the Slitrig, where the Newcastleton road crosses a deep ravine. This area is famous for jasper, which was used to make the first Burgh Seal for example, and also for fossils. Further up the stream can be seen signs of the former lime-workings that gave their name to the Limekilnedge. The Catrail ends near here, leading to speculation that the falls had some special significance for our early ancestors. The area is also sometimes known as ‘the Linns’. The high bridge there was rebuilt in 1903 using girders salvaged from the Tay Bridge disaster. A story circulated that it was bombed by a Zeppelin during WWI, but this was unsubstantiated. The bridge collapsed and was rebuilt as an embankment in 1982. There was once a farmstead in the area, where Robert Elliot and family were living in 1794 – ‘Ca’ in his pownies throwe fair and foul By the clints o’ Robert’s Linn ... ’ [DH] (also written ‘Robertslinn’; the stream there may be the one marked ‘The Ryillyn B.’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, suggesting either an error or a different origin for the name; it is ‘Robertslin’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Robertson (ro-burt-sin) n. Alastair S., M.B.E., elder son of Nichol. He served as an apprentice designer with Blenkhorn, Richardson & Co., then worked with Munrosun in Galashiels, before joining Walker, Caledon, tweed manufacturers of Belfast, where he became Managing Director. He was a keen rugby player for Hawick junior teams, and also in Northern Ireland and served in the Royal Navy during WWII. He married Mairi Charlton from Ireland. Alexander (b.c.1779) cooper in Appletreehall. His wife was Mary and their children included Alexander, Duncan, William and George. Alexander (b.1779/80) from Linton, he was a cooper in Wilton Parish. He was listed among heads of households in 1835, being at Howdenburn in 1835, and Appletreehall in 1840. He was at Appletreehall on the 1841 census, with his surname given as ‘Robertson’. In 1851 he was a former cooper living at Craigrig in Roxburgh Parish with his son-in-law John Forsythe. His wife was Mary and their children included Jane, Alexander, Duncan, William and George. Alexander (b.1795/6) born at Makerstoun, he was blacksmith at Minto. He was recorded there in the electoral roll of 1837 and was still there in 1851. His wife was Isabella and their children included Jane T., Thomas, Margaret, Alexander and James. Alexander (b.1801/2) gamekeeper at Commonside in 1851 and 1861. He was living at Commonside Cottage since at least 1841. In 1834 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Robert Govenlock, innkeeper at Mossapaul. Their children included James, Robert, Alexander, John, Margaret and William. Andrew (d.bef. 1808) resident of Hawick. He married Janet Jackson, who died in 1808. Their children included: Andrew (b.1763); Barbara (b.1765); Mary (b.1767); Elizabeth (b.1769); Margaret (b.1771); and Andrew (again, b.1773) Derek (1965– ) born in Hawick, grandson of Wullie ‘the Voo’. He is an ambulance paramedic, working in Hawick but living in Newcastleton. He wrote The Men Who Marched Away – Liddesdale and the Great War’ (1992) and ‘All These Fine Fellows: Hawick and District and the Great War 1914–1918’ (1999). Rev. Edward Macallan (b.1928) educated at Aberdeen and Oxford Universities, he became an Episcopal minister. He was at Bristol and Swindon before coming to Hawick, where he was Rector at St. Cuthbert’s Kirk 1960–69. He left to take up a Scholarship at Queen’s College, Bringham, moving to Alloa, where he worked as a teacher, before taking charge of Bathgate 1978–82, moving to Strathtay in 1982, Auchterarder in 1990 and retiring in 1993. Eric ‘Pinmer’ (?) son of Wullie ‘the Voo’. He has been Captain of Hawick Golf Club and British one-armed golf champion (having lost an arm in an accident at Hawick Station). He is father of Margaret and Dawn. Jessie (19th C.) from Kelso, she came to Hawick to assist in the shop of George Turnbull the draper at 14 High Street. John (18th/19th C.) weaver in Hawick. His wife Janet Riddle died in 1810. John ‘Jackie’, ‘the Voo’ (1921– ) son of John Proctor, he is known locally as a singer. His brother Wullie also had the same nickname (which was not there in the previous generation). He may be the last person living to remember meeting J.E.D. Murray. He was Acting Father in 1968 to Elliot Hutton. He was member of the Common Riding Committee from 1966, was President of the Mosstroopers’ Club in 1973 and Callants’ Club President in 1986. The avenue at the Nipknowes that the followers take is informally named after him. His son Jim was Cornet in 1977, while another son John was later Honorary Provost. He was Jubilee Acting Father in 2018. John (?) son of Jackie. He was a local Councillor and Honorary Provost in 2002. Nichol (20th C.) apprenticed to Forbes Nursery, he served in WWI with the 1/4th KOSB. He was wounded on that fateful day of 12th July 1915 and invalided home. One of the last local survivors of the Gallipoli campaign, he wrote about his experiences afterwards. Peter H. (19th/20th C.) grocer who was Cornet in 1899, with his uncle James A. Henderson as his Acting Father. He was Cornet the year of the earliest film clips of the Common Riding, this being a hot and sunny weekend. He served as Acting Father to Francis Robertson A. Henderson in 1922. Robert (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Flight in Castleton Parish, recorded on both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. Robert (1830–97) son of the shepherd at Branxholme, he was assistant teacher in a school run on Episcopalian principles, taught by Rev. Campbell in Hawick High Street around 1850. He went to South Africa as missionary, being transferred to Zululand (once a separate country) in 1860, where he founded the first mission of the Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts. This was at Kwa Magwaza, the mission being later destroyed in the civil disturbances. He lived and worked with the Zulu people for many years, gaining the native name ‘Unzimela’. He also (anonymously) compiled and published ‘Zulu Izaga, that is proverbs, or out-of-the-way sayings of the Zulus; collected, translated, and interpreted, by a Zulu missionary’ in Durban in 1880. Around 1891 he moved to Tahlwati where he founded a mission using his wagon, and where a church was later built in his memory. William (17th C.) servant of Robert Grierson from Clarilaw. In 1684 he was listed among local men listed as being fugitives because of attending field conventicles. It is unclear whether this is the Clarilaw near Hassendean or the one in Bowden Parish. William (1720–97) from Dunfermline, he was brought to Hawick by local interests in the early 1750s to start carpet manufacturing and was entered as a Burgess in 1756. In 1769 he formed a partnership with others, renewing the partnership ten years later. The Hawick Carpet Company lasted until 1806. In 1763 he was rewarded with £40 from the Board of Trustees for Manufactures for mechanical inventions (a new kind of ‘throw mills’ and a machine for teasing wool) improving carpet manufacturing. In 1770 he was the first feuar, from the Langlands Estate, of the lands of Roughheugh, where Rosalee Brae now is; he is still listed as owner of part of Roughheugh (valued at £10 18s 6d) in 1788 and still recorded that way on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (even although he was deceased by then). In a description of Hawick’s trade in about 1777 it is stated that his company had 14 looms weaving carpets. He purchased part of the lands of Silverbuthall from James Scott. In 1789 and 1790 he paid tax in Hawick for having a female servant. He is listed as a carpet manufacturer on the 1787–90 and 1794 Horse Tax Rolls. He is probably the ‘Mr Robertson’ who paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1795 and probably the manufacturer William who paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1797. He was a trustee of the East Bank Meeting House, and at one point complained about the meagre allowance allowed for boarding visiting preachers. He appears to have had a son, also William, with whom he is probably sometimes con-founded. He may be the weaver William (some of the birth entries being written ‘Robson’) married to Jane (or ‘Jean’) French, whose children included Isabel (b.1756), William (b.1760), John (b.1761) and Ann (b.1763); Jean French died in Hawick in 1782. William (18th C.) merchant of Newcastle, who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1750. William (18th C.) quarter-master of the Scots Greys, who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1776. William (18th/19th C.) son of William, the instigator of carpet manufacturing in Hawick. He may be the William, son of William and Jean French born in Hawick in 1760. It is possible that he was the W. Robertson, carpet manufacturer’ recorded as Cornet in 1778. He is ‘Mr William Robertson, jun. Hawick’ in 1784 when he subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’. In 1789 he married Janet, daughter of William Grieve, farmer at Southfield. Their children included: Mary (b.1790); Jane (b.1794); and William (b.1795). He may also have been the William whose son John died in Hawick in 1797. He is probably the deceased William ‘Robison’, ‘Carpetweaver’, whose son William’s death is recorded in Hawick in 1806. Perhaps a relative was the William in Edinburgh who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. William (19th C.) carrier in Hawick. In 1837 he was listed as leaving from the Grapes on alternate Tuesdays, bound for Glasgow, and on alternate Thursdays for Langholm, as well as going to Selkirk every other Tuesday and Thursday. Rev. William (20th C.) minister of Kirkton from 1931 until about 1940. William G. (??–??) ‘Bill’ or ‘Wullie’, High school teacher and columnist for the Hawick News, writing the ‘G.R.’ column as well as covering rugby. He was also heavily involved with the Common Riding, being Secretary of the Committee in the 1950s. William S. ‘Willie’ (1904/05–91) owner of W.S. Robertson (Outfitters) Ltd. at 13–15 High Street from the 1930s until his retirement in 1973. He was an enthusiastic viola player with the local opera and retired to Dunbar. William ‘Wullie’, ‘the Voo’ (1912–2000) well known Westender, brother of Jackie. The origin of his nickname is unknown, and it was also later applied to his brother. As a boy he witnessed the terrible charabanc disaster at the Vertish in 1919. He was a dispatch rider for the R.A.F. during WWII and later worked with the Gas Board. He was known for performing the ‘Canoe Song’ from ‘Sanders of the River’. He also scratched ‘Voo’ into many trees up the Westend, several marked after his death with small brass plaques. His wife’s name was Cathy and his son was ‘Billy Voo’. Rev. W.M. (19th/20th C.) minister of Hawick Baptist Kirk 1916–19. He was said to a fervent evangelical preacher, who sometimes packed the Theatre or the Town Hall. He served in France with the Soldiers’ Christian Association for several months in 1918. He left Hawick for Toxteth Tabernacle, Liverpool. He may be the minister of the same name who was at Mount Pleasant in Vancouver from 1927.

Robin Reidcap (ro-bin-reed-kap) n. legendary servant of Lord Soulis, supposedly dwarfen and with vampire-like fangs, whose ghost is said to inhabit Hermitage Castle today – ‘Lord Soulis he sat in Hermitage Castle, And beside him Old Redcap sly – ‘Now, tell me, thou sprite who art mickle of might, The death that I must die! ’ [JL], ‘For doon i the dungeons Gleg Reid-cap still lurks, In plain disregard For the Office o Works!’ [DH] (cf. reid-cap).

Robin Reidbreest (ro-bin-reed-breest) n. nickname in use in the early 19th century.

Robison (ro-bin-sin) n. G. Allen (19th/20th C.) photographer in Hawick in the late 1800s and early 1900s. He trained as a photographer with Russell & Sons of London. At various times he was based at Burnlington House on North Bridge Street, as well as at East Bank House and on the Exchange Arcade.

Robison (ro-bee-sin) n. Andrew (19th C.) grocer, tea, wine and spirit merchant at 23 High Street in the 1850s and 60s. He was listed as a High Street grocer in Slater’s 1852 directory. Ebenezer (b.1795) whip and thong maker, son of Elizabeth. He was listed in Wilton on Pigot’s 1837 directory and at Wilton Path in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 he was living on Wilton Damside and on Wilton Path in 1851 and 1861 (although these are probably the same address). He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He married Elizabeth Park from Lilliesleaf in 1821. Their children included: Ebenezer; Andrew; Elizabeth, who married William Richardson; twins Barbara and Margaret; Mary; Agnes; and Janet. George (17th C.) recorded at Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) resident at Greena in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Janet (17th C.) resident of Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. John (16th/17th C.) tenant at Riccartonfoot in 1623 along with Archie Henderson when they had 2 sheep stolen by Adie and Will Usher. John (17th C.) recorded as tenant at Byreholm in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) tenant at Braidlie in Castleton Parish on the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Matthew (17th C.) resident of Liddesdale who was mentioned in about 1645. According to the Bucleuch records ‘One Matthew Robison and his brother had just returned from an excursion into the Debatable Land after some cattle of their own, and had a sleuth-hound with them’. The hound was sent off to search out some thieves who had been challenged ‘at Catheugh and Cringleford, until they came to Carshof, from whence they stole threecore sheep’. Ralph (18th/19th C.) overseer for George Douglas of Cavers. In 1806 he was residing at Berwick when he was found guilty of theft, fraud and breach of trust. Robert (17th/18th C.) wright in Hawick. In 1722 he is recorded refusing to pay a penalty and so being summoned to appear before the Session. It is possible he was the Robert ‘servant to John Pringle wright in Hawick’, who married Isobel Rae from Brauxholmstown in 1721. Thomas (16th C.) recorded as ‘Thomas Robisoum’ in 1631 on a list of tenants of the lands of Newton in Bedrule. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Yethouse in Castleton Parish. He was recorded as tenant there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1696 he was rebuked before the congregation for ‘Sabbath-breaking’ and in 1697 he was chastised for ‘travelling with a load on the Lord’s day’ (also spelled ‘Robisone’; it was probably once interchangable with Robson).

Rob o the Bent (ro-ba-thy-ben’) n. nickname for one of the Hawick men called Robert Scott.

Rob’s Cleuch (robz-klooch) n. small stream in the Rule valley, which rises on the north-west side of Bonchester Hill. On the south side is evidence of a former settlement, largely obliterated by cultivation, but still observable as a roughly Robsland (robz-lind) n. alternative name for Brighoose.

Robson (rob-sin) n. Adam (1720–1805) son of Adam and Jean Beattie. He was a farm worker who lived at Boghall in Castleton Parish. He married Helen Hume and their children included Janet (b.1761) and Mary (b.1767), who married different John Elliots. He also had a son Adam (1765–c.1844), who married Mary Pott and emigrated with his family to settle in Lanark County, Ontario. [Adam (18th C.) resident at Roberton Burnfoot. His children, baptised in Roberton Parish, included James (b.1772) and John (b.1775). He was probably the Adam who married Helen Geddes in 1769 and whose other children included: Janet (b.1770); Adam (b.1779); Robert (b.1777); George (b.1782); and Patrick (b.1785). Adam (18th C.) wright in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He could be the Adam who married Janet Murray in Hawick in 1778, Adam (18th C.) gardener and ‘Chaise Drive’ for Adam Scott of Galalaw in 1785 and 1786. This was in Roberton Parish, so he was probably working at Borthwickshiel.

Adam (1765–1885) born in Castleton Parish, son of Adam and Helen Hume, who lived at Boghall in Castleton Parish. He worked for a while as a shepherd for his brother-in-law John Elliot (2 of his sisters had married John Elliot!). He married Mary, probably daughter of Thomas Pott. They had 11 children, with 6 emigrating with them to Canada in 1817, and settling in Lanark County, Ontario. Their sons John and James had already travelled to Canada a year or so earlier. Their children included Adam (b.1790), Mary (b.1791), Isabell (b.1793), Thomas (b.1795), John (b.1797), Mary (again, b.1799), Janet (b.1801), Margaret (b.1804), Peter (b.1806), Jean (b.1808) and Robert (b.1813). He died in Drummond, Quebec. Adam (b.1786/7) born in Castleton Parish, he was a carter. He was listed among heads of households in Newcastleton in 1835–41. He was also listed as a carter in Newcastleton in 1861, when he was living at about 17 South Hermitage Street. His wife was Jessie and their children included John, Jean, Robert, Alexander, James and Bessy. He may be the Adam of Castleton who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Adam (1861–aft. 1901) youngest son of William and Margaret Douglas, he was born in Castleton Parish. He became a solicitor in Galashiels. His wife was Phills and they had a daughter Margaret Douglas. Adam (19th/20th C.) joiner of the firm A. & J. Robson. His brother was John, partner in the firm, and their sister Mary married Robert Edgar (cousin of the Hawick Express editor). He married Janet Laidlaw Wilson, who died in 1940, aged 87. Adam (1928/9–2007) born and educated in Hawick, and then at Edinburgh College of Art, where he played rugby. He then switched to the Linden, before becoming a famous wing forward for Hawick R.F.C. from 1952 to 1961. He also gained 22 Scottish caps and went on to be President of the Scottish Rugby Union. He was also President of the Scottish Schools Rugby Union. He was Art Master at Dollar Academy for 32 years, also widely exhibiting his paintings, with one prominent in the Health Centre, and his tribute to Tom Scott (1997) on display in Drumlanrig’s Tower. He was Callants’ Club President in 2002. He married Netta Renwick and their children were Shona and Judith. He wrote 3 books, one being a history of the Edinburgh Borderers rugby club. Robson Court is named after him. Allan Watt (d.1981) son of William S., he was born and brought up in Hawick. His studies at the Art College in Edinburgh were interrupted by War Service, but he continued after the War to train in art and teaching. From 1949 he was Head of the Art Department at Perth High School. He developed a strong interest in nature and botany in particular. He joined the Perthshire Society of Natural Science in 1954 and for many years was Chairman of the Botanical Section. He was also an area recorder for the Botanical Society of the British Isles and helped preserve many valuable plants in and around Perthshire. He illustrated his father’s books: ‘The Story of Hawick’, with about 17 pen and ink sketches; and ‘Hawick Place Names’, with ‘Auld Hawick, A Series of Pictorial Reconstructions’, showing how the town may have looked in the 9th, 12th, 15th and 18th centuries, as well as a detailed view of Hawick at the time of the 1537 Charter. His original ‘scraperboard’ images of ‘Auld Hawick’ are in the Museum collection. He married Jessie and had a son Alan. Alexander ‘Alec’ (b.1846) 2nd son of blacksmith Thomas. He was a stone mason, known as a great athlete and authority on coins. He died in Australia. Andrew (17th C.) listed along with James Small in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. Together they paid tax on £390 for the lands of the Laird of Haining (probably John
Robson

Pringle). Andrew (19th C.) coal merchant in Hawick in the late 1800s. Andrew (c.1889–1949) born in Hawick, he was an engineering apprentice with his father, who was a foreman with James Melrose & Sons. He then worked for a steel manufacturing firm in Middlesbrough before studying engineering at Edinburgh University. He spent 12 years as Principal of West Hartlepool Technical College and in 1933 became Principal of Handsworth Technical College in Birmingham. He was an active member of the Institution of Production Engineers. He returned regularly for Hawick Common Riding and spent many holidays in Rulewater. He was married twice and had a daughter. Charles of Samieston (1770–1830) son of James, who was tenant of Belford and Chatto. He was one of the founding members of the Jedforest Club. He was a Captain in the 2nd Regiment of Roxburghshire militia. He also served as Collector of Supply for the county and was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. He married Martha, eldest daughter of Maj. John Rutherford of Mossburnford. A small portrait was painted of him around 1800. Rev. Charles (b.1861) from Hawick, son of James and Jessie Inglis. His family attended the East Bank Kirk. He graduated from Glasgow University in 1885 and was ordained as minister of Clune Park Port-Glasgow in 1889. In 1893 he moved to Pollok Street Church in Glasgow and in 1899 to Inverness Antiburgher church. Cuthbert (17th C.) recorded as tenant of ‘Oldsteson’ in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. It is unclear where this farm is. He is recorded along with William, who was presumably his son or brother. James was also there, as well as David Hall. Euan (1954–) born in Corbridge, Northumberland, he has been M.S.P. for Roxburgh & Berwickshire from 1999, and has also been Scottish Liberal Democrat Chief Whip. Francis (17th C.) possessor of the lands of Flatt and ‘Schortbus’ in southern Liddesdale in 1632. Gavin (18th/19th C.) writer (i.e. lawyer) in Hawick who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He could be the Gavin born in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1781 to Robert and Elizabeth Grieve. George (18th/19th C.) grocer in Lilliesleaf, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He could be the ‘Cadger’ listed on Main Street in the 1841 census. George (b.c.1808) stockmaker in Hawick. In 1851 he was living on the Kirkwynd and described as ‘Frame Work Knitter – Woollen & Chelsea Pensioner’. He married Agnes Donaldson, who had previously been married to the oldest son of James ‘Pawkie’ Paiterson. George (b.1831/2) quarry worker in Denholm. He lived in an old house by the school gates. When that was demolished he lived in the White Swan. His wife Matilda came from Cupar in Fife and they had a son, James. George ‘the Prince’ (19th C.) resident of the Canongate in Denholm. He worked on the railway. Isabella ‘Bella’ (19th/20th C.) resident of a house on the Kirkwynd, near where the Drums and Fifes start on the Thursday night of the Common Riding. She would regularly come out to offer a tray of rum and milks to the band. Her son Dod was a founder member of the 1514 Club. James (16th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf. In 1595/6 his son William was granted lands in the village. James (17th C.) recorded as tenant of ‘Oldsteson’ in a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. He is listed after Cuthbert and William, and so probably closely related. James (17th C.) listed at Highchesters in the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. James (b.1710/1) son of a shepherd. He moved to Newbigging near Hawick when his father became shepherd in 1726, staying 6 years, then being shepherd for 2 years at Raesknowe and 2 years at Acreknowe and Winnington Rig. In 1767 he gave evidence regarding the earlier use of Hawick Common; he was described as married at that time and living at Templehall. James (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish, perhaps at Wiltonburn. He married Isabel Pringle and their children included: Agnes (b.1768); and Jean (b.1770). The witnesses in 1770 were Thomas Easton and Thomas Hoy. He witnessed a baptism for Walter Rae at Whitfield in 1773. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Linthill. He subscribed to Andrew Scott’s book of poetry, published in Kelso in 1811. James (b.c.1780) barber on the High Street in Hawick, probably at No. 32 on the 1841 census. James (b.1788/9) from Elsdon in Northumberland, he owned the farm of Waterside near Letham. In 1851 he was living there with his wife Janet and daughter Matilda. He married Janet Lachlan (from Dalkeith) and their children included: William (b.1808), 1st son; Robert (b.1810), 2nd son; and Mary (b.1812). James (b.c.1800) originally from Yarrow, son of Robert. In 1841 he was a farm worker living at Branxholme and he was shepherd at Branxholme ‘Gate’ (probably the Lodge) in 1851. He married Isabella Oliver in Acrum, and their children included: Robert (b.1830); Elizabeth (‘Betty’, b.1832); Joan (b.1835); Williamina (b.1838), who probably died young; and Jeany. James (19th C.) second official singer of Hogg’s ‘Teribus’ at the Common Riding. He could be the same James who is recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory as a cart and plough wright on Buccleuch Street, or the James living on Green Wynd on the 1841 census, or even the blacksmith, father of the composer William Inglis. James (b.1816) blacksmith in Wilton, he was son of Hawick blacksmith Thomas and Elizabeth Bookless. He was on Wilton Place in 1851 and Dickson Street in 1861. He married Jessie Inglis in 1841 and their children included: Margaret; Thomas; Eliza; William Inglis (b.1853), who became a professor of music; James Alexander (b.1855); Jessie (b.1857); and Charles (b.1861), who became a minister. James (19th C.) grocer in Cavers or Minto Parish, recorded in 1852. James (b.1852/3) son of Denholm blacksmith John. He was known as an authority on local antiquities, particularly arrowheads. He was also noted as a prize-winner at flower shows. He married Janet Oliver, from Denholm, and she died in 1932, aged 80. Their eldest daughter was Mary. They are buried in Denholm. James (b.1855) youngest son of William ‘Billy Buttons’ and related to the Denholm blacksmiths. He had brothers John (Hawick Town Councillor) and William and a sister Beatrix. Like his father and brothers, he started off as a stockmaker. He later became a teacher and private tutor. He was an expert on local history and wrote extensively about the Scottish Borders, producing several books including ‘Border Sketches’ (1891), ‘Churches and churchyards of Teviotdale’ (1893) and ‘Border Battles and Battlefields’ (1897). He also wrote ‘Teviotside legends & stories’ (1895) under the pseudonym Bernard Ainsworth. He also wrote ‘Teviotside legends & stories’ (1895) and ‘Border Battles and Battlefields’ (1897) under the pseudonym Bernard Ainsworth.} in 1883, aged 60. He had many sons with her (8 of whom survived), including: George, who died young; Thomas (b.1844/5), blacksmith at 46 High Street; Alexander (b.1846, ‘Alec’), who died in Australia; John (b.1848/9), also a blacksmith, died in Penicuik; Robert (b.1851), mason in Hawick; Robert Newton, monumental sculptor; James (b.1853/4); William Hardie (1856–1927), who died in Canada; George (b.1858); and Mark Newton (b.1861), who became a minister. The average height of his sons was 6ft 1½ in. He also remarried and had more children. John (b.1845/6) born at Wilton Dean, he was eldest son of William, and grandson of John, who was in the Navy. His brothers were William, Precentor at Bedrule, and James, local historian. He worked as a stocking-maker and stone hewer. He was Precentor in the Denholm Free Kirk for 13 years. He moved to Hawick, where he was a Town Councillor for Slitrig Ward and was heavily involved in religious and temperance movements in the town. He was associated with West Port Church, Hawick Home Mission, the Sabbath School Union, the Poorhouse Committee and the Parish Council. He married Janet Oliver from Cavers. John (b.c.1850) son of Denholm blacksmith John. He was also a blacksmith and known as an athlete. He died in the prime of life in Penicuik. Mark Newton (1861–1939) youngest son of John, who was blacksmith at Denholm, and Mary Newton. He was born and attended school in Denholm, then moved to Hawick at 16. He was a teacher there for over 8 years. He wrote poetry and also produced an article on ‘Lower Rulewater and its Associations’ for the Archiological Society. From 1886 he resolved to do ‘home’ missionary work and was stationed at Fisherrow, Musselburgh. Afterwards he was Presbyterian Minister in County Durham and Congregational Minister at Sanquhar and Cumnock. He was a member of Allars Kirk in Hawick in the early 1900s. As well as publishing many poems in the local press, he also contributed some articles on Border life and scenes. He privately published ‘Some Denholm Families’. His first wife and child died about 2 years after he was married. Like his brothers, he was tall, being about 6 feet 3 inches. Mary nee Waugh (b.1864) daughter of Andrew Waugh and Agnes Purdom. She was assistant nurse at Weens for several years. She married Will Robson and their children included John, Agnes Purdom and Janet Oliver. Dr. Michael J.H. (1933– ) Hawick Museum curator and contributor to the Archiological Society Transactions. He was also a founding member of the Borders Family History Society. He retired to the Isle of Lewis. He has written several short books, including: ‘Tibbie Shiel’ (1986); ‘Ride with the moonlight: the Mosstroopers of the Border’ (1987); ‘Sheep of the Borders’ (1988); ‘No road this way after dark: George Harkness’s reminiscences of Liddesdale’ (1989); ‘Break with the past: changed days on two Border sheep farms (Langburnshiels and Riccarton) with The record book of the Riccarton Mill Club’ (1991), ‘Surnames and clansmen: Border family history in earlier days’ (1998); ‘Dykes, ditches and disputers: a history of boundary and field enclosures in the Borders’ (2004); and others relating to the Highlands and Islands. Miss S. singer at Colour Bussings and other functions in the early 20th century. Patrick (15th C.) witness in 1436 to a sasine for the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee. The other men listed were all from relatively nearby. Peter (b.1801/2) from England, he was a shepherd at Boghall and then Hermitage Bridgend. He was also an elder at Castleton Kirk. He was listed as male head of his family at Boghall in 1835–41. His wife was Agnes, from Heiton. Their children included Peter, John, James, Agnes and Helen. Robert ‘Rob’ (16th C.) called ‘Fwll Mowth’ in a bond of 1562, where William Oliver in Lustruther and Gavin Oliver in West Houses have to present him to John Kerr of Ferniehirst. Robert (17th C.) carter listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is also listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He was a Burgess of Hawick. Thomas Huntly (who gave evidence relating to the use of the Common in 1767) was his servant in 1715. He is probably the Robert, married to Helen Robson, whose children baptised in Hawick included: Marion or Margaret (b.1686); Walter (b.1687); John (b.1689); Isobel (b.1691); and Helen (b.1693). Robert Newton (b.1851) born in Eccles, he was 4th son of Denholm blacksmith John. He trained as a stone-hewer at Denholm Hill Quarry and became a monumental sculptor in Hawick. He was an active member of Allars Kirk and the Archiological Society, being particularly involved in cleaning up and preserving the remains of Southdean Kirk. He carved the WWI alabaster and bronze WWI memorial tablet for Allars Kirk. He also worked on the Johnnie Armstrong memorial at Teviothead. He married Janet Oliver, from Appletreehall. In later life he had a long, flowing beard (it is said, to protect him from stone dust), making him look patriarchal. Simon ‘Syme’ (16th/17th C.) recorded as tenant in Lethem along with John Oliver in 1623. 2 men were acquitted of stealing sheep from them. Thomas (16th/17th C.) described as ‘in Langnewton’ in a 1612 document listing people convicted of charging too much interest on loans. Thomas (17th/18th C.) described as occasional tenant in Bewlie in 1716 when he leased lands in Bewlie from John Nisbet of Nisbet Hill. Thomas (17th/18th C.) described as ‘Tam o the Yett’ (18th C.) former resident of Liddesdale, said to be an ancestor of the blacksmiths of Denholm. A story is told of how a Liddesdale minister examining children asked who the strongest man was, and was given his name as the reply. He may have been a descendant of Thomas ‘Robison’, farmer at Yethouse. Thomas (d.1805) son of Thomas, he was probably farmer at Calaburn. He married Isobel Young in Hawick Parish in 1764. Their children included: Margaret (b.1765); Isobel (b.1767); James (b.1770); William (b.1771); William (again, b.1772); Alexander (b.1776). He died at Calaburn, with his wife following a few days later. Thomas (18th/19th C.) blacksmith at Denholm, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 3 horses. His shop was in a thatched cottage at the foot of the Loaning. He was probably father of the later blacksmith of the same name, as well as John, who was in the Navy. Thomas (b.c.1790) master blacksmith at Denholm, probably the same man named on Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. His brother John was in the Navy. In 1815, he married Isabella (‘Bell’) Hardie, from Dargues in Redewater. They had 6 daughters and 4 sons: Thomas (b.1816), blacksmith at Teviothead and in Hawick; James, possibly blacksmith in Middlesburgh; Ann (b.1818); William (b.1824), also a blacksmith in Denholm; John (b.1826), blacksmith in several places, but longest at Denholm; Mary; Isabella, who married William Easton from Yetholm; Betty; Catherine; and Helen, the youngest. He may be the smith of that name who was listed as a member of Allars Kirk in 1829. He could be the same Thomas who donated a stone ball, found in Denholm, to the Museum in 1863. Thomas (1777/8–1844) Hawick blacksmith, listed on Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1837 he was on the High Street and is recorded at about 9 Brougham Place on the 1841 census. He married Elizabeth Bookless, who died in 1858, aged 77. Their children included: Helen (b.1809); Mary (b.1811); Elizabeth (1814–28), who probably died young; Isabel; James (b.1816); and William. He is buried at St. Mary’s. He was probably related to the other Robson blacksmiths. He may be the ‘Tam Robson’ who supervised the roasting of an ox at the Tower Knowe for the celebration of the coming of age of Walter Francis, Duke of Buccleuch in 1827. Thomas (18th C.) spinner in Hawick. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He could be the ‘Woollen Slubber’ living on the Howegate in 1841, with his wife Margaret and children Thomas and Walter. Thomas ‘Tam’ (19th C.) carrier of the mail between Langholm and Hawick. He was a keen fisherman (described in John Hyslop’s ‘Echoes from the Border Hills’), and it was said that if the trout were biting then the letters to Hawick would be late! Thomas (b.c.1815) from outside Roxburghshire, he was an excise officer living on the Howegate in 1841. The other residents were probably wife Jane, mother Barbara, sister Jane and daughter Isabella. Thomas (1816–81) son of Thomas and Isabella Hardie. He was blacksmith at Teviothead and then at 54 High Street. He is listed as a High Street blacksmith in Slater’s 1852 directory. He later moved to 5 Teviot Road and became a retailer. He married Catherine Waugh, from Southdean Parish, who died in 1906, aged 88. Their children were: Elizabeth (b.c.1843), who married William Wilson, Hawick rag and waste merchant; Thomas (b.1839), who died young; Robert (b.1840), who died aged 15; another Thomas (who also died young, like his following 4 siblings); William; Catherine; Robert; John; and Isabella (b.1850, died aged 26). Thomas (1819–94) born at Cappuck, he later farmed at Menslaws. He was recorded at Menslaws in a directory of 1868. He married Eliza Wilson Cockburn (who died in 1906) and their children were Agnes Cockburn (who died young), Catherine Home (who died in 1958), Janetta (who died in 1969) and Thomas Cockburn (who died in 1931). They are buried in Bedrule churchyard. Thomas (b.1817/8) carrier, son of carter Richard. He lived in Jedburgh and is recorded in 1852 operating a weekly service to Hawick, leaving from the Horse Market. In the 1860s he was operating a twice weekly service between Hawick and Jedburgh. Thomas (c.1845–c.1925) eldest son of John, blacksmith at Denholm. He carried on a blacksmith’s business at 46 High Street. Later he worked at Weensland Mills. He had some musical talent and was Precentor at East bank Kirk. He was also a noted angler and authority on local natural history. He died in Hawick at more than 80 years old. Thomas Cockburn (1869–1931) born at Menslaws, son of Thomas and Eliza Cockburn. He was Manager of the National Bank of Scotland in London and is buried in Bedrule churchyard. Thomas (19th/20th C.) of Weensland, responsible for stuffing a large fraction of the Museum’s bird collection. He could be the same as the Thomas (d.c.1925) who worked at Weensland Mills. Walter (15th C.) described as ‘in Harden’ in 1493 when he was accused at a Jedburgh court of conspiring with Archibald Armstrong (who was already ‘at the horn’) in the murder of the Laird of Alemoor. Walter Ker served as surety for him. It is unclear if this is Harden on Borthwick Water or another one. Walter (17th C.) described as a merchant in a Magistrates Court case of 1642 when Andrew Deans was ordered to pay debts and expenses to him. Walter (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Cleughhead in Castleton Parish. He was listed among male heads of households in 1835–41. Walter ‘Wattie’ (20th C.) fiddle player from Denholm. He often played along with Tom Hughes in the 1970s. William (16th/17th C.) granted a half husbandland of land in Lilliesleaf in 1595/6. He was described as ‘son of James there’. William (16th C.) charged with the murder of William Hall ‘of Wollie’ (probably Wolfelee). He was recorded being ‘in Rochethewchmylne’ (probably Roughheugh Mill) and James Langlands of that Ilk acted as surety for him, and so he was probably a local man. Langlands had to pay 20 merks to Hall’s only daughter when Robson failed to appear. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Gowanbrae in Wilton Parish, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. William (18th/19th C.) from Falstone in North Tyne, he lived at Waterside in Southdean Parish. He married Barbara Baptie from Bucham. Their Children (baptised in Byrness) included: Isabel (b.1809); and Janet (b.1811). William Hutchison ‘Billy Buttons’ (b.1811/2) son of John of the Navy and grandson of the Denholm blacksmith. He was born in England, while his father was stationed there. His nickname came from the coat, festooned with military buttons, which his mother made for him when he was a child. He lived up the Doctor’s Pend in Denholm and later had the house called Rosebank built. In part of that house he ran a small stocking-maker’s with his 3 sons. He later moved to Westgate Hall and finally to Hawick. He would carry his wares throughout the Borders and into England, where he was known as ‘Stocking Willie’. In Wilton in 1845 he married Janet Cairns, from Hawick Muir. Their children were: John (b.c.1846), who was a stocking-maker and hewer and married Janet Oliver; William (b.c.1850), also a stockingmaker; Beatrix (b.c.1853), who married Bailie Kennedy; and James (b.1855), stocking-maker, teacher and local historian. William (b.1813/4) farm labourer in the Teviothead area. In 1841 he was living at Commonside Lynn, moved to Hayknowe and by 1861 was farm steward at Broadhaugh. He firstly married Ann, and secondly Margaret Wylie. His children included John, Walter, Archibald, Elizabeth, Margaret, Mary, William, James and Andrew (1859–1930), who emigrated to Illinois. William (1814–81) born at Falstone in Northumberland, he was a shepherd in Castleton Parish. In 1861 he was shepherd at Woolhope. He married Margaret (1819–97), daughter of Newcastle joiner John Douglas. Their children were: William (b.1844); Elizabeth (b.1846); John (b.1848), Janet (b.1850) and John (b.1852), who all died young; Robert (1853–1930); James (1856–89), law clerk in Edinburgh; Hector (1857–1901), ironmonger in Wigtown and Stirling; Walter (1859–1932), bank clerk in Lanarkshire; and Adam (b.1861), solicitor in Galashiels. William (b.1824) son of Thomas and Isabella Hardie, he was also blacksmith in Denholm, on Main Street. He married Agnes Miller (sister of John Miller) in Cavers Parish in 1854. Their children included: Robert (b.1849); Thomas (b.1852); James (b.1854); William (b.1856); John Hardie (b.1859); George (b.1862); Isabella (b.1866); and Agnes (b.1868). William Cairns ‘Billy’ (b.1849/50) 2nd son of William, ‘Billy Buttons’, and grandson of sailor John. He was born in Kirkton Parish. He had brothers John, who was a Councillor in Hawick, and James, who wrote local history books. He worked as a stocking-maker. He was Precentor at the Old Chapel in Denholm and at Bedrule Kirk. In 1872 he married Helen, daughter of William MacNeil, teacher at Bedrule. His son John was born in Eccles in 1882, and he had a grandson, also Billy, who was a teacher in Cumnock. He lived to about 80, settling in Leitholm and becoming a noted antiquary. William Inglis (1853–1891) son of blacksmith James. He composed music for ‘Up wi’ the Banner’ and ‘Hawick Among the Hills’. Born in Hawick he apprenticed as a blacksmith, and later worked as a frame-smith, but his career eventually turned to music. By 1881 he was advertising himself as an instructor for the ‘Tonic Sol-fa College’ at 1 Laing Terrace. He also led St. Mary’s choir. In 1882 he won a Curwen Scholarship of the Tonic Sol-fa College in London. There he became a member of the London Musical Composition Club, graduated from the Tonic Sol-fa College and was appointed by the U.P. Church as a music teacher. In 1883 he became leader of psalmody at Queen Anne Street U.P. Church in Dunfermline, and later taught in Glasgow and Govan. For his last 7 years he was choirmaster at Free St. George’s Church in Glasgow. He was appointed as Professor of School of Music for Scotland at the Glasgow Athenaeum (later the Royal Scottish Academy of Music). He adopted his mother’s maiden name as a middle name, presumably to distinguish himself from other Williams. He married Nancy Scott and their son, William Scott wrote 2 books on Hawick in the mid-20th century. He died in Cambusbarron and is buried in Wilton Cemetery. William Hardie (1856–1927) younger son of Denholm blacksmith John. He emigrated to Canada in 1881. He was known as an expert on Canadian fossils, with his collection given to the Ottawa Museum. He died in British Columbia. William (19th C.) Hawick cyclist, who lived at Havelock Street. He can be seen in a photograph of 1899 with his trophies. He may be the same as the engineer and sawmill owner. William (19th C.) engineer of Hawick, and member of Allars Kirk. He may be the William whose sawmill is listed on Havelock Street in a 1900 directory. William Scott (19th/20th C.) son of William Inglis and Nancy Scott. He worked as an advertising manager. He wrote ‘Hawick Place Names’ (1947) and ‘The Story of Hawick’ (1937, revised 1945 and 1947). He was a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland. He married Elizabeth Watt and their son James Scott was Professor of Medicine at Edinburgh University (formerly spelled ‘Robesone’, ‘Robsone’, ‘Robsonne’ etc.; see also Robison and Robertson, which were formerly not distinguished).

Robson’s (rob-sínz) n. former sawmill on Weensland Road. Its traction engine can be seen in a photograph of 1913. This is probably the same company whose sawmill was on Havelock Street in 1900.

Robson-Scott (rob-sín-sko’) n. Dr. James of Ashtrees (1814–83) eldest son of John Robson (son of James of Samieston) and Esther Scott (daughter of Thomas Scott of Peel). Educated in medicine, he joined the East India Company and went to Madras about 1836, later being appointed surgeon with the 4th Madras Infantry, and retired in 1858. On his return to Britain he took the additional surname of Scott, having inherited the lands of Ashtrees from his uncle John Scott of Riccalton. He lived at Belford, Morebattle, where he had been born. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1863. He joined the Berwickshire Naturalists’ Club, becoming President. He was also a member of the Jedforest Club. He served as a Justice of the Peace and Commissioner of Supply for the county. He was listed as owner of Ashtrees in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. He married Marianne, daughter of James Grant of Corremoney, Inverness-shire. His children were: Maj. James S., who succeeded to Ashtrees; and 2 daughters, one of whom married John Corse Scott of Synton. He died following an illness contracted while visiting his brother at Newton, and is buried in Howman kirkyard. John Alexander of Newton and Menslaws (1858–1940) eldest son of Thomas. He was educated at Fettes College and Edinburgh University. He travelled extensively, and had a collection of stuffed birds, which he shot himself. He also bred horses. In 1887 he married Margaret Suter, 2nd daughter of Walter (or William) Lang, and she died in 1940. Their children included: Thomas Selby, who was killed in WWI; Theresa Dorothy; and Marjorie. His children are recorded as followers of the Jedforest Hunt. Thomas of Newton, Bedrule (1815–93) 2nd son of John Robson and Esther Scott and brother of Dr. James. He inherited Newton from his uncle Thomas Scott, taking the additional Scott surname. He leased the farm at Lethem (which had long been in the Scott family), as well as several other sheep farms, and was an authority on sheep-farming. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He found a hammer of felsite on his farm in the mid-19th century. In 1861 he was farming 8500 acres at Lethem and employing 28 people. He was recorded at both Lethem and Newton in a directory of 1868. He was listed as owner of the lands of Newton on the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. In 1857 he married Mary Anne Leslie, daughter of Rev. T. Wight, and she died in 1897. Their children were: John Alexander of Newton; Esther Anne; Thomas William of Lethem; Sarah; Charles George; and Lilias. The family have an enclosure in Bedrule churchyard. Thomas William ‘Tom’ (b.1866) younger son of Thomas of Newton. He was educated at the Edinburgh Academy. He was Whip of the Jedforest Hunt 1894–97 and Master of Hunt 1903–32. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1898. He lived at Lethem and also at Lanton Tower, which he purchased. He farmed at Lethem, Southdean and Peel. In 1892 he married Florence Jane, daughter of William Lang, who was a cousin of Andrew Lang’s. He secondly married Violet Cunningham. His children included John (killed following illness in WWI), Tom, Esther and William Douglas. His children Esther, John and Tom were all followers of the Jedforest Hunt when young. There is a signed portrait of him in the Horse & Hounds Inn at Bonchester. Thomas Selby (1894–1914) son of John, he attended Rugby School and was killed in WWI. He was a Lieutenant in the Royal Scots and was recorded missing at Wytschaete, Flanders. There is a memorial plaque to him inside Bedrule Kirk. William Douglas (1901–81) youngest son of Tom, born in Southdean Parish, he became Professor of German at Birkbeck College and Honorary Director of the Institute of Germanic Studies at the University of London 1968–73. He wrote several works on Goethe and Germanic Studies at the University of London and became Professor of German at Birkbeck College and Honorary Director of the Institute of Germanic Studies at the University of London.

Robsteed (robsteed) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the 1541 rental roll as ‘Robsteid’, and listed along with the other lands of ‘Cleirlan’, ‘Cranswat’, ‘Gusbank’, ‘Hurklebuss’, with tenants William Elliot, David Elliot, Bartholomew Nixon and Ninian Elliot, valued at 5 merks. They were presumably a set of adjacent small holdings, but their location is uncertain.

Rob the Clocker (rob-thu-klo-kur) n. nickname of Robert Wilson of the mid-1800s.

Rob the Heckler (rob-thu-hek-lur) n. resident of Denholm in the 19th century. A story is recounted (in the Border Counties’ Magazine) of his youthful love for his native village. His father sent him to start service somewhere near Liliesleaf, and when he got to Hassendeal he looked back and said ‘O ma bonny Denholm! aw’ll never sey ye mair!’ His father left him at his new place of employment, but was surprised to find him already back in Denholm when he returned home. His nickname presumably comes from the former manufacturing of lint.

Rob the Laird (rob-thu-lard) n. nickname for Robert Scott, descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane, who farmed at Binks.

Rob the Laird (rob-thu-lard) n. nickname for Robert Scott, a man of gypsy descent who was said (in an account by Mr. Simson) to be ‘keeper for the counties of Peebles, Selkirk and Roxburgh’ about the time of the war with France. It is unclear what position he may have held and how he may have been related to other Scotts.

Rob the Laird (rob-thu-lard) n. nickname used locally in the 19th century. This may be the same man as Robert Scott, farmer at Binks – ‘Wagga Wagga and Jocky Sling, Rumpie Laidlaw and Rob the Laird, Jocky Tencocks and Wullie the King, Henry Mullens and Hope the Gaird’ [HI] (note that one version of the poem has ‘Jock the Laird’).

Rob wi the Dog (rob-wi-thu-dög) n. nickname of Robert Oliver.

Rob Young (rob-yung) n. blacksmith Robert Young, mentioned in the song ‘Pawkie Paiterson’ – ‘Auld Rob Young o’ the Back Raw’s there, Biddy the Hawker’s sellin’ preens; Wat Inglis is at his tricks yince mair, And there’s baith Jock and Sandy Weens’ [HI].

Rochead (roch-heed) n. John Thomas (1814–78) Edinburgh born architect, who trained with David Bryce before established his own practice in Glasgow. Here he designed many of the grandest buildings of the latter part of the 19th century. In Hawick he was responsible for designing the Corn Exchange, St. Andrew’s Free Church and several mansions, including Silverbuthall House, Hillhead House, Langlands Park, Heronhill, Mansfield and Thornwood.

rock (rok) n., arch. distaff in spinning, the staff holding the unspun flax or wool – ‘But she lootit down and her rock tuik a lowe, An’ that was a hard beginnin’ o’ [T], ‘... by striking her with ane rung, and breaking of her mistresses rocke when she was spinning there...’ [BR1693] ‘...And thus she sung, and twined her rock, When at the door a feebel knock’ [JTe] (from Old Danish).

the Rock (thu-rok) n. feature indicated on Wood’s plan of 1824, marking the northern end of the Little Haugh. It was situated somewhere between the current Little Haugh and the Drill Hall area, on the land once occupied by Teviot Crescent Mills, and was presumably a rock of some sort.

rock bool (rok-boot) n., arch. a hard boiled confection. Miss Lamb’s, from Needle Street, were famous in the early 19th century – ‘Bet Revel’s ‘rock bools’ were the best sweets he ever tasted’ [JTu], ‘The ‘bit’ of old Needle Street will appeal to all lovers of ‘rock bools’ [V&M], ‘Rock bools – Hawick’s distinctive sweetmeat’ [ECS],

roketty-rowe (ro-ki’-ee-row) n., arch. an amusement among children involving a rocking motion, also known as ‘wey the butter, wey the cheese’ – ‘And the old bairns’ game of ‘roketty-rows’, when two would stand back-to-back with their arms linked and by stooping alternately, raise each other from the ground, chanting: ‘Wei butter, wei cheese, Wei a pund o’ cannle-grease, Yowe up, mei doon, This is the way to London toon’ [DH], a rolling gait – ‘Thom sailor has a rockety-rowe o’ a walk [GW], a vehicle with a rocking motion, v. to rock, sway, adj. rocky, rickety, wobbly.

rocklay (rok-lâ) n., poet. a kind of short cloak with a long cape, a mantle – ‘…vielence kivers thame as ane rocklay’[HSR], ‘…an’ let thame kiver thamesel’s wi’ thair ain confuushon as wi’ ane rocklay’[HSR].

Rocksteid (rok-steed) n. former lands in 1632, listed among the possessions of Francis Battie in Liddesdale. It is recorded as ‘Twa steids Over and Neather, with the pertinents thairof called Roksteid’, along with ‘Neirland’ (probably Netherraw) and ‘Podotoun’ (probably Paddington).

Rockvale (rok-väl) n. name for group of houses on Liddesdale Road (previously Lynnwood Road), being Nos. 1–6. The first house (No. 4) was built sometime before 1857 and took the name in the 1880s, the others being built in 1926. They were originally reached from the main road via a foot bridge over the mill lade. They were demolished in the 1980s?? (the origin is presumably from the rocky protuberance, now a disused quarry, overlooking the valley).

Rockview (rok-vey) n. house in Denholm, off Minto Road, which was a blacksmith’s in the early 20th century.

Rockville (rok-vil) n. another name used for Rockvale.

roddin (ro-din) n., poet. a track, path – ‘…gae they ways furth bie the fit-roddins o’ the flok’[HSR].

Rodds (rodz) n. lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the 1541 rental roll as ‘Roddis’. At that time the tenants were John and James Elliot and the lands were valued at one merk. It is unclear where this is, but it was listed between Ramsiegill and Roughley, so it is possibly the same place as ‘Reddaddenn’.

Rodes (rödz) n. former farm near Southdean, although the precise location and name are uncertain. John Oliver was tenant there in 1669 and John Storie in 1694 (it was ‘Roods’ and ‘rods’ in 1694).

Rodger (ro-jur) n. Andrew (17th C.) tenant in Clarilaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It is possible he is the Andrew, married to Bessie Turnbull, whose children, baptised in Robertson, included Isobel (b.1783) and Margaret (b.1786). Andrew (18th C.) farmer on the Cavers estate who, before about 1737, made early winnowing machines or corn fanners, inspired by descriptions of a Dutch model (perhaps communicated to him by Douglas of Cavers). These may have been the first mechanical means of separating grain from the chaff in the whole of Britain. Another version tells how in 1733 he found a machine discarded in Leith by James Meikle (brought back from Holland) and made one of his own in 1737, supplying them for £3 each by 1740, having given up his farm. He thereafter sold them in the area, although there were religious objections that they were supplanting the Lord’s creations. In 1723 he obtained a property in the Sandbed from his uncle James Rodger, which had previously belonged to Langlands. On either this property or elsewhere at the Sandbed he established a shop. His descendants traded in fanning machines there for about the next 100 years. Some dispute with the Hawick Parish Session (which is unclear) resulted in him giving up the title for another Sandbed property about 1724 (perhaps part of the same property) where the Grammar School would then be built. Andrew Turnbull and John Pringle were charged with valuing his house for the Kirk Session. A portrait of him exists (he is also referred to as ‘Rogers’ and sometimes called ‘William’). He could be the Andrew, whose children, baptised in Cavers Parish, included Marion (b.1711), William (b.1713), James (b.1715), Margaret (b.1717), Betty (b.1720), Robert (b.1723), an unnamed son (b.1725), Hugh (b.1727) and Ann (b.1729). Andrew (b.1801/2) born in Traquair Parish, he was a shepherd at Sundhope and also toll-keeper at Fiddleton around the 1860s. In 1851 he was at Sundhope and in 1861 he was listed as shepherd at Fiddleton, with his son James as the toll-keeper, and his daughter Joan also there. His wife was Violet and their children included James, John, Walter, Elliot, Robert, Isaac, Adam, Euphemia and Joan. James (17th C.) resident at Appletreehall according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th/18th C.) married Isobel Dryden in Kirkton Parish in 1721. James (b.1826/7) son of Andrew, he was born in Selkirk Parish. In 1861 he was recorded as toll-keeper at Fiddleton, living there with his father as well as his sister Joan. James (19th C.) fisher in Hawick. He went bankrupt in 1873, with the Commissioners for his estate being John Nichol and Walter Forsyth. Maj. James (1864/5–1930) worked in the woollen industry. He married Bella, only child of A.K. Innes. He was probably son of John and Margaret MacRaw. John (18th/19th C.) butcher of the Back Row, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In 1837 he was listed on the Howegate. Matthew ‘Mat’ (d.1968) joiner in Deanburnhaugh. He took over from Adam Elliot. Robert (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick who gave evidence in 1710 relating to a fight in St. Mary’s between 2 other weavers. He is probably the Robert, weaver in Whitchesters, whose son William was baptised in 1704. He is probably the Robert who married Janet Glendinning in 1701 and whose other children were Janet (b.1701), John (b.1703), Janet (again, b.1706) and Robert (b.1708). Robert (d.1808) wheelwright in Hawick, son of Andrew. His father could have been the manufacturer of agricultural implements from the early part of the 18th century or he could be the Robert, son of Andrew and Betty Grieve, born in Hawick in 1775. His death is recorded in Hawick. Robert ‘Duke’ (19th C.) possibly the same Robert recorded as butcher at the Back Row in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He took over as town drummer from Caleb Rutherford, about 1830 – ‘Rob Rodger, he ca’s up the rear. And Caleb beats the drum’ [RM]. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Dryden and their children included: Robert (b.1670); William (b.1672); Bessie (b.1674); and John (b.1684). William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen ‘Murie’ and whose children born in Hawick Parish included: Bessie (b.1687); and an unnamed son (b.1688). William ‘pedder’ (i.e. peddler) listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He may be the William married to Helen ‘Murie’ or the one married to Janet Dryden. William (17th C.) shepherd at Hawick Shiel in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th/18th C.) listed in 1724 among those collecting money for Ashkirk Parish. He is probably the William who married Margaret, daughter of William Scott, in Wilton Parish in 1711. Their children, baptised in Ashkirk Parish, included: William (b.1717); and Bettie (b.1719). William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Wester Parkhill, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. He could be the William whose wife Mary Stavert died in 1795. William (d.1805) described as ‘weaver and shopkeeper to Mr. Oliver’. It is unclear which Oliver this was. Perhaps the same weaver married Helen Scott in 1763 and had children: Margaret (b.1764); Elizabeth (b.1768); and William (b.1770). The witnesses in 1764 were Walter Scott and Robert Renwick (who married Elizabeth, perhaps his sister). William (d.1837) wright of Hawick, probably a descendant of Andrew. It is possible he is the ‘Roger’ whose premises near the top of Walter’s Wynd are shown on Wood’s 1824 map (see also Roger). Rodgers (ro-jurz) n. Catherine (19th C.) milliner and dressmaker on the Kirk Wynd in Slater’s 1852 directory. Mary (18th/19th C.) dressmaker on the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. Rodgie (ro-je) n. Rev. Andrew (1777–1861) from Abernethy, son of Thomas and Margaret Wright. He was minister of the Green (or West End) Church for 53 years, ordained in 1807, following the death of Rev. Dr. Young. He may have been in Hawick since late the previous year, having also been called to Jedburgh. He was well known for receiving the Cornet and his supporters every year at Myreslaw Green, sending his servant round with the bottle, giving them ‘A guid, cauld cauker, Frae a man that was nac Quaker’, in a verse that may have been added to Balbirnie’s ‘Auld Song’. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was listed at Myreslawgreen in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Often referred to as ‘Rodgie o the Green’, he was known for insisting on strict observance of the Sabbath (which included no fiddling, secular singing, cooking or walking). In 1856 he was presented with a purse containing 90 sovereigns on the occasion of his jubilee. He married Isabella Summers in 1825 and they appear to have had 4 children: Isabella; Margaret, still living in Hawick in 1861; Thomas, who died young; and Mary, also died young. A portrait of him exists. His mother-in-law died in Hawick in 1840 (on the same day as 9 others, and hence possibly in the cholera outbreak). His wife is recorded in about 1874 (along with Janet Brown, perhaps a relative) as owner of part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick. William (d.1873) Hawick man who married Mary, daughter of Dr. Walter Graham. He is probably the man of that name recorded being present at the famous otter hunt organised at Hawick in 1863. He died in Jerusalem on his
Rodman

Rodman (rod-mun) n. Patrick (15th C.) listed at the 1493 Justice-aine in Jedburgh when he had remission for crimes. He was listed as being from Rulewater and his crimes included theft of sheep and cattle from 4 separate farms. His surety was Thomas Rutherford, brother of the Laird of Dundee. He was separately listed in 1494/5 when he had remission for stealing sheep from 2 other farms, with his surety being Thomas Rutherford in the Grange of Abbotrule. This surname seems to be otherwise unknown in the area.

Rodono (ro-dō-nō) n. house on the western bank of St. Mary’s Loch. The estate was an ancient barony dating to at least 1236, and was long held by the monks of Melrose. There was a nearby chapel (at Chapelphope, at the head of the Loch o the Lowes). In 1442 it was listed among lands whose fees were held by Melrose Abbey. In 1484 it was contained in a list of lands to which the monks appointed David Scott of Brauxholme and his son Robert as Bailies, with Sir Walter Scott appointed to the same office in 1519. In the Exchequer Rolls of 1538 there is a note about the Comptroller’s expenses in visiting here (along with other Royal properties, including Hawick and Ringwoodfield) and in 1540 the ‘fernées’ were paid to the Abbot of Melrose, amounting to £82 12s 8d. In 1557 Robert Scott of Bowhill paid rental to Melrose Abbey for lands here, namely ‘Langbank’, ‘Quhitheoup’, ‘Litillhoup’ and ‘Mekillehoup’. The lands were valued at £25 in about 1564. In 1566 Queen Mary and her husband Darnley held a council here, when they mentioned the scarcity of deer and land in West Lothian. His name is given as ‘Rogero’ and he was ‘persona’ of Rule. In 1214 he witnessed a charter for William Comyn, who granted ‘Rogero’ and he was ‘persona’ of Rule. In 1214 possibly the same Roger, Parson of Rule, witnessed a charter for William Comyn, who granted a stone of wax annually to the church of St. Cuthbert in Durham. The building was demolished in 1980/1. The rubble was used to fill part of Weensland dam and raise the ground level opposite the sewerage works. The land was used for the new Health Centre in 1989. The name was also adopted as a trade name for the shrink-resistant process applied by Pringles to underwear from 1899.

Rodono Mills see Rodono

Roger (ro-jur) n. Parson of Rule. He may be the earliest known priest of Hobkirk Parish. Sometime in the period 1165–78 he witnessed a charter for Richard Comyn, relating to Holyrood Abbey and land in West Lothian. His name is given as ‘Rogero’ and he was ‘persona’ of Rule. In 1214 possibly the same Roger, Parson of Rule, witnessed a charter for William Comyn, who granted a stone of wax annually to the church of St. Cuthbert in Durham.

Roger (ro-jur) n. griever of Hassendean who witnessed a charter around the 1220s for the family ‘of Hassendean’. His name is given as ‘Rogero’. It is possible that his ancestors became Grieves.

Roger (ro-jur) n. Andrew (d.1819) fleshier in Hawick. He had sons Robert and John. He could be the Andrew, married to Bessie Grieve, whose children baptised in Hawick Parish included: Jen (b.1769); an unnamed son (b.1769); Elizabeth (b.1771); William (b.1773); and Robert John (b.1775). Andrew (b.c.1825) fleshier on the Howegate. In 1841 he was listed along with his siblings Walter, Nancy, Helen and Elizabeth. He was still there in 1851. He was listed in Slater's rogerowse

1852 directory (as ‘Rodgers’) on the Howegate. James (18th C.) wright in Hawick. In 1769 he was appointed to the commission to discuss the Common with representatives of the Duke of Buccleuch. He married Janet Dickson. Their son Andrew was born in 1745, with the wintesses being merchants Charles Tudhope and William Riddel. Robert (16th/17th C.) of Burnfoot Mill. He is mentioned in the 1612 complaint of the Baron of Hawick to the Privy Council, regarding taxation in Hawick and the imprisoning of the Baron’s officer, Alexander ‘Wischart’ in St. Mary’s steeple. The Magistrates were let off this latter charge, since Wischart was guilty of striking Roger, presumably at the market while trying to collect customs. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded among the many Borders men who had remission in 1526 for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. William (d.1492) court musician of James III. He was knighted and appointed to the Privy Council. The King gave him the estate of Traquair in 1469. In 1470/1 he was one of the witnesses to the decision to acquit Andrew Ker of Cessford of the charges of assisting the King’s enemies. In 1478 he disposed of Traquair for only 70 merks to James Stewart, Earl of Buchan, uncle to the King. However, a few years later, when the King was on an expedition against the English, he was one of the royal favourites who were captured by a group including the Earl of Buchan, and hanged at Lauder bridge. William (15th C.) leased the lands of Winterburgh in 1488, along with Robert Scott, with Sir David Scott as pledge. The lease continued in 1490 and 1492. Probably the same William was bequeathed 30 sheep in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2. William (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Wilzem Roger’ in 1500 when he was one of the witnesses for a letter of appraising for the lands of Whithope. Probably the same man was witness in 1501 to a notorial instrument relating to the Kerrs of Ferniehirst for their lands of Feu-rule in the Barony of Cavers. William (17th C.) resident at Midshields according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (18th/19th C.) wright in Hawick, mentioned in a Selkirk court case of 1809. William (18th/19th C.) describer of a version of how Hawick men accounted for themselves at Fodden, as recounted in Wilson’s ‘Annals of Hawick’ (1850). He may be the same William who married Marjory Donaldson (sister of Agnes, Isabella, Elizabeth and Jane), and had 7 children, including Janet, who was the 2nd wife of manufacturer Alexander Laing. He may also be the William who is shown as owner of property on Slitrig Crescent on Wood’s 1824 map (see also Rodger).

rogerowse (ro-gu-ows) adj., arch. given to freedom of speech, outspoken (noted by J. Jamieson).

Rogers (ro-jurz) n. Ann (b.c.1790) milliner at 26 High Street, along with Mina. They are recorded on the 1841 census. Rev. Douglas Malcolm (1916-95) trained at Yorkshire United Independent College, he became minister of Providence Chapel, Cleckheaton in 1948. Thereafter he served as minister in Halifax and Sunderland, before becoming minister at Hawick Congregational Kirk 1969-71. After Hawick he was minister at Girlington, Yorkshire. He married Edith Doreen Speck.

Rogie see Rodgie

rogues-money (rógz-mu-nee) n. a tax raised on counties for the expense of arresting and imprisoning criminals. The local use and administration of these funds appears to have been a matter of some debate – ‘Paid Mr Weir, to carry his expenses to Jedburgh for the rogue-money relating to the brig’ [BR1740].

the Rogues’ Cairt (thu-rógz-kár) n. spring-cart that used to be sent round to the neighbouring parishes for transporting prisoners to Jedburgh Jail. This started around the 1840s.

the Rogues’ Hole (thu-rógz-hól) n. occasional name used for the Town prison (e.g. in 1782), being under the former Town House (also called the Thiefs’ Hole; see Hawick Jail).

Roll-aboot (rö-l-u-boo) n. local nickname, probably from the 19th century – ‘Then Meg the Mantua sails along, Auld Nancy leads her cuddy aboot, And Gleska Jamie lits a sang Tae Scauch-les, Chimnie and Roll-aboot’ [HI].

the Roll o Honour (thu-röl-o-o-nur) n. record of local men who fell in the 2 World Wars, held in the Museum. The original was executed by Graham Johnston, W.R. Lawson and William Wallace MacGregor. It consists of 8 pages of illuminated vellum in a stand of oak, containing the names of 693 who were killed in WWI. The names are arranged alphabetically by Regiment. James Haig executed a similar design for the WWII roll.
the Roll o the Clans

the Roll o the Clans (thu-röl-ō-thu-clawnz) n. list of prominent and landed men in the Borders and Highlands in the records of the Privy Council for 1590, with an abbreviated version in the records of the Scottish Parliament for 1587. Its full title is ‘The Roll of the Clannis that hes Capitanis, Cheifflis, Chifenis, quhomeon they dep- \dend, oftyms againis the willis of thair Lands-lordis, as well on the Bordouris as Hielandis, and of sum special personis of branches of the saidis Clannis’. Like other records of the time, it shows that Border families were considered to be clans as much as their Highland cousins. It also forms an invaluable record of local lairds at the time, listing about 100 Lairdships in Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire, naming many men explicitly.

Romanno (rō-maw-nō) n. Matthew (15th C.) notary responsible for the sasine for the Counsilands, sold by Margaret Cousin to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1447. The ‘precept’ was witnessed in Hawick, and the sasine itself signed at Bramwholme. He was described as a presbyter of Glasgow diocese, and so was probably a local church official. He wrote his name as ‘Matheus de Romanox’. He also wrote the sasine for Simon of Routledge selling the Birkwood and Burnflat to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1448.

Romanno Bridge (rō-maw-nō-brij) n. village in Peebleshire, in the northern part of the Scottish Borders, south of West Linton. The ‘bridge’ is over the Lynne Water. The Romannos of that Ilk came from here. John Scott in Whitehaugh had remission in 1502 for stealing cattle from John Romanno of that Ilk. The lands were owned by the Murrays from 1513 until 1676. In 1677 it was the site of a fight between 2 gypsy families, the Faas and the Shawes (it is ‘Rommanois’ in 1502 and ‘Ralmanno’ in 1526).

the Romans (thu-rō-munz) n., pl. empire builders based in Italy, who conquered England, and made in-roads into Scotland. They occupied parts of Britain from the middle of the 1st century to the beginning of the 5th. Agricola’s conquest of the North started in 78 C.E., as part of which he built the forts at Raeburnfoot and Newsteads, driving a wedge between the Selgovae and Novantae tribes. Although there was no major Roman settlement in the immediate neighbourhood of Hawick, there are many signs of nearby Roman habitation, including at Ruberslaw, Craik Cross and Aikwood. There is a Roman road running from Raeburnfoot to the Borthwick valley via Craik Cross, although it is unclear where it continued on the near side of Craik. However, in 1948 the remains of a stone-built culvert (used to divert the stream under the road) was discovered on the left bank of the Borthwick after flooding, midway between Craik and Northope Haugh; this has subsequently washed away. There has been a suggestion of a continuation of this road up the Borthwick valley and then via Blawearie to Hangingshaw Hill, then between Woo Law and Groundistone Height, proceeding to Harelaw, and connecting to Newstead. There is another possible Roman road connecting Eskdale with Teviotdale, running via Ewes Doors to Caerlenrig. Several Roman altar stones were reused in the building of Jedburgh Abbey. Trimontium near Melrose was an important fort in the 1st and 2nd centuries. Hadrian’s Wall is about 40 miles to the south, and Dere Street only about 12 miles to the east. At Teviothead a Roman coin (of Vespasian) was found in 1856, and more recently a denarius of Augustus was found near Fulton Tower. A bronze swastika brooch from the late 2nd century was found at Denholmhill around 1930. Nearer to Hawick, 2 temporary Roman camps were revealed by aerial photography in the 1960s, these lying near Cavers Mains and Eastcote farms. The Romans pulled out of the Borders by 369 C.E., which was effectively the start of the Dark Ages, and the period of Roman occupation was quickly forgotten. However, there have been several local finds of artefacts. The leg of a large bronze statue was found at Milsington in 1820, along with the bronze base of another statue (suggested to be loot from a site in England, and described in 1887/8). A bronze horde was unearthed on Ruberslaw in 1863 (2nd century, now in the Museum), as well as a ‘first brass’ of Vespasian found nearby, 2 bronze coins uncovered on Hallrule farm, and a couple of dressed stones from near the summit. More recently a Roman coin was found in a garden at Maclagan Drive, and a Romano-British carved stone at Appletreehall. And in 2011 a horde of 228 coins from the time of Vespasian to Commodus were found on Synton Hill – ‘Lords of the earth, the Roman legions wheel Their glittering files, and stamp with gory heel, Bathe the keen javelin’s edge in purple dew; While Death smiles dimly o’er the faulchion blue’ [JL].

Romish (rō-mish) adj. relating to the Church of Rome, usually used disparagingly by Protestants – ‘... att this time we are threatened with an invasion from Spain, the greatest enemies in ye Romish church and bloody Irish combined’ [PR1719].
rone (rōn) n. a gutter on a roof for carrying away rainwater – ‘...Wi sparras cheapin gleg on the rones, the cocks crawin, And the blackies whusslin owre a’ the braes and gairdens!’ [DH] (also spelled ‘rhone’).

Roondaboots (roon-du-boots) n. Roundabouts, former name for a house in Chesters in Southdean Parish. It is listed on the census for 1841 and 1861 and on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. It may be the place also known as Turnpikehead.

the Roond Close (thu-roond-klōs) n. probably the oldest of the High Street closes, at No. 17, named after the rounded archway for which it was once notable. It also once held one of the minor gates giving access to the town. Staples for the iron gate were visible until about 1840. The building to the east bears a triangular stone with the inscription ‘J.S.M.D. Feare Gode. 1600’, taken from the front of the house when it was rebuilt in 1871; this pended house probably partly defended the close. It was also known as the Wide Close in the early 1800s, and around this time contained a public house (called the Royal Oak or Blue Bell). In the mid-19th century it contained Brunton’s contractors and joiners. Many of the houses were demolished in the 1930s, followed by the lower cobbled area, including the I.O.G.T. hall and further buildings after the War, to make way for the Rodono Mill factory. Steps were built to retain the right of way, and Rodono itself was demolished in 1980, and the Health Centre built in its place.

Roond Croft (roon-droft) n. former name for a piece of land near Hawick, referred to by James Wilson in 1850 and J.J. Vernon in 1900. The location is uncertain, but it is possibly related to an earlier form of the Roond Close.

roonderz (roon-durz) n. rounders, a children’s bat and ball game – ‘Hei taught oo rugby, cricket, roonders, Country dancin, softba’, gyn And A dinn mind tellin ee A was gliffed stiff for him’ [IWL].

Roondhaugh (roon-hawch) n. former name for lands in Ashkirk Parish, owned by the Scotts of Woll in 1609 when it is ‘Roundhauch’ and part of the lands purchased by the Cochranes in 1795.

the Roond Room (thu-roond-room) n. room within the Tower Hotel formerly used for functions, e.g. the reception on Picking Night in the late 19th century.

roondaboots, Roond Croft, Roondhaugh, the Roond Room Roond Sike  (roond-sik) n.  Round Sike, small stream in the headwaters of the Thorlisheshope Burn in upper Liddesdale (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

the Roond Table  (tha-roond-tā-bul) n.  Hawick Round Table, part of an international organisation with charitable and social aims, which began in 1927. The local branch is No. 532, part of area 39, and has met for many years in the Bucleuch Hotel, typically twice a month. It is allied with the Rotary Club, which is restricted to men over the age of 45.

roose  (rooz) v.  to annoy, anger, provoke, rouse, become agitated, grow angry – ‘he wadni half’d been roosed if heid’d fund oot’, ‘he got awfi roosed if ee caaed eet a festival!’, ‘... roothness  (rooth-nis) n., poet. abundance, fullness – ‘... but trustet in the roothniss o’ his riches, an’ strenthenet himsel in his wicketniss’[HSR].

Ropelawshiell  (rōp-lu-sheel) n.  cottage in Craik Forest, recorded from at least the early 18th century. It is located where the Ropelaw Sike joins the Rankle Burn, and within the boundaries of the former farm is the source of the Rankle Burn. It was used for several years as a cottage by Chay Blyth and is now a holiday home (the origin of the name may be from roplaw, a young fox; it is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Roper  (rō-pur) n.  William (19th C.) Hawick man who emigrated to Highlandville, Massachusetts. He returned for the Common Ridings of 1887 and 1888, and sang a Hawick song (to the tune of ‘Bonnie Dundee’) at the 1888 Dinner. He is probably the son of Joseph recorded aged 7 on the Mid Raw in 1841. He may be the William listed among Hawick men who met with Robert Ewen in Guelph on his Canadian tour of 1878; he is recorded singing ‘Teribus’ along with fellow Teri George Murray.

Rope Sike  (rōp-sik) n.  stream that rises between Windburg Hill and Brown’s Hill and flows roughly to the south to meet the Floss Burn near Langburnshiels.

roplaw  (rop-hu) n., arch. a young fox (said to be only a Teviotdale word, noted by J. Jamieson; it is possibly the origin for ‘Ropelawshiell’).

ropple  (rop-pul) v., arch. to run or grow up rapidly (of vegetation) – ‘Roppled up, grown up with rapidity, large, but not strong in appearance, Teviotd.’[JoJ].

Rosalee  (rō-za-lee) n.  house built in the mid-19th century on the slopes above Langlands Road near Ladylaw. It was the home of the Rev. John Thomson and his family – ‘Sae ilka true Teri three cheers let us gie, For the Mr. and Mrs. o’ fair Rosalee’[VW] (sometimes written ‘Rosalea’).

Rosalee Brae  (rō-za-lee-brā) n.  road above Langlands Road leading to Rosalee, Ladylaw and some other large houses. The ‘Dog Hoose’ used to stand on the left side of this road and ‘Saut Haa’ on the right.

Roscins  (ros-kinz) n.  Thomas (13th C.) granted the lands of ‘Bethrull’ in Roxburghshire in 1357 by William, Earl of Douglas. This seems likely to be the same as Bedrule. However, there is no other record of a surname like ‘Roscins’ connected with this area.

Rose  (rōz) n.  Arthur (1634–1704) son of the minister of Birse, his name is also written ‘Ross’. He graduated from Marischal College in 1652 and became minister of Kinearny in 1656. He then became minister of Old Deer, then Rector of Marischal College, minister of St. Mungo’s, Bishop of Argyll and Bishop of Galloway. In 1679 he succeed Andrew Burnet as Archbishop of Glasgow. And in 1684, after Burnet’s death, he succeeded him as Archbishop of St. Andrews and Primate of Scotland. After Parliament abolished episcopalianism in 1689 he continued to preach secretly as an Episcopalian and died in the Canongate. He is buried at Restalrig.

Rosebank (rōz-bawngk) n. name given in 1865 to the houses built at Thorterdykes in the years 1861–64 on part of the old Tryst ground, and also on the land known as Haggishaa. The houses were built by Thomas Reid, mason and farmer at St. Leonard’s. The name may derive from thickets of wild roses previously growing there.

Rosebank (rōz-bawngk) n. house in Denholm. It was built for William Robson, who was a stocking manufacturer in the village. It was later home of John W. Turnbull, clothier.

Rosebank Road (rōz-bawngk-rōd) n. name given in the early 20th century to the road between the Loan and Burnflat Brae, after the houses called Rosebank, which already stood there. The north side was built up in 1927 and the south in 1929. The street is where the riders divide for the Chases, married men to the front and single men to the rear.

Roscroft (rōz-kroft) n. house on the Dean Road just outside Denholm, which was formerly called Rosebank. It once housed a stocking-shop.

Rosedale (rōz-dāl) n. Turgis (d.bef. 1131) referred to in a charter of about 1125. He was Lord of Liddel, holding lands in what would later be called Liddesdale, and was probably a descendant of the earlier Baron, Turgis Brundis. He founded the house of Augustinian canons of Liddel (an offshoot of Jedburgh Abbey) in a place that came to be known as Canonbie. He gave the religious house of Liddel (as well as the church of Kirchanders, i.e. Kirkandrews) to Jedburgh Abbey when it was founded in about 1138. He was succeeded by his son William. William (12th C.) son of Turgis, who was Lord of Liddel, he was a baron from Yorkshire. He is recorded as being ‘de Rosedale’ in a grant of about 1160 in which he gave his lands of Kershope to the hospital of St. Peter in York. The grant is confirmed in a copy made in the early 14th century, which describes the boundaries of the lands, giving some interesting historical details. The grant is confirmed by Malcolm IV, and there are referred to as ‘Greshoppa’ (but surely the same place). In the 1150s he founded the Cistercian priory usually called Rosedale Middleton. Along with his wife he also granted lands of ‘Greshoppa’ in Yorkshire to the same religious house, as confirmed by King Malcolm. He may be the ‘Guido’ who, with the consent of his son Radulf, gave 42 acres (where the Esk and Liddel join) to Jedburgh Abbey, along with free fishing from the ditch of Liddel to the church of Liddel. His wife was Godehild and he had a son, Turgis, who is the last known member of the family.

Rosenberg (rō-zen-berg) n. one time pseudonym of Adam Grant. Sometimes also ‘M. Rosenberg’, it was used by him in for example, 1898 and 1900, for attribution as composer for ‘Hawick’ and ‘I Like Auld Hawick the Best’. Presumably Grant believed that a Germanic name added musical gravitas. The name continued to appear up until about WWI, even although Grant was using his own name on other publications from the early years of the 20th century. It is probably a coincidence that Mrs. Roseburgh, who lived near Galashiels, signed her poetry ‘M. Roseburgh’ in the mid-to-late 19th century (or else the name is a coincidence).

Rosenberger (rō-zen-bur-gur) n. Frederica (20th C.) from Budapest in Hungary, she left because of Nazi persecution. She became manageress of the Marcus factory in Hawick. Robert son of Mrs. Frederica, the Hungarian manageress at Marcus’s dress-making factory. He was taught at the High School and Edinburgh University, becoming a Professor of Bacteriology.

the Rose o Teviotdale (thu-rōz-ō-teev-yi'-dāl) n. local temperance society of the late 19th century, one of the lodges of the Good Templar movement.

Rosevale Cottages (rōz-vāl-ko’-ee-jeez) n. group of houses off Mansfield Road, on one side of Rosevale Street, built in 1882, and named in 1883.

Rosevale Street (rōz-vāl-stree’) n. short street between Mansfield Road and Mansfield Square, named in 1888, either for thickets of wild roses that grew there or just invented. The housing here was built by Blenkhorn, Richardson & Co. to provide convenient housing for workers at Eastfield Mills.

Rosfritha (rōz-frī-tha) n. one of two women worshippers (the other being Szegfa) at the Chapel of St. Cuthbert (identified with a site near Cogsmill) mentioned by a contemporary historian as coming from ‘Hawich’. This was written around the 1170s, and referred to an earlier time, possibly much earlier. Hence the pair are (assuming they existed) the first named residents of Hawick. The story was that they went to the old chapel on the feast day of the saint, to join others in celebration, after the previous fast day. However, in the evening their candle went out, and after some remonstration, they prayed to Cuthbert, at which a new lighted candle appeared. Sir James Murray called his 4th daughter ‘Rosfrith’, inspired by this story (also transcribed as ‘Rosfrith’).

Rosit (ro-zi’) n., arch. resin, especially the material rubbed on the bow of a fiddle, rosit – ‘A name wi’ a scratch o’ rosit in’t, the skirl o’ tormentit gut ...’ [DH].

Rosity (ro-zi’-ee) adj., arch. of the nature of resin or ‘rosit’ – ‘...the space within and around these was built up with whins and rositty faggoits’ [JAHM].

Rosity-fingers (ro-zi’-ee-fing-urz) n., arch. name applied to someone who is light-fingered or sticky-fingered.

Ross (ros) n. Rev. Alexander L. (19th/20th C.) assistant minister of St. Cuthbert’s 1904–09. He was on the committee that formed Hawick’s first Scout troop in 1909. His time as Curate in Hawick ended when he became Rector at Rosyth. Rev. Donald G. (d.c.1940) assistant minister at St. George’s Kirk from 1911, taking over as senior minister on the death of Rev. Johnman in 1923, and remaining until 1935. He came to Hawick from Pollok Street Church in Glasgow. Although he was formerly the assistant, due to the declining health of the senior minister, he in fact took on most of the ministerial duties. He ‘kirked’ the Cornet in 1912 and 1914, and oversaw the construction of the new church 1913–16. He was the first minister of the church to reside at the new Manse at Broomieknowe. He was apparently a great elocutionist and gave very powerful sermons. He celebrated his silver wedding anniversary in 1925, but his wife (Williamina Martin) died in 1934. Due to declining health he resigned in late 1935 and retired to Edinburgh. There is a memorial window to him in the church and another to his wife. Sgt. James (18th/19th C.) professional soldier with the Royal North British Fusiliers. He was brought to Hawick in 1798 to work with the new Hawick Military Association of volunteers. James (19th C.) precentor at Hawick Free Kirk, coming from Free St. David’s in Edinburgh in 1856 and serving until 1879. Rev. John W. (19th/20th C.) from New Zealand, he was minister of Denholm Kirk from the time of the re-union (1929, when it became part of the Church of Scotland) until 1953. Margaret ‘callit Nuris’ (17th C.) local woman who was attacked by Bailie James Burn in April 1641, having her forehead cut in the process. Burn accused her of being a witch, for being responsible for the death of a child and for bewitching his wife. He was fined and put in the stocks, which must have been unheard of for a sitting Bailie. Her nickname was presumably ‘Nurse’.

the Rotary Club (thu-ro’-u-ree-klub) n. international social and charitable organisation of businessmen and professionals, began in the U.S.A. in 1905, typically restricted to men in their 40s or above. Hawick is in District 1020, and the local club regularly meets in the Buccleuch Hotel founded??.

Rotten Moss (ro’-in-mos) n. area to the west of Whitfield and east of Pisgah Hill.

Rottenraw (ro’-in-raw) n. former name for land near Hundalee, once a home of the Rutherfords. In 1638 it was given by John Rutherford of Rottenrow to Robert Scott (‘in Burnfutt near Tiviot’) who was marrying his daughter Anne (spelled ‘Rattinraw’ etc.).

Rotten Sike (ro’-in-sik) n. stream in southern Liddesdale, rising near the boundary with Dumfriesshire and running north-east past the farm of Whisgills to join Tinnis Burn.

Rotten Sike (ro’-in-sik) n. small stream in Liddesdale, rising on Stell Knowe and joining the Tweedden Burn north of Tweedhead farm.

Rouchesters (row-ch-ches-turz) n. former name for lands in Jedforest. The precise location is unknown, but it was listed between Strange and Southdean Mill in a rental roll of 1541. The tenants was Patrick Oliver and the lands were valued at 12s 6d (it is ‘Rouchchesteris’ in 1541).
Rough Gill (row-(ch)-gil) n. small stream in western Liddesdale, rising on Coons Fell and running roughly south-eastwards to eventually join the Black Burn (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Rough Grain (ruf-, rowch-grän) n. small stream in upper Liddesdale, rising on Mid Hill and flowing into Cliffhope Burn. It is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and on the large scale 1899 Ordnance Survey map.

Rough Grain (ruf-, rowch-grän) n. small stream in the headwaters of the Hermitage Water. It rises on Hartsgarth Fell and runs roughly to the north-west to join Chapel Grain and then the Twislehope Burn (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

rough-heid (ruf-, rowch-heed) n., arch. a turf or divot, especially a piece of peat cut from the surface and with the grass still attached – These are to give notice to all Burgesses within the Burgh of Hawick that they are discharged from casting dry land soads of any part of the Common or roughheads (except roughheads in the Mosses), and from casting turfs or diviots on the Common …' [BR1816], ‘An’ divots an’ roughheads gotten where the modern’s now ca’ Teviot Square’ [WNK].

Roughheugh (ruf-hew, rowch-hewch) n. former name referring to the area in Wilton between Howlands and Easter Howlands, and from Ladylaw to Lockieshedge, lying ‘contiguous to the Kirk road from Langlands to Wilton’, and bounded on the south by Wilton dam. So it extended roughly from Wilton Path to Old Wilton Churchyard, on both sides of Princes Street. The name was also used for the corn mill there, and the later hosiery mill. The name dates at least to the mid-17th century and is preserved in a house on Greensidehall Road. In 1650 there are 14 ‘communitants’ recorded on a map of local parishes, when it is ‘roch-heuche’. The 1767 description of the boundaries of the Common talks about the Common Haugh lying ‘between Dangerfield and the rough heugh land as described by hillocks’. The lands were part of the estate of Langlands of that Ilk, until sold off in parts around 1780: the Waull Mill to John and William Thomline; the Corn Mill to Robert Scott; and other parts to James Knox, Hector Blakie, Robert Oliver, James Hart, Adam and George Easton, Walter Scott and William Robertson. In 1788 (and repeated in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811) the lands are listed as consisting of the Waull Mill and Corn Mill and 7 other parts, owned by John Thomline (plus William by 1811), Robert Scott, James Knox, Hector Blakie, Robert Oliver, James Hart, Adam and George Easton, Walter Scott and William Roughheugh Dam

Robertson; together they were valued at around £140. The Laird of Langlands held some enclosures in the area, which were sold off to Rev. John Thomson in the mid-19th century. By the early 20th century the name was no longer in use (the origin is presumably from the roughness of the land around the steep bank).

Roughheugh Dam (ruf-hewch-dawn) n. another name for Wultan Dam.

Roughheugh Haugh (ruf-hew-hawf, rowch-hewch-haw/h) n. former name for part of the Under Haugh – ‘There’s teuch sauchs growin’ i’ the Reuch Heuch Hauch’ [JAHM] (this also inspired the Hugh MacDiarmid poem ‘The Sauchs in the Reuch Heuch Hauch’).

Roughheugh Mill (ruf-hew-nil, rowch-hewch-nil) n. former corn mill, near the south end of Commercial Road. It is shown in a crude sketch of 1810, with the miller’s cottage alongside (and a water wheel, with the adjacent waulk mill also having a water wheel). It is labelled ‘Rough Heugh Mill’ on Wood’s 1824 map. The building that held the water wheel was once on the Burgh boundary with Wilton; in the early 1700s the flag used to be unfurled and given 3 cheers there after the visit to the Coble Pool on Common Riding Friday. William Cavers was miller there in 1694, with Simon Wright the under-miller, and Thomas Rutherford also listed there. Alexander Scott (probably descended from the Scotts of Bonchester) was tenant in the mid-18th century and then his son Robert Scott was tenants after him. Robert is recorded there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1811 it was valued at £26 9s. It was still an active mill in the 1820s, when Pigot’s directory lists the millers as Walter Chisholm and David Fiddes. Thomas Goodfellow and David Fiddes were millers there in 1837 and 1841, with John Fiddes there in 1851. Soon after it (or a building on an adjacent site) became a waulk mill, carried on by John Wilson after William Wilson & Sons was dissolved in 1851. Langlands Mill was constructed on the site in about 1860. John Wilson was listed as owner of the land there in about 1874 (also spelled ‘Rouch-heuch’, etc.; it is ‘Roughheughmiln’ in 1797 and incorrectly written ‘Roughhead mill’ in 1837).

Roughheugh Peth (ruf-hew-peth) n. Roughheugh Path, an old name for Wilton Path or the Peth. It is so marked on Wood’s 1824 map.

Rough-hope (ruf-hop, rowch-up) n. former farm in the upper Borthwick valley, lying on the Rough-hope Burn, to the south of Eildrig. James Lunn and family were there in 1796, when it is ‘Roughshope’.

Rough-hope Burn (ruf-hop-burn) n. stream that rises on Philhope Loch, running roughly north-west to join the Eildrig Burn, and hence the Borthwick Water. There are some old field boundaries about half-way up the stream. The stream fed the reservoir, later known as Philhope Loch, which was used to boost the level of the Borthwick Water and the Teviot.

Rough-hope Rig (rowch-up-ridge) n. ridge just to the west of the B6357, shortly before coming to the Note α’ the Gate pass. There is a picnic spot near there. On the ridge is a linear earthwork, about 400 m long, running from the Wigg burn north-east to the main road.

Roughlaw Sike (rowch-law-sik) n. small stream in Hobkirk Parish. It is mentioned in a charter of 1606, defining the west side of the lands of Hobsburn and Weens. It is unclear where this is exactly, but perhaps the small tributary of the Hallrule Burn that runs past Heathfield cottage (it is ‘Rowchelaweskye’ in 1606).

Roughlee (ruf-lee, rowch-lee) n. farm in the upper Jed valley, between False and Edgerston. It was formerly split into Easter and Wester Roughlee. Simon Young from there had remission for plundering neighbouring farms in 1493 and John Young for similar crimes in 1494/5. The lands of ‘Wester Roughleis’ were valued at 20 shillings in 1538, with ‘Mydrouchleis’ at 30 shillings and ‘Rowchlenwke’ at 40 shillings. The 20 shilling land of ‘Rouchleis vocatarum Westir Rouchleis’ is recorded in 1539, as well as the 30 shilling land of Midroughlee and the 40 shilling land of Roughlee. William Douglas was allowed the ‘ferries’ from there for 1538 and in 1539 claimed £10 pertaining to his inheritance. ‘Lyonell Ollyver’ is recorded there in 1544. Michael and John Young was there in 1571/2. David Laidlaw was there in 1588. Robert Douglas of Brieryards was infested in the lands in 1588 and was served heir to his father John in 1606. The cottage there was once part of False farm. This is probably the ‘Ruchlie’ recorded in 1669 when the tenants were Robert and John Storie and Adam Bell. Robert Laidlaw and Andrew Oliver were tenants there in 1694. The ancient settlement on the eastern slope of the hill to the east of the current farmstead may be the former Easter Roughlee; it consists of a roughly oval enclosure, with 2 possible hut sites inside, but has been largely destroyed by forestry plantation. A little to the west is Roughlee Strip, where there are 2 enclosures visible in aerial photographs. To the north there was a plantation bank, now covered with forest. Further south, on a shelf overlooking the Jed Water, are the remains of another farmstead – ‘And her eye was fixt on the Klesly brae ’Till the red sun glinted fair; – On the Roughlee height, where now in sight, A knight did onward bear’ [JTe], (also written ‘Roughleia’, it is ‘rouchlie’ in 1493, ‘rouchlee’ in 1494/5, ‘Rouchleys’ in 1538, ‘Roughleighis’ in 1544, ‘Rowchleis’ in 1571/2 and ‘Roughlie’ in 1694; ‘Eister Rowchlie et Wester Rouchlie’ are recorded in 1606; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Rucchly’).

Roughleeneuk (rowch-lee-newk) n. former farm in the upper Jed valley, to the east of Roughlee. It was valued at 40 shillings in the Exchequer Rolls of 1538 and 1539. It was burned by an English raiding party in 1544. It was among lands inherited by Robert Douglas of Brierryards from his father John in 1606. Ninian, John and Lyle Young were tenants of ‘Rouchneuck’ in 1669 and Andrew Young was tenant in 1694. Andrew Ker ‘of Roughlialook’ was recorded as deceased in 1731. George Davidson was farmer there in at least 1790–91. James Davidson (‘Dandie Dinsmont’) lived there in the late 1700s and William Scott was farmer there in at least 1794–97. The farmstead was still marked on maps in 1863, and is still visible in aerial photographs, with a plantation bank 150 m to the south (it is ‘Rowchlenwke’ in 1538, ‘Rowchenewke’ in 1539, ‘Rowle Newke’ in 1544, ‘Rowchlienwik’ in 1606, ‘Rouchlinouck’ and ‘ruchlinuck’ in 1694 and ‘Roughlaw’ in 1694; it was burned by the Earl of Hertford, Sir Ralph Evers and others. In the Autumn of 1544 Edinburgh was burnt and made their moan, O’er present times that look’d so ill’ [ES] (the name probably comes from the Old English ‘ruh leah’, meaning ‘uncultivated clearing’; it appears as ‘Routhlie’ in 1541, ‘Ruchlie’ in 1622, ‘Ruchlie’ in 1632, ‘Roughlaw’ in 1694 and ‘Rouglee’ in 1797; it is ‘Ruchcly’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, ‘Roughlee’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and ‘Roughly’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Roughley Burn (ruf-lee-burn) n. major stream in upper Liddesdale, rising in the hills to the east of Whitrope and running south, fed by many smaller ‘sikes’ and ‘gills’ to join the Hermitage Water at Shaws.

Roughley Sike (ruf-lee-sik) n. small stream that rises on the western slopes of Arton and fell and runs to the west to join Roughley Burn.

rough runch (rowch-runch) n., arch. wild radish, Raphanus raphanistrum.

Roughside Hill (ruf-sid-hil) n. hill just to the south-west of Synton Mossend. It reaches to more than 270 m.

Rough Slack (rowch-slawk) n. small stream in Liddesdale, rising on Birny Fell and running south to join Ralton Burn.

the Rough Woon (thon-ruf-woo-in) n. sobriquet for the rampage of English armies in 1544 and 1545 throughout the Scottish Border country. This was an attempt to force the Scots to allow the wedding of King Henry VIII’s young son Edward to the infant Mary Queen of Scots. Among other places, the abbeys of Dryburgh, Jedburgh and Melrose were left in ruins, and in Hawick Drumlanrig’s Tower was about all that survived the conflagration. The attacks were led by the Earl of Hertford, Sir Ralph Evers and others. In the Autumn of 1544 Edinburgh was burnt and looted, along with 192 towers and villages in the Borders, with around 400 Borderers being killed. The devastation was even worse in 1545, when Teviotdale was laid waste, including Cavers, Minto, Denholm, Hassendeann and Brieryyards among other villages.
rouk (rowk) n., arch., poet. mist, fog, smog, drizzle, vapours – ‘He gars the rouks ascen’ frae the en’s o the yirth …’ [HSR], ‘Fire an’ hail; swan an’ rouk; stormic wund fu’llin’ his wurd’ [HSR], ‘… where yin canna sei bye yin’s neb for skomfeeshin rowsk an drowes’ [ECS], ‘Whan the smuky rowk fyles a’thing’ [GW], ‘… to re-pay us for a’ the derk and weet, the glaur and rouk, o wunter’ [DH], ‘… Herd them cannily, stot and stirk, Frae Tweedside braes in the rowk and mirk’ [WL] (also written ‘rowk’).

rouky (row-kee) adj., poet. misty, drizzly, damp, foggy, muggy – ‘The inn-man, easin the sneck, Peered into the rouky nicht’ [WL] (also spelled ‘rowky’).

rountree (rown-tree) n., poet. rowan, the mountain ash – ‘A rountree bus’ oot o’er the tap o’t …’ [JBS] (cf. raun-trei).

roup (rowp, roop) n., arch. an auction – ‘his goods an effects wull be selt be public roup’, ‘…and after ye roup, the money then gotten should be given in’ [PR1722], ‘Received roup of the seats in the kirk for 1755 … 0 10 6’ [BR1755], ‘…While high-bred dame – bereft o’ hope – Is doomed to stand a public roup – The highest bidder gets her’ [JR], ‘A sale o’ furniter, a roup O’ spuds at Black’s Hotel. I’ll tell ye a’ aboot it if Somebody brings my bell’ [WP], v. to sell by auction. Up until the early 19th century ‘Roup’s’ in Hawick were announced after Sunday services at the Wester kirkstyle by the town bellman, standing on the ‘loupin-on stane’. By the mid-19th century this practice had been replaced by a printed notice attached to the church door – ‘… that anie person who hath received charitie out of ye Box when they die, their household plenishing should be roup’d …’ [PR1722], v., arch. to cry hoarsely (from Old Norse; also spelled ‘rowp’).

roupit (row-pee’, -pi’) pp., arch. auctioned – ‘An’ when that Cofer-Ha’ was roupit, The devil’s in’t! our birkie bought it!!!’ [RDW].

Routin Burn (row’-in-burn) n. Routing Burn, stream that rises on Roan Fell on the border between Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire, and flows into Hartsgarth Burn. Along the stream lie 2 shepherd’s bothies, 2 sheep-folds, 6 shieling huts, a pen and a ‘knocking stone’.

Routledge (row’, row’, roo’-lij) n. Adam (16th C.) recorded in the 1580s as ‘Jamie’s Adam Routledge’. He was one of a group of Englishmen complains of by Thomas Armstrong of Tinnsburn for stealing livestock from him. He could be the ‘Addame Routledge of the Netecughe’ listed among Routledges of the English Border in 1583.

Archibald (15th/16th C.) recorded along with John in 1473 as a deputy of the Constable of Bewcastle. How he was related to the Hawick members of the family is not known, but these appear to be the first recorded members of the family near Bewcastle (possibly the eponymous home). Around 1478 they were let the lands and castle of Bewcastle by Richard, Duke of Gloucester, with instructions that they maintain the Border there. During a land dispute of 1538 an old witness in Bewcastle stated that ‘…60 years bipast when Liddisdale men came into England and were sworn to King Richard at Carlisle’ that ‘let all the lands of Bewcastle to Cuthb and John Routlege, Robt Elwald, and Gerard Nyxon, and before that’ ‘…as well the said castle as all the lands belonging to the same of long time lay waste’. David (15th/16th C.) from Liddesdale. He was witness to Adam Hepburn being served as heir to his father Patrick, Earl of Bothwell in 1508. He is recorded as ‘Davie Routlech, sergeante’, suggesting he was a local official of the area. Possibly the same David was also witness to William Douglas of Drumlanrig selling Broadlee in 1512/3. He may be the same man as the Bailie for Douglas of Cavers. David (15th/16th C.) bailiff and later factor for James Douglas of Cavers. Possibly the same David ‘Rucclarch’ or ‘Rutlethe’ held 8 particates of land in Hawick according to the 1537 Charter; these were on the south side of the public street, and represent one of the largest amounts of any single owner. He may be the David ‘Routlesche’ who in 1512 he was directed to be one of James Douglas of Cavers Bailies to give sasine of Denholm to William Cranston. He may be the same David who was listed on a pardon by James V in 1526, along with a great many Scots, Kerrs, Pringles, Turnbuls and Elliots, as well as John, Archibald and Simon ‘Routlage’. Probably the same David was witness to a sasine for Douglas of Cavers in 1550 (for the lands of Colifort). Isobel (16th C.) widow on the English side, recorded in 1581. Her house was apparently raided by 30 Elliots, who stole 4 oxen, 6 cows, her only horse and all her possessions. James (15th/16th C.) son of Simon. He failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice-aiire held in Jedburgh in 1493; John, Simon (presumably his father) and Simon son of Simon (hence his brother), were also called and failed to appear. Probably the same James was also called in the Justice-aiire held in 1494/5. James (16th C.) holder of half of the lands of Crook. In an instrument of resignation of 1529/30 (not a century earlier as apparently written), William ‘Routlech’, son of the deceased John resigned all rights to these lands, the ‘kyndness’ of which was held of this James. He was surely related to John and William, as well as to other nearly contemporary local Routledges. He may be the ‘Jacobi Routlich’ who is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of Scotland for 1501, along with Matthew, John and Simon, as well as many Rutherfords, who had their fines compounded. He could be the James (‘on trows’) who, along with John (in the same place), served as surety for Simon in the Trows in 1502, and was fined for his non-appearance. James of Todhills (16th C.) from Cumbria. In 1540 the Laird of Ferniehirst and his tenants complained about a raid he led into Rulewater, where ‘Thome Oliver’ and ‘Will Kowman’ were slain at Abbotrule. John (15th C.) recorded in 1471, along with David Armstrong and Archibald Armstrong, when they gave pledges for Walter to appear at court in Selkirk. He was probably related to Walter in some way. John (15th C.) recorded in 1473, along with Cuthbert as deputies to the Constable of Bewcastle. John (15th C.) recorded at the Justice-aiire held in Jedburgh in 1493. He was called by the Sheriff, William of Douglas, but failed to appear. At the same time Simon, James son of Simon and Simon son of Simon were also called. He could be the John ‘in trows’ who, along with James (in the same place) , served as surety for Simon in the Trows in 1502, and was fined for his non-appearance; he seems to be distinct from John, son of Simon in the Trows, who is recorded separately in 1502 (and may have been his nephew or similar). John (15th C.) recorded among many men from Liddesdale who did not appear at the Justice-aiire in 1494/5. The Lord of Liddesdale and Captain of Hermitage were fined as a result. John ‘Black John’ (15th/16th C.) Englishman who along with John Dalgleish and others was brought with his accomplices to burn Branxholme some time prior to 1510. In that year Dalgleish was convicted of this and other crimes and sentenced to hanging if he could not find sureties. He is recorded as ‘Black John Roucleshe’ (which in Pitcairn’s ‘Criminal Trials’ is suggested to be ‘Roughcliffe, or Rowcelf’, but seems clearly to be a transcription error for ‘Routlesche’) and was a ‘traitor of Levin’. He was probably related to the Simon and Matthew who burned the Scott’s seat at Buccleuch about 20 years earlier. John (d.lbf. 1530) ‘kyndlie’ tenant of half of the land of Crook in Cavers Parish. He may have been son of Simon in the Trows. He was succeeded in this tenancy by his son William, who resigned his rights to his superior (Douglas of Cavers) in 1529/30. They had the ‘kyndness from James, who must surely have been a relative; his surname is recorded as ‘Routlech’. Probably the same John ‘rouclisch’ failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice-aiire in Jedburgh in 1493; Simon, James son of Simon and Simon son of Simon, were also called and failed to appear, and were surely related. Probably the same John is recorded as son of Simon (who was ‘in le trowis’) in 1494/5 when he failed to appear again, with Douglas of Cavers being fined; his father Simon, as well as James and Simon (perhaps his brothers) were also called at the same Justice-aiire. He may be the ‘Johannis Rutlich’ who is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of Scotland in 1501, along with Matthew, John and Simon, as well as many Rutherfords, who had their fines compounded. In 1502 he is recorded as son of Simon in the Trows ‘nunc in le cruk’ (i.e. now in the Crook) when he was surety for himself at the Justice-aiire held in Jedburgh, and was fined for not appearing. John (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers who had remission in 1526 for supporting the Homes in an attack on the Earl of Arran. Archibald is listed after him and so probably related. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (16th C.) son of Mungo, an Englishman. He was entered as a prisoner to Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1562, by Archibald Elliot of Falnash and his son. John (16th C.) listed in 1585 as ‘Jjonn Rowclege’ among a list of men under their superior Lord Maxwell who had respite for all their crimes. He is listed along with Armstrongs from around Eskdale. John (16th/17th C.) servant to John Elliot of Copshaw, recorded in 1605. John (b.c.1780) born in England, he was a grocer and spirit merchant of the High Street recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He was living at about No. 50 with his wife Margaret in 1841. His widow Margaret was still living there in 1851. He may be the same John who was one of the 6 elders of Hawick Parish who left, along with Rev. Wallace, in 1843 to form Hawick Free Kirk. His wife was Peggy, daughter of stockmaker William Beck; she secondly married M. Thompson. They had no children.

John (19th C.) farmer at Greenholm in Liddesdale in 1868. Mals (17th C.) resident of Dryden in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. It is unclear if her first name was short for something more familiar. Margaret (b.1786/7) married John, who was a grocer and spirit merchant. By 1851 she was a widow living on the High Street. She was listed as a grocer in Slater’s 1852 directory. Martin (16th C.) Procurator of the Scottish Nation in the University of Orleans from 1537. He described himself as being of the Clan Scott and described himself as being of the Clan Scott and Simon (15th C.) Burgess of Hawick who was listed among the witnesses to the 1432 sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to William Douglas; he is there recorded as ‘Simone Routleg’. In a charter of 1433 he is referred to as ‘Simon of Routluge burgess of Hawik’ when William Douglas of Drumlanrig and Hawick feued the lands of ‘Byrkwode called the oxgang’ (near the present day Duke’s Wood) and the lands of Burnflat to him. He is also mentioned in a deed of 1447 as a Burgess, when he conveyed part of the land of the Brauxholme estate to Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. The land was known as ‘Cusingland’ and was the dowry of his wife Margaret (or ‘Mergrete’) Cousin (or ‘Cusyne’). In 1447 he also feued Birkwood (incorrectly transcribed in one record as ‘Birdwood’) to Sir Walter, and is again referred to as a Burgess of Hawick, and as a Bailie in the 1448 sasine. In 1453 he was one of the 2 Bailies who witnessed the first known sasine for a ‘tenement’ in Hawick. In 1455 he is one of the Burgessesses of Hawick listed on the notarised document attesting that John of St. Michael had inherited his father’s lands of Whitchester; he is there referred to as ‘burgensis ac sergendus’ of the Barony of Hawick, this second title presumably equivalent to Bailie or Baron’s Bailie. He is mentioned again in 1456, this probably referring to him witnessing an earlier retour for Whitchesters; there he is ‘Symon de Routluge de Hawik’. He is one of the earliest recorded people with this surname, and also the earliest known Burgess of Hawick. He may be closely related to the Simon Simon (15th C.) witness to the sasine giving the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire to Archibald Douglas in 1464/5. He is recorded as ‘Simone de Routlagh’ and one of the ‘scutiferis’ (i.e. ‘esquires’). Since the sasine was made at Cavers, he was surely a nearby landowner, but it is unclear whether he is the same as the earlier Burgess and Bailie of Hawick or the later Simon from Trows. It may be the same man who was ‘Simone Routelych’ when he witnessed the sasine for the lands of Kirkton.

Mains and Flex in 1464/5. Simon (15th C.) possibly related to the earlier Simon. He is recorded in 1484 on the panel of inquest for James Douglas as heir to his father Sir William of Drumlanrig in the Barony of Hawick. He may also be the ‘Symonc Rouclugh’ recorded in 1492/3 when he witnessed the confirmation of Rutherford and Wells to James Rutherford. He is probably the Simon ‘rouclisch’ who William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, was called to enter at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh in 1493, and not appearing, Douglas was fined (similarly John, James son of Simon, and Simon son of Simon, were all failed to be entered, and were surely closely related to him, Simon and James probably being his sons). He may be the same Simon ‘in the trowis’ who was subject was charged with plundering Buc- cleuch in 1494 along with his son Matthew (with their sureties the Douglases). He is recorded as ‘Symonis rouclisch in le trowis’ at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh in 1494/5 when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance; his sons John and Simon also failed to appear at the same Justice- aire, as well as James (probably also his son). Simon (15th C.) recorded as ‘Symon routlage i the trowis’ (and probably not ‘prowis’ as stated by William Fraser) in 1494 when Walter Scott, grandson of Sir David of Buccleuch, obtained a decree from the Lords of Council against him for the theft and plunder (‘spuilzeit’) of the manor and farm of Buccleuch. His son Matthew is also mentioned. Presumably this happened before David Scott died 2 or 3 years earlier. They stole 5 horses, 40 cows, 40 sheep, 2 oxen, large quantities of food etc., including 80 stones of cheese and butter, and ruined the manor, leaving ‘nocht on bed or baulks’. Given the similarity of the names (Simon and Matthew), it seems likely this family was closely related to that of the Hawick Burgesses, possibly the same. Their residence appears to have been the Trows (and not ‘Prows’, known to be connected with the Bewcastle branch of the family), since Douglas of Hornshole acted as surety for the 1494 decree. He may be the ‘Symonis Routlich’ who is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of Scotland in 1501, along with Matthew, James and Simon and many Ruther- fords, who had their fines compounded. His son Matthew is recorded in 1494/5 and 1502. His son John, ‘now in le cruk’ (although it is unclear whether this refers to the father or the son) is recorded in 1502, when he was fined for failing to appear in court. Additionally, he is ‘in le trows’ in 1502 when John and James in Trows served as surety for him at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh and were fined for his non-appearance. It seems likely that Simon in Trows and Simon in Crook were the same person. Simon (15th/16th C.) son of Simon. He failed to appear when called by William Douglas, Sheriff of Roxburghshire, at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh in 1493; John, Simon (presumably his father) and James son of Simon (his brother), were also called and failed to appear. In 1494/5 he failed to appear again (as well as his father Simon and James and John, who were probably his brothers). Simon (16th C.) tenant in Crook in 1592. He is recorded as a witness to the instrument of sasine in which Martin Douglas inherited Crook from his father. He was surely related to John, who was associated with Crook about 60 years earlier, and probably also a descendant of Simon, tenant in the Trows. It is possible he is the same man as Simon in the Trows. Thomas (16th C.) entered as a prisoner in 1561/2 according to a bond between William Elliot of Larriston and John Kerr of Ferniehirst, possibly signed at Hawick. Archibald Elliot of Falnash was involved in the same or a separate bond for entering him about the same time. A few months later Elliot of Falnash in another bond entered John, ‘son to Mungo Routlache, English- man’ as a prisoner, so this seems likely to have been a relative. The same man (or a son perhaps) could have been recorded in 1581; in a raid by the Elliots of Liddesdale, a Thomas of ‘Todholes’ (i.e. Todhills in Cumbria) was taken prisoner and his horses and oxen stolen. This same Thomas of Todhills complained in 1582 of having livestock and goods stolen by ‘Kimont Jock, Eckie of Strubholm and Jock Armstrong of Callhull’. The same Thomas of Todhills was injured in another raid by the Armstrongs of Mangerton, White- haugh etc., in 1583; several other Routledges were targeted, including George of ‘Greinhilesh’ and Anthony of ‘Nutticleugh’, with Alan being killed and William, John and another Thomas being injured ‘in peril of death whereof one hath his legge cut of’. Walter (15th ) recorded in 1471 when John, as well as David Armstrong and Ar- chibald Armstrong gave pledges that he would appear at court in Selkirk. Walter (17th C.) recorded in Hawick in the 1640s and 50s. He may have been related to the contemporary Robert, and possibly was a descendant of the earlier loc- al Routledges. He married Isobel Ruecastle. Their children included 2 Michaels, Janet, Isobel and Margaret (there are many older spellings, including ‘Rootledge’, ‘Roucligis’, ‘Rouclesche’, the Routledges

The Routledges (thu-rowt-li-jeezj) n. prominent family in the Debatable land, near Bewcastle, which spread to much of the Borders. The only remnant of the early seats of the family is the name of the Routledge Burn, a couple of miles east of Kershopefoot. Nearby is the hamlet of Routledgeburn, Routledge Burn Bridge and Routledge Rigg. The earliest known member of the family is Simon de Routledge, a Burgess and Bailie of Hawick, recorded in several documents of the 1440s and 1450s. Simon and his son Matthew lived at the Trows, and were charged in 1494 with plundering the manor and lands of Buccleuch. There is a record of a payment made from the Treasurer of Scotland to ‘men of Levin callit Rowlieche’ in 1491. Another early member of the family is John ‘Routlech’, who was already deceased in 1529/30 when his son William resigned his ‘kyndlie’ tenancy of half of the lands of Crook in Cavers Parish, which they held of James (surely another relative). There were other people with this surname, probably closely related to the earlier Simon, holding prominent positions in Hawick over the next century. David held 8 ‘particates’ of land in Hawick’s 1537 Charter, probably the largest of any single landowner).

Sir Christopher Dacre, with a band of 500 men, set upon them in 1528, and although he failed to dislodge them from the lands of Tarras, the family appear to have dispersed afterwards. There were later Routledges in Hawick, e.g. the families of Robert and Walter in the 1640s and 50s, but whether directly related to the earlier Burgesses is unknown.

Rovin (rō-vin) n., arch. a roving, a set of lightly twisted fibres in the process of being spun, also called a ‘slub’ or ‘slubbing’ – ‘The rovin was pieced together by boys on a leather rubber at the back of the Billies . . . ’ [JGW].

Rowan (row-in) n. James ‘Jim’ (1943–2008). He grew up in Slitrig Crescent, served an apprenticeship at Woodcock’s, and served with the 4th Royal Tank Regiment. He ran the Hawick Motorcycle Centre, worked as an engineer with Pringle’s and later opened The Photo Shop on the High Street. He often contributed letters to the local press. He married Irene Gentleman. He moved to the Leicester area to be near his son Mark and died there.

Rowanhill (row-in-hil) n. former lands in the upper Teviotdale, listed as part of the extensive Lairdship of Ringwoodfield in 1621 and in 1693. It seems likely this is a scribe’s or transcriber’s error for Rowanhill. However, it is not impossible that it could be associated with Rowantree hill, although it is probably on the wrong side of the Teviot valley or Rowantree Knowe on the right side (it is ‘Rowandhill’ in 1693).

Rowantreihill (row-in-tri-hil) n. Rowantreehill, probable name for a farm in Jedforest. In 1538 and 1539 it was described as 2 steadings and valued at 44 shillings. In 1541 John, Marion and Adam were tenants of part of the lands paying 22s, John and Robert Oliver were tenants in another part paying 11s and Robert ‘the Sheriff’ Oliver was tenants in the last part paying 11s (it is ‘Rowntreihill’ in 1538 and 1539 and ‘Rownteihill’ and ‘Rontrehill’ in 1541).

row up (row-up) v. to roll up, wrap, envelop – ‘The bairn’ll tak nae ill; ee hev um weel rowd up’ [ECS] (cf. row).

Roxburgh (roks-bu-ru) n. small village that is all that remains of an important historic site. It was created a Royal Burgh in the early 12th century, with its castle used as a royal residence, and was one of the four Royal Burghs in the 13th century, being then probably the fourth most populous town in Scotland. It was a walled town with 3 churches, schools and at one time the Royal Mint. James II was famously killed here in 1460, and after the Scots captured it they had it demolished. The village went into decline after that, but there was still a Franciscan convent there in the early 1500s. The area was devastated by Hertford’s men in 1545. The village itself is built on the site of the overflow of the old town, and was thatched until the 1950s. The graveyard contains the burial vault of the Kers of Chatto. A nearby railway viaduct was constructed from 1847, but 9 men lost their lives when part of it collapsed in 1849. A short history was written by Brian Wain in 1983 – ‘For soon, where scenes of seeter beauty smile Around the mounds of Roxburgh’s ruin’d pile, No more the mistress of each lovely field, Her name, her honours Teviot soon must yield’ [JL], ‘Where you slip sullenly under the shadows Skirting the feet of old Roxburgh’s tower: Where you take, lowver-like, close to your bosom, Kale, and the music of coppice and bower’ [WL] (the origin of the name is probably Old English ‘Hroc burh’, meaning ‘the fortified dwelling belonging to Hroc’; the name is recorded from the early 12th century, in the earliest records being ‘Rokesburgh’ and variants; it occurs on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Rosburgh’; an example of ‘Hroc’ occurs in the Domesday book for Suffolk and in compound form in other parts of England).

Roxburgh (roks-bu-ru) n. John (d.1196) Canon of Glasgow, who witnessed several charters from the 1160s. It is possible he was the Master John associated with either Lessuden or Longnewton. He was appointed Treasurer of Glasgow Diocese in 1195/6, but only held the appointment for a few months before dying at Melrose Abbey. William (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Ruecastle, recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls for 1794 and 1797. He was recorded as owner of 8 farm horses and 1 saddle horse in 1797. William (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Stitchelhill.
Roxburgh Castle

He is listed as male head of household there 1835–41. He emigrated to America in 1842.

Roxburgh Castle (roks-bu-ru-kaw-sul) n. also called Marchmount, built above the confluence of the Teviot and the Tweed. It passed back and fourth between Scotland and England several times, with the English holding it about as often as the Scots. Alexander II was married in the Castle in 1239. A large number of Scottish charters and other records were removed there on the orders of Edward I in 1292, before subsequently disappearing forever. Robert the Bruce’s sister Mary was hung there in a cage from 1306–10 on orders of Edward I. Sir James Douglas recaptured it in 1313, but the English held it from 1334 until 1460. A bridge connecting the area with Kelso was destroyed in 1398 and its successor destroyed by Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1411. During the 1460 siege James II died when one of his cannons exploded; a yew tree in the grounds of Floors Castle marks the spot. Queen Mary of Gueldres dismantled it, but it was rebuilt by the English in 1547. When the Scots regained it for the last time they razed it themselves, around 1550 – ‘Roxburgh! how fallen, since first in Gothic pride Thy frowning battlements the war defied, Call’d the bold chief to grace thy blazon’d halls, And bade the rivers gird thy solid walls!’ [JL].

Roxburghe Drive (roks-bu-ru-driv) n. one of the bigger roads through Stitches, being he continuation of Hazelwood Road. It was built in 1976 and named after the 9th Duke of Roxburgh, George Victor Robert John Innes-Ker, who was Convenor of Roxburgh District Council (often erroneously written ‘Roxburgh’).

the Roxburgh Roondie (thu-roks-bu-ru-roon-dee) n. local brie-like cheese made at Standhill farm by Jim and Anne Shanks from 2007.

Roxburghshire (roks-bu-ru-shir, roks-bu-ru-shir) n. former county which included Hawick, Jedburgh and Kelso. It was the southernmost county of Scotland and was bounded by Berwickshire, Dumfriesshire, Selkirkshire and the English Border. It contained what was formerly Teviotdale and part of Liddesdale and was divided into over 30 parishes. Jedburgh was the county town, although there was a proposal around 1891 to change this to Hawick. The area was 669 square miles, although changes to the boundaries means this number does not apply to all times. The county is full of archaeological remains, including Bronze Age burial cairns, British forts, Roman camps and roads, vestiges of settlements and peel towers. The county is named after the formerly important town and Castle of Roxburgh.

Roxburghshire Gentlemen and Yeomanry Cavalry (roks-bu-ru-shir-jen-ul-min-in-yo-min-ree-kaw-vul-ree) n. local volunteer regiment that existed 1797–1828, also known as the Roxburghshire Yeomanry or the Roxburghshire Light Dragoons Yeomanry Cavalry. Hawick was the main rallying point for the upper troop. In 1798 the Burgh gave them £25 to purchase drums and fifes. The western Captain-commandant was William Elliot of Harwood, while William Elliot (later Elliot-Lockhart) of Borthwickbrae served as Colonel. Their uniforms consisted of scarlet jackets laced with white cord, blue collars and cuffs, black leather helmets with a bearskin crest and a red and white heckle feather, white breeches and black boots.

the Roxburghshire Militia (thu-roks-bu-ru-shir-mi-lish-a) n. volunteer regiments of the early 19th century, formed in 1809 after the Light Company of the Roxburgh Volunteers had been disbanded. The 1st Regiment was headquartered at Jedburgh, and contained many local men, while the 2nd Regiment was based at Kelso. The 1st Regiment had Gilbert Elliot (later Earl of Minto) as Lieut.-Col., with James Elliot (younger of Wolfelee) as Major and the first Captain was Walter Scott of Wauchope. They were disbanded in 1828 (note that several different names were used for these units).

Roxburghshire Nursin Association (roks-bu-ru-shir-nur-sin-aw-so-see-a-shii) n. nursing association formed in 1900 to provide for nursing needs in local country areas. Fees were paid to join the association and only members could benefit from its services. It operated until the National Health Service was set up in 1948.

the Roxburghshire Rifle Volunteers (thu-roks-bu-ru-shir-ri-ful-vo-lum-teerz) n. formal name for the Border Rifles, a volunteer outfit founded in 1861.

the Roxburghshire Word-Book (thu-roks-bu-ru-shir-wurd-book) n. the most useful resource for words that are peculiar to various parts of the county, written by George Watson and published in 1923. Words that are local to the Hawick area are denoted ‘[W]’, for Western Roxburghshire. As well as the word list itself, the introductory sections compile a huge amount of information about pronunciation and other facets.
Roxburghshire Yeomanry

of Roxburghshire vernacular. The book was compiled by Watson from the help of many communicants (most of whose names are unknown) from various parts of Roxburghshire, this following articles and lists of words that he published in the local press to encourage people to help him. Earlier books of poetry are much used to provide examples, and phrases from Elliot Cowan Smith are often included (sometimes without attribution). Watson was from Jedburgh and worked for the Oxford University dictionary project, effectively following in the footsteps of James Murray.

Roxburghshire Yeomanry (roks-ru-\-shir-yu-mun-ree) n. another name for the Roxburghshire Gentlemen and Yeomanry Cavalry.

Roxburgh Viaduct (roks-ru-vl-a-dukt) n. disused railway viaduct across the Teviot, by the village of Roxburgh. Built in 1847, it has an interesting iron footbridge built into it at the level of the river bank.

Roxburgh Volunteers (roks-ru-vol-\-lun-\-teerz) n. name given to several distinct (but inter-related) volunteer military units. The Roxburghshire Yeomanry Cavalry was first set up in 1794 and disbanded in 1802, to be re-formed as the Roxburghshire Corps of Geneltemen and Yeomanry Cavalry, lasting until 1828. The Light Company of the Roxburgh Volunteers was formed in 1803 during the perceived threat of French invasion. It was initiated by Walter Scott of Wauchope, who became their captain. They were mobilised during the False Alarm of 1804. The unit disbanded in 1809, but was essentially replaced by the Roxburghshire Militia the same year. Another volunteer unit, called the 1st Roxburgh and Selkirk Volunteer Rifle Corps was set up in 1859, with Hawick units, the 4th and 5th being set up in 1860 and 1861. The 4th absorbed the Denholm Company in 1863 and the 5th was disbanded in 1867. The 4th Roxburgh Corps became D and E Companies of the 1st Roxburgh and Selkirk (The Border) Rifle Volunteer Corps in 1880. They become part of the K.O.S.B. from 1887, with K Company formed in Hawick in 1892, and the whole set of Companies renamed the 4th Battalion, the K.O.S.B. in 1908.

Roxbury (roks-ru-ree) n. suburb of Boston, Massachusetts, which was apparently named for the many rocks there (although a connection with our county is not impossible). The town of West Roxbury (annexed to Boston in 1874) was the site of the Boston area Common Ridings of the late 19th and early 20th centuries. This was organised by Hawick exiles under the auspices of the Scottish Border Club. It consisted of sports (races, baseball throwing etc.) and other events on Common Riding Saturday, with the location Caledonian Grove, West Roxbury. There is a photograph of the 1886 celebration. Ex-Cornet Walter Irvine attended in 1888. There are American Cornets recorded from 1877 until at least 1926.

Royal Highlanders (roi-ul-li-in-durz) n. three officers of the 42nd Royal Highland Regiment, Lt.-Col. William Dickson, Capt. Archibald Campbell and Capt. McQuarrie, were made Honorary Burgesses in 1802. This was when they passed through Hawick on their way back from... the Royal Mail

Egypt after having ‘immortalised themselves in defeating the French Invincibles’.

the Royal Mail (θu-roi-ul-māl) n. name of a stagecoach operating out of Hawick in the early 19th century. In 1837 it was listed leaving for Edinburgh from the Tower Inn every day at 9.30 a.m., going via Selkirk and Galashiels, and leaving for London at 12.30 p.m., via Langholm and Carlisle. The other coach operating at the same time was ‘the Standard’.

Royal Nurseries see Buccleuch Nurseries the Royal Oak (θu-roi-ul-ōk) n. former hostelry near the top of the Round Close in the 19th century, also known for a while as the Blue Bell Inn. It can be seen in a sketch by T.H. Laidlaw. James Elliot, proprietor, was considered to have provided the finest spread of the local innkeepers at the Reform Bill open air dinner of 1832. Elliot was listed as vintner on the Round Close in Pigot’s 1837 directory. It could have been where Mary Hunter was publican on the Round Close in 1841. Also the name of a separate local pub on Wilton Path at roughly the same time, and another small licensed house on the north side of Buccleuch Street in the mid-19th century (the name is shared with hundreds of other pubs in Britain and refers to the tree in which Charles II hid from Cromwell’s army).

rubber (ru-bur) n., arch. a robber – ‘Ye’re that damned Indian rubber Warren Hastings; get off the ground at yince’ [RM].

rubbin-oot-indie (ru-bin-oo’-in-dee) n., arch. an India-rubber, eraser.

Ruberslaw (ruo-burz-law) n. hill about 4 miles due east of Hawick, lying on the boundary of Cavers and Hobkirk parishes. It reaches a height of 424 m (1392 ft), and is the most prominent landmark in Roxburghshire. It was long considered to be an extinct volcano, but the reality is that the geology is much more complex (although the rocks are predominantly basaltic, the shape probably came from erosion). It is topped by an Iron Age fort, and was also used as a Roman signal station. The fortifications on the hill-top were first described by A.O. Curle in 1905. There was an extensive stone citadel on top (about 72 m by 32 m), defended by a wall, with an entrance on the north-east side. There is also an annex on the south side, including the plateau below the summit. These were probably rebuilt from the stones of the Roman signal station, as a Dark Age ‘nuclear’ fortification. with Roman stone. A less well-defined outer wall is probably part of an earlier Iron Age structure. A cairn on the east side was removed in the late 19th century. A horde of bronze vessels was unearthed there in 1863 (including a jug handle, decorated with grotesque figures of 2 dwarfs and a bird) and are in the Museum, as well as 2 stones with diamond-shaped carvings. Several flints found there are in the Hawick Museum. Other flints and an arrowhead are in the National Museum of Antiquities of Scotland, as well as an unfinished stone axe. The hill was used for Covenanters’ meetings of the mid-17th century, at Peden’s Pulpit (a rocky cleft at the south-west side of the summit) and elsewhere on its slopes. In a wood near the head of the Hawk Burn is a ‘burnt mound’. Pine trees on the north side are said to be remnants of the ancient Caledonian forest. Part of the slopes were used as Common land in Denholm and in the 18th century each feu’r’s allotment was marked out with stones – ‘Oft have I wandered in my vernal years Where Rubserlaw his misty summit rears’ [JL], ‘Dark Ruberslaw, – that lifts his head sublime, Rugged and hoary with the wrecks of time! On his broad misty front the giant wears The horrid furrows of ten thousand years’ [JL], ‘Did you see the shadow’s speeding On the slopes of Ruberslaw?’ [RSC], ‘…Waiting helpless the beak and claw Of the carrion birds of Ruberslaw!’ [WHO], ‘…where Ruberslaw’s summit stands oot and looks doon on the wild lovely Border and Denholm’s wee toon’ [GM], ‘Rest on the heights an’ look ayont Where Ruberslaw shows green, An’ a’ the countryside displayed Aroon’ the Border Queen’ [WFC], ‘When Rubers Law has on his cap, The Dunion on her hood, A’ the auld wives on Teviotside Are sure ti hae a nood’ [T], ‘If you can see Ruberslaw it’s going to rain and if you can’t see Ruberslaw it’s already raining’ [IWL] (sometimes written ‘Rubers Law’; it is marked ‘Rubblelaw hill’ on Pont’s manuscript map of the 1590s, and on a manuscript map of Gordon in c.1650, but is absent from Blaeu’s 1654 map; the origin of the name is unknown; it should not be confused with ‘Rubislaw’ near Aberdeen).

Ruberslaw Drive (ruo-burz-law-driv) n. street in Denholm, running parallel to the Loaning and connected with Ruberslaw Road.

Ruberslaw Hoose (ruo-burz-law-hoos) n. house in Crieff near Perth. It was built in the early 19th century, being a branch of the Commercial Bank from 1811, and then was a home of Sir
Ruberslaw Pairish

William Eliott of Stobs from at least 1878, when his first wife died there. It is unclear who named the house (but the connection to the Eliotts of Stobs seems unlikely to be a coincidence).

Ruberslaw Pairish (ruo-burz-law-pä-reesh) n. combined parish consisting of Denholm, Minto and Bedrule, set up in 2003, and extended to include Hobkirk and Southdean in 2004.

Ruberslaw Road (ruo-burz-law-röd) n. part of Burnfoot, named after the prominent hill. It was built in 1951, with additional houses added in 1957.

Ruberslaw Road (ruo-burz-law-röd) n. street in the south-eastern part of Denholm, built on the site of a former livestock market. The private housing development there dates from the 1970s.

rubiator (ruo-bee-ä-tur) n., arch. a bully, a violent, swearing person – ‘He comes out on me roaring like a rubiator’ [JoJ]. ‘Hei cam in leike a roo-bee-er (a violent bully), an cowpeet the taibl yownt owre’ [ECS] (there are spelling variants).

Rubstic (ru-b-stik) n. race-horse, trained locally by John Leadbetter. It won the Grand National in 1979, being the first Scottish horse to do so.

ruck (ruk) n., arch. a rick, stack of hay – ‘O! as we ran about the rucks o’ hay! I hinna seen sinesyne a blyther day’ [CPM].

the Rude Day (thon-rood-dä) n. medival festival of the Exultation of the Cross, celebrated on 14th September (3rd May in England), supposedly the date of the discovery of the ‘true cross’. It was important locally before the Reformation and is recorded in the mid-16th century as a day sometimes chosen for signing documents etc. It was the occasion of a Fair in Jedburgh, the day in 1601 being marked by a skirmish, when a group of about 30 Turnbulls from the Minto area came to town seeking Thomas Ker (brother of the Probst). At the end of the fight Ker and his servant were dead, along with 2 of the Turnbulls, and several men were left seriously wounded (still referred to in the 1622 Circuit Court records; also spelled ‘Rood’).

Rudd (rud) n. Charles Clifford (b.1811/2) from Yorkshire, he was Superintendent of the Hawick Burgh Police in 1851. He was living at about 3 Tower Knowe. He was also listed as Superintendent in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Elizabeth, and they had a son Thomas Frederick. By 1861 he was a widower working as Police Constable in Jedburgh.

rue-claw (roo-klaw) n., arch. a mild sore made worse by scratching.

Ruecastle (ruo-, row-kaw-sul) n. hamlet a mile or so north-east of the Dunion, formerly in the Barony of Bedrule. A piece of land there was granted by Lady Bethoc and her husband Rudolph to the monks of Jedburgh when that abbey was founded (as confirmed in several later charters). There is a suggestion that an area of elevated land to the east of the farm may have been the site of a tower. There is also a tradition that the local courts of justice were held there until removed to Jedburgh. William ‘de Rucastel’ is recorded in the Ragman Rolls of 1296. The Fletcher family held part of the lands from before 1464 until they sold them to Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1558/9. In 1491 there was a ‘procuratory of resignation’ by Thomas Dickson of Ormiston, to resign (presumably a different part of) these lands into the hands of the Abbot of Jedburgh; they appear to have been gained by John Rutherford of Hundalee. John Turnbull was recorded there in 1493. John Turnbull is recorded there in 1502. The village there was burned by an English party led by Philip Dacre in 1513, including 2 towers, burned by Sir Thomas Wharton’s men in 1543 and burned again by Hertford’s men in 1545. In 1569 it was among the lands purchased by Adam French from the Abbot of Jedburgh. It was among lands granted to Thomas Ker of Cavers-Carre in 1623. Lands there were held by Lord Jedburgh in 1629. Thomas Hamilton (1st Earl of Haddington) owned lands there, which he feued in 1632. In 1643 the lands there were valued at a total of £459, owned by Thomas Rutherford, Andre Turnbull, Laird Storie, Alexander Miller, George Fletcher and the Earl of Traquair. In 1665 Thomas, son of John Rutherford was served heir to his father’s 7-pound-10-shilling lands there, with ‘lie Maynes de Harden et forresta de Rowcastle’ as well as 3 husbandlands in the town of Ruecastle. In 1788 the main part was owned by John Rutherford of Knowesouth and valued at £396 13s 10d (with teinds of £70 6s), part owned by Thomas Rutherford valued at £41 3s 10d, a small part owned by Thomas Ogilvie of Chesters (that had been acquired by Bennett of Chesters) valued at £37 2s 4d and a another part owned by Thomas Storie valued at £18. William Roxburgh was there 1794–97 and William Young was also farmer there in 1797. The farm was part of the estate of Knowesouth, until sold by the heirs of Capt. Rutherford to George Pott of Dod. Part of the lands were acquired by Bennet of Chesters before 1811 and combined with his estate, with the rest being owned by Rutherford of Knowesouth; together the parts were valued at about £510. Gideon Pott acquired further parts from William Oliver Rutherford and from Thomas Storie. The area may be the origin of the similar surname. A cist was found a few hundred yards to the south, containing an urn that was said in 1949 to be preserved in Monteviot House. A stone axe found enearby is in the National Museum of Antiquities. In a field about 500m to the north are the possible remains of a settlement. A former resident, perhaps fictional, is mentioned in the ballad ‘The Grey Peel’ (as recited by ‘Matthew Gotterson’)—‘An’ gallopin’ up comes Ruecastle Hew, On his Bewcastle naig o’ the guid steel grey. An’ Fernihirst grim, but ever heart true, Whase ready Kerr hand reds mony a fray’ [T] (the name probably derives from Old English ‘ruh’ and Anglo-Saxon ‘ceaster’, meaning ‘rough fort’, suggesting an early fortification of some sort there; it is written ‘Reucastel’, ‘Rowcastel’, ‘Rowcastle’, ‘Roecastell’, ‘Rowcastel’, ‘Rowcastell’, ‘Rowcastill’, and variants; it is first recorded as ‘Rughechestre’ in about 1140 and is ‘Rucastle’ in the 13th century; it is ‘Roucastell’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and the modern spelling appears on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Ruecastle (rū-, rōw-kāw-sul) n. Adam (17th C.) recorded as ‘merchant of Hawick’ when he was entered as a Burgess and Guild brother of Edinburgh in 1692. He may be related to the Adam who was born to William and Marion Scott in Hawick in 1650 and may be the Adam who was father in Hawick of an unnamed child in 1690 and James in 1693. He was listed as a merchant among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the Adam who is listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. Elizabeth nee Kelly (18th C.) wife of Bailie Walter, whom she married in the early 1750s. She was apparently the first Hawick citizen to travel out to America and return safely! She was at that time 72 years old and visiting her son John, who was a Captain in the Revolutionary Army. Francis (18th C.) probably closely related to Robert. He could have been the Francis born to William and Janet Richardson in Hawick in 1678. In 1723 he was entered as a new elder of Hawick Kirk and was a candidate for Session Treasurer in 1725. He may have witnessed (the record is hard to read) a baptism, along with Robert, for wigmaker Francis Miles in 1726 and another for carrier George Porteous in 1727. He is also mentioned in reference to the building of the Teviot Bridge in 1738. He may be the Francis, saddler in Hawick, who witnessed the notorial instrument of 1734 in which the Town complained about encroachment on the Common by tenants of Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. He may have been the Francis who died around 1750 and gave his estate to Francis, young son of Bailie Gideon (perhaps therefore his brother). George (17th C.) Councillor who signed the 1640 ‘Act of Bailies and Council’. He may be the George who was married to Isobel ‘Merlay’ and had a son Hector in Hawick in 1636. George (17th C.) married to Janet Gilbertson, they had daughter Janet in Hawick in 1653. Bailie Gideon (b.1713) son of Robert, he was a Magistrate in Hawick roughly in the 1730s and in 1740. He may have been the Gideon who was Cornet in 1730. He was probably the (ex-)Bailie Ruecastle involved with overseeing work to rebuild the Bailies’ seat in St. Mary’s in 1734 and building a new Parish School in 1739. He was ‘present Bailie’ in 1743 when he witnessed a baptism for writer James Weir and ‘late Bailie’ in 1745 when he witnessed another baptism for James Weir. He appears to have died shortly before 1751, when the Hawick Session agreed to act as trustees for his minor son Francis, who had been left the estate of another Francis (perhaps his brother). He may have been the Gideon who married Jean Watson and whose children included: Robert (b.1731); John (b.1733); Francis (b.1734); Thomas (b.1735); John (again, b.1738); Anne (b.1740); Francis (again, b.1741); Anne (again, b.1743); Jean (b.1745); and Gideon (b.1747). Gideon (18th/19th C.) recorded in Hawick when he paid the Horse Tax in 1790–92. He also paid the dog tax in Hawick in 1797. He contributed £1 to the subscription to support the war with France around 1799. He is probably the son of Gideon, born in 1747. Hector (17th C.) married to Isobel Minto, their daughter Grizel was born in 1645. Hector (17th C.) Hawick resident. He married Marion Brown and their children included Bessie, Hector, and probably Andrew in the period 1687–92. He may have been son or grandson of George. He may be the ‘Hector Reucastell younger’ listed on the westside of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. John (16th C.) recorded in Hawick’s 1537 charter as ‘Rowcastell’. He owned a ‘particately’ of land on the north side of the High Street. He may have been the ancestor of the latter Ruecastles of the Town. John (17th C.) one of a list of 16 ‘idle and masterless men’ suggested by the Hawick Bailie to the Privy Council in 1627 as suitable for sending to the wars in Germany. While in Edinburgh Tolbooth he is among 7 of them who complained that they were not in fact the sorts of men who should be pressed into military service, but nevertheless were transported to the wars in Germany. John (b.1657) son of Robert and Janet Tweedie, born in Hawick. Probably the same John became a cooper’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1674. It is not impossible that he is the same as Bailie John. John (17th/18th C.) described as ‘servitor’ to carrier Walter Ruecastle in 1716, when he and William Douglas had complaints made against them for sitting in seats in St. Mary’s that were reserved for the incorporated trades. The 2 of them even broke open the door to the balcony when it was locked by Robert Jolly. He was presumably the same John who was involved in a scuffle with Robert Jolly in 1716 in the Wester Loft of St. Mary’s during the Sunday service, when ‘Jollie did thrust him hard by his feet upon his belly’. Bailie John (17th/18th C.) Chief Magistrate of Hawick in the early 1700s, recorded as such during the swearing of the oath of allegiance to King George by the Council and Burgessess in 1714. It is unclear how he is related to the other Ruecastles (but based on his children’s names, his father may have been Walter and his mother Anna). He is probably the John who in 1719 married Bessie (or Betsy), daughter of Walter Paterson, and had children: Margaret (b.1721); Bessie (b.1727); Walter (b.1729); John (b.1731); Jean (b.1735); Isobel (b.1739); Bessie (again, b.1740); Beatrice (b.1742), who probably married clothier and dyer Thomas Turnbull; and Janet (b.1744). Given the birth years it seems likely he is also the John whose children recorded with Bessie Scott (perhaps an error, or indicating his wife had previously been married) were Anna (b.1723) and Helen (b.1725). John (18th C.) elder of Hawick Session, recorded in 1751. He was in care of a horse belonging to the Session, with instructions to sell it, and also appointed as a trustee for the affairs of the deceased Bailie Francis Ruecastle. Since he was not referred to as a late Bailie, then he cannot be the same as the earlier Bailie John. He could be the John who witnessed a baptism for baker Walter in 1758. John (1755/6–1808) son of Walter. He went to America, serving in the U.S. Army during the American War of Independence, becoming a Captain. He married Phoebe Thomas of Elizabeth Town, New Jersey. When his mother went out to visit him she was apparently the first Teri to take a trip out to America and return safely. Mrs. ?? (17th/18th C.) Hawick innkeeper of the early 1700s. She is recorded several times in the Parish Records in connection with payment for drinks associated with Kirk Session events, such as funerals and the ‘roup’ of seats in the gallery. She may have been related to the John who was Bailie. Robert (17th C.) described as ‘viator’ or ‘traveller’ when he was witness to a 1622 sasine for land in Hawick owned by Allan Deans. Robert (17th C.) listed in 1627 as one of 9 men charged with making a valuation of the lands in the Parish of Hawick. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (17th C.) married to Margaret Scott and had son James in Hawick in 1636. Robert (17th C.) married to Janet Gledstains and had daughter Isobel in Hawick in 1646. Robert (17th C.) selected as one of 2 people in Hawick to collect the ‘stent’ on the west side of the water in 1649. Probably the same Robert was ordered in 1655 to pay Walter Stavert to pay money borrowed when he went from Glasgow to Edinburgh and for a leg of mutton. He is described as a traveller in 1655 when someone was ordered to pay him for carrying wool to Edinburgh, ‘for horsing of him from Edinburgh to Hawick’ and ‘for ane dry killit fische’. Robert (17th C.) Hawick resident, married to Janet Scott. Their children included George (b.1648), Bessie, an unnamed child (b.1653) and Walter (b.1655), in the period 1648–55. Robert (17th C.) married to Janet ‘Twiddie’, they had son John in Hawick in 1657. Robert (17th C.) Hawick resident married to Isobel Scott. Their children included William (b.1654) and Robert (b.1656). Robert (17th C.) Hawick resident married to Margaret Wintrop. Their children included Robert (b.1670) and Margaret (b.1674). Robert (17th C.) married to Agnes Mow, their son William was born in Hawick in 1673. Robert (d.c.1688) tailor in Hawick. His will was recorded in the Commissariat of Peebles in 1688. He is probably the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. He could be the Robert recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. Bailie Robert (17th/18th C.) served as Hawick Magistrate between about 1690 and 1710, certainly recorded in 1697, 1707 and again around 1709. He was Bailie in 1707 when along with the other Bailie, Robert Brown, he was fined by the Council for ‘the publick undeniable and unaccountable abuse . . . att the rydeing of the Commone’, with the pair ‘striking att others’ horses with their whips and staves’; the nature of the incident is not described, but it seems likely it was related to the near riots that happened at the previous year’s Common Riding over carrying the Flag. In 1710 he was stated to be one of the Councillors given a key to the Charter Chest. He was an ex-Bailie when the bond was granted by the Council (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. In 1715 he was given custody of ‘the charter little chest’, with 2 other ex-Bailies holding the keys. He was probably the Bailie Ruecastle charged in 1717 with collecting money from the area between the Cross to the bridge. And in 1718, when he was a Magistrate, there was a serious dispute with ex-Bailie Graham, who accused him (apparently at a Council meeting) of being a thief and worse; the exact nature of the argument is not recorded, but it was resolved after the Minister intervened. Another dispute of 1722 led to him having all the elders publicly questioned about whether they had ‘heard him speak opprobriously and disparageinglie of Mr Robert Cunningham our minister’. He continued as Magistrate in the 1720s and was also Parish Treasurer in the 1720s. He may have been the Robert, son of Robert and Margaret Wintrop, who was born in Hawick in 1670 (although there are other Roberts recorded being born in 1648 and 1656). He may be the Robert recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun’ and probably from the west side. It is possible that he was the Robert, who, along with Walter, leased part of the Kirklands of Hawick in 1692. He married Anna Elliot and their children included: Mary (b.1700); Anna (b.1704); Beatrix (b.1705); and Gideon (b.1713). Bailies Patrick Richardson and George Martin were witnesses in 1704. The witnesses in 1705 were Gideon Scott of Fahnsh and Bailie Walter Elliot (who may have been related to his wife). He was probably also the Robert whose daughter Jean married Robert Ogilvie in 1720. These other children baptised in Hawick Parish (with no mother’s name given) were probably also his: Anna (b.1702); Anna (again, b.1707); William (b.1709); and Mary (b.1711). He is probably the Robert who witnessed a baptism for John Moss in 1725. Simon (17th C.) married to Margaret Scott, their children included William (b.1635) and an unnamed son (b.1641). Walter (17th C.) recorded in 1693 when he was fined for insulting and assaulting the Bailie of Regality, William Scott. It seems that Scott was in the ‘houss’ (i.e. probably pub) of William Elliot, sorting out some financial business between him (Walter) and John Hardie, when he came in, calling the Bailie ‘ane fals judge’, and when there was an attempt to remove him he ‘instantly, insolentlie, and most violentlie fell upon the sd. baylyea, rugged and rave the hair of his head’. As well as being fined, he was ordered to go to the stocks. The financial dealings also involved his father, who was presumably alive at the time. He could be the same man as the carter. Walter (17th/18th C.) carter in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He is probably the Walter listed on the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He was recorded as a carrier of Hawick when he married Abigail Lamb in Edinburgh in 1694. He could be the Walter who was born to William and Janet Richardson in Hawick in 1674 (although there are other possibilities). In 1716 his ‘servitor’ John ‘Roucastel’ was one of the people who the weavers complained were using their assigned seats in St. Mary’s; this John could have been a close relative. He could be the Walter who witnessed a baptism for Richard Miles in 1705. It is possible that he was the Walter, who, along with Robert, leased part of the Kirklands of Hawick in 1692. He may have been father of Bailie John (whose first male child was called Walter). Bailie Walter (1729–c.1795) son of John and Bessie Paterson. He was a baker of Hawick who was a Magistrate during the dispute over the Division of the Common, and served through the 1750s and 1760s. In 1769 he was appointed to the commission to discuss the Common with representatives of the Duke of Buccleuch. He witnessed a baptism for Thomas Turnbull (probably his brother-in-law) in 1768. He was witness for baptisms for Archibald Paterson in 1775, 1777, 1780 and 1781 and for James Dickson in 1777. He married Elizabeth Kelly (or ‘Bettie Kellie’) and had 13 children, including: Robert (b.1756); James (b.1758); Walter (b.1759); Charles and William (twins, b.1761); Barbara (b.1762); Walter (again, b.1766); Elizabeth (b.1768); Christian, who married Andrew Haddon (from Selkirk); and John, who was a Captain during the American Revolutionary War. The 1758 baptism was witnessed by John (probably his father or brother) and James Paterson (perhaps his uncle) and the 1766 one by John (probably his father) and another Walter (Henderson perhaps). William (13th/14th C.) recorded as ‘de Rucastel’ when he swore allegiance to Edward I of England in the Ragman Ruecastle Burn

Ruecastle Burn (rū-kwā-sul-burn) n. stream that rises on the western side of the Dumon and flows in a roughly north-western direction, passing the hamlet of Ruecastle to join the Knowesouth Burn and eventually the Teviot. At Worm Rig there are remains of ancient earthworks. Near Knowesouth is Ladies’ Well.

Ruecastle Moor (rū-kwā-sul-moor) n. former name for the moor near Ruecastle. In about 1795 it is recorded that the minister of Bedrule had the right to cast 2 ‘darg of turf annually’ here.

the Ruecastles (thū-roo-kwā-sulz) n. family that was prominent in Hawick in the 17th and 18th centuries, but then entirely disappeared. The surname surely derives from the area of Ruecastle in Bedrule Parish. William ‘de Rucastel’ is listed in the Ragman Rolls of 1296 and had a pension from Robert the Bruce. The eponymous lands were in other hands by the mid-15th century, but there are no instances of the name until ‘Rawcastill’ appears as a landowner on Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Then Thomas, Margaret, Agnes and Nicholas Ruecastle were married in Hexham in 1581, 1586, 1590 and 1596, respectively. The Hawick branch is recorded continuously from the 1630s, and furnished many Magistrates, Councillors and Elders. They were probably all from a single local male ancestor. It seems likely that the Northumbrian branch was also related, however some of the occurrences further afield may have an entirely different origin. There is a vast range of spellings in early records of the name. Modern variants include ‘Rowcastle’, ‘Rewcassell’ and ‘Reucastle’.

the Ruecastle Tenement (thū-roo-kwā-sul-te-ne-min’) n. former popular name for the building at 7 High Street, before the British Linen Bank purchased the land in 1862 and rebuilt on it. It was built around 1690, and was a 3 storey construction. The Ruecastle family, which provided several Hawick Baillies, had lived there for 3 generations. It can be seen in an 1860 photograph, showing the shops of W. Douglas, Saddler, J. Kemp, cooper and Wm. Rutherford on the ground floor. It was demolished in 1861.

ruefi (ru-ofi) adj., poet. rueful – ‘He sees that sae will be the case, An’ wi’ a lang-drawn ruefu’ face’ [RDW], ‘... an’ saufes sic as be o’ ane rewu’ speerit’ [HSR], ‘... I wull be rewu’ for my sin’ [HSR] (there are spelling variants).

ruff (ruv) v., arch. to beat a drum, n., arch. the beat of a drum, the drum roll preceeding a proclamation, v. to applaud, signify approval.

ruffie (ru-fe) n., arch. a knitted neck ruff – ‘That hyimm-made ruffie o yoors looks nane sae unheelint’ [ECS].

ruffin (rufin) n., arch. an encore, ovation – ‘Ruff um in! Gie (or gae) um a ruff-in!’ [ECS] (also written ‘ruff-in’).

the Rufus Trophy (thū-roo-fis-trō-fe) n. trophy competed for at the Common Riding race meeting. It was first raced for in 1934, replacing the Medway Cup, which had been won outright (after 3 victories) by ex-Cornet Ian Macaagatt on Rufus. The first winner was the same rider on his horse Rufus! It was won outright and replaced by the Horneshole Stakes in 1950.

Rufy (ru-fe) n. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as ‘Johannem ruffy’ at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. Alexander Weens of that Ilk failed to produce him to answer to the murders of John and James Jackson. He was declared as a fugitive and his goods escheated to the King. Patrick (15th/16th C.) tenant in Rutherford. He was recorded as a fugitive in 1502, this being for the murder of John and James Jackson. William Douglas of Cavers dealt with his escheated goods.

He was presumably related to Thomas who was also put to the horn for the same crime. Thomas (15th C.) member of the ‘retoir of inquest’ in 1438 for Ker of Altonburn. He must have been a prominent Roxburghshire Laird of the time. However, it is unknown where exactly he was from or whether his surname was a variant of something else. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1502. Adam, brother of William Douglas of Cavers, failed to enter him into the court for his part in the murder of John and James Jackson. He was declared as a fugitive and his goods forfeited.

rug an rive (rug-in-riv) v., arch. to tug, tear, pull at with great force or persistence – ‘...fell upon the sd. baylyea, rugged and rave the hair of his head ...’ [BR], ‘Swearin’ an’ tearin’, they rug an’ they rive, Wha to be foremost wi’ Meggie M’Givelry’ [JoHa], ‘...And boulevards o’ blankets ruggin’ and rivin’’ [DH].

rugby (rug-bee) n. a religion practised by many people in Hawick, with its main church at the foot of Mansfield Road. It was first introduced only in 1872, so for hundreds of years before that Teries must have had little to cheer about! The game was introduced locally when the Cricket Club decided to purchase a ball for the younger players to exercise with in the winter months. The club itself was formed in December 1873, with Robert Michie as Captain. The first organised game was against Langholm in 1874. George Wilson was a mainstay of the early committee, which was reorganised in 1885. At that time ‘Hawick’ (playing at the Volunteer) and ‘Hawick and Wilton’ (playing at the cricket field) were formed separately. They played matches against each other and the St. Cuthbert’s team for a few years, but by 1892 only ‘Hawick Football Club’ survived. Although the official game started only in the late 19th century, the local tradition of ‘Baa’ games goes back probably several centuries, and there is a description of a game (‘the pledges’) played by youths in the 18th century, which bears some striking similarities, although without the ball (often ‘the rugby’).

ruggit (ru-gi’, -gee’) pp., arch. tugged, pulled roughly – ‘... saying that he maliciously and un-reverently racket and ruggit her from her said seat’ [Ash1639], ‘How the jockies in their fury Rave an’ ruggit’ [RH].

ruggy (ru-gee) adj., arch. tangled, knotted, difficult to comb – ‘... wui a toozy, taaty heed that wad be richt an ruggy ti red’ [ECS].

ruibbish (ri-beesh) n., arch. rubbish – ‘Throw that ruibbish aback o the feier’ [ECS].

Ruickbie (rik-, rook-bee) n. James ‘Jamie’ or ‘Reubie’ (c.1757–1829) born in Innerleithen, he lived much of his life in and around Hawick. He was a miller to trade, being the assistant at Nisbet Mill and then working at Newmill. After this he became a toll-keeper, at Haremoss (for a year), then Colterscleuch (for 12 years), then at Langholm and finally at the West-End toll-bar in Hawick. Entirely self-taught, he wrote a good deal of poetry, and also played the fiddle. He settled in Hawick as landlord of the Harrow Inn (at 12 High Street), where he enjoyed the friendship of other more distinguished writers. He belonged to the Burgher (East End) congregation in Hawick and started a Sunday School at Newmill. He was also listed as a volunteer in 1803. He would recount a tale of a girl from Innerleithen who was carried away by the fairies and later turned up in Plora Wood after prayers offered up by 7 ministers; he claims to have known this girl personally when she was an old lady and he was a boy. He was one of the earliest local poets to publish his work, some of it in dialect. An 8-page pamphlet of his, ‘An Elegy on the death of Whisky’ was printed in Hawick by Robert Armstrong in 1801. His 3 published collections are ‘Way-side Cottager, consisting of pieces in prose and verse’ (1807, while he was still at Colterscleuch), ‘Poems, chiefly in the Scottish dialect’ (1815, while he was at the Harrow Inn), and ‘Poems’ (1826). This last volume contained tributes from some of his contemporaries. A few of his poems were quite popular locally, particularly ‘The Bottomless Pit, or the Lawyer Outwitted’ and ‘The Vulture and Raven or the Dinner Arrested’. He also wrote some lines about his contemporary, James Hogg (of ‘Teribus’). He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He married Margaret Govenlock in 1787 and their daughter Margaret married Robert Govenlock of Mosspean Hotel. The first Mrs. Ruickbie may have died in 1797. He probably later married Jean (or Jane) Wilson, who died in 1836 and their children included Alexander. There seems to be uncertainty about whether he died in 1828 or 1829. He is buried at St. Mary’s, although the grave appears to have been unmarked. A portrait of him exists, painted when he was about 50, and the Museum has at least one of his original manuscripts – ‘Farewell, then, Old Bard! I have learned by the fate That goodness and genius conjoined cannot save From neglect the possessor, but often await On him scorn and contempt, til shut out by the grave’ [WiSp] (also written ‘Ruche’ and variants; it is uncertain how his name would have been pronounced by his contemporaries, rū-bēe also being possible).

ruif (ri‘f) n. a roof – ‘what were ee daein up on yon ruif?’, ‘as long as ee bide under ma ruif, ee’ll dae is a say’, ‘... on ti bowkin lums an platchin cloots an ruifs an was bantin snitteet an ratcht ...’ [ECS], ‘The skaler cam ti sort the ruif’ [ECS], ‘... To catch a glimpse yont the grey reek O’ the distan ruifs o’ reid!’ [WL], ‘... wi a last gledge at St. Mary’s clock keekin owre the ruifs like a sma local moon’ [DH], ‘Song Singin’ akeen tae stance on cliff. Took place on Tibbie the Fiddler’s rif’ [MB], ‘Doon the close and then on up the stair On the ruin, A’m happiest when A’m up there’ [IWL], ‘... sung every year since it was first beltet oot frae the thatched ruif o a hoose’ [IHS] (also spelled ‘rif’ and ‘riff’).

ruind (re‘nd, ri‘nd) v., arch. to cough hoarsely, make a disagreeable crunching noise, n. a hoarse cough – ‘A ruind o’ a cough’ [GW] (noted by E.C. Smith; also roond).

ruinds (re‘ndz, ri‘ndz) n., pl., arch. strips of cloth, the selvage of a web of cloth – ‘Ruinds = short strips and odds and ends of cloth, often sewn into the selvage of a web of cloth { `Ruinds = short rugs and mats; properly the selvage of tweed cut down’ [ECS].

Ruins Moss (roo-inz-mos) n. former name for the area of ‘moss’ just to the south of the road to the Branhxholme Lochs, about half-way between Chapelhill and Branhxholme Easter Loch (marked on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map).

ruise (ri‘z) v., arch. to praise, extol – ‘Never huivvin ti ruize Jethart high’ [ECS], ‘Huz Teries ruize high oor bonnie toon’ [ECS], n., arch. conceit, high opinion – ‘Hei hes a guid ruise o’ hissel’ [GW], ‘Monie a creestin bit wui a guid ruise o itsel ...’ [ECS] (from Medieval English; also written ‘ruize’ and ‘ruize’; cf. raise).

ruit (ri‘, ri‘) n. a root – ‘A tripped ower a muckle trei ruit’, ‘if ee stand there ony langer, ee’ll take ruit’, ‘It’s no’ because the gowans braw are bonnie ’roond its ruit, For we haes seen them bloom as braw in mony a ither bit’ [JoHa], ‘I’d lived on nought but ruit an’ weed, Acorns an’ nuts an’ ither seed’ [WP], ‘I’ve lived in it a good while now, and I doot I’ve ta’en ruit!’ [DH], ‘... clearin’ the soil away, till ye can sei if the ruit hes the richt bend’ [DH], ‘A’thing is buddin’ flooer, ruit and hedgeraw ... ’ [WL], ‘... The rits therelse were a fit long So it didnae tell a lie’ [AY], ‘The amount o yirth stickin teh the ruit o the runt was coon-teet tae’ [BW1961], arch. the lowest classes, root of society – ‘A’m a rael Wast-ender, born i the verrih ruit’ [ECS] (also spelled ‘rit’).

Rule (roof) n. Adam (12th/13th C.) recorded as ‘Adam Reuel of Stawelle’ in 1225. He was brother and heir of Richard and resigned the lands of Balmerino in Fife in favour of Queen Ermengarde (widow of William the Lion and mother of Alexander II). In the period 1211–33 he witnessed charters for St. Andrews Priory, where he is ‘ade de Rule clericis’. Adam ‘de Roule’ (13th/14th C.) signatory of the Ragman Rolls in 1296, along with ‘Allyn’, parson of the church of ‘Roule’ in Roxburghshire. Thomas of Rule was another signatory, so perhaps related. He gained lands at Molle (south of Morebattle) through marriage. About 1300 he granted some of these lands to the monks of Kelso Abbey, with witnesses including both Hugh and William ‘de Roule’. Probably the same Adam ‘de Rule’ was recorded (along with William) in a charter of Sprouton in 1320/1, and also witnessed a charter for lands in Lessuden at about the same time. He married Johanna, daughter and heiress of Sir Henry of Halyburton, and widow of Ralph Wyschard. Adam (14th C.) granted his lands of Altonburn to John ‘of Coupland’ in about 1354, with his name given as ‘Adam de Roule’. 3 years later these lands passed to John Ker (who thus became the first Ker of Altonburn); witnesses to this deed included William of Gledstones and William ‘de Roule’. He may have been the same as Adam of Yetholm, son of Alan of Rule. Adam (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Adam Roull in Abbotroul’ in the Circuit Court of 1622 when Walter Kerr of Linton was found guilty of stealing 6 sheep from his land at Cossershill. Alan (13th C.) recorded in charters of the early 1200s, during the reign of Alexander II. He witnessed a charter for the nuns of Coldstream and also for a gift of half of the lands of ‘Eschirche’ (Ashkirk) to the Bishopric of Glasgow. In the period 1195–1205 he witnessed a marriage contract for Philip de Valognes, with other Roxburghshire men also listed. He appears to have at this time been an English subject. He also witnessed an agreement between Henry of Ashkirk and Henry’s brother Alexander some time before 1249. Alan ‘of Roule’ (13th/14th C.) possibly the same man as the parson of the church at Rule who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. In 1296 his wife Alicia was forced to give up her dower lands in ‘Dovanby’ in England; this was part of a long list of followers of John Bialiol who were thus ordered by Edward I. In 1317 he granted his ‘manor of Roule with Neyfs and their sequals’ to Adam of Yetham. This may have been his son Adam of Rule, who granted the lands of Altonburn (near Yetholm) to the Kers. Alison (15th/16th C.) wife of Sir William Ogilvie of Strathearn, who was Lord High Treasurer of Scotland. In 1507 they were granted the Barony of Strathearn, who was said to be the first to inform the King of the birth of a son by his wife Margaret Tudor. She was also named along with her husband in several other charters in the period 1508–13. She appears to have been a member of the court and friend of the Queen. She died before her husband, and they had only one child, John. It is unclear how she was related to other Rules. Andrew of Primside (d.bef. 1439) owner of significant lands in the Barony of Plenderleith. It is unclear how he was related to other Rules, but it seems likely he was a descendant of Alan of Rule. He borrowed £100 from Andrew Ker of ‘Aldtonburne’ (Attonburn, near Yetholm, which had been acquired from the Rules in the previous century) in 1430 and let lands in Primside to him in the meantime, the money to be repaid at St. Mary’s in Hawick (there is a suggestion that the original date of this lease may have been 1413). In 1430 he sold ‘ten husbandlands of the Maynis’ in Primside to Andrew Ker, with the permission of his son George, this being confirmed in 1432 by Archibald, Earl of Douglas. He resigned his lands to George, his son and heir, in 1432. George, married Margaret, daughter of Andrew Ker of Altonburn and Cessford. However, George must have died before him, and he had no other surviving sons, because his 4 daughters became co-heiresses of his lands of Hownam, Plenderleith and Hyndhope. In 1439/40 Andrew Ker acquired some of his lands from his daughters Marjorie, Isabella, Janet and Ellen. In 1443 the Mains of Hownam, and lands of Plenderleith and Hyndhope, which had belonged to the 4 co-heiresses, passed to Andrew Ker. Andrew ‘Dan’ (d.1918) 3rd son of Robert and Jane, grandson of John, Inspector of Poor, and nephew of Private Harry. He was born in Hawick and joined the 1/4th Battalion K.O.S.B. He was awarded the Military Medal, General Service Medal and Victory Medal and was killed in action near the end of WWI. His name is recorded on the Vis-en-Artois Memorial. Bernard (14th C.) recorded as ‘de Roule’ in 1364 when he resigned his lands of ‘Foucer-ou’ (now ‘Folla Rule’) in Aberdeenshire. Brian (15th/16th C.) listed as ‘Fiftelar’, i.e. probably a fife player, at the Scottish court in 1506. His name is recorded as ‘Bryane Roule’. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) cottar at Appletreehall according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Ellen (15th C.) daughter of Andrew. She was one of 4 co-heiresses of the lands of Hownam Mains, Plenderleith and hyndhope, along with Marjory, Isabella and Janet. In 1439 she is ‘Elena Roule of Prymside’ when she appointed her husband Thomas Young, along with Stephen Scot, Thomas Gledstains and other as procurators when she resigned her part of Primside into the hands of the superior, Archibald, Earl of Douglas. The sisters’ lands of Primside were granted to Andrew Ker of Altonburn in 1439, and the other charters transferring their lands to the Kers followed in 1443 and 1454/5. George (d.bef. 1440) son of Andrew of Primside. His father resigned his lands of Primside to him in 1432. He married Margaret, daughter of Andrew Ker of Altonburn (and Cessford). Ker gained the lands of Primside from Andrew Rule’s daughters in 1439/40, suggesting that both father and son were deceased by then. George (15th C.) recorded as witness to charter by Alexander, Duke of Albany in the period 1470–78. John ‘Roule’ was also a witness, suggesting they were related. He is probably the same man as George of Edmondsfield. Perhaps the same George was Bailie in that part for David Ranton of Billy (in Haddingtonshire) in 1478, with his brothers Patrick and John as witnesses. George ‘of Edmondsfield’ (15th C.) recorded in 1489–90 when he was involved in a court case with Archibald, Earl of Angus, relating to the lands of Bonkle. He was probably related to Andrew of Primside. He was appointed by the 5th Earl of Angus as Bailie of the Barony of Bonkle, but later ejected from this office. There was an inquest for his son George inheriting Edmondsfield in 1505. George (16th C.) minstrel appointed by the Burgh of Selkirk in 1537. George (16th C.) witness to a document of the Riddells of that Ilk in 1551. George (b.c.1815) partner in Rule & Leyden, dyers of Teviot Road. The business later amalgamated with British Cotton & Wool Dyers, Ltd. He was a dye journeyman on the Crescent in 1841. He married Margaret Pringle. Their daughter Elizabeth died in 1913 aged 70 and is buried in Wellowgate Cemetery. He is probably the son of George and Elizabeth Nichol born in Hawick in 1815. Harry (1875/6–1917) son of John, Inspector of Poor in Hawick. He served with the Army Service Corps, HQ 52nd Lowland Division. He married Elizabeth Linton, and their children were John, Jim and Janet. He died at sea when the S.S. Ivernia was torpedoed and sunk off the coast of Greece. His name is recorded on the Mikra Memorial. Henry (12th/13th C.) recorded as ‘de Reuel’ in the period 1188 when he was witness to several benefactions of William the Lion to the monastery of Arbroath. He was granted the lands of ‘Cultrach’, which included Balmerino, in Fife. He was present at a court in Kinghorn in 1204. He must have been directly related to Richard (possibly his son) who is also recorded as witness in a similar period. He may have married Margaret, daughter of Orm of Abernethy. Hugh (13th C.) recorded as ‘Hugo Rouel’ in 1260 when he was listed as a master of the hospital of St. John of Jerusalem. Hugh (13th/14th C.) recorded as ‘Hugonis de Roule’ in 1320/1 when his seal was attached to a charter of Sprouston. Adam and William are also mentioned in the charter, and so they were surely all related. Humphrey (16th C.) recorded as ‘Umphra Rewll’ in a long remission for any past crimes for men under the superiority of Lord Maxwell. Given the others with whom he is listed, he probably lived near Langholm. Isabella (15th C.) daughter of Andrew. She was one of 4 co-heiresses of the lands of Hownam Mains, Penderleith and Hyndhope, along with Marjory, Isabella and Ellen. They resigned their lands to the superiors, and they were then granted to Andrew Ker of Altonburn in 1439, 1443 and 1454/5. She was not named as a co-heiress in 1439, suggesting she was deceased by then. James (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Jacobo Rowle’ in 1526 when he was a witness for a document for Trinity Collegiate Church in Edinburgh. He was ‘James Rowll’ in another in 1530, and also for others in 1531. He may be the ‘Jacobo Roull’ when he witnessed a sasine for the baronies of Lugton and Langnewton in 1522. James (16th C.) recorded as ‘Roull’ when he was a tenant of Kelso Abbey in 1567. Janet (15th C.) daughter of Andrew. She was one of 4 co-heiresses of the lands of Hownam Mains, Penderleith and Hyndhope, along with Marjory, Isabella and Ellen. Their are documents transferring their lands to Andrew Ker of Altonburn in 1439, 1443 and 1454/5. Her name is given as ‘Jonet of Roule’. John (14th C.) recorded as witness to a ‘quitclaim by Robert de Colleuyll’ to Roger of Alton, regarding revenue of lands for Kelso Abbey, in 1328. His name appears as ‘Johne de Roule’. He could be the John whose son William was recorded in 1369. John (15th C.) recorded as a priest in the King’s household in 1468. He was also recorded as a Prebyter in the Exchequer Rolls of 1468. Probably the same John (along with George) was witness to charters by Alexander, Duke of Albany in the period 1470–78, and was Steward of Alexander, Duke of Albany in 1479. He may be the same ‘John Laird of Rule’ listed among a set of Scottish ecclesiastics appointed as ambassadors for appeasing the truce on the Border. And in 1476 there is a summons for ‘John of Roule’ and others for stealing horses from Sir John of Swinton; there is a confirmation of this in 1477. He may also be the ‘John Roule’ who witnessed a document relating to Home of Crailing in 1479. John (16th C.) witness in 1523/4 to a charter of his sister Margaret for lands in Linlithgowshire. Another witness was James Ramsay, Prebendary of Corstorphine. This establishes a connection with Corstorphine, where the poet ‘Gentill Roull of Corstorphine’ had his praises sung by William Dunbar a generation earlier. Perhaps the same John was witness to a document of Kirkintilloch Church in 1523. Sir John (16th C.) Prior of Pittenweem before 1526. He was an ally of Cardinal Beaton. He had at least 4 sons, John, James, William and Ninian. John (16th C.) tenant of Newtown in Roxburghshire, recorded in 1531. John (16th C.) signatory of the band of Dumfries in 1570. John (17th C.) listed as resident at Todshaw in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) listed at Chesters among the poor of Southdean Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. John (18th C.) wright in Nether Bonchester. His son John was baptised in 1788. John (19th C.) Inspector of Poor, Collector of Poor Rates and Clerk to the Burial Ground for Hawick Parish towards the end of the 1800s. He wrote the poem ‘Song by a Callant Abroad'. He was also President of the Hawick Co-op in 1868, and probably wrote the history published in 1889. It seems likely that the same John Rule was also editor and part owner of the Hawick Express in the late 19th century and who was recorded as ‘Editor’ at 72 High Street in 1875. His children included Harry (killed at sea in 1917) and Robert. Margaret (b.1801/2) grocer on the Backdamgate. In the 1851 census she was living with her sister Isabella, and was unmarried. She was listed as a shopkeeper on ‘Back Damgate’ in Slater’s 1852 directory. Marjory (15th C.) daughter of Andrew (possibly the oldest). She was one of 4 co-heiresses of the lands of Primside, Hownam Mains, Plenderleith and Hyndhope, along with Isabella, Janet and Ellen. They resigned their lands to the superiors, and they were then granted to Andrew Ker of Altonburn in 1439, 1443 and 1454/5. Martin (16th C.) recorded as ‘Roule’ when he was owner of a tenement in the ‘Walkargait’ in Jedburgh in 1574. Patrick (15th/16th C.) recorded as Provost of the Collegiate Church of St. Nicholas of Dalkeith in 1499. He was also Provost of Dalkeith in 1478 when he witnessed a declaration by his brother George, Bailie for David Ranton of Billy. Another brother, John, was also witness. Patrick (15th/16th C.) recorded as serving in the King’s spicery in 1499 and 1500. He was paid his fee according to the Exchequer Rolls, with his surname written ‘Roule’. Probably the same ‘Pait Roule’ was recorded in 1497 when money was sent from the King’s Treasury to him, lying sick in Ayr. Richard (12th/13th C.) probably son of Henry and Margaret Abernethy. He is recorded being present at the council of King William at Alyth in 1180, where his name is ‘Reuel’. He witnessed an Athole charter in the late 1190s. In 1205 he was witness to a charter of William the Lion at Forfar. He also witnessed several gifts of the King to the monastery of Arbroath in the period 1188–1214. Henry, who is a witness at about the same time may have been his son or other close relative. Perhaps the same Richard is recorded in charters during the reign of Alexander II, i.e. 1214–49. This was at the same time as Alan and Thomas of Rule. Adam, brother and heir of Richard, is recorded in 1225. Richard (13th C.) recorded in connection with the lands of Bunkle, Berwickshire, in 1247. Richard (13th C.) witness to a renewal of lands in Mow granted to Melrose Abbey by Richard of Heiton in the period 1269–89: he is listed as ‘Ricardo de Rule’. In the period 1270–90 he confirmed a grant of a 20-shilling land in Hownam to Melrose Abbey. It is unclear how he was related to other Rules. Richard (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Roull’ when he had remission for wheat ‘fermes’ in 1496 for the lands of ‘Osanisdun’. Robert (13th C.) recorded as ‘de Ryhull’ in about 1240 when along with his wife Christiana, he held half of the lands of North Middleton in Northumberland. Robert (14th C.) recorded in an English document of 1391 as ‘a rebel and traitor’ when his lands of ‘Promset in Tevydalle’ (Primside) were forfeited to Thomas ‘Sparrowe, late prisoner with the Scots’. Robert (15th C.) Chaplain of the church of St. Nicholas in Aberdeen in 1444. He is recorded as Chaplain there in 1468. Robert (15th C.) recorded in a Berwickshire inquest in 1464. Robert (17th C.) Border minstrel who was supposedly slain by William Henderson of Priesthaugh near Allanhaugh in 1627, as immortalised in the ballad ‘Rattlin Roarin Willie’. It is possible he was connected with George, who is recorded as a minstrel hired by the Burgh of Selkirk in 1537. Thomas (13th C.) recorded in charters between 1214 and 1249. For example he was witness to Petronella, daughter of Adam Herring of Minto, when she granted land in the Borthwick to Melrose Abbey. He may be the same Thomas of Rule recorded on a jury in Northumberland in 1231 and as a witness of a grant to the canons of Kirkham in Northumberland in 1256. Thomas (13th C.) paid homage to Edward I by signing the Ragman Rolls of 1296. Another signatory was Adam of Rule, as well as William ‘de Rouley’. Thomas (14th C.) recorded as Rector of Cambuslang (Lanarkshire) in 1329. Thomas (14th C.) recorded as ‘Rouk’ (possibly just a transcription error) during the reign of David II, 1329–71. He resigned his lands of Butland or Butelend in the Sheriffsdom of Edinburgh to James Douglas of Strathbok. He may also have resigned his lands of ‘Little-Rulwod’. Possibly the same Thomas ‘of Roulwode’ forfeited certain lands in the Barony of Cavens in 1335/6. Perhaps the same Thomas witnessed the grant of the Forest of Ettrick to John Ker in 1358 and was juror at Roxburgh in 1361. And he may be the Thomas who was on an English jury in 1367 deciding which lands had been taken from English subjects by Scotsmen. Thomas (14th C.) witness to a court case in Dundee in 1348. He is recorded as ‘Ruwell’. Thomas (14th C.) recorded as a Burgess of Aberdeen in 1390, and as a Bailie in the period 1406–35. He was Provost of Aberdeen in 1417. In 1424 he was still recorded as ‘of Rowle’ when witness to a charter in Aberdeenshire. Thomas (15th C.) eminent ecclesiastic, contemporary with the Provost of Aberdeen of the same name. In 1429 he became a Canon of Glasgow Diocese. In the period 1426–32 he was annually the ambassador to England, designated Chaplain to the King of Scots. In 1429 he was also one of the sub-commissioners appointed to settle conditions for keeping order on the Border. In 1438 he was recorded as Chancellor of Glasgow Diocese. Thomas (16th C.) mentioned in a Northumberland record of 1523. Thomas (16th C.) listed among tenants of Newton in Bedrule in 1531. Thomas (18th C.) resident in Town-o-Rule in 1788 when his daughter Helen was baptised in Hobkirk Parish. Waldeve (12th C.) witness to a charter of Ranulph de Soulis to Jedburgh Abbey in the late 1100s, recorded as ‘Waldevo de Rula’. His name is also translated as ‘Waltheof’. Walter (14th C.) Precentor of Glasgow Diocese mentioned in the period 1321–33. For example he witnessed the document of 1329 where the Bishop of Glasgow confirmed the founding of a chantry at Roxburgh Church by Roger of Alton. He was surely directly related to other early ‘de Rules’. Walter (14th C.) recorded as ‘de Roull’ in 1387 when he was granted a Canonry of Glasgow by Pope Clement VII. He already held a position at the church of Tarbolton. Walter (b.1803/4) carter in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 2 Algars Crescent with his mother Elizabeth, brother Thomas and sister Elizabeth (widow of Alexander Pringle Scott). William (13th/14th C.) witness to a grant by Adam ‘de Roule’ of lands of Molle to Kelso Abbey about 1300. Another witness was Hugh ‘de Roule’, hence all 3 are likely to have been closely related. He may also be the William ‘de Rouley’ who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. In 1302 ‘William de Rue’ was King’s Clerk to Edward I at Roxburgh. About 1304 he is mentioned in a charter of donation granted by Robert ‘Wischart’, Bishop of Glasgow. This refers to land ‘of Bromilaw’ bordering his lands. He is probably the William ‘de Rule’ who is recorded (along with Adam) in a charter of Sprouston in 1320/1. It has been suggested by some that he may be the same as the William who became the first Turnbull. William (14th C.) recorded as ‘de Roule’ in 1357/8 when he was witness for the lands of Altonburn passing to John Ker, with William of Gledstones, James of Lorraine and Alexander of Flex being other witnesses. The lands had passed from Adam of Rule in 1354, so this may have been a relative. He also witnessed a further charter of related lands in 1358, passing from William of ‘Blkadene’. In 1369 he was ‘Willelmi de Roweile’, son of John, when he resigned lands in ‘Hunedoun’ to Melrose Abbey. William (15th C.) recorded as witness to charters in Edinburgh in 1465 and 1471. William (b.c.1805) born in Northamptonshire. The name was changed sometime after the parish was granted to Jedburgh Abbey. The origin of the earlier name is unknown, but presumably distinguished it from ‘Rule Bethoc’, i.e. Bedrule (it occurs as ‘Rulam Bedrule’ in 1279, a grant by John Comyn of Bedrule of the lands ‘Hunedoun’ to Melrose Abbey. William (15th C.) witness to a charter of Ranulph de Soulis to Jedburgh Abbey in 1304. He was also one of the sub-commissioners appointed to settle conditions for keeping order on the Border. In 1429 he was recorded as Chancellor of Glasgow Diocese. William (b.c.1805) resident in Town-o-Rule in 1788 when his daughter Helen was baptised in Hobkirk Parish. “On these sweet scenes I love to ponder, And each fair spot in memory see; So dear must be, where’er I wander, The valley of the Rule to me” [FMC], ‘...As he crossed the Rule, girth deep at the ford, A rider rose dark from the haugh and roared With a voice that shivered the still night air And startled the wild fowl, ‘Who goes there?”’ [WHO].

