of Myntow', along with 6 other Turnbulls (including Archibald, son of John), who could have been close relatives. In 1501 money was paid according to the Exchequer Rolls for his lands of Minto, which had been in the King’s hands for 17 years (suggesting that he had been a minor for that time). He had sasine for 2/3 of the land in 1501 (with the other 1/3 being held by Alexander Stewart). At the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1502 he served as surety for George Young, resident of Minto, as well as for Robert Young, son-in-law of John Turnbull, and John Young, and was fined for their non-appearance. He was also surety for David Scott, ‘Lady’ (who had remission for raiding farms at Minto, among other crimes). Also in 1502 he was recorded at the Jedburgh Justice-aire as having stolen 120 sheep from George Rutherford at Longnewton (which were reset by Adam Scott in Highchesters). Additionally in 1502 he served as surety for David Scott called ‘Lady’, in Stirches, who had a remission for his part in several different raids, including burning and stealing from the tenants at Minto and also stealing livestock from Broadmeadows and from Haining. Furthermore, he was fined for failing to enter Walter Aitkin in the court and was surety for Thomas Young. And in 1506 Adam of Billerwell had remission for associating with him and his accomplices, the rebels Mark, Edward and Walter Turnbull. In 1506 he was on an inquest in Jedburgh for lands relating to the Lords Home. He was also in 1506 recorded as superior of the lands of Greenwood (i.e. Girnwood). In 1508 he was on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale. In 1510 he was a witness to an indenture between the Erskines and the Kerrs for lands in Synton. He may be the William of Minto who was the first in a long list of Turnbulls who had remission in 1516 for assisting the Homes against the King; George Turnbull ‘there’ is also listed, as well as John ‘in Mynto’ and another John ‘in Mynto’, cousin of William of Minto. He may be the same William of Minto who is recorded in 1522 being asked by James V to receive George Lord Home as tenant in his lands of Greenwood (or Girnwood), with a precept of sasine following in 1525. He may have been succeeded by William, who was ‘fiar’ of Minto in the 1530s. William (15th/16th C.) tenant in Crumhau. At the Justice-aire in 1502 he was surety for Adam son of Walter in Stouslie, who failed to appear, and so he was fined. William (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh in 1502. Walter Aitkin in Minto was convicted of associating with him and Mark, while they were ‘at the horn’. His location is not given. William (15th/16th C.) tenant in Gatehousecote. He was recorded in 1502 among the men who were put to the horn for involvement in the murder of Robert Oliver; the person called to enter him was George of Hallrule, while Andrew and John in Gatehousecote were also mentioned and so surely related. William (15th/16th C.) tenant in Bonchester. He was recorded in 1502 among men who were put to the horn for involvement in the murder of Robert Oliver; the people called to enter him were George of Hallrule and John Rutherford of Hundalee. His son Laurence was also mentioned in the same case at the 1502 Justice-aire held in Jedburgh, as well as David in Bonchester. William (15th/16th C.) brother of Thomas, Laird of Bedrule. He was recorded in 1502, when he was listed among Turnbulls and others who failed to appear in court to answer to the charge of murdering Robert Oliver. His surety was Mark Ker of Dolphinston. He was distinct from William in Gatehousecote and William in Bonchester, who were also listed, but he may be the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. William (15th/16th C.) Abbot of Melrose 1503-07, as a rival to David Brown. The disputes of the time were resolved when he was transferred to become Abbot of Coupar in Angus, where he served until 1524. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls. William (15th/16th C.) son and heir of Adam of Philiphaugh who was listed among the many men given remission in 1504 for any involvement in the death of Thomas Rutherford in Jedburgh Abbey. Also in 1504 he was recorded as son and heir of Adam of Philiphaugh when he had a sasine for the lands of Maxton Craig, as a procurator of Helen Rutherford, heiress of Rutherford of that Ilk. He is probably the William who had a sasine for ‘Barbourisland’ (part of Philiphaugh) in Selkirkshire in 1503. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. William (15th/16th C.) recorded as tenant ‘in Crag’ in 1516, when he had remission, along with several other Turnbulls, for their assistance given to Alexander, Lord Home. This was presumably Minto Craig. William (15th/16th C.) tenant of Hallrule, listed there along with Robert and Thomas in a 1516 pardon for a large number of Turnbulls for assisting the Homes against the King. William (16th C.) described as ‘fiar of Mynto’ in 1533 when he was part of an inquest held at Jedburgh into the ownership of lands at Turnbull

Longnewton. He is probably the same as William of Minto, or else his son. He may also be the ‘William Turnbull in Mynto’ listed along with William of Minto and many other Borders men in a 1526 pardon for acting against the Earl of Arran. David ‘there’ is listed afterwards, and hence perhaps his brother. William (16th C.) tenant of Rulewood recorded in the 1516 pardon for Turnbuls who may have assisted Alexander, Lord Home. He is also listed as ‘in Rowlewod’ on the pardon granted in 1526 to a large number of Scots, Turnbuls and other Borderers who had assisted the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran. He is also recorded as ‘in Roulwod’ when part of a panel deciding on disputed lands, held in Jedburgh in 1533. He was probably the tenant of John Gourlay of Rulewood, and possibly related to the later William of Rulewood. William of Hassendeanbank (16th C.) recorded in 1550 in a bond of obligation with Thomas Turnbull of Bothwell. He may be the William in Hassendeanbank who is recorded in a contract with John Gourlay of Rulewood in 1540 (probably not 1640, as recorded). Probably the same William had a sasine for a piece of land at Hassendeanbank in 1536 and sasine for a ‘merk land’ in Hassendean called Cockerheugh in 1556: this William’s son and heir was Thomas, who inherited Cockerheugh in 1622 (or perhaps there was another William between). He may be the ‘William Trumbill of Hassindane Kirk’ listed as one of the pledges for the Laird of Bedrule in 1553/4. It seems likely he was related to the Turnbuls of Knowe and he was probably related to John of Hassendeanbank who is recorded in 1564. It is possible he was the William who was son to Thomas and Margaret Scott, recorded in a charter for lands in Darnick in 1571, confirmed in 1616. William ‘Proffit’ (16th C.) part of the panel for trying John Gledstains of Cocklaw with murder in 1561. It seems likely that he was relatively local. William of Minto (16th C.) recorded in 1532/3 when his son and heir William sold the lands of Greenwood (probably Girnwood) and the Lyne in the Barony of Minto to Walter Scott of Branxholme. He was probably either the same man or the son of the William of Minto recorded in 1499 and the early years of the 16th century. In 1526 he was listed among the large number of Borderers who had remission for rising up against the Earl of Arran; he is there the first listed of several Turnbuls. And in 1527 he was among the local lairds given remission for mustering their supporters at Melrose (i.e. Skirmish Field) and Linlithgow. In 1528 he had a royal pardon for crimes of treason (presumably assisting the Laird of Branxholme at Skirmish Field), along with Scott of Howpasley, Scott of Allanhaugh and Scott of Hassendean; there he was described as ‘franktenementar of Mynto’ (i.e. free-holder). He may be the William who was listed among the bailies of the Sheriff of Roxburgh on the Precept of Chancery (probably in 1532) for William Scott of Hassendean retaining his properties. He was also listed among the Border Lairds who submitted themselves to James V to keep better order. Also that year he was fined for being responsible for certain Turnbulls from Rulewater, particularly a Turnbull of Catlee who had stolen horses and goods from Alexander ‘Berthilmow’; he had to pay for the stolen goods or else the penalty would be to ‘byrne his house, expell and hald him furth of ye cuntre’. In 1545 he was among lairds in Teviotdale who signed a bond to settle feuds. It seems likely he was the deceased Laird of Minto mentioned in 1548 when Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme was given ward of his lands until such time as his heir became of age. His heir (possibly the John recorded from the 1590s) was presumably the Turnbull of Minto who was recorded as superior of the lands of Greenwood (i.e. Girnwood) in 1551 and for whom Hector Turnbull was recorded as ‘tutor’ in 1553/4. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) tenant of Sir Walter Scott of Howpasley in the lands of Outersideig in 1569. Sir Walter acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. William (16th C.) Burgess of Edinburgh. In 1565/6 he brought a case against Robert Kerr of Woodhead, over his lands of Over Ancrum. Probably the same William, Burgess of Edinburgh, was obliged in 1572/3 to remove himself from that city, on the orders of the Regent; Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule was his surety, and hence he was probably related. William (16th C.) tenant in Bonchester. In 1581 he was declared a rebel for failing to appear to answer to the charge that he stole a horse from Archie Elliot of the Hill. William (16th C.) described as a wright and Burgess of Jedburgh. He was tenant of Spittal-on-Rule from 1586. William (c.1541–c.75) eldest son of Sir Thomas of Bedrule. He had a charter granting him Bedrule in 1570/1, but probably predeceased his father. In 1573 he was recorded as ‘sone and apperand air’ of Sir Thomas, when they were listed among the men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm; however, the group claimed they did it because Kerr had reset the fugitive Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and were acquitted. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Home of Cowdenknowes. He appears to have been deceased by 1576 when his brother Walter was described as son and heir of Sir Thomas. He was deceased by 1584 when the Privy Council let her uncle Alexander Home continue to have the right of choosing the husband of his daughter (and perhaps only child) Margaret, rather than yield to the claim of another uncle, Sir James Home of Cowdenknowes. In fact Margaret eventually married Robert French, Laird of Thornydikes and Abbotrule, but died in 1593. William of Barnhills (16th C.) recorded in 1571/2 when he signed a bond to act against Borders thieves. In 1573 he was among the men from the Jedburgh area accused by Robert Kerr of Woodhead of raiding his house and farm; however, the group claimed they did it because Kerr had reset the fugitive Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst and were acquitted. In 1576 he was listed along with Sir Thomas, Walter (son of Sir Thomas) and Mungo Bennet in Chesters, in a dispute with William Ker, younger of Cessford, over lands in Nether Auncrum. He was also listed in 1576 as joint cautioner, along with Sir Thomas of Bedrule, for Hector, David, George and John, sons of Adam in Belses. Additionally in 1576 he was recorded among a group of Turnbulls and others (from Hallrule, Billerwell, Belses and Chesters) who has a bond with another group of Turnbulls (from Minto, Bowlie, Kames and Toneyhill) and others, not to harm each other; he was one of the cautioners for John Turnbull of Howden and others. In 1578/9 he was among 22 Border Lairds who did not appear before the Privy Council when summoned. He was then found liable for the fines imposed. He was also listed in 1580 along with Sir Thomas of Bedrule, Thomas’ son Walter and Edward Lorraine, younger of Harwood, in a bond to keep the peace with the Turnbulls of Minto; he signed with ‘my hand at the pen’, meaning he was unable to write. In 1581 he was among a large group denounced as rebels for failing to present men to answer their rieving crimes. He was listed among the Borderers who were summoned to appear before the Privy Council in 1584/5. His brothers Robert, Gavin and Hector, and uncle Andrew of Barnhills were also listed. He is also recorded on Monipennie’s c.1597 (but drawn up earlier) list of Lairds in the Borders. William ‘Will the Lad’ (16th C.) recorded among Scotsmen accused in 1590 of being involved in a raid on farm across the Border in 1588. He is cited along with David Laidlaw of Antroch and Adie Laidlaw ‘Great Legs’. William (d.1600) son of Walter of Rawflat. In 1603 George Turnbull of Belses was denounced as a rebel for a long list of crimes, including his murder, and although acquitted of the new charges, he was later executed for similar crimes. This may point to some sort of feud among the Turnbulls of the Lilliesleaf area about that time. William of Knowe (16th/17th C.) one of a group of about 30 Turnbulls who were involved in a skirmish in Jedburgh in 1601, part of an ongoing feud with the Kers. He was also referred to as being ‘in Tounheid’. In the skirmish 4 men were left dead and many were wounded, including himself being shot ‘in the wambe, be the schot of ane pistolet with twa bulletis’. It is unclear how he was related to the later Turnbulls of Knowe. He is probably the William ‘in Munto-tounheid’ recorded in 1610 when a commission was appointed to apprehend him and 7 other Turnbulls (plus 2 Davidsons) for not having found caution following being found guilty for the murder of Thomas Ker of Crailinghall and 6 Grahamshaw brothers. William of Bedrule (c.1580–c.1625) son of Walter. He was probably the William whose letter of 1602 to Thomas Ker of Cavers (his father-in-law and presumably his superior) still exists, detailing how he took over possession of Fulton, and listing the tenants there. In 1612 he was William of Bedrule, who, along with William of Hawthorside, were complained about to the Privy Council by William (perhaps a distant relative), merchant in Edinburgh, for not paying him. He is probably the William ‘fiar of Bedrule’ who witnessed the marriage of the daughter of William of Templehall (probably his brother) in 1614. He may have been the ‘fiar of Bedreull’ whose son Thomas witnessed a bond for Walter of Bedrule in 1618 (however, these men could also be his uncle, son of Sir Thomas, and brother of Walter). In 1619 he was ‘fiar of Bedreull’ when his father Walter had a bond for him with George Ker, heir of Cavers Carre, for not ‘finding caution of lawburrows to him’. He probably only succeeded his father Walter in about 1620, and although he was still called ‘Laird of Bedrule’, he lost most of his family’s hereditary possessions. He gave caution for David Turnbull of Jedburgh at the Commissioners’ Court of 1623, and probably died shortly afterwards. He married a daughter of Thomas Ker of Cavers and was succeeded by his son Thomas. He may have been Turnbull Turnbull

the William whose only daughter Margaret married Robert French of Thornydykes and Abbotrule; however, the dates do not work out, since she died in 1593, and her mother was supposed to be Margaret, daughter of Sir John Home of Cowdenknowes. William (16th/17th C.) brother of Robert of Bewlie, who was killed in Jedburgh in 1601. He also had brothers Mark and Andrew. In 1603 he was appointed as tutor to his nephew Andrew, who was served heir to Robert in 1607. William ‘Willie’ (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Wille Turnbull, callit the guidman’ in a letter listing the tenants of the lands of Fulton in 1602. William (16th/17th C.) recorded as William ‘called of Beule’ in 1610. He was named among 8 Turnbulls and 2 Davidsons when a commission was appointed by the Privy Council to apprehend them for failing to find caution following being found guilty of the murder of Thomas Ker of Crailinghall and 6 Grahamslaw brothers; his brother Mark was also listed. He could be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William of Hawthornsde (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1612 along with William of Bedrule when there was a complaint to the Privy Council by William (perhaps a distant relative), merchant in Edinburgh, for not paying him. It is unclear how he was related to other Turnbulls. William ‘Will’ of Braidhaugh (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1601 among a group of Turnbulls and Lorraines accused by Englishman Gray of Morpeth of stealing from him. John ‘of Brodehaugh’ is also listed and so presumably his father or brother. He is also described as ‘in Braidhawche’ in 1605 when he was pledged to appear at court in Edinburgh. In 1606 James, son of Edward Lorraine of Harwood was declared a fugitive for resisting a messenger that came to apprehend him, after he had been declared a fugitive for theft and slaughter. William Turnbull of Braidhaugh. He was recorded in 1611 when Robert Home of ‘Carrolysd’ was cautioner for him in Jedburgh Court; however, he was acquitted. His son James was found not guilty of stealing sheep from ‘Hairrlesyd’ (probably Earlsdie) in 1622. In 1627 Robert Kerr of Cavers complained that he had acted to resist the apprehension of his son James (who had been declared fit for military duty), and hence should be held in Edinburgh Tolbooth until James was produced. Also in 1627 he paid caution to the Privy Council, promising that he and his son James would satisfy the minister and session of Abbotrule Kirk ‘for the insolence committit be him at the said kirk upoun Sonday the tyme Divine service’. William (16th/17th C.) tenant in Crosscleuch in Bedrule Parish, along with John. With several other Turnbulls, he was accused by the Laird of Traquair of cutting down and removing wood from his lands at Huntliehill in 1619. They were denounced as rebels for failing to appear. William of Tour (16th/17th C.) cautioner for Adam Turnbull in a bond he had with John, son of Walter Scott of Chamberlain Newton in 1619 (registered in 1624). In 1622 he was ‘in Tour’ when he sat on the assize at the Justice Court held in Jedburgh. He is also recorded in 1622 as ‘of the Tour of Roulwode’ (i.e. Rulewood) when he had a ‘letter of apprising’ against John Elphinston of Henderstoun (in Peeblesshire) for non-payment of several bonds. He thereby obtained the Barony of Henderstoun and half of the lands of Glen sax, but sold them in 1628. He was probably son of James ‘of the Toure’, recorded in 1579/80. William (16th/17th C.) served heir to his father John in Philiphaugh in 1606, inheriting the 5 acres there called ‘Barbourisland’. He is probably the William in Philiphaugh who was attacked by William Elliot (formerly Laird of Horsleyhill) in 1619, with Elliot attempting to stab him with a ‘whinger’ after he had loaned a plough to Sarah Lough in Selkirk, to till a piece of land that Elliot wanted for himself. Probably the same William was recorded as ‘portionar of Phillophauch’ when he was on the assize at the Commissioners’ Court in 1623. William (16th/17th C.) son and heir of James of West Lees in Hobkirk Parish. He was mentioned along with his father in 1617 in a bond with James Haswell, surgeon of Jedburgh. He was owner of West Lees in 1643, when it was valued at £66 13s 4d. William (d.bef. 1647) recorded as being of ‘Weddellis-wallis’ in 1647, when his son Thomas of Tofts was served heir to his 5 husbandlands in Minto. It is unclear where ‘Weddellis-wallis’ might have been or if he was the same as one of the contemporary Williams. He may have been the Laird of Tofts whose death before 1643 meant that the family lands in Kirkton and Abbotrule Parishes were just ascribed to ‘Laird of Tofts Turnbull’, with no forename. Also in 1643 there were £102 of lands in Minto owned by ‘Turnbull of Tofts’. Given that most of the rest of Minto was owned by the Turnbulls of Minto, it is possible that he was related to them. William of Barnhills (17th C.) brother of John of Barnhills who succeeded to the lands in 1628 and immediately sold them to William Bennet. William (17th C.) described as ‘mason in Newton’ in 1642, when, along with his brother Thomas and several other people, he was accused by Douglas of Cavers’ servant of stealing his wallet in Hawick. He gave evidence, saying that he never saw the wallet. William of Langraw (17th C.) signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. He was ‘in Langraw’ in 1628 when served heir to his brother John of Barnhills. In 1643 he was recorded as owner of lands valued at £104. He may have been father of the William of Langraw recorded in the late 1600s.

Rev. William (c.1606–c.67) son of Thomas of Minto, he had 3 other brothers who were also ministers. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1626 and became minister of Mekerstoun in 1635, continuing there until his death. In 1632 he feued lands in Raperlaw from Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning. When his brother John of Minto died, he helped arrange for his nephew John to marry (Elizabeth Eliott of Stobs), even although he was under age. He probably acted as legal guardian for this nephew, and continued to have some rights over his estates later. He was recorded as owner of Hornshole in 1643, with John (probably his nephew, or just an error in the name) holding them in his stead. Also in 1643 he is probably the ‘Mr. William Turnbull’ who was listed as owner of most of Minto (along with John, his nephew, and Elizabeth Elliot). He may be the William listed in the 1643 county valuation, with his lands in Raperlaw being valued at £104. He may be the William of Minto, listed along with John in James Wilson’s list of local landowners of the mid-to-late 17th century. He was a member of the Assembly in 1645. In 1657 he gave his consent to a ‘wadset’ between John of Minto (his nephew) and John Scott of Brieryyards for the lands of Hornshole. He is probably the ‘Mr William Turnbull’ recorded in the 1663 Land Tax Rolls for Hornshole, as well as in Lilliesleaf Parish. His son William became minister of Eckford, and is recorded giving his permission to a dispotion of 1671 relating to Hornshole. William of Bedrule (d.c.1667) perhaps son of Thomas and grandson of the William who died about 40 years earlier. He is recorded in the 1643 valuation of the county, as owner of half of the Mains of Bedrule, valued at £130, and Bedrule Mill, valued at £200. In 1668 his son Thomas was served as his heir in the lands and Barony of Bedrule. This Thomas would be the last Turnbull Laird of Bedrule. William (17th C.) recorded in 1643 as owner of land in Abbotrule valued at £44. This was probably part of Bonchester Townhead, where 2 Adams and a William also held lands.

William (17th C.) married Janet Hobkirk in Ashkirk Parish in 1645. William of Bonchester (1624/5–86) recorded on a tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard along with his son Adam (tenant of Doorpool) and Adam’s wife. He may have been son of Thomas of Upper Bonchester. He was probably succeeded in Upper Bonchester by his son George. Bonchester Turnbells also later tenanted Wolfelee Mill, Hartshaugh Mill, Harwood Mill and Hallrule Mill. It was said that the Turnbells who farmed Doorpool were descended from the Turnbells of Bedrule. William (17th C.) son of Thomas of Knowe, he is recorded in a discharge of 1658 in which he was ‘tutor’ for Thomas Turnbull of Standhill. He was probably brother of John of Knowe, and it is also possible that Thomas of Standhill was another brother, in which case he was also tutor to the children (Thomas, William, Helen, Joan and Margaret) of the same Thomas ‘of Chesterhouse’ in 1664 when his lands were resigned to their superior Sir Walter Riddell. William (17th C.) tenant in Newmill on Slitrig. In 1666 James Chisholme was accused of fighting with him in St. Mary’s Kirk. He pulled on Chisholme’s bonnet when he was asleep in church, and after Chisholme fell off his seat he struck him, whereupon Chisholme pulled out a knife and cut his leg. The corn mill where he was miller was listed as ‘the Newenilne of Slitrig’.

William (17th C.) elected town piper in 1674. He was ‘directed at even and morn and other solemn occasions, to go through the town with the drum’. This suggested that he was Burgh Officer, with duties including both pipes and drums. His salary was £13, 6s, 8d Scots. William (17th C.) brother of Walter, Laird of Bewlie. He is recorded on a 1684 list of men declared fugitives for religious non-conformity. They were probably arrested in 1678 and condemned to be sold as slaves to the plantations. Whether he was among the men who escaped from their ship in London and returned to Scotland, is unknown. William (d.c.1682) listed in Hawthornside when his will was recorded in 1682. He was surely related to Robert, whose will was also recorded on the same day, as well as Adam who was recorded there in 1688. William (17th C.) merchant in Hawick. He is on a 1684 list of men declared as a fugitive for frequenting conventicles. If he was later exonerated then he could be the merchant listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. William of Langraw (17th/18th C.) probably the Turnbull of Langraw who paid the land tax in Hobkirk Parish in 1678. He is recorded in 1693 when he witnessed a bond between Gilbert Elliott of Stanedge and Sir John Pringle of Stichill. His eldest son William was also a witness. He was also ‘of Langraw’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he was taxed for having 2 hearths. He was a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1695. He was also Provost of Jedburgh. He was the last Turnbull of Langraw, his heirs selling off the lands in 1801. William (17th C.) listed as a resident of Effedge on the 1694 Hearth Tax roll. William (17th C.) resident of Cavers who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) listed as cottar at Ruletown on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) tenant in Westwood in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to the earlier Lairds of Westwood. William (17th C.) resident of Gatehousecote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) tenant in Bonchester in Abbotrule Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to the earlier William of Bonchester. William (17th C.) listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls right after William in Bonchester. He is listed as ‘in ye midle of ye tooun’, this presumably meaning Bonchester. His son George is listed after him. William (17th C.) resident at Midshiels according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) resident at Hassendeanbank according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to Richard, who was also listed there. William (17th/18th C.) recorded as piper in Hawick in 1702 when he married Margaret Elliot from Wilton Parish. It is possible he is the same man as the piper recorded in 1674. Their son Adam was baptised in 1710. William (17th/18th C.) miller at ‘Harestane miln’, which may be a version of Hartshaugh Mill (otherwise it is unclear where this is). His daughter Susan (1717/8–40) was recorded on a tombstone in Abbotrule Kirkyard, along with George, tenant at Upper Bonchester, so they were presumably related. He may have married Margaret, daughter of George of Bonchester (according to Walter Deans). William of Tofts (17th/18th C.) son of Thomas of Tofts. He was served heir to his father in 1695, in the lands of ‘Over et Nether Tofts’ in the Barony of Hawick and Regality of Drumlanrig. He is listed as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire in 1698 and 1704. He was probably Laird of Tofts in 1694 when ‘Tafts his hous’ was taxed for having 2 hearths there. His children baptised in Kirkton Parish included: Thomas (b.1708); Ann (b.1709); Euphan (b.1712); and William (b.1715). William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Turn. His son William was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1708. William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Crook. His son Andrew was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1708. It is unclear if he was related to the earlier Douglasses of Crook. William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Bedrule Mill whose son James was buried in Bedrule kirkyard in 1711, aged 32. He must have been a descendant of the Turnballs of Bedrule, and was probably a son of Thomas and brother of Andrew (the last Laird of Bedrule). He is probably one of the 3 men of that name listed in the Hearth Tax records for Bedrule Parish in 1694. He is probably the William ‘in Bedroull’ whose wife Helen Scott’s will is recorded in 1685. William (17th/18th C.) merchant in Bedrule. His son Robert was buried in Bedrule kirkyard in 1722, aged 2. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Turnballs of the area. He may have been the William whose son James was born at Bedrule Mill in 1709, and claimed descent from the Turnballs of Bedrule. William (17th/18th C.) tenant of Hassendeanbank. In 1723 his daughter Bessie married Andrew, son of Thomas Irving in Westerhouses. His son Adam took over the farm. William of Wester Swanshiel (d.1731) successor to James, who was probably his father or brother. He was succeeded by his son Hector and was buried in Hobkirk. Rev. William (1703–64) son of George, minister of Tyningham (or another account says son of Adam of Doorpool and Margaret Turnbull). It was claimed (in a history of the Scotts of Bonchester written in 1834) that he was a direct descendant of the Turnballs of Bedrule, but that there was no documentable proof of this. He was licensed by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1729 and became minister of Abbotrule in 1730, where he remained until his death. He paid window tax at ‘the mance’ in Abbotrule Parish in 1748 and 1753. He died unmarried. His sister Helen, married Walter Scott of Bonchester. William (1708–64) son of Andrew and Jean Scott, he was born in Minto Parish. His father was tenant at Minto Cleuchhead, and sometimes described as the last Turnbull Laird of Bedrule. He became tenant at Ancrum Woodhead. He married and had children, including Andrew and Thomas, who died young. He is buried in Bedrule kirkyard. William (18th C.) servant of Robert Buckham of West Lees in Hobkirk Parish. His daughter Agnes was baptised in 1738. William (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1743 he witnessed a baptism for workman Thomas Oliver. William of Langraw (d.1787) last Turnbull Laird... of Langraw. He was recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was appointed as one of the trustees for Thomas Scott of Nether Bonchester when he got into financial difficulties; the trustees sold off that farm in 1779. In 1786 he let the lands of Langraw to George and Walter Barry for 15 years, but died before the lease was up. He was succeeded by his closest relative, Mrs. Janet Rutherford, who had married Mr. Easton, an American settler, who sold the farm. He is listed in the 1788 county valuation as owner of Langraw (valued at £104), as well as 'Sheil's lands, and Boston's half of Kirk-know, exclusive of that part belonging to Mr Elliot of Woollie' (valued at £68 5s). His through-stone was on Cowdie's Knowe by Hobkir Kirkyard. William (18th C.) glazier in Hawick. His wife was Isabel Turnbull and their children included: Thomas (b.1758); Margaret (b.1759); Andrew (b.1761); Martha (b.1763); Walter (b.1765); and Isabel (b.1767). The witnesses to the 1758 baptism were Bailie Thomas and mason Andrew, senior (who were surely related to him or his wife). Dr. William (c.1729–96) born in Hawick, from the family of Turnbull of Bedrule, who were dissenters. He was educated in Hawick and at Edinburgh University (where he obtained his M.D.) and then at Glasgow. He settled in Wooler around 1752, where he was known for his care of the poor, and had patients sent to him from as far away as Edinburgh. He became Physician at the Bamborough Infirmary. In 1777 he moved to London, where he lived at Well Close Square in Whitechapel and was a physician with the Eastern Medical Dispensary. While in Wooler he contributed medical articles to the 'Ladies' Magazine' and the 'Scots' Magazine' and also acted as medical editor for 'Middleton's Universal Magazine'. These included discussions of croup and diseases of women and children. He wrote medical articles for the ‘New and Complete Dictionary of Arts and Sciences' (1778). He was preparing the publication of a practical system of medicine when he suffered a short and severe illness and died in London. His wife's name is unknown, but her first name may have been Ann. Their children included: an eldest son, who died in the prime of life (possibly John Strother, b.1754); William, who became a surgeon with the Eastern Medical Dispensary and may be the same as the ex-naval doctor who wrote 'The Naval Surgeon' (1806); and a married daughter, possibly Anne. His son William posthumously published the first volume of 'The Medical Works . . . Containing a Popular Treatise on Health and the Means of Preserving it' (1805). There is a portrait of him in the form of an engraving. William of Tofts (18th C.) paid the window tax at 'Toftshouse' in Kirkton Parish in 1748. He is listed among the Commissioners for Roxburghshire in 1761. He was also recorded in an account of Lady Cavers in 1769. He was probably tenant farmer at Tofts in Kirkton Parish, and may have been related to the later James. He could be the 'Toftses Son Will' who was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1715. William (d.c.1814) tailor of Hawick. He owned property at 66 High Street, as well as the buildings behind No. 66 and 68. These were bequeathed to a relative, stockmaker Walter Murray, and later known as Murray Place. William (1739/40–1820) tenant in Minto Townhead. His son Archibald died in 1832 and they are buried in Bedrule kirkyard, adjacent to the families of Andrew (tenant in Minto Cleuchhead) and William (tenant in Woodhead), who are probably closely related. William of Burnfoot (1745–1825), son of Thomas of Burnfoot (and sometimes called ‘of Minto’), he was born in Minto Parish. He ran the farms of Burnfoot and West Buccleuch and also managed the properties of Wilton Lodge and Tofts. He also spent a few years as joint tenant (with Charles Scott of Wauchope) of Mervinslaw; they are recorded as such on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He is recorded at Burnfoot on the Horse Tax Rolls from 1785–86 and in 1788–94. He was recorded as being ‘in Burnfoot’ in 1788 on a list of voters within Roxburghshire. He is recorded at Burnfoot on the 1797 Dog Tax Rolls. He was a successful breeder of short-horn cattle before that was common. He was first President of the old Hawick Farmers’ Club, perhaps the first club of its kind in Scotland. An oil portrait of him was painted by John Watson-Gordon in 1821, at the expense of the Hawick Farmers’ Club, and once hung in the Tower Inn where the Club met; it was returned to the family in 1869. He leased the limestone quarry at ‘Slitrighead’ from Elliot of Harwood. He also carried out some money-lending, like his father before him. He is probably the William who was paid ‘for leading wood’ to help repair fences and for ‘banking the water’ of the Teviot at Hawick in 1785. In 1789 he and Robert Dickson were arbitrers for judging the value of a boundary dyke near Hawick. In 1797 he is recorded on the Horse Tax Rolls at Burnfoot, with 4 work horses and 10 other horses. He married Eleanor (or Helen) Stephenson (of Kethorn, Durham) in Hawick in 1782 and she died in 1840, aged 84. Their children were: Elizabeth (1783–1831), who married John Renwick in 1814; Thomas Scott (1784–1867), who farmed at East Middle; Eleanor (1785–1853), who lived at 5 Slitrig Crescent with her sister Jane and died unmarried; Michael (1787–1849), who emigrated to Canada and died at Woodside, Brantford; Agnes (1788–1836), who also died unmarried in Hawick; William Ogilvie (b.1790), who died in infancy; Jean or Jane (1792–1866), who also died unmarried in Hawick; William (b.1794), who became a doctor; and John (1796–1875), who farmed at Burnfoot and West Buccleuch. They are mainly buried on Bedrule cemetery. William (18th C.) servant of Commissioners of Roxburghshire in 1819. He was also recorded as ‘younger of Fenwick’ among the freeholders at the Michaelmas Head-Court of Jedburgh in 1811 and on the list of Commissioners of Roxburghshire in 1819. He is probably the William ‘of Rashiegrain’ listed as owner of Rashiegrain and Commonbrae on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He is mentioned as an important Hawick Parish heritor in the 1820s and 1830s, and was one of the Orrock Trustees appointed in 1834. He was listed at Brieryards in 1835, among heads of households in Wilton Parish. In 1837 he was listed on Pigot’s 1837 directory as William of Fenwick, residing at Brieryards. He married Alison Turnbull and had an only son, Thomas. His trustees were recorded as owners of Brieryards, Hornshole, Midshiels, Fenwick, Rashiegrain, Commonbrae and part of Weensland in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874.

William (18th C.) stockingmaker in Hawick, who was on the subscribers list for Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He is probably the stockingmaker (son of smith Thomas), whose death is recorded in Hawick in 1816. William (18th C.) wright in Hawick. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. William (b.c.1770) tailor in Wilton Parish. He was listed as tailor at Appletreehall among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. In 1840 he was at ‘Pityhouses’ and in 1841 at Parkhouses. On the 1841 census he was living at ‘Parkhouses’ (i.e. Burnhead Cottages). Elizabeth and William (also both called Oliver) were also there, probably his daughter and grandson. William (1787–1846) 3rd son of James and Betty Adamson and brother of Wilton Schoolmaster James. He was born at Hoddleswoodie, Bonchester. In 1821 he became master of Hobkirk School, and served there until a few weeks before his death. He was very fond of books and collected a small library at the school. He is probably the William listed at Hobkirk among subscribers to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He is recorded as Schoolmaster at Hobkirk in Pigot’s 1837 directory and on the 1841 census. He is buried in Hobkirk Kirkyard.

William (1794–1870) 3rd son of Adam and Betty Scott, he was born in Minto Parish. He farmed at Merrylaw and Falnash. He was left the lease of Hassendeanbank when his father died in 1810. He also took on the lease of Skelfhill, which had been in his mother’s side of the family. He was recorded at Falnash in 1841, 1851 and 1861. In 1851 he is listed as owner of 4500 acres, employing 17 labourers. He is probably the William of Merrylaw who acted as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He is probably also the William of Hassendean who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. He married Margaret Scott (1810–45, who was probably born at Todshawhaugh). Their children included: Robert Laidlaw (1830–74); William Scott (1833–70), who died in New South Wales; James (1836–88), who died in Melrose; Thomas Scott (1837–77), who died in Adelaide; and Gideon Pott (b.1840). He secondly married Elizabeth Elliot, probably daughter of John Elliot of Binks. William ‘Wull the Bellman’ (c.1785–1859) Burgh Officer and bellman in roughly the 1820s to early 50s, being Halberdier along with ‘Tufty’ Wilson. He was born in Melrose. He lived in a house at the end of a close beside the old Town Hall, depicted in ‘An Old Hawick Close’. It is labelled ‘Mr. Turnbull’ on Wood’s 1824 map, and would be at about No. 36. In 1841 he was living on the High Street with his wife Agnes and children Mary, Isabel and William. In 1851 he was at about 36 High Street and still listed as Town Officer. He was listed as ‘bellman, High Street’ in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1861 his widow Agnes was a lodging house keeper at 36 High Street. William (b.1785/6) originally from Southdean, he was a weaver in Hawick. He married Margaret Ogilvie, who may have been related to the family of Thomas Ogilvie & Sons, woollen merchants in Aberdeen. In 1841 he was on Brougham Place and listed at No. 4 there in 1851, when he was a widower. His children included: George (b.1819), cashier with Nixon’s; Joseph (b.c.1826); John Struthers (b.1829), who was a bank accountant; and Mary (b.c.1832). William (b.1794) 4th son of William of Burnfoot and Eleanor Stephenson, he was born in Wilton Parish. He trained as a doctor and became Senior Physician of Huddersfield Infirmary (where his portrait hangs). His choice of location was probably influenced by the connections with his father’s wool sales. One of his sons was Vicar of Penniston in Yorkshire and Canon of Wakefield Cathedral. He died in Huddersfield. William (18th/19th C.) butcher at Denholm, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory William (18th/19th C.) hosiery manufacturer on Backdamgate, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. It is unclear if he is the same as one of the other contemporary Williams. William of Menslaws (1794/5–1886) Accountant at the Royal Bank of Scotland in Edinburgh. He could be the William, merchant in Edinburgh who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’. William (b.1799/1800) born in Wilton Parish, he was a tobacco manufacturer and grocer on the Howegate. In Pigot’s 1825/6 directory his partnership is listed as ‘Irvine & Turnbull’, although it is unclear who the Irvine was. In the 1837 directory he was listed as a tobacconist himself on the Howegate, and is probably also the same man listed as a grocer and ‘victual dealer’ there. He was also listed as a Howegate tobacconist and grocer in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Jessie. In 1841 and 1851 he was a widower living at about No. 3 Howegate with his 4 children: John (b.1828), a baker; Andrew (b.1830), millwright; Margaret (b.1832); and William (b.1835). William (19th C.) farmer at Minto Townhead in the 1860s. He is surely related to the earlier farmer of the same place with the same name. William (b.c.1810) draper who was living at about 10 Slitrig Crescent on the 1841 census. His wife was Jean. William (b.1816/7) wood merchant on Havelock Street. In 1861 he is recorded employing 3 men, and was at about No. 12. His wife was Isabella and their children included William, George and Isabella. William (b.1817/8) from Edinburgh, he was a grocer in Hawick. In 1851 he was living on Orrock Place and listed as a journeyman grocer. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is a greengrocer on the High Street. His wife was Janet and their children included Robert, William, John and Margaret. William (b.1819/20) head grocer on the Minto estate in the 1860s. He was a non-resident voter of Cavers Parish. His wife was Elisabeth and their children included William, Isabella, Janet and John. William (1830–1906) youngest son of James, Schoolmaster in Wilton, with his mother being Margaret Dalgleish, who later ran the ‘Image Garden’ school. In 1864 he co-founded the Edinburgh auctioneering firm Lyon and Turnbull. He married Jane Barbour and their children were William James, George Barbour, Charles Henry, Dr. Frederick John, Isabella Barbour, Margaret Mary and Jane Barbour. William Scott (1833–70) son William, farmer at Fahalsh and Merrylaw, his mother being Margaret Scott. He studied at St. Andrews University 1847–9. He died in New South Wales. William (d.1891) son of David (who made his fortune in India) and grandson of Thomas of Fenwick. He was born in India and lived for a while with his uncle William at Brieryyards. He leased the farm of Muirdean, near Kelso, then moved to the Channel Islands. In 1874 he returned to the Hawick area to deal with the family estates when his cousin Thomas died. He lived at Briery-yards and was a Justice of the Peace and Deputy Lieutenant for Selkirkshire. He also became a member of the Borders dining and coursing club, the Forest Club. In 1873 he was ‘Treades’ Steward’ at the Common Riding Races and was again a Steward in 1875 (when listed as ‘junior’ of Brieryywards). He later moved back to the Channel Islands, where he promoted the Presbyterian Church. He sold the Rodono estate and other lands in 1890. In 1836 he married Christian Hogarth, who pre-deceased him. His sons (all born at Makerston) were: David, who succeeded; William of Kilburn, Guernsey; and Dr. George Hogarth of Kelso. William (19th C.) farmer at Orniston Parkhead, recorded in relation to Stobs estate in the 1850s. He was probably related to James, farmer at Billerwell. William (19th C.) shepherd at the Pietsnest in Hobkirk Parish. He was one of the original congregation of Wolfelee Free Kirk, along with his wife, Euphemia Armstrong. He was also made an elder in 1851. William George (b.1844) son of John, farmer at Spittal-on-Rule. He continued the tenancy in Spittal-on-Rule after the death of his father. He was recorded as farmer there in 1868. He married Mary Mitchell, daughter of George Greig of Eccles in 1894. They had 4 children. William Scott (b.1856) son of James, who was tenant at Billerwell. He was educated as a chemist, but preferred the life of a farmer. He was tenant at Tythhouse in Rulewater. He married and had 3 children. William (19th C.) stocking-maker, who was elder of the Hawick Free Church around 1875. William (b.1854/5) son of John Struthers and grandson of weaver William. He worked for a long time with Thomas Purdom & Sons and later moved to Edinburgh. He married his cousin, daughter of his father’s brother George. William (19th/20th C.) original singer of ‘Clinty’. He may be the same as one of the other Williams. William ‘Blinnd Wullie’ (??–??) Hawick man who was blind from his earliest days, but notable for his astonishing memory (remembering everyone’s birthday, for example), love for music and singing, and lack of self-pity. He was companion at Common Riding events for several decades – ‘Whenever I meet Willie, I’m humbler as we part; God give me his contentment, His brave ungrudging heart’ [WL]. William (d.2002) Hawick born production director at Pesco’s, also known as leader of the Border Orchestra, and founding member of the Hawick Music Club. In addition he was involved with the Church of Scotland, Vertish Hill Sports Committe, Callants’ Club and Hawick Chamber of Commerce (also formerly spelled ‘Tornebale’, ‘Trombull’, ‘Trumbill’, ‘Trumble’, ‘Trumbuel’, ‘Trumbull’, ‘Trummill’, ‘Trumbul’, ‘Turnbel’, ‘Turnbill’, ‘Turnble’, ‘Turnbul’, ‘Turnule’, ‘Turnbulle’, ‘Turnbulle’, ‘Turneble’, ‘Turnebull’, ‘Turnebill’, ‘Turnebillis’, ‘Turnebull’, ‘Tumbull’, and other variants).

Turnbull an Scott’s (turn-bul-an-skots) n. engineering firm based at 16, 18 and 20 Commercial Road. They moved into these buildings (previously the Urban Electric Company) when the company was established in 1933. The main office block is unusual in Hawick in having a Tudor style. The company were originally millwrights, but now specialise in custom-built heating systems. It started as Turnbull & Aitkin, later becoming Turnbull, Aitkin & Scott, and changing to Turnbull & Scott in 1955. More recently the firm moved to Burnfoot.

Turnbull an Sons (turn-bul-an-sunz) n. Charles Turnbull & Sons, a photography company of the latter part of the 19th century. Based on Jamaica Street in Glasgow, the firm branched out to Greenock, Kilmarnock, Hawick and elsewhere. In Hawick they set up their studio at 7 North Bridge Street in 1886, but only lasted until 1889. The building may have continued as a photography studio (under the name Torrance) until 1893.

Turnbull-Robertson (turn-bul-ro-burt-sin) n. main carpet manufacturing company in Hawick, operating in the second half of the 18th century in Orrock Place. It was founded by William Robertson in 1752, with Thomas Turnbull and others joining in 1769. They feuded the land in the middle of the Sandbed in 1791, and the houses they built there were demolished in 1987. The Carpet Close is the one reminder of their existence.

the Turnbulls (the-tu-turn-bulz) n. local family, powerful during rieving days. The name is traditionally ascribed to when William de Rule saved King Robert from a bull, being rewarded with lands and the name of ‘Turnebull’. The first recorded instance of the name is a William Turnebull of Philiphaugh (possibly the same ‘William de Rule’) in 1313. Other lands in the Ettrick valley followed, as well as Minto and Bedrule in the 14th century. By the 15th century the family controlled much of the Rule valley and also held lands around Denholm and in the Borthwick valley. Closest to Hawick, there were Turnbulls Lairds at Whithope in 1454, Hornshole in 1456, Penchrise in 1464/5, Harden until 1468 and at Hassendeanbank through the 15th century. In a panel to decide on the inheritance of the Barony of Cavers in 1464/5, out of 21 prominent local landowners there were 4 of the surname Turnbull. Although no Turnbull collected a peerage, at the height of their influence they were as powerful as the Douglases, Scotts, Kerrs, Elliots and Armstrongs. Like other Border clans they played an important role in frustrating the English, but were also involved in feuds and power struggles on the Scottish side of the Border. A feud in Teviotdale with the Rutherfords was noted in Parliament in 1479. Probably because they never rose to the nobility, their strength was challenged, their lands lost and the family eventually dispersed. In one incident in 1510 James IV publicly humiliated 200 Turnbulls at the ‘Deed Haugh’, near Rulemoutth, and it is said that as many as 20 were hanged. In 1516 about 45 Turnbulls (and a few others) were pardoned for any role in assisting Alexander, Lord Home in plotting against the King (the document survives among the papers of the Dukes of Roxburghe and gives a valuable record of the main family branches at that time). They are said to have sided with the English in some raids, but they fought for the Scots at Ancrum Moor in 1545, and were probably at the Redeswire in 1575. They once held towers at Minto, Barnhills (base of Minto Crags), Bedrule and Fulton, much of which passed to the Elliots and others. The Turnbuls of Bedrule and the Turnbuls of Minto appear to have been the most powerful branches in the 16th century, but their power waned in the early 17th century, with the Minto branch being involved in a serious feud with the Kerrs of the Jedburgh area in the years around 1600. Both of the main baronies were sold off before the last quarter of the 17th century. However, a related branch, the Turnbuls of (Hassendean) Knowe were important local landowners until well into the 18th century. Descendants of the Turnbuls of Minto moved to Burnfoot, and were among the founders of the textile trade in Hawick. The Great Seal of the Turnbuls used to be in the possession of the Turnbuls of Burnfoot, before it moved to Canada when Michael Turnbull emigrated. There have been at least 18 Hawick Cornets with this surname. It seems likely that the roots of all Turnbulls can be traced back to an area within 20 miles of Hawick. Trumbles are probably derived from this family, through the early local pronunciation, and the French and French-Canadian family Tremblay may also come from Turnbuls who fought in France during the Hundred Years War. The clan as a family association was revived in 1977 by Hawick man John Turnbull. A book ‘I Saved the King: the Story of the Turnbuls’ was written by R.E. Scott in 1977. A statue, commemorating the turning of the bull and sculpted by Angela Hunter, was unveiled near the Heritage Hub in 2009 – ‘But little harness had we there But auld Badrule had on a jack, And did right weil, I you declare, Wi’ a the Turnbulls at his back’ [CPM], ‘Between red ezlar banks, that frightful scowl, Fringed with gray hazel, roars the mining Roull; Where Turnbulls once, a race no power could awe, Lin’d the rough skirts of stormy Ruberslaw’ [JL].

Turnbull’s (turn-bulz) n. John Turnbull & Sons, dyers and finishers, founded in 1819, with their main premises at 1–4 Slitrig Crescent and also later on Victoria Road/Carnarvon Street. In 1871 the firm employed 40 people. There was a major fire at the Slitrig Crescent works in 1940. The Victoria Road cleaning and dyeing works was to the west of Albert Mills, just over the mill lade, built in the early years of the 20th century. The central office block had a 70 ft high chimney tower, emblazoned with a distinctive ‘T’; it was all was demolished in 1990. The surviving administration building was constructed in 1911, with designs by Alexander Inglis. It has a harled facade with red sandstone details, making it quite unique among Hawick factory buildings. The corner water tower is particularly distinctive, with architectural elements of the Modern Movement. An additional concrete building was constructed in 1920, and also demolished in 1990. The company had the largest dyeworks in the Borders, but went into liquidation in 2000. Part of the buildings were occupied by N. Peal, cashmere manufacturers from 1990 until 2006.

Turnbull’s the Dyers (turn-bulz-thu-dI-urz) n. popular name for John Turnbull & Sons, dyers and finishers, also shortened to Turnbull’s the Turnbull Statue (thu-turn-bul-staw’-ew) n. larger-than-life statue outside the Heritage Hub on the site of the former Exchange Buildings. It was sculpted by Galashiels artist Angela Hunter, funded by the Turnbull Clan Association and depicts William of Rule ‘turning the bull’. It was unveiled in 2009.

turneep (tur-nee) n. turnip – ‘Hei’s ootby the day, shawin turneeps’ [ECS] (see also neeps).

turneep-callant (tur-nee-kaw-lin’) n., arch. a boy doing odd-jobs on a farm.

turneepy (tur-nee-pee) adj., arch. having a flavour suggesting the cow was fed on turnips, particularly said of butter.

Turner (tur-nur) n. Alexander (16th/17th C.) described as ‘in Quhytlawhouse’ (presumably either Whitlaw or Whitlaw Haugh) in a 1612 document where many people were accused of charging more than the allowed percentage on loans. Andrew (18th C.) mentioned in 1767 as possessor of a garden and ground in Hawick. He was probably father of William, who owned the Wheathole at the same time. Both men were Burgess of Hawick. He is probably the Andrew who was married to Isobel (or Agnes) Aitkin, with children baptised in Hawick including: Janet (b.1736); William (b.1738); and Betty (b.1744). He is probably the gardener Andrew who witnessed a baptism for William in Hawick in 1760. He is probably the Andrew who witnessed 2 baptisms in Wilton in 1769, 3 others in 1770 and another in 1772 (suggesting that he may have been an Elder in the Kirk or similar). Francis (b.1778/9) born in Dumfriesshire, he worked at Whitfield farm. In 1835–41 he is listed as labourer and overseer at Whitfield among heads of households in Wilton Parish. He is recorded as farm overseer at Whitfield in 1841. In 1851 he is listed there as a shepherd. He lived with his sister Margaret. George (18th C.) recorded as ‘Junior’ in Hawick when he paid the casrt tax in 1788. James (18th/19th C.) carrier who operated between Galashiels and Hawick according to Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In 1837 he is listed leaving from the Grapes every Saturday, bound for Galashiels.

John (16th C.) tenant of Gavin of Elliot of Farnash in 1569. Elliot acted as cautioner for his tenants at a meeting in Hawick, assuring that they would obey the laws of the Lord Regent. His name is recorded as ‘Johne Turnair’. John (18th C.) groom at Midshiels in 1793 and 1794, when he was working for Archibald Douglas. J.S. (19th C.) prominent member of Hawick Golf Club in the late 19th century, being Club Captain. He may have been the first person to achieve a hole in one on the Vertish course. Richard (17th C.) tenant in Lilliesleaf Mill. He is recorded in 1684 when his son John is listed among those declared as fugitives for religious non-conformity. In another version of the list he is recorded as John.

Thomas (17th C.) cottar at Gatehousecote according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He married Euphan Lamb. Their twins William and Betty were baptised in 1766. The witnesses were shoemaker Andrew Scott and gardener William Scott. William (18th C.) paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785 and 1787. He is probably the William recorded as owner of the Wheathole in 1767. He could be the William born to Andrew and Isobel Aitkin in Hawick in 1738. He may also be the William who married Agnes (or Janet) Lamb in 1757 in Wilton Parish and had children baptised in Hawick: Janet (b.1758); Margaret (b.1761); Elizabeth (b.1765); Jane (b.1767); Margaret (again, b.1770); Rebecca (b.1772); Mary (b.1773); and John (b.1778). The witnesses to the 1760 baptism were gardeners Andrew Turner (perhaps his father) and William Aitkin. William (19th C.) grocer on the High Street, listed in Slater’s 1852 directory (formerly ‘Turnair’ and variants).

Turner an Rutherford’s (tur-nur-in-ruthur-fordz) n. hosiery manufacturers that operated at least from 1885 until 1955, based at Mansfield Mills. The partnership was between Mr. Turner and John Rutherford, and they moved to Mansfield Mills in 1891. It may be that the firm never recovered from the 1955 fire, which destroyed part of the older buildings; at that time they employed 300 people. Their minute books and ledgers are stored in the Museum. Braemar took over the factory about 1969 and it later became Jaeger before being converted into flats.

Turner’s Corner (tur-nurz-kör-nur) n. former popular name for the sharp corner on Liddesdale Road by Lynnwood Cottage. It was named for the manufacturer who owned the property there. It was later also known as ‘Fraser’s Corner’. The road was eventually straightened to accommodate the passage of tanks from Stobs.

Turner’s Holm (tur-nurz-hööm) n. area near where the Kershope Burn meets the Liddel Water. This was traditionally the site of the duel between William Armstrong of Greena and Forster of Stanegarthside (according to Sir Walter Scott, the name came from ‘tourney’, since games of chivalry were formerly practised here.

Turning Back the Clock (tur-nin-bawk-thu-klok) n. musical play written by J.E.D. Murray and Adam Grant, performed in the Exchange Hall in September 1912 for a Cricket Club fundraising bazaar. It was described as ‘A pathetic burlesque comedy in two acts’.

turnin hook  (tur-nin-hook) n.  a hand-held implement used in the knitwear industry, similar to a crochet hook, specifically used for turning up ‘run down’ stitches on a knitted garment.

turnit  (tur-nee', -ni') pp., arch. turned – ‘Thou hest turnet for me my murnin’ intil dancin’ …’[HSR], ‘…yis, monie ane time turnet he his angr awa, an’ didna stur up a’ his wræðth’[HSR], the Turnpike Act  (thu-turn-pik-awkt) n. parliamentary act of 1768 which improved the roads in the Borders, specifically between Kelso and Hawick (now the A698), Jedburgh and Lauder (now the A68) and Hawick and Galashiels (now the A7). The Scotch-Dyke to Haremoss road (sometimes referred to as Mosspaungreen to Haremoss) was also part of this general improvement.

The work was paid for by landowning subscribers, who recouped their money through the tolls. This led to Toll-bars being set up at all the major routes out of Hawick.

the Turnpike Bar  (thu-turn-pik-bawr) n. name sometimes used for the toll gate over the main road in one of the directions in and out of Hawick. It is explicitly used in the 1767 description of the Common to refer to the toll-bar at the top of the Loan – ‘…and from the Ford by the north dykes of the Common Loan into the Turnpyke Bar and the West Port of Hawick’[C&L1767].

Turnpikeheid  (turn-pik-heed) n. Turnpike-head, former name for a farm near Bonchester Bridge. William Telfer was there in 1868. It may be the same place known earlier as Roundabouts, near Chesters.

Turnpikeside  (turn-pik-sid) n. former cottage in Southdean Parish, presumably beside the turnpike. Thomas Oliver was farmer there in 1797.

turnt  (turn') pp. turned, became, grew – ‘Ferrer on, the road turnt bieldet o baith seides …’[ECS], ‘…for A’l own A was dry again, turnt, lang or this!’[ECS], Sic a muckle man ee hev turnt!’[ECS] (see also turn).

турсе  (turs) n., arch. a bundle truss – ‘A mighty turse, O’ moral ills, is spued by thee – An empty purse’[JoHa], a large bundle tied up like sticks or straw – ‘The quantity of broom to complete the thatching amounted to 290 turces, and a turse was probably a large bunch tied up like straw’[WaD], v., arch. to truss, bundle.

Turvill  (tur-vil) n. John ‘Jack’ (19th C.) stockinemaker from England who came to Hawick in the mid-1800s. Along with his brother Henry, and several other Englishmen, he helped introduce cricket to the Town. In 1841 he is recorded at about 57 High Street, along with Sibbald, who may have been his wife (also written ‘Turville’).

Tushielaw  (too-, tu-shee-law??) n. hill at the western end of the B711, reaching a height of 435 m. Tushielaw Inn is at its base, and nearby on the hillside is the ruined Tushielaw Tower (dating from about 1600, but built on an earlier house). This was home of the Scotts of Tushielaw, from at least the mid-15th century. It was owned by the Crown from at least 1456, being part of Ettrick Forest that was forfeited by the Earl of Douglas. William Scott held the lease in 1484 and Walter Scott (also of Howpasley) in 1488. John Burnet was recorded there in 1494/5 and recorded stealing 71 sheep from William Hall, who was also there. It remained Crown property until at least 1502. The Scotts of Tushielaw branch later included Mary (of the ballad ‘Mary Scott’) and Adam ‘the King of Thieves’. William Scott was tenant there in 1541, paying £24 yearly. There was a feud between the Scotts of Tushielaw and Thirlstone in the 17th century. The lands were once part of the parish of Rankiburgh. The lands of the Laird in Selkirkshire were valued at £1615 in 1678. The lands were sold to Michael Anderson in 1688, and Andersons continued as Lairds until the mid-19th century, with the Chisholmes of Stirches also often living there. There was a fire there in the 1760s – ‘Ilk petty robber, through the lands, They taucht to stand in awe; And affen checked the plundrin’ bands Of famous Tushialaw’[ES] (variously written as ‘Tuschelaw’, ‘Tuschellaw’, ‘Tushelaw’, ‘Tushelelaw’, etc.; it appears as ‘Torschelelaw’ in 1455, ‘Torschelelaw’ in 1456, ‘Turneschelelaw’ in 1468, ‘Tureschelaw’ in 1471, ‘Turcheslaw’ in 1477, ‘Trusschelaw’ in 1484, ‘Tusschelaw’ in 1488, ‘Tuschelaw’ in 1490, 1494/5 and 1503, ‘Turschelaw’ in 1501 and 1502, ‘Tuschelew’ in 1507, ‘Tuschelaw’ in 1513, ‘Truschelaw’ in 1524/5, ‘Tuschelaw’ in 1526, ‘Tusschelaw’ and ‘Tushelleaw’ in 1528, ‘Tuschelaw’ in 1530, ‘Tuschelaw’ in 1541, 1564 and 1573, ‘Tuschelaw’ in 1574, ‘Tuschelaw’ and ‘Tuchalelaw’ in 1581, ‘Tuschelaw’ in 1583/4, ‘Tuschelaw’ in 1607, ‘Tuschelaw’ in 1619, ‘Tuschelaw’ in 1633, ‘Tuschillaw’ in 1636, ‘Tuschelaw’ in 1649, ‘Tushillaw’ in 1662, ‘Tushellaw’ in 1670, ‘Tushallaw’ in 1687 and ‘Tushalaw’ in 1690; it is ‘Tusslyla’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map; the origin is obscure, with theories including ‘tor-schele-law’, i.e. ‘rock shelling law’ and ‘throssill-law’, i.e. ‘thrust law’).

Tushielaw Inn (too-shee-law-in) n. inn in the Ettrick valley, at the road junction of the B711 from the Borthwick valley to the B709. It was once an important coach house.

tweed (tweed) n. generic name for fabrics made by twill weaves of coarse but soft wool, or products made from such fabrics, for which the Borders is famous. It began in Hawick probably with Wilson & Watson manufacturing ‘Scotch plaiding’ in 1817, followed by blankets, flannel and twill. The origin of the word is apparently due to an order from William Watson & Sons’ clients Messrs. Harvey in London in around 1832, with ‘tweel’ (or perhaps ‘tweel’, meaning ‘tweedled’) being misread as ‘tweed’ when the customer reordered. Alternatively it is suggested that essentially the same story came from William Wilson & Sons, with client James Locke of London in 1826 (and yet another account suggested it was Watsons and Locke). We shall probably never know which of these versions is correct, but it seems likely that it was due to a misreading of an order from a firm in Hawick, probably with an influence of association with the River Tweed. By 1850 it was estimated that the weight of yarn used annually in Hawick to spin tweed and other woollen cloth was about 1,250,000 pounds.

The Tweed (thu-tweed) n. Tweed River, principal river of the Borders, being 97 miles (155 km) long and the 4th largest in Scotland. Its source is Tweed’s Well north of Moffat (interestingly only a few miles from the sources of both the Clyde and the Annan) and flows into the North Sea at Berwick, forming part of the line of the Border in its course. Internationally renowned for salmon fishing, its main tributaries are the Ettrick, Gala, Leader, and of course the Teviot – ‘...I bid your pleasing haunts adieu! Yet, faubing fancy oft shall lead My footsteps to the silver Tweed, Through scenes that I no more must view’ [JL], ‘Slitrig, Borthwicke, and the Teviot swell Tweed’s praises to the sea, Blending all the Border’s music in a glorious harmony’ [GHB], ‘...The sunny smile of an auld, auld toon where the Teviot twines to Tweed’ [JYH], ‘Three crests against the saffron sky, Beyond the purple plain, The kind remembered melody Of Tweed once more again’ [ALg], ‘Then no dirge be mine when my brief days dwine, But this be the tune for me – Tweed’s glorious song, as she rolls along To her tryst with the grey North Sea’ [WL] (the name is very old and its origin obscure although it could be related to the Sanskrit root ‘tavás’ to surge, the same a the Teviot perhaps).

Tweedbank (tweed-bawngk) n. town constructed as urban expansion after the 1968 Johnson-Marshall Report. Its construction was resisted for years by locals before it was built. It never reached the targeted population levels, and as a community it has few services of its own, being essentially a suburb of Galashiels.

Tweed Commissioners (tweed-ko-mi-shi-nurz) n., pl. the River Tweed Commissioners, a body set up by private Acts of Parliament of 1857 and 1859 to manage salmon fishing on the Tweed and its tributaries. Another Act of 1969 extended their responsibilities to include all freshwater fish. Their activities are funded from levies on owners of fisheries. The current Council is the ruling body, with 81 members, 43 of whom are appointed by the local authorities to represent angling clubs and other community groups.

Tweeddale (tweed-däl) n. valley of the River Tweed, often referring to the upper part of the valley specifically, lying between the Yarrow and Gala watersheds. Historically the word was used to refer collectively to Peeblesshire and Selkirkshire. It was later a district of the Borders region, essentially the same as Peeblesshire (it is ‘Tued-dail’ in 1519/20).

Tweeddale (tweed-däl) n. William (17th C.) recorded as a merchant and Burgess of Hawick when his son David became a painter’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1633.

Tweedden (twee-din) n. former seat of the Armstrongs, just to the east of Newcastle. ‘Young Ector Armstrong was there in 1541, when he reset some other Armstrongs, referred to as English rebels. It is recorded as ‘Twyde’ on a map of Liddesdale drawn up by Sir William Cecil, c.1561. Ringan, Hector and Jock of Tweeden are recorded in 1583 and Ninian of Tweeden in 1606. William and John Armstrong of Tweeden are recorded in 1611. ‘Johne Armstrong, callit of Tweeden’ is recorded in 1622 and Francie ‘callit Tweenden’ in 1623. It may be the same place that is on the list of parts of the Lordship of Liddesdale in 1632 as ‘Helene Tweidmes lands’. In the same document is recorded the farm of ‘Megie Tweedmes’, whose meaning is also obscure (it is ‘Tweed’ in 1541, ‘Tweedane’ in 1576, ‘Tweedon’ in 1580, ‘Tuedon’ in 1583 and ‘Tueden’ in 1599 and 1622).

Tweed Valley Mountain Rescue Team

(tweed-vaw-lee-mown’in-res-kew-teem) n. organisation formed as a volunteer group in 1966 and is now a registered charity. It has helped in many search and rescue operations in the Border hills. The organisation grew out of the Cheviot Walking Club in the early 1950s, with the first search and rescue team set up in 1963 and named the Borders Search and Rescue Unit. This was in response to the growing number of inexperienced hikers walking the Cheviots. This outfit split into 3 sections (based at Yetholm, Duns and Gala), with the Gala-based section being renamed Tweed Valley Mountain Rescue Team, with police officer Tony Robinson as its first Team Leader. From humble beginnings, the group has grown into a well organised and experienced group, which works closely with other organisations. In 1988 they helped with the Lockerbie disaster as well as countless less serious incidents. The Team trains every Wednesday night.

Twee-dee n., arch. twill, a fabric having diagonal parallel ribs, which was abundantly manufactured in Hawick in the late 18th and early 19th centuries before a clerical error changed the name to ‘tweed’.

Tweedside n., poet. certainly, indeed – ‘Tweed ye hae walth to wale on if it’s sae; Sae sigh nae mair, for towth ye mak me wae’ [CPM] (contracted form of ‘I wast weel’).

tweetch v., poet. to twitch – ‘He’ll snap an’ tweetch frae haunted dreams An’ loupin’ her’t consumed wi’ fear’ [WFC].

Twislehope (tuw-twir-leez) n. former name for an ill-defined area of the Wellogate, being associated with the approach to open country on the east side. The name is believed to have originated from a turnstile which was at the end of a straight lane running roughly from the end of the present Park Street to the Braid Road. The turnstile was there up until around 1885, and was a simple cross-wise pattern of two bars revolving on a post, probably installed to protect the town from horse traffic or straying cattle in that direction (there is no evidence to support a suggestion that the origin may be a corruption of ‘Tuileries’ from the Napoleonic War prisoners quartered in Hawick).

Twirlees Road (twir-leez-rôd) n. street in the Wellogate running from the top of Brougham Place to Orchard Terrace, named in 1908. It follows the line of the former path leading to the Braid Road with a turnstile at the end, which is believed to have given its name to the area. The path ran roughly from the top of the present Park Street to near the top of the steps at Braid Road. The turnstile was there until the mid-19th century, and consisted of two wooden bars fixed cross-wise onto a strong post.

Twirlees Steps (twir-leez-steps) n. name sometimes used for the stairs between the end of Twirlees Road and the Braid Road.

Twirlees Terrace (twir-leez-te-ris) n. street in the Wellogate between Twirlees Road and Douglas Road East, named in 1915, and taking its name from the name already in use for the general area.

Twislehope (twiz-lup) n. farm just to the south off the Hermitage Water road, where the Twislehope Burn meets the Chapel Grain. The lands were valued at 8 merks in 1541. It was owned by the Earl of Bucleuch by 1632. Archibald Goodfellow was tenant there in 1694. There were Elliotts there in the 17th century, when it was sometimes referred to as ‘Castlehope’ (althought that may just be an error). It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Scott of Bucleuch properties, when it covered 2225 acres, bounded by Billhope, Carewoodrig, Dinlees, lands held by the Laird of Hoscote, Tarras, Unthank and Blackhall. It is stated that ‘here is but little corn land or meadow for this farm is very mountainous’. In 1792 Sir Walter Scott and Robert Shortreed visited ‘auld Thomas o’ Twizzlehope’, who was known for his skill on the Border pipe, and was said to have the original tune for ‘Dick o’ the Cow’. Thomas Elliot was recorded there in 1797. Alexander Easton was there in 1821. Andrew Elliot was tenant there in the mid-19th century and Andrew Scott was shepherd there in the mid-to-late 19th century. Walter Elliot is recorded at ‘Cawslip’ in a directory of 1868 (also written ‘Twizellehope’ and variants; the name probably derives from the Old English ‘twisla hop’, meaning ‘valley where two streams fork’; it is first recorded as ‘Cwyslehop’ in 1376 and is ‘Twylishop’ in 1541, ‘Tveisliehope’ in 1632 and ‘Tuilshope’ in 1694; ‘Tuilsoopp’ appears to be the spelling on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Tuislehope’ and ‘Tuishope’ on the 1718 Bucleuch survey, with the modern spelling appearing on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Twislehope Hope (twiz-lup-hop) n. farmstead in the Hermitage valley, up the Twislehope Burn from Twislehope itself. There were Scotts there in 1841 (note the double use of ‘hope’).

Twizel (twiz-zul) n. village near where the Till flows into the Tweed. The 15th century bridge there has a single-arched span of about 27 m, the longest in Britain at the time. This was a significant crossing point, where Surrey’s men crossed behind the Scots at the Battle of Flodden (also spelled ‘Twizell’).

Tynehead Uffie Rae

Tynehead from the Anglo-Saxon. There was a major outbreak in Hawick in 1938, leading to the town being temporarily ostracised by industrialists and others.

tyred (tīr’d) adj., pp. tired — ‘A’m ower tyred ti gaun on’, ‘A’m no seek, A’m juist tyred’ (note the pronunciation with the hard ə and the glottal stop).

Tyr-ibus Ye Tyr Ye Odin (tee-ree-bus-ee-tee-re-o-din) n. town slogan, also spelled ‘Teribus ye Teri-Odin’ and other variants. This particular version is the one that appears on the town coat of arms (the origin, meaning and age of this phrase are all uncertain).

Tyr heebbe us ye tyr ye Odin (tee-ree-bus-ee-tee-re-o-din) n. another version of the slogan, displayed at the Colour Bussing in the early 20th century. This spelling is inspired by one suggestion for the slogan’s meaning, ‘Thor keep us, both Thor and Odin’, from the Anglo-Saxon.

Tythehouse (ti-tis, tī'-is, tīth-hoos) n. Tythehouse, farm in Hobkirk Parish, on the road between Forkins and Harwood. It was for a long time part of the Harwood estate, being in 1637 described as the ‘2 merkland’ which is a ‘pendicle’ of Harwood. It passed (along with Harwood) from William Lord Herries to James Hamilton in 1602 and confirmed to Francis Hamilton in 1610. Not long afterwards it was part of the estate of the Lornaines and then sold to the Elliot’s along with Harwood in 1637. ‘Tithous with 4th part of the lands of Fernilie’ were listed among the properties of Sir William Elliott of Stobs in the Barony of Feu-Rule in the late 17th century. William Dalgleish was tenant there in 1797, Thomas E. Boog and W. Maben in the 1860s and Tom Smith in the late 19th century. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows a building and enclosure near the Harwood Burn, to the south-west of the farm, as well as a cottage and garden just north-east of the farm, neither of which are extant. There was also formerly a mill pond running to the 2 mill ponds to the south-west, which probably powered a threshing mill (it may be the place transcribed as ‘Tytos Renis’ in a bounding charter of 1567 and ‘Titois Renis’ in 1604; it is spelled ‘Tythus’ in 1602, ‘Tyth’ in 1609, 1610, 1630 and 1631, ‘Tyttous’, ‘Tittous’ in 1632, ‘Tytous’ in 1633 and 1637, ‘Tithas’ in 1655, ‘Tithouse’ in 1656 and 1694, ‘Tythehouse’ in 1699, ‘Titehous’ about 1700, ‘Tythehouse’ in 1769 and ‘Titus’ in 1797; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map as ‘Tyth house’).

Tythehoosefield (ti-tis-feeld, tīth-hoos-feeld) n. former name for lands in Rulewater, recorded as ‘Tythhousfield’ in a 1649 discharge of a loan, along with Tythehouse and Harwood. This may be the same farmstead as ‘Titus foord’ recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when Robert Scott was tenant.

-Ual (wel, wil) suffix, arch. occurring in words such as ‘actual’, ‘annual’, ‘continual’, ‘gradual’, ‘individual’ and ‘virtual’ (note the local pronunciation).

Uchtred (ooch-trid) n. (12th C.) priest of Liliesleaf. In about 1160 an agreement between him and Auskittel Riddell was confirmed by Pope Alexander III. It is unknown when exactly he was priest, but the agreement appears to have been made between 1114 and 1147. The name was also recorded in the same century in the Molle and Scott families.

Uchtred (ooch-trid) n. (12th C.) son of Oswulf and grandson of an earlier Uchtred. With his consent his father regranted the lands of Ringwood to Melrose Abbey in about 1166. His son Thomas and maternal uncle Edmund were witnesses to the same document, as well as Ralph ‘son of Uchtred’. A further confirmation at about the same time was made by his son Thomas. He is probably the ‘luctredo filio olulii’ who witnessed the grant of lands in Whitton to Melrose Abbey by Patrick Riddell in the period 1175–89, as confirmed in 1454 (also written ‘Uctred’ and ‘Uhtred’).

It was owned by the Haswells in the 17th century and tenanted by the steward of Jedburgh Castle in 1300, was made Sheriff of Jedburgh Castle in 1302 (possibly acting as Sheriff for the county) and was an ambassador to France again in 1303. Forfeiting his lands to the Englishman Sir Henry Percy in 1304, he had them reinstated by Robert the Bruce in 1306. However, he switched to the English side again in 1307, being made Guardian of South and West Scotland by Edward II. He also fought with the English at Bannockburn, being captured and ransomed afterwards. He died in England. Sir Robert (d.1436) Governor of Berwick and Vice-Admiral of England. His men burned Jedburgh in 1410 and 1416. He owned the tower at Otterburn, and defeated the Scots at Yeavering, near Wooler, in 1414. His forces probably razed Selkirk and its castle in 1417, and burned Hawick in 1418. He was also present at the burning of Peebles. He was recorded in 1265/6 in regard to lands in England, swore fealty to Henry III in 1266/7. Also in 1266/7 he was granted free warrant of his lands in Northumberland and granted a market at his lands in Rutland. In England he held the title of Lord of Redesdale. In 1269 he was in dispute with William Douglas over the lands of Faudon in Northumberland. He signed the Ragman Rolls in 1291. He lived at Prudhoe Castle in Northumberland, married Elizabeth Comyn and was succeeded by his son Robert. Sir Ingram (d.c.1321) son of Robert. He inherited the English and Scottish estates of Ingram Baliol. As an ambassador he helped establish the ‘Auld Alliance’ in 1295. In 1296 he was on the English side at the siege of Berwick abd fought on the English side at the Battle of Falkirk in 1298, but was on the Scottish side at the siege of Stirling Castle in 1299. In 1300 he was appointed as a Guardian of Scotland, but resigned after a year, to be replaced by John de Soulis. He was involved in the siege of Lochmaben Castle in 1301, was made Sheriff of Jedburgh Castle in 1302 (possibly acting as Sheriff for the county) and was an ambassador to France again in 1303. Forfeiting his lands to the Englishman Sir Henry Percy in 1304, he had them reinstated by Robert the Bruce in 1306. However, he switched to the English side again in 1307, being made Guardian of South and West Scotland by Edward II. He also fought with the English at Bannockburn, being captured and ransomed afterwards. He died in England. Sir Robert (d.1436) Governor of Berwick and Vice-Admiral of England. His men burned Jedburgh in 1410 and 1416. He owned the tower at Otterburn, and defeated the Scots at Yeavering, near Wooler, in 1414. His forces probably razed Selkirk and its castle in 1417, and burned Hawick in 1418. He was also present at the burning of Peebles. He was the last of the male line of Umfraville, a once powerful Northumberland family.

Underdamside (un-dur-dawn-sôd) n. street named after its proximity to Wilton Dam, and to distinguish it from Damside (Victoria Road). The area can be seen in a sketch from the early 19th century. It is sometimes also ‘Lower Damside’. The row of houses was originally reached by a footpath, which was turned into Bath Street in the early years of the 20th century. The houses became uninhabitable and were demolished after the Wilson & Glenny’s fire of 1959. The site was rebuilt as part of the mill in 1961, the buildings later being used for educational training purposes. All that remains of the former street is a footpath connecting to Wilton Path.

undergane (un-dur-gân) pp. undergone – ‘Even oor manner o’ celebratin’ the Common-Ridin’ has undergone certain modifications...’ [BW1939].

the Under Haugh (thu-un-dur-hawch′, -hawf) n. formerly part of the Common Haugh, lying to the north of the main road from Hawick to Wilton (now Albert Road), which separated it from the Upper Haugh. It extended approximately to where the Baths were later built and covered a little over 7 acres. It was once the site of the Bleachfield, and also formerly used for some Common Riding events. Part of it (7424/1000 acres around where the Burns Club is now) was sold to the North British Railway Company in 1847 and passed into local business hands in 1854. For the Friday afternoon and Saturday Common Riding Races, there were 4 pieces of movable fence separating the Under from the Upper Haugh, so that both could be used together. The selling of the Under Haugh probably contributed to the decline in the popularity of the Common Riding in the 1860s and 1870s. But soon afterwards the area was used in the industrial development of the town and the raising of feus for the Council on Commercial Road (note this is sometimes mistakenly identified with the Little Haugh, which is sometimes called the Lower Haugh).

the Union Flag (thu-yoon-yin-flawg) n. name sometimes given to the earliest existing Common Riding flag, of 1707, from the erroneous assumption that it was made to commemorate the Union between Scotland and England. The flag still exists in the Museum. It measures about 34 inches along the staff and was pennon-shaped, bearing the date 1707, and the much faded yellow and blue colours. It was made to replace an earlier flag, which had deteriorated too much to use, and which some have suggested may even have been the original of 1514. The connection to the ‘Union’ appears to have been made by James Wilson and then William Norman Kennedy, presumably just because of the date. It is now on display in Drumlanrig’s Tower, having undergone restoration work in 1992.

Union Haa (yoon-yin-haw) n. Union Hall, former property that was part of the Linthill estate, the Union Inn

the mansion house standing on the south side of the Ale Water. In the early 18th century it was owned by Rev. William Hunter of Lilliesleaf. The lands there were valued at £121 10s in 1788 (it is ‘Unionhall’ in 1788).

Union Street (yoon-yin-stree’) n. street winding between North Bridge Street and Bourtree Place, built around 1865 as a useful bypass from the Jedburgh to Edinburgh roads. The name was chosen before any building started, with the houses built soon afterwards. At the end of the 19th century the Procession on the Friday of the Common Riding would pass along this street and then stop at the Bourtree Place end while the Cornet and supporters went to Bogliebarns. The street is still used on the route to loop back to the High Street on the evening after the Thursday Night Chase. A pet shop stood at No. 1 for a long time and Lodge No. 424 is at No. 8 (the name probably comes from the Union of the two main roads, but there may also be a connection with the Border Union Railway).

Union Street (yoon-yin-stree’) n. street in Newcastleton, off the main B6357 near Douglas Square.

Union Street Hall (yoon-yin-stree’-hal) n. name sometimes used for the public hall on Union Street, next to the Masonic Lodge.

Unshank (un-shawngk) n. name for lands that were once in Liddesdale. It is listed in a rental of 1541 as ‘Unschank’, when it was vacant. This could be the same place as John Armstrong ‘called ‘Unschank’ on a list of thieves to be apprehended in 1642. It is possible this was Unthank in Ewesdale.

Unshope (un-zöp) n. probably name for lands in the Barony of Cavers, recorded as ‘Vnishop’. In 1519/20 they were promised from James Gledstains as part of the marriage contract for his son James, and a daughter of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. It is unclear where exactly these lands were, but the other lands listed were Giddenscleuch, Binks and ‘Langbittis’.

unsonsy (un-son-see) adj., arch. unpleasant, unfortunate, bringing bad luck – ‘Crowing Hen. This is reckoned very unsonsoic or uncannie about a house, Teviotdale’ [JoJ].

untellin (un-te-lin) pp., adj., arch. impossible to tell, uncountable, past reckoning – ‘...Thrang wui droves o nowt – ana keinds, untellin – kay an tuips ...’[ECS].

Unthank (un-thawngk) n. farm in Ewesdale, on the east side of the A7, about a mile south of Fiddleton Toll. Here are the remains of the pre-Reformation Over Kirk of Ewes, dedicated to St. Mark, with its ancient churchyard. Also nearby was a mediaval settlement owned by the Lovels, and a former farmstead further up the Unthank Burn. On the opposite side of the A7 there are the remains of another former settlement. The superiority of the lands was held by the Homes in the early 16th century and the name is recorded in a list of Ewesdale lands from at least as early as 1506 when the superiority was granted to Alexander, Lord Home. Hob Elliot was ‘callit Hob of Unthank’ in 1569. The lands were listed in 1663 among those owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch in the Lordship of Ewesdale. Franklin D. Roosevelt was descended from James Murray who was born and farmed here, and emigrated to North Carolina in 1735. Miss Elliot was recorded there in 1787, Charles Aitchison in 1792 and Mrs. Aitchison was in 1797. Edward Aitchison was farmer there in 1841, and teacher John Little was also living there. David Scott was farmer there in the 1860s (unrelated to the place of the same name in Hobkirk Parish; it was ‘Vninth’ in 1535 and 1663: the origin may be Old English ‘unthances’, meaning ‘without leave’, i.e. referring to a squatter’s farm, or it may refer to lands with ‘ungrateful’ soil).

Unthank (un-thawngk) n. former farm in Hobkirk Parish, located between Hobkirk Kirk and Forkins, on the west side of the Rule valley. Forkins was sometimes formerly known as ‘Forkins of Unthank’. Alexander Turnbull was recorded there in 1493 and both he and Henry Turnbull in 1494/5. Leo Turnbull was tenant there in 1516. At the reformation the teind sheaves were valued at 1 boll and held by the Earl of Lothian. Archibald Turnbull is recorded there in 1586. In 1643 the proprietors were Robert and David Turnbull, and it was valued at £66 13s 4d. In the late 17th century it was part of the lands of Stobs whose rents were assigned to the widow of Sir Gilbert Elliott, Magdalen Nicolson, and her surviving children. It was separated from Stobs to become part of the estate of Stonedge in 1671. In the early 18th century it was owned by Gilbert Elliott of Stonedge and valued at £66 13s. 4d. He sold it to Thomas Scott of Stonedge, who had the lands enclosed in a turf dyke, with a double thorn hedge and a row of beech trees (some of which survive). The ‘Cleough or back brae of Unthank’ was sold by Thomas Scott of Stanedge to William Elliot of Wolfelee in 1757; this piece of land appears to have been valued at £67 11s 1d, and was £64 2s 8d in 1788. Andrew Oliver was then tenant, followed by Rev. John Riccarton. The farm was then let along with Wester Swanshiel and a field that was called Unthank until recent times (it is recorded at least as early as 1677 as ‘Unthank Kirk’). Alexander Turnbull was tenant there in 1797. It was subsequently divided between Hartshaugh Mill and Blackleemouth. In the last quarter of the 18th century there were 4 residents in the hamlet there, along with a blacksmith, Thomas Scott. It was listed as ‘Unthank, also part of Stonedge’ among lands owned by Cornelius Elliot in 1811, valued at £67 11s 1d. There were Murrays there in 1841. The farm is long gone, but the name survives in Unthank Wood and a field that was called Unthank until recent times (it is recorded at least as early as 1677 as ‘Unthank’; it is ‘Unthanck’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, and still on Stobie’s map of 1770; there are places of the same name in the Ewes valley, near Perth and at least 2 more in Northumberland; the origin may be Old English ‘unthan’, meaning ‘ingratitude’, signifying unprofitable land, although other ideas have been suggested, e.g. a corruption of ‘shank’).
Unthank

Unthank (un-thawngk) n. Thomas (15th C.) recorded as ‘Thome Vnthank’ in 1505/6 in an instrument referring to him being the notary for a sasine of 1463 for Stephen Scott (probably a younger son of Robert Scott of Rangleburn) in the lands of Muirhouse in the Barony of Crichton. He was notary for a transumpt for an inquest concerning the lands of Cranshaws for Swinton of that Ilk in 1464; he was there a clerk of the Diocese of St. Andrews. He was also notary for a confirming charter for James, son of William Borthwick in 1467. He was also notary in 1471 for a charter granted by William, Lord Abernethy, to Andrew Ker of Cessford in the Barony of Penderleigh. Also in 1471 he was notary for a charter confirming Walter Ker in the lands of Hindhope.

U.P. (yoo-pee) n. abbreviation for ‘United Presbyterian’. The Secession Churches in Hawick were referred to as the ‘West End U.P.’ and ‘East U.P.’ churches after the union of the secessionists in 1829. The use of the name was dropped in favour of ‘U.F.’ in 1900 when the United Presbyterian Church united with the Free Church of Scotland.

up (up) prep. up, sometimes also ‘up to’, with ‘to’ omitted where it would be there in standard English – ‘let’s gaun up the Millers’, in – ‘Div ee leike ti beide up Ingland’ [ECS], used to refer to a journey either upriver or to the north – ‘oo speak aboot gaun ‘up ti Langholm’, even though the Langholm yin’s speak aboot gaun ‘up ti Hawick’’, used to describe to a river in flood – ‘the witter’s up’, ‘Auld Watt had run over to Tweed to see if she was ‘up’’ [BM1939], v. to get up, rise up, set about – ‘...But we up at the fade o’ day, And oor vengeance is soond and sair’ [TK].

Upper Calaburn (u-pur-kaw-la-burn) n. former name for part of the farm of Calaburn. Agricultural labourer James Stevenson was there in 1841, as well as spinster Margaret Scott and ‘Independent’ Nelly Scott. However, it appears to have been abandoned by 1851.

the Upper Common Haugh (thu-u-pur-ko-min-hawch, -hawf) n. another name for the Big Haugh.

Upper Damside (u-pur-dawn-sid) n. another name for Damside, which became Victoria Road.

the Upper Haugh (thu-u-pur-hawch, -hawf) n. the Upper Common Haugh, or Big Haugh, now largely a car park. The Upper and Under Haughs were separated by the main road from Hawick to Wilton (now Albert Road). This was the location of the afternoon races of the Common Riding until 1854 (‘the Nugget year’), when the persistence of accidents there caused the races to be moved to St. Leonard’s Park.

Upper Larriston (u-pur-law-ris-tin) n. farmstead near the Larriston Burn, far to the south-east of the present main house at Larriston. It has been suggested that somewhere near here was the original site of the tower of the Elliot’s. It may have corresponded to the former farm of Over Larriston. A late 18th century cottage there has a carved stone built into it, with the date 1677 and an Elliot monogram. There is also a disused lime works near there, with evidence of an old field system to the south (this is roughly where ‘Larristown’ is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

uppermaist (u-pur-mäst) adj. uppermost – ‘...and there werni mony Border witter-gates whaes upper-maist reaches they didin explore’ [TWL].

Upper Raw (u-pur-raw) n. Upper Row, former name for a row of houses in Wilton Dean. It is used in the 1841 census to distinguish it from Fore Row and Burn Row. It probably corresponded to the houses on the track running uphill from the green in the main part of the village. The name was probably never in general use and disappeared by the time of the 1861 census.

Upper Raw (u-pur-raw) n. Upper Row, farmstead in Castleton Parish, marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, lying to the north-west Upper Rig (u-pur-rig) n. name for the field on Hawick Common that is to the east of Pilmuir Rig and north of Bottom Rig (’rig’ here presumably refers to a strip of ploughed land).

Upper Soothfield (u-pur-sooth-feeld) n. former name for part of Southfield farm, probably the same as Ower Soothfield.

Upper Teviotdale (u-pur-teev-yi’-dāl) n. name generally applied to the Teviot above (and sometimes including) Hawick, much of which later became the Parish of Teviothead. The area was burned by the English around May 1514, when it was described as ‘the hede of the Watter of Tevyote, from Branksholme up unto Ewse Doors, it was described as ‘the hede of the Watter of Tevyote, from Branksholme up unto Ewse Doors, within the same Marche, beyng 8 miles in lienth, wherupon was 24 pleughes’.

Upper Teviotdale and the Scotts of Buccleuch (u-pur-teev-yi’-dāl-and-thu-skots-ov-bu-kloo) n. history book written by Mrs. J.R. Oliver and published in Hawick in 1887. Its full title is ‘Upper Teviotdale and the Scotts of Buccleuch. A local and family history’. The book is, as the title suggests, a combination of Buccleuch family and local history. Each chapter focuses on a particular chief of the house of Buccleuch (in Victorian sycophantic tones), as well as containing a large amount of scholarly description of what was happening in the Hawick area at the time.

Upper Teviotdale Fisheries Association (u-pur-teev-yi’-dāl-fi-shu-reez-aw-sō-see-ā-shin) n. fishing control body of the late 19th century, made up primarily of the local landowners. It was founded in 1881, following a meeting in Hawick the previous year, and haxids as its objects the prevention of illegal fishing, promotion of sportsman-like angling, and protection of fish stocks. However, there were complaints from the Border Association for the Reform of Fishery Laws and others, that it existed to exclude working class anglers. Its President was the Duke of Buccleuch, and other committee members included Sir Walter Elliot of Walfleet and William Lockhart of Borthwickbrae. In 1911 the Association agreed to allow Hawick to have its own Angling Club, and since then has worked in cooperation with that Club in the issuing of licenses and the policing of the waterways.

Upper Teviotdale Rifle Corps (u-pur-teev-yi’-dāl-ni-ful-kōr) n. Volunteer company set up in 1860 at the instigation of William Elliot, with the Patronage of the Duke of Buccleuch, motivated by the perceived threat from France. The uniforms were grey, and it was the 4th Corps in Roxburghshire, with John Scott Chisholme of Stiches becoming Captain. A second company was formed in 1864 and a drill hall built at the foot of the Mill Path, which became St. Mary’s Church Hall. Some members left in an early dispute to form the Hawick Volunteer Corps later in 1860. The Corps evolved into the Border Rifles in 1868, and after several other changes became the 4th Battalion of the K.O.S.B. in 1908. Their ‘armoury’ or drill hall was at the corner of Allars Crescent and the Mill Path in the late 19th century and later became the Salvation Army headquarters.

Upper Tofts (u-pur-tofts) n. farm beside Kirkton, about 4 miles east of Hawick, and south-west of Nether Tofts. It was formerly also known as ‘High Tofts’ and ‘Over Tofts’. There were Turnbuls there for many generations. The lands were inherited by William, son of Thomas Turnbull of Tofts in 1695. John Lorraine was there in 1722. Thomas Hall was there in 1794 and James Turnbull in 1797. It was farmed by George and Robert Deans (Hawick butchers) in the mid-19th century. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows a building to the west that is now gone. There are a couple of disused quarries on Tofts Hill nearby.

Upper Village (u-pur-vi-leej) n. former name for the upper part of the Village, distinct from the Under Village. It was first developed between 1824 and 1828 with the erection of the ‘Hen’s Nest’, on a site later occupied by ‘Woodlands’.

uppie (u-pee) n. someone who plays towards the lower ‘hail’ in a game of ‘baa’ – ‘On nearing the uppies’ hail the leather found its way into the water and was carried across by an uppie who took it away’ [HNe1906].

uppush (up-ish) adj., arch. ambitious, aspiring, arrogant (noted by E.C. Smith).

Up wi’ Auld Hawick (up-wi-awld-hlk) _n._ song written for local singer John Bell, with words by Thomas Caldwell and music by Adam Grant. It was first sung at the 1902 Colour Bussing by Colin Jardine, and then at the following 3 Colour Bussings by John Bell. It is the only song of Grant’s with the verses and chorus having different rhythms (the change is from 4/4 time to 3/4). The tune of the verses may have been influenced by Charles Darnton’s ‘The Rescue of Lot’ (1895), while the chorus bears a similarity to part of Elgar’s ‘Pomp and Circumstance March’. However, the song is much stronger than ‘the Queen’ in the chorus.

Up wi’ the Banner (up-wi-thu-baw-nur) _n._ song written by James Thomson, with music by William Inglis Robson. The words were written by Thomson only about a year and a half before his death. It was dedicated to Cornet Tom Scott and sung at the 1887 Colour Bussing by Robert Paterson to the tune of ‘Hail to the Chief’. Thomson’s words are clearly inspired by that earlier song (written by Albert Gamse, with music by James Sanderson), which became associated with the President of the United States. These words were themselves loosely based on the ‘Boat Song’ (Canto II XIX) from Sir Walter Scott’s ‘The Lady of the Lake’. Hence Thomson’s first line ‘Hail to the banner that proudly floats o’er us’ derives from Scott’s first line ‘Hail to the chief, who in triumph advances’, and ‘Join in the old refrain – Shout Teriodin again and again’ is inspired by the end of Scott’s first verse ‘Sends our shout back agen, ‘Roderigh Vich Alpine Dhu, ho! i-e-roe!’’. In any case, Robson’s tune was composed in late 1887 and published early the following year. The new version was presented at the Colour Bussing of 1888, again sung by Paterson. It has been sung at almost every Colour Bussing ever since. Its popularity at that event is presumably partly because it is such a rousing song, but also because it is a triumphant song in which the Flag is prominent. Note that Thomson originally wrote ‘Boast, Scotland, boast of the deeds of your fathers’, but that quickly became ‘Boast, Hawick, boast!’! The original version also had the chorus after the first 2 verses being ‘Fling out the standard high ...’, but that is no longer sung. Robson’s tune has... an introductory fanfare, which is seldom played. Adam Ingle took the key down a tone for the 1957 song compilation.

ur (ur) v. are – ‘ur ee no Hawick then?’, ‘the Greens ur gaun ti wun the Seevins’ (er and ir are also used).

Urban Electric (ur-bin-ee-lek-treek) n. Urban Electric Supply Company, based at 18–20 Commercial Road. It was the first supplier of electricity in Hawick, starting in 1901 with The Theatre and then the Co-operative Society store. In 1945/46 the electricity supply was changed from locally generated D.C. to A.C. from the national grid. The building was sold to the council in 1968 and now houses an engineering firm.

Ure (yor) n. Rev. Neil Shaw (b.1828) born in Renfrewshire, son of William and Margaret Brown. He was licensed to preach by the Free Kirk Presbytery of Lanark in 1858. He was minister of Newcastle Free Kirk 1861–75. There was a case of libel brought against him in 1875, which may have something to do with his resignation. He appears to have failed in a draper’s business in Manchester 1877. His wife was Jessie. They had a son, William Simpson, who was killed when a U-boat hit his ship in 1940.

Urquhart (ur-kur’t) n. Adam of Meldrum (1635–84) from an Aberdeenshire family, he was made a Justice of the Peace in Roxburghshire in 1679 in order to assist Henry Ker (Sheriff-Depute of the county) in prosecuting Covenanters. He was zealous in his duties, and subsequently hated in the district. He brought an action against Thomas Turnbull of Knowe and against the young William Douglas of Cavers and his tutors. He married Mary Gordon, daughter of the Marquess of Huntly and was succeeded by his son John. Rev. George minister at Southdean (linked with Edgerston) 1966–72. William (18th/19th C.) recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory as ‘William, esq. Crescent’. His house on Slitrig Crescent (around No. 2) is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘History of Hawick’.

Usher (u-shur) n. Adam ‘Adie’ (d.1624) born in ‘Birkinhauch in Liddesdale. He was a servant of Robert Elliot of Redheugh. In 1624 he was convicted of several instances of sheep and cattle stealing, along with his son William, and sentenced to hanging, with his son being banished. The chief of the Elliots escaped punishment for his part in the incident. He and his son were recorded as ‘Adie and Will Vshearis’; the 2 cows and an ox stolen from William Charlton of ‘Islysye’ were said to have been eaten in the house of Robert Elliot of Redheugh. Alexander Balmer ‘Sandy’ (1902–40) son of Sir Robert, 2nd Baronet. In about 1921 he took over running Bedrule on the family estate. He was a Major in the Lothian and Border Horse, and was killed during the Dunkirk retreat. His tombstone is at St. Valery-en-Caux, while there is a memorial plaque in Bedrule Kirk. Andrew (c.1782–1855) son of James of Toffield. His uncle Thomas of Courthill arranged for him to be employed as a retail apprentice for 1 year at Nixon’s hosiery manufacturers in Hawick when he was about 20. He started his own hosiery shop in Edinburgh in 1803, but after a few years had moved into the spirit trade. In 1813 he founded Andrew Usher & Co., whisky distillers and blenders and the Usher Brewery of Edinburgh. He introduced the Glenlivet blend in 1853, had a distillery at Sciennes in Edinburgh and is credited with producing the first mass-produced blended whiskies. He married Margaret, daughter of Thomas Balmer of Ettrickbrae, and she died in 1860. They had 13 children, including Andrew and John, who continued the family firm, and James and Thomas who set up the brewery. Sir Andrew John (1963– ) 8th and present Baronet, eldest son of Sir William John Tevenar. He married Charlotte Louise Alexandra Eldridge and their children are Rory James Andrew and Callum William Edward. Charles Cogan (1884–1959) born in Wilton, son of Thomas, he emigrated to Canada in 1903, where he farmed in Alberta with his brother Thomas. John of Toftfield (1766–1847) born in Melrose, son of James of Toftfield. He was the 3rd and last Laird of Toftfield, selling the estate to Sir Walter Scott in 1819, and moving to Leaderfoot and Quarryford in Haddingtonshire. Toftfield had been purchased by his grandfather, also John, in 1753. He married Janet Oliver of Chesters and later Agnes Blaikie of Melrose. Altogether he had 14 children, including James, S.S.C., John (Makerstoun) and Jane (last surviving member of the family, dying in 1897). John (1794–1864) W.S., son of Thomas and Isabella Pott. He trained as a lawyer in Edinburgh and became Writer to the Signet in 1822. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s 1825 ‘ History of Hawick’. He died unmarried. John (1809–96) son of John of Toftfield, he was a farmer at Stodrig and also known as a poet, as well as being a great horse lover and authority on Border sheep. He was Honorary Secretary of the Border Coursing Club. It is said that he was rewarded with a pony for singing to Sir Walter Scott when a boy. In his day he was called ‘the Laureate of the Borders’ and known around Kelso as ‘Auld Usher’. He wrote ‘Border breeds of sheep’ (1875) and ‘Poems and songs’ (1894). He also acted as Clerk of the Course at Kelso Races. He married Margaret Warwick Morton, who died in 1877. Their children were John (farmer at Gatehousecote), Emily Gordon and Samuel Morton who died in infancy). John (1840–1892) son of John of Stodrig, Makerstoun and grandson of John Usher of Toftfield. He was educated in St. Andrews and at Edinburgh University. He became tenant at Gatehousecote in 1863 and remained there until he died. In 1868 he was referred to ‘junior’ when he was farmer at Gatehousecote. He was known as an all-round sportsman, being a keen horse-rider, fisherman, shooter and follower of the Jedforest Hunt, although apparently not such a good farmer. He joined the Border Mounted Rifles at their inaugural meeting in Hawick in 1872, where he became Colour-Sergeant. He was also a member of the Lothian Yeomanry. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1872. In 1875 he was a Steward at the Common Riding Races. He was Whip of the Jedforest Hounds 1885–92. He married Isabella, 4th daughter of William Aitcheson of Brieryhill. They had only one child, a son who died in infancy. He died of pneumonia after a period of ill-health (it is said he died of a chill contracted at the Derby). Sir John (1828–1904) 1st Baronet of Norton and Wells, youngest son of Andrew. Along with his brother Andrew he carried on the family whisky distilling business in Edinburgh. He gifted the ‘ John Usher Institute of Public Health’ to Edinburgh (while Andrew gifted the Usher Hall to the city). He purchased the farms and estates of Hallrule, Bedrule (including Fulton) and Wells (including East Fodderlee) from Elliott of Stobs in 1895/6; these also came with associated baronies. He also owned Norton (near Edinburgh Airport), Pitheavlis Castle (near Perth) and land in Caithness. He was said to be a keen fox-hunter, enjoying riding with the hounds till his last days. He served as Whip for the Jedforest Hounds in the period 1885–92. A keen Liberal in his youth, he transferred his allegiance to the Unionists after 1886, becoming the first Treasurer of the East and North of Scotland Liberal Unionist Association and later being Chairman. of the Liberal Unionist Committee of Midlothian. He was also a benefactor of the Free Church. He married his cousin Mary Anne, daughter of Thomas Balmer and Agnes Stuart. He was created Baronet in 1899 and was succeeded by his son Sir Robert. Other children include: John Andrew, died aged 22; Thomas Balmer, died aged 21; Frederick, who married Rose Emily, daughter of Canon Knox-Little of Worcester Cathedral; Francis James, who married Katherine Edward Jones of New Brunswick; Agnes Stuart, who married John Little of Stainrigg, Berwickshire; and Mary Ann, who married Thomas Leadbetter of Stobieside, Lanark. He died suddenly in Cairo, where he had gone for his health. His portrait was painted by Sir George Reid. Sir John Turnbull, J.P.; O.B.E. (1891–1951) son of Sir Robert, he became 3rd Baronet of Norton and Wells. He served in the Royal Pioneer Corps in WWII, and had a reputation for being eccentric, usually carrying a shepherd’s crook and wearing a monocle. He was a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He married Jean Elspeth Usher, daughter of Harry and grand-daughter of the brewer Thomas. Their children were Katherine Alice and Jacquelin. He was succeeded by his brother Sir R. Stuart. Mary Anne (1868–1955) wife of Thomas Leadbetter. She was President of Bedrule Women’s Guild 1944–53. There is a memorial plaque to her and her husband inside Bedrule Kirk. Sir Peter Lionel of Norton and Wells (1931–90) created 5th Baronet after the sudden death of his father. Along with his brother Robert, he had Downe’s Syndrome, and was brought up in Argentina to avoid family shame. His appointment as Baronet caused great consternation in the Usher family and ultimately led to the estates being sold off. Sir Robert of Norton and Wells (1860–1933) 2nd Baronet, son of Sir John. He earned the title of the ‘Whisky King’, with his huge warehouse at St. Leonard’s in Edinburgh. He found the old house at Wells to be unsuitable and so had it demolished, with the new Edwardian house built there in 1906. He also funded the enlargement of Bedrule Kirk in 1914 (with a memorial plaque to his parents placed in the church). He was the first President of Rulewater Miniature Rifle Club in 1905. He married Katherine Scott Turnbull, who died in 1948 and was daughter of James Turnbull of Abbey St. Bathans. They had 6 sons: Sir John Turnbull, who succeeded; Ronald James, who died young; Sir R. Stuart; Maj. Alexander Balmer; William Dove; and Brig. Thomas Clive. His daughters were Jean and Grizel Mary, who both died as infants. He is buried in Bedrule churchyard. Sir Robert Stuart ‘Stuart’ of Norton and Wells (1898–1963), brother of Sir John and son of Sir Robert, he was the 4th Baronet. Note that his name was also written ‘Stewart’. He was a keen country sportsman and died at a meeting of the Buccleuch Hunt. He married Gertrude Marta (who died in 1984), and their sons Peter and Robert both suffered from Downe’s Syndrome. Robert Edward of Norton and Wells (1934–94) 6th Baronet and last of the Ushers to reside at either Norton or Wells. He suffered from Downe’s Syndrome, like his brother Peter, who he succeeded. Since he could not make a will, the estates were liquidated on his death. He is the last Usher to be buried at Bedrule. Thomas of Courthill (1755–1824), son of John of Toftfield, near Melrose. He was a ‘writer’ in Hawick and Sheriff Substitute of Roxburghshire. He served as ‘deponent’ for the estate of William Oliver ‘Old Cash’, after his death in 1808. He was a writer and bachelor in Hawick in 1787 when he paid tax for having a female servant. He also paid the same tax in Hawick in 1789, but in 1791 in Jedburgh. He was in Jedburgh in 1791 when he subscribed to John Learmont’s book of poetry in 1791. He was a writer in Jedburgh in 1794 when he paid the Horse Tax there. He paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1785–89 and in Jedburgh from 1790. He is probably the Thomas who was recorded at Burnhead in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Wilton; he owned 9 farm horses at that time, as well as 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax at Burnhead in 1797. He married Isabella Pott of Penchrise (of whom an oil painting exists). The couple resided at Courthill and were highly regarded in their day. When Dr. Chalmers was Minister at Cavers he was a frequent visitor. He was associated with Chalmers publication ‘Sermon on the duty of making a testament, to which is added the form of a testament’, published in Hawick in 1812, and where he is referred to as a notary public. He is recorded as a subscriber to many literary works of his day, including ‘The Poetical Museum’ (published in Hawick in 1784) and Robert Burns ‘Poems, chiefly in the Scottish Dialect’ of 1787, as well as Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ (published in 1825). He was among the first to be listed on the ‘Donations’ page for the Hawick Savings Bank in 1815. His children were: John (b.1794), W.S. in Edinburgh; James (b.1796), died aged 25; Janet (or Jean, b.1797), married John Elliot, banker of Jedburgh; and Thomas (b.1803) of Courthill, who married... his cousin Jane Usher. He is buried in old Wilton cemetery. Thomas of Courthill (1803–82) son of Thomas. He farmed at Courthill, like his father. He was listed at Courthill among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835–41. In 1851 he is recorded as farmer of 399 acres, employing 19 labourers and a factor, and in 1861 was farming 363 acres and employing 14 people. He was an elder of the Hawick Free Kirk for 32 years, and served as a Commissioner at the 1865 General Assembly. He also served as a Commissioner for the county of Roxburghshire. He married Jane Usher of Edinburgh. Their children were Thomas and Margaret. He became blind in later life. A photograph of him exists. Thomas (1819–94) son of Thomas and Helen Ewart. He was the 13th Usher to be feuar of lands at Eildon. His brother John trained for the ministry, but died aged 19. He was a shepherd at several farms, including Hawthornside. He married Ann Murray in 1854, and their children included: Elizabeth Colcleuch, who married Thomas Carruthers; Helen Anne, who died at Mansfield Square in Hawick; and Margaret Murray, who also died at Mansfield Square. He later lived at Weensmoor with his sister Mrs. Renwick. Thomas (1826–1902) born in Edinburgh, son of James S.S.C., he worked as a law clerk. He married Eliza Dickson McFarlane and they had 6 children. He was founder and for a long time Acting Secretary of the Edinburgh Border Counties Association. He also wrote an account of ‘The Usher Family of the Edinburgh Border Counties Association. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1872. In 1897 he journeyed around the world, visiting Africa, Australia, New Zealand and Canada, to find opportunities for his sons. His children were Eliza Jane, Gertrude, Thomas, Charles Cogan and Harry. Thomas (1882–1972) born in Wilton, son of Thomas of Courthill. He married Margaret Dorothy, a distant cousin (keeping up the tradition of marrying into the family, being the 3rd successive Thomas to marry his cousin!). He emigrated to Calgary, Canada in 1902, building up the Usher Brother’s ranch with his brother Charles. He had 5 surviving children. Thomas Clive (1907–82) career soldier. He was Military Advisor to the British High Commissioner in India 1955–57, Commanded the 18th Training Brigade of the Royal Artillery 1957–58, was Aide-de-Camp to the Queen in 1958 and in 1958 became Brigadier of the Royal Artillery Scottish Command, retiring later that year. He is buried in Bedrule churchyard. William ‘Will’ (17th C.) son of Adie. In 1624 they were both convicted of a series of thefts of cattle, sheep and goats. His father was hanged in Edinburgh, but given his minority he was banished from the United Kingdom. William Dove (1904–69) son of Sir Robert and Katherine Scott Turnbull. He married Christa Elizabeth von Tevenar and their sons were William John Tevenar and Stuart Alexander. Sir William John Tevenar (1940–98) 7th Baronet. He married Rosemary Margaret Houldsworth. His eldest son Sir Andrew John is the 8th and present Baronet.

the Ushers (thu-u-shurz) n. family who have long connections with the Borders, with the Courthill branch being particularly local. The family is mentioned in the Peebles area in the 15th century, then in the Bridgend, Darnick and Melrose areas from the 17th century. Originally weavers and small-holders, Toftield was the first family seat, from which sprang the Courthill, Leaderfoot, Stodrig and Edinburgh branches. This last diverged into brewing and whisky blending (leaving the Usher Hall to the city, for example) and gaining several large estates, includes those at Hallrule, Hyndhope, Norton and Wells – ‘The Ushers o’ Courthill, They’re a’ sae kind to me, Whiles they send me tatties And whiles a pickle tea’ [RM].