Rule Hervey (root-her-vy) n. earliest known name for the lands of Abbotrule Parish, first recorded in about 1165 in a charter to Jedburgh Abbey by William the Lion. These lands were granted to the monks of Jedburgh Abbey in exchange for a ‘ten pound’ land in ‘Hardinghestorn’ (Northamptonshire). The name was changed sometime after the parish was granted to Jedburgh Abbey. The origin of the earlier name is unknown, but presumably distinguished it from ‘Rule Bethoc’, i.e. Bedrule (it occurs as ‘Rulam Herevei’ in about 1165).

Rulehaugh (root-hawg) n. area of flat land near the mouth of the Rule Water, possibly lower down in former times before the course of the rivers altered. In 1279 Alexander III confirmed a grant by John Comyn of Bedrule of the lands of ‘Rulehalch’ to the Diocese of Glasgow. In 1395 there was a duel there when Sir William Inglis (then of Branxholme) was challenged by Thomas Struthers (an Englishman), with Archibald Douglas and Sir Henry Percy as judges. Struthers was killed in single combat. It is possible this was the same as the Deadhaugh, where Turnbulls supplicated to James IV in 1510 (it is ‘Rulehalch’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

the Rules (thy-roolz) n. once important family whose name was connected with the area of Rulewater. Adam and Thomas ‘de Roule’ from Rule’s Land

Roxburghshire signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. They held the lands of Altonburn, Primsdie, Plenderleith and Hyndhope, all of which were disposed of by 4 co-heiresses around 1440. There were also Rules in Aberdeenshire from early times. It is unclear what fraction of the world’s Rules are descended from this local family.

Rule’s Land (roolz-lawnd) n. former name for lands in Ruecastle in the Parish of Bedrule. They were feued by Rev. Joseph Tennant of Bedrule from Thomas Hamilton in 1632 (called ‘Roullis land’).

Rule-Spittal see Spittal-on-Rule

Ruletoon (rool-tin, -toon) n. Ruletown, former name for farms and lands in Hobkirk Parish, at Town-o-Rule. Both Ruletownfoot and Rueltownfoot were recorded in the 17th century. In 1694 James Grieve paid tax for 4 hearths there ‘for himself & cottars’, with William Turnbull also a cottar there.

Ruletoonfit (rool-tin-fi’, -toon-) n. Ruletownfoot, former which was once part of the Abbotrule estate. Adam Turnbull and Beatrix Lorraine were there in 1643, each with lands valued at £10. On the 1694 Hearth Tax records, John Lorraine was listed there, with Andrew Mathew and William Blaikie as cottars. Separately Thomas Turnbull and Thomas Scott are listed as tenants there in the Hearth Tax rolls, with James Oliver, James Wilkie and James Turnbull being cottars there, and Adam Sharp ‘deficient’ in not paying the tax (it is ‘Roultonfitt’ in 1643, ‘Roultonfute’ in 1662 and ‘Roultoonfoot’ in 1694).

Ruletoonheid (rool-tin-heed, -toon-) n. Ruletownhead, former farm in Hobkirk Parish, once part of the Abbotrule estate. Adam and Walter Turnbull were tenants there in 1643, when it was valued at £140. It had the same value in 1678. It later became part of the Parish of Hobkirk. In the late 17th century part of it was owned by Helen Turnbull, along with West Fodderlee. In earlier times the farm seems to have been incorporated into West Fodderlee, the Grange and Bowatsyde. In 1788 it was owned by the trustees of George Dickson and valued at £96 11s. George Elliot was there in 1794 and John Walker in 1797, with James Dalgeleish being shepherd in the same year. In 1811 it was listed (in 2 parts, split between Hobkirk and Southdean Parishes) along with ‘Bossithill’ and Burnkinford, among the possessions of Charles Kerr of Abbotrule, having a combined value of about £224 and previously being owned by George Dickson and George Elliot. By about 1874 it was owned by David Henderson, including a part formerly belonging to Walter Turnbull (valued at £96 11s). The tenant was Tom Brown in the mid-to-late 19th century, then passing to the Douglas family. Tom Douglas was owner in the early 20th century, when it was valued at about £300. It seems there was once also a corn mill here (also formerly written ‘Ruletonhead’ and ‘Rule-town-head’, it was ‘Roull toune-head’ and ‘Roultonhead’ in 1678).

Ruletoonheid Mill (rool-tin-heed-mil) n. former corn mill at Ruletownhead. The last miller there was Ralph Prendergast.

Rulewater and its People (rool-wa-tur-and-its-pee-pul) n. book written by George Tancred of Weens, published in 1907. It contains a truly extraordinary number of anecdotes from the general area of the Rule valley, as Tancred systematically described the histories of all the major families of Hobkirk Parish, in addition to much of Bedrule and Southdean. Importantly, the book does not just focus on the histories of the ‘gentry’, but includes all social strata. A facsimile edition was published by Borders Regional Library in 1992.

Rule Witter (rool-wi’ur) n. the Rule Water, a tributary of the Teviot, joining it from the south near Spittal-on-Rule. It is formed by the Wauchope, Harwood and Catlee Burns. The region gave rise to a surname, with the first recorded ‘Roules’ being in the mid-12th century. A history of the parishes along the Rule valley was written by George Tancred in 1907 and republished in 1992 – ‘Then Tividale came to wi’ spied; The Sheriffe brought the Douglas down, Wi’ Cranstane, Gladstain, good at need, Baith Rewle water, and Hawick town’ [T], ‘He’s lang since left Roull’s smilin’ scene, An’ fairy muiks o’ prattlin’ Jed, An’ Oxnam’s pines an’ banks sae green, An’ wimplin’ Kale’s soft dreamy bed’ [WP] (also sometimes one word ‘Rulewater/Rulewitter’; formerly spelled ‘Roull’, ‘Rowll’, etc.; it is ‘Ruiale’ in about 1406, ‘Watter of Rowle’ in 1530 and ‘Reullwater’ is recorded in the 17th century; the origin may be the old Celtic for ‘steep slope’).

Rulewater Court (rool-wi’ur-kör’) n. Rulewater Court, a street planned for Stirches and appearing on Burrow’s street map of Hawick, although never built.

Rulewitter Rifle Club (rool-wi’ur-fi-ful-klub) n. Rulewater Miniature Rifle Club, established following a meeting of 1905, called by Mr. Carr-Ellison of Greenriver. Mr. Waldie of Braidhaugh gave a piece of land on his farm for a rifle range. The original membership was 30, with Runciman (run-see-mun) n. James (17th C.) smith in Raperlaw recorded at on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He paid tax for 2 heartths there. His name is written 'Runcimman'. He is probably the James who owned a 'quarter of land' in Nether Ancrum, valued at £13 6s 8d, listed as a former owner in 1788. Thomas (16th C.) recorded as witness to a document for the Routledges of Crook, witnessed in 1529/30 at Cavers Kirk. He must have been a local landowner, tenant or church official. He is an early example of this surname, which is recorded as 'Runseman'. He may have been related to the earlier Patrick.

Patrick (15th C.) listed among the 24 Roxburghshire men, mostly associated of William Douglas of Cavers, who had remission in 1488/9 for supporting James III. His surname is recorded as 'Runseman'. Walter 'Watt' (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. His name is recorded as 'Watt Runseman'. Walter (18th C.) recorded as 'Runchiman' in 1686 when he married Janet 'Reedfoord' in Roberton Parish. Their son Thomas was born in 1687. Helen (who married John Douglas in Roberton in 1687) and Bessie (who married Thomas Hardie in the same year) were probably his sisters. He was probably a descendant of the earlier Wat.

Russell (ru-sul) n. Alexander (1808/9–bef. 1851) from Ancrum, was he a gardener in Wilton. In 1851 he is listed as a gardener on Upper Damside, employing 2 men. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included Mary, Alexander, Robert and Jane. By 1861 his wife was a widow, living on Wellington Street. Rev. David (1783/4–1808) from Tollcross, he was a schoolteacher, and then was ordained at Colinsburgh Relief Church in Fife in 1811. He moved to Hawick in late 1812 to become the first minister of the new Relief (later Allars) Kirk. His son was the engineer, naval architect and mathematician John Scott Russell. In Hawick he remarried and had more children, and introduced one of the earliest Sunday Schools. Following ongoing dispute over his stipend he resigned in 1819 and later moved to Errol near Perth. He was unable to carry on his duties following some kind of ‘mental ailment’ in 1847. He seemed able to carry on in about 1849, but the same affliction returned by 1854, and he was ‘dead to the world’ for many years before his death. A photograph of him exists.
Frances, Countess Russell, see Frances Elliot.
Francis (1814–95) son of Dr. James (Professor of Clinical Surgery at Edinburgh University) and Eleanor Oliver (daughter of William Oliver of Dinlabyre). He trained as a lawyer, was called to the bar in 1836 and in 1860 became Sheriff-Substitute of Roxburghshire, serving until 1885. He was a member of the Jedforest Club and lived at Jedbank until retiring back to Edinburgh. He married twice. George (15th/16th C.) resident of Fulton. In 1502 Matthew and Martin Oliver in Strange were allowed to compone for stealing 4 lambs and an ox from him. Rev. James (b.1808) son of Robert and Agnes Turnbull, who was from Hawick. He attended school at Yarrow, under the instruction of James Scott. He was minister at Yarrow and wrote ‘Reminiscences of Yarrow’ (1886), which contains anecdotes about many local people of the late 18th and early 19th centuries. He had a cousin, Robert Laidlaw from Philiphaugh. He married Janet Margaret Shand. His children included Robert and John Harvey Shand (1861–84). James ‘Jimmy’ (1867–1956) son of artist John Bucknell. His mother died of smallpox in Edinburgh and the family moved to Fochabers, Morayshire. His great delights were fishing and poaching. He learned painting in his father’s studio. He moved to Glasgow, painting commissions of fish and countryside scenes. In 1918 he and his wife moved to Bonchester Bridge, where they lived above the Laidlaw Memorial Hall. Later they moved to Weens Cottages (‘the Sclenty’) and lastly lived in Denholm. In Rulewater he acted as telegraph boy until he was about 80. He continued to paint almost up until his death. His paintings were signed ‘J.B. Russell’, distinguishing them from those of his father. From a Catholic family, he married Protestant Annie Hendry, keeping the marriage secret for years. They had children: Peggy (b.1900); Hendry Smith (1906–88); and William Hendry (1915–41), also known as Dovish, who died in Greece in WWII. He painted the caricature of the ‘Rulewater Foothunters’ in the Horse and Hounds. His painting of Wilton Lodge gatehouse is in the Museum, as well as another of a bridge. James Lyon ‘Jimmy’ (1935–) son of Hendry Smith and Isabella Lyon, and grandson of the artist James, he is a social scientist born in Wilton. He lived in Denholm and Rulewater until 1960, later splitting his time between Rulewater and Ireland. He graduated M.A. from St. Andrews and Ph.D. from Strathclyde and worked at the University of Ulster, specialising in issues related to children. He carried out survey research for several government agencies and other organisations, particularly in Northern Ireland. After retirement he carried out personalised funerals for people without church connections in the Edinburgh area. He wrote the words and music for the song ‘The Burn at Rins Throu’ Bister’. He also wrote an article on ‘The Rulewater Foothunters’ for the Scots Magazine in 1987. In 1960 he married Heather Begg and had children Fiona Jane, Roisin Anne and Kevin. John (16th C.) farmer at Over Billerwell. His barn is mentioned in 1562 as part of the dispute over lands in the Barony of feu-Rule. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was recorded at John Scott (1808–1882) born in Parkhead, Fife, was a naval engineer and writer. He was a regular visitor at Wilton Lodge, which he had to leave due to ill health. Scott was a frequent visitor to the Teviot valley, and his works often reflected his love for the landscape.

The Rustic Bard (ru-tik-bawrd) n. pseudonym sometimes used by John Halliday. He is best known for writing the words ‘Bonnie Teviotdale’. His early poetic efforts are collected in ‘The rustic bard, or, A voice from te people: being miscellaneous poems and songs’ (1847), published when he was living at Longbault. The book contains 351 pages, with a long introductory poem ‘The Vision’; however, it does not include ‘Bonnie Teviotdale’.

Ruth (rootth) n. Henry (15th C.) resident of Longnewton, recorded at the 1494/5 Justice-aine in Jedburgh. He had remission for the slaughter of Thomas Gibson, with his surety being George Rutherford of Longnewton.

Rutheid (ru-'heed) n. Ruthead, pass at the head of Ruthead Sike, which flows into Lairhope Burn to the west of Lairhope in the upper Teviot valley. The path here reaches a height of 352 m, and was formerly on the old road from Lairhope to Howpansley, linking the upper Teviot and Borthwick valleys.

Rutherford (ru-thur-furd) n. village and former station on the Kelso Branch of the North British Railway. Before being destroyed in 1545... there was a hospital near here for the protection of travellers, dedicated to St. Mary Magdalene, as well as ruins of the old British fort called Ringley Hall. The area was a small parish in ancient times, later absorbed into Maxton. The land is intimately connected with the Rutherfords of that Ilk. It passed to the Stuarts of Traquair in the early 17th century, then the Scotts of Thirlestane and later to the Don and Antrobus families (also written ‘Rutherford’ and variants; the origin of the name is probably Old English for ‘cattle ford’ and it first appears in about 1165; an alternative is the Flemish for a ‘knight’s river crossing’; less likely, but more romantic, are tales involving King Ruther fording a river, and related stories; there is a more recent Rutherford in Linton Parish, Peebleshire).

Rutherford (ru-thur-furd, -ford) n. Adam of that Ilk (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1501 in relation to lands of ‘Glenisland’ in Roxburghshire for which he had a sasine. His name is given in the Exchequer Rolls as ‘Afe Rutherford de eisdem’, but it is unclear how he was related to other Rutherfords of that Ilk. Adam (15th/16th C.) son of George of Longnewton. In 1498 he was listed (along with his brother Gilbert, a cousin George and his ‘brother’s son’ David) among Rutherfords and others who were declared rebels for the murder of Patrick Hepburn. He was also mentioned in 1502 when Alexander Laidlaw was convicted of associating with him, Thomas Rutherford and Thomas Grahamslaw. In 1510 he had letters of rehabilitation for his crimes after spending months in Edinburgh Castle. Adam (15th/16th C.) farmer of the lands of ‘Hirdmanstoun’, probably the same as ‘Hermiston’ in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1502 David Scott, called ‘Lady’, in Stirkshawis’, had a remission for leading the ‘Robsonis, Doddis, and Charlis, Englishmen’ in a raid on his lands. This included stealing 5 horses and burning corn and houses there. He may be the Adam whose son James was killed at the Kirk of Hawick around 1502. Adam (16th C.) Burgess of Jedburgh who was appointed one of the temporary Sheriffs of Roxburgh in 1545 in order to officiate over the inheritance of James, son of Sir James Douglas of Cavers. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Bonchesterside. In 1684 he was among those proclaimed as fugitives for being Covenanters. Adam of Kidheugh (16th/17th C.) grandson of William and Kidheugh and probably son of Robert. In 1621 and his son John had a charter of Nether Crailing. In 1656 he gave a charter of lands in Bedrule to Thomas Rutherford of Whitehouse in Nisbet. He married Isobel, daughter of Ragwell Bennett of Chesters. Andrew of Kidheugh was probably his son. Alexander (18th C.) recorded in 1732 being paid for cloth for the Burgh Officers and drummers clothes. He may have been a local tailor. Alexander (b.1820) youngest son of Bonchester joiner James and Isabella Thomson. He followed his father into the joinery business. However, he became paralysed in the middle of his life, had to be maintained by Hobkirk Parish and died in Hawick Poorhouse. His brother William (who had emigrated to Australia) sent money back to cover the expenses for his maintenance. Alison (1712–94) daughter of Robert Rutherford of Fairnilee, Selkirkshire. In 1731 she married Patrick Cockburn of Omiston, and thereafter was referred to as Mrs. Cockburn. She was a leading society figure in Edinburgh, and wrote a version of ‘The Flowers of the Forest’. Andrew of Hunthill (c.1430–c.82) son of John. He had a charter for Nether Wornamston in Peeblesshire in 1452. He is probably the ‘Andro of Rutherfurde’ who was on the 1456 panel that acquitted Andrew Ker of Altonburn of helping the English. In 1479 he had a sasine for Makerstoun and Grubet. He married Janet Rutherford of that Ilk. Their children included: John, who succeeded; Thomas of the Grange; and Andrew of Swinside, who died at Flodden, and whose daughter Margaret married her cousin (once removed) Sir Nicholas of Hundalee. Andrew of Chatto and Hunthill (d.1529) son of George of Hunthill. He was the 3rd husband of Helen Rutherford, heiress of Rutherford, Wells and Edgerston. From her he inherited several lands, including the ‘half merk land of Bethrioull’ (i.e. Bedrule), which they sold to Andrew Ker of Ferniehirst. He may be the Andrew who had sasine for the lands of Swinside in 1506. In 1529 he had a charter for Capehope and other lands, along with his wife Helen. He died without issue and his brother John succeeded to Hunthill in late 1529. Andrew (16th C.) tenant in the Grange. He may have been related to the slightly later George of the Grange. In 1541 he is recorded as tenant of half the lands of Hyndlee in Jedforest. His name is recorded there as ‘Andre Ruthirfurde in Grange’. Andrew of Hundalee (c.1530–96) son of Sir Nicholas. His older brother George died a rebel. He signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573. He signed an agreement with other Rutherfords and Turnbulls in about 1578 (perhaps erlier), annulling all former bonds and swearing allegiance to the Crown. Also in about 1578 he was involved in a bond between the Kers and Rutherfords. In 1578/9 there is mention of a feud between him (along with other Rutherfords, Douglas of Bonjedward and Turnbull of Bedrule) and the Kers of Cessford. In 1581 he was among Border Lairds who denounced their bonds with Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. He married Margaret, daughter of John Pringle of Smallholm in 1561. Their children included: John; Nicholas, who succeeded; and Andrew. However, it is stated in some family histories that he had no sons, and was succeeded by his brother Nicholas. Andrew of Hundalee (16th C.) son of Nichol, whom he succeeded. He was ‘younggar of Hundolye’ in 1567 when ordered to remain in ward in Edinburgh; at the same time he and Robert Fraser of Overton were sureties for entering a servant of Fraser’s. He was also surety for Dand Davidson of Birnyrig. Along with his father and many other prominent Borderers, he signed a bond in 1571/2 to act against thieves. He was ‘younggar of Hundolye’ in 1572/3 when he swore allegiance to the Crown, with Richard of Edgerston as his surety (and apparently vice versa); he himself was surety for George of the Grange, as well as ‘Jock of the Knowe’. He married Christian, daughter of Thomas McDougall of Makerston. However, he had no issue, and Hundalee was eventually inherited by his sister Marie, who married Sir James Ker of Crailing, who became Lord Jedburgh. Andrew of Townhead (d.1674) stabbed James Douglas (brother of Sir William of Cavers) on their way to Jedburgh after dining together at Swanside. He subsequently tried to flee abroad, but was caught, tried and beheaded at Edinburgh Cross. He must have been related to other Rutherfords of Townhead and of the Hall. Andrew (17th C.) Hawick Town Clerk from 1670 until about 1673. Nothing else seems to be known about him. He was notary for the document drawn up (probably in 1672) for the Commission by the Town Council to discuss an equal division of the Common with the Earl of Queensberry. A man of the same name is recorded as schoolmaster in Ancrum in 1643 (but there is no obvious connection). Andrew (d.1664) 5th and youngest son of William of Wrightsland and Quarryholes, with his 3rd wife Isabel Stewart of Traquair. His father was eldest son of William, a ship’s captain in Leith, who was grandson of Archibald Rutherford, Canon of Jedburgh and descended from the Laird of Hunthill. He had a successful military career in the French service, where he became a Lieutenant General. He had 4 brothers, one of whom was a treasurer to the King of Spain. Coming to England after the restoration of Charles II, he was recommended by the King of France. He was created the 1st Lord Rutherford in 1661 and served as Governor of Dunkirk. In 1663 he created the 1st and only Earl of Teviot. In that year there was an inventory made of his possessions (amounting to almost £200,000 Scots, as well as a will. He was mentioned several times in the diaries of Samuel Pepys. He died in Tangiers after being sent there to be Governor by Charles II. Having no issue, he had named Sir Thomas of Hunthill as his heir. Andrew of Edgerston (1646/7–1718) 2nd son of John. He succeeded to Edgerston in 1686, his elder brother John having already died. He was probably the Laird in 1694 when tax was paid on 7 hearths at his house at Edgerston. He contributed £200 to the Darien Company in 1695. He died unmarried and the estates were inherited by his younger brother Thomas. He contributed a legacy to ‘poor lame soldiers’ and another to the University of Edinburgh. Andrew (17th C.) listed at Swinie among the poor of Southern Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Andrew (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Andrew (19th C.) farmer at Barnhills in the 1860s. Ann (18th C.) chambermaid at Midshiel in 1791, when she was working for Archibald Douglas. Archibald (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when George Turnbull of Hallrule had remission for several crimes, including his slaughter. Perhaps the same Archibald is also mentioned when John Davidson in Minto was allowed to ‘compone’ for stealing 10 ewes from him. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Rutherfords. Archibald (d.1685) 4th son of John of Hunthill. In 1670 he succeeded his brother Thomas in the lands and barony of Scraesburgh, otherwise known as Hunthill, as well as Newlands and Linton in Peeblesshire. He was recorded as owner of Hunthill, Scraesburgh and Groundhouseknow in 1678, valued at £1200. In 1680 he succeeded his brother Thomas as the 3rd Lord Rutherford and sat in Parliament as a peer. He died abroad, without issue, and was succeeded by his brother Robert. He was the basis for the Master of Ravenswood in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Bride of Lammermuir’, the bride being based on his betrothed, Janet Dalrymple. His testament was registered with the Commissariot of Peebles in 1691. Bertie (17th C.) recording being ‘of the Wood’ in 1643 when his lands in

By the Hawick 1760 and their children included John (b.1761) Caleb. He is surely the ‘Calib Rutherford, shoemaker’ on the subscription list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784 (even although he would have been quite young at the time). He lived to a ripe old age, and his drum is in the Museum. He appears in a cameo role in ‘The Gutterbludes’ – ‘Rob Rodger, he ca’s up the rear, And Caleb beats the drum’ [RM], ‘...Or Caleb rise to beat the drum, And I cry out ‘They come, they come!’’ [AD]. Charles (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Richardson in 1760 and their children included John (b.1761) and Thomas (b.1772). His son Charles died in Hawick in 1782. He witnessed a baptism for wright James Glendinning in 1766. Charles Faa Blyth (1824/5–1902) son of Esther Faa Blyth, who was the last Queen of the Gypsies. Born at Kirk yetholm, he spent 58 years of his life in England, but returned in 1898 to claim the gypsy crown. This was said to be to ‘boost the tourist trade’, the coronation being a pageant attended by thousands. He was visited in his palace by the Hawick Archaeological Society field trip in 1901. He died less than a year later, while sitting in his chair. Charles Dickson (1825/6–95) son of Robert and Jane Crawford. In 1841 he was an apprentice grocer living on the Sandbed. On the 1861 he was visiting his brother Walter at Mabonlaw. He went to Edinburgh as a young man and is said to have broken his leg when he kicked out at a rat, but hit something solid instead; he was attended to in his recovery by Christina Smart who he subsequently married. The couple had 6 children. He worked as a commercial traveller and lived at 21 Montague Street in Edinburgh, dying on Chalmers Street. Christina (1702–82) daughter of Thomas of Knowesouth. She may have inherited the family estate from her father, but this is unclear, since her brother John was also Laird. She married Gilbert Ainslie in Bedrule in 1724. Their eldest son was Thomas. David (17th C.) recorded ‘in Gramis’ in Abbotrule Parish in 1643. The lands were valued at £10, but it is unclear where this was. David (17th C.) mason listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is listed as a resident of the east-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He may be the David who married Marion Douglas and whose daughter Margaret (b.1682) was born in Hawick. David (19th/20th C.) started sheep sales in Selkirk. In 1883 he and James Scott acquired Loch Park when Andrew Oliver & Son moved to Weensland Road. They continued sales there until the early 1900s. Elizabeth see Elizabeth Scott. Eu- phan (17th C.) servant of Francis Scott, former minister of Hossendean. She is recorded in 1693 when Robert Scott was fined in Hawick for striking her ‘with ane rung, and breaking of her mistresses rocke when she was spinning there’. Francis (d.bef. 1841) watchmaker of the High Street, who was one of the first members of the Curling Club. He is recorded as a watch and clockmaker on the High Street in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Alison Henderson and their children were: Francis Elliot; Agnes; and William, who carried on the jewellery business. His wife was listed as a member of Allars Kirk in 1829. Sir George of Chatto (c.1380–c.1428) probably son of Robert of Rutherford and nephew of James of that Ilk. He was squire of Archibald, 4th Earl of Douglas. He was probably a survivor of the Battle of Vernueil in 1424. He married Janet Rutherford, possibly of Edgerston; she was related to the Lorraines who held the lands of Hummelknowes near Hawick and in 1428/9 was described as his ‘wyle quhylem’ (probably former wife). He is probably the ‘Georgio de Rutherfurde’ as witness to a charter for Home of Wedderburn about 1413.
and witness to a charter for Michael Ramsay at Lochmaben in 1414. He had a charter of confirmation for Chatto in 1429, but appears to have died shortly afterwards. He was succeeded by his son Robert. Other children were: Adam, Prior of the Anchorites in Ancrum; George of Langnewton; Walter of Redheugh; Katherine, who married William Cockburn of Henderland; and Helen, who married Sir Thomas Borthwick of Coldlaw and Bourhouse. George of Ettles Cleuch (15th C.) son of Robert of Chatto. He was a member of the panel for the inheritance of Branxholme and Buccleuch in 1492, when he is listed as ‘Georgium Ruthirfurde de Ediliscluch’. 1495 there was a ‘retour or inquest’ at Jedburgh, finding that he was heir to his father in the lands of Nether Chatto, Sharplaw, ‘Eddilliscluch’ and Hanging-shaw, as well as the west half of Scraesburgh and the lands of Hunthill. He also had a sasine for the same lands. George of Hunthill (d.c.1496) son of Robert and Margaret Glendinning. He could not have been Laird for very long. His wife’s name may have been Mariotta. He was succeeded by his son William. George of Longnewton (d.c.1499) 3rd son of George of Chatto. He was witness to a document dealing with Denholm Mains in 1483 and left his seal on a document relating to Synton in 1494. In 1493 he was surety for Henry Rauch in Longnewton (who had remission for the murder of Thomas Gibbinson), as well as for Patrick and Arthur Crawford in Longnewton Mill. He was Sheriff of Selkirk in 1494 when Alexander, Lord Erskine succeeded to his father’s lands of Synton and hereditary Sheriffship of Selkirkshire. In 1494/5 he was surety for Henry Ruth in Longnewton. Also in 1494/5 James Davidson in Raperlaw was allowed to compose for several crimes, including stealing 40 cows and 100 sheep from him at ‘Camys’, as well as 40 sheep from him at Sandystanes. In 1497 he gave a charter ‘from his place of Sandystanes’ to his grandson Walter. In the same year he was mentioned in an inquest relating to the boundaries of Melrose Abbey lands. He married Catherine Lyle. His sons Adam and Gilbert were recorded in 1498. He may already have been dead when the ‘Dominus de langnewtoun’ (no forename given) was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1502. A case at the 1502 Justice-aire at Jedburgh related how 120 of his sheep had been stolen from ‘Sandystanis’ by the Laird of Minto and ‘resett’ by Adam Scott ‘in Hawchesteris’ (probably Highchesters). Another case in 1502 involved Peter Turnbull in Bonchester, who was in a group who burned 120 bolls of barley and 60 bolls of wheat belonging to him, as well as stealing 25 oxen, 28 cows and 76 sheep from him, and burning 11 horses, and other goods of his at Barnhills. Peter Turnbull was also involved in burning 26 bolls of barley and 40 bolls of oats at ‘Sandystanis’, with the help of John Turnbull of Minto and others. One more case in 1502 recorded how Adam Gramanslaw had stoeln 41 sheep and 8 theaves of barley from him. In 1510 his son Adam had letters of rehabilitation for his crimes after spending months in Edinburgh Castle. George of Hunthill (15th/16th C.) son of William. In 1500 there was a dispensation from the Archbishop of Glasgow, allowing him to marry Elizabeth Turnbull, although they were related in the third and fourth degrees of consanguinity. In 1507 there was a ‘retour of inquest’, finding that he was heir of his father William of Hunthill, in the lands of Nether Chatto, Sharplaw, Ettles Cleuch and Hanging-shaw. In 1508 he was on the retour panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale. In 1510 he confirmed a charter of Scraesburgh for Ninian Glendinning. In 1520/1 he had a charter for a 4 merkland in Scraesburgh. His children included: Andrew, who succeeded; and married Helen, daughter of Philip Rutherford, younger of that Ilk; John of Hunthill, who married Christine Pringle; William, who married Christian Armstrong; and Archibald, who was Canon of Jedburgh and married a Douglas of Bonjedward. George of Hundalee (c.1470–c.1545) son of John, whom he succeeded. He was ‘junior Laird of Hundalee’ in 1502 when serving as surety for Lawrence in ‘quhitmeir’. He was a Bailie for Sir William Colville of Ochiltree in 1504. In 1508 he was part (along with his father) of the panel of retour for Adam Hepburn. He was one of the major Border Barons who signed a bond in 1525 to help the Earl of Angus, the Warden. In 1526 he was listed among the many Borderers in a remission for attacking the Earl of Arran; his sons Nicholas and Andrew were also listed. He had a charter for Hundalee in 1528. In 1538 he was charged with assisting ‘George Ruthirfurde, called Cokburne, John Ruthirfurde, called Jock of ye Green, and other rebels at the Kingis horn’. In 1539 he had a charter for Ashtrees. In 1544 he signed a bond to serve Henry VIII during the ‘Rough Wooing’, but in the following year the English burned Hundalee anyway. He was succeeded by Sir Nicholas, his son. George ‘Cockbank’ (16th C.) said to be a ‘great riever, thief and manslayer’. He was on a 1540 list of Scottish rebels ‘reset’ within England.
who the Wardens wanted captured. He is there ‘Geo. Rutherford called Cok Bankes’ and listed along with his brother ‘Hobbe’ and a son with unknown first name, as well as other Rutherfords.
He is probably the ‘George Ruthirfurde, called Cokburne’ listed along with John ‘called Jock of ye Green’ and other rebels who Ker of Cessford, Douglas of Cavers, Rutherford of Hundalee and Ker of Dolphinston were accused of assisting in 1538. About the same time he was captured and held in Carlisle Castle with his son Thomas and Tom Bell, probably so they could be exchanged for the Englishman Dr. Hillyard. In 1540 James V refused to exchange him for the churchman, but offered to swap him for any English lawbreaker; his fate is not recorded. He was probably related to ‘Robin’ and ‘Gawen’, who are also listed in 1540. He is probably the George recorded along with Thomas Turnbull in 1541, when they were accused of having been on a raid into England with 100 other Scotsmen in which John Routledge and Robert Noble were killed. George of Longnewton (16th C.) listed in 1553/4 among the Rutherfords in an assurance not to harm the Kers.
He is also recorded in 1560 on the bond to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords.
He was son of William, who was murdered earlier by Robert Ker of Newhall. He signed the bond ‘at the pen led by the notar’, suggesting that he could not write himself. George of the Grange (16th C.) signed a bond with John Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1557, along with Thomas Turnbull of Hartshaugh, Adam Turnbull of Woollee and Adam Turnbull of Billerwell. He was also part of the bond in same year among Turnbulls, Elliots and others to bring in William Nixon (‘Clement’s Will’). In 1560 he signed the bond (‘at the pen led by the notar’) to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords. In 1569 he was ‘George Ruthirfurde in the Grange’ when a set of Hames, Rutherfords and Kers were caution for him to remain in ward in Forfar. In 1572/3 he swore allegiance to the King. He was one of the arbitrators appointed for the Elliots in their feud with the Pringles. George of Fairnington (16th C.) probably son of William of Longnewton. He is listed as ‘George Ruthirfurde of Pharnyntoune’ when he witnessed the 1568/9 bond between the Scotts and the Kers, signed in Melrose. George of the Grange (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1618 as ‘younger in Abbotreull’ when he had a bond with Walter Turnbull of Bedrule.
This was on behalf of William Shiel of Fodder-lee. He could be the George ‘of Rule’ whose ‘Airs’ were recorded as owning land in Abbotrule Parish in 1643, valued at £20. George of Fairnington (16th/17th C.) probably son or grandson of the earlier George of Fairnington. He was signatory of the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638.
His name was written ‘G. Rutherforde of flairsttoune’. In 1643 he is recorded as owner of lands in Roxburgh Parish. He was closely related to the Rutherfords of Nisbet, Knowesouth and Ruecastle. He is probably the George ‘of Fairnitou’ who acted as bailie for a sasine for the Haliburtons at Friarshaw in 1606. He was fined in 1611 for the non-appearance of several other Rutherfords. He may be the George of Langnew-ton whose younger sons were Thomas, Adam and Patrick, from whom sprang the Rutherfords of Nisbet, Knowesouth and Ruecastle. The owner of lands in Cavers later in the 17th century sometimes transcribed as ‘Lady Fairnington’ is proba-ibly in fact Lady ‘Symington’, and unrelated to him. George (d.1651) said to be brother of John in East Nisbet. After the Union he received lands on Rede Water through marriage. He apparently had 21 sons, most of whom served the King during the Civil War. He died in the Battle of Worcester, along with 14 of his sons. George of Fairning-ton (17th/18th C.) son of George. He was served heir to his father in the lands of Fairnington in 1674. He could be the same as one of the other Georges, although this seems like a separate generation. He is probably the Laird who paid the land tax in Roxburgh Parish in 1678. He may be the George of Fairnington who married Elizabeth, daughter of Thomas (and Elizabeth Turnbull), who was son of Robert of Edgerston. George of Fairnington (17th/18th C.) son of George and Elizabeth Rutherford of Edgerston. He succeeded his father in 1692. He contributed £200 to the Darien Company in 1695. In 1686 he married Barbara, daughter of John Haliburton of New-mains and Margaret Rutherford of Edgerston; she died in 1750. Their children were: George, who succeeded, and killed his brother-in-law; David; Margaret, who married Robert Pringle of Clifton; and Elizabeth, who married Thomas Haliburton of Muirhouselaw, and secondly George Halibur-ton of Muirhouselaw, Lord Provost of Edinburgh.
George of Fairnington (b.1691) son of George and Barbara Haliburton of Newmans. In 1716 he slew Thomas Haliburton of Muirhouselaw in a drunken fight over the rights to a spring bordering their properties; the spring was afterwards known as the ‘bloody well’. He kept in hiding until it was Rutherford Rutherford married Mary Ann, daughter of James Stewart. They carried on his father's tailor's business at 60 High Street, later becoming a tobacconist. He married Mary (or 'Mina') Easton, probably in the 1820s. He may have been related to Francis, who was listed separately as a clockmaker at the same time. One of them was probably the Rutherford marked at about 39 High Street on Wood's 1824 map. George (b.c.1800) from Jedburgh, he was farm steward on the Minto estate. He married Mary (or 'Mina') Easton, probably in St. Boswells. In 1841 he was living at Minto Lillielaw Lodge with his wife and 4 children. Their children included: James (b.1825); Agnes (b.1827); Helen (b.1830); John (b.1833), partner in Turner & Rutherford’s in Hawick; and Isabel (b.1839). George (b.1806) joiner at Blacklee and Kirkstyle in Hobkirk Parish. His father was James, joiner at Bonchester Bridge, while several other brothers were also joiners. In 1841 he was listed as a labourer at 'Killin Knowe', and was a joiner at 'Blackley' in 1851. He married Agnes Inglis and their children included: James (b.1830); William (b.1832); Helen (b.1834); Isabella (b.1836); Thomas (b.1838); Janet (b.1839); Betty (b.1843), George (b.1845); and Margaret (b.1847). George (d.c.1895) son of James. He carried on his father's tailor's business at 60 High Street, later becoming a tobacconist. He married Mary Ann, daughter of James Stewart. They had a son, Thomas. After his death his wife carried on the business for a few years, before it was taken over by William Sharp. She later married Mr. Irving. Gilbert (15th C.) recorded as ‘Gilberti de Ruthirfurde’ in 1437 when Walter Scott of Buccleuch was granted lands in Eckford for capturing him. It is unclear how he was related to other Rutherfords. One suggestion is that he is the same man as William, 3rd son of Sir Richard and Jean Douglas. Gilbert (1832/3–99) Hawick resident. In 1852 he married Agnes Park, and she died in 1907, aged 75. Their children included: Maggie, who died young; William, who died at West Meridan, Connecticut, U.S.A.; Mary; Frank; Betsy; John; and Gilbert, tweed merchant. He died in Howlands Terrace and is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Gilbert (b.1863) son of Gilbert. He became a tweed merchant in Hawick and lived at 3 Douglas Road. He married Nellie, daughter of farm steward George Moffat. He secondly married Esther Aitken, sister of Bailie George Aitken. His children included: George, cashier with Blaikie's coal merchants; and Gilbert, who died in WWI. Gregory (13th C.) one of the earliest of the family on record. He was witness to a document relating to Fairnington in the Melrose Abbey charters in about 1214. He witnessed another document (relating to Eliston) for Melrose Abbey in about 1220 to 1243; he is listed there as ‘Gregor de Ruthirfurd’. He witnessed 5 other documents in about the same period. Helen (d.1544) daughter of Philip, who was eldest son of James of that Ilk and Wells. She was also known as ‘Ellen’. She managed to gain the estates of Rutherford and Wells after the death of her brother Richard, the other lands being inherited by her uncle Thomas. She was served heir in 1502/3, but the male heirs objected, and it took until 1505 to go through the courts. She also later gained Edgerston. She delivered the lands of Rutherford, Wells and Edgerston into the hands of the King, so they could be infefted to her and her husband in 1505 and 1506. Also in 1506 her husband received a pardon for the murder of Thomas Rutherford within Jedburgh Abbey. About the same time the King confirmed to her the 'half merk land of Bethirroul' near the parish church, 'held in tack by Herbut Turbul'. In 1511 James Douglas of Cavers resigned his superiority of Rutherford and Wells to her and her husband. In 1537 her lands of 'Hurdhouse and Theifknouis' were attacked by a large band led by the Kers of Auld Roxburgh...
Rutherford

and ‘Stokstruther’. She married 4 times, her husbands being: Sir John Forman of Davine (who had been one of her tutors); Sir Thomas Ker of Mersington, who was killed by the Rutherfords, apparently as the newly weds left the church; Andrew Rutherford of Hunthill; and Patrick Home of Broomhouse. She gallantly defended the tower of Broomhouse from the English force led by Sir Ralph Evers, eventually being burned to death there, along with her children. The cruelty of this act was used as a rallying cry by the Scots at the Battle of Ancrum Moor. Since she never had a surviving son to succeed her, despite her desperation to do so, her lands passed to other family members. Henry Thomas (18th/19th C.) recorded at Redfordgreen as Commissioner of Selkirkshire in 1819. He may only have been given the lands in order to be a voter, since there is no evidence he ever lived in the area. James of that Ilk (c.1395–1454) son of Sir Richard. Along with his brother Nichol he was appointed guarantor of a treaty with the English in 1449. He is probably the ‘Jamys of Rothirfurd’ who witnessed a document between Haig of Bemersyde and Melrose Abbey in 1425. In 1427 he was ‘Jacobo de Rothirfurd’ when he witnessed the charter granting the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1429/30 he was an the ‘retour’ panel for the lands of Caverton. In 1430 he witnessed a contract between Andrew Rule of Primside and Andrew Ker of Altonburn. He witnessed a charter of 1435 transferring lands of Branxholme etc. in the Barony of Hawick from John Inglis to his son Thomas. He may be the James who witnessed the sasine for Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee in 1436. He also witnessed a sasine for the lands of Grahamslaw in 1436/7, and was a bailie of Sir William Crichton of that Ilk when he infefted the same lands in 1439. In 1439 he was on a retour for Douglas of Bonjedward and in 1446/7 he was on a ‘retour’ panel for Ker of Altonburn. In 1447 he was witness to a feu charter between Simon de Routledge and Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch for Burnflat and part of Birkwood, near the present day Duke’s Wood. He held the lands of Edgerston at least by 1448 when he had a sasine. In that year he was ‘Jacobo de Rudderfurde de eodem’ when he witnessed a charter for Stephen Scott of Castletlaw. In 1449 he and his brother Nicholas acted as guarantors for a treaty with the English. In 1451 and 1452 he had charters for the lands of ‘Leithbert, Leithbertshiels’, etc. He married Christian a grand-daughter of Sir Robert Lauder and was succeeded by his son James. James of that Ilk and Wells (c.1420–93/4) son of James. He was the first Laird of Wells in Rulewater. Note there is some debate over these generations, one genealogy suggestion being that there are 2 separate Jameses covering this entry. In 1455 he had remission for certain rents because of the damage he endured on the death of his father in defence of the realm. He was the ‘lorde of Rutherfurde’ on the panel of 1456 which acquitted Andrew Ker of Altonburn of helping the English burn lands around Jedburgh. In 1457 he received the patronage of the Kirk of Rutherford (previously belonging to the Earl of Douglas), was a Conservator of a truce with the English and was appointed a Warden of the Marches. In 1464 he had a sasine for Hownam. In 1464/5 he was on the panel for the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffship of Roxburgh to Archibald Douglas and on the panel for deciding on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and Flex. In 1468 he was part of an agreement with the Homes and Kers over lands of Crailing. In 1471 he received a charter of the lands of Hownam, Capehope and Swinset, confirmed along with his wife in 1483. He is probably the James who had a debt relating to Crown lands in 1471, with Thomas Turnbull and Robert Rutherford as pledges. In 1482 he had a charter for the patronage of Bedrule Kirk. In 1483 he was also witness to a document dealing with Denholm Mains and another for Smalholm. He was appointed a commissioner for settling the Border marches in 1487, under the designation of Lord Rutherford. In 1488 he was mentioned in a charter of James III re-granting the regality of Cavers to William Douglas; there he is stated ‘for the favour which he bears to the said William Douglas’ to perform his service to the King. He gained the barony of Edgerston in 1492/3 and is recorded in that year when his superior James Douglas confirmed the lands of Rutherford and Wells (or ‘Walls’, in the Barony of Cavers) to him and his heirs. His possessions described in 1492/3 included the patronage of Bedrule Kirk. He is last recorded in early 1494 when he was on the panel for Alexander Erskine inheriting Synton. He married Margaret, daughter of Thomas, Lord Erskine. Their children included: Philip, whose son Richard succeeded, and whose widow married Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch; John, recorded as son of the Laird of Rutherford in 1493; Thomas of Edgerston, who succeeded his nephew as Rutherford of that Ilk; Andrew; Robert; Christian, who married Sir Robert Ker of Caverton; and Janet, who married John.
Rutherford of Hundalee. He was succeeded by his grandson Richard, who was the last Rutherford of Rutherford. James (d.c.1500) son of Adam, he was murdered at the Kirk of Hawick. In 1502 Peter Turnbull in Bonchester had remission for his murder, as well as a long list of other crimes. Some other Turnbuls (accomplices of Peter) were ‘at the horn’ for being involved in his murder. Probably the same James was mentioned in 1494/5 when Patrick Turnbull at Wauchope Tower ‘componed’ for associating with the Turnbuls who were responsible for his murder.

James (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when he was part of a letter of ‘respite and protection’ for the friends and family of William Douglas of Cavers (Sheriff of Teviotdale), while he was away in Denmark. Other men named were William Douglas (heir of the Sheriff) and William, Robert and Thomas Rutherford. It seems likely that they were members of the family of Rutherford and Wells. He could be the same as the James listed among the Borderers pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran, recorded between the Rutherfords of Hundalee and of Grange. James (17th C.) tenant at Kirkhouses in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694, when he paid for 8 hearths. James (17th C.) resident of Orniston on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (b.1697/8) shepherd in Hawick Parish. He worked as shepherd for 20 years at Alton Croft, 14 years at Nether Southfield and later at Langflat. In 1761 he was 3 men selected to perambulate the boundary between Fenwick and Alton Croft to regularise it. He was a widower in 1767 when he gave evidence in the court case regarding the division of the Common. James of Bowland (d.1747) only son of Robert of Bowland and Anne Murray. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire 1730–34, succeeding his cousin John Pringle. He also served as Commissary for Peebles in 1733. He was a ruling elder at the 1737 General Assembly of the Church of Scotland. He was listed on a memo-

Alison and Mary (who married Andrew Wight). James (b.1825/6) born in New York state, he was a hosiery warehouseman in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 1 Teviot Place (which may be the same as 4 Teviot Road). He married Isabella Elliot and their children included: George (b.1856); and Thomas Elliot (b.1861). James (b.1842/3) born in Roberton Parish. In 1901 he was shepherd at Dodburn. His wife was Janet and they had a daughter who was also Janet. James (b.1843) son of William, farmer at Ferniechirst Mill. He was farm steward at Kershaugh and in 1877 or 1878 moved to Gatehousecote, where he was also farm steward. By 1891 he had moved to Chesters Grange in Ancrum Parish. He married Isabella Hood and their children were William Rae (b.1877), John Hood (b.1878), Cecilia Richardson (b.188), Henry James (b.1883), Charles (b.1885/6) and Robert (b.1887/8). James (b.1876) son of Tom, blacksmith at Boucher Bridge. He was educated in Hobkirk and served his apprenticeship with his father. He worked in Kelso and Hawick, returned to Boucher, worked with a shipbuilders in Belfast and then in Edinburgh, before taking over as blacksmith at Bonchester in 1899. In about 1904 he became tenant of the inn at Bonchester and gave up the blacksmith’s business. He married Margaret Sparks, who was sister of his brother Thomas’ wife. James (20th C.) Managing Director of Turner & Rutherford’s at Mansfield Mills. He was in this position at the time of the 1955 fire, which was not long before the firm foelded. Jane see Mrs. James Rutherford Oliver. Janet (17th C.) landowner in Abbotrule Parish in 1663. She paid £70 on the Land Tax Rolls. Perhaps she was widow of a man who formerly owned lands in Abbotrule, for example ‘Bertie Rutherford of the Wood’. Mrs. Janet (18th/19th C.) closest relative of William Turnbull, last Laird of Langraw. She inherited the property sometime in the 1790s. She married a Mr. Easton, who settled in America, and sold Langraw in 1801. Jean (18th/19th C.) wife of Caleb, she was known as ‘Jean Caleb’, and her surname is uncertain. Together with ‘the Noted Beattie’ they locally performed ‘Wild Man of Bengal’ shows. Her snuff box is in the Museum, with the date February 22 1803. John of Hundalee (15th C.) probably son of Nicholas of Hundalee. In 1434 he was ordered to leave Jedburgh Abbey and to allow the Abbot, Thomas Cranston, to take possession (probably a dispute over burial rights in the choir between the 2 families). He was witness to the sasine for the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfhopelee in 1436. John, son of Nicholas of Yetholm and Grubet was also a witness, showing that they are different men: he is there recorded as ‘Johannis de Rutherfurde de Hundwelle’. In 1464/5 he was ‘Johne of Ruthirforde of Hundwelley’ when he was on the panel to rule on the dispute over Kirkton Mains and the Flex. In 1467 he is recorded as ‘Johannis Ruthirfurde, dominus de Hundwalyey’ when he was appointed by Parliament (along with John Ainslie of Doiphinston) to make an evaluation of Roxburghshire. He appears to have married Margaret Charteris (daughter of Thomas of Cagnore) and then a daughter of Sir Thomas Cranston. The contemporary John appears easy to confuse with him, while the later John of Hundalee was possibly his son, but more likely to have been son of Andrew of Hundalee. John (d.c.1470) son of Nicholas of Yetholm and Grubet. Along with his father he witnessed the sasine of Woollee and Wolfhopelee to David Home in 1436. This was also witnessed by John of Hundalee, showing they are 2 separate people, even although he may be the later John of Hundalee; this is clearly confusing, and family histories may be muddled. In 1450 he was on the panel for the ‘retour’ of the Baron of Hawick to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1453 he had a lease of the Crown lands of ‘Kyncavil’. In 1457 he had a sasine for lands at Falnash, Hassendean, Grubet and Kirk Yetholm. In the Exchequer Rolls of 1458 he is probably the John, heir of the deceased Nicholas who had previously dealt with the accounts for Jedburgh. He firstly married Elizabeth, sister of John Rutherford of Yetholm. His second wife was Margaret Turnbull. He was succeeded by his son Andrew of Hundalee and had another son George. John of Edgerston (d.bef. 1501). In 1494 he was fined 10 pounds at the Judiciary Court for failing to produce Walter (probably a relative). He was one of the sureties (with Sir Robert Ker) for the appearance of Robert Langlands to answer to his murder of chaplain George Fairneylaw in 1494/5; they had to pay £20 when Langlands failed to show up. In the same year he was also surety for Thomas, son of Nicholas Rutherford, who had killed Duthac Rutherford, for James Davidson in Raperlaw, George Davidson in Raperlaw and for the Grahamslaws of Newton. He also served as surety for others in 1494/5 and was fined for the non-appearance of some of them. He was possibly second son of James Rutherford of that Ilk and elder brother of Thomas of Edgerston. He is probably the John, son of the Laird of Rutherford, who witnessed a sasine for lands in Denholm and Cavers in 1491/2, and also the John, son of the Laird of Rutherford, who was surety for a resident of Edgerston in 1493. John (15th/16th C.) brother of Ninian in Ancrum. At the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1494/5, he was surety for himself, as well as his brother acting for him. He failed to appear and was to be fined at the next court. At the 1502 Justice-aire he was surety for his brother Ninian in Ancrum, as well as for himself and for Andrew Laidlaw in Edgerston; failing to appear, he was denounced as a rebel and his goods seized. John of Hundalee (c.1450–c.1524) son of Andrew of Hundalee. In 1491/2 he was recorded as ‘Johanni Ruthirfurde de Hundole’ when he had a charter for the lands of Ruecastle (resigned by Thomas Dickson), as well as Samieston (resigned by Thomas Ker of Cessford). In 1492 he obtained a decree from the Privy Council against William and Archibald Douglas of Cavers, as well as John Gledstains of that Ilk for 100 merks due to his grandfather, Nicholas. He was a member of the panel of ‘retour’ for the lands of Synton in 1494, where he is ‘Johannem Ruthirfurde de Hundole’. At the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1494/5 his ‘suitor’ was Adam Sluthman, who was present at the court for his lands of Ruecastle. In 1499 he witnessed a document for Walter Ker of Cessford. In 1502 he presented Nicholas Oliver at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh, to ‘give suit’ for his lands of Grubet. In 1502 he and his brother Thomas had remission ‘for intercommuning with ye Ruthirfurdes, ye Kingis rebels’. Also in 1502 he served as surety for Richard in Littledean, for James in Nisbet and for John ‘Fiffe’, and he was fined for the non-appearance in court of William Turnboll in Roxburgh. In 1504 he acted as a specially appointed ‘bailie in that part’ for the sasine of Maxton Craig granted to his grandfather, Nicholas. In 1508 he was on the retour panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale. He was appointed as temporary Sheriff of Roxburghshire in 1509 to give the inheritance of Cavers Barony to James, son and heir of Sir William Douglas; he is recorded as ‘John Ruthirfurde of Hundole’ and George is also listed (so possibly related). The house at Hundalee was destroyed by the English while he was Laird. He married Christian Boyd. Their children included: George, who succeeded; Lucia, who married Adam, son of Philip Nisbet of that Ilk; Janet, who married Adam Grimslaw; Margaret, who married Ralph Ker of Primside Loch; and Alison, who had a marriage contract with George, eldest son of William Ker in Lintalee, but appears to have died before the wedding, since her parents were ordered to pay 90 merks to Ker in 1500. John (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1502 when the Coroner, William Cranston, was fined for failing to arrest him. His name is given as ‘Johanne ruthirfurde’ called ‘fiffe’ in ‘le grange’. In a separate court entry he was found to be infirm, with his surety being John of Hundalee. It is unclear how he might be related to other Ruthers of Grange. John ‘the Cock o Hunthill’ (c.1510–77) son of George, he succeeded his older brother Andrew. There was a ‘retour of inquest’ in 1529, finding that he was heir of his brother Andrew in the lands of Nether Chatto and others. A further ‘retour of inquest’ in 1558 established that he was heir to his brother in the lands of Capehope. In 1530 he resigned lands in Scraesburgh in favour of himself and his wife Christian Hoppringle. He had charters for several lands and baronies in the 1530s. He was convicted in 1538 of assisting several men who were ‘at the horn’; also convicted were James Douglas of Cavers, other Ruthers and also Kers. In 1541 he was tenant of Blackhaugh in Tweed. He was probably the Laird of Hunthill who was accused of resetting English fugitives in 1541, specifically 9 Hunters of Tynesdale. In 1545 he was among lairds in Teviotdale who signed a bond to settle feuds. He was probably the ‘lard of Hunthill’ who signed a bond of assurance with Somerset at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. In 1549 he was listed among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English in raids upon the farms of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. In 1553/4 he was listed among the Ruthers in an assurance not to harm the Kers; he signed with his hand led by the notary and the pledge for his sons was John of the Knowe. Also in 1553/4 he was on the panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather’s lands of Branxholme and Buccleuch. In 1558 he granted the lands of Scraesburgh (occupied by Thomas Rutherford and others) to his son and heir John. In 1560 he was named on the bond to settle the feud between the Kers and the Ruthers; he and his son John was said to be responsible for the murder of Andrew Ker of Corbethouse and as part of the restitution his 2nd son William was to marry a daughter of James Ker of Corbethouse, while his son and heir John was to offer his sword to ask forgiveness from James Ker. the bond ‘at the pen led by the notar’, meaning that he could not write himself. In 1561 he was listed among Border lairds who appeared before the Queen to promise to present the names of those who were guilty of theft. In 1564 he was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1565 he is listed among men complained about by the Warden of the Middle Marches for not presenting accused men from their lands. In 1565 he was explicitly instructed (along with Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst) to enter one of his servants at the next truce day, to answer accusations from Englishmen; later this was increased to 2 servants to relieve the Warden, and then he himself was warded in Edinburgh Castle to redress the charges against his servants, then was ordered to pay the expenses to Ker of Cessford. Also in 1565 he signed the ‘Band of Teviotdale’ (but helped by the notary). Additionally, he was among landowners summoned before the Privy Council in 1565 to try to resolve the feud between Sir Nicholas Rutherford of Houndae and the people of Jedburgh. In 1566 he was ordered to enter ‘Sym Oliver, Cuddy Hendirsoun, and Mathow Dowglas’ to the Warden. He was among men re-ordered to appear before the Privy Council in 1567 regarding order in the Middle Marches. He signed the bond of peace for the Borders in 1569. Also in 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting superiority of her father’s lands in Wilton. Additionally in 1569 he was a surety for Robert Ker of Lochtour, as well as for Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and was directed to relieve Sir Walter Ker of Cessford of a debt. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves and was surety for David Oliver in Whiteside. He served as surety before the Privy Council in 1571 and 1577. In 1576 he was surety for Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. In 1572/3 he gave his assurances that he would not help Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, with Richard of Edgerston as surety. He signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’ in 1573, ‘with my hand at the pen’. He married Christine Hoppringle and Isobel, daughter of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford. His children included: John, who succeeded; Mariotta, who married William Rutherford of Leith; Mary, who married David Ainslie of Fala; Betty, who married Richard Rutherford of Edgerston; Steven; and Thomas of ‘Grundisnike’. He may have secondly married a daughter of Ker of Greenhead. He could be the ‘vmquhile Maister Johne Rutherfurde’ named in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574 in connection with the lands of Lanton. John (d.bef. 1560) probably son of Thomas and brother of Richard and Philip. He was said to have ‘dwelt in the tofts’, ‘had six fingers on each hand and six toes on each foot’ and to have been ‘of memorable strength and courage’. He is listed being ‘in Edzarstoun’ (i.e. Edgerston) in 1560 on the document attempting to settle the feud between the Rutherfords and the Kers. He was killed by Sir Andrew Ker of Littledean and his friends. Also ‘Johne Rutherfurde thair’ (hence probably related) was mutilated in the same attack. As part of the attempt to resolve the feud, the daughter of Philip in Edgerston was to marry Andrew, son of Robert Ker of Newhall. John of the Knowe (16th C.) recorded in 1553/4 as a pledge for the sons of the Laird of Hunthill, that they would keep order. He described as being ‘in Know’ in the bond of 1560 to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords. He was one of the signatories of the bond, and hence must have been a fairly important family representative at that time. In 1572/3 he was ‘Jok of the Know’ when he swore allegiance to the Crown, with Andrew of Hundalee and Richard of Edgerston as sureties. In 1573 he was among men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm, although they were acquitted because Kerr had reset the fugitive Kerr of Ferniehirst; he was there recorded as ‘Jok of the Know in Nisbett’. He was ‘of the Know’ in about 1578 when he and other Rutherfords and Turnbulls agreed to annul all former bonds and swear allegiance to the Crown. Also in about 1578 he was involved in a bond between the Kers and Rutherfords. Perhaps he is the same as one of the contemporary Johns. John of Hunthill (16th C.) son of John. He was known as ‘the Cock’, like his father. In 1558 his father granted to him (and his wife) the 8 husbandlands of Scraesburgh that was occupied by Thomas Rutherford and others. In 1565 he was ‘of Hunthill, youngar’ when he was one of the sureties for Robert Kerr of Woodhead. In 1578/9 there is mention of a feud between him (along with other Rutherfords, Douglas of Bonjedward and Turnbull of Bedrule) and the Kers of Cessford. Along with his father and friends, he was said to be responsible for the murder of Andrew Ker of Corbethouse; as part of the bond of 1560 to end the family feud he agreed to ask forgiveness from James Ker of Corbethouse by offering him his sword. In 1571 he was younger of Hunthill when he was one of the sureties for the leaders of the Olivers. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves and also acted as surety for tenants in Oxnam. In 1573 he was among the men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm; however, the group claimed they did it because Kerr had reset the fugitive Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and were acquitted. He is probably the John of Hunthill who signed a bond with other Rutherfords and Turnbulls in about 1578 and another between the Kers and the Rutherfords. He is listed among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4 and on a bond of support for the Warden, Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst, at about the same time.

He is recorded in 1590 among men of Teviotdale accused of breaking their bond with Englishman Edmund Crawster. He married his cousin Grizel Home and also married Agnes Kirkton (perhaps in 1558, when the couple were granted lands in Scraesburgh). His children included: William, who may have been the eldest son (and if so, predeceased his father), recorded in 1592 when he was denounced as a rebel; Thomas, who succeeded and who married a Cranston of that Ilk; John, ancestor of the Rutherfords of Bankend, who married Barbara, daughter of James Gledstains of Cocklaw and that Ilk; Grizel, who married Walter Ormiston of that Ilk; Jean, who married Adam Rutherford of Chattto; George; Andrew; Percie; Steven; Robert; and 5 other daughters. Richard of Littleheugh may also have been his son. John ‘Jock’ of Tofts (16th C.) probably son of Richard of Edgerston. He was said to be a man of pridigious strength, who had 6 digits on each hand and foot. He was named in several accusations of raids on English farms in 1590. His son Andrew is also listed in some of them.

John (16th/17th C.) 2nd surviving son of John ‘the Cock’ of Hunthill. In 1619 he was referred to as ‘Master John Ruthirfurd, sheriff-depute of County Roxburgh’. In 1623 he had the lands of Hyndhousefield, Howdenbraes and Maison-Dieu confirmed to him, his wife and eldest son. He married Barbara, daughter of James Gledstains of Cocklaw. His eldest son was John of Bankend, who served as Provost of Jedburgh. John of Hunthill (17th C.) son of Thomas of Hunthill and Jean Cranston. He was served heir to his father and grandfather in 1610.

In 1615 the lands of Nether Chatto, ‘Eidlescleuch’, ‘Hanganshaw’ and Gateshawfield were conveyed to him and his wife by James Ker of Chatto. He represented Roxburghshire in Parliament in 1630. His lands of Hunthill, Scraesburgh, etc. were valued at £1200 in 1643. He was still alive in 1666 when he was among the Rutherfords who made an agreement concerning the family burial place at Jedburgh Abbey. He married Alison, daughter of Andrew Kerr, 1st Lord Jedburgh. His children included: Andrew, who succeeded, but had no male heirs; John, who succeeded his elder brother, but died unmarried; Sir Thomas, who succeeded his 2 older brothers and became the 2nd Lord Rutherford; Archibald, 3rd Lord Rutherford; Robert, 4th Lord Rutherford; Lilias, who married Henry Ker of Graden; Isobel, who married Alexander Burnet of Carllops; Helena, who married Thomas Lewin of Amble; Anna, who married Rev. Thomas Abernethy of Hownam; and Margaret, who married William Elliot of Dinlabyre. John (d.1679) 2nd son of Richard of Littleheugh. His older brother Walter died without issue and he succeeded his father in 1626. His lands included ‘Capehope vocatis Phillop-hope, Hardroddis, Maksydbank, Priesteschawis, &c.’, to which he was served heir in 1643, with confirmation in 1666. He married Euphiam, daughter of Walter Gledstains of Dod. He was succeeded by his sons Walter and John. John (17th C.) recorded in Abbotrule Parish in 1643. He owned lands valued at £140, but the name of the property is not listed. John of Knowesouth (d.c.1665) transcribed ‘de Cowsothe’ in the 1666 services of heirs. In that year his son Thomas (referred to as ‘junior’, presumably meaning he was a minor) was served heir to his lands of Ruescastle, including Harden Mains and Newtonhaugh. He was described as already deceased in 1672 when his son Andrew became a merchant’s apprentice in 1672. He was succeeded by his son Thomas, and another son Robert became an apothecary’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1673. John of Edgerston (c.1622–86) eldest son of Robert and Margaret Riddell. In 1643, 1646 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. He raised a troop in the 1640s and fought for King Charles; it is said that at the Battle of Dunbar he was severely wounded and all but 5 of his men were killed, and he lost a leg while defending the bridge at Worcester. In 1654 he was one of the local men who signed an attestation about the ‘carriage and deportment of the deceased Francis Earl of Buccellent’; this was part of efforts to have the fines reduced on the Buccellent estate that had been imposed by Cromwell for the Earl supporting King Charles. In 1654/5 he and Robert (Town Clerk of Jedburgh) were acquitted of liability for a sum of £300, which was taken from the tax-collector by ‘a strong party of mostroopers’. In 1658 he was one of 2 commissioners sent by 20 ‘gentlemen and heritors’ of Roxburghshire to oppose payment requested from the county. In 1666 he was among the Rutherfords who made an agreement concerning the family burial place at Jedburgh Abbey. After the Restoration he commanded a troop of dragoons who kept order in the Borders. He paid the land tax in 1678 for £2700 in Jedburgh Parish. Also in 1678 he was a Commissioner for Roxburghshire for raising money for the King. He married Barbara Abernethy, daughter of the Bishop of Caithness (and related to the family that had earlier possessed lands at Teindside and Harwood south of Hawick, with his mother being a Murray of Philiphaugh). He had 4 sons and 12 daughters, including: John, who died before him; Andrew, who succeeded, but died without issue; Thomas, who succeeded Andrew; and Robert of Bowland, who married Ann, daughter of Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh. His testament was recorded in 1682. John of Knowesouth (17th/18th C.) son of Thomas and Cecilia Douglas. He married Isabella, daughter of William Scott of Raeburn in 1711. He may have been a doctor, and succeeded his father before 1715. His sister Ann married William Chisholme, son of Robert and grandson of Walter of Stiches. He was succeeded by his son John, and had a daughter, who was also Ann. John of Laidfield (17th/18th C.) descendant of John of Laidfield (d.c.1686), who was Provost of Jedburgh. His father may have been Adam. He was ‘younger’ in 1712 when he married Margaret, daughter of the deceased William Rutherford of Falla, this taking place at Hummelknowes. Sir John of Edgerston (1687–1747) son of Thomas. He was knighted in 1706 and succeeded to Edgerston in 1720. He was mentioned in 1735 in the deposition where the widow of Robert Scott of Falmash (his sister Violet) sold her property on the Howe gate to Patrick Hardie. He is probably the Sir John who paid the window tax in Jedburgh in 1748. He married Elizabeth, daughter of William Cairncross of Langlee in 1710. They had a large family, including: John (b.1712), who succeeded; William (b.1714) of Nether Ancrum; Thomas (b.1715), who married Martha Town from York and whose sons Richard and John were in the Navy; Susannah (d.1791), who married Alexander Pringle of Whytbank; Robert of Faimington (b.1723), who became a Russian Baron; James (d.1742), who was unmarried; Walter (1723–1804), who married Mary, daughter of Gen. Alexander, and whose son John was an American politician; Mary, who married Sir Alexander Nisbet of Dean; Elizabeth, who married John Horsburgh of that Ilk; Jean, who married Charles Inglis of Manorhead; Hugh, who had 4 daughters; Archibald; Jean; and Agnes. He secondly married Sarah, daughter of Sir John Nisbet of Dean (sister of his son-in-law). Their children were: Henry of Hunthill, who married Agnes Launder; and Christian, who married Rev. Dr. Davidson of Muirhouse. John (1695–1779) born in Yarrow, son of John, minister there, he was descended from the Rutherfords of Hunthill. He was educated in Selkirk and at Edinburgh University. He became a partner in a medical practice in Edinburgh in 1721 and they petitioned the University to start teaching Medicine, the 4 becoming the first Professors of Medicine there. He delivered clinical lectures in the Royal Infirmary, beginning the relationship between the university and the hospital. He firstly married Jean Swithton. His son Daniel was a physician and botanist, and his daughter Anne was mother of Sir Walter Scott. John of Edgerston (1712–58) son of Sir John of that Ilk and Elizabeth Cairncross. He trained as an advocate and was elected M.P. for Roxburghshire in 1734, being re-elected in 1741. However, later that year his younger brother Walter convinced him to go to America, where he joined the Independent Regiment of Foot in New York. In 1756 he became a Major in the Royal American Regiment. In 1737 he married Elleonor, daughter of Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto; she died in 1797 at her house in George Square, Edinburgh. They had 11 children, most of whom were born in America, and 7 of whom survived to adulthood: John, who succeeded; Jean (or Jane) married William Oliver of Dinlabyre; Robert (d.1780), who served with the East India Company; Archibald (d.1790) who was an army Captain; Eleanor (d.1822), unmarried; Elizabeth, married Andrew Sinclair of Hermandston and was mother of Lord Sinclair; and Agnes (1758–1840), who died unmarried. He died at Ticonderago and his family then relocated back to Scotland. John of Knowesouth (d.1788) son of John and Isabella Scott. He was served heir to Knowesouth in 1728 and in 1739 married Mary, daughter of William Kerr of Abbotrule, this marriage ending in divorce. It appears that he was mentally ill, and the records describe years of abuse before she finally left him in 1749. He paid the window tax in Bedrule Parish

was the Edinburgh agent for Jedburgh; Charles of Rev. Andrew Chatto, minister of Morebattle.

Jedburgh in 1811. He married Eleanor Chalk as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of members of the Jedforest Club. He died in the early 1800s. He could be the John who was recorded at Knowesouth in 1797, where he owned 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse, as well as 2 non-working dogs. He may be the Rutherford of Knowesouth who was eldest son of Maj. John of Mossburnford, and was an agent for Jedburgh in Edinburgh, dying in 1801. On the other hand, he could be the Capt. John who died in 1833 and was considered as the last of his line. John (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Shiplaw Cross in 1780. This was the highest cottage in Cavers Parish. He had a son James, who was a joiner at Bonchester Bridge and his great-grandson was blacksmith at Bonchester Bridge. Note that Tancred lists him as James rather than John. John of Edgerston (1748–1834) son of John of Edgerston and that Ilk. He was born in America, while his father was in the army there. He succeeded to Edgerston following his father’s death in 1758 (his father having been overseas since succeeding Sir John in about 1749). He owned land at ‘Rink’ in Hawick, which was used for the October market from 1779. He was Vice-Lieutenant for Roxburghshire and was already on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. In 1780 he was appointed Major and Captain in the Southern Regiment of Fencible-men and by 1797 was in command of the Roxburghshire Yeomanry (Militia). In 1788 he was described as a ‘popular man’ in a private list of voters in Roxburghshire, and was also said to be connected with the interests of the Duke of Buccleuch. He was additionally listed among the voters of Selkirkshire in 1788. His estate in Jedburgh Parish was valued at more than £2000 in 1788, and he also owned other lands in Oxnam Parish. He paid tax on 2 male servants in 1778, and was taxed for having male and female servants through the 1780s into the 1790s as well as for owning a carriage in the period 1788–98 and for having horses and dogs in the period 1785–97, including 8 carriage or saddle horses and 4 non-working dogs. In 1797 he was knocked off his horse in Jedburgh and struck in the head, but fully recovered. In 1803 he became Colonel-Commandant of both battalions of Roxburghshire volunteers. He was listed as ‘Major’ on the 1808 subscription list for Jamieson's Scots dictionary. He paid the land tax on his estate in 1811, and also owned Overton. He was listed as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1805 and 1819. He served as M.P. for Selkirkshire 1802–06 and Roxburghshire 1806–12. He was one of the founder members of the Jedforest Club in 1810. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811.

In 1787 he married Mary Ann, daughter of Maj.-Gen. Alexander Leslie-Melville and died without issue. He left the lands of Edgerston to William Oliver of Dinlalyre, son of his sister Jane, and Fairnington to Charles, son of John Rutherford of Mossburnford. There is a watercolour sketch of him by Lord Sinclair. John (18th C.) resident of Alton in Wilton Parish. In 1777 he married Janet Notman. Their children included: Thomas (b.1783); and Robert (b.1785).

The witnesses in 1779 were George Scott and James Lorraine. John (18th C.) gamekeeper at Knowesouth in 1794, when he was working for Thomas Rutherford. John (d.c.1805) eldest son of Thomas of Knowesouth. He apprenticed as a lawyer to William Riddell and became Writer to the Signet in 1798. He died after succeeding his father. He died without issue and the Knowesouth estate was inherited by his brother George, who also died without issue. John (18th/19th C.) recorded as owner of a horse at Synton Mill in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Newbigging in Hawick Parish in 1797. He was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs. Capt. John of Knowesouth (d.c.1830). He died unmarried and so the family estate passed to Charles, eldest son of his oldest sister, who sold it. He is probably the Capt. John who is listed as owner on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He must be different from the Capt. John recorded earlier. John (b.1805) son of James, joiner at Bonchester Bridge. He was a joiner at Old Gatehousecote in Hobkirk Parish. By 1851 he was a joiner at Old Belses. He married Helen Curran Murray in 1831. Their children included Robert, James, Walter, Isabella, John, Helen and George. In 1855 the family emigrated to Australia, settling in Tazmania, where several sons worked as carpenters. Rev. John Hunter (19th C.) evangelical minister from Kelso from the early 1840s. The Congregational Church in Kelso started in 1841 and met in the Friends' Meeting house there. He led the first communion service of what would become the Hawick Congregational Kirk in May of 1848. This was in the Suscription Rooms, with an audience of about 45 people. He had been invited to Hawick in 1847 by William Munro, minister of the faltering Congregational group in Hawick, and took up the invitation in the Spring of the following year. The 'mission' of intense prayer meetings lasted for 7 weeks and had to be moved twice to larger premises. Rev. John Kirk of Edinburgh joined after the first week, and they preached together for the next 6 weeks, the direct result of which was the founding of the Evangelical Union Kirk (which became today’s Congregational Kirk). He preached himself every other week until Alexander Duff arrived in late 1848. John (b.1811/2) from Middlebie, he was a shepherd in Castleton Parish. In 1861 he was at Old Larriston. His wife was Agnes Scott and their children included Helen, David, Thomas, Janet, John, William, James and Andrew. John (1838–1914) composer of the music for ‘The Border Queen’, written specifically for Thomson’s words. Born in the West End, he was (probably) son of Thomas. However, his early years are unclear. He is probably the John who was 3 years old when listed with his sister Mary living with Ann Andison on the High Street, in 1851 was a ‘pauper scholar’ lodging on the Kirkwynd and in 1861 was a boarder at 4 Melgund Place working as a shoemaker. He worked for 30 years as a shoemaker, with Robert & William Burnet of the Howegate. He apparently had a fine baritone voice and was prominent in the choir of the Catholic Church in Hawick. In 1884 he emigrated to Australia as a hotel keeper, to help out his widowed sister. There is a report of a ‘Hawick Night’ at the Middlesburgh Hotel there in 1885. He is recorded as a subscriber to the 1888 and 1889 Common Ridings, where his address is Royal Hotel, Rockdale, Sydney, N.S.W. He was a member of the Sydney Scottish Borderers Association. He returned to Hawick in 1892 and 1901, and was apparently preparing to return for the quarter-centenary when he took ill. It is not known whether he wrote any other music. In 1860 he married Margaret Gallagher. Their children included: Mary (b.1861); Ann (b.1863); Edward (b.1866); William (b.1866); John (b.1870); His daughter Margaret married Bailie John Gilroy. He is buried at Rockwood Necropolis, Sydney. John (19th C.) iron merchant who was one of the early elders of St. Andrew's Free Church. Katherine (15th/16th C.) younger daughter of Philip, who was the only son of James of that Ilk and Wells. After the death of her brother Richard of that Ilk, there was dispute over succession to the lands and titles, Rutherford and Wells going to her sister Helen, with the rest going to their uncle Thomas. She lost out on her portion due to her fornication with a relative, James Stewart of Traquair, who she married when quite young. He died at Flodden and she claimed ‘that in tender age she had been reft away by the said James Stewart, held in subjection and compelled to marry him’. In 1536 she was ‘Lady of Trakquaire’ when she had a court order not to communicate with the rebel Douglases who were in England. Her son and heir to Traquair was William Stewart.

Lawrence (15th C.) recorded as tenant in Oakwood in 1494/5. He had remission for a number of crimes: stealing cattle from several different people, including an ox from the Vicar of Ancrum; resetting Robert Young and William Scoon; stealing sheep from Ninian Murray out of Traquair. He was recorded being ‘now in hartwod’ (probably the lands between Ashkirk and Selkirk). His surety was Ralp Ker of Primside Loch. Mary (17th C.) recorded in 1643 when she owned £20 in Hobkirk Parish. She is listed being ‘of Rydwell’ and Marie Turnbull was also there, but it is unclear where it was. Mungo (16th C.) tenant of Nisbet. He was on the 1553/4 panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather’s lands of Brauxholme and Buceleuch. He is recorded as ‘Kentigernum Ruthirfurd in Nesbet’ and may also have been known as Quintin. One of his descendants was John (brother of Gavin), who married Grzel Ramsay, and died at East Nisbet in 1630. Sir Nicholas (13th/14th C.) early member of the family. He witnessed a document in the Melrose charters in the period 1269-89. He signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. He held the Manor of Doddington in Northumberland, which was forfeited by Edward I; in 1306 his grand-daughters and heiresses, Eva and Marjorie, petitioned the English King to restore their lands of ‘Doddington’. ‘Blind Harry’, in his history of 1460, states that he met Sir William Wallace in Ettrick Forest with 60 warriors. He may have been related by marriage to Marion Braidfute, heiress of Lamlington. He was succeeded by his son Sir Robert. Nicholas of Yetholm (d.e. 1457) probably son of Sir Richard of that Ilk. He may be the Nicholas who received charters for Kirk Yetholm, Grubet, Makerstoun, Corbet and other lands in the years 1421, 1426 and 1430. However, these generations are quite confused. Probably the same Nicholas was part of a ‘return of inquest’ in Hawick in 1424 for lands of Hownam. He served as Bailie in Liddesdale for William Douglas, 2nd Earl of Angus, recorded in 1428/9. He witnessed a charter for the Earl of Douglas in 1433/4. He was also Bailie for the Earl of Angus in 1436 for the granting of the lands of Wolfelee and Wolfehopelee to David Home of Wedderburn; he is there ‘Nicolau de Rutherfurde de Zhetam’. He is probably the Rutherford who was Bailie for the Earl of Angus in 1439 for a charter for Douglas of Bonjedward. In 1449, along with his brother James of that Ilk, he was appointed as a guarantor of a treaty with the English. He may be the ‘Nechole of Rutherfurde’ who was on the panel that acquitted Andrew Ker of Altonburn in 1456 of helping the English burn lands around Jedburgh. In 1458 his heir John was mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls in relation to his having previous handled the accounts of Jedburgh. He may be the ‘Nocol’ who was a younger son of Sir Richard of that Ilk, and ancestor of the Henderlee (or Hundalee) branch. His son John also witnessed the sasine for Wolfelee in 1436, and separately also John of Hundalee (showing that they are separate people). His son John married Elizabeth Rutherford of Yetholm. He had a grandson, John, who became Provost of Aberdeen, with that office also being filled by 3 later generations of the same family. Sir Nicholas of Hundalee (d.1572/3) probably son of George, whom he succeeded in about 1545. He married his distant cousin Margaret and secondly married Margaret McDowell. He was listed (along with his father George and brother Andrew) among the Borderers pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. He may be the Nicholas said to have been one of 3 attendants who accompanied the Earl of Bothwell to a secret meeting with the Earl of Northumberland in 1531. In 1544 he was among local Lairds who gave their pledges to England. In 1545 he was among lairds in Teviotdale who signed a bond to settle feuds.
Rutherford

He was listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford, accused of raiding the lands of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in collusion with the English. In 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Baud of Roxburgh’. He is probably the Laird of Hundalee who was appointed as a deputy march warden in 1553. In 1553/4 he was first listed among the Rutherfords in an assurance not to harm the Kers and the pledge for him was Batholomew of the Grange. He and other Rutherfords also appeared to promise that Adam and Charles, their pledges, would remain in ward in Edinburgh. Also in 1553/4 he was on the panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather’s lands of Branxholme and Buccleuch. In 1560 he was named on the bond to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords. In 1561 he was among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. Also in 1561 was (along with Walter Scott of Synton and Thomas Scott of Haining) cited by the Privy Council for non-appearance. In 1564 he and James Langlands of that Ilk were listed as sureties for Ormiston of that Ilk in the bond between the Scotts and Kers and their supporters. Also in 1564 he was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1565 he is listed among men complained about by the Warden of the Middle Marches for not presenting accused men from their lands. Also in 1565 he was engaged in a serious dispute with the people of Jedburgh, and tried to insist that they should chose him as their Provost, because of family tradition; a number of Burgesses and local landowners were summoned before the Privy Council to resolve the ‘allegeit bluid and inymite’. He was among men re-ordered to appear before the Privy Council in 1567 regarding order in the Middle Marches. In 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizi Borthwick inheriting the superiority of her father’s lands in Wilton. Also in 1569 he and his sons Andrew and Nichol were sureties for George in the Grange. In 1596 and again in 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves. He is said to have been at the Raid of the Reidswire in 1575, although it seems more likely that was his son. He signed a bond with other Rutherfords and Turnbuls in 1578 (although perhaps this was 1569). His children included: George, who died as a rebel by 1526; Andrew, who succeeded; Nichol, listed along with his father and brother Andrew in 1569; Marion, who married Andrew Ker of Graden; Mary, who married David Ainslie of Fala; and probably Martin, vicar of Makertoun. Nichol may have been another son. Nicholas (16th C.) recorded as Dean of Teviotdale, in the Diocese of Glasgow, in 1548. It is unclear how he was related to other Rutherfords. He may be the ‘Nycholl Ruderfur’d’ who signed the bond between the Rutherfords and Kers in 1560. Nicholas of Hundalee (c.1565–c.1628) son of Andrew of Hundalee and Margaret Hoppringle of Smailholm. However, in some genealogies he is stated to be brother of Andrew and younger son of Sir Nichol. In 1591 he is listed along with Rutherfords, Kers and Turnbuls in a bond of allegiance to King. In 1608 he was appointed by Parliament, along with Douglas of Bonjedward, to meet with the Bailies of Jedburgh to fix the price of leather. In 1606 he renewed his charter of Grubet and in 1620 gave a charter of Belses to his son-in-law, Sir James Ker of Crailing. He was listed as a land-owner in the Barony of Belses in the tax roll of the Abbacy of Jedburgh in 1626. He married Martha, daughter of Andrew Stewart, Master of Ochiltree. His children included: Andrew, who succeeded in 1633; John; James; Marie, who eventually became heiress and married Sir James Ker, 2nd Lord Jedburgh; Margaret; and Anna. Ninian ‘Ringan’ (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as ‘Rinzeane of Ruthfurde’. Along with ‘Hew of Douglace’ he appears to have captured George Young, who Walter Scott of Buccleuch pledged to bring before the next Justice Aire in Jedburgh. He could be the Ninian in Ancrum who was surety for his brother John at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1494/5; John did not appear. This same Ninian in Ancrum was allowed to ‘compone’ for many crimes in 1494/5, in particular stealing livestock and grain from several tenants in Fairington, as well as thefts along with his brother John, with the Laird of Ruthford as surety. In 1502 his surety was his brother John (who was also surety for himself and for Andrew Laidlaw in Edgerston), who failed to appear and hence was denounced as a rebel and his goods seized. Presumably he was the same as Ninian in ‘ivir anchrum’ who was surety for himself in 1502 and was fined and deprived of his lands until he found surety. Philip (d. bef. 1492) eldest son of James of that Ilk and Wells. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford. His widow later married Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch. He had an only son, Richard (who succeeded his grandfather), and 2 daughters: Helen, who married Sir John Foreman of Davine, secondly Andrew of Hunthill and may also have married 2 other times; and Katherine (or perhaps Christian), who married James Stewart of Traquair and later became heir of the Rutherfords of that Ilk. He pre-deceased his father. In 1495 his widow (now wife of Scott of Branxholme) brought a case to the Lords of Council demanding payment of promised rentals. Philip (15th/16th C.) witness of a sasine for the Erskines in the lands of Synton in 1508. He could not have been the son of James of that Ilk (and Margaret Erskine), since that Philip died before his father, several years earlier. Perhaps the same Philip, son of Alan, was included among Rutherfords and others who were declared rebels in 1498 for the murder of Patrick Hepburn; his brother John was also listed. Philip (16th C.) probably younger son of Richard and son of Thomas of Edgerston. He is recorded as being ‘in Edzarstoun’ (i.e. Edgerston) in the 1560 bond to settle the feud between the Rutherfords and the Kers. As part of the agreement, Andrew, son and heir of Robert Ker of Newhall was to marry his daughter; he signed the bond ‘at the pen led by the notar’, meaning that he was unable to write. He may have been son of John in Edgerston, whose earlier murder was part of the feud. John Rutherford, also in Edgerston, who signed the 1560 bond, was probably his brother. In 1573 he and John ‘breder in Edgarstoun’ were among men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm, although they were acquitted because Kerr had reset the fugitive Kerr of Ferniehirst. He was a tutor to his brother Richard’s son Thomas, ‘the Black Laird’. Sir Richard (c.1345–1424/5) probably son of William (or possibly a younger brother). He was said to be a favourite of King Robert III. In 1390 he was ‘of that Ilk’ when he witnessed the charter by John Turnbull of Minto, granting Minto to Sir William Stewart of Jedburgh. He was one of the ambassadors to the Court of England in 1398 and was also Warden of the Marches from about this time. About 1399 he was captured by the English, according to the story along with his 5 sons (although he may in fact have had no more than 3 sons) and John Turnbull (‘out with the sword’). In 1424 (apparently not long before his death) he made a ‘retour of inquest’ for lands of Hownam, witnessed at Hawick. He married Jean Douglas and their sons were: Sir James; John of Chatto, ancestor of the Hunthill branch; and Nichol, ancestor of the Hundai branch. He was succeeded by James, although there is some suggestion that he was predeceased by his son and succeeded by his grandson James. He may also have had sons William (or Gilbert) of Eckford and Sir John, who was killed at Cravant in France along with Sir John Turnbull. Richard of that Ilk (d.c.1502) grandson and heir of James of Rutherford, only son of Philip. He was the last Rutherford of that Ilk. He was served heir to his ‘goodfather’ (presumably grandfather) according to an inqyse in 1499. A document of 1500 shows lands of his going to several Kerrs because of ‘non-entry’. He is probably the Richard whose name led a 1501 list of Rutherfords and others whose fines were compounded by Walter Ker of Cessford and Henry Haitlie of Mellerstain. He died without children, leading to a dispute over who should succeed to the estates and titles, these mainly going to his uncle Thomas, although his sister Helen inherited the estates of Rutherford and Wells. However, in 1502 the gift of ward of the lands of Rutherford was granted by James IV to Andrew, Bishop of Moray and his brother John Forman. Richard (15th/16th C.) tenant in Littledean. In 1502 he had remission for wounding George Young in Minto Craig, as well as stealing several items from Young. His surety was John Rutherford of Hundalee. Richard of Edgerston (16th C.) son of Thomas (or perhaps Robert). He is probably the ‘Richart Rutherfurd of Edyarstoun’ listed in 1553/4 among the Rutherfords in an assurance not to harm the Kers; his pledges were Charles and John ‘sone of the Grene’. He may have succeeded about 1558 and in 1559 he finally settled the dispute over succession to Rutherford lands and titles with his cousin, Sir John Stuart of Traquair (who received the estates of Rutherford and Wells). In 1560 he was named on the bond to settle the feud between the Kers and the Rutherfords; he was to shake hands with John Haitlie of Mellerstain in order to settle the feud between those particular families and he signed ‘at the pen led by the notar’ (meaning that he could not write himself). In 1561 he was among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. In 1564 he was ‘Lard of Edyrarstoun’ when listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the warden, Ker of Cessford. He was among men re-ordered to appear before the Privy Council in 1567 regarding order in the Middle Marches. In 1567 he was among men ordered to present themselves to be warded in Blackness Castle. Also in 1567 he was surety for entering several men with the Warden. In 1569 he was a surety for Robert Ker of Lochtour. He also signed a bond to suppress the Border thieves in 1569 and another recognising Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst as Warden of the Middle Marches in the 1570s. In 1571 he was one of the sureties for the leaders of the Olivers, along with John, younger of Hunthill, and 2 Turnbulls. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves. In 1572/3 he was cautioner (along with Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule) for several men from Southdean, as well as for John of Hunthill. He himself swore allegiance to the Crown in 1572/3, with Andrew, younger of Hundersdale, as surety. He signed the `Band of Roxburgh' in 1573. He signed a `bond of manrent' to Archibald, Earl of Angus in 1574. He was at the Raid of the Redeswire in 1575. In 1575 he was one of the arbitrators for the Elliots in their feud with the Pringles. Also in 1575 he was among men asked to decide whether Robert Fraser was responsible for stealing some English horses. He signed an agreement with other Rutherfords and Turnbulls in 1578, annulling all former bonds and swearing allegiance to the Crown. Also in about 1578 he was involved in a bond between the Kers and Rutherfords. In 1578/9 there is mention of a feud between him (along with other Rutherfords, Douglas of Bonjedward and Turnbull of Bedrule) and the Kers of Cessford. In 1581 he was among the arbitrators for the Elliots in their feud with the Scotts and the Kerrs. He married Lilias, daughter of James Gledstains of Cocklaw and that Ilk (with John Rutherford, probably his brother, marrying Lilias' sister Barbara). His children included Walter (who died without an heir) and John of Capehope. John of Capehope's grandson, Capt. John, became 5th Lord Rutherford in 1737. Richard of Edgerston (d.bef. 1615) eldest son of Thomas `the Black Laird'. He succeeded his father, but died unmarried and was succeeded by his brother Robert. Richard of Littleheugh `Dickon Draw-the-Sword' (d.c.1634) son of John `the Cock o Hunthill' or possibly William of Littleheugh. He led the Jedburgh men at the Raid of the Reidswire in 1575. He is probably the Richard, son of William of Littleheugh who was accused in 1590 of raiding into England. He was fined in 1611 for the non-appearance of several other Rutherfords. He was on the inquest for the Justice Court in Jedburgh in 1622 and 1623. He also served as Provost of Jedburgh, an office later held by his nephew, John of Bankend. He appears to have been unable to write, since his signature had to be led when he supported a bond with the Earl of Bothwell. He married Lilias, daughter of James Gledstains of Cocklaw and that Ilk (with John Rutherford, probably his brother, marrying Lilias' sister Barbara). His children included Walter (who died without an heir) and John of Capehope. John of Capehope's grandson, Capt. John, became 5th Lord Rutherford in 1737. Richard of Edgerston (b.1822/3) tailor in Hawick. In 1851 he was a Master Tailor at Market Place (i.e. the Tower Knowe), employing 1 man and 1 apprentice). His wife was Agnes. Robert (12th C.) perhaps the earliest known member of the family. Sometime in the reign of David I he witnessed a charter to Gervase de Rydal. He is there recorded as `Robertus dominus de Rodyrforde'. There is no clear genealogy connecting him with later generations. However, it seems likely he was an ancestor of Hugh, who is recorded in about 1200 and Gregor, who is recorded in about the 1210s to 1230s. Sir Robert (d.1330) son of Sir Nicholas. He was said to be a friend of Robert the Bruce, accompanying him on the trip to Palestine with the heart of James Douglas. He died in Spain. Robert of Chatto (c.1410–bef. 95) son of Sir George of Chatto and Janet. However, these generations are confused, and it may be that there are two men here, one being a son of John of Chatto. In 1429 there was a confirmation by Archibald, Earl of Douglas, of the gift made formerly to his father George, of the lands of Nether Chatto, Sharplaw, ‘Eddyliscluch’ and Hangingshaw; this was confirmed in 1439/40. In 1437 he was one of those who was on the ‘revert’ at Jedburgh for Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the East Mains of Hawick, and was also on the 1450 revert for William Douglas to inherit his father’s Barony of Hawick. In 1464 there is a grant of lairs in the choir of Jedburgh Abbey to him and his wife Margaret (a highly unusual example of the granting of the right of sepulture). In 1464/5 he was on the panel to decide on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by Archibald Douglas and also on the panel to rule on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex. In 1465 he had a charter from Simon of Glendinning for the west half of Scraesburgh and the lands of Hunthill (which he is said to have acquired by marriage). He is recorded in 1468 in a document relating to lands of Crailling for the Homes of that Ilk. In 1471 he witnessed a document for Ker of Cessford. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir Simon Glendonwyn. He had a charter of the lands of Hunthill and half of Scraesburgh from his father-in-law in 1465/6. He witnessed a charter for James Rutherford of that Ilk in 1468, another for William, Lord Abernethy in 1471. He is probably the Robert who was pledge for James of that Ilk in 1471 and whose fine for absence from the Beltane Court was remitted in 1478. In 1482 he was on the panel for Elizabeth Cunningham inheriting Appletreehall and the eastern part of Hassendean. In 1486 he is mentioned along with George and Richard, probably his sons. He was succeeded by his son George of Hunthill, while Robert of Chatto was probably another son. Robert (15th C.) assigned the lease of Aikwood in 1484, along with his grandson and heir, Ninian. He leased it with his son Lawrence in 1485. Robert (15th C.) son of Lawrence. In 1490 he was assigned the Crown lands of the Middlestead of Hartwood. It is unclear how he was related to other Rutherfords. Robert (16th C.) listed as ‘Roben’ among ‘Scotsemen rebels resete within England’ in 1540. He was said by the English Wardens to be hiding in Redesdale. He may be related to George ‘Cockbank’. Robert (16th C.) recorded being ‘in Edzarstoun’ (i.e. Edgerston) in the 1560 bond to settle the feud between the Rutherfords and the Kers. He and his friends were said to be responsible for killing William Haitlie ‘in Fawnis’, while his own son John was killed by the Haitlies. It is unclear if he was Laird of Edgerston, or just tenant there, but it seems likely he was father of Richard, who was Laird in the 1560s. He may have been the ‘lard of Egerston’ who signed a bond of assurance with Somerset at Kelso in 1547, along with many other Border lairds. Robert of Edgerston (c.1590–1659) younger son of Thomas, ‘the Black Laird’. He succeeded his brother Richard in 1615. He acted as a cautions for an Ainslie in 1623. He is probably the Rutherford of Edgerston who signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638 (even although it appears to say ‘W.’). Around 1640 he purchased the Mill of Edgerston and other lands, which had been inherited by Francis Elliot of Hartshaugh through marriage. He firstly married Marion (or Margaret) Riddell, and secondly Elizabeth, daughter of Turnbull of Minto. He was succeeded by his son John. He may have been father of ‘Lady Gaudielands, Edgerstons Aunt’, who is recorded in a document of 1666 describing the division of the choir of Jedburgh Abbey into burial lairs for various Rutherfords. Robert (17th C.) notary public recorded in 1640 at the admission of Henry Elliot as minister of Bedrule. Robert (d.1724) younger son of John of Hunthill. In 1685 he succeeded his brother Archibald as 4th Lord Rutherford, also inheriting the family lands comprising the Barony of Hunthill, including the 10 merk lands called Gledstone’s Lands. In 1691 he sold Nether Chatto and the Barony of Scraesburg to Sir John Scott of Ancrum. He sat as a peer in Parliament until the Union. He married Dame Sara Ollens and they had 2 children: Margaret, who married Charles Scott of Palace Hill; and John, who died young. Like his elder brothers, he died without male issue and the honours were later claimed by Capt. John, descendant of Richard of Littlheugh. Robert of Bownland (d.bef. 1728) son of John of Edgerston. He purchased Bownland (on Gala Water) in 1697. In 1712 he purchased Hollinglee and Thornilee in Ettrick. He married Ann, daughter of Sir John Murray of Philiphaugh; she was widow of Alexander Pringle of Whytbank. In 1728 his widow resigned her annuity to her only son James, who succeeded and was M.P. for Selkirkshire. They also had a daughter, Barbara. Robert of Fairnilee (17th/18th C.) solicitor in Edinburgh, he was referred to in the family as ‘the Nottar’. He was said to be descended from Richard, son of Robert, 3rd brother of Richard of Edgerston. He served as Deputy Receiver General for Scotland. He inherited some lands from his father, acquired parts of Cape-hope from Sir John Scott of Ancrum in 1701 and bought lands in Scraesburgh in 1702. He firstly married Bethia Lidderdale and they had 2 sons, David and Capt. William, neither of whom produced a male heir. In 1699 he secondly married Alison, only surviving daughter of John Ker of Shaw. Their numerous family included: Robert, who married Anne, daughter of John Pringle of Haining, and their daughter Anne became heiress of Fairnilee, marrying John Pringle of Crichton; and Alison, who wrote a version of ‘Flowers of the Forest’. He was the last of his family to be buried in the Bell-house at Jedburgh Abbey.

Robert (17th/18th C.) son of James, surgeon in Jedburgh. He married Esther, daughter of Robert Gledstains of that Ilk. In 1738 he was one of the 3 ‘heirs-portioners’ (along with his wife Esther and John Gledstains of Whitalw) for Janet, last of the Gledstains of that Ilk. The lands of Dod were divided among them. Rev. Robert (1719/20–90) son of Gideon of Kidheugh, he graduated from Edinburgh University in 1743, was licensed by the Presbytery of Earlston in 1746 and became preacher at Teviothead (or Caerlennig) from 1750 until probably 1756. He moved to Longframlington in Northumberland in that year and became minister at Castleton in 1763, where he was presented by Henry, Duke of Buccleuch. He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1785–89. In 1767 he married Elizabeth Widdrington of Huxley in Northumberland, and she died in 1768, aged 26. He wrote ‘A Scripture Catechism’ (1794). Robert of Fairnilee (17th/18th C.) son of Robert, who was a solicitor in Edinburgh, said to be descended from Richard, son of Robert, 3rd brother of Richard of Edgerston. He inherited his father’s lands in Ancrum and Scraesburgh. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He married Anne, daughter of John Pringle of Haining, and their daughter Anne became heiress of Fairnilee, marrying John Pringle of Crichton. Robert of Fairnington (1723–c.94) 4th son of Sir John of Edgerston and Elizabeth Cairncross. He was created a Baron of the Russian Empire following the assistance he gave during Russia’s war with Turkey in 1770. He repurchased the lands of Fairnington in 1779, planting trees and naming fields after some of his Russian friends. He also built a summer house on top of Down’s Law in the 1780s; this was known ever after as the ‘Baron’s Folly’. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788 and was described at that time as being ‘very independent’. Also in 1788 (and still in 1811) he was listed as owner of Fairnington and neighbouring lands in Roxburgh Parish; he was listed in the county valuation as ‘Baron of the Russian Empire’. He was taxed for having 3 female servants in the period 1785–91, as well as 3 male servants 1785–91 and 4 in 1792, 1793 and 1794 (when he was deceased). He is recorded in the Carriage Tax Rolls in the 1780s and 1790s, but was deceased in the year 1794/5, when the duty was paid on his behalf by John of Edgerston. He left Fairnington to his nephew, John of Edgerston. There is a portrait of him by Benjamin West. His will was proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1794. Robert (d.1787) mason in Hawick who married Mary Simpson in 1761. She was daughter of Andrew Simpson and Agnes Turnbull. Their children were probably: Thomas (b.1762); Caleb (b.1765); Helen (b.1767); unnamed (b.1773); Susan (b.1775); and Robert (b.1777), known as a fiddler. He died in Hawick. He was probably born in 1738 in Cavers, son of Thomas, although it has been suggested he is the son of Walter and Isabella Turnbull born in Wilton in 1724. Robert (b.1768/9) born in Kirkton Parish, he was a shepherd at Brauxholmie Town. He was recorded there as an agricultural labourer in 1841 and was also stated to have been a farm grieve. He married Jane (1784–1859), daughter of James Crawford and Janet Elliot; she was from Wilton, also known as Jenny and Janet and was buried in Wilton Kirkyard. Their children included: Walter (b.1814), who succeeded as shepherd and emigrated to Canada; and Charles Dickson (b.1825), a grocer living in Hawick. Robert (1776/7–1843) probably son of mason Robert. He was in the Militia in his youth, and noted for refused to flog a fellow soldier. Afterwards he was not himself given corporal punishment (perhaps because he was a balloted soldier), but had his wages reduced by twopence a day as a result; it was said he submitted to this cheerfully for the man ‘had dune him nae ill’. He was well known locally as a fiddler, being described by James Wilson as ‘long remembered by the present generation as a charming performer on the violin’ and ‘without any of the dashing execution of the race of youngsters who strive to dazzle rather than delight, his object was to please’. He paid a yearly visit to Tyneside and performed often at Minto House. A portrait of him exists in the Museum, painted by Adam Brown, and donated.
in 1897 by his grand-daughter, Mrs. Joseph Wilson. He is probably the Robert, recorded as ‘musician’ on Walter’s Wynd in 1841, living with wife Mary and children Robert, William, Thomas, Mary, Martha and Robert (possibly a grandson).

Robert (1789–1838) son of Thomas and Maydeline Dryden. He was probably nephew of Caleb. He was a builder at Millbank, i.e. the Mill Path. He probably owned the building on the south side of the top of the Mill Path, labelled ‘Mr. Rutherford’ on Wood’s 1824 map. He is recorded as a builder at ‘Townhead’ on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and at ‘Millbank’ in 1837. He married Jane, daughter of William Waldie; she married William Laidlaw after she was widowed and died in 1871. His children included: Mary (1815–80), or ‘May’, who married William Rutherford, watchmaker; Thomas (1816–69), who married Mary Hutton, and died in Newcastle, New South Wales; William (b.1818), who married Beatrix Brydon and emigrated to Ontario, where he may have named the village of Millbank; Robert (1821–43); Elizabeth (1822–93), who married George Hogg; John (1826–75), who married Elizabeth Hackins; Jane (1828–55), first wife of auctioneer James Oliver; Agnes (b.1830), who married James Johnston and William Laidlaw; George (1831–58), who died in Hong Kong; and James (1833–8). Most of his family were still living at Millbank on the 1841 census. Robert (1814–bef. 61) son of James, who was a joiner at Bonchester Bridge. In 1851 he is listed as a joiner at 4 Bonchester Bridge, employing 1 man. He married Isabella, daughter of shepherd Andrew Hall. Their children were: Helen (1850–60); James (b.1852), who was a joiner with Douglas Taylor; and Isabella (b.1855, although it is unclear if he was the father). He went to America, leaving his family behind, and died there. By 1861 his wife was a widow, living at Hallrule Cottages. Robert (c.1846–98) son of shepherd Walter. He became a shepherd. In 1870 he married Ellen Nichols. His children included Helen or Nellie (b.1870); Walter (b.1871), Ann (b.1875), Roberton (b.1877), Janet (b.1879), Mary (b.1880), Aggie, born in Canada; and John, also born in Canada. In 1882 the family emigrated to Huron County, Ontario and he was farmer at East Wawamash. He was killed by a bull on his won farm in the Camille district of Manitoba. Samuel (17th C.) described as servitor to Sir William Douglas of Cavers in 1642 when he accused a large group of his drinking companions of stealing his wallet and its £11 contents.

He was also accused by John ‘Lethane’ of trying to retrieve his wallet through violence. Susannah (b.c.1795) from England, she was publican in Newcastleton, recorded at the King’s Arms in Pigot’s 1837 directory. This was probably the same place that became the Liddesdale Hotel at about 17 Douglas Square. In 1841 she was living with Thomasina (probably her mother). Thomas (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when George Turnbull of Hallrule had remission for premeditated felonies carried out against him at Bon-jedward. The nature of the crimes is not given, but were presumably plundering of his farm. He could be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (d.bef. 1504) killed in Jedburgh Abbey. In 1504 there was a long list of tenants, factors and servants of the Archbishop of Glasgow, Robert Blackadder, who had remission for involvement in his murder. In 1506 there was remission to John Forman and several Rutherfords for involvement in his murder. It is unclear which branch of the Rutherfords he belonged to, and what the circumstances were that led to his death. It is possible he was the Thomas, son of Nicholas, who was denounced as a rebel in 1494/5 for the murder of ‘Duthac Rutherfurde’ and who was also ‘at the horn’ in 1498 for his part in the murder of Patrick Hepburn. The Thomas who was connected with the death of Patrick Hepburn was also mentioned in 1502 when Alexander Laidlaw was convicted of associating with him, Adam Rutherford and Thomas Grahanslaw. Thomas of Edgerston (15th/16th C.) 3rd son of James of that Ilk and Wells. His brothers Philip and John died before him, and he succeeded his nephew Richard. However, his niece Helen gained Rutherford and Wells, and he kept Edgerston. He was thus the progenitor of the Lairds of Edgerston. He was probably the son of James of that Ilk who was included among Rutherfords and others who were declared rebels in 1498 for the murder of Patrick Hepburn. He was succeeded by his son Richard (or possibly Robert). Other sons may have been: Philip, who lived at Edgerston and was tutor to his nephew Thomas, the ‘Black Laird’; John, who is said to have had 6 digits on each hand and foot, and to have had ‘memorable strength and courage’, and whose descendants occupied ‘the Tofts’; and Archibald of the Townhead, ancestor of the Rutherfords of Townhead and of ‘the Hall’. It is possible he was the Thomas who was on the panel in 1482 for Elizabeth Cunningham inheriting the lands of Appletreehall and the eastern part of Hassendean. He may have been the Thomas who as on the panel of retour for Gordon Rutherford of Stichill in 1525, and who was listed among the Borderers who had remission in 1526 for supporting the Homes in an attack on the Earl of Arran. Thomas of the Grange (15th/16th C.) 2nd son of Andrew of Hundalee. He seems likely to be the brother of the Laird of Hundalee who in 1493 acted as surety for Patrick Rodman from Rulewater. He was described being in the Grange of Abbotrule at the 1494/5 Justice-aire held in Jedburgh when he acted as surety for Patrick Rodman. Also in 1494/5 he was recorded as brother of the Laird of Hundalee when he was surety for Jedburgh men. He is listed as being ‘in the Grange’ among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. His sons Andrew, George and ‘Dougal Stible’ are also listed (the last presumably being a son-in-law). He was probably succeeded by George. Thomas (16th C.) first man listed as a witness to the instrument of resignation for the Routledges of Crook in 1529/30, witnessed at Cavers Kirk. It is unclear whether he was a church official or local landowner, or how he was related to other Rutherfords. Sir Thomas ‘the Black Laird of Edgerston’ (c.1550–1615) son of Richard and grandson (or perhaps great-grandson) of the first Robert of Edgerston. His nickname came from his complexion and dark hair (‘being of a swarthy complexion and black haired’), but he was also known as a local leader to be reckoned with, along with his 9 sons (or perhaps this is his 8 brothers). He supposedly turned the tide of battle at the Raid of the Redeswire in 1575 when he arrived with the Jedburgh contingent; however, he only succeeded as Laird in 1605 and hence it was likely to have been his father or grandfather Richard who was at the Raid. He is also said to have led the Rutherfords at the Battle of the Hencleugh. He married Jean, daughter of Gavin Elliott of Stobs, who may have been his cousin (although there is much confusion over this). He is said to have had 9 sons (but this is not documented, and may also have referred to his brothers). He was succeeded by his sons Richard and Robert in turn. A daughter, Jean, inherited Stobs, along with her aunts Dorothy and Esther. He is also said to have had a daughter Joan, who married William, called ‘Neck of Steel’, son of Robert Elliot of Larriston (but this may be confusion). Thomas of Tofts (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Thomas Rutherfurde of Toftis’ in 1610 when he was on an inquest relating to lands in Rulewater. His son Robert was accused of stealing horses in 1623. Thomas of Hunthill (16th/17th C.) son of John of Hunthill. In 1583 he and his father were summoned to appear at Jedburgh to answer charges and in 1593 he was summoned for charges of treason for being an accomplice of the Earl of Bothwell. In 1611 he was fined for the non-appearance of a man he was cautioner for. In 1612 he had a charter for the lands of Hunthill and others. He married Jean, daughter of John Cranston of that Ilk. He was succeeded by his son John of Hunthill. His daughter Grizel married Adam Kirkton of Stewartfield, the contract being signed at Wolfelee in 1612. Thomas of Ruecastle (16th/17th C.) probably a younger son of George of Longnewton, he was served heir to his brother Andrew ‘called of Quhystehouse in Nesbit’. He had a charter of ‘Rouchcastell’ in 1642, along with the attached forest and the mains of Harden. In 1643 he was ‘in Whitehouse’ when his lands in Ruecastle were valued at £240. In 1656 he was referred to as ‘Thomas of Rowcastell, called of Quhytehouse, in Nesbit’. He is probably the Thomas ‘of whythhouse’ who paid tax on £340 in Bedrule Parish in 1663, as well as £144 worth of land he had purchased from the Earl of Traquair. He married Elizabeth Mader. It is unclear how he was related to the Thomas of Ruecastle who was served heir to his father John of Knowesouth in 1666. Sir Thomas of Hunthill (d.c.1680) 3rd son of John. He succeeded his brother John in 1656. He is probably the ‘Thomas Rutherfoord called of the towrs in Sjraisburgh’ recorded on the Land Tax Rolls of 1663. In 1664 he succeeded to the estate of Rutherford after the death of his relative Andrew, Lord Rutherford and Earl of Teviot. In 1665 he complained to the Archbishop of Glasgow over rights to the loft in Jedburgh Church. He was also made the 2nd Lord Rutherford and sat in Parliament. In 1666 he was among the Rutherfords who made an agreement concerning the family burial place at Jedburgh Abbey. Dying without issue, he was succeeded by his brother Archibald. Thomas (17th C.) recorded as Bailie of Regality of Hawick in 1672. In that year he wrote to the inhabitants of Hawick exonerating them from attending the Head Court at Thornhill (near Drumlanrig) that year; he wrote from Jedburgh, suggesting that he could be same man as Thomas of Hunthill or Thomas of Knowesouth. Also in 1672 he was recorded, when setting the fair in October, being asked to use the Hawick drummer and piper to ‘set the fair’, rather than the ones from Jedburgh; he called the roll in the kirkyard for all the inhabitants to ride the fair. Thomas of Ruecastle or Knowesouth (17th C.) eldest son of John of Knowesouth. In 1666 he was served heir to his father's 7-pound-10-shilling land of Ruecastle, with 'lie Maynes de Harden et foresta de Rowcastle' (annexed to the Barony of Grubet), as well as 3 husbandlands in the town of Ruecastle with a piece of land called Newtonhaugh (in Bedrule Parish), some land in the Earldom of Traquair and a further 1½ merklands in Ruecastle (in the Barony of Ulston). It is unclear how he was related to the John of Ruecastle recorded a little earlier, but was described in 1666 as 'junior' (suggesting this was used to distinguish him, or just that he was a minor when he succeeded).

In 1673 his brother Robert became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh. He paid the land tax in Bedrule Parish in 1678, the lands then valued at £511 and included lands previously in Ruecastle. In 1687 he sub-leased the lands of Minto 'Kaims and Hills' from William Mather. He is probably the Thomas of Knowesouth who was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685 and 1690. He may be have been Laird in 1694 when the Hearth Tax was paid on the Knowesouth estate. He contributed £100 to the Darien Company in 1695. In 1673 he married Isobel, daughter of Robert Ker of Linton (hereditary Bailie of Jedburgh) and was probably succeeded by his son Thomas. Thomas (17th C.) listed as resident at Roughheugh in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas of Knowesouth (17th/18th C.) son of Thomas and Isobel Ker. He married Cecilia Douglas, grand-daughter of George Douglas of Ardit, and daughter of William Douglas and Agnes Scott (daughter of Patrick of Ancrum). His son William became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1708. His son John (b.1684/5) was probably a doctor and in 1710 married Isobel, daughter of the deceased William Scott of Raeburn. His daughter Ann married William Chisholme of Broadlee in 1702. His daughter Christina (1702-82) married Gilbert Ainslie in 1724. Rev. Thomas (17th/18th C.) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1683, he became minister of Southdean Parish in 1689. However, he was deprived later that year for 'not reading the Proclamation of the Estates, and not praying for their majesties William and Mary' (i.e. refusing to give up Episcopacy), and was said to have instead prayed for the late King James. The case was brought to the Privy Council by a group of Southdean Parishioners. He was declared a fugitive, but what happened to him afterwards is not known. Thomas of Edgerston, Hunthill and Wells (c.1650–1720) 3rd son of John. He succeeded after his brother Andrew's death in 1718, but only held the lands for a couple of years before his own death. They had become 'of that Ilk' in 1703 when Robert Earl of Rutherford resigned his lands. He was also Laird of Wells, purchasing it (with his wife's money) from Charles Stewart, 4th Earl of Traquair in 1687. He was listed as Laird of Wells in 1694 when he paid for 19 hearths in several parishes. He was also 'of Wells' when he contributed £800 to the Darien Company in 1695. In 1690 and 1704 he was listed as Laird of Wells on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. However, in 1707 he sold Wells it to William Elliot, and was thus the last Rutherford Laird of Wells. He also acquired Bonjedward, Mounthooly and Scraesburgh, before 1707, when he was recorded as owner of more than £2200 worth of land in Bonjedward. He married Susanna, daughter and heiress of Walter Riddell of Minto and Catherine Nisbet of Dirleton. He was succeeded by his eldest son Sir John. His other children were: Barbara; Catherine; Jean, who secondly married William Douglas of Timpendale in 1718; Agnes; Isabella; Susanna; and Violet, who married Robert Scott of Falnash. A stone preserved in the new Wells House built in the early 20th century, bore 18 coats of arms, showing the descent of both him and his wife. Thomas of Knowesouth (1742–96) son of John and Mary Ker, he held a charter of Knowesouth in 1758 (his father being declared insane). He was descended from the Rutherfords of Ruecastle. In 1788 he was 'younger of Knowsouth' when his lands of Westfell (and others) in Lanton were listed in the valuation roll. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788; he was described at that time as having a small estate, being 'once Sheriff-Substitute of the County under Oliver of Dinlabyre' and probably being a supporter of Sir Gilbert Elliot. He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls in 1785–94. He paid tax for having a male servant in 1778, 1779 and 1794. In the 1788 county valuation he is recorded as owner of 'Lands in Newcastle acquired from his father', valued at £48 10s (including teinds). He is still recorded as owner on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls of lands in Lanton, including 'Lady Lands, formerly in Cavers Parish'. He married Christine Elliot, and their 4 children were: John, who briefly succeeded; George, in the Royal Navy, who succeeded for a very short period; Ann, who married Dr. William Somerville; and Cecilia (d.1804), who died at Knowesouth. None of these children produced heirs. He later married Ann, daughter...

of William Falla. Their children were: Thomas; Charles; Hugh, who emigrated to Ontario; and William, who lived in Ancrum and married Janet Angus. After his death there the order of inheritance was complicated and disputed, but the estate eventually went to his sister Jean, who married Thomas Scott, uncle of Sir Walter of Abbotsford. Thomas (18th/19th C.) clockmaker in Hawick. His unnamed child died in 1808. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825, where he is listed as ‘watchmaker’. He could be the son of clockmaker William who was born in Hawick in 1784. Thomas (b.1762) son of Robert and Mary Simpson. He was elder brother of Caleb. He married Magdalen Dryden in 1787 and they had a son Robert (1789–1838). He may have secondly married Jane Elliot and their children included Francis (b.1794). Thomas (1784/5–1855) son of shepherd Thomas and Helen Reeve. He was a farm worker at Haysike, and is recorded there in 1841. He married Jane, daughter of agricultural worker George Michie, and she died in 1859, aged 75. Their children were: Thomas, gamekeeper at Blackcockhaa; John, shoemaker; and Maggie, who married James Wintrup. Thomas (b.1807/8) born in Ancrum Parish, he was farmer at Sandystanes in the 1860s. In 1861 he is recorded there along with his brothers John (retired accountant), George (retired farmer), William (also a farmer) and sister Isabella. He is listed as farmer at Sandystones in 1868. Thomas (b.1811) son of Bonchester joiner James. He served for 21 years in the army. After his discharge he became a policeman in Hawick. In 1861 he is listed as a ‘Police Office, Chelsea Pensioner’, living at 10 O’Connell Street. He married Elizabeth Young in Hawick in 1859 and their Children included: James (b.1859), who worked with Turnbull the Dyers; and Richard (b.1861), who probably died young. Thomas Elliot (1816–1900) son of Thomas, he was born at Branxholme Park. He was gamekeeper at Blackcockhaa (also known as Byreeliehough) near the head of the Ale and also lived at Bellendean Cottage. He married Christina Scott (granddaughter of ‘The Pether’) at Haysike and she died at Wellogate Place in 1877, aged 54. Their children were: Jane Scott (d.1844), only daughter, who died in infancy at Todshawhill; Thomas, who became a coal merchant); David; George; and Walter R. He and some of his family are buried at Borthwick Waas. Thomas (b.1816) mason in Hawick, son of Robert. In 1841 he was listed as head of the family at Mill Bank, living with his widowed mother and his siblings William, Robert, John, Jane, Agnes and George. Thomas ‘Tom’ (1832–1906) son of James and Betty Beattie, who was daughter of Betty Stevenson. His father died when he was young, and in 1841 he is listed with his mother in the home of his grand-uncle Andrew Stevenson, blacksmith at Bonchester Bridge. He was educated by George Tancred’s mother and then at Hobkirk School. He was assistant blacksmith at Bonchester Bridgend in the mid-1800s, and effectively took over as blacksmith by the 1860s and formally after his great-uncle Andrew Stevenson’s death in 1871. He helped carry letters to Chesters for a while. His great-grandfather John was shepherd at Shiplaw Cross. James Elliot took over from him as blacksmith in about 1902. In 1853 he married Agnes Burns (d.1901), who came from Ancrum. Their children were: Janet (b.c.1853); Andrew Stevenson (b.1854), blacksmith in Newcastle; Elizabeth (b.1856), who lived in New York; Christina (b.1858), a professional cook in New York, who married James Rennie; Margaret (b.1860), who married blacksmith Gideon Scott and lived in Hawick; Agnes (b.1862); John Burns (b.1863), blacksmith in Belfast, who married Jean Waugh, daughter of the tenant at Hartshaugh Mill; Agnes (again, b.1865), who married Ecclefechan blacksmith Andrew Calvert; Thomas (b.1867), a tailor and clothier with businesses in Belfast and Bangor, he married Isabella Sparks, sister of his sister-in-law; Alexander Burns (b.1870); Alexander Burns (again, b.1871), wine and spirit merchant in Crook, County Durham; and James (b.1876), blacksmith for a while and later proprietor of the Fox & Hounds. Said to posses a wonderful memory, he helped George Tancred with information for his book on Rulewater. He died in Hawick. Thomas (1846–1909) son of gamekeeper Thomas and Christina Scott. He became a coal and hay merchant of Wellogate Place. He was active in the Total Abstinence Society, the Congregational Church and the P.S.A. He married Catherine, daughter of William Whillans (from Chesters), and she died in 1935, aged 88. Their children were Thomas, Isabella Christina (who married James H. Haining) and Catherine Jane. He is buried in the Wellogate. Walter (15th C.) recorded in 1494 when John of Edgerston failed to produce him to stand trial before the High Court of the Judiciary in Jedburgh. Perhaps the same Walter ‘in falishop’ (i.e. Phaup) componed in 1494/5 for stealing sheep from Hartwood and Haining, a cow from Minto, oats from Fairnington and other

Walter Rutherford died in Bluevale, Huron County. He was the son of John and Ann (b.1875). In 1881 they emigrated to a farm at Turnberry in Western Ontario, and he was the son of James (b.1870); William (b.c.1873); Andrew (b.1862); Walter (b.1865); Adam (b.1866); Helen (b.1869); James (b.1870); William (b.c.1873); and Ann (b.1875). He may have been son of John of Capehope, being the Walter of Capehope who paid the land tax in Hownam Parish. Walter (1723–1804) younger son of Sir John of Edgerston. He served with the army in America, being a Captain in the 60th Regiment. He persuaded his brother John to join him in America, and there John died at Ticonderoga (where he was probably also present) in 1758. He was later a hostage of the Americans and eventually settled there. He married Mary, daughter of Gen. Alexander. Their son John (1760–1840) was a land surveyor and politician, who spelled his name ‘Rutherfurd’, served on the U.S. Senate, laid out part of Manhattan and settled New Jersey’s boundaries; he named his house Edgerston’ at what is now called Rutherford, New Jersey. Walter (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Walter (1814–97) son of Robert and Jane Crawford. He worked as a shepherd in the Borthwick area. Mabonlaw. He won a silver medal for speed in shearing sheep. In 1851 he was shepherd at Branxholmtown and was at Mabonlaw in 1861. In 1844 he married Ann Clark (1825–55), who may have been from Dyke, Morayshire. Their children included: Mary (b.1845), who married Andrew Huggan; Robert (b.c.1846), who emigrated to Canada; Janet (b.1847), returned to Scotland; John (b.1849), became an undertaker in Glasgow; Charles (b.1851), partner in Rutherford & Kay, wine merchants; Isabella (b.1851), who went to Frankford, New York; and Alexander (b.1854). In 1861 he secondly married Helen Scott Beattie, daughter of John Beattie, shepherd at Combe; her mother was Isobel Scott, said to be related to Sir Walter Scott. Their children were: Isabella (b.1862); Walter (b.1865); Adam (b.1866); Helen (b.1869); James (b.1870); William (b.c.1873); and Ann (b.1875). In 1881 they emigrated to a farm at Turnberry in Western Ontario, and he died in Bluevale, Huron County. Walter (19th C.) farmer of Crailing Tofts. He was well known as a local golfer, being first President of the Border Golfers’ Association. His paternal grandmother was Elizabeth Bunyan from Spittal-on-Roule and his uncle was William Rutherford, Professor of Physiology at Edinburgh University. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. William (13th C.) recorded on the Ragman Rolls of 1296 as ‘William de Rotherford’ parson of ‘Lillesclyue’ (i.e. Lilliesleaf). ‘Johan de Lillesclif’ was also recorded there, as well as ‘Aymer de Rotherford’ (of Roxburghshire) although whether they were related is unknown. His seal bore a bull’s head with a human head between the horns, and with the name ‘S’WIL’MI DE ROTHIRFORD’. He could also be the clerk of the same name who witnessed a gift of land in Dryfe (Dumfriesshire) in the mid-13th century. William (d.c.1363) probably son of Sir Richard. He was listed as ‘Willelmo de Rotherford’, Lord of that Ilk when he witnessed a charter for Adam of Roule, for the lands of Altonburn in about 1354 and another for Roger of Alton relating to the Church of Roxburgh. He also witnessed the same lands of Altonburn passing to the Kers in 1357/8. About the same time he witnessed a grant of lands in Lessuden for Melrose Abbey. In 1363 he was already deceased when his lands in Teviotdale were granted to the custody of John Ker until his heir William reached the age of majority. However, William probably died before this, since he appears to have been succeeded by Sir Richard, probably his son. William (15th C.) recorded as William ‘of Ruderfurde’ in 1429/30 when he was on the ‘retour’ panel for the lands of Caverton. James (probably of that Ilk) was also listed, but it is unclear how this William was related to other family members. William (16th C.) younger son of George of Hunthill and brother to Andrew and John. In 1544 he was tutor to William of Langnewton. He held lands at Over Ancrum. He married Christian, daughter of Christopher Armstrong of Mangerton; her brother was John Armstrong of Gilnokie. William of Longnewton (16th C.) probably grandson of George of Longnewton and son of Walter. In 1544 William, younger brother of the Laird of Hunthill, was his tutor. He was served heir in 1547, presumably when he came of age. He had sasine for various other lands in 1550. However, he appears to have been murdered by Robert Ker of Newhall, part of a family feud between the Rutherfords and the Kers that led to a bond being signed in 1560. His son George was also mentioned as a local golfer, being... mentioned in 1560, and was to be satisfied by Sir Andrew Ker of Littledean. It is unclear if he or his son was the William who signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’ in 1551. William of Kidheugh (16th C.) son of Adam, or perhaps son of Walter, younger brother of George of Longnewton. He is recorded as possessor of Kidheugh in 1545, and also owned Langrink in Selkirkshire. He is listed in 1549 among the associates of Walter Ker of Cessford who were accused of helping the English in raids upon the farms of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. In 1553/4 he was on the panel (but transcribed as ‘Reidhauch’) for Sir Walter Scott inheriting his grandfather’s lands of Branxholme and Buccleuch. He was succeeded by his son Robert. William of Longnewton (16th C.) possibly son of the earlier William. In 1578 he signed a bond of allegiance with other Rutherfords, Turnbulls and Douglas of Cavers. He may have died before 1583 when the other barons of the bond were declared rebels. William of Littleheugh (16th C.) recorded in 1590 when accused by the English Warden of being part of a raid into England 3 years earlier. John Scott ‘the Tinckler’ led the group of what was claimed to be 500 men on a day-long foray. His son Andrew was accused of being on another raid at the same time, with his sons Andrew and Richard being recorded in 2 additional accusations. His designation was transcribed ‘Lyttelewghge’. He was also recorded in 1590 among men of Teviotdale accused of breaking their bond with Englishman Edmund Crawster. William (d.c.1619) local man described as ‘in Raflat’ (probably Rawflat, Ancrum Parish) in a 1612 list of men convicted of charging too much interest on loans. He appeared to answer the charges. His son William was served as his heir in 1619. William (16th/17th C.) schoolmaster at Hobkirk. He was recorded as master there in a deed of 1616. He was also witness to a ‘wadset’ for lands in the Kirkhaugh of Hobkirk in 1618; Robert, ‘servitor to William Rutherford, notary public’ was another witness, and so possibly his servant. James Arbuthnott was recorded as master in 1619. He may be the William who was reader at Hownam in 1609. William (17th C.) served as heir to his father William in Rawflat in 1619. William of Bankend (d.bef. 1714) eldest son of John of Bankend, who was Provost of Jedburgh. He was descended from the Rutherfords of Hunthill. In 1676 he sold Bankend (with the consent of James Gledstains of Cocklaw, his wife’s trustee). He was later referred to as being ‘of Lochend’. He married Esther Langlands, who was grand-daughter of George Langlands of that Ilk. His widow is recorded in a bond of 1714. They had 4 daughters, who were served as co-heirs to their father: Margaret; Isobel; Lilias; and Esther. William (17th C.) weaver who was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. William (17th C.) served as interim Town Clerk in 1696. He was a Bailie of Jedburgh and recorded as a writer in Hawick in 1690 when his son Thomas became a baxter’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He may be the same as William of Bankend. Dr. William of Barnhills (d.bef. 1731). He bought the lands of Barnhills from Sir William Bennet of Grubet in 1703, with sasine in 1705. He married Agnes, daughter of Sir Gideon Scott of Highchester. He had 2 daughters: Margaret, who married Rev. Alexander Mackenzie of Edinburgh; Helen; and Jean, who married John Mowbray from Edinburgh. Each of his daughters inherited a third of Barnhills. William (d.bef. 1805) clockmaker of Hawick. He married Helen Scott and their children included Thomas (b.1784). He was already deceased in 1805 when the death of his wife Nelly Scott is recorded. William (1797/8–1871) probably born in Northumberland, he was teacher at Woodburn 1822–25. He then came to Hawick, where he was teacher of Mathematics and other subjects at the Grammar School. About 1832 he moved to be master at Corporation Academy, Berwick, in 1838 moved to the Royal Military Academy, Woolwich, and retired about 1864. He was a member of the council of the Royal Astronomical Society 1844–47 and Honorary Secretary in 1845 and 1846. He contributed mathematical problems to publications such as the ‘Ladies’ Diary’ and co-edited the first volume of ‘The Mathematician’ in 1845. He also edited many other mathematical books, including ‘Simson’s Euclid’ and Hutton’s ‘Course of Mathematics’. He published about 15 papers, including a solution of spherical triangles, and the calculation of \( \pi \) to 440 decimal places. His wife was Elizabeth, and they had a daughter, Mary Fenwick. He died at his home in London. William Oliver (1781–1879) of Edgerston, son of Jane Rutherford and William Oliver of Dinlabyre. He was born at Weens, with a celebratory larch planted on the side of the walk to the garden. He succeeded to Dinlabyre on the death of his father in 1830. He was ‘younger of Dinlabyre’ when he served as a Lieutenant in the Roxburgh Volunteer cavalry that responded to the False Alarm of 1804. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805, when... still ‘junior of Dinlabyre’. He was also a founder member of the Jedforest Club in 1810. He succeeded his father as Sheriff of Roxburghshire in 1807. He was listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819 (along with his father), when still younger of Dinlabyre. He was probably the William listed as ‘sheriff clerk, Jedburgh’ in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. He was Sheriff during some of the local election troubles of the 1830s, requesting that a troop of dragoons be sent to Hawick in 1835, and reading the Riot Act twice on that occasion. He purchased the estate of Knowesouth from Charles Scott, and had the mansion there built, but sold it not long afterwards to George Pott in 1838 (although may have held on to part of these lands). He also acquired part of the lands of Rueycastle from the heirs of Thomas Rutherford of Knowesouth. After his uncle John of Edgerston died in 1834, he was passed the lands of Edgerston and changed his surname. He was recorded at Edgerston in Pigot’s 1837 directory and at Dinlabyre in 1852. In 1839 he was present at the banquet at Branxholme for the Duke of Buccleuch. He was also Deputy-Lieutenant (from 1848), Justice of the Peace and Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He also served as Chairman of the Lunacy Board for Roxburghshire, Selkirkshire and Berwickshire, and Chairman of the Police and Prison Boards for Roxburghshire. He retired from his duties as Sheriff in 1868. In 1804 he married Agnes, 2nd daughter of Alexander Chatto of Mainhouse, and she died in 1859. His children included: William, who died young in 1818; a second son who died the same year; Elizabeth, who married Rev. James Denniston in Malta; William Alexander Oliver (b.1818), who succeeded and whose son William Edward Oliver sold Edgerston; Jane, who married McDuff Rhind, Sheriff-Substitute for Wigtownshire; and Archibald John, who succeeded to Dinlabyre. His name was sometimes written ‘Oliver-Rutherford’. William (b.1804/5) watchmaker of Hawick, son of Francis and Alison Henderson. He was recorded on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In the 1841–61 censuses he was living at 7 High Street. His mother was living in the adjacent house in 1851. He married Mary Rutherford, daughter of builder Robert. His children included: Jane (b.c.1839); Alice (b.1841); Francis (‘Frank’) E.; Robert; Matilda, who married Thomas Davidson; Andrew S.; Agnes; and Elizabeth A. A portrait exists of him. William (b.1812) son of Bonchester joiner James. He emigrated to Australia and is said to have done well. When he heard of the death of his brother Alexander (who had suffered paralysis), he sent money back to Hobkirk Parish to cover the expenses for maintaining him. William (b.1813/4) born in Hawick, he was a shepherd. In 1841 he was living at Mabonlaw and in 1851 his family were there (but he was presumably absent during the census). By 1861 he was at Glenkerry. His wife was Janet (from Kirktown Parish) and their children included Helen, Robert, James, Janet, William and Thomas. William (1818–80) son of Hawick builder Robert and Jane Waldie. He married Beatrice, daughter of William Brydon and Margaret Hogg. Their children were Margaret, Jean, Matilda, Robert William, Catherine Anne, Elizabeth H., Georgina, Alice May, William Thomas and Agnes, at least the first of which was born in Hawick. They emigrated to Ontario in about 1850. It may be that he was responsible for naming the area ‘Millbank’, near Waterloo and Stratford in Ontario. William ‘Willie’ (1849/50–1937) resident of the small house in Cogsmill that used to be the school. His wife ran the post office and shop there. He married Margaret Turnbull, who died in 1925, aged 74. Their son William John was born in Hawick in 1891. They are buried in Denholm (formerly written ‘Routhourfurd’, ‘Ruderfurde’, ‘Rudirfurd’, ‘Rutherfoord’, ‘Rutherfurde’, ‘Rutherford’, ‘Ruthirfurde’, ‘Ruthirfurd’, ‘Ruthirfurde’, ‘Rwthyfurde’, etc.).

Safely (sāf-lē) n. Rev. Dr. John (1875–1947) born in Lanarkshire, he trained at Edinburgh Theological Hall. He was minister at Greenlaw from 1905, then at Hillhead in Glasgow and Canmore Street in Denfermline, before taking becoming Hawick Congregational Kirk minister in 1934. His wife was a grand-daughter of Evangelical Union founder James Morrison, and a daughter of another well known E.U. figure, George Gladstone. He was President of the Congregational Union of Scotland, and in this capacity was the first Hawick minister to broadcast a Sunday evening service on the radio, in 1936. He was well known for his talents as a preacher, and led special monthly evening services for young people. He demitted in 1941, intending to retire, but was appointed interim minister in Kilmarnock and later at Sannox, Arran, where he died.

safe oot, safe in (sāf-oō–sāf-in) interj. slogan used to send riders off at the Common Riding, and a toast drunk at some functions. It is also used in other Common Ridings (e.g. Selkirk, Annan, Biggar and Linlithgow), while in Peebles the phrase is ‘Safe oot, safe roond and safe in’. The origin and antiquity of the slogan is uncertain, but it may be related to Psalm 121 ‘The Lord shall preserve thy going out and thy coming in from this time forth, and even for evermore’. It is mentioned in 1806 in the letter than William Nixon sent along with the sash for the Cornet, and so its use goes back at least to this time – ‘Wishing the Cornet and his company ‘Safe Out and Safe In’, I have the honour to remain . . .’ [C&L1806], ‘Safe oot, Safe in’ my Border lads! And safely win ye hame’ [RSC], ‘Safe out, safe in’, our Border prayer We lift it today as when . . .’ [RSC], ‘And, while tae the coast aye the Te’iot shall rin, der prayer We lift it today as when . . .’ [RSC].

the Saicond World War (thū-sā-kind-wuruld-wawr) n. the Second World War, WWII, lasting 1939–45, in which thousands of locals served, and which was the dominant influence on life in the 1940s. In September 1939 about 900 evacuees (mothers, children and teachers) arrived in Hawick, along with 600 others for the Denholm, Minto, Roberton and other country areas. Like other communities Hawick had its own Home Guard, and women helped on farms through the Land Army. The ration book office was at 21 High Street. Stobs Camp became an extremely active place during the War years. St. Mary’s Kirk was requisitioned and Allars Kirk Hall was set up as the reserve headquarters for Civil Defence. Many iron railings around the town were requisitioned for the War effort in 1942. The Common Riding was cancelled for the years 1940–45, but the marches were ridden by Chap Landle (on his own in 1940), accompanied by some supporters (14 in 1941). Hawick soldiers stationed ‘somewhere in England’ appointed W. Slorance as Cornet in 1940, and ‘somewhere in Scotland’ they appointed E. Moffat as Cornet in 1941. The 4th Battalion, the K.O.S.B. appointed Jim Reid as their Cornet in 1945, using a flag made by the women at Pringle’s, which was dipped in the Elbe; this was returned with the names embroidered on it of places where they had lost comrades. There were celebrations in Hawick on both V.E. and V.J. Days.

saicont (sā-kin’) n., adj. second – ‘This eez the saicint sic column …’ [ECS] (also written ‘saicant’ and ‘saicint’; cf. saicond).

Salenside (sā-lin-sid) n. farm just south of Ashkirk. There was once an ancient tower there, although there is now no evidence of its precise location, but there is a suggestion that Salenside Cottage was built on the same site. It was owned by a branch of the Scotts in the 17th century. Andrew Scott ‘of Salyenside’ was said to be part of the raid at Carlisle Castle in 1596. Robert Scott of Salenside was charged with murder in 1614. It was valued at £116 in 1643, when owned by Robert Scott of Whitslade. John Easton and William Scott were tenants in 1694. The house had a fire in the 1760s. In 1753 they are described as ‘twenty-shilling lands’. It is listed in 1788 being owned by Thomas Wilkinson, with a value of £116, and still listed with the same owner in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls, being valued (along with Castleside and Broadlee) at £519. William Little was farmer there in the mid-19th century and William Inglis in the 1860s – ‘Warn Dryhope, and Catslack, Howford, and Huntlee free, Whitslade, Todrigg, and Salenside, the morn to wait on me’ [WSB] (the origin is possibly the Celtic ‘sailin’, meaning ‘little heel’; also spelled ‘Sallinside’ etc.; it is ‘Salingside’ in 1609, ‘Salenside’ in 1621 and ‘Sullinsyd’ in 1632; it is marked as ‘Solansyde’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, although quite far south of the Ale Water, and is ‘Sallenside’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).
Salsbury Avenue (salz-bu-ree-aw-vi-new) n. street of relatively large houses off Weensland Road, built around 1898. It is named after Robert Arthur Talbot Gascoyne Cecil (1830–1903), 3rd Marquis of Salisbury, who was Prime Minister 3 times. The designs for the half-timbered villas were by J.P. Alison.
Salkeld (sal-keld) n. Thomas deputy of the English Warden, Lord Scrope. He captured Kinmont Willie in 1596, after a truce meeting to discuss Border disputes – ‘O have ye na heard o the fause Sakelde? O have ye na heard o the keen Lord Scroop? How they hae taen bauld Kinmont Willie, On Hairibee to hang him up?’ [T].

the Salvation Airmy (thu-saw-l., sel-vä-shin-är-mee) n. evangelical and charitable movement with a quasi-military style, founded in London in the 1860s and re-named in 1878. The Hawick branch started in 1887, with the founder Gen. Booth visiting the town in 1905. The first meetings were in the Temperance Hall on Croft Road, with location shifting to Silver Street, Drumlanrig Square, Tannage Close and then the Mill Path around 1920. In 1961 the property on Croft Road was purchased and rebuilt into the new Citadel, occupied in 1962 (also spelled and pronounced 'Selvation').

Salvation Airmy Citadel (sawl-vä-shin-är-mee-si'-u-del) n. Salvation Army meeting house, on Croft Road, opened in 1962, with previous citadels being located in other parts of the town since 1878.

Sametoun (saw-mee-tin) n. lands said to be in the Barony of Wilton and listed along with Outersidemill and Todshaw when granted to Sir William Wardlaw of Wilton in about 1400. It is unclear what lands the name could refer to, and hence it is possibly an error for the lands of similar name in Oxnam or Jedburgh Parishes.

Sam Marsden's (sawn-mawrz-dinz) n. High Street fishmonger's shop on the north side of the High Street in the mid-20th-century.

the Samye Ling Centre (thu-saw-mee-ling-sen'-ur) n. Tibetan-style Buddhist monastery and community near Eskdalemuir, about 20 miles from Hawick, formerly the estate of Johnstone House. It is named after a Tibetan monastery, and was started by 2 American buddhists who had started a small temple and gifted the house and grounds to 2 visiting abbots in 1967. It became Scotland's first Buddhist monastery, and the first phase was largely completed by 1988, with the full courtyard still being worked on, and plans to make it the most extensive temple outside Tibet. It was inaugurated by the Dalai Lama in 1993.

sanc (sangt) n., poet. a saint, either literally or figuratively - 'A sair sanct for Ettrick hospitality Mr Boston must have been!' [DH].

the Sandbed (thu-sawnd-bed) n. name for the relatively low-lying area near the confluence of the Slitrig with the Teviot, now an official name for the street from the roundabout to Albert Road. The name derives from the alluvial, sandy deposits that were there before the area was built up (interestingly, Kilmarnock also had a Sandbed from early times, and there is also an area in Dumfries that had that name). The name goes back at least to the late 17th century and the area was formerly part of the Common. In 1712 it is recorded that someone was fined 'for breaking the ground in that part of the common called the Haugh and Sandbed, at the foot of the Church-wynd, by digging, delving, and bigging of ane dyke there'. It eventually became an enclosed space, which was well used on market and fair days (e.g. in 1701). There were houses across what is now Bucleuch Street and an archway gave access to the gardens there. It stopped being used for public gatherings with the building of the Teviot Bridge in 1741. The land around the area was feued for building in 1782, split into lots for houses (with a 99 year lease) and 2 building areas in the centre were sold in 1791. When the New Road was opened in 1815 the market was moved to the Tower Knowe. At the same time the houses between the Howegate and Orrock Place were demolished to provide access to Bucleuch Street. The name was officially changed to Teviot.
Square by the Town Council from the late 1840s, but it was never popular and was abandoned after about 10 years. There was a public weighing machine for use by carriers near the Ewe & Lamb from before the days of the railway until the latter part of the 19th century. J.P. Alison designed renovations to Nos. 11 and 12 in 1895. The area also saw traffic lights introduced in 1939. The traffic pattern was altered with a more substantial roundabout and demolition of the island site of 3 and 4 Sandbed in 1987. The street contains a post office, a launderette and the Angling Club offices. Note that the building on the corner is unusually 5 stories high. Nos. 1, 2 and 3 are grade C listed buildings. ‘Then through the Sandbed the pair did go . . .’ [WE].

Sandbed (sawn-bed) n. also called ‘Sandbed English’, a humorous term for an attempt to speak English by someone who normally speaks only broad Hawick, an affected, comical mixture of proper English and broad Hawick, e.g. ‘pussy get down off that ruif’ – ‘hei was speakin in his best Sandbed’.

Sandbed English (sawn-bed-ing-gleesh) n. affected English spoken by someone who normally only speaks in dialect – ‘San’bed English, ‘fine’ English as attempted to be spoken by a Borderer, in which Scotch words are untittingly introduced’ [GW] (see Sandbed).

Sanderson (sawn-dur-sin) n. Adam (d.c.1686) tenant in ‘Hoap’ when his will was recorded in 1686. It is possible this was Heap. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) cottar at Appletreehall according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th/18th C.) merchant of Newcastle who left £60 to the poor of Hawick Parish in 1748 (and so was presumably a native). Probably the same merchant James witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1737 and another for gardener Walter in 1740. James (18th C.) took over part of the farm of Branxholme Town in 1726, after the death of Robert Scott. He is probably the James who married Beatrix, daughter of James Davidson, in Hawick Parish in 1711; his children may have included James (b.1713), Margaret (b.1714) and Janet (b.1717). Jean (c.1730–c.1810) wife of Henry Scott ‘the Hero of Quebec’. She received a widow’s pension of £40 and lived in a cottage called ‘the Saaverin’ a little below Stobs Castle, on the opposite side of the Slitrig. She became known for her dirty habits and wild appearance and was evicted by Sir William Elliot, who had her house demolished, apparently because her appearace and behaviour frightened his horses.

Thereafter she lived in Hawick. She was said to have turned down a suitor later in life, when she discovered she would lose her pension if she remarried. She survived her husband by about 50 years. John (17th C.) listed among the ‘Cottars in Hassendean’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Mary (17th C.) recorded in 1676 when she was among a group of Hawick people found guilty of using faulty measures. She was specifically found to have a ‘half-pecke ane mutchkin short’. She may be the ‘Marie’ recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun’. She could be the Marie, wife of John Nasmith, whose son William Nasmith was born in Hawick in 1652. Simon ‘Sym’ (16th C.) tenant of one of the local farms of Alexander Lord Home in 1562/3. Home (as superior of Midshielis, Appletreethall, Broadlee, ‘Cotlaw’, Burnside and mill) tried to have his ‘pretended tenants’ removed. Thomas (17th C.) resident at ‘milnmaue’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hassendean Parish. He was probably a farmer at Moorlaw. Walter (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when he was at Appletreethall. He could be the Walter, married to Isobel Shiel, whose had a daughter Jean (b.1694) baptised in Wilton Parish. He is probably the Walter ‘in Apelttreehall’ whose wife Janet Brown’s will is recorded in 1682. William (18th/19th C.) tailor in Hawick. He is probably the William who married Betty Little in 1779 and had children: James (b.1780: William (b.1781); Isabel (b.1784); James (again, b.1787); and Margaret, who died in 1809. William ‘Wullie’ (1853–1943) journalist, editor of the ‘Border Magazine’, poet and museum curator from Peebles. He gave us the words and music for ‘The Soft Lowland Tongue’, which is also sung in many other Border towns. He sometimes wrote under the name ‘Tweedside Laddie’ (formerly ‘Sandersone’).

Sandholm (sawn-hōm) n. hamlet at the junction of the Liddel and Hermitage Waters and where the B6399 (Hawick to Newcastleton road) meets the B5357 (from the Note o the Gate), about 1½ miles north-east of Newcastleton. Cuthbert Little and William Armstrong were there there in 1694. John Elliot was tenant there in the mid-to-late 19th century. There were 15 huts there housing railway workers on the 1861 census. Walter Turnbull and Walter Thomson were there in 1868. It was the location of Bankend Kirk, recently converted to a house. There was also a schoolhouse and smithy there. In the mid-19th century the school was run by Christian Telfer, daughter of the ‘poetic schoolmaster’ of Saughtree. To the north and northwest there were 3 curling ponds (also sometimes ‘Sandyholm’; it is ‘Sandiholme’ in 1694).

Sandholm Viaduct (sawnd-hōm-vl-ə-dukt) n. viaduct on the Waverley Line shortly before Newcastleton.

Sandhope see Sundhope

Sandilands (san-dee-lindz) n. Sir James of Calder (d.bef. 1426) son of Sir James and Jean Stewart, daughter of King Robert II. He was thus brother-in-law of King Robert III. He held the right to inherit several lands and titles following the death of Isabella, Countess of Mar (sister of the King’s son-in-law, George Douglas, Earl of Angus). This included the Barony of Cavers, Sheriffdom of Roxburghshire, Lordship of Jedburgh, Lordship of Liddesdale, lands of Bonjedward and town of Selkirk, as well as lands further afield. In 1397 he passed them on to George Douglas, Earl of Angus, but they reverted to him after the Earl’s death, as confirmed in a charter of Robert III in 1404/5. Confusion over the Barony of Cavers grew out of the earlier grant to Archibald Douglas (1st of Cavers) not being confirmed by Robert III. Sometime around 1390 he and John Haliburton of that Ilk granted the lands of Falnash and others in Tranent to Thomas Cranston of that Ilk. In 1425 he is mentioned in a charter for Patrick Lindsay and in 1426 he had a charter for lands in Stirlingshire. He married Janet and was succeeded by his son Sir John. James of that Ilk (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borders men who were pardoned in 1526 for attacking the Earl of Arran. His sons John and William are also listed. He was Captain of Hermitage Castle for a short period in 1532/3. James (d.1579) 1st Lord Torphichen, brother of John of Calder. He was son of a first cousin of the Parson of Hawick with the same surname. He held lands in Rule valley, with the lands of Templehall and Brewlands (part of Harwood) being feud to Andrew Turnbull in 1567. He married Janet Murray and died without an heir. John (d.1583) second son of James of Cruvie (and descendant of the daughter of Sir Archibald Douglas of Liddesdale and Cavers, as well as being descended from a daughter of Robert II). He was Parson of Hawick, although he may simply have held the living and not actually preached in the Parish, since William Auchmowtie served as Reader of Hawick, Wilton, Hassendean, Cavers and Kirkton at the same time. He held the ‘prebend’ of Hawick before the Reformation. He is recorded as witness to a charter relating to John Sandilands of Calder in 1554, where he is described as ‘Rector of Calder’. He is also recorded with this title in 1557. Thus he was probably associated with Hawick Parish both before and after the Reformation. In 1558 both he and John Spottiswood are described as Rectors of Hawick in a charter for James, Lord Torpichen. In 1569/70 the Bailies of Edinburgh ordered that town to pay him the ‘maillis’ he was owed for the grammar school there; he was said to be ‘persoun de Hawik’, but clearly was based in Edinburgh. He was still ‘parson and vicar’ in 1581 according to a document relating to teinds with Walter Scott of Buccleuch. It is unclear whether he held the position until his death. He married Janet Craig and had 1 child, Margaret. He died in Edinburgh, where his last will and testament is recorded (also spelled ‘Sandelands’).

the Sands (θu-sawndz) n. alternative name used for the Sandbed before about 1700.

Sandy (sawn-dee) n. Christian name, usually a pet form of Alexander (also sometimes ‘Sandie’).

Sandy Burnett’s (sawn-dee-bur-nits) n. popular name for the hill below Greensidehall, presumably named after a former owner of the nearby farm.

Sandy Fussy (sawn-dee-fu-see) n. name given to at least one rag and bone man of the early 20th century, who would give balloons to children in exchange for scrap items. The original ‘Sandy Fussy’ probably predated this, although whether he was fictional is unclear.

Sandy Fussy’s Cairt (sawn-dee-fu-seez-kär’-) n. name sometimes used for the local children’s rhyme, sung to the tune of ‘the Keel Row’ (and similar to ‘Charlie is my darling’), see Oo’re aa gaun ti Denum.

Sandyhaugh (sawn-deehawch) n. former name for lands in Ashkirk Parish, owned by Scott of Woll in 1609, when it is ‘Sandiehauch’. It is ‘Sandy Hall’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map, marked to the east of New Woll, near where the Woll Burn meets the Ale Water. Andrew Scott was farmer there in 1797 and Andrew Cleghorn in the 1840s to 60s.

Sandyhaugh (sawn-dee-hawch) n. former cottage in the Ewes valley, on the other side of the main road from the farm of Bush. There were Welshes there in 1841 and Welshes, Jacksons and others there in 1861. Poet Matthew Welsh lived here.

Sandypatch Sike (sawn-dee-pawch-sik) n. small stream in souther Liddesdale, joining Tinnis Burn to the south of the farm of Redmoss.
Sangynes

Sangynes (sawn-deestänz) n. Sangestones, farm by the Ale Water, east of Belses. This may be the ‘Standestaneig’ (in West Lilliesleaf) which was sold by Adam, son of Adam of Durham to Melrose Abbey in the early 1200s. In 1502 it is recorded that 120 of George Rutherford’s sheep had been stolen from there by William Turnbull of Minto and reset by Adam Scott in Highchesters. Robert Taylor was also recorded there in 1502. It was owned by George Rutherford of Langnewton in 1506 when the Turnbulls of Minto attacked the farm, burning barley and oats there. It is mentioned in 1508, with lands of 120 or 140 acres here between the Sandstones and ‘Vuiralancrum’ (or ‘Vuirancrum’), commonly called the Sangystanes, being attached to the Lordship of Liddesdale. John ‘Ritchisone’ was there in 1694, James Rutherford in 1797 and Thomas Rutherford in 1868 (the name derives from its situation between two fords, which are paved with stones; it is ‘sandy stanis’ in 1502 and ‘Sandestanis’ in 1508).

sang (sawn, sang) n. a song – ‘...And never maior, at a Gloamyne Bucht, Wald she singe another sange’ [JTe], ‘The Sang o’ sangs, whilk is Solomon’s’ [HSR], ‘O sing untill the Lord ane new sang...’ [HSR], ‘But troth, by the way I sing this sang, You’ll hear wi’ my brogue there’s something wrang...’ [JEDM], ‘...And the auld soul-stirrin’ sangs’ [WL], ‘I’ll sing a sang o’ Hawick my hame: I’ll sing it a’ my days’ [GD], ‘And the never restin’ waves Sing their never endin’ sang’ [TK], ‘...But aye the sweetest sang they hear Is ‘Hawick’ mong the Hills’’ [MrsW], ‘... and lang may they flourish Wi their ain tribal ploys and ceremony and sang...’ [DH].

the Sang Singer (thu-sawn-sing-ur) n. official singer of ‘Teribus’ at the Song Singing ceremony. He also has many other duties to perform at other Common Riding functions, including (since 1921) distributing the snuff at the Snuffing. He leads the singing of ‘Teribus’ outside St. Leonards farmhouse after the Thursday Night Chase and after the Thursday and Friday morning ‘Huts’. He also leads the singing of the ‘Auld Sang’ outside the Tower before the riders set out on the Friday morning, and he sings the complete version of Hogg’s song at the ‘Sang Singin’. The first singer of Hogg’s ‘Teribus’ was James Scott in 1819, and he was followed by James Robson, Mark Nichol and Frank Scott (‘Uncle Braid’). Then there was John Scott (in 1875). Later came Charles Hessel, William Clark (1883–1907), James Yule?? (from 1907), Hamilton B. Little (after 1918), James Yule 1946, ?? Black, Harry Storie (??–1972), Bert Armstrong (1973–84), Henry Douglas (1985–99) and Michael Aitken (2000–).

the Sang Singin (thu-sawn-sing-in) n. ceremony that takes place at the Mill Path on a specially constructed platform as part of the Common Riding. This is near to the site of ‘Tibbie the Fiddler’s Cottage’, on the thatched roof of which the ceremony took place until 1859, and at the old boundary of the Burgh with the lands of the Duke of Buccleuch. In 1860 the ceremony took place amid the ruins of the old cottage, and thereafter has been held near the site, except in 1919 when it was temporarily moved to the Horse monument. Before the current permanent platform was built at the corner of the Mill Path and Allars Crescent (when ??) a temporary one was used to be erected on the other side of the road. The ceremony is held on the Friday afternoon, immediately after the Principals have been to the Dipping of the Flag. It involves the singing of ‘Teribus’, following the official announcement that the marches have been duly ridden. There ceremony of 1889 may be the earliest recorded in a photograph. Since 1905 the Drums and Fifes have played the party back to the Town Hall to return the Flag.

Sangster (sawn-stur) n. Evelyn along with husband Gilbert, organiser of the Hawick Summer Festival for its first 20 years. Also organiser of the Christmas Parade. Sanson (san-sin) n. James (d.1790s) assistant minister at Earlston, he was preacher at Teviothead ‘chapel-of-ease’ from 1785 until about 1788. In that year he became minister at Leadhills. He also served as tutor to the family of Thomas Scott (uncle to the writer Sir Walter Scott), farmer at Wolfelee and elsewhere. He is described as ‘a tall, awkward, bashful gentleman’, and was nicknamed ‘Dominie Sanson’. He was keen on curling and had the habit of calling out ‘Prodeegious!’ when he threw a good stone. This story was picked up and related to Sir Walter Scott, who probably used it as inspiration for the character of ‘Dominie Sampson’ in ‘Guy Mannering’.

Santy (sawn-`ee, sawn-tee) n. Santa Claus – ‘Ah thought ee got an electric razor frae Santy?’ [JCo].

Hence the Prov., ‘Ye are as still as a stappit saster’, i.e. a crammed pudding’ [JoJ].

Satchells (saw-chulz) n. former estate east of Synton, about 5 miles north of Hawick, in Lilliesleaf Parish. It was home of the Scotts of Satchells, since at least 1607, according to a charter to Robert Scott. Robert was said to be one of the 24 ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch, holding the lands of ‘Southinrig’ (i.e. Southdeanrig) for his service. Robert’s son was Capt. Walter, who wrote ‘A True History’ of the Scott family in rhyming couplets, published in 1688 (and reissued in Hawick in 1894) In 1615 Jean and William Scott of Satchells (possibly the widow and her son) helped Lady Scott of Howpasley organise a group in Hawick to slaughter 60 of Sir James Douglas’s sheep. Walter Scott (the same man as the poet Capt. Walter) was owner in 1663, when it was valued at £200 and in 1678, when it was valued at £256. John Scott was owner in 1788, when the value was £200. John Corse Scott of Synton owned it in 1811, when it was valued at £256. There is still a farm there. It is probably the ‘Schotteschales’ in Lilliesleaf Parish that was granted to Alexander of Huntington sometime in the period 1202–7 – ‘Tell Ashkirk, and Satchels, Burnfoot, and the Kirkhouse, Howpasley, and Roberton, with Harden bold and crouse’ [WSB] (the origin of the name is probably from Old and Middle English ‘secat schele’, meaning ‘the huts in a corner’; it is ‘Satscheillis’ in 1609, ‘Satchells’, ‘Satscheillis’ and ‘Satschells’ in 1616 and ‘Satscheilles’ in 1633; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map and is ‘Salschtschilles’ in the 1620s).

Saughtree (sawch-tree) n. village and farm in Liddesdale, as well as a former station on the Border Counties Railway east of Riccarton. A track here branches east towards the Border, only 3 1/2 miles away. The area contains a tiny church (built in 1872) and burial ground, and there was formerly a school here. The poet James Telfer was schoolmaster in the years 1834–60; note that there was also a small school at Burnmouth, with which it can be confused (although this is the Burnmouth in southern Liddesdale, and not the one near Saughtree). There was an annual ‘blanket preaching’ held nearby in the 19th century, in a natural amphitheatre. The lands there were valued at 14 shillings on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale, when they were tenanted by Robert and John Henrison. John Cranston was there in 1685 and John Elliot was tenant there in 1694. The farm was surveyed in 1718, along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties, when it extended to 481 acres, bounded by Dawstonburn, Hudshouse, Burnmouth, Pinglehole and ‘Leys’; it also shared a small strip of common land with Pinglehole and the farmhouse was on the opposite side of the Dawston Burn from the modern houses, near the location of the church. Robert Stavert was farmer there in 1785. In 1797 the farmer was Thomas Stavert, and Archibald Stavert in the 1850s and 60s. Andrew Douglas was farmer there in the 1930s. Near the shepherd’s cottage of Saughtree Grain is the site of a standing stone known as ‘the Knocking Stone’ and others called ‘the White Stones’. Saughtree Fell, to the west, reaches a height of 434 m and contains a triangulation pillar. Some flints found near there are in Hawick Museum – ‘...O Willie, ’tis light, and the moon shines bright, Will ye go and watch the deer wi’ me?’ ‘Ay, be my sooth, this very night;’ – And away they went to Saughentree [ES] (it is ‘Saughtrees’ in the Ettrick Shepherd’s ‘The Laird of Lairistan’ and is occasionally ‘Sauchtree’; the origin of the name is probably the Old English ‘sealh treow’, meaning ‘willow tree’; it first occurs as ‘Sauchtree’ in 1541, ‘Sauchetrie’ in 1652, ‘Sauchtrie’ in 1685 and ‘Saghtrees’ in 1694; it appears on Blaeu’s c.1654 map, but without a label, is ‘Saughtrees’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and is shown on Stobie’s 1770 map).

the Saughtree Cross (thu-sawch-tree-kros) n. name sometimes given to one of 2 stone crosses found near the Abbey Sike in the vicinity of Saughtree in about 1850 and 1880. The first consists of a round piece of stone, carved with a cross, which may have formed the capital of a wayside marker. The second is a somewhat larger rough-hewn stone cross, with part of a sword pommeled Saughtree Fell (sawch-tree-fel) n. hill to the north of Saughtree farm. It reaches a height of over 450 m and contains a triangulation pillar on the secondary summit. It appears to be labelled ‘Daston Fell’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey, suggesting that Dawston Fell may have been an alternative name.

Saughtree Grain (sawch-tree-grān) n. former shepherd’s cottage near where Alison Sike and Cliffohope Burn unite in the upper headwaters of Liddesdale. Alternative names were Cliffohope (on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map), Dawstoneburn Grain (on the 1841 census) and just ‘Grain’ (on the 1851 and 1861 censuses). The original cottage was a little further up than the more modern one. It was said that the steep sides of the valley here meant that the residents would not see the Sun for about 6 months. William Armstrong was shepherd there in 1841 and 1851, and Arthur Armstrong in 1861.

Saughtree Kirk (sawch-tree-kirk) n. small church in Saughtree village, built in 1872, when there was discussion of making this a separate parish from Castleton. It began as a Home Mission station in 1865. The Manse was built right next door. It was made a ‘quoad sacra’ parish in 1910. The men who ministered there to start with were officially ‘Licentiates’, with a permanent minister only appointed in the years 1910–60. A framed parchment records the names of 9 local men who died in WWI. A roll of the ministry is: James Patterson 1866–70; William Smith 1870–77; Thomas Gordon 1877–86; Alexander Wilson 1886–89; David Ness 1889–92; Robert Galbraith 1892; James Ronald Macdonald 1892–1902; Joseph William McLean 1902–03; Adam McCaul Paterson 1903–10; William Napier Bell 1910–20; David Smith 1921–22; John Scott 1922–25; John Whyte McGill 1925–27; Robert Douglas Pettie 1927–28; Robert Forsyth McGarrity 1929–

Sawmill Street (saw-mil-stree‘) n. name given on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map to part of what had previously been named Dovemount and would be named Havelock Street in 1864. It was side of the later entrance to Rosalee. It appears on Wood’s 1824 map, but unlabelled, and was already indicated on a sketch of Wilton drawn in 1810. It was a cottage with a door and 2 small windows, and a stair leading to 2 first floor attics. A lane ran behind it from what is now Rosalee Brae. It was inhabited until 1887, thereafter used as sheds for nurserymen and demolished in 1901. It was notorious for the suicide of ‘Jenny Saut Haa’ there in 1758 (or perhaps 68??). Another ‘Salt House’ is recorded near West Port in the late 1700s beside Bowie’s Well and also referred to as the ‘Salter’s House’ (also written ‘Sautha’, etc.).

saxhorn (saks-horn) n. a brass musical instrument invented by Adolphe Sax, resembling a bugle, but with valves instead of keys. There were many 'Saxhorn Bands' set up in the mid-1800s, but Hawick's band is the only remaining one in Scotland that uses the old word.

the Saxhorn Band (thu-saks-horn-bawnd) n. Hawick's brass band, which acts as a marching band, a concert band and a competitive band. Founded by Samuel Stainton in 1855, following a petition to the Magistrates to support the setting up of a brass band for the town. There have been many ups and downs since then, but it is still going strong after more than a century and a half. The Band briefly dissolved in 1878. In 1945 the Council decided to help financially with the Band, but this discontinued with the end of the District Council. There were originally 14 members, which has grown to around 25 at full strength. Stainton acted as leader for the first few months, with Stephen Teal then becoming the first appointed Bandmaster. Walter Atkinson was a prominent Bandmaster 40 years later, with James Amos leading in the successful post-WWII period. In 1961 they became Scottish Championship Band and later competed in the national finals, also playing in the televised evening concert in the Albert Hall. The band have practised in a huge number of locations over the years, in part of the former Dickson & Laings mill in the later years of the 20th century, before moving to O'Connell Street. They have been prominent at ceremonial parades in Hawick over the last 150 years, for example during the Wars, and in the unveiling of the Horse monument. At the Common Riding they have many specific duties, including meeting the Cornet after the Picking, meeting the cavalcade at the Volunteer after the Moss-paul Ride-out, playing the Cornet from the Town Hall to the Horse on Colour Bussing night, and leading the Provost's procession from the Horse on the Friday morning. They also play 'Invocation' at the Handing-Back. They were heard on the 1937 BBC radio broadcast of the Common Riding, and are on the 'Hawick Sings' records. In addition they usually lead the children's procession to the Vertish Hill Sports. They have also played a New Year's concert at the Tower Knowe for a great many years. A history 'Seven Score Years' was written by Owen Connelly in 1995 and Gillian French wrote a Ph.D. thesis entitled 'Follow the Band: Community Brass Bands in the Scottish Borders' in 2014 - ‘...And then the Saxhorn Band, with fervid glee, Sends forth brave notes that please the listening ear' [JCG], ‘The Saxhorn Band is hard tae bate Thenks tae Bob Hume and Gladys Tait' [IW].

scantlins (skaw-linz) n., pl. arch. small cut pieces of timber, small beams or joists, the dimensions of timber.

scant-o-grace (skawn-‘ã-grãs) n., poet. a scapegrace, rascal, reprobate – ‘Troth ye hae guid face To tell sic tales, ye nasty scant o’ grace’ [JoHa].