Usuch Haugh see Usuch Haugh

Usuch Haugh (oo-such-hawch) n. part of the original Common at the southern end of town. Its precise location is not known, but it seems likely that it corresponds to the Brewery Haugh. Whisky Houses is probably also the same place and a corruption of the name. It is recorded in 1737 that the Bailies and Council ‘marched that part of the Common called Usuch Haugh, adjacent to the Duke of Buccleuch’s interest, by settling down 8 marchstones on the east side, and one on the west side of the Water of Slitrig’ (origin uncertain, but perhaps derived from Gaelic ‘watery’ plus haugh).

Utnomound (ut-nô-mownd) n. possible name of lands in southern Liddesdale, listed along with Whisgills and Purvinen in the 1541 rental roll. The name is transcribed as ‘Vtnomound’, and it does not appear to correspond with any place on contemporary or modern maps. It is also transcribed as ‘Burmouth’ and so it is possible the name is just an error.

His surname may be a variant of some more common name.

Vassal (vaw-sul) n. Col. Rawdon John Popham (c.1801–84) son of Spencer Thomas, who died in the assault on Monte Video in 1807. He was younger brother of Sir Spencer Lambert Hunter, naval captain. He was Major in the 78th Regiment of Highlanders. He married Margaret Emily Boswell in 1848; she was sister of Theresa, wife of Sir William Elliott of Stobs and Wells. He lived for a while at Wells House, possibly only during the summer months for the ‘shooting’; he is also referred to as ‘of Stobs’, and seems also to have similarly taken Stobs Castle. Many transactions involving him are recorded in the diary of Robert Grieve in the late 1850s. Along with his wife he presented a silver flagon to St. Cuthbert’s Kirk, and they were also present at its consecration in 1858. His wife presented the Crowbyres Kirk, and they were also present at its consecration in 1858. His wife presented the Crowbyres Mission with a library in 1860, probably to serve the railway navvies (there are different spellings).

veesitor (vee-zee-‘ur) n. a visitor – ‘A hear ee’ve hed veesitors the day’, ‘And so, we salute, and we a’ welcome a’ veesitors At ilka Festival . . .’ [DH].

Veitch (veech) n. Adam (16th C.) listed as ‘Adam Vache’ in 1526 when he was among the Borders men pardoned for accompanying the Homes on an attack on the Earl of Arran. It is unclear to which branch of the Veitches or Waughis he belonged. Alexander and George are listed later in the same 1526 document. Adam (d.1801) ‘under miller’ of Hawick (i.e. an assistant to the miller). He had 2 children (one illegitimate) die in 1799, and another in 1801. Alexander (13th C.) recorded as ‘Alexandro la Uache’ around 1250 when he witnessed a charter for Henry of Ashirk to Coldingham Priory. He also witnessed an agreement between Henry of Ashirk and Henry’s brother Alexander. He is probably related to later local Veitches (or Waughis). Alexander (15th/16th C.) eldest son of William of Dawyk in Peeblesshire. He succeeded to his father’s lands in 1502 and had payments from the ‘fermes’ of Peebles in 1507. However, before that, in 1481, he granted a charter of the Mains of Synton (probably North Synton) to his brother in exchange for Easter Dawyk. And in 1497 he had a sasine for Dawyk and North Synton. In 1502 he was fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, failing to ‘give suit’ for his lands of Synton. His son was Bernard, although he appears to have succeeded by his brother William. Alexander (15th/16th C.) listed as ‘Alexander Vauche’ on the pardon granted in 1526 to a large number of Scotts, Turnbulls and other Borderers who had assisted the Homes in attacking the Earl of Arran. Alexander (19th/20th C.) one of a family of eleven, descended from James Veitch of Inchbonny. He farmd at Wauchope and Harwood Mill. Andrew (d.1808) recorded in the Hawick register of deaths as ‘a old man from Alewatter’.

Veitch

Archibald of Bellevue (19th/20th C.) cattle-dealer and tenant farmer at Wauchope and Harwood Mill. He was a descendant of James Veitch of Inchbonny, being great-great-grandson of the James who bought Inchbonny in 1738. Barnaby of Dawyck (1370–aft. 1436) probably son of William. In 1407 he was granted a charter of North Synton by Archibald, Earl of Douglas; his name is recorded as ‘Barnabas le Vache de Dawyk’. This may be the first connection between the family and the lands in Ashkirk Parish. In 1420 he was witness to the charter of the granting of half of Braxholme from the Inglis’s to the Scotts; he is there ‘Bernaba de Wache’. In 1434/5 he witnessed charter for the Hays of Yester. He was succeeded by his son Paul. Capt. ?? (17th/18th C.) served with the 21st Fusiliers. He was said to be a brother of Lord Bowhill (John Murray), so presumably a brother-in-law. He married the widow of a private in his regiment, and she was a Gledstains, related to the Gledstains of Dod. Some-time in the early 1700s his wife inherited the lands of Dod. However, he is said to have been extravagant and fairly quickly sold the lands to James Pott. Douglas ‘Champion Doug Veitch’ (1960–) born in Hawick, he worked as a house-painter, but turned temporary pop star, being referred to as ‘the King of Caledonian Cajun Swing’. He made several records in the 1980s and had his own minor record label, ‘Disc Afrique’, which was one of the first in Britain to promote African music. His hit ‘One Black Night’ reached No. 45 in the U.K. charts in 1985, ‘Jumping Into Love’ made the NME top-50 list for the same year, and he holds the record for the most consecutive singles (6) to make the NME single of the week. His other singles are: ‘Lumiere Urban’, ‘Another place, another time’, ‘Not the Heart’, ‘Gone Train’ and ‘Margarita’. He was also involved in bringing the Bhundu Boys to Britain (and Hawick!), which helped fuel the World Music fashion of the mid-1980s. He released an album of Scottish dance music in 1989 under the name ‘Martin, Doug and Sara’ and has recently been touring with ex-Bhundu Boys guitarist Rise Kagona. George of North Synton (d.c.1530) son of John. He was confirmed in the lands of North Synton by his superior William Veitch of Dawyck in 1525. The following year his son Walter was confirmed as heir to the lands. However, by 1535 they were owned by John, probably another son. George (15th/16th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Braxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an earlier attack on the Earl of Arran. George of Clerklands (d.c.1641). His daughter Helen married James, son of Walter Veitch of North Synton. She was served heir to his lands of Clerklands in 1641/2. Helen (17th C.) daughter of George of Clerklands. She was served heir to her father’s lands of Clerklands in 1641/2. James of Dawyck (d.c.1552) received the estates from his father William in 1536. This included the lands at North Synton. About 1510 he married Margaret Cockburn, sister of the reiver William Cockburn of Henderland, and probably through her acquired the lands of North Synton. After her brother was hanged in 1530 and his lands forfeited, the superiority of the Cockburn estates passed to James Cockburn of Skirling in 1552. However, the ownership of North Synton (as well as Dawyck) passed to his son and heir William. James of North Synton (16th/17th C.) son of Walter of North Synton. In 1582/3 he was a cautioner for Gilbert Ker of Primside Loch (and someone else subscribed for him ‘because I can not wrett’). He was probably the James, ‘younger of North Synton’ who, along with Andrew Veitch (brother of the Laird of Tourhope) killed John Tweedie (tutor of Drummelzier) on Edinburgh High Street in 1590. This was in revenge for the murder 4 days earlier of Patrick Veitch (son of William of Dawyck) by James Tweedie of Drummelzier among others. The feud continued between the families until at least 1611 when King James issued a proclamation on the matter. The 2 Veitches were eventually pardoned by the King; however, the family feud continued for at least another couple of decades. He was served heir to his father Walter in North Synton in 1601; the lands were described as having ‘tower and fortalice’ and being annexed within the Barony of Dawyck. In 1604 he held a charter of the lands of Corslie in Ettrick Forest (on Gala Water) and was said to also be the tenant there. He was succeeded by his son Walter in 1609. James (17th C.) eldest son of Walter of North Synton, who had sold off most of the family estates in 1641. He and John are recorded in 1643 as owners of Clerklands in Ashkirk Parish, valued at £182. He married Helen, daughter of George Veitch of Clerklands, who must have been a close cousin. He may be the ‘George Taite’ listed among the residents of North Synton estate in the Hearth Tax roll of 1694; John is listed after him and so presumably related. James (17th C.) listed as resident at Whitfield in Wilton Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (1672/3–1706) smith who died at Falnash Mill. He married Mary Riddell, who died in 1743, aged 66. Their children included: Margaret and Jean, who probably died young; and James (1721/2–1807), who married Helen Elliot, who died at Binks. James (1695–1775) 2nd son of wright John. He is the progenitor of the Inchbonny branch of the family. He lived at Mossburnford, working as a joiner and wood merchant. He purchased Inchbonny Braes from Sir John Rutherford in 1738. He married (possibly Isobell Richardson in 1722) and his sons were John (who carried on the business, but died unmarried), James (who farmed at Inchbonny and is the ancestor of the Jedburgh and Rulewater Veitches) and William (who was a wright at Inchbonny). James (1727/8–92) tenant farmer at Spittal kirk. He married Elizabeth (or Betty), daughter of John Murray, farmer at Spittal-on-Rule; she died in 1808, aged 73. Their children were: Jean, who died in childhood; Andrew, who died young; Thomas, also died young; John, who succeeded his father in the farm; James, who was a doctor in Jamaica and died at Montego Bay in 1800; William (d.1786); Elizabeth (or Betty), who married her neighbour Thomas Bunyan; and George (d.1821). Most of the family are buried in Bedrule kirkyard. James (1762–1800) 2nd son of James and Betty Murray, born in Cavers Parish. He was educated as a doctor and practised in Montego Bay, Jamaica, where he died. James (d.c.1833) farmer at Binks, listed there in 1791 when he paid the cart tax. He was also on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He left the farm in about 1822, setting up as a grocer and meal dealer in Langholm. He is probably the James listed at Langholm in the subscription list for William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. He does not appear on the 1841 census, and so presumably was deceased by then. He is probably the Teviothead resident, married to Isabel Brydon, whose children included: James (b.1795), a labourer in Langholm in 1841; Walter (b.1796); Thomas (b.1800), who drove meal etc. from Hawick for his father; and Margaret (b.1803), who married Francis Scoon. James (1771–1838) eldest son of wright William. He farmed at Inchbonny. He was described by Sir Walter Scott as a ‘self-taught philosopher, astronomer and mathematician’, and had a strong influence on the young David Brewster. He was said to be a great maker of telescopes, which he used to observe the heavens; he was the first person in Britain to see the great comet of 1811. He also made clocks and a new plough design. He is supposed to have preserved the sword of the famed Ringan Oliver, whose sister was his own great-grandmother (this was among historical artefacts shown by his descendant James in 1924). He is listed as a maker of telescopes, microscopes, etc., in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He was a great friend of Hawick millwright and amateur astronomer Gideon Scott. His children were William (millwright at Inchbonny, who married Agnes Barrie from Hawthornside), John (who died young), James (who became minister of St. Cuthbert’s in Edinburgh), Betty (who lived to her 90s, and was one of the last people living to have spoken with Sir Walter Scott) and other daughters. James (19th/20th C.) tenant of Harwood Mill. He was Secretary of Rulewater Miniature Rifle Club from 1905. Janet (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1694 when she was listed on the Hearth Tax roll among ‘ye poor’. John (15th/16th C.) 3rd son of William of Dawyck. In 1481 he was granted a charter of the Mains of Synton (possibly North Synton) by his brother Alexander, in exchange for Easter Dawyck. He thus started the branch of the Veitches of North Synton (although the lands were held by the family since at least 1407). He and his father William were granted the lease of Crosslee (in Ettrick) in 1488, until at least 1492. He is probably the ‘Johanne Waych de Syntou’ who witnessed the document relating to the tower in Hawick ‘between the bridges’ for Scott of Whitchesters in 1507/8, and probably the ‘Johannem Vaiche’ on the panel for Adam Hepburn inheriting Alemoor in 1509. He may also be the same man as the contemporary John Waugh. He was succeeded by his son George. John of North Synton (16th C.) probably a younger son of George. He possessed the North Synton estate from at least 1533, when he was part of an inquest in Jedburgh over lands in Longnewton. The next owner was probably Walter, likely to have been his son. In 1535 there was a dispute with William Veitch of Dawyck, his superior, which ended with him giving up Corslie (on the Gala Water) in return for keeping North Synton. He could be the ‘John Vache’ who was listed among the Border Lairds of Selkirkshire who submitted themselves to James V in 1530, to keep better order. He was probably the ‘Johanne Waithe’ who had 5 cows stolen from ‘Corsle’, as claimed in the 1535 trial of Robert Scott of Allanhaugh. John (16th C.) tenant in Hassendean. He is recorded in 1583/4 among men of that area cited for failing to appear to give evidence relating to answer charges against sons of Sir Thomas of Bedrule. John of Dawyck (1579–1606) son of William. He is referred in 1595 as ‘Johne Waiche, fear of Dauik’ when he signed a ‘bond of manrent’ in Hawick with Sir Walter Scott of Bruxholme. The witnesses were Andrew and 2 Williams (one of them surely his brother). He succeeded to Dawyck on the death of his father in 1602. He married Janet Stewart. In some histories he is succeeded by his son Malcolm. However, in 1606 his eldest son William is recorded being served as his heir in the 10-pound land (of old extent) of North Synton (perhaps just being the superiority of the lands). John (17th C.) wright at Bedrule in the late 1600s. His eldest son was Thomas and a younger son was James. He is probably the John listed on the Hearth Tax roll for Bedrule in 1694. John (17th C.) resident of North Synton in 1693 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. He is listed right after James, to whom he was presumably related. Perhaps the same John is recorded in 1643 along with James as owner of Clerklands in Ashkirk Parish, valued at £182. John (17th C.) resident of Headshaw in Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. John (17th C.) listed among the poor of Hassendean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, when he was ‘in Burnfoott’. This was presumably Hassendean Burnfoot. John (1759–1816) eldest son of James and Betty Murray. He succeeded his father as tenant at Spittal-on-Rule. He is probably the John who is recorded at Spittal Mill in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 6 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He married Jean Elliot from Knowesouth in 1791. Their children were: Jean, who married Thomas Turnbull, merchant in Hawick; James, who trained as a minister; William, also trained as a minister; Betty (d.1838); John, who was a gardener; Robert (d.1834), became a minister and Greek scholar; George, died in Lanton; Margaret, who died in infancy; Mabel (d.1848), who died unmarried; Margaret, who also died in infancy; Elliot (d.1842); and an unnamed girl. His wife Jean, died a few days after the last child was born John (18th/19th C.) tenant farmer at Spittal-on-Rule. It is said that he was unable to convince his wife to stop home-brewing ale, which had become illegal, and so he informed on her to the authorities in Jedburgh, who, however, were amused by his honesty and let her off with a warning. He was recorded as tenant in Spittal Mill on the 1792–97 Horse Tax Rolls. John (18th/19th C.) listed as a meal dealer on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Kathleen Anne (1908–68) daughter of tweed manufacturer James and Margaret Anne Currie. She became an Associate of the Royal Institute of British Architects in 1930. About 1931–4 she worked for the Duke of Roxburghe on estate improvements. She exhibited watercolours at the Hawick Art Club in the 1930s. In about 1937 she designed Little Salt Hall adjacent to Summerfield (possibly her parents’ home), off Rosalle Brae. It has an unusual curved plan, with Arts & Crafts elements. She was unmarried and lived with her sister Maude in a house she designed near Gattonside. After retirement she converted to Catholicism. From 1958 she spent the last decade of her life working on renovations of the Church of Our Lady and St. Joseph in Selkirk. She spent time at the Catholic retreat at Elie (in Fife) and went missing from there. Her body was later found on the beach and she had been strangled. Her murder was never officially solved, although the later accidental death of a worker dismantling the railway there may have been the cause of the police shutting the case. Robert (17th/18th C.) resident in Philhope in 1717 when his daughter Mary was baptised in Robertson Parish. His surname is written ‘Veatch’. He is probably the son of James and Helen Turnbull, born in Robertson Parish in 1686. He also had children: Jean (b.1713); Helen (b.1715); William (b.1719); and Christian (b.1722). Thomas (17th C.) recorded as ‘mealmaker’ at Newton Mill, Bedrule Parish in 1691, probably related to John the wright at Bedrule. He was also listed on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694, with ‘The Kilne’ listed right after him. Thomas (b.1692) son of wright John. He was shepherd at Spittal Tower. His sons were Thomas (b.1714) and Walter (b.1716). Thomas (1720/1–1807) gardener in Edgerston. His wife, Mary Scott, died in 1780, aged 50. Their son Archibald (1777/8–1836) lived for a while in Jamaica. They are buried in Bedrule kirkyard and must be related to the Spittal Mill family. Thomas (18th/19th C.) farmer at Unthank in Hobkirk Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He probably also farmed at Wester Swanshiel, and other nearby lands, which were at that time let along with Unthank. ‘T. Veitch’s wife’ who died in Hobkirk Parish in 1812 could have been his wife. Thomas (b.1800) son of James. He drove meal etc. between Langholm and Hawick for his father, who had farmed at Binks and then moved to Langholm. He is listed at Binks in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’. Walter (16th C.) son of George of North Synton. He was given these lands in a sasine of 1526, but by 1535 they were owned by John, who may therefore have been a younger brother. Walter of North Synton (d.c.1600) probably son of John, although these generations are uncertain. He may be the ‘Walter Vache of Syntoun’ who is recorded as a supporter of Scott of Buccleuch in the 1564/5 contract between the Scotts and the Kerrs. In 1575/6 he was a complainant regarding ‘mails’ for his steadings of ‘Corsley’. He was listed among many Scotts and their allies in a 1581 summons to appear before the Privy Council regarding the feud with the Elliots and Armstrongs. He may have been involved in the attack by the Scotts of Headshaw on 2 sons of Martin Elliot of Braidlie. He failed to appear for the first summons to the Privy Council in 1581. He was probably succeeded by his son John or perhaps James. He may also be the ‘Walter Vaitche of North syntoun’ listed among landed men in the Borders in about 1590 and as ‘Walter Vaitch of Northsinton’ in Monipennie’s list of about 1597. His grandson Walter inherited North Synton from him in 1609. Walter of North Synton (16th/17th C.) son of James. He was served heir to his grandfather Walter in the lands of North Synton in 1609. His father resided at Corslie, which also inherited in 1609. He married Jean Cairncross, and with her permission sold Corslie to George Pringle of Torwoodlee in 1625. He later married Janet Ker; with her permission and that of his eldest son James, he sold North Synton (with the exception of Clerklands) to Francis Scott of South Synton in 1641. William of Dawyck (d.c.1502) probably son of Paul. He and his son John were granted a lease of the lands of Crosslee in Ettrick in the period 1488–92. His children included Alexander, William and John. He could be the William who had a sasine for North Synton in 1475. William of Dawyck (d.c.1545) 2nd son of William. He had a charter for North Synton in 1509. He held the family estates in Peebleshire, succeeding to his brother Alexander. He was also superior of the lands of North Synton, granting a charter to his nephew George in 1525 and a ‘precept of sasine’ to George’s son Walter in 1526. In 1530 he was one of the Border Lairds who submitted to James V to keep better order. In 1535 he had a debate over these lands with John Veitch, but received Corslie (on the Gala Water) in return for John retaining North Synton. William of Dawyck (d.1602) son of James. He was known as ‘the Deil of Dawyck’. He inherited the family lands, which included acting as superior for North Synton, as embodied in a crown charter of 1564. In 1574 he was on the retours for Walter Scott of Branxholme as heir to his great-uncle David Scott, as well as his great-grandfather Sir Walter Scott. He married Marion Fleming and his sons included: John, who succeeded; Patrick, killed by the Tweedies in 1590; and William. William (16th/17th C.) eldest son of John. In 1606 he is recorded being served as heir to his father John in the lands of North Synton, including the advowson of the church. William (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Mill in 1693 when he was listed on the Hearth Tax roll there. His surname is written ‘Vaithe’. William (17th C.) wright listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He was also listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. William (18th C.) gardener at Branxholme. In 1740 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Cook (gardener at Branxholme). He is listed as ‘Gardiner to Midlamin at Branzome’, i.e. he worked for Robert Elliot of Middlemill, who was Chamberlain to the Duke of Buccleuch, living at Branxholme. William (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He married Christian Scott in 1753. Their children included: Agnes (b.1757); Elizabeth (b.1759); Andrew (b.1761); William (b.1763); Elizabeth (again, b.1765); Alison (b.1768); James (b.1768); and Andrew (again, b.1768). The witnesses in 1757 were merchant Andrew Scott (possibly related to his wife) and shoemaker John Oliver. In 1758 he was witness to a baptism for Walter Rae. William (b.1738) 3rd son of James of Inchbonny. He was a wright at Inchbonny, inheriting part of the property on the death of his father, his descendants later becoming sole owners. His eldest son James was well known as a self-taught philosopher and astronomer and his 2nd son William became a millwright in Jedburgh. He could be the William listed among the subscribers to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ in 1784. William (b.1800/1) born in Linton, he was farmer at Dykes in Cavers Parish. He is recorded there in 1861 as farmer of 290 acres and was still recorded there in a directory of 1868. He married Janet Davidson. Rev. William (1794–1885) son of John Veitch and Jean Elliot, he was probably born at Spittal-on-Rule. Like 2 of his brothers (and his cousin James Veitch, D.D.) he trained for the ministry. He was educated in Jedburgh and then at Edinburgh University. He was a seceder, with severe Presbyterian views. He devoted much of his life to teaching Greek in Edinburgh and wrote ‘Greek verbs, irregular and defective’ (1848), which was reprinted several times. As a result he was made vennel (ve-nul) n., arch. an alley, narrow lane – ‘the common vennel that leads from the town head to the back dam of the mill’ [BR] (early Hawick documents speak about the ‘Common Vennel’ and the ‘Back Vennel’, from French).

the Vennel (thu-ve-nul) n. name sometimes used for the ‘Common Vennel’ running from Myreslawgreen down to the Coble Pool, which marked part of the town boundary in the 1537 Charter.

Venner (ve-nur) n. Corbyn Morris (d.1803) Captain in the East India Company. His first name is also written ‘Corrybine’. He was Captain of the ‘Queen’ in 1796 and the ‘Walpole’ 1797/8, which ship he purchased in 1803. In 1800 he was served heir to his uncle James Lauder of Whitslade. As well as gaining the lands of Whitslade, he also got Redfordgreen and Drycleuchshiels. The 1802 Land Tax Rolls lists him paying tax on £169 for those farms and £266 13s 4d for Whitslade. His will describes him as ‘of Inner Temple, City of London’. John (18th/19th C.) succeeded his brother Corbyn in 1805, gaining half of the lands of Whitslade, Redfordgreen and Drycleuchshiels. He also gained the other half of the lands that had previously belonged to his great-uncle John Adam of Whitslade (also written ‘Vennor’).

venterlokist (ven-ter-lo-kist) n., arch. a ventriloquist – ‘Wull the Bellman duly announced the entertainment which he said was to be given by a ‘venterlockest’’ [RM] (note the accent on the 3rd syllable, rather than the 2nd).

He was writer of ‘Parish and Kirk of Hawick’ (1900) and the text for ‘Pictures from the Past of Auld Hawick’ (1911) with J. McNairn. He was one of the earlier writers to insist that the Mote was the remains of a Norman palisaded stronghold. He was Exhibition Secretary for the Hawick Fine Arts Association and also wrote 33 articles for the Transactions. He also helped James Sinton compile his Hawick-related bibliography. He was a Fellow of the Society of Antiquaries of Scotland. In 1874 he married Isabella Douglas, daughter of butcher William Nisbet. His second wife’s name was Mary Jamieson.

the Verter (thu-ver-tur) n. shortened form of the Verter Well – ‘Thus keep it intact frae the rude ruthless hand, And protect the famed well o’ the Verter’ [RF].

the Verter Well (thu-ver-tur-wel) n. spring that entered the Teviot near the Dunk, about 350 yards upriver from the Pipleugh Well. It supposedly had healing powers, and even had its mineral properties tested once. A pipe was fitted in the 1860s and an iron fountain was erected on the river bank in 1874, with its position moved to the other side of the road in 1888. There was a poetry competition inspired by the Verter Well in 1888, with the best entries published in a booklet. The iron fountain, paid for by the wife of Rev. Thomson of Rosalee, had a Latin inscription which translated as ‘Drink, pass on, give thanks to God’. However, the supply was never the same after being interfered with. Before the end of the 19th century the spring had found another channel and the well dried up – ‘From Hawick Verter Well shall sprin A cure for every evil thing’ [T], ‘Ne’er mix it wi’ spirits, but take it itself’, ‘There’s a pure healing virtue in our grand Verter Well’ [VW], ‘Or aiblins gin we will’d it how we’d scamper aff sae fell To play the truant laddies at the auld Verter Well’ [VW] (the origin is from the word ‘verter’ or virtue, but note there was a more famous Verter Well near Airdrie, popular in the 18th century).

vertew (ver-too) n., arch. virtue, moral excellence – ‘...the quhilk Adam Cessfurde, bailzie, through the vertew and strenth of his office ...’ [JW1558].

the Vertish (thu-ver-eesh, -teesh, -tish) n. popular name for the Vertish Hill, which extends from Burnflat to the Nip Knowes. Long in use as a recreational part of the Common, it was the location for horse racing at the Common Riding until 1819. It is now home of the Hawick Golf Club, venue for the Vertish Hill Sports, well trodden during the Chases, and offers a glorious panorama of the Borders – ‘Sune we maun climb the Vertish heicht To watch the honoured emblem waving’ [RH], ‘Fit yet to face the Nipknowes or storm the Vertish high, For the drums and fifes are calling, and the Cornet’s riding by’ [JYH], ‘But hei has the Vertish to bield his back ...’ [DH] (in older documents it is ‘Fertish’, suggesting an origin in the Gaelic ‘fàir tais’, meaning a damp ridge).

the Vertish Brae (thu-ver-eesh-brâ) n. occasional name for the Vertish Hill, or the Nip Knowes – ‘...Nae gallop up the Vertish Brae, Nae rider, horse nor goal’ [WP].

the Vertish Hill (thu-ver-eesh-hil) n. part of the Common, let to the Golf Club for a nominal rent, and used annually for the Vertish Hill Sports since 1881. Up until 1803 the riders at the Common Riding used to go over the hill on their way to the Moor. The hill reaches a height of 856 feet and the land covers an area of 68 acres. It is more commonly known simply as the Vertish – ‘...O’er the Vertish hill nor tire’ [AB], ‘But I’m fain for a sicht o’ the Vertish Hill Wi’ his plaid flung owre his shooder’ [DH], ‘...For there’s never a hill like the Vertish Hill To a guitter-bluid Wast-ender!’ [DH], ‘But when A stand on the thirteneeth tee The view ma hert ditz thrill Lookin’ sooth owre God’s ain country Frae the Vertish Hill’ [IW] (it is still ‘Fertish Hill’ in 1863).

the Vertish Hill Sports (thu-ver-eesh-hil-sportz) n. the Children’s Annual Festival and Sports, held on a specially levelled part of the Vertish Hill. It includes races for primary school children, preceded by a procession, latterly from the Evergreen Hall (formerly from the Bucleuch Memorial) to the Vertish Hill, where the children receive a gift of money (or sometimes another item). Started in 1882 as a kite flying contest for boys under 16, other games and races were soon added. At the special sports for the Queen’s Diamond Jubilee in 1897 it is estimated that the crowd was 12,000. It was moved to the Park for a couple of years, but returned to the Vertish in 1906. There is film of the procession to the sports and some of the competitions in 1909/10. There was a special Vertish Hill Sports in 1914 on the Saturday before the Common Riding, as part of the Quater-Centenary celebrations. The procession was led by the Cornet and 25 mounted supporters and included 3,600 children, each of whom was given a ceremonial enamelled mug. In 1915 the Sports were held on the Friday of the Common Riding in place of traditional events, and in 1919 a special Victory Vertish Hill Sports were held. There have also been other special celebratory Sports over the years. The precise day has varied, but it is usually held on a Saturday near the end of June, at earlier times being in July. At one point the cost of the Games was underwritten by the Town Council, but for a long time has relied entirely on donations and administered by a voluntary committee. The providing of tea to the public has long been a tradition.

request of the Vertish Hill Sports Committee to commemorate the special millennium Vertish Hill Sports. It runs for approximately 37 minutes.

the Vertish Stakes (thu-ver'-eesh-stãks) n. race during the Common Riding.

Vesey see Vesey

Vesey (vee-see) n. Agnes (d.1301/2) mother of William ‘de Chartres’, and probably wife of Henry Charteris. She died at ‘Appleterig’ (probably Appleterehall, although stated to be in the regality of Sprouston) at Martinmas in 1301 and the lands there were inherited by her son William. Lady Jane (13th C.) probably heiress of the half-barony of Wilton, her name is also given as ‘Joan’. It seems reasonable to suppose that she was daughter of John, Lord of Alnwick. Her husband was Sir Thomas de Charteris, with whom she jointly held the half-barony in a grant by Alexander III, after having previously resigned them into the King’s hands. According to an inquest of 1303/4 these lands were inherited by William de Charteris, son of Andrew and Agnes de Vesci (who may well have been her sister). It was said at the 1303/4 inquest that the jurors ‘know nothing about the manner of such enfeoffment …they know there was such, but not its tenor’; hence there is some mystery surrounding how she came to hold the half-barony. Note that an earlier member of her family, Margaret, married Sir Patrick of Riddell, and an even earlier member, Sybil, married Walter Bombeck, who gifted the original ‘Hermitage’ in Liddesdale. Her mother appears to have been Joan (or Jane) de Charteris; the names cannot be coincidental, but it is likely, ‘long before the Scots war’. To further complicate matters, the Barony had earlier passed through Walter de Percehay, from his mother Joan de Wilton, except that Walter de Percehay’s mother appears to have been Joan (or Jane) de Vesey; the names cannot be coincidental, but it is unclear what the relationships were (also ‘Vescy’, ‘de Vesey’, ‘de Vesci’, etc.).

veshel (ve-shel) n., poet. a vessel – ‘…I am like ane brokin veshell’ [HSR].

Vetch see Veitch

vex (veks) n. a worry, concern, annoyance, regret – ‘A was seek on Thursd an hed ti miss the Colour Bussin, which was a right vex’, ‘A war is an awffih vex’ [ECS], ‘…fair leike ti faa off the spake wui the wuddles an the vexes o woark …’ [ECS] (only used as a verb in standard English).

vexed (veksed) adj. concerned, troubled, distressed, annoyed, sorry – ‘A’m awffih vexed for um’, ‘An’ ee felt sae vexed when his team got bate’, ‘A was vext A’d naebody nerr iz ti speak ti …’ [ECS], ‘A war is an awffih vex’ [ECS], ‘…But lookit sae vexed when his team got bate That ye gied him half your pie’ [DH] (also written ‘vext’; this word is used more commonly in Hawick than in standard English, and with a slightly different meaning).

the Vic (thu-vik) n. the Victoria Hotel, existing from the 19th century at 52 High Street. It was designed by J.P. Allison around 1893 and built on premises formerly occupied by Nixon’s hosiery factory. The hotel closed in the 1970s and was demolished in 1980.

vicarage (vi-ku-reej) n., arch. a minor tithe, originally payable to the local vicar (rather than parson), also referred to as ‘vicarage teind’ – ‘All thir 51 lands adjacent to ye toune are estimat to pay nyne scoir 15 bolls in stok, 49 bolls in great teynd, laik ane firlot, and 20 libs of vicarage’ [PR1627], ‘Thomas Gray payed formerly for the vicourage of Hassindeane alias Tounhead 13s 4d’ [Buc1692].

Vicar’s Hill (vi-kurz-hil) n. former name for lands near Hobkirk Kirk, long owned by the church and later called Kirknowe. This is probably the ‘Vicarie-hill’ referred to in the documents relating to Rev. George Douglas in 1602. It could be the ‘Viccars Hall’ mentioned along with ‘Viccars land’ of Hobkirk Kirk when inherited by Gilbert Elliot from his father Archibald of Craigenst in 1683.

Vicar’s Land (vi-kurz-lawnd) n. former name for lands attached to Hopkirk Kirk. They are mentioned as ‘Viccars land’ in 1683, along with ‘Viccars Hall’ and Wester Swanshiel, among lands inherited by Gilbert Elliot from his father Archibald of Craigenst.

Vicar’s Rob (vi-kurz-roib) n. nickname of Robert Elliot, one of the thieves captured at Hawick market in October 1567. He may be the same man as ‘Vicar’s Hob’ recorded in 1589.

Vicar’s Waas (vi-kurz-wawz) n. former name for a field near Hopkirk Church, which had been the site of the old vicarage lands, a little to the west of the steadings of Kirknowe.

vicker (vi-kur) n. a chestnut that has won a game of ‘conkers’, being referred to as a ‘yon vicker’, ‘twae vicker’ etc., depending on how many games it has won, and the surviving chestnut inheriting the score of its opponent – ‘if ma cheggy baits your eeleven vicker, then mine’ll be a twal vicker’ (presumably from ‘victor’).

Victoria (vik-tō-ree-u) n. Alexandrina Victoria (1819–1901), grand-daughter of George III, she was Queen of the United Kingdom 1837–1901, during a time of great political change in Britain and the building of the Empire. In Hawick she gave her name to a street, a hotel, a bridge and a laundry, amongst other things. She was a frequent visitor to Bowhill. On her first visit to Scotland in 1842, she was a guest of the Duke of Buccleuch at Dikeith. On another royal visit to the Borders, the train passed through Hawick at a walking pace, with crowds lining the railway.

Victoria Baths (vik-tō-ree-u-bawths) n. former name for the Victoria Laundry, operating on Commercial Road in the latter part of the 19th century, run by John Sauderson. It may have originally operated as a public bathing facility, but became a laundry when the ‘Baths’ opened nearby in 1912.

Victoria Brig (vik-tō-ree-u-brig) n. footbridge from the Little Haugh to Commercial Road. The first wooden trellis bridge was built in 1851/2, by Walter Scott the builders (Buccleuch Street) and painted by Andrew Kennedy in white, blue and yellow (imitating the Crystal Palace). It was situated a few yards further down the river than today’s and was built by subscription (with the final debt cleared by the Road Trustees) to provide a link to the High Street area from near William Watson’s factory. The bridge was named in honour of Queen Victoria by the Bridge Committee. It was replaced in 1873/4 by a narrow iron bridge, which was widened in 1910, but destroyed in a flood of 1938. The bridge was rebuilt in 1939 and then again in 1991. Before the bridge existed there were stepping stones across the river there, and some of Watson’s workers used stilts to cross at the same general location.

Victoria Hotel (vik-tō-ree-u-hō-tel) n. hotel formerly at 52 High Street, which held dances and other social events. It was for a time a temperance hotel. The building was of red sandstone in an Elizabethan style. It was built on the former site of Nixon’s hosiery premises, which from 1831-61 was the residence of Dr. John Douglas. James Scott was proprietor in 1868. It was remodelled sometime around 1900, with designs by J.P. Alison dated 1893. The hotel was demolished in 1980 (also known as the Vic).

Victoria Laundry (vik-tō-ree-u-lawn-dree) n. the Victoria Steam Laundry on the Teviot side of Commercial Road, which operated through much of the 20th century, closing in the 1970s. It also contained baths in earlier times, but developed into a laundry, presumably when the public swimming baths opened nearby. It was used by many local hotels etc., and also by householders for their special linens. Items were deposited there for washing (in distinction to ‘the Steam’, where one had to do it oneself) and it also had dry cleaning facilities. The last manager was Mr. Stanger. The building was later used as a warehouse, but has been empty for many years.

Victoria Mills (vik-tō-ree-u-milz) n. the main knitwear manufacturing factory of Innes, Henderson & Co., situated on Victoria Road, and later becoming Braemar Knitwear. The firm had started in modest premises at Wilton Grove, building this new Mill in 1875. Innes & Co. split from Henderson & Co. in 1885, with Henderson in the front and Innes in the rear. There was an extension in 1891 and a further 2 storeys were added to the front building by 1912. Because of the split between Innes and Henderson, the mill had 2 separate boilers and hence 2 chimneys. Innes-Henderson reamalgamated in 1920 and later bought the adjacent Howlands Mill. This meant that precisely what was known as ‘Victoria Mills’ changed over the years. In 1976, with the closure of Rodono Mills, the administration department of Pringle’s was moved there. The factory closed in the 1990s and was demolished in 2004, along with the neighbouring Howlands Mill (also sometimes singular ‘Mill’).

Victoria Road (vik-tō-ree-u-rōd) n. street alongside the Common Haugh, originally called Damside, then Upper Damside (after Wilton Dam) before being renamed after Queen Victoria about 1864. There were a few houses there (some thatched) from at least the early 19th century, with fruit gardens where the factories were later built. The development of the area for hosiery mills started in the late 19th century. The former offices of Turnbuls are a grade C listed building.

victual (vik-twal) n., arch. produce, foodstuff, particularly grain or other crops – ‘The lands of Clarilaw sett to James dryden and Thomas Henderson in tack for 26 bols victual half meall & half bear’ [Buc1692] (spelling and probably punctuation varied).

violence (vee-lins) n., poet. violence – ‘He sall redeim thair sauls frae deceite an’ vielence . . . ’ [HSR], ‘Delifer me, O Lord, frae the ill man: preserre me frae the man o’ violence’ [HSR].
violent (vee-len') adj., poet. violent – ‘... an’ the assemblies o’ violent men hae soucht efter my saul ... ’ [HSR].

Viewforth (vew-foirth) n. former name of a house on West Stewart Place, built for hatter George Porteous in 1878. It was then the home of I. Washington Wallis of Braemar, and later became Kirklands Hotel.

the Vikings (thu-vi-kinz) n., pl. Norse people who plundered the coasts of Northern Europe in the 8th–10th centuries. Groups mainly from Denmark started a conquest of Northumbria from 867, establishing their capital at York in 876. Whether the Hawick area was ruled from here is uncertain, but in general Bernicia was largely unaffected by the Viking presence (and you can’t get very close to Hawick by boat!). Vikings settled and presumably inter-married with the natives, but their political influence in Scotland ended with the Battle of Largs in 1263. Hawick’s Thor and Odin myth may relate to a pre-Christian Anglican past, but almost certainly has nothing directly to do with the Vikings. However, some words and place names of Norse origin survive (although they may well have come only indirectly from the Vikings). Hog-back gravestones (symbolic of a longhouse) usually indicate Viking influence; two fragments are in the church porch at Bedrule, plus one at Ancrum and another at Nisbet (not in the Museum).

the Village (thu-vi-leej) n. group of houses by the Slitrig, to the west of the Kirkwynd, presumably for their former relative isolation from other parts of the town. The separate names Under Village and Upper Village appear in the early 19th century, with the houses renumbered as simply ‘the Village’ in 1904. The land was formerly known as Matthew Henderson’s Croft and then as Nichol’s Croft. The large tenement there was erected by Messrs. R. Elliot & Co. in about 1879. A white briar bush that grew there was supposed to have been planted by some supporters of Prince Charlie around 1745.

Viltoun (wil-toon) n. former spelling for Wulton (e.g. in the testament of William, son of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1552.

violent (v-lin’) adj., arch. relating to the taking of land by force and without paying rent – ‘... and grantit to the said Robert Elliot ane heretabill richt of the saidis landis, with ane dischairg of all bygaine violebt proffeittis’ [SB1624].

the Violet Wuds (thu-vi-li’-wudz) n. also known as the Violet Wood, popular name for the picturesque wooded glen in the Netherhall wood of Wilton Park, just by Wilton Dean. It forms part of the boundaries of the town, and a path through the woods offers a popular walk. On the hill to the north are the remains of an earthwork and possible homestead – ‘My thoughts serene in Violet Woods I gaze on Teviotdale’ [JCa], ‘... Where the gentle breezes rustle Through the Violet Woods serene’ [WL] (named after the wood dog-violet that grows there).

Virgin Kate (vir-jiin-kä’) n. nickname for a Hawick resident in the mid-1800s – ‘Here’s Tib the Virgin and Virgin Kate, Here’s baith Robbie and Babbie the Cow; Auld Chairlie Hardie gangs east o’ the gate, While Dunnerum danders over the knowe’ [HI].

Viscount Hermitage (vl-koon’-her-mi’-ej) n. title created in 1706 for Henry, 2nd surviving son of Anne, Duchess of Buccleuch and James, Duke of Buccleuch and Monmouth. The lands of Hermitage had been in the hands of the Scotts of Buccleuch for more than a century. The title (along with Earl of Deloraine and Lord Goldielands) was used by descendants until the death of the 4th Earl in 1807.

Vision 2014 (vi-shin-twii-thoo-zind-in-fow-urreen) n. umbrella term for a series of events in the years leading up to the quincentennial. Originally suggested by Kate Houston and Janice Chapman, the idea grew from an event to celebrate the 2012 London Olympics to encompass the 2014 quincentenary and celebrate several aspects of life in the Town. 2011 was the year of Arts and Culture, with the focal event being the Big Sing. 2012 was the year of Sport, with several events, including the use of the Hawick Torch in the Big Parade. 2013 was the Year of Industry, with the Big Show in the High Street. Finally, 2014 was the Year of Heritage, culminating in the Big Return.

the Visit (thu-vi-zi’) n. Hawick-based pop band of the early 1980s, with single ‘City Lights’. They won an award from the Prince’s Trust, ??.

visy (vi-zee) v., arch. to visit, communicate with by letter – ‘...I haue taine the hardiess heirby till visy zou in my auin absence ...’ as ane messager quha sall assur zou ...’ [SB1584].

vitiat (vi-tee-at) v., arch. to spoil, impair the legal validity of something – ‘... ploitt aganis the said Erle of Bucelleughe ane manifest falsit, and caussit vitiat the said dispositioun and chairtour . . . ’ [SB1624].

vizzy (vi-zee) n., arch. a look, scrutiny, survey – ‘Afore they were oot o ma sicht, as I ran for ma part, I took another vizzy, an’ I was mortified to see them rather losing grund’ [BCM1881].

V.J. Day (vee-jay-day) n. official end to WWII hostilities, on 15th August 1945. On this evening in Hawick there were spontaneous celebrations, with sirens going off, houses lighting up, the gas company’s hooter, etc., and people pouring into the street. On the following day there was a parade by the massed pipe bands and Saxhorn Band in the High Street, as well as Reid’s radio van, an address by the Provost from the Town Hall balcony, fireworks and bonfires at the top of the Loan and on the Miller’s Knowes, as well as in the hills around Stobs Camp.

Vogan (voie-gin) n. man listed in 1543 as one of those people who failed to appear to answer charges that they had assisted the English in their raids that year. He was recorded as being a tenant in Borthwickshielis, but his full name is not given.

Vogan (voie-gin) n. George (18th C.) gardener at Minto in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. William (15th/16th C.) listed in the Exchequer Rolls in 1501 among mostly local men who had been fined. His name is given as ‘Willehmus Vogane in Schilbond’. It is unclear where he was from, but the other 15 men listed were mostly from the area immediately around Hawick.

voit (voieit) n., arch. a vote – ‘. . . and after mann’est voitiss, all electit and choisit the Robert Scott, callit of Goldielands, and William Scott, to be bailies . . . ’ [BR1638].

the Volunteer (thu-voie-lun-teeer) n. Volunteer Park, on Bucleuch Road, was purchased by the Common-Riding Committee from the Duke of Bucleuch in 1920. It has been extensively used for the Common Riding Games since 1893, as well as High School sporting events, junior rugby, etc., and has clubrooms behind the grandstand. A shed was erected for use at the Games in 1908 and a new stand opened by Mrs. Renwick, wife of the Provost, in 1923. The facilities there have been used jointly by the Linden and the Trades since 1963. Administration of the Park was handed over to the Common Good in 2003. In 2005 an all-weather sports pitch was opened further to the south, on what was formerly called ‘The Playin Fields’, and is also now known as Volunteer Park.

volunteers (vo-lun-teerz) n. voluntary members of military units who are civilians subject to military regulations when in service. In Hawick there were several units formed in response to perceived threats of French invasion, each unit lasting for typically a few years. The first unit appeared following the Volunteer Act of 1794, with large numbers formed by landowners in 1798. Officers were typically local landowners and their military titles were often used long afterwards. Many of the wealthier citizens, or those with access to a horse, were in the yeomanry cavalry. The Hawick Military Association operated from 1798–1802, followed by the Light Company of the Roxburgh Volunteers 1803–09. During the False Alarm of 1804 the local men were mobilised and commended for their readiness. Their uniforms then consisted of red coat, white buckskin breeches and leggings and a feathered hat. These volunteer units were disbanded after Waterloo, but following other invasion scares units were formed again from about 1859. Later local volunteers were the Upper Teviotdale Rifle Corps (4th Roxburgh) 1860–68 (ultimately becoming the 4th Battalion of the K.O.S.B.) and Hawick Volunteer Corps (5th Roxburgh) 1861–63. Note that the Volunteers were technically distinct from the Militia (usually formed by ballot in each county) and the Yeomanry, but all were inter-related and together were the forerunners of today’s Territorial Army – ‘. . . And ‘Teribus’ the battle cry O Hawick Volunteers’ [JT].

Von Holbein (fon-hol-bin) n. Baron (18th/19th C.) prisoner of war in Hawick during the Napoleonic Wars. He stayed with James Elliot of Goldielands in the period 1812–14.

the Voo (thu-vo) n. nickname of Jackie Robertson and his brother Wullie Robertson, as well as subsequent generations.

voochsaf (voie-chawf) v., poet. to vouchsafe, grant – ‘Remuve frae me the waye o’ leein’; an’ graciouslie voochsaf me thy law’ [HSR].

the Votadini (thu-voo-ta-dee-nee) n., pl. Bronze Age or Iron Age tribe, with their centre at Edinburgh and boundaries covering much of the Lothians, Borders and Northumberland. The original capital may have been at the Traprain Law hill-fort. Hawick was surely within their territory, and many local hill-forts would have been Votadini outposts. They were essentially the same people who were referred to as the Gododdin in Roman and post-Roman times. The Romans recorded them as a British tribe, coming under Roman occupation in the area between the Antonine and Hadrian’s Walls; they may later have had some sort of alliance with the Romans. The Gododdin kingdom was formed around 470, although the southern part of the Votadini territory became a new kingdom of Brynach (or Bernicia). The Votadini/Gododdin occupied land to the north and east of the Selgovae (the tribe of the upper Tweed and Teviot valleys); whether Hawick was inside or outside its boundaries at this time is unclear. A sub-tribe under Prince Cunedda is supposed to have migrated to Wales, driving out the Irish settlers there, and establishing a direct connection between the Lothian/Borders Scots and the modern Welsh.

Dedicated to Jessie E. Murray (who later became Grant’s daughter-in-law), it is one of the few Hawick songs suited to a female voice. Note that in ‘They ta’en away the wale …’, the word ‘wale’ means ‘choicest’, but the title may be a play on words. A folk version of the song was popularised by John Wright, and another version appears on Scocha’s 2003 album ‘Bordering On’.

Wailsh (wālsh) n., adj. Welsh. The Northumbrian language once spoken in the Borders was one of the Brythonic or ‘p-Celtic’ languages, closely related to Old Welsh – ‘When the Romans left here, the tongue that was spoken Was a form o Welsh – an, No, Ah’m no joken’ [WaE].

Wake (wâk) n. Baldwin (d.1281) son of High and Joan de Stutville. He held the manor of Liddel in Cumberland, which was presumably Liddel Strength. His lands are described in a record of 1281/2, although it is unclear to what extent this included lands in Scottish Liddesdale. He married Hawise de Quincy. His son John was Baron of Liddel. Sir John (1268–c.1300) eldest son of Baldwin of Bourne and Liddel (on the Cumberland side). He became the 1st Lord of Liddel. He was gifted Hermitage Castle and lands in Liddesdale by Edward I. He married Joan (or Johann), who was possibly daughter of the Baron of Fîennes. Their children were Thomas and Margaret (both of whom married Plantagenets). His widow retained partial possession of the revenues of these lands after his death, and successfully petitioned to continue this during the minority of William de Soules. His lands were given to Sir Simon Lyndsay in 1300, when he was deceased.

Waldie (wawl-dee) n. Andrew (19th C.) wright recorded in Ashkirk in Pigot’s 1837 directory. George (18th C.) paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785–91. George was probably his son. George (18th/19th C.) paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1797, when he was listed as ‘George Waldy Junior’. He was a carrier recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. The George who was a carrier at Walter’s Wynd on the 1841 census is probably his son. George (18th/19th C.) draper on the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. He could be the merchant of Hawick who died in 1824. George (b.c.1795) carrier, probably son of George. He was based on Walter’s Wynd in 1841 and the Village in 1851. He married Mary Leith, and their children included: William; Elizabeth (1835–87); Richard; George; and Robert (1846–1921). Helen (b.1787) daughter of John and Helen Scott. She is recorded as ‘Ind.’ at about 20 Buccleuch Street in 1841 and ‘Annumitant’ in 1851. And in 1852 she is listed as ‘Miss Helen’ at Teviot Square, among the gentry of Hawick. She is probably the ‘Miss Waldie’ who ran a ladies’ boarding school on Buccleuch Street according to Pigot’s 1837 directory. James (b.1810/11) tailor on the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. His wife was Jessie and their children included John and Ann. He could be the James who married Jessie Caruthers in Langholm in 1831. James (b.1820/1) farm servant in Rulewater and then at Wilton, serving mainly as a coachman. He was born in Midlothian. He was factotum for John Henderson at Abbotsrule until Henderson died in 1861, then became coachman for David Pringle of Wilton Lodge. His wife Margaret was from Morebattle. Their children included Mary, Agnes, James and Andrew. John (18th C.) factor for Walter Scott of Harden in at least the period 1764–72. He could be the writer of that name who was in Kelso at about the same time. John (18th C.) carrier from Hawick to Edinburgh recorded in a ‘Process of Scandal’ with Robert Scott, merchant of Lasswade, in 1790. He paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785–91. He was probably closely related to carrier George. John (d.c.1825) hosier manufacturer based in Slitrig Crescent. He went into partnership with Robert Pringle and Peter Wilson at the Whiskyhouse Mill in 1815. By the time of Wood’s 1824 map the factory belonged solely to him; it is marked ‘Wool Manufactory’ and straddled the mill lade, near the north end of the modern Stonefield Place. He could also be the ‘Mr, Waldie’ who owned property on the Tower Knowe on Wood’s map. He is listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory as a manufacturer of stockings and woollen cloth. He lived near the corner of Silver Street and the Howegate, the well near there being known as ‘Waldy’s Well’. He married Helen Scott, and their children included: Helen (b.1787); Betty (b.1789), who married postmaster Robert Armstrong; George (b.1791); and Adam (b.1793). His daughter Helen was living in the family property in the 1840s and 50s, and appears to have been his heiress. John (b.1792/3) dyer who lived on Slitrig Crescent. His wife was Agnes and their children included William, Charles, Janet and Mary. He was probably son of Thomas. John (b.1844) son of John, he was born at Roxburgh, with his mother coming from Maxton. He worked with John Robson Scott at Newton and then became tenant farmer at Braidhaugh in the Rule valley. He was a member of the Hobkirk School Board and Parish Council. He married Christina Laidlaw (daughter of a shepherd from Eskdalemuir and Rachel Scott from Deloraine) at Mervinslaw in 1868. His wife was known as a great buttermaker. His nephew William Douglas worked at Weens. John (19th/20th C.) Burgh Officer of the early 1900s. The same John may have been one of the early members of the committee of Hawick R.F.C. Capt. R.G. served in the Commandos in WWII. He was awarded the Military Cross for gallantry in the Middle East in 1944. Robert (b.1825/6) frameworker in Hawick. In 1861 the family were living at 25 Loan. In 1852 he married Elizabeth (‘Betty’, c.1824–1900), daughter of shoemaker Adam. Their children included Margaret, Mary and Robert. Thomas (b.c.1790) farmer at Ashkirk Mill. He was there in 1841 with his wife Isabel and (probably) children William, Thomas, James, Elizabeth, Walter, Isabel, Margaret and Alexander. He may be the Thomas of Ashkirk who subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. William (b.1767) son of George and Betty Henderson. He married Marion Prentice. Their daughter Jane married builder Robert Rutherford. William (18th/19th C.) butcher in Lilliesleaf, as recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. William (18th/19th C.) draper on the Sandbed, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. William (b.1810/1) mason in Hawick. He was living at about 23 High Street in 1841 and on the Kirkwynd in 1851. During building work in about 1861 he came across a sculptured stone, which he presented to the Archaeological Society. His wife was Janet and their children included William, Mary, May, George, Adam, Margaret and Jane. William (1835–70) son of James and Euphemia Paterson from Morebattle. He was Railway Stationmaster in Hawick. He was listed as telegraph and station agent in 1868. He married Emma de St. Pierre Clark from Liverpool. Their children were: James Archibald Hamilton (b.1859); George Clark (b.1860); William (b.1862), who died young; Elizabeth Hamilton (b.1863), who emigrated to New York to join her uncle James; William (b.1865); and Emma de St. Pierre (b.1867). He died in an accident near Musselburgh. His wife was still living in Hawick in 1881, but the following year emigrated to New Zealand with her daughter Emma (also spelled ‘Waldy’, ‘Waltho’ and variants in earlier documents).

Waldie’s (wawl-deez) n. hosier firm of J. & W. Waldie, with factory on Slitrig Crescent in the early 19th century. Waldie, Elliot & Co. also operated Tower Mills. Earlier, Waldie, Pringle, Wilson & Co., hosiers, bought the Waulk Mill (Whisky House Mill) in 1815 for carding and spinning. They received a grant from the Board of Trustees for Manufacturers of £150 in 1816, with their total investment in machinery etc. being over £1600, a huge sum in those days. This company was essentially the progenitor of Pringle’s of Scotland. However, Robert Pringle (probably on his own) moved to Cross Wynd in 1819. Wood’s 1824 map shows Whiskyhouse Mill belonging to John Waldie, and Pigot’s 1825/6 directory has it
Waly's Well

Waldy's Well (wawl-deez-wel) n. popular name for a former public water supply at the foot of the Howegate, also sometimes known as 'the Printer's Well'. It was named after John Waldy (or Waldie) who owned the house there, which had once belonged to 'Hab o Hawick'.

wale (wail) v., arch. to choose, select, pick – 'What would you do, young Branxholme, Gin ye had me, as I have thee?' – 'I would take you to the good greenwood, And gar your ain hand wale the tree' [JL], 'Wale yer sweetest, best-gaug reed. Yer lodest chanter' [JoHa], 'A cood wale oot Rule Waeter's coorse feine ...' [ECS], '... waled, after an agony o' choice' [DH], 'And gin I'd to wale but the yin ...' [DH], 'The grazing green He wales for me ...' [WL], 'Nae walin' blithely the bravest bloom, It was Murray's Meg – or the tree o' doom' [WL], n., arch. choice, act of choosing, scope for choice, choicest, the best, the pick – 'They ta'en away the wale O' oor Bonnie Teviotdale' [JEDM], 'Wi' the wale o' his stock he will gie ye the clash Frae the countryside far aroon ...' [WL].

wale oot (wail-o) v., arch. to pick out – 'A cood wale oot Rule Waeter's coorse feine, – merkeet wui raws on raws o treis' [ECS].

Wales (wailz) n. Patrick (15th C.) Chaplain recorded in a sasine of 1465/6 for Denholm Mains in the Barony of Cavers. He may thus have been associate with Cavers Kirk. Note that 'Debe Phelip Waleyss, Suppior of our Closter' was recorded at Jedburgh Abbey in 1446 and may be the same man or closely related. Thomas (18th/19th C.) butler at Riddell in 1797, when he was working for Sir John Riddell. He is probably the 'T. Wales, Minto-house who subscribed to Robert Wilson's 'History of Hawick', published in 1825.

walit (wail-leed, -lī) pp., poet. chosen – '...I hae eksaltet ane waelit owt frae mang the peeples' [HSR].

Walker (waw-kur) n. Alexander (b.1835/6) from Dysart in Fife, he was a tutor to the Elliots of Minto. In 1861 he is recorded as 'Preceptor' at Minto House. Andrew (18th C.) elder of Hobkirk Parish, recorded in 1725. Rev. Andrew (1722/3–1772) assistant minister at Crailing, he became preacher at Teviothead 'chapel-of-ease' from 1745 until probably 1750. That year he was translated to Ettrick, and moved again to Canobie in 1765. He married Martha, daughter of John Stoddart of Williamhope. She later married Capt. William Elliot and died in 1806. Andrew (18th/19th C.) cooper of Damside, recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 directory. Andrew sprinter from Hawick. He won the 1982 'Powderhall' New Year Sprint. Charles (d.1955) headmaster of St. Cuthbert's School from 1948 until his death, being the last head of that school. He came to Hawick from Alyth. Col. George (1830–97) of Crawfordton, Captain in charge of the Dunfries Militia for a while in Hawick, he later became M.P. for Dunfriesshire 1865–68 and 1869–74. Rev. George Arthur Everett (b.1875) born in Selkirk, he trained in the Presbyterian College in Manitoba, Canada. He was licensed by the Presbytery of Winnipeg and was minister at Lenberg Church there in 1906–07. In 1908 he became minister at Newcastleton Congregational Kirk. He remained until 1912, when he moved to Catrine in Ayrshire. He was later minister at Westray United Free Church, then Deerness, then Corgarff and finally Benholme. He married Edith Gibson Donaldson and secondly Annie Webster Japp Henderson. Helen hockey player from Hawick. She was educated at Drumlanrig and the High School and trained as a P.E. teacher at Heriot-Watt. She captained Heriot-Watt to victory at the British Universities Championships. She then played for Edinburgh Ladies and Glasgow Western. She was capped more than 100 times for Scotland, and also served as co-Captain. She has also coached the under-18 Scottish team. Horace (1910–94) born in Aberdeen, he graduated from university there, studying English and then Divinity. He was ordained in 1935, worked for 3 years for the Student Christian Movement, then was assistant minister at St. Mary's in Dundee before being ordained as minister at West Port Kirk in Hawick about the time WWII broke out. He remained in Hawick through most of the War years, also being seconded to Orkney to serve the forces there for a while. In 1944 he moved back to Aberdeen and in 1948 became Secretary-Depute of the Church of Scotland's Home Board, later becoming Secretary, Managing Co-ordinator and Executive Director. He helped establish new parishes and extend the work of the Church through the 1950s, when attendance across Scotland was probably at its peak. He retired in 1977 and was then Chairman of the ecumenical Scottish Churches Council for 4 years. He received an honorary D.D. from Aberdeen University in 1967 and an O.B.E. in 1978. In 1945 he married Annie Wyles Duncan (b.1918), who he met in Hawick, and they had 2 daughters. James (1762–1840) stockmaker of Walker

Hawick, who was one of the 18 founders of the Relief Kirk. James (18th/19th C.) married Janet Graham in Hawick Parish in 1796. Their son Irvine was baptised in Bowden in 1797. James (18th/19th C.) house servant at Teviotbank in 1797, when he was working for David Simpson. James (b.c.1795) tailor in Lilliesleaf, as recorded in Pigot's 1825/6 and 1837 directories. In 1841 he was on the South side of Main Street. He had a daughter, Mary. It may be his father who was the Lilliesleaf tailor who subscribed to Andrew Scott's book of poetry, published in Kelso in 1811. James (c.1795–bef. 1864) nephew of William. In 1832 he inherited the farm of East Fodderlee from his uncle. He was listed at East Fodderlee among the gentry of the Jedburgh area in Slater's 1852 directory. In 1864 the farm was sold to Sir William Francis Elliott of Stobs by his son James, when it was heavily burdened by debt. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. His wife was Jane and their children included James, Isabella, Jane, Agnes, John, Thomas and Margaret. His daughter married Dr. A.B. Bruce, Professor of New Testament Theology in the Free Church College in Glasgow. James (19th C.) son of James, from whom he inherited East Fodderlee. Since there were many debts, the farm was placed in the hands of the Crown and sold in 1864 to Sir William Francis Elliott of Stobs. He was said to be a great lover of books, and after the farm was sold he moved with his books to Edinburgh, where he worked as a book-seller. However, his health was never very robust and he died fairly young. James Campbell (1821–88) architect from Auchtermuchty, who designed the first Carnegie Library in Dunfermline, built 1881–83, as well as Hawick Town Hall, 1884–86. Dunfermline Town Hall is probably his other building that most closely resembles Hawick Town Hall. Other local contributions include Galashiels Poorhouse, Langlee and Netherby (near Galashiels), Waverley Hydropathic (Melrose), enlargement of Lilliesleaf Kirk and Ancrum Police Station. He trained in the office of William Burn and David Bryce and set up on his own in 1856/7. John (15th C.) listed in 1463/4 among the men who were rewarded by the King for assisting in the capture of John Douglas of Balveny, probably part of the force led by Scott of Buccleuch. He is recorded as ‘Johannes Walcar’. The other men were Scotts, Turnbells, a Gledstains, a Langlands, a Daigleish etc., and so he is probably local. John (d.bef. 1532) recorded in 1532 when his nephew and heir William sold a croft and tenement in Hawick to John Morlaw. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Ruletownhead, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 6 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He also paid the dog tax there in the same year. In the Land Tax Rolls for about 1874, David Henderson is listed as owner of ‘Part of Rulestownhead formerly belonging to Walter Turnbull’. Norman member of the Hawick Saxhorn Band for over 60 years. Robert (18th/19th C.) farmer at Cocklecoatie, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Robert (1813/4–61) from Jedburgh, his mother was Margaret Douglas. He was a baker in Hawick, with his shop at Orrock Place. In 1851 and 1861 he was listed at 2 Orrock Place and in Slater's 1852 directory he was a baker on Central Square. His wife was Isabella and their children included Elizabeth Douglas and Margaret Hall (1850–68). His widow later moved to Bonjedward, where she died. Robert (19th C.) stocking frame-worker in Hawick. In 1861 he was living at 25 Loan. In 1852 he married Elizabeth (c.1824–1900), daughter of Adam Kersel. Their children included: Margaret (b.c.1852); Mary (b.c.1854); and Robert (b.1855). Robert (19th C.) smith who owned 72 High Street in 1875. Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded in Belses in 1502. He was surety for William Waugh, who was also in Belses. Thomas (17th C.) recorded at Mervinslaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. William (16th C.) recorded as ‘William Walker of Hawyk’, nephew and heir of John Walker, in the Selkirk Protocol Books of 1532, when he sold a croft and a tenement in Hawick to John Morlaw. The ‘certain croft in the bounds of the lordship of Hawyk’ was presumably Morlaw’s Croft, while the tenement was on the north side of the High Street, bordering on the Slitrig, i.e. was at the Tower Knowe. The sale included an agreement that he would pay 40 shillings Scots if necessary to rebuild the tenement there in ‘better form than now’. His name does not appear as an owner of any participates of land on Hawick’s 1537 Charter; this suggests that his uncle John had owned the lands in Hawick, but he himself lived elsewhere (maybe Selkirk) and sold off all the Hawick property he inherited. William (18th/19th C.) owner of Thorlieshope according to the 1788 county valuation and the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. He may be the same man as the farmer in Mervinslaw. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Mervinslaw. In 1815 he purchased East Fodderlee from Charles Kerr of Abootrule. He married Isabella, daughter of Thomas Turnbull, and grand-daughter of Adam Turnbull of Deneside. His wife died in 1857, aged 76. Having no children, his nephew James inherited the lands. William (19th C.) early photographer in Fife and Edinburgh who also ran a studio somewhere in Wilton in 1866–67. It may be that J.B. Cartlidge was acting as his manager, and that he never himself worked in Hawick. Rev. William Lowe (d.1930) training at Edinburgh Theological Hall, he became minister of Hawick Congregational Union Kirk in the period 1873–76, taking over from William Munro. Note that this was the dwindling original Congregational Church, and not the Evangelical Union Church, which later changed its name to become today’s Congregational Kirk. He left to become minister at Thurso and then of a Unitarian church in Great Hamilton Street, Glasgow. He was finally a minister at Laurencekirk.

Walkerburn (waw-kur-burn) n. village about 20 miles north of Hawick, between Galashiels and Innerleithen, on the A72. It was effectively founded to house workers after the construction of Henry Ballantyne’s Tweedvale mill around 1850. In the 1920s a novel system for powering mills was built here, with water pumped up to a reservoir and used to drive turbines. The town has a Museum of Textiles in the converted Ballantyne’s Mill, and the unusually patterned sandstone house, the Kirna, dating from 1867. Population (1991) 658 (from ‘Wauker’s Burn’).

the Walker’s Road (_thu-waw-kurz-röd_) n. former name for the road that connects the A698 with the Rule valley, between Denholm and Spittal, also known as ‘Jenny Walker’s Brae’. It was said to have been given the name because people would get off their horses or carts to make the pull up the steep hill easier.

Walkingshaw (_waw-kin-shaw_) n. William (1840/1–1927) married Martha Lyon, who was daughter of Andrew Lyon and Joan Inglis and died in 1914, aged 73. His grandmother was Peggy Leggat, probably daughter of Wilton coachman Andrew. Their children were Jessie and Jemima.

walkit (_waw-kee_, ‘-ki’) pp. walked – ‘...but neither him nor his doug tuik the least notice o’ mey, but wawkit on ...’ [BCM1880], ‘Lang-syne, Aa walkit up the waiterside And owre the Station Brig, efter a game ...’ [DH].

wall (_wawl_) n., arch. a well, spring, drinking fountain – ‘The wall news was generally much more interesting to them than the contents of a newspaper’ [V&M], ‘Ane fuinant o’ gairdens, ane wal o’ leivin’ waters ...’ [HSR], ‘He turns the wildirniss intil ane stamin’ water, an’ drye grund intil wals o’ water’ [HSR], ‘Is’t waeter-waeter of waal-waeter? i.e., Is it water from a river or stream, or from a well, spring, tap, or drinking-fountain, etc.? ’ [ECS] (also written ‘waal’; also well and see wells).

Wallace see William Wallace

Wallace (_waw-lis_) n. Bartholomew ‘Bartie’ (16th C.) servant of Sir John Kerr of Ferniehirst at the Kirklands of Bedrule in 1557. There was a complaint made to the Queen that Kerrs servants there were attacked by a group including Turnbulls of Bedrule and others. His name is given as ‘Wallanche’. Sir David James (1945–) born in Hawick, son of Robert and Jenny of Silverbuthall, he was a pupil at the High School and then studied at Edinburgh University, where his Ph.D. was supervised by Nobel Laureate Peter Higgs. He had a fellowship at Princeton before taking up a lectureship in Physics at Edinburgh University in 1972. After a brief interlude at the University of Southampton, he became Tait Professor of Mathematical Physics at Edinburgh University 1979–93, Head of Physics 1984–87 and Director of the Edinburgh Parallel Computing Centre 1990–93. His interests developed from a variety of topics in theoretical physics to applications of parallel computing, for services to which he received the C.B.E. in 1996. He was Vice Chancellor of Loughborough University 1994–2005, is a Fellow of the Royal Society and has served on several national education and science committees. He was Director of the Isaac Newton Institute for Mathematical Sciences in Cambridge in 2005–11, and Master of Churchill College, Cambridge 2006–14. He has also been Chair of the Council for Mathematical Sciences, President of the Institute of Physics, Deputy Lieutenant of Leicestershire and Vice-President of the Royal Society of Edinburgh. He was Common Riding Chief guest in 1987 and was knighted in 2004 for services to U.K. science, technology and engineering. His wife is Elizabeth and they have a daughter, Sara. Eric (1938/9–2004) presenter on Border Television from 1968 until he retired in 1998. He was probably the most recognisable news reader during that time. Gavin (18th C.) witnessed a baptism in Wilton Parish in 1770 for Anthony Haig. George (18th C.) wool-comber who was admitted as a Burgess of Hawick in 1741. He may have come from outside the Town, as part of efforts to encourage the wool trade. He may be the George, married to Margaret Waugh, whose children, baptised in Hawick, included James (b.1737), an unnamed son (b.1739) and Anne (b.1741). George (18th/19th C.) witnessed a baptism for James Murray (whose son was born at Damside) in 1810, along with John Thomline. He may be the 75-year old ‘Parish Pauper’ recorded at Wilton Pathhead on the 1841 census. Rev. James Nisbet (b.1842) son of John A., he must have grown up in Hawick. He was himself ordained as a minister in 1867 and served for a long time in Swindon, and then in Torquay. He returned to Hawick for the jubilee celebrations of Hawick Free Kirk in 1893. His son was Vicar of St. Matthew’s in Nottingham. Rev. John Aikman (1802-70) born in Edinburgh, son of James, a gunmaker, and Janet Clapperton. He was educated at Edinburgh University, licensed by the Presbytery there in 1825 and became assistant minister at Burntisland in 1827. He was minister of the Parish of Hawick from 1833, being presented by Walter Francis, Duke of Buccleuch on April 1st, following the suggestion of Dr. Chalmers. Early in his ministry he made a useful record of the number of people living in each street in Hawick. He was nominated as a trustee of the Orrock Bequest in 1834. He was residing at Hawick Manse in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1840/1 he was called to Gala, but his translation was refused by the Presbytery, after considering the petition signed by 815 Hawick communicants. During the Disruption of 1843 he walked out with about $3/4$ (close to 600) of the congregation to form the Hawick Free Kirk (which later became St. George’s). He was thus the first local Free Church minister, and served until 1864. As a result of leaving the established church his annual salary dropped dramatically. He lived on Wilton Path. There are several letters preserved in the National Archives relating to his subsequent disputes with the Duke of Buccleuch (his former patron). He was also a skilled woodworker and much of the pulpit and other ornaments of the original Free Kirk were carved by himself. He was sometimes nicknamed ‘Velvet Heels’ or ‘The Pope o Hawick’ by his opponents. He gifted a bell to the new Free Kirk in Kelso. He wrote a description of the Parish in 1839 for the New Statistical Account of Scotland, including in it a detailed list of the insect and plant species found in the Parish, as well as descriptions of the Auld Brig, the excavation at the Caa Knowe, the local prevalence of nicknames, etc. He also wrote ‘Statistics having reference to the ravages of Cholera in the town and neighbourhood of Hawick in 1849’ (1850). His other publications included ‘The Death of the Righteous’ (in ‘The Protestant Pulpit’, 1830), ‘The Church built by Human Agency’ (1831), ‘Sermons’ (1838), ‘The Seven Churches of Asia’ (1842), ‘Reasons for concurring in the Resolutions of the Convocation’ (1843), ‘Pastoral Recollections’ (1843, 1854 and 1864), ‘Testimonies in Favour of the Principles and Procedure of the Free Church of Scotland’ (1844), ‘The Chariot of Israel, and the Horsemen thereof, a discourse’ (1847), ‘The Railway Guide’ (1847), ‘A Pastor’s Legacy’ (extracts from manuscripts of Rev. Robert Nichol of Gala, 1864), ‘Jewels for the Crown of Glory’ (1864), ‘Attributes and Aspects of the Divine Redeemer’ (1864), ‘Communion Services according to the Presbyterian Form’ (1865), ‘Waymarks for the Guiding of Little Feet’ (1866), ‘Lessons from the Life of James Nisbet’ (1867) and ‘Farewell Addresses’ (1870). He also wrote a hymn, entitled ‘The Power of Prayer’, which has sometimes been attributed to other writers. In 1857–59 he took a 2 year rest, travelling on the continent, and was assisted as minister by William Gaultier 1858–64. He was presented with a silver epergne by his congregation. He married Isabella, daughter of James Nisbet, a London bookseller; she died in 1859 and is buried in Highgate Cemetery. Their son James Nisbet also became a minister in England. Their other children were: James Nisbet, who died young; Jeanetta Nisbet; Wilhelmina Hepburn, married Rev. John Macgregor of Hawick Free Kirk; Isabella Duncan; Catherine Nisbet; Hamilton Gordon, Captain in the African Mail S.S. Co.; Alexander Duff Leadbetter, Edinburgh Bookseller; and Amy Jeanetta. He retired when Rev. Gaultier was translated, moving to Trinity in Edinburgh, where he died. He is buried at Rosebank Cemetery in Leith, but there is also a family obelisk in Wellogate Cemetery to which his name was added about 1930. A portrait of him still exists in St. George’s. John (b.1811/2) born in Wilton Parish, he was a butcher on the High Street. He is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was at about 79 High Street. In 1833 in Jedburgh he married Jean, daughter of shepherd William Oliver (from Chesters); she died in 1855, ged 42. Their children included: David (d.1834); William (b.1835/6); John (b.1840/1); David (d.1847); and Andrew Oliver (b.1844/5).
Wallace Court

Thomas (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He was listed among the subscribers to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784) Sir William (c.1270–1305) from humble birth in the West of Scotland he sought to regain independence for the nation. He is often referred to simply as ‘Wallace’. He was declared Guardian of the Kingdom of Scotland at Selkirk in 1298. He is said to have visited Langlands around 1297 and tethered his horse to a thorn bush behind the Lodge (now Museum). A stone marks the site, but there is no evidence to support the story, although there is a connection between him and the Longueville/Charters family who were connected with the early Barons of Langlands. A large boulder on Meigle Hill near Galashiels is known as ‘Wallace’s Putting Stone’ and a boundary line on Minchmoor (north of Yarrowford) is ‘Wallace’s Trench’. He was barbarically executed by the soldiers of Edward I. An imposing 31 foot high red sandstone statue was erected near Dryburgh Abbey in 1814, and in Hawick Wallace Court was named after him in 1970 – ‘O Wallace! that Scotchman is not worth his room Who weeps not when he remembers thy doom’ [JR], ‘...Banners waved by Bruce and Wallace! What would future ages call us?’ [JH], ‘What need we say how Wallace fought, And how his foemen fell? Or how on glorious Bannockburn The work went wild and well?’ [HSR].

Fr. William (1768–1854) born near Huntly, he was educated in Banffshire and the Scots College of Douay, escaping back to Scotland at the outbreak of the French Revolution. Ordained at the Scots College of Valladolid in 1798, he remained there for 10 years, but had to flee Spain when Napoleon’s soldiers arrived. He then worked in Perthshire, back in Spain, then at the Edinburgh Mission, before becoming Chaplain at Traquair House. After deciding that there should be a chapel somewhere in the Scottish Borders, he ‘discovered’ a group of Catholics in Hawick in the summer of 1837. In an 1840 appeal for funds to build a Chapel in Hawick he states ‘it is remarkable that the seeds of religious animosity seem never to have been sown here, and that if attempted to be sown now, they would not prosper in a soil so adverse to their growth’. He sought out the help of the Magistrates and Council of Hawick and after raising the money (including his own savings) purchased the land (from William Wilson). He officiated at the foundation stone laying ceremony, and lived to see the chapel flourish, as well as providing additional financial help to establish a Catholic school in Hawick. He is buried at Traquair. He wrote some lines as a tribute to the new chapel – ‘Now’s the day when exiled truth Returns to galdden Hawick’s youth; It fears no gag to gall its mouth; It needs no Border foray. To bid the light of truth to shine, Our hearts and morals to refine, And wing our hopes to joys devine, Such is its peaceful story’. William (b.1806/7) born in Earlston, he was a butcher on the Howegate. He is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 he was at about 8 Howegate. He married Margaret McLean and their children included Jane, William, David, Margaret, Robert, Mary Ann and John. William (19th C.) local shepherd. At one of the earliest recorded sheepdog trials, the Hawick trial of 1883, this gentleman astonished everyone by his ability to control his dog with quiet hisses and whistles, influencing other shepherds with his methods.

Wallace Court (waw-lis-kör’) n. part of Mayfield, built in 1970 and named after William Wallace.

the Wallace Statue (thu-waw-lis-sta’-ew) n. statue of William Wallace near Dryburgh, built in red sandstone and standing about 7m high, with saltire shield and double-handed sword. It was erected in 1814, carved by John Smith (of Darnick) for landowner the Earl of Buchan, and repaired in 1991.

the Wallace Thorn (thu-waw-lis-thörn) n. thorn tree where William Wallace is reputed to have tied his horse when he visited the Langlands estate about 1297. The tradition can be traced back at least to the mid-18th century (appearing in James Wilson’s ‘Annals of Hawick’). Despite there being little evidence to support this story, a memorial stone (actually the weight from an old cheese press) marks the site on the driveway behind the Museum. It was placed there in 1899 shortly after the tree was destroyed in a storm. An old well, presumably once a water supply for the Lodge, is also nearby. The story may have started through confusion of the name ‘Langlands’ with Sir Thomas (or Robert) de Longueville, a friend of Wallace, who is sometimes also said to have been a French pirate, the ‘Red Rover’. However, the connection with the Langlands estate is confused by the romanticised version of history and the identity of this Longueville. Nevertheless, there may be a connection between him and the Langlands family, although this does not lend any support the idea that Wallace visited...
the Walled Gairdens

Wilton. A piece of wood from the tree is in the Museum – ‘These words prophetic uttered then Were down the ages borne; Their echo lingers in the glen Where waved the Wallace Thorn’ [JI].

the Walled Gairdens (thu-wawld-gär-din) n. ornamental and show garden, which is the pride of Wilton Lodge Park, and winner of many competitions. It lies on the road above the western side of the Park, and was formerly part of the Wilton Lodge Estate. Originally the gardens had been near the public bowling greens, but were moved to their present location by David Pringle in the 1850s. For a while the town let them as a market garden, before the Parks Department took them over as a showcase for the public and a nursery for plants in the Park and elsewhere. It contains floral displays, and a tropical greenhouse, as well as a scented garden and an aviary. The range of plants is beyond compare in the Borders. A sports changing facility was built adjacent to it in 1978.

waller (waw-lur) n., arch. a confused crowd, large number of living creatures, especially a flock in motion, swarm – ‘A waller o’ bairns = a numerous family of children’ [ECS], ‘... a waller o’ barefet getts; a wumman wui a bairn cairryin i theshawl’ [ECS], ‘... theer when the slogan waalett the waller ent steenett the fray’ [ECS], ‘A waller o’ birds’ [GW], v., arch. to wallow, swarm, heave, surge – ‘A muck-midden wallerin’ wi’ worms’ [GW] (also written ‘wailler’ and ‘wauler’).

wallie (waw-lee) n., poet. a small spring – ‘Rivers he turns intil ane wildirness, an’ the wallies intil the grund’ [HSR].

the Walligate (thu-waw-lee-gā') n. another version of the name for the Wellogate – ‘Yet their mirry memorials Where they stand their state Arena in modest stones In Wulton and Walligate ...’ [DH], ‘And I couldna fancy the Walligate: It’s fer owre fer ootbye ...’ [DH] (also written ‘Walligait’).

Wallis (waw-lis) n. I. Washington (??–??) of Innes-Henderson in the late 19th and early 20th centuries, ??., Isaac Grey (b.1879) born in Wakefield, Yorkshire. From a Quaker family, he was son of Robert, hosiery manufacturer in Wakefield. He moved to Hawick at some point, becoming a manger for Innes-Henderson, later Braemar. He was sometimes referred to as ‘Ikie’ by his workers, although his family called him ‘Grey’. He lived at Woodside in Sunnyhill. He was a Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire. He can be seen in a pin-stripe suit in a photograph of the firm’s picnic of 1924. He married Margaret Frances Lindsay, daughter of manufacturer Patrick Anderson Laing, and she died in 1917. He secondly married Helen Scott. He was President of the Scottish Cricket Union in 1931.

wallop (waw-lap) v., arch. to bubble, boil – ‘Deil thank your pot to wallop brown, While mine boils thin and bluely ...’ [JR], ‘... although it is walloping as thrang with paddocks and powheads, as ever Mr. Grieve’s muckle pot was with beans and barley’ [WSB].

Wallshaw (wawl-shaw) n. former farmstead in Castleton Parish. It was included along with Over Closs, Millburn and several adjacent farmsteads when surveyed for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718. It was presumably somewhere between the Whitrope and Roughley Burns, but its precise location is uncertain.

the Wallygate see the Wellogate

Walrig Park (wawl-rig-pawrk) n. former name for lands near Minto Kames farm. In 1780 there was a description of the lands of Minto Muir Parks, describing that ‘Walrigpark’ was part of the northern boundary, adjacent to ‘Crowmssom’ and near the road connecting Lilliesleaf and Jedburgh. It is probably associated with the modern ‘Welligrip Strip’.

Walsingham (wawl-sing-hum) n. Francis (1577–1647) born in Hawick in Northumberland, he was an English Jesuit priest, also known as John Fennell. Despite appearing on the wikipedia page for Hawick, there is no connection whatsoever with our town.

walt (wawl’t) n., arch. welt, strengthened border of a garment, selvedge, usually the first four rows of knitting at the beginning of cuffs or shirts, knitted in an inter-locked way to stop the stitches from running – ‘... To the ribs’ lood chorus cuissen off the wanted wals’ [WL].

Walter (wawlt-tur) n. (12th C.) name of the Chaplain of ‘Lillesclive’ (i.e. Lilliesleaf) who was witness at Linton in 1174 to a grant of land from William the Lion to William de Somerville. He also witnessed a charter from the Bishop of St. Andrews in about 1150 (although this has been suggested to be a fabrication). He may have been related to the later John of Lilliesleaf. He is probably also the ‘Gauterio de Lilleschive’ who was a Clerk of the Bishop of Glasgow in 1177.

Walter (wawl-tur) n. (13th C.) Dean of Teviotdale recorded sometime in the period between 1227 and 1238. His surname is unknown.

Walter Street (wawl'-ur-stree') n. street in Newcastleon off South Hermitage Street, opposite Ashwell Place.

Walter’s Wynd (Wal’-urz-wind) n. narrow street running from the middle of the High Street (between nos. 47 and 49) to the Teviot, once an area of very over-crowded housing. Before about the middle of the 18th century it was known as Horselyhill’s Wynd, and renamed after Walter Scott, tailor (‘Wattie o the Wyndheid’), whose shop was there. The name certainly was fixed by 1790. The North Port stood at the top of the road, which was one of the old entrances to the town, and to mark this the drums and fifes march here on the Thursday night. There was formerly a pended house at the top of the Wynd, and in the early 19th century there was a public house in the Wynd. The foot of the street was once the site of the main ford used to enter the town through this gate, and the main route towards Selkirk and Edinburgh until the Teviot Bridge was built in 1741. John Nixon’s hosiery factory was here, later becoming Pringle’s, and renamed Rodono. The Drums and Fifes walk up this street as part of their march around town on ‘the Nicht Afore the Morn’.

Walter Wilson’s (wawl’-ur-wul-sinz) n. Walter Wilson’s factory, on Allars Crescent (No. 7) at the foot of the Mill Path, and at Teviot Mills in Weensland, in the latter part of the 19th century. Walter Wilson & Sons began in 1851, as part of the split up business of William Wilson & Sons, when Walter’s share was the mill on Allars Crescent, the property at 13 High Street and a piece of land in Weensland, on which he had Teviot Mill built. The firm manufactured tweeds at Teviot Mill and hosiery on Allars Crescent. After Walter the company was run by his sons Francis Elliot and Edward.

ward (wawrd) n. former division of a district, e.g. Teviotdale was split into an Easter Ward and Wester Ward, while Selkirkshire was composed of the wards of Tweed, Ettrick and Yarrow, more recently an electoral division within a town or district. In Hawick there were 5 wards established after the Police Act of 1861: North High Street; South High Street; Slight; Teviot; and Wilton. This number grew to 8 wards in more recent times: Teviot North; Teviot South; Burnfoot East; Burnfoot West; Wilton North; Wilton South; Slight; and Weensgate (see also waird).

Warden (war-din) n., arch. an official charged with the enforcement of certain laws, particularly applied to the Wardens of the Marches on both sides of the Border in the 15th and 16th centuries. There were 3 Wardens on each side (West, Middle and East), often a powerful local chief, who held warden-court for the settlement of disputes
the Warden’s Toor

the Warden’s Toor (thu-wawr-dinz-toor) n. name sometimes used for the late 14th century tower built by the Douglases, which formed part of Cavers House.

Ward Law (wawrd-law) n. farm in the Ettrick Yarrow just south of Tushielaw. Also a hill in the Ettrick valley lying north of Ettrickhill, reaching 594 m, and another in the Yarrow valley north of Dryhope, reaching 421 m. A charter of 1618 records transfer of the lands of ‘Waird-lawrig’ from John Lord Hay of Yester to Robert Scott of Tushielaw. There is also a hill of the same name near Caerlaverock Castle in Dumfries & Galloway, which was the rallying place of the Maxwells (‘Wairdla hill’ is on Blaeu’s 1654 map; the name is related to a ‘ward’ or ‘watch’ hill, and probably has no direct connection with the Barons of Wilton).

Wardlaw (wawrd-law) n. Adam (14th C.) recorded as collector of the contributions from the Sheriffdom of Roxburgh in 1360. Andrew (b.c.1417) probably son of Sir William (although possibly his younger brother), he was the 4th Baron of Wilton and 1st of Torrie. He married Christian, daughter of Sir James de Valonius (or Vallance), through whom he succeeded to the Torrie estates. He was succeeded by his son Sir Henry. George may have been another son.

Henry ‘Henrico de Wardlaw’ (d.1329) granted the western half of the Barony of Wilton (with Gilbert Maxwell being granted the other half) by King Robert the Bruce, about 1306, presumably as a reward for services to Scotland’s liberator. However, it may be that he could not take possession of the lands until after Bannockburn and other events ended English control of Teviotdale. There appears to be a confirming charter in about 1321 (in ‘Robertson’s Index’), stating that the lands had previously belonged to William de Charteris and Walter de Pertchay. The ‘reddendo’ for this grant was the fifth part of the service of one soldier, along with 3 suits yearly at the King’s Court in Roxburgh. The family later gained land in Fife, and were known as ‘Wardlaw of Torrie’, probably being the descendants of all the Wardlaws in Scotland, including the later Henry who was Bishop of St. Andrews. He was the first of the Wardlaws of Wilton, a family connection that lasted for over a century. He married a Stewart (possibly Mary, daughter of Sir James Stewart of Durrusdeer) and their children may have included Ellen, Henry (who succeeded), Walter (who became Cardinal of Scotland), William, Gilbert, Christian and at least one other daughter. Henry 2nd of Wilton (c.1318-c.98) son of Henry and brother of Bishop Walter. He married a daughter of Halket of Pitfirrane. He is mentioned in a record of around 1365. It may be that he died soon after, since his brother Walter is said to have held lands in Wilton in 1367. His children were Sir William, Alexander, Walter, Henry (Bishop of St. Andrews) and a daughter (who married Sir John Carmichael). These generations are confused, since it is also said in some accounts that Andrew was his son. Henry (d.c.1440) son of Sir Andrew (although some accounts suggest he was the youngest son of Henry of Wilton) and nephew of of Walter, Bishop of Glasgow. He is also sometimes confused with the later son of Sir Andrew. He was educated at Oxford and Paris, returned to Scotland in 1385 and received many benefices. Included among these was Cavers in 1389. He was Precentor of Glasgow from about 1388 until 1403 and was then Archdeacon of Glasgow; John de Hawick succeeded him as Precentor. He still held Cavers in 1389 when he was given the Canony of Aberdeen and Prebend of ‘Balhelvi’. He became Bishop of St. Andrews 1403-40 and founded the university there. He was also tutor to the young James I, helped arrange his release from English captivity, crowned him at Scone in 1424 and then acted as one of his most trusted advisors. In 1433/4 he witnessed an ecclesiastic gift by Archibald, Earl of Douglas. He was buried at St. Andrews Cathedral, which he had helped restore. He is also credited with founding St. Andrews University in 1411. Sir Henry (15th C.) son of Andrew. He was 5th of Wilton and 2nd of Torrie. An indenture of 1435 records him inheriting all the lands and rights from his mother Christian of Valance in return for some other lands in Fife for her and her second husband, John of Cockburn. In 1448, as Laird of the half Barony of Wilton he granted lands of Harden to Philip Turnbull. He witnessed a charter in Edinburgh in 1452. In 1454 he was Baron when the Irelands-lands were granted to David Scott. He may be the Henry who had a sasine for Hownam in 1458. He married Christian Lander.
Wardle

(or perhaps Lauder) and was succeeded by his son Henry. His daughter Isobel married Sir Laurence Mercer of Aldie (as recorded in a charters of 1497 and 1511) and then Patrick Mercer of Inchbrakie. Other children included Walter, Sir Robert and Sir John. Henry (15th C.) son of Sir Henry, he was 6th of Wilton and 3rd of Torrie. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Oliphant of Aberdalgie. In 1468 she had the lands of Harden resigned to her, with Robert of Wardlaw as a witness (so possibly a son). In a 1468 document for Sir Alexander Home of that Ilk it is recorded that Andrew Ker of Cessford and his son Walter acted as procurators for him. Also in 1468 he witnessed a charter for lands in Kincardine. He is probably the Henry ‘of Torry’ who received money from the Kers of Cessford for lands in Hownam in 1468. His children were Sir Henry and Isabella (who married George Durie of that Ilk of Balcurrogal).

Sir Henry (d.c.1513) son of Henry. He was the last Wardlaw of Wilton, being usually designated as the 7th Baron of Wilton and also of Torie. In 1477 he had a charter for lands in Fife. In 1479 he had a sasine for Wilton. He is recorded in 1482 transferring lands at ‘Undercheresteris’ (in the Barony of Wilton) to Robert Scott of Muirhouse. Also in 1482 he was Baron when he gave a charter for Harden to John Turnbull. In 1483 he appears to have transferred all the lands of Wilton (including advocation of the parish church) to John Scott of Thirlestane, thus ending his family’s direct connection with the area. He was knighted in 1506. In 1511 and 1512 he had charters for lands in Fife, witnessed by his son Robert. He married Margaret, daughter of Sir John Lindsay, 1st Lord of the Byres. Their children were William, Robert of Torrie and Balmule, Andrew, James, Nicholas, Herbert, Isobel, John (8th Laird of Torrie) and Helen (who married Sir John Makgill, Provost of Edinburgh). Given the year of his death, he may have died at Flodden. James (18th C.) farmer in Riccarton, recorded in 1748. Simon (15th C.) recorded as Rector of Wilton when he was witness to a charter in 1432, along with Henry Wardlaw of Sprot and Sir William Wardlaw, Chaplain. He was probably a younger son of the Baron of Wilton. Probably the same ‘Symon de Wardlaw’, presbyter of Glasgow Diocese, was the notary for the instrument of sasine in 1464 whereby Archibald Douglas took possession of the Barony of Cavers.

Walter (c.1317–1387) son of Henry, he is recorded as holding part of the Barony of Wilton in 1367, and was the 2nd (or possibly 3rd, the confusion probably being because both his father and elder brother were Henrys) Wardlaw of Wilton. However, it may be that he simply held part of the lands, or held them while his brother’s son was in his minority. He attended Paris University and had a doctorate of theology by 1358. In 1361 he had passage for going to London and York. By 1359 he became Archdeacon of Lothian within the Diocese of St. Andrews and was elevated to Bishop of Glasgow in 1367, on the death of William Rae. He was also Secretary to the King and auditor in at least 1364–66 and was part of an envoy to England in that period. He received many benefices, partly due to the support of William Landels, Bishop of St. Andrews, whose family also had a Roxburghshire connection. He was also appointed Royal Secretary to David II in the 1360s. However, he had a less close connection with Robert II, and spent many years away from Scotland during his reign. In fact in 1374 he was rumoured to be dead and his assets in Scotland were seized. In 1383 he was appointed as the first ever Cardinal from Scotland. He helped negotiate the Anglo-Scottish truce at Berwick in 1380 and the Franco-Scottish alliance at Vincennes in 1383. His nephew Henry was Rector of Cavers and Bishop of St. Andrews. Sir William (d.c.1417) probably son of Henry, he was the 3rd Baron of Wilton (although these early generations are confused). A charter of Robert III (probably around 1405) granted him the lands of ‘Uchterseatmylne, Sametoun, Todshaw’ in the Barony of Wilton. He married Margaret Wardlaw and their children included Andrew and probably Henry, although other accounts suggest he died childless, with Andrew and Henry being his brothers (formerly written ‘Vardlaw’ and variants).

Wardle (war-dul) n. Joseph (b.c.1790) from England, he was a framesmith in Hawick, being listed on Back Damgate in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he was at about 15 Backdamgate with his wife Mary and daughter Charlotte.

Ware (wär) n. Rev. Douglas Powell (b.1854) born in Ashton, Devon, son of Rev. John Middleton, Rector of Ullingsworth. Educated at St. John’s College, Cambridge, he became an curate of St. Mary’s Episcopal Cathedral in Glasgow. He was then moved to Hawick as minister of St. Cuthbert’s Church 1882–92. His incumbency saw the properties of the Church being given to the congregation by the Duke of Buccleuch and St. Cuthbert’s being transferred from the Diocese of Glasgow and Galloway to the Diocese of Edinburgh. He was also Honorary President of St. Cuthbert’s (rugby) Football Club. In 1892 he exchanged with J.W.T. Hart, minister of St. Paul’s, Swindon. He married Mary Jane Octavia Sankey in 1879. He wrote ‘Confirmation in the Bible’ and ‘Six Questions and Answers for Good Friday’. The church contains a brass plaque commemorating him.

Wark Castle (wawrk-kaw-sul) n. ruined motte-and-bailey castle facing across the Tweed into Scotland near Coldstream, originally built in the early 12th century. It was taken 7 times by the Scots, and said to be the site of an incident that led to the forming of the Order of the Garter in 1348. There is another Wark Castle near Hexham, with a mote-hill, which was the seat of the Tynedale Lordship and where local justice was meted out.

the Watchknowe (thu-wawch-now) n. hill above the south-west of Hawick, being the highest point at Crumhaugh Hill, to the right of the road. It was used as a lookout station and for setting warning bonfires in former more warring times. In the early years of the 19th century it was attended by Serg. Stewart of the regular army, who lived with his wife in a flat-roofed house there, with the barrel of tar waiting on top. The last time it was used in earnest was during the ‘False Alarm’ of 1804 – ‘See! the Watchknowe beacon blazing, Tower and town and water rasing’ [RSC]. Essentially the same place had a bonfire lit there for the False Alarm centenary and bi-centenary. The name is also used for the hill adjacent to Hummelknowes farm and another next to Borthwickshiel farm. It is also a hill near Bedrule, 957 ft high, which is the site of a Bronze Age burial cairn (sometimes written as two words).

Waters (waw'-urz, wi'-urz) n. Alexander (b.c.1795) gardener at Lawrie’s Den in 1841. His wife was Jane and they had a son, John. He is probably the same Alexander who was one of the first deacons at St. George’s Kirk, from 1844.

Rev. David (1813–89) a native of Hawick who only got 1/4 year’s schooling, becoming a spinner at Lunwood Mill and later a Minister elsewhere. In 1841 he was living at Nixon’s Mill, with his wife Ann and children Margaret, Janet and William. He was active in the temperance movement and wrote some poetry, much of which he later disapproved of. This included the publication of ‘The Twa Frien’s: or, The Ghost o’ Coffer-Ha’’, published in 1838 (in a booklet, along with 2 other poems). This was about the story, popular in Hawick at the time, that Franky Ballantyne had swindled his boss ‘Auld Cash’ (William Oliver), whose ghost haunted him afterwards. He died in Shipley, near Bradford – ‘Yonder’s David wi’ his een gentlin’ like brass tacket in his heid’ [RMi].

Charles (1816/7–c.1860) from Musselburgh, he was a local historian, who had a painter’s business in the back of 10 High Street in the mid-19th century. He is listed on the High Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. Some of his paintings of local characters, e.g. Rachel Anderson, are in the Museum. In 1844 he married Margaret Tod, who was from Prestonpans. Their children were: Isabella Hutton (b.1844); Jane (b.1846); Margaret (b.1848), who died young; Rachel Tod (b.1850); Charles, also died young (b.1852); Mary (b.1854); another Charles, commission agent; John William (b.1856), grocer of Edinburgh; and Nancy Tod (b.1860). David McBurnie (1838–1902) commission agent in Hawick. He was son of Robert and Isabella, and brought up at the Commercial Inn on Buccleuch Street. He worked for William Laidlaw & Sons for about 30 years, latterly as cashier. In the early 1880s he set himself up as a commission agent. In 1861 he was a woollen manufacturer’s clerk, living at 6 Bridge Street. He was a lifelong promoter of Hawick Public Library, for which he served as Secretary to the Committee, and collected antiquarian books for the reference room. He was also a member of the Library Association of the United Kingdom and of the Scottish History Society. He was a founder member of the Hawick Parliamentary Debating Society and active in local Liberal politics. Joining the Archaeological Society in 1857, he served as Secretary and Treasurer, as well as President 1874–75. He was a frequent contributor to the Transactions in the late 19th century, specialising in well-researched articles on early Hawick history. Of particular value are the articles he wrote about extracts from the Burgh Records of Hawick, which he had trawled through personally. He also acted as Secretary for the Science and Technical School. He married Margaret Kennedy (who was related to Bailie James Kennedy), and she died in 1892. Their children were John (said to be a clever student, who died at Glenmoral, Queensland, aged 29), Robert (bank teller in Hawick, who died aged 31) and Mary (2nd wife of Alexander Steven, newspaper proprietor in Berwick), as well as another Robert who died in infancy. He secondly married Marjorie, daughter of mason Adam Laidlaw; she was the first librarian of Hawick Public Library. He lived at Hillside Cottage and is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. A portrait of him was painted by Frank Watson Wood. George (b.c.1785) skinner on Buccleuch Street. His wife was Anne, and their children included Thomas, Andrew, Launcelot, William, Christopher and Isabella. ‘Watson & Sons’ was recorded as a tanners and skinners on Buccleuch Street in 1837, and was the family firm. George Bruce Scoular (1843–1923) born in Methven, son of George Bruce, minister there and Jane Scoular. He had brothers who were ministers at Lauderdale, in South Melford, Yorkshire, and at Maidstone Prison, Kent. He was educated in Edinburgh and licensed by the Presbytery there in 1874. He was ordained as minister at Logie (Dundee) that year, but translated to Cavers in 1876. He married Elizabeth Whitson Fleming and their children were: Dorothea Margaret Fleming, who married Robert Calvert Sibbald; and Mabel Jane, who married John James Scott Morrison, minister of John Knox in Aberdeen. He remained minister until his death at the very end of 1923.

George Marr (1876–1950) native of Jedburgh, son of Peter and Elizabeth Marr. He had an early interest in local history, being appointed Curator of Jedburgh Museum in 1901. He then became a lexicographer on the staff of the Oxford English Dictionary. He worked there 1907–1927 under the main editor of the time, William Craigie, having special responsibility for the letter ‘U’. He served with the Devonshire Regiment from early 1917 (when married conscription came in) and is said to have edited dictionary proofs at the front, and even for a while in a captured German dugout. He wrote the extraordinarily comprehensive ‘ Roxburghshire Word-Book’ (1923), research for which included reading virtually all sources of dialect literature available at the time, and corresponding with a veritable army of helpers over many years. He also contributed extensively to the Archaeological Society Transactions throughout the first half of the 20th century, having joined the Society in 1900. Additionally he helped with the... proofs for James Sinton’s Hawick-related bibliography in 1908. He moved to Chicago in 1927 to join Craigie to work on the ‘Dictionary of American English’. He received an honorary M.A. from Oxford University. He returned to Oxford in 1937, but remained on the staff of the University of Chicago (teaching a proof-reading course by correspondence) until 1946. His last contribution to the Archeological Society Transactions appeared only a few months before he died. Rev. George (1925–98) a native of Dundee, he served with the Reconnaissance Corps during WWII and afterwards in the Black Watch. He then obtained his M.A. from St. Andrews University in 1950 and B.D. in 1953. He was licensed by Dundee Presbytery in 1953 and immediately became minister of Brechin Maison Dieu Church. He moved to Wiltion Church in 1960, soon becoming an adopted Teri. He earned his Mosstroopers badge in 1963 and was Chief Guest at the 1979 Common Riding. He was active in the Masons, becoming Senior Grand Chaplain to the Grand Lodge of Scotland as well as Provincial Grand Chaplain for Roxburgh, Peebles and Selkirk. In addition he was Chaplain to Wiltion School, Industrial Chaplain to Turner & Rutherfords and Honorary Chaplain to the Callants’ Club. He also had responsibility for Teviothead Kirk 1989–91. He acted as Clerk to Hawick Presbytery 1965–72 and to Jedburgh Presbytery 1972–85. He was also involved with the Weens House Committee and the R.S.S.P.C.C., becoming Chairman of the local committee. An accomplished cross-country runner as a youth, he later became a keen hill walker. He retired in 1991, having been minister for 31 years, and moved to the Dean with his wife Betty. Isabella nee McBurnie (b.1815/6) from Kirkaptrick in Kirkcudbrightshire, she married Robert. Her husband was innkeeper of the Commercial Inn on Buccleuch Street, and their children were David McBurnie (of the Archeological Society) and Mary. By 1851 she was a widow, listed as the innkeeper herself. Her uncle David McBurnie, a retired innkeeper from Holywood, Dumfrieshire, was also living with her. James (d.1418) cleric of Glasgow Diocese. He was Archdeacon of Teviotdale from 1408 until his death. He witnessed a charter of James Clerk of Dalkeith in the 1410s. In 1414 the name of the Archdeacon is given in Latin as ‘Jaciobi Walteri’ and in 1415 as ‘Walteri Jacobi’, and so there appears to be some confusion about his name. James (18th C.) recorded at Threiphead in 1773 when his daughter Nelly was baptised in Roberton Parish. He may be the James who married Mary Thomson in 1770 and whose other children included Betty (b.1771). Dr. James (18th/19th C.). He purchased the farm of Muirfield (formerly part of Hassendean Common) in 1789 from the trustees of Thomas Turnbull. His son was Thomas. He was probably the Kelso doctor who paid taxes for having servants and horses in at least the period 1789–94. James (1810–61) younger son of manufacturer William. He became a draper in Tyneside. He lived at North Shields, Tynemouth and Newcastle. In 1835 (in the Friends’ Meeting House in North Shields) he married Mary, daughter of Robert Spence, and she died in 1871. Their children were William Lindsay, Margaret, Robert Foster, Emma, Edith, Alice, Anna, James, Ernest and Emma Lindsay. James (1836–98) son of weaver Andrew, he was born in Jedburgh. He worked as a soda factory manager, grocer and newspaper reporter. However, he became known as the pre-eminent Jedburgh historian, writing ‘Jedburgh Abbey: Historical and Descriptive’ (1877) and ‘Living Bards of the Border’ (1859). James (19th C.) letter carrier in Rulewater, recorded in the early 1860s. He operated between Hawick and Hobkirk Parish. Due to some irregularity with the deliveries both he and Miss Renwick (the postmistress at Bonchester) were relieved of their positions. This was probably in the late 1860s. Rev. James minister of Lilliesleaf Kirk, linked with Bowden, 1888–94. Jessie (b.1802/3) from Selkirk, she was a grocer on the Howeigate, listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 she is listed as a ‘Provision dealer’ at about 14 Howeigate. She was unmarried and living with her sister Elizabeth. Jessie (19th/20th C.) sister of Provost Robert Fraser, she bussed the Flag at the 1887 Colour Bussing ceremony, the first to be held in the Town Hall. Rev. John (16th/17th C.) son of Peter, minister of Fisk, and Christian Stanehouse. He is recorded as Reader at Kirkton in 1588 and as Dean at Cavers in the 1580s. He may have been the same John connected with Kirkmichael 1579–86 or with Melrose in 1569. He demitted the vicarage of Cavers in 1601 (in favour of the Parson there, William Clerk), when he is described as ‘portioner of Melrose’. He may thus have been Cavers minister from the early 1580s until about 1599, but held on to some of the ‘living’ of the parish for another couple of years. It is possible he was the ‘Dene Jhone Watsone’ recorded along with Walter Chisholme of that Ilk deputes of Sir
Watson

Walter Scott of Buccleuch in the Regality of Melrose. Note that the minister of Melrose was one of the witnesses to the 1568/9 bond between the Scotts and Kers, signed in Melrose. John (16th C.) recorded in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branzholme as being the collector of the crops and other rents for the farms around Hawick. He also held money for a land deal between John Scott of Drinkstone and Robert Scott of Over Hassendean. Additionally he was left ‘fortie bollis beir’ in the will and was one of the witnesses to the will. He could be an ancestor of the Clerk to the Regality of Hawick recorded more than a century later. John (d.1720) writer who was Clerk to the Regality of Hawick. He was recorded as Clerk to the Bailie of Regality in 1710 and was made a Burgess of Hawick in 1713. In 1716 he was rebuked by the Hawick Session for being at a late night drinking session that turned into a brawl. He married Anna Laing in Hawick in 1709; she was born in Hawick in 1688, daughter of William Laing and Jane Thorbrand. They had 6 daughters, including Agnes (b.1717) and Christian (b.1718). In 1724 his widow married John Scott in an ‘irregular marriage’. John (18th C.) resident at Craik in 1743 when his daughter Isabel was baptised in Roberton Parish in 1743. His other children were probably Thomas (b.1737), William (b.1739), Helen (b.1741) and James (b.1747). He could be the John of ‘Casteledan’ Parish who married Jean Bennet in Ancrum Parish in 1735. John (18th C.) recorded at Mabonlaw in 1773 when his son John was baptised in Roberton Parish. John (18th C.) groom at Weens in 1778, when he was working for William Oliver of Dinlabyre. By 1785–92 he was listed as ‘Stable Servant’ or ‘Groom’ at Weens. He was probably related to Walter, who was a house servant for Oliver of Dinlabyre. He was overseer at Dinlabyre when listed as male head of household in 1835. He is probably the John who died at Dinlabyre in 1837, aged 80, and is buried in Castleton along with his daughter Mary (d.1809). John (b.c.1810) carter in Newcastle upon Tyne in 1841. He worked on Bowes Estate, at Barnard Castle and at Streatham Castle. He died at Newcastle.