Scarlet (skawr-li’) n. Andrew (15th/16th C.) witness to the 1511/2 saisine for the Barony of Hawick. His name is recorded as ‘Andrea Scarborough’. He was probably a prominent man in Hawick at the time, and likely to be a descendant of the earlier Robert. Robert (15th C.) recorded as ‘Roberto Skarlate’ when he was witness to the 1452 saisine for William Douglas of Drumlanrig being regranted the Barony of Hawick. This was signed in Hawick by a number of local men.

scarletina (skawr-li-tee-nu) n. disease caused by a bacterial toxin, most commonly affecting toddlers, with symptoms being sore throat, fever, bright red tongue and a characteristic rash. It was formerly a great killer of children. The disease arrived in Hawick in 1831, Dr. John Douglas remarking that this was the first major disease to appear in the Town. It claimed the lives of many (probably tens of) children and a few adults that year. The disease was almost entirely wiped out by the use of antibiotics in the 20th century.

Scarnook (skawr-nook) n. former name for a house in Robertson village, located just to the south of the school (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).
scarrow (ska-rō, -ri) n., arch. the shadow of a hill or similar, a faint light, v. to emit a faint light, to shine through the clouds – ‘... it is said of the moon, It’s scarrowing, Roxb.’ [JoJ].

scart (skawrt, skawr’) v. to scrape, scratch, scribble (a letter etc.) – ‘In a ring scarted oot be oor heel in the stoor’ [??], ‘They will scart yer hert on the raws, An’ expect folk tae gie them applause’ [FL], ‘A stinkin’ midden, a scartin’ hen – There’s sma’ choice there ‘tween craws and men’ [DH], to scrape out, ‘... he told the amusing story about a little boy who wished to ‘scart’ the jelly pan, and was told by his mother that he might scart the pan, but it would have to be the outside. In the same way the public should tell the Council that they could only be permitted to ‘scart’ the outside of the Common-Riding pan’ [HNe], to make a scraping sound – ‘A scartin skeele on a skull sklate’ [ECS], ‘Airchie o’ the Reuch Sike, scartin’ Drops o’ Brandy ...’ [DH], arch. to scratch (the buttons) off another person by a downward sweep of the fingers – ‘... And gat his buttons scartit at the Auld Smiddy end’ [JT], ‘To scart one’s buttons, ... a mode of challenging to battle among boys, Roxb.’ [JoJ], n. a scratch, a mark made hurriedly with a pen, a form of challenge among boys (also spelled ‘skart’).

scartit (skawr-t-ee, skawr-ti’) pp., scratched, scribbled – ‘The Thieves Road, and a route owre the hags o’ The Roan Scartit in wi’ a pencil’ [DH].

scartle (skawr-tul) n., arch. an implement for scraping ashes out of a fireplace, a scraper for a cow-house – ‘The grape and the skartle he [Frost] froze in the stank’ [HSR], ‘Gie’z that scartel, an’ A’l’raik oot the feier’ [ECS], v. to rake out ashes, scrape out in small quantities (also written ‘scartel’).

Scatterpenny (skawr-ur-pe-nee) n. cottage on the A7 past Braxholm. The bend in the road near here, sometimes called ‘Scatterpenny Corner’, has been a frequent site of accidents. A pool in the Teviot there was formerly a popular swimming haunt. The site of the present cottage was once the location for a small hamlet, where an inn was kept by Jean Scott, also known as ‘Jean the Ranter’, mother of ‘The Bonnie Lass o’ Braxholm’. The inn there was said to be very popular among drovers in the early 19th century (the origin of the name is uncertain, but there are places of the same name elsewhere, perhaps suggesting that the alehouse was where travellers would mis-spend their money).

scaud (skawd) v., arch. to scald, scorched, inflame the skin, burn with desire – ‘The heart scauds and sorrows that poortith maun dree Couldna daun’ton the blithe heart o’ Eppy M’Gee’ [JT].

scaudit (skaw-dee’-di’) pp., arch. scalded, inflamed, raw (also ‘scadid’).

scaudit beer (skaw-dee’-beer) n., arch. a kind of gruel made with oats and hot beer (noted by J. Jamieson; also ‘scadid ale’).

scaul (skawl) n., arch. a scold, scolding – ‘Makes us the butt of a’ his scawl’ [JR] (also spelled ‘scawd’; cf. scaul).

scauld (skawld) v. to scold – ‘My Mither still may scauld and ban, And a’ the men misca’’ [JT], n. a scold, scolding (also scaul).

scaunle (skaw-nul) n., arch. a scandal – ‘She spends her days collectin’ scaulnle, Her tongue gaun like the auld pump haun’le’ [IJ].

scaup (skawp) n., arch. the scalp – ‘Be’t Yankee scaup or Russian knob’ [JoHa], ‘... an’ the hairie scaup o’ sic an ane as gaes wullfullie on in his trespassis’ [HSR].

scaur (skawr) v., n., arch. scare – ‘Should Satan e’er present his phyx, We’ll scaur him off wi’ auld Blink-bonny’ [DA].

scaur (skawr) n. a bare place on a hillside, cliff, rocky bank, particularly one being undercut by a river or stream – ‘Till it seems lyin’ nestled ‘mang mung hillocks an’ scaurs A whole fairy city, up-biggit wi’ stars’ [JJ], ‘Is it the roar of Teviot’s tide, That chafes against the scaur’s red side?’ [SWS], ‘... he passed on his road thither a scaur, by the side of a rivulet ...’ [EM1820], ‘To wage in headlong heat a mimic war, And drive the fox o’er moss, and moor, and scaur’ [DA], ‘And here’s a wee rogue wi’ a scaur on his chin ...’ [TCh], ‘It may be found on all the scaurs along the Teviot and Slitrig, and is especially abundant above Crowbyres Bridge’ [JAHM], ‘The Teviot takes its quiet way Past level haugh and loamy scuar, Whiles coursing through a placid pool, Whiles rippling o’er some pebbly bar’ [JCG], ‘A wee bit scaur offends her e’e. She plants a braw Scots thistle ...’ [WP] (this is the anglicised or literary version of cf. seer, with G. Watson writing that it occurs ‘only in literature or educated speech’).

Scaur (skawr) n. Scar, former farmstead in the Dod valley, corresponding roughly to the present position of Dodburn Filter Cottage, with the woods to the south of there still being known as Scar Plantation (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).
the Scaurend (th-skawr-end) n. former name for part of Robertson village, at the western side, so named because of the ‘scaur’ by the bend in the river there. The house of the same name was once the manse for the Snoot Kirk.

Scaurnook (skawr-nook) n. former farmstead in Robertson Parish, probably near to Scaurend. Carrier John Elliot was there in 1841 and retired once the manse for the Snoot Kirk. The house of the same name was so named because of the ‘scaur’ by the bend in the river there. The house of the same name was once the manse for the Snoot Kirk.

the Scaur Pool (thu-skawr-, -sker-, -pool) n. former name for a pool in the Teviot at Mansfield, near where the mill lade came out. This also formed the eastern end of the property once used as nurseries by Dickson’s. Also called the ‘Sker Pool’ – ‘The Doctor was one day taking his accustomed walk along the north bank of the Teviot and Mr. Williamson wading more than knee deep and fishing in the Scaur Pool’ [WNK], ‘As they came up by Weensland Cauld, And through by the Sker Pool, They were met by lots o’ bairns, Sir, As they came frae the school’ [JCG].

Scaur Pool (skawr-pool) n. Scar Pool, name for a pool in the Lidde Water, located near the cliffs by the farm of Flatt (marked on the 1862 Ordnance Survey map).

Scaw’d Law (skawd-law) n. hill in Cavers Parish, just south of the Maidens, reaching a height of 503 m. James Turnbull was recorded as resident there in 1770. There are the remains of a linear earthwork on the eastern side of the hill, perhaps connected with features noted near Leap Hill and near King’s Sike, and presumably once boundary markers (the origin is probably ‘hill with a shieling’, from Old Norse, or old Scots ‘scald’, i.e. a hill with bare patches; there are several other hills called ‘Scaw’d’ or ‘Scawd’ elsewhere in Scotland; it is ‘Scamih’ in 1770).

Scawmill (skaw-nil) n. cottage on the Cala (or Dean) Burn, reached from the Dean via the old track along the burnside. It was also once known as ‘Timbersidemill’, and has a very picturesque setting among the woods. There was presumably one a corn-mill there, perhaps the same one known as Dean Mill. John Scott was there in 1791. It was still active when Walter Smith was recorded as miller in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories – ‘Just leave the Dean by Scawmill farm, And o’er the well-worn stile, Up by the low and thick set hedge The very briers smile’ [WFC] (also ‘Scaw Mill’; it was ‘Skawmill’ in 1791).

Scaur Pool see Scawmill

Scenes of Infancy (seenz-ov-in-fin-see) n. longest poem written by John Leyden. It is mainly constructed in praise of the countryside of Teviotdale, where he spent his youth, weaving in a large number of local myths and legends, but also covering wider historical ideas, international issues of his day, and religious and social topics (including a denunciation of the slave trade). Although nominally looking back to his childhood, and lamenting the changes caused by the agricultural revolution during his lifetime, it at the same time looks forward towards his future in the wider world. It was published in 1803, shortly after he sailed for India (never to return). In fact it is a collection of pieces written over several years, with connecting sections added in the months before his departure – ‘Beside the Ettrick Minstrel stood a name, The Bard who sung the Scenes of Infancy! As also stood the darling Cunningham, Who sung old faery Cluden, Nith, and Dee’ [JTe].

scer (sker) n., arch. a mark left on improperly washed clothes, v., arch. to mark clothes through not washing properly (also spelled ‘sker’).

scer (sker) v., arch. to scare (also spelled ‘sker’).

scer (sker) n., arch. a ridge of rock, precipitous bare bank, cliff, especially one made of red rock – ‘Fornent iz, ... Mintih Craigs ... brent raise ther skerrs’ [ECS] (also spelled ‘sker’; cf. the more anglicised scaur; from Mediaeval English and Old Norse).

the Scer (utthu-skær) n. Lynnwood Scar, i.e. the cliff behind Lynnwood – ‘...she sat on the Scer watchin Lynnwud Mills chimney bein demolishe’ [IWL]. The same name was also formerly used for the slope along the Avenue of Wilton Lodge (also ‘the Scaur’).

the Scer Plantin (th-sker-plawn’-in) n. plantation along the western side of the Dod Burn just south of the farm of Dod.

the Scaur Pool see the Scaur Pool schaedle (shà-dul) n., arch. schedule – ‘A lookeet the shuttle o the kist, bit A coodna finnd the schaelde’ [ECS].

schammared (sha-mard) pp., adj., arch. ornamented – ‘Item, ane pair of black velvet breikis, with ane clok lyned with schag all schammared our with black silk lace ...’ [SB1633].

Schanyie (shan-yee) n. Robert (16th/17th C.) wright from Braxholme who is described in scheir

a 1612 list as being convicted along with many other local men of charging too much interest on loans. His name is also written as ‘Schange’ and he seems not to have appeared to answer the charge and hence was declared a rebel (it is unclear to which modern name this might correspond).

scheir see shear scheme (skewn) n. a housing scheme, typically known as a ‘housing estate’ in England, and particularly applying to those built by the council. Housing schemes in Hawick include Burnfoot, Stiches and Mayfield.

schent (shent) pp., poet. put to death, destroyed, damned, perished – ‘For the Lord kens the waye o’ the righteous: but the waye o’ the ungodlie sall be utterlie schent’ [HSR], ‘thay schent at the reuik o’ thy countenence’ [HSR].

Scherwinlaw see Sherwinlaw

Scheirky (shet-ké) n. John Christian (1778–1874) born in Edinburgh, from an old Transylvanian family, he settled in Oxford, and became professor of drawing at the naval college, Portsmouth, where he was well-known as a marine painter. He was commissioned by Sir Walter Scott to paint 12 views along Border rivers to illustrate ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’ in 1810. The painting of Hawick, from 1808, is one of the first images of the town, the view being from roughly near Wilton Grove. There is also a view of Harden Glen from when he visited the area in September 1807, and a view of Goldielands showing its already ruined state around that time.

Scheves (sheevz) n. John (14th/15th C.) cleric of Glasgow Diocese. He had possession of the Archdeaconry of Teviotdale in 1418, but in the following year resigned in favour of William Croyser. Probably the same John ‘de Scheves’ was Clerk of the Rolls and Register of Brechin in 1426 and associated with St. Andrews Diocese in the 1430s.

Schiehallion (shee-haw-lee-in) n. local folk group, consisting of the Lammies from Hawick and another couple from St. Boswells, performing since about 1980 and having released about 4 tapes (note there are other groups from elsewhere with the same name).

schuil (skil) n. school – ‘what schuil did ee gaun ti’?, ‘The bairns new oot o the skail for leave . . .’[ECS], ‘He’s never out o’ some mischiev, He’ll no’ gang to the schule, He tore his car-ritch leaf frae leaf To mak’ a dragon’s tail’ [JT], ‘. . . Wad tempt o’o for tae jouk the schule and seek the floorey braes’ [VW], ‘The gress grew lang and leish ahiht the schule’ [DH], ‘There weren mony bairns aboot In oor wee village schule, But, ah, it was a bonnie spot, Doon by the shelt’ring hill’ [WFC], ‘And noo, in the schule o’ the world, A hantle o’ heidstrong loons . . .’ [WL], v. to school – ‘. . . where hei schuiled yin o’ his maist famous pupils, Christopher Murray Griev’ [IHS], ‘She’d ne’er been schuled i’ the artfu’ wiles That jauds betray wi’ their hauntin’ smiles’ [WL], ‘I canna schule mysel’ to fit Wi toumsmen, drawn sae keen the bricht Upon each other’s avarice’ [DH] (spelled ‘schule’ and other variants).

the Schuil Board (thu-skil-börd) n. the School Board, which was formed in Hawick in 1873, following the Education Scotland Act of 1872. It took over the responsibility of running the schools from the Parish heritors, and put the control in the hands of a locally elected Board. Minute books for 1873–1947 are in the Borders Archive.

schuilhouse (skil-hous) n. schoolhouse, a building in which pupils are taught, sometimes also serving as the residence of the schoolmaster. The need for a separate school building (rather than using St. Mary’s Kirk) was agreed upon at least as early as 1683. Rent paid for the schoolhouse by the Kirk Session of Hawick is recorded in 1712, although this was some temporary accommodation. Some time after 1722 the first purpose-built Hawick Parish schoolhouse was erected (at Slitrig Bank), but it was carried away by the 1767 flood.

schuilmaister (skil-mäis-tur) n. a schoolmaster. John Liddersdale, who signed the Solemn League and Covenant in Hawick in 1638 is recorded as being a schoolmaster, presumably in Hawick, but this is uncertain. Hawick’s schoolmaster is first explicitly mentioned in 1657, when Walter Martin held the position. He was recorded again as schoolmaster in 1665, with a Mr. Chisholme being next, but his first name is not known. John Purdom took over in 1669 and is the first of whom we have any substantial information. During his time the Grammar School was established, taking away some of his teaching duties, as well as salary; in 1710 a bond was granted by the Council for payment to the new master of the Grammar School. Some of the payment for the Parish Schoolmaster came directly from the pupils, and the income was also supplemented with the master serving as Session Clerk, as well as Kirk Reader. Subjects taught by the single master included Grammar, Writing, Arithmetic, Mathematics, Latin and Singing. Walter Turnbull, ‘the Little Master’, was schoolmaster from the 1730s until the 1750s. James Inglis was Parish schoolmaster at the time of the flood of 1767, having started in 1756 and serving until his death in 1806. He was succeeded by Christopher Armstrong, until 1820. In the 1830s there were around 150 pupils. The schoolmaster’s house appears to have been inadequate for most of the history of the school. In the early 19th century the house at 20 Buccleuch Street was used. The first purpose-built house for the schoolmaster was constructed along with the new Buccleuch Street school 1860. The Grammar School was founded in 1710, with the first master being James Innes, who was called Rector to distinguish him from the Parish school master. There was a common master for the two schools for much of the 18th century, until the 1770s. The two schools merged in 1824, with James Murray as the common Master. Once the schools were big enough to require many teachers, rather than just a master and a few assistants, the term ‘heidmaister’ would be used. The word ‘Rector’ was initially used at the Grammar School and transposed to the High School when they merged (also hyphenated; see Rectors for a full list of High School Rectors; cf. heidmaister and the Pesh).

The Schuilmaister’s Field (thu-skil-mäis-turz-feeld) n. local name for a field at Honeyburn just outside Denholm. It was presumably once connected with the local schoolmaster.

Schuils (skilz) n., pl. schools. Hawick currently has 6 primary schools (Burnfoot, Drumlanrig, St. Margaret’s, Stitches, Trinity and Wilton), several outlying primary schools (Denholm, Hobkirk, Newcastleton, Robertson, Teviothead) and one High School. St. Mary’s, St. Cuthbert’s and Wilton Dean schools also once existed in town, along with several small private schools. There used to be several other small schools in country areas around the Town, including at the Allan Water, Ashkirk, Bedrule, Burnmouth, Clarilaw, Cogsmill, Hermitage, Howpastley, Kirkton, Minto, Newmill, Redfordgreen, Riccarton, Saughtree, Southdean, Stouslie and Wolfelee. During the 18th century there are records of people being paid by Hawick and Wilton Parishes to teach children (probably in their own houses) in the areas of Branholmestown, Borthwickhaugh, Northhouse, Raesknowe, Thornyhall (i.e. Teviothead) and Whitlaw. The earliest school in Hawick started in the mid-17th century and was located in St. Mary’s Church, with the churchyard as a playground. The first purpose-built school was on Slitrig Bank, but was washed away in the 1767 flood. The Grammar School, which originally taught in Latin, was founded in 1710. It existed alongside the Parish School (also then referred to as ‘the English Schuil’) for more than a century. They came together in 1825 as ‘the United Schuils’ and later ‘Buccleuch Schuil’. However, even the combination of the 2 schools was still insufficient provision for education, leading to many small private schools cropping up from about the 1710s, although originally they were forbidden to teach ‘further than the Psalm Book’. More small private schools appeared through the 19th century, with one being set up in 1836 by several local individuals with a young teacher hired from Edinburgh (as described by Robert Wilson). The New Statistical Account (1840) states that Hawick had as many as 10 ‘adventure schools’ and that it was not ‘known that there are any of the native population above fifteen years of age who cannot read’. There were apparently as many as 19 separate institutions existing in Hawick and Wilton in 1865. Most of these private schools lasted only a short time, and they included: Brand’s Schuil (a.k.a. Teviot Grove Academy); the Chartist Schuil; Hawick Academy; Heronhill Schuil; the Subscription Schuil; Tibbie Thomline’s Schuil; and Wulton Lodge Academy. It is traditional that on the Thursday of the Common Riding the Principals visit the primary schools and the Cornet asks the Head if the pupils can have the rest of that day and the next day off to support him; the Cornet’s own school is visited first. A full list of Hawick and neighbouring schools is: Allan Water Schuil/Priesthaugh Schuil; Ashkirk Schuil; Bedrule Schuil; Beverley Schuil; Brand’s Schuil/Teviot Grove Academy; Burnfit Schuil; Burnmooth Schuil; the Chartist Schuil; Cogsmill Schuil; Clarilaw Schuil; Craigmount Schuil; Denholm Schuil/Cavers Schuil; Drumlanrig Schuil; the Industrial Schuil/the Raggit Schuil/Drumlanrig & St. Cuthbert’s Schuil; Hawick High Schuil/Hawick Grammar Schuil/the Latin Schuil/Dodd’s Schuil/Buccleuch Grammar Schuil/Buccleuch Higher Grade Schuil/Buccleuch Schuil/Hawick United Schuils; Hawick Parish Schuil/the English Schuil; Hermitage Schuil; Heronhill Schuil; Hobkirk Schuil; Howpastley Schuil; the Image Gairden; Kirkton Schuil; Minty Schuil; Newcastleton Schuil; Newmill Schuil; Redfordgreen Schuil; Riccarton Schuil; Roberton Schuil; Saughtree Schuil; the S克莱nty Schuil; Soothidean Schuil; St. Cuthbert’s Schuil/the Episcopal Schuil; Stirches Schuil; St. Margaret’s Schuil/the Catholic Schuil; St. Mary’s Schuil; Stouslie Schuil; the Subscription Academy/Hawick Academy; the Subscription Schuil/Hawick High Schuil; Teviotheid Schuil/Caerlennig Schuil; Tibbie Thornline’s Schuil; Trinity Schuil; Wolfelee Schuil; and Wulton Dean Schuil; and Wulton Lodge Academy; and Wulton Schuil.

schuilwages (skil-wæ-jezz) n., pl. school fees – ‘To Master John Purdom for poor boyes school-wages . . . £3 18s’ [PR1703].

Sclater (sklæ'-ur) n. Elizabeth (18th C.) born at Fodderlee Birks (according to George Tancred). In 1745 she was living with her family in one of the cottages at Weensmoor. Since her family had previously lived near Fodderlee it seems reasonable to suppose that they gave their name to the ‘Sclater Ford’ there; however, this would require that the same family had been there for more than 200 years. When they were at Weensmoor in 1745 it is said that the Highland host stopped at the farm on their march to England, but found only the children at home – ‘They did no harm and tried to pacify the bairns, who were afraid of them’. She was grandmother to Mr. Aikten, who was a plasterer in Jedburgh. It is possible she was the Elizabeth who married Robert Williamson and had children baptised at the Free Kirk in Jedburgh: Elizabeth (b.1778); John (b.1781); and Moses (b.1783). There were Redpaths and Sibbalds there in 1841, as well as teacher Helen Laidlaw (it is ‘Sclentiehall’ in 1784).

the S克莱nty Schuil (thu-sklen'-ee-skil) n. former school in Hobkirk Parish in the early-to-mid 19th century, intended for small children who were too young for the Parish school. It was established about 1831 by Mrs. Cleghorn of Weens, who supplied the money for the books and the teacher’s salary. The building was a thatched cottage with one room, divided by 2 box-beds. The schoolmistress was Nelly Laidlaw, referred to as ‘Mrs. Laidlaw’. On the 16th of October each year, George Tancred’s (nee Cleghorn) birthday, Mrs. Cleghorn would give out toys and books to the children. The building was later the residence of a shoemaker. The name survives in the ‘Upper S克莱nty Plantation’, on the left-hand side of the road between Bonchester Bridge and Weens House. This is probably the same place meant by the farm of ‘Stenthaugh’, where Robert Barrie was tenant in 1797.

tsclidder (skli-dur) n., arch. a slide, sliding movement, slope covered with loose stones, v., arch. to slide, slip – ‘To sclidder, sclither, to slide to the right or left, when one intends going straight forward; particularly applicable to walking on ice, Teviotd.’ [JoJ] (also written ‘sklider’; the word was applied to springs around the top of the Loan; see also sclither).

the Scлиdder Springs (thu-skli-dur-springz) n. name sometimes given to the springs that feed the Smaile Burn. They formerly came out at the Nipknowes and were conducted by lead pipes to a reservoir at the top of the Loan and to 6 separate wells, forming Hawick’s main public water supply from 1797–1865 (the original cost being £600). These wells or ‘sprigget pants’ were at the West Port (‘Bowie’s Well’), bottom of the Mid Row, foot of the Howegate (the ‘Printer’s well’), at the Town House, and at 2 other locations (presumably along the High Street). The source was also called the ‘Town Moor’ or ‘Haggishaa’ supply (the derivation is probably from ‘scilderry’ meaning ‘slippery’; the name was already lost by the mid-19th century).

scilderry (skli-du-ree) adj., arch. slippery – ‘Let thair waye be mirk an’ skydderie …’ [HSR] (also spelled ‘skliddery’ and variants; cf. slidder).

sclim (sklin) n., arch. a climb – ‘Teedisome brae’, quo A, eenow, bit for aa A stecht keinda, it was rale niece, that sklimm’ [ECS] v., poet to climb – ‘So sklim high heaven, trimme throw hell …’ [DH] (also written ‘sklim’ and ‘sklim’).

sclider (skli-thur) n., v., arch. slide, slip (also spelled ‘sklider’; variant of scilder).

Scobie (skö-bee) n. W. associated with the Youth With A Mission, which met in the former Hawick Home Mission premises on Bourtree Place. He started his own church, called ‘The New Life Christian Fellowship’, which met at the Evergreen Hall. The name was later changed to Abundant Life Church, and in 1988 the group purchased the former Catholic Church at Burnfoot.

Scocha (skö-shu) n. Scottish folk music band from Hawick, originally formed as a duo by Iain Scott and David Chapman. The name comes from a contraction of Scott and Chapman, and they get upset when it is pronounced incorrectly! Phil Clayton (‘Phil the Base’) became the third member of the duo, followed by Alan Brydon as the fourth and Dougie Anderson as the drummer. Their first CD, ‘Bordering on …’, was released in 2001, along with a video ‘Songs of the Border’. A CD single ‘The Borders’ was released in 2002 and a second album ‘The Land We Love’ in 2004, accompanied by their ‘World Tour’ of the Borders. The 3rd album ‘Gie’d Sum Wellie’ was released in 2006. A live CD was released in 2008, followed by a live DVD in 2009. Their 4th studio album, ‘Scatybboo’, was released in 2012. In 2012 Alan Brydon left, with Ross Walsh joining on drums and Dougie Anderson moving to lead guitar. Phil Clayton left at the end of 2013, to be replaced as bassist by Neil Jackson. The new line-up released ‘Moonlight Again’ in 2016 and the live double album ‘Live on the Borders’ in 2017.

scodie (sko-jee) n., arch. an earwig (a form of scotchie, but perhaps related to its homonym).

scodie (sko-jee) adj., arch. slavish (of tasks), dirty, rough – ‘All, from the scogie lass to the chambermaid, were on terms of great cordiality with the members of the family than obtain now’ [V&M], n., arch. a drudge, hard-worked servant, a rough apron worn for dirty work (also spelled ‘scogic’).

scodie brat (sko-jee-braw’) n., arch. a harden sack apron formerly used for doing dirty housework, particularly scrubbing the doorstep.

scone (skön) n. one of a number of sorts of cake baked on a griddle, particularly a drop-scone, but sometimes one flavoured with treacle or occasionally a more substantial cake containing potato (note that the pronunciation has a long o sound, not the o of general Scots or the diphthong e-oo affected as an attempt to sound ‘posh’).

scopher (skon-fi-it, -ee’) adj., arch. flat-footed (this term, platcher-fittit and platchie-fittit are all noted by E.C. Smith).

scuff (skoof) n., arch. a scoop, used by grocers etc (cf. scuif, this variant being particularly heard in Teviotdale).

scoot (skool) n., v., arch. scowl (also written ‘scooif’).

scoolie (skoo-lee) adj., arch. scowly, characterised by a scowl, shading the face with a brow turned down at the front – ‘The scowly hat, and beard so gray, – The bridegroom stood before her’ [JTe], ‘A scoolie hat = a hat overshading the eyes’ [ECS] (also written ‘scooly’).

Scoon (skoon) n. Andrew (19th C.) joiner in Hawick. He married Margaret Thomson and they had children in the 1830s. An unnamed child died in 1837. His mother, who lived at Roadhead, died in 1824. George (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Mary Hume and their children included: Robert (b.1764); William (b.1771); Janet (b.1771); Patrick (b.1773). The 1764 baptism was witnessed by dyer Thomas Turnbull and William (who was surely related).

James (17th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Janet Glendinning and their children included: Helen (b.1635); and Janet (b.1642). Witnesses to the baptisms included Patrick and Simon, who must have been closely related. The 1635 baptism is one of the earliest existing Hawick Parish records. James (1792/3–1827) probably son of Scoon

Walter and Mary Elliot, residents of Todshawhill. He may have worked for a while as a farrier with his brother Walter in Langholm. He emigrated to South Africa in 1817, in a party of Scotsmen including his brother Robert (later a hunter and explorer). He settled in Cape Town as a blacksmith. In 1824 he married Francina, and they had 3 children, including Walter. James (b.1812/3) from Canonbie, he was a labourer at Limkiekilhedge Lime Works in 1851. His wife was Margaret and their children included Dinah and Isabella.

James (1836–89) son of John and Agnes Robson. He was born in Langholm, and descended from the family of the Branxholme area. He became a tweed designer at Glebe Mills and then went into partnership with Walter Scott Barrie to form Scoon & Barrie in Weensland. Later J.L. Hood became a partner and when Barrie left the company became Scoon & Hood, with main premises at Teviotdale Mills. He spoke at the 1884 franchise rally held at Loch Park. He had a double cottage built for him at Loch Park in about 1879, with W.S. Barrie next door. He married Anne O’Hair in 1859. Their children were: Mary Ann (b.1861), who married John Milton Cass; Robert (b.1863), who married Isabella Lilloco; Agnes (b.1869); James (b.1872); Margaret (b.1877); and Frank (b.1882). James (1872–1936) son of James, he was also a manufacturer. In 1900 he married Isabella, daughter of dyker Robert Scott. His wife was served heir to her father in 1917. They had a son, James (1901–70). John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, one of the earliest known of this family. He married Christian Allan, and their children included: Christian (b.1634). John (17th C.) blacksmith at Copshaw Park according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He paid tax on his dwelling and also for ‘an smiddy’. John (d.bef. 1705) tenant at Branxholmtown. He is listed as tenant along with Patrick in 1677, and seems likely to have been Patrick’s brother. Probably the same John was tenant along with Patrick in at least the period 1690–8, when each of them were leasing one fifth of the farm. He was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. In 1698 he and Patrick leased Branxholme Town with Walter Riddell as their cautionser. However, it is possible that some of these entries are for a different John (b.1670), who was son of Patrick. He married Margaret Riddell, from an unknown branch of that family, although Walter and William Riddell witnessed a baptism for them. Their children included: Robert (b.1684); and an unnamed son (b.1687). Walter, who later farmed at Branxholmtown, was probably also a son. Margaret Riddel was tenant at Branxholmstown from 1705, so he was presumably deceased by then. John (b.1713) son of Robert and Agnes Elliot, he was baptised at Branxholmstown. He was tenant farmer for part of Todshawhill, starting in at least 1748. In 1751 he was renting Todshawhill with Robert (probably his father). However, he is difficult to separate from the other local contemporaries of the same name. His wife’s name is unknown. Their children included: Robert (1749–1832) who married Beatrix Turnbull; and John (1750–1836), who also farmed at Todshawhill. Walter (b.1753) who married Mary Elliot, was probably his son; Walter’s grandson James became a tweed manufacturer in Hawick. Mary, born to John ‘in Branxhome’ in 1747 may also have been a child of his. John (1718–91) tenant farmer at Todshawhill, probably son of Walter and Isobel Millar. He is probably one of the 2 Johns recorded as tenant of Todshawhill in 1764. He is listed as resident of Todshawhill in the baptism record of several of his children. He married Beatrix Tait, who died in 1795, aged 74. Their children were: Walter (b.1748), died age 29; Robert; Jenny, who died young; Agnes (b.1751), married Robert Ballantyne; William (b.1752), died young; Isabella (b.1755), who married James Laidlaw; William (again, b.1756), married Helen Elliot; John (b.1756), twin of William; Robert (b.1759); and Jean (b.1763), who married Adam Nichol. He is buried at St. Mary’s. His sister Mary died the same year as him. He may be the John of ‘Todgahill’ who was cautionser in 1764 for Isobell Scoon’s marriage to Robert Young. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Mabonlaw. He married Jane Watson and their son Andrew was born in 1804. He may have secondly married Margaret Scott, since John was at Mabonlaw in 1822 when their son John was born, and at Martinhouse in 1813 when their son William was born. John (d.1829) farmer at Branxholme Park. A child of his died in 1816 and a son in 1829. He died in Hawick. He was surely related to the later John at Branxholme Park. John (1750–1836) farmer at Todshawhill. He was son of John and probably Beatrix Tait (or possibly son of the John born in 1713, this generation is confused by multiple men of the same name). He married Rachel Riddell. His children were Robert (b.1770); John (1771–1861) who died in Seneca, New York; Janette (1773–1839) who married James Scott and died in Seneca, New York; James (1769–1851) died in Seneca; Walter (b.1776); William (1779–1863) who married Margaret Hutton and Elizabeth Amos and died in Hawick; Beatrix (b.1782); and possibly Walter (b.1787), if he was at Shiresnecleuch then. He may be the same as the John who was farmer at Easter Parkhill on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (1771–1861) farmer at Todshawhill. He was son of John and Rachel Riddell. In 1800 he emigrated to the New York, where he settled in Seneca and was one of the founders of the Associated Reformed Church there. He died in Seneca and was buried there along with his wife Margaret. John (b.c.1780) farm worker living at Branxholme Park in 1841. His house was probably at Cowlad-hall. His wife was Betty, who was from Robertson. Their children included Jess, Agnes and Mina. His wife was a widow by 1851. John (1788–1835) farmer at Todshawhill. He was eldest son of Robert and Janet White. His heirs were recorded as tenants of Todshawhill in the period 1834–43. He married Margaret Scott, who died in 1829, aged 41. Their children included: Robert (1812–85) who married Mary Nichol and died at Sparland, Illinois; William (1813–77) who married Henrietta Pool Gass; Wilhelmina (1815–43) married Walter Turnbull and emigrated to Canada; James (1818–57) farmed at Newstead Mill; and Charles Riddell (1826–93) died at Seneca, New York. He died at Hawick. Mary ‘the Cannie Wumman’ nee Turnbull (d.1857) known as ‘Mrs. Scoon’, she was listed as innkeeper of the Plough Inn on the Sandbed in 1851. She was listed as a vintner at the Plough in Slater’s 1852 directory. She is also said to have been landlady of the Harrow Inn (but this may be confusion with the names). She married innkeeper William, and took over after his death. It is unclear what character trait gave her the nickname ‘Cannie’ (or ‘Canny’). Patrick (15th C.) resident of Belses Mill. In 1494/5 James Davidson in Raperlaw was charged with several crimes, including bringing in Englishmen to steal 18 oxen and cows from him, for burning his house and pillaging goods from him. Patrick (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Jean Richardson, and their children included: Helen (b.1641). He is probably the Patrick recorded as a witness to baptisms in 1635 and 1639. Patrick (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Susanna Scott and their children included: Anna (b.1650), with witnesses to the baptism Walter Scott and George Scott. Patrick (17th C.) lived in Hawick Parish. He married Catherine Laidlaw, and their children included: James (b.1657). Patrick (d.c.1699) son of Robert. He was tenant farmer in Branxholmtown in at least the period 1671–96. In 1675 he was listed as son of Robert, who also leased part of Branxholmetown. In 1690–97 he and John (probably his son) were each leasing one fifth of the farm. He was listed there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1698 he and John leased part of Branxholme Town with Walter Riddell as their cautioner. He married Helen Hope and had children: John (b.1670); unnamed (b.1672); Robert (b.1674); William (b.1678) and Janet (b.1680). He secondly married Bessie Elliot and had children: Walter (b.1683); Helen (b.1685); and Patrick (b.1688), who married Agnes Elliot. Witnesses to the 1685 baptism were James Hume and Adam Ogilvie. His will is recorded in 1699, although his surname is transcribed ‘Shoon’. Patrick (1685/6–1719) son of John. He was smith at Pathhead (presumably not the one in Wilton) and is buried at Castleton. Patrick (b.1688) son of Patrick and Bessie Elliot. He was farmer at Branxholmtown. In 1711 in Robertson he married Agnes Elliot. Patrick (18th C.) recorded being paid as Park Keeper at Hassendean for the Duke of Buccleuch in the period 1764–66. He had a voucher for salary in 1765 for weeding and keeping the hedges on Hassendean Common. It is unclear how he was related to the earlier Scoons. Robert (17th C.) resident in Hawick Parish. He married Janet Elliot, and their children included Walter (b.1641). He (or one of the other Roberts) witnessed a baptism for James Purdom in Hawick Parish in 1640. Robert (17th C.) resident in Hawick Parish. He married Janet Scott, and their children included: Margaret (b.1643); ‘Dones’ (b.1644); Helen (b.1646); and Janet (b.1648). Robert (17th C.) resident in Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott, and their children included: Walter (b.1649); and Thomas (b.1650). Another Robert was witness to one of the baptisms. Robert (17th C.) farmer at Branxholmtown, and one of the earliest Scoons on record. In 1675 he and his son Patrick were tenants of part of the lands at Branxholmtown, and the pair were still leasing part of the farm in 1677. He is probably the same as one of the Roberts whose children were recorded in the 1640s or 1650s. Robert (1684–1762) tenant farmer at Branxholmtown and Todshawhill. He was son of John and Margaret Riddell. He is probably the son of ‘Mary’ Riddell who is recorded leasing part of Branxholme Town as early as 1711, and is explicitly listed from 1714.
The pair were in arrears for the rental there in the period 1711–17. He was tenant of 2/3 along with Walter (as well as John Wilson) in 1725 and along with Walter in 1735. He was tenant of Todshawhill in the period 1749–56 along with John, probably his son, or cousin. He married Agnes Elliot (1688–1736). Their children were: John (b.1712); another John (b.1713); Walter (b.1715); Margaret (b.1717); Robert (b.1720) who married Helen Murray; William (b.1722); and James (b.1724). He died at Todshawhill farm. Robert (b.1720) son of Robert and Agnes Elliot. He married Helen Murray (from Hawick Parish) in 1766, and she died in 1808. He might be the Robert, son of Robert, who died in 1790. He may also be the Robert, ‘Branxholmtonn’, married to Janet Burton, whose son Walter was born in 1759. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1753 he married Janet Haliburton. Robert (1759–1828) farmer at Todshawhill. He was son of John and Beatrrix Tait. He is recorded as farmer at Todshawhill in the estate records from 1792–1812 and on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He could also be the Robert who was listed as farmer at Broomiebraes in 1792 and 1812. In 1788 he married Janet White, who died in 1795, aged 33. In 1797 he secondly married Elizabeth (or Elspeth) Buynan, who died in 1841, aged 73. His children included: John (b.1788) who farmed at Todshawhill; Janet (1791–1873) who married Thomas Hall and died in Hawick; Beatrix (b.1793); Jane (1795–1847), who married Thomas Hogg; James, who died aged 22; Margaret, who died aged 29; Isabella (1802/3–59) married Robert Brydon, steward at Highchesters; Elizabeth, died aged 26; Robert, died in infancy; and twins Robert and Elizabeth, who died in childhood. Margaret and Mary, ‘both interred in one grave, pox’ in 1830 were probably also his daughters. Robert (18th/19th C.) carrier in Hawick according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is probably the Robert, carter in the Fore Row, who died in 1832, and whose wife Beatrix Murray, died in 1807. Robert (1789–1837) said to be from the Hawick area, he was a trader in southern Africa. Given the name and date, it is possible he was a son of Walter and Mary Elliot, who lived at Todshawhill. He went there in 1819 as part of Benjamin Moodie’s Scottish settler party (his brother James also being in the party). In 1827 he and William McLuckie travelled inland to the headwaters of the Marico River, the Ndebele territory of Mzilikazi. In 1829 he reached further into the interior, to the area of modern Pretoria, hunting and trading ivory, and establishing a relationship with Mzilikazi, which may have involved selling arms. The information he and fellow traders gained was passed on to Dr. Andrew Smith, who led a significant expedition into the central South Africa in 1834. He and fellow trader David Hume explored the valley of Olifants River and the Soutpansberg about this time. He is also mentioned as an ivory trader in 1836. In 1837 he was reported as being the only man who could recognise the gemsbok when a specimen was captured. He died of a heart attack while returning from a hunting trip. Parts of his journal may have survived. Robert (1812–83) farmer at Todshawhill, son of John and Margaret Scott. On the estate records he is tenant in 1836, as his father John’s heir. He emigrated to the U.S.A. about 1842, apparently still owing money on the lease. He was the last family member to farm at Todshawhill. In 1836 he married Mary Nichol. Their children were: Margaret; Jane; John, who married Ella Currie; Jessie; James; Charles, who married Mary Jennie; William; Minnie; Elizabeth; and Robert. Simon (17th C.) witnessed, along with Patrick, to a baptism for James and Janet Glendinning in 1635. This is one of the earliest Hawick Parish records. It is unclear how he might have been related to Patrick and James. Walter (17th/18th C.) probably brother of Robert and son of John and Margaret Riddell. He took over the tenancy of Branxholmtown from Margaret Riddell in 1719 (hence it is unlikely that he was son of Patrick and Bessie Elliot). He farmed Branxholmtown along with Robert until about 1735 (when the pair were recorded still leasing the farm). In 1717 he married Isobel Miller, who was servant to Thomas Shiel in Todshawhill. His children were: John (b.1718), who married Beatrrix Tait and farmed at Todshawhill; Margaret (b.1720); Helen (b.1722); and twins Robert and Walter (b.1729). Walter (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Scott, and their children included Walter (b.1714). Walter (17th/18th C.) farmer at Commonside. His parents names are not known, but he was surely related to the other local Scoons. He married Agnes Falside. Their children included: Walter (b.1714), illegitimate; James (b.1720); Thomas (b.1724), born at Newmill; Walter (b.1727); Mary (b.1729) in Hawick Parish; and Agnes (b.1736) in Wilton Parish. The 1729 baptism was witnessed by the Laird of ‘Howlands’ and Robert Cook. Walter (b.1753) probably son of John. He married Mary (or Marion) Elliot in 1779. He was also farmer at Todshawhill. His children included:
Scoon an Barrie’s

Walter (b.1786), blacksmith in Langholm; James (b.1790); and William (b.1794). Robert (b.1789), the hunter in South Africa, could possibly have been his son also; if so then James, who also emigrated to South Africa was probably his brother. Walter (d.1832) shoemaker at Kirkstylefoot. In 1831 he was served heir to his father Robert, who was a farm servant in Hawick. Walter (1786–1840) son of Walter and Mary Elliot. He was born in Robertson Parish (at Todshawhill) and became a blacksmith at Langholm. He could be the Walter who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He married Elizabeth Young (1784–22) and secondly Janet Stothart (1799–1842). He had at least 13 children, but only a few survived into adulthood. Children with his first wife were: Walter (1811–59); John (b.1813), who died young; Euphemia (1815–97), who married and emigrated to the U.S.A.; Margaret (1818–1907); James (again, b.1821), also died young; and 3 unnamed. With his second wife there were: James (b.1823), who died young; Robert (1824–78); William (1826–46); Isabella (1828–87), who died in Wigan; Mary (1830–69); Elizabeth (1831–71), who died in Bury; Janet (b.1835); and James (b.1837). Most of the family are buried in Langholm. William (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 along with Robert Young. Lawrence Rutherford of Oakwood had remission since the witnesses to baptisms include ‘writer’. Their children included: Robert (1756); An- nabel (1831–71), who died in Bury; Janet (1828–87), who died in Wigan; Mary (1830–69); Mary (1830–69); and 3 unnamed. With his second wife were: Walter (1811–59); John Kyle.

scotch (skoch) adj. relating to or characteristic of Scotland, but uniformly loathed as a phrase throughout the nation, the terms ‘Scots’ or ‘Scott-tish’ being preferred, except in particular phrases such as ‘Scotch broth’. Also note that it is never used for ‘whisky’.

Scotland Yet

Scotland Yet (sko'-lind-ye', sko'-hund-yet) n. the most famous song written by Henry Scott Riddell, and once regarded almost as the Scottish national anthem. It was set down in ?? at Ramsaycleuch, in Hawick Parish at that time, supposedly while sitting on a rock on a summer's morning following a heavy rain fall. The tune was composed by Peter McLeod of Edinburgh, and the money raised from selling the sheet music was used to pay for iron railings around the Burns Monument at Calton Hill. The 'honours three' in the refrain refers to the crown, sceptre and sword of Scotland. The song was often sung at the Colour Bussing and similar events in the 19th century. The song was revived by Scocha on their 2004 album – 'The song he wrote was one day sung Wherever Scotsmen met. Its patriotic strains can still be heard in Scotland yet'[IWL].

Scots (skots) n. the language spoken in Scotland, derived from a Germanic dialect spoken by Anglo-Saxon settlers, being a distinct, if far from homogeneous, form of English, adj. pertaining to Scotland or the Scots, Scottish. It is fiercely debated whether Scots is a separate language or merely a set of dialects. The speech of Hawick people has much in common with Scots in general, but also much that is peculiar to Teries.

Scots an English (skots-an-ing-gleesh) n., arch. game formerly played by boys, in which 2 teams defend their hats and coats from each other. It was said (in Chambers 1841 'Popular Rhymes of Scotland') that the game particularly flourished in Hawick, where the boys would defiantly shout 'King Covenanter, come out if ye daur venture! Set your feet on Scots grund, English, if ye daur!'.

Scots Dyke an Hare Moss Turnpike (skots-dik-an-hair-moss-turn-pik) n. turnpike road legislated by the general Act of 1764, with this specific road act published in 1770 (with an additional act for repairing and widening the road in 1785, and the acts repealed in 1807). This led to a great improvement in the road, allowing it to be passable by wheeled traffic, thereby allowing Hawick to develop as a centre for the carrying trade. The cost of constructing the road was borne by subscribers, who recouped their money via tolls collected approximately every 6-8 miles along its length. The road ran from the English Border at Scots Dyke (in Dumfriesshire) to Hare Moss (in Roxburghshire) just outside Selkirk, following the route of the modern A7. It passed through Hawick via Martinshouse, Langbaurk and the Loan. The Haremoss and Scots Dyke (East District) Turnpike Trust was established by an Act of 1829. It covered the administration of more than 20 miles of road in Roxburghshire. The revenue for upkeep of the road and repayment to the creditors came from 5 tolls. George & James Oliver acted as Clerks to the Trust in the mid-19th century (also called 'Scotch Dyke').

Scots Greys (skots-gräz) n. regiment that amalgamated to form the Royal Scots Dragoons Guards in 1971. William Robertson, quartermaster of the regiment, was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1776. At the election of 1835 a troop of these dragoons was sent to Hawick to try to keep the peace.

Scots Law (skots-law) n. legal system of Scotland, based on Roman legal ideas, where legality is decided by interpreting fundamental principles rather than appealing to precedent. There are also many differences with the English system in the naming of court officials etc.

Scots pound (skots-pownd) n., arch. a former unit of currency used in Scotland. It was fixed at 1/4th of a pound sterling at the Union of the Crowns in 1603, and ceased to be a legal unit following the Union of the Parliaments in 1707. However, it continued to be used in practice for some time after that, particularly in rural areas. Hawick Parish records made the switch to sterling only in 1753.

Scotstoun (skots-toon) n. farm in Peeblesshire, on the Tarth Water, just to the north-east of Kirkurd. This appears to have been an early property of the Scotts, before they moved to Buccleuch and Branxholme.

Scott (sko') n. Adam (13th C.) recorded around 1240 when Christian, daughter of Adam FitzGilbert, donated the lands of Inglisoun to the Chapel of St. Mary, with some rights reserved to the men of Blyth, as they had in the days of 'Adam the Scot and William the Bald, of good memory'. Since these lands were adjacent to those of Kirkurd and Scotstoun (held from early times by the family that became the Scotts of Buccleuch), it is possible that he was an early ancestor. His name is given in Latin as 'Ade Scoti'. Adam (d.c.1255) referred to as the deceased previous owner of lands in Gullane (East Lothian) which were granted to the church there sometime between 1213 and 1255. Adam (13th C.) listed on the assize roll of Northumberland in 1256. No other information is given about him, so it is not known if he is associated with later Scotts. Adam (13th C.) witness to a charter that the Comyns had for lands in Kirkintilloch
Scott

(Dunbartonshire) in about 1277.

Adam (13th C.) messenger who was paid, along with Henry Pykard ‘cokin’, for delivering letters from King Edward I to members of the Scottish court in 1296/7. His connection to other Scotts is unknown. He could be the same man as ‘Adam Skot’ recorded in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland, perhaps at the time a prisoner in Newcastle Castle. He could also be the Adam recorded in ‘Hilderton’ church in 1279, admitting that he was a mercenary soldier and had denounced the King.

Adam (13th/14th C.) holder of lands in the Parish of Linton in Peebleshire, around 1300.

Adam (15th C.) recorded as a member of the ‘retour of inquest’ in 1438 for Ker of Altonburn. Probably the same man was also witness to a sasine for the lands of Cessford in 1441. It is unclear how he might be connected to other contemporary Scotts, but Sir Walter was also on the 1438 panel, and William and his son John were witnesses to the 1441 sasine. Perhaps the same Adam was witness to the 1448 sasine for the lands of Birkwood and Burnflatin, between Sir Walter of Buccleuch and Simon of Routledge; the other names appearing beside his are Stephen of Castleglaw, Walter and Richard, who were probably near relations.

Adam ‘Ade’ (15th C.) Ranger of Ettrick Ward according to the Exchequer Rolls in 1456, where his name is listed as ‘Atkino Scot’. He is recorded as Ranger several times from 1457 to 1467, with Sir Walter as Master Ranger; Sir Alexander (of Howpasley) took over by 1469, and David also served as a Ranger for Ettrick in the 1460s. It seems unlikely (because of the age) that he could be the later son of Sir Alexander, but he was surely a close relative, possibly an otherwise unrecorded brother of Sir Alexander and son of Sir Walter. Perhaps the same Adam was on the panel for ruling on the dispute over the lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex in 1464/5.

Adam (15th C.) Bailie of Rutherglen, recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in 1477 and 1481. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts.

Adam of Annelshope (d.bef. 1502) younger son of Sir Alexander of Howpasley and Abington, and brother of Walter of Howpasley. He was recorded as ‘Ade Scot’, one of the heirs of Sir David Scott of Buccleuch in a charter for the Barony of Brancholme in 1484. He is probably the ‘Ada Scot’ who witnessed a document in 1482 in which Thomas Armstrong resigned his lands of Mangerton to David Scott of Brancholme; Robert was also a witness, probably his cousin of Whitchesters. Possibly the same Adam was on the panel for James Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick in 1484. And probably the same Adam was witness to the charter granting Robert of Allanhaugh the Lordship of Whitchesters in 1484/5 and his resignation of the lands almost immediately after. He may be the Adam who was witness to a sasine for the lands of Boonraw in 1487, along with James and several local landowners. He may be the ‘Ade Scot’ who was one of the bailies appointed by Sir Thomas Turnbull of Greenwood and Lyne for the document leasing his lands in 1488. He was Warden of Ettrick Ward in the period 1489–92, responsible for administering the Crown lands there, and so his name appears many times in the Exchequer Rolls for Scotland. He took over the office from Walter, who had taken over from William (surely all closely related). In 1488 he had the farm of Caccabank for his fee and in 1490 and 1492 he leased ‘Garlisceulch’. He also let the farm of Gamescleuch in 1492. After 1492 he is recorded being in arrears as former Ranger for Ettrick. In 1494/5 he was ‘de auldinnis hop’ when standing as surety for Bernard Shortreed in Essenside, ‘in auldernischop’ when he was surety for John Burnet, resident of Tushielaw, and ‘in auldinischop’ when he was surety for Oliver Lauder with Thomas Turnbull and for William Peacock in Buccleuch. He was additionally surety, along with Robert of Allanhaugh, in 1494/5 for John in Erncleuch. He was also recorded in 1494/5 as ‘in Auldinnisoch’ when he was allowed to pay a fine for stealing 2 horses from the servants of the Earl of Angus at Hermitage; Walter of Howpasley was caution for him. Later he was allowed to compound for the crimes of: stealing the 2 horses at Hermitage; resetting the ‘traitors of Leven’; resetting Edmond and Fergus Storie; resetting Robert Brydon, John Frissel and John Pattinson, particularly when they plundered Wolfhope; stealing 5 cows from ‘rafftrehop’; stealing 16 cows from Deuchar; and common theft before the date of his compounding. Walter of Howpasley was again his surety. John was allowed to ‘compone’ along with him in 1494/5 and was presumably a close relative. In the Treasurer’s accounts he is recorded in 1494/5 having obtained remission from the King.

He was recorded as brother of Walter of Howpasley in 1499 when he was assigned Tushielaw for 3 years. He was also assigned Gamescleuch and Carsecleuch in 1499, and still had to pay arrears as the former Ranger of Ettrick Ward. He was referred to as deceased in the 1502 Exchequer Rolls. He may be the Adam recorded as `Ade Scot’ along with his son Walter in the Exchequer Rolls of 1512 relating to earlier payments for Ettrick Forest. Adam (15th C.) recorded in the 1491/2 will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme, where he was bequeathed 30 sheep. He was listed as ‘Ade Scote’ and may be the same as one of other contemporary Adams. Another man, listed as ‘Ade Scote, claudio’ (probably ‘lame’) was given 6 sheep. Adam (15th C.) recorded at the 1494/5 Justice-aire held in Jedburgh. He was surety for Thomas Clommell in Minto. He was recorded being ‘in wolffhop’, which may well be the Wolfhope near Tushielaw (but it could be the one in Ewesdale or Wolfehopelee in Rulewater). Adam ‘Corvus’ (15th C.) son of Thomas of Bush. He was recorded in 1494/5 when he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk. His nickname was presumably associated with the crow. Adam ‘Ade’ (15th/16th C.) listed as a debtor in the Exchequer Rolls for Selkirkshire in 1501, along with David Scott ‘de Franscurni’ and James Laidlaw, with Walter of Tushielaw responsible for their pledges. He is probably the same as one of the other Adams. Adam (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as being in ‘Hawchesteris’, probably Highchester near Hawick. He had remission for resetting 120 sheep, which had been stolen by the Laird of Minto from George Rutherford at Longnewton and ‘Sandys-uch’. His crimes also included associating with rebels Archibald and Ninian Armstrong and William Scott. At the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh he produced a remission from the King for these crimes, with George of Whames as his surety. Adam (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when it is said that he had a horse and 23 sheep stolen from him at Kershope. John in Whitehaugh has is said that he had a horse and 23 sheep stolen from him at Kershope. John in Whitehaugh has been his son or other close relative. In 1526 he was tenant in Clarilaw when he was listed on the 1526 pardon given to a large number of Borderers for their attack on the Earl of Arran; ‘William Scot, and George Gledstanis, his brother’ are listed right after him (they may have been step-brothers or brothers-in-law), as well as (separately) William in Hassendean. His eldest son was Robert of Clarilaw. He may be the same as the Adam of ‘Nethirmanis of Hassiden’ whose son Robert had a ‘precept of clare constat’ (meaning he was probably deceased) in 1550/1 for the lands of Little Drinkstone. Adam (15th/16th C.) tenant of Harwoodhill in 1502 when his son Patrick had remission for being involved in the theft of 200 sheep. Adam (d.1530) of Tushielaw, probably son of David of Tushielaw and grandson of Alexander of Howpasley (although some accounts place him as son on Alexander). Called ‘King of the Thieves’ or ‘King of the Border’, he was a powerful chief in the early 16th century. He may be the Adam ‘in Turschelaw’ recorded paying a fine in the Exchequer Rolls of 1499. He is recorded (as ‘Ade’) in the Register of the Privy Seal in 1503 receiving remission for his rieving crimes, and in 1505 he received remission for breaking out of prison in Edinburgh Castle. He received a charter for the lands of Tushielaw in 1507. In 1512 he is recorded as one of those involved in the feud between supporters of Lord Maxwell and Lord Crichton of Sanqhar. The lands of Gilmanscleuch, ‘Cowinlaw’ and Gamescleuch were feued to him in 1510. The ‘fermes’ of Corsecleuch, Caccrabank, Tushielaw and ‘Covinelaw’ were remitted to him in 1513. He is one of the men who pledged to help the new Warden (the Earl of Angus) keep the peace on the Border in 1524/5. In 1525 he and the Laird of Henderland were warned to find pledges. In 1526 he was among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned for an attack on the Earl of Arran. In 1528 he was witness to an agreement between James Murray of Falahill and Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. He is also recorded in late 1528 as witness to the document recording the decision over the disputed succession to the lands of Borthaugh. The Sir Walter ‘of Tushielaw’, who was nearly contemporary with him was probably his uncle Sir Walter of Howpasley. He was arrested along with William Cockburn of Henderland, as an example to other thieves of the time. He was suposedly hanged by James V’s men on an old ash tree in front of his stronghold, although he was probably actually executed in Edinburgh. The charges against him included taking ‘black-mail’ from ‘John Brovne in Hoprow’, ‘Andrew Thorbrand and William his brother, ‘the poor Tenants of Hopcailzow’ (possibly HowPasley) and ‘the Tenants of Eschescheiell’. He was beheaded and his head placed on top of the Tolbooth in Edinburgh. Among his descendants were probably the Scotts of Horsleyhill, who were important in Hawick in the 17th century. His sons Robert, John and William are also listed in the 1526 remission. He was succeeded by William, presumably his son. This could be the William who was tenant in Carefabank in 1541, along with ‘his moder’, who would therefore be his widow.

Adam (16th C.) listed in the 1526 pardon to a large number of Borderers for taking part in an attack on the Earl of Arran. He is recorded as being ‘in Falside’ (probably the lands in the Ettrick valley), and so could have been related to the Scotts of Kirkurd and Hassendean, who held those lands. His brothers Alexander and William are also listed. Perhaps the same Adam was recorded claiming the tenancy of Falside in Ettrick in 1541. Adam (16th C.) witness in 1526/7 to a document relating to the tenancy of the lands of Harden. He was brother of Simon of Fenwick. He was probably the same as one of the other contemporary Scotts, with one possibility being Adam of Tushielaw. Adam of Burnfoot (16th C.) probably son of either William or Robert of Hassendean. He was Laird of Burnfoot (and probably also Burnhead) in Teviotdale (as opposed to Ale). He may be the Adam of Newhall who witnessed a charter relating to Harden in 1526/7. In 1548/9 he was sent (along with William of Harden and Clement Crozier) by the Laird of Buccleuch to visit Alexander MacDougall, probably to extract a horse from him. In 1550 he was among 10 Scotts and an Elliot who signed a bond with the Queen to keep order and hand over criminals. In 1551 he was a witness to a lease granted by the curators of James Crichton of Cranston Riddell (step son of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme) to his mother, signed at Branxholme; he was there ‘Adame Scott in Quhihoup’. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Adams. Adam of Allanhaugh (16th C.) listed in 1534 as a witness at Hassendean Kirk for the sealing of a letter of reversion when Gavin Elliot sold the lands of Nether Galalaw to William Scott. He was also ‘Adam Scot of Alanehauche’ in about 1557, when he paid rental to Melrose Abbey for ‘Ringwodhat’. Although it is unclear, he does not appear to have been the Laird of Allanhaugh at that time, and so was possibly brother of the Laird (perhaps William), or perhaps from an earlier branch of Scotts of Allanhaugh. In 1561 he was among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. He is also recorded in 1562 as one of the relatives of the minor Sir Walter of Branxholme to whom letters were sent to arrange the selection of guardians. In 1564 he was listed (first) among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts of Allanhaugh. He could be the Adam (with brother William) listed right after Robert of Allanhaugh in the 1526 pardon for a large number of Borderers assisting the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran; in this case it may even be that he and William were both brothers of Robert of Allanhaugh. In 1585 there was a bond signed (in Selkirk and Hawick) between Sir Walter of Branxholme and Robert of Allanhaugh, to settle a feud that existed between them, arising from the death of David (son of the deceased Adam of Allanhaugh) and Hob Dalgleish (Sir Walter’s servant at Braidhaugh); the bond mentions other sons of his, making it clear that he was not closely related with Robert of Allanhaugh, who was Laird at that time. Adam of Bonnington (d.bef. 1607) son of Robert, together with whom he first acquired the lands of Bonnington near Peebles in 1552. His older brother had acquired Rysholm (through their mother), but died in 1549. He acquired Wamphray from his mother, but (along with his father) sold it in 1549. He was mentioned along with his father in a charter involving lands in Peeblesshire in 1557/8. In 1561/2 he resigned to his superior his lands in the Barony of Drumlanrig; he signed ‘wt my hand at the pen led by me’. In 1564 he was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. Also in 1564 he was on an assize that convicted several Scotts and others of sheep stealing. He had a ‘letter of reversion’ for the lands in 1572. He had a court case with Robert of Haining in 1580. He was listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. He was listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ in 1590 (although perhaps drawn up earlier). From a document in 1564/5 it appears that his wife’s name was Helen Tweedie. His son and heir was Simon (who succeeded to ‘Bonytoun’ in 1607), and other sons were John (who helped rescue Kinmont Willie) and Adam (recorded in 1616). Adam of Deephope (16th C.) recorded in 1573 when he was to enter several men into ward in Edinburgh. This was along with Sir Walter of Branxholme and Sir Walter of Birkinside. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts of Deephope. Adam (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as ‘Adame Scot of Lochahaucht’ when he witnessed the ‘letter of slains’ in Hawick in which Robert and James Scott forgave the Scotts of Allanhaugh and Over Southfield for the murder of their brother George. All the other witnesses were quite local, but it is unclear where ‘Lochahaucht’ might have been. Adam of Gledstains (16th C.) listed in 1581 among 10 men accused of the murder of Walter, son of Wat Turnbull of Bewlie. The others were mainly Turnbulls of Rulewater, suggesting that his lands were possibly ‘Little Gledstains’ there. Adam (16th C.) recorded in 1585 among a long list of men whose superior was Lord Maxwell (perhaps related to the raif on Stirling). He was tenant at Mosspeeb, and his son John is also listed. Adam of Todshawhaugh (16th C.) listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. He also signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. He is recorded in 1594 when his son Walter was on a long list of those implicated in the slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Dryfe Sands. William of Todshawhaugh, listed by Scott of Hassendean as one of the ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch, was surely closely related to him. Adam (16th C.) recorded as being ‘in Ormestoun’ when he witnessed an instrument of sasine for Martin Douglas of Crook. William Scott and Robert Scott, both ‘in Hawick’ were also involved. He was surely related to John in Ormiston, who is recorded in 1589. Adam ‘Adie the Peck’ (d.1601) hanged in Edinburgh for a list of crimes. This included cattle and sheep stealing from several farms around the Lothians, as well as Nether Whitlaw (owned by Thomas Ker of Cavers Carre), the murder of at least a couple of men and taking the Minister of Lyne prisoner. He was hanged alongside Thomas Armstrong (son of ‘Sandy’s Ninian’), these being 2 of the last ‘rivers’. He is also recorded (presumably in error) as ‘Adam Steill, alias callit the Peckit …ame of the maist notabil thieffes that evir raid’. He may be the Adam ‘little Peck’ listed among men complained about by the English Warden for a raid into England in 1587; John ‘the Tinkler’ and Andrew ‘the Breadie’ were also listed. Additionally he was recorded in 1598 among ‘brothers, tenats and servants’ of William of Falnash when there were complaints against them by Margaret, widow of James Douglas of Knightsrig, for stealing cattle from her lands of Corseburn and further complaints from Sir James Sandilands, that he was among a group of Armstrongs, Elliots and Scotts who stole from his lands and ‘slew and dismembered divers good subjects who rais to the fray’. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts; however, in 1598 Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch denied that he was responsible for him, meaning he was not among the Scotts for whom Buccleuch was considered chief. Adam of Alton (d.1604) recorded as ‘Adame Scott sone to Robert Scot of Auldton’ in a long list of those given ‘respite’ by the King for the 1593 murder of Lord Maxwell, Warden of the Marches at Dryfe Sands. Scott of Satchells says he was in the party that rescued Kinmont Willie in 1596. He succeeded his father Robert in 1594. In 1603 he was also ‘of Alton’ on the list of ‘pretended tenants’ ordered to remove themselves from lands in the Barony of Hassendean by the then Baron, James Cunningham. He died shortly afterwards and had 2 sons: Walter, who succeeded; and Robert, ‘vocat de Alton’. In 1606 his son Walter was served as his heir to the lands of ‘Littill Dombstoun’ (probably meant for ‘Drinkstone’) in Chamberlain Newton, as well as heir to his grandfather Robert in the lands of East Hassendean (thus establishing the connection between these 3 generations of Scotts of Alton). He must have been related to the ex-Bailie of the same name recorded in 1612. Adam (16th/17th C.) brother of Simon of Bonnington and son of Adam. He was accused in 1616–17 of accompanying his brothers Simon and John, together with ‘Will’s Sym’ of Thirlestane when Walter ‘in Essenside’ (son of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden) was murdered while fishing on the Ettrick. Adam (16th/17th C.) probably eldest son of Robert. He was brother of William in Burnhead. He married Bessie, daughter of John Langlands, minister of Wilton. However, he appears to have died without issue and was succeeded by his other brother, Robert. Bailie Adam (16th/17th C.) ex-Magistrate of Hawick, who was involved in the incident of 1612 in which the town challenged the authority of the Baron regarding the town’s ability to impose taxes. He was also mentioned as Bailie in a murder case in the same year. His son James may have become an apprentice skinner in Edinburgh in 1615. Rev. Adam (d.bef. 1625) minister of Hawick Parish from 1612 until at least the end of 1623. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1607 and became minister at Minto in 1608. He may well have been related to a local branch of the Scotts; his father was probably Walter, a merchant of Edinburgh. He was translated from Minto and presented to Hawick Parish by Walter Scott of Buccleuch in August 1612. He was recorded as schoolmaster in Hawick in 1622. The circumstances of his death are not recorded, but he must have been relatively young. After his decease he was succeeded as minister by Robert Cunningham. Adam of Burnfoot (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1628 along with other Scotts when they were charged by the Privy Council to keep the peace with the Turnbulls of Know. The other Scotts were from Midshiel and Hawick, and he paid the 1000 merks caution to ensure that Adam, son of Walter of Midshiel did not molest Thomas Turnbull of Knowe or others there. He is recorded as being ‘of Burnfitt’ in 1643, when his lands in Hassendean Parish (presumably Burnfoot) were valued at £312. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts of Burnfoot, but he may have been a tenant of Burnfoot, rather than Laird. Adam of Shaws (16th/17th C.) younger son of Robert of Gilmantscheul. He is probably the son of Robert of Gilmantscheul who was served heir to his brother William in 1647. He had at least 4 sons: James, who succeeded; Adam in Deloraine, who purchased North Bowhill; Scott of Grassyard; and Francis, a shepherd mentioned by Scott of Satchells. His lands were presumably Shaws, between the Ale and Ettrick valleys. He was described as ‘in Schawis’ in 1670 when his eldest son James married Marion Scott of Shielwood. Adam ‘Wester Adam’ (17th C.) smith of Hawick who was ordered to pay a fine of 100 merks for failing to appear at the Circuit Court in Jedburgh in 1623. He was probably the Adam, smith in Hawick who was accused by the Earl of Buccleuch in 1628 of cutting down trees on his lands at Branxholme or Trinitylands. Probably the same Adam, smith, was mentioned in the Burgh Records of 1640, when there was a dispute between him and Thomas Deans; Thomas claimed that he had been promised payment of various sorts from him (presumably for being a servant), including money, a pair of shoes, oats, barley and clothing. Adam ‘in Yairlside’ (17th C.) recorded as an appraiser for a horse in the Town Book in 1641. His location was a variant of Earlside, and he may have been the same as one of the other contemporary Adams. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Wauchope. He was witness to a discharge of 1657 for vicarage teinds in Hobkirk Parish. His ‘servitor’ Walter Scott was also a witness, while this same or a different Walter was his son, who witnessed a sasine in 1659. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Todshawhill, along with William (presumably a relative) in the period 1632–72. He could be a descendant of Andrew, tenant of Todshawhill, listed as a ‘pensioner’ of Buccleuch. Adam (17th C.) recorded as being ‘in Dunlie in the parish of Cassiltoun’ (probably Dinlees on Hermitage Water) when he witnessed a document relating to the lands of Appotside in Rulewater in 1656. Adam of Ashtrees (17th C.) recorded in 1678 when his lands in Southdean Parish were valued at £33. He may be the same as one of the other Adams. Adam (d.c.1695) described as ‘portioner in Hassendean’ in a list of landowners and tenants of Hassendean Parish in 1666. He may be the same as ‘Adam Scott of Hassendene’ who is mentioned in 1637 as ‘younger’ of Hassendean and who in 1669 was served as heir to his father, Robert of Hassendean. He was in turn succeeded by his son Robert in 1695. In 1692 he had a renewed lease with the Duchess of Buccleuch for the lands of Over Hassendean, ‘east and west syde thereof with the milne and maynes of the same’. Adam (d.c.1693) listed as ‘in Wood, in Abotroule parish’ when his will was recorded in 1693. It is unclear where this farm might have been. Adam of Burnfoot (17th C.) probably son of Walter. He sold Burnhead to William Scott, tenant in Burnhead. He was one of the heritors accused of instigating the riot at the removal of the roof of Hassendean Kirk in 1690. He was probably one of the men arrested following the riots of 1690: there is a warrant for the arrest of Adam and Robert Scott of Hassendean and Thomas Turnbull of Knowe in 1690, which may relate to him. He was probably the Laird of Burnfoot who paid tax for 4 hearths in his house in 1694. In 1695 he was involved with the Scotts of Davington (probably a hangover from earlier wadsets between the 2 families). His eldest son was probably also Adam. He is probably the Adam of Burnhead who married Grizel, sister of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe in 1678; her will is recorded in 1687, when he was listed being ‘in Burnhead’. Adam of Bowhill (17th C.) purchased the lands of Langhope from John in 1691. It is unclear how he was related to the others Scotts of Bowhill. Adam (17th C.) resident of Minto Parish who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Adam (17th C.) cottar at Hartshaugh in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Adam (17th C.) tenant in Girwood according to the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He was surely related to other Scotts of Girwood. Adam (17th C.) rented half the farm of Overhall in 1690 and 1692, with James renting the other half. The pair were also listed as residents at Overhall on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. They were surely related. In 1694–98 he was renting half of Overhall, with the other half rented by Walter Scott, ‘Chief’, who was surely also related. He and Walter also served as cautioners for Margaret Scott, widow of James Scott, who was renting part of Borthaugh in 1696; this suggests that they were closely related. Adam (17th C.) listed as shepherd at Wiltonburn among the ‘deficient’ on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. Adam of Galalaw (17th/18th C.) on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1698. He must have been related to the later Adam of Galalaw. Adam (17th/18th C.) son of Walter ‘in Wauchope’ and brother of William, who was Chamberlain to Buccleuch. He witnessed documents for the Elliots of Harwood in 1688, 1692 and 1700. He was a tenant at Wauchope in 1718 when he purchased the farms of Stonedge and Howa from Gilbert Elliott of Stonedge. These were jointly valued at £856 12s. In 1724 he transferred these lands to his brother William, who was Chamberlain to the Duchess of Buccleuch. He was probably unrelated to the later Scotts of Wauchope. Adam (17th/18th C.) probably son of Adam. In 1698 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire as ‘younger of Burnfoot upon Teviot’. He is probably the ‘Archibald’ (assuming this is an error) of Burnfoot listed among the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament in 1700. He may also be the Scott of Burnfoot listed among heritors of the Regality of Melrose in 1700. He is probably the Adam who (along with Gavin Plummer) sold the lands of Burnfoot to the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1712. Adam (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘in Cavers par.’ in 1701 when his daughter Janet was baptised in Hawick Parish. This suggests he was a farmer in a part of Cavers bordering on Hawick Parish. His wife was Janet Paterson, probably daughter or sister of miller James Paterson. Their children included: Janet (b.1701); and Barbara (b.1715). Adam (17th/18th C.) tenant of Wauchope who was reported in 1718 for disparaging remarks against the elders of Ashkirk Parish, calling them ‘skybalds’, and complaining that one of the elders had called him a ‘ragabast’ and Jacobite villain. Adam (d.bef. 1772) of ‘Tanlawers’ in Wilton Parish (Tandlaw probably) is mentioned in an Edinburgh marriage record of 1772, when his daughter Barbara married John Greig. Adam ‘Goud Yeddie’ (18th C.) building contractor, probably the grandfather of Mrs. Armstrong of the Post Office. He was one of 2 contractors for the Hornshole Bridge, but gave up after an early accident brought down the framework on which the arch was to be constructed. Adam ‘Lint Aidie’ (1723/4–98) flax merchant in Hawick. He married Helen Scott in 1750, the marriage being announced in both Wilton and Ashkirk Parishes; she died in 1795, aged 68. Their children, baptised in Ashkirk Parish included: Adam (b.1751), the eldest son, dyer, gold lace maker and travelling merchant; Elizabeth (b.1753); Ann (b.1754); Thomas (b.1756), who may have been a minister; John (b.1757); and Robert (b.1759). Additional children, baptised in Hawick Parish, were probably: Margaret (b.1764); Helen (b.1765); James (b.1767); Walter (b.1770); and William (b.1772). Adam (18th C.) shepherd in Upper Dalgleish. He is famous for his homes-pun prayers, as described by the Ettrick Shepherd (who had an uncle who herded with him). Adam (b.1731) 3rd son of Walter, 4th Laird of Nether Bonchester, where he was born. He became a planter at Montego Bay in Jamaica and married Mrs. Thorpe. His estate may be the one called St. James, referred to in 1800, with Adam Scott as the former owner. Adam of Galalaw (18th C.) probably descended from the earlier Scotts of Galalaw. He was listed among... the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. He is recorded in 1762 being entered into the lands ‘in the old parish of Hassendean’, probably the farm in Wilton Parish just north of Hawick. He may be the Adam of Borthwickshiel who paid the window tax in Roberton Parish in 1748. He was given the superiority of the lands of Borthwickshiel by Walter Scott of Harden in 1770, and passed this on to Francis (brother of Walter of Harden) in 1780. He is marked as owner of Borthwickshiel on Ainslie’s 1773 map. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He paid the land tax for Roberton in 1785. He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls for 1785–86. He was taxed (in Roberton Parish, presumably at Borthwickshiel) for having a male servant in 1785 and 1786 and a carriage in 1786 and 1787. He was probably father or brother of Elizabeth, who married George Pott. Adam (1751–bef. 1819) eldest son of Adam, flax merchant of Hawick, known as ‘Lint Aidie’. He was a dyer, gold lace maker, and later traveling merchant of Hawick, later moving to Sunderland. He married Jane (1751–1837), daughter of baker and farmer Thomas Kedie. Adam (18th C.) miller in Hawick. On the subscription list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784) he is listed as ‘Mr Adam Scott, miller, Hawick Mills’. ‘John Scott, miller, there’ (possibly the miller at Hummelknowes at that time) is listed after him, and so may have been related. ‘John and Adam Scott in Hawick’, who paid the cart tax in 1791, may be these same 2 men. He married Esther Scott in 1754 and their children included: Ann (b.1757); Robert (b.1759); Margaret (b.1761); and Francis (b.1762). The witnesses in 1757 were Bailie Robert and merchant George, who may have been related. Adam (18th/19th C.) farmer at Whithope (in Roberton Parish), recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 3 horses. Adam (b.c.1770) blacksmith at ‘Spinniesbank-End’ in Castleton Parish. In 1841 he was living with his wife Margaret and his son Robert, who was also a blacksmith. He could be the Adam from Langhaugh who married Margaret, daughter of Gilbert, tenant in Blackburnfoot. Adam (c.1784–1857) born in Hobkirk Parish, he was a shepherd in the Hawick area. He is probably the Adam, son of John, born in Hobkirk in 1782. In 1851 he is listed as a ‘Travelling Grocer’ at Reasknowe. He married Janet (or ‘Jenny’) Leith, who died atSunnybank in 1865, aged 78. Their children probably included: John (1811/2–35); Helen (1815/6–30); Thomas (b.1818); William (b.1820); William (1821/2–29), who died at Priesthaughshiel; and Charles (b.1823). He died at Raesknowe and is buried in Old Wilton Cemetery. Adam (18th/19th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1799 he was selected by ballot to serve on the Roxburghshire Militia, after several others had been declared unfit or deserted. He may be the weaver of Hawick who was already deceased in 1810 when his wife Betty Cairns died. It is possible he is the ‘Kill Dryds Adam’ whose death is recorded in 1805; if so, then he was surely related to weaver Robert, who had essentially the same nickname. Adam (18th/19th C.) clogger on the Howegate, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Adam of Ashtrees (18th/19th C.) son of John of Ashtrees and brother of Thomas of Peel. He held Ashtrees according to the county valuation of 1788. He was succeeded by his son John, whose trustees sold the lands in 1855 to John of Riccalton (a cousin). Adam of Tullich, Loch Carron (1790–1865) son of John of Ashtrees and Isabel Rae. His father’s executors sold Ashtrees and it passed to a cousin. He farmed a large farm in West Rosshire. He married Janet, daughter of James Hall of Sciberscross, Sutherlandshire. Their children were: John of Drynoch, Skye; James, who went to Australia; Sir Henry Hall; Thomas; Margaret; Anne; Jessie; Esther; and several other daughters. Adam (1796–1838) son of James, who was herd in Wauchope, Hobkirk Parish. He sailed to America in 1812, along with a sister and Thomas Lockhart. He may have stayed with relatives in Bovina, New York state before settling in Ontario, on the Otonabee River. There he built a saw and grist mill in 1818, the area becoming known as Scott’s Plains. It was remaned Peterborough in 1825. He was described as being a huge man, 6 feet 4 inches tall and weighing 260 pounds. He married Patricia Ann Mann and their children were Margaret, Adam, Jeanette, James, Walter and Elizabeth. A plaque on the grounds of the Adam Scott Collegiate and Vocational Institute records how he was the first settler in Peterborough. Adam (b.1798/9) cattle dealer who was living at Wester Parkhill in Roberton Parish in 1841. In 1851 he was still at Wester Parkhill and described as an agricultural labourer. His wife was Catherine (or Christina) and their children included Walter, James,Adam, William, Robert, John and Christopher. Adam (b.1816/7) born at Legerwood, Berwick, he was a grocer and spirit dealer at 7 Sandbed. He was recorded as a grocer at Teviot Square in Slater’s 1852 directory, and was also listed as an insurance agent for Northern. He married Agnes Laing, and their children included: George Laing (b.1842); Elizabeth (b.1844); David Laing (b.1846); Jane Margaret Mary (b.1848); and Agnes Helen (b.1850). Adam (b.1816/7) born in Melrose, he was a policeman in Hobkirk Parish. In 1861 he was living at Forkins Police Station and listed as ‘1st Class Police Constable’. His wife was Agnes (from Eckford) and their children included Samuel, Janet, Adam, Isabella C., Andrew and William. Adam (19th C.) son of John Scott and Margaret Turnbull. He was shepherd at Shankendshielis, being recorded there in 1861. In 1859 he married Jane, daughter of John Dalgleish and Jane Smith.

Adam (1826–81) son of heddle-maker Charles and cousin of Sir James A.H. Murray. He was listed as a joiner along with his brother Charles in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1861 he was a master joiner, employing 4 people. His premises were on Bourtree Place, specifically on Munro’s Close. He was the first person in Hawick to ride a ‘velocipede’. In 1861 he presented to the Archaeological Society a silver coin of Edward II that he had found at Bourtree Place. He married Agnes Fleming (from Ancrum) and they had a son, Charles William. Adam (b.1828) son of Robert and Agnes, he was born in Wilton Parish, his father being farmer at East Boonraw. He himself was farmer at Burnfoot on Ale. In 1861 he was farming 800 acres there, and employing 6 people. He married Elizabeth Anderson (from the Burnfoot on Ale family) in 1852 and their children included: Thomas Anderson (b.1853), who emigrated, but returned; Robert (b.1855); Agnes (b.1857); Alexander Miller (b.1858); Adam (b.1860); David F. (b.1863), settled in Colorado; Sybella Fotheringham (b.1865), also in Kansas; William (b.1867); Ebenezer Anderson (1869–93); Elizabeth (b.1871); Charles Anderson (b.1875); and John Marcus (b.1877). Most of the family emigrated to America, settling in Pottawatomie County, Kansas, where the last 3 children were born. Adam (19th/20th C.) Hawick builder responsible for most of the stone-work at Stiches House, completed in 1902. There is a photograph of his work force outside the house. He may have been the same A. Scott who was Burgh Assessor around 1890. He may also be the Adam whose daughter Agnes was Cornet’s Lass in 1899. Adam (1874–1954) son of builder John and Margaret Inglis. He was a mason in Newcastleton, living at 1 Union Street. He married Agnes Dixon, who died in 1952, aged 80. Their children included: John Dixon (1908/9–19); and Margaret Inglis (‘Peggy’, 1911–19). They are buried in Etton Cemetery. Agnes ‘Muckle Mou’d Meg’ nee Murray (b.1590s) daughter of Sir Gideon Murray of Elibank. She married William, younger of Harden in 1611. The romanticised version of the story involves the young Scott being captured in a skirmish, and choosing to marry the ugliest of Murray’s daughters in order to escape the gallows. In fact the true story is preserved in 2 detailed wedding contracts, making it clear that the marriage was a well-planned arrangement. She was still a minor at the time, and the contract involves many details about lands for female heirs, etc. The dowry had the value of £7,000. Her name is signed ‘Agnes Morraye’. Her eldest son, also Sir William, succeeded to Harden, while her 2nd son became Sir Gideon of Highchester. She is celebrated in a sculpture unveiled at Elibank in 1999. Presumably there was some basis for the characterisation of her physiognomy. Agnes (17th C.) servant to Walter Earl of Buccleuch. She was listed in the deceased Earl’s inventory in 1633, when she was owed for her annual fee. It is unclear if she was a servant at Branzholme or in Edinburgh or elsewhere. Agnes (17th C.) one of the daughters of Robert of Alton. In 1653 she and her sisters Margaret and Bessie were served heirs to their ‘foir grandsher’ (probably great-grandfather) Robert in half of the East Mains of Hassendean. Agnes (17th C.) recorded as resident at Stonedale on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Agnes (17th C.) convicted in Hawick in 1695 of bleeding Robert Scott ‘by thrusting her hand in his mouth, and ryeing out of his cheiks’. Agnes ‘Nans’, nee Noble (18th/19th C.) mother of James, schoolmaster at Yarrow and later occupant of Sillerbuthall. She was described (by Rev. James Russell) as ‘quite a character; kind, active, economical’. Her husband’s name is unknown. She lived with her son at Yarrow (presumably meaning she was widowed), and had a very high opinion of him. She was in charge of the boarders, of whom there were as many as 30 in the small house. Agnes nee Cook (b.1805/6) from Roberton, she was an innkeeper and grocer, listed at about 17 High Street on the 1851 census. She was also listed as a High Street grocer in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was a widow, with children Janet and Margaret, born in Midlothian, and also living with her mother, Janet Cook, from Cavers, and sister Mary Cook. It is unclear who her husband might have been. Ailmer of Molle (12th/13th C.) recorded in about 1220 when along with his wife Christian he gave an oxgate of land in Molle (or Mow) to Kelso Abbey. His wife was a daughter of Isolda, who was daughter and co-heiress of Anselm of Molle. Several families seemed to have concurrently held lands of Molle (around the modern Morebattle), making it hard to establish clear familial relationships. Nevertheless it seems very likely that he was closely related to Richard Scott ‘de Molle’ (and ancestor of the Scotts of Buccleuch), who married Alice, daughter of Anselm de Molle. Alan (13th/14th C.) recorded as ‘Alan Skot’ when he was on an inquest at Peebles in 1303/4. He could have been related to the William, who held lands in Peeblesshire in 1296. Alan (14th C.) Burgess of Aberdeen, recorded in the Exchequer Rolls for 1362. Alan (14th/15th C.) Canon of Cambuskenneth who acted as a witness to charters during the regency of the Duke of Albany. Albert (13th C.) merchant of Placentia (i.e. Piacenza in Italy), who is recorded in 1279. Edward I gave a letter of protection to ‘Albert Scot, and his partners of the Scotti’ for 3 years. In 1293/4 he is Albert ‘le Escot’, who along with John (presumably his brother or son) was given further protection ‘to trade in the realm during the King’s pleasure’. Alexander (13th C.) recorded as ‘Alexandrum Scot’ in the 1256 assize roll of Northumberland. He was involved in a fight with Walter, son of Thomas, in the house of ‘Roberti de Prudewyk’. Alexander (13th C.) listed as ‘Alisaundre Scot of Perthayk’ in Lanarkshire when he paid home to Edward I in 1296. He could have been related to Sir Richard of Murdieston. Alexander (13th/14th C.) ropemaker at Newcastle. Along with ‘Matildis Scot’ and 3 other men, he is recorded in 1304 when payment was made for their wages in going to make ropes for Edward I’s castle at Stirling. Alexander (15th C.) witness recorded in 1456 in a notorial instrument for the Scotts of Buccleuch relating to the lands of Whitchesters. This probably refers to the return for John of St. Michael a few years earlier. It is possible he is the same man as Sir Alexander. Alexander (15th C.) recorded as customs office in Perth in the Exchequer Rolls in the 1460s. He also rendered the accounts of the Baillies of Perth. He may have been related to the Scotts of Balwearie. Alexander (15th C.) recorded as tenant of several Crown lands in Kirkcudbrightshire and Wigtonshire in 1481. Probably a different Alexander leased part of ‘Ricardyongstoun’ in Bothwell in 1480. Sir Alexander of Howpsasley and Abington (d.1488) 2nd (or perhaps 3rd) son of the first Walter of Buccleuch and brother of Sir David. He is sometimes said to be the same as Alexander, Rector of Wigton and Director of the Chancery, but this is a different man (although probably related). His father had gained the lands of Abington (in South Lanarkshire) in 1458/8, after being forfeited by the Douglases. He witnessed a charter in Edinburgh for Robert Scott of Haining in 1463. In 1467/8 he was granted Howpsasley by James III, the lands having previously been in the possession of the Stewarts of Dalswinton and Garlies. In 1469 he and David together leased the farm of Mount Common. in 1470 he paid the redemption money for Midshiels and Appletreehall to their superior William Livingstone of Drumy; the appended shield shows the ‘bend charged with two crescents and a mullet’ of the Scotts of Buccleuch, with another mullet on shield probably indicating cadet status. In 1470/1 he was one of the witnesses to the decision to acquit Andrew Ker of Cessford of the charges of assisting the King’s enemies. He was recorded as Master Ranger of the Ward of Ettrick in the period 1469–5, taking over from Sir Walter of Buccleuch and having the lease of ‘Aldanishop’ (probably Eldinhope) for his fee; he was also stated in 1475 to be ‘de Kirkurde’. In 1471 he had a debt along with his mother and John Colquhoun, relating to Crown lands. In 1483 he was witness to a charter from Henry Wardlaw, giving the half barony of Wilton to John Scott of Thirlestane (who was probably a relative). He is recorded as dead in 1478 (an error for 1488 perhaps), when his son and heir Sir Walter of Howpsasley had to pay William Inglis regarding the lands of Meiklehope. His sons Alexander and Adam are also mentioned in 1488. In 1493/4 (after he was deceased) his ‘letter of reversion’ for the lands of Midshiels and Appletreehall were assigned by William Livingstone of Drumy to Alexander, Lord Home. His sons were: Walter of Howpsasley; Adam, probably the Ranger of Ettrick Ward; Robert, who was ‘Tutor’ of Howpsasley; William, Abbot of Melrose; and probably David of Tushielaw. ‘Sym Scot’ is probably another son (recorded in 1526 as brother of Robert, tutor of Howpsasley). From the fact that his son Walter held the lease on Eldinhope along with his mother ‘Johannis Douglas’ from later in 1488 (probably after his death), with her name given as ‘Jonete Dowglas’ in 1492, it seems that his wife’s name was Joan or Janet Douglas. He probably died at the Battle of Sauchieburn in June 1488. Alexander (15th C.) Rector of Wigtown and Director of the Chancery and Clerk Register of Scotland. He is sometimes said to be the same as Sir Alexander of Howpsalies and Abington, but the 1488 charter for the Barony of Branxholme proves this not to be the case (there he was the last witness, while the charter itself refers to Alexander, brother of Sir David of Buccleuch as being deceased). However, it seems likely that he was also related to the Scotts of Buccleuch. It is possible he is the Alexander, from the Diocese of St. Andrews, who notarised the 1464/5 sasine of Kirkton Mains and Flex for William Douglas of Drumlanrig. He is probably the royal clerk who witnessed charters in the Glasgow cartulary in about 1473 and 1476. In the 1470s he received an annuity from the custom of woollen cloth in Edinburgh. He was listed as Rector of Wigtown, Clerk Register and auditor many times in the Exchequer Rolls in the 1480s. In 1483 he was Canon of Aberdeen and Clerk Register when he witnessed a charter to the Earl of Errol. And in 1483/4 he witnessed a charter for Alexander Home of that Ilk. In May 1488 he was Rector of Wigtown and Clerk of the Rolls and Register for the charter regranting the Barony of Cavers to William Douglas. And in the same month he had the same titles when he witnessed the charter for the resignation (and regranting) of the Barony of Branxholme. In 1491 he was witness to a ‘procuration of resignation’ involving Ruecastle. He also witnessed a large number of charters not relating to the Borders for James III in the period to 1483–8 and for James IV in 1488–9. He was still recorded as Rector of Wigtown in 1496. His signature is recorded (and reproduced in the 1877 study of the accounts of the lord high treasurer of Scotland). Alexander (15th C.) given 20 sheep in the 1491/2 will of Sir David of Branxholme. He may be the same as one of the other Alexanders. Alexander (15th C.) tenant in Broadlee, probably the farm in Ashkirk Parish. He was mentioned in 1493 and 1494/5 when his son John was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aires in Jedburgh. John ‘in braidlee’ was also mentioned, and was surely related. Alexander (15th C.) brother of Robert of Whames. In the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493 he was allowed to ‘compone’ for several crimes, specifically stealing cattle from the tenants of Robert Ramsay in ‘dene hous’ and stealing sheep from William Murray in Sundhope; his surety was Robert of Whitchester. Alexander (15th/16th C.) tenant in ‘hop-toun’ recorded in 1498 at the Justice-aire held in Peebles. He was allowed to ‘compone’ for riding Andrew Taylor’s mare to death, killing Thomas Elphinstone’s cow and hurting him, and striking a child of the Laird of Adamland. William Bell in Peebles was his surety. His home was probably associated with Hopeton Tower near Eddleston. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Alexander (15th/16th C.) listed in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501 among mostly local men who had been fined. He is recorded being ‘in Mouslaw’, which seems likely to be Mucleth. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts, but he could be the same as one of the contemporary Alexanders. Alexander (15th/16th C.) probably related to the Scotts of Howpsalies and/or Stirches. In 1502 Patrick Scott, son of Adam ‘in Hardwodhill’ had a remission for dealing with the sheep stolen by him and Richard Armstrong (called ‘Skaw’) from David Hoppringle at ‘Fechane’. Walter Scott of Howpsalies and Robert Scott of Stirches served as sureties. Alexander (15th/16th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh who witnessed the letter of acquittal in 1510 between George Scott of Whames and Robert Muir of Rowallan. He is probably also the Edinburgh man who witnessed a document relating to lands in Leith held by Melrose Abbey in 1511. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Alexanders. Alexander of Howford (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1508 when he was on an assize that convicted Cuthbert Lauder of Todrig. He was granted the feu of the middle stead of Langhope (also known as Howford) in 1510. He was recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of 1512 as holder of the lands of Howford. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Sir Alexander (d.1513) of Hassendean, said by Scott of Satchells to have been killed at Flodden, and to have been the ancestor of the Scotts of Haining, Stotstarvit, etc. He is also listed by Abercromby in his list of those slain at Flodden. It is unclear how he might have been related to the main Scott branches, although he could have been son of David of Hassendean (if he existed at all). Alexander (15th/16th C.) listed among a large number of Borders men who had respite in 1526 for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. After him are listed Adam, Steven and William ‘brether to the said Alexander Scot’, with ‘brether’ being plural, suggesting all 3 men were his brothers. It is unclear to which branch of the Scotts they belonged. Sir Alexander (d.c.1542) Provost of the Collegiate Church of Corstorphine. It is unclear how he was related to the other Scotts, since the name was quite common at the time. He may be the same Alexander who was presented to the vicarage of Glenholm in Peebleshire in 1505. He was keeper of the Rolls of Exchequer for many years. He was paid by the Crown for copying rentals etc. in 1509. In 1528 he raised an action relating to crops at Ratho, and in 1529/30 he gave evidence concerning the Lordship of Dirleton, which he had possessed for 12 or 13 years. He was one of the Auditors of the Treasurer’s Accounts from at least 1526–42. In 1540 he founded a chaplainry in the church of Irvine. About the same time he had a letter of commendation from James V for his faithful service ‘in all sessionis, chekkeris, and register’. His name occurs frequently in the Exchequer Rolls in at least the period 1537–1540, including as witness to the accounts, for making payments in the name of the convent of St. Andrews and payments to the Dictator of the Rolls. James, who succeeded him as Provost of Corstorphine (and Auditor) was 3rd son of Robert of Allanhaugh and Whitcheasters. Sir Alexander (d.bef. 1540) possibly 2nd son of Robert of Allanhaugh, and grandson of David of Buccleuch. He was appointed by James V as Vice-Registrar of Scotland in 1534. His son Robert succeeded at an early age, and later acquired Knightspottie and other lands. Robert’s grandson John became the first Laird of Scotstarvit. Alexander (16th C.) son and heir of Steven. He is recorded selling a tenement of land in Hawick in 1558, this being one of the earliest known Hawick sasines. The land lay in the West-end, being bounded by James Brown’s land on the north, ‘the hill path on the south’, ‘Doniere Portussis’ on the east and the ‘Common Vennel’ on the west. This may have been similar to the land known as ‘Wylie’s Dub’ and ‘Bridgehaugh’ a century later. Alexander (16th C.) recorded in 1573 as ‘callit Huttitill’ among the tenants of ‘Andishop’ who were to be entered into ward in Edinburgh by Sir Walter of Branxholme, Sir Walter of Birkinside and Adame of Deephope. Alexander (16th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1581 he was a cautioner (along with Mungo) for George of Synton being entered into ward in Edinburgh Castle. There was a further caution by him and Mungo in 1581 for George of Synton and Robert of Haining ‘now in ward in Edinburgh Castle, in £1000 each’, and the caution for Robert of Haining was confirmed later in 1581. This was concerned with the dispute between the Scotts and Elliots, specifically the complaint that Dand Elliot had been attacked near Headshaw by a group of Scotts. He was probably directly related to Mungo, as well as being a relative of the Scotts of Goldielands (and hence Buccleuch). Alexander ‘Lang Sandie’ (d.bef. 1635). In 1605 he had a ‘discharge’ (i.e. cancellation of an obligation) from William of Howpasley for rental of his lands of Wark (it is unclear to which area this refers, but presumably fairly local). In 1635 his grandson John in Howpasley was served as his heir; he was at that time described as being ‘commonly called ‘Land Sandie’ in Hawick. Alexander (16th/17th C.) brother of Thomas ‘called of Ormestoun’. He was part of a group of Scotts charging Langlands and other Scotts to find caution in 1610, with the other side petitioning for the penalties to be reduced. Additionally, the Scotts of Harden, Whitslade and Satchells were also bound not to harm him and his associates. There was a similar bond in 1610 for Andrew Riddell of that Ilk and his son not to harm them. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Alexanders. Alexander of Tushielaw (17th C.) eldest son of William and Grizel Scott. He obtained a charter for Tushielaw in 1663. He is recorded as ‘Andrew (Alexander) of Tushilagoe’ when his son Patrick was buried in Greyfriars Cemetery, Edinburgh, in 1664. He may have been the Scott of Tushielaw who entered into a teind agreement with the curators of the Duke of Buccleuch in the late 1660s. He may have been Laird in 1671 when the land tax was paid in Dumfriesshire for ‘Lands pertaining to Tussilaw’. His son William succeeded when he was still a minor (and was soon after succeeded by Walter, the last Laird, who may have been his brother rather than his son). Another son, Andrew, is recorded in 1699. He may have married Margaret Elliot (said to be the mother of Walter, the last Laird). Alexander (17th C.) ‘cottar’ at Tofts according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Alexander of Galalaw (17th C.) once owner of the lands called ‘Robertoun Cleughfoot’. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Alexander (17th/18th C.) son of George, who was probably 2nd son of

Thomas of Bonchester. He was miller in Rulewater and then tenant at Roughheugh Mill in Hawick. He had 2 sons: George, farmer in Falla; and Robert, who was also tenant at Roughheugh Mill. It may be that John in Hummelknowes was a 3rd son. Alexander (17th/18th C.) son of William ‘the Bellman’, who had been Burgh Officer for most of his life. He was himself Burgh Officer from 1696, replacing John Stewart. He may thus have overlapped with Alexander Young. He was stated to be a Burgess of Hawick at the time of his appointment, and eldest son and heir of the deceased William. This may have been a reappointment, since in 1693/4 he was listed as ‘town-officer’ among those contributing to funds for the new Kirk bell. He married Anna Amos (or perhaps ‘Aire’) and their children included: Alexander (b.1702); and Anna (b.1705). The witnesses in 1705 were Alexander Young and John ‘Atkin’. He was listed as ‘officer’ in 1705 when his daughter Anna was baptised, and also when he witnessed a couple of baptisms himself. Perhaps the same Alexander was recorded being paid for ale given to the ‘cassars’ (i.e. road-layers) in 1721.

Dr. Alexander (1691–1743) eldest surviving son of William of Thirlestane and Christian Don. He had his fathers goods deponed to him in 1727 and is also recorded in 1737 in records relating to the Scotts of Buceluch. These lands of ‘Thirlestain’ are probably those near Yetholm, and not the lands in the Ettrick, then belonging to Francis, 6th Lord Napier. In 1729 he married Barbara, daughter of Henry Kerr of Frogden and grand-daughter of John Kerr of Frogden; his wife died in 1781. They had 11 children: Barbara (1730–76); William (b.1731) Edinburgh merchant; Christian (b.1732), who married Leith of Freefield; John (b.1733); Anne; James (b.1735); Rebecca; Agnes; Madeline or Magdalene (b.1739), who resided at George Square and lived to an old age; Charles (b.1740); and Walter (b.1742). His son and heir William inherited Chatto and Sunlaws and took the surname Scott-Kerr. Alexander of Synton (d.c.1764) son of John, he succeeded when still a minor. His ‘curators’ (presumably during his minority) were John Erskine of Shielfield, Walter Scott of Woll, William Elliot of Borthwickbrae, Walter Scott of Todrig and William Ogilvie of Hartwoodmyres. There appears to have been a dispute over the boundary between his lands of Synton and Ashkirk and Groundistone owned by Scott of Buceluch. He matriculated arms in 1711, a star between 2 crescents and a red rose, with motto ‘Crescendo prosim’. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761 (along with his grandson), and also for Selkirkshire. In 1711 he married Magdalene, daughter of Sir William Elliott of Stobs. Their children included: Margaret baptised at Synton in 1713, probably the same daughter Margaret who married John Chisholme of Stirches in 1736; John (b.1713), who died before his father, but whose son Alexander succeeded to Synton; Elizabeth (b.1715); Gilbert (b.1717), recorded becoming an apothecary’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1733; and Alexander (b.1719). Alexander of Galalaw (18th C.) recorded as a Commissioner for Selkirkshire in 1761. It is unclear if this was the local Galalaw or somewhere else. However, he may be related to the earlier Alexander of Galalaw, who owned Robertson Cleuchfoot. Alexander (18th C.) cooper in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for Robert Easton in 1763. Alexander of Synton (d.1782) son of John, he succeeded his grandfather Alexander in a sasine of 1765. He was recorded being ‘of Sinton junior’ in the 1761 list of Commissioners for Roxburghshire. He is marked as proprietor of Synton on Ainslie’s 1773 map. He had the house rebuilt around 1776. He paid tax for having 3 male servants in 1778 and 2 in 1779. In 1773 he married Eleanor (‘Nelly’ or ‘Helen’), daughter of Walter Grieve in Branhmole Park. Their children were: John, the only son, who succeeded; Catherine, who later inherited the estates; Mary; and Helen. Alexander (1729–1804) 7th son of Gideon, farmer in Ladhope. His grandfather was John of Woll. He succeeded to his father’s tenancy of Ladhope in Yarrow. He paid the Horse Tax there in the period 1785–97 and the Dog Tax in 1797. In 1782 he married Christian, daughter of Mr. Scott, farmer in Eldinhome. Their children were: Gideon (1783–1844), who died without issue; Walter (1787–1863), who also died childless; William, who succeeded to the Ladhope tenancy; John (b.1795), who became a baker in Edinburgh, married a Miss Buchan of Peebles, and died without issue; Margaret; Jane; and Christian, who married John Scott of Over Deloraine. Alexander (c.1760–1835) younger son of George of Falla and grandson of Alexander, tenant of Roughheugh Mill in Hawick. He was probably descended from the Scotts of Bonchester. He was a draper in Jedburgh and a Bailie there, as well as being factor to the Earl of Hopetown. He is also said to have spent a considerable amount of money on new kinds of explosives. He is probably the Jedburgh merchant of that name who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. He married Isabella Rutherfurd, thereby obtaining possession of the farm of Falla. His children were: George, who worked for the Admiralty Office; William; John, whose son inherited Falla; Thomas; Adam; Isabella; Elizabeth; Alice; and Ann. His daughters became joint proprietors of Falla. Alexander (18th/19th C.) farmer recorded at Ashkirk on the 1787–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He owned 7 farm horses and 1 saddle horse at that time. Alexander (18th/19th C.) grocer and meal dealer in Newcastleton, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Alexander of Kinninghall (b.1778) elder son of Robert, tenant at Roughheugh Mill. In 1851 he was farmer of 400 acres, employing 13 people. He married Margaret, daughter of William Bell and Markie Minto, and she died in 1829, aged 43. Their children were: Marky (b.1815), who married William Hobkirk; Robert of Kinninghall (1817–98); Ann (b.1819); William (b.1821); and Mary (b.1821), who married John Scott, farmer in Barnhills. He is buried at Bedrule. Alexander Pringle (1799–1853) twin of Francis Napier, he was son of George and born at Yair House, where his mother had worked. He was named after Alexander Pringle of Wrythbank, who owned Yair. He worked for Pringles as a woollen framework knitter in Hawick. He married Elizabeth (1810–93), daughter of George Rule and Elizabeth Nichol. They had children: Alexander, who was managed at R. Pringle & Sons; and Bella, who lived at 8 Carnarvon Stree. In 1851 he was living at Backdamgate and in 1861 his widow was living at 2 Allars Crescent with her mother (Elizabeth Rule) and siblings. A memorial in old Wilton Cemetery for him and his twin brother Alexander was erected by their sons. Alexander (1830–1917) 2nd son of John Sibbald, tenant in Over Deloraine. He was tenant farmer at Ramseycleuch (in Ettrick). He emigrated to Iowa, U.S.A. in 1881 and helped found the Presbyterian Church at Paullina. He married Helen Scott, from Howford. Their children were: John Sibbald (b.1862), who lived at Deloraine farm in Iowa; William F. (b.1864), who married Janet, daughter of Walter Cowan; Henry Alexander (b.1876), who married Mary, daughter of John Cowan; Isabella Michil (d.1907); Jean Elliot, who married John Cowan; Wilhelmina Young, who married her cousin John Sibbald Scott; Christina A., who married Thomas H. Aitken; and Nelly Janet who married Fred L. Huston. Alexander (b.1830/1) son of Francis Napier and Janet Oliver, he was born in Wilton Parish. He trained as an engineer and moved to Galashiels, where he worked as manager of the gasworks. In 1854 he married Mary (1830/1–88), daughter of Andrew Ekron. Their children included Francis, Andrew, Elizabeth and Janet Agnes Oliver. Alexander (b.1840) son of William and Mary Scott, he was born in Ashkirk Parish. In 1870 he married Janet, daughter of Robert Grieve and Janet Shackleton of Lilliesleaf. In 1880 they emigrated to the Canadian prairies, and he became the first postmaster in Minto. They had 8 children, the first 3 being born in Ashkirk, and the others in Manitoba. This included Dr. Alexander Gladstone (1882–1970), known as ‘Canada’s first flying doctor’, who founded the hospital in Bossano, Alberta. Alexander (b.1851) son of Robert and Mary Purdom. He farmed at Falnash, then Kinninghall and later at Venchen, Yetholm. He married Agnes, daughter of Robert Hobkirk (builder in Hawick), and later married her sister Georgina Isabella Grierson Hobkirk. Alison (17th C.) resident of Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Andrew (14th C.) clerk of the Diocese of St. Andrews. In 1393 he was notary for the instrument confirming Sir John Swinton in his lands. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Andrew (15th/16th C.) recorded along with Robert and Philip in 1494/5. The three were among men who were already fugitives when John of Deloraine was accused of ‘resetting, supplying and intercommuning’ with them. It seems reasonable to assume that they were closely related, perhaps brothers, but from which branch of the Scotts is unknown. Andrew (15th C.) joint tenant of an acre near Linlithgow in 1484 and again in 1495. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Andrew (15th C.) recorded in ‘north schelis’ (probably North Shiels) in the 1498 Justice-aire held in Peebles. He was fined for the non-appearance of his brother Thomas. Later Thomas was allowed to ‘compone’ for the crime of mutilating James Davidson in ‘brachio’ (probably somewhere in Peebleshire). It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Andrew (15th C.) Bailie of Inverkeithing, recorded in 1541. He was probably related to earlier Scotts in Inverkeithing. Andrew (16th C.) recorded as ‘chirurgeon, burgess of Hawick’ in 1598 when he witnessed a contract between Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Sir George Home of Wedderburn. He may be the earliest known doctor in Hawick. Probably the same surgeon Andrew was listed in the inventory of the deceased...
Walter Earl of Buccleuch in 1633, when he was owned for his 'pensioun the said year, foure boles heipit oatt meill, at ellevene pundis the boll, inde fourtie foure pundes' [SB1633]. There was a surgeon and Burgess of Edinburgh of the same name whose daughters Janet and Bessie were served as his heirs in 1643. Andrew of Todshawhill (16th/17th C.) listed by Scott of Satchells as being 'of Totchahill'. He was said to be among the 24 'Pensioners' of Buccleuch and descended from the Scotts of Roberton (although from which one is unknown). Andrew of Salen-side (16th/17th C.) said to have been one of the Scotts of Ale Water who was part of the 1596 raid to rescue Kimmont Willie. He may have been a younger brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade (as suggested by Scott of Rodono) or a brother of Walter 'the Hawk' of Whitslade and uncle to Sir Walter (as suggested by Keith Scott). He may be the Laird of Salen-side who was recorded as present at the Parliament of 1592. He had a confirming charter for the lands of Salen-side in 1609. He is recorded in 1613 when his son Walter became a brewer's apprentice in Edinburgh. He must have been related to Robert of Salen-side, who was summoned before the Presbytery for murder in 1614. Thomas, who inherited Whitehaughbrae in 1621, was probably his son. Andrew (16th/17th C.) tenant in Scable- cleuch. In 1604 he was witness to an instrument of sasine for a charter of Simon Scott of Bonnington for lands in the upper Ettrick. He may have been related to the Scotts of Tushielaw, Midgehope, etc. Andrew 'Braid's Andrew' (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1606 among men declared as fugitives by the Borders Commission. He is there recorded as 'Andro Scot in Raburn, called the Braid's Andro.' In 1615 his son 'Wattie' (also referred to confusingly as 'Braïdis Wattie') was involved in the slaughter of the Laird of Drumlanrig's sheep at Howpasley and executed for sheep stealing at Eilrig in 1616. It is unclear whether 'Braid' refers to a name or a location (possibly 'Broadlee' or 'Braidhaugh'). He was probably also the Andrew 'the Braidie', son of John 'the Tinckler' (who was tenant at Harwood) among men complained about by the English Warden for a raid into England in 1587. Andrew of Aikwood (16th/17th C.) son of Robert of Aikwood, who he succeeded in 1616. He was also served as heir to his father's lands of Belses, the south side of Bowhill and half the lands of Kershope Forest. He is mentioned in 1627 in an action that was brought against him and Robert of Hartwoodmyres. He was succeeded by Philip, last of Aikwood, who was probably his brother. Andrew (16th/17th C.) recorded as 'chirurgeon, burgess of Edinburgh' in 1624 when he had a charter of the lands of Bonnington from James VI. He must have been a close relative of John and John's brother Simon, who had previously held the lands. It is also possible that he was the same man (or closely related to) the Andrew who was a surgeon in Hawick at about the same time. He is probably the Andrew who was an apprentice to Henry Lumsden in 1592/3 in Edinburgh and Guild-brother in 1608. Andrew (16th/17th C.) tenant in Heap, recorded in 1628 when he was on a list of men accused by the Earl of Buccleuch of chopping down his trees at Todshawhaugh or Trinitylands. James 'in Holclandhill' is listed after him, and may have been related. Andrew of Foulishiel (d bef. 1647) son of James. He is recorded as owner of the lands of 'Fadinside' in Lindean Parish in 1643. In 1643 he married Janet, who was an illegitimate daughter of Walter, 1st Earl of Buccleuch. He was suc-ceeded by his brother Walter. Andrew (17th C.) tenant in Hermiston. He is 'Andro Scott, portioner of Hermiston' when he signed the 1638 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick. He was recorded as a portioner in the 1643 county valuation, with lands in Hermiston valued at £130. Probably the same 'Andrew Scott of Hermistowne' was listed among landowners of Lilliesleaf in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. It is unclear if he is the same as one of the other contemporary Andrews. Andrew of Broadmeadows (17th C.) said to have been son of William of Tushielaw. However, in 1627 he was son of William in 'Falishope' (i.e. Phaup in the Ettrick valley) when he made a complaint to the Privy Council that James Inglis of Huntly and others cut down trees on his land. He held Broadmeadows in 1628 according to a roll of properties. In 1634 he was in the funerary procession for Walter, Earl of Buccleuch at Hawick. He carried the Earl's sword. He was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire in 1644. Andrew of Tushielaw (17th C.) son of William of Tushielaw and his 1stwife. He gave a charter of Broadmeadows to his half-brother Andrew of Tushielaw. It seems likely that he was the same man as Andrew of Broadmeadows. In 1651 his eldest son William is listed as 'our servitor' in the will of Francis Earl of Buccleuch. Another son, Andrew, is recorded in 1699. Andrew of Weens (17th C.) recorded as 'of Wayns' when he was witness to a marriage contract of Robert Elliott and Margaret Riddell in 1652, signed at Appotside. His son Walter was also a witness. He witnessed further sasines in Rulewater in 1653 and 1654. He was recorded in about 1663 on the Land Tax Rolls when he paid tax on £200 for Weens. John of Weens, who paid the land tax in 1678, was probably his descendant. Andrew of Bowhill (d.c.1668) eldest son of Robert. He appears as witness to several documents in the 1660s and was appointed as a Justice of the Peace for Selkirkshire in 1663. His younger brother James eventually succeeded to Bowhill, and may in fact have bought the estate during his and his father’s lifetime. Andrew (17th C.) resident at Broadlee in Ashkirk Parish, recorded on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. He was probably related to John, who is also listed. Andrew (17th C.) resident of Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. John and James were also listed at the same place, and so probably related. Andrew (17th/18th C.) recorded as son of deceased Andrew ‘in Tushillaw’ when he witnessed a disposition for the Elliots of Harwood in 1699. Andrew (17th/18th C.) wright in Hawick listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was an elder in Hawick Session in 1718. Andrew ‘Black Andrew’ (18th C.) Cornet in 1724. He had a son, ‘D. Scott of Ettrickbank’. He also had a daughter who married William Phillips. Andrew (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1717 he married Janet, daughter of Andrew Turnbull. Their children included: Janet (b.1718); Christian (b.1721); Marion (b.1724); Andrew (b.1726); and Margaret (b.1728). The 1726 baptism was witnessed by John and Andrew Turnbull, who may have been from his wife’s family. Andrew (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He married Helen Hardie and their children included: Isabel (b.1737); and James (b.1738). Shoemaker John was one of the witnesses to the baptism of Isobel, and so was probably related. He may be the shoemaker Andrew who witnessed a baptism for tailor William Lamb in 1766. Andrew (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Margaret Allan in 1756. They had a son William baptised in 1764. Andrew (18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Alice Wilson and their children included: Christian (b.1759); Andrew (b.1762); and Archibald (b.1767). It is possible he is the same man as Andrew the merchant. Bailie Andrew (18th C.) Hawick Bailie in the 1770s. He is probably the Andrew who was a merchant at 7 High Street around the same time. He may be the merchant Andrew from whom ribbon was purchased for the Burgh Officers in 1756. In 1763 he was likely the Andrew, merchant, who was one of the men appointed to collect money to pay for the new bell for St. Mary’s. He was probably the Andrew who witnessed a baptism for Thomas Turnbull junior in 1764 (along with Thomas Turnbull Senior), the merchant Andrew who witnessed baptisms for merchant Walter (probably his son or brother) in 1766 and 1768, and the merchant Andrew who witnessed a baptism for William Phillip in 1777. He was probably the ‘Bailie A.’ who was on the list of subscribers for the Slitrig Brig in 1777. In 1778 he received interest on the bond for £250 he had with the magistrates and council of Selkirk. He may be the Bailie of this name who witnessed baptisms for merchant John Renwick in 1797 and 1799. It may have been a descendant of his who was the ‘A. Scott’ at about 7 High Street on Wood’s 1824 map. Esther (b.1777) and Sarah (b.1778) were independently wealthy sisters living about there in 1841 and 1851; this suggests he was married to Beatrice Turnbull and also had children Robert (b.1762), Ann (b.1765), Thomas (b.1767), Ann (b.1770) and Martha (b.1775). He could be the Andrew who ‘died in the Kirk’ in 1798. He was probably the merchant Andrew who witnessed a baptism in 1757 for merchant William Veitch and his wife Christian Scott (who may have been his sister or other relative). Andrew (18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Eliza Irvine and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1787); and Andrew (b.1789). The witnesses were ‘The Associate Congregation’. Andrew (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1794 he and Robert (also a shoemaker) witnessed the indenture of apprenticeship of John Pringle to William Beck as a stockmaker. It is possible he is the same man as the merchant Bailie Andrew and may have been related to the earlier shoemaker Andrew. Andrew (18th C.) schoolmaster at Kirkton in the late 1700s. He took over from Walter Scott, and may have taught a young John Leyden in the late 1780s. Andrew (1757–1839) poet from Bowden, son of John and Rachel Briggs. He was largely uneducated, working as a cowherd and in other farming jobs. He then enlisted in the 80th Regiment and was sent to serve in the American War of Independence. After Cornwallis surrendered at Yorktown, he became a prisoner of war on Long Island. Apparently the book of verse he wrote while there was lost. After the peace treaty was signed he was released and returned to Britain in 1784, settling back in Bowden. He focussed on supporting his wife and children, but eventually published his first slim volume of verse in 1805, expanded in 1808. His ‘Poems Chiefly in the Scottish Dialect’ (1811) and other publications were very influential in their day; many local people subscribed to his 1811 book. His popular poems included ‘Swingling o’ the Lint’, ‘The Guid Farmer’ and ‘Symon and Janet’ (about the False Alarm). George Watson of Edinburgh painted his portrait. Said to be a man of simple tastes and habits, he died in Bowden and is buried there. Andrew (18th/19th C.) assessor and tax-gatherer who lived in Denholm. He possessed the sword that had been used by Sir Gilbert Elliott to kill Col. Stewart in 1726, getting it from a relative of Sir Gilbert’s servant. he passed it on to his friend George Forrest, gunmaker in Jedburgh. Andrew (18th/19th C.) hosiery manufacturer of Denholm. He was an apprentice with Thomas Colledge, who was probably the first manufacturer in the village. He supplied the Glasgow market, and is said to have done well. It is claimed that the demand was so high that his customers would meet him 20 miles from Glasgow to bid against each other. Andrew (18th/19th C.) farmer at Sandyhaugh in Ashkirk Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Perhaps the same Andrew married Isabel Laidlaw and had children (baptised in Ashkirk Parish): William (b.1761); Alexander John (b.1765); and Charles (b.1767). Andrew (1786/7–1868) boot and shoemaker in Newcastle, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories, and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was at about 45 South Hermitage Street in 1851 and 1861. He could be the Andrew from Castleton who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He married Helen Mitchell, who died in 1852, aged 69. Their children included: Charles, who was also a shoemaker; Matthew (1810/1–42); and 2 who died in infancy. Andrew (1789–1846) spinner of Hawick, who was precentor in the Relief Kirk. He is probably the Andrew recorded at about 30 Loan in 1841, living with wife Isabel and children Isabel, Andrew, Helen, Archibald, Jane, Agnes and John. Andrew ‘Andrew the King’ (1791–1873) son of William, landlord of the King’s Head (hence the nickname). He was trained as a weaver, but known as a harmless simple-minded fellow, who was out of work for most of his life. He lived with his sister ‘Nelly the King’, and a drawing of him is in the Museum. Andrew (18th/19th C.) son of D. of Ettrickbank and grandson of ‘Black Andrew’. His property around where Lothian Street and Garfield Street were built is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. It is said that he had no offspring. He may be the Andrew of Ettrickbank who married Jane Jarvis MacLaine (1829–82). He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. Andrew (b.1801/2) road labourer who lived at Berryfell Plain. His wife was Elizabeth, and their children included: Agnes; Andrew; Thomas; Adam; Robert C.; and Walter, who may have hung himself in a stable at Dryhope in 1859. He was still at Berryfell Plain in 1868. Andrew (1800–70) 3rd son of William, schoolmaster at Burnmouth in Castleton, he was born there in upper Lid-desdale. His mother was Isabella Vkeit, from Bedrule, who was a cousin of William Veitch, author of ‘Greek Verbs’. He was a great runner, swimmer and wrestler in his youth. He was educated at Newcastle School, then in Edinburgh, also working as an assistant teacher. About the age of 19 he taught at a school in Castleton; one story is told of how he paid the blacksmith a penny to allow him to try to break off the tip of his anvil with a hammer, which he succeeded on doing at the third attempt. He graduated M.A. from Edinburgh in 1829. He became a teacher at Tain, then a tutor in Lanarkshire, and then was an instructor on ships around the Mediterranean. He was classics master at Dollar from about 1835. In 1841 he moved to Brockville, near Montreal in Canada, but returned to Scotland in 1844, becoming master at Pultneytown, Wick. He was appointed Professor of Hebrew at King’s College, Aberdeen in 1846, becoming Professor of Oriental Languages at the (united) University of Aberdeen from 1860. He died unmarried. He is said to have fallen in love with a pupil at Dollar, Miss Todd, and was engaged to be married to her, but she died before the wedding could take place. He was said to be a proud and independent Borderer, with conservative views, and quick to argue, although with a strong sense of humour. He travelled widely, and was also a great collector and reader of books (many of which were bought by Cambridge University Library). He wrote a Latin inscription for the memorial stone of his friend and colleague Prof. William Tennant. Andrew (b.1803/4) from Cavers Parish, he was a farm labourer who lived at Hawick Shiel. He was recorded there 1841–61. His wife was Margaret (from Kirkton) and their children included Mary, Sarah and David. In 1857 he gave to the Museum a ‘flint spearhead, one of several found some years ago near the Giant’s Grave, Hawick Moor’. Andrew (b.1810/1) born in Minto Parish, he was a gardener at Teviot Lodge. He is recorded there in 1851, with his wife Margaret and son William. Andrew (b.1814/5) from England, he was a road surveyor in Hawick. In 1851 he was living at Mill Bank, and described as a ‘Civil Engineer; Road & Land Surveyor’. His wife was Marianne, and their children included Elizabeth M., Andrew W., Georgina, Caroline L. and Arthur. Dr. Andrew James (1817–84) eldest son by the 2nd marriage of William of Teviot Bank. In 1854 he married Emma, daughter of Gen. Frederick Blundell. His eldest son was Col. William Augustus. Andrew (b.1807/8) son of grocer Walter. He was a tailor who lived at Blacklee in Hobkirk Parish and was an elder of the Kirk there. He was listed at Forkins in the 1861 census, living with his mother Jane. Andrew (b.1825/6) son of Walter, who was a labourer living at Ormiston. He was farm steward at Barnes in 1861. He married Jane Paterson and their children included Isabella, Christina and Walter. Andrew (b.1830/1) son of Walter, who was shepherd at Singdean, and married Elspeth Telfer. From his father he learned the secret of a herbal plaster, which was supposed to cure cancer. He became shepherd at Twislehope near Newcastleton. In 1867 his plasters are said to have removed a huge tumour on the wife of a Galashiels tradesman. His children included: Elspeth, who married William Mather and was post-mistress at Langhaughwalls in Rulewater; Adam, who was a shepherd at Toftholm in Liddesdale and succeeded to the secret prescription; and Walter, who was shepherd at Swinelaws in Oxnam. Andrew (b.1839/40) son of grocer Walter. He was an actuary with Hawick Savings Bank and later acted as Burgh Assessor. In 1875, when accountant and actuary for the National Savings Bank, he was charged with breach of trust, embezzlement, theft and forgery. Anna (17th C.) daughter of George, who was brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade. In 1670, she and her sister Bessie were served heirs portioner to their father in the Barony of Maxton and associated lands. This included Borthwick Mains, Abbotrule, Bowsetside, Grange, Foderlee, Over and Nether Bonchester, Mackside, Gatehousecote, Hartshaula, Langraw, Raperlaw, Firth, Westbarns, Belses, Winnington, Winningtonhall, Parkhead, Horselee, Turn, Acreknowe, Swinestead, Dodburn, Kirkwood and Langnewton. Presumably they sold the superiority of these lands shortly afterwards. Anna Helena (d.c.1696) daughter of Walter and granddaughter of Walter of Whitehaugh. Her grandfather was also known as Walter ‘of Harlaw’ She married Sir William Adair of Kinhilt (who died 1661) and then Archibald Edmonstone of Redhall, cousin of her 1st husband. In 1694 she was served heir to her grandfather’s lands of Hartwoodburn. She was mother of Archibald Edmonstone of Duntreath, as well as Sir Walter Adair, who was served as her heir in 1696. Anne (1651–1731) also known as ‘Anna’, youngest daughter of Francis the 2nd Earl of Buccleuch. She was born at Dundee, where her mother sought refuge after the departure of Cromwell from Scotland. Her ‘tutors’ were the same as those of her sister Mary, with the 3 Border tutors (Sir Gideon of Highchester, Sir William of Harden and Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs) continuing their disputes with the 5 Lothian tutors. Like her sister, there were struggles over her control, and in particular over who she should marry (e.g. attempts to arrange her marriage to the son of the Earl of Tweeddale). Eventually wardenship and marriage were assigned to her uncle, the Earl of Rothes. She became Countess on the death of her sister Mary in 1661, formally being served heir to her father. She became Duchess on marrying James Crofts, Duke of Monmouth, in 1663 at the extremely young age of 12; her husband was an illegitimate son of Charles II, who changed his name to Scott. This was arranged with the encouragement of her mother Lady Wemyss and her tutor Sir Gideon of Highchester. The lengthy marriage contract of 1663 describes in great detail the possessions of the family at that time. In 1663 her possessions in Hawick Parish were valued at over £5800 and those in Hassendean at £1561. She was referred to as ‘Annam Buckcleuchiae Comitissam’ in the patent where her husband was created Duke. In 1666 the couple resigned their honours and estates and obtained a new grant of the titles for the Duke, together with the titles of Duchess of Buccleuch, Countess of Dalkeith and Countess of Buccleuch for her; this gave her the rights and titles independent of her husband. However, there were still disputes over the legality of her marriage contract and whether it conflicted with her father's entail. She resided for several years at the court in London, where she was described as ‘one of the wisest and craftiest of her sex, and has much wit’. She was mentioned there in the diary of Samuel Pepys and was said to have become lame through a dancing accident in 1668. She was also said to have been plain of features, although with a charming manner. She spent some time in France. In 1675 she and her husband were given a charter for the lands and Barony of Hawick. She appears to have remained uninvolved in her husband’s schemes to capture the Crown; her actions around this time are portrayed through the character of Marmoutière in the play the ‘Duke of Guise’. It is said that she helped save her husband after being implicated in the Rye House Plot of 1683. He then went to Holland, returning in an ill-fated expedition following the death of Charles II. After the execution of her husband in 1685, she obtained a new grant of her Buccleuch titles in 1687 (although the English titles were forfeited), in order to ensure that they passed to her children. And in 1693 an Act of Parliament ratified that the estates would pass to her eldest son James, Earl of Dalkeith. The lands and Barony of Hawick had fallen to the Crown after the death of Monmouth, but in 1686 a new charter erected Hawick into a free barony and regality, given to her (and with Walter Scott of Alton as the Bailie of Regality). She signed her letters ‘A.B.C.’ (for ‘Anna of Buccleuch, Countess’). In about 1698 it was suggested that she might resign her lands and titles in favour of her eldest son (as the Duchess of Hamilton had done), but she decided ‘to keep all the rights I injoy from God and my foirfathers. I was my sisters aire, and I bliss God I have children which I trust in his mercy will be mine when I am dead. The Duchess of Hamilton is but a woman, and wee are not such wis creatures as men, so I will follow no exampull of that sort till I see all the nobill men in Scotland resin to their sons; then I will consider of this business’. She returned to Scotland in 1701, residing at Dalkeith House. She visited Hawick (perhaps for the first time) in April of 1702, when she signed the Sederunt Book for her local lands. She extended and improved the family’s Scottish lands, including major renovations to Drumlanrig Tower. She is also recorded as paying for ‘causay layers’ to pave the Hawick streets. She also held the patronage of St. Mary’s kirk. In a land valuation of 1710 she was by far the largest landowner in Hawick Parish, her lands being valued at more than £7000. She can be considered the last of the true Scotts of Buccleuch rather than of Great Britain. She acted throughout her life as a widow of a royal prince, and was said to be the last person in Scotland to keep young pages as attendants. Her last will of 1722/3 names her grandson Francis as her successor. In 1688 she remarried, to Charles, 3rd Baron Cornwallis of EYE (as his 2nd wife), and he died in 1698. She was predeceased by all of her children. Those with her first husband were: Charles (1672–74), Earl of Doncaster, who died young; Sir James (1674–1705), Earl of Dalkeith, whose son Francis succeeded; Lady Anne (1675–85), who died in the Tower of London; Henry, Earl of Deloraine (1676–1730); Lord Francis (1678–79), who also died young; and Lady Charlotte (b.1683), who died in infancy. They were buried in Monmouth’s vault in Westminster Abbey. By her 2nd husband she additionally had (also with the surname Scott): Anne (b.1690), who died in infancy; George (b.1692), also died in infancy; and Isabella (1694–1748), died unmarried. She was eventually succeeded by her grandson Francis, son of James, Earl of Dalkeith — ‘in England now the Dutches dwells, Which to her friends is a cursed fate, For if they famish, starve, or die, They cannot have a groat from that estate’ [CWS], ‘For she had known adversity. Though born in such a high degree; In pride of power, in beauty’s bloom, Had wept o’er Monmouth’s bloody tomb’ [SWS]. Anne (19th C.) listed as a midwife in 1838 when the death of a child of hers is recorded in Hawick. She was spouse of the deceased James Scott (but there is no other identification). Anse of the Bush (16th C.) recorded as ‘Anse of the Busse’ under the heading ‘Scotts of Ewesdale’ in Monipennie’s c.1594 compilation of Border chiefs. The other listed is ‘Thome of the Flower’. His name may be ‘Ante’ rather than ‘Anse’ (and it is also possible this was just a transcription error for ‘Arche’). ‘Watt of the Bus’, recorded in 1642, could be his son. Archibald (15th C.) on the panel for James Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick in 1484. It is unclear how he was related to other contemporary Scotts. Possibly the same Archibald was among the witnesses for a document relating to Whitchesters in 1484/5. He may be the Archibald, son of Sir David of Branxholme, who leased the lands of Eldinholp in 1485, with the consent of his father. Archibald (15th/16th C.) recorded among the many Borders men who had remission in 1526 for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. His son William is also listed. Archibald (16th C.) holder of 2 participates of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1569 as ‘Arche Scott of the Buss’. He was listed along with John ‘the Braid’ and Tom of Blackhall, as those men for whom Tom ‘callit the Stowir’ was held as pledge in Ravensheugh Castle. He was thus one of the Scotts of Ewesdale at that time. Archibald ‘of Deiphop’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1608 when Sir Robert of Thirlestane was caution for 2 of his sons and Walter of Whitslade not to harm him or his family. His sons Walter, Adam, Thomas, James, John, William and Archibald are all mentioned. Also in the same year other kin and associates of Scott of Thirlestane were bound over not to harm him. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded being ‘in Glenrachane’ (i.e. Glenranchan) in 1606, among men declared as fugitives. He was surely related to Hob there, who was also listed as a fugitive in 1605. Archibald (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘in Northous’ (i.e. Northhouse) in a summons against him in 1619. This was included in a letter from Gilbert Watt to the Earl of Buccleuch. He was probably related to the ‘Will’ of Northhouse recorded in 1608. Archibald (17th C.) recorded as being ‘of fflanesh’ in 1638 when he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick. It is unclear who he was or how he was related to other Scotts of Fahash. It is possible that this is an error for Archibald Elliot. Archibald (17th C.) described as ‘vestiarius’ (tailor or cloth merchant) in Hawick in 1648. He was served as tutor to his grandson John Scott, as the closest relative of John’s deceased father Robert, who was a clothier in Edinburgh. He was presumably quite old in 1648, but could possibly be the Archibald, married to Janet Paisley, whose son Robert was baptised in Hawick in 1652 (or married to Margaret Thin, with son John baptised in 1652, or married to Helen Falside, with son Archibald baptised in 1654). Archibald of Synton (17th C.) recorded as ‘rootmaster’ for Selkirkshire in 1649. He is probably the same as Capt. Archibald of the Roxburgh and Selkirk Fencibles; he was not in fact Laird of Synton, but was son of Walter (13th Laird) and younger brother of George (last of Synton). He died unmarried. Archibald (17th C.) recorded as liferenter in Stouslie in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls, when he paid tax on £91. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts, but it is possible he was connected with the Scotts of Boonraw, Stirches and Synton. Archibald (d.1720) 2nd Laird of Boonraw, son of George and grandson of George of Synton. He is said to have been 14th in descent from Buccleuch. He may have been Laird in 1694 when tax was paid for 3 hearths at Boonraw. In 1700 he renounced his right to the arms of the Scotts of Boonraw, in favour of Sir William Scott of Boonraw. In 1701 he is recorded being rebuked at Roberton Kirk for a mock marriage with Esther Turnbull on the Sabbath, held at Todshawthaugh. It was suggested in 1714 that he was ready to sell his lands, which would make an ideal way of investing the ‘Orrock Bequest’, which had been left to Hawick Parish; however, the appeal to the Duchess of Buccleuch was unsuccessful and the estate, instead of becoming owned by Hawick, eventually became part of Buccleuch’s properties. He died unmarried (putting aside the mock marriage in 1701), and it is said that this ended the direct line of Scotts of Synton and Boonraw. However, there is also a suggestion that he had a brother, Richard, who was ancestor of Charlie of the Crescent. He is said to have died at an advanced age. Archibald (17th/18th C.) listed as ‘Wyndehead’ when his son John was born in 1714. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts of the Wyndhead. He is probably the same Archibald whose other children baptised in Hawick were Margaret (b.1709) and Bessie (b.1711). Archibald (18th C.) gardener in Hawick Parish. He witnessed baptisms for gardener James Aitkin in 1757 and 1762. Archibald (18th C.) resident at Woodburn when his son John was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1761. He may also have been father of Jean (b.1751), Mary (b.1754) and Walter (b.1756). Archibald (b.c.1770) farmer at Easter Langbaulk. He is listed there in 1841 and 1851, and was unmarried. He may have been brother of John, who also farmed there. Archibald (b.1772/3–1858) joiner in Newcastleton, probably son of George. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He is listed as a wright in Newcastleton in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 and 1851 he was at about 31 North Hermitage Street. He married Jane Turnbull, who died in 1894, aged 78. They are buried in Ettrickton Cemetery. Archibald (18th/19th C.) recorded as Session Clerk in Castleton in 1832. He could be the same as the joiner in Newcastleton. Archibald ‘Auld Commonside’ of Howcleuch (1779–1874) 2nd son of Charles of Wauchope and Howcleuch. He succeeded to Howcleuch (his elder brother Walter succeeding to Wauchope), but lived and farmed at Commonside. His father also conveyed to him the superiority of the lands of Wigg and part of Wauchopehead. He was related to the nursery Dicksons, his mother being Elizabeth, daughter of Archibald Dickson of Hassendeanburn. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He was listed as a trustee of Andrew Dickson of Alton (who died in 1837). He was listed as ‘Archibald Scott, Esq. of Howcleuch’ among the landowners in Roberton Parish in 1841. He presented some items from Antigua to the Museum in 1863. In 1804 he married Charlotte, daughter of John Sibbald of Pinnacle and sister of Col. Sibbald of Pinnacle; they had no children and Howcleuch was inherited by his nephew Charles. In 1841 and 1861 he was living at Commonside, along with 5 servants. He was listed as owner of the Mains of Borthwickshiel in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. He lived to within about 4 years of a century, hence the nickname ‘Auld’ applied to him. He died in Hawick at the age of 96 and was buried in Roberton Cemetery. Archibald (b.1791/2) from Canonbie, he was a meal dealer in Newcastleton. In 1841 he was at about 31 North Hermitage Street and in 1851 at about 2 Whitchester Street. His wife was Helen and they had sons Archibald (a carrier) and Abel. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (1822/3–1903) second son of farmer John and nephew of Mr. Murray whom he assisted with the farm at Cleuchhead. After marrying he farmed at Townhead, Lustruther, Wauchope Common, Templehall and Hawthornside. He married Isobell, daughter of Robert Armstrong, from Melkeldale, and she died at Heathfield in 1897, aged 77. They had 3 daughters (Catherine, Margaret and Ellen) and a son (John), who probably did not survive infancy. After retiring he lived at Drythropple and Orchard Cottage. He and his wife are buried at Ettleton. Archibald (1804/5–74) born in Castleton Parish, he was toll-keeper at the Note o’ the Gate. He is recorded there as toll-keeper and labourer in 1851. He was an agricultural labourer back in Newcastleton in 1861. He married Jane (or Jean ) Nixon, who died in 1874, aged 66. Archibald (19th C.) listed as a shopkeeper on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Archibalds. Archibald (b.1823/4) son of John and Margaret Murray. He was shepherd at Wolfehopelee. He was one of the original members of the congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk in 1849, along with his wife Isabella Armstrong. In 1851 he was recorded at ‘Mackside (Townhead)’, which was probably Wolfelee Townhead. He married Isabella Armstrong in Hob Kirk Parish in 1847. Their children included: Catherine (b.1847); Margaret (b.1850); Ellen (b.1853); and John (b.1860). Archibald (b.1826/7) son of meal-dealer Archibald. He was a carrier in Newcastleton. In 1852 he is listed leaving the Coach and Horses in Hawick bound for Newcastleton every Wednesday. He may be the Archibald who was working as a railway labourer at Whitknope in 1861; his wife was Isabella and they had children Mary Ann, Archibald, Elizabeth, John and Fenwick. Archibald (b.1826/7) joiner in Newcastleton, son of Thomas and grandson of Archibald. In 1851 he was at about 30 South Hermitage Street, living with his mother Janet and siblings Thomas, Henry, John and Helen. He was still there in 1861. His wife was Margaret, who died in 1915, aged 64. Their children included: Margaret (1880/1–1939), who married Alexander Stornont; and Archibald (1882/3–1948). They are buried at Ettleton. Archibald (19th C.) carrier who lived in Chesters and operated between Hawick and Rulewater. Arthur of Gamescleuch and Newburgh (d.c.1610) probably son of Simon of Winterburgh. He is probably the ‘Mr. Arthur of Wynterburgh’ who is listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ in 1590. In 1593 he was ‘of Gamescleuch’ when in dispute with William Cranston (fear of that Ilk) over possession of ‘Fawodscheill’. He was said by Scott of Satchells to have been at the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1602 he was part of a group of Scotts that attacked Adam Veitch in Fechane’, burning his timber, etc. He is referred to as ‘of Newburcht and Gemilscleuch’ (i.e. Newburgh and Gamescleuch) in 1603 when he acted as surety for John and Christie Armstrong, sons of John Armstrong of Langholm. In 1603 he was one of the men who selected Sir Walter of Bransholme to arbitrate the dispute over the lands of Gamescleuch. He gave the lands of Gamescleuch to his cousin Walter (ancestor of Lord Napier) when he succeeded his father to Newburgh. His illegitimate son Robert is among the relatives and tenants of Sir Robert of Thirlestane bound over in 1608 not to harm Archibald ‘of Dephoip’. His sons John and Arthur are also mentioned among supporters of Scott of Thirlestane. He is described as brother of the Laird of Newburgh in 1610 when he was bonded (along with his brother John of Newburgh and John of Hundleshope) for not harming Walter of Tushielaw and his sons. His sons included: Sir John of Newburgh, who succeeded; Arthur; and Robert, who was illegitimate. He was described as a learned man. His son John was served as his heir in 1610. John, son of Andrew (surgeon in Edinburgh), who inherited Winterburgh in 1636 was surely related. Baldred (13th/14th C.) recorded as ‘Master Baldred le Scot’ in 1306 when Edward I granted him safe conduct in ‘coming from beyond seas to Stirling castle’. His connection with other Scotts is unknown. Benedict (12th/13th C.) recorded as ‘Benedict Scot’ in 1229, when the Bailiffs of Yarmouth were commanded by an English court to deliver his ship and let him return to Scotland. Bernard (13th C.) recorded as ‘le Scot’ in an English document of 1270. Along with others, merchants of Placentini, he was given safe conduct to trade in England for 3 years. Campbell (1747–66) younger son of Francis and brother of Henry, 3rd Duke of Buccleuch. In 1764 he toured Europe along with his brother, accompanied by Adam Smith. In 1764 he was granted ‘different’ of the lands of Over and Nether Harwood and others. But he did not live long enough to enjoy these gifts. He died in Paris, and his brother the Duke then returned to Britain. Catherine (b.1774) daughter of Alexander of Synton and sister of John and Helen. After her brother John’s death she had the right of inheritance granted to her in favour of distant male relatives (namely John, only son of Hugh Scott of Gala, and Hugh Scott of Harden). In 1800 she married John Corse of Bughtrig and they changed their surname to ‘Corse Scott’. Her son John succeeded to the Synton estate. Charles (16th/17th C.) possibly an illegitimate son of Sir Walter of Buccleuch (who was killed by the Kers in 1552), making him half-brother to Walter of Goldielands; alternatively he could have been a son of Sir Walter of Goldielands, which would make more chronological sense (and in which case he could be the Charles of Goldielands who died in ‘98 and whose grave tablet was found in St. Mary’s in 1863). His son Walter inherited Goldielands from his cousin, also Walter, and afterwards started the Scotts of Crumhaugh. The dates of his birth and death are uncertain. His son may have been the last Walter of Goldielands (although it is possible there was an intervening generation). If so, then his daughters included: Jean, whose daughter Lilias married William Knox; and another; whose son was Robert Scott of Glack. However, these generations are very unclear. Charles of Bonnington (17th C.) 2nd son of James of Bonnington. He succeeded after his older brother Gilbert’s death in 1675. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Edinburgh in 1678. In 1680, along with his siblings James and Catherine, he was served heir to his father James of Bonnington. Charles of Langhope (d.bef. 1693) probably the successor of John, he was already deceased in 1693 when his son Robert became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh. It is unclear how he was related to the John, who sold Langhope in 1691. Charles of Crumhaugh (1663/4–98) probably eldest son of Walter of Crumhaugh and Goldielands. He may have been named after Charles II. He is probably the ‘Charles Scott of Goudilands’ who paid tax for 3 hearths on the west-side of Hawick on the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He may have been the ‘Goldielands, younger’ on the list of subscribers for the Hawick Kirk bell in in 1693/4 (with the ‘Goldielands, elder’ being his father Walter). He is probably also the ‘younger Goldiland’ who was cautioner for James Scott when he rented ¼ of Borthaugh in at least 1691–94 (with his name given clearly as Charles in 1691). He had a Crown charter for the estates of the Scotts of Goldielands and Crumhaugh in 1696, this included ‘Howpaysley and Crumhaugh, Trinity lands, Corsback and others’. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1698. He married Rachel, daughter of Langlands of that Ilk (who may have re-married Francis Elliot of Fenwick). He was succeeded in the lands of Crumhaugh, Howpaysley and others by his son Walter, this being in 1717 after 18½ years of ‘non-entry’, suggesting the time of his death. His daughter Margaret (d.1746) married Rev. Hugh Kennedy, minister of Cavers. Another daughter was Rachel, who married her cousin, Walter in Commonside, 1st Laird of Wauchope. It was probably his tombstone that was uncovered during renovations in St. Mary’s in 1863, and reads ‘Here lyis Charles Scott of Govdilans who died in October 22 98 and of age 34’; this implies that he died before his father (although these generations are still confused, and it is possible this was a different man, in 1598, rather than 1698). Charles (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of Sir John of Langshaw and Ancrum. He was sometimes referred to as ‘of Palace Hill’. He was said to be a loyal supporter of the Stuart cause in 1715. He married Margaret, daughter of Robert, 4th Lord Rutherford. Their children included: John of Belford, who married Marion Baillie from Ashiestiel, had an only child, Agnes, supported the Jacobites in 1745 and lost his estate; Patrick, who died at sea; Margaret, married Capt. Ronalds; Cecilia married Mr. Sinclair, W.S.; and Elizabeth, who married Rev. James Rose of Udny and was grandmother of Mary Yule, who married Thomas Cleghorn of Weens. He died in the Tower of London. Charles (17th/18th C.) owner of a garden to the west of where the Grammar School was built at the Sandbed in the 1720s. He was referred to as ‘of Goldielands’, although that designation was no longer formally recognised by the Scotts of Buccleuch. He must have been related to the Lairds of Crumhaugh, but precisely who he was is unclear; it is possible that the reference was to the already deceased Charles of Crumhaugh. Charles (17th/18th C.) married Agnes Laidlaw in Wilton Parish in 1724. Charles (17th/18th C.) Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for Liddesdale and Canonbie in the period 1726–29. He took over from Thomas Scott and William Scott of Stonedale before him, so he may also have been a son of William. He may be the same as the Charles ‘in Roan’ who was former Chamberlain to Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch in an assignation of 1730 for rental arrears. Charles of Gorrenberry (17th/18th C.) son of Francis of Gorrenberry. He is said to have witnessed the wedding of the Earl of Tarras in 1731 (but this date must be wrong, or else it was a son of the Earl). His wife Jane died in 1767, aged 65, and is buried at Bromley Church in Kent. His son John (of Gorrenberry, a doctor in London) died in 1785, and is also buried at Bromley. He may be the Charles (‘brother to Gorrenberry’) who married Margaret, daughter of Henry Elliot of Lodgegill. Charles of Crumhaugh and Howpasley (1719–57) eldest son of Walter and Beatrice Scott of Falnash. He was made an Honorary Burgess in 1746. He was probably the Charles recorded being in arrears for renting the farms of Branxholme Town and Chapellhill from the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1748. In 1750 he was registered as heir to his father Walter and grandfather Charles in the lands of Crumhaugh, Howpasley and others; these lands had been in ‘non-entry’ for nearly 23 years (possibly suggesting some legal challenges, and/or that his father had died when he was very young). He also held lands of Blackcleuch (near Teviothead). He was Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for ‘Teviotdalehead’, meaning the Parishes of Cavers, Hawick, Wilton and Roberton, in at least the period 1742–8 and possibly until 1757. His accounts for 1744 include repairs to Hassendean Mill, Hawick Kirk, Hawick Mill, Slitrig Bridge, Hawick Tower and the barns and stables of Branxholme. He is probably the ‘Crumhaugh’ recorded in the Hawick Town Treasurer’s book in 1746. He paid the window tax in Hawick (for ‘Branksholm house’) in 1748. It was probably his servant William Scott who is recorded getting married in Edinburgh in 1750. He may have been the Laird mentioned in 1757 in ‘A state of the affair twixt the Laird of Cromoch and Mistris Glenhouse anent a parcel wool sold to the deceast Thomas Glenhouse’ (in the National Archives). He married Christian Anderson; his wife is recorded in a case of 1758, along with his trustees, recovering a debt from Elliot of Fennywick, and in another case of 1762 against George Pott of Todrig. His children included: Walter (b.1742); Michael (b.1744); Robert (b.1745); and Charles (b.1747). Patrick Christie ‘maitster’ was witness to the 1745 baptism. His eldest son Capt. Walter was the last of the Scotts of Crumhaugh. Another son was probably Gideon, tenant in Priesthaugh, while his daughter Henrietta (1740–1818) married Rev. James Erskine of Shielfield in 1768. ‘Miss B. Scott, daughter of the deceast Charles Scott of Crumhaugh, Esq.’, who died at ‘Goldlands’ in 1809 was probably also his daughter. He may also have sometimes been referred to as ‘of Goldielands’. The Crumhaugh estates were sold to Henry, Duke of Buccleuch, after his death. Charles (b.1723/4) weaver in Hawick. He gave evidence in 1767, regarding the former uses of the Common; he was described at that time as married and a Burgess. He had been among the party of Hawick inhabitants who went out to Blackgrain Moss to break up the ‘bakes’ made illegally on the Common by residents of Hawick Shiel and other farms. He could have been the Charles, son of William and Bessie Douglas, born in Hawick in 1723 or the Charles, son of John and Helen Henderson, born in 1724. However, it is also possible he is the son of Richard, said to have been a younger son of George of Boouraw. This Charles (d.1776) married Janet Porteous (daughter of Robert Porteous, shoemaker) in 1756, was a weaver and had several children baptised in Hawick Parish, including: Richard (1757–58), presumably named after his father; Charles (b.1759), probably ‘Charlie o the Crescent’; Agnes (b.1761); Mary (b.1762); James (b.1763); Robert (b.1764); and Elizabeth (b.1766). Robert Collier was witness to the 1766 baptism. Charles of Woll (b.1744) eldest surviving son of William of Woll, along with whom he is recorded as a witness in Roberton parish in 1766.
Scott Scott lands of `Mains of Borthwicksheils, formerly in after the death of his brother Walter in 1796. His father retired. He also succeeded to Wauchope these lands at least as early as 1784, when his at his father’s lands of Howcleuch, and was given the interests of the Duke of Buccleuch. He was also listed among the voters of Selkirkshire in 1788. He paid the land tax for £560 for Midgehope in Ettrick Parish, as well as about £470 for Broadmeadows and £200 for Shaws in Selkirk Parish in 1785.

In 1788 his lands of Woll were valued at £595 (including the teinds). He paid tax for having a female servant in 1785, 1787, 1788 and 1791. He was also taxed for having a male servant (for most of this period Andrew Leggat, who was a coachman as well as gardener) in the period 1785–94 and for owning a carriage in the period 1785–98. He is recorded as owner of 7 farm horses at Woll in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, as well as 2 carriage or saddle horses in the period 1785–97. He may also be the Charles listed at North Synton in the 1792–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. He was recorded paying the land tax for Broadmeadows in 1802. In 1803 he sold the lands of Broadmeadows, which the family had gained through his mother, Jean Balfour. He paid the land tax on Woll in 1811. He was listed as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1805. He conveyed parts of the superiority of Wauchope to each of his sons Walter and Archibald, another part to Charles Douglas, and retained a last part for himself. He was still listed as owner of the Mains of Borthwickshiels in 1811. His will was proved at the Prerogatory Court of Canterbury in 1812. It is said that he was of a much less ‘morose temper’ than his brother. In 1776 he married Elizabeth (‘Betty’), daughter of Archibald Dickson of Hassendeanburn and Huntlaw. Their children were: Christian (b.1777), who married Archibald Dickson, her cousin; Walter (b.1778), who succeeded to Wauchope; Archibald (b.1779), who succeeded to Howcleuch; Charles (1782–1856), who died unmarried; Rachel (b.1782), who married Hugh Mitchell from Dumfries; Robert, (1786–1833), who also died unmarried; James (b.1789), who was with the East India Company; William, who was a Captain in India; Agnes, who died young; and Jessie, who married John Cockburn. The ‘Miss Scott of Wauchope’ who died in 1816, aged 24, was probably one of his daughters. The ‘Miss Scott of Wauchope’ who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825 was probably also a daughter. He died at Wauchope and was buried in the family aisle at St. Mary’s. Charles ‘Chairlie o the Crescent’ (1759–1840) son of Charles and Janet Porteous. He was a Hawick linen manufacturer, who was descended from the Boonraw Scotts. He was based on the Cross Wynd and then moved to the Crescent, the location later being the showroom of John Laing’s; he gained this property from his

He was ‘younger of Wool’ in 1780 when added to the voters’ roll of Roxburghshire, based on his superiority of ‘the five pound land of Bewlie’ in the Barony of Lilliesleaf, as well as Mabonlaw and ‘Whinny park’ in the Barony of Harden. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788; he was described at that time as having ‘a pretty good estate’, being brother of ‘John Scott, W.S.’ and probably voting with the interests of the Duke of Buccleuch. He was also listed among the voters of Selkirkshire in 1788. He paid the land tax for £560 for Midgehope in Ettrick Parish, as well as about £470 for Broadmeadows and £200 for Shaws in Selkirk Parish in 1785. In 1788 his lands of Woll were valued at £595 (including the teinds). He paid tax for having a female servant in 1785, 1787, 1788 and 1791. He was also taxed for having a male servant (for most of this period Andrew Leggat, who was a coachman as well as gardener) in the period 1785–94 and for owning a carriage in the period 1785–98. He is recorded as owner of 7 farm horses at Woll in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, as well as 2 carriage or saddle horses in the period 1785–97. He may also be the Charles listed at North Synton in the 1792–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. He was recorded paying the land tax for Broadmeadows in 1802. In 1803 he sold the lands of Broadmeadows, which the family had gained through his mother, Jean Balfour. He paid the land tax on Woll in 1811. He was listed as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1805. He conveyed parts of the superiority of Wauchope to each of his sons Walter and Archibald, another part to Charles Douglas, and retained a last part for himself. He was still listed as owner of the Mains of Borthwickshiels in 1811. His will was proved at the Prerogatory Court of Canterbury in 1812. It is said that he was of a much less ‘morose temper’ than his brother. In 1776 he married Elizabeth (‘Betty’), daughter of Archibald Dickson of Hassendeanburn and Huntlaw. Their children were: Christian (b.1777), who married Archibald Dickson, her cousin; Walter (b.1778), who succeeded to Wauchope; Archibald (b.1779), who succeeded to Howcleuch; Charles (1782–1856), who died unmarried; Rachel (b.1782), who married Hugh Mitchell from Dumfries; Robert, (1786–1833), who also died unmarried; James (b.1789), who was with the East India Company; William, who was a Captain in India; Agnes, who died young; and Jessie, who married John Cockburn. The ‘Miss Scott of Wauchope’ who died in 1816, aged 24, was probably one of his daughters. The ‘Miss Scott of Wauchope’ who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825 was probably also a daughter. He died at Wauchope and was buried in the family aisle at St. Mary’s. Charles ‘Chairlie o the Crescent’ (1759–1840) son of Charles and Janet Porteous. He was a Hawick linen manufacturer, who was descended from the Boonraw Scotts. wife, whose father James Ekron (d.1787), merchant in Hawick, had formerly owned it. His house is marked on Wood's 1824 map, opposite the end of the Kirk Wynd. He is probably the Charles recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls as owner of part of the ‘particulate lands’ of Hawick at Allars; this land was feued by later in the 19th century. He subscribed to Robert Wilson's ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. It was said (by his grandson, James Murray) that he employed 6-8 weavers, mostly working from home, producing ‘custom work, in which department he produced the finest diapers and napery, being the only weaver of these sorts in the district’. He also sold linen goods at St. Boswells Fair, ‘Boswell’s Fair sarkin being a well-known material at that time’, for which purpose ‘he employed several old women constantly spinning, – some in the country, others in the town’. It is said that when he was trying to seek a position in the excise for his son John he went to Scott of Harden for support, claiming to be a relation through the Scotts of Synton. In 1791 he married Betty (b.1771), daughter of John Oliver and Agnes Ekron; she was said to be known to her family (for unknown reasons) as Mary or Margaret, although she was born Elizabeth and recorded as ‘Betty Oliver’ in the 1791 marriage record. Their children included: Agnes (1792–1839); Charles (b.1794) of Bourtree Place; Janet (b.1796), who died young; Janet (again, 1798–1845), the 3rd child, who married James Henderson, carrier and Hillsleland ‘Laird'; Isobel (1799–1831), who married Thomas Anderson; Mary (1803–88), the 6th child, who married Thomas Murray and was mother of Sir James A.H. Murray; John (b.1806), who worked for the excise and married Catherine Watson; and Elizabeth, who died young. His tombstone was close to the south wall of St. Mary's Kirk, but when it became illegible his son Charles was going to have it re-carved, but instead used the stone to record his own family. Charles (18th/19th C.) glover of Hawick who was one of the first members of the Curling Club. He is so recorded in the club minutes of 1812. Charles (b.c.1765) carpenter in Lilliesleaf. He was living on the south side of Main Street in 1841. Charles (1782–1856) born in Hawick Parish, he was 3rd son of Charles of Wauchope and Howcleuch. He was farmer at Bush in Ewesdale, being recorded there in 1841 and 1851. He was listed as a trustee of Andrew Dickson of Alton (who died in 1837), with Archibald of Howcleuch also listed (his brother). He remained unmarried. He may be the Charles baptised in Hawick in 1783, with no parents names listed. Charles Balfour, W.S. (1782–1838) 3rd son of Charles of Woll and Elizabeth Waugh. He trained as a lawyer, was apprenticed to Archibald Gibson and became Writer to the Signet in 1806. He became an Honorary Burgess of Peebles in 1823. Pigot’s 1825/6 directory lists him as proprietor of Fairs. In 1818 he married Elizabeth (or ‘Eliza'); youngest daughter of Alexander Ker, minister of Stobo (and she died in 1870). Their son Charles inherited Sunderland Hall in Selkirkshire and changed his name to Scott-Plummer. They also had 4 daughters: Catherine; Elizabeth, who married Capt. Alexander Monroe; Isabella; and Barbara. He inherited Woll from his nephew Charles Andrew, but held the estate for only a brief period before his death. Woll passed to his brother Col. John. Charles (1783–1845) married Margaret Douglas in Wilton Parish in 1813. Their children included: Dr. John (b.1814); Jessy (b.1815); Isobel (b.1816); Archibald (b.1818); George (b.1819), who started a cabinet factory; Charles (b.1821); Andrew (b.1823); and Jessy (again, b.1824). His children were born in Lilliesleaf Parish. In 1834 he emigrated with his family to Canada, settling at the farm of Blenheimhill in Dumfries Township, Waterloo County. His cousin William Knox lived on a neighbouring farm called Langside. Charles of Knowesouth (1784–1854) son of Thomas and Jean Rutherford, and grandson of Robert of Sandyknowe. He was born in Crailing Parish. He was a cousin of Sir Walter Scott, and had the first Canto of ‘The Lady of the Lake’ read to him at Ashiestiel in 1809. He inherited the estate of Knowesouth from his mother, but later sold it to William Oliver of Dinlabyre. He also resided at Nisbet Mill for a while. In 1831 he obtained a lease for the farm at Milsington. He was at Milsington in 1841, with his 3 younger children, as well as Mary and James (who were probably his siblings) and 2 female servants. In 1851 there were 5 farm and house servants living with his family at Milsington. In 1814 he married Esther, daughter of Kelso architect William Elliot. Their children were: Thomas (b.1815), who succeeded as tenant at Milsington; William (b.1816), doctor in Edinburgh, who died unmarried; John (b.1818), who moved to Australia; Charles (b.1819), who died abroad; Robert (b.1821), who moved to the U.S.A.; Walter (b.1822), who died young; Walter (b.1824), also died abroad; Jane, who married Hawick lawyer James Carmichael; and Mary. Charles (b.c.1790) tailor at the Forkins in Hobkirk Parish. His wife was Jane and they had a son, Andrew, who was also a tailor. Charles (1794–1861) eldest son of Charlie of the Crescent and uncle of Sir James A.H. Murray. He was a heddle maker at 5 Bourtree Place. In 1841 he was at Bourtree Place, listed as a handloom weaver, but by 1851 was a heddle maker there. He married Margaret, daughter of Yeddie Smail (or ‘Smeal’, d.1882). Their children included: Eliza (1821–42); Margaret (1822–1902), who married baker Robert Oliver from Morpeth; Charles (1824–96), who married Annie Knox and emigrated to Winnipeg; Adam (1826–81), joiner; Alison Munro (1828–97), married John Douglas, farmer at Essenside; Agnes (1830–99), married hosiery manufacturer William Lyle; Jessie (b.1833), who married Andrew Scott, accountant in Glasgow; John (b.1836), who died young; Mary (b.c.1839); John (b.1841–47); and William Munro (b.1844).

Charles (b.1798/9) farm worker in Roberton Parish. In 1841 he was living at Whitecleuchside. He married Anne Walde in 1822 and their children included: Janet (or ‘Jessie’, b.1823); Peter Brown (b.1824); Charles (b.1827); Margaret (b.1832); Mary (b.1839); and Charlotte (b.1849).

Charles (1805–69) son of Walter, he was a boot and shoemaker of Teviot Square, i.e. the Sandbed, where he was listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was also a grocer and spirit merchant, being based at 6 Sandbed. His address is given as Slitrig Bridge in 1841, Teviot Square in 1851 and 6 Sandbed in 1861. In 1841 in Hawick Parish he married Jessie (1817–88), daughter of William Laidlaw from Hobkirk.