Lancelot (19th C.) native of Hawick who moved to Waco, Texas, and painted an 1889 portrait of Henry Scott Riddell that hangs in the Museum. He was a guest at the 1887 Colour Bussing. He may have been the ‘Launcelot’ who was born in 1825/6, son of skinner George. Margaret ‘Meg the Manty’ or ‘Meg the Mantua’ (1808/9–66) 19th century character who came to Hawick from Minto Parish with her mother, and referred to herself as ‘Miss Walker’ (although this may be an error for ‘Watson’). In the 1841 census she was living with her mother Eleanor, a ‘mantua-maker’ in Minto village. She was a tenant at 70 High Street (and also 5 Melgund Place) and was eccentric but harmless, her great weakness being for extravagant dress, particularly hats. She affected the manners of the upper classes and was regularly taunted by the youth of Hawick. She became the most expensive pauper for Hawick Parish, because of the extended legal wrangling with Minto. She met with an accident in the Spring of 1866 and died 2 months later – ‘Braw news has come to the toon, Braw news has carried; Braw news has come to the toon, Meg the Manty’s married’ [T] (the name derived from ‘manty’ meaning a mantle or woman’s gown). Ninian (16th/17th C.) listed in 1605 among men of Eskdale, Ewesdale, etc., declared fugitives at a court in Peebles. He was said to be ‘sometime in Tynnesburne, now in Quhitliesyde’. R. (d.bef. 1707) landowner in Abbotrule Parish. In the 1707 county valuation, ‘Grange’s lands’ were held by ‘Airs of R. Watson’ and valued at £396. He presumably purchased part of the former estate of Kerr of Abbotrule, or perhaps was related to the daughters of George Scott, who inherited Grange and other lands in 1670. It is unclear how he might have been related to other Watsons. Robert (b.c.1795) innkeeper on Buccleuch Street according to the 1841 census. This was the Commercial Inn at about No. 13. He married Isabella McBurnie, and she carried on as innkeeper after his death. His children were: David McBurnie (b.1838), who became a local historian; and Mary (b.1841). Robert (b.1803) eldest son of manufacturer William Watson. He attended Ackworth School in Yorkshire. He moved to North America about 1834, settling near Guelph. Robert (b.1818/9) from Chirnside, he was stationmaster at Hassendean Station in the 1860s. His wife was Margaret and their children included James, George P. and Robert. Robert Fraser (1839–1904) born at Wilton Bank, he was son of William Lindsay and brother of Thomas. He became senior partner of William Watson & Sons, Dancerfield Mills, tweed manufacturers. He was a councillor for Wilton Ward for 18 years from 1869 and Provost for 3 full terms, 1878–87. A Liberal in politics, he was President of the Hawick Liberal Association. There were many town improvements under his Provostship, including the Dodburn water scheme, the new Town Hall, widening of North Bridge Street, Duke Street built, and Pilnmuir divided into two farms. He was the first to have the Provost’s Lamp outside his house from 1882. He was an ardent advocate for the Liddesdale railway line, a follower of the Buccleuch hounds, an ensign in the Hawick Volunteer Corps, and the first Captain of Hawick Golf Club in 1878. He was a strong Common Riding supporter, inducing members of the Council to patronise the Common Riding again after a period of much debate over Council involvement. This was effectively the start of the period of revitalization of the Common Riding. He inaugurated the Provost’s breakfast in 1885 (at Wilton Bank), and led the Councillors in the Procession to the Mair, as well as organising the first Colour Bussing in the Council Chambers in 1887, with the Provost Presiding. He was also President of the Archaeological Society, Governor of Hawick Savings Bank, a director of Hawick Gas Company and involved with the Library, Cottage Hospital, Buccleuch Memorial Science and Art Institute and Sacred Harmonic Society. In 1887 he represented Hawick a function in London to celebrate Queen Victoria’s Jubilee and can be seen in his court dress in a photograph from that time. In 1892 he stood as Liberal candidate for the Hawick Burghs, being defeated by Thomas Shaw. In later life he lived at Brieryards and Hassendeanburn, and never married. He purchased the writing desk that Napoleon had used on St. Helena (from the estate of the former island Governor Gen. Walker of Bowland, near Galashiels). He is buried in Wellowgate Cemetery and his portrait hangs in the Town Hall (painted by Knighton Warren in 1888). He can also be seen riding near the head of the Procession in 1899, the first year the Common Riding is recorded on film. Robert (1868/9–1900) elder son of D. McBurnie. He worked as a bank teller with the National Bank of Scotland in Hawick. He died of consumption, like his younger brother John the year before. Robert Hamilton Lindsay (1886–1956) son of Thomas, from whom he took over the family manufacturing firm. He was educated at Cambridge University, which he represented in the sports of hammer and billiards. He played rugby for Hawick and was capped by Scotland in 1909. He also represented Britain in the hammer throw in the 1908 Olympics, finishing 10th overall. He was clearly an all-round sportsman. He was a Lieutenant in WWI, losing 2 fingers at the Battle of Loos, and never playing rugby again. He took over the family firm of William Watson & Sons after the death of his father in 1925, and oversaw its gradual decline during the depression of the 1930s. His name is sometimes given as ‘Lindsay-Watson’. Thomas (18th C.) farmer at Teindside. He sold Teindside to Henry, Duke of Buccleuch, about 1755. He may have been the same man as the Hawick lawyer. Thomas (18th C.) writer (i.e. lawyer) at Burnfoot in Wilton Parish. He was recorded as Clerk to the Regality of Hawick in 1721. He was appointed one of the Commissioners overseeing the construction of the Teviot Bridge in Hawick. He was recorded as a writer in Hawick in 1735. He was one of 4 men who proposed building a still-house and brewery (probably in Hawick) in 1737, possibly becoming the original ‘Whusky Hooses’ on Slitrig Crescent. He witnessed a baptism (for weaver George Swan) in 1737 and another (for Robert Oliver, shoemaker) in 1738. In 1744 he leased from the Buccleuch Estates the lands of ‘Reidmoss’ and others in Castleton, plus Gerwald and others in Eskdailemuir Parish. He is mentioned in an Edinburgh marriage record of 1750 when his daughter Marion (possibly born in Hawick in 1726) married Thomas Weir, Commissary of Lanark. He is described as ‘clerk to the regality of Hawick’ (i.e. the Baron’s agent in the Town) when his son Robert became a merchant’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1742 and still has the same title in 1757 when John Horsburgh of that Ilk tried to recover a debt from him. He notarised a sasine relating to lands in Hobkirk Parish in 1757. In 1720 he married Euphiam (or ‘Euphan’), daughter of William Scott of Burnhead, and sister of Robert of Burnhead. This was an ‘irregular marriage’ at Kirk Arthur, with a licence being given by the Bishop of Carlisle, which suggests that he was a supporter of the Episcopal church. Their children included: Agnes (b.1721); William (b.1724), who became heir of Burnhead when his cousin Margaret (wife of Rev. Dr. Charters) died without any children; John (b.1730); and Thomas (b.1732). Thomas (18th/19th C.) son of Dr. James. In 1804 there was a ‘retour’ determining him as the legitimate son of James. He inherited the farm of Muirfield in the same year, and also purchased parts of the old Common that had been allocated to William Scott of Burnhead. He appears to have sold these to Lord Minto in 1808, but perhaps bought them back, since he still held the lands in 1814. Thomas (1807–42) 3rd son of William and brother of William Lindsay. In the electoral roll of 1834 he is listed along with his brother as joint proprietor of the Hawick spinning mill left to them by their father. He lived on Slitrig Crescent according to the 1841 census. He married Mary Renny and their children included: William Renny (b.1837); and Mary, who married Spencer Shelley. Thomas Lindsay (d.1925) son of William Lindsay and brother of Robert Fraser. He lived at Brieryyards and was prominent in local Liberal and Unionist politics. He also had a town-house at Leaburn. In about 1874 he and his mother were listed each as half owners of John Hardie’s former lands in Weensland. He played for Hawick R.F.C. in the 1890s, scoring the winning try in 1896 which won Hawick its first Scottish Championship. He was also Captain of the Golf Club at one time, and an early player of tennis. He was also a contributor to the Common Riding in the 1880s. He was long connected with St. Cuthbert’s Kirk, being a Churchwarden and Lay Elector there, and unveiling the War Memorial plaque in 1921. The firm was taken over by his son Robert Hamilton Lindsay. Walter (17th C.) resident of Ashkirk Parish in 1694 when he was listed among the ‘Cottars’ on the Hearth Tax roll there. Walter (18th C.) tenant in Harwood on Teviot. He married Betty Birnie in 1755 and their children included: Margaret (b.1756); an unnamed child (b.1758); Elizabeth (b.1760); and Walter (b.1760). Walter (18th C.) house servant at Weens in 1785–88, when he was working for William Oliver of Dinklayre. Walter (18th C.) resident of ‘Dickshall’ in Kirkton Parish. His daughter Jean was baptised in 1788. William (15th C.) recorded as late Vicar of Ashkirk in the Protocol Book of Glasgow Diocese in 1508. It appears that David Scott filled the vacancy, at least temporarily. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Malie Bennet and their children included John (b.1654). William (17th C.) resident at Shaws in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. William of Burnhead (d.1818) son of Thomas and Eupham Scott of Burnhead. He succeeded to Burnhead after the death of his cousin Margaret Scott (daughter of Robert Scott of Burnhead) in 1815. He married Rebecca Peters in Naussau, Island of New Providence (modern Bahamas) in 1785. They had 1 son and 2 daughters. He died only 3 years after he succeeded to Burnhead and was succeeded by his son William. William (1773–1843) hosiery manufacturer, originally from Dalkeith, he was son of Robert and Agnes Brown and grandfather of Provost Robert Fraser. He was a dyer in Dalkeith, moving to Glasgow in the 1790s, where he became a retail draper. He became a customer of William Wilson, hosier in Hawick. On account of asthma, Wilson found it hard to travel and so was looking for a partner. He married Margaret Brown and the couple became Quakers, settling in Hawick in 1804. In that year he started his partnership with William Wilson, forming Wilson & Watson and building Dangerfield Mills. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. He probably had the villa Wilton Bank (also called ‘Old Wilton Bank’, or No. 2 Wilton Bank) built for him on the modern Princes Street; he was living there in 1841 with his wife and 2 servants. The partnership at Dangerfield effectively began the factory system in Hawick. The firm was split in 1819 with Dangerfield Mills remaining with William Watson & Sons, which then became known as Watson’s. As well as manufacturing hosiery, his firm also spun yarn and made blankets. He was a Liberal in politics. In 1818 he wrote to the British and Foreign School Society regarding Tom Jenkins and his suitability for a missionary post. His wife Margaret died at Deanfield, Perthshire in 1850, aged 76. His children included: Robert (b.1803), who emigrated to America; William Lindsay (b.1805), who took over the hosiery firm; Thomas (b.1807); James (1810–61), who married Mary Spence and became a draper in North Shields; Agnes (b.1812), who died in infancy; George (b.1814), the youngest son, who died in Canada in 1846; and Margaret (b.1816). A portrait of him exists. He is buried in Wilton Old Churchyard. William of Burnhead (1787–1870) son of William and Rebecca Peters. He became a member of the Jedforest Club in 1840. In 1841 he is recorded as an ‘Independent Gentleman’ at ‘Burngrove’ (i.e. Bucklands). He served as a Commissioner of Supply, Justice of the Peace and member of the Police Board for Roxburghshire. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1863. He held parts of Wester Clarilaw and Pinnacle, as well as Appletreehall Townfoot, Crawhill and Lees. In 1818 he married Bridget, daughter of William Abraham Bowles of Bath. They had 3 sons and 1 daughter, Margaret, who married John Stavert of Hoscote. He was succeeded by his eldest son, William Scott. William Lindsay (1805–49) 2nd son of William and father of Provost Robert Fraser. He married Janet (or Jessie) Fraser, sister of Provost Fraser, and worked in the family hosiery and tweed firm. He is listed on the 1834 electoral roll, along with his brother Thomas, as joint proprietor of the spinning mill left to them by their father. In 1841 he was at about 16 High Street. His children included William, Robert Fraser, Rebecca and Thomas Lindsay. He lived on the High Street, possibly No. 16. He did not live for many years after his father’s death in 1843; the firm was managed by John Paterson until his sons Robert Fraser and Thomas Lindsay took over in 1864. He died at Wiltonbank and was buried in Wilton Old Cemetery. His wife was listed in about 1874 living at Wilton Bank and owning half of John Hardie’s former lands in Weensland (the other half being owned by his son Thomas Lindsay).

Dr. William Scott of Burnhead (1819–85) eldest son of William and Bridget Bowles. He was educated under Dr. Arnold at Rugby and then studied medicine at Edinburgh University. He became a member of the Royal College of Surgeons in 1842, practised in Brighton, but gave up when he married in 1851. He then lived in Edinburgh and Melrose until 1860 when his father gave him Bucklands House, where he is recorded in 1868. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1873 and was also a member of the Ettrick Forest Club. He became a Lieutenant in the Upper Teviotdale Riffe Corps (Volunteers) when it formed in 1860. He later became Captain-Commandant of the 2nd Company. He also served as Justice of the Peace, member of the first School Board, Commissioner of Supply and Tax Commissioner for Roxburghshire. He was listed as owner of Burnhead, part of Wester Clarilaw and Pinnacle, Appletreethall Townfoot, Crawhill, Lees and Hummelknowes in about 1874. In 1851 he married Louisa Sarah, daughter of Thomas Dennis of Pilton. They had a large family: William Scott (1855–1929), who succeeded; Thomas John (1859–60); Charles Abraham (1861–1902), who died in Australia; Bridget Sarah (1852–85); Anna Louisa Elizabeth (1853–74), who died in a riding accident; Louisa Margaret (1856–88); Susan Harriet (1858–75); and Frances Emmeline (1863–1905), who married Ernest Leonard Mahon. Sir William Renny (1838–1900) born on Slitrig Crescent in Hawick, son of Thomas and Mary Renny. He became an engineer and bank director, being partner in Watson & Tait, later Mirrlees, Watson & Yaryan Co., who manufactured cane sugar machinery in Glasgow. He was Chairman of the Glasgow and South Western Railway Company. He was a Director of the National Bank of Scotland, served for a few years as Councillor in Glasgow and was a member of the Clyde Trust. Having a keen interest in the arts and sciences, he was President of a local branch of the Royal Geographical Society. In later life he devoted efforts to charitable work, for example serving as Director of the Glasgow Workmen’s Dwellings Company and Chairman of Governors of the Victoria Infirmary. He lived at Braco Castle in Perthshire and was knighted in 1892. He gifted a large cup to Hawick Golf Club. In 1866 he married Mary Ann Caird (d.1925). William Scott of Burnhead, J.P. (1855–1929) son of William Scott and Louisa Sarah Dennis. Educated at Cambridge, he was Captain in the 1st Essex Regiment. He sold Bucklands House in 1887. He was a speaker at the Common Riding in 1889. He joined the Jedforest Club in 1898. In 1892 he married Mabel Agnes, 4th daughter of Lieut.-Col. Thomas Mahon. Their son William was born in 1893 and appeared to have ‘Scott Watson’ as a surname (also formerly ‘Watsone’ and ‘Watsoun’).

Watsonians (wats-oon-ee-inz) n. rugby football club, established in 1875 for ex-pupils of George Watson’s College in Edinburgh. The club lost the first Scottish Cup final in 1996 with a score of 15 to Hawick’s 17.

Watson’s (wat-ainz) n. Messrs. William Watson & Sons, hosiery and tweed manufacturers. Founded in 1819, after William Wilson and William Watson split their partnership, it occupied the large mill at Dangerfield. The name was usually applied to the main Dangerfield mill, or collectively to the group of buildings there. It is labelled ‘Spinning Mill, Mr. Watson’ on Wood’s 1824 map. It was an apparent error in reading an invoice from this firm that led to the word ‘tweed’ being coined in about 1832 (although other accounts connect it with Wilson’s). The company is listed as both a woollen and hosiery manufacturer in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In Slater’s 1852 directory it was listed at Dangerfield Mills and Selkirk. From about 1863 the hosiery part of the business was carried on by George Hogg. The tweed business was carried on by the sons and then grandsons of William Watson. In 1871 the firm was employing 250 people, manufacturing
Watt

Watt (waw') n. Adam, W.S. (d.bef. 1674) recorded in a discharge by his 2nd son Patrick in 1674, when his lands within the Barony of Hawick were sold to the Duke and Duchess of Buccleuch. It is unclear what his Hawick connection was. Allan (19th/20th C.) born in Dundee, he became a journeyman printer. Travelling as far as London and Ireland for work, he spent some time in Hawick, where he met and married Margaret Shill Smith, daughter of James Smith, Cornet in 1846. He became Foreman Printer with the Hawick Advertiser, but in 1880 rented a wooden hut near the station. There he started a newsagent and printers of Station Road. This firm, Allan Watt & Son, lasted for more than a century, being run in turn by Allan junior, and then by a third Allan. The tenement built at the corner of Station Road and Commercial Road in about 1894 was designed by J.P. Alison. He married Margaret (‘Maggie’) Smith in 1875. Their children included Allan S. (b.c.1877) and Helen Sutherland (b.1881). Gilbert (17th C.) Town Clerk from 1638 until about 1658. He had previously been Clerk of Circuit for the Court of the Sheriffs of Roxburgh, Berwick, Selkirk, Peebles and Dumfries and the Stewartries of Kirkcudbright and Annandale (also known as the Commissioners’ Court), which included some cases relevant to the Hawick area. He was Clerk of Circuit for 1622 and 1623, the records from that time being preserved in the Hawick Burgh archives and transcribed in James Wilson’s ‘Annals of Hawick’. It is unclear when he first had an association with Hawick, but he is probably the Gilbert in Hawick who was accused by the Earl of Buccleuch in 1628 of cutting down trees on his lands at Branxholme or Trinitylands. Probably the same Gilbert wrote to the Earl of Buccleuch in 1619, with a summons to Alexander Scott of Northhouse and other matters. He may be the same assistant of advocate Lawrence Scott recorded in a charter of lands in Ashkirk Parish in 1609. He was witness to the signing of the ‘Confessions of Faith and Bond of Union’ (Covenant) in 1638. He was also described as a notary in 1638, along with John Richardson, when the 2 were on the short-list for selection of the Town Clerk. He must have been involved with drafting the 1640 ‘Act of Bailies and Council’, and signed it as ‘Clk.’. He had a ‘protocol book’ which sadly does not survive, but is referred to in the existing extract of Robert Scott of Alton’s sasine of 1615, which was copied from it; it is also referred to in a case brought in 1670 in Melrose against Andrew Tunno (Hawick’s new Town Clerk) who held the book, from which Walter Scott of Goldielands demanded copies of sasines of Goldielands. In 1643 his lands in Hawick were valued at £13 6s 8d. In 1645 he complained to the Bailies that James Scott, lorimer, had called him several names, including being a ‘rannigat beggar fra toune to toune’ (suggesting perhaps that he was not popular with everyone in Hawick because of being Clerk of Circuit). In 1650 someone was fined by the Council for calling him ‘and suckler, and for other injurious words’. James (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit merchant of the Howegate, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. James (b.c.1800) recorded as ‘Messenger at Arms’ on Buccleuch Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory and on the 1841 census. He must have been a Sheriff Officer of some kind. He married Elizabeth Maben. Their children included: George Thomas (b.1828); and Agnes (b.1830).

Watters (waw’-urz) n. Alexander Marshall (19th/20th C.) High School Rector 1919–5. He graduated from Glasgow University in 1903, was a geologist by profession, and served as a Sound Ranging Officer in the 3rd Army in WW1. It is said that his ruddy complexion gave rise to the nickname ‘Le Pêche’ which became ‘the Pesh’. He wrote a history of secondary education in Hawick for the Transactions in 1927. He was a Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh.

Wattie Scott the Cairrier (waw’-ee-sko’-thu-kä-ree-ur) n. usual name given to Walter Scott of the early 19th century.

Wattie’s Hill (waw’-eez-hil) n. former name for lands in Jedforest. It was described in the 1538 and 1539 Exchequer Rolls as 2 steadings valued at 44 shillings. It is distinct from ‘Wattie’s Spinnels’, which is also recorded in the same lists (it is ‘Wawdoshill’ in 1538).

Wattie’s Spinnels (waw’-eez-spi-nulz) n. Wattie’s Spindles, former settlement in South-dean Parish, just west of Lethem. The remains are at the top of a small hill of that name, which is also known locally as Katey’s Croft. They consist of the turf-covered walls of 2 long rectangular buildings and a third to the west. A peel house was at the centre, but has been so robbed of stones that it is hard to make out anything other than its size, about 5 m by 4 m. There are other enclosures, boundary banks and rig lines nearby; the rig extends over at least 12 hectares, going west to the Windy Cleuch. In 1538 and 1539 it was described as 3 steadings and was valued at £3 6 shillings. John Laidlaw was tenant there in 1541, paying 44s yearly. The 1694 Hearth Tax return lists a single occupant with hearth there (Alexander Stenson), but the place is not marked on maps of the 18th century. The 1724 will of Alexander Stevenson, shepherd in ‘Wadiespinnells’ is in the Douglas of Cavers papers (it is ‘Wawdospyndillis’ in 1538, ‘Wawdosynillis’ in 1539, ‘Waldospindillis’ in 1541, ‘Wadiespindles’ in 1684, ‘wadispindels’ in 1694 and ‘Wadespinnells on Blaeu’s c.1654 map).

Wattie Wulson’s (waw’-ee-wul-sin) n. popular name for the factories of Walter Wilson & Co., particularly the one at the corner of Teviot Road and Mill Port, which was latterly used by Glenmac – ‘… We lairned oor bible in the Templar’s Hall Aback o’ Wattie Wulson’s Mill’ [WL].

Watts (wats) n. Reuben pseudonym for Daniel Marriot.

Wat’s Burn (wats-burn) n. small stream in Liddesdale, just to the east of Thorlieshope farm (it is unclear who the ‘Watt’ was, but the fact that this is a ‘Burn’ rather than a ‘Sike’ might suggest the name is relatively modern).

Watt’s Burn (wats-burn) n. small stream in Liddesdale, rising on the western slopes of Arnton Fell and running approximately south-west to join Roughley Burn. It is unclear who the Watt would have been. It is presumably unassociated with the other stream of the same name in the same Parish.

Watt’s Jock (wats-jok) n. nickname for John Scott in Hawick around 1600.

Watt Tinlinn (waw’-tin-lin) n. fictional character in Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Lay of the Last Minstrel’, who brings the first news of the approach of the English to Branxholm. Based on a probably historical figure (see Tinlin) of which fireside tales were told in Scott’s youth – And Wat of Tinlinn, much aghast, Rode back to Branksome fiery fast’ [SWS].

Wat Wat Sail (wa’-wa’-säl) n. nickname for a Hawick character in the 19th century – ‘The Sootie Kittlin’ and Bumma Rae, Jenny Tranklets and auld Cauld Kail, Jamie Sprinkie, Kessy, the Kay, Doctor H’Yiggs and the Wat Wat Sail’ [HI] (origin obscure).
wauch (wauch) adj., arch. insipid, unpalatable – ?? [JAHM].

Wauchope (waw-chup) n. area in Hobkirk Parish by the Wauchope Burn, with a farm and other cottages, and once a major estate. A tower there is mentioned in 1494/5 and was burned by the English in 1545. The site of this tower and foundations of cottages in the adjacent settlement could still be made out in the early 20th century; this was referred to as ‘the old town’ on a map of 1772 (this map, drawn by William Scott, also shows other forgotten features). It was in the wood to the south west of the modern farm. The family who took their names from the lands are first recorded in the late 12th and early 13th centuries, establishing that the original estate was in Roxburghshire. It appears that William ‘de Walhope’ exchanged his lands in Ireland with the lands of Wolfelee and Rouchhope in the early 1300s. Alexander ‘de Walhope’ was confirmed in the lands in 1389. The Tower was originally held by the Wauchopes, followed by the Glendimmings. Later the lands were owned by the Humes of Wedderburn, who sold them to Sir William Cranston shortly after 1605. At that time the tenants were Turnbulls, who held them on feudal tenure from the Douglasses, this going back to at least 1530. David Turnbull was Laird in 1508. The Laird of Wauchope (probably a Turnbull) is recorded as being hurt by an arrow and his horse slain during pursuit of Lord Dacre’s force in Rule Water in late 1513. It was listed in 1538 among lands in Jedforest that had passed to the Crown, but the lands were ‘claimed by the laird thereof’; at that time it was valued at £20. A local tradition says that Mary Queen of Scott’s horse drank at the well by the old tower on her return ride from Hermitage Castle in 1566. David Turnbull of Wauchope is recorded in 1567, Hector Turnbull was recorded there in 1580 and another David Turnbull of Wauchope was slaughtered near his house in the early 17th century. In 1602 Hector Turnbull of Wauchope accused John Elliot of Copshaw of leading a band of about 100 men to steal 80 cows, 100 sheep and 12 horses from Wauchope. In 1653 the 20-pound land there was inherited by James Turnbull, as heir of his uncle Thomas of Wauchope. The superiority of the lands passed from the Cranstons of that Ilk to the Eliotts of Stobs in the 1650s, and are described in 1677 as the ‘twenty pound land of Wauchope with pertinents called Catley and Cattleschaw’. There were Scott tenants there in the latter part of the 17th century, e.g. Walter in 1681. In 1678 the lands are valued at £1433 6s 8d. Walter Scott was there in 1694 when he paid the Hearth Tax for 3 hearths at the main house and 2 for his shepherds. In 1767 it was ‘the Twenty pound land of Wauchope and Longhaugh of the old extent with the Castle, Tower, Fortalice, Miln thereof, Miln-lands …’. In that year Walter Scott (a descendant of the Scotts of Goldielands and Crumhaugh) purchased the estate from James Cranston. The estate was passed to his descendants, down to the Macmillan-Scotts into the 20th century. In 1811 Walter Scott of Wauchope is recorded as owner of Wauchope Common, Wauchope-head, Wauchope-rig, Wauchope House and Wigg; the whole was valued at £1433 6s 8d, with Walter being superior of part of the lands, holding them directly of the Crown. In 1797 the shepherds there were John Wilson, James Scott, Walter Riddell and Alexander Lillico. The mottos of this branch of the Scot family are ‘Miseris Succuro’ and ‘Ardenter Amo’. A new mansion was built in 1875/6 to replace the house visited in by Burns. But even that new Wauchope House is no more, the ruin being purchased by a religious order, pulled down and the stone used to build their Seminary at St. Boswells. There are now self-catering cottages on the former grounds. An old piece of pottery found on the farm is in the Museum. The house was visited by Burns on his Border Tour of 1787, perhaps the closest he came to Hawick. A cairn was built there (by Henry Brown) using some stones from the former house; this is visited annually by the Burns Club and a pipe tune (written by Brian Gillis) called ‘Wauchope Cairn’ is played – ‘All Rule Water, east and west, Bowed to the spell of Turnbull’s name, And among the proud of the Border’s best There was none so proud as the Wauchope dame’ [WHO] (also spelled ‘Waughope’, spelling variations exist in earlier documents, including ‘Walchop’, ‘Walchope’, ‘Walyhope’, ‘Walkhope’, ‘Wauchope’, ‘Wauchip’, ‘Wauchope’, ‘Walghope’, ‘Waughope’, ‘Wauchope’ and ‘Wauchope’; the origin may be a family name, although there is a suggestion that if it is very old it may be ‘valley of the strangers’, since the Anglians referred to the native Celts as ‘Waughi’, meaning ‘Welsh’; it occurs as ‘Wacho’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, and is ‘Wouchope’ on Sto-bie’s 1770 map; it should not be confused with the area of the same name near Langholm, although the name was probably transplanted to there).

Wauchope (waw-chup) n. area around the Wauchope Water, just west of Langholm. It is easily confused with the place of the same name in Hobkirk Parish, both sites probably being connected with the Wauchope family. It was later the seat of the Lindsays. The parish of Wauchope was united with Canonbie about 1609, and in 1672 (along with other eastern Dumfriesshire parishes) was attached to Roxburghshire, although probably not for long. It was finally united with Staple Gordon in 1702.

Wauchope (waw-chup) n. Adam (12th/13th C.) witness of a charter by Simon de Lindsay of lands in Molle to Melrose Abbey in the reign of William the Lion. His name was recorded there as ‘Ada de Waleuhope’. He also witnessed another charter for lands in Whitton to Melrose Abbey about the same time. He was also witness to a charter of lands in Elliston to Melrose Abbey sometime in the period 1220 to 1243; he is there ‘Ada de Walchope’. Given that the other witnesses were mainly connected with Roxburghshire, it is likely that his lands were those in Hobkirk Parish. Adam of Techmury (16th C.) witness to the marriage of William Scott of Harden and Agnes Murry, ‘Muckle Mou’d Meg’, in 1544. Alan (12th/13th C.) listed as ‘Alano de Wauchop’ when he witnessed a charter in Kincardineshire sometime in the period 1203–13. It is unclear how he was related to other Wauchope. He may have been father of the Robert recorded in 1247 as son of Alan. Alan (13th C.) Chamberlain to Donald, Earl of Mar. He is recorded in transactions in 1291 and 1292 as well as 2 undated documents. Alexander (14th C.) recorded as ‘de Walchope’ in 1389 when the lands of Wauchope (probably in Eskdale) were confirmed to him by James, Earl of Douglas. His daughter married Adam ‘de Glendonwin’, whose family eventually acquired Wauchope. George of Pinnacle (17th C.) recorded as owner of Pinnacle in 1678, with the lands valued at £500. He was listed as ‘George Wauchop of Pendicle’ and was probably son of Gideon, owner in the 1660s. Gideon of Pinnacle (17th C.) described as ‘of Pinickle’ when he witnessed a contract involving lands in Hobkirk Parish in 1652. He is probably the ‘Jedeon Wauchop’ who was on the Committee of War for Roxburghshire in 1644, 1646 and 1649. He was fined £2400 in 1662, after the Restoration, for being a Covenant supporter; he was there described as brother to the Laird. He was taxed for Pinnacle in about 1663. John (13th C.) recorded receiving a grant in Inverness-shire in 1263. John (d.c.1280s) granted lands in Ireland by Edward I in 1278. These lands were in ‘Ballhaulisi’, ‘Baliotyre’ and ‘Ballimacihores’, and this was probably the start of the connection between this family and Ireland. He left a widow, Margery and 2 daughters, Alienor and Margaret. In 1300 the Irish lands were passed to his brother William. John (14th C.) recorded as ‘de Walchope’ in a charter of 1359, confirming the lands of ‘Tullibotill’ and ‘Little Culter’ to Alexander Burnard, which had formerly belonged to him. Sir Robert (13th C.) recorded in several charters in the period from about 1240 until 1271 in the counties of Aberdeen, Fife, Angus and Perth. His name is given as ‘Roberto de Wauchope’ and variants. He is probably the Robert, son of Alan, who had the lands of Culter in Aberdeenshire confirmed to him in 1247. Robert (13th C.) listed as ‘Robertus de Walghop’ when he paid homage to Edward I in 1296. It is unclear where he came from. There was a separate Robert ‘de Waghope’ from Fife, although this could be the same man entered twice. If so he was surely related to the earlier Sir Robert. There was also a Thomas Walghop’, tenant of the Bishop of St. Andrews in Edinburgh, listed in the Ragman Rolls. Roger (13th C.) witness to some documents in Fife in the period 1260–62. Thomas (13th C.) recorded as ‘Thomas Walchope’ in the Ragman Rolls in 1296. His seal shows a hawk killing a bird. Thomas (d.1389) Bailie for the lands of Queen Margaret, wife of David II in the Sheriffdom of Perth in 1368 and 1373. His name was listed as ‘Thome Valchope’ and ‘de Walchop’. He appears to have been Deputy Sheriff of Perth, and was given annuities in the 1380s. In 1380 he was auditor of accounts for Strathearn and had an annuity paid to him in the years 1381–88. Perhaps the same Thomas ‘de Wauchope’ is recorded in 1371 when he witnessed a charter relating to lands in the county of Edinburgh. It is unclear how he was related to other Wauchope. William (13th/14th C.) probably brother of John, who was granted lands in Ireland by Edward I in 1278. After the lands were lost to the Crown, on the death of his brother, he recovered them again in 1300. He petitioned the King sometime in the period 1300–07 to exchange his lands in Ireland for 20-pound lands in Jedforest, then yielding 34 marks yearly to the King. These were specifically the lands of ‘Willey’ (probably Wolfelee) and ‘Rughope’ (Rouchhope), which would become the lands of Wauchope. The lands were bounded by lands held by Jedburgh Abbey, by William de Soulis and by Sir Alexander de Baliol. His request was because he was in the King’s service at the ‘conquest of Berwick’, at Dunbar, at Falkirk, at Melrose and at ‘many other journeys’. William (14th C.) Constable of Edinburgh in 1382.

Wauchopebank (wau-chup-bawngk) n. former name for lands lying to the west of Wauchope. In 1538 and 1539 the lands were valued along with Templehall at 40 shillings, and occupied by Patrick Turnbull. In 1541 the tenant was David Turnbull, paying 25s yearly. The lands are described in a bounding charter of 1567 (it is ‘Wauchopbank’ in 1538 and 1539, ‘Wauchope Bank’ in 1541 and ‘Wauchope bank’ in 1604).

Wauchope Cairn (wau-chup-kärn) n. commorative cairn erected at the site of old Wauchope House, using some of the house’s stones. It was erected in 1985 by local Burns Clubs to mark the visit of Robbie Burns visit to Wauchope House in 1787, the nearest he came to Hawick. It has been visited annually (in July) since it was built. A stone tablet in the ground by the cairn reads ‘F. S. + E.C. WAUCHOPE’.

Wauchope Castle (wau-chup-kaw-sul) n. ruined castle south-west of Langholm, on the Wauchope Water, formerly home of the Lindsays. It was probably a small settlement, and unlikely to have been Roman; it is now within the forest. The sides have been used as a quarry. It is said that some Roman coins were found there. The earthwork has been used as a quarry. It is said that some Roman coins were found there.

Wauchope Common (wau-chup-kō-min) n. former name for part of the lands of Wauchope in upper Rulewater. In 1811 it is ‘those parts and portions of the Lands of Wauchope called Common’ on the Land Tax Rolls when it was part of the estate owned by Walter Scott of Wauchope.

Wauchope Forest (wau-chup-fō-rist) n. large commercial forest to the south-east of Hawick. It combines with Kielder Forest to form the Border Forest Park and was named after the area at the head of the Rule valley.

Wauchopeheid (wau-chup-heed) n. Wauchopehead, former farmstead in Hobkirk Parish in the upper reaches of the Wauchope Burn. In 1404 it was granted to John Turnbull after being forfeited by John ‘Bour’. The farm is one of those that passed from Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus, to the Crown in about 1537, with Walter Scott of Buccleuch being accused of occupying the lands, which had been in waste for the previous 20 years. In 1541 the tenant was David Turnbull, paying 25s. It is recorded in 1562 in the document describing lands disputed by the Barons of Feuarule. In the 1811 Land Tax Rolls it was ‘part of that called Hawkleytongues, or Wauchope-head, now known by the name of the North-west division of the said Lands of Wauchope’ (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map; it is ‘Wauchopeheid’ in 1404 and ‘Wauchopeheid’ in 1538, ‘Wauchopeheid’ in 1539 and ‘Wauchopeheid’ and ‘Wauchopeheid’ in 1541).

Wauchope Hoose (wau-chup-hooz) n. former house at Wauchope. It was originally a tower, owned by the Wauchope, then the Turnbuls and then the Scotts. The site of this old tower could still be made out in the early 20th century, with foundations of cottage nearby marking the former settlement. In 1694 the tax was paid on 3 hearths there by Walter Scott. The newer house was developed in the 18th century, and was famously visited by Burns in May 1787. His hostess was Mrs. Scott who was known as an artist and poet in her own right, writing the epistle ‘The guid-wife of Wauchope to Burns’. The tumble out of which Burns drank was long preserved by the family. There is a sketch of the house by Mrs. Macmillan Scott in 1848, and was still there in the 1890s when the Berwickshire Naturalists’ Club visited. Situated beside the public road, it was of the typical farmhouse construction, being of 2½ storeys, with large, white-sashed windows, and two lateral wings of a single storey. The house was rebuilt in 1875/6 by Walter Macmillan-Scott, 6th Laird, to plans by Peddie, Kinnear & Co, built of red sandstone. It survived into the mid-20th century, but was torn down in 1936 after being purchased by a religious group, and most of the stones used to construct their college in St. Boswells. However, some of the stones were also used to build a cairn in the house’s location, which is visited annually by the Burns Club. The site now has some shingles-clad holiday cottages.

Wauchope Rig (wau-chup-rig) n. hill above Wauchope in the Rule valley, to the west of the main road between Wolfelhopeelee and Hyndlee. Part of the lands here were where the house was built; the 1811 Land Tax Rolls lists ‘waughope-rig, now known by the name of the House, or middle division of the Lands of Wughope’. An ancient earthwork situated, on the north-east spur, has been used as a quarry. It is said that some Roman coins were found there. The earthwork was probably a small settlement, and unlikely to be Roman; it is now within the forest. The sides of the Rig also have signs of old terracing.

Wauchope Witter

Wauchope Witter (waw-chup-wi’-ur) n. river that meets the Esk at Langholm. The valley is sometimes known as Wauchopedale, and its history is wrapped up with that of the Wauchope family. It should not be confused with the Wauchope Burn, which flows through Wauchope Forest to meet the Rule Water (although the names may of course be related).

waucht (wawcht) n., poet. a draught of liquid, long drink, swig – ‘A waucht o waeter’ [ECS], ‘...an slokent ma drooth ...wu’ a lang waucht that garrd iz sich’ [ECS].

wauf (wawf) n., arch. a waft – ‘For ilka wauf o’ wind that blaws dings dauds o’te on the lea ...’ [JoHa] (also spelled ‘waff’).

wauf (wawf) adj., arch. wayward, like a vagrant, disreputable – ‘They’ll plan the waft aboon the wise. The false o’ heart aboon the true’ [HSR], feeble in mind or body, ineffectual – ‘The heat turns lefy folk dawallt an wauf’ [ECS], ‘When a popular preacher mounted the rostrum, the people all flocked to the tent; when a wauf hand turned up, the tide was all the other way’ [RJR], lacking strength, paltry, weakened – ‘Our wa’s atweel are waff enough’ [HSR], ‘My strencht he mde waff up, the tide was all the other way’ [RJR], lacking all knock’d to the tent; when a wauf hand turned...

Waugh (waw) n. Agnes nee Purdom (19th/20th C.) from a Liddesdale family. Her aunt married William Laidlaw (farmer at Bonchester). Her father died in London and her mother moved to live with a twin sister in Ross-shire. At age 13 she moved to Bonchester to live with her aunt. She later married mason Andrew. Andrew (16th C.) resident of Wadishill. He is recorded among Scotsmen complained about by the English Warden in 1590 because of a raid in 1588; he is recorded there as ‘Andrew Wawghe of Wadishill’. Andrew (17th/18th C.) tenant in Slaidhills around 1700. In 1701 he witnessed a baptism for William Oliver, who was also tenant there. Andrew of Shaw (17th/18th C.) probably owner of lands near Shaws Loch. In 1711 he was one of the founders of the ‘Honest Country Club’. Andrew (18th C.) listed along with James as farmer at Broomiebraes in 1792, when they were leasing from the Scotts of Buccleuch. He could be the Andrew who married Janet Elliot in Hawick in 1764, and whose children, baptised in Hawick Parish, included Thomas (b.1765), Robert (b.1766), James (b.1768), Betty (b.1770), Walter (b.1772) and Adam (b.1775). Andrew (1784–1836) probably father of Bailie Andrew, he was a clothier on the High Street, and one of the founders of the Relief (Allars) Kirk in 1810. He was recorded as a High Street tailor in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. ‘Andrew & David’ were recorded as High Street tailors in 1837, probably referring to him and a son. His premises at around 38 High Street are marked on Wood’s 1824 map. His wife may have been Janet (who was living there in 1841). Andrew (b.c.1785) music teacher in Denholm. His wife was Martha, and their children included Mary and Betty. Bailie Andrew (1813–85) tailor and clothier at 38 High Street. In 1841 he was there with his wife Euphemia and brothers William and Robert. In 1851 he was employing 4 men and 2 apprentices. He was listed as a High Street tailor in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was the last Senior Magistrate of the town in 1861. He presented a coin to the Museum in 1863. He was a long time manager of Allars Kirk and Treasurier for 26 years. He married Euphemia Kerr, and their children included: Euphemia (b.1842); Janet (b.1844); Mary Kerr (b.1846), who probably died young; Andrew (b.1849); Jane (b.1851); Thomas (b.1853); Robert (b.1855); and Georgina (b.1861). Andrew (b.1839) builder who lived on the Wolfelee estate at Blackcleugh Cottage and later at Wolfelee School Cottage. He was son of Thomas, mason at Denholm and his grandfather had been a music teacher who went from house to house. He is probably the journeyman mason recorded in 1861 at 61 High St., Hawick. He could be the Andrew who is recorded as a supporter of the Jedforest Hunt in the latter part of the 19th century. He married Agnes Purdom at Bonchester farmhouse. Their children were: Mary, who was nurse at Weens and married Will Robson; Thomas Waugh, mason who married Agnes Goodfellow; John, mason who married Jane Moore; Janet, who married William Mackay; Agnes, who married James Renwick; Robert, who married Jane McQueen; Andrew; William, who emigrated to America; and Arthur Young. He became deaf later in life, but kept up his business as well as an association with the Jedforest Hounds until late in life. Andrew (d.1924) third generation clothier of the same name. He was a Trustee and Manager of Allars Kirk. He was known for being ambidextrous. He is probably the Andrew from Hawick who was a collector of local fossils. Andrew (19th/20th C.) barber in Hawick. He was an enthusiastic supporter of the Hawick Home Mission. He served as President of the organisation at the times of its 40th, 50th and 70th anniversaries. Archibald (18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He married Isabel Farquharson and their daughter Isabel was born in 1757. David (15th C.) resident of Bedrule recorded at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh in 1493. Along with George Turnbull of Bedrule and weaver William White they had remission for stealing cattle from Pringle in Pilmuir, associating with John Turnbull of Gatehousecote, comming with the ‘traitors of Leven’ and accompanying the former Duke of Albany; his surety was George Turnbull of Bedrule. In 1494/5 he was ‘in Bedrule or in Hawick’ when he had further remission for several crimes, including: stealing 24 sheep from Thomas Scott of Bowerhouse; stealing 26 cows from James Pringle of Pilmuir; stealing 85 cows, 3 heifers, 13 horses and tools from John Borthwick of Crookston and his tenants; and for common theft before his previous remission. His sureties were the Laird of Bedrule and Robert Scott of Whitchester. His surname was given as ‘Walch’. Edward (16th C.) tenant in part of the farm of ‘Burwynyet’ in Jedforest in 1541. William and George were tenants of the other part and surely related. Evelyn Arthur St. John (1903–66) writer, born in London and educated at Oxford University, he was already a fairly established author when WWII broke out and he joined the Royal Marine Infantry Brigade, being their oldest recruit at age 36. He transferred to the Commandos, and saw some active service, but disputes with senior officers led to several other transfers, and him spending much of his time in training. This included a move to Hawick where he trained as part of ‘5RM’, in the latter part of 1941. His most famous novel ‘Brideshead Revisited’ was written while on medical leave (after breaking his leg in parachute training) in the first half of 1944. George (15th C.) mentioned as one of the witnesses to the sa- sine of 1490 when Robert Scott purchased land in Hawick from Robert Cessford. He is proba- bly the same man as ‘Georgius Walch in hawic’ who was fined at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh in 1493, his surety being John Lidderdale. Additionally in 1493 he was allowed to ‘compone’ for: resetting John Tunbull of Gatehousecote, who had been declared a rebel for the murder of Archibald Rutherford; stealing 4 cows from Matthew Gott- terson in the Forest of Lauder; stealing 22 sheep from Thomas Scott in Bowerhouse; and common theft. His surety was Robert Scott of Whitchester. George (16th C.) tenant along with William in part of the farm of ‘Burwynyet’ in Jed- forest in 1541. Edward was tenant of the other part and surely related. George (16th C.) English fugitive recorded in 1541. He was reset by Alexander Armstrong in Monkbehirst, along with Thomas, as well as 2 Purdoms. George (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Hawick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. Isabel (18th/19th C.) one of the Waughs of Luggage Hall. The death of her unnamed child is recorded in Hawick in 1808, with the notation ‘a Bastard ... Lugage’. Isabella (18th C.) jailed in Edinburgh along with 3 men, for their conduct in opposing the arrival of the new minister of Castleton Parish, Simon Haliburton, in 1751. James (16th C.) recorded as tenant of part of Mervinslaw in a rental roll of Jedforest in 1541. His steading was valued at 18s 9d. James (16th C.) recorded as ‘James Vauch’ in 1543 when he was one of the men who failed to appear to answer for helping Henry VIII’s men burn and sack Borthwickshiel and neighbouring areas. James (16th/17th C.) grandson of John of Heap. In 1635/6 he was served heir to his grand- father’s 5 merklands of ‘Eister Heip’ in the Barony of Wilton. The name of his father is not recorded, but this could have been Robert of Heap, who is recorded in 1615 and 1616. James (17th C.) ‘officiar’ named on a list of ‘idle and masterless men’, suggested by the Hawick Bailie as fit to be sent to the war in Germany in 1627. They were described as ‘fitter to be imploied in his Majesties service nor to be suffered to ly lott- tering at home’. However, when later produced before the Privy Council by the Bailie he was one of the men who were found ‘not fit for the wars’ and dismissed. He presumably had worked as some kind of officer, perhaps a Burgh Officer. James (17th C.) resident of Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish. In 1640, along with James Allan, he was accused by the Kirk Session of ‘sowing cloathes about some of their sheep’. Presumably this was a discretion on the Sabbath. James (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: Helen (b.1757); Robert (b.1760); Janet (b.1763); Jane (b.1765); Sarah (b.1768). The witnesses in 1757 were shoemaker John Scott (probably related to his wife) and butcher Thomas Waugh. He could be the James, son of John and Helen Riddell, born in Wilton in 1722. James (18th C.) listed along with Andrew as farmer at Broomiebraes in 1792, when they were leasing from the Scotts of Buccleuch. James (18th/19th C.) stockmaker who was one of the founders of the Relief Kirk in 1810. James (19th C.) Curator of the Archaeological Society collection when located in the Buccleuch Memorial in the 1880s. John (15th C.) witness to an instrument of 1454 relating to the lands of Burrell in the barony of Eckford. Information was given by Alexander Henderson ‘in tenement of John Walche, elder, in town of Hawie’. ‘John Walch, younger’ was also a witness, as well as Robert Scott. They are all described as Burgess, presumably of Hawick. Probably the same ‘Johanne Wach’ is listed as a witness to the sasine granting the Barony of Hawick to William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1452, where he is ‘Johanne Walch’. And he is probably the John who witnessed the charter of 1453 relating to the first known sasine within the burgh of Hawick. In 1455 he is one of 4 Burgess listed on a document relating to the lands of Whitchesters, and is listed as a Burgess in a related document in 1456. John (15th C.) recorded as ‘Johanni Walch in bone jedworth’ (i.e. Bonjedward) at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493. John Wilkinson in Nether Auncrum had remission for a crime against him. John (15th C.) recorded as ‘Johannes Walch’ at the Justice-aire held in Jedburgh in 1493. He had remission for stealing a large number of sheep from the Murays in Sundhope and also for associating with the former Duke of Albany. His surety was Peter, son of Sir Thomas Turnbull. His name recorded as ‘Johanne Walch’ was notary among the witnesses for the charter of Over Newhall in 1484. John (16th C.) owner of 2 particates of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Probably the same John was also holder of a particate of land on the north side. He may be a descendant of the earlier John in Hawick. John (16th C.) tenant in Castlehill in Jedforest in 1541. He jointly held the lands with Robert. John (16th C.) recorded as ‘John Waitche in Clerklanis’ (i.e. near Lilliesleaf) when he was witness to a confirming charter of the lands of Harden in 1559. The name ‘Waitche’ could also be the modern ‘Veitch’ or other possibilities. John (16th C.) tenant in Auld Jedburgh. In 1567 he was listed among men who Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst had to present to answer accusations of raiding into England. John of Heap (16th/17th C.) owner of the lands of Easter Heap. In 1635/6 his grandson James was served as heir to his 5 merklands of ‘Eister Heip’ in the Barony of Wilton. John (17th C.) tenant in Mervinslaw according to a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest, with his name recorded as ‘Wach’. He may have been descended from the much earlier Robert. John (17th C.) shepherd at Orchard according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th C.) listed as tenant at Heap in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He is probably related to the earlier Waughs from Heap. John (17th C.) resident at Commonside according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (17th/18th C.) resident in Slaidhills in 1701 when he is recorded giving money to the Parish after the burial of his son William. John (18th/19th C.) slater in Hawick. His unnamed child died in 1798. John (b.1814) son of Thomas and Sarah Beattie. Like his father, he was a farmer at Burnmouth, in Castleton Parish. In 1851 he was recorded as cattle dealer at Under Burnmouth. His wife was Isabella and they had children Margaret, Sarah, George, Janet and Mary Jane. John (1824–1904/5) son of Robert and Elizabeth Hindmarsh, he was born in Southdean Parish. He succeeded his father as blacksmith at Chesters. He was there for about 20 years, and then became tenant farmer at Highend (in Rulewater) for 32 years, while his nephew Elliot Murray succeeded as blacksmith at Chesters. He married Euphemia Turnbull at Roughlea. They had 2 children, Mary (1860–77) and Robert (1861–92), both of whom died at Highend, along with their mother. He moved to Kirknowe where he died. John (b.1868) son of Andrew and Agnes Purdom. He was born at Wolfelee Glen and became a Rulewater mason. In 1893 he married Jane, 5th daughter of James Moore and Jane Thomson, at Blacklee Brae. Their children included Jane Thomson, who was born at Swanshield. Margaret (17th C.) recorded at Mervinslaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Mrs. Margaret (d.c.1716) left £60 for the benefit of the poor of Hawick Parish in 1716. Margaret (b.c.1810) recorded as a midwife at about 12 High Street on the 1841 census. She lived there with Mary and Margaret, who are probably her daughters. Philip (15th C.) recorded as ‘Philip Walgh, perpetuo vicario de Sibbaldby’ in 1451, when he witnessed the charter exchaning Milisington with Heap. This was dated at Wilton Kirk. It is unclear where Waugh

‘Sibbdalbthy’ is. This is surely the same ‘domino Philippo Walch capellano’, who witnessed a charter in the Barony of Wilton in 1454. Richard (b.1830) from Lessuden, son of James and Margaret Mercer. He was also a descendant of the Weens family, who were shoemakers in Hawick. He became a successful businessman in Winnipeg. In 1904 he wrote a memoir of his early life, which contains some interesting anecdotes of the mid-19th century. Robert ‘de Hep’ (13th C.) entered in the Ragman Rolls of 1296. His seal showed a star enclosed by a serpent. This is probably Heap in Wilton. Adam ‘de Hep’ (his surname being effectively ‘Heap’ and so presumably not related) also signed, so they probably separately held the west and east parts of the lands of Heap. There were still Waughs associated with Heap about 400 years later. Robert (15th/16th C.) tenant in Mervinslaw. In 1502 he had remission, along with several Olivers from Jedburgh and Rulewater, for the murder of Robert Brig and Adam ‘Barnisfader’ at ‘Kelsop’. His surety was Ralph Ker of Primside Loch. Robert (16th C.) tenant in Castlehill in Jedforest in 1541. He jointly held the lands with John. Robert (16th/17th C.) recorded in a sasine of 1615 for the lands of Easter Heap, following a charter by George Langlands of that Ilk. He is probably also the ‘Robert Wauch of Hoilp’ who was on the 1616 jury for the trial of Jock Scott, ‘the Suckler’, for sheep-stealing. He may have been son of John and father of James; certainly in 1635/6 James was served heir to the lands of his grandfather, John of Heap. Robert (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Bessie Laidlaw and their children included Betty (b.1759). Robert (18th C.) tailor in Hawick who is listed among the subscribers to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He must have been closely related to the contemporary tailor Thomas (or else this is an error in the name). He is probably the tailor and merchant Robert whose son Robert died in Hawick in 1815 and the tailor Robert whose daughter Mary died in Hawick in 1819. Robert (1774–1859) blacksmith at Chesters. He married Elizabeth (‘Betty’) Hindmarsh at Newcastle-on-Tyne. He was blacksmith at Chesters for 45 years, being succeeded by his son John and then John’s nephew Elliot Murray. His children included: Elizabeth (b.1815), who married Adam Sinton; Catherine (b.1817), who married Thomas Robson, blacksmith at Teviothead; Helen (b.1819), who married Robert Murray, farm steward at Dimpleknowe; William (1822–81), vet in Hawick; John (1824–1904), who was blacksmith at Chesters and at Highend; Mary (b.1827), who married John Kedie, master blacksmith at Heatherlie, Selkirk; and Robert (1830–59), who helped his father as blacksmith. Robert (1783/4–1827) shepherd at Whitehaugh Mains. He is buried in Old Wilton Cemetery. Robert (b.1783/4) born in Eves Parish, he was tollkeeper at the New Toll Bar in Ewesdale in 1851. He married Mary Irving and their children included William and Janet. Rev. Robert minister of Denholm 1954–74, linked with Bedrule from 1963. Serg. ?? (18th/19th C.) recruiting sergeant for the Dumfries Militia. In 1809 he loaned his sash for use by the ‘rebel’ Cornet, John Tully. He also tried to take the coach to Selkirk to find musicians in Selkirk for the rebel party, but was pushed off the coach at Pathhead, the guard having been paid off by the ‘royalist’ party. Stephen (16th C.) tenant in Wadeshill in 1571/2 when he was listed among men of the Southern area for whom William Oliver of Lustruther was pledge. Thomas (16th C.) English fugitive recorded in 1541. He was reset by Alexander Armstrong in Monkbehirst, along with George, as well as 2 Purdons. His name is given as ‘Thomas Walghe’. Thomas (17th C.) Hawick merchant who was arrested in about 1678 for attending field conventicles. Margaret Barclay and William Turnbull were arrested at the same time. They were condemned to be sold as slaves to the plantations. Thomas (d.bef. 1716) merchant of Hawick. In 1704 he witnessed a baptism for fellow-merchant Bailie George Martin. In 1716 his widow Margaret gave in a bond for £60 Scots (which she held with candlemaker George Turnbull) for the benefit of the poor of the Parish. He could be the Thomas who paid tax for 2 hearths on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694 and who was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. Thomas of Hawkburn (1717/8–1804) writer in Jedburgh, also referred to as being ‘of Hagnost’. In 1767 he served as Proctor for the Duke of Buccleuch in the perambulation of Hawick Common, carried as out as part of the court case over the division of the Common. His lands in Jedburgh Parish are listed in the 1788 draft valuation of the county, including parcels of land in Hawickgate; he also owned Hawkburn and other lands in Melrose Parish. In 1790 and 1788 he was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire, his private description being ‘Rich, An only daughter married to Captain Ormiston, Jedburgh. Attentive to interest. Will probably go with Sir Gilbert Elliot’. He paid tax on servants and horses in the 1770s to 1790s. Thomas (18th C.) butcher in Hawick. In 1757 he witnessed a baptism for shoemaker James, who was probably a close relative. In 1766 he witnessed a baptism for a son Gideon Easton. He could be the Thomas, son of Thomas and Betty Clerk, born in Hawick in 1735. He married Christian Henderson in 1773 and their son William was baptised in 1777. Thomas (18th/19th C.) tailor of Hawick. In 1762 he married Helen Ferguson; he was already deceased in 1805 when she died. Their children included: John (b.1763); Isabel (b.1765); Robert (b.1767); Thomas (b.1769); and Alexander (b.1770). Thomas (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. During the 1767 flood he and John Oliver ‘got to the top of the kiln’, but then needed people to throw ropes to save them. He could be the Thomas whose son was one of 2 men carried off from the Auld Brig during the great flood of 1767. Thomas (b.1779/80) farmer at Burnmouth in the south part of Castleton Parish. He was listed at Burnmouth among heads of households in 1835–1841. He married Sarah Beattie. In 1841 he was also living with Robert (probably his brother), and Janet (either daughter of niece). In 1851 he was farming 45 arable acres and 355 acres of moorland, with 5 labourers. His son John was also a farmer at Burnmouth. He could be the drover of Castleton who subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauty of the Border’ in 1821. Thomas ‘Tom’ (19th C.) weaver in Hawick. It is said that during the procession to the election in Jedburgh in 1831 he walked by the coach of the popular candidate, Sir William Francis Eliott, and whenever the crowd became quiet would shout ‘Rend the Heavens with another cheer’. Thomas (19th C.) son of a music teacher, who went door to door. He became a mason at Denholm. He married Jessie Tait in 1833. Their children were Rachel, William, Andrew and Martha. Thomas (b.1866) son of Andrew and Agnes Purdom, he was a mason in Rulewater. He married Agnes Goodfellow and their children included Emma (housemaid at Weens), Andrew (telegraph boy and gardener at Weens), Robert, James and William. Tib (18th C.) local character of the early 1700s century. Walter ‘Wattie’ (16th C.) merchant mentioned in the will of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch in 1574. He supplied ‘buttit, saip, and vthir necessaris’ and hence was clearly a merchant, probably from Hawick, given the other people with whom he is listed. His name is given as ‘Wattie Waucht’. William (15th/16th C.) recorded in Belses in 1502. Thomas Walker was surety for him, and he was also surety for himself, and fined for non-appearance at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh. William (16th C.) tenant along with George in part of the farm of ‘Burwnyket’ in Jed- forest in 1541. His name was given first. Edward was tenant of the other part and surely related. William ‘Willy’ (16th C.) recorded in 1592 as servant of ‘Abie’s Sandie’ Armstrong. They were complained about by Routledge of ‘Comecrocke’ for stealing his livestock. William (17th C.) wright in Hawick recorded in 1673 on the list of men named in the trial for the so-called riot at St. Jude’s Fair. William (17th C.) recorded as resident at Dykeraw in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th/18th C.) tenant in Slaidhills. In 1699 he married Margaret Grieve, who is listed as ‘in Common…’ (possibly Commonside). William (1822–81) son of Robert, blacksmith at Chesters. He was a veterinary surgeon in Hawick and later in Stirling. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed as a blacksmith and veterinary surgeon on the High Street. He married Catherine Rutherford and then Margaret Jaffray. His son Robert Jaffray was Procurator Fiscal (formally also spelled ‘Wauch’ and ‘Wauche’, as well as ‘Walch’, ‘Walche’, ‘Walgho’ and ‘Waucht’; formerly it was easily confused, or perhaps the same as, Veitch). the Waulk Mill (thu-wawlk-mill) n. spinning mill at Roughheugh, operated by William Wilson from 1797 until the early 19th century. Before that it had been run as a dyers and finishers by John and William Thomline. In 1788 it was listed as ‘Waukmill of Rough-heugh’ and valued at £22 6s. The site was immediately adjacent to Roughheugh Corn Mill, with the 2 buildings both being illustrated having water wheels in a sketch of Wilton from 1810. In 1811 ‘Waulk Mill of Roughheugh’ was valued at £22 6s. It was used by Watsons after Wilson & Watson split in about 1819, and was sold to George Hogg in 1863. Ladylaw Mill was built on a neighbouring site.

the Waulk Mill (thu-wawlk-mill) n. name for the former mill at the Tower Knowe, which for a long time was the only major mill within the Burgh boundaries. It was purchased in 1815 by Waldie, Pringle, Wilson & Co. for carding and spinning. Waldie, Elliot & Co., yarn spinners and manufacturers of of stockings, are listed there in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. By the mid-19th century it was the oldest factory building in Hawick. It was purchased in 1850 by William Elliot, who had it pulled down and a new mill (the current building) built in 1851/2 at the same location.

Waverley (wā-vur-lee) n. novel by Sir Walter Scott, published anonymously in 1814, it was Scott’s first foray into prose fiction, and hence is often regarded as the first historical novel. It is set around the time of the Jacobite uprising of 1745, with the main protagonist being an Englishman called Edward Waverley. It’s name was later used for the whole set of Scott’s historical novels, and thereafter the name was given to various things, e.g. the main station in Edinburgh, the railway line running through Hawick, a pub on Hawick High Street and towns all over the world. The novel contains a reference to ‘the winder fair at Hawick’.

the Waverley Line (θu-wə-vur-lee-lin) n. former railway line running between Edinburgh and Carlisle, built by the North British Railway. It was 98.25 miles in length and opened in 1862, following the completion of the Hawick-Edinburgh part in 1849. The name came from Sir Walter Scott’s series of novels. The operation of the railway was discontinued in 1969, when it was the first main-line closure in Britain. This closure event was quite contentious in the Borders at the time. Part of the line from re-opened in 2015 as the Borders Railway, but only runs from Edinburgh to Tweedbank, stopping far short of Hawick. Books on the railway line include: ‘The Waverley route’ (1985) by Neil Capan; ‘The District Controller’s View, The Waverley route – Edinburgh-Hawick-Carlisle’ (2004) by J. Hodge; ‘Waverley route reflections’ (1983) and Main line to Hawick’ (1986) by Bill Peacock; ‘Waverley – Portrait of a famous route’ (1988) by Roger Siviter; ‘On the Waverley route’ (1995) and ‘The Waverley route: the postwar years’ (1999) by Robert Robotham; ‘Waverley Route: The Life, Death and Rebirth of the Borders Railway’ (2012) by David Spaven; and ‘The Waverley Route Through Time’ (2012) by Roy Perkins and Iain Macintosh – ‘Trains uffed and puffed For mony an ’eer But, i’ the end, the nation Decided (per yon Richard Marsh) Rail had nae destination: And now, Auld Jock and Auld ghost trains Share spectral assignation, – At Copshaw station!’ [DH].

Waverley Mills (wə-vur-lee-milz) n. 19th century woollen factory off Mansfield Road beyond Eastfield mills, near the gasworks. Tant & Anderson were there at the end of the 19th century and Macdonald & Gibb in the early 20th century. It may also have been associated with Porous, Morrison & Shortreed, Ballantyne, Tait & Co. and Macdonald & Gibb. It is now the area of Eastfield Road.

wean (win) n., arch., poet. a child, baby, infant – ‘Shurelie I hae dune douselie, an’ quieyet mysel’ as an wean spainet o its mither ... ’ [HSR], ‘And I see in my mind every group gathered there Frae the wean to the granny in auld elbow chair’ [JJ], ‘...As the dominie glowered oot owre his specs – I wot they’d be better weans!’ [WL] (this word has never been common in Hawick, with bairn strongly preferred).

wearit (wee-ree’, -ri’) adj. weared – ‘...Flakin’ or bleared wi’ lichen, Weariet and fain to fa’’ [DH], ‘Wearit, at last, O’ sic-like scenes, She risks a’ For a tin o beans’ [DH] (also written ‘wearriet’).

weather-gaw (we-thur-gaw) n., arch. a sun-dog, parhelion – ‘Among them I may mention ‘weather-gaws’. These are large and very beautiful iridescent patches in the sky, much like mother-of pearl’ [RB].

weathert (we-thur’) adj., pp. weathered – ‘...College and Kirk and Schule uprear Waas that are sere and wethert’ [WL] (also written ‘wethert’).

Weatland Burn (wee’-lind-burn) n. stream that rises at Closses and flows between the end of the racecourse at the Moor and Whitchesters farm, into the Fenwick Burn. It is mentioned in the 1767 description of the boundaries of the Common.

weavers (wee-verz) n. once one of the 7 incorporated trades or guilds in Hawick, which until 1861 had two representatives on the Town Council. They were a very old incorporation, preceding the Burgh Records (i.e. existing from before 1638). In early records they were referred to as ‘websters’. In the 1640 Burgh Act it is described how the incorporation would call meetings, with members fined for not attending, and how no weaver should take work from someone who had not paid another weaver for earlier work. They are referred to in 1643 when each of the ‘wobstaris’ was fined 12 shillings for breaking the rule of not reeling out yarn out of sight of the owner. In 1660 they fined someone for taking less money for weaving than the agreed rate. In 1683 the Bailies imprisoned all of them until they paid the fine of £20 Scots each for ‘working linen cloth narrower than an ell and two inches’, as confirmed by the Supreme Court; at that time there were stated to be 19 weavers. They are recorded taking the Test in 1684. In 1747 they were ordered by the Council to turn over their books. The incorporation was renewed in 1760 and they contributed money for the rebuilding of St. Mary’s Kirk in 1763. They were often prominent in local parades and celebrations, sometimes decked in white and scarlet ribbons – ‘Warpers and weavers all, We have woven the web of a Border town where Teviot seeks to the sea’ [JYH].

the Weaver’s Loft (thu-wee-verz-loft) n. former name for the balcony level in St. Mary’s Church, on the western side. It was probably first constructed in 1683, at the same time as the Bailies’ Loft. It was also reconstructed in the new church in 1763. In the former church building it had been called ‘the Merchant’s and Weaver’s Loft’ or ‘the Webster’s Loft’. The Bailies regulated sittings in the loft in 1710. There were squabbles over precedence in the seating, one dispute between the hammermen and weavers being ruled on by the Session in 1715, with the senior official for the hammermen having the first seat, followed by the 2 quarter-masters of the weavers and then by the other 2 hammermen. There were further scuffles in the Kirk in 1716, with some men breaking down the door when it had been locked to keep them out. The gallery was also known as ‘the Wester Loft’ to distinguish it from ‘the Bailie’s Loft’. The right to these seats was given as a result of a special payment by the guild towards the expense of rebuilding the church in 1763. The front row of this gallery was reserved for use by the Magistrates until into the 20th century.

Weaver’s Moss (wee-verz-mos) n. area between the ‘Hill Road to Roberton’ and the Ale Water, between Eisdale Sike and Harehope Sike.

Weaver Will (wee-ver-wil) n. character mentioned in Arthur Balbirnie’s version of ‘Teribus’, from whose whisky flask the riders take a drink at Haggishaa. There is no reason to doubt that this was a real person of the late 18th century, but his full name is not known.

weazle-blawn (wee-zul-blaw-in) n., arch. a disease affecting dogs, said to be caused by the breath of the weazle (mentioned by John Leyden in the ‘Complaynt of Scotland’).

webster (web-stur) n., arch. a weaver – ‘To the webstor for 15 ell and ½ of cours [perhaps ‘coms’] girding at 1s. 4d. the ell £1 8d.’ [BR], ‘Item, that the hale websters within the Bruch of Hawick and freedom thereof . . . ’ [BR1640] (also webster and webster).

Webster (web-stur) n. George (1823/4–1880) born in Ceres, Fife, he was a teacher in Hawick. He was described as an assistant in the Parish School around 1860 and on the 1861 census was Burgh Schoolmaster and living on the Kirk Wynd. In 1862 he was described as mathematics teacher of the United Schools. He was a founder member of the Hawick Archaeological Society, being elected as first Vice-President. He also gave the very first lecture at the Society, on 27th September 1856, the subject being ‘The Study of Archaeology’. He stated ‘The man, who gives a proportion of his time to the study of the relics of years that are gone, will become a wiser and it may be reasonably concluded a better member of the community’. He was also a local poet, publishing ‘Here’s to Hawick’s Bonnie Lasses!’ and ‘To the Teviot’, amongst other things. He married Betty Ruecastle in Hawick in 1770 and had a daughter Elizabeth (b.1770). It appears that the business expended its franchise for keeping false weights, viz. ‘Flemes wecht for weeche, sall sell it agin in small with the lyik weight . . . ’ [BR1640], ‘George Scott was fined £10 for keeping false weights, viz. ‘Flemes wecht for French wecht’’ [JW1651], ‘She’s borne the awfu’ wecht o’ baith pestilence an’ sword’ [JEDM], ‘We’ve smoored it wi’ a wecht o’ fun And hidden it frae sicht’ [WL], v., arch. to weight – ‘. . . An’ mony a bonny bunch o’ bloom Wechts doon the rowan tree’ [FL], adj. of proper weight – ‘Hyeh, weel this poak-fih meal, an se at it’s wecht! (i.e., that it is of correct weight)’ [ECS] (cf. the more common weight).

webcht (wecht) n., arch., pl. scales for weighing (noted by E.C. Smith).

Weddell (we-dul) n. Thomas (17th/18th C.) servant to William Gardner, merchant in Hawick. In 1721 he was rebuked for fighting with Robert Kay on the Sabbath and rebuked again in 1724 for breaking the Sabbath along with John ‘Young Sodger’ Scott (possibly the same as Waddell).

wedder (we-dur) n. a wether, castrated male sheep – ‘. . . wedderis, gymnir et Dymmont octingenta’ [SB1491], ‘A defender is ordained to pay 40s. for a wedder which he thought was bot ane lamb’ [BR1638].

Wedderburn (we-dur-burn) n. John (16th C.) recorded as tenant in Mervinslaw in a rental roll of 1541. His steading was valued at 12s 6d. John (17th C.) one of the tenants in Mervinslaw according to a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. His name was written ‘Waderburn’.

Wedderhare Hill (we-dur-här-hil) n. former name for a hill near Wauchope, marked on a map of 1772 (presumably related to sheep).

Wedder-Neck (we-dur-nek) n. nickname for William Elliot in the 16th century.

wede away (weed-a-wä) pp., poet. carried off by death, made to die off – ‘The Flowers of the Forest are a’ wede away’ [Jean Elliot], ‘. . . And there, alas! amang the rest, The Flowers o’ Hawick were wed away’ [AD], ‘Maist o’ th’ auld yins that used tae attend are a wede away’ [HE1924] (also ‘wed’ and variants; the earliest version of Jean Elliot of Minto’s lyrics has ‘weeded’).

Wedensdi (we-denz-di) n. Wednesday (also spelled ‘Wedensdih’).

the Wedensdi (thu-we-denz-di) n. name sometimes used to refer to the Wednesday of Common Riding week. There is a Chase in the morning, after which the Cornet takes the practice flag to the Moor and the Acting Father brings it back to the top of the Nipknowes before the riders return to town.

Wedoshiels (we-di-sheels) n. former name for lands in Lidesdale, transcribed as ‘Wedonscelis’ in a rental roll of c.1376, with a value of 14 shillings. In a rental roll of 1541 ‘Wedoscheillis’ was leased to Simon Armstrong (possibly of Tinnisburn), wee

and valued at 14 shillings. It is probably situated near Mangerton, but could also be the same place as ‘Westshiels’.

wee (wee) adj. small, little – ‘gie’s a wee plate-f’il’, ‘it was a wee bit yin-sidit’, ‘hei was a teeny wee laddie’, ‘For yet ane wee while, an’ the wicket sailna be . . .’ [HSR], ‘. . . an’ the wee hills rejoice on ilka syde’ [HSR], ‘. . . the little wee station at the back o beyond’ [ECS], ‘. . . Ah’ll gie ye a wee bit advice’ [WAP], young – ‘if ee think hei’s big ee should sei his wee brother’, n., arch. a little bit, small amount, short time or distance – ‘. . . and being a wee oot o’ wund, I concluded it nae use wastin’ mair . . .’ [BCM1881], ‘. . . some o the lads were gattin wild a wee at the denner . . .’, [IW], ‘Sit ye doon an Ah’ll sei if Ah canna raise the spirits a wee’ [JEDM], ‘Noo, bide a wee, ye Taries a’, An’ hearken to a sang . . .’ [WFC], ‘What tho’ her lads are wild a wee, and ill to keep in order’ [JT] (from Old English; the adjective is often used along with others, e.g. ‘little wee’; see also awee).

weedie (wee-di, -da) n. a widow – ‘And there the twae wives and the wido sit . . .’ [DH] (also spelled ‘weeda’, ‘weedae’, ‘weedih’, ‘etc.; the last vowel sound varies).

weedie-man (wee-di-mawn) n., arch. a widower (also written ‘weedi-man’; noted by E.C. Smith).

weeds (weedz) n., pl., arch. mourning clothes – ‘His pouring weeds of homely gray Were rent, and torn away’ [JTe], ‘. . . lived Mrs. Haddon . . . a very stately dame and wore Widow’s Weeds till the day she died’ [JeC].

the Weedy Gairdens (thu-wee-dee-gär-dinz) n. popular name for the allotments where Lothian Street and Garfield Street were later built, previously belonging to the Brieryywards estate and divided up in 1845.

wee-er (wee-ur) adj. smaller – ‘whae’s got the wee-er half?’.

weeger (wee-jur) n., arch. a wager – ‘Yibbles ei thocht it was for a weejer’ [ECS] (also spelled ‘weeger’).

the Whee Green (thu-wee-green) n. the Little Green in Denholm, as distinct from the main or ‘Big Green’, being off the road towards Minto. This is part of the land managed by the Feuars. An auction mart took place here until the early 20th century, and then there was a market garden until the mid-1960s, when it was grassed over and the surrounding wall removed.

the Whee Haugh (thu-wee-hauf, -hauch) n. the Little Haugh, a triangle of land bordered by Teviot Crescent and the river, with many uses over the years: once the traditional burial-ground for horses; a public drying green; an impromptu sports ground for many generations of children; and now planted with shrubbery. It was the detached part of the Common lying on the east side of the Teviot, the area stretching from Ewen’s Court to ‘The Rock’ on old maps. In 1767 it was described as ‘a little Haugh on the south side of the Teviot, bounded by William Kerr and Bailie Turnbull’s garden dykes’. The area was rented soon after the Division of the Common, but later came back to public use. Since at least the beginning of the 20th century a footpath has crossed the area from the bottom of Baker Street to the end of the riverside path leading to Laidlaw Terrace. At the end of the 20th century it was redeveloped, with the public toilets being removed and a playground located there – ‘To the Little Haugh fu’ sorry, While the horses neigh ‘Memento Mori’ [AB] (also known as the ‘Easter Common Haugh’ or ‘Lower Haugh’, and sometimes included in the ‘Under Haugh’, which was across the river).

weeks (weeks) n., pl., arch. corners of the mouth or eye – ‘. . . bebben an taain oot ov a bottle, . . . wui the weeks o eis mouth aa froe, an riftin gas till eis gran’ [ECS] (also ‘wicks’).

weel (weel) adj. well, in good health – ‘er ee feelin weel?’, ‘Aa’m no’ richt weel As’m no’ weel at a’’ [DH], (of food) well cooked – ‘Is the denner weel?’, ‘Daursay that egg ill be weel now; it’s been toattlin lang eneuch’ [ECS], ‘Thae tat-tlis ir weel; they’re aa huppen – ee’d better dreep thum’ [ECS], adv. well, quite, much, fully, thoroughly – ‘The liftings o’ that syver voice Might weel the wits beguile’ [JTe], ‘And weel we lo’e the guid auld toon . . .’ [JT], ‘Hei cam an cried on ee be ee was weel oot o the hoose’ [ECS], ‘Hei hedna weel passed ti A kennd ei was the man A was speerin for’ [ECS], ‘Ilka nicht, or A’m weel sutter doon . . .’ [ECS], ‘Weel = properly, thoroughly, fully, as in wee oot o, wee sutter doon, etc.’ [ECS], ‘. . . Note that the first 2 recorded residents of Hawick, Sægífa and Rosfrítha, were women, ‘duae mulieres de villa Hawick dicta ipsius proventia Tevietdale’ according to Reginald of Durham (also spelled ‘weemin’ and sometimes ‘weemeen’; the singular is wumman).

n. the Women’s League of Health and Beauty, founded in London in 1930 by Mollie Bigot Stack. There was an active Hawick branch in the mid-20th century, running exercise classes in the Crown Hotel.

ween (ween) v., poet. to surmise, suppose, imagine – ‘The king he mov’d his bonnet to him – He weind he was a king as well as he’ [CPM], ‘No Elfin-King, with azure wing, On the dark brown moor I see; But a courser keen, and a Knight in Green, And full fair I ween is he’ [JL], ‘... Yet, if a bard presage aright, I ween, We both shall live to dance once more on Denholm’s green’ [JL], ‘Oh! never I ween, did a lovelier form The world with its fragrance fill’ [JTe], ‘It is, I ween, a gal- liant sight; See mustering there, The Scott and Douglas, for the fight, With pennon fair!’ [WiS], ‘No happier bird than he, I ween; His song is bliss without alloy ...’ [FL] (also written ‘wein’).

Weens (weenz) n. estate just north of Bonchester, containing a mansion house that was converted to a nursing home. The estate was once part of the Barony of Feu-Rule and formerly an important part of Hobkirk Parish, being recorded before the Reformation. The lands were owned by the family of Weens of that Ilk in the 15th century and Alexander ‘Wyndis’ of that Ilk was recorded in 1502. George Turnbull ‘in le wyn- dis’ was also recorded in 1502. The town was burned by the Armstrongs in 1544. There were Turnbull Lairds there from at least the early 16th century and it was sold by Thomas Turnbull to John Scott (brother of Walter in Allanmouth) in 1606. In 1643 it was part of the lands in Hobkirk Parish owned by Lord Balmerino. Andrew Scott was there in about 1663 and John Scott in 1678, when it was valued at £200. John Scott was there in 1694, when he paid tax for having 3 hearths. James Oliver was tenant in 1738. The Scotts held the estate until 1744 when John Scott sold it to John Armstrong in Brierlyhill. His executors sold it to Adam Cleghorn in 1760, and it passed quickly to David Cleghorn, William Sharp and then William Oliver of Dinlabyre, who built the current house about 1775 (the wood used being the finest Baltic timber, carried by wagon from Berwick). In 1793 Oliver sold it to Robert Nutter Campbell of Kailzie, then it was sold to Adm. Thomas Pringle in 1796 and in 1804 the estate was bought by Thomas Cleghorn, who quickly added Town-o-Rule and Hallrule Mill; his descendants renovated the house in the mid-19th and early-20th centuries. In 1788 (and still in 1811) the farm was valued at £200. In the mid-19th century the estate consisted of Nether Bonchester, Weensmoor, Town-o-Rule, and Hallrule and covered about 800 acres. A red sandstone doorway from the old house has been set into a wall of the kitchen garden, where there is also an old sundial. It was also said that an old baptismal font stone in the garden here was from Hobkirk Kirk – ‘Most justly, too, they earn his praises, Those loftier hills and glorious scenes; Yet more I love the humble daisies That grow around my home at Weens’ [FMC] (the mansion is also referred to as ‘Weens Hoose’; formerly spelled ‘Weinds’ and variants; sometimes also formerly ‘the Weens’; it is ‘Wyndis’ in 1502, ‘Weynis’ and ‘Weinnis’ in 1562, ‘Weynds’ in 1606, ‘Wayns’ in 1652, ‘Wen- nies’ in 1653, ‘the Weyns’ in 1654, ‘weimes’ in 1663, ‘weines’ in 1678, ‘Weins’ in 1684 and 1727 and ‘Weens’ in 1694; it is marked ‘Wyinds’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Weemys’ on Roy’s c.1750 map).

Weens (weenz) n. former farmstead in the upper Teviot valley, located between Commonside and Dryden, presumably on the Weens Sike. It is probably recorded as ‘the Weynis’ in the 1627 valuation of Hawick Parish, when it paid ‘40 merks, 8 merk in teynd’ (marked as ‘Wynd’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Weens (weenz) n. Alexander (15th C.) recorded in 1437 as ‘Alexander of the Weyn- dis’, when he resigned his lands of Weens into the hands of the superior, Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig. This was probably the lands later known as Weensland. His ‘procurators’ were James of ‘Publis’ of that Ilk and George of ‘Pringil’. Alexander of that Ilk (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Wyndis’ in 1502 when he was convicted of the ‘forethought felony’ done to ‘Philip Faula’ on St. Mary’s Day while he was riding to Branholme, with Robert Scott being fined for non-appearance. It is unclear precisely what the crime was. Also in 1502 he was fined for failing to enter John ‘ruffy’ at the Justiceaire, this man charged with murdering 2 Jacksons; his surety was the Sheriff of Roxburgh.
He was probably owner of the estate of Weens in the Rule valley and descendant of the earlier Alexander of Weens. Alexander (17th/18th C.) listed ‘eist the water’ among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. He could be the ‘Sanders Weins’ recorded in 1676 among several Hawick people found guilty of using insufficient weights; specifically he was found to have a ‘half-pecke about half an inch short’.

Alexander (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Douglas and their children included: Alexander (b.1717); an unnamed son (b.1719); and John (b.1723). James (b.1709) and Walter (b.1713) were probably also his sons.

Alexander (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Isobel Scott and their children included: Alexander (b.1759). Alexander ‘Sandy’ (1786/7–1868) cobbler who was younger brother of Jock, with shop on the Kirkstile. They are listed at ‘Silver Street Head’ on the 1841 census – ‘Auld Rob Young o’ the Back Raw’s there, Biddy the Hawker’s sellin’ preens; Wat Ingis is at his tricks yince mair, And there’s baith Jock and Sandy Weens’ [HI]. Ebenezer ‘Eben’ (b.c.1790) woollen spinner, living at the Malt- steep in Wilton. He was part of the party of Hawick men who took part in the Carterhaugh Baa in 1815, perhaps being the man who scored the first ‘hail’. As the band came back to Hawick he triumphantly carried the Yarrow banner, which had been stolen from the field. He subscribed to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. He was recorded at Malt Steep among heads of households in 1835 and 1840. He married Janet Laidlaw in Wilton Parish in 1819 and their children included: Mary (b.1824); David Stevenson (b.1826), who married Ganes Duncan; Jane (b.1830); Esther (b.1833); and Alexander (b.1833). By 1851 his wife was a widow living on the Cross Wynd. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (18th C.) from Hawick, she was sister of shoemaker ‘Tam’. In about the 1750s she was hired as a girl on a farm in Liddesdale, her wages being half-a-crown, a pair of clogs, and all the wool she could gather off bushes. When she died she left her niece 40 gold sovereigns.

Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (18th/19th C.) wife of Robert Crawford. She was found guilty of stealing a shirt in 1792, but absolved of blame later. George (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Janet Baptie and their children included Alexander (b.1795). James (17th/18th C.) Hawick merchant. He is listed among those who subscribed to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. He is also probably the James ‘weins’ listed ‘eist the water’ among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. In 1699 he was fined for selling oatmeal at higher than the set price. He is recorded in 1706 regarding his appointment the previous year to collect some of the ‘stent’ imposed on the Burgesses to pay for putting lead on the steeple of St. Mary’s. He could have been the James born to Alexander and Elspeth ‘Corsall’ in Hawick in 1648. He could be the James, married to Janet Aitkin, whose daughter Janet was born in 1687. James (18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Mary Hart and their children included: John (b.1720); and Walter (b.1725). James (18th C.) tenant in Weens. His son John was baptised in Hob Kirk Parish in 1738. Other children baptised there who may be his include Marion (b.1732), Margaret (b.1735), Samuel (b.1749) and Janet (b.1751). James (18th C.) married Isobel Beattie in 1776. The marriage was recorded in both Hawick and Wilton Parishes. James (18th/19th C.) resident of Castleton Parish. He married Isabel Davidson and their children included James (b.1811).

John (18th C.) resident of Hawick. He married Janet Scott and their children included: James (b.1721); Alexander (b.1733); Thomas (b.1735); Mary (b.1737); and Janet (b.1741). John (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Agnes Napier and their children included Janet (b.1759).

John (d.bef. 1801) weaver from Hawick. His son James died in 1801. He could also be the John whose son Walter died in 1809; this child was also recorded as grandchild to ‘John Scott mill’ (possibly miller), suggesting that he married a Scott, John (d.1835) shoemaker in Hawick, whose death is recorded in the Parish Records. He was surely related to ‘Jock’ and ‘Sandy’, perhaps their uncle. John ‘Jock’ (1784/5–1866) elder brother of Sandy and son of Tam, the family were cobbler who lived at the head of Silver Street, with a shop on the Kirkstile. They were known for their outspokenness and resistance to change, and their motto was ‘ready money for cobblin’’. He is recorded as ‘John Wemyss’ in Silver Street in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In the 1841 census he is listed with his brother Alexander, as well as Margaret, who was probably his daughter. He appears to have been married to Mary Fachney and their children included: Alexander (b.1810) and Margaret (b.1813). Margaret (17th C.) recorded in 1676 when she was among a group of Hawick people found guilty of using faulty measures. She was specifically found to have a peck that was...

`ane double gill short of the ordinar gadg of the town'. Perhaps the same Margaret was the resident of Hawick `eist the water', who paid the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. She was probably an innkeeper or shopkeeper of some sort. Robert (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. He was listed among the subscribers to Caw's `Poetical Museum' (1784), with his name recorded as `Wemyss'. He could be the son of Thomas born in 1761. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Clerk and their children included Elizabeth (b.1739). Thomas `Tam' (18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick, sister of Betty. He married Margaret Aitkin in 1759 and their children included: Thomas (b.1760), probably the father of shoemakers Jock and Sandy; Robert (b.1761); William (b.1768). It is said (by Richard Waugh, a later relative) that he had 6 sons, all of whom fought at Waterloo, with only 1 surviving (however, this seems a little late, and so may be confusion with other family members). His wife's `muckle press' was carried away from their house by the great flood of 1676, and he found it 15 miles down the Teviot, with the clothing inside hardly damaged. He was probably the Thomas born in Hawick in 1735, son of John and Janet Scott. Thomas `Tam' (18th/19th C.) father of Jock and Sandy, also a shoemaker. Like his sons he was known for his cantankerous nature. He was apparently the first Hawick resident to possess a pound note, and was visited by many curious Teries at the time. He was probably the Thomas born in Hawick in 1760, son of Thomas and Margaret Aitkin. He may be the Thomas who married Janet Scott in 1781. Thomas (b.1787/8) woollen factory foreman. In 1841 he was living at Dovemount and on Wilton Place in 1851. His wife was Elizabeth Scott and their children included: Isabella; Alexander (b.1813); Mary (b.1819); and John (b.1821). He could be the `Thomas Wemyss, spinner' who subscribed to Mary (b.1819); and John (b.1821). He could be the Walter `Weens' who witnessed a baptism for weaver Thomas Ballantine in 1768. William (17th C.) listed in 1694 among those on the west-side of Hawick who paid the Hearth Tax (see also Wemyss, with which it was interchangeable in early documents; also written `Weyndis', `Weems', `Weims', `Weins', `Wiems', `Wimes', etc.).

the Weenses (thu-ween-zeez) n. well-known Hawick shoe-making family of the 18th and 19th centuries, attending local fairs and markets throughout the Borders. Jock and Sandy were probably the last of this cobbling line (also called `Weemses').

Weensforth (weenz-förth) n. purported tweed factory in Hawick, the name being used by conman John Graham Henderson in the late 19th century.

Weensgate (weenz-gā') n. electoral ward in the town, being approximately the combination of Weensland and Wellogate districts.

Weensgate Drive (weenz-gā'-drīv) n. housing development built in 1964 off Weensland Road and named because of its proximity to Weensland and the Wellogate, and from being in the Weensgate Ward.

Weens House (weenz-hoos) n. mansion house just north of Bonchester, now used as a nursing home. It was built about 1775 for William Oliver of Dinlabyre, in red sandstone with 18th century wrought-iron gates. The previous house, dating from perhaps the early 17th century, was demolished in 1774, although some parts were built into the new one; it stood about a hundred yards to the east, with a former doorway later being used as a garden entrance. The new house can be seen shortly after it was built in a sketch of 1804. It was the home of George Cleghorn in the mid-19th century and was substantially renovated in the early years of the 20th century by George Tancred. A plaque was unveiled there in memory of George Tancred in 1981. The Cornet's party traditionally visit the nursing home during the Bonchester Ride-out. It has been suggested that the location of the original peel house was one of 2 circular earthworks near the old main drive to the current house, but there is no evidence for this; Tancred suggests it was `on the top of the bank above the garden walk not far from old Weens loaning’ and that foundation stones had been dug up there occasionally.

Weensland (weenz-lind) n. area around Weensland Road on the flat land south of the Teviot in the eastern part of town. ‘Weens’ is probably a corruption of ‘Wyndis’, who may have been an early the owner of the land (like Weens in Rulewater, perhaps even being related to the same family). The lands probably once covered an extensive area; in a 1718 survey of the lands belonging to the Scotts of Buccleuch it appears to extend down the east side of the Burgh boundaries. In 1437 Alexander ‘de le Weyndis’ resigned the lands of ‘Weyndis’ (in the Barony of Hawick) into the hands of the Baron, Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig. The lands were among those lands held ‘in tenandry’ by the Baron of Hawick, when confirmed to Sir William Douglas of Drumlanrig in 1511 and when inherited along with the Barony by James Douglas in 1572. The lands are stil listed among those held by the Baron of Hawick in 1615. In 1627 it is described as consisting of 3 husbandlands, yielding 12 bolls in stock and 3 in teind. William Scott of Horsleyhill was granted part of the land in 1653 by James, Earl of Queensberry, described as a ‘four merk land’; it remained in that family until about 1772. Some of it may be the land of ‘weemes’ valued at about £133 in the Land Tax Rolls of 1663 (among the Earl of Queensberry’s rents). Robert Scott of Horsleyhill was owner in 1678, when ‘Weimesland’ was valued at £264. George Armstrong was listed there among the poor of Hawick Parish in 1694. In the early 18th century, the tenants of the lands there paid the Hawick Town Herd to have their sheep under his care, along with the Town’s animals. Another place of the same name near Harden (in the lower Borthwick valley), sometimes with the prefix ‘Wester’ is mentioned in the 16th and 17th centuries, suggesting this was once owned by the same family. The Douglasses of Cavers owned the superiority of part of it in the later 18th and early 19th centuries. By 1788 parts of the lands were held by John Hardie (valued at £36 5s 8d), Thomas Turnbull of Fenwick (valued at £35 18s 7d), James Dickson (valued at £19 13s 7d), William Dickson of Orchard (valued at £47 8s 4d, previously owned by William Irvine and valued at £41, previously owned by Adam Ormiston), Archibald Dickson (valued at £38 5s 6d), William Irvine (valued at £18 1s 8d), and George Douglas of Cavers (the part called Haughhead, valued at £27 6s 8d). In 1811 the parts were listed being the same, but Robert Scott had purchased the parts from William Irvine and Adam Ormiston (valued at £64 8s 10d) and Andrew Porteous purchased part from Robert Scott (valued at £23 19s 6d). The name was later specifically applied to some of the first houses built there, also known as ‘Weensland Cottages’. It grew as a residential area as a result of the growth of mills alongside the Teviot, and until the early 20th century was an isolated village and mill. The rows of houses there were called Weensland Place, Heronhill Terrace, Teviot Row and Weensland Terrace, almost all of which have been demolished and the street names lost. Oliver Park in the Weensland area, was the first council housing development in town in 1922. When the old Trinity School was demolished in 1955 more council houses were built on the site, and there was further housing built at the far end in the 1980s. The road through the area, skirting the south bank of the Teviot, has been the main route from Hawick to Denholm and Jedburgh since time immemorial. But the connection to the Carter Bar, via Haughhead, Deanbrae, Kirkton and Bonchester was only laid out around the 1830s. A bronze socketed spearhead found in the river here is in the Museum (the first record of the name is as ‘terrass meas de le Weyndis’ in 1437, then ‘Weyndis Landis’ in 1511; it is ‘Weyndislandis’ in 1572, ‘Weyndislandis’ in 1615, ‘Weyndislands’ in 1627, ‘Weyneslandis’ in 1654/5, ‘weimes land’ in 1678, ‘weinsland’ in 1694 and ‘Wiensland’ in 1764).

Weensland (weenz-lind) n. former name for an area in the Teviot or Borthwick valleys, perhaps near Harden and Whames. Its is listed in 1594 as ‘Weyndislands’ among lands to the south and west of Hawick for which the Baron of Hawick was superior. There are several writs for 1654–55 in the Buccleuch papers for ‘Wyneslands called Wester Weyndis, and Quhalmes, in barony of Hawick, regality of Drumlanrig, sheriffdom of Roxburgh’. The 1686 ratification of the Barony to Anna Duchess of Buccleuch lists ‘the lands of Windlands, commonly called Wester Winds’, which were occupied by Robert Grieve in Commonside. There is also in 1686 a privilege listed of ‘free chappell and chancellary within the bounds of the said lands of Windslands and Whalmes’ for the Baron, perhaps suggesting a connection with the former chapel at Chapelpit. Presumably there is a connection, at least through former ownership, with the Weensland within Hawick (see also Wester Winds).
Weensland Cauld

Weensland Cauld (weenz-lind-kawld) n. weir near Weensland Mill, first dammed around 1839 to supply water through the mill lade to drive the mill machinery – ‘As they came up by Weensland Cauld, And through by the Sker Pool, They were met by lots o’bairns, Sir, As they came frae the school’ [JCG].

Weensland Cottages (weenz-lind-ko’-ee-jecz) n. housing built around 1836, also known just as ‘Weensland’ at the time, and renamed Weensland Place in 1875, only to be demolished about 1960. It may also have been referred to as ‘Weensland Village’ in the 1861 census. It is marked ‘Weensland Cottage’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map.

Weensland Haugh (weenz-lind-hawch) n. former name for the flat land near the Teviot in Weensland. There is a plan of the area in 1825 in the Douglas of Cavers papers.

Weensland Mill (weenz-lind-mil) n. in the 18th and early 19th centuries this was the name of a corn mill in the Weensland area, between the main road and the river. It was still active when John Shiel was listed as miller in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. The name was later used for 2 woollen mills, built in the same area by Walter Wilson & Sons, beginning in 1835. The Corn Mill was purchased from Douglas of Cavers at this time, jointly by William Wilson & Sons and John Oliver & Sons (who quickly got out of woollen manufacturing). The erection of the new Weensland Mill led to the construction of a much more substantial mill lade a few years later, and a hamlet of workers’ cottages developing nearby. The original equipment consisted of ‘four sets of Carding Engines, 60 inch Scribblers, and 42 inch Carders with placing machines attached’. Fire destroyed much of the mill in 1852, but it was rebuilt by 1858. The mill had a 20 foot diameter water wheel, made by Melrose’s. In the late 19th century it was the name given to the premises of Wilson & Armstrong’s, before 1876, when they reconstituted as Wilson & Glenny’s. Wilson & Armstrong’s made tweed and blankets there. It later housed several companies, including the Weensland Spinning Co., and Sime & Williamson. By 1888 there were 3 separate tweed companies operating in Weensland, George McLeod & Son (which only lasted a year), Scoon & Barrie and the Weensland Spinning Company, and the name ‘Weensland Mill’ or ‘Weensland Mills’ was applied to all of them. The name also came to include the adjacent ‘Atheenic Mills’. The oldest part of the structure was 4 storeys high and built of whinstone, and the mill was partly destroyed in a fire in 1999. The structure had a mixture of mainly 19th century styles, including an unusual cupola with open colonnade and ogee roof. It was acquired by the Scottish Development Agency, partly demolished and developed since 1991. The main surviving part was once a spinning mill, but converted more recently into the offices and store for the Weensland Spinning Company, and now a function suite. It is 2 storeys high with a loft space, having 8 bays and a rectangular plan, built in the mid-19th century. The building is listed as category C. (also sometimes ‘Weensland Mills’; it is ‘Weensland milne’ in 1717).

Weensland Park (weenz-lind-pawrk) n. houses built in 1939 off Weensland Road.

Weensland Place (weenz-lind-plis) n. original name for Weensland Terrace and new name for Weensland Cottages in 1875, but the houses were demolished about 1960 and the street name lost.

Weensland Road (weenz-lind-röd) n. main road leading out of town to the north-east, named because it was the road to Wyndis or Weens land. The old Trinity School was demolished and new houses built in 1955, when the whole street was renumbered and Eskdaill Bank incorporated into Weensland Road.

Weensland Row (weenz-lind-rō) n. a lost street, built in 1866, renamed Heronhill Terrace and demolished in 1966.

Weensland Slated Hoose (weenz-lind-slā’-eed-hoos) n. former name for a house in Weensland, possibly the same as Ivybank. It was used as an address on the 1841 census.

Weensland Spinnin Company (weenz-lind-spi-nin-cum-pi-nee) n. tweed manufacturers based at Weensland Mills from the late 19th century and finally closing in the 1990s. Most of the structure was badly damaged in a fire in 1999. The surviving part was converted into a function suite, containing the restaurant Spinners.

Weensland Terrace (weenz-lind-te-ris) n. housing built in 1864, originally named Weensland Place, then for a time Alexander Terrace, becoming Weensland Terrace in 1885. The tenement block at the western end was demolished in 1978.

Weensmoor (weenz-moor) n. farm in Hobkirk Parish, on the side road between Hawthornside and Town-o-Rule. It is also known as ‘Weensmuir’. In 1745 one of the cottages was occupied by the Sclater family, and it is said that the Highlanders stopped at the farm on their march to England, when only the children were Weens Place

Weens Place (weenz-plis) n. short street in Bonchester.

Weens Sike (weenz-sik) n. small stream running in an easterly direction to join the Teviot between Commonside and Cotierscleuch. It gave its name to the lands of Wester Weens, which were attached to the farm of Commonside.

Weenswud (weenz-wud) n. former name for a wood near Weens in the Rule valley. It is recorded as ‘the Weyniswode’ in 1562 in the document regarding the Baronial dispute over lands in Feurule (i.e. Hobkirk Parish).

weepers (wee-purz) n., pl., arch. bands of fabric worn on the sleeves as a mark of mourning. Locally such bands of light linen fabric were sticheted on the sleeves of male relatives and worn for 2 or 3 weeks – ‘Male relatives wore ‘weepers’, a narrow band of lawn stitched on the cuffs of the coat’ [V&M].

weer (weer) v. to wear – ‘what on earth er ee weerin the day?’; ‘if the shoe fits, weer eet’; ‘ee’re no gaun oot weerin that, ir ee?’; ‘...and that’s because hei was just a boy and hei’s depicted weerin his father’s breast-plate ...’ [IW], ‘... The wud hei weers like a croon’ [DH], ‘... For A weer Nick Faldo jerseys Frae the Pringle factory’ [IW], ‘Hard-weenin wors sethreids for wairp ...’ [WL], ‘...Tae weer the Cornet’s livery’ [MB] (sometimes spelled ‘weir’; as well as the usual English forms, the past tense can be wuir and the past participle wurn).

weer (weer) v., poet. to proceed slowly, walk quietly – ‘The mither tongue grows dearer now, When wearin’ doon the brae; The aged heart the closer clings To youth’s unclouded day’ [JT] (also spelled ‘wear’).

the Wee Thea (thu-kee-thea) n. the Hawick Picture Theatre, also known as ‘the Theatre’, a picture-house in Croft Road, redesigned from the Temperance Hall, and showing films from the early 1900s. J.P. Alison was responsible for designs for renovations in 1901. Adam Grant was the managing director in the early days. It was renamed the ‘New Theatre Picture Palace’ in 1913, when there was an existing picture (with another of 1914 showing the audience). Mrs. Pankhurst, the suffragette, spoke here in 1913. The interior had 3 levels, the stalls, dress circle and gallery, or ‘the Gods’, with plush red seats and plaster gilt crowns around the front of the gallery. It was destroyed by fire in 1955, and the site rebuilt in 1961/2 as the Salvation Army Citadel.

weetin (wee-tin) n., arch. a wetting, drink – ‘Aw’ll be hanged if aw gang a past yonder till aw gate a weetin’, onyway’ [WNK].

Weir (weir) n. George (16th/17th C.) recorded as schoolmaster in Southdean Parish in 1622. George (17th C.) recorded on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Castleton Parish. He lived somewhere near Mangerton and was lised ‘with an kilne’, suggesting he was a tradesman of some sort. George (18th C.) wright on Damside. He was listed among the subscribers to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He is probably the George who married Betty Waugh in Hawick in 1779 and whose children included Margaret (b.1782). James (17th C.) Schoolmaster in Hobkirk, recorded in 1653 when he married Grizel Lyndsay in Edinburgh. He may be the son of Rev. William who was witness to a contract for the vicarage teinds of Hobkirk Parish in 1648 and for a related discharge in 1649. If so then he was the elder brother of William, who became minister at Linlithgow. James (d.c.1762) writer in Hawick who was Town Clerk, holding the position on his own in at least the years 1739–61. He may have started as early as 1732, overlapping in some way with the last few years that Walter Gledstains held the position. He was certainly recorded as Town Clerk in 1734. In 1734 he was notary public when he drew up the legal instrument through which the Town complained of the encroachment onto the Common of the tenants of Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. He was described as ‘writer and clerk to the roup’ in 1735 in the deposition where the widow of Robert Scott of Farnash sold her property on the Howegate to Patrick Hardie. He was clerk involved with the building of the Teviot Bridge in 1738. In 1743 he witnessed a baptism for Walter Scott, late Bailie Depute. He may have been the ardent Jacobite supporter who entertained a group of officers while in Hawick in 1745, and refused to take the oaths of Government in 1746, another lawyer being allowed to take the oaths as proxy. He was probably the man mentioned in 1757 when the Burgh ‘paid in Mr Weir’s for gilt paper &c., when writing to the Countess anent the minister’. The Clerk is still referred to in the Town Treasurer’s books of 1761, and in 1763 it is recorded that money was spent ‘by bailyes and council electing clerk, vacant by Mr Weir’s death’. James Wilson suggests that he died in 1762. His wife was Christian Watson. Their children included: Anne (b.1738), who may have married John Gledstains; Thomas (b.1739); Mary (b.1741); John (b.1743); Thomas (b.1745); James (b.1747); Thomas (b.1756); and John (b.1757). The 1738 baptism was witnessed by William Ogilvie of Hoscote and Bailie John Scott, the 1743 one by Bailie Gideon Ruecastle and ex-Bailie Robert Boyd, the 1745 one by ex-Bailies John Scott and Gideon Ruecastle and the 1757 one by Bailies John Scott and Charles Tuhope. James, junior (d.c.1770) Town Clerk for a very brief time, perhaps as short as 1 month or as long as 1768–70. He took over after John Gledstains (probably his brother-in-law) refused to take the oaths of Government. He was presumably son of the previous Town Clerk. James Wilson says that he was elected as Town Clerk in October 1768 and died a month later. In April of that year he was witness to a baptism for writer John Gledstains. John (18th C.) recorded being in Ashkirk Parish in 1794 when his marriage to Isabel Henderson was announced in Melrose Parish, with James Ballantyne as cautioner. Rev. Samuel minister of Robertson Kirk 1960–65. Walter (19th/20th C.) employee of Innes, Henderson & Co., he served as Clerk of the Deacon’s Court at St. George’s Kirk around the 1920s. Rev. William (d.1651) nephew of John, an indweller in Edinburgh, he graduated from Edinburgh University in 1606. He was presented to Southdean in late 1609 and ordained there in early 1610. He was translated to Hobkirk in 1626. In 1630 he had a sasine of the lands of Appotside and Tythhouse, granted by Francis Hamilton, his brother-in-law, as well as gift of ‘non-entry’ of the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside. In 1630 he was also involved in a ‘wadset’ for the lands of Harwood and Hawthornside by Edward Lorraine, the lands being resigned by Lorraine the following year, but used in another ‘wadset’ with Gilbert Elliott in 1632. He signed the National Covenant in Hawick in 1638. His children included James (who witnessed local documents in 1648 and 1649 and may have been the Schoolmaster), Margaret (who married Thomas Wilson from Dryburgh) and William (who became minister at Linlithgow). James (the eldest son) and William (the 2nd son) were both mentioned in a discharge of 1657 relating to repayment of money spent repairing the Manse at Hobkirk. He was buried in the west corner of the churchyard, where a flat stone bore the inscription ‘I HAVE FIN(IS)ED MY COVR(SE), MWM, 1651’. A grandson of his, William, received charity from the Presbytery of Kelso in 1663.

weird (weerd) n., poet. fate, destiny, doom, a fateful being or story – ‘And I a woeful weird maun dree, And mourn the love I canna rue’ [JTe], ‘...for I sall nevir be in wanluck weird’ [HSR], ‘...I dree my weird, an’ I maun leave thee’ [JS], ‘Syne in the mind’s cauld ootoothe, His weird, the Christ maun dree’ [WL], ‘...Stirrin, whiles, in nichtmares o auld hen-weis - Squatterin wi a thrawn neck ...’ [DH], adj., arch. relating to destiny – ‘Then oot spak the dread weird wyf, wi’ stern prophetic e’e:– “Curse, curse, on bloody Cavers hoose, An’ a’ her progeny”’ [T].

Weisz (wis) n. Otto (d.1994) Pringle’s designer, credited with creating the cashmere ‘twin-set’ around the 1940s, popularised by actresses such as Jean Simmons, Deborah Kerr, Heddy Lemarr and Dorothy Lamour. The idea to name the product the ‘twin-set’ is meant to have occurred to him after seeing a woman pushing twins in a pram on Hawick High Street! His designs were partly responsible for Hawick knitwear’s post-war success. In Hawick, he rode at the Common Riding. He was a Jewish refugee from Austria, being apprenticed to Bernhard Altmann of Vienna. Originally an artist, he was appointed by Pringle’s in 1934 (on his 3rd attempt to get hired), becoming a Director in 1937, Assistant Managing Director in 1952 and Joint Managing Director in 1964. He finally retired in 1969, and moved to Jersey, where he died. In 2006 his son David donated the Andrew Binnie painting ‘Hawick in Winter’ to Hawick Museum – ‘How a stylish bit knitwear disappeared from the scene. The classic twin-set – Otto Weisz’s big dream’ [GM].

Weittie (wi-tee) n. John ‘Jock’ (16th C.) servant to James Turnbull of Stonedge. He was recorded in 1590, along with his master, Gavin Turnbull of Woollee and Alexander Oliver of Westerhouses, when they were accused of raiding farms in England. It is unclear how to spell or pronounce his surname.

Welch (welsh, welch) n. Adam (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Margaret Laidlaw in 1723 and their children included: Janet (b.1738); and Bettie (b.1740). Janet (16th C.) listed in 1552 as ‘Jonete Welche’ among people who were owed money in the testament of William Scott, younger of Branxholme. It is unclear whether she was ‘Waugh’ or ‘Veitch’. John (17th C.) listed as resident at Outerside on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William, who was also listed there, was surely related. John (18th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. In 1726 he married ‘Bitrich’ Young, also from Robertson. His children, baptised in Robertson, included: Thomas (b.1727); James (b.1729); Margaret (b.1732); and Elizabeth (b.1735). John (d.1990) born in dinburgh, he served with the 5th Battalion Cameron Highlanders in WWI and was wounded at Loos. In 1924 he founded the Hawick accountancy firm Welch’s. William (17th C.) resident at Outerside according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. John was also listed there and must have been related. He is probably the William, married to Margaret Scott, whose children baptised in Hawick Parish included: Margaret (b.1673); George (b.1675); Marie (b.1677); and Janet (b.1678). The witnesses in 1675 were James Thorbrand and William Laing. It is possible that his name was ‘Welch’, i.e. Veitch.

Welch’s (wel-shieez) n. Messrs. J.J. Welch, accountancy firm at 19 Buccleuch Street (note the pronunciation).

welke (welke) adv., arch. well, faithfully (in wording related to holding lands) – ‘...the quhilk soume of twa hundreth markis wele and lelely to be made ...’[SB1470] (cf. the more modern weel).

welkin (wel-kin) n., poet. the sky, upper air, vault of heaven – ‘Far beyond the setting sun, Where ever brood the shadows dun, Where bends the welkin to the wave, And ocean’s utmost waters lave’ [JL], ‘The maiden stray’d till dark’ning night O’erspread the welkin wide’ [JTe], ‘...Striking the welkin here, her old Norse slogan, On festive, storied, Common-Riding morn’ [JBS], ‘In this dour job that he maun dae On land an’ sea an’ welkin ...’[WP] (from Old English).

well (wel) n., arch. a spring, source of fresh water – ‘I like to drink the muirland wells, For that was aye the name for me’ [DA] (most springs or pumps in the Hawick area were called ‘Wells’; see also wall and wells).

the Well Brae (thu-wel-brä) n. former name for a track down to the Dean Burn in Denholm, on the east side. It is now a path leading from the War Memorial down to Deanburn House. James Murray says that the earliest course of the road towards Hawick used to go this way, much higher up the Burn than the modern road.

Wellbutts Park (wel-buts-pawrk) n. former name for Wellfield (on account of the butts, or archery targets, being placed there).

Welleton (we-le-ton) n. Roger (13th/14th C.) appointed Archdeacon of Teviotdale by Edward II in 1307. He was probably from England, probably one of the Wiltons there. He remained in this position, at least titulary, until about 1310.

Wellfield (wel-feeld) n. area around the former Wellfield House, probably named after the well, which stood near there and was known in the latter part of the 19th century as ‘Dickson’s Well’.

Wellfield Bank (wel-feeld-bawngk) n. housing built on the grounds of Wellfield Lodge in 1960.

Wellfield Hoose (wel-feeld-hoons) n. villa in Wellfield, demolished in the early 1970s to make way for the new Wilton School. It was built for William Dickson in the early 1860s. It was the residence of the Nobles in the 1880s, then the Scotts in the late 19th and early 20th centuries, with the final residents being the Montgomery family. There were additions made around 1908, to designs by J.P. Alison. The name is also sometimes used for the former lodge house at 31 Dickson Street.

Wellfield Ludge (wel-feeld-huj, -loj) n. former lodge house for Wellfield House, situated at 31 Dickson Street.

Wellfield Road (wel-feeld-röd) n. road connecting Dickson Street with Havelock Street, roughly between the positions of the former Wellfield Lodge and Silverbuthall Lodge. It was built in 1969 when the house was already derelict.

We’ll Follow Oor Cornet (wel-f-o-oor-kör-ni’) n. song adopted as the club song of the 1514 Club. The words are by David Johnston, first published in the Hawick Express in 1951. The music was by Adam L. Ingles, provided at the request of the Club, and dedicated to them in 1975, when it received its first performance.

Wellgreen (wel-green) n. house on Sunnyside in Denholm.

Wellington Court (we-ling-tin-kör’) n. housing for single people built off Wilton Path in 1982, and named after the streets that used to be there. It was redeveloped in 2002 into 21 larger units.

Wellington Kirk (we-ling-tin-kirk) n. Well-ington Church, built in 1886 following a disagreement in 1881 in which the assistant minister of Hawick Parish Church, Rev. J.A. Birrell, walked out with part of the congregation. The new church was built in Wellington Street and took that as its name. It was renamed St. Margaret’s and created a ‘quoad sacra’ church in 1896. After the congregation merged with Wilton South in 1940 the building was used commercially, e.g. as storage for fruits and vegetables by Proudfoots. It was demolished in 1976.

Wellington Place (we-ling-tin-plis) n. houses constructed in 1853 and named around 1857, being previously part of Wellington Street. The whole area was cleared in 1973–75.

Wellington Road (we-ling-tin-röd) n. street off Wilton Path, with houses constructed around 1876 and 1885, the western part originally being called Pringle Street. St. Margaret’s Church was formerly there. The area was cleared in 1973–75 and new houses built.

Wellington’s Pillar (we-ling-tin-pi-lur) n. name by which Penielheugh was known around the time it was built.
Wellington Street

Wellington Street (we-ling-tin-stree) n. street in Wilton named after Arthur Wellesley, the Duke of Wellington (1769–1852), famous for his victory over Napoleon at Waterloo, and also Prime Minister 1823–30. The mill lade used to cross under the bottom of the street. There also used to be a baker’s at the top and a general shop at the bottom, and two sweet and tobacco shops between. The original houses were constructed 1850–55. J.P. Alison designed the house at the corner with Wellington Place, built in 1910. There was major demolition in 1973–75 with new houses constructed around 1977, as well as the 1982 sheltered housing development called Wellington Court.

the Wellogate (tθu-we-lō-gā’-lu-, wa-lō-gā’) n. area in the east of Hawick, around Wellogate Brae. Up until the early 20th century the area contained many fields rented to farmers with barns and stabling in the town. In the 19th century some of these farmers were the Grieves of the Cross Wynd, the Tullys of the Millpath, the Hardies of the Kirk Wynd, the Aitkens of the Kirk Wynd, the Tower Hotel landlords and Hawick Mill. In 1715 gardener John Tait was fined for ‘breaking the marches between the Common and the property of the Duchess of B. at the Woollegate’; however, it is unclear where such a boundary could have been. The housing there was largely built by the Hawick Working Men’s Building & Investment Co., Ltd. in the latter half of the 19th century. A number of the streets in the Terraces had different names for the upper and lower houses (as well as for each side if the street) until rationalisation of the names by the Council in 1882. The ‘Well o’ Gate’ spring was marked by a monument in 1985. A stone ball found in the area is in the Museum. The name is also used more specifically to refer to Wellogate Brae – ‘In wellogate the Eastern Gate …’ [NM], ‘…’Twas then I found mysel alone In Wellogate, Where deid folk mony a year laine — Cauld, calm, sedate’ [WP] (the name occurs in many forms, including ‘Walliegate’, ‘Woollee gate’ and ‘Wellygate’ in the 18th century, and ‘Wooliegate’, ‘Wallygate’ and ‘Well o’ Gate’ in the 19th; it is ‘Woolie Gate’ on Wood’s 1824 map; it is likely to have derived from ‘Woollee Gate’, i.e. the way to Wolfelee, with some later influence on the name from the wells or springs there).

the Well o Gate (tθu-we-lō-gā’) n. name for the spring at the top of Wellogate Brae, which was used as a water supply in the latter half of the 19th century. There was a drain on the right hand side of the road above the cemetery entrance, which is marked by a restored well and plaque (carved by R.E. Scott in 1985). The spring was on John Kedzie’s land. The supply was piped to the Cross Well, the Council resolution for this being in 1755. It was also piped later to Allars Church, as well as supplying a watering trough used by horses and cattle entering the town (it is ‘Wellygate’ in 1755).

Wellogate Villa (we-lō-gā’-vi-la) n. house on Wellogate Brae, built in mid-19th century by Wellogate Bank (we-lō-gā’-bawngk) n. house on Wellogate Brae, roughly opposite the cemetery gates.

Wellogate Brae (we-lō-gā’-brā) n. main road leading out to the east of Hawick, being the continuation of the Cross Wynd and Allars Bank. It was officially named in 1934, with council houses built on the right hand side at the top, along with Fisher Avenue.

the Wellogate Brig (tθu-we-lō-gā’-brig) n. name sometimes used for the road bridge over the railway line at the top of Allars Bank.

Wellogate Cemetry (we-lō-gā’-see-mi’-ree) n. one of Hawick’s two main cemeteries, lying between the old railway line and Fisher Avenue in the Wellogate district. 7 1/2 acres of land on the Common was sold to the heritors of Hawick Parish in order to be exchanged with land for the new cemetery. It was opened in 1849, as an overflow for St. Mary’s Churchyard, and almost immediately had to cope with the 1849 cholera epidemic, with most of the victims buried in the vacant middle area. The Heritor’s area, containing the final resting place of many of Hawick’s worthies, was opened in July 1849 and its control transferred to the Parish Council in 1903. The entrance to this area was formerly higher up than the present main gate. The cemetery has expanded several times since then. A staircase also connects with the former railway. There is a shelter within the grounds, designed by J.P. Alison. It was for a while known as ‘Hawick Cemetery’ to distinguish it from Wilton Cemetery – ‘Then one day as gloamin descends on my valley, As dark shadows lengthen and evening comes still, I will be ready to take my last journey, To lie wi oor fithers on Wellogate’s hill’ [IWL].

Wellogate Place (we-lō-gā’-plis) n. street in the Wellogate, built in 1875 by Hawick Working Men’s Building and Investment Company. The lower houses were originally called Douglas Terrace until 1882.

Wellogate Villa (we-lō-gā’-vi-la) n. house on Wellogate Brae, built in the mid-19th century by the Wellogate Well

the Wellogate Well (ˈwɛl-oʊ-gæt-wel) n. another name for the Well o Gate.

Well Plantin (wel-plawn-in) n. plantation in Hobkirk Parish, lying just to the west of Braidhaugh.

wells (welz) n., pl. in Hawick there used to be public wells situated at several points down the Loan and Howegate and along the High Street, and elsewhere in the area, as well as many private supplies. They were the traditional gossiping place in town, with women gathering in line with their pitchers. The important thing to understand is that a ‘well’ (or ‘wall’) was typically a stand-pipe and trough, and not the traditional draw-well (like the new fake one in the Park) which is the more modern meaning of the word. Water would be fed to the wells through pipes from sources such as the Smaile Burn, the ‘Well-o-Gate’ and other natural springs. In 1731 the Council paid for 3 loads of clay for ‘the well’ and in 1737 the well in the High Street was directed to be rebuilt. In 1783 the Council resolved to provide 2 street wells using piped spring water, these being the Cross Well and the Paunt Well (and masons William Phillip & Co. were paid for the work). In 1786 the Council paid for white paint ‘for wester fountain-head’, suggesting that these public wells were painted. In 1797 the Schidder Springs were piped into Hawick, providing 6 additional public wells. However, there were also smaller, local or private wells (often named after a nearby inhabitant), and several more which were opened up through the 19th century. These open wells were largely responsible for outbreaks of cholera and other diseases, and the decline in their use came with the opening of the Allan Water supply in 1865.

Wells (welz) n. estate near Bedrule, formerly owned by the Douglass of Cavers, the Ruthersons and the Cavers-Carre families. In some of the earliest documents it was known as ‘Wollis’. The area was burned by Hertford’s men in 1545. The superiority appears to have passed from Archibald Douglas, Earl of Angus to Sir Thomas Kerr of Ferniehirst in 1581. The first Rutherford of Wells was James of that Ilk, who held it from at least 1492 (when it was described as a 5-pound land and granted by Douglas of Cavers). Robert Turnbull was recorded as tenant there in 1493. John Turnbull and Adam Turnbull were recorded there in 1502. ‘Non-entry’ of the lands is recorded in 1508. It passed to James’ grandson Richard, then to Richard’s sister Helen. About this time it was separated from the Barony of Cavers, with the Crown being the direct superior thereafter; an extract charter of 1511 confirms how James Douglas of Cavers resigned the superiority into the hands of the King, to be given to Helen Rutherford and her husband John Forman. Since Helen had no children, the lands passed to James Stewart of Traquair (the husband of Katherine, sister of Richard and Helen). In 1524/5 the Laird (probably a Stewart) was among the Border Barons who swore the bond of allegiance to the Earl of Angus (Warden at that time). Several generations of the Stewarts of Traquair were Lairds until Charles, the 4th Earl, sold the estate to Thomas Rutherford of Wells in 1687 (and thus the estate passed back into the hands of the Ruthersons after 2½ centuries). Stewart of Traquair was owner in 1643, when the lands were valued at £214 10s in Cavers Parish and £409 10s in Hobkirk Parish. Andrew Ker paid the land tax on £66 13s 4d there in 1678; he may also be ‘The walls’ who paid tax on £214 10s in Cavers Parish in the same year. Thomas was the last Rutherson Laird, selling the estate to William Elliot (descendent of the Elliots of Brugh) in 1706/7, who had a house built there. Meanwhile Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs had a charter of the lands of Over and Nether Wells in 1659 indirectly from William, Lord Cranstoun. Archibald Jerdan was factor there from 1728 until the 1760s; his rental book gives many details of the running of the estate in the 18th century. The rentals (including Ormiston and Hadden) amounted to £744 in 1729 and £921 in 1735 (but with many farmers in arrears). Archibald Jerdan paid tax on 45 windows there in 1753. In 1788 part of the lands were listed in Cavers Parish, valued at £214 10s. It was sold to the William Nassau Elliot, M.P. towards the end of the 18th century. It was valued at £409 10s in 1811. It passed to Sir William Francis Elliott in 1818 when William Nassau Elliot died. The house was extended around 1862. The house was leased to John Bald in the period 1865–76. The estate having a considerable debt, the trustees had lots of the old trees cut down in the late 1800s, this being locally quite unpopular. Sir William and Lady Elliott of Stobs lived there themselves in the years around 1890. But the estate was sold to the Ushers in 1895/6, who rebuilt the main house in 1906, although it was demolished in the 1950s. The new development included a herony, as well as alterations to the banks of the Rule to form a small lake. The wrought-iron gates are retained from the 18th century, while an armorial pediment from about 1690 is in the Museum. Extensive and irregularly shaped plantations also survive. The entire Wells and Hallrule estates were sold off in 1995 – ‘Adieu, fair Wells! I gladly quit Thy mutilated glade, But who can look without regret Upon thy ruined shade? Years, countless years, may come and go, And heirs thee still retain, But what thou wert in former years Thou’lt never be again’ [T] (often formerly written ‘Walls’, ‘Wells’, etc.; it is ‘le wells’ in 1502; it is already marked by its modern name ‘Wells’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map).

Wells (welz) n. former estate to the east of Jedburgh, including Over Wells, Nether Wells, Wells Shawhead and Wells Mill, long owned by the Kerrs. The spelling varied as ‘Wollis’ etc., and is thus easily confused with Wells in the Rule valley (formerly ‘Wells’ and variants).

Wells (welz) n. David (1834/5–72) son of John, he was Schoolmaster at Stoulsie. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Ebenezer (18th/19th C.) schoolmaster at Newcastleton in the early 1800s. He subscribed (for 2 copies) to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. John (14th C.) listed as ‘John de Wellis’ in 1390 when he witnessed the charter by John Turnbull of Minto, granting Minto to Sir William Stewart of Jedburgh. The other witnesses were all local men. Thomas ‘Tom’ (b.1806/7) Burgh Officer and Halberdier in the 1850s. He was listed as the Keeper of the ‘House of Refuge’ in the 1851 census. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is listed as keeper of an eating house on the Howegate as well as ‘sheriff’s officer, Howegate’. His wife was Mary, and they had a daughter Maria.

Wells Hoose (welz-hoos) n. former house near Bedrule, on the Wells estate. The name has existed for centuries, and so probably there was a house there from at least the 16th century. Shortly after the estate passed to the Rutherfords in 1687 a mansion was built. The original house can be seen on a sketch from the mid-18th century. It was the birthplace of George Augustus Elliot (Lord Heathfield) in 1717, and was visited briefly by Burns in 1787. The rental book of Archibald Jerdon lists the contents of the house in about 1730. ColWilliam Elliot paid tax for 37 windows there in 1748. The house consisted of 6 main rooms, a kitchen, a servants’ room and an attic. The house was extensively repaired in 1753 and there is a sketch as it was around 1790. During the late 18th and much of the 19th century it was mainly used by the factor of Wells. It was altered and extended by Sir William Eliott of Stobs and Wells around 1862, and became the home of Sir William’s mother. A sundial was shown on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. The house was then rented by the Vassals and by the new Sir William himself, in order to try to pay off the debts on the estate, but it was sold off to John Usher in 1896. The house was demolished in 1905 by Sir Robert Usher soon after the estate was acquired, and a photograph exists showing it shortly before demolition. A new Edwardian-style house was then constructed for the Usher family on the same site, designed by Thomas Greenshields Leadbetter. Only 2 stones survived from the original house, one bearing 18 coats of arms, showing the descent of Thomas Rutherford and his wife, and the second was the lintel bearing the motto ‘Ne des tua robora scortis’ (‘do not give away your strength to whores!’). The new house fell into disrepair and was dynamited in 1955. A modern bungalow was built there in 1999. There is an ancient earthwork, of unknown age, in the woods to the south.

He played Rugby League for London Highfield 1933/4. On returning to Hawick, he was prevented from coaching the sevens team because of strict S.R.U. rules about association with Rugby League. He later played for the Scottish Rugby League side. Rev. William minister of Cavers from 1954, combined with Kirkton in 1955. He was minister there until 1975.

Welshaw (wel-shaw) n. former name for an area in Liddesdale, related to Closs, near the Niesttane Rig. In a list of Borderers made just before 1600 the residents there were ‘Will Colithis Hob’ and ‘Hob of Bowholmes’. In 1632 there is a reference to ‘Over and Neather Closse alias Welshaw’, leased by John Scott and Gavin Elliot.

Welsh’s Hill (wel-sheez-hil) n. hill to the north of Heap Hill and by Lionfield Moss, reaching a height of 242 m (the origin of the name is unknown).

Welstremis (wel-streemz) n. former lands in Liddesdale, recorded in the c.1376 rental roll, with a value of 13 shillings and 4 pence. They were listed under the section ‘Foresta’ (northern Liddesdale), but the precise location is uncertain. In 1541 the lands were leased by Ninian Armstrong and valued at 2 shillings; they were listed between Arnot Hill and ‘Storeissteid’, and were probably near Castleton.

Wemyss (weemz) n. Bailie Alexander (b.1813) Hawick Magistrate of the latter part of the 19th century. His parents were Thomas, foreman at Wilton Mills, and Elizabeth Scott. He began working at Wilton Mills in 1827, becoming a commission agent later in life and retiring in 1889. He was the last living standard-bearer of the great Reform Bill procession of 1832. He was also present at the election in Jedburgh when Sir Walter Scott was supposedly assaulted by Hawick men, but vehemently denied this version of events. He also acted as sergeant-in-chief of the special constables appointed during the troublesome 1841 election. He was for a long time on Wilton Parochial Board, entered the Council for Wilton Ward in 1868 and became a Magistrate 3 years later. He was also one of the originators of St. Andrew’s Free Church. In 1861 he was living on Dovemount Street. He married Ann, daughter of Alexander Gow. He is buried in Wilton Cemetery. James (16th/17th C.) Hawick resident recorded in 1616. He was one of the men (along with ‘Bonnie Johnnie Scott’ and James Lethen) who took the pistol from ‘Manson’s Geordie’ Scott, before he could shoot the Baron, James Douglas of Drumlanrig. James (b.1819/20) born in Hawick, he was a wool spinner. He married Margaret Duncan in 1839. Their children were James, George, Charles, Janet and Margaret. They emigrated to Boston in 1854. He emigrated to the Boston area in 1854, with the rest of his family. He worked as a furniture maker, eventually becoming owner of a large company. In Boston he was an Oddfellow and Mason and was President of the Scots’ Charitable Society, the British American Association of the State of Massachusetts, the Boston Curling Club and the Hawick Club. weshin-hoose (we-shin-hoo) n., arch. a public washing facility, laundry. In Hawick there was the Steam and Victoria Laundry, and before that there were public washing facilities at the Sandbed. There was also one in Denholm at the north-east corner of Main Street around 1900 (cf. wesh-woose).

Wesla (wes-la, -la) adj., n., arch. formerly used to describe the western part of Hawick, in distinction to the ‘Eastla’ part. Also referred to as ‘Wesla Witter’, because the Slitrig was the line of demarcation. There used to be a strong rivalry between the two sides, with competing bonfires on special occasions (the ‘Wesla’ one being at Myreslawgreen), as well as the tradition of appointing the Cornet from alternating sides (also written Westla).

Wesla Lads (wes-la-ladz) n. group who selected their own Cornet in the ‘Disputed Common Riding’ of 1809, in opposition to new regulations introduced by the Town Council regarding invitations to the Cornet’s supporters. They were also referred to as the ‘Wesla Water’ party. They had to get the Selkirk drummer and fifer to supply the music for the processions, and held a separate Ball in the Cross Keys. Their ‘rebel’ flag is in the Museum, and James Hogg’s ‘Address to the inhabitants of Hawick’ was written for this occasion – ‘If you love your ancient freedom, Their new Cornet never heed him; From amongst you choose a Cornet, Hand it down to sons unborn yet’ [JH].

Wesla Witter (wes-la-wi’-ur) n. former name for the part of town west of the Slitrig, effectively the old version of the ‘Westend’ (also Westla).

Westburnflat (west-burn-flaw) n. former lands in Belses Barony, near Lilliesleaf. In 1569 it was listed among the lands sold by Jedburgh Abbey to Adam French. In 1632 it was feued from Thomas Hamilton, Lord Binning, to Robert Grieve from Commonside, William Davidson from Caerlenrig, John Gray from Lilliesleaf and Robert Law from Kames. It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade) in 1670. (it is ‘Westbarnis’ in 1569 and ‘Westbernis’ in 1588 and ‘Westbyres’ in 1670).

West Beechwu (west-beech-wud) n. name for a field on Hawick Common to the north of the road between Williestruther cottage and the Flex.

West Boonraw (west-boon-raw) n. farm reached by taking the right hand road at the ‘Fower Road Ends’, just next to East Boonraw, on the Boonraw Burn. It was also known as ‘Wester Boonraw’. Elizabeth Davidson lived there in 1841 and 1851 and labourer William Hewitson was there in 1841.

West Buccleuch (west-bu-kloo) n. farm on the south-west bank of the Rankle Burn, off the B711, near East Buccleuch, in the centre of Scott country. In the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch it extended to 3909 acres and the farmhouse is marked in much the same location as the present one. The ‘West side of Buccleuch’ stock and teind was valued at about £916 in 1785. It was tenanted by Turnbulls in the early 19th century and was then composed of 1,400 acres of land. It was for a time run as a hotel. Part of the old drove road can also be seen near here. There was a Ride-out here in 1888 (also sometimes ‘Wester Buccleuch’).

West Burnfit (west-burn-fi’) n. West Burnfoot, farm in the Ale valley, being the partner of East Burnfoot. There were 3 tenants listed there in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. It is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map off the stirnlet that emerges from Shielwood Loch. The location is south of the other farm, but actually a little further to the east on Ainslie’s map.

West Burn Park (west-burn-pawrk) n. name for the field on the Common opposite the entrance to the racecourse and north of Burn Park.

Westburnflat (west-burn-flaw) n. former tower of the Armstrongs on Hermitage Water, perhaps just south of its junction with the Liddel.
West Cote

It was listed as a land with rental 37 shillings and 4 pence in a c.1376 list of the area around Mangerston among the charters of the Douglasses of Morton. Archie of Westburnflat is listed by Monipennie among Border chiefs in the late 1500s. It was burned in 1599 by the Gideon Murray of Elibank, Walter Scott of Harden and Gilbert Elliot of Horsleyhill. It was possessed by Lancie Armstrong in 1632 and John Armstrong until about 1683. John Glendinning was tenant there in 1694, with William Elliot also listed as a householder. It is said that one of the last owners, William Armstrong, was captured for stealing cattle and hanged at Selkirk, in the early 1700s. Labourer Francis Armstrong was there in 1835 (it is ‘Westburnflat’ around 1376, ‘Wastburneflat’ in 1599 and ‘westerburnflat’ in 1694; it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

West Cote (*west-kō’, -ko’) n. farm off the A698 Denholm road, roughly opposite Trowmill, behind Linden Park. It was once a tenanted farm on the Cavers estate and sold off in the early 19th century. John and James Bunyan were tenants in 1794 and James Bunyan in 1797. Robert Shiel was farmer in the early 20th century. The name distinguishes it from the farm of Eastcote (also spelled ‘West Coat’, ‘Westcote’, etc.; it is marked ‘Westcot’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Westcoterig (west-kō’-rig) n. former farmstead in the upper Teviot valley, perhaps on the Cromrig Burn north of Southdean Rig, although its precise location is uncertain. It was recorded in 1540 among lands (probably part of Ringwoodfield) farmed by the King’s shepherd Richard Henderson. In 1557 it was ‘Westcoit’ when rented from Melrose Abbey by Walter Scott and William Elliot; at that time it was valued at £5. It was listed as part of the Lairship of Ringwoodfield in 1621 and 1634 and listed among the same upper Teviotdale lands in 1693. In 1620 Sir Walter Scott of Goldielands was infest in these lands, along with those of Goldielands. It was recorded as part of the Lordship of Melrose in 1653, 1661 and 1663. In 1744 it was leased along with Colterscleuch by William and Gideon Grieve (marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘West cottrig’; it is ‘Vestcoterig’ in 1540, ‘Westcoctrig’ in 1621, ‘Westcoitrig’ in 1634, ‘Wester Coitrig’ in 1653, ‘West Coitrig’ in 1661, ‘Westcotrig’ in 1663, ‘Westcotrige’ in 1670, ‘Westcoitrig’ in 1693 and ‘west-coat-riggs’ in 1744).

the West End (thu-wes-tend) n. popular name for an area of Hawick, corresponding approximately the part of town to the west of the Slitrig and south of the Teviot. It was traditionally where the workers and poorer residents lived, and where the strongest dialect was spoken. In a case of reverse snobbery, Westenders typically regard the area as the ‘real’ Hawick. The area has been occupied for many centuries and it seems likely that it was the original centre for the settlement of Hawick. It is clearly shown as an inhabited area on Pont’s map of c.1590. In 1770 there were 110 houses there owned by Burgesses, with a value of over £13,000. In 1804 the Council resolved for form footpaths in the area. The modern street layout was mostly developed in the 19th century.

West End Academy (wes-tend-aw-ka-du-mee) n. former private school, run by Rev. and Mrs. B. Brodie. It started in 1883 on Bucleuch Street, and moved to Wilton Lodge in 1892, changing its name to Wilton Lodge Academy.

the West End Bar (thu-wes-tend-bawr) n. hostelry at 3 Loan in the latter part of the 19th century. A stone bottle from there (when the proprietor was James Shiel) is in the Museum (also known as the ‘West End Spirit Bar’).

West-End (wes-ten-dur) n. someone from the West End of Hawick – ‘Maister Thompson, a Wastender like masel’ [HE1924] (also spelled ‘Westender’, cf. the older Wast-End).

the West End Kirk (thu-wes-tend-kirk) n. previously known as the Green Kirk, it was home of the Anti-Burgher congregation and then part of the United Presbyterian Church from 1847. It should not be confused with the West Port (Free) Kirk.

the West End Meetin Hoose (thu-wes-tend-mee’-in-hoos) n. the West End Meeting House, also known as the Green Kirk, at Myreslaw Green.

Wester Alemoor (wes-tur-äl-moor) n. farm just before Alemoor Reservoir on the B711. The present farm was built fairly recently, with the older one close to the dam at the end of the reservoir. This was formerly the site of a peel tower, on the high left bank of the Ale Water, dating probably from the 15th century. There are several enclosures and signs of former cultivation near the old farm location. The farm was in Selkirkshire in 1511 when it was included in a grant of lands to Adam Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell. The separate farm of Easter Alemoor is known from at least 1573, when it had a separate owner. Wester Alemoor was forfeited (along with many other...

Wester Braid Road (wes-tur-bräd-röd) n. extension of Braid Road to the other (southern) side of Wellogate Brae. The track there was formerly also known as the Cross Road. It was developed in the early 1930s to provide access to Fisher Avenue. The road continues as a right of way to Hardie’s Hill.

Wester Burnfit see West Burnfit

Wester Burnfit (wes-tur-burn-fi’) n. former name for part of the lands of Burnfoot in Wilton Parish. In 1718 it was owned by the Scots of Buccleuch, unlike the adjacent Easter Burnfoot. It consisted of 226 acres, bounded by Easter Burnfoot, the River Teviot, Wilton, Burnhead and Galalaw. The mill is shown in the south-eastern corner, and there are woods near there along the river, as well as along the Boonraw Burn.

Wester Burnfit Mill (wes-tur-burn-fi’-mil) n. another name for Burnfit Mill.

Wester Bushes (wes-tur-bu-shee) n. hilly area in Craik Forest, west of Howpashley, and north-east of Craik Moor. It is crossed by the Roman road. There are old enclosures there, visible on aerial photographs.

Wester Clarilaw (wes-tur-klä-ree-law) n. former name for the western half of Clarilaw in Wilton Parish. In 1678 it was owned by William Scott of Clarilaw and valued at £182. In the 1718 Buccleuch survey it was not owned by the Scots of Buccleuch, although the eastern section was. It was stated that 6 acres of land belonging to it were mixed with Easter Clarilaw, while one acre mixed with it belonged to Wester Clarilaw. Part of it was recorded being owned by the trustees of Thomas Turnbull of Knowe in 1788 and on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (valued at £65), with the other part owned by William Scott of Burnhead (valued at £117). The parts were later owned by the Dicksons of Alton and Watson of Burnhead.

Wester Commonsde (wes-tur-ko-min-süd) n. name for part of the farm of Commonsde. It was described as a 40-shilling land in 1603 when leased to Gilbert Elliot (it was ‘Westir Comomsyde’ in 1603).

Wester Craik (wes-tur-kräk) n. former name for part of the lands of Craik.

Wester Dykeback (wes-tur-dik-bak) n. land lying approximately between Burnflat Brae and Crumhaughhill Road, probably once the back part of the area known as Thorterdykes, and distinguished from Easter Dykeback, which was to the north-east. The Burgh boundary passed diagonally through here.

Wester Essenside (wes-tur-e-sin-süd) n. farm west of Ashkirk, close to Easter Essenside, along the Todrig Burn. It was owned by the Scotts of Burnfoot on Ale in the early 17th century and was farmed in the 18th century by the Laings. In 1643 it was valued at £400 and owned by Thomas Scott. It was valued at £540 according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls. David Henderside was owner in 1761. By 1788 the lands were valued at £400 and owned by Mrs. Elliot of Borthwickbrae (with the teinds of these lands and Leap Hill being another £12). John Thomson was farmer there in at least 1789-94. Robert Thomson was farmer there in 1797. It was owned by Mrs. Elliot of Borthwickbrae in 1788 (and still recorded in about 1811) and Allan Eliott Lockhart by 1874. William Aitken was there in the mid-19th century and J. Paterson in the 1860s (see also Essenside; it is ‘Wester Eschinsyde’ in 1609 and ‘westessen-syd’ in 1663; it is marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Wester Grundistone (wes-tur-grun-dee-stin) n. former lands at Grundistone, which, along with ‘Easter Groundistone’, were owned by the Scotts in the 16th century. ‘Thomas Scot in Wester-groundiston’ is listed by Scott of Satchells as one of the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch. It was part of the estates of the Duchess of Buccleuch by the end of the 17th century. Francis Scott was tenant there in 1694, with James Dean as shepherd, and Adam ‘Inglish’ recorded being ‘out of the shire’. In the 1718 survey of Buccleuch properties it covered 362 acres, bounded by Easter Grundistone, Boonraw, Drinkstone, Wilton Common and Salenside. A stream separated it from Easter Grundistone, and in 1718 farmhouses are shown on either side of this stream. The lands were leased from Buccleuch Estates by Gideon Scott of Falnash in 1744, along with a declaration about what would happen if the adjacent Hassendean Common was divided (it is ‘Wester Grundistone’ in 1643, ‘Westergrundiston’ in 1694 and ‘Wester Grandiestone’ in 1718).

Westerhall (wes-tur-hal) n. house in Eskdale, near Bentpath, long a seat of the Johnstones. The mansion was largely built in the 17th century, and repaired following several major fires, the last in 1955 – ‘The Johnstones met at Westerhall, and they sang o’ the raid and the moon, Wi their ‘Ready aye ready’; the Johnstones cry, For they’re ‘ready’ baith late and soon’ [T].

Wester Hassendean (wes-tur-haw-sin-deen) n. former name for the lands which were ‘commonly called Horsliehill’ according to a charter of 1616, when they were sold by the Earl of Home to Gilbert Elliot of Stobs.

Wester Heap (wes-tur-heep) n. older name for the farm at East Whitehaugh and surrounding area. It was exchanged for Milstoning between the Langlands and Scott families in 1453. In 1650 there is a list of 8 communicants there, with surnames Almond, Easton, Scott and Waugh. Robert Scott paid £448 in land tax there in 1663. Scott of Whitehaugh paid the land tax for these lands and Whitehaugh in 1678, with joint value £648 10s. In 1694 John Barrie was blacksmith there and 7 other householders were listed. ‘Wester Heap, otherways called Easter Whitehaugh’ is recorded on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (and the 1788 county valuation) as part of the estate of Scott of Whitehaugh (also spelled ‘Hepe’, ‘Help’ and other variants; it is ‘Wester heape’ on a 1650 parish map).

Westerhooses (wes-tur-hoo-seez) n. Westerhooses, a former farm between Clarilaw and Horsleyhill. It is referred to in a charter of 1516, when Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme gained this (and other lands) after being forfeited by Alexander, Lord Home, and belonging to John Murray of Falahill. This charter was revoked by the King in 1535, when superiority returned to George, Lord Home. It was listed in 1582 among lands for which Robert Elliot of Horsleyhill demanded the charters of his father from the widow of Sir Walter Ker of Cessford; it is there said to have also been called Little Hassendean. It became part of Minto Parish in 1690. James Smith and Walter Armstrong were there in 1694. It was farmed by the Dicksons of Hassendeanburn in the 18th century. William Turnbull is recorded as farmer there in 1797. The lands were bought by Robert Scott of Whitslade in 1643 and valued at £156. Thomas Scott of Whitslade owned the lands in 1678 and they were combined with Easter Hermiston by 1743. They were all owned by William Govan in 1788.

Wester Hislop (wes-tur-hiz-lop) n. former part of the farm of Hislop, mentioned in the 16th century and early 17th century (it is ‘West Heislehoip’ in 1572 and ‘Wester Heissilhoip’ in 1615).

Westerhooses (wes-tur-hoo-seez) n. Westerhooses, farm near Bonchester Bridge, just to the east of Ruletownhead. The farm includes a lade and mill pond. In 1538 it was valued, along with Strange, at £6 5s; the two sets of lands were together referred to as 5 steadings. In 1541 the Nicholas and Margaret Oliver were tenants in part of the farm, paying 18s 9d yearly, and Alexander Oliver in another part, paying 6s 3d. There were 3 hearths recorded on the tax rolls there in 1694. In the 18th century Andrew Murray is meant to have found a box of gold coins on the farm while ploughing one day. William Oliver was farmer there in 1794 and 1797. Henry Elliot was farmer there in the 1860s. There was also once probably a small threshing mill there, powered by water from a pond. A ‘polished felsite axe’ was found there in the 19th century. To the east is an area of rig and furrow, and further east lies the ruined peel tower of Killnike, and also an ancient earthwork, called Iron Castle (it is ‘westirhous’ in 1538, ‘Westirhousis’ on 1539, ‘Westirhous’ in 1541, ‘Wester Houssis’ in 1571/2 and ‘West houses’ in 1797).
Westerkirk

and is now called Horsleyhill Cottages. An axe-head (made of felsite) found there is now in the National Museum of Antiquities of Scotland (it is ‘Wester Houssis’ in 1353; referred to as ‘West-houses’ in 1600, it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Westerkirk (wes-tur-kirk) n. village and surrounding parish in Dumfriesshire, to the northwest of Langholm. Thomas Telford was born here. The church was granted to the monks of Melrose by John Graham, Lord of Westerkirk and confirmed by Robert I in 1321. A separate chapel (at Boyken) within the parish was founded following a charter of 1391, dated at Glendonwyn (in Ewesdale) in which Archibald, Earl of Douglas mortified certain lands in the Barony of Hawick to pay for its foundation, under the direction of his Bailie Adam of Glendonwyn (or Glendinning); the chaplain was to pray for the souls of the late James, Earl of Douglas and for his ‘brother’ Sir Simon of Glendonwyn (who also died at Otterburn), as well as the living Douglasses. In 1447 William Scott was presbyter and ‘perpetual vicar’ in this parish, when he witnessed the sasine for the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1663. The parish was briefly united with Roxburghshire following an Act of Parliament of 1672. Before the creation of Teviothead Parish, it had a boundary with the south-western portion of Hawick Parish (it is ‘Waststirker’ in 1324).

Wester Kirkstile (wes-tur-kirk-stil) n. name once given to the western approach to St. Mary’s Church, which is now gone, but shown in old drawings (e.g. a water-colour sketch by T.H. Laidlaw) as steps leading through the wall in St. Mary’s Place. This was formerly where auctions and other public notices would be announced by the town bellman after Sunday services. Wilton Crescent was also known as ‘the Wester Kirkstyle of Wilton’ (also spelled ‘Wester Kirkstyle’).

Wester Lilliesleaf see West Lilliesleaf

Wester Loch (wes-tur-loch) n. name used for the western of the 2 Branxholme Lochs, also known as Chisholme Loch. ‘Wester loch house’ must have been a cottage near here, where Walter Heatley lived in 1774.

the Wester Loft (thu-wes-tur-loft) n. name sometimes used for the Weaver’s Loft in St. Mary’s Kirk, also known as ‘the Bailie’s Loft’ – ‘…it was found therein specified that ye loft bewest the church door was allocat to the Mechanicks in ye toun as is att more length set down in Anno 1683 …’. [PR1717].

Wester Middle see West Middle

Wester Moormaw see Moormaw

Westermast (wes-tur-maist) adj., arch. furthest west (variant of westmaist; also wastermaist and westermast).

Western Bank (wes-turn-bawnkg) n. bank based in Glasgow, which became the second largest in Scotland. The Hawick agent was Charles Kirk in the mid-19th century. The bank failed in 1857, ruining many people around Scotland, and was eventually taken over by the National Bank of Scotland.

Western Star (wes-turn-stawr) n. one of 3 cricket teams set up in 1849, representing the western part of Hawick. The team only survived for a short time.

Western Tollbar (wes-turn-töl-bawr) n. another name for Wester Toll.

Wester Nurseries (wes-tur-nur-su-reez) n. former nurseries between the New Road and the river, starting at the Coble Entry. The area was owned by the Duke of Buccleuch and used as a nursery for raising forest trees and shrubs by Dickson & Turnbull’s in the 19th century. The land was gifted to the town in the 1930s. Also called ‘West Nurseries’.

Wester Parkhill (wes-tur-pawk-hil) n. former name for part of the farm of Parkhill, to distinguish it from Easter Parkhill. In 1678 Walter Chisholme paid the land tax there for the farm and mill, when it was valued at £100. Robert Elliot and Robert Scott were there in 1774 and William Rodger was farmer in 1797. By 1788 (and still recorded that way in 1811) it was valued at £66 13s 4d and owned by Thomas White, merchant in Jedburgh; however, £33 6s 8d of Chisholme Mill had been separated out and was then part of the Chisholme estate. Cattle dealer Adam Scott was living there in 1841, as well as labourer George Richardson, and their families. By 1874 it was part of the estate of William Richardson Dickson of Alton (along with Easter Parkhill).

Wester Perk Hill (wes-tur-perk-hil) n. Wester Park Hill, hill just to the north-west of Branxholme East Loch, lying between Chapel Hill and Easter Park Hill, with the farm of Parkhill to the north-west. It reaches a height of 303 m. The farm of Wester Parkhill was nearby.

Wester Roughlee (wes-tur-rowch-lee) n. former name for a steadying in Jedforest. It was recorded along with Midroughlee and Roughleeneuk in 1538 and 1539, valued at 20 shillings
Westershielhope

(it is ‘terraram de Rouchleis vocatarum Westir Rouchleis’ in 1539; see Roughlee).

Westershielhope (wes-tur-sheel-höp) n. former name for lands in Jedforest, recorded as ‘Westirschelehoip’ in 1538 and ‘Westirscheilhop’ in 1539. It was among lands that passed from the Douglases to the Crown in about 1537, which had lain waste for the previous 20 years, with Walter Scott of Buccleuch accused of occupying it during that period.

Wester Swanshiel (wes-tur-swan-sheel) n. former farm in Hobkirk Parish, the western part of Swanshiel, the division happening around the early 17th century. In 1622 the lands were inherited by Adam Turnbull of Harsthaugh from his grandfather Hector. In 1643 the western part was smaller, and valued at £32 10s. Adam Turnbull was there in about 1663, when it was valued at £32 10s. The lands of ‘Wester Suansheill’ are recorded in 1683, when inherited by Gilbert Elliot from his father Archibald of Craigend. Thomas Turnbull was there in 1694. It was held by a branch of the Turnbuls until the late 18th century, being recorded belonging to John Turnbull in 1788. It was let along with the neighbouring farm of Unthank in the late 18th century. A tenant in the late 18th and early 19th centuries was John Donaldson, whose wife Peggy Deans was still reaping at harvest time at the age of 77. It was then tenantied by the Taylors and others, before being incorporated into Kirknowe. A cottage there has a corner stone, previously a lintel, bearing the dates 1684 and 1798. In 1811 it was owned by John Turnbull and valued at £33 6s 8d. By about 1875 it was owned by Sir Walter Elliot of Wolfelee (it is ‘Wester Swansheild’ in 1622, ‘wester Swansheill’ in 1663 and ‘Wester Suansheill’ in 1694).

Wester Toll (wes-tur-töl) n. one of Hawick’s 4 toll houses, which was in use when the New Road opened. Its position is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. A plaque marks its position near the Coble Entry by the High School. There was once a well there at the head of the Coble Entry. The earlier ‘Auld Wester Toll’ was also known as the Loan ‘Toll, and was at 26 Loan (also called the ‘Western Toll-bar’ and other variants).

Wester Weens see Wester Winds

Wester Wells (wes-tur-welz) n. former name for a farm that was part of the Wells estate in Rulewater, distinct from Easter Wells.

Wester Whitehaugh (wes-tur-whi’-uf) n. former name for the lands known as Whitehaugh.

Wester Winds (wes-tur-wündz) n. former name for lands in the upper Teviot valley also called Weensland, situated near Weens Sike. They are mentioned in the 1686 confirmation of lands to the Scotts of Buccleuch and were at that time in the middle of lands possessed by Robert Griewe in Commonside. ‘Wester Weens (in Hawick)’ was valued at £179 according to a valuation of Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1707. The lands of ‘Wester Weines’ are listed as part of Commonside in the 1718 survey of Buccleuch lands. In 1811 ‘Wester Weens, acquired from Earl of Queensberry’ was part of the Buccleuch estates, valued at £179 (see also Weensland).

Westfield Works (west-field-wurks) n. small knitwear factory on the left-hand side of Drumlanrig Square, at Nos. 27–28. It is run by William Lockie & Co. Ltd. It had previously been George Scott & Son.

West Fodderlee (west-fö-dur-lee) n. part of the lands of Fodderlee in the lower Rule valley, lying west of Easter Fodderlee, and south of Old Fodderlee. It was also referred to as ‘Wester Foderlee’ and was separated from East Fodderlee in the 17th century. It was owned by Helen Turnbull in the late 17th century, and after she married William Chisholme of Parkhill it passed to their son Mark. William Chisholme was recorded as owner in 1707 when it was valued (probably along with Ruletownhead) at £175. By 1788 it was owned by Barbara Chisholme and valued at £78 9s. Henry Oliver was farm steward there in the 1850s and 1860s. James Turnbull was tenant there in the 1860s. It was recorded being owned by David Henderson of Abbotrule in about 1874, and valued at £78 9s. The Bruces became tenants in 1887 and ‘Mrs. Joan Wood or Bruce’ is recorded as owner in the Land Tax Rolls of the end of the 19th century, when it was valued at £142. The farm is the location for the Sclaterford, where there was a skirmish between Lord Dacre’s men and a band of Scots in 1513, with the Sclaterford bridge being located just to the south. There was probably a small threshing mill here, powered by water from a pond. In the fields to the south-east a linear cropmark was found in aerial photographs (see also Fodderlee; it is ‘Wester Foderly’ in about 1874).

Westgate (west-gät) n. street leading out of Denholm to the south, passing the War Memorial and Westgate Hall and turning into Dene Road.
Westgate Haa (west-gá-haw) n. oldest house in Denholm, at the corner of the main street and Westgate, essentially marking the south end of the village. The name was used to distinguish it from ‘East Castle’. It was built in 1663 for Archibald Douglas, possibly on the site of a much older building, West Castle, which belonged to Guy of Dunum around 1300. The house measures about 17 m by 7 m and consists of 2 floors plus a garret (with a modern addition to the south-west and modern fore-stair). A lintel over the entrance on the north-east side bears the date 1663. A corner stone of the roof has a Douglas heart, and there are other carved stones on the exterior. The Douglas coat of arms and monogrammed initials of Sir Archibald and his wife Dame Rachel Skene are still carved over a fireplace inside. It may be the ‘Denholme House’ listed with 3 hearths on the tax records of 1694. In 1907 the upper level was given by the Palmer-Douglases for use as a village meeting hall, with an outside staircase added. It was used for this purpose until the 1950s. It is now a ‘Class A’ listed building.

West Highchesters (west-hI-ches-turz) n. former name for the main estate at Highchesters, distinguished from the smaller estate of East Highchesters. It was listed as ‘Wester Highchesters’ in 1788, when owned by Walter Scott of Harden.

Westla (west-la, wes-la, -lu) adj., arch. a version of Wesla or Western. Used formerly to describe the half of the town west of the Slitrig.

Westlands (west-linCz) n. James (17th/18th C.) innkeeper in Hawick. In 1702 he was fined ‘for keaping of company drinking in his hous, with the pyper playing, after the ringing of the tenn hour bell’.

West Lees (west-leez) n. farm just north of Hawick, between the A7 and Appletreehall. In the 16th centuries the lands were known as ‘Wester Moormaw’ and were held by John Scott, Vicar of Hawick from the 1530s, afterwards passing to his illegitimate son James. It was home of a branch of the Scotts in the 16th and 17th centuries. William Scott ‘in Lies, alias Milma’ was (sometime around 1600) listed by Scott of Satchells as one of the 24 ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch. The lands here were part of Hassendean Parish until 1690 after which they fell within the bounds of Wilton. John Wilson was farmer there in 1841 (also spelled ‘Lies’, etc.; it is marked as ‘Westlies’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and Blaen’s 1654 map, but as just ‘Lees’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

West Lilliesleaf (west-li-leez-leef) n. former name for lands adjacent to Lilliesleaf, probably the same as what was later called Riddell. This name, or ‘Wester Lilliesleaf’, was in use from the 12th century until the 16th century. The granting of lands here to Walter Riddell in the mid-12th century is one of the first known charters from King David I to a layman. The relief of these lands of James Riddell was gifted to Walter, son of Sir David Scott of Buccleuch. In 1636 the lands of Moormaw were nearer to Bedrule Kirk than their own kirk. George Rutherford was tenant there in 1797. In 1811 it was still valued at £66 13s 4d, when owned by William Elliot of Wells. It was later owned by Sir William F. Elliott of Stobs. John Armstrong was tenant in at least 1841–1861 (also written ‘Westles’; marked on Stobie’s 1770 map; it may be the ‘west leis of Nether Bullerwall’ recorded in 1592, is ‘Weast leas’ in 1545, ‘Wealeyis’ in 1617, ‘Westlies’ in 1634, ‘West lies’ in 1663 and ‘lie Steedings de Westlies’ in 1680).

Westlin (west-, was-lin) adj., poet. western, westerly, from or in the west – ‘Phoebus had sunk adown the westlin wave . . . ’ [JTe], ‘. . . To view the bonny godwen screen, That hang alang the westlin sky’ [JTe], ‘Old people invariably talked of westlin and eastlin winds’ [HAST1902] (also written ‘wastlin’).
West Linton (west-lin'-in) n. town on the Lyne Water in the old county of Peeblesshire, known for its sheep markets, stone carvers and silver and lead mines. Two well preserved prehistoric burial cairns are in the hills nearby, as well as the remains of old silver and mining operations. A festival associated with the Whipmen, an old horsemen’s society, has been held most years in June since 1803. Population (1991) 1,157.

West Ludge (west-luj, -laj) n. former lodge house for Cavers estate, located by the main road near Deanbrae, at the end of a track leading to Cavers House. It is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, while today’s maps only show the wood called ‘West Lodge Covert’.

Westly Sike (west-lee-sik) n. stream in upper Liddesdale, rising on the western slopes of Larriston Fells and flowing roughly north-west to join the Larriston Burn.

West Mains (west-mänz) n. former name for lands owned by the Baron of Hawick on the west side of the Town. This was part of the demesne lands of the Baron, distinct from East Mains, which was to the east of the Town. Rather than being a specific ‘home farm’, this was just the name given to a set of lands. In a survey carried out for the Duchess of Buccleuch in 1718 its detailed outline is shown at that time; it was composed of 2 parts, the largest part bounded by Hawick Common, the River Teviot and the western edge of the Burgh lands, including Myreslawgreen and the Loan, while the smaller part was on the eastern side of the Loan, from Burnflat to about the Kirkwynd, and going all the way down to the Slitrig. Over time parts of the lands were sold to the Burgh or incorporated into neighbouring farms. In 1494 it was given (along with Crumhaugh) by James Douglas of Drumlanrig to his son and heir James; it is there valued at £5 ‘of old extent’. In the 1511 charter for the Barony of Hawick it is listed explicitly among the lands held ‘in property’ by the Baron. It is named in the 1547 Charter and had a boundary with the Common. It is also listed among the Baron’s properties in a promise of infeftment in 1559 and in the retour of 1572 for Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig. In 1590 there is a document of rental of the land by Sir James Douglas from Walter Scott, younger. It is described there as a ‘2 merkland’. It probably once formed part of the ‘demesne’ lands of the Baron, and is listed among the Baron’s property in the ratifying Parliamentary Act of 1594. In the 1663 Land Tax Rolls it was ‘posset and wadsett’ by Rev. Robert Cunningham, William Ruecastle, James Laing and Walter Scott at West Port. In 1686 it is described as ‘extending to eight husband lands’. In 1675 it was described as ‘extending to 8 husband lands, when there was a ‘wadset’ on it, and it is still recorded among the rental records of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1690. When surveyed in 1718 it consisted of 186 acres, mostly of ‘corn land’ and ‘moderately good but very stoney’. In the 18th century it was described that the tenants of these lands had similar privileges to the Common as the Burgesses of Hawick. Based on the 1767 description of the Common it lay to the west of the Nipknoves by that time. It is unclear when the name ‘West Mains’ ceased to be used to describe lands – ‘Then east the march dyke with Crumhaugh to the march with the Westmains of Hawick, and along the Westmains dyke down to the Burnfoord . . .’[C&L1767] (it is ‘West Manys’ in 1494 and 1511, ‘West Manys’ in 1511/2 and 1514, ‘West Manys’ in 1514, ‘West Manis’ in 1559 and 1572, ‘West Manys’ in 1594, ‘West-manys’ in 1615, ‘West Maynes’ in 1686 and ‘Westmains’ in 1767).

West Mains (west-mänz) n. name of farm that was once part of the Cavers estate. It was once a centre for spinning. It is on Stobie’s 1770 map, located near the modern farm of Kinninghall. In at least 1794–97 the farmer there was Robert Hall.

the West Mairch (thy-west-märch) n. the West March, consisting of Dumfries & Galloway and neighbouring areas on the Scottish side, generally held by the Maxwells. More specifically it consisted of the valleys of Esk, Ewes (although this was sometimes in the Middle March), Wanchope, Annan and Nith, along with part of Gal loway.

westmaist (west-mást) adj., arch. furthest west (also wastmaist, watermaist and west ermaist).

West Middle (west-mi-dul) n. farmstead in Cavers Parish, just south of Midgard. The name distinguishes it from East Middle. John Turnbull was there in 1694. Alexander Ferguson was farmer there in 1797 (it is ‘Wester Middle’ on Stobie’s 1770 map and still so marked on the Ordnance Survey map; it is ‘Westermiddle’ in 1694 and ‘West Middles’ in 1797).

West Middles (west-mi-dulz) n. farm just south of Lilliesleaf. John Preston was there in the 1860s (there is no obvious connection with East Middle in Cavers Parish; ‘Westermiddles’ and ‘Easternmiddles’ are marked on Stobie’s 1770 map.

West Minti (west-min‘-i) n. former farm near Minto village. It was among the farms burned by the Earl of Hertford’s men in 1545.

the West Nurseries (thu-west-nur-su-reez) n. a former name for the land that became the Buccleuch Playing Fields, now forming the part of Wilton Lodge Park on the south side of the river, also called ‘West Nurseries’.

Weston (wes-tin) n. Rev. Thomas (16th C.) Parson of Wilton recorded in 1567, perhaps serving until 1574, when he demitted. In 1567 he and Robert Scott of Thirlstane relieved Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme as surety for Archie’s Will in Gorenberry and Sim Elliot in Dodburn; he was recorded there as ‘Maister Thomas Westoun’. Presumably the same ‘Maister Thomas Westoum, aduocat’ was mentioned in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, with Sir Walter still owing him for an account. Thomas, advocate, is recorded demitting the vicarage of Hассendale Parish in October 1576, and appears to have been recorded in that benefice from 1568; so he may have held the vicarage of Hассendale for 2 years after he was Parson of Wilton. He is probably the ‘Mr. Thomas Westoun, attorney’ who presented the briefs in Roxburgh Sheriff Court for the serving of heirs to David Scott and Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1569. He is probably the same ‘Maister Thomas Westoune, aduocatt’ who witnessed the 1568/9 bond between the Scotts and the Kers at Melrose. He may be the same as ‘Maister Thomas Westoun, advocat’ who was the notary for the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1574 and who prepared ‘And Inventare of Walter Scot of Branxholme’s evidentin’ in 1577 (also spelled ‘Westoun’).

West Port (west-pör‘) n. original entrance to the town from the west and south-west directions, i.e. the Carlisle road. It was once known as the Townhead Port and situated at the foot of the Loan. Work was done on it in 1734. The old gate was removed around 1762, with a jutting stone at pavement level indicating its position, with a matching rybat stone in the Museum. It remained the main entrance to the town from the south until the New Road was opened in 1815. The roadway was widened in 1895, and the Loan/Beaconsfield Terrace junction altered in 1978. A plaque at No. 2 Loan was erected by the Callants’ Club in 1964 to mark the Toll location. The lands there were home of a branch of the Scott family in the 17th and 18th centuries.

West Port Hoose (west-pör‘-hoos) n. sheltered housing built on the site of the former West Port Church in 1971–73, at 19 Drumlanrig Square (also known as West Port Day Unit or West Port Sheltered Homes).

West Port Kirk (west-pör‘-kirk) n. church near the former western entrance to the town, at the upper left-hand corner of Drumlanrig Square. It was built in 1866 following the establishment of a Free Church Mission in 1855 (in the building vacated by the stocking-shop of Andrew Haddon. In the early days it was sometimes referred to as the ‘Territorial Church’, to distinguish it from the main Free Church in Town. The building was constructed in a plain Gothic style, and a church hall was added in the 1890s. The congregation merged with St. George’s in 1956 and its War Memorials were moved to that church. The building was used for a while as a factory, bought by the council in 1961 and demolished to build sheltered housing in 1971. A school associated with the church, taught by Mr. Fowler, ran from 1865–75, when it was merged with Drumlanrig. Kirk Session records for 1859–92 are in the National Archives. A roll of the ministry is: R.R. MacQueen 1869–72; Alexander Westwater 1894– ; … Horace Walker 1939–44; Tom Morton 1945–51; … (not to be confused with the West End or ‘Green’ Kirk).

West Port Mission (west-pör‘-mi-shin) n. branch of the Free Church established in Walter Haddon’s old stocking-shop in the Fore Raw in 1855, supported by William Kedie and others. It led to the establishment of the West Port Church, which was erected in 1866.

Westport Road (west-pör‘-röd) n. old name (on Wood’s 1824 plan, for example) for what became Beaconsfield Terrace.

Westrop see Wilstrop

West Riddell (west-ri-duul) n. farm on the former Riddell estate. Thomas Orr was farmer there in the 1860s.

Westshiels (west-sheelz) n. farm in Southdean Parish, near Lustruther, now in the middle of Dykeraw Plantation. Patrick Oliver was tenant there in 1794 and 1797, with William Telfer the shepherd in 1797. It was farmed by Andrew Common from at least the 1840s to 60s. Part of a polished stone axe was found on the farm about 1974
Westside

(also written ‘West Shielis'; it is ‘Westshields’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Westside (west-sid) n. street in Denholm that runs along the west side of the Green, and continues south of Main Street.

Westside Mill (west-sid-mil) n. stocking-machine mill in Denholm, on the west side of the Green, behind Greenview. It dates from the late 18th century. It has 3 storeys and small windows for lighting each machine, and represented an early stage in the development of textile factories. It ceased operating as a textile mill in the late 19th century and later became a warehouse for Scott the joiners, then a barn for a nearby farm. Around the 1980s it was converted into a house, preserving the building (it has been locally known as ‘The Old Mill’ and ‘The Stocking Shop’ and has also been referred to as ‘Denholm Mill’, confusing it with the old corn mill near the river).

West Sooth Croft (west-sooth-kroft) n. former name for a piece of land in Minto Parish. ‘Wester Southcroft and house’ was valued at £43 18s 1d in 1779 and it is ‘West South Croft and House’ in the Land Tax Rolls of 1811. It is ‘Wester south croft’ in 1779, among the lands inherited by Rev. Robert Elliot, and listed separately from Sooth Croft Park.

West Stewart Place (west-stew-ur’-plis) n. street off Wilton Hill in the area known as Stewartfield, with houses built in 1879, and named after Rev. James Stewart. It contains Kirklands Hotel, Abbeyfield House and Wilton Bowling Club.

West Teviotdale Agricultural Society (west-teev-yi’-däl-aw-gree-kul-chu-rul-su-sI-i’-ee) n. local farmers’ organisation established by James Douglas of Cavers in 1835. It included the parishes of Ancrum, Ashkirk, Bedrule, Bowden, Cavers, Hawick, Hobkirk, kirkton, Lilliesleaf, Minto, Robertson, Southdean and Wilton, with its annual meeting being held in Hawick on the 1st Thursday in August. It existed along with Teviotdale Farmers’ Club through the late 19th and early 20th centuries. Its office was listed as Bridge House in 1852, with James Oliver as Secretary and Treasurer. It may have become more of a horticultural society than a farmers’ club. It organised shows in the Volunteer Park until 1955.

West Teviotdale Farmers (west-teev-yi’-däl-fer-murz) n. West Teviotdale Farmers’ Book Association ran a library, based at 50 High Street, in the late 19th century, and presumably was associated with the Agricultural Society.

West the (west-thu) adv., arch. towards the west, ‘west of the’.

West-the-witter (west-thu-wi’-ur) adj., arch. another form of Wesla or Westla water, i.e. referring to the part of Hawick on the western side of the Slitrig – ‘...for east the water Alexander Hyslop and William Hardie, and for west the water Peter Scott and James Badie’ [BR1701], ‘ Bailly Gledstanes and James Gledstanes, taylor, for west the water, to collect the subscriptions for the bridge’ [BR1740] (cf. East-the-witter).

West Troop o Yeomanry see the Yeomanry

Westwater (west-waw’-ur) n. Rev. Alexander (1857–1941) born in Lochgelly, he was minister of West Port Church from 1894. He was a member of Hawick Parish Council and gave lectures on social reform. He retired to Edinburgh, where his house on Liberton Brae was called ‘Ruberslaw’.

West Whitfield (west-wei’-feeld) n. former farmstead south-west of Whitfield, in the headwaters of the Wilton Burn. Agricultural labourer Robert Glendinning was living there in 1841 (when it is ‘Whitefield West’). Buildings are shown on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. A nearby enclosure is also shown in the corner of an adjacent field.

Westwud (west-wud) n. Westwood, a Victorian villa-style house in Sunnyhill, designed by John Guthrie in an Italianate style. It has a striking cast-iron porch, and interior features including a heavily arced staircase topped by a stained-glass cupola. It was built in 1880 for Thomas Purdom, Town Clerk, and his son Robert Purdom also lived there later. It is a grade C listed building.

Wether Law (we-thur-law) n. hill near the boundary of Roxburghshire with Dumfriesshire.
It lies roughly between Lightning Hill and Millstone Edge and reaches a height of 509 m.

wey (wɪ) v. to weigh – ‘... ye wie the violence o’ your han’s in the yirth’ [HSR], ‘Heyh, wei this poak-fih meal, an sei at it’s wecht!’ [ECS], n. an act of weighing – ‘Gie’s a wei ti see what wecht A im’ [GW], a weight, particularly in a pair of scales (also written ‘wei’ and ‘wie’; cf. waigh).

the Wey-hoose (wɪ-hos) n. the Weigh House, formerly occupying the lower level of Hawick’s Tolbooth. In 1727 it was ‘now possessed by Henry Orrok and others, tacksmen of the customs’ when the Council decreed that it be leased. In 1786, when the Duke of Buccleuch gave money towards the erection of the new Town House, it was stated that ‘the tacksman shall possess the weigh-house till such time as the weigh-house falls, or decays so much as to render a new one necessary’. This surveyor of weights and measures was a tenant of the Baron in the 18th century, as a late vestige of the feudal system. In the 19th century the last 2 superintendents were James Kennedy and then George Hunter.

weys (wɪz) n., pl., arch. a weighing machine, scales (noted by E.C. Smith; also written ‘weiz’ and ‘weiz’).

wey the butter, wey the cheese (wɪ-thu-bu’-ur-wɪ-thu-cheez) n., arch. a game played between 2 children, linking arms and picking each other up on their backs by turns, while singing something like ‘Wey the butter, wery the cheese, yay wup, mei doon, An this is the road ti London toon’ (see also rockety-rowe).

Wha Daur Meddle Wi Me? (wha-dawr-mee-dul-wi-nee) n. Border ballad about ‘Wee Jock Elliot’. The refrain is a Scots version of the Latin motto of the royal coat of arms ‘Nemo me impune laecisit’. Apparently the tune was played when the Liddesdale men marched to Hawick to muster for the ‘False Alarm’ in 1804. When Dr. John Leyden heard of this in a letter read to him at his sick-bed in India he leapt out of bed to sing the song with wild and enthusiastic gesticulations – ‘Oh, ma name it’s wee Jock Elliot, an’ wha daur meddle wi’ me?’ [T].

wha-div-ee-caaed (wha-ī-vē-kawd) n. whatchama-callit, something whose name has been forgotten, thingumajig, ‘... unless its a box that they’re nintent whatdivecessed comes in’ [We].

wham (wham) pron., poet. whom – ‘...ane peeple whom I haena kennet sall ser’ me’ [HSR], ‘Blisset is the man whom thou chu-usist ...’ [HSR].

Whames (whâmz) n. former farm in the Borthwick valley, between Whithope and Todshawhaugh. It is probably the seat of Adam of ‘Wammes’, recorded around the 1190s when lands adjacent to his were granted to the Priory of St. Andrews by Richard Lovel, Lord of Hawick. It is probably also the seat for ‘Henry (or perhaps John) del Whommes’ who was on the 1303/4 inquest into inheritance of the half barony of Wilton. It was owned by Robert Scott of Muirhouse and Whames in the late 15th century, probably passing to his son, George Scott of Borthwick. Robert Scott was recorded as tenant in 1501. It is listed in 1511, 1572, 1594 and 1615 among the lands that the Baron of Hawick held ‘in tenandry’. This may be the lands called ‘Quhomnis’ in 1528 when passed from John Scott of Borthaugh to his brother Walter. It is possibly the ‘Whelley’, which was burned by the English along with Branzholme and Whitchesters in 1533/4. The farm was among those belonging to Scott of Buccleuch, which were burned by a band of Englishmen and Kers in late 1548. In 1549 the tenant was William Scott, and other residents were ‘Willie’ Scott ‘called of Todshawhaugh’, John Scott and William Hall. The year before the farm had been among those whose crops were destroyed just before the harvest by a group of Englishmen supported by the Kers. Scott of Satchells lists ‘Scot of Whames’ as one of the 24 ‘Pensioners’ of Buccleuch, and descended from the Northhouse Scotts (this applying to some time around 1600). In the 1627 valuation of Hawick Parish it is estimated to pay ‘40 merks, vicarage 8 merks’. In 1650 it is recorded as ‘Quhames’ on a list of communicants of the Borthwick and western Wilton Parish; 8 ‘communicants’ were recorded there. It is likely the same as the ‘Quhalmes’ which were part of ‘Weyneslands’ in the Barony of Hawick, subject of several writs of 1654–55 in the Buccleuch papers. In 1672 and 1673 it was the ‘Rowme of Whelms’, formerly possessed by William Scott, which was leased to Ninian Elliot along with Todshawhill. In the 1686 confirmation of the lands of the Scotts of Buccleuch it is recorded that this farm was ‘sometyme occupied by Robert Langlands in Todshawhaughs’. It is also recorded that Robert Laidlaw was tenant about that time (unless this is an error for ‘Langlands’). Originally part of Hawick Parish, it became part of the new Parish of Robertson in 1689/90. In 1691 it was recorded that ‘Whelms dissolved from this rental and annexed to the new rental of the Lordship of Hawick’, suggesting that it was administered along with Hawick properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch thereafter. It was listed among the Buccleuch properties in 1707, when valued at £124 5s 8d. It was surveyed in 1718 along with other Buccleuch properties, when it consisted of 105 acres, bounded by the Borthwick Water, Todshawhaugh, Todshawhill and Whithope; it was also stated that there were trees along the Whithope Burn there, but no farmhouse at that time. It was leased along with Todshawhaugh from Buccleuch Estates in 1744 and 1751 by James Grieve, by Walter Grieve in 1792 and by Robert Scott in 1802. It was still valued at £124 5s 8d in 1788 and 1811. It is uncertain exactly where this farm was, but it came between Todshawhaugh and Whithope in the 1686 rental list. The small stream ‘Holm Sike’, to the east of Whithope is marked on the 1683 Ordnance Survey map, and may be the same name (it is ‘Qhaimy’ on a 1650 parish map, is marked ‘Whomms’ on Blaue’s 1654 map, between Todshawhaugh and Whithope, close to the Borthwick, and ‘Whelms’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; it is ‘qhommys’ in 1493, ‘Quhommis’ in 1501, ‘quhominys’ in 1502, ‘Qhommys’ in 1505/6, ‘Qhommys’ in 1508/9 and 1511, ‘Quhammys’ in Whames (whānəz) n. Adam (12th C.) recorded in about the 1190s in a charter of Richard Lovel, Lord of Hawick, when he granted lands adjacent to those of Adam of 'Wammes' to St. Andrews Priory. Henry (13th/14th C.) recorded as 'de Hommes' in 1296 when he paid hommage to Edward I. He was also recorded as 'Henry del Whommes' on the 1303/4 inquest into inheritance of the half barony of Wilton. However, there seems to be confusion over whether he was John or Henry. It seems likely he was descended from the earlier Adam. His seal attached to the Ragman Rolls shows a stringed hunting horn and the name 'S'HERNICI DE WOVMS'. It seems likely that his lands were Whames in the Borthwick valley, but there are probably other possibilities.

Wharton (whar-tin) n. Sir Thomas 1st Lord Wharton of Helagh (c.1495-1568) son of Sir Thomas, he was Deputy March Warden under Lord Scrope. In 1542 he described a plan to ‘burn the towne of Awyke’ in West Tevidell’ in an attempt to punish the rievers of that area. The plan was further discussed in 1543/4, but it is unclear if actually happened. However, he did send a force to attack Liddesdale at that time, burning 19 houses, killing 2 men, and taking 3 prisoners, along with 240 head of cattle and a great amount of goods; as a result Hermitage Castle was sent pieces of artillery by the Scots. He was made Warden of English West March in 1547. He also fought at Solway Moss. In 1553 he was made Deputy Warden General of all the Marches under the Duke of Northumberland. He was later Deputy Warden to the English Middle and East Marches until his death. He married Eleanor Stepleton of Wighill and was succeeded by his son Sir Thomas. His tomb can still be seen in Kirkby Stephen Church, although the locals still blame him for demolishing the village of Wharton because it was a blight on the view from his house.

Whaton (wha’-in) n. William (17th/18th C.) fiddler who was recorded in 1718 when reburied by the Hawick Session. He apparently rode through the town in a military style outfit, including a sword, boots, spurs and red clothes, with James Oliver (the Town Officer) playing before him, scaring some of the townspeople. He was ordered ‘to be summoned when in ye toun’, suggesting he lived elsewhere and in 1719 was ordered to appear before the Presbytery (the name may be ‘Wharton’ or ‘Whitton’ or similar).

Whaup o the Rede (whawp-o-thu-reed) n. epic poem published by Will Ogilvie in 1909, subtitled ‘A Ballad of the Border Raiders’. It tells the story of a child who was accidentally taken along with the spoils of a raid into England by Walter Scott of Harden and his men. The story derives from an old tradition that Mary Scott ‘the Flower of Yarrow’ raised such a child, who became a poet and wrote several of the Border ballads.

Whaupshaw (whawp-shaw) n. isolated farmstead in the Borthwick valley, near the head of Borthwickbrae Burn. William Inglis was shepherd there in 1851 and 1861. It may also have been known as Milsingtonshiel (it is ‘Whap Shaw’ in 1851).

whaur (whawr) adv., arch. where – ‘Whaur Teviot, Gala, or Jed’s bonnie streams . . . ’[WS], ‘. . . Rypit the reid-cheekt aipples whaur they hung’ [WL] (not particularly Hawick pronunciation).

the Wheathole (thu'-wee'-hól) n. name used up until the end of the 18th century for the area corresponding to Trinity Gardens, named presumably for being a hollow in which wheat and other crops once grew. It was owned by William Turner in 1767, in a description of privileges to Hawick Common enjoyed by various tenants. The East End Meeting House (later East Bank Church) was built there around 1780 – ‘The Burglier congregation assembling at Wheathole was the second dissenting body which obtained a footing in Hawick’ [WNK] (sometimes just ‘Wheathole’ or ‘the wheat hole’).

wheeg (wheeg) v., arch. to jog, frisk, dance about – ‘...coonjert wui its moween an its skeetleen-maigs, aa the braw folk wheeghin an dancin?’ [ECS].

Wheellands (wheel-linz) n. James, C.B.E. ‘Jim’ (?–2004) born in Hawick, he graduated in law from Edinburgh University in 1935. He became a solicitor, ultimately being President of the Law Society of Scotland. He became Lieutenant-Colonel during WWII, being Commandant at Brussels after its occupation, for which he was awarded the M.B.E. His private legal career started in Galashiels. He became involved in the Law Society, and served as President 1974–76, for which he received the C.B.E. (the surname is a variant of Whullans).

the Wheel Causeway (thu-wheel-kawz-wai) n. old road, said to be Roman, running from Jedburgh over Swinme Moor, through Rulewater and Southdean Parish and on into Liddesdale and England. It was known by locals as the ‘Wheel Causey’. The road may have been a continuation of the Maiden Way, running from Lanarkshire to Bewcastle, then through Deadwater to Wolfelee, the track thereafter becoming unclear. It is suggested that it was used by the Romans, but was built by the Britons. In some earlier records it is termed the ‘Via Regia’ (i.e. King’s Way). It was used by Edward I in 1296 when he marched with his army from Roxburgh to Castleton and back again, referred to there as ‘Wye’. It was a route later used in rieving days, and was first referred to as the ‘Wheel Causeway’ perhaps in 1533. Part of it was also used as a drove road in the 17th and 18th centuries. Sections can still be made out, but because of the multiple uses over many centuries, it is impossible to trace the age of specific parts. In Southdean Parish the route north passes through Wauchope Forest via Wardmoor Hill and then appears to separate into 3 paths, one going slightly west to cross the eastern slopes of Wolfelee Hill, another proceeding more northward and the third going further east over Highlee Hill and Lustruther farm. Other branches are said to follow along each side of the upper Jed Water, one past Westshields and Dykeraw Tower and the other over Millmoor Rig. Sections are also hard to trace because there were actually multiple alternative routes in places, e.g. on Causeway Rig in Southdean Parish, where there are at least 2 sets of tracks (it is marked ‘ye wheele Caussy’ on Sandison’d c.1590 map; the origin of the name may be the Old English for ‘wheel’, but it seems unlikely that this was because the track was suitable for wheeled carts, as has been suggested).

the Wheel Kirk (thu-wheel-kirk) n. former name for the Wheel Causeway, used by locals in Southdean Parish – ‘He also says that some stones of the ‘wheel causey’ were torn up to build the faulds’ [GT].

the Wheel Kirk (thu-wheel-kirk) n. former church in Castleton Parish, which may have once been the main one in the area. It was situated near the Wheel Causeway and not far from Deadwater at the head of the Liddel. Apparently Edward I spent the night here when he was on a pilgrimage to St. Ninian’s shrine in Galloway in 1296. It is also mentioned in a document of 1346, where ownership is stated to belong to William of Emeldon. The nearby village was called ‘Whele’ and gave its name to the church. It was given to William de Sandeford by Edward III in 1347. The tower of Peel (or Baxtonlees) also stood nearby. The church was already disused when Castleton was united into a single parish in 1604, and is still shown on Blaeu’s c.1648 map. Over and Nether Wheelkirk and ‘Wheelland’ were once among lands held by Jedburgh Abbey, as listed in the early 17th century. They are probably the ‘Quhytekirk and Quhyte-land’ (mis-transcribed) referred to among lands granted to Scott of Harden by John Home, Abbot of Jedburgh, around the 1530s. The lands there were listed in 1632 among those owned by the Earl of Buccleuch. However the lands of ‘Quheilkirk’ and ‘Quheillands’ were inherited by Sir William Scott of Harden from his father Sir Walter in 1642. ‘Over and Nether Whillkirk’ was listed (along with Wheellands, Wormscleuch, Abbotsike and Abbotshaws) among lands inherited by Mary Scott of Buccleuch in 1653 and by her sister Anne in 1661. ‘Kirk Wheilland’ was listed along with ‘Nether Wheill’ in the 1663 marriage contact of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch among the Scott Wheellands (wheel-linde) n. former name for lands near the Wheel Kirk, usually referred to along with those of the old church.

Wheel Rig (wheel-rig) n. ridge in the north-eastern part of Castleton Parish, between the Wormscleuch and Peel Burns, and with the Wheel Causeway running across it. It was ‘Quhelrig’ in 1623 when Adam Coltart was there. An old enclosure there is of unknown date. A little further north, at Wheelrig Head there is a linear earthwork, running about 650 m. The area was once used as a meeting point for shepherds in the area, who would gather there twice a year to exchange stray sheep (also written ‘Wheelrig’).

wheen (wheen) n., arch. a few, several, indeterminate but reasonably large number – ‘Peisoo, a wheen grand thing A faand thum’ [ECS], ‘A maircht eend ti the ‘Gazette’ Office, an bocht a wheen picter-postcards’ [ECS], ‘…set a guid wheen herstrings quiverin’ [IWL], ‘…bit they left quite a wheen offspring ahint thum that still leeve in the toon’ [BW1979], ‘…By a wheen o’ soople shanks’ [WL], ‘Let water-drinkers rant and whine, They’re but a wheen conceited asses’ [GWe] (from Anglo-Saxon, sometimes followed by ‘of’ and sometimes not).

the Wheenge (thu-wheenj) n. sometimes nickname for Sir Thomas Henderson used by his workers.

wheenie (whee-nee) n., poet. a little bit, small amount – ‘…O’ days a wheenie warm, the sun sae unco bricht’ [WFC].

wheesht (wheesht, weesht) n., interj. silence, quiet, hush, shush – ‘wheesht, wull ee no?’, ‘haud yer wheesht’, ‘Wheesht, ye daft haveril, gie us facks …’ [WNK], ‘‘Mam – whae was ma faither?’ ‘Wheesht, lass … (ee’ll hev um wakent) … Howts – juist a stranger’ in ma tei’’ [DH], ‘Wheesht, wumman – that’s aboot a’ she can get oot o’m …’ [DH] (also wheeast).

wheest (wheest) interj., arch. silence, shut up, shush – ‘Wheest – now what’s that? [Both spring their weapons – Wat looks through the loop hole]’ [JEDM], ‘…there’s often matters being discussed that we ken noughts about, and ee wad be best to keep wheest and no’ let on eer ignorance’ [JHH] (see the more common wheesht).

Whelpinside (whel-pin-sid) n. former farm in Feu-Rule, i.e. Hobkirk Parish. The precise position is uncertain, but it appears to have been west of Fernielees and adjacent to Broonsike. In 1413 there is a charter by Robert Colville, Lord of Oxingham to William of Symington for his lands at ‘Nether Whelpinside and adjacent to Broonsike. Where Slitrig and Teviot Meet (whär-sli’-rig-in-teev-yi’-mee’) n. song by Tom Ker, performed by him at functions of the Teviotdale Amateur Cycling Club and other venues (e.g. the Callants’ Club dinner in 1905), but then forgotten. It was resuscitated by Adam Grant junior, saved from memory, and notes of his father’s. It was sung again at the Callants’ Club smoker of 1949, performed by William Oliver. It was not included in the 1957 song collection, perhaps because some of the words seem far from Ker’s best. Ian Seeley provided a new piano accompaniment for the 2001 ‘Hawick Songs’ book.

Where Teviot Rins (whär-teev-yi’-rinz) n. song with words and music by Ian Seeley, written for Alison Seeley in 1994, and first sung by her at the 1514 concert in 1995. It is the 2nd of Seeley’s 5 Hawick songs, and the accompaniment being sparser than for the others.

wherewi (wer-wi) prep., poet. wherewith – ‘Wherewi’ thine enemies hae reprochet, O Lord; wherewi thyae hae reprochet the fitstepps o’ thine anaint’ [HSR].

Whither or No (whe-thur-or-nô) n. nickname for Bailie John Hardie’s brother.

whew (whew) v., arch. to howl, yelp – ‘…As hei bruisit and whewed the bullet-shells, and bang’t the drum away’ [DH] (cf. yuoot).

whey (whi) n. whey – ‘And bonny scab, bairn-high, Whiter than whey, On a girny simmer’s day’;

Whitfrae Brae (whi-brâ) n. former name for a road out of Denholm – ‘…scourin’ round the hoose ends for the Whitfrae Brae, where he was sittin’ whus’lin’ on them, an’ then for the Law’ [BCM1881] (the location is uncertain).

whey-sey (whi-së) n., arch. a tub in which milk is curdled (in [HAST1910]).

the which (thu-which) adj., pron. which – ‘The which day the Baillies and Council unanimously appoint the two present magistrates of Hawick …’ [BR], ‘The qch day Robert Welsh in Falnash …confest his guilt of fornication with Isbel Batie …’ [PR1720] (once used in a relative adjectival sense with the definite article; also shortened in various forms; see quhich and whilck).

whidder (whi-dur) conj., poet. whither – ‘Whidder is they beloefet gane, O thou fairist amang wemen?’ [HSR], ‘Whidder the clans gae up, the clans o’ the Lord …’ [HSR].

Whigmaleerie (whig-ma-lee-ree) n., arch. a vagyng, whinm, a fanciful piece of ornamentation (see also kickmaleerie).

whiles (wîlz) adv. sometimes, occasionally, at times – ‘For ane that lo’ed ye dear, Ye’ll whiles drap a tear’ [JTe], ‘Whiles found half-dead, just in his sark …’ [RDW], ‘…but the meat’s whiles in ane door and the mouth in the other’ [RM], ‘And whiles wi’ frends frae ower the main Auld memories to revive again’ [RH], ‘…Whiles coursing through a placid pool, Whiles rippling o’er some pebbly bar’ [JCG], ‘And whiles in the gloaming Or the mirk afores the dawn …’ [TK], ‘…Whiles drank a stowp wi’ Dandie, And saw the yeomen thrang’ [DH], ‘The Dean’s still fine to look upon, The Slitrig’s bonnie whiles’ [WFC], ‘But aince and again their lauchs wad droon The dunt as at whiles they brocht ane doon …’ [WL], ‘…A’ whiles on waxcloth slied’ [IWL].

whilk (whilk) pron., arch., poet. which – The quhilike day Patrick Richardson and Walter Graham the two present baillies having convened the toune counsel …’ [BR1703], ‘…Of fuyg coward, whilk oft breeds Among the youths mischevious deeds’ [JoHo], ‘Bills were put off fraw day to day, Whilk never used to be the way’ [RDW], ‘…Whilk canna, when the tid may tak it. Kick up as rare and rough a racket …’ [AD], ‘Belfast his bed, whilk is Solomon’s …’ [HSR], ‘…the munan’ the sterns, whilk thou hast oordeenet’ [HSR], ‘…Say, whilk is the mair humbling sicht – The Despot or the Slave?’ [DA], ‘…She bit twae inches off my lug, Whilk pained me sair’ [WP], ‘…But marvelled at the ease In whilk he ‘toned the classic tongues …’ [WL], who – ‘…that the person whilk has them quartered shall contribute with the rest’ [BR1651] (cf. whilk and quhilk; formerly preceded by the definite article, see the which).

whilom (whi-lom) adv., poet. sometimes, at an earlier time – ‘Where Hazledutha’s crystal tide Winds through its rural vale, Whilom an ancient hermit staid, The subject of my tale’ [JTe].

whin (whin) n. gorse, furze, thorny shrub with yellow flowers – ‘I hear the linties in the whins Where Ettrick rins’ [JBS], ‘I follow Teviot frae the heid, I ken each bend and whin …’ [JCa], ‘The skylark sings his praises loud Above the whins, so sweet, The rising Heap Hills smile and laugh Where happy couples meet’ [WFC].
Whinfield

whinny (whi-nee) adj. covered with gorse—‘The Millers Knowes are green again, And whinny banks their gold display . .’ [WP].

Whinny Park (whi-nee-pawrk) n. former name for a farmstead near Whitchesters. The lands of part of the estate of the Scotts of Harden. In 1779 it was among the lands liferented by Walter Scott of Harden to Charles Scott, younger of Woll. The lands of ‘Mabenlaw and Highchesters Whinny-park’ were valued at £327 13s 4d in 1788 and in 1811 at £312. It seems easy to confused with Whinney Cleuch, but is probably unrelated (it is ‘Whinny park’ in 1779).

whirken (whi-kin) v., arch. to choke, suffocate, particularly with smoke—‘Butte a rumbling noise they hearde aneatehe, And a whirk’ning reek they fand . . ’ [JTe] (J. Jamieson notes, perhaps in error, ‘thwirken’ in use in Teviendale; also whirken).

whirlagigg (whir-la-gig) n., arch. a whirligig, spinning toy, roundabout, hectic thing—‘. . . if aw got the chance an’ was yibble tae participate in the whirlagigg o’ fun . . ’ [BW1939].

Whirter Dykes (whir-tur-diks) n. alternative name for Thorarterdykes (mentioned by William Norman Kennedy in 1863).

Whisgills (whiz-gilz) n. farm south of Newcastle, on the Tinnis Burn. It was once home of a branch of the Armstrongs. In 1541 the lands of ‘Over Guhisgillis, Nether Guhisgillis, Purvanen et Vtnomound’ were valued at 9 merks and tenantied by Bartolomew and Ninian Armstrong. Adam Armstrong of Whisgills is recorded in 1581, ‘Lance’ of Whisgills was one of the Armstrongs accused by the English of raiding near Bewcastle in 1587 and the ‘the Whisgills’ was included among Scotsmen accused of another raid in 1588.

‘John of the Whisgills’ (probably also an Armstrong) is recorded in 1601. Thomas Wilson was possessor of both Over and Nether Whisgills in 1632, with a separate entry for just Whisgills under the possessions of Thomas Kerr of Ancrum. John, son of William Wigham in Nether Whisgills is recorded in 1642. Robert Oliver and Alexander Wilson were recorded as Nether Whisgills in 1694 and Robert Blaiklaw and William Armstrong in 1698. John Murray was farmer at Whisgills in at least the period 1788–91. Thomas Murray was farmer there in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls and still farmer in the 1830s. James Murray was farmer in 1861 and David Murray was there later. The New Statistical Account describes in 1839 how there was a cairn where ‘the quantity of stones is immense, and they are mostly of very large size’, with a 5 foot high standing stone nearby; this Whinlington Sike (whin-ing-tin-sik) n. stream in the upper Liddesdale valley, rising on Windy Knowe and running roughly westwards, just to the north of Tholleshope.

Whinney Cleuch (whi-nee-klooch) n. small stream in the upper Borthwick valley, joining the river on the north side between Meadshaw and Craik. It is fed by Moss Sike on the north side. The farm there was listed in the 1718 survey along with Craik. The lands there were leased from the Buccleuch Estates by Walter Scott of Merrylaw in 1744. The farm of ‘Whimcleugh’ is valued along with Craik and Meadshaw at about £667 in 1785 and 1802, and owned by the Duke of Buccleuch.

In 1779 it was among the lands liferented by Walter Scott of Harden to Charles Scott, younger of Woll. The stream is fed by Moss Sike (it may be the same as Wormiecleuch: it is ‘Winniecleugh’ in 1718 and ‘Whimnicleugh’ in 1744; the name presumably means the gorse-clad stream; it is probably unrelated to Whinny Park).
could be the cairns and standing stones noted on modern maps to the south of Timnis Hill, just over the border into Dumfriesshire. The top stone of a quern from near the farm is in Hawick Museum (it is ‘Quhisgilis’ in 1581, ‘Whisigills’ in 1632, ‘Quhisgills’ in 1642, ‘netheruhisgiels’ in 1694 and ‘Whisgles’ in 1797; it is ‘ye whisgillus’ on a map of Liddesdale drawn up by Sir William Cecil, c.1561.

and is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Whisgills Edge (whis-gilz-ej) n. hilly region on the boundary between Roxburghshire and Dumfriesshire, to the south-west of the farm of Whisgills (it is marked on the 1718 Buccleuch survey of the farm of Nether Whisgills).

whisht (whisht) interj. silence, be quiet – ‘Whisht! I hear his doggie barkin’, – Yon’s his bonnet on the hill’ [JT], ‘… Whisht, bairnies, whisht! while frae her e’en Tears on the hearth-stane fa’’ [TCh] (variant of wheesht).

whist drive (whist-driv) n. a group of people playing progressive whist. This was a very popular form of entertainment in the early-to-mid 20th century. There were whist nights organised by several of the mill social clubs etc., and it was possible to play almost every night. There were prizes for the winners and often a booby prize also. It was effectively replaced by bingo from around 1960.

Whit (whi’, whit) n., arch. short form of Whitsunday.

Whitacres see Whiteacres

Whita Monument (whi-ta-mo-new-min’) n. 100 ft obelisk erected to Gen. Sir John Malcolm in 1835 on Whita Hill above Langholm. It is locally referred to as simply ‘the Monument’.

Whitcastle Fort (whi-kaw-sul-för’) n. hill-fort just to the south of Denholmhill farm, on the north-western slopes of Ruberslaw. It has been mostly destroyed by Denholmhill Quarry, but a roughly 60 m long rampart on the north side of quarry still exists. It is unclear if the site is a genuine hill-fort, or a mediaval fortified house.

Whitcastle Hill (whi-kaw-sul-hiil) n. hill between Chapelhill farm and Branxholme Easter Loch, containing several earthworks and settlements, which are extremely clear in aerial photographs. It appears to have formerly been known as simply ‘Castle Hill’. The ridge on the east side of the summit is the location for a particularly good example of Iron Age earthworks, consisting of a fort and 6 smaller earthworks. The fort is about 65 m by 40 m, with double ramparts and an entrance at the south-west. The other earthworks are of a range of sizes and shapes, some appearing contemporary with the fort and some later. There is also a linear earthwork round the ridge to the north, with a sharp bend in it. A finger ring found here was said to be perhaps Roman. There is another earthwork south-east of the summit, on a ridge sloping to the north-east, much denuded by ploughing. It is probably the remains of a settlement, internally about 47 m by 87 m and containing 3 possible hut scoops. On the south-eastern slopes, just north of the road, about 300 m south-west of Chapelhill farmhouse, are the remains of a settlement, known as ‘the Clints’. About half a kilometer to the west, and also just north of the road, is another similar settlement on an oval rocky knoll. It measures about 32 m by 27 m and has an unnamed tributary (possibly Whitcastle Sike) of the Newmill Burn passing round its west side. There are also archaeological remains on the neighbouring Todshaw Hill, and a little to the south was the location of a former chapel, possibly also built on the site of one more fort (the name is likely related to the nearby ‘Whitehope’ and ‘Whitrig’ as well as the former ‘Whitlaw’ which was probably nearby).

Whitchester see Whitchesters

Whitchester (whi-ches-tur) n. farm in Berwickshire, not to be confused with Whitchesters near Hawick. It lies on the north side of Black Hill, about 8 km north-west of Duns. The farmhouse was converted into a mansion in the late 1800s (it is ‘Whyttychester’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map).

Whitchester-holm (whi-ches-tur-öm) n. farm tenanted by Philip ‘Faulo’ (probably ‘Fawlaw’) about 1510 when 4 horses were stolen from there by associates of John Dalgleish. The place is recorded as ‘Quhitchester-helme’, and it seems reasonable to associate it with Whitchesters, since Branxholme is mentioned in the same document and Philip Fawlaw is also recorded being attacked while riding to Branxholme in 1502. It was also among the farms burned by the English in 1533/4 (it is ‘Whichestre-helme’ in 1533/4; possibly related to ‘howm’, meaning low-lying land near a river).

Whitchesterhoose (whi-ches-turz-hoos) n. recorded as ‘Whitchesterhouse’ in 1545 on the list of farms and towers in Teviotdale that were burned by the Earl of Hertford’s men. It is listed right before Timpendean, suggesting this is a place in Bedrule Parish.
Whitchester Lane (whi-ches-tur-lān) n. street in Newcastleton, off the east side of North Hermitage Street, just before Whitchester Street.

Whitchester Retreat (whi-ches-tur-rec-tree’) n. Whitchester Christian Retreat and Guest House, located at Borthaugh House (and not Whitchesters, confusingly).

Whitchesters (whi-ches-turz) n. farm in the hills to the south of Branxholme, with a hill-fort nearby. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch; at that time it consisted of 243 acres, bounded by Alton Crofts, Hawick Common, Newbigging, Raesknowe and the River Teviot. The lands were held by the St. Michael family from before 1183 until about 1445, when they were forfeited. In 1383 it was included in a lists of lands from which rentals were paid to the Ward of Roxburgh Castle. In 1399 Elizabeth St. Michael, widow of John Ker, resigned her lands there to have them granted to her new husband, John Maxwell of Pollock. In 1455 John of St. Michael was attested to have inherited his father’s lands there, valued at £20 Scots (and so they may have been in dispute). The lands were granted by James II to the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1455, along with some annual rents in Hawick. The lands were held of the superior on payment, if asked, of a silver ‘denarius’ on the Feast of Pentecost. Technically it was for a while a ‘Lordship’, within the Barony of Branxholme. The traditional Lairdhship of Whitchester (usually not plural) was transferred to the Barony of Branxholme in 1463, and is now held by the Duke of Buccleuch. In 1470 the lands were promised as part of a marriage contract (between the heir of Douglas of Drumlanrig and a daughter of Scott of Buccleuch), to be held in ward and relief by William Douglas of Drumlanrig and his heirs. In 1484/5 Robert Scott of Allanhaugh had a charter of the lands and Lordship from his father David of Branxholme. He still held the lands in 1500 when he surrendered them to Walter Scott of Branxholme (his nephew) as security for a loan; the lands of Whitchesters are mentioned, along with ‘the husband lands of the town of Qhwichestir’. Adam Scott was recorded there in 1502. The Scotts of Whitchesters are described in 1507 as possessing a tower in Hawick ‘between the bridges’, one of these presumably being the ‘Auld Brig’, but it is a mystery what the other one could have been. In 1511 the lands were listed among those held ‘in tenantry’ by the Baron of Hawick, i.e. Douglas of Drumlanrig; this continued until at least 1615. It could be that the Douglases and Scotts both held part of the lands at the same time, since it was included in the list of lands inherited by Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme (from his great-uncle David Scott) in 1574. The farm was among those around Branxholme that were burned by the English in 1533/4. The lands were valued at 20 pounds Scots in 1533/4 and in 1627 were ‘estimat to 16 bolls in stok, 4 bolls parsonage, 7 lb. 10 sh. vicarage’. The farm there was long a tenanted one owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch. Jock Henderson was tenant there in 1628. The lands were included in the main Barony of Branxholme according to the services of heirs in 1634, 1653 and 1661, and the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. It was still valued at £20 in 1653. The tower house of the Whitchesters Scotts was already in ruins by 1663. The householders listed there in 1694 were Alexander Thomson, William Bell, Janet Cessford, Walter Scott, Robert Scott and John Scott, with William Cowan listed among ‘the poor’. Alexander Thomson was tenant in about 1710, with John Bell also there. Alexander Thomson was there in 1712. The farmers recorded there in 1797 were George Scott and William Davidson, with William Elliot also there. Robert Grieve was farmer in 1841. The Curds and Cream (i.e. the Friday ‘Hut’) took place at the farm there in 1846. The modern farm buildings are situated quite a bit to the east of the original farmhouse. Ancient flints and a small circular polished stone found there are in the Museum (the name means first occurs as ‘Whitchestre’ in about 1383, and is ‘hawchesteris’ in 1502; other variants such as ‘Qhwiches’, ‘Qhwichesters’, ‘Qhitchester’, ‘Qhichestir’, ‘Qhichestire’, ‘Qhichestirestir’, ‘Qhichteester’, ‘Qhyltychestir’, ‘Qhyltychesstir’, and ‘Qwichester’ occur in early documents until the modern form from 1592, although it is also later still sometimes singular ‘Whitechester’ or ‘Whytchester’, or ‘Whitchester’, as on Blaeu’s 1654 map; it is still ‘Qhitchester’ in 1636 and ‘Whitchester’ in 1694; the origin is simply ‘the white camp’ from Old English ‘ceaster’; there is a place of the same name near Longformacus in Berwickshire).

Whitchesters Bank (whi-ches-turz-bawngk) n. former place name near Whitchesters. In 1790 willows were planted there, presumably to serve as a shelter for livestock.

Whitchesters Cottage (whi-ches-turz-ko'-eej) n. cottage on a farm track to the east of Whitchesters farm.
Whitchesters Hill

Whitchesters Hill (whi-ches-turz-hil) n. hill just to the south-west of Whitchesters farm, reaching a height of 259 m. On the summit is a memorial cairn for Nan Lyle, unveiled in 2011. The granite toposcope that caps the cairn indicates the directions of local landmarks, as well as distant countries where work was done by the Borders Exploration Group.

Whitchesters Moss (whi-ches-turz-mos) n. boggy area by Sea Croft, above Whitchesters farm, originally being part of Hawick Common. It is mentioned in the 1767 description of the boundaries of the Common. In the 1777 Division of the Common, the south side was given to Robert Oliver, John Laing and Thomas Turnbull, while the rest went to the Duke of Buccleuch.

Whitchester Street (whi-ches-tur-stree) n. street in Newcastleton, off the east side of North Hermitage Street, opposite Montagu Street.

White (whi) v., arch. to whittle, pare — ‘Dinna gaun an weith ma kitcheen taibl, callant! That kneif’s a keindih daingeriss waipin thay’ve gien ee’ [ECS] (also written ‘weit’; the past tense is whate or whut and past participle whutten, as noted by E.C. Smith).