Their children were: Walter (b.1842), who died unmarried; Helen Douglas (1843–1928), unmarried, who had a family tree for the Laidlaws; William Laidlaw (‘Wowie’, 1847–1922), who was also a shoemaker; Isabella Mary (1852–1928); and Charles Douglas (1854–76), who died unmarried. He is buried in the Wellogate. He is probably the Charles whose wife’s heirs are recorded in about 1874 as owners of part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick. Charles Andrew of Woll (1817–1838) elder son of William of Woll. His father died in 1820, while he was still a child. He died unmarried, and was succeeded in the Woll estate by his uncle Charles Balfour Scott. Charles of Howcleuch (1819–95) 2nd surviving son of Walter Scott of Wauchope. He studied sheep management with the factor of Lord Breadalbane. He farmed at Tythehouse in Hobkirk Parish and Dykeraw in Southdean. But he was more interested in hunting than farming, being a member of the Buccleuch Hunt. He was a keen riding partner of Robert Kerr Elliot of Harwood and the Hendersons of Abbotrule. Afterward he lived at Lintalee, where his mother joined him later in her life. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1847, and when he retired he was the oldest member. He became attached to his sister-in-law’s sister, Margaret Amelia, daughter of Capt. Browne Roberts (of Ravensbourne Park, Kent), but was financially unable to marry her; she married Capt. Robert Main, had 2 sons, but became a widow, after which he was able to marry her, although she had to give up the inheritance she had from her deceased first husband’s family. They married in 1862 and were said to have been happy together till the end of their days. That same year he came into inheritance from the death of his brother Archibald. And in 1874 he succeeded to Howcleuch from his uncle Archibald. Thereafter he purchased Langlee and had the house largely rebuilt. He is probably the ‘Trustee of Mr. Scott of Wauchope’ recorded as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in about 1860. He was recorded at Langlee and Lintalee in a directory of 1868. He is buried in Hobkirk Kirkyard along with his wife. He was succeeded by his nephew Arthur Francis. He matriculated arms, the same as those of Scott of Wauchope with a crescent counterchanged. His portrait was painted by Sir George Reid. Charles (b.1821) see Charles Scott-Plummer. Charles (b.1822/3) shepherd at Braudliehope in Liddesdale according to the 1861 census. He was born in Teviothead Parish. His wife was Isabella and their children included Isabella, Adam, Thomas, Janet, John and Robert. His mother was Janet from Kirkton. Charles (1824–96) son of heddle-maker Charles and cousin of Sir James A.H. Murray. He was a cabinet-maker at 4 Bourtree Place, according to the 1851 census. In Slater’s 1852 directory the firm is listed as ‘Charles, jun. & Adam, East end’. He married Annie Knox and in 1854 they emigrated to Winnipeg, where they had a family of 9 children. Charles William Douglas (b.1827) son of David, who farmed at Priesthaugh. He was recorded as farm steward in 1861, living with his father at Priesthaugh. In 1857 he donated some rocks to the Archaeological Society. He was listed as farmer at Priesthaugh in 1868. Charles S. (d.1881) son of Thomas (‘Sly Tammie’) and brother of Walter (of Lyle & Scott). He was a wool merchant at 18 Oliver Crescent. He married Isabella Melrose. Their children included Mary E., Charlotte H., Agnes H., James M. (who died at Loos in 1915), Isabella and Margaret. Charles (1834–1912) 3rd son of John, tenant in West Deloraine. He farmed at Over Whithlaw and emigrated to Iowa in 1901, like his brother Alexander. In 1865 he married Wilhelmina, daughter of Walter Elliot, farmer at Over Kirkhope. Their children were: John Sibbald, who married his cousin Wilhelmina Young Scott and secondly Gertrude Dukett; Walter (1869–1911); Henry (b.1871), a doctor in Chicago; Gideon (b.1873), who married Effie Smith from Selkirk and lived at Keith, Banff; Charles Alexander (b.1883), a chemist at Sheldon, Iowa; Margaret, who lived at Sheldon; Christina Agnes, who married Elmer S. Gardner; Wilhelmina Elliot, who married Dr. George Skene; Mary Arbuthnott, who married Dr. B.C. Stewart; and Grace Elliot, a nurse in Sheldon, Iowa. Charles (b.1853) 2nd son of John, estate carpenter under 4 Lairds of Edgerston. He was a forester and carpenter and also worked at Edgerston, but moved to Weens in about 1900. He married Mary Story in 1879 and had a son. Charles (1857–1940) eldest son of Thomas, tenant at Milsington. He took over the lease from his father and was able to purchase the farm from the Duke of Buccleuch after WWI. He was thus the first Scott who was Laird of Milsington. He was known as an expert judge of Cheviot sheep. He was President of the Teviotdale Farmers’ Club. He married Mary, daughter of John Tullie, farmer at Bowanhill. Their children included: Thomas (b.1899); and John Charles (b.1903). Charles (19th/20th C.) Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire, who lived at Tandlaw. Charles William (b.1866) son of joiner Adam. He was a general dealer in Trinidad. He married Margaret, daughter of George Blakie of Bridge House. They had 2 daughters, Sybil and Margaret. Charlotte (b.1766) christened in Ashkirk, she was ‘begotten in fornication with Captain Scott of Gaudilands’, her mother being Isobel Scott in Longtown. Her father was probably Capt. Walter of Crumhaugh (since that family often also had the appellation ‘of Goldielands’). Christian (17th/18th C.) Hawick brewer mentioned in 1703. This could be the same Christian listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694 and the Christian on the subscribers list for the new Kirk bell in 1793/4. Christian ‘Christy’ nee Anderson (18th C.) wife of Charles of Crumhaugh. She received a widow’s pension from the Duke of Buccleuch, her husband having been factor to the Duke, as well as a distant cousin. She is recorded along with her husband’s trustees in 1758, recovering a debt from Elliot of Fenwick, and in another case of 1762 against George Pott of Todrig. Her son Capt. Walter was the last of the Scotts of Crumhaugh. Christian (b.c.1788) gate-keeper at the Wilton Lodge lodge-house. She was recorded there in 1841, along with Margaret and William, who were presumably her children, and Christian Davidson, who may have been a younger child or a grandchild. Christian (b.c.1790) milliner at 41 High Street. She was already a widow in 1841. Her children included William, Ann, and Jean (or Jane). Christian (b.1804) daughter of Robert, who was farmer at Todshawhaugh. Her mother was Janet Jardine from Thorliveshope. She was a boarder at the school at Linhope in Yarrow Water, as described by Rev. James Russell. In 1827 she married James Dickson of Housebyres. Christopher (18th/19th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Betty Laidlaw and they had a daughter Christian (b.1798). Christopher Bartle Hugh (1924–97) of Gala, son of Philip Beaumont Frere and Jean Winifred Mary Makdougall Scott-Makdougall. He was educated at Eton and King’s College, Cambridge. In 1941 he succeeded his uncle John to Gala and changed his surname to Scott. He married Anne Margaret D’Arcy, daughter of Henry Francis Hobart Kerr in 1948. Their children were: John Philip Henry Schomberg (b.1952), who succeeded; Dominic Christopher Hugh (b.1955); Julian Sebastian Frere (1956–84); Rupert Benjamin Bartle Frere (b.1958); and Sebastian Simon Frere (b.1961). Cochrane (b.1817/8) from Neilston in Renfrewshire, he was a nailer in Hawick. He lived on Punch Bowl Close in 1841, with his wife Betsy and son Robert. By 1851 the family had moved to Coldstream. Constance Emily Monteeath (b.1860s) only child of William Monteeath and Amelia Douglas. She became the 9th Baroness of Ancrum and was succeeded by her cousin Irene Dulier. David (13th C.) tailor recorded in 1298 when protection was asked for him to accompany Ralph ‘de Monthermer’, Earl of Gloucester and Hertford in the service of Edward I in Scotland. David (15th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in 1453. He was granted the lease of ‘Drumcors’ (in Linlithgowshire) by the King. It is possible that he is the same as David of Buccleuch or the later David of Inverkeithing. Sir David of Buccleuch (c.1430–1491/2) 7th Laird of Buccleuch, and also of Branxholme and Hassendean. He was eldest son of Sir Walter of Buccleuch, and brother of Sir Alexander of Howpasley and Abington. During his father’s life he was sometimes designated ‘of Eckford’. He witnessed a lease, along with his father and others, for lands in Borthwickshiel in 1445. In 1451/2 he had a sasine for lands in Linlithgow and is described there as heir of Sir Walter. In 1453 he was granted the Barony of Eckford, and thereafter was referred to as being ‘of Eckford’. In 1454 he had a charter for the lands of Ireland’s-lands in the Barony of Wilton and in 1455 he had a charter of the lands of Whitchesters, forfeited by John St. Michael. Also in 1455 he is recorded being obliged to pay William Douglas of Drumlanrig 200 merks at St. Mary’s. He accompanied his father in the force that met the Douglasses at Arkinholm in 1455; it was probably for these deeds that he gained the forfeited lands of Whitchesters. In 1457, along with his father, he witnessed the appointment of Andrew Ker of Cessford as Bailie of the Lordship of Jedforest. In 1459 he was let the farms of Mount Common and Redford for ‘half ferm’. In 1461, when described as heir apparent to his father, he was witness to a sasine of lands near Branxholme. He is recorded as his father’s heir in the 1463 resignation of the family estates, with Branxholme being then erected into a Barony. Immediately afterwards he he a precept and then sasine infesting him in the Barony of Branxholme. He was heir apparent of Sir Walter in 1464 when he witnessed a transumpt for an inquest concerning the lands of Cranshaws for Swinton of that Ilk. He is probably the David who was on the panel for the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers and Sheriffship of Roxburgh in 1464/5, and he was appointed as a special sheriff for the associated precept of sasine. Also in 1464/5 he was ‘of Whitchester’ when he witnessed the sasine granting the lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex to William Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1465 he had a marriage contract for his eldest son Walter and Katherine, sister of John Lindsay of Covington, involving the lands of Kirkurd. If Walter died, then one of his other sons was to marry another Lindsay. He succeeded on the death of his father in about 1469. In 1469/70 he and his son Walter were made Keepers of Hermitage Castle for 19 years by Archibald Douglas, ‘Bell the Cat’ (5th Earl of Angus), who was also Lord of Liddesdale (and whose sister married his son David). After Walter died, a new arrangement was made in 1471/2, keeping him as Bailie of Liddesdale, Ewesdale and Eskdale, and Keeper of Hermitage Castle, along with his new heir David, and contracting David to marry the Earl’s sister Jean. In 1470 he made a marriage contract for his daughter ‘Jonet’ to marry James, son and heir of William Douglas of Drumlanrig, the dowry being 500 ‘merks’, and the lands of Whitcheser to be held in ward. In 1470 he and his heir Walter are listed in a Douglas charter as being in line to inherit certain lands on Hermitage Water if the line of Douglas of Cavers failed; he is there mentioned as being kinsman of Archibald Earl of Angus (although any family relationship at that point is unknown). In 1470/1 he was one of the witnesses to the decision to acquit Andrew Ker of Cessford of the charges of assisting the King’s enemies. In 1471 he witnessed a sasine for lands at Borthwickshiel. He was Ranger of Ettrick Ward in at last the period 1467–78, having for his fee the lease of Cacrabank and later Eldinhope. In 1472 he and his son David were confirmed as Keepers of Hermitage Castle and Bailies of the Lordship of Liddesdale, Ewesdale and Eskdale, for a period of 17 years. In 1472 he was appointed as one of Earl’s bailies to give sasine of the lands on Hermitage Water to William Douglas of Cavers. In 1474 it is recorded that one of the King’s couriers was paid to send him and the Earl of Angus a message about a day of truce on the Border. In 1475 he witnessed a charter for Walter Ker of Caverton. In 1478 there is a record of Alexander Murray, Parson of Hawick complaining that he owed the church 44 merks. He probably remained as Keeper of Hermitage about up until his death. Sometime shortly before he died his house and lands at Buccleuch were plundered by Simon and Matthew Routledge (tenants at the Trows). He had already extended the house at Branxholme, and the primary residence of the family moved there. In 1475/6 he had the lands of Kirkurd resigned to him as superior, the lands being the dowry for the marriage of his daughter with John, son of John Lindsay of ‘Cowbantome’. In 1479 he gave his seal to an obligation relating to the Kers of Cessford. In 1482 Thomas Armstrong resigned his lands of Mangerton in order that a new indentment be made in his favour. He was probably the second Scott to sit in the Scottish Parliament, in 1481 as ‘of Kirkurd’ and in 1487 as ‘Lord of Buccleuch’. In 1484 he and his son Robert were made joint Bailies of lands belonging to Melrose Abbey, specifically Melrose-lands, Ettrick, Rodono, Eskdale, Ringwoodfield and East Teviot; he had previously been Bailie for some of the same lands. Also in 1484 he was on the panel for James Douglas of Drumlanrig inheriting the Barony of Hawick and witnessed the associated sasine. In 1487 he appointed his son Robert as procurator for resigning into the King’s hands his lands and baronies. In 1488 he resigned his lands of Branxholme, Eckford, Lanton, Buccleuch and Kirkurd to the King, in order for them to be regranted into the barony of Branxholme. This was because of service he and his son Robert gave to the King at the Battle of Blackness; this charter lists his heirs at that time. Also in 1488 he witnessed the grant of Auld Roxburgh to Walter Ker of Cessford and he was pledge for leases granted to Walter Scott in Tushielaw and William Roger and Robert Scott in Winterburgh. In 1491 his leases of Deloraine, Warleshope and Eldinhope were all vacant because of his death. In 1492 there is a record in the Kign’s Treasurer’s accounts of money for his ‘ward and marriage’. He is said to have married a daughter of Thomas, Lord Somerville (she was left 240 sheep, 11 cows and 11 oxen in his will, but was not named). His children included: Walter, who married Katherine, daughter of John Lindsay of Covington, but died before him and without an heir; David, who married Jane, daughter of George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus, and whose son Walter succeeded; Robert of Allanhaugh, to whom in 1484/5 he granted the lands and Lordship of Whitchester; William (possibly of Foulshields), mentioned in 1471/2 as the 3rd son; Janet, who married Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig; Margaret, who married James Haig of Bemersyde; an unnamed daughter, who married John, eldest son of John Lindsay of Covington; and Isabella, who married Sir Simon Carruthers of Mouswald and secondly John Murray of Falahill. He also appears to have had a son John, who is mentioned in his will as ‘his son’, and also Archibald, mentioned as his son when he took over the lease of Eldinhope in 1487. His will and testament lists his goods, a large number of people with whom he had financial obligations, and others who were bequeathed money or items; his goods were valued at £740, he was owed £380 and he gave money, livestock or grain to more than 40 people (most of them probably local). He is buried in the Church of the Holy Cross, Peebles, and bequeathed 40 shillings to the Church of Hawick, as well as Peebles and Randleburn. David (15th C.) recorded as customs officer of Inverkeithing in the period 1486-88. He was also Bailie of Inverkeithing in 1487. He was probably related to John, who held a similar office in Inverkeithing. Either he or a later David was Bailie of Inverkeithing in 1512. David (c.1450–bef. 1484) second son of Sir David of Branxholme. By 1471 he was heir apparent, since his older brother Walter had died before him. In 1476 he witnessed a charter of Robert Scott of Haining to his cousin, Thomas Middlemas, for lands in Peeblesshire. A ‘tack’ of 1478 by Archibald, Earl of Angus confirms to him lands, farms, rents, mill, capons, etc. within the Lordship of Selkirk. In 1479 Alexander Murray, Parson of Hawick, brought an action against him for wrongfully collecting £44 of tax, which he said belonged to the church; it is unclear how this was resolved. He married Jane, daughter of George Douglas, 4th Earl of Angus, this being arranged in 1471/2 by his father (who was Keeper of Hermitage) and Archibald Douglas (who was Lord of Liddesdale, later 5th Earl of Angus and known as ‘Bell-the-Cat’), her brother; the couple were jointly given Dryfesdale. In 1471/2, along with his father, he became Keeper of Hermitage and Bailie of the Lordships of Liddesdale, Ewesdale and Eskdale, the appointments being made by the Earl of Angus. He pre-deceased his father and the titles were inherited by his (probably only) son, who became Sir Walter of Branxholme and Buccleuch. David (15th C.) son of Walter of Headshaw. In 1486 he leased the lands of ‘Midsteid de Gildhouse’ in Ettrick Ward, with Sir David of Buccleuch as his pledge. David of Whitehaugh (15th C.) gained the lands of Whitehaugh in 1479 for yearly payment of a penny. The estate would remain in his family for about 400 years (although in fact it may have passed between different branches of the Scotts). He must have been related to Walter of Whitehaugh, recorded in 1488. His son may have been Philip of Heap. He may also have been related to the Robert of Whitehaugh recorded in 1499. David (15th C.) bequeathed 20 sheep in the 1491/2 will of Sir David of Branxholme. He is listed as ‘Daud Scotte’ and was probably local. David of Hassendean (d.bef. 1515) eldest son of James of Kirkurd, Over and Nether Newhall and Hassendean. He was granted the lands of Galalaw and the Nether Mains of Newhall by his father James of Kirkurd in 1494. At the Justice-aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5 he obtained remission for the following crimes: stealing 16 oxen from the Earl of Bothwell, in the company of Ninian Armstrong; stealing 19 cows and 3 horses from the Earl of Bothwell at Castlelaw; stealing 12 oxen from the Earl of Bothwell at ‘Laudonia’; and stealing 3 horses from Blackbarony. His surety was Walter of Howpasley. He is listed being ‘in Gallolau’ in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501 among mostly local men who had their fines compounded. He is recorded in 1510/1 in a charter giving him the lands of Over and Nether Newhall (probably later Burnhead and Burnfoot) and lands in Easter Hassendean called ‘Dedrig’. Also in 1510/1 he gave his ‘brother german’ Robert the 2 ‘merklands’ of ‘Dowiswod’ in the Barony of Hassendean. In 1512 he was witness to the sasine where Walter of Synton transferred Harden to his brother William. In 1515 wardship of his lands were given to Walter of Buccleuch and to the King’s tutor, John Stewart, Duke of Albany. Sir Alexander may have been his son, and they may both have perished at Flodden (if he existed). He appears to have been succeeded (in Hassendean) by his brothers John and then William. It seems very likely that he is the same man as David of Galalaw. David ‘Lady’ or ‘the Lady’ (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1502 when he was ‘prope stirkshawis’ (i.e. near to Stirches). He had remission for stealing 60 sheep from Patrick Paterson at Colmslie, with his surety being William Turnbull in Minto. He is also described as ‘in Stikschawis’ (i.e. Stichawes) in another case in 1502 when he was pardoned for several crimes: stealing a horse, 40 sheep and other items from Blackhau; bringing in the Robsons, Dodds and Charles’ from England to burn Hermiston, belonging to Adam Rutherford; stealing 5 horses from Hermiston, and burning houses and grain there; bringing in Archibald Armstrong, Ninian Armstrong, David Turnbull of Bonchester and other ‘traitors of Leven and Liddlesdale’ to burn 6 houses and 7 horses at Minto Craigend; bringing in the same men to steal cows and horses from the tenants of Minto; and common theft. His surety was William Turnbull of Minto. He also had remission for bringing the ‘Armstrangis’ (presumably a generic term for Liddesdale thieves) and ‘Traitors of Levin’ (i.e. thieves from across the Border) to steal 180 oxen and cows, 20 horses and goods from the tenants of Synton; since the Scotts of Stirches were closely related to the Scotts of Synton, there may have been a family dispute involved in this raid. He was also implicated in the murder of George Newton and George Cavers in the same raid. Adam Turnbull of Hornshole was indicted for involvement in this or a similar incident. Also in 1502 he had a remission for stealing a horse, sheep and household goods from ‘John Spedane and Andrew Michel- sone furth of Blackhalche’ (whether the one in Rulewater or Ewesdale is unclear), as well as for bringing ‘the Robsonis, Doddis, and Charlis, Englishmen, to the Burning of Hirdmanstoun, belonging to Adam Ruthirfurde’ (probably ‘Her- miston’ in Lilliesleaf Parish), including stealing 5 horses and burning corn and buildings there. In addition he led Archibald Armstrong, Ninian Armstrong, David Turnbull of Bonchester and ‘other Traitors of Levin and Liddalisdale’ on a raid to Minto Craigend, where they burned the farms and seven horses, and stole cows, horses and goods. On top of that he stole 60 sheep from Ralph Ker at Broadmeadows (this incident possibly also involving Walter, son of Walter of Headshaw, and Adam Turnbull in Hornshole), as well as 6 cows and other goods from William and John Aitken at the Haining. William Turnbull of Minto was surety for him for answering to these offences. Note that Robert of Stirches was the Laird at this time, and it is unclear how (or if) they were related; it is possible he was the David, son of Robert of Stirches and Synton, who was recorded in 1526. He may also be the David, brother to William in Harden, who was listed among those Borders men pardoned in 1526 for their role in attacking the Earl of Arran; if so then this would support the idea that he was a younger son of Robert of Stirches and Synton. He may also have been related to the slightly earlier David of Whitehaugh. David (15th/16th C.) recorded as being ‘de Franscurni’ on the Exchequer Rolls for Selkirkshire in 1501. He was listed as a debtor along with ‘Ade Scot’ and James Laidlaw, with Walter of Tushielaw responsible for their pledges. It is unclear where his lands might have been. David of Tushielaw (15th/16th C.) probably a younger son of Sir Alexander of Howpasley. He is recorded in 1502 as ‘of Tushielaw’ when Patrick Turnbull in Wauchope had remission for associating with his son William Scott, as well as the Armstongs. He is probably the ‘Davie wi the Tod’s Tail’ of Howpasley, referred to by Satchells, who married a daughter of Robert Elliot (12th) of Redheugh. His brother Walter was also sometimes known as ‘of Tushielaw’. His children were: Adam, who succeeded; (probably) John of Thirlestane; William; and Robert of Bowhill. David of Galalaw (15th/16th C.) listed being ‘in Gallolau’ in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501 among mostly local men who had their fines compounded. He was a witness in 1507/8 to the document relating to the tower ‘between the bridges’ in Hawick for Scott of Whitchesters. He is recorded in a remission of 1510 as ‘of Gallolaw’ for assisting rebels; he is named along with John and Walter Scott and John Lindsay. He is also recorded in 1511 as being ‘of Gallowlaw’ when he claimed the lands of ‘Lang Hassindene’ of which he had been tenant, and that had been owned previously by Elizabeth Cunningham. However, 3 years later she was confirmed in these lands by the superior, Cuthbert Cunningham, Earl of Glencairn. It seems likely he is the same man as David of Hassendean. David (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘in Quhithauche’ in 1510 when he was one of the sureties for Thomas, brother of Philip of Headshaw, who was implicated in the murder of John Murray of Falahill. Other sureties were William in Hawick, George in Goldielands, William in Fenwick and John of Haining, suggesting he was related to some (or all) of these branches. He may also have been related to Robert of Whitehaugh who is mentioned in 1499. David of Howpasley, see David of Tushielaw. David (d.c.1544) first son of Sir Walter (‘Wicked Wat’) of Buccleuch. He was given the baronies of Branxholme, Eckford and Kirkurd and the Lordships of Buccleuch, Rankiburn and Lempitlaw by his father in 1528 (with livery to himself), but predeceased him. He may also have had a son Walter, who was heir to Sir Walter (mentioned in 1551), but must also have died, since Sir Walter, son of Sir William of Kirkurd (his brother) succeeded. In 1574 Dame Margaret Douglas, widow of Sir Walter of Branxholme, was granted the ward and non-entries of certain fees previously gifted to him; he is there described as ‘David Scott, sone and apperand air for the tyme to vnquhile Schir Walter Scott of B[r]anxholme, knycht, quhilk vnquhile David wes gudschir brothir to Walter Scott, now apperand of Branxholme’. Also in 1574 his grand-nephew, Walter, was served heir to his baronies of Branxholme and Eckford, as well as other lands; this was presumably a legal formality, since he (David) had never in fact succeeded to these baronies. David (16th C.) described as ‘in Clarelaw’ (i.e. Clarilaw) in when he gave back the Mains of ‘Capitrig’ (near Hassendean) to William of Hassendean in a ‘letter of reversion’ (i.e. following a loan). He was also witness to a confirming charter of the lands of Harden to William Scott in 1535. In 1541/2 he was one of the nobles serving as caution for John Johnstone of that Ilk. He may have been son or other relative of Adam of Clarilaw. David (16th C.) recorded in 1573 as ‘callit Huttitill’ among the tenants of ‘Andishop’ who were to be entered into ward in Edinburgh by Sir Walter of Branxholme, Sir Walter of Birkinside and Adam of Deephope. Alexander, also ‘callit Huttitill’ was also listed, as well as ‘Blak Sande in Deiphop’. ‘Andishop’ seems likely to have been Anneshope in Ettrick or Eldinhope in Yarrow. He was surely related to ‘Rowie of Huttkill’, who was recorded in 1616. It is unclear where ‘Huttitill’ was located. David (16th/17th C.) of Stobicote, brother of Walter of Goldielands and a younger son of ‘Wicked Wat’, the 9th Laird of Buccleuch. He is one of the ‘Pensioners’ of the house of Buccleuch listed by Scott of Satchells (and there stated to be brother of Sir Walter of Goldielands). He may have been the first Scott of Stobicote. He could be the ‘yonger sone of the Lorde of Bukclowghes’ (name not given) listed in 1541 along with several Kers, accused of leading a raid on Mindrum and Hethpool. David of Raesknoke (16th/17th C.) listed by Scott of Satchells as one of ‘Pensioners of Buccleuch’. He was said to be a descendant of the Scotts of Allanhaugh, but the precise relationship with them is unknown. He was probably related to Robert of Raesknoke, who was possibly a little earlier. David of Hassendean (d.c.1564) eldest son of William of Hassendean. He was witness in 1551 to a confirmation of the Barony of Hassendean to Alexander Cunningham. He was killed by a band of Elliots and others, his murder case being tried in 1564, with William Elliot of Horsleyhill and others found guilty. It may be that those conspiring in this murder included his nephew James (son of his brother Walter), who was also executed. This event played a role in the deadly feud between the Elliots and the Scotts, which lasted for the next several years. He may have been succeeded by his grandson Robert. David (16th C.) servant to Walter Turnbull of Holbsburn. He is listed in 1567, along with his employer, among men were ordered to appear before the Privy Council to answer accusations of raiding into England. David (d.1570s) son of Adam of Allanhaugh. He was said to have ‘fallin in my hand accidentlie’ by Sir Walter of Branxholme, while he was a minor, his death being related to the salying of Sir Walter’s servant at Braidhaugh, Hob Dalgleish. The resulting feud was settled through a bond of 1585, between Sir Walter of Branxholme and Robert of Allanhaugh; however, it is unclear whether his own close family (brothers are mentioned) were simply being forced to capitulate through this bond, since they appear not to have been directly related to the Laird of Allanhaugh at that time. David (16th C.) brother of Walter of Chamberlain Newton. He and his brother John were witnesses in 1588 to an instrument of sasine for Walter Scott of Howeslaw as heir to his father Sir Walter of Birken- side in the lands of Appletreehall and Midshiel. David (16th C.) Hawick Bailie in 1592. It is un- clear what branch of the Scotts he may have been from. David (16th/17th C.) brother of the deceased Laird of Synton (either George or possible Walter) who was in a gang of Scotts and their followers who forcibly released 2 of their kin from the custody of the Bailies of Selkirk in 1608. Walter Scott, called ‘Old Walter’ in Synton was also involved, so possibly his brother or other near relative. David (16th/17th C.) son of the late John ‘called of the Tour in Hawick’. In 1609 he had an action against Hector Turnbull of Barnhills and his son and heir John for not paying how much they had borrowed from him. It is unclear how he might have been related to other local Scotts. He also had a brother John, who inherited his father’s lands in 1609. David (17th C.) recorded being ‘in Newlands’ in 1643, when listed as owner of lands in Belses in Ancrum Parish in 1643, valued at £156. David of Canonbie (1627–48) son of Walter, 1st Earl of Buccleuch and younger brother of Francis, 2nd Earl. He was born at Newark Castle. He was listed among those on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1648, but is said to have died in that year, apparently in battle (and unmarried). However, his testament and inventory is confirmed in 1666 (by Jean, his only surviving sibling), making it unclear when he died; it could be that Jean, Countess of Tweeddale, was making clear that she was still owed part of his share of the amount given in their father’s will, after the death of all other legitimate siblings. David (d.c.1685) Commissary Depute of Peebles, Collector of the Forest and Commissioner of Excise and the Militia for Selkirkshire in the 1680s. He was probably brother of the Laird of Tushielaw, although it is unclear which one. David (17th C.) son of John of Gorrenberrie. In 1663/4 he served as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for Liddesdale and Canonbie. David (d.c.1683) tenant in Blackhope (although it is unclear which one). His will was recorded in 1683. David (17th/18th C.) shepherd in Castleside in Ashkirk Parish. He married ‘Lizie Loran’, i.e. Elizabeth Lorraine, in 1699 (she was surely related to other Lorraines in Ashkirk at about the same time). Their children included Janet (b.1695). It is possible that the same David married Elizabeth Lorraine in Ashkirk in 1699 and had children: Robert (b.1701); Janet (b.1703); and Margaret (b.1706). David of Merrylaw (17th/18th C.) said to be descended from Sir Robert of Thirlestane. He married Margaret, a younger daughter of Walter Scott of Todrig. They had a son, also David, who was a Captain in the Royal Regiment of Artillery and served in the American Wars in the 1770s. He may also have had a sister, Janet, who married William Borthwick, farmer at Glendinning. David (18th C.) resident at Borthwickshiel in 1763 when his son Robert was baptised in Roberton Parish and in 1764 when his son Thomas was baptised. It is possible that Janet (b.1767), Jean (b.1769) and David (b.1774) were also his children. David (18th C.) resident at Roberton Burnfoot in 1774 when his son David was baptised in Roberton Parish. David (d.c.1792) son of David of Merrylaw and Margaret Scott, from the Todrig branch. He served with the Royal Ar- tillery in America. He was at St. Augustine in 1773, acted as Commissary of Horse in 1780 and received an address from the inhabitants of Kings and Queens Counties on Long Island in 1782. In the following year he was promoted to Major. His name disappears in 1793, but he may be the Maj. David who died in camp at Seringapatam, India. Rev. David (1765/6–1822) licensed by Langholm presbytery in 1797, he was presented to Castleton Parish by Henry, Duke of Buccleuch and ordained there in 1801. He remained minis- ter of Castleton until his death. He is described as ‘devout and liberal in his sentiments, he was faithful and zealous in the discharge of duty, partic- ularly in promoting the religious education of youth, while he was a friend to the poor’. In 1807 he married Elizabeth Scott, who died in 1848, aged 73. They had daughters: Margaret (1809– 23), and Mary (1813–41), who married Robert Stavert, merchant in Manchester. He is buried in Castleton kirkyard. David (18th/19th C.) recorded at Blackhall on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1787 when he had a saddle horse. ‘Heirs of D Scott’ was the record on the 1790 Horse Tax Rolls. He owned 2 farm horses at Blackhall in 1797 and also paid the dog and clock taxes there in 1797. David (18th/19th C.) recorded at Eweleses on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1787–1797, appearing along with Hugo from 1788. It seems likely he is different than (but surely related to) the David who was at Blackhall at about the same time. In 1791 he subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry. David (18th/19th C.) wright in Ha- wick, recorded as owner of a horse in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. His daughter Ann died in 1798.
David (18th/19th C.) farmer at Dewyhaugh (in Teviothead Parish), when he paid the cart tax in 1791. He was also listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. David (1777/8–1851) born in Yarrow, he was shepherd at Flatt in Liddesdale and later at Hoscoteshiel, as well as being tenant in Redfordgreen. He married Jean, daughter of William Scott, ‘the Pether’, and she died at Bellendean in 1866, aged 86. Their children were: William (b.1804), farmer at Garwald Shiel and later Sailfoot, Moffat Water; Thomas (b.1806), who emigrated to America; Isabel (1808–35), who died at Redfordgreen; Helen (1811–87), who married Eskdalemuir shepherd Walter Beattie; George (b.1813), shepherd at Hardlee and Hyndlee; Elizabeth (b.1818/9), who married blacksmith William Pow; Jean; Christina (b.1823/4), who married gamekeeper Thomas Rutherford; and another daughter, who married a farmer in Ettrick. He is buried at Borthwick Waas. David (b.c.1810) stocking-maker in Wilton and Hawick. He was probably the David listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish, but living in Hawick in 1835 and 1840. He was David ‘Senr.’ at Dovemount on the 1841 census, living with David ‘Junr.’ who was apparently just 5 years younger; he could be the warehouseman recorded at Dovemount in 1835 and in Hawick in 1840. He is probably the stockingmaker David whose son Thomas died in Hawick in 1840. David (b.1791/2) born in Langholm, he was farmer at Priesthaugh. He held a Scottish long-jump record. He was in the Chair for the Wisp Club dinner of 1844. He was also a subscriber to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He was probably related to Walter, who is recorded at Priesthaugh near the end of the 18th century or Robert who was recorded there in 1821. In 1851 he was listed as farmer of 45 arable acres and 2505 hill acres, employing 5 labourers. He was still there in the 1861 census, farming 3300 acres and employing 5 men. He married Christian Aitchison and their children included: Margaret (b.1824); Walter H. (b.1823/4); Charles William Douglas (b.1827); and David C. (b.1830/1). He could be the David, son of Hugh and Margaret Amos, born in Langholm in 1791. David Dundas (b.1800/1) of Briery Yards, from Midlothian. He was a historian and friend of David Laing. He translated theological works, including Ranke’s ‘History of the Popes of Rome’. There was a publication of 1856 describing a local disagreement ‘Clerical Despotism and Synod of Justice, or True State of the Case between the Rev. J.A. Wallace, Free Church, Hawick, and David D. Scott, Esq., Briery-yards, &c.’ He chaired the centenary Burns night at the Commercial Inn in 1859. In 1861 he was living at Briery Yards, along with the official owner, Thomas Turnbull, for whom he was the main trustee. He was still recorded there in 1868. His wife was Mary C., and their children included Katherine J. and Elizabeth. David (1834–1902) son of Thomas and Janet Notman, and grandson of wright James Scott. He was apprenticed to blacksmith John Manuel in Lilliesleaf. He was living near Liverpool when he got married in 1859 and later lived at Ladylaw Place, then at Pathfoot and Damside. In 1861 he was recorded as a blacksmith living at Whitrope Tunnel along with other labourers; his wife and first child were in Ladylaw Place with his in-laws, wool-spinner Walter and Mary Riddell. In 1859 he married Janet, daughter of Walter Riddell. Their children were: Mary (1859–87), who married her cousin John Robson; Thomas (1861–1946); Janet Notman (b.1864), who died young; Janet (again, b.1866); and Jean (b.1869); Walter (b.1871), who also died young; Elizabeth (b.1876); and Ann Robson (1879–1947). The first 6 children were born in Hawick. In 1874 he emigrated to Ottawa, Canada with his family. He became head blacksmith at Gibson Quarry, Beamsville, Ontario. David (19th C.) mason at Bonchester Bridge. He was Parish Registrar in Hobkirk. He married Helen, daughter of Peter Bruce, who was born at Swinnie. David (19th C.) mason in Hawick. He was Cornet in 1865. In September of that year he had the added distinction of leading the procession up to the Town’s new water supply on the Allan. David (1942/3– ) born and raised in Hawick, he worked for the Hawick News and then the Cumberland Evening News, before starting at the Scotsman in 1968. He eventually became the Scottish Government editor for the newspaper, and in 1999 was awarded an O.B.E. for contributions to Scottish journalism. He was Common Riding Chief Guest in 1999. David ‘Davy’ (1958/9– ) attended Trinity and the High School, he became a housing director for Barratt’s. Regarded as one of the greatest Burns authorities in the Borders, he has been a highly sought-after speaker at dinners. He is an honorary member of Hawick Burns Club and the 1514 Club. He was Common Riding Chief Guest in 2016. Dickson (b.1804/5) from Melrose, he was a tailor in Newmill, recorded there in 1841, 1851 and 1861. His wife was Margaret, daughter of Thomas Borthwick, farmer at Newmill. Their children included Thomas (who worked as a miller), Alexander (a shepherd) and Jane (who may have married Mr. Bell, farmer at Wattaman, Dumfriesshire). Duncan (13th C.) son and heir of Michael of Balweary, who may have been the ‘wizard’. He consented to his father’s gift to Dunfermline monastery, also confirmed by Alexander II in 1231. He also granted and consented to a further gift of lands in Fife and Perthshire, sometime before 1250. He had 2 sons: Sir Michael, 1st Laird of Blawearie; and Gilbert, who witnessed a charter in 1236. Duncan (13th/14th C.) son of Michael of Balweary. He paid homage to Edward I in 1296, when he is recorded as ‘Duncannus Scotus’. Also in 1296 his wife Mary petitioned King Edward I for support after he was captured at Dunbar; he is there ‘Duncan le Escot’. In 1297/8 there is a record of expenses for his imprisonment in England. In 1310 he was part of an agreement for lands in Perthshire. Duthac (d.c.1491) recorded paying rent in ‘Uvir Argati’ in Doune in the period 1480–90, along with his wife Janet. His widow was still paying rent in 1492 and 1495. He was presumably naed after the Scottish saint. It is unclear how he was connected with other Scotts.

Ebenezer (b.c.1775) tenant at Burnflat in Hawn. He was selected for service in the Militia in 1799, but failed to appear and was later declared unfit for service. In 1841 he was listed as a woollen hand-loom weaver at Burnflat. His wife was Janet and their children included Robert, Gilbert and Agnes. Edmund (17th C.) recorded as servant and ‘officiar’ to Walter Earl of Buccleuch. He was listed in the deceased Earl’s inventory in 1633, when he was owed for his fees. Probably the same Edmund is listed separately as ‘officiar in Tividadall’. Edward (16th C.) recorded in a document in the Glasgow Cathedral chartulary in 1525. He appears to have been a Burgess of Glasgow. Elizabeth (15th C.) received 6 sheep in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2. She is listed among servants of the Laird of Sir William. Elizabeth (16th C.) daughter of William and grand-daughter of the Sir Walter who was murdered in 1552. After her father’s death, her mother remarried to Sir Andrew Murray of Blackbarony, and so she is sometimes referred to as Elizabeth Murray. According to a 1568/9 contract between Scotts and Kerrs (atoning for the murder) she had to marry the grandson of Sir Andrew of Hirsel, when he became 14 years of age. He was John, 2nd son of Sir Walter Kerr of Cessford. In fact she married John Carmichael of Meadowflat. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) daughter of George of Castleton. In 1632, along with her sisters Janet and Margaret, she was served ‘heir portioner’ to her father. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) one of the daughters of Robert of Alton. In 1653 she and her sisters Margaret and Agnes were served heirs to their ‘foir grandsher’ (probably great-grandfather) Robert in half of the East Mains of Hassendean. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) daughter of George, who was brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade. In 1660 she married Charles Lauder from Wind. In 1670, she and her sister Anna were served heirs portioner to their father in the Barony of Maxton and associated lands. This included Borthwick Mains, Abbotrule, Bowseside, Grange, Fodderlee, Over and Nether Bonschest, Mackside, Gatehousecote, Harsthaugh, Langraw, Raperlaw, Firth, Westbarns, Belses, Winnington, Winningtonhall, Parkhead, Horselee, Turn, Acreeknowe, Swinstead, Dobdurn, Kirkwood and Langnewton. Presumably they sold the superiority of these lands shortly afterwards.

Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) resident of Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Elizabeth (17th C.) listed among the poor people living at Dryden in Ashkirk Parish, who were unassessed for the hearth tax in 1694. She is distinct from Bessie, who lived at Headshaw. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) recorded as ‘cottar’ at Town o’ Rule on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) resident of Mabonlaw, recorded among the poor of Wilton Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Elizabeth ‘Bessie’ (17th C.) married James Riddell, who farmed at Wiltonburn. Her husband was renting 1/4 of Wiltonburn from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1690, but she was listed as his widow renting 1/3 in 1694. She may have been closely related to Robert Scott and John Scott, who were also farmers at Wiltonburn in 1694. Elizabeth of Mangerton (17th/18th C.) sister of Francis of Mangerton and hence probably daughter of Sir Francis. Her brother was Chamberlain to the Duchess of Buccleuch for Eskdale. She prepared the accounts for her brother in the year 1696–97, by which time he was presumably deceased (or too ill). She was served heir to her brother in 1700, inheriting the lands of Belford in Morebattle Parish, as well as Thickside, Hartrigge and others in Jedburgh Parish. However, nothing else is known about her. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (18th C.) tenant in Crawhill in Wilton Parish when she paid the window tax in 1748. She is recorded as ‘Mrs. Betty Scott’. It is unclear who her husband was.
or even whether her maiden or married name was Scott. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ nee Rutherford (1729–89) daughter of David Rutherford of Capelhow and Margaret, daughter of Robert Rutherford of Fairnielee. She was a niece of Alison Cockburn, who wrote a version of ‘Flowers of the Forest’. When younger she was attached to a man who drowned on a passage to Ireland, so she remained single for much of her life. However, in 1768 she married Walter of Wauchopie. She was noted as an artist and poet, her collected poems ‘Alonza and Cora’ being published posthumously in 1801. In 1787 Burns visited the house on his Border Tour. She had sent him a verse epistle offering him a ‘marled plaid’ in appreciation of his work, and he replied by composing the ‘Epistle To Mrs. Scott, Gudewife of Wauchopie-House’. His notebook describes how ‘she possessed all the sense, taste, intrepidity of face, and bold critical decision which usually distinguish female authors’. She was apparently a friend of Dr. Blacklock, Allan Ramsay and Allan Cunningham. She died a couple of years after Burns visit, it being said that ‘the activity of her mind has destroyed a strong constitution’. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ nee Dickson (1757–1838) daughter of Archibald of Hassedeanburn and Huntlaw. She was born in Minto Parish. She married Charles, 3rd Laird of Wauchopie and had 6 boys plus 3 girls. She is probably the Mrs. Scott of Wauchopie recorded living on Buccleuch Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Her portrait was painted by Sir John Watson Gordon when he was young. Elmer see Ailmer. Esther (17th C.) daughter of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden, she married Elliot of Fahnash and then George Langlands of that Ilk. Esther (1772/3–1855) listed as ‘independent’ and ‘annuitant’ in the 1841 and 1851 censuses, at about 5 High Street. She lived along with her younger sister Sarah, who also died unmarried in 1855. It seems likely they were daughters of Andrew and Beatrix Turnbull, with siblings Robert (b.1762), Ann (b.1765), Thomas (b.1767), Ann (b.1770) and Martha (b.1775). Their father is probably Bailie Andrew, merchant of Hawick, and the property is probably the ‘A. Scott’ on Wood’s 1824 map. Ewen (15th C.) son of John, he acted as a Ranger for James II, like his father. However, it is unclear to which branch of the family they belonged. From 1440 his name is recorded as ‘Eugeno Scot’ and associated with lands in Arran and Bute. His name last occurs in 1451. Francis (16th/17th C.) described as ‘natural son’ of John Scott, ‘called of Tuschelaw’ (i.e. Tushielaw) in a charter of 1618. His father was son of Sir Walter of Tuschielaw, infamous for killing Walter of Gamescleuch in 1609. Francis of Woll (d.bef. 1643) eldest son of Robert of Woll. He was recorded as Laird in 1627. However, he was succeeded by his brother James by 1643, and so presumably died without heirs of his own. Francis (17th C.) shepherd who was son of Adam in ‘Schaws’ (or Shawes) and grandson of Robert of Gilmanstechel. He is mentioned by Scott of Satchells in his postral. Francis of Synton (d.c.1646) 4th son of Walter ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden. He was brother of Sir William of Harden, Hugh (who started the Scotts of Gala), Walter (in Essenside), Margaret (who married Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs), Esther (who married Elliot of Fahnash and secondly George Langlands of that Ilk), Janet (who married Thomas Scott, later Laird of Whitslade) and Margaret (who married David Pringle of Gala); so he was locally very well connected. He is described as ‘in Howfuird’ and later as ‘of Sinton’. In 1610 he was named along with his father and brothers when Gilbert Elliott of Horsleyhill (later of Stobs) was cautioner for them not to harm Walter Scott in Hawick, called Todshawhill, and his associates. He assisted in managing the Buccleuch estates. In 1624 he married Isobel, sister of Sir Walter Scott of Whitslade. In 1627 he purchased the Synton estate from his distant cousin George (their great-grandfathers had been brothers), thus starting a new line of the Scotts of Synton, which would become the Corse Scotts. In 1633 he was appointed one of the ‘Tutors Testamentary’ to oversee the Earl of Buccleuch’s will. He signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. In 1641 he purchased most of the lands of North Synton from the Veitch family, thus enlarging the estate. In 1643 he was on the Commission of Supply for Selkirkshire and in 1643, 1644 and 1646 he was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire. He was recorded in 1643 as owner of the lands of Easter Essenside (valued at £200), the west side of North Synton (£208), the east side of North Synton (£338) and Birkwood (£200). His children were: William, who succeeded; Margaret, who married William Scott of Tushielaw; Francis (b.1633); Walter; Elspeth; Isobel (or Isabel); Agnes; Helen; Christian; and Grzel. Note that these generations are somewhat uncertain, although it seems he was succeeded by his son William, and then his grandson John. Some of his daughters were named in 1665 when their mother made a disposition for the monies owed to her through her marriage contract. In 1662 his son Francis was appointed as guardian for John (later of Synton), son of his son William of Synton. Francis of Castleside (d.bef. 1669) probably grandson of George ‘of Castleside’ (and hence great-grandson of ‘Auld Wat o Harden’). Castleside was inherited by the 3 daughters of George of Castleside, namely Janet, Margaret and Bessie in 1632, and he must have inherited it (or bought it from) them sometime before 1636. He bore the Earl of Buccleuch’s gauntlets at his funeral procession at Hawick in 1634. In 1638 he was in ‘Casthillsyde’ when he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick. In 1639 he complained to Ashkirk Session that his mother-in-law Margaret Scott of Castleside had called him a ‘thief and traitour’, after apparently he ‘maliciously and unreverently rackt and ruggit her from her said seat’ in the church; presumably an argument over the family seat in the kirk, and a son who did not get along with his mother-in-law! It is possible she was the daughter of George of Castleside from whom he inherited the lands. In 1641 he had a ‘letter or inhibition’ against Gavin Cessford of Westhouses for fraud against him, the case heard in Melrose. He is also mentioned in another Melrose case of 1642. He may be the man recorded as ‘Castleside for Newtowne’ (presumably Newton farm) who paid the land tax in Hassendean Parish for £156 in 1663; he also paid tax on £160 in Ashkirk Parish for Castleside. He is on a list of landowners in Hassendean Parish in 1666. His widow Isobel (presumably Scott) was ‘liferentrix’ of Westhouses and Gattonside in a document of 1669. Francis (1626–1651) 2nd Earl of Buccleuch, son of Walter, the 1st Earl. He succeeded when still a minor and so had some of his male relatives as ‘tutors’. Specifically, in 1634 he was served heir to his father in the lands and Barony of Branxholme, Buccleuch, Eckford, Lanton, Whitchester, Lempitlaw, Rankiburn, Elrig and Kirkurd (united into the Barony of Branxholme), the Barony of Hailes (which included Alemoor), as well as lands in Ettrick and Yarrow, Greenwood and the Lyne, Teindside, Harwood, Slaidhills, Carlinpool, Porterslands in Grahamslaw, the Monk’s Tour in Hassendean, the lands of the Lordship of Melrose, the Baronies of Wilton, Chamberlain Newton and Town Yetholm, the Lordship of Liddesdale, including the Castle of Hermitage, the advowson of the Kirk of Hawick and other lands in Haddington, Edinburgh, Berwick, Selkirk, Dumfries and Lanark, combined into the Barony of Hailes. In 1636 he was a student at St. Andrews, then at St. Leonard’s College until 1642. His wardship and marriage rights were granted to the Earl of Stirling, although his widow gave these up in 1642 for a large payment. He was present at the Parliament of 1641 when only 14 years old. He purchased the Lordship of Dalkeith from the Earl of Morton in 1642. Also in 1642 he was named to a commission that was charged to apprehend and try a large number of Borders men accused of being ‘notorious criminals, theeves and ressetters of thift’. In 1643 he loaned 9000 merks to the Collector General of Scotland. In a county valuation of 1643 he was the landowner with the highest yearly value in Hawick Parish (about 2/3 of the total, amounting to £6311 3s 4d) and also almost half the total in Wilton Parish, as well as more than half of Castleton Parish, a third of Cavers Parish and about a quarter of Hassendean Parish. He was one of the men appointed as Colonels of Foot for Roxburgh and Selkirk in 1643 (when only 17) and was also on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1644. New colours were made for his regiment in 1644, and this could be the ‘Bellenden Banner’. In 1644 he complained about the number of men he was being asked to supply to the army. As part of the Covenanter army his regiment took part in the storming of Newcastle in 1644 and he was also at Marston Moor. In 1645 he was appointed Jus- dicier over a large fraction of Roxburghshire, including the Lordships of Liddesdale, the Debateable Land etc., Ewesdale, Ashkirk, Hassendean, Cavers and Hawick, with the power to appoint courts. He received a charter of the Lordship of Liddesdale in 1647. In 1646, 1648 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. He was a heritor of Wilton Church as well as presumably of Hawick. In 1647 was made Sheriff Principal of Selkirkshire. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and An- nandale. He was also at the 1649 Parliament that repealed the acts of the ‘Engagement’. In 1650 he resigned his baronies of Branxholme, Hassendean and others in favour of himself and his heirs, including provision for inheritance through any female heir, whose husband would have to take the surname Scott. Also in 1650 he was one of the commissioners appointed to welcome Charles II to Scotland, although his castles at Newark and Dalkeith were possessed by Cromwell. He went further north for safety, but died at Dalkeith ‘after a short illness’ (which is not specified), before reaching his 25th birthday. He was one of the last Scottish noblemen to adhere to the Royalist cause, even when it was clearly hopeless. He was buried in Dalkeith Church (and not in Hawick, like his forebears). He married Lady Margaret Leslie, 2nd daughter of the 6th Earl of Rothes, who was widow of Alexander, Lord Balgonie. She was nominated as one of the ‘tutors’ for his children, should he die before her, and she later married the Earl of Wemyss (becoming the Countess of Wemyss). Scott of Satchells is not very complimentary when he writes ‘These infants sweet were left to their guardians to keep, Their tutors oft suffered controul, Their mother was so impatient That she must always have her intent’ [CWS].

His children included: Mary (b.1647), who succeeded him; Walter (b.1648), who died in infancy; Margaret (b.1650), who also died young; and Anna (b.1651), who succeeded after her sister’s death. For years after his death there were efforts by his tutors to reduce the huge fine imposed on the family for his support of Charles, claiming that he had served in a Parliamentary Regiment in 1643 and acted against the ‘Engagement’ in 1648 – ‘And he began to talk anon, Of good Earl Francis, dead and gone... ’ [SWS], ‘Earl Francis his father Earl Walter did succeed, Into his earldom but not his head; Yet he wanted neither hand, head, nor heart, But could not act like to his father’s part’ [CWS], ‘He had no Heirs-male, but Daughters left behind, For to enjoy his great Earldom and Land’ [CWS].

Francis (17th C.) schoolmaster of Hassendean, probably father of the last minister of the Parish. Francis of Mangerton (d.c.1640) illegitimate son of Walter, 1st Earl of Buccleuch, with an unknown mother. In 1635 he had a charter of the lands of Mangerton from his nephew Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. His daughter Elizabeth married Sir John Scott, 1st Baronet of Ancrum, and he had another daughter, Marie. He was succeeded by his brother William. He died, was buried in Holland, and in 1648 there was still a dispute over the funeral costs between the Earl of Buccleuch and William of Mangerton (his brother). Francis of Newton (17th C.) listed as being ‘of Newingetoune’ when he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. He was probably son or brother of John and Walter of Chamberlain Newton, who are recorded shortly before, and may have been father of Walter of Newton, who is recorded a little later (and perhaps grandfather of the later Francis of Chamberlain Newton). Francis of Shielwood (b.1638) eldest son of Walter of Shielwood. He is recorded in an inventory of writs of 1648 and in a discharge with Sir William Scott of Harden in 1663. He is said to have died not long after obtaining possession of his estates. He was succeeded by his younger brother, Robert. Francis (17th C.) younger son of Hugh of Gala. He is referred to as ‘brother-german’ of James of Gala in 1664 and 1665. He was given 300 merks Scots annually according to the will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch in 1650, where he is described as ‘our servand’. Francis of Arkleton (17th C.) eldest son of Walter of Arkleton. He was brother of Robert of Harwood. In 1661 he was recorded still responsible for money that his father (as Chamberlain for Eskdale, Ewesdale, Wauchopedale and Eskdalemuir) owed to the Duchess of Buccleuch. He granted a bond to Isobel Ker, wife of George Douglas of Bonjedward in 1663. He sold Arkleton to Walter Elliot in 1669, with the consent of his mother Anna. In 1664 he married Isobel, daughter of William Elliott of Stobs. Francis of Phaup (17th C.) described as ‘of Phaope’ in 1657 in a factor’s extract to Sir William Scott of Harden and another to his brother Capt. John Scott in 1671. He was a Colonel serving in Brussells in 1666. He was probably brother to Adam, who became a gunsmith’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1671, and in which case his father was Robert. He paid tax on land valued at £526 13s 4d in Selkirkshire in 1678. James of Phaup, recorded in 1682, may be his son. Sir Francis of Mangerston (d.1672) eldest son of William. He inherited the lands of Mangerton and others from his father in 1648. This probably included Hartrigge in Jedburgh Parish. He may have been a minor when he succeeded; there is a record of discharge to his curators in 1667. However, he appears to have already been acting as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for Eskdale in at least the period 1661–72. In 1663 he was appointed as a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He was succeeded by his son Francis, who was served as his heir in 1675. The name of his wife is unknown; it was probably his mother (not his wife) who was the Lady Mangerton listed on the Land Tax Rolls of 1663 (but possibly from earlier). Francis of Gilmancleuch (17th C.) son of John. He is also recorded in a deed of 1682. He was served heir to his father in 1686. He became Commissioner of Supply (for Selkirkshire) in 1685 and was succeeded by John, probably his son. Also in 1685 he had a marriage contract with Margaret Bertram, widow of Alexander Russell. The Ettrick Shepherd wrote that he was often in his (Hogg’s) grandfather’s house. Francis (d.c.1688) tenant in ‘Vaills’ when... his will was recorded in one of the counties of Peebles, Roxburgh or Selkirk. It is unclear where this was (perhaps Valesburn or Wells). Francis of Langshaw (d.c.1690) younger son of Patrick of Kirkstyle and Langshaw, and younger brother of Sir John of Ancrum. He witnessed a document for Anna Duchess of Buccleuch in 1662. In 1669 and 1673 he is listed as son of Patrick of Langshaw when he witnessed 3 charters for the commissioners of the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch. Documents relating to the ‘multures’ of Langshaw mention from around 1670 to 1675. He purchased the lands of Broadwoodshiel in 1672. He obtained crown charters of Langshaw (in Melrose Parish) in 1674 and 1690. He paid land tax on Langshaw in 1678. He is listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose in 1682, and is recorded in cases held in Melrose in 1684. He was succeeded by his son, Walter, who was succeeded by another son, Thomas. In 1690 Walter was served heir to his lands of Fahnash, Tanlaw Naze, Calfshaw and Langhaugh in the Parish of Hawick. Thomas was served as his heir to Langshar and other lands in 1695. Francis of Mangerton (d.c.1696) son of Sir Francis. There is a marriage contract of 1672 between him and Christian Kerr, involving the annual rent of Nether Mangerton. He was served heir to his father in 1675. In 1678 he paid the land tax for Calroust in Morebattle Parish and ‘eastrige thickside and his lands in ulstoun’ in Jedburgh Parish. He was also the ‘Laird of Mangerstain’ who paid the land tax on £1280 in Castleton Parish in 1678. In 1684 there is a document relating to a bond with Sir Patrick Scott of Ancrum, nephew of his sister. His wife, ‘Lady Mangerton’ was among the heritors fined in 1684 for refusing to accept Episcopalianism. In 1682 he was listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose (where he is ‘Sir Francis Scott of Manjertoune’). He was probably the Laird of Mangerton appointed a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1695. He served as Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch for Eskdale from 1692–95. In 1692 and 1694 he served as a Commissioner for assessing the rentals for the Duchess of Buccleuch. His sister Elizabeth prepared the accounts for 1696–97, by which time he was deceased. She was served as his heir in 1700, inheriting the lands of Belford in Morebattle Parish, as well as Thickside, Hartrigge and others in Jedburgh Parish. Capt. Francis (17th C.) younger son of Sir Gideon of Highchester, and brother of Walter, Earl of Tarras. In 1690 he was involved in a bizarre court case in which Jean Weymss accused him of injuring her finger so that it had to be amputated. He could be the brother of the Earl of Tarras who is recorded serving in Buchanan’s regiment in Holland in 1688. He was ‘brother to the deceas’d earl of Tarras’ in 1695 when he contributed £100 to the Darien Company. In 1697 he leased the farm of Todshawhill from the Scotts of Buccleuch. Francis (17th C.) rented the farm of Whithope from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1690, 1692 and 1694. Gideon of Fahnash served as his cautioner in 1692 and 1694, suggesting a family connection; it is possible he was even Gideon’s brother, Francis of Greenhill. Francis (17th C.) listed as tenant at Dean Mill on the Langlands estate in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may have been related to William, who was a cottar there. Francis (17th C.) listed ‘eist the water’ in Hawick in the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He is listed separately from the minister of the same name. Francis (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He seems likely to be the weaver listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. Francis (17th C.) resident of Wester Groundistone according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. It is unclear how he may have been related to other Scotts associated with Groundistone, e.g. George in Easter Groundistone. Rev. Francis (d.bef. 1716) probably son of schoolmaster Francis. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1659, was presented by John Turnbull, Laird of Minto to Minto Parish in 1664 and was minister there until 1678. He was then translated to Hassendean, where he was the last incumbent. He was a member of the Presbytery of Jedburgh in at least 1666. He was deprived in 1689 for refusing to read the ‘Proclamation of the Estates’, i.e. refusing to give up Episcopacy, and continuing to pray for James VII after his abdication. An ‘instrument’ was brought against him by Robert Scott, younger of Hassendean and John Turnbull of Knowe, following his removal by the Privy Council. After being deprived he moved to Hawick, where he continued to preach to Episcopalians, along with Thomas Somerville, ousted minister of Cavers. This was probably on a secretive and informal basis until 1712, when the Act of Toleration was passed, and an Episcopalian meeting house was opened at the Playlaw (or Kirkwynl). He may also have assisted Rev. John Langlands and Rev. John Somerville of Hawick. He is probably the ‘Mr Francis Scott’ listed ‘eist the water’ in Hawick on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He married Elspeth...
Buckham (or Buchan) and their children were: James; Francis, who became a merchant in Hawick; Margaret; and Isobel. He died in Hawick and in 1716 his widow finally returned the church paraphernalia to Roberton, including bible, pulpit cloth, pewter vessels and session books. It is recorded that part of his tombstone still existed in 1879. Francis (17th C.) recorded in 1685 as uncle to the Laird of Tushielaw (probably Walter, and hence brother of William). He was cautions, along with his wife, Margaret Elliot, the Laird of Tushielaw’s mother, for the amounts collected by David Scott, the Laird’s brother. He may be the same Francis, who along with David, were referred to as brother’s of the deceased Laird of Tushielaw in 1676, when they were in a court case in Melrose. Francis (b.1633) younger son of Francis of Synton and brother of William of Synton. In 1662 he was appointed as guardian for his nephew John (later of Synton), son of his brother William. Francis of Gorrenberry (d.1689) son of John of Gorrenberry and grandson of Walter, 1st Earl of Buccleuch. He was Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch for Morton and Canonbie in 1660–61 and for Liddesdale and Canonbie in 1665–70. In 1663 he was appointed a Justice of the Peace and in 1685 was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1670 he was served heir to his father in the lands of Adderstone and Adderstoneshiel. In 1678 he paid the land tax on £1600 in Castleton Parish (presumably for Gorrenberry) and £900 in Kirkton Parish (this was probably for Adderstoneshiel and Adderstonedee). He was mentioned when his son Andrew became a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1692. The ‘Lady Garinben’ fined in 1684 for refusing to yield to Episcopalianism was probably his wife. He married Anna (or Penelope), youngest daughter of Sir John Wauchope of Niddrie. His daughter Anna married Archibald Douglas of Cavers, while his son Charles witnessed the wedding of the Earl of Tarras. He was succeeded by his eldest son John. He may be the Scott of Gorrenberry whose daughter Marion married Sir James Don, 2nd Baronet. Francis of Chamberlain Newton (17th C.) probably son or grandson of the earlier Francis of Newton. In 1690 he was one of the main instigators in the crowd trying to prevent the removal of Hassendean Kirk’s roof. He is probably the Laird whose estate is described as ‘Neutons Lands’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hassendean Parish; he paid tax on 7 hearths for ‘His hous at Meitchels’ (presumably Midshiels). He is probably the Francis ‘of Newtoun’ who was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1696 and 1704. Francis (17th C.) listed among the ‘Cottars’ living at Hassendean on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Sir Francis (1645–1712) 1st Baronet of Thirlestane, son of Patrick of Tlawhill. He was created a Baronet of Nova Scotia in 1666 and was served heir to his father in 1667, including lands in Rutherford, Nether Crailling, Smaleholm, Bowerhope, Gamescleuch, Kirkhope and the town of Selkirk. He was further served heir to his father in 1676, in the lands of Fingland, ‘Tamhuthar’, Dumfleding, Davington and Nether Cassock. He was also served heir to his brother Walter in 1667. He was surely the Francis, son of Patrick of Thirlestane, who was Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch for Ettrick Forest 1660–62 (although he would have been very young, or his year of birth is incorrect). It is said that he came to the assistance of his distant cousin Francis of Davington, to protect him from his tutor’s son, John of Rennaldburn (who was trying to encroach upon him during his minority). It is also said that he narrowly escaped being implicated in the Rye House Plot. He paid £1000 for tax on his lands in Dumfriesshire in 1671. He paid tax on lands (although it is unclear which ones, this surely included Langhaugh) in Hawick Parish valued at £850 in 1678, as well as paying for Rutherford in Maxton Parish. He is probably the Scott of Thirlestane fined £2776 in 1680 for being a supporter of the Covenanters. In 1682 he was listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. In 1678 he was he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire, in 1685 and 1690 for Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire and in 1704 for Selkirkshire. He was Selkirkshire Commissioner to Parliament (i.e. M.P.) 1669–74, 1685–6 and 1693–1702. In 1689 he was appointed Captain of the western regiment of Militia. He contributed £1000 to the Darien Company in 1695. Also in 1695 he was served heir to his brother Walter’s lands in Upper Teviotdale, explicitly Rashiegrain, Howpasley, Easter and Wester Hislop, Langhaugh, Commonbrae and Ramsaycleuch. He is listed on a tax document for the Lordship of Melrose in 1700. In 1704 he was appointed Master of Works. In 1673 he married Henrietta, 6th daughter of William Kerr, 3rd Earl of Lothian; she died in 1741, aged 90. They had 5 sons and 4 daughters, but only 2 survived childhood: Sir William, who succeeded; and Henrietta, who was 4th wife of William, 12th Lord Ross. An unnamed child of his was buried in Greyfriars in Edinburgh in 1686. Another son may have been
John, listed as ‘son to Thirlestane’ when he contributed £100 to the Darien Company in 1695. Francis of Davington (d.1706) only son of Sir John of Thirlestane (who had not succeeded to the Thirlestane estates). He was still a minor when his father died in 1666, his ‘tutor and curator’ being John of Newburgh. It is said that his tutor’s son John of Rennaldburn tried to exert undue influence on his affairs, and so his distant cousin Francis of Thirlestane came to his rescue. His other curators were Sir William of Harden, Sir Gideon of Highchester, Patrick of Thirlestane, Walter of Goldielands, Thomas of Whitslade and Sir James Johnstone of Wester Raw. It was said that he was ‘a man of weak understanding’. He spent some time in Dalkeith tolbooth in 1695 for failing to provide for his step-mother, Margaret Scott and Walter of Burnfoot. In 1679 he married Margaret, daughter of Robert Douglas of Auchintully. Their children were: John of Davington, who succeeded, but died without children; Robert of Davington, who succeeded his brother; William, who had a farm from the Scotts of Buccleuch and whose son William lived at Moffat; Francis, who also had a farm from Scott of Buccleuch; James, whose son was Robert at Binks, who provided a family genealogy in 1792: David; Anne; and Mary, who married Rev. John Liston, minister of Aberdeen. Francis of Colmslie (17th C.) recorded in 1679 in an Edinburgh court case. He was among a party of Melrose men who were returning from Bothwell Bridge when they set upon John Drurie of Grange. He is also mentioned in Regality of Melrose records in 1670 and 1682. He was cautioned for Patrick Scott, writer in Edinburgh (and probably the same as Patrick of Langshaw), for a bond in 1678, suggesting that they were closely related. He is listed separately from Francis of Langshaw on a list of Regality of Melrose heritors in 1682 (showing they are not the same man). Francis of Greenhill (17th C.) younger son of Robert of Harwood. His brothers included Walter of Harwood, Gideon of Falnash and William, apothecary in Hawick. He paid the land tax in Hownan Parish in 1678 (for land valued at over £400, but which lands are not listed). He was fined £800 Scots in 1680, essentially for being a Covenantar supporter. Francis (b.1684) son of Francis, last minister of Hassendean and Elspeth Buckham. He was a merchant in Hawick. Francis (17th/18th C.) brother of William of Horsleyhill. He is recorded becoming a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1696. He is probably the same as the ‘Dr. Scott’, brother of Scott of Horsleyhill, who was one of the guests cited for being at the ‘supernumerary marriage’ of John Hardie and Isobel Aitkin in Hawick in 1706. He may have succeeded his brother and could be the Francis of Horsleyhill who had a charter in 1712 for ‘the lands of Belfoord commonly called Mowtown’ and ‘the four merkland of Weynsland’ (probably Weensland). In a 1710 land valuation of Hawick Parish his lands of Weensland were valued at £264. He was father of Capt. Robert of Horsleyhill. He is probably the Francis of Horsleyhill who was involved with transfer of lands of Belford (formerly called Mowtown) with his father Robert. Francis (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1717 he married Isabel Paterson and their children included: William (b.1718); George (b.1720); James (b.1722); Francis (b.1724); George (b.1726); and Isobel (b.1729). Francis (1687–1769) 4th son of Francis of Davington. He led the legal battle against the Napiers of Thirlestane to recover his family estates, eventually taking the case to the House of Lords, but without success. It was said that he had a farm on good terms from the Scotts of Buccleuch. He had one known child, Agnes (1723–90), who was unmarried. He died at Holm, practically bankrupt by the legal battle he had championed. Francis (1695–1751) 2nd Duke of Buccleuch, son of James, Earl of Dalkeith and grandson of the 1st Duke and Anne Scott, whom he succeeded. He was only the second in his family in 260 years to be of full age at succession. Before succeeding he was known as Lord Scott of Whitchester and then Earl of Dalkeith after the death of his father. In about 1720 he became engaged to Lady Jane Douglas only sister of Archibald, Duke of Douglas, but the match was broken off, and it is said he fought a duel with her father as a result. In 1725 he was made a Knight of the Thistle. He was confirmed in the Baronies of Hassendean, Sheriffdom of Selkirk, etc. in 1731. In 1738 he purchased Over Hassendean from Archibald Douglas of Cavers. The titles of Baron Tindale and Earl of Doncaster (which had belonged to his grandfather) were restored by Parliament in 1743. He was a Scottish Representative Peer in Parliament 1733–41, Grand Master of the Freemasons in 1723/4 and made a Fellow of the Royal Society. In 1745 he called out his tenantry to support the citizens of Edinburgh against Charles Edward Stuart. When hereditary jurisdictions were abolished in 1747, he was compensated for losing the Regality of Hawick. He paid tax on 42 windows in Hawick Parish in 1748, perhaps for Drumlanrig’s Tower. Although his intended marriage with Lady Jane Douglas (only sister of Archibald, Duke of Douglas) did not take place, in 1720 he married another Lady Jane Douglas, eldest daughter of James, Duke of Queensberry; this is where the Queensberry title and lands came to the Scotts of Buccleuch. Their children were: Francis, Earl of Dalkeith (1721–50), who predeceased his father; Jane (1723–79), who died aged 56; Anne (1724–37), who died aged 12 and who has a monument to her memory at Hillingden, Middlesex; Mary (1725–43), who died aged 17; and Charles of Bowhill (1727–47), who died aged 20; He was succeeded by his grandson Henry. His 1st wife died of smallpox in 1729. In 1744 he secondly married Alice (who had been his mistress), daughter of Joseph Powell, but they had no children; she died in 1765, aged 63. However, he also had 6 children by Mrs. Sarah Atkinson, who he allowed for in his will, and possibly 4 children with Elizabeth Jenkins. Another son was Maj. Walter of Datchet, Buckinghamshire. Lady Louisa Stuart called him ‘a man of mean understanding and meaner habits’. He was buried in Eton Chapel next to his brother Henry. Francis (1705–73) see Francis Napier. Capt. Francis James of Horsleyhill and Belford (18th C.) son of Col. Robert and Agnes Douglas. He was incorrectly named ‘John’ in Keith Scott’s genealogy. He was great-grandson of Robert of Horsleyhill who gained Weensland, Shaws and Burnflatt in 1653. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1780 as ‘late of Horsleyhill, now of Belford’. He was still on the roll in 1788 and described as ‘An intimate of the Duke of Buccleuch’. Also in 1788 he was recorded as owner of the Belford in Morebattle Parish, valued at £1290 6s 8d (and the teinds of £233 6s 8d). He had a daughter who married Thomas Davidson, surgeon in Kelso. He was succeeded by his son Henry. He may be the Lt.-Col. Francis James who was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. Francis of Gorrenberry (18th C.) son of John. His sister Anne married Walter Scott of Harden. In 1729 he gave a bond for his sister to John, 2nd son of Walter of Harden. In 1750 he sold Adderstonelee and Adderstonehieshl to Capt. John Douglas, brother of Archibald, Laird of Cavers (who may have been a cousin of some sort); his factor for the transaction was George Grant. He appears to have been living at Nether Tofts when his children Charles (b.1716) and Archibald (b.1719) were baptised in Kirkton Parish. Little else is known about him, and he appears to have been the last Scott of Gorrenberry. He may be the Laird of Gorrenberry who was said to have been with the Jacobite army in 1745, meeting the Hobkirk Schoolmaster Sam Oliver (who had acted as guide) and leading him safely through the camp and past the Prince. Francis (1710–39) 2nd Earl of Deloraine, eldest son of Maj.-Gen. Henry, 1st Earl and Ann Duncombe. He was thus grandson of the 1st Duke of Buccleuch. When he was born he took the title Viscount Hermitage, which had been created for his father. On the death of his father in 1730 he became 2nd Earl of Deloraine, as well as 2nd Lord Goldielands. He held the rank of Cornet of Horse. He married Mary, daughter of Matthew Lister and secondly married Mary, daughter of Gervase Scrope. He died without issue at Bath and his titles passed to his younger brother Henry. Francis (1721–50) Earl of Dalkeith, eldest son of Francis, 2nd Duke of Buccleuch. He also had the title of Lord Scott of Whitchester. He was great-grandson of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch, and in 1731 she infefted him in several lands, including Nether Newhall (i.e. Burnfoot), Easter and Wester Hassendean, Gilmanscleugh, etc., as well as the lordship of Musselburgh. He was a lawyer, educated at Oxford University, and became M.P. for Boroughbridge, Yorkshire. He was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1748. In 1742 he married Caroline Campbell (1718–94), eldest daughter and co-heiress of John, Duke of Argyll and Greenwich. His wife was god-daughter of Queen Caroline, wife of George II. She survived him and remarried to Charles Townshend, Chancellor of the Exchequer, later becoming Baroness Greenwich. Through this marriage the Scotts of Buccleuch inherited the lands of Granton. His eldest son John, Lord of Whitchester (1745–49) died of smallpox, aged 4. His 2nd son Henry (1746–1812) became the 3rd Duke. His only surviving daughter, Lady Frances (1750–1817), married Archibald Douglas, 1st Lord of Douglas in 1783. Other children were: Campbell (1747–66), who died unmarried, aged 19; James (1748–58), died aged 9; and Caroline (1743–53), who died aged 10. He himself died of smallpox aged 29, predeceasing his father by about a year, and was buried at Dalkeith. Francis of Alton (18th C.) recorded as ‘of Aldtoun’ in a ‘search of incumbrances’ undertaken by John Hodge in 1742. It appears that he sold the lands of Alton (just north of Hawick) to John Horsburgh of that Ilk about 1742, with the agreement of his eldest lawful son

Patrick. He was thus the last of the Scotts of Alton. It is unclear how he was related to the earlier Scotts of Alton. He is probably the Francis who is ‘younger of Altoun’ in a memorandum of 1708 (among the papers of the Douglases of Cavers). Francis (18th C.) resident at Howcleuch in 1743 when his son James was baptised in Robertson Parish in 1743. The following children born in Robertson may also be his: Margaret (b.1745); Walter (b.1748); Christian (b.1749); Margaret (b.1752); and Francis (b.1757). Francis (18th C.) wigmaker and barber of 9 High Street. There is an existing sasine of 1764 in which he borrowed money from John and William Thomline, with his property as collateral. He later sold 9 High Street to Walter Wilson. His son Walter was made an Honorary Burgess. He could be the ‘Mr Francis Scott, Hawick’ on the subscription list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). In 1766 he (along with Robert of the Cross Keys) witnessed a baptism for James Rae and Agnes Scott (who was probably related to him). Francis (18th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1756 he married Janet Thomson and their son Francis was born in 1760. He may be the tobacconist Francis who witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Robert Oliver in 1757. Francis of Beechwood (1732–1803) 2nd surviving son of Walter of Harden, brother to the next Laird, who was also Walter. He was recorded in 1735 when his father had to define his heirs. He lived for a while in Bombay, where he was a merchant. For a few years, perhaps 1770–80, he held the superiority of the lands of Borthwickshiels. It is recorded in 1780 that he was struck off the voter’s roll in Roxburghshire, since he had lost his lands in the county. He was listed among the voters of Selkirkshire in 1788, but it was written that it was ‘believed will not take the oath’. In 1776 he married Mary (or perhaps Elizabeth), daughter of Sir Alexander Don of Newton. Their children were: Walter; Alexander, a minister, who succeeded; Francis, who died young; Charles, who died in Jamaica in 1805; Hugh, a Major in the East India Company; John, Lieut. in the East India Company; William, in the Royal Navy; and Mary, who married Rear Admiral Thomas Follott Baugh. Francis (b.c.1775) resident of Deanburnhaugh. In 1841 he was recorded as an agricultural labourer and parish pauper. He was living with Mary (probably his wife) and Francis (probably a grandson). Maj. Francis (1773–1813) 2nd son of John of Whitehaugh. He served with the 59th Regiment of Foot at the capture of the Cape of Good Hope and also in India. He also served in Spain and received a gold medal after the Battle of Vittoria in 1813, command- ing the regiment there. He was killed leading the volunteers at San Sebastian. Francis (18th/19th C.) farmer at Eldinhope in the Yarrow valley. He lived to the age of 94. It is said that he still used a pony to ride the 10 miles to church when he was aged 90, the combined total of the ages of horse and rider being 120. He paid the horse tax (along with Walter) at Eldinhope in 1786 and the dog tax in 1797. It may have been his daughter Christian who married Alexander Scott, farmer in Ladhope. He was probably cousin of Charles and Walter Scott, farmers at Catslack-burn, who also lived into their 90s. He is buried in the churchyard at St. Mary’s Loch. Francis Napier (1799–1884) twin brother of Alexander Pringle, he was born at Yair, and was the first of the twins born. His father was contractor George and his mother was Eleanor Inglis, who worked as a lady’s maid at Yair House; she attended Lady Napier ‘during confinement’ (perhaps also at Yair) and then was asked to stay on for her own childbirth. He was named after Lord Napier, who owned Wilton Lodge at the time of his birth, and hence must have had a con- nexion with the family (perhaps as employer). He was a framework knitter in Hawick, living at Wilton Kirkstyle and then on Wilton Place and Havelock Street. He was listed as head of household at Wilton Kirkstyle in 1840 and 1841 and is probably the warehouseman recorded at Gis- nos in 1835. In 1824 he married Janet (1802–52), daughter of John Oliver and Anne Neil; she was born in Ashkirk Parish and was sister of Isabella Oliver, wife of John White, who lived at Midshiels. Their children were: George (b.1826) and John (b.1827), who both died in infancy; John (again, b.1829), painter in Selkirk, who mar- ried Mary Wilson; Alexander (b.1830), who mar- ried Mary Ekron, and was a gasworks manager in Galashiels; Anne (1833–44); Lilias (b.1835), who married Adam Murray and went to Canada; George (again, b.1837), who married Elizabeth Miller Pringle; Isabella (1839–42); Francis (1841– 1933), who married Hannah Bodimeade and Es- ther Hunter; Jessie (b.1844), who married joiner William Aimers; and Margaret (b.1846), who married grocer Andrew Blance. He died at 5 Sliitrig Bank. A memorial in old Wilton Ceme- tery for him and his twin brother Alexander was erected by their sons. Francis (b.1863/4) origi- nally from Canonbie, he was a clog and last-maker in Hawick. He was recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6
Francis napier (1841–1933) was born in Wilton Parish, son of Francis and Janet Oliver. He was a painter-decorator in Hawick, with his business premises and house at 26 High Street. In 1888 he discovered a sundial (a square block with 2 faces, dated 1683) built into one of the grates of 26 High Street. In Selkirk in 1867 he married Hannah Matilda (1844–68), born in Hendon, daughter of William Bodimeade, a blacksmith in Harrow in England and Hannah Odell; she was a teacher, and it is unclear how the couple met. They had a son, Francis William (b.1868), who was a Bailie; the mother died within a few months of this birth. In 1873 in Wilton he secondly married Esther, daughter of cabinetmaker John Hunter. Their children were: John (b.1874), who died young; Lilias, who also died young; Ella; Janet Oliver (b.1881); Jessie; Mary, who married Arthur Dunn, a civil servant in Edinburgh; and John Hunter, a dentist in Edinburgh.

Francis Hepburne-Scott. Francis ‘Frank’ (1811–1873) known as ‘Uncle Braid’, he was fourth singer of ‘Teribus’ at the Common Riding. He was known as a fisherman and also wrote a small amount of verse. Francis Napier (1841–1933) was born in Wilton Parish, son of Francis and Janet Oliver. He was a painter-decorator in Hawick, with his business premises and house at 26 High Street. In 1888 he discovered a sundial (a square block with 2 faces, dated 1683) built into one of the grates of 26 High Street. In Selkirk in 1867 he married Hannah Matilda (1844–68), born in Hendon, daughter of William Bodimeade, a blacksmith in Harrow in England and Hannah Odell; she was a teacher, and it is unclear how the couple met. They had a son, Francis William (b.1868), who was a Bailie; the mother died within a few months of this birth. In 1873 in Wilton he secondly married Esther, daughter of cabinetmaker John Hunter. Their children were: John (b.1874), who died young; Lilias, who also died young; Ella; Janet Oliver (b.1881); Jessie; Mary, who married Arthur Dunn, a civil servant in Edinburgh; and John Hunter, a dentist in Edinburgh.

Bailie Francis William ‘Frank’ (1868–1947) painter-decorator at 26 High Street and Hawick Magistrate. He was son of Francis Napier, who was also a painter and decorator, and Hannah Bodimeade. He was one of the early members of the Callants’ Club, acting as President during the War years 1915–19. In 1906 he was the first to suggest that Hawick should have its own art gallery, so it was called the ‘Scott Gallery’ when finally built in 1975. He also instigated the erection of the Caa Knowe cairn, which was unveiled in 1911. In 1916 he proposed that the Callants’ Club lay a wreath at the Horse on 12th July to conmemorate the fallen in Gal-lipoli. He was an active member of the Hawick Free Kirk (St. George’s) serving as Session Clerk 1899–1915. He travelled to the U.S.A. and is said to have brought back what was Hawick’s first record player. He married Isabella (1874–1915), daughter of Richard Edmondson. Their children were: Francis Napier (‘Napier’, b.1900); Elizabeth Kennedy (‘Lizzie’, b.1903); and Richard Edmondson (‘Dick’, b.1910). After his first wife died, he secondly married Mary Ann Rowe. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. Francis George ‘F.G.’ (1880–1958) 2nd son of George, a mill parts supplier in Bourtree Place and Janet, daughter of manufacturer Robert Greenwood. He was born in Hawick at 6 Oliver Crescent, and shared a birthday with Burns. It is said that his father insisted on a traditional religious upbringing, but his mother introduced him to Border ballads. He was educated at the High School and Teviot Grove Academy. He had piano lessons until he was 15, when his father thought it would interfere with his schoolwork. He was Dux Medalist in 1897, apparently arguing that a mistake had been made when he came second in the final exams. He went to Edinburgh University in 1897 to study English and train as a teacher, but abandoned his degree in the second year. He did teaching practice at Trinity in Hawick and taught briefly at Drumlanrig and then in Falkirk, before moving to Langholm (1903–12, where one of his pupils was Hugh MacDiarmid). He later taught at schools in Dunoon and Glasgow. He also studied for a music degree from Durham University. He studied composition under Roger-Ducasses at the Paris Conservatoire. In 1925 he became lecturer in music at Jordanhill, and remained there until he retired in 1946. He also published some poetry (e.g. ‘On Border Hills’ in 1904). He became a close friend of the poet Hugh MacDiarmid and the painter William Johnstone (his cousin), with whom he tried to initiate a ‘Scottish Renaissance’; he set many of MacDiarmid’s poems to music, while Johnstone painted several portraits of him. He was musically influenced by Schönberg and Bartok, but tried to develop a Scottish style. He wrote more than 300 songs, many published in his 6 volume ‘Scottish Lyrics Set to Music’. He most often used traditional Scots words, with the musical style being contemporary folk art-music (about which opinions differ). He also wrote ‘Renaissance’ (a concert overture), ‘The Seven Deadly Sins’ (for full orchestra), ‘Cumha nan Laoch’ (‘Lament for Heroes’ for string orchestra) and ‘The Ballad of Kynd Kit-tock’ (for baritone and orchestra). His main local contribution is ‘Oor Bonnie Border Toon’, which he wrote while still in his teens. As a teacher he is said to have had a formidable presence, with a booming voice and piercing blue eyes. He is also said to have had a mischievous sense of humour.
Although he was friendly with several other poets and artists, he seldom mixed with other musicians. He was awarded a doctorate by Glasgow University in 1957. He married Burgess Gray (a trained mezzo-soprano) of Fraserburgh and had 4 children: Francine; Lillias; George; and Malcolm. He died at his home in Glasgow and is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery. In 1980 a centenary plaque was unveiled at his birthplace, 6 Oliver Crescent, by the Saltire Society and the Archaeological Society. A biography ‘Francis George Scott and the Scottish Renaissance’ was written by Maurice Lindsay in 1980. Francis Townsend ‘Frank’ (1940–2001) son of Dick and grandson of Bailie Francis. He was elected a Town Councillor at age 26, was later a Regional Councillor, and became Hawick’s first Honorary Provost 1978–82. He was appointed a Bailie and served as Justice of the Peace for 26 years, being Chairman of the Justices Committee. Mainstay of the Common Riding Committee for more than 30 years, he served as Secretary 1988–2001. He was also President of the Verteish Hill Sports Committee for 19 years and on the Committee for 40 years. In addition he was President of the Callants’ Club and of the Archaeological Society, as well as Transactions editor for many years. He updated the ‘Companion to Hawick’ (1998) and wrote a history of the Conservative Club. In his work as architectural technician he had a hand in several Hawick renovation projects. He is buried in the Wellogate and Frank Scott Court is named after him. A memorial seat on the Miller’s Knowes has an entrance pillar from East Bank Church as its base. Francis William (1962– ) son of Frank T. and Janet Hunter. A keen football player for Hawick United, Hawick Legion and Hawick Royal Albert, he scored over 100 goals for both the Legion and the Albert. He was Common Riding Secretary 2008–16, and has also served as President of the 1514 Club and the Mosstroopers’ Club. Gamel (13th C.) recorded in 1229, in an assize held at Newcastle. He was ‘Gamel Scot’ in relation to a tenement in ‘Chipches’ (presumably Chipchase). Geoffrey (13th C.) recorded as ‘Galfridium Scot’ when he was involved in a court case listed in the 1269 assize roll of Northumberland. He may be the same man separately listed as ‘Galfridium de Scotia’ in a case at Newcastle. ‘Galfrido et Willelmo’ mercenaries of Scotland were also listed in 1279. George of Synton (14th/15th C.) eldest son of Walter, 1st Laird of Synton (although some sources suggest he was 4th son of the first Walter of Buccleuch). He was either the 1st or 2nd of the Scotts of Synton (accounts differ here), and probably married a daughter of Sir John Turnbull of Falshope (probably Phaup near the head of the Ettrick in Selkirkshire). He had a son Walter, as well as possibly William. This branch eventually produced the lines of Harden, etc. (but again accounts are contradictory). He may also sometimes be confused with his grandson (or great-grandson) George, one of the last of the first set of Scotts of Synton. George (15th/16th C.) owner of the lands of Lairs (adjacent to Lairhope, near the head of the Teviot). In 1501 there was an agreement between him and William, son of James Douglas of Drumlanrig, where he would be allowed to continue to hold these lands in ‘alba firma’ if he could produce proof that he had this arrangement with James Douglas. It is unclear whether he is the same as one of the other contemporary Georges (perhaps George of Borthaugh). He was probably related to Robert, who was listed as tenant in Lairs in 1501. George of Borthaugh and Whames (d.bef. 1528) son of Robert. In 1502 he served as surety for Adam in Highchesters (when he was ‘de quhomys’). In 1505/6 he had a notorial instrument involving his claim on his father Robert’s lands of Muirhouse in the Barony of Crichton (somewhere near the modern Pathhead); this document mentions that his grandfather was Stephen of Muirhouse. In 1508/9 he was ‘of the Quhomys’ when he was given ‘warrandice’ of his grandfather Stephen’s lands of Dryden, Commonside and Over Harwood. In 1510/1 he wrote (with his own hand) a letter of acquittance, stating that John Muir of Rowallan had paid him the £40 and 14 merks owed on the warrandice for Commonside, Harwood and Dryden. In 1517 he was on the panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting the barony of Branxholme from his father. He married his cousin, whose name is not recorded. With her he had his eldest son, John, and then remarried and had another son, Walter. He declared on his deathbed (in the presence of the Laird of Buccleuch, 2 notaries and other witnesses) that he never had dispensation to marry his cousin and so his 2nd son should succeed to his lands, which included Borthaugh, Commonside, Dryden and ‘the Wallis in Drynsdaile’ (probably Dryfesdale). He may be the George who was on the 1509 panel for Adam Hepburn innheriting the lands of Alemothoir. In 1528 a set of arbitrators (all Scotts) met to decide on inheritance and found in favour of his elder son. In 1526 the list of Border men given remission for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran included John in Borthaugh, with the brothers Walter, Philip and George listed afterwards, so perhaps all sons of his. George of Synton (15th/16th C.) son of Walter and a Johnstone, he was probably 6th Laird of Synton. He married a daughter of Scott of Roberton, said to have been Thomas (although it is unclear there was such a man, so perhaps another Scott of Roberton is meant). This was meant to be around the 1460s. He was succeeded by his son Walter, and was said to have had another son, who was William of Harden (but this seems to be confusion over generations with similar names). Note that the connections between Synton and Harden genealogy around this time are quite uncertain. George (15th/16th C.) described as ‘in Goldielands’ in 1510 when he was surety (along with William in Hawick and David in Whitehaugh, with William in Fenwick and John of Haining also mentioned) for Thomas Scott, brother of Philip of ‘Aidshaw’ (i.e. Headshaw). It is unclear to which branch of the family he belonged, since the first Laird of Goldielands whose genealogy we know was Scott of Buccleuch’s son Walter, who was given that title about 30 years later; however, he seems likely to have been closely related to the Scotts of Headshaw, Whitehaugh, Fenwick and Haining. George (15th/16th C.) recorded as being ‘in Fawlishope’ (probably ‘Phaup’ in the Ettrick valley) in 1526 on a list of many Borders men who had remission for helping the Homes attack the Earl of Arran. William was also listed as being in the same place, and so probably related. George ‘of the Bog’ (d.1530) said to have been a resident of Liddesdale, he gaine a reputation as a reiver. He was said to be particularly cruel, burning the houses of those he raided, sometimes with their wives and children inside. He was captured by Johnstone of that Ilk and presented for trial, along with Hector and their accomplices, by Robert, Lord Maxwell. It was decided to give him the same punishment he had inflicted on his victims, and so he was burned at the stake ‘quhilk deid was neuer sense in this reame of befor, nor will be heirefter’. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. George (16th C.) described as ‘in Sanct Mynynnis Well’ (and separately as ‘Mynnis’) when part of an inquest held in Jedburgh in 1533. This may be St. Mungo’s Well in Peebles, although all the other men on the panel appear to be local (e.g. Scotts of Ashkirk and Headshaw), and so either another location is suggested or he was a relative of local Scotts. Another possibility is ‘St. Michael's Walls’, in which case he would be the same man as George, son of John of Roberton and Walls. George (16th C.) suggested by Capt. Scott of Satchells to have been a grandson of the Walter who was immediate ancestor of the Scotts of Harden. He was called ‘How-coat’, suggesting he owned or farmed Hosocate. He was then said to have succeeded his father as Laird of Synton, to have married a daughter of John Edmonston (or ‘Adimston’) of Ednam and to have been succeeded by his son Walter. Part of his life corresponds to that of the later George of Synton, however, these generations seem to be hopelessly confused. George (16th C.) son of John of Roberton and Walls. In 1526 he is listed (along with Stephen) as son of John in the 1526 pardon given to a large number of Borderers for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. He is also recorded in the Register of the Privy Seal for 1527 receiving remission for his crimes. George (16th C.) abbreviator of the King’s household expenses. He attested to payments in the Exchequer Rolls for at least the years 1537–1542. His name is given as ‘domino [Sir] Geo[rr]o Scott’, and he may have been a cleric rather than a knight. It is unclear which branch of the Scotts he came from. George (16th C.) listed as ‘Sir George’ in 1538 when the benefice of Hassendean Kirk was given to him, after John Duncan was ‘escheated for barratry’. In 1545 John Anderson asked for 18 months prorogation in order to oust him. George (16th C.) resident of Wiltonburn recorded in 1549, among a list of the tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme who complained about the Kers ravaging their farms. He may have been related to Philip, who was the tenant at Wiltonburn. George of Blindhaugh (16th C.) listed in 1550 among 10 Scotts and the chief of the Elliots, who signed a bond with the Queen, to keep order and hand over criminals. He may be related to later Scotts of Blindhaugh. George (16th C.) witness to a sasine of 1558 (one of Hawick’s earliest surviving) relating to land in the West-end sold by Adam Cessford to James Scott, alias ‘Bailzie’. He may be the same as one of the other Georges. George (d.1578) brother of Robert (who was a Burgess of Hawick) and James (a cordiner). He was killed by a group of Scotts, the circumstances being unknown, but the full group including Robert of Allanhaugh, William in Allanhaugh (‘now in Hawik’) Simon in Over Southfield, Wat there, ‘Syme’ there and ‘Watt’s Jock’. In 1581 his brothers (on behalf of their mother and all their kin) wrote a ‘letter of slains’ in Hawick, describing how they had received satisfaction for the crime and forgave the assailants. Without the preservation of the record in the Buccleuch archives we would know nothing about this family; as it is, it is difficult to connect them with any other Scotts. George of Synton (16th C.) probably second son of John, grandson of Walter (10th Laird) of Synton and brother of Walter (11th); Scott of Satchells suggests he was son of Walter, but that seems less likely, given the timing. His name was inscribed on 2 panels on the former house at Synton, which together read ‘GEORGE SCOT IN SYNTOWN AND MARG/RET EDMESTOVN HIS SPOVS IN THE) / ZER OF GOD 1570 THE HEAR T(O WALTER SCOT).’ It therefore seems that he was tenant in Synton in 1570, but recognised as the heir to Walter (perhaps the omission of the word ‘son’ is significant); this may be the year of his marriage. He was mentioned in 1581 as one of the Scotts called before the Privy Council in Edinburgh to try to stop the feud with the Elliots. He was also ordered to confer with the council in 1583/4 regarding the quieting of the Borders. He was in ward in Edinburgh Castle in 1581, along with Robert of Haining, when his cautioners were Mungo and Alexander, Burgesses of Edinburgh; this caution was renewed later in 1581, with John Edmondson of Ryeslaw as surety. His servant John Scott of the Palace was charged with resetting stolen horses, and as a result of not appearing to answer for his servant, he was denounced rebel. In 1585 he witnessed a bond (signed at Selkirk and Hawick) settling a feud between the Scotts of Branxholme and the Scotts of Allanhaugh. In 1586 he is recorded as a ‘curator’ of the young Walter of Buccleuch. In 1590 he may have been the same Synton for whom William Dalma-hoy was surety that he would not harm the vassals of the Earl of Angus and David Edmeston of Wownet was also separately surety for him that he would help the Warden. He signed the clan bond in 1589, when he was ‘George of Sinton’. He must also have been Laird on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ in about 1590. He married Margaret, daughter of John Edmonston of Ednam. Their children included: Walter, who succeeded; David; John of Yorkston, who purchased Headshaw and Langhope; George, who became a saddler’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1610; James of Kirkhouses, who helped rescue Kinmont Willie; and Agnes. George of Todrig (d bef. 1580) probably the 3rd and youngest son of William of Harden, who was also Laird of Todrig (consistent with the description of Scott of Satchells). He succeeded to Harden in 1561 on the death of his father (probably at Todrig). He thus became the first Scott who was just ‘of Todrick’. He was succeeded by Walter, probably his son. Walter’s brothers Robert and William are recorded in 1620, and so were presumably also his sons. Note that Scott of Rodono regards him as a fiction of Scott of Satchells, and suggests instead that Walter of Todrig was descended from William ‘in the Mott’. George (16th/17th C.) listed as being ‘in Woll’ in 1608 when he was part of a large group of men accused of attacking Selkirk Mill. It is unclear how he might have been related to the Scotts of Woll. George of Synton (16th/17th C.) son of Walter, who died in 1608, and Isobel Douglas. It appears that he was Laird of Synton while his father was still alive. He was the 14th and last of the family to be designated ‘of Synton’. In 1610 he was served heir to the lands of Boonraw, these passing to his descendants for the next 110 years. He was also served heir to his father’s lands of Outersiderig. He married Mary Gladstains of Dod and Whitlaw (possibly daughter of George of Dod) and their children were: Walter, who died unmarried; George of Boonraw; and Richard, minister of Kirkbean and Ashkirk. Note that generations seem confused in some accounts. In 1627 he sold the Synton estate to Francis, son of Walter Scott of Harden (a distant cousin, their great-grandfathers having been brothers). This was probably forced on him to clear debts. His widow was probably the ‘Mar. Gladstains’ who was liferenter of an unnamed farm (most likely Boonraw) and Stouslie in Hassendean Parish in 1643 and also the ‘Liferenter of Boonraw’ recorded on the Land Tax Rolls of 1663. George of Drinkstone (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1616 as ‘callit of Deringstoun’. This was in the trial of Jock Scott, ‘the Suckler’, who, having gotten off the charge of slaughtering Douglas of Drumlanrig’s sheep at Howpasley, but was charged with stealing sheep from his lands of ‘Castle-hill’ in 1613 (among other thefts). It is unclear whether this is the place of that name near Ashkirk or the one near Branxholme. He was surely related to the half century earlier John ‘in Drinkstone’ and the slightly earlier John ‘of Drinkstone’. George ‘the Souter’ and ‘Marion’s Geordie’ (d.1616) cordiner in Hawick. He assisted in the 1615 plan of Lady Howpasley and Jean Scott of Satchells to slaughter the sheep of Sir James Douglas, newly possessed of Howpasley. In the trial he was painted

as the main instigator and was accused of threatening Jock 'the Suckler' at sword-point to carry through with the crime. He said he would accept his guilt if Jock repeated the accusations to his face, which Jock duly did. He then referred to his dog 'Hyde-the-bastard', saying 'Sa lang as I and my Bastard brother levis (meaning be his dog), Howpaset sall nocht plenisch' (i.e. be stocked). He had also been questioned by Douglas in Hawick about his whereabouts that night, and pointed a cocked pistol at Douglas, which was taken from him before he could shoot. Additionally he had failed to show up at the previous Justice Court at Jedburgh. He was later hung for these crimes (although the records suggest that several of the jury were favourable to Douglas of Drumlanrig). His mother was presumably Marion and it is possible he was brother of 'Marion's Hob'. George (16th/17th C.) son of Walter of Todshawhaugh. He was part of a group of Scotts charging Langlands and other Scotts to find caution in 1610, with the other side petitioning for the penalties to be reduced. He is also mentioned in the same year when the Scotts of Harden, Whitslade and Satchells were also bound not to harm his father, him and their associates. There was a similar bond in 1610 for Andrew Riddell of that Ilk and his son. George of Castleside (d.c.1630) probably a younger son of 'Auld Wat' of Harden. He is recorded in 1607 when he complained that James Turnbull of Hassendeanbank and Thomas Ker of Cavers have not paid what they owe him; he is there 'in Castlesyd'. In 1618 he served as a cautioner for Walter, son of John in Newark. He is mentioned several other times in the period 1592–1629. In 1632 his daughters Janet, Margaret and Bessie were served as his heirs portioners. However, Francis was shortly afterwards Laird of Castleside, and so may also have been related. George (16th/17th C.) son of Walter of Woll and Catherine Ormiston, his 2nd wife. In 1617 his elder half-brother Robert of Woll was appointed as tutor for him and his sister Katherine (making it clear he was still a minor at that point). In 1636 he was served heir to his mother, Catherine Ormiston. He is recorded in 1643 when he was made a Burgess of Selkirk. He is then referred to as 'callit of the Woll', suggesting he was representative of the family that had formerly lived there. George (d.bef. 1660) brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade. He is recorded in 1622–25 in a court action against Robert Scott, younger of Satchells, over the lands of Dodbank in Ettrick. He is also mentioned in 1660 as George 'callit of Whitslaid' when his daughter Anna married Charles, eldest son of William Lauder of Windpark. He somehow inherited the Barony of Maxton (perhaps through marriage), which had previously been held by the Kers. In 1670 his daughters Bessie and Anna were served heirs portioners to this Barony and all the associated lands, which included a large part of Abbotsrule. George (17th C.) possessor of the lands of Dinlees on Hermitage Water in 1632. George (17th C.) tenant in Bowknoe. He was mentioned in a session record in Ashkirk in 1635. George (17th C.) recorded in the Council Records of 1651 when he was fined £10 for keeping false weights, specifically 'Flemes wecht for French wecht'. George (d.c.1690) of Boonraw. Son of George of Synton and Boonraw. He was probably the 'G. Scott of boneraw' who signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638. He was Bailie-depute of Hawick (i.e. appointed by the Baron) and resided in the Tower, as recorded in 1668. In that year it is written that, at the request of the Bailies of Hawick, he set free 3 people called 'Bridges' who had been imprisoned within the Tower. He is also listed as 'of Bon dra' in a list of landowners of Hassendean Parish in 1666. In 1678 he was one of the Commissioners for Roxburghshire for raising money to support the King. He paid the land tax for Boonraw and Stouslie in Hassendean Parish in 1678, valued at £291; he was probably also the man recorded as 'Boonraw for Overtoune', paying the land tax in Oxnam Parish in 1678. In 1692 the lands of Stouslie 'being formerly possest by the deceast George Scott of Boonraw be ane 19 yeares tack' were possessed by his heirs and representatives. He married a daughter of Douglas of Gervald (who was hence grand-daughter of Sir William Douglas of Cavers). How many children he had is unclear, with Haining citing local tradition that he had 3 sons, George, Archibald and Richard, while Keith Scott records just 1 son, Archibald, and a daughter, Ann. His children may therefore have included: George (said to have been born in 1672, but that seems rather late), who probably died young; Archibald (d.1720, supposedly at an advanced age), who succeeded, but died unmarried, thus ending this branch of the Scotts; Ann, who is also stated to have died unmarried; and Richard, said to have married a daughter of Charles Ogilvie and claimed to be the ancestor of Charlie of the Crescent, who was grandfather of Sir James A.H. Murray. With the murky end of this family, the line of the original Scotts of Synton was also lost. His will is recorded in 1690.
(or perhaps 1698). George (17th C.) 3rd son of Robert of Woll. He was a surgeon in Edinburgh. He was served heir to his father in 1670, although his elder brother James had already sold the lands of Woll. George (17th C.) probably 2nd son of Thomas of Bonchester. There was a bond from his father to him for 550 merks Scots. He had a son, Alexander, who was tenant at Roughiegh Mill, and was progenitor of the Scotts of Falla. He may be the George whose name is said to appear on a list of those found guilty of ‘nonconformity’ in 1684. George (d.c.1686) probably tenant in Borthaugh. He is recorded being ‘in Borthoch’ when his will was listed in the Commissariat of Peebles in 1686. He was probably related to Walter ‘in Burtloch’, whose will is recorded in 1692, as well as to other Scotts associated with Borthaugh around that time, e.g. James. George (17th C.) described as ‘in Dockeyleuch’ (i.e. Doecleuch), he was a local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s according to James Wilson. He paid £140 for the land tax in Cavers Parish in 1643; the same lands were owned by the Duke of Buccleuch by 1678. George (17th C.) blacksmith in the Hawick area. He is recorded in 1687 when he was fined, along with a group of other men, for clandestinely removing their sheep from the Town’s flock, without paying the ‘Town Herd’. George (17th C.) Hawick resident who was fined £20 Scots in 1688 ‘for deserting the town when the Militia was listing’. George (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. George (17th C.) listed as a resident of Whitriggs on the 1694 Hearth Tax roll. George (17th C.) tenant at Fodderlee according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. George (17th C.) resident at Harden in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. George (17th C.) listed as wright among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was also a wright on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. George (17th C.) merchant listed as ‘called greina’ among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was also listed with the word ‘Grinna’ after his name on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. It is unclear if ‘Grinna’ is meant to indicate a place or a nickname, however, John is also listed in 1694 with the same name. George (17th C.) resident of Easter Groundistone according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. It is unclear how he may have been related to other Scotts associated with Groundistone, e.g. Francis in Wester Groundistone. In 1709 George Lorraine was recorded as his servant. George (17th C.) described as ‘pedder’ in 1694 when his wife Marion ‘Robisone’ was fined for making ‘bakes’ on the Common. George (17th C.) resident at Hasdendean Mains according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. George (17th C.) resident at Swinnie according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. George (17th/18th C.) litster’ (i.e. dyer) in Hawick. In 1704 he witnessed the baptism of a son of ‘Walter Scott herd’, who may be the same man as ‘Crooked Wat’. George (17th/18th C.) removed as a councillor in 1706 for several charges, including calling the Town Clerk ‘ane knave, cheat, and rascal’. It is unclear if this is related to the disputes over the Common Riding that year, or a separate matter. He is probably the same as one of the other Georges. George (17th/18th C.) recorded as an elder of Wilton Parish in 1711. George ‘Wyndheid’ (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. In 1712 he married Elspeth Scott, who was widow of William Scott. To distinguish him from other men of the same name, he is recorded as ‘called George Wyndhead’. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Jean Redford in 1714 and their children included James (b.1729) and Walter (b.1733). George (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1725 he married Mary Swan. Their children included David (b.1731), George (b.1735), Samuel and James (b.1742). They were baptised in Selkirk and Ettrick Parishes. George (18th C.) merchant who was appointed as one of the Commissioners for building the Teviot Bridge at Hawick in 1738. He was also one of the men (all Councillors presumably) appointed to oversee the building of a new Parish School in 1739. He witnessed a baptism in 1743 for weaver Robert Douglas and his wife Nicholas Scott (who may have been related to him). He also witnessed 2 baptisms in 1745, one for merchant Robert, who may have been related. He may be the George who is recorded in 1752 giving in money ‘for stones of Millport’, perhaps connected with repairs to Teviot Brig. Probably the same merchant George witnessed a baptism in 1757 for miller Adam (who may have been related). George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Helen Fletcher in 1735 and their children included: George (b.1736); Robert (b.1738); Margaret (b.1742); Janet (b.1747); and John (b.1749). George (18th C.) joiner at Deanburnhaugh, grandfather of the George who wrote about Deanburnhaugh, as well as Adam who was joiner in Hawick. He married a daughter. of William Scott ‘the Pether’. George (1724–1815) born in Bedrule Parish, son of Alexander, miller in Rulewater and then at Roughieugh Mill. He was tenant farmer at Falla. He married Elizabeth Borthwick and their children were: Alexander (b.1756), who died young; John, who married his cousin; Euphemia: Thomas (1761–1849); Alexander (b.1759) of Falla; and Elizabeth. George (1734/5–1818) wright in Newcastleton. He was recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He married Margaret Armstrong, who died in 1806, aged 67. Their children included: Jean (1777/8–83), who died at Burnmouth; and 2 who died in infancy. Other children probably included: Archibald (1771/2–1858), also a joiner in Newcastleton, and marked on the same gravestone; and Thomas (1774/5–1846) buried in the adjacent plot. They are buried in Etton Cemetery. George (18th/19th C.) recorded on Whitchesters on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he was taxed for 4 farm horses. George (1773–1861) born in Wilton Prish, son of William and Isabel Kedzie. He was a joiner at Deansburnhaugh. In 1800, in Robertson Parish, he married Mary Davidson, who died in 1836, aged 64. Their children probably included: Mary (b.1801); William (b.1803); Isobel (b.1805); and Robert (b.1808). He was living alone on the 1841 and 1851 censuses and in 1861 was a retired joiner, living with the family of his son William. He may have been related to the earlier joiner of the same name. He and his wife are buried at Borthwick Waas. George (1779–1805) from Singlie in the Ettrick valley, son of William, who was tenant farmer there, and brother of Robert, who was at Todshawhaugh. He was a school-mate of Mungo Park. He trained as a draughtsman and became a friend of Sir Walter Scott. He was artist on the expedition of Mungo Park back to Africa in 1805. George (18th/19th C.) married a daughter of George Turnbull, from whom he acquired the farm of Calaburn. He had a son Thomas when he was living at Hawick Shiel. He later lived at Kirkton. He had another son, Robert (b.1800), who was a vet at Kirkton and then Cauldmill. George (18th/19th C.) contractor in Wilton. He married Lillas Inglis in Robertson Parish in 1789, probably when they were both quite young. In 1799 his wife (recorded on the baptism record as ‘Eleanor’) had twins at Yair House, where she was working as a lady’s maid. The twins were named Alexander Pringle (after the owner of Yair) and Francis Napier (after Lord Napier, who at the time owned Wilton Lodge, and for whom his wife had previously worked). The family were buried in the old Wilton Cemetery and he was listed as ‘Contractor Wilton’ on the headstone (although precisely what kind of contractor is unclear). It is possible that he was the George, son of Robert in ‘Broadlieburnfoot’, baptised in Robertson in 1771. George (18th C.) resident of Hobkirk Parish. In the subscription list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784) he is listed as ‘George Scott, Sclentiehall’. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. George (d.1834) master of Minto School. He was master at Yarrow school for 2 years, in the early 1780s, taking over from Alexander Wilson, but then moving to Minto. He was certainly master at Minto by 1788 and remained until the 1820s. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Jane Dalgleish (b.1761) in Minto in 1786. Their children included: James (b.1788), clerk of works for architect William Burns in Edinburgh; Jean (1789–1859), who married and moved to Edinburgh; Simon (1792–1871), a clerk; George (1794–1857); Margaret (1797–1867), died unmarried; Walter Dalgleish (1800–1852), advertising agent; and Betty (b.1807). He wrote a will in 1826. George (d.bef. 1816) wright and cabinetmaker in Hawick. He married Janet Dryden, who died in 1816. Their children included: Walter (b.1774); John (b.1776); Walter (again, b.1777); Helen (b.1784); and Jane (b.1787). The witnesses in 1776 were John Dryden (presumably related to his wife) and Thomas Huntly. George (1777–1853) Border minor poet, who wrote ‘Heath Flowers’. He was born at Dingleton, and educated at Melrose and Galashiels, then Edinburgh University. At age 22 he became parish schoolmaster at Livingstone and 6 years later became schoolmaster at Lilliesleaf, starting in 1805. He is recorded as master of Lilliesleaf School on Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1841 he was living in Lilliesleaf with his wife Isabella and children Thomas (mason) and Isabella. He retired from teaching in 1850 and in 1851 is recorded as retired schoolmaster living at the schoolhouse in Lilliesleaf. It is said that many of his former pupils rose to great heights in their respective fields. He was patronised by Sir John Riddell of Riddell and was also a correspondent with Sir Walter Scott. He published a small volume of his poetry, ‘Heath Flowers’; or, Mountain Melodies’ in 1820. He also wrote a statistical account of Roxburghshire, which was never published. George (18th/19th C.) tenant farmer at Hawthorne. He was recorded there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned

7 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. In 1803 he contributed to the subscription for the defence of the country (against the French). George (18th/19th C.) was a gunmaker in Hawick. His wife Margaret Turnbull died in 1808 and his daughter Isabel and son George died in the same year (although it is possible that one of the names George refers to was the George who married the earlier George). George (18th/19th C.) is also recorded here as a ‘Fundholder’ and living on Kirkside. He may be related to the earlier master of Minto School. George (1792–1850s) son of John and Helen Scott, from Selkirk Parish. He was born at Newark, where his father worked on the farm, tenanted by Robert Scott (probably not directly related). He was at Synton Parkhead and then at Synton Mill. His wife was Jean, from Yarrow. Their son John (b.1832) was born in Ashkirk and worked as a ploughman, then on the railway. They also had a daughter, Margaret. George (18th/19th C.) was a farm steward to Henry Elliot at Gatehousecote. His son James became a steward at Hallrule. He died at Spittal-on-Rule. George (b.1804/5) gunmaker and ironmonger on the Sandbed, probably son of gunmaker George. The shop was at No. 11. His wife was Eliza and they had sons Frank C. and James L. George (19th C.) from Hawick, he was runner-up in the 624 yards race in the 1830 St. Ronan’s Games, and winner in 1831. It is said that in 1831 ‘Scott for ever!’ was the general cry. He also won the long race in 1833 and 1834. George (b.1808) from Roberton Parish, son of William and Isobel Glendinning. He was listed as a flesher in Hawick, among the heads of households of Wilton Kirk in 1840 and 1841; William was listed alongside him and so may have been related. He was a flesher living at about 4 Silver Street in 1841 and 1851 and 9 Kirkwynd in 1861. His wife was Jessie and their children included Janet, William, Isabel, James, George, Andrew, Janet (again) and Mary. George (b.1809/10) ‘Fundholder’ and living on Kirkside. He may be related to the earlier master of Minto School. George (19th C.) farm steward to Henry Elliot at Gatehousecote. His son James became a steward at Hallrule. He died at Spittal-on-Rule. George (b.1808)

The shop was at No. 11. His wife was Eliza and they had sons Frank C. and James L. George (19th C.) gunmaker on the Sandbed. He was a Hawick gunsmith in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. He is recorded at about No. 11 Sandbed on the 1841 census, along with a younger George, probably his son. George (1794–1857) son of George, schoolmaster at Minto. He was educated at Minto and in Edinburgh. He was Parochial Schoolmaster of Cavers from 1814. He was teacher in Denholm in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. In the 1830s he is listed as master of Cavers School and land surveyor in Denholm at the same time. He is responsible for a plan of Denholm village in 1835. He also served as Session Clerk. He is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory as Parochial Schoolmaster in Denholm. He probably lived at the old schoolhouse, which was on Denholm Green. He was the earliest teacher of James ‘Dictionary’ Murray. He married Helen, daughter of John Beattie and Cicily Hall. Their children were: Cecil (b.1822), who died in infancy; Cecil (1823–49); George (b.1825), who worked as an advertising and newspaper agent in Edinburgh; Jeanie (b.1828), who died in infancy; Jeanie (1830–46); Helen (b.1834); and Margaret (b.1836), who died in infancy. By 1861 his wife was recorded as ‘Fundholder’ and living on Kirkside. He may be related to the earlier master of Minto School. George (1792–1850s) son of John and Helen Scott, from Selkirk Parish. He was born at Newark, where his father worked on the farm, tenanted by Robert Scott (probably not directly related). He was at Synton Parkhead and then at Synton Mill. His wife was Jean, from Yarrow. Their son John (b.1832) was born in Ashkirk and worked as a ploughman, then on the railway. They also had a daughter, Margaret. He also won the long race in 1833 and 1834. George (b.1808) from Roberton Parish, son of William and Isobel Glendinning. He was listed as a flesher in Hawick, among the heads of households of Wilton Kirk in 1840 and 1841; William was listed alongside him and so may have been related. He was a flesher living at about 4 Silver Street in 1841 and 1851 and 9 Kirkwynd in 1861. His wife was Jessie and their children included Janet, William, Isabel, James, George, Andrew, Janet (again) and Mary. George (b.1809/10) born in Belses, he was farmer in Lilliesleaf. He was recorded as a flesher in Hawick, among the heads of households of Wilton Kirk in 1840 and 1841; William was listed alongside him and so may have been related. He was a flesher living at about 4 Silver Street in 1841 and 1851 and 9 Kirkwynd in 1861. His wife was Jessie and their children included Janet, William, Isabel, James, George, Andrew, Janet (again) and Mary. George (b.1809/10) born in Belses, he was farmer in Lilliesleaf. He was recorded in 1851 as farmer of 12 acres, living on Main Street. His wife was Agnes from Paislay. Their children included Margaret, George, Isabella, Adaminia G., Mary and John. George (19th C.) son of shepherd David Scott. He was a shepherd at Hardlee and Hyndlee. He married Isabella Hall (‘Tibbie o Wigg’, d.1904). They had 9 children, including James (farmer at Overhall), Nellie, Euphemia, Isabella, Margaret and Jane. He is buried at Borthwick Waas. George (19th C.) tenant at Bedrule Mill in 1857. George (19th C.) shepherd at Wigg in Hobkirk Parish. He was one of the original members of the congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk. George (b.1817/8) born in Yarrow, he was shepherd at Linhope Braehead in 1851. His wife was Helen and their children included Walter (born in Peeblesshire) and William

(born in Cavers Parish). George (1820/1–92) from Yarrow, he was shepherd at Lurgiescleuch in 1851. His wife was Janet and they had a daughter, Robina. George (1820/1–92) grocer on the Howegate, son of George and Margaret Affleck. He was father of Peter, who founded Pesco’s. In 1841 he was a clerk, living with Thomas and Janet (possibly his grandparents) on Walter’s Wynd. In 1851 he was a frame-worker on the Loan. In 1861 he was recorded as ‘Post Messenger’ at 19 Howegate. He married Marion Elizabeth (1829–88), daughter of Peter Adamson. Their children included: George (b.1850), a baker; Peter (1852–1925), manufacturer; Marion (b.1855); Margaret (b.1858); Robert (b.1860), who signed his death certificate; Thomas (b.1862), who was Cornet in 1887; Elizabeth (b.1864); Catherine (b.1867); Susan (b.1869); and Jemima (b.1872). George (1837–1907) son of Francis and Janet Oliver. He was a mill finisher in Hawick. He latterly lived at 16 Bourtree Place. In 1860 he firstly married Elizabeth Miller Pringle, daughter of James Pringle, cousin of the founder of Robert Pringle & Sons, hosiery manufacturers. Their children were: James Pringle (b.1862), also a mill finisher; Beatrice (b.1866); and Janet Oliver (b.1868). In 1871 he secondly married Janet (d.1897), daughter of manufacturer Robert Greenwood. Their children were: Mary Greenwood (b.1873); Robert; Francis George (b.1880), composer; and Margaret Lilias, who married Robert Furness. George (1850–1926) born in Teviothead. He was agent for the Prudential Insurance Company in Hawick. In 1879 he married Isabella Griev Laidlaw (1838–1927), youngest daughter of James Laidlaw, farmer at Hallrule Mill and Hartshaugh Mill. Their children were: George Henry (b.1880), a baker in Carlisle; Isabella Helen (b.1881); Elizabeth (‘Bessie’, b.1883); and Jemima Margaret (b.1885). George (19th C.) builder who lived at Slitrig Bank. George (1850–1940) eldest son of George and Marion Adamson. He was brother of Peter, who established ‘Pesco’s’. He was a baker in Hawick. Apparently he and his brother were note draughts players. In 1872 he married Susan Wright Thorburn. Their children were: Margaret Rae (b.1875); Marion A. (b.1877); Agnes Thorburn (b.1878); John T. (b.1880); Georgina (b.1882); Christina (‘Kate’, b.1884); Peter (b.1886); Isabella Henderson (b.1889); and Elizabeth (b.1891). George (1879–1950) eldest son of Peter, founder of Pesco’s. He was Cornet in 1904. He joined the family firm in 1892 and became a Managing Director in about 1903. He was usually referred to as ‘Mr. George’. He gifted communion cups to St. George’s Kirk in 1921 and lived at Langlee. He married Janet Riddle. George Alexander (1888–1963) born in Hawick, he became a biologist and schoolmaster. He was educated at Hawick High School and Edinburgh University. He was Biology Master in Newton Stewart and later at George Heriot’s, where he became Head of Biology. He was a Fellow of the Educational Institute of Scotland and a member of the Science Masters Association, Scottish Secondary Teachers Association and Scottish Educational Film Association. He was also a Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh. George Douglas (19th/20th C.) served in the K.O.S.B. during WWI, where he was wounded and invalided out. He was Cornet in 1925 and Acting Father in 1958. J.E.D. Murray was his Acting Father (for the 4th time). Gerard (13th C.) recorded in a document in Norwich in 1242, relating to some captured sacks of Scottish wool. Lucas ‘Scot’, mayor of Dunwich, appended his seals instead, and so is probably a relative. He is recorded as ‘le Escot’ in 1263 when he (unsuccessfully) appealed the death of his son Robert at the hands of Nicholas Percival of ‘Dunwych’ in Suffolk. Richard, his nephew, accused someone else (also unsuccessfully) of the same murder in 1272. Probably the same Gerald ‘le Scot’ is recorded in relation to a write of trespass in Northumberland in 1264. Sir Gideon of Highchester (d.1673) 2nd son of Sir William Scott of Harden. He is usually described as being ‘of Highchester’, even although the farm is more often called ‘Highchesters’. In 1643 he was given the lands of Mabonlaw, Highchesters, Todshaw and Borthwickshiels, as well as others; this was part of his marriage contract with Margaret Hamilton. He was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1643, 1644, 1646 (as ‘Jedeon’), 1648 and probably 1649. He is recorded in 1648 when commissioners had to be appointed for valuation of teinds at Harden, Highchesters, Mabonlaw and Todshaw, following a dispute between him and Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. Also in 1648 he was one of the local men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves on the Border. In 1650 he represented Roxburghshire in Parliament. He is listed along with 17 other people on the Harden estate in a list of communicants of the Borthwick valley in 1650. He was the main proponent for having Hassendean Church removed to Roberton in the 1660s (fighting against the supporters of Scott of Buccleuch). He was knighted in 1650. He was appointed Sheriff Principal of Roxburghshire by Charles I, and continued through the 1650s. He served as one of the 'tutors testamentars' for the will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. He was also one of the 'tutors' of the young Mary Scott of Buccleuch in the 1650s and was the executor for her will. In 1654 he acted along with John Hay, Earl of Tweeddale on behalf of the Countess Mary, to attempt to reduce the huge fine imposed by Cromwell; however, he was deeply distrustful of the Earl of Tweeddale, and it appears that both were attempting to exert influence on the other tutors for their own ends, in particular to arrange the marriage of the Countess. In fact his son Walter married Mary in secret (when they were both very young), and there was a continuing power struggle with her mother, the Countess of Wemyss, as well as with the 'Lothian tutors'. In 1660 he borrowed £2400 pounds from the Duchess of Buccleuch. He was knighted in 1660, when he accompanied the young Countess of Buccleuch to London, and his son Walter was made Earl of Tarras at the same time. He also served as tutor for Anne of Buccleuch, and continued to have disputes with the 5 Lothian tutors after the death of Mary. In 1662, following the Restoration, he was fined £4800, presumably for backing the wrong side. He had a licence from the Privy Council, allowing him to eat meat during Lent in the 1660s. He is probably the Gideon who is recorded paying the 1663 land tax for £814 in Wilton and £600 in Hassendean. About 1666 he was appointed one of the 'curators' of Francis of Davington. In 1673 he matriculated his arms. He acquired the lands of Harden from his brother Sir William, who nevertheless continued to be 'of Harden', while he was still designated 'of Highchester'. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir Thomas Hamilton of Preston, and his son Walter (later Earl of Tarras) succeeded to Harden. His other children were: William, who married Jean, daughter of James Kirkaldy of Grange; Agnes, who married Sir John Riddell (younger) of that Ilk; Margaret, who married James Corbet of Tolcross, but appears to have later lived in Hawick; another Agnes, who married Sir James Grant of Dalvey and later William Rutherford of Barnhills; Thomas, who became a merchant's apprentice in Roun in 1671; Gideon: Francis, who became a Captain; and Mary. Gideon is recorded becoming an apothecary's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1676, by which time Sir Gideon was dead. A year later Thomas became a Burgess of Edinburgh (as a merchant) in right of his father. William, Thomas and Gideon all died without heirs before 1710. Gideon (17th/18th C.) brother of Walter of Woll and 5th son of John of Woll and Agnes Scott. He was 'son to John Scott of Wool' in 1695 when he contributed £100 to the Darien Company (along with his brother Walter). He may have been known as 'of Newhouse' (although it is unclear where this was). In 1704 he married Jean (b.1688), daughter of William Elliot of Borthwickbrae and Isobel Scott of Symton; she was sister of William, who was 2nd (but sometimes stated to be 1st) Elliot Laird of Borthwickbrae. It is said that they eloped together, and found themselves unsupported by their families. The Duke of Buccleuch took pity on them and settled them on the farm of Ladhope in Yarrow. Their children were: John (b.1706), who died on the coast of Guinea; William (b.1709), tenant in Kirkhope; Walter (b.1712), who died young; Walter (b.1722), who married three times, to a Mowbray, a Napier and a Williamson; Gideon (b.1724); Thomas (1727–96), who settled in Morpeth and married Ann Douglas, who died at the age of 106; Alexander (b.1729), who succeeded to the tenancy of Ladhope; Isobel, who married James Curle of Moodlaw; Agnes; Betsy; Mary, who married John Mair; Anne Jean, who married James Pott of Dod, farmer at Penchrise; and Christian. One of his descendants (from the Morpeth line) was Keith Stanley Malcolm Scott, who wrote the Scott family history in 1923. Gideon of Outerside (17th/18th C.) see Gideon of Falnash. Gideon of Highchester (1678–1707) eldest son of Walter of Highchester and Harden, Earl of Tarras. He had a charter of Harden in 1694 and also succeeded to the lands of Minto, Roberton, Howcleuch, Borthwickshiel Mains, Alemoor, etc. In 1695/6 he gave the income from Highchesters and other farms to his mother Helen, Countess of Tarras, for supporting his brothers and sisters Helen, Walter, Elizabeth, Agnes, Thomas, Anne and Margaret. In 1695 he had a charter for the Barony of Minto, including the lands of Craignend and Deanfoot, as well as Minto, which was erected into a Barony. However, he sold the lands and Barony of Minto to Sir Gilbert Elliot in 1703. In 1704 he was listed among the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire and for Selkirkshire. In 1705 it is recorded that he owed money to the Duchess of Buccleuch for the rent of Todshawhaugh and Whames. In 1697 he married Anne, daughter of Sir Francis Kinloch of Gilmerton and secondly married Mary Drummond, daughter of John, Earl of Melfort in 1700 (and after his death she remarried Sir James Sharp of Scotscairg). With his second wife he had 2 sons, Walter and John, who both succeeded to Harden, but had no male heirs. They also had a daughter, Mary. A horn powder flask belonging to him still exists at Mertoun House. Gideon of Falnash (1651–c.1727) 5th son of Robert of Harwood and brother of Walter of Harwood. He was probably the ‘Falnash’ who was Bailie-Depute of the Regality of Hawick in 1677 when he ‘confessed the striking of Walter Hardie, and came in the bailies’ will’. He was Chamberlain to the Duchess of Buccleuch in the period 1678–1727, and in later years was referred to as ‘Auld Falnash’. In the period 1678–94 he was Chamberlain for Hawick, Wilton, Cavers and Hassendean parishes, later referred to as Teviotdalehead. He was still ‘of Outerside’ in 1692 when he served as a Commissioner for assessing the rentals for the Duchess of Buccleuch, but was ‘of Falnesh’ when he served the same role in 1694 and 1698. He was Gideon of ‘Uttersyderig’ (i.e. Outerside) in a deed of 1682 and when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1687. It is possible he was the Gideon who was imprisoned in 1683 along with other local lairds for being supporters of Covenanters. He was the same Gideon ‘of Outtersyde’ who obtained the lands of Fenwick, Easter Highchesters half of ‘Ladyurd’ in Kirkurd and Nether Glack in Manor (both in Peeblesshire) from Robert Scott of Glack (who appeared to have no heir, and was probably his brother) in 1689. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690. He may be the Gideon who was listed at Broadhaugh in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. He was still referred to as ‘of Outtersyde’ in the early 1690s, but by at least 1694 was ‘of Falnesh’. In 1694 he acted as cautioner for Francis, who rented the farm of Whithope from the Duchess of Buccleuch: this suggests a family relationship perhaps. He contributed £200 to the Darien Company in 1695. He is probably the Gideon who was served heir to his brother, William, apothecary in Hawick in 1696. In 1699 he gave up the lands of Ladyurd to James Geddes of Kirkurd, although there is a related court case against him by James Geddes’ son James in 1707. In 1700 he was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament. He was also referred to as ‘Regal Bailie’ of Hawick, i.e. the Duchess’s representative in the affairs of the town. In 1700 £100 was given by him (in name of the Duchess) for the poor of Hawick Parish. He farmed at Fenwick, Goldielands and Alton Croft and lived at Broadhaugh. He gave a bond of 5,000 merks to Alexander Orrock in 1703 (presumably on behalf of the Duchess of Buccleuch), which formed the majority of the Orrock Bequest for the Grammar School. In 1704 he was again on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. Also in 1704, the Council resolve to talk with him regarding help with fixing the ‘dam brigs’, the port at Horsleyhill’s Wynd, thatching the Tolbooth, oil for the clock, rope for the bell and shoes for the piper. In 1705 he witnessed a baptism for Bailie Robert Ruecastle. In a Hawick Parish valuation of 1710, he was the second largest landowner, behind the Duchess of Buccleuch. It was described in 1767 (in depositions given regarding the former use of the Common) that he had warned the tenants of the Duchess of Buccleuch from encroaching on Hawick’s Common. He appears to have first married Jeanette, eldest daughter of Walter Elliot of Arkleton, with the marriage contract being in 1677 (when she was probably quite young); at that time he was recorded as brother-german to Walter of Harwood. He secondly married Mary (b.1660), daughter of James Scott of Thirlestone; she probably died in 1729, since payment was received for ringing the funeral bells ‘to the Lede Fenish’s’. His children included: Robert, who succeeded to Falnash; Agnes, who married Robert Scott of Burnhead; Beatrice (or Beatrix, probably the ‘Beatricks’ baptised in Cavers Parish in 1696), who married Walter Scott of Crumhaugh; Christian, who married a Mr. Johnstone (but this could be confusion with Mary); Gideon, who became an apothecary’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1720; and Mary, the youngest child, who married James Johnson of Park Tower in Canonbie Parish in 1727. Isabella Scott (who married William Elliot in Braidlie and Whithaugh in about 1700), said to be a daughter of Scott of Falnash, may have also been his daughter (although perhaps she was too old for this generation). He may also have been son of ‘John Scott younger in Falnash’, whose widow Janet Aitchison remarried in 1711. A Graham of Falnash was recorded as Bailie of the Regality of Hawick in 1721, although this may have been an error. His son Robert is mentioned in connection with the Hawick Parish Session from 1722; so he either started performing the duties of his elderly father before his death, or his death was earlier than 1727. He was already deceased at the end of 1727 when his daughter Mary’s marriage was proclaimed in Hawick. He may be the ‘Bailie Gideon Scott’ who bequeathed £20 to the poor of Hawick Parish when he died.
He is buried in Ewes Kirkyard along with his first wife Jeanette Elliot. Gideon of Falnash (d.1759) eldest son of Robert of Falnash, who he succeeded in 1734. He also served as Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for local estates, referred to as ‘Teviotdalehead’ in the period 1747–57, being replaced by Robert of Orchard. He leased the farm of Wester Groundstone from the Buccleuch Estates in 1744. Dying without issue, he was succeeded by his brother Thomas, who sold off the Falnash estate. The 1761 list of Commissioners for Roxburghshire contains a blank for the forename of Scott of Falnash (presumably because it was unclear who his successor was at that time).

Gideon (18th C.) resident of Roberton Parish. His children included: Mungo (b.1728); Gideon (b.1729); Ann (b.1729); Alexander (b.1733); Ann (again, b.1733); and Jean (b.1733). Gideon (d.bef. 1763) druggist in Hawick, mentioned in a marriage record of 1763, when his daughter Elizabeth married Robert Burnet in Edinburgh. It was probably also his daughter Margaret who married Andrew Porteous there in 1768. He may be the Gideon who was a Bailie in the 1740s and 50s. Gideon (18th C.) tenant farmer at Priesthaugh, probably son of Charles of Crumhaugh and Howpasley (although one account suggests he was ‘in Priesthope’ and son of Walter of Crumhaugh). His daughter Beatrix was the second wife of Walter Scott, 2nd Laird of Wauchope, marrying him in 1789. His descendants were the Scotts in Priesthaugh, which eventually failed in 1789. Walter, farmer at Priesthaugh in 1797 was probably his son. Gideon (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish, possibly at Stobicote. In 1762 he married Mary Scott and their son Gideon was born in 1765. This son was probably Gideon, the Hawick millwright. They may also have had a daughter Elizabeth, who married millwright James. It is possible that he was the Gideon recorded at Penchrise on the 1785 Horse Tax Rolls. Gideon (18th C.) resident of Borthwickbrae Parkhead in the 1770s. His children baptised in Roberton Parish included: William (b.1772); and James (b.1774). Gideon (18th C.) farmer at Kirkhope in Yarrow Parish according to the 1785 Horse Tax Rolls. Gideon (18th/19th C.) tenant at Teindside. In 1799 he was selected by ballot to serve on the local Militia to replace John Pringle, who was declared unfit. However, he failed to appear and was declared a deserter. Gideon (1765–1833) born at Stobicote, possibly son of Gideon and Mary. His family were supposed to be descended from the Scotts of Davington. He received only 4 months of schooling and became a herdsman as a boy, later serving as an apprentice in Hawick with Walter Turnbull, carpenter, wheelwright and agricultural implement maker. Thereafter he started his own business as a millwright, this later becoming Gideon Scott & Sons, based on the Cross Wynd. As well as building machinery, he was hired as a surveyor and was well known locally as an inventor and amateur astronomer. He suggested the suitability of the Teviot by the Little Haugh for water power, and subsequently William Laidlaw built Teviot Crescent Mills there. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was listed as a millwright on the Cross Wynd in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He helped convert many of the Hawick mills to water power, for example his firm supplying the new water wheel for Wilton Mills in 1829. He also fitted out mills in Wigan and at Chillingham. He erected windmills at Adderstoneshil and Penielheugh. In about 1802 he invented an early reaping machine, which was unpopular among the local workers, since it reduced manual labour so much, so after testing it successfully in the dead of night he smashed it up himself. He was also known for launching balloons at local celebratory events, e.g. to mark the end of the Friday Sports of 1826. Entirely self-taught, he was regarded as a prodigy by the townsfolk, and was a great believer in and advocate for education, starting the Trades’ Library in a room of his own house. He was also a leader in the running of the Hawick School of Arts, and gave a lecture there himself, being the first ‘layman’ to do so (in an age when public lectures were formal and intense affairs), illustrating an astronomy talk with an orrery of his own design. He was also an early influence on the career of John Pringle Nichol (later Professor of Astronomy at Glasgow University), who came to Hawick as a school teacher. The pair would walk up to Hilliesland to watch the heavens, or spend the night talking in his astronomical study. For the solar eclipse of 1820 he blocked off a window in his observing room, and set up a screen, so that the many people he invited there could watch without staring directly at the Sun. He also described the aurora borealis seen over Hawick in 1826. Nichol returned to Hawick to watch the 1832 transit of Mercury with him, from a garden in Allars Bank (part of his property there being sold as the site for Allars Kirk in 1811). He was also a close friend of James Veitch of Inchbonny, a fellow self-taught inventor and scientist. He promoted the idea of connecting Hawick to the south by railroad (although his idea involved a route up the Allan Water). A few years before his death there was a great reunion of the families of his 7 sons and 2 daughters, all of them attending the Common Riding festivities that year. There is no known portrait of him, although there are images of his sons Gideon and James (his 5th son), who were also millwrights. Another of his children was Susan, who married James Cranston (and whose daughter Mary married William, son of blacksmith Gavin Pow). His wife may have been Margaret Leithead (b.1770) recorded as an ostler with his siblings Helen, Andrew and Adam, and nephew Walter. He married Elizabeth Ballantyne, and she died in 1878, aged 70. Their children included: Gideon, who farmed Singlie and Hyn-dhope; and Katherine, who married Alexander Gibson. Gideon (b.c.1770) recorded as an ostler at Wilton Damhead in 1841. He was living there with Helen, probably his wife. He was listed at Damhead (with no occupation given) among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1840 and 1841. Gideon (b.c.1778) grocer and spirit dealer in Newcastle, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was at about 28 Langholm Street and living with Agnes, probably his wife. Gideon (18th/19th C.) resident of Liverpool in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. He probably had a direct connection to Hawick and was distinct from the Gideon living in London who also subscribed. Gideon (19th C.), C.E., recorded donating several items to the Museum in 1863. Since he was an engineer and living in London, he may well be the son of millwright Gideon born in 1792. He could be the ‘Gideon Scott, London’ who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He could be the millwright of that name recorded at Roadhead in 1835, among heads of households in Wilton Parish. Gideon (b.1839) probably the only son of Gideon, farmer at Singlie (who seems to have died the year he was born). He gave up Singlie and farmed instead at Hyndhope. In about 1879 he emigrated to New Zealand. He had 4 sons (including James and William) and 2 daughters. Gideon (19th C.) worked as a blacksmith. He married Margaret, daughter of Tom Rutherford, blacksmith at Bonchester. They had 1 son and 4 daughters, including Agnes (b.1881), who was born in Melrose Parish. His wife later lived in Hawick. Gilbert (12th C.) recorded as ‘Gilbertus Scoth’ between about 1165 and 1177, when he was asked to perambulate the lands for a charter between Eschina de Mollé (wife of Walter, the Steward) and the monks of Paisley Abbey. It is unclear if he was related to other Scotts. Gilbert (13th C.) listed as ‘le Escot’ when he was on an assize for the Lovels in Sussex in 1264. Gilbert (13th C.) recorded in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. He was involved in a fight with Richard ‘de Suarland’, and was described as at that time servant in ‘Swarland’. Gilbert (15th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh recorded in a charter of 1498/9. Gilbert (16th C.) recorded in 1545 as ‘indweller of Deip…’ when he and his associates were said to have taken a French ship. Gilbert of Bonnington (d.1675) probably the eldest son of James of Bonnington and his 2nd wife Margaret, daughter of William Elliott of Stobs. He died shortly after succeeding his brother Robert. He is buried at Greyfriars in Edinburgh. He was succeeded his younger brother Charles. Note, this is Bonnington in Lothian (distinct from the earlier Scotts of Bonnington family). He is buried in Greyfriars in Edinburgh. Gilbert (b.1814/5) born in Hawick Parish, he was a joiner at Bonchester Cottages. His wife was Helen and their children included David, Andrew, Christian, Janet B., Helen, Gilbert and John. Gilbert McKenzie (b.1826/7) listed as baker and shopkeeper on Wilton Place in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was on Wilton Kirkstyle as a grocer and baker, employing 3 men. He lived with his siblings Helen, Andrew and Adam, and nephew Walter. Gladstanes (b.1813/4) born in Teviothead Parish, he was a labourer living at Unthank Cottage in Ewesdale in 1841. In 1851 he was a shepherd at Sykefoot in Ewes. It is unclear where his first name came from. He married Isabell Wilson from Langholm and their children included Adam (b.1836), Janet (b.1838), Helen (b.1841), Ann (b.1843), John (b.1845), William (b.1847), Margaret (b.1849), Wilhelmina (or ‘Mina’, b.1850) and James (b.1854). Graham of Falnash (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1721 as Bailie of the Regality of Hawick. This seems likly to be a transcription error for Gideon of Fahnash. The record of 1721 concerns the trial of Walter Dean for stealing a grey mare from John Currie from Northumberland. Grizel see Grizel Borthwick Helen (16th C.) listed among people who were owed money by William Scott, younger of Branhholme, when he died in 1552. She is listed between 2 unnamed ‘nutrici’ (nurses), suggesting this was also her occupation. It is possible she was the same Helen listed among the tenants of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch when he complained against the actions of Walter Ker of Cessford and others in 1549. Helen ‘Nelly’ (18th C.) resident of Hawick. She was on the subscription list for Caw’s Poetical Musum’ in 1784 (one of only 9 women listed). Helen ‘Nelly’ (1789/90–1861) daughter of carrier William and Margaret Gray. She also had a brother William. She was a shopkeeper at Stobs Woodfoot. She died unmarried. Henry (12th/13th C.) witness to 2 grants to Lindores Abbey by Earl David, brother of the Scottish King, in the late 1190s. He also witnessed a ‘quitclaim’ in the Lidores Chartulary in about 1210. Henry (13th C.) recorded on the 1256 assize rolls for Northumberland. He was ‘Henricus Scot’ from ‘Edelingham’. ‘Henricus Scoticus’ is listed in a separate case, and probably a different man. Henry (13th C.) listed on the 1279 assize rolls for Northumberland. He was a burgess of Newcastle on Tyne at that time. His name is written ‘le Scot’ and ‘le Schot’. There are also pledge made by ‘Henrici Scot’ and ‘Henrico le Scot’ in the same year. He could be the ‘Henry le Escot’ who was a pledge for Nicholas in Newcastle in 1266, and the Henry'le Escot' who was among men sued by the Prior of Tynemouth in 1269 (with John and Nicholas also listed). Henry (13th C.) recorded in a document from King Edward I to the Sheriff of Cumberland in 1280. He bought a mare at Carlisle Fair, and stated that ‘John de Wyncheles’ claimed it was his and furtively stole it from him. This case appears to have been used as a precedent to clarify the March laws to deal with such cross-Border incidents. It seems clear that he was from the Scottish side, although how he was related to other Scotts is unknown. Henry (13th C.) man from Edinburgh who paid homage to Edward I in 1296, where he is recorded as ‘Henry le Scot’. He may also be the ‘Henricus Scotus’ who is listed in 1296 among Scotsmen renouncing their treaty with France, in order to reconcile with England. His lands in Edinburgh were also restored to him in that year. He may be the same Henry from Fife who swore fealty to Edward I in 1304. Henry (13th/14th C.) among the men on the inquest at Roxburgh for the inheritance of William de Charteris for the half barony of Wilton in 1303/4. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts, but he is the first known Henry with a local connection. However, it is possible that he is the Burgess of Edinburgh of that name who swore fealty to Edward I in 1296 and had his lands restored. Henry (14th C.) recorded in 1364 in an indenture by Henry Strother, Sheriff of Northumberland, where he is charged to pay money to vintners in Newcastle. It is unclear if he was related to the local Scotts. Henry (15th C.) mentioned in the Exchequer Rolls in 1457 in relation to a loan in Flanders. Henry (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 when he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aiire held in Selkirk. His son John was separately fined for not appearing. He was listed as ‘in conwale riggis’, but it is unclear where this was. Henry (15th C.) recorded in Haddington in 1495 when the customs from his sheep skins. It is unclear to which branch of the Scotts he belonged. Perhaps the same Henry, owner of a ship, was recorded in Ross in 1509 and 1513. Henry (16th C.) witness in 1549 to a charter in which Robert Scott of How-pasley granted Appletreehall to Hector, brother of David Turnbull of Wauchope. It is unclear how he might have been related to other local Scotts. Perhaps the same Henry is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in 1538. Henry (16th C.) recorded as Reader of Hawick Parish in 1574/5, while William Auchmowtie was Minister for Hawick and several neighbouring parishes (i.e. he was the actual minister, obtaining most of the stipend). John Sandilands was Parson about the same time. He was also recorded as Reader in Hawick in 1576, 1578 and 1579, with the position being vacant in 1580. His stipend was £10 8s. 10d. There is no evidence regarding which branch of the family he came from. Henry (17th C.) witness, along with Robert, to the baptism of a son of Thomas Scott in Hawick in 1687. These other Scotts may have been closely related to him. Note that the forename ‘Henry’ was not common among Scotts of the time. Henry (1676–1730) 2nd surviving son of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch. He was made Earl of Deloraine, Viscount Hermitage and Baron Scott of Goldielands in 1706, just in time to vote for the Treaty of Union. He was chosen as one of the Scottish representative peers in Parliament 1713–30, and also served in the army. His mother complained about how much money she had lavished on him and stated in one letter of 1719/20 that ‘he is now acting the old Scots proverb – ‘ens wod an’ ey the war’ [i.e. ‘daft once, daft always’]. He married Anne, daughter of William Duncombe of Battlesden, and she died in 1720. Their children were: Francis, 2nd Earl of Deloraine, who married Mary Lister and Mary Scrope; Henry, 3rd Earl of Deloraine, who married Elizabeth Fenwick; and Anne, who died in infancy. He secondly married Mary, daughter of Charles Howard and their children were: Georgina Caroline (1727–1809), who married James Peachey; and Henrietta (b.1728), who married Nicholas Boyce. He himself died before his mother. Henry (1712–1739) 3rd Earl of Deloraine, 2nd son of Henry, 1st Earl. He held the rank of Captain in the Royal Navy. He married Elizabeth, daughter of John Fenwick. Their children were: Henry (1737–1780), who married Mary, daughter of Charles Howard and he lived for only another half year, dying of consumption. Henry ‘the Hero o Quebec’ (c.1730–c.60) from the old Hawick family called the ‘Milnport Scotts’, he was son of George, a merchant. He became a Burgess in 1752 and married Jean Sanderson, who by all accounts drove him into the army. The local tradition of his story is as follows (related in the 1863 Transactions by William Norman Kennedy, and mentioned briefly by James Wilson in 1850 and again in 1858). He distinguished himself in military service in Canada, being promoted through the ranks and achieving a commission without purchase as a Major. He led a decisive attack on an island rock at Cape Breton in 1758, permitting Louisburg to be taken. His main moment of fame came in 1759 on the Heights of Abram near Quebec City, where he was reportedly first to enter the gate of the city. There he planted the Union Jack on the walls, apparently uncontrollably exclaiming ‘Hawick for ever’. In this seminal moment in Canadian history Gen. Wolfe’s forces were victorious over the French, although both leaders were slain. Wolfe was nicknamed ‘the Hero of Quebec’ throughout Britain, but in Hawick that epithet was reserved for Henry Scott. Afterwards he was once more promoted, but apparently died aboard ship on the way home before he received the promotion, with relatives and townspeople suspecting he was murdered by jealous fellow officers. This Hawick version bears some similarity to the documented life of a Maj. George Scott, although with several important differences, hence it is difficult to separate fact from fancy here (perhaps the Hawick man was at Quebec, but the connection with Louisburg may have come from the story of ‘Major’ Scott in Percy’s ‘Anecdotes of Enterprise’, popular in the early 19th century; Maj. George Scott was already in the army in 1750 and eventually became Lieutenant-Governor of Dominica, dying in a duel in 1767, his will mentioning his wife Abigail and 3 brothers, at least one of whom was in Halifax, and hence he seems unlikely to be the Hawick man). Nevertheless, it is undoubtedly the case that a man from the Mill Port Scotts played some part in the events in Quebec, even if they were not quite as dramatic as recalled later (presumably Wilson and Kennedy obtained their information from people who were only about a generation removed from the historical events). A verse of James Hogg’s ‘Teribus’ commemorated Scott in the early 19th century – ‘Long this boast on truth’s been founded On Quebec’s high rampart sounded – Hawick for ever, and independent!’ [JH]. His wife survived him by about 50 years and lived for a while at the cottage called ‘the Saaverin’ near Stobs, living on a government pension. It is said that he had no children. Henry (1737–1807) 4th Earl of Deloraine, elder son of Henry, 3rd Earl. On the death of his father, when he was only 2 years old, he succeeded to the Earldom of Deloraine, as well as the titles of Viscount Hermitage and Lord Goldie lands. However, he lived for only another half year, dying of consumption. Henry ‘the Hero o Quebec’ (c.1730–c.60) from the old Hawick family called the ‘Milnport Scotts’, he was son of George, a merchant. Henry (1737–1807) 4th Earl of Deloraine, elder son of Henry, 3rd Earl. On the death of his father, when he was only 2 years old, he succeeded to the Earldom of Deloraine, as well as the titles of Viscount Hermitage and Lord Goldie lands. In 1763 he married Frances, daughter of Thomas Heath, but they separated before 1780. He died in London without issue and his titles became extinct. Henry (1741–1817) 2nd son of Robert, farmer at Singlie, and grandson of William in Milsington. He farmed at Over Deloraine in the Ettrick valley from 1770. He paid the horse taxes there in the period 1785–97 and the dog taxes in 1797. He married a daughter of Anderson of Rashiegrain, with whom he had a daughter Alison. He secondly married Agnes, daughter of John Sibbald. Their children were: John, also tenant at Over Deloraine; Henry, farmer at Over Kirkhope; James (1792–1864); William, who became a doctor with the East India Company; Margaret, who married Dr. Thomas Anderson of Selkirk in 1808; and Eliza, who married Rev. W.B. Shaw, minister of Roberton and later Ewes. Eliza and Margaret were said to have been the prototypes for the characters of ‘Minna’ and ‘Brenda’ in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘The Pirate’, and Eliza was also celebrated as ‘The Bonnie Lass o’ Deloraine’ in the Ettrick Shepherd’s poem (note that Keith Scott mixes the 2 daughter’s husbands). Henry (1746–1812) 3rd Duke of Buccleuch, son of Francis Scott, Earl of Dalkeith, and grandson of the 2nd Duke. He succeeded as a child, was educated at Eton, and when young spent nearly 3 years travelling in Europe with Dr. Adam Smith. His ‘curator’ during his minority was Charles Townshend, his step-father. He gained the Crumhaugh estates in about 1760, as well as many other local lands (including Harwood and Teindside) about the same time. He settled in Dalkeith, and spent much of his time in Scotland. It is said that he would sometimes visit his tenants in disguise. He made his first visit to Hawick in 1764, when he was welcomed by the Bailies. In 1767 (while he was still a minor) his agents started proceedings against the Town of Hawick, claiming rights of pasturage on the Common; when the final decision was made in 1777 he gained 330 Scots acres of what had been Hawick Common. Additionally in about 1769 he (or his Commissioners) brought a case against some inhabitants of Hawick for not paying multures on ‘his Grace’s mill of Hawick’. He was taxed for having a either 1 or 2 gamekeepers at Bowhill in the period 1778–90 and was taxed for having 4 dogs at Bowhill and 15 in Langholm in 1797. He was responsible for making Sir Walter Scott Sheriff in Selkirkshire and was the first President of the Royal Society of Edinburgh in 1783. He published a paper called ‘Abstract of a Register of the Weather kept at Branxholme, for ten years, ending December 31, 1783’. On the outbreak of war with France in 1778 he raised a regiment of fencibles, mainly from his own estates. In 1785 he paid for half the costs to have the main streets of Hawick properly paved and gave £100 for the new Town Hall in 1786. He is also credited with support for the Scots Dyke to Haremoss Turnpike. In 1785 he paid the land tax for lands in Selkirk Parish. In 1788 his lands in Roxburghshire included large parts of Castleton, Cavers, Hawick, Melrose, Roberton and Wilton Parishes, as well as Hassendean, the Barony of Eckford and Lempitlaw, the teinds of Maxton, the customs of St. Boswell’s Fair and part of Lantoun. In 1794 he succeeded to Caroline Park and other estates that were held by his mother. In 1798 he became Colonel of the militia in Edinburgh, assuming control again in 1803 after the truce broke down. He gained the Queensberry and other titles of the Douglases of Drumlanrig in 1810. He was also Lord Lieutenant of Roxburghshire 1804–12. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1810. Known as ‘Duke Henry’ or ‘the Good Duke’, he had a reputation for being generous and was said to be highly popular among the locals. However, in 1767 he (or presumably his advisors) raised an action in the Court of Session against Hawick, concerning ownership of the Common, which ultimately led to the Division of 1777. ‘Midlothian Fencibles’. He also established Newcastle in 1793 and was known as an agricultural improver. In 1767 he married Lady Elizabeth Montagu, only surviving daughter of George, Duke of Montagu; she became a patron of many charities in Edinburgh and died in 1827, aged 84. The Buccleuch family gained vast estates in England through this marriage. He was succeeded by his son Charles William Henry (1772–1819), who adopted the surname Montagu-Scott. His other children were: George (b.1768), Earl of Dalkeith, who died in infancy; Mary (1769–1823), who married James George, Viscount Stopford and later Earl of Courtown; Elizabeth (1770–1837), who married Alexander, 10th Lord Home; Caroline (1774–1854), who married Sir Charles Douglas of Kelhead, who was later 6th Marquess of Queensberry; Henry James (1776–1845), Baron Montagu of Broughton; and Harriet (1780–1833), who married William, Earl of Ancram, who was later 6th Marquess of Lothian. He died at Dalkeith and is buried there – ‘Contented, therefore, we maun be, E’en wi’ the hut we sit in – They say o’ landlords east and west, Oor ain Duk Henry is the best O’ a’ the Lairds o’ Britain’ [HSR]. Henry (18th/19th C.) Wright at Milsington. His wife died in Hawick Parish in 1809. A daughter married John Murray, from Borthwickbrae Burnfoot. Henry of Horsleyhill and Belford (18th/19th C.) son of Francis James, he was the last Laird of Horsleyhill. In 1811 he was recorded as owner of the lands of Belford in Morebattle Parish. In 1792 he married Catherine, daughter of John Hay of Newhall. His only child was Hannah Charlotte, who married Sir John James Douglas (whose son became Sir George Henry Scott-Douglas on inheriting the lands) and secondly married William Scott-Kerr of Chatto and Sunlaws. The ‘Mrs. Scott of Horsleyhill’ who died in Edinburgh in 1806 may have been his wife. Henry James Montagu (1776–1845) Baron Montagu of Boughton, younger brother of the 4th Duke of Buccleuch. He acted as guardian to his nephew Walter, the 5th Duke, during his minority. The pair were made...
Honorary Burgesses when they passed through Hawick in 1821. He succeeded to the Mont-tagau Baronetc in the death of his grandfather, George Duke of Montagu, and adopted Montagu as his surname. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1804 he married his cousin Jane Margaret Douglas (d.1859), who was eldest daughter of Archibald, Lord Douglas of Douglas and his aunt Frances. They had 4 daughters: Lucy Elizabeth (d.1877), who married Cospatrick Alexander, Earl of Home; Mary Margaret, who married Lieut.-Col. Frederick Clinton; Jane Caroline (d.1846), who died unmarried; and Caroline Georgina, who married George William Hope of Luffness. He was born and died in London. Henry (1790–1873) 2nd son of Henry, tenant at Over Deloraine and Agnes Sibbald. He became Laird of Over Kirkhope and tenant in Crosslie, as well as being a hatter in Edinburgh.
He was also in partnership with his cousin, Henry Scott, 5th son of William, tenant in Singlie. His company ‘Messrs. H. Scott & Co. hat manufacturers Edinburgh’ subscribed to Robert Wil-son’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1820 he married Isabella Martin. Their children were:
Henry (b.1830), probably died young; John, tenant in Crosslie; William Henry (b.1836), who emigrated to Canada; Elizabeth, who married James Alexander; Agnes, who married Matthew Whiting; Isabella, who married Mr. Mein, dentist in Edinburgh; Janet; and Margaret. Henry Erskine (d.1847) son of William and decendent of the Scotts of Clarilaw, he was born at Brighton.
He succeeded to the lands of Ashieburn when his father died in 1807, but he sold them before his own death. Henry (1796/7–1866) farmworker and farmer. He began as a ploughman and was also a shepherd, later becoming a farm steward, managing Stelshaw (near Newcastle) for William Aitchison of Linhope. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer living at Penchrise Cottage. In 1820 in Cavers Parish he married Mina, daughter of James Lunn; she died at Milsington; Caroline Georgina, who married George William Hope of Luffness. He was born and died in Lon-

daughter of James Lunn; she died at Milsing-

Beatrice, who married Walter Thomson, and may also have had a son John with William Aitchi-on of Linhope in 1843, who was raised by his grandparents:
Thomas (b.1825), born at Crailing;
Marion (1828–1909), who married Thomas Scott, farmer at Milsington; William (b.1831); James (1836–1921); and Henry (b.1844), who married Janet Ewart. He was grandfather of Henry Anderson, long time resident of Rulewater. He died at Stelshaw and is buried in Ettle-ton Cemetery. Henry (b.1801/2) from Yarrow, mentioned. He may be the same man as ‘Hugo le Scot de Kantuar’ who is recorded in 2 separate cases involving lands in Corebridge. Hugh of Greenhead and Gala (d.c.1645) 2nd surviving son of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden. He was also earlier referred to as ‘of Deuchar’, but became the first Scott of Gala. In 1610 he was named along with his father and brothers when Gilbert Elliott of Horsleyhill (later of Stobs) was cautioner for them not to harm Walter Scott in Hawick, called Todshawhill, and his associates. In 1622 he was mentioned in a rental document in Melrose. He is also mentioned in the 1623 Circuit Court records as caution for John Watson of Boldside and John White of Greenhead. In 1633 he was appointed one of the ‘Tutors Testamentary’ to oversee the Earl of Buccleuch’s will. He was ‘Hew Scott, sone to Walter Scott of Harden’ in 1644 in a registration of rental for Regality of Melrose lands, and further mentioned in bonds in Melrose in the 1640s, when he was Bailie of the Regality. In 1621 he married Jean Hoppringle of Galashiels, daughter and heirress of Sir James Pringle of Galashiels and Smailholm. Their children were: Anne; James, who succeeded and married Janet, daughter of Sir James Murray of Philiphaugh; Walter, a Major in the Army; George, progenitor of the Scotts of Auchty-Donald in Aberdeen-shire; John, who settled in Italy; David, who became a surgeon in Edinburgh; Francis, who was referred to as ‘brother-german’ of James in 1664 and 1665; and William, still alive in 1652, and was probably the Capt. William ‘brother to Galloscheills’ in 1658. Hugh of Gala (d.c.1697) son of James. He was probably the Laird of Gala whose lands in Selkirkshire were valued at about £3600 in 1678. He was M.P. for Selkirkshire 1681–82 and on the Commission of Supply for Selkirkshire in 1685. However, he was apprehended in 1684 (along with Walter, Earl of Tarras and other Border Lairds) for refusing to support Episcopalianism. He married Isabella, daughter of Sir Thomas Ker of Cavers. His children included: Sir James, who succeeded; Thomas, who married Elizabeth Borthwick; Hugh; Patrick, who died young; John, who became a Colonel in the Guards; Grisel, who married John Pringle of Torsonce; Margaret, who died young; and Anna, who married Walter of Raeburn, then Henry McDougall of Makerstoun and finally a Home of Eccles. His son James was served as his heir in 1697 and his will was recorded in 1698. Rev. Hugh (1630/1–91) recorded as ‘Hew’, he graduated from Edinburgh University in 1649. He was called to Bedrule in late 1657 and ordained there in 1658. However, he was deprived in 1662 for being a Covenanter and forced to leave the Presbytery, being later replaced by James Adamson. He was ‘indulg’d’ (i.e. allowed to resume his duties again) in 1672 and became minister at Oxnam, moving to Galashiels later the same year. He continued there until 1678 and by 1688 (the dates may be confused here) was minister at Stow. He was a member of the Assembly of 1690. He was described as ‘faithfull and painfull in his calling’ and ‘singularly pious’. In 1659 he married Jean, only daughter of Lancelot Pringle of Leyis and she died in 1709. Their children were: David, Helen (who married Thomas Waldie in Edinburgh, and was allowed a guinea by the Presbytery in 1725) and David (again, or another error). Hugh of Gala (d.1771) 5th Laird of Gala, son of Sir James. He was recorded as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1761. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Col. John Stewart of Stewartfield. Their children were: James (b.1730), who died young; John (b.1732), who succeeded; Elizabeth, who married Archibald Douglas of Cavers; Euphemia, who died young; Magdalene, who also died young; Anne; Catherine, who married Capt. John Douglas of Ederton, a brother of the Laird of Cavers, who later became Laird himself; Christian (b.1737); Isobel, who died young; and Stewart (b.1741). Hugh of Harden (1758–1841) son of Walter and Diana Home Campbell (daughter of the last Earl of Marchmont). There are documents of 1767, 1774 and 1779 confirming him as the heir to Harden. He was ‘younger of Harden’ when admitted to the Roxburghshire voters’ roll in 1780. He became 11th (or 12th) Baron of Harden in 1795 and then 4th (later corrected to 6th) Lord Polwarth in 1835, the title being claimed through his mother. He also inherited Mabonlaw and Highchesters in 1796. He was listed among the voters in Selkirkshire in 1788. He was M.P. for Berwickshire 1780–84 and in 1812 was appointed Deputy-Lieutenant of Roxburgh-shire. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788 and listed as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1805 and 1819. In the Land Tax Rolls of 1802 he is recorded paying tax for ‘The two Oakwoods & Mill’, as well as ‘Whithillbrae, Hitlarburn’ and Inner Huntly in Yarrow Parish. In 1808 he was on the subscription list for Jamieson’s Scots dictionary. He is probably the Scott of Harden who amazed the residents of the Yarrow valley by driving his carriage and 2 ponies round the narrow road that skirted St. Mary’s Loch. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. In 1820 he assumed the additional surname of Hepburne, the estates of the Hepburnes of Humbie descending to him through his great-great-grandmother, Helen Hepburne, Countess of Tarras. He subscribed to Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1795 he married Harriet Brühl, daughter of Hans Maurice, Count de Brühl of Martinskirk, Saxon Ambassador at the Court of St. James’s. This Lady Polwarth was a patron of Sir Walter Scott (and also something of an artist, with sketches of her young sons Henry Francis and Francis surviving); she died in 1853. His children were: Charles Walter (b.1796), who died young; Henry Francis, who succeeded; Rev. William Hugh (1801–68), Rector of Maiden Newton, Dorset; Rev. George William (1804–30), Rector of Kentsibear, Devon, who was given the lands of Bewlie in 1825, and died without issue; Francis (1806–84), who gained the lands of Bewlie in 1831; Harriet Diana; Maria Amabel, who married Maj.-Gen. George C.D. Lewis; Elizabeth Anne, who married Col. Charles Wyndham of Rogate, Sussex, M.P.; and Anne, who married Charles Baillie, Lord Jerviswood. He had his portrait painted in 1787. Hugh (d.1818) recorded at Eweslees on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1788–97. He had 2 farm horses, as well as a saddle horse, along with David, who was presumably his brother or son. He also paid the dog and clock taxes in 1797. Col. Hugh of Gala (1764–95) son of John, he was 7th Laird. He became Colonel in the 26th (Cameronian) Regiment and died during an insurrection in Grenada. He paid the land tax for Galashiels and Blindlee in 1785. In 1788 he was listed among the voters of Selkirkshire, but said to be ‘an officer in the Army, now in Canada’ who would vote with the interests of the Duke of Buccleuch. In 1787 he married Isabella, daughter of Prof. Alexander Monro of Craiglockart and Auchinbowie. They had an only child, John, who succeeded. Maj. Hugh of Gala (1822–77) son of John, he was 9th Laird. He held the rank of Major in the Dunfries, Roxburgh and Selkirk Militia. He was also Deputy Lieutenant of Selkirkshire and a Justice of the Peace in that county. In 1857 he married Elizabeth Isabella, daughter and heiress of Capt. Charles Kinnaird Johnstone-Gordon. Their children were: John Henry Francis Kinnaird, who succeeded; Hugh James Elibank (b.1861), who adopted the surname Scott-Makdougall when he succeeded to Makerstoun from his first cousin twice-removed, and his son Henry John became 11th Laird of Gala; Magdalena Augusta Lavinia, who married Lieut.-Gen. Sir Francis John Davies, Commander-in-Chief Scottish Command; and Maj. Charles Archibald Ramsay (1863–1920) of the South Wales Borderers. He died in France. Hugh (18th/19th C.) gardener at Wells. His wife Agnes Veitch died in 1821, aged 45, and is buried in Bedrule kirkyard, along with a daughter, Agnes. Iain Hunter (1968– ) son of Frank T. and Janet Hunter. He worked for joinery firm Brydon’s and attended Borders College, eventually joining the technical staff and later the teaching staff. He was a founder member of the band Scocha with David Chapman. He is heavily involved in promoting Hawick’s culture and history, even although he works in Gala. He sings ‘The Bonnie Banner Blue’ on the 2006 CD ‘Hawick and Teviotdale in Song and Poetry’ for which he produced all the recordings. He has been involved in many local projects, including being the driving force behind the James Thomson memorial statue and the Archaeological Society Transactions archive. Ingram (d.1616) one of the men who, in 1615, slew the sheep belonging to Sir James Douglas at Howpasley, at the instigation of Lady Scott, widow of Howpasley. He fled to the ‘Northe’, where he was later apprehended along with ‘Wattie’ Scott (possibly a near relative) and was hanged in Edinburgh. He may have been related to some of the others, who were Jock ‘the Suckler’, ‘Marion’s Geordie’ and William ‘in Satchells’. He met them at Birny Cleuch, between Eilrig and Howpasley before they ‘ran throw the haill flok of sheip, slew, lamet, and menzet to the number of threscoir’. Isaac (12th/13th C.) probably from Brechin, he was a Clerk of St. Andrews Diocese. His surname was sometimes ‘Forteviot’, referring to a benefice he held in Perthshire. This suggests he was not related to other Scotts. He witnessed several charters in the 1190s. He witnessed a notification by the Bishop of St. Andrews in 1204, and is not recorded after 1213. He had a son, Nazar. Isabella (17th C.) recorded in 1658 when Margaret Oliver was fined by the Magistrates for calling her ‘witchesgait, and saying that she devooed her awine child’. Isabella (1694–1748) daughter of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch, with her 2nd husband, Charles Cornwallis. She was known as Lady Isabella Scott and was the only one of the Duchess’ children to outlive her. In 1731 she was Isabella nee Hogg (b.1793/4) married Walter Scott, grocer and spirit dealer. She was listed as a grocer on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory and on Buccleuch Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 she was a widow at about 8 Buccleuch Street, living with her children Agnes, Walter, Robert, Mary Ann and Andrew. Isobel (13th C.) recorded in 1296 when she paid homage to Edward I. She was from Fife and was one of only a small number of women on the list. Her name is recorded as ‘Isabele Scot’. She was presumably a widow or heiress. Isobel ‘Lady Synton’ nee Douglas (16th/17th C.) wife of the last Walter of Synton, who died in 1608. She was daughter of William Douglas of Whittingham and probably the aunt of Ann Douglas, who married Sir William Douglas of Cavers. She appears to have thereafter lived at South Synton. In 1615 she is described as ‘the guidwyffe of South Sinton’ when she was summoned to the Presbytery for publicly abusing the minister of Ashkirk, Alexander Hogg, between the Sunday sermons. In the next year she was charged with not attending her own church, saying ‘She wald not repare to her kirk all the dayes of her lyf, nouther waldshe gif ane reason therefor’. This presumably stemmed from a disagreement with the minister’s new ways. It is stated that she preferred to take communion at Lilliesleaf and Hassendean, and was rebuked by the ministers there for doing so. She apparently eventually reconciled with the minister and was readmitted to the Ashkirk communion. Her children were George of Synton (who sold the estate), Anne, Archibald, Elspeth and Christian. Isobel (17th C.) recorded in the Ashkirk Session records of 1635 as ‘Isabel Scott in Synton Mill’. She complained that Margaret Tullie had called her a witch and a thief. Tullie denied calling her a witch, but claimed she could prove that she was a thief, and called several witnesses to support the claim that she had robbed the purse of Andrew Nichol in Synton Mill. However, the outcome was ‘that they ken her to be ane honest woman, and free of any thyst so far as they ken or know’. Her accuser was made to sit at ‘ye place of repentence’. Isobel of Whitehaugh (d.1759) probably daughter of Walter and sister of Rev. Robert of Robertson. She succeeded to the Whitehaugh estates on the death of her brother William in 1751. In 1753 she married Rev. William Somerville, minister of Hawick (and was said to be about 80 at that point). She died without any children and her second cousin John succeeded her to Whitehaugh. J. of Grahamswood (17th C.) signatory of the Covenant in Hawick in 1638. His name is given as ‘J. Scott of Grahamswood’, but it is unclear where this might have been. James (13th C.) recorded as James ‘le Scot’ in 1256 when he was arrested in the town of ‘Roubiry’ (probably Rothbury) along with Robert of Crailing, on suspicion of larceny. James (15th C.) servant of the King recorded in 1454 when he received his fee. It is unclear to which branch of the family he belonged. James (15th C.) recorded as witness to the 1464/5 sasine granting the Barony of Cavers and Sherifldom of Roxburghshire to Archibald Douglas. He appears as ‘Jacobo Scot’. He may be the same as James of Kirkurd. James (15th C.) witness to a sasine for the lands of Boonraw in 1487. Other witnesses included Adam Scott and local landowners. It is unclear to which branch of the Scotts he belonged, but it is possible he was the same as James of Kirkurd and Hassendean. James of Kirkurd (d.c.1501) later referred to as ‘of Over and Nether Newhall and Hassendean’. He was the 3rd (or perhaps 2nd) son of the 1st Sir Walter of Branxholme and Buccleuch, his mother being Margaret Cockburn of Hender- sendean. He was the 3rd (or perhaps 2nd) son of the 1st Sir Walter of Branxholme and Buccleuch, his mother being Margaret Cockburn of Hender- sendean. He was the 3rd (or perhaps 2nd) son of the 1st Sir Walter of Branxholme and Buccleuch, his mother being Margaret Cockburn of Hender- sendean. He was the 3rd (or perhaps 2nd) son of the 1st Sir Walter of Branxholme and Buccleuch, his mother being Margaret Cockburn of Hender-
Scott

Hasinden'. He may have been the ‘James Scot of Kirkvord’ transcribed as witness to a document in 1494 relating to lands in Hassendean, and he was ‘of Hassendean’ when he was on the panel for the inheritance of Synton by Alexander Erskine. Also in 1494 he gave a charter of the lands of Galalaw and the Nether Mains of Newhall to his son David, reserving the lifierent to himself. Among the witnesses were his son John, as well as Robert of ‘Achinstanceleich’, and 3 other Scotts, William, Walter and Robert, who may have been related. His wife Margaret was also mentioned in this charter, but her surname is not recorded. He is probably the James who had 16 sheep stolen from him at ‘fawsyd’ according to a case brought against John in Tushielaw in 1494/5. Also in 1494/5 he was ‘in hassinden’ when his son David had remission for stealing livestock from farms of the Earl of Bothwell. He is probably the ‘Jacobi Scot who was granted income from the land of Falside in 1499; in 1501 the rental was assigned to his wife Margaret and son John. Also in 1501 he was recorded in the Exchequer Rolls as ‘Jacobi Scot in Hassindane’ in relation to remittance of a fine on John Hay of Yester. In 1503 he is still recorded having the lease of Falside (although he may have been deceased by this time). His sons were: John Scott of Over Newhall (later Burnhead) and of Hassendean, his heir; David of Hassendean; William of Hassendean; Robert of Nether Newhall (later Burnfoot); and Adam of Clarilaw. One of his daughters may have married George Gledstains (who is listed as ‘brother’ of Adam in Clarilaw and William in 1526). He was probably also the James whose wife Margaret received the lands of Falside (in Ettrick) ‘in lifierent’ in 1510, with the heirs of the deceased John (possibly his son) being granted heredity of Falside (which was later in the hands of the Scotts of Hassendean). He is probably also the James of Hassendean whose son Walter was witness to a document for the Scotts of Branxholme in 1500. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls several times in the period 1494-1513. He was somewhat associated with the King’s stable. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Perhaps the same James ‘once in the King’s avery’ (i.e. where oats and other food for horses was kept) was given a payment in 1538. James (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as ‘in Ashkir’ (i.e. Ashkirk) when he served as surety for Walter, son of Walter of Headshaw, who had stolen sheep from several farms. Robert of Stirches was also surety. This suggests that he was related to the Scotts of Headshaw and of Stirches. In 1526 he was listed as being ‘of Askirk’ among the many Borderers who were pardoned for supporting the Homes against the Earl of Arran (perhaps a couple of years earlier); his son Walter was also listed. John of Ashkirk, killed in 1526 and Walter in Ashkirk, recorded in 1533, were possibly descendants. James (d.1563) 3rd son of Robert of Allanhaugh and Whitchester. He was educated for the church. During the reign of James V he was Clerk to the Treasury, and was recorded being paid as such in 1533. He is probably the James, writer in the Exchequer, who is recorded in 1538 and 1540. In 1543 he succeeded Alexander Scott (of unknown connection) as Provost of the Collegiate Church of Corstorphine. Like his predecessor he was also one of the Auditors of the Treasurer’s Accounts (1544-62) and is recorded several times in this period as Provost of Corstorphine. In 1554 he was appointed as an Ordinary Lord of Session. He had a manse built at Corstorphine, which contained his coat of arms. In 1560 he was granted the parsonage of Kirkurd (in Peeblesshire) by Trinity Collegiate Church (in Edinburgh) along with William, Burgess of Edinburgh (and presumably a near relative). James (15th/16th C.) recorded as being ‘in Holfurd’ (probably Howford) on the 1526 list of Borders men pardoned for their support of the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran. James ‘Beld Jamie’ (15th/16th C.) recorded among the many Borders men who had remission in 1526 for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. He is listed as being ‘callit Beld Jame’, with James ‘in Holfurd’ and James ‘of Inglend’ listed right before and after him, respectively. He was presumably bald. James (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers given remission in 1526 for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. He is recorded as being ‘of Inglend’, but it is unclear what this means. James (16th C.) recorded as Bailie of Selkirk in the Exchequer Rolls for 1541. James of Flex (16th C.) witness to a 1556 document relating to the transfer of Nether Harden between Simon Scott of Fenwick and William Scott of Harden. James (16th C.) resident of Whithope who was listed in 1549 among those whose lands had been attacked by Walter Ker of Cessford and others, in a complaint by Sir Walter of Buccleuch. Helen was listed right after him and so may have been related. James (16th C.) listed among people who were owed money by William Scott, younger of Branxholme, when he died in 1552. He is listed as 'Jacobo Scott eius seruo', presumably meaning he was a servant of William. James 'Bailzie' (16th C.) mentioned in Hawick's first existing sasine (of any detail), dating from 1558, when he was sold a piece of land (perhaps corresponding to what was later called 'Wylie's Dub') by Alexander Scott. He is referred to as 'alias Bailzie', suggesting that this was a nickname, and that he was not in fact a Bailie of the Town (or had previously been a Bailie). James (d.c.1564) son of Walter 'in Hassindene'. He was listed among the men tried in 1564 for the murder of David of Hassendean (who may have been a relative of some sort). Other men involved included Elliots of Horsleyhill. It appears that he was one of the men who were executed for the crime. His relationship to the other Scots is unclear, however, it may be that he was a nephew of the David who was murdered. These events may have been the catalyst for the deadly feud between the Scots and the Elliots that lasted for several years. James (16th C.) illegitimate son of John Scott, who was Vicar of Hawick in the 1530s. He appears to have been legitimised in 1538, the document given by John of Burnhead. In 1556 he had a precept of sasine, also from John of Burnhead. This was probably for the lands his father had held at Wester and Easter Muremaw (later called 'Lees'). James of Alton Croft (16th C.) listed by Scott of Satchells as 'of Alton-Crofts' among the 24 'Pensioners' of the house of Buccleuch. He was said to have been descended from the Scotts of Allanhaugh. He must have been related to the later Walter of Alton Croft. James (16th C.) listed in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch as the man who collected the teinds for Hassendean and Cavers. He was presumably an agent of some sort for the Scotts of Buccleuch. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Jameses. James of Roberton (16th C.) recorded as witness to a sasine of 1559 involving Harden and as witness in 1579 to the payment of Ker of Cessford's fine for the failure of young Ker of Faldonside to marry Janet, sister of Buccleuch. In 1590 he was listed on the 'Roll of the Clans'. It is unclear how he was related to the Johns of Roberton recorded earlier and later. It is possible he was a brother of the former John (and hence younger son of Stephen) and uncle of the John who was supposedly present at the rescue of Kinmont Willie. James (16th C.) described as 'in Quhistslaide' (i.e. Whitslade) in 1574 when he and William Scott 'in Harden' paid back Sir Walter Scott of Birkenside (later Howpasley) for a loan on the mill of Easter Burnfoot. They also had a 'letter of reversion' for a loan on the lands of 'Auldtrouss' in Ettrick Forest as well as Easter Craik in the same year. James (16th C.) Reader of Ashkirk Parish in 1575 (not to be confused with John, who was minister here at the same time). He was also described as Vicar in 1586. However, in 1582 he was one of 6 preachers (including readers from Hassendean, Lilliesleaf and Southdean), who were deprived for 'abusing the sacraments', and then excommunicated in 1588 for continuing in the offence. In 1590 he was one of 3 men (the others being Thomas Ker, vicar of Old Roxburgh and Thomas Newbie, vicar at Hassendean) who agreed never to abuse the sacraments nor function in the kirk after being threatened with death, and it was decided that 'they sould be tane to the mercat croce of Edinburgh, and stand twa houris, with paiparis on thair heidis, contening the cryme'. It may be that he had been a Catholic priest before the Reformation, and had not abandoned his ways. He was also the described as 'at South Syn-} of a son of Walter Scott of Harden. He was succeeded by his son Robert. He also had 3 other sons: William; Andrew; and Adam. William and Adam, brothers of Robert of Gilmancleuch, were recorded in 1631. James (16th C.) 4th son of John, younger of Synton. He had a ‘tack’ of the lands of Doddbank. He was probably the great-grandfather of Captain Walter of Satchells. His eldest son was Robert, who had several charters connected with Doddbank and Satchells in 1607–09. James of Kirkhouses (16th C.) probably 4th son of George of Synton. Capt. Scott of Satchells says that he went on the mission to rescue Kinmont Willie in place of Scott of Synton in 1596. He was father of John of Kirkhouses, who inherited in 1609. James of Hundleshope (16th/17th C.) son of William of Tushielaw and brother of Sir Walter of Tushielaw. In 1578/9 he was one of the men accused of accompanying his brother Walter to attack the farm of Gattonside, and denounced as a rebel for failing to appear to answer the charge. In 1583/4 he was involved in a conflict for James Gledstains of Cocklaw and his tenants to be harmless in ‘his three husband lands lying in Hundishoip’. He is probably the James, brother of Sir Walter of Tushielaw who signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. He held the lands of ‘Hundishoip’ in Peeblesshire. He is recorded in a charter of 1596. In 1602 he and others were removed from the lands of Sir William Stewart of Traquair by Gideon Murray of Elibank. His sons were probably: John; James; Robert in Holly Arch; and Thomas in Hundleshope. James (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Mekle Jame Eister’ in 1590, along with Robert Scott of Haining, when a group of Murrays were put under caution not to harm them. It is unclear how he might have been connected with other Scotts. James of Foulshielis (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1600. He succeeded John, who must have been either his father or brother. He was succeeded by his sons Andrew and then Walter. James (16th/17th C.) brother of William of Bowhill. In 1608 he was part of the gang of Scotts who forcibly freed 2 of their kin from the Bailies of Selkirk. His brother William was also there. James of Newark (16th/17th C.) from an unknown branch of the Scotts. However, later cautioners for the family were Scotts of Castleside and Hartwoodmyres, suggesting they were closely related. He is probably the James, listed as tenant in Newark in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574. In 1585 he was ‘in Newerkynm’ when he witnessed a bond (signed at Selkirk and Hawick) settling a feud between the Scotts of Branxholme and the Scotts of Allanhaugh. In 1590 Gideon Murray of Elibank was surety for him ‘that the vassals, tenants, and servants of William Earl of Angus shall be harmless of the said James’. Sometime around 1603–7 he left Newark to his son John, and became a Magistrate in Selkirk. James (16th/17th C.) perhaps tenant at Nether Boustocher. Walter Deans (writing in 1887) claims his name is recorded on a deed of 1600, and that he was succeeded by Thomas (although Thomas actually succeeded Walter). James ‘Afhand’ (16th/17th C.) among the group of Scotts who attacked Adam Veitch’s lands in ‘Fechane’ in 1602. Others were Scotts of Hundleshope, Thirlestane, Gamescleuch, Bonnington and Bowhill. James of Glenrath (d.1619) 2nd son of Sir Walter of Tushielaw. He was also referred to as ‘of Boyken’ (in Westerkirk). The lands of Glenrath are probably those south of Peebles. Scott of Satchells lists him among the clansmen who were at the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. His children were all minors when he died: Walter, who succeeded to Glenrath in 1628; William in Linton, whose son John succeeded his uncle; James; Marion; Elizabeth; and Margaret. His brother John of Mackersway was served as tutor to his children William, Marion, James, Elizabeth and Margaret in 1620. James (16th/17th C.) listed as ‘of Newholme’ in 1611 when he was part of the assize at the Justice Court on Jedburgh. He was brother of William of Montbenger and had a son John, who was a surgeon in Edinburgh. In 1645, his nephew Robert, son of William of Montbenger, was served as tutor to John’s sons (and therefore his grandsons) James and John. James (16th/17th C.) brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade, so probably son of the previous Sir Walter. In 1620 he had a marriage contract with Agnes Scott, widow of Rev. Alexander Hogg, involving lands at Eildon. In 1631 these lands were granted to Walter Chisholme in Darnick, and it was restated that he was brother of the deceased Sir Walter of Whitslade. He could be the James of Whitslade who in 1663 was jointly responsible (along with widow Margaret Turnbull) for land taxes in Hassendean Parish. James of Huntey (16th/17th C.) probably younger brother of Walter and son of Robert, who was on the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. He was on an inquest in 1616, and probably had recently succeeded his brother (since Walter was recorded as Laird in 1612). He is probably the James ‘called of Huntlie’ whose son John was served heir to his lands of Langhope in Ettrick.
Forest in 1639. James of Newark (16th/17th C.) eldest son of John of Newark, who he succeeded in 1626. He apparently sold Newark to the Scotts of Buccleuch. He subsequently became a merchant and burgess in Selkirk. He was listed in the last testament of Walter Earl of Buccleuch in 1633, when he owed more than £14,000. In 1605 he married Grisel, daughter of James Murray of Philiphaugh. James (16th/17th C.) listed as tenant in Newbigging in 1627 when he was one of 9 men responsible for making a valuation of the lands of Hawick. Rev. James (1578/9–1634) appointed to the vicarage of St. Mary of the Lowes by Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1608. It seems likely that he was some kind of relative. In the same year he was accused by the Presbytery ‘of being our guid companion in drinking and beiring company both in Edinburgh and at home’. He was also accused of being a card-player and being negligent in his duties. By 1618 he was non-resident and urged to find a house nearer to his congregation. However, he appears to have remained as the minister until his death. He was listed in 1633 as ‘minister at Yaro kirk’ when he was owed his annual stipend from the deceased Walter, Earl of Buccleuch. James (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1628 as tenant in ‘Holcaldrumhill’, among a list of men accused by the Earl of Buccleuch of cutting down trees on his lands near Hawick. He is listed along with Andrew in the Heap, who may therefore have been a relative. It is unclear where his farm might have been. James (17th C.) son of George, resident of Leith, who was already deceased when he purchased Hassendean from William Cunningham in 1622. He was at that time a resident of Bruntsland. James of Roberton (16th/17th C.) son of William of Roberton. He was the last of the Lairds of Roberton. In 1627 he was served heir to his father’s lands of Roberton and Howcleuch, with the mill, valued at £6 13s 4d. However, later in 1627 he sold the lands to Sir William Scott of Harden. It is not known what happened to him after that. James (17th C.) listed in the inventory of the deceased Earl of Buccleuch in 1633 as a ‘servant’. He was owed money for keeping the ‘teynd yaird’ in Hawick, as well as for building the walls and ‘heidning the stakes’ (i.e. putting heads on the stakes). It is unclear where this yard was located. James (17th C.) described as ‘portnr. of burn ffit’ when he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. It is unclear which Burnfoot he occupied (but probably not the one on Ale, since Walter there signed separately), and how he was related to other Scotts. James (17th C.) possibly minister or assistant at Abbotrule about 1638. In that year he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick, his name recorded as ‘Mr. James Scott, Abbatroull’. The minister at that time was James Ker, so it is possible this is a transcription error. James of Woll (d.bef. 1670) 2nd son of Robert. He succeeded his brother Francis by 1643. He is presumably the same James, son of Robert ‘of Well’ who became a saddler’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1641. In 1643 he was recorded as ‘lawful son to Robert Scott of Wall’ (and separately as ‘Well’) when he complained about being imprisoned in Edinburgh Tolbooth at the insistence of saddler David Brown; he complained that Brown ‘causelessly conceived a deadly hatred against him ... while ... alone and engaged upon his lawful business, caused apprehend him and warded him in the tolbooth, and that without any conviction or lawful warrant’, after which he was also warded by William Duff, servitor to Lord Saltoun, who claimed he was a debtor. He complained to the Privy Council after 20 days in prison, and was freed. He had 3 daughters in the period 1642–45, but had no male heirs. He sold the lands of Woll to Sir William Scott of Harden in about 1660. His brother George was returned heir to their father in 1670. James (17th C.) eldest son of William of Salënside, and brother of Thomas. In the period 1633–53 he pursued an action against his step-sisters Jean and Margaret, presumably over the lands of Essenside, which had belonged to their father, Walter of Essenside. James (17th C.) described as possessor of ‘Parke callit Copshaholme’ in 1632. James of Crookston (17th C.) younger son of Sir Robert of Thirlestane and Katherine Jardine. He is recorded in a letter of inhibition in 1630. In 1641 he is referred to as ‘of Cruixtoun’ when he witnessed (in Hawick) a document for his brother Sir John of Thirlestane, dealing with succession to the Thirlestane estate. Rev. James (d.1679) son of Walter ‘in Catslak’. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1615, was presented to Kirkton at the end of that year, and became minister there, probably sometime in 1616. He was translated to Tongland in 1619. He was a member of the Commission for the Maintenance of Church Discipline in 1634 and contributed to the building of Glasgow University in 1636. However, he refused to subscribe to the Covenant and was deposed in 1639 for ‘absence from his flocke eight Sabbaths together, sacrilege, intromitting with penalties and contributions, disobedience to the Presbytery, tabling (playing at draughts), conversing with excommunicated Papists, and declining the General Assembly'. He was attached to the Rectory of Ford in Northumberland in 1660 and had a stipend allowed by Parliament in 1661, which was increased in 1663 'because he hath been an extraordinary sufferer these twenty-four years bygone', and his disposition annulled in 1664. He returned to Tongland in 1663. However, in 1665 he was translated to Ancrum, as replacement to the formerly popular John Livingstone, who was exiled as a Covenantter. His appointment came amid huge disturbance, when a woman grabbed his cloak and he used his staff on her, with her brothers jumping into the fray. In the ensuing trial the 2 brothers (Turnbulls from Ashieburn) were transported to Virginia, their sister being whipped through Jedburgh and 4 boys were 'whipped through Edinburgh, branded in the face, and sold as slaves to Barbados'. He remained at Ancrum until his death about 14 years later. He married Margaret, daughter of Gavin Maxwell (minister of Borgue) and has a son James. Baillie James (17th C.) Hawick Magistrate in the 1640s at the time of the Covenanters. He was Baillie in early 1641. In 1643 he was 'late bailie' when he 'made count and reckoning of his intromissions with the contributions that were gathered for the soldiers at Newcastle in 1641'. He may have been the James 'callit of Newton' who was on the 'leet' for the Bailies in 1638 and the James who signed the 1640 'Act of Bailies and Council'. James (17th C.) described as a 'lorimer' (i.e. saddler) in a Hawick Magistrates case of 1642, when Thomas Oliver was ordered to pay him for the oats his livestock had eaten. In 1645 the Town Clerk Gilbert Watt complained that he had called him several names, against the town's laws. The same 'lorimer' was elected to the Council in 1648. James (17th C.) described as a 'cadger' (i.e. carrier) when he acted as appraiser in a Hawick Magistrates Court case of 1642 involving another James, 'lorimer'. James of Park, in Wilton (17th C.) recorded as a landowner in a valuation of Wilton Parish of 1643. This describes 'Scott of Park's Lands, being Easter Whitehaugh, or Wester Heap', and valued at £200. He may also be the James whose lands in Hawick were valued at £10. He also signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick in 1638. He is probably the James 'of Heap' described as a local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, by James Wilson. He is probably also the James of Whitehaugh recorded in 1648 when he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. Probably the same James of Whitehaugh paid the land tax on £200 for Whitehaugh in 1663. It is unclear how he was related to the other Scotts of Whitehaugh or elsewhere. One possibility is that 'Park' is a transcription error for 'Gleck' or 'Clack'. James (17th C.) proprietor of Wiltonburn in a record of 1650 relating to the Borthwick valley. His wife may have been Margaret Scott and their children John, Robert and Margaret. James (17th C.) herd at Branxholme recorded in 1655 and 1656. It is possible he is the James 'elder' who rented part of Branxholme Mains and Branxholme Park, along with another James (perhaps his son) in 1671. He could be the tenant of the west end of Branxholme Muir recorded in 1677; he may have been a servant of the Scotts of Buccleuch (but the document is hard to read). James (17th C.) Hawick merchant. In 1684 his son John was witness to the financial document for erecting the 'Steeple Loft' in St. Mary's. He may one of the 2 Jameses who were on the Council in 1668. James of Bonnington (d.bef. 1668) one of the ordinary Clerks of Session. This is Bonnington in West Lothian, unrelated to the place of the same name near Peebles that was a Lairdship of a separate branch of the Scotts. He was 2nd son of Lawrence of Harperrig, and was the 'Maistir James Scott' who had a charter of the lands of 'Boningtoune' in 1629, with ratification in 1641. He first married Violet, daughter of Robert Pringle, W.S. He secondly married Margaret, eldest daughter of William Elliott of Stobs, and widow of William Bennet, minister of Ancrum (and she may have been the sister of his son William's wife). He was appointed Clerk of Session in 1649 when his elder brother Sir William of Clerkington was appointed Lord of Session. In 1662 he is listed among those excluded from the King's pardon until they paid a fine. His children were: William, who married Elizabeth Elliott and died without a male heir; Robert, who succeeded, but only had a daughter; Violet, who married James Douglas of Cliftonhall; Elizabeth, who married John Maitland; Marion, who married Rev. John Lumsden; and Jean, who was married to James Park, writer, who was entered as a Burgess and Guild brother of Edinburgh in his right in 1678; Gilbert, eldest son by his 2nd wife, who succeeded his half-brother Robert; Charles, who later succeeded; James, last male of this family, who became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1672; Catherine; and Barbara, who was buried in Greyfriars in Edinburgh in 1668. In 1680 his son Charles of Bonnington and other children James and Catherine, were served as his heirs. Bailie James of Ormiston (17th C.) Magistrate of Hawick in the 1670s and 1680s, distinct from the ‘litster’ who was a contemporary Bailie. He was ‘called Ormeston’ in 1673 when he was named in the trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. He is probably the Bailie Scott of Ormiston whose servant Elspeth Scott was struck by stones in 1683 when watching linens that were being bleached by the side of Teviot. He may be descended from the Ormiston Scotts recorded in 1589 and 1592. He was ‘late baylyea’ on the list of subscribers for the Kirk bell drawn up in 1693/4. He is probably the ‘Baylyea Scott ornmston’, who paid tax on 2 hearths on the east side of Hawick in 1694. He may be the James recorded in 1697 when, along with 3 others, he was forbidden from holding public office in Hawick on account of being ‘abettors and hounders out of the last illegal election in October 23 last’. He witnessed a baptism (for Robert Scott, ‘wynhead’) in 1701. He may be the James who was deceased in 1708 when his son Robert caused a commotion in St. Mary’s by trying to take his former seat in the ‘Steeple Loft’ after the Council had passed a statute stating that these seats were reserved for the present Bailies. He was therefore surely the same as the James who was Bailie in 1685 when the finances for the new balcony were being sorted out, and may have been related to the Bailie Walter who had helped finance the balcony in 1684 and subsequently died. He may be the Bailie James who was insulted by Adam Young in 1685, along with his son John; the claim was that they had reset peas taken by some of the Royalist men. James (17th C.) recorded as ‘called Tushilaw’ in 1677 when he was one of the witnesses to the ‘bond of provision’ by Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. He must have been a younger son of one of the Lairds of the late 1600s. James of Bonnnington (d.bef. 1675) succeeded to the lands from Robert, who was either his father or brother. He may have married Margaret Pringle. He was succeeded by his son Gilbert, who died shortly afterwards, and then succeeded by his 2nd son Charles. James (17th C.) married Janet Elliot in 1686. They were both from Roberton Parish. Their daughter Bessie was born in 1687. Bailie James (17th C.) dyer in Hawick, who lived at ‘Casaend’. He was recorded as a ‘litster’ in 1665 when he gave evidence that Bessie Douglas had indeed insulted the Bailie. His is probably one of the 2 Jameses who was on the Council in 1668. He was a Bailie during the 1670s. He was recorded as a ‘litster’ on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. He is recorded in 1686 as ‘Jas. Scott, lltster, lat baylyea in Hawick’, and is distinct from the James of Ormiston who was a contemporary Bailie. He was also recorded as a lster in Hawick in a bond of 1682. He may be the James who was Bailie in late 1685 (but only if the Bailieship changed between November and March). He may also be the former Bailie recorded in a sasine of 1687 as having a garden in the West End, south of the King’s Highway. He was ‘litster, late baylyea’ on the list of subscribers for the Kirk bell in in 1693/4. He is probably the James ‘laite Bailyea’ who was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. James (17th C.) described as servitor to Robert of Horsleyhill when he witnessed a Hawick sasine of 1688. James (d.c.1688) servitor to Sir William Elliott of Stobs. His will was recorded in 1688. He may be the same as one of the other Jameses. James of Shaws and Shielswood (17th C.) eldest son of Adam of Shaws. He paid the land tax in 1678. In 1692 he paid the teind duty to the Commissioners of the Duchess of Buccleuch for the lands of Outerside. He was ‘of Shellwood’ in 1695 when he contributed £200 to the Darien Company. In 1670 he married Marian Scott, heiress of Shielswood (probably daughter of Walter). He was one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690. His eldest son was Walter. James of Brieryyards (17th C.) eldest son and successor of John of Brieryyards. He is mentioned as a landowner in a record of 1666 relating to Hassendean parish, and hence probably succeeded before that. He may be the person who paid the land tax on Brieryyards and Hornshole in 1678 (with no name recorded). He had a sasine of Brieryyards in 1682, and was listed that year among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. He also had a confirming charter of the lands of Hornshole in 1683, these having been passed to him by his brother John in 1667 (as part of a ‘wadset’ with the Turnbulls) and gained from the Turnbulls in 1671. Probably the same James ‘of Bririeyairdis’ was one of the heritors accused of inciting the riot at the de-roofing of Hassendean Kirk in 1690. It is stated there that his eldest son was John and that John of Cockerheugh was his brother. James of Gala (d.bef. 1672) son of Hugh, 1st Laird of Gala. He married Janet, daughter of Sir James Murray of Philiphaugh. Their children were probably:

Walter; George; Donald; John; David; Francis; William; and Hugh, who succeeded. James nee Crofts (1649–85) illegitimate son of Charles II and Lucy Walters (who was also known as ‘Mrs. Barlow’). He was created Baron Scott of Tindale (in Northumberland), Earl of Doncaster (in Yorkshire) and Duke of Monmouth (in Wales) by the King, shortly before his marriage to the young Anne, Countess of Buccleuch in 1663. He assumed the title of first Duke of Buccleuch when he married the Countess of Buccleuch in 1663. However, the marriage was arranged when they were very young (he was 14), and it is said that his real partner was Lady Henrietta Wentworth. In 1666 he and his wife resigned their titles to the crown to be regranted with separate honours. In 1669 he was appointed Colonel of a Regiment of Foot Militia in Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire by Charles II. He was confirmed as Lord Dalkeith in 1772. He was appointed High Chamberlain of Scotland in 1673. He received the Barony of Hawick (including the patronage of St. Mary’s Kirk) from the Crown in 1675. He was listed in the 1678 Land Tax Rolls, holding land valued at about £9000 in Castleton Parish, £6000 in Cavers Parish, £2000 in Hassendean Parish, £9000 in Hawick Parish and £2500 in Wilton Parish (among others). Additionally his lands in Selkirkshire were valued at almost £20,000. In Hawick Parish his possessions included Alton Croft and Alton Town, Whames, Wester Weens and ‘Husband-lands in Hawick, with mill and customs’. He became Captain-general of the Forces and was sent to quell the insurrection in Scotland in 1679, being commander at Bothwell Brig. He then engaged in intrigues against his uncle the Duke of York and moved to Holland in 1684. Belief (probably unfounded) that his father married his mother in Rotterdam before his birth helped encourage him to seek the Crown. In 1685, following the death of Charles II, he landed at Lyme Regis, claiming to be the protector of the Protestant faith and proclaiming himself King. He marched to Taunton with about 6,000 followers, but was defeated by King James’ army at Sedgemoor and fled. Disguised in shepherd’s clothing, he hid out for 2 days, but was taken prisoner. He was executed at Tower Hill in London, having the same morning said his final goodbye to his wife and children; it was described how the executioner took 5 strokes in attempted to sever the head from the body, to the great displeasure of the crowd. He forfeited all his titles, but his wife Anna would remain as Duchess of Buccleuch. His children with her were: Charles, Earl of Doncaster, who died in infancy; James, Earl of Dalkeith, whose son Francis succeeded to the Buccleuch titles; Henry, Earl of Deloraine; Francis, who died in infancy; Charlotte, also died young; and Anne, who died in the Tower of London in 1685. He also had illegitimate children with Elinor, daughter of Sir Robert Needham of Lambeth: Maj.-Gen. James Crofts; Henry Crofts, Commander of H.M.S Gosport; Isabella Crofts, who died young; and Henrietta Crofts, who married Charles Poullett, 2nd Duke of Bolton – ‘A Rebel he was in his time, And did the Nation much perplex; At his Invasion he was tane, And his Head cut off with an ax’ [CWS]. James (17th C.) 4th son of Sir William of Harden, his brothers were Sir William of Harden, Sir Gideon of Highchester, Walter of Raeburn and John of Woll. In 1661 he purchased Thirlestane (although this is probably the place near Yetholm, and not the one in the Ettrick valley), as well as Heiton Mains and Mill from Sir Andrew Ker of Greenhead. He was Chamberlain to the Buccleuch estates for Liddesdale in 1659–60. In 1661 he was listed as owing about £2500 to the Duchess of Buccleuch for rentals in Liddesdale and the Debatable Lands. In 1668 he exchanged some lands with his nephew Sir Andrew Ker of Greenhead. He may be the James of Thirlestane who was fined in 1680 for being a Covenanter. He is probably the James ‘of thirlestoun’ who paid the land tax in Roxburgh and Yetholm Parishes in 1678. He is probably the ‘James Scott off Thirsletoune’ listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose in 1682 (with Sir Francis of Thirlestane also listed). He married Agnes, daughter of Sir Walter Riddell of that Ilk in 1659. His children included: Mary (b.1660), who married Gideon Scott of Falnash; William, who succeeded; Walter; John; Gideon; and 2 sisters. James ‘Cookie’ (17th C.) married to Bessie Douglas, and father to William. He is recorded in a case in 1674 when his wife was found guilty of striking and biting her son. His children with Bessie, included: George (b.1647); Jean (b.1650); John (b.1653); and William (b.1655). James (17th C.) recorded as a Bailie in 1673 and 1682. He is possibly the same as ‘Cookie’ and it is unclear if he was the same as James the Bailie who was a ‘litster’ at about the same time. James ‘Laird’ (17th C.) recorded in 1676 among a number of local people fined for using weights that were lighter than the standards. Specifically his ‘quarter of ane pound wanted ane drop, his twa unce wanted half a drop and more’. It seems likely that he was related to the later James, ‘Laird’, the first recorded Cornet. James of Bowhill (17th C.) younger son of Robert, he succeeded his brother Andrew in 1668. However, it is possible that he purchased Bowhill during the lifetime of his father and brother. He held lands at Merton from 1657. He served as some kind of agent for the Scotts of Buccleuch according to a 1660 document. In 1661 he was listed as son of Robert of Bowhill when he owed rent for the Baron of ‘Thickfoord’ to the Duchess of Buccleuch. He was Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for the Parishes of Castleton and Canonbie in at least the years 1671–89. He was recorded in a deed of 1682. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire in 1685. He could be the Chamberlain of Scott of Buccleuch who was based in Edinburgh in the 1670s, with several letters to him (from George Scott of Pitlochie) surviving. The same James may have been Chamberlain to Sir William Scott of Harden in 1668 when he leased Sandieknowes from Lady Smallholm. He was recorded as tenant in Roan (in Castleton Parish) in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he paid tax for 3 hearths. He had a court case against Andrew Ker of Littledean in 1694 and 1695 regarding rents. He probably married Elizabeth, daughter and heiress of Walter Scott of Foulshiels. It is unclear who he was.

James (17th C.) resident at Easter Essenside on Ashkirk listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He was separate from James in Ashkirk. James (17th C.) resident of Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. Andrew and John were also listed at the same place, and so probably related. James (17th C.) miller at Spittal-on-Rule listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. James (17th C.) resident at Winningtonrig in Cavers Parish in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to the John and Thomas who are also listed there. James (17th C.) recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls as shepherd at Borthaugh. He could be the James who rented quarter of the farm of Borthaugh from the Duchess of Buccleuch in at least the period 1690–94; his cautioner in 1692 and 1694 was ‘young goldiland’ (probably Charles), suggesting he was related to the Scotts of Goldielands and Crumhaugh. In 1696 and 1698 his widow Margaret was renting 1/4 of Borthaugh, with Adam and Walter (farmers at Overhall) as her cautioners. It is possible he was the James, married to Margaret Scott, whose children, baptised in Wilton Parish, included James (b.1694) and Bessie (b.1695). James (17th C.) listed in 1690 as ‘Ja Scott Scrivener’ word is hard to make out) when he rented 1/6 of the farm of Borthaugh. He is listed separately from another James Scott, who rented 1/4. He is surely related to ‘Robert Scot Scrivener’, who was renting Borthaugh in 1694. It is possible he is the James ‘in Borturk’ in 1684 when his wife Bessie Scott’s will is recorded; he was probably related to George ‘in Bortoch’, whose will is recorded in 1686, as well as Walter ‘in Burtoch’. James (17th C.) listed as resident at Overhall on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Adam, who was listed there, was surely related. The pair were each renting half of Overhall from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1690 and 1692. James (17th C.) tenant in Gillfoot in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. James (17th C.) blacksmith listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kir bell in 1693/4. He was on the east-side of Hawick according to the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694 when he paid tax on 2 hearths. James ‘Pede’ (17th C.) recorded in 1679 when he was fined for refusing to let the Bailies enter his house, and he also chained Bailie Gledstains’ barn. He tried to escape and had to forcibly taken to the Tolbooth. He was explicitly referred to as being ‘called Pede’ (i.e. footman), but it is unclear what this nickname meant exactly. He was also listed as ‘pedee’ in Hawick, among the subscribers for the new Kir bell in 1693/4. He was resident of the Hawick ‘eist the water’ according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, with ‘Pedie’ recorded after his name. This presumably distinguished him from the blacksmith and others of the same name. James (17th C.) carter in Hawick listed as ‘Colifert’ among those contributing to funds for the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was also recorded as ‘James Scott colifert’ among residents of the east-side of Hawick on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was presumably owner or otherwise associated with Colifort. He was again ‘Colifert’ when his son James was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1704 and when his daughter Helen married Andrew Waugh in 1713. James (17th C.) resident at Todshawhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) resident at Hawick Shiel in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) recorded at Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (1674–1705) Earl of Dalkeith, eldest surviving son of Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch and James, Duke of Monmouth and Buccleuch. He was titled Earl of Doncaster until the death of his father. In 1692 he was proclaimed King by a group of ‘thirty or forty wylde people’ at Sanquhar Cross, but nothing came of it. He received the lands of Chisholme and Woodburn from the estate of his deceased father in 1696. He served with the army in Flanders, returning to Britain in 1702. In 1694 he married Henrietta, daughter of Lawrence Hyde, Earl of Rochester and she died in 1730. Predeceasing his mother, the Dukedom was inherited by his eldest son Francis (1695–1751). His other children were: Charles (b.1700), who died young; James (1702–19), who died aged 17; Henry (b.1704), who also died young; Anne (1696–1714), who died aged 18; and Charlotte (1697–1747), who died unmarried at the age of 50, the only other to survive her grandmother, Anne. He himself died in London and was buried in Westminster Abbey. James (17th/18th C.) tenant in Stobicote. He is recorded there in 1700 when he was fined ‘for forestalling of the public market’ by buying a lamb from a servant of James Ogilvie in Braxholme and then selling it to a Jedburgh butcher for a higher price. Probably the same James is listed at Stobicote on the 1694 Hearth Tax records; he appears right after John, to whom he was likely related. He was ‘tenant in Stobbicoat’ in 1712 when he married Anne Scott, step-daughter of Robert Thomson in Newmill. James (17th/18th C.) glover in Hawick. In 1704 he witnessed a baptism for James Falside. He married Beatrix Laing and their children included James (b.1705); she may be the Beatrix born to James Laing and Helen Elliot in Hawick in 1670. The witnesses in 1705 were fellow gowers James Burn and William Bruntfield. James (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. In 1706 he was listed among the men who were fined for involvement in the disturbances at the Common Riding that year. He is listed separately from James ‘of Westport’, and was presumably also different from James ‘the Laird’, who was Cornet in 1703. James (17th/18th C.) 2nd son of Walter, 3rd Laird of Nether Bontocher. He was a writer in Jedburgh and died unmarried. James (17th/18th C.) joint tenant in Nether Southfield along with Walter in about 1710, as attested in evidence given regarding the state of Hawick’s Common in 1767. James (17th/18th C.) resident in Mains (presumably Borthwick Mains) in 1717 when his daughter Helen was baptised in Robertson Parish. James of Calfield (17th/18th C.) from a prominent Dumfriesshire farming family. He may have been descended from Francis Scott of Davington’s sister Katherine (although one genealogy has him as a son of Francis of Davington). He was later described as being ‘of Beltenmont’. He was probably the James in Calfield who married Agnes Scott, sister to the Laird of Burnhead (William Scott) in Hawick in 1721. His children included: Katherine, who married William, 3rd son of Robert Scott of Davington; Isabel, who married John, brother of her brother-in-law William Scott; Margaret, who married Gilbert Elliot, descendant of the Lairds of Redheugh and Larriston; and William, who was a vintner in Dumfries. Jean may have been another daughter, who married David Muir, Provost of Annan. Sir James of Gala (d.aft. 1721) son of Hugh and Isobel Ker, he was the 4th Scott of Gala. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire in 1695 and for Roxburghshire in 1696. He contributed £600 to the Darien Company in 1695. He was served heir to his father Hugh in 1697. He was appointed as Parliamentary Commissioner (i.e. M.P.) for Roxburghshire in 1698, serving as his father-in-law had done; he remained in this position until 1702. He married Euphemia, daughter of Sir William Douglas of Cavers and their children were: Hugh, who succeeded; William, who died young; John (d.c.1754) who was States Doctor in Batavia, and died childless after returning to Scotland; Archibald, a Major in the Dutch East India Company; Katherine (or Katherine), who married Rev. Henry Davidson, minister at Gala; and Elizabeth. James (17th/18th C.) son of John and grandson of John of Rennaldburn and Newburgh. In 1721 he married Philadelphia, daughter of William Ballentine of Crooksyde, Cumberland. Bailie James Scott (17th/18th C.) Hawick Bailie, recorded in 1710, 1713 and 1720, probably distinct from the earlier and later Bailies of the same name. He is probably the James who declared in 1703 that on the last night of the previous year there were only 2 people to be found drinking after the ringing of the 10 o’clock bell. He was one of the Bailies when the bond was granted by the Council (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. He is probably the ‘late Bailie’ of that name who, in 1715, was given one of the keys to the Charter Chest. He may also be the ‘Bailie Scott’ referred to in 1718 in connection with resolving the dispute between Bailies Ruecastle and Graham, and hence was an elder of Hawick Kirk. He is probably also the Bailie Scott appointed to collect monies at the east end of the Town in 1722 and also part of the Commission for appointing the new minister that year. It seems likely he is also the Bailie of the same name in 1727 (and referred to as John Scott, Senior). James (17th/18th C.) blacksmith at Branxholmtown. In 1714 he (and carrier Robert Scott, possibly a relative) witnessed a birth for Walter Scoon in Commonside. James ‘Laird’ (17th/18th C.) first recorded name of a Cornet, in 1703. We know little about him, although he was probably from the west side of the Slitrig, since the Cornet 2 years later was also from that side. In 1701 he witnessed a baptism for weaver John Lunn, with weaver Mungo Swan the other witness (suggesting that he was also a weaver perhaps). He is probably the same ‘James the Laird’ who is one of the members of Hawick Kirk who objected in 1711 to the appointment of Robert Cunningham as the new minister, on the grounds that he could not be heard in the west-end of the Kirk. His children included John (b.1706), James (b.1708), Walter (b.1710), Malie (b.1712), Andrew (b.1713) and John (again, b.1714), with the mother’s name not given. Thomas and shoemaker Robert, also recorded with the nickname ‘Laird’ in 1693 and 1694, may have been related, as well as James ‘Laird’ recorded in 1676. He may have been son or brother of ‘John Scott called Laird’ who witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1704. James (17th/18th C.) of Westport, merchant, son of Walter (possibly the same ‘Westport’ recorded in a ‘letter of horning’ in 1676). He was Cornet in 1705, and the main leaders of the rebel group in 1706, being fined and briefly imprisoned for his actions against the Bailies. It is probably only a coincidence that the first two known Cornets have the same name! The mention of his name in the Town Book of 1705 contains the first recorded use of the word ‘Cornet’. He was surely related to other Westport Scotts. His father James was already deceased in 1706. James ‘Drover’ (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1712 when his son William was baptised in Hawick Parish. James (17th/18th C.) 4th son of William, who settled at Milsington. In 1717 he married Margaret Rea (probably daughter of Thomas) in Hawick, and they had a daughter Isobel. In 1726 he was recorded as a notary in Hawick. James ‘Doctor’ (17th/18th C.) witnessed a baptism for Black John Swan in 1704, where ‘Doctor’ seems clearly given as a nickname, suggesting he is different from the slightly later surgeon of the same name. He is recorded as ‘distinctione causa called Doctor’ when rebuked in 1716 for being at the drunken brawl at Thomas Huggan’s house; he was stepson to Francis Elliot ‘in Hawick’, and if this was actually ‘Fenwick’, then he was son of Charles of Crumhaugh and Rachel Langlands. James (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His was Sarah Gledstains and their children included: William (b.1720); Jean (b.1721); Walter (b.1723); John (b.1724); Robert (b.1726); Sarah (b.1727); William (b.1730). James (17th/18th C.) ‘chirurgeon in this toun’ (i.e. surgeon in Hawick) who married Margaret Scott in 1724 at Cornhill in Northumberland. Margaret had previously been married to Patrick Scott (also in an irregular marriage), and was sister of the Laird of Burnhead. The minister was Rev. Thomas Blair, former episcopal incumbent of Lennel (Coldstream) who had been ejected in 1689 (suggesting that at least one of the families were adherents of Episcopalianism). The couple were rebuked by the Hawick Session in 1724 for ‘the trespass of their irregular marriage’. It seems likely he was not the same man as the ‘Doctor’ James, recorded earlier. However, he may be the ‘James Scott, called Westport, Doctor’, who was a Bailie in the 1720s. In 1737 he witnessed the baptisms of a child of Walter Tinlin (actually ‘Rob the Naig’) and a child of William Oliver (possibly ‘Auld Cash’). On his death his wife gave £25 4s to the ‘Town for the use of the poor. James (18th C.) younger of ‘Whitefield’, recorded in 1735 (according to James Wilson). He could have been a son of Walter of Whitfield and Harden. James (18th C.) miller at Burnfoot Mill and Crawhill Mill from the 1720s until about 1750, being tenant for the Duke of Buccleuch. He then moved to Hawick Mill, where he was miller in the 1750s. He had at least 6 children by his first wife; this was perhaps Margaret Huntlie, with the baptisms being in Wilton and the children including Jean (b.1721), Margaret (b.1722), Francis (b.1724), James (b.1727), Adam (b.1729), Helen (b.1731), Susanna (b.1733), Robina (b.1735) and Thomas (b.1738). He later had 2 children by his second wife, Margaret Ligerwood (also written ‘Lizzarhide’), including Isobel (b.1745). The witnesses in 1745 were shoemaker John Brown and merchant Robert Scott. His sons and sons-in-law held several other local mills. He is probably the miller recorded in 1760 as witness to a baptism for Walter Purdom and Robina Scott. He is probably the miller whose son Joseph, a wright, had his house at the bottom of the Mill Port carried away in the 1767 flood. James (1701/2–43) tenant in Doveshaugh Mill (in Bedrule Parish), i.e. presumably the miller. He may therefore have been an ancestor of the family that supplied many millers around Hawick. He married Margaret Borthwick (who died in 1734, aged 28). Their son William died an infant. They are buried in Bedrule churchyard. Based on neighbouring gravestones, his father may have been John (who died in 1705), and his son John (who died in the Grange in 1794). Thomas in Bedrule Mill (who also died in the 18th century) may have also been related.

Bailie James (18th C.) Magistrate in Hawick in 1739 and 1740. In 1739 he was one of those appointed to oversee construction of a new Parish School. He may be the Bailie recorded in 1732 when masons were paid in his place (presumably an inn) after putting up the dial of the Kirk clock. He was Bailie along with John Scott in about 1743 when they gave orders to the Burgh Officers to find the animals of the neighbouring tenants pasturing on the common and drive them into the Town. He paid tax on 12 windows in Hawick in 1748. He may be the ‘Bailie James’ (no surname given) recorded in 1752 paying in money for ‘stones of the well’, perhaps related to fixing the Teviot Brig. He may be the Bailie of that name who witnessed a baptism for writer Thomas Winthrope in 1757. He is probably one of the skinners James, John and Walter Scott, recorded as Bailies in the 1740s. He was probably also the James who was a Bailie in the 1750s and 1760s. He is probably the ‘Cuddyfyt’ who lived at the bottom of the Howegate and was elected Bailie many times, lastly in 1765. Rev. James (1717–1773) son of William of Africa and Ashieburn and grandson of Walter of Clarilaw. He succeeded to his father’s estate in 1733. He was licensed as a preacher in 1740 and became minister of the Associate Presbytery Church at Gateshaw (near Morebattle) in 1742. He preached in the open air for 7 years, until a church was built on the Kale. In 1758 and 1759 he paid the window tax in Morebattle Parish. In 1745 he married Alice (‘Allie’), youngest daughter of Ebenezer Erskine, and she died in 1814, at the age of 94; a sketch of her exists. In 1747 he sided with the Anti-Burghers, while his wife’s family sided with the Burghers, and she would thereafter attend the Burgher Kirk in Jedburgh. He was said to be in-failingly regular in his habits, so that people set their watches by him. He had 3 sons: Ebenezer (d.1756), who died young; William (d.1807), who succeeded to Ashieburn; and Ebenezer (again, d.1828), a doctor in Dalkeith. Manuscript sermons of his survive, some published in a volume in 1774. James (18th C.) resident of Craikhope in 1742 when his son Robert was baptised in Robertson Parish. James (18th C.) recorded as ‘Servt. to Borthwickbrea at . . .’ in 1743 when his daughter Janet was baptised in Robertson Parish. James (18th C.) cooper in Hawick. In 1743 he witnessed a baptism for workman Thomas Oliver. James (18th C.) thatcher in Hawick, mentioned in an Edinburgh marriage record of 1766, when his daughter Helen married John Allan. James (18th C.) resident of Appletreehall in Wilton Parish. He married Helen Scott in 1756 and their children included: James (b.1758); Adam (b.1760); Andrew (b.1764); Francis (b.1767); and Margaret (b.1770). The witnesses in 1770 were Thomas Reid and Thomas Scott. James (18th C.) resident of Damside. He married Agnes Allan in Wilton Parish in 1761 and their children included: Robert (b.1764); William (b.1765); Helen (b.1767); James (b.1770); Jean (b.1772); Robert (again, b.1774); and Ketty (b.1778). The witnesses in 1770 were Andrew Turner and Thomas Reid. James (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. In 1760 he witnessed a baptism for blacksmith Robert Young. He could also be the James who witnessed a baptism for carrier John Richardson in 1764. James (18th C.) resident at Whithope in 1763 when his son Walter was baptised in Robertson Parish. James (18th C.) wright in Hawick who was witness to a sasine in 1764. James (18th C.) gardener in Hawick. He married Margaret Cockburn in 1762, the marriage being recorded in Hawick and Ashkirk Parishes. Their children included: Agnes (b.1765); and Janet (b.1768). The 1768 baptism was witnessed by William Scott and William Bower. In 1764 he witnessed a baptism for George Gray and Helen Scott (perhaps his sister), with Walter Scott as the other witness. James (18th C.) tenant in Todshawhill. His daughter Isobel was born in 1765. James (d.1770) eldest son of Robert of Davington, and direct descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane. He was a surgeon in Carlisle and then Langholm. He married Mary Rae in 1728. He had a son James, who died without issue. He also had daughters Elizabeth, Mary, Susanna, Charlotta, Anna and Margaret. His brother John did have children, but this branch also failed in the male line (although there is some dispute over details of these generations). James (1738–1807) tenant farmer of Skelfhill, son of Robert who had farmed there before him. He previously farmed at Gorrenberry, where most of his children were born. He is recorded at Skelfhill on the 1785–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. He married Jean Pott (or Potts), their children baptised in Castleton Parish including Jean (b.1766), Jenny (b.1772), Margaret (b.1773), James (b.1775), William (b.1776) and Gideon (b.1778). One of his children was Betty, born in 1769, who married Adam Turnbull. His son Robert later farmed at Skelfhill. He may be the same James whose son James became a baker’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1770. His son William, of Huddersfield, is recorded dying at Falnash in 1800. He himself died at Skelfhill.

James (d.c.1772) only son of James of Davington and descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane. He farmed at Holm, near Eskdalemuir. He married Christina Stewart. Their only son was Robert, who farmed at Holm and then at Binks. After his death there was extensive litigation over the succession to the estate and it was eventually sold.

James (18th C.) of Boonraw and Sillerbithall. He farmed at Boonraw and was also Laird of Silverbuthall. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. He was an elder of Wilton Kirk. His wife began attending the Anti-Burgher church in Midlem, and it is said that they went to different churches each Sunday, with no disagreements in the family. But when their child was baptised in Wilton, and the minister (Rev. Simpson) used the opportunity to rebuke dissenters, he resolved to leave the established church. A meeting followed with other, like-minded people in 1763, which led to the establishment of the Green Kirk in Hawick in 1766. He was probably the James who witnessed a baptism for fellow Anti-Burgher Robert Smith in 1770 and another for William Cook in 1772 (as well as several other baptisms). As owner of Silverbuthall he got part of the former Wilton Common when it was divided, and this land was later sold to William Oliver by Thomas Scott (who must have been his heir). He was probably also the James, tenant of Wollrig, who sold part of Silverbuthall to William Robertson (of the carpet factory) and James and Walter Knox (in Damside). In 1788 he is recorded as owner of ‘Easterheap or Silverbuthall’, valued at £80. He was probably unrelated to the later James of Silverbuthall. James (18th C.) tobacconist of Hawick. In 1758 he married Margaret, daughter of John Pringle. Their children included: Thomas (b.1759), John (b.1760), Mary (b.1762) and Agnes (b.1765). He may have been related to the later tobacconist. Capt. James of Forge, J.P. (d.1799) only son of William of Meikledale. He was a direct descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane and known as the ‘Laird of Canonbie’. He spent 16 years in the East India Company, where he was in the Bombay Marines. He was J.P. and Deputy-Lieutenant for Dumfriesshire. He married Mrs. Mary Coode in 1764, and she died childless. He secondly married Phoebe, who was daughter and co-heiress of James Dixon of Bath and sister-in-law of George Harris, Lord of Scringapatam and Mysore. Their children were: William (b.1774), who died at Burtpore; Charles (1776–1822), Aide-de-camp to Lord Harris; Catherine Eliza (1777–1853), who married her cousin Capt. Gilbert Richardson and was a poet and novelist; Phoebe Christian (1779–1804) died while visiting her uncle in Madras; Jemimah (b.1781), who married Maj.-Gen. Robert Bell; Sybella Frances (d.1820), who married Adm. Charles James Johnston; and George Fraser (1784–1848), who succeeded to Larriston and took the additional surname Elliot. Rev. James (1733–1818) 3rd surviving, and probably youngest son of Robert of Falnash. He was born at Crawhill in Wilton Parish and was educated in Edinburgh. He was probably brother of Rev. Thomas of Auchtermuchty, although in some accounts he seems to have been confounded with the contemporary Rev. James, minister of the Relief Kirk in Jedburgh. He was educated in Edinburgh, licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1758, ordained at Kinfauns in 1759 and translated to Perth. Second Charge, in 1762, becoming the main minister there in 1771. He gave up because of age and infirmity in 1807. He had a great love of literature and the fine arts and was well known in his day as an antiquarian. In 1784 he founded the Literary and Antiquarian Society of Perth.
James (18th C.) resident of Whitlaw. He married Mary (or perhaps ‘Manie’) Irvine in Hawick in 1765 and their children included: Walter (b.1766); Andrew (b.1768), with the baptism appearing to be recorded twice; Mary (b.1769); Elizabeth (b.1772); James (b.1773); and Margaret (b.1775). The witnesses in 1766 were William Scott and Abel Armstrong and in in 1768 were Abel Armstrong and William Miller plus William Leithead. Rev. James (1738/39–1823) said to have been born in Wilton Parish, he was a member of the Established Church, and was ordained as minister of the Presbyterian congregation in Branton, Northumberland in 1774. He was inducted as 4th minister of the Relief Kirk in Jedburgh in 1783. He served as Moderator of the Relief Synod. He was described as ‘a tall, rather primitive-looking old gentleman’, with a black suit that he used for 40 years. His will mentions his ‘only son Revd James Scott’, minister at Dalkeith and then Cowgate in Edinburgh (and said to be the prototype for ‘Mr. Wiggie’ in Dr. Moir’s ‘The Life of Mansie Waugh’), and daughters Agnes (married to a Laidlaw) and Christian (the youngest). He is said to have been a younger brother of Rev. Thomas of Auchtermuchty, who appears to have been a son of Robert of Falnash; however, there is clearly some confusion with the contemporary Rev. James, minister at Perth. It is unclear which of the 2 men was brother of Rev. Thomas. He paid tax for having a female servant in the 1780s. In 1815 he was becoming old enough that he was supplied with an assistant, who was the next minister, James Porteous. James (1743/4–89) buried in Bedrule kirkyard, adjacent to the Scotts from Lantonhill. He died at Howden in Ancrum Parish. He married Janet Bell, who died at Ruecastle in 1809, aged 67. He secondly married Alison Rae, who died at Marefield in 1823, aged 48. He had a son, Frances, who died in Edinburgh in 1806, aged 35. James (b.c.1745) from Hawick, he emigrated to America in 1775 and lived in Pennsylvania. He married his second wife Margaret Tully in Hawick in 1770. His children were: John; James; Robert; Joseph; Margaret; Isabella, who married William Davis; William; Agnes; Maria; and Thomas. His will and some personal letters survive. James (18th C.) recorded at Woodburn in 1773 when his daughter Janet was baptised in Robertson Parish. James (18th C.) recorded as possessor of a ‘House and yard’ in Minto Parish in 1780. The rental value was 10s. James (b.c.1750) herd in Wauchope. He may have been related to former tenants of Wauchope. He is probably the shepherd at Wauchope recorded on the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. He may have married Nelly Irvine in Robertson Parish in 1780. He had at least one son, Adam (b.1796), who emigrated to the U.S.A. and settled in Ontario. Other children, baptised in Hob Kirk Parish, who may have been his include John (b.1781), Walter (b.1784), Nelly (b.1786, to James in Hillshaugh), Isabel (b.1788), Beatrice (b.1790), James (b.1792) and Robert (b.1800). James (18th C.) skinner in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He may be related to other Scotts who were skinners. James (18th C.) listed as coachman at Stobs in 1785, when he was working for Sir Francis Elliott. In 1786 he was a ‘House Servt.’ and was coachman in 1788 and 1791. James (18th C.) coachman at Cavers in 1785, when he was working for Capt. John Douglas. James (d.bef. 1806) tailor in Hawick. The death of his wife Janet Nichol is recorded in 1806. He was probably related to other tailors called Scott. James (18th C.) recorded at ‘Newmills’ in 1791, when he paid the cart tax in Hawick Parish. He was probably based at Newmill on Teviot. James (18th/19th C.) millwright in Hawick, probably son of Thomas and Christian Weir. A family tradition says they were descended from Auld Wat of Harden. In 1792 he married Elizabeth (‘Betty’) Scott, who was from Ashkirk. Their children were: Thomas (b.1795), who married Janet Notman; Mary (b.1796); Gideon (b.1798); and David (1801–73), who married Janet Wilson. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Brieryshaw in Ewesdale in the period 1787–1797 according to the Horse Tax Rolls. He also paid the dog and clock taxes in 1797. He married Jean Ogilvie and their children included: Janet (b.1777); Jean (b.1779); Mary (b.1785);
Thomas (b.1787); Robert (b.1789); and James (b.1793). James (18th C.) married Nelly Hobkirk in Wilton Parish in 1786. James (b.c.1775) carter on the Back Row. It could be his property marked ‘Jas. Scott’ near the top of the Howegate on Wood’s 1824 map. In 1841 he was living on the Back Row with his children James, Ninian and Christian. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at New Appletreethall, according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 2 work horses. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Jameses. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Denholmhill, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He was probably father of John, who was also tenant at Denholmhill. James (1746/7–1817) tenant at Upper Raw in Castleton Parish. He is recorded there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls along with William; they owned 3 horses. His wife was Margaret Graham, who died in 1831, aged 68. Their children included Margaret (1783/4–1803), Janet (1721/2–1804), Elizabeth (1798/9–1804), Robert (d.1804) and Janet (d.1808). James of Silverbuthall (c.1765–c.1841) teacher at the school in Yarrow, his mother was Agnes (‘Nans’) Noble. He was appointed in 1784, taking over from Alexander Wilson (with George Scott being there briefly). He dramatically increased the reputation of the school, so that it attracted boarders from as far away as Hawick. He focussed particularly on handwriting, English grammar and geography. In about 1816 a cousin of his came to help teach languages and he retired as schoolmaster in 1818. He was said to be of slight physique, even although his mother claimed he was as ‘buirdly’ as the minister; he wore a small yellow wig, as was the custom of the time. He kept bees and also gathered meteorological data, his records of 1837 being used by the minister in the New Statistical Account to describe Hawick’s weather. He was engaged to be married to Miss Anderson from Netherbarns (who had been born in the West Indies), but she was one of 4 young ladies who drowned in the Ettrick in 1800. He came to live at Silverbuthall in about 1822, having bought it after ‘Auld Cash’ died. He was probably unrelated to the James who had lived at Silverbuthall a few decades earlier. He was listed as ‘James, Esq. Silverbuthall’ when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821 and was there in 1825 when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’. He was also examiner at Wilton School. Former pupils from Yarrow were regular guests of his. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. He is probably the James at Silverbuthall described as ‘Ind.’ on the 1841 census. He died at Silverbuthall and his fortune was split among distant relatives. James (18th/19th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1790 he married Isabel Robson. Their children included: Margaret (b.1795); Helen (b.1796); John (b.1797); Betty (b.1800); William (b.1801); and James (b.1806). The witnesses in 1796 were Bailie Irvine and Andrew (who was probably related) and in 1797 were Bailie Irvine and James Richardson. Probably the same merchant James paid the dog tax in Hawick in 1797. James (18th/19th C.) recorded as coachman at Branxholme in 1797, when he was working for Adam Ogilvie. James (18th/19th C.) apprenticed under the care of James Hogg. He sang Hogg’s ‘Address to the Inhabitants of Hawick’ at the ‘rebel’ Common Riding of 1809. He was also the first official singer of ‘Teribus’ in 1819, i.e. the first Common Riding ‘Sang Singer’. He may be the same James who was imprisoned along with James Hogg in 1817 for illegally organising against the stocking-maker employers. He was still alive in 1863 when his recollections provided information for Robert Murray’s article on Hogg. He could be the James (b.c.1794) from Cavers Parish, living on the Loan in 1841, in Orrock Place in 1851 and at 9 Howegate in 1861, whose wife was Isabella and children included Walter (or Peter), Thomas, Benjamin, Gideon, Catherine and Helen. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1797 he married Agnes Renwick and their children included: Elizabeth (b.1798); Francis (b.1808); and Margaret (b.1811). James (b.1775/6) High Street tobacconist. He served as Town Treasurer, and also helped compile a ‘New Valuation of Houses and Gardens in the Town of Hawick’ in 1814. He was one of the founders members of Hawick Curling Club. He was listed as a tobacconist in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories; he may also be the same as the general shopkeeper listed in 1837. His shop was at No. 40 High Street and is marked on Wood’s 1824 map; he may also have been part owner of the premises on the Sandbed marked ‘Tudhope & Scott’. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825 and was probably the ‘Scott of Burnhead’ who provided the version of the Hornshole story, which was included in Wilson’s book; this was the first published account of the origin of the Burgh Standard. In 1809 he married Elizabeth, daughter of deceased Hawick draper George Turnbull. According to the 1841 census his wife was Margaret, and so he presumably re-married. His children included: William (1809–77), Cornet, who helped with the business, and was later a farmer at Burnhead; George (b.1811); Elizabeth; and Margaret (b.1815). His premises (at 40 High Street) are marked on Wood’s 1824 map; he may also have been part owner of the premises on the Sandbed marked ‘Tudhope & Scott’. A portrait of him exists. Based on family names, he may be the James, son of William and Margaret Scott, born in Hawick in 1773. James of Whitehaugh (1775–1852) 3rd son of John. He succeeded to the Lairdship on the death of his brother Walter in 1841. He was the last of the Scott Lairds. He was a member of the Jedforest Club. His residence for many years was at Whitslade. In 1841 he is recorded at Whitehaugh with his elder brother Walter and in 1851 he is at ‘Whitehaugh-place’ with his sister Agnes Stavert, niece Margaret Stavert and 4 servants. He died unmarried. His nephew Capt. John Chisholme inherited the estates (after adding ‘Scott’ to his name). He is buried in Whitehaugh Aisle, along with his brother Walter. James of Ellem (d.bef. 1854) 2nd son of John of Midgehope, who was a younger son of William of Woll. His wife was Agnes, and in 1854, when she was his widow, she purchased Teviot Bank from his nephew John Scott, W.S. They had a son, William John, who married Terese N. Harris. James (c.1780–1820) eldest son of Robert. He farmed at Skelfhill like his father before him. He passed on the lease to William Turnbull of Hassendeanbank. James (b.c.1785) farmer in Hawick, who may have been the older brother of ‘Robbie the Cow’. He could be the ‘Jas. Scott’ shown at 43 High Steet on Wood’s 1824 map. In 1841 he appears to be living with Robert, who was an accountant. James (b.1787/8) farm worker who lived at Wiltonburn Cottages. He was listed among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1840 and 1841, when he was hindent at Wiltonburn. In 1851 he was a ‘hind or ploughman’ at Wiltonburn. His wife was Margaret (from Kirkton) and they had a daugh- ter Christian. James (1788–1855) son of William and Janet Jack. He was a ploughman, working nearly all his life in Hobkirk Parish. In 1851 he was listed in Crailing. He firstly married Ann Dryden and had children: Rachel (b.1819/20); William (b.1820/1); and George (b.1822/3). He secondly married Margaret Byers (from Kirkton Parish), who died in 1880, aged 85, and their children were: Janet (b.1826/7); Walter (b.1828/9); Robert (b.1830/1); Jane (b.1832/3); Andrew (b.1835/6); and Richard (b.1839/40). He died at Ulston and was buried in Hobkirk Cemetery. James (1789–1810) 5th son of Charles, 3rd Laird of Wauchope and Howcleuch. He was born in Hawick Parish. He worked with the East India Company, travelling to India in 1806 and serving in a Madras native infantry regiment. He died unmarried. James ‘Blinnd Jamie’ (18th/19th C.) resident of Hawick in the early 1800s. In 1822 the deaths are recorded of 2 of his infant sons. He may have run a boarding house or inn of some kind, since in 1822 it is recorded that ‘A Poor Woman’s Daughter Died at Blind Jamies’. James (b.1790/1) from Ancrum, he was a joiner on Bourtree Place in the 1841 and 1851 censuses. In 1851 he was living in ‘Mr McKie’s house oppos. Bourtree place’. He was listed as ‘James & Son, East end, joiners and a wheelwrights in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Cecily and they had a son John. James (b.1790/1) from Hawick, he was a gardener in Newcastleton, living on Douglas Square. In 1851 he was at about 4 Whitchester Lane. His wife was Mary and they had a daughter Elizabeth. James (1791/2–1857) mason in Newcastleton. In 1841 he was on South Hermitage Street and in 1851 he was at about 1 Walter Street. He mar- ried Margaret Scott, from Canonbie, who died in 1859, aged 63. Their children included: Andrew (1815/6–58), who died on the passage from India; William (1821/2–55), who died in Hamilton, On- tario; Mary Ann (b.1830); Jane (b.1833); James (b.1835); John (b.1837); and Robert (d.1841), who died in infancy. He is buried at Ettleton. James of Boghall (b.def. 1811). His daughters Isobel, Janet, Margaret and Jane exchanged parts of Boghall with the lands of Boonraw, with Henry Duke of Buccleuch in the period 1811–18. He may have been son of Walter of Boghall, who is recorded in 1757. Rev. James (1799–1864) born in Cavers, son of schoolmaster Andrew and Margaret Telfer. He studied at Edinburgh Uni- versity and became a minister at Torphichen in 1827, moving to Dalmeny in 1829 and Dirleton in 1843. He married a daughter of Walter Baird and they had a large family. Some of his ser- mons were published in 1865. James (19th C.) son of shepherd George and Isabella Hall (‘Tib- bie o Wigg’). He was a farmer at Overhall and well known as a sheep dog trainer. James of Allanshaws (1795–bef. 1863) 2nd son of Walter, tenant in Girnwood, and brother of William in Girnwood. He was a cattle dealer and also farmed at Eilrig and Allanshaws. He succeeded his uncle William to the lease on the farm of Milsington, but lost it in 1831. He was also based for a while at the Crescent, where he is recorded in Pigot's 1837 directory and in the 1841 and 1851 censuses. He could be the James Scott whose property is marked at about No. 12 Slitrig Crescent on Wood's 1824 map. In 1845 he discharged a bond of his uncle's to Elliot of Harwood. His wife was Mary. Their daughter Mary Anne married Rev. John Thomson of St. John's Church.

James (b.1800/1) skinner at Crowbyres in 1841. By 1851 he was listed as a cattle-driver living on the High Street. He could be partner in either 'Nichael & Scott, Punch Bowl close' or 'Scott & Michie, Teviot square', both of which are skinners listed in Slater's 1852 directory. His wife was Barbara and their children included Janet, Margaret, John, Walter, Elizabeth and George. In 1861 he was a skinner at 20 High Street. James (b.1800/1) wright in Lilliesleaf, listed in Slater's 1852 directory. In 1851 he is listed on the north side of Main Street. His children included Jessie, John, James, William C. and Andrew. James (b.1802/3) mill foreman. He was listed as a weaver on Damside in 1835–41, among heads of households in Wilton Parish. In 1841 he was living on Damside and in 1851 on Wilton Path, with his brother Walter, sister Margaret, son John and niece Jessie. He was probably father of John 'the Gover', who was living with his aunt Margaret in 1861. James (1802/3–79) son of Walter, farmer at Howden near Jedburgh, and Christian Grieve. He lived at Hassendean Bank. He married Euphemia Biggar, who died in 1841, aged 30. Their children included: Elizabeth (1831/2–1907); James (1833/4–60; Christina (b.1838/9–1917); and Margaret (1841/2–82). James (b.1803) born in Robertson Parish, son of Walter and Mary Young. He was a shepherd at Eilrig and elsewhere. In 1841 and 1851 he was at Eilrig. He was at the Flex in 1861 and was already a widower by then, living with his son John, daughter Margaret and brother-in-law Thomas Graham. He married Helen Hogg, who died in 1848, aged 47. Their children included: Janet (b.1825); Walter (b.1826); Mary (b.1828); Alexander (b.1829); James (b.1832); Henry (b.1835); Margaret (b.1837); William (b.1840); John (b.1842); and Thomas (b.1844). He died in 1875 and was buried in Robertson Cemetery. James (b.1804/5) probably son of millwright Gideon. He worked as an engineer and millwright in Hawick. He was probably the millwright of that name who is recorded constructing a 300 seat stand (opposite the Steward's stand) for the afternoon Games at the Common Riding of 1834. In 1841 he was living at 8 Cross Wynd with his mother Margaret and siblings May, Gilbert and Andrew. By 1851 he was living with his sister, Mary Kerr, in her boarding house at 6 Cross Wynd. He appears not to have married, and probably died before 1861. James (b.1805) son of Andrew and Joan Hope, he was born in Melrose. He was a farmer living in Lilliesleaf in 1841, where his first 3 children were born. He later moved to be tenant farmer at Coliforthill.

He was recorded there in 1851 as farmer of 281 acres, employing 5 labourers, and also in 1861. He was still there in 1868. His wife was Jane (probably Wilson) and their children included Andrew, Isabella, Thomas, Alexander, John, Joanna, James and George. James (b.1805) shepherd at Eilrig. He was recorded there in 1851, when he was already a widower. His children included Mary, Henry, Margaret, William, John and Thomas. James (19th C.) mason in Wilton Dean. He worked on renovations at Branxholme Castle in 1837. James (b.c.1810) toll-gate keeper at Ashkirk Mill. He is recorded there in 1841, with his wife Margaret and children Janet, Mary, Margaret and Robert. James (b.c.1810) skinner on the High Street. In 1841 he was at about No. 50, while in 1851 his widow (listed as 'formerly skinner') and family were at about No. 6. He could have been partner in either 'Nichael & Scott, Punch Bowl close' or 'Scott & Michie, Teviot square', both of which are listed in Slater's 1852 directory. His wife was Mary and their children included Mary, Ann, Margaret, John, Jane, Wilhelmina, Helen, James and Isabella. James (b.1810/1) recorded as an 'Agent', at 4 Teviot Crescent in Slater's 1852 directory. His wife was Ann. James (b.1816/7) from Kilmallie, near Inverness. In 1851 he was a machine-maker living at Weensland. He was manager of the gas-works in Hawick in 1861. His wife was Margaret and their children included James (married to Helen), Margaret, William, Walter, Andrew, Isabella, Adam, Alexander, John and Robert. James (b.1819/20) from Ettrick Parish. In 1851 he was a coachman at Appletreehall. In 1861 he was listed as an innkeeper at the back house of 6 High Street, which was the Fleece Inn. In 1868 he was listed as innkeeper of the Victoria Hotel. His wife was Margaret from Wilton and they had a daughter Mary, who was born in Ashkirk Parish. James (b.1820/1) from Portobello, he was schoolmaster in Ashkirk. He is recorded there in 1851, with his sister Helen. James (b.1821/2) born in Cavers Parish, he was a joiner, living at Allanhaugh Mill in 1851. His wife was Agnes and their children included Beatrice and John. James (b.1821/2) teacher of English at the small school at Hermitage in the 1850s and 60s. In 1852 he was listed as teacher of the ‘Auxiliary Parochial’ school at Hermitage. He was son of Walter, farmer at Netherraw. James (b.1824/5) shepherd at Singdean in 1861. His wife was Helen and their children included Isabella, Walter and Margaret. His brother Andrew was also at Singdean in 1861. James (1832/3–1908) son of George, he was born at Bedrule. As a youth he worked for Mr. Turnbull of Spittal-on-Rule, then worked at Kinninghall and Greenriver, then briefly at Hawthornside. In 1868 he became farm steward at Hallrule, and remained there for about 34 years. He later became tenant at Bönchester Bridge, then at East Fodderlee. In 1864 he married Ellen (or Helen), daughter of Walter Smith, and she died in 1908, aged 73. Their children included: Isabella, who died young; and Margaret, who married Adam Young. James W. (b.1835/6) from Clarilaw, he was teacher at Cogsmill. He is recorded there in 1857, and still there in the early 1860s. His wife was Margaret and their children included Margaret W. and Archibald. James (1836–1921) son of Henry, farmer at Stelshaw. His sister Marion married Thomas of Milsington. He married Elizabeth Ewart, who died at Stelshaw in 1881, aged 41. Their children included: James (d.1882), who died young at Langleyburn; Grace (1873/4–97), who died in Hawick; Janet (1865/6–99), who died at Kershope; and Mina (1871/2–99). James (19th C.) farmer at Southdean Glebe, recorded there in 1866. James (1844–1928) born at Midlem Burn, a few miles from Selkirk, son of William, who was a mason, his mother being a sister of Rev. Sturrock of the Seccession Kirk at Midlem. He spent 20 years as a mason in Galashiels, moving to Selkirk in 1878. Always interested in nature, and inspired by the great meteor display of 1885, he became fascinated by astronomy and over 5 winters he constructed an astronomical clock (that was 8 feet high and 5 feet wide). This was followed by the construction of a ‘Jupiter clock’, then a ‘solar clock’ and a fourth instrument to demonstrate the causes of the seasons for children. These were shown at the Scottish National Exhibition and later gifted to the Burgh of Selkirk. However, it may be that only one of them survives. James (19th C.) Town Crier of Hawick in the 1880s. James (19th C.) grocer of Wellington Street, who later became an usher with the Court of Session. James (19th C.) Tanner in Hawick, related to the ‘Whack’ Scotts. He married Margaret, daughter of Hawick jailor Michael Anderson. Their children were James, Margaret and Michael. James (1852/3–1908) baker at 25 Howeagate. He married Margaret, sister of newspaper proprietor James Edgar, and she died in 1939, aged 84. Rev. James Brand (19th/20th C.) born in Milnathort, he became minister of East Bank Church in 1900, having been at Saltcoats West (Erskine Church) from 1890. He was involved in the temperance movement. His name is usually written ‘J. Brand’. He moved to Crailing, then Arran in 1925 and Corsock in 1926. James (19th/20th C.) Governor of Hawick Poorhouse in the late 1800s, the precise dates being unclear. James (d.1936) tenant in Redheugh, along with his brother Thomas. In 1918 he and his brother purchased the farm from Anna Mary Elliot. He was killed by a bull in 1936. James Brydon (1894–1958) younger son of Peter and brother of George. He served in WWI. Like his elder brother he was a Director at Pesco’s, taking on this role in 1925 and being the driving force behind the company until his death. In 1918 he married Violet Irene, daughter of John Noble Pillans. Their children were: Peter Brydon (1920–43), who lived in Teddington and died in Burma; and Christine Mary (1925–2001), who lived in Denholm, married Donald Robert McCormick and died in Red Deer. He decided not to live on Sunnyhill along with other family members, but instead moved to Denholm Lodge. He donated a baptisnal font to Denholm Kirk in memory of his son Peter. He died in Milan, Italy. Maj. James Kenny Courtney of Burnhead (b.1928) succeeded from his uncle, Lt.-Col. William Scott-Watson. Educated at Marlborough and Sandhurst, he served in the Hussars and was Assistant Division Commander in Western Australia, Tasmania and Hong Kong. He matriculated arms in 1977 and has no direct ties to the Hawick area. Jane ‘Janie’ (1788/9–1837) wife of Adam Turnbull, bookseller of Jedburgh. She is one of the few people recorded on a tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard. She must have had a connection with the Rulewater area. Jane nee Veitch (b.1800/1) from Langholm, she is recorded as an ironmonger in Slater’s 1852 directory. Her husband was gunmaker and ironmonger Joseph. In the 1851 census she is a widow living at about 21 High Street, employing 4 men in the ironmonger's and tinsmith's business. She is also listed as a tin-plate worker on the High Street in Slater's 1852 directory. Jane (b.1783/4) resident of Brieryshaw in Ewesdale in 1841. She is listed as ‘Ind.’, suggesting that she was a widow with some means. Presumably the same woman is recorded as ‘Jessie’ at Brieryshaw Cottage in Ewesdale on the 1851 census; she is described as an unmarried ‘Annuitant’. In 1861 she was ‘Fund Holder’ living alone at Brieryshaw Cottage. Janet (b.c.1805) recorded as ‘Dealer in Bread &c.’ on Wilton Damside on the 1841 census. She was living with Agnes, possibly a sister, and children William Whitson and James Hardie. Janet (b.1833/4) grocer in Newcastle. She was on Douglas Square in 1861, living with her brother James (a mason), sister Mary Ann Scott and niece Margaret. Janet (15th C.) recorded as ‘Jonete Scot’ in 1487 in a charter for lands in Glasgow. Probably the same ‘Jonete’ is also listed in another charter in 1497, along with Alexander. It is possible that the same Janet leased the lands of ‘Newtown of Reras’in Largs in 1481. It is unclear how she might be related to other Scotts. Janet (16th C.) daughter and heir of Walter of Howpasley, who died at Flodden. She must have been quite young when he died, since she did not succeed to his lands until 1530, before which she was under the guardianship of her uncle Robert. Her brother Robert succeeded to the main lands of Howpasley, while she inherited Appletreehall and Midshiels. She married Thomas MacDowell (or McDougall) of Makerstown. With his consent in 1532/3 she transferred the lands of Appletreehall and Midshiels to her uncle Robert Scott, this being confirmed by King James V in 1536. She was still alive in 1540, when Sir Walter of Branxholme (then in ward) was given permission to pursue legal proceedings against her. Her seal of 1532 shows a ‘bend sinister’ (i.e. the wrong way, probably in error) bearing 3 stars, with a bird and a crescent on the shield. Janet (16th C.) listed in 1539/40 as widow of Robert ‘Elwand of [Toungtis?]’ when she purchased the lands of ‘le cot rig’ in the Mains of Appletreehall from Robert of Howpasley. She paid 120 pounds Scots for the farm and Robert promised to guarantee her and her heirs peaceful possession of the lands until he paid them the same. It is unclear if it is just a coincidence that the former heiress of the lands of Appletreehall was also called Janet Scott (or if perhaps there is confusion over the two nearly contemporary Roberts of Howpasley). Janet nee Beaton (1519–1569) daughter of Sir John Beaton of Creich and Janet Hay. She was the third wife of Sir Walter of Buccleuch and survived her husband by 16 years. She is supposed to have ridden in full armour at the head of 200 Scotts in order to seize the Laird of Cranston at the Kirk of St. Mary of the Lowes in 1559; it may be that he was suspected of being involved in the murder of her husband in 1552. She was also implicated in intrigues involving Bothwell and Queen Mary, and was popularly believed to employ witchcraft. She had married Sir James Crichton of Cranston Riddell, then Simon Preston of Craigmillar and thirdly Sir Walter. She apparently divorced her 2nd husband (the Provost of Edinburgh) and Walter divorced his 2nd wife, so that the two could marry. The inter-relationships of their children are extremely convoluted. For example, her sister Grizel married Sir William Scott of Kirkurd, her step-son! She may also have been the mother of Walter of Goldielands, as well as David of Stobice. In 1542 there was a discharge for her rights to the land of Cranston Riddell and Muirhouse in Edinburgh, and Blackgrain, Catslack and Montbenger in Selkirkshire. In 1550 her son James Crichton leased to her for 19 years the lands of Cranston Riddell, together with Catslack, Montbenger and Blackgrain. In 1552/3 she and her daughters, Grizel, Dorothy, Janet and Margaret were granted the teinds of Lessuden for 19 years. She held the superiority of the lands of Wilton Green, Wiltonburn and Overhall until her death. In 1564 she had an order from Mary, Queen of Scots, recalling the bond made in 1552 between the Scotts and the Kers, which was broken by the Kers murdering her husband, and instructing her to pursue justice for the breaking of the bond (and not formally for the murder!). In 1567 she was instructed to present her ‘householdman and sevant’, Dand Ker ‘in Scheilstokbrayis’, who was among men accused of raiding into England. She is fictionaly represented by ‘the Lady’ in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’ – ‘Of noble race the Ladye came, Her father was a clerk of fame, Of Bethune’s line of Picardie: He learn’d the art that none may name … ’ [SWS]. Janet ‘Jean’ (16th C.) daughter of Sir Walter of Buccleuch and his 3rd wife Janet Beaton; she may have been born before they were married. She herself married John Cranston of that Ilk (who held lands in and around Denholm, and died in 1552); she bore his successor Sir William Cranston. In 1564/5 she was contracted to marry George Ker, younger of although the two ladies were spared, along with Most of the perpetrators were brought to court slaughter 60 sheep of Sir James Douglas in 1615. of Howpastley organise a band of fellow Scotts to named child died. Janet Hawick resident, recorded in 1808 when her un-kirkyard. Janet ‘Cauld Pottage’ (18th/19th C.) Hawick resident, recorded in 1808 when her unnamed child died. Janet (b.c.1785) grocer at Whiteknowe in Castleton Parish. He is recorded there in 1841, as a widow, with her son James and also Jane Webb. She married James Kitchen (also written ‘Ketchin’ and variants), who lived at Roughley. Jasper (17th C.) listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls somewhere near Mangerton in Castleton Parish. His forename is not common in the family. Jean (16th C.) sister of Scott of Buccleuch (although it is not clear which one). She married Gavin Elliott of Stobs, who was a descendant of the Elliots of Redheugh; it has been suggested that her marriage was an attempt to end the feud between the 2 families in the 1560s. The couple owned the ‘sex merkland of Chalmerslane Newtoun’ in 1573, when they complained that Walter and John Scott, possessors of the other half of Chamberlain Newton, attacked her and her husband’s servant James Storie. Jean of Satchells (16th/17th C.). She helped Lady Scott of Howpasley organise a band of fellow Scotts to slaughter 60 sheep of Sir James Douglas in 1615. Most of the perpetrators were brought to court by Sir William Douglas, and eventually hanged, although the two ladies were spared, along with William Scott ‘calt of Satchellis’ who was presumably her son. She may have been the widow of Robert of Satchells and mother of Captain Walter, in which case she was daughter of Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane. Jean ‘Holland’s Jean’ (16th/17th C.) natural daughter of Walter, 1st Earl of Buccleuch, her mother probably being Delia, daughter of Captain Thomas Butler in Holland. Her name suggests that she was born when the Earl was fighting in the Dutch Wars, 1604–9. She married Robert Scott of Whitslade, but they appear to have had no surviving male heirs. Jean (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. She was probably a shopkeeper or lodging house keeper. Jean (17th C.) recorded as a householder at Branxholme on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. She was taxed for 2 hearths, suggesting that she had a larger house or perhaps an inn. It is possible she was the same woman known as ‘Jean the Ranter’ in the poem ‘The Bonnie Lass o Branxholme’. John (d.1203) referred to by English historians around 1200 as ‘Joannes Scotus’. He may have been from Cheshire, but of Scottish parentage, with his mother being sister of Matthew Kynynmouth, Bishop of Aberdeen. He was appointed Bishop of St. Andrews in 1178, but this was against the wishes of King William, who wanted the position for his chaplain, Hugh. He appealed to the Pope, and was successful, but William nevertheless banished him from the kingdom. This led to Hugh being excommunicated, followed by the King himself, with the whole of Scotland placed under interdict. After the Pope died, and a new one was installed, an agreement was reached in which Hugh became Bishop of St. Andrews and he became Bishop of Dunkeld in 1182/3. It seems unlikely he was related to anyone else of the surname Scott. John (12th/13th C.) clerk, recorded as ‘Master John ‘le Scot’ in Reading in 1226/7. Alicia of Oxford appealed that he should be tried before the Bishop of Lincoln, for an unspecified crime. John (13th C.) recorded as ‘Scotus’ in 1228 when an assize was appointed by the Sheriff of York, for men whom he accused of larceny and felony. He was stated to be in the King’s prison at Appleby. John (13th C.) listed as ‘John the Scot’ in 1231 in London, when he was found guilty of masquerading as a clergyman and stealing money from merchants. Presumably a different ‘John the Scot’ was recorded in 1225/6 in relation to a boat from Scotland that had been arrested at Lynn. Sir John (d.1249) son of David, Earl of Huntingdon, who was brother of King William the Lion. He as known as ‘John Scot’, but it is unclear if he was related to anyone else with this appellation. He was knighted at Roxburgh Castle in 1223. He also became Earl of Huntingdon and of Chester. He is probably the ‘John le Scot’ recorded in 1227, when the Sheriff of Huntingdon made a demand on the men in his bailliary. He married a daughter of Llewellyn, King of Wales. John (13th C.) recorded in 1256 as being ‘of Schele’ in a set of pleas at Newcastle-on-Tyne. He was exonerated from murdering Jordan of Clydesdale, but fined for being present. John (13th C.) son of William ‘le Scot’, he was recorded in 1266 in a court case in York. ‘Alesia de Lacy’ was his heir and had a case against Peter, sacrist of the chapel of York. John of Reston (13th C.) son of Patrick. He held the lands of Great Reston, which had previously belonged to his father. The land appears to have been gifted to Coldingham Priory and then purchased by him. He is also recorded in another document of Coldingham in 1261/2. He was succeeded by his brother Patrick, some time in the 1270s. John (13th C.) mentioned in 1261 as son and heir of William ‘le Escot’ in a document relating to Trent in Northumberland. John (13th C.) listed as ‘Johannes Scot’ in the 1256 assize roll of Northumberland. He could be the same man as ‘Johannes Scot de Schele’, who is recorded in a separate case. He could also be the John ‘le Escot’ who was among men sued by the Prior of Tynemouth in 1269 (along with Nicholas and Henry). ‘Johannem Scot’ is listed in 1279 in a case related to lands in Westmorland. John (13th C.) listed as ‘Johannem Scot’, forester of ‘Beleassis’ in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. Possibly the same John listed in a separate case in Coquetdale. Probably a different man of the same name was accused of many robberies, fined and declared a fugitive. John (13th C.) resident of Glasgow. In 1283 he was ‘Johanne Scot’ when he witnessed the sale of a plot of land in Rottenrow. John (13th C.) recorded in 1285 as ‘Master Johannis Scoti de Moneedy’, rector of schools of St. Andrews. He was tenant of the lands of Monethy (in Fife) in 1293 and 1294, and probably belonged to the Balweary branch. He may be the Master John who received the benefice of Brechin in 1274, also holding the church of Cortachy (in Angus). John (13th C.) recorded as ‘Johanni le Scot, majori Novi Castri super Tynam’ in 1290 in a list of provisions made at Berwick for the English King. He was thus presumably a resident of the Newcastle area. He could be the same ‘Johannes Scot, ballivus’ in Tynedale who was listed in another document for Edward in 1292. reign of David II, giving a donation to the Lady Chapel. He was Bailie of Inverness according to the Exchequer Rolls of 1389. John of Headshaw (14th/15th C.) probably son of Walter of Synton (although there generations are very uncertain). He may have been father of Walter of Headshaw. It is possible he was brother of Robert of Stirches, as well as possibly James in Ashkirk. John (15th C.) witnessed the charter passing the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas, 2nd of Drumlanrig in 1428/9. His designation is not given, so it is unclear how he was related to the other Scotts.

John (15th C.) served as the King’s Ranger in the 1440s and 50s, when his name occurs many times in the Exchequer Rolls. In 1440 he was given his fee for the previous 2 years, for the audit associated with Crown lands in Arran and Bute. He was granted the lease of the lands of ‘Barrone’ (probably on Bute) for his fee throughout the 1440s and his name occurs associated with audits in Glasgow in 1453 and 1454. He was recorded as a courier in the Exchequer Rolls through the 1450s and 60s (although he is listed as ‘quondam’ in 1455, suggesting he may have died and that there are thus 2 generations of John here). He was paid his fee relating to Bute and Arran in 1455 and 1462 and in 1468 relating to Ayr. Perhaps the same John is recorded as a servant of the Queen in 1458. His son Ewen also acted as Ranger until the early 1450s, but then his name disappears. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John of Burnhead (15th C.) probably 2nd son of James of Kirkurd, who was a younger son of Sir Walter of Kirkurd and Buccleuch. He received a charter for the lands of Over Newhall from his father in 1492 (it has also been suggested that he could have been a younger son of Sir Walter, but that seems unlikely). ‘Over Newhall’ was later known as Burnhead; he was thus the 2nd Laird of Burnhead. He witnessed the charter in 1494 in which his father granted Galalaw and the Nether Mains of Newhall to his brother David; there he is stated to be his father James’ heir apparent. He is probably the John, son of James of Falside (as well as Kirkurd and Hassendean), who in 1501 had a lease of Falside along with his mother Margaret, on the renunciation of the lands by his father. Also in 1501 he acted as pledge for Robert of Stirkshaws. He was additionally designated ‘of Crowhill’ and may have had a son William, although these generations seem confused. John of Burnhead may have been his successor, although other accounts suggest he died without a male heir. John 4th Laird of Synton (15th C.) probably son of Walter, his mother being a Scott of Hassendean. He married a daughter of Quentin Riddell of that Ilk, but died without issue and was succeeded by his brother Walter. John (15th C.) arrested in 1452 as a rebel, with John Tweeddale being paid a fee for his capture. This is listed under business at Linlithgow in the Exchequer Rolls, but it is unclear to which branch of the Scotts he belonged. John (15th C.) owner of a ‘tenement’ on the south side of Hawick, described in Hawick’s earliest known sasine of 1453. His piece of land was to the west of the property passing from John Turnbull to Robert White. John (15th C.) Bailie of Montrose. He was recorded several times in the Exchequer Rolls of 1450s and 60s as customs officer in Montrose. Probably the same John was also recorded in association with the customs in Arbroath in 1445. John (15th C.) named first on the 1463/4 list of local men rewarded by the King for the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. He was surely related to some of the other Scotts listed, e.g. Robert of Todshaw, who came after him. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (15th C.) held a sasine for the lands of ‘Symentoun and Wester Lynflers’ in Lanarkshire in 1466. He may have been the same as one of the other Johns. John (15th C.) rendered the accounts for Sir David, as Ranger of Etreich Ward in 1473. He may have been a relative of Sir David. John (15th C.) witness in 1475/6 to a document relating to Kirkurd and David Scott of Buccleuch. He is listed as ‘Johanne Scot’ along with William; they may both have been closely related to the Scotts of Buccleuch. John (15th C.) held a sasine for Fingask and part of ‘Rate’ in Perthshire in 1476. It is unclear how he was related to other Johns. John (15th C.) customs officer in Inverkeithing in at least the period 1475–85. He also served as Bailie of Inverkeithing in 1482. He was surely related to David (perhaps his father), who served in the same role in Inverkeithing at about the same time. Either he or a later John was Bailie of Inverkeithing in 1511. Perhaps the same John was customs officer at Montrose in 1471. John (15th C.) recorded as tenant in ‘Ogingstoun’ in Bothwell in 1480. His name was listed first, with other Scotts there being William, junior, Katherine and Robert. They were surely all related. John (15th C.) appointed one of the procurators for Thomas Armstrong of Mangerton in 1482 when he resigned Mangerton to his superior in order for the lands to pass to David Scott of Branholme. His name is recorded as ‘Johannem Scot’.
He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (15th C.) recorded as witness to a sasine of 1483 given by William Douglas, Laird of Cavers, relating to lands in Hassendean. probably the same John is recorded in a ‘letter of reversion’ for the lands of Clarilaw in the Barony of Hassendean, which passed from the old Baron to the new Baron in 1493/4. It is possible he is the same as John of Burnhead or John of Thistlestane. John of Thistlestane (15th C.) recorded in a charter of 1483, when he gained the (western) half barony of Wilton from Henry Wardlaw. He may thus be the first Scott to hold the half barony, although it is unclear exactly who he was. He is also referred to as ‘of Huntlee, in the forest of Ettrick’. He may have been connected with the Howpasley and Tushielaw branch, since Alexander Scott (Clerk of the Rolls for Scotland) was one of the witnesses of the 1483 confirmation (however, it seems too early for him to be the John of Thistlestane, who was probably the grandson of Alexander of Howpasley). It also seems likely he was related to Robert of Muirhouse and Whames, who received the lands of Underchesters from Henry Wardlaw a year earlier. One possibility is that he was another son of the first Walter of Buccleuch, hence brother of David of Buccleuch, Alexander of Howpasley and James of Kirkurd and Hassendean. He was still Baron of Wilton in 1491, when he was asked by the King to receive Alexander, Lord Home as tenant in his lands of Harden. He had a confirming charter for the barony in 1494/5, and was there referred to as ‘Johannis Scot de Weltoun’ in Roxburghshire. He was probably not closely related to Stephen ‘of Weltoun’ (or were other lands, near the modern Cumbernauld) or Stephen’s son John ‘of Weltoun’. It is possible he is the same man as John of Deloraine, who is recorded holding lands in Wilton in 1493. By 1506 the half Barony of Wilton was held by the Earl of Bothwell, and so he must have lost the lands by then (or died) He may be the John who acted as Deputy Warden for Ettrick (for Walter Scott) in 1494/5. It is not known if he had any children and it is unclear who succeeded him as Laird of Thistlestane, but there was a William of Thistlestane mentioned in 1502, probably son of David of Tushielaw. John (15th C.) notary in 1484/5 for the charter in which Sir David of Braxholme gave Whitchesters to his son Robert (of Allanhaugh). Since all the notaries are relatively local he was probably a local cleric. However, this is likely to have been too early for him to be the notary John who is recorded in the period 1527 to 1540. Probably the same ‘Magistro Johanne Scote’ was Rector of Rankleburn in 1491/2 when he witnessed the last will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme (and was bequeathed 40 shillings). He was probably related to Sir David, as well as to the primary witness, William, Rector of Southdean. John (15th C.) recorded among debtors in the last will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme. He owed 15 nobles and is listed as ‘Johannes Scote eius filius’, suggesting that he was a son of Sir David. He is probably the same as one of the other contemporary Johns, e.g. John of Thistlestane and Wilton. John (15th C.) listed as ‘Johanni Scote, pincerne’ (i.e. cup-bearer or butler) in 1491/2 when he was bequeathed 10 sheep in the will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme. John of Todshawhaugh (15th C.) leased the east steading of Langhope in the period 1486–1492. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. John (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when his surety, John of Whithaugh was fined for his non-appearance. He was ‘in braidlee’, which may have been Broadlee in Ashkirk Parish. He was fined again in 1494/5, along with John, son of Alexander in Broadlee. John (15th C.) recorded in the Justice-aire of 1493 as son of Alexander in Broadlee. He was recorded right after John in Broadlee, and hence a different man. He was surety for himself and fined for non-appearance. He was fined for a second time in 1494/5. John of Deloraine (15th C.) recorded in 1493 when he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, being called because of his lands in ‘wiltoun’. It is unclear what lands in Wilton these were (but it is not impossible that he held the half Barony and was hence the same man as John of Thistlestane). He could be the John who obtained remission along with William Inglis at the Justice-aire in Selkirk in 1494/5, recorded in the King’s Treasurer’s accounts. He was also recorded in 1494/5 when he had remission for several crimes, this included resetting ‘John Rede and John Scot-Stow in Tuschelaw’, resetting Hector Armstrong, stealing horses and goods, abetting the English, communing with Robert, Philip and Andrew Scott when they were at the horn, helping John son of Andrew Turnbull of Dryden to steal sheep from the Murrays in Sundhope, killing a man called ‘Colthride’ and resetting thieves of Liddesdale, Eskdale and Ewesdale. Robert of Whitchesters was surety for him. Also in 1494/5 his eldest son Robert was surety for John Reid in Singlie; perhaps the same Robert of Deloraine was allowed to ‘compone’ for crimes... in 1494/5. His son Robert, called ‘Bellit Robin’ was recorded in 1502. He was probably also related to the Scotts of Buccleuch, but the connections of this branch of the family are unknown. John (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as ‘John Scot-Stow in Tuschelew’. meant, or how he might have been related to other Scotts of Tushielaw. Along with ‘John Rede’, John of Deloraine had remission for resetting him; his crimes included stealing sheep from ‘Thomas Johnsone, furth of Quhithop’. He was also listed as ‘Johannes scott-stow in tuschelew’ when he was allowed to ‘compone’ for the crimes of: stealing 26 sheep and a horse from William Wood in Williamshope; stealing 16 sheep from James Scott in Falside; stealing a horse from Broadmoad; stealing 3 oxen and 60 sheep from William Ker in Yair; for common theft and delivery of stolen goods before his previous compounding; and for stealing 4 head of cattle and 20 sheep from the tenants of Yair. His surety was John Murray of Hagnostics. He was presumably tenant in Tushielaw, but it is unclear what the ‘stow’ John (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as ‘gener’ (i.e. son-in-law) to William Little in Thornyleuch. He was found to be infirm at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk, but fined £10. John (15th C.) son of Henry in ‘conwale riggis’. He was recorded in 1494/5 when he was surety for himself and was fined for non-appearance in Selkirk. John (15th C.) tenant in ‘ernheuch’ (i.e. Erncleuch) in 1494/5. He was allowed to ‘compone’ at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk, his crimes including: stealing 2 cows from Harthern; bringing in thieves ‘de levyn’ to raid Thomas Middlemas in Ploro; the slaughter of Middlemas’ wife and 2 sons; stealing a black horse from Jedburgh; stealing 16 sheep; stealing 5 head of cattle at different times from Harthern, as well as goods; and for common theft before the date of his previous compounding. His sureties were Robert of Allanhaugh and Adam in Annelshope. He may also be the John who was allowed to ‘compone’ along with Adam in Annelshope in 1494/5, for a set of rieving crimes. He is recorded in 1494/5 having received remission from the King. John ‘Little’ (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as ‘parvo Johanne scot’. He had sheep stolen from him at Howford by David Lauder and others, for which Lauder was allowed to ‘compone’. It is unclear if he was related to later Scotts of Howford. John (15th/16th C.) husband of Margaret and father of Alexander. He was already deceased in 1499 when his widow and son were granted the East stead of Langhope and in 1501 when they were granted the Middle stead. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘in Northhous’ in the Register of the Privy Seal of 1498 when he and John Turnbull (from Dryden) received a pardon for their crimes of assisting the English ‘of Levin’ (presumably relating to a particular raid). He is ‘Johanne Scot de Northous’ in 1500 when he witnessed a sasine for Scott of Branxholme. In 1501 he was pledge for David Elphinstone when he was assigned the farm of Glensax in Ettrick (he may thus be the John who had 7 stirs stolen from Glensax by Sir Thomas Turnbull in Phau according to the Justice-aire of 1494/5). He may be the same John in ‘Northhous’ who had 20 oxen and cows stolen from him by John Dalgleish and others in about 1510, which, together with other crimes, led to Dalgleish’s execution. John (15th/16th C.) one of two men of the same name recorded in a document relating to Uddingston, in the Glasgow chartulary, listed as ‘Johannem Scot’. 2 Roberts are also listed, as well as the widow of another John. They were all residents of Uddingston, and were presumably related. John (15th/16th C.) described in the Register of the Privy Seal of 1499/1500 as ‘in Wiltoun’ when he received remission for helping the rebels ‘of Levin’ in murder, pillage etc. John of Whitehaugh (15th/16th C.) recorded in the 1493 Justice-aire in Jedburgh when he was fined for the non-appearance of John in Broadlee. His name is recorded as ‘Johannis scot de quhithalch’. Perhaps the same man is listed in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501 among mostly local men who had been fined; he appears there as ‘Johannis Scot in Quhithauch’. In 1502 he was ‘in quhithalch’ when he had remission for stealing 23 sheep and a horse from William Wood in Williamshope; stealing 3 oxen and 20 sheep from the tenants of Yair; when he had remission for stealing 23 sheep and a horse from Adam Scott out of Kershope, and separately for stealing cattle from John Romanno of Romanno, with Robert in Synton as his surety. He was probably related to the slightly earlier Walter of Whitehaugh, as well as later Scotts of Whitehaugh. John (15th/16th C.) resident of Hermiston recorded in 1502 at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. He had remission for stealing 40 sheep from Philiphaugh, with his surety being Robert in Synton. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when Hector Lauder in Clerklands had remission for stealing livestock and goods from him out of Whitslaid, in the company of a gang of Arm- strongs. It is possible he is the same man who also tenanted Hoddom House at the same time (where the same people also raided). It is unclear how he might have been related to the Scotts.
of Whitslade. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1502. Hector Lauder in Clerlands had remission for several crimes, including stealing 40 cows from him out of ‘hodem hous’ (possibly Hoddom House), in the company of the Armstrongs. John (15th/16th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls as Bailie of Irvine and custom’s officer there in the period 1508–13. Perhaps the same John was Bailie of Irvine recorded in 1538 and 1546. He was probably related to Robert, who was also in Irvine around 1540. John of Haining (d.1513) son of Robert of Haining. He was recorded as son of Robert of Haining in 1482, with his son Robert mentioned in 1488. In 1494/5 he was recorded as son of Robert when he had some of his sheep stolen from Haining. In about 1499 he had the lease of the Crown lands of Haining (along with his son John) with the permission of John Murray of Falahill. In 1507 he had a charter for the lands of Haining. He was surety for Thomas, brother of Philip of Headshaw in 1510, when Thomas was convicted of being part of the killing of John Murray of Falahill. He was killed at Flodden and his son Robert was served heir in 1514. He had another son, Walter, who served as ‘tutor’ for his nephew Thomas during his minority. It seems that he also had another son, John, who leased Haining along with him in about 1499. John of Borthwick (15th/16th C.) possibly father of John ‘the faster’, as well as another son, who was father of Walter of Whitehaugh. He was surely related to the Scotts of Buccleuch, and may have been the same as one of the other contemporary Johns, e.g. John of Roberton. John (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘in Orchard’ (i.e. Orchard) when he witnessed a document for the Routledges of Crook in 1529/30. His son was also John. He was surely related to other contemporary Scots, but the precise relationship is unknown. John of Borthaugh (15th/16th C.) eldest son of George of Borthaugh, by his first wife (who was his cousin). In 1526 he is recorded (as ‘of Burnthauch’) in a protest by Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig, who was superior over some of his lands. Also in 1526 he is probably the John ‘in Borthauch’ listed among the Borders men given remission for their earlier attack on the Earl of Arran; the brothers Walter, Philip and George are listed after him. In 1526/7 he had a charter ratified for the lands of Muirhouse in Edinburghshire. In 1527 he is among the local lairds, led by Walter of Branxholme, who had remission for their part in the Battle of Skirmish Field. He is recorded in the Register of the Privy Seal for 1527. There was dispute over succession to the lands of Borthaugh, Commonside and Dryden and ‘the Wallis in Dryfesdale’ (probably Dryfesdale near Lockerbie), because his father had sworn on his deathbed that his 1st marriage had not been fully legal and hence inheritance should go to the eldest son of his 2nd marriage, Walter. A set of arbitrators (all Scots) in 1528 found that he should inherit, since he had never been declared illegitimate, but that ‘Quhonnis’ and ‘Woltoun Greyne’ should go to his brother. He is recorded in a ‘discharge’ of 1528/9 relating to lands of several local Scots, e.g. he is there recorded as holding ‘lands of Drivisdal and 40s. land in Woltoun’ (probably Dryfesdale near Lockerbie and some lands in Wilton); it is therefore possible that he is the same man as John in Walls. In 1530 he was listed among the Lairds who submitted themselves to the King’s will in order to better keep order on the Border. He sold the lands of Borthaugh to Roger Langlands of that Ilk sometime before 1531. This may have been to settle debts with Lawson of Highriggs in Edinburgh. John of Robertson and Walls (d.bef. 1535) probably son of Stephen of ‘Weltoun’, who was also of Muirhouse and of Castlelaw (or Castlecarly). He was probably also closely related to John of Thirlestane who held the half-barony of Wilton from 1483 until at least 1491. He is recorded as ‘Johannes Scot in Wallis’ in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501; most of the other 15 men listed along with him were from the area immediately around Hawick. Around 1501 he had disposed of ‘Weltoun’ (probably the name of lands near Cumbernauld associated with Castlecarly and not the western half-barony of Wilton), and was now ‘of Valis’ (probably ‘Walls’ or ‘St. Michael’s Walls’ in Dryfesdale, north of Lockerbie and not the more local ‘Woll’ or ‘Wells’; however, it is not impossible that the earlier designation gave its name to the lands of Woll later). In 1502 he is recorded as being of ‘Valis’ when he acted as surety for Walter Scott of Headshaw and also ‘in Walis’ when he was surety for Hector Lauder in Clerlands. Also in 1502 he was ‘in le walis’ when he had remission for stealing a horse from Adam Murray at Muselee and 3 horses from Lord Cranston at Kirkhope; his sureties were Robert in Synton and Walter of Headshaw. Additionally in 1502 he served as surety for Hector Lauder in Clerlands. In 1502 he acquired the lands of Roberton (which had belonged to a branch of the Scotts more than a century earlier). He also held a sasine for the lands of Howcleuch in 1520. In 1526 he was ‘in the Valys’ when listed on the remission given to a large number of Borders men for attacking the Earl of Arran; his sons Stephen and George are also listed. In 1527 he was among the local lairds given remission for mustering their supporters at Melrose (i.e. Skirmish Field) and Linlithgow; he is there ‘of the Valis’. He was one of the Scotts who was on the arbitration panel to decide on the disputed succession to the lands of Borthaugh in 1528. He is recorded as holder of ‘5 merklands in Dryvisdaill’ (Dryfesdale, near Lockerbie) in a discharge relating to ‘non-entry’ in 1528/9. He is also mentioned (along with several other Scotts) in the indenture of 1529 intended to reconcile the feuding Scotts and Kerrs. In 1530 he was listed among the lairds who submitted themselves to James V to keep better order on the Border. He may have died shortly afterwards, since Walter of Robertson is mentioned in 1535. His son George is recorded receiving a pardon in 1527 (probably after being outlawed for rieving). The celebrated faster, John of Borthwick, may have been a member of the same family. He was succeeded by Walter of Robertson and then Stephen of Robertson (probably a younger son). It is possible he was the same man as John of Borthaugh. John of Ashkirk (d.1526) killed at the Battle of Skirmish Field, when the Scotts and their allies tried to wrest control of the young King James V from the Earl of Angus. In the indenture signed by Scotts and Kerrs 3 years later, one of the agreements is that Mark Ker of Dolphinston and Andrew Ker of Gradun shall visit the 4 main pilgrimage sites of Scotland, saying a mass for his soul, and those of the other Scotts killed in the battle. He was probably related to the James recorded in Ashkirk in 1502 and Walter there in 1533. John of Hassendean (d.c.1530) brother of David of Hassendean, from whom he succeeded. He is recorded in 1528/9 for ‘non-entry’ of his lands at Galalaw. He married Agnes Scott and died without a son. His heir was his brother’s son (some accounts say his brother) William of Hassendean, who received the lands of Falside in Selkirkshire in 1539. John (16th C.) local clergyman. It is possible there was more than one man of this name, but it seems reasonable to assume that the notary of the 1520s was the same as the Vicar of Hawick Kirk in the 1530s and 40s. He was notary in 1527 to the agreement ending the feud between Sir Walter Branxholme and James Murray of Falahill; he is recorded there as ‘Schir Johne Scot, notar public’. He was ‘Sir John’ when he served as notary for a document of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme (witnessed at Branxholme) relating to the Barony of Kirkurd in 1527. And he was notary for the document giving the decision on the disputed succession to Borthaugh in 1528. In 1528/9 he was ‘Sir John’ when acting as notary for the discharge by Patrick, Earl of Bothwell to Walter Scott of Branxholme. He is surely the ‘Schir John Scot, vicar of Hawik’ who witnessed an agreement between James Murray of Falahill and Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1528. In 1530 he was Vicar of Hawick when he was recorded as a procurator for several men in Selkirk for an action brought against Patrick Murray, Sheriff of Selkirk; he also brought an action in Selkirk ‘in name of his brothers and others’ against Alexander Tait ‘lord of Pirne’. In 1530/1 he was ‘vicar of Hawick’ when he witnessed the marriage contract between Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Janet Kerr. He was ‘vicar of Hawyk’ in 1534 when he was a witness at Hassendean Kirk for the sealing of a letter of reversion when Gavin Elliot sold the lands of Nether Galalaw to William Scott. He was Rector of Hawick Parish from at least 1536; a record in the Register of the Privy Seal has him taking over the Rectory following the decease of Alexander Murray (although this was probably much earlier); he is recorded as ‘D. Johannis Scott’. He was Vicar of Hawick, recorded as a witness to the 1537 Charter of Douglas of Drumlanrig. In the Charter he is not mentioned explicitly as the chaplain (to whom 2 particates of land are assigned), although he himself is separately listed as having 4 particates, and other clergymen are also mentioned; it is therefore unclear what his position was at St. Mary’s, but probably he held the ‘living’, without being the preacher. In 1537 there was also a priest of Glasgow diocese of the same name who was notary for a sasine for the lands of Meikledale. In 1539/40 he was ‘the venerable man John Scot vicar of Hawik’ in a record of a sale of land at Appletreethall (by Robert Scott of Howpasley to Janet Scott, widow of Robert Elward), contained in the Selkirk Protocol Books. Probably the same man was notary for a ‘letter of reversion’ of 1540 between Simon Scott of Fennywick and William Scott of Harden (since the witnesses are all local men, although there is some ambiguity, since ‘John of Wod’ was the last witness on the related bond). In 1544 he is also described as Vicar of Hawick when he resigned lands at ‘East Mummawe’ to John Scott of Burnhead; this suggests he may have been related to... the Scotts of Burnhead. He may have still been Vicar in 1550. His brother's great-grandson William in Catslack was served heir to his lands of East Moormaw (in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton) in 1606, thus establishing a connection between him and the Scotts of Catslack. Perhaps the same 'Sir John Scot, notar publick' drew up the bond of 1548 when the Elliots entered Robert Crozier as a prisoner with the Laird of Ferniehirst. In 1538 there is a 'Preceptum Legitimationis' for James, natural son of John Scott, Vicar of Hawick; thus he had at least one son. The fact that he witnessed or notarised several documents for the Scotts of Branxholme suggests that he may have been related to the Laird in some way. John of Borthwick (16th C.) celebrated faster, part of a local branch of the Scotts. He was possibly son of John of Borthwick and descended from the Scotts of Buccleuch. Scott of Satchells says he was 'cousin-german' to Walter of Whitehaugh. He came to notoriety about 1531 and was written about by Archbishop Spottiswode. He is supposed to have been unable to pay the costs following a legal case and sought sanctuary near Holyrood, where he abstained from food and drink for 40 or 50 days. This drew the attention of the King, who shut him up in a room for some of this period (however, it may be that the period was more like 32 days). He claimed he received sustenance from the Virgin Mary and when done 'came into thee street, half nakede, and made a speech to the people which did flock aboute hym'. He then went to Rome with a certificate from the King, was examined there by the Pope, and given a priests habit and certificate that he had lived 'sine cibo et potu per centum et sex dies'. After that he travelled to Jerusalem, apparently stock-piling up on palm leaves and stones from the pillar on which Christ was scourged before returning to England. There he cursed the behaviour of King Henry VIII, was arrested, and spent 50 days in prison, again apparently without food. He was sent packing to Scotland, and the last mention of him is in 1541 when 22 shillings were paid to 'John Scott, callit the Sanct, at the King's com-dem' – 'To John of Borthwick, who fasted so long, Three sundry times he did perform'[CWS], 'Bare-bread and water the king allowed for his meat, But John Scott refused, and would not eat; When the forty days were come and gone, He was a great deal lustier than when he began'[CWS]. John (16th C.) son of John. He and his father were described as being 'elder and younger' tenants of Orchard when they witnessed a 1529/30 instrument of resignation for the Routledges of the nearby lands of Crook. John (16th C.) owner of 2 participes of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick's 1537 Charter. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns (but not 'Sir' John the priest, who is listed separately). Another John was also listed as holding 2½ participes on the same side of the street. A piece of land lying between one of these John's lands and that of John Short to the west was reserved for Sir James Douglas according to the 1537 Charter. John (16th C.) resident of Whames, recorded in 1549 when tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme complained about their farms being burned by a group of Englishmen and Kers in the previous year. He may be related to William, who was tenant of Whames at that time. John of Robertson (d.c.1566) probably son of Stephen 'in Valis', who purchased Robertson and Howeleuch from his brother Walter of Robertson in 1535. In the 1540s he acted as surety for James White, tenant of Borthwickshiel. He is recorded as deceased in 1566 when the rights to his son and heir John's ward and marriage fees were given to Robert Scott. John 'the Clerk' (d.1564) recorded in 1562 along with his brother Robert 'of Colfurd' and Hob 'Wait Aboot Um'. The 3 men were excepted from the bond between the Scotts and the Kers, and were instead to be pursued for their crimes. He was convicted for sheep-stealing and related crimes and hanged, along with Hob 'callit of Colyfur'd', Mark Elliot 'callit of the Hill' and John Henderson 'the Falser'. It is unclear where exactly he came from, but perhaps the Slitrig valley. John of Synton (d.bef. 1557) probably son of Walter 9th Laird of Synton (although these generations are very confused), whom he predeceased. His mother was probably Walter's first wife, who was a daughter of Cockburn of Ormiston. In 1530/1 he was recorded as son and heir of Walter of Synton when he was entered in ward at Borthwick Castle, along with William, son of Robert in Allanhaugh. Sureties for them were Robert, Lord Maxwell and John Johnstone of that Ilk. His sons were probably: Walter of Synton, who succeeded his grandfather Walter; George of Synton, who succeeded his older brother; William, tenant in Langhope, ancestor of the Scotts of Huntly; James, tenant in Dodbank, ancestor of the Scotts of Satchells; and Robert of Shielwood. 4 of them were mentioned as present in the attack by the Scotts on the church of St. Mary of the Lowes in 1557. John (16th C.) described as ‘in Dringston’ (i.e. Drinkstone) when he was witness to a 1556 charter dealing with the lands of Nether Harden. Also recorded as ‘in Dringston’ when witness to a sasine in 1559. In 1566 he is ‘Johne Scot of Dryngston’ when he had a letter of reversion for the lands of ‘Litill Dryngston’ in favour of Robert Scott in Hassendeanburn on payment of £70 Scots. He is probably the same ‘Johne of Dringestoum’ who is listed in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1574; he had sold a piece of land to Robert Scott of Over Hassendean, the money being held by Scott of Branxholme’s agent John Watson. He may also be the John ‘in Drinkston’ who was listed by Scott of Satchells as being among the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch and descended from the Scotts of Roberton. And he is probably the John ‘in Dringstone’ who signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. Sir John of Thirlstane (d.1549) probably son of David of Tushielaw, grandson of Sir Alexander of Howpasley and brother of Adam of Tushielaw, ‘King of Thieves’. With Robert of Howpasley he entered a ‘bond of manrent’ with Malcolm, Lord Fleming (Chamberlain of Scotland) in 1535. In 1541 he is recorded as tenant in Gilman, Lord Fleming (Chamberlain of Scotland) in 1535. In 1541 he is recorded as tenant in Gilman. He was probably the only Baron to declare his support for James V at Fala Moor in 1542, coming ‘into the King’s host at Soutray Edge with three score and ten lancers on horseback of his friends and followers’. As a result the family were given arms with the royal fleur-de-lis and motto ‘Ready, aye ready’ (however, the veracity of this story is challenged in some accounts, and the relevant warrant is considered by some to be a forgery). He is probably the John ‘in Thirlstane’ who along with his son Robert witnessed a bond signed in Hawick in 1543, between Nichol Graham and Sir John Johnstone of that Ilk. In 1549 the Commendator of Melrose granted a discharge of all duties etc. on his lands of ‘thirlstane, ramsclewis, scadcleuch, craig and kirkhop’ now that he was deceased. Satchells (probably his great-grandson) says he married a daughter of Scott of Allanhaugh (possibly Robert, who owned land in Hawick and lived about the right time). His children included: Robert, who succeeded: Philip of Kirkhope, who was 1st husband of the youngest daughter of Walter Scott of Synton and Whitslade; Andrew, who died without issue; Simon of Newburgh; and William, who witnessed a contract for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1567. He secondly married Marion Douglas and had another son, James of Gilman-scleuch. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘Bailzie’ as witness to a sasine of 1558. The purchaser of the land in the sasine was James Scott, alias ‘Bailzie’, so there may be an error or confusion here. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘Johne along with Simon in about 1557. They were sons of the ‘guidman of Alanehauch’, who was probably either William or Robert (or possibly Adam), when they rented Stobicote from Melrose Abbey. John (16th C.) tenant in Catslack. In 1563 he was involved in a dispute over land with William Elliot, 5th Laird of Horsleyhill. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts associated with Catslack. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) one of the tenants of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outtersiderig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for them in Hawick, that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. John ‘the Braid’ (16th C.) recorded in 1569 along with Airchie of the Bush and Tom of Blackhall, as those men for whom Tom ‘callit the Stowir’ was held as pledge in Ravensheugh Castle. He was thus one of the Scotts of Ewesdale at that time. John of Dryhope (16th C.) 2nd Laird, succeeding Simon. He was listed among many Scots and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. He was father of Mary ‘the Flower of Yarrow’. He signed the marriage contract for his daughter with Walter Scott of Harden in 1576/7 (despite the fact that Sir Walter Scott of Abbotsford said that her father was Philip, and many others followed this version of events). He may also have had a daughter Christian, who married James Tweedie of Fruid. The testament of his wife Margaret was written in 1581/2. He signed the clan bond in 1589. It is unclear how he was related to the 1st Laird, Simon. He may have been father of the next Laird Philip, as well as Philip’s brothers: Simon of Montbenger; Andrew; Adam; and Walter. John of Burnhead (d.1582) probably son of John and great-grandson of Sir Walter of Kirkurd and Buccleuch. He granted a charter to John Scott, Vicar of Hawick, for Easter and Wester Moormaw (later called ‘Lees’, near Appletreethall) in 1535 and 1539. He also granted a precept of legitimization to John’s son James (suggesting they were related perhaps). John, the Vicar, resigned his lands of Easter Moormaw in 1544, and he further granted a precept of sasine to John’s son James in 1556. He is said to have lived to an advanced age. He was probably succeeded... by his son Robert. John ‘Johnnie’, ‘Philip’s Jock’ (16th C.) resident of Hawick who was named in a court case at Leith in 1571, along with Allan Deans, George Maxwell and Robert Scott. This was in connection with the on-going efforts of the Warden and the people of Jedburgh to quell the activities of the Kerrs of Ferniehirst. His name is recorded there as ‘Philpis Jok’ and the cautioner was Sir William Ker of Caverton (the younger of Cessford). In 1572/3 the same men swore allegiance to the Crown and gave assurance that they would not help or reset Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and others, with Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig as their cautioner. His son ‘Johnnie’ was involved in another case in 1574, along with Allan Deans and John Cavers. His father was presumably Philip, but it is unclear if he is the same as one of the known men of that name; it is possible he was the Philip recorded in 1549 at Wiltonburn complaining about Walter Ker of Cessford. John (d. bef. 1582) tenant of Montbenger. In 1582 his widow, Margaret Lowes, complained that a gang of Armstrongs and others raided the farm of ‘Eister Montberngier’, stealing about 360 sheep and all the goods from there, and then attacking Deuchar. His sons William and Adam were also mentioned, with Adam being kidnapped by the rievers. John (16th/17th C.) brother of Walter of Chamberlain Newton and son of Margaret Turnbull. In 1573 he was declared a fugitive for non-appearance when he, his brother Walter and mother Margaret, were charged with attacking the half of the farm of Chamberlain Newton occupied by a servant of Gavin Elliott of Stobs. He and his brother David were witnesses in 1588 to an instrument of sasine for Walter Scott of Howpsley as heir to his father Sir Walter of Birkenside in the lands of Appletreehall and Midshiels. John of Middlestead (16th/17th C.) listed by Scott of Satchells among the men who were on the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. John of Roberton (d.1606) mentioned in 1566 as son and heir to John of Roberton, when his wardship was given to Robert Scott (it is unclear which Robert this was). Perhaps the same John signed the Scott bond of clanship in 1589. He must have been related in some way to James of Roberton, recorded in 1578. Scott of Satchells says that John Scott of Roberton was among the 33 chosen to accompany Buccleuch to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596; this was probably him. He was succeeded by his son William of Roberton in 1610. John (16th/17th C.) listed as being ‘in Stouslie’ (i.e. Stouslie) by Scott of Satchells when he listed the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch, probably relevant to the period around 1600. It is unclear how he might have been related to other branches of the Scotts. John (16th C.) recorded as Reader of Hassendean in 1575. He may be the ‘Sir John’ who was in dispute over the Vicarage of Hassendean with Ninian Westmin in 1550. Presumably the same man was the Reader of Southdean 1579–82. It is not impossible that he is also the same as the minister of Ashkirk etc. In 1582 he was one of 6 preachers (including readers from Hassendean, Lilliesleaf and Ashkirk) who were deprived for ‘abusing the sacraments’. They were excommunicated in 1588 for continuing in the offence, but yielded when threatened with death in 1590. The precise basis of the theological disagreement is unclear, but it may suggest that he had been a Catholic priest before the Reformation. John of Foulshiels (16th C.) probably either the son or grandson of William, the first Scott of Foulshiels. In 1592 Walter Scott was surety for him. He subscribed to a deed of loyalty in 1593. He was probably succeeded by James. Rev. John (16th C.) became ‘exhorter’ at Selkirk and St. Mary’s of the Lowes in 1568. Probably the same John is recorded as schoolmaster in Selkirk in 1571. He is recorded as Minister of Ashkirk in late 1573. By 1575 he was Minister at Ashkirk, with Selkirk, Kirk of the Lowes, Ettrick and Rankilburn also in his charge. However, James (not John) Scott was also recorded as Reader in 1575, becoming Vicar in 1586. In 1576 he complained to the Privy Council that he had been dispossessed of the ‘half town and lands of Elistoun’ in the Lordship of Melrose by Thomas and then Robert of Haining. He had titles showing that his predecessors had been in possession of these lands as kindly tenants. John (16th C.) tenant of Newark, as described in Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch’s last testament of 1574. He could be related to the later Chamberlain of the same name and location, who was son of James of Newark. Hence he could have been father of James of Newark, and presumably descended from one of the other family branches. John (16th C.) said to have been the 6th son of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden. He was killed during a hunting trip by one of the Scotts of Gilmancesleuch, who then forfeited their lands to his father, who is supposed to have said that they were worth a dead son. There is a story about how his body lay uncorrupted for many years in the vault of Hassendean Kirk, as a result of being treacherously slain. His death may have been the inspiration for the ballad ‘The Dowie Dens of Yarrow’, but could also be confused with the murder of ‘Auld Wat’s’ other son, Walter in Essenside in about 1616 or Walter of Gamescleuch in a duel in 1609. John of the Palace (16th C.) servant of Walter Scott of Synton. He is mentioned in the 1580s when charged with resetting 4 horses stolen from Ewinston, one of which he kept for himself. He is recorded as ‘Johnne Scott of the Palace’ and described as ‘sic ane dissolute and lawles persone as he will not compeir for na chargeis without his said master present him’. His master was subsequently pronounced rebel for not appearing. His place of abode was probably related with the area later referred to as ‘Palace Waas’. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) recorded in 1585 among a long list of men under the superiority of Lord Maxwell, receiving remission for any past crimes (perhaps associated with the raid at Stirling). He is listed as a tenant farmer at Arkleton. John ‘the Tinkler’ (16th C.) tenant in Harwood. In 1585 he was one of the witnesses to the bond in which Sir Walter of Branxholme and Robert of Allanhaugh resolved a family feud. He is is recorded as ‘Johne Scot, callit Tynclair, in Harret’, and he signed by ‘twychand the pen’ (meaning that he was unable to write). He was also ‘the Tinkler’ when among men complained about by the English Warden for a raid into England in 1587; his son Andrew ‘the Breedie’ was also listed, as well as Adam ‘little Peck’. His name occurred first on the list of Scotts, Laidlaws, Olivers and others, and they were accused by Percival ‘Clemeell’ of leading about 500 men on a day-long foray in which they took 80 cows, 7 horses, goods worth £20 and ransomed 8 prisoners. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Johns. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘Johnne Scot in Teuidside’ in the 1594 ‘respite’ by King James VI for the murder of Lord Maxwell and others at Dryfe Sands. His name occurs near several other local Scotts, but it is unclear where he was tenant. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘in ORMISTON’ when he signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. It is unclear how he was related to other contemporary Scotts. However, Adam in ORMISTON, recorded in 1592, seems likely to be related. John (16th C.) listed as ‘Johnne Scot in Dellorien’ (i.e. Dellorain) among those implicated in the 1593 slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Dryfe Sands. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘in Commonsde’ when he signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. It is unclear how he may have been related to other Scotts. He may also be the Scott of Commonsde said to have been involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. John (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘servant to Sir Walter Scott of Brankxhame’ in 1597 when he and Simon Armstrong of Mangerton were delivered to Lord Scrope to be prisoners within Carlisle. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John of the Toor (d.bef. 1609) succeeded by his son John in his lands in Hawick. He is referred to as being ‘called of the Tour in Hawick’ later in 1609 when his son David brought an action against the Turnbulls of Barnhills. He may be related to the earlier Robert and later William, who are also ‘of the Tour’. John ‘Jock’ (16th/17th C.) mentioned in 1598 in complaints from Sir James Sandilands that he was among a group of Armstrongs, Elliot and others who stole from his lands and ‘slew and dismembered divers good subjects who rais to the fray’. He is recorded being called ‘Stowre of Quinksleuch’ (perhaps Whinscleuch) and he is listed after Adie ‘the Peck’ and hence perhaps related. He may be the ‘Johne Scott, callit the Stowr’ who had been warded with Henry Lord Sinclair, but released by 1573 (and this seems likely to have been an error for Thomas). John (16th/17th C.) described as ‘of Monks-tower’ by Scott of Satchells, among the 24 ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch. He was said to be ‘brother to old William Scott of Al- toun’, but his connection to other Scotts is unclear. John the Clerk’ (16th/17th C.) resident of ‘Erlig’ recorded in 1612, which could be Eilrig in the Borthwick valley. James Noble in East Burn of Stobo complained to the Privy Council that he had not found caution for killing his father. He could have been related to the earlier John called ‘the Clerk’. John (d.c.1625) probably the eldest son of James of Hundeshope. He was possibly the ‘Johnne Scot in Hundenshop’ recorded in 1583/4 when there was caution made that James Gledstains of Cocklaw and his tenant Thomas Burnet and other tenants would not harm him; Robert of Thirlestane and Sim of Wintervurgh received the cautioner. He is referred to in 1596/7 as ‘sometime in Hundillishoip’, when he was part of a group of Scotts, under Robert of Thirlestane, who attacked lands owned by the citizens of Peebles. His brother Thomas was also in the armed group. He is also named as ‘portioner’ of Hundeshope in several documents in the period 1607–17, and is listed among supporters of Scott of Thirlestane in their feud with the Scotts of Tushielaw. In 1612 he was ‘of Hundelishoip’ on the ‘retour’ panel for Tweedie of Drumelzier.
Also in 1612 he was listed among Scotts and others accused of overcharging interest on loans. In 1618 he was ‘portioner of Hundlishoip’ he had a charter of the lands of Hundleshope and others within Peeblesshire that had previously belonged to the Gledstains of Cocklaw. He was succeeded by his son John in 1619, and his son also gained his lands of ‘Alcolmefeld, Wodgrewington’ and pasturage of Cademuir in Peeblesshire in 1625. His son John was recorded as a creditor of Sir John of Newburgh in 1631. John of Bonnington (16th/17th C.) son of Adam and brother of Simon of Bonnington. He was probably present at the Carlisle raid in 1596 in which Kinnmont Willie was freed. He was tried in 1601 for the murder of Archibald Napier of ‘the Wownet’ (Woolmot, near Edinburgh). Along with 3 other Scotts, Walter, James and William ‘in Schostanis’ (all brothers of Robert of Bowhill), he was convicted and ‘put to the horne’. He was referred to as being ‘in Quholplaw’ (probably Whelplaw in Lauderdale) and ‘alias callit Johne of Bonytoume’. It is unclear why this group of Scotts attacked Napier. He was probably also the John, brother of Simon of Bonnington who was part of a group of Scotts who attacked Adam Veitch’s lands at ‘Fechane’ in 1602. He appears to have succeeded his brother Simon to the lands of Bonnington in about 1622, but died a few years later. He succeeded his brother Simon and deceased nephew Robert to the lands of ‘Ernesheugh’ and Singlie in 1624. He is probably the same John who was accused of murdering Walter ‘in Essenside’, son of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden in about 1616, abetted by his brothers Simon and Adam and ‘Will’s Sym’ of Thirlestane. Since the murderer was said to be a Scott of Newhouse, then perhaps they were related to the Bonnington Scotts. If this was the same man, then he must have been acquitted. He succeeded his brother Simon in the lands of Bonnington, but these went to Andrew (surgeon in Edinburgh) in 1624, and later to William Burnet, his grand-nephew. He was in succeeded in his other lands by his son Robert. John (16th/17th C.) brother of Walter of Woll. Scott of Satchells lists him among those involved in the rescue of Kinnmont Willie in 1596, and refers to him as being ‘of Ashkirk’. He is recorded in 1608 among a party accused of attacking and maltreating some residents of Selkirk. His half-brother John Turnbull (apparent of Harden) was his accomplice, and they attacked the ‘knokkeiper’ John Jackson, apparently after they were ‘hounded out’ by Robert Scott of Haining. After the pair were apprehended by the Bailies of Selkirk a group of Scotts and their followers (from Thirlestane, Bowhill, Synton and elsewhere) freed them. Along with his half-brother John Turnbull he was ordered to be imprisoned in Edinburgh or declared rebels.

John (16th/17th C.) tenant in Ettrickhouse, recorded in 1609 among the supporters of Scott of Thirlestane in their feud with the Scotts of Tushielaw. He may be the ‘Jocky ill-to-haud’ who was a natural brother of Sir Robert of Thirlestane, mentioned by Scott of Satchells. Sir John of Newburgh (16th/17th C.) son of Arthur of Newburgh. Scott of Satchells describes him as ‘that Prince of Poets than whom Chaucer, Glovet, Sir Thomas More and Sir Philip Sydney never had a more Poetic Vein’. He was served heir to his father in 1610, in the lands of Winterburgh and ‘Fawodgrange alias Craighall’ in Ettrick Forest. He was bonded in 1610, along with his brother Arthur and John of Hundleshope, for not harming Walter of Tushielaw and his sons. In 1626 he is listed as owner of a ‘£4 land’ in the Barony of Belses, part of the temporal lands of Jedburgh Abbey. In 1631 he complained against Andrew Scott, surgeon in Edinburgh. He was listed on the last testament of Water, Earl of Buccleuch in 1633. He was probably succeeded by his son John. His natural son David is recorded in 1640 in a document relating to the Scotts of Thirlestane. He also had a daughter who married Sir Walter Scott of Whitslade. John, son of Andrew (surgeon in Edinburgh), who inherited Winterburgh in 1636, was surely related. John of Drinkstone (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1603 on a list of landowners in Hassendean Parish whom the Baron, James Cunningham, tried to oust. He was presumably a direct descendant of the earlier John ‘in Drinkstone’ and related to the George ‘callit of Deringstoun’ recorded in 1616. John ‘Wat’s Jock’ (d.bef. 1610). In 1610 his son Bailie Robert and his wife Helen Turnbull had a sasine for a tenement off the Kirkywnyd in Hawick. His father was presumably Walter. One of the witnesses was ‘Jock’s Wattie’, who could have been another son. He may be the same man as ‘Jok Scot, duelland in Hawik, callit Wattis Jok’ named in 1581, along with Scotts from Allanhaugh and Over Southfield, when they were forgiven for the murder of George Scott (resident of Hawick) 3 years earlier. And also the ‘Johne Scot, alias Wattis Jok, burges of Hawik’ who was one of the witnesses to the bond in which Sir Walter of Brauxholme and Robert of Allanhaugh resolved a family feud; his brother Thomas (also a Burgess) was also a witness. John ‘Jean’s John’ (16th/17th C.) son of the deceased ‘Symme Scot in Southfield’, recorded in 1609 when he was among several men fined for harassing Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane. The other men included 2 sons of Kinmont Willie, suggesting he was part of a gang of would-be rievers from Liddesdale. It is unclear if this Southfield is the one near Hawick. John (16th/17th C.) served heir in 1609 to his father John, who was ‘called o the Toor’ in Hawick. He also had a brother Dacid, who is also recorded in 1609. It seems likely this was a property-owning family of Scotts who lived at the Tower Knowe in the 16th and 17th centuries. Their relationship with other branches is unknown. John ‘Jock’ (16th/17th C.) bellman of Hawick who is mentioned in a murder trial of 1612, the events taking place in 1610 (and described in Pitcairn’s ‘Criminal Trials’). He was presumably a Burgh Officer, one of the earliest on record. John ‘Bonnie Johnnie’ (16th/17th C.) nickname for a Hawick resident, recorded in a 1612 document along with a number of people accused of over-charging interest on loans. He is there listed as ‘Bony Johnne Scot’ and he appeared in court to answer the charge. Presumably the same man is recorded as ‘Johinne Scott callit Bony Jony’ in the 1616 trial of the men accused of salughtering the Laird of Drumlanrig’s sheep at Howpasley. Along with James Wemys and James Lethen, he helped take the pistol from ‘Marion’s Geordie’ Scott before he could shoot James Douglas. It is unclear to which branch of the Scotts he belonged. John of Newark (d.1622) son of James. His father left him Newark (although it is unclear whether this was ownership or tenancy) in the early years of the 17th century. He is described as ‘in Newark’ when he served as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for ‘the Forest’ in the period 1609–15. In 1608 his son James was among a group of Scotts and others who were accused of attacking Selkirk Mill. He may be the John ‘in Newark’ listed among local men accused of overcharging on interest by the Privy Council in 1612 (but omitted from the list of those found guilty). In 1618 his son Walter Scott was convicted of mutilating 3 fingers of Adam, son of John Dalgleish of Deuchar. He married Agnes Simpson and their children included: James, who succeeded; Robert, Burgess of Selkirk; and Walter in Broadhaugh. His son Walter had cautioners George of Castleside and Robert of Hartwoodmyres, suggesting they were close relatives. John (16th/17th C.) brother of Walter, Laird of Tushielaw, and younger son of William of Tushielaw. Along with his son William (a minor at the time) he was accused in 1607 of killing John, father of John Govane of Cardrona (a family that would later connect with the Scotts of Tushielaw through marriage). He was the uncle of the John Scott who killed Walter of Thirlestane in a duel. John of Kirkhouses (16th/17th C.) from a branch of the family near Ashkirk, son of James. His grandfather was George Scott of Synton. He inherited the lands from his father in 1609. He was probably the John ‘in Kirkhouse’ who signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. In 1614 he was summoned (along with his kinsman Robert Scott of Salenside) to appear before the Presbytery to answer to charges of murder. He is probably the John of Kirkhouses who was part of band of Scotts that forcibly took the farm of Hartwoodburn from its tenant in 1627. John of Hundlehope (16th/17th C.) son of John. He was served heir to his father in 1619 and succeeded to his father’s lands in Peebleshire in 1625. In 1629 he and his wife Helen Geddes had a charter for the lands of Hundlehope and others. He was recorded as a creditor of Sir John of Newburgh in 1631. John ‘Jock’ or ‘the Suckler’ (d.1616) son of Thomas of Nether Braidlie. He was one of the men involved in the slaughter of Sir James Douglas’ sheep at the instigation of Lady Scott of Howpasley in 1615, apparently in revenge for Douglas taking lands at Howpasley. He was the first to be sent for by Lady Howpasley, and at the Market Cross of Hawick he met with Jean Scott of Satchells and ‘Marion’s Geordie’. After the plan was hatched, he met some of the others at the foot of the Eilrig Burn in the Borthwick valley. The other men involved were George, Walter and Ingram Scott, and William Scott of Satchells, the first 3 all being caught and hung at Edinburgh Cross after Jock had turned informer. His disposition claimed that George had threatened him when he had second thoughts about going through with the crime; when faced with this George asked him to repeat the statements to his face, which he did. For thus turning informant he was declared to be of lesser guilt and left in prison after the 1616 trial. However, later that same year he himself (mis-transcribed as ‘Jok the Suttler’) was hanged at the same place for sheep stealing; the specific charge was for taking 4 sheep from ‘Adam Almouse’, tenant at Muselee, as well as ‘ane zow and ane hog, pertaining to George Scott, callit of Deringstoun’ from his lands at Castlehill, ‘ane blak zow, pertaining to Rowie Scott, called Rowie of Huttikill, furth of the Lyn besyde Eilig’ and 7 ewes from James Rowie in Raeburn. These crimes took place 1612–14. Sir John of Scotstarvit (1585–1670) descended from Robert of Allanhaugh, son of Sir David of Buccleuch. He succeeded his grandfather in 1592, at the age of 7. He had the tower of Scotstarvit rebuilt near Cupar in Fife, which still survives. He was a Judge, Directory of the Chancery, Lord of Session and Privy Councillor, but lost his positions when Cromwell occupied Scotland. He assisted Walter, 1st Earl of Buccleuch to run his estates while he was fighting in Holland, and carried the coronet at the Earl’s funeral. Along with Sir William of Harden he went to court to hear the King’s ruling on the land dispute between Francis Stewart and the Earl of Buccleuch in 1634. He was appointed as one of the ‘tutors’ for the children of the Earl of Buccleuch and served as one of the trustees for Mary, when she succeeded to the Buccleuch estates. He was the last of the original tutors named as ‘sine quibus non’ by Francis Earl of Buccleuch, but lost control to Gideon of Highchester and the Borders tutors. He was instrumental in having Pont’s maps of Scotland published by Blaeu in 1654, and contributed to the accompanying text. He also wrote ‘The staggering state of the Scots statesmen’, containing satirical sketches of prominent Scotsmen of his age (and back to 1550), published eventually in 1754. He married Anna, daughter of Sir John Drummond of Hawthorn Dene. Their children were: Robert, who died young; Sir James, who succeeded; Sir John; William; Alexander; Robert; Ludovic; Margaret; Jean; Helen; Eupham; Anna; Eliza; Rebecca; Elizabeth; Margaret; and Janet. His second wife was Margaret Melville, with whom he had a son George, and he thirdly married Eupham Moneypenny and had sons Cecil and Walter. It seems that in 1651, when the Scots of Buccleuch failed to have a male heir, he was the most senior representative with an unbroken male succession. His descendant, David, was an M.P. in the mid-18th century, but the branch failed in the male line in the early 1800s. John (16th/17th C.) ‘brother-german’ to Walter in Allanmount in 1606 when he purchased the lands of Hobburn Weens from Thomas Turnbull. He was thus the first of the Scotts of Weens. In 1610 he is recorded as ‘of Weenis’ when he was part of an inquest. In 1612 he was ‘in Weneis’ when he was Bailie to Sir Andrew Ker of Oxnam for a sasine in Rulewater. He is referred to as ‘called of Allanmount, now in Weymes’ in a sasine of 1617 when he gained a bakehouse in Jedburgh from baker Henry Cunningham. He may have been a son of the William of Allanmount who is recorded in the late 16th century. He seems likely to have been father or grandfather of the later Andrew of Weens. John of Mackersway (16th/17th C.) younger son of Sir Walter of Tushielaw. Note that another John, accused in 1607 of killing the father of John Govane of Cardrona, was his uncle. According to Satchells he was one of the men who took part in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. He was listed as ‘Jhone Scott, his sone lawfull’ after Walter of Tushielaw, when they were witnesses to a report of the bailie court of the Regality of Melrose in 1607. He was described as ‘John Scott, called of Tuschelaw’ in a charter of 1618. His natural son Francis was also witness to the charter, as were Robert, ‘fiar of Tuschelaw’ (his older brother) and Sir Walter ‘of Tuschelaw’ (his father). He was the John, who killed Walter of Gamescleuch (or Thirlestane), recorded in the Selkirk Presbytery records of 1609 and possibly the inspiration for ‘The Dowie Dens o’ Yarrow’. He was excommunicated after this, but his pardon by James VI for the slaughter of Walter Scott, brother of Sir Robert of Thirlestane, is recorded in 1614 and after due repentance his status with the church was reinstated in 1615. He is probably the John, brother of Robert of Tushielaw who witnessed a bond for Thomas Turnbull in Spitalon-Rule in 1619 and who witnessed a bond in 1620 between Thomas Turnbull, tenant at Spittal-on-Rule and Robert Pringle, servitor to Sir Gideon Murray of Elibank. In 1620 he was served as tutor to William, Marion, James, Elizabeth and Margaret, children of his brother James of Glenrath. He married Jeanne, daughter of Patrick Murray of Falahill. He had at least one legitimate son, Walter. John (16th/17th C.) son of Walter of Chamberlain Newton. He is probably the John of Chamberlain Newton recorded in 1612 when he and Michael Hunter of ‘Pomnu’ complained to the Privy Council about several Stewarts. In 1619 he signed a bond in Hawick with Adam Turnbull of Abbotrule, which was registered in 1624. Witnesses included William, ‘fiar of Quhithauch’ and Walter ‘called of Altoun’. It is possible he is the John of Brieryards whose nephew William of Chamberlain Newton was served heir to his lands of Brieryyards and ‘Braidleyis’ in 1633 and 1637. John (16th/17th C.) tenant in Brieryyards. In 1611 he was fined for the non-appearance at court in Jedburgh of Robert in Hawick, ‘called Symmeis Hob', and Walter ‘called Dandis Wattie’. It is unclear how he was related to other local Scotts. He could be the same man as the later John of Brieryyards, brother of William of Chamberlain Newton. John (16th/17th C.) tenant in Whithope. He was listed in 1627 as one of 9 men charged with performing a valuation of the lands in the Parish of Hawick. It is possible he is the same James ‘in Quhyhope clerk in this detail’ who acted as clerk for an indenture between the March Wardens in 1594/5. John (17th C.) recorded in 1632 as possessor of the Liddesdale farms of ‘Rouraltonholme’ (probably at Ratlon) and Auldshiels. John (17th C.) recorded in 1632 as joint tenant, along with Gavin Elliot, of the lands of Over and Nether ‘Closse alias Welshaw’ in Liddesdale. John (17th C.) recorded in 1632 as ‘bailee in Liddisdail’ in a document listing the possessors of the lands that made up the Lordship of Liddesdale. He possessed the lands of ‘Flocksteid alias Flasket’. He may have been bailie to the Lord of Liddesdale. John (d bef. 1634) described as ‘burgess of Hawick’ in 1634 when his son William became a wright’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He may be the John who acted as witness for the Hawick Parish valuation in 1627. John (17th C.) son of Andrew, who was a surgeon and Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1636 he was served heir to his father’s lands of Winterburgh with mill in Ettrick Forest, as well as ‘Fawoodgraing alias Craighill’. It is unclear how he was related to earlier Scotts of Winterburgh. John (17th C.) tenant in HowPasley. In 1635 he was served heir to his grandfather Alexander, ‘commonly called ‘Land Sandie’ in Hawick. John of Huntly (17th C.) son of James ‘called of Huntly’. He was served heir to his father in 1639 in the lands of Langhope in Ettrick Forest, as well as ‘Fawoodgraing alias Craighill’. He is one of the last recorded Lairds of Huntly. However, Walter of Huntly is recorded just a few years later, in 1644, so possibly his brother. John of Catslackknowe (17th C.) descended from the Scotts of Montbenger, and before that the Scotts of Dryhope. He may have been son of Walter of Montbenger and father of Rev. James of Kirkton and Ancrum. However, Rev. James’ father may instead have been Walter of Catslacknowe. It is unclear if he was related to the John of Catslack recorded in 1563. John (17th C.) recorded as being from Borthaugh in 1642 when he acted as an appraiser in a Magistrates Court case involving someone’s livestock eating someone else’s oats. He could be related to the John who previously owned Borthaugh. John (d.1646) possibly an illegitimate son of Sir Walter ‘the Bold Buccleuch’. He was Provost of Crichton. In 1632 he was recorded as ‘brother natural’ to Sir Gideon Murray of Elibank, who was given the rentals from Crichton; this suggests he was a son of Sir William of Kirkurd and Grizel Beaton (who secondly married Andrew Murray of Blackbarony), however, it seems more likely he was from the next generation. He bore the arms of Montgomery in the funeral procession of the Earl of Buccleuch in Hawick in 1634. In 1643 he received a gift of 400 merks from Francis Stewart, Earl of Bothwell ‘for advancing his fortoun’. John (17th C.) described being ‘callit of Borthwick’ in the 1643 valuation of Roxburghshire, when his lands in Hawick were valued at £10. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Johns. He may have been related to earlier Scotts of Borthwick. Mary Scott, listed right after him in 1643, had land in Hawick valued at £3. John of Gilmансcleuch (17th C.) probably eldest son of Robert. He is recorded owning the lands in 1628 and was made an Honorary Burgess of Selkirk in 1643. In 1643, 1644, 1648 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire. He is recorded writing to Sir William Scott of Harden in 1656, regarding the valuation of his lands. He was fined in 1662, after the Restoration, presumably for being a Covenanter supporter. He was probably the Scott of Gilmансcleuch who entered into a teind agreement with the curators of the Duke of Buccleuch in the late 1660s. He was probably father of Francis. His son may have been John of Rennaldburn (although this may be confused). John of Rennaldburn and Newburgh (d.c.1672) grandson of Arthur of Newburgh, and son of Sir John. He may also have been knighted himself. He held the lands of ‘Renalburn’ (or ‘Rennaldburn’) near Eskdalemuir (the later farmhouse there said to have been the first house built by Thomas Telford when he was an apprentice). He inherited Newburgh in 1654, being served heir to his grandfather Arthur. In 1656 he witnessed a charter (for lands in Dalkeith) for the Duchess of Buccleuch. In 1661 he is described as ‘callit of Newburgh, lait bailzie of Esdaill’ when listed owning more than £2500 to the Duchess of Buccleuch. He was recorded in the Land Tax Rolls for Ancrum Parish in about 1663. From 1666 he was ‘tutor and curator’ for Francis of Davington (to whom he was distantly related), son of Sir John of Thirlestane. In 1670 he infested Sir James Johnstone of Westerhall in the Barony of Westerhall. He was Chamberlain for the Duke of Buccleuch for Eskdale Parishes from the mid-1650s until the early 1670s. About this time other people stood in for him, suggesting either he was dead or incapacitated. However, John of ‘Rennelburn’ is recorded in deeds of 1682. He married Margaret Canide. His 2nd daughter Janet married Adam Elliot of Meikledale. His son John was also Chamberlain for the Duke of Buccleuch. Other children were James (b.1623) and Marie. John of Gorrenberry (d.1668) natural son of Walter, the 1st Earl Buccleuch, by Annas (or Agnes) Drummond. In 1629 he was given the lands of Gorrenberry as well as others. He acted as Chamberlain to the Buccleuch estates for Eckford, Langholm, Lempitlaw and Liddesdale from the 1640s to the late 1650s. He was also Chamberlain for Teviotdale-head in the 1680s. His lands in Castleton Parish were valued at £1600 in 1643. In 1643 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire and in 1643, 1644, 1648 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. In 1648 there was a letter to him from Earl Francis, discussing the teinds of Eckford and the Mains. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves on the Border. He is probably the ‘John Scott, bailiff and B. brother to the Lord of Buccleuch’ to whom a complaint was made in 1650 about some of Cromwell’s soldiers having their horses stolen in the Borders by tenants of the Earl of Buccleuch. He served as one of the ‘tutors testamentars’ for the will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch and was probably also the John, youngest natural brother of Earl Francis, who was given a sum of £100 annually in his brother’s will. In 1654 he witnessed a contract of wadset for the Lorraines of Appotside (and may be the John who witnessed Lorraine baptisms in Hawick in 1655 and 1657). He was legitimated by Cromwell in 1656. In 1650 he was named as one of the ‘tutors’ for the children of Francis Earl of Buccleuch and was probably also the John, youngest natural brother of Earl Francis, who was given a sum of £100 annually in his brother’s will. In 1654 he witnessed a contract of wadset for the Lorraines of Appotside (and may be the John who witnessed Lorraine baptisms in Hawick in 1655 and 1657). He was legitimated by Cromwell in 1656. In 1650 he was named as one of the ‘tutors’ for the children of Francis Earl of Buccleuch in his will and served as one of the tutors of Countess Mary during her minority, signing a letter protesting against her ‘pretendit’ marriage in about 1659. He also was involved in a law suit with some of her other guardians in 1659 over breaking the locks on her charter chests. In 1661 he was listed as still owing about £9000 to the Duchess of Buccleuch for rentals in Liddesdale, where he had been Chamberlain. He was recorded paying the land tax (of £1600) in 1663. He was probably the first Scott of Gorrenberry, and may have married a Riddell. His son and successor was Francis. He had other sons: David, who was living in 1670; John, who became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1663; and Robert, who was living in 1668. It is also possible that Walter of Alton was another son. His sons and grandsons and those of Walter of Alton Crofts were mentioned in 1681 as among the potential heirs of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. John (17th C.) recorded as Bailie of Hawick in 1648/9. He may have been the same John who was described as ‘maltman’ in the 1638 ‘leet’ for Bailies, and in the following year in reference to money gathered relating to soldiers in the Town. He was probably also one of the 2 councillors of the same name (one of whom is described as a merchant) who signed the 1640 Act of Bailies and Council. He is also recorded as appraiser (for eaten oats) in a Magistrate’s Court case in 1642. He served as Bailie in the 1650s and may be the John who was Procurator Fiscal of Hawick during some of the 1660s. John (17th C.) recorded as ‘John Scott Alton’ in 1644 when he was among Hawick men mentioned in relation to raising money and supplies for the Covenanting army. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Sir John (c.1615–66) 2nd son of Sir Robert of Thirlestane, with his 2nd wife Katherine Jardine. He was younger brother of Sir Robert, who died without children. He was served heir to his brother Sir Robert of Crookston in 1621. In 1632 he is described as son and heir of his father Sir Robert in a document relating to the lands of Altrieve and Corsecleuch in Selkirkshire; Robert, son of Walter Scott of Burnfoot is also mentioned, and so possibly a relative. He was involved in a court case in 1634 (referring to a contract of 1623) with Sir William Scott of Harden and Robert Scott of Heads- haw, over the lands of Thirlestane. In 1637 he had a decree of adjudication relating to the lands of Bourhope brought by Robert Scott of Whit- slade, and decrees of appraising over the same lands with Patrick of Tanlawhill (his cousin) in 1642 and Robert of Whitslade in 1643. In 1641 he signed a contract with his cousin Patrick relating to the Thirlestane estate, but the terms were not clearly specified, and also Sir William of Harden resigned the Thirlestane estates to him, the 2 doc- uments being signed in Hawick. This was impor- tant for the subsequent dispute of succession be- tween him and his cousin Patrick of Tanlawhill, fought (and lost) by his descendants in court in the period 1727–44. His cousin Patrick clearly manipulated the situation (even having him imprisoned in Selkirk and in Home Castle) and eventually claimed the Thirlestane estates outright, although he was still fighting for his family lands.

until his death. He was served heir to his father Sir Robert in 1642 (perhaps as part of the legal battle). In 1643 he was referred to as ‘son and heir of the late Sir Robert’ of Thirlestane when Patrick Scott had a charter of the lands of Crookston and others that he had owned. He was also involved in a dispute with the Scotts of Buccleuch over the lands of Fingland, Davington and others in Eskdale. He sided with Charles I in the Civil War, joining the Marquis of Montrose and is said to have been at the Battle of Kilsyth, being knighted about then. He was sequestrated by Parliament and fined by Cromwell, only being rehabilitated at the Restoration, but dying shortly afterwards, his loyalty to the crown contributing to him losing his claim to the Thirlestane estates. He continued to use the designation ‘of Thirlestane’ until his death, although he only managed to hold onto the farms of Davington and Cassock near Eskdalemuir. He still owed money to the deceased Earl of Buccleuch in 1660. In 1643 he married Euphame (or Euphemia) Young, widow of Sir David Ogilvie of Clova (his comrade in arms). Their children were: Francis of Davington; and Katharine, possibly an ancestor of James Scott of Calfield. He secondly married Margaret, widow of Robert Scott of Hartwood- myres. John of Allanhaugh (17th C.) probably son of William of Allanhaugh (or perhaps Walter of Allanmouth). He was listed in a county valuation of Hawick Parish in 1643, with his lands valued at £110. It is possible he is the same as John of Weens, recorded in the earlier 1600s. It is possible that Elizabeth Turnbull, ‘relict of Allan’, was his wife; she jointly paid the land tax in Hassendean Parish in 1663, along with James of Whitslade. John of Todshawhill (d.c.1653) recorded in the 1643 county valuation of lands in Hawick Parish, with the value being £133 6s 8d. In 1631–37 he was a Chamberlain for the Scotts of Buccleuch for rents in part of Branxholme and Wilton. He may be descended from Andrew of Todshawhill, who was one of the 24 ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch. John of Yorkston and Headshaw (d.c.1646) 2nd son of George of Synton. His lands may have been near Temple in Midlothian (unless there is another place of the same name). He is probably the ‘brother german’ of Walter of Synton who in 1609 was involved in a sasine for the lands of Satchells. In 1629 he purchased Headshaw and Langhope from the old family of Scotts of Headshaw. He is recorded in the period 1631–42 as Chamberlain in Liddesdale to the Scotts of Buccleuch. In 1632 he had a feu-contract with Thomas, Lord Binning for lands in Belses. He is probably the ‘John of Syntoune’ who, along with Robert Pringle of Stichel, captured ‘Geordy Armstrang of Dykraw’. In 1634 he was part of the Earl of Buccleuch’s funeral procession in Hawick, where he carried the arms of Douglas of Angus. He appears to have repurchased Headshaw, Dryden and other lands in 1636. In 1637 he was ‘Johnne Scot of Heidschaw, baillie of Liddleis- dale’ when he witnessed a document for the sale of Harwood. In 1638 he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick as ‘Johne Scott of Heidschaw’. In 1643 he was listed as owner of Dryden, valued at £290, as well as Headshaw, ‘Crawknows, and Cleuches’, valued at £760 10s. In 1643 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. He was also on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1644. His son William of Headshaw is also mentioned in Buccleuch accounts for 1646, was served as his heir in 1653 and had a sasine as his heir in 1655. He was also recorded in 1660 (after his decease) when the curators for Mary Scott of Buccleuch tried to recover a debt from his sons William and John, owed to her father. His children were: William, who succeeded; Walter of Dryden; John of Langhope; Mungo in Dryden; and Robert, also in Dryden. John (17th C.) recorded as being ‘in Castlehill’ in 1631–48 when he was Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for Eskdalemuir and Westerkirk Parishes. In 1633 he was listed as a ‘servant’ of the deceased Earl of Buccleuch who was still owed his fee for the year. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Johns. John (17th C.) elected to the Hawick Council in 1648. His designation was given as ‘Ormiston’, suggesting that he lived there. He was probably related to James of Ormiston and the later John of Ormiston. John (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was married to Bessie Gledstains and their children included: Beatrix (b.1636); Anna (b.1639); and Walter (b.1648). John of Clerklands (17th C.) landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, according to James Wilson. He paid the land tax on £180 in Ashkirk Parish in 1663 and £182 in 1678. He may have been the same as one of the other local Johns. John (b.1620) son of John of Rennaldburn and New- burgh. He was probably the John of Rennaldburn who was served heir to his father John in 1673 and also in 1697. He was referred to as ‘Squire of Newburgh’ and ‘alias of Rennalburn’. His father was ‘tutor’ for the young Francis of Davington, whom it is said he ‘tried to encroach upon . . . and would have deprived him of his remaining estate, but for the friendship of Sir Francis Scott of Thirlestane'. Like his father, he served the Scotts of Buccleuch. He was Chamberlain for Eskdalemuir, Ewesdale and Waunchopedale from the 1670s through until 1692 and a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685. He also had a court case against Francis Scott of Thirlestane around 1676. He was living at the time of publication of Scott of Satchells doggerel history (1688). He was named as an agent of the Duchess of Buccleuch on the rental rolls for Branxholme in 1690 and 1692. His son was James. John of Satchells (17th C.) recorded in a deed in 1655. He was probably a younger son of Robert, with his brothers being William and Capt. Walter. He may have succeeded his brother, but they both probably died without heirs, since Capt. Walter appears to have succeeded on returning from the wars. John of Brieryyards 'of Briddieyards' (d.bef. 1667) local landowner of the mid-1600s, brother of William of Chamberlain Newton and possibly son of Walter. In about 1621 he had a charter of the lands of 'Caффald' from the Commendator of Melrose. In 1638 he was appointed as tutor to Walter, son of William of Chamberlain Newton, his brother. In 1638 he signed the 'Confessions of Faith' in Hawick. He was recorded as owner of 'Briddieyards' in 1643. He was on the Committee of War in 1646 'of Breidieyairdis', in 1648 as 'of Breiryairdis' and in 1649 as 'of Breireyards'. He may have been the same man as John of Hornshole. In 1656 he and his sons (including Walter) purchased a 'merk land of Hassendeanbank' from Thomas Turnbull; this was probably Cockerheugh. In 1657 he had a 'wadset' with John Turnbull of Minto in which he gave 2200 'merks' for liferent of Hornshole, and also his 2nd son John to have the lands 'in fee'; this was confirmed by an instrument of sasine in 1658. He is probably the 'Breirie yards' who paid the land tax on £260 in 1663. In a disposition of 1667 his eldest son John is 'now of brieryiards'. John (17th C.) Bailie of Langholm. In 1661 he was listed as still owing about £12,00 to the Duchess of Buccleuch for rentals in Eskdale, where he had been acting as Chamberlain. John of Langhope (d.1666) 3rd son of John of Yorkston and Headshaw, and grandson of George of Sinton. He was a local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s. He bought Langhope from his brother William. He is recorded in the period 1641–47 and 1649 as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch in Liddesdale (or the Debateable Land) and Canonbie; at this point he was the 2nd surviving son of John of Headshaw. He is mentioned as a temporary Chamberlain in Buccleuch estate records for 1646, replacing the deceased John of Headshaw, along with William of Headshaw (his elder brother). In 1661 he was listed as still owing £2000 to the Duchess of Buccleuch for rentals in Liddesdale and the Debatable Lands for both him and his deceased father John of Headshaw. He was appointed as a Justice of the Peace for Selkirkshire in 1663. He was probably the Scott of Langhope who entered into a teind agreement with the curators of the Duke of Buccleuch in the late 1660s. In 1653 he married Margaret, daughter of Robert Scott of Whit slade. His children included: William (b.1654), who succeeded, but sold Langhope; John, who became a surgeon's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1670; and Elizabeth. John (17th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1652 the Council found that traveller Thomas Oliver was not liable to pay him for £6, 10s. worth of tobacco pipes, another £6, 10s. for 'hott waters', as well as 8 merks of powder and 8 merks of white sugar, all of which Oliver had been transporting from Edinburgh for him, but were 'brak, drownet, and lossit by the way'. John (17th C.) recorded in 1656 when he accused Walter 'Westport' of selling him 3 barrels of spirits that were supposed to be '24 stoupis', but was short. Walter was acquitted by the Hawick Magistrates. John of Hornshole (17th C.) recorded in a list of landowners of Hassendean Parish in 1666. He may be the same man as the John listed as tenant in Hornshole in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John in Hornshole, married to Margaret Glendinning, was recorded in 1694, when his son James was baptised in Wilton Parish; the witnesses were William Scott and Thomas Scott, who were probably related, and it is one of the earliest Wilton Parish records. He may possibly be the same as John, son of John of Brieryyards. John (17th C.) rented part of the farms of Branxholme Mains and Branxholme Park in 1671. Perhaps the same John leased 1/3 of Branxholme Mains in 1696 and 1697. He could be the same as one of the other Johns. John (17th C.) recorded in Hawick in 1674 when he was fined 'for abusing and taking away of the bailies their good name, by calling them robers'. Perhaps the same John was banished from the Burgh in 1675 'because of several thefts committed by him'. John (17th C.) recorded being 'called Yles' in 1673 when he was listed among those named in the court case relating to the disturbances at St. Jude's Fair in Hawick. James Wilson says that the 'nickname has been preserved, and is pronounced òilly’ and suggests that it meant he had an eye missing or some other peculiarity with his eyes. John of Catslack (17th C.) recorded in the Land Tax Rolls in 1678 when he paid tax on £52 in Hassendean Parish. He was probably son of Walter, who paid the land tax there in 1663. It also seems that he could be the same man as John of Lees. It is unclear how he was related to Rev. James of Kirkton, who was also associated with Catslack. John (17th C.) described as ‘in Westport of Haik’ in 1674 when his son William became a skinner’s apprentice in Edinburgh. This could be the same family as the Cornet of 1705, and probably also related to Walter ‘called Westport’, who is recorded in 1676. John (17th C.) recorded in 1684 as being ‘in Weins’ when his son Robert was among the men declared fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalism. It is unclear if he may be the same as the contemporary John of Weens. It is possible he was the John of Hawick who had to flee to England in 1676 for being a Covenanter, where he was said to have been involved in preaching in Cumberland and Northumberland. John of Bowhill (17th/18th C.) probably son of James of Bowhill. He appears to have been the last male in this family line. He sold the lands to Adam in Deloraine, brother of Francis of Grassyards. John of Headshaw (d.1691) eldest son of William. He was probably the ‘younger of Headshaw’ who was fined in 1662, after the Restoration (listed under Dumfriesshire). His father transferred the lands of Headshaw, Dryden, etc. to him in 1688. He married Jean Hackett (or Halket) in Edinburgh in 1682; she was only daughter of Col. R. Halket, and probably a cousin of some sort. When he died his sister Mary (who had married Patrick Porteous) became heir to Headshaw. John (17th C.) son of Thomas in Bonchester (probably the same as Thomas ‘of’ Bonchester). He was declared a fugitive in 1684 for nonconformity. Perhaps the same John (said by George Tancred to be a Writer to the Signet) died in 1705 and was buried at Greyfriars Kirkyard in Edinburgh. John of Synton (d.bef. 1705) son of William. If he was the 3rd son, then his 2 older brothers must have died before him and with no heirs. In 1662 his uncle Francis was appointed as tutor during his minority. He is recorded in a sasine of 1670 and annexed the lands of North Synton in 1675 (although they were partly in the family since 1641). In 1675 he was served heir to his father William of Synton, in the lands of North Synton; his father had died earlier than this, suggesting that perhaps this is when he reached majority. He paid the land tax at Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1678 (half of Easter Hermiston, valued at £130) and was also owner of the lands of Essenside (valued at £365), although at that time North Synton was in the hands of Rev. Robert Cunningham. He may also be the Laird of Synton who whose lands in Selkirkshire were valued at £1600 in 1678. He is recorded as ‘of Synetoune’ in a bond of 1682. He later added Satchells to the estate and gained some land from Selkirk Common. He owned additional lands in Tweedsmuir Parish, according to a ‘tack’ of 1687 by Francis Scott, minister of Tweedsmuir (who may have been a relative). He was on the Commission of Supply for Selkirkshire in 1690. He was probably the Laird in 1694 when he paid tax for 35 hearths on his lands. In 1696 he and Sir Francis Scott of Thirlestane had a bond with James Melville of Halhill. He is also recorded in 1670 when his ‘brother-germane’ William became a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir Alexander Murray of Blackbarony in 1686 (probably not the daughter of John Murray of Cringletie, as stated by Keith Scott). In 1702 he secondly married Anna, eldest daughter of Sir John Scott of An-crum and widow of William Scott of Raeburn. His children were: Alexander (b.1690), who is recorded in an assignation by his grandmother Lady Blackbarony in 1697; Jean, who had a similar assignation in 1697, but appears to have died a year later; and Margaret, who received money from his mother-in-law’s estate in 1699 and married William Elliot of Borthwickbrae in 1706, by which date he was deceased. He may have been the John, son of William, born in Ashkirk in 1646. He may have died in 1710 (as stated by Keith Scott). Rev. John (d.c.1690) minister of Hawick. He was tutor in the family of Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs, and may also have been related to that family. Based on his witnessing of documents of the Elliots of Harwood, he may have been a son of a sister of William Elliot of Harwood and Binks. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1650 and became Hawick minister in 1657. He may be the John of Hawick whose Behaviour was complained about at the admission of Andrew Rutherford as minister of Eccles in 1655. He was deprived in 1662 for refusing to embrace Episcopacy, effectively being forced to leave the town; however, he is said to have preached regularly at conventicles, e.g. at Earlside. He apparently contemplated joining a Covenanter force in 1666, but refrained when he found out how disorganised they were. However, he was present at the Pentland rising in 1666. He fled to the north of England, preaching in Northumberland and Cumbria. In 1678 he chaired a meeting of outed ministers who opposed the more extreme views of Richard Cameron and others. He also helped Archibald, Earl of Argyll escape in 1681, giving him a Covenanter password, then arranging for him to stay with Pringle of Torwoodlee, and then go via Hawick to Northumberland and eventually to Holland (although Argyll was later captured and beheaded). He survived past the Revolution, but appears not to have resumed service as a minister. In 1658 he married Marion, daughter of John Livingsstone, the minister of Ancrum; she died aged only 19 in 1661, and is buried at St. Mary’s. He later married Elizabeth Anderson, who died in 1698 and is buried in Greyfriars, Edinburgh. It is possible he was the ‘Mr John Scott’ recorded as resident of Lilliesleaf in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1698 James Livingstone, merchant in Edinburgh, was served heir to his wife Marion (although it is unclear why this was so long after her death). John of Ormiston (17th C.) merchant of Hawick in the 1600s. He was listed by James Wilson among the local landowners of the mid-to-late 17th century. He was probably related to (or confused with) James of Ormiston, and the earlier John. He was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. John of Cockerheugh (17th C.) probably 2nd son of John of Brieryyards and brother of James of Brieryyards. His father purchased ‘a merk land of Hassendeanbank’ (probably Cockerheugh) from Thomas Turnbull in 1656 and had a ‘wadset’ in his name in 1657 with the Turnbulls, involving ‘the markland of horneshole with houses’. He transferred the wadset and lands to his brother James in 1667. In 1681 there was a ‘disposition and assignation’ to him from Walter, probably also a brother (or other near relative). He was one of the heritors accused in 1690 of inciting the crowd that gathered to try to stop the roof being removed from Hassendean Kirk. Along with his nephew John (son of James ‘of Brieryyards’) he was accused of striking Charles Lithgow in this incident. He is probably the John whose son Walter inherited Cockerheugh from him in 1721, and whose daughter Bessie married Walter (‘Uncle to Crumhaugh’), also in 1721. John of Lees (d.c.1685) recorded being ‘of Leis’ in 1685 when his will was recorded. Probably the same John is recorded being of Moormaw in a Hassendean Parish list of landowners and tenants of 1666. He was presumably related to other Scotts of Moormaw and Lees. He may be the same man as John of Catslack who paid land tax in Hassendean Parish in 1678. John (17th C.) merchant of Hawick recorded in several deeds of 1682. He could be the same as one of other contemporary Johns. He could be the ‘merchant Elder’ listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. John (17th C.) son of Bailie Scott, although it is unclear which one. In 1685 Adam Young was fined for insulting him and his father, specifically ‘calumniating them and taking away yr. good name’ in claiming they had reset peas that had been taken by footboys of Lord Airlie’s troop (i.e. Royalists under James Ogilvy of Airlie). John (17th C.) cordiner (i.e. shoemaker) in Hawick. His son Walter was witness to a Hawick sasine of 1688, while another son William served as ‘procurator’ for Patrick Cunningham in the same sasine. He is and was listed as a shoemaker among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is probably the cordiner listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694, when he paid tax for 2 hearths. John (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He probably farmed near Newton. John (17th C.) resident at Broadlee in Ashkirk Parish, recorded on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. He was probably related to Andrew, who is also listed. John (17th C.) resident of Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. He was listed along with Andrew and James, each having a single hearth, and so it seems unlikely the was the same man as John of Headshaw. John (17th C.) resident of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. John (17th C.) resident at Stobicote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He is listed right before James, and so probably related. He could be an ancestor of millwright Gideon. John (17th C.) shepherd at Stobicote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He is listed separately from another John (not shepherd) there. John (17th C.) resident at Winningtonrig in Cavers Parish in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. James and Thomas, listed after him at the same place, were presumably related to him. John (17th C.) resident of Hummelknowes on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) ploughman at Adderstoneshiel listed among the ‘deficient’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) tenant in Blackburn in Southdean Parish according to the Hearth

Tax rolls of 1694. John (17th C.) recorded as a tailor at Borthaugh on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) rented quarter of the farm of Wiltonburn from the Duchess of Buccleuch in at least the period 1690–96 an a third in 1698. He is also listed as resident at Wiltonburn on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls; a separate John was also recorded as a Webster in the same place. He may have been closely related to Robert or Bessie (widow of James Riddell), who were also renting part of Wiltonburn in 1694. John (17th C.) recorded as resident at Dykeraw in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) listed with the word ‘Grinna’ after his name on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. It is unclear if ‘Grinna’ is meant to indicate a place or a nickname, however, George is also listed in 1694 with the same name. John (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He is listed separately from men of the same name who were tailor, cordier, ‘yonger’ and ‘Grinna’. He could be the same man as the smith recorded in 1693/4. John ‘younger’ (17th C.) listed in 1694 among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick ‘eist the water’. His name is written ‘John Scott yonger’. John (17th C.) carrier in Hawick who was listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was listed separately from the ‘Soldier’, who was a carrier at the same time. John ‘Sodger’ (17th C.) carrier in Hawick. In 1692 he was recorded as ‘Sodger’ when leasing 34 acres of the Kirklands of Hawick from the Duchess of Buccleuch. He was recorded among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4, where his name was listed as ‘John Scott, carrier, called soldier’. He was listed as ‘Shoulder’ and resident of the west-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. In 1707 he and his son, John younger, were fined by the Council for ‘violent putting, thrusting, and expelling, under cloud of night’ the horses of William Aitken, younger, from his barn; the Aitkens were also carriers in Hawick, but it is unclear what the dispute was between the families. John ‘Goudilands’ (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694, when he paid for 2 hearths. He was associated with Goldielands in some way, although Charles of Goldielands was also listed on the tax rolls. It is possible that he could be the same man as ‘Uncle John’. John (17th C.) shepherd at Dryden Burnfoot according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to the John listed as shepherd at Dryden a few decades later. John (17th C.) resident at Whithope according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Johns. John (17th C.) resident at Whitchesters according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be related to Robert and Walter, who were also listed there. John (17th C.) tenant in Burnfoot according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. This is listed under Hassendean Parish, but is clearly the farm in Wilton Parish. He may have been related to Adam of Burnfoot, who was probably Laird at that time. John (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when he was at Appletreelhall. John of Woll (d.c.1706) 5th son of Sir William of Harden. He purchased the lands of Woll in 1660. He paid tax on £533 6s 8d in Ashkirk Parish according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls and £595 in 1678. He wrote to his brother Sir William in 1665 from Aikwood. He served as Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for Ettrick, Selkirk and St. Mary’s in at least the periods 1657–63 and 1671–1703, when he also covered the Barony of Kirkurd. He was named as an agent of the Duchess of Buccleuch on the rental rolls for Branxholme in 1690, 1692, 1694 and 1698. He may have been the John who served as Chamberlain for the Countess of Wemyss’ rents in Teviotdale in the period 1652–66 (although there were other contemporary men of the same name); and also responsible for the Countess’ rentals in Eckford Parish. He was also factor to his brother Sir William of Harden in the period 1660–83. In 1661 he was listed as owing about £700 to the Duchess of Buccleuch for rentals in Ettrick Forest. He received the East Mains of Selkirk from Walter Scott of Harden and his wife Christian Ker in 1669 (although it is unclear who this Walter could be, given the dates). In 1678 he acted as ‘amicable compositor’ between the parties involved when part of Selkirk Common was divided. He is recorded in deeds of 1682. In 1683 and again in 1684 he was fined by Lord Meldrum because of his wife’s withdrawal from the parish kirk; in 1683 he was sent to the prison at Edinburgh Castle along with Gledstains from Hawick, Gledstains of Ormiston, Douglas of Bonjedward, William Ker and Gideon Scott. In 1692 he was one of the 2 Chamberlains of Buccleuch who gave their consent for Francis Gledstains wanted to enclose part of the Flex. In 1690 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire and also Berwickshire and in 1693 he was appointed as a Parliamentary Commissioner (i.e. M.P.) for Roxburghshire.
serving until 1702. Also in 1693 there is an existing letter to his nephew Walter, Earl of Tarras. He was probably the Laird of Woll who paid tax on 8 hearths at his house in 1694. When his eldest son married in 1694 he resigned the lands of Woll to him. He may be the John ‘of Well’ who was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1704. He married Agnes, only daughter of Robert Scott of Harwood and started the Scotts of Woll (or restarted, since there was an earlier branch of the Scotts who were Lairds of Woll). His children included: Walter, who succeeded; John, who married Margaret Scott; Gideon; 2 other sons, who died before 1710 without having sons; Agnes (b.c.1675), who married Alexander Veitch of Glen in 1689; Margaret, who married John, son of Francis Scott of Gilmaunscluech in 1693. John of Langhope (17th/18th C.) son of Walter of Langhope and St. Leonards. He appears to have purchased Langhope from his father in 1688, and was served heir to these lands of his father’s in 1691. However, later in 1691 he and his wife Janet sold the lands to Adam of Bowhill.