White (whi) n. Alexander ‘Sandy’ (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Sandy Quhyt in Foultoun’ in a letter of 1602 listing the tenants of the lands of Fulton in Bedrule Parish. Andrew (1819–49) youngest son of miller John. He worked as a baker. He married Christian Hogg, sister of George Hogg, manufacturer in Hawick; she died in 1882. Their children included John, Ann S. and Andrewina. He was buried in St. Mary’s Kirkyard. Archibald (16th C.) recorded as ‘Archibald Quhite’ in 1531 on a list of the occupiers of the lands of Newton in Bedrule. Claire (1888– ) last person to be born in the Haig Maternity Home. George (16th C.) farmer at Weens, recorded as ‘George Quhytis’ when his barn and yard are listed among the disputed lands in the Barony of Feu-Rule in 1562. George (17th C.) tenant at Fulton in Bedrule Parish according to the Hearth Tax roll of 1694. George (18th C.) resident at Parkhill in 1763 when his daughter Betty was baptised in Roberton Parish. He was probably also father of Isobel (b.1753), Janet (b.1760) and Jean (b.1767). George (18th/19th C.) farmer at Falside in Southdean Parish, recorded on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was owner of 4 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. He was an active member of the Relief Kirk in Jedburgh. James (15th C.) resident of ‘aula de Roull’ or Hallrule. He was recorded in 1493 when William Douglas of Cavers was fined for not producing him at the Justice- aire in Jedburgh. He also failed to appear in 1494/5 and Douglas was fined again. James (16th C.) farmer at Borthwickshiels. He was recorded about the 1540s when John Scott of Roberton was surety for him. James Oliver (1830–1901) son of Hawick miller John. He married Janet Wallis (or Wallace) Pringle in 1854. They emigrated to Australia, where he worked as an early photographer (from about 1862). He later moved to Otago, New Zealand, where he lived for a while at ‘Hawick Street, Roxburgh, Teviot valley’. James Pollock ‘Jimmy’ (1905–2010) Hawick man, known for his quiet and unassuming nature. He reached his 100th birthday in 2005, repeating the earlier feats of his mother and sister. He worked for 51 years in Lyle & Scott’s knitting department. He married Janet Telfer and had one daughter, Kathleen. He was a founder member of the Probus Club and spent much of his time in his Wellowgate allotment. He died at the age of 104, perhaps being the oldest ever Teri. John (d.c.1683) tenant in Belses Mill. His will was recorded in 1683. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Chesters (Southdean) according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. John (1774–1836) miller of Hawick Corn Mill. In 1797 he married Ann Scott (1778–1852), who was sister of Dr. William Scott. Their children included: John (b.1798), who was also miller; James (b.1803); Andrew (b.1819), who was a baker. He is probably the ‘John White Mealman’, whose unnamed child died in 1808. John (1798–1866) eldest son of miller John, he was also proprietor of Hawick Corn Mill. He inherited a large sum of money from an uncle, Dr. William Scott, and took a lease on Midshiels. He is recorded as farmer at Midshiels among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1840. He may be the John recorded as a meal dealer on Back Damgate in Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he is recorded at Midshiels, and is there in 1851, farming 157 acres and employing 4 labourers. In 1820 in Wilton Parish he married Isabella Oliver, said to be daughter of the miller of the Roughheugh Mill, but more likely daughter of John Oliver, from Ashkirk. Their children included: Anne (b.1821), who married Andrew Haddon; John (b.1823); William (b.1824), who joined the Navy; Isabel (b.1827); James (b.1830), who married Janet Wallace Pringle and emigrated to Australia; George Tucker (b.1833); and Oliver (b.1839). His wife died in childbirth.
in 1839. In 1841 he secondly married another Isabella, daughter of Thomas Wemyss (who worked at Wilton Mills); she was his 1st cousin. They had 2 daughters: Janet, who died in infancy; and Elizabeth Scott (b.1842), who married James Church and lived in Langholm. He is buried in St. Mary’s Kirkyard. Leonard (16th C.) holder of a particate of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Robert (d.bef. 1453) Burgess of Hawick. He must have died just before the ‘instrument of sasine’ in which he gained lands in Hawick from John Turnbull in October 1453, sasine being given to his widow Janet. His name is written ‘Wayte’ and the ‘tenement’ was on the south side of Hawick, between those of John Chapman and John Scott. Robert (15th C.) resident of Fulton recorded at the 1494/5 Justice-aire in Jedburgh. He was listed as ‘Roberto quhite de foulton’. George Shiel in Bedrule had remission for stealing 4 of his ewes from Bedrule. He was surely related to William of Fulton, who also had sheep stolen at the same time. Robert (17th/18th C.) tenant farmer in Todshaw. A child of his was born in 1721. Robert (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. He married Ann Ruecastle in 1754 and their children included: Betty (b.1756); John (b.1757); and Jane (b.1760). John was unusually witnessed by the ‘Whole Congregation’. He could be the Robert, son of Walter, born in Hawick Parish in 1713. Robert (19th C.) historian of Northumberland. In Vol. II of ‘The local historian’s table book, of remarkable occurrences, historical facts, traditions, legendary and descriptive ballads’ he wrote an introduction to James Telfer’s ‘The Gloamyne Buchte’, describing some Borders stories relating to fairies. Simon ‘Syme’ (16th/17th C.) weaver, probably in Bedrule. He was listed as ‘quhite’. Perhaps the same William ‘de foulton’ was recorded in 1494/5 when George Shiel in Bedrule had remission for stealing 11 of his ewes from Bedrule. He was surely related to Robert who was also a Fulton resident in 1494/5. William (16th/17th C.) farmer in the ‘heid of the parochin of Hawick’ recorded in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branc holme as owing him money for crops and teinds. He may have acted as Sir Walter’s factor or chamberlain in the outer parts of Hawick Parish. He could have been ancestor of the later William from Muselee. William ‘Will’ (16th/17th C.) from Muselee. He acted (along with Syme White from Alemoor) as security for Robert Wigham of Braidhaugh in 1623. In the Circuit Court records his name is written ‘Quhytt in Muslie’. William (18th C.) gardener at Minto in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. His surname was written as ‘Whitt’. William (18th C.) skinner in Hawick. He was listed among the subscribers to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). William (18th/19th C.) farmer at ‘Clesspool’ in Southdean Parish, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls as owner of 2 horses. He was probably tenant of the lands associated with Clesslee Peel. William (18th/19th C.) tenant of Denholm Mill and later Whinfield, he was one of the founders of the Relief (Allars) Kirk. William (b.1800/1) dyer in Hawick. In 1841 he was on O'Connell Street and was at 16 Buccleuch Street by 1861. His wife was Ann and their children included Janet, John, Ann S., James, Isabella and Elizabeth. William (b.1813/4) shoemaker in Hawick. He was listed on the Howegate in Pigot’s 1837 directory and on Silver Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was living on Silver Street in 1841 and 1851. His wife was Janet from Hobkirk, and it appears that they had no surviving children. Rev. William Spranger (19th C.) Episcopalian minister of St. John’s in Jedburgh, where the church was consecrated in 1844. He started a mission in Hawick in 1846. The mission proved so successful that the master of St. John’s School in Jedburgh was transferred to Hawick as the new Episcopalian minister the following year.

Whiteacres Hill (whi’-ä-kurz-hil) n. hill south-east of Hawick, beyond Kaimend, reaching 275 m and containing an ancient enclosure on its slopes. It is also described as part of the Kaimend Hills, and sometimes called the ‘second Kaimend’ (it is ‘Whitacres Hill’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Whiteacres (whi’-ä-kurz) n. former farmstead on the western side of Whiteacres Hill, south of Kaimend farm (marked ‘Whitacres’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Whiteacres Hill (whi’-ä-kurz-hil) n. hill south-east of Hawick, beyond Kaimend, reaching 275 m and containing an ancient enclosure on its slopes. It is also described as part of the Kaimend Hills, and sometimes called the ‘second Kaimend’ (it is ‘Whitacres Hill’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Whiteburn (whi’-, whi’-burn) n. farm on the main A6088 between Chesters and Southdeean, near where the White Burn joins the Jed Water. The Manse for Southdean Kirk is situated just to the east. John Amos was farmer there in 1851. This could be the ‘Burne’ listed in 1571/2 among places where William Oliver of Lustruther was pledge for the Olivers there.

White Burn (whi’-burn) n. stream in Southdean Parish, rising near Highlee Hill and flowing north to join the Jed Water near Chesters. A field near the upper part of the stream is shown on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, and the area also contains rig and furrow lines and lazy beds (the stream is labelled ‘Whyburn’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Whitecastle Fort (whi’-kaw-sul-för’) n. earthwork just south of Denholmhill farmhouse. It has been mostly destroyed by the large quarry to the south, with the only surviving feature being a rampart about 200 ft in length. It is unclear whether this is a mediæval homestead or an older hill-fort.

Whitecastle Hill (whi’-kaw-sul-hil) n. name sometimes used for Whitecastle Hill near Chapelhill farm.

Whitecastlepark (whi’-kaw-sul-pawrk) n. former name for a farmstead in Cavers Parish, situated on the Dean Burn to the west of Denholmhill, in roughly the same location as the modern Todlaw (it is marked on Stobie’s 1770 map).

White Cleuch (whi’-klooch) n. stream rises on Harden Moss and Mabonlaw Moss and flows in a southerly direction. It is also labelled as Marchelyton Burn on the Ordnance Survey map, as it continues past Mabonlaw farm to join the Harden Burn south of Harden Glen. The farmstead of Whitecleughside was formerly along its banks.

Whitecleuchside (whi’-klooch-sid) n. former farm in the Borthwick valley, just west of Mabonlaw. It was on the west side of the White Cleuch, a burn that flows past Mabonlaw to join the Harden Burn just above Harden Brig. It is shown on draft maps of the neighbouring parishes in 1650, with 2 ‘communicants’ recorded there. It was part of Wilton Parish until Robertson was created in 1689/90. Robert Turnbull was there in 1761. In 1841 mason William Elliot and family, along with Charles Scott and family were living there (also spelled ‘Whitescleuchside’, ‘Whitscleughside’, ‘Whytecleuchside’, ‘Whitecleughside’, etc.; it is ‘Whitecleuchside’ on a parish map of 1650).

White Coomb (whi’-koom) n. craggy hill rising 821 m above the Grey Mare’s Tail, just over into Dumfries & Galloway.

the White Dyke (thi-whi’-dik) n. ruined dry-stone wall around Hermitage Castle, probably once the boundary of the deer-park. It starts at the Hermitage Water between the village and the Castle, running uphill, then along Green Sike, turning west across the southern slopes of Hermitage Hill ending near Coldwell Snab. It is about 5 ft high and 4 ft thick and built of limestone blocks in a different style from the local farm walls of later times. It has been much robbed of stones, and hence its full extent is hard to ascertain. In its interior are other walls and ditches that are probably a deer trap.
White Ersed Nannie

white-faced (whi'-fāsd) adj. having a white face, in distinction to ‘black-faced’ – ‘An all-round increase of at least 4d. per lb. for whitefaced wool’ [HEx1917].

Whitefield (whi'-feeld) n. farm in the Yarrow valley. The ‘Yarrow Stone’ is here, near the main road, turned up by the plough at the beginning of the 19th century, along with some bones. 2 other nearby stones are probably related, the ‘Glebe Stone’ and the ‘Warrior’s Rest’. There were also formerly about 20 large burial cairns on the moor above, and it appears that the site was used for burials from the Bronze Age through to early Christian times.

Whitefield (whi'-feeld) n. former name for lands in Minto Parish that were owned by Lord Minto. In 1779 (and also 1811) there are 4 pieces of land listed separately (valued together at £190): Quarter of Whitefield House and North Croft Park; Langlands and Quarter of Whitefield; Howden and Quarter of Whitefield; and Quarter of Whitefield and House. It was among the lands formerly called ‘Minto Townhead’, which were lircerted by Rev. Robert Elliot from 1779 (it is ‘Whitefield’ in 1780).

the White Hart (thu-whi'-hawr') n. 19th century hostelry at 31 High Street until replaced by the National Bank Building about 1870. It had a thatched roof and the proprietor at one time was Mr. Lake (although that could be an error for ‘Leck’). The property there was labelled ‘Turnbull’ on Wood’s 1824 map. Robert Leck was publican there in 1841 and 1851. It was also known as ‘the Buck Inn’.

Whitehaugh (whi'-tf, whi'-tf) n. farm and mansion house (built in 1822) beyond the Dean, named after the white flowers (daisies etc.) which grow on the level parts near there. The road passing here used to be part of a drove road, avoiding Hawick on its way to the Borthwick valley. David Scott was granted the lands of Whitehaugh in 1479 and the estate was in the family for (on and off) about 400 years. Walter of Whitehaugh was recorded in 1488 as one of the heirs of Sir David Scott, although the precise relationship is unclear. John Scott ‘de quhilhalch’ is recorded in 1493 and John Scott was mentioned as tenant there in 1501 and 1502. Walter Scott of Whitehaugh sold the estate to his maternal uncle Robert Scott of Headshaw in the early 17th century. Robert’s son sold the lands in 1623 to lawyer Andrew Hay, who sold them to Walter Scott of St. Leonards in 1656, and he sold them to his nephew Walter Scott of Headshaw in 1671. The 1643 Land Tax Rolls ‘Scott of Headshaw’s Lands, being Wester Whitehaugh’ being valued at just under £450, while ‘Scott of Park’s Lands, being Easter Whitehaugh, or Wester Heap’ were valued at £200. There were 13 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650. James Scott of Whitehaugh is recorded paying £200 in land tax there in 1663. Scott of Whitehaugh paid the land tax for both these lands and Wester Heap in 1678, with joint value £648 10s. 5 separate households were listed in 1694, with Robert Brown as tenant; in Hawick ‘Leddie Whithaugh’ was taxed on 2 hearths for a house on the west-side. William Scott of Whitehaugh paid tax on 17 windows there in 1748. The first Secession services in Hawick took place here in about 1770. In 1788 ‘Whitehaugh, now called Wester Whitehaugh’ was owned by John Scott of Whitehaugh (as well as Easter Whitehaugh), and valued at £448 10s; John Scott of Whitehaugh was still listed as owner on the 1811 Land Tax Rolls. Walter Scott, Esquire, was there in 1841. The last of the family died in 1852, when the lands became part of Stirches estate. John James Scott Chisholme was listed as owner in the Land Tax Rolls of about 1874. A circular stone pot lid from here is in the Museum – ‘Sall I come skirtin’ the braid muirs When the gloamintide is still; And meet the track aboon Whitehaugh Or the road by Chapelhill?’ [WL], ‘We’ve roamed far o’er the countryside, But the grandest to be seen Is the burn that takes our fancy, Frae the Whitehaugh to the Dean’ [WFC] (also formerly spelled ‘Whithaugh’, ‘Whyauch’, ‘Whythauche’, ‘Whitehauch’, ‘Whithauche’, etc.; it is ‘Quhitehauch’ in 1488, ‘quhithalch’ in 1493, ‘Quhithauch’ in 1501, ‘quhithalch’ in 1502, ‘Quhithauche’ in 1510, ‘Quhithauch’ in 1580/1 and 1619, ‘Quhithauch’ in 1627, ‘Whytheauche’ in 1648 and ‘Whyauch’ in 1692; it is marked on a 1650 parish map as ‘Whithauche’, is on Gordon’s c. 1650 map as ‘Whyauch’ and on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Whytheauche’).

Whitehaugh (whi'-tf) n. farm in the Liddel valley, between Castleton and Dinlabyre. It is easily confused with the more significant Whitaugh, a former seat of the Armstrongs. It was surveyed in 1718, along with other properties owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch, when it covered 148 acres, bounded by lands of the Laird of Dinlabyre, Kirndean, Cockluik and a common (on the north). It included a small piece of land on the east side of the Liddel Water and the farmhouse is shown close to the modern Whitehaugh Ford. The land was said to be 'much damned by the water, and the pasture is sorry land in generall'. It appears to be the place recorded as 'Whithaugh' on the 1541 rental roll of Liddesdale (given the places it is listed near). It was then valued at 10 shillings and 8 pence and tenanted by James Armstrong. Given that it was then associated with the Armstrongs, it may be that the 2 places in Liddesdale with essentially the same name were once connected. Will Armstrong possessed the lands in 1632. It is probably the 'Whithaugh' where Thomas Armstrong was tenant in 1694. It is possible this was the 'Little Whithaugh' listed on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, with Thomas Mather as tenant. John Telfer was farmer there in 1797. John Ballantyne was shepherd there in 1835. Gilbert Telfer was gamekeeper there in 1861. There is now a row of 19th/20th century cottages there, but was gamekeeper there in 1861. There is now a row of 19th/20th century cottages there, but there was an earlier farmhouse in the same vicinity (it is 'Wythauch' on Blaeu’s c.1654 map, ‘Wheathaugh’ on the 1718 Bucleuch survey and is shown on Stobie’s 1770 map as ‘Wheathaugh’; it is ‘Whithauche’ in 1632, ‘Wheathaugh’ in 1797 and ‘Wheathaugh’ in 1861).

Whitehaugh Aisle (whi-tuf-Ill) n. isolated memorial at Whitehaugh farm, which is the burial place of the last 2 Scotts of Whitehaugh, Walter and James.

Whitehaughbrae (whi-tuf-bræ) n. former lands that were owned by a branch of the Scott family. They were once Crown lands in the Ettrick Ward of Selkirkshire (and hence presumably unrelated to Whitehaugh in Wilton), probably associated with ‘Whitehillbrae’ on modern map. In 1541 the wester side of ‘Warmwod’, ‘alias Quhitehauch Braa’ was occupied by Walter Scott in Synton, but claimed by Andrew Murray of Blackbarony, paying £24 yearly. Also ‘Quhitehill Bra alias Cathmurlie’ was tenanted by Thomas Chisholme, paying £35, with 3 steadings and the mill set by Patrick Wright, Chamberlain to the Forest. Thomas Scott was the first Laird at the end of the 16th century, passing the lands to his son Walter, from whom they were inherited by a cousin, Thomas of Salenside in 1621. This could be the ‘quhithlabra’ where Thomas Thomson was recorded in 1494/5 when he contributed a horse to the itinerant court held in Selkirk (incorrectly written ‘Whitchhauchbrae’ by Keith Scott, it is ‘Quhitehauchbraes’ in 1621).

Whitehaugh Cottages (whi-tuf-ko’-ee-jeez) n. group of cottages on the left-hand side of the road just before Whitehaugh farm. There were 2 families there in 1841.

Whitehaughmains Slack (whi-tuf-müns-slawk) n. pass to the east of Wiltonburn Hill and south-west of Whitehaugh farm (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Whitehaughmoor (whi-tuf-moor) n. farmstead north of Whitehaugh, reached by the ‘Forty Fits’ track. Andrew Chisholme lived there in 1841. There are remains of 5 rectangular structures and a later sheepfold about 500 m to the north-west. Aerial photography has also shown at least 4 rectangular enclosures about 1.2 km northwest of the farm steading.

Whitehaugh Moor (whi-tuf-moor) n. area of moorland around Whitehaughmoor farm.

Whitehaugh Park (whi-tuf-pawrk) n. alternative name for the main house at Whitehaugh.

Whitehaugh Road (whi-tuf-röd) n. street built in the Dean in 1971 along the road leading to Whitehaugh farm (although the road was popularly given this name long before the houses were built).

Whitehaugh View (whi-tuf-vew) n. part of the Longbaulk housing development, constructed in 1970 and named for the view of the Whitehaugh area across the valley.

Whitehead (whi’-heed) n. James pseudonym of Dr. Dixon. William ‘Bill’ (b.c.1800) from England. He was said to be among the ‘finishers’ who came to Hawick in about 1836, following John Wilson going to the Rochdale area to learn about weaving flannel. He was listed as a ‘Fuller Journeyman’ in 1841, with his brother John having the same job; by 1851 he was a ‘Fuller Miller’. In 1841 he was living at Wilton Path-head and in 1851 at Roadhead. By 1861 his widow was living at 4 Tannage Close. His wife was Nancy and their children included John, Betsy, Martha and Janet.

White Hill (whi’-hil) n. hill just south-east of Hawick, with a triangulation pillar and height 301 m. Note that this is a common hill name, including 5 others (listed separately) and another to the west going into Selkirkshire.

White Hill (whi’-hil) n. hill above the Dod Burn, to the west of Penchrise, reaching a height of 397 m. It contains a linear earthwork (probably an agricultural boundary) running from the head of Pen Sike to the north-west for about 350. Another pair of earthworks cross the south-west shoulder of the hill, connecting a tributary of Pyatkowse Sike with the Dod Burn. There are also 3 other overlapping linear earthworks, although none seems connected with the hill-fort on the southern spur. Some of the earthworks were formerly associated with the Catrail, but they are of a different character. The hill-fort appears to have had a later homestead built on it; it measures about 60 m by 45 m, with double ramparts and a ditch. The homestead built inside is about 45 m by 30 m, with a hut circle and hut scoop inside that.

White Hill (whi’-hil) n. hill between Cogsmill and Earlside, reaching 299 m. It contains an earthwork consisting of 3 ramparts and with a linear earthwork to its south-west, as well as cultivation terraces on the north-west slopes.

White Hill (whi’-hil) n. hill to the east of Penchrise and south of Stobs, reaching a height of 311 m. It should not be confused with the more prominent hill to the west of Penchrise. On its north-east side is some kind of enclosure.

White Hill (whi’-hil) n. hill behind (i.e. to the south-west of) Skelfhill, reaching 474 m.

White Hill (whi’-hil) n. hill in Craik Forest.

White Hill (whi’-hil) n. hill in Southdean Parish, reaching a height of 262 m and containing a hill-fort. Aerial photographs show extensive rig lines of various types surrounding the entire hill.

Whitehillbrae (whi’-hil-brä) n. former farmstead between the farm of Dodburn and Dodburn Filters, on the western slopes of White Hill. ‘Archie Elliott callit Possetts’ was recorded as tenant in 1574, when listed among men accused of being thieves who were to be removed from their farms. Gilbert of Stobs purchased 5 merks of land there in 1622 (without prejudice to Gavin of Brugh’s infeftment) from Robert Elliot of Redheugh, along with Dodburn and the rest of the lands of Winnington. Walter Scott was the tenant there on the 1694 Horse Tax rolls. George Pott (ancestor of the Potts of Caerenrig, Dod, Hoscot and Todrig) was there in the early 1700s. Archibald Tait was tenant in about 1760. James Sibbald (the publisher) had the lease of the farm there for a few years until 1779. In 1788 it was valued (along with Newton) at £455 7s 4d, being an extensive farm on the Elliott of Stobs estate. It was still valued along with Newton at the same amount in 1813. It was occupied until the 1930s. The remains of the cottage and stone dyke enclosures are still visible (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map; it is ‘Quhiettilbray’ in 1574, ‘Whithillbray’ in 1622, ‘Whithillbrae’ in 1708 and ‘Whitehallbrae’ in 1760).

Whitehillshiel (whi’-hil-sheel) n. farmstead in Castleton Parish, south of Saughtree and east of Burnmouth farm. It may correspond roughly to Dykecroft, as marked on Blaeu’s c.1654 map. The top stop of a quern found there is in Hawick Museum.

Whiteholm (whi’-holm) n. farmstead in Southdean Parish, on the side road from the A6088 to Hass on the A68. There are remains of an enclosure and signs of ancient cultivation there.

Whitehope (whi’-tup) n. farm in the Yarrow valley, just west of Yarrow village, with standing stones and the Yarrow Stone nearby. These were Crown lands in the late 15th century, being leased to the Ranger of Yarrow for his fee. It was still crown property in 1541, occupied by Robert Scott of Howpasley, paying £24 yearly. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718. There were Ballantynes there in the 19th century – ‘...And Yarrow lay dark at Whitehope’s feet Like a warrior’s blade on his winding sheet’ [WHO] (there are several other Whitehopes elsewhere; formerly spelled ‘Quhithop’, ‘Quhitehop’, ‘Quhitheope’, etc.).

Whitehope see Whithope

Whitekirk (whi’-kirk) n. former name for lands in upper Liddesdale, probably adjacent to Cliffhope Burn and Abbey Sike. In about the 1530s Scott of Harden was granted the lands of ‘Over and Nether Clifhoupis, Quhytekirk and Quhylterland, Ermscleuch and Abbotisykes’. It my be related to the ‘White Stones’, which is marked near Saughtree Grain on the modern Ordnance Survey map. However, it seems more likely this is a transcription error for the relatively nearby lands of Wheelkirk and Wheellands.

Whitekowe (whi’-kowe) n. former farmstead on the Blindhaugh Burn, to the east of Acremoor Loch (marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Whitekowe (whi’-kowe) n. former cottage in Liddesdale, by the side of the road between Toftholm and Netherraw.

White Knowe (whi’-kowe) n. hill lying to the west of Stobs, just before Barnes Loch, reaching a height of 339 m. On its north-eastern spur, called Newton Hill, are remains of a couple of settlements. Aerial photographs have also shown signs of cord rig here.

White Knowe (whi’-kowe) n. hill in southern Liddesdale, near the boundary with Dumfriesshire, lying between Windy Edge and Whisgills Edge.

Whiteland (whi’-lind) n. former name for lands near the Cliffhope Burn to the north of Saughtree. It is ‘Quhyteland’ in about the 1530s when the Abbot of Jedburgh granted a set of lands to the Whitelaw

Scotts. This is probably an error for ‘Wheelland’, lands attached to the Wheel Kirk.

Whitelaw see Whitalaw

Whitelaw (whī’-law) n. place name in Melrose Parish (the origin is probably Old English ‘withig hlaw’, meaning ‘willow hill’ and is first recorded about 1200 as ‘Whytelaw’; there are ‘withig hlaw’, meaning ‘willow hill’ and is first recorded about 1200 as ‘Whytelaw’; there are

Whitelee (whī’-lee) n. farm near the head of Redesdale, just over the Carter Bar on the A68. It was formerly the site of a roadside inn. This is the area where ‘Parcy Reed’ met his end at the hands of the Croziers in the Border ballad.

Whitelaw (whī’-law) n. Alexander (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Alexandrum Quhitlaw’ in 1508 when he witnessed the sasine for Adam Hepburn inheriting his father’s Lordship of Liddesdale. He could be the same Alexander who witnessed a charter for Archibald Whitalaw, Archdeacon of St. Andrews in 1493. Andrew (15th/16th C.) witness to the 1505 charter of Boomraw, granted to Robert Scott of Stirches by Patrick, Earl of Bothwell. He is recorded as ‘Andrea Quhitlaw’. Probably the same ‘Andrea Quytlaw’ was witness to the 1508 sasine for Adam Hepburn inheriting the Lordship of Liddesdale, as well as the associated sasine.

Henry (b.1827/8) from Coldstream, he was a shoemaker in Hawick, probably son of Francis and brother of John. He was part of the firm of ‘Francis & Sons’, listed in Slater’s directory of 1852. This firm, with branches in Coldstream, Duns and Hawick, was dissolved in 1851. In 1851 he was at about 38 High Street, and employing 4 men and 1 apprentice. His wife Cathrine was from Jedburgh. John (15th C.) Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1475. He may have been related to Archibald who was Archdeacon of Lothian in 1483 when he confirmed the charter transferring the half Barony of Wilton from Henry Wardlaw to John Scott of Thirlestane. He could be the same John, Rector of Pennicuik who witnessed a charter for Archibald Whitalaw, Archdeacon of St. Andrews in 1493. Patrick (16th C.) Parson of Hawick in 1532, recorded in a letter from Lord Dacre to King Henry VIII. He states that on hearing of a possible raid of the Scottish King into Liddesdale, this parson ‘the Parsonne of Aywke, one Pate Whitelow’ and 2 Hepburns, kinsmen of the Earl of Bothwell, went to Hermitage to safeguard it from the King’s forces. His name was presumably Patrick, and ‘Whitelaw’ may be the same as ‘Whitlaw’ or ‘Whitlaw’ (although a connection with Whitlaw by the Flex seems possible, but unlikely); a distant cousin of the Earl’s, Margaret Hepburn, daughter of Sir Patrick of Waughton, married Patrick Whitelaw in about the right decade, and this may be the same man. If so he was Sir Patrick Whitelaw of that Ilk, who later married Margaret Hamilton, was accused of treason in 1567 for helping James Hepburn, Earl of Bothwell, and died before 1571. Patrick of that Ilk was also recorded in 1534/5 along with Sir Patrick Hepburn of Waughton, and several other Hepburns (some of them priests) for killing Gilbert Wauchope on the highway. And in 1526 Patrick of that Ilk was listed in a remission for Sir Patrick of Waughton, ‘Mr. John Hepburne’ (possibly the priest of Hawick) and others for assisting David Home of Wedderburn (also spelled ‘Whitelew’).

Whitelea Gill (whī’-lee-gil) n. stream in upper Liddesdale, running roughly to the north to join the Thordieshope Burn.

Whitelow see Whitelaw

the White Peel (thī’-whī’-pēl) n. former popular name for the fortified house at Satchells, so-called because it was white-washed.

white puddin (whī’-poo-dīn) n. a type of sausage containing oatmeal, suet, onions and spices, also known as ‘mealie puddin’ and sometimes served battered in a fish and chip shop – ‘A’ll hev twae white puddin suppers please’.

whiterick (whī-tu-rīk) n., arch. a stoat or weasel (cf. whutret).

the White Rose o Liddesdale (thī’-whī’-rōz-ō-ī-dīz-dīl) n. nickname for Helen Elliot.

White’s (whīts) n. White of Hawick Ltd., knitwear retailers at 2 Victoria Road, specialising in lambswool and cashmere. The firm was established by James White in 1968. It was later owned by Bill Atkins and sold to Locharron of Scotland in 2008.

white-seam (whī’-seem) n., arch. plain needlework – ‘Yince in a day the maist o this wheit-seem was shewed be hand’ [ECS].

Whiteside (whī’-sīd) n. former farm in the upper Jed valley, a little to the east of Chesters, on the north side of the river, between Roughlee and Falside. Patrick, Gilbert, Andrew and John Oliver were there in 1541. ‘Jake’, ‘Gorge’ and ‘Patte’ ‘Ollyver’, as well as ‘Eddie Ladlay’ were listed there in 1544 when they were among Oliviers who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. Dand Oliver was mentioned there in 1571 and 1572/3 and David Oliver in 1571/2. It was among lands inherited by Robert Douglas of Brieryyards from Henry associated sasine.

Dand Oliver was mentioned there in 1571 and 1572/3 and David Oliver in 1571/2. It was among lands inherited by Robert Douglas of Brieryyards from his father John in 1606. Robert Laidlaw, Thomas Oliver and William Oliver were tenants there in 1669 and Thomas Oliver in 1694 (it is ‘Quhiteside’ in 1536, ‘Quhitiside’ in 1541, ‘Whitside’ in 1544, ‘Quhiteside’ in 1571/2, ‘Whitsyse’ in 1572/3 and 1606, ‘Whytsyd’ in 1669 and ‘whittysyd’ in 1694; it is marked ‘Whytyside’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map, and shown to the south-west of Roughlee on Stobie’s 1770 map).

the White Swan (thu-whi'-swawan) n. former hostelry on the Howe gate. Also the name of a former hostelry in Denholm, now Leyden’s View.

White Well (whi'-wel) n. spring in southern Liddesdale, near the former farmstead of Powgill-craig, to the west of Burnmouth.

whitewash (wu'-wesh) n. whitewash – ‘Dirty white-wesh, deid-rot treis, Baked bean tins and mawky fleis’... [DH].

Whitreyetts (whi'-yets) n. local place of uncertain location, where John Scott was living in the late 1600s and early 1700s (‘Whiteyets’ in 1682, ‘Whytettys’ in 1701 and ‘Whiteyatts’ in 1718).

Whitfield (whi'-feeld) n. farm about 2 miles north-west of Hawick, near Calaburn farm, and reached via the ‘Forty Fits’ track off the road past Whitehaugh. There are about 9 Bronze Age ‘cairns’ or ‘saucer barrows’ on the hills to the west of here, 7 on the north-east slopes of Pisgah Hill (although these have also been suggested to be ‘ring-ditch houses’). There is also the remains of an old dyke, about 1900 yards (1500 m) long, stretching from the headwaters of the Cala Burn, crossing the Wilton Burn near West Whitfield, and ending to the north-east of Mabonlaw; it was probably an agricultural boundary. Aerial photographs have shown an area of rig-and-furrow cultivation to the north-west of the farm house. There were 8 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650. In 1694 it was listed among the lands held by Langlands of that Ilk and there were 6 separate households listed there. William Lorraine was gardener there in the early 1700s. The farm was once part of the estates of the Scotts of Harden, with Walter of Whitfield, being the 2nd son of Walter, Earl of Tarras, and succeeding to the Harden titles himself on the death of his 2 nephews without male heirs. By 1788 it had been sold off from the Langlands estate and was owned by John Johnstone of Alva, valued at £352 2s 2d. It later passed to George William Hutton Riddell. John Scott was living there in 1762. Walter Scott was recorded there in 1770 and 1772 and Walter Rae in 1772. John Oliver and Robert Scott were farmers there in 1797. Turner was farm overseer there on the 1841 census, when it is listed as ‘Whitefield East’. There are many other places of the same name (also sometimes ‘Whitefield’; it is marked ‘Whitfield’ and ‘Whitefield’ on 1650 parish maps, ‘Whittfield’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Whitfield’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Whitfield (whi'-feeld) n. former farm in the northern part of Liddesdale. It is recorded as ‘Qwytfeld’, with a value of 20 merks, in the ‘Foresta’ section of the Liddesdale rental roll of about 1376. Its precise location is uncertain, but perhaps near the Hermitage valley.

Whithaugh see Whitehaugh

Whithaugh (whi-tuk, -tuf) n. farm and former home of the Armstrongs in Liddesdale, just to the north of Newcastle ton, on the other side of the Liddel. Note that there can be confusion with the less significant ‘Whitehaugh’, further up the Liddel valley. It was listed as being worth 4 merks on a rental list c.1376 among the charter of the Douglasses of Morton. As an Armstrong seat it was second in importance only to Mangerston. It was valued at £400 in 1678. In 1580 a band of Scotts and Gladstains, who were returning from following a party that had raided Whitlaw, were attacked here by the Armstrongs; Walter (or perhaps William) Gladstains was killed, more than a dozen others were wounded and about 40 men captured, including Walter Scott of Goldielands. The house was taken by the English in 1582 and burned in 1599. The tower was once raided by a party of men from Bewcastle, led by a Taylor, when Armstrong was away in Ewesdale; they captured documents that they later burned, resulting in Armstrong riding into Cumberland where he burned Taylor’s house. Andrew, Francis and John Armstrong, sons to the ‘auld laird of Whithaugh’. Lancie Armstrong was owner in the 1630s. It was valued at £400 in 1643 and again in 1678. It is probably the ‘Whithaugh’s house’ on which tax was paid on 3 hearths in 1694. It is said that tower was once used to obtain a commanding view of the horse races that used to take place on the flat land where Newcastle ton would later be built. About 1730 it was bought by William Elliot for his eldest son John. John Elliot was taxed for 25 windows there in 1748. Half of the lands were sold to the Duke of Buccleuch before 1788; in that year the Duke’s lands there were valued at £199 17s. The remainder of the lands were in 1788 owned by John Elliot of Whitehaugh and valued at £200 3s. The tower was destroyed in about 1770 and Whithaugh Burn

Whithaugh Mill (whi-tuf-mill) n. former corn mill attached to the lands of Whithaugh in Liddesdale, just north-east of the modern Newcastle. John Graham was there in 1642. Robert Riddell was the miller there in 1743. Christopher Armstrong is recorded there in 1797 when it is ‘Whithaughmill’, William Armstrong is there on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory, Walter Armstrong in 1837 and John Crozier in 1851 (it is ‘Quhithauchmiln’ in 1642 and ‘Whithaugh-mill’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Whithope

Whithope (whi-tup) n. farmstead in the Borthwick, on the opposite side of the valley from Harden, formerly in the Barony of Hawick. The outline of the farm was shown in a survey of 1718, with Whames to the east, Todshawhill to the south and Brauxholme Muir and Parkhill to the West. At that time there was also a mill by the Borthwick and ash and birch trees, especially near the Whithope Burn and in a wood near the mill. The lands may have once been more extensive and have a long history. This is probably the lands of ‘Wichiop’ near Brauxholme, mentioned in a charter of the Lovels in about the 1190s. Adam Turnbull of Whithope is recorded in 1390. John, son of ‘ade turnebule’ of Whithope was granted the lands of Hassendeancbank in 1409. ‘Philippo Turnbul de Quihitop’ is first recorded in 1454. This Philip Turnbull, son of William of Whithope had a charter of the lands in 1456. David Turnbull was son of the Laird there in 1494/5. In 1500 Philip Turnbull of Whithope had the lands taken from him in part payment of his brother Ninian’s fine for raiding a farm belonging to the Murrays, with Whithope going to the assignee, Walter Scott of Brauxholme; the lands were then valued at 400 merks and were held of the Baron of Hawick for a penny at the Feast of the Nativity of St. John the Baptist. Philip Turnbull was tenant in 1502. Whithope Knowe is the adjacent hill, and there was another farmstead there called Whithope Mill, presumably with a corn mill, and near to the river. A charter of 1502 shows the ‘20 merklands’ confirmed to Sir Walter Scott of Brauxholme, and in 1515 they went to his 2nd son William (the charter being granted by James Douglas of Drumlanrig). They were still owned by Scott of Buccleuch in 1574, but held ‘in chief’ of Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig, and valued at £5. The lands were listed among those held ‘in tenandry’ by the Baron of Hawick in 1511, 1572, 1594 and 1615. The tenant in 1549 was recorded as Adam Scott, with other residents being William Elliot, Thomas Telfer, James Scott and Helen Scott; they were among those who complained that their lands had been burned by a group of Englishmen and Kers. There was a dispute over the lands between Walter, Lord of Buccleuch and Sir James Douglas of Drumlanrig about 1610. The lands are still listed among those held by the Baron of Hawick in 1615. John Scott was tenant there in 1627. In the 1627 valuation of Hawick Parish it was listed as ‘ane corne rowme estimat to pay 16 bolls’ in a typical year, ‘3 bolls in personage, 7 lb. 10 sh., in vicarage’. There were 16 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650. The lands were listed in 1663 among those owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch in the Barony of Hawick. The lands passed from Hawick Parish to Roberton in 1690. Francis Scott was tenant of the Duchess of Buccleuch there in 1690, 1692 and 1694. The householders recorded there in 1694 were James Scott, Robert Goodfellow, John Wilson, Robert Cook and John Riddell, with Archibald Douglas, Robert Lawson, James Noble and John Davidson listed there among ‘the poor’. The rental rolls of 1694 and 1696 state that ‘Falnesh [the Duchess of Buccleuch’s Chamberlain] is to see the wood fenced and hained’. Walter Scott, younger of Woll, was renting the farm in 1696. John Scott and Walter Scott of Merrylaw rented in 1698. This is probably the ‘Wheathop’ where James Burnet was tenant in 1701. Walter Taylor was there in 1761, James Scott, George Coltart and William Reid in 1763 and Robert Scott in 1764. William Miller and William Reid were there in the 1770s. Adam Scott was tenant in 1797. In 1841 the Laidlaw family lived there, as well as pauper Helen Broad along with her daughter and grand-daughter, and others. There are signs of a settlement a little to the west of the present steading – ‘...To Whitup and to Black-grain, To Commonsise, and Milsanton-hill, And Eilridge is left all alone. Except some Town Lands in Lanton’ [CWS] (also sometimes ‘Whitehope’ it was formerly spelled ‘Quhithope’, ‘Quithithop’, etc.; the name dates to at least 1390, when it is ‘Quhytthope’; it is ‘quithithope’ in 1409, ‘Qyvthithope’ in 1431, ‘Qviththop’ in 1447, ‘Qvithithope’ in 1454, 1484, 1500 and 1594, ‘Quithithope’ in 1500, ‘Qvithhithope’ and ‘Quithithope’ in 1511, ‘Qvithithope’ in 1549, ‘Quihoup’ in 1550, ‘Qvithithope’, ‘Qvithitehop’ and ‘Qvithithope’ in 1572, ‘Qvithithope’ in 1574, ‘Qvithithope’ in 1615, ‘Qvithithope’ in 1627, ‘Quhythope’ in 1663, ‘Whithope’ in 1686 and ‘Whithope’ in 1694; it is marked ‘Whythitup’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Whitttop’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey; the origin is probably just ‘the white valley’ from Old English ‘hop’; note there are places of the same name elsewhere, e.g. near St. Mary’s Loch).

Whithope Edge (whi-tup-oj) n. hill among the headwaters of the Teviot, reaching a height of 475 m (1506 ft) and lying at a corner of the border with Dumfries and Galloway. The boundaries of Hawick Parish once reached this far in the southwest (also written ‘White Hope Edge’).

Whithope Knowe (whi-tup-now) n. hill on the southern side of the Borthwick, just west of Whithope steading. It has an enclosure at its summit, with some structures within it; this is probably a livestock enclosure of no great antiquity.

Whithope Mill (whi-tup-mil) n. former farm on the south side of the Borthwick near Harden, and adjacent to the separate farm of Whithope. It once had one of the local corn mills. The position of the mill and mill lade are clearly marked on the 1718 survey of properties of the Scotts of Buccleuch (when it was part of the farm of Whithope). There were 3 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650. It was mong lands from Hawick Parish that became part of the new Parish of Roberton in 1690. Walter Riddell was living there in 1717, John Johnstone in 1743, John Riddell in 1765 and another Walter Riddell in 1774. John Scott was tenant in 1797 and George Scott was there in the late 18th century (referred to as ‘Whithope-mill’ in 1678, ‘Whithope-milne’ in 1690, ‘Whithopmilne’ in 1717, ‘Whithopmiln’ in 1774 and ‘Whitupmill’ in 1808; it is just ‘The mylne’ beside Whithope on a parish map of 1650, is ‘Whitehopemill’ on Stobie’s 1770 map and ‘Whithope Mill’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Whithope Moss (whi-tup-mos) n. marshy area to the north of Branxholme Easter Loch and east of Wester Park Hill.

Whithope Sike (whi-tup-sik) n. small stream that runs past Whithope farm, joining Holm Sike to become Howford Sike and then run into the Borthwick Water (marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

Whitlaw (whi-, whit-law) n. area in the Slitrig valley from Lynnwood to the Acreknowe Burn, rising to the Vertish Hill in the west. There was once a small thriving hamlet there, with a teacher in the 18th century. The name more specifically refers to the farm or farms of Whitlaw, near the bottom of the Flex road, at the edge of the old Common. They were owned by the Gledstains family in the 16th and 17th centuries, and then passed to the Duke of Buccleuch. Scott of Satchells lists Walter Gledstains of Whitlaw as one of the ‘pensioners’ of Buccleuch (the only one not called Scott), and suggests he had the lands of Whitlaw for his service. It is probably the ‘Manis of Quhylaw’ recorded in the 1574 last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, when there were ‘nyne drawand oxin’ there. Sir Walter left the farm to John Gledstains in his will. In 1580 part of the lands were held by the Whitlaw

Countess of Bothwell, when 100 sheep were stolen by a gang of Elliots and Armstrongs; this is in addition to the lands of Meikle Whitlaw being raided by a gang of English and Scottish thieves a couple of months earlier. The lands were said in 1627 to be ‘1 myll from the kirk, neyer payit ferme [probably never having been let to a tenant for rent], estimat to pay 100 merkis in stok, 2 bolls in parsonage, 5 lbs. in vicarage’. The estate of Walter Gledstains of Whitlaw was valued at £266 13s 4d in 1643. There were disputes over the boundary with Hawick Common; in 1668 the Council decreed to support the ‘casting downe the dykes builded be Whitlaw and other adjacent nighboures upone the Common Dyke of the Common’. The estate of Francis of Whitlaw was still valued at £266 13s 4d in 1678. A sundial from here, engraved with the initials F.G. (for Francis Gledstains), the date 1693, and the motto ‘Fide et Virtute’, was saved from destruction by William Norman Kennedy and presented to the Museum collection. It is probably the ‘place of Gladstens’ listed on the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694, with tax paid on 5 hearths. William Armstrong was also listed there among the poor of Hawick Parish in 1694. James Colwort and David Gray were tenants there in 1702. Robert Turnbull was tenant in 1725 and James Scott in 1766. James Knox, David Knox and Peter Scott were tenants there in 1797. By 1788 the former lands of Whitlaw had been divided into ‘Meikle and Little Whitlaws’, owned by the Duke of Buccleuch (and valued at £152 2s 7d) and Flex, owned by Mrs. Elliot of Borthwickbrae (valued at £114 10s 9d). Two farms here were long called ‘Meikle Whitlaw’ and ‘Little Whitlaw’. The 2 farms were still valued in 1811 at about £152. They were still owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch until 1895, when they were exchanged for Fenwick with James Elliot of Flex. This was once the point where the boundary of the Common passed through a house, so during the riding of the marches, a sod was placed on the roof and the Flag passed over it. The area was used at the end of the 19th century for rifle practice by Hawick Volunteers. The ‘Quhitlaw’ recorded passing from the Inglis to Scott families in 1446 may be a different place near Branxholme, perhaps related to Whithope and Whitecastle Hill. However, ‘Whitelaw’ and Lyttle Whetlawe the laerde of Bowcloughes’ were listed among farms burned by the English in 1547/8 – ‘...When, on their palfreys, they wed soon Frae Linnwood skip, and Whitlaw-braes, Beneath the soft-eyed summer moon’ [AD], ‘And echoed sternly back by Whitlaw braes – Renowned alike for bairns, and nuts and slaes’ [WNK], ‘O happy were the days I spent at Whitlaw braes, Pu’ing haws and slaes, A merry hearted boy’ [JCG] (also spelled ‘Whitelaw’, ‘Whetla’, ‘Whytlaw’, etc.; presumably named for being a white hill, possibly because of the white-blossomed blackthorn that grows there, although the Old English ‘withig hlaw’ for ‘willow hill’ is also possible; it is recorded as early as 1433 as ‘Quhitelaw’, is ‘Whytlaw’ in 1564, ‘Quhytlaw’ in 1574, ‘Quhitelaw’ in 1580, ‘Quhytelaw’ in 1616, ‘Quhitlaw’ in 1622 and 1627 and ‘Quhytlaw’ in 1627, and has its modern spelling by at least 1660, although is still ‘Quhitlaw’ in Buccleuch papers of 1656, ‘Quhytlaw’ in 1661, ‘Whtylaw’ in 1672, ‘Whitha’ in the Hawick Session records of 1716 and ‘Whytlaw’ in 1738; sometimes transcribed, perhaps in error, as ‘Whithall’ from early records; ‘N. Whetlaw’ and ‘O. Whytlaw’ are marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Whitlaw (whi’: whit-law) n. lands near Branxholme, probably adjacent to Whitrig. In 1446 the lands of ‘Quhitlaw et Quhyteleryg’ are listed among those exchanged between Inglis of Manor and Scott of Buccleuch. It seems unlikely these were the same as the Whitlaw on the Siltrig.

Whitlaw Bank (whi’:law-bawngk) n. farmhouse off the main Newcastleton road shortly after Crowbyres Bridge.

Whitlaw Burn (whi’:law-burn) n. former name for the Flex Burn. It is so named in the 1767 description of the Hawick Common.

Whitlaw Gairdens (whi’:law-gär-dinz) n. street built on the edge of Hawick on the Newcastleton Road and named after the area in 2006. It is built roughly where the former curling pond was located.

Whitlaw Haugh (whi’^2-law-haf) n. part of the Common near Whitlaw, once used for shows etc. (e.g. for the Buffalo Bill Wild West Road Show in 1904). It is uncertain exactly what area this referred to, although it seems likely it was the flat land between the B6399 and the river, opposite the bottom of the Flex road. The name is also applied to a farmstead on the left-hand side of the road before Colishinn, presumably at the southern end of the Haugh. After the cottages at Stobs Woodfoot were pulled down about 1903, the joiners bought a piece of land here and built a joiner’s shop, as well as a smiddy (it is ‘Whitla-hauch’ in 1716).

Whitlaw Mains (whi’:law-mänz) n. former name for the major farm at Whitlaw. It is recorded in 1574 in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme as the ‘Manis of Quhy-law’, when the livestock and crops there are inventoried.

Whitlawside (whi’-law-sidl) n. farm in the lower Liddel valley, a few miles south of Newcastleton into Dumfriesshire. It was a former seat of the Armstrongs with Simon of Whitlawside and his close kin listed in 1583. ‘Sime of Whitlesids’ tower is marked on Sandison’s c.1590 map of the debatable land, and he is listed as ‘Sym in Quhitley Syde’ in Monipennie’s Border chief’s list of c.1594. There are Wigholms there in 1622. ‘Geordy’ (probably Armstrong) of Dykeraw and Whitlawside was tried for setting cattle in 1633. A later tenant named Simon Armstrong is recorded in 1642 and 1646. The lands are listed among the Dumfriesshire possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1663. John Armstrong of Sorbie leased the farms of Over and Nether ‘Whitlawsyde’ from the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1673. There were generations of Scoons there from the late 18th century (it is ‘Quhitleysyde’ in 1605, ‘Quhitleyside’ in 1622, ‘Whyttlysyne’ in 1633, ‘Quhhitsleside’ in 1642, ‘Whitlysye’ in about 1645, ‘Quhitleysyd’ in 1663 and ‘Whitelaside’ in 1792).

Whitlaw Slap (whi’-law-slawp) n. small stream that joins the Flex Burn at Whitlaw and effectively marking part of the old boundary of the Common. It is marked on J.P. Alison’s map of the Common in 1777, running roughly southeast from the back of the Vertish Hill to join the Flex Burn to the west of Meikle Whitlaw. Farm draining must have obliterated much of its course, since it is now scarcely visible.

Whitlaw Wud (whi’-law-wud) n. proper name for the wooded area that was more often known as the Duke’s Wud. The wood has been felled frequently, leading to a diversity of plant species. There have been several botanical surveys there from the 1970s. It is partly a reserve of the Scottish Wildlife Trust.

Whitmuir (whi’-muwr) n. lands just to the east of Selkirk Common. This is probably the ‘Vithmer’ granted to Kelso Abbey around 1150. A tower near there was said to have been built in 1250 and pulled down in the 18th century. William Ker was there in 1494/5. A branch of the Ker family acquired the lands in 1566 from the Commendator of Kelso Abbey. This include Whitmuir Hall, further to the east. James Ker is recorded there in 1663, with Whitmuir Hall owned by Andrew Ker of Maisondieu. In 1678 John Currr paid tax on £392 13s 4d for Whitmuir and Samuel Morrison paid tax on £281 at Whitmuirhall. John Goudie (Divinity Professor from Edinburgh University) acquired the property in the mid-1700s from the last representative of Thomas Ker. In 1760 it was bought by James Dunlop, and passed down through that family until sold by Archibald in 1818, with Whitmuir Hall continuing to be held by the Dunlops for another couple of generations.

Whitrick (whi’-, whit-rik) n. another name for Whitriggs.

Whitrig (whi’-, whit-rig) n. wood on the Chisholm estate, near Chapel Hill. This may be the ‘Quitrig’ in the barony of Hawick, mentioned as an Inglis possession in a 1435 charter, and among the lands swapped by Inglis of Manor for lands belonging to Scott of Buccleuch in Lanarkshire; in this charter it is listed along with Whitlaw, which was presumably adjacent. It is also recorded as ‘Quhitrig’ in the Barony of Branxholme in a contract of 1482 between Robert Scott of Haining and David Scott of Branxholme. The lands were part of the Harden estates and were passed from Sir William Scott of Harden to his son Sir William in 1649 – ‘...And or we passed the Whitrig road A mirky hap cam doun’ [WL] (it is ‘Quitrig’ in 1435, ‘Quhiertyg’ in 1446, ‘Whitrig’ in 1649 and ‘Quhitrik’ in 1511; it is also the name of a bog on the road to Smallholm, famous for its bird life).

Whitriggs (whi’-, whit-rgzs) n. farm to the east of Cavers, in Kirkton Parish. Whitriggs Cottages are between Whitriggs and Effledge. It was listed as part of the ancient holdings of Douglas of Cavers in 1509/10, dating back to the time of King David. It was burned by Hertford’s men in 1545. There are deeds in the Douglas of Cavers papers for the years 1527, 1530, 1570 and 1620. William Douglas of Whitriggs is recorded there in 1601 and 1612. It was owned by Douglas of Cavers in the 1643 and 1678 county valuations. Douglas of Cavers paid the land tax on £195 there in 1663. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and by his brother Archibald in 1698. There was additionally a merkland of land there that was part of the kirklands of Cavers, called ‘Housie’ in 1698. 7 individuals are listed there on the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John Turnbull was a mason there in 1721. It was part of the estate of Douglas of Cavers in 1788. Henry Turnbull was farmer there in at least the period 1791–97. Thomas Blyth was farmer there in the early part of the 19th century, with his nephew William Blyth taking over around the 1850s. It was still part of the estate of Douglas of Cavers in the 1870s. Flints found there are in Hawick Museum, and a flint knife and arrowheads in the National Museum of Antiquities of Scotland (also ‘Whitrick’ etc. in earlier documents; it first appears as ‘Quhitrig’ in 1509/10, is ‘Quhitrak’ in 1511, ‘Whitrake’ in 1545, ‘Quhitrak’ in the later 16th century, ‘Whyterige’ in 1687, ‘Whytrig’ in 1698, ‘Whitridge’ in 1694, ‘Whitrich’ in 1721 and ‘Whitrig’ in 1797; it is ‘Whytrig’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and ‘Whitrigg’ on Blaen’s 1654 map).

Whitrope (whi-trup) n. area around Whitrope Cottages and Whitropefoot, about 12 miles south of Hawick along the Newcastleton Road. The farm there is listed as ‘Wyttrawah’ in the c.1376 rental of Liddesdale, valued at 8 merks. It was still valued at 8 merks on the 1541 rental roll when the tenants were William Elliot in Ramsigill, Leon, John, Robert and (another) Leon. It is probably the ‘Quhitrhop’ with the ‘r’ missing listed in 1632 along with Stichhill and ‘Laidhop’ as lands in Liddesdale (among the rentals of Kelso Abbey) owned by Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. In 1718 it was combined with Laidlawhope in the farm of Stichhill, with the farmhouse marked near the modern Whitropefoot. The area changed dramatically in 1859 when it became a centre for navvies working on the nearby tunnel and viaduct on the railway. More than 100 huts were built, along with a carpenter’s shop, blacksmith’s and Jamieson’s store, arranged around a square with a belfry in the middle. Huts typically contained a married couple and children in one room, and several lodgers in the other. The village was temporary, however, since the railway was completed by 1862. 4 flints found near here are in Hawick Museum, as well as a spear-head, was subject of a ‘treasure trove’ dispute in 1861 (also spelled ‘Whitterhope’ and ‘Whiterope’, it is ‘Whytrige’ in 1541; it is marked ‘Whitrich’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and ‘Whitrigg’ on Blaen’s 1654 map).

Whitrope Bar (whi-trup-bawr) n. former toll-bar located near Whitropefoot on the B6399 when it was constructed as a turnpike road, also known as Whitrope Toll.

the Whitrope Burn (thu-whi-trup-burn) n. stream that flows alongside the B6399 Newcastleton road, roughly from the Limekilnedge to Hermitage. It was said that stone from here was used to construct the ‘Auld Brig’ in Hawick (also spelled ‘Whitterhope’).

Whitrope Cottages (whi-trup-ko’-ee-jeez) n. former railway linesmen’s cottages on the B6399, lying between the road and the old railway line just at the end of Whitrope Tunnel.

Whitropefit (whi-trup-fi) n. Whitropefoot, a farm on the Newcastleton road, near where the Sundhope Burn meets the Whitrope Burn. John Deuchar was tenant there in 1691, Richard Main was shepherd there in 1797 and James Beattie in 1861. There is a good example of a well-constructed sheep dip here, which was last used in around the 1950s (also spelled ‘Whitterhopefoot’, it is ‘Whitropefoot’ in 1691; it is ‘Whitrupfoot’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

Whitrope Summit (whi-trup-su-mi) n. highest point on the Waverley Line, about 14 miles south of Hawick, and 1,006 feet above sea level. Near here there were sidings and a signal box (demolished). A local railway preservation group relaid a short section of track and opened an interpretive centre in an old railway carriage.

Whitrope Toll (whi-trup-tol) n. former toll-house on the turnpike road built to connect Newcastleton to Hawick on the B6399 in the early 19th century. Like all toll houses, this also acted as an inn and was extremely popular with the navvies during the construction of the Whitrope Tunnel and Viaduct. All that remains now are the turf-covered foundations on the west side of the road near Whitropefoot. The tolls were collected largely to recoup the costs incurred by the Duke of Buccleuch in building Newcastleton and the road connecting it with Hawick. Carter Thomas Scott lived there in 1835. Andrew Calvert was tollkeeper there in 1841. The house was swept away in the flood of 1846 (also known as ‘Whitrope Bar’).

Whitrope Tunnel (whi-trup-tu-mul) n. railway tunnel on the Waverley Line, about 12 miles south of Hawick, being 1,208 yards (1104 m) long, and constructed underneath Sandy Edge. There were numerous casualties during its construction, as commemorated by a nearby plaque. The tunnel crossed the boundary between Cavers and Castleton Parishes. The tunnel was blocked off in the late 1970s. There are 5 spoil heaps on the surface, left over from the excavations. A bronze spearhead, unearthed near there during railway construction in the 1860s is now in the National Museum of Antiquities of Scotland.

Whitshiels (whit-, whi’-sheelz) n. area just north of Langholm, to the east of the A7, now marked by Whitshiels Bog and Whitshiels Knowe. It was leased to Walter Scott (but it is not clear which one) in 1494. The superiority was inherited in 1550 by Robert, Lord Maxwell, by John, Lord Maxwell in 1604, by Robert Maxwell in 1619 and by John, Earl of Nithsdale in 1670 and William, Earl of Nithsdale in 1696. The farm was owned by the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653 and 1661. William Armstrong of 'Kirktoun' was there in about 1641. There were Elliots here in the 17th century (it is 'Quhiteschelis' in 1494, 'Quhitscheill's' in 1550, 'Quhitscheill's' in 1641 and 'Whytscailles' in 1661; it is marked 'Whytshheels' on Blaen's 1654 map and 'Whitsheills' on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Whitside (whi'-sid) n. farm on the upper Jed Water, also known as Whiteside.

Whitslade (whi', whit-slad) n. former 16th century tower in the Ale valley, about 6 miles west of Hawick, also known as 'Whitslades', the area now being a farm of the same name. The name is first recorded as 'Whitads in Aine' in the reign of William I in a document describing the boundaries of lands granted to Orm of Ashkirk, and another royal charter granting the lands to Andrew, son of 'Uviet' in about 1173. The boundaries of the lands are described there, although some of the place names are not recognisable. The 'petra stante' (possibly 'standing stone') between Whitlade and Alemoor is mentioned, as well as the Langhope Burn, another stream called 'Harwude', 'Condosum', 'Wiuenesae' and 'Blake-den'. The house there was burned by a group of Armstrongs and Hector Lauder in about 1502; they also stole 16 cows, 2 horses and goods. The lands (or perhaps their superiority) appear to have passed from the Erskines to John Cockburn of Ormiston in 1507/8. It may be that Walter of Synton (who married a daughter of Cockburn) gave up Synton to his son John, and resided himself at Whitlade. Walter's second wife, Margaret Riddell died at Whitlade in 1585. The first Scott of Whitlade was Walter 'The Hawke', son of Robert of Stirches, who had held the Lairdship from 1575. The superiority of the lands resided with the Erskines, and was part of the Earlom of Mar in 1635. In 1643 the Roxburghshire teinds were valued at £80 and owned by Robert Scott of Heap. The estate was valued at £586 in about 1663. Thomas Scott paid land tax on £1048 10s in 1678 and the lands in Selkirkshire belonging to the Laird of Whitlade were valued at £2168 in that year. Tax was paid on 17 hearths on the estate in 1694. In 1707 the Roxburghshire estate of the Laird of Whitlade was valued at £786 8s, and the lands liferented by Lady Whitlade at £262 2s. The estate was finally sold off by John Scott in 1722. It was then owned by the Adam family, and passed to the Venners through marriage. Tax was paid on 15 windows in 1748. James Anderson was farmer there in at least 1792-97. In 1803 it was valued at about £267. The motto of this branch of the Scotts of Whitlade was 'Amore Patriae'. Essentially the same Scotts also owned the estate of Stirches for about 200 years, selling it to Walter Chisholme in about 1660. The tower stood beside a small stream that runs east into the Ale, close to the present-day farmhouse. In 1502 it was burned by Hector Lauder (in Clerklands) along with a band of Armstrongs. John Kerr of Gogar received the monies for 'non-entry' in the 1660s. The lands were sold to James Adam in 1723, as confirmed by the superiors, the Erskines. It was then owned by John Adam, and passed to the Venners through marriage. James Anderson was there in 1786. The Ordnance Survey Name Book of 1858 says that the foundations of the tower were dug up 'some years ago' for the sake of the lime. In the first half of the 20th century the foundations could still be traced under an ash tree in the garden to the south of the farmhouse. Today only a set of indistinct bankings and turf walls can be made out in this general area. It has been suggested that there may once have been an extensive lake to the east of the farm. A dormer pediment with fleur-de-lys finial (as well as perhaps a cross) from there) is preserved in the Museum. The Laird of Whitlade (probably Thomas, who died in 1671) was sung about in a ballad (probably written by Scott of Satchells) – '…Whitlades, wi’ mony a sigh and groan’, thought to be written by Walter Scott of Satchells – ‘Craik-cross repent, Eldon relent, And so may Etrick-head; – Let Ruberslaw to Jedburgh shaw, Sad news, that Whitlade’s dead’[CWS]. A local version of the ballad 'Ewe-buchts' (or ‘The Broom o’ Cowdenknowes’) states that the Merry-Knowes are part of Whitlade – ‘Come round about the Merry-Knowes, my Marion, For Whitlade is lying lee’ [T]. The arms of the Scotts of Whitlade was mostly the same as for the Synton and Boonraw families, namely the usual Buccleuch arms with 2 stars and a crescent – ‘First came Todrig, Syne came Woll, Last came Whitslade – Chief of the Water-Aill’ [CWS], ‘Whitlade is slumbering undisturbed and down in Harden Glen The tall trees murmur in their dreams of Wat’s mosstropp ing men’ [WHO] (the name occurs in the late 12th

Whitson (whit-sun) n. short form of Whitsunday.

Whitsunday (whit-sun-dá) n. one of the Scottish quarter days, typically when annual rents were due. It originally fell on 26th May, but shifted to 15th May in 1752, with the adoption of the Gregorian Calendar. The date is close to the seventh Sunday after Easter, which is also known as Pentecost, a Christian feast. It is also known as ‘Whit’ or ‘Whitsun’. In 1886 all of the Scottish ‘term days’ were set to be the 28th of the appropriate month. This was the day on which it was formerly common to see the families of shepherds and other farm labourers travelling by cart between farms – ‘…that is to say Wistsunday and Martynmes in wyntir, be twa ewyny porconis …’ [DoR1445] (see also Whitsunday).

Whitterhope see Whitrope

Whittle (whi-tul) n. Thomas (18th C.) groom at Cavers in 1794, when he was working for George Douglas. His name was recorded as ‘Whetle’.

Whitton (whi’-tin) n. farm south of Morebattle, between Oxnam and Hownam. The lands there were long the property of the Riddells of Riddell and Whitton and were once split into Over Whitton and Nether Whitton, which were annexed to the Barony of Riddell. There were Davidsons recorded farming there in 1494/5. The lands were valued at £1600 in 1643, when owned by Sir Walter Riddell of that Ilk. The name is preserved in the hamlet of Over Whitton, as well as Whitton Edge and Whitton Loch (it was formerly ‘Quhitton’ and variants; the origin of the name is either ‘Whita’s farm’ or ‘white farm’ in Old English; it first occurs as ‘Wittunes’ in 1156).

Whitworth (whi’-wurth) n. William (b.c.1785) from England, he was innkeeper at the Plough Inn in Lilliesleaf in 1841. His wife was Elizabeth and they had children Isabella, Ann and Robert.

Whull (whul) n., arch. a hole – ‘Thus the proper name Hope, ... they pronounce as if written whupp; and hole, as if whulk; horn as if whurn’ [RAC].

Whullans (whu-linz) n. (Whillans) Aaron (1766–1856) son of Robert and Janet Scott. His forename is said to have come through the Scott family. He may have worked as a drover and lived at Turnpikeside in Southdean Parish. He married Margaret Swan (who was surely related to his aunt Mary Swan). His children included: an unnamed girl; Jennet (b.1796), who married Andrew Hume; Robert (b.1798); William (b.1800), who married Isabella Riddell; Thomas, who died young; Agnes (b.1804), who married John Murray; Nelly (b.1806); Aaron (b.1808); Thomas (b.1811), who married Helen Brown; and James (b.1813), who married Mary Lawrie. Charles Noel ‘Chuck’ (1924–2018) local knitwear retailer and Common Riding stalwart. His father was John Bell and he was great-grandson of Kinly Stick. He and his family have been involved in owning and training racehorses. He was Cornet in 1948 and in 1967 was Acting Father to George Peden, son of the man who was his own Acting Father. He was also President of the Mosstroopers’ and Callants’ Clubs and Common Riding Master of Ceremonies for 18 years. He was one of the men who rode the marches during WWII. He donated a new Common Riding flag in 1992. He rode during the Common Riding in his jubilee year and celebrated 50 years as Acting Father in 2017. He was also a President of Hawick R.F.C. He married Nan and has children Alister, Donald and Ian. Christopher Glendinning (b.1876) born at Bewliehill, Lilliesleaf. He worked as a builder and as a tenant farmer. He married Elizabeth B. Steadman in 1898. He had 3 sons: John ‘Jack’ Glendinning, who had a shop in Hawick; Robert Glendimming (1901–58), who emigrated to Australia in the 1930s and died there; and Christopher G. (d.1968), who had a grocer’s shop on Havelock Street. Cuthbert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessie Glendinning and their son John (possibly the later baker) was baptised in 1657. Walter (who married Margaret Lamb) was probably another son. The witnesses in 1657 were James and John. Cuthbert (17th C.) resident of Northbank in Southdean Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. His name is among those crossed out (presumably to be entered again on another page); it is written ‘Culbert whilands’. It seems likely he was related to (or the same as) the earlier man from Hawick Parish. Cuthbert (b.1718) baptised in Jedburgh Parish, son of William, who was a weaver at Firbank. In 1744 at Elsdon in Northumberland he married Elizabeth Robson and they had at least 5 children. His name is sometimes written ‘Culbert’. George (b.1758) son of William and Elizabeth Kerr, he was born in Cavers Parish. He moved to London, where he married Eleanor ‘Haston’ in 1786. Their children included William (b.1787), Eleanor Merrylees (b.1789), George (b.1791) and James (b.1794). George ‘Kinly Stick’ (1818–81) born in Kirkton Parish, son of Richard ‘Willans’, who was a molecatcher and his 2nd wife, Mary Miller. He was the model for the character in Easton’s song ‘Kinly Stick’. He appears to have also been known as ‘Dick’ or ‘Pim’. Although working as a stocking-maker, he was a well known local poacher, often escaping punishment by knowing about loopholes in the law.
He was also fond of quoting poetry. He joined the Dumfries Militia at its formation, but military life did not suit him. His nickname came from the name he gave to an old flint gun, 'the Kinly Stick', which he used for poaching. in Hawick. He was living with his mother and siblings on the Mid Raw in 1841, in 1851 he was living at the Back Row, at 2 Fore Row in 1861 and by 1881 he was at 10 Kirk Wynd. He married Helen Turnbull, who was born in Edinburgh, and she died in 1875, aged 55. Their children included: Margaret (b.1840); Elizabeth (b.1843/4); Richard (b.1845/6); John (b.1848/9); James (b.1851); and William (b.1853/4). In 1875 he was living at Kirk Wynd when he was charged in the death of his wife Helen, who had been found in her bed covered in blood; he was found not guilty at the trial. He himself died after falling down some stairs. Irving (b.1938/9) son of John 'Jack' Glendinning and Netta Irvine. He was known locally as an arsonist, responsible for at least a couple of mill fires, pleading guilty to setting fire to Wilson & Glenly's. He ironically died in an accidental fire in his flat on Allars Bank. James (16th/17th C.) servant of John Watson in Coldingham. He was recorded as 'Whillians' as a witness to a sasine in 1622, which may be the earliest record of this surname, albeit in Berwickshire. How may have been connected to the Roxburghshire family members is unknown. James (17th C.) witness in 1657 to the baptism of John, son of Cuthbert. He was surely a close relative of Cuthbert, as well as John, the other witness. John (17th/18th C.) Hawick brewer mentioned in 1702, where his name is recorded as 'Weelands'. He may be the same as John 'Whillace' who was born in Hawick in 1657 and may thus have been a baker as well as brewer. John (b.1657) son of Cuthbert and Bessie Glendinning, with the baptism witnessed by John and James Whillans. His surname when baptised is recorded as 'Whillace'. He is probably the John 'Weillands' who was mentioned as a 'baxter' (i.e. baker) in Hawick in 1694 and 1710. He was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4 and was probably the John who paid tax for 2 hearths on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick 'eist the water' in 1694. He was 'John Weelands baxter' when he witnessed a baptism (for tailor Walter Riddell) in 1702; John Forman (the other witness in 1702) later married Margaret 'Weelands', who was probably his daughter or sister. He witnessed another baptism (along with William Gledstains, perhaps related to his wife) in 1705. He was a baxter and member of the Council when it granted a bond (dated 1710, but recorded in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. He is probably the John who married Margaret Gledstains and had children: Margaret (b.1690); Margaret (again, b.1691); and John (b.1693). Note that James Gledstains married Helen 'Whillance' and had a daughter in 1683; they may have been related to his wife and to him, respectively. John (1718–1813) son of James and Jean Lookup. He was born at Blackchesters in Southdean Parish and lived in Castleton. In 1765 he married Mary Swan and she died in 1806. Their children included: James (b.1766) who married Ellen Weare and moved to England; Thomas (b.1768) who married Agnes Riddell; John (b.1772) who married Mary Geddes and lived in Castleton; Jean...

(b.1780) who married Thomas Oliver; William (1779–1856) who married Agnes White and died in Ontario; Robert (b.1781) who must have died young; and Robert (again, b.1783) who married Barbara Oliver and also emigrated to Canada. He is buried at Southdean. John (18th C.) resident of Kirkton Parish. He was living at Henlawshiel when most of his children were baptised. He married Margaret Scott and their children included: John (b.1769); Charlotte (b.1771); Hannah (b.1773); and Archibald (b.1774). It is possible that a 2nd Archibald (b.c.1779) and Sophia (b.1779) were also his children. John (b.1768) son of John and Mary Swan. He lived in Castleton Parish. He married Mary Geddes in about 1795. Their children were: John; David; William; Margaret; Agnes; James; Mary; Andrew; Isabel; and Jean. John (18th/19th C.) resident at Chesters (Southdean) according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, where he is recorded as owner of 2 horses. It is possible he is the same as John (b.1718). John Bell (18th/19th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. He married Alison Muir and their son James was baptised in 1794. John Bell (c.1896–1928) son of Isabella and an unknown father, he married Agnes Alice Walker Darling in 1920. Their children were Alice Darling (b.1921), Charles Noel (‘Chuck’, b.1924) and Catherine Darling. His wife secondly married John Bell and died in 1973. He died in a biking accident near the Mair. John ‘Jack’ (20th C.) eldest son of Christopher G. He was father of Irving. Margaret (17th/18th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish. Her daughter Margaret was baptised in 1723, with her surname listed as ‘Whollis’. Walter ‘Whillis’ accepted responsibility for sponsoring the child’s education (suggesting perhaps that he was the grandfather, and hence may be Walter from Denholm, whose wife was Margaret Lamb). Richard (d.bef. 1841) possibly born in Dent, Yorkshire in 1783, he was the father of ‘Kinya Stick’. He worked as a molecatcher in Kirkton Parish, and later his family moved to Hawick. He firstly married Katherine (or Christian) Stevenson, and she died in 1816. Their children included: Walter (b.1809); and Janet (b.1813). He secondly married Mary Miller, and their children included: Mary (b.1818), who married Broughton Newell; George (b.1819), also known as ‘Kinya Stick’; Margaret (b.1822); John (b.c.1827); Jane (b.1830/1); James (b.1834); and Betty (b.c.1835). His wife Mary was listed as head of the family on the Mid Row in 1841 and as a widow on Kirkgate (i.e. St. Mary’s Place) in 1851. Robert (1723–87) son of James and Jean Lookup. He lived in Southdean Parish, specifically at ‘Roughhint’ and Roughlee and married Janet Scott. Their children were: James (b.1759); Janet (b.1762); Robert (b.1763); Aaron (b.1766); Jean (or Ellen, b.1770); Betty (or Isabel); and Andrew. The family name is sometimes recorded as ‘Hollans’. He died at Chesters. Robert (b.1783) son of John and Mary Swan, he was born at Chesters. He married Barbara Oliver in 1808 and their children were: John; Margaret; Thomas (b.1814), who married Mary Anderson; Mary; George; Betty; and Jane. He emigrated to Canada in 1837, like his brother William, settling at Hurdman’s Bridge near Ottawa, Ontario. His grandchildren included Rev. Robert and Rev. Dr. George. Robert (18th/19th C.) merchant in Hawick. He had 2 sons who died in 1819. Robert (18th/19th C.) butcher of the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. Presumably the same Robert is also listed as proprietor of a public house and stabler on the High Street. He is listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory as a meal dealer on the High Street. He may be the same as the agricultural labourer recorded at about 20 High Street in the 1841 census, along with his wife Margaret and daughter Isabella. Thomas (b.1768) 2nd son of John and Mary Swan, he was born in Castleton Parish. He married Agnes Riddell (or perhaps Liddell) in about 1794 and their children included John and ‘May’ (probably Mary). It may not be a coincidence that Agnes, daughter of John Riddell and Agnes Whillans was baptised in Cavers Parish in 1799. Thomas (d.1810) lived at Town-o’-Rule and is buried at Southdean. This is according to an old gravestone. Thomas ‘Tom’ (1843–1924) born in Southdean Parish, youngest son of William. He became head gardener to the Duke of Marlborough at Blenheim. He suffered from ill-health and moved to Oxford. His children included David, Maude, Isabel Frances, Ralph and Sydney James. Walter (17th/18th C.) probably son of Cuthbert and brother of John. He married Margaret Lamb. When he had a daughter baptised in 1690 he was living in Hawick, but subsequent children were baptised in Cavers Parish, with his address specifically listed as Denholm Deanhead in 1705 and 1712, and Denholm Dean in 1708. His children probably included: William, who married Janet Stothart; Elspeth (b.1690); Archibald (b.1700); Janet (b.1703); Walter (b.1705); Ann (b.1707); Christian (b.1708); and John (b.1712). Note that in 1703 his name appears as ‘Mchwillance’. Walter (18th C.) recorded as a ‘fowler’ in 1729 in the rental book for Archibald Jerdon, factor to Capt. Elliot of Wells. He is probably either the man who lived at Denholm Dean, or his son who was born in 1705. Walter (b.1720) son of William and Janet Stothart. He was baptised in Hawick Parish. In 1725 he is recorded at Shiplaw Corse, in 1728 he was a wright in Oxnam Parish; and Mary (b.1729). Some of his later children were born in Hobkirk and Cavers Parish. His younger brother was Walter, who lived at Denholm Dean, and his son who was born in 1705.

William Whillands'. He could be the William (b.1728) who was earlier associated with the Flex or his son William (b.1760). William (1800-68) son of Aaron and Margaret Swan. He was a dyke builder and lived at Chesters in Southdean Parish. He was the enumerator for Southdean Parish for the 1861 census and probably also the William who is recorded in the Ordnance Survey Name Book. In 1828 he married Isabella Riddell, who was also from Chesters. Their children included: Jane (b.1828); Aaron (b.1830); Margaret (b.1832); Robert (b.1835); William (b.1837), died young; Walter, twin of William; Jessie (b.1838), who married John Inglis; William John (b.1841), who married Jane Maben and was a letter-carrier; Thomas (1843-1924) gardener; James, twin of Thomas; and Catherine (b.1846), who married Thomas Rutherford, coal merchant in Hawick. 3 of his sons emigrated to America. William John (b.1841) son of William. He was born in Chesters, his family being in that area for at least 3 generations before. He was educated at Chesters, and for a few years (starting at age 10) acted as letter-carrier between Southdean and the post office at Bonchester Bridge. After working with his father, in 1868 he became the letter-carrier between Bonchester and Hawick. He lived at Weens Lodge in the period 1868-73, but retired as postman in 1883 due to ill-health and moved to Bonchester Bridge, where he also acted as carrier to Hawick. He and his wife moved to Hawick in 1893. In 1873 at Melrose he married Jane, daughter of farmer James Maben, in a ceremony in which his sister Catherine also married Thomas Rutherford. His son was William James (b.1889) and his daughter Annabell became a teacher. William (19th/20th C.) born at East Fodderlee, he was a ploughman who lived in a cottage on Bonchester farm. He became paralysed and had to be looked after by his wife. He married Agnes Grieve, who was born at Liddel Bank. Their children included: William, born at Whitelee, hind to the Turnbulls in Bonchester; Janet Agnes (b.1891), kitchen maid.

um oot again afore heis whusked awa ti the labour ward’ [IWL].

whusky (whus-kee) n. whisky. The first local record of ‘acquawyttie’ is in the Town Book in 1642. In 1737 Robert Elliot of Fenwick, William Ogilivie, Robert Harrison and Thomas Watson (in Hawick) proposed the building of a still-house and brewery to the Duke of Buccleuch’s Commissioners, and in the following year land on the eastern side of the Slitrig was leased to Robert Elliot of Fenwick for that purpose. Hence we might suppose that whisky was produced localy at the ‘Whusky Houses’ site on Slitrig Crescent from about that time. It is first mentioned in terms of payment for workers (in place of the earlier brandy) in the Town Treasurer’s books in 1747. However, it did not start being a common local drink until about 1770, but soon after was being used as a cure for almost every ailment! The drink had many illicit stills at one time, and in the late 18th century a great deal of smuggling to England, where the duties were much higher. It was only legitimately manufactured in Hawick around 1818-19 – ‘Whiskie given the workers at the bridge, 1 pint, 1 gill, ... 0 2 10. Half-a-mutchkin whisik to glaziers and officers, ... 0 4” [BR1747],‘...Wi’ what some bel-lums ca’ the bottle, An’ I ca’ whusky, When ’boot yer plans ye freendly tattle, An’ speech gets huskie’ [JoHa], ‘...While someone slips a whusky in your tumbler unaware’ [WHO], ‘Aw can offer ee maist o’ the usual things The likes o’ whusky, rum or beer ... ’ [AY], ‘...aboot ice-cream flavoured wi port, sherry, whisky and sic-like alcoholic beverages’ [DH].

the Whusky Burn (thu-whus-kee-burn) n.
stream entering the Slitrig near ‘Whusky Hooses’, which must have been buried for at least a couple of centuries (mentioned in Parish Records of 1762).

Whusky Hoose Mill (whus-kee-hoos-mil) n.
Whisky House Mill, on Slitrig Crescent (at No.
14). It was built for William Richardson in 1787-88 and used for the manufacture of cloth and then carpets. This firm was continued by William’s son Walter until his death in about 1808. From 1815 it was owned by Waldie, Pringle, Wilson & Co., and probably from about 1819 was solely Waldie’s, becoming J. & W. Waldie, manufacturers of stockings and woollen cloth. It was sold off in 1829 and later the building became a storehouse as part of James Melrose & Sons, millwrights. It was also popularly known as ‘the Royal George’ or ‘the George’. This may have been the first real ‘mill’ in Hawick and the be-nings of the tweed industry (note that it is probably named after an already existing name for the area, and only coincidentally related to a distillery).

Whusky Hooses (whus-kee-hoo-seez) n.
Whisky Houses, old place name for an area immediately next to the Slitrig near what became Mel-rose’s on Slitrig Crescent. Sometimes the name was applied more to the area between the Crescent and the river. It was probably the same as the area that was earlier called Usuch Haugh, and later called the Brewery Haugh. A 1738 record of Robert Elliot of Falsnash leasing from the Buccleuch Estates a ‘stillhouse and brewhouse on east side of the water of Slitridge, and of ground adjacent; also, a malt kiln and barn yet to be built;
all lying in parish of Hawick’ may refer to this site. It was used as the town dump until the latter part of the 18th century (origin uncertain, but probably a corruption of Usuch Haugh).

Whusky Meg (whus-kee-meg) n. nickname of the years around 1800, perhaps meant as a familiar name for James Ruickbie’s wife – ‘An if ye meet wi’ Whusky Meg, That honest hearted carlin, Gude faith your cares will get a fleg, Though baith the deil an’ Merlin Ye meet that day’ [JR].

whusles (whu-sulz) n., pl. whistles from the main mills in Hawick used to go off at regular times and could be heard at home by most of the employees. Each mill’s whistle had a distinctive tone, and they were once familiar to all Teries. Typical times were 8 a.m., 12.30 p.m. and again at night. The practice was suspended during WWII and never really picked up again.

Whussum-an-dy (whu-sum-di) n., arch. Whitsum-day – ‘Oo’ll beide i this hoose ti Whussum-day, an than oo’ll flit’ [ECS] (also written ‘Whussenday’; see Whit Sunday).

wick (wik) suff. placename ending, generally derived from the Anglo-Saxon ‘wic’, meaning a settlement or farm, perhaps fortified. Despite occurring in the name of our Town, it is not common locally, with Borthwick and Fenwick being among the only other examples. In coastal towns, like Berwick, the ending is believed to have a different origin, perhaps Viking, with the meaning being ‘bay’, as in Jorvik.

Wicked Tammy (wi-kid-taw-mee) n. local nickname, probably from the 19th century – ‘Wicked Tammy and Tidy Mars, The Sap, Paul Laidlaw and Tory Tam; Tip-ma-Daisy hame frae the wars, Johnny Macmannus and Neddy Lamb’[HI].

Widow Richardson  (\(\text{wi-dï-ri-churd-sïn}\)  n. lady who kept a lodging house in Hawick in the early 18th century. This is recorded in the 1723 Parish records, although further particulars of her name, her husband and her address are not given.

Wield  (\(\text{weeld}\)  n.  Bailie John (1836/7–77) druggist of 48 High Street, who was Hawick Magistrate. He came from the Aman area, son of a farmer. His chemist’s business operated for about 20 years, and he was succeeded by W.R. Ross. He started a paraffin works on Commercial Road around 1866 (where Donaldson’s later had an oil extracting works), but he was bankrupt in a couple of years. He was a Councillor for Teviot Ward from 1871, immediately being appointed as a Magistrate, but retired in 1875 due to business difficulties following the Collie failure. In 1870 he married Christina Mary, daughter of draper James Turnbull. In later years he lived at Wilton Grove and is buried in Wellogate Cemetery.

wifie  (\(\text{wi fee}\)  n.  a wife – ‘Aw’ll maybe pick up a bit wifie o’ ma ain in the by gaun …’ [JEDM], mildly derogatory term for a woman, particularly a middle-aged one – ‘The gawsie auld wifie cam’ bustlin’ ben …’ [JJ], ‘If ye want a bit wifie that’s usefie an’ neat …’ [WAP].

Wigg  (\(\text{wig}\)  n.  farm on the B6357 in the upper Rule valley, near where the Wigg Burn meets the Hyndlee Burn. William, Lord Cranston (superior of the Barony) owned the woods there in 1621 when 2 Shiels were denounced as rebels for cutting down his ‘greenwood’. James Laidlaw was shepherd there in the early part of the 18th century. John Elliot was living there around 1770 and Thomas Grieve in 1788. The lands there were held by Walter Scott of Wauchope in 1811, along with part of Wauchope-head, ‘now known by the name of the South-west division of the Lands of Wauchope’, with the superiority held by Archibald Scott of Howcleuch. George Scott was shepherd there in the mid-19th century and Andrew Thomson was shepherd in the latter part of the 19th century (it is ‘Wig’ in 1621).

Wigg Burn  (\(\text{wig-burn}\)  n.  stream in the upper part of Rulewater. It rises on the slopes of Wigg Knowe and flows roughly north to meet the Hass Sike and then the Hyndlee burn near the farm of Wigg. Recorded in 1677 when the lands of Wauchope are described as ‘on Southside of water called Wig’.

Wiggins  (\(\text{wi-gïnz}\)  n.  possible name for lands belonging to Melrose Abbey, and for which Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch was granted the office of Bailie in 1524, confirmed in 1525. It is unclear where these lands were, but the others named were Melroselenads, Ettrickhead, Rodono, Eskdalemuir, Ringwoodfield and East Teviotdale. They are not listed in the earlier grant of 1519 (it is ‘Uiggynnis’ in 1524 and ‘Wggennis’ in 1524).

Wigg Knowe  (\(\text{wig-now}\)  n.  hill in the Wauchope Forest, to the west of the Note o’ the Gate. Wigg Burn rises on its eastern slopes. It reaches a height of 491 m and has a communication mast on top (it is ‘Wyiggs hill’ on Pont’s c.1590 map and ‘Wriggs hill’ on Blaeu’s map of 1654).

Wigham  see Wigholm

Wigholm  (\(\text{wi-gïm}\)  n.  Adam ‘Edy’ (16th C.) listed in 1541 among English rebels who had been reset in Scotland. He was listed among some Armstrongs who were reset by young Hector Armstrong at Tweed. Probably the same ‘Edde Weghame, servante to Anton Armstronge’ was listed in 1541 among a group of Armstrongs, Elliotts, Croziers and others accused of burning the corn of William Carnaby at Halton. Archibald ‘Airchie’ (16th C.) tenant of the lands of Simon Elliot in Dod Burn, listed in a bond of security signed in Hawick in 1569. His name is given as ‘Arche Wiggein’. He is surely related to the ‘Rynne Wiggien’ who was tenant of a farm near Skelfhill. Helen (16th C.) merchant of some sort recorded in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1574. She was owed money for supplying fowls. Given the others she is listed alongside, it seems likely she was from Hawick. John ‘Cock’ (15th/16th C.) recorded as ‘Johne Wighame alias Cok’ in a document of 1500 listing men of Liddesdale and neighbouring areas who gave pledges for good behaviour to Patrick, Earl of Bothwell. Perhaps the same ‘Cok Wigham’ is listed among many men from Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-ain in 1494/5. John (17th C.) son of William, tenant in Nether Whisgills. In 1642 he is on a long list of Border ‘notorious criminalls, theeves and ressetters of thrift’ who were to be captured and tried. Matthew (15th C.) listed among a large number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-ain in 1494/5. Actually there are 2 separate men listed with the same name. They may have been related to other Wigholms who were also listed, namely Cock and William. Ninian ‘Ringan’ (16th C.) listed among the tenants of Skelfhill and neighbouring farms in a bond of security signed in Hawick in 1569. His name is given as ‘Rynne Wiggein’ (and there is some guess work) among the tenants of Skelfhill and a number of Liddesdale men who failed to appear at the Justice-ain in 1500 listing men of Liddesdale and neighbours of Skelfhill and neighbouring farms in a bond of security signed in Hawick in 1569. His name is given as ‘Rynne Wiggein’ (and there is some guess work on his name). Ninian (16th/17th C.) recorded as ‘Niniane Quhigholme in Peilbrae’ in 1612 when he was on the jury for the case of the death of a man while imprisoned in the Hawick Kirk steeple. Ninian (17th C.) tenant in ‘Todscleugh-sye’ in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th/17th C.) from Braidaugh and formerly Alemoor. William White from Muselee and Simon White from Alemoor were caution for him at the Justice Court in Jedburgh in 1623. William (15th C.) listed among men of Liddesdale who failed to appear at the Justice-ain in 1494/5. William (16th/17th C.) tenant in Nether Whisgills. In 1642 his son John was listed among many Borderers wanted for theft and other crimes. ‘Wilwigholms steid’ is listed in 1632 among the lands possessed by Thomas Kerr of Ancrum, and seems likely to have been the farm he tenanted in Liddesdale. William (17th C.) recorded as tenant of Newton in Roxburghshire (although it is unclear which Newton) in 1684 on the list of men declared rebels for not taking ‘the Test’ (also ‘Wigham’, ‘Wighame’, ‘Wigoune’, ‘Quhigholme’, etc.).

wight (wi, wit) adj., arch. stout, strong, mighty, brave – . . . That had he been as wight as Wallace was, Away brave Noble he could not win. Fala, &c.’ [CPM], – . . .one of these wight and wannel lads . . . ’ [HSR], ‘When Wallace wight, and Douglas stern, Led on the spearman o’ the Border’ [JS], ‘Whiles, at the Daisy and the Bard, They [gulls] tak their spite – But it’s a gey coarse maa daur fyle Wallace, wight’ [DH].

Wight (wi) n. Adam (18th/19th C.) resident of Robertson Parish. He married Ellen Clerk (1776–1860). He died abroad and is commemorated on the family gravestone in Borthwick Waas Cemetery. Adam (b.1805/6) farmer at Newton in 1841. In 1851 he was working as a ‘miller’s man’ at the Maltsteep in Wilton. His wife was Helen and their children included John, Jane and Mary. Alexander (18th/19th C.) farmer at the Grange in Southdean Parish, according to the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Andrew (19th C.) cabinet-maker of Scott & Wight, 58 High Street. Their premises may be the place marked ‘Mr. Scott’ around No. 58 on Wood’s 1824 map. The business is listed on Bucchleuch Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. They are listed as ‘Scott & Wight’ in Slater’s 1852 directory. He married Mary Rutherford, and they had no children. Daniel ‘Dan’ (19th C.) landlord of the Half-Moon Inn in the latter part of the 19th century. He was also well known as a Powderhall runner. In 1889 he refuse to sell some land to allow an extension of the Evangelical Union Kirk on O’Connell Street, presumably because of their promotion of temperance. George (17th/18th C.) Cornet in 1709. He is probably the George who married Helen Cook in Hawick in late 1711 and whose children included James (b.1712), Janet (b.1714), Robert (b.1717), Margaret (b.1719) and Jean (b.1722). George (18th C.) weaver in Hawick. In 1728 he married Janet Beattie from Langholm Parish. James (17th C.) weaver listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. In 1704 he witnessed a baptism for workman Archibald Elliot. Janet (18th C.) widow of someone called Leithead. In 1751 the Hawick Session resolved to provide her with an allowance from the sale of her husband’s house. John (17th C.) resident in Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to Thomas, who were also listed there. John (18th/19th C.) listed as a shepherd at Bedrule on the Dog Tax Rolls in 1797 for having 2 non-working dogs. Mary (b.c.1780) listed as a widow who was a midwife at about 25 High Street in 1851. Robert (17th C.) indweller of Unthank in Ewesdale. In 1653 he inherited half a husbandland in Midlem from James Bald, his grandmother’s brother. Thomas (17th C.) resident in Bewlie in Lilliesleaf Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. He was probably related to John, who were also listed there. Walter (d.1819) tailor in Hawick. His name is the second one on the list of ‘Donations’ to the Hawick Savings Bank in 1815. William (18th C.) paid the cart tax in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1791. William the Wilderness (1806–92) son of Adam and Ellen Clerk, born in Robertson Parish. He was a Slater at Borthaugh Cottages. He donated some interesting stones to the Museum in 1863. He married Helen Lillico, who died at Borthaugh in 1850, aged 40. He may also have married a second time. His children included Christian, Helen Clerk (1851–1883) and Isabella Douglas (1853–1936). His mother Helen (or Ellen) Clerk was also living with him in 1841 and 1851. The family are buried at Borthwick Waas. William (19th/20th C.) joiner and cabinetmaker who ran the business ‘Scott & Wight’ at 58 High Street. In 1906 he transferred the firm to his son Andrew (also formerly written ‘Weight’).

the Wilderness (thu-wil-dur-nis) n. former name for a plantation on the east side of the approach road to the original Wilton Manse, i.e. near where the bowling part of the Leisure Centre is located now. A little stream used to run through the grounds (long buried in conduits).

the Wilderness Road (thu-wil-dur-nis-rôd) n. name once used for the approach road to the original Wilton Manse, located where the Station was built. The road ran between 2 high hedges and was called after the popular name for the plantation on its eastern side.

wild hyacinth (wild-hI-a-sinth) n. usual name in Scotland for the flower called the bluebell in England.

wile (wil) v., arch. to deceive, beguile, entice – ‘...O but ye be a wilin’ rogue – Fareweel John barleycorn!’ [JT], ‘Until a lass wi’ saft sweet words Did wyle the glove in play ...’ [DH], n., poet. a snare, trap – ‘Keep me frae the wyles whilk thaye hae layde for me, an’ the girns o’ the workers i’ inequitie’ [HSR] (also written ‘wyle’).

Wilkie (wil-kee) n. James (17th C.) cottar at Rueltownfoot according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Janet (d.1760) described as being ‘in Hartshaugh miln’ when her funeral is recorded in Hobkirk Parish in 1760. John (17th C.) tenant in Hassendean. He is recorded in 1684 when his servant Thomas Brown was listed among those declared fugitives for being Covenanters. Also in that year the will of his wife Helen Davidson is recorded. John (d.c.1685) listed as ‘younger, in Rafflat’ in 1685 when his will was recorded. He was presumably farmer at Rawflat. John (d.bef. 1808) Wright in Hawick. His son John was a shoemaker whose death was recorded in 1808. John (d.1808) shoemaker in Hawick, son of wright John. Mary (18th/19th C.) proprietor of a shop somewhere around the Howegate in the early 19th century. She sold ‘tam trot’, gingerbread and other confectionaries. T. (18th/19th C.) listed at Minto House among subscribers for Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. He was probably a house-servant at Minto.

Thomas (15th/16th C.) witness to a sasine of the Erskines in Synton lands in 1508, where he is ‘Thomas Wykinsone’. He may have been local, since several of the other witnesses were. Rev. Thomas (d.c.1638) first post-Reformation minister at Lilliesleaf (those earlier being just readers). He was related to John Row, the Reformer. He was educated at St. Leonard’s College and St. Andrews University, becoming ‘laureated’ in 1583. He became Lilliesleaf minister in 1588 (after being Reader for 2 years) and continued until at least October 1638. He was presented to the parsonage and vicarage by Robert, Lord Roxburghe about 1609. He is said to have frequently shed tears while preaching. In 1615 he was rebuked for allowing ‘the gudewife of Sinton’ (possibly the widow of Walter Scott of Synton) from Ashkirk parish to take communion, ‘she being a conteminer of her awin minister and of her awin kirk’. He may be the same man as Thomas ‘M.A.’ recorded as schoolmaster in Selkirk in 1626 and 1629. His elder son was Thomas (who was Reader at Selkirk and then minister of Crailing), and his younger son William (who succeeded as minister at Lilliesleaf). Rev. Thomas (c.1592–c.1658) probably son of Thomas, minister of Lilliesleaf, he graduated from St. Andrews in 1614 and became minister of Crailing in 1621. He left a widow and son, John. Note that there were other ministers of the same name living at a similar time, and who were probably related. He signed the ‘Confessions of Faith’ in Hawick in 1638. Rev. Thomas (17th C.) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1659, he was a minister in London and then became minister of Galashiels in 1665. He is recorded holding lands at ‘Feirliown, Bowlie’ in 1669. He was translated to North Leith in 1672 and translated to the Collegiate or Second Charge of the Tolbooth (Edinburgh) in 1687. Rev. Thomas (17th C.) graduating from Edinburgh University in 1668, he was licensed in 1676 and later the same year became minister at Abbotrule. He was translated to Beith (Ayrshire) before mid-1687. But he was only minister there for 2 years. Rev. Thomas (1645–1711) nephew of Rev. Thomas (who was minister at Galashiels and the Tolbooth in Edinburgh, and who held lands at Bowlie). He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1662 and was part of the meeting of Lothian and Tweeddale ministers after the Toleration. In 1689 he became first minister of the Canongate. He was twice Moderator of the General Assembly. He married Rachel, daughter of John Sinclair, minister at Ormiston. Note that it is easy to confuse the various nearly contemporary ministers of the same name. He may be the Thomas who was said to have officiated at a field conventicle in 1679 when Graham of Claverhouse was searching the local countryside. Thomas (17th C.) resident of Minto Craigen who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Thomas (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He paid tax for 11 windows in Hawick in 1748. In 1720 he married Margaret, daughter of John Purdom. Their children included: Marion (b.1721); Janet (b.1723); John (b.1724); Margaret (b.1725); Margaret (again, b.1727); Robert (b.1729); Christian (b.1731); Margaret (again, b.1734); and William (b.1737). The 1726 baptism was witnessed by William Sadler and Henry Orrock. He could be the merchant Thomas who witnessed a baptism for Walter Purdom (perhaps related to his wife) in 1760 and the merchant Thomas who witnessed a baptism for Baxter William Elliot in 1763. Thomas (b.1806/7) from Kirkliston in Midlothian, he was a farmer in Newcastleton. In 1861 he is listed as a horse hirer on Douglas Square. He was on the Town Committee of Management in the 1860s. His wife was Agnes and their children included John and Margaret. Rev. William (d.1671) probably son of Thomas, Lilliesleaf minister, he graduated from St. Andrews in 1614 and himself became minister at Lilliesleaf in 1640. While preaching at Melrose in 1640 he was apparently interrupted in the middle of a sermon by the passage of English troops going from Berwick to Duns. His initials are inscribed on a panel containing a sun-dial that is built into the modern kirk at Lilliesleaf and bears the date 1642. The county valuation of 1643 records that £20 was paid to the Reader, who was probably him. He was confined to his parish in 1662 for not conforming to Episcopacy. He apparently died suddenly. His son Thomas was the first minister of the Canongate in Edinburgh (formerly written ‘Wilky’).

Wilkinson (wil-kin-sin) n. Charles (18th C.) writer (i.e. lawyer) of Huntlywood, Melrose, who was made an Honorary Burgess in 1751. Thomas of Chesterhall (18th/19th C.) merchant in Amsterdam, who was listed among the voters of Roxburghshire in 1788. He was admitted in 1780, with no objections. He was recorded as owner of lands in Ashkirk Parish in 1788 (and still according to the 1811 Land Tax Rolls), which had previously belonged to Scott of Whitslade, including Ashkirk Mill, Kirkhouses, Saleside, Castleside and Broadlee. Some of these lands were sold to Archibald Cochrane in 1795 (also written ‘Wilkieson’).

will (wil, wul) n., arch. power, choice, particularly in phrase ‘to come in someone’s will’, meaning to surrender to someone’s wishes – ‘The said day, Bessie Henderson, … confessed of the said pettis in the nicht, and cam in will for the same’ [BR1638], ‘… the said Robert Deans came in will for bluiding of the said Robert Scott upon the cheek and hand …’ [BR1640], ‘He, the said John Hardie came in the baylyeas will for his il-legal and irregular marriage’ [BR1712], ‘This day Mr Watson in Leeds and me bargained for the Brodly wool, he came in my will for 6/- the stone’ [JB], or ‘put in one’s will’, meaning to leave things to the other’s discretion – ‘Hyred Will Nickle to caw the plewgh from Martinmas to Whitsunday for a pair of shoes – 2s that he put in my will … ’ [JB] (cf. wull).

Willans (wi-linz) n. Rev. Jonathan Michael Arthur (b.1959/60-) minister at St. Cuthbert’s Church in Hawick 1988–91. He moved to Hawick from Larne, having also served in the Ulster Defence Regiment. He made several improvements to the Kirk, but some of his comments from the pulpit and literature he distributed proved unpopular with much of the congregation and he left (for a new charge at Brockham Green, Surrey) amid acrimonious dispute. He is now minister at Leigh, Surrey. He also wrote a controversial book ‘Proof the Bible is True’, became well known for chairing a survey of church attendance published in 2005, and also posts responses on a ‘Bible Questions Answered’ web-site.

Willat (wi-li) n. another variant of Elliot.
Will Easton’s Well (wil-ees-tinz-wel) n. part of the town’s public water supply, situated near the Tower Hotel.
Willglen Mill (wil-glen-mil) n. name sometimes used for the building at 22 Commercial Road. It was built as part of Wilson & Glenny, and used 1940–1964, and then became the Scout Headquarters (also sometimes written ‘Wilglen’).

William (wi-lee-un) n. name of one King of Scotland and 4 Kings of the United Kingdom. William I ‘the Lion’ (1143–1214) King from 1165. His name came from his standard, the red lion rampant on a yellow background. He was part of the Canmore family and was Earl of Northumbria from 1152, until forced to yield the title to Henry II of England in 1157. He tried to regain Northumbria, but was captured at the Battle of Alnwick in 1174 and taken to Normandy. To be released he had to acknowledge Henry as his feudal superior in the Treaty of Falaise, which lasted for 15 years. Because of this focus on the Borders, it is probable that he passed near or through Hawick. He certainly spent some time in Jedburgh, where he granted many charters. He also arranged the 'Auld Alliance' with France, which effectively existed for the next 300 years. He was succeeded by his son Alexander II. William III of England (1650–1702) King of England from 1689, taking the crown from James II in the 'Glorious Revolution' and re-establishing a Protestant monarchy with Mary II. He was son of William II, Prince of Orange and Mary Stuart (daughter of Charles I). He married Mary, daughter of James II and ruled the United Provinces of the Netherlands from 1670, until invited to England by James' opponents. In 1689 the clergy were required to pray for the new King and Queen and to denounce James II or lose their positions. Only 3 ministers out of 33 in the Presbyteries of Jedburgh, Kelso and Selkirk did this. There was also continued opposition in Scotland from the Jacobites. William IV (1765–1837) King from 1830, being crowned after the death of his brother George IV. There was a Coronation Dinner held in the Town Hall in 1831, chaired by Dr. John Douglas. He was originally a Whig supporter and helped push through reforms, although by the time the Reform Bill was passed he had switched his sympathies to the Tories.

William (wi-lee-un) n. (11th/12th C.) Abbot of the abbey in Selkirk (which would become Kelso Abbey). He took over from Radulf in 1117 or 1118, but retired in 1119, after only a couple of years. He returned to Tiron and was succeeded by Herbert.

William (wi-lee-un) n. (12th C.) one of the chaplains ('capellano') probably of Hawick (along with Algar) who was recorded as witness to a charter in about 1183, the first mention of a church at Hawick. He is also one of the first people associated with Hawick of whom we have record, although whether he actually resided there is unknown. He may be the William, Clerk of Hawick ('Willo, Cleric de hauwic') mentioned as witness to: a Lovel charter of about the 1190s, swapping the lands of Brauxholme for some nearby lands in the Barony of Hawick granted to the canons of St. Andrews; a charter of Geoffrey Riddell to Kelso Abbey in the period 1185–1204; a charter of Ralph de Vere to Kelso Abbey sometime in 1165–1195; and a charter of William de Moreville to Melrose Abbey in 1189–1195. He may have still been Hawick chaplain when St. Mary’s was dedicated in 1214.

William (wi-lee-un) n. (d.1227) son of John, who was son of Orm, who gave his name to Ormiston on Kale Water. He was referred to William of Hownam and also William de Landales. He confirmed his father’s gift of land in Hownam to Melrose Abbey, but there followed a dispute with the monks, and he ended up having the property for his life. He witnessed many grants to religious institutions, e.g. in the period 1165–85 a grant of Anselm of Whitton to Melrose Abbey, lands in Clifton around the 1180s, lands in Whiton by William, son of Walter de Ryedale in the period 1185–1215 and lands in Eskdale and elsewhere in Dumfriesshire by Gervase, son of Robert Avenel. In the 1210s he witnessed a grant to the Convent of Dunfermline and perhaps a little later a grant to St. Andrews Priory. In the 1210s he also witnessed a grant by Patrick of Ryedale of lands in Whiton to Melrose Abbey, and a further grant of lands in Lilliesleaf by Walter, son of Patrick of Ryedale to Melrose Abbey. He witnessed further grants to Melrose and Kelso in about 1220. He was last recorded as witness to a transaction by Alexander of Chatto to Melrose Abbey for lands in Hownam in 1226. His wife was Donancia de Cleresei. They had sons: John of Landleis, who may have been ancestor of the later Landleis'; and William of Ormiston, ancestor of the Ormistles.

William (wi-lee-un) n. (12th/13th C.) son of Hugh. In the period 1214–49 he witnessed the sale of lands in West Lilliesleaf by Adam, son of Adam of Durham. It seems likely he was a local man, perhaps a cleric.

William (wi-lee-un) n. (13th C.) Dean of Teviotdale, in the Diocese of Glasgow, recorded sometime in the period between 1251 and 1274. His surname is unknown.

William (wi-lee-un) n. (13th C.) Vicar of Hascendean. He is recorded as a witness for several undated documents, preserved in the chartulary of Coldstream Priory, from around 1280.

William Beck’s Stockin Shop see Beck’s William Fawlaw’s Close (wi-lee-un-faw-lawz-klis) n. former name for lands in the Barony of Feu-Rule, i.e. Hobkirk Parish, mentioned in a land dispute of 1561 and 1562. It lay to the east of Nether Billerwell.
Williamhope

Williamhope (wi-lee-um-hop) n. farmstead between the Yarrow and Tweed valleys, just south of Ashiestiel Hill and west of what is now Yair Hill Forest. These were Crown lands from around 1456 and were leased by Thomas Ker of Merchiston in 1488 and David Murray in the early 16th century. Sheep were recorded being stolen from there in 1494/5. Alexander Pringle in 'Craglesche' held the lands in 1541, paying £24 (the name occurs as 'Williamshope' in 1456, 'William hop' in 1494/5, 'Williamshope' in 1502 and 'Williamshoip' in 1541).

William Inglis' (wi-lee-um-ing-ul-zeez) n. carrier's firm of the early 19th century, operating weekly between Hawick and Dumfries (there was a separate 'Inglis' which ran to Berwick).

William Laidlaw Memorial Hall (wi-lee-um-laid-law-me-mo-ree-ul-hawl) n. village hall in Bonchester Bridge, designed by J.P. Alison in 1899. Its erection was funded by Sir Robert Laidlaw in memory of his son William, who died in infancy, and his father, also William. It was renovated with help from the Lottery Fund in 2003.

William Lockie's Well (wi-lee-um-lo-keezel-wel) n. a former private pump, also sometimes used by the public, its precise location uncertain. There are at least a couple of possible William Lockies after whom it might have been named.

William of Deloraine (wi-lee-um-ov-de-lo-rain) n. fictional character in Sir Walter Scott's 'Lay of the Last Minstrel'. He is the champion of the Lady of Branxholme, who rides to Melrose Abbey to get Michael Scott's mystic book, is injured by the evil dwarf page of Henry of Cranstoun and through magic is impersonated by Henry for the final duel with Sir Richard Musgrave – 'A stark moss-trooping Scott was he, As e'er couch'd Border lance by knee; Through Solway sands, through Tarras moss, Blindfold, he knew the paths to cross' [SWS].

William of Hawick (wi-lee-um-ov-hik) n. prebend (i.e. member of the clergy receiving a stipend) of Sir David Guthrie, mentioned in 1435. There was also a 'William, clericus de Hawick' who witnessed a charter of about 1300.

Williamrig see William's Rig

Williams (wi-lee-umz) n. A.S. (19th/20th C.) teacher at the Buccleuch School who moved to Teviot Grove Academy in 1895 when it became the new secondary school. He was the main assistant teacher of the senior classes, replacing Mr. Brown. John (18th C.) footman at Borthwickbrae in 1778 and 1779, when he was working for John Elliot. By 1785 he was a house servant at Borthwickbrae. His name is transcribed in one document as ‘William’. Robert (18th/19th C.) stabler and public house proprietor of the High street, recorded in Pigot’s 1825 directory.

William’s Cleuch (wi-lee-umz-klooch) n. small stream rising on Burnt Craig and running north-east to join the Slitrig.

William Scott’s Well (wi-lee-um-skots-wel) n. a former private pump at the foot of the Green Wynd (Beaconsfield Terrace, or perhaps the continuation of Morrison Place).

Williamhope (wi-lee-umz-hop) n. former name for lands in the Barony of Cavers, located somewhere in upper Teviotdale. It is listed between Corriesike and Giddenscleuch when the Barony was inherited in 1687 and 1698. There may be a connection with ‘Williamshig’, which was also in the Barony. However, it seems unlikely to be related to ‘Williamhope’ in the Yarrow valley.

Williamson (wi-lee-um-sin) n. Alan (1609/70) from Dunfermline, he came to Hawick to teach History and Modern Studies, moved to the Highlands, then was Principal Teacher of History at Earlston, returning to Hawick as Depute Headteacher in 2002. He was High School Rector from 2006. Charles (19th C.) Hawick draper, listed on the 1837 electoral roll. He was also recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory as a draper on the High Street. He was mentioned in connection with ‘fictitious voters’, having a reciprocal life-rent agreement with John Robertson in Selkirk. He was listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory as Secretary of the Hawick Reading Room at the Tower Knowe. He had a business at the Tower Knowe, which was taken over by William Keddie and Walter Armstrong when he emigrated to Australia in 1839. He sailed on the ship Palmyra and founded a business in Collins Street in Melbourne. He married Elizabeth Waldie and their children included Joan (d.1833), who is buried at St. Mary’s and Isabella (d.1840), who died in Melbourne. Cornelius (b.1814/5) from England he was a ‘sinker maker’ in Hawick. In 1841 he was on O’Connell Street and was at about 12 Howegate in 1851. He was also listed as a ‘sinker maker, Back row’ in Slater’s 1852 directory. His wife was Sarah. Rev. George (1741/2–1817) native of Alloa, he was the first minister of the East Bank (‘Burgher’) Church, from 1774. However, he lasted only about 9 years, there being disarray among the congregation and argument about his stipend. The precise details of why a segment of the congregation turned against him are now unknown, but one suggestion is that he declined to marry someone who had effectively been selected for him, and another idea is that his acceptance of charity from Dr. Charters of Wilton was resented. James Winthrope published a pamphlet about the dispute, 'A Dialogue between Two Burghers on the Ejection of the Rev. Mr. Williamson from the Eastend', but no copies are known. He finally left in 1783 following disagreements with his congregation, his successor referring to his 'offensive peculiarities'. Nevertheless, he remained in Hawick for several months, preaching to his sympathisers in the Little Haugh. The East-end congregation subsequently had a difficult time finding a new minister, calling at least 2 other men before James Henderson was ordained in 1791. In 1785 a group of the congregation obtained a 'decree of removing' from the meeting house against him. After leaving Hawick he attached himself to the 'Auld Licht' party and was a probationer for 6 years before becoming minister at St. Andrews in 1789. However, in 1795 there was again a dispute over the payment of the stipend, with him claiming he had not been paid, but then a paper being produced in which he signed for the payment. He left to become an independent preacher, suffering from ill-health and poverty and dying in Kirkcaldy. He wrote 'Separation no schism …' (1800). In Hawick in 1775 he married Betty Dalglish, daughter of the farmer at Fastheugh in Yarrow. Their son Simon died in Hawick in 1782. There is no known portrait of him. George (b.1814/5) born in Colleslie in Fife, he was head gardener at Minto House in the 1860s. His wife was Margaret and their children included Eliza and George. James (b.1821) born in Southdean Parish, son of Alexander and Helen Jamieson. He moved to Edinburgh with his parents when young. He married in 1845 and travelled around the countryside with his wife selling baskets. In 1866 his wife died after he had assaulted her and he was sentenced to 15 years in prison. In 1868 there was a legal dispute between Southdean and an Edinburgh Parish over who was liable to support his children Helen and Anne. His other children were David and John. James 'Nellie Swinton' (19th/20th C.) well-known Hawick character whose nickname was, for some reason, that of a woman. He was noted for training runners. His father had died from a fall in the Sandbed

William's Rig (wi-lee-unz-rig) n. ridge in the Slitrig valley, to the north of Burnt Craig and just to the west of an extensive series of earthworks. The ridge contains the remains of an enclosure, about 38 m in diameter. This is probably the 'Williamrig' described being in Cavers Parish and owned by the Eliotts of Stobs at the end of the 17th century, e.g. among lands inherited by Sir William Elliott in 1692. It appears on a list between 'Herretburn' and 'Mirrilaw'. It was still in the Barony of Cavers when inherited by Sir William Douglas in 1687 and and by his brother Archibald in 1698 (it is 'William-rig' in 1678, transcribed 'Williamslidg' in 1687 and is 'Williamisrig' in 1698).

William Wilson & Sons (wi-lee-un-wul-sin-an-sunz) n. William Wilson & Sons hosiery manufacturers from 1819-51, founded by William Wilson, who had been in business since 1788. It began with Langlands Mills and with warehouses behind 13 High Street. The warehouse moved to the top of Wilton Path and a mill was opened at Weensland in about 1835. They started with hosiery, but branched out into flannel, blankets and tweed. The company received regular support from the Board of Trustees for Manufactures through the 1830s. With business booming and the families of the original 'Sons' having several sons growing up to enter the trade, in 1851 the business was essentially split among the 3 sons who mainly controlled it, Walter, John and George: Ladylaw and Langlands Mills went to John Wilson; Weensland Mill went to George Willie

Willie see Wullie

Willie’s Hob (wi-leez-hob) n. nickname for Robert Elliot.

Willie’s Peel (wi-leez-peel) n. former name for piece of land in Lilliesleaf Parish. It corresponded to the part of Raperlaw owned by William Turnbull in 1643, valued at £104. Robert Elliot was there in 1678. It was owned by Sir Gilbert Elliot of Minto in 1788, and still in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (it is ‘willispeil’ and ‘Wyliespeel’ in 1678, ‘Wyliespeel or Wellspeel’ in 1788 and ‘Willie’s Peel, or Wells Peel’ in 1811).

Williestruther see Wulliestruther

wil-lint (wil-int) adj., arch. willing, eager – ‘She was a yauld and willint bitch As ever lap ower hedge and ditch’ [JH].

Will o Greena’s Stane (wil-o-gree-naz-stän) n. small standing stone in the very south of Castleton Parish, just over the Kershope Burn from Kershopefoot. It is traditionally said to mark where ‘Will o Greena’ was killed in a duel with Foster of Stanegarthside, with the winner gaining the lands of Greena. Note that Will Foster of Greena is recorded in 1583. The stone was moved from its original site, and may only now be a fragment of the original stone (it is marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

the Willow Bog (thu-wi-lö-bog) n. former name for a hay meadow somewhere in the Rule valley in the 19th century.

Windburgh Hill (wind-bu-ru-hil) n. hill above Langburghshiel off the Newcastleton Road, 507 m (1,662 ft) high. There are the remains of 2 old cairns on the summit, as well as evidence of a forme enclosure. The hill is the source of several streams that flow into the Slitrig. By tradition it was a home of the fairy folk, a bottomless loch near its summit being the home of a kelpie, which, if disturbed, would send a flood into the burn below; Leyden describes poetically how a careless shepherd caused the Slitrig flood of 1767 – ‘From yon green peak, black haunted Slata brings The gushing torrents of unfathomed springs: In a dead lake, that ever seems to freeze, By sedge enclosed from every ruffling breeze, The fountains lie; and shuddering peasants shrink To plunge the stone within the fearful brink'[JL], ‘...Then Greatmoor and Windburgh against a purple sky’ [WHO] (also spelled ’Wyndburgh’ and formerly ’Wineburgh’).

Windburgh Hope (wind-bu-ru-heep) n. former name for lands somewhere around Windburgh Hill, once part of the Barony of Feu-Rule. The lands appear to have been between those of Whelpinside and Robert’s Hill (written ‘WinbruchthOp’ and ‘Winbruchthope’ in 1562).

winder (win-dur) n. formerly someone who wound yarn etc. in the textile industry, a job often performed by children in Victorian times. Later the word referred to a machine for winding the yarn from the dyed hanks of wool onto cones (also wunder).

Windhead (wind-hed) n. name used for one of the tallest hills in Castleton Parish, as described in the New Statistical Account in 1839. It is probably the same as Windy Edge, which is essentially the eastern ridge of Cauldcleuch (see Wundy Edge).

wing (wing) v., arch. to rip a jacket by grabbing the tails and pulling upwards. This was a common form of abuse of Tory voters during local elections in the 1830s.

Wingate (wing-ga) n. Walter (1865–1918) born in ayrshire, son of the ‘Collier Poet’, with his step-mother being a grand-daughter of Robert Burns. He worked most of his life as a mathematics teacher in Hamilton, although sometimes referred to as a ‘Border poet’. His collected poems were published in 1919, and were very popular in the following decades, especially humorous verses such as ‘The Sair Finger’.

wink (wingk) v., arch. to close the eyes, keep one’s eyes closed – ‘Ye’ll fin’ I dinna sleep aye when I’m winkin’, But watchin’, whyles I see on wha yer blinkin’’ [JoHa] (note the difference in meaning compared with standard English).

winkers (wing-kurz) n., pl., arch. eyelids – ‘The saut tears on her winkers hung’ [JoHa].

winkie (wing-kee) n., arch. diminutive for ‘eye’, a kind of lamp, particularly a flickering one – ‘The ’wee winkies’ gave forth a very feeble light, not sufficient to reveal the inequalities and uncertainties of the roadway’ [JJV] (see also wee winkies).

winkle (wing-kul) v., arch. to wink repeatedly, twinkle – ‘The brightest star that ’mang ye shane, Nae winklin’ gleed’ [JoHa].

Winlaw (win-law) n. William (18th/19th C.) resident at Newcastleton, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls.

winlin (win-lin) n., arch. a winiling, bundle of straw or hay, usually as much as a man can carry in the crook of his arm – ‘Gotterson was riding homeward from Galalaw with two winlings of straw beside him’ [RM].

winna (wi-nu) contr., arch. won’t, will not – ‘I winna lo’e the laddie that ca’s the cart and pleugh’ [HSR], ‘...I winna, manna, canna blame, Since man my destiny has willed’ [AD], ‘...The loon that winna’ chorus’t’ [JT], ‘O love that winna’ dee Like my laddie on the lea For his ain countree’ [JEDM] (also written ‘winna’ and ‘winae’).

winnle (wi-nul) n., arch. a yarn-winder – ‘Assaults were common; the weapons . . . ‘ane yairne winnel blaid’ . . . ’ [JW1649].

Winning (wi-ning) n. John Gray (d.1927) native of Lanark, who was a local solicitor, usually referred to as ‘John G.’ He was known as a good public speaker. He was Common Riding Chief Guest in 1903, Callants’ Club President in 1911 and involved in many aspects of the town. He was Chairman of Hawick Parish Council. He laid the foundation stone for Lodge St. John 111. He edited the 1894 edition of Scott of Satchells history of the Scott family. He lived at Branxholme Knowe. He married Jemima Girdwood. Their children included twins Thomas (who became Cornet) and John (who died young). Jemima nee Girdwood (19th/20th C.), known as ‘Mrs. J.G. Winning’, she was wife of John G. She was known locally as a writer, publishing ‘A Song of Hawick’, and contributing to the writing for the Quater-centenary Pageant. Thomas Girdwood ‘Tom’ (1888–1941) son of John G., he was born at Branxholme Knowe. He was educated at George Watson’s in Edinburgh, and credited with writing a school song there. He volunteered for the Lothian and Berwickshire Imperial Yeomanry in 1905, before attending Edinburgh University, where he trained as a lawyer. He apprenticed in Hawick with James Barrie, W.S., then with an Edinburgh solicitors before returning to Hawick, where he became a partner in Guthrie and Winning by 1912. On the outbreak of WWII, he joined the Lothian and Borders Horse, and after training was posted to France, then to Salonika. Demobbed in March 1919, he was Cornet that same year, the first since the end of the war. He settled back in as a solicitor in Hawick, becoming first President of the Mosstroopers’ Club and Common Riding Committee Secretary 1923–25. However, in 1925 he moved to Edinburgh to set up Hamilton & Winning, solicitors, in Dundas Street. He was appointed Secretary of the Grand Lodge of Scotland.

Winnington (wi-ning-ton) n. area to the north-west of Stobs, containing the farm of Winningtonrig and the marshy land at Winnington Moss. Stobs army camp was on this land. The farm of Winningtonhall was lower down, perhaps near the present Woodfoot Cottage. The lands were long held by the monks of Jedburgh Abbey and for a period had the status of a barony, including the lands and towns of Wyndintoun, the lands of Wyndintounhall and mill, the lands of Smynsteid, Over and Nether Kirkwodheid, Barndsyd and Horslie’ and some pieces of land in Jedburgh; in 1610 the barony was inherited by Marion, Jean and Margaret Hamilton, heirs of Patrick Hepburn. In 1621 Winnington and Winningtonhall were purchased by Gilbert Eliott of Stobs from Robert Elliot of Redheugh: this sale included Winningtonhall, Winningtonrig, Dodburn, Whithelhillbrae, Swingead, Parkhead, Horselee, Turn, Acreknowe and Birkwood. In 1657 the Barony passed to Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs, after having been held by his father William of Stobs. It was transferred to Sir William Eliott in 1677, when it consisted of ‘Windingtoung and Windingtounhall and the mill thereof, the lands of Parkheid, Horslie, Turne, Acreknow, Windingtounrig, Durnsteads, Dodburne, Kirkwood, Bransidebrae, Huntershill, Abbotsacre’. However, in 1670 the same lands were among those whose superiority was inherited by the daughters of George Scott, brother of Sir Walter of Whitslade. And in 1680 they (or perhaps their superiority) were among lands inherited by Charles Kerr of Abbotrule. In 1788 it was valued (along with Winningtonhall) at £120 2s 10d, with the mill and lands being £62 19s 9d; it had the same value 1813 (also referred to as ‘Winding-Toung’ and other variants; the origin of the name is probably ‘the windy farm’, from Old English ‘windig tun’; it is first recorded as ‘Windinton’ in 1575, it is ‘Windintoun’ in 1605, ‘Wynningtoune’ in 1607, ‘terra et villis de Wyndytoun’ in 1610, ‘Winessington’ in 1622, ‘Windingtoung’ in 1657 and ‘Windingtoune’ in 1670 and ‘Windington’ in 1813; it is ‘Windingtounhall’ on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and Blaeu’s 1654 map).

Winningtonhaa (wi-ning-tin-haw) n. Winningtonhall, former lands, probably near the Slitrig at Winnington. The lands once belonged to the Abbots of Jedburgh, and also had a mill in the early 17th century. It was owned by John Gledstains of Winningtonhall around the 1460s to 1490s, probably a younger son of Gledstains of that Ilk and Cocklaw. Another John of Winningtonhall held the lands in the late 1500s and early 1600s, i.e. about a century later. It was a 9 merk land purchased in 1622 by Gilbert Eliott of Stobs from Robert Elliot of Redheugh. It was among lands whose superiority was inherited by daughters of George Scott (from the Whitslade Scotts) in 1670. Along with Winnington it was valued at £120 in 1788 and 1813 (it is ‘Wynndetounhall’ in 1463, appears to be ‘Wynndytourhall’ in 1483, then is ‘Wynnditonehall’ in 1484/5, ‘Winditonhaw’ in 1497/8, ‘Woudington...
Winnington Mill

Winnington Mill (wi-ning-tin-mil) n. former corn mill at Winnington. In 1788 the value of separate parts of the estate of Elliot of Stobs are given and ‘Wintoun-mill and mill-lands’ were listed as £62 19s 9d. It is unclear where exactly this was, with one possibility being that it is effectively the same as Newmill-on-Slitrig.

Winnington Moss (wi-ning-tin-mos) n. boggy area between Winnington Rig and Hawick Moor. The boundary of the Common ran through it, this being the ‘Wintounmoss on the south’ described in the 1537 Charter. Acreknowe Burn rises there. A field in this area is the most extreme part of the modern Common of Hawick, where the ‘Cuttin o the Sod’ ceremony takes place annually. Peat was cut there by Burgess, although there were orders for it not to be used, e.g. in 1713 and 1733. In 1755 the Burgh Officers and others were paid ‘for baking bakes, and breaking and throwing the same in the moss’ there – ‘...the Common Haugh and Common Muir of Hawick, lying betwixt the Burnfoord upon the east, Troutlawfoord upon the west, the dykes of Goldielands and Fenwick upon the north, and the syke of Winding-Toun Moss upon the South’[BR1734], ‘...in all the Mosses of the Common of Hawick for the present year, 1743, except in Wintoun Moss ...’[BR1743] (‘Wintoun Moss-side’ is recorded in 1717).

Winnington Rig (wi-ning-tin-rig) n. farm above what was the Stobs Military Camp, extending over to the edge of the Common. It was once part of the Barony of Winnington. In 1622 the farm was sold by Robert Elliot of Redheugh and his brother William Elliot of Hartgarth (also know as ‘of Rigg’) to Gilbert Elliot of Stobs; it was an 11 merk land, sold along with the rest of Winnington. It was then owned by the Elliotts of Stobs for many generations. The family of Sir Andrew Smith also lived on the lands belonging to the farm. There was one small community there, with several houses. Mungo Dalgleish was there in 1622 and John Penman in 1688. There were 6 householders listed there on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls, 3 Scotts, 2 Fal-sides and a Glendinning. John Harkness and John Cavers were there in about 1710 and William Hall and William Martin around 1720. William Douglas was also recorded as a tailor there in 1720. Gilbert Elliot was there in the early part of the 18th century. It was valued at £319 14s 6d in 1788. William Elliot farmed this and other lands in at least the period 1785–97. John Tait was also there in 1787. James Henderson was there in 1811. It was still valued at about £320 in 1813. George and Alexander Aitchison were farmers there in the 1860s. It was farmed by Mr. Brydon around 1900. A story was once told (probably originating in the 18th century) of 2 fairies that used to frequent the farm, often performing helpful tasks, but once, when their piping revels were disturbed, they made all the farm animals call loudly for the whole of the next day. The main farmhouse has long been deserted. There are more buildings and enclosures depicted on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map than currently exist. A perforated stone disc from here is in the Museum – ‘In throwe the knowes o’ bracken That huddle roun’ Winnington Rig: Or slowly alang the ribboned road That saddles Crawbyres Brig?’[WL] (often written as one word ‘Wintounrig’ and as ‘Wintounridge’; it is ‘Wintounerring’ in 1622, ‘Wintouningrig’ in 1657, ‘Winingtouningrig’ in 1688, ‘Wintunoerring’ in 1694, ‘Wintunnrourige’ in 1710, ‘Wintundounringe’ in 1717, ‘Wintoonringdourige’ in 1722, ‘Wintoonringdourige’ in 1778 and ‘Wintunnnrourige’ in 1779; it is ‘Wintoonringdourige’ on Stobie’s 1770 map).

winnock (wi-nuk) n., poet. a window – ‘For the growling jarr came on the gust, And the winnock glinted bright’[JTe], ‘Like skinklin stars When mirk haps doun Are winnocks lit Ower a’ the toun’[WL].

winraw (win-raw) v., arch. to built peat into stacks – ‘After a like period they were ‘winrawed’, that is, the peat was built loosely into rows so that they were exposed to the wind, hence the name ‘winraw’’[BM1907] (cf. wun).

Winterburgh

(win-tur-bu-m) n. former farmstead in the Ettrick valley, between Newburgh and Crosslee. These were Crown lands from at least 1456. They were let to Robert Scott in 1483, then in 1488–92 let to William Roger and Robert Scott. It is probably the ‘Wynterburn’ where John Laidlaw was located in 1494/5 when he had remission for murder. In 1499 they were let to John, son of John Murray of Falahill. It remained Crown property until at least 1502. By 1512 it was feuded to James, 2nd son of John Murray of Falahill. Robert Scott of Wamphray claimed tenure of the lands in 1541, paying £21 yearly. The lands were later owned by a son of Sir Robert Scott of Thirlestane. It was owned by the Scotts of Newburgh in the late 16th and early 17th centuries. The lands were listed among the possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in Ettrick Forest in 1663 and part of the Buccleuch estates afterwards (it is ‘Wuntyrburgh’ in 1456, ‘Wyntryburgh’ in 1460, ‘Wyntirburgh’ in 1469, ‘Wintirburgh’ in 1488, ‘Wintirburgh’ in 1490 and 1492, ‘Wyntirburgh’ in 1499, ‘Wintirburgh’ in 1501, ‘Winterburgh’ in 1541, ‘Wintirburch’ in 1578 and ‘Wynterburgh’ in 1583/4).

Winthrope (win-, wum-trup, -thrup) n. Andrew (17th/18th C.) joiner of some sort in Hawick in the early 1700s. He is recorded in the Hawick Parish records making stools, church doors, etc. In 1727 he mended the ladder to the steeple in St. Mary’s. In 1740 he was a witness to a baptism for wright James, who seems likely to have been his son or brother. Andrew S. (1786/7–1900) son of Mrs. Wintrip of 20 Trinity Street, he was a grocer to trade. He served with the 1st Battalion, Argyll and Sutherland Highlanders and was killed in South Africa. He is listed on the Hawick Boer War Memorial. George (b.1847) son of James and Margaret Rutherford. He became Burgh Surveyor of Castle Douglas. He married Isabella, daughter of joiner Richard Purdom. James (d.1798) wright in Hawick Parish. In 1735 the Council paid him for providing ‘falding brods in Bailie’s loft’ for St. Mary’s Kirk. In 1755 he was paid for ‘helping the fit-gang of the bailies’ loft’. He married Margaret, whose surname was also ‘Wintrop’. Their children included: James (b.1737), who probably died young; Elizabeth (b.1740); James (b.1742), Hawick lawyer; and Thomas (b.1745), perhaps the wright in Jedburgh. Andrew (b.1733) and Christian (b.1736), with no mother given, may also have been his children. The witnesses in 1737 were baker Robert Boyd and gardener Robert Ker and in 1740 were wright Andrew (probably his father or brother) and former Bailie John Scott. He was already deceased when his son James, the writer, died. James (d.1798) lawyer in Hawick, son of James. He was probably the James born in Hawick in 1742, his mother being Margaret. He is recorded as ‘the Clerk Writer in Hawick’ in 1778. He may have been Town Clerk from about 1783. Around that time he published a pamphlet about the dispute that had led to the demission of the minister of the East-end Kirk entitled ‘A Dialogue between Two Burghers on the Ejection of the Rev. Mr. Williamson from the Eastend’, of which there are no known copies. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He may be the James who witnessed a baptism for William Easton in 1795. He married Agnes (1745–1828), daughter of William Wilson and Mary Hardie. Their son was also James. James (d.1820) son of writer James and Agnes Wilson. He served in the army in France. James (1775/6–1849) tailor of the Sandbed who was also a pawn-broker, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He may also be the James listed there as an insurance agent for ‘Hercules’. In 1837 he was a tailor and clothes dealer on the Sandbed. His premises were at ‘Sandbed Bridge End’, and according to the 1841 census his wife was Margaret and they had at least one child, William. James (b.1812) born in Ancrum, he was son of Thomas, who was a carrier in Hawick. He was a shoemaker of the High Street (around No. 48), listed there in 1837 and 1841. He was near the Crown Close in 1851 and later at 7 Cross Wynd. He also worked as an auctioneer (and was listed as such in Slater’s 1852 directory). He married Margaret Rutherford (daughter of Thomas of Haysike) in 1839. Their children included: Jane (or Jean), who married builder George Aitken; George, who became Burgh Surveyor of Castle Douglas; Helen, dressmaker of Oliver Crescent; Christina, who married builder John Elliot; Thomas Hope; and John (b.1855). James (19th C.) school friend of John Inglis, known locally as a poet. He left Hawick in the early 1880s and emigrated to Ontario, where he called his boat ‘Teri Odin’ and continued to write poetry. He was the ‘Border Minstrel’ mentioned in Inglis’ ‘Hawick Among the Hills’. John (17th C.) resident in Rid dell according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (18th C.) assistant Town Clerk to John Gladstains roughly 1762–68. It is unclear how he was related to other Winthropes. John (b.1802/3) probably born in Cavers Parish, he was miller at Leaderfoot Mill in Melrose Parish. He was said to be son of Thomas, who was a miller in the Hawick area and buried in Hawick. He married Margaret Gray, and their children included: Thomas (b.1827/8); James (b.1829); William (b.1832), who is meant to have served in the U.S. Civil War; Robert (b.1834), who emigrated to America in the 1880s; Mary Ann (b.1837); John (b.1838/9); and Michael (b.1841/2). He is buried in the graveyard at Melrose Abbey. John (b.1805) son of Robert, he was born in Lilliesleaf Parish. He moved to Liverpool, where he became a master brewer. In 1841 he published the poem ‘Friendship, Love, and Truth’, which are the foundational principles of the Society of Oddfellows. In Liverpool in 1831 he married Anne Evans, and she died in 1848. Their children were: Robert (b.1832); Ann (b.1836); Mary (b.1839); and John (b.1842). All 4 children emigrated to the U.S.A., settling in Delaware. John Ainslie (b.1853/4) son of Michael. In 1872 he married Eliza Robert- son. Their children included: Thomas Michael (b.1872); and John Kemp (b.1873). Margaret (b.1766/7) from Lilliesleaf Parish, in 1851 she was a widow living around the Crown Close and listed as ‘Formerly (Farmer)’. She was probably a relative. Around the 1760s he assisted as Town Clerk; James Wilson says that he and John Gledstains refused to take the Oaths of Government and so resigned in 1768. He may be the same Thomas who was notary for the sasine for the sale of Howcleuch and Borthwick Mains to Walter Scott, farmer at Commonside. He witnessed a document for the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1765. It is possible he is the same Thomas who was Provost of Jedburgh in 1767. His daughter Christina married James Murray, and was the paternal grand-mother of Sir James A.H. Murray. He owned land at the Wheathole (now Trinity Gardens) where East Bank Church was built. His wife was Jean Scott and their children baptised in Hawick were: Sarah (b.1745); Thomas (b.1756); and Charles (b.1757). The witnesses to the 1757 baptism were Bailie James Scott and Bailie Kerr. His daughter Elizabeth married William Ormiston, barber in Kelso. In 1799 his daughter Elizabeth’s elder son, James, was served heir to him. His office cabinet is in the Museum. Thomas (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. His wife was Jane Easton and their children included: Margaret (b.1770); and William (b.1775). Thomas (b.1776/7) born in Lilliesleaf. He was a carrier in Hawick, listed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory operating along with John Cochrane between Hawick and Langholm. In 1837 he was operating between Hawick and Langholm, leaving from the Grapes every Tuesday and Friday. His premises were on Buccleuch Street in 1841 and the High Street (near the Crown Close) by 1851. In 1852 he was operating Mondays and Thursdays to Dum- fries and Langholm, leaving from the High Street. He married Helen Anderson and their children were: Isabella (b.1808); Janet (b.1810); James (b.1812/3), shoemaker; Thomas (b.1816); Robert (b.1818); Robert (again, b.1821); and Michael (perhaps the shoemaker and Burgh Officer). He was still alive in 1861. Thomas (b.1801/2) tailor on Orrock Place. He was listed as a tailor on the Howegate in 1837 and at ‘Teviot square’ in 1852.

In 1851 he was at 6 Orrock Place. In 1861 he is recorded at ‘1 Backhouse’ in Hawick. His wife was Margaret and children included Margaret, James, Adam, Isabella, Thomas and George. Widow ?? (18th/19th C.) keeper of a tavern in the early 19th century. There is a record of a Town Council meeting there in 1808 (spelled ‘Wintrop’, ‘Wintrop’, ‘Winthrop’ and other variants in early records; see also Win trope).

Wintoun (win-tun?) n. variant of Winnington, ‘the syle of Wintoun moss’ forming the southern boundary of the Common in the 1537 charter.

Win trope (win-trup) n. Jean (1927–) organiser of the annual Hawick Amateur Operatic shows since 1978, having been involved with the organisation since 1948. She started the Two Rivers Theatre Company in 2000, putting on ‘The Gutterbuhdes’ over 25–28 April, the first time it had been performed in almost a century. She was Hawick’s Citizen of the Year in 2003 – Win trope and Lyons, and thame treading the boards A’ kinds o’ bands, whae aye strike the right chords’ [AlB] (see also Win trope).

Win troop see Win trope

wi’oot (wi-oo’, wi-oot) prep. without – ‘... Or doffed oor claes wi’oot a blush, To splash aboot in fun’ [WFC], ‘... duist try ti imagine ony Common Riding function wi oot ‘The Border Queen’ or ‘Up wi the Banner’’ [IHS] (cf. without and with ooten).

wi’r (wir) contr. with her – ‘Aw got her in blue and aw’l part wi’r in blue’ [RM] (also pronounced wi-ur, depending on context).

wire in (wr-in) v., arch. to eat heartily – ‘A’ll heh ti wire in, or thance A’ll no can wun doon in teime for the majeek-lantreen’ [ECS].

Wirmycleuch see Wirmycleuch

wirricow (wi-ree-kow) n., poet. a hobgoblin, demon, bugbear – ‘O that the gruntlebows and wirricows Wadna addle my wuts ...’ [DH].

wise see wice

wise (wis) v., poet. to direct, guide, lead – ‘... who wised out in twos and threes the different kinds of sheep’ [HSR], ‘... he deth clutch the puir whan he wyzes thame intil his nette’ [HSR].

Wise (wIz) n. H.C., M.P. (19th C.) made a pencil sketch of the Auld Brig in 1850, perhaps from the foot of the Mill Port. It shows some of the houses formerly at the head of Silver Street.

Wishart (wi-shur’) n. Agnes listed ‘eist the water’ among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. She probably ran an inn or shop of some kind. Alexander (16th/17th C.) recorded as a notary public in Hawick in 1623. Presumably the same Alexander ‘Wishart’ was officer of Sir James Douglas, Baron of Hawick. In 1612 the Magistrates stopped him collecting customs at the market in Hawick, took him from his house and had him imprisoned in the steeple of St. Mary’s tower. This was also apparently because of him striking Robert Roger of Burnfoot Mill (presumably at the market). He was there for 4 days and nights until released on the orders of the Sheriff of Roxburgh. This incident was part of a complaint by the Baron to the Privy Council. In 1613 it was recorded that there was no schoolmaster in Melrose but he ‘keips the schole’ there. He was presumably related to other clerics from the same family, which produced Bishops of Glasgow in the 13th and 14th centuries. James (b.1825/6) from Dalmeny in West Lothian, he was toll-keeper on Wilton Hill in 1861. His wife was Margaret and their children included Isabella D. and Jeanie Manual (who married Alexander Scott). James (19th C.) mason at Blackburn in Castleton Parish. He was recorded there in 1879. Janet (17th C.) resident of Cavers who was listed in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. John (d.1337) probably directly related to the earlier Wisharts connected with the Diocese of Glasgow, he was Archdeacon from at least 1321. He became Bishop in 1335 and was consecrated at Avignon in 1337, but died a few months later, as a result of being captured at sea by the English. His seal showed a bishop in a niche and a kneeling bishop with the words ‘SIGILLUM JOHANNIS DEI GR[A. EPI.] GLASGUENSIS’. Marion (17th C.) recorded in the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Hauick Toun’. She could be the Marion, married to Adam Martin, whose son William Martin was born in Hawick in 1674. Robert (c.1240–1316) probably son or nephew of William, Bishop of St. Andrews, who made him Archdeacon of Lothian in 1267. He was elected Bishop of Glasgow in 1271, after William (who was Bishop-elect) was appointed to St. Andrews. As Bishop of Glasgow, he held authority over Teviotdale. He was Bishop when John Comyn donated the land of ‘Rulehalch’, as confirmed in 1279. He became one of the Guardians of the Kingdom after the death of King Alexander III in 1286. He was active during the Wars of Independence, being a strong supporter of Robert Bruce (grandfather of the future king) against John Baliol. He stated to the English King Edward that ‘the kingdom of Scotland is not held in tribute or homage to anyone save God alone’; however, he swore fealty to Edward, along with other prominent Scotsmen in 1296. He is believed to have encouraged William Wallace in 1297, and was imprisoned for a while, then censured by the Pope for opposing English authority. In 1306, instead of excommunicating Robert the Bruce (for murdering John Comyn in a church of his Diocese) he absolved him, and was present at his coronation later that year. Taking an active part on the battlefield, he was captured at Cupar and held as a prisoner 1308–15. He lived out his last year or so back in Scotland, although blind. John, who was a later Archdeacon and then Bishop of Glasgow, may have been his son. He is buried in the crypt of Glasgow Cathedral. His existing seal is of fine workmanship, depicting a full-length figure of a bishop standing on a lion, with heads of 2 saints and a bird below him and the words ‘S. ROBERTI DEI GRATIA EPI. GLASGUENSIS’. William (d.1279) probably son of John, Sheriff of Mearns. He was Archdeacon of St. Andrews from 1254 and was said to have as many as 12 benefices. In 1270 he was elected Bishop of Glasgow after the death of Nicholas de Moffat. However, he was not consecrated in that position before being elected as Bishop of St. Andrews (which was seen as a more senior appointment) in 1271. He died in Morebattle, Teviotdale; however, his association with the region is uncertain. He may have been father of Robert, who was the next Bishop of Glasgow.

Mary, who married William Oliphant, may have been his daughter. William (13th/14th C.) cleric of Glasgow Diocese. He was surely related to the Bishop of the same name and also Bishop Robert, although the precise connection is unknown. He became Archdeacon of Teviotdale by 1288, and in that year is listed as ‘Guillelmo Thvidiae’ in a papal bull. He was mentioned again as Archdeacon of Teviotdale in 1297. In about 1306 he was imprisoned by the English, and replaced by Edward II soon afterwards. Rev. William (17th C.) 3rd son of Sir John of Pitarrow and Jean Douglas. He graduated from King’s College Aberdeen in 1606, and was given the charge of Fettercairn in 1611. In 1613 he was translated to Minto as helper to Samuel Cockburn, and returned again to Fettercairn in 1618, so that he never became Cockburn’s successor. He sat on the Court of High Commission in 1634 and became a Burgess of Edinburgh in 1636. He was translated to South Leith in 1630, but deprived in 1639 ‘for erroneous doctrine’. An opponent of the Covenant, he was forced to flee Scotland in 1639 and died in Cornwall several years later. He married Elizabeth Keith, heiress of Phesdo, and their children were: John, who married Elizabeth Home of Manderston and was killed at Edgehill; Jean, who married Alexander Wood of Benholme; and Elizabeth, who married Sir William Forbes of Monymusk. He wrote ‘An Exposition of the Lord’s Prayer’ (1633); ‘Immanuel, a poem’ (1642) and ‘Aaron’s Obsequies’ (1635). Rev. William (c.1625–92) minister of Minto Parish, possibly the grandson of the previous Rev. William. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1676 and was ordained at Minto in 1682, where he was presented by Thomas Rutherford of Minto. In 1685 he gained the ‘escheat’ (i.e. goods forfeited as the result of criminal prosecution) of Alexander Wishart, merchant and Burgess of Glasgow (and presumably a near relation). In 1684 a letter from him to the Earl of Tarras describes the manse as so ruinous that he cannot live in it. He was presented to Sprouston Parish in 1686, but the move did not happen. He was deprived of his living in 1690, presumably for refusing to give up Episcopalianism. He appears to have married Margaret, 2nd daughter of Commissary Wishart in 1685 in Edinburgh (this may have been John Wishart, member of the Commissary Court of Edinburgh, who was nephew of George Wishart who had been Bishop of Edinburgh). She may also have been known as Elizabeth, or else he remarried. They had a daughter Catherine (who married Ninian Wishart from Gen. Hamilton’s Regiment). Helen Wishart, servant to his widow Elizabeth, married James Walker in Edinburgh in 1708 (the interrelationships among the family must therefore have been extremely complicated!). Note that there are several contemporary Scottish ministers with the same name, e.g. Rev. William (1621–92), son of Alexander of Pittarrow (and thus a cousin), minister of Kinneil, who was a member of the Dissenting Presbytery from 1651–59 and then spent 13 months in prison, was accused of keeping conventicles in 1675, sentenced to banishment in 1685 for refusing to take the ‘Test’, but eventually let off and later allowed to preach at Leith (also spelled ‘Wischart’, ‘Wisheart’, ‘Wyshart’, ‘Wisheheart’, etc.).

the Wisp (thu-wisp, -wusp) n. Wisp Hill, immediately to the west of Mosspaul, reaching a height of 1,953 ft (595 m). It is topped by a triangulation pillar and a cairn, and from the summit on a clear day the Solway and the Lake District can be seen to the south, as well as a magnificent prospect of the Borders to the north and east; it is even said... that the Isle of Man has been seen. J.E.D. Murray and Adam Grant wrote a musical play called ‘The Witch o’ the Wisp Hill’. There was also a farmstead on the western side (reached from the Merrylaw road), with John Anderson and family living there in 1861. James Hogg (of ‘Teribus’) was shepherd lad here for a couple of years. There is an ancient cairn on the summit, about 9 m in diameter – ‘Emerging lad here for a couple of years. There is an ancient cairn on the summit, about 9 m in diameter – ‘Emerging from the glen so drear, With giant Wisp upon your rear; The Vale of Ewes its charms display, Bright shining in the noon-tide ray’ [WSB], ‘To count each magic summit fre the Wisp to Ettrick Pen, Frae the Black Hill to the Eildons and the heights by Harden Glen’ [JYH] (the origin is unclear; note there is another Wisp Hill near Eskdalemuir).

the Wisp Club (thu-wisp-klub) n. former club of the mid-19th century, which met at Moss paul. It was formed in the Spring of 1826 at a meeting at Moss paul by several of the local farmers. The founding members were: Alexander Pott, Burnfoot, Langholm; William Brown, Town Island, Hawick; James Elliot, Goldielands; Walter Grieve, Southfield; Thomas Lamb, Wood head; Robert Elliot, Teindside; John Wilson, Hawick; Thomas Davidson, Milmholm; William Aitchison, Linhope; George Aitchison, Linhope; Robert Scott, Eweslees; and Robert Govenlock, Moss paul. The Club dined annually on the Friday after the Dumfries Spring Horse Market, and set prices for cattle, sheep and wool; records exist for the prices of lambs and wool for the period 1796–1852. Dr. Adam Elliot of Goldielands and Henry Scott Riddell were Honorary members. The last annual dinner of the Club appears to have been in 1858.

harvest ...'[BR1644], ‘...and throwing it down without the churche door ...'[BR1685], ‘...and for burials without the town, old or young, sixpence, of whatever age'[BR1699] (also 'thooth; the pronunciation formerly had a flavour of the wű-thoo').

wither (wi'-ur, wi-tur, wi-tûr) n. water, river, stream – ‘he played witter polo for Hawick’, ‘the witter’s doon’, ‘...o’ gaun the well for witter, vince ower ever whereby they be fa’ and brick a leg or airm ...’[JEDM], ‘He owned a bit land near the side o’ the witter, No worth tippet a year to ony puir craitur'[JCG], ‘...bye seike an deike an waefer; bye burn an brig an haa'[ECS], ‘A pail o’ watter, an’ oan yer knees ...’[IJ], ‘When ee stood there on the Station Brig just lookin’ at the witter ...’[AY], ‘A love ti walk be Teviotside And sei its ripplin witter-glide'[IW], ‘Spring witter-gates, wi primroses aboot; Six-month, bleezin, simmers; six-penny beer'[DH], ‘...and there werni mony Border witter-gates whaese upper-maist reaches they didni explore'[IW] (cf. gate).

wittawa (wi'-ur-in) n., arch. the playing of handball in the river Teviot, Jed or Ale during the annual Baa games (see also the ‘posh’ form ‘watering’ and also witter work).

witters (wi'-urz) n., pl., arch. alcoholic drinks – ‘...for furnishings of certain acquawayttie and watters coft and receivit by him’[BR1642], ‘For payment to him of of £6 10 s. worth of hot waters, and aucht merkis worth of pouder, and aucht merkis worth of quhyt sugar ...’[BR1652] (sometimes called ‘hot witters’).

witterside (wi'-ur-si-d, wi-tur-si-d) n. waterside, riverside, banks of a river { `Whae beides i yo hose doon the waeter-seide?’[ECS], ‘Langsyne, Aa walkit up the witterside And owre the Station Brig, efter a game ...’[DH], ‘Magic flute an piper Led mice ti the witterside ...’[MB] (there are spelling variants).

Witterson (wi'-ur-si-d) n. Waterside, former farmstead and possibly fortified house on the south side of the Jed Water, a mile or so east of Chesters. It was valued at 22 shillings in 1538 and 1539. James Oliver was there in 1541, along with Marion and Robert Young, paying 22s yearly. Hob Young was there in 1571/2. The tenant there in 1669 was Thomas Douglas. The tower indicated there may be the one whose remains are near where the Langslack Sike meets the Jed Water, about 150 m east of Hyndhaugh-head; this is close to where it is marked by Pont around 1600. The more modern farm is located much further to the east, alongside an old drove road (near where Pont marked ‘Wadeshill’). The remains of the house there probably date from the late 17th century (perhaps replacing the pele house) and was latterly used as a stable. It consists of a single storey plus a garret. It is at the south-east corner of a large enclosure, and there are rig lines in the surrounding land (marked on Blaen’s map of 1654 as ‘Watersyd’, but further west than on Stobie’s 1770 map; it is ‘Watterside’ in 1538 and 1541, ‘Witterside’ in 1571/2, ‘Watterside’ in 1669 and ‘wattersyd’ in 1694).

Witterside Hill (wi-ur-sid-hil) n. Waterside Hill, hill on the south side of the Borthwick valley, just above the Snoot. It reaches a height of 261 m.

witter-spoot (wi-ur-spoo) n., arch. a water-spool, downsput, rainwater-pipe (noted by E.C. Smith).

witter-waggy (wi-ur-waw-gee) n., arch. pied wagtail – ‘...A water-waggy on a stane...’ [JBS] (also ‘water-waggy’).

witter-witter (wi-ur-wi-ur) n., arch. river water – ‘...waeter-waeter, waal-waeter, springs-waeter, or waeter threth a pownd!’ [ECS].

witter work (wi-ur-wurk) n., arch. popular name for action taking place in the river during Hawick Baa – ‘...most of the play is in the river, and the ‘water work’ is the most amusing feature to the onlookers [...’ [RM] (see also witterin).

witter-works (wi-ur-wurks) n. water-works. Hawick’s first modern water supply came from the Allan, constructed in 1865, with an extension to the supply in 1932. The second supply came from the Dodburn Filters, starting in 1882.

wittin (wi-tin) n., poet. knowledge, notion, information – ‘Hae the wurkers o’ inequitie nae wætîn?’ [HSR], ‘...he that teeches men wætin, saill he nat ken?’ [HSR] (there are spelling variants).

Witton (wi-tin) n. Adam (13th C.) recorded as ‘Adam de Wyttone’ in Selkirkshire, where he paid homage to Edward I in 1296. His seal bore a small shield and the name ‘S’ADE DE WITTONA’. Michael (13th C.) another of the men who swore fealty to Edward I in 1296. He was from Selkirkshire, like Alan, and had the same surname, ‘de Witton’, as the Parson of Hawick at that time. His seal showed a deer running and the name ‘S’MICHAELIS DE WITTIVN’. He was also mentioned in about 1300 in a letter to King Edward written at Melrose, where he craves the tithes of Bothwell. Richard ‘de Wyttone’ (13th/14th C.) Parson of Hawick, who signed the Ragman Rolls in 1296. He is thus one of the earliest Hawick clergymen on record. His seal shows a lion fighting a dragon and the words ‘S’RICARDI DE WYNHOV’. He appears to have only lasted a year before being replaced by another appointee of Edward I. Although one might suspect the name ‘Wyttone’ or ‘Witton’ is a corruption of ‘Wilton’ there were 2 others of the same designation in the Rolls, Adam and Michael, both from Selkirkshire. Additionally the Parson of Wilton Parish is listed, with a clear spelling distinction. These may be the lands of Whitton in Morebattle Parish. Probably the same ‘R. de Wyttone’, clerk of St. Andrews was listed in an inquiry of 1288 made into debts of the late King of Scotland, and in the related writ in 1289. In 1292 he is recorded holding the church of ‘Soureby’, which had been granted to him by the King of Scotland.

woark (wôrk) n., arch. work – ‘...wui the wuddles an the vexes o woark i the mids o a michty ceetic fer away sindert’ [ECS], ‘But note that the verb is ti wurk (= to work), and we say wurkman, wurkshop, wurker, not woarkman, etc.’ [ECS] (this spelling favoured by E.C. Smith to emphasize the pronunciation of the noun form; the verb is also spelled ‘wurk’).

woarry (wô-ree) n., arch. worry (spelling to emphasize the occasional pronunciation).

wob (wob, wôb) n., poet. a web, woven material, piece of woven cloth – ‘...Weavin’ a wob to hap oor banes’ [WL], ‘...And an frae the ae shoddy wob’ [WL].

wobster (wob-stur) n., arch. a weaver – ‘The said day, in presence of the bailies and council of Hawick, the haill wobstaris being accused for usurping the bailies’ office...’ [BR1643], ‘...that the Wobstairs shall receive the town’s work...’ [BR1657] (also written ‘wobstair’ and ‘wobstar’; cf. wabster and webster).
the Webster’s Loft (ˈθu-wob-sturz-loft) n. alternative name for the Weaver’s Loft – ‘...the hail persons... concerned in and have particular interest to that loft in the church of Hawick commonly called the webster’s loft ...’ [BR1710].

Woden Law (ˈwō-din-law) n. hill of 1,388 feet (422 m), about 15 miles east of Hawick, near the Border. It was once home for Iron Age settlers and Roman legions, and is now a favourite walking area.

Wolfcleuch Burn (ˈwoolf-ˌkloʊ̅-bərn) n. stream in what is now Craik Forest, joining the Aithouse Burn, which becomes part of the Borthwick. There is a footpath from the car park at Craik village to the scenic waterfall on this burn. The lands of ‘Wolcleuche’ are recorded in 1535/6 when a horse was stolen from there, belonging to Robert Scott of Howpastley. The stream is fed by several smaller water courses, including Cat Sike.

Wolfcleuchheid (ˈwoolf-ˌkloʊ̅-ˌklihd) n. Wolfcleuchhead, a former shepherd’s cottage near the head of the Borthwick, about 12 miles from Hawick. Until 1689/90, when Roberton was formed, it was part of Hawick Parish. The building is in a clearing of Craik Forest just above the 20 foot high waterfall on the Wolfcleuch Burn. It is said that conventicles were held there in 1650. It was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718; at that time it covered 1224 acres and was bounded by Craikhope, Langshawburn, Buccleuch, Craik, Howpastley, Borthwick Water and Craikhope. William Park was there in at least 1763–75. Robert Pringle was shepherd there in 1797, farm labourer Andrew Scott in 1841 and William Armstrong in 1861. The cottage was still occupied into the early 20th century. It was renovated and used as an outdoor centre for groups from Wester Hailes in Edinburgh. Just to the north are the remains of a small turf-banked enclosure (sometimes written ‘Wolfcleughhead’), it is ‘Wolfcleughhead’ in the 1760s and 1770s; it is marked ‘Wolfcleuch’ on a parish map of 1650, ‘Wolfcleuchhead’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey and on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Wolfehopelee (ˈwoolf-ˌfup-ˌlee) n. farm on the B6357 between Wolfelee and Hyndlee, long part of the Wolfelee estate. The lands were partly in Hobkirk, but mostly in Southdean Parish. David Home of Wedderburn was granted these lands, along with those of Wolfelee in 1436. The tenant farmer was John Telfer in the early-to-mid 1800s and later Robert Inglis (also written ‘Wolfelee’; it is ‘Wolhopelee’ and ‘Wolhoole’ in 1436, ‘Wolhople’ in 1479 and 1515, ‘Wolfu-lee’ in 1522, ‘Wolfulp’ in 1525, ‘Wolhoplee’ in 1550, probably ‘Wooflee’ in 1564, ‘Wolhopey’ in 1574, ‘Wowahoplie’ in 1590, ‘Wolhoipley’ in 1627 and ‘Woolffopelie’ and ‘Wolfhopeley’ in 1677; it is marked as ‘Wolhoole’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and ‘Wolffhopee’ on Stobie’s 1770 map, when, curiously, ‘Wolfelee’ was still known as ‘Woollie’, so the name may indeed be related to ‘wolf’).

Wolfehopelee Burn (ˈwoolf-ˌfup-ˌlee-ˌburn) n. stream that rises to the east of Wolfehopelee Hill and is joined by the Cross Sike and the Catlee Burn, becoming part of the headwaters of the Rule. Near the head of the stream there was a linear earthwork linking to the head of the Battling Sike.

Wolfehopeshiels (ˈwoolf-ˌfup-shezdz) n. former herds cottage associated with Wolfehopelee. It is recorded in 1762, but there was already no sign of it by the mid-19th century.

Wolfelee (ˈwoolf-, woo-ˌlee) n. mansion, estate and hamlet south-east of Hawick, beyond Berwickshire, in Hobkirk Parish. On the near side of Wolfelee Hill there are the remains of an ancient settlement, where Roman remains were discovered. In early times the lands may have been owned by Jedburgh Abbey. It is probably the lands of ‘Willeys’ which William of Wauchope was granted in the early years of the 14th century. The lands were given to David Home of Wedderburn in 1436 by William Douglas, 2nd Earl of Angus, who was Lord of the Regality of Jedwood Forest. They were held of the superior for a red rose and were possessed by 7 Home Lairds, until sold to Sir William Cranston by Sir George...
Home in 1605. Alexander and Robert Turnbull were residents there in 1493. It was listed in 1538 among lands in Jedforest that had passed to the Crown, but the lands were claimed by the laird thereof; at that time it was valued at £10. In 1528 the superior was the Crown, since the Earl of Angus had forfeited his lands, and they were then held in ‘in blench’ for a silver penny. The lands were burned by the English in 1545. There were also Turnbull tenants there in the 16th century, e.g. James and Adam in 1516 and Hector in 1567. It was valued at £1000 along with other Southdean lands of Lord Cranston in 1643. The Cranstons in turn sold the estate to the Eliotts of Stobs in 1651, who passed it to the Stonedge branch. Gilbert Elliott of Stonedge paid the land tax on £1000 in 1678. The Eliotts of Stonedge, being in serious debt, were ordered to sell it off in 1730, the purchaser being William Elliot, an Edinburgh lawyer. His descendants held it until 1912. Bonnie Prince Charlie and his men camped near here in 1745. Robert Shortreed was occupier for a short period, paying tax for 17 windows there in 1748 (when it was listed in Southdean Parish). William Oliver is recorded paying the horse tax there in 1792–94. Thomas Scott was tenant in 1797. The lands were valued at £1000 in 1788 (when held by Cornelius Elliot). James Elliot changed the name from ‘Woolee’ when he had the main house built 1825–27, with architects and building work by Smith of Darnick. This incorporated part of an earlier building (specifically the lower, vaulted chamber, which was about all that was still standing), which had been itself rebuilt in 1698. This earlier house is mentioned as the location for a marriage contract in 1612. It was used as a dower-house by the Eliotts of Stobs and Stonedge in the late 17th and early 18th centuries. Tax was paid on 10 hearths at ‘The Place of oulie’ in 1691, ‘Woelie’ in 1694, ‘Wowlee’ in 1493, ‘Wolley’ and ‘Wolleye’ in 1538, then ‘the Woollie’. In 1526, ‘Wolley’ in 1516, ‘Wolle and Wolfe’ in 1528, ‘Wolleye’ in 1538, ‘Wolleye’ in 1539, ‘The Wolles’ in 1545, ‘Woollie’ in 1552/3, ‘Wolfleppe’ in 1550, ‘Wolhipe’ in 1557, ‘Wolleye’ in 1567, ‘Wolleye’ in 1574, ‘Wolleye’ in 1590 and 1616, ‘Wolley’ in 1616, ‘Woollie’ in 1626, ‘Wolleyes’ and ‘Wolleyes’ in 1677, ‘Wolley’ in 1690, ‘Woollie’ in 1691, ‘Woollie’ in 1709, ‘woollie’ in 1748, ‘Woollie’ in 1761 and 1797 and ‘Wolleye’ in 1811; it is ‘Oulie’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and is still ‘Woollie’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; the origin of the name is possibly Old English ‘wulf leah’, meaning ‘wood of the wolves’, however this may be confusion over the deliberately changed form of the name; it probably never contained the ‘f’ until the name was changed in the early 19th century, but this is confused because of the neighbouring ‘Wolfehopelee’ which does appear to have been related to the word ‘wolf’; it has also been suggested that the Wellogate in Hawick was named as the road to ‘Woollie’.

Free Church in the Rule valley. It was also sometimes known as Southdean Free Kirk. The congregation was first set up in 1846, following the Disruption. The meeting constituting it was held in Hawick in March 1849, with a list of 83 members drawn up as the initial congregation. The first minister was Rev. James Barbour Johnstone. James Elliot of Wolfelee gave some of the lands destroyed by fire in 1977, and is now little more than a lawn, although the stable block has been converted into a house. Locals continued to call it by the earlier name well into the 20th century. The house was probably the original of Sir Walter Scott’s Wolfcraig castle in ‘Heart of Midlothian’ and ‘Guy Mannering’. The noted art critic John Ruskin, who visited, said that the view from his bedroom window was the most beautiful he had seen in the United Kingdom. The lands were split into the farms of Over and Nether Wolfelee according to a sasine of 1479 and again in the 17th and 18th centuries. The old farmhouse was close to the site of the mansion house and was demolished in 1824, some of the stone being used for Wolfelee House. The newer farm of Wolfelee was called Cleuchhead. There have been Tuesday Ride-outs to here. The beech hedges that enclosed the house survive, as do 2 lodges (also spelled ‘Woolee’ and variants; it is probably first recorded as ‘Willey’s’ in about 1305 and is certainly ‘Wollee’ and ‘Wolle’ in 1436, ‘Wolle’ in 1469, ‘Wowlee’ in 1493, ‘Wowlie’ and ‘Wolleye’ in 1538, then the Woollie in 1526, ‘Wolley’ in 1516, ‘Wolle and Wolfe’ in 1528, ‘Wowlie’ in 1538, ‘Wolleye’ in 1539, The Wolles in 1545, ‘Woolie’ in 1552/3, ‘Wolhipe’ in 1550, ‘Wovlie’ in 1557, ‘Wolleye’ in 1567, ‘Wolleye’ in 1574, ‘Wowlie’ in 1590 and 1616, ‘Wolley’ in 1616, ‘Woolie’ in 1626, ‘Woolyes’ and ‘Wolleyes’ in 1677, ‘Wolley’ in 1690, ‘Woolie’ in 1691, ‘Woolie’ in 1709, ‘woolie’ in 1748, ‘Woolie’ in 1761 and 1797 and ‘Wolleye’ in 1811; it is ‘Oulie’ on Blaeu’s 1654 map and is still ‘Woollie’ on Stobie’s 1770 map; the origin of the name is possibly Old English ‘wulf leah’, meaning ‘wood of the wolves’, however this may be confusion over the deliberately changed form of the name; it probably never contained the ‘f’ until the name was changed in the early 19th century, but this is confused because of the neighbouring ‘Wolfehopelee’ which does appear to have been related to the word ‘wolf’; it has also been suggested that the Wellogate in Hawick was named as the road to ‘Woollie’.

Wolfelee Hill (woolf-lee-hil) n. hill in Southdean Parish, lying just south-east of Wolfelee. It reaches a height of 393 m (1,288 ft) and contains a triangulation pillar. Burns apparently climbed this during his Border tour of 1787. On the north-west slopes are the remains of a settlement, measuring about 50 m by 40 m, consisting of a bank and ditch, and perhaps connecting with a hollow road to the north. A number of metal finds were uncovered at this location in the 1990s, including a Romano-British trumpet brooch and Roman-style iron axehead, now in the National Museum of Scotland. The slopes of the hill also show signs of old cultivation and plantation banks. The east side is crossed by a section of track, which is part of the Wheel Causeway.

Wolfelee Ludge (woolf-lee-luj, -loj) n. gatehouse for Wolfelee mansion, located by the B6357, at the north end of the former driveway.

Wolfelee Mill (woolf-lee-mil) n. mill on Wolfelee farm. Andrew Turnbull was tenant there in 1684 when his servant John Hall was among those declared as fugitives for attending conventicles. The location was later called ‘The Glen’, where 2 cottages were built.

Wolfelee Schuil (woolf-lee-skil) n. former school near Wolfelee.

Wolfelee Schuil Cottage (woolf-lee-skil-ko’ej) n. name used for the house that was formerly the small school Wolfelee. The Waugh family lived there in the latter part of the 19th century.

Wolfohope (woolf-fup) n. former farm in the Ettrick valley on the Wolfhope Burn and above the farm of Tushielaw. It may be where Adam Scott ‘in wolhop’ was from, recorded as surety in 1494/5. Also in 1494/5 James Laidlaw of ‘Wynterburn’ had remission for the murder of his uncle’s son, John Laidlaw, who was from here, and John Cook from here had cows stolen by Robert Scott of Deloraine. Additionally in that year it is recorded that a group of men who were reset by Adam Scott in Annelshope, had pillaged the farm there. There was a ruined shepherd’s cottage near where the stream meets the Tushielaw Burn (it is ‘Wolfhop’ in 1494/5).

Wolfhope Burn (woolf-fup-burn) n. stream in the Ettrick valley, which joins the Meikleburn Burn at Rigfoot. It is said that this was where the last wild wolf in Scotland was shot. Also on a steep slope here is the monument for Lady Florence Cust’s wild ride down the steep bank during a fox hunt. The ‘landis of Wolfhope and pendicle theirof callit Belstanerig’ is listed among the Dumfriesshire possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1663. The lands of ‘Wolfhoope’ are among those whose superiority was inherited by John Maxwell, Earl of Nithsdale in 1670 and William, Earl of Nithsdale in 1696 (this could be the ‘Wulfhope’ in Ettrick Forest granted to Melrose Abbey in the reign of Alexander II: ‘Woollohp’ is marked on Blaeu’s c.1654 map).

Wolfhopefit (woolf-fup-fit) n. land at the foot of the Wolfhope Burn, on the farm of Bush in Ewesdale. Around 1900 ground there was brought under the plough and a large amount of stonework was unearthed, suggesting there had once been several buildings there. It is marked ‘Settlement’ on modern maps.

Wolfs (woolfs) n., pl. wolves, once indigenous in Britain. They appear to have survived in the Borders into the 16th century. Scotland’s last wolf was killed either near Killiecrankie in 1680, Brora around 1700, Perthshire in 1743 or Morayshire also in 1743. The 12th century historian Reginald of Durham recounts a tale told him by Dolfinius, parson of Cavers; a poor widow, who could not afford a shepherd, had her flock protected from wolves by appealing to St. Cuthbert and seeking sanctuary in the churchyard of the chapel of St. Cuthbert (probably at Cogsmill). The only local legacy of their existence is in the name ‘Wolfcleuch’ near Craik and ‘Wolfehopele’ near Wauchope (with Wolfelee probably being unrelated, the ‘f’ being a relatively recent addition) – ‘Woods of dark oak, that once o’er Teviot hung. Ere on their swampy beds her mosses sprung. On these green banks the ravening wolf-dogs prowl, And fitful to the hoarse night-thunder howl!” [JL], ‘Old Wat o’ Harden, tireless and keen, Rode first of

Woll (wo̱l, wo̱l) n. large house in Ashkirk, traditionally home of the Scotts of Woll. It is unclear what the lands here were called before the 17th century. One possibility is that the Scotts ‘in le walis’ (who derived their byname from lands called ‘Walls’ in Dryfesdale near Lockerbie) transferred their designation to this area. The first known owner of the lands was Walter Scott of Woll, recorded from at least 1606, and said to be descended from the Scotts of Haining. His grandson James sold the lands to Sir William Scott of Harden and William’s 5th son John, in about 1660. This established the more modern Lairdship. John Murray was a tenant there in 1638 and William Laidlaw in 1639. In 1643 the lands were valued at £533 and owned by Walter Scott of Woll; the teinds were valued (along with Leap Hill, Castleside and Broadlee), valed at £208 and owned by Robert Scott of Heap. The estate was valued at £533 6s 8d according to the 1663 Land Tax Rolls and £595 in 1678 (when owned by John Scott). The house was taxed for having 8 hearths in 1694, and there were 4 other tenants listed on the estate. Tax was paid on 22 windows there in 1748 and 31 in 1753. William Scott is marked as proprietor on Ainslie’s 1773 map. It was valued at £533 in 1788, with the teinds valued at an additional £62, and the owner being Charles Scott of Woll. It had the same value and owner according to the Land Tax Rolls of about 1811. In 1839 it was inherited by Col. John Scott, the last Scott of Woll, who sold it to Mr. Ainslie in 1860 (probably the G.C. Ainslie stated to be there in a record of 1868). It was in turn sold to George William Bell in 1863, and then his son William Scott Bell became the owner. The estate is drawn on Roy’s c.1750 map, with the farm of Wollrig containing a possible old enclosure and a small plantation. The 1843 map by Crawford & Brooke shows both Woll and New Woll. It is also the name given to the general area just west of Ashkirk. Woll estate is home to a golf course (expanded recently from 9 to 18 holes). The buildings include a stable block (formerly spelled ‘Wall’ and other variants; it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map as ‘Well’, Adair’s c. 1688 map as ‘well’, is ‘Wool’ on Stobie’s 1770 map and ‘Wooll’ on Ainslie’s 1773 map; it is ‘Wollis’ in 1617, ‘Well’ in 1636, ‘Wall’ in 1643, ‘Wooll’ in 1661, ‘Wooll’ in 1673, ‘waalls’ in 1678, ‘Woal’ in the 1680s and 1690s, ‘Woall’, ‘Wool’ and ‘Wooll’ in the 1690s, ‘Wall’ in 1690, ‘Wooll’ in 1692, ‘Well’ and ‘Wooll’ in 1704, ‘Waalls’ in 1715, ‘Wooll’ in 1726, ‘Woalli’ in 1737, ‘Walls’ in 1748, ‘Wool’ in 1753, ‘Wooll’ in 1761, ‘Wooll, or Wall’ in 1788, ‘Wooll’ in 1805, ‘Wooll’ in 1811 and 1815 and ‘Wool or Wall’ in 1834; the origin is obscure, with possibilities including ‘wall’ for a spring, or a connection with either sheep or wolves!).

Woll Burn (wo̱l-burn) n. stream that runs roughly south-east to join the Ale Water about half a mile south of Ashkirk. It is fed by the Wollrig Burn, Hutler Burn and Blindhaugh Burn.

the Woll Golf Course (thu̱-wol-golf-kō̱trs) n. a 9-hole golf course on the Woll estate just outside Ashkirk, opened in 1993.

Wollie Miln (wo̱-lee-miln) n. former corn mill in Hobkirk parish, around the 17th and 18th centuries, on a site later occupied by ‘The Glen’ cottages. It may be the same as Woollee Mill.

Woll Rig (wo̱l-rig) n. hilly area on the back road connecting Ashkirk with the Ettrick valley, which reaches a height of 337 m (1,095 ft). Robert Davidson is recorded as farmer there in 1797. Petter Clark was there in the 1860s. The Bishop’s Stone lies under the dyke near the cattle-grid here. The ridge offers an extensive panorama of the Borders and the Moffat Hills to the west. The farm of Wollrig contains a possible old enclosure as well as the turf base of a former shieling hut. There is also further cultivation remains and a possible enclosure by the road between Wollrig farm and the Bishop’s Stone – ‘By high Woll Rig to Ettrick Or over Chapelhill The lure of upland places They bend me to their will’ [WL] (also written ‘Woll Rigg’ and ‘Wollrigg’).

Wollrig Burn (wo̱l-rig-burn) n. small stream in Ashkirk Parish. It rises on Woll Rig and in Tocher Lodge Moss, and runs roughly south-east to join the Woll Burn. It is probably the ‘small rivulet on the east side of Hunlie’ recorded in a charter of about 1170, describing lands granted to Orr of Ashkirk.

won (won) v., arch. to reside, dwell – ‘...let us gae furth intil the feeld, let us won in the clauochans’ [HSR], ‘The righteous sall inheerit the sun when the low clouds life’ [WHO].

wonderfi (wun-dur-fi) adj. wonderful – ‘Colin and Danny here, whae next? This is wonderfu’! Whae next?’ [JEDM] (also written ‘wonderfu’ etc.).

wonsome (won-sum) adj., poet. winsome, attractive — ‘... for thy voyce is sweit, an’ they countenance is wonsome’ [HSR] (also wainsome).

wont (wont) pp., adj., arch. customary, usual — ‘... of the sayd James off Langlandis and hys harys, makand haucht and wont seruis for the sayd landys’ [SB1431].

woo (woo) n., arch. wool — ‘He gies snav like woo’, he skatters the haar-frost like assis’ [HSR], ‘Sae let them get their taits o’ woo Wash’d in the purlin’ river Though they pollute it at the time It sune turns clear as ever’ [TCh], ‘Tarry woo’ is best of a’’ [T], ‘... And some brought dumplees o’ woo And some brought fitches o’ bacon’ [ES], (see also ‘oo’).

the Woo Burn (thu-woo-burn) n. stream that rises near Woo Law, gathering water from Ashkirk Loch and Shielwood Loch to join the Ale Water near Burnfoot.

Woodburn (wood-burn) n. William (13th C.) person from Roxburghshire who may have sworn fealty to Edward I in 1296, as stated in ‘Origines parochiales Scotiae’. Both James Robson and James Murray wrote that he was ‘William of Wodeburn, parson of the Church of Mynetowe’. He is transcribed as ‘Willielmus Wodeburn, parson of the Church of Mynetowe’. He is transcribed as ‘Willielmus Wodeburn, Parsona ecclesi de Mynetowe’ in Borthwick’s 1775 list. However, he does not appear in later published versions of the Ragman Rolls.

Woodger (woo-jur) n. John (19th C.) coachman to Mark Sprot of Riddell for 58 years — ‘His cheerful greeting and his ready joke Will be remembered long by all who felt The influence of his individuality. Genial and robust. His kindliness Will always be recalled with kindliness’ [FL].

Wood’s Plan of Hawick (woodz-plawn-ov-hlk) n. map of 1824, surveyed by John Wood (c.1780–1847) of Edinburgh for his ‘Town Atlas of Scotland’ (1828). This is one of the earliest maps of Hawick showing any detail, and indicates buildings, plots of land (with owners names), wells and even trees.

Woo Law (woo-law) n. hill to the north-eat of Whitfield farm, about 4 miles from Hawick, reaching a height of 322 m. Woolaw Loch and Woolaw Moss are nearby, as well as Woolaw Covert, and a spring called the Woolaw or Cheese Well. The Woo Burn also has its source near here, running near Ashkirk Loch to eventually join the Ale Water. There is an ancient rectangular enclosure on the east of the hill, about 900 m north-north-west of Whitfield farmhouse, and the remains of a farmstead and enclosures a little to the east. There is also a claim of evidence of a Roman road between here and Groundistone Heights.

Woolaw Moss (woo-law-mos) n. marshy area near Woo Law. A drain was constructed, probably in the 19th century to improve the land for agricultural use, draining the Moss into the Cala Burn. Aerial photography has shown an area of rig-and-furrow cultivation there about 450 m north-west of Whitfield.

Woolhope (oo-lok, woo-hop) n. farmstead in Liddesdale, situated on the Kih Sike, about a mile or so to the north-west of Newcastleton. There is an extensive ancient field system in the area, including ‘lazy beds’ to the north of the cottage. The area is probably the same as what is marked ‘Oulack’ on Blaen’s c.1654 map and first recorded as ‘Wilayk’ in c.1376. Alexander Armstrong possessed the farm of ‘Willok’ in 1632, which was probably here. William Pringle was shepherd there in 1841 and 1851 and William Robson in 1861. The farmhouse is derelict (note the local pronunciation; it is ‘Woolock’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Wooliegate (woo-lee-ga’) n. another name for the Wellogate — ‘A party is fined for breaking of the marches betwixt the propertie of the Duchess of Buccleuch and the commonti at the Woolee gate’ [JW1715] (it is ‘Woolie Gate’ on Wood’s 1824 map).

Woolie’s (woo-leez) n. branch of Woolworths P.L.C., situated at 46 High Street. The store opened in about 1930 (as store No. 413), with its original sign reading ‘F.W. Woolworth & Co. Ltd., 3d and 6d Stores’. It closed in 2009. The building was purpose-built as a Woolworth’s store, and has the typical 5 bays and central pediment. The area is probably the same as what is marked ‘Oulack’ on Blaen’s c.1654 map and first recorded as ‘Wilayk’ in c.1376. Alexander Armstrong possessed the farm of ‘Willok’ in 1632, which was probably here. William Pringle was shepherd there in 1841 and 1851 and William Robson in 1861. The farmhouse is derelict (note the local pronunciation; it is ‘Woolock’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey).

Woollee (woo-lee) n. former name for Wolfelee, changed by James Elliot when he built the mansion there 1825–27. It is believed that the ‘Wellogate’ is derived from being the ‘gate’ to ‘Woollee’. The name is known from at least the early 15th century, and in 1605 is recorded as the separate ‘Over Woollee’ and ‘Nether Woollee’ (also spelled ‘Woollie’, ‘Wolle’, ‘Woelie’,
Woollee Mill

‘Wowlee’, ‘Wowlie’, etc.; it is ‘Overwollie’ and ‘Neather Wolley’ in 1636.

Woollee Mill (woo-lee-mil) n. former corn mill attached to the lands of ‘Woollee’ (i.e. Wolfelee). It is recorded in 1659 along with other lands sold by William, Lord Cranstoun to Sir Gilbert Elliott of Stobs. Turnbulls were tenants in the late 17th century (it is ‘Woollie-mill’ in 1684 and ‘Wollie Mihn’ in 1691).

Woollee smiddy (woo-lee-smi-dee) n. former name for the blacksmiths at Forkins near Wolfelee.

Woollie Rig (woo-lee-rig) n. hill just to the south of Riccarton Junction, being the southern ridge of Fawhope Knowe.

Wooplaw (woop-law) n. farm just north of the Carter Bar, in Southdean Parish. William Ainslie was there in 1623. Walter Thomson was tenant there in 1694. Douglas Davidson was tenant in the mid-19th century. There is another area of the same name north of Gala (it is ‘Wouplaw’ in 1623 and ‘ouplaw’ and ‘Wplau’ in 1694; there is a place of the same name in Melrose Parish).

wopen (wō-pin) adj., arch. wrapped, tied up – ‘The spelling is, in most cases phonetic, and shows that the local pronunciation has been then, as now, distinctive, … gritt beens, wheet, wopen cole plants ...’ [DMW] (cf. waupit).

Worchar (wor-chur) n. old name for Orchard farm and surrounding area.

Wordsworth (wurdz-wurth) n. Dorothy (1771–1855) sister of the poet William. In 1803 she accompanied her brother on a tour of the Borders, led for much of the way by Sir Walter Scott. Her diary records the party leaving Jedburgh on 22th September, passing through Denholm, then stopping off at Hornshole (where Scott told them an imaginative story about the name deriving from an old school master who lived nearby), before arriving in Hawick, where they stayed at the Tower Inn. The next morning they ‘walked with Mr. Scott along a high road for about two miles, up a bare hill’ from where they had a great view to the south; this was probably the Verteish, although other places are possible. Scott left them after breakfast and they travelled on towards Langholm, stopping off at Branxholme, Caerlenrig and Mosspaul, where she described: ‘The scene, with this single dwelling, was melancholy and wild, but not dreary, though there was no tree nor shrub; the small streamlet glittered, the hills were populous with sheep; but the gentle bending of the valley, and the correspondent softness in the forms of the hills, were of themselves enough to delight the eye.’ William (1770–1850) English poet who visited Hawick in 1803 as part of a Border tour with his sister Dorothy, led by Sir Walter Scott. They spent the night in the Tower Inn and walked up the Wellogate (or perhaps the Verteish) to enjoy the view. There is a brief entry in his sister’s diary. A plaque commemorating the visit was placed on the Tower in 1921 by the Callants’ Club. Next day they travelled south and stopped at Mosspaul, spending the next night in Langholm.

wordy (wur-dee) adj., poet. worthy – ‘Sae dinna vex a heart that is your ain, But end at anes a wordy woor’s pain’ [CPM], ‘It’s no wordie a dad of a bonnet,’ was a common phrase used when expressing contempt …’ [EM1820], ‘I wull ca apon the Lord, wha is wurdie til be prayet’ [HSR], ‘The keeper o’ that ale-hoose Is wordy nocht but scorn’ [WL] (also written ‘wordie’).

wore in (wör-in) pp., arch. herded into an area, hemmed in – ‘…and thereby wore in the sheep and nolt of Over Southfield so that they could not get to the Common for part of that day’ [C&L] (cf. weir).

the Workhouse (thu-wurk-hoos) n. another name for the Pairhouse.

the Workin Men’s Buildin Society (thu-wur-kin-menz-bil-din-su-I-i-’ce) n. also known as ‘the Building Society’ or the Hawick Working Men’s Building and Investment Company Limited, a name which it adopted in 1888. It formed in 1864, registered under the Friendly Societies’ Acts, after a previous failed attempt to start a local building society in 1851 (the Hawick Benefit Building Society). It offered a safe investment opportunity and cheap housing for the working classes, with the house being paid off over time by the purchaser. The society was instrumental in raising the quality of accommodation in Hawick in the latter part of the 19th century. Much of ‘the Terraces’ in the Wellogate were built by the society, starting with Waverley Terrace. In all it built 324 quarter-house units, 20 half-houses and 94 cottages in the Wellogate. In the early days houses were sold by auction and the street names often suggested by the successful bidders.

workit (wur-kee’, -ki’) pp. worked – ‘in they days the men aye workit ower Christmas’, ‘His faither workit at the mill Like mony a decent chap’ [DH] (also written ‘workeet’; alternative past tense to Worms Cleuch (wurmz-klooch) n. small stream in the headwaters of the Teviot, joining Rams Cleuch at the steadings of Ramsaycleuchburn. A steadings there, ‘Ormscleuch’ was listed in a Hawick Parish valuation of 1627 along with Rashiegrain and Commonbrae, valued jointly ‘in stok 120 lb., in teynd 20 lb.’

Wormston (wurm-stin) n. old name for Ormsgton farm.

Wormwud (wurm-wud) n. former name for lands in the Ettrick valley. In 1479 the eastern part was held by William Chisholme, with Alexander Murray, Rector of Hawick holding the ‘grassum’. In 1541 it is described that the western part was called Whitehaugh Brae and the eastern part was Hutlerburn. Hence the lands lay along the B7009 between Inner Huntly and Ettrickbridge. There were Scotts and Murays there in the mid-15th century (it is ‘Warmwod’ in 1479 and 1541).

worst (wur-si) n., arch. worsted, twisted woollen yarn – ‘Hard-woeren worst threids for wairp ...’[WL] (also written ‘worset’ and ‘worset’).

Wowie (wow-ee) n. nickname for William Laidlaw Scott.

Wowlick (wow-lik) n. former lands in Liddesdale. They are recorded on a rental roll of c.1376 as ‘Wlilayk’ (valued at 5 shillings) and ‘Wllayk mair’ (valued at 18 shillings), the section called ‘Ludne’. In a rental roll of 1541 they are Wr.

‘Wowlyk’, valued at 20 shillings and leased to Simon Armstrong (probably of Tinnisburn). This is surely the same as ‘Oulack’ on Blaeu’s c.1654 map, which is situated near the modern farm of Woolhope, and hence probably the same place, i.e. north-west of Newcastleton.

Wr. (wal-ur) n. formerly common abbreviation for ‘Walter’.

wraith (rāth) n., poet. wrath – ‘The crabbit carle wadna speak, His swelling wraithe did puffe ...’ [JTe], ‘... for thaye smaing inequitiite upon me, an’ in wrath thaye haezte me’ [HSR], ‘Surelie the wrath o’ man sall praysse thee ...’ [HSR].

wran (rawng) adj. wrong – ‘is that a dough-nut or em A wrang?’, ‘Lord Mangerton them orders gave, Your horses the wrang way maaum a’ be shod ...’ [CPM], ‘For ne’er a neighbour was he wrang, He’d sooner in a halter hang’ [RDW], ‘And oft when no’ richt he’s nane seae far wrang’ [JEDM], ‘... wrangously (rawng-iss-lee) adj., arch. wrongfully, incorrectly – ‘…wha hethna lifet up his saul untill vainitie, nar swurn wrangouslie’ [HSR].

the Wrangway Burn (thu-rawng-wa-burn) n. stream that joins the Limiecleuch Burn in the headwaters of the Teviot. Its source is near Rashiegrain Height, and it runs near Ewes Doors and to the west of Wisp Hill. There is some evidence for a possible Roman road linking the valley of this burn with that of the Eweslees Burn. A large stone on its banks contains cup-shaped hollows, although it is unclear whether they are man-made or natural (it is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map; the name is said to derive from when a group of Scottish rievers were being pursued up the burn by the English and slipped over to Eweslees via Ewes Doors, with the English continuing the wrong way; however, the meaning may be from the stream appearing to come from the pass at Ewes Doors, but in fact originating on Haggis Side).

Wreathlongshot (reeth-lawng-sho’) n. former name for part of Salenside in Ashkirk Parish. In 1815 they are described as ‘the twenty shilling land of Salenside called Wreathlongshot and Broomshaugh’.

the Wreath Layin (thu-reeth-lä-in) n. ceremony held on the Saturday morning of the Common Riding, when the Cornet, Right- and Left-Hand Men lay wreaths at the War Memorial in the Park, while the Acting Father holds the Flag in a lowered position. The same phrase sometimes refers to the wreath-laying ceremony at Hornsfoot, carried out by the Cornet’s Lass on after the Kirking Ceremony. Before 1977 this ceremony took place after the Cornet’s Walk on the Thursday.

wreesle (ree-sul) v., arch. to wreassle – ‘Hoo memory wreasaals at the sneak Whene’er the ‘slogan’ sooned …’ [RH] (also spelled ‘wressal’).

Wreth (reth) n. Alexander (16th C.) miller recorded in 1554 when he witnessed the grant of an acre of land on ‘Harpaparhill’ to Archibald Elliot in Gorrenberry by James Douglas of Cavers, and also witnessed the letter of reversion by Elliot to Douglas that followed. In fact two men of this name are listed, with one being ‘molendinario’ (i.e. miller) to distinguish him from the other. He may have been miller at Spittal-on-Rule or elsewhere in Cavers Parish (‘Wret’ is otherwise unknown and may be a transcription error for some other name, e.g. ‘Veitch’).

the W.R.I. (thu-du-bul-yoo-awr-1) n. the Women’s Rural Institute, also sometimes called the ‘Rural’. The Scottish W.R.I. was founded in 1917, partly as an outgrowth of the suffrage movement, and partly following success of such institutes in Canada 20 years earlier. This quickly spread into a set of social clubs for women in sparsely populated rural areas, with an emphasis on preserving traditional handicrafts and cooking. Since their formation these groups have been important for organising community events in local rural areas, and also for having community halls built. The members of each Institute usually meets once a month. There have been active W.R.I. groups in Appletreehall, Bedrule, Burnfoot, Cogsmill, Hermitage, Minto, Newcastleton, Newmill & Teviothead, Robertson, Southdean, and Wilton Dean, as well as further afield.

Wright (ri’) n. Rev. David L. minister of Hawick Old Parish 1972-86, also with responsibility for Teviothead. He was the last minister of the ‘Auld Pairish’, which finally closed in 1987 and was demolished a few years later. George (d.1911) baker at 2 Allars Crescent. He married Helen Davidson, who was related to the Hawick plasterers, and died in 1915. They had a daughter Georgina, who was a shopkeeper in Irby, Cheshire, and other daughters Mary Jane and Isabella. He is buried in Wellogate Cemetery. Hector (16th C.) smith of Hawick, mentioned in the will of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1574. He was owed money ‘for schone to the Lairdis horse’. James (17th C.) tenant of Harry Riddell, probably near Bewlie, recorded in 1665. James (17th C.) recorded in the Heath Tax rolls of 1694 among those ‘Payed but not listed in Hauick Town’. James Hunter (d.1765) killed falling from a steeple in Jedburgh, he is buried in Lilliesleaf kirkyard. His tombstone reads ‘Stop, traveller, as you go by, I once had life and breath; But falling from a steeple high I swiftly passed through death. Take you example by my fate. And be by me advised; Repent before it be too late, Lest you be thus surprised'. John (17th C.) described along with Robert as tenant of Spittal in a Hawick magistrates case of 1642 when Samuel Rutherford acquired them and a large number of their drinking friends of stealing his wallet. John (17th C.)
resident of Spittal-on-Rule on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. He was surely related to the earlier John. John (17th C.) smith in Lilliesleaf according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. He is listed among the ‘deficients’ of the Parish, but was taxed for 2 hearths. John (18th/19th C.)
mason in Castleton. He subscribed to William Scott’s ‘ Beauties of the Border’ in 1821. John (18th/19th C.) grocer and spirit dealer at the Sandbed, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. John ‘Jackie’ (1922–??) sales rep by trade, he was scrum-half for Hawick R.F.C., also capped for Scotland and playing for the Barbarians. He was sometimes nicknamed ‘Ma Baa’ from his rugby-playing days. He was Cornet in 1952 (and hence one of the few who have worn both the green coat and green coat). It was at his suggestion that Ex-Cornets were allowed to wear their green coats at the Ball, provided they could still get into them! John (1947–2008) professional folk music-cian. Born in Bournemouth, and brought up in Manchester, he worked as a sales rep and played in rock bands as a youth. He joined the Household Cavalry 1970 and left in 1974, becoming a shepherd. He lived in Derbyshire, then North Yorkshire and Northumberland, before settling near Newcastle in 1980. In 1990 he made a cassette recording of unaccompanied traditional songs, called ‘Border Crossings’, funded from the sale of a horse. Teaming up with Kenny Spiers on guitar and Wattie Robson of fiddle, he formed the John Wright Band in 1993 to support a tour for their CD ‘Ride the Rolling Sky’. He popularised the Hawick song ‘ The Wail of Flodden’ (after asking Henry Douglas to suggest a local song he could learn), although in a somewhat together with folk music version. Further albums included ‘The Things We’ve Handed Down’ (1996), ‘Other
Robert (17th C.) resident of Spittal in 1642 when he was named among acquaintances of Samuel Rutherford who were accused of stealing his wal-et in Hawick. He was probably related to John, who was also listed in Spittal in the same case.
Robert (17th C.) Hawick resident who married Margaret Deans. Their son Robert was born in 1643. Margaret’s will is recorded in 1697, by which time he was already deceased. Note that father and son may be confused here. He is probably the smith of that name who was elected to the Council in 1648. Bailie Robert (17th/18th C.) recorded as Bailie in the 1680s. He was tried for abusing another Bailie in 1685, and a man is recorded being fined for calling him a ‘basse
knife’ (i.e. ‘base knave’) in 1689. He owned 2 ‘tenements’ in the West End of Hawick, according to a sasine of 1687 (for a tenement between his).
In 1688 James Turnbull was fined for assaulting him, when he tried to take him to the Tolbooth.
He was probably the son of the deceased Robert of Hawick who became a locksmith’s apprentice in Edinburgh in 1659. He may be the Robert who was born in Hawick in 1643, son of Robert and Margaret Deans. He was probably the Robert who witnessed a baptism for James Halliday in 1675. He was probably the Robert who was fined in 1679 for destroying a load of peat belonging to Robert Thomson in Hawick Shiel, with the other man also fined for fighting with him. He is included among the contributors to Hawick’s new curch bell in 1693/4. He was ‘late bailie Havek’ in 1696 when a child of his was buried in Greyfriars Cemetery in Edinburgh. In 1697 he was one of 4 men who protested against the continuing of Robert Ruecastle as Bailie, through there being a vacancy and on account of an agreement made with the Commissioners of the Duchess of Buccleuch, until a new election for Bailie was held. Robert (17th C.) corindor in Easter Burn-foot who was made a Burgess for free in 1690 ‘in respect it is the custom of all towns, that the Provost or other Magistrates have the liberty to create 2 or 3 Burgessess gratis’; he thus may be the first known Honorary Burgess. He was also resident of Easter Burnfoot according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Samuel ‘Sam’ (20th C.)
Burgh Chamberlain in the 1960s. Simon (17th C.) under-miller who is listed among those who subscribed to the fund for the new Kirk bell in Hawick in 1693/4. He is also listed as undermiller at Roughheugh in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) one of the men who appraised horses in Hawick for the Covenanters army in 1644. He could be the William, married to Agnes Elliot, whose children baptised in Hawick included Robert (b.1636), Bessie (b.1639), Thomas (b.1641) and Francis (b.1643). The witnesses to the 1641 baptism were William Liddell and Andrew Lidderdale. Alternatively he could be the William, married to Bessie Huggan, whose children baptised in Hawick, included William (b.1647) and Margaret (b.1653). William (17th C.) listed among the ‘Cottars in Hassandean’ on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (b.1679/80) tenant in Dovestanhbraehead. His wife, Helen Turnbull, died in 1740, aged 60. They are buried in Bedrule kirkyard. William (17th/18th C.) resident of Hawick. In 1696 he was served heir to the 5-merk land of Alton Crofts, from his cousin Walter Scott of Alton Crofts. His mother was Marion Scott, sister of Robert, who was father of Walter. William (17th/18th C.) shoemaker in Hawick. In 1718 there was a dispute between him and Robert Wilson over the spaces their wives occupied in St. Mary’s Kirk. His claim was that his wife had the space for 3 years before he moved to ‘easter Burnfoot myyne’. He witnessed a baptism for shepherd Andrew Brown in 1740. He could have been the William born in Hawick to Francis and Jane Graham in 1673 (formerly spelled ‘Wright’ and variants).

Wright an Miller’s (r'-an-mi-lurz) n. sewing materials shop near the south end of North Bridge Street in the mid-20th century.

writer ti the signet (r'-ur-ti-thu-sig-i') n. Scots law term for a legal officer who prepares writs etc., often abbreviated WS. The Society of Writers to Her Majesty’s Signet was set up in 1594, and members originally had special privileges for drawing up documents.

Wud (wud) n. (Wood) David (16th C.) tenant of one of the farms of Midshiels, Appletreeshal, Broadlee, Cottlaw or ‘Burnside’ in 1562/3 when Lord Alexander Home tried to remove his ‘pretended tenants’. Francis Watson ‘Frank’ (1862–1953) born in Edinburgh, he worked in the Navy and then became a well known painter, specialising in water-colours, particularly landscapes and maritime scenes. He attended Berwick Art School, finished his training at South Kensington Art School and the Academie Julian in Paris and in 1883 was appointed 2nd master at the School of Art in Newcastle. In 1889 he moved to Hawick as Art Master at the Buccleuch School. In 1899 he gave up teaching to become a professional painter, specialising in marine landscapes. He lived at Southsea, Portsmouth, Berwick and Edinburgh. He painted many scenes around the Borders, including one of Wulliestruther Loch. He also painted a portrait of Robert Milligan in 1890 (hanging in the Town Hall), a portrait of Thomas Purdom (in the Museum) in 1891, one of Robert Murray in 1897 (in the Museum), and one of D. McBurnie Watson in 1898. In 1893 he painted a view of Wilton Dean, as well as a view showing... the old red and blue Common Riding flag at the Town Hall, in 1895 he painted a view of Hawick based on the 1813 painting of French prisoner-of-war M. Prefort and in 1902 painted a view from Wester Braid Road. He was present at the surrender of the German fleet at Scapa Flow, making some sketches of some of the ships before they were scuttled. In 1939 he accompanied George VI and Queen Elizabeth on a royal tour of Canada. He died in Perthshire. Several of his descendants have also been artists. George (1763/4–1834) resident at Doveshaughamill. He married Jennet Wright, who died in 1846, aged 72. Andrew, who lived at Spittal and married Margaret Rule was probably his son. He is buried in Bedrule kirk- yard. George Ormiston ‘Ornie’ (1918–2003) born in St. Boswells, he moved to the Borthwick valley at 4, when his father took over the Roberton police station. He was educated at Roberton and Hawick and spent most of his life living at Thornbank in Denholm. He became a joiner in Hawick, enlisted in the K.O.S.B., being present at the Letzlingen Common Riding, and returned to Denholm in 1947. He married Maisie Scott of Overhall. He was a great lover of the Border hills, greeting each New Year from the summit of Ruberslaw, and helping rejuvenate the pine trees near the top. He worked as an insurance man and in Lyle & Scott’s and retired in 1982. He also regularly won Denholm’s best kept garden prize. He was an office bearer of the Archaeological Society for 30 years, being Field Secretary 1962–72 and 1982–88, and organising excavations at Crum- haugh Tower, Dod Burn peel tower and Here- nhall, as well as the restoration of the Norman burial ground at Minto. He published ‘Roberton, the Making of a Parish’ in 1991. Due to infirmity he moved into Hawick and ended his days at Crumhaugh House. Just weeks before he died he was presented with the Dutch Liberation Medal. His photo album and scrapbook covering 1935–89 is in the Borders Archive. Hamish (1926–2009), C.B.E., born in Hawick, where he attended Trinity and the High School. His father was in charge of coal supplied for the town during WWII, and his mother was headmistress at Cogsmill. He was a keen member of the Scouts and the Scout Pipe Band. He obtained a B.Sc. in Chemistry from St. Andrews in 1947 and a Ph.D. in 1950. He joined the former Australian National University staff in London in 1951, but then moved to Strathclyde in 1953, where he stayed until retirement in 1991. He was Vice-Principal there 1984–6. He also contributed to forming several colleges into Glasgow Caledonian University, where the Hamish Wood Building was named in his honour, and from where he received an honorary doctorate in 1994. He received the C.B.E. for services to higher education in 1993, and was a Fellow of the Royal Society of Edinburgh and the Royal College of Chemistry. His research focussed on inorganic and medicinal chemistry, particularly anti-bacterial drugs. He married Jean Mitchell, who was a Cub Scout leader in Hawick. Their children were Sheena (Mrs. Walker) and Colin. Helen (17th C.) resident of the west-side of Ha- wick, recorded on the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. She probably ran an innor shop of some sort. Henry (15th C.) Chaplain who in 1445 leased his tenantry of the lands of Harden Wood, lying within Borthwicksheils, to Andrew Ker of Altonburn. It seems likely that he was a local chaplain, e.g. for the nearby Kirk Borthwick or for Hassendean, in which Parish Borthwicksheils lay. His name is recorded as ‘Henry of Wod chap- lane’. The lease, which is written in the vernacular, is one of the earliest known local pieces of Scots writing (assuming it is genuinely local of course). James (18th C.) mason of Hawick, son-in-law of mason David Laing. He possibly worked on the Slitrig Bridge and was made an Honorary Burgess in 1776 along with Gala mason John Hal dane. Capt. James John (d.1911) of the 45th Regiment. In 1868 he married Blanche, who was daughter of Sir William Eliott of Stobs and Wells. Along with his wife he acted as trustee for the Wells estate in the latter part of the 19th century. Because of the debt on the estate, they had to cut down lots of the old trees to meet the trust payments (this being locally quite unpop- ular). He may be son of the Mr. C. Wood who rented the ‘shooting’ at Stobs from 1861. Jean (18th C.) kitchen maid at Minto in 1785 and 1786, when she was working for Sir Gilbert Elliot. John ‘Johnnie’ (16th/17th C.) of Whitfield, one of the local men accused in 1612 of charging too much interest on loans; ; his name is omitted from the list of those found guilty. It seems likely this is the Whitfield near Hawick, but it may be another one in Roxburghshire. John (1782–1847) surveyor and cartographer who produced town plans of around 150 places across Scotland, as well as in England and Wales. This includes his 1824 ‘Plan of the Town and Environs of Hawick from actual survey’, which provides the first detailed map of the Town. It can be assumed that he spent some time in Hawick carrying out the survey himself. He lived in Morningside in Edinburgh from 1813 and was elected Permanent Director of the Land Surveyors' Society in around 1833. Nicholas (1795–1865) colliery and locomotive engineer from Newcastle. He was President of the North of England Institute of Mining and Mechanical Engineers and is known for introducing several safety measures. In the early 1860s he occupied Stobs Castle as a summer residence. William (15th C.) witness to the 1469 sasine for Wolfelee. It seems likely that he was local to Rulewater. William (17th C.) tenant at Raperlaw in the 1630s. He had a charter of lands in Lessuden (St. Boswells) in 1635. There is a marriage contract of 1642 between his daughter Janet and John Gray, younger, in Lilliesleaf. He gave the couple his land in Lessuden and some land adjacent to Barnhills. William (c.1800–bef. 1851) agricultural labourer in Wilton Parish. He was listed as hind at Parkhouses among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835; he was at Courthill in 1840 and 1841. In the 1841 census he was at Parkhouses (i.e. Burnhead Cottages). His widow and daughter Margaret (a milliner) were living at Courthill in 1851. He married Euphemia Henderson and their children included: William (b.1826), who died young; Jane (b.1828); William (again, b.1830); and Margaret or ‘Maggie’ (1832–1913), who married George Elliot Wilson William (b.1831/3) from Wilton Parish, he was a draper. Along with the Graham brothers he established Wood, Graham & Co. in about the late 1850s. Their business was at 6 Tower Knowe, where they are recorded in 1861, with 8 draper’s assistants. He may be the William whose trustees were recorded in about 1874 as owners of part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick. Rev. William appointed in 1958 as the last minister of St. John’s in Hawick, for a term appointment. He had retired from Half Morton in 1956 (formerly ‘Wod’, ‘Wode’ etc.).

the Wud (thu-wud) n. the Wood, former name for a farm in Abbotrule Parish. In 1643 ‘Bertie Rutherford of the Wood’ owned land valued at £20. Adam Scott ‘in Wood, in Abbotrule parish’ had his will recorded in 1693.

Wudbrae (wud-brä) n. Woodbrae, cottage on the side road between Teviothead and Caerlenrig farm.

Wudburn (wud-burn) n. Woodburn, farm on the south side of the Borthwick valley, near the end of the back road leading past the Branxholme Lochs. The lands were attached to the Chisholme estate at one time. In 1627 it was valued along with Muselee as paying ‘120 lb., vicarage 20 lb’. There were 10 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650. In 1678 it was valued along with Chisholme at £433 6s 8d. Like much of the area, it transferred from Hawick Parish to Roberton in 1690. John Noble lived there in 1717, Archibald Scott in 1761, Robert Elliot in 1763, William Miller in 1772, James Scott in 1773 and John Hislop in 1774. Walter Hume was there in the period 1789–94. In 1788 and 1811 it was valued along with Chisholme at £433 6s 8d. William Gorries died there in 1816. Andrew Anderson was farmer in 1841 and still in 1868. A perforated stone disc from there is in the Museum (formerly spelled ‘Woodburne’, etc.; it is ‘Wodburne’ in 1627 and ‘Widburne’ in 1694; it is ‘Woodenburne’ on a parish map of 1650, is marked on Blaeu’s 1654 map with its modern English spelling and is also on Ainslie’s 1773 map).

Wud Burn (wud-burn) n. Wood Burn, stream that rises to the south-west of Branxholme Wester Loch and runs to the north past Woodburn farm to join the Borthwick Water.

Wudburn Mill (wud-burn-mil) n. former farm near Woodburn and Chisholme. In 1797 the tenant was John Nichol. It may be the same place as ‘Chisholme Mill’ (it is ‘Woodburnmiln’ in 1797).

wudden (wu-den, wu-din) contr. wouldn’t, would not – ‘wudden ee expect eet?’, ‘that’d be jist like the hing, wudden eet?’ (shorter form of wuddent).

wuddent (wu-den’, wu-din’) contr. wouldn’t, would not – ‘she wud, wuddent she’, ‘wuddent ee juist credit eet?’ (also written ‘wudn’t’; sometimes shortened to wudden: this form always precedes the pronoun; cf. wudni which comes after the pronoun).

wuddie (wu-dee) n., arch. the gallows, noose, rope, a willow, willow branch, wand of flexible wood – ‘. . . an laap an flaang as yauld as a wuddie’ [ECS], a wood-eating insect, insect that infects wood, especially in the phrase ‘As yald as a wuddie’.
wuddit (wud-ee', -i') pp., arch. wooded – ‘...in a weide, weel-wuddeet howe wui gressy haughlands an trei-cled glens’ [ECS].

wuddle (wu-du1) v., arch. to stagger, stumble, struggle through adversity (often used along with the verb describing the adversity) – ‘She’d mony a hatter, puir craifit, bit she wuddit an brocht thate bairns up rael faisable, for a’a’ [ECS], to work laboriously – ‘He wuddit on a’ day lang’ [GW], n., arch. a struggle, bustle, scene of a struggle – ‘This wearifu’ world’s a wuddle o’ care’ [JoHa], ‘...fair leike ti faa off the spake wui the wuddles an the vexes o woark’. { }

Wudend (wud-end) n. Woodend, a cottage on the right of the road heading up the Nip Knowes. The name is also used for that general area near the end of the trees – ‘A yince unleashed a muckle slice Wi’ sic tremendous bend That it ended in ablow the swing In the gairden at Wudend’ [IWL].

Wudend (wud-end) n. Woodend, former farm between Synton and Ashkirk (marked as such on Gordon’s c. 1650 map and Blaen’s 1654 map).

Wudfit (wud-fi1) n. Woodfoot, area in the Slitrig valley where the side road to Barnes leaves the B6399. Near Woodfoot Cottage there is a late 18th century archway with Doric columns, once the beginning of the drive to Stobs Castle. There is a small war memorial by the bridge. This area is sometimes called ‘Woodfoot-on-Slitrig’, since the name has also been used for Borthaugh Woodfoot. It was formerly also called ‘Birkwud Fit’. Just to the south the 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows a building on the east side of the main road, which is no longer visible. Local ministers would sometimes preach at the blacksmith’s shop there in the 19th century. The former row of cottages near here once housed a blacksmith’s and joiners shop; as many as 9 units are shown on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map, arranged in a north-south row, just to the west of Stobs Lodge. All but one of the cottages (the one belonging to the mason) were pulled down when the military purchased the whole estate in 1903. Walter Scott was recorded there in 1790 and J. Thomson in 1868.

Wudfit (wud-fi1) n. Woodfoot, former farmstead near Roberton village, marked on Ainslie’s 1773 map. In 1841 the residents were Elliots and Hoggis. It may be the same place referred to as ‘Cleuchfoot’.

Wudfit Brig (wud-fi1-brig) n. Woodfoot Bridge, where the B6399 crosses the Slitrig for the first time after Crowbyres. It was built in 1815 and carries the name of Eliott of Stobs.

Wudheid (wud-heed) n. Woodhead, lands on the north side of the Ale Water and west of Ancrum, also known as Ancrum Woodhead. The farm was an amalgamation of 3 previous farms, noted in the rhyme ‘The Randy Raw, The scab-bit Scaw, The drucken wives o’ GerseYlaw’. It was formerly a seat of the Kers. In 1571 it was raided by Sir Thomas Turnbull of Bedrule and a group of other Turnbulls plus Rutherfords and others, who claimed that Robert Ker had Reset the fugitive Sir Thomas Kerr of Fernihirst there; the record in the Register of the Privy Council gives a detailed list of the goods in the house at that time. Alexander White was farmer there in 1797. The farm was also a location where the preparation of lint was carried out into the early 19th century.

Wudhoose (wud-hoos) n. Woodhouse, farm on the western side of the Jed valley, off the A68 near the Jedforest Hotel. George Oliver, ‘Zimian’ Oliver and John Chatto were there in 1694. John Scott was recorded as tenant there and elsewhere in 1797. John Goodfellow and family were there in 1861 (marked on Stobie’s 1770 map; it is ‘wod-hous’ in 1694).

Wudhouselees (wud-hoos-leez) n. Woodhouselees, farm just south of Canonbie. The area may have previously been connected with Kinmont Willie. In the ‘Kinmont Willie’ ballad it is the place where Buccleuch and his men stopped on their way to Carlisle. There was a branch of the Armstrongs there in the 16th and 17th centuries. The Scotts of Buccleuch possessed the lands there according to the 1663 marriage contract of Anne, Countess of Buccleuch. The farm of Over Woodhouselees was farmed by George Bell for the 2nd half of the 18th century. George Scott-Elliot farmed at Nether Woodhouselees in the early 1800s – ‘Where are ye gaun, ye mason lads, Wi’ a’ your ladders, lang and hie?’ – ‘We gang to herry a corbie’s nest, That wons not for frae Woodhouselee’ [T], ‘Warn Davington, and Rennelburn, with Tandhill bold and free, To meet me in full armour, the morn at Woodhouselee’ [WSB] (it is ‘Wodhousleys’ and ‘Wodhousleyes’ in 1623 and ‘Woodhousleys’ in 1663).

wud-ill (wud-il1) n., arch. a disease affecting cattle, said to be caused by them eating woodland vegetation (also called ‘moor-ill’).

wudni’ve

wudni’ve (wud-ni-uv, -nuv) contr. wouldn’t’ve, would not have – ‘She wudni’ve din eet, she’s ower guid naitured’.

Wudnorton (wud-nor’-in) n. Woodnorton, a villa in Sunnhill, located up the private drive that is a continuation of Roadhead. It was built in 1881 as ‘Craigmore’ for Robert Pringle, head of Pringle’s at the time. The design was by local architect John Guthrie. It is a Scots Renaissance-style house with a prominent entrance tower, together with Gothic and Flemish details. The ballroom extension was added at the rear in 1908. The house was long the home of the Pringles and then the Scott-Nobles. It is a grade B listed building (also written as 2 words, ‘Wud Norton’).

Wudside (wud-sid) n. Woodside, a Victorian house in Sunnhill, near Wood Norton and Netherwood, now split into ‘East’ and ‘West’. It was built in the late 19th century by Galashiels builders David and Peter Dalgleish for their brother-in-law Alexander Turnbull. It was also home of Isaac Grey Wallis.

Wudside (wud-sid) n. Woodside, villa in the eastern outskirts of Kelso, built around 1800 for Lady Diana, widow of Walter Scott of Harden. It remained in the hands of the Scott family until 1903.

Wulliestruther (wu-lee-stru-thur) n. Wulliestruther Loch, in the middle of Hawick Moor, near Pilmuir farm, covering about 17 acres and stocked for fishing. It is sometimes referred to simply as ‘the Struther’. Its level was raised by damming in the early 19th century, in the interests of mills on the Slitrig (to raise the level of the river during dry spells). This allowed the mills on the Slitrig Water to survive through some of the summer of 1844, for example, when the local rivers dried up to a trickle. Previously it would have been little more than a bog, and possibly also contained the area once called Crawstruthers. In 1767 the foot of the Struther was stated to mark the western boundary of the region of the Common where the Town Herd typically pastured the Hawick livestock. The loch has been the site of several drownings over the years. In 1939 it almost completely drained due to a fault with the outlet valve. The 1863 Ordnance Survey map shows a building between the south-west end and Pilmuir (the origin is Old Scots ‘struther’, meaning marsh, with a prefix indicating either willows, oily or slimy, or wool or wolf, cf. Buckstruther, Crawstruthers, Holstruther and Lustruther; a personal name is also possible for the origin, although there is no reason to believe the story sometimes given of it being named after a person who drowned there, although a Willie Strathearn did in fact drown there in 1884; it is ‘Wullies Struther’ in 1767).