Sir John of Ancrum (d.1712) son of Patrick and Elizabeth Simson, and descended from the Scotts of Balwearie. He is sometimes called ‘of Kirkstyle’ (in Perthshire), although his father probably sold those lands. He is also sometimes called ‘of Langshaw’, like his father, although those lands would go to his younger brother Francis. In 1654 he bought the lands of Ormiston from William, Earl of Roxburghe and was the ‘fiar of Langshaw’ who was the son of Patrick of Langshaw. He was listed as ‘fiar of Langschaw’ in 1661 when he and his partners owed money to the Scotts of Buccleuch for duties on the coal-fields of Sheriffhall. In 1663 he is recorded holding lands in Melrose Parish that had previously belonged to Lord Elibank. He is recorded in document in the Melrose Regality records, relating to the ‘multures’ of Langshaw and other matters in 1663–68. In 1668 he had a sasine of the lands of ‘Wouplaw’. He acquired Ancrum from Charles Kerr, 2nd Earl of Ancrum. He had a charter of the lands and barony of Ancrum in 1670 and in 1671 became the 1st Baronet of Ancrum (in the baronetcy of Nova Scotia). He was Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for Teviotdalehead for the years 1660–62 (as Scott of Langshaw) and 1665–70 (as Scott of Ancrum). He was appointed Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire in 1663 and Deputy Sheriff of Roxburghshire in 1664. He represented Roxburghshire in Parliament in 1665. He paid the land tax on £2400 in Ancrum Parish in 1678. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1685. In 1694 he paid tax on 19 hearths for his estate at Ancrum. He was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament in 1700 and was on the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1704. In the early 1700s he was accused of embezzling money during the minority of Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch. In 1652 he married Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Francis (or perhaps William) Scott of Mangerton, and they had 5 sons and 5 daughters. He secondly married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir William Bennet of Grubert, and had 2 further daughters, from whom are descended Sir Hector Maclean Hay of Alderston and Sir William Henry Walsingham Calder. In 1708 he lastly married Barbara, daughter of Walter Ker of Littledean. His children were: Sir Patrick, who succeeded; Charles of Palace Hill, who married Margaret, sister of John, 5th Lord Ruthford; John (b.1702), a merchant, who spent time in London and Jamaica, settled in New York and whose descendant, John Morin Scott, was Mayor of Philadelphia; Andrew, also a merchant, who participated in the disastrous Darien colony; William, an advocate; Elizabeth, who married Sir William Eliott of Stobs; Anna (or Anne), who married William Scott of Raeburn and secondly John Scott of Synton; Cecilia (or Cicely), who married William Ainslie of Blackhill; Jean, who married John Murray of Bowhill; Elizabeth, who married John Erskine of Shielfield; Margaret, who married Thomas Scott of Whitslade, and later Sir David Murray of Stenhouse; and Christian, who married Sir Thomas Calder of Muirtoune. John ‘Wyndheid’ (d.bef. 1712) married to Bessie Paisley. His nickname may have come from living at the head of Walter’s Wynd, suggesting he was related to the later Walter (although it is possible that the Cross Wynd or Kirk Wynd are meant). In 1676 he was among a group of Hawick people found guilty of using faulty measures; along with Robert Taylor, he was specifically found to have a half-peck that was ‘ane half-fourpitt short’. There he was referred to as ‘Wyndheads’. In 1712 his widow was called before the Kirk Session and rebuked for harassing her neighbours. He may be related to Robert ‘wyndhead’, recorded in 1701.

John (d.bef. 1715) tailor in Hawick, married to Isabel Harkness. He may be the John, ‘taylier’ who witnessed a Hawick sasine in 1688. He is probably the tailor John listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694 and the tailor listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. In 1707 he was ‘taylor, and towne tresawrer' when the 2 Bailies were fined for their behaviour at the Common Riding. He was a member of the Council when it granted a bond (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. His children included John (b.1702) and Margaret (b.1709). 2 Bailies witnessed the baptism of his son John in 1702. In 1715 his widow was involved in a dispute with Robert Deans over who should sit in a particular pew in St. Mary’s. He may be the John described as ‘sometimes tailor in Hawick’ in 1720 when his daughter Elizabeth married Town Clerk Walter Gledstains; however, if he died before 1715 then this would have to have been a different tailor John. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Rashiegrain. He married Marion Scott (also from Hawick Parish) in 1702. John ‘Uncle John’ (17th/18th C.) resident of the Hawick area. His nickname was recorded in 1702 when he was a witness to a birth for Walter in Goldielands, with the other witness being Robert of Tandlaw; it seems likely he was related to the Goldielands and Tandlaw branches, but it is otherwise unclear who he was. He married Jean Stuart in Hawick parish in 1704, when the nickname is again recorded and their son Robert was born in 1707, when the nickname is recorded once more. Presumably it distinguished him from other contemporary Johns. In 1705 he and Jean Stewart had another son, John, baptised in Hawick; there his is recorded being in Blackcleuch and the witnesses were Robert in Blackcleuch (perhaps his father) and John in Falnash. John (17th/18th C.) glover in Hawick. In 1707 he was ‘onlawed for deriding and mocking the bailie’. He was appointed in 1718 to try to raise money for a new Kirk clock in Hawick. In 1725 he witnessed a baptism for Andrew Turnbull and he witnessed another for gardener Walter in 1740. He married Mary Rutherford and their children included: Robert (b.1705); Margaret (b.1708); Thomas (b.1715). William Scott, shoemaker, witnessed the 1705 baptism and so may have been his father or brother. John (d.bef. 1711) recorded in 1711 as ‘younger in Falnash’ when his widow Janet Aitchison married William Scott in Skelfhill. He may have been a son of Gideon, ‘Auld Falnash’. He may be the John in Falnash who witnessed a baptism for John in Blackcleuch in 1705. John (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘John Scott Acreknow’ (to distinguish him from other Johns) when his son William was baptised in Hawick in 1711. John (17th/18th C.) described as a skinner in Hawick when his son William became an apprentice baxter in Edinburgh in 1717. He may be related to the earlier John of Westport (given the name and trade coincidence). He may be the same John as the glover. John of Davington (1680–c.1710) eldest son of Francis of Davington. Dying without children, he was succeeded by his brother Robert. John (17th/18th C.) younger son of Scott of Bonchester (probably Walter), he is possibly the same man as John of Ashtrees. He took part in the 1715 rebellion, along with William Kerr of Abbotrule. He was banished as a result of this. A story (recounted by Walter Deans in 1887) was told of his time in the colonies, labouring at a government building, when the Governor’s new wife recognised him, saying ‘That stane wad row easier doon Bunestir Hill, than up there’, whereon he recognised her as a local woman of lowly birth who had once been whipped through the streets of Hawick! Keeping quiet about this, his conditions were improved and he was later sent back on a ship to Britain, but lived and died on Jersey rather than in Rulewater. George Tancred states that in 1740 he was father of a girl aged 8 and a boy aged 5. He was probably nephew of George (son of Thomas in Bouchercher), who was declared a fugitive in 1684 for nonconformity. John of Gilmanscleugh (17th/18th C.) son of Francis. He also appears to have served as a Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch. In 1678 he paid the land tax of more than £800 in Selkirkshire. In 1690 ‘John Scotts, elder and younger of Gilmanscleugh’ were on the Commission of Supply for Selkirkshire (i.e. his son John also served, although after this it is unclear whether he or his son are being described). In 1704 he was a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire. In 1707 he was involved in a bond with Francis Scott of Bailielee and Robert Scott ‘in Overdelorain’. Sometime before 1712 he lost his estates because of debts, including Gilmanscleugh, which went to Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch. He married Margaret Scott, daughter of John of Woll, and was succeeded by John. John (d.bef. 1710) 2nd son of John of Woll and grandson of Sir William of Harden. He married Margaret Scott and they had a daughter, Agnes. He died before having male heirs, however. John (17th C.) married Margaret Henderson in 1686. They were both from Roberton Parish. They had a son William (b.1689), baptised in Ashkirk Parish. John (17th/18th C.) son of John, he was described as ‘younger of Gilmanscleugh’ in the period 1685–90 when they both served the county of Selkirkshire. In 1689 he was appointed as an officer in the local Militia. About 1728 he was appointed Surveyor of Roads. His son was probably William, last to be called ‘of Gilmanscleuch’. John of Gorrenberry (d.bef. 1729) son of Francis. In 1691 he was served heir to his father’s lands of Adderstone and Adderstoneshiel. In 1692 and 1694 he served as a Commissioner for assessing the rentals for the Duchess of Buccleuch. He took the money from the Orrock Bequest and paid interest to the Hawick heritors in the early 18th century. He must be the owner of ‘Gornaneries Hous’ in either Cavers or Kirkton Parish, which was taxed for having 8 hearths in 1694; it is not stated where his house was, but it seems likely to have been at Adderstone. He was ‘of Gorrenberrie’ in 1695 when he contributed £200 to the Darien Company. He appears to have have held lands in Kirkton Parish, since his servant William Lorraine was resident in that parish when he is recorded marrying in 1707; but since William was married in Edinburgh it suggests he also had a house there. He is probably the Laird of Gorrenberry who was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1704. In 1722 there is record of a payment made to the Burgh for the use of the bell for a burial relating to him. In 1723 he was mentioned in the Hawick Session book for his interest (presumably meaning return on his money) in ‘ye building of ye Schoolhouse for ye Grammar School’. In 1724 there was again deliberation about ‘the affaire of the Money in Gorrenberry’s hands for a Scholehouse and Schoolmaster’s-house’. He married a daughter of Charles Kerr of Abbotrule, possibly Cecily. His children included: Francis, who succeeded; James (b.1703); Ann, who was the 3rd wife of Walter Scott of Harden; another daughter who may have married Douglas of Cavers; and another daughter, probably Margaret, who married John Elliot of Whithaugh. He may be the John of Gorrenberry who married Janet, daughter of Robert Elliot of Larriston in 1716 (as her second husband). John (17th/18th C.) resident in Adderstoneshiel. His son Walter was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1709. James (b.1707) may also have been his son. He may be the ‘servitor’ to John Tait in Adderstoneshiel whose daughter Agnes was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1720. John (17th/18th C.) recorded in the 1718 survey of the lands of the Duchess of Buccleuch as owner of a small piece of land within the East Mains of Hawick, extending to 7 acres, 3 roods and 27 perches. He is surely the same as one of the contemporary Johns, but it is not clear which one.
the clothes being bleached there by James Bryden; since he confessed and appeared before the Bailie, he was excused. He is recorded in 1701 in the Burgh Records and in 1718 in the Hawick Session Records, when he was rebuked for providing William Whaton with military-type coat and sword to ride through the town, as part of a wager. His name is given as ‘Whitegates’ in 1713 when his son John was baptised. John (17th/18th C.) smith in Hawick who was admitted as a Burgess in 1692. He is also listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was listed as a smith and member of the Council when it granted a bond (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. He could be the John who was a Bailie in the 1720s. He is probably the smith who married Jean ‘Betie’ (from Westerkirk) in Hawick in 1703, with children including: Margaret (b.1708); and Jean (b.1718). In 1721 probably the same smith married Elspeth ‘Red’ (probably Reid), who was widow of George Hardie. In 1722 he is recorded being paid 12 shillings ‘for yell [ale] when the ded bell was mended’. In 1723, along with another smith, James Beattie, he was asked to explain himself to the Hawick Session about ‘entertaining all the night in his house Janet Andison’ who was involved in a ‘scandal’ in Ettrick Parish. John (17th/18th C.) son of Robert in Skelfhill. In Hawick Parish in 1700 he married Margaret Armstrong. John (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘John Scot At The Port’ in 1707 when his son Walter was baptised in Hawick. He was probably related to either the West Port Scotts or the Mill Port Scotts. John (c.1678–1754/5) shepherd at Lymiecleuch. He married Jean Goodfellow, probably daughter of Archibald from the Bewcastle area, whose brother William farmed nearby; she died in 1783, aged 93. He had sons Thomas (1713/4–42), Robert (shepherd at Merrylaw) and William (‘the Auld Mason’). John of Weens (d.1727) probably descended from Andrew of Weens. He was one of the last Scott owners of Weens estate. He paid the land tax in Hobkirk Parish in 1678, for ‘Weymes’, valued at £200. He is also recorded in a bond of 1682. In the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls he was taxed for having 3 hearths at Weens. He is listed as John ‘of Weems’ whom he was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1695. He may have married a daughter of Rev. James Ainslie of Minto. His son was also called John. In 1722 he and his son made an arrangement with Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs, whereby they gave up their pasturage rights to Feu-Rule Common in exchange for 1/5th of the land of the Common (now Hallrule farm). He was probably the Laird of Weens for whose burial the funeral bells were rung in Hawick in 1727. In 1729 his daughter Betsy married Sam Oliver, schoolmaster at Hobkirk. John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Allanhaugh Mill. In 1715 he married Euphena, daughter of Robert Riddell. Their children included: Robert (b.1718); and John (b.1725). The 1725 baptism was witnessed by Walter Riddell and Walter Nixon. John (17th/18th C.) tenant in Over Southfield. He was witness to a baptism for John Graham in Allanhaugh Mill. Sir John of Ancrum (d.1746) son of Sir Patrick, he was the 3rd Baronet. He was listed on a memorial of 1738, claiming the right of the Lordship of Rutherford for John Scott of Belford. In 1714 he married Christian, daughter of William Nisbet of Dirleton. His children included: Patrick (d.1742), who was an army officer and died before his father; Sir William, who succeeded; John of Craiginninnie (b.1729), who also took the surname Nisbet, and whose son John became 5th Baronet of Ancrum; Patrick; Walter (b.1733); Margaret; and Christian (1730–88). John of Harden (d.1734) younger son of Gideon. He succeeded to Harden in 1720, after the death of his brother Walter, becoming 9th Laird. He was probably a minor when he inherited the lands, since they were run by curators until 1723. About 1724–26 there were legal proceedings over claims on part of the Harden estates by his former ‘tutors and curators’, Walter of Whiffield, William of Thirlestane and Walter of Woll. He married Jean Erskine, daughter of Alexander, 4th Earl of Kellie. They had daughters: Anne, who married Thomas Shairp of Houston; and Mary Lilias (said to be a great beauty). A document of 1726 disposes Harden House as jointly owned with his wife. Dying without male issue, the estate went to his uncle Walter (of Whiffield), second son of the Earl of Tarress. John of Whitslade (d.bef. 1727) 2nd son of Thomas, he succeeded to the family estates after the death of his brother Thomas. He thus became the 8th and last Laird. He sold off the Whitslade estate about 1722 (having had the lands ‘disjoined’ in 1714), it having been in the family for around 6 generations. At that point the estate included Castleside, the Redfordgreens, Ashkirk farm, Ashkirk Mill, Salenside and Broadlee. He leased the lands of Harden Mains for 2 years in 1723, leading to legal disputes involving his brother Walter with Walter of Whiffield after his death. He died unmarried, ending this branch of the family. He was said to have been 14th in descent from the Baron of Bucleuch. Thus the direct representation of the Synton branch passed to the Scotts of Todrig. John (17th/18th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish. He married Helen Laidlaw and their children included: Thomas (b.1715). John (17th/18th C.) beadle of Hawick Kirk in the early 1700s. He was son of Walter, who died in 1717, and whom he replaced. In 1720 he was rebuked for taking several days to return from Selkirk Fair, missing the Sabbath in Hawick. And in 1724 he was severely rebuked for drunkenness, ‘(as he expressed it) he was mistaken with Drink’ and unable to bring another person before the Session for the same crime. After much debate he submitted to the censure of the Session, was rebuked before the congregation, and kept his job. John (17th/18th C.) merchant of Hawick. In 1724 he was rebuked for his ‘irregular marriage’ with Anna, daughter of William Laing and Jane Thorbrand, widow of John Watson (who had been Clerk to the Regality in Hawick). They were married in Hawick by John Middletown, with witnesses Andrew Turnbull (mason) and Walter Gledstains (lawyer); the inclusion of a Gledstains suggests they may have been adherents of the Episcopalian church. They had a child John (b.1728). John (18th C.) resident of Kirkton. His snuff box is in the Museum, labelled ‘John Scott in Kirkton – his box 1735’. It is unclear who he was. John (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He witnessed a couple of baptisms in 1738. John of Ashtrees (18th C.) probably descended from the Scotts of Boucher. He was possibly 3rd son of Walter, 3rd Laird of Nether Boucher and Jane Turnbull; however, it is also suggested that that John was sent to the plantations after the 1715 rebellion (and hence was a different man). He was factor to Capt. John Rutherford of Edgerston. He married Helen, daughter of Thomas Oliver of Ashtrees. On the death of his father-in-law in 1739 he inherited the lands of Ashtrees in Southdean Parish. These would later pass to his grandnephew Dr. James Robson-Scott. His children included: Adam, who became Laird of Ashtrees; and Thomas, who became Laird of Peel and married Esther Turnbull. John of Lees (18th C.). A 1738 letter exists in the National Archive, sent from him in Midhurst, Sussex to Mrs. Margaret Scott of Horsleyhill, mentioning that he intends to deliver an Episcopal sermon at Hassendean Kirk (long ruined by then) and mentions (possibly Alexander) Scott of Burnhead. He was surely related to the Scotts of Burnhead. John (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1738 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker Andrew, who was therefore probably related. He also witnessed a couple of baptisms (one for the Town Piper, William Brown and the other for William Wilson ‘messenger’) in 1745. He also witnessed a baptism for shoemaker James Waugh and his wife Margaret Scott (who was possibly related to him). He may be the shoemaker John who witnessed a baptism for Francis Gledstains in 1725 and the shoemaker John who witnessed a baptism for weaver John Elder in 1760. John (18th C.) recorded in 1740 as ‘Hynd at Crumhaugh’. He married Grizel Elliot in 1730 and their children included William (b.1740). The witnesses in 1740 were Rev. James Mason of St. Boswell’s and Grammar Schoolmaster James Anderson; it is unclear what the connection was. John (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism in 1745 (along with another John, shoemaker). John of Belford (18th C.) son of Charles and grandson of Sir John of Langshaw and Ancrum. His mother was Margaret, daughter of Robert, 4th Lord Rutherford. In 1738 he tried to claim the Lordship, after the death of his distant relative, Alexander, 6th Lord Rutherford. He supported the Jacobites in 1745, meeting Charles at Kelso. As a result of this support he later lost his estate, and was never able to claim the peerage. He paid the window tax for Belford (in Morebattle Parish) in the period 1748–59. However, it is possible he was the John ‘of Palacehill’ listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Marion, daughter of Alexander Baillie from Ashiestiel. They had 5 daughters, the eldest being Agnes, who married Thomas Cockburn of Rowchester (in Berwickshire). John (18th C.) recorded as a ‘wool comber’ in 1730 when he was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick. In 1735 he was recorded receiving a Burgess ticket gratis. It is unclear why this happened, but perhaps he had been brought in from outside Hawick to stimulate the manufacturing of yarn. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Johns. John (d.bef. 1777) son of John of Weens. In 1731 he signed the marriage contract of William Elliot of Lodgellig and Jean Elliot of Harwood. In 1733 he married Marion (or ‘Mary’), 3rd daughter of William Elliot of Harwood. In 1744 he sold the lands of Weens to John Armstrong with the consent of his wife. Marion was a widow in 1777 when she had a discharge to her brother Henry. His son James was baptised in Hobkirk Parish in 1738.
Other children baptised there who may have been his included Elizabeth (b.1734), Margaret (b.1736), Henry (b.1739), Christian (b.1741), an unnamed son (b.1741) and Janet (b.1743). John (18th C.) tenant in Highchesters Mill. He married Beatrice Thomson in 1756 and she died in 1797, aged 66. Their son Archibald was born in 1756. Other children baptised in Roberton Parish that may have been his include Margaret (b.1760), William (b.1762), Beatrice (b.1764), John (b.1766), Nelly (b.1768) and Mary (b.1772). He died at the age of 50 (although not in 1748, as reported). They are buried in Borthwick Waas. John (d.bef. 1763) younger son of Robert of Davington, brother of James and William. He was a direct descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane, although his branch failed in the male line. He was an attorney in Canonbie. He married Isabel, daughter of James Scott of Calfield. Their children included: Robert, in the Seaforth Regiment in the American War, and also in India; James, moved to Canonbie; William, married Ann Little and killed in a quarry accident; John, also at Canonbie; probably Francis; Jane; and Margaret. John (18th C.) tenant in Allanhaugh Mill, probably the son of John, born in 1725. He married Mary Dodds in 1755 and they had an unnamed child in 1758. John of Gorrenberry (d.1785) son of Charles of Gorrenberry. He was a doctor in the London area. He was recorded as a doctor on the list of Commissioners of Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Jean Fox, who secondly married Charles Fox of Chacomb and died in 1820. Their children included: Francis (b.1768), who died in infancy; and Charles, M.D. (d.1794). The family are buried in Bromley, Kent. John (18th C.) descended from the Scotts of Synton, through millers at Boosmill on Ale Water, who also farmed at Dimpleknowe, and then moved to a mill on Rule Water. However, Keith Scott also suggests he was a son of Alexander, miller in Rulewater and at Roughheugh. He himself became miller at Hummelknowes, and later married the widow Henderson, tenant of the mill. Among his children were John, who was also tenant in Hummelknowes. It is unclear if the William of Hummelknowes who paid the window tax in 1748 is an error for his name or was perhaps a son. He (or his son) may be the John, miller in Hawick, who subscribed to Caw's 'Poetical Museum' in 1784. John (18th C.) Town Treasurer listed in 1734. He may be the same as Bailie John or one of the other contemporary men with the same name. In 1734 there is a record in the Treasurer's book that he paid his son for joinery work on the lofts of St. Mary's Kirk. In 1737 the Treasurer's book records money 'paid to my wife when ye workmen went to see where ye brige should be'; this suggests he may have been involved with the building of Teviot Brig, and may be the same man as Bailie John. John (18th C.) shepherd at Dryden. He was probably related to the John, shepherd at Dryden Burnfoot, recorded in 1694. He married Margaret Riddell and their children included: John (b.1738); Robert (b.1739); and John (b.1749), born in Cavers Parish. Bailie John (18th C.) referred to as 'younger' when Bailie in the 1730s (suggesting that he may have been son of another John). He was Magistrate in 1738, when plans were laid for building Teviot Bridge. Also in 1738 he witnessed a baptism of James Weir (who was Town Clerk). Along with William Tudhope he arranged for the bond to pay for construction of the bridge. He was Bailie along with James Scott in about 1743 when they gave orders to the Burgh Officers to find the animals of the neighbouring tenants pasturing on the common and drive them into the Town. He may be the ex-Bailie John who, along with Thomas Turnbull and Rev. Partick Cunningham, sold East Mains (of Hawick) to the Duke of Buccleuch in the 1740s. He was listed as 'late Baillie' in 1740 when he witnessed a baptism for wright James Winthrops and in 1745 when he witnessed another baptism for James Weir. He was recorded in 1747 when the tradesmen were paid in his place (presumably an inn) after taking down the kirk bell. He may be the Bailie John who witnessed another baptism in 1757. He is probably one of the skinners James, John and Walter Scott, recorded as Bailies in the 1740s. He may be the John who was still a Bailie in the 1760s. He is probably the Bailie John who, along with Bailie Thomas Turnbull of Fenwick, witnessed a baptism for the younger Thomas Turnbull in 1763. John younger of Synton (d.bef. 1765) eldest son of Alexander of Synton. In 1735 he married Mary, only daughter of William Oliver of Dinlabyre (and grand-daughter of William Chisholme of that Ilk). However, he died before his father, his only son Alexander succeeding to the Synton estates. He also had a daughter, Margaret, who married William Fairbairn, schoolmaster at Galashiels; she died in 1815. John (18th C.) miller in Hawick. He married Elizabeth Thomson in 1767, the marriage being recorded in both Hawick and St. Boswell's parishes (but another marriage as recorded in Hawick in 1770). Their children included: James (b.1771); William (b.1773); James (b.1776); Ann (b.1778); Margaret (b.1780); Mary (b.1782); Beatrix (b.1784); Elizabeth (b.1786); Robert (b.1789); and Jane (b.1790). The witnesses in 1778 were William Mason and Walter Purdom. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Agnes Turnbull in Wilton Parish in 1751. Their children (all baptised in Hawick Parish) were: William (b.1757); John (b.1758); Adam (b.1760); Isobel (b.1761); Beatrix (b.1763); Jane (b.1765). Witnesses to the 1760 baptism were Thomas Laidlaw and weaver Charles Miller. John of Gala (1732–85) son of Hugh, he was 6th Laird. He was recorded as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1761 (when still ‘junior’). He was taxed for having 2 or 3 male servants in the period 1778–79. He was on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He married Anne, only daughter of George McDougall of Makerstoun. Their children were: Elizabeth; Col. Hugh, who succeeded; Barbara (1764–1844); Adm. Sir George (1769–1841); and Col. John (1774–1832), whose eldest daughter Maria Sarah Macdougall inherited Makerstoun. John (18th C.) recorded at Highchesters Mill in 1762 and 1764 when his children William and Beatrice were baptised in Robertson Parish, and in Highchesters in 1772 when his daughter Mary was baptised. He may have been related to the John who was previously at Highchesters Mill and the Robert who was there in the 1740s. John (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He was at Whitfield in 1762 and Boonraw in 1764 and 1767. In 1760 he married Margaret Lorraine, who was from Yarrow. Their children included: Robert (b.1762); twins William and John (b.1764); Helen (b.1767); and Janet (b.1768). The witnesses in 1762 were Thomas Scott and Robert Scott. John (18th C.) gardener at Knowe in Minto Parish in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for Thomas Turnbull. John (18th C.) listed as owner of a ‘House and Yard’ in Minto Parish in 1779, valued at £1 16s 7d. The same piece of land was owned by Lord Minto in 1811. John (18th C.) married Margaret Laidlaw in Wilton Parish in 1780. Their children included Isabel (b.1782). John (18th C.) tenant farmer at Borthwickbrae according to the Horse Tax Rolls of 1790–91. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John (18th C.) skinner in Hawick. His daughter Sarah died in 1798. John ‘Gover’ (d.bef. 1809) Hawick resident whose wife Betty Cunningham died in 1795. The death of his daughter Isabel is recorded in Hawick in 1809. He could be related to the later ‘Gover’. John (18th C.) resident of Weens in 1790 when his son Thomas was baptised in Hobkirk Parish. Sir John of Ancrum (1757–1812) son of John, who was 3rd son of Sir John, 3rd Baronet of Ancrum. He was born at Longnewton. His father succeeded to Craiginch in right of his mother, taking the additional surname of Nisbet. He became the 5th Baronet of Ancrum, succeeding his uncle Sir William. He was a Cornet with the Royal Regiment of Horse Guards, then with the Horse Grenadiers and 17th Foot. He was listed on the roll of electors for Roxburghshire in 1780. He was recorded at Ancrum on the 1785–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He subscribed to 2 copies of Burns ‘Edinburgh Edition’ in 1787. He was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788 (when described as ‘once Aide-de-camp to the late General Mackay, Commander-in-Chief, but now not employed. At present unfit for business’. In 1794 he was appointed Major-Commandant with the Roxburgh Cavalry, later being promoted to Colonel and travelling with them to Ireland. He (as well as his mother, Mrs. Scott Nisbet) paid tax for having both male and female servants in the period 1778–91, and just himself from 1792–97. He was recorded at Ancrum on the 1785–97 Horse Tax Rolls and in the period 1792–98 was taxed for owning a carriage. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. He was recorded as owner of an estate in Ancrum Parish valued at more than £2000 in 1788 and 1811. He was one of the founder members of the Jedforest Club in 1810, and presented them with a snuff mull, which was used at dinners long afterwards. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. In 1792 he married Harriet, daughter of William Grahame of Gartmore. They had 2 sons and 4 daughters: Sir John, who succeeded; Sir William, who succeeded his brother; Harriet, who married George Oldmixon; Elizabeth, who married Col. de Feves; Margaret; and Lucy. He was buried in Old Greyfriars in Edinburgh. John, W.S. of Midgehope (1757–1803) 3rd son of William of Woll and brother of Charles. He was apprentice to lawyer Cornelius Elliot. In 1780 he received the superiority of lands in Merton from Walter Scott of Harden, but renounced them again in 1791. He also acquired the estate of Glenormiston in Peeblesshire. He was apprenticed to Cornelius Elliot of Wolfelee and became Writer to the Signet in 1784. In 1782 he married Beatrice, daughter of Thomas Caverhill. His children were: William of Teviot

Bank; and James of Ellem. He could be the Edinburgh lawyer who was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1778. In 1788 he was listed among the voters of Selkirkshire, and described as being a supporter of Scott of Buccleuch, but having his ‘real vote from his father’. Lieut. John of Synton (d.1796) only son of Alexander. He is probably the John of Synton who paid the land tax in 1785 for Synton and Synton Mill. In 1788 he was recorded as owner of Satchells (valued at £200). He was Lieutenant in the 57th Regiment and died in Grenada. He left no male heirs, but had 2 surviving sisters Catherine and Helen, the first of whom inherited the Synton estate. John of Horsleyhill, see Capt. Francis James of Horsleyhill.

John (1749–1824) married Elizabeth Thomson (1758–c.92) in Hawick in 1770. Their children included: Dr. William (1773–1884), surgeon who made his fortune in the West Indies; Ann (1778–1852), who married miller John White; and Elizabeth (1786–1853), who married Thomas Wemyss. John (18th C.) listed in the 1785–91 cart tax records as ‘John Scott Post’ and ‘John Scott the Post’, suggesting that he was deliverer of mail at that time. John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Helen Learmonth and their children included Benjamin (b.1769). John (18th C.) described as ‘analysts of Valuation Books’. He wrote an analysis of the land valuations of Selkirkshire for the Commissioners of Supply for that county in 1785 and another for Roxburghshire in 1788. These contain valuable details about how lands had changed hands between the 1643 and 1678 valuations, and then continuing through the 18th century. He may have worked in Edinburgh, but is seems fairly likely that he was associated with one of the local Scott families. He may be the same as one of the other Johns. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Bewlie Mains, which he leased from Walter Scott of Harden in 1770 for 7 years. He is recorded as farmer there in the 1787–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He also owned 4 farm horses there in 1797. In 1811 it is recorded that he had feued the part of Lilliesleaf Common known as Stotfeld and Nolt-lair from William Riddell of Camieston. It is possible he is the same as John of Synton. John (d.1809) tailor in Hawick. He was brother of Walter, wright, who was already deceased in 1809. It is possible he was the ‘John Wyndhead’ whose son Walter the tailor died in 1810. John (1749/50–1828) schoolmaster in Ancrum. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825, suggesting that he had a connection to Hawick. His son George was on the Militia list for Ancrum in about 1800. The schoolmaster at Ancrum from 1828 was also John, and hence perhaps his son. John (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Hislop in Hawick Parish in 1797, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Lilliesleaf, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (18th/19th C.) tenant at Whithope Mill (on the Borthwick), recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. He may have been related to Adam, who farmed Whithope at the same time and George, who was referred to in 1808 when his son George died. John (b.c.1760) son of George, tenant in Falla. His grandfather was tenant at Roughheugh Mill in Hawick. He married his cousin Euphemia, daughter of Robert Scott, also miller at Roughheugh Mill. Their children were: Robert; George; John; Ann, who married D. Clarke; and Betsy. They may all have died without issue. He may be the ‘John Scott Milns’ who is recorded as owner of 3 horses in Hawick on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is probably also the John ‘in Hawick Mill’ recorded in the 1810 inventory after the death of ‘Auld Cash’. John (1766–1850) son of Robert, who farmed at Whitchesters. He became tenant farmer at Boonraw. He married Euphemia Elliot (also born in 1766) and both of them died in the cholera outbreak of 1850. Their children included: Robert, who also farmed at Boonraw; George, who married Mary Thompson and had 3 children, but died of smallpox while emigrating to America; William, who became a doctor in Canada; and 3 children who died in 1809, Janet, Margaret and John. He and his wife (although her name is given as Elspeth) are recorded at East Boonraw in 1841. John (18th/19th C.) married Janet Mein in Hawick Parish in 1796. John (18th/19th C.) resident of Lethem in Southdean Parish. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. John (18th/19th C.) resident of London when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He is listed along with James, also of London, and it seems likely that the pair had a direct connection with Hawick. John (b.1769) 2nd son of Rev. William of Southdean and brother of Adam Scott-Elliot of Arkleton. His children included: William; Rev. Charles; Adam; Margaret; Sybil; Ann; Elizabeth; and Mary. There were apparently no grandchildren John of Whitehaugh (d.1823) 2nd cousin of Isobel and William, who had previously held the lands of Whitehaugh (although it is unclear how precisely he was related or who his parents were). He succeeded in 1759 on the death of Isobel, but was still a minor at that time. He is 'John Scott, Esq; Whitehaugh' on the subscription list for Caw's 'Poetical Museum'. He was listed in 1788 (and still on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) as owner of 'Whitehaugh, otherways called Wester Whitehaugh; and Wester Heap, otherways called Easter Whitehaugh', valued at £648 10s. He also sold the small piece of land called 'Souter's Acre', which was later owned by Thomas Laidlaw of Silverbuthall. He paid the Horse Tax at Whitehaugh from 1785-94. In 1797 he is recorded as owner of 2 horses in the Horse Tax Rolls for Wilton; he also paid the dog tax there in the same year. He helped fund the extension to the old Wilton Kirk in 1800. About the same time he contributed to the local subscription to support the war against France. He is recorded as a vassal of Buccleuch in correspondence of the mid-18th century in the Buccleuch archives. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and in 1819 along with his son Walter. As well as the lands of Whitehaugh, he also owned the farms of Greensidehall and Broomhall. In 1767 he married Margaret (perhaps also known as Elizabeth), daughter and co-heiress of Walter of Chamberlain Newton. They had 12 children, although only 3 sons and 3 daughters survived childhood. Their children included: John (b.1768); Walter (b.1769), who succeeded; William (b.1770); Agnes (b.1772), who married Adam Stavert of Hosocate; Francis (b.1773), Major in the army, killed in the Peninsular War; James (b.1775), who succeeded Walter as the last Laird; Elizabeth, 'Betty' (b.1776), who was the 2nd wife of Gilbert Chisholm of that Ilk; William (b.1782); and Margaret (b.1783). John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Mervinslaw in 1797, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. He owned 2 work horses. John (18th/19th C.) recorded at Timbersidemill on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, where he is listed owning 2 work horses. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Easter Essenside on the 1789-97 Horse Tax Rolls. In 1797 he owned 5 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. John (18th/19th C.) recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as farmer at Ashkirk Mill. John (18th/19th C.) cooper and wheelwright in Lilliesleaf, as recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories. John (b.1772) possibly son of James, who was tenant at Denholmhill, where he was later tenant himself. He married Agnes, daughter of Thomas Blyth and Isabel Reid, who was born at East Middle. Their children were: Isabell (b.1802); Elizabeth, 'Betty' (b.1803); James (b.1805), who died in Australia; Thomas (1809-67), who may have died at sea; George (1811-96), who died in Manitoba, Canada; Agnes (b.1813); and John (b.1813). They were baptised at the Burger Kirk in Hawick. He could be the John listed at Denholm Mill on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 4 horses. John (b.c.1770) farmer at Langbaulk. He is recorded there in 1841, along with John and Mary, probably his children. He was probably related to William, who was about the same age and also a farmer there. John (b.c.1775) local hosiery employer, known as 'John the Turk'. The nickname may have already been in the family, but he was known for reducing wages, having labour organisers (including James Hogg) imprisoned, etc. There is a record of him receiving help from the Board of Trustees for Manufactures for purchasing a ribbed stocking frame in 1798. His attempt to reduce the price of men's stockings by 6 pence per dozen, through wage reductions, led to the first known strike of hosiery workers in 1817. He is listed as a manufacturer on the High Street on Pigot's 1825/6 directory, and seems to have been at 'Turk's Close', around No. 60 on the 1841 census (along with his wife Ann). He is probably the Hawick spinner of that name who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick' in 1825. In 1826 he received further help from the Board of Trustees for carding and spinning machinery. His house stood on the site of the Bridge Hotel. He married Ann Gledstains, last of her family in Hawick. He had a son John who died in 1819. John (18th/19th C.) recorded at Martin's House in 1797, along with William. They were surely related to the later farmer at Martin's House, also called John. John (18th/19th C.) son of John. He took over from his father as tenant of Hummelknowes Mill. He is probably the John recorded as tenant there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He married a miss Deans and his children included John (also miller at Hummelknowes) and Walter (farmer at Hummelknowes). He died at Hummelknowes Mill. John (18th/19th C.) recorded in the 1788 county valuation and in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls as owner of 'Part of Mr. Patrick Cunningham's Lands, now called Allers Garden, which belonged to George Kerr'. This separate piece of the former lands of Rev. Cunningham was valued at £10 19s; it seems likely to have been land near the modern Allars Crescent. He is probably the same as one of the other Johns, and perhaps related to Walter, of the former Patrick Cunningham’s lands. John of Ashtrees (b.1762/3) born in Oxnam Parish, he was son of Adam and grandson of John. He was descended from the Scotts of Bunchon. He was farmer at Woodhouse. In the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls he is recorded as tenant of ‘Woodhouse &c.’ when he owned 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse; he also paid the dog tax at Woodhouse in 1797. He was listed as owner of Ashtrees on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He is recorded as proprietor of ‘Ashtree, Woodhouse, Southdean’ on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory, and of ‘Ashtree, Woodehouse’ in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was ‘Landed prop.’ at Woodhouse, occupying 100 acres, with 550 acres of hill pasture and employing 7 people. In 1787 he married Isabel Rae and among their children was mer and employing 7 people. In 1787 he married Israel Rae and among their children was Adam of Tullich, Loch Carron. In 1855 his ex-

horses and 1 saddle horse; he also paid the dog tax at Woodhouse in 1797. He was listed as owner of Ashtrees on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He is recorded as proprietor of ‘Ashtree, Woodhouse, Southdean’ on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory, and of ‘Ashtree, Woodehouse’ in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was ‘Landed prop.’ at Woodhouse, occupying 100 acres, with 550 acres of hill pasture and employing 7 people. In 1787 he married Isabel Rae and among their children was Adam of Tullich, Loch Carron. In 1855 his executors sold the farm of Ashtrees to his cousin, Thomas Scott of Riccalton. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at ‘Minto-hill-end’ when he subscribed to Andrew Scott’s book of poetry, published in Kelso in 1811. John (b.c.1780) cabinet-maker who lived on the Mid Raw in 1841. His wife was Jane and their children included George, David, Janet, John and Helen. His daughter Agnes married carrier James Hill (ancestor of the Hawick Ball family). John (1784–1860) born at Gripknowe in Kirkton Parish, son of John and Helen Renwick. He was an agricultural labourer, moving to Melrose Parish. He lived at Shielshaugh Cottage and also Abbey Street, where he served as Abbey Keeper. In 1815 in Ancrum he married Beatrice (1792–1836), daughter of William Boa and Beatrix Scott. Their children were: Rev. John D. (1817–95), who died at Hamilton, Ontario, Canada; Catherine (1821–99), who also emigrated to Canada; William T. (1828–95), lived in Bruce County, Ontario; James (1828–97), who died in Manitoba; Rev. Peter (1830–1908), also in Ontario; Robert (1832–1900), also Ontario. He and his wife are buried at Borthwick Waas. John of Riccalton (1785–1858) younger son of Thomas of Peel. He was tenant farmer at Lethem, jointly with his brother Thomas. He was recorded as a freeholder in the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811. He was probably the John recorded at Lethem among subscribers to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was elected as an honorary member at the first meeting of the Jedforest Club, and arranged to have the club coats made out of Cheviot wool. In 1829 he bought Riccalton from the daughters of the Duke of Roxburghe, also purchasing the superiority. He then became an ordinary member of the Jedforest Club. In 1855 he bought Ashtrees from the trustees of John Scott, tenant of Woodhouses (and a distant relative). He died unmarried, leaving Ashtrees to his nephew, Dr. James Robson, and Riccalton to his nephew, John Elliot (2nd son of his sister Helen). He may be the Scott of Riccalton recorded as owner of Middles Knowes in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. John (b.1787/8) born in Southdean Parish, he was a retired shepherd at Wauchope Burn in 1861, along with his wife Margaret from Jedburgh. John (b.1787/8) proprietor of Timpendean in the 19th century. He was listed there among the gentry of the Jedburgh area in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was farming 700 acres and employed 18 labourers. It is said that he and his sons were instrumental in changing the way farming was done locally, turning hill farms into half-arable farms. His wife was Agnes and their children included William (who succeeded to Timpendean) and George. John (b.1788/9) farmer at Longrow in Castleton Parish. In 1851 he was farmer of 260 acres there. His wife was Jane and their children included Archibald, Mary, Thomas, Jane, Elizabeth, Ann, Helen and John. John (b.1788/9) from Canonbie, he was an innkeeper in Newcastle. In 1841 he was farmer at Langraw and in 1851 was farming 260 acres there (‘worked by family’). He kept the Commercial Inn in the 1860s (the same as the Liddesdale Hotel on Douglas Square). His wife was Jane G. (from Bewcastle) and their children included: Archibald (b.c.1830); Hector (1831/2–1909); Mary (b.c.1833); Thomas (b.c.1834); Jane (1836/7–1908); Elizabeth (or ‘Betty’, b.c.1836); Ann (1839/40–88); Hannah (b.c.1838); Helen (1841/2–1919); and John (1842/3–1906). Some of the family are buried in Etterton Cemetery. John Sibbald (1789–1864) eldest son of Henry, farmer at Deloraine and Agnes Sibbald. He was tenant at Over Deloraine. In 1822 he married Christian, daughter of Alexander Scott, tenant in Ladhope. Their children were: Henry Ale, tenant in Gilmanscleuch; Alexander, tenant in Ransaycleuch; Charles, tenant in Over Whitleaw; John, who succeeded his father in Deloraine; Arbuthnot; Agnes, who married James Gibson of Shaws; and Christian, who married T. Ballan-tyne of Whithope. Col. John of Woll (b.1790) youngest surviving son of Charles of Woll. He was ‘of Ravenswood’ before the death of his brother Charles Balfour in 1838, and the relinquishing of Woll by his nephew Charles Scott-Plummer. He thus gained Woll in 1839, and sold the estate in 1863 to a Mr. Ainslie. He married Clementina, daughter of Edward Shaw. They had 2 daughters: Clementina, who married John Henry Durbin; and Elizabeth, who died in 1883. John of Gala (1790–1840) only son of Col. Hugh, he was 9th Laird. He became one of Sir Walter Scott’s closest friends. He was suspected of being involved in getting the Galashiels men to switch sides at the Carterhaugh Baa in 1815. He was a Commissioner of Selkirkshire in 1819. In 1820 he married Magdalen, daughter of Sir Archibald Hope of Craighall and Pinkie. Their children were: Maj. Hugh, who succeeded; Capt. Archibald (1827–70), who died without issue; Elizabeth; and Isabella. John (b.1791/2) son of John, with his mother being a Deans. He was miller at Hummelknowes Mill, like his father before him. He was recorded as miller at ‘Hulblknows’ in 1851, with his brother Walter as farmer. He was still listed as miller there in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was unmarried. Sir John of Ancrum (1798–1814) son of Sir John, he was 6th Baronet, but only briefly. He was born at Athlone, while his father was serving there with the Roxburgh Cavalry. He joined the Navy and died on board H.M.S. Rhine at age 16, having succeeded his father only 2 years earlier. However, he was still listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1819. He was succeeded by his brother William. John (b.1795) youngest son of William, farmer at Singlie, and Margaret Pott. He became a physician in Edinburgh and is referred to in glowing terms in Riddell-Carr’s ‘Border Memories’. He had one son, William Henry, also a physician, who died aged 24. John (b.c.1795) farmer at Martin’s House, where he is recorded in 1841. He is surely related to William and John, who are recorded at Martin’s House in 1707. He married Isobel Michie in Cavers Parish in 1816. They had a large family of perhaps a dozen children, including Isobel (b.1817), Mina (b.1818), William (b.1820), John (b.1822), James (b.1824), Margaret (b.1825), Mary (b.1827), Agnes (b.1828), Robert (b.1830), Adam (b.1833), Helen (b.1835), Janet (b.1837), Elizabeth (b.1839) and Jane (b.1841). He was presumably related to the William and John who were recorded as farmers there in 1797. He could be the John born to James in Cavers Parish in 1792. John (1799/1800–1872) son of a shepherd at Cauldsdale in Liddesdale, where he was born. He worked as a shepherd in Castleton Parish, living at Mereburnhead (near Canonbie), and later feued land in Newcastle. He was a keen Free Kirk supporter there. In 1861 he was at 35 South Hermitage Street. He married Margaret Murray, daughter of the tenant farmer at Whisgills (probably Thomas); she died in 1861, aged 61. They had 4 sons and 2 daughters, including: John (1819–32); Archie; Thomas; David (1828/9–1911); Janet (1830–32); and Janet (again, b.1834/5). His grandsons farmed at Wolfehopelee. John (b.1797/8) resident of Deanburnhaugh. He was recorded as an agricultural labourer there in 1841 and 1851, and in 1861 was at Hoscote. He married Ann Henderson in 1830 and their children included Janet (b.1832), Mary (b.1834), Jane (b.1839), George (b.1842) and Francis (b.1844). John (b.c.1805) flesher on the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was living at about 6 High Street, along with Charlotte, possibly his sister. John (b.1805/6) from Jedburgh, he was farmer at Harwood on Teviot. He was there in 1851, farming 750 acres. He was unmarried. John of Teviot Bank and Rodono (1809–67), W.S., son of William. His grandfather was John and his great-grandfather William of Woll. He trained as a lawyer, being apprenticed to Gilbert Laurie Finlay. He became Writer to the Signet in 1832. He became a Roxburghshire J.P. and was also a member of the Jedforest Club. He succeeded to Teviot Bank and sold it in 1854 to Agnes Scott, widow of his uncle James Scott of Ellem. He purchased the lands of Riskenhope from George Pott of Dod and Chapelhope from John Gray Henderson of Abbotrule, these being on the banks of St. Mary’s. He renamed the land Rodono, after the ancient barony there, and built a mansion house, but died before it was completed. In 1863 he presented the household expense book of Mrs. Bennett of Chesters to the Museum, along with manuscripts of Rev. Hardie of Ashkirk’s sermons, a letter from Rev. Thomas Boston and a stirrup-cup used by Turnbull of Knowe. In 1850 he married Anne, 2nd daughter of Henry Singleton of Belpatrick, County Louth. They had no family. He was compiling a history of the Scotts of Woll and others when he died, entitled ‘A Genealogical Memoir of the Scotts of Thirlestane with Genealogical Notes of other Families of the Name of Scott’: three typed copies of the extensive manuscript are lodged in libraries. They are a valuable source of information gathered together on branches of the Scott family through the 14th, 15th and 16th centuries. He died in Marienbad, Czech Republic, where his widow had a church erected in his memory in 1879. His wife died in 1891. There is a portrait of him by John Watson Gordon in the collection of the Society of Writers to Her Majesty’s Signet. John (b.1806) youngest son of Charlie of the Crescent, he was uncle of Sir James A.H. Murray. His father sought a position with him for the excise, and got the support of Scott of Harden, claiming that they were distantly related. He claimed to be 2nd cousin of Lady Ogilvy, who was also called the Duchess of Airlie; this supports the family claim that his great-grandfather had married a daughter of Charles Ogilvy. He may have moved to Argyll for a while. He married Catherine Watson and their children were: Agnes, who married Richard Johnson, bank clerk in Liverpool; George, bank clerk in Edinburgh; and 3 other children who went to Australia. After his wife died he moved to Essen-side, with his niece, Mrs. John Douglas, keeping house for him. John Young (1806/7–80) son of John and Janet Young. He was manager of the Hawick Gas Works at the Common Haugh from at least 1838 until 1851 and was then miller of Hawick Mill. He was still listed as manager of the gas works in Slater’s 1852 directory. He also farmed, and lived at Slitrig Crescent. He was noted for helping during the cholera outbreak of 1849. The Caledonian Mercury of 1838 reported that he ‘has now in his possession a stalk of oats fully seven feet long, bearing one hundred and ninety four ears or pickles’. He married Mina, daughter of another John Scott (b.1792) and Isabel Michie. Their children included Isabella, John Young, William, Jessie, Thomas, James, Helen and Agnes. He may also be the same ‘J.Y.’ who was on the Town Council and of whom a portrait exists. Lord John (1809–60) see John Douglas Montagu-Douglas-Scott. John of Synton (19th C.) see John Corse Scott. John (1814–56) son of Charles and Margaret Douglas, he was born in Lilliesleaf. The family emigrated to Ontario when he was about 20 years old. He became a doctor and settled in the town of Berlin, Ontario. Some of his letters back to his family in Scotland are preserved in the Scottish Record Office. He died in Kitchener, Ontario. John (19th C.) Treasurer and Secretary of Liddesdale Curling Club in the 1860s. He is probably the same as one of the Johns who lived in Newcastle with the excise. John (b.1824/5) son of Walter, farmer at Stintieknowe. He was born at Stobs Woodfoot, where his grandfather was gamekeeper. He lived at Northhouse Haugh for 11 years, then worked as a roadman, living at Castleweary for 40 years. He was a friend of Henry Scott Riddell, who lived nearby. For a while he had charge of the coach horses when Castleweary was used for changing horses. In 1845 he married Ann (1827–1909), daughter of William Fulton, Governor of Hawick Prison. They had 7 children, including Margaret Cairns (b.1846), Walter (b.1848), Isabella (b.1851), Robina Young (b.1853), William (b.1860), Ann (b.1862) and John (b.1862). His son succeeded him as roadman in Teviothead. After retirement the couple moved to Hawick, where they lived at 5 Garfield Street. In 1895 they celebrated their golden wedding anniversary, receiving many gifts and in 1905 celebrated their diamond wedding anniversary. He was still tending to Dr. Hamilton’s sheep in the Wellogate in his 79th year. John ‘Johnnie the Gover’ (1828–c.1889) tweed designer in Hawick who emigrated to America. He was Cornet in 1853 and returned to Hawick for the 1881 Common Riding. He could be ‘the Gover’ who was recorded winning foot races at the Common Riding of 1862, like he had done many times in the past. He was Chairman of the Race Committee and Steward at the Races (e.g. in 1873), as well as being a Town Councillor. In 1887 he wrote an account of his early memories of the Common Riding for the Hawick Express. His nickname reportedly came from his father’s penchant for using the word ‘gover’ (meaning a stupid or aimless person). In 1861 he was an unmarried ‘Tweed Foreman’ living at 5 Teviot Crescent with his aunt Margaret Scott as his housekeeper, and also his young cousin Charlotte. He was probably the John, son of James, born in Wilton Parish – ‘Kinly Stick and Daavid Garland, London Laid-law and Little Dan, Johnny the Gover (in a far land), And Wat the Drummer leads the van’ [HI]. John (1832/3–1903) mason in Newcastle, living on South Hermitage Street in 1861. He married Margaret Inglis, who died in 1921, aged 79. Their children included: Adam (1874–1954), who was also a mason. John (b.1835/6) born in Hawick, he was a Skinner in Duns in 1861. In 1860 he married Charlotte (c.1835–1925), daughter of Hawick shoemaker Adam Kersel. Their children included James (b.c.1860). John (b.1837/8) draper in Newcastle. In 1861 he was baset at about 3 Douglas Square and employing 5 men. He lived with his sister Elizabeth. John (19th C.) Song-Singer at the 1875 Common Riding, where it was said he had 20 years of experience. John Douglas see John Douglas Montagu-Douglas-Scott. John (1832/3–88) tweed finisher who lived at 18 Bourtree Place. His parents were farmer Thomas and Nancy Leithead. He married Margaret Murray, who died in 1889, aged 53. Their children included Thomas and Annie (who died at Balbriggan). John (19th C.) known as ‘Jock the Sweep’, Sheriff Officer in the 1840s. John (1836–80) well-known botanist and horticulturalist, brought up in Denholm. Son of a farmer, he was orphaned at the age of 4 and brought up by an aunt. He attended Minto School under Mr. Hamilton. Encouraged by his cousin Rev. James Duncan, he won many prizes in local flower shows as a boy. He became a gardener at the Royal Botanical Gardens in Edinburgh in 1859, where he experimented with hybridization and contributed to the transactions of the Botanical Society. He corresponded with Charles Darwin, as well as the great botanist Sir J.D. Hooker. He moved to Calcutta Botanic Garden in 1864. He caught an infection in Darjeeling, and returned to Edinburgh, dying in his sister’s house at Garvald. He was said to have been extremely modest and a remarkable self-taught man. John (b.1832) son of George and Jean, he was born in Ashkirk Parish. His father worked on farms at Synton. He was a ploughman and then worked as a railway porter and lampman. His wife was Margaret, and they lived at Burnfoot, then Adderstoneshiel, Upper Village and the High Street. Their daughter was Georgina. John (1836–1900) 4th son of John, tenant in Over Deloraine and Christian Scott from Ladhope. He was descended from the Scotts of Singlie. He succeeded his father as tenant at Over Deloraine, later known as West Deloraine. He was recorded as farmer there in 1868. In 1871 he married Jane, daughter of John Thomson from Catslackburn. Their children included: John (1872–1923); James Thomson (b.1874), who lived at Dinnington, Yorkshire; William (b.1876) who married Alice Watson McCaig from Galashiels and settled in Penrith; and Andrew Thomson (b.1885), who emigrated to Manitoba, Canada, and married his cousin Jean Thomson. John Henry Francis Kinnaird of Gala (1859–1935) son of Hugh, he was the 10th Laird. He was educated at Radley College, Abingdon, Oxfordshire. He was Justice of the Peace for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire and was Deputy Lieutenant for Selkirkshire. He died unmarried and was succeeded by his nephew Henry John Alexander. John M. (19th C.) writer of some local poetry, e.g. ‘The Nicht Afore the Morn’ in 1893. Rev. John (19th/20th C.) minister at Dalketh West, who moved to Saughtree Kirk in 1922. He stayed until 1925, when he was translated to Anwoth, Kirkcudbright. He demitted in 1931. John Robson (19th/20th C.) farmer at Newton (probably in Bedrule Parish). John Ross (1951– ) local man who was newspaper reporter and Hawick News editor in the 1990s. He was first on Jedburgh Council, then a Hawick Councillor from 1985, as a Liberal, being Honorary Provost from 1996 until 2002, when he took over as Convenor of the Scottish Borders Council. However, he lost his seat to Mary Beck in 2003. Also a Justice of the Peace, he has had particular interest in transport matters. Joseph (18th C.) wright in Hawick. He was son of the miller, probably James. He was said to be possessor of the ‘undermost house of the Miln Port’, which was carried away by the great flood of 1767. He is probably the Joseph who married Margaret Scott in 1775 (registered in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes) and whose children included: George (b.1776); Jane (b.1783); and Joseph (b.1785). Joseph (b.1790–bef. 1851) gun-maker and ironmonger at the Sandbed, listed on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He is also listed as a tinsmith there. In 1837 he was listed as a blacksmith and tin-plate worker on the High Street, with ‘Joseph Scott & Sons’ also being listed as ironmongers, gun-makers and tin-plate workers on the Sandbed. On the 1841 census he was at about 21 High Street and listed as a smith. His wife and daughter were still running the ironmonger’s business in 1851. However, confusingly Slater’s 1852 directory lists among the ironmongers ‘Joseph Scott & Sons’ on Teviot Square and Jane Scott on the High Street. He married Jane Veitch, apparently in Edinburgh in 1826. Their children included: Joseph (b.1828), who probably died young; and Elizabeth (b.1830). He is probably the Joseph born to Joseph and Peggy in Wilton in 1785. Joseph (b.1799) born in Selkirk, son of James and Barbara Skirving. He was recorded in the 1851 census as a teacher of Latin, Greek and French on the Cross Wynd. In 1852 he was listed as a teacher in Punchbowl Close. Keith Stanley Malcolm (b.1884), M.B.E., son of Joseph Rogerson and Annie Latimer. He was from from a line of Scotts who settled in Morpeth, and were descended from Gideon, 5th son of John of Woll. He inherited Kenton Hall in Northumberland from his father, but sold it and purchased Greenwood, a small farm in Cumberland. In 1923 he published his compilation of Scott family history, called ‘Scott, 1118–1923’ (reprinted in 1969). When he was almost done with his work he discovered the unfinished study by John of Rodono; he then incorporated some of this information, and lodged 3 typed copies in library collections. In 1910 he married Rosina Marguerita, daughter of Cavalier V.A. Montaldi of Forest Hall. Lady widow of Howpasley (16th/17th C.), assisted by Jean Scott of Satchells, she presided over a Council of War at Hawick Cross in April 1615, complaining that Sir James Douglas had taken lands at Howpasley, and urging a band of supporters to kill all the sheep there. About 60 sheep were slaughtered, in an act of spectacular barbarism, described as ‘sic monstruous and unhard of crewaltie, as the lyk quhaiof hes nicht bane har hard amangist the wyld Irisch and savadge people’. Several of the perpetrators were subsequently hanged. She was presumably the widow of the former Laird of Howpasley, who was either Walter or his son William. Neither her first name nor her maiden name are recorded. Lawrence (15th C.) recorded in 1495 as witness to a charter for Thomas Grundistone of Kingsgask, signed in Edinburgh. His name is recorded as ‘Laurentio Scot’. Lawrence of Harperrig and Clerkington (d.1637), J.P., son of Hew of Scotsloch. He was descended from a branch of the Scotts of Bavelaw who had moved to Ayrshire. Before 1592 he was apprenticed to Robert Scott of Knightspottie, Rector of Chancery, and became an advocate. He bought Harperrig in 1605. In 1609 he witnessed a charter for lands in Ashkirk Parish. In 1612 he was granted (the right of) the marriage of the young Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He later served the Earl on the commission to run his affairs while he was in Holland, his son William also being a commissioner. In 1620 he was witness to a charter for the Earl of Buccleuch for the lands of Goldielands. In 1634 he carried the coat of honour at the Earl’s funeral in Hawick, and his sons William and James also took part in the procession. He had a charter for Elliston in about 1622 and was granted the lands of Bavelaw in Edinburgh in 1628, Bonnington (in West Lothian) in 1629 and Clerkington in 1634. In 1633 he was appointed one of the ‘Tutors Testamentary’ to oversee the Earl of Buccleuch’s will. He may be the same advocate who was one of those representing a group of Scotts accused of slaughtering sheep at Howpasley in a trial of 1616. He represented the Earl of Buccleuch in 1628 when he accused a number of Hawick men of cutting down trees on his land. He married Elizabeth, daughter of William Pringle from Edinburgh. His children were: Sir William of Clerkington, who was one of the Lords of Session; James of Bonnington (in West Lothian); Lawrence of Bavelaw; Marion, who married James Scott of Vogrie, uncle to Sir John Scott of Scotstarvit; Margaret, who married William Wallace of Shewalton; Agnes, married Patrick Kinloch; Joanna, married James Clerk; and Alison, married Peter Houston. Lawrence (13th C.) recorded as ‘Laurence Scot’ in 1272/3 when he had a letter granting safe conduct from King Edward I so he could visit ‘the threshold of St. Andrew the Apostle’. It is unclear how he might have been related to other family members. Lawrence of Bavelaw (d.c.1670) 3rd son of Lawrence of Harperrig. He seems to be sometimes referred to as ‘Lancelot’. In 1650 he was named as one of the ‘tutors’ for the children of Francis Earl of Buccleuch in his will and also served as one of the ‘tutors testamentars’ for the will of Francis. He was a Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch 1658–59 and listed in 1661 as still owing money for the rentals for these years. He witnessed the marriage contract of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch in 1663. He married Katherine Binning. The couple were granted the Barony of Corstophine by Oliver Cromwell. His son Lawrence of Bavelaw was served as his heir in 1670. He also had a son, Charles, who was served heir to his brother William of Bavelaw in 1691. Leticia (13th C.) recorded as surname ‘Scot’ in 1272, when she gave half a mark to have a writ ‘ad terminum’ at Westminster. Lilias (17th C.) daughter of Jean, who was sister of the last Walter of Crumhaugh (although these generations are quite uncertain). She married William Knox, servant to George, Lord Ross. She inherited parts of the Goldielands and Crumhaugh estates from her uncle Walter (along with her cousin Robert Scott of Glack). But these passed to another relative, Walter of Crumhaugh, in the early 1670s. Lilias (b.1835) daughter of Francis Napier and Janet Oliver. She married spinner Adam Murray and they emigrated to Canada, living in Ontario. They had a daughter, Jessie Murray Scott (b.1857), perhaps before they were married. They had a daughter Annie who married William Roper (son of William Roper from Massachusetts and Ann, daughter of Robert Greenwood from Hawick); their daughter Annie Roper married her father’s cousin William Maxwell, a son of Grace Maxwell, who was half-sister of Ann Greenwood. They also had a son George Stevenson Murray. Lucas (d.bef. 1270) recorded in 1242 as ‘Lucas Scot mayor of Dunwich’ in pleas in the county of Norfolk, relating to sacks of Scottish wool. He was probably related to Gerald, who was also listed. He is recorded as ‘Luke the Scotsman’ in a document from the Sheriff of Norfolk and Suffolk in 1423. He is ‘Lucas le Scot’ of Dunwich in a court case in 1256 and another in 1258. He is further listed as ‘le Escot’ in a plea at Dunwich in 1258, and also as ‘les Escot’ of Dunwich in a document from Norfolk and Suffolk in 1262. His wife suffered some sort of infirmity, and there was a case against a surgeon called Reginald, whose goods they had kept when he tried to cure her; his son Richard is also mentioned. His son and heir Richard is recorded in another document in 1267/8. In 1260 he is ‘Luke the Scotsman of Dunwich’ in a case involving merchants from Hamburg. Malcolm (13th/14th C.) holder of lands in Glasgow, according to a document of about 1300. He is referred to as ‘Malcolmni dicti Scoti’. Margaret (13th C.) recorded York in 1254, when she had a writ of trespass. Margaret (15th C.) tenant of half of ‘Nethir sannake’ in Galloway in 1481, when her right was assigned to John Kennedy. Margaret (15th/16th C.) wife of John and mother of Alexander. She was a widow in 1499 when the East steading of Langhope was assigned to her and her son Alexander. And in 1501 the Middle stead was assigned to the pair. Margaret (16th C.) recorded in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter of Branzholme, she was possibly a Scott. The entry states that payment is due ‘to Thomas Hendrie in Selkirk, for claih furnest to Margaret of the Wallis’. This may have either been Woll in the Ale valley or Walls in Dryfesdale (where there were also Scotts). Margaret ‘Dame Margaret’ or ‘Lady Margaret’ nee Douglas (d.1640) daughter of David Douglas, 7th Earl of Angus. She married Sir Walter in 1568 and had the work on Branzholme Castle completed after her husband’s death in 1574. Her name and initials are inscribed in the walls. In 1574 she was granted the ‘ward and non-entry’, as well as other fees due to her deceased husband, Sir Walter. She secondly married Francis Stuart, Earl of Bothwell (who was forced to flee the country and die abroad) before 1580. After this marriage she was often referred to as ‘Countess of Bothwell’. Her factor in the lands of Milsington about 1580 was James Grieve. In 1580 she complained to the Privy Council (along with James Gledstains of Cocklaw and Wat Scott of Harden) of thefts and outrages committed by the sons and nephews of Martin Elliot of Braiddie and Lanie Armstrong of Whithaugh; this involved her farms of Harwood, Slaidhills and Whitlaw. In 1581/2 she further complained against 15 thieves, who were declared rebels. She claimed ownership of estates of her husbands, including Bellendean, which had sheep stolen from it by a band of Elliots and Armstrongs in 1582. In 1598 she is recorded in a contract with her son Sir Walter’s tenants in Kirkurd (Peeblesshire) receiving a ‘grassum’ of 33s 4d every 5 years during her lifetime. She lived to a great old age and is buried at Eckford. Margaret (16th/17th C.) wife of Walter of Burnfoot. She was tried at Edinburgh in 1616 for assaulting James Lethame with a heavy stone in Hawick Parish Church, and later, along with 7 accomplices, assaulting him and his wife on the High Street. Margaret ‘Maggy Fendy’ (16th/17th C.) daughter of Walter of Harden and Mary, ‘the Flower of Yarrow’. She married Gilbert Elliott of Stobs and Horsleyhill, ‘Gibbie o the Gowden Garters’ and their son William succeeded to Stobs. In 1643 she is recorded as mother of William when she was liferenter of lands in Kirkton Parish valued at £666 13s 4d. She may also have been the ‘Mar. Scott, gudewife of Horsliehill’ who owned lands in Hassendean Parish valued at £637, also in 1643. Margaret (16th/17th C.) mother-in-law of Francis of Castleside. Francis’ wife appears to have been Isobel, and so would have been her daughter. In 1639 there is a dispute in the Ashkirk Parish records between her and her son, apparently over access to the family seat in the Kirk. She claimed Francis had ‘maliciously and unreasonably raked and ruggit her from her said seat’, while he claimed she had called him ‘thief and traitour’. The precise nature of the dispute is not clear. However, she is referred to as ‘sometyme in Castleside’. The resolution was that she ‘would hear no reason’ and so was charged to appear before the Selkirk Presytery. The fact that she was referred to as ‘of Castleside’ herself suggests that she was Margaret, daughter of George of Castle-side, who was served heir to her father, along with their 2 sisters Janet and Bessie, in 1632. Margaret (17th C.) owner of the lands of Broadlee in Ashkirk Parish in 1643. She is recorded as ‘Mar. Scott for Braiddlies’, valued at £160. Probably the same ‘Goodwife of braiddie’ paid tax on £160 in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. She was presumably widow of the former Laird of Broadlee. It is also possible that she was the same Margaret as the mother-in-law of Francis of Castleside. Margaret (d.1672) daughter of William of Chamber-lain Newton, and also related to the Scotts of Brieryyard. She married Thomas Elliot in Borthwickshiel and had at least 5 children, including William Elliot, 1st Laird of Borthwickbrae.

Scott

She may be the ‘Mariota’, daughter of William of Chamberlain Newton, who was served heir to her father’s brother Simon in 1643. Margaret (17th C.) daughter of Robert of Whitslade. In 1647 she was served heir to her father’s lands of Ettrickhouse, Bowerhope and Dalgleish, all of which were contained in the Barony of Synton by annexation. Margaret (17th C.) one of the daughters of Robert of Alton. In 1653 she and her sisters Bessie and Agnes were served heirs to their ‘foir grandsher’ (probably great-grandfather) Robert in half of the East Mains of Hassendean. Margaret (17th C.) recorded in 1676 as ‘goodwife of Coudhouse’, i.e. wife of Scott of Coldhouse (although her husband’s name is unrecorded). James Henderson was found guilty of giving her ‘a blow for against the heart’. It is possible she is the same woman as Marie of Coldhouse, recorded in 1663. Margaret (17th C.) resident of ‘Crawknow’ in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. Margaret (17th C.) resident of Doecleuch according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. She is recorded as ‘Margrat Scott in Brugh’, suggesting that she was perhaps widow of a Scott who had farmed at nearby Brugh. Margaret (17th/18th C.) wife of James, who farmed at Borthaugh in the early 1690s. In 1696 and 1698 she herself was renting ¼ of Borthaugh and was then a widow. Her cautioners were Adam and Walter, farmers at Overhall, who were probably closely related. Margaret (d.c.1782) widow who had her will proved at the Prerogative Court of Canterbury in 1783. Her surname is listed as ‘Scott alias Brown’ and she was from Hawick, Roxburghshire. It is unclear if her husband was ‘Martinus Scot’ in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501. Along with ‘Willelmus Unys’ he had his name recorded at a value of £3. She was probably widow of the former Laird of Coldhouse (perhaps Peter, recorded being ‘of Cowdhome’ in 1654). It is possible that she was the Marie (or Mary), sister of Robert Scott of Hartwoodmyres, who married Walter of Howford (who was connected to the Coldhouse family) in 1615. She may be the ‘goodwife of Coudhous’ recorded in 1676. William of Coldhouse held these same lands in 1643 and seems likely to have been her son. Marion (17th C.) daughter of William of Fingland. She married William Wilson ‘in Gulzeane flait’. In 1662 she was served heir to her brother Walter of Howplesley. However, Howplesley passed shortly thereafter to Walter, son of her cousin Patrick of Tanlawhill. Marion Adamson (1886–1963) daughter of Peter, founder of Pesco’s. When her father died she took over the house Norwood. She never married. Martin (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Martinus Scot’ in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501. Along with ‘Willelmus Unys’ he had his name recorded as ‘Martinus Scot’ in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501.
branch of the Scotts he came from. Mary (16th C.) called ‘the Flower of Yarrow’, popularised in the ballad of the same name. She was said to be the daughter of Philip Scott of Dryhope Tower and renowned for her beauty; in fact she was probably sister of Philip, and 2nd daughter of John of Dryhope, but presumably tales of her beauty had real foundation. In 1576 she married Walter Scott of Harden (‘Auld Wat’, the marriage contract still exists) and bore 4 sons and 6 daughters. There were disputes between the ‘Lothian tutors’ and the ‘South Country tutors’, as well as between Gideon Scott of Highchester and John Hay, Earl of Tweeddale (her uncle), who were trying to arrange for her marriage. There was also a great power struggle between her mother, Countess of Wemyss, and the appointed trustees for control of her and her sister Anne; Oliver Cromwell was enlisted in support, affirming that the daughters should be entrusted to their mother. During her minority Dalkeith house was occupied by Gen. Monck. She had a huge fine of £15,000 imposed by Cromwell for her father’s support of Charles II, with the tutors pleading for a reduction in the amount. There were schemes to marry her to the sons of many noblemen, probably including Sir Andrew Ker of Greenhead, Lord Robert Kerr, a son of the Earl of Tweeddale, the son of Scott of Scottshall in Kent and the son of John Scott of Gorrenberry. She was in fact married in secrecy to Walter, eldest son of Sir Gideon Scott of Highchesters, when she was 11 years of age (and he was 14), although there was an attempt to annul the marriage until she was at least 12! However, Cromwell died in this period, which complicated the legal challenges, although there continued to be machinations to control her future and that of her sister. She was never in good health, being regularly attended by doctors (who probably did more harm than good), with an arm infection that refused to heal. She went to London for the curing power of the King’s touch, but the journey probably made her condition worse and then she caught measles on her return to Scotland. She died at the age of 13. The power struggles continued, with the last revision to her will giving family control to the Earls of Rothes and Wemyss, freezing out Sir Gideon of Highchester and her husband Walter of Tarras. She was succeeded by her sister Anne (or Anna) and was buried at Dalkeith. Mary (17th/18th C.) sister and heiress of John of Headshaw. In 1681 she married Patrick Porteous, Burgess of Peebles. She succeeded to the estate of Headshaw in 1691, there being no male heirs. This included Headshaw Mill and Dryden, as well as Crawknow and Clews. In 1696 she and her husband sold Headshaw to Sir Gilbert Elliot. She was involved in an ‘action of relief’ with Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch in 1713. Her daughter Henrietta married Michael Anderson of Tushielaw. She is also referred to as ‘Marie’. Mary Lilians (d.1790) eldest daughter of John of Harden. She was sometimes known as the ‘Flower of Yarrow’, like her ancestor namesake. There was a portrait of her by Allan Ramsay, which hung in Hamilton Palace (transferred to Mertoun House), painted it is said for the Duke of Hamilton who was infatuated with her, although she was attached to the 2nd son of Scott of Scotstarvit (who died, and she never married). She is also said to have had the song ‘Tweedside’ written about her, particularly the lines ‘What beauties does Flora disclose! How sweet are her smiles upon Tweed! Yet Mary’s still sweeter than those; Both nature and fancy exceed’. Mary ‘Floor o Rankleburn’ (18th/19th C.) married Thomas Smith, farmer at Hartshaugh Mill. Her nickname came from her good looks, the story being that a gentleman visiting her father’s house asked for her name, and said that since there was a Mary Scott ‘Flower of Yarrow’, she should be the ‘Flower of Rankleburn’. Her daughter Mary married Robert Purdom. She also had several other children, including Peter, Patrick, Robert, Archibald, Thomas, Andrew, Margaret and Jane. Mary (18th C.) chambermaid at Langlands in 1786, when she was working for Gilbert Elliot. Mary (b.1808/9) from Selkirk, she was school mistress at Deamburnhaugh. She is recorded there on the 1851 census. Matthew (12th/13th C.) recorded as ‘Master Matthew de Scotia’ in Paris in 1218. He was King’s Chancellor in 1228 when he was elected as Bishop of Aberdeen, although he resigned this in favour of Dunkeld. He may have died in 1230 before becoming Bishop. He may be the same Matthew as the Archdeacon of Cleveland. Matthew (13th C.) listed as ‘Mathaeus le Scot’ along with Walter and Adam from Chillingham for robbing a house in the area of Hebbon and Linemouth. Matthew (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. He was recorded as ‘Mathon Scott, called Broid of Steill’, and was probably associated with the lands of the Steele. Michael (c.1175–c.1234) sometimes called ‘the Border Wizard’. Traditionally his birth and death have been placed in the Borders, although there is no evidence for this. He was possibly Michael, who was second son of Richard, and grandson of Uchtred. He held lands in Fife and flourished in the reign of William I, and his descendants are the Scotts of Balwearie, as well as the Scotts of Ancrum. He studied in Oxford and Durham, then travelled widely around Europe, serving as court astronomer and physician (or astrologer and alchemist) to Holy Roman Emperor Frederick II. He is recorded in Toledo, Spain, in 1217 and was also in Italy. He had a licence for 2 cures in Scotland, as well as the Archbishops’ or Bishops’ of Cashel in Ireland, which he resigned by 1224. He had another licence to hold a cure in England and 2 in Scotland in 1225. He translated many important works from Arabic into Latin, thus reintroducing Aristotelian ideas to the western world. Legends of his supernatural powers abound (popularised in Dante, Boccaccio and Sir Walter Scott), and few hard facts are known about his life. He is supposed to have helped bring the infant Maid of Norway to claim the Scottish throne in 1290, when in his 70s, although this may have been a later Michael of Balwearie. He is also said to be buried in Melrose Abbey along with a ‘mighty book’ of necromancy, although others suggest he was buried at Home Coltrame in Cumberland. He is said to have caused the Eildons to be split into 3 and the local belief in his magical powers continued for centuries after his death. It may be that more than one man’s life is being compounded here. The Michael who held lands in Fife married Margaret, daughter of Duncan Syras of that ilk and was succeeded by his son Duncan – ‘The black spae-book from his breast he took, Impressed with many a warlock spell: And the book it was wrote by Michael Scott, Who held in awe the fiends of hell’ [JL], ‘In these far climes it was my lot To meet the wondrous Michael Scot’ [SWS] ‘And here, though history tells it not, Has crossed the wizard, Michael Scott’ [WK] (often written ‘Scot’). J. Wood Brown wrote ‘An enquiry into the life and legends of Michael Scot’ (1897), Lynn Thorndike wrote ‘Michael Scott’ (1965) and Tom Hubbard wrote ‘Michael Scot: myth and polymath’ (2006). Michael (13th C.) along with his wife made a grant of Gask (in Fife) to Dunfermline Abbey sometime before 1231. He is referred to as Michael Scot ‘of the Kingdom of Scotland’ when he made a grant for income from lands in Fife. He was witnessed another couple of grants from Fife in about 1230 and 1231. He could be the Michael, son of Malothen, recorded in 1231. His wife was Margaret, daughter of Duncan of Ceres and his heir was Duncan. He had another son, John. His wife was a widow in the period 1238–50 when she confirmed the grant of Gask. He was surely associated with the Balweary family, but the details are uncertain; in particular he appears to be contemporary with Michael ‘the wizard’. Sir Michael of Balweary (13th C.) son of Duncan and probably great-grandson of the first Richard. He was knighted by Alexander II. He married the daughter and heiress of Sir Richard Balweary, and so came into possession of Balweary in Fife, which the family held for another 13 generations, ending with Col. Walter of Balweary, who died in Flanders in the reign of Charles II. He may be the Michael who paid homage to Edward I in 1291, and was succeeded by his son, also Sir Michael, who swore fealty to Edward I in 1295/6. His seal bore a chevron with 3 lion’s heads, with a crescent on each side of the shield, and the words ‘S’ MICHAELIS SCOTT MILITIS’; this may be the earliest seal known for the Scott family. His wife Mary is recorded as wife of a prisoner held in England in 1296. Michael (13th C.) from Linlithgowshire, he paid homage to Edward I in 1296, and is presumably separate from Sir Michael of Balweary. Sir Michael of Balweary (13th/14th C.) son of Sir Michael. He is recorded at Kinghorn in 1291 and signed the Ragman Rolls of 1295/6, where he is ‘Sir Michael Scot of Fife’; his seal bore a chevron between 3 lion’s heads. He was recorded in 1294 among holders of the lands of the Earldom of Fife. He was taken prisoner at Dunbar and held at Wallingford Castle in England in 1296/7. He is listed in a ‘letters patent’ in 1297 promising to serve Edward I in France and elsewhere. His lands were restored by Edward I in 1297, along with those of ‘Duncan le Scot’, who was probably his son or grandson. He is listed on a roll of horses used by supporters of Edward I in 1298. He was on a jury in 1305 in Perthshire. He was succeeded by his son Sir Henry, while grandson Duncan was progenitor of the Scotts of northern Scotland and a later descendant was Andrew, progenitor of the Scotts of Ancrum. Sir Michael (bef. 1320–46) 2nd Laird of Rankilburn (Buccleuch), son of Sir Richard and an Inglis of Muthockstone (although these early generations are still a little uncertain). He may have been born at Rankeburn (the first of the Scotts of Buccleuch to be born locally). He was known as a gallant warrior, who distinguished himself at Haldon Hill in 1333, and was knighted some time previous to this. He fought in the division commanded by Archibald Douglas, Lord of Galloway, and was among the few noblemen who survived the battlefield. He also accompanied David II to the unfortunate Battle of Durham (or Neville’s Cross) where he was killed. He was succeeded by his son Robert, while his second son John is said to have been ancestor of the Scotts of Synton, Harden, Whitslade, Todrig, Raeburn, Woll, Thirlestane, etc. His daughter Jean may have married John Ainslie of Dolphinston. Nothong else is known about him, including the name of his wife. His Christian name may have derived from the ancestor of the Scotts of Balwearie (perhaps his great-granduncle), but seems to not have been used afterwards. Michael of Aikwood (d.bef. 1541) son of Robert of Aikwood, who he succeeded about 1516. Robert of Bonnington was probably his brother. In the 1526 remission to a large number of Borderers for at- tacking the Earl of Arran he is recorded as ‘Mai- ster Mychaell Scot in Aikwod’; it is unclear why he (and only he in this long list) is given the designation ‘maister’. He is probably the ‘Mai- ster Mychaell Scot’ who was among the local men who had remission in 1527 for their part in the Battle of Skirmish Field. In 1528 he was ‘mag- istro Michaeli Scot de Aikwod’ when appointed as one of the Baileys for infesting David Scott in the lands of his father, Sir Walter of Brax- holine. He was probably one of the witnesses to the discharge from Patrick Earl of Bothwell to Walter Scott of Braxonhline in 1528/9, where he is recorded as ‘Mr. Michell Scott’ just before ‘sir John Scot, notary’. According to the Exchequer Rolls he claimed the lands of Aikwood in 1541 and was also tenant in half of Bowhill, half of Huntly and the wester side of Kershope. He had a charter for the lands of ‘Aikwood’ in 1541, along with his wife Isobel Ker and son William. William was also granted Bowhill in the same doc- ument. Witnesses included Thomas and Gilbert Scott, as well as Robert and William Scott. He was probably ancestor of the slightly later Robert of Aikwood. In the remission of 1526 Thomas, also in Aikwood, is also listed and so presumably a brother or son. Michael of Aikwood (16th C.) listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ in 1590. It is unclear who he was, since the Laird of Oakwood at that time was Robert, but it is possible that the long deceased Michael was meant. Michael (17th C.) Chamberlain of the Earl of Buccleuch at the time of the Earl’s death in 1633. Michael (17th/18th C.) Hawick merchant. In 1703 he was fined for drinking after the ringing of the 10 hour bell. In 1716 he was rebuked by the minister for ‘being extremely drunk laitlie in the street, and not capable to go to his dwelling house’. The minister told him he was a ‘most sad spectacle’, but not being previously guilty of drunkenness he was only admonished and told to mend his ways. Mrs. (18th/19th C.) recorded at Stirches Mains on both the 1797 Horse Tax and Dog Tax Rolls. It is unclear who she may have been married to. Mrs. Robert (16th C.) wife of a Hawick man, mentioned in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Braxonholme. She is listed being owed money ‘for sum ordinar dwtie’, but what this duty might have been is unclear. Mungo (16th C.) Burgess in Edinburgh recorded in 1574/5, 1581 and 1584. In 1574/5 he was surety for a case involving Jedburgh Abbey. He was also cautioner (along with Alexander, also a Burgess of Edinburgh) for George of Synton when he was warded in Edinburgh Castle in 1581, and also for Walter Scott of Goldielands (along with Robert, Burgess in Edinburgh and and James Gledstains of Cocklaw). There was a further caution by him and Alexander in 1581 for George of Synton and Robert of Haining ‘now in ward in Edinburgh Castle, in £1000 each’. It seems likely that he was closely related to Alexander and Robert, and probably also related to the Scotts of Goldielands and Buccleuch. Mungo (16th/17th C.) described as ‘in Castelssyd’ (i.e. Castleside) in the records of the Circuit Court of 1623 when several local men twice gave their security for his appearance. They included Andrew Allan, John Gowanlock and James Coltart in Headshaw, John Turnbull and John Campbell in Newton and Gilbert Elliot of Brugh. It is unclear whether he was related to George and Francis of Castleside. Mungo

(17th C.) listed as resident at Todshaw in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Mungo (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Mary Dryden and their children included Janet (b.1772) and Thomas (b.1774). Nelly (b.1768) and Elizabeth (b.1769) were probably also his children. Mungo (b.c.1780) hand-loom weaver in Roberton Parish. In 1841 he is listed at ‘Make Shift’ somewhere near Broadlee or Milsington. He was from out of the county and living with Jane, probably his wife. He could be the Mungo who married Jean Scott in Wilton Parish in 1813. Mungo (18th/19th C.) blacksmith at the Sandbed, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Nell ‘Nelly the King’ (19th C.) sister of ‘Andrew the King’, and also known as a simple-minded soul. Her first could be a short form of ‘Helen’. She may have been born in 1798. Nicholas (13th C.) resident of Northumberland. He is recorded in the 1279 assize roll there when his wife Agnes had rights to the young heir of ‘Walteri super Teysam’. He may already have been dead by this time. Another entry for the same year mentions ‘Nicholaus le Scot’. He could be the same as Nicholas ‘le Escot’ who was listed in an assize relating to lands in Newcastle in 1266; Henry ‘le Escot’ was also a pledge for him. He may be the Nicholas ‘le Escot’ who was among men sued by the Prior of Tynemouth in 1269 (with Henry and John also listed). It is unclear whether he or his wife were related to other Scotts. Ninian (15th/16th C.) listed among the many Borders men given remission in 1526 for their earlier support of the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran. After his name appears ‘William brother’, presumably meaning his brother. It is unclear to which branch of the family he belonged, but the Christian name is not common among Scotts. Osbert (13th C.) recorded as ‘Osberto scoto’ and ‘serviens’ of Walter Oliphant, Justiciar of Lothian, when he was witness to a statement about a dispute between Walter, Bishop of Glasgow, and Jordon of Corra. This was sometime in the period 1223–42. Patrick of Reston (13th C.) referred to in a charter of the 1270s involving Coldingham Priory and the lands of Great Reston. The same gift to Coldingham is described in a charter of Robert, son of Reginald of Reston, which is some time before 1233. His sons were John and Patrick. Patrick of Reston (13th C.) son of Patrick and brother of John. He witnessed several charters involving Coldingham Priory. In the 1170s he had a claim to the lands of Great Reston, which had previously been held by his father and brother. Patrick (13th C.) merchant of Berwick recorded as ‘Patrick le Escot’ in 1276, when there was a complaint of wool being stolen from their boat on the way to Dieppe. He is ‘Patrick Scot’ in 1296 when his former house in Berwick is mentioned in another case and he was ‘Patrick Lescot’ when he swore fealty to Edward I in that same year. His seal was oval with a classical head and cross and the name ‘S’PATRICII SCOT’. He may be the same as ‘Patricius Scot’ recorded in relation to Bamburgh in 1279. It is unclear if he was related to other local Scotts. Patrick (13th/14th C.) juror in 1310 for cases involving Lindores Abbey. Patrick (15th C.) servant of James II when he was Duke of Rothesay, recorded in 1438. Patrick (15th C.) recorded in the last will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491, where he owed one merk. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Patrick (15th/16th C.) served as Chamberlain of Strathearn and Comptroller of receipts. He is recorded many times in the Exchequer Rolls around 1500–10. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Patrick (15th/16th C.) son of Adam, tenant in Harwoodhill. In 1502 he had remission for resetting Richard Armstrong, called ‘Skaw’, who had stolen 200 sheep from David Hoppringle at ‘Fechane’, with the help of Alexander Scott. Walter of Howpasley and Robert of Stirches acted as sureties, suggesting one or both were related to him. Patrick (16th/17th C.) said to be a surgeon and Burgess in Hawick around 1600. His great-granddaughter Janet Scott was served heir to him in 1667; she married carrier Patrick Hardie. Patrick of Tanlawhill and Thirlestane (d.1666), son of Walter of Gamescleuch and Janet Porteous (probably being named after his maternal grandfather). His father was killed by John, son of Walter of Tushielaw, part of a feud between the Thirlestane and Tushielaw branches that lasted for many years. He was a nephew of Sir Robert of Thirlestane, and also held the lands of Howpasley from his cousin Robert Scott. He was placed in charge of bringing Walter, Earl of Buchleuch’s body from London to Leith in 1633, a journey that took 15 weeks, and included being shipwrecked on the Norwegian coast. About 1634 he redeemed some of the mortgages of his cousin Sir John of Thirlestane, and had most of the lands transferred into his name. He was Chamberlain to Francis, 2nd Earl of Buchleuch for Ettrick Forest in the 1640s, as well as Eckford, Lempitlaw and Langton into the 1650s. In 1641 William Wallace made the factor’s account in his place, since he was ill. In 1641 he signed a document in Hawick with his cousin Sir John, relating to the Thirlestane estates, but with the terms unspecified. He had his cousin imprisoned on 2 occasions. Eventually he would claim permanent ownership of the Thirlestane estates, in precedence to his cousin Sir John. This was at least partly because of different allegiances in the Civil War (Sir John’s descendants would fight the succession in court a century later). In 1642 he had a decree of appraising against Sir John, relating to the lands of Bourhope. In 1643 he had a charter of the lands of Crookston and others in Peebleshire, which he gained from his cousin John, son of Sir Robert of Thirlestane. He was cautioner for a William Scott in about 1646. He supported the Parliamentary side in the Civil War and was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire in 1643, 1644, 1646, 1648 and 1649. He also represented Selkirkshire in Parliament in 1648–49. After being fined by both Cromwell and the Royalists for taking sides, he repurchased Thirlestane from Sir William of Harden and others. In 1644 he was witness to a contract for lands at Smailholm. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. He served as one of the ‘tutors testamentars’ for the will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. In 1650 he was also named as one of the ‘tutors’ for the children of Francis in his will and served in this capacity for the young Marie, Countess of Buccleuch, being involved in a law suit in 1659 with some of her other tutors over breaking locks to her charter chests. In 1653 he was involved in the construction of the bridge over the Yarrow at Deuchar, acting as Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch. In 1653 he had a charter of the lands of Rutherford. He was fined by Cromwell in 1654 and also fined in 1662 for complicity with Cromwell! In 1661 he was listed as still owing about £8000 to the Duchess of Buccleuch for rentals in Ettrick Forest, where he had been Chamberlain. In 1663 he was appointed as a justice of the peace for Selkirkshire. He married Isabel, daughter of Sir John Murray of Blackbarony and was succeeded by his son Sir Francis. Other children were: David, who was buried at Greyfriars in Edinburgh in 1659; Walter, who held Howpasley briefly; Jean, who married Sir James Hay of Linlume; Margaret, who married Sir Alexander Bannerman of Elsick; and Mary, who married Sir William Primrose of Carrington. He may also be the Patrick whose wife Agnes had a testament in 1637. Patrick of Kirkstyle and Langshaw (17th C.) son of George of Kirkstyle and Catherine Montcrief. He was descended from the Scotts of Balwearie, through a son, Andrew of Glendoick and Kirkstyle in Perthshire; Col. Walter, last Scott of Balwearie, who died unmarried in Flanders in the reign of Charles II, sent him the seal of the Balwearie family; however, similarity of Christian names, and a statement of close kinship by Scott of Satchells suggests instead, or additionally, a relationship with the Scotts of Thirlestane. He was described as ‘writer of Edinburgh’ from about 1638 and through the 1640s, when he dealt with city business for the Scotts of Buccleuch, and by 1652 he was ‘now of Langshaw’. He sold Kirkstyle in Perthshire and purchased Langshaw (although it is unclear if these were the lands in South Lanarkshire, or the place north of Galashiels). He may also later have acquired the lands and barony of Ancrum (although perhaps the first connection may have been through his son Sir John). He was also previously ‘of Eddrington’, and had a crown charter of Langshaw in 1653. In 1650 he was named as one of the ‘tutors’ for the children of Francis Earl of Buccleuch in his will and also served as one of the ‘tutors testamentars’ for the will of Francis, as well as being described as ‘wryter in Edinburgh, our servitor’, when he witnessed the document. He was recorded in various documents in the Melrose Regality records in the period 1657–61. He served as ‘receiver general’ for the Buccleuch estates in at least the period 1650–72. He was Chamberlain for the Lordship of Dalkeith in at least the period 1669–74. There were legal proceedings against his son by the Duchess of Buccleuch 1673–1704 over an embezzlement he is alleged to have committed. He may be the same Patrick described as the Earl of Buccleuch’s attendant in 1636–38, and was factor in at least the period 1638–41 and 1650–56. In 1629 he married Elspeth (or Elizabeth) Simson, sister of David Simson of ‘Monturpie’ and they had 3 sons and 1 daughter. In 1647 he secondly married ‘Cicile Drurie’ (or Cicely Drury), daughter of Sir Robert Drury of Rugham, and widow of George Douglas, Doctor of Divinity; with her he had 1 more daughter. His children were: Sir John, 1st Baronet of Ancrum, who married Elizabeth Scott of Mangerston; James, who died without issue; Francis of Langshaw; Agnes, who married William Douglas of Ardet (and may be the Agnes who later married John Wilkie, merchant in Edinburgh), and was mother of Sir Robert Douglas of Glenbervie; and Cicely, who married Charles Kerr of Abbotrule in 1666, and whose daughter married John Scott of Gorrenberry. Patrick, ‘lawful son of the said Patrick Scott of Langshaw’ is recorded as witness to a document for Mary, Countess of Buccleuch in 1658 and in a deed of 1682, and so must have been another son. Francis of Colmslie was caution for a bond for the ‘deceased Patrick Scott, writer in Edinburgh’ according to a case heard in Melrose in 1683; this may well have been him. Sir Patrick of Langnewton and Ancrum (d.1734) son of Sir John (he is easy to confuse with his grandfather Patrick of Langshaw). He became an advocate in 1676 and was on the Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1678 and 1685. He was ‘feir’ of Ancrum in 1678 when he paid the land tax on the whole value of Longnewton Parish (valued at more than £2000). He served as Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch for Eckford in 1689–95. He was one of the 2 Parliamentary Commissioners (i.e. M.P.s.) for Roxburghshire 1685–86 and was appointed again in 1689, but replaced in 1693 for absence; this is surely related to the politics of the day. In 1690 (before he succeeded to Ancrum) and in 1704 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1692 he held the ‘teinds’ of the Baronie of Eckford and the ‘tacks’ of the lands of Lempitlaw and ‘Langtoune’ (probably Longnewton) owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. In 1694 he paid tax on 10 hearths at his house in Langnewton. He contributed £1000 to the Darien Company in 1695. He was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament in 1700. He married Anne, daughter of William Wallace of Helington. His wife was wealthy, but they had no issue. In 1680 he secondly married Margaret, daughter of William Scott of Harden. They had 2 sons and 4 daughters: Sir John, who succeeded; William, who became an advocate, marrying Anne, daughter of Capt. Benjamin Barton and secondly Elizabeth, daughter of William Ainslie of Blackhill; Christian, who married John Pringle of Whytbank; Elizabeth, who married George Douglas of Friarsaw; Anna; Jean, married David Muirhead of Linhouse and secondly James Gartshore; and Margaret, who died unmarried. Patrick, W.S. (d.1711) nephew of Hercules Scott, who was a merchant in Edinburgh. He is easy to confuse with Patrick of Langshaw and Patrick of Langnewton. He trained a lawyer, being apprenticed to Robert Innes and becoming Writer to the Signet in 1699. He married Elizabeth Marmichael. Patrick (18th C.) son of Walter, minister at Westruther. His brother Francis also served as minister at Westruther. He was mentioned in 1735 in the deposition where the widow of Robert Scott of Falnash sold her property on the Howegate to Patrick Hardie. It is unclear what his connection to the family was. Patrick (18th C.) eldest lawful son of Francis of Alton. He was ‘younger of Alton’ in 1738 when he witnessed a baptism (along with Walter of Newton, who may well have been related), for Joseph Lothian and Janet Scott (who may also have been closely related). He was recorded in 1742 agreeing to his father’s sale of the lands of Alton to John Horsburgh of that Ilk. Patrick (d. bef. 1762) miller in Bedrule parish, recorded in 1762 when his daughter Janet married John Turnbull, wright, in Edinburgh. Patrick (18th/19th C.) recorded at Whitlaw on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. His name is sometimes recorded as ‘Peter’. He is listed on the 1785–94 Horse Tax Rolls at Whitlaw. He was probably the ‘Patrick Scott in Borthaugh’ described as tenant farmer in Whitlaw in the 1750s when Robert Hobkirk was Town Herd; this suggests he was directly related to other Scotts associated with Borthaugh. He may have been the Patrick, son of Robert and Agnes Elliot, born in Hawick in 1728. He seems likely to have been the Patrick who married Janet Gledstains (perhaps from the Gledstains of Whitlaw family) in Wilton Parish in 1751. Peter (16th C.) recorded being ‘of Monze’ when he was Chamberlain for Strathearn, according to the Exchequer Rolls for 1536–42. Peter (16th/17th C.) ‘son natural’ of Sir Robert of Thirlestane. In 1608 his father was caution for him, his half-brother Robert and Walter of Whitslade that they not harm Archibald of ‘Deiphop’ and his sons. In 1609 he was among the men (under Walter of Headshaw) whom his father and brother Robert and their tenants were bound not to reset. Sir Robert and the others were then fined for resetting him and the other men. This was part of the feud between the Scotts of Thirlestane and Tushielaw. Peter (d. bef. 1654) referred to as being ‘of Cowdhouse’ in an act of caution of 1654, preserved in the records of Jedburgh Sheriff Court. Capt. Walter Scott (the later poet) complained against his son Robert. It seems likely that this is ‘Coldhouse’ in Wilton Parish. Peter (17th/18th C.) probably a Hawick Councillor. In 1701 he was one of those appointed to collect the ‘stent’ in the area ‘west the water’, suggesting he lived in the West-end. Peter in Whitlaw (see Patrick). Peter (18th/19th C.) recorded at Ancrum (Patrick). Peter (18th C.) recorded at Ancrum Mill in 1797, when he paid tax for having 2 non-working dogs. Peter (18th/19th C.) recorded at Clari-

Parish. Peter (1852–1925) hosiery manufacturer, born in Hawick, with residence at Norwood. He was son of George, grocer at 19 Howegate, and his brother Tom was Cornet in 1887. He started work at age 13 for Peter Laidlaw at Wilton Grove,

founded Peter Scott & Co. in 1878, with Mr.

Adamson as his partner, although it was not until 1899 that he established the ‘Pesco’ brand of underwear. The expansion of the company after that was explosive. He was Chairman of the Scottish Hosiery Association, and served on several committees during WWI. He was also President of the Hawick Hosiery Manufacturers’ Association, and a Director of the South of Scotland

Manufacturers’ Mutual Insurance Co. Ltd. He bought about 6 hectares of land on Sunnyhill, at the top of Roadhead and there had the villa Norwood built for him in 1904, designed by J.P. Alison; Norwood would be owned by the family until 1964. The gatehouse Norwood Lodge was built about the same time, with the adjacent Woodgate and Langlee built in about 1907. He was also a keen bowler, acting as President of the Buccleuch

Bowling Club and took part in a bowling tour of Canada in 1910. He and his brother George were also noted draughts players. He gifted the ‘Beechwood’ and ‘Norwood’ trophies, which were competed for among the local clubs. He also gifted an organ to St. George’s Kirk in 1919 in memory of his daughter Bessie. In 1876 at Wilton

Dean, he married Mary, daughter of James Bry-don from Castleton. Their children were: George (1879–1940), who was a director in the family

Marion Adamson (1886–1963), who never married; Jeanie (b.1887); Bessie (1890–1917); and James Bryton (1894–1958), also a company director at Pesco’s. It is said that he was well liked in the town and proud of his ‘guitarbluid’ her-

one of the biggest ever to be seen in Hawick. Peter Brydon (1920–43) son of James Brydon and grandson of Peter, founder of Pesco’s. He served with the Royal Scots Fusiliers, having the rank of Lieutenant. He died while in Burma and there is a baptismal font in his memory in Denholm

Kirk. Philip (15th/16th C.) recorded along with Robert and Andrew in 1494/5. The three were among men who were already fugitives when John of Deloraine was accused of ‘resetting, supplying and intercommunicating’ with them. It seems reasonable to assume that they were closely related, perhaps brothers, but from which branch of the Scotts is unknown. Philip of Heap (15th/16th C.) described as ‘Philip Scot of Hoip’ in 1508 when he witnessed a sasine of lands at Synton. He must have been closely related to David of Whitehaugh, recorded in 1479, and Walter of Whitehaugh, recorded in 1488. He was in turn succeeded by Walter, who gained the lands of Wester

Heap in 1532. Philip (15th/16th C.) recorded as a sergeant at the Court in Jedburgh in 1502.

It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scots. Philip of Headshaw (15th/16th C.)

son of Walter of Headshaw, who he succeeded.

He is recorded as ‘of Aidschaw’ in 1510 when his brother Thomas was convicted of being part of the murder of John Murray of Falahill. Sureties were William in Hawick, George in Goldielands, David in Whitehaugh, William in Fenwick and John of Haining, suggesting that some of them were closely related. He was on the 1517 ‘retour’ for Sir Walter of Bruxholme. In 1519/20

he was listed as someone who could give permission to change the details of a marriage contract between the Scotts of Bucleuch and a son of the Gledstains family; he is there ‘Philp Scot of Ead-shaw’. He was listed on the 1526 remission for Borders men for supporting the Homes in an attack on the Earl of Arran (with his son Walter also listed). And in 1527 he was among the Lairds, led by Walter of Bruxholme, who had remission for their part in the Battle of Skirmish Field. In 1530

he was one of the Border Lairds who submitted themselves to James V to keep better order. He was succeeded by his son Walter. Philip (16th

C.) tenant in Dryhope and ‘Farmynhop’ in 1541.

He may be related to the later Philip of Dry-hope. Philip (16th C.) tenant of Todshawhill recorded in 1549 as the first of the tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Bruxholme when they complained about their farms being raided and burned by the Kers. Either he or Philip in Wiltonburn could have been father of ‘Philip’s

Jock’. Philip (16th C.) tenant in Wiltonburn in 1549 when he was among the tenants of Sir

Walter Scott of Bucleuch, who complained about the actions of Walter Ker of Cessford and others. It is possible that he was father of ‘Philip’s

Jock’ recorded in the 1570s. Philip (16th C.)

brother to ‘Scot of Hassinden’, as well as brother of William. In 1583/4 he was among a number of men from the area who were denounced for failing to appear to give evidence in a case against the Turnbulls of Bedrule. It is unclear who was Laird of Hassendean at that time. Philip of Kirkhope (16th C.) son of John of Thirlestane, and younger brother of Robert, who succeeded. He was said by Scott of Satchells to have been the 1st husband of the youngest daughter of Walter Scott of Synton and Whitslade. Since she had 2 other husbands, this presumably means that he died relatively young, and is said to have had no children. Philip of Dryhope (d.bef. 1632) probably son or brother of John. He is sometimes stated as the father of Mary, ‘Flower of Yarrow’, but she was probably his sister. In 1564 he was listed as ‘Philip Scot of Drihope’ among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. He is listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ in 1590. In 1591 he purchased half of Stanhope in Peeblesshire and sold it again in 1600. He purchased the lands of Glensax from Alexander Horsburgh in 1600. He is probably the Philip who was denounced as a rebel in 1592 for his part in the Falkland Raid (and Dryhope was ordered to be demolished at about the same time). In 1599 he witnessed the bonds (signed at Branxholme) between Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and the Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddesdale. In 1610 there is a bond of caution for him and his sons Philip and William. In 1611 he gave back (presumably following repayment of a debt) the lands of Midshiels, Appletreehall, Coitlaw and Crawhill to Alexander Cranston of Mordiston. He was witness to the bond of 1612 for keeping peace on the Border and was also on the panel of ‘retour’ for Tweedie of Drumelzier. Additionally in 1612 he was listed among Scots and others accused of overcharging interest on loans. He is ‘recorded as ‘elder of Dryhoip’ in charters of 1618 and 1621. He married Margaret, and his eldest son was Robert, although he was succeeded in the Lairdship of Dryhope by his son Philip. Another son William was complained about in 1612 and witnessed a charter in 1618. In 1628 he resigned his half of the lands of Glensax. Note that these generations are quite confused (Keith Scott suggests there were 2 generations of Philips of Dryhope, father and son). Philip of Aikwood (16th/17th C.) probably younger brother of Andrew and son of Robert of Aikwood. He is recorded in 1627, but by 1630 the lands of Oakwood had passed to a Murray, possibly of the Elibank family. The lands of Oakwood later became part of the estates of the Scotts of Harden. Philip of Dryhope (17th C.) younger brother of Walter, the previous Laird (recorded in 1669). He may also have been brother of the Laird before, Robert, and hence a younger son of William. He was the last Laird. Philip (17th/18th C.) Chamberlain to Sir William of Harden. He is recorded in 1692-1716 as factor for the lands in Selkirkshire and in 1704 when his son Walter became an apothecary’s apprentice in Edinburgh. In the 1720 Hawick Parish records he is stated to have been lately Chamberlain to Scott of Harden. In 1720 his eldest son Walter married Sara, daughter of Walter Scott, also an apothecary in Hawick. He may be the Philip ‘in Whitmurehall’ recorded in a bond with the Scotts of Harden in 1687. He seems likely to be the Philip ‘in Oakwood’ who was one of the founding members of the ‘Honest Country Club’ in 1711. Philip (17th/18th C.) recorded being in Cogsmill in 1709 when he married Margaret Riddell in Kirkton Parish. His son John was baptised in 1710. Philip (18th C.) recorded as ‘in Todrigg’ in 1753 when he was paid by Scott of Buccleuch for acting as gamekeeper. It is unclear if he was related to the earlier Scotts of Todrig. Rachel nee Langlands (17th/18th C.) described as ‘of Wilton’, so she was probably daughter of one of the last Langlands Lairds. She married Charles Scott of Crumhaugh, probably in the mid-1680s. She had a ‘bond of provision’ from her husband in 1696. However, Charles died about a couple of years later. She is probably the same Rachel who then married Francis Elliot of Fenwick. Her children included Walter (who succeeded to Crumhaugh) and probably James, who was a surgeon in Hawick. Rebecca (18th C.) paid the window tax for Midshiels in 1748. She is ‘Rebecca Scott Medsheils’. It is unclear how she was related to other Scotts, but perhaps was connected to the Scotts of Crumhaugh, who sold Midshiels in about the mid-18th century. Reginald (13th C.) recorded as ‘Reginaldus le Scot’ in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. He was involved in a case in the town of ‘Lowick’. Richard (12th C.) probably the son of Uchtred Fitz-Scott. He witnessed a charter by the Bishop of St. Andrews to Holyrood Abbey in 1158 (although the charter is now lost, and so there is no proof that he was son of Uchtred). He was succeeded by his son Richard. Another son was probably Sir Michael, ancestor of the Scotts of Balwearie. Richard (12th/13th C.) son of Richard and probably grandson of Uchtred Fitz-Scott. He married Alicia, daughter of Henry and Eschina de Molla (or Molle). He and his wife received lands in Roxburgh in the reign of Alexander II.

He may thus have been the first Scott to be associated with Roxburghshire, and was referred to as Richard ‘of Molle’. Sometime between 1185 and 1215 he granted lands in Mow to Kelso Abbey; he is referred to there as ‘son of Anselm of Mow’ (so perhaps there are 2 Richard Scotts confounded here, or ‘son’ meant ‘son-in-law’). He was also referred to in charters of c.1190 for lands adjacent to his in Mow. He was succeeded by his son William. It is also possible that Almer Scott of Mow, recorded about the same time, was also related to him. Richard (12th/13th C.) recorded in a court case in London in 1220. He was caught with the stolen seal of Walter de Morton, and was ordered to be hanged for the crime. Richard (13th C.) listed in 1236 along with Walter and Robert, his brother. They were accused of attacking Eustace (Bailiff of the Abbot of ‘Burgo’), beating him, killing his horse, and imprisoning his servant. The Sheriff of Northampton was commanded to make them appear at Westminster. It is unclear how they were related to other Scotts. Richard (13th C.) listed in 1244 when the Sheriff of Huntingdon commanded him to give a knight’s fee to John Baliol. Richard (13th C.) recorded in Leicester in 1262 as ‘son of Robert Scot junior’ when he gave a mark for an assize. Richard (13th C.) recorded as ‘le Escot’ in a document relating to Northumberland in 1265. He could be the same as Richard ‘le Scot’ who was listed in 1255/6, along with his wife Margery, in a court case in Northumberland. He may also be the ‘Richard Scot, essoin’ of Roger Bertram listed in a plea in Northumberland in 1258/9. Richard (13th C.) son and heir of Lucas ‘le Escot’ of Dunwich, recorded in a document relating to Norfolk in 1267/8. In 1268/9 he was Richard ‘le Scot of Dunwich’ when he was recorded in relation to money due to the English King’s Exchequer from Dunwich in Suffolk. He was also recorded in 1271 in relation to a ship that he claimed had been owned by his father Lucas. In 1272 he accused someone at Stratford of the murder of his cousin Robert ‘le Escot’ (son of Gerald). Also in 1272 he was accused of stealing a cask of wine from someone in Dunwich and paid 20 shillings for a writ. Sir Richard (c.1265–1320) Laird of Rankilburn (synonymous with Buccleuch) and Murthockstone (or Murdostoun) in Lanarkshire. He was probably son of William, but these early generations are quite uncertain; however, from him onwards, the genealogy of the Scotts of Buccleuch is generally considered to be secure. Capt. Walter says that he originally resided at Scotstoun in Peebleshire.

He swore fealty to Edward I of England in 1296 (in the Ragman Rolls) under the name ‘Richard Le Scot de Murthoxtoun’, in the County of Lanark; 9 other people of the same surname are also recorded, with Alexander ‘de Pertheyk’ also being from Lanarkshire, and William (no designation given) being the only one from Roxburghshire. His seal bore a lion rampant ‘regardant’ and the name ‘S’RICARDI SCOTT’. He may have been the first Scott to have local lands, at Rankilburn, sometime before 1296. These may be the lands in Selkirkshire that were restored to him (assuming it is the same Richard) in 1296. He may have held these lands as Ranger of the King’s Forest. He may be the Richard who also swore fealty to King Edward in 1304. He acquired the Barony of Murdostoun (in Lanark) by marriage with the English heiress. As a result the crest and stars of the Scott arms were placed on the bend of Murdostoun thereafter. He was probably father of Sir Michael of Rankilburn and Murthockstone and possibly also of John (ancestor of the first Scotts of Synton, although this may have been his grandson). The Walter ‘le Scot’ who also swore fealty to Edward in 1296 may have been his brother (perhaps older brother), and held lands in Peebles. An English record of 1302 pardons Eustace de Fenham for the death of William, son of Richard Scott, on account of his service on the coast of Scotland; this may have been his son. For some reason his Christian name was not used afterwards by the Scotts of Buccleuch. Richard (d.bef. 1420) Bailie of Dundee recorded in the period 1386–1405 according to the Exchequer Rolls. He was ‘Clerk of Cocket of Dundee’ in the Exchequer Rolls in the period 1397–20. He thus held the seal for issuing customs documents. He was responsible for rendering the accounts of the Baillies of Dundee, and was also paid for numbering animal skins there. He may have been related to the Scotts of Balwarie. Rev. Richard (1641–1722) 3rd son of George, the last of the old Scotts of Synton, with his mother being Mary Gladstains of Dod and Whittlaw. His brother was George of Boonraw. He was educated in Edinburgh, receiving his M.A. in 1658 and becoming minister at Kirkbean in Kirkcudbrightshire in 1675. He became minister in his home Parish of Ashkirk in 1685. However, he was deprived of his living in 1689 for refusing to read the Proclamation of the Estates and to pray for William and Mary, i.e. being an Episcopalian (or a Jacobite). He married Katherine Crichton and their children included Jean, who married Alexander

Leslie, an Aberdeen advocate and secondly married Alexander Abercrombie of Fetterneir; she is mentioned in a disposition of 1724 as a widow of Abercrombie. He is recorded being resident in Lady Yester’s parish in Edinburgh along with his wife and daughter in 1694. He died in Edinburgh without male issue. It has been suggested that he may have helped Scott of Satchells with his ‘True History’. His year of death is sometimes incorrectly given as 1702. Richard (17th/18th C.) said to be a younger son of George of Boonraw, and brother of Archibald, the last Laird of Boonraw. If he existed it would prove the claim that Charlie of the Crescent was descended from the Scotts of Boonraw; however, there is no documentary evidence of his existence. He was said (by James Haining) to have married a daughter of Charles ‘Ogilvy’ (although it is unclear who this might have been, perhaps a different Ogilvie).

Rev. Richard (1729–90) son of John, minister of Stenhouse. He was educated at the University of Glasgow, licensed by the Presbytery of Peebles in 1752 and ordained at Cranshaw in 1759. He was presented to Ewes Kirk by the Duke of Buccleuch in 1761 and remained there until he died. He was said to have been ‘mild and gentle in manner’, but ‘fervent in the divine service’. He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1785 and 1787. In 1761 he married Mary Turnbull, and she died in 1796. They had 5 sons and 3 daughters, including: Janet (b.1762), who married William Irvine; James (b.1764), a merchant in New York; Hector (b.1766); John (b.1768), who died young; Anne (b.1768), a twin to John; John (again, b.1771), merchant in London; Martha (b.1774); and George (b.1778), also merchant in London. He wrote ‘Letters on the Culture of Potatoes’.

Richard (18th C.) recorded in 1757 when his daughter Agnes was baptised in Hawick Parish. The mother was Mary Rutherford and ‘Forni’ was indicated beside the entry. The witnesses were Walter of Boghall (perhaps his father) and carrier Walter Purdom. Richard Edmondson ‘Dick’ (1910–1991) local artist, writer and historian. He was son of Bailie Francis, married Agnes Townsend and was father of Francis Townsend (Frank) and Elizabeth Anne (Anne). Born at 26 High Street, he left school at 14 to work for Watsons, then worked in the family painters and decorators from about 1935. During WWII he served in the Physical Training Corps, but did not enjoy his forced exile from Hawick. In the mid-1950s he became a reporter with the Hawick Express, eventually taking over as editor from John Hood. He was the anonymous writer of the ‘Betty Whutson’ column for the years 1961–83. As an artist he was responsible for hundreds of Hawick scenes, usually in watercolour, signing as ‘R.E. Scott’. He exhibited at Art Club shows regularly for decades, as well as having paintings exhibited at the Royal Scottish Academy in 1943 and 1944. And as a sign-writer his work was a familiar sight around Hawick for several decades. He was a successful sprinter with the Teviotdale Harriers in the 1930s, being club 100 yards champion in 1930, 1935, 1936 and 1937. He won the Common Riding sprint in 1930, the 120 yards handicap and 100 yard scratch race at the 1937 Lauder Common Riding on the same day, was Border 120 yards champion in 1936 and 1937 and 100 yards champion in 1937 and won a 100 yards handicap event at Clyde F.C. Sports in 1938. He was also a member of the Hawick Swimming Club, becoming Club President, Secretary and Captain. He had a 28 year connection with the Scouting movement, helping set up the first Cub troop in the late 1920s and becoming a local Cub Scout Commissioner. He was a member of the Vertish Hill Sports Committee for many years, and was also a member of the P.S.A. Choir and the Masons. He spent much of his ‘spare’ time trekking the local hills with his wife Agnes. He wrote ‘The Companion to Hawick’ (1970, revised 1981), ‘Hawick’s Honorary Burgesses Since 1734’ (1974), ‘I Saved the King: the Story of the Turnbulls’ (1977) and ‘A Hundred Years are Gane and Mair, A History of Hawick Burns Club 1878–1978’ (1978), as well as many articles for the Archaeological Society Transactions. He was Secretary, Syllabus Secretary, Transactions Editor and President of the Archaeological Society. In 1967 he became Curator of the Museum, reveling in this job, and living in the flat on the top floor of Wilton Lodge until his retirement in 1975. He was known for his modest nature and for being an enthusiastic and meticulous local historian of his day, questions being referred to him long after his retirement – ‘...So Hawick folk both young and old, never forget Dick Scott: In praises, he deserved far more than those he ever got’ [IWL]. Robert (12th C.) witness to a grant of lands in Kinross-shire to St. Andrews Priory in the 1170s. Robert (12th C.) recorded in a record of Buckinghamshire and Bedfordshire in 1189/90 as ‘Robert le Scot in Alliesbiri’. The Sheriff of those counties gave account for his lands there. Robert (13th C.) listed in a court case in 1236, along with his brother Walter, as well as Richard. They were accused of attacking a man called Eustace, killing his horse and imprisoning his servant, and the Sheriff of Northampton was directed to make sure they appeared at Westminster. Robert (13th C.) recorded as ‘le Scot’, messenger, when there was a writ in 1242 for his payment of 1 mark for his expenses by King Henry’s gift. Robert (13th C.) recorded as Robert ‘le Scot’ ‘of Hecham’ in a document of 1290 relating to the Priory of Lewes (presumably the one in Sussex). His lands may have been at Hexham. He was married to ‘Cristiana Atehallegate’. Their son John acknowledged in the document that he was ‘servus’ and ‘rusticus’ of the Prior. He could be the same as ‘Robertum Scot’ and ‘Robertus le Scot’ recorded in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. It is unknown if he was related to other Scotts. Robert (13th C.) recorded in 1296 in a case relating to Richard of Whitacre. This was among cases at a court of the English army held at Roxburgh. Probably the same Robert (along with William) was paid in 1307/8 for acting as messenger from Cumnock, to Ayr and then to Lanark. Robert (c.13th C.) landholder in Dumfries mentioned in an undated document of Kelso Abbey. Robert (bef. 1346– c.89) 3rd Laird of Rankilburn (Buccleuch) and also of Kirkurd and Mudiestoun. He was probably son of Sir Michael (although these early generations are still murky). His brother John was probably the ancestor of the Scotts of Synton, Harden and Raeburn. Little is known about him, probably because this was a relatively peaceful period in Scottish history! He lived for more than 40 years after succeeding his father. He held the lands in Selkirkshire, as well as those older lands in Peeblesshire and the lands in Lanarkshire that had been acquired through marriage.
It is possible that he died at the Battle of Otterburn in 1388, although there are no records to support this. He was succeeded by his son Sir Walter, who had a charter for the superiority of Kirkurd in 1389. Robert (14th C.) mentioned in 1410 as a former owner of the lands of ‘Borthwic’ and ‘Thoft Cotys’ in the Borthwick valley. Since the first record of the name ‘Roberton’ was only a few years earlier, it is possible that the area was named after his house there. It is stated that the lands were conferred on Sir William ‘of Borthwic’ on resignation by him. Hence it is possible there was a connection between the first of the Borthwick family and the Scotts. He was surely related to the Scotts of Buccleuch and possibly related to the later Scotts of Robertson and Borthwick.

Robert (d.1426) 5th Laird of Rankilburn (Buc-kleuch), he succeeded his father, the first Sir Walter Scott, who died at Homildon Hill. He is named as the superior of the lands of Kirkurd in a charter for Ladyurd in 1406. In 1406/7 he confirmed a charter, as Lord of ‘Murthoustoun’ for lands in the Barony of Kirkurd. In 1410 he is probably the Robert who resigned his lands of Borthwick and ‘Thoft Cotys’ (possible Hoscote) into the hands of Robert, Duke of Albany, so that they could be granted to Sir William of Borthwick; however, this may have been a regranting, and it is unclear how long he may have held these Borthwick lands.
In 1415 he exchanged his lands of ‘wynzehope’ called Glenkerry (on the Tima Water) for lands at ‘Bellinden’ (i.e. Bellendean) with the monks of Melrose Abbey. This was with permission of his son Walter, and they kept fishing an hunting rights in their old lands. He also acquired half the lands of Brauxholme from John Inglis in 1420, thereby becoming the first Scott of Brauxholme.
In 1426 he granted Lempitlaw to his son Walter, shortly before he died. He is also probably the Robert ‘of Murthar and Liston’ (probably a transcription error for ‘Muthokston’) who witnessed an undated charter whereby John Inglis of Manor and Brauxholme granted ‘Kyrktoune and Toftis’ in the Barony of Hawick to his uncle Sir Simon Inglis. He was succeeded by his son Sir Walter.
Other sons were probably Stephen of Castlelaw and Burrellands and Robert of Haining. His 1415 seal bore a diagonal band with 2 crescents and a star and the words `SIGILLUM ROBERTI SCOTT'; this is the earliest known seal for the main branch of the family. Robert (15th C.) listed as a Bailie of Hawick (along with Thomas Blair) among the witnesses to the sasine of 1452 regranting the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas of Drumanrig. Presumably the same man is described as a Burgess (probably of Hawick) in 1454 when he was witness to a legal instrument relating to lands in Eckford, which was witnessed in a tenement of ‘John Walche, elder, in town of Hawic’. It is unclear how exactly he was related to the Scotts of Branxholme and Buccleuch, but this establishes that there were Scotts within the Burgh from its very earliest days. Robert of Todshaw (15th C.) name in an ‘instrument of obligation’ from King James III in 1463/4 for the sum of 1200 merks Scots. This was in payment equivalent to the 50 merks of money and 50 merks of land promised for the capture of John Douglas of Balveny, brother of the Earl of Douglas. He is probably the same as Robert of ‘Togehaugh' Scott and Hawick had remission for stealing sheep from burgh in 1494/5 when David Waugh in Bedrule (15th C.) mentioned in the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1477 for 6 years. Cockburn also appointed him as ‘Bailie’ of those lands, with the power to holds courts etc. Robert (15th C.) recorded as customs officer in Arbroath in the period 1481–96. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Robert of Muirhouse and Whames (d.c.1505) son of Stephen. He had a sasine for the lands of ‘Muirhaus’ (i.e. Muirhouse near Edinburgh) in 1464. He is recorded in 1482 being sold the land of ‘Underchesters’ (probably adjacent to Highchesters) by Henry Wardlaw, at that time still Baron of Wilton. The ‘Murehouse’ was in the Barony of Crichton (now in Midlothian) and not the place near Dryfesdale in Dumfriesshire (where there was a connection in the next couple of generations), or the area near Lilliard’s Edge. He is probably the same Robert, son and heir of Stephen of Muirhouse, who witnessed a 1453 sasine at Milsington. This Stephen seems was also referred to as being of Castlelaw, who was a brother of Sir Walter of Buccleuch. He is probably the Robert ‘of Doglehauch’ who repaid the loan on the lands of Dryden, Commonside and Over Harwood in 1477 (which had involved Stephen of Muirhouse 15 years earlier). It also seems likely he was related to the Howpasley and Thirlestane branches; John of Thirlestane received the half Barony of Wilton from Henry Wardlaw in 1483. He is ‘roberti de quhamys’ in 1493 when his brother Alexander was allowed to ‘compone’ for stealing livestock. He is probably the Robert ‘in Quhomys’ recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501, along with ‘Thome Howate’ had their fines remitted. His son and heir George had an instrument in 1505/6 where he claimed his father’s lands of Muirhouse. Robert of Cockerheugh (15th C.) recorded as ‘of Cochehaucht’ when witness to a charter of 1484/5 when Sir David of Branxholme gave Whitchesters to his son Robert (of Allanhaugh). He was probably closely related to the Scotts of Hassendean. Robert of Bowerhouse (15th C.) mentioned in the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1494/5 when David Waugh in Bedrule and Hawick had remission for stealing sheep from him. He is recorded being ‘de bourhous’, which is probably Bowerhouse, perhaps the one near Lauder. Robert of Allanhaugh and Whitchester (d.bef. 1506) 3rd son of Sir David, 7th Laird of Buccleuch. By 1471/2 he was the 2nd surviving son of Sir David (the oldest son Walter having died) when he was named in the marriage contract between his brother David and Jane Douglas; if David died, then he was to marry Jane, sister of Archibald, Earl of Angus. He may be the ‘Roberto Scot’ who witnessed the document passing Mangerton from the Armstrongs to David of Buccleuch in 1482. He received Whitchester from his father in 1483, with a charter of the lands and lordship following in 1484/5. He resigned them back to his father shortly afterwards, apparently so that Sir David could arrange the entail of his lands. Following the death of his brother David (whose son Walter would succeed to the Buccleuch titles) he became increasingly important in the running of his father’s affairs. In 1484 he was, with his father, granted the Bailiary of lands belonging to Melrose Abbey (meaning that they administered the lands financially and judicially). He is recorded as son of David of Buccleuch when he leased the Crown lands of Wintervurgh in 1483. The lease continued in 1488, along with William Roger, with Sir David of Buccleuch as pledge, and continued further in 1490 and 1492. In 1487 he was procurator for his father when he resigned his lands into the hands of the King. In 1488 he and his father were thanked for their service to the King at the Battle of Blackness, with the Barony of Branxholme being re-granted and him named as second in line, after his nephew Walter (who became Lord of Branxholme and Buccleuch). Also in 1488 he leased the lands of Greenwood (probably Girnwood) and the Lyne for 19 years from Sir Thomas Turnbull. He is probably the ‘Robert Scot of Branxholme’ who is recorded in a sasine of 1490 purchasing land in Hawick from Robert Cessford. He features prominently in the last will of Sir David Scott of Branxholme in 1491/2, being given £40 and appointed as ‘tutor’ for Sir David’s heir Walter (his nephew), as well as a ‘tutor’ for William Turnbull of Minto. In 1491/2 he was ‘of Quhytchester’ when he witnessed a sasine for William Douglas of Cavers. In 1492 his nephew Walter assigned to him all the moveable goods of his father Sir David, in order to pay off debts etc. In 1493 at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, he served as surety for: Robert, son of Gilbert Elliot; Alexander, brother of Robert of Whames; Thomas Brown in Minto; Walter of Howpasley: William, son of William of Goldielands; John Melrose in Whithaugh; George Waugh in Hawick; John Davidson in Minto; and others. In 1494/5 he was Robert ‘of Quihitchester’ when he served was surety for Alexander, son of Andrew Turnbull of Dryden, John of Deloraine, David Waugh in Bedrule and Hawick, and George Fawlaw in Hawick. That same year he ‘was permitted to compound’ (i.e. pay a fine) for the slaughter of Adam Crawford and for associating with Alexander Jardine, who was a rebel; the Laird of Buccleuch was surety for him. He is recorded in the Treasurer’s accounts for 1494/5 having obtained remission from the King. He was also Robert ‘of Allanhaugh’ in 1494/5 when, along with Adam in Annelshope, he was surety for John in Erncleuch. In 1498/9 he had remission from the King for commuting with and assisting rebels and for other crimes. He was one of the men chosen to value the lands of Whithope in 1500. He is recorded in a bond of 1500, where Walter Scott of Braxholme (his nephew and superior) held his tenancy of the lands of Withesters until he repaid a debt to Alexander Cockburn of Omiston Hall; however, it is possible that this was his son rather than him. He may have married Christian, sister of William Cockburn of Henderland, who was hanged as a reiver in 1530; however, this seems more likely to have been his son. His eldest son was also Robert, who held property in Hawick and farmed at Withesters. His grand-daughter married John Scott of Thirlestane. Other sons were Alexander, who may have been progenitor of the Scotts of Scotstarvit; and James (said to be the 3rd son), who was Provost of the Collegiate Church of Corstorphine. It is claimed that he died at an advanced age, but in that case he must have had his children late. This is because Scott of Rodono suggests he was dead by 1509, with his sons then being minors (younger than 25), so that Walter of Howpasley was then the closer adult male relative to the young Walter of Buccleuch. In 1506/7 he was already deceased when his son Robert was involved in redeeming a loan with John Murray of Falshill with a tower in Hawick as collateral. He may have had this tower ‘between the bridges’ built – it is possible that it was the predecessor of Drumlanrig’s Tower. Robert of Haining (15th C.) possibly 3rd son of Robert, 5th Laird of Buccleuch (however, he would appear to have lived about a generation later than this). In 1463 he had a charter for the lands of ‘Grevistoun et le Gillishauch’ in Peeblesshire from James Crichton of Cairns, witnessed in Edinburgh by David and Alexander, son of Sir Walter of Kirkurd (6th Laird of Buccleuch, hence perhaps his nephews). In 1464/5 he was ‘Robin Scot of the Haynig’ when he was on the panel to rule on the dispute over the lands of Kirkton Mains and the Flex. In 1476 he granted a charter for lands in Peeblesshire to his cousin Thomas Middlemass. In 1477 he sold the lands of Haining, witnesses again including David and Alexander, sons of Sir Walter of Buccleuch. The lands passed to Murray of Philiphaugh, but returned to his son John. He is recorded in a ‘letter of reversion’ with David Scott of Braxholm in 1482. This involved borrowing on lands in Selkirk, with security of the lands of ‘Uverhawikschelis’, ‘Netherhawikschelis’ and ‘Quhitrig’ in the Barony of Braxholm. He is probably the Robert who acted as one of the Earl of Angus’ Bailies for infesting David Scott of Braxholm in the lands of Mangerton in 1482. In 1484/5 he is described as ‘Bailie in that part’ in a sasine giving the lands of Mangerton to Walter Scott of Braxholm, and in the same year he is ‘in Hanyng’ when he witnessed the charter giving Withesters to Robert Scott of Allanhaugh (with Adam listed after him, so possibly a son). In 1486 it is stated in the Exchequer Rolls that he held the Haining for life. He was appointed as one of the bailies in 1488 for the leasing of Greenwood (i.e. Girnwood) and the Lyne by Robert Scott from Sir Thomas Turnbull. He was there referred to as ‘Roberto Scot de Hanyng’. His son Robert was witness to a related document in 1488 and was also ‘junior’ in 1492 when he and his mother Janet had a 3 year lease on the Haining. Either he or his son was ‘Robertum Scot de Hanyn’ in 1494 on the panel for the inheritance of Synton. In 1494/5 he was recorded when he had some of his sheep stolen from Haining (with his son John also having sheep stolen). He is the ‘Robert Scot in Hanyng’ listed among the many men given remission in 1504 for any part in the slaughter of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey. Also in 1504 he witnessed a sasine for the lands of Maxton Craig. He was succeeded by John of Haining, who is recorded in 1510 and died at Flodden. His wife’s first name was Janet, but her surname is not recorded. Robert (15th C.) bequeathed 12 sheep in the last will of Sir David of Braxholme in 1491/2. He is separate from Robert of Allanhaugh, but it is unclear if he is the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert of Horsleyhill (15th C.). William Elliot of Larriston is said to have married his daughter and thereby inherited Horsleyhill. It is unclear how he may have been related to other local Scotts; the Scotts of Horsleyhill of the 17th and 18th centuries were descendants of the Scotts of Tushielaw, and so (presumably) not closely related. Robert (15th C.) first witness listed on the 1494 charter in which James of Kirkurd granted the lands of Galalaw to his son David. He is listed as being of ‘Achinstanleckie’, but it is uncertain where these lands were. It seems likely he is the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert (15th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5 along with Robert Edgar. The pair were already ‘at the horn’ when James Young in Eldinhope was convicted of resetting and comming with them. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (15th/16th C.) son of David, recorded at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk in 1494/5. He was surety for James Laidlaw in ‘Wynterburn’ (possibly Winterburgh) who had remission for killing his cousin John Laidlaw from Wolfhope. It is possible he was Robert, son of the Laird of Buccleuch, but that Robert was recorded being of Whitchester when he served as surety in the same year; hence it seems more likely he was son of David, younger of Buccleuch, and hence brother of Sir Walter of Buccleuch. However, he could be son of some other David with a connection to Selkirkshire. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded along with Philip and Andrew in 1494/5. The three were among men who were already fugitives when John of Deloraine was accused of ‘resetting, supplying and intercommuning’ with them. It seems reasonable to assume that they were closely related, perhaps brothers, but from which branch of the Scotts is unknown. Robert (15th/16th C.) one of two men of the same name recorded in a document relating to Uddingston, in the Glasgow chartulary, listed as ‘Robertum Scot’. 2 Johns are also listed, as well as the widow of another John. They were all residents of Uddingston, and were presumably related. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant in Langhope. He is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls for 1499, coming after Adam in Tushielaw in the list of payments made in Ettrick. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert of Hartshaw (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1499 when his son Walter gave his consent for Middlestead of Langhope was assigned to Patrick Home. This was probably the Langhope in the Ale valley. However, it is unclear where ‘Hartschaw’ was. He may have been the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (15th/16th C.) occupier of the lands of Redford for 6 years prior to 1499, when they were let instead to the Comptroller, Patrick Home, and he had to pay the balance due. These were the 3 steadings of ‘Hindhop, Drycleuchesche, and Redefurd’ in Ettrick Forest, which may have been associated with what was later called Redfordgreen. He may be the Robert, who had payment for the ‘fermes’ of some Crown lands in Ettrick Forest in the period 1503–06. Robert (15th/16th C.) witness in 1500 to a document for Scott of Branxholme, relating to the lands of Whitchesters. He is recorded as being ‘de La Toure’, although it is unclear which tower. He may be related to Adam of Herrimston or Walter, son of James of Hassendean, who are also listed. He may be the same man as one of the other contemporary Roberts. It is possible that he is son of Robert of Whitchesters and Allanhaugh, and resided as the tower ‘between the bridges’ in Hawick, which is mentioned in a document of 1507/8. He may be related to John ‘called of the Toor’, who is recorded in 1609. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant in Lairs who is listed in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501 among mostly local men who had their fines compounded. He is recorded as ‘Robertus Scot in Laris’. It seems likely he was related to George, who owned Lairs at that time. Robert of Deloraine (15th/16th C.) son of John of Deloraine. In 1494/5 he was recorded as elder son (‘filius senior’) of John when he served as surety for John Reid at the Justice-aire in Selkirk. He may have been tenant of Deloraine, rather than owner. Probably the same Robert ‘of Dolorian’ was recorded in 1494/5 when he received ‘remission’ along with David Lauder for assisting the King’s rebels etc. Also in 1494/5 he was allowed to ‘compone’ for several rieving crimes (including stealing cows from Thomas Frissell, horses from Wolfhope and cows from Newark), with Walter of Howpasley as surety. He could also be the ‘Robertum Scot de Ettrik’ recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501 in relation to payments made to him. He was recorded in 1502 as being called ‘Bellit Robin’ when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for his non-appearance at the Jedburgh court. In 1510 it must be the same man who is ‘Belde Robin Scot’ when the Lady of Buccleuch (Elizabeth Kerr, wife of Sir Walter, the 8th Laird) was surety for him, but fined for his non-appearance; he was denounced a rebel and his goods forfeited. His nickname suggests that he was bald-headed. Robert of Aikwood (d.bef. 1516) possibly a son of the first Robert of Haining. He was the first Scott of Oakwood, and is first recorded in 1503.
His children included: Michael, who succeeded; and Robert, who may have been grandfather of Simon of Bonnington. Robert (d.bef. 1532) son of Robert of the Haining. In 1486 he leased the lands of ‘Weststeide de of Filchosyde’ in Ettrick Ward. He was witness to a document relating to the lease of the lands of Greenwood (i.e. Girma) and the Lyne in 1488. He is explicitly referred to as son of Robert of Haining (who was one of the bailies in that part for the precept associated with the same land transfer). In 1492 he is recorded as ‘Roberto Scot juniori’ when he and his mother were leased the lands of Haining. It seems that Haining was later inherited by his brother John. He may be the same man as Robert of Aikwood. Robert of Whitehaugh (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Robert Scot of Quhirtheff’ when witness to a sasine in 1499 for George Douglas, Master of Angus. This is probably the Whitehaugh near Hawick, although this is not certain. He was probably related to David ‘in Quinhauche’ who is recorded in 1510 and perhaps the David who first gained Whitehaugh in 1479. He may have been related to the Scotts of Heap and Borthwick. Robert of Burnfoot (15th/16th C.) probably 3rd (or 4th) son of James of Kirkurd, Over and Nether Newhall and Hassendean. He was referred to as ‘of Nether Newhall’ and later ‘of Burnfoot’, suggesting that these were once different names for the same estate. He is recorded in 1510/1 receiving the 2 ‘merklands’ of ‘Dowiswod’ in the Barony of Hassendean from his brother David of Hassendean. He may have been succeeded by Adam. Robert of ‘Stirkshaws’ and Synton (d.bef. 1509) probably 2nd son of Walter of Synton and Stirkshaws (Stirches), although there are varied interpretations in these generations. He must have had a tower at Stirches, and was certainly involved in the transfer of Harden land to William ‘Boltfoot’, who is the ancestor of the Scotts of Harden. He was later the 8th Laird of Synton, making it unclear whether he was the same man as Robert ‘in Synton’, or whether there were 2 contemporary Roberts, both associated with Synton. He is probably the Robert of Stirches to whom James Newton of Dalcove sold the lands of Boonraw for 300 merks in 1481; in the associated sasine of 1487 he was described as son of Walter of Headshaw (further complicating the genealogy). In 1499 he is described as ‘Roberti Scot in Langhop’ when his rental entry is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls. In 1500 he was one of the men appointed to value the lands of Whithope. In 1501 he was assigned the ‘Weststeide de Gildhous, alias Dodbank’; he was described there as ‘Robert Scot [mortuus] de Stirkshaw’ (i.e., already dead, suggesting perhaps that there are 2 distinct Roberts of Stirches in this period) and the pledge was given by John, son of James Scott (probably of Kirkurd and Hassendean). He also refused the rental of Redford in 1501. In 1501/2 there is a bond with Alexander, Lord Home, in which he agreed to resign the lands of Harden on payment of £100 Scots (however, it is unclear whether this happened). In 1504/5 he bought the ‘6 merkland of Bon-draw of old extent’ (i.e. Boonraw, perhaps repurchasing) from David Hoppringle, Walter Scott of Howpasley, George Hepburn and William Mid-dlemas; these lands had formerly belonged to James Newton of Dalcove, and he had a charter for the lands in 1505. His sons were Walter of Synton, William of Harden and David. He was killed by Andrew Crossar (i.e. Crozier), for which Crossar was drawn and hanged in 1509. He was probably dead by 1507/8 when Walter of Stirches (presumably his son) is recorded, and in 1510, when Walter, son of the deceased Robert, is mentioned holding lands in Synton, in an indenture between the Erskines and Kerrs. He was certainly deceased in 1512 when his son Walter transferred Harden to his other son William. David ‘Lady’ was recorded as tenant in Stirches in the early years of the 16th century, suggesting he may have been a close relative, possibly his son. In 1526 the long list of Borders men who had remission for their attack on the Earl of Arran contains ‘Walter Scot of Syntoun, William Scot in Hardane, Dauid Scot his brother’, all of whom were probably his sons. Robert (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1509 as ‘Robertum Scott de Turri prope Selkirk’ on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting his father’s lands of Alemoor. His lands were clearly near Selkirk, but it is unclear whether they were a tower, or somewhere with a similar name. It is possible he was the same Robert mentioned being ‘de La Toure’ in a 1500 document. Robert (15th/16th C.) son of Walter of Headshaw, brother of Philip, David, Simon, Walter and Thomas. He was tenant in Synton and is easily confused with Robert of Stirches, who was also sometimes ‘of Synton’. In 1493 and in 1494/5 he was surety for Hector Lauder, Laird of Todrig, who had been involved with a raid on Minto and other crimes. In 1502 he is Robert ‘in syntoun’ who, along with William in Fenwick, was fined by the Court of the Judiciary for failing to enter William Middlemas.
Also in 1502 he was surety for John in Whitehaugh, for John in Hermiston, for John in Walls (along with Walter of Headshaw) and for William in Fenwick (when he was described as son of Walter of Headshaw). Additionally in 1502 he was ‘de stirkschawis’ when he served as surety for Hector Lader in Clerklands, who had stolen livestock from Harthern and wounded a man in Selkirk, and also (along with Walter of Howpasley) served as surety for Patrick, son of Adam ‘in Hardwodhill’, for Walter, son of Walter of Headshaw, and (with George Turnbull of Hallrule) for Walter Turnbull in Branhxolm. Robert of Haining (d.bef. 1532) son of John of Haining, who died at Flodden. He was served heir in 1514. He was succeeded by his son Thomas, who was still a minor when he died. Robert ‘Tutor of Howpsley’ (15th/16th C.) probably the 2nd or 3rd son of Alexander of Howpsley. He may be the Robert of Howpsley who in 1493 served as surety for Adam and Walter Turnbull in Hornshole and may also be the Laird of Howpsley who was surety for Robert in Todshawaught and John Turnbull in Hawick. However, Walter of Howpsley (presumably his brother) is also recorded as surety for several people in 1493 and 1494/5, and it appears that both men were designated as Laird of these lands at the same time. He is probably the ‘Robertum Scot de Holpaslot’ who was on the 1517 panel for Sir Walter Scott inheriting the lands of Branhxolm. In 1524/5 he was ‘Tutor of Howpslot’ when he was one of the men who pledged to help the new Warden (the Earl of Angus) keep the peace. He was listed as ‘tutour to Howpslot’ in the large number of Borderers pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran (with his brother Simon also listed). In 1526 he was one of the men recorded in a protest by the superior of his lands, Douglas of Drumlanrig. He may also have been tutor to the Scotts of Buccleuch, like his brother Walter. In 1527 he was witness to the agreement ending the feud between Sir Walter of Branhxolm and James Murray of Falahill. In 1527 he was among the local lairds, led by Sir Walter of Branhxolm, given remission for mustering their supporters at Melrose (i.e. Skirnish Field) and Linlithgow. In 1528 he (along with other supporters of Buccleuch) was pardoned for crimes of treason and had his lands restored; this was at the instigation of Buccleuch, and the crimes referred to presumably included trying to capture the young King at Skirnish Field. He is ‘tutor of Howpslot’ in 1528, when one of the abitators asked to decide on the succession to the lands of Borthaugh. He also witnessed an agreement between Sir Walter Scott of Branhxolme and James Murray of Falahill in 1528. He is further recorded as witness to a discharge relating to Scott lands in 1528/9, where he is described as ‘Robert Scot, tutor of Howpslet’ and holder of the lands of Craik. He is mentioned in the indenture of 1529 to reconcile the feuding Scotts and Kerrs. In 1530 he was the first of the Lairds of Roxburghshire listed as submitting themselves to the King’s will to keep peace on the Border. A charter of 1532/3 transfers Midshiels and Appletreehall from Janet Scott (daughter of his brother Walter) to him. This is confirmed in a royal grant of 1536, Appletreehall and Midshiels formerly being held by his father (presumably Alexander of Howpsley). Robert ‘Auld Hob o Riskenhope’ (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1557 when he paid rental on Shorthope in the Ettrick valley to the monks of Melrose. He was probably related to the Scotts of Tushielaw, Thirlestane etc. Robert of Howpsley (d.bef. 1567) son of Sir Walter of Howpsley. His uncle Robert was his ‘tutor’ for many years; he was a minor until at least 1530. In 1533 he (and presumably not his uncle), along with John of Thirlestane, entered a ‘bond of manrent’ with Malcolm, Lord Fleming (Chamberlain of Scotland). He is probably the Robert of Howpsley who had 6 particates of land within Hawick according to the 1537 Charter. He had the lands of Howpsley confirmed to him and his wife Isobel Murray in 1536, and later received the ‘non-entry’ duties of the lands for the years since the death of his father Walter. He is the Laird of ‘Howpslot’ who was on an assize in Edinburgh in 1534. In 1535 he had a black horse stolen from his lands of ‘Wolcleuche’ by Simon Armstrong and others and his farm at Howpsley was burned by a group of Armstrungs, with 60 cattle being taken. In 1539/40 he sold the farm of ‘le cot rig’ in the Mains of Appletreehall to Janet Scott, widow of Robert ‘Elwand’: it is written that he ‘binds himself faithfully after coming to his house from Edinburgh’ to guarantee peaceful possession of the farm by Janet until he paid her the same amount back. In 1539 he was on the ‘re-tour’ panel for James Crichton of Cranston Rid dell. In 1541 he occupied the lands of Whithope (in Yarrow), Ladhope (in Ettrick) and ‘Aldishope’ (in Ettrick), as well as claiming the lands of Howford. In 1541 he was one of the cautioners (for the huge sum of £10,000) for John Johnstone of that Ilk. Also in 1541 he was one of the sureties for Sir Walter Scott of Branhxolme. An English document of 1543 describes how his farms at ‘Appiltre and Chauerbenton’ (presumably Appletreehall and Chamberlain Newton) were attacked by men from Tynedale, who took 70 head of cattle, 170 sheep, 28 horses and goods from the houses, as well as 12 prisoners. He is listed among the supporters of Sir Walter in 1547/8 when they complained about the Kerrs joining the English at Pinkie, and burning their lands. In 1549 he granted his 2 husband lands of Appletreehall to Hector, brother of David Turnbull of Wauchope; his heir Walter, and other son Robert, were among the witnesses. In 1550 he gave a further charter to Hector Turnbull for the lands of Pinnacle and Broomlands. Also in 1550, he entered into a bond with Sir Walter of Branxholme and 9 other Scotts (and Elliot of Redheugh) in which they promised the Queen and Lord Governor to assist in bringing in criminals. He is recorded in 1553, along with his son Walter, when their lands of Birkenside in Berwickshire were ‘apprised’, i.e. sold to pay debts. In 1553/4 he was listed among Scotts and their supporters who a group of Kers promised not to harm. In 1557 he was fined for not appearing among other Scotts to answer for the attempted murder of Sir Peter Cranston at the Kirk of the Lowes. In 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. In 1562/3 he was elder of Howpasley when, along with his son Sir Walter, the superior of the lands tried unsuccessfully to have him removed. He is probably the ‘Lard of Howpashlocht’ listed in 1564 among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. He is probably the Laird of Howpasley listed on Montpennie’s c.1594 compilation of Border lairds (even although he was long deceased by then). His wife is recorded in this charter as Isobel Murray, who was 2nd daughter of John ‘the Outlaw Murray’ of Falahill. He was succeeded by his son Sir Walter of Birkenside and Howpasley in 1578/9. His children may also have included John of Thirlestane. Robert of Allanhaugh (d.c.1557) son of Robert of Allanhaugh and Whitchesters, he held 3 ‘particrates’ of land in Hawick according to the 1537 Charter. He may be the same man as Robert ‘de La Toure’ who witnessed a charter relating to the lands of Whitchesters in 1500 (although it is possible there was another generation of Roberts). In 1507/8 he was probably the Robert, son and heir of Robert of Whitchesters who had a loan with John Murray of Falahill involving the ‘tuirrim edificatam burgu de Hawic inter pontes’ (i.e. the tower built in Hawick between the bridges). If this is true, it suggests that the predecessor of Drumlainrig’s Tower was built by the Scotts of Whitchesters and Allanhaugh. In 1517 he was on the panel of ‘retour’ for Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch inheriting his father’s barony of Branxholme. He was probably the Robert of ‘Allanhauch’ who, with several others, swore to help the Earl of Angus (the new Warden) keep the peace in 1524/5. He is probably also the Scott of ‘Allanshaugh’ who is recorded in a protest by Sir James Douglas of Drumlainrig in 1526. In 1527 he was among the local lairds given remission for musterings their supporters at Melrose (i.e. Skirmish Field) and Linlithgow. He is mentioned as being pardoned about 1528, along with Robert of Howpasley and William of Hassendean, and also mentioned in the indenture of 1529 attempting to reconcile the Scotts and Kerrs. In 1530 he was listed among the 21 Roxburghshire Lairds who submitted themselves to James V to keep better order. In 1530/1 his son and heir apparent William was entered into ward in Borthwick Castle along with John, son of Walter of Synton, with sureties being Robert, Lord Maxwell and John Johnstone of that Ilk. In 1535 he was indicted for not paying to George, Lord Home 9 years of rent for the lands of Greenwood and Lyne; his brother Adam acted as surety. Also in 1535 he was tried in Jedburgh of a set of rieving crimes, specifically bringing men from Liddesdale to burn Midlem and steal from several farms near there, as well as at Croslie, Fastheugh, Yair, Town-of-Rule, Sunderlandhall, Clarilaw and elsewhere; he was found innocent of the charges. He was a witness to the 1540 resignation of the lands of Nether Harden from Simon Scott of Fenwick to William Scott of Harden. In 1541 he was accused by Sir Walter of Buccleuch of attacking his wife with a Jedburgh staff, and ‘had she not been ready, the butt end had slain her’; later that year, on Boxing Day, he drove away the cattle from Branxholme, and clearly there was a feud of some sort between the two Scotts. He may be the ‘Rob Scott of Halowathe in Tevedall’ who was recorded in an English letter as having his houses burned by men of Bewcastle in 1542, and 16 of his cows taken. In 1553/4 he was listed among Scotts and their supporters who a group of Kers promised not to harm. In 1554/5 he is recorded in a sasine as the tutor of the young Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was one of the group of 200 Scotts and others who rode to the Kirk of the Lowes to try to kill Sir Peter Cranston in 1557, being later bound over... not to harm Cranston afterwards. He may be the Robert ‘of Allanmouthe’ listed as being ‘in a former age’ a ‘Pensioner’ of the house of Buccleuch by Scott of Satchells. He served as a ‘tutor’ for Walter Scott of Buccleuch during his minority. He may be the Robert of Whitchesters who was said to have married Christian, daughter of William Cockburn of Henderland. He was succeeded by his son William, and may also have had a daughter who married John Scott of Thirlestane. In 1569 his grandson and heir was stated to be another Robert of Allanhaugh (whose son William is recorded in 1581); it therefore seems likely that the succession was this Robert, William, Robert and William again, all before 1600. Robert of Alton and Clarilaw (16th C.) eldest son of Adam of Clarilaw. He is recorded as ‘in Clarelaw’ in 1528/9 in a ‘discharge’ of fees by Patrick, Earl of Bothwell, relating to lands of several Scotts. He probably also related to the David ‘in Clarelaw’ recorded in the 1530s and 1540s. He is said to have lived to an advanced age and was succeeded in the lands of Alton by his son Adam. He is probably the Robert ‘in Clarilaw descended from the antient house of Hassenden’ who was listed by Satchells as being among the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch. Probably the same man was recorded as son and heir of Adam of ‘Nethirmanis of Hassinden’ in 1550/1 when he was infefted in the lands of Little Drinkstone. In 1566 presumably the same Robert is ‘in Hassendenburn’ when he had a letter of reversion in his favour from John Scott of Drinkstone for the lands of Little Drinkstone. He is recorded as Robert of Over Hassenden when he was witness to a confirming charter for the Turnbull of Hassendenbank in 1571. He is similarly recorded in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme; he had purchased some land from John Scott of Drinkstone, the money being held by Scott of Branxholme’s agent, John Watson. He was probably the Robert of Alton listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. He was also a witness in 1581 to a ‘letter of slains’ in Hawick whereby Robert and James Scott forgave the Scotts of Allanhaugh and Over Southfield for the murder of their brother George. He was ‘of Altoun’ when he signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. He may be the Robert of Hassendean who was involved in a dispute with Robert Elliot of Horsleyhill in 1592 over a 2 merk land in Dowswood. Keith Scott suggests he lived to an advanced age and died about 1594, but this seems too late, and there may be 2 generations here. His son was Adam of Alton and his grandson was Robert of Alton; in 1606 Robert was served as heir to his father Adam in lands in Chamberlain Newton and to his grandfather Robert in lands in Hassenden, thus establishing the link between the 3 generations. In 1653 Robert of Alton’s daughters Margaret, Bessie and Agnes were served ‘heirs portioners’ of Robert ‘of Easter Maines of Hasindaine’, their ‘foir grandsher’, who was probably him; hence he was great-grandfather of these 3 women. It is unclear how he was related to earlier and contemporary Scotts of Hassenden, however, it is possible he was closely connected with David (who was killed about 1564). Robert (16th C.) Customar of Irvine according to the Exchequer Rolls for at least the years 1537-42. He gave in his reports with William, junior, who was surely related. He was probably also related to John, who was an official in Irvine at about the same time. Robert of Waumbergh (16th C.) recorded in ward in 1540 when he was released (along with Robert of Howpasley) on condition that he help keep peace on the Border, with 2 of their friends to remain in ward as pledges. He is also listed in 1547/8 among the supporters of Sir Walter of Branxholme in a bond of loyalty to the Crown, along with the Kerrs. And in 1550 he was one of 10 Scotts to sign a bond with the Queen, to keep order and bring in criminals. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert (16th C.) tenant in Borthough who was recorded in 1549 when tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme complained about their farms being burned by a group of Englishmen and Kerrs in the previous year. Robert (16th C.) possibly a son of David of Tushielaw and younger brother of Adam of Tushielaw and John of Thirlestane (although this is uncertain). He was Parish Clerk of St. Mary of the Lowes. He was described as ‘in Bowhill’ in 1557 when he was repledged for his part in the armed mob which came to the Church at St. Mary’s seeking to kill Sir Peter Cranston. His sureties were Sir John Scott, Commissary of the Archbishop of Glasgow and Robert Scott of Bonnington. Other men named include Scotts of Allanhaugh, Burnfoot, Haining, Harden, Howpasley, Synton and Thirlestane. He is probably the Robert ‘of Bowhill’ who paid rental for lands in Rodono to Melrose Abbey in 1557. He may be the Robert of Bowhill who was served heir to his brother Walter in the half steadings... of Kershope (called ‘Westsyd de Kershop’ in Ettrick) in 1555. Scott of Satchells describes him as the progenitor of the Scotts of Bowhill. His son Walter was alive in 1592. He had 2 other sons: William (in Scotstaines) who was probably at the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596; and James. Robert of Horsleyhill (16th C.) charged by the Queen’s Advocate in 1563 with ‘Resetting of Inglismenne, and Thiftuus Steling of certane Oxin’. William of Tushielaw was fined for not producing the relevant documents. Since it appears that Horsleyhill was owned by the Elliots about this time it is unclear how he could have been Laird (perhaps this was an error of Pitcairn in ‘Scott’ for ‘Elliot’?; however, descendants of the Scotts of Tushielaw would later own Horsleyhill). Robert ‘Wait Aboot Um’ (16th C.) recorded in 1562 along with Robert ‘of Collefurd’ and John ‘callit the Clerk’. The 3 were excepted from the bond between the Scotts and the Kers, but instead we to be pursued for their crimes. His name is explicitly recorded as ‘Wait About Him’, but it is unclear what this meant. Robert ‘Hob’ (d.1564) recorded in 1562 along with John ‘callit the Clerk’ his brother and Hob ‘Wait About Him’. He is listed as Robert ‘of Collefurd’. The 3 were excepted from the assurance given by the Scotts that they would end their feud with the Kers, but instead these men were to be pursued (and hence presumably already convicted as thieves). They were convicted of sheep-stealing and reset and hanged, along with John ‘the Clerk’, Mark Elliot called ‘of the Hill’ and John Henderson ‘the False’. He is recorded as ‘callit of Colyfurd’. He must be related to the William, son of Walter, who had a sasine for Colfort in 1550. Robert of Bonnington (d.beef. 1572) probably younger son of the first Robert of Aikwood. Sometime in the period 1514–1524 he married Katherine, daughter and heiress of John Boyle of Wamphray and Rysholm (in Ayrshire); she was widow of John Johnstone and died in 1524. He assumed the designation ‘of Wamphray and Rysholm’. In about 1540 he and Sir Walter of Buccleuch were released from ward after making promises to help keep order on the Border. In 1541 he was ‘of Wamphray’ when he claimed tenancy of the lands of Winterburgh in Ettrick. His son Robert was infeft in the lands of Rysholm in 1541, but died before 1549. He was recorded as tenant in ‘Rysholme’ in Ayrshire in 1542, when he had a sasine for those lands. He was accused of being a traitor and spy in 1545 and appears to have taken refuge at Aikwood. In 1550 he was ‘of Wamfrey’ when he witnesed an obligation by Sir Walter Scott to bring in criminals on the Border. He and his sons disposed of Wamphray and Rysholm in about 1550. In 1552 he was described as ‘in Aikwater’ (i.e. Oakwood) when he and his son and heir Adam purchased both halves of the lands of Bonnington from the daughters and heirs of Martin Wylie. In 1553/4 he was listed as ‘of Wanfra’ among Scotts and their supporters who a group of Kers promised not to harm. In 1557/8 he was ‘sometime of Wamfray’ when along with his son Adam they were bound by a charter to sell ‘Rysholme’ in Ayrshire to John Hamilton of ‘Beynstoun’; however, they were unable to do so, having been evicted and hence had to give rentals of Bonnington and other lands in Peeblesshire to Hamilton. He is probably the same as the Robert ‘of Bonyntoune’ who was surety for some of the Scotts charged in 1557 with trying to kill Sir Peter Cranston at the Kirk of the Lowes, and who was on the panel for charging John Gledstains of Cocklaw with murder in 1561. In 1557 he was ‘of Bonytoun’ when he paid rental to Melrose Abbey for ‘Espyhoup’ and ‘Stobeclouch’. He was listed among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts in 1562. He was succeeded in the lands of Bonnington by his son Adam, and he was grandfather of Simon of Bonnington (who was served heir to his grandmother, Katherine Boyle, in 1611). His other sons were Robert, who predeceased him, and an illegitimate son, also Robert, who was legitimatised in 1547. He is probably the Robert recorded in a service of heirs in 1625; William Burnet succeeded to the brother of his great-grandfather on his mother’s side, as heir to John of ‘Walkmanfield’ (in Peeblesshire), son of Robert of Bonnington, brother of Adam. Robert of Thirlestane (d.c.1576) son of John, the first recorded Laird of Thirlestane, in Ettrick valley. In 1550 he was among local lairds (including Walter of Buccleuch and Robert of Howpasley) who swore to the Queen and Lord Governor that they would help bring in criminals. In 1553 there is an assurance by Walter Kerr of Cessford not to hurt him or his family and friends (this following the murder of Sir Walter of Buccleuch in Edinburgh). In 1557 he was listed as being ‘of Schastaine’ (perhaps a transcription error) when he paid rental for ‘Craige’, ‘Ramseclouch’ and ‘Thrilistane’ to the monks of Melrose. He was also involved in 1557 with the band of about 200 Scotts and their supporters who sought out Sir Patrick Cranston at the Kirk of the Lowes as part of a feud. He was appointed one of the curators of Sir Walter of Branxholme in 1562, when he was in his minority. In 1564 he was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. He was probably the ‘Gudman of Thirstanle’ on an assize of 1564 involving the murder of David of Hassendean. And in 1564/5 he was also listed as one of the 4 curators of Sir Walter of Branxholme in the bond signed with the Kers; he signed ‘with my hand at the pen’, indicating that he could not write. He was probably Warden-Depute of the West Borders, although no dates are known. In 1567 he was one of the cautioners for the marriage contract between Elizabeth, sister of Walter of Branxholme and Thomas, son of Walter Ker of Cessford. Also in 1567 he and Master Thomas Weston relieved Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme as surety for Archie’s Will in Gorumberry and Sim Elliot in Dodburn. In 1568 he had a charter of feu-right for Thirlestane, Ramseycleuch, Scabcleuch and Craighill from the Commendantor of Melrose Abbey. In 1568/9 his support was mentioned as a curator of Sir Walter of Buccleuch on a further bond between the Scotts and Kers. In 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting superiority of her father’s lands in Wilton. In 1569 he (along with Sir Walter of Branxholme, Langlands of that Ilk and William, Lord Borthwick) was surety for several Elisots. He was also caution for Walter of Headsaw in 1569 and for other Borderers in 1573. In late 1573 he was charged to enter Ade Dodds and George Laidlaw, tenants in Ramseycleuch. He was curator of Walter Scott of Buccleuch, recorded in 1575, but is deceased by 1577. He is probably the Laird listed in Monipennie’s c.1594 (but put together much earlier) compilation of Border chiefs. He married Margaret Scott, who may have been daughter of ‘Wicked Wat’ (not a daughter of the 1st Lord of Buccleuch, as stated by Satchells); she was among the curators of her son Robert, complaining about the treatment he had at the hands of Simon Scott of Winterburgh, and was still living at Thirlestane in 1609. He was succeeded by his eldest son Sir Robert. Other sons were Walter of Gamescleuch and William of Fin gland (who may also have had the lands of Merrylaw). Both sons are listed among those involved with the 1593 slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Dryfe Sands, and both were probably at the rescue of Kinmont Willie. Robert of Allanhaugh (16th C.) recorded as ‘Young Robert Scot of Alanehauch’ in 1557 when he rented the Brugh from Melrose Abbey. Probably the same Robert is described as heir to his deceased grandfather in 1569, when there was a discharge from his cousin, Sir Walter of Branxholme, for whom his grandfather acted as tutor during Sir Walter’s minority; he was also granted the non-entry of the rents and other fees associated with Whitchester, from the time of the death of the former Robert of Allanhaugh (around 1557) until he became of age. Probably the same Robert of Allanhaugh is listed in 1581 among Scotts and their allies who were summoned to appear before the Privy Council; his son William is also listed. He was most likely the Robert of Allanhaugh (along with William ‘in Alanehaucht, now in Hawik’, presumably his son, and Scotts associated with Over Southfield) who were involved in the murder of Hawick resident George Scott in 1578; George’s brothers Robert and James wrote a ‘letter of slains’ in Hawick in which they forgave the assailants. In 1585 he had a bond with Sir Walter of Buccleuch, settling an old feud over the death of David, son of Adam of Allanhaugh, and Hob Dalglesh, servant of Sir Walter’s in Braidscauch; his ‘brother germane’ Walter is also listed. He was also recorded in about 1590 among the landed men of the Borders. Papers relating to him in the period 1581–1600 are in the National Archives. It seems possible that he was son of William, but may have been the direct heir of his grandfather, the previous Robert. However, the history of this family is very unclear. Robert (16th C.) Bailie of Hawick who signed the 1569 bond against the thieves of Liddesdale, along with many inhabitants of Roxburghshire, Selkirkshire, Berwickshire and Peebleshire. He may be the same as one of the other local Robert Scotts of the time. Robert (16th C.) recorded in 1571/2 as one of 4 inhabitants of Hawick who entered themselves to answer some kind of bond, with Sir William Ker of Caver ton as cautioner. ‘Philip’s Jock’ was one of the other men and hence possibly related. In 1572/3 the same men swore allegiance to the Crown and gave assurance that they would not help or reset Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and others, with Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig as cautioner. Robert (16th C.) son and heir of William ‘in Hawik’, mentioned in 1557 and in 1565/6. His father had leases on lands in Hawick owned by Trinity Collegiate Church in Edinburgh (and formerly belonging to Soutra). It is possible he is the same as Robert ‘in Hawik’ recorded in 1592. Robert of Stirches (16th C.) probably son of Walter of Syn ton by his 2nd wife Margaret, daughter of James.