Wulliestruther Cottage (wu-leə-stru-thur-kow-l’-eej) n. small cottage at the northern end of Wulliestruther Loch, part of Hawick Common. The tenants used it for a time as dog kennels.

Wulson (wu-sin, wil-sin) n. (Wilson) Adam (18th/19th C.) son of fisher Robert and brother of Andrew, he was a shoemaker on the High Street. He is listed on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He is probably the Adam who married Margaret Young in 1788, and whose children included: Robert (b.1789); Margaret (b.1791); Richard (b.1793), who was also a shoemaker; Sarah (b.1795); and Andrew (1805–08). Adam (b.c.1815) chemist recorded at about 3 High Street in 1841. His wife was Eliza and their children included Thomas and George. This is probably the same as the firm ‘A.R. Wilson & Co.’ recorded on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. The company made ‘aerated waters’, as well as its own sheep dip and other products. It was also listed in Slater’s 1852 directory as ‘A.R. Wilson & Co.’, druggists and manufacturers of soda water; but the proprietor was deceased by then. The company was sold to Thomas Howie Hopper some time before 1856, when George (from Coldstream, perhaps his brother) ceased to have any business interest. Adam (b.1825/6) farmer at Midshiels. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. He was a Steward of the West Teviotdale Coursing Club in the 1860s. In 1861 he was farming 426 acres at Midshiels, and employing 11 people. He was still recorded at Midshiels in 1868. In about 1874 he was recorded as owner of Allars Garden, which had previously belonged to John Scott. Agnes (b.c.1795) daughter of shoemaker Peter. She was a milliner and straw hat maker at the Sandbed, recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory along with Jane (her sister). They were both recorded again in Pigot’s 1837 directory, but now on the Sandbed. In 1841 they were living at about 5 Buccleuch Street with their brother James, who was Hawick Town Clerk. They were also listed on Buccleuch Street in Slater’s 1852 directory. Alan (17th C.) listed as ‘Allane Wilsoun’ in 1627 among men stated to be fit for the military. Later in the year he was the first named of 7 inhabitants of Hawick held in the Tolbooth of Edinburgh who complained that they were not ‘ydel and maisterlesse men’, but ‘honest, simple men attending that calling quherunto it hes pleased God to call us’, and hence should not have been pressed into military service. Nevertheless the Privy Council ordered that they be transported by the Earl of Nithsdale to the wars in Germany. It is unclear if any of them returned to Hawick. Alexander (17th C.) resident at Nether Whisgills in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Alexander (1766–1813) from Paisley, he is described as ‘the Father of American Ornithology’. He was apprenticed as a weaver and inspired by Burns tried his hand at verse. Imprisoned for a satirical verse against a mill-owner, he afterwards emigrated to America. Sometime before he left in 1794 he is meant to have visited Denholm Dean with an itinerant packman by the name of Bertram; the old packman claimed to have later sent Leyden’s lines on Denholm over to him in America. Alexander M. (b.1810/1) from Duns, he was a house painter listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. He was at about 46 High Street in 1841, with his brother Thomas. In 1851 he was on Allars Crescent. His wife was Margaret and they had a daughter Elizabeth. Dr. Alexander Christie (1845–1925) younger son of Walter of Orchard, he was born in Hawick. He was partly educated at Hawick Subscription Rooms, where he was taught by James A.H. Muray. He graduated M.D. from Edinburgh University in 1870 and moved to Doncaster in 1871, where he was a doctor for 55 years. There he lived at 21 South Parade and then 39 Hallgate. He was President of Doncaster Y.M.C.A. for 30 years and also warden at St. James’ Church there. In 1873 he married Emma Bewley. Their children were: Walter Reginald (1874/5–1965), who joined his father’s medical practice; Agnes Bewley, also a doctor, who died in 1909 from blood poisoning after being bitten by a suicidal woman patient; Norman; and Eleanor (or Norah), who died unmarried in 1952. Rev. Alexander (1860–1917) son of Rev. James of Enzie and Charlotte Allardes. He was educated in Aberdeen, becoming assistant at Holmesburn, before moving to Saughtree as ‘missionary’ in 1886, where he remained until 1889. He then moved to Blairdaff, before becoming a minister at Ythan Wells, Aberdeenshire. He married Margaret Isabella Anderson and their children were: Charlotte Mary; Margaret Anderson; and Alexander Gordon. Alfred Cruickshank (1843–69) 3rd son of Walter of Orchard. In 1866 he married Rebecca Fraser Scott, who died in 1870, aged 22. They had a daughter, Florence Margaret (b.1867). Allan (17th C.) named by the Hawick Bailie in 1627 on a list of men fit to be sent to the wars in Germany (and hence presumably undesirable to the town!). Andrew (17th C.) simpleton in the Branxholme area. He is described in a 1638–40 financial account of the Scotts of Buccleuch as ‘the fool at Branxholm’. Andrew (17th C.) mason in Hawick. In 1676 Samuel Newbie was found guilty of assaulting him and another mason, Andrew Turnbull. Andrew (d.c.1685) tenant in Millholm. His will is recorded in 1685. Andrew (d.c.1697) leased ½ of the farm of Branxholme Town in 1692. He may have been related to Janet, who also leased part of the farm in 1692, and by 1694 he appears to have taken over her 1/5. He was still leasing part of Branxholme Town in 1697, but in 1698 his widow (with her name not recorded) was leasing part of the farm, with Walter Wilson as her cautioner. Andrew (18th C.) mason in Hawick. He paid tax for 19 windows in Hawick in 1748. Dr. Andrew (18th C.) paid tax on 16 windows at Newton in Bedrule Parish in 1753. It is unclear how he was related to other local Wilsons. Andrew (18th C.) merchant in Hawick. In 1749 he is recorded purchasing 75 stones of ewe’s milk cheese from Robert Elliot, farmer at Braeildie. And in the same year he sold whisky and malt to the same Robert Elliot. He may be the Andrew married to Isobel Scott, whose son James was born in 1743. Andrew (18th C.) flesher in Hawick, recorded on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Rev. Andrew (1798/9–1831) appointed assistant minister of the Presbyterian Church in Liverpool in 1824, in an attempt to resolve disputes between the minister, David Thom, and the congregation. He is among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825; his connection to Hawick is unclear. He was minister at the Rodney Street Kirk from 1825 until 1830. He married Sarah Murray. He was struck with a debilitating illness and died less than a year later. Andrew (d.1847) son of flesher Robert, he was also in the same line of business. He is probably the flesher who paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1797. He was listed as a flesher in Hawick in 1810 (in the inventory after the death of ‘Auld Cash’). His premises were on the High Street, where he is recorded in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory as a ‘flesher’ and ‘bacon dealer’. In 1815 his servant Henry Stockwell was found not guilty of an assault. He was among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. He was referred to in 1829 in a letter that farmer Adam Brydon wrote to the King, complaining about paying taxes; it ended with a request for the receipt to be directed ‘to the care of Andrew Wilson, butcher in Hawick’. Andrew (b.c.1810) baker at about 24 High Street. He is listed there on Pigot’s 1837 directory. In 1841 he is listed with his wife Martha and son Andrew. He could be the merchant who was on the Railway Committee for Hawick District in the 1850s. Andrew (b.1812/3–74) son of James, he was a road surveyor like his father. He was living at Ovenshank in Castleton parish in 1841, 1851 and 1861. He was on the Borders Union Railway Committee for Liddesdale in the 1850s. He donated an old coin to the Museum in 1863. He was the architect for the Albert Bridge in 1865. He was listed as the Surveyor for the Liddesdale Turnpike Trust in 1866. He married Margaret Kyle, who died in 1889, aged 75. Their children included: James; William (1848/9–60); Margaret (1851/2–1904); Georgina (1856/7–60); James (d.1916); and Frances Helen (d.1927). He and his wife both died in Hawick and are buried at Etterton. Andrew (b.1821/2) grocer in Hawick. He was listed on the ‘Middle Row’ in Slater’s 1852 directory. He was at 11 Mid Row in 1851 and 1861. In 1841 he married Ann (c.1822–77), daughter of shoemaker Adam Kersal. Their children included William (b.1842), Isabella (b.1843), Adam Kersall (b.1845), George (b.1847), Janet Hannah (b.1851) and Margaret (b.c.1856). Andrew ‘Dan’ (b.c.1870) son of William and Betsy Robson. He carried on his father’s rag and waste business at 5 Teviot Road and later emigrated to Australia. Andrew (d.1945) married Mary Ekron in Hawick. His wife Mary (1875–1939) was daughter of John Ekron and Agnes Carruthers. Their children were: Agnes (d.1977), who married Joseph Farries; Isabella, who married John Stewart; Helen (d.1975), who married Andrew Aitken; and John, who married Elsa Farquharson. Basil Fritz Aubrey (1919–95) son of Fritz Aubrey and brother of Dennis. He studied English and History at Edinburgh University, became Assistant Headmaster at Wilton and then Headmaster at Drumlanrig School. He was one of the first teachers to introduce outdoor pursuits into his schools activities. He instigated the use of pre-recorded music in church. In the late 1980s he also oversaw the reconstruction of the organ at St. Cuthbert’s Kirk. He married Elizabeth M. Hogg and they had sons Michael and Johnny. Bruce son of George, who was Cornet in 1932. He was himself Cornet in 1969. He lost his Cornet’s Badge at the Monday morning Chase, but found it again on Wednesday! He married his Cornet’s Lass Valerie Franklin. They lived in Glasgow for 28 years before moving to North Berwick. Catherine (18th/19th C.) dressmaker on the High Street, recorded in Pigot’s 1837 directory. She is listed along with Josiah, who was presumably her son. He is probably the man from England with that name listed as a handloom weaver on the Howe Gate in 1841. Catherine (b.c.1785) grocer at about 57 High Street in 1841. She is probably the same person as Christian. Charles (18th C.) father of Robert. He may also have been called ‘Lurgie’. He was a shoemaker and innkeeper like his son, and may also have been son of a shoemaker. He appears to have had literary interests, like his son, since he was among the subscribers to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). In 1781 he was one of the witnesses to a baptism for Thomas Miller. In 1771 he married Agnes Tinlin and their only surviving child was Robert, born about 5 months later. He was probably the Charles born in Hawick Parish in 1746, son of Robert and Bessie Lorraine (or possibly the Charles born in Cavers in 1743, son of James). It is said that he was named Charles because his father had been in the company of officer’s from Prince Charles’ army when they passed through Hawick in 1745. Charles (18th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Mary Dryden and their children included: Betty (b.1771); James (b.1773); David (b.1779); William (b.1781); John (b.1784); and Samuel (b.1790). Charles M. (19th C.) solicitor in Hawick. He is recorded from at least 1866. He served as Depute for the Justices of the Peace for Hawick. He was a member of the Berwick Naturalists’ Club. He was half of the partnership of Wilson & Anderson, who were a firm of writers, conveyancers and bank agents, which dissolved in 1874. He may be the Charles who was recorded at Ormiston House in a directory of 1868. Charles John (1842–1923) son of Provost George. At the age of 14, after a year in boarding-school in London, he was brought into the family business, learning about every department in the factory. In 1860 he was made factory manager, when still a young man. In 1875, along with his father and brother George Murray Wilson, he went into partnership with James Glenny, purchasing the Ladylaw and Langlands Mills. He served as a local councillor in the late 1800s, and was on the School Board and Parish Council. He was one of the original members of the Hawick Science and Art Committee and was the founder of the Hawick Technical Classes. He was Chairman of the Hawick Working Men’s Building Society. He was a Director of the North British Railway, President of the South of Scotland Chamber of Commerce and first President of the South of Scotland Woollen Trades Approved Society. An enthusiastic member of the British Association, he attended their meetings in South Africa in 1905 and in 1902 (partly to recover his health) he went on a round-the-world tour. He gifted the barometer outside the Town Hall of Fritz Aubrey and brother of Basil. He was Dr. ?? landowner in Hawick. He is recorded on Wood’s 1824 as owner of lands where Melgund Place and the southern side of Brougham Place were built, and also of a plot of land on what would become Allars Bank, as well as the property at 22 High Street. Edward (1841–1920) tweed manufacturer, son of Walter of Ormiston House in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 she was a widow and ‘Small Grocer’ at 3 High Street (corresponding to the modern No. 76). David (17th/18th C.) carrier recorded in the Town Book of 1703, when he and another men were ordered to ‘pay into Bayleya Mertine sex pound per piece, ... for payt. of the officers, pyper, and drumers coats att the Common rydeing in annon 1702’. It is unclear why he was asked to contribute in this way, perhaps as a fine of some sort. He could be the David who married Janet Tait in Hawick in 1790 and whose children included William (b.1710), David (b.1712), Jean (b.1715), Robert (b.1718), John (b.1721) and James (b.1724), as well as possibly Rachel (b.1703). David (b.c.1768/9) from Greenlaw, he later becoming a Bailie. He was married to Margaret, and their children included Jane, Margaret and Mungo (who was a shopkeeper). He was still at Cavers in 1861. David (19th C.) teacher of a school on Tannage Close. He is listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He may be the schoolmaster in Hawick who had an unnamed daughter who died in 1819. Dennis Elliot Aubrey (1916–64) son of Fritz Aubrey and brother of Basil. He was the last Wilson owner of the firm of Walter Wilson & Sons. He married Doris Stevens and had a son, Colin Aubrey, who moved to the U.S.A. E Eskdalemuir, she was a grocer recorded on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 she was a widow and ‘Small Grocer’ at 3 High Street (corresponding to the modern No. 76). David (17th/18th C.) carrier recorded in the Town Book of 1703, when he and 2 other men were ordered to ‘pay into Bayleya Mertine sex pound per piece, ... for payt. of the officers, pyper, and drumers coats att the Com- mon rydeing in annon 1702’. It is unclear why he was asked to contribute in this way, perhaps as a fine of some sort. He could be the David who married Janet Tait in Hawick in 1790 and whose children included William (b.1710), David (b.1712), Jean (b.1715), Robert (b.1718), John (b.1721) and James (b.1724), as well as possibly Rachel (b.1703). David (b.c.1768/9) from Greenlaw, he was land steward at Cavers farm. His wife was Margaret, and their children included Jane, Margaret and Mungo (who was a shopkeeper). He was still at Cavers in 1861. David (19th C.) teacher of a school on Tannage Close. He is listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He may be the schoolmaster in Hawick who had an unnamed daughter who died in 1819. Dennis Elliot Aubrey (1916–64) son of Fritz Aubrey and brother of Basil. He was the last Wilson owner of the firm of Walter Wilson & Sons. He married Doris Stevens and had a son, Colin Aubrey, who moved to the U.S.A. E Eskdalemuir, she was a grocer recorded on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory and Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1851 she was a widow and ‘Small Grocer’ at 3 High Street (corresponding to the modern No. 76).
Edward (b.c.1900). He built Beechhurst in 1889, later moved to Switzerland for health reasons and died in London. Edward Joseph (1858–1917) born at Chatton, where he was a pupil teacher. He then became schoolmaster at Charlton, and was at Saughtree in the late 1880s. He helped describe the area of upper Liddesdale for the Berwickshire Naturalists’ Club in 1889. He later moved to Bolton (East Lothian) and finally Abbey St. Bathans, and died in Earlsrton. He contributed other articles to the Berwickshire Naturalists and wrote an account of the area around Wooler, where he grew up. Elizabeth (17th C.) recorded in 1688 along with Janet Leydon, when they were fined for insulting Bailie Scott when he was equipping the Royalist Militia. Francis (b.1791) son of latter James and Isabella Newberry. He was listed as a grocer in the Howegate in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He presumably died before the 1841 census. He married Jean Knox, who had previously married William Thomson and later married John Eddie. Their children included: Jane, who married William Thorn in Australia; Elizabeth, who married Robert Turnbull and emigrated to Enfield, New South Wales; Isabella; Janet; and James. In 1841 his widow was running a boarding house on the Loan, and by 1851 was living there with frameworker John Eddie. Francis Elliot (1839–96) born in Hawick, son of Walter of Orchard and older brother of Edward. He became a hosier manufacturer of the late 1800s and early 1900s. He lived at Broomlands, which he had built for him about 1880. He gave the toast to the Acting Father at the 1893 Common Riding. In 1873 he married Agnes, daughter of Adam Laing and granddaughter of the James Hogg of ‘Teribus’; she died in 1910, aged 54 (and there was a dispute over her will in 1913). Their children included: Walter (b.1874), who died in infancy; Walter Francis (b.1875); Agnes Edith (b.1877); Stanley (b.1879); Fritz-Aubrey (b.1881), who married Maud Johnson; and Jane Maud (b.1882). Francis ‘Frank’ (1845–88) son of manufacturer John and Margaret Scott. He married Violet Turnbull in Hawick in 1871 and their children included: John (b.1872); Agnes Amos (b.1873); George Turnbull (b.1874); Margaret (b.1876); Frank (1877–1916); John (b.1878); Violet Turnbull (1879–1973); William Richardson (1881–1916); Nellie Turnbull (1882–1931); Annie (b.1884); and Peter Turnbull (b.1886). He moved to Dumfries, where most of his children were born. One of his daughters was Cornet’s Lass in 1894, to her cousin William R. He died at Cruden Bank, Dumfries. Francis D. (b.c.1854) son of James and Janet. He was a hosiery manufacturer and stalwart member of Hawick Free Kirk, holding many offices, including Clerk of the Deacon’s Court from 1889. Fritz Aubrey (b.1881) son of Francis Elliot and Agnes Laing. He worked for the family firm of Walter Wilson & Sons. He married Maud Johnson and had sons Basil and Dennis and daughters ‘Pamela’ Agnes (1910–39) and ‘Barbara’ Constance (1913–95). George (19th C.) listed among the Borderers (led by the Homes and Walter Scott of Branxholme) pardoned in 1526 for an attack on the Earl of Arran. George (17th C.) shepher at Raeknowe according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. George (17th/18th C.) resident of Cavers Parish. In 1708 he was recorded at Skelfhill when he married Bessie Grieve. They had a son Gideon baptised in Hawick in 1722 and William (b.1715) was probably also their child. George (18th C.) carrier in Hawick. He married Elizabeth Turnbull in Wilton in 1752. Their children included: Isobel (b.1756); James (b.1758); Helen (b.1761); Jane (b.1766); twins George and Mary (b.1767); and George (again, b.1769). Their first 2 children were baptised in Wilton. The witnesses in 1766 were carrier William Aitkin and writer William Wilson and in 1767 were carrier James Wilson (surely a relative) and writer William Wilson. George (18th C.) currier, selected as Cornet in 1790 in opposition to the Council’s official selection. This was after the Council’s choice, Philip Elliot, made a narrow list of invitees to the Common Riding, leading many of the young men of the Town (and probably the Westenders in particular) to choose their own Cornet. His cavalcade was stopped at the West Port by Bailie Hardie, and thereafter the two parties effectively held separate Common Riding celebrations. He probably married Agnes, daughter of Adam Laing. George (18th/19th C.) greengrocer and taxidermist at 8 Howegate. He was said to be the 5th of 8 George Wilsons. His premises appear to be marked ‘Wilson’ on Woods 1824 map. George (19th C.) weaver in Newcastleton. He was listed as male head of his family in 1835, 1836 and 1838. George (1874–1916) son of James. He was a carrier in Hawick, like his brothers James and William. He paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1791. All 3 of the brothers were listed as carriers in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls for Hawick. He had 2 horses at that time. He could be the George, married to Elizabeth Turnbull, whose twins George and Mary were baptised in 1767; the witnesses were carrier James (presumably his father or brother) and writer William. George (19th C.) son of George, with the name probably going back at least 5 others before him. He was a joiner and a janitor at the High School. George (19th C.) first official precentor appointed by Hawick Free Kirk, acting in the period 1844–50. George (1815–1898) first Provost of Hawick. Born in Hawick, he was the youngest child of mill-founder William, with his mother Elizabeth Richardson dying 10 days after he was born. He was educated in Hawick and at Quaker schools, including one in Wigton, where he went from the age of 12 for 2 years (without returning). He finally came back to Hawick from schooling at the age of 17, and immediately learned the hosiery and cloth-making trades. His father died in 1832, and the firm was split, with him effectively taking his father’s share, and the other partners being his brothers Walter and John. In 1841 he lived at about 11 or 13 High Street. In about 1851 the brothers’ partnership was dissolved and he took the mill at Weensland, manufacturing tweeds. After a fire he took on Walter Armstrong as a partner, and as the firm grew they built workers’ housing in Weensland. He was a Councillor and Bailie 1846–61, being a strong supporter of the Special Act to revise the council, which he helped frame. He was elected Provost at the first meeting of the reconstituted council in November 1861, served until 1868, and was then a councillor again until 1888. He was later helped by his sons Charles John and George Murray. After the great Collie failure of 1875 he went into partnership with James Glenny, forming Wilson & Glenny (Langlands and Ladylaw Mills) in 1876. He was also Captain of the Hawick Volunteer Corps, and a Director of the Hawick Working Men’s Building Society and of Hawick Gas Light Company. He also served as a Justice of the Peace and Commissioner of Supply in Roxburghshire. He was a member of the Highland and Agricultural Society of Scotland from 1863. In 1857 he gave to the Museum the skull of an ancient ox found on Wullesstruther Moss. He was involved in many important improvements in the town, including the water works, Corn Exchange and promoting the railway to Carlisle. He was a Liberal in politics, being Honorary President of the local Liberal Association and fighting against the Corn Laws (being Treasurer of the Anti-Corn Law League in 1844) and for the Reform Bill. He also played a role in the management of ‘The Economist’ after the death of his brother James. In 1861 he was recorded as a wool manufacturer, employing 85 men, 94 women, 28 boys and 6 girls. He was married twice, firstly in 1840 to Jane Law (who died in 1851), who was daughter of Rev. John Law of Newcastle (and said to be aunt of Andrew Bonar Law and great-aunt of politician Richard Kidston Law, although this is unclear); she died in 1851, aged 34. They had 4 surviving sons and 3 children who died young. Their children were: William Richardson; Charles John (b.1842), who married Mary Glenny; Jane Murray (b.1843/4), who married draper John Graham; William Milner; Elizabeth; George Murray (b.1846); and James Glenny (b.1849), who became a politician in New Zealand. In 1864 he secondly married Margaret Watson (aunt of the later Provost Robert Fraser Watson) and she died in 1873, aged 56. He lived at 13 High Street, then stayed at Ormiston House (while Col. MacDonald had it in the Autumn). About 1865 he built Heronhill House and then Kilmeny about 1879, where he died. There was a huge public funeral for him and he is buried in the Welloigate. His portrait is in the Town Hall, painted by James Tait. George Elliot (1833–75) son of Hawick shoemaker William. He worked for the City of Glasgow Bank. He married Margaret Wood (1832–1913), of the Wilton family, and their son William Elliot (1868–1950) became a chemist. George Murray (1846–1924) son of George, partner of Wilson & Glenny’s, being a Director until he retired in 1896. He was taught a chemist. George Murray (1833–75) son of Hawick shoemaker William. He worked for the City of Glasgow Bank. He married Margaret Wood (1832–1913), of the Wilton family, and their son William Elliot (1868–1950) became a chemist. George Murray (1846–1924) son of George, partner of Wilson & Glenny’s, being a Director until he retired in 1896. He was taught for several years at the Subscription Rooms, for a while under James A.H. Murray. He describes Murray as ‘a cold, conceited man of great ability and indefatigable perseverance, but very narrow in his views, and vain of success’; one story is described about how he was dared to put a ‘cracker squib’ in the stove, after which Murray went door to door to all the parents until he found out who did it. He jointly (along with his brother Charles John, and their partner James Glenny) gave the Public Baths to the Town in 1912. He was one of the early tennis enthusiasts in the town. He translated ‘Practical Perspective applied to Artistic and Industrial Design’ from the French in 1886. Later in life he lived at Dale End, Grasmere. He married late in life and had a daughter, Evelyne. George (1855–95) printer in Hawick, he was involved with local cricket from its earliest days, playing for Hawick and Wilton for several years, often as wicket-keeper, and being Honorary Secretary. He was also involved with other sporting clubs in the town. He was on the original Hawick R.F.C. committee, playing in the very first match, being a team regular for 9 years and Honorary Secretary for many years after that. He scored the winning try in the 1879 game against Melrose, probably the first to be played in Hawick under electric light. He is buried in the Wellogate Cemetery with a large monument erected over his grave by members of the Hawick Rugby Football Club. George of Langheugh (19th/20th C.) one of long line of Georges, son of the joiner and janitor. He was a yarn merchant of George Wilson & Sons (who were successors to William Laidlaw & Sons). His son George was Cornet in 1932 and his daughter Netta was Cornet’s Lass in 1936. George Heron, C.B.E. (1868–1959) grandson of Hawick’s first Provost, and elder son of Charles John. He was born at Ormiston, educated at Kirkton School, George Watson’s and in Switzerland and London. He played for Hawick R.F.C. in the 1885/6 season. He was a founder of the Harriers and the Tennis Club, and a keen golfer. He became a junior partner in Wilson & Glenny in 1885, and was Managing Director after it became a private limited company. He taught a French class for businessmen at his own expense, entered the Council in 1901, was elected a Magistrate and was also on many Council committees. He served as Deputy Controller of the Priority Department of the Ministry of Munitions. He became the first Provost when the Council reconstituted after WWI, serving 1919–22. His Provostship saw the War Memorial erected (he was Chairman of the War Memorial Committee), the sewage works extended and other improvements. He gifted the crimson robes, trimmed with ermine, for use of the 4 Burgh Magistrates. He was J.P. from 1912 and Chairman of the County National Health Insurance Committee, as well as member of various education committees, and he gifted Kilmeny for tennis courts near the High School, as well as establishing the George Heron Wilson Bequest Fund. He entered the Ministry of Munitions in 1915, becoming Section Leader and then Deputy Controller, as well as being member of the Special Wages Arbitration Court, for which services he received the C.B.E. He married Julia Tod of Leith in 1902. He left Hawick in 1924 to live at Orchard near East Grinstead, where he became involved in the local council and educational committees. George Lithgow Wilson ‘Jinglin Geordie’ (d.1940) United Free Church minister at Cullen and then Cardenden in Fife. He came to Newcastleton as minister of the South Church in 1930, taking on the combined charge (with the Park Kirk) in 1934. His nickname came from his enthusiasm for playing the piano. His daughter Margaret Fairley Callan was a teacher. He died on a train at Riccarton Junction. Gideon (19th/20th C.) Hawick tweed and hosiery manufacturer. He had the house Almonte built for him on Braid Road in 1893, but sold it to James Elliot Rutherford in 1901. He is probably the Gideon who was involved with Wauchope Mills in Langholm. He took part in the inaugural competition for the 6-hole golf course that existed for a while at Mossapaul. Henry (b.c.1810) smith in Hawick, listed on Pigot’s 1837 directory at the Sandbed. He was recorded at ‘Sandbed bridge end’ on the 1841 census. He helped James Hogg (of ‘Teribus’) to make some stocking frames. He married Helen Wintrope in Wilton in 1829. Their children included James, Thomas, Walter and Henry. Isabella (19th C.) milliner on the Howe gate, listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. She was daughter of baker Walter. In 1851 she was living with her widowed mother and several siblings at about 10 Howegate. James (16th C.) holder of a particate of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. James (16th/17th C.) recorded in 1595 in complaints made by the Lord of Gilsland about raids into England by Elliots, Nixons and others. His name is given as ‘Rytche James Wylson’, which could mean he was James, son of Richard. James (17th C.) listed as resident at Mabonlaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. James (17th C.) listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He is probably the carrier listed among those contributing to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4. James (17th C.) resident at Huntlaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls for Hase sendean Parish. James (17th/18th C.) resident of ‘Kirkton’ farm. His son Robert was baptised in Kirkton Parish in 1719. James ‘the Baron’ (1687–1774) son of tailor John and Bessie Beat tie. He was said to be one of 2 sons of an army sergeant in Queen Anne’s time, the other probably being William. He was born at Whitchesters, where the family may have resided for a long time. He was a farmer and carrier in Kirkton and later a carrier in Hawick. He married Isabella Blyth (1692–1747), daughter of James and they had 5 children: William (1713–91), ‘Whisky
Wulson Wulson

Wullie'; Anne (b.1727); James (twin with Anne, but died young); James (b.1730); and Beatrice (b.1735). He is buried in St. Mary’s Kirkyard.

James (18th C.) Tanner in Hawick. He married Janet Elliot and their children included: Robert (b.1739); Bessie (b.1740); Margaret (b.1744); Helen (b.1744); John (b.1745); Adam (b.1745); Janet (b.1747); and Robert (again, b.1757). He may have been related to the tanners and candle-makers of about the same time, John and Walter. James (18th C.) recorded being in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1743 when his marriage to Catherine ‘Mabane’ was announced in Melrose Parish, with Thomas Vair as cautioner. James (b.1730) son of carrier James and Isobel Blyth. He had 3 sons, George, James and William, all of whom were carriers. It is possible he was the carrier James who witnessed a baptism for carrier George in 1767 (if George was perhaps his brother). James (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Margaret Scott in 1763 and their children included Walter (b.1764). He could be the James who witnessed a baptism for Walter Lorraine in 1764. Dr. James (d.c.1800) surgeon in Hawick, said to be from Otterburn, originally. He probably lived on the south side of the High Street, since during the great flood of 1767 it is said that the Backdamgate flooded ‘as far as Doctor Wilson’s cross-head’. Hawick printer, postmaster and Baille, Robert Armstrong, was an apprentice with him. In 1768 he witnessed a baptism for school-master James Inglis. He was one of the founders of the Hawick Farmers’ Club in 1776. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He paid the Horse Tax in Hawick in 1785–94. He was a bachelor in Hawick in 1787 when he paid tax for having a female servant; he continued to pay in 1788–91, and paid the lower rate for a ‘bachelor servant’. About 1799 he is recorded contributing money to the war against France. His unnamed daughter is recorded dying in 1801 in the Parish records, by which time he was already deceased. He is recorded as an owner of ‘Part of Particots Lands of Hawick’ in the 1811 Land Tax Rolls (although probably dead long before then); by about 1874 the lands were recorded being owned by feuers. James of Otterburn, listed as a Commissioner of Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819 may have been related. James (18th C.) hat manufacturer of James Wilson & Co., Hawick. There is a record of a grant of £10 being awarded to the company by the Board of Trustees for Manufactures in 1785. By 1787 he was carrying on the business on his own, rather than in a partnership. He is recorded as a hatter in Hawick on the Horse Tax Rolls of 1789–92. He should not be confused with the later hat manufacturer (and economist) of the same name; it is unclear if he had any link to the manufacturing Wilsons. He may have married Isabella Newberry and had children Ann (b.1787), James (b.1789), Francis (b.1791) and Mary. James (18th/19th C.) farmer at Belses, recorded as owner of no fewer than 14 farm horses and 1 saddle horse on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He was additionally taxed for having 2 non-working dogs in 1797. James (18th/19th C.) horse-dealer at Denholmhill, listed on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. Perhaps the same John was blacksmith in Denholm on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. James ‘the Bean’ (1747–1821) clock and watchmaker, son of William (‘Whusky Wullie’). He was known as the leader of Hawick fashion in the mid-to-late-18th century. He was Cornet in 1781 and was also Dean of Guild. In 1778 4 of his silver watches were reported as part of goods stolen from the coach office at the Bull and Mouth Inn, near Birmingham. He is probably the James of Hawick described as a watchmaker when he took out fire insurance in London in 1781. He subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He is said to have been standing at his new shop door when ‘Blinnd Wullie’ Craw passed, and asked him to make a poem about his new house, whereupon he replied ‘A certain one has built a house, Whose fortune it was low, A wooden cornice he put on – I mean the charming Beau’. In 1783 he married Janet Gibson of Cardrona, Peeblesshire, and she died in 1839, aged 76. Their children were: Peggy (or Margaret, b.1784); Mary (b.1787); Nancy (or Agnes); and Hardie James (b.1797). James (18th/19th C.) son of skinner John. He was a shoemaker in Hawick. He was selected by ballot to serve on the local Militia in 1799, but later declared to be unfit. He could be the James, son of John and Margaret Waugh, born in Hawick in 1776. His son Thomas died in 1808 and Robert in 1810, with his wife Lizzt Reid also dying in 1810. James (b.1762/3–1843) originally from England, he was a road surveyor living at Ovenshank in Castleton Parish. He was listed there among heads of households in 1835–41 and was there on the 1841 census. He married Margaret Foster, who died in 1853, aged 56. Their children included: Andrew (1812/3–74), also a road surveyor; Helen; and Jane. The family are buried at Ettleton. James (d.1831) son of James, he was a carrier in Hawick, like his brothers George and William.
Wulson

He paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1789–91. He was recorded with his brothers as a carrier on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, having 2 horses. He also served as Town Herd. He is probably the carrier James whose son William died in Hawick in 1840. James (b.c.1790) farmer at Cleithaugh in Southdean Parish. James (1797–1862) Hawick Town Clerk. He was the youngest son of shoemaker Peter and his brothers included shoemaker William, candlemaker John (‘the Dip’) and manufacturers Peter and Thomas. He was a ‘writer’ (i.e. lawyer) and bank agent in Hawick. He was listed as a writer in Hawick on the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ (1825). He is probably the James recorded as writer and notary on the Howegate in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. His premises were probably one of those marked ‘Wilson’ on Wood’s 1824 map. In Pigot’s 1837 directory he is listed as writer, and agent for the National Bank of Scotland as well as agent for Caledonian fire insurance and Standard life insurance; he was at that time on Buccleuch Street. In 1852 he was agent for both Caledonian and Standard insurance companies. He served as Town Clerk of Hawick 1841–62 and may also have been a Councillor. He wrote ‘Annals of Hawick’ (1850) and ‘Hawick and its old Memories’ (1858, also known as ‘Memories of Hawick’), which were compiled from Burgh and Parish records; these form an invaluable record of the early history of Hawick, with his detailed insight and interpretation being crucially important. However, he probably did a disservice to the Town by suggesting that the 1537 Charter may have represented the original granting of Hawick’s Common. Additionally, he sided very clearly with those who caused Hawick to lose part of the Common in the Division of 1777, and he was not a great fan of the Common Riding, describing it as ‘now a mere pageant for the enjoyment of youth’. Despite this, for many years until 1859 he headed the Procession to the Moor, and called the Burgess Roll. He also produced a very useful register of deaths for the period 1825–62. His legal office was at 5 Buccleuch Street. In 1841, 1851 and 1861 he was living there with his unmarried sisters Agnes and Jane (or Janet). In 1851 he is listed as Procurator before the Sheriff Court of Roxburghshire. He may be the Liberal supporter who was mentioned in connection with the 1837 Commons inquiry into ‘fictitious voters’, specific because of buying property in Selkirkshire in order to vote there. He traced an extended family tree for the local Wilsons. He appears to have died unmarried. A portrait of him exists. James (b.1798/9) horse-keeper on the High Street, listed on the 1851 census. In 1841 he was recorded as an agricultural labourer. He lived on Reid’s Close, which was at about 77 High Street. His wife was Margaret and their children included Elizabeth, Archibald and Janet. He was a widower by 1861. James (b.c.1800) from Castle Douglas, he was a blacksmith on the High Street. In 1841 he was living at about No. 75 with his wife Janet and children Andrew, James (frameworker) and Adam. By 1861 he was a widower, living with his son James at 7 Kirkwynd He is probably the same James who was blacksmith on Walter’s Wynd; was said that James (‘Teribus’) Hogg had a ‘double-decker’ frame made on his anvil. He may have been related to Henry, who was also a smith in Hawick. James (b.1800/1) born in Cavers Parish, he was shepherd at Lurgiescleuch in Hobkirk Parish in 1861. It is unclear if he was related to Robert ‘Lurgie’, who came from there. He married Isabel Elliot, and their children: included John (b.1847); Mary (b.1850); Janet (b.1852); Matthew (b.1855); Margaret (b.1858); Robert (b.1862); and Andrew (b.1866). Their children were born in Cavers, Kirkton and Teviothead Parishes. He may be the agricultural labourer living at Peelbraehope in 1841, with Margaret (probably his mother). James (1805–1860) politician and economist, born in Hawick. Third son of manufacturer William (of a family of 15), he was educated in Quaker schools and apprenticed to a hat manufacturer in Hawick at 16 (apparently frustrated that Quaker beliefs prevented him from pursuing a legal career). With his brother William they took over the business (purchased for them by their father), which prospered in Hawick, and did even better when they moved it to London in 1824. The company was called Wilson, Erwin & Wilson, but in 1831 became James Wilson & Co. After some financial troubles he retired from business in 1844. He then speculated in indigo, and lost almost all his money, but avoided bankruptcy and eventually recovered. Meanwhile he wrote against the Corn Laws, in favour of free trade and on fiscal policy, establishing a reputation as a political campaigner. He established ‘The Economist’ magazine in 1843, writing most of it himself for the first few years. It was established on the principle of stimulating ‘every man who has a stake in the country . . . to investigate and learn for himself’ about public affairs. He became a Liberal M.P. first in 1847, and was financial secretary.
to the Treasury then turned down an appointment as Vice-President of the Board of Trade. He was also nominated as Governor of Victoria, Australia, but this was blocked by the Queen, because his ‘position and status’ were not deemed high enough. Thus snubbed he almost resigned from politics, but stayed on to become Vice-President of the Board of Trade. He later accepted a position as financial member of the Council of India (effectively India’s Chancellor of the Exchequer), which meant resigning his parliamentary seat. He was made an Honorary Burgess of Hawick in 1859. Later in 1859 he travelled to India, where he quickly adapted to life there, learning the ropes rapidly, and doing much to reform Indian finance. However, he died of dysentery there. He is buried in the Circular Road Cemetery, Calcutta. There is a bust of him in the National Gallery, Edinburgh, and a full-size marble statue inside 25 St. James’s Street in London. A copy of his portrait hangs in the Town Hall (painted by J. Watson-Gordon) and in 2005 a plaque was placed at 11 High Street, his probable birthplace. The Museum also has a bust of him. In 1831 he married Elizabeth Preston (who died in 1886), after converting to the Church of England. They had 6 daughters, all of whom were later joint proprietors of the Economist: Eliza, married Walter Bagelhot, whose romantic correspondence was later published: Julia, married William Rathbone Greg; Matilda, married Matthew Horan; Zenobia, married Orby Shipley; Sophie Victoria, married William Halsey; and Emilie Isabel, who married Russell Barrington and wrote a biography of her father. Her daughter Emilie wrote the biography ‘The Servant of All’ (1927). He is buried in the Circular Road Cemetery, Calcutta. There is a bust of him in the National Gallery, Edinburgh. A full-size marble statue of him by acclaimed sculptor John Steell, stood inside the Economist’s offices at 25 St. James’s Street in London, but was relocated onto Drumlanrig Bridge in 2017. A copy of his portrait hangs in the Town Hall (painted by J. Watson-Gordon) and in 2005 a plaque was placed at 11 High Street, his probable birthplace. The Museum also has a bust of him. James (19th C.) farmer at Cleuch Head in Holskirk Parish in the 1860s. James Anderson (1830–86) son of Hawick shoemaker William. He served with the Royal Navy and is listed as a chief engineer in 1870. He married Agnes Downie and their children were William Grant, Beatrice Mary, John Downie (who married Gertrude Potts), Agnes J.K., James A., George E. and Harry C. Dr. James P.A. (19th C.) sometimes preacher at the Home Mission in Hawick. He lodged with Mrs. Gowans in town and married her daughter Katie. He later worked in a government job in Jahore in Malaysia. Their son was Dr. William Brockie and his widow became Lady Ibrahim, Sultaness of Jahore, while their daughter Eleanore was on the London stage for a while. Sir James Glenny (1849–1929) born in Hawick, son of woollen manufacturer George and Jane. He was educated at the Parish School then in London and at college in Edinburgh. He is probably the James recorded at Heronhill in 1868. He floundered in a position back at Wilson's mill, so was sent off to learn about farming, travelling to Australia. He moved to New Zealand in 1873, where he purchased a farm in the Rangitikei district. He called his house ‘Lethenty’, after the place where the Glens had come from in Aberdeenshire. He was known as an innovative farmer, trying many new ideas, but taking about 20 years to be successful. He became a Member of the New Zealand Parliament in 1881, serving until 1896 (and was a Conservative, despite his family’s Liberal ties). He became first President of the New Zealand Farmers’ Union in 1902. He was also President of the Board of Agriculture and served on many committees and advisory boards. He is now best remembered for his early efforts as a conservationist, helping re-establish the State Forestry Service, and being a strong advocate of replanting native forests. He was knighted in 1915. A keen churchman, he played the organ in his local Presbyterian Church. He married Annie Adams, daughter of farmers in western Victoria. They had 3 sons (Hamish, Noel and Maj. Robert A., farmer and naturalist) and 2 daughters (Nancy, who was a leader in the Girl Guides and Jean). He is buried in the cemetery at Bulls. Jane (b.c.1800) keeper of a lodging house on the Loan. She is recorded there in 1841, along with children Jane, Elizabeth, Isabella, Janet and James. By 1851 she had married the widower John Eddie and was running a boarding house on Walter’s Wynd. Janet (17th C.) recorded in 1690 when she leased one fifth of the farm of Branxholme Town from Scott of Buccleuch. She was probably a widow of the previous farmer, but it is unclear if Wilson was her maiden or married name. She was also tenant in 1691 and 1692, and may have been related to Andrew Wilson who also leased part of Branxholme Town then. Her name does not appear again after that, and so either she died, or other family members took over farming. John (15th C.) recorded being ‘in hartwoodmyris’ (i.e. Hartwoodmyres) in 1494/5. He contributed goods the itinerant court held in Selkirk, his surety being John Murray of Hangingshaw. John (16th C.) recorded on a list of tenants of Newton in Bedrule in 1531. John (17th C.) tenant in Flight in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax records of 1694. John (17th C.) resident of Wilton Parish. He married Margaret Elliot. Their sons were John and Walter, both of whom worked as tanners and candlemakers. They also had daughters Janet (b.1756) and Margaret (b.1759). It is possible that his wife was the ‘Peggy Wilson, Hawick’ who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). John (18th C.) Hawick baker who was Bailie in 1772. He witnessed a baptism for William Brown in 1801. His daughter Ann died in about 1810. He could be the John who paid to have the Parish ‘mort-cloth’ for a child’s burial in 1773. He may be the John who was one of the Bailies during the disturbances in Hawick involving clashes with the ‘Patriots’ in about 1778. He may be the John who witnessed a baptism for Town Clerk John Gledstains in 1781. He may be the John who leased Pilmuir farm in 1787. He is probably the baker John whose daughter Anne died in Hawick in 1810. John (18th C.) Hawick inn-keeper of the late 1700s. He was a second cousin of shoemaker Peter, and probably a descendant of the William who resided at Whitchesters. John (18th C.) resident of Lurgiescleuch in 1786 when his son John was baptised in Hobkirk Parish. It seems likely he was related (perhaps brother) of Charles, and hence potentially uncle of Robert ‘Lurgie’, the Hawick historian. Margaret (b.1783), also baptised in Hobkirk, was probably also his child. John (1752/3–1828) of Hallrule, local farmer. He purchased Hallrule in about 1803 and built the main house there. He was listed as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1805 and 1819. In 1811 he was listed as owner of the east part of Outer Hallrule, as well as 5 of the 6 enclosures of Inner Hallrule. He was stated by the local minister in 1836 as being one of those responsible for land improvements in Hobkirk Parish. He is buried in St. Cuthbert’s churchyard in Edinburgh along with his youngest daughter, Barbara. His lands were later owned by Sir William A.F. Elliott of Stobs. John (18th C.) gardener at Cavers in 1793 and 1794, when he was working for George Douglas. John (18th C.) stable servant and gamekeeper at Larriston in 1794, when he was working for William Oliver. John (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Skelfhill. He paid tax in 1797 for having 2 non-working dogs. He may have been related to Walter, who was shepherd at Priesthaugh. John (18th/19th C.) listed at Wilton Lodge in 1805 when his son George died. He may have been a gardener or other employee of the estate. John (18th/19th C.) farmer at Minto...
Burnfoot on the 1792 Horse Tax Rolls. Probably the same John was at Deanfoot in Minto Parish on the 1794 and 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned no less than 13 farm horses and 1 saddle horse. John (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Wauchope in 1797 according to the Dog Tax Rolls. John (b.c.1778) born in Cluny Parish, Perthshire. He was a tailor by trade. He deserted from the Roxburgh and Selkirkshire Light Dragoons in Hawick in 1799, having probably had his name drawn by ballot. He could be the son of John born in Cluny in 1776. John (d.1828) son of John and Margaret Elliot. He was a candlemaker and Chief Magistrate in the 1820s. He is recorded as Bailie in 1828 when the Sitrig (Drumlanrig) Bridge was widened. He was also Cornet in 1812 and there is a portrait of him in Cornet’s dress; he is likely to be the first Cornet of whom we have an image. He is probably the candlemaker of that name who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetic Museum’ in 1784. Both brothers worked as tanners and later became candlemakers. His premises were on the Howegate (according to Pigot’s 1825/6 directory). He may have been the John who was a founder member of the Wisp Club in 1826. Note that he is easily confused with another candlemaker of the same name (‘the Dip’), who lived in Hawick at the same time (although a little younger) and to whom he was related. John ‘Tufty’ (b.c.1780) Hawick Burgh Officer and drummer in the early part of the 19th century, being Halberdier along with William Turnbull (‘Wull the Bellman’) and for a while with Sandy Bryson. He may be the same John who is described as an auctioneer and Sheriff Officer in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He is recorded as ‘sheriff officer’ on the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. Probably the same man is additionally listed as a general and tar merchant on the Howegate in Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He is listed as a grocer and spirit dealer on the Howegate in 1841 (at about 6 Howegate) and by 1851 was a widower who was a ‘Proprietor of houses and land’ on Buccleuch Street. He is the Mr. John of Buccleuch Street listed among the gentry of Hawick in Slater’s 1852 directory. He served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1818 he married Margaret, eldest daughter of James Elliot of Goldielands. Their children included Adam, farmer at Midshielts, and Agnes. He died at Midshielts. His portrait, by an unknown artist, is in the Museum. John (18th/19th C.) listed as baker in Carlisle on the list of subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ (1825). It seems likely he was related to Wilsons from Hawick. John (1785–1854) reviewer and essayist, born in Paisley, but settled in Edinburgh, where he became Professor of Moral Philosophy. He was a leader in the city’s literary society, where he also wrote bold articles under the pseudonym ‘Christopher North’. He supposedly once stayed in a lodging-house in Mill Port along with a band of travelling gypsies. His grand-daughter Mary married William Aitchison of Brieryhill. He was also a great help to Henry Scott Riddell when he was at Edinburgh University, giving him the run of his house, and apparently refusing the standard fee from Riddell. He was said to have visited Denholm Dean, where he read Leyden’s ‘Scenes of Infancy’. His portrait, by John Watson Gordon, is in Hawick Museum. John (b.c.1790) tenant farmer at Lees in Wilton Parish. He was listed there among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835. His wife was Isabella, and their children included Walter, Margaret and James. John (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Shankend and then at Wauchope Common. He is recorded as shepherd at Wauchope on the 1797...
Horse Tax Rolls. He may be related to the John who was shepherd at Hawklaw several decades later. John Mackay (1804–35) Scottish writer, particularly of the 6 volume ‘Tales of the Borders’. Born in Duns, he was brought up in Tweedmouth and apprenticed with a printer in Berwick. He spent time in Edinburgh and London trying to secure employment, and was eventually hired to the staff of the Literary Journal in Edinburgh. He published poetry and other literary and dramatic work (including ‘The Gowrie Conspiracy’ and ‘Margaret of Anjou’), and travelled to give lectures. In 1832 he became editor of the Berwick Advertiser. He was an advocate for the abolition of slavery, for a national education system and for free trade. He began to publish his ‘Tales’ in the Advertiser, and they were successful enough that they were printed in weekly segments, circulation growing dramatically. However, within a year of the first volume being completed he was dead (perhaps as a result of alcoholism). Further volumes were printed in Edinburgh, on behalf of his widow, with many contemporary writers (including his brother) contributing chapters. In all, 6 volumes were published (with more added in later editions), covering a wide range of historical characters associated with both sides of the Border. The tales included many pieces of dialogue in dialect, which (even if imperfect) are a valuable record of vocabulary and modes of speech from the early 19th century. He is buried at Tweedmouth. John (b.1805/6) frame-worker in Wilton, born in Hawick. In 1851 he was living at Gib’s Nose. His wife was Elizabeth (from Tranent, East Lothian) and their children included Elizabeth and William (both born in Midlothian). John G. of Ladylaw (1806–86) son of manufacturer William and older brother of Provost George. He spent 3 years in a Quaker school at Ackworth in Yorkshire, which is said to have broken him of his Hawick vernacular. After returning to Hawick he worked for the family firm. In about 1835 he decided to start manufacturing flannel from Cheviot wool and so went to Rochdale to spend some time there working as a weaver, starting some looms back in Hawick. He also brought back to Hawick several weavers from the Rochdale area, including Robert Greenwood, James Kershaw, Edward Dearden, Bill Peacock and Bill Shaw, as well as finishers, such as Bill Whitehead and Jim Nuttal. After the firm of William Wilson & Sons was dissolved in 1851, he took over the Roughheugh Waulk Mill, and had Langlands Mill built adjacent to it. He carried on both hosiery and tweed manufacturing. He also built Ladylaw House, the first home in what is now Sunnylaw. He was listed on the Railway Committee for Hawick District in the 1850s and served as a Commissioner of Supply for Roxburghshire. In 1851 he was living at Ladylaw and listed as an employer of ‘205 hands’. In 1871 he is estimated to have employed 190 people. According to the Land Tax Rolls he owned a large fraction of the former lands of Roughheugh. He may be the Wilson recorded in about 1874 owning part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick. He is also listed as owner of half of the part of Roughheugh previously belonging to the Eastons, and the part once owned by William Robertson. He married at least twice, in 1838 to Margaret Scott (1810–51) and in 1863 to Elizabeth Thomson (sister of Rev. Adam Thomson). He may also have married Jeannie Laidlaw. His children included: William R. (b.1839), also a manufacturer; Annie (b.1840), who married Simon Graham; Frank (1845–88); Elizabeth; Maggie (b.1845), who married George Walker; and Mary (b.1851). A portrait of him exists as a young man. John (b.1811) son of Richard and Agnes Weir. He was church officer in Ashkirk in 1858, serving like several generations of his family before him. John Fiddes (b.1813) son of Thomas and Margaret Fiddes (whose sister Janet married David Laing). He became a wool merchant and lived at Leaburn. He acted as standard bearer for the 1832 celebratory procession for the passing of the Reform Bill. He was recorded along with skinner Walter (probably his brother) as joint proprietor of houses on the 1837 electoral roll. In 1841 he was recorded as a farmer living at 1 Teviot Crescent with his mother, as well as Thomas Fiddes, his cousin. In 1851 he was there with his mother, cousin and brother, Walter. In 1861 he was listed as a wool merchant, employing 12 men and 6 apprentices. In about 1874 he was recorded owning part of the former lands of Patrick Cunningham in Hawick. He married Margaret Bell Underwood from Annan and their son was Walter Fiddes (b.1861). John (b.c.1815) tailor living on the Kirkwycnd in 1841 and at about 29 High Street in 1851. He was married to Christian and their children included Helen, John and Mary. John (b.1818/9) from Annan, he was farm overseer at Larriston in 1851 and 1861. His wife was Isabella and their children included James, Robert, John and Francis. John (19th C.) shepherd at Hawklaw when listed among the original members of Wolfelee Free Kirk in 1849. He was still recorded at Hawklaw in 1868. He married Catherine, daughter of William Carruthers. Their daughter Agnes Robina died of consumption in 1874. John (b.1825/6) from Canonbie, he was employed as a lime-burner at Thorlieshope. In 1861 he was living at Lawston and was at Thorlieshope in 1868. His wife was Mary and they had daughters Helen and Margaret.

Rev. John Rudge (c.1857–1930) son of Thomas of Glasgow and Catherine Mary Reltton. He graduated from Glasgow University in 1876 and was licensed by the Presbytery there in 1878. He was assistant at Barony Parish, Glasgow, then ordained at Morton in 1879. He was translated to Greenside, Edinburgh in 1884 and then to Wilton in 1887. He preached the sermon at the inauguration of the 1st Hawick Company of the Boys’ Brigade in 1893. He was also Chairman of the School Board for Wilton Parish, first President of Wilton Bowling Club, and acting Chaplain in the Volunteers. He was the Chaplain for the 1890 Common Riding and was a fairly vocal supporter during a time when most of the local clergy were attacking the Common Riding. He also talked at the 1899 Colour Bussing. He was Chaplain to the forces in the South African War in 1900, and was mentioned in dispatches in 1901. In 1905 he took charge of St. Andrews Church, Simla (India). However, he was soon back at Wilton, and remained there until leaving the area in 1926. He was Chaplain of the K.O.S.B. from 1912 and received a doctorate from Glasgow University in 1913. His ministry saw the building of the church halls and the addition of a chancel and transepts to the church. He was apparently widely known as an eloquent preacher. In 1903 he married Georgina Underwood Fiddes (sister of Walter Fiddes Wilson), and she died at Wetheral, Cumberland in 1947. There are descendants of the Reltons, Rudges and Wilsons living in the area or perhaps Edinburgh.

Rev. J.P. Armstrong (b.1890); William E.G. (b.1894); and Walter Elliot (b.1898). Rev. J.P., minister of St. Mary’s 1959–66. Katherine (1798–1863) eldest daughter of Hawick manufacturer William. She went to London with her brothers William and James about 1824 to keep house for them while they developed their hat manufacturing business. She married John Glenny of Aberdeenshire in 1834, and their son James became partner in Wilson & Glenny. Lucy Ann (1853–1944) daughter of Walter of Orchard. She was President of the Hawick Young Women’s Christian Association. She provided family information for James Haining in compiling his notes for the monumental inscriptions in Hawick. She died at Belmont, at the age of 92. Luke (16th C.) merchant who was owed money for an account, according to the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Bucceleuch in 1574. It is unclear if he was from the Hawick area or perhaps Edinburgh.

Margaret (17th C.) resident of Bedrule Parish listed on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. She was probably widow of a farmer on the Knowesouth estate. Margaret nee Fiddes (b.c.1785) listed as owner of a tanners and skinners business in Pigot’s directory of 1837. She was by that time the widow of Thomas. In 1841 she was at about 1 Teviot Crescent with her son John. In 1851 she was a widow working as a wool merchant and skinner, employing 6 men, with her sons Walter and John as partners. ‘Margaret Wilson & Sons, Teviot crescent’ are listed as tanners and skinners in Slater’s 1852 directory. Margaret Stavert worked as Head of the Training Department of Barrie’s. She received the B.E.M. in 1978 for services to export. Marion (17th/18th C.) recorded in 1695 when she was ordered by the Council to pay ‘for 10 ells of sheets woven in the Holland reid, 5 groats the ell’. Mina (18th/19th C.) listed as vintner on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. It is unclear how she was related to any other Wilsons.

Mungo (b.1821/2) son of land steward David, he was born at Cavers. In 1841 he was listed as a shopkeeper at Cavers, although less than 20 years old at the time. He became a licensed grocer at the foot of the Howegate, where the Post Office had formerly been. In 1851 he was listed as a grocer on Silver Street, living with his sister Jane. He was recorded as a Silver Street grocer in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1861 he was a widower, living with his sister Jessie (probably the same as Jane). His business was taken over by his assistant, James Laing, grandson of James Hogg (of ‘Teribus’ fame). Nichol (16th C.) recorded... in 1541 when he and John White were accused of coming to Burgh-by-Sands and killing Englishman Thomas Bull. It is unclear what part of the Borderland he came from. Peter (1750–1836) shoemaker and Magistrate, who lived at Slitrig Bank. He was son of William (‘Whisky Wullic’) and Mary Hardie, and was christened ‘Patrick’. He was listed as Patrick in 1794–97 when he paid the Horse Tax in Hawick. He was listed as a shoemaker on the Howegate in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He was among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. In 1776 he married Joan (1756–1840), daughter of baker John Kedie and she died in 1840. Their children were: William, also a shoemaker (1779–1845); Betty, Mary, and twins Betty and Mary, all of whom died in infancy; John (1783–1857), ‘The Dip’; Helen (b.1783); Peter (1784–1862), hosiery manufacturer; Betty (b.1785), who also died in infancy; Thomas (1787–1859), manufacturer; Joan (1788–1857); Archibald (b.1789), died in infancy; Agnes (1795–1866), dressmaker; James (1797–1862), Hawick Town Clerk; and Jane (1798–1885), also a dressmaker. The witnesses in 1788 were William Wilson and William Elliot. A portrait exists of him, by an unknown artist, as well as perhaps another with his wife and servants. He is probably the Peter who purchased barley from ‘Auld Cash’ sometimes before 1810. Peter (1784–1862) hosiery manufacturer and yarn spinner of Peter Wilson & Co., sometimes called ‘junior’, since his father was also Peter. His brothers included William (shoemaker), John (‘the Dip’), Thomas (also a manufacturer) and James (Town Clerk). He was in partnership with John Waldie and Robert Pringle at the Whisky House Mill on Slitrig Crescent from 1815, but left the partnership in 1819. He is listed as a hosier among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. Around 1825 he ran a yarn spinning operation at Treehall Mills, as recorded in Pigot’s directory. He operated Tower Mills and Allars Mill (near Jedburgh) from 1823, and was still running the Waulk Mills (along with his brother Thomas) at the time of the flood of 1846. Around 1837 he was operating a mill on Slitrig Bank, at the foot of the Kirk Wynd; this same building is marked on Wood’s 1824 map. He was listed in 1835 as a manufacturer in Hawick among heads of households in Wilton Kirk. He was listed there in Pigot’s 1837 directory, as a manufacturer of both woollen and hosiery. He was a Bailie of the Town in the 1810s and again in 1837, during the so-called ‘election riots’. He was listed among a group of 10 men who had been denied their claim to be on the electoral roll in Selkirkshire on the basis of joint life-rent there. Later in life he was a grocer in Old Manse Lane. He was Chief Magistrate in the 1830s. Later in live he also ran a shop, being listed in Slater’s 1852 directory on Silver Street. In 1861 he was a grocer and spirit dealer at 6 Kirkgate (i.e. St. Mary’s Place); he was by then a widower living with his housekeeper. In 1818 he married Mary, daughter of Robert Selby, who was factor at Minto, along with his son Ephraim. Their children were Helen Ritchie (wife of Rev. Adam Thomson), Elizabeth, Robert, Mary, another Mary, Peter, Mary Selby (who married her cousin Thomas Grant Wilson) and another Robert. A portrait of him and his wife exists. Peter (19th C.) said to have been from Cavers, he was at St. Andrews University 1822–6. Originally training to be a Seccession minister, he became Professor of Mathematics at Andersonian University, Glasgow 1828–45 and was Rector of Inverness Academy 1845–7, then returned as Professor at Glasgow University. Richard (17th/18th C.) probably church officer in Ashkirk like other generations of his family. He married Bessie Halliwell and was succeeded as church officer by his son Robert. Richard (b.1756) son of Robert and Margaret Riddell. He was church officer in Ashkirk, like his father before him. He was succeeded in that office by his son John. He is probably the Richard who married Agnes Weir and whose children included: Robert (b.1792); William (b.1793); Alexander (b.1796); George (b.1800); Margaret (b.1802); James (b.1805); Agnes (again, b.1810); and John (b.1811). Richard (b.c.1793–1849) shoemaker in Hawick. He was listed on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was probably also the librarian of Hawick Trades Library listed in 1837. In 1841 he was at about 17 High Street with his wife Agnes and children Margaret, Agnes, Robert and Joseph. Robert (16th C.) recorded as ‘curate’ of Wilton in 1552 when he was listed as a creditor in the inventory of the estate of William Scott, younger of Buccleuch. There was a separate entry for the ‘rectori de Viltoun’ (but with no name given) suggesting that a different man was Rector at the time. Robert (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parsh. His wife was Margaret Martin and their daughter Isobel was baptised in 1655. Robert (17th C.) carier in Hawick, on the 1693/4 subscribers’ list for the new Kirk bell. Probably the same Robert was listed on the Hearth Tax rolls for Hawick ‘eist the water’ in 1694. He may be related to James, who was also a carrier at the same time. Robert (17th/18th C.) tailor in Hawick. He is recorded in 1718 in a dispute with William Wright over the spaces occupied by their wives’ stools in St. Mary’s Kirk. He may be the same Robert who witnessed a baptism in 1687. His son Robert was baptised in Hawick in 1704, with flesher Thomas as one of the witnesses (and hence perhaps related); Isobel, baptised in 1706, was probably his daughter. He seems likely to be the Robert who married Isobel Tait in 1700. Robert (18th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Bessy Lorraine (who may have been daughter of William Lorraine, b.1712). Their children included: John (b.1742); and Charles (b.1746). He was already deceased in 1778 when the death of his wife Betty is recorded. It is possible that he was grandfather of ‘Lurgie’.

Robert (18th C.) Schoolmaster in Wilton. He loaned the town £25 to help pay off the Teviot Bridge debt in the mid-1700s. It is possible he was the Wilton Parish Clerk who wrote the record in 1720 stating ‘Received for the mortcloth at the funeral of Walter Wilson my son’. He may be the Robert who married Elspeth, daughter of Walter Weens in 1718 (recorded in both Wilton and Hawick), and whose children included: Walter (b.1719); Rachel (b.1721); Bessie (b.1724); Robert (b.1726); Walter (again, b.1728); and Robert (again, b.1731). Robert (b.1723) son of Richard and Bessie Halliwell. He was church officer in Ashkirk. It is said that 9 or 10 generations of the same family held this office continuously. He married Margaret Riddell in 1753. Their children included: Betsy (b.1754); Richard (b.1756), who succeeded as church officer; Agnes (b.1759); and Isabel (b.1760). Robert of Bewtie (18th C.) recorded as a Commissioner for Roxburghshire in 1761. It is unclear where he came from, or how long he owned these local lands. Robert (18th C.) butcher of Hawick, possibly related to the same old family who traced themselves back to the late 17th century in the Whitchesters area. He had at least 2 surviving sons: Andrew, who was also a flesher; and Adam, who was a shoemaker. He married Sarah Scott in 1760 and their children included: James (b.1760); Christian (b.1762); Adam (b.1764); Margaret (b.1765); Robert (b.1766); Margaret (again, b.1768); Robert (again, b.1769); Janet (b.1771); and Andrew (b.1774). The witnesses in 1766 were James Waugh and Robert Turnbull. Robert ‘Lurgie’ (1772–1837) shoemaker, who was Cornet in 1799 and also a local historian and writer. He was son of Charles and Agnes Tinlin, with ‘Wull the Naig’ being one of his cousins. His nickname came from Lurgiescleuch, once a family home (said to be where his grandfather was from). His baptism is recorded in Hawick, but there is no record of the date of his birth (but probably the end of April or beginning of May). He was an only child and followed his father Charles into the combined trade of shoemaker and publican. He received only rudimentary and brief education in Hawick, and was largely self-taught. He was also known as a singer from an early age. His political views were strongly affected by the French Revolution, and it is said that his religious views were influenced by his friendship with Dr. Freeman. He is listed as a shoemaker at the Sandbed in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory, and as a vintner on Buccleuch Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He inherited the publican’s business when his father died, the upstairs room at 2 Buccleuch Street being used as a public house, the Burns Inn. It was frequented by many of the most respectable local citizen’s and was often a meeting place for Hawick’s literati and local reformers. Since newspapers were scarce in those days, he would sometimes read important news from the window of his house, e.g. news of the victory at Waterloo. He used to set aside time every day for reading and from 1822 he started daily committing some of his thoughts to paper. At the encouragement of his friends he collected various pieces written on different scraps of paper and published them as ‘A Sketch of the History of Hawick’ (1825). The introduction for the second second edition, called ‘The History of Hawick’ (1841), was written only about a month before his death. This work represented the first serious history of the town, as well as being a discursive outline of the author’s Liberal political views. He argues vehemently for equality and for peace, using carefully thought out positions, and often utilising humour. He took a particular stance (in many cases surprisingly modern) against: the House of Lords; the length of the Civil List; too much power in the hands of the Clergy; religious education; out-dated educational methods; religious intolerance; the laws of entail and the legal system generally; simplistic attitudes to solving Ireland’s problems; and the state of the Carlisle-Edinburgh road near Hawick! He argued in favour of mediation in labour disputes, for religious toleration in Ireland, the support of the poor through taxation, for the Duke of Buccleuch to return the part of Hawick’s Common taken in 1777 and to encourage the development of mills on his property, and also to build housing on the Common Haugh to solve Hawick’s overcrowded housing problems! The editor of the Scotsman was so impressed he came to Hawick to find him, arriving on Common Riding Saturday and being told he was at the Haugh, his servant girl said ‘just look out for the langest, the leanest, and maist ill-faured man that ye can see. Ye’ll sure find him, for he wears a white hat’. In addition he wrote ‘Disquisition on the corn-laws, with a few observations on pauperism, etc.’ (1826) and ‘Observations on the character and working of the Reform Bill’ (1834). A prominent Liberal in local politics, he took the part of the King of the Ancient Order of St. Crispin for the shoemakers in the 1832 Reform Bill celebratory procession and gave a speech at the banquet held in the Haugh. He is said to have helped in the selection of songs in ‘The Banquet of Euphrosyne’, published in Hawick by Robert Armstrong in 1811. He was also one of the founder members of the Hawick Curling Club. He was much respected in Town, and often consulted about the running of the trades Incorporations, the history of the Town, etc. He was Clerk for both Hawick’s friendly societies of the early 19th century, one being an annual benefit club (perhaps the Hawick Friendly Society) and the other the Hawick Medico-Relief Society. He was also distributor of the funds from the Association for the Purpose of Suppressing Public Begging in the Town of Hawick. He is probably the Robert recorded as Dean of Guild in Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In his last few years, when his health was declining, he became Master of Works for Hawick. Under his supervision the plantations at the Vertish and on Hawick Moor were undertaken, and he enjoyed checking on the growth of the trees. Late in life he married Margaret Miller (who died in 1852), but they had no children. He is said to have walked the Common every day and caught a fever after falling asleep beside a damp spring (later referred to as ‘Lurgie’s Well’, near St. Leonard’s) and never recovered. Over 500 people attended his funeral. He is buried in St. Mary’s, although there was no headstone. A portrait of him exists (by an unknown artist, a friend of his), and he is described as being about 5 ft 10 in, with small, deep-set eyes, angular features, a protruding forehead and pale complexion. He is said to have had a temperate nature, but to be extremely perceptive, imaginative and excitable. He also wrote many letters on political matters, which appeared in newspapers. He was a great admirer of Burns, and would regularly give the addresses at meetings of the earliest incarnation of the Hawick Burns Club (e.g. in 1821 and 1823). The only example of poetry attributed to him are in supplement to Sir Walter Scott’s ‘Sweet Teviot’ lines: ‘All now is changed, and halcyon years succeed the feudal baron’s sway; And trade, with arts and peace, appears To bless fair Scotia’s happier day’ [RW]. His Masonic insignia are in the Museum. A biography of him was written by Robert Murray in 1881. An anonymous contemporary wrote ‘Then hail to thee Rob! I am glad that our town, Can call such a blade as Rob Wilson our own. Oh, lang mayst thou flourish about in our parish Thy drab-coloured hat, Rob; and lang mayst thou nourish Thy Whiggisms, too, independent and true, And returns snap for snap when the Tories grow currish!’.

Robert (c.1788–bef. 1851) spinner at Nixon’s Mill. In 1841 he was living at ‘Nixon’s Mill’, probably meaning Lynnwood Cottages. He married Janet, eldest daughter of William Laidlaw and Margaret Aitken. His children included: Margaret, who married Benjamin Hall; Isobel, who married John Biggar; James; and William. They also took in Catherine Laidlaw, a daughter of his brother-in-law James Laidlaw, who died around 1838. Robert ‘Rob the Clocker’ (19th C.) one of the men who attended social evenings in David Shiel’s public house on Baker Street in the mid-1800s, along with several Robert Scotts. Robert (19th C.) listed as a hosier on the Round Close in Pigot’s 1837 directory. Rev. Robert (b.c.1810) minister of Denholm Congregational Kirk 1835–42, taking over from itinerant preacher Francis Dick. He came from Glasgow Theological Academy, and was appointed as the first full-time independent minister in Denholm, there being perceived to be a strong need following the death of the Cameronian preacher James Duncan. During the period he served as minister he baptised Sir James A.H. Murray. In 1841 he was living at Deanburn Cottage with his wife Susan Gillies Smith. He moved to Cumbria in about 1843, where he was minister at Cockermouth Congregational Chapel and later was at Charlesworth Chapel, Derbyshire. Probably the same Robert emigrated to Nova Scotia in 1853 and was minister in Yarmouth Congregational Church there, as well as in Sheffield, New Brunswick. Robert (19th C.) one of the earliest deacons in the Hawick Congregational Kirk, from about 1848. Robert (b.1837/8) farmer at Cleuch Head in Hobkirk Parish, originally from Channelkirk. In 1861 he was farming 1110 acres and employed 5 labourers. He was living with his brother William and sister Margaret. Robert Brodie (1840–1906) son of Margaret Brodie, with the father probably being cabinetmaker Walter Wilson. In 1861 he was living on Albion Place with his grandmother Helen Brodie. He worked as a wool sorter. In 1862 he married Annie J. (1839–87), daughter of Andrew Ekron. They had 12 children, including Robert (b.1863), Elizabeth Scott (b.1864) and Margaret (b.1866). He secondly married Susan Stewart (who had formerly been married to a Waldie). He died in Dunedin, New Zealand. Roland (16th C.) tenant at Catslack, as recorded in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1574. This seems most likely to be the ‘Catlochill’ (essentially the same as Branxholme Braes) which is mentioned in the ballad ‘Jamie Telfer’. S. C. (19th/20th C.) wrote the article ‘The Barony of Hawick and the Lovell Family’ for the 1932 Transactions. Simon (16th/17th C.) described as ‘Symeon Wilsoune in Priesthauch’ when he (along with 3 other local men, from the Branxholme area and Craik) were cautioners for ‘Hob Cowan in Ailmure’ in 1623. He may have been related to later local Wilsons. Simon ‘Sim the Colt’ (17th C.) recorded on a long list of Borders men to be apprehended and tried for various crimes. He was probably from somewhere around Liddesdale. He could be the ‘Scymone Wilsone’ listed in about 1648 among ‘mosstroopers’ (i.e. men branded as thieves on the Border). Thomas (17th C.) recorded in 1632 as possessor of the lands of Over and Nether Whisgills and Redmoss in Liddesdale. Thomas (17th C.) Hawick resident recorded in 1644 when his horse was valued at £22 when provided for the Covenanting army ‘in case the horses come nocht back again or be lost’. He could be the Thomas, married to Margaret Henderson, whose children included Robert (b.1640) and Margaret (b.1644). Thomas (17th/18th C.) flesher listed among those contributing to the new Kirk bell in 1693/4. Probably the same Thomas was listed ‘eist the water’ among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. He was recorded as a flesher in Hawick when he witnessed baptisms for tailor William Scott in 1701 and tailor Robert Wilson (possibly a relative) in 1704. He could be the Thomas, married to Esther Fowler, whose children, baptised in Hawick, included Robert (b.1687) and James (b.1689). Thomas (d.c.1786) second Schoolmaster at Caerlenrig, appointed in 1757, and staying until 1761 when he was appointed as Schoolmaster at Kirktown. There he was teacher to the class that included the young John Leyden, but he died after only teaching Leyden for a year or two. He was succeeded by Walter Scott. Thomas (d.bef. 1837) brother of Walter. He had a tanner’s business and lived at 1 Teviot Crescent. He is probably the ‘T. Wilson, skinner’, listed among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ (1825). His wife was Margaret (b.c.1785), daughter of John Fiddes, from Hobkirk. Their children included Walter (b.1811) and John Fiddes (b.1813), both wool merchants and skinners. He had a son who died in 1815 and another in 1819. He could be the tallow dealer and candlemaker listed on the High Street on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. After his death his wife continued the tanning and skinning business, with their sons Walter and John becoming partners. Thomas (b.1787–1859) son of shoemaker Peter and brother of hosiery manufacturer Peter, as well as Town Clerk James. He ran a hosiery factory at 8 and 9 (or perhaps 7 and 8) Slitrig Crescent, where he is recorded on Wood’s 1824 map; the building there is shown straddling the mill lade. Pigot’s 1825/6 directory lists him in partnership with William Elliot. This partnership lasted only 7 years, ending in 1830, with William Elliot & Sons going their own way next door, and Wilson’s being eventually taken over by John Laing & Sons about 1851. He was also in partnership with his brother Peter and others in the Waulk Mill (Tower Knowe), under the name Waldie, Elliot & Co. He was among the local men implicated in the 1837 Commons inquiry into ‘fictitious voters’ on account of purchasing property in Selkirkshire. Pigot’s 1825/6 directory further lists a Thomas as Skinner and wool merchant on the High Street, and this is also probably him. The 1837 directory lists him as both a woolen and hosiery manufacturer on the Crescent. In 1819 he married Charlotte, only daughter of Edinburgh lawyer Charles Grant. Their children were: Peter Grant; Charles George (b.1823), who died young; Charles, who married Sarah Frisbie; Joan Kedie (d.1831), who died young; Charlotte Grant (1834–42); Eliza; Agnes Jane; George Grant, in the Civil Service there at Caerlenrig, appointed in 1757, and staying until 1761 when he was appointed as Schoolmaster at Kirktown. There he was teacher to the class that included the young John Leyden, but he died after only teaching Leyden for a year or two. He was succeeded by Walter Scott. Thomas (d.bef. 1837) brother of Walter. He had a tanner’s business and lived at 1 Teviot Crescent. He is probably the ‘T. Wilson, skinner’, listed among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ (1825). His wife was Margaret (b.c.1785), daughter of John Fiddes, from Hobkirk. Their children included Walter (b.1811) and John Fiddes (b.1813), both wool merchants and skinners. He had a son who died in 1815 and another in 1819. Their children were: Peter Grant; Charles George (b.1823), who died young; Charles, who married Sarah Frisbie; Joan Kedie (d.1831), who died young; Charlotte Grant (1834–42); Eliza; Agnes Jane; George Grant, in the Civil Service there at Caerlenrig, appointed in 1757, and staying until 1761 when he was appointed as Schoolmaster at Kirktown. Selkirk) and their children included John, Margaret, William, Isabella, Janet (b.1837), Thomas, Robert, Eliza and Gideon (b.1855). He could be the shoemaker Thomas whose child’s death was recorded in 1838. Thomas Grant (19th C.) son of hosiery manufacturer Thomas. He worked in the cotton business in Liverpool, then emigrated to Canada and the U.S.A. and died in Chicago. He married his cousin Mary Selby Wilson. Their children included Thomas Herbert Grant, who married Blanche Sanders. Thomas ‘Tom’ or ‘the Bottler’ (d.1918) prominent back in Hawick R.F.C. in the early 1900s, who was also capped for Scotland. He first appeared for Hawick in 1903, and could play in almost any position. He also excelled at Sevens, and played in nearly 50 tournaments. He was killed during WWI. Thomas (19th/20th C.) Schoolmaster at Roberton for over 50 years. He lived at the schoolhouse in Roberton and wrote an article about the area for the 1924 Transactions. In 1875 he firstly married Mary Scott Grieve. He secondly married Ellen Mary Douglas, son of John, farmer at Easter Essenside (and also descended from Charles Scott, ‘Chairlie o the Crescent’). His children were: James (‘Jim’); Margaret; Thomas (b.1888), who died in WWI; Christina (‘Chrisissie’), who was teacher at Ashkirk; and George, a doctor at Redditch. Thomas ‘Tom’ (1888–1917) second son of the Roberton Schoolmaster. He became a civil engineer, moving to Glasgow, Carlisle and then Singapore. He played rugby for several sides and was selected to go on tour with the English national side in 1907; however, a dispute with the Scottish Union led to him being de-selected by England. During WWI he was drafted to East Africa, where he was a Lieutenant with the King’s African Rifles. He was awarded the Military Cross in 1916 and transferred to the Royal Engineers. He was killed when his car was attacked by a sniper in German East Africa. Thomas Michael Aubrey ‘Michael’ (1951– ), F.R.S.E., son of Basil, headmaster at Drumlanrig School. He attended Hawick Hawick School. He was Chief Executive Officer of Horticulture Research International and acted as Editor-in-Chief for the Journal of Horticultural Science & Biotechnology. He has been a spokesman on behalf of a scientific approach to genetically modified crops. Walter (d.c.1681) listed ‘in Hawick’ when his will was recorded in 1681. He may be the same as the later merchant of Hawick, if he registered a will significantly before his death. Walter (17th C.) resident at Wester Burnfoot in Ashkirk Parish on the Hearth Tax roll in 1694. Walter (17th/18th C.) merchant in Hawick. He was listed among the contributors to the Hawick Kirk bell in 1693/4 and is probably the Walter listed ‘eist the water’ among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. He may be the Walter who was renting part of Branxholme Town in 1693, who rented the farm of Castlehill in 1698 and who acted as cautioner for the widow of Andrew, tenant in part of the farm of Branxholme Town. He was in Castlehill in 1704 when his daughter Marion was baptised, with James Ogilvie in Branxholme and Robert Thomison as witnesses. He was a member of the Council when it granted a bond (dated 1710, but recorded in the Town Book in 1711) to provide money for the Master of the new Grammar School. His wife was Margaret Scott. Their daughter Bessie was born in 1705, with Andrew Riddell in Goldielands as a witness to the baptism; she may be the Betty, daughter to the deceased Walter, who died in 1795. Walter (18th C.) listed as ‘Servant to Walter Scott at Comnouse’ in 1737 when he witnessed a baptism for Walter Jackson, hind at Falnash. It is possible he is the same man as ‘Haunless Wat’. Walter ‘Haunless Wat’ (1712–1795) son of John and Margaret Crow, he was born in Hawick Parish. His nickname came from the fact that he was born with only one hand. He was grand-father of William, and great-grandfather of Provost George. He worked as a travelling packman for William Oliver, ‘Auld Cash’ (or perhaps more likely, the father of ‘Auld Cash’), taking goods back and forward across the Border using pack-horses. He set up as a merchant in 11 High Street, later buying No. 9 from Francis Scott and finally acquiring No. 13 through exchange of property on the Back Row. No. 11 High Street belonged to 3 generations of Walters, the last being Cornet in 1820. It is labelled as ‘Wa. Wilson’ on Wood’s 1824 map. After the death of Oliver, he set up in business on his own. He also tried running the Cross Keys Inn for a while, but returned to being a merchant. He paid the Shop Tax in Hawick in 1785. In 1752 (at a fairly advanced age) he married Catherine (or ‘Katharine’), daughter of Robert Oliver and Bessie Blackhall; she was a niece of the William Oliver he worked with (although cousin seems like the correct generation), as well as sister of the wife of Bailie Walter Purdom; she died in 1788, aged 56. Their children included: Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (b.1753), who married draper George Turnbull; Margaret ‘Peggy’, who died in infancy; John (b.1756), died young; Robert (b.1758), died young; Margaret or ‘Peggy’ (b.1759), who married William Beck; Agnes (b.1761), who married currier John Straton; Ann (b.1763), who married Cornet James Oliver; William (1764–1832), manufacturer in Hawick; John (1767), also died young; Walter (b.1770), cabinet-maker in Hawick; and Katherine (1773–81). He was recorded as a merchant in 1764, when the baptismal witnesses were Robert Oliver (perhaps his father-in-law) and Walter Purdom (his wife’s brother-in-law). He died at the ‘Auld Cross Keys’ and is buried in Wilton Old Churchyard. A wooden folding yardstick of his (from around 1734) is in the Museum.

Walter (d.bef. 1809) resident of Newmill. His wife Isabel Renwick died in 1809. He may be the Walter who (along with John Martin) witnessed a baptism for William Elliot (or Gledstains) in 1777. Walter ‘Wat the Buck’ (18th/19th C.) not be confused with his namesake ‘the Laird’. He was a baker in Hawick, based at 10 Howegate. He was among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. He was listed as a Howegate baker in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He was a Bailie in Hawick, and was said by the Tories to have been engaged in intimidating Tory voters before the 1837 election. On the other side, he was said to have ensured that when the military were called out in 1835 (after all the trouble had quietened down in Hawick) they were received warmly by the townspeople, rather than reinstigating the riot. He married Margaret Donald, in Selkirk in 1772; she was daughter of Alexander Donald and Agnes Hardie. Their children included: Agnes (b.1775); Janet (b.1777); Margaret (b.1780), who married William Rathie; Jane (b.1782); Isabel (b.1784); Janet (b.1787); Alexander (b.1789); and Walter (b.1794), who carried on the baker’s business. He was probably still alive for his granddaughter’s baptism in 1812. Walter (18th/19th C.) shepherd at Priesthaugh. He is recorded in 1797 when he was taxed for having 2 non-working dogs. He may have been related to John, who was a shepherd at Skelfhill. Walter ‘Wat the Laird’ (18th/19th C.) distinguished from ‘the Buck’ by his nickname. The ‘Laird’ suggests he farmed some fields, perhaps up the Loan or the Wellogate. Walter (18th/19th C.) Lieutenant in the Hawick Military Association (volunteers) around 1800. He may be the same as one of the other contemporary Walters. Walter ‘Watty’ (1770–1847) cabinet-maker of the High Street, 2nd son of ‘Haunless Wat’ and Catherine Oliver. His joiner’s and cabinet-maker’s business was down the close at 9 High Street. He inherited this property from his father, and it included land that went all the way down to the river, with stables at the foot. He lived above the property at the front, which was rented to a grocer; his parlour windows faced the street above the shop. This property is shown belonging to him on Wood’s 1824 map of Hawick. It was said that as a joiner he was known for some local specialties, including a kind of nut-cracker that he made with a circular ring of wood and wooden screw. He was also on the Town Council, and served as Master of Works. He was a keen fisherman, and told stories of sailing his ‘trows’ from Hawick to Berwick when the river was full. He is probably the Walter ‘wright in Hawick’ who was listed as a second cousin in the 1808 will of William Oliver, ‘Auld Cash’. He is probably the wright who helped compile a ‘New Valuation of Houses and Gardens in the Town of Hawick’ in 1814. He is recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory as a joiner on the High Street and in 1837 as a joiner and undertaker. In the 1834 electoral roll Walter senior and Walter junior (both cabinet-makers) are mentioned, and they are still on the High Street (at about No. 9) on the 1841 census. He married Agnes Fletcher, who died in 1802, aged 27. They had 2 sons: Walter (b.1798); and Robert (b.1801), who died in infancy. The witnesses in 1798 were merchants William Wilson and George Turnbull. In older life he was known as ‘Uncle Wattle’. A portrait of him exists. The family are buried in Wilton Old Churchyard. Bailie Walter (d.1840) tanner in Hawick. He was brother of John and son of John and Margaret Elliot. Both brothers were tanners and later candlemakers. He is easy to confuse with his nephew Walter, who was a skinner in Hawick. He is probably the Walter who was a Bailie in the 1790s and early 1800s and who was recorded as eldest Bailie in 1808. Walter (1794–1849) son of baker Walter and Margaret Donald. He was Cornet in 1814. He carried on his father’s baker’s business at 10 Howegate and was listed on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. In the 1830s he was among a list of 10 men who had been denied their claim to be on the electoral roll in Selkirkshire on the basis of joint life-rent there. He is listed as a baker in Hawick among the heads of households in Wilton Kirk in 1840 and 1841. He later became Burgh Treasurer. He married Isabella Richardson, daughter of James Richardson, Cornet in 1777, and Jane Scott from Milsington; she carried on the business after his death. Their children included: Jane (b.1822), who married baker George Armstrong; Walter (b.1824), the eldest son, who helped his mother with the baker's; Margaret D. (b.1827); Isabella (b.1829); James Donaldson (b.1831), later worked in the family business; John (b.1833); Elizabeth (b.1836); Agnes, who married Thomas Dryden; and Jessie (d.1891), who married John Riddle Thompson. He died in the cholera epidemic, his death being listed along with 9 others on the same day. A portrait of him exists. Walter of Orchard (1796–1890) eldest son of William and Elizabeth Richardson, he was a manufacturer in Hawick. It is said that when the partnership between his father and William Watson dissolved in 1819 he began to travel on horseback, with commercial samples in his saddlebags, spending up to 6 weeks on the road. He may be the ‘Walter Wilson, hosier’ who is recorded on the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ (1825). In 1841 he is recorded living at 13 High Street. He took over part of the family manufacturing business, forming Walter Wilson & Sons of Teviot Mills (Weensland) and Allars Crescent in 1851. He manufactured both hosiery and tweeds. Along with several other local manufacturers and Mr. Croall of Edinburgh he organised a cheaper (than the mail coach) stage-coach between Hawick and Edinburgh 1823–46. He was Secretary of the Board of Health set up to deal with the 1832 cholera outbreak. It was said that once William Grieve of Brannholme Park challenged him to a fight, and as a Quaker he put his hands in his pockets and stated ‘That’s what I do when anyone asks me to fight’. He was leader of the group in the 1850s pushing for the Hawick-Carlisle railway to go via Liddesdale rather than Langholm. He served as a Commissioner of Supply and Justice of the Peace for Roxburghshire; he may have been the first J.P. from Hawick. He was living at Orchard from at least the 1860s. He was recorded there in 1861, listed as a Justice of the Peace and farmer of 270 acres, as well as a manufacturer in Hawick. He also owned part of Weensland (perhaps where the mill was) that had been owned by Robert Scott. In 1827 he firstly married Rebecca Gibb (sister of James Gibb, who married his sister Margaret); she died in 1832. In 1838 he secondly married another Rebecca (1818–96), daughter of Alexander Cruickshank (with whom his father had started in business in 1794). Both of his marriages were within the Society of Friends and he remained in the organisation all his life. His children included: William (1829–59); Francis Elliot (b.1839) of Broomlands; Edward (b.1841), who married Margaret Hobkirk; Alfred Cruickshank (b.1843), whose wife was also Rebecca; Dr. Alexander (b.1845), who married Emma Bewley; Susan Cruickshank (b.1847), who married Rev. Robert Hislop, brother of Hawick minister David Hislop; Walter Stuart (b.1850), who married Janet Cairns; Lucy Ann (1853–1944), who was President of the Hawick Young Women’s Christian Association; and Emily Richardson (b.1857), who died in infancy. His involvement in the railway debate left a big impression in the area – ‘Twas said to Walter Wilson, ‘Sir ’twas you that shut the door’, ‘I deny it’, said the Quaker, ‘We can prove it’, said a score’ [T]. Walter (1798–1862) son of Walter, he was a cabinet-maker like his father. He was on the short-list for Cornet in 1817 and was elected as Cornet in 1820. He was listed as ‘Walter Wilson, Jun. wright’ among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. He is listed along with his father on the High Street on the 1841 census. By 1851 he was a widower at about 9 High Street, and was employing 3 men. In Slater’s 1852 directory he was listed as a joiner on the High Street. By 1856 he was a ‘Proprietor of Houses’ on the High Street. By 1861 he was a retired cabinet-maker living at Silverbuthall House. He had a son called Walter (b.1823), apparently before he was married (with the mother being Wilhelmina Bell); this son became a baker in Selkirk and then emigrated to Australia. He married Janet Gray (who probably died in 1829). He also appears to have had an illegitimate son (Robert Brodie Wilson, 1840–1906) with Margaret Brodie. In 1856 he secondly married Isabella (c.1824–98) from Liliesleaf, daughter of farmer James Gray; they had a daughter, Jessie (1828–1913), who married George Hobkirk, of Slitrig Villa. He was said to be very keen on fishing, and left his business largely to be run by John Rae, while he went on angling excursions. He was also said to be a great story-teller. An early photograph of him exists. Walter (b.1811) son of Thomas and brother of John Fiddes. He was a Skinner and wool merchant in Hawick. He is easy to confuse with Bailie Walter, his uncle, who was a tanner. He was listed in the 1837 electoral roll (along with John Fiddes) as a joint proprietor. In the 1837 Commons inquiry into ‘fictitious voters’ he was claimed to have gone to Edinburgh to seek votes. In 1861 he was living with his brother at 1 Teviot Crescent, and was unmarried. Walter (19th C.) hawker in Hawick. He was deceased in 1879 when his representatives were rebuilding his house at the

Wulson (1823–1903) son of Walter, with his mother being Wilhelmina Bell (from Riddings). His half-sister was Jessie, wife of George Hobkirk of Slitrig Villa. He lived with his father and grandfather, cabinet-makers at 9 High Street, but then became an apprentice baker in Selkirk. He spent about 5 years as a baker in London, returned to Selkirk in 1849 and then in 1852 emigrated to Australia, following the gold rush. He married Janet Brydon (who was from the Ettrick valley) and they had children Robert, Walter and William. Walter (b.1824) son of Walter and Isabella Richardson. After his father’s death, he helped his mother run the family baker’s business on the Howegate. He was listed as baker in Slater’s 1852 directory. In 1861 he was still at 10 Howegate, running the business with his mother and brother James, and sisters Elizabeth and Agnes also living there. Walter Francis (1875–1957) son of Francis Elliot and Agnes Laing. Like his forebears, he was a manufacturer in Hawick. He was married twice, firstly to Ann Brown Alexander and secondly to Delia Frances Tighe. He had a son Walter Elliot Francis (1907–59). Walter Stuart (1850–1926) younger son of Walter of Orchard, he was born at Orchard. He trained as an engineer and in the 1880s formed a partnership with Alexander Simpson. The firm specialised in tunnelling work for the North British Railway; 2 large brick rotundas they designed, once gateways to tunnels across the Clyde, can still be seen in Glasgow. In 1880 he married Janet Cairns and they had a son, Arthur Hamilton (b.1881). He retired in 1922, moving to Lancashire, where he died.

Walter Fiddes (1861–1925) son of John Fiddes and Margaret Bell Underwood. He abandoned the tweed manufacturing trade and studied music in Italy. He was a organiser of musical performances in Hawick at the end of the 19th century, including conducting the Sacred Harmonic Society, which mounted ambitious choral performances in the Exchange Hall. He was also founder of the Hawick Amateur Opera Company in 1897. He and his wife gave a processional cross to St. Cuthbert’s Kirk. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. In 1641 he witnessed a baptism for Robert Gillespiede. William (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Janet Riddell and their children included an unnamed son (b.1679), Margaret (b.1681), Jane (b.1683) and Agnes (b.1687).

He could be the William who witnessed a baptism for Walter Lorraine and Bessie Riddell in 1682. William (17th/18th C.) recorded at Mabonlaw, among the poor of Wilton Parish, in the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th/18th C.) said to have been son of an army sergeant in the time of Queen Anne, and brother of James. He is one of the first known of an old Hawick family. Probably the same William, servitor to Alexander Thomson of Whitchesters was admonished for not observing the Sabbath in 1712. It also seems likely he was the tenant in Hawick Shiel who was found in 1717 to have ploughed a distance of 5 or 6 yards into the Common, east of the corner marker near Langflat. William ‘Whusky Wullie’ (1713–91) born in Kirkton, eldest son of carrier James. He was admitted a Burgess of Hawick in 1736 and worked as a ‘messenger and writer’. He also acted as Burgh Procurator Fiscal. He was a ‘writer’ when he paid tax on 11 windows in Hawick in 1748. He is probably the ‘Mr William Wilson, there’ who subscribed to Caw’s ‘Poetical Museum’ (1784). He married Mary Hardie (1717–96), who was related to Bailie John Hardie. The marriage took place in Edinburgh in 1737. Their children were: Isobel, who married wright John Telfer of Jedburgh and emigrated to America; Agnes (b.1745), who married writer James Wintropie; James (1748–1821), clockmaker and Cornet; and Peter (1750–1836), shoemaker; as well as Patrick, Agnes, William and John, who died in infancy. The witnesses in 1745 were John Telfer and shoemaker John Scott. He himself witnessed baptism for carrier George in 1766 and 1767, and another for exciseman Robert Pringle in 1778. William (18th/19th C.) son of James, he was a carrier in Hawick, like his brothers George and James. His premises were at the East End. He paid the cart tax in Hawick in 1785–91. All 3 brothers were listed as carriers on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls; at that time he had 5 work horses. He may be the William who witnessed a baptism for saddler Thomas Huggan in 1797. He had 3 sons, James, William and Robert, and a daughter, who became Mrs. A. Mair (and whose daughter was Mrs. Drummond). His wife may be the Ann Murray (marriage 1777), spouse of carrier William recorded in the Hawick Parish records in 1805 (but if so, he was already deceased). Either he or his son is probably the carrier William living with the Mair family on the Mill Path in 1841. William (18th C.) recorded at Addestonelee on the 1787–92 Horse Tax Rolls. He may be the same as one of the contemporary Williams. William (1764–1832) eldest son of Walter and Catherine Oliver, he was a Hawick-born hosiery manufacturer, and well-known Quaker in the Town. He was said to have been a sickly child, but grew to be healthy (although afflicted with asthma, for which he is said he sought relief in trips to Glasgow in later life). After seeing the stocking-frames introduced to Hawick by Bailie Hardie, at the age of 24 he went to Glasgow, where he worked as a journeyman to make enough money to buy a stocking-frame, which he brought back to Hawick. Thus in 1788 he set up in the hosiery business on his own, with the frame originally in a room of his father’s house on the High Street at 9 or 11 High Street. He was also Cornet in 1786 and Town Treasurer for many years. He was recorded as ‘Hosier’ in 1796, when he witnessed a baptism for James Richardson. He is probably the merchant who witnessed a baptism for Walter (likely his brother) in 1798. In 1797 (by which time he probably had 4 frames) he acquired a lease of part of the old Inkle Company’s property, off what would be Commercial Road, where he started carding and spinning. He met William Watson on sales trips to Glasgow and in 1804 formed the partnership Wilson & Watson, then building Dangerfield Mills. In 1819 he split with Watson to form William Wilson & Sons, Roughheugh (Langlands) Mill, and the family name passed to several subsequent hosiery firms through his sons, including George, who became Hawick’s first Provost. About 1800 he was one of the local men contributing to support the war against France. In 1825 he is recorded as a hosiery manufacturer, yarn spinner and blanket maker on the High Street. He lived in a house on the south side of Buccleuch Street (about No. 19), shown on Wood’s 1824 map. He may also be the William whose property on the left side of Drumlanrig Square and near Rosalea Brae is marked on the same map; additionally he was the William at about 11 High Street (with his brother Walter, adjacent at No. 9). He is among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. He was active in the Edinburgh Meeting of the Society of Friends and many of his family were educated at Quaker schools. In 1794 he married Elizabeth (b.1772), daughter of William Richardson, who built the Whiskyhouse Mill; she died in 1815, following the birth of their last child. The couple moved into 11 High Street, where Mrs. Wilson ran a shop in the front, and built out at the back was the stocking shop. They had a family of 15, including: Isabella (b.1794), who died young; Walter of Orchard (b.1796); Katherine (1798–1873), who married John Glenny; William (b.1799), who died in infancy; Isabella (1800–76), who married Andrew Galloway Hunter, Glasgow manufacturer, and was mother of Sir William Wilson Hunter, historian and Indian scholar; William (b.1801), hat manufacturer; Elizabeth (1802–72), who married cattle-breeder John Cruickshank; Margaret (1803–63), who married James Gibb from Edinburgh, who went to India to be secretary to James Wilson, but arrived on the day of his funeral, and was father of a Liberal M.P., also James Gibb; James (1805–60), founder of ‘the Economist’; John (1806–86), who married Margaret Scott, and lived at Ladylaw; Ann (1808–77), who married Anthony Cruickshank, brother of her brother-in-law; Agnes (1809–13); Deborah (1810–12); Jane (1812–13); and George (1815–98), Hawick’s first Provost. He died from cholera when attending the annual Quakers’ Society meeting in London with his daughter Katherine. He is buried in Peckham. His business day-book from about 1790 is preserved in the Museum, which also has a portrait of him (by an unknown artist). William (1779–1845) eldest son of shoemaker Peter, he was a shoemaker himself. He is among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. In Pigot’s 1837 directory he was listed as a shoemaker and leather cutter on the Howegate. On the 1841 census he is recorded at 2 Howegate. He served as a Town Councillor. In 1821 he married Judith Grant, housekeeper at Wilton Lodge, daughter of John Grant, who was overseer to George Cumming of Relugas, near Forres. Their children included: Patrick Hardie (1821–44); John Grant (1823–56); Harriet (b.1826); Joan (1827–1910); Agnes (1829–1905); William Henry Brougham (1831–56), sugar planter; James Anderson (b.1830), engineer in the Royal Navy; George Elliot (1833–75) of the City of Glasgow Bank; James; Beatrice; and Alexander. William (1801–57) second son of manufacturer William. He went to London with his brother James and sister Katherine around 1824, as a hat manufacturer, and became a successful businessman there. He is listed as ‘hat manufacturer, London’ among the subscribers to Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’, published in 1825. He lived on Coburg Road in Peckham, originally with his brother James, their sisters Margaret and Elizabeth keeping house for them. The firm was called Wilson, Irwin & Wilson, with a hattery on the north side of London Bridge. They started by making beaver hats, but moved into silk when that became the fashion. It is said that he retired at a fairly young age, with a considerable fortune. He was called upon in 1851 to arbitrate in the splitting of the business of William Wilson & Sons between his brothers Walter, John and George. He married Margaret MacDonald and their children were: William (d.1868); Katharine; Helen (d.1857); James (d.1857); Alice (d.1857); Henry, who married a Henderson; John Treadar, Isa Elder; George; and Annie. He died, along with 3 of his children (James, Helen and Alice), in a tragic bathing accident at Dunbar. William (1823/4–76) son of William and Isabella Laidlaw. He was a spinner at Lynnwood, like his father, becoming foreman there. He married Agnes Oliver (aunt of Robert, Lyle & Scott’s secretary), who died in 1908, aged 84. Their children were Janet Laidlaw (who married Adam Robson), Joseph (tweed manufacturer), Robert, James, John, William and Margaret, plus Margaret, Isabella and Benjamin, who died young. He is buried in the Wellogate. William (19th C.) mason, recorded at Spittal-on-Rule in 1858. William H. Brougham (b.1831) son of Hawick shoemaker William. He was a sugar planter in Mauritius. He married Emma Dick and their children Edith and Grace both died unmarried. He was a member of the Masons and the Milburn Club. He died of pneumonia at Skowhegan, Maine and was buried at Saugus, Massachusetts (formerly spelled ‘Wilsoun’, ‘Wilsoune’, ‘Wilsone’, ‘Wilsonne’, etc.).

Wulson an Airmstrong’s (wul-sin-in-ærmstrëngz) n. hosiery firm of Weensland Mills in the mid-19th century. It was a partnership between George Wilson (Provost of Hawick) and Walter Armstrong and was set up in 1851, after George Wilson received the Weensland Mill part of his father’s business of William Wilson & Sons. It focussed on the production of tweed, and was particularly known for its designs of ‘Scotch Tweeds’. It became one of the largest tweed manufacturers in the country.

Wulson an Elliot’s (wul-sin-in-æl-itz) n. hosiery firm and yarn spinners of the early 19th century, with factory in Slitrig Crescent. It was a partnership between Thomas Wilson and William Elliot and lasted between the years 1823 and 1830. Wilson then started on his own, and Elliot’s grew to be the most prominent hosiery firm in the country.

Wulson an Glenny’s (wul-sin-in-glë-neez) n. Wilson & Glenny’s tweed mill at Langlands and Ladylaw. It started in 1876 (following the Collie Disaster) from the former Wilson & Armstrong’s. The partnership was between George Wilson and James Glenny (his nephew), together with Wilson’s sons Charles John and George Murray. The name was originally ‘Wilsons & Glenny’, but it became ‘Wilson & Glenny Ltd.’ in 1891. The firm became one of the largest tweed manufacturers in the South of Scotland. The families retained control of the company until around WWII. The main factory was decimated by fire in 1959, although rebuilt in 1961. It closed in 1980 and was converted into the Ladylaw Centre. That was later demolished and the site became the Lidil supermarket and car park. Company records exist covering the period 1902–75.

Wulson an Watson’s (wul-sin-in-wawt-sinz) n. hosiery firm of William Wilson & William Watson, established in 1804 in the old Inkle House on what would be Commercial Road. They then constructed Langlands Mill and Dangerfield Mill further along Wilton Dam. It is said that Wilson was the meticulous businessman and Watson the consumate salesman. The firm split in 1819, with the Wilsons taking Langlands Mill and the Watsons taking Dangerfield Mill. This was the beginning of several of the largest manufacturers in Hawick.

Wulson Burn (wul-sin-burn) n. Wilson Burn, stream that emerges from Hellmoor Loch and runs in a roughly southern direction to reach Alemoor Loch.

the Wulson Cup (thu-wul-sin-kup) n. bowling trophy; it was presented to the Town Council in 1925 to be competed for on the bowling green in the Park. Last presented in 1959, it is now in the Museum.

Wulson Drive (wul-sin-driv) n. Wilson Drive, a street in Burnfoot, lying above Hamilton Road. It was built in 1967 and named after Provost George Wilson.

Wulson’s (wul-sinz) n. hosiery firm started by William Wilson in 1788 when he brought back a stocking-frame from Glasgow. In 1797 he acquired part of the old Inkle Company’s property on the Under Haugh, and began carding and spinning there. By about 1804 he formed a partnership with William Watson, but this split again in 1819. He later assumed his sons as partners, and the firm of William Wilson & Sons lasted until 1851, when the 3 sons (Walter, John and George) each took part of the firm to run themselves. In 1826 the firm were the first to use foreign wool for the manufacture of fine flannels. William Wilson & Sons was the first firm in Hawick to use steam power, Melrose’s supplying the engine in 1831. Around 1832 the firm moved to manufacturing woollen belts that were said to be a preventative for cholera. In about 1835 they started weaving flannel. In Pigot’s 1837 directory the firm is listed at Langlands and Weensland Mills, manufacturing both woollens and hosiery. It was still listed at Langlands and Weensland Mills in Slater’s 1852 directory, although dissolved by then.

Wulson’s Close (wul-sinz-klos) n. once the popular name for the passageway at 13 High Street, also known as Quaker’s Close. It was named after William Wilson & Sons who had premises (and possibly a residence) there.

Wulson’s Shoooder (wul-sinz-shoo-dur) n. Wilson’s Shoulder, southern ridge of Pike Fell, south-east of Shankend in the upper Slitrig valley. There are remains of a settlement, about 39 m by 34 m, divided into 2 courts, of uncertain age.

wult (wult) v., poet. wilt – ‘For thou, Lord, wilt bless the richteous . . .’ [HSR], ‘Wi’ the mercifu’ thou wult shaw thyself mercifu’: wi’ the upricht man thou wult shaw thyself upright’ [HSR].

wultna (wult-na) contr., poet. wilt not – ‘Wultna thou, O God, who hast casen us aff? an’ wultna thou, O God, gang furth wi’ our hosts?’ [HSR].