Riddell of that Ilk. His step-mother was a Cockburn of Ormiston, from whom the family inherited the lands of Whitslade. He was the progenitor of the Scotts of Whitslade and Sticheres. He is probably the Robert, son of Walter of Snyton who appeared for his father in 1561 to promise to produce 'Hob Flescheour', who was accused of theft in Berwick. In the same year he was listed as son to Walter of Snyton among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. He married a daughter (possibly Helen) of Rutherford of Hunthill and was succeeded by his son Walter 'the Hawk' (who was probably the first to be designated 'of Whitslade', and was served heir to his grandfather Walter in the lands of Whitslade in 1605). Scott of Satchells also says he had a son Thomas, who was 1st of Todrig, but this appears to be off by a generation. It is said that another son, also Robert, accompanied Scott of Buccleuch on the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie from Carlisle Castle in 1596. He may have been responsible for the building (or rebuilding) of the tower at Sticheres. Robert of Burnfoot (16th C.) probably 2nd son of William of Harden, as stated by Scott of Satchells. He was eldest son of William with his 2nd wife, who was a Ker of Fairnilee and widow of Riddell of that Ilk. His brother was George of Todrig. His lands were Burnfoot in the Ale valley (as opposed to Burnfoot-on-Teviot). He may have been father of William of Burnfoot in Ale and hence Robert, and Walter, brothers of William. These 3 brothers were mentioned in 1612 when the sons of the Earl of Bothwell were involved in an ongoing dispute with them over land and tithes. Robert (16th C.) described as son of deceased Robert of Raesknowe in an undated marriage contract with Agnes, daughter of Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule. Sir Thomas lived until 1572, and hence it must have been before this date. He was probably related to David of Raesknowe who was one of the 24 'pensioners' of Buccleuch. Robert of Over Hassendale (16th C.) see Robert of Alton and Clarlaw. Robert (16th C.) mentioned in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. It is stated that 'Robert Scottis wyf in Hawik' was owed 'for sum ordinar dwtie, sex pundis', suggesting that she had provided some kind of service to the Laird (perhaps catering). Robert 'Hob' (16th C.) recorded in 1581 as 'callit of Glenrathane' when, along with his brother George and Hob 'callit Huitill' they were accused of attacking Martin Elliot of Bridal's farm at Northcroft. Their chief was Walter of Goldielands, and so they must have been relatively local. 'Glenrathane' is probably Glenrauchan in Ewesdale, rather than Glenrath south of Peebles. He is probably the 'Hob Scott in Glenrachane' listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a court in Hawick in 1605. He was surely related to Archibald there, who was declared a fugitive in 1606. Robert 'Hob' (16th C.) referred to as 'callit Huitill' in 1581 when there was a complaint against him and 2 other Scotts (Hob of 'Glenrathane' and his brother George) attacking Martin Elliot's farm of Northcroft. It is unclear where 'Huitill' might have been. Rev. Robert (16th C.) son of Walter of 'Hindscha' (i.e. Headshaw) he became minister of Ashkirk in 1585/6, on the death of Daniel Chalmers. However, nothing else is recorded about him. It is possible he is actually the same man as Robert of Headshaw, unless there are 2 generations of Walter of Headshaw and he is son of the 1st (or Walter of Headshaw had 2 sons called Robert). Robert (16th C.) Burgess of Hawick recorded in 1581, brother of George and James (who was a cordiner). In 1581 he and his brother James wrote a 'letter of slains' in Hawick, forgiving the murderers of his brother, who were the Scotts from Allanhaugh, Over Southfield and others. He signed the document 'wytht my hand' (although his brother James did not). He may well be the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert (16th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1581 he was a cautioner (with Mungo, Burgessess of Edinburgh, as well as James Gledstains of Cocklaw) for Walter Scott of Goldielands being entered into ward in Edinburgh Castle. He was probably directly related to Mungo, as well as being a relative of the Scotts of Goldielands (and hence Buccleuch). Robert of Howford (16th/17th C.) listed by Scott of Satchells as one of the 24 'Pensioners' of Buccleuch. He was also said to have been on the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. It was said that he received the lands of 'Cowdhouse' (presumably Coldhouse) for his service. He must have been related to the later Scotts of Coldhouse. He was probably son of Robert of Howford and was succeeded by William, probably his son. Robert of Langhope and Huntly (16th/17th C.) listed as one of the 24 'Pensioners' of Buccleuch in Scott of Satchells doggerel verse. He is there recorded as 'of Langup' and having the lands of 'Outterhunty for his service for several ages'. He was said to have been in the group that rescued Kinmont Willie in 1596. He was probably son of William 'in Huntly', who was 3rd son of John, younger of Synton. His brothers Walter and William were listed among supporters of Scott of Thirlestane about 1610. He was probably succeeded by his son Walter, who appears to have been succeeded by another James, who was probably a younger son. William, recorded in 1608 as brother of Walter, was probably yet another son. Robert of Shielswood (16th/17th C.) 5th son of John, younger of Synton. His sons probably included: Robert of Shielswood; and Walter of Girnwood. Robert of Haining (d.bef. 1611) son of Thomas. He is recorded in a bond of 1576/7, not to remove ‘kindly’ tenants from Ellistoun and in the following year lost a dispute with John, minister of Selkirk, over the possession of ‘the half toun and landis of Elistoun’. Also in 1576/7 he was a witness to the payment of a fine by Sir Walter Ker of Cessford because of George Ker not marrying Sir Walter of Branxholme’s sister Janet. In 1580 he had a court case against Adam of Bonnington. He was listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs (he may have been involved with Scott of Headshaw in the attack on the Elliots of Braidlie). He was in ward in Edinburgh Castle in 1581, along with George of Synton, when his cautioners were Mungo and Alexander, Burgesses of Edinburgh. Alexander was cautioner for him when the surety was renewed. In 1585 he witnessed a bond (signed at Selkirk and Hawick) settling a feud between the Scotts of Branxholme and the Scotts of Allanhaugh. He signed a bond with other Scotts in 1589 and was listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ of 1590. In 1590 a number of Murrays were put under caution not to harm him and James Scott ‘callit Mekle Jame Eister’. In 1590/1 he was a cautioner for Walter Chisholme of that Ilk in a case brought against the Scottish Wardens and leaders on the Border, for failing to produce certain fugitives. He represented Buccleuch at a meeting of Wardens representatives at Dayholme on the Kershope Burn in 1596. Afterwards Lord Scuroe’s agent, Salkeld, captured Kimmont Willie, leading later to his daring rescue from Carlisle Castle. In 1599 he witnessed the bonds (signed at Branxholme) between Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and the Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddesdale. In the early years of the century he (along with Sir Robert of Thirlestane) acted for the interests of Sir Walter of Buccleuch while he was abroad. In 1601 he was mentioned in an English letter listing Armstrong who were outlaws under the Laird of Buccleuch, when he appears to have been acting as a Deputy Warden. In 1606 he was surety for Ninian Armstrong and Andrew Henderson in a murder trial. In 1608 it is said that he ‘hounded out’ John, brother of Walter of Woll and his half-brother John Turnbull, leading to them attacking some citizens in Selkirk, and then being rescued from the Bailies by a gang of Scotts including his brother William; his servitors Walter and John Gledstains were also involved. His son Robert and several of his servants were alleged to have attacked Sir Andrew Ker’s lands at Selkirk Mill in 1608; his servants included Thomas Young, Francis Scott, William Elliot, Patrick Brown and William Thomson. He is probably the Robert who was named as a Commissioner for keeping peace in Selkirkshire in 1610. Some time before 1580 he married Janet, daughter of Sir Walter (9th of Buccleuch); she had previously been married to John Cranston of that Ilk, and contracted to marry George Ker, younger of Faldonside. He was succeeded by his son Robert. He also had a younger son, William, who was one of the rescuers of Kimmont Willie. Robert of Bowhill (d.bef. 1625) son of Walter of Bowhill. In 1609 he succeeded to his father Walter’s lands of North Bowhill. He is recorded in 1601 when his brothers Walter, James and William ‘in Schostanis’, together with John ‘in Quholplaw’ were tried for the murder of Archibald Napier of ‘Wowm’ (Woolmot, near Edinburgh). And in 1602 his brother James was part of a group of Scotts who attacked lands at ‘Fechane’. His son Robert succeeded him in 1625. Perhaps the same Robert is recorded in 1594 as ‘callit of Bowden’ on the list of 180 or so men who had a ‘respite’ for killing Lord Maxwell and others at Dryfe Sands. He is probably a descendant of the Robert of Bowhill recorded in the 1550s. Robert of Burnfoot (d.1612) son of William. His lands were Burnfoot on Teviot, and he should not be confused with Robert of Burnfoot on Ale. In 1585 he succeeded his grandfather Adam in the lands of Over and Nether Newhall. He is said to have been at the rescue of Kimmont Willie in 1596. He is listed among a large number of Scotts and others among ‘pretended tenants’ whom the Baron of Hassendean, James Cunningham, was trying to eject from their lands in 1603. He had at least 3 sons: Adam, who succeeded; Robert, who succeeded his elder brother; and William, tenant in Burnhead. He is probably the ‘Guidman of Burnefute’ listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ in about 1590. Robert (16th C.) recorded as ‘Robert Scot in Hawik’ when he was witness to an instrument of sasine for Crook in 1592. William in Hawick and Adam in Ormieston are also mentioned. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1597 among defendants in cases brought by the English Wardens involving raids by men of Liddesdale. His name is given as ‘Hobb (Robert) Scott called ‘bradowe’’. It is unclear whether his to-name was a nickname or location. Robert of Easter Groundistone (16th/17th C.) nephew to Robert of Headshaw according to Capt. Scott of Satchells when he listed him as one of the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch. His grandfather was Walter of Headshaw, but it is unclear what his father’s name was (possibly Walter). Robert ‘Hob’ (16th/17th C.) listed among men of Eskdale, Ewesdale, etc., declared fugitive at a court in Peebles in 1605. He is recorded as ‘Hob Scott of the Laik’, but it is unclear where this might have been. Sir Robert of Thirlestane (c.1558–1627) son of Robert, with his mother being Margaret Scott (either daughter of ‘Wicked Wat’ of Buccleuch or Wat of Harden). He is first recorded in 1568, and Satchells claims he was born in 1566 (although he appears to have reached majority by 1581). During his minority his ‘tutor’ was his uncle Simon of Gamescleugh, while his curators were Sir John Johnstone of that Ilk, Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and James Gledstains of Cocklaw. In 1578 he and his curators complained that his tutor ‘Sym Scot of Wintirburch’ had taken 2 horses from Thirlestane, harassed his tenants and then forcibly taken possession of the house at Thirlestane. He is said to have attended the University of St. Andrews along with the young Walter of Buccleuch (and at the same time as the young James VI), and about 1585 accompanied Walter to the site of the old Rankeburn Kirk, where they found some buried tombstones bearing the arms of Buccleuch. He was listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. In 1583/4 he is among the Border Lairds summoned by the Privy Council for advice on preserving peace in Teviotdale and Liddesdale. In 1583/4 he and Sim of Winterburgh were cautioners for John in Hundleshope. He could be the Robert ‘in Cringillis’ who witnessed a bond in 1585 (signed at Selkirk and Hawick) settling a feud between the Scotts of Branxholme and the Scotts of Allanhaugh. In 1590 he was purchased the lands of Altrieve and Corsecleuch (Selkirkshire) from Alexander Lord Home, his family having been ‘kindly tenants’ there for generations. He was also listed on the 1590 ‘Roll of the Clans’. A confirming charter of 1590 records that he purchased the lands of Crookston in Peeblesshire, on account of a messenger taking refuge there, this being part of a dispute between Cranston and Arthur Scott of Gamescleugh. He gained the lands of Kirkhope in Ettrick and the teinds of Ettrick Kirk in 1594; his eldest son and heir, Robert was also given livery of these properties of Melrose Abbey. In 1596 he was one of the men consulted by Walter of Buccleuch in organising the rescue of Kinmont Willie, and he accompanied Walter to London to see Elizabeth I in 1597. In 1596/7 the citizens of Peebles complained that he had led a group of Scotts to attack their lands of ‘Kaidmure’; they were all denounced as rebels for failure to appear. Along with his brother Walter he is included in a list of supporters of Scott of Buccleuch in 1599. Also in 1599 he witnessed the bonds (signed at Branxholme) between Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and the Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddesdale. In the early years of the 1600s he and Robert of Haining acted for Sir Walter of Branxholme while he was abroad. In 1602 Gideon Murray of Elibank was surety for him in regard to charges against him by the warden of the middle marches ‘at the instance of the laird of Neutoun, Englishman’. In 1604 he sold the lands of Cruxton to William Elliot, Burgess of Peebles. In 1605 he had a bond to enter his tenants (Scotts of Hundleshope and others) for not appearing to answer charges of attacking the lands at ‘Fechane’. He was probably knighted in 1606 and in 1607 was Member of the Scottish Parliament for Selkirkshire, the first elected representative. He was involved in every local quarrel of his day, including helping organise the rescue of Kinmont Willie. He was caution for several relatives and tenants in 1608 not to harm Archibald ‘of Deiphoip’, and also caution for Sir John Murray of Philiphauh. There was a feud with the Scotts of Tushielaw, culminating in the death of his brother Walter at the hands of John, son of Walter Scott of Tushielaw in 1609. In 1609 he and his son Robert (and several others) were bonded not to reset Walter of Headshaw and a group of other men, and were later fined for resetting the same men (including his natural son Peter and brother William). In 1609 he also complained against Armstrongs and other men who were troubling him in his lands and vowing to take his life. He witnessed a charter for Scott of Woll in 1609. In 1610 there was a bond of assurance with the Scotts of Tushielaw in order to resolve the feud. That same year he was ordered apprehended since he still had a ‘horming’ for the attack on Peebles in 1596/7. Also in 1610 he and his son had a ‘wadset’ with Robert of Whitlins and another with Robert of Burnfoot and he was cautioner for the Scotts of Whitlins and Satchells that they would not harm Walter in Hawick, called Todswashill and his associates. In 1612 there was a complaint to the Privy Council that he and his son Sir Robert had not paid former fines and should be apprehended, the Council also asked him and Walter of Tushielaw to appear to resolve the contradictory claims of each family. William Scott, younger of Harden had him and others removed from the lands of Deephope in 1615/16. In about 1620 he had a charter for Thirlestane, Ettrickhouse, Ramsaycleuch and Sabcbleuch from the Commendator of Melrose, as well as another charter for half of the lands of ‘Cringillis’. He and his son Robert were also granted the teinds of the new Kirk of Ettrick. In the years 1621–3 he was involved with financial bonds with Sir William of Harden, as well as Sir Walter of Whitlins and Walter, Earl of Buccleuch (essentially borrowing money using his lands as collateral). In 1622 he was fined for not being on the jury for the case involving Turnbuls of Belses etc. He was recorded in a disposition of 1623 to his chief the Earl of Buccleuch. Also in 1623 he was one of the representatives of Tweeddale and Selkirk on the Parliamentary Commission to discuss the export of Scottish wool. In 1624 he rented Gamescleuch from Sir William Scott of Harden. Also in 1624 his lands of Crookston were ‘apprised for debt’, and he also sold an ‘annualrent’ there. In 1625 he was one of the men who broke out of the jail in Selkirk (the others being Gavin Elliot of Brugh, George Davidson of Kames, Thomas Little of Meikledale and his servant John ‘Skaillis’), breaking the walls on 2 sides, his prison bed being found to have 2 plow blades and ‘twa greit craw-irnes’; he must have been in his 60s by then! It appears that his estates were resigned to Sir William of Harden, and later inherited by his nephew Patrick of Tanlawhill, although there was dispute for the next century with the descendants of his son (with his 2nd wife) Sir John. In about 1626 he appears to have lost the lands of Thirlestane, Ramseycleuch and Sabcbleuch (at least temporarily) to John Fisher, perhaps because of non-payment of loans to Scott of Harden. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Cranston of that Ilk sometime before 1594. In 1602 he secondly married Katherine, daughter of Sir Alexander Jardine of Applegirth. His sons were Sir Robert, Sir John and James. John was listed in the last testament of the Earl of Buccleuch in 1633 owing rental money to Mary Lyon (wife of Sir Robert of Crookston, i.e. his sister-in-law). In 1616 his daughter Grizel married Walter of Tushielaw without his permission. Other daughters were probably Jean, who married Robert of Satchells, and Susannah, who married Sir Walter of Whitlins. He may also have been the Robert who inspired the story told of a 2nd wife of Thirlestane being involved in the jealous murder of her stepson (this would be Katherine or Catherine Jardine and her stepson, Sir Robert). He is easily confused with his son, also Sir Robert (often called ‘of Crookston’), who appears to have pre-deceased him in 1619. In 1621 he was served heir to his son Robert’s lands of Gamescleuch, Ettrickside, Borrowhope and the lands of the Kirk o the Lowes. In 1621 he was served heir to his son’s lands of Gamescleuch, Ettrickside and the lands of the Kirk o the Lowes. His wife Catherine Jardine held lands of Davington and others ‘in liferent' after his death, recorded in 1627 in a document with Walter, Earl of Buccleuch. His son John was served as his heir in 1642. Robert ‘Sim’s Hob’ (16th/17th C.) referred to as ‘in Hawick’ when he was witness to a discharge of 1605 between ‘Lang Sandie’ Scott and William Scott of Howpasley. His father was presumably Simon. Probably the same ‘Robert Scot in Hawik, callit Symmies Habie’ was recorded in 1611 when he failed to appear in court at Jedburgh; John in Brieryyards was fined for his non-appearance. Robert (16th/17th C.) brother of William of Burnfoot. George Langlands of that Ilk was cautions for him in 1610, that he not harm William in Hawick (called of Todswashill) and his associates. His brother and several other Scotts were also involved in this dispute. He was also mentioned in 1612 as brother of William of Burnfoot on Ale (along with Walter, another brother) in the ongoing dispute with the sons of Francis, Earl of Bothwell. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert in Northhouse (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1607 when Hector Turnbull of Stonedge had a complaint against him before the Privy Council. He may be the ‘Hob Scot’, brother to Will ‘called of Northhouse’, named along with his brother, when Gilbert Elliott of Horsleyhill (and later of Stobs) complained to the Privy Council that they attacked him in Hawick, ‘with drawn swords’; Gilbert later complained that they had not responded and requested that they should be apprehended, although it is unclear what happened next. He was ‘of Northhouse’ in 1611 when he was part of the assize at the Justice Court in Jedburgh. Robert (16th/17th C.) tenant in Nether Southfield in in 1628 when he was on a list of men accused by the Earl of Buccleuch of chopping down his trees at Todshawhaugh or ‘Trinitylands. He may have been related to later Scotts of the Southfield area. Robert of Howshaw (16th/17th C.) said to have headed the funerary procession for Walter, Earl of Buccleuch in 1634. He rode fully armed, carrying a small banner of the Earl’s colours on the point of his lance. The account comes from Chamber’s Domestic Annals of Scotland. However, it seems likely that ‘Howshaw’ is an error for some different place, since this Robert is otherwise unknown. Robert of Bowhill (16th/17th C.) son of Robert, who he succeeded in 1625. He carried the arms of Douglas of Drumlanrig in the funeral procession of the Earl of Buccleuch in Hawick in 1634. He had 2 sons, Andrew and James, both of whom succeeded to Bowhill. Robert of Satchells (16th/17th C.) probably son of James, who was 4th son of John, younger of Synton. He is said to have been involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. He had a charter from John, Archbishop of Glasgow for the lands of Satchells in the Barony of Lilliesleaf in 1607, and a confirming charter from the King in 1609. In 1609 he also had a charter for Dodbank in Selkirkshire, which his father James, and others before him had occupied. In 1610 Sir Robert of Thirlestone acted as caution for, that he not harm Walter Scott in Hawick (called of Todshawill) and his associates; he was named along with Walter of Whitslade and his son Thomas, suggesting a close link between these families at that time. He is one of the signatories of the 1612 bond to keep peace on the Border. It appears that he lost the Satchells estate, probably through a loan, and moved to a small farm in Eskdalemuir. He may have died soon afterwards, since Jean (presumably his widow) was involved with the sheep-slaughter incident of 1616 along with Lady Scott of Howpasley. His wife was probably Jean, daughter of Sir Robert of Thirlestone. He was probably the father of Capt. Walter the poet and family historian, and also William. Additional children may have included Robert, referred to as younger of Satchells in the 1620s and John, mentioned in a deed of 1655. He may be the ‘Robert Scot of Satchels’ who was among the 24 ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch, having ‘Southinrig for his Service’, according to Capt. Walter’s postural. Keith Scott suggests he died about 1629 (but then Lady Satchells would not have been a widow in 1616); he also suggests there are 2 generations called Robert, so the situation is quite unclear. Robert of Aikwood (d.1615) probably son of William. In 1564/5 he married Marion, daughter of Sir William Cranston of that Ilk. He is probably the ‘Robert of . . . wod’ listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Ellists and Armstrongs. He signed the bond with the other Scotts in 1589. He witnessed a deed in 1592. He had the present tower at Oakwood built in 1602. In 1607 he was summoned before the Selkirk Presbytery, accused of perjury against the minister of Selkirk and in 1614 was cited by the minister for ‘drinking during the time of sermon’. In 1611 he was caution for Philip of Dryhope. He was witness to the bond for keeping peace on the Border in 1612. He was succeeded by his son Andrew in 1615. Philip of Aikwood (who succeeded Andrew) may have been another son. Robert ‘Hob the Lonkie’ (16th/17th C.) Hawick resident mentioned in a murder trial of 1612, after a man apparently hung himself in the Kirk steeple in 1610. His nickname may be a transcription error for ‘Loukie’, meaning lucky or fortunate. Bailie Robert ‘Hob’ of Alton (16th/17th C.) Magistrate in Hawick. It is unclear how he was related to the other Scotts of Alton. The Robert ‘of Auldton’ whose son Adam is listed among those implicated in the slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Dryfe Sands in 1593 may have been his direct ancestor; it is possible he was son of Adam referred to as ‘vocat de Altoun’, who was younger brother of Walter of Alton. He was Bailie in 1603, 1612 (at the same time as ‘Marion’s Hob’) and 1619, and possibly other years, since it is hard to distinguish the various Roberts. He may be the ‘Hob Scot, bailie of Hawik’, who was cautioner for Jamie Chisholme at court in Jedburgh in 1611. He was involved with the incident in 1612 in which the Bailies imposed a stent and market tax without seeking the permission of the Baron, thereby testing the legal authority of Douglas of Drumlanrig within Hawick. An extract of his sasine of 1615 is in the National Archives, this having been copied from the Protocol Book of Gilbert Watt (Hawick’s later Town Clerk). In 1620 he is recorded paying back a loan made to Thomas Rutherford, brother of John of Hunthill. He was also a ‘persionnne of assysie’ in the Commissioners' Court of 1622 and 1623. He is recorded in 1627-29 claiming a debt against the Earl of Buccleuch, where he is described as ‘some-time bailie in Hawick’. ‘Robert, bailie in Hawick, called of Aultdown’ is also mentioned in a dispute with William Douglas of Drumlanrig relating to a bond of 1601. The later Robert of Alton (who died around 1650) was probably his brother Walter’s son. Bailie Robert (16th/17th C.) brother of William called ‘of the Know’, with George and David also being brothers. In 1608 they were bound over not to harm Thomas Abernethy, minister of Hawick (the nature of the dispute being unclear), and he was similarly bound. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Bailies of the same name. They may also have been related to John Scott, Bailie of Selkirk, who acted as surety for them. Bailie Robert (16th/17th C.) Magistrate in 1610, along with Adam Scott, when Jock Elliot died while imprisoned in the Kirk steeple. Elliot’s wife took the Bailies and others to court for his death, but the decision was that it was a suicide. He was one of the men called to give evidence at the trial. He is probably the same as one of the other contemporary Bailie Roberts, but it is unclear which one. Sir Robert of Haining (16th/17th C.) son of Robert. In 1608 he is ‘younger of Haining’ when he was part of a group of men complained about by Sir Andrew Ker of Heiton, saying that they came to his lands of Selkirk Mill and ‘violentlie caist out the dam-heid furth thairof’. They returned with a group of Scotts, Murrays, Ellioths, Gledstains, etc., threatened the millers and smashed equipment. He and James ‘Corsane’ were imprisoned, with 2 others being asked to appear later. He succeeded his father in 1611. In 1612 he was one of the witnesses called by the Privy Council in an attempt to resolve the feud between the Scotts of Tushielaw and Thirlestane. About 1625 he sold Haining, but was still known as ‘of Haining’ afterwards. He was removed from the Earl of Home’s lands at Hartwoodburn in 1622. He may be the same Sir Robert of Haining who carried the arms of Scott of Buccleuch in the Earl’s funeral procession in Hawick in 1634. He is probably the Robert of Haining who married Elizabeth, daughter of Patrick Murray of Falahill. He had at least 2 sons: Robert, who succeeded; and Walter, portioner of Guilan. Bailie Robert ‘Marion’s Hob’ or ‘Marion’s Rab’ (16th/17th C.) Magistrate in late 1612, along with ‘Hob of Alton’, when the authority of the Baron was challenged. He was also Bailie in 1622, 1623 and 1626. He served as a juror at the Commissioners’ Court of 1622 and 1623 when he was ‘laitt bailye of Hawik’. His servitor, William Johnstone, is recorded in the trial for the claimed murder of John Elliot in Hawick in 1610. He was probably one of the 2 Bailie Roberts listed among the 9 men charged with performing a valuation of the lands in the Parish of Hawick. He could be the Bailie Robert who acted as cautioner for James Henderson in ‘Catheuch’ in 1611. His mother was presumably Marion. It is possible his brother was the contemporary Marion’s Geordie’. Bailie Robert (16th/17th C.) Magistrate in Hawick in 1614. He is presumably different from ‘Hob of Alton’ and ‘Marion’s Hob’, but could be the Robert ‘of Westport’ recorded in documents at the same time; the proliferation of men of the same name makes this confusing. There was also a Robert (with no nickname) who was Bailie in 1627, and a ‘laitt bailie of Hawick’ when he was a ‘personne of assyze’ acting in Dumfries Circuit Court in 1622. Robert of Salenside (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1614, along with his kinsman John Scott of Kirkhouses, when he was summoned before the Presbytery to answer for charges of murder. He must have been related to Andrew of Salenside, who is recorded in 1613 (possibly his brother or elder son, but if so he was probably dead by 1621 when Thomas of Salenside is recorded). Robert (16th/17th C.) son of Robert of Whitslade and brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade. Scott of Satchells lists him among the men who were involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596. However, this may be muddled. Bailie Robert (16th/17th C.) Magistrate from Hawick. In 1627 he and James Gledstains were Bailies when there was a series of records with the Privy Council involving men from Hawick who had been selected to be sent to the wars in Germany; he was fined 300 merks and had to find caution for a further £1000 in order to make him produce the named men. He is surely one of the two Bailie Roberts listed in 1627 among 9 men charged with performing a valuation of the lands in the Parish of Hawick; he was one of the men who refused to accept some of the items in the valuation, presumably because of a dispute over either the Kirland, Ladyland or Trinitylands. He was probably the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert of Tushielaw (d.1632) described as ‘fear of Tuschelaw’ and lawful son of Sir Walter of Tushielaw in a charter of 1618 in which he received lands at ‘Wairdlawrig’ in Selkirkshire from John, Lord Hay of Yester. He was the eldest son of Sir Walter of Tushielaw, brother of James and John, who were both at the rescue of Kinmont Willie. Probably the same Robert is ‘apparent of Tuischelaw’ in 1604 when he acted as bailie for a sasine of the Regality of Melrose for lands in Ettrick. In 1612 he signed the bond for keeping peace on the Border. In 1619 he was ‘of Tuscholaw’ when his brother John witnessed a bond for Thomas Turnbull in Spittal-on-Rule. In about 1620 he had a charter from the Commendator of Melrose for Glenkerry, Midhope and Phaup. However, these must have been effectively mortgaged that time, since also in 1620 the lands of ‘Glencarie’ and Midhope, held in ‘wadset’ from him, were given by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs to his youngest son James. He was ‘of Tuscholaw’ in 1620 when his brother John witnessed a bond between Thomas Turnbull, tenant of Spittal-on-Rule and Robert Pringle. He was succeeded by his son Walter in 1633, and in turn was succeeded by the younger son, William of Fawdshope. Robert of Shielwood (16th/17th C.) son of Robert and brother of Walter of Girnwood. He had a charter for Shielwood in the Parish of Ashkirk in 1609. He is mentioned in various documents in the period 1606–26. He was Robert ‘in Schelliswoid’ on the 1616 jury that convicted Jock Scott ‘the Suckler’ of sheep stealing. In 1629 he was appointed as tutor to Robert and Walter, sons of his deceased brother, Walter of Girnwood. He is recorded in 1632 when his eldest son Walter leased part of the lands of Belses. He married Margaret, who re-married Robert Scott of Hartwoodmyres after his death. He was succeeded by Walter and had another son, Robert. He may have had a daughter Isobel who married Walter Scott of Burnfoot’s brother Francis. Robert (16th/17th C.) brother of Walter of Whitehaugh. In 1610 he was part of a petition, along with several local Langlands and Scotts (including his brother Walter), to have hoardings lifted and penalties reduced. His cautioner was George Langlands of that Ilk, and one record seems to state that he was uncle of George (although this may be a transcription confusion). He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert of Dryhope (d.bef. 1633) probably son of William. He is recorded in 1632 in an assignation for a bond, and in 1633 for non-payment. He appears to be already deceased in 1633 when he is mentioned in a contract over the lands of ‘Evillane’, with the consent of James Scott of Hagbrae (presumably a near relative). However, he could be the Robert ‘of Drayvpe’ who carried the arms of Hamilton of Clydesdale in the funeral procession for the Earl of Buccleuch in 1634. He was probably succeeded by his brother Walter. Robert (17th C.) had a charter for the lands of Brieryyards and Broadlee in 1637, with a confirmation in the name of Charles I. It is unclear to which branch of the family he belonged, and how he was related to the later John of Brieryyards. Sir Robert of Haining (17th C.) son of Sir Robert. Although his father had sold off the Haining estate, he still had the designation. He served with the 2nd Earl of Buccleuch in 1643. Also in 1643 he was witness for a charter granted by the Earl of Buccleuch to the Calderwoods in Edinburgh; he is there ‘Sir Robert Scott of Hayneing’. In 1650 he was one of the witnesses for the will of Francis Earl of Buccleuch. His nephew Lieut.-Col. Robert appears to be the last of the Scots of Haining. He may have died in about 1650, since in the additions to the will of Francis in 1651 200 merks yearly are allocated to his widow, Grizel Ker. Robert of Burnfoot (d.bef. 1667) 2nd son of Robert. He succeeded his elder brother Adam. He is recorded along with other tenants of Over and Nether Newhalls in a precept of warning issued by Walter, Lord Scott of Buccleuch. His father had sold off the Haining estate, he still had the designation. He served with the 2nd Earl of Buccleuch in 1625. He is also recorded in 1638 and 1639 when he received the lands of Rottenrow in Hundalee from John Rutherford prior to marrying Anne Rutherford, daughter of John and Isobel Bennet (this was explicitly ‘Burnfutt near Tivist’, rather than the one in Ale Water, which is easy to confuse in this period). He was succeeded by his son Walter. Robert of Whitslade (d.1644) eldest son of Sir Walter, from whom he succeeded in 1628. He was served heir to his father in 1633 and his grandfather Walter in 1635. In 1637 he had a decree of adjudication against John, son of Sir Robert of Thirlestane over the lands of Bourhope, followed by a decree of appraising in 1643. He signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. He represented Selkirk in Parliament in 1639–41 and was also made Parliamentary Convenor for the Selkirkshire War Committee in 1643. In 1641 he was one of the Roxburghshire heritors who signed a letter to the Privy Council relating to the raising of levies for sending troops to Ireland. He was served heir to his father Walter’s lands of ‘Schorthope’ and Ettrickhouse in 1643. In 1643 he was recorded as owner of lands in Ashkirk (valued at £243 10s), as well as Salenside (£116), Kirkhouse (£143) and Ashkirk Mill (£84). He was also listed in 1643 as owner of lands in Hassendean Parish, valued at £214 10s (which were owned by William Chisholme. of Stirches by 1678) and Hermiston in Lilliesleaf Parish, valued at £130 (which were owned by William Johnstone by 1663). He married ‘Holland’s Jean’, natural daughter of Walter Scott, 1st Earl of Buccleuch. His children included: Walter, baptised in 1636; Francis, baptised in 1643; Mary; and Margaret, who in 1647 was served heir to his lands at Ettrickhouse (although these later went to her uncle Thomas), and married John Scott of Langhope. His 2 sons must have died in infancy. He died at the Battle of Marston Moor, probably fighting on the same side as Cromwell. He was succeeded by his brother Sir Walter (who died fighting against Cromwell) in 1645 and then his brother Thomas. His death is the subject of the verse in Caw’s Poetical Museum (1784), probably written by Capt. Scott of Satchells, entitled ‘Lines on the Death of Robert Scott, Esq., of Whitslade’, although in fact the contents focus more on the later death of his brother Thomas. Robert of Hassendean (d. bef. 1669) recorded in a ‘letter of apprising’ (i.e. transferring heritable lands to clear debts) of 1604, with ‘Dedrig, Easter and Wester Cappitrig’ passing to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch. He was probably a son or grandson of David of Hassendean, who was killed around 1564. He was succeeded by his son Adam in 1669, but may have died earlier. He may be the same man as Robert of Over Hassendean. He may have been the Laird listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ in about 1590. And he may be the Robert of Hassendean who was said to have been in the party which rescued Kinmont Willie in 1596. Sir Robert of Crookston (d.1619) eldest son of Sir Robert of Thirlestane and his 1st wife, who was Margaret, daughter of Sir John Cranston of that ilk (however, it is hard to separate father and son, and some accounts confound them in a single generation). He appears to have been born before 1594, when his name first appears. In that year he was eldest son and heir of Robert of Thirlestane, when they were both granted the teinds and vicarage of Ettrick Kirk for their lifetimes. Before he succeeded his father he was known as ‘of Cruxton’ or ‘Cruikstane’. He acquired Gamescleuch in 1605 and in 1607 (when he was ‘younger’ of Thirlestane) he had a charter for the lands of Bourhope (or ‘Bowerhope’) adjacent to St. Mary’s Loch. He was involved in the bond of 1609 (along with his father and several others) to reset Walter of Headshaw and other men, and the action by Walter of Tushielaw to fine them for resetting the same men. He was knighted about 1612. His memorial stone inscribed ‘S / R S MEMENTO MORE 1619’ is in Ettrick Kirk (although it is possible this was his father’s, and the next 8 years refer to incidents in his life). His life may be the basis of the story told (first by the Ettrick Shepherd and later by Sir Bernard Burke) of a 2nd wife at Thirlestane (presumably Katherine Jardine) having her step-son murdered so that her own son could inherit the estates, but when found out her husband had her locked up for a year while his eldest son lay in state and he spent the family fortunes in lavish feasting. It is unclear what truth there is in the story, but in 1617 he married Mary Lyon, daughter of the Earl of Strathmore, and died without issue; Mary Lyon remarried to Robert Semple of Beltrees, and in 1633 was named in the will of the Earl of Buccleuch being owed money through John, ‘son and air to the said vmquhile Sir Robert of Thirlestane’ (presumably her brother-in-law). His younger brother Sir John (son of Katherine Jardine of Applegirth) did not succeed either, the titles going to their cousin Patrick of Tanlawhill who effectively purchased the Thirlestane estate. In 1621 his father, Sir Robert of Thirlestane was served heir to his lands of Gamescleuch, Ettrickside, Bowerhope and the lands of the Kirk o the Lowes; this strongly suggests that he was deceased by 1621. He is the ‘Sir Robert of Cruikstane’ who is recorded as deceased in the period 1649–77 when his brother and heir John was involved in a dispute with the Scotts of Buccleuch over lands in Eskdale. John is described as the son and heir of Sir Robert of Thirlestane in a 1632 document involving the lands of Altrieve and Corsecleuch (so he was certainly already deceased by then). He is said to have left an illegitimate son, Peter, who was living in 1609. Robert ‘Geordie’s Hobie’ (16th/17th C.) one of 3 Hawick men acquitted in 1621 of carrying hagbuts and pistols in public and using them to shoot their neighbours’ doves and fowl. Robert (16th/17th C.) illegitimate son of Arthur of Newburgh. He was listed in 1608 among relatives and tenants of Sir Robert of Thirlestane who were bound over not to harm Archibald ‘of Dephoip’ or his sons. Robert of Gilmanscleuch (16th/17th C.) son of James. He was called ‘Truth’ and was said to be one of the men who helped rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. His sons were: John, who succeeded; William; and Adam, tenant at Shaws who was father of Francis. He is probably the Robert of Gilmanscleuch whose son Adam was served heir to his other son William in 1647. Robert of Westport Robert who purchased the estate of Whitehaugh for a year, possibly longer. He is probably the Countess of Home for leasing Hartwoodburn of Buccleuch. In 1622 he had an agreement with a charter of Goldielands for Walter, Earl of Seafield in 1619. In 1620 he was Sir Walter Scott of Whitslade, for a bond involving the same thing. He was also cautioner, along with Robert `of Well' for the bond he was surety for Robert `of Headshaw', whom he succeeded by 1593. He may have been the Laird of `Eidshaw' listed on the `Roll of the Clans' in about 1590. He may be the Robert of Headshaw (unless this is an error for Walter) who is recorded being held in ward in Edinburgh Castle in 1581, with Paul Doig acting as caution for the pledge of Walter Scott of Goldielands, that he would answer for the hurting of Martin Elliot of Braidlie. He is probably the Robert `of Headshaw' who had a charter of Headshaw and Easter Essenside in 1593 (incorrectly transcribed as 1553) from Ludovic, Duke of Lennox. Scott of Satchells lists him among the men on the Carlisle raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. He is recorded in a series of writs of the lands of Headshaw `disponed' to Andrew Hay in the period 1593–1624; his wife was Elizabeth and his son Robert. In 1609 he was caution for Sir Robert of Thirlestane in a bond for not resetting Walter of Headshaw (surely a relative, possibly his brother) and others. In 1610 he had a bond (along with Walter, fiar of Whitslade for Sir Robert of Thirlestane) not to harm Walter of Tushielaw and his sons. And in another 1610 bond he was surety for Robert `of Well' for the same thing. He was also cautioner, along with Sir Walter Scott of Whitslade, for a bond involving the Hays of Smithfield in 1619. In 1620 he was Robert `elder, called of Heidshaw' when he witnessed a charter of Goldielands for Walter, Earl of Buccleuch. In 1622 he had an agreement with the Countess of Home for leasing Hartwoodburn for a year, possibly longer. He is probably the Robert who purchased the estate of Whitehaugh from his sister Janet's son Walter. He is also probably the Robert of Headshaw whose `brother-son' (i.e. nephew) was Robert of Easter Groundstone, listed by Scott of Satchells as one of the `Pensioners' of the house of Buccleuch. He had sons: Robert, who appears not to have succeeded, since the estate was sold first; and Francis. Walter and James, two brothers of the younger Robert of Headshaw are recorded in 1627, and so were presumably his sons also. Robert of Bonnington (d.bef. 1624) eldest son and heir of Simon. Together with his father he had `liferent' of the lands of `Ernescleugh' and Singlie in 1593, confirmed in 1607. He was succeeded by his uncle John. Robert (16th/17th C.) progenitor of the Scotts of Horsleyhill, whose genealogy is given by Scott of Satchells, and called there `Portioner and Bailie of Hawick'. His father was William, said to be second son to Walter, Laird of `Midgap', who was grandson of Adam of Tushielaw. It seems more likely that he was son of William of Midgehope, who was grandson of William of Tushielaw and great-grandson of Adam of Tushielaw. He may be the same man as one of the Bailie Roberts recorded in Hawick in the early 1600s. His son William may have been the first to be called Laird of Horsleyhill. Note there appears to be a much earlier Scott of Horsleyhill family, who are presumably not directly related. Bailie Robert (16th/17th C.) son of `Watis Jok', so presumably his father was John and his grandfather Walter. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Bailies. He is recorded in a sasine of 1610, along with his wife Helen Turnbull, for a `tenement' in the south side of the Kirkwynd, which had been resigned by George Turnbull, tenant in Howay, brother of Hector Turnbull of Barnhills. The land was specifically described as being between Nichol's Croft (roughly the Village), a garden of Robert Dickson, a tenement belonging to the Hendersons and the Kirkwynd itself. Robert (17th C.) tenant at Harwood in the Rule valley. He was witness to a sasine of 1631 for the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside. Robert of Burnfoot in Ale (d.bef. 1669) son of Walter Scott of Burnfoot. He is recorded in a document of 1632 along with John, son of Sir Robert of Thirlestane, relating to the lands of Altrive and Coreceleuch in Selkirkshire. Note that this is Burnfoot in the Ale valley (although it is easy to confuse him with the nearly contemporary Robert of Burnfoot on Teviot). He was served heir to his father in 1641. He is recorded paying £400 in Ashkirk Parish according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. He had at least 2 sons: Walter, who succeeded; and Francis, who married Isobel Scott, and to whom Scott of Satchells addressed one of his dedications. He is probably the Robert of Burnfoot recorded in 1666 in a list of landowners in Hassendean Parish, in the same year when his son William became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh and in 1668 when his son George became a surgeon’s apprentice there. He may be the Robert of Burnfoot recorded paying the land tax in Ashkirk Parish in 1678 (even although perhaps he was deceased by then). Robert (17th C.) described as the heir apparent of Satchells in 1622-25 when he was involved in a court action with George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) over the lands of Dodbank in Ettrick. He was probably a son of Robert and brother of Capt. Walter (of family history fame), although this is not certain. Presumably the same Robert was also the ‘zunger of Satchellis’ who signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. He may be the Scott of Satchells (first name not given) listed in the inventory of the deceased Walter Earl of Buccleuch in 1633, when he was owed for rental of the lands of ‘Dodheid’. He may be the Robert of Satchells recorded in 1643 when his lands of Satchells (first name not given) were valued at £156. Robert of Alton (d.bef. 1653) eldest son of Walter of Alton. He was probably nephew of the ‘Hob of Alton’ who was Bailie in Hawick. He succeeded his father in about 1638, the year that he signed the ‘Confessions’ of Faith in Hawick. In 1643 he is recorded as owner of lands in Hassendean Parish, valued at £474; based on who owned these later, they were Alton, Knowetownhead and Tandlaw. His son William ‘younger of Alton’ died before him. He was already deceased in 1653 when his daughters Margaret, Bessie and Agnes were served ‘heirs portioners’ to Robert of the East Mains of Hassendean, their ‘foir grandsher’ (either great-grandfather or great-great-grandfather). Presumably the lands of Alton passed to one of them, who married another Scott, since Scotts (perhaps from the Gorrenberry branch) held the lands until about 1742. It is possible he was the ‘vmquhill Robert Scott of Auldtoun Crofts’ (if Alton and Alton Croft were sometimes confused) mentioned in the 1651 will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch when his eldest son (name unfortunately left blank) was granted 200 merks yearly. His wife may have been Margaret Turnbull, who was recorded as ‘relict of Alton’ in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls, when she jointly with James Scott of Whitslade paid tax on £414 for lands in Hassendean Parish. Robert of Goldielands (17th C.) Bailie of Hawick (along with William Scott) at the time of the signing of the 1638 Covenant. His name appears as ‘R. Scott’, alongside Walter of Goldielands, suggesting that he might have been a brother or son of Walter (although there may be confusion of 2 R. Scotts here); this Walter was meant to have been the last of the distinct Lairds of Goldielands. Also in 1638 (in the first main entry in the Town Book) he was recorded as being ‘callit of Goldielands’ when listed as one of the Bailies at the meeting for chosing the new Bailies and Officers; he was again chosen as a Bailie for the year 1638/9. He is probably the Robert who signed the Act of Bailies and Council of 1640 (his name appearing just after the 2 Bailies). He was elected to the Council in late 1648 and was also a Bailie in the 1640s. He may be the same as the Robert who was ‘brother natural of the said Sir Walter Scott’ in the charter of Goldielands in 1620. Another possibility is that he is the same as Robert of Glack, who inherited part of the Goldielands estate through marriage. Robert of Woll (d.1630s) eldest son of Walter of Woll. In 1617 he was appointed guardian to his half-brother and sister, George and Katherine. Probably the same Robert ‘of Well’ had a bond in 1610 (with Robert of Headshaw as surety) not to harm Walter of Tushielaw and his sons. His wife Rachel complained about his behaviour to the Privy Council several times in 1631 and 1632, where he was described as ‘some time of the Well’. He was ordered to hand over all his assets to his wife and to allow her to cohabit with him, but instead went off to England with Jean, daughter of the deceased Andrew Ker of Graden, and remained with her ‘in the filthy cryme of adulterie all the last harvest’. His wife apparently stated she would forgive him if he would return to her and their eight children, ‘quhaiof foure are so young and weake that they cannot putt on thair cloathes’. Meanwhile he kept Jean Ker ‘in ane oastlerhous’ until she had his child, and sold his house (probably not Woll) and belongings, making his wife and children ‘brought to beggary’. In 1641, after his death, he is recorded when his son James became a saddler’s apprentice in Edinburgh, as well as possibly his son Robert, who became an apothecary’s apprentice the same year. In 1643 he is ‘Robert Scot of Well’ when his son James was incarcerated in Edinburgh Tolbooth at the insistence of saddler David Brown. His wife Rachel was buried in Greyfriars, Edinburgh, in 1661. He had 4 sons: Francis, who succeeded; James, who succeeded his brother, but James Douglas of Cavers in 1674. He was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick in 1675. In 1676 he was probably already acting as Bailie of Regality when there was a case in which the weavers complaining that 2 of their members had appealed to him, rather than obey the Bailies of Hawick. In 1678 he paid land tax on £264 for Weensland in Hawick Parish and £637 (for Horsleyhill) in Hascendean Parish. In a 1688 sasine he is described as ‘bailie in that part for James Duke of Buccleuch and Monmouth’.

His eldest son was William, with another son John becoming a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1687 and a third, Francis, becoming a surgeon-apothecary’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1696; if John was born in 1670 and Francis in 1677, then their mother was Isobella Scott. He is probably the Scott of Horsleyhill whose daughter Eliza married Walter of Woll in 1694. In 1678, 1685 and 1690 he was one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire. He leased the ‘Trinitylands from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1692. In 1692 he signed the agreement between Francis Gledstains of Whittlaw and the Town of Hawick, regarding planting on the edge of the Common. He was probably succeeded by his sons William and then Francis. He may be the Robert, Laird of Horsleyhill, who married Elizabeth, daughter of William Ainslie and Christian Scott in Jedburgh in 1708. Robert (17th C.) described as ‘in Raesknowe’ when he acted as Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch in 1640–41 for rental records for Wilton, Branxholme and Whitchester, and in 1642–44 for Teviotdalehead and Eweshead. He may be the same as Robert of Harwood. Robert of Hartwoodmill (17th C.) recorded as landowner (jointly with Sir Robert Dalyell) in a 1643 valuation of Hawick Parish (this may be an error for ‘Hartwoodhill’ in Lanarkshire or ‘Hartwoodmyres’). The lands were valued at £533 6s 8d. Robert of Hartwoodmyres (d.1654) probably direct descendant of William of Hartwoodmyres, who is recorded in 1589 and 1596. It is possible there are 2 generations of Roberts here. In 1612 he complained that a group of Kers and others, amounting to about 60 men, came to his lands of Hartwoodmyres and ‘rave up and tilit over agane’ his lands, then attempted to find him with violence in mind, but he was not at home; he was unable to prove his claim to the Privy Council. Also in 1612 he was on the panel of ‘retour’ for Tweedie of Drumelzier. He is recorded in 1615 when his sister Marie (or Mary) married Walter Scott of Howford. In 1618 he was a cautioner for Walter, son of John Scott in Newark. In sold Woll; George, who was also served heir to his father; and John. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He was married to Isobel Tudhope and their children included Agnes (b.1635) and Isobel (b.1640). Witnesses in 1640 were William Tudhope (surely a relative of his wife) and Andrew Leyden. Robert (17th C.) recorded as ‘in Grundiston’ in 1640, when Robert Deans was fined ‘for bluiding of the said Robert Scott upon the cheek and hand’. It is unclear how he was related to other local Scotts, but he could perhaps be a descendant of Robert of Easter Grundiston, who is recorded by Scott of Satchells. Robert of Braidaugh (17th C.) see Robert of Harwood. Robert of Howpasley (d.1658) probably eldest son of William of Fingland, brother of Walter, half-brother of Simon and cousin of Patrick of Tanlawhill. It is unclear exactly how he acquired Howpasley. On his death the lands passed to his brother Walter. He is buried in Greyfriars Cemetery. Robert of Carterton (17th C.) recorded in 1667 when he granted a bond (for £332 Scots) to Walter Lorraine, tenant in Greens, who was described as his ‘good brother’ (i.e. brother-in-law). His farm was in northern Dumfriesshire, but it seems likely he was related to more local Scotts, perhaps a branch with a connection to the Lorraines of Harwood. It is possible he was the Robert, married to Alison Lorraine (perhaps daughter of Edward Lorraine and Maisie Elliot), whose daughter Elspeth was baptised in Kelso in 1635. He was surely related to Francis of Carterton, who is recorded on the Committee of War for Dumfriesshire in 1644 and 1649. Robert of Shielswood (b.1640) 2nd son of Walter. He succeeded his brother Francis. He paid tax on £260 in Ashkirk Parish according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. He is recorded on an inquest in 1669. He died without any children and was succeeded by his sister Marian. She married Adam Scott of Shaw. Robert of Horsleyhill (17th C.) son of William, he was descended from the Scotts of Tushielaw. He was Laird at the time Capt. Scott of Satchells wrote his Postrald (and a family genealogy is given there). In 1673 he was charged by the Hawick Bailies of having ‘masterfully spuizilzed out of James Liddell’s house five firelocks with ane pair of bandeliers belonging to the town’; the reason for this apparent theft is not known, but Liddell was Hawick’s Procurator-fiscal, and this was a time when there were serious disputes with the Baron Bailie. Probably the same Robert of Horsleyhill gave evidence at the trial of Andrew Rutherford for the murder of 1627 he was one of the Commissioners left by the Earl of Buccleuch to administer his affairs when he left for Holland. Also in 1627 he is mentioned in an action that was brought against him and Andrew of Aikwood in Selkirk. In 1628 he was given a commission to hold a trial for 2 women accused of witchcraft. In 1633 he was appointed one of the ‘Tutors Testamentary’ to oversee the Earl of Buccleuch’s will. He was part of the funeral procession for the Earl of Buccleuch, which took place in Hawick in 1634, with him carrying the arms of Beaton of Creigh. He signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. In 1643 he witnessed a ‘supplication’ to the Privy Council. He is listed as one of the landowners in a 1643 valuation of the lands in Wilton Parish, the value being £26 13s 4d (it is unclear where these lands were, but by 1788 were owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch). He is probably the Robert of ‘Hartwoodmill’ recorded as landowner (jointly with Sir Robert Dalzell) in a 1643 valuation of Hawick Parish; the lands were valued at £533 6s 8d. In 1643 he was on the Commission of Supply for Selkirkshire (so he was M.P. for 1643–45) and in 1646, 1648 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire. In 1648 he re-married Margaret, widow of Robert Scott of Shielswood (and she would later marry Sir John of Thirlestane). His oldest son was William, who was the last of Hartwoodmyres. Robert of Headshaw (17th C.) listed as one of the major landowners in a valuation of Wilton Parish in 1643, his lands being valued at £448 10s. He was probably the ‘younger of Headshaw’ who leased part of the lands of Belses in 1632. He was probably also the son of Robert of Headshaw who sold the estate of Whitehaugh to Andrew Hay in 1623. In 1627 he was ‘of Eildshaw, younger’ when accused of being among a band of Scots who harassed the tenant of Hartwoodburn. In 1629 he sold the family estates of Headshaw and Langhope to John of Yorkston, 2nd son of George of Synton. He was involved in a court case in 1634 with Sir William Scott of Harden and John, son of Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane, over the lands of Thirlestane. In 1638 he is ‘sumtyme of Heidschaw’ when he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick. He is surely the Scott of Headshaw whose ‘Lands, being Wester Whitehaugh’ are recorded in 1643. He is probably the Robert of Headshaw whose daughter Jean married William Scott of Synton in 1647. Robert of Heap (17th C.) recorded as owner of teinds in Ashkirk Parish in the 1643 Roxburghshire county valuation. These consisted of the teinds of Leaphill, Woll, Castleside and Broadlee (valued at £208), Whitslade (£80) and Essenside (£60), as well as tack-duty (valued at £3 6s 8d). He is recorded as one of the heritors of Wilton Parish in 1649. Probably the same Robert was ‘of Wester Heap’ on the 1663 Land Tax Rolls for Wilton and also ‘of Heap’ when he paid tax in Ashkirk Parish. He was probably related to James of Heap, who is also recorded in the 17th century. Robert of Burnhead (d.1677) local landowner in the mid-to-late 1600s (it is unclear whether he was Laird or tenant at Burnhead). In 1643 he was recorded as owner of land valued at £156 in Hassendean Parish. He was also recorded in the Land Tax Rolls for Hassendean Parish in 1663, when he paid tax on £156 (presumably for Burnhead itself). He was only son of William of Burnhead and Margaret Cairncross. In 1636 he married Marian, daughter of Ragwell Bennet of Chesters, and they had 2 daughters. In 1643 he secondly married Elizabeth, daughter of Hector Turnbull of Clarilaw (through this marriage probably acquiring the lands of Clarilaw). He was succeeded by William of Burnhead, and also had at least 3 other sons: Robert of Lees; Adam; and Alexander. Robert of Phaup (d.bef. 1671) father of Adam, who became a gunsmith’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1671. Other sons were probably Col. Francis and Capt. John, who were recorded in factor’s records for Sir William Scott of Harden in 1657 and 1671, respectively. Robert of Girnwood (b.c.1615) eldest son of Walter of Girnwood. He was still a minor when his father died, with his uncle Robert of Shielswood acting as tutor to him and his brother, Walter from 1629. He was served heir to his father in 1636, presumably when he reached majority. In 1640 he married Bessie, daughter of Sir Walter of Whitslade. Robert of Borthwickbrae (17th C.) recorded in a list of ‘communicants’ of the Borthwick valley in 1650. It appears that his wife was Margaret Scott and their sons William and Walter. In 1643 and 1644 he was appointed by Parliament to the Committee of War for Selkirkshire. He was probably the last Scott of Borthwickbrae. Robert of Tandlaw (17th C.) recorded in 1666 in a list of landowners in Hassendean Parish. In 1678 he paid the land tax in Hassendean Parish. He was listed in 1682 among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose. Probably the same Robert was on the list of Hassendean heritors accused of inciting the riot of 1690. There was a warrant for his arrest along with Adam (probably a relative) and Thomas Turnbull of Knowe. He was listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls (for Hassendean Parish). He was witness to the birth of a child of William in Goldielands in 1702, suggesting that they were closely related. Robert of Lees (17th C.) 2nd son of Robert, tenant in Burnhead and Elizabeth Turnbull. He appears to have been Laird of the lands that were later referred to as ‘West Lees’, near AppleTreehall. He probably also held the lands of Clarilaw and was succeeded by Walter of Clarilaw, who was likely to be either his son or nephew. He was among the heritors accused of inciting the 1690 riot when the roof of Hassendean Kirk was removed to Roberton. Robert of Glack (17th C.) possibly son of the youngest sister of the last Walter Scott of Goldielands (although Keith Scott suggests he was married to a daughter of the first Sir Walter of Goldielands, but this seems at least a generation too early). He is recorded in a Hassendean Parish record of 1666, where he was one of those supporting suppression of the Parish. Probably the same individual is recorded as a heritor of Hawick Parish in 1643 (where he is described as ‘of Cloak’, with land valued at £100, which was almost certainly Fenwick) and of Wilton Parish in 1643 (described as ‘of Lack’, with land valued at £130) and 1649 (described as ‘of Clak’); this suggests the possibility that he may be related to James ‘of Park’ (with a transcription error), recorded around the same time. This was the estate in Peeblesshire, although he also owned the lands of Fenwick and Highchesters, and may have lived locally. Scott of Satchells lists him as one of the ‘Pensioners to the House of Buckcleugh’ and says he was given the lands of Fenwick for his service. In 1654 he transferred the lands of Fenwick, Highchesters and half of Ladyurd to Robert Scott of Harwood, but had them back 2 years later, as confirmed by the Duke and Duchess of Buckleuch in a charter of 1668. He also paid £100 in land tax in Hawick Parish in 1663, and also in 1678 (perhaps for Fenwick), plus the land tax on lands valued at £130 in Wilton Parish (where he is recorded being ‘of Clack’, the lands probably being East Highchesters). He is easy to confuse with Robert, son of Robert of Harwood, who acquired Falnash and other lands. He also appears to have inherited part of the Goldielands estates and passed them to Walter Scott of Crumhaugh in 1674. He may be the Robert ‘in Glack’ whose widow Jean Brown married Malcolm Inglis of Manorhead in 1666. Lieut.-Col. Robert (17th C.) son of Walter, portioner of Guilan, and grandson of Sir Robert of Haining. He was the last member of the Scotts of Haining of whom there is any record. Robert of Harwood (d. bef. 1667) son of Walter ‘in Braidhaugh’, (i.e. Broadhaugh) who was Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for upper Teviotdale and the Langholm area. The precise kinship with the Scotts of Buccleuch is uncertain. He is ‘in Braidehaw’ in 1638 when he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick. He may be the Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch who was at Raesknowe in 1640–44. He may be the Robert of Falnash listed as the 3rd largest landowner in the 1643 valuation of Hawick Parish (with lands valued at £1400). He is described as ‘in Braidhauch’ in 1644–50 when he acted as Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch for the upper Teviot valley, like his father before him. He was also ‘in Braid Hauche’ in 1646, 1648 and 1649 when he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire. In 1651 he is ‘callit of Braidhauch’ and described as eldest lawful son of Walter of Arkelton in the will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch, when he was granted 800 merks yearly for his lifetime. By 1652 he was referred to as ‘in Braidhauch, now of Harwode’, and he was still Chamberlain in 1660. He is the Robert ‘of Harwoode’ who acted as Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch for Ettrick, St. Mary’s and Selkirk in 1657–60. A bond at the end of 1653 transfers the lands of Fenwick, Highchesters and half of Ladyurd (in Peeblesshire) to him from Robert Scott of Glack (who may have been a relative). But the lands were returned in 1656, as confirmed by the Duke and Duchess of Buckleuch in a charter of 1668. He witnessed charters for lands in Dalkeith for the Duchess of Buckleuch in 1656 and 1658. In 1661 he was listed as still owing £4600 to the Duchess of Buckleuch for rentals in Teviotdale. In 1662, after the Restoration, he was fined £300. In 1663 he is recorded as ‘liferenter of the lands of Dalcove’ when he renounced the burial place in the choir of the old kirk of Mertoun to Sir William Scott of Harden. And in 1663 he was involved in a libel action with Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. Also in 1663 he witnessed the marriage contract of Anne, Duchess of Buckleuch, and was listed there as one of her curators. Furthermore, he is probably the ‘Braidhaugh for Harrot’ who is recorded on the Land Tax Rolls in 1663, paying £866 13s 4d. He married Beatrice (or Beatrix) Gledstains, from the family of Gledstains of that Ilk. Their children included: Walter (b.1640), who succeeded by 1672; Robert, who became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1662; Francis (b.1642) of Greenhill; John (b.1644), who probably die young; David (b.1646); William (b.1649), who became an apothecary’s apprentice in 1667, and was probably the same as the surgeon in Hawick in the late 17th century; Gideon of Fahnash (b.1651), ‘Auld Fahnash’, Chamberlain to the Duchess of Buccleuch; John (again, b.1652); and Agnes, who married John Scott of Woll. It is possible that Andrew (b.1656), whose mother’s name is given as ‘Bessie’ Gledstains, was also his son. Robert of Whitslade (17th C.) local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s. He married Jean Hay in Edinburgh in 1681. He may have been the oldest son of Thomas, or his younger brother. Robert (17th C.) fined £100 Scots in 1688 for leaving the town when the militia was in Hawick charging young men ‘for throwing of dyce and drawing of balotes’. He clearly did not want to serve! He may be the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert of Bonnington (17th C.) son of John of Bonnington. He was in possession of the lands in 1670. He had a son John. He was succeeded by James, who was either his brother or son. Robert (17th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. His brother Walter was a merchant, who in 1673 was accused of striking him, apparently the result of a misunderstanding involving Thomas Brown and Robert Dickson. He is probably ‘Robert Scott, laird, shoemaker’ listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4; the ‘laird’ suggests he might have been related to Thomas and James, who had the same nickname. He is probably the cordiner of the same name listed ‘nest the water’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1679 George Hall was fined for ‘ane blood’ on his, and ordered to pay him 5 shillings Scots per day, since ‘his arms was swollen by the stockies, and he could not shear’. He was presumably a farm worker of some sort. Robert (d.c.1685) tenant in ‘Newtoune’ in 1685 when his will was recorded. He was probably one of the Roberts of Newton near Hawick. Robert of Fahnash (17th C.) younger son of Robert of Harwood and Beatrice Gledstains. He acquired the lands of Fahnash and others from Robert of Glack (with whom he is therefore easily confused). In 1689 (confirmed in 1694) he is recorded transferring his lands of Fenwick, Easter Highchesters, half of ‘Ladyurd’ in Kirkurd and Nether Glack in Manor (the latter 2 in Peebleshire) to Gideon Scott of Outsise (later ‘Auld Fahnash’), who was his brother. This appears to have been because he had no heirs, and was with the agreement of his wife Mary Elliot. Robert (17th C.) shoemaker on the east side of Hawick. He is a ‘cordiner’ listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. Probably the same ‘cordiner’ is listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Robert (17th C.) wright in Hawick listed among those contributing to funds for the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. It is unclear if he was the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert (17th C.) thatcher in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. He may be the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (17th C.) described as ‘sometime saddler in Fanesh’ (i.e. Fahnash) in 1684 when he was on the long list of men declared as fugitives for refusing to yield to Episcopalianism. Robert (17th C.) recorded as ‘flesher’ in 1693 when he gave evidence to the Magistrates in a case of disorder within the Kirk. He was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was listed as flesher in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax. Robert of Broadmeadows (d.1694) son of William, and grandson of William of Tushielaw. He married Agnes, daughter of Hugh Kelso. He died without issue and in 1694 his sisters Isabella (who married John Balfour of Kailzie) and Jean (who married advocate John Murray) inherited his lands. Through Isabella’s son, Charles Balfour the lands passed to a granddaughter, Jean Balfour, who married William Scott of Woll. His testament is recorded in 1694. Robert (17th C.) Chamberlain to the Laird of Highchester, recorded in 1694 in a sasine for lands in Minto. In 1697 he is recorded as ‘late chamberlain to Heychesters’. He was probably the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert (17th C.) resident in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Robert (17th C.) resident of Castleside in Ashkirk Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He was distinct from Robert in Ashkirk. Robert (17th C.) resident of Broadhaugh on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert (17th C.) renter of a quarter of the lands of Borthaugh in 1691 and 1692 and was ‘Scriver’ in 1694 when he continued to rent Borthaugh. He continued to rent 1/4 of Borthaugh in 1696 and 1698, and was still described as ‘Scriven’. He was also recorded as a ‘Scraver’ at Borthaugh on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Wilton Parish. He was presumably a lawyer, and may have been son of the James, who previously rented part of Borthaugh and was also designated ‘Scrivener’. Robert (17th C.) tenant at Potterlampert according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th C.) listed as a carrier on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. Two separate carriers of the same name are listed on the tax rolls. One of them is listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Robert ‘Pope’ (17th C.) merchant in Hawick listed among those contributing to funds for the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. It is unclear what his nickname might mean. He is probably the merchant on the east-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. Robert (17th C.) candlemaker listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is listed separately from the merchant called ‘Pope’, but may be the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He was called ‘Ormiston’, to distinguish him from other Roberts; however, it is unclear if he was related to James of Ormiston. Robert (17th C.) resident at Whitchesters according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be related to John and Walter, who were also listed there. Robert (17th C.) leased half the farm of Newbigging from the Duchess of Buccleuch in at least the period 1690–98. He was also resident at Newbigging in Hawick Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was presumably separate from the 2 Robert Scotts (father and son) who leased Over Southfield at the same time. He was still tenant of Newbigging in about 1710, as attested in evidence given regarding the state of Hawick’s Common in 1767. Robert (17th C.) resident at Over Southfield in 1694, according to the Hearth Tax rolls. In the period 1690–98 half of the farm of Over Southfield was rented jointly to ‘Rot. Scott father and sone’; so there were 2 generations called Robert at that time. In 1694 there was a connection made between the rental of Over Southfield and Allanhaugh Mill. Robert (17th C.) listed at Todshawhill among ‘The poor in Hawick Paroch’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th C.) tenant in Drinkstone. He is probably the Robert ‘of ... stoun’ recorded in 1643 as owner of lands in Hassendean Parish valued at £66 13s 4d. He is Robert ‘of Drinkstowne’ in the Land Tax Rolls for 1663 when paid tax on £66 13s 4d. Probably the same Robert is recorded at Drinkstone on the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He is probably the Robert in Drinkstone whose wife Bessie’s will is recorded in 1682; they may have married in Ashkirk Parish in 1640, with children including William (b.1649), James (b.1651), Francis (b.1653), Margaret (b.1660). Robert (17th C.) carrier in Hawick Parish. He married Janet Boyd and their children included: Margaret (b.1686); and Robert (b.1687). Robert’s baptism was witnessed by John, who may have been a relative. He could be the same as Robert the carrier in Branxholme Town who was recorded 30 years later. Robert (17th C.) resident at Alton on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hassendean Parish. It is unclear whether he was related to the Scotts of Alton. Robert (17th C.) resident at Burnhead on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to the William who was also listed as a householder there. Given the coincidence of the names, they may have both been related to the contemporary and previous Lairds of Burnhead. Robert (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when he was at Horsleyhill. Robert (17th C.) rented 1/3 of the farm of Wiltonburn from the Duchess of Buccleuch in at least the period 1694–98. He may have been closely related to John or Bessie (widow of James Riddell), who were also renting part of Wiltonburn in 1694, and to another Riddell, widow of Thomas Mitchelson, who was renting part of the farm in 1696. His cautioner in 1698 was Robert Miller. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert of Hassendean (17th/18th C.) son of Adam. He is recorded in 1690 as one of the heritors accused of inciting the riot at the de-roofing of Hassendean Kirk and being arrested (along with Adam Scott and Thomas Turnbull of Knowe). He was served heir to his father Adam in 1695. In 1696 and 1704 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. He sold the lands of Hassendean to Anne Duchess of Buccleuch in the period 1679–1710. Robert ‘younger of Hassendean’ brought an action against Rev. Francis Scott, following his removal by the Privy Council, and this was probably his son. However, this next Robert does not appear to have succeeded, and so he himself was the last Scott of Hassendean. He may be the Robert ‘elder of Hassendean’ whose son Robert is recorded in a deed of 1682. The pair may be the ‘Hassenden Elder’ and ‘Hassenden yonger’ each paying for 2 hearths ‘in the netherend’ of Hassendean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert of Harden (d.1710) son of William, succeeding from his brother Sir William in 1707. He was previously ‘of Iliston’ (or ‘Elistoun’, near Melrose), which he had inherited in 1686. He lived in Edinburgh before gaining the Harden titles. In 1709 he sold half of Kershope to William Kerr of Chatto. He married Jean, daughter of Sir Thomas Ker of Fernilee. However, he (like his brother) died without issue and was succeeded by his cousin Walter (actually first cousin, twice removed), son of Sir Gideon of Highchester. Robert (17th/18th C.) tenant in Blackcleuch near Teviothead. In 1705 he witnessed a baptism for John in Blackcleuch (also called ‘Uncle John’), who may have been his son; the other witness was John in Falnash. Rev. Robert (1673/4–1727) brother of William, Laird of Whitehaugh, he graduated from Edinburgh University in 1693 and was licensed to preach by Selkirk Presbytery in 1698. He was called to Roberton Parish in late 1699 and became minister there in 1700, remaining until his death. Because of the ruinous state of the Manse he and his family stayed in Hawick for most of that time; a record of 1715 refers to him and his family being forced to return to Hawick. The oldest existing Roberton communion token dates from 1705, during his incumbency. It is said that in 1703 he was one of the local ministers who walked out of the Synod meeting at Duns, in sympathy with the objections of Hawick’s minister Alexander Orrock. He married Janet Scott in Hawick, and their children were Walter, Elizabeth (or Bessie) and Marion. He published ‘Twelve Sermons preached before and after the celebration of the Lord’s Supper’ (1729). He is buried at Roberton and a memorial tablet was built into the churchyard wall, erected by his brother William. Robert (17th/18th C.) son of Bailie James. In 1708 he caused a disturbance in St. Mary’s by trying to take seat in the ‘Steeple Loft’ which had been his deceased father’s, although the Council had just decreed that these front seats were reserved for the present Bailies. Along with Walter Purdom (son of another deceased Bailie) he spent 24 hours in jail. It is unclear whether he is the same as one of the other contemporary men named Robert. Robert (17th/18th C.) married Isabell Hobkirk in Hawick in 1710. Perhaps the same Isabell Hobkirk married Robert Gledstains in Hawick in 1714. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident in ‘Mosbrae’ in 1717 when his son Andrew was baptised in Roberton Parish. Robert (d.c.1725) resident in Branxholme Town in 1717 when his son Francis was baptised in Roberton Parish. He was recorded being in arrears for rent on part of Branxholme Town in 1711–20 (and may be related to the William, who was also on the same farm at that time). He was recorded in 1714 as a carrier at Branxholme Town, when there was a promise that he pay some of what he owed for the lease. He was mentioned as a carrier at Branxholme Town in 1714 when he and James (smith in the same place) witnessed a baptism for the Scoons at Commonside. He was still mentioned in the rental records for Branxholme Town in 1725, but deceased in 1726, when James Sanderson took over his part of the farm. He could be the Robert recorded as a householder at Branxholme Park on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident at Nether Tofts. In 1718 his son Simon was baptised in Kirkton Parish. Probably the same Robert was in Effedge in 1720 when his son John was baptised. Robert (17th/18th C.) farmer at Skelfhill. He is listed as tenant there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. In 1723 he is recorded in the Hawick Session records giving in ‘400 merks of ye poors money’. It is possible he is the ‘Old Hobby in Skelfhill’ who wrote a version of ‘The Braes of Branxholme’ and of who several other stories are told by William Scott, teacher in Burnmouth (see Auld Hobbie o Skelfhill). He is probably the Robert in Skelfhill whose son John was married in Hawick in 1700. He may be the ‘Auld Hobbie Scott in Skelfhill’ who was grandfather of Robert Scott in Skelfhill who described him in 1809; he was said to have married a daughter of John Elliot, farmer in Southfield. Robert (17th/18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Margaret Martin in 1722. Their children included: Margaret (b.1723); and Helen (b.1725). The 1725 baptism was witnessed by Walter Nixon and John Scott ‘in Hawick’. Dr. Robert (d.c.1757) surgeon in Hawick, possibly the last of the Scotts of Whitslade. Dr. Thomas Somerville’s ‘My Own Life and Times’ describes him as ‘the only surviving representative of the ancient family of Whitslade. He appears to have been brother of Walter, and also of John, who sold Whitslade. He was probably the 4th son of Thomas (d.c.1698), and was said to have greatly outlived his 6 brothers. It was also said that he was 14th in descent from the Lord of Buccleuch. In his old age he became quite poor, being described as ‘a gentlemanlike person in ruin, tall, meagre – the countenance of hunger and despondency’, and is said to have survived through occasional donations of distant relatives. He was also helped by Hawick’s minister Rev. William Somerville, perhaps inspired by the assistance the Scotts of Whitslade had given to Somerville’s father, Rev. Thomas S. Somerville, when he was ousted as minister of Cavers during the Revolution and settled in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1745, for skinner John Currer. Perhaps a different Dr. Robert (or the same, but with confused details) is described as being the 4th son of William of Raeburn, and 14th in descent from Buccleuch; this Robert married Mary Flemming and their son Robert may have been a surgeon in Musselburgh, who married Elizabeth Chalmers, and whose daughter Helen apparently helped Sir Walter with the plot of Ivanhoe. He is recorded as ‘Mr. Robert Scott Whitslade Surgeon in Hawick’ when he witnessed a baptism in 1753 for a daughter of John Gledstains of Whitlaw. This suggests that he continued to be an Episcopalian throughout his life.

Robert (17th/18th C.) resident of Branxholme. He married Agnes Elliot and their son Patrick was baptised in 1728. The witnesses were Walter in ‘New… and John in ‘Ever…’. Robert of Falnash (d.1734) eldest son of Gideon (‘Auld Falnash’) and Mary Scott of Thirlestane. He is presumably the ‘Robert Scott, merchant, called of Falnash’, who was unanimously elected to be Cornet in 1722 (this presumably being shortly before he was married). He was Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for Teviotdalehead 1721–27. He was mentioned as the Baron’s representative on Hawick Parish Session from 1722, and in 1723 ceased to be an Elder of Cavers to become a member of Hawick Parish Session ‘in consideration of having his chief interest and business in this parish’. He witnessed a baptism for John Ekron in 1725. He may also have witnessed a baptism in Hawick for Gideon Elliot of Harwood in 1728. He was in charge of transferring the tenancy of Whitchesters to William Ogilvie in 1731. He married Violet, daughter of Thomas Rutherford of Edgerston and Susanna Riddell of Minto. Their children were: Susanna (probably baptised in Cavers Parish in 1723), who married Thomas Turnbull of Knowe in Minto Parish in 1755; Gideon (probably baptised in Cavers Parish in 1724), who succeeded; Thomas (probably baptised in Cavers Parish in 1726), who sold Falnash to the Duke of Buccleuch in 1759, and may have been a minister of the Relief Kirk; Robert of Orchard (1731–1813), baptised in Hawick Parish; and James (1733–1818), baptised in Wilton Parish, who became minister of Perth in 1735 his wife, Lady Falnash, sold her property in Hawick to Patrick Hardie, described as ‘High and Leigh, back and fore, with appurtenances, trees and lime pit, in yard called the Howegate and bounded by properties of William Lang later James Scott on east, Robert Hardy and William Leiden on west and Kings hiestreet on south’. It is unclear where his young family was raised after his death. Robert (c.1660–1752) son of Thomas of Todrig and Janet Pringle. He served for a long time in the army, being involved with the artillery in the royal army at the Battle of Sheriffmoor in 1715. He was said to be ‘a man of great simplicity of manners, and of great integrity and honour’. He was probably the Robert, ‘brother to Todrige’, whose heirs are listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose in 1682. In 1696 he leased Borthwickshiels and Roberton from Gideon Scott of Highchester. He was a witness in 1700 to the marriage contract of his niece Jean Scott (with William Elliot of Harwood); she was daughter of his brother, Walter of Todrig. He died at the garrison in Edinburgh Castle at the age of about 92. Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded as ‘wyndhead’ when his son Robert was born in Hawick in 1701. He presumably lived at the head of the Wynd, which was probably what became Walter’s Wynd. It is therefore possible that he was one of the Scotts of Horsleyhill. He married Margaret Crozier. Their other children included another Robert (b.1710) and Marjorie (b.1718). He was probably related to John ‘Wyndhead’, who died before 1712. Robert (17th/18th C.) son of Walter, he was tenant in Goldielands. He was thus recorded in 1702, when his son Robert was born; this was probably the same as the Robert recorded at Goldielands a few decades later. He married Mary Scott in 1701, with his father given there as Walter; from the similarity of names, it seems likely he is descended from the Scotts of Goldielands and Crumhaugh. Robert (18th C.) servant to Rev. William Somerville in Hawick. He witnessed a baptism for shepherd Andrew Brown in 1740. Robert of Coldhouse (d.1772) father of Robert, minister of Innerleithen and grandfather of Alexander, friend of Lord Byron. He is probably a descendant of the earlier Robert of Howford and Coldhouse. He is probably the Laird recorded in Hawick in 1739 when the bells were rung for ‘Coldehouses wife’s burell’. His death at Tandlaw is recorded in the Scots Magazine, and he was said to be ‘aged 90 and upwards’. Robert (1688–1768) 3rd son of William in Milsington. He became tenant at Singlie in about 1712. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Henry Elliot of Lodgegill. Their children included: William, who succeeded as tenant; Henry, who farmed at Over Deloraine; Margaret, who married William Scott, farmer at Kirkhope; and Elizabeth.

Robert of Gorrenberry (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1724 when his daughter Margaret married John Elliot of Whitehaugh. He must have been related to the earlier John of Gorrenberry, or perhaps to the Alton branch. However, it is possible that ‘Robert’ is an error for another Scott of Gorrenberry. Robert of Harwood (d.bef. 1744) son of Walter of Harwood and Christian Ker. He may have been the ‘Harwood’ recorded in 1721 paying money to the town for ringing the bells at the burial of his child. It is said that the family fortunes were lost through the extravagance of his mother. He sold Harwood to Henry, Duke of Buccleuch (or perhaps confirmed the earlier sale of his father) in about 1738. His widow Elizabeth Mason is recorded leasing the farms of Skelfhill and Fairnyside from the Buccleuch Estates in 1744. This is confirmed to her eldest son Robert, said to be under age in 1744; that document also states that the Duke’s tenants shall keep the privilege of casting peats. It is possible that Robert, recorded later as tenant in Skelfhill was this same son. His 5th son James eventually became farmer at Skelfhill. It is unclear whether the ‘Robert Scott of Harrot’ recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761 was his son (or an error). Robert ‘Rob’ (17th/18th C.) recorded in the Parish Records of the early 1700s setting up seats and making a ‘footgang’ at Hawick Kirk. He was thus presumably a joiner. Robert of Davington (c.1682–1764) 2nd son of Francis of Davington, and descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane. He succeeded after the death of his father in 1706 and his older brother John about 1710. Sir Francis of Thirlestane had him and his widowed mother thrown off their farm at Cassock. About 1727 he (and his brothers Francis and William) started a legal battle to recover the estates lost by his great-grandfather during the Civil War (based on a document made out by his grandfather Sir John of Thirlestane in Hawick in 1641). This ended in 1744 and he renounced all rights to the lands to his brother Francis in 1747. He was known as ‘Robert the Laird’. He married Mary McAlpine. Their children included: James, who succeeded, and had an only son James, who died without issue; John, attorney in Canonbie, who had several children, but also failed in the male line; and William of Meikledale. Robert (1691/2–1763) agricultural labourer in southern Liddesdale and northern England. He married Christian Turnbull, who died in 1750, aged 55. Their children included: Margaret (d.1771), who died at Longcleuchside; and James (1726/7–1801), who died at Pyke. He died at Blacklin and they are buried at Ettleton. Robert (1698–1771) son of Walter of Woll and Eliza, daughter of Robert Scott of Horsleyhill. He moved to TAMM yno mo re in County Londonderry and was progenitor of a line of Scotts in Ulster, including proprietors of W. & C. Scott, millmen in Omagh. The family history is described in ‘The Stones that Ground the Corn, The Story of an Irish County Grain Mill, 1850–2000’, by Tony Deeson et al. Robert (1699–1775) son of Walter ‘Beardie’ and grandfather of Sir Walter of Abbotsford. He received a lease of Sandyknowe from Scott of Harden. He paid the window tax there in the 1750s. He married Barbara Haliburton in 1728 and their children were: Walter (b.1729) W.S., father of the author; Thomas (b.1731), who married Anne Scott of Raeburn and secondly Jean Rutherford of Knowesouth; Janet (1733–1805), who lived in Kelso and died unmarried; Mary (b.1735), also died unmarried; Jean (b.1737) married her relative Walter Scott of Raeburn; Robert (b.1739), who lived at Rosebank, Kelso; Barbara (b.1742), who married Mr. Currie; and John (b.1749), who died young on H.M.S. Southampton. Robert of Fenwick (18th C.), called ‘Clack’. Son of Francis of Fenwick, he married Jean Scott and later Katherine Elliot of Arkleton. He may be the Robert of Clack who was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690 (although this could have been the earlier Robert of Glack, who also owned Fenwick). In about 1710 he and several tenants neighbouring Hawick Common formed themselves into a club and ‘drunk the Magistrates of Hawick, and got liberty from the Magistrates to rest their beets on the Common from nine in the morning to twelve mid-day’ (according to evidence given on the state of the Common in 1767). He is probably the ‘Laird of Fenick’ who paid Hawick £9 for a year’s rent of the weight-house in 1729 (suggesting he was the Baron’s Bailie for the Town). His son was Gavin. The bells of St. Mary’s were rung in 1732 for ‘Lady Glask’s burial’, which was probably his wife. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1726 he married Helen Dickson from Roberton Parish, the marriage taking place at Commonside. It is possible he was the tenant in Thornyhaugh who witnessed a baptism in 1738; the other witness was Walter at Commonside, raising the possibility that there was a relationship between them. It is possible he was the son of Walter in Crumhaugh and Christian Bennet, born in 1704, who is said to have been a tenant in Crumhaugh who died without issue. Robert Robert (18th C.) resident at Highchesters in 1743 when Walter (b.1732) and James (b.1734), born in Wilton, were probably also their children. Col. Robert of Horsleyhill (b.1704) son of Francis, descendant of the Scotts of Midgehope and Tushielaw. He was also referred to as ‘Captain’. His family had extensive lands in Weensland and a town-house at the top of Walter’s Wynd. In 1734 he was made an Honorary Burgess, the first one on record. In 1742 he registered arms at the Lyon Office. He also owned lands elsewhere, and was a heritor of Morebattle Parish. In 1744 he was involved in a dispute with Andrew Chatto, minister of Morebattle and Mow over teinds. He was Hawick Bailie for 4 years until about 1758 (and easy to confuse with the merchant of the same name who was a Bailie at a similar time). He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was one of the defenders in the action of 1767 brought by the Duke of Buccleuch against the Bailies of Hawick and the neighbouring landowners regarding the division of the Common. He was also one of the witnesses in the Division of the Common proceedings. He is probably the ‘Captain Scott of Weensland’ described in 1777, among those who gained part of the Common (his allocation being included as part of that of Thomas Turnbull of Fenwick). He may be the Robert Scott whose former lands in Weensland are recorded in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls as belonging to James Dickson and passing to auctioneer James Oliver by the mid-19th century. In 1746 in Edinburgh he married Agnes Douglas of Springbank, daughter of George Douglas of Friarshaw. He was succeeded by their son John. Robert (b.1704) youngest son of Walter and Christian Bennet. His father was uncle to Walter Scott of Crumhaugh, and had been described as sometimes tenant of Crumhaugh. In 1743 he received sasine of the lands of ‘Croftangry’ in Hawick, as heir to his half-brother Walter. He was also described as tenant in Crumhaugh himself. Also in 1743 he gained a tenement of land and onstead of houses in Hawick which had been ‘deponed’ by his brother Walter in 1730; this may have been the same or different lands. He was then described as ‘multurer’. He probably died without children. Robert (18th C.) baker in Hawick. He was recorded as a ‘baxter’ in 1743 when he witnessed a baptism for workman Robert Corzier. He may have been father of the later Robert Scott who was also a baker. Robert (18th C.) resident at Highchesters in 1743 when his son daughter Mary was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1743. Robert (18th C.) recorded in 1745 being ‘at Goldielands’ when his daughter Beatrix was born, with his servant Walter Scott being a witness. He married Agnes Rutherfurd and their children included: Marjorie (b.1733); Walter (b.1735); and John (b.1737). It is unclear whether he was directly connected to the former Scotts of Goldielands, but may have been son of the earlier Robert in Goldielands, born in 1702. Robert (18th C.) resident of Roberton in 1743 when his daughter Christian was baptised there. Robert of Burnhead (d.1755) eldest son of William, who he probably succeeded around 1720. His sister Eupham married Thomas Watson, who was Clerk to the Regality of Hawick, and Margaret (probably another sister), married Patrick Scott and secondly James Scott, surgeon in Hawick. He served as a Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch for Eskdale in the period 1728–43. He was mentioned in 1735 in the deposition where the widow of Robert Scott of Falnash sold her property on the Howegate to Patrick Hardie. He married Agnes, 2nd daughter of Gideon Scott of Falnash and Mary Scott of Thirlestane. His children were: William, who succeeded; Margaret, who married Rev. Samuel Charters of Wilton in 1786, and succeeded her brother; Walter; and Agnes. Robert of Hummelknowes (18th C.) recorded in 1753 when he paid the window tax in Cavers Parish. This was for 14 windows, as William (perhaps his father) had paid in 1748. His name is written ‘Robert Scott Esqr. Humbleknowes’, the ‘Esqr.’ suggesting he was a man of some status. It is possible there is a connection with the Scotts of Burnhead, who owned Hummelknowes in the 19th century. Bailie Robert (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He was Bailie in the 1750s and also recorded as Bailie in 1763. He was possibly the same merchant Robert who had been involved with the 1740 bond for the construction of the Teviot Bridge. He is probably the merchant Robert who was married to Betty, daughter of William Aitkin (or Aitken), and whose children included: William (b.1743); George (b.1745); and William (again, b.1747). The witnesses in 1745 were mason David Laing and merchant George Scott. He also witnessed a baptism in 1745 for miller James (who may have been a relative). Probably the same Bailie Robert witnessed a baptism in 1757 for miller Adam (who may have been related), along with merchant George. In 1767 it was described that his father-in-law, William Aitken, had liferent of a house in Hawick, for which he had the fee for his son William. It may have been a relative of his who was the Robert whose son Robert became a skinner’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1682. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1766, along with barber Francis, he witnessed a baptism for James Rae and Agnes Scott. His designation appears to be ‘Cross Keys’, suggesting he was proprietor of one of the inns of that name (perhaps the older one on the High Street). He was probably related to Francis and Agnes. Robert (d.bef. 1780) tenant of Skelfhill. He is recorded being at Skelfhill in 1766 when he witnessed a baptism for Robert Laidlaw of Fahnash. He is recorded as ‘late in Skelfhill’ in a notice to his creditors published in 1780; he had been declared bankrupt. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts associated with Skelfhill. However, it is possible he was son of Robert of Harwood (whose wife had a connection to Skelfhill). Robert (18th C.) recorded as resident of Whitchester in 1766. He was probably related to the earlier Robert, farmer in Whitchester. He married Margaret Turner in 1759 and their children included: Robert (b.1760); Walter (b.1762); and John (b.1766). Witnesses in 1766 were John Hobkirk and Robert Liddell. He may be the Robert recorded in 1771 when he paid the Hawick Council for 3000 divots (presumably from Hawick Common). Rev. Robert (1714–96) born at Coldhouse (in Wilton), son of Robert. He was licensed as a minister by the Presbytery of Selkirk in 1774 and became minister at Innerleithen in 1777. In 1788 (and continued in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls) he was recorded as owner of Coldhouse and Tandlaw, with a value of £80 together. In 1781 he married Margaret (or perhaps Agnes) Chisholme (d.1817), daughter of Thomas, the Selkirk surgeon. They had 8 children: Agnes (1782–1802); Thomas Chisholme (d.1811), who died in Bengal; William Chisholme (b.1785) who probably later owned Chisholme House; Charles James (1787–1807), who died at sea; Jean (b.1789); James Robert (b.1790); Robert (b.1791); and Alexander (b.1793), who was a friend of Lord Byron. It seems that Burns met him when he passed through Innerleithen on his Borders tour in 1787. Later in the 1800s his lands of Coldhouse and Tandlaw were owned by Mrs. Mary Ann Livingstone or Finlay, who was probably a descendant. Robert ‘Rob the Laird’ (18th C.) only son of James, who was a son of Francis of Davington, and direct descendant of the Scotts of Thirlestane. He farmed at Holm (near Eskdalemuir) and then at Binks. He took the daughters of James Scott of Davington (his cousin) to court in an attempt to gain the remaining family estates. In 1786 he was imprisoned in Dumfries Tolbooth for a month for illegally resuming possession of the farm of Davington. In 1792 he drafted a genealogy of his family. He had no known children. He is mentioned in notes to the Ettrick Shepherd’s poem ‘Thirlestane, a fragment’; it is stated that he was called ‘Rob the Laird’ because he would have been Laird, and also that he referred to the murderous Lady of Thirlestane as ‘the d—d b—h’. Robert (1721/2–1807) gardener at Wells. He was listed there in 1778 and 1779, when the estate was held by William Nassau Elliot. He was still there in 1785–88 when it was owned by Gilbert Elliot. By 1791 probably the same Robert was a gardener at Weens, working for William Oliver. In 1794 he was again recorded at Wells, working for Gilbert Elliot. He married Margaret Hope, and she died in 1786, aged 77. Their children included: Elizabeth (1748–1824), who married John Fiddes; and Margaret (1753/4–98). They are buried in Bedrule kirkyard. Robert (18th C.) grandson of Archibald Goodfellow, his mother marrying a Scott, and his brother being William ‘the Auld Mason’. He was shepherd at Merrylaw. His parents were probably Jean Goodfellow and shepherd John. Robert (18th C.) innkeeper in Hawick recorded supplying the refreshments to a meeting relating to Wilton Kirk in 1764. He is probably the same Robert where it is said that the local justices of the Peace would meet in the winter, when it was too cold in the Town House. Robert (1727/8–83) resident at Lanton. His son Thomas set up a memorial stone in Bedrule kirkyard to him and other members of the family. He married Jean, who died at Lantonhill in 1819, aged 86. He may be the ‘Capt. Scott’ whose lands in Lanton are recorded in the valuation rolls of the 18th century. Robert, who is recorded in 1788 as owner of the adjacent ‘part of James Henderson’s lands in Langtoun’ may have been his son. Robert (b.c.1730) younger son of Alexander, who was miller in Rulewater and later tenant at Roughheugh Mill. He took over from his father as tenant in Roughheugh Mill in Wilton. He was recorded there on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is recorded as owner of the ‘Cornmill of Roughheugh, acquired from Langlands’ according to the county valuation in 1788 and the Tax Rolls of 1811 (even although he may have been deceased by then). He appears to have married Ann Brown, and their children were: Alexander of Kinninghall (b.1778), who married Margaret Bell; Thomas of Little Cot, who married, but died without issue; Euphan (or Euphemia, b.1775), who married her cousin John, brother of Alexander of Falls; and Alice (or Alison, b.1782), who married Mr. Briggs of Middlewells. He may be the Robert who in 1770, along with Thomas, witnessed a baptism for clothier and dyer Thomas Turnbull, resident of Roughhewing. Robert of Orchard (1731–1813) younger son of Robert of Falnash. He was Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch in 1758–68 for ‘Teviotdalehead’, which included Hawick, Wilton, Cavers, Teviothead and Roberton. In 1765 he applied to the Town Council to be allowed to cut turf on Hawick Moor ‘for covering part of the office houses at Branksholm’, and was allowed to do so. However, in 1766 he is probably the Duke’s Chamberlain who led a group of his tenants and farm workers to try to put their sheep and cattle onto the small pieces of land that the Town had left on the Common (in a deliberate attempt to stop encroachment by neighbouring tenants); these confrontations came close to resulting in violence. In 1767 he represented the Duke of Buccleuch at the perambulation of Hawick Common made as part of the court case for its division. On the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls he is recorded as ‘Robert Scott Esqr.’ at Orchard Cottage, when he owned 3 farm horses as well as 1 saddle horse. Also in 1797 he was listed as being of ‘Cottage’, when he was taxed for male servants. He paid the land tax at Orchard in 1811. In Wilton in 1759 he married Elizabeth, daughter of Ballie Robert Howison of Orchard, and eventually became proprietor of Orchard himself (probably inheriting after the death of his nephew William Dickson in 1788). Their children were: Margaret (b.1761), who married Dr. Andrew Wilson from Kelso; Robert (b.1762), who probably died young; and Violet (b.1765), who married farmer William Bell, from whom was descended William Scott Bell of Woll. He died in Edinburgh, and is then described as ‘late of Orchard’. Robert (18th C.) carrier in Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Deans in 1752 and their children included: Isobel (b.1753); Jean (b.1756); John (b.1758); Walter (b.1760); and Agnes (b.1765). He may be the Hawick carrier listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Robert (18th C.) resident at ‘Broadlieshiel’ when his sons George, William and another George were baptised in Roberton Parish. His children included: George (b.1762); William (b.1763), Janet (b.1765), Charles (b.1767), James (b.1768) and Agnes (b.1769); and George (again, b.1771). Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Scott and their children included: Isabel (b.1764); Janet (b.1771); and Helen (b.1773). The witnesses in 1764 were John (probably a relative) and Alexander Bumyan. Robert (b.1757), Walter (b.1759) and Margaret (b.1762), baptised in Wilton Parish, could also be his children. Robert (18th C.) resident at Whithope in 1764 when his son William was baptised in Roberton Parish. Robert (18th C.) baker in Hawick. He was described as ‘junior, baker’ in 1769 when he was appointed to the commission to discuss the Common with representatives of the Duke of Buccleuch. He was thus probably a member of the Council. It seems likely that his father was also Robert. Robert (1735/6–1807) shepherd at Baldhill. His wife was Betty Park (d.1798) and their children included William and Betty. The family are buried at Teviothead. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1758 he married Christian Scott, this being recorded in Hawick and Hobkirk Parishes. Their children included: Jean (b.1758); Isabel (b.1761); William (b.1763); and Walter (b.1765). The witnesses in 1763 were William Paterson and ‘Mr’ Walter Scott (presumably a local landowner). Robert (18th C.) resident at West Parkhill in 1774 when his son Robert was baptised in Roberton Parish. Robert (18th/19th C.) 4th son of William, tenant in Milsington. He was a manufacturer in Hawick and died unmarried. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. In 1759 he married Margaret Turner and their children included Robert (b.1760), Walter (b.1762) and John (b.1766). His wife died in Wilton Parish in 1817. Robert (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He and Andrew (also a shoemaker) witnessed the indenture of apprenticeship of John Pringle to William Beck in 1794. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Roberts. Robert (1739–1804) 3rd son of Robert of Sandyknowe. He was uncle of Sir Walter the writer. He was Captain of vessel in the Merchant Navy and later purchased the small estate of Rosebank near Kelso. He is probably the bank agent at Kelso who was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788, with his being ‘a liferent vote from Baron Rutherfurd’. He died unmarried and was buried at Kelso Abbey. He left his estate to his nephew, Sir Walter, whose literary career he had long encouraged. Robert (18th C.) gardener at Cavers in 1785, when he was working for Capt.
John Douglas. Robert (18th C.) gardener and driver at Knowe in Minto Parish in 1785, when he was working for Thomas Turnbull. In 1786 he was listed as a ‘Chaise driver’. Robert (1758–1815) eldest son of James. He farmed at Skelfhill, like his father. His son James in turn became farmer there. He is probably the Robert in Skelfhill who made statements about his family history in 1809, e.g. that ‘Old Hobbie Scott in Skelfhill’ was his grandfather. Robert (d.bef. 1810) weaver in Hawick. His son Andrew died in 1810, when his cognomen appears to be given as ‘Killdrys’. He is surely related to Adam, who had essentially the same nickname. Robert (b.c.1760) agricultural labourer living at Dovemount in 1841. Margaret (b.c.1790) was also there, and probably his daughter. He may be the ‘R. Scott, Dovemount’ who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Whitfield in 1797, according to the Horse Tax Rolls. He owned 3 horses at that time. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at ‘Kerritrig’ (i.e. Carewoodrig) in Ewesdale in 1792–97 according to the Horse Tax Rolls. He also paid the dog and clock taxes in 1797. Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded as ‘Bundle’ when his grandchild died in 1805. He is probably the same as one of the other Roberts. Robert (b.1764/5) born in Wilton Parish, he lived at Dykeneuk. In 1841 he was an agricultural labourer living at Dykeneuk, along with Isabella (probably his sister) and William Ormiston. In 1851 he is listed as an unmarried retired farmer, living at Dykeneuk with a lodger, William Ormiston, and his niece Janet Ormiston. He may be the Robert listed at Drinkstone among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. Robert (b.c.1765) mason who lived at Hummelknowhaugh, recorded on the 1841 census. He could be the Hawick mason who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. Robert (18th/19th C.) owner of parts of Weensland according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He had purchased 2 parts from William Irvine and Adam Ormiston and (presumably the same Robert) had already sold part to Andrew Porteous. By about 1874 these parts were owned by manufacturer Walter Wilson and others. He is probably the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert (18th/19th C.) tenant at ‘Titus foord’, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. His farm was probably the same place also known as ‘Tythehousefield’. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Midlem Mill on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Liliesleaf Parish. Robert (1773–1844) eldest son of William, tenant of Singlie. He became tenant farmer at Todshawhaugh in 1800 (after the death of Walter Grieve of Branxholme Park). He was leasing ‘Helms’ (i.e. Whames) along with Todshawhaugh in 1802 and was listed being in arrears for Todshawhaugh in 1812. He was involved in a loan with the Jardines and Elliots of Harwood in 1823. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. He married Janet Jardine of Thorlieshope. Their children included: Christian (b.1804) who married James Dickson of Chatto and Housebyres in 1827; William (b.1806), who died young; Gideon (d.c.1835), farmer at Midlemoss, who married Barbara Armstrong; Margaret (b.1810); Janet (b.1813), who also died young; Janet (b.1814); and Agnes (b.1819). One of his daughters (possibly Jessie) married William Dove, who succeeded his father-in-law as tenant of Todshawhaugh. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Denholm Farm, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 4 horses. Note that the place he farmed was distinct from Denholm Hill and Denholm Mill farms. Robert (18th/19th C.) wright at the Sandbed. The deaths of his daughter Betty and son Walter are recorded in 1810. Robert (18th/19th C.) resident of Priesthaugh. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He was probably related to Walter, who farmed at Priesthaugh earlier and David who was there later. Robert (b.c.1783) agricultural labourer in Newcastleton, living at about 3 Langholm Street. His wife was probably Isabella, and children included Thomas, Robert, Elizabeth and Isabella. The family were working as carriers in 1851, when he was already deceased. However, he was still listed in Slater’s 1852 directory as a carrier, leaving Hawick for Newcastleton on Thursdays. Robert (18th/19th C.) recorded as ‘Ro. Scott’ at about 5 High Street on Wood’s 1824 map. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Roberts. Robert (18th/19th C.) writer (i.e. lawyer) of the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He is recorded at least as early as 1820. Probably the same Robert was listed as an accountant on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He could be the accountant listed in 1841, living on the High Street (probably No. 45) with farmer James, likely his brother; this Robert was 74 in 1861 and could be the son of William and Margaret Goodfellow born in Hawick in 1786. Robert (b.c.1780) mason in Hobkirk Parish. He was based at ‘Scaur Nook’ (near Langraw) in 1841. He is probably the mason of this name who was said to be one of the last residents of the hamlet of Unthank in Hobkirk Parish. Robert (b.1783/4) born in Hawick Parish, he was farmer at Kaimend. He married Isabella Scott in Kirkton Parish in 1807. Their children included: Mary (b.1808); Thomas (b.1810); Janet (b.1812); Archibald (b.1815); and Robert (b.1819). He was there from at least 1841, and in 1861 was farming 160 acres and employing 3 labourers. Robert ‘Robbie the Cow’ (b.1786/7) owner of a tenement at 43 High Street, living on the ground floor in the mid-19th century. The nickname was probably because he kept cows in the back of his house. His housekeeper (Barbara Anderson) was known as ‘Babbie the Cow’. In 1841 he was recorded as an accountant and living with farmer James (probably his older brother) and 2 servants, including ‘Barbary’. By 1851 he was there with only ‘Babbie’, when listed as ‘Accountant and occupier of 26 Acres of land’. By around 1860 the house was occupied by George Brown, green-grocer and was later rebuilt by Walter Paisley, ironmonger. He may be the Robert born in Hawick in 1786 to William and Margaret Goodfellow, with brothers George (b.1778), James (b.1782) and William (b.1791), as well as 2 earlier Roberts (who must have died young). He could be the grocer and meal dealer on the High Street recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Robert ‘Rob’ (1788–1872) born at Harden House, son of John and Helen Elsington. He joined the local militia when very young and enlisted in the 85th Regiment of Foot in 1809. He served in the Peninsula War under Sir Arthur Wellesley (later Duke of Wellington), seeing lots of action, and was sent to America in 1814, where he was said to be close by Gen. Ross when he fell at Baltimore. He himself was wounded at New Orleans and he was discharged in 1816, retiring as a Colour-Sergeant with a pension. He settled back in Hawick where he was landlord of the Red Lion Inn at the Sandbed (as recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory). He also worked as a stockmaker and was a noted supporter of the strikers during the ‘Lang Stand Oot’ of 1822. He could be the stock-maker recorded in Wilton Parish at Pathhead in 1835 and Roadside in 1840 and 1841. In 1841 he and his family were living at No. 5 Wilton Bank. He married Helen Oliver from Jedburgh. Their children were: Helen, who became Mrs. Greig; George; an unnamed child; John; Elizabeth; Gilbert; Robert (b.1827); Andrew; Agnes; Janet, who became Mrs. Dobson; Adam, who moved to Ballarat, Australia; and Mary. His son Adam erected a headstone in memory of him and his wife in Wilton Old Cemetery. Robert (b.1792/3) farmer at Castleside in Ashkirk Parish, originally from Castleton Parish. He may have been son of George and Margaret Murray. His wife was Helen, and he secondly married Anne S. In 1841 he was living at Castleside with his wife and mother Helen. Robert (1794/5–1860) son of William, who was a gentleman’s servant, and Margaret Gray, he was a labourer who lived at Stobs Woodfoot. He was unmarried and lived with his brother William and sister Nell (i.e. Helen). He was buried in Wilton cemetery. Robert (1795/6–1855) shepherd at Lodgelgill on the Tarras Water. He was listed there as an agricultural labourer in 1841. He married Margaret Scott, and she died in 1868. Their children included Margaret, Eliza, Jane, George and William. He died in Hawick. Robert (1796–1872) son of John and grandson of Robert. He was tenant farmer at East Boonraw; he was listed there on the 1841 census and still there in 1868. He married Agnes Margaret Scott, who died in 1831, following childbirth. Their children were: Janet or ‘Jeanette’ (b.1819), who married farmer Thomas Potts and lived near Hawick; Elizabeth (‘Betty’, b.1820), who married farmer Robert Miller; Margaret (1821–97), who married Gideon Harkness and emigrated to Owen Sound, Ontario; John (b.1823), who emigrated to America, but was murdered for his money by the couple he was lodging with in Wisconsin; Ellen (b.1825), who died unmarried after emigrating to stay with her brothers William and then Adam; Adam (b.1828), who married Elizabeth Anderson of the Burnfoot on Ale family and they emigrated to America, his son Thomas A. later returning to Hawick; and William (b.1830), who emigrated to settle at Pine Bluff, Wisconsin, where his brother John had been murdered, and he married Martha Rice. He later married Janet Douglas, who came from Jedburgh and died in 1888, aged 71. Their children were: Robert, who married Matha Craig and lived in Toronto; Douglas, who married Susan Ann Woodcraft from Buckinghamshire, emigrated to Canada in 1869 and worked as a contractor; Euphemia, who married farmer Walter Thompson; Agnes, who married Tom Graham from Edinburgh; Eliza, who married John Moffatt and emigrated to America; John, who married Margaret Richardson, who also emigrated to America; Walter, who lived in Manchester; George, who married Julia Frizel... and worked with his brother Douglas. Robert of Eweslees (b.1797/8) one of the founder members of the Wisp Club. He was born in Cavers Parish. He was farmer at Eweslees in 1841, in 1851 was employing 5 labourers there and by 1861 was farmer of 1700 acres, employing 2 shepherds. He was still there in 1868. His wife was Violet and their children included Barbara and Jane. Robert (b.1800/1) auctioneer and appraiser in Lilliesleaf, who also worked as a frameworker. He was on Back Road in the 1861 census. His wife was Elizabeth and their children included David, Wilhelmina K. and Elizabeth. Robert ‘Robbie’ (1800–1868) son of George of Calaburn. He was apprentice smith with Adam Legerwood at Forkins. He became a blacksmith, vet and farrier and also a local authority on cows and their diseases. He worked in Kirkton and then at Cauldmill after James Smith moved to Hawick). In 1820 he married Jessie (1799–1869), eldest daughter of Moses Renwick. In 1841 he was at Cauldmill with his wife and children Betty, Robert, Ann (or Mary Ann) and Jane. His children were: George (b.1820), Mary (b.1827), Jessy (b.1830); and Jane Grant (b.1840), who all died young; Violet (b.1822); Betty (b.1824), who became Mrs. Oliver and died in Canada; Robert ‘Young Robbie’ (b.1834), also a local vet; and Mary Ann (b.1837), who became Mrs. Fleming and died in Canada. He is buried in Cavers and Kirkton Parish Churchyard. Robert (b.1804/5) listed in 1861 as farmer of 10 acres, living at 1 Burnflat. His younger brother Gilbert (a woollen weaver) also lived there. Robert (b.c.1805) farmer at Todlaw, in Cavers Parish. He was from Jedburgh. In 1841 he was listed as a mason journeyman, but by 1851 was a farmer. He married Elizabeth Wilson. Their children included Margaret (1833–96, who married Denholm clothier Robert Turnbull), Jessie and Robert. Robert (19th C.) listed as a toy dealer on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Robert (b.1813/4) cabinet-maker on Buccleuch Street. His wife was Margaret (from Selkirk) and children included Susan, Robert, William, Thomas, Walter, Jane and Helen. He was probably related to Thomas and Robert Scott, recorded as wheelwrights on Buccleuch Street on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. It seems likely he was son of Thomas, joiner at the Sandbed on the 1841 directory, and brother of Thomas and Walter, who were also trainee joiners there. He may be the ‘Robert, jun.’ listed as a joiner on Ladylaw Place in Slater’s 1852 directory. By 1861 he was living at 52 Loan. Robert of Kinninghall (1817–97) son of Alexander, who farmed at Kinninghall. He was grandson of the tenant of Roughheugh Mill. He farmed at Little Cote and Kinninghall in Cavers Parish. He was at Kinninghall in 1851, when he was farmer of 200 acres, employing 7 men and in 1861 he was recorded employing 20 people there. In the 1860s he was farmer of Little Cote and also Kinninghall together. He may have later also farmed at Falnash. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1863. In 1845 in Hawick he married Mary Scott Purdom (b.c.1824), daughter of Robert Purdom, Hawick. Cornet and Bailie; she was sister of Thomas Purdom, Town Clerk. Their children included: Mary (b.1845); Margaret Bell (b.1847); Alexander, who died young; Alexander (again, b.1851) of Kinninghall and later Venchen, Yetholm; Robert Purdom (b.1853), who married Kate Worth; Agnes P. (b.1855), who married Alexander Nichol; William (b.1857); Walter Purdom (b.1859), tenant in Falnash; Thomas (b.1861), who married Ada M. Fox; and Ann Isabella (or ‘Annie’, b.1864). Robert (b.c.1820) grocer and spirit dealer at about 9 Howegate, recorded in 1841. Robert ‘Young Robbie’ (1834–1902) son of ‘Robbie’. He was a blacksmith and qualified veterinary surgeon, living at Cauldmill, with a practice in the Rule valley and around Hawick. He specialised in cows, like his father. He was remembered ‘as a man of few words, but of good judgement’. A story is told of how he was frustrated at a visiting couple, fawning over their newborn son, and when they said ‘What a fine heid of hair he has’ replied ‘Hair, he’s nae mair hair than a haggis’. He married Catherine Anne Little, daughter of William, farmer at Birneyknowe and Salen-side. Their children were: Robert (b.1867), who also became a local vet; William Little (b.1868), farmer at Langrigg; Janet Thorburn (1870–1951); George (b.1871), who worked at Birmingham and Midland Pharmaceutical College; Andrew Little (1873–92); Catherine (or Kate, 1874/5–91); and James (1883/4–1938). Robert ‘Robbie Scare a Hair’ (b.c.1848) son of grocer Thomas (‘Sly Tammie’) he was an auctioneer in Hawick. He apparently used to attend social evenings in David Shiel’s public house on Baker Street, along with almost a dozen other Robert Scotts, all of whom had distinguishing nicknames! Robert ‘Rob o the Bent’ (19th C.) one of the men of the same name who regularly gathered in a Baker Street howf in the mid-19th century. Robert ‘Kettle Robbie’ (19th C.) another of the men of the same name who gathered in a Baker Street pub in the mid-1800s. Robert ‘Robbie Barrel’ (19th C.) another of the Robert Scotts who went to the same inn in the mid-1800s. He may be the Robert listed along with Thomas as wheelwrights on Buccleuch Street, according to Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Robert ‘Scklkr Rob’ (19th C.) one more of the men of the same name who frequented the same pub in the mid-1800s. Robert ‘De-nmm Rob’ (19th C.) another of the Robert Scotts who went to the same Baker Street pub in the mid-19th century. It is possible he is the Robert recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as a ‘heckler’ in Denholm. Robert ‘Hensmeat’ (19th C.) one more of the men of the same name who frequented David Shiel’s inn on Baker Street in the mid-1800s. He was brother of James, Governor of Hawick Poorhouse. On one occasion he is supposed to have been chairing the evening and said ‘Rob Scare a Hair will gie us a song’ when one of the other Robert Scotts appeared, to which the reply was ‘Aw’ve nae objection, but if ‘ee wull ca’ me ‘Scare a Hair’ aw’ll ca’ you by your name ‘Hensmeat’’ [JHH], from which we can assume the name was somewhat insulting. Robert (b.1827/8) carter in Newcastle, son of Robert. In 1852 he is recorded running a cart to Carlisle once a week. In 1851 he was living with his mother Isabella and siblings Thomas, Elizabeth and Isabella at about 3 Langholm Street. His was described as a ‘Feuar’s Son’ there in 1861. Robert (19th/20th C.) son of Robbie, he was a local vet, like his father and grandfather before him. He lived at Oliver Crescent. His children included: Robert, who was killed at Ypres on his 20th birthday; and Charles, the 4th generation vet. Robert V. (20th C.) Cornet in 1947. During WWII he saw service in France and was captured by the Japanese, spending several months working on the notorious ‘death railway’ in Siam. He was later on a transport ship that was sunk by U.S. bombers, and although he swam ashore, he was recaptured by the Japanese. Robin (13th C.) listed as ‘Robinus Scot de Hedon’ on the 1269 assize roll of Northumberland. It is unclear where his lands may have been or whether he was related to the later Scottish Scotts. Roger (13th C.) recorded as ‘Rogerum Scot’ on the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. His lands were mentioned in a case heard at Westmorland. Roger (16th/17th C.) described as ‘capitane of the Armetage’ in 1599 when he witnessed the bonds (signed at Bransholm) between Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch and the Armstrongs and Elliots of Liddesdale. In 1611 he was ‘captain of the Irnegate’ when he was cautioned for William Foster in Langhaugh, as well as for John Armstrong ‘called Quhyteheid’. He was additionally fined for the non-appearance of Rowie Crozier in Harthsgarburnside. He was also part of the assize at the Justice Court on Jedburgh in 1611. He was also ‘capitane of the Armetage’ when he was fined for not appearing at a trial in 1612 (relating to the apparent hanging death of John Elliot in St. Mary’s Steeple). He may have been the last such deputy keeper of Hermitage Castle. It is unclear how he was related to other contemporary Scotts. Roland ‘Rowie of Huttikill’ (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1616 when Jock Scott ‘the Sucker’ was hanged for stealing one sheep and other crimes. The sheep was taken ‘furth of the Lyn beside Elrig’. He may be the same as Rowie ‘in Vttersyde’ (i.e. Outerside), one of the pursuers of the case. It is unclear where precisely this place was located, but he was surely related to David and Alexander ‘callit Huttitill’ who are recorded at ‘Andiship’ in 1573. Roland ‘Rowie’ (16th/17th C.) one of the ‘Persewaris’ of the 1616 case against Jock Scott ‘the Sucker’ for sheep stealing. He is recorded as being ‘in Vttersyde’ (i.e. Outerside) and his son Walter was also a pur- suer. He may be the same as the man ‘callit Rowie of Huttikill’, who was one of the men whose sheep were stolen. Simon (13th C.) recorded as ‘Simonis le Scot’ in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. His case was heard in the town of Alnwick. He is separately recorded as ‘Simone de Scotia’. Perhaps the same man is recorded as Simonis Scot in Swynborne in a record of Edward I in 1293. It is unclear whether he was related to later Scotts. Simon (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the local men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. He is surely related to others who were named (John, Robert of Todshaw, etc.), but it is unclear how. Simon (15th C.) recorded at the Justiceaire held in Selkirk in 1494/5, as being ‘in meiklehop’ (i.e. Meiklehope, perhaps the same as Meikledalehope), now ‘in ...’, with the location being blank. He was indicted, but did not appear, with his surety, Richard Davidson in Meiklehope, being fined (or perhaps he was surety for Davidson). Simon (15th C.) recorded at the Justiceaire held in Selkirk in 1494/5, when he was ‘in myghhop’, i.e. Midghope. He served as surety for himself and was fined for non-appearance. Simon (15th/16th C.) tenant in Elrig listed in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501 among mostly local men who had been fined. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Simon of Arkyn (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 when George Douglas, Master of Angus had to surrender the lands of False (in Jedforest) to Ralph Ker of Primside Loch for failing to present him at court. He had stolen 200 ‘angle-nobles’ from the English and is recorded as ‘Symon Scot de Arkyn’. It is unclear where ‘Arkyn’ was. Simon ‘Sym’ (15th/16th C.) recorded in the 1526 remission to a large number of Borderers for an attack on the Earl of Arran. He is listed as brother of Robert, tutor of Howpasley, making him son of Alexander of Howpasley and brother of Adam of Tushielaw (listed next in the same 1526 document). Simon of Fenwick was listed separately and so presumably not the same man. Probably the same Simon was the first witness listed for the instrument of sasine at ‘Fawsyde’ (probably in the Ettrick valley) for Janet Scott (widow of Robert ‘Elwand’) purchasing lands in Appletreehall from Robert of Howpasley; James, William in Hartwoodmyres and Roland are listed after him and some may have been closely related. Simon of Fenwick (16th C.) listed as ‘Symoun Scot of Fynnyk’ in 1526 among a large number of men who had remission for attacking the Earl of Arran. He is also mentioned in 1526/7 when his brother Adam was a witness to a document relating to Harden. In 1527 he was among the local lairds given remission for mustering their supporters at Melrose (i.e. Skirmish Field) and Linlithgow. He was one of the arbitrators to decide on the succession to the lands of Borthaugh in 1528. In 1530 he is listed among the 21 Roxburghshire Lairds who submitted themselves to James V to keep better order. He is also recorded in a ‘letter of reversion’ of 1540 in which he resigned lands of Nether Harden (described as in the Barony of Chamberlain Newton) to William Scott of Harden. A bond of the same year shows William of Harden giving him the lands of Nether Harden until George, Lord Home redeems them. In 1561 probably the same ‘Sym Scot of Fynnyc’ was among a list of men charged to appear before Queen Mary regarding the state of the Borders. He was listed as ‘Sym Scot of Fynnyc’ among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts in 1562. He is probably related to William in Fenwick, who is recorded in 1510. In the 1526 remission there is a ‘Sym Scot’ listed as brother of Robert, tutor of Howpasley, suggesting that this was a different man (even although listed right beside Robert), unless there were multiple entries in the list. Simon (16th C.) recorded as ‘Syme’ along with John in about 1557. They were sons of the ‘guidman of Alanehauch’, who was probably either William or Robert, when they rented Stobicote from Melrose Abbey. He could be the ‘Sym Scot of Alanehauch’ listed in 1561 among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. He may well be ‘Syme Scot in Oversouthfield’ who was named along with Robert of Allanhaugh and others in 1581, when they were forgiven for the murder of George Scott 3 years earlier. ‘Watt Scot that, Syne Scott thair, Jok Scot, duelland in Hawik, callit Wattis Jok’ are all listed, and seem likely to be related. He may also be the ‘umquhile Symme Scot in Southfield’ mentioned in 1609. Simon ‘Sym’ (16th C.) recorded as resident of Over Southfield in 1581, along with ‘Syme Scot in Oversouthfield’, ‘Watt Scot that’ and ‘Jok Scot, duelland in Hawik, callit Wattis Jok’. He was presumably related to the other men listed (e.g. he could have been son of Simon, tenant in Over Southfield), all of whom were probably related to the Scotts of Allanhaugh, who were also named in the ‘letter of slains’ for the murder of George Scott in 1578. Simon (16th C.) listed as ‘Sym Scot of Fernilli’ in about 1557, when, along with Archibald Elliot of Gorrenberry, he rented Bowanhill and ‘Grangia alias Stanyhetoun’ from Melrose Abbey. His lands may have been Fairnilee or Fernielees, or somewhere else. Simon ‘Sym wi the Spear’ of Gamescleuch and Winterburgh (d.bef. 1590) 2nd son of Sir John of Thirlestane (although some suggest he was the 4th son). He was the ‘tutor’ of his nephew Robert of Thirlestane and progenitor of the Scotts of Newburgh and Rennaldburn. He is ‘Symon Scot of Wintreburn’ in 1561/2, when he witnessed a document for Adam, son of Robert of Bonnington. He is probably the ‘Sym Scot, brother to Robert Scot of Thirlestane’ recorded in 1562 when he promised to enter James ‘Mawar’ to the Wardane, Ker of Cessford. He is recorded as ‘in Winterburgh’ in 1559 when he purchased the lands of Gamecleuch. In 1573 he was charged to enter some of his tenants in Ettrickside. In 1578 he was ‘of Wintirburch’ when Robert of Thirlestane (for whom he was ‘tutor’) complained that he had taken away 2 horses from Thirlestane, threatened the tenants, and later forcibly took possession of the house; clearly there were serious disputes between him and his charge. He was forced by the Privy Council to yield up Thirlestane house after a few months. In 1576 he was ‘Sym Scot, tutour of Thirlestane’ when listed among the cautioners for Sim Armstrong; he was cited for non-appearance as cautioner in 1578/9. In 1578 he signed the caution ‘with my hand at the len’ (meaning that he could not write). In 1583/4 he and Robert of Thirlestane were both among Border Lairds summoned for advice on how to keep peace in Teviotdale and Liddesdale; they were also caution for an agreement between John in Hundeishope and James Gledstains of Cocklaw. He was probably the William ‘of Gemmylliscleuch’ listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. He may be the son of the Laird of Thirlestane who was murdered by his step-mother (although the names and suggested dates for this story are confused). He was one of the representatives of Teviotdale at the General Assembly of 1581. In 1585 he witnessed a bond (signed at Selkirk and Hawick) settling a feud between the Scotts of Branxholme and the Scotts of Allanhaugh. He was probably succeeded by John (perhaps his elder son) and then his son Arthur. Simon (16th C.) son of Walter of Newton. He was presented to the vicarage of Hassendean in 1595 on the demission of Thomas Newbie. It is unclear whether this means he became the minister or just held part of the benefice of the Parish. His father may have been Walter of Chamberlain Newton. Simon of Dryhope (16th C.) 1st Laird. Scott of Satchells suggests he was brother of Adam of Tushielaw, while Keith Scott prefers to connect him as 3rd son of Walter of Headshaw. He was succeeded by John, father of the ‘Flower of Yarrow’, but the relationship is unclear (Keith Scott claims his sons were Philip, Simon, Andrew, Adam and Walter, but these may have been sons of John). Simon (d.bef. 1609) father of John Scott who was among several men fined in 1609 for harassing the lands of Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane. His son was ‘Jean’s John’, suggesting that his wife was Jean. He was referred to as ‘umquhile Symme Scot in Southfield’, although it is unclear if this is the Southfield near Hawick or another. Simon of Montbenger (16th/17th C.) descended from the Scotts of Dryhope. He was either son of Simon (1st Laird) or John (2nd Laird). He was succeeded by Robert, and later descendants were the Scotts of Catslackknowe. Simon (16th/17th C.) natural son of William of Fingland, who was brother of Sir Robert of Thirlestane. In 1608 he was among the relations and tenants of Sir Robert who were bonded not to harm Archibald ‘of Dopeith’. In 1609 he was among the men (including his father William, as well as Walter of Headshaw) who Sir Robert of Thirlestane and his tenants were bound not to reset. This was part of the feud with the Scotts of Tushielaw. In 1610 he was ordered to be apprehended for not signing the bond relating to the Scotts of Tushielaw. In 1616/7 he was probably the ‘Will’s Sym’ of Thirlestane who was accused of accompanying John Scott and his brothers Adam and Simon of Bonnington, when Walter Scott ‘in Essenside’ (son of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden) was murdered. Simon ‘Sym of Bonnington’ (d.bef. 1622) son of Adam of Bonnington and brother of John and Adam. He succeeded his father as Laird of Bonnington in 1607. The designation may originally have come from the lands elsewhere (e.g. near Kilmarnock), but it is clear that he possessed Bonnington in Peeblesshire, with a charter of James V as heir to his father in 1607. He signed the Scott clan bond in 1589. He is recorded in documents relating to the lands of Bonnington in 1591–1607. In 1593 he purchased ‘Ernisheuch’ and ‘Singlie’ in Ettrick Forest, confirmed in 1607. He is recorded as a witness in Selkirk in 1594. In 1594/5 he is recorded as being son of Adam, and in 1611 he is confirmed as grandson of Robert and Katherine Boyle, when he was served as heir to his grandmother. In 1596/7 he accompanied Robert of Thirlestane in an attack on the ploughmen of lands near Peebles. In 1604 he had a charter for the lands of ‘Espiehoip’ on Ettrick. In 1611 he had a court case against Carruthers of Holmends. Also in 1611 he was served heir to his grandmother Katherine Boyle. He was also one of the signatories of the bond of 1612 to keep peace on the Border and also on a ‘retour’ panel for Tweedy of Drumelzier. In 1612 ‘Simeon Scott of Bonytoun’ was ordered to appear at Melrose to answer for the ‘horrible slaughter of Walter Scott’ of Tushielaw, which may be connected with the origin of the ballad ‘The Dowie Dens of Yarrow’. In 1616–17 he was one of the men said to have accompanied his brother John when Walter Scott ‘in Essenside’ was murdered while fishing on the Ettrick, according to criminal complaints made by his wife. The 2 murders may be confused in the re-telling. In 1617 and 1618 (and perhaps covering the period 1611–29) he had a court case with Sir William Scott of Harden over the value of the lands of Bonnington and others, presumably because of a debt; in 1617 a charter of King James VI granted Bonnington to William, heir to Harden, with a value of his lands given as £4985 6s. 6d., redeemable within 7 years. His son and heir was Robert, but may have predeceased him. He had at least one daughter, Margaret, who married William, son of John Burnet of Barns (near Peebles). He was succeeded in the lands of Bonnington by his brother John, and then by William Burnet of Barns, his grandson, who inherited the lands of Bonnington in 1627. Andrew, surgeon in Edinburgh also had a claim on Bonnington in 1624 and must have been a nephew or other close relative. His brother John was served heir to his land of ‘Ernisheuche’ and Singlie in 1624. Simon ‘Syme of Newtoune in Hawick’ (16th/17th C.) recorded as a juror for the Commissioners’ Court of 1622. He could be the same man as the son of Walter of Newton who held the benefice of Hassendean. Probably the same Simon in Newton was served heir to his brother Walter in the lands of Easter Craik in 1618, as well as Ladhope, ‘Alterhous’ and ‘Quhithope’ in Ettrick Forest. It is unclear whether his lands were Chamberlain Newton or a different Newton. Simon (d.bef. 1643) brother of William of Chamberlain Newton. He is recorded on 1643 when Mariota Scott, daughter of his brother William, was served as his heir. He may be the same as Simon ‘of Newtoune’. Simon (18th/19th C.) resident of 8 Abercromby Place in Edinburgh when he subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. It seems likely that he had a direct connection with Hawick. Stephen (15th C.) recorded in the Exchequer Rolls in the 1440s and 50s. He was explicitly mentioned in 1440 in the Aberdeen area, in 1441 for work at Edinburgh Castle, for collecting the customs in Edinburgh in 1443, was paid his fee in 1444, 1445 and 1446 and received payment from Robert Moffat in Edinburgh in 1454. It is possible that he is the same as Stephen of Muirhouse and Castlelaw. Stephen of Muirhouse, Castlelaw and Burrellands (15th C.) younger son of Robert of Rankleburn and brother of Sir Walter of Buccleuch. He may be the Stephen who was witness in 1431 to the transfer of Heap from James Langlands of that Ilk to Walter Scott of Buccleuch (if so this was his brother); John Scott is also listed beside him and so possibly a close relative. He may be the Stephen appointed as a procurator by Ellen Rule of Primside in 1439 when she resigned her lands to their superior, Archibald, Earl of Douglas and probably the ‘Stephanus Scott’ who witnessed a charter for Thomas Wiley of Bonnington (in Peebleshire) in 1442. He is probably the Stephen who witnessed a charter for the lands of Borthwickshiel in 1444 (with Sir Walter also a witness). In 1445 (probably, since the date of 1400 on the document is wrong) he requested an ‘instrument of transumpt’ relating to the lands of Grahamslaw in the Barony of Eckford; he was there described as brother and procurator of Sir Walter of Buccleuch and listed as ‘Stephanus Scott de Castellaw’ (there are several places of this name, so it is unclear which one this is). The Robert Scott who also signed this document may have been a close relative. In 1447 he was witness to a document relating to the ‘Cusingland’ involving Margaret Cousin, wife of Simon Routledge, and his brother Sir Walter. He obtained the Burrellands (in Eckford Parish) in 1448, after they were resigned by John Burnell; there he is transcribed ‘of le Castellaw’. In 1448 he witnessed the sasine for the lands of Birkwood and Burnflat for his brother, Sir Walter. He had a crown charter for the lands of ‘Murhous’ in 1450; these are lands in the Barony of Crichton (somewhere near Pathhead in Midlothian, and not one of the Muirhouses elsewhere). In 1450 he also had a charter for the lands of ‘Castelcary, et de Weltoune’ in Stirlingshire; this suggests that the ‘Weltoum’ associated with him may not have been Wilton at all, and that ‘Castelaw’ was actually ‘Castle Cary’ near Cumbernauld (adjacent to Walton farm). These lands had been forfeited by Robert Livingstone and were confirmed in 1450/1. He is probably the ‘Stephano Scot’ who witnessed the charter exchanging Milstonc with Heap in 1451. In 1453 he was listed as ‘of the Mwrhouse’ when he renounced the lands of Castleryc and the Weltoune to Henry, son of Robert Livingstone of Linlithgow; it seems likely that the ‘Castelaw’ sometimes connected with his name is ‘Castle Cary’ in the former Sheriffdom of Stirling (and the Hawick connection with Castle Cary in Somerset is just a coincidence). An instrument of 1454 relating to these lands is one of the first documents known to have been signed in Hawick; he may be the same ‘Stephen Scot of Murehouse’ mentioned there, who ‘asked instruments’. He is recorded as being ‘of Muirhouse’ when he witnessed a document of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1453 and also in a document of 1454 (one of the first documents known to have been signed in Hawick). He is probably the Stephen who witnessed a document for the Kers of Altonburn in 1454/5. He was one of Scott of Buccleuch’s Bailies in Eckford. He also had a charter of the lands of ‘Weltoum’, which were probably the lands of Walton adjacent to Castlery near the modern Cumbernauld; however, the family also had a connection with Wilton Parish, which is confusing. The next recorded Laird of ‘Weltoun’ was John, who was probably his son or grandson. His son and heir Robert witnessed the sasine for the exchange of Milsington and Wester Heap in 1453; he is recorded as Robert of Muirhouse in 1482. He witnessed a document for Sir Walter of Buccleuch in 1456. In 1462 he had a loan of 100 merks from Robert Muir of Rowallan, with the lands of Dryden, Commonside and Upper Harwood given in security. This loan was discharged by Robert of ‘Dogehauch’ in 1477, probably his same son Robert. He had a sasine for the lands of Meikledale in 1537 (along with George Scott and Stephen who witnessed a sasine for the lands of described as ‘in Hoip’. He may also have been the same Stephen of the lands of Harden in 1535. He is recorded in 1273 as ‘in Valis’.

Stephen (16th C.) joint owner of a partice of land (along with John Short and Janet Liddersdale) on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Perhaps the same Stephen was also listed as holder of half a partice on the north side. He may be the same as one of the other Stephens. Stephen (16th C.) recorded in the register of the Privy Council in 1574, when he was surety for someone. It is unclear who he was. Steven (16th C.) Hawick man recorded as ‘Stevin’ in a 1558 document where he is stated as being the father of Alexander who sold land in one of the earliest known sasines relating to Hawick. It is possible he was the same man recorded owning pieces of land in the 1537 Charter. Steven (16th/17th C.) recorded in Branxholmetown in 1611 when he was part of the assay at the Justice Court on Jedburgh. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Stewart (??–??) writer of ‘East Bank Church, Hawick: Its origin and history, 1773–1923’ (1923). Susan (d.1806) daughter of the deceased ‘Doctor Scott Newton’. Her death is recorded in Hawick. It is unclear who her father was and whether he was a doctor or the name was a nickname; however, she was probably part of the Scotts of Newton.

Thomas (12th/13th C.) recorded as ‘Thomas de Colevilla cognomento Scot’ during the reign of King William the Lion. He was clearly of the surname ‘Coleville’, but for some reason had also gained the appellation ‘Scot’. His name appears in many charters of around 1200, most undated, and his seal bears the inscription ‘SIGHIL. THOME DE COLLEVILLA SCOTTT’. In 1223 he was already deceased when the Abbey of Vaudefy in Lincolnshire passed on his gift of lands in Ayrshire to Melrose Abbey. It seems unlikely that he was related to any Thomas (13th C.) listed in 1248/9 when he was the attorney of Devorguilla, wife of John Baliol. Thomas (13th C.) recorded in 1255/6 when he was imprisoned at Northampton for trespassing in King Henry’s vivarium. The Sheriff there was commanded to deliver him to 12 men in his bailliary until the King’s justices arrived. Thomas (13th C.) recorded in 1261 in London. He was pardoned at the insistence of Margaret Queen of Scotland, for the murder of ‘Thomas le lung’ in London. Thomas (13th C.) listed as ‘le Escot’ in 1272, when he gave half a mark for an assize in Suffolk. Thomas (13th C.) recorded in 1273 as ‘Thomas Scot, messenger’ when he was paid by the English court for expenses transmitting letters to the King and Queen

Susan (d.1806) daughter of the deceased ‘Doctor Scott Newton’. Her death is recorded in Hawick. It is unclear who her father was and whether he was a doctor or the name was a nickname; however, she was probably part of the Scotts of Newton.

Thomas (13th C.) recorded in 1273 as ‘Thomas Scot, messenger’ when he was paid by the English court for expenses transmitting letters to the King and Queen of Scotland. He may be the same as ‘Thomas Scoticus’ listed on a jury in Warkworth, Northumberland in 1269 or ‘Thomam le Scot’ (and variants) listed several times on the 1279 assize rolls of Northumberland, some entries related to Alnwick Abbey. Thomas (13th C.) merchant of Newcastle recorded in 1302 as ‘Thomas Scot’, when canvas was purchased from him as part of an order of goods for Edward I’s fortresses in Scotland. Thomas (14th/15th C.) Bailie of Haddington. He is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls several times in the period 1412–31. Thomas (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the local men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. He is surely related to others who were named (John, Robert of Todshaw, Simon and ‘niger’ Walter), but it is unclear how. Thomas of Roberton (15th C.) said to have had a daughter who married George of Synton. However, there is no evidence that any such man actually existed (and hence presumably it was the daughter of a different Scott of Roberton). Thomas (15th C.) recorded having remission for the fine of a shiel in the Eaststead of Gildhouse in 1479. He may have been related to later Scotts who were associated with Gildhouse. Thomas of Bush (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 when he and his son Adam were separately fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire held in Selkirk. He is recorded being ‘de Bus’ and was probably an ancestor of later Scotts of Bush in Ewesdale. Thomas (15th/16th C.) brother of Andrew, the pair were tenants in ‘northsheilis’ (probably North Shielis) in Peeblesshire. In 1498 Andrew was fined for his non-appearance, but later he was allowed to ‘compone’ for the crime of mutilating James Davidson in ‘bracho’ (i.e. the arm). Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 as being already one of the King’s rebels, along with Gilbert Rutherford and Thomas Graham. Robert Rutherford had remission for associating with them in their involvement in the murder of Patrick Hepburn. Thomas (15th/16th C.) son of Walter of Headshaw and brother of Philip of Headshaw. In 1510 he was charged with the murder of John Murray of Falahill, with Andrew Ker of Gateshaw implicated in the same crime. Failing to appear at the Jedburgh court he was denounced as a rebel. He was represented by William in Hawick, George in Goldielands and David in Whitehaugh, who were fined for his non-appearance. The goods of William Scott in Fenwick and John Scott in Haining were used as further insurance. This suggests that all of these men were fairly closely related. Thomas ‘Tom’ (16th C.) listed as ‘Thome Scot’ among the bailies of the Sheriff of Roxburgh on the Precept of Chancery (probably in 1532) for William Scott of Hassendean retaining his properties. He may be the same as another contemporary Thomas. Thomas (16th C.) owner of 3 participates of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Thomas of Pitgormo (1479–1539) 2nd son of William of Balwearie. He became a judge in 1532, in place of his father, and was made Justice Clerk in 1535, being a favourite of James V. He is recorded being of ‘Pettgormo’ in the Exchequer Rolls. He was auditor of the Exchequer in at least the years 1537 and 1538. He married Agnes Moncrieff and was succeeded by his son Thomas. Thomas (16th C.) described as a Burgess of Hawick when he was a witness to the 1540 resignation of the lands of Nether Harden from Simon Scott of Fenwick to William Scott of Harden. He is also witness to a confirmation of this in 1556, where he is described as ‘in Hawick’. Probably the same Thomas ‘in Hawick’ was on the 1553/4 panel for the inheritance of Walter Scott of Branxholme and Buccleuch as heir to his grandfather. It is possible he was related (perhaps grandfather) to Walter, ‘burges in Hawik, sume to wmquhell Thomas Scot in Hawik, zounger’, who witnessed a document in 1585. Thomas (16th C.) recorded as a servant of Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1557. It was complained that he and another servant had been beaten at the Kirklands of Bedrule by a group of Turnbulls of Bedrule and others. Thomas of Haining (16th C.) son of Robert of Haining. He was a minor when he succeeded, with his uncle Walter acting as his tutor in 1532. He is recorded as being of Haining in 1538 when he held a sasine for the lands. He is also listed in 1557 among the Scotts who descended on the Kirk of the Lowes to try to kill Sir Peter Cranston as part of some feud. He was probably related to some of the other Scotts who were in the band of about 200, from Allanhaugh, Burnfoot, Harden, Howpasley, Synton and Thirlestane. In 1561 he was (along with Walter of Synton and Nicholas Rutherford of Hundalee) cited by the Privy Council for non-appearance. Also in 1561 he was among Border Lairds who appeared before the Queen to give names of those guilty of theft. He was listed among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts in 1562. In 1564/5 he was listed as one of the 4 curators of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in the bond with the Kerrs, and was one of the signatories. He was on the assize of 1564 related to the murder of David Scott of Hasendale. He acted as a bailee for the Commendator of Melrose in a sasine of 1567. In 1567 he represented Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in a marriage contract for Sir Walter’s sister Elizabeth. In 1568 he was granted the lands of Elliston by the Commendator of Melrose and was mentioned in a sasine of Crook in the same year. His son Robert was involved in a dispute over Elliston in 1576, with John, minister of Selkirk. Thomas ‘Tom the Stour’ (16th C.) recorded as ‘Thome Scot callit the Stowir’ in 1569 when he entered a pledge for himself and all the Scotts of Ewesdale (excluding those already under the pledge of Andrew Armstrong of Gingills). Later in 1569 he was recorded being held in Ravensheugh Castle as pledge for ‘Johne Scott callit the Braid; Arche Scott of the Buss; Thome Scott of Blakhall’. He was clearly a prominent Scott of Ewesdale at that time. He is ‘called the Stowir’ in the register of the Privy Council for 1573 when he was surety for someone. He could be related to the Jock ‘Stowre of Qukinscleuch’ recorded in 1598. His nickname may have referred to ‘stour’ as in a violent conflict. Thomas (16th C.) tailor in Edinburgh. He was listed in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch being owed money for an account. He could be the Thomas, Burgess of Edinburgh, who ‘undertakes surety’ according to the register of the Privy Council in 1577. Thomas (16th/17th C.) listed by Scott of Satchells as being ‘in Wester-groundiston’ (i.e. Wester Groundstone) and among the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of the house of Buccleuch. He was said to have been the brother of William of Whitehaugh, son of Walter of Whitehaugh and descended from Scott of Buccleuch. Thomas of Whitehaughbrae (16th C.) possibly son of Walter of Synton and Stiches and younger brother of John of Synton and Robert of Stiches. His mother was probably Margaret Riddell. He was ancestor of the Scotts of Whitehaughbrae, although it is unclear if he owned the lands himself. His son and heir was Walter of Whitehaughbrae. Thomas (16th C.) recorded as a witness to a charter for Aberbrothock Monastery in 1546. He was probably a cleric of some sort there. Thomas ‘Jock’s Tom’ (16th C.) mentioned in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1574. He is listed among those owed money as ‘Thome Scot callit Jok Thome’. There is a good chance he was from Hawick, based on the others he is listed alongside. He was presumably a tradesman or merchant of some sort. Thomas (16th C.) brother of ‘Wat’s Jock’, he was a Burgess in Hawick. In 1585 he was one of the witnesses to the bond in which Sir Walter of Branxholme and Robert of Allanhaugh resolved a family feud. His father was presumably Walter. Thomas ‘Tom’ (16th C.) tenant at Blackhall in the Ewes valley. In 1569 he was listed as ‘Thome Scott of Blakhall’, along with John ‘the Braid’ and Airchie ‘of the Buss’, as those men for whom Tom ‘callit the Stowir’ was held as pledge in Ravensheugh Castle. He was recorded in the 1585 remission for last crimes of men whose superior was Lord Maxwell. His son John is also listed. Another son Tom was recorded in 1611. Thomas ‘Tom’ (16th C.) recorded as being ‘Thome of the Flower’, one of the Scott chiefs of Ewesdale on Monipennie’s c.1594 compilation. He is listed along with ‘Ante the Busse’. It is unclear where his lands were, but it is possible he is the same as Tom in Blackhall. Thomas (16th/17th C.) brother of William of Hundlehope, and tenant of Sir Robert of Thirlestane. He was a younger son of James of Hundlehope. He is probably the ‘Thomas Scot, callit Thome of Hundleop’ who witnessed the bond between Sir Walter of Buccleuch and Robert of Allanhaugh in Hawick and Selkirk in 1585. In 1602 he was among a group of Scotts who attacked Adam Veitch’s lands at ‘Fechane’. Others listed were Scotts of Thirlestane, Bonnington, Gamescleuch and Bowhill. He and his brother attacked the same place again in 1603. He is recorded having 6 men well horsed at the Weapon Show of 1627 in Peeblesshire. Thomas (16th/17th C.) servitor to ‘Lord Buggleuch’ listed about 1610 among supporters of Scott of Thirlestane in their feud with the Scotts of Tushielaw. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Thomasies. Thomas of Salenside (d.c.1636) possibly son of Andrew of Salenside, who was on the Carlisle Raid of 1596. In 1621 he inherited Whitehaughbrae from Walter of Whitehaughbrae, who was a near relative (son of his grandfather’s brother, hence first cousin, once removed). He had at least 2 sons: William, to whom he gave possession of Salenside during his lifetime; and Andrew, to whom he gave possession of Whitehaughbrae, also while he was still alive. He later sold both properties to Sir William Scott of Harden. Thomas (16th/17th C.) referred to being ‘called of Ormestoun’ in 1610 when he was part of a group of Scotts charging Langlands and other Scotts to find caution in 1610, with the other side petitioning for the penalties to be reduced. Additionally, the Scotts of Harden, Whitslade and Satchells were also bound not to harm him and his associates and there was a similar bond in 1610 for Andrew Riddell of that Ilk and his son not to harm them. His brother Alexander was also mentioned in 1610. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Thomases. Thomas ‘Tom’ (16th/17th C.) son of Thomas in Blackhall. In 1611 some men stood as caution for him at court in Dumfries. Thomas ‘Tom’ (16th/17th C.) tenant at Nether Braide, although whether this is Broadlee in the Borthwick (or in Ashkirk Parish) or Braidie on Hermitage is unclear. His son was ‘Jock the Suckler’, who was involved in the 1615 slaughter of the Laird of Drumlanrig’s sheep at Howpasley. Thomas of Todrig (d.c.1653) younger son of Walter ‘the Hawke’ of Whitslade and brother of Sir Walter, 2nd Laird of Whitslade. Note, however, that some histories give conflicting accounts of the connection between the Scotts of Whitslade and Todrig. He probably purchased the estate of Todrig from the older branch of Scotts of Todrig, perhaps around 1630. He and his wife had a charter from John Hay, Lord Yester for Todrig in 1635. He is mentioned in 1637 when his son Robert became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. He was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire in 1643, 1644, 1646, 1648 and 1649. In the early 1650s he and his son Thomas are described as Thomas Scott elder and younger of Toderick. He married Jean Pringle (possibly a second marriage), with their ‘tocher’ to the Parson of Ancrum recorded in 1643. His children included: Thomas, who succeeded; Walter; Robert; and Janet (who may be the Janet, 2nd daughter of Scott of Todrig, who married Robert Elliot of Harwood and his niece Jean Scott; Marion (or Mary), who married Dr. Rutherford of Jedburgh; and Jane, who may have married a Scott of Bailielee; and possibly Ann, who died unmarried. Thomas (17th C.) tenant of Hummelknowes Mill, which would have Scotts for perhaps the next 200 years. He is mentioned as one of a large number of people accused of stealing a wallet in Hawick in 1642. It is unclear if he was directly related to John Scott, who came from the Rulewater millers and married the widow Henderson, who was tenant at Hummelknowes Mill. Thomas of Whitehaugh (17th C.) appears to be the proprietor of the estate in a list of communicants of the area in 1650. John, William and James (listed under him) may have been his sons or brothers. It is unclear how he may have been related to the other Scotts of Whitehaugh. ‘Leddie whithaugh’, who was taxed for 2 hearths on the west-side of Hawick in 1694, could possibly be his widow. Thomas of Whitslade (d.1671) 3rd son of Sir Walter, he succeeded in 1651, his elder brothers Robert and Sir Walter having no male heirs. In 1647 he was served heir to the lands of Whitslade, Redfordgreen, Drycleuchshiel and

Ettrickhouse, previously belonging to his brothers. There was a further service of heirs for him in 1655, for the lands of Whitslade, as well as Drycleuchshiel, Redfordgreen, Ettrickhouse and Dalgleish, mentioned ‘feu duty and augmentation’. However, he sold the Stirches estate to Walter Chisholme about 1660, ending two centuries of ownership by the Scotts of Whitslade. He was recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663 (presumably referring to an earlier period) paying £214 for Stirches and £156 for lands in Lilliesleaf Parish. He fought alongside his brother Sir Walter at Inverkeithing in 1651 and was wounded there. Like his uncles Sir Walter and Robert before him, he was Member of Parliament for Selkirk, serving 1661–63. In 1663 he was appointed as a Justice of the Peace for Selkirkshire. In 1665 he witnessed the marriage contract of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch, and was listed there as one of her curators. He was probably the Scott of Whitslade who entered into a teind agreement with the curators of the Duke of Buccleuch in the late 1660s. In 1666 he was one of the ‘curators’ of Francis of Davington. In 1613 he married Janet, daughter of Walter Scott (‘Auld Wat’) of Harden. In 1655 he secondly married Janet Mitchell, who was probably a widow. He is probably also the Thomas Scott of Whitslade who married ‘Ladie Ednum’ in the Canongate Kirk in 1662. His children included: George, who became a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1663 (but must have died before him); Walter (b.1657), who also died before him; Thomas, who succeeded; and Marie. It is said that his death was greatly lamented and also published as the ‘Poesical Museum’ in 1784, probably written by Capt. Walter Scott of Satchells (even although the title would make the poem seem to be about the earlier death of his brother Robert). Thomas of Wester Essenside (17th C) recorded as owner of Wester Essenside in 1643, valued at £400, as well as Leap Hill, valued at £140. He also paid tax on £540 in Ashkirk Parish according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts, and he may be the same as one of the other Thomases (e.g. the younger Thomas of Todrig). Thomas (17th C.) tailor in Hawick. In 1684 his brother Walter was among those declared fugitives for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. Thomas (17th C.) servant at Hilliesleaf. In 1684 he was on a list of men declared as fugitives for frequenting conventicles. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was ‘Jenet Lytle’. Their son John was born in 1687, with witnesses Henry Scott and Robert Scott (so possibly relatives). Thomas of Synton (17th C.) recorded in 1690. However, he was not the Laird at that time, so was either tenant there or was Laird of neighbouring lands. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. Thomas (17th C.) resident at Winningtonrig in Cavers Parish in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to the James and John who are also listed there. Thomas (17th C.) tenant in Rueltownfoot, listed along with Thomas Turnbull on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He could be the Thomas ‘in Roull’ whose wife’s will, Janet Porteous, was recorded in 1685. Thomas (17th C.) recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls at Borthaugh. Thomas (17th C.) listed as tenant at ‘Bridiholl’ (probably Brieryhill) in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas (17th C.) tenant in Bygate in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Thomas (17th C.) resident of the east-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. Probably the same Thomas was listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Thomas ‘Laird’ (17th C.) recorded in 1687 when he was fined, along with a group of other men, for clandestinely removing their sheep from the Town’s flock, without paying the Town Herd. He leased part of the Kirklands of Hawick from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1692. He was a resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He was also listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. It is possible that he was related to James and John, who were also called ‘Laird’. Thomas (17th C.) resident of ‘the netherend’ of Hassendean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas of Whitslade (d.c.1695) son of Thomas. He was probably a minor when he succeeded (as 6th Laird) in 1671, since there is a record of discharge to Sir William of Harden and his other curators in 1672. He is recorded writing to his cousin Sir Gideon Scott in 1694 according to the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He farmed on one of the farms of the Knowesouth estate. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. He was also listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. It is possible that he was related to James and John, who were also called ‘Laird’. Thomas (17th C.) resident of ‘the netherend’ of Hassendean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Thomas of Whitslade (d.c.1695) son of Thomas. He was probably a minor when he succeeded (as 6th Laird) in 1671, since there is a record of discharge to Sir William of Harden and his other curators in 1672. He is recorded writing to his cousin Sir Gideon Scott in 1674 about permission to cut peats. He witnessed a baptism in Hawick in 1676 for William Laing. In 1677 he was served heir to his father’s lands in Innerleithen. In 1678 he paid the land tax for the Whitslade estate (valued at £1048 10s), as well as paying for the lands of Hermiston (£156) in Lilliesleaf Parish. He is probably also the Laird of Whitslade whose lands in Selkirkshire were valued at £2168 in that year. He was a Commissioner in Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire for raising money. for the King in 1678 and was on the Commission of Supply for both counties in 1685 and 1690. He is also recorded in bonds of 1682 and on a list of heritors of the Regality of Melrose for that year, as well as in a horning against all Melrose heritors in 1690. He was living at Whitslade in 1688 when he is mentioned in Capt. Walter Scott's metrical family history. Before 1688 he married Jane, daughter of Sir John Hay of Park. They had 7 sons: Thomas, who succeeded in 1695; John, who later sold Whitslade; Walter, recorded in the 1720s in a dispute with Walter of Harden, and in 1734 when he was excommunicated; Robert (d.c.1757), a surgeon in Hawick; William, a physician in Worcester; Francis, 6th son, who became a merchant's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1708; and James, who became a goldsmith's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1709. It is said that only the eldest son had any surviving children. His widow may be the 'Lady Whitslade' recorded in 1707 as liferenter of part of the Roxburghshire lands formerly held by the Laird of Whitslade. He is described briefly in the lines on the death of his father and uncles that appeared in Caw's 'Poetical Museum' (1784) – 'Of beauty grave, and courage brave; Although his years be young, There's none on earth can parallel Old Whitslade { but his son' [CWS]. Thomas of Chapel (17th/18th C.) paid tax on 7 hearths for himself and his tenants in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1694. He was on the Committee of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1698. He was also one of the Roxburghshire heritors who petitioned Parliament in 1700. He must have been related to the earlier Walter of Chapel. Thomas of Whitslade (d.bef. 1714) son of Thomas, he was 7th Laird. In 1695 he was served heir to his father as well as to his grandfather Thomas in the lands of 'Phanops' (possibly Phaup in Ettrick) in the Regality of Melrose and in 1696 was served heir to lands in Innerleithen. He was witness to the marriage contract between William Elliot of Harwood and Jean Scott of Todrig in 1700. In 1704 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Scott of Ancrum. They had 2 daughters: Elizabeth, who married William McDougall, brother of the Laird of Makerstoun; and Janet, who died unmarried. Having no male issue, he was succeeded by his younger brother John (who sold Whitslade). His widow remarried to Sir David Murray of Stenhouse in 1714.

Thomas of Langshaw (17th/18th C.) younger son of Francis of Langshaw. He succeeded his brother Walter, being served heir to their father's lands and Barony of Langshaw (in Melrose Parish) in 1695. This included 'Readhead alias Whytebank', Colmslie and Mosshouses. He appears to have been the last Scott of Langshaw. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident 'in Kirkhouses' in Ashkirk Parish. In 1724 the Parish gave him 14s. He was probably a pauper at that time and was probably related to earlier Scotts of Kirkhouses. Thomas of Todrig (d.1753) only son of Walter of Todrig. He was the 6th and last Laird of Todrig (although he is also sometimes confounded with his son Thomas). He was educated at Glasgow University. He was 'younger' of Todrig in 1708 when he had a marriage contract with Mary, 2nd daughter of Robert Scott of Scotsbank. In 1713 he brought a case against several other Scotts relating to a 1669 bond of 'Auchter Auter Struther'. He was one of the petitioners in support of the lands of Whitslade being 'disjoined' in 1714. He is probably the Laird of Todrig recorded in Hawick in 1732 when the town 'litter' was rented for his son's funeral. In 1731 he signed the marriage contract of William Elliot of Lodgegill and Jean Elliot of Harwood. He is said to have lived too liberally, having to sell Todrig in 1746 and Wester Essendine a few years earlier. His children with Mary Scott included: Walter (b.c.1710), who was in the Horse Guards; Robert (b.1714), who died young; Thomas (b.1717); John (b.1718), possibly died at sea; William (b.1719); possibly Patrick, who also went to sea and died unmarried; Janet (1710–67), who married Mr. Howie, surgeon in Selkirk and secondly Rev. David Brown of Selkirk; and Elizabeth, who was still unmarried in 1783. He secondly married Jane, sister to John Elliot of Peel (who must have been a cousin of some sort), widow of Thomas Pringle of Kirton; they had no children together. He died in Selkirk and is buried in Ashkirk. He was the progenitor of the Scots of Stokoe in Northumberland. Thomas (17th/18th C.) son of William 'in Wilsington' (presumably Milsington) who witnessed a document for the Elliots of Harwood in 1694. If the date is correct, then he would have been the eldest son, but if so must have died before his brother William, who succeeded to the tenancy of Milsington. Thomas of Falnash (d.1779) son of Robert, grandson of 'Auld Falnash' and younger brother of Gideon, from whom he succeeded to the Lairdship. He sold Falnash, along with 'Merrynees' (i.e. Merry Naze) and other lands to the Duke of Buccleuch in about 1760. He may be the 'Dr. Thomas Scott of Fanash' who kept a lark... and a song thrush in cages in his parlour (according to a letter by A.C. Hall in 1831). It is also possible that he was the same man as Rev. Thomas, minister of the Relief Kirk in Auchtermuchty. Thomas of Stonedge (d.1786) probably son of William of Stonedge. He appears to have served as Chamberlain for the Duke of Buccleuch for the Liddesdale lands in 1725 (although he must have been quite young at the time). He was already referred to as ‘of Stonedge’ in 1731, when he signed the marriage contract of William Elliot of Lodgegill and Jean Elliot of Harwood, although he may not yet have succeeded to his father. He was a great improver of his lands, having dykes built and plantations laid out. He was a heritor of Hobkirk Parish, and described as ‘late of Hobsburn’ when he lived at Grange in Edinburgh. He may also earlier have been described as ‘in Wauchope’. In 1741 he had an elaborately carved through-stone erected in Hokbkirk kirkyard; this was in commemoration of Scott of Wauchope (probably his grandfather, Walter). He appears to have sold Forkins to William Elliot of Wolfelee in 1757. He was recorded as a Commissioner for both Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire in 1761. In 1767 he was recorded as tenant of Wauchope, like earlier members of his family. He was one of the Commissioners appointed in the court case regarding the division of Hawick Common in 1767. He was a lawyer who gave evidence at the trial regarding the Division of the Common and then was appointed by Lord Advocate Montgomery to make the actual Division itself. He suffered an unpleasant experience at the hands of some Hawick residents as a consequence, describing that ‘the mob were very riotous, pelted the chaise I was in with the surveyors’. However, he was also made an Honorary Burgess. He was listed as a voter in Roxburghshire in 1780. He sold Stonedge to Robert Lisle of Acton, although the sale was never completed. In 1732 he married Margaret, daughter of William Elliot, 2nd Laird of Borthwickbrae, and in 1758 purchased part of Borthwickbrae for himself. In the 1785 Land Tax Rolls it is recorded that he was liferenting about half of Borthwickbrae and the west part of Howcleuch from John Elliot of Borthwickbrae. His children included: William (b.1737). Other children baptised in Hobkirk Parish who may have been his were Margaret (b.1733), Susan (b.1734), Janet (b.1736) and Thomas (b.1736). His last will and testament is dated 1778 and he died at Grange, described as ‘late of Stonedge’. Thomas (b.1717) younger son of Thomas, last Laird of Todrig. He went to sea in 1740, received several wounds and lost an eye. Around 1750 he entered into service with the East India Company, remaining 13 or 14 years. He later lived in retirement, still being alive in 1783, but without issue. Rev. Thomas (1722–90) son of Walter, a merchant in Leith, who was descended from the Scotts of Harden. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1742. He was presented as minister of Cavers by William Douglas of Cavers in 1746 and ordained there in 1747. He was ‘Mr. Thos. Scott the mance’ when he paid the window tax in Cavers Parish in 1748; he paid again in 1753. He was translated to ‘Second Charge’ of South Leith in 1762 and moved to the ‘First Charge’ in 1765. In 1750 he married Helen Balfour from Pilrig, and she died in 1806. Their children were: Walter (b.1752); Martha; Janet; John, surgeon with the 10th Light Dragoons; and Thomas, minister of Newton, near Edinburgh, who married Elizabeth, daughter of Gilbert Kerr of Gateshaw. Thomas of Urlings, County Tipperary (18th C.) progeny of the Earls of Clonmell. He is probably descended from one of the Border Scott branches. He married Rachel, daughter of Mark Prim of Johnswell. Their son John (b.1739) was Solicitor-General and Attorney-General and was created Earl of Clonmell. Rev. Thomas (1722/3–92) said to have been born in Wilton Parish, and brother of Rev. James of Jedburgh (however, this may be confusion). He was ordained as minister of the Presbyterian Church in Hexham in 1756. He turned down Colinsburgh in 1761, since he thought that the size of the congregation and travel involved would be too much. In 1763 he became 1st minister of the Relief Kirk at Auchtermuchty (the 5th such congregation). He appears to have ended as minister in 1786. He was married in 1770, although his wife’s name is unknown; she was previously married to Rev. John Warden and she died in Edinburgh in 1810. He is buried in Canongate Churchyard. He could be the son of William and Christian Hoy, born in Wilton in 1723. It is unclear if he was brother of Rev. James of Jedburgh Relief Kirk or Rev. James (licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery), minister at Perth; he may thus have been an elder son of Robert of Falnash, perhaps born at Crowhill (like James), and may be the same Thomas who sold Falnash to the Duke of Buccleuch. Thomas (18th C.) married to Helen Renwick, their son William was baptised in Hawick Parish in 1757. In the entry he is marked ‘Buccleugh’, but it is unclear if that refers to the farm or something else. Probably the same Thomas and Helen Renwick were married in Robertson Parish in 1745. Thomas (18th C.) schoolmaster in Ashkirk in the 1760s and 1770s. He married Marion Elliot in 1765. Thomas of Nether Bonchester (1729–1807) eldest surviving son of Walter and brother of Rev. William of Abbotrule and Southdean. He succeeded to Nether Bonchester in 1750, as grandson of Walter. He was said to have greatly improved the Bonchester estate, making a nursery for young trees and enclosing land. The couple of acres of best land that he set aside for growing and selling young trees was called the Nursery and the cottage there was called the Nursery House. The planting of trees also became popular with his neighbours, leading to the valley of the Rule becoming well wooded. He also farmed Maxside for a while and was factor for Robert Lisle of Stonedge. However, he later struggled financially and had to place his affairs in the hands of trustees, who were William Turnbull in Letham and Peter Brown in Minto. This led to the sale of the Bonchester estate in 1779, the purchaser being William Oliver of Dinlabyre. The Duke of Buccleuch is said to have sympathised with his kinsman and allowed him to live at a farm on the Bowhill estate for a nominal rent. He may be the Scott of Nether Bonchester (forename not given) listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. He married Hannah Burnett. His only surviving child was Dorothea (‘Dora’, b.1778), who married Dr. William Lorraine from Glasgow (although born near Canonbie, and grandson of William Lorraine from Kirkton). He also had a daughter, Nelly, who died young. He died at Bowhill at the age of 78 and is buried at Hobkirk. Thomas (1732–1823) 2nd son of Robert Scott (‘in Sandyknowe’) and Barbara Haliburton. He was thus uncle of Sir Walter of Abbotsford. He gained ‘liferent’ of lands that were part of Oakwood in 1759. He also held lands at Bewlie, which he resigned to Walter Scott of Harden in 1766. He was recorded as Thomas ‘Son to Robert Scott of Sandicknow’ [sic] among the Commissioners for Selkirkshire in 1761. In 1788 he was listed among the voters in Selkirkshire. He farmed at Wolfelee, holding the tenancy until 1810, then later at Monkland, near Jedburgh. Thomas (1737–1813) 2nd son of John of Ashtrees and Helen Oliver. He was tenant farmer in Lethem, Southdean Parish, and is recorded there as farmer in 1792 when he had a bond with the Elliots of Harwood. He was ‘in Letham’ when recorded as a trustee for Thomas of Nether Bonchester (who had to sell his lands) in about 1779. He was recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls from 1785, owning 11 horses there in 1797. He also paid the dog tax at Lethem in 1797. He was appointed as one of the trustees for Thomas Scott of Nether Bonchester when he got into financial difficulties; the trustees sold off that farm in 1779. In 1807 he bought Peel (then called Baxtonlees) from Lord Douglas. He married Esther, daughter of Thomas Turnbull (of the Hawick carpet factory), this probably being in Wilton Parish in 1777; his wife died at Lethem in 1787, aged 37. Their children included: Thomas, who inherited Peel; John of Riccalton, who later re-purchased the family lands of Ashtrees; Helen, who married Thomas Elliot, son of Elliot of Harwood; and Esther, who married John, 2nd son of James Robson of Samieston. John Robson-Scott of Newton was his direct descendant, as well as the Boog-Scotts of Peel. Thomas (18th C.) blacksmith at Unthank in Hobkirk Parish in the last quarter of the 1700s. Thomas (18th C.) described as ‘sometime of Silverboothall’, he was probably son of James, farmer at Boonraw and Laird of Silverbuthall. In the late 1700s he sold a small piece of the former Wilton Common to William Oliver ‘Auld cash’. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Thomases. Thomas (18th C.) gardener listed at Burnhead in 1791, when he was working for William Scott. Thomas (d.bef. 1805) weaver in Hawick. He married Christian Weir in 1771. Their children included James (b.1772), probably the millwright; and Thomas (b.1775), probably the weaver. He was a member of the Associate Congregation. His wife’s death is recorded in 1805, by which time he was already deceased. Thomas (18th C.) recorded being let the farm of Pilnuir Rig for the first time in 1778, after the Division of the Common. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (18th C.) farmer at Hawthornside in Hobkirk Parish according to the Horse Tax Rolls of 1788–91. He was probably related to George, who farmed there soon afterwards. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Northhouse, recorded on the 1792–97 Horse Tax Rolls. He was owner of 8 horses in 1797. He was additionally taxed for having 3 non-working dogs in 1797. Thomas (18th/19th C.) recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as farmer at ‘Wollo’ (i.e. Wolfelee), when he owned 6 horses. It is unclear if he is the same as one of the contemporay Thomases (but certainly Thomas at Lethem is recorded separately). Thomas (d.1808) son of Walter from Wiltonburn. He is described as a ‘hosier’ when he died in Hawick. He may be the same as one of the other Thomases. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident at Longnewton according to the 1790–97 Horse Tax Rolls. William was also there in 1797 and so presumably a close relative. Thomas (b.c.1765) joiner of the Sandbed, possibly son of Walter, who established a joiner’s firm there in 1750. He is presumably the Thomas listed as a joiner on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He married Christian Downie, and their children included Walter (who carried on the business) and Jane. A younger joiner Thomas, also listed at the Sandbed on the 1841 census, may have been his son, as well as Robert at an adjacent address. He is listed as wright on the Sandbed in 1808 when an unnamed child died. Thomas (d.bef. 1822) possibly miller at Hawick Mill. The death of his wife Agnes Reid is recorded in 1822, when he was already deceased, with his designation given as ‘H. Mill’. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident at Deanburnhaugh. He may be the Thomas, son of Walter, who was born in Roberton Parish in 1769. In 1798 he married Margaret (or ‘Peggy’) Anderson, who lived to an old age and was said to have at least 300 descendants by the 1930s; she was probably the daughter of Michael Anderson born in Roberton Parish in 1770. She was described as being ‘everybody’s body. Whenever trouble or stress prevailed she was always ready to do and to dare for the sake of others’. Their children included: Walter (b.1799); Isabel (b.1801), who was living with her mother in 1851; William (b.1804); Beatrix (b.1806), who married James Pringle, hosier worker in Hawick; Thomas (b.1810), probably the mason in Deanburnhaugh; Margaret (b.1812); George (b.1816); and Robert (b.1819), a labourer in Deanburnhaugh. His widow and son Robert were recorded in Deanburnhaugh on the 1841, 1851 and 1861 censuses. Thomas (b.c.1775) weaver in Hawick, probably son of weaver Thomas. He was grandfather of grocer George and great-grandfather of Peter, who founded Pesco’s. In 1841 he was living at about 6 Walter’s Wynd. His wife was Janet, and their children included George (b.c.1820) and James (b.c.1830). Thomas (1774/5–1846) joiner in Newcastleton, probably son of George. He subscribed to 2 copies of William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He is probably the wright listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1841 he was living at about 30 South Hermitage Street. He married Mary Elliot, who died in 1806, aged 23. He secondly married Janet Elliot, who died in 1867. aged 73. His children included: George, who died in infancy; Mary; Archibald (1826/7–1904), also a joiner; Thomas; Hendry; John; and Helen. Thomas (b.1776/7) born in Roberton Parish, he was carter on Wilton Place. In 1841 he was recorded at Doivement. His wife was Nancy (or Agnes) Leithead, and she died before 1851. Their children included: Janet (b.1813); Charles (b.1815); Robert (b.1818); Walter (b.1820); Thomas (b.1822); William (b.1824); James (b.1827); Alexander Nivison (b.1829), dyer in Melrose, named after the Roberton minister; and John Young (b.1833). Thomas (18th/19th C.) stocking-maker in Hawick. He married Isabel Miller and their children included: John (b.1805); Catherine (b.1808); and Adam (b.1812). The death of his father-in-law Charles Miller is recorded in 1816. Thomas (b.c.1780) farmer at Eastcote in Cavers Parish. Thomas of Peol and Newton (1781–1858) son of Thomas, 1st Laird of Peel, he was born in Southdean Parish. He was joint tenant of Lethem with his brother John. He served with the volunteer yeomanry, and turned out at the False Alarm of 1804. In 1810 he became Captain in the 1st Regiment of Roxburghshire local militia. He was still ‘younger of Peel’ when he became an original member of the Jedforest Club in 1810. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ in 1825. In 1833 he bought Newton (on Teviot) from William Ogilvie of Chesters. In 1841 he is listed as ‘Ind Farmer & Landowner’ at Letham. He left Peel to his nephew William Elliot (son of his elder sister Helen) and Newton to his nephew Thomas Robson (son of his younger sister Esther). He died (unmarried) in Edinburgh. His portrait was painted by Mr. Frain of Kelso, and depicted him in the uniform coat of the Jedforest Club. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Minto. He subscribed to Andrew Scott’s book of poetry, published in Kelso in 1811. Thomas (1782/3–1851) born in Yarrow Parish, he was shepherd at Nether Deoraine. In 1808 he married Rachel Grieve, who was born in Langholm; she died in 1853, aged 71. Their children (baptised in Roberton) included: William (b.1808); Helen (b.1812); Christian (b.1814); Rachel (b.1816); Joan (b.1817); Jane Aitchison (b.1819); John (b.1827/8), also a shepherd. He and his wife are buried in Borthwick Waas. Thomas Chisholme (1784–1811) son of Rev. Robert of Coldhouse and Margaret Chisholme from Selkirk. He was baptised in Peebles in 1785. His brothers included William Chisholme, who probably owned Chisholme House and Alexander, who was a friend of Lord Byron. In 1802 he inherited a share in some plantations in Jamaica from his uncle, William Chisholme. In 1805 he graduated from the College of Fort William, an oriental studies academy in Calcutta, with his name at the head of those conferred with a Degree of Honour. He became Registrar of Purneah in Bengal, and died there. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident of Southdean Parish. In 1812 he married Mary, daughter of Adam Hobkirk. Their children were: Adam (b.1812); Thomas (b.1814); Jane (b.1816); and John (b.1823). Thomas (18th/19th C.) wheelwright on Buccleuch Street, recorded along with Robert on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. They were probably brothers or father and son. He may be the Thomas recorded as a wright on Buccleuch Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory, or part of the Thomas and Robert recorded on the High Street. He may also be the Thomas listed as a carrier’s agent on Buccleuch Street in 1837. Thomas (18th/19th C.) carter who lived at Whitrope Toll. He was listed among heads of households in 1835. Thomas (18th/19th C.) resident at Lanton, son of Robert. He erected a headstone to his relations who are buried in Bedrule kirkyard. This included: his wife Mary, who died at Lantonhill in 1820, aged 40; son Robert, who died in Jedburgh in 1839, aged 29; and his father, mother and ‘brethren’. Capt. Thomas (1788–1858) born in Kirkton Parish, he was son of William, who farmed at Singlie, with his mother being Margaret Pott. He was farmer at Shielwood and Captain in the 94th Regiment of Foot. In the 1841 and 1851 censuses he is listed as a farmer and a lieutenant on half-pay. His children (with his first wife) included a son Henry and a daughter Agnes. In 1856 he married Mary Ballantyne, daughter of John and Mary Miller; she was already a widow, her first husband being John Little, and she may also have thirdly married an Elliot. Their children were Gideon and Margaret (who married Gideon Thomas Scott, Selkirk wine merchant). An obituary was written for the Hawick Advertiser by Dr. John Douglas. Thomas (1788–1848) son of Archibald and Jeany, he was born in Falstone, Northumberland. He was proprietor of the Crown Inn in Newcastleon (possibly at 8 Douglas Square), according to Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He married Isabella, daughter of John Kyle; she died in 1869, aged 74. Their children included: John (b.1817), who died in Antigua; Agnes (b.1821); Thomas (1820/1–1902), carter; William (1824–41), also died in Antigua; Robert Elliot (1827–89); Jean (b.1830); Elizabeth (b.c.1833); Archibald (1834/5–66), died on the passage back from the West Indies; and Isabel (b.c.1836). The family are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Thomas (18th/19th C.) mason in Wilton Dean. He is listed among heads of households there in 1835. Thomas (b.1794/5) farmer at Priestrig. He farmed 16 acres and employed 1 labourer. In 1841, 1851 and 1861 he was living there with his wife Christian and family. Their children included Adam, Margaret and Christian. Thomas (b.1794/5) born in Hawick Parish, he was a carrier in Lilliesleaf in 1851. He was probably on the south side of Main Street. In 1852 he is listed as a grocer in Lilliesleaf. His wife was Janet. Thomas (b.c.1800) carrier at Alton in Wilton Parish. He married Isabella Hogg, and their children included: Isabella (b.1832); Helen (b.1835); Wilhelmina (b.1837); Mary (b.1841); Margaret (b.1845); and Gideon (b.c.1850). Most of their children were born in Ashkirk Parish. In 1841 Isabella Lillico was living with his family, and hence may have been his mother-in-law. In 1861 he was a widower living at Highchesters Mill Cottage in Robertson Parish. Thomas (b.c.1805) born in Glasgow, he was a teacher in Hawick. He ran a school in Buccleuch Street from about 1826, later moving to Tannage Close. He had begun by teaching at Old Northhouse, which was then a thriving village. He is recorded as a teacher at Buccleuch Street in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and on Walter’s Wynd in the 1837 directory. It is said that he taught for a while in the Fleece Inn Ballroom. In the 1841 census he is living in the Cross Wynd, married to Isabel and with children Isabel, John and Jessie. In 1851 he was schoolmaster in Wynd, married to Isabel and with children Isabel, William; and Ann. Thomas ‘Sly Tammie’ (b.1810) son of grocer Walter and Isabella Anderson (possibly 1st wife of Walter). He trained as a shoemaker, but was later a greengrocer at 13 Howegate and used to keep a garden where the Old Parish Halls were later built. He married Mary Helm in 1836 and their children were: Walter, who co-founded Lyle & Scott’s; Margaret H.; William H., warehouseman in his brother’s firm; Charles S., wool merchant; Isabella (‘Bella’); Robert, auctioneer; John T.M., grocer and fishing tackle maker; and James. In the 1841 census he was at the Sandbed, in 1851 on Buccleuch Street as a shoemaker, and by 1861 was at 1 Slitrig Bank. Thomas ‘Tammy Rusk’ (19th C.) baker at 55 High Street. His daughter Evelyn married Vernon E. Angwin. His brother was John (who married Jane Little). Thomas (b.1804/5) born in Wilton Parish, he was a farmer at Mervinslaw. He is recorded there on the 1841 and 1851 censuses, and in 1861 was farming 1200 acres there, and employing 11 people. He was still recorded at Mervinslaw in a directory of 1868. His wife was Margaret, and their children included Walter, George, Elizabeth and Agnes. He could be related to John, who was farmer at Mervinslaw in 1797. Thomas (b.1807/8) clerk in a woollen factory according to the 1851 census. He was living at about 16 Buccleuch Street. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed as ‘cashier, Buccleuch Street’. In 1861 he was listed as manager of Wilton Mills, and was living in the Manager’s House there. He married Mary Oliver in 1840. Their children included: James; Elizabeth (‘Betsy’, b.1842); Thomas (b.1844); Janet (b.1846); Agnes (b.1848); and Andrew (b.1850). He may be the Thomas, son of James and Isabel Robson born in Hawick in 1806. Thomas (b.c.1805) resident of Deanburnhaugh. In 1841 he is recorded as an agricultural labourer, and is easy to confuse with the mason of the same name, who also lived at Deanburnhaugh. He married Mina Inglis in Roberton Parish in 1830 and their children included: John (b.1831); William (b.1833); Helen (b.1834); Thomas (b.1837), ploughman in Lilliesleaf. Thomas (b.1809/10) mason in Deanburnhaugh, born in Roberton Parish, probably son of Thomas. He was living in Deanburnhaugh in 1841 and 1851, but by 1861 was at Myreslawgreen. In 1829 he married Jemima King (from Canonbie) in Roberton Parish in 1829, and their children included: Thomas (b.1830); James (b.1831); Margaret (b.1833); William (b.1835); Walter (b.1837); Barbara (b.1840); Isabella (b.1842); Mary (b.1844); Beatrice (b.c.1846); Wilhelmina (or Mina, b.1848); and Robert (b.1852). Thomas (1815–1879) eldest son of Charles, farmer at Milsington, who was a cousin of Sir Walter Scott. His mother was Esther Elliot. He took over the tenancy from his father and farmed at Milsington from 1854 until his death. In 1861 he was recorded as farmer of 1000 acres there. In 1856 he married Marion (or Mary), daughter of Henry Scott, farmer at Stelshaw. Their children included: Charles (b.1857/8), who purchased the farm of Milsington; James (b.1841), who moved to Canada; Henry, moved to the U.S.A.; Thomas of Croftheads (b.1867), who married Elizabeth Minto; William; and Mary, who married John Tullie, Highchesters. Thomas (1820/1–1902) carter in Newcastleton. He is listed on the 1851 and 1861 censuses on Langholm Street. He married Jane Mitchellhill, who died in 1911, aged 88. Their children included: Robert (b.c.1848); Margaret (b.c.1854); Mary (1854/5–7); Thomas (b.c.1857); Mary (1858/9–63); and William (1861–9). He was probably son of Newcastleton innkeeper Thomas, who is buried in an adjacent plot in Ettleton Cemetery. Thomas (1824/5–89) 3rd son of Lidlesdale farmer John. He was a shepherd, starting out at Hartsghar with his uncle Mr. Murray, then moving to Westshiels. After marrying he lived at the Pietsnest (on Hyndlee) and then Westshiels again, where he died. He married Christian, younger daughter of Robert Armstrong (and sister of his brother’s wife); she died at Wolfehopelee in 1909, aged 78. His children John, Robert and Mary became tenants of Wolfehopelee. His children included: Thomas (d.1876); Mary Anderson (1863/4–1933), who died in Hawick; and John (1859/60–1936), who died at Priesthaugh; Robert (1866/7–1953), who died at Flint Cottage, Denholm. Thomas (19th C.) farmer recorded at Langhope in Ashkirk Parish in 1868. Thomas ‘Scotia’ (1862–1900) son of George, grocer on the Howegate. His grandfather and great-grandfather before him had been West-enders. He was a traveller with his brother’s firm Pesco’s. He spent some time in Ontario, Canada, where in 1883 he helped establish an annual Common Riding celebration in the Galt/Guelph area, being the first secretary of the organising committee. He was Cornet in 1887, the year that the Ceremonial Committee was appointed. He married Margaret Elliot (1870–1914), daughter of John Robert Brough. Their children were: George Douglas (1899–1984), who married Ella Christie in 1933; Elliot B. (b.1901), who died young; Laura Isobel (1902–96), who married George M. Clunie; Thomas (1904–93); and Peter Adamson (1905–85). He suffered from tuberculosis and took his family to South Africa for his health; however, he died there. Thomas A. (1853–1926) son of Adam and grandson of Robert, farmer at Boonraw. He was born at Burnfoot on the Ale Water. He studied medicine at the University of Iowa and Rush Medical Center. He worked in Illinois and Oregon and then as a surgeon on boats that travelled in many parts of the world. He retired in 1921 and moved back to his homeland, where he married Margaret, daughter of oil extractor Archibald Johnstone Donaldson in 1922, this being his 4th marriage. He died in Hawick. Thomas ‘Tom’ (1854–1927) watercolour painter, born in Selkirk. He studied at the Royal Institution and Royal Scottish Academy in Edinburgh and had many commissions from wealthy Border tweed manufacturers. He lived at Earlston and Bowden and settled at Leslie Cottage in Philiphaugh. Known for his powerful landscapes, he also illustrated many Border books, including Craig and Laing’s ‘The Hawick Tradition of 1514’ (1898) and ‘Branxholme Castle and the Land of the Scotts’ (1901), and was commissioned to paint ‘Return to Hawick from Hornshole, 1514’. He was a guest at the 1890 Common Riding and was the first guest at the Callants’ Club annual dinner in 1906. He read a paper on stone implements to the Archæological Society in 1906 and donated a collection of his archaeological finds to the Museum, which now has more than a dozen of his paintings, including ‘Hawick Motte 1898‘. In all, he exhibited 167 paintings at the Royal Scottish Academy. There is a bronze bust of him, by Thomas Clapperton, in Selkirk. A book ‘Lest we Forget’, about his Hawick connections, was written by M.H. Coltman in 1991. The museum in Drumlanrig’s Tower has a Tom Scott room, containing several of his paintings. Thomas (1862/3–1918) builder in Newcastle-on-Tyne. He married Marion Elliot, who died in 1949, aged 78. Their children included: John (1894/5–1916), who died of wounds in France; and James, who died in infancy. They are buried in Ettleton Cemetery. Thomas (19th/20th C.) tenant in Redheugh, along with his brother James. In 1918 he and his brother purchased the farm from Anna Mary Elliot. His brother was killed by a bull in 1936 and in 1946 he sold Redheugh to Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. Uchtred (11th/12th C.) earliest known ancestor of the local Scotts, see Uchtred Fitz-Scott. Walter (12th C.) recorded as ‘Walterus Scotus’ several times in the chartulary of Arbroath during the reign of King William. His son was granted the lands of Allardyce. Walter (12th/13th C.) recorded as ‘Walterus Scottus’ sometime around 1200 when he was granted the lands of Allardyce in Kincardineshire. There is some suggestion that his descendants took the surname Allardyce, and that he is therefore unrelated to other Scotts. Walter (12th/13th C.) recorded as Walterus ‘Scottus’ in 1216 when he was commanded to deliver his ship to Gilbert Campion. This was at Tewkesbury. Walter (13th C.) listed in a court case in 1236, along with his brother Robert, as well as Richard. They were accused of attacking a man called Eustace, killing his horse and imprisoning his servant, and the Sheriff of Northampton was directed to make sure they appeared at Westminster. Walter (13th C.) guarantor for an agreement made at Ancrum in 1253 by Sir Walter de Moray. It is unclear if he is the same as any of the other early Walters. Walter (13th C.) recorded in 1254 as ‘de Escote’ in a document of Henry III relating to lands in Bedfordshire. Walter (d.c.1263) sergeant of the King’s Chapel, probably at Hereford. He was given a penny a day by the King, to be drawn by the Sheriff of Hereford. In 1263 his wife Edith and their children were granted the same penny a day for their lives. Walter (13th C.) listed as being ‘of Wyteby’ in 1265 when he gave half a mark to have an assize in Yorkshire. Walter (13th C.) gave half a mark to have an assize in Somerset in 1270. Walter (13th C.) listed as ‘le Escot of Weltedene’ in the Patent Rolls of Henry III in 1270/1. He is recorded several times in the 1279 assize roll of Northumberland. He is ‘Walterus Schot de Wilteden’, ‘Walterum Skot de Welteveden’ and variants. It is unclear where these lands were, but presumably on the English side. He could be the same Walter recorded among a set of pleas of the English army made at Berwick in 1296; this particularly involved a dispute with Matilda of Blackburnshire over trespass and a coat. Walter (13th C.) holder of lands in Peeblesshire (or perhaps Lanarkshire, this is not entirely clear) who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. He is recorded as ‘Wautier Lescot’. It is possible that he was son of William and brother of Richard of Rankleburn and Murthockstone (who also swore fealty to Edward I). There is some suggestion that he was the elder brother, although the chieftainship of the family passed through Richard, so perhaps he had no heirs. The lands he held may have included Kirkurd, which were certainly later owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. He may have been the first of his family to have the name ‘Walter’. He may be the same ‘Waltero Scot’ who witnessed a charter relating to Soutra Hospital in about 1280. It is also possible he was descended from Adam, whose name was associated with lands in Peeblesshire in the early 1200s. Walter (13th C.) signatory of the Ragman Rolls in 1296, who came from Edinburgh (although it is unclear if he is distinct from the man from Peeblesshire, or whether this is a duplicate entry). He was recorded as ‘Wautier Scot tenant le Euesqe de Seint Andreu, del counte de Edeneburgh’ (i.e. the Bishop of St. Andrews’ tenant in Edinburgh). His seal bore a hawk on a wrist, together with a crescent and star in fields and the name ‘S沃尔TERI SCOTTI’. The crescent and star indicate a close relationship with the Scott chiefs. Walter ‘the Ratton’ (d.c.1400) said to have been grandson of John ‘the Lame-ter’, and son of a Chamberlain to the Archbishop of Glasgow (although there is some confusion between father and son). Alternatively he was a younger son of Sir Michael of Rankilburn. He was probably the 1st Laird of Synton, although accounts differ, and information about these generations is very uncertain. His nickname came from his temper and small size. In about 1389 he settled at Burnfoot in the Ale valley and became the first (new) Laird of Synton. He married a Shortreed of Headshaw. His children probably included: George, who succeeded to Synton; John of Headshaw; Walter of Ashkirk; and William of Glack. He died during the reign of Robert III. Sir Walter (d.1402) 4th Laird of Rankilburn (Buccleuch), Murdostoun and Kirkurd, son of Robert. He was the first of a huge number of Sir Walters who would come later. He was said to be a brave man who performed many actions in service of the Crown. He had a charter of 1389 for superiority of the lands of Kirkurd. He may be the Walter who had an indenture in 1391 with Hugh Fotheringham for the lands of Caverton, made at Borthwick. In 1398 he was among the barons who were bound to keep peace on the Border and he was appointed as ‘borowis for the Erlis boundis of Douglas of the mydil marche’ (thus the first of his family associated with the Wardenship of the Marches). His wife’s name is not known, and his only known child is Robert, who succeeded him. He was killed at the Battle of Homildon Hill, serving in the army of Archibald, Earl of Douglas. Walter of Ashkirk (14th/15th C.) younger son of Walter, 1st Laird of Synton. However, these generations are very uncertain, and nothing else is known about him. He was probably ancestor of the James recorded in Ashkirk in 1502 and 1526. Sir Walter of Buccleuch (d.c.1468) eldest son of Robert, he was 6th (and last) Laird of Murthockstone (or Murdostoun) and the first to be described as ‘of Buccleuch’. He was also sometimes still described as ‘of Kirkurd’. He was mentioned as son and heir of Robert in 1415, when his father swapped lands of Glenkerry for Bellendean with Melrose Abbey. In 1426 he is described as son and heir of Robert of ‘Murtherston’ when he was granted the lands of Lempitlaw in the regality of Sprouston. He was probably the Walter on the ‘return’ for the lands of Caverton in 1429/30. In 1431 he had a ‘transumpt’ made of the charter of 1420 in which his father was granted half the lands of Branxholme. He obtained lands of Heap in Wilton from James Langlands in 1431, a public instrument to that effect being signed at St. Mary’s Kirk; he swapped these lands for Milsington in 1451 at Wilton Kirk (with a confirming deed in 1453). He witnessed a confirming charter for lands in Primside in 1432. In 1434 he was ‘lord of Morthousyoun’ in a document relating to Ladyurd. He was knighted by James II in 1437, and also granted a charter for lands in Eckford in 1439 (confirmed in 1450), apparently for capturing Gilbert of Rutherford. He is recorded in a document as Lord of ‘Morthouystoun’ in 1434, and was still presiding over the Baron Court of Kirkurd in 1455. He witnessed several charters granted by James II in the 1430s to 1450s. In the 1430s he gained lands at Grahamslaw from William Crichton of that Ilk (who is described as his relative, and was clearly a close political ally). In 1438 he was on the ‘retour of inquest’ for Ker of Altonburn. In 1443 he witnessed a charter for William Cranston of Crailing. He witnessed a charter for Borthwickshiel in 1444 and a lease for related lands in 1445. In 1446 he exchanged the family’s Lanarkshire property (Murthockston) for the rest of Branholme, with Thomas Inglis; in response to Inglis’ complaint about English incursions on Branholme, he supposedly remarked that ‘the Cumberland cattle were as good as those of Teviotdale’. He thereby acquired Todshawhill, Todshawhaugh, Goldielands, Whitlaw, Whitrig and part of Over Harwood. In 1446 he was witness to a charter for Ker of Altonburn and in 1446/7 was on a ‘retour’ panel for Ker of Altonburn. In 1447 he bought the ‘Cousinlands’ (to the north of Branholme) from Margaret Cousin, wife of Simon Routledge and mother of Robert Scott (hence probably a relative). He witnessed a charter for Stephen of Castlelaw (his brother) in 1448. In 1449/50, with the consent of his eldest son David, he renounced his superiority over the lands of Lochurd and Kirkurd to the chaplains of the prebend of Kirkurd (then part of the Collegiate Church of Dalkeith). In 1450 he was on the panel for the ‘retour’ of William Douglas for the Barony of Hawick. During the reign of James II he was one of the conservators of truces with England. He was a conservator of truces with England in 1449, 1451, 1453, 1457 and 1459, and he was one of the signatories of the Border laws document drawn up in 1449. In 1451 he exchanged the lands of Heap for those of Milngton with John of Langlands. He was on an assize for the Douglasses in Dumfries in 1451/2. In 1452 he witnessed the document creating the Barony of Kilmours for Alexander Cunningham; this was done while part of the expedition into England, led by James II. In 1453 he was granted the fees of the men of Teviotdale according to the Exchequer Rolls. In 1454/5 he witnessed a document for the Kers of Altonburn. In 1455 he led a group of Borderers against the remnants of the army raised to revenge the murder of William Douglas by the King, the battle taking place at Arkinholm. Thereby he was granted ‘Quhytehe-stir’ (Whitchester) in the Barony of Hawick (forfeited by John St. Michael), as well as lands in Selkirkshire. In 1456 he was on the panel that acquitted Andrew Ker of Altonburn of helping the English burn lands around Jedburgh. In 1457 he witnessed the document appointing Andrew Ker of Cessford as Bailie of the Lordship of Jedforest. In 1458/9 he obtained lands at Abington, Phareholm and Glendonnaanrig, which had previously belonged to the Douglasses. Along with his son Sir David he was also granted part of Langholm. In 1458 he had a charter for Glendowran and other lands in Lanarkshire (which may have been held by a cadet branch for another 3 centuries). He is recorded as Master Ranger of Ettrick ward from at least 1455 and was probably the ‘Sir Walter of Kirkurd’ listed as Master Ranger in 1467 when he had the farm of Eldinhope for his fee; he remained in this position until 1468. In 1461 (as superior of Branholme) he transferred the lands of ‘Kirktone and Toftis’ to Katherine Inglis. His sons David and Alexander witnessed a charter in Edinburgh in 1463. Also in 1463 he resigned his lands to the King, so that they could be regranted; this included Branholme, Lanton, Lempitlaw, Elrig, Rankleburn, Eckford, Kirkurd and Whitchesters. Branholme was then erected into a Barony; this was for services rendered to King James III and his father James II, particularly against James of Douglas. In 1463/4 he was given a discharge for sureties that he was liable to pay to the King’s officers, on account of helping to expel James Douglas. And in 1463/4 he witnessed the document where the King rewarded a number of local men for the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. He was also present in Parliament in Edinburgh in 1464. In 1464/5 he was on the panel for the inheritance of the lands of Cavers and Sheriffship of Roxburgh. Also in 1464/5 he witness the document giving a reward to Robert Scott of Todshaw and other local men for the capture of John Douglas of Balveny. He was also on the panel that decided on the disputed lands of Kirkton Mains and Flex in 1464/5. He married Margaret, daughter of Peter Cockburn of Henderland, and appears to have had at least 3 sons (although things are still confused in these generations): David, who succeeded; James of Kirkurd and Hassendean, ancestor of the Scotts of Hassendean, Burnfoot and Burnhead (although there is some suggestion that he was not a full brother of David); and Sir Alexander of Abington and Howpasley, ancestor of the Scotts of Thirlestane, Howpasley, Horsleyhill, Gilmanscleuch, Newburgh and Tushielaw. It seems feasible that John of Thirlestane, who gained the half Barony of Wilton in 1483, was another son. His seal bore a diagonal band with 2 crescents and a star, and the words ‘S’ WALTERI SCOT DE BUKCLUCH’. Walter (d.1471) eldest son of Sir David of Branholme and Buccleuch.
In 1465 he was contracted to marry Katherine, daughter of John Lindsay of Covington, involving the lands of Kirkurd. However, it is unclear that the marriage ever happened. In 1469/70, along with his father, he was made Keeper of Hermitage Castle by Archibald Douglas ‘Bell the Cat’. However, he did not live much longer, predeceasing his father and dying without issue. He is mentioned in 1470 in a charter for lands in the Hermitage valley; he is there described as son and heir of David of Buccleuch. In June 1471 he was gifted the relief of the lands of West Lilliesleaf and Whiton. By the following year David (his brother) was the heir (although he may be the Walter who was witness, along with David of Buccleuch, to a sasine for the lands of Borthwickshiel in May 1471).

Walter of Fenwick (15th C.) witness to a notarial instrument relating to the lands of Whitehaugh in 1456, possibly relating to a ‘retour’ witnessed a few years earlier. Probably the same Walter of Fenwick is recorded as witness in 1484/5 to a charter where Sir David of Branxholme gave Whitchesters to his son Robert (of Allanhaugh). In 1488 he was one of the bailies appointed for the precept in 1488 in which Sir Thomas Turnbull leased Greenwood and Lyne to Robert Scott, and also witnessed the same document. He may have been ancestor of later Scotts of Fenwick. Walter 3rd Laird of Synton (15th C.) probably son of George. He is said to have married a daughter of Scott of Hassendean during the reign of James II; however, it is unclear which Scott of Hassendean is intended. His children were John and Walter, both of whom succeeded. Walter 5th Laird of Synton (d.c.1463), younger son of Walter and brother of John the 4th Laird. He married a daughter of Sir John Johnstone of that Ilk and his sons included George, who succeeded. He is said to have died near the beginning of the reign of James III, but James IV is more likely. Walter (15th C.) listed among the local men who were rewarded by the King in 1463/4 for helping to capture John Douglas of Balveny. He is recorded as ‘niger Walterus Scot’, presumably a reference to a swarthy complexion. He is surely related to some of the other Scotts mentioned (John, Robert of Todshaw, Simon and Thomas), but it is unclear how. He could be the same as one of the other contemporary Walters. Walter (15th C.) held a sasine for the lands of ‘Wester Lympferis’ in Lanarkshire in 1478. It is unclear if he was the same as one of the other Walters. Walter of Whitehaugh (15th C.) recorded in the 1488 Charter for the Barony of Branxholme. He was listed among the heirs of Sir David of Buccleuch, the last to be explicitly related, suggesting he may have been a nephew of Sir David perhaps. He must have been related to David of Whitehaugh who is recorded in 1479, John in Whitehaugh, listed in 1501, and Philip of Heap, mentioned in 1508. Walter of Heap (15th C.) member of the panel or the inheritance of Branxholme and Buccleuch by Walter, grandson of Sir David in 1492. He was also ‘Walterus Scot de Hep’ in 1494 on the panel for the inheritance of Synton. He may be the same as Walter of Whitehaugh. Walter of Tushielaw (15th/16th C.) see Sir Walter of Howpasley. Sir Walter of Howpasley (d.1513) eldest son of Sir Alexander of Howpasley and Abington. His brothers were Robert (who probably started the Scotts of Thirlestane); William, Abbot of Melrose; Adam; and probably David of Tushielaw. In 1478 (possibly an error) he was ordered to pay William Inglis for the lands of Meiklehope in an arrangement involving his deceased father Alexander. He was witness to a transfer of land between Robert Scott of Haining and David Scott of Branxholme in 1482. He may be the Walter who acted as one of the Earl of Angus’ Bailies for infefting David Scott of Branxholme in the lands of Mangerton in 1482. In 1484 there was a claim by Jane Douglas (widow of David Scott, younger of Buccleuch) for 8 years’ rent of lands detained by him. He was mentioned in a charter of the Barony of Branxholme in 1488, clearly stated there to be son of the deceased Alexander. In 1491/2 he was one of the executors of the will of David of Buccleuch. He was appointed as tutor to young Walter (‘Wicked Wat’) of Buccleuch by Walter the 8th Laird and handled his affairs during his minority. In 1487–90 he was Master Ranger of Ettrick (and stated to be son of Alexander), when assigned the lands of Auldshope. In 1488 (probably just after the death of his father) and in the period 1484–90 these lands were said to be in the hands of him and his mother, Lady Joan Douglas; the lease was extended until 1496. In 1488 he was also leased the lands of Tushielaw, with David of Buccleuch as pledge. In 1493 he was surety for William Grams law at Hassendean Kirk (however, Robert of Howpasley also served as surety in 1493, and was probably his brother). He was also allowed to pay a fine for his crimes of bringing William Scott, called ‘Gyde’, William’s brother John (it is unclear whether they were related to him) and other ‘Traitors of Levyn’ to raid the lands of Harehead, as well as resetting Henry Scott and others. In 1494/5 he was surety for Adam ‘in

Auldinnischop (probably his brother), Robert of Deloraine, David son of James in Hassendean, Adam Turnbull in Hornshole, William Dickson in Ladhope, Thomas Lauder of Todrig and Andrew Dickson in Buccleuch. Also in 1494/5 he is probably the Walter recorded being ‘of Tushielaw’ (since these lands were also held by his family) when he was surety for David Turnbull, son of the Laird of Whithope. He was additionally listed in 1494/5 as owner (along with Walter Turnbull of Howpasley) of sheep that were stolen from Stouisle by the Grahamslaws of Newton. It is unclear if he or Walter of Buccleuch was the Walter listed as Ranger for Ettrick in 1494–6 (with John as Deputy Ranger). It is unclear when he ended his position as Custodian for the Ward of Ettrick, since it is difficult to separate him from Walter of Buccleuch (his cousin’s son), who held a similar role around 1500. In 1499 he was assigned the lands of ‘Laudehop’ (presumably Ladhope on the Yarrow), with the pledge being the Laird of Buccleuch; he also acted as pledge for Walter of Buccleuch in some other lands. He may also be the Walter of Tushielaw who was ‘coronator principalis de Ettrick’ according to the Exchequer Rolls of 1501, when he was liable for the fines of David Scott, Adam Scott and James Laidlaw: it was stated that since he had no means within the Sheriffdom of Selkirk, the charge was to be transmitted to the Sheriff of Peebles. He was also listed as ‘Walterus Scot de Howpaslot’ in the Exchequer Rolls of 1501, among mostly local men whose fines were compounded. He had a ‘letter of reversion’ for the lands of Appletreehall with Alexander Lord Home in 1502. Also in 1502 he served as surety (along with Robert of Stiches) for Patrick, son of Adam ‘in Hardwodhill’; also mentioned is Alexander Scott, who may have been related. In the same year he was surety for Adam Turnbull in Hornshole. In 1504 he was one of the ‘Bailies in that part’ appointed by Patrick, Earl of Bothwell to infet Walter of Buccleuch in lands in Annandale. In 1504/5, along with David Hoppringle, George Hepburn and William Midlemas, he held lands at Boonraw, which were sold to Robert Scott of Stiches. In 1506/7 he was ‘tutoure to the Larde of Bукcleuch’ (the young Walter, who had just succeeded) when he gave in his tauty accounts. In 1507 he had a charter for the lands of Ladhope in Ettrick Forest. He was still ‘tutor’ in 1509, when he was said to be the closest male relative. In 1509 he was on the panel for ruling on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers by James Douglas. In 1510 he was fined along with 35 others of ‘destroying the Woods of Ettrik-Forest’. Also in 1510 he was recorded in a pledge by Margaret, wife of James Scott in Falside. He was recorded as part of an assize in Edinburgh in early 1513. He married a daughter of Elliot of Larriston. The gift of wardship of his lands and marriage (meaning the financial gains from the contract etc.) of his daughter went to James Lundie in 1517. His daughter and heirress (at least for some lands) was Janet, who married Thomas MacDowell, and transferred Midshiel and Appletreehall to her uncle Robert in 1532/3. He was succeeded by his son Robert. He died at Flodden. Walter (15th C.) name of 2 men recorded in the last will of Sir David Scott of Branzholme in 1491/2, in addition to Walter of Howpasley. ‘Waltero Scote’ was left 3 sheep and ‘magno Waltero Scott’ was left 20 shillings. Walter of Whitchester (15th C.) recorded in the 1493 Justice-aire held in Jedburgh when he was surety for Thomas Brown in Minto. It may be that this is an error for Robert of Whitchester. Sir Walter (1470s–1504) 8th Laird of Buccleuch, grandson of Sir David, who he succeeded in 1492, his father David having died first. He was the only child of David and Jane Douglas, daughter of the Earl of Angus. He must have been the Walter of Branzholme receiving the lands of Mangerton in a sasine of 1484/5 (with George Fairneylaw as notary). In his grandfather’s last testament he was granted £40 and 11 oxen and made a ‘tutor’ of William Turnbull of Minto. In 1492 he succeeded to the lands of Branzholme, Whitchesters, Lempitlaw, Eilrig, Rankleburn, Milings and Kirkurd. However, he received sasine of half of Branzholme, together with Eckford and Langton only in 1500, the lands having been held in ward by the Crown for 7 years; this suggests he only reached majority in this year. He was still superior of the Barony of Kirkurd (Peeblesshire) recorded in sasines of 1493 and 1495. In 1494 he was on the panel for Alexander Erskine inheriting Synton and the office of Sheriff of Selkirk. In 1494/5 he acted as surety at Jedburgh Justice-aire for George Young, who had been captured at Minto. In 1494 he obtained a decree from the Lords of Council regarding the earlier plunder of his grandfather’s lands and house at Buccleuch. He may be the Walter who leased the lands of Whitshiels (near Langholm) in 1494. He is probably the ‘Walteri Scot’ who was made custodian of the Ward of Ettrick in at least the period 1496–98 (although there may be confusion with Walter of Howpasley); in 1496 he was liable for the fines of Adam Scott and others and he was given the rental of ‘Aldanehop’ for his fee as Ranger of Ettrick Ward. In 1499 he was tenant of Deloraine and ‘Wardishop’. In 1500 he was infefted in the lands of Grahamslaw by the Earl of Bothwell, and also his uncle Robert of Allanhaugh resigned Whitchesters into his hands as security for a loan. He was granted the lands of Whithope (in the Barony of Hawick) in a charter of 1502. Also in 1502 he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aine held in Jedburgh, failing to ‘give suit’ for his lands of Brauxholme, Lanton and Eckford. Additionally he was surety for William Dalglesh in Braidhaugh. His name was mentioned in connection with negotiations for the marriage of King James IV with Margaret, daughter of Henry VII of England in 1502/3, and he witnessed the infeftment of Queen Margaret in the lands of the Forest at Galashiels in 1503. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Walter Ker of Cessford, who was widow of Philip Rutherford, younger of that Ilk. She long outlived him, being burnt within Catslack tower by Lord Grey and an English raiding party (supported by the Kers) in 1547. He was succeeded by his son Sir Walter (‘Wicked Wat’). A 2nd son was William of Whithope. He was said to have been one of the few nobles to escape from Flodden, but this seems more likely to have been his son, Sir Walter. His widow and son are recorded being assigned the lease of Deloraine and Warleshope in 1504; she had livery of these farms in 1510. Walter of Synton (d.c.1500) probably son of George, he is usually referred to as being the 7th of Synton. However, there is sometimes confusion with his grandson, Walter. He is mentioned in family writs in 1487 and flourished during the reign of James IV. Some early family histories say he married a daughter of Cockburn of Hernderland and secondly a daughter of James Riddell of that Ilk, but this seems to be incorrect. His son was Robert of Stiches and later of Synton (however, the relationship between the Scotts of Synton, Stiches and Headshaw are confused in these generations). Walter (15th/16th C.) son of James of Hassendean (probably the same as James of Kirkurd) who witnessed a document for the Scotts of Braxholme in 1500. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Walters. Walter (15th/16th C.) son of Robert of Hartschaw. In 1499 he gave his consent for Middleston of Langhope to be assigned to Patrick Home. This was probably the Langhope in the Ale valley. However, it is unclear where ‘Hartschaw’ was (perhaps an error for Headshaw). Probably the same Walter was feued the east steading of Langhope in 1510, and was the son and heir of Robert who feued the west steading of Gildhouse (also called Dodbank) in the same year. Walter of Headshaw (d.bef. 1510) probably descendant (perhaps son) of John of Headshaw, son of Walter of Synton. In 1583/4 he was on a list of Borderers ordered by the Privy Council to render their houses for the King’s use He is recorded as ‘of Eidschaw’ when witness to a sasine of 1484/5 for lands of Mangerton going to the Scotts of Braxholme. In 1484 he was ‘Walter Scott de Edschau’ when he was one of the men directed by the Earl of Angus to infeft Robert Elliot of Redheugh in some lands. In 1484/5 he also witnessed a document relating to Whitchesters. His son David leased lands in the Ettrick valley in 1486. In 1487 his son Robert bought the lands of Boonraw from James Newton of Dalcove, and he was one of the witnesses to the sasine (this Robert appears to be the same as Robert of Stiches). In 1493 he was ‘of Edschaw’ when he was allowed to ‘compone; for being associated with ‘the thieves and traitors of Leven’. In 1493 and 1494/5 his son Robert was surety for Hector Lauder, brother of the Laird of Todrig. He is listed in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501 among mostly local men whose fines were compounded. He may be the same Walter of Headshaw recorded in 1502 when he had a remission for stealing 8 oxen and 4 horses from Robert Lauder. John Scott of ‘Valis’ acted as surety (and hence may have been a close relative). Also in 1502 his son Walter had remission for stealing sheep from farms at Yair, Selkirk, Cauldshiels and Broadmeadows, with James in Ashkirk and Robert of Stiches acting as sureties. In 1502 he and Walter in Synton (his son) were sureties for John in Walls. Thomas, brother of Philip of Headshaw is recorded in 1510, so surely his descendants. His sons may have been: Philip, his heir; David; Simon of Dryhope; Robert; Walter; and Thomas. Walter (15th/16th C.) described as son of Walter ‘of Edschaw’ (i.e. Headshaw) in 1502. He had remission for several thefts, specifically stealing 80 sheep from William Ker at Yair, 60 sheep from Robert Brown and John Turnbull at Selkirk, 60 sheep from the Abbot of Kelso and Ralph Ker at Cauldshiels (this incident perhaps also involving Adam Turnbull in Hornshole and Chamberlain Newton) and 80 sheep from Ralph Ker at Broadmeadows (this probably also involving Adam Turnbull, as well as David ‘the Lady’ in Stiches). James Scott in Ashkirk and Robert

Scott in Stirches acted as sureties. His daughter may have been the Janet who married Walter of Whitehaugh. The Walter in Headshaw who was recorded in 1533 is probably his nephew. Walter (15th/16th C.) recorded in 1502 being ‘in le newhalburnhede’. Along with Thomas Brown in Cavers he was surety for George Turnbull in Weens (who was one of the men charged with the murder of Robert Oliver at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh). He was presumably tenant at Burnhead, but it is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts of Burnhead or Over Newhall. Walter (15th/16th C.) son of Adam. Along with his father he is recorded in the Exchequer Rolls of 1512 relating to earlier payments for ‘fermes’ of their steadings in Ettrick Forest. He may have been son of Adam who was son of Sir Alexander of Abington and Howpasley. Walter (15th/16th C.) had the ‘fermes’ of Shaws and Berrybush re-mitted to him in 1513. He may be the same as one of the other Walters. Walter (15th/16th C.) listed on the 1526 remission for Borderers involved in attacking the Earl of Arran. He is recorded as being ‘in the Hauchied’, which may be Haughhead near where the Boonraw Burn joins the Teviot or the Haughhead in Eckford Parish. His sons William and Adam are also listed. Walter (15th/16th C.) probably son of Walter ‘the Ratton’. He is described as ‘in Askirk’ when part of an inquest at Jedburgh in 1533 regarding lands at Longnewton. He was probably the Walter, son of James of Askirk, who was listed in the remission given in 1526 to a large number of Borderers for attacking the Earl of Arran. He was probably also related to the John of Ashkirk who was killed in 1526. He was listed in 1532 among the witnesses to a public declaration made in Selkirk by William Scott in Headshaw. Sir Walter ‘Wicked Wat’ (1499/1500–1552) 9th Laird of Buccleuch and Branxholm, son of Sir Walter, whom he succeeded in 1504, with a reinfement of his lands in 1516 and a ‘retour’ in 1517. In 1508 he had a charter of Branxholme and Kirkurd. His ‘tutor’ when he was a minor was Walter of Howpasley. In 1512 he was feued the lands of Deloraine, Warleshope and Eldinhope, along with his mother Elizabeth Ker. He was probably made a knight on the eve of Flodden and is said to have been one of the few Scots noblemen to have escaped the battle. Throughout most of his life there was conflict with the Douglasses and the Kers of Cessford, as well as many Border raids. In 1515/6 he and his mother Elizabeth had a ‘notorial transsumpt of papal indulgences’ seeking a condessor to absolve them from all crimes and sins. In 1519 and again in 1524 (confirmed in 1525) he was appointed Bailie of lands belonging to Melrose Abbey, including Ringwoodfield, but also ‘Melroseland’, Ettrick, Rodono, Eskdalemuir and East Teviotdale; this was said to be for the ‘divers diligent labours and travails’ that he and his family and friends had done towards the Abbey, and the appointment was hereditary afterwards. In the 1524 charter he was assigned the farms of Northhouse and Thirlestane for his fee. In 1523 he and his wife Elizabeth Carmichael had a regrant of the family charter of the Barony of Eckford. In 1524 he was imprisoned in Edinburgh over a dispute with the Queen-Dowager over lands in Ettrick Forest, but he managed to escape. Later in 1524 he was part of an unsuccessful coup in Edinburgh, along with the Earls of Angus and Lennox and others. In July 1525 there was also remission to a group containing him (and William, Master of Glencairn) for a breach of peace and crime committed in Edinburgh, upon condition that they submit to punishment by the King, and that they help in ‘repressing of murmurs among the people and among strangers’; on the back of this document is an obligation to them for ‘the slaughtir of Duchemen, etc.’ In 1525 he was part of a bond among Border Barons to assist the Earl of Angus in keeping the peace. In 1526 he was pardoned (as leader of a large number of Borderers) for his role in gathering ‘in feir of weir’ in Edinburgh and then attempting to capture the Earl of Arran at Stirling (the events probably taking place a couple of years earlier). Also in 1526 he led a group of Scotts, Elliots and their followers to try to capture the young James V from the control of the Earl of Angus at Skirmish Field, near Melrose. This battle against Angus and his local supporters (the Kers and Homes) led to the loss of many men, and also the death of Ker of Cessford, which fuelled the later feud with the Kerrs. He was exiled for this act, but had remission along with several other Scotts and Turnbulls in 1527. He was fully pardoned in 1527/8 (probably because the young King had encouraged him in the attack at Skirmish Field) and was made Principal Cupbearer to the King, as well as Warden of the western part of the Middle March. In 1528 he was charged, by the King and his Lords who were at Jedburgh and Melrose, to show his support to the King; he came ‘in ane ledderin cote and ane blak bonet on his heid’ ready to obey the King’s commands. And in 1529 there was also royal ratification of an Act of Parliament stating that he had come to Melrose specifically at the request of the King and so was innocent of treason. In 1527 he had an agreement with James Murray of Falahill to end the feud between the Scotts and Murrays. In 1528 he was ‘oversman’ to the arbitrators chosen to decide on the succession to the lands of Borthaugh. Also in 1528 he had a discharge from the King for paying the non-entry fees for the Lordship of Bedrule; he also had the right to arrange the marriage of the heir of Bedrule. He inflicted his son and heir David in all of his lands in 1528. In 1528/9 he had a ‘discharge’ from Patrick, Earl of Bothwell, for his wardship and related fees and ‘non-entry’ fees associated with several local Scotts. In 1529 he also received Angus’s former Lordship of Jedforest. About the same time he also had remission for ‘breaking ward’ from Blackness Castle. In 1530 he came ‘in the King’s will’ for the murder of John, Lord Fleming, and was fined for not entering 6 men for the same crime. Shortly after the raid on Border thieves, which James V arranged in 1530, he slew the ‘verrie crewall Thief’ Robert Johnstone ‘to gratifie the King’, but this led to a feud with the Johnstones. In 1531 he was entered in ward in Borthwick Castle (for unspecified crimes), his surety being Sir James Hamilton. In 1532 there was remission for Simon Armstrong and Clement Crozier for the ‘tresonabil taking of Walter Scot of Branxhelm, knyght, in cumpany with Inglismen, and tresonabil inbringing of thaim within the realme’. In 1532 he was one of the local men appointed by the King to a commission to capture some Croziers, Elliot and Foresters for raiding Teviotdale. Also in 1532 he is probably the Sir Walter who, along with Robert, made a public complaint in Selkirk about John Hepburn ‘pretended rector of Hawyk’ who had claimed teinds from them and then acted to have them excommunicated. In 1532 the Earl of Northumberland burned Branholme Tower and he made a retaliatory raid into England, laying waste Northumberland as far as the River Beamish, with a force of 3,000 men. In 1534 the King discharged him of the bond he had made for the good behaviour of Adam and Gavin Turnbull. His charter for the lands of Westhouses and Easter Mains of Hassendean was revoked by the King in 1535, as well as his charter of the superiority of the lands of Harden. This was for supposedly helping Lord Dacre burn Denholm and Cavers in 1535, for which he was briefly imprisoned; his estates were only restored in 1542/3 (as ratified by Queen Mary in 1545). In 1538 he was accused of ‘intromitting’ over lands in Jedforest that had previously belonged to Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. In the Exchequer Rolls of 1540 there are records of payments made to the ‘King’s shepherds’ in his lands of parts of Ringwoodfield, Broadlee, Philhope, Bellendean, Buccleuch and Eskdalemoor; this was presumably since he had temporarily forfeited these lands to the Crown. In 1540 the was in ward when the King gave him permission to pursue legal actions, particularly against Janet, daughter of Walter of Howpalsley. Around 1540 he (along with Robert of Waumphrey) was released on condition that he help keep peace on the Border, with 2 of their friends to remain in ward as pledges; he also agreed to take on the rule of Eskdale, Ewesdale and Wauchopedale if Lord Maxwell did not take it, and also to assist Lord Bothwell at Hermitage. In 1540/1 several other noblemen served as caution for him when he was prisoner in Edinburgh Castle. Then in 1541 he appeared in Elgin as instructed by the King and was ordered to stay northern the Spey and later to remain within Dumbarton. Also in that year he raised an action against Scott of Allanhaugh (who must have been a close relative) for attacking his wife with a Jedburgh staff. Furthermore he was accused of being responsible for the death of Englishman Jenkin Pott, along with Dand Ker. In 1542 he was also accused of stealing the King’s own sheep from the lands of Melrose Abbey; presumably such activity led to his later nickname ‘Wicked Wat’. Also in 1542 there was a letter summoning him to appear before the King. Another letter of 1542/3 certifies that his livestock and goods, which had been held by the Captain of Crawford are to be returned to him. Also in 1542/3 a letter from Mary, Queen of Scots, entitles him to speak and deal with Englishmen; this is confirmed in 1547, with permission for him to ‘intercommune with the Protector, army, and council of England’. In 1543 he was made hereditary Keeper of Newark Castle (through the patronage of Cardinal Beaton, who was related to his 3rd wife). In 1543 he signed the ‘Secret Bond’ with Cardinal Beaton, resisting English plans for the infant Queen Mary (to marry Prince Edward of England). He led large Scots contingents at Ancrum Moor in 1544 and Pinkie in 1547. It is said that it was his suggestion that the Scots fight on foot at Ancrum Moor, this leading the English to imagine they were abandoning the battle and thus to mount a disastrous attack. However, he was also imprisoned twice in Edinburgh for opposing Margaret. In 1544 the Abbot of Newbattle gave 100 merks for 19 years to him and his son William for the ‘grete plesoirs and steid done and to be done’ for defending the abbey’s lands and steadings from ‘thieves and broken men’. In 1544 he was granted lands in Ettrick Forest (including ‘Gawlayschellis’, and in 1546/7 was granted the tower at Hassendean (and other lands) by Melrose Abbey. In 1545 a Parliamentary decree put him at the head of 125 of the 500 horsemen who were mustered in Teviotdale. Also in 1545 he was among lairds in Teviotdale who signed a bond to settle feuds. In 1547 he aroused the enmity of the Kers of Cessford, who instigated Lord Grey to lead a raiding party, which burned and pilaged Hawick, Selkirk and his lands in the valleys of the Ale, Yarrow, Ettrick, Teviot, Slitrig and Borthwick, as well as killing his mother in Catslack Tower. In 1547/8 he was involved in a bond of loyalty to the Crown along with the Kers. In 1548 he had a letter from the Queen, to be proclaimed at the market crosses of Jedburgh, etc. setting him in all endeavours, in return for his ‘band of manrent’. Also in 1548 he received ward of the lands belonging to Turnbull of Minto, until the heir was of lawful age. In 1549 he was (re)appointed Provost of Selkirk. In 1549 he petitioned the Lords of Council for the right to post summonses at the market crosses of Jedburgh, Selkirk, Peebles, Haddington, Hawick and Melrose for Walter Ker of Cessford, John Kerr of Ferniehirst and others who had helped the English in the spoliating of the Borders, and also of attacking his lands at Newark, within Ettrick Forest and in the Borthwick valley. He was made Warden of (half of) the Middle Marches in 1550 (between Minto Craig and Craik Cross) and also Warden and Justiciar of Liddesdale in 1550/1, with permission to hold courts and in pursuing fugitives ‘burn their dwellings, and put their families to fire and sword’. In 1550 John, Archbishop of St. Andrews had a bond of maintenance with him, in response to his bond of manrent. In 1551 there were letters from the Queen, to be proclaimed at market crosses, in support of his work as Warden, and an Act of the Privy Council brought by him for the same purpose, laying down rules that were expected also to be imposed by the English Wards. Also in 1551 he signed the ‘Auld Band of Roxburgh’, his name appearing first. In 1551/2 there is a ‘letter of inhibition’ by him against Walter Ker of Cessford and others to prevent them disposing of property to avoid paying his claimed damages. In the middle of 1552 he had a letter excusing him of attendance at inquests etc., on account of his duties as Warden and since he was ‘now past the dait of lx zeris’. He was slain on Edinburgh High Street by Ker supporters and is buried at St. Mary’s in Hawick. The gravestone of his natural son, Sir Walter of Goldielands, eulogises thus: ‘the valiant Laird of Bvcklevch yat vas slane crevelie be ye Kerris in Edinburgh within ye nicht being vnaaccompanieit with his friends or servandis onlie except tva of his dependeris attending on him not respecting nor vspecting thair intetivne: This happinit in September the 53 zeir of his age ye zeir of God 155(2)’. He married 3 times and had several children, including: Sir David, who died unmarried; Sir William of Kirkurd, who died just a few months before him, but whose son Walter succeeded; Walter; David of Stobicote; John; Grizel, who married William, 7th Lord Borthwick, and later John Cairncross of Colmslie; Dorothy; Janet, who married John Cranston of Cranston, and later Robert Scott of Haining; Margaret, who probably married Robert Scott of Thirlestane; and Christian. One of his illegitimate sons was Sir Walter of Goldielands. Another daughter may have been Jean, who married Robert Elliot of Redheugh and later Gavin Elliott of Stobs. In 1519/20 he entered into a marriage contract to marry his daughter Janet, (or failing her, another daughter, Christian, or any other woman he named!) to John, son of James Gledstains of Cocklaw; however, it is unclear who married Gledstains in the end. The contract also stated that if Cocklaw was inherited in the female line, then the heir should marry his son John. In 1551 he was appointed ‘tutor-dative’ to his nephew and heir Walter, son of David. But he was succeeded by his grandson, Sir Walter (so there is some confusion here). His first wife was Elizabeth, daughter of Bartholomew Carmichael of that Ilk; she died before 1530, after giving him his eldest 2 sons. In 1530/1 he secondly married Janet, daughter of Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst, sister of one of his bitter enemies, and widow of George Turnbull of Bedrule. This marriage ended soon after in divorce, with no children. His third wife was Janet, daughter of John Betoun (or Beaton) of Creich; she was the model for the ‘Ladys of the ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’ and survived her husband by 16 years. Her sister also married Sir Walter’s son Sir William (‘Whitecloak’) – ‘Bards long shall tell How Lord Walter fell!’ startled burghers fled, afar, The furies of the Border war, When the streets of high Dunedin Saw lances gleam, and falchions redden And heard the slogan’s deadly yell – Then the chief of Branksome fell’ [SWS]. Walter (16th C.) listed as being ‘in the Hanyng’ in the 1526 pardon that a large number of Borderers had for attacking the Earl of Arran. He is there listed between William and George, tenants of Phaup, who may have been related. He is also listed as ‘in Haining’ when part of an inquest in Jedburgh in 1533. He was probably the younger son of John of Haining, who died at Flodden, and who acted as ‘tutor’ to his nephew Thomas in the 1530s. Perhaps the same Walter in Haining occupied the Crown lands of Haining and Hyndhope in 1541. Walter of Robertson (16th C.) probably son of John of Robertson, who was mentioned several times in the 1520s. He is recorded in 1535 in a charter executed at Selkirk in which he sold Robertson and Howcleuch to his ‘brother-german’ Stephen ‘in Valis’ (probably ‘Walls’ in Dryfesdale, north of Lockerbie) and Stephen’s son John. He probably had no children of his own.

Walter (16th C.) listed as being ‘in Etschawe’ in the Selkirk Protocol Books in 1532 when he declared that John Riddell of that ilk and William Scott of Harden were his arbiters in his dispute with Elizabeth Murray. He is also described as ‘in Eteschaw’ in 1533 when he was part of a panel at a Jedburgh inquest for a dispute over the lands of Longnewton. In 1541 he is recorded being ‘in Edschawe’ and occupying the lands of Hartwoodburn. He was probably a descendant of the earlier Walter of Headshaw. He may be the Walter, son of Walter of Headshaw who had a remission in 1502 for stealing sheep from Yair, Selkirk, Cauldshields and Broadmeadows. Or he could be that Walter’s nephew, who is recorded in the 1560s. Walter (16th C.) 2nd son of George of Borthaugh, by his 2nd wife, and younger brother of John (who had a different mother). There was a dispute in 1528 over the succession to the estates of Borthaugh, Commonside, Dryden and ‘the Wallis in Drynisdaile’ (probably the place now called ‘St. Michael’s Walls’, in Dryfesdale near Lockerbie), because his father swore on his deathbed that he never had dispensation to marry his 1st wife, who was his cousin. The panel ruled in favour of his brother John, but gave him the ‘40s land of the Quhomnis, and 40s land of Woltoun Greyne’, along with a 10-shilling land in ‘sum uthir peciable and profitatabel place’. These were probably ‘Whames’ and somewhere around ‘Wiltonburn’ perhaps. Walter (16th C.) baker in Edinburgh. In 1541 he was tenant in ‘Kirksteid of Farnynhope’ in the Yarrow valley. This was adjacent to Dryhope. He was probably related to other local Scotts. Walter ‘Wat’ of Synton and Stirches (d.c.1561) eldest son of Robert of Stiches and Synton. His brothers were William and probably David. He was known as ‘Watty Fire-the-Braes’. He is referred to as the 9th Laird of Synton, but there appears to be much confusion with his grandfather, Walter. There is also confusion over precisely who was the first Scott of Harden, but it may have been this Walter (or his father Robert, or brother William). He is probably the ‘Walteri Scott de Styrkschaw’ whose brother William was a witness to the 1507/8 document relating to the tower in Hawick ‘between the bridges’ for the Scotts of Whitchesters. He may be the Walter of Synton who was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the lands of Alemoor in 1509. He is probably the Walter, son of the deceased Robert, who is recorded owning a 5 merk land in Synton in 1510 (in an indenture for neighbouring lands between the Erskines and Kerrs). He transferred the lands of Harden to his brother William, according to a sasine of 1512, as confirmed in a charter of 1535 (except apparently for one acre of land at the eastern side). In 1517 he was on the panel of ‘retour’ for Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. In 1519/20 he was listed as someone who could give permission to change the details of a marriage contract between the Scotts of Buccleuch and the Gledstains. He was probably the Walter of Synton who appeared before the Lords at Edinburgh in 1524/5 to swear an oath to keep the peace in support of the Earl of Angus, who was Warden, and the Walter ‘of Syntoun’ who was listed on the pardon of 1526 for a large number of Borderers who had attacked the Earl of Arran. Additionally he was named in the letter of treason, nominally written by King James V, for his role in the Skirmish at Meltrose, led by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme. However, in 1527 he was among the local lairds given remission for mustering their supporters at Melrose (i.e. Skirmish Field) and Linlithgow. Also in 1527 he witnessed the agreement ending the feud between Sir Walter of Branxholme and James Murray of Falahill. He was part of the arbitration panel to decide on the dispute succession of the lands of Borthaugh in 1528. He was also probably the ‘Walter Scot in Syntone’ recorded in a discharge of ‘non-entry’ in 1528/9 between the Earl of Bothwell and several local Scotts; there he was holder of the lands of Boonraw and Outersiderig, as well as Alemoor. He was mentioned in the indenture of 1529 to attempt to end the feud between the Scotts and the Kerrs, and also mentioned in 1535 in the valuation for lands of the Archbishop of St. Andrews. He was witness to a charter of 1540 in which Simon Scott of Fenwick resigned lands of Nether Harden to William Scott of Harden. He may be the Walter ‘in Syntoun’ recorded in 1541 as tenant of half of the lands of Huntlee, as well as Whitehaugh Brae, Langhope and Dodbank (in Ettrick). In 1547/8 he was one of the supporters of Sir Walter of Branxholme when they had a bond, along with the Kerrs, who had sided with the English at Pinkie and burned Hawick, etc.

In 1550 he was one of 10 Scotts who signed a bond with the Queen, to keep good order and deliver up criminals. Also in 1550 he was one of the 2 curators for James Crichton of Cranston Riddell (step-son of Sir Walter of Branxholme). In 1551 he was surety for Robert Ormiston of New Hall (later of Old Melrose) and Robert’s nephew James Ormiston of that Ilk. In 1553/4 he was listed (transcribed ‘of Lyntoun’) among Scotts and their supporters who a group of Kerrs promised not to harm. In 1561 he was (along with Thomas of Haining and Nicholas Rutherford of Houndalee) cited by the Privy Council for non-appearance; his son Robert appeared in his place and promised to produce ‘Hob Flescheour’, who was accused of theft in Berwick. He married Marjorie, daughter of William Cockburn of Henderland, and secondly married a Riddell (perhaps Margaret, daughter of James of that Ilk). In some early histories it is claimed that he (or his son perhaps) married a Riddell who was his father’s second wife’s younger sister, It was probably his son John who was entered in ward in Borthwick Castle in 1530/1, along with William, son of Robert in Allanhaugh. His eldest son John (by his first marriage) probably predeceased him. Robert, a son to his 2nd wife, was probably the progenitor of the Scotts of Whitslade and Stiches, while a 3rd son, Thomas, was probably ancestor of the Whitehaughbrae branch. His son Walter (although this could be an error for his grandson) is recorded in 1561 when he entered Sandy Fletcher for crimes against an Englishman. Scott of Satchells also suggests other sons (William of Huntly and James of Satchells), but these seem unclear. His 8 daughters were said by Scott of Satchells to have married (in order): the Laird of Black Ormiston; Langlands of that Ilk (possibly James if this was the mid-1500s); the Laird of ‘Toftburnt’ (although it is unclear where this is, perhaps a Turnbull of Tofts); the Laird of ‘Ailmour’ (presumably Alemoor, although it is unclear who this could be); the Laird of Falnash’ (presumably an Elliot); the Laird of ‘Chapel-Middlemoss’ (possibly William Middlemas of Chapel in Lilliesleaf Parish); a daughter who is missed out; and the youngest who firstly married Philip Scott of Kirkhope (brother of Robert of Thirlestane), secondly Walter Scott of Woll (and not William, as stated in one source, although it is still unclear who this was) and thirdly Alexander Chisholme of Parkhill (who did in fact exist in the late 16th century). He may have been referred to as ‘Auld Synton’, and is supposed to have died at the age of 90. It is suggested that he gave up the lands of Synton (although not the designation) to his eldest son John, and then lived himself at Whitslade, which he inherited through his first wife. His 2nd wife died at Whitslade in 1585. Walter of Stiches (16th C.) recorded as ‘Walter Scot of Styrkschaw’ in 1528/9 when he was a witness to a discharge of Patrick, Earl of Bothwell, related to several local Scotts. Walter of Synton is mentioned there, showing that they were not the same man (which is confusing). Walter (15th/16th C.) successor to Philip of Whitehaugh (and Heap). He succeeded to Wester Heap in 1532. He married Janet, daughter of Walter Scott of Headshaw. His sons were: William, who died unmarried; and Walter, who sold the estate to his uncle Robert of Headshaw. Walter ‘Wat’ (d.bef. 1550) recorded as being called ‘of tevidiaile’ in 1550 when his son took sasine for the lands of Colifort in the Slitrig valley. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Scotts. Walter (16th C.) tenant of Todshawhaugh, recorded in 1549 when tenants and servants of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme complained about their farms being burned by a group of Englishmen and Kers in the previous year. He was probably related to William ‘callit Wille of Todsschawhauch’ who was a resident of Whames at the same time. Walter (16th C.) listed among people who were owed money by William Scott, younger of Branxholme, when he died in 1552. He is listed as ‘Waltero Scot in Hawick’. He may be related to some of the near contemporary men who were ‘in Hawick’. Walter of Dryhope (16th C.) recorded in 1573 when, along with Sir Walter of Birkinside (and Howpasley), they were to enter into ward in Edinburgh a man from Laidhope. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts, but may be the same as a contemporary Walter. Sir Walter ‘Wat’ of Goldielands (1531/2–1596) natural son of ‘Wicked Wat’, to an unknown mother. It is said that his father built the tower at Goldielands for him, but if so this must have been shortly before his murder in 1552. He led the Scotts during the minority of the heir to Buccleuch (possibly for an extended period, since there was no heir of age for more than 30 of the subsequent years). He must thus have been powerful and important locally, so it is odd that so little is known about him. He is probably the ‘Walter Scot sone naturale of unquhile Walter Scot of Broxholme Knych’ who is listed among Scotts who appeared before the Privy Council in 1562 to promise to end their feud with the Kers. He appeared personally as leader of the Scotts when they made a bond to keep the peace with the Kers of Cessford and others in 1564. He and James Gledstains of Cocklaw presented a number of Hawick residents at a court case in 1574, possibly related to a raid. Also in that year he was one of the witnesses to the last testament of Sir Walter of Branxholme (being transcribed as ‘of Gorlandis’ and ‘Gordelandis’). Additionally in 1574 he was one of the noblemen appointed to resolve the dispute between the Johnstones and Maxwells. He was probably the ‘Laird’s Wat’, who was present at the Raid of the Redeswire in 1575. Also in 1575 he had an assurance with Lord Borthwick. In 1577 he was referred to as the effective leader of the Scotts in a letter from Walter Ker of Cessford to the Regent Morton. In 1576 he was cautioned for several Borderers accused of rieving and in 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned (he was surety for several men). He was then found liable for the fines, which, if he failed to pay, would be taken from his goods or lands. In 1580, the Earl of Morton (Walter of Branxholme’s legal guardian) made a promise on his behalf for the behaviour of ‘Branxholme’s men dwelling in Teviotdaill’. In 1580 he was the Bailie of Buccleuch who raised a party to follow those who had raided the Gladstains’ farm at Meikle Whitlaw; he was wounded and captured along with about 40 others, when they were set upon by a large group of Armstrongs and Elliots on their return through Liddesdale. He had to arrange to pay Lanie Armstrong, Laird of Whithaugh, for their release. But he, James Gledstains of Cocklaw and Robert Elliot of Redheugh complained to the Privy Council, and the attackers were all denounced as rebels. In 1580/1 he was referred to as ‘baillie, and appointit to answer for the landis and tennentis of the Lard of Bukcleuch’. Also in 1581 he was among a list of Border Lairds who denounced their bonds with Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus. In 1581 he promised to the King to answer for the behaviour of the men dwelling on Walter Scott of Buccleuch’s lands and in particular was also directed in 1581 to find caution for Walter of Headshaw and associates, who had failed to appear. However, that same year he was among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. He was entered into ward in Edinburgh Castle in 1581, with his cautioners being Robert and Mungo, Burgesses of Edinburgh, along with James Gledstains of Cocklaw, the amount being £2000. Later Paul Doig of Coldoch was his cautioner in case he should ‘brek the assurance’ for crimes committed by the Scotts on Dand Elliot of Braidlie by Robert of Headshaw and others. Additionally in 1581 he was allied with James Gledstains of Cocklaw and Robert Elliot of Redheugh when they had a set of complaints made against them to the Privy Council by Martin of Braidlie, Simon Armstrong of Mangerton and Lance Armstrong of Whithaugh; he was clearly acting as chief of the Scotts at that time. He was denounced as a rebel in 1583 for non-appearance, when he was recorded as ‘chamberlain of Atrik Forrest’. He was ‘Wat Scot of Goldelandis’ among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. About the same time he led the signatories on a bond of support for the Warden of the Middle Marches, Sir Thomas Ferniehirst. He witnessed the 1586 marriage contract between Margaret Ker and Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. He was appointed as a Parliamentary Commissioner for Roxburghshire in about 1588. He had a ‘Band of Association’ in 1589 with about 50 men of his clan; this proscribed any Scotts from taking land from each other, transgressions going before a panel of 5 of their number, a similar rule even applying of he himself encroached upon any of his kinsmen’s possessions. About 1590 he was listed among a large number of landed men in the Borders. In 1592 he was instructed (along with Gideon Murray) to demolish Harden and Dryhope, because of Walter of Harden’s involvement in the Falkland Raid. In 1594 he is described as ‘cosin and deputie’ to Sir Walter of Branxholme in an indenture that he had with his English counterpart, servant of Lord Scrope. His son was also Walter and was probably present at the rescue of Kimont Willie; however, some have suggested that this was him, but being about the age of 64 at the time it seems improbable. He died later in the same year that the rescue of Kinmont Willie took place. He was buried in the vaults at St. Mary’s, and his tombstone was removed in 1863 for preservation in the Museum; his tombstone is headed ‘Valter Scot his Genealogie’ and he is recorded as ‘Valter Scot of Govdillandis’, son of ‘Sir Valter Scot the valiant Laird of Bycklevich yat vas slane crevelie be ye Kerris in Edinburgh’. A second stone, cut in high relief records ‘HIS QUALITIES’, namely ‘Heir lyis bvreit vis dome & virthines Heir lyis bvreit treyth & honestie Heir lyis bvreit fridome & gen tres Heir lyis bvreit manheid & cheritie Heir lyis bvreit lairgenes & lavtie Heir lyis bvreit hap & experience Heir lyis bvreit pietie & diligence Glorie be to God for althings’. Both stones were stencilled after discovery by Sir James Murray. Another stone bears his arms, with the Buccleuch arms crossed by the bar of illegitimacy. The name of his wife is not known. He was succeeded by his son Walter. He may also have had an illegitimate son, Charles of Crumhaugh, as well as a daughter who married Robert of Glack (but this may have been a later generation). A record of 1620 records Robert, ‘brother natural’ to Sir Walter of Goldielands (his son), showing that he had another son, Robert – ‘The laird Watt did well indeed, His friends stude stoutly by himself … ’ [CPM]. Walter (d.c.1553) son of David and nephew of Sir Walter of Buccleuch, to whom he was heir (although this seems confusing). His uncle was appointed as his tutor in 1551, but died the following year. Assuming there isn’t simply an error, he must have died about the same time, since his cousin, also Walter, son of Sir William of Kirkurd, succeeded to the Buccleuch titles. Walter (d.c.1555) recorded in 1555 when his brother Robert of Bowhill was served heir to his half steading called ‘Westsyd de Kershop’ in Ettrick. If Robert of Bowhill was son of David of Tushielaw, then he must have been a very young boy. Walter of Harden (d.c.1563) possibly son of William ‘Boltfoot’, 1st Laird of Harden. However, it is unclear if there really is an extra Walter between ‘Boltfoot’ and ‘Auld Wat o Harden’. If he existed, he only lived for a couple of years beyond his father. Satchells suggests that he married a Riddell, daughter of his step-mother. His sons were Walter, ‘Auld Wat o Harden’ and William ‘in the Mott’. Walter (16th C.) recorded as ‘in Hassindene’ in 1564 when his son James was one of the men tried (along with Elliots of Horsleyhill and others) for the murder of David of Hassindene. Sir Walter (1548/9–74) 10th Laird of Buccleuch, succeeded his grandfather in 1553/4, his father Sir William of Kirkurd (‘Whitecloak’) having died first. His ‘retour’ of 1553/4 as heir to his deceased grandfather Sir Walter, mentions an impediment to his inheritance on account of the enmity of the Sheriffs of Roxburghshire and Peeblesshire towards his kinsmen and friends. In 1554/5 it is recorded in a sasine that his tutor was Robert Scott of Allanhaugh. He is stated in one charter as achieving his majority in 1561. He signed a bond with the Kers in 1564/5, attempting to end the family feud (it contains the names of many of his supporters and retainers of the time, including Sir Walter of Goldielands, who appeared personally); it is promised the Scotts and Kers will ‘leif in perfite amité, lufe, and Cristiane nychtburheid’, and marriages are arranged between his sister Janet and Thomas, son of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford, as well as his father’s sister Janet with George, son of Andrew Kerr of Faldonside. However, another feud erupted with the Elliots in 1564, perhaps sparked by the murder of David of Hassindean. This led to raids into Elliot lands in Liddesdale and counter-raids on his lands in Teviotdale, including the burning of Hawick in 1565. In one such raid he and his men slew 7 Elliots and Croziers, while some of those from Liddesdale raided the Hawick area, killing one man and stealing cattle. In 1565/6 he was made Captain of Newark Castle. He was a devoted supporter of Mary Queen of Scots, raiding England with Kerr of Ferniehirst, expecting the Regent Moray to have been assassinated. In retaliation the Earl of Sussex and Lord Scrope blew up Branxholme and laid waste the lands around Hawick. In 1568/9 he signed another contract with the Kerrs relating to the murder of his grandfather; this time Sir Andrew Kerr of Hirsel, James Kerr of Corbet, Walter Hogg and their kin agreed to come to the church of Melrose to apologise, and the grandson of Sir Andrew was to marry Elizabeth Murray, his sister. His armorial seal of 1568 is the first to show supporters, in this case 2 bucks. In 1569 he signed a bond with the Kers in 1564/5, attempting to end the family feud (it contains the names of many of his supporters and retainers of the time, including Sir Walter of Goldielands, who appeared personally); it is promised the Scotts and Kers will ‘leif in perfite amité, lufe, and Cristiane nychtburheid’, and marriages are arranged between his sister Janet and Thomas, son of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford, as well as his father’s sister Janet with George, son of Andrew Kerr of Faldonside. However, another feud erupted with the Elliots in 1564, perhaps sparked by the murder of David of Hassindean. This led to raids into Elliot lands in Liddesdale and counter-raids on his lands in Teviotdale, including the burning of Hawick in 1565. In one such raid he and his men slew 7 Elliots and Croziers, while some of those from Liddesdale raided the Hawick area, killing one man and stealing cattle. In 1565/6 he was made Captain of Newark Castle. He was a devoted supporter of Mary Queen of Scots, raiding England with Kerr of Ferniehirst, expecting the Regent Moray to have been assassinated. In retaliation the Earl of Sussex and Lord Scrope blew up Branxholme and laid waste the lands around Hawick. In 1568/9 he signed another contract with the Kerrs relating to the murder of his grandfather; this time Sir Andrew Kerr of Hirsel, James Kerr of Corbet, Walter Hogg and their kin agreed to come to the church of Melrose to apologise, and the grandson of Sir Andrew was to marry Elizabeth Murray, his sister. His armorial seal of 1568 is the first to show supporters, in this case 2 bucks. In 1569 he signed the bond for suppressing thieves on the Border and in that same year he was served heir to his uncle David in Roxburghshire Sheriff Court. In early 1569 he apparently (according at a case before the Lords of Council 4 years later) despoiled some of what was left of Melrose Abbey, carrying away a great deal of the ‘stanis tymmer leid irne and glas of the said kirk’; he sold it to some burgesses of Selkirk, Dame Isobel Ker of Cessford and others, but claimed he was preserving the Abbey from the English army.
and promised to spend the same money to repair it. Also in 1569 he was obliged to enter someone in court in Dumfries. Additionally in 1569 he was found liable for the sureties for the Elliots of Falnash, Gorrenberry and Dodburn, who had not appeared, with his lands and goods to be held if he did not pay. He brought a ‘letter of inhibition’ against the teinds of the Kirks of Cavers and Hassendean in 1570, suggesting some local dispute. Also in 1570 he signed a bond on behalf of his kin, friends, etc., for keeping the peace on the Border. He had Branxholme Castle rebuilt in 1571. He was a principal leader in the 1571 raid on Stirling to seize the Regent Lennox, where he was captured and was for a while imprisoned in Castle Doune. In 1573 he was re-appointed as Captain, Constable and Keeper of Newark Castle and as Bailie and Chamberlain of the Lordship of Ettrick Forest. Also in 1573 he served as surety for some Borderers and signed the ‘Band of Roxburgh’. He was responsible for paying an English ‘bill’ of £3600 Scots after Ralph Ker broke ward in England. In 1574 he was witness to a discharge between Cranston of that Ilk and Douglas of Cavers relating to the lands of Denholm. At a very young age (in 1567/8) he was contracted to marry Margaret, daughter of David Douglas, 7th Earl of Angus. She continued the rebuilding of Branxholme after his death, later married Francis Stewart, Earl of Bothwell and died in 1640. His children included: Sir Walter, who became 1st Lord of Buccleuch; Margaret, who was executor of his will (and was said to have married Robert Scott of Thirlestane, but this would appear to be confusion with her great aunt); and Mary, who married William Elliot of Larriston. He was only 25 years old when he died. His ‘testament’ describes the numbers of sheep and cattle he owned on his various farms, as well as mentioning several Hawick residents, and is an invaluable record of details of local farming and business life 4½ centuries ago. Walter (16th C.) recorded as witness to an instrument of sasine in 1569 for the lands of Crook; he is ‘Walter Scot there’, meaning he resided near Crook. It is possible he is connected with the nearly contemporary Scotts in Orchard. Walter of Headshaw (d. bef. 1593) probably son of Philip. He may be the Walter, son of Philip of Headshaw who is listed on the 1526 remission for Borders men for supporting the Homes in an attack on the Earl of Arran; if so he must have been quite young at the time. He is probably the Walter ‘of Edschaw’ who is among a group of Scotts who signed a bond with the Queen in 1550 to keep order and hand over criminals. In 1553/4 he was listed among Scotts and their supporters who a group of Kers promised not to harm. He was listed among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in 1554 to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts in 1562. He is recorded as of ‘Edschaw’ in a panel of 1564 to hear the case involving Scotts and Elliots accused of killing David Scott of Hassendean. Also in 1564 he is probably the ‘Guilman of Edschaw’ who was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. In 1569 Robert of Thirlestane was caution for him. Also in 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting superiority of her father’s lands in Wilton. His son William was warded in 1571 and was also recorded swearing allegiance to the Crown and Regent in 1572/3, with James Langlands of that Ilk as surety. In 1573 he served as surety for several Borderers. In 1581 he was accused of leading a group who attacked 2 sons of Martin Elliot of Braehead as they rode past Headshaw, cutting off the hand of one, and seriously injuring the other. He was among a long list of Scotts summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1581, but failed to do so the first time, with Walter of Goldielands then ordered to find caution for him. Also in 1581 he and Dickson of Ormiston acted as cautioners for the Irving of Bonsaw (and could not write his name on the document): this was discharged in 1582. In 1583/4 he and his brother William were among some Borderers denounced for failing to appear before the Privy Council. His servants John Johnston and John Thomson are also listed in a citation in 1583/4. In 1585 he witnessed a bond (signed at Selkirk and Hawick) settling a feud between the Scotts of Branxholme and the Scotts of Allanhaugh. He is probably the Walter who married a daughter of Sir William ‘Whitecloak’ of Kirkurd. He had 2 sons: Robert, his heir; and another, possibly Walter, who was father of Robert of East Groundistone. Walter (16th C.) recorded as ‘in Bellhauch’ when he was one of 32 men to sign the 1569 bond for suppression of Border thieves. His name occurs between Gledstains of Cocklaw and Scott of Tushielaw, so he was probably local. Walter (16th C.) Hawick resident described as ‘gled Wattie Scot’ in the will of Sir Walter of Buccleuch in 1574. He was owed £18 by Sir Walter’s estate and listed along with many merchants and others. Walter of Hassendean (16th C.) listed in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme.
He probably served as factor or similar, along with several other men whose fees were exactly the same. He may be the same as the tenant in Hassendean recorded in 1564. Walter of Synton (d.bef. 1589) son of John, he succeeded his grandfather Walter. He was recorded (along with his brothers Robert, William and James) as the ‘young Laird of Syntoune’ in 1557 when he was involved in an attack by the Scotts on the church of St. Mary of the Lowes. He could be the Walter, recorded as ‘sone to Wat Scot of Syntoun’ (even although he was grandson) in 1561. Either he or his grandfather was the Walter listed among the men who appeared before the Privy Council in a promise to end the feud between the Kers and the Scotts in 1562. In 1564 he was listed among Border lairds who were ordered to support the Warden, Ker of Cessford. There is some uncertainty in these generations. He married Christian Riddell of that Ilk, and died without an heir. However, it appears he was succeeded by his brother George (although Scott of Satchells suggests that George was his son, which seems unlikely). His heir George is recorded as ‘in Syton’ in 1570. Walter, son of Walter of ‘Syuynoun’ was witness to a sasine in Melrose in 1574. His grandson Walter was served heir to his lands of Whitslade in 1605. Sir Walter of Birkensee and Howpasley (d.c.1580) eldest son of Robert of Howpasley. He witnessed a charter in 1549 in which his father granted his lands of Appletreehall to the Turnbulls, also witnessed by his brother Robert. He is recorded as younger of Howpasley in 1562/3. In 1569 he was on the panel of inquest for Grizel Borthwick inheriting superiority of her father’s lands in Wilton. Also in 1569 he appeared in Hawick before the Warden and Sir Walter of Branxholme, serving as surety for 23 tenants in Outtersiderig, that they would answer to the laws of the Lord Regent. In 1571/2 he signed the bond to act against Borders thieves. According to the register of the Privy Council he served as surety in 1571, 1573 and 1576 and was warded in 1571. In 1574 he was on the retours for Walter Scott of Branxholme as heir to his great-uncle David Scott and his great-grandfather Sir Walter Scott. Also in 1574 there was a ‘reversion’ with him for the mill of Easter Burnfoot, with William of Harden and James of Whitslade. His father appears to have died before 1567, but he did not succeed to Howpasley until 1578/9 and also held the lands of Birkenside in Berwickshire. He was in turn succeeded by his son Walter in 1580, although Walter did not become infeft until 1588. Another son may have been on the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. Sir Walter ‘Watt’ of Tushielaw (d.c.1618) eldest son of William of Tushielaw. In 1563/4 he and his father were ordered to replace the sheep that they had stolen from the lands of Bailielee, belonging to Dand Elliot. He signed the bond for suppressing the Border thieves in 1569 and was witness to the last testament of Sir Walter of Branxholme in 1574. In 1573 he is referred to as being ‘in Hartwoodmyris’ (and son of William of Tushielaw) when he was to present William Porteous ‘in Borthuikbra’ for trial in Edinburgh, as well as Littles from Midgehope; it is unclear if he was related to the later Scotts of Hartwoodmyres. In 1574 he was one of the noblemen appointed to resolve the dispute between the Johnstones and Maxwells. In 1578 he was ‘younger of Tushielaw’ when was pledge for ‘Archie Kene’ Elliot. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned. However, he later swore to the Council that he had entered into ward ‘Archie Kene’ Elliot. Also in 1578/9 there was a complaint by Patrick Murray of Falahill, that he and his accomplices had illegally taken over the lands of ‘Skaldoness’ (perhaps ‘Scaddow Rig’). Additionally, tenants in Gattonside complained that he and his supporters (including his brother James and his son Walter, as well as James, William and Dand in Selkirk) attacked the farm at Gattonside, breaking barns and stealing corn; failing to appear before the Privy Council, he was denounced as a rebel. He was still recorded as being ‘in Hartwoodmyres’ at that time. In 1579/80 he was accused of being involved in an ‘intrigue’ with Grizel Scott, wife of William, Lord Borthwick (and daughter of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme); this was also claimed to be ‘incest’, suggesting that he had married another daughter of Sir Walter. In 1581 he was still ‘younger, of Tushielaw’ among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. Also in 1581 he witnessed a ‘letter of slains’ in Hawick whereby Robert and James Scott forgave the Scotts of Allanhaugh and Over Southfield for the murder of their brother George. He was among the Border Lairds summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. In 1584 he was a cautioner for a number of men (from around Heriot). He resigned his lands to Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1588 (presumably to grant a new charter). He is mentioned in 1589 when his servant Robert Elliot ‘in Borthuikbra’ refused to restore 2 mares and... a horse that had been stolen. Also in 1589 he and his brother James signed a bond with other Scotts to settle differences amongst themselves. He is listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ in 1590. He gained Gamescleuch in 1591. In 1592 he had a charter, ratified by Parliament, for the lands of Tushielaw, including Coom Law and Gamilshewburgh, making it clear that other claims on the lands were to be disallowed. He is listed in 1594 among those implicated in the slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Dryfe Sands. His sons Robert, James and John are also listed. In 1601 he is ‘the Goodman of Tushellow’ listed among men of an assize to decide cases brought by the March Wardens. In 1603 he witnessed a ‘bond of manrent’ between Francis Armstrong of Kinmont and Sir James Johnstone of that Ilk. In 1607 he was ‘gudman of Tushelaw’ when he was witness for a report of the bailie court of the Regality of Melrose; his son John was also witness. In 1607 he was also paid bolls of malt by the tenants of Lessuden. Additionally in 1607 he was the first named in a long list of men charged with trying to stop James Maxwell and Robert Douglas taking possession of the Debatable Lands. In 1609 there is a court case involving him and his eldest son Robert with Alexander, Earl of Home over the lands of Cacrabank; there it is stated his wife was Elizabeth Gledstains. Also in 1609 he brought an action against Sir Robert of Thirlestane and his tenants for resetting Walter of Headshaw and others; this was related to the feud with the Scotts of Thirlestane, which had resulted in the death of Walter of Gamescleuch (brother of Sir Robert of Thirlestane) at the sword of his son John. In 1610 Robert of Headshaw, and Walter, fiar of Whitslade (for Sir Robert of Thirlestane) had a bond for not harming him or his sons Robert and James. Additionally Andrew Riddell of that Ilk and his son John had a similar bond. Also in 1610 there was a complaint against his servant Martin Johnstone, claiming that he and another man raided the farm of Nether ‘Liverhay’. In 1611 he complained that Francis Armstrong of Kinmont was occupying his lands of Mumbiehirst. In 1612 the Privy Council also asked him and Sir Robert of Thirlestane appear to resolve the contradictory claims of each family. He was one of the signers of the bond of 1612 to keep peace in the Borders, which his son Robert also signed. In 1614 his son John had remission from the King for the death of Walter of Gamescleuch, and had his ex-communication lifted in 1615. However, in 1616 he ran off with Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane’s daughter, Grizel, marrying her at Bellingham. The Presbytery records show that the couple were to appear to confess their sin, with the Laird of Thirlestane to be absent that day. It has been suggested that he was killed a few months later by a group of Scotts (including Simon of Bonnington), but this appears to be confusion with the murder of Walter, tenant in Essenside (a younger son of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden). He is recorded as still alive in 1617 and is also mentioned in a charter of 1618 when his lawful son Robert received lands at ‘Wairdlawrig’ in Selkirkshire from John Lord Hay of Yester. He married Elizabeth, daughter of a Gledstains of Cocklaw. His son Robert was ‘of Tuscholaw’ in 1619, suggesting he was deceased by then. His son and heir William is recorded in a ‘letter of inhibition’ with Walter, Earl of Buccleuch in 1619 (but this may be an error). He is probably the Walter of Tushielaw to whom the reversion of half of Glenkerry and Midgelhowe were resigned by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs in 1620 (although he may have been deceased by then). It is suggested in some accounts that he was succeeded by another Walter, however he was most likely succeeded by his eldest son Robert (unless 2 generations of Walters are compounded). His other sons were: James of Boyken and Glemnath; and John of Mackersway, who killed Walter of Gamescleuch. Both James and John took part in the rescue of Kimmont Willie. Walter (16th C.) recorded as ‘in Todrig’ when he witnessed a charter for lands in Rulewater in 1568. It is unclear how he might have been related to other local Scotts, unless he was Walter, son and heir of the Laird at that time, George of Todrig. Walter ‘Wat’ of Eldinhope (16th C.) recorded in the register of the Privy Council in 1576 when he relieved a surety. He appears as ‘Watt Scott of Eldinhope’. It seems likely that he is the same as one of the other contemporary Walters, probably related to the Scotts of Buccleuch (who held these lands). Walter ‘Wat’ (16th C.) recorded as resident of Over Southfield in 1581, along with ‘Syme Scot in Oversouthfield’, ‘Syme Scot thair’ and ‘Jok Scot, duelland in Hawik, callit Wattis Jok’. He was presumably related to the other men listed, all of whom were probably related to the Scotts of Allanhaugh, who were also named in the ‘letter of slains’ for the murder of George Scott in 1578. Walter (16th C.) Burgess of Hawick, recorded as ‘sonne to winquhell Thomas Scot in Hawick, zounger’ in 1585 when he was one of the witnesses to the bond in which Sir Walter of Branxholme and Robert of Allanhaugh resolved a family feud. It seems that his father was Thomas, and probably also his grandfather. Walter of Howpasley (16th C.) probably son of Sir Walter of Birkenside and grandson of Robert of Howpasley. He succeeded his father in 1580, but was probably then a minor, since he did not become ‘in-felt’ until 1588, when he also succeeded to the lands of Midshielis and Appletreehall (which had been ‘in the King’s hands’ for more than 7 years). He was probably the Laird of ‘Howpasilot’ listed among the Borderers summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1583/4. He was probably Laird of ‘Howpasilott’ when the ‘Roll of the Clans’ was drawn up around 1590. He may have had a brother who was at the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. He may have been father of William and/or the husband of ‘Lady Howpasley’ who was involved in the slaughter of sheep in 1616. He is recorded in 1591 as the possessor of the lands of ‘Gallowlaw’ in the Barony of Hassendean, charged by the Baron, James Cunningham, to produce charters for these lands. He was probably succeeded by William, who may have been the last of the direct line of Scots of Howpasley. Walter of Stiches (16th C.) listed among landed men of the Borders in about 1590. Walter of Chamberlain Newton, Walter of Harden and the Laird of Synton are all listed separately, showing that he was distinct from all of them; however, it is unclear what his relationship was with other nearly contemporary Lairds. He is probably also the Walter of Stirkshaws who along with William of Hartwoodmyres was under caution in about 1593, with Gideon Murray as surety. It is possible he was Walter, younger of Synton (son of George). Walter of Catslack (16th C.) signatory of the Scott clan bond in 1589. It is unclear how he may have been related to the later Scots of Catslack, perhaps he was father of William. Walter of Synton (d.1608) eldest son of George of Synton. His brother George became a saddler’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1610. His brother John was involved in a sasine with Robert of Satchells in 1609. In 1603 he was on the list of ‘pretended tenants’ ordered to leave their lands by James Cunningham, then Baron of Hassendean. In 1605 he redeemed 500 merks on these lands of Outtersiderig with William Elliot of Falnash. He is ‘Waltir Scot called ‘Old Walter’ in Synetone’ in 1608 when he was listed as part of a group of Scots and their followers who rescued 2 of their kin from imprisonment by the Bailies of Selkirk. In 1610 (apparently after his death) he was part of a petition, along with several local Langlands and Scotts, to have hornings lifted and penalties reduced; he is there referred to as ‘Old Wattie’. George Langlands of that Ilk acted as cautioner for him and several other Scots in this dispute against the Scots of Todshawhaugh and Ormiston. His son George was served heir to his lands of Outersiderig and Boonraw in 1610. He married Isobel, daughter of Douglas of Whittinghame (probably William, 3rd of Whittinghame, or perhaps Sir Archibald his son). Their children were: George, who succeeded; Anne, said to have married Capt. Gledstains of Whitlaw (possibly John); Capt. Archibald, who probably died unmarried; Elspeth; and Christian. His daughters are mentioned in his last testament. It may have been his widow who was summoned by the Presbytery in 1615 ‘for abusing the minister, Mr. Alex. Hog, publicly, by words and countenance, on Sabbath, betwixt the sermons, in the audience of the congregation’. She was probably also the ‘gudewife of Sintoun’ who received communion at both Hassendean and Lilliesleaf Kirks in 1615, rather than her own church at Ashkirk, resulting in rebuke fore his wife for both ministers. It is unclear what the nature of this dispute was, but presumably a doctrinal difference with her minister (Alexander Hogg). Walter of Deephope (16th/17th C.). Said to have been on the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Walter of Blindhaugh (16th C.) signatory of the Scott clan bond of 1589. He was probably related to the neighbouring Scotts, e.g. the Woll branch, who owned the lands of Blindhaugh later. Walter (d bef. 1612) tenant in Stonedge. In 1612 his nephew William complained to the Privy Council about Andrew Newton in Jedburgh not paying him. Walter ‘Watt’ of Gamescleuch (d.1609) 2nd son of Sir Robert of Thirlestane. He was probably the brother of Robert of Thirlestane included in a list of those involved in the 1593 slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Dryle Sands. He was probably present at the rescue of Kimmont Willie in 1596. In 1602 he was among the group of Scotts who attacked Adam Veitch’s lands at ‘Fechane’. He may be the Walter ‘of Thirlstane’ who was in the gang of Scotts that forcibly released 2 of their kin from imprisonment by the Bailies of Selkirk in 1608. Also in 1608 he was among the relatives and friends of Sir Robert of Thirlestane who were bound not to harm Archibald ‘of Dephoip’. He was slain by John, son of Walter Scott of Tushielaw, an incident that may have been the inspiration for the ‘Dowie Dens of Yarrow’. They had a duel on a field to the west of Yarrow Kirk, known as ‘Deuchar-swyre’. It is said that he went there as a mediator in the arranged combat between his nephew Robert, and John, son of Walter of Tushielaw. There followed much legal process before the local Presbytery and the Privy Council. John Scott’s pardon by James VI is recorded in 1614. He married Marion (or Janet), daughter of Sir Patrick Porteous of Hackshaw and had an only surviving son, Patrick of Tanlawhill and Thirlestane. Simon may have been another son and his daughters were: Marion, who married Rev. Robert Martin in 1617; and Margaret. Walter of Woll (d.c.1617) first noted in 1606, is he suggested (by Keith Scott) to have been descended from the Scotts of Haining. His brother John of Ashkirk was said to have been among those involved in the rescue of Kinmont Willie. He is recorded in 1608 when his brother John, and several others, attacked and maltreated some residents of Selkirk. He is there recorded as ‘Waltir Scot of Well’ and his half-brother John Turnbull (apparent of Harden) is also mentioned. In 1609 he was in Woll when he had a charter for the lands of ‘Blindhauch . . . , Braidley, Castelsyde, Leiphill, Rynnes, Rycroft, Roundhauch, Sandiehauch and Langupmedow’ in the Barony of Ashkirk. He married twice. By his first wife he had: Robert, who succeeded; and Francis. He secondly married Catherine Ormiston, and their children were: George; and Katherine. In 1617 his eldest son Robert was appointed as tutor to his younger children George and Katherine (half-siblings of Robert), by which time he was deceased. Walter of Bowhill (16th/17th C.) son of Robert, he was recorded in 1592 and was also known as being ‘of North Bowhill’. He had brothers William (who was at the rescue of Kinmont Willie) and James. He was succeeded by his eldest son Robert in 1609, and also had sons Walter, James and William. Walter of Huntly (16th/17th C.) possibly son of Robert of Huntly, who was said to have been in the raid that rescued Kinmont Willie. He was part of a gang of Scotts (from Bowhill, Thirlestane, Synton, etc.) who forcibly freed 2 of their kin from imprisonment in Selkirk in 1608. His brother William is also mentioned. He was also upon an inquest in 1612. However, in 1616 James of Huntly is recorded (perhaps his brother), suggesting he was deceased by then. Walter of Headshaw (16th/17th C.) transcribed as ‘of Edieslaw’ in a 1603 document when a large number of Scotts and some Turnbulls and Elliots were given a summons to remove themselves from land that was claimed by James Cunningham, Earl of Glencairn, to be wrongfully possessed. He may have been the 2nd son of Walter of Headshaw and brother of Robert of Headshaw (if so he could have been father of Robert of Easter Groundstone). In 1609 Robert of Headshaw and a number of other men were bonded not to reset him and several others while they were ‘at the horn’ for not signing an assurance not to harm Walter of Tushielaw. And later the same men were fined for resetting him and the others. This was part of the feud between the Scotts of Thirlestane and Tushielaw. Walter of Whitehaugh (16th/17th C.) one of the ‘pretended tenants’ who James Cunningham, Earl of Glencairn (and Baron of Hassendean) tried to evict in 1603. He is probably the younger son of Walter of Whitehaugh, who succeeded to the estate on the death of his unmarried older brother, William. In 1610 he was part of a petition, along with several local Langlands and Scotts, to have hearings lifted and penalties reduced; George Langlands of that Ilk had acted as cautioner for him and several other Scotts in this dispute against the Scotts of Toddshaw and Ormiston. He sold the estate to his maternal uncle Robert of Headshaw. However, he was probably still called ‘Walter Scott of Quhytehauch’ in 1627 when there was a complaint against him to the Privy Council, that he and a band of other Scotts (from Headshaw, Kirkhouses and Huntly) had forcibly removed the tenant from Hartwoodburn. He apparently claimed a right to these lands, and felt compelled to take matters into his own hands, taking the farmhouse ‘all in armes, with hagbuittis and pistollettis’, and threatening to debar anyone who tried to come there; it is unclear what happened as a result of the summons against him and his compatriots. Also in 1627 he gave caution to the Privy Council for John Geddes, Burgess of Dumfries. It is also hard to understand how he might fit in with the genealogy given by Scott of Satchells. Walter ‘the Hawk’ of Whitlade (d.c.1610) son of Robert. He lived in the earlier part of his life at Stirches, like his father. He was probably the first to style himself ‘of Whitlade’. His nickname was said to be ‘on account of his sharpness and activity’. He had a charter in 1575, in which he was described as son and heir of Robert, who was 2nd son of Walter of Synton. He was listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud.
with the Elliots and Armstrongs. In 1581 he was listed among the supporters of the Earl of Crawford who attacked Ruthven Castle; he was also listed in a complaint made by Margaret Erskine, Lady Ruthven against Crawford and his followers in 1583. He may have been the Walter of ‘Whitslaid’ who signed the Buccleuch Band in 1589. In 1591, along with Sir Walter of Buccleuch and Walter of Harden, he had a letter of pardon from the King for ‘intercommunicating with Francis’ Earl of Bothwell. It is said that his brother Robert went on the raid to rescue Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1603 he (probably incorrectly transcribed as ‘William’) was one of the large list of men given a ‘summons of removal’ from their lands in Hassenhead by the Baron at that time, James Cunningham. He is recorded in a ‘retour’ of 1605, as heir to his grandfather Walter of Synton, in the lands of Whitslade. In 1608 Sir Robert of Thirlestane was caution for him and 2 of his sons, that they not harm Archibald of ‘Deiphoip’. He married a daughter of Douglas of Cavers. His sons included: Sir Walter, who succeeded; Thomas of Todrig, who married Janet, daughter of Walter Scott of Harden, with pre-uptial contract in late 1613 (by which time he was deceased); probably Robert, who was on the Carlisle raid in 1596; probably George, recorded as brother of Walter in the 1620s when there were court proceedings with Robert, younger of Satchells; and James, who in 1620 married Agnes Scott, widow of Rev. Alexander Hogg and held lands at Eildon – ‘Whitslade the Hawk, and Headshaw came And warriors more than I may name; From Yarrowcleugh to Hindhaugh-sweir, From Woodhouselie to Chesterglen, Troop’d man and horse, and bow and spear; Their gathering word was Bellenden’ [SWS]. Walter of Northhouse (16th/17th C.). Scott of Satchells gives him first on the list of ‘Pensioners’ of the house of Buccleuch. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Walters. He could be the Walter, brother of ‘Will’ of Northhouse who was involved in a raid on Stobs in 1608. Satchells says he was ‘the first gentleman descended from the family’, presumably meaning he was the first Scott of Northhouse. Walter of Chapelhill (16th/17th C.) listed by Scott of Satchells among the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch. He was said to be half-brother to the Laird of Chisholme; it is unclear who the Laird was at that time, but Walter Chisholme married Ann, daughter of William of Chapelhill in the latter part of the 16th century, so perhaps ‘half-brother’ means brother-in-law. Sir Walter of Goldielands (d.aft. 1627) son of the ‘Laird’s Wat’, he was probably the Walter of Goldielands who took part in the rescue of Kinmont Willie in 1596 (although some have suggested this was his elderly father). He is ‘younger of Goldielands’ in 1593 when he witnessed a marriage contract between Gledstains of Cocklaw and Turnbull of Wauchope. He is recorded as ‘Walter Scot sone to Wat of Gaudylands’ in a 1594 list of those implicated in the slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Drye Sands. He is probably the Walter of Goldielands who was among the 15 Border lairds who were removed from their homes in 1608 for being ‘ringleaders suspected wither of their bygone conversation or for their present disordered courses’; he and Robert Elliot of Redheugh were sent to Cupar in Fife. In 1610 he was listed among the supporters of the Scotts of Thirlestane in their feud with the Scotts of Tushielaw. In 1612 he signed a bond at Jedburgh for keeping peace on the Border, along with several other local men. Also in 1612 he was on the panel of ‘retour’ for Tweedie of Drumelzier. These generations are quite uncertain (Keith Scott disagreeing with Tancred, for example). However, he did not marry Jean Riddell, since that marriage was with his son, who was also Walter. It has also been suggested that he died without issue and was succeeded by his cousin Walter, son of his uncle Charles; however, this seems like it refers to a later generation. He must be the Sir Walter of Goldielands referred to in a 1670 court case in which his son Walter demanded copies of earlier instruments of sasine relating to Goldielands (which existed in the former Hawick Town Clerk’s ‘protocol book’); in 1620 he was infested by Walter, Earl of Buccleuch, in the lands of Goldielands and Westcotegie, and the same day granted Goldielands to his son Walter, retaining the ‘liferent’ for himself. His ‘brother natural’ Robert is also mentioned in 1620. He is probably the Sir Walter of Goldielands recorded in 1627 as owner of ‘the Ladyland’ near Hawick (since his son Walter was not referred to as ‘Sir’). His wife’s name is unknown, and there are also no records of other children. However, it is possible that his wife was the ‘Lady Gaudielands, Edgerstons Aunt’ who was recorded on a document of 1666 describing the division of the burial space in the choir of Jedburgh Abbey among various Rutherfords. Walter Wat’ (16th C.) recorded as tenant in Borthaugh in 1569. He signed the bond to keep the peace on the Border. Sir Walter ‘the Bold Buccleuch’ (1565/6–1611) 11th Laird and later Scott 1st Lord of Buccleuch, only son of Sir Walter of Branxholme and Buccleuch. He succeeded his father in 1574, and although he was a minor, he had special dispensation from the Regent. There was a precept of sasine for him inheriting his father’s lands that were held by Melrose Abbey, including the Monk’s Tower in Hassendean, Ringwoodfield, Ettrick, Rodono, Eskdalemuir, Northhouse and Thirlestane, as well as the office of Bailie of Melrose. In 1574 he also was formally served as heir to the lands of his great-uncle David and his great-grandfather Sir Walter (these being legally necessary because of inheritance during the minority of previous generations). This included the Baronies of Branxholme, Eckford and Kirkurd, as well as Lanton, Whitchesters, Rankleburn, Lempitlaw, Elrig, Whithope, Dryden, Commonsdie, Girnwood, Borthaugh, Grahamslaw and lands within the Regality of Melrose. His ‘tutor’ was his great-uncle, James Douglas, Earl of Morton (who was asked to make Walter of Goldielands responsible for the behaviour of ‘Branxhelms’ men dwelling in Teviotdale’ in 1581). He became one of the most powerful barons of his time, was noted for his bravery, and is often regarded as the last of the Border rievers. He was constantly involved in attempts by the crown to keep peace on the Border, and went in and out of favour, including brief exile in France. He is recorded (presumably his agents) bringing a ‘letter of inhibition’ against Cavers Kirk for non-payment of teinds in 1577 and in 1588 he was confirmed in the ‘tack’ of the teinds of Hassendean and Cavers Parishes. In 1582 he and his accomplices were accused by the men of Bewcastle of stealing 200 cows and 300 goats and sheep. In 1582/3 he received remission from King James VI for crimes for which he had been imprisoned in Blackness (but escaped). In 1585 he had a bond with Robert of Allanhaugh, resolving a feud, partly the result of him being involved (during his minority) in the death of David, son of Adam of Allanhaugh. Also in 1585 he raised a force of Scotts to join the Earls of Angus, Mar and Bothwell (his step-father) against the Earl of Arran and James VI at Stirling Castle. In 1586 he was involved in raids into England, along with Bothwell and Maxwell. Also in 1586 he is recorded as ‘baillie principall’ of the Regality of Melrose. In 1587 the English Warden wrote that he led a band into Redesdale with 200 men (in daylight, with his pennant and a trumpeter belonging to the Earl of Bothwell), burning the woods and killing a man. In the same year he was briefly imprisoned in Edinburgh Castle for a raid against the English (perhaps the counter-attack following Sir Cuthbert Collingwood’s raid into Teviotdale). In 1588 he had a commission to protect Selkirkshire. Also in 1588 the English Warden complained that he and the Lairds of Chisholme and Whithaugh led about 100 Scotsmen on a raid into England, killing 4 men. A letter of 1589 from the King commended him for his loyalty and invited him and his followers to Edinburgh. However, in 1590/1 the English Warden were complaining about raids that he had led into England. He received permission to travel to France to alleviate his gout in 1590, and had a letter from James VI in 1591 allowing him to stay in Edinburgh and Leith until the weather improved to allow him to sail. He would have been the Laird of Buccleuch when listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’ in about 1590. He was knighted in 1590, appointed Keeper of Liddesdale in 1591 obtained a Lordship of Crichton and Liddesdale in 1595, and was Warden of the West Marches. In 1591 he signed a bond to support the King against the Earl of Bothwell (his step-father), and also in that year received a pardon for ‘intercommuning’ with Francis Stewart, 5th Earl of Bothwell (his step-father). He had a letter of protection from the King in 1591, declaring that all actions against him should be suspended and his lands protected, while he travelled to England and France. However, it also appears that he had fallen out of favour again, being stripped of his new responsibilities and effectively exiled overseas for 3 years (but returned after 15 months, with a letter allowing his return written by the King in late 1592). In 1593 he sided with the Laird of Johnstone against the Laird of Maxwell at Dryfesdale Sands (and later sided with Maxwell against Johnstone). Also in 1593 he was accused of being involved in the death of Charltons in England. In 1594 he had a commission (along with Alexander Lord Home and Sir Robert Ker of Cessford) to raise men to fight against the Earl of Bothwell and his followers. Later that year he gained many of the titles and estates forfeited by the Earl of Bothwell and was reappointed Keeper of Liddesdale; he wrote a letter confirming his position to the English Warden Scrope in 1594, which is signed at Hawick. He is recorded in a confirming charter of 1595 as still being superior of the lands of Kirkurd in Peebleshire. Also in 1595 he had a ‘bond of manrent’ with the Beatties and another with John Veitch of Dawyck, both signed in Hawick. In 1595/6 an English letter describes how he strengthened Hermitage Castle and ‘has drawn most of the Ellots to his house at Hawick, and keeps an extra-ordinarie number in house'. He acquired his nickname particularly after the rescue of 'Kinmont Willie' from Carlisle Castle in 1596, when he led 80 horsemen on a daring raid into England to free a reiver who had been treacherously captured. There followed much arguing, with the English wanting him delivered up, and meanwhile an English force razing Liddesdale, then his force raiding into Tynedale (where 36 men were captured and hanged). After further complaints by Queen Elizabeth he surrendered at Berwick and was again briefly exiled, although he was received by Elizabeth and is said to have impressed her, she stating ‘With ten thousand such men, our brother in Scotland might shake the firmest throne of Europe’. Although considered a hero locally, Lord Scrope described him as 'ever the chief enemy (and still is) to the quiet of the border'. In 1596 there was a complaint that ‘with his trumpeter and 500 men' he attacked the house of Bankhead on Esk, taking prisoners as well as goods. In 1597 he served on Parliament as a minor baron. There is an indenture, signed by him at Copshawholm in 1597, to deliver 5 Scotsmen to the English Deputy Warden. In 1597 he is also supposed to have personally led a party that rode into Tynedale on the Sabbath, burning 20 houses and killing 14 men who had taken home booty from Scotland. He signed in 1599 an agreement with the Elliots of Redheugh and Braidlie to bury their differences. Also in 1599 he was granted his local lands, with Branxholme being erected into a Barony. As Warden, he had bonds with both the Armstrons and the Elliots to be answerable for any complaints from England about the inhabitants of Liddesdale. He spent several months in Paris, again for his health, with a letter of safe conduct being issued by Queen Elizabeth in 1599. Around 1600 he challenged Robert Ker of Cessford to combat; it is unclear whether either party was injured, but it could not have been serious. In 1603 he was one of a large number of men issued with a 'summons of removing' by the Earl of Glencairn, then Baron of Hassendean. In 1604 he is recorded gaining lands in Hassendean from Robert Scott of Hassendean. On the accession of James VI to England he raised a regiment that fought under Maurice, Prince of Orange in Holland; this was probably filled with men who would formerly have been rievers in the Border country. He remained in Holland until the truce of 1609. He was elevated to a peerage in 1608 (after a Commission was struck by the King in 1606).

In 1608 he had a letter of release and remission from the Privy Council for his efforts maintaining peace on the Border. About 1610 he was involved in a dispute with Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig over the lands of Whithope. Also in 1610 he was named as a Commissioner for keeping peace within Roxburghshire and Selkirkshire. In 1611 he was appointed a member of the Privy Council, but died that same year. He married Mary (or Margaret), daughter of Sir William Ker of Cessford, according to a contract of 1586. Their children included: Walter, the 1st Earl; Margaret, who married James, 6th Lord Ross and secondly Alexander, 6th Earl of Eglinton; Elizabeth, who married John, 2nd Lord Cranston; Jean (whose pension is mentioned in her brother's testament); and possibly Mary, who married William Elliot of Larriston (but she was perhaps his sister). By Delia, daughter of Captain Thomas Butler in Holland, he had an illegitimate daughter, Jean, called 'Holland's Jean'. He also had an illegitimate son, John, probably the Provost of Crichton. He was the first Scott of Buccleuch whose arms carried the star above the 2 crescents. He most likely died at Branxholme and was buried at St. Mary's. His testament and inventory of possessions still exist – 'Lord of Buckcleugh into the Scots Border, Was high Lord Warden, to keep them in good order' [CWS]. Walter (d.bef. 1620) described as 'in Allan Mouth' when his son Walter became a brewer's apprentice in Edinburgh in 1620. He may have been succeeded by John. He is probably the same Walter ‘in Ellenmouth' included in a list of about 180 men given a 'respite' in 1594 for the slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Dryfe Sands. In 1606 his 'brother-german' John purchased the lands of Hobbsburn and Weens from Thomas Turnbull; in this document he is referred to as being 'of Allamouth'. It is likely he was son of William of Allanhaugh, or otherwise related to the Allanhaugh Scotts. He could be the Walter, 'brother germane' to Robert of Allanhaugh, who witnessed the bond of 1585 in which Sir Walter of Branxholme and Robert of Allanhaugh resolved a family feud. Walter 'Dand's Wattie' (16th/17th C.) failed to appear at court in Jedburgh in 1611. John in Brieryards was fined for his non-appearance, as well as that of 'Simmy's Hob' in Hawick, suggesting that he was a local man. His father was presumably Andrew. Sir Walter of Whitslade (d.1628) son of Walter. He appears to have been a military man, and probably served in Holland. The circumstances for which he was knighted are unknown. In 1608 he was ‘younger of Quhitslaid’ when he witnessed a bond for Sir Robert of Thirlestane and was ‘fear of Quhitslaid’ when he acted for Sir Robert in 1610 (along with Robert of Headshaw) in 2 bonds not to harm Walter of Tushielaw and his sons. He probably succeeded his father in about 1610 (and is easy to confuse with his father). In late 1610 he and his son Thomas (unless this was his father and brother) were bound not to harm Walter Scott in Hawick, called Todshawhill, and his associates; Sir Robert of Thirlestane acted as cautioner. In 1613 he was in trouble with the Presbytery for non-attendance, he ‘allegit that he hauntit some kirkis now and then; but that he could not come to his own kirk because his seat quilk he wont, and his fellous, to sit in was taken from him by the guidwife of Synton’; this could either have been Isobel, widow of Walter of Synton, or possibly his daughter Isabel, wife of Francis of (the new Harden branch of) Synton. Along with Robert of Headshaw he was a cautioner for a bond of 1619 involving the Hays of Smithfield. In 1620 he had a bond with Thomas, son of Robert Turnbull, called ‘of Bedroull’. In about 1622 he had a charter from Sir Robert of Thirlestane for the lands of Ettrickhouse (essentially holding the lands in collateral for a loan). He is recorded in the period 1622–25 when his brother George was involved in a court action against Robert Scott, younger of Satchells. He married Susanna, daughter of Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane, but she died without issue. He secondly married a daughter of Sir John Scott of Newburgh (and sister of the next Sir John of Newburgh). His children included: Robert, who succeeded, but died at Marston Moor; Sir Walter, who succeeded his brother and died at Inverkeithing; Thomas, the 3rd son to succeed; George, whose daughters Elizabeth and Anna were served heirs to his lands of Linton in 1670; Isobel (or Isabella), who married Francis, son of ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden in 1624; and Elizabeth (or ‘Bessie’), who married Robert Scott of Girnwood. He is said to have died at an advanced age. Walter of Whitehaughbrae (d.1621) son of Thomas and probably grandson of Walter of Synton. He may have acquired Whitehaughbrae from Thomas of Todrig. He was a signatory of the Scott clan bond in 1589. He died without an heir and the lands passed to Thomas of Salenside (probably his cousin’s son). His genealogy is treated extensively by John Scott of Rodono (although there may be some confusion over multiple men of the same name owning the lands). Walter ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden (1540s–c.1629), usually referred to as ‘Auld Wat o Harden’, since he reputedly lived to be 80. He was son and heir of William of Harden (or perhaps grandson of William if there was another Walter in between). He took part in the group of about 200 Scotts and their followers who broke into the Kirk of the Lowes in 1557 looking to kill Sir Peter Cranston. He is mentioned in a 1559 charter of the lands of Harden between Alexander, Lord Hume and his father. He was also Laird of Todshaw, Mabonslaw, Highchesters, Todrig, Wester Essenside, Burnfoot and Shielwood. He accompanied Buccleuch in the rescue of Kinnmont Willie, and was renowned as a riever. He was descended from the Scotts of Synton and succeeded his father in 1563. He apparently received the lands of Gilmanscleuch after his youngest son was slain by the Scotts of Gilmanscleuch in a hunting match (although this story seems confused with that of his son Walter in Essenside). However, in 1579/80 he was accused along with Elliot of Redheugh and Elliot of Hoscoite of committing a raid on Coquet Water. The Elliots (then allied with the English) raided his property at Hoscoite in 1580. Also in 1580 he complained to the Privy Council (along with the Countess of Bothwell and James Gledstains of Cocklaw) of thefts and outrages committed by the Elliots on their farms. There is a contract between him and James and John Langlands in 1588 over teinds from Harden and Todshaw. In 1590 he is listed on the ‘Roll of the Clans’. In 1591, along with Sir Walter of Buccleuch and Walter of Whitslade, he had a letter of pardon from the King for ‘intercommuning with Francis’ Earl of Bothwell. He took part with Bothwell at the ‘Falkland Raid’ in 1592, when they tried to capture the King. Because of his role in this he was denounced as a rebel and his houses at Harden and Dryhope were ordered to be destroyed. In 1592 or 1593 he helped Bothwell to plunder lands in Tweedside, reportedly carrying off 4,000 sheep, 200 cattle, 40 horses and £2,000 in goods. He was listed among those implicated in the 1593 slaughter of Lord Maxwell and his men at Dryfe Sands. In 1595 he witnessed a bond of ‘manrent’ in Hawick, between the Beaties and Sir Walter of Branxholme. Also in 1595 he was among Elliots, Nixons and others complained about by the Lord of Gilsland regarding raids into England. He is also said to have been on the raid to rescue Kinnmont Willie in 1596. Also in 1596 he was accused of leading a raid along with Willie Elliot of Larriston and the young Laird of Whithaugh and 60 men, who took 300 head of... cattle, 20 horses and goods from ‘the Leabecke at Wilkinkskarre'; in another complaint the same year it is said that he headed a group of 400 men in a raid on Gilsland. In 1598 he was ‘put to the horn' at the instigation of Sir John Ker of the Hirsel for non-payment of profits arising from Borthwickshields, and remained officially a rebel for about a year ‘in proude contempt of his Hienes, and in manifest defraud of the said complainer’. In 1599 he was responsible (along with Gideon Murray of Elibank and Gilbert Elliot of Horsleyhill) for burning West Burnflat (in Liddesdale), for which they received remission in 1604. In 1603 he was among a list of ‘pretended tenants’ served with a summons to remove themselves from lands in the Barony of Hassendean by James Cuningham. Also in 1603 he had a charter for the land of Pirnaton, near Stow. He was regularly bound over in large sums to keep the peace, threatened with outlawry, etc. Later in life he helped keep the peace, e.g. taking part in an important meeting of Lairds in Jedburgh in 1612, and signing the bond to keep the peace. In 1610 Gilbert Elliot of Horsleyhill (later of Stobs) stood as cautioned for him and his sons Walter, Francis and Hugh, that they would not harm Walter Scott in Hawick, called of Todshawhill, and his associates; the nature of this dispute with his neighbours is not clear. A stone bearing his initials and those of his wife (and the date 1628) used to be on the bridge at Ettrickbridge, which he had built there. His wife is supposed to have served him his spurs when the meat supply was dwindling. In 1576/7 he married Mary (or Marion) Scott, daughter of John (not Philip as often stated) of Dryhope; she was also called the ‘Flower of Yarrow'. It is said that he agreed to provide ‘horse meat and man's meat' for a year and a day, as well as the plunder from the next Michaelmas moon; there is unfortunately no evidence to support this story. In 1598 he secondly married Margaret, daughter of John Edgar of Wedderlie, widow of William Spottiswoode of that Ilk (and she died about 1629). His sons were: Sir William, who succeeded; Walter in Essenside, who was killed by one of the Scotts of Newhouse; Hugh in Greenhead, also called 'of Deuchar', who started the Scotts of Gala and married Jean, daughter of Sir James Pringle of Gala; Francis ‘in Howfuird', who was ancestor of the Corse Scotts of Synton and married Isobel, sister of Sir Walter Scott of Whitslade; and possibly George of Castlesyde. He also had many daughters: Margaret ('Maggie Fendy'), who married Gilbert Elliott of Stobs ('Gibbie wi the Gowden Gartins'); Esther, who married Elliot of Falnash (perhaps Archibald) and later George Langlands of that Ilk (although it is unclear if this matches up with what is known about Langlands); Janet who married Thomas Scott of Whitslade; Isobel, who married James Johnstone of Westerhall; another daughter possibly marrying Scott of Tushielaw; another daughter marrying Geddes of Kirkurd; another daughter marrying Porteous of Hawkshaw; another Margaret (only child with his 2nd wife), who married David Pringle of Galashiels and later Sir William McDougall of Makerstoun; and probably an illegitimate daughter who married Robert, son of Robert Elliot of Horsleyhill, and progenitor of the Elliots of Borthwickbrae and Oakwood Mill. The Museum has a porridge pot said to belong to him, as well as a lock and key from Old Harden House – ‘Not even the Flower of Yarrow's charms In youth, might tame his rage for arms. And still, in age, he spurn'd at rest, And still his brows the helmet press'd’ [SWS]. Walter (16th/17th C.) son of Adam of Todshawhaugh. He is listed among the supporters of Sir James Johnstone who had a respite in 1594 for killing Lord Maxwell and others at Dryfe Sands. He could be the Walter of Todshawhaugh listed in 1628 among men accused by the Earl of Buccleuch of cutting down trees on his land. He was accused along with John Currie (also from Todshawhaugh) and James Donaldson in Cavers. He could be the Walter ‘in Hawik, called of Todshawhauch’ who led a group of Scotts charging Langlands and other Scotts to find caution in 1610, with the other side petitioning for the penalties to be reduced; his son George is also listed there. He was also recorded as ‘in Hawik, called of Todshawhauch’ in the same year when the Scotts of Harden, Whitslade and Satchells were also bound not to harm him and his associates; the nature of this dispute among local landowners is not clear. Walter (16th/17th C.) tenant in Catslack. He was father of James (d.1679), who was Minister at Kirkton 1615–19. He may also have been father of William in Catslack, who was served heir to the lands of Easter Moormaw in 1607 (previously belonging to the brother of his great-grandfather, John, Vicar of Hawick). Walter of Todrig (16th/17th C.) probably son of George of Todrig and grandson of the first Laird of Harden, William. He may have been the Walter ‘in Todrig’ who witnessed a charter for lands in Rulewater in 1568 (when his father would still have been Laird). He was listed among many Scott and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstongs. He was a signatory of the clan bond in 1589. He is recorded in a charter of 1594 renting Ferniehirst Mill and its lands from Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst. He is also said to have been in the raiding party which rescued Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1606 he held the lands of ‘Hardenhead’ from Sir Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst through a ‘wadset’, and in 1610 was referred to in revocation of a contract by Sir Andrew Kerr of Oxnam. In 1607 he had a charter (probably a confirmation for the lands of Todrig) from James, Lord Hay of Yester and another in 1619. In 1610 he was part of a petition, along with several local Langlands and Scotts, to have himings lifted and penalties reduced. In 1619/20 he and his son William had a warrant for the arrest of Robert Ormiston of Old Melrose (perhaps for encroaching upon their lands). In 1620 there was a further charter for holdings in the Todrig estate, which mentions his brothers Robert and William. He is also mentioned in the Commissioners’ Court for 1623 when Thomas Hood (from Ancrum) was accused of stealing cattle belonging to him from ‘Plasadge’ in England (Plasketts perhaps?), and also Michael Birny (in Fairnilee) found guilty of stealing 30 sheep belonging to him and his associates; his son Walter is also mentioned in 1623. It is possible that some of these events relate to ‘Auld Wat’ (of Harden, Todrig, etc.). His son and heir apparent was William, who married Isabella Livingston. However, in about 1630 he probably sold Todrig to Thomas, brother of Sir Walter Scott of Whitslade. Walter (c.1587–1633) 2nd Lord of Buccleuch and 1st Earl, son of Sir Walter ‘the Bold’. In 1590 he was described as ‘Walter Scot, younger’ when he rented the West Mains of Hawick from Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1606 he was the master of Buccleuch who had a feu charter of the Kirklands of Hawick (except for the Manse and Glebe) from William Fowler (Parson of Hawick), with the consent of his father, Walter, Lord of Buccleuch. In 1611 he had a letter from the Privy Council forbidding the holding of a horse race between him and the brother of Sir Robert Gordon of Lochinvar. The inventory of the estates when he succeeded in 1612 still exists. He was the first in his family for 140 years to succeed to the titles when of full age. He served extensively in Holland, but also lived for periods at Branxholme. In 1619 he was created Baron Scott of Whitchester and Eskdail and Earl of Buccleuch. He purchased Synton from John Erskine, Earl of Mar in 1619. In 1621 he resigned the lands of Ringwoodfield (in upper Teviotdale) to Thomas Hamilton, Earl of Melrose (but the Scotts of Buccleuch held them again not much later). In 1622 he was part of the local Commissioners’ Court appointed to help keep the peace on the Border. Also in 1622 he was in dispute with the Marquess of Hamilton over lands formerly held by Francis Stewart, Earl of Bothwell. Through the 1620s he continued as one of the joint English-Scottish Commissioners of the Middle Shires and was also member of the Privy Council. He had a narrow escape in his family’s feud with the Elliots in 1624. He complained about the Elliots of Redheugh oppressing his tenants (on their former lands in Liddesdale), leading him to eject them, but after the Elliots regained lands through the courts they continued to plot against him. It is said that he over-stretched his estate and so entered the service of the States-General of Holland in 1627. By 1629 he was given a commission as Colonel of a company in the Netherlands and was present at the sieges of Bergen-op-Zoom and Maastricht. He was called home by a letter of King Charles I in 1631, but went back to Maastricht in 1633, after making a will in Scotland. He was still recorded as superior of the lands of Kirkurd in 1632. He married in 1616 Lady Mary Hay of Erroll, daughter of Francis, Earl of Erroll. His legitimate children were: Elizabeth (b.1621), who married John, Lord Erskine and Earl of Mar; Walter (b.1625), the eldest, who died aged 4; Francis (b.1626), Lord Scott, who succeeded; David (b.1627) of Canonbie; Jane (or Jean, b.1629), who married John, Master of Yester, who became the Marquess of Tweedale; and Mary (b.1631), who died unmarried. He also had at least 11 illegitimate children, including: Francis of Mangerton; William, also of Mangerton; John of Gorrenberry; Margaret, who married John, son of Robert Pringle of Stichill; and Janet, who married Andrew Scott of Foulshieles. He died in London, on his way home again from Holland. He was the last of the Scotts of Buccleuch to be buried in the family vault at St. Mary’s Church (7 months later). His body was brought by ship from London, but driven to Norway in a storm, arriving at Leith 15 weeks later. There was a huge mediæval-style funeral procession from Branxholme to St. Mary’s in June 1634 when ‘he was caried be his honorable freinds and the maist pairt of the whole nobilitie from the said place [Branxholme] to his kirk of Hawick all on fut under a fair velvet pale.
and the ceremoni with the armes wes set down by some of his freinds thaimselfes with advyse of ane painter'. His armorial bearings were the first to have the supporters as ‘two ladies richly attired’. His will and inventory still exist – ‘... And of Earl Walter, rest him, God! A braver ne'er to battle rode; And how full many a tale he knew, Of the old warriors of Buccleuch’ [SWS], ‘Earl Walter was Lord Walter’s son, A Mars for Valour, Wisdom, and Renown, His courage durst a Lyon fear, His Frowns would terrify’d a Boar’ [CWS]. Walter (16th/17th C.) described as ‘the Earl’s servitor’ in 1620 when he was one of the witnesses for Walter, Earl of Buccleuch granting Goldielands to Sir Walter of Goldielands. Walter (16th/17th C.) tenant in ‘Mylneholme’ in 1622 when a Little was accused of stealing his sheep. This was probably the Millholm in Liddesdale, and he may have been an ancestor of the later Walter there. Walter of Howford (16th/17th C.) son of William. In 1615 he married Marie (or Mary), sister of Robert Scott of Hartwoodmyres. He witnessed several documents in 1621. He sold Howford to Sir William Scott of Harden. In 1686 it was stated that the representative of Scott of Howford was Scott of Coldhouse (hence presumably a near relation). It is possible that his widow was the ‘Marie Scott lyfrenet of Cowdhouse’ recorded on the Land Tax Rolls in 1663. Walter of Midshiels (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1628 when he was the first named in a list of Scotts charged by the Privy Council to keep the peace with the Turnbulls of Know. His son Adam was also listed, along with Adam of Burnfoot, William, smith in Hawick, and William’s brother Adam; he may well have been related to some of these men. Adam of Burnfoot paid caution of 100 merks. It is unclear how he was connected to other Scotts of Midshiels or of Howpasley. Walter of Tushielaw (d.bef. 1643) son of Robert, from whom he succeeded in 1633. He was specifically served heir to the lands of Tushielaw, with mill, and the lands of ‘Conninglaw’ and Cacrabank. He may previously have been called ‘of Fawdshope’. He was succeeded by his brother William in 1643, after (probably) having conveyed the estates to him in 1636. His children included: James, who was Brigadier in the Life Guards; and Robert. He appears to have granted his son Robert ‘in Fauldishoip’ his lands in 1636 (although this could be confusion with his brother William). Walter of Chamberlain Newton (d.bef. 1619) recorded in the register of the Privy Council in 1573, when there was surety for him. He is listed there being ‘in Chalmerlane Newton’, along with his brother John. They were both sons of Margaret Turnbull, who was widow of David Elliot, who possessed half of the farm of Chamberlain Newton. Gavin Elliott of Bailielee (and later of Stobs) complained that they had attacked his servant on the other half of the farm. Following his non-appearance, his brother John was declared a fugitive in 1573; he and his mother were decalred fugitives later in 1573, but then bound to Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme and John Tweedy, tutor of Drumelzier, not to molest Gavin Elliott, his wife Jean Scott, their children or servants. It is unclear who their father might have been. In 1576 surety was found for him ‘not to molest’ Gavin Elliott. He is also recorded in 1588 when his brothers John and David were witnesses to a sasine for the Scotts of Howpasley for Midshiels and Apple-treehall. He is listed among landed men of the Borders in about 1590. He is included on a list of several Scotts and others whom the Baron of Hassendean (James Cunningham) was trying to remove from their lands in 1603. His son John had a bond with Adam Turnbull of Abbotrule in 1619 (registered in 1624) by which time he was deceased. William ‘of Newton’ is probably his direct descendant (perhaps his son), and possibly also ‘Syme of Newtoun in Hawick’. He may have been father of both William of Chamberlain Newton and John of Brieryyards (recorded as brothers in the 1630s). Walter (16th/17th C.) tenant farmer in ‘Crayk’, i.e. Craik in about 1610, when he was listed among supporters of the Scotts of Thirlestane in their feud with the Scotts of Tushielaw. Probably the same Walter is recorded in 1618 when his brother Simon in Newton was served heir to him in the lands of Easter Craik. Walter (16th/17th C.) described as being ‘in Hawick’ in 1610 when Sir Robert of Thirlestane served as caution for Robert of Satchells, who was bound not to harm him. Walter of Burnfoot (d.1640s) in Ale Water, probably son of William, or perhaps his brother. He was recorded in the Circuit Court records of 1623 when 2 men were found guilty of stealing a horse from him; there his lands are referred to as ‘Burnfute upon ye Walter of Ail’. Margaret, wife of probably the same Walter was tried at Edinburgh in 1616 for assaulting James Lethame in Hawick Parish Church, and later on the High Street. It seems unlikely that he was the Walter of Burnfoot on Ale who was given a bond by Francis Stewart (son of the Earl of Bothwell) in 1604, since that would have been too early (and perhaps ‘Walter’ is an error for ‘William’). However, he may have been involved in the ongoing dispute with the sons of the Earl of Bothwell, which lasted until the 1620s. He signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. His son Robert was served heir to him in 1641. However, he appears to be still alive in 1643, when recorded as owner in the county valuation, the lands being valued at £400. Walter (d.c.1616) 2nd son of Walter ‘Auld Wat’ of Harden, described as ‘in Essenside’. In 1610 he was named along with his father and brothers when Gilbert Elliott of Horsley-hill (later of Stobs) was cautioner for them not to harm Walter Scott in Hawick, called Todshawhill, and his associates. In 1614 there is a bond with his father Walter and brother William, relating to his future wife and the lands of Borthwick-shiels, Allemoor and others. He married Elspeth (or Elizabeth), daughter of John Hay of Haystoun (or Smithfield). In 1632 Elizabeth (by then re-married) renounced her claim to Allemoor, and in 1647 assigned lands to her son James. He was killed (according to complaints raised by his wife in 1616–17) by John Scott, brother of Simon of Bonnington, along with Simon, another brother Adam and ‘Will’s Sym’ of Thirlestane who came ‘bodin in feir of weir with lances, suordis, secreitis, plateslevis, quigheris and utheris wappones invasive’, attacked him while he was fishing on the Ettrick, and he died 48 hours later; it is also said he was killed by one of the Scotts of Newhouse, suggesting that John was of New house. His widow later married William Scott of Salenside. In the period 1633–53 his daughters and heirs Jean and Margaret had an action raised against them by James, son of William of Salenside (and hence their step-brother, presumably over the inheritance of Essenside), with Sir William of Harden as their curator. These 2 daughters were served as his heirs in 1641, with him being described as the 2nd lawful son of Walter ‘senioris de Harden’. Note that Keith Scott (and others) confuse details of his death (saying he was killed by Simon of Bonnington in 1620). Walter ‘Wattie’ (d.1616) son of ‘Braidis Andro’. He was one of the 5 men involved with slaughtering Sir James Douglas’ sheep at Howpaseley in 1615, at the instigation of Lady Scott of Howpaseley and Jean Scott of Satchells. He and Ingram Scott met the others at Birny Cleuch, between Eilrig and Howpaseley. They killed about 40 sheep, with about 20 more lying wounded, it is said that the sheep were slain ‘be streking of thair heidies, and cutting thame in tua throw thair bakis’. He escaped to the North with Ingram Scott, but the pair were captured and brought to Edinburgh Tolbooth. Although they denied knowing ‘Jock the Suckler’, when they saw him they apparently said ‘Quhat now, Jok! How come thow heir – and quhair-foir ar thow wairdit in this hous?’. Their lawyer tried to argue that the relevant law only applied to horses and cattle, but the judge would have none of it. Along with Ingram and Geordie Scott he was hung in Edinburgh for the crime, with Jock essentially turning informant, but being executed later for other crimes. It appears that the trial may have been heavily stacked against them (with several of Drumlanrig’s supporters on the jury, no evidence to place them at the scene except for the informer, and a law that did not technically apply to sheep in any case). Walter (16th/17th C.) Hawick man, described as ‘at the Eist Port’, who was one of the locals accused in 1612 by the Lord Advocate of charging too much interest on loans. He was described as ‘of Eistport in Hawick’ when he was recorded as a juror in the 1622 Commissioners’ Court. Probably the same Walter ‘at the Eist-port’ was also on the ‘leet’ for the election of the Bailies in 1638. Presumably he lived near the East Port and his designation distinguished him from other contemporary Walters. Walter ‘Jock’s Wattie’ (16th/17th C.) witness to a sasine for a tenement in Hawick in 1610. The land was going to Bailie Robert, son of ‘Wat’s Jock’, who could therefore have been his brother. It is unclear which branch of the Scotts this was. Walter of Alton (d.bef. 1638) eldest son of Adam and grandson of Robert of Alton and Clarilaw. He was served heir to his father and grandfather in 1606. The ‘Hob of Alton’ who was Bailie in Hawick was probably his brother. In 1619 he witnessed a bond signed in Hawick between John, son of Walter of Chamberlain Newton and Adam Turnbull of Abbotrule. He is recorded as being ‘called of Alton’. His sons were probably Robert (‘junior of Alton’, who succeeded and signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Haick in 1638) and William (‘vocat de Alton in Hassendene’). Walter (16th/17th C.) tenant at Templehall and Brewlands in Rulewater, along with Patrick Turnbull, recorded in a contract of ‘wadset’ in 1612. Along with Patrick Turnbull he is also listed in 1627 as the sometimes occupant of Templehall and Brewlands. Walter of Girnwood (d.c.1629) younger son of Robert, Laird of Shielswood, and brother of Robert. He is recorded in 1622 in an action with the Scotts of Buccleuch, regarding his removal from ‘Toungrig’ and other lands in Liddesdale.
Scott

He was still alive in 1628 (and recorded being of ‘Girnewood’), but died soon afterwards. His sons Robert and Walter were both minors when he died, with his brother Robert of Shielwood being appointed as their ‘tutor’ in 1629. His son Robert was served as his heir in 1636. Walter of Wauchope (16th/17th C.) said to have carried the Earl of Buccleuch’s spurs in the funeral procession at Hawick in 1634. He was probably related to the later Walter in Wauchope. Rev. Walter (c.1588–1649) graduating from St. Andrews in 1608, he was admitted as minister of Castleton in 1612. Perhaps the same Walter, ‘M.A.’ was recorded as schoolmaster in Jedburgh in 1609. He may have been minister when a new church was erected; a stone built into the schoolhouse has the date 1621 and his arms and initials. He is probably the ‘Mr Walter Scot’ who is recorded as possessor of Byreholm in 1632. He was owed money from the deceased Earl of Buccleuch in 1633. He witnessed a document relating to the sale of Harwood in 1637. He signed the Covenant (against episcopalianism) in Hawick in 1638. In 1649 part of Cromwell’s army (under Generals Bright and Pride) stayed several nights at Castleton Kirk on their way back to England. There they broke the seats and communion tables, took the minister’s books and lit their pipes using the parish records for the years 1612–48. There is no record of how the minister himself was treated, but he died later that same year. His brother’s son Walter Scott in Norham was served as his heir in 1649, so he presumably had no children of his own. Walter of Headshaw (17th C.) signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. Robert ‘surnyme of Heidschaw’ also signed. He could be the same Walter recorded in 1603 and 1609. He could also be related to the Walter of Whitehaugh and Headshaw recorded later in the century. Sir Walter of Whitslade (d.1651) 2nd son of Sir Walter, he succeeded from his older brother Robert and was in turn succeeded by his younger brother Thomas. He was served heir to Robert in 1645. He commanded a regiment of horse in the royalist army and was involved in the civil wars, probably being knighted by Charles II in 1651. In 1644 and 1646 and he was on the Committee of War for Selkirkshire, in 1648 also for Roxburghshire and in 1649 again for Selkirkshire. He represented Selkirk in Parliament in 1645–46, 1650 and 1651. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. He is mentioned in 1658 in a case in the Regality of Melrose, in a lawsuit over money due for ‘three trowps horse of Captan Walter Scott’ to him, also involving Robert Ker of Faldonside, relating to 1650. He held lands at Drycleuchshiel and Redfordgreen, as well as Whitslade. He married a daughter of Sir Robert Stewart of Ormiston, brother of the Earl of Traquair. His children included: Robert, baptised in 1647, who must have died in infancy; Walter, baptised in 1649 and also died in infancy; and Jean. He died at Inverkeithing, fighting against Cromwell (while his brother Robert had probably died fighting on Cromwell’s side 8 years earlier). Walter (17th C.) maltman of Hawick, who was on a list of 16 ‘idle and masterless men’ suggested by the Hawick Bailie as suitable for sending to the wars in Germany in 1627. While in Edinburgh Tolbooth he was among 7 of them who complained that they were not in fact the sorts of men who should be pressed into military service, but nevertheless were transported to the wars in Germany. He could have been related to Bailie John, who was also a maltman in the next few decades. Walter of Braidaugh and Arkleton (d.bef. 1661) 3rd son of John of Newark. He was also sometimes referred to as Walter of Harwood. It seems likely that he was a distant relative of the Scotts of Buccleuch, although the detailed descent of his family is unknown. He was tenant (and probably not owner) of Braidaugh in the upper Teviot valley. He served as local Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch in the period 1630–34 and probably through at least the late 1630s, with responsibility for ‘Teviotdale-head’ and Ewesdale. He was also Chamberlain for Eskdale, Ewesdale, Wauchopedale and Eskdale-muir. He is also recorded in 1632 in a note from Walter, Earl of Buccleuch about fixing the roof at Branzholme, where he is described as ‘in Braidauchae’. He was ‘of Breidhauchae’ in 1638 when he signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick. In 1644 he was bailie to the Earl of Buccleuch for the 4 kirks of Eskdale, Ewesdale and the Debatable Land, and was given orders by the Committee of War for Roxburghshire to convey soldiers from these parishes to the Master of Cranstoun. He purchased Meikledale and Meikledale-hope from Adam Cunningham in 1643 (when he was referred to as being of Harwood) and shortly afterwards acquired Arkleton from the same man. He was ‘of Arkleton’ in 1649 when he wrote a report on the southern counties of Scotland along with William Elliott of Stobs, and in the same year when he was listed on the Committee of War for Dumfriesshire.
and Annandale. In 1651 he is referred to as ‘of Arkiltoun’ when his son Robert ‘callit of Brairdhauch’ was granted 800 merks yearly in the will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. In 1653 he had a contract with Adam Cunningham and the Earl of Nithsdale (as superior) relating to Meikledale, which was part of a legal case over ownership of those lands in the early 18th century. He married Agnes (or perhaps Anna), daughter of Turnbull of Minto. His son Francis succeeded to Arkleton and was also Chamberlain for the Langholm area. Another son, Robert, became Robert of Harwood. It is said he had several daughters, including one who married Maxwell of Broomholm (possibly Jean, wife of John Maxwell). Walter (17th C.) younger son of Sir Robert of Haining and brother of Robert. He was described as being portioner of Guilian. Where these lands were is unclear. His son Lieut.-Col. Robert was the last of the members of this branch of the family recorded. Walter ‘Gray’ (17th C.) recorded in a Hawick Magistrates Court case of 1642 involving skinner Andrew Deans and merchant Walter Robinson. Walter ‘Wat o the Buss’ (17th C.) listed in 1642 among a large number of Borderers declared as fugitives. He was probably connected to Bush in Ewesdale and related to earlier Scotts from there. Walter of Huntly (17th C.) recorded in a case that came before Parliament in 1644. Katherine Kendell, widow of John Young, asked for him to be ejected from the lands of Hyndhope and provide her with the duties from these lands. He may have been a brother of John of Huntly, who was recorded in 1638. He could be the Walter ‘elder of Huntlie’ listed in a court case before the Privy Council in 1627, when a band of Scots were accused of harassing the tenant of Hartwoodburn. He is the last Scott of Huntly on record. Walter of Chapel (17th C.) recorded in the 1643 county valuation, with lands valued at £668 in 1643. These lands consisted of Chapel itself valued at £390, as well as £200 of ‘acres in Lilliesleaf’ and ‘Portions-croft’ valued at £78. Note the potential confusion with Scots connected with Chapelhill near Brunxholme. He was listed on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1648. Walter Scott of ‘Burnside’ was involved in 1640 with Sir Walter Riddell over the lands of Chapel, so this may have been him. He was probably the Laird of Chapel who was fined in 1662, after the Restoration. He was recorded in the 1663 and 1678 Land Tax Rolls in Lilliesleaf Parish, still paying tax on £668. Walter of Foulshiel (17th C.) son of James, and brother of Andrew. In 1647 he was served heir to his brother in the lands of ‘Fadounsyd’ and ‘Nether Whittlawhous’. In 1652 his estate was inherited by his 2 daughters, Elizabeth and Jean, one of whom, Elizabeth, married James Scott of Bowhill. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Malie, and their daughter Janet was born in 1648. Walter of Bonchester, ‘Wat o the Dykes’ (d.1653). It is unclear from which branch of the Scotts he came, although there is also a tradition that the Scotts of Bonchester were related to the Scotts of Harden. It is also unclear what the ‘Dykes’ in his nickname referred to, but the ‘Dykes’ near Bedrule seems likely. He is probably the Walter described as ‘of Dykis’ in 1605 when Robert of Thirlestane was caution for him not to harm Patrick Storie in Spittal-on-Rule. In 1612 he is ‘in Dykis’ in a document listing local people convicted of charging more than 12 percent interest on loans; he was among those men who appeared to answer the charges. Probably the same Walter ‘called of Dykis’ was ‘bailie in that part’ to Andrew Ker, Lord Jedburgh, for a sasine relating to Harwood in 1631. He purchased Nether Bonchester in 1632 from Alexander Kirkton (Provost of Jedburgh) and John Moscrop, younger (Burgess of Jedburgh); these joint owners had previously had a wadset on the property that was not redeemed. He was recorded as owner of Nether Bonchester in 1643, when it was valued at £180. His eldest son was William, Laird of Galalaw. He was succeeded by Thomas, who is suggested to have been his 2nd son, but was probably his brother; his son William (and his wife Margaret Glesdains) gave over the lands to his uncle Thomas in 1653, according to a previous family arrangement. Walter (17th C.) eldest son of Robert of Shielwood. He is recorded in 1632 when he feued part of the lands of Belses from Thomas, Lord Binning. In 1643 he was ‘in Shielwood’ when his lands of Shielwood (in Ashkirk Parish) were valued at £260, and his lands in Belses were also valued at £130. He is mentioned on an inquest in 1643 and is probably the Walter of Shielwood listed by James Wilson among the local landowners of the mid-to-late 17th century. In 1636 he married Margaret Scott (although it is unclear which branch she came from). He had 2 sons and a daughter: Francis, who succeeded; Robert, who succeeded his brother; and Marian, who eventually also succeeded and married James Scott of Shaws. Walter (17th C.) son of William and grandson of Walter of Todrig, who was part of the raiding party that rescued Kinmont Willie in 1596. In 1629 he inherited the lands of Grange from his father William. His grandfather sold Todrig during his father’s lifetime, this being to Thomas, brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade, thus starting a new line of Scotts of Todrig. Walter of Catslack (17th C.) recorded in the Land Tax Rolls in 1663 when he paid tax on £52 in Hassendean Parish. He was surely related to earlier Scotts of Catslack, perhaps son of William in Catslack. He was probably father of John of Catslack who paid land tax in Hassendean Parish in 1678. Walter of Kirknowe (17th C.) recorded on the Land Tax Rolls in 1663 for the Parish of Hobkirk. He paid tax on £78 for his rental there. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts, but he could have been father of the wright William who lived at Kirknowe in about 1700. Walter of Dryhope (17th C.) recorded as Laird in 1669. He may have been brother of the previous Laird, Robert. He was succeeded by his brother, Philip. Walter ‘Westport’ (17th C.) resident of the Hawick, near the West Port. He was elected to the Council in 1648. He is also recorded in 1656 when he was cleared of the claim that John Scott made against him regarding a deal over 3 barrels of drink; he sold the barrels and was therefore presumably a merchant. He is recorded being ‘at the west port’ in 1663, when he was one of the owners of West Mains. He was listed among the Councillors in 1668. Presumably the same Walter is recorded in 1676 when he brought a ‘letter of horning’ against William Elliot of Philhope, with Henry Elliot of Harwood as cautioner (although part of the document is missing). He was probably Bailie in 1678 when Walter Hardie was fined for saying the ‘Westport would be hanged’. In 1679 a woman was cited for accusing his servant John Moore of theft. He was probably related to the other West Port Scotts, and may have been father of the later Walter of Westport, and possibly grandfather of Hawick’s second known Cornet, James ‘called of Westport’; James’ father Walter was already deceased in 1706. Walter of Tinnis (17th C.) Chamberlain to the Scotts of Buccleuch for Ettrick Forest in the period 1631–41. In 1642 he was named by the Privy Council to a commission to try a large number of Borderers who had been declared fugitives; he was recorded there as ‘William Scot of Tinneis, curator to the Erle of Buccleuch’. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. Walter of Howpasley (d.c.1660) son of William of Finzland. He was brother of Robert and half-brother of Simon. When his brother died, he acquired the lands of Howpasley. After he died without issue, his sister Marion (wife of William Wilson in ‘Gulzeanflat’) was served as his heir and then Howpasley passed to Walter, son of his cousin Patrick of Tanlawhill. Walter (d.bef. 1667) youngest son of Patrick of Tanlawhill and Thirlstane. He inherited the lands of Howpasley, but died without issue and they went to his brother Sir Francis. His brother was served as his heir in 1667 (as confirmed in 1695), consistent with the claim that he died in about 1663, before his father. The lands he held included Rashiegrain, Easter and Wester Hislop, Langhaugh, Commonbrae and Ramsaycleuch, as well as Howpasley. He is probably the same man as Walter of Ramsaycleuchburn. Col. Walter of Hartwoodburne (d.c.1650) probably related to the Scotts of Whitehaugh, he was also referred to as being ‘of Harlawood’, and hence is easily confused with the nearly contemporary Walter of Harwood on Teviot. He served in Parliament for Selkirkshire 1646–47 and 1648–49. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. He was appointed as one of the ‘tutors’ for the children of Francis Earl of Buccleuch. In the correction to the will of Earl Francis in 1651, he is described as deceased when 200 merks yearly is allocated to his widow, Elizabeth Napier, and their second son, Walter. His widow Elizabeth Napier remarried to Sir Bryce Cochrane. He was a Royalist supporter who was killed at the Battle of Dunbar. It is unclear if he was related to the slightly later William of Hartwoodmyres. In 1694 Anna Helena was served heir to her father Walter, who was son of Walter of Whitehaugh; this was presumably him, with Anna Helena being his grand-daughter. Walter of Goldielands (d.bef. 1672) son of Walter (and not, as some genealogies state, son of Charles, half-brother of the first Walter of Goldielands). He was the last of the name to be acknowledged as ‘of Goldielands’ by the Scotts of Buccleuch (although there is also a record of Robert of Goldielands in 1638, and others given that designation, at least informally, later). He is hard to separate from his father, who was certainly alive in 1620, but was designated ‘Sir Walter’. In 1620 his father had a charter from Walter, Earl of Buccleuch, for the lands of Goldielands and Westcoterig, and the same day granted Goldielands to him (retaining the liferent). Also mentioned is Jean Riddell (probably daughter of Andrew Riddell of that Ilk), to whom he was promised in a contract of marriage, the contract involving the lands of ‘Pintatoune’ or ‘Pirntaitoune’ (presumably Pintaton on Gala Water). He is probably the Walter of Goldielands who bore the ‘pincell of black taffata’ on a lance point in the funeral procession of the Earl of Buccleuch in Hawick in 1634. He signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638; the name ‘R. Scott’ beside his could indicate this was his brother, son or perhaps uncle. In 1641 he witnessed a document in Hawick for the Scotts of Thirlestane. In 1643 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire and in 1643, 1646, 1648 and 1649 he was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire; in 1649 he is ‘of Gawdielands and Stanesh’, suggesting a connection with Stanedge (although the Scotts appear not to have owned it for at least another half century). In 1643 his lands in Hawick Parish were valued at £566 13s 4d. He is probably also the ‘W. Scott of Gowdielands’ recorded as owner of lands in Cavers Parish valued at £400 in 1643; these lands were owned by the Duke of Buccleuch by 1678. In 1648 he was one of the prominent men named on a Commission to suppress the thieves in the counties of Roxburgh, Selkirk, Dumfries and Annandale. He is recorded in a county valuation of landowners in Hawick Parish in 1643 (as the 4th largest landowner) and on a list of landowners and tenants of Hassendean Parish in 1666. In 1649 he and Patrick Scott (writer in Edinburgh) were involved in a loan with James Crichton, renounced to Sir Patrick Hamilton in 1652. In 1662, after the Restoration, he was fined £600. In 1655 he is recorded owing about £6800 to the deceased Francis, Earl of Buccleuch; this was for rental of the farms of Riccartonfoot, Prickinghaugh and Lawshill in the period 1634–47. He paid the land tax on property in Cavers Parish in 1663 and also paid more tax for lands recently acquired in Hawick Parish (from Cavers Kirk), as well as more than £500 for Goldielands itself. He was probably one of the ‘curators’ of Francis Scott of Davington, appointed in 1666. His descendants took the designation ‘of Crumhaugh’. His lands appear to have passed to Robert Scott of Clack, son of his youngest sister (or perhaps aunt), as well as Lilias, daughter of his sister Jean. However, he was succeeded by Walter of Crumhaugh, probably his cousin. Walter (17th C.) recorded as proprietor of Allanhaugh in a transcription of the 1678 valuation rolls. However, it may be that this is confusion with ‘Altoncrofts and Alintoun’. If he was a Scott of Allanhaugh, it is unclear how he might have been related to previous Scots of Allanhaugh. Walter of Crumhaugh and Goldielands (1631/2–1700) probably a son of Charles of Crumhaugh, who was son of the first Sir Walter of Goldielands. He succeeded his cousin Walter in 1675, inheriting several lands, although those attached directly to Goldielands passed to the Scotts of Buccleuch. He succeeded to Robert Scott of Glack and Lilias Scott (wife of William Knox), who were nephew and niece of Walter of Goldielands. These lands included half of Ramsaycleuch, Commonside, Rashiéigrain, Howpasley, Easter and Wester Hislop and Langhaugh, as well as Cruenhaugh. It is possible he was the Walter of Glack recorded in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls paying £130 for lands in Wilton Parish. He is probably the Walter of Goldielands recorded in 1675 when he requested permission from the Hawick Bailies and Council to build a fence on top of the dyke separating his lands from those of the Common. He is Walter of Cruenhaugh in 1678 when he paid land tax on £1116 13s 4d in Hawick Parish. He is probably the Scott ‘off Gowdielands’ listed among the heritors of the Regality of Melrose in 1682. He was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1690. He may have been the ‘Goldilands, elder’ on the list of subscribers for the Hawick Kirk bell in in 1693/4 (with the ‘Goldilands, younger’ being his son Charles). In 1696 he resigned these lands, as well as Trinity Lands, ‘Corsback’ and others, to Charles of Crumhaugh, his elder son. He married Janet (or Jean) Glendinning and her will is recorded in 1682. His children included: Charles, who succeeded, but appears to have died before him; Walter, whose descendants later became the representatives of this branch of the family; and William, who married Isobel Gledstains in 1702. Note, however, that these generations are quite murky. His memorial stone was uncovered during renovations in St. Mary’s Kirk around 1863 and reads: ‘Here lies Walter Scot of Cruenhaugh Who deceased 20 day of December 1700 and of age 68’. Jean, who married Walter of West Port in 1700/1, was probably his daughter. In 1687 he witnessed a baptism for Elspeth (married to James ‘Bleak’), who may have been a sister, with the other witness being William, doctor in Hawick, who may have been a brother or other close relative. Walter of Minto (17th C.) another name for Walter of Harwood. Capt. Walter of Satchells (c.1613-c.1694) writer of ‘A True History of the Right Honourable name of Scot’, a family history in doggerel verse, which was published in 1688, reprinted in 1786 and again in 1894. The words were said to have been dictated to school boys from Hawick. He was probably son of Jean Scott of Thirlestane and Robert Scott of Satchells, and may have been born on a farm in Eskdalemuir. He spent his youth herding cattle, then joined the Duke of Buccleuch’s regiment at age 16 (probably 1629) and supposedly served for 57 years. He served in the army of the Swedish King from about 1631 until long after the peace of Munster in 1648. In 1654 he had an act of caution against Robert, son of Peter Scott of ‘Cowdhome’; his signature is recorded in this document. He is probably the Walter ‘of Satsheilles’ (although it looks like ‘falsheilles’) who paid tax on £200 in Lilliesleaf Parish in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663. He was also owner there in the 1678 county valuation, the lands being valued at £256. He is said to have taken his ‘metrical family history at about the age of 73 (or as sometimes claimed, 88!). It was first published in Edinburgh in 1688, with a second edition in 1776, a third published in Hawick in 1786 and a reprinted edition in 1894, with extensive notes by John G. Winning. The family lost the lands of Satchells earlier in the 17th century, and so it is unclear exactly where he lived when he retired (but the impression is that it was near to the old lands). There is no documentary evidence about whether he married or had children, although Dr. William Scott of Stokoe says that after returning to Scotland he married a young woman with whom he had a daughter called Gustava (after King Gustavus of Sweden, in whose army he had served). The only other known work attributed to him is a ballad about the Scotts of Whitslade printed in Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’—Captain Walter Scot, An old Souldier and no Scholler, And one that can write name But just the Letters of his Name’ [CWS] (often written ‘Scot’). Walter of Tushielaw (17th C.) son of William, whom he succeeded as last Scott Laerd of Tushielaw (but must have been still quite young at this time). He was served heir to the lands of Tushielaw, including ‘Counislaw’ in 1670. He acted as cautioner for the Commissioners of Excise in Selkirkshire in 1682. He is recorded in 1681 when his son Francis became a surgeon’s apprentice in Edinburgh and in 1686 when his daughter Jean was buried in Greyfriars, Edinburgh. He is recorded in bonds of 1682. He may be the same ‘Laird of Tishilow’ recorded in 1700 when his brother John was entered as a Burgess of Edinburgh. He may also be the Walter ‘uncle to Tushilew’ who signed the marriage contract in 1678 between Elliot of Midlem Mill and Elliot of Harwood. His mother may have been Margaret Elliot and his uncle Francis Scott, who served as his cautioner in 1686. In 1688 he sold the family estate to Michael Anderson, who had married his sister. In 1689 he appeared before Parliament to give assurance that he would leave the country or live peaceably etc.; this suggests he was a supporter of the Jacobite cause, unlike his father. Walter (17th C.) described as ‘in Boghall’ in a list of landowners and tenants of Hassendean Parish in 1666. He may have been ancestor of the later Walter of Boghall. Walter of Newton (17th C.) probably son of William, for whom John of Brieryyards was appointed tutor in 1638. He is probably the same Walter ‘of Chamberlayne Newton’ recorded in a 1643 valuation of lands in Hawick Parish, his lands valued at £266 13s 4d; his lands in Hassendean Parish were also valued at £1378 4s 4d in 1663. He is also recorded in a record relating to Hassendean Parish in 1666. He may be the Walter of Newton recorded paying the land tax on Lairhope, valued at £266 13s 4d in 1678 and paying tax on £1182 (presumably for Newton and neighbouring lands) in Hassendean Parish. He may have been succeeded by another Francis. Walter (17th C.) had a charter of the half merk land of ‘Mounkland’ in Clarilaw, from the Commendator of Melrose in about 1620. He is described as ‘in Monkland’ in a record of major residents of Hassendean Parish in the mid-1600s. He could be a descendant of John ‘of Monks-tower’ listed by Scott of Satchells. However, it is unclear how he might have been related to other local Scotts. Walter of Woll (17th C.) recorded in the 1643 county valuation as owner of ‘Wall’ in Ashkirk Parish. The lands were valued at £533. According to Keith Scott’s genealogy brothers Francis of Woll and James of Woll were owners at that time. It is therefore unclear how he fits into the family tree; perhaps he is another brother, who succeed between Francis and James, or else the name is an error. Walter ‘in Stobitcote’ (17th C.) local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, according to James Wilson. He was recorded in 1643 as owner of lands valued at £260 in Cavers Parish; these same lands were owned by the Duke of Buccleuch by 1678. It is unclear how he was related to other Scotts. Walter of St. Leonards and Whitehaugh (d.1685) local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s. He purchased the lands of Whitehaugh from Andrew Hay in 1656. In 1671 he sold the estate to his nephew Walter of Headshaw (although it is...

unclear who this was). In 1669 he had a ‘wadset’ with William of Langhope (and his curator). He had a charter of Langhope in 1678 when he was referred to as ‘now of Langhope’. He may be the Walter of Langhope who paid the land tax in Selkirkshire in 1678. However, these lands were sold to John Scott (possibly his son) in 1688. In 1670 he was Bailie to George, Lord Ross of Halkhead and Melville for a sasine in Linlithgow and another sasine to William Scott in Manuel. He acted as Chamberlain (along with William Scott, Bailie of Dalkeith) for the Buccleuch estates in Dalkeith in 1673, and on his own for the years 1674–88. In 1675 he was cautioner for a bond by Sir John Nicholson to Walter, brother of Sir Lawrence Scott of Eyemouth. It is unclear exactly who he was or where the ‘St. Leonards’ refers to (possibilities are the lands in Ednam, Edinburgh, Lauder or Peebles). His mother appears to have been Elizabeth Napier, widow of Walter of ‘Harlawood’, who had remarried to Sir Bryce Cochrane; he thus may have been the same as Walter, son of Walter of Hartwoodburn. However, it is also possible he was closely related to the Scotts of Langhope. His wife was Janet Scott (and again it is unclear to which branch she belonged, with Langhope a possibility). His children included John, who sold the estate of Langhope to Adam Scott of Bowhill in about 1692. He may also have been father of Anna Helena, who inherited her grandfather Walter’s lands of Hartwoodburn in 1694. Walter (17th C.) son of Walter of Whitehaugh. In 1694 his daughter Anna Helena (widow of Archibald Edmonstone of Redhall) was served heir to his father’s lands of Hartwoodburn. Hence it seems like his father was Laird of Hartwoodburn and Whitehaugh. He was probably deceased by 1694. He may be the same as Walter of St. Leonard’s and Whitehaugh. Walter of Burnfoot on Teviot (17th C.) probably eldest son of Robert. He succeeded his grandfather Robert in 1667, becoming Laird of Burnfoot and Burnhead, which were still referred to in the service of heirs as Nether and Over Newhall. He is probably the Walter of Burnfoot who paid the 1663 and 1678 Land Tax Rolls on £312 in Hassendean Parish (presumably for Burnfoot). It is hard to separate him from his near contemporary, Walter of Burnfoot on Ale (17th C.) probably eldest son of Robert. He is hard to separate from his near contemporary, Walter of Burnfoot on Teviot. He succeeded sometime before 1669. He was mentioned as a landowner in a record relating to Hassendean parish in 1666. He could be the Walter of Burnfoot recorded in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663, listed along with owners of lands in Wilton Parish, when he paid tax on £312. He (or the other Walter) was recorded in 1677 when his son Walter became a skinner’s apprentice in Edinburgh. He was still Laird in 1686, when he was one of those to whom Scott of Satchells dedicated an address. He gained Hartwoodmyres from Sir William Scott of Harden about 1690. He was probably the Laird of Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish who paid tax on 3 hearths in 1694. He was involved in financial dealings with the Scotts of Thirlestane and was involved in legal action to recover money in the 1690s. His brother Francis married Isobel Scott. He may be the Walter of Burnfoot, son and heir of Robert, who inherited Burnfoot on Ale in 1692; however, it is possible there is another generation of Walters and Roberts represented here. Walter (d.c.1695) servitor to Sir William Elliot, he was ‘of Penchrist’ in 1695 when his will was recorded. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Whitehillbrae in Cavers Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Walter (17th C.) tenant in ‘Weimes’ (presumably Weens) in 1687 when the will of his wife Bessie Scott is recorded. He is also recorded being ‘of Weins’ in 1688. He was probably related to John, who was at Weens in 1694. Walter (17th C.) recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls at Borthaugh. Another Walter was listed as a ‘cottar’ there at the same time. He could be the Walter ‘in Bortoch’ whose will was recorded in 1692, and probably related to George ‘in Bortoch’, whose will is recorded in 1692, as well as to other Scotts associated with Borthaugh around that time, e.g. James. Walter of Headshaw and Whitehaugh (d.c.1691) purchased the lands of Whitehaugh from his uncle Walter of St. Leonards (possibly the same as Walter of Harwood or Hartwoodburn). He was the representative of the Scotts of Headshaw in 1671. He was succeeded by his son William in 1692. Other children may have been Robert (minister) and Isobel (who succeeded her brother). Walter of Raeburn, ‘Wat Wudspurs’ (d.bef. 1688). He was 3rd son of Sir William of Harden and Agnes Murray (‘Muckle Mon’d Meg’) and first of the Scotts of Raeburn. In 1661 he was served heir to his sister Janet. He is mentioned in a list of landowners of Hassendean Parish in 1666, and was a supporter of the suppression of the Parish. He acted as Chamberlain for the Scotts of Buccleuch in Dalkeith and Lugton. He is mentioned in documents of the Regality of Melrose in 1670–74. In the 1678 Land Tax Rolls he is recording paying tax for ‘Flerig’ or ‘Flierig’ (presumably Eilrig) in Hawick Parish, as well as for Raeburn in St. Boswells (or Lessuden) Parish. He married Anne Isobel, daughter of William McDougall of Makerstoun and they became Quakers; he was imprisoned in Edinburgh Tolbooth and had his children removed from him by Sir William (his brother). He was moved to Jedburgh Jail, where he remained for more than 4 years. His children were: William, who succeeded to the Raeburn estates; Walter, ‘Beardie’, who was the great-grandfather of Sir Walter Scott the writer; Isabel; and Christian. Walter (17th C.) merchant of Hawick, recorded marrying Marion Armstrong in Edinburgh in 1652. It is not known how he was related to any of the other contemporary Scotts. He may be the Walter, merchant in Hawick, whose will is recorded in 1687. Walter (17th C.) described as ‘our master stabler’ in the 1651 will of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch, when he was granted 200 merks yearly. He probably worked at Newark and Dalkeith, where the Earl mostly lived, but it is unclear where he came from. He could be the Walter who was owed money for a year’s fee from the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1661. Walter (17th C.) probably a son of John of Brieryyards. He had a sasine in 1656 for a ‘merk land in Hassendean-bank’, which was probably Cockerheugh, which his father purchased from Thomas Turnbull in 1656. He is probably the Walter of Cockerheugh who paid the land tax in Hassendean Parish in 1678. He gave a disposition to John in 1681, probably assigning Cockerheugh to his brother. He is probably the ‘Walter Scott Breariyeards’ listed on the east-side of Hawick on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. Walter (17th C.) said to have been eldest son of Walter, and last of the Scotts of Synton, who died unmarried. Instead he was probably eldest son of George, the last of the original Synton Lairds, with his brother being George of Boonraw. Walter ‘Polesman’ (17th C.) Burgess of Hawick who is recorded in 1660 transferring land containing houses and yards to Robert Scott, son of the late James Scott, also Burgess of Hawick. His byname is written ‘Poalsman’, and the meaning is uncertain (although a connection with the coble ferry is not impossible). Walter (1644–93) of Highchester and of Harden, eldest son of Sir Gideon of Highchester. He was baptised by John Langands of Wilton. He was married to Mary Scott, Countess of Buccleuch, when he was just less than 14 and she was 11, apparently after he was kidnapped on his way to school. The marriage took place in secrecy at the Chapel of Wemyss, and without proclamation, which caused much debate at the time. It was dissolved by the Commissary in 1659, but ratified again when she reached the age of 12. He was occasionally referred to as Earl of Buccleuch, but this title was not generally accepted. Instead, in 1660, he was created Earl of Tarras, Lord Alemoor and Camelcastell, for his lifetime only (this followed a custom of granting such an honour to any commoner who married a Countess; the names of the titles came from lands held by his family). However, his young bride died after only about 2 years, leading to years of dispute over his entitlements to life-rents etc.; he finally renounced his claims to Buccleuch lands only in 1678. In about 1667 he went abroad, travelling in France, Italy and the Netherlands, and keeping a diary of his voyage, which survives. On returning to Britain in 1670, he visited the court, attempting to recover some of the £4000 annuity due from his marriage contract, but to no avail (and it is said that his descendants in the schoolroom at Mertoun used to be asked to work out the compound interest on 2 centuries of arrears!). He succeeded to Harden in 1672 (although there is some confusion here), with a charter in 1677 and confirming charter in 1683. He paid the land tax on land valued at £1074 in Wilton Parish in 1678 (formerly belonging to Scott of Harden and Elliott of Stobs), as well as £600 for Borthwickshiel. His lands in Selkirkshire were valued at about £850 at that time. In 1678 he was one of the Commissioners for Roxburghshire, charged with raising money for the King. He substantially renovated Harden House around 1691. The initials ‘W.E.T.’ carved on a fireplace at Harden probably refer to him (‘Earl of Tarras’). He was tried for his part in the ‘Ryehouse Plot’ of 1683 (when several Scottish noblemen plotted to exclude the Duke of York from succeeding to Charles II) and support for the Duke of Monmouth (husband of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch), gave his confession and threw himself on the mercy of the King; he thereby implicated Robert Baillie of Jerviswood (who was hanged), as well as the Lairds of Philippaugh and Polwarth. He was imprisoned for treason and had his estates confiscated. However, because of the ‘great benefit that did arise by his full and sincere confession’ he was rehabilitated, receiving a pardon in 1685, having his personal estate restored in 1686 and all his honours and lands restored in 1687 (including Roberton and Howcleuch Mill). He became one of the first to engage in the Revolution of 1688. He was also one of the main instigators of the petition that was successful in having Roberton Parish created in 1690, with the consequence that Hassendean Parish was suppressed. In 1690 he was one of the Commissioners of Supply for Roxburghshire and for Selkirkshire. He gained part (perhaps half) of the lands of Minto in 1691 from Rachel Ingles, widow of John Turnbull. In 1692 he served as a Commissioner for assessing the rentals for the Duchess of Buccleuch. There is a letter from his sister Margaret in Hawick in 1693. He also survived a claim on the estates of Harden from his uncle Walter of Raurack. He is recorded in 1694 having paid tax on 17 hearths at Harden House; he also held the estate of Borthwickshiel and his lands in (the former) Hassendean Parish at that time included Hassendean Mains. In 1677 he married his second wife, Helen, daughter of Thomas Hepburne of Humbie; she became Countess of Tariff and appears to have remarried to Sir William Lockhart of Carstairs. They had sons: Gideon of Highchesther, who succeeded; William (b.1682), who died before 1710; Walter of Whitfield, who later succeeded to Harden on the death of his nephews Walter and John; Thomas (b.1681), who died unmarried; and Francis (b.1691), who died young. Their daughters were: Helen; Elizabeth; Mary, who married a Drummond; Agnes; Ann; and Margaret, who married Thomas Gordon. The succession of Harden after his death is complicated, but it eventually went to his second son Walter. His son Thomas is recorded becoming a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1702. His testament is recorded in 1693. Walter of Harwood, on Teviot (17th C.) eldest son of Robert and Beatrice Gledstains (and probably not closely related to the nearly contemporary Col. Walter of ‘Harwood’). He was also later known as Walter of Minto. Along with his father he is recorded in 1663 renouncing the burial place in the choir of the old kirk of Mertoun to Sir William Scott of Harden. In 1669 he was served heir to his father in Glendinning and other lands in Westerkirk Parish. He was recorded in 1669 as Bailie of the Regality of Hawick, appointed by William, Lord Drumlanrig; there was a dispute between him and the Bailies of Hawick over whether he had the right to hold his courts in the Tolbooth. In 1671 he gave his consent for a disposition involving the lands of Hornshole between the Turnbulls of Minto and the Scotts of Brieryards. He registered arms in 1672. In 1672 he was Sheriff-Depute when giving sasine to Sir Alexander Don of Newton for Altonburn and other lands. In 1672 he leased Branxholme Mains, Branxholme Park and the ‘Steill and Henhaugh’ from the Scotts of Buccleuch. In 1673 he and his eldest son Robert purchased a large part of the Barony of Minto from John Turnbull of Minto. However, they appear to have resigned these lands, which were then sold to Walter Riddell (as confirmed in 1681). He served as Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch for ‘Teviotdalehead’ (i.e. Cavers, Hassendean, Hawick and Wilton Parishes) in at least the period 1671–77. In 1676 he served as caution for the Duke of Duchess of Buccleuch (and Monmouth) obtaining a licence to bring in 4800 cattle and 200 horses from Ireland to restock their farms in southern Scotland after the ‘Thirteen Drifty Days’; he was fined when it was found that some were more than a year old, such imports from Ireland being prohibited at that time. In 1677 he was recorded leasing the farm of Todshawhill, as well as Branxholme Mains and Park. In the 1678 Land Tax Rolls he is ‘of Harwood and Falls’ when he paid tax on £1550 13s 4d in Hawick Parish; these were probably the lands of Falnash and Harwood. In 1678 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. He also served as Sheriff-Depute of Roxburghshire in the 1670s. He is probably the Walter of ‘Hairwood’ recorded in several bonds of 1682 and was served heir to his father Robert of Harwood in that year. William, his ‘brother-german’, became an apothecary’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1667. Another ‘brother-german’ may have been Gideon, who married Jeanette Elliot of Arklerton in 1677 (and was later ‘of Falnash’). He married Christian, daughter of Sir Andrew Ker. Their children included: Robert, the eldest son; Elizabeth, who married Gilbert Elliott of Stonedge in 1693; George, who became a barber’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1698. It is said that the family was ruined by his wife’s extravagance and that Harwood was sold off. He is probably the Walter ‘in Harwood’ whose ‘natural Daughter’ married weaver John Jollie in Hawick in 1721. Walter (17th C.) recorded as a glower on the list of Hawick men named in the 1673 trial following the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Walters. Walter and William are recorded separately as glovers on the same list. Walter ‘Reid Wat’ (17th C.) leased the farm of Chapelhill in at least the period 1671–77. He also leased part of Todshawhaugh in 1675. It is unclear whether his nickname referred to his hair colour or something else. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Walters, and could be descended from the earlier Walter of Chapelhill. Walter of Alton (17th C.) probably the Walter whose initials are recorded on the lintel of ‘Auld Alton’ house, along with those of ‘A.M.’ and the date 1675. He was married to Emma (or Anna), daughter of James Middlemas portioner of Raperlaw, as recorded when the pair were issued a ‘letter of horning’ in 1671. According to the marriage contract of 1669 he was brother of Francis of Gorrenberry. Hence he may not have been directly related to the earlier Scotts of Alton. Note that a Walter, married to Anna ‘Middlemist’ had children Margaret (b.1683) and Thomas (b.1684) christened in Robertson Parish. He is probably the Walter of Alton who witnessed a baptism in 1687 for Robert Cook and Isobel Scott (to whom he may have been related). In 1678 he paid the land tax in Hassendean Parish (presumably for Alton), as well as for Raperlaw in Lilliesleaf Parish. He is probably the same as the Walter of Alton recorded later in the 17th century, although it is possible there were 2 separate men here. He was probably the Walter ‘of Alton’ who in 1686 was granted by James VII a commission of the office of the Bailie of Regality of Hawick (this on account of Anna, Duchess of Buccleuch, the heritable Bailie, losing her right because of not taking ‘the test’). He was one of the heritors accused in 1690 of inciting the disturbance at the removal of the roof of Hassendean Kirk. He may be the same as ‘Walter Scott of Alton’ who in 1690 in Edinburgh he married Helen Fisher; this was either his second marriage or there were 2 different Walters. He was probably the Laird of Alton in 1694 when ‘Alton his hous’ was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls, with tax paid on 6 hearths. In 1698 he was on the Commission of Supply for Roxburghshire. Walter of Todrig (1630s–1722) eldest son of Thomas, whom he succeeded by 1691. He acted as one of the ‘curators’ for Alexander Scott of Synton. He was probably the Walter ‘fear of Todrig’ who was recorded in 1682 as the nephew of Robert Pringle of Clifton’s testament. In 1690 he was a Commissioner of Supply for Selkirkshire along with Thomas (probably his father) and in 1704 he was again a Commissioner for Selkirkshire. He was still recorded in the discharge of a loan, along with William Elliot of Harwood in 1707. It seems likely he was the ‘Laird of Todrick younger’ who was recorded paying tax for 5 hearths at Essenside in 1694. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Thomas Ker of Fairmile in 1682. He had one son and 7 daughters: Thomas, who succeeded; Jane (or ‘Jean’), who married William Elliot, 3rd Laird of Harwood by post-nuptial contract in 1700 (she is described as ‘Mrs. Scott’ and so this may have been her second marriage); Elizabeth, who married Henry Elliot of Peel, brother of William Elliot of Harwood; Nelly, who married John Elliot, another brother of William Elliot of Harwood, and secondly married Rev. William Home; Janet, who married Mr. Purdom from Hawick; Christian, who married Edinburgh solicitor George Dennis-ton; Margaret, who married David Scott of Mery-ryl; and Violet who married in Lothian. Walter ‘of Altencrofts’ (17th C.) local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, presumably connected with Alton Croft south of Hawick. He was probably different from ‘Walter of Alton’, although there may be confusion between the 2 farms. In 1678 he was ‘of Alton crofts & wyntoun’ (or ‘Altoncrofts and Alintoun’) when his lands in Hawick Parish were valued at £110. In 1681 it was stated that ‘the sons and grandson of the deceased John Scott of Gorrenberrie, and Walter Scott of Altoncrofts’ were among the potential heirs of Francis, Earl of Buccleuch. He seems to have witnessed a baptism in Hawick Parish (for John Wilson) in 1682. He may be the Walter of Alton Croft whose will was recorded in 1696; he was son of Robert and had a sister Marion, whose will was recorded in 1688 when his book was published. His pedi-gree is given by Satchells: son of Adam, who was brother of William, who was brother of Thomas in Wester Groundistone and son of Walter, who was son of Robert, who was son of Walter, the first Laird of Whitehaugh; however, there is no support for this, and it does not connect with other early records. Walter of Eilrig (17th C.) local landowner of the mid-to-late 1600s, according to James Wilson. He was presumably a descendant of Robert. Bailie Walter (d.bef. 1685) Hawick man, probably a merchant of some kind. Along with Walter Laing, he was a Town Councillor when the ‘Steeple Loft’ was built in St. Mary’s. In 1685 (by which time he was deceased) the pair had an agreement from.
the Town Council to be reimbursed for the costs of building this balcony. Bailie James (and his son Bailie Robert) may have been related to him. It is possible that he is the same as one of the other contemporary Walters. Walter of Chamberlain Newton (17th C.) recorded in 1693, along with his son, also Walter. In the service of heirs for John Ker of Cavers Carre, inheriting his uncle’s Lordship of Jephurgh, is contained a reference to annual rentals of 300 merks, corresponding to 5000 merklands of Appletreehall, pertaining to the Walter Scotts, senior and junior ‘de Chamberland-Newtom’. He may be the same as the Walter of Newton recorded in the 1660s, and his son could be the Walter of Newton recorded in the 1730s. Walter ‘the Buttermann’ (17th C.) said to be ‘of the sort of Scotts of Robertowne’, he is recorded in the Town Book in 1694, saying he and his wife would leave the Town in connection to any theft ‘if bu the worth and value of ane horn spoon, be laid to our charge and proven. It is unclear if he dealt in butter, or if his nickname referred to something else. Perhaps the same Walter is recorded in 1693 when his wife was found guilty of stealing ‘and little new pan’; as well as being fined, she was ordered to remain in the stocks until market day and then to sit at the Cross with the pan about her neck. Walter (17th C.) resident of Doorpool in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Walter (17th C.) listed as resident at Outerside on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Walter (17th C.) tenant in Copshaw Park according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Walter (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He is recorded in 1693 when his wife was found guilty of stealing ‘and little new pan’. As well as being fined, she was ordered to remain in the stocks until market day and then to sit at the Cross with the pan about her neck. Walter (17th C.) listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls as resident of the lands of Castleton. He paid tax on 2 hearths. Walter (17th C.) resident at Branxholme Town according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Walter (17th C.) listed at Branxholme among ‘The poor in Hauick Paroch’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is listed separately from the Walter in Branxholme Town. Walter (17th C.) resident at Whitchesters according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He may be related to Robert and John, who were also listed there. Walter (17th C.) smith who was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Walter (17th C.) listed among the ‘Deficients in Hauick Paroch’ in 1694. He appears to be at ‘The Tour of Hauick’ and is ‘called Poor’ (which appears to be a nickname). He may be related to John ‘called o the Toor’ in Hawick in 1609. Walter (17th C.) shepherd at Drinkstone according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Walter (17th C.) resident at Clarilaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Walter ‘Chief’ (17th/18th C.) listed as renter of half the farm of Overhall in 1694, with Adam leasing the other half. The pair continued to rent half of the farm in 1696 and 1698. He must have been related to this Adam, as well as to the James, who was leasing half of Overhall in 1690 and 1692 (for whose widow, Margaret, he served as cautioner). His nickname may have given rise to the name for the ‘Chief’s Pool’ in the Teviot near there; we can only speculate about whether it might have been his favourite swimming hole or fishing spot. Walter of Langshaw (d.c.1695) son of Francis and grandson of Patrick of Kirkstyle. Sir John of Ancrum was his uncle. In 1690 he was served heir to his father’s lands of Falnash, Tanlaw Naze, ‘Calfshaw’ and ‘Langshaugh water’ in the Parish of Hawick. In 1695 his brother Thomas was served heir to their father’s lands of Langshaw, suggesting that he may have been deceased by then. Walter (17th/18th C.) described as ‘in Wauchope’ in 1665 when he witnessed a document relating to Harwood lands and in 1677 when he witnessed the ‘bond of provision’ for Sir Gilbert Elliot of Stobs. He was a cautioner for Gilbert Elliot of Stonedge in 1688 and 1693 and witness to a bond by Dame Magdalen Nicholson (widow of Stobs) in 1690. He was recorded being ‘in Wauchope’ in a bond of 1682. There was a ‘letter of horning’ for him and Henry Elliot of Harwood by Archibald Douglas of ‘Garvat’ (Gervald perhaps) in 1695. In 1700 probably the same Walter was also witness to the marriage contract between William Elliot of Harwood and Jean Scott of Todrig. His sons were: Adam, tenant of Wauchope and purchaser of Stanedge; and William, later of Stanedge, who was Chamberlain to Scott of Buccleuch. He may be the Walter, farmer in Wauchope, who married Janet, daughter of Walter, 3rd Laird of Nether Boucheret. There is no reason to believe he was directly connected with the later Scotts of Wauchope. He is probably the Scott of Wauchope commemorated on an elaborately carved through-stone once visible in Hobkirk kirkyard, erected by Thomas of Stonedge in 1741; the inscription apparently indicated that he was a relative of Scott of Buccleuch. Walter ‘Auld Wat’ (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1705 when he witnessed a baptism in Hawick.