Wulton (wul’-in, wil’-in, wil-tin) n. Wilton, originally a separate settlement on the north side of the Teviot. It is first mentioned in a deed of about 843 in which Egred, Bishop of Lindisfarne secured to that See land in Teviotdale including ‘Wiltuna’. The church transferred to the Diocese of Glasgow in the 12th century, when there are also several references to ‘ecclesiam de Wilitona’. A large part of the Parish of Wilton was owned by the Langlands family for centuries. The town had its own Common in the area behind Stirches, the feuars being called together at Stinty Knowe. In 1627 it was reported that ‘their is no foundatioun for hospitall or schooll, albeit they war necessar’. In the 18th century Wilton consisted of the Langlands and Stirches estates, together with a few smaller farms, the Roughheugh corn mill, the Parish Kirk, Manse and School, and houses at Damside, Sandbed, the Peth-heid, Gib’s Nose, the Maut Steep, Saut Haa and Lockiesedge. It remained a scattered village until it was developed as cheap housing for mill workers in the late 18th and early 19th centuries, when it became increasingly dependent on Hawick. With bridge access across the Teviot being easy, it grew more and more clear that Wilton and Hawick were two parts of the same town. Wilton came within the boundaries of the Burgh of Hawick following the local Police Act of 1861 (which was not without its critics), bringing new life to the community. For ecclesiastic matters the parish has remained separate, however – ‘And for the Priest o’ Wilton, His coat it is worn thin . . .’ [JSB], ‘...While Wilton’s broad domain, that shuts the view With pleasant blending, skirts the western sky' [JCG] (sometimes written ‘Wultin’; the name occurs in the early 9th century and has been spelled in various ways over the years; it is ‘Wiltouhna’ and ‘Wiltona’ in the late 12th century, is ‘Wiltoun’ in 1342, ‘Wyltoun’ in 1431, ‘Wylton’ in 1448, ‘Wultoune’ in 1453, ‘Wilton’ in 1468, ‘Weltoune’ in 1495, ‘Wiltoun’ in 1499/1500 and 1502, ‘Weltoune’ in 1501/2, ‘Weltoun’ in 1511, ‘Weltoun’ in 1576/7 and 1588, ‘Woltoun’ in 1594 and 1615, ‘Woltoun’ and ‘Woulton’ in 1611, ‘Woldtoun’ in 1634, ‘Woltone’ and ‘Woltoune’ in 1663, ‘Woltoune’ again in 1688 and 1690 and ‘Welltoun’ locally in 1722; the local pronunciation is also written ‘Wultin’; the most likely origin is the Old English ‘welg’ or ‘wilig tun’, i.e. ‘farm by the willows’, while the suggestion that it was once owned by someone called William has no supporting evidence).

Wulton Auld Kirk (wul’-in-awld-kirk) n. popular name used in the latter part of the 19th century to refer to the former church of Wilton Parish, after it was replaced in 1861 with a new building across the street. This church stood in the middle of the old churchyard and was built in 1762, replacing what was probably the pre-Reformation church. It was a square construction, with windows on either side, 2 entrances, the pulpit on the south wall, and a belfry on the west side. Since it was too small for the congregation, an extension was built to the north side in 1801, designed by William Elliot of Kelso. A new gallery was formed at about that time, with the expense split between the Duke of Buccleuch, Rev. Dr. Charters, William Oliver and other subscribers; the lower part became a vault for the Charters family. The church was abandoned in 1861 when the new building was ready. At that time there was some remodelling done, including removal of the belfry. The ruins of the church can be seen in an early photograph. The churchyard was largely cleared of tombstones in 1957. David Hill wrote a poem about watching the demolition of the last gable of the church itself – ‘I watched the deliberate Last Destruction o Wulton Yin simmer Settorday afternoon. Wulton was biggit in comely stanee Quarried frae native hills – Frei-stane and whun . . . ’ [DH].

Wultonbank see Wulton Bank

Wulton Bank (wul’-in-bawngk) n. house on the eastern side of Princes Street, built on the site of the stables of Old Wulton Bank. Also formerly the name used for ‘Old Wilton Bank’ the home of the Watson family, built above their main factory at Dangerfield. It was later the home of David Laing and then Robert Innes (sometimes written as one word).

the Wulton Bar (thu-wul’-in-bawr) n. former pub at the foot of Dickson Street, popularly known as ‘Genties’.

Wulton Barony see Barony o Wulton

Wulton Boolin Club (wul’-in-bo-lin-klub) n. organisation established in 1895, with green and clubhouse at 6 West Stewart Place. The first President was Rev. J.R. Wilson, with Provost Barrie as Vice-President.

Wulton Burn (wul’-in-burn) n. stream that joins the Teviot at the far end of the Park, near Overhall. It is said that some windings in this stream were used as locations for secret sermons by Covenanter preachers around the 1660s and 70s. There was formerly a small mill lade going past Netherhall farm (not to be confused with the Wilton Dean or Cala Burn).

Wultonburn (wul’-in-burn) n. farm on the Wilton Burn past Overhall, now rented out as holiday cottages and having a Cashmere shop. The farm was among those belonging to Scott of Buccleuch that were burned by a band of Englishmen and Kers in late 1548. In 1549 the tenant was Philip Scott, and other residents included Matthew Hunter, George Scott and William Duncan. In 1569 the superiority of the lands (along with Wilton Green and Overhall) was inherited by Grizel Borthwick from her father Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch. In 1586 the lands are among those given in ‘liferent’ to Margaret Ker as part of the marriage contract with Walter Scott of Buccleuch. In 1603 they were inherited by Walter Cairncross from his uncle Walter, brother of Robert of Colmslie. The land appears to have been part of the Wilton Parish possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch by 1643. It was home of a branch of the Scotts in the 17th century and the Turnbulls in the 19th. There were 18 ‘communicants’ recorded there in 1650. It was among the Wilton Parish possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch listed in 1653, 1661 and 1663. In 1690 it was rented by James Riddell, James Hogg, John Scott and John Hunter. In 1694 it was rented to Robert Scott, Bessie Scott, John Scott and Robert Langlands. In 1696 the widow of Thomas Mitchelson joined the farmers, and James Irving in 1698. In 1694 there were 8 households listed there. The farm was surveyed along with other Scott of Buccleuch properties in 1718, when it extended to 361 acres and was bounded by Whitehaugh, Brieryhill, Easter Highchesters, Todshaw, Wulton Burn. Adam Easton and James Robson were there in 1770 and William Cook in 1772. William Willison and William Amos were farmers there in 1797. Before 1826 the main road to the Borthwick passed by here. There is an enclosure marked in the corner of a field on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map (formerly spelled ‘Wiltonburne’; it is ‘Wiltouyneburne’ in 1546, ‘Wiltouneburne’ in 1569, ‘Wiltouneburne’ in 1603, ‘Wiltouneburn’ in 1603, ‘Wiltouneburne’ in 1661, ‘Wiltonburne’ and ‘Wiltonburne’ in 1663, ‘Wiltonburne’ in 1690 and ‘Wiltoune burne’ in 1696; it is marked ‘Wiltoune burne’ on a 1650 parish map, is on Blaeu’s 1654 map as simply ‘Wiltoun’ and it is ‘Wiltouneburne’ on the 1718 Buccleuch survey). Wultonburn Epps (wul’-in-burn-eps) n. former small holding, now the name of a field on Wultonburn farm. It is ‘Wiltonburn Esps’ on the 1797 Hirse Tax Rolls, with John Gray recorded as the farmer there. Wultonburn Hill (wul’-in-burn-hil) n. hill north of Wultonburn farm, height 282 m, with a white concrete triangulation point on top. A spur on the eastern side contains the remains of a homestead, approximately 45 m by 30 m, with probably 3 hut circles identifiable, as well as a ditch outside the structure – ‘And now life’s golden Sun gone doon Ahint Wulton Burn Hill Oo’re a’ fair prood That oo hev kent The man that oo ca’ Bill’ [IWL]. Wulton Camp (wul’-in-kawmp) n. army camp, at Howdenbank, where the Police and Fire Stations were later built. It was used during WWII for British troops, and also used for holding prisoners of war. There were around 200 German prisoners there in 1946. Aerial photographs show at least 44 Nissen huts. It may also have been known as Wiltown Hill Camp. Wulton Cemetery (wul’-in-see-mi’-ree) n. burial place of a large fraction of local residents, having two separate locations over the centuries. The Old Cemetery was begun with the construction of Wilton Old Church in 1762 and essentially closed along with the church in 1861. There must have been an earlier churchyard on more or less the same site, since there was a church there for many hundreds of years. The old cemetery was neglected for many years, with many headstones being replaced in 1957, the railings and wall being removed in 1961 and all but a few notable stones being removed to make way for public pathways and grassy areas. The new Wilton Cemetery lies between Wilton Hill and Burnfoot, and is one of the town’s two main cemeteries. It was opened in 1864 when the former churchyard had run out of space. It contains 17 graves maintained by the Commonwealth War Graves Commission. By 2011 it contained no new burial plots. Wulton Dam (wul’-in-co-min) n. the Common attached to the Parish of Wilton. It was divided in the period 1764–66, before which it was annually ‘stented’ at Stintyknowe. ‘State of the Process of Division of the Commodity of Wilton’ being Robert Langlands of that Ilk and others against Henry Duke of Buccleuch and others, was published in 1764, and contains a map showing owners’ names and acreages. The land was divided among the local landowners, including the minister (who received about 16 acres). The National Archives contains several related documents. Wulton Cottage (wul’-in-ko’-eej) n. small house off the south side of Langlands Road in the mid-19th century. It was home of Margaret Turnbull (nee Dalgleish) who probably ran it as the ‘Image Garden’ school around the 1840s (marked on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map). Wulton Crescent (wul’-in- kre-sin’) n. street named in 1864, incorporating Langlands Place in 1865 and Wilton Terrace and Hopetpark in 1869. The house at the top was built using stone from the original Wilton Manse, around the 1840s. The east side was demolished in 1971/72 along with Dickson Street. New houses were then built at the south end in 1973, closing it to traffic. Wulton Crescent Lane (wul’-in-kre sin’-län) n. lane between Wilton Crescent and Dickson Street, described as ‘Wester Kirkstyle of Wilton’ in a 1726 charter and later as ‘Wilton Kirkstyle’. It disappeared with the reconstruction of the area in 1971–73. Wulton Dam (wul’-in-dawm) n. Wilton Dam, mill lade beginning at the Cauld, running parallel to the Teviot behind Victoria Road, turning at roughly right angles (along the side of Mactaggart’s skinworks) and continuing alongside Commercial Road. It was also sometimes referred to as the Roughheugh Dam. The lade existed from at least the 18th century, but probably existed in a primitive state from much earlier, and was much expanded later. From its source down to the Mill the land lay within the boundaries of the Burgh of Hawick, and so in the 18th century it was ceremoniously possessed during the Common Riding, with stones and earth symbolically thrown into

it. It was developed by the Wilton Dam Company in the early 19th century to provide water power for the factories of Wilton, specifically Ladylaw, Dangerfield and Wilton Mills. In 1815 it is recorded that the Hawick Council earne money from the rent of two wooden bridges over the dam. An extension was built from Wilton Mills through Wilton Glebe lands to come out at Mansfield in 1827–29. A flood carried some of the lower part away in 1835–36 and it was further extended in 1837, with a new outlet. Yet another outlet was built near the North Bridge in 1876, but never used. It was largely filled in after the Wilson & Glenny’s fire of 1959, with parts behind Victoria Road disappearing in the 1970s, and only a small section still visible behind Wilton Mills.

Wulton Dean (wul’-in-deen) n. Wilton Dean, an area to the west of Hawick, on the higher ground behind the Park, constituting a separate community in Wilton. It was mentioned as early as the 15th century, and was formerly part of the Langlands estate, being originally known as ‘Langlands Dean’, and more familiarly as ‘the Dean’. The name became officially ‘Wilton Dean’ in 1861. The centre of the village is around the Cala (sometimes Dean) Burn. Here was the site of the only trade that developed there, stocking-making in the Dean Spinning Mill, which thrived in the 19th century. Because of this factory the population was as high as 250 in 1850. However, the factory did not last into the 20th century, and the old mill pond was drained to form a drying green and play area by the stream. The village was once illuminated by gas lamps, with a lamplighter going round each evening and morning. There was also once someone appointed to wake up the villagers in the mornings. It has been suggested that the novel ‘The Cottagers of Glenburnie’ by Elizabeth Hamilton is based on the Dean, and written when she visited James Anderson in Wilton Lodge in 1808. The school closed in 1937, when the number of pupils enrolled had fallen to an unsustainable level. The building was refurbished in 2005 as a village hall. Log books for 1873–1936 are in the Borders Archive.

Wulton Dean Burn (wul’-in-deen-burn) n. Wilton Dean Burn, a name sometimes used for the Cala Burn, which flows through Wilton Dean. It should not be confused with the Wilton Burn, which forms part of the western extremity of Wilton Lodge Park.

Wulton Dean Hall (wul’-in-deen-hawl) n. community hall at Wilton Dean. It was refurbished in 2005 with money from several different sources.

Wulton Dean Schuil (wul’-in-deen-skil) n. former school in Wilton Dean, run by the Wilton School Board. It was probably set up in the 1870s as a primary school. Its pupils famously went on strike in 1889 (perhaps inspired by an earlier strike in Gala), marching into town in an unsuccessful attempt to close the Trinity Board School, demanding ‘shorter hours, fewer and easier lessons and better teachers’. The one-day strike made the national press and led to other school strikes throughout Britain. The school closed in 1937, when the number of pupils enrolled had fallen to an unsustainable level. The building was refurbished in 2005 as a village hall. Log books for 1873–1936 are in the Borders Archive.

Wulton Green (wul’-in-green) n. Wilton Green, former lands, probably near Wilton Burn, which they are recorded along with in the 16th century. In 1549 they were among lands in the lower Borthwick valley whose residents complained about a raid by a group of Englishmen and Kers in the previous year; the tenant at that time was Patrick Hunter. In 1569 the superiority of lands (along with Wiltonburn and Overhall) was inherited by Grizel Borthwick from her father Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch; they were held for payment of a silver penny at Pentecost. In 1586 the lands are among those promised in ‘liferent’ to Margaret Ker as part of the marriage contract with Walter Scott of Bucttleuch. Also in 1586 the lands were granted to William Cairncross of Colmslie and his wife Grizel Scott. In 1603 they were inherited by Walter Cairncross from his uncle Walter, brother of Robert of Colmslie. In 1604 they were resigned and granted to Walter Scott of Branhholme. There is a deed relating to them in the Douglas of Cavers papers in 1605. It was still listed among the Wilton Parish possessions of the Scotts of Buccleuch in 1653, 1661 and 1663 (it is ‘Wiltoune Greyne’ in 1549, ‘Wiltoun Greine’ in 1569, ‘Woltoun Grene’ in 1586, ‘Woltoungrein’ in 1603, ‘Weltoun-green’ in 1653, ‘Woltoungrein’ in 1661 and ‘Waltoungreine’ and ‘Waltongrein’ in 1663).

Wulton Grove (wul’-in-grov) n. house built in the early 1800s for William Cathrae, merchant and banker, near the family land at Damside (‘Cathrae’s Haugh’). The land between Victoria Road and Albert Road was originally feued to John Ormiston in 1764. There was a wooded region north and west of Wilton Grove, hence the name. The house was occupied by Peter Laidlaw in the mid-19th century. There was also a small stocking shop there, run by Laidlaw. When he moved to Jedburgh it was taken over by Robert Murray, then a Mr. Routledge, and eventually Peter Scott, being the antecedent of Pesco’s.

Wultonhaa (wul’-in-haw) n. former name sometimes used for the main house in Langlands, seat of the Baron of Wilton. It is unclear what farm was meant by the same name on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when Thomas Darling and Dr. Gavin Turnbull are recorded there (‘Wiltonha’ in a charter of 1531/2).

Wultonhill (wul’-in-hil) n. plename used for the location of James Langlands of that Ilk in 1574, when he was listed as superior of the lands of Borthaugh. The phrase ‘de Wiltounehill’ may simply be an error for the Barony of Wilton.

Wulton Hill (wul’-in-hil) n. street being the continuation of Dovemount Place, running up and over the hill towards the Burnfoot junction. It was named in 1871, previously being called Stell Brae or ‘Stellhous Brae’. It contains several large villas on the east side. The name is more generally applied to the high ground roughly between the Leisure Centre and the Police Station.

Wulton Home (wul’-in-hüm) n. former children’s home located roughly where Melrose Place is today, in the former Wilton Manse building. The house was demolished before the area was developed in the 1960s.

Wultonian (wul-, wil-tö-nee-in) n., arch. a resident of Wilton, particularly before the town became part of Hawick in 1861 – ‘…and it was held incompetent for a Wiltonian to act as Cornet at the Common Riding’ [RM], ‘Viv Sharp wasni a Hawick man, hei was a Wultonian and prood o’d’ [IWL].

Wulton Kirk (wul’-in-kirk) n. Wilton Church, the main church serving the Parish of Wilton, the present building dating from 1859. It was a Rectory from early times, associated with Glasgow Diocese (with the second highest value, after Hawick, in the Deaconry of Teviotdale in 1275). In about 1225 John of Wilton settled a dispute with the Bishop of Glasgow in which he granted 5 merks to the mother church, payable annually at the fairs of St. James of Roxburgh. The earliest clergyman that we have any record of is ‘Robert de Dene’ in 1296, although the first structure was probably built even earlier. The Old Church was built in 1762 in the middle of Wilton Old Churchyard, to the south of Princes Street. Earlier churches stood on the same site. There was an investigation into the state of the Kirk and Parish in 1627 and ‘stents’ for kirk repairs in 1659 and in 1673/4. There is a record of the church being neglected during the vacancy in the ministry in 1694, and including mention of a ‘quire’ (suggesting it may have been the pre-Reformation chapel). A corner-stone from that building is all that survives. This church also had a loft of Scott of Highchester, trasferred to Roberton after 1690 (but the sittings there were still disputed in the early years of the 18th century). The roof was in a sorry state by 1761 and the building was replaced in 1762, along with a new schoolhouse.

This church was a plain square building, with the pulpit on the south wall, a large window on either side, two entries on the same side, and a belfry on the west gable. This building was enlarged to the north in 1801, repaired in 1829 and closed in 1861 when it was replaced by the new church across the road. The building was for a while used as a mission hall, but later demolished. Photographs of the old church exist. The new building, started in 1859, was designed by John Thomas Emmett of London (after winning a competition), and built by George Tait, builders. It is in a Gothic revival style that went against the trend for Presbyterian churches of its time. Interior columns are in Caen stone (common in English churches, but unusual in Scotland), with also some Bath stone arches and some exterior stone from Denholmhill. Construction was completed by 1862. However, it was extensively altered in 1907/8 to plans by J.P. Alison. The galleries were removed and a chancel and transepts added, with Caen stone and some Iona marble used in the interiors. The adjacent extensive church halls were built in 1897, also with J.P. Alison as architect, this time in a red brick Arts & Crafts style. War Memorial windows by Lilian J. Pocock were added in 1924. The building to the north, with its red brick spiralling Tudor chimneys and cupola-style bell tower, was designed as the Sunday School. The spire is marked on Blaeu's 1654 map as 'Wiltoun K.'.

Wulton Kirkstyle (wul'-in-kirk-stil) n. former street name in Wilton Parish, recorded on the 1841 census. It is probably another name for Wulton Lane.

Wulton Kirkyaired Entry (wul'-in-kirk-yärd-en'-ree) n. another name for Wulton Lane (also called just Kirkyaired Entry).

Wulton Lane (wul'-in-län) n. Wilton Lane, running between Commercial Road and Princes Street, formerly known as Kirkyard Entry because it ran past Old Wilton Churchyard. There are no addresses on this street, although there was once a joiner's yard there.

Wulton Lodge (wul'-in-loj, -luj) n. name of the mansion within the Park, and also formerly the name of the estate it occupied, called Langlands before about 1790. The walls of a much older fortified house were discovered in the grounds behind. The Hearth Tax was paid in 1694 for 6 hearths there. Tax was paid on 10 windows there in 1748. The current house may have been started in the 18th century, although it was remodelled in 1859 (the date on the house), when an extra storey and bow windows were added. Apart from modern heating, lighting etc., and the addition of the Scott Gallery, the house is much as it was in the late 19th century. It is currently a Category B listed building. A carved stone above the entrance has the monogrammed letters ‘DMP’ for David and Mary Pringle, the last private owners, with a lower stone bearing half of the Pringle and Anderson coats of arms, with the motto ‘Sursum corda’ (‘lift up your heart’). On the gable overlooking the War Memorial there are also two biblical texts. The estate was for centuries known as Langlands and had encompassed the entire western half of the modern Wilton. The earliest recorded owner is Thomas de Charteris in the mid-13th century. It Wulton Lodge Gate Lodge (wul'-in-loj-gâ'-loj, -luj-, -luj) n. gate lodge house for Wilton Lodge, at the entrance to the Avenue and the foot of Roadhead. It was built in the mid-19th century, with a west extension added in the early 20th century.

Wulton Lodge Park (wul'-in-loj-pawrk) n. proper name for the Park.

Wulton Lodge Stables (wul'-in-loj-stâ-bulz) n. former building behind (i.e. to the north of) the Museum, part of the estate of Wilton Lodge. It was situated at the top of the access road, essentially on the site where the Park-keeper’s house was later built. Probably built in the 19th century, the building is already marked on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map. It had an unusual design, consisting of 3 parts, with the central section having an ‘onion-shaped’ roof. It was used by a riding school, as stabling for the Mosstroopers’ Club and as finally as Parks Department storage. As well as stables, the building contained a house, which was last occupied in 1938, by the Cranston family. The entire construction was demolished in the 1950s. It can be seen in the background of several photographs of Wilton Lodge, but there are and no good images of the house itself. It was painted from memory by Walter Cranston and was the inspiration for an exhibition by local artist Andrew Cranston in 2013.

Wulton Lodge Witterfaa (wul'-in-loj-wi'-ur-faw) n. name sometimes used for the picturesque waterfall on the Cala Burn behind Wilton Lodge, also referred to by local residents as just ‘the Witterfaa’. It was partly created by quarrying activity (and hence is artificial), with some of the stone being used for the rebuilding of the Lodge itself.

Wulton Lodge (wul'-in-luj) n. alternative name for Wilton Lodge – ‘It’s a niece bit, Wultin Ludge’ [ECS], ‘O’we a pairk in Wulton Lodge That c’en Fairyland micht grudge’ [TK].

Wulton Mains (wul'-in-mânz) n. former name for the lands attached to the Manse of Wilton Church, also known as Wulton Glebe and sometimes ‘the Mains of Wilton’.

Wulton Manse (wul'-in-mans) n. former Manse of Wilton Church, at 6 and 7 Mansfield Square. The original building was on the site of the Railway Station, specifically where the railway tank was later built, adjacent to the area known as ‘the Wilderness’, and with a small stream passing nearby. It was built around the 1780s, but probably replaced an earlier building on the same site; tax was paid on 18 windows in this earlier building in 1748. When it was demolished some of the stone was used to build the upper house in Wilton Crescent (nearest to Mayfield Lodge). The new manse was erected by the railway company in 1849 on ‘the Haugh’, i.e. the flatter land nearer the river. For several decades water was piped to it from the ‘Cadger’s Well’. Before the council bought the surrounding land in the 1870s it was the only house in the area. The house survives and has been split into flats. It is a grade C listed building. When this land was sold a new Manse was built at Wilton Hill in 1880, standing near where Melrose Court is now.

was granted to the Langlands family in 1451, who owned it for over 300 years. Unfortunately all the early charters relating to the property have been lost. It passed to Thomas Elliot in 1783, then to Lord Napier in 1790. James Anderson purchased it in 1805, and had the Avenue created around 1810. His daughter married David Pringle, and it was the Pringle family home until the Burgh purchased its 107 acres in 1889 for £14,000. The boundaries of the estate were first ridden on the Saturday of the Common Riding in 1890 (this followed by refreshments and some speeches and singing outside the Lodge were the only official marking of the new public purchase of the estate). It was used as a private school from about 1892–98, then remained unoccupied for a few years while the Council contemplated many suggestions for its use. Finally it was converted into the town’s Museum in 1910, when the Archaeological Society’s extensive collection was moved there. A 25 foot captured German field gun was positioned there in 1920, but moved in WWII. A stone ball found on the grounds is now in the Museum. The nearby grounds contains several items of interest: the Wallace Thorn memorial; an old well; stonework from the Buccleuch Memorial; the Burgh coat-of-arms from the Corn Exchange; a carved stone verse from Linden Park; the ‘Glorious Dead’ War Memorial; the Fountain; the waterfall; the Guthrie Memorial; etc. – ‘Aa’ll sing o’ bonnie Wilton Lodge And o’ the Wallace Thorn’ [GD].

Wulton Lodge Academy (wul'-in-loj-aw-ka-du-mee) n. private school, run by Rev. and Mrs. B. Brodie, which moved to Wilton Lodge in 1892, changing its name from the West End Academy. It taught both sexes as day pupils and boarders, including some pupils from abroad. There were several assistant teachers, some of which were foreign. It closed in 1898, and whether it moved to another location is uncertain.

Wulton Mill

This has long since been demolished. The house at Fenwick Park known as ‘The Elms’ was used as the Wilton Church Manse from 1945–89. The most recent Manse is on Wilton Hill Terrace.

Wulton Mill (wul’-in-mil) n. flour mill in Wilton, marked on Wood’s 1824 map on the east side of the foot of Wilton Path, and just to the south-west of Roughheugh Mill. It should not be confused with ‘Wulton Mills’. It may also have been known as Roughheugh Mill at times.

Wulton Mill Cauld (wul’-in-mil-kawld) n. name sometimes used for the weir at the bottom of Dovecote Street, feeding water to the mill lade that came out at Mansfield.

Wulton Mills (wul’-in-milz) n. Dickson & Laings main mill in the middle of Commercial Road (Nos. 31 and 32), with its distinctive clock tower, which is listed. The buildings were begun in 1810–15, with the original mill being 46 feet long and 36 feet wide. The first spinning jennies in Hawick driven by water were introduced here, as well as the first power-looms in 1830. A major new mill lade constructed in 1827–28. The mill was powered by 2 water wheels, supplemented by a steam engine in 1831. The mill can be seen on a sketch made around 1830. The factory was mostly destroyed by a fire in 1867, but rebuilt in 1869, and extensively altered over the years. In 1871 the workforce was estimated at 600 and the mill made 400,000 pounds of goods annually. The clock tower was constructed about 1877. The firm struggled, and by 1908 had closed, with the buildings put to other uses. Part was sold to the Scottish Tweed & Woollen Company, and other parts used by Mactaggart Bros., as a joiner’s yard, garage etc. There were local authority workshops and offices there, the buildings being upgraded in 1979–83. However, in more recent years the mill has been empty. Behind the main building can be seen part of the mill lade, which once marked the boundary of the Common Haugh, as well as a pit for the former mill wheel. It is a grade B listed building, but nevertheless part was demolished in 2014.

Wulton Pairish (wul’-in-pa-reesh, -paw-) n. Wilton Parish, which has always been separate from Hawick Parish, generally lying to the north side of the Teviot. Around the time of the Reformation the boundary on the east was the Howden Burn, while on the west it stretched almost to the head of the Borthwick valley, with a detached part of Hassendean Parish splitting it in two between the Roberton and Harden Burns. The southern boundary of the Parish was essentially the Borthwick and Teviot, with the Ale bounding it to the north. For centuries the western part of the parish was served by a small church at Kirk Borthwick. The unsatisfactory state of affairs resulting in the suggestion in 1650 of moving the main Kirk to the Borthwick. In 1678 the rents of the parish were valued at £5672 in Roxburghshire, with an additional £960 in Selkirkshire. In 1690 the parish was extended to the east to include some of the former Hassendean Parish, while it lost its western part to the newly formed Roberton Parish. In more recent times it has been about 5 miles long, running south-west to north-east, about 17½ square miles, and having borders with Ashkirk, Lilliesleaf, Minto, Cavers, Hawick and Roberton Parishes. The boundary with Hawick has always been peculiar, with the area towards the Sandbed for a long time being in Wilton, and the Common Haugh etc. being in Hawick. In 1891 a detached part of Hawick Parish (where Albert Mills were built) was transferred to Wilton Parish, while a 1 acre part of Wilton, detached by the Common Haugh, was transferred to Hawick Parish. Whether the Parish once had a single owner is unknown, but since at least the early 13th century the west and east half-Baronies had separate owners. The Langlands family long held the eastern part, and the Wardlaw family held the western part in the 14th and 15th centuries. The Scotts of Buccleuch were major landowners for centuries, and eventually became Barons. The Chisholm family, and other Scotts are also prominent in Parish history. The Bothwells also held half the Barony from 1494 for about a century. For a long time the patronage of the church (i.e. right to choose the minister) alternated between Langlands and the holders of the other half of the barony; this right was confirmed to Bothwell in 1585, but was held by Scott of Buccleuch by the early 17th century. Kirk Borthwick was a chapel that served the western outlying portion of the Parish from at least the early 1300s until the 1650s. In 1649 the land and crops of the Parish were valued at about £5400 in Roxburghshire and £700 in Selkirkshire. In 1678 it was valued at £5672. In more modern times, for ecclesiastical purposes, part of the Parish was attached to St. Margaret’s quoad sacra church in 1896, another part to Wilton South in 1929 and a further part to Burnfoot in 1951. The ecclesiastical boundaries of Wilton Parish were set at a Presbytery meeting in 1930. The Parish had small schools at Clarilaw, the Dean and Stouslie. Wilton Path has long been the main thoroughfare.

through the heavily inhabited part of the Parish, as well as part of the road from Hawick to Edinburgh. Ecclesiastically the Parish was long in the Presbytery of Jedburgh, and synod of Merse and Teviotdale, and formerly in the Diocese of Glasgow from about 1100 (and earlier attached to Durham, and before that Lindisfarne). Heritors minutes books exist from November 1740 and Parochial Board minute books from 1853–95 are in the Borders Archive. The Session records start in 1694 and are fairly complete. However, the register of births is quite irregular, there are no early death registers, and marriages are only recorded through the proclamation of banns. Minute books of the heritors start in 1723. Note there are also Wilton Parishes in Berwickshire, Norfolk, North Yorkshire, Somerset, Wiltshire, Connecticut and elsewhere.

Wulton Park (wul’-in-park) n. another name for Wilton Lodge Park or the Park.

Wulton Park Road (wul’-in-park-rōd) n. the road behind Wilton Lodge Park, which was only named in 1971 when private bungalows were built on some of the former allotments near the Walled Gardens. There has been more development in the subsequent years.

Wulton Peth (wul’-in-peth) n. Wilton Path, more commonly known as the Peth – ‘Now aw wad compare that, wi’ a shop in Hawick That was in Wultan Peth, at the fit . . . ’ [AY].

Wulton Place (wul’-in-plis) n. lost street, named about 1850 and incorporated into Princes Street in 1971. It ran from Dickson Street to the foot of Havelock Street and once contained the Wilton branch shop of the Hawick Co-op, as well as the Railway Hotel. The name only applied to the block on the north side (e.g. on the 1859 Ordnance Survey map), with the block on the south side always known as Princes Street.

Wulton Place North Bar (wul’-in-plis-north-bawr) n. toll-bar situated at Wilton Place, probably another name for the Doevmount Toll (this name recorded in the 1841 census).

Wulton Roadheid (wul’-in-rōd-heed) n. alternative name for Roadheid.

Wulton Roadside (wul’-in-rōd-sīd) n. 18th and 19th century name for what became Princes Street. Also known as just ‘Roadside’.

Wulton Schuil (wul’-in-skil) n. school that has existed in Wilton since about the time of the Reformation. The old primary school was built in 1847–8 at what became No. 36 Princes Street, across from the Old Church. It has an open colonnade in the playground and an enormous external staircase. This was once the Parish School of Wilton, and was considerably enlarged when the new public school system was introduced. The original school had been between the old Kirk and Manse (roughly near the modern entrance to the Leisure Centre car park), with a small stream (now piped underground) passing by. There was a nearby willow tree there, which effectively served as the gymnasium for the children. The old schoolmaster’s house in the mid-19th century consisted of one room plus a kitchen; its site later became the railway booking office.

Wulton Sooth (wul’-in-sooth) n. Wilton South Church, built on Commercial Road in 1894–95 to replace the ‘Ern Kirk’ which had been used by the United Presbyterian congregation of Wilton for the previous few years. The congregation was formed out of East Bank U.P. Church in 1886 (with other members from Orrock and Allars Kirks). They were gifted the pre-fabricated building by the congregation of Craignmore, Rothesay about 2 years later. The first men to preach were Dr. William Boyd and William G. Macfee, and the first ordained minister was Malcolm Smith, although he tragically died in his second year. The ‘Ern Kirk’ had to be abandoned in 1893 and for over a year the congregation met in the Temperance Hall. The new building was designed by J.P. Alison along with Glasgow architect James...

Chalmers. It was an elegant red sandstone structure, constructed on a narrow and sloping site, using stone from Longtown Quarries. It became St. Margaret’s and Wilton South in 1940, after merging with St. Margaret’s. The church closed in 1987, was abandoned by the new owner and was demolished in 2001–02 after becoming unstable. A stained glass window, ornate chimney pots and weather vane were salvaged. The congregation merged with St. George’s, now Teviot Church. A roll of the minstry is: Malcolm Smith 1890–91; James W. Shannon 1892–.

Wulton U.P. Kirk (wul’in-yew-pee-kirk) n. Wilton United Presbyterian Church, otherwise known as St. Margaret’s and Wilton South.

Wunter (wu-nur) n. (Winter) Robert (19th C.) brewer in Hawick, who took over from John George King in the 1860s.

the Wunter Fair (ʻthu-wun-tur-fir) n. Hawick’s winter fair in the 17th to 19th centuries, taking place in early November, often on the 8th. The holding of this market was a legal right of the Baron (latterly the Duke of Buccleuch). It was essentially a repeat of the May Hiring Fair (although not as extensive), with stalls etc. in the Sanbed and along the High Street. The market would run from 9 a.m. and finish at 2 p.m. It is recorded taking place on 28th October in 1675. It stopped happening in the late 19th century, although it was probably a continuation of the annual fair, which happened in late October from early times. It was during one such fair in the 1560s that the Regent Moray captured several thieves in Hawick. In the early 18th century there was also one year where there was a riot after the County officers tried to impose a tax during the fair, and a similar event later when the Officers of the Duke of Buccleuch tried to extract a tax and a riot broke out. In the mid-18th century there was a large fight at the event between the Lochmaben and Yetholm gypsies.

wunters (wu-nur) n., pl. wunters. There are records and memories of several severe winters over the years. Sheep, cattle and horses suffered in great snowstorms in 1615, 1633 and 1665. The storm of early 1674 was particularly harsh (‘The Thirteen Driftly Days’), wiping out many flocks. Another storm of the 17th century was known as ‘The Blast o Maich’. The winters of 1709, 1740 and 1772 were also severe. Many thousands of sheep and nearly 20 Border shepherds perished in a snowstorm of early 1794, ‘the Goniial Blast’, which began on January 23rd (described by the Ettrick Shepherd). A storm in 1795 never ceased for a week. Around this time the flocks were sometimes herded to lower farms in Annandale, which were largely free of snow. The storm of 1803 claimed the lives of at least 2 shepherds. A great snowstorm of 1809 held up the mail coach between Hawick and Edinburgh for 10 days. 1813/4 was also a severe winter. The winter of 1822/23 was particularly harsh, with snow lasting from December 20th until February 9th, and snowbanks of 6–10 ft in town. The winters of 1831, 1836/7, 1854/5, 1859/60, 1860/1, 1878/9, 1885/6, 1880/1 and 1895 are also recorded as being severe in the Borders. The storm of late 1859 was quite devastating to sheep, because it came on so unexpectedly, and the winter of 1860 was particularly calamitous for sheep in the whole of the Ettrick Forest, where lambs were destroyed to save the strength of their mothers. Other harsh winters on record in Hawick include 1900 (when there was still snow lying until May), November 1901 (when there was a storm of rain, which turned into sleet and then snow, with huge gusts of wind, doing great damage about 1400 feet), 1903 (when there is a photo of people playing ‘shinty’ on the Teviot), 1917/18, 1937 (spring), 1940 (January, with the Dean Burn waterfall frozen), 1941 (New Year, the quickest freeze-up in living memory), 1947, 1962/3, and 1981.

wutch (wutch) n. a witch – ‘Mossy haughs where ‘wutches’ flit Primrose glades where artists sit ...’ [TK], ‘...It needs na a wutch to tell How the blessing wad come to oorsel’ [FL].

wutchcraft (wuch-krawft) n. witchcraft. There were bouts of frenzied panic among the public in the Middle Ages, where individuals were seized upon as being witches and put on trial or killed by superstitious mobs. The victimisation of eccentrics in this way did not end till well into the 18th century. Fortunately Hawick seems to have been among the more rational towns. Although there are many records of people being accused of witchcraft in Scotland in the 16th and 17th centuries, there is no evidence that anyone was locally found guilty of being a witch or killed as a result of such accusations. In 1641 one of the Bailies was found guilty of attacking a woman after accusing her of witchcraft upon a deceased child and on his wife. In 1644 the Burgh Records show that Janet Scott was accused of being a witch and had to promise to present herself to the Justice-General. Suggesting someone was a witch was considered an extremely serious offence, and there are other cases of people being fined or sentenced to the stocks for such behaviour in the 17th century. ‘Tranty-fit’ and ‘Speed o fit’ are two sisters who are supposed to have lived near Goldielands and said to have been witches. Strong and independent women were often rumoured to be witches, e.g. Janet Beaton, wife of Sir Walter Scott of Buccleuch, Jean the Ranter and Jean Hall in more recent times. The wife of Rev. James Ker, covenantor and former minister of Abbotrule, was accused of witchcraft (but ‘most unjustly’) in the 1680s. Nearby communities appear to have succumbed more easily to superstition, with the execution of witches said to have taken place last at Spittal-on-Rule. There are certainly records of 25 people being accused of being witches in Jedburgh, with the peak year being 1649. In 1628 ‘Issobell Howetsone’, in Riddell and ‘Katharine Leithame’ were tried in Selkirk. In 1629 the J.Ps. of Selkirkshire were given permission to try 9 people for witchcraft. The accounts of the Chamberlain of Scott of Buccleuch contain an entry for ‘a commissiun for burneing of witches in Eckfur’d’ in 1650. A legend spoken of in the 19th century tells of the wife of the Schoolmaster called Brown drowning him with the help of her associates, who cavorted drunkenly in the grounds of the Abbey. There are records of a similar number of accusations and trials in Selkirk, including at least 2 women from Lilliesleaf, and the wife of the junior school teacher in Selkirk in 1662. Langholm used to drown its witches at a place called the ‘Grieve’, possibly at the confluence of the Ewes with the Esk. Local methods used to ward off the effects of witchcraft include affixing branches of the rowan or alderwood to stables, etc., tying scarlet thread to the horns of cattle and carrying around an ear of wheat. An article on tales of local witches, written by ‘A.M., Hawick’, appeared in the Edinburgh Magazine of 1820; it contains a story about the Devil cavorting with witches at Allanhaugh, among other anecdotes. A tale is told (in the 1914 ‘Highways and Byways of the Border’, repeated from the 1820 article) of an old woman in Teviotdale (no specific location given) who was believed to have appeared as a grey-hound trying to rescue the heart of a horse (which died as a result of witchcraft) from the fire, and was later herself burned in the same fire when she failed to recite the Lord’s Prayer.

Wutch Craigs (wuch-krägz) n. Witch Craigs, small craggy area to the west of Kirkton, lying roughly between Sunnyside farm and Kirkton Hill. It reaches a height of 254 m (the origin of the name is unknown).

Wyhenes (whelenz) n. John (13th/14th C.) recorded as ‘John del Wyhenes’ on the inquest of 1303/4 for inheritance of the half barony of Wilton. It seems reasonable to suppose that he was a local man, like the others. Note that he is separate from John (or perhaps Henry) of Whames, who was also on the jury. It is possible that his lands were Weens, but there are probably other possibilities.

Wylie (wi-lee) n. Elizabeth (16th C.) holder of a particiate of land on the north side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Her name is given as ‘Bessie [or Besses] Weile’. John (17th C.) resident at Leaugh in Castleton Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls in 1694. His surname appears to be written ‘weilij’. Margaret (16th C.) joint tenant, along with Margaret Oliver, in the part of the lands of Wylie’s Hill in Jedforest, according to a rental roll of 1541. It may be that she was connected to the family who gave their name to this farm. Her name is recorded as ‘Mergrete Wyle’.

Rev. Robert (17th/18th C.) son of Thomas, minister of Kirkcudbright. He graduated from Edinburgh University in 1668, and became tutor to the Douglases of Cavers. He was tutor at Ochiltree in 1676 and governor for Francis Lord Semple in 1678. In 1679 he was imprisoned for several weeks in Glasgow (presumably as part of the Revolution). He went overseas with some of his pupils, but returned to go on trial before the General meeting of Presbyterians of 1687. He was ordained at Wheathope in 1690 and became minister at Yarrow. That same year he was a member of the General Assembly and also the Commission for Visiting Schools. He was presented to Ashkirk Parish in 1690 and ordained there in 1691. There is a letter of 1691 from ‘R. Wylle, Wooll, to Tarras’ (i.e. to Scott of Harden) saying that he hopes the Rev. Shiel could be kept in the area by offering him Wilton Parish until Robertson is re-erected. He was a member of the General Assembly in 1692 and translated to Hamilton in that year. He was still alive in 1709. Mr. ?? (19th C.) Schoolmaster at Minto. He took over from William Grant, who had given the school a very strong reputation, and went on to become minister of Minto Parish in 1840. Ninian ‘Ringan’ (16th C.) recorded in 1544 on a list of Scotsmen who swore allegiance to Henry VIII. He is listed as ‘Ranyon Wille of Wylleshill’, among Olivers of Jedforest and others, although it is unclear where his lands were. William (17th C.) tenant in Belses who was among the men declared as fugitives in 1684 for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. William (17th C.) cottar at Appletreehall according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. His surname appears to be written ‘Willie’.

William (b.e.1800) from Fife, he was a tailor at Commonside Bankhead in 1841, 1851 and 1861. His wife was Agnes and their children included Janet, William, Helen, Nichola and Mary (also spelled ‘Wyllie’).

Wylie’s Dub (wi-leez-dub) n. former name for the area immediately east of what is now Beaconsfield Terrace, forming part of the northern boundary of the Common at Myreslawgreen. It belonged to Bailie Turnbull at the time of the Division. Roughly the same piece of land may be recorded in Hawick’s first existing sasine, when Alexander Scott sold it to James Scott. It is mentioned in the 1767 description of the boundaries of the Common (when it belonged to Bailie Turnbull) and is marked on Wood’s 1824 map (variously referred to as ‘Willies Dub’ and ‘Weylys Dub’, or just ‘the Dub’, it is ‘Weylys Dub’ in 1767; it may be the same as ‘Bridgehaugh’; it was presumably marshy at one time).

Wylie’s Hill (wi-leez-hil) n. lands in Jedforest listed being valued at 25 shillings in the Exchequer Rolls in 1538 and 1539. In 1541 part of the lands were tenanted by Margaret Oliver and Margaret Wylie, paying 25s yearly, another part by Margaret Oliver, paying 12s 6d yearly and a last part by Robert Oliver, paying 12s 6d yearly. It is possible that the farm was named shortly before this period and connected to the family of this same Margaret Wylie. ‘Wille of Wyleshill’ was recorded in 1544 along with many Olivers and others from Jedforest, but it is unclear exactly where his lands were (it is ‘Wylleishill’ in 1538 and 1539 and ‘Wyleshill’ in 1541).

wynd (wund) n. a narrow, often twisting road leading off a main street – ‘Auld Hawick my dreams are all of thee, Thy storied wynds and streets’ [RHL], ‘There’s a silence in the cobbled wynds …’ [JYH], ‘What though at times the moorland mist Creeps up by wynd and street’ [RSC]. ‘The mirth o’ the glen and the warmth o’ the shieling Are broucht to the wynds o’ the grey toun again’ [WL].

the Wynd (thu-wund) n. informal name for the Kirk Wynd – ‘And Jess McVeeetter offered, up the Wynd, The grandest sticky taffee in the town’[WL].

Wyndburgh (wind-bu-ru) n. racehorse, trained locally by Ken Oliver. The horse was well-known for coming in the top 4 in the Grand National on 4 separate occasions (2nd in 1957, 4th in 1958, 2nd again in 1959 and again in 1962). Most famously it managed to hold on to 2nd place in 1959, with jockey Tim Brookshaw effectively riding the end of the race bareback after his stirrup leather broke at Bechers. The horse was retired.
Wynzehope

Wyndis see Weens

Wynzehope (win-zup) n. former name for lands in Glenkerry on Tima Water. These were exchanged in 1415 for Bellendean by Robert Scott of Rankilburn, with the monks of Melrose Abbey. This is probably the same as the modern ‘Winghope’ on the eastern side of the Tima valley (written ‘wynzehope’ in 1415).

the Wyoming Silver Challenge Cup (thu-wi-o-min-sil-vur-chaw-linj-kup) n. trophy presented by Wyoming Hawick Exiles Club in 1909 and competed for in a 1 mile relay race at the Common Riding Games. The Wyoming callants also contributed £15 for a horse racing or other event in 1910, and as a result the American Handicap was renamed the Wyoming Handicap.

the Wyre Brig (thu-wir-brig) n. former light footbridge over the Slitrig opposite St. Mary’s Church, indicated in a painting of 1813. This could be the ‘Wooden Bridge at Kirk Wynd Foot’ recorded wyre-worm (wi-ur-wurm) n., arch. a kind of grub that attacks grain – ‘Wire-worm, A sort of crustaceous grub, of a yellow colour, which destroys grain by eating the stalks underground, viewed as another name for Cut-worm, Teviotd.’ [JoJ].

wysen (wi-, wee-, wi-zin) n., arch. the throat, windpipe – ‘With some sharp knife, or razor slight, Presumes to nick his wyson’ [JR], ‘Crackin’ t’ye in this odd-fashion’d way, It creeps sae natural up a youthfu’ weezen’ [JoHa], ‘Sae he fingered awa’ at her weezen a while, And then he performed a wizard-like feat …’ [TCh], ‘Whan naigs an troopers – the deed-ruckle glutherin i ther weizants – war cowpeet inti ilka seike’ [ECS], the gullet, especially in phrases referring to impatience for food – ‘Is your guts thinkin’ your wizen’s cuttit?’ [GW], (there are several spelling variants, including ‘weezen’, ‘weizant’, ‘wizen’ and ‘wyson’).

wyte (wi’, wit) v., arch. to blame, accuse – ‘…Joost wyte thyself’ for fateing me the sphere O’ rustic life …’ [JoHa]. ‘It was a’ their neebor’s wite That life was mair black than white’ [FL], n., poet. blame, fault, responsibility – ‘The blithe birds sing This April night, And why they sing Is nae my wyte’ [DH] (also written ‘wite’).

x (eks) n. there are no peculiarly Hawick (or even Scottish) words that start with ‘x’.

-y (ee) suffix used to form adjectives, perhaps more commonly adopted than in standard English – ‘A overhead a wuman in Dorwards telling her pal that she wasni verrra ‘dried-floorey’. Owe the festive period ee might weel hear somebody sayin they irni ‘Christmas cakey’ or declarin thumsel ti be no verrra ‘ginger-winey’ ’ [IWL] (the prefix -ie is more common in Scots than -y’).

Yadd Linn (yaw-lin) n. small stream in the upper Slitrig valley, joining the Lang Burn between Shankend and Shankendshielis. There was formerly a footbridge there.

ya-ho (ya-hō) interj. cry used to get someone’s attention – ‘Ya-ho there, Hardie Wat, Ya-ho Colin, Dan – Ya-ho’ [HAST1868] (cf. yeh).

Yair (yār) n. house a few miles north of Selkirk, overlooking the Tweed. It was originally built around 1580 by the Kers, this branch holding the hereditary office of coroners of Selkirkshire. They are buried in Melrose Abbey with the inscription ‘Here lies the race of the House of Zair’. The lands were Crown lands from about 1456, assigned to William Ker from at least 1476 and passing to his son William in the 1490s. They were still Crown lands in 1502. In 1494/5 John Scott of Tushielaw was allowed to ‘compone’ for crimes including stealing 60 sheep, 3 oxen, 4 cows and another 20 sheep from there. In 1535 Robert Scott of Allanhaugh was found not guilty of stealing 200 sheep from here (among other crimes). It was still Crown land in 1541, occupied by Thomas Ker, paying £40 yearly. The estate was acquired by the Ruthven family in 1736 and then went to the Pringles. The name is used for the estate and surrounding area, which once covered about 4 miles along the banks of the Tweed. The nearby bridge over the Tweed dates from 1760; it was built as part of the turnpike road from Selkirk to Edinburgh and would have been on the main route from Hawick to Edinburgh until about 50 years later. The lands were sold by Pringle of Whytbank to the Duke of Buccleuch in 1758, but the house was reacquired by Alexander Pringle of Whytbank in 1784 and rebuilt in 1788/9. Robert Horsburgh lived there in the 1790s – ‘From Yair which hills so closely bind, Scarce can the Tweed his passage find, Though much he fret, and chafe, and toil ’Till all his eddying currents boil’ [SW], ‘O, the vale o’ the Tweed is bonny Frae Yair to auld Elibank …’ [FL] (formerly written ‘le Yar’, ‘le Yare’, ‘Yaire’, ‘Yare’, ‘Yhair’, ‘Yhare’, ‘Zar’, ‘Zare’, etc.).

yaird (yārd) n. a yard, piece of enclosed ground attached to a building – ‘oo yaised ti play in the yard ahint the Store’, ‘Item, giff any nighbour mindes to big aane thorn hedge in his yaird …’ [BR1640], ‘…the Sacrament of our Lord should be administered after ye gathering in of ye corn to ye farm yeards’ [PR1716], specifically a kirkyard – ‘To see an Dauvit’s heidstone In a lirk o’ St. Mary’s Yaird’ [DH], a yard of length, i.e. 12 inches (note that yird is also used; also spelled ‘yeard’ etc.; in earlier centuries a ‘yard’ might also be used to mean a square yard and hence was used as a unit of area).

Yair Hoose see Yair

yallisese (yaw-li-seez) n., arch. yellows, a disease affecting sheep, jaundice (note the peculiar double plural).

yalli yorlin (yaw-li-yor-lin) n., arch. yellowhammer – ‘An a feelin-hertey yallih-yorleen, hip-pin alang the deike’ [ECS], ‘The children in this country have a similar aversion to the yellow-hammer, the reason alleged being that ‘it swears at people as they gang to the kirk’…’ (our yellow yorlin) …’ [PJE].

yammer (yaw-mur) v. to talk continuously, to chatter loudly, to groan, whine, complain, murmur – ‘But yammeret on in thair tents, an’ herkenetna untill the voyce o the Lord’ [HSR], ‘Let ither brood ower loss an’ gain, Or yammer on in thair tents’ [WP], ‘Jock’s ghost cam yammerin doon Fu o indignation For on owre imagined pain’ [HSR], ‘Let iters brood ower loss an’ gain, Or yammer in thair tents’ [BR1673].

yap (yawp) adj., arch. eager, active – ‘The steeds they were as yorlyns yappe, They steevely stetch their mawe …’ [JTe], ‘Like as ane lion that is yaup for his praye …’ [HSR], ‘All they said to him was ‘Willie, is the pony yap the day’ …’ [WIS], having a keen apetite, hungry – ‘Bit A was yap bide’ [IWL], ‘Bit A was yap the day’ [WiS], ‘Ye’ll no ken this yin son, it’s no the yin oo yaisually dae’, aye bit hei hednae reckon’d on oor Adie’ [IHS] (also written ‘yaup’).

yap (yawp) n., arch. a shrill, sharp call, v. to make a shrill, sharp call, to talk in thin piping tones (not clearly distinct from English, but noted by E.C. Smith).
Yarrow (ya-rō, -rī) n. village situated on the Yarrow Water, with a church dating from c.1642 built by the Covenanters, and an early Christian stone nearby dating from the 5th or 6th centuries. Also the name for the surrounding parish of Selkirkshire, bounded on the south by Ettrick Parish and to the east by Selkirk. The ancient name of the parish was St. Mary’s of the Lowes. The Parish was once quite extensive, but lost portions to Caddonfoot and Kirkhope in the mid-19th century. The area around is known for its beauty, as well as for its battles, and is featured in many ballads – ‘Yarrow’s dowie dens may be Graced wi’ elliush fantasy’ [TK], ‘The Border lass sings it in strains sweet tho’ sad, On the banks of the Ettrick or Yarrow’ [WS] (perhaps from Galeic for ‘rough’; it was formerly sometimes ‘Jarrowe’ and similar; it is ‘Yarrow’ in 1426).

Yarrow Kirk (ya-rō-, ya-ri-kirk) n. church in the Yarrow valley, serving the parish, which was amalgamated with St. Mary’s and Deuchar. In early times the parish was referred to as ‘the Forest’. Administration along with neighbouring parishes changed over the centuries, and in 1650 the former parish of Rankilburn was disjoined from Yarrow and annexed to Ettrick. The earliest church in the parish was the kirk of St. Mary’s of the Lowes, near the north end of St. Mary’s Loch. The first church in Yarrow village stood to the east of the present one, on a small stream (and may have been called Deuchar Chapel). The present church was built in 1640, altered in 1772, and with major renovations in 1826. It was gutted by fire in 1926, but restored. A sun-dial dating from 1640 is inscribed ‘Watch & Pray, Time is short’. The parson in the 1290s was Edmund of Letham. Around 1484 the rector there was Alexander, brother of Patrick Murray of Falahill. James Scott was minister 1607–34, who was rebuked for drunkenness, ill-discipline, and non-residence. William Elliot (brother of Thomas in Borthwickshiels) was minister 1641–66 and 1679–80. John Rutherford (maternal great-grandfather of Sir Walter Scott) was minister there 1691–1710. Robert Russell (who married Agnes Turnbull from Hawick) was minister 1791–1847 and his son James afterwards. The minister used to receive four bolls of oatmeal annually from Hassendean, the origin of the payment being lost in time.

Yarrow Knowe (ya-ri-now) n. small hill in Liddesdale, to the south of Saughtree (it is unclear if the origin of the name is related to that of the river).

Yarrow Schuil (ya-ri-skil) n. another name for the old school at Linfit on Yarrow Water.

the Yarrow Stane (thu-ya-rō-stān) n. ancient Christian burial stone inscribed ‘here lie buried the two sons of liberais’, dating from the 5th or 6th century, standing within a small enclosure beside Whitehope farm near Yarrow village. It is the possible location for the ballads ‘The Dowie Dens of Yarrow’ and ‘Willie’s Drowned in Yarrow’. 2 other uninscribed stones lie only a few hundred yards away, called ‘the Glebe Stone’ and ‘the Warrior’s Rest’.

Yarrow Terrace (ya-rō-te-ris) n. street in the Terraces built around 1898 by Hawick Working Men’s Building and Investment Company, and named in 1900 after the river Yarrow.

Yarrow Witter (ya-rō-wi′-ur) n. river that runs from St. Mary’s Loch to join the Ettrick about 2 miles west of Selkirk. It passes through the former Ettrick Forest, with a length of about 12 miles (20 km). The first bridge over the river (near the village of Yarrow) was built around 1653, replaced in 1722, swept away in a flood of 1734 and replaced in the 1740s. James Russell wrote ‘Reminiscences of Yarrow’ (1886). The Yarrow valley has been popularised in the ballads ‘Mary Scott, Flower of Yarrow’ and ‘The Dowie Dens of Yarrow’ – ‘I dreimed a dreirie dreim last nicht; God keep us a’ frac sorrow! I dreimed I pu’d the birk sae green Wi’ my true love on Yarrow’ [T], ‘Tis better by far to leave publican’s bar, And doon by the Yarrow to stray’ [RF] (in the past the river was known as ‘Gierua’, ‘Gyrwa’, ‘Yarou’ and similar; in earlier times the name was sometimes written ‘Zarrow’; it derives either from the Gyruii tribe, of the Fens, who may have given their name to Jarrow in Tyneside, or more likely from the Gaelic for ‘rough stream’).

yate (yāt) n., poet. a gate – ‘And when he cam to the fair tower yate, He shouted loud, and cried weel hie, Till out bespak auld Gibby Elliot – ‘Whae’s this that brings the fraye to me?’’ [T] (variant of yeitt).

yaud (yawd) n., arch. an old horse, nag, usually a mare – ‘Aw’m Pawkie Paiterson’s auld grey

yaud ...’[JSB], ‘...O’er moss an’ muir, an’ never grumble, Tho’ my auld yad should gie a stumbling’[BS], ‘Ma collar lay roond ma craigie as wanrestfili as branks an brecham roond a yaud’[ECS], ‘...For the Cornet’s lads Are sadding their yauds To follow the banner blue’[TK], ‘While every Teri lad, Striddlin’ his gallant yaud ...’[JEDM] (from Middle English; cf. the little-known English word ‘jade’ and also jaund).

Yaud Linns (yawd-linz) n. former name for a narrow pass and waterfall near Langburnshields, perhaps near where the road gets closest to the river between Shankend and Langburnshields. Graptolites have been found in the black shale here (the origin is ‘linn’ meaning a narrow gorge, and it said the ‘yaud’ comes from the resemblance to an old horse of a rock lying across the stream; it is ‘Yad Linn’ on the 1863 Ordnance Survey map).

yauld (yawld) adj., arch. alert, nimble, strong, vigorous, sprightly –... As Fasteneven, for young and auld That day, seem mair than common yauld’[JoHo], ‘And she lap sae yald, and spanged sae hich, Her rigging banes did rattle’[JTe], ‘She was a yauld and willint bitch As ever lap ower hedge and ditch’[JH], ‘Auld Britain’s sons are yet fu’ yauld, We trow they weel could bide a whuther’[JoHa], ‘These men, stout and young and yauld as they were ... ’[HSR], ‘Masel an’ twae as yauld young fallows as ye wad hae seen ... ’[BCM1881], ‘Em whow! the glamourie an’ the glamourie an’ micht That ane sae dune, sae auld, Should, in a vesion o the richt, Be young again, an’ yauld’[ECB], ‘There are no ‘Yauld, bang fallows’ or ‘Muckle leash fallows’ now-a-days’[JTu], ‘The air is frosty and the ground is cauld, But Davie’s heart is warm – his legs are yauld’[HN], ‘A wiry wee craitur and yauld. Wi’ his bundle and shears At the guidwife he speirs Gin we’re aa keepin’ clear o’ the cauld’[WL] (also written ‘yal’d’; the origin is unknown).

ye (yu) article, arch. form of ‘the’, common in Burgh and Parish Records before the mid-18th century – ‘...for cutting of William Elliot, merchant, with ane sword in ye head’[BR1669], ‘Accompt of ye colection and disbursements since ye death of Mr Alexr. Orrok, our minister, who deceased April 23d 1711’[PR1711] (this form became common in print, because of the similarity of the letter ‘y’ to the Old English ‘thorn’ symbol for th; it was never pronounced yee).

ye (yee, yu) pron., arch., poet. you – ‘The streets ye kent when ye were bairns ... ’[WL], ‘Safe oot, Safe in’, my Border lads! And safely win ye hame’[RSC], ‘Ye may ken I was born and bred i’ the Loan ... ’[DH] (this is often written, to conform with general Scots, even when the more common local pronunciation ee is meant).

year (yer) n. a year, note that the singular form is often used for the plural – ‘they were members for twal year’, ‘it was a few year ago’, ‘...aye, no e’en to Jean Rae, ma ain wife, for twae or thrie year after we were married’[BCM1880], ‘It’s an awfu’ lot mair than fifty year But aw’ll never forget ‘Foosty Broon’ ‘[AY], ‘I’ve lambed this fifty year or mair, and what I’ll tell ye’s true, I swear’[TD], Yeavering Bell (yee-ver-in-bel) n. peak in Northumberland National Park, above the village of Yeavering, west of Wooler (and not too far from Flodden), reaching a height of 1,182 ft (361 m). On its summit is one of the largest iron-age forts in the area, a tribal centre for the Votadini. Nearby was the palace of Edwin and other Northumbrian (and presumably therefore Hawick’s) Kings, until abandoned about 670 – ‘As the scornful words from the fair lips fell, A flush, like the red on Yeavering Bell When the morning sun comes out of the south, Trembled and fluttered from brow to mouth’[WHO] (the origin of the name could be p-Celtic).

Yeddie see Yedie

Yedie (ye-dee) n. formerly a local pet form of Adam (also spelled ‘Yeddie’; cf. Adie, Yddie and Yid).

yeh (ye, yā) adj., one – ‘yeh fond kiss’, ‘...Yeh Monanday at morn’[JSB], ‘Hey haes eā bairn leevan’, only eāne’[JAHM], ‘The yeh stragglin street o Bosells’[ECS], ‘...But there’s ae toon I ne’er forget Wherever I hae been’[JSE], ‘Yea day at least he’ll miss the jostle ... ’[RH], ‘Four hur-der horsemen in yeh streekit line’[JEDM], only – ‘Now rose with Branxholm’s ae brother, The Teviot, high and low’[JL] (‘yeh’ is never used for the noun or pronoun, cf. yin; it is commonly ae in general Scots, and often spelled this way even when the Hawick pronunciation is intended; note the several possible spellings, e.g. ‘ae’, ‘yea’, etc.; as noted by E.C. Smith, the older pronunciation was closer to yā, and hence similar to the Scots ā).

yeh-time (ye-tim, -tim) adj., arch. one-time, former – ‘The yeh teime coach road was be the Langbauk an doon the Loan’ [ECS], ‘... the auld yeh-teime keeper o Jethart Aibbey!’ [ECS].

yeld (yeld) adj., arch. barren, childless, said of a cow that has not yet produced young – ‘Item, thir zeild ky, price of the pece, foure pundis ...’ [SB1574]. v. to geld (there are spelling variants; cf. eild, from Old English).

yelli (ye-li) adj. yellow (cf. the now less common yalli).

yelli gowan (ye-li-gow-in) n., arch. common name for the lesser celandine, Ranunculus ficaria – ‘The Lesser Celandine ... shares the wood with the Anemone, where its golden blossoms, often called Yellow Gowsans, spangle the ground’ [JAHM].

Yellilees (ye-li-leez) n. (Yellowlees) James (19th C.) grocer who was a committee man at Hawick Free Kirk. Thomas (17th C.) servant to John Mein in Barnes. In 1684 he was listed among men declared as fugitives for frequenting conventicles.

the yelli van (thu-ye-li-wavn) n. joke term for the vehicle used by a lunatic asylum or psychiatric hospital, specifically associated with Dingleton – ‘if ee keep actin like that they’ll send the yelli van for ee’ (it is unclear how widespread this is; the origin may be connected to the yelli waas).

the yelli waas (thu-ye-li-waawz) n., pl., arch. popular name for prison – ‘... and put in a gig to be taken to the Yellow Wa’s’ [RM].

the Yeomanry (thu-yō-mun-ree) n. one of a number of volunteer cavalry forces, particularly those set up following the Yeomanry Act of 1794. Members were most often farmers, with landowners acting as officers. Troops of volunteer were active during the period of perceived danger of French invasion. The local troop was variously called the ‘West Troop of Yeomanry’ or ‘Roxburghshire Gentlemen and Yeomanry Cavalry’. It was connected to the Lothian and Borders Horse, which was set up in 1797, with Sir Walter Scott as its first quartermaster. Such units were embodied several times during the Napoleonic Wars. They were cut back during the decades of peace, but occasionally used to deal with civil unrest. Lothian and Border Horse remained active through the late 19th century and many wealthier locals joined it on the outbreak of the First World War. Note that the Yeomanry was technically distinct from the Militia and the Volunteers, although all of their histories are intertwined and they were jointly the precursors of today’s Territorial army – ‘... Thus yeoman troops were raised to stand As bulwark to the Borderland’ [WHO].

Young (yung) n. Adam (17th C.) smith in Hawick. In 1685 he was fined by the Magistrates for fighting with fellow smith Hugh Elliot in the Kirk. They pulled each other’s bonnets off and threw them down. He may be the same Adam who was fined in his absence in 1685 for insulting the good name of Bailie Scott and his son John by claiming that they had reset the peas taken by some of the Royalist forces. He may be the Adam who in 1676, along with Alexander Hislop, was found guilty of using a ‘half-pecke ane inch short or thereby’. Adam (17th C.) resident of Denholm on the Hearth Tax records in 1694. Adam (17th C.) resident at Hassendeanbank according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Adam (b.1768/9) from Ashkirk Parish, he was farmer at Burnhead. He was already there in 1821 when he subscribed to William Scott’s ‘Beauties of the Border’. He was listed as farmer at Burnhead among heads of households in Wilton Parish in 1835–41. He was listed at Burnhead in 1841 and 1851, when he farmed 160 acres and employed 4 labourers. He lived there with his sister Margaret and was unmarried. Rev. Adam (18th/19th C.) minister of Wilton in the early 1800s. It is unclear precisely who he was, perhaps an assistant minister. He was listed as ‘Rev. A. Young, Burnhead’ on the subscription list for Robert Wilson’s ‘History of Hawick’ (1825). Adam ‘Ad’ (d.1874) brother of Pin, son of Jamie and Jean Scott, left fatherless at an early age. He had a reputation for being saucy and sullen, was a skillful poacher and fisher, and also had a knowledge about herbal medicines. More cautious than his brother, he was nevertheless often in trouble with the law. He was found dead in the stables of the Victoria Hotel and is buried in the Wellogate – ‘Ad Young went to bed alive at night, and wakened a corpse next morning’ [T]. Adam (b.1814/5) from Ancrum Parish, he was farmer at Dunstane in Liliesleaf Parish. He was still recorded at Dunstane in 1868. His wife was Margaret and their children included Margaret, Jessie, William, James and Adam. Alexander (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Marion Stewart and their children included Helen (b.1682) and Jane (b.1686). The witnesses to the 1682 baptism were William Purdom and George Young (possibly his brother). He could be the Alexander, son of James and Helen born in Hawick in 1653. It is possible that he is the same man as the Town Officer. Alexander (17th/18th C.) Hawick Town Officer. In 1696 the 2 Bailies ‘hess confirmed the kirke bell ringing at even and morning’ in his hands (this being the new bell at St. Mary’s) as well as ‘the toun’s common deid bell’. He was Burgh Officer at the same time as Alexander Scott, and witnessed the baptism of two of Scott’s children in 1702 and 1705. In 1698 he was found to be due £4 Scots ‘for his last yeirs Common rydeing coat’, which is the first explicit mention of the ceremonial aspects of the Common Riding in the Burgh Records. In 1707 there was a new arrangement by which he should himself buy oil for the clock and bell-ropes, and in exchange ‘that he should pay nothing inward to the toune for tolling of the bell at landward burials’, i.e. he would keep those fees. Andrew (16th C.) owner of 2 particates of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. Andrew (16th/17th C.) listed among men declared as fugitives for not appearing at a Borders Commissioners’ court in Jedburgh in 1605. He was recorded as ‘Andro Young, sometime in Bernehillis’ Andrew (17th C.) tenant in Roughleeneuk in Southdean Parish according to the Hearth Tax rolls of 1694. ‘Andrew younger’ who is also listed there seems like an error, perhaps meaning his son. He is surely related to John, Lyle and Ninian, who were at the same farm in 1669. Andrew (b.1818/9) from Oxnam, he was farm steward at Ashrees in the 1850s. His wife was Mary, from Southdean Parish. Their children included John, Isabella, Margaret and Jane. Catherine (19th C.) milliner and dressmaker on the Howegate. She is listed in Slater’s 1852 directory. David (16th C.) listed as ‘Dauid Zowng’ among the bailies of the Sheriff of Roxburgh on the Precept of Chancery (probably in 1532) for William Scott of Hassendean retaining his properties. David (17th/18th C.) Hawick resident, recorded in 1707. He was fined for not appearing before the Magistrates to answer the charge that when he was before the Kirk Session ‘cited for immoralities’ he stated that ‘ther was some (as is alledged) in the said Sessione as guyltie as he was’. He is probably the David who married Marion Newbie in Hawick in 1704 and whose children included John (b.1705), William (b.1707) and Marie (b.1708). David (19th C.) one of the first Deacons of the Evangelical Union (later Congregational) Kirk from 1848. David ‘Davie’ (1922– ) Hawick born Bandmaster of the Saxhorn Band 1963–75. He had played with the Salvation Army, and in the Navy during the War, being included on dance band recordings. He was also involved with other local bands, conducting Selkirk and Jedforest, being musical director for Hawick Amateur Operatic Society for 7 years and for a long time playing in local dance band the Dixie Seven. In addition to playing the cornet, he was an accomplished soloist on the flugel horn. Douglas ‘Doug’ (b.1961) from Jedburgh, he was a member of the boxing club in Hawick. He worked on a farm, and joined the Hawick Amateur Boxing Club at age 16. He won the Scottish Heavyweight Championship in 1983 and the ABA British title in 1984. He represented Britain in the 1984 Olympics in Los Angeles and in 1986 he represented Scotland in the Commonwealth Games in Edinburgh, gaining a silver medal in the Heavyweight class. He turned professional in 1987 and had 7 fights. However, he then suffered horrendous injuries when struck by a motorcycle while labouring on the roads, ending his boxing career. He later worked as a sales manager in Jedburgh. Elizabeth nee Scott (b.c.1763) known as ‘Widow Young’ or ‘Bet Young’, she was the wife of William Young, blacksmith. She is probably the Betty Scott who married William Young in Hawick in 1785, and may be the Elizabeth born to Walter Scott in Yarrow Parish in 1759. She was known for dabbling in politics and for composing poetry, publishing ‘Songs and poems, on various subjects’ (1823) in Hawick. This contains 30 poems, many of them commemorating contemporary events, such as Waterloo, deaths in the royal family, Lord Minto’s return, etc. There are occasional Scots words, but mainly the poems are in English. It must have been unusual in those times to have women poets, and she seems likely to have been Hawick’s first who published anything. She is probably the elderly ‘Betty Young’ living with Martha Young on Walter’s Wynd at the 1841 census. Elizabeth ‘Betty’ (18th/19th C.) daughter of a Hawick blacksmith. She was recorded in 1818 claiming a ‘stolen child’, apparently taken at Hawick. She probably married someone called Smith, and her daughter Peggy Smith (who apparently later worked as a nurse to the Duchess of Buccleuch) is reported to have stolen a child herself. George (15th C.) recorded in 1494/5 as ‘Georg Zoung’. Walter Scott of Buccleuch pledged to bring him before the next Justice-aire at Edinburgh. He had been captured by ‘Rinzeane of Rutherfurde, Hew of Douglace, and thare complices, furthe of Mynuto toune’. Probably the same George in Minto was recorded in 1502 when he failed to appear at the Justice-aire, with William Turnbull of Minto as his surety; he was probably related to John and Robert, who were also recorded. It is probably also the same Thomas Young recorded in 1502 having had 14 geese stolen from him by Adam Grahamslaw. Probably the same George at ‘le crag de mynto’ was recorded in 1502 when Richard Rutherford in Littledean had remission for wounding him and stealing a series of items (including a horse, a waistcoat, a lance, a shield and a knife). George (16th C.) owner of a quarter particrate of land on the south side of the public street according to Hawick’s 1537 Charter. He was one of the owners who was obliged to pay annual rents to James Blair. George (16th C.) resident of somewhere in Teviotdale. He was recorded in an English letter of 1542 as ‘one of the chief setters forwarde of all spoyleys and robberyes’. The other man listed was Will Davidson, ‘oon of the Pringgles’. They robbed a village in England, but were intercepted on their return and 14 men captured. George (16th C.) farmer at Harwood-town in the Rule valley. His barn and yard are listed in the 1562 document over disputed lands in the Barony of Feu-Rule. George (17th C.) tenant in Bedrule. He is listed as a fugitive in 1684, along with his brothers Robert and James and many other men, for refusing to conform to Episcopalianism. George (17th C.) servant of George Gray, who was tenant at ‘Rupertlaw’ in Roxburghshire. This seems likely to be Raperlaw (but could be Rubserlaw). He is listed in 1684 among men declared to be fugitives because of religious non-conformity. George (17th C.) dyer in Hawick who witnessed a sasine in 1687. Probably the same George witnessed a baptism for Alexander (possibility his brother) in 1682.

Henry (1828/9–1907) gamekeeper at Harwood (on Rule) for many years, starting in 1855. He was responsible for much of the planting on the estate. He was born at Millhaugh, Oxnam Water, son of farm steward Robert and Maragret Riddell from the Lammermuirs. He worked for a while with Andrew Goodfellow, father of the Abbot-rule forester. He married Isabella Hogg of Melrose and their children were Robert (who emigrated to Toronto in 1873), William (who went to Canada in 1871), Henry (an engineer in Minnesota), Andrew (worked in London), John Alexander (gamekeeper at Fyvie Castle) and James (gamekeeper at Tullimet, Perthshire). Isobel (17th C.) listed at Wadeshill among the poor of Southdean Parish in the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. James (15th/16th C.) clerk of St. Andrews Dioces who was notary for the 1500 document for the Scotts of Branxholme, dealing with the lands of Whitchesters, and signed in Edinburgh. James (16th C.) canon who was recorded in a document for the Routledges, witnessed in 1529/30 at Cavers Kirk. He is recorded as ‘Sir James Zung’. He was presumably attached to the Diocese of Glasgow and was possibly the same as the contemporary priest who owned land in Hawick. James (16th C.) priest, named as a land-holder in Hawick’s 1537 Charter. He was possibly the same James Young who was burned to death in his tower, along with 10 others, by the English forces led by Sir Ralph Bulmer and Sir Oswald Westropp in 1547/8; the letter states ‘they burned a towar of a Prestes called Sir James Yonge who did resists, and shot ij. hackebuttos at the footmen which priest was burned in the tower and tenne others with hym’. He is given the designation ‘Sir’ in the Charter, indicating that he only had his bachelor’s degree. His exact status and relationship to the other priests mentioned in the Charter is unknown. He may be the same James who was presented to the chaplainry of ‘Carlangrig’ (i.e. Caerlenrig) in 1533. James (d.1622) recorded as being in Belsches’. He was executed for perjury, having apparently been bribed to lie in a case of theft that Andrew Turnbull in Belses brought against the Midlemasses. James (17th C.) resident of Hawick Parish. He married Helen Martin and their children included: George (b.1650); and Alexander (b.1653), who may be the Burgh Officer. James (17th C.) from Cavers Parish. He was ordered to be transported to America in 1679 for being a Covenanter, and escaped the shipwreck in the Orkneys that killed about 200 men. Most of the escapees were recaptured and sold as slaves in Jamaica, but he was among a small number who were said to have managed to escape to Ulster. James (d.c.1687) tenant in Mervinslaw when his will was recorded in 1687. James (d.c.1695) servitor to Sir William Elliott of Stobs. His will is recorded in 1695.
James (17th C.) recorded among the poor of Hassendean Parish in 1694, when he was at Easter Grundisboune. James (1774–1822) born in Bedrule Parish, son of Peter. He was licensed to preach by Jedburgh Presbytery in 1802 and became minister of Eckford in 1807. He married Marion, eldest daughter of James Hume, Schoolmaster of Lasswade, and she died in 1857, aged 75. His children were: Margaret Simpson; Euphemia; Peter, surgeon in Hong Kong; Marion, who married Rev. James Hope of Roxburgh; Beatrix Laing; James Hume, doctor at Amoy, China, who died at Musselburgh; and Janet. James (b.1794/5) from Oxnam, he was annual rents to James Blair. John (16th C.) tenant in Roughlee, along with ‘Michaelly’. They are listed in 1571/2, among tenants in Southdean for whom William Oliver in Lustruther was pledge. John (d.1580) described as ‘in Cames’ (probably Kaims) under the Laird of Minto when he was convicted and hanged for the murder of and theft from John Hamilton of ‘Benestoun’. His accomplice, Andrew Turnbull from Belses, was still a minor at the time. John (16th/17th C.) described as ‘Jok Young in Toune of Roull’ in the records of the Curcuit Court of 1622. He was accused of stealing sheep belonging to William Scott of ‘Weyms’, but cleared of the charges. John (17th C.) tenant in Fastcastle, recorded along with Thomas in 1644. The pair were cited in 1644 for not subscribing to the Covenant, saying that ‘they would ken no session nor minister, but follow the command of their master, my Lord Traquair’. Thomas was probably his son or brother, and they were probably related to other Youngs in Rulewater. John (17th C.) tenant in the farm of ‘Rouchneuck’ (i.e. Roughlancuck) according to a 1669 rental roll of Jedforest. Ninian and Lyle are also listed and surely closely related. John (17th C.) resident at Bygate in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax records. John (17th/18th C.) merchant of Hawick. He was fined in 1706 for ‘his disorderlie and irregular marriage with Margaret Clerk’. She was daughter of Andrew Clerk, also a merchant in Hawick. They were married by Thomas Blair at Cornhill in Northumberland, suggesting that at least one of the 2 families still proscribed to the Episcopal Kirk, or that the couple simply eloped there because the wedding was against the wishes of the families. John (18th C.) recorded being in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1780 when his marriage to Janet Slaiter was announced in Melrose Parish, with James Slaiter as cautioner. Rev. Dr. John (1743–1806) first minister of the Hawick Anti-Burgher Kirk. He was born in Kinross-shire, probably son of John, a small farmer at Mihathort, and Janet Millar. When aged 5 it is said that a soldier who stopped off in his village, mortally wounded, had the bible read to him, everyone else who could read being out at harvest. He took a course at the University of St. Andrews when he was just 10 and entered the Secession theological seminary 2 years later. He is said to have failed to qualify 2 years in a row, purely as a result of his age, and was 21 when he became a probationer of the Anti-Burgher Kirk. He then taught at a school in Perthshire. In 1766 he was licensed at Sanquhar, and in 1767 was appointed the first minister of the new secessionist Anti-Burgher congregation at the Green Church in Hawick (after a trial period of several weeks). His arrival in Hawick was on the day after the devastating Great Flood. He wrote what was possibly the first book published in Hawick, ‘The True State of the Unhappy Controversy about the Burgis-Oath, being a Discourse delivered at Kelso, the 8th of Oct., 1782’ (1783). He also wrote ‘A history of the commencement, progress, and termination of the late war between Great Britain and France’, published in 2 volumes in Edinburgh in 1802. This book apparently came to the notice of Mr. Pitt, who sent a complementary letter and arranged a pension, which he declined, but it later went to his widow and two of his daughters. His ‘Essays on Government’ (1794, 1798) was well read in its day, and was a justification of the British government’s opposition to revolutionary France, probably written as a deliberate attempt to counter the perception that the Secession churches were full of radicals. Its contents led to a complaint to the Synod, although the matter was eventually allowed to drop. About 1799 he contributed to the local subscription to support the war against France. He was also an early member of the Hawick Curling Club. In politics he was a Tory, and had no patience for the ‘blacknebs’ who were well represented in Hawick in his day. He was an eminent scholar, but said to be perhaps too academic for some of his congregation. Services in his time were about 3½ hours in duration, with hour-long doctrinal prayers while the congregation stood. For many years he also led ‘evening exercises’ on Sunday nights (in addition to the 2 earlier sermons of the day), which were usually lectures on Old Testament history or political matters. It is said that about half of the seats in the Green Kirk were paid for by members of the Established Kirk, due to his popularity. He is said to have also been called on much more frequently than the parish ministers for public visits as well as funerals. He was said to be the most tolerant local minister in regard people of other denominations, but was unpopular with many of the others. He was twice called before the Session. In order to eke out his meagre stipend, he and his family farmed a garden at the Green, and for several years also farmed at Silverbuthall and some fields at Crumhaugh-hill. He refused a call to the Secession Church in Nicholson Street, Edinburgh, saying that only death would sever his connection with Hawick; the call was later accepted by Dr. John Jamieson, the lexicographer. He received a doctorate from King’s College Aberdeen in 1794, the first given to a secession clergyman. His other publications include ‘The true nature of evangelical covenanting with God’ (1778), ‘Rules for the Direction of Praying Societies, or Fellowship Meetings’ (1781), ‘Duty of relieving the indigent and distressed’ (1795) and ‘Sermons on various important subjects’ (3 volumes, 1797). However, most of his manuscripts and correspondence were lost, as well as the diary he kept (except for a brief extract from 1777 and 1778). An original letter of his is in the Museum. He additionally helped Sir John Sinclair prepare the ‘Statistical Survey of Scotland’ for publication. In 1804 he suffered from what might now be called a stroke. As a result of this he required a colleague to preach for him in about his last year, since it was difficult for the congregation to make out what he said. For his last 5 months he could neither move nor speak, but recovered his speech one day, and gave a blessing to his family for 3 hours before again becoming insensible. A communion token from the church bears the inscription ‘M.—I.Y.—1768’ (i.e. ‘Minister’ and his initials) on one side and ‘A.C.—H.K.’ (for ‘Associate Church Hawick’) on the other. He married Helen Gibb in Wilton in 1768; she was from Muckhart, where he had lodged before coming to Hawick, and she died in 1809 in her 60th year. They had 6 sons and 5 daughters, 9 children reaching maturity. His children included: James (b.1769), who presumably died in infancy; the eldest daughter, who married Rev. William Patrick of Lockerbie, and assisted Dr. Jamieson with his dictionary: Euphemia (b.1774), who was 2nd wife of Alexander Davidson, blind lecturer in chemistry, then secondly married Dr. Thomas Dick; John (b.1776); Janet (b.1778), who married John Scott, manager of Hawick gasworks and also miller of Hawick Mill; Margaret (b.1780); James (b.1782); and Ann (b.1784). 2 of his sons trained for medicine, one obtained an army commission, and another became a merchant. There is no known portrait of him, although there is a water-colour of his daughter, Mrs. Janet Scott. He was long remembered in Hawick as a popular and dedicated minister. Sir Walter Scott was working on editing his memoirs when he had some sort of stroke in 1830, and the work never appeared. John (b.1771/2) farmer at Hillhead in Lilliesleaf Parish. He married Elizabeth Boa. They had a son Richard (b.1801) in Wilton Parish. John (1788/9–1864) sawyer in Hawick. He married Beatrice Scoon, who died in 1865, aged 68. Their children included: Jane, who died aged 18; and John (b.1822) who died in infancy. They are buried in St. Mary's Kirkyard. John (18th/19th C.) weaver in Hawick. He was recorded as a member of Allars kirk in 1829. He could be the John living at ‘Greenwind foot‘ in 1841, with wife Mary and daughter Margaret. John (b.1800/1) physician in Denholm, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories. He was born in Yetholm Parish. He is listed as a surgeon in Denholm on the 1841 census and a ‘licentiate of R.C.L. Edinburgh‘ (i.e. the Royal College of Physicians in Edinburgh) in 1851 and 1861. He probably lived on the Wynd. He married Isabella Rutherford late in life, and their children included: Walter J.; Isabella C.; Jane T.; John R.; and William. John (b.1840/1) son of farmer and baker William, he was baker at 12 and then 11 Sandbed. He ran a baker’s cart out to Whitrope when the tunnel was being constructed. He had the house Oakwood built in Buccleuch Road. In 1871 at Greenriver he married Mina, daughter of Peter Smith of Harwood Mill. They had 14 children: John, an engineer who emigrated to Canada; William, also a baker; Peter; Thomas, a chemist in Australia; Andrew, a designer in Torquay; Robert, a joiner who married Margaret Barclay and moved to South Africa; Wilhelmina, who married James Thomson (of the Oddfellows); Nellie, married John Crosbie; Margaret ‘Daisy’, married J.E.D. Murray; Bella, married tweed designed Harold Platt; Mary, married William Martin and moved to South Africa; Tina, married A. Bell of Wrexham; Bessie; and Flora, who died young. He was a Magistrate for a while, and became quite notorious (since the national press picked it up) for a decision regarding an altercation in a pub, when he could not make up his mind and so said ‘Guilty or not guilty, three days or 5 shillings to pay’. Lyle (17th C.) tenant in Roughlee in 1669. Margaret (17th C.) recorded at Mervinslaw on the 1694 Hearth Tax Rolls. Marion (16th C.) tenant at Waterside in 1541, along with Robert, as well James Oliver. They paid 22 shillings yearly. It seems likely she was a sister or daughter of James Oliver with Robert being husband or son. Michael (16th C.) tenant in Roughlee, along with John. They are listed in 1571/2, among tenants in Southdean for whom William Oliver in Lustruther was pledge. His forename is written ‘Michaely’. Mina nee Smith (b.1847) youngest daughter of Peter Smith and Betty Dunlop. She married Hawick Baker John Young in 1871 at Greenriver, in the Rule valley. They set up their home at Oakwood on Buccleuch Road. She provided information about her family for Tancred’s ‘Rulewater and its People’. Her own children included J.E.D. Murray’s wife. Ninian (17th C.) tenant in ‘Rouchneuck‘ (i.e. Roughlee) according to a rental roll of Jedforest. John and Lyle are listed after him and so presumably younger brothers or sons. Peter (18th/19th C.) dyer in Hawick. His unnamed child died in 1810. Pin (19th C.) brother of Ad, son of Jamie and Jean Scott, left fatherless at an early age. A well known town character, he was big, burly and frank. Known as a poacher, he also once rushed into the Coble Pool to save a boy. On at least 2 occasions he was rescued from arrest by a mob of his friends, but in 1844 he was sentenced to transportation to Australia. Richard (15th/16th C.) recorded being in Minto in 1502. He was indicted and failed to appear at the Justice-aire in Jedburgh, with his surety William Turnbull of Minto being fined. Thomas, John and William in Minto are also mentioned and probably related to him. Richard (d.1679) of Cavers Parish. He drowned on the ‘Crown of London‘ when it shipwrecked off the Orkneys when carrying a cargo of Covenanters captured at Bothwell Bridge and bound for America. He may have been related to James who survived. Richard (18th/19th C.) married Margaret Scott in Hawick in 1761. Their children included: William (b.1762); Margaret (b.1764); James (b.1767); Robert (b.1771), probably ‘Rob Young o the Back Raw’; John (b.1774); Isabel (b.1777); Mary (b.1779); Richard (b.1783) and George (b.1786). He witnessed a baptism for smith Robert (surely a relative) in 1766. Richard (b.1786) son of William and Elizabeth (the poet), he was a blacksmith on the High Street. His premises around No. 54 are marked on Wood’s 1824 map. He is recorded as blacksmith on the High Street in Pigot’s 1837 directory and on the 1841 and 1851 censuses. He was one of the victims in the election ‘riot’ of 1837; he was said to have once been a leader of the Radicals, but switched allegiance when he received a grant of land from the Duke of Buccleuch. His wife was Elizabeth Blacklock (born in Kirkton Parish). Their children included William, Robert, Elizabeth, Agnes and Joan. He was still alive in 1851. Richard (1793–1849) son of Adam and Margaret Young. He was a shoemaker at about 17 High Street. He married Agnes (or ‘Nancy’) Henderson. Their children included: Isabel (b.1818); Adam (b.1820); Margaret (b.1822); Margaret (again, b.1824); Agnes (b.1829); Robert (b.1834); and Joseph Hume (b.1837). Robert, a weaver who lived with him in 1841, was probably his brother. By 1851 his wife was a midwife, living at 73 High Street. Richard (b.1801) son of John Young and Elizabeth Boa, he was born in Wilton Parish. He lived at Lilliesleaf with his parents in 1841 and was later farm steward at Todshawhaugh. He was unmarried and had 4 servants in 1851. Richard (b.c.1805) blacksmith on the Mid Raw. His wife was Margaret, and their children included Robert, Alexander, Joan, Thomas and Francis. He must have been related to the older man of the same name who was blacksmith on the High Street. Robert (15th C.) resident of Minto. In 1494/5 James Davidson in Raperlaw was charged with several crimes, including stealing a young bull from him. Perhaps the same Robert is recorded in Selkirk in 1494/5 along with William Scoon. Lawrence Rutherford of Oakwood had remission for several crimes, including resetting the pair of them. Perhaps the same Robert in Minto, brother-in-law of John Turnbull, was recorded in 1502 when he failed to appear at the Justice-aire, with William Turnbull of Minto as his surety; he was probably related to George and John, who were also recorded. Robert (16th C.) tenant at Waterside in 1541, along with Marion, as well James Oliver. They paid 22 shillings yearly. Marion was possibly his mother. Perhaps the same ‘Hob Younge in the Watterside’ was recorded in 1571/2, when Richard Rutherford, Provost of Jedburgh, was surety for him. Robert ‘Hob’ (16th C.) listed in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott of Branxholme in 1574. He may served as factor or similar. His name is given as ‘Hobbe Yhoun’ (or ‘Young’). Robert (16th C.) servant of Robert Elliot of Redheugh. He went to Edinburgh with Elliot in 1624, apparently part of the plot to try to murder the Earl of Buccleuch, although it was not claimed that he was directly involved. Robert (17th C.) resident of Minto Craigend who appears in the Hearth Tax records of 1694. Robert (17th C.) recorded as resident at Burmounth in Castleton Parish according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. Robert (18th C.) paid the cart tax at Clerklands in Lilliesleaf Parish in 1785–88. Robert (18th C.) blacksmith in Hawick Parish. He was married to Margaret Henderson and their children included: Isabel (b.1757); James (b.1762); Margaret (b.1766); and William (b.1771). The 1757 baptism was witnessed by carrier James Henderson (probably his brother-in-law), the 1760 baptism by carriers James Scott and William Hardie, and the 1766 baptism by James Henderson and Richard Young (surely a close relative). In 1766 he witnessed a baptism for William Richardson and Isobel Henderson (perhaps his sister-in-law), and in 1768 another for John Nichol. It is unclear if he was related to the later ‘Rob Young o the Back Raw’. Robert ‘Rob’ (b.1771) probably son of Richard and Margaret Scott. He was a blacksmith of the Back Raw, recorded on Pigot’s 1825/6 and 1837 directories (when he was listed as being on the Howegate). His premises are marked ‘Young’ on Wood’s 1824 map, in the middle of the Back Row. In the 1841 census he lived with several other Youngs: Catherine (b.c.1890); Thomas (b.c.1809), also a blacksmith; Robert (b.c.1822), blacksmith’s apprentice; and Agnes (b.c.1825). He is mentioned in John Ballantyne’s song ‘Pawkie Paiterson’ – ‘And Rob Young o the Back Raw, Hei’s often shod ma clutes, Sae Aw wull leave him ma shank banes To bei a pair o’ butes’ [JSB]. He was still alive for the 1841 census. Robert (18th/19th C.) hedger at Larriston, listed among heads of households in 1835. Robert (19th C.) blacksmith on the High Street, listed in Pigot’s 1837 directory. He is separate from the blacksmith Robert on the Howegate, and hence there must have been 2 men in the same trade with the same name at that time. He does not appear on the 1841 census, although there is a blacksmith of the same name in Oxnam Parish. Robert (1800–c.70) son of William, he was born at Ruecastle. He became a joiner, first working with Walter Amos at Blacklee. He later lived at Mackside and then Hobkirk, where he worked on the Wolfelee estate. After 10 years he moved to Edgerston, working on the estate of William Oliver Rutherford. His son William followed him into the joinery trade. Along with his sons William and James he emigrated in 1851, settling in Ontario, where he purchased 100 acres. Rev. Robert Young (d.1884) born in Covington, Lanarkshire, son of Schoolmaster James and Margaret Ferguson. He was educated at Edinburgh University, licensed by Lanark Presbytery and became assistant at Selkirk before being ordained as minister of Teviothead in 1854. He died unmarried. He wrote ‘Dr. Bisset’s Address and Episcopal Tendencies’ (1864), ‘Henry Scott Riddell: Notes and Remembrances’ (published in Hawick, 1875), ‘On the History of Education in Scotland’ (1879) and ‘The Buccleuch Book, with Specific Reference to Allanhaugh’. Robert (19th C.) baker at 75 High Street. He married Agnes Lamb and their children included: Isabella Frank (b.1856); Helen (b.1858); Helen Jane (b.1860); Margaret (‘Maggie’, b.1862), who married Robert Riddle Thompson; Alexander (b.1865); Mary Lamb (b.1867); Janet Hall (b.1872); and Elizabeth (‘Bessie’), who married William Laidlaw. Robert (19th/20th C.) Hawick joiner, son of baker John. He married Margaret Barclay. Simon (15th C.) tenant in Roughlee. In 1493 he had remission for the crimes of bringing in Englishmen and plundering from Hundalee. Andrew Kerr of Ferniehirst served as his surety. He was surely related to John, who was recorded in Roughlee in 1494/5.

Thomas (15th/16th C.) recorded at the Justice-naire in Jedburgh in 1493. He was a resident of Minto along with John, when Adam Turnbull in Hornshole was able to ‘compone’ for stealing from them, specifically 2 bolls of barley, a horse, linens and sheets and diverse tools. Probably the same Thomas was recorded in 1494/5 when George Shiel in Bedrule had remission for stealing 6 sheep of his ewes from Minto (with John also recoded). Probably the same man was recorded in 1502 as ‘Thomas Zoung’; he was a tenant in Cragend of Minto, along with his son Thomas, William Johnstone and Simon Leitch. His farm there was burned by a group consisting of David Scott, called ‘Lady’, in Stirkshaws, Archibald Armstrong, Ninian Armstrong, David Turnbull of Bonchester and other ‘Traitors of Levin and Liddalisdale’. This raid included the burning of seven horses. He was also recorded in 1502 when a cow of his from ‘cragend’ was stolen by Adam Grahamslaw. Additionally William Turnbull of Minto was fined when he failed to appear in court; John, Richard and William in Minto were also recorded and hence probably related to him. Thomas (15th/16th C.) son of Thomas, tenant in Minto Craigend. In 1502 it is recorded that their farm had been plundered by David Scott, ‘Lady’, from Stirkshaws. Thomas (16th C.) ‘officier of Lemptlaw’ for Scott of Braxholme and Buccleuch. He is listed in the last testament of Sir Walter Scott in 1574. Thomas (16th/17th C.) granted a husbandland of land in Liliesleaf in 1595/6. Thomas (16th/17th C.) described as being ‘in Herrett’ (possibly Harwood) in a document of 1602. He was ‘bailie in that part’ to Lord Herries for a sasine in Rulewater. Thomas (16th/17th C.) Schoolmaster at Hobkirk, recorded in 1616. He was witness to a bond between William Scott of Todrig and Mark, son of Hector Turnbull in Hartshaugh. Thomas (17th C.) recorded at Fastcastle in 1644, along with John. The pair were cited at the Presbytery for refusing to subscribe to the Covenant. They were surely related to each other and to other Youngs of Rulewater. Thomas (b.c.1810) son of blacksmith Rob. He was a blacksmith, like his father, being the eldest son, running the business on the Back Row in 1841. He does not appear on the 1851 census. Bailie Thomas ‘Farthin Tom’ (1815/6-91) from Duns, he was a draper at 45 High Street for more than 40 years, and owner of this building in the mid-19th century. His nickname came from his use of vulgar fractions in pricing. He was also one of the founders of the Hawick Billiard Club. He played an active role in public life, being a member of the old Town Council and made a Magistrate, although in later years he led a more private life. He was living on Buccleuch Street (about No. 1) in 1841 and at 45 High Street in 1851 and 1861. He married Agnes Grieve, who died in 1876, aged 62. Their children included Mary Stenhouse and Christina Brydon, neither of whom reached adulthood, as well as Robert, Mary S. and Agnes. Thomas (19th C.) precentor at Hawick Free Kirk 1850-53. William (15th/16th C.) recorded being in Minto in 1502. He was indicted and failed to appear at the Justice-naire in Jedburgh, with his surety William Turnbull of Minto being fined. Thomas, John and Richard in Minto are also mentioned and probably related to him. William ‘Will’ (16th C.) listed in 1544 as ‘Wille Yong Clemenyt Crossers servaunte’, when he was among local men who gave their assurances to the English. His brother ‘Jake Yong’ is also listed. It is unclear where they lived, or which Clement this was, although lands near the Slitrig are likely. William (16th C.) recorded in 1561, when Thomas Scott of Haining was obliged to enter him (or James Middlemas or a servant of James) before the Warden of the East Marches. He is recorded as ‘quhyte Will Young’, this probably being a nickname. This was to answer the charge of stealing from David Thomson in Berwick. William (17th C.) listed ‘eist the water’ among those paying the Hearth Tax in Hawick in 1694. William (17th C.) ploughman at Todshawhill according to the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th C.) resident of ‘the netherend’ of Hassendean Parish on the 1694 Hearth Tax rolls. William (17th/18th C.) blacksmith in Hawick. He married Janet Little. Their children included: William (b.1725); and Isabel (b.1730). The 1725 baptism was witnessed by masons John and Andrew Turnbull. William (18th C.) tradesman in Hawick, possibly a cooper. In 1754 he was paid ‘for clasing the bell wheel’ of St. Mary’s Kirk. William (18th/19th C.) blacksmith in Hawick, probably son of Richard and Margaret Scott. He is probably the William recorded as blacksmith at the Midrow on Pigot’s 1825/6 directory. He married Betty Scott in Hawick in 1785. Their children included: Richard (b.1786), also a blacksmith; Walter (b.1788); Henry (b.1792); Margaret (b.1794); and Christian (b.1796), who married James Grieve in Midlem. William (18th/19th C.) farmer at Burnhead, recorded in the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls. He owned 4 horses at that time. He was probably succeeded as farmer by Adam. William (b.c.1770) portioner at Ruecastle. He sold coals in Hawick which he drove from the English Border. He is recorded at Ruecastle on the 1797 Horse Tax Rolls, when he owned 2 horses. In 1832 he was one of the 13 voters in the Parish of Bedrule. He was recorded at Ruecastle in 1841. In 1795 he married Agnes Scott from Ancrum Parish. Their children were: Agnes, who died in infancy; Peggy; Robert, who became a joiner; Agnes (again); James; and William. He is buried at Bedrule. William (b.c.1803) born in Lilliesleaf Parish, he was Parochial Schoolmaster at Lasswade in 1851. His wife was Susan and they had a daughter Agnes. Rev. William (19th C.) from Kirriemuir, he was minister of Lilliesleaf Secession Kirk from 1857. In 1874 he moved to Parkhead, Glasgow where he was minister until 1907. William (1816/7–82) farmer at Rockvale. He married Margaret Fairbairn, who died in 1895, aged 80. Their children included: Catherine, who died in infancy; William, who farmed his father’s fields; and John, Sandbed baker. William (b.1816/7) from Jedburgh, he was a baker at the Sandbed. In 1851 he was listed at Teviot Square, probably around 12 Sandbed. In Slater’s 1852 directory he is also on Teviot Square and in 1861 he was at 12 Sandbed as baker, employing 9 bakers and 2 carters. His wife was Margaret and their children included John, Mary, Sarah and William. William (b.1819) son of Richard and Elizabeth Blacklock. He was a blacksmith on the High Street, at around No. 28. His wife Sarah was from Nottinghamshire. Their first child, Richard, was born at Newton in Northumberland, suggesting that he worked there for a while. William (19th C.) Judge at the Common Riding Games in the 1850s. He may be the same William who won the standing high leap at the 1840 Games. William (19th C.) farmer in Cavers or Minto Parish, listed in Slater’s directory of 1852. William (b.1831/2) recorded as miller at Spittal in 1861. He lived at ‘Spittal Cottars House’. His wife was Sarah, and they had a son Thomas. William (19th/20th C.) son of Rulewater joiner Robert. He was educated at the ‘Sclenty Schuil’ and Hobkirk School, then went with his father to work on the Edgerston estate. In 1851 he emigrated along with his father, settling in Ontario. There he purchased 500 acres, which he cleared and farmed. He married Janet Brown, daughter of an Edinburgh builder who settled in Lambton County, Ontario. Their children were: Robert, who married Sarah Walton; John, who also married; and Janet, who married W. Johnston. He returned to visit the Rule valley in 1905 (formerly spelled ‘Yong’, ‘Yonge’ etc., and ‘Zong’, ‘Zoung’, ‘Zowng’, etc. in earlier documents).

Younger (yung-ur) n. Archibald (15th C.) listed among local men as witness to the 1464/5 sasine for the lands of Kirkton Mains and Flex. His name is recorded as ‘Archibaldo Zungare’ John (15th/16th C.) witness to the 1511/2 sasine for the Barony of Hawick. His name is recorded as ‘Johanne Zownger’. He was probably a prominent man in Hawick at the time. John (1785–1860) poet and writer from St. Boswells. Born in Longnewton, son of William and Jean Henderson, he was educated at Longnewton school. He grew up at Ellieston and followed his father as a shoemaker. His mother died when he was 10 and within a few years he had started to write verses. The family moved around, but settled in St. Boswells. His cottage there was called 'Patmos'. He became an expert angler, as well as joining the Volunteers. In writing he was encouraged by Andrew Scott of Bowden and eventually published his first poetry in 1834, followed by others, as well as 'River Angling for Salmon and Trout' (1840). He was heavily involved with the Burns centenary celebrations, giving lectures locally, as well as in Glasgow. An autobiography appeared in 1882, and contains an account of the 'False Alarm', amongst other local descriptions (formerly 'Zownger', etc.).

Yuill (yill) n., arch. Yule, midwinter festival – ‘Price of thirty-four sheep £102 Scots, or £3 a piece sold at Yuill’ [BR1638], ‘The drummer is allowed ten shillings yearly and his Yuill wages’ [BR1721], ‘He had also the privilege of collecting ‘fra the honest men in the town’ what was termed ‘Yuill wadges’, now known as Christmas box’ [HAST1913] (also yule wages).

yules (yool-wa-jezz) n., pl., arch. fees collected at Christmas – ‘The drummer is allowed ten shillings yearly and his Yuill wages’ [BR1721], ‘He had also the privilege of collecting ‘fra the honest men in the town’ what was termed ‘Yuill wadges’, now known as Christmas box’ [HAST1913] (also yule fees).

yoo (yoo, yoot) v., arch. to whoop, yelp – ‘…an A liltect a sang an whewed an yuooted, leike as A’d gane wuth …’ [ECS] (note that this was pronounced with a long, almost diphthongal oo-oo; cf. yowt).

Y.W.A.M. see Youth With A Mission

the Y.W.C.A. (thu-wil-du-bu-lew-see-a) n. the Young Women’s Christian Association, established in England in 1855, with an active group in Hawick by the 1880s, run by Mrs. Elliot Lockhart and Mrs. Glenny.

z (yi) n. letter that sometimes stands for the ‘yogh’ symbol, since that was indistinguishable from a tailed cursive ‘z’. It was therefore sometimes printed as a ‘z’, although often the same words were alternatively spelled with a ‘y’. This led to pronunciations which voice the z (like the modern ‘Menzies’ and the usual pronunciation of the local name ‘Kedzie’), even although the correct pronunciation was originally more like yee.
This confusion is particularly apparent in words containing ‘lz’, such as ‘assoilzie’, ‘balzie’, and ‘failzie’.

zebra crossing (zebru-kro-sin, zebru-kro-sin) n. these black and white striped crossings, accompanied by Belisha beacons, appeared experimentally in 1949 and were fully approved in 1951. The first one appeared in Hawick at least from 1952, on the High Street between Baker Street and O’Connell Street. Another 2 appeared near the Town Hall and across North Bridge Street near the Horse. These have been prominent landmarks ever since. The main one at the Town Hall was moved further north, denuded of stripes, and became a pedestrian-controlled crossing, but is still referred to as a ‘zebra crossing’. There are also pedestrian-controlled crossings at the top of Commercial Road and on Mart Street. The crossing over North Bridge Street/Oliver Place was removed following road changes at the Horse. There are still zebras with Belisha beacons over the Mart Street car park and across Mansfield Road near the Leisure Centre.

Zeppelins (zep-linz) n., pl. German airships, which bombed targets in Britain during WWI, leading to the imposition of black-outs. 2 of them entered near Berwick in April 1916, killing 10 people on its way to Edinburgh. There was a local scare in August 1916, which turned out to be a British airship. A story that a Zeppelin bombed Robert’s Linn Bridge is unsubstantiated.

Appendix A: Sources of quotations

The following is a list of abbreviations for authors from whom quotations have been taken, as credited in the text. Note that for some of the quotations (particularly older or anonymous ones) the reference given is to the author of the book or article in which the quote was found, and so in not all cases is the person listed the originator of the quote. In order to save space, specific publications and page numbers are not given, but in most cases the relevant body of work is modest enough that it would not be too difficult to find the relevant passage; however, for some historical examples the year is also given. Since older sources are scarce, some liberality is used in deciding whether the text represents local speech. The abbreviations used are:

Appendix E: Common Riding

Acting Fathers and Cornet’s Lasses are known only patchily in the 19th century. The earliest Acting Fathers were the Cornet’s own father. Long before the Cornet’s Lass was a formal position, there was a young lady chosen to buss the Flag. Brackets for the Chief Guest indicate a main guest at the Common Riding in the years before there was an official Chief Guest.
